Let him not praise my wit otherwise than I would have him, ne aliter quàm ego velim meum laudet ingenium. They are dearer to me than my own life, mihi vitâ meâ sunt chariores. I found it more by wanting, than enjoying, caringo magis intellexi, quàm fruendo. There is nothing to be wished for more than prosperity, nihil est magis optandum quàm prospera fortuna.

That [a p onous demonstrative] Ille, is, iste.

¶ Let be so wd rob you of that fine man, ne illum talem præcipiat tibi. We must take heed we offend not at all in that kind, cavendum est ne quid in eo genere peccetur. Drive away that rival as far as thou canst from her, illum iemum quoad potes ab eâ peluito, Ter. 2. 1. 9.

That [who, or which] Qui. ¶ When I saw a man that had been engaged in the same cause with myself, cum viderem virum, qui in eadem causâ, quâ ego, fuisset.

The same that, or as, Idem ac, atque, e, ut.

¶ Her mind is the same that it was, animus ejus idem.

idem est, ut loquitur. I am of the same temper & firmness, eodem tum ingenio atque olim. Vesta is the name of Terra, Vesta eadem est & Terra. I do not, as I have seen: et ibi foolish prorsus do in concedi n, non ego idem facio, ut alios in concedi vultis anantes facere vidi.

That [a conjunction] Ut, nō, quōd, quōd. It is possible that I may be deceived, potest fieri ut fallar. The oftener that I see you, the more I love you, quōd te saepius video, rō magis amo. Are you such a fool, that you know not these things? adēne ea ignarus, ut hæc nescias? See that you be courageous, fac animo bono sis. See that you do not defend me, tu cave defendas. I know now that my son is in love, scio jam quōd filius amet meum.

Note, 1. That signifying because, and denoting time past, when it is met before a verb, may be rendered into Latin by quōd; as, ¶ I am glad that you are returned safe, Quōd tu redisti incolumis, gaudeo. ¶ But that signifying to the end that, denoting time to come, and coming before a verb, which signifieth to desire, fear, command, labour, take care, &c. must be made by ut; as, ¶ I desire that you will attend the play, ut tu fabulam agas, volo. I am afraid that this stranger will not stand it out to my father, metuo ut subfiet hopes. He gave orders to me that it should be taught, mihī mandavit, ut emeretur. I labour'd that you should decree, laboravi, ut vos decerneretis. Take care, that you preserve your health, cura, ut valeas.

Note, 2. That quōd and ut may generally be better omitted, if the verb immediately following them be put in the infinitive mood, and its nominative case changed into the accusative; as, ¶ They say that he manageth his own business, sūm se negotium agere dicunt, sic quōd ille agit. He hideth him be without care, hunc jubet sine cura esse, sic ut hic sine cura sit.

Saying that, being that, or since that, Cūm, quūm, quando, quandoquidem, quia, quoniam, quidem.

¶ Informeth that—Adēd ut—usque adēd, ut—So that, Dum, dummodo; modō, vel adēd, ut; si, si tantūm.

That way, Illā, illā.

A thatched cottage, Casa culmis, vel stipulis, tecta. ¶ But most of the butts were framed of kurdles or boards, and some wattled with reeds, all thatched with straw, all apt to catch fire, as if done on purpose, erant autem pleraque tecta ex cratibus aut tabulis facta, alia arundine texta, stramento tecta omnia, velut de industria, alimentis ignis, Liv. 27. 3.

A thatcher, Qui casam culmis, vel stipulis, tegere solet.

To thaw [act.] Regelo, glaciem, vel nivem, solvere.

To thaw, or be thawed [neut.] Regelari, solvi.

Thawed, Regelatus, solutus.

The, before a Noun substantive, may, for the most part, be omitted in translating into Latin, as being sufficiently included in the Noun itself; except it denote the particular thing mentioned before, and then it is to be translated by hic, hæc, hoc; ille, illa, illud; iste, ista, istud; according to the gender of its Substantive, and the particular thing thereby referred to, whether this, that, or the other; or when it is emphatically used to show that some person or thing, is more than ordinarily remarkable; as, ¶ Alexander the Great, Alexander ille Magnus. I the self same person, ego ille ipse. The said Medea is said formerly to have fled out of Pontus, Medea illa ex Ponto quondam profugisse dicitur. The same Fortune goddess of human affairs, illa ipsa rerum humanarum domina Fortuna. Then the same excellent man—tum ille vir optimus—

*The one, the other, * Unus, alter; alter, alter. The first, the second, the third, Primus, alter, tertius.*

¶ From one end to the other, A principio ad finem; ab ovibus usque ad mala.

¶ From the one to the other, Ultra citræque, forsum deorsum.

The before a comparative degree including in it [by how much, by so much] is to be made by prorsus, tantō; quōd, eō, hęc; tam, quān; as, ¶ The longer he is absent, the more I miss him, quāntō diutius abest, magis cupo tantō. The more useful a science is, the more it is to be valued, scientia, quōd pius prodest, eō est præstantior. The more ingenious a person is, the greater pains he taketh in teaching, quōd quisque est ingeniosior, hęc docet laboriosius. The easier you love, the more upright you should be, quān vos facilius diligitis, tam maxime vos æquo animo æqua nocere oportet.

Small things are often most justly compared with great ones, magnis sæpe rectissime parva conferuntur. These things which are attended with very great difficulties, are to be esteemed as altogether impossible, quæ perdifficilia sunt, perinde habenda sunt, ac si effici non possint. It is a usual thing with me, solens meo more fecero. It cometh to, or is all, the same thing, eodem redit. Things will not be always at this pass, omnium rerum est vicissitudo.

Truly I think so, sic quidem mihi videtur, ita esse prorùs existimo. I think you must even do so too, atque idem tibi faciendum censeo. I think verily that he could, equidem existimo eum potuisse. What think you? quid tibi videtur? It will fall out better than you think for, res succedet opinione melius. I am troubled to think what will become of it, curæ sanè est quorsum eventurum hoc fiet. Achæion, ois, m. A famous river of Epirus in Greece, rising out of mount Pindus, and dividing Ætolia from Acarnania; hod. Pædicolma. The poets give it a person, and say he was the son of Oceanus and Tethys; or of the Sun and Earth, as some say, whom Hercules engaged in single combat for Deianira, daughter to the king of Colchonia, to whom both had pretensions, and conquered him, though he changed himself first into a serpent, then into a bull; in which form having lost one of his horns, he was obliged to compound for it by giving Hercules the horn of plenty (Vid. Amalthæa). He at last changed himself into a river. The meaning of the fable is, that this was a great river, and therefore fitly called the son of Oceanus. That it had many turnings and windings, therefore is fitly expressed by a serpent. The roaring noise which it maketh when it overfloweth its banks, whereby the adjacent fields become fruitful, answer well to the labours and roaring of a bull; under which figure therefore the poets frequently describe rivers. The two streams, or channels which it had, are the two horns in the fiction; one of which branches, being dammed up by Hercules to prevent its spoiling the country, is described by the cutting off one horn; and the fruitfulness which thereupon succeeded, is the fabulous horn of plenty, Mythol.

They, as they hung with their heads downwards, spying Hercules's backside all black and hairy, one said to the other, Did not our mother warn us of meeting Melampyrgus? ¶ Achilles, is, eos, & ei, Hor. per Synæphon. Achilli, Virg. (qu. ab Achilles, m. Αχιλλεύς, Gr.) in voc. Achille, Ov. qu. a Nom. Αχιλλεύς prima simpl. The son of Peleus king of Thessaly, and of Thetis, the goddess of the sea. His mother dipped him all over, when he was a child, in the river Styx, to make him invulnerable, except that part of his foot which she held him by when she dipped. He was afterwards put under the tuition of Chiron the Centaur, to learn to ride the great horse, and to play upon music, Vid. Stat. in sin. Achill. His mother was warned by the oracle, that if he were to the wars of Troy with other princes, he should be slain there; wherefore she sent him away in woman's apparel, and procured that he should lie hid amongst the daughters of Lycomedes, where he got with child one of his daughters named Deidamia, of whom Pyrrhus was born: but it being prophesied, that unless Achilles did help, Troy could not be conquered, Ulysses by craft found him out. He had certain armour made by Vulcan, at the request of Thetis, which could be pierced by no human force. Out of peevishness for Agamemnon's taking away Briseis from him, he forbore fighting, till the death of his friend Patroclus; to revenge which he went again to battle, slew Hector, and dragged him at his chariot thrice about the walls of Troy, and afterwards sold his body to his father king Priam for a great sum; concerning which Ennius wrote a tragedy, called Hectoris Iytra, from the Greek verb λείψω. On this argument Lucan also wrote in his youth, at we learn from Statius, Syl. 2. 7. 55. At last he was slain by Paris, being shot in the heel.

Ammon, ônis. m. A name of Jupiter, whose temple was in the deserts of Libya, for which reason some have derived it from ἄμμος, aren; but the name not being Greek, but purely Egyptian, as Plutarch, as well as Herodotus in Euterpe affirm, it seemeth more probable to derive it from Ἄμμων the sun, under which name Macrobius hath shown Jupiter to be worshipped. This is further confirmed by the manner of his worship, which was under the form of a ram, whence he is styled corniger. For the word Ἄμμων, significeth both a born and a ray of light. His oracle was in reputation in the time of Alexander the Great, but began to be neglected in the reign of Tiberius, as Strabo, who then lived, telleth us, and more in the time of Trajan, as we learn from Plutarch's treatise of oracles, and more and more despised as the light of the gospel shined clearer.

But afterwards being with child by Jupiter, she was suspected by Dirce, whom Lycus had married, to be still familiar with her husband, who therefore ordered her to be cast into prison; from whence she was delivered by Jupiter, and fled into the mountain Cithæron; and there, in a place where two ways met, brought forth twins, which were educated by the shepherds as their own. They called one of them Zethus, ἀπό τοῦ ζῆτιος ζῆτις, and the other Amphion, ὄρι in ὄριον ἢ μήτηρ αὐτῶν ἴτικτιν. When they were grown up and understood the injuries done by Dirce to their mother, they tied her to the tail of a mad bull, which dragged her on the craggy rocks, till Bacchus pitying her, turned her into a mountain of the same name. Amphion became an excellent musician, having been presented with a lute by Mercury, on which he played so sweetly, that he brought the stones together wherewith the tower of Thebes was built, Her. A. Pœt. 394. & Sil. 11. 455. By thus receiving a lute from Mercury is meant, that he was a very eloquent man; and by his bringing the stones together, that he persuaded the rude and barbarous people to join together in one body, and pursue one common interest, building themselves a city, wherein to live under certain laws agreed upon by common consent, and fortifying a tower as a defence against their enemies.*

He invented the anchor, as some say, and also the potters wheel, as Pliny, Euphorus, and others affirm. But it will be no deduction from him as a philosopher, to disbelieve this account of mechanism, since Homer who lived before him speaketh of it as well known in his time, Il. 7. 600. But afterwards being with child by Jupiter, she was suspected by Dirce, whom Lycus had married, to be still familiar with her husband, who therefore ordered her to be cast into prison; from whence she was delivered by Jupiter, and fled into the mountain Cithæron; and there, in a place where two ways met, brought forth twins, which were educated by the shepherds as their own. They called one of them Zethus, ἀπὸ τοῦ ζυγίου πέποι, and the other Amphion, ὅτι ἐν διόδῳ ἢ μύθῳ αὐτῶν ἴτακι. When they were grown up and understood the injuries done by Dirce to their mother, they tied her to the tail of a mad bull, which dragged her on the craggy rocks, till Bacchus pitying her, turned her into a mountain of the same name. Amphion became an excellent musician, having been presented with a lute by Mercury, on which he played so sweetly, that he brought the stones together wherewith the tower of Thebes was built, Her. A. P. Æt. 391. & Sil. 11. 455. By thus receiving a lute from Mercury is meant, that he was a very eloquent man; and by his bringing the stones together, that he persuaded the rude and barbarous people to join together in one body, and pursue one common interest, building themselves a city, wherein to live under certain laws agreed upon by common consent, and fortifying a tower as a defence against their enemies.

Accordingly when he was of age, he passed over into Spain, beat the Gauls at the river Rhoine, and then marched his army over the Alps, vanquished Sempronius the Roman consul at Trebia, routed the consul Flaminius at Trasimene, and though worsted a little by the conduct of Q. ling in the field, Liv. 24. 49. But, happy for the Romans, he led his troops to Capua, where they were so befitted with the rich wines of Italy, as never to be under any command afterwards. At length being overcome by the politic conduct of Fabius Maximus, he fled to Bithynia, and ended his life by a dose of poison, which he had reserved for that purpose in a ring, Vid. He and Bacchus were generally accounted young, but in ancient coins both of them have sometimes beards. In heaven he is called Sol; Bacchus on earth, and Apollo below. Hinc, Cicero, ðnis. m. Marcus Tully Cicero, father of the Latin eloquence, the greatest orator that ever the Roman state bred, or employed. He was born at a mean town in Italy, called Arpinum, but the greatness of his genius soon made him taken notice of, so that making easy steps through the lower honours, he was admitted into the chair of state. He acquitted himself in his consulship so well, that he was the first who ever was honoured with the glorious title of father of his country. He was a great lover of the state, and an unwearied defender thereof; Catiline's conspiracy and the Agrarian law, are ample testimonies of his vigilance and industry. He was banished the city by Clodius, at that time tribune, against whom he made that incomparable speech for Milo; but was with honour restored. In the civil war he took part with Pompey, as thinking the public liberty lay on that side, to which he always to his last breath showed himself a constant friend. He had one son, unworthy of such a father, to whom, when he was a young student at Athens, he sent his book of Offices, a book which gave the first handle to the invention of Printing in Europe. He had a brother too, Quintus Cicero, once Cæsar's lieutenant general in Gaul, and afterwards prætor in Asia. He was slain by order of Mark Anthony in the sixty-third year of his age.

[Ὅμηρος, Gr. i. e. obfer, quod in bello inter Colophonios & Smyrnenfes obfes datus fuerit] An ancient and most excellent Greek poet, so famous, that seven of the greatest cities of Greece contended to be the place of his birth, viz. Smyrna, Rhodes, Colophon, Sala-mis, Chios, Argos, and Athens. He is called Mælesiger, from the river Mæles, near which he was born; which river is on the reverse of coins struck by several cities in honour of him. The poets often call him Mæonides; either because he was the son of Mæon, or rather born in Mæonia; Smyrna, near the river Meles, seeming to have the best title to be his birth place. Vid. Plur. & Herodot.

 Mārīus (Cajus) (1) He was born at Arpinum, of mean parentage, but by his valour raised to the highest pitch of greatness, being seven times consul. He conquered Jugurtha in Numidia, the Cimbrs in Gaul, and the Germans in Italy. Afterwards falling out with Sylla, who espoused the party of the nobles, as he of the people, he committed great outrages, nor was Sylla behind him in cruelty; so that the commonwealth was miserably harrassed between them. Being overcome, he was forced to feulc in the marshes of Minturnæ; where he was found, imprisoned, and a soldier sent to kill him: but the man, daunted at his presence, his stern looks, and words, durst not attempt it. From thence he escaped into Africa, where he lived in exile, till recalled by Cinra he returned to Rome, and was made consul the seventh time, and died in that consulship in the 68th year of his age. He murdered his own mother, by whoſe means he got the empire; as alſo his brothers and relations, his wives Octavia and Poppæa, his maſter Seneca, and his miſtrick Lucan the poet. He ſet Rome on fire, charged the Chriſtians with the fact, and thereupon tortured and ſlew them publicly on ſtages for his pleaſure in the day-time, and in pitched coats, called tunica molliſſa, lighted up their bodies for torches in the night. At length his armies revolting choſe Galba for their emperor; which he hearing, would ſain have been diſpatched out of their way; but none would do the wretched favour to kill him; and as cowardice generally accompanieth cruelty, he had not the heart to help himſelf at a dead liſt, but fled to a cave, where he was found dead, but by what means he died is not known. Orpheus animata modis, Claud. 3. Conf. Honor. 114. Orphicum carmen, Cic. N. D. 1. 31.

Orpheus, i. & eos. m. [Orphus, Gr.] Thracian, the son of Oeagrus; or, as others, of Apollo and Calliope; a most ancient, learned, and excellent poet. He was one in the Argonautic expedition, whereof he wrote his history; which together with his hymns, &c. is still extant, but whether genuine is much doubted. They are, without doubt, of good antiquity, but seem to be written by several persons, and at different times. The poets feign the woods and hills to follow him, as charmed by his lute, and rivers to stop their course, that they might hear his music; the meaning whereof is, that by his wisdom and eloquence he reduced the barbarous people to civility, as explained by Horace, A. Poët. 391. There are several others of this name found in Suidas; but Cicero, out of Aristotle, faith there never was such a man as Orpheus, and that the Orphicum carmen was made by a Pythagorean, one Cicropus, N. D. 1. 38. The sad story of his wife Eurydice's death, and his descent into hell, see pleasantly sung by the divine Maro, in the latter part of the last Georgic.
