To Messrs. LONGMAN, JOHNSTON,

AND OTHER THE

PROPRIETORS OF THIS WORK.

REALLY, Gentlemen, ye are somewhat unreasonable in your application, a third time, to me, (at 70) for a work of this laborious kind. Ye may not know perhaps those lines of *Scaliger, Si quem dura manet, &c . But ye know in what contempt a Lexicographer is held by the great Bolingbroke, who spares not even a Littleton, (the most pains-taking man in the profession) yet as All that nobleman has been pleased to advance is not Gospel; and as this your application is some credit to me, in evidence that what I have already done for you, has answered your purpose; studio fallente laborem, I shall endeavour to oblige you, and, I hope, therein the publick, on the following account.

Far be it from me to decry a character so well and so justly established, as that of Ainsworth. It is by no means in my disposition to censure either the living or the dead: But the present work requires an apology; and indeed the pen not only of a Grammarian, but of a Critick: I hope therefore I shall be excused in saying, that

Mr. Ainsworth in his Preface (p. xi.) speaks of his predecessors, being regardless of a matter of great importance in this affair, viz. The not making the English and Latin parts to tally with each other; but has been so regardless of this important matter himself, that of near one hundred words in the first half-page, there are not above four or five that tally with the Latin; I mean, under the Latin word here given for the English, there is no such English word to be found in the Latin; for instance, to abandon, not in the Latin under any of the three words given for it in the English, desero, destituo, renuncio, &c. &c. So in the Latin part; in the first half-page, there is scarce a word that properly tallies with the English; abalieno, is not rendered as in the English by to abalienate, but to throw, or cast off, to dispose of; none of which have abalieno in the English part. The verbs likewise abscondo, absolvo, perverto, subservio, &c. have not as in the English, to abscond, to absolve, to pervert, to be subservient to, &c. And with regard to nouns, the word hint is not to be found in the Latin part, under any of the three words given for it in the English; so, impartial, impartially, impartiality, not one of them in the Latin under justus, justè, justitia. Improbitas is not rendered by improbability; nor petulans, by petulant; nor injurius, by injurious, as in the English: And v. v. injurious in the English has not injurtosus; nor injuriousty, injuriosè, as in the Latin. In short, there is not a column throughout the whole, but what is subject to this stricture, in the like proportion; which I think worthy of notice, because children of the lower class may hereby often want the most proper word to render the Latin by: For I well remember, that Mr. Antrobus, senior, one of the assistants at Eton in my time, used to tell us, that the safest way to render Latin, was by the term borrowed from it in English. This defect, therefore, should certainly be remedied; and it is so, in some measure, by the addition of many Latin words to the English, and v. v. but to have done it accurately, would have required an age.

* Si quem dura manet sententia judicis olim,
 Damnatum ærumnis suppliciiisque caput;
 Hunc neque fabrili lassent ergastula morsa,
 Nec rigidas vexent fossa metalla manus;
 Lexica contexit; nam cætera, quid moror? omnes
 Pœnarum facies hic labor unus habet.

There are innumerable Latin words, not sterling, without a mark of rejection; as, averruncallo, caliditas, cavitas, cautela, congestio, gratitudo, fidejussor, pinguedo, (prospectum, n. ed. 1761.) &c. Some, I own, may have escaped me in the English part, (as, abasement, depressio) this being first printed; but, I hope, few or none in the Latin.

Many bad words marked as good, vid. esus in escatio, and comestio in esus: And on the contrary, many marked as bad, for the use of which there is sufficient authority; as, circumerro, circumfremo, circumlustro, &c. &c.

There are also many words which I take to be neither English nor Latin; as, bunchiness, gibbosity; bræwiness, callositas; nappiness, villositas; liquidness, liquiditas; windiness, ventositas; a kazarder, perclitator; frotbily, spumose; woundable, vulnerabilis, &c. &c. And Sometimes two bad Latin words without one good one, which was easily to be had; as, recompense, retributio, hostimentum, † compensatio, merces. But Most amazing is the inaccuracy with regard to tautology; whatever word was found differently spelt, either by whim or custom, such word is repeated even four or five times, with all its phrases; as, ease, easy; cinders, sunders; to beray, to bewray; to boil, to boyl, &c. but especially in words compounded of the preposition in, often changed into em, or en, and so given under both, with the same or different Latin; as, to embalm, to imbalm; to enchant, to inchant, &c. borage, borrage, burrage; cion, cyon, scyon; dosen, dozen, dousen; doucet, douset, dowset; ewet, neut, newt; gaol, goal, jail; clister, clyster, glister, glyster; cifers, cizars, scissors, sissars, or scizzars; gbittar, gittar, guttar, gittern, cittern, &c. &c. near a thousand. A green goose, under both green and goose; so a bobby-horse, whirl-wind, &c. irviling, invitation, with the same bad Latin: Nay, the very same word repeated; as, marshy, marshy; offspring, offspring, &c. The like tautology runs throughout the Latin part; as, in hiberna, hyberna; fidus, fydus; silva, fylva; with all their derivatives; and even four times, as facialis, fetialis, facialis, facialis; and the same word likewise redundant; vid. indefesè, inducturus.

The same word with different spelling and different Latin; as, gewgaws, nugæ, tricæ; guegaws, crepundia, gerræ; so, hainous, beinous; hainously, heinously; an eyelet-hole, ilet-hole; hayward, keyward; chalot, shalot; &c.

Several Latin words to one English, and scarce any of them pure, vid. gluttonously.

The same word in the Latin marked good and bad, vid. pelliceus, pellicius; and, as before observed, many marked as bad, when really good, vid. supra.

Many words in common use omitted; as, probity, reliance; to perch, to verge, to bid adieu, &c. &c.

False references, or words referred to such as are not exhibited; vid. a vail, the ginsibb, a pheasant; to embody, &c. so, in the Latin, vid. prosa, psecas, opinus, prabia, troxalis; prop. Oetus, Tremetus, &c.

Many words without examples, which were to be had of good authority; as, Circenses, Virg. Julius, Id. jugerum, Cic. Hor. delibero, Ter. Liv. Cic. labium, Ter. Sil. introfero; Cic. &c. &c.

Many words omitted in the Latin examples, where necessarily required to compleat the sense, and shew the force of the example; vid. concludo, N^o 3. perscribo, N^o 1. arrisor, defatigor, conceptaculum, ingrandesco, infatuo, elautus, opitutor, permeans, sustentatus, vanesco, venalitiis, &c. nay, the principal word omitted, vid. astutus.

False quotations; vid. eblanditus, lacerandus, (perhaps an error of the press) hovendiales, (Ed. 1761.) grunio, &c.

Translated and quoted in a wrong sense; vid. traderè, causam; ares (for nares) pervado. Neither sense, nor right reading, vid. mæstè.

The same example quoted twice under the same word; vid. experiens, pervigilium, pexatus, occalleo, non, &c. and in two different senses, vid. palpor.

The same example under both active and passive; vid. infesto, infestor; under the verb active or deponent and the participle; vid. renuncio, renunciaturus; illabor, illapsus; as, also under the passive and participle, vid. monstror, monstratus; nobilitor, nobilitatus; præscribor, præscriptus; premor, premendus, &c.

Passives and participles frequently under the verb active, as in imperito, &c.

The same example as a verb and a substantive, vid. migror, migratus.

—As a participle and substantive, vid. suffixus, reticentia.

—Passive and impersonal, vid. reclamor, reclamatum est.

Lastly, proper names unnecessarily inserted among the appellatives, as, Mimallines, Ramnes, Sybaritis, &c.

Having, in a great measure, rectified these inaccuracies and oversights, I was persuaded to supply the omissions, and to add such words as the celebrated Dr. Johnson hath given us in his Dictionary, with their authority: And accordingly I have added at least six thousand, with such Latin interpretation, as, in my best judgment, I thought proper for them; and which particularly with regard to Spenser and Shakespeare, (for I begin no earlier) may serve as a glossary thereto; as, to areed (Sp.) aread, (Milt.) argosy, cloud-capt (Sh.) to Romanize (Dryd.) &c. &c.

I have added several Latin words to the English, where there was but one before, and that perhaps an improper one, vid. increase: And indeed almost in every column such as were necessarily required, vid. pretence, and v. v. As the most proper word for the rendering Latin into English may sometimes here be wanting, I have frequently added many English words to the Latin, vid. inconsideratus, inconstans, inconsultè, venustus, &c. &c.

I have likewise taken notice of the different use of the same word in different authors, vid. coarseness. And also —Distinguished the proper and figurative use, vid. gluttony.

I have inserted many good words that were omitted, especially in the degrees of comparison; as, well acquainted, better acquainted; more acute, very acute; more affectedly; most accurately, &c. and omitted such as are improper; or, if rarely used, pointed out the authority; as, an abuser (Denh.) addictedness (Boyle) addiction (Sh.) an achiever (Id.) &c. &c.

I have generally struck out such Latin words to the English as were not classical; as, an absurdity, || absurditas; to abash, || pudéfacio, &c. and marked such as are used figuratively, as, Met. confundo; † evaleo.

I have frequently changed a bad word for a good one; as, fatherly, paternè (by the way, not in the Latin) † patriè, paterno affectu; to preconceive, præconcipio, † præsentio; so, innocenter for innocè; vocatus, for vocatio; momentum, for præponderatio, &c. &c.

It has been my particular care likewise,—to give the sentence as it stands in the original, and not quote it so as to alter or deprave the sense; as under abalieno, mors sola, &c.—when an unclassical word is given, to point out what is used for it by the best writers; as, ablato, † à lacte removeo, &c.—to give examples of a verb, as it is used without, or with, a different preposition; vid. abdo:—to give an example of a verb used passively, under the verb passive, and not under the active; as in abigo, ablego, &c. &c.—to add examples of a verb used passively, where they are omitted; as in abrumpor, &c.—to add examples of the use of the participle, where wanting; as in abnegatus, abnuiturus, &c. &c.—not only to mark an unclassical word, but to point out the author; as, || abominatio (Lact.)—to alter such words, as are seldom or never used in the English language; as in abdicator, a renouncer, &c.—but especially to change the example for one, I hope, of better authority; as Cicero for Curtius; vid. acceptans, acquiescens; for L. Florus, vid. suspitor, restitutus; for Scribonius, vid. exulcero; for Val. Maximus, vid. elinguis, abjectus, illustrandus; for Livy, vid. aberro; for Columella, vid. amans; for Martial, vid. accipio; for Claudian, vid. præficio; for Justin, vid. acuendus, adjuvandus; for Asconius (the example not given) vid. fiscus; for Litt. ex Liv. vid. illaqueor; for Plin. ap. Litt. vid. pervideo; for a doubtful example from Nonnus, vid. degor; so, Virgil for Staius, vid. accingo; Tacitus for Boetius, vid. præco; Livy for Festus, vid. abactus; Pliny for Tertullian, vid. portentofus; Cæsar for Amm. Marcellin. &c. &c.

And further, to prevent confusion and mistakes, especially among the younger sort, and novices, I have almost entirely discarded all such Latin words as were obsolete, doubtful, modern, or not true sterling; but have bestowed upon them a copious index or two, with the proper and genuine word frequently annexed.

But to return to the English part. The utility of works of this kind, I know, hath been disputed. But in our larger schools, (as Eton, Westminster, Winchester, and three or four more, which I call schools) it would be impossible to carry on the laborious task of instructing youth, in a dead language, were they not indulged in this sort of private tutorage.

I see no necessity, however, for declining every noun, or forming every word, in the English part. There are few children, of any docility, but who, having learned the grammar, know the declension or conjugation of a Latin word, from its termination, before they come to the use of a dictionary. Besides, it is very proper they should be frequently exercising their memory, and when that fails them herein, they might have recourse to the Latin part. I have therefore generally rally omitted this supposed emendation, especially when the space of a line or two could be gained thereby: For this is what I greatly wanted, on account of the forementioned additions, and having promised you not to exceed Ainsworth's quarto.

And now with regard to orthography, I really know not what to say:—It were to be wished that some standard, or test of purity, could be fixed for it; but, I fear, this is impracticable; for quæ homines, tot sententiæ. To speak my own mind, I could be very well satisfied with the judgment and authority of Dryden, Locke, Addison, and the most elegant writers in the beginning of this century, or towards the end of the last. Diverse and strange have been the alterations of late, in this respect, as in doctrines; from the corruptions of ignorance, and caprices of innovation; (which by the way, in many cases, is apt to do more harm than good:) But come from what learned quarter they will, I cannot but bewail the loss of e final in doctrin (Lat. doctrina) and nam (Sax. namà) &c. and shall still insert the u in honour, &c. as immediately descending to us from the Norman-French honneur, &c. rather than affect the original Latin word honor, &c. or we must likewise change the pronunciation. Much less can I give my hand to an anonymous reformer (in 1724) or those of his opinion, who contend for the spelling every word according to the pronunciation, as, uze, pleshure, nabor, &c. instead of use, pleasure, neighbour, &c. For to what county, or to what town shall we give the preference? I formerly knew a town in Effex, (not two miles from the high road) where the pronunciation, and even the tone of voice, was as different from that of their neighbours, as in any throughout Yarkshire, or Zomerzetsshire. But I cannot pretend to enter upon a full discussion of this point here; for tho' it is what I promised (some forty years ago) in my preface to Chaucer, I have not time at present, and have lost most of my papers preparatory thereto; nor indeed would I presume to attempt any thing of this kind, after the elaborate preface of Dr. Johnson to his Dictionary. I shall only observe, that

The ingenious Editor of the last edition of Ainsworth, 1761, (which ye interleaved for my use before I had examined it) would have given me an infinite deal of trouble, if I had pretended to correct his orthography; so very frequent are his alterations, particularly in almost every adverb, præterite, and participle; I therefore left it to the compositor, to do as he pleased; for I own, there may be some propriety in the intended analogical amendments; though I fear, the generality would not agree with us. The terminations (now in vogue) of the præterite and participle are ed and ing, (formerly ede, id, ende, ande,) which being added to the primitive, suppose, acquit, makes acquit-ed, acquit-ing; but if the consonant (as here) be not doubled, is it not liable to be pronounced, as in requit ed, requit-ing? so, in strip-ed (from to strip,) how shall a child or stranger, without the double consonant, distinguish the pronunciation from strip-ed, (to stripe) &c. The same Editor hath also kept the final e in the participle, as, come-ing, serve-ing, trifle-ing, &c. as likewise in the substantives, dispose-al, refuse-al, &c. So, in other words, substantives and adverbs, whose terminations are ness and ly, he has only added the termination without altering the primitive, as, hastey, hasteyness, hasteyly; tolerablely, &c. &c. which words, be they right or wrong, seemed so quaint and uncouth to me, as well as to the compositor, that I cannot but think myself obliged to him for his restoration of them to their former spelling and common usage. Sibi judicet Lætor.

But after all ye will say, Why this address to us? Where is your dedication? Some great name to patronize so expensive a work would be of service to us. Ye must excuse me; for as to you, there are few names so great as to enhance the sale of any book whatever, if its own utility does not recommend it: And as to myself; not being a dangler, or in any way importunate, by constitution; since, after frequent dedications, by permission, by request, I can only say with my late friend Dr. Young, I have been so long remembered, I am forgot, I was induced to inscribe this work to you, with whom alone I can boast a mutual obligation; and am therefore,

GENTLEMEN,

Your most obedient Servant,

Turnham-Green,
March 1, 1773.

T. MORELL.

OF THE

DIFFERENT AGES

Relating to the PURITY of the LATIN TONGUE.

THOUGH the origin, growth, flourishing state, and decay, of the Latin tongue may, in my opinion, be most properly represented by the different ages of man, as infancy, youth, manhood, and old age; yet, since those periods of time have been more usually distinguished by metals of greater, or less, fineness, as gold, silver, brass, and iron; I chuse to keep to the method of digesting them prescribed by others, rather than seem too fond of my own opinion, by introducing a new way of my own.

The golden age in this case is generally computed from the time of the second Punic war, to the latter end of the reign of Augustus Cæsar, and comprehendeth the oldest authors in the Latin tongue now extant, excepting the fragments of Livius Andronicus. Though for a considerable time after the commencement of this period, the language was but yet forming, and by gradual improvements afterwards arrived to its state of perfection under Augustus.

The silver age is reckoned to have commenced on the death of Augustus, and continued to the end of Trajan's reign.

The brass age began at the death of Trajan, and lasted till the time that Rome was taken by the Goths, about four hundred and ten years after the birth of Christ.

The iron age commenced from the sacking of Rome before-mentioned, after which the purity of the Latin tongue was very much neglected, and multitudes of barbarous words and forms of expression introduced, to the great disparagement of that noble language.

How rude and unpolished this tongue was in its infant state, appeareth from hence, that the hymns of the Salar priests, instituted by Numa, were scarcely understood by the priests themselves, who were cotemporary with the flourishing times, as Fabius tells us, Inst. Orat. 1, 6. And the decemviral, and pontifical laws had nothing of that beautiful diction, which may be observed in the writings of the Augustan age.

Ennius the poet is also described by Ovid, Trist. 2, 424. as ingenio maximus, arte rudis. And Cæcilius is said by Tully ad Att. 7, 3. to be malus Latinitatis auctor.

But in after-times the Romans took great pains in polishing their native language, and even Cæsar himself, when otherwise engaged in business of great moment, writ a book relating to the speaking of Latin accurately, and declareth therein, verborum delectum originem esse eloquentiæ, Cic. de Clar. Orat. 72. Cæsar, Cicero the father of the Roman eloquence, Cornelius Nepos, Varro, Sallust, and Livy, may justly be reckoned the greatest writers in prose, and Plautus, Terence, Lucretius, Virgil, Horace, and Ovid, the greatest poets; who all lived in the golden age.

Celsus, Paterculus, Columella, Curtius, Tacitus, Pliny the historian, Suetonius, and some other prose writers, flourished in the silver age; and Perfius, Lucan, Silius Italicus, Valerius Flaccus, Juvenal; and Martial among the poets; and the two Seneca's distinguished themselves by their writings on moral and other subjects.

Justin, Ælius Spartianus, with the other writers of the Augustan history; Eutropius, Vegëtius, Macrobius, and Aurelius Victor, writers in prose; Nemesianus, Ausonius, Prudentius, and Claudian, poets; lived in the brass age, and were a considerable ornament to it.

Though it is usual to judge of the diction of the Roman writers by the age they lived in; yet that this may admit of some exceptions is evident from hence, that Vitruvius, who writ even in the Augustan age, sinketh in some places far below the diction of his cotemporaries; and the stile of Valerius Maximus, the writers of the Historiæ Augustæ, Ammianus Marcellinus, and Apuleius, is much worse than of some others who lived in their times; and yet several lawyers, as Æmilius Papinian, Ulpian, and others, writ in a good Latin stile under Alexander Severus; and even Lactantius, a Christian, writ good Latin in the reign of Constantine; Sulpitius Severus in the time of Honorius; Claudian the poet in the time of Severus; yea and long after, under Theodorick the Goth, Boëtius, a man of consular dignity, wrote in so pure a Roman stile, that if we were ignorant of the age he lived in, we should take him for a cotemporary of Cicero.

In after-times the beauty of the Latin tongue declined very much, and many base words were introduced into the language, especially by the ecclesiastick and physical writers, the use of which ought to be carefully avoided by all persons studious of writing in a good Latin stile: The surest way of obtaining which, is carefully to read, make observations upon, and imitate, the purest Latin writers, especially those who come the nearest to Cicero, to whose valuable writings this language is very much indebted. A.

Noltenius inter auctores Auræ ætatis collocat C. Julium
Hyginum & Cæsarem Germanicum. De Hygino vid. Sup.
Cæsaris verò Germanici nihil, quod sciam, reliquum est, propter quod nominandus sit. Incertum est enim, an ea verterit è Græcis epigrammatis, quæ ei tribuuntur. Neque Noltenius probat quod affirmat, illum nimirum Arati Phæ-

Nor was all quiet at sea, nec ab oceano quies. At the day appointed, ad constitutum diem. At the name of Thibee he looked up, ad nomen Thibee oculos erexit. An latter lammas, ad Græcæ calendæ. At the pleasure of a woman, ad arbitrium mulieris. At the fire, ante focum. At the gate, ante januam.

At my house, apud me. Cæsar encamped at Corfinium, apud Corfinium castra posuit Cæsar. You were therefore at Leeca's house that night, fuisti igitur apud Leccam cæ nocte. When I am at his house it is all one as my own, apud eum sum tanquam domi meæ. He went away at break of day, cum diluulo, cum primâ luce, vel sub lucem, abiit. At that word, cum dicto. He went away at midnight, de mediâ nocte decessit. He is presumed at my charge, olet unguenta de meo. He loved her at his heart, ex anime amavit eam. At some distance, ex intervallo. No longer than yesterday at the feast, vel heri in convivio. At school, in scholâ. At church, in templo. I liked it at the very first, jam in principio id mihi placebat. My consulship is now at an end, in exitu est jam meus consulatus. The memory lieth at the bottom of the ear, est in aure imâ memoriæ locus. At every word the tears fall, lachrymæ in singula verba cadunt. He fears & him just at work, virum in ipso opere deprehendit. Had this befallen you at supper time, si hoc inter cœnam accidisset. At the beginning, inter initia. As they were at their cups, inter scyphos, inter vina. At sunset they gave over, sub cœcaval solis destiterunt. His quickness was the common talk of all at supper, de hujus acuitate in commune omnes super cœnâ loquebantur. At the door, ab ostio, ad fores, pro foribus.

¶ *The preposition is sometimes understood, as, ¶ At first sight, primo aspectu. At one blow, uno ictu. At my instance, impulsu meo. At my bidding, me imperante. Four, or five at the most, quatuor, aut quinque ad summum. They produce but five at the most, parient plurimùm quinos. The difference is but three at most, tribus ut plurimùm distat. We were about two hundred of us at most, fuimus omnino ad ducentos.

At that time, Tunc, tum, eo, vel illo tempore.

At present, In præsentia, in præsentia.

At this time, Nunc diem, jam, hodie.

 ¶ For [being a preposition] is answered by several Latin prepositions; scil.
 A; as, ¶ Consider whether this be not all for me, Vide n: hoc totum sit à me. For me she is a maid, à me puèrica, vel virgo, est.
 Ad; as, ¶ For a while, Ad quoddam tempus. For no enterprises, ad nullas preces, For what concerned the truce, quod ad inducias pertinet.
 De; as, ¶ As for other matters, De cæteris rebus. To lay his life for the king, de regis sanguinem fundere. It is not for nothing, that—non hoc de nihilo est, quod—He did it for the nonce, de industria fecit. To translate word for word, verbum de verbo expressum proferre.
 Ex; as, ¶ If it were for our profit, Si ex usu esset nostro. She died for sorrow, mors consecuta est ægritudine. He is fallen sick for grief, in merbum ex ægritudine coniecit.

In; as, ¶ They are had for a double service, habeatur in duplex ministerium. For the remaining time, in reliquum tempus. Leading a few prisoners for a show, ducens paucos in speciem captivos. For ever, in omne tempus. For a perpetual remembrance, in memoriam sempiternam. For time to come, in posterum.
 Ob; as, ¶ The gods punish for the crime, ob delictum dii pœnas expetunt. Laid to pawn for ten pounds, ob decem minas oppositum pignori. I am paid for my folly, pretium ob stultitiam fero.
 Per; as, ¶ They have law for it, lis id ipsum per legem liceat. For so many ages, tot per secula. Nor indeed could I be for age, neque per ætatem etiam poterat. You may for me, per me licet.
 Præ; as, ¶ I could not rest for concern of mind, nec jocari præ corâ poteram. I cannot speak for weeping, præ lachrymis loqui non possum.
 ¶ For anger, Præ irâ.
 ¶ For fear, Præ metu.
 ¶ For joy, Præ gaudio.
 Pro; as, ¶ I shall be punished for his faults, Pro hujus culpâ ego supplicium sufferam. Boys are angry with one another for very small faults, pueri inter se pro quàm levissimis noxiis iras gerunt. I will grind for you, ego pro te molam. We thought it for the better, nobis pro meliore fuit.
 ¶ For [considering] our estate, Pro re nostrâ.

 Note, the Preposition is sometimes to be understood; as, ¶ For fear of being yielded up, Metu deditionis. He died for love, amore deperit.  ¶ For after good, fit, lawful, profitable, &c is most commonly the sign of the dative case; as, ¶ I would but for hurting him, Vellem, ni foret ei damno. It is a shame for them that are well born to live basely, turpe est eis qui benenati sunt, turpiter vivere.
 For [for the sake of] Causâ, ergo, gratiâ, per, pro, propter; as, ¶ As for example, Exempli causâ, vel gratiâ. For fear and flight, sugæ & formidinis ergo. For this reason I made a show of it to try you, eâ gratiâ simulavi, vos ut pertentarem. I entreat you for the sake of God, and our friendship, per ego te Deos orô, & nostram amicitiam. He did not refuse to venture any hazard for my sake, nullum periculum pro me adire dicitur. Virtue is to be desired for its own sake, virtus propter se expetenda est.
 For all [although] Etiâ, quanquam, etiam, quamvis; as, ¶ I can hardly yield you this for a year, arde bis father, haud tibi hoc concedo, etsi illi pater es.
 For all this, or for all that, Nihilominus, nihilo secius, tamen. ¶ But for all that I will do it, nihilo minus ego hoc faciam tamen.  For that, or for as much as, Cùm, propterea quoddam, siquidem, quandoquidem, quoniam.

 For some time, or while, Aliquando, aliquamdiu, aliquantisper. ¶ He will not be sensible of it for a while, hocæ aliquot dies non sentiet. For some while he conversed with him, dies complures cum illo versatus est.
 For what cause? Quare, quâ de causâ?

 For that cause, Ideo, eò, propterea, eâ gratiâ, idcirco.
 ¶ For ever and ever, In secula seculorum.
 Particular phrases. ¶ For all the philosophers say, quicquid dicant philosophi. He was a good orator for those times, multum, ut temporibus illis, valuit dicendo.
