Contempts againſt the prerogative may alſo be by preferring the intereſts of a foreign potentate to thoſe of our own; or doing or receiving any thing that may create an undue influence, in favour of ſuch extrinſic power; as by taking a penſion from any foreign prince without the conſent of the King. 3 Inſt. 144.—Or by diſobeying the king's lawful commands; whether by writs iſſuing out of his courts of juſtice, or by a ſummons to attend his privy council; or by letters from the king to a ſubject, commanding him to return from beyond the ſea; (for diſobedience to which his lands ſhall be ſeized till he doth return, and himſelf afterwards puniſhed;) or by his writ of ne exeat regno or proclamation commanding the ſubject to ſtay at home.

Diſobedience to any of theſe commands is a high miſpriſion and contempt; and ſo, laſtly, is diſobedience to any act of parliament, where no particular penalty is aſſigned; for then it is puniſhable, like the reſt of theſe contempts, by fine and impriſonment, at the diſcretion of the King's courts of juſtice. 4 Comm. 122: See alſo 1 Hawk. P. C. cc. 22, 23, 24: And this Dict. titles Oaths, King.

CONTENEMENT, contenementum.] Is ſaid to ſignify a man's countenance or credit, which he hath together with, and by reaſon of, his freehold: in which ſenſe, it is uſed in the Stat. of 1 Ed. 3. and other ſtatutes: and Spelman in his Gloſſary ſays, contenementum eſt æſtimatio et conditionis forma, qua quis in repub. ſubſiſtit. But contenement is more properly that, which is neceſſary for the ſupport and maintenance of men, agreeable to their ſeveral qualities, or ſtates of life. See Magna Charta, c. 14: and Glanvil. lib. 9. c. 8. and this Dict. tit. Diſtreſs.

CONTINGENT LEGACY, See title Legacy.

CONTINGENT REMAINDER, Contingent or executory remainders (whereby no preſent intereſt paſſes) are where the eſtate in remainder is limited to take effect, either to a dubious and uncertain perſon, or upon a dubious and uncertain event; ſo that the particular eſtate may chance to be determined, and the remainder never take effect. 3 Rep. 20: 2 Comm. 169: And ſee 10 Rep. 85: See this Dict. titles Eſtate, Limitation, Remainder; and alſo title Executory Deviſe.

CONTINGENT USE, Is a uſe limited in a conveyance of land, which may or may not happen to veſt, according to the contingency expreſſed in the limitation of ſuch uſe: a uſe in contingency is ſuch which by poſſibility may happen in poſſeſſion, reverſion or remainder. 1 Rep. 121.

CONTINUAL CLAIM, See title Claim.

CONTINUANCE. Is the continuing of a cauſe in court, by an entry upon the records there for that purpoſe. There is a continuance of the aſſize, &c. And continuance of a writ or action is from one term to another, in caſe where the ſheriff hath not returned a former writ, iſſued out in the ſaid action. Kiteb. 262. Continuances and eſſoins are amendable upon the roll, at any time before judgment: they are the acts of the court, and at Common law they may amend their own acts before judgment, though in another term; but their judgments are only amendable in the ſame term wherein they are given. 3 Lev. 431. Upon an Original, a term or two or three terms may be meſne between the teſte and the return; and this ſhall be a good continuance; for the defendant is not at any prejudice by it, and the plaintiff may give a day to the defendant beyond the common day, if he will.

But a continuance by capias ought to be made from term to term, and there cannot be any meſne term, becauſe the defendant ought not to ſtay ſo long in priſon. 2 Danv. Abr. 150. If a man recover upon demurrer, or by default, &c. and a writ of inquiry of damages is awarded, there ought to be continuances between the firſt and ſecond judgment, otherwiſe it will be a diſcontinuance; for the firſt is but an award, and not compleat, till the ſecond judgment, upon the return of the writ of inquiry of damages. Ibid. 153. If the plaintiff be nonſuit, by which the defendant is to recover coſts; if the plaintiff will not enter his continuances, on purpoſe to ſave the coſts, the defendant ſhall be ſuffered to enter them. Cro. Jac. 316, 317. The courſe of the Court of King's Bench is to enter no continuance upon the roll, till after iſſue or demurrer, and then to enter the continuance of all upon the back, before judgment: and if it is not entered, it is error. Trin. 16 Jac. B. R. Vide titles Diſcontinuance, Proceſs.

CONTINUANDO, A word uſed in a ſpecial declaration of treſpaſs, when the plaintiff would recover damages for ſeveral treſpaſſes in the ſame action: and to avoid multiplicity of ſuits, a man may in one action of treſpaſs recover damages for many treſpaſſes, laying the firſt to be done with a continuando to the whole time, in which the reſt of the treſpaſſes were done; which is in this form, Continuando (by continuing the treſpaſs aforeſaid, &c. from the day aforeſaid, &c.) until ſuch a day, including the laſt treſpaſs. Terms de Ley.

In treſpaſs with a continuando of divers things, though of ſome of thoſe things there could be no continuando, yet it ſhall be good for thoſe things for which the continuando could be, and not for the others: but if the continuando had been particularly of ſuch things whereof a continuando could not be, then it had been nought. 3 Lev. 94. Every day's treſpaſs is ſaid to be a ſeveral treſpaſs; tho' a continuando may not be of men's continuing a treſpaſs day and night, for ſome time together; for mankind muſt take ſome reſt: where cattle do treſpaſs upon ground, they are continually treſpaſſing night and day, and therefore the continuando in that caſe is good. 1 Lill. Abr. 307. Treſpaſs for breaking an houſe with a continuando, is good; and until a re-entry is made, the continuation of the poſſeſſion, is a continuing of the treſpaſs. Lutw. 1342. See title Treſpaſs.

CONTRABAND GOODS, From contra, and the Ital. bando, an edict or proclamation.] Are thoſe which are prohibited by act of parliament, or the King's proclamation to be imported into, or exported out of this into any other nation. See titles Navigation-Acts: Cuſtoms.

CONTRACAUSATOR, A criminal, or one proſecuted for a crime: this word is mentioned in Leg. H. 1. cap. 61.

CONTRACT, contractus.] A covenant or agreement between two or more perſons, with a lawful conſideration or cauſe, Weſt. Symb. part 1. As if a man ſells his horſe or other thing to another, for a ſum of money; or covenants in conſideration of 20*l.* to make him a leaſe of a farm, &c. theſe are good contracts, becauſe there is a quid pro quo, or one thing for another: but if a perſon make promiſe to me, that I ſhall have 20*s.* and that he will be debtor to me therefore, and after I demand the 20*s.* and he will not give it me, yet I ſhall never have any action to recover this 20*s.* becauſe this promiſe was no contract, but a bare promiſe, or nudum pactum; though if any thing were given for the 20*s.* if it were but to the value of a penny, then it had been a good contract. See title Conſideration.

Every contract doth imply in itſelf an aſſumpſit in law, to perform the ſame; for a contract would be to no purpoſe, if there were no means to enforce the performance thereof. 1 Lill. Abr. 308. Where an action is brought upon a contract, and the plaintiff miſtakes the ſum agreed upon, he will fail in his action: but if he brings his action on the promiſe in law, which ariſes from the debt, there, although he miſtakes the ſum, he ſhall recover. Alleyn 29. See titles Action, Aſſumpſit.

There is a diverſity where a day of payment is limited on a contract, and where not; for where it is limited, the contract is good preſently, and an action lies upon it, without payment: but in the other not: If a man buys 20 yards of cloth, &c. the contract is void, if he do not pay the money preſently; but if day of payment be given, there the one may have an action for the money, and the other trover for the cloth. Dyer 30, 293. Where a ſeller ſays to a buyer, he will ſell his horſe for ſo much, and the buyer ſays he will give it; if he preſently tell out the money it is a contract; but if he do not, it is no contract. Noy's Max. 87: Hob. 41. The property of any thing ſold is in the buyer immediately by the contract; though regularly it muſt be delivered to the buyer, before the ſeller can bring his action for the money. Noy 88. If one contract to buy a horſe or other thing of me, and no money is paid, or earneſt given, nor day ſet for payment thereof, nor the thing delivered; in theſe caſes, no action will lie for the money, or the thing ſold, but it may be ſold to another. Plowd. 128, 309.

All contracts are to be certain, perfect and compleat: For an agreement to give ſo much for a thing as it ſhall be reaſonably worth, is void for incertainty; ſo a promiſe to pay money in a ſhort time, &c. or to give ſo much, if he likes the thing when he ſees it. Dyer 91: 1 Bulſt. 92. But if I contract with another to give him 10*l.* for ſuch a thing, if I like it on ſeeing the ſame; this bargain is ſaid to be perfect at my pleaſure: though I may not take the thing before I have paid the money; if I do, the ſeller may have treſpaſs againſt me; and if he ſell it to another, I may bring an action on the caſe againſt him. Noy 104. If a contract be to have for cattle ſold 10*l.* if the buyer do a certain thing, or elſe to have 20*l.* it is a good contract, and certain enough. And if I agree with a perſon to give him ſo much for his horſe, as J. S. ſhall judge him worth, when he hath judged it, the contract is compleat, and an action will lie on it; and the buyer ſhall have a reaſonable time to demand the judgment of J. S. But if he dies before the judgment is given, the contract is determined. Perk. ſect. 112, 114: Shep. Abr. 294.

In contracts, the time is to be regarded, in and from which the contract is made: the words ſhall be taken in the common and uſual ſenſe, as they are taken in that place where ſpoken; and the law doth not ſo much look upon the form of words, as on the ſubſtance and mind of the parties therein. 5 Rep. 83: 1 Bulſt. 175. A contract for goods may be made as well by word of mouth, as by deed in writing; and where it is in writing only, not ſealed and delivered, it is all one as by word. But if the contract be by writing ſealed and delivered, and ſo turned into a deed, then it is of another nature; and in this caſe generally the action on the verbal contract is gone, and ſome other action lies for breach thereof. Plowd. 130, 309: Dyer 90.

Contracts, not to be performed in a year, are to be in writing, ſigned by the party, &c. or no action may be brought on them: but if no day is ſet, or the time is uncertain, they may be good without it. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. And by the ſame ſtatute, no contract for the ſale of goods for 10*l.* or upwards, ſhall be good, unleſs the buyer receive part of the goods ſold; or give ſomething in earneſt to bind the contract; or ſome note thereof be made in writing, ſigned by the perſon charged with the contract, &c. See title Frauds; Agreement III, IV.

If two perſons come to a draper, and one ſays, let this man have ſo much cloth, and I will pay you; there the ſale is to the undertaker only, though the delivery is to another by his appointment: but if a contract be made with A. B. and the vendor ſcruples to let the goods go without money, and C D. comes to him and deſires him to let A. B. have the goods, and undertakes that he ſhall pay him for them, that will be a promiſe within the ſtatute 29 Car. 2. c. 3, and ought to be in writing. Mod. Caſ. 249.

A contract made and entered into upon good conſideration, may for good conſiderations be diſſolved. See Agreement and Sale. As to Uſurious Contracts, See title Uſury.

CONTRAFACTION, contrafactio.] A counterfeiting; contrafactio ſigilli regis, a counterfeiting the King's ſeal. Blount.

CONTRA FORMAM COLLATIONIS, A writ that lay where a man had given lands in perpetual alms, to any late houſes of religion, as to an abbot and convent, or to the warden or maſter of any hoſpital and his convent, to find certain poor men with neceſſaries, and do divine ſervice, &c. If they aliened the land, to the diſheriſon of the houſe and church, then the donor or his heirs, ſhould bring this writ to recover the lands. It was had againſt the abbot or his ſucceſſor; not againſt the alienee, though he were tenant of the land: and was founded upon the ſtatute of Weſtm. 2. c. 1: Reg. Orig. 238: F. N. B. 210.

CONTRA FORMAM FEOFFAMENTI, A writ that lay for the heir of a tenant enfeoffed of certain lands or tenements, by charter of feoffment from a lord to make certain ſervices and ſuits to his court, who was afterwards diſtrained for more ſervices than were mentioned in the charter. Reg. Orig. 176: Old Nat. Br. 162.

CONTRA FORMAM STATUTI, contrary to the form of the ſtatute in ſuch caſe made and provided.] The uſual concluſion of every indictment, &c. laid on an offence created by ſtatute.

If one ſtatute be relative to another, as where the former making the offence, the latter adds a penalty, the indictment ought to conclude contra formam ſtatutorum. 2 Hale's Pl. C. 173. cap. 24.

Where there are several statutes, and it does not appear on which the information is founded, the concluding contra formam statuti is ill. Cro. Jac. 142. pl. 19. Broughton v. Moor, cited as adjudged in Talbot & al'. Where one act makes the offence, and another gives the penalty, an information must be contra formam statutorum; in the case of Talbot and Sheldon, indicted for recusancy contra formam statuti, 23 Eliz. c. 1. and the judgment reversed because the penalty was demanded; for the 10 Eliz. made the offence, and the 23d gave the penalty: but, if the information had been for the offence only, it had been good; per Coke. Ow. 135. Trin. 9 Jac. See 5 Vin. Abr. 552, 556.—See further titles Statutes, Indictment.

CONTRAMANDATIO PLACITI, A respiting or giving a defendant further time to answer; or a countermand of what was formerly ordered. Leg. H. 1. c. 59.

CONTRAMANDATUM, Is said to be a lawful excuse which the defendant in a suit by attorney alledgeth for himself, to shew that the plaintiff hath no cause of complaint. Blount.

CONTRAPOSITIO, A plea or answer. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 34.

CONTRARIENTS, In the reign of King Edw. 2. Thomas Earl of Lancaster taking part with the Barons against the King, it was not thought fit, in respect of their great power, to call them rebels or traitors, but contrarients: and hence we have a record of those times, called Rotulum Contrarientium.

CONTRATENERE, To with-hold. Si quis decimas contrateneat. Leg. Alfredi apud Brompton, c. 9.

CONTRIBULES, contribunales, kindred or cousins. Lamb. p. 75.

CONTRIBUTION, contributio.] Is where every one pays his share, or contributes his part to any thing. One parcener shall have contribution against another; one heir have contribution against another heir, in equal degree: and one purchaser shall have contribution against another. Also conusors in a statute shall be equally charged, and not one of them solely extended. 3 Rep. 12, 13, &c. On a statute or recognisance, there is a contribution and stay till the full age of the heir, &c. and this doth extend to the lessee for life or years, of the conusor, who has part of the land liable, and the heir within age the residue; for the land of every one of them ought to be charged equally, because the whole is liable to the judgment; and this cannot be, if during the nonage, the burden shall fall upon one only. Jenk. Cent. 36. If lands are mortgaged, and then devised to one person for life, with remainder to another; both devisees shall make contribution to payment of the mortgage-money. Chan. Cas. 224, 271.—See title Mortgage.

Where goods are cast into the sea, for the safe-guard of a ship, or other goods, &c. aboard in a tempest; there is a contribution among merchants, towards the loss of the owners. See title Insurance. And where a robbery is committed on the highway, and damages are recovered against one or a few persons, in an action against the hundred, the rest of the inhabitants shall make contribution to the same. 27 Eliz. c. 13. See title Robbery.

CONTRIBUTIONE FACIENDA, A writ that lieth where there are tenants in common, that are bound to do one thing, and one is put to the whole burden; as where they jointly hold a mill pro indiviso, and take the profits equally, and the mill falling into decay, one of them will not repair the mill; now the other shall have a writ to compel him to contribute to the reparations. And if there be three coparceners of land, that owe suit to the lord's court, and the eldest performs the whole; then may she have this writ to compel the other to make their contribution. So where one suit is required for land, and that land being sold to divers persons, suit is demanded of them all, or some of them by distress, as entirely as if all the land were still in one. Reg. Orig. 175: F. N. B. 162.

CONTROLLER, Fr. contrerolleur, Lat. contrarotulator.] An Overseer or officer relating to public accounts, &c. And we have divers officers of this name; as controller of the King's Household; of the Navy; of the Customs; of the Excise; of the Mint, &c. And in our courts, there is the controller of the Hamper, of the Pipe, and of the Pell, &c. The office of Controller of the Household, is to control the accounts of the Green Cloth; and he sits with the Lord Steward and other officers in the counting-house, for daily taking the accounts of all expences of the household. The Controller of the Navy controls the payment of wages; examines and audits accounts; and inquires into rates of stores for shipping, &c. Controllers of the Customs and Excise, their office is to control the accounts of those revenues. And the Controller of the Mint, controls the payment of wages, and accounts relating to the same. Controller of the Hamper is an officer in the Chancery attending the Lord Chancellor daily in, term-time, and upon seal-days; whose office is to take all things sealed from the Clerk of the Hamper, inclosed in bags of leather, and to note the just number and effect of all things so received, and enter the same in a book, with all the duties appertaining to his Majesty, and other officers for the same. The Controller of the Pipe is an officer of the Exchequer, who writes out summons twice every year to the sheriffs to levy the farms and debts of the Pipe; and keeps a controlment of the Pipes, &c. Controller of the Pell is also an officer of the Exchequer; of which sort there are two, who are the Chamberlain's clerks, that do or should keep a controlment of the Pell, of receipts and goings out: and this officer was originally such as took notes of other officers' accounts or receipts, to the intent to discover if they dealt amiss, and was ordained for the Prince's better security. Fleta. lib. 1. cap. 18: Stat. 12 Ed. 3. cap. 3. This last seems to be the original use and design of all Controllers.

CONTROVER, controuveur] Signifies in our law one that of his own head devises or invents false news. 2 Inst. 227.

CONVENABLE, Fr.] Agreeable. Stat. 27 Ed. 3. c. 21. See Covenable.

CONVENIENT, conveniens] Of the use of this word, Sir Edw. Coke in his Institute says,—Non solum quod licet sed quod est conveniens est considerandum, nihil quod est inconveniens est licitum. 1 Inst. 66.

CONVENT, conventus.] Signifies the fraternity of an abbey or priory; as societas doth the number of fellows in a college. Bract. lib. 2. c. 35.—See title Monastery, Mortmain.

CONVENTICLE, conventiculum.] A private assembly or meeting for the exercise of religion; first used as a term of disgrace for the meetings of Wickliffe in this nation, above two hundred years since: and now applied to the illegal meetings of the Non-conformists: it is mentioned in the the ſtatutes 2 Hen. 4. c. 15: 1 H. 6. c. 3. and 16 Car. 2. c. 4; which ſtatute was made to prevent and ſuppreſs conventicles: and by Stat. 22 Car. 2. cap. 1, It is enacted, that if any perſons of the age of ſixteen years, ſubjects of this kingdom, ſhall be preſent at any conventicle, where there are five or more aſſembled, they ſhall be fined 5*s.* for the firſt offence, and 10*s.* for the ſecond; and perſons preaching incur a penalty of 20*l.* Alſo ſuffering a meeting to be held in a houſe, &c. is liable to 20*l.* penalty. Juſtices of peace have power to enter ſuch houſes, and ſeize perſons aſſembled, &c. And if they neglect their duty, they ſhall forfeit 100*l.* And if any conſtable, &c. know of ſuch meetings, and do not inform a juſtice of peace, or chief magiſtrate, he ſhall forfeit 5*l.* But the Stat. 1 W. & M. ſt. 1. c. 18, ordains that proteſtant diſſenters ſhall be exempted from penalties: though if they meet in a houſe, with the doors locked, barred, or bolted, ſuch diſſenters ſhall have no benefit from that ſtatute. By Stat. 10 An. c. 2, Officers of the government, &c. preſent at any conventicle, at which there ſhall be ten perſons, if the Royal family be not prayed for in expreſs words, ſhall forfeit 40*l.* and be diſabled. See titles Hereſy, Non-conformiſts, Religion.

CONVENTIO, A word uſed in ancient law-pleadings, for an agreement or covenant: as A. B. queritur, &c. de C. D. &c. pro eo quod non teneat conventionem, &c. There is a ſtrange record of the court of the manor of Hatfield, in Com. Ebor. held anno 11 Ed. 3, relative to a convention to ſell the Devil, and on earneſt given, and non-delivery, action brought; which on hearing was adjudged in infernum.

CONVENTIONE, A writ that lies for the breach of any covenant in writing, whether real or perſonal: and it is called a Writ of Covenant. Reg. Orig. 115: F. N. B. 145.

CONVENTION, A parliament aſſembled, but in which no act is paſſed, or bill ſigned. Dict.

The term Convention, is rather applied to the meeting of the Lords and Commons, without the aſſent of, or being called together by, the King; and which can only be juſtified ex neceſſitate rei.

Of this nature was the Convention-Parliament, which reſtored King Charles II. and which met above a month before his return: the Lords by their own authority, and the Commons in purſuance of writs iſſued in the name of the keepers of the liberty of England by authority of parliament. And if this Convention had not ſo met, it was morally impoſſible that the kingdom ſhould have been ſettled in peace.

In a ſimilar manner, at the time of the Revolution, A. D. 1688, the Lords and Commons by their own authority, and upon the ſummons of the Prince of Orange, (afterward William III.) met in a Convention, and therein diſpoſed of the Crown and Kingdom. And it is declared by Stat. 1 W. & M. ſt. 1. c. 1. that this Convention was really the two houſes of parliament, notwithſtanding the want of writs or other defects of form.

If we may be allowed to ſuppoſe a poſſible caſe, that the whole Royal line ſhould at any time fail and become extinct, which would indiſputably vacate the throne; in this ſituation it ſeems reaſonable to preſume that the body of the nation, conſiſting of Lords and Commons, would have a right to meet and ſettle the government: otherwiſe there muſt be no government at all. But whenever the throne is full, no national meeting, nor any meeting pretending to be ſuch, can be legal, but the parliament aſſembled by command of the King. See title Parliament. and 1 Comm. 151, 2.

The Conſtitution of Great Britain having placed the repreſentation of the nation, and the expreſſion of the national, will in the parliament, no other meeting or Convention even of every individual in the kingdom, would be a competent organ to expreſs that will; and meetings of ſuch a nature tending merely to ſedition, and to delude the people into an imaginary aſſertion of rights, which they had before delegated to their repreſentatives in parliament, could only tend to introduce Anarchy and Confuſion; and to overturn every ſettled principle of government. An act of parliament was paſſed in Ireland, in the year 1793 to prevent any ſuch meetings or Conventions; and a few ignorant individuals, who in the ſame year had dared to aſſemble under that title in Scotland, were quickly diſperſed, and their leaders convicted of ſeditious practices; for which they were ſentenced to tranſportation. See further titles Parliament, Treaſon, Seditious Aſſemblies.

CONVENTUALS, Religious men united together in a convent or religious houſe. Cowel.

CONVENTUAL CHURCH, A church that conſiſts of regular clerks, profeſſing ſome order of religion; or of Dean and Chapter, or other ſocieties of Spiritual men.

CONVERSION, Is where a perſon finding or having the goods of another in his poſſeſſion, converts them to his own uſe, without the conſent of the owner, and for which the proprietor may maintain an action of Trover and Converſion againſt him.—And refuſal to reſtore goods is, primâ facie, ſufficient evidence of a converſion, though it does not amount to a converſion. 10 Rep. 56: 3 Comm. 152. See title Trover.

CONVERSOS. The Jews here in England were formerly called Converſos, becauſe they were converted to the Chriſtian religion. King Hen. III, built an houſe for them in London, and allowed them a competent proviſion or ſubſiſtence for their lives; and this houſe was called Domus Converſorum. But by reaſon of the vaſt expences of the wars, and the increaſe of thoſe converts, they became a burden to the Crown; ſo that they were placed in abbeys and monaſteries for their ſupport and maintenance. And the Jews being afterwards baniſhed, King Ed. III, in the 51ſt year of his reign, gave this houſe which had been uſed for the converted Jews, for the keeping of the Rolls; and it is ſaid to be the ſame which was till lately enjoyed by the Maſter of the Rolls. Blount. Harg: Co. Lit. 271 b.

CONVEYANCE, A deed which paſſes or conveys land from one man to another. Conveyance by feoffment, and livery, was the general conveyance at Common law; and if there was a tenant in poſſeſſion, ſo that livery could not be made, then was the reverſion granted, and the tenant always attorned: alſo upon the ſame reaſon, a leaſe, and releaſe was held to be a good conveyance, to paſs an eſtate; but the leſſee was to be in actual poſſeſſion, before the releaſe. But the leaſe is now conſidered as operating ſo as to give the poſſeſſion, which it does in point of law.

By the Common law, when an eſtate did not paſs by feoffment, the vendor made a leaſe for years, and the leſſee leſſee actually entered; and the leſſor granted the reverſion to another, and the leſſee attorned: afterwards, when an inheritance was to be granted, then likewiſe was a leaſe for years uſually made, and the leſſee entered (as before) and then the leſſor releaſed to him: but after the ſtatute of uſes, it became an opinion, that if a leaſe for years was made upon a valuable conſideration, a releaſe might operate upon it without an actual entry of the leſſee; becauſe the ſtatute did execute the leaſe, and raiſed an uſe preſently to the leſſee: and ſerjeant Moor was the firſt who practiſed this way. 2 Mod. 251, 252.

The moſt common Conveyances now in uſe are deeds of gift, bargain and ſale, leaſe and releaſe, fines and recoveries, ſettlements to uſes, &c.

The following further obſervations on conveyances at Common law and thoſe which derive their effect from the ſtatute of Uſes, are abridged from the long and learned note on 1 Inſt. 271 b; to which the curious enquirer is referred for a more particular inveſtigation of the ſubject. See alſo this Dict. titles Deed; Eſtate; Leaſe and Releaſe; Limitation; Truſts; Uſes.

FEOFFMENTS and GRANTS were the two chief modes uſed in the Common law for transferring property. The moſt comprehenſive definition which can be given of a FEOFFMENT ſeems to be, a conveyance of corporeal hereditaments, by delivery of the poſſeſſion, upon, or within view of, the hereditaments conveyed. This delivery was thus made, that the lord and the other tenants might be witneſſes to it. No charter of feoffment was neceſſary; it only ſerved as an authentication of the tranſaction; and when it was uſed, the lands were ſuppoſed to be transferred, not by the charter, but by the livery which it authenticated. Soon after the Conqueſt, or perhaps towards the end of the Saxon government, all eſtates were called fees; the original and proper import of the word feoffment is, the grant of a fee. It came afterwards to ſignify a grant with livery of ſeiſin of a free inheritance to a man and his heirs: more reſpect being had to the perpetuity, than to the feudal tenure, of the eſtate granted. In early times, after the Conqueſt, charters of Feoffment were various in point of form. In the time of Ed. I. they began to be drawn up in a more uniform ſtile. The more antient of them generally run with the words dedi, conceſſi, or donavi. It was not till a later period that feoffavi came into uſe. The more antient feoffments were alſo uſually made in conſideration of, or for the homage and ſervice of the feoffee, and to hold of the feoffor and his heirs. But after the Stat. Quia emptores, (18 E. 1. ſt. 1.) feoffments were always made to hold to the chief lords of the fee, without the words pro homagio & ſervitio. See further, 1 Inſt. 6 a: 271 b.

The proper limitation of a feoffment is to a man and his heirs; but feoffments were often made of conditional fees, (or of eſtates-tail as they are now called,) and of life eſtates; to which may be added, feoffments of eſtates given in frankmarriage and frankalmoigne. To make the feoffment complete, the feoffor uſed to give the feoffee ſeiſin of the lands: this is what the feudiſts call Inveſtiture. It was often made by ſymbolical tradition, but it was always made upon or within view of the lands. When the King made a feoffment he iſſued his writ to the ſheriff, or ſome other perſon to deliver ſeiſin: other great men did the ſame; and this gave riſe to powers of attorney. See Mad. Form. pref.

A GRANT in the original ſignification of the word, is a conveyance or transfer of an incorporeal hereditament. As livery of ſeiſin could not be had of theſe, the transfer of them was always made by writing, in order to produce that notoriety, which in the transfer of corporeal hereditaments was produced by delivery of the poſſeſſion. But in other reſpects a feoffment and a grant did not materially differ.

Such was the original diſtinction between a feoffment and a grant; but from this real difference in their ſubject matter only, a difference was ſuppoſed to exiſt in their operation. A feoffment viſibly operated on the poſſeſſion; a grant could only operate on the right of the party conveying. Now as poſſeſſion and freehold were ſynonimous terms, no perſon being conſidered to have the poſſeſſion of the lands but he who had at leaſt an eſtate of freehold in them, a conveyance which was conſidered as transferring the poſſeſſion, muſt neceſſarily be conſidered as transferring an eſtate of freehold; or, to ſpeak more accurately, as transferring the whole fee. But this reaſoning could not apply to grants; their eſſential quality being that of transferring things which did not lie in poſſeſſion: they therefore could only tranſfer the right; that is, could only transfer that eſtate which the party had a right to convey. It is in this ſenſe the expreſſions are to be underſtood, that a feoffment is a tortious and a grant a rightful conveyance. See title Diſſeiſin.

This appears to have been the outline of conveyances at Common law. The introduction of uſes produced a great revolution in this reſpect. Uſes at the Common law, were, in moſt reſpects what truſts are now. When a feoffment was made to uſes, the legal eſtate was in the feoffee. He filled the poſſeſſion, did the feudal duties, and was in the eye of the law the tenant of the fee. The perſon to whoſe uſe he was ſeiſed, called the ceſtuy que uſe, had the beneficial property of the lands; had a right to the profits; and a right to call upon the feoffee to convey the eſtate to him, and to defend it againſt ſtrangers. This right at firſt depended on the conſcience of the feoffee: if he with held the profits from the ceſtuy que uſe, or refuſed to convey the eſtate as he directed, the feoffee was without remedy. To redreſs this grievance the writ of ſubpœna was deviſed, or rather adopted from the Common-law courts, by the court of Chancery, to oblige the feoffee to attend in court and diſcloſe the truſt; and then the court compelled him to execute it.

Thus uſes were eſtabliſhed: they were not conſidered as iſſuing out of, or annexed to the land, as a rent or condition, or a right of common; but as a truſt repoſed in the feoffee, that he ſhould diſpoſe of the lands at the diſcretion of the ceſtuy que uſe, permit him to receive the rents, and in all other reſpects have the beneficial property of the lands. To all other perſons except the ceſtuy que uſe, the feoffee was as much the real owner of the fee as if he did not hold it to the uſe of another: his wife was entitled to dower; his infant heir was in wardſhip to the lord; and upon his attainder the eſtate was forfeited.

To remedy theſe inconveniences, the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10, was paſſed; by which the poſſeſſion was deveſted out of the perſons ſeiſed to the uſe, and transferred to the ceſtuy que uſe. For by that ſtatute it is enacted "that when when any perſon ſhall be ſeiſed of any lands to the uſe, confidence, or truſt of any other perſon or perſons, by reaſon of any bargain, ſale, feoffment, fine, recovery, contract, agreement, will, or otherwiſe; in ſuch caſe the perſons having the uſe, confidence or truſt, ſhould from thenceforth be deemed and adjudged in lawful ſeiſin, eſtate and poſſeſſion of and in the lands, in the ſame quality, manner and form as they had before in the uſe."—There ſeems to be little doubt but that the intention of the Legiſlature in paſſing this act, was utterly to annihilate the exiſtence of uſes conſidered as diſtinct from the poſſeſſion. But they have been preſerved under the appellation of truſts. The courts heſitated much before they allowed them under this new name. And at length ſecret modes of transferring the poſſeſſion itſelf, have been diſcovered, and have totally ſuperſeded that notorious and publick mode of transferring property, which the Common law required, and the ſtatute intended to reſtore; and many modifications or limitations of real property have been allowed, which the Common law did not admit. See title Leaſe and Releaſe.

A ſon did give and grant lands to his mother, and her heirs; though this was a defective conveyance at Common law, yet it was adjudged good by way of uſe, to ſupport the intention of the donor, and therefore, by theſe words, an uſe did ariſe to the mother by way of covenant to ſtand ſeiſed. 2 Lev. 225. A feoffment without livery and ſeiſin, will not enure as a grant; but where made in conſideration of a marriage, &c. it has been adjudged, that it did enure as a covenant to ſtand ſeiſed to uſes. 2 Lev. 213.

Tenant in fee, in conſideration of marriage, covenanted, granted, and agreed all that meſſuage to the uſe of himſelf for life, then to his wife for life, for her jointure, then to their firſt ſon in tail male, &c. Now by theſe words it appeared, that the huſband intended ſome benefit for his wife, wherefore the court ſupplied other words to make the conveyance ſenſible. 1 Lutw. 782: 1 Inſt. 271 b. n.

A conveyance cannot be fraudulent in part, and good as to the reſt: for if it be fraudulent and void in part, it is void in all, and it cannot be divided. 1 Lil. Abr. 311. Fraudulent conveyances to deceive creditors, defraud purchaſers, &c. are void, by Stats. 13 Eliz. cap. 5: 27 Eliz. cap. 4.—See title Fraud.

CONVICT AND CONVICTION.

CONVICT, convictus.] He that is found guilty of an offence by verdict of a jury. Staund. P. C. 186. Crompton ſaith, That conviction is either when a man is outlawed, or appeareth and confeſſeth, or is found guilty by the inqueſt: and when a ſtatute excludes from clergy perſons found guilty of felony, &c. it extends to thoſe who are convicted by confeſſion. Cromp. Juſt. 9. The law implies that there muſt be a conviction, before puniſhment, though it is not ſo mentioned in a ſtatute: and where any ſtatute makes a ſecond offence felony, or ſubject to a heavier puniſhment than the firſt, it is always implied that ſuch ſecond offence ought to be committed after a conviction for the firſt. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 10. § 9: c. 41. § 3.

Judgment amounts to conviction; though it doth not follow that every one who is convict, is adjudged. A conviction a the King's ſuit may be pleaded to a ſuit by an informer, on a penal ſtatute; becauſe while in force it makes the party liable to the forfeiture, and no one ought to be puniſhed twice for the ſame offence: but conviction may not be pleaded to a new ſuit by the king. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 10. A perſon convicted or attainted of one felony, may be proſecuted for another, to bring acceſſaries to puniſhment, &c. Fitz. Coron. 379.

Perſons convicted of felony by verdict, &c. are not to be admitted to bail, unleſs there be ſome ſpecial motive for granting it; as where a man is not the ſame perſon, &c. for bail ought to be before trial, when it ſtands indifferent whether the party be guilty, or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 45, 80. See title Bail.—Conviction of felony, and other crimes, diſables a man to be a juror, witneſs, &c. In our books, conviction and attainder are often confounded. See title Attainder.

SUMMARY PROCEEDINGS are directed by ſeveral acts of parliament for the conviction of offenders, and the inflicting of certain penalties impoſed by thoſe acts. In theſe there is no intervention of a jury, but the party accuſed is acquitted or condemned by the ſuffrage of ſuch perſon only, as the ſtatute has appointed for his judge.

Of this ſummary nature are all trials for offences and frauds contrary to the laws of the Exciſe, and other branches of the Revenue: which are to be inquired into and determined by the commiſſioners of the reſpective departments, or by juſtices of peace in the country. And experience has ſhewn that ſuch convictions are abſolutely neceſſary for the due collection of the public money; and are in fact a ſpecies of mercy to the delinquents, who would be ruined by the expence and delay of frequent proſecutions by action or indictment.

Another branch of ſummary proceedings, is that before juſtices of the peace, in order to inflict divers petty pecuniary mulcts, and corporal penalties, denounced by act of parliament, for many diſorderly offences; ſuch as common ſwearing, drunkenneſs, vagrancy, idleneſs, and a vaſt variety of others ſubjected to their juriſdiction. See title Juſtice of Peace, and the titles of the various offences throughout this Dict. Theſe offences uſed formerly to be puniſhed by the verdict of a jury in the court leets, and ſheriff's tourn, the King's ancient courts of law; and which were formerly much revered and reſpected, but are now fallen very much into diſuſe and contempt.

The proceſs of theſe ſummary convictions is extremely ſpeedy. Though the courts of Common law have thrown one check upon them, by making it neceſſary to ſummon the party accuſed before he is condemned; which is now held an indiſpenſible requiſite, and is highly conſonant to the general principles of juſtice. See Stra. 261, 678: Salk 181: 2 Ld. Raym. 1405.—After this ſummons, the magiſtrate may go on to examine one or more witneſſes, as the ſtatute may require, upon oath; and then make his conviction of the offender in writing: upon which he uſually iſſues his warrant, either to apprehend the offender, in caſe corporal puniſhment is to be inflicted on him; or elſe to levy the penalty incurred by diſtreſs and ſale of his goods, according to the directions of the ſeveral ſtatutes which create the offence, or inflict the puniſhment; and which uſually chalk out the method by which offenders are to be convicted in ſuch particular caſes.

See further this Dictionary title Juſtices of Peace.—Burn's Juſtice, title Conviction; and 4 Comm. c. 20, as to the policy of extending this ſummary mode of proceeding.

CONVICT RECUSANT, According to the ſtatutes, See titles Recuſant, Papiſt.

CONVIVIUM, Signifies the ſame thing among the laity, as procuratio doth with the clergy, viz. When the tenant by reaſon of his tenure is bound to provide meat and drink for his lord once or oftener in the year. Blount.

CONVOCATION, convocatio.] The aſſembly of the repreſentatives of the Clergy, to conſult of eccleſiaſtical matters in time of parliament. As there are two houſes of parliament, ſo there are two houſes of convocation; the one called the Higher or Upper Houſe, where the archbiſhops and all the biſhops ſit ſeverally by themſelves; and the other, the Lower Houſe of Convocation, where all the reſt of the clergy ſit, i. e. All deans and archdeacons, one proctor for every chapter, and two proctors for all the clergy of each dioceſe, making in the whole number one hundred and ſixty-ſix perſons. Each convocation houſe hath a prolocutor, choſen from among themſelves, and that of the lower houſe is preſented to the biſhops, &c.

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury is the Preſident of the Convocation, and prorogues and diſſolves it by mandate from the King. The convocation exerciſes juriſdiction in making of canons, with the King's aſſent: for by the Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 19, the convocation is not only to be aſſembled by the King's writ; but the canons are to have the royal aſſent: they have the examining and cenſuring of heretical and ſchiſmatical books, and perſons, &c. But appeal lies to the King in Chancery, or to his delegates. 4 Inſt. 322: 2 Rol. Abr. 225. But in caſe the King himſelf be a party, the appeal lies by Stat. 24 H. 8. c 12, to all the biſhops aſſembled in the Upper Houſe of Convocation. See 3 Comm. 67.

Mr. Chriſtian, in his note on 1 Comm. 280, remarks that from the ſtatement there given, the ſtudent would perhaps be apt to ſuppoſe that there is only one convocation at a time. But the King before the meeting of every new parliament, directs his writ to each archbiſhop to ſummon a convocation in his peculiar province.

Godolphin ſays, that the convocation of the province of York, conſtantly correſponds, debates and concludes the ſame matters with the provincial ſynod of Canterbury. God. 99. But they are certainly diſtinct and independent of each other; and when they uſed to tax the clergy, the different convocations ſometimes granted different ſubſidies. In 22 Hen. 8, the convocation of Canterbury had granted the King 100,000*l.* in conſideration of which an act of parliament was paſſed, granting a free pardon to the clergy for all ſpiritual offences; but with a proviſo, that it ſhould not extend to the province of York, unleſs its convocation would grant a ſubſidy in proportion; or unleſs its clergy would bind themſelves individually to contribute as bountifully. This ſtatute is recited at large in Gib. Cod. 77.

All Deans and Archdeacons (as has been already obſerved) are members of the convocation of their province; each chapter ſends one proctor or repreſentative, and the parochial clergy in each dioceſe of Canterbury, two proctors: but on account of the ſmall number of dioceſes in the province of York, each archdeaconry elects two proctors. In York the convocation conſiſts only of one houſe; but in Canterbury there are two houſes, of which the twenty-two biſhops form the Upper Houſe; "wherein the Archbiſhop preſides with regal ſtate," (ſays Blackſtone, 1 Comm. 279); and before the reformation, abbots, priors, and other mitred prelates ſat with the biſhops. The Lower Houſe of Convocation, in the province of Canterbury, conſiſts of twenty-two Deans, fifty-three Archdeacons, twenty-four Proctors for the Chapters, and forty-four Proctors for the Parochial Clergy.—Total 144.

By Stat. 8 H. 6. c. 1. the clergy in their attendance on the Convocation, have the ſame priviiege in freedom from arreſt as the members of the Houſe of Commons in their attendance on Parliament.

CONUSANCE OF PLEAS, A privilege that a city or town hath to hold pleas. See Cogniſance.

CONUSANT, Fr. connoiſſant.] Knowing or underſtanding: as if the ſon be conuſant, and agreed to the feoffment, &c. Co. Lit. 159.

COOPERS, Shall make their veſſels of ſeaſonable wood, and mark them with their own marks, on pain of 3*s.* 4*d.* forfeiture; and the contents of veſſels are appointed to be obſerved under like penalty, as the beer barrel ſhall contain thirty-ſix gallons, a kilderkin eighteen, a firkin nine, &c. The wardens of the Coopers' company in London, with an officer of the mayor, are to ſearch all veſſels for ale, beer, and ſoap to be ſold there; and to mark them that are right, and they may burn thoſe that be not ſo: and if any cooper, &c. diminiſh a veſſel by taking out the head, or a ſtave thereof, it ſhall be burnt, and the offender forfeit 3*s.* 4*d.*—Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 4.

COOPERTIO, The head or branches of a tree cut down; though Coopertio Arborum is rather the bark of timber-trees felled, and the chumps and broken wood. Cowel.

COOPERTURA, A thicket or covert of wood. Chart. de Foreſta, cap. 12.

COPARCENERS, participes.] Otherwiſe called Parceners, are ſuch as have equal portion in the inheritance of an anceſtor; and by law are the iſſue female, which, in default of heirs male, come in equality to the lands of their anceſtors. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 30. They are to make partition of the lands; which ought to be made by coparceners of full age, &c. And if the eſtate of a coparcener be in part evicted, the partition ſhall be avoided in the whole. Lit. 243: 1 Inſt. 173: 1 Rep. 87. The Crown of England is not ſubject to coparcenary; and there is no coparcenary in dignities, &c. Co. Lit. 27. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 22.—See title Deſcent; Parceners.

COPARTNERSHIP. See title Partners and Partnerſhip.

COPE, A cuſtom or tribute due to the King, or lord of the ſoil, out of the lead mines in ſome part of Derbyſhire; of which Manlove ſaith:

Egreſs and regreſs to the King's highway,
The miners have; and lot and cope they pay:
The thirteenth diſh of ore within their mine,
To the lord, for lot, they pay at meaſuring time;
Six pence a load for cope the lord demands,
And that is paid to the berghmaſter's hands, &c.

See alſo Sir John Pettus's Fodinæ Regales, where he treats on this ſubject. This word, by Domeſday Book, as Mr. Hagar hath interpreted it, ſignifies a hill: and Cope is taken for the ſupreme cover, as the cope of heaven. Alſo it is uſed for the roof and covering of a houſe; the upper garment of a prieſt, &c.

COPIA LIBELLI DELIBERANDA, A writ that lay where a man could not get the copy of a libel at the hand of a judge eccleſiaſtical, to have the ſame delivered to him. Reg. Orig. 51.

COPPA, A cop or cock of graſs, hay or corn divided into titheable portions; as the tenth cock, &c. This word, in ſtrictneſs, denotes the gathering or laying up the corn in copes or heaps, as the method is for barley or oats, &c. not bound up, that it may be the more fairly and juſtly tithed: and in Kent they ſtill retain the word, a cop or cap of hay, ſtraw, &c. Thorn in Chron.

COPPER AND COPPER ORE. Copper plates and copper fully wrought, to what duties liable, 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 5. ſect. 2. All copper may be exported paying the lawful duties and cuſtoms, 5 W. & M. c. 17.—See title Navigation Acts.

COPPER-PLATE ENGRAVINGS.—See title Literary Property.

COPY, copia.] In a legal ſenſe the tranſcript of an original writing; as the copy of a patent, of a charter, deed, &c. A clauſe out of a patent, taken from the chapel of the Rolls, cannot be given in evidence; but there muſt be a true copy of the whole charter examined: it is the ſame of a record. And if upon a trial, ſome part of an office copy is given in evidence to prove a deed, which deed is to prove the party's title to the land in queſtion that gives it in evidence; if that part of the office copy given in evidence, be not ſo much of it as doth any ways concern the land in queſtion, the court will not admit of it: for the court will have a copy of the whole given, or no part of it ſhall be admitted. 1 Lil. Abr. 312, 313. Where a deed is inrolled, certifying an atteſted copy is proof of the inrolment; and ſuch copy may be given in evidence. 3 Lev. 387. A common deed cannot be proved by a copy or counterpart, when the original may be procured. 10 Rep. 92. And a copy of a will of lands, or the probate, is not ſufficient; but the will muſt be ſhewn as evidence. 2 Rol. Abr. 74. Copies of court-rolls admitted as evidence. See at large title Evidence.

COPYHOLD,

TENURA per copiam rotuli curiæ.] A tenure for which the tenant hath nothing to ſhew but the copy of the rolls, made by the ſteward of the lord's court; on ſuch tenant's being admitted to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor. 4 Rep. 25. It is called baſe tenure, becauſe held at the will of the lord: and Fitzherbert ſays, it was anciently tenure in villenage, and that copyhold is but a new name. See this Dict. title Tenures III. 13. Some Copyholds are held by the verge in ancient demeſne; and though they are by copy, yet are they a kind of freehold; for if a tenant of ſuch copyhold commit felony, the King hath the year, day and waſte, as in the caſe of freeholders: ſome other copyholds are ſuch as the tenants hold by common tenure, called mere copyhold, whoſe land, upon felony committed, eſcheats to the lord of the manor. Kitch. 81. But copyhold land cannot be made at this day; for the pillars of a copyhold eſtate are, That it hath been demiſed time out of mind by copy of court-roll; and that the tenements are parcel of, or within, the manor. 1 Inſt. 58: 4 Rep. 24.

A copyhold cannot be created by operation of law: and therefore where waſtes are ſevered from the manor, by a grant of the latter, with the exception of the former, though the copyholders continue to have a right of common in the waſtes by immemorial uſage: yet if afterwards a grant of the ſoil of thoſe waſtes be made to truſtees for the uſe of the copyholders in free ſocage, the lands, when incloſed, will be freehold, and not copyhold. 2 Term Rep. 415, 705.

A copyhold tenant had originally in judgment of law but an eſtate at will; yet cuſtom ſo eſtabliſhed his eſtate that by the cuſtom of the manor it was deſcendible, and his heirs inherited it: and therefore the eſtate of the copyholder is not merely at the will of the lord, but at the will of the lord, according to the cuſtom of the manor; ſo that the cuſtom of the manor is the life of copyhold eſtates; for without a cuſtom, or if copyholders break their cuſtom, they are ſubject to the will of the lord: and as a copyhold is created by cuſtom, ſo it is guided by cuſtom. 4 Rep. 21. A copyholder, ſo long as he doth his ſervices, and doth not break the cuſtom of the manor, cannot be ejected by the lord; if he be, he ſhall have treſpaſs againſt him: but if a copyholder refuſes to perform his ſervices, it is a breach of the cuſtom, and forfeiture of his eſtate.

It appears that eſtates held by copy of court-roll, but not at the will of the lord, have been deemed freehold by Lord Coke, (See 1 Inſt. 59 b,) and others; and in order to diſtinguiſh them from the ordinary kind, have been denominated cuſtomary freeholds. In conſequence of the prevalence of this notion, a conſiderable number of ſuch tenants claimed a right of voting as freeholders at the election of knights of the Shire.—This gave occaſion to a ſhort treatiſe on this ſubject, in which the origin of lands held in this peculiar way is traced, and it is proved that though theſe tenures in ſome reſpects reſemble freeholds, they are in truth nothing more than a ſuperiour kind of copyhold. Soon after the publication of this treatiſe, the Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 14, was paſt, declaring that no perſon holding by copy of court-roll ſhould be entitled to vote at the election of Knights of the Shire.

In ſome manors where the cuſtom hath been to permit the heir to ſucceed the anceſtor in his tenure, the eſtates are ſtiled Copyholds of inheritance: in others, where the lords have been more vigilant to maintain their rights, they remain copyholds for life only. For the cuſtom of the manor has in both caſes ſo far ſuperſeded the will of the lord, that provided the ſervices be performed, or ſtipulated for by fealty, he cannot in the firſt inſtance refuſe to admit the heir of his tenant upon his death; nor in the ſecond can he remove his preſent tenant ſo long as he lives, though he holds nominally by the precarious tenure of his lord's will. 2 Comm. 97, 147.—And ſee title Ancient Demeſne.

If the lord refuſes to admit he ſhall be compelled in Chancery. 2 Cro. 368.—And if the lord refuſe to admit a ſurrenderee, on account of a diſagreement about the fine to be paid, the court of B. R. will grant a mandamus to compel the lord to admit without examining the right to the fine. 2 Term Rep. 484.—But that court will not grant a mandamus to admit a copyholder by deſcent; becauſe without admittance he has a complete title againſt all the world but the lord. 2 Term Rep. 198.

Copyholds deſcend according to the rules and maxims of the Common law, (unleſs in particular manors, where there are contrary cuſtoms, of great antiquity); but ſuch cuſtomary inheritances ſhall not be aſſets, to charge the heir in action of debt, &c. 4 Rep. 22: Kitch. Though a leaſe for one year of copyhold lands, which is warranted by the Common law, ſhall be aſſets in the hand of an executor. 1 Vent. 163. Copyholders hold their eſtates free from charges of dower, being created by cuſtom, which is paramount to title of dower. 4 Rep. 24. Copyhold inheritances have no collateral qualities, which do not concern the deſcent; as to make them aſſets; or whereof a wife may be endowed; a huſband be tenant by the curteſy, &c. But by particular cuſtom, there may be dower and tenancy by the curteſy. Cro. Eliz. 361. There may be an eſtate-tail in copyhold lands by cuſtom, with the cooperation of the Stat. W. 2. And as a copyhold may be entailed by cuſtom, ſo by cuſtom the tail may be cut off by ſurrender. 1 Inſt. 60.

Where by ſpecial cuſtom a deſcent of copyholds may be, contrary to the rules of the Common law, ſuch cuſtom ſhall be interpreted ſtrictly: thus, where there is a cuſtom within a manor, that lands ſhall deſcend to the eldeſt ſiſter, where there is neither a ſon nor a daughter; this ſhall not extend to an eldeſt niece: but in default of ſuch ſon, daughter and ſiſter, the lands muſt deſcend according to the rules of the Common law. 1 Term Rep. 466.

A copyhold may be barred by a recovery, by ſpecial cuſtom; and a ſurrender may bar the iſſue by cuſtom. A fine and recovery at Common law will not deſtroy a copyhold eſtate; becauſe Common law aſſurances do not work upon the aſſurance of the copyhold: though copyhold lands are within the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24, of fines and proclamations, and five years non-claim, and ſhall be barred. 1 Rol. Abr. 506. See title Fines.

A plaint may be made in the court of the manor, in the nature of a real action, and a recovery ſhall be had in that plaint againſt tenant in tail, and ſuch a recovery ſhall be a diſcontinuance to the eſtate-tail. 1 Brownl. 121. And the ſuffering a recovery by a copyholder tenant for life in the lord's court is no forfeiture, unleſs there is a particular cuſtom for it. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 507. Copyholders may entail copyhold lands, and bar the entails and remainders, by committing a forfeiture, as making leaſe without licence, &c. and then the lord is to make three proclamations, and ſeize the copyhold, after which the lands are granted to the copyholder, and his heirs, &c. This is the manner in ſome places, but it muſt be warranted by cuſtom. 2 Danv. Abr. 191: Sid. 314.

Cuſtoms ought to be time out of memory; to be reaſonable, &c. And a cuſtom in deprivation or bar of a copyhold eſtate, ſhall be taken ſtrictly; but when for making and maintaining, it ſhall be conſtrued favourably. Comp. Cop. ſect. 33: Cro. El. 879. An unreaſonable cuſtom, as for a lord to exact exorbitant fines; for a copyholder for life to cut down and ſell timber-trees, &c. is void. A copyholder for life pleaded a cuſtom, that every copyholder for life might, in the preſence of two other copyholders, appoint who ſhould have his copyhold after his death; and that the two copyholders might aſſeſs a fine, ſo as not to be leſs than had been uſually paid; and it was adjudged a good cuſtom. 4 Leon. 238. But a cuſtom to compel a lord to make a grant, is ſaid to be againſt law; though it may be good to admit a tenant. Moor 788.

By the cuſtom of ſome manors, where copyhold lands are granted to two or more perſons for lives, the perſon firſt named in the copy may ſurrender all the lands. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 497. There are cuſtoms ratione loci, different from other places: but though a cuſtom may be applied to a particular place; yet it is againſt the nature of a cuſtom of a manor to apply it to one particular tenant. 1 Nelſ. 504: 1 Lutw. 126.

There are uſually cuſtom-rolls of manors, exhibited on oath by the tenants; ſetting forth the bounds of the manor, the royalties of the lord, ſervices of the copyhold tenants, the tenures granted, whether for life, &c. concerning admittances, ſurrenders, and the rights of the copyholders, as to taking timber for repairs, fire-bote, &c. Common belonging to the tenants, payment of rent, ſuing in the court of the manor, taking heriots, &c. All which cuſtoms are to be obſerved. Comp. Court Keep. 21.

When an act of parliament altereth the ſervice, cuſtoms, tenure, and intereſt of land, in prejudice of the lord or tenant, there the general words of ſuch an act ſhall not extend to copyholds. 3 Rep. 7.—Copyholds are not within the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10, of jointures; nor Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28, of leaſes, Copyholds being in their nature demiſable only by copy: they are not within the ſtatute of uſes; nor are copyholds extendible in execution: but copyholds are within the ſtatute of limitation of actions; and the ſtatutes againſt bankrupts. The lord ſhall have the cuſtody of the lands of ideots, &c. And a copyholder is not within the act 12 Car. 2. c. 24, to diſpoſe of the cuſtody and guardianſhip of the heir; for if there be a cuſtom for it, it belongs to the lord of the manor. 3 Lev. 395: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 492, 522.

Copyholders ſhall neither implead nor be impleaded for their tenements by writ, but by plaint in the lord's court held within the manor: and if on ſuch plaint, erroneous judgment be given, no writ of falſe judgment lies, but petition to the lord in nature of a writ of falſe judgment, wherein errors are to be aſſigned, and remedy given according to law. Co. Lit. 60.

Where a man holds copyhold lands in truſt to ſurrender to another, &c. if he refuſes to ſurrender to the other accordingly, he may be compelled by bill exhibited in the lord's court, who, as chancellor, has power to do right. 1 Leon. 2. A copyholder may have a formedon in deſcender in the lord's court. Leſſee of a copyholder for life for one year, ſhall maintain an ejectment. 4 Rep. 26: Moor 679. It is every day's practice to bring ejectments, to recover the poſſeſſion of copyholds; for defendant by the rule, obliging himſelf to confeſs leaſe, entry, and ouſter, the title only can come in queſtion on the trial. But the leſſor of plaintiff, before he brings his ejectment ſhould be admitted. See title Ejectment.

A manor is loſt when there are no cuſtomary tenants or copyholders: and if a copyhold comes into the hands of the lord in fee, and the lord leaſes it for one year, or half a year, or for any certain time, it can never be granted by copy after: but if the lord aliens the manor, &c. his alienee may re-grant land by copy. If the lord keeps the copyhold for a long time in his hand, it is no impediment but that he may after grant it again by copy. 2 Danv. Abr. 176, 177. A copyholder in fee accepts of a leaſe, grant, or confirmation of the ſame land from the lord, this determines his copyhold eſtate. 2 Cro. 16: Cro. Jac. 253. If a copyholder bargains and ſells his copyhold to a leſſee for years, &c. of the manor, his copyhold is extinguiſhed. 2 Danv. 205. A copyholder may grant his eſtate to his lord, by bargain and ſale, releaſe, &c. for between lord and tenant the conveyance need not be according to cuſtom. 1 Nelſ. 504. A copyholder in other caſes cannot alien by deed: though he that hath a right only to a copyhold may releaſe it by deed. And if a copyholder ſurrenders upon condition, he may afterwards releaſe the condition by deed. 2 Danv. 205: Cro. Jac. 36. Alſo one joint copyholder may releaſe to another, which will be good without any admittance, &c. Ibid.

A Copyholder cannot convey or tranſfer his copyhold eſtate to another, otherwiſe than by ſurrender; which is the yielding up of the land by the tenant to the lord, according to the cuſtom of the manor, to the uſe of him that is to have the eſtate: or it is in order to a new grant, and further eſtate in the ſame.

As to copyhold grants; which are made either in fee, or for three lives, &c. the lord of the manor that hath a lawful eſtate therein, whether he be tenant for life or years, tenant by ſtatute merchant, &c. or at will, is dominus pro tempore, and may grant lands, herbage of lands, a fair, mill, tithes, &c. and any thing that concerns lands, by copy of court-roll, according to cuſtom; and ſuch grants ſhall bind thoſe in remainder: the rents and ſervices reſerved by them ſhall be annexed to the manor, and attend the owner thereof after their particular eſtates are ended. 4 Rep. 23: 11 Rep. 18. And if a lord of the manor for the time being, leſſee for life, years, &c. take a ſurrender, and before admittance he dieth, or the years or intereſt determine, though the next lord comes in above the leaſe for life or years, or other particular intereſt, yet he ſhall be compelled to make admittance according to the ſurrender. Co. Lit. 59. But a lord at will, of a copyhold manor, cannot licence a copyhold tenant to make a leaſe for years; though he may grant a copyhold for life according to the cuſtom: if a lord for life gives licence to a tenant to make a leaſe for years, this leaſe ſhall continue no longer than the life of the lord. 2 Danv. Abr. 202.

If he that is lord of the manor for the time being admits one to a copyhold, he diſpenſes with all precedent forfeitures; not only as to himſelf, but alſo as to him in reverſion; for ſuch grant and admittance amount to an entry for the forfeiture, and a new grant; but a lord by tort cannot by ſuch admittance purge the forfeiture as to the rightful lord. 1 Lev. 26. Grants by copy of court-roll by infants, &c. will be binding: and if a guardian in ſocage grants a copyhold in reverſion, according to the cuſtom of the manor, this ſhall be a good grant; 2 Rol. Abr. 41. If baron and feme ſeiſed of a manor in right of the feme grant a copyhold, this ſhall bind the feme notwithſtanding her coverture. 4 Rep. 23. An executor may make grants of copyhold eſtates, according to the cuſtom of the manor, where a deviſe is made that the executor ſhall grant copies for payment of debts. 2 Danv. 178.

A manor may be held by copy of court-roll, and the lord of ſuch manor may grant copies; and ſuch cuſtomary manor may paſs by ſurrender and admittance, &c. A cuſtomary manor may be holden of another manor, and ſuch cuſtomary lord may grant copies and hold courts: but a copyholder, lord of ſuch a manor, cannot hold a court baron to have forfeitures, and hold pleas in a writ of right, &c. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 524.

All grants of copyhold eſtates are to be according to the cuſtom of the manor; and rents and ſervices cuſtomary muſt be reſerved; for what acts of the lord in granting copyholds are not confirmed by cuſtom, but only ſtrengthened by the power and intereſt of the lord, have no longer duration than the lord's eſtate continueth. Comp. Court Keeper 421. If by the cuſtom, a copyhold may be granted for three lives, and the lord grants it to one for life, remainder to ſuch woman as he ſhall marry, and to the firſt ſon of his body; both theſe remainders are void: and a remainder limited upon a void eſtate in the creation, will be likewiſe void. But if by cuſtom it is demiſable in fee, a ſurrender may be to the uſe of one for life, remainder in tail, remainder in fee. 2 Danv. Abr. 203: Cro. Eliz. 373. It is held, where by the cuſtom of a manor the lord can grant a copyhold for three lives, he may grant it for an eſtate coming within the intent of the cuſtom; as to A. B. and his aſſigns, to hold to him and his aſſigns for the lives of three others, and of the longer liver of them ſucceſſively, &c. 2 Ld. Raym. 994, 1000.

The lord of a manor may himſelf grant a copyhold eſtate at any place out of the manor; but the ſteward cannot grant a copyhold at a court held out of the manor. 4 Rep. 26. Though the ſteward may take ſurrenders out of the manor, as well as the lord. 2 Danv. Abr. 181. A ſteward is in place of the lord, and without a command to the contrary may grant lands by copy, &c. But if a lord command a ſteward that he ſhall not grant ſuch a copy, if he grants it, it is void: and if the ſteward diminiſhes the ancient rents and ſervices, the grant will be void. Cro. Eliz. 699.

Things of neceſſity done by a ſteward, who is but in reputed authority, are good if they come in by preſentment of the jury; as the admittance of an heir upon preſentment, &c. Though acts voluntary, as grants of copyhold, &c. are not good by ſuch ſtewards. Cro. Eliz. 699. If an under-ſteward hold a court without any diſturbance of the lord of the manor, though he hath no patent nor deputation to hold it, yet it is good; becauſe the tenants are not to examine what authority he hath, nor is he bound to give them an account of it. Moor 110. A deputy ſteward may authoriſe another to do a particular act; but cannot make a deputy to act in general. 2 Salk. 95.

In admittances, in court upon voluntary grants, the lord is proprietor; in admittances upon ſurrender, the lord is not proprietor of the lands, but only a neceſſary inſtrument of conveyance; and in admittances by deſcent the lord is a mere inſtrument, not being neceſſary to ſtrengthen the heir's title, but only to give the lord his fine. 4 Rep. 21, 22. The heir of a copyholder may enter, and bring treſpaſs, before admittance, being in by deſcent; and he may ſurrender before admittance: but he is not compleat tenant to be ſworn of the homage, or to maintain a plaint in the lord's court. And if the heir do not come in and be admitted, on the death of his anceſtor, where the ſame is preſented and proclamation made, he may forfeit his eſtate. Cro. El. 90: 4 Rep. 22, 27.

On ſurrender of a copyhold, the ſurrenderor or perſon making the ſame, continues tenant till the admittance of the ſurrenderee; and the ſurrenderee may not enter upon the lands, or ſurrender before admittance, for he hath no eſtate till then; though it is otherwiſe of the heir by deſcent, who is in by courſe of law, and the cuſtom caſts the poſſeſſion upon him. Comp. Court-Keep. 436. A ſurrender is not of any effect until admittance, and yet the ſurrenderee cannot be defrauded of the benefit of the ſurrender; for the ſurrenderor cannot paſs away the land to another or make it ſubject to any other incumbrances; and if the lord refuſe the ſurrenderee admittance, he is compellable in Chancery. Comp. Cop. ſect. 39. A grantee hath no intereſt veſted in him till he is admitted: but admittance of a copyholder for life is an admittance of him in remainder, for they are but one eſtate; and the remainderman may, after the death of tenant for life, ſurrender without admittance. 3 Lev. 308: Cro. El. 504.

Every admittance upon a deſcent or ſurrender may be pleaded as a grant; and a perſon may alledge the admittance of his anceſtor as a grant; and ſhew the deſcent to him, and that he entered, &c. But he cannot plead that his father was ſeiſed in fee, &c. and that he died ſeiſed, and the land deſcended to him. 2 Danv. 208. Admittance on ſurrenders muſt, in all reſpects, agree with the ſurrender; the lord having only a cuſtomary power to admit ſecundum formam & effectum ſurſum-redditionis. 4 Rep. 26. If any are admitted otherwiſe, they ſhall be ſeiſed according to the ſurrender: yet where a voluntary ſurrender is general, without ſaying to whoſe uſe, a ſubſequent admittance may explain it. 2 Danv. 187, 204.

In voluntary admittances, if the lord admits any one contrary to cuſtom, it ſhall not bind his heir or ſucceſſor. If a copyholder ſurrender to the uſe of another, and after the lord, having knowledge of it, accepts the rent of ſuch other out of court, this is an admittance in law: and any act, implying the conſent of the lord to the ſurrender, ſhall be adjudged a good admittance. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 493. If the ſteward accept a fine of a copyholder, it amounts to an admittance. 2 Danv. 189. But delivering a copy is no admittance.

Where a widow's eſtate is created by cuſtom, that ſhall be an admittance in law: and her eſtate ariſing out of that of her huſband's, his admittance is the admittance of her. Hut. 18. And ſhe who hath a widow's eſtate by the cuſtom of the manor, upon the death of her huſband, need not pay a fine to the lord for the eſtate; for this is only a branch of the huſband's. Hob. 181. When a cuſtom is, that the wife of every copyholder for life ſhall have her free bench, after the death of the baron, the law caſts the eſtate upon the wife, ſo that ſhe ſhall have it before admittance, &c. 2 Danv. 184. But if a wife is entitled to her free bench by cuſtom, and a copyholder in fee ſurrenders to the uſe of another, and then dies; it has been adjudged, that the ſurrenderee ſhould have the land, and not the wife; becauſe the wife's title doth not commence till after the death of her huſband; but the plaintiff's title begins with the ſurrender, and the admittance relates to that. 1 Inſt. 59: 1 Salk. 185.

The widow's title commenceth not by the marriage; if it did, then the huſband could do nothing in his lifetime to prejudice it: but it is plain he may alien or extinguiſh his right, ſo as to bind the eſtate of the widow: the free bench grows out of the eſtate of the huſband; and it is his dying ſeiſed which gives the widow a title, and as the huſband has a defeaſible eſtate, ſo the wife may have her free-bench defeated. 4 Mod. Rep. 452, 453.

Admittances are never by attorney, for the tenant ought to do fealty: though ſurrenders are oftentimes by attorney. 2 Danv. 189. A copyholder in fee may ſurrender in court, by letter of attorney: but not out of court, without a ſpecial cuſtom. 9 Rep. 75, 76. If one cannot come into court to ſurrender in perſon, the lord may appoint a ſpecial ſteward to go to him, and take the ſurrender. 1 Leon. 36. A copyholder being in Ireland, the ſteward of a manor here made a commiſſion to one to receive a ſurrender from him there, and it was held good. 2 Danv. 181.

The intent of ſurrenders is, that the lord may not be a ſtranger to his tenant, and the alteration of the eſtate. As a Copyholder cannot transfer his eſtate to a ſtranger by any other conveyance than ſurrender; ſo if one would exchange a copyhold with another, both muſt ſurrender to each other's uſe, and the lord admit accordingly: and if any perſon would deviſe a copyhold eſtate, he cannot do it by his will: but he muſt ſurrender to the uſe of his laſt will and teſtament, and in his will declare his intent. Comp. Cop. ſect. 39. Alſo where a copyholder ſurrenders to the uſe of his will, the lands do not paſs by the will, but by the ſurrender; the will being only declaratory of the uſes of the ſurrender. 1 Bulſt. 200.

In caſe of a will, the Chancery will ſupply the defect of a ſurrender, in the behalf of children, if not to diſinherit the eldeſt ſon; and for the benefit of creditors, where a copyhold eſtate is charged by will with the payment of debts, though there is no ſurrender to thoſe uſes, it will be good in equity. 4 Rep. 25: 1 Salk. 187: 3 Salk. 84. Yet it is held, that equity ſhall not ſupply the want of ſuch ſurrender in favour of a grandchild; or baſtard, who is not conſidered as a child; or a wife againſt the heir; nor in behalf of legatees: but where the ſurrender is refuſed, a will of copyhold may be ſufficient without it. Abr. Caſ. Eq. 122, 124.

There is no doubt but that the Courts of Equity will ſupply the ſurrender of a copyhold. It is ſaid however to be now ſettled that, unleſs there be a valuable conſideration, they will not interpoſe for ſuch purpoſe, but in favour of three deſcriptions of perſons only; Creditors, Wife and Children; and even in ſuch caſes they proceed ſubject to ſeveral reſtrictions. For though they will ſupply the ſurrender of copyholds in favour of creditors, if the other eſtates, liable to the payment of debts, are not ſufficient; (Drake v. Robinſon, 1 P. Wms. 444: Bixby v. Eley, 2 Bro. C. R. 325:) Yet if there be both freehold and copyhold eſtates deviſed for the payment of debts, and the freehold be ſufficient for ſuch purpoſe, they will not ſupply the ſurrender of the copyhold. Raſtor v. Stock, 1 Eq. Ab. 123, 4: Hillier v. Farrant, Exch. Trin. 1791; and ſee 3 P. Wms. 98. in n.

In ſupplying a ſurrender in favour of a wife, or younger children, courts of Equity, as has been already obſerved, reſpect the claims of the heir at law; and therefore will not interpoſe, if the heir would thereby be left unprovided for. Kettle v. Townſhend, 1 Salk. 187: Hawkins v. Leigh, 1 Atk. 387.—But the heir whoſe claim is to be thus reſpected, muſt be one for whom the teſtator was under as ſtrong a moral obligation to provide, as for the deviſee. Chapman v. Gibſon, 3 Bro. C. R. 229. And if the ſupplying of the ſurrender would not diſinherit ſuch heir, courts of Equity will ſupply it in favour of the wife, though ſhe be otherwiſe provided for. Smith v. Baker, 1 Atk. 386.—But it was held in Roſs v. Roſs, 1 Eq. Ab. 124, that they ought not to ſupply a ſurrender for younger children againſt an elder, to make them in a better ſituation than the elder.—Yet ſee Cook v. Arnham, 3 P. Wms. 283: Forreſter 35.

In thoſe caſes in which the Court will ſupply a ſurrender, it is to be underſtood that the effect of the ſurrender is bounded by the motive which induces the court to ſupply it; therefore where the teſtator deviſed a copyhold to truſtees, in truſt, to ſell and to pay the intereſt of the produce to the wife during her life, and after her death to a ſtranger; the Court, though it ſupplied the ſurrender in favour of the wife, decreed that the cuſtomary heir ſhould be at liberty to apply after her death. Marſton v. Gowen, 3 Bro. C. R. 170.—Courts of Equity will in ſupplying the ſurrender of a copyhold eſtate in favour of a purchaſor for a valuable conſideration, go ſtill further; for they will not only ſupply it againſt the party himſelf and his heir; (Barker v. Hill, 2 Ch. Rep. 113;) but will alſo ſupply it againſt his aſſignees and creditors, if he become a bankrupt. Taylor v. Wheeler, 2 Vern. 565.

In the caſe of copyholds deviſed to charitable uſes, the want of ſurrrender in ſuch caſes is made good, not by the diſcretion of the court, but by the ſtrong and general words of Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4. Attorney General v. Burdett, 2 Vern. 755: Duke's Char. Uſes 84: Attorney General v. Andrews, 1 Vez. 225.

A ceſtui que truſt may deviſe an intereſt in land, &c. without ſurrender; and if copyhold lands are in mortgage, the mortgagor can diſpoſe of the equity of redemption by will, without any ſurrender made; becauſe he hath at that time no eſtate in the land, whereof to make a ſurrender. Preced. Canc. 320, 322. One jointenant may ſurrender his part in the lands to the uſe of his will, &c. And where there are two jointenants of a copyhold in fee, if one of them make a ſurrender to the uſe of his will, and die, and the deviſee is admitted, the ſurrender and admittance ſhall bind the ſurvivor. 2 Cro. 100.

A ſurrender may not be to commence in futuro; as after the death of the ſurrenderor, &c. though copyholds may be ſurrendered to the uſe of a man's will. March 177. A copyholder cannot ſurrender an eſtate abſolutely to another, and leave a particular eſtate in himſelf: though he may ſurrender to uſes, &c. A copyholder ſurrendered to the uſe of his wife and younger ſon, without mentioning what eſtate: and adjudged, that they had an eſtate for life. 4 Rep. 29. If a man having bought a copyhold to himſelf, his wife and daughter, and their heirs, afterwards ſurrenders it to another and his heirs, for ſecuring a ſum of money; after his death, the ſurrenderee ſhall not be entitled to the land, it being an advancement for the wife and daughter. 2 Vern. 120.

A feme covert may receive a copyhold eſtate, by ſurrender from her huſband, becauſe ſhe comes not in immediately by him, but by the admittance of the lord, according to the ſurrender. 4 Rep. 29 b. A feme covert is to be ſecretly examined by the ſteward, on her ſurrendering her eſtate. Co. Lit. 59. An infant ſurrendered his copyhold, and afterwards entered at full age, and it was held lawful, though the ſurrenderee was admitted. Moor 597.

By the general cuſtom of copyhold eſtates, copyholders may ſurrender in court, and need not allege any particular cuſtom to warrant it: but where they ſurrender out of court, into the hands of the lord by cuſtomary tenants, &c. cuſtom muſt be pleaded. 9 Rep. 75: 1 Rol. Abr. 500. Surrenders out of court are to be preſented at the next court; for it is not an effectual ſurrender till preſented in court. Where a copyholder in fee ſurrenders out of court, and dies before it is preſented, yet the ſurrender, being preſented at the next court, will ſtand good, and ceſtui que uſe ſhall be admitted: ſo if ceſtui que uſe dies before it is preſented, his heir ſhall be admitted. But if the ſurrender be not preſented at the next court, it is void. Co. Lit. 62: 2 Danv. 188. If the tenants by whoſe hands the ſurrender was made ſhall die, and this upon proof is preſented in court, it is well enough. 4 Rep. 29.

Tenants refuſing to make preſentment, are compellable in the lord's court. And by ſurrender of copyhold lands to the uſe of a mortgagee, the lands are bound in equity, though the ſurrender be not preſented at the next court. 2 Salk. 449. When a copyholder ſurrenders upon condition, and this is preſented abſolutely, the preſentment is void; but where a conditional ſurrender is preſented, and the ſteward omits entering the condition, on proof thereof the condition ſhall not be avoided; but the roll ſhall be amended. 4 Rep. 25. A copyholder may ſurrender to the uſe of another, reſerving rent with a condition of re-entry for non-payment, and in default of payment may re-enter. Ibid. 21.

If a copyholder of inheritance takes a leaſe for years of his copyhold eſtate, it is a ſurrender in law of his copyhold. Where there is a tenant for life, and remainder in fee, he in remainder may ſurrender his eſtate, if there be no cuſtom to the contrary. 3 Leon. 329. If a ſurrender is made with remainders over, caſe lies, for him in remainder againſt a copyholder for life, who commits waſte, &c. 3 Lev. 128. A ſurrenderee of a reverſion of a copyhold is an aſſignee within the equity of the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 34, to bring action of debt or covenant againſt leſſee, &c. 1 Salk. 185. A copyholder in fee ſurrenders to the uſe of one for life, with remainder to another for life, remainder to another in fee; as the particular eſtates and remainders make but one eſtate, there is but one fine due to the lord. 2 Danv. 191.

The fruits and appendages of a copyhold tenure, that it hath in common with free tenures are Fealty, Services, (as well in rents as otherwiſe,) Reliefs and Eſcheats. The two latter belong only to copyholds of inheritance: the former to thoſe for life alſo. But beſides theſe, Copyholds have alſo Heriots, Wardſhip and Fines. Heriots are incident to both ſpecies of copyhold; but wardſhip and fines to thoſe of inheritance only.—Wardſhip in copyhold eſtates partakes both of that in chivalry, and that in ſocage. Like that in chivalry the lord is the legal guardian, who uſually aſſigns ſome relation of the infant tenant to act in his ſtead: and he, like guardian in ſocage, is accountable to his ward for the profits. Of fines, ſome are in the nature of primer ſeiſins due on the death of each tenant; others are mere fines for the alienation of the lands: In ſome manors only one of theſe ſorts can be demanded; in ſome both, and in others neither. They are ſometimes arbitrary and at the will of the lord, ſometimes fixed by cuſtom: but even when arbitrary, the courts of law, in favour of the liberty of copyholders have tied them down to be reaſonable in their extent: otherwiſe they might amount to a diſheriſon of the eſtate. No fine therefore is allowed to be taken upon deſcents or alienations (unleſs in particular circumſtances) of more than two years' improved value of the eſtate. 2 Ch. Rep. 134. See 2 Comm. 97.

Fines

Fines are paid to the lord on admittances; and may be due on every change of the eſtate by lord or tenant: The lord may have an action of debt for his fine; or may diſtrain by cuſtom. 4 Rep. 27: 13 Rep. 2.

An heriot is a duty to the lord, rendered at the death of the tenant, or on a ſurrender and alienation of an eſtate: and is the beſt beaſt or goods, found in the poſſeſſion of the tenant deceaſed, or otherwiſe, according to cuſtom. And for heriots, reliefs, &c. the lord may diſtrain, or bring action of debt. Plowd. 96. See title Heriot.

Relief is a ſum of money which every copyholder in fee, or freeholder of a manor pays to the lord, on the death of his anceſtor; and is generally a year's profits of his land. See titles Tenure; Relief.

Services ſignify any duty whatſoever accruing unto the lord from tenants; and are not only annual, and accidental; but corporal, as homage, fealty, &c. Comp. Court Keep. 7, 8, 9, &c.

Copyholds eſcheat, and are forfeited in many caſes; eſcheat of a copyhold eſtate, is either where the lands fall into the hands of the lord for want of an heir to inherit them; or where the copyholder commits felony, &c. But before the lord can enter on an eſtate eſcheated, the homage jury ought to preſent it. Forfeitures proceeding from treaſons, felonies, alienation by deed, &c. a preſentment of them muſt be alſo made in court, that the lord may have notice of them. A copyholder refuſing to do ſuit of court, being ſufficiently warned, is a forfeiture of his eſtate; unleſs he be prevented by ſickneſs, inundations of water, &c. If the lord demandeth his rent, and the copyholder being preſent, denies to pay it at the time required, this is a forfeiture; but if the tenant be not upon the ground when demanded, the lord muſt continue his demand upon the land, ſo that by continual denial in law, it may amount to a denial in fact: though it is ſaid there muſt be a demand from the perſon of the copyholder, and a wilful denial, to make a forfeiture.

If a Copyholder do not perform the ſervices due to his lord; or if he ſue a replevin againſt the lord, upon the lord's lawful diſtreſs for his rent or ſervices, theſe are forfeitures. If the lord upon admittance of a copyholder, the fine by the cuſtom of the manor being certain, demandeth his fine, and the copyholder denieth to pay it upon demand, this is a forfeiture.

Upon the deſcent of any copyhold of inheritance, the heir by the general cuſtom is tied, upon three ſolemn proclamations, made at three ſeveral courts, to come in and be admitted to his copyhold; or if he faileth therein, this failure worketh a forfeiture; but if an infant come not in to be admitted at three proclamations, it is no forfeiture: ſo of one beyond ſea, &c.

An ideot, lunatick, &c. though able to take copyholds, they yet are unable to forfeit them: and in reſpect to others, forfeitures may be mitigated by cuſtom, and the copyholder only amerced. By Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 29, On default of infants and feme coverts appearing to be admitted tenants to copyhold lands, the lord or his ſteward may name a perſon to be guardian or attorney for them, and by ſuch guardian, &c. admit them: and if the uſual fine thereon be not paid in three months, being demanded in writing, the lord may enter on the copyhold, receive the rents, &c. till the fine is paid with all charges. And by this ſtatute no infant or feme covert ſhall forfeit any copyhold lands for their neglect to come to court to be admitted, or refuſal to pay any fine.

The general cuſtom of copyholds allows a copyholder to make a leaſe for one year of his copyhold eſtate, and no more, without incurring a forfeiture: but a copyholder may make a leaſe for one year, and covenant with the leſſee, that, after the end of that year, he ſhall have the ſame for another year, and ſo from year to year during the ſpace of ſeven years, &c. and be no forfeiture. Cro. Jac. 300. For this does not amount to a leaſe, but is only a covenant, ſubjecting the covenantor to an action for damages. Though a copyholder may not make a leaſe to hold for one year, and ſo from year to year during his life, excepting one day yearly, &c. which will be a forfeiture, being a mere evaſion. But a licence to leaſe may be had. A woman who was a copyholder in fee married, her huſband made a leaſe for years, not warranted by the cuſtom, which was a forfeiture; the huſband died; and adjudged that the lord ſhall not take advantage of this forfeiture after his death, but the wife ſhall enjoy the eſtate. Cro. Car. 7. And ſee 4 Rep. 21 to 25, &c.

Livery upon any conveyance of a copyhold eſtate amounts to a forfeiture. And yet if a copyholder for life ſurrender to another in fee, this is no forfeiture; for it paſſeth by the ſurrender to the lord, and not by livery.

If copyholder for life cut down timber-trees, it is a forfeiture of his copyhold; though ſuch copyholder may take houſe-bote, hedge-bote, and plough-bote, upon his copyhold, of common right, as a thing incident to the grant; if he be not reſtrained by cuſtom, to take them by the aſſignment of the lord or his bailiff. Where a copyholder for life fells timber-trees, the lord may take them, and the eſtate is forfeited: but if under-leſſee for years of a copyholder cut down timber, this ſhall not be a forfeiture of the copyhold eſtate, but the lord is put to his action on the caſe againſt the leſſee. 1 Bulſt. 150: Style 233. A copyhold granted to two for their lives ſucceſſively, where the cuſtom of the manor is, that they ſhall not fell trees; if the firſt copyholder for life cut down trees, &c. it is not only a forfeiture of his own eſtate for life, but of him in remainder. Moor 49.

In other caſes, a copyholder for life, committing waſte, ſhall not forfeit the eſtate of him in remainder. Cro. Eliz. 880. If copyholder for life, where the remainder is over for life, commits a forfeiture by waſte, &c. he in remainder ſhall not enter, but the lord. 2 Danv. 198. A copyholder committing waſte voluntary, or permiſſive, this is a forfeiture: voluntary, as if he pull down any houſe, though built by himſelf; lop trees, and fell them, plough up meadow, whereby the ground is made worſe, &c. Permiſſive, if he ſuffer the roof of the houſe to let in rain, or the houſe to fall; or if he permit his meadow ground to be ſurrounded with water, ſo that it becomes marſhy, or his arable land to be thus ſurrounded and become unprofitable, &c. theſe and the like are forfeitures. See 2 Danv. Abr. 192, 193, 196, &c: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 509, 510, &c.

If a feme copyholder for life takes huſband, who commits waſte and dies, the eſtate of the feme is forfeited: Though not if a ſtranger commit the waſte, without the aſſent of the huſband. 4 Rep. 37. Sed. qu. the difference between between copyholder for life, and copyholder in fee, in this reſpect; unleſs waſte is diſtinguiſhed from other forfeitures?

Moſt forfeitures are cauſed by acts contrary to the tenure: But a ſucceeding lord of a manor, ſhall not have any advantage of a forfeiture, by waſte done by a copyholder in the time of his predeceſſor. 2 Sid. 8. And if a preſent lord doth any thing whereby he acknowldges the perſon to be his tenant after forfeiture, this acknowledgment is a confirmation of his eſtate, Coke's Cop. 61.

The court of Chancery will ſometimes relieve againſt a forfeiture for waſte, and compel the lord to re-admit, on receiving ſatisfaction for the injury he has ſuſtained. Such relief is particularly given where the waſte is committed, through ignorance; or where the waſte is merely permiſſive, and there has not been an obſtinate perſeverance, in neglecting to repair after notice. 1 C. C. 95: Pre. Ch. 568. Another inſtance in which relief againſt forfeiture for waſte is ſaid to be proper, is where the leſſee of a copyholder commits waſte without his direction or privity. Toth. 237. But in this latter caſe it may be doubted whether the waſte is a forfeiture. See Mo. 49.

Alſo, When the eſtate is forfeited for non-payment of rent, a fine, or ſuch things, where a value may be ſet on them, and compenſation made the lord on any laches of time, the tenant may be relieved; for there the land is but in nature of a ſecurity for thoſe ſums. Preced. Chan. 569, 572.

In caſe of making a leaſe for years, without licence, and not warranted by cuſtom, found to be a forfeiture at law, equity has nothing do with it, to give any remedy; it is like to a feoffment made, or fine levied by particular tenants, againſt which there can be no relief. Ibid. 574. Where copyhold lands are purchaſed in fee, in truſt for an alien, the lands are not ſeizable by the King; nor is the truſt forfeited to him; for if the lands were forfeited as purchaſed for ſuch alien, then the lord of the manor would loſe his fines and ſervices, &c. Hard. 436.

By Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 26, Copyhold eſtates of poor priſoners, may be aſſigned to creditors, and the aſſignees admitted by the lord, on paying the uſual fine due on a ſurrender, &c. and ſee Stat. 1 Geo. 3. c. 17. § 14, as to Inſolvents.

By Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 14. § 1, already mentioned, copyholders are not to vote for Knights of the Shire.—The admiſſion of infants and feme coverts entitled by deſcent, or ſurrender to the uſe of a will is regulated by Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 29 —And the Stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 46, (explained by 6 Geo. 3. c. 49,) compels the ſteward to receive the ſtamp duty on admiſſion, &c. at the ſame time he receives the fees of court.

CORAAGE, Coraagium.] A kind of extraordinary impoſition, growing upon ſome unuſual occaſion, and ſeems to be of certain meaſures of corn: for corus tritici is a meaſure of wheat. See Bract. lib. 2. c. 116: Numb. 6. Numb. 8. Blount.

CORACLE, A ſmall boat uſed by fiſhermen on ſome parts of the river Severn, made of an oval form, of ſplit ſallow twigs interwoven, and on that part next the water covered with leather, in which one man, being ſeated in the middle, will row himſelf ſwiftly with one hand, while with the other he manages his net or fiſh-tackle: and coming off the water, he will take the light veſſel on his back, and carry it home. This boat is of the ſame nature as the Indian canoes: though not of the ſame form, or employed to the like uſe. But quere if not long out of uſe?

CORAM NON JUDICE, Is when a cauſe is brought and determined in a court whereof the judges have not any juriſdiction; then it is ſaid to be coram non judice, and void. 2 Cro. 351.

CORBEL STONES, Are ſtones wherein images ſtand: the old Engliſh corbel, was properly a nich in the wall of a church, or other ſtructure in which an image was placed for ornament or ſuperſtition; and the corbel ſtones were the ſmooth poliſhed ſtones, laid for the front and outſide of the corbels or niches. The niches remain on the outſide of very many churches and ſteeples in England, though the little ſtatutes and reliques are moſt of them broken down. Paroch. Antiq. 575.

CORD OF WOOD, Is a quantity of wood eight feet long, four feet broad, and four feet high, ordained by the ſtatute.

CORDAGE, Fr.] Is a general appellation for all ſtuff to make ropes, and for all kind of ropes belonging to the rigging of a ſhip: it is mentioned in 15 Car. 2. c. 13. and ſee Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 56, againſt frauds in the manufacture of cordage for ſhipping.

CORIUM FORISFACERE, Was where a perſon was condemned to be whipped; which was anciently the puniſhment of a ſervant. Corium perdere, the ſame: and corium redimere is to compound for a whipping.

CORN. As to the general proviſions relative to the importation and exportation of Corn, See title Navigation-Acts.—And as to the exportation of Corn to enemies in time of war. See Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 27; and tit. Treaſon.

No corn was formerly to be exported, without the King's licence: except for the victualling of ſhips, and in ſome ſpecial caſes, from ſome ports only: and none might by Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 12. buy corn to ſell again, without licence from juſtices. But now corn, as wheat, barley, oats, &c. may be exported to States in amity when they exceed not certain prices, regulated by many ſtatutes; and the exporters of it ſhall pay no duty or cuſtom, but be intitled to bounty-money or a certain allowance for exportation

By Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 22, If any perſon uſe violence on another perſon to hinder him from buying or carrying corn

CORODY, Corodium.] Signifies a ſum of money or allowance of meat, drink, and clothing due to the King from an abbey, or other houſe of religion, whereof he was founder towards the ſuſtentation of ſuch a one of his ſervants as he thought fit to beſtow it upon. The difference between a corody and a penſion ſeems to be, that a corody was allowed towards the maintenance of any of the King's ſervants in an abbey: a penſion is given to one of the King's chaplains, for his better maintenance, till he may be provided of a benefice: And as to both theſe, See Fitz. Nat. Br. fol. 250; where are ſet down all the Corodies and penſions that our abbies, when they were ſtanding were obliged to pay to the King.

Corody is ancient in our laws: And it is mentioned in Staundf. Prærog. 44. And by the Stat. of Weſtm. 2. c. 25, it is ordained, that an aſſiſe ſhall lie for a corody. It is alſo apparent by Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. cap. 26, that corodies belonged ſometimes to biſhops, and noblemen, from monaſteries: And in the New Terms of Law, it is ſaid that a corody may be due to a common perſon, by grant from one to another; or of common right to him that is a founder of a religious houſe, not holden in Frank-almoigne; for that tenure was a diſcharge of all corodies in itſelf: By this book it likewiſe appears, that a corody is either certain or uncertain, and may be not only for life or years, but in fee. Terms de Ley: 2 Inſt. 630. See the Monaſticon Anglicanum, for the form of a grant of a corody.

CORODIO HABENDO, A writ to exact a corody of an abbey or religious houſe. Reg. Orig. 264.

CORONARE FILIUM, to make one's ſon a prieſt. Anciently lords of manors, whoſe tenants held by villenage, did prohibit them coronare filios, leſt ſuch lords ſhould loſe a villein by their entering into holy orders: For ordination changed their condition, and gave them liberty, to the prejudice of the lord, who could before claim them as his natives or born ſervants.—Homo Coronatus was one who had received the firſt tonſure, as preparatory to ſuperior orders; and the tonſure was in form of a corona, or crown of thorns. Cowel.

CORONER. CORONATOR, à Corona.] An ancient officer at the Common law. Mention is made of him in King Athelſtan's charter to Beverly, Anno 925.

He is called Coroner, Coronator—becauſe he hath principally to do with pleas of the crown, or ſuch wherein the king is more immediately concerned, 2 Inſt. 31 : 4 Inſt. 271. And in this light the Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench is the principal Coroner in the kingdom, and may (if he pleaſes) exerciſe the juriſdiction of a coroner in any part of the realm. 4 Rep. 57. But there are alſo particular coroners for every county of England; uſually four, but ſometimes ſix, and ſometimes fewer. F. N. B. 163. This office is of equal antiquity with that of ſheriff, and was ordained together with him to keep the peace, when the earls gave up the wardſhip of the county. Mirror c. 1, § 3.

I. His Election; and Removal.
II. 1. His Power and Duty; 2. His Fees for the Execution of his Duty; and 3. His Puniſhment for the Breach of it.

I. HE IS STILL CHOSEN by all the freeholders in the county-court; as by the policy of our antient laws, the ſheriff and conſervators of the peace, and all other officers were, who were concerned in matters that affected the liberty of the people. 2 Inſt. 558. And as verderors of the foreſt ſtill are, whoſe buſineſs it is to ſtand between the Prerogative and the Subject in the execution of the foreſt laws. For this purpoſe there is a writ at common law de coronatore eligendo F. N. B. 163. in which it is expreſsly commanded the ſheriff, "quod talem eligi faciat, qui melius et ſciat, et velit, et poſſit, officio illi intendere." See poſt. And, in order to effect this the more ſurely, it was enacted by Stat. Weſtm. 1, 3 Ed. I. c. 10, that none but lawful and diſcreet knights ſhould be choſen; and there was an inſtance in the 5 Ed. III. of a man being removed from this office becauſe he was only a merchant. 2 Inſt. 32. But it ſeems it is now ſufficient if a man hath lands enough to be made a knight; (which by the ſtatutum de militibus, 1 Ed. II. were lands to the amount of 20*l. per annum*;) whether he be really knighted or not, F. N. B. 163, 4. For the Coroner ought to have an eſtate ſufficient to maintain the dignity of his office, and anſwer any fines that may be ſet upon him for his miſbehaviour. Ibid. And if he hath not enough to anſwer, his fine ſhall be levied on the county, as the puniſhment for electing an inſufficient officer. Mirror, c. 1. § 3: 2 Inſt. 175. Now indeed, through the culpable neglect of gentlemen of property, this office has been ſuffered to fall into diſrepute, and get into low and indigent hands; ſo that, although formerly no coroners would condeſcend to be paid for ſerving their country, and they were by the aforeſaid Stat. Weſtm. 1, expreſsly forbidden to take a reward, under pain of great forfeiture to the king; yet for many years paſt they have only deſired to be choſen for the ſake of their perquiſites: being allowed fees for their attendance. See poſt. II. 2.

By Stat. 28 Ed. 3. c. 6. it is enacted, "That all coroners of the counties ſhall be choſen in the full counties of the moſt mete and lawful people that ſhall be found in the ſame counties, to execute the ſaid office; ſaved always to the King, and other lords, who ought to make ſuch coroners, their ſeignories and franchiſes."

The oaths of allegiance, ſupremacy, and abjuration, are to be taken, and then the oaths of office; when the coroner is elected, and ſworn into his office, he is to remember the qualification-acts, and in due time, to take the ſacrament, and oaths of abjuration. Impey's Sheriff.

In the caſe of election by freeholders, where the majority cannot be determined by the view, upon the holding up of hands, the Sheriff upon the demand of a poll to be taken of the numbers, ought not to deny it; nor ought he to deny a ſcrutiny into the polls, when properly required, upon a ſuggeſtion that non-freeholders have polled: for how otherwiſe can the majority of freeholders be aſcertained? It is an election at common law, and this ſcrutiny is as incident to enquire into the polls, as numbering of the polls is incident to the holding up of hands; nor can the juſt majority be otherwiſe duly diſcovered or declared. Freem. 17 : 2 Vent. 25 : 1 Vent. 206 : 2 Lev. 50.

The Coroner is choſen for life: but may be removed, by either being made ſheriff, or choſen verderor, which are offices incompatible with the other; or by the King's writ de coronatore exonerando, for a cauſe to be therein aſſigned; as that he is engaged in other buſineſs, is incapacitated by years, or ſickneſs, hath not a ſufficient eſtate in the county, or lives in an inconvenient part of it. F. N. B. 163, 4: See poſt. And by Stat. 25 Geo. II. c. 29, extortion, neglect, or miſbehaviour, are alſo made cauſes of removal. See poſt. II. 3.

There are Special Coroners, within divers liberties, as well as the ordinary officers in every county; as the Coroner of the Verge, which is a certain compaſs about the King's court; who is likewiſe called Coroner of the King's houſehold. Cromp. Juriſ. 102.

The King's coroner ſhall execute his office within the verge. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 20. ſect. 7. Some corporations and colleges are licenſed by charter to appoint their coroners within their own precincts. 4 Inſt. 271. For what ariſes on the high ſea, we read of coroners appointed by the King or his admiral. 2 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 53. See poſt. Coroner of the King's Houſehold.

It is ſaid Coroners are of three kinds. 1, By virtue of an office. 2, By charter or commiſſion. 3, By election.

1. The Chief Juſtice of K. B.—2. The Lord Mayor of London is by charter 18 E. IV. Coroner of London. See poſt.—The Biſhop of Ely alſo hath power to make coroners, by a charter of Hen. VII: and there are coroners of particular lords of franchiſes and liberties who by charter have power to create their own coroners, or to be coroners themſelves, eſpecially the juriſdiction of the Admiralty, as well as that of the verge above referred to.—3. The general coroners of counties.—See 1 Hale 52 : 4 Rep. 57 : 1 Comm. 384.

The Coroner of Portſmouth has juriſdiction on board a man of war lying in Portſmouth harbour: for though the Admiralty have a coroner of their own, he never takes inquiſitions of felo de ſe. Stra. 1097 : Andr. 231.

II. THE OFFICE OF CORONERS eſpecially concerns the pleas of the crown; and they are conſervators of the peace in the county where generally elected. Their authority is judicial and miniſterial: Judicial, where one comes to a violent death, and to take and enter appeals of murder, pronounce judgment upon outlawries, &c. And to inquire of lands and goods, and eſcapes of murderers, treaſure-trove, wreck of the ſea, deodands, &c. The miniſterial power is where the coroners execute the King's writs, on exception to the ſheriff, as by his being party to a ſuit, kin to either of the parties, on default of the ſheriff, &c. 4 Inſt. 271: 1 Plowd. 73. And the authority of coroners does not determine by the demiſe of the King. 2 Inſt. 174.

Where Coroners are empowered to act as judges, as in taking an inquiſition of death, or receiving an appeal of felony, &c. the act of one of them is of the ſame force as if they had all joined; but after one of them has proceeded to act, the act of another of them will be void: And where they are authoriſed to act only miniſterially, in the execution of a proceſs directed to them upon the incapacity of the ſheriff, their acts are void, if they do not all join. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 45: Hob. 70.

So that Coroners as miniſters muſt all join; but as judges, they may divide. But two coroners ought to be judges in re-diſſeiſin; and though one ſerves to pronounce an outlawry, the entry ought to be in the name of all of them: And ſo of all proceſſes directed to the coroners. Staundf. 53: Jenk. Cent. 85.

If the ſheriff is either plaintiff or defendant, or one of the cogniſees, the writ muſt be directed to the coroner, Cro. Car 300. But the coroner is not the officer of B. R. but where the ſheriff is improper; not where there is no ſheriff; for if the ſheriff die, the coroner cannot execute a writ. In caſe of two coroners, if one is challenged, the other may execute the writ, &c. yet both make but one officer: It is the ſame with two ſheriffs of a city, &c. 1 Salk. 144. A venire facias ſhall go to the coroner, where the ſheriff is a party, or the defendant is a ſervant to the ſheriff, &c. but it ought to be on a principal challenge to the favour. Moor 470.

On defaults of ſheriffs, coroners are to impanel juries, and return iſſues on juries not appearing, &c. As the ſheriff in his torn might enquire of all felonies by the Common law, ſaving the death of a man; ſo the coroner can inquire of no felony but of the death of a perſon, and that ſuper viſum corporis. 4 Inſt. 271. But in Northumberland the coroner by cuſtom, may enquire of other felonies. 35 H. 6. 27. But without cuſtom no coroner is authoriſed to take any other inquiſition than on death. 2 Hale 65. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 9. § 35 n. By Magna Charta, cap. 17. no ſheriff, &c. or coroner ſhall hold pleas of the crown: But by Stat. Weſtm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 10, it is enacted, that the coroners ſhall lawfully attach and preſent pleas of the crown; and that ſheriffs ſhall have counter-rolls with the coroners, as well of appeals, as of inqueſts, &c.

Coroners, before the Stat. Magna Charta, might not only receive accuſations againſt offenders, but might try them: But ſince that ſtatute, they cannot proceed ſo far; and appeals before them, are removable into B. R. &c. by certiorari, directed to the coroners and ſheriffs, &c. Though proceſs may be awarded by the ſheriff and coroner, or the coroner only, in the county-court on appeals, till the exigent, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 41.

By the Stat. De officio coronatoris, 4 Ed. 1. ſt. 2, The Coroner is to go to the place where any perſon is ſlain or ſuddenly dead, and ſhall by his warrant to the bailiffs, conſtables, &c. ſummon a jury out of the four or five neighbouring towns, to make enquiry upon view of the body; and the coroner and jury are to inquire into the manner of killing, and all circumſtances that occaſioned the party's death; who were preſent, whether the dead perſon was known, where he lay the night before, &c. Examine the body if there be any ſigns of ſtrangling about the neck, or of cords about the members, &c. Alſo all wounds ought to be viewed, and inquiry made with what weapons, &c. And the coroner may ſend his warrant for witneſſes, and take their examination in writing; and if any appear guilty of the murder, he ſhall inquire what goods and lands he hath; and then the dead body is to be buried. A coroner may likewiſe commit the perſon to priſon who is by his inquiſition found guilty of the murder; and the witneſſes are to be bound by recogniſance to appear at the next aſſizes, &c.

When the jury have brought in their verdict, the coroner is to inroll and return the inquiſition, whether it be brought in murder, manſlaughter, &c. to the juſtices of the next gaol-delivery of the county, or certify it into B. R. where the murderers ſhall be proceeded againſt. 2 Rol. Abr. 32. Upon an inquiſition taken before the coroner, he muſt put into writing the effect of the evidence given to the jury before him; and bind them to appear, &c. which is to be certified to the court with the inquiſition; and neglecting it, the coroner ſhall be fined. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13: 1 Lil. Abr. 327.

The word Murdravit is not neceſſary in a coroner's inquiſition; though it is in an indictment for killing another perſon. 1 Salk. 377. It is not neceſſary that the inquiſition be taken in the place where the body was viewed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 25. But a coroner has no authority to take an inquiſition of death without a view of the body; and if the inqueſt be taken by him without ſuch view, it is void. 2 Lev. 140.

The coroner may in convenient time take up a dead body that hath been buried, in order to view it: but if it be buried ſo long that he can diſcover nothing from the viewing it, or if there be danger of infection, the inqueſt ought not to be taken by the coroner, but by juſtices of peace, by the teſtimony of witneſſes; for none can take it on view, but the coroner. Bro. Coron. 167, 173. If the body is buried, the town ſhall be amerced; as it ſhall be if the body is ſuffered to lie ſo long that it ſtinks. 2 Dam. Abr. 209, &c. Where the body hath lain for ſome time, that it cannot be judged how it came by it's death, that muſt be recorded; that at the coming of the juſtices of aſſiſe, the town where, &c. may be amerced on ſight of the coroner's rolls.

A coroner may find any nuiſance by which the death of a man happens; and the townſhip ſhall be amerced on ſuch finding. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 536. If one is ſlain in the day and the murderer eſcapes, the town where done ſhall be amerced, and the coroner is to inquire thereof on view of the body, Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 1. A coroner may take an indictment upon view of the body; as alſo an appeal, within a year after the death of one ſlain. Wood's Inſt. 491. But a coroner, ſuper viſum corporis, cannot make an inquiſition of an acceſſary after the murder; though he may of acceſſaries before the fact. Moor 29.

Coroners ought to ſit and inquire on the body of every priſoner that dies in priſon: They have no juriſdiction within the verge of the King's courts; nor of offences, committed at ſea, or between high and low water mark when the tide is in; though they have in arms and creeks of the ſea. 3 Inſt. 134. See ante I. ad finem. If a body is drowned, drowned, and cannot be found to the viewed, the inquiſition muſt be taken by juſtices of peace, on the examination of witneſſes, &c. 5 Rep. 110.

Where a coroner's inqueſt is quaſhed, he muſt make a new one ſuper viſum corporis: And a coroner may attend and amend his inquiſition in matters of form: But if he miſbehaves himſelf, and a melius inquirendum is granted upon it, that inquiſition muſt be taken by the ſheriffs or commiſſioners, upon affidavits, and not ſuper viſum corporis; becauſe none but a coroner can take inquiſition ſuper viſum, &c. and he is not to be truſted again. 1 Salk. 190: 2 Danv. Abr. 210.

A coroner's inquiſition being final, the coroner ought to hear counſel and evidence on both ſides. 2 Sid. 90, 101. The coroner muſt admit evidence, as well againſt the King's intereſt, as for it; but it hath been held, that if a perſon be killed by another, and it is certainly known that he did it, the coroner's jury are to hear the evidence only for the King; and inquire whether the killing were by malice, or without malice, &c. Per Hale, Ch. Juſt. Where a coroner would not admit of evidence againſt the King, to prove a felo de ſe to be non compos mentis, his inquiſition was ſet aſide; and a new inquiſition taken, whereby it was found that the party was non compos. 2 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 60. If there be an inquiſition of manſlaughter or murder, and alſo an indictment by the grand jury againſt one, and he is arraigned, and found Not Guilty on the indictment; here it is neceſſary to quaſh the coroner's inquiſition, or to arraign the party upon it, and acquit him on that alſo: For otherwiſe it ſtands as a record againſt him, whereon he may poſſibly be outlawed. 2 Hale 65. And where a perſon found guilty by the coroner's inqueſt, pleads, and is acquitted by the petit jury; they muſt give in who it was that killed the man, which ſerves as an indictment againſt that other perſon; and if they cannot tell who, they may mention ſome fictitious name. Ibid.

2. By the Stat. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 10, Coroners ſhall demand or take nothing for doing their offices: And by the ancient law of England, none having any office concerning the adminiſtration of juſtice, could take any fee for doing his office; and therefore this ſtatute was only in affirmance of the Common law. By Stat. 3 Hen. 7. cap. 1, upon an inquiſition taken on view of the body, the coroner ſhall have 13*s.* 4*d.* fee of the goods of the murderer; and if he be gone, then out of the amercement of the town for the eſcape. Though Stat. 1 H. 8. c. 7, enacts, that where a perſon is ſlain by miſadventure, the coroner is to take no fee, on pain of 40*s.* Juſtices of aſſiſe and of peace have power to enquire of and puniſh extortions of coroners, and alſo their defaults. Stat. Ibid.

By the Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 29, for every inquiſition, not taken upon the view of a body dying in gaol, which ſhall be taken by any coroner in any townſhip or place contributory to the rates directed by Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29, the ſum of 20*s.* and for every mile which he ſhall travel from the place of his abode, the further ſum of 9*d.* ſhall be paid him out of the money ariſing by the ſaid rates. And for every inquiſition taken upon the view of a body dying in gaol, ſo much money not exceeding 20*s.* ſhall be paid him as the juſtices at ſeſſions ſhall think fit to allow, out of the money ariſing from the ſaid rates. Provided that over and above the recompence by the ſtatute appointed, the coroner who ſhall take an inquiſition upon the view of a body ſlain or murdered, ſhall have the fee of 13*s.* 4*d.* payable by Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 1, out of the goods of the ſlayer or murderer, or out of the amerciaments upon the townſhip, if the ſlayer or murderer eſcape. Coroners taking further fees guilty of extortion.

Provided that no Coroner of the King's houſhold, and of the verge of the King's palaces, nor any coroner of the Admiralty, nor of the County Palatine of Durham, nor of the city of London and borough of Southwark, or of any of the franchiſes belonging to the ſaid city, nor any coroner of any city, borough, town, liberty or franchiſe not contributory to the rates directed by Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29, or within which ſuch ſuch rates have not been uſually aſſeſſed, ſhall be intitled to any fee, recompence or benefit given by this act.

3. If a Coroner be remiſs in coming to do his office, when he is ſent for, &c. he ſhall be amerced by virtue of the above mentioned ſtatute De coronatoribus. S. P. C. 51: Salk. 377: H. P. C. 170.

If a Coroner hath been guilty of any corrupt practice, bribery, &c. in taking the inquiſition, a melius inquirendum may be awarded for taking a new one by ſpecial commiſſioners, &c. Coroners concealing felonies, &c. are to be fined, and ſuffer one year's impriſonment. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 9. Alſo for mis-managment in the coroner, the filing of the inquiſition may be ſtopped. 1 Mod. 82. A coroner's inquiſition is not traverſable: If it be found before the coroner ſuper viſum corporis, that one was felo de ſe, the executors or adminiſtrators of the deceaſed, it is ſaid, cannot traverſe it. 3 Inſt. 55. But it has been held that the inqueſt being moved into B. R. by certiorari, may be there traverſed by the executor or adminiſtrator of the deceaſed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 54. And it hath been adjudged, that the inquiſition of felo de ſe is traverſable; though fugam fecit is not. 2 Leo. 152.

If a Coroner be convicted of extortion, wilful neglect of duty or miſdemeanor in his office, the court before whom he ſhall be ſo convicted, may adjudge that he ſhall be removed from his office.—See Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 29.—

CORONER OF THE KING'S HOUSEHOLD, Hath an exempt juriſdiction within the verge, which the Coroner of the County cannot intermeddle with; as the Coroner of the King's Houſe may not intermeddle within the county out of the verge. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 15.—If an inquiſition be found before the coroner of the county, and the coroner of the verge, where the homicide was committed in the county, and it is ſo entered and certified, it will be error. 4 Rep. 45. But if murder be committed within the verge, and the King removes, before any indictment taken by the Coroner of the King's Houſhold; the coroner of the county, and the Coroner of the King's Houſe ſhall inquire of the ſame: And according to Sir Edw. Coke, the coroner of the county might inquire thereof at the Common law. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 15: 2 Inſt. 550. If the ſame perſon be coroner of the county, and alſo of the King's Houſe, an indictment of death taken before him as coroner, both of the King's Houſe, and of the county, is good. 4 Rep. 46: 2 Inſt. 134.

By the Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 12. §§ 1, 3, It is ordained, That all inquiſitions made upon the view of perſons ſlain, within any of the King's palaces or houſes, or any other houſe or houſes wherein his Majeſty ſhall happen to be abiding in his royal perſon, ſhall be taken by the Coroner for the time being of the King's Houſehold, without any aſſiſting of another coroner of any ſhire within this realm; by the oaths of twelve or more of the yeoman officers of the King's Houſehold, returned by the two Clerks Controllers, the Clerks of the Checks, and the Clerks Marſhal, or one of them, of the ſaid Houſehold, to whom the ſaid Coroner of the Houſehold ſhall direct his precept; and the ſaid Coroner ſhall certify under his ſeal, and the ſeals of ſuch perſons as ſhall be ſworn before him, all ſuch inquiſitions before the Maſter or Lord Steward of the Houſehold; who hath the appointment of ſuch coroner, &c.

Coroner of London. By the charter of King Ed. IV, the mayor and commonalty of London may grant the office of coroner to whom they pleaſe; and no other coroner but he that belongs to the city, ſhall have any power there: Alſo the Lord Mayor, &c. may chuſe two coroners in Southwark. When any one is killed, or comes to an untimely death in London, the coroner upon notice ſhall attend where the body is, and forthwith cauſe the beadles of the ward to ſummon a jury to make the neceſſary inquiry, how ſuch perſon came by his death: And after inquiſition taken, he ſhall give a certificate to the church-warden, clerk or ſexton of the pariſh, to the intent the corpſe may be buried: The coroner's fees here formerly amounted to 25*s.* now to above double that ſum; unleſs the friends of the deceaſed are poor, and then he ſhall execute his office for nothing. Cit. Lib. 46, 47. The Coroners in London and Middleſex, and in other cities, &c. may bail felons and priſoners, in ſuch manner as hath been heretofore accuſtomed. Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. f. 6: 1 Lil. Abr. 327.

What anciently belonged to Coroners, you may read at large in Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 5, 6, 7 & 8: Britton, cap. 1. and Fleta, lib. 1. c. 18.

Coronatore Eligendo. A writ which lies on the death or diſcharge of any Coroner, directed to the Sheriff out of the Chancery, to call together the freeholders of the county, for the choice of a new coroner; and to certify into the Chancery, both the election and the name of the party elected, and alſo to give him his oath, &c. Reg. Orig. 177: F. N. B. 163. See title Coroner.

Coronatore exonerando. A writ for the diſcharge of a coroner, for negligence, or inſufficiency in the diſcharge of his duty: and where coroners are ſo far engaged in any other public buſineſs, that they cannot attend the office; or if they are diſabled by old age or diſeaſe, to execute it; or have not ſufficient lands, &c. they may be diſcharged by this writ. 2 Inſt. 32: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 9. § 12. But if any ſuch writ be grounded on an untrue ſuggeſtion, the coroner may procure a commiſſion from the Chancery to enquire thereof; and if the ſuggeſtion be diſproved, the King may make a ſuperſedeas to the ſheriff, that he do not remove the coroner; or if he have removed him, that he ſuffer him to execute the office. Reg. Orig. 177, 178: F. N. B. 164. See title Coroner. As alſo the coroner's is an office of freehold, the court of Chancery, with whom the power of granting this writ reſides, will not ſuffer it to iſſue, unleſs on affidavit, that the defendant has been ſerved with notice of the petition for it. 3 Atk. 184. And on an election of a new coroner by a majority of the freeholders, the power and authority of the old one is ipſo facto extinguiſhed. See title Coroner.

CORONE, Fr.] All matters of the crown, were heretofore reduced to this law head or title; they are the things that concern treaſon, felony, and divers other offences, by the Common law, and by ſtatute. Shep. Epit. 367.

CORPORAL OATH, And how it is adminiſtered. See title Oath.

CORPORATION.

Corporatio.] A Body politic or incorporate; ſo called as the perſons compoſing it are made into a body, and of capacity to take and grant, &c. Or, it is an aſſembly and joining together of many into one fellowſhip and brotherhood, whereof one is head and chief, and the reſt are the body; and this head and body knit together, make the Corporation: alſo it is conſtituted of ſeveral members like unto the natural body, and framed, by fiction of law, to endure in perpetual ſucceſſion.

With reſpect to Corporations, or communities of old, the forming of cities into communities, corporations, or bodies politic, and granting them the privilege of municipal juriſdiction, contributed more than any other cauſe to introduce regular government, police and arts, and to diffuſe them over Europe. Louis the Groſs, in France, to counterbalance his potent vaſſals, conferred new privileges on the towns ſituated within his domaine, called Charters of community, and formed the inhabitants into corporations, or bodies politic, to be governed by a council and magiſtrates of their own nomination. About the ſame period the great cities in Germany began to acquire like immunities; and the practice quickly ſpread over Europe, and was adopted in Spain, England, Scotland, and all the other feudal kingdoms. Robertſon's Hiſt. Emp. C. V. 1 v. 32, 34, &c.

Of Corporations ſome are ſole, ſome aggregate; ſole, when in one ſingle perſon, as the King, a Biſhop, Dean, &c. Aggregate, which is the moſt uſual, conſiſting of many perſons, as Mayor and Commonalty, Dean and Chapter, &c. Likewiſe corporations are ſpiritual or temporal; ſpiritual, of Biſhops, Deans, Archdeacons, Parſons, Vicars, &c. Temporal, of Mayors, Commonalty, Bailiffs and Burgeſſes, &c. Some Corporations are of a mixt nature, compoſed of ſpiritual and temporal perſons, ſuch as heads of colleges and hoſpitals, &c. All corporations are ſaid to be Eccleſiaſtical, or Lay.

Lay Corporations are of two ſorts, civil and eleemoſynary. The civil are ſuch as are erected for a variety of temporal purpoſes. The King, for inſtance is made a corporation to prevent in general the poſſibility of an interregnum, or vacancy of the throne, and to preſerve the poſſeſſions of the Crown entire; for immediately upon the demiſe of one king, his ſucceſſor is in full poſſeſſion of the regal rights and dignity. Other lay corporations are erected for the good government of a town or particular diſtrict, as a mayor and commonalty, bailiff and burgeſſes, or the like; ſome for the advancement and regulation of manufactures and commerce; as the trading companies of London, and other towns: and ſome for the better carrying on of divers ſpecial purpoſes; as churchwardens, for conſervation of the goods of the pariſh; the college of Phyſicians and company of Surgeons in London, for the improvement of the medical ſcience; the Royal Society, for the advancement of natural knowledge; and the Society of Antiquaries for promoting the ſtudy of antiquities. And among theſe general corporate bodies, the Univerſities of Oxford and Cambridge muſt be ranked. 3 Burr. 1656.

The

The eleemoſynary ſort are, ſuch as are conſtituted for the perpetual diſtribution of the free alms, or bounty, of the founder of them to ſuch perſons as he has directed. Of this kind are all hoſpitals for the maintenance of the poor, ſick, and impotent: and all colleges, both in our Univerſities, and out of them. Such as at Weſtminſter, Eaton, Wincheſter, &c. which colleges are founded for two purpoſes; 1. For the promotion of piety and learning, by proper regulations and ordinances. 2. For imparting aſſiſtance to the members of thoſe bodies, in order to enable them to proſecute their devotion and ſtudies with greater eaſe and aſſiduity. And all theſe eleemoſynary corporations are, ſtrictly ſpeaking, lay, and not eccleſiaſtical, even though compoſed of eccleſiaſtical perſons, and although they in ſome things partake of the nature, privileges, and reſtrictions of eccleſiaſtical bodies. 1 Ld. Raym. 6. They are, in fact, lay corporations, becauſe they are not ſubject to the juriſdiction of the eccleſiaſtical courts, or to the viſitations of the Ordinary or Dioceſan in their ſpiritual characters. 1 Comm. 471.

I. How Corporations are created.
II. Their Intereſt and Juriſdiction.
III. How far their Acts are binding.
IV. How they are viſited.
V. How they are diſſolved.

I. Bodies Politic or incorporate may commence and be eſtabliſhed three manner of ways, viz. by preſcription, by letters-patent, or by act of parliament; but moſt commonly begin by patent or charter. 1 Inſt. 250: 3 Inſt. 202: 3 Rep. 73.

In making aggregate corporations, there muſt be, 1. Lawful authority. 2. Proper perſons to be incorporated. 3. A name of incorporation. 4. A place, without which no corporation can be made. 5. Words ſufficient in law to make a corporation. 10 Rep. 29, 123: 3 Rep. 73. The words incorpora, funda, &c. are not of neceſſity to be uſed in making corporations; but other words equivalent are ſufficient: and of ancient time, the inhabitants of a town were incorporated, when the King granted to them to have Guildam Mercatoriam. 2 Danv. Abr. 214. He that gave the firſt poſſeſſions to the corporation, is the founder. The pariſhioners or townſmen of a pariſh or town; and tenants of a manor, are to ſome purpoſes a corporation. Co. Lit. 95, 342.

If the King grants lands to the inhabitants of B. their heirs and ſucceſſors, rendering a rent, for any thing touching theſe lands, this is a corporation; though not to other purpoſes: but if the King grants lands to the inhabitants of B. and they be not incorporated before, if no rent be reſerved to the King, the grant is void. 2 Danv. 214. If the King grants to the men of Iſlington to be diſcharged of toll, this is a good corporation to this intent; but not to purchaſe, &c. And by ſpecial words the King may make a limited corporation, or a corporation for a ſpecial purpoſe. Ibid.

London is a Corporation by preſcription: but though a corporation may be by preſcription, it ſhall be intended that it did originally derive its authority by grant from the King; for the King is the head of the commonwealth, and all the commonwealth, in reſpect of him, is but one corporation; and all other corporations are but limbs of the greater body. 1 Lil. Abr. 330. A mayor and commonalty or corporation, cannot make another corporation, or commonalty. 1 Sid. 290. The city of London cannot make a corporation, becauſe that can only be created by the crown; but London, or any other corporation, may make a fraternity. 1 Salk. 193.

The parliament, by its abſolute and tranſcendent authority, may perform this, or any other act whatſoever: and actually did perform it to a great extent, by Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5; which incorporated all hoſpitals and houſes of correction founded by charitable perſons, without farther trouble: and the ſame has been done in other caſes of charitable foundations. But otherwiſe it has not formerly been uſual thus to intrench upon the prerogative of the Crown; and the King may prevent it when he pleaſes. And, in the particular inſtance before-mentioned, it was done, as Sir Edward Coke obſerves, 2 Inſt. 722, to avoid the charges of incorporation and licences of mortmain in ſmall benefactions; which in his days were grown ſo great, that they diſcouraged many men from undertaking theſe pious and charitable works.

The King (it is ſaid) may grant to a Subject the power of erecting corporations; (Bro. Abr. tit. Prerog. 53: Viner Prerog. 88. pl. 16. though the contrary was formerly held. Year Book. 2 Hen. 7. 13;) that is, he may permit the Subject to name the perſons and powers of the corporation at his pleaſure; but it is really the King that erects, and the Subject is but the inſtrument: for though none but the King can make a corporation, yet qui facit per alium, facit per ſe. 10 Rep. 33. In this manner the Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxford, has power by charter to erect corporations; and has actually often exerted it, in the erection of ſeveral matriculated companies, now ſubſiſting, of tradeſmen ſubſervient to the ſtudents.

When a Corporation is erected, a name muſt be given to it; and by that name alone it muſt ſue and be ſued, and do all legal acts; though a very minute variation therein is not material. 10 Rep. 122. Such name is the very being of its conſtitution; and, though it is the will of the King that erects the corporation, yet the name is the knot of its combination, without which it could not perform its corporate functions. Gilb. Hiſt. C. P. 182. The name of incorporation, ſays Sir Edward Coke, is as a proper name, or name of baptiſm; and therefore when a private founder gives his college or hoſpital a name, he does it only as a godfather; and by that ſame name the King baptiſes the Corporation. 10 Rep. 28.

And it may change its name, as corporations frequently do in new charters, and will ſtill retain its former rights and privileges. 4 Co. 87.

No perſons ſhall bear office in any corporation, &c. but ſuch as have received the ſacrament of the church, and taken the oaths. Stat. 13 Car. 2. ſt. 2. c. 1. But ſee the Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 6, confirming officers in corporations. See title By Laws. Oaths, Nonconformiſts.

What perſons are capable of being elected members of a corporation, See Hardw. 23.

II. When a Corporation is duly created, all incidents, as, to purchaſe and grant, ſue and be ſued, &c. are tacitly annexed to it; and although no power to make laws, ſtatutes or ordinances, is given by a ſpecial clauſe to a corporation, it is included by law in the very act of incorporating. Co. Lit. 264. A new charter doth not merge or or extinguiſh any of the ancient privileges of the old charter. And if an ancient corporation is incorporated by a new name, yet their new body ſhall enjoy all the privileges that the old corporation had. Raym. 439: 4 Rep. 37.

There are uſually granted in charters to corporations, divers franchiſes; as felons' goods, waifs, eſtrays, treaſure-trove, deodands, courts, and cogniſance of pleas, fairs, markets, aſſiſe of bread and beer, &c. 4 Rep. 65. Actions ariſing in corporations may be tried in the corporation courts; but if they try actions which ariſe not within their juriſdictions, and encroach upon the Common law, they ſhall be puniſhed for it. Lutw. 1571, 1572. Actions triable there, muſt, in general, mean, thoſe actions wherein the corporation is not intereſted.

There may be a corporation without a head: but where there is a head, all acts ought to be by and to the head; nor can they ſue without ſuch head; and if he dies, nothing can be done in the vacancy. 10 Rep. 30, 32: Co. Lit. 264. If land be given to a mayor and commonalty for their lives, they have an eſtate by intendment not determinable: ſo it is, if a feoffment be made of land to a dean and chapter, without mention of ſucceſſors.

In a caſe of Sole Corporation, as biſhop, dean, parſon, &c. no chattel, either in action or poſſeſſion, ſhall go in ſucceſſion; but the executors or adminiſtrators of the biſhop, parſon, &c. ſhall have them: but it is otherwiſe of a corporation aggregate, as a dean and chapter, mayor and commonalty, and the like: for they in the judgment of law never die. But the caſe of the Chamberlain of London differs from all theſe; his ſucceſſor, in his own name, may have execution of a recogniſance acknowledged to his predeceſſor for orphanage money; and the reaſon is, becauſe the corporation of the chamberlain is by cuſtom, which hath enabled the ſucceſſor to take and have ſuch recognizances, obligations, &c. that are made to his predeceſſor. Terms de Ley.

Though a Sole Corporation cannot generally take in ſucceſſion goods and chattels, &c. yet it may take a fee-ſimple in ſucceſſion, by the word Sucoeſſors. Co. Lit. 8, 9, 46. Aggregate corporations may take not only goods and chattels, but lands in fee-ſimple, without the word Succeſſors, for the reaſon before-mentioned. 4 Inſt. 249. Succeſſion in a body politic, is an inheritance in a body private. If a leaſe for years be made to a biſhop and his ſucceſſors, it is ſaid his executors ſhall have it in auter droit; for regularly no chattel can go in ſucceſſion in caſe of a ſole corporation, no more than if a leaſe be made to a man and his heirs, it can go to his heirs. Co. Lit. 46.

Grants of corporations are to be by deed, under their common ſeal, and are good without delivery; for the common ſeal gives perfection to corporation deeds. Dav. 44. An obligation ſealed with the common ſeal of a corporation, if the mayor ſigns it, he is ſuable, if the corporation be diſſolved: but if two of the members ſign it, the particular perſons are not bound by it. 2 Lev. 137: Raym. 152. A releaſe of a mayor for any ſum of money due to the corporation, made in his own name, is not good in law; the corporation muſt join and do it by their common ſeal. Terms de Ley.

A Corporation which hath a head, may make a perſonal command without writing; but a corporation aggregate without a head cannot. Lutw. 1497. A corporation aggregate may employ any one in ordinary ſervices, without deed; though not to appear for them, in any act which concerns their intereſt or title. 1 Ventr. 47, 48. Such a corporation may appoint a bailiff to take a diſtreſs, without deed or warrant. 1 Salk. 191. But cannot without deed command a bailiff to enter into lands for a condition broken; for ſuch command without deed is void. Cro. 815.

Though a Corporation cannot do an act in pais without their common ſeal, they may do an act upon record; and the reaſon is, becauſe they are eſtopped by the record to ſay it is not their act. 1 Salk. 192. A promiſe to a corporation is good without deed. 2 Lev. 252. The head of a corporation aggregate may not be charged with the act of his predeceſſor if it be not by common ſeal, or for ſuch things as come to the uſe of the whole body or ſociety. 1 And. 23, 196.

A Corporation may do an act in that capacity, to one of themſelves in his natural capacity; and any member in his natural capacity may perform an act to the corporation in his politic capacity; and ſo they may ſue one another, in their diſtinct capacities. 1 Shep. Abr. 436. Treſpaſs for an aſſault and battery, &c. will not lie againſt a corporation; but it muſt be brought againſt the perſons that do the treſpaſs by their proper names: though if the beaſts of the corporation treſpaſs on a man in his ground, action of treſpaſs lies againſt them for this. Proceſs of outlawry will not lie againſt a corporation; nor capias or exigent, but diſtreſs. 22 Aſſ. 67: 39 Ed. 3. 13: 21 Ed. 4.

A Corporation cannot ſue, or appear in perſon, but by attorney: they cannot commit treaſon or felony, or be excommunicate, &c. They may not be executors, or adminiſtrators, be jointenants, truſtees, &c. Nor ſhall the members of a corporation be regularly witneſſes for the corporation. 10 Rep. 32: 11 Rep. 98: Co. Lit. 134. But they may be diſfranchiſed, and then be witneſſes; though not ſurrender by conſent. Yet in ſome caſes the judges now admit their teſtimony without diſfranchiſement, where the intereſt is remote. Attachment doth not lie againſt a corporation. Raym. 152.

Corporations may have power not only to infranchiſe freemen but to diſfranchiſe a member, and deprive him of his freedom; if he doth any act to the prejudice of the body, or contrary to his oath, &c. Though for conſpiring to do any thing contrary to his duty, or for words of contempt againſt the chief officers, he may not be diſfranchiſed; but he may be committed till he find ſureties for his good behaviour. 11 Rep. 98: 5 Mod. 257. A corporation cannot diſfranchiſe for breach of a by-law. 1 Lil. 331. And one wrongfully diſfranchiſed may be reſtored, and have his remedy by mandamus, &c. in B. R. An alderman or freeman of a corporation cannot be removed from his freedom or place without good cauſe, and a cuſtom to remove them ad libitum is void, becauſe the party hath a freehold therein. Cro. Jac. 540.

A perſon may be bound to the good behaviour for words ſpoke againſt mayors, &c. but he may not be indicted for it: and if juſtices of a corporation deny to do right, it is a forfeiture of their exemption from the inquiry of the juſtices of the county. Mod. Caſ. 125, 164. Head officers of corporations are to redreſs abuſes of merchant-ſtrangers, &c. or the franchiſe ſhall be ſeized, Stat. 9 Eliz. c. 3. ſect. 1; and have authority in many caſes by ſtatute; for which ſee title Mayors.

No ſtrangers ſhall ſell by retail any woollen or linen cloth, or mercery wares, in corporate towns, except at fairs, fairs, on pain of forfeiture, &c. But such persons may sell wares by wholesale, and cloth of their own making by retail. 1 & 2 P. & M. cap. 7. Bodies politic ecclesiastical may make leases for three lives, or twenty-one years, under the restrictions in the acts 1 Eliz. c. 19: 13 Eliz. c. 20.—See title Leases. If land is given in fee to a dean and chapter, or to a mayor and commonalty, &c. and after, such body politic or incorporate is dissolved, the donor shall have the land again, and not the lord by escheat. Co. Lit. 31.

The Corporation of the city of London is to answer for all particular misdemeanors, which are committed in any of the courts of justice within the city; and for all other general misdemeanors committed within the city; so it is conceived of all other corporations. 1 Lil. Abr. 329. If a common officer of a town doth any thing for their common use, it is reasonable the corporate town should be answerable for it. 1 Leon. 215.

III. A CORPORATION is properly an investing the people of the place with the local government thereof, and therefore their laws shall be binding to strangers; but a Fraternity is some people of a place united together in respect of a mystery and business into a company, and their laws and ordinances cannot bind strangers, for they have not a local power. Salk. 193.

No masters and wardens, &c. of any mystery, or other corporation, shall make any by-laws or ordinances in diminution of the King's prerogative, or against the common profit of the people; except the same be approved by the Lord Chancellor, or Chief Justices, &c. on pain of 40*l.* And such bodies corporate shall not make any acts or ordinances for the restraining persons to sue in the King's courts for remedy, &c. under the like penalty. Stat. 19 Hen. 7. cap. 7. Ordinances made by corporations, to be observed on pain of imprisonment, or of forfeiture of goods, &c. are contrary to Magna Charta. 2 Inst. 47, 54.

But penalties may be inflicted by by-laws, which may be recovered by distress or action of debt: and a custom for the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, to commit a citizen for not accepting of the livery, &c. was held a good custom, being for the good government of the city. 5 Mod. 320.

Corporations may not, by bond, or otherwise, restrain any apprentice, &c. from keeping shop in the corporation, under the penalty of 40*l.* Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 5.—See title By-Laws.

In acts done by corporations, the consent of the major part shall be binding. Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 27.

This act clearly vacates all private statutes, both prior, and subsequent to its date, which require the concurrence of more than a majority to give validity to any grant or election. Blackstone, (1 Comm. 478,) is of opinion, that it has not affected the negative given by the statutes to the Head of any society; but it seems that this opinion may be questioned; especially in cases where, in the first instance, he gives his vote with the members of the society. It is the usual language of college statutes to direct that many acts shall be done by guardianus & major pars sociorum, or magister, or præpositus et major pars; and it has been determined by the Court of King's Bench, (Cowp. 377) and by the visitor of Clare-Hall, Cambridge, and also by the visitors of Dublin college, that this expression does not confer upon the warden, master, or provost, any negative; but that his vote must be counted with the rest, and he is concluded by a majority of votes against him.

IV. CORPORATIONS being composed of individuals, subject to human frailties, are liable, as well as private persons, to deviate from the end of their institution. And for that reason the law has provided proper persons to visit, inquire into, and correct all irregularities that arise in such corporations, either sole, or aggregate, and whether ecclesiastical, civil, or eleemosynary. With regard to all ecclesiastical corporations, the Ordinary is their visitor, so constituted by the cannon law, and from thence derived to us. The Pope formerly, and now the King, as supreme Ordinary, is the visitor of the archbishop or metropolitan; the metropolitan has the charge and coercion of all his suffragan bishops; and the bishops in their several dioceses, are in ecclesiastical matters the visitors of all deans and chapters, of all parsons and vicars, and of all other spiritual corporations. With respect to all lay corporations, the founder, his heirs, or assigns, are the visitors, whether the foundation be civil or eleemosynary; for in a lay incorporation, the Ordinary neither can nor ought to visit. 10 Rep. 31.

The founder of all corporations in the strictest and original sense is, the King alone, for he only can incorporate a society; and in civil incorporations, such as mayor and commonalty, &c. where there are no possessions or endowments given to the body, there is no other founder but the king: but in eleemosynary foundations, such as colleges and hospitals, where there is an endowment of lands, the law distinguishes and makes two species of foundation; the one fundatio incipiens, or the incorporation, in which sense the King is the general founder of all colleges and hospitals; the other fundatio perficiens, or the dotation of it, in which sense the first gift of the revenues is the foundation, and he who gives them is in law the founder: and it is in this last sense that we generally call a man the founder of a college or hospital. 10 Rep. 33. But here the King has his prerogative; for, if the King and a private man join in endowing an eleemosynary foundation, the King alone shall be the founder of it. And, in general the King being the sole founder of all civil corporations, and the endower the perficient founder of all eleemosynary ones, the right of visitation of the former, results, according to the rule laid down, to the King; and of the latter to the Patron or endower.

The King being thus constituted by law visitor of all civil corporations, the law has also appointed the place, wherein he shall exercise this jurisdiction: which is the Court of King's Bench; where, and where only, all misbehaviours of this kind of corporations are inquired into and redressed, and all their controversies decided. However though the Court of King's Bench, upon a proper complaint and application, can prevent and punish injustice in civil corporations, as in every other part of their jurisdiction; it is not the language of the profession, to call that part of their authority a visitatorial power. 1 Comm. 481. n.

As to eleemosynary corporations, by the dotation, the founder and his heirs are of common right the legal visitors; but, if the founder has appointed and assigned any other person to be visitor, then his assignee so appointed is invested with all the founder's power, in exclusion of his heir. Eleemoſynary corporations are chiefly hoſpitals, or colleges in the Univerſities; theſe were all of them conſidered, by the popiſh clergy, as of mere eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction: however, the law of the land judged otherwiſe; and, with regard to hoſpitals, it has long been held, (Y. B. 8 Ed. 3. 28: 8 Aſſ. 29;) that if the hoſpital be ſpiritual, the biſhop ſhall viſit; but if lay, the patron. This right of lay patrons was indeed abridged by Stat. 2 Hen. 5. c. 1; which ordained, that the Ordinary ſhould viſit all hoſpitals founded by Subjects; though the King's right was reſerved, to viſit by his commiſſioners ſuch as were of royal foundation. But the Subject's right was in part reſtored by Stat. 14 Eliz. c. 5; which directs the biſhop to viſit ſuch hoſpitals only, where no viſitor is appointed by the founder thereof: and all hoſpitals founded by virtue of the Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5, are to be viſited by ſuch perſons as ſhall be nominated by the reſpective founders. But ſtill, if the founder appoints nobody, the biſhop of the dioceſe muſt viſit. 2 Inſt. 275.

Colleges in the Univerſities, (whatever the common law may now, or might formerly judge) were certainly conſidered by the popiſh clergy. under whoſe direction they were, as eccleſiaſtical, or at leaſt as clerical corporations; and therefore the right of viſitation was claimed by the Ordinary of the dioceſe. This is evident, becauſe in many of our moſt antient colleges, where the founder had a mind to ſubject them to a viſitor of his own nomination, he obtained for that purpoſe a papal bull, to exempt them from the juriſdiction of the Ordinary; ſeveral of which are ſtill preſerved in the archives of the reſpective ſocieties. And in ſome of our colleges, where no ſpecial viſitor is appointed, the biſhop of that dioceſe, in which Oxford was formerly compriſed, has immemorially exerciſed viſitatorial authority; (that is, the Biſhop of Lincoln, from whoſe dioceſe that of Oxford was taken;) which can be aſcribed to nothing elſe, but his ſuppoſed title as Ordinary to viſit this, among other eccleſiaſtical foundations.

But, whatever might be formerly the opinion of the Clergy, it is now held as eſtabliſhed Common law, that colleges are lay corporations, though ſometimes totally compoſed of eccleſiaſtical perſons; and that the right of viſitation does not ariſe from any principles of the canon law, but of neceſſity was created by the common law. Ld. Raym. 8. And yet the power and juriſdiction of viſitors in colleges was left ſo much in the dark at common law, that the whole doctrine was very unſettled till the famous caſe of Philips v. Bury: (Ld. Raym. 5: 4 Mod. 106:) In this the main queſtion was, whether the ſentence of the Biſhop of Exeter, who, (as viſitor) had deprived Doctor Bury, the Rector of Exeter college, could be examined and redreſſed by the Court of King's Bench. And the three puiſne judges were of opinion, that it might be reviewed, for that the viſitor's juriſdiction could not exclude the common law; and accordingly judgment was given in that court. But Lord Chief Juſtice Holt was of a contrary opinion; and held, that by the common law, the office of viſitor is to judge according to the ſtatutes of the college, and to expel and deprive upon juſt occaſions, and to hear all appeals of courſe: and that from him, and him only, the party grieved ought to have redreſs: the Founder having repoſed in him ſo entire a confidence, that he will adminiſter juſtice impartially, that his determinations are final, and examinable in no other court whatever. And, upon this, a writ of error being brought into the Houſe of Lords, they concurred in Sir John Holt's opinion, and reverſed the judgment of the Court of King's Bench. To which leading caſe all ſubſequent determinations have been conformable. But, where the viſitor is under a temporary diſability, there the Court of King's Bench will interpoſe, to prevent a defect of juſtice. Sera. 797. Alſo it is ſaid, (2 Lutw. 1566,) that if a founder of an eleemoſynary foundation appoints a viſitor, and limits his juriſdiction by rules and ſtatutes, if the viſitor in his ſentence exceeds thoſe rules, an action lies againſt him; but it is otherwiſe, where he miſtakes in a thing within his power.

No particular form of words is neceſſary for the appointment of a viſitor. Sit viſitator, or viſitationem commendamus, will create a general viſitor, and confer all the authority incidental to the office; (1 Burr. 199;) but this general power may be reſtrained and qualified, or the viſitor may be directed by the ſtatutes to do particular acts, in which inſtance he has no diſcretion as viſitor; as where the ſtatutes direct the viſitor to appoint one of two perſons, nominated by the fellows, to be the Maſter of a college, the Court of King's Bench will examine the nomination of the fellows, and if correct, will compel the viſitor to appoint one of the two. 2 Term Rep. 290. New ingrafted fellowſhips, if no ſtatutes are given by the founders of them, muſt follow the original foundation, and are ſubject to the ſame diſcipline and judicature. 1 Burr. 203. It is the duty of the viſitor, in every inſtance, to effectuate the intention of the founder, as far as he can collect it from the ſtatutes, and the nature of the inſtitution; and in the exerciſe of this juriſdiction, he is free from all control. Lord Mansfield has declared, that the viſitatorial power, if properly exerciſed, without expence or delay, is uſeful and convenient to colleges; and it is now ſettled and eſtabliſhed, that the juriſdiction of a viſitor is ſummary, and without appeal from it. 1 Burr. 200.—See 1 Comm. 479, &c.

V. A CORPORATION may be diſſolved, for it is created upon a truſt; and if that be broken it is forfeited. 4 Mod. 58.

Corporations are diſſolved by forfeiture of their charter, miſuſer, &c. upon the writ quo warranto brought; by ſurrender, or by act of parliament; and if they neglect to chooſe officers, or make falſe elections, &c. it is a forfeiture of the corporation. 4 Rep. 77.

Corporations may be diſſolved in ſeveral ways, which, diſſolution is the civil death of the corporation; and in this caſe their lands and tenements ſhall revert to the perſon, or his heirs, who granted them to the corporation; for the law doth annex a condition to every ſuch grant, that if the corporation be diſſolved, the grantor ſhall have the lands again, becauſe the cauſe of the grant faileth. Co. Lit. 13. The grant is indeed only during the life of the corporation; which may endure for ever: but, when that life is determined by the diſſolution of the body politic, the grantor takes it back by reverſion, as in the caſe of every other grant for life. The debts of a corporation, either to or from it, are totally extinguiſhed by it's diſſolution; ſo that the members thereof cannot recover, or be charged with them, in their natural capacities. 1 Lev. 237.

A Corporation

A Corporation may be diſſolved, 1. By act of parliament; which is boundleſs in its operations. 2. By the natural death of all it's members, in caſe of an aggregate corporation. 3. By ſurrender of its franchiſes into the hands of the king, which is a kind of ſuicide. 4. By forfeiture of it's charter, through negligence or abuſe of its franchiſe: in which caſe the law judges that the body politic has broken the condition upon which it was incorporated, and therefore the incorporation is void. And the regular courſe is to bring an information in nature of a writ of quo warranto, to inquire by what warrant the members now exerciſe their corporative power, having forfeited it by ſuch and ſuch proceedings: The exertion of this act of law, for the purpoſes of the State, in the reign of King Charles and King James the Second, particularly by ſeizing the charter of the City of London, gave great and juſt offence, though perhaps, in ſtrictneſs of law, the proceedings in moſt of them were ſufficiently regular: but the judgment againſt that of London was reverſed by act of parliament. Stat. 2 W. & M. c. 8, after the Revolution; and by the ſame Stat. it is enacted, that the franchiſes of the City of London ſhall never more be forfeited for any cauſe whatſoever. And, becauſe by the Common law corporations were diſſolved, in caſe the mayor or head officer was not duly elected on the day appointed in the charter, or eſtabliſhed by preſcription, it is now provided by Stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 4, that no corporation ſhall be diſſolved, for any default to chooſe a mayor, &c. but the electors are ſtill to proceed to election; and if no election be made, the court of King's Bench ſhall iſſue a mandamus requiring the electors to chooſe ſuch mayor, &c.

By Stat. 2 Ann. c. 20. Where perſons intrude into the office of mayor, &c. of a corporation, a quo warranto ſhall be brought againſt the uſurpers, who ſhall be ouſted, and fined: and none are to execute an office in a corporation for more than a year. See further on this ſubject Kyd's Treatiſe on the Law of Corporations;—and ſee alſo particularly this Dict. titles Mortmain; Mandamus; Quo warranto.

To prevent improper conduct in trading corporations in elections, and in diſpoſing of the joint-ſtock, it is by Stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 48, enacted, that no member of ſuch corporations ſhall be admitted to vote in the general courts, until he ſhall have been ſix months in poſſeſſion of the ſtock neceſſary to qualify him: unleſs it comes to him by bequeſt, marriage, ſucceſſion or ſettlement.—And by the ſame ſtatute, only one half yearly dividend is to be made by one general court, five months at leaſt from the preceding declaration of a dividend; and queſtions for increaſing the dividend are to be decided by ballot. See title Eaſt India Company.

To facilitate the proceedings in caſes of mandamus and quo warranto, and to prevent any undue advantage on either ſide, the Stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 21, provides that where any perſon ſhall be entitled to be admitted a freeman, &c. of any corporation, &c. and ſhall apply to the proper officer to be admitted, and ſhall give notice of his intention to move the court of King's Bench for a mandamus in caſe of refuſal, the officer ſhall pay all the coſts of the application.—And the ſame ſtatute enacts, that the proper officer ſhall, on the demand of two freemen, permit them and their agents to inſpect the entries of admiſſion of freemen, and to take copies and extracts; under penalty of 100*l.*

CORPOREAL INHERITANCE, In houſes, lands, &c. See title Inheritance.

CORPSE, ſtealing of. If any one in taking up a dead body ſteals the ſhroud, or other apparel, it will be felony, 3 Inſt. 110: 12 Rep. 113: 1 Hal. P. C. 515. But ſtealing the corpſe itſelf, only, is not felony, but it is puniſhable as a miſdemeanor by indictment at Common law. 2 Comm. 236.

CORPUS CHRISTI DAY. A feaſt inſtituted in the year 1264, in honour of the bleſſed ſacrament: to which alſo a college in Oxford is dedicated. It is mentioned in the Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 21.

CORPUS CUM CAUSA. A writ iſſuing out of the Chancery, to remove both the body and record, touching the cauſe of any man lying in execution upon a judgment for debt, into the King's Bench, &c. there to lie till he have ſatisfied the judgment. F. N. B. 251. See title Habeas Corpus.

CORRECTOR OF THE STAPLE. A clerk belonging to the ſtaple, to write and record the bargains of merchants there made. See Stat. 27 Ed. 3. ſtat. 2. cc. 22, 23.

CORREDIUM; CONREDIUM; The ſame with corrodium. See Corody.

CORRUPTION OF BLOOD, corruptio ſanguinis.] An infection growing to the ſtate of a man, and to his iſſue; and is where a perſon is attainted of treaſon or felony, by means whereof his blood is ſaid to be corrupted, and neither his children, nor any of his blood, can be heirs to him or any other anceſtor: alſo if he is of the nobility, or a gentleman, he and all his poſterity by the attainder are rendered baſe and ignoble: but by pardon of the King, the children born afterwards may inherit the land of their anceſtor, purchaſed at the time of the pardon or after; but ſo cannot they, who were born before the pardon. Terms de Ley.

If a man that hath land in right of his wife hath iſſue, and his blood is corrupt by attainder of felony, and the King pardons him; in this caſe, if the wife dies before him, he ſhall not be tenant by the curteſy, for the corruption of the blood of that iſſue: though it is otherwiſe, if he hath iſſue after the pardon; for then he ſhould be tenant by the curteſy, although the iſſue which he had before the pardon be not inheritable. 13 H. 7. 17.

A ſon attainted of treaſon or felony in the life of his anceſtor, obtains the King's pardon before the death of his anceſtor, he ſhall not be heir to the ſaid anceſtor, but the land ſhall rather eſcheat to the lord of the fee by the corruption of blood. 26 Aſſ. pl. 32 H. 8.

If the father of a perſon attainted die ſeiſed of an eſtate of inheritance, during his life, no younger brother can be heir; for the elder brother, though attainted, is ſtill a brother, and no other can be heir to his father, while he is alive; but if he die before the father, the younger brother ſhall be heir. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 49. § 49. See further Co. Lit. 8, 391: Dyer 48: 3 Inſt. 211.

Corruption of blood from an attainder is ſo high that it cannot be abſolutely ſalved but by act of parliament; for the King's pardon doth not reſtore the blood ſo as to make the perſon attainted capable either of inheriting others, or being inherited himſelf by any one born before the pardon. 1 Inſt. 391, 392: 2 Hawk. ——. A ſtatute which ſaves the corruption of blood, impliedly ſaves the deſcent of the land to the heir; and it prevents the corruption of blood so far: also it saves the wife's dower, &c. But nevertheless the land shall be forfeited for the life of the offender. 3 Inst. 47: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 41. § 5.—See further titles Attainder; Forfeiture; Escheat; Tenure, &c.

CORSELET, Fr. in Lat. Corpusculum.] A little body: The name of an ancient armour used to cover the body or trunk of a man, wherewith pikemen commonly set in the front and flanks of the battle were formerly armed, for the better resistance of the assaults of the enemy, and the surer guard of the soldiers placed behind; who were more slightly armed for their speedier advancing to and retreating from the attack. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2.

CORSEPRESENT, From the Fr. corps present.] A mortuary: and the reason why it was thus termed seems to be, that where a mortuary became due on the death of any man, the best or second-best beast was, according to custom, offered or presented to the priest, and carried with the corps. See Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 6. and this Dict. title Mortuary.

CORSNED BREAD, panis conjuratus.] Ordeal bread: it was a kind of superstitious trial used among the Saxons, to purge themselves of any accusation, by taking a piece of barley bread, and eating it with solemn oaths and execrations, that it might prove poison, or their last morsel, if what they asserted or denied were not punctually true. These pieces of bread were first execrated by the priest, and then offered to the suspected person to be swallowed by way of purgation: for they believed a person, if guilty, could not swallow a morsel so accursed; or if he did, it would choak him.

The form was thus: We beseech thee, O Lord, that he who is guilty of this theft, when the exorcised bread is offered to him in order to discover the truth, that his jaws may be shut, his throat so narrow that he may not swallow, and that he may cast it out of his mouth, and not eat it. Du Cange. The old form, or exorcismus panis hordeacei vel casei ad probationem veri, is extant in Lindenbrogius, pag. 107. And in the laws of King Canute cap. 6.—Si quis altari ministrantium accusetur, & amicis destitutus sit, cum sacramentales non habeat, vadat ad judicium, quod Anglicè dicitur corsned & fiat sicut Deus velit, nisi super sanctum corpus Domini permittatur ut se purget: from which it is conjectured, that corsned bread was originally the very sacramental bread, consecrated and devoted by the priest, and received with solemn adjuration and devout expectance that it would prove mortal to those who dared to swallow it with a lie in their mouths; till at length the bishops and clergy were afraid to prostitute the communion bread to such rash and conceited uses; when to indulge the people in their superstitious fancies, and idle customs, they allowed them to practise the same judicial rite, in eating some other morsels of bread, blest or cust to the like uses.

It is recorded of the perfidious Godwin, Earl of Kent, in the time of King Edward the Confessor, that on his abjuring the murder of the King's brother, by this way of trial, as a just judgment of his solemn perjury, the bread stuck in his throat, and choaked him. Ingulph. This with other barbarous ways of purgation, was by degrees abolished: though we have still some remembrance of this superstitious custom in our usual phrases of abjuration; as, I will take the sacrament upon it;—May this bread be my poison;—or, May this bit be my last, &c. COSTS.

EXPENSÆ LITIS.] In the prosecution and defence of actions, the parties are necessarily put to certain expences, or as they are commonly called Costs; consisting of money paid to the King and Government for fines and stamp duties; to the officers of the court; and to the counsel and attornies for their fees, &c.

These costs may be considered either as between attorney and client; being what are payable in every case to the attorney, by his client, whether he ultimately succeed or not; or as between party and party, being those only which are allowed, in some particular cases, to the party succeeding against his adversary. As between party and party, they are interlocutory or final; the former are given on various interlocutory motions and proceedings in the course of the suit.—the latter, (to which the term of costs is most generally applied, and the rules respecting which are of the most consequence) are not allowed till the conclusion of the suit.

The following abstract of the law relating hereto, is taken principally from Tidd's Law of Costs; a short and comprehensive abridgement; to which, and the various other productions on the subject, the practitioner must necessarily have frequent recourse in nice and particular cases.

It will be sufficient for the present purpose, to arrange the information on this subject in the following manner.

I. In

COSTS I.

I. In what Caſes Coſts are given to the Plaintiff.
II. In what, to the Defendant.
III. Of double and treble Coſts.
IV. Of taxing and recovering Coſts.

I. No coſts were recoverable by the plaintiff or defendant at Common law. 2 Inſt. 288: Hardr. 152. But by the Stat. of Glouceſter, (6 Edw. 1.) c. 1. § 2, it is provided, "that the demandant may recover againſt the tenant the coſts of his writ purchaſed; (which, by a liberal interpretation, has been conſtrued to extend to the whole coſts of his ſuit, 2 Inſt. 288;), together with the damages given by that ſtatute and that this act ſhall hold place, in all caſes where a man recovers damages." This was the origin of coſts de incremento. Gilb. Eq. Rep. 195. And hence the plaintiff has, generally ſpeaking, a right to coſts, in all caſes where he was entitled to damages, antecedent to, or by the proviſions of the Stat. of Glouceſter; (10 Co. 116 a;) as in aſſumpſit, covenant, debt on contract, caſe, treſpaſs, replevin, ejectment, &c.; or where, by a ſubſequent ſtatute, double or treble damages are given, in a caſe where ſingle damages were before recoverable; (10 Co. 116 a: 2 Inſt. 289: Cowp. 368;) as upon Stat. 2 Hen. 4. c. 11, for ſuing in the Admiralty Court; (10 Co. 116 a, b: Dyer 159 b: Carth. 297;) upon Stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 9. for a forcible entry; (10 Co. 115 b: Co. Lit. 257 b: 2 Inſt. 289: Cro. El. 582;) or upon Stat. 2 & 3 W. & M. ſeſſ. 1. c. 5, for reſcuing a diſtreſs for rent. (Carth. 321: 1 Salk. 205: 1 Ld. Raym. 19: Skin. 555: Holt 172. S. C.) And he hath alſo a right to coſts, in all caſes where a certain penalty is given by ſtatute to the party grieved; (Cro. Car. 560: 1 Rol. Abr. 574: Skin. 363: Carth. 230: 1 Salk. 206: 1 Ld. Raym. 172: Say. Coſts 11: H. Black. 10;) for otherwiſe the remedy might prove inadequate.

But the Stat. of Glouceſter did not extend to caſes where no damages were recoverable at Common law, as in ſcire facias, prohibition, (Comb. 20,) &c.; nor where double or treble damages were given by a ſubſequent ſtatute, in a new caſe where ſingle damages were not before recoverable; as in waſte againſt tenant for life or years; (2 Hen. 4. 17: 9 Hen. 6. 66 b: 10 Co. 116 b: 2 Inſt. 289;) upon the Stat. of Glouceſter, (6 Edw. 1. c. 5,);—for not ſetting out tithes; (Moor 915: Noy 136: Hardr. 152;) upon Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13;—or for driving a diſtreſs out of the hundred, (2 Inſt. 289: Dyer 177: But ſee Cro. Car. 560: 1 Roll. Abr. 574,) upon Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12.—Nor does this ſtatute extend to popular actions, where the whole or part of a penalty is given by ſtatute to a common informer; (1 Roll. Abr. 574: 1 Vent. 133: Carth. 231: 1 Salk. 206: 1 Ld. Raym. 172: Caſ. Pr. C. B. 87: Barnes 124. S. C: Cowp. 366: 1 H. Black. 10: Bull. N. P. 333;) as upon Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. § 31, for exerciſing a trade, without having ſerved an apprenticeſhip; or upon the Stat. of Uſury, 12 Ann. ſtat. 2. c. 16. In theſe and ſuch like caſes, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to coſts, unleſs they are expreſsly given him by the ſtatute; but wherever they are ſo given, he is of courſe entitled to them.

Where ſingle damages are given by a ſtatute, ſubſequent to the Stat. of Glouceſter, in a new caſe wherein no damages were previouſly recoverable, it has been doubted whether the plaintiff ſhall recover coſts, if they are not mentioned in the ſtatute. The rule in Pilfold's caſe is, that he ſhall not; (10 Co. 116 a;) and accordingly it is holden, that he is not entitled to coſts in quare impedit; (2 Hen. 4. 17: 27 Hen. 6. 10: 10 Co. 116 a: 2 Inſt. 289, 362: Barnes 140: And ſee Cro. Car. 360: Carth. 231: Cowp. 367, 8;) wherein damages are given by the Stat. of Weſtm. 2. (13 Edw. 1.) c. 5. § 3. But the rule in Pilfold's caſe is contradicted by Lord Coke himſelf, (2 Inſt. 289,) who ſays, that "this clauſe (reſpecting the St. of Glouceſter's holding place, in all caſes where a man recovers damages,) doth extend to give coſts, where damages are given to any demandant or plaintiff in any action by any ſtatute made after this parliament." And the rule has been ſince narrowed, by ſeveral modern deciſions; from whence it may be collected, that the plaintiff is entitled to coſts, in all caſes where ſingle damages are given by ſtatute to the party grieved, although coſts are not particularly mentioned in the ſtatute. 2 Wilſ. 91: Barnes 151. S. C: 3 Bur. 1723: 1 Term Rep. 71: But ſee the opinion of Aſton, Juſt. cont. Cowp. 367, 8.

In ſeveral of the foregoing caſes, wherein coſts were not recoverable by the plaintiff at Common law, they are expreſsly given him by Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, by which it is enacted, that "in all actions of waſte, and actions of debt upon the ſtatute for not ſetting forth tithes, wherein the ſingle value or damage found by the jury ſhall not exceed the ſum of twenty nobles; and in all ſuits upon any writ or writs of ſcire facias, and ſuits upon prohibitions, the plaintiff obtaining judgment, or any award of execution, after plea pleaded or demurrer joined therein, ſhall likewiſe recover his coſts of ſuit; and if the plaintiff ſhall become nonſuit, or ſuffer a diſcontinuance, or a verdict ſhall paſs againſt him, the defendant ſhall recover his coſts, and have execution for the ſame by capias ad ſatisfaciendum, fieri facias, or elegit."

The plaintiff's general right to Coſts being thus ſettled and eſtabliſhed, upon the footing of the Stat. of Glouceſter, has been ſince altered, reſtrained and modified by ſeveral ſubſequent ſtatutes.

To prevent trifling and malicious actions for words, for aſſault and battery, and for treſpaſs, it is enacted by Stats. 43 Eliz. c. 6: 21 Jac. 1. c. 16: 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 9. § 136, that where the jury who try any of theſe actions ſhall give leſs damages than 40*s.* the plaintiff ſhall be allowed no more Coſts than damages: unleſs the judge before whom the cauſe is tried ſhall certify under his hand, on the back of the record, that an actual battery (and not an aſſault only) was proved; or that in treſpaſs the freehold or title of the land came chiefly in queſtion. Alſo by Stats. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23: 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, if the treſpaſs were committed in hunting or ſporting, by an inferior tradeſman, or if it appear to be wilfully and maliciouſly committed, the plaintiff ſhall have full Coſts; though his damages, as aſſeſſed by the jury, amount to leſs than 40*s.*

The Legiſlature has alſo been obliged to interfere ſtill further, to guard againſt trifling and vexatious actions, by means of what are commonly called the Court-of-Conſcience Acts: Such are Stats. 3 Jac. 1. c. 15. § 4: 14 G. 2. c. 10; which provide that if an action be brought for leſs than 40*s.* againſt a defendant living in London, and liable to the juriſdiction of the Court of Requeſts there, the plaintiff ſhall not recover any Coſts, but ſhall pay them to the defendant.

Several other acts of parliament have been also made, eſtabliſhing Courts of Conſcience in various diſtricts, in and about the metropolis; as in the town and borough of Southwark, &c. by Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 47.; in the city and liberty of Weſtminſter, and part of the Duchy of Lancaſter, by Stat. 23 G. 2. c. 27, (explained and amended by Stat. 24 Geo. 2. 42,); and in the Tower-hamlets, by Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 30. And by Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 33, the county-court of Middleſex was put on a different footing, for the more eaſy and ſpeedy recovery of ſmall debts. See titles County-Courts, Courts of Conſcience.

In general where the act is not pleaded, the proper mode to obtain the Coſts, is for the defendant to apply to the court, by affidavit, for leave to enter a ſuggeſtion on the roll, of the facts neceſſary to entitle him to the benefit of the act ſuited to his caſe; which ſuggeſtion may be traverſed or demurred to.

Theſe ſtatutes might perhaps have been with equal propriety claſſed under the 2d diviſion of this title; but are introduced here, as forming an exception to the general title of a plaintiff to Coſts in the caſes already inſtanced.

The principal ſtatute, made for reſtraining the plaintiff's right to coſts, is Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 9, (extended to Wales, and the Counties Palatine, by Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 9); by which it is enacted, that "in all actions of treſpaſs, aſſault and battery, and other perſonal actions, wherein the judge, at the trial of the cauſe, ſhall not find and certify under his hand, upon the back of the record, that an aſſault and battery was ſufficiently proved by the plaintiff againſt the defendant, or that the freehold or title of the land mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration was chiefly in queſtion; the plaintiff, in caſe the jury ſhall find the damages to be under the value of forty ſhillings, ſhall not recover or obtain more coſts of ſuit, than the damages ſo found ſhall amount unto." It ſeems to have been the intention of this ſtatute, that the plaintiff ſhall have no more coſts than damages, in any perſonal action whatſoever, if the damages be under forty ſhillings, except in caſes of battery or freehold; and not even in theſe, without a certificate. And this conſtruction was adopted, in ſome of the firſt caſes that aroſe upon the ſtatute. 3 Keb. 121, 247. But a different conſtruction ſoon prevailed; and it is now ſettled, that the ſtatute is confined to actions of aſſault and battery; and actions for local treſpaſſes, wherein it is poſſible for the judge to certify, that the freehold or title of the land was chiefly in queſtion. T. Raym. 487: T. Jon. 232: 2 Show. 258. S. C.: 3 Mod. 39: 1 Salk. 208: 1 Str. 577: Gilb. Eq. Rep. 195: Barnes 134: 3 Wilſ. 322, S. C. 1 H. Black. 294. Therefore it does not extend to actions of debt, covenant, aſſumpſit, trover, (3 Keb. 31: 1 Salk. 208,) or the like; or to actions for a mere aſſault; (3 T. R. 391;) or for criminal converſation; (3 Wilſ. 319;) or battery of the plaintiff's ſervant, (3 Keb. 184: 1 Salk. 208: 1 Stra. 192,) per quod conſortium vel ſervitium amiſit.—In all theſe caſes, though the damages be under 40*s.* the plaintiff is entitled to full coſts without a certificate.

The certificate required by this ſtatute need not, it ſeems, be granted at the trial of the cauſe. 11 Mod. 198. And where the defendant lets judgment go by default, (Bull. N. P. 329,) or juſtifies the aſſault and battery, or pleads in ſuch a manner, as to bring the freehold or title of the land in queſtion, on the face of the record, or a view is granted, (1 Ld. Raym. 76: 2 Salk. 665,) a certificate is holden to be unneceſſary; but it is neceſſary, where, to a plea of a right of way, there is a replication of extra viam. Cochran v. Harriſon, T. 22 Geo. 3. But where, in an action for an aſſault and battery, the defendant juſtifies the aſſault only, (3 T. R. 391,) or an aſſault only is certified by the judge, (2 Lev. 102,) the plaintiff, recovering leſs than forty ſhillings, is not entitled to more coſts than damages; though, in the latter caſe, to entitle him to full coſts, the judge may certify, on Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, that the aſſault was wilful and malicious. 3 Wilſ. 326.

None of the ſtatutes, made for reſtraining the plaintiff's right to coſts, extend to actions brought in an inferior court, and removed by the defendant into a ſuperior one: (2 Lev. 124: 4 Mod. 378, 9: 1 Ld. Raym. 395:) and it has been holden, that Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, and Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 9, only reſtrain the Court from awarding more coſts than damages; but the jury, not being reſtrained thereby, may give what coſts they pleaſe.

It often happens that there are ſeveral counts or pleas, the iſſues upon which are ſome of them found for the plaintiff, and ſome for the defendant. In this caſe, in the court of C. P. where the declaration conſiſts of ſeveral counts, and the plaintiff ſucceeds upon any one of them, he is entitled to the coſts of the whole declaration, though the defendant ſucceed upon the other counts. Bull. N. P. 335: 2 Black. Rep. 800, 1199. But it is otherwiſe in the court of K. B. for there neither party is allowed coſts as to thoſe counts the iſſues upon which are found for the defendant. Say. Coſts 212: Doug. 8vo. 677. But ſee 1 Wilſ. 331. But if there be two diſtinct cauſes of action, in two ſeparate counts, and as to one the defendant ſuffers judgment to go by default, and as to the other takes iſſue, and obtains a verdict, he is entitled to judgment for his coſts on the latter count, notwithſtanding the plaintiff is entitled to judgment and coſts on the firſt count. 3 Term Rep. 654.

As to the certificate on the Stat. 4 An. c. 16, allowing double pleas, (See title Pleading,) and coſts thereon, where the judge refuſes to grant the certificate, the Court have not a diſcretionary power, whether they will allow the defendant any coſts at all; but are bound by the ſtatute to allow him ſome coſts, though the quantum is left to their diſcretion. Barnes 140: 2 Term. Rep. 394, 5. The intention of the legiſlature was, that if there be ſeveral matters pleaded, ſome of which are found for the plaintiff, he ſhall be entitled to the coſts of thoſe, notwithſtanding other matters are found for the defendant, which entitle him to judgment upon the whole record; unleſs the judge, before whom the cauſe was tried, ſhall certify, that the defendant had a probable cauſe to plead the matters which are found againſt him.

II. It has already been obſerved, that no coſts were recoverable by a defendant at common law: and the reaſon ſeems to be, that if the plaintiff failed in his ſuit, he was amerced to the King pro falſo clamore, which was thought to be a ſufficient puniſhment, without ſubjecting him to the payment of coſts. The firſt inſtance of coſts being given to a defendant, was in a writ of right of ward, by the ſtatute of Marlberge, (52 Hen. 3. c. 6,) Afterwards, coſts were given to the defendant in error, by Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 10; and in replevin, by Stat. 7 Hen. 8. c. 4.

8. c. 4. and Stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 19, &c. But in one of these cases, the defendant is to be considered as an actor; and in the other of them, the provision is virtually for the benefit of the plaintiff in the original action. Say. Costs 70.

In error, brought by the defendant before execution, (Cro. Jac. 636,) or by the plaintiff upon a judgment for the defendant, if the judgment be affirmed, the writ of error discontinued, or the plaintiff in error nonsuited, the defendant in error is entitled to costs, by Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 10. and 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. § 2; upon the former of which statutes it has been holden, that costs are recoverable in error, for the delay of execution, although none were recoverable in the original action. Dyer 77: Cro. Eliz. 617, 659: 5 Co. 101. S. C.: Cro. Car. 145: 1 Str. 262: 2 Str. 1084: but see Cro. Car. 425: 1 Lev. 146: 1 Vent. 38, 166: 4 Mod. 245: Carth. 261. S. C. semb. contra. By Stat. 13 Car. 2. stat. 2. c. 2. § 10, if the judgment be affirmed after verdict, the plaintiff shall pay to the defendant in error, his double costs. And by Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. § 25, for preventing vexation, from suing out defective writs of error, it is enacted, that "upon the quashing of any writ of error, for variance from the original record, or other defect, the defendant shall recover against the plaintiff in error his costs, as he should have had, if the judgment had been affirmed, and to be recovered in the same manner:" 2 Str. 834: Cas. temp. Hardw. 137. But none of the statutes before mentioned give costs, upon the reversal of a judgment. (1 Stra. 617.)

In replevin, or second deliverance, the defendant, making avowry, cognizance, or justification, for rents, customs, or services, or for damage feasant, is entitled to costs, by Stat. 7 Hen. 8. c. 4, and Stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 19. § 3; if the avowry, cognizance, or justification be found for him, or the plaintiff be nonsuit, or otherwise barred: which statutes extend to avowries, &c. made by an executor; (2 R. Rep. 437;) or for an estray; (Cro. Eliz. 330;) and, as it should seem, for an amercement by a court leet; (Cro. Jac. 520. sed vide Cro. E. 300;) but not to pleas of prisel en auter lieu, upon which the writ is abated, (Com. Rep. 122,) or to pleas of property in the thing distrained. Hard. 153. By Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 7. § 2, the defendant obtaining judgment thereon, for the arrearages of rent, or value of the goods distrained, is also entitled to his full costs of suit. And by Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 22, if the defendant avow, or make cognizance, according to that statute, upon a distress for rent, relief, heriot, or other service, and the plaintiff be nonsuit, discontinue his action, or have judgment against him, the defendant shall recover double costs of suit. But this latter statute does not extend to a seizure for a heriot-custom.

At length, costs were given to defendants by Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 15. § 1. "in trespass upon Stat. 5 Rich. 2. debt, covenant, detinue, account, trespass, on the case, or upon any statute for an offence or wrong personal, immediately supposed to be done to the plaintiff," in cases of nonsuit, or verdict for the defendant.

The King, and any person suing to his use, (Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 8,) shall neither pay nor receive costs; for besides that he is not included under the general words of the statutes, as it is his prerogative not to pay them to a subject, so it is beneath his dignity to receive them. And it seems reasonable to suppose that the Queen consort has the same privilege: for in actions brought by her, she was not at the common law obliged to find pledges of prosecution, nor could be amerced in case there was judgment against her. F. N. B. 101: 1 Inst. 133. And on this principle of the King not paying or receiving costs, no costs are due on a certiorari removing summary proceedings; unless a recognizance be entered into at the time of removing the proceedings. 1 Term Rep. 82.

Paupers, (that is such as will swear themselves not worth five pounds,) are by Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 12, to have original writs and subpœnas gratis, and counsel and attorney assigned them without fee; and are excused from paying costs when plaintiffs, by the Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 15. § 2; but shall suffer other punishments at the discretion of the judges. And it was formerly usual on such paupers being nonsuited to give them their election either to be whipped or pay the costs; though that practice is now disused. 1 Sid. 261: 7 Mod. 114: Salk. 506. And in cases of misconduct, or in certain other circumstances they may be dispaupered; that is deprived of their privilege of suing as paupers.—It seems however agreed that a pauper may recover costs, though he pays none: for the counsel and clerks are bound to give their labour to him, but not to his antagonists. 1 Eq. Ab. 125.

Executors and Administrators are not particularly excepted out of Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 16; yet, as that statute only relates to contracts made with, or wrongs done to the plaintiff, (2 Stra. 1107,) it has been uniformly holden, (Cro. Eliz. 503: Cro. Jac. 229: 2 Bulst. 261: 1 Salk. 207, 314: 3 Bur. 1586: Say. Costs 97,) that they are not liable to costs, upon a nonsuit or verdict, where they necessarily sue in their representative character, and cannot bring the action in their own right; as upon a contract entered into with the testator or intestate, (T. Jon. 47: 2 Ld. Raym. 1414: 1 Str. 682. S. C.: Cas. Pr. C. B. 157: Pr. Reg. 118. S. C.: Barnes 141,) or for a wrong done in his life-time. (Barnes 129.) But where the cause of action arises after the death of the testator or intestate, and the plaintiff may sue thereon in his own right, he shall not be excused from the payment of costs, though he bring the action as executor or administrator; as upon a contract, (6 Mod. 91, 181: 1 Salk. 207. S. C.: 1 Ld. Raym. 436: 1 Str. 682: Barnes 119: 2 Str. 1106: 4 T. R. 277,) express or implied; or in trover (Com. Rep. 162: Cas. Pr. C. B. 61: Barnes 132: Cas. temp. Hardw. 204. But see 3 Lev. 60 semb. contra,) for a conversion, after the death of the testator or intestate. An executor or administrator is liable to costs, upon a judgment of non pros: (Cas. Pr. C. B. 14. 157, 8: 3 Bur. 1585:) and where he has knowingly brought a wrong action, or otherwise been guilty of a wilful default, he shall pay costs upon a discontinuance, (Cas. Pr. C. B. 79: 3 Bur. 1451: 1 Blac. Rep. 451. S. C,) or for not proceeding to trial according to notice; (Cas. Pr. C. B. 158: 3 Bur. 1585;) but otherwise he is not liable to costs, in either of these cases. (2 Str. 871: Barnes 133: 4 Burr. 1927.) Nor, where he merely sues en auter droit, is he liable to costs, upon a judgment as in case of a nonsuit. 4 Bur. 1928.

The Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 15, only relates to cases where the plaintiff is nonsuited, or has a verdict against him. But by Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 2, "upon process issuing out of the court of King's Bench, if the plaintiff do not declare in three days after bail put in, or if after declaration he do do not profecute his fuit with effect, but willingly fuffer the fame to be delayed or difcontinued, or he be non-fuited therein, the judges, by their difcretions, fhall award to the defendant his coſts, damages, and charges in that behalf fuſtained."

The plaintiff, it has been obſerved, is not entitled to coſts in a popular action, for the whole or part of a penalty given by ſtatute to a common informer, unleſs they are expreſsly given him by the ſtatute. Nor was the defendant entitled to coſts in ſuch an action, until they were given by the Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 5. § 3, made perpetual by Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 10.

There being ſtill many caſes in which the defendant was not aided by the proviſions of the before-mentioned ſtatutes, the Stat. 4 Jac. 1. c. 3, gives the defendant coſts on a nonſuit or verdict, in all caſes where the plaintiff would have been entitled to them if he had obtained judgment.—The Stats. 13 C. 2. ſt. 2. c. 2. § 3: 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. § 2, give coſts to a defendant alſo in caſes of non proſ. and demurrer: and the latter Stat. § 1. gives coſts to one of ſeveral defendants in treſpaſs, aſſault, falſe impriſonment, or ejectment acquitted; though the other defendants are convicted.

When a feigned iſſue is ordered by a court of law, whether it be in a civil or criminal proceeding, the coſts always follow the verdict, and muſt be paid to the party obtaining it. 1 Lill. P. R. 344: Barnes 130: 1 Wilſ. 261, 331: Say. Rep. 24: 1 Wilſ. 324. But when a feigned iſſue is ordered by a court of Equity, the coſts do not follow the verdict, as a matter of courſe; but the finding of the jury is returned back, to the court which ordered it, and the coſts there are in the diſcretion of the court. Where the iſſue is ordered by a court of law, on a rule for an information, (Say. Rep. 229: 1 Burr. 603,) or motion for an attachment, (Say. Rep. 253,) the coſts of the original rule, or motion, do not in general follow the verdict, but only the coſts of the feigned iſſue; which coſts are to be reckoned, from the time when the feigned iſſue was firſt ordered and agreed to. 1 Burr. 604. Yet, where it was ordered, by the conſent rule, that the coſts ſhould abide the event of the iſſue, the court directed the whole coſts to be paid under it. 2 Burr. 1021.

III. WHERE the plaintiff recovers ſingle damages, he is only entitled to ſingle coſts; unleſs more be expreſsly given him by ſtatute. But if double or treble damages be given by ſtatute, in a caſe wherein ſingle damages were before recoverable, the plaintiff is entitled to double or treble coſts, although the ſtatute be ſilent reſpecting them; (Say. Coſts 228;) as in an action upon Stat. 2 Hen. 4. c. 11, &c. In ſome caſes, double and treble coſts are expreſsly given to the plaintiff; as upon the game laws, by Stat. 2 Geo. 3. c. 19. § 5. And wherever a plaintiff is entitled to double or treble coſts, the coſts given by the court de incremento are to be doubled or trebled, as well as thoſe given by the jury. 2 Leon. 52: Cro. Eliz. 582: 3 Lev. 351: Carth. 297, 321: 2 Str. 1048. but ſee 1 Term Rep. 252. But double or treble coſts are not to be underſtood to mean, according to their literal import, twice or thrice the amount of ſingle coſts. Where a ſtatute gives double coſts, they are calculated thus: 1. The common coſts; and then half the common coſts. If treble coſts, 1. The common coſts; 2. Half of theſe; and then half of the latter.

Double or treble coſts are alſo in ſome caſes expreſsly given to the defendant; as in actions againſt pariſh officers, by Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2. § 19;—againſt juſtices of the peace, conſtables, &c. by Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 5;—for diſtreſſes for rents and ſervices, by Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 21, 2;—and againſt officers of the exciſe or cuſtoms, by Stats. 23 Geo. 3. c. 70. § 34: 24 Geo. 3. ſeſſ. 2. c. 47. § 35. In theſe, and ſuch like caſes, where it does not appear, on the face of the record, that the defendant is entitled to the benefit of the act, (as where he pleads the general iſſue,) and there is no particular mode appointed for recovery of the coſts, the proper mode, after a nonſuit or verdict for the defendant, is to apply to the court, upon an affidavit of the facts, for leave to enter a ſuggeſtion on the roll. 1 Str. 49, 50: Caſ. Pr. C. B. 16: Caſ. temp. Hardw. 125: Id. 138: 2 Str. 1021. S.C.: Say. Rep. 214: 3 Wilſ. 442: Caſ. temp. Hardw. 125. But where a particular mode is appointed by ſtatute, for the recovery of double or treble coſts, as by the certificate of the judge who tried the cauſe, on Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 5. there that particular mode muſt be obſerved: (2 Vent. 45: Doug. 8vo. 307, 8: but ſee Doug. 8vo. 308. n.) ſo that if the judge certify, there is no need of a ſuggeſtion; and if he do not, it is uſeleſs, except where judgment goes by default. Caſ. temp. Hardw. 138, 9.

IV. COSTS are taxed, as between party and party, by the Maſter in the King's Bench, or by one of the Prothonotaries in the Common Pleas, upon a bill made out by the attorney for the party entitled; or frequently, without a bill, upon a view of the proceedings: and if there have been any extra expences, which do not appear on the face of the proceedings, there ſhould be an affidavit made of ſuch expences, to warrant the allowance of them; which is called an affidavit of increaſed coſts. Imp. K. B. 348. It is uſual, among fair practiſers, to give notice to the oppoſite attorney, of the time when the coſts are intended to be taxed; Id. 349. But in order to enforce it, there muſt be a rule to be preſent at taxing coſts: which rule is obtained from the clerk of the rules in the King's Bench, or one of the ſecondaries in the Common Pleas, and ſhould be duly ſerved; after which, if the coſts are taxed without notice, the taxation is irregular, and the attorney liable to an attachment.

The means of recovering Coſts, as between party and party, are by action or execution, upon a judgment obtained for them; or by attachment, upon a rule of court. Thus, in ejectment, where there is a verdict and judgment againſt the tenant, an action may be brought, or execution taken out thereon, for the coſts: Run. Eject. 140, 141. But where the plaintiff is nonſuited, for not confeſſing leaſe entry and ouſter, the leſſor of the plaintiff muſt proceed by attachment, upon the conſent rule. Id. ibid.: 1 Salk. 259: Barnes 182. And ſo where the nominal plaintiff is nonſuited upon the merits, or has a verdict and judgment againſt him, the only remedy is by attachment againſt the leſſor of the plaintiff. Run. Ej. 142, 3. See title Attachment.

Beſides the ordinary method of proceeding, there are certain auxiliary means for the recovery of Coſts, as between party and party. Theſe means are by moving to ſtay the proceedings, until ſecurity be given for the payment of Coſts; or until the Coſts are paid of a former action for the same cause; or by deducting the Costs of one action, from those of another. As examples of these means, it may be mentioned, that in ejectment, (1 Str. 681,) and actions qui tam, (Id. 697, 705: Barnes 126,) where the plaintiff, or his lessor, is unknown to the defendant, and in case the plaintiff is a foreigner residing abroad, (1 Term Rep. 267, 362, 491,) the defendant may call for an account of his residence, or place of abode, from the opposite attorney; and if he refuse to give it, or give in a fictitious account of a person who cannot be found, the court will stay the proceedings, until security be given for the payment of costs.

The practice of deducting or setting off the Costs, in one action against those in another, however agreeable to natural justice, does not seem to have obtained till lately in the court of K. B. 2 Stra. 891, 1203: Bull. N. P. 336: 4 Term Rep. 124. But in C. P. it has been frequently allowed; and that not only where the parties have been the same, but also where they have been in some measure, different. Barnes 145: 2 Black. Rep. 826: Bull. N. P. 336.

As between Attorney and Client, the former may maintain an action against the latter for the recovery of his costs. Cro. Car. 159, 160.—But by the Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 7. § 1, attornies and solicitors must deliver a bill to their clients before bringing an action: and by Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 23. § 23, (explained by Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 13, and made perpetual by Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 75,) no attorney nor solicitor shall commence any action, till the expiration of one month after the delivery of his bill; which is directed by the acts to be in a common legible hand, in English, except law-terms, and subscribed with the attorney's hand.

The said Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 23, also directs the mode of taxation of attornies' bills by the officers of the several courts; and directs that if the bill taxed be less by a sixth part than the bill delivered, the attorney shall pay the costs of taxation: but if it shall not be less, the costs shall be in the discretion of the court.

If the whole bill be for conveyancing, or for business done at the quarter sessions, &c. it cannot be taxed. But where an attorney had delivered two separate bills, one of which was for fees and disbursements in causes, and the other for making conveyances, a rule was made for taxing both. And so, where it was moved, that the Master might be directed to tax those articles in an attorney's bill, which related to conveyancing and parliamentary business, the rest being for management of causes in the court of King's Bench, Lord Mansfield said, there was no doubt but the master might tax the whole. Barnes C. B. 141, 2: 4 Term Rep. 124: Say. Rep. 233: Say. Costs 320.

It is not necessary for the executor or administrator of an attorney, to deliver a bill of costs, for business done by his testator or intestate, before the commencement of an action; (Cas. Pr. C. B. 58;) the Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 23. § 23, being confined to actions brought by the attorney himself, and not extending to his personal representatives. And, in the court of Common Pleas, they will not suffer such a bill to be taxed: (Barnes 119, 122:) but in the court of King's Bench it is otherwise; (2 Stra. 1056: Say. Costs 324, 5: Imp. K. B. 482;) for there, the bill may be referred to be taxed, on the defendant's undertaking to pay what is due.

If an attorney refuse to deliver a bill to his client, the latter may compel him, by taking out a summons before a judge; and if the attorney, on being served therewith, do not attend, an order will be made for delivering it, within a reasonable time. If he still neglect to deliver it, the order should be made a rule of court; and on serving the same, and making affidavit thereof, the court on motion will grant an attachment. Doug. 8vo. 199. in n: Imp. K. B. 479. The bill being delivered, the client may apply for a judge's summons, to shew cause, why it should not be referred to the proper officer to be taxed; upon which an order will be made, the client undertaking to pay what shall appear to be due upon such taxation. Imp. K. B. 479, 480. If the attorney do not attend, an order will be made of course. But the client cannot have a summons for delivery of the bill, and taxing it, together. Id. 480: Barnes C. B. 126.

COSTS IN EQUITY, are allowed for failing to make an answer to a bill exhibited; or making an insufficient answer: and if a first answer be certified by a master to be insufficient, the defendant is to pay 40*s. Costs*; 3*l.* for a second insufficient answer; 4*l.* for a third, &c. But if the answer be reported good, the plaintiff shall pay the defendant 40*s. Costs*. An answer is not to be filed, (till when, it is not reputed an answer,) until Costs for contempt in not answering are paid. By Stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16, if a plaintiff in Chancery dismisses his own bill, or the defendant dismisses the same for want of prosecution, Costs are allowed to the defendant.

In other cases it seems that the matter of Costs to be given to either party is not in equity held to be a point of right, but merely discretionary, under Stat. 17 R. 2. c. 6, according to the circumstances of the case. Yet the Stat. 15 H. 6. c. 14, which requires surety to satisfy the party grieved his damages, on granting the subpœna, seems expressly to direct that, as well damages as costs shall be given to the defendant, if wrongfully vexed in this court.

In case of a great fraud, a person may be obliged to pay such Costs as shall be ascertained by the injured party's oath. 2 Vern. 123.

COT, In the old Saxon signifies cottage, and so is still used in many parts of England.

COTARIUS, A cottager: the cotarii, or cottagers, are mentioned in Domesday.

COTE AND COT. The names of places which begin or end with these words or syllables, have the signification of a little house or cottage: there are likewise dove cotes, which are small houses or places for the keeping of doves or pigeons. See title Pigeon-House.

COTELLUS, COTERIA, A small cottage, house, or homestall. Cowel.

COTERELLUS. Cotarius and coterellus, according to Spelman and Du Fresne, are servile tenants: but in Domesday and other ancient MSS. there appears a distinction as well in their tenure and quality, as in their name. For the cotarius held a free socage tenure, and paid a stated firm or rent in provisions or money, with some occasional customary services; whereas the coterellus seems to have held in mere villenage, and his person, issue and goods, were disposable at the pleasure of the lord. Paroch. Antiq. 310.

COTESWOLD. Is used for sheep-cotes and sheep feeding on hills: from the Sax. cote and wold, a place where there is no wood.

COTGARE,

COTGARE, A kind of refuſe wool, ſo clung or clotted together, that it cannot be pulled aſunder. By Stat. 13 R. 2. cap. 9, it is provided, that neither denizen nor foreigner ſhall make any other refuſe of wools but cotgare and villein.

COTLAND and COTSETHLAND, Land held by a cottager, whether in ſocage or villenage.—Paroch. Antiq. 532.

COTSETHLA, COTSETLE, The little ſeat or manſion belonging to a ſmall farm. Cartular. Malmſbur. MS.

COTSETHUS, A cottage-holder, who, by ſervile tenure, was bound to work for the lord. Cowel.—Cotſets are the meaneſt ſort of men, now termed cottagers. And cotſeti are thoſe who live in cottages. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 30.

COTTAGE, cotagium.] A little houſe for habitation, without lands belonging to it.

By the ſtat. 31 Eliz. c. 7, cottages were prohibited to be erected without laying at leaſt four acres of land to the ſame; and divers other reſtrictions were thereby injoined. But this was repealed by ſtat. 15 Geo. 3. c. 32, ſetting forth that the ſaid ſtat. of 31 Eliz. had laid the induſtrious poor under great difficulties to procure habitations, and tended very much to leſſen population; and in divers other reſpects was inconvenient to the labouring part of the nation in general.

COTTON LIBRARY, For better ſettling and preſerving the library kept in the houſe at Weſtminſter, called Cotton-houſe, in the name and family of the Cottons for the benefit of the Public, a ſtatute was made 12 W. 3. c. 7. See Stats. 5 Ann. c. 30: 26 Geo. 2. c. 22.

COTTONS, Not within 27 Hen. 8, concerning the true making of cloth, 27 H. 8. c. 12. ſect. 3. See title Callico: Manufacturers; Navigation-Acts.—Stealing cotton out of places uſed for whitening or dying it, felony without clergy. Stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 27.

COTUCA, Coat armour. Walſing. 114.

COTUCHANS, Boors or huſbandmen, of which mention is made in Domeſday.

COUCHER, or COURCHER, A factor that continues abroad in ſome place or country for traffick; as formerly in Gaſcoign, for buying of wines. Stat. 37 Ed. 3. c. 16. This word is alſo uſed for the general book wherein any corporation, &c. regiſter their particular acts. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 10.

COVENABLE, Fr. convenable, Lat. rationabilis.] What is convenient or ſuitable.—Every of the ſame three ſorts of goods, &c. ſhall be good and covenable, as in old time hath been uſed. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 2. Covenably indowed, that is, indowed as is fitting. St. 4 H. 8. c. 12. See Plowd. 472.

COVENANT,

CONVENTIO.] The agreement or conſent of two or moreby deed in writing, ſealed and delivered; whereby either, or one of the parties doth promiſe to the other that ſomething is done already or ſhall be done afterwards: he that makes the covenant is called the covenantor: and he to whom it is made, the covenantee. See Shep. Touchſt. 160, and on the whole of this ſubject at length.

I. The ſeveral Kinds of Covenants, and by what Words they are created.
II. What Covenants are good and binding, and by whom they may be made.
III. Who ſhall take Advantage of Covenants, and who are bound by them.
IV. What ſhall be a Performance, and what a Breach of Covenant.—And of Penalties for Non-performance.

I. A Covenant is generally either in fact or in law; in fact is that which is expreſsly agreed between the parties, and inſerted in the deed; and in law, is that covenant which the law intends and implies, though it be not expreſſed in words; as if a leſſor demiſe and grant to his leſſee a houſe or lands, &c. for a certain term, the law will intend a covenant on the leſſor's part, that the leſſee ſhall, during the term, quietly enjoy the ſame againſt all incumbrances. 1 Inſt. 384.

There is alſo a Covenant real, and Covenant perſonal: a covenant real is, that whereby a man ties himſelf to paſs a thing real, as lands or tenements; or to levy a fine of lands, &c. And covenant perſonal, is where the ſame is annexed to the perſon and merely perſonal; as if a perſon covenants with another by deed to build him a houſe, or to ſerve him, &c. F. N. B. 145: 5 Rep. 10.

Covenants are likewiſe inherent, that tend to the ſupport of the land or thing granted; or are collateral to it; and are affirmative, where ſomewhat is to be performed; or negative; executed, of what is already done, or executory: a covenant being to bind a man, to do ſomething in futuro, is for the moſt part executory. 1 Vent. 176: Dyer 112, 271.

A covenant to ſettle or convey particular lands, will not at law create a lien upon the lands; but in equity ſuch a covenant, if for a valuable conſideration, will be deemed a ſpecific lien on the lands, and decreed againſt all perſons claiming under the covenantor, except purchaſers for valuable conſideration, and without notice of ſuch covenant. Finch v. Earl of Winchelſea, 1 P. Wms. 282: Freemoult v. Dedire, 1 P. Wms. 429. Coventry v. Coventry; beſt reported at the end of Francis's Maxims; For Equity conſiders that as done, which being diſtinctly agreed to be done, ought to have been done. Grounds and Rudiments of Law and Equity, p. 75.

A general covenant to ſettle lands of a certain value, without mentioning any lands in particular, will not create a ſpecific lien on any of the lands of the covenantor, and therefore cannot be ſpecifically decreed in equity. Fremoult v. Dedire, 1 P. Wms. 430. But if the covenantor expreſsly declare the ſettlement to be in execution of his power, though the particular lands to be charged be not ſpecified, equity will aſcertain them, Coventry v. Coventry, Francis's Maxims: Gilb. Rep. 160.

It is held in all caſes where words that begin any ſentence are conditional, and give another remedy, they ſhall not be conſtrued a covenant; and yet if words of condition and covenant are coupled together in the ſame ſentence, as Provided always, and it is covenanted, &c. in that caſe they may be adjudged both a condition and covenant. March 103.

The law does not ſeem to have appropriated any ſet form of words, as abſolutely neceſſary to be made uſe of in creating a covenant; and therefore it ſeems that any words will be effectual for that purpoſe, which ſhew the party's concurrence to the performance of a future act; as if leſſee for years covenants to repair, &c. Provided always, and it is agreed, that the leſſor ſhall find great timber, &c. this makes a covenant on the part of the leſſor to find great timber, by the word agreed; and it shall not be a qualification of the covenant of the lessee. 1 New Abr. 527.—See 1 Burr. 290.

"The dependence or independence of covenants, is to be collected from the evident sense and meaning of the parties; and however transposed they may be in a deed, their precedency must depend on the order of time in which the intent of the transaction requires their performance." Per Lord Mansfield. Jones v. Berkley, Dougl. 665.—See also Hotham v. The East-India Company, 1 Term Rep. 638. Where the participle doing, performing, paying, repairing, is prefixed to a covenant, it is clearly a mutual covenant, and not a condition precedent. Boone v. Eyre, 2 Black. Rep. 1312: Allen v. Babington, Sid. 280: Atkinson v. Morrice, 12 Mod. 503. But where the covenant goes to the whole consideration on both sides, there it is a condition precedent. Duke of St. Alban's v. Shore, 1 H. Black. Rep. 270.

If one makes a lease for years, reserving a rent, action of covenant lies for non-payment of the rent; for the reddendum of the rent is an agreement for payment of it, which will make a covenant. 2 Danv. 230. A lease is made to two, and one seals the deed, but the other doth not; if he accepts the estate and occupies the land, he is bound to perform the covenants for payment of the rent, reparations and the like. 1 Shep. Abr. 458.

If one man covenants to pay another 20*l.* at a day; although he may have action of debt for the 20*l.* yet it is said he may have covenant at his election. 2 Danv. 229.

It is agreed that A. B. shall pay to C. D. 100*l.* for lands in E. this is a mutual covenant, whereon action of covenant may be brought if C. D. will not convey. 1 Sid. 423. But where there are mutual covenants, and the one not to be performed before a precedent covenant, in such case one covenant is not suable till the other is performed: though if the covenants are distinct and mutual, several actions may be brought by and against the parties. 1 Lil. Abr. 350: 2 Mod. 74. In a covenant to pay another so much money, he making him an estate in such land, &c. it has been adjudged, that if he tender the covenantor a feoffment, and offer to make livery, he may have action of covenant for the money, as if he had made a title. 3 Salk. 107.

Where a man covenants that he hath power to grant, and that the grantee shall quietly enjoy notwithstanding any claiming under him; these are distinct covenants, for one goes to the title, and the other to the possession. 1 Mod. 101.

There is this difference however between a covenant and condition; a condition gives entry, and covenant gives an action only. Owen 54. A person cannot have action of covenant upon a verbal agreement, for it cannot be grounded without writing, except by special custom. F. N. B. 145.

II. ALL covenants between persons must be to do what is lawful, or they will not be binding; and if the thing to be done be impossible, the covenant is void. Dyer 112. But where the thing is lawful at the time of the covenant made, and afterwards the matter agreed to be done is prohibited by act of parliament, yet such covenant will be binding. 3 Mod. 39. And if a man covenants to do a thing before a certain time; and it becomes impossible by the act of God, this shall not excuse him, inasmuch as he hath bound himself precisely to do it. 2 Danv. Abr. 84.

Though a covenant to stand seised of lands to be after purchased be void at law, unless there be some new act to be done; yet it seems, that a covenant to settle lands of such a value, will charge after-purchased lands, though the covenantor had none at the time of executing the covenant. Took v. Hasting, 2 Vern. 97.

If a person covenants expressly to repair a house, and it is burnt down by lightning, or any other accident, yet he ought to repair it; for it was in his power to have provided against it by his contract. Allyn 26, 27: 1 Lil. Abr. 149. But he is not so bound by covenant in law. Where houses are blown down by tempest, the law excuses the lessee in an action of waste; though in a covenant to repair and uphold, it will not. 1 Plowd. 29. If a lessee for years, rendering rent, covenants for him and his assigns to repair the house, and after the lessee assigns over the term, and the lessor accepts the rent from the assignee, and then the covenant is broken; notwithstanding acceptance of rent from the assignee, action of covenant lies against the first lessee, on his express covenant to repair; and this personal covenant cannot be transferred by the acceptance of the rent. 2 Danv. Abr. 240. See title Assignment, and post. III.

Action of covenant also lies on covenant for payment of rent against such lessee; but not action of debt after acceptance. 3 Rep. 24. In covenant upon a demise, rendering rent, the defendant cannot say, that part of it was to be allowed; for this is a covenant against a covenant. Comb. 21.

An infant within age may bind himself apprentice; but neither at Common law nor by statute may be bound by covenant for his apprenticeship, so as to make him liable to an action of covenant, if he depart, &c. But by the custom of London he may bind himself by his covenant at fourteen years old. 1 Cro. 129: Winch. 63.

III. THERE may be an agreement and covenant, only to be performed by the parties themselves; and there are some covenants which none but the party and his heirs may take advantage of, being such as concern the inheritance, and descend to the heir, as knit to the estate: covenants in gross go to the executors, &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 520: 2 Danv. 235. Not only parties to deeds, but their executors and administrators, shall take advantage of inherent covenants, though not named; and every assignee of the land may have the benefit of such covenants: likewise executors and assigns are bound by them, although not named, as a covenant to repair, &c. 5 Rep. 16, 17: 1 Cro. 552. If a man covenants with another to do any thing, his heir shall not be bound, unless he be expressly named: and yet where a lessee covenants to repair, the heir shall have the benefit of the covenant, though not named, because it runs with the land. 2 Lev. 92: 5 Rep. 8.

The executors and administrators of the covenantor will be bound by the covenant, though not named, unless the covenant be of such a nature as not to allow of its being performed by any other person but the Covenantor. See Dyer 14. pl. 69: 1 Roll. Abr. 519. l. 35: Hyde v. Dean & Canons of Windsor, Cro. Eliz. 553.

All persons to whom the land descended, were by the common law, entitled to the benefit of covenants which run with the land; but grantees of the reversion were not. The Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 34, therefore enacted, "That all grantees, &c. of reversions, should have the like advantages against the lessees, their executors, &c. by entry for non-payment of the rent, or for doing waſte, or other forfeiture; and the ſame remedy by action only, for not performing other conditions, covenants, or agreements contained in the leaſes, againſt the leſſees; as the leſſors or grantors had." The ſtatute alſo gives the leſſees the ſame remedy againſt the grantees of the reverſion, which they might have had againſt their grantors. It muſt not, however, be underſtood from the general words of the ſtatute, that the grantee of the reverſion can take benefit of every forfeiture by force of a condition, Lord Coke conceiving the operation of the ſtatute to be confined to ſuch conditions as are either incident to the reverſion, as rent; or for the benefit of the State, as for not doing of waſte, for keeping the houſes in repair, for making of fences, or ſuch like; and not for the payment of any ſum in groſs, delivery of corn, wood, or the like. See Co. Lit. 215, where a variety of reſolutions upon this ſtatute are ſtated, and the authorities referred to. See alſo 6 Vin. Ab. Covenant, (K. 3.) p. 397: Webb v. Ruſſell, 3 T. R. 393.—See further Bac. Abr. Covenant, (E. 6.): Vin. Ab. Covenant, (K. 3.)

The liability of the aſſignee does not extend to covenants broken before the aſſignment; as a covenant to build within a certain time, which was paſt before the aſſignment. Greſcott v. Green, 1 Salk. 199: St. Saviour's Southwark v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1271: 1 Bla. R. 351. Nor is the aſſignee to be affected by any covenant broken after he has aſſigned over. Boulton v. Canon, 1 Freem. 336.

A collateral covenant to be done upon the land, as to build de novo, ſhall bind the aſſignee by expreſs words; in this caſe, the aſſignees are bound by the terms of the covenant, for unleſs named they would not be bound by law; "for the covenant concerns a thing which was not in eſſe, at the time of the demiſe made; but to be newly built after, and therefore ſhall bind the covenantor, his executors and adminiſtrators, and not the aſſignee; for the law will not annex the covenant to a thing which hath no being." Spencer's Caſe, 5 Co. 16 b. But as the law would ſuſtain ſuch a covenant againſt the covenantor and his aſſigns, if expreſsly included in the covenant, and give damages for its non-performance, it ſhould ſeem to follow, that the covenantee would be intitled in equity to a decree for the ſpecific performance of ſuch covenant to build; and of this opinion Lord Hardwicke appears to have been, in the caſe of the City of London v. Naſh, 3 Atk. 515: 1 Ves. 12. But in the caſe of Lucas v. Commerford, 3 Bro. C. R. 166. Lord Thurlow C. held, "That there could not be a decree to rebuild in purſuance of a covenant, for that he could no more undertake the conduct of a rebuilding than of a repair."

At law the Aſſignee is liable only for the rent actually incurred, or covenants broken during his poſſeſſion. Boulton v. Canon, 1 Freem. 336. If therefore he aſſign the very day before the rent becomes due, the leſſor cannot maintain his action for it. Tovey v. Pitcher, Carth. 177: 4 Mod. 71: 3 Co. 22: 1 Salk. 81: 1 Freem. 326. Nor will the circumſtance of ſuch aſſignment being per fraudem, as to a beggar, alter the caſe. Leroux v. Naſh, Str. 1221: Bulker's N. P. 159. But ſee Knight v. Freeman, 1 Vent. 329, 334: T. Raym. 303: T. Jones 109; in which the validity of ſuch aſſignment was denied. But whatever may be the rule of law upon this point, it ſeems to be now ſettled, that courts of equity will compel an aſſignee of a term to account for the rent the whole time he enjoyed the land. Treacle v. Coke, 1 Vern. 165. Whether equity will, in order to ſecure the future rents, under any circumſtances, reſtrain an aſſignee from aſſigning to a beggar or inſolvent perſon, was conſidered but not determined, in the caſe of Philpot v. Hoare, 2 Atk. 219. If the aſſignee offer to give up the poſſeſſion to the leſſor on reaſonable terms, and the leſſor refuſe to accept ſuch ſurrender, it were clearly too much for a court of equity, in reſtriction of a legal right, to prevent the aſſignment. Vaillant v. Dodomede, 2 Atk. 546. But ſuppoſing the leſſor to be willing to accept of a ſurrender of the term, and the aſſignee wantonly to inſiſt on his legal right to aſſign, when and to whom he pleaſed, it ſeems that, under certain circumſtances, a court of equity might without impropriety interpoſe to prevent the abuſe of ſuch right; and this Lord Hardwicke appears to admit, in Vaillant v. Dodomede; for having ſtated the legal right and the propriety of courts of equity in general, following the rule of law, he obſerves, "but it is true in ſome ſort of aſſignments, made by tenants, the court has interpoſed;" nor does the difficulty reported to have occurred to Lord Hardwicke, in Philpot v. Hoare, appear, upon examination, to have been intitled to much attention. His Lordſhip is reported to have ſaid, "As to the accruing rents, it is a point of more difficulty; for the covenant in this leaſe not to aſſign, does not run with the land to the aſſignee, becauſe aſſignees are not bound by name in the covenant." Whence it might be inferred, that if aſſigns had been expreſsly included in the covenant, his Lordſhip would have conſidered them bound by the covenant. But whether aſſignees be bound or not by a covenant, does not, (except in the caſe of a collateral covenant to be done upon the land,) depend upon their being named in the covenant; for if the covenant run with the land, aſſignees are bound, whether named or not; and if the covenant do not run with the land, but is a perſonal contract, or reſpect ſomething to be done purely collateral to, and not on the land, they are not bound, though they be expreſsly named. See Spencer's caſe, 5 Co. 16 b: 17 a. Therefore, whether the aſſignee was named or not, was immaterial to the queſtion, Whether the aſſignee was bound by the covenant not to aſſign without conſent of the leſſor? Nor does it appear as having been neceſſary in order to determine whether a court of equity ſhould reſtrain an aſſignment to a beggar, previouſly to determine, whether the aſſignee was bound by the covenant not to aſſign; for ſuppoſing the aſſignee to be bound at law by the covenant, equity may reſtrain the wanton and fraudulent breach of a covenant; and ſuppoſing him not to be bound, yet he may be affected in conſcience upon the ſame principle that the aſſignee of a merely perſonal covenant may be affected in conſcience, though not bound at law. See City of London v. Richmond, 2 Vern. 421.—Treat. of Equity; 350. in n.

The grantee of a reverſion may bring action of covenant againſt a leſſee, as well in the county where the demiſe was made, as in the county where the lands lie. Carthew 183. A perſon covenants with another, to pay him money at a time to come, and doth not ſay to his executors, &c. if the covenantee die before the day, yet his executors or adminiſtrators ſhall have the money. Dyer 112, 257. And in every caſe where the teſtator is bound by a covenant, the executor ſhall be bound by it; if it be not determined by his death. 48 Ed. 3. 3: 2 Danv. 232.

If A. ſeiſed of land in fee, conveys it to B. and covenants with B. his heirs and aſſigns, to make any other aſſurance upon requeſt; and after B. conveys it to C. who conveys it to D. and then D. requires A. to make another aſſurance, according to the covenant; if he refuſes, D. ſhall have an action of covenant againſt him, as aſſignee to B. 2 Danv. 236. A leſſor made a leaſe of an houſe for years, excepting two rooms, and free paſſage to them; the leſſee aſſigned the term, and the leſſor brought covenant againſt the aſſignee for diſturbing him in his paſſage to thoſe rooms; and adjudged, that the action lies: for the covenant as to the paſſage, goes with the tenement, and binds the aſſignee. 1 Salk. 196. If a man who leaſes for years, ouſts the leſſee, he ſhall have covenant againſt him. 48 Ed. 3. 2.—See 2 Danv. 234. A man grants a watercourſe, and afterwards ſtops it; for this voluntary mis-feaſance, covenant lies. 1 Saund. 322. Though where the uſe of a thing is demiſed, and it runs to decay, ſo that the leſſee cannot have the benefit of it, for this non-feaſance no action of covenant lieth: nor may covenant be brought for a thing which was not in eſſe at the making of the leaſe. 2 Danv. 233.

If a perſon covenants that he hath good right to grant, &c. and he hath no right, it is a breach of covenant, for which action of covenant lies. 2 Bul. 12.

A covenant for the leſſee to enjoy againſt all men; this extends not to tortious acts and entries, &c. for which the leſſee hath his proper remedy againſt the aggreſſors. Vaugh. 111, 120.

Where there is a covenant to ſave harmleſs againſt a certain perſon, there the covenantor muſt ſave the covenantee harmleſs againſt the entry of that perſon, be it by wrong or rightful title: but if it be to ſave harmleſs againſt all perſons, the entry and eviction muſt be by lawful title. Cro. Eliz. 213. Where the covenant is to do a thing, and no time appointed for performance, it muſt be done in convenient time. 2 And. 73: Dyer 57, 150: Hob. 28.

But a covenant muſt wait upon and join with the grant; ſo that if it be to make ſuch aſſurance as ſhall be reaſonably deviſed, it muſt be of an aſſurance that differs not from the bargain: and when the eſtate to which a covenant is annexed is at an end, the covenant is gone. Hob. 276: 1 Leon. 179. In an indenture, the word covenant, is the word both of leſſor and leſſee; and therefore if the leſſee covenants to pay the rent, this is a reſervation. Though when there is a covenant for a leſſee to repair, and he makes an under-leaſe to one who is in poſſeſſion, the under-leſſee is not liable to that covenant, in law or equity. 1 Rol. Rep. 80: 1 Vern. 87.

If a leſſor covenant with the leſſee that he ſhall have houſe-bote, &c. by aſſignment of his bailiff, this is a good covenant: and yet it doth not reſtrain the power that the leſſee hath by law to take thoſe things without aſſignment: but if a leſſee covenants, that he will not cut any timber, without the leave or aſſignment of the leſſor; by this he will be reſtrained. Dyer 19, 115.

IV. The moſt frequent uſe of a covenant, is to bind a man to do ſomething in futuro, and therefore it is for the moſt part executory: and if the covenantor do not perform it, the covenantee may thereupon for his relief have an action or writ of covenant, againſt the covenantor, ſo often as there is any breach of the covenant. Shep. Touchſt. 161. & ſeq.

Not any duty or cauſe of action ariſes on a covenant, till it is broken: and as to breaches of covenant, if a perſon by his own act diſables himſelf to perform a covenant, it is a breach thereof. 5 Rep. 21. Though there can be no covenant or breach, where a leaſe, &c. is void. Yelv. 18, 19. But here, although when a covenant concerns the intereſt of the leaſe, as where it is for paying rent, it is void, if the leaſe be ſo: yet where covenants are collateral to the leaſe and intereſt, though that be void, the covenants may be good. Owen 136. And if a covenant to do a thing is performed in ſubſtance, and according to the intent, it is good, though it differs from the words; and on the other hand, although the covenantor performs the letter of his covenant, if he does any act to defeat the intent and uſe of it, he is guilty of a breach. Mod. Ent. Eng.

In covenant that a perſon ſhall hold land free from all incumbrances, and be kept indemnified from arrears of rent; there, till an action is brought, or diſtreſs made, he is not damnified; and a ſuit in Chancery is no breach in ſuch caſe; but where a jointure, or dower is recovered, it is. Skin. 397: Moor 859: Palm. 339. When the intention of the parties can be collected out of a deed, for the doing or not doing of the thing, covenant ſhall be had thereupon. Chanc. Rep. 294. A covenant, being one part of a deed, is ſubject to the general rules of expoſition of all parts of the deed: and in a covenant the laſt words, that are general, ſhall be expounded by the firſt words, which are ſpecial and particular. Vent. 218. Alſo a latter covenant cannot be pleaded in bar to a former.

When a covenant is to two perſons jointly, one of them may not bring action of covenant, or plead alone, but both muſt join. 1 Nelſ. 558. If a man is bound to perform all the covenants in an indenture, and they are all in the affirmative, he may plead performance generally. Co. Lit. 303. Covenants in the negative muſt be pleaded ſpecially. Ibid. 330. When ſome covenants are in the negative, and ſome in the affirmative, the defendant is to plead ſpecially to the negative covenants, that he had not done the thing, and performance generally as to the affirmative: (ſed qu. and vide poſt.) and where the negative covenants are againſt law, and the affirmative agreeable to law, performance generally may be pleaded. Moor 856. If any of the covenants are in the diſjunctive, ſo that it is in the election of the covenantor to perform the one, or the other, the performance ought to be ſpecially pleaded, that it may appear what part hath been performed. Cro. Eliz. 23: 1 Nelſ. 573. And commonly where an act is to be done, according to a covenant, he who pleads performance ought to do it ſpecially. 1 Leon. 136.

In debt upon bond for performance of covenants, one whereof for peaceable enjoyment, and free from all incumbrances, and another for further aſſurance, &c. the defendant ſhould plead ſpecially, that the houſe was free from incumbrances at the time of the conveyance made, and not charged at any time ſince, and that no farther aſſurance had been required, or ſuch an aſſurance which he had executed, &c. yet where a defendant pleaded generally, in this caſe it was held good. 1 Lutw. 603.

The plaintiff, in equity, if he has not performed his part of the agreement, muſt not only ſhew that he was in no default, in not having performed it, but muſt alſo alledge that he is ſtill ready to perform it; whereas, at law, if the covenants be not precedent, but diſtinct and independent, the plaintiff need not alledge a performance of his covenants, to entitle him to recover againſt the defendant for the breach of his. Pordage v. Cole, 1 Sand. 320: Nichols v. Raynbred, Hob. 88. But ſee Calonel v. Briggs, 1 Salk. 112: Goodiſon v. Nunn, 4 Term Rep. 761.

Where the covenants are mutual and diſtinct, the defendant cannot plead a breach by the plaintiff, in bar of the plaintiff's action for a breach by the defendant; for the damage may be unequal, and therefore each party muſt recover againſt the other, the damages he ſuſtained. Cole v. Shallett, 3 Lev. 41: Thompſon v. Noel, 1 Lev. 16: Howlett v. Strickland, Cowp. 56: but ſee Calonel v. Briggs, 1 Salk. 122: Goodiſon v. Nunn, 4 Term Rep. 761.

When a breach is aſſigned, it muſt not be general, but muſt be particular; as in action of Covenant for not repairing of houſes, the breach ought to be aſſigned particularly, what is the want of reparation. Cro. Jac. 369.

But on mutual promiſe for one to do an act, and in conſideration thereof another to do ſome act, as to ſell goods, &c. for ſo much money, a general breach that the defendant hath not performed his part, is well aſſigned. 3 Lev. 319.

Breaches aſſigned ought to be according to the very words of the condition or covenant: when they may be well enough, though too general. 1 Lutw. 326.

Where a thing is to be done by a perſon or his aſſigns, the breach is to be, that it was not done either by the one or the other. 5 Mod. 133. If a perſon is to tender a conveyance, &c. to another, his heirs or aſſigns, breach aſſigned that the defendant did not tender a conveyance to the plaintiff, without the words, "his heirs or aſſigns," is good: but if the tender be to be made by another man, his heirs, &c. and not to him, it is otherwiſe. 1 Salk. 139.

Where a leſſee for years is to leave all the timber on the land, which was growing there at the time of the leaſe, and he cut down any trees, though he leaves the timber on the land at the end of his leaſe, this is a breach of covenant: for in contracts the intention of the parties is chiefly to be conſidered. Raym. 464. If ſeveral breaches are aſſigned, and the defendant demurs upon the whole declaration, the plaintiff ſhall have judgment for all that are well aſſigned, for they are as ſeveral actions. Cro. Jac. 557.

Covenants are generally taken moſt ſtrongly againſt the covenantor, and for the covenantee. Plowd. 287. But it is a rule in law, that where one thing may have ſeveral intendments, it ſhall be conſtrued in the moſt favourable manner for the covenantor. 1 Lut. 490. The common uſe of covenants is for aſſuring of land; quiet enjoyment free from incumbrances; for payment of rent reſerved; and concerning repairs, &c. And in deeds of covenant, ſometimes a clauſe for performance, with a penalty, is inſerted in the body of the deed: at other times and more frequently, bonds for performance, with a ſufficient penalty, are given ſeparate; which laſt being ſued, the jury muſt find the penalty; but on covenant, only the damages. Wood's Inſt. 250. Vide the Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. And vide ante & poſt. and tit. Bond.

Covenant for non-payment of rent, was referred to the maſter as to the rent, and on payment thereof proceſs to ſtay as to that, but there being another breach as to not repairing, the plaintiff might proceed for that. Anon. Wilſ. Rep. Par. 1. p. 75. In an action of covenant, it is not neceſſary to aver that the plaintiff performed his covenants. Goddered v. Cowell, Rep. temp. Hardw. 343 4.

By Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, In actions on bonds, for performance of covenants, plaintiff may aſſign as many breaches as he pleaſes, and the jury on the trial of the action, or on a writ of enquiry, may aſſeſs damages: on defendant's paying damages, execution may be ſtayed, but judgment ſhall remain to anſwer any farther breach, and plaintiff may have a ſcire facias againſt the defendant. See title Bond VI.

"Where a penalty is intended, merely to ſecure the enjoyment of a collateral object, the enjoyment of the object is conſidered as the principal intent of the deed, and the penalty only as acceſſional, and therefore only to ſecure the damage really incurred." Per Thurlow, C. Sloman v. Walter, 1 Bro. Rep. 418. And upon this conſtruction of a penalty, courts of equity will interpoſe, to reſtrain proceedings at law to recover the penalty. But the principles of equal juſtice require, that courts of equity ſhould enforce the ſpecific performance of the act agreed to be done, or reſtrain from the doing of that, which was agreed ſhould not be done. And upon this principle, wherever the primary object of the agreement be the ſecuring of the ſpecific ſubject of the covenant, the party covenanting is not entitled to elect, whether he will perform his covenant, or pay the penalty. See Hilſon v. Trevor, 2 P. Wms, 191: Parks v. Wilſon, 10 Mod. 517: Chilliner v. Chilliner, 2 Vez. 528. But if the covenant be to do, or not to do, ſome particular act, or doing it, or neglecting to do it, to pay a certain ſum, by way of liquidated damages, courts of equity will not relieve againſt the payment of ſuch damages. Euſt-India Company v. Blake, Finch's Rep. 117: Ponſonby v. Adams, 2 Bro. P. C. 431: Rolfe v. Peterſon, 2 Bro. P. C. 436. (8vo. ed.) Lowe v. Peers, 4 Burr. 2228.—See alſo Small v. Lord Fitzwilliam, Pre. Ch. 102. And as courts of equity will not relieve againſt ſtipulated damages, they will not, in general, interpoſe to enforce the performance of the covenant, or to reſtrain its violation. Therefore, where the leſſee covenanted not to plough certain land, or if he did, to pay 20*s. per acre, per ann.* the court refuſed to reſtrain the leſſee from ploughing. Woodward v. Gyles, 2 Vern. 119. But there are ſome circumſtances which will induce the court to interfere, though ſtipulated damages be reſerved; as where the leſſee had covenanted not to plough antient meadow, or if he did, to pay an increaſe of rent, the court, upon his threatening to plough, appears to have granted an injunction. Webb v. Clarke, 8*th of May*, 1782.—See alſo Dulwich College v. Davis, M. 1787.

It is held an action of covenant may be laid in London, for non-payment of rent on a leaſe of lands in any other place. 1 Sid. 401. And if, in this action, a ſum be miſcaſt, either too little or too much, it is amendable; and not like to the action of debt, which if alledged leſs than it is, without ſhewing the reſt to be ſatisfied, it is ill. 3 Keb. 39: 2 Cro. 247. In action of covenant, the plaintiff muſt have recourſe to the deeds or writings, and the circumſtances of time, place, &c. and take notice what particular covenant in the deed it is beſt to inſiſt upon, to lay a breach right, &c. the words of covenanting are, covenant, grant, promiſe, and agree, &c. but there needs no great exactneſs in words to make a covenant. See titles Bonds, Leaſes, Agreements, Conveyances, &c. and ante I.

Jac.* 369: 3 Lev. 46.—Of Covenants, to be free from incumbrances. Vin. Abr. Covenant. (A. 2.): 1 Wood 415: Gilb. Covenant. c. 31.

See fully in what caſes and in what manner Covenants ſhall be ſaid to be ſuſpended, defeated, diſcharged, or void. Bac. Abr. Covenant, (G.): Gilb. 470: 1 Wood 397, 429: Com. Dig. Covenant. (F.): Chancery 2. (X. 3.): Vin. Abr. Covenant. (O.)

This word Covenant, is alſo taken for the Solemn League and Covenant; which was a ſeditious conſpiracy, invented in Scotland, voted illegal by parliament, and againſt which proviſion is made by Stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 4.

COVENANT TO STAND SEISED TO USES, Is when a man that hath a wife, children, brother, ſiſter, or kindred, doth by covenant in writing under hand and ſeal agree that for their or any of their proviſion or preferment, he and his heirs will ſtand ſeiſed of land to their uſe; either in fee ſimple, fee tail, or for life. The uſe being created by the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10, which conveyeth the eſtate as the uſes are directed, this covenant to ſtand ſeiſed is become a conveyance of the land ſince the ſaid ſtatute. The conſiderations of theſe deeds, are natural affection, marriage, &c. and the law allows in ſuch caſes conſideration of blood and marriage, to raiſe uſes, as well as money and other valuable conſideration when a uſe is to a ſtranger. Plowd. 302. There are no conſiderations now to raiſe uſes upon covenants to ſtand ſeiſed, but natural love and affection, which is for advancement of blood; and conſideration of marriage, which is the joining of the blood and marriage together: other conſiderations, as money, &c. for land, though the words in the deed are ſtand ſeiſed, yet they are bargains and ſales, and without inrolment they raiſe no uſe. Carter 138: Lil. Abr. 353.

The uſual covenant to ſtand ſeiſed to uſes need not be by deed indented and inrolled. And where a man limits his eſtate to the uſe of his wife for life, this imports a ſufficient conſideration in itſelf: alſo if a perſon covenants to ſtand ſeiſed to the uſe of his wife, ſon, or couſin it will raiſe an uſe without any expreſs words of conſideration; for ſufficient conſideration appears. 7 Rep. 40.

In caſe of a covenant to ſtand ſeiſed, ſo much of the uſe as the owner doth not diſpoſe of, remains ſtill in him. 1 Ventr. 374. And where an uſe is raiſed by way of covenant, the covenantor continues in poſſeſſion; and there the uſes limited, if they are according to law, ſhall riſe and draw the poſſeſſion out of him: but if they are not, the poſſeſſion ſhall remain in him until a lawful uſe ariſeth. 1 Leon. 197: 1 Mod. 159, 160.

If on a covenant to ſtand ſeiſed to uſes, no uſe doth ariſe, yet it may be good by way of covenant and give remedy to the covenantee in an action; as if the covenant be future, that, in conſideration of a marriage, lands ſhall deſcend or remain to a ſon and the heirs of his body on the body of his wife; in this caſe the covenantee may have writ of covenant upon the covenant againſt the covenantor. But if a covenant be that a man and his heirs, ſhall from henceforth ſtand and be ſeiſed to ſuch and ſuch uſes, and the uſes will not ariſe by law: here no action of covenant lies on the covenant; for this action will never lie upon any covenant but ſuch as is either to do a thing hereafter, or where the thing is already done, and not when it is for a thing preſent. Plowd. 307, 398: Finch's Law. 49.—See title Conveyance.

COVERTURE, Fr.] Any thing that covers; as apparel, a coverlet, &c. but it is by our law particularly applied to the ſtate and condition of a married woman, who is ſub poteſtate viri; and therefore diſabled to contract with any, to the damage of herſelf or huſband, without his conſent and privity, or his allowance and confirmation thereof. Bract. lib. 1. c. 10. lib. 2. c. 15, &c.: Bro. Abr. When a woman is married, ſhe is called a Feme Covert; and whatever is done concerning her, during the marriage, is ſaid to be during the coverture: all things that are the wife's, are the huſband's; nor hath the wife power over herſelf, but the huſband: and if the huſband alien the wife's land, during the coverture, ſhe cannot avoid it during his life; but after his death, ſhe may recover by cui in vita. Terms de Ley.—See title Baron and Feme: Cui in vita.

COVIN, Covina.] A deceitful compact between two or more to deceive or prejudice others; as if tenant for life or in tail, conſpires with another, that he ſhall recover the land which he the tenant holds, in prejudice of him in reverſion. Plowd. 546. Covin is commonly converſant in and about conveyances of land by fine, feoffment, recovery, &c. And then it tends to defeat purchaſers of the lands they purchaſe, and creditors of their juſt debts; and ſo it is uſed in deeds of gift of goods: it may be likewiſe ſometimes in ſuits of law, and judgments had in them. But wherever covin is, it ſhall never be intended, unleſs it appears and be particularly found: for covin and fraud though proved, yet muſt be found by the jury, or it will not be good. Brownl. 188: Bridgm. 112.

If one make a leaſe to a perſon by covin, and after grant another leaſe to another bona fide, but without any fine or rent; in this caſe the ſecond leſſee may not avoid the firſt leaſe, becauſe he is not a purchaſer that comes in for money. 3 Rep. 83. On recovery by a good title, there may be covin; as where tenant for life by aſſent, &c. ſuffers a recovery by Nil dicit, without making any defence: and if a man hath a rightful and juſt cauſe of action, and of covin and conſent ſhall raiſe up a tenant by wrong againſt whom he may recover; the covin doth ſo ſuffocate the right, that the recovery, although it be upon good title, ſhall not bind. Bro. Covin 47: Co. Lit. 357: 1 Shep. Abr. 365. A. is tenant for life, remainder in tail to B. and a præcipe is brought againſt them as jointenants, by covin between the demandant and A. and an anſwer procured for B. as jointenant, and they join the miſe, (or iſſue) and after make default, whereby final judgment is given; this ſhall not defeat the eſtate of B. who may bring a writ of diſceit, and ſhall be reſtored to his land. Rol. Abr. 621.

If a man that has a right to certain lands, by covin cauſes another to ouſt the tenant of the land, to the intent to recover it from him, and he recovers accordingly againſt him by action tried; yet he ſhall not be remitted to his ancient right; but is in of the eſtate of him who made the ouſter; and an aſſiſe lies againſt him. 2 Danv. Abr. 309. Land is aliened, pending a writ of debt, by covin, to avoid the extent thereof for the debt; the land ſo aliened ſhall be extended, when the covin appears upon the return of the elegit by the ſheriff. Ibid. 311. If a man makes a deed of gift, &c. of his goods in his life-time by covin, to ouſt his creditors of their debts, after his death the donee or vendee ſhall be charged for them, See the ſeveral ſtatutes of Frauds. If goods are ſold in market overt by covin, on purpoſe to bar him that hath right, this ſhall not bar him thereof. 2 Inſt. 713: See title Frauds, &c.

COUNCIL. In the city of London, there are common council-men choſen in every ward at a court of wardmote held by the aldermen of the reſpective wards on St. Thomas's day yearly; they are to be choſen out of the moſt ſufficient men; and ſworn to give true counſel for the common profit of the city, &c. Lex Londinen. 117. In the court of common-council, are made laws for advancement of trade; and committees yearly appointed, &c. But acts made by them, are to have the aſſent of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, by Stat. 21 Geo. 1. c. 11. See this Dict. title London.

COUNSELLOR, Conſiliarius.] A perſon retained by a client to plead his cauſe in a court of judicature. A Barriſter: See title Barraſter.—To what is there noticed may be added.—That by Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 14, counſellors ſhall not be puniſhed for ſhewing a falſe deed in evidence. No recuſant convict, or non-conformiſt ſhall practice the law, as a counſellor, or otherwiſe, under penalties. See Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5: 7 W. 3. c. 24: 13 & 14 W. 3. c. 6: 1 Geo. 1. c. 13. See titles Oaths, Non-conformiſts.

COUNSEL, for Priſoners. See title Trial and 4 Comm. 355.

COUNT, The original declaration of complaint in a real action. As declaration is applied to perſonal, ſo Count is applicable to real cauſes: but Count and declaration are oftentimes confounded, and made to ſignify the ſame thing. F. N. B. 16, 60. In paſſing a recovery at the common pleas bar, a ſerjeant at law counts upon the præcipe, &c. See titles Countors, Declarations, Pleading.

COUNTEE, Fr. Comte.] The moſt eminent dignity of a ſubject, before the conqueſt; and thoſe who in ancient times were created countees, were men of great eſtate: for which reaſon, and becauſe the law intends that they aſſiſt the king with their counſel for the public good and preſerve the realm by their valour, they had great privileges; as they might not be arreſted for debt or treſpaſs; or be put on juries, &c. Of old the countee was præfectus, or præpoſitus comitatûs, and had the charge and cuſtody of the county; but this authority the ſheriff now hath. 9 Rep. 46. A countee or count, is an earl, in the law French. Law Fr. Dict. See titles Earl, Sheriff.

COUNTENANCE. This word ſeems to be uſed for credit or eſtimation. Old Nat. Br. 111. And in the Stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 4. See Contenement.

COUNTER, Computatorium from the Lat. computare.] The name of two priſons in London, the Poultry counter, and Wood-ſtreet-counter, [now conſolidated into one new-built priſon] for the uſe of the city, to confine debtors, peace-breakers, &c. Cowel.

COUNTERFEITS. See title Cheats.

Counterfeiting the King's ſeal, or money, &c. is treaſon, See title Treaſon: and counterfeiting Exchequer bills, bank-bills, lottery-orders, &c. is felony. See titles Felony, Forgery, Fraud.

COUNTERMAND, Contramandatum.] Is where a thing formerly executed, is afterwards by ſome act or ceremony made void by the party that firſt did it. And it is either actual, by deed; or implied: actual, where a power to execute any authority, &c. is by a formal writing, for that very purpoſe put off for a time, or made void: and implied, is where a man makes his laſt will and teſtament, and thereby deviſes his land to A. B. if he afterwards enfeoffs another of the ſame land, here this feoffment is a countermand to the will, without any expreſs words for the ſame, and the will is void as to the diſpoſition of the land: Alſo if a woman ſeiſed of land in fee-ſimple, makes a will and deviſeth the ſame to C. D. and his heirs, if he ſurvive her; and after ſhe intermarries with the ſaid C. D. there, by taking him to huſband, and coverture at the time of her death, the will is countermanded. Terms de Ley. But if a woman makes a leaſe at will, and then marries, this marriage is no countermand to the leaſe, without expreſs matter done by the huſband to determine the will.

Where land is deviſed, and after a leaſe made thereof for years only; it ſhall not be a countermand of the will, which is good notwithſtanding, for the reverſion after the leaſe for years is ended: but in caſe a man have a leaſe for years, and gives it by his will, and after ſurrenders it; it is a countermand of the deviſe, and the deviſee ſhall not have his leaſe. Dyer 47: Goldſb. 93. See title Deviſe. If a copyholder, like to die, do ſurrender his eſtate to the uſe of his wife or children, without any conſideration of money, &c. and he recover before the preſentment and admittance, it may be countermanded: It is otherwiſe if it be to the uſe of a ſtranger. Kitch. 82. If there be a feoffment with letter of attorney to make livery and ſeiſin; and before it is made, the feoffor makes a ſeoffment, or bargain and ſale of the land, or leaſe to another, it will be a countermand in law of the authority given given by the letter of attorney. 2 Brownl. 291. A perſon may countermand his command, authority, licence, &c. before the thing is done; and if he dies, it is countermanded. There is alſo a countermand of notice of trial, &c. in law proceedings. See titles Trial, Proceſs.

COUNTERPART. When the ſeveral parts of an indenture are interchangeably executed by the ſeveral parties, that part or copy which is executed by the grantor is uſually called the original, and the reſt are counterparts: though of late it is moſt frequent (and better) for all the parties to execute every part; which renders them all originals. 2 Comm. 296. See title Deeds.

COUNTERPLEA, Is when the tenant in any real action, tenant by the curteſy, or dower, in his anſwer and plea, vouches any one to warrant his title, or prays in aid of another, who hath a larger eſtate; as of him in reverſion, &c. Or where one that is a ſtranger to the action, comes and prays to be received to ſave his eſtate; then that which the demandant alledgeth againſt it, why he ſhould not be admitted, is called a counterplea: In which ſenſe it is uſed, Stat. 25 Ed. 3. cap. 7. So that counterplea is in law a replication to Aid Prier; and is called counterplea to the voucher: But when the voucher is allowed, and the vouchee comes and demands what cauſe the tenant hath to vouch him, and the tenant ſhews his cauſe, whereupon the vouchee pleads any thing to avoid the warranty; that is termed a counterplea of the warranty. Terms de Ley. Stat. 3 E. 1. cap. 39. If on demurrer to a counterplea of the voucher upon a warranty, it be found againſt the vouchee, judgment ſhall not be peremptory, but only ſtet vocare: It is otherwiſe upon a plea to the writ tried by the country. 4 Rep. 80: 10 Rep. 34.—There is alſo a counterplea to the plea of clergy; See title Clergy, Benefit of; II.

COUNTER-ROLLS. The rolls which ſheriffs of counties have with the coroners of their proceedings, as well of appeals, as of inqueſts, &c. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 10.

COUNTORS, Fr. Contours.] Have been taken for ſuch ſerjeants at law, which a man retains to defend his cauſe, and ſpeak for him in any court, for their fees. Horn's Mirror, lib. 2. And as in the court of C. B. none but Serjeants at law may plead; they were anciently called Serjeant Countors. 1 Inſt. 17.

COUNTY,

Comitatus.] Signifies the ſame with ſhire, the one coming from the French, the other from the Saxon. It contains a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the better government of it, and the more eaſy adminiſtration of juſtice: So that there is no part of this kingdom that lies not within ſome county; and every county is governed by a yearly officer, the ſheriff. Forteſcue, cap. 24. Of theſe counties, the numbers have been different at different times, there are now in England forty, beſides twelve in Wales, making in all fifty-two.—It ſeems that this diviſion of the Kingdom was made by King Alfred. See 4 Comm. 410. The names of theſe counties are as follows. In ENGLAND; Bedford; Berks; Bucks; Cambridge; Cheſter; Cornwall; Cumberland; Derby; Devon; Dorſet; Durham; Eſſex; Glouceſter; Hereford; Hertford; Huntingdon; Kent; Lancaſter; Leiceſter; Lincoln; Middleſex; Monmouth; Norfolk; Northampton; Northumberland; Nottingham; Oxford; Rutland; (the ſmalleſt;) Salop; (commonly called Shropſhire;) Somerſet; Staffordſ; Suffolk; Surrey; Suſſex; Southampton; (Hants or Hampſhire;) Warwick; Weſtmorland; Worceſter; Wilts; York; (the largeſt;) In NORTH WALES Angleſea; Caernarvon; Denbigh; Flint; Merioneth and Montgomery.—In SOUTH WALES; Brecknock; Cardigan; Caermarthen; Glamorgan; Pembroke and Radnor.

Three of the counties above enumerated, viz. Cheſter, Durham and Lancaſter, are called COUNTIES PALATINE. The two former are ſuch by preſcription, or immemorial cuſtom; or, at leaſt as old as the Norman conqueſt: (Seld. tit. Hon. 2, 5, 8;) the latter was created by King Edward III. in favour of Henry Plantagent, firſt Earl, and then Duke of Lancaſter: (4 Inſt. 204:) whoſe heireſſes being married to John of Gaunt, the King's ſon, the franchiſe was greatly enlarged and confirmed in parliament to honour John of Gaunt himſelf, whom, on the death of his father-in-law, the King had alſo created Duke of Lancaſter. Plowd. 215: T. Raym. 138.

COUNTIES PALATINE are ſo called à palatio; becauſe the owners thereof, the Earl of Cheſter, the Biſhop of Durham, and the Duke of Lancaſter, had in thoſe counties jura regalia, as fully as the King hath in his palace; regalem poteſtatem in omnibus, as Bracton expreſſes it. lib. 3. c. 8. § 4. They might pardon treaſons, murders, and felonies; they appointed all judges and juſtices of the peace; all writs and indictments ran in their names, as in other counties in the King's, and all offences were ſaid to be done againſt their peace, and not, as in other places, contra pacem domini regis. 4 Inſt. 204. And indeed by the ancient law, in all peculiar juriſdictions, offences were ſaid to be done againſt his peace, in whoſe court they were tried; in a court-leet, contra pacem domini; in the court of a corporation, contra pacem ballivorum; in the ſheriff's courts or towns, contra pacem vicecomitis. Seld. in Heng. Magna, c. 2.

The Palatine privileges, (ſo ſimilar to the regal independent juriſdictions uſurped by the great barons on the continent, during the weak and infant ſtate of the firſt feodal kingdoms in Europe,) were in all probability originally granted to the counties of Cheſter and Durham, becauſe they bordered upon inimical countries, Wales and Scotland: in order that the inhabitants, having juſtice adminiſtered at home, might not be obliged to go out of the county, and leave it open to the enemy's incurſions; and the owners, being encouraged by ſo large an authority, might be the more watchful in its defence. And upon this account alſo there were formerly two other counties palatine, Pembrokeſhire and Hexhamſhire; the latter now united with Northumberland; but theſe were aboliſhed by parliament, the former in 27 Hen. 8. the latter, in 14 Eliz. And in the time of H. VIII. likewiſe, the powers beforementioned, of owners of counties palatine were abridged; Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 24. the reaſon for their continuance in a manner ceaſing, though ſtill all writs are witneſſed in their names, and all forfeitures for treaſon by the Common law accrue to them. 4 Inſt. 205.

Of theſe three, the county of Durham is now the only one remaining in the hands of a ſubject. For the earldom of Cheſter, as Camden teſtifies, was united to the crown by Hen. III. and has ever ſince given title to the King's eldeſt ſon. And the County Palatine, or Duchy of Lancaſter, was the property of Henry Bolingbroke, the ſon of John of Gaunt, at the time when he wreſted the crown from King Richard II. and aſſumed the title of King Henry IV. But he was too prudent to ſuffer this to be united, united to the crown; leſt if he loſt one, he ſhould loſe the other alſo. For as Plowden (215,) and Sir Edward Coke (4 Inſt. 245,) obſerve "he knew he had the Duchy of Lancaſter by ſure and indefeaſible title, but that his title to the crown was not ſo aſſured; for that after the deceaſe of Richard II. the right of the crown was in the heir of Lionel Duke of Clarence, ſecond ſon of Edward III; John of Gaunt, father to this Henry IV, being but the fourth ſon," And therefore he procured an act of parliament, in the firſt year of his reign, ordaining that the duchy of Lancaſter, and all other his hereditary eſtates, with all their royalties, and franchiſes, ſhould remain to him and his heirs for ever; and ſhould remain, deſcend, be adminiſtred, and governed, in like manner as if he never had attained the regal dignity; and thus they deſcended to his ſon and grandſon, Henry V. and Henry VI; many new territories, and privileges being annexed to the Duchy by the former. Parl. 2 Hen. 5. n. 30: 3 Hen. 5. n. 15.—Henry VI. being attainted in 1 Edw. IV. this duchy was declared in parliament to have become forfeited to the crown; (1 Ventr. 155;) and at the ſame time an act was made to incorporate the Duchy of Lancaſter, to continue the County Palatine; (which might otherwiſe have determined by the attainder, 1 Ventr. 157,) and to make the ſame parcel of the Duchy: and, farther, to veſt the whole in King Edward IV. and his heirs, Kings of England, for ever; but under a ſeparate guiding and governance from the other inheritances of the crown. And in 1 Hen. 7, another act was made, to reſume ſuch part of the Duchy lands as had been diſmembered from it in the reign of Edward IV. and to veſt the inheritance of the whole in the King and his heirs for ever; as amply and largely, and in like manner, form, and condition, ſeparate from the crown of England and poſſeſſion of the ſame, as the Three Henries and Edward IV, or any of them, had and held the ſame.

The Iſle of Ely is not a County Palatine, though ſometimes erroneouſly called ſo, but only a royal franchiſe, the biſhop having, by grant of King Henry the Firſt, jura regalia within the Iſle of Ely; whereby he exerciſes a juriſdiction over all cauſes, as well criminal as civil. 2 Inſt. 220.

The Counties Palatine are reckoned among the ſuperior courts: And are privileged as to pleas, ſo as no inhabitant of ſuch counties ſhall be compelled by any writ to appear or anſwer out of the ſame; except for error, and in caſes of treaſon, &c. and the Counties Palatine of Cheſter and Durham, are by preſcription, where the King's writ ought not to come, but under the ſeal of the Counties Palatine; unleſs it be writs of proclamation. Cromp. Juriſ. 137: 1 Danv. Abr. 750.

But certiorari lies out of B. R. to juſtices of a County Palatine, &c. to remove indictments, and proceedings before them. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 23.

There is alſo a court of Chancery in the Counties Palatine of Lancaſter and Durham, over which there are Chancellors; that of Lancaſter called Chancellor of the Duchy, &c. See title Chancellor.—And there is a court of Exchequer at Cheſter, of a mixed nature, for law and equity, of which the Chamberlain of Cheſter is judge. There is alſo a Chief Juſtice of Cheſter; and other juſtices in the other Counties Palatine, to determine civil actions and pleas of the crown.

The Biſhop of Durham has that County Palatine; and if any erroneous judgment be given in the courts of the biſhoprick of Durham, a writ of error ſhall be brought before the Biſhop himſelf; and if he give an erroneous judgment thereon, a writ of error ſhall be ſued out returnable in B. R. 4 Inſt. 218.

Infants in Counties Palatine enabled to convey by order of the reſpective courts belonging to theſe counties. 4 G. 3. c. 16.

The King may make a County Palatine by his letters patent without parliament. 4 Inſt. 201.

As to further matter relative to the ſeveral Counties Palatine, ſee titles Cheſter, Durham and Lancaſter; and particularly as to Cheſter, Stats. 43 Eliz. c. 15: (and this Dict. title Fines:) 22 Geo. 2. c. 46: 26 Geo. 2. c. 34: 27 Geo. 3. c. 43.

COUNTIES CORPORATE, are certain cities and towns, ſome with more, ſome with leſs territory annexed to them, to which out of ſpecial grace and favour, the Kings of England have granted the privilege to be Counties of themſelves, and not to be comprized in any other county; but to be governed by their own ſheriffs and other magiſtrates, ſo that no officers of the county at large have any power to intermeddle therein.

The St. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15, for the regulation of the office of ſheriffs, enumerates 12 cities, and 5 towns, which are counties of themſelves, and which have conſequently their own ſheriffs. The Cities are London (by grant of Hen. 1.) Cheſter (42 Eliz.) Briſtol, Coventry, Canterbury, Exeter, Glouceſter, Litchfield, Lincoln, Norwich, Worceſter, York (32 Hen. 8.)—The Towns are Kingſton-upon-Hull, Nottingham, Newcaſtle-upon-Tyne, Poel, Southampton. 1 Comm. 116—119. To theſe Cirenceſter is added in Impey's Sheriff; but on what authority does not clearly appear.

COUNTY-COURT, Curia Comitatûs.] Is by Lambert called Conventus, in his explication of Saxon words, and divided into two ſorts; one retaining the general name, as the County-court held every month, by the ſheriff or his deputy: the other called the turn, held twice in every year, viz. within a month after Eaſter and Michaelmas; of both which See Cromp. Juriſd. fol. 241. All adminiſtration of juſtice was at firſt in the King's hands; but afterwards, when by the increaſe of the people the burden grew too great for him, as the kingdom was divided into counties, hundreds, &c. ſo the adminiſtration of juſtice was diſtributed amongſt divers courts; of which the ſheriff had the County-court for government of the county, and lords of liberties had their leets and law-days, for the ſpeedier and eaſier adminiſtring juſtice therein, &c.

Before the courts at Weſtminſter were erected, the County-courts were the chief courts of the kingdom: And among the laws of King Edgar it is ordained, that there be two County-courts kept in the year, in which there ſhall be a biſhop and an alderman, or earl, as judges; one to judge according to the Common law, and the other according to the Eccleſiaſtical law; But theſe united powers of a biſhop and earl to try cauſes, were ſeparated by William the Firſt, called the Conqueror; and ſoon after the buſineſs of eccleſiaſtical cogniſance was brought into its proper courts, and the Common law buſineſs into the King's Bench. Blount.

That the County-court in ancient times, had the cogniſance of Pleas of the Crown, indictments of felony, &c. appears by Glanv. lib. 1. cap. 2, 3, 4. by Bracton, and Briton.

Britton, in divers places, and Fleta, lib. 2. c. 62. But the power of this court was much reduced by Magn. Chart. c. 17; and by 1 Ed. 4. cap. 2; by the former of which it is expreſsly provided, that "no ſheriff ſhall hold pleas of the crown." It had formerly, and now hath the determination of certain debts, &c. under 40*s.* Over ſome of which cauſes the inferior courts have by the expreſs words of the Stat. of Glouceſter 6 E. 1. c. 8, a juriſdiction totally excluſive of the King's ſuperior courts.

This Court may alſo hold plea of many real actions, ſuch as dower, right-patent, right of ward. 4 Inſt. 266: 3 Inſt. 312. And of all perſonal actions to any amount, by virtue of a writ of juſticies, which is in nature of a commiſſion to the ſheriff to do it. 4 Inſt. 266. Here the plaintiff takes out a ſummons, and if the defendant do not appear, an attachment or diſtringas is to be made out againſt him; but if the defendant appears, the plaintiff is to file his declaration, and after the defendant is to put in his anſwer or plea; and the plaintiff having joined iſſue, the trial proceeds, &c. whereupon if verdict is given for the plaintiff, judgment is entered, and a fieri facias may be awarded againſt the defendant's goods, which may be taken by virtue thereof, and be appraiſed and ſold to ſatisfy the plaintiff: But if the defendant hath no goods, the plaintiff is without remedy in this court; for no capias lies therein, but an action may be brought at Common law, upon the judgment entered. Greenwood of Courts, p. 22: Finch 318: F. N. B. 152.

No ſheriff is to enter in the County-court, any plaint in the abſence of the plaintiff; nor above one plaint for one cauſe, under penalties: The defendant in the County-court is to have lawful ſummons; and two juſtices of peace are to view the eſtreats of ſheriffs, before they iſſue them out of the County-court, &c. By Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 15, Cauſes are to be removed out of the County court, by recordare, pone, and writ of falſe judgment, into B. R. &c. The Stats. 9 H. 3. c. 35: 2 E. 6. c. 25, enact, that no County-court ſhall be adjourned for longer than one month, conſiſting of 28 days.

All popular elections which the freeholders are to make, as formerly of ſheriffs and conſervators of the peace, and ſtill of coroners, verderors and knights of the ſhire muſt ever be made in full County-court.

As this court hath of ancient times belonged to the Sheriff, and is incident to his office, the King cannot grant by letters patent the office of County-clerk nor the fees: but it of right belongs to the ſheriff. 4 Co. Mitton's caſe.

See Stats. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 25, as to the County-courts in Yorkſhire: and 27 H. 8. c. 26: 34 H. 8. c. 26, as to thoſe in Wales. Blackſtone, (3 Comm. 82,) obſerves, on the late erection of numerous Courts of Conſcience (ſee that title poſt.) that it is to be wiſhed that the proceedings in the County and Hundred-courts could be again revived and improved; an experiment that has been tried and ſucceeded in Middleſex. For by Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 33, it is enacted—1. That a ſpecial County-court ſhall be held, at leaſt once a month, in every hundred of the county of Middleſex, by the County-clerk.—2. That twelve freeholders of that hundred, qualified to ſerve on juries, and ſtruck by the ſheriff, ſhall be ſummoned to appear at ſuch court by rotation; ſo as none ſhall be ſummoned oftener than once a year.—3. That in all cauſes not exceeding the value of 40*s.* the County-clerk and twelve ſuitors ſhall proceed in a ſummary way, examining the parties and witneſſes, on oath, without the formal proceſs antiently uſed; and ſhall make ſuch order therein as they ſhall judge to be agreeable to conſcience. —4. That no plaints ſhall be removed out of this court, by any proceſs whatſoever, but the determination herein ſhall be final.—5. That if any action be brought in any of the ſuperior courts, againſt a perſon reſident in Middleſex, where the jury ſhall find leſs than 40*s.* damages, the plaintiff ſhall not recover, but pay, coſts. (See title Coſts).—6. Laſtly, A table of very moderate fees is preſcribed and ſet down in the act, which are not to be exceeded.

It ſeems indeed, as the learned commentator remarks, that this plan wants only to be generally known, to ſecure its univerſal reception.

COUNTY-RATES. By Stat. 12 G. 2. c. 29, Juſtices of peace at their quarter-ſeſſions, [and by Stat. 13 Geo. II. c. 18. Juſtices of liberties and franchiſes not ſubject to the County commiſſioners,] may make one general rate, to anſwer all former diſtinct rates, which ſhall be aſſeſſed on every pariſh, &c. and collected and paid by the high conſtables of hundreds to treaſurers appointed by the juſtices; which money ſhall be deemed the public ſtock, and be laid out in repairing of bridges, gaols, or houſes of correction, on preſentment made by the grand jury at the aſſiſes or quarter-ſeſſions, of their wanting reparation; but appeal lies by the church-wardens and overſeers of the poor of the pariſhes to the juſtices at the next ſeſſions, againſt the rate on any particular pariſh. And as to this appeal ſee alſo Stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 17. See titles Bridges; Gaols.

COURTS.

A COURT, Curia.] The King's palace, or manſion; but more eſpecially the place where juſtice is judicially adminiſtered. Co. Lit. 58. The Superior Courts are thoſe at Weſtminſter; and of Courts, ſome are of record, and ſome not; which are accounted baſe Courts, in reſpect of the reſt.

A Court of record is that Court which hath power to hold plea, according to the courſe of the Common law, of real, perſonal, and mixed actions, where the debt or damage is 40*s.* or above; as the King's Bench, Common Pleas, &c. A Court, not of record, is where it cannot hold plea of debt or damages amounting to 40*s.* but of pleas under that ſum: or where the proceedings are not according to the courſe of the Common law, nor inrolled; as the County-court, and the Court-Baron, &c. 1 Inſt. 117, 260: 4 Rep. 52: 2 Rol. Abr. 574.

Every Court of record is the King's Court, in right of his crown and dignity, though his ſubjects have the benefit of it; and therefore no other Court hath authority to fine and impriſon: ſo that the very erection of a new juriſdiction, with power of fine or impriſonment, makes it inſtantly a Court of record. Salk. 200: 12 Mod. 388: Finch L. 231. The free uſe of all Courts of record and not of record, is to be granted to the people: The leet and tourn are the King's Courts, and of record. 2 Danv. 259. The rolls of the ſuperior Courts of record are of ſuch authority, that no proof will be admitted againſt them; and theſe records are only triable by themſelves. 3 Inſt. 71. But as the County-court, Court-baron, &c. are not Courts of record, the proceedings therein may be denied, and tried by a jury; and upon their judgments, a writ of error lies not; but writ of falſe judgment. 1 Inſt. 117. See poſt. Court-baron.

In the Courts at Weſtminſter, the plaintiff need not ſhow at large in his declaration, that the cauſe of action ariſes within their juriſdiction, it being general: Inferior Courts are to ſhow it at large, becauſe they have particular juriſdictions. 1 Lil. Abr. 371. Alſo nothing ſhall be intended to be within the juriſdiction of an inferior Court, but what is expreſsly ſo alledged: And if part of the cauſe ariſes within the inferior juriſdiction, and part thereof without it, the inferior Court ought not to hold plea. 1 Lev. 104: 2 Rep. 16. See title Abatement I. 1.

An inferior Court, not of record cannot impoſe a fine, or impriſon: But the courts of record at Weſtminſter may fine, impriſon, and amerce. 11 Rep. 43.

The King being the ſupreme magiſtrate of the kingdom, and intruſted with the executive power of the law, all Courts, ſuperior or inferior, ought to derive their authority from the crown. Staundf. 54. Though the King himſelf cannot now, as anciently, ſit in judgment in any Court upon civil cauſes, nor upon indictments, becauſe there he is one of the parties to the ſuit. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 1, 2. The King hath committed all his power judicial to one Court or the other. 4 Inſt. 71. And by Stat. 52 H. 3. c. 1, it is enacted, that all perſons ſhall receive juſtice in the King's Courts, and none take any diſtreſs, &c. of his own authority, without award of the King's Courts.

It is ſaid the cuſtoms, precedents, and common judicial proceedings of a Court, are a law to that court: And the determinations of courts, make points to be law. 2 Rep. 12: 4 Rep. 53: Hob. 298. All things determinable in Courts, that are Courts by the Common law, ſhall be determined by the judges of the ſame Courts; and the King's writ cannot alter the juriſdiction of a Court. 6 Rep. 11. The Court of B. R. regulates all the inferior Courts of law in the kingdom, ſo that they do not exceed their juriſdictions, nor alter their forms, &c. And as the Court of King's Bench hath a general ſuperintendency over all inferior Courts, it may award an attachment againſt any ſuch Court, uſurping a juriſdiction not belonging to it: But it is ſometimes uſual firſt to award a writ of prohibition, and afterwards an attachment, upon its continuing to proceed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 25.

If a Court, having no juriſdiction of a cauſe depending therein, do nevertheleſs proceed, the judgment in ſuch Court is coram non judice, and void; and an action lies againſt the judges who give the judgment, and any officer that executes the proceſs under them: Though where they have authority, and give an ill judgment, there the party who executes the proceſs, &c. upon the judgment, ſhall be excuſed. 1 Lil. Abr. 370.

Judges of inferior Courts may be puniſhed for miſbehaviour either by information or attachment. Moravia's caſe. Hardw. 135. Any defects in the proceedings of an inferior Court cannot be amended, by the return which is not part of the record. The King v. Holmes, Id. 365. Where an inferior Court returns its proceedings, no diminution can be alledged. Ibid. Sayer v. Curtis, 367.

Action on the caſe lies againſt the plaintiff for ſuing one in an inferior Court, where the cauſe of action is out of its juriſdiction. 1 Vent. 369. And if a plaintiff on a contract for a large ſum, ſplits it into ſeveral actions for ſmall ſums to give an inferior Court juriſdiction, a prohibition ſhall go. Mod. Caſ. 90.

Striking, in the Courts at Weſtminſter, is puniſhed by cutting off the right hand, and forfeiture of goods, &c. How contempts to Courts are puniſhable by fine and impriſonment, &c. See title Attachment. See further as to particular Courts, poſt. Court-Baron, &c. and under titles King's Bench, Chancery, Common Pleas and Exchequer.

COURT OF ADMIRALTY, See title Admiralty.

COURT-BARON, curia baronis.] A court which every lord of a manor hath within his own precinct; it is an inſeparable incident to the manor: and muſt be held by preſcription, for it cannot be created at this day. 1 Inſt. 58: 4 Inſt. 268. A Court-baron muſt be kept on ſome part of the manor: and is of two natures;

1. By Common law, which is the barons' or freeholders' court, of which the freeholders being ſuitors are the judges; and this cannot be a Court-baron without two ſuitors at leaſt. The ſteward of this court is rather the regiſter than the judge.

2. By cuſtom, which is called the Cuſtomary court: and concerns the cuſtomary tenants and copyholders, whereof the lord, or his ſteward, is judge. See title Copyhold.

The Court-baron may be of this double nature, or one may be without the other: but as there can be no Court-baron at Common law without freeholders; ſo there cannot be a Cuſtomary court without copyholders or cuſtomary tenants. 4 Rep. 26: 6 Rep. 11, 12: 2 Inſt. 119. See title Copyhold.

The Freeholders' court, whoſe moſt important buſineſs is to determine, by writ of right, all controverſies relating to lands within the manor; and which hath alſo juriſdiction for trying actions of debt, treſpaſſes, &c. under 40*s.* may be held every three weeks; and is ſomething like a County court, and the proceedings much the ſame: though on recovery of debt, they have not power to make execution, but are to diſtrain the defendant's goods, and retain them till ſatisfaction is made.

The proceedings on a writ of right may be removed into the County courts by a precept from the ſheriff called a tolt (quia tollit cauſam,) 3 Rep. Pref.—And the proceedings in all other actions, may be removed into the ſuperior courts by the king's writs of pone, or accedas ad curiam, according to the nature of the ſuit. F. N. B. 4, 70: Finch L. 444, 5.

After judgment given alſo, a writ of falſe judgment lies to the courts at Weſtminſter to re-hear and re-view the cauſe; and not a writ of error: for this is not a court of of record: and therefore in ſome of theſe writs of removal, the firſt direction given is to cauſe the plaint to be recorded; recordari facias loquelum. F. N. B 18.

The other Court baron, for taking and paſſing of eſtates, ſurrenders, admittances, &c. is held but once or twice in a year, (uſually with the court-leet) unleſs it be on purpoſe to grant an eſtate; and then it is holden as often as requiſite. In this court the homage jury are to inquire that their lords do not loſe their ſervices, duties, or cuſtoms; but that the tenants make their ſuits of court; pay their rents and heriots, &c. and keep their lands and tenements in repair; they are to preſent all common and private nuſances, which may prejudice the lord's manor; and every public treſpaſs muſt be puniſhed in this court, by amercement, on preſenting the ſame. By Stat. Extent. Man. 4 E. 1, it ſhall be inquired of cuſtomary tenants, what they hold, by what works, rents, heriots, ſervices, &c. And of the lord's woods, and other profits, fiſhing, &c.

COURT OF CHIVALRY, curia militaris.] Otherwiſe called the Marſhal court; the judges of it are the Lord High Conſtable of England, and the Earl Marſhal: this court is ſaid to be the fountain of the martial law, and the Earl Marſhal hath both a judicial and miniſterial power; for he is not only one of the judges, but to ſee execution done. 4 Inſt. 123. See title Court-Martial.

The Court of Chivalry is the only Court Military known to, and eſtabliſhed by the permanent laws of the land; it was formerly held before the Lord High Conſtable and Earl Marſhal of England, jointly, but ſince the extinguiſhment of the former office, it hath uſually, with reſpect to civil matters, been before the Earl Marſhal only. See title Conſtable.—From the ſentence of this court an appeal lies immediately to the King in perſon. 4 Inſt. 125. This court was in great reputation in times of pure Chivalry, and afterwards, during our connexions with the Continent, by the territories which our princes held in France: but is now grown almoſt entirely out of uſe, on account of the feebleneſs of it's juriſdiction, and want of power to enforce its judgments. 3 Comm. 68.

The juriſdiction of this court is declared by Stat. 13 R. 2. c. 2, to be this: "that it hath cognizance of contracts touching deeds of arms, or of war, out of the realm; and alſo of things which touch war within the realm, which cannot be determined or diſcuſſed by the Common law; together with other uſages and cuſtoms to the ſame matters appertaining." So that wherever the Common law can give redreſs, this court hath no juriſdiction: which has thrown it entirely out of uſe, as to matters of contract, all ſuch being uſually cognizable in the courts of Weſtminſter-hall, if not directly, at leaſt by fiction of law: as if a contract be made at Gibraltar, the plaintiff may ſuppoſe it made at Weſtminſter, &c. for the locality, or place of making it, is of no conſequence with regard to the validity of the contract.

The words, "other uſages and cuſtoms," ſupport the claim of this court, 1. To give relief to ſuch of the nobility and gentry as think themſelves aggrieved in matters of honour; and 2. To keep up the diſtinction of degrees and quality. Whence it follows, that the civil juriſdiction of this court of Chivalry is principally in two points; the redreſſing injuries of honour; and correcting encroachments in matters of coat-armour, precedency, and other diſtinctions of families.

As a court of honour, it is to give ſatisfaction to all ſuch as are aggrieved in that point; a point of a nature ſo nice and ſo delicate, that its wrongs and injuries eſcape the notice of the Common law, and yet are fit to be redreſſed ſomewhere; ſuch, for inſtance, as calling a man coward, or giving him the lie; for which, as they are productive of no immediate damage to his perſon or property, no action will lie in the courts of Weſtminſter.; and yet they are ſuch injuries as will prompt every man of ſpirit to demand ſome honourable amends, which by the antient law of the land was appointed to be given in the court of Chivalry. Year Book, 37 Hen. 6. 21: Selden of Duels, c. 10: Hal. Hiſt. C. L. 37. But modern reſolutions have determined, that how much ſoever ſuch a juriſdiction may be expedient, yet no action for words will at preſent lie therein. Salk. 533: 7 Mod. 125: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 4. § 7, 8. And it hath always been moſt clearly holden, (Hal. Hiſt. C. L. 37,) that as this court cannot meddle with any thing determinable by the Common law, it therefore can give no pecuniary ſatisfaction or damages, inaſmuch as the quantity and determination thereof is ever of Common-law cognizance. And therefore this court of Chivalry can at moſt only order reparation in point of honour; to compel the defendant mendacium ſibi ipſi imponere, to take the lie he has given upon himſelf, or to make ſuch other ſubmiſſion as the laws of honour may require. 1 Ro. Ab. 128: Neither can this court, as to the point of reparation in honour, hold a plea of any ſuch word, or thing wherein the party is relieveable by the courts of Common law. As if a man give another a blow, or calls him thief or murderer; for in both theſe caſes the Common law has pointed out his proper remedy by action.

As to the other point of it's juriſdiction, the redreſſing of encroachments and uſurpations in matters of heraldry and coat-armour; it is the buſineſs of this court, according to Sir Matthew Hale, to adjuſt the right of armorial enſigns, bearings, creſts, ſupporters, pennons, &c. and alſo rights of place or precedence, where the King's patent or act of parliament, (which cannot be over-ruled by this court,) have not already determined it.

The proceedings in this court are by petition, in a ſummary way; and the trial not by a jury of twelve men, but by witneſſes, or by combat. Co. Lit. 261. See title Battel. But as it cannot impriſon, not being a court of record, and as by the reſolutions of the ſuperior courts, it is now confined to ſo narrow and reſtrained a juriſdiction, it has fallen into contempt and diſuſe. The marſhalling of coat-armour, which was formerly the pride and ſtudy of all the beſt families in the kingdom, is now greatly diſregarded; and has fallen into the hands of certain officers and attendants upon this court, called heralds, who conſider it only as a matter of lucre and not of juſtice: whereby ſuch falſity and confuſion have crept into their records (which ought to be the ſtanding evidence of families, deſcents, and coat-armour) that, though formerly ſome credit has been paid to their teſtimony, now even their common ſeal will not be received as evidence in any court of juſtice in the kingdom. 2 Roll. Abr. 686: 2 Jon. 224. But their original viſitation-books, compiled when progreſſes were ſolemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to enquire into the ſtate of families, and to regiſter ſuch marriages and deſcents as were verified to them upon oath, are allowed to be good evidence of pedigrees. And it is much to be wiſhed, that this practice of viſitation at certain periods were revived; for the failure of inquiſitions poſt mortem, by the abolition of military tenures, combined with the negligence of Heralds in omitting their uſual progreſſes, has rendered the proof a modern deſcent, for the recovery of an eſtate or ſucceſſion to a title of honour, more difficult than that of an antient. This will be indeed remedied for the future, with reſpect to claims of peerage, by a ſtanding order (11 May 1767,) of the Houſe of Lords; directing the Heralds to take exact accounts, and preſerve regular entries of all peers and peereſſes of England, and their reſpective deſcendants; and that an exact pedigree of each peer, and his family ſhall, on the day of his firſt admiſſion, be delivered to the houſe by Garter, the principal King-at-arms. But the general inconvenience, affecting mere private ſucceſſions, ſtill continues without a remedy. 3 Comm. 103—6.

COURT-CHRISTIAN, curia Chriſtianitatis.] The eccleſiaſtical judicature, oppoſed to the civil court, or lay tribunal: and as in ſecular courts, human laws are maintained, ſo in the Court Chriſtian, the laws of Chriſt ſhould be the rule. And therefore the judges are divines; as archbiſhops, biſhops, archdeacons, &c. 2 Inſt. 488. See poſt. title Courts Eccleſiaſtical.

COURTS OF CONSCIENCE, curia conſcientiæ.] In the 9th year of King Hen. 8. the Court of Conſcience, or Court of Requeſts, in London, was erected: there was then made an act of common council, that the Lord Mayor and Aldermen ſhould aſſign monthly two Aldermen and four diſcreet Commoners, to be Commiſſioners to ſit in this court twice a week, to hear and determine all matters brought before them between party and party, between citizens and freemen of London, in all caſes where the debt or damage was under 40*s.* And this act of Common Council was confirmed by Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 14; which impowered the Commiſſioners of this court to make ſuch orders between the parties touching ſuch debts, as they ſhould find ſtand to equity and good conſcience. The Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 15, fully eſtabliſhes this court; the courſe and practice whereof is by ſummons, to which if the party appear, the commiſſioners proceed ſummarily; examining the witneſſes of both parties, or the parties themſelves on oath, and as they ſee cauſe give judgment. And if the party ſummoned appear not, the commiſſioners may commit him to the Compter priſon till he does; alſo the commiſſioners have power to commit a perſon refuſing to obey their orders, &c.

By Stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 10, the proceedings of the Court of Conſcience are regulated; and in caſe any perſon affront or inſult any of the commiſſioners, on their certifying it to the Lord Mayor, he ſhall puniſh the offender by fine, not exceeding 20*s.* or may impriſon him ten days.

There are many other Courts of Conſcience eſtabliſhed of late years by act of parliament. See title Coſts, and alſo title Debtors.

Statutes or Acts of Parliament concerning the affairs of religion, or cauſes of eccleſiaſtical cognizance; particularly the rubricks in our Common Prayer-Book, founded upon the ſtatutes of uniformity. 4. The articles of religion, drawn up in the year 1562, Articuli Cleri, 9 E. 2. and eſtabliſhed by 33 Eliz. cap. 12. And it is ſaid, by the general Canon law, where all others fail.

As to ſuits in ſpiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Courts, they are for the reformation of manners, or for puniſhing of hereſy, defamation, laying violent hands on a clerk, and the like; and ſome of their ſuits are to recover ſomething demanded, as tithes, a legacy, contract of marriage, &c. And in cauſes of this nature the courts may give coſts, but not damages: things that properly belong to theſe juriſdictions are matrimonial and teſtamentary; and ſuch defamatory words, for which no action lies at law; as for calling one adulterer, fornicator, uſurer, or the like: 11 Rep. 54: Dyer 240.

The proceedings in the Eccleſiaſtical courts are according to the Civil and Cannon law, by citation, libel, anſwer upon oath, proof by witneſſes, and preſumptions, &c. and after ſentence, for contempt, by excomunication: and if the ſentence is diſliked, by appeal.

The juriſdiction of theſe courts is voluntary, or contentious; the voluntary is merely concerned in doing what no one oppoſes, as granting diſpenſations, licences, faculties, &c.

The

The punishments inflicted by these courts are censures, punishments pro salute animæ, by way of penance, &c. They are not courts of record. See further title Prohibition.

Much oppression having been exercised through the channel of these courts, on persons charged with trifling offences within their spiritual jurisdiction, the Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 44, limits the time of commencing suits for defamatory words to six months—and for incontinence and beating in the church-yard to eight months.—See titles Limitations, Fornication.

In briefly recounting the various species of Ecclesiastical Courts, or as they are often stiled, Courts-Christian, (curiæ Christianitatis) we may begin with the lowest, and so ascend gradually to the supreme court of appeal.

1. The Archdeacon's Court is the most inferior court in the whole ecclesiastical polity. It is held in the Archdeacon's absence before a judge appointed by himself, and called his official: and its jurisdiction is sometimes in concurrence with, sometimes in exclusion of, the Bishop's Court of the diocese. From hence however by Stat. 24 Hen. 8. c. 12, an appeal lies to that of the bishop.

2. The Consistory Court of every diocesan bishop, is held in their several cathedrals, for the trial of all ecclesiastical causes arising within their respective dioceses. The Bishop's Chancellor, or his Commissary, is the judge; and from his sentence an appeal lies, by virtue of the same statute, to the Archbishop of each province respectively.

3. As to the Court of Arches, See title Arches Court.

4. The Court of Peculiars, is a branch of and annexed to the Court of Arches. It has a jurisdiction over all those parishes dispersed through the Province of Canterbury in the midst of other dioceses, which are exempt from the Ordinary's jurisdiction, and subject to the Metropolitan only. All ecclesiastical causes, arising within these peculiar or exempt jurisdictions, are, originally, cognizable by this court; from which an appeal lay formerly to the Pope, but now by the Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19, to the King in Chancery.

5. The Prerogative Court is established for the trial of all testamentary causes, where the deceased hath left bona notabilia within two different dioceses. In which case the probate of wills belongs to the archbishop of the province, by way of special prerogative. And all causes relating to the wills, administrations, or legacies of such persons, are, originally, cognizable herein, before a judge, appointed by the Archbishop, called the judge of the Prerogative Court, from whom an appeal lies by Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19, to the King in Chancery, instead of the Pope as formerly.

6. The Great Court of Appeal in all ecclesiastical causes, viz. the Court of Delegates, (judices delegati) appointed by the King's commission under his Great Seal, and issuing out of Chancery, to represent his royal person, and hear all appeals made to him by virtue of the beforementioned Stat. of Hen. 8. This commission is frequently filled with Lords, spiritual and temporal, and always with judges of the courts at Westminster, and Doctors of the Civil Law. Appeals to Rome were always looked upon by the English nation, even in the times of popery, with an evil eye; as being contrary to the liberty of the subject, the honour of the crown, and the independence of the whole realm; and were first introduced in very turbulent times in the sixteenth year of King Stephen (A. D. 1151); at the same period (Sir Henry Spelman observes) that the civil and canon laws were first imported into England. Cod. Vet. Leg. 315. But, in a few years after, to obviate this growing practice, the constitutions made at Clarendon, 11 Hen. II. on account of the disturbances raised by Archbishop Beckett, and other zealots of the Holy See, expresly declare (chap. 8,) that appeals in causes ecclesiastical ought to lie, from the Archdeacon to the Diocesan; from the Diocesan to the Archbishop of the Province; and from the Archbishop to the King; and are not to proceed any farther without special licence from the crown. But the unhappy advantage that was given in the reigns of King John, and his son Henry III. to the encroaching power of the Pope, who was ever vigilant to improve all opportunities of extending his jurisdiction hither, at length riveted the custom of appealing to Rome in causes ecclesiastical so strongly, that it never could be thoroughly broken off, till the grand rupture happened in the reign of Henry VIII. when all the jurisdiction usurped by the Pope in matters ecclesiastical was restored to the crown, to which it originally belonged; so that the Stat. 25 Hen. 8, was but declaratory of the antient law of the realm. 4 Inst. 324. But in case the King himself be party in any of these suits, the appeal does not then lie to him in Chancery, which would be absurd; but by the Stat. 24 Hen. 8. c. 12, to all the Bishops of the realm assembled in the upper house of Convocation.

7. A Commission of Review, is a commission sometimes granted, in extraordinary cases, to revise the sentence of the Court of Delegates; when it is apprehended they have been led into a material error. This commission the King may grant, although the Stats. 24 & 25 Hen. 8, before cited, declare the sentence of the delegates definitive; because the Pope as supreme head by the canon law used to grant such commission of review; and such authority as the Pope heretofore exerted, is now annexed to the Crown by Stats. 26 Hen. 8. c. 1, and 1 Eliz. c. 1. But it is not matter of right, which the Subject may demand ex debito justitiæ; but merely a matter of favour, and which therefore is often denied.

These are now the principal courts of ecclesiastical jurisdiction; none of which are allowed to be Courts of Record; no more than was another much more formidable jurisdiction, but now deservedly annihilated, viz. the Court of the King's High Commission in causes ecclesiastical. This court was erected and united to the regal power by virtue of the Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 1, instead of a larger jurisdiction which had before been exercised under the Pope's authority. It was intended to vindicate the dignity and peace of the church, by reforming, ordering, and correcting the ecclesiastical state and persons, and all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offences, contempts and enormities. Under the shelter of which very general words, means were found in that, and the two succeeding reigns, to vest in the High Commissioners extraordinary, and almost despotic powers of fining and imprisoning; which they exerted much beyond the degree of the offence itself, and frequently over offences by no means of spiritual cognizance. For these reasons this Court was justly abolished by Stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 2.—See 3 Comm. 64. &c.

COURT OF HUSTINGS, curia hustingi.] The highest Court of Record, holden at Guildhall, for the City of London, before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen, the Sheriffs, and Recorder. 4 Inst. 247. This court determines all pleas real, personal, and mixt: and here all lands, tenements, and hereditaments, rents and services, within the city of London and suburbs of the same, are pleadable in two Hustings; one call Hustings of plea of lands, and the other Hustings of common pleas. In this court the burgesses to serve for the city in parliament, must be elected by the Livery of the respective companies.

In the Hustings of plea of lands, are brought writs of right patent directed to the sheriffs of London, on which writs the tenant shall have three summonses at the three hustings next following; and after the three summons, there shall be three essoins at three other hustings next ensuing; and at the next hustings after the third essoin, if the tenant makes default, process shall be had against him by grand cape, or petit cape, &c. If the tenant appears, the demandant is to declare in the nature of what writ he will; without making protestation to sue in nature of any writ: then the tenant shall have the view, &c. and if the parties plead to judgment, the judgment shall be given by the Recorder: but no damages, by the custom of the city, are recoverable in any such writ of right patent.

In the Hustings of common pleas are pleadable, writs ex gravi querela, writs of gavelet, of dower, waste, &c. also writs of exigent are taken out in the hustings; and at the fifth hustings the outlawries are awarded, and judgment pronounced by the Recorder.

If an erroneous judgment is given in the hustings, the party grieved may sue a commission out of Chancery, directed to certain persons to examine the record, and thereupon do right. 1 Rol. Abr. 745.—See further the Privilegia Londini; and this Dict. title London.

COURT OF THE DUTCHY OF LANCASTER. See title Chancellor of the Dutchy, &c.

COURT-LEET; or LEET.

The word Leet is not to be found either in the Saxon law, or in Glanvil, Bracton, Britton, Fleta, or the Mirror, our most antient law writers; nor in any statute prior to Stat. 27 E. 3. c. 28, though it is allowed to occur in the Conqueror's charter for the foundation of Battle Abbey, and not unfrequently in Domesday Book, Spelm. v. Leta. It seems to be derived from the Saxon, leod, plebs; and to mean the populi curia, or folk-mote, as the sheriff's tourn or Leet of the county (at least) appears to have been once actually called (See Spelman in verb. Folksmote;) in contradiction, perhaps, to the Halmote or Court Baron, which consisted of the free tenants only, who, being few in number, might conveniently assemble in the Lord's Hall; whereas the Leet, which required the attendance of all the resiants, within the particular hundred, lordship, or manor, and concerned the administration of public justice, was, usually held in the open air. Spelman in verb. Mallobergium. According to Hawkins, (Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. 112. which see;) a Court-Leet is a Court of Record, having the same jurisdiction within some particular precinct, which the sheriff's tourn hath in the county. See also 4 Comm. 273.

The view of Frank-pledge, visus franciplegii, means the examination or survey of the free-pledges, of which every man, not particularly privileged, was antiently obliged to have nine, who were bound that he should be always forth-coming to answer any complaint. The better to understand this, we are to be informed, that the kingdom being divided by King Alfred into counties or shires, and each county into hundreds, and each hundred into tithings, each tithing containing ten families or households, the heads of these families were reciprocally bound and responsible for each other; so that, in fact, of every ten householders throughout the kingdom, each man had nine pledges or sureties for his good behaviour.

Leet is also a word used for a Law day in several of our antient statutes. See Dyer 30 b.

That the Leet is the most antient court in the land, (for criminal matters, the Court Baron, being of no less antiquity in civil,) has been pronounced by the highest legal authority, 7 H. 6. 12 b: 1 Roll. Rep. 73. For though we do not meet with the word among the Saxons, there can be no doubt of the existence of the thing.

Lord Mansfield states that this court was co-eval with the establishment of the Saxons here, and its activity "marked very visibly both amongst the Saxons and the Danes." 3 Burr. 1860. In those times whoever possessed a vill or territory, with the liberties of soc, sac, &c. (a long string of barbarous words) was the lord of a manor, had a court-leet, court-baron, and in a word, every privilege which it seems to have been possible for the monarch to bestow, or for the subject to acquire. See Spelman in verb. Manerium.

The Leet is a Court of Record for the cognisance of criminal matters, or pleas of the crown, and necessarily belongs to the King; though a Subject, usually the Lord of a Manor, may be and is entitled to the profits, consisting of the essoign-pence, fines and amerciaments.

It is held before the steward, (or was, in antient times, before the bailiff) of the Lord; Mirror, passim: Finch's Law 248.—See also Kennet's P. A. 319.—This officer who should be a barrister of learning and ability, is a judge of record, may take recognizance of the peace, may fine, imprison, and in a word, as to things to which his power extends, hath equal power with the justices of the Bench.—By Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 5, he is prohibited from taking to the value of 12*d.* for his own use, by colour of any grant of the profits of this court.

This court is held sometimes once, sometimes thrice, but most commonly twice in the year; that is, within a month after Easter, and a month after Michaelmas; and cannot, unless by adjournment, be held at any time not warranted by antient usage. See Mag. Char. c. 35, and Spelman in v. Leta; according to whom this court should be held regularly only once a year; though sometimes by custom twice, when it is called residuum letæ. As to the place in which it is held, that, it has been said, may be any where within the precinct, 8 H. 7. 3: Owen 35; but more strictly speaking, ought to be certain and accustomed. Rastall's Entries 151.

All persons above the age of twelve years, and under sixty, except peers, clerks, women, and aliens, resiant within the district, whether masters or servants, owe personal suit and attendance to this court, and ought to be here sworn to their fealty and allegiance. 2 Inst. 120, 121.

121. And here alſo, by immemorial uſage and of common right, that moſt ancient conſtitutional officer the conſtable, (4 Inſt. 265,) and ſometimes by preſcription the mayor of a borough, (See Stat. 2 Geo. 1. c. 4,) are elected and ſworn.

The general juriſdiction of the court extends to all crimes, offences, and miſdemeanors at the Common law, as well as to ſeveral others which have been ſubjected to it by act of parliament. Theſe are enquired after by a body of the ſuitors, elected, ſworn and charged for that purpoſe, who muſt not be leſs than twelve, nor more than twenty-three; and who, in ſome manors, continue in office for a whole year; while, in others, they are ſworn and diſcharged in the courſe of a day. Whatever they find they preſent to the ſteward; who if the offence be treaſon or felony, muſt return the preſentment, (in theſe caſes called an indictment), to the King's juſtices of oyer and terminer, and gaol-delivery. See Stats. W. 2. c. 13: 1 E. 3. ſt. 2. c. 17. In all other caſes he has power, upon the complaint of any party grieved, or upon ſuſpicion of the concealment of any offence, to cauſe an immediate enquiry into the truth of the matter by another jury. See Stats. 33 H. 8. c. 6, and 1 Eliz. c. 17. § 10. But the preſentment, being received, and the day paſſed, ſhall be held true, and unleſs it concern the party's freehold, ſhall not be ſhaken or queſtioned by any tribunal whatever. Hale P. C. 153, 5: Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. 111, 112: and 11 Co. 44. Upon every preſentment of the jury retained by the court, an amerciament follows of courſe, which is afterwards aſſeſſed, in open court agreeable to Magna Charta, c. 14, by the pares curiæ, that is, the peers, or equals of the delinquent; and affeered or reduced to a preciſe ſum, by two or more ſuitors ſworn to be impartial. 8 Rep. 39. See alſo Stat. W. 1. c. 6. And that theſe ſtatutes were in this particular but in affirmation of the Common law, See 8 Rep. 39 b: 2 Inſt. 27. The amerciaments thus aſcertained are then eſtreated (or extracted) from the roll or book in which the proceedings are recorded and levied by the bailiff, by diſtreſs and ſale of the party's goods, (8 Rep. 41;) by virtue of a warrant from the ſteward to that effect, or may be recovered by other means as by proceſs of levari facias, (Hardr. 471,) or action of debt, (Bull. N. P. 167.) No crime in thoſe remote ages appears to have been puniſhed by death; unleſs it were that of open theft, where the offender was taken with the mainour, that is, with the thing ſtolen upon him: and of this crime, and this only, the cognizance did not belong to the Leet. All other offences of what nature or degree ſoever, ſubjected the party to mulct or pecuniary fine, which was, in many caſes determined and fixed. This pecuniary compoſition, with reſpect to certain capital offences, was abrogated, and the puniſhment of death ſubſtituted in its place by King Henry I. Spelman in v. Felo, Wilkinſ. LL. Sax. 304.

It is not improbable that the diſtinction of indictments for felonies, and preſentments of inferior offences, owes its origin to the above meaſure.

It has been ſaid, that by the clauſe nullus vicecomes, &c. in the Great Charter, c. 17, the juriſdiction of the Leet was abridged, and its power to hear and determine taken away; but this has been ſaid and repeated without due attention either to the nature and conſtitution of the court, or to the law of the time. No offence, it is well known, is at this day, or, for aught that appears, ever was, heard and determined in the Leet, (nor before the period referred to, by any other criminal-court in the kingdom), otherwiſe than upon the preſentment of twelve men, or what we now in moſt courts call the Grand Jury. This preſentment, as has been already obſerved, found and eſtabliſhed the fact; and judgment, whether of miſericordia, mutilation or death, followed as an incident or matter of courſe; preciſely, indeed, as the puniſhment does at this day on the verdict for the king of the petty jury. In fact, therefore, the juriſdiction of the Leet was not in the leaſt abridged or affected by that charter; nor is it at all probable that the barons would either ſeek or ſuffer the diminution of their own privileges, of which on the contrary, there is an expreſs ſaving.

That this court has no power to enquire of the death of a man, or of rape, is a more ancient, but not leſs erroneous opinion. The contrary is moſt directly and expreſsly held in the Statutum Walliæ, in Briton, Fleta, the Mirror, and the Stat. of 18 E. 2. (which ſtatute, though it enumerates certain particulars of the juriſdiction of the Leet does not confine it to them only); all much older and better authorities than the book of Aſſiſes, 41 E. 3. p. 40, in which that opinion firſt appears.

The ſteward of a Leet may award to priſon, perſons either indicted or accuſed of felony before him, or guilty of any contempt in the face of the court. Stat. Weſtm. 2. c. 13. which however ſeems to apply only to the ſheriff's tourn. See Cromp. J. P. 92 b: Ow. 113.

See further for the whole of this ſubject, Com. Dig. title Leet.

The Court-Leet has now been for a long time in a declining way; its buſineſs as well as that of the tourn having for the moſt part gradually devolved on the quarter ſeſſions. See 4 Comm. 274: 3 Burr. 1864.

This laſt circumſtance is very pathetically lamented by the ingenious author, from whom the above account of the Court-Leet is principally drawn; and to whom the editor of the preſent work is indebted for much of the information under title Conſtable. How far the reſtoration of the powers of the Court-Leet in the preſent extenſive deluge of crimes is adviſeable or not, is a queſtion not to be determined in the compaſs here allotted to the ſubject. Every one deſirous of being accurately informed of the foundations of the Engliſh law, will wiſh that the learned author from whom the above extracts have been made, would ſpend his time rather in examining the ancient, than condemning the preſent ſtate of our juriſprudence. For the former taſk he is eminently qualified; the latter is only worthy of inferior talents.

COURT OF MARSHALSEA, Curia palatii.] A court of record to hear and determine cauſes between the ſervants of the King's houſehold and others within the verge; and hath juriſdiction of all matters within the verge of the court, and of pleas of treſpaſs, where either party is of the King's family and of all other actions perſonal, wherein both parties are the king's ſervants; and this is the original juriſdiction of the court of marſhalſea. 1 Bulſt. 211. But the curia palatii, erected by King Charles I, by letters-patent, in the 6th year of his reign, and made a court of record, hath power to try all perſonal actions, as debt, treſpaſs, ſlander, trover, actions on the caſe, &c. between party and party, the liberty whereof extends tends twelve miles about Whitehall; Stat. 13 R. 2. ſt. 1. c. 3. Which juriſdiction was confirmed by King Charles II.

The judges of this court are the ſteward of the King's houſehold, and knight-marſhal for the time being, and the ſteward of the court, or his deputy, being always a lawyer. Crompt. Juriſd. 102: Kitch. 199, &c. 2 Inſt. 548.

This court is kept once a week, in Southwark: and the proceedings here are either by capias or attachment; which is to be ſerved on the defendant by one of the knight-marſhal's men, who takes bond with ſureties for his appearance at the next court; upon which appearance, he muſt give bail, to anſwer the determination of the court; and the next court after the bail is taken, the plaintiff is to declare, and ſet forth the cauſe of his action, and afterwards proceed to iſſue and trial by a jury, according to the cuſtom of the Common law courts. If a cauſe is of importance, it is uſually removed into B. R. or C. B. by an habeas corpus cum cauſa: otherwiſe cauſes are here brought to trial in four or five court-days. The inferior buſineſs of this court hath of late years been much reduced, by the new courts of conſcience in and near London; for which the four counſel belonging to the court were indemnified by ſalaries during their lives, by Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 27.

By Stat. 28 E. 1. c. 3, the ſteward and marſhal of the King's houſe are not to hold plea of freehold, &c. Error in the Marſhalſea court may be removed into the King's Bench. Stats. 5 E. 3. c. 2: 10 E. 3. ſt. 2. c. 3. And the fees of the Marſhalſea are limited by the Stat. 2 H. 4. c. 23 —This Marſhalſea is that of the houſhold; not the King's Marſhalſea, which belongs to the King's Bench. See Court of the Lord Steward, &c.

COURT-MARTIAL.

Curia Martialis.] A Court for trying and puniſhing the military offences of Officers and Soldiers.

I. Of the Origin,
II. Of the Juriſdiction, } Of Courts-Martial.

I. THOUGH the authority of the Court of Chivalry, with regard to matters of war, &c. both within and without the realm, not determinable by the general municipal law, was firſt eſtabliſhed by the Common law, and afterwards confirmed by ſeveral ſtatutes; and was never objected to, even in criminal caſes, till the poſt of High Conſtable was laid aſide; (See titles Conſtable; Court of Chivalry;) yet we find its juriſdiction encroached upon much earlier; for by the Stat. 18 H. 6. c. 19. deſertion from the King's army was made felony, and by Stats. 7 H. 7. c. 1: 3 H. 8. c. 5, benefit of Clergy is taken away, and authority given to juſtices of peace to enquire thereof, and hear and determine the ſame. And Rapin quotes an inſtance of H. VII, having ordered thoſe accuſed of holding intelligence with the enemy after the battle of Stoke, 1487, to be tried by commiſſioners of his own appointing, or by Courts-martial, according to the Martial law; inſtead of the uſual court of juſtice, which was not ſo favourable to his deſign of puniſhing them only by fines. This however ſeems to have been an avaricious, arbitrary and illegal exertion of power, not authoriſed by any law of the land.

From the time the Court of Chivalry was abridged of its criminal juriſdiction, by the ſuppreſſion of the poſt of High Conſtable until the Revolution, there appears to to have been no regular eſtabliſhed court for the adminiſtration of Martial law. For although the Court of Chivalry ſtill continued to be held from time to time by the Earl Marſhal, its authority extended only to civil matters; and notwithſtanding deſertion was by Stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 2, made felony without benefit of clergy, and other military crimes were made puniſhable by fines, impriſonment, &c. and by Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 17, idle and wandering ſoldiers and mariners were to be reputed as felons, and to ſuffer as in caſes of felony, without benefit of clergy (with ſome exceptions); and the juſtices of aſſiſe and gaol-delivery were to hear and determine theſe offences; yet there are inſtances during this period, of other courts being erected for the adminiſtration of Martial law; and not only military perſons made ſubject to it, but many others puniſhed thereby; ſome entirely at the diſcretion of the crown, and others by appointment of the parliament only; and it was a circumſtance of nearly a ſimilar nature, that occaſioned the enacting the Petition of Right 3 C. 1. c. 1; one clauſe of which was, that the commiſſions for proceeding by Martial law ſhould be diſſolved and annulled; and no ſuch commiſſion be iſſued for the future.

Though undoubtedly theſe commiſſions were illegal, yet the neceſſity of ſubordination in the army, and the impoſſibility of eſtabliſhing that ſubordination without Martial law, ſoon became apparent; and the two Houſes of Parliament, in the beginning of their rebellion againſt Charles I, paſſed an Ordinance, appointing commiſſioners to execute Martial law; which was certainly at leaſt as un-conſtitutional an act without the aſſent of the King, as any proceedings of his had been without conſent of Parliament. So true is it that Neceſſity has no law; and that uſurped power is always obliged to have recourſe to means to ſupport itſelf, at leaſt as ſevere as, and generally more violent than, thoſe which it previouſly condemns in a lawful government; which it may for a while ſucceed in overturning on falſe and ſpecious pretexts of undefined liberty.

This ordinance was paſſed in 1644, and afterwards renewed by the Parliament; and in proceſs of time adopted as a model for the Mutiny act paſſed after the Revolution: as many other regulations made during the powerful but tyrannical uſurpation of ſovereign authority, were afterwards modified to the true genius of the Britiſh conſtitution.

At the Reſtoration, one of the firſt ſteps taken by the parliament was, to diſband the army, and to regulate the militia, among whom a military ſubordination was eſtabliſhed, whenever they were drawn out; and fines and impriſonments impoſed on them for particular delinquencies. See title Militia.

Charles II. however kept up 5000 regular troops, for guards and garriſons, by his own authority; which his ſucceſſor, Jac. II. by degrees increaſed to 30,000 and more numerous armies were occaſionally raiſed by authority of parliament; yet we find no ſtatute for the government of theſe troops; nor was it till after the Revolution that a regular act of the whole Legiſlature paſſed for puniſhing mutiny and deſertion, &c. by Courts-martial.

This act was firſt occaſioned by a mutiny, in a body of Engliſh and Scots troops, upon their being ordered to Holland, to replace ſome of the Dutch troops which Will. III, had brought over with him and intended to keep in England. The King immediately communicated this event to the Parliament, who readily agreed to give their ſanction to puniſh the offenders, and on the 3d April 1689, (1 W. & M.) paſſed an act for puniſhing Mutiny and Deſertion, &c. which was to continue in force only until November following.—It was however renewed again in January, and has with the interruption of about three years only, from April 1698 to February 1701, been annually renewed ever ſince, with ſome occaſional alterations and amendments, as well in times of peace as war.

II. MARTIAL LAW, as formerly exerciſed at the diſcretion of the Crown, and too often made ſubſervient to bad purpoſes, juſtly became obnoxious to the people; and not only the propriety but the legality of its being executed in times of peace, has been abſolutely denied. It is laid down (3 Inſt. 52,) that if a lieutenant or other, that hath commiſſion of Martial-law, doth in time of peace, hang or otherwiſe execute any man by colour of Martial-law, this is murder, for it is againſt Magna Charta.—And Hale, (Hiſt. C. L. c. 2,) declares Martial law to be in reality no law, but ſomething indulged rather than allowed as law: that the neceſſity of order and diſcipline is the only thing which can give it countenance; and therefore it ought not to be permitted in time of peace, when the King's courts are open for all perſons to receive juſtice according to the laws of the land: and if a Court-martial put a man to death in time of peace, the officers are guilty of murder. See H. P. C. 46.

As future exigencies however have ariſen in the State, it has become neceſſary to alter and amend the old laws and enact new ones; and ſince the cuſtom of keeping up ſtanding armies in time of peace as well as war has become prevalent and general throughout Europe, (a cuſtom as it ſeems originally introduced by Charles VII. of France about 1445,) the Legiſlature of Great Britain has alſo judged it neceſſary, for the ſafety of the kingdom, the defence of its poſſeſſions, and the balance of power in Europe, (as the preamble to the Mutiny-act expreſſes it,) to maintain, even in times of peace, a ſtanding body of troops; and to authoriſe the exerciſe of Martial law among them.

A proper diſtinction then ſhould be made between Martial-law, as formerly executed, entirely at the diſcretion of the Crown, and unbounded in its authority, either as to perſons or crimes, and that at preſent eſtabliſhed, which is limited with regard to both.—Courts-Martial are at preſent held by the ſame authority as the other courts of judicature of this kingdom: and the King, (or his Generals, when empowered to appoint them) has the ſame prerogative of moderating the rigor of the law, and pardoning and remitting puniſhments, as in other caſes; but he can no more add to, nor alter the ſentence of a Court-martial, than he can a judgment given in the courts of law. Martial-law is now exerciſed within its proper limits, by the advice and concurrence of parliament, and the condemnation of criminals by Courts-martial acting under ſuch authority, cannot be regarded as illegal or contrary to Magna Charta; ſince during the exiſtence of the ſtatute by which theſe Courts are held, Martial-law, ſo modified and reſtrained, is as much part of the law of the land as Magna Charta itſelf.

Courts-Martial cannot ſit before 8 in the morning, or after 3 in the afternoon, except in caſes which require an immediate example: the attendance therefore of the members does not exceed 7 hours at a time: and they are at liberty to adjourn from day to day till they have fully conſidered the matter before them: and when they come to give their opinions, they are not under the neceſſity of being unanimous, but the priſoner is condemned or acquitted by a majority of voices; except in caſes of death, where 9 out of 13 or two thirds, if there be more than 13 preſent, muſt concur in opinion. Articles of War, § 15, a. 8, 9.

As to general Courts-martial, the Mutiny-act and Articles of War are very explicit, both as to the number they ſhall conſiſt of, and the rank of the officers who are to compoſe them: it being expreſsly directed, that no General Court-martial ſhall conſiſt of leſs than 13 members, whereof none are to be under the degree of a commiſſioned officer.—That the Preſident ſhall not be under the degree of a field officer, unleſs ſuch an one cannot be had, in which caſe the next in ſeniority to the commander, not being under the degree of a captain, ſhall preſide: and no field officer is to be tried by any perſon under the degree of a captain.—And it is a general cuſtom not to put ſubaltern officers, particularly thoſe but of ſhort ſtanding in the army, on General Courts-martial, provided a ſufficiency of field-officers and captains can be conveniently aſſembled. See Art. of War, § 15 a. 8, 9. 12: Mutiny-act, § 12.

Although a Preſident and 12 members are ſufficient to conſtitute a legal court, yet it is frequently judged neceſſary to aſſemble and ſwear in more; in order as far as poſſible to guard againſt accidents ariſing from ſickneſs, or other cauſes the non-attendance of ſome of the court. Whilſt there is a quorum of 13, the preſident included, of thoſe originally ſworn in, the court may proceed to buſineſs, although others of the court do not attend; but if it become neceſſary to call in a new member, the court muſt proceed de novo.

The Crimes that are cogniſable by a Court-martial, as repugnant to military diſcipline, are pointed out by the Mutiny-act and Articles of War; which every military man is or ought to be fully acquainted with, and therefore not neceſſary to be recited here: and as to other crimes which officers and ſoldiers being guilty of, are to be tried for in the ordinary courſe of law, it is needleſs to enter into a detail of them.

By the laſt article in the code of Military-laws, Courts-martial are authoriſed to take cogniſance of all crimes not capital, and all diſorders and neglects, which officers and ſoldiers may be guilty of, to the prejudice of good order and military diſcipline, which are not enumerated in the preceding articles, and puniſh them at their diſcretion. Art. of War, § 20 a. 3. Upon the authority of this article it has been too much the cuſtom in the army to try ſoldiers by Courts-martial, for thefts and other crimes cogniſable before the courts of law. But it ſeems queſtionable, whether an exception might not in many ſuch caſes be made to their juriſdiction: for the Mutiny-act, § 62, and Articles of War, § 11 a. 1, expreſsly direct, that any officer, non-commiſſioned officer or ſoldier who ſhall be accuſed of any capital crime, violence or offence, againſt the perſon, eſtate or property of any of his Majeſty's ſubjects, puniſhable by the laws of the land, ſhall be delivered over to the civil magiſtrate by the commanding officer, under penalty of his being caſhiered in caſe of refuſal.—There was formerly an article, of late omitted, particularly authoriſing Courts-martial to take cogniſance of all ſoldiers accuſed of ſtealing from their comrades.

The Perſons liable to Martial-law are likewiſe enumerated in the Act and the Articles. The latter mention only Officers, Soldiers and perſons ſerving with the armies in the field. But Hale and others are of opinion, that aliens who in a hoſtile manner invade the kingdom, whether their King were at war or peace with ours, and whether they come by themſelves or in company with Engliſh traitors, cannot be puniſhed as traitors, but muſt be dealt with by Martial-law. H. P. C. cc. 10, 15: 3 Inſt. 11.—This however means Martial-law in the ſtrict ſenſe of the word, in which it cannot be applied to proceedings under the Mutiny-act; and which kind of Martial law is unknown in this kingdom.—The receiving pay as a ſoldier, ſubjects the receiver to military juriſdiction. The court of C. P. therefore refuſed to grant a prohibition to prevent the execution of the ſentence of a Court-martial, paſſed againſt one who received pay as a ſoldier; but who aſſumed the military character merely for the purpoſe of recruiting, in the uſual courſe of that ſervice—and this though the proceedings of the Court-martial, appeared, in ſome inſtances, to be erroneous. Grant v. Sir Charles Gould, 2 H. Black. Rep. 69.

The Articles of War, in a few caſes, point out the expreſs Sentence to be paſſed on criminals, without any alternative: in ſome an optional power is given, of puniſhing with death or otherwiſe, and in others, offenders are puniſhed at the diſcretion of the Court, omitting the word death; evidently meaning thereby to exclude the power of puniſhing capitally in ſuch caſes.

In caſes where an optional power is veſted in the Court to puniſh with death or otherwiſe, the queſtion to follow that of guilty or not guilty, (upon the Court or the majority of it declaring for the former,) is, whether or not the priſoner ſhall ſuffer death? If two-thirds of the Court do not concur in the affirmative, the votes of the affirmants are conſidered as void. A leſſer number than two-thirds being, as was before ſaid, incompetent to give judgment of death, another queſtion becomes neceſſary to be propoſed to every member, what puniſhment, other than death, ſhall the priſoner undergo? And each member gives his voice, de novo, on this queſtion, wherein a majority is competent to determine.

The crimes cogniſable by a Court-martial may be divided into felonies and miſdemeanors; or more properly, into capital offences, and offences only criminal and not capital; and if on the evidence a priſoner does not appear guilty of a crime of ſo capital a nature, as is ſet forth in the charge, the Court may find him guilty in a leſs degree; but they cannot declare him guilty of a mutiny, or any other diſtinct crime or offence, unleſs it be likewiſe in the charge given againſt him, before the trial commences.

The judgments of Courts-martial, beſides being open to the diſapprobation of the King, or his commanders in chief, are liable like thoſe of other courts, to be taken cogniſance of, and the members puniſhed for illegal proceedings; for the Court of King's Bench being the ſupreme court of Common law, hath not only power to reverſe erroneous judgments given by inferior courts, but alſo to puniſh all inferior magiſtrates, and all officers of juſtice, for all wilful and corrupt abuſes of authority againſt the known, obvious, and common principles of juſtice. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 3. § 10: c. 27. § 22.—The Mutiny-act directs, that every action againſt any member or miniſter of a Court-martial, in reſpect to any ſentence, ſhall be brought in ſome of the courts of record at Weſtminſter, &c. § 63. And there have been many inſtances of proſecutions of this nature in Weſtminſter-hall.—An officer on a Court martial however is not liable to be puniſhed for mere miſtakes which an honeſt well-meaning man may innocently fall into. And if the plaintiff or proſecutor becomes nonſuited, or the defendant has a verdict, he ſhall recover treble coſts. Mutiny-act, § 62.—There is alſo another tribunal before which the proceedings of Courts-martial are liable to cenſure at leaſt, namely, the Houſe of Commons.

It is enacted by § 12 of the Mutiny-act, that no officer or ſoldier being acquitted or convicted of any offence, ſhall be liable to be tried a ſecond time by the ſame or any other Court-martial, for the ſame offence, unleſs in the caſe of an appeal from a regimental to a general Court-martial; and by the Articles of War "If upon a ſecond hearing the appeal ſhall appear to be vexatious and groundleſs, the perſon ſo appealing ſhall be puniſhed at the diſcretion of the General Court-martial."—No ſentence given by any Court-martial, and ſigned by the Preſident, is liable to be reviſed more than once. And this may be rather deemed an appeal to the ſame court than a new trial; ſince in this caſe the ſame perſons only are to re-conſider what they have already done, without any new judges being added to them, or any new witneſſes produced.

A diſtinction is made in the Oath taken by the Preſident and Members of a Court-martial, and that of the Judge-Advocate. The former are ſworn, not only to conceal the vote or opinion of each particular member, but alſo the ſentence of the Court, until it ſhall be approved by his Majeſty, or by ſome perſon duly authoriſed by him; the latter is only ſworn not to divulge the opinion of any particular member of the Court-martial.

For further particulars, See Adye's Treatiſe on Courts-Martial; from whence moſt of the above is abridged.—See alſo this Dict. title Soldiers.—And as to Naval Courts-martial, title Navy.

COURT OF PIEPOWDERS, curia pedis pulveriſati.] Is a court held in fairs, to do juſtice to buyers and ſellers, and for redreſs of diſorders committed in them: ſo called, becauſe they are moſt uſual in Summer, when the ſuitors to the court have duſty feet; and from the expedition in hearing cauſes proper thereunto, before the duſt goes off the feet of the plaintiffs and defendants. 4 Inſt. 272: or from Pied pouldreaux a pedlar. Barrington, Anc. Stats. 337. It is a court of record incident to every Fair; and to be held only during the time that the Fair is kept. Doct. & Stud. c. 5. As to the juriſdiction, the cauſe of action for contract, ſlander, &c. muſt ariſe in the fair or market, and not before at any former fair, nor after the fair: it is to be for ſome matter concerning the ſame fair or market; and muſt be done, complained of, heard and determined the ſame day. Alſo the plaintiff muſt make oath that the contract, &c. was within the juriſdiction and time of the fair. Stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 2: 2 Inſt. 220.

The Court of Piepowders may hold a plea of a ſum above 40*s.* and it is ſaid, judgment may be given at another other fair, at a court held there, and a writ of error lies upon a judgment given. Dyer 133: F. N. B. 18. This court may not meddle with any thing done in a market, without a ſpecial cuſtom for it; but for what is done in a fair only: and not there for ſlanderous words, unleſs they concern matters of contract in the fair; as where it is for ſlandering the wares of another, and not of his perſon in the ſame fair. Moor, Ca. 854. The ſteward before whom the court is held, is the judge: and the trial is by merchants and traders in the fair; and the judgment againſt the defendant ſhall be quod amercietur. If the ſteward proceeds contrary to the Stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 2, he ſhall forfeit 5 l.

From this court a writ of error lies in the nature of an appeal to the courts at Weſtminſter. Cro. Eliz. 773.—And thoſe courts are now bound by the Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. to iſſue writs of execution in aid of its proceſs, after judgment, where the perſon or effects of the defendant are not within the limits of this inferior juriſdiction.

COURT OF REQUESTS, curia requiſitionum.] Was a court of equity, of the ſame nature with the court of Chancery, but inferior to it; principally inſtituted for the relief of ſuch petitioners, as in conſcionable caſes addreſſed themſelves by ſupplication to his majeſty. Of this court, the Lord Privy Seal was Chief Judge, aſſiſted by the Maſters of Requeſts; and it had beginning about the 9 H. 7, according to Sir Julius Cæſar's Tractate on this ſubject: though Mr. Gwyn, in his Preface to his Readings, ſaith it began from a commiſſion firſt granted by King Hen. VIII.

This court having aſſumed great power to itſelf, ſo that it became burdenſome, Mich. anno 40 & 41 Eliz. in the court of Common Pleas it was adjudged, upon ſolemn argument, that the Court of Requeſts, was no court of judicature, &c. And by the Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 1. c. 10. it was taken away. 4 Inſt. 97.—See title Courts of Conſcience.

COURT OF THE LORD STEWARD OF THE KING'S HOUSE. The Lord Steward, or, in his abſence, the treaſurer and controller of the King's houſe, and Steward of the Marſhalſea, may inquire of, hear and determine in this court, all treaſons, murders, manſlaughter, bloodſheds, and other malicious ſtrikings, whereby blood ſhall be ſhed, in any of the palaces and houſes of the King; [or within the limits i. e. 200 feet from the gate. 4 Comm. 276;] or in any other houſe where his royal perſon ſhall abide. And this juriſdiction was given by the Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 12: 3 Inſt. 140. But this court was at firſt intended only to inquire of and puniſh felonies, &c. by the King's ſervants againſt any lord or other perſon of the King's council. 3 H. 7. c. 14.

COURT OF STAR-CHAMBER, Curia cameræ ſtellatæ.] A Court of very antient original, but new-modelled by Stats. 3 H. 7. c. 1: 21 H. 8. c. 20; which ordained, That the Lord Chancellor, Treaſurer, and Lord Privy Seal, calling a Biſhop, and Lord of the King's Council, and the two Chief Juſtices to their aſſiſtance, on bill or information might make proceſs againſt maintainors, rioters, perſons unlawfully aſſembling, and for other miſdemeanors, which, through the power and countenance of ſuch as did commit them, lifted up their heads above their faults, and puniſh them as if the offenders had been convicted at law, by a jury, &c. But this act was repealed, and the Court diſſolved by Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 1. c. 10; having been uſed to oppreſs the Subject, particularly in matters of ſtate.

COURTS OF UNIVERSITIES.] Theſe are the Chancellor's courts in the two Univerſities of England; Oxford and Cambridge. Which two learned bodies enjoy the ſole juriſdiction, in excluſion of the King's courts, over all civil actions and ſuits whatſoever, when a ſcholar or privileged perſon is one of the parties; excepting in ſuch caſes where the right of freehold is concerned. And theſe, by the Univerſity charter, they are at liberty to try and determine, either according to the Common law of the land, or according to their own local cuſtoms, at their diſcretion; which has generally led them to carry on their proceſs in a courſe much conformed to the civil law.

Theſe privileges were granted, that the ſtudents might not be diſtracted from their ſtudies by legal proceſs from diſtant courts, and other forenſic avocations.—The oldeſt charter, it appears, containing this grant to the Univerſity of Oxford, was 28 Hen. 3. A D. 1244. And the ſame privileges were confirmed and enlarged by almoſt every ſucceeding prince, down to King Henry VIII, in the fourteenth year of whoſe reign the largeſt and moſt extenſive charter of all was granted. One ſimilar to which was afterwards granted to Cambridge in the third year of Queen Elizabeth. But yet, notwithſtanding theſe charters, the privileges granted therein, of proceeding in a courſe different from the law of the land, were of ſo high a nature, that they were held to be invalid; for though the King might erect new courts, yet he could not alter the courſe of law by his letters patent. Therefore in the reign of Queen Elizabeth a ſtatute was paſſed, (13 Eliz. c. 29,) confirming all the charters of the two Univerſities, and thoſe of 14 Hen. 8: and 3 Eliz. by name. Which ſtatute eſtabliſhed this high privilege without any doubt or oppoſition. Jenk. Cent. 2. pl. 88: Cent. 3. pl. 33: Hard. 504: Godb. 201: Hiſt. C. L. 33.

This privilege, ſo far as it relates to civil cauſes, is exerciſed at Oxford in the Chancellor's court; the judge of which is the Vice-chancellor, his deputy, or aſſeſſor. From his ſentence an appeal lies to delegates appointed by the congregation; from thence to other delegates of the houſe of Convocation; and if they all three concur in the ſame ſentence it is final: at leaſt by the ſtatutes of the Univerſity (Tit. 21. § 18,) according to the rule of the civil law (Cod. 7. 70, 1). But, if there be any diſcordance or variation in any of the three ſentences, an appeal lies in the laſt reſort to judges delegates, appointed by the Crown under the great ſeal in Chancery. 3 Comm. 83—5.

COURTS OF WALES, Curiæ principalitatis Walliæ.] The Courts of the principality of Wales.

Theſe Courts upon the thorough reduction of that kingdom, and the ſettling of its polity in the reign of Hen. VIII. were erected all over the country; principally by the Stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 26, though much had before been done, and the way prepared by the Stat. of Wales, 12 Ed. 1, and other ſtatutes. By the Stat. of Hen. 8. before-mentioned, courts-baron, hundred, and county-courts are there eſtabliſhed as in England. A Seſſion is alſo to be held twice in every year in each county, by judges, (See Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 8,) appointed by the King. This Seſſion is to be called the Great Seſſions of the ſeveral counties in Wales; in which all pleas of real and perſonal actions ſhall be held, with the ſame form of proceſs, and in as ſimple a manner, as in the courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas, at Weſtminſter. See, for farther regulation of the practice of theſe courts, Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 25: 8 Eliz. c. 20: 8 Geo. 1. c. 25. § 6: 6 Geo. 2. c. 14: 13 Geo. 3. c. 51. Writs of error ſhall lie from judgments in this great ſeſſions, it being a court of record, to the Court of King's Bench at Weſtminſter. But the ordinary original writs of proceſs from the King's courts at Weſtminſter, do not run into the principality of Wales, (2 Rol. Rep. 141;) though proceſs of execution does; (2 Bulſt. 156: 2 Sand. 193: Raym. 206;) as do alſo prerogative writs, as writs of certiorari, quo minus, mandamus, and the like. Cro. Jac. 484.—And even in cauſes, between ſubject and ſubject, to prevent injuſtice through family factions or prejudices, it is held lawful (in cauſes of freehold at leaſt, and it is uſual in all others) to bring an action in the Engliſh courts, and try the ſame in the next Engliſh county, adjoining to that part of Wales where the cauſe ariſes, and wherein the venue is laid. Vaugh. 413: Hardr. 66. But, on the other hand, to prevent trifling and frivolous ſuits, it is enacted by Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 51, that in perſonal actions, tried in any Engliſh county, where the cauſe of action aroſe, and the defendant reſides in Wales, if the plaintiff ſhall not recover a verdict for 10*l.* he ſhall be nonſuited, and pay the defendant's coſts, unleſs it be certified by the judge that the freehold or title came principally in queſtion, or that the cauſe was proper to be tried in ſuch Engliſh county. And if any tranſitory action, the cauſe whereof aroſe, and the defendant is reſident in Wales, ſhall be brought in any Engliſh county, and the plaintiff ſhall not recover a verdict for 10*l.* the plaintiff ſhall be nonſuited, and ſhall pay the defendant's coſts, deducting thereout the ſum recovered by the verdict.

By Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 9, it is enacted, that ſheriffs in Wales, ſhall not hold to bail, on proceſs, iſſuing out of any of his Majeſty's courts of record at Weſtminſter, unleſs the debt be ſworn to be 20*l.*

CROCIA, The croſier or paſtoral ſtaff, ſo called a ſimilitudine crucis, which biſhops, &c. had the privilege to carry as the common enſign of their religious office; being inveſted in their prelacies, by the delivery of ſuch a croſier: hence the word crocia did ſometimes denote the collation to, or diſpoſal of biſhopricks and abbies, by the donation of ſuch paſtoral ſtaff; ſo as when the King granted large juriſdictions, exceptis crociis, it is meant, except the collation or inveſtiture of epiſcopal ſees, &c. Addit. to Cowel.—See title Biſhops.

CROCIARIUS, The crociary or croſs-bearer, who like our verger, went before the prelate, and bore his croſs. Liber de Miraculis Tho. Epiſc. Heref. MS. anno 1290.

CROFT, Sax. croftum and crofta.] A little cloſe adjoining to a dwelling-houſe; and encloſed for paſture or arable, or any particular uſe. In ſome old deeds crufta occurs as the Latin word for a croft; but cum toftis & croftis, is moſt frequent. Ingulph. It ſeems to be derived from the old Engliſh word creaft, ſignifying handy craft; becauſe ſuch grounds are uſually manured and extraordinarily dreſt by the hand and ſkill of the owner.—See Toft.

CROISES, and croiſado. See Croyſes.

CROK, crocus.] Turning up the hair into curls or croks; whence comes crook, crooked, &c. Pat. 21 H. 3.

CROP, croppa.] The ſeeds or products of the harveſt in corn, &c. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 82.

CROSS-BOWS, None ſhall ſhoot in, or keep any croſs-bow, hand-gun, hagbut, &c. but thoſe who have lands of the value of 100*l. per annum*: and no perſon ſhall travel with a croſs-bow bent, or gun charged, except in time of war; or ſhoot within a quarter of a mile of any city, or market-town, unleſs for defence of himſelf or his houſe, or at a dead mark, under the penalty of 10*l. Stat.* 33 H. 8. cap. 6.—See title Arms, Game.

CROSSES, By Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2, Croſſes, beads, &c. uſed by the Roman Catholicks, are prohibited to be brought into this kingdom, on pain of a præmunire, &c. In ancient times it was uſual for men to erect croſſes on their houſes, by which they would claim the privileges of the Templars to defend themſelves againſt their rightful lords; but this was condemned by the Stat. Weſtm. 2. c. 37. It was likewiſe cuſtomary in thoſe days to ſet up croſſes in places where the corps of any of the nobility reſted, as it was carried to be buried, that à tranſeuntibus pro ejus anima deprecetur. Walſing. anno 1291. There were ſeveral of theſe croſſes erected over England, eſpecially in honour of the reſting-places of our Kings, on their bodies being tranſmitted to any diſtant place for burial: but theſe ſuperſtitions ſunk in this kingdom with the Romiſh religion.

CROY, Marſh land. Ingulphus, p. 853.—Blount.

CROYSES, cruce ſignati.] Is uſed by Britton for pilgrims, becauſe they wear the ſign of the croſs upon their garments. Of theſe and their privileges, Bracton hath treated, lib. 5. part 2. cap. 2: part 5. cap. 9. Under this word are alſo ſignified the Knights of St. John of Jeruſalem, created for the defence of pilgrims; and likewiſe all thoſe perſons who in the reigns of K. Hen. II.: Ric. I.: Hen. III.: and Ed. I. cruce ſignati took upon them the croiſado, dedicating and liſting themſelves to the wars, for the recovery of Jeruſalem and the Holy Land. Greg. Syntag. lib. 15. cap. 13, 14. See a general account of the croiſades in Robertſon's Hiſt. Emp. C. V. vol. 1. p. 22, &c.

CROWN, See title KING.

CROWN-OFFICE. An Office belonging to the court of King's Bench, of which the King's Coroner or Attorney there is commonly Maſter. The Attorney General, and Clerk of the Crown exhibit informations in this office, for crimes and miſdemeanors; the one ex officio, and the other uſually by order of court; and here informations may be laid for offences and miſdemeanors at Common law, as for batteries, conſpiracies, libelling, nuiſances, contempt, ſeditious words, &c. wherein the offender is liable to pay a fine to the King. Finch 340: Show. 109.

By Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18, The Clerk of the Crown in B. R. is not to receive or file any information for treſpaſs, battery, &c. without expreſs order of court; nor to iſſue any proceſs without taking a recogniſance in 20*l.* penalty to proſecute with effect; and if the party appear, and the plaintiff do not procure a trial in a year, or if verdict paſs for the defendant, &c. the court ſhall award the defendant coſts: but this act doth not extend to informations in the name of the King's Coroner or Attorney, &c.

When a battery is committed privately, ſo that the perſon injured can make no proof thereof by witneſſes at law; it is uſual to bring an information in this office, or to prefer an indictment, the moſt legal method, where the party may be a witneſs for the King, it being his ſuit. See title Indictment, Information, King's Bench, Quo Warranto, &c.

CRUSTUM, Was a garment of purple, mixed with many colours. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. pag. 210.

CRY DE PAIS, On a robbery or other felony done, hue and cry may be raiſed by the country in the abſence of the conſtable, which is called cry de pais. 2 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 100.—See title Hue and Cry.

CRYPTA, A chapel or oratory under ground. Du Cange.

CUCKING STOOL, See title Caſtigatory.

CUI ANTE DIVORTIUM, A writ for a woman divorced from her huſband to recover her lands and tenements which ſhe had in fee-ſimple, or in tail, or for life, from him to whom her huſband did alienate them during the marriage, when ſhe could not gainſay it. Reg. Orig. 233: F. N. B. 240. And the heir ſhall have a ſur cui ante divortium, where the wife dieth before the action brought; as well as he ſhall have a ſur cui in vita. F. N. B. 193. But of an eſtate-tail, the heir ſhall not have ſur cui in vita, or ante divortium, but ſhall be put to his formedon in the deſcender. New Nat. Br. 454.—See title Entry.

CUI IN VITA, A writ of entry, for a widow againſt him to whom her huſband aliened her lands or tenements in his life-time; which muſt contain in it, that during his life ſhe could not withſtand it. Reg. Orig. 232: F. N. B. 193. If huſband and wife be jointenants before the coverture, and the huſband alieneth all the land, and dieth, ſhe ſhall have a cui in vita for a moiety, and no more: but if they are joint purchaſers, during the coverture, and he alien all the land, and dieth, his wife ſhall have a cui in vita of the whole land; becauſe that during the coverture, as to purchaſe, they are but one perſon in law. F. N. B. 187. And for this reaſon, if huſband and wife, and a third perſon, purchaſe jointly, and the huſband alieneth all in fee, and dieth, the wife ſhall have a cui in vita of a moiety. Ibid.

Where the huſband and wife exchange the lands of the wife for other lands, if the wife agree unto the exchange after the huſband's death, ſhe ſhall not have a cui in vita. Alſo if the wife do accept of parcel of the land in dower, of which ſhe hath a cui in vita, by that acceptance ſhe ſhall be barred of the reſidue. New Nat. Br. 430. If the huſband and wife loſe by default the wife's lands, after the death of her huſband, ſhe ſhall have a cui in vita to recover thoſe lands ſo loſt by default. F. N. B. 187. By Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 3, Cui in vita is given to the wife where the deceaſed huſband loſt her lands by default in his life-time: and ſhe ſhall be admitted to defend her right during his life, if ſhe come in before judgment. Likewiſe if tenant in dower, by the curteſy, or for life, do make default, &c. the heirs and they to whom the reverſion belongeth, ſhall be admitted to their anſwer, if they come before judgment: and if on default judgment happen to be given, ſuch heirs, &c. ſhall have a writ of entry for recovery of the ſame, after the death of ſuch tenants. See Booth on real actions, and F. N. B.— See the preceding article.

CULAGIUM, The laying up of a ſhip in the dock to be repaired. MS. Arth. Trevor. Arm. de Plac. Edw. 3.

CULM, See Coal.

CULPRIT, A priſoner accuſed for trial. The word aroſe originally from the reply of the proper officer in behalf of the King, affirming a criminal to be guilty, after he hath pleaded Not guilty, without which the iſſue to be tried is not joined: it is compounded of two words, viz. Cul and prit; the one an abbreviation of culpabilis, and the other derived from the French word preſt, i. e. ready; and it is as much as to ſay that he is ready to prove the offender guilty. See 4 Comm. 339.

CULTURA, A parcel of arable land. Blount.

CULVERTAGE, Culvertagium.] Is ſaid by ſome perſons to be derived from Culum & Vertere, to turn tail: and in this ſenſe, ſub nomine culvertagii, was taken to be on pain of cowardice, or being accounted cowards. And in this ſenſe Spelman in voc. Niderling derives it from Culver a dove. But in the opinion of others, it rather ſignifies ſome baſe ſlavery, or the confiſcation of an eſtate; being a feudal term for the lands of the vaſſal forfeited and eſcheating to the lord: and ſub nomine culvertagii, in this ſignification, was under pain of confiſcation. Matt. Paris. anno 1212.

CULWARD and CULVERD, A coward, or cowardice. Chart. Temp. E. 1.—See the preceding word.

CUNA CERVISIÆ, A tub of ale. Domeſday. But this word is truly Cuva.

CUNEUS, A mint or place to coin money: Cuneum monetum ſignifies the King's ſtamp for coinage; and from the word cune, is derived coin. See Coin.

CUNTEY-CUNTEY, A kind of trial, as appears by Bracton. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 3. c. 18, where it ſeems to intend the ordinary jury.

CURAGULUS, One who taketh care of a thing. Mon. Ang. tom. 2.

CURATE, Curator.] He who repreſents the incumbent of a church, parſon or vicar, and takes care of divine ſervice in his ſtead: in caſe of pluralities of livings, or where a clergyman is old and infirm, it is requiſite there ſhould be a Curate to perform the cure of the church. He is to be licenſed and admitted by the biſhop of the dioceſe, or, by an Ordinary, having epiſcopal juriſdiction: and when a Curate hath the approbation of the biſhop, he uſually appoints the ſalary too; and in ſuch caſe, if he be not paid, the Curate hath a proper remedy in the eccleſiaſtical court, by a ſequeſtration of the profits of the benefice; but if he hath no licence from the biſhop, he is put to his remedy at common law, where he muſt prove the agreement, &c. Right Clerg. 127.

By Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 11, ſuch as ſerve a church during its vacancy, ſhall be paid ſuch ſtipend as the Ordinary thinks reaſonable out of the profits of the vacancy; or if that be not ſufficient, by the ſucceſſor, within fourteen days after he takes poſſeſſion.

By Stat. 12 An. c. 12, where Curates are licenſed by the biſhop, they are to be appointed by him a ſtipend not exceeding 50*l. per ann.* nor leſs than 20*l.* a year, according to the value of the livings, to be paid by the rector or vicar: and the ſame may be done on any complaint made. One perſon cannot be Curate in two churches, unleſs ſuch may ſatisfy the law, by reading both morning and evening prayers at each place: nor can he ſerve one cure on one Sunday, and another cure on the next; for he muſt not neglect to read morning and evening prayer in his church every Lord's day; if he doth he is liable to puniſhment. Comp. Incumb. 572. But it is otherwiſe where a church or chapel is a member of the pariſh-church; and where one church is not able to maintain a curate. Can. 48.

A Curate having no fixed eſtate in his curacy, not being inſtituted and inducted, may be removed at pleaſure by the biſhop or incumbent. Noy. But there are perpetual curates, as well as temporary, who are appointed where tithes are impropriate, and no vicarage endowed: theſe are not removeable; and the impropriators are obliged to find them, ſome whereof have certain portions of the tithes ſettled on them. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 8.

It was provided in 1603 by Can. 33, that if a biſhop ordains any perſon not provided with ſome eccleſiaſtical preferment, except a fellow or chaplain of a College, or a Maſter of Arts of five years ſtanding, who lives in the Univerſity at his own expence, the biſhop ſhall ſupport him till he prefer him to a living. 3 Burn. Eccl. L. 28.—The biſhops before they confer orders require either proof of ſuch a title as is deſcribed by the canon, or a certificate from ſome Rector or Vicar, promiſing to employ the candidate for orders bonâ fide as a curate, and to grant him a certain allowance till he obtains ſome eccleſiaſtical preferment, or ſhall be removed for ſome fault. In a caſe where the Rector of St. Anne Weſtminſter gave ſuch a title, and afterwards diſmiſſed his

Curate

Curate without aſſigning any cauſe, the Curate recovered in an action of aſſumpſit the ſame ſalary for the time after his diſmiſſion which he had received before. Comp. 437.—When the Rector had vacated St. Anne's by accepting the living of Rochdale, the Curate brought another action to recover his ſalary after the Rector left St. Anne's; but the Court of K. B. held that that action could not be maintained: as theſe titles are only binding upon thoſe who give them, while they continue incumbents in the church for which ſuch Curate is appointed. Doug. 137.

No Curate (or Miniſter) ought to perform the duties of any church, before he has obtained a licence from the Biſhop. 2 Burn, 58.

The Biſhop cannot increaſe the ſalary of the Curate, where there is a ſpecific agreement between the Incumbent and the Curate. Freem. 70.

Every clergyman that officiates in a church, (whether incumbent or ſubſtitute) is in our liturgy called a curate: Curates muſt ſubſcribe the declaration, according to the act of Uniformity, or are liable to impriſonment, &c. See title Clergyman, Parſon, Advowſon, Chaplain, &c.

CURFEU, Fr. Couvrir, to cover; Feu, fire.] A bell which rang at eight o'clock in the evening, in the time of William the Conqueror; by which every perſon was commanded to rake up or cover over his fire, and put out his light: and in many places of England at this day, where a bell is cuſtomarily rung towards bed-time, it is ſaid to ring curfew. Stowe's Annals.

In the Welch language, curfa, ſignifies a beating; alſo, a ſtroke. Richards's Antiquæ Linguæ Britannicæ Theſaurus.

CURIA, This word was ſometimes taken for the perſons, as feudatory and other cuſtomary tenants, who did their ſuit and ſervice at the court of the lord. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 139. And it was uſual for the Kings of England, in ancient times, to aſſemble the Biſhops, Peers, and great men of the kingdom to ſome particular place, at the chief feſtivals in the year; and this aſſembly is called by our hiſtorians curia; becauſe there they conſulted about the weighty affairs of the nation. And it was therefore called Solemnis Curia, Auguſtalis Curia, Curia Publica, &c. See title Court, Witenagemote.

CURIA ADVISARE VULT, Is a deliberation which a Court of judicature ſometimes takes, where there is any point of difficulty, before they give judgment in a cauſe. New Book Entr. And when judgment is ſtaid, upon motion to arreſt it, then it is entered by the judges curia adviſare vult. Shep. Epit. 682.—See title Judgment.

CURIA CURSUS AQUÆ, A court held by the lord of the manor of Graveſend for the better management of barges and boats uſing the paſſage on the river Thames from thence to London, and plying at Græveſend bridge, &c. mentioned in Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 26.

CURIA CLAUDENDA, A writ to compel another to make a fence or wall, which he ought to make between his land and the plaintiff's, on his refuſing or deferring to do the ſame. Reg. Orig. 155. This writ doth not lie but againſt him who hath a cloſe adjoining to the plaintiff's land, who is obliged to incloſe it; and it lieth not but for him who hath a freehold, &c. It may be ſued before the ſheriff in the county-court, or in the common pleas: and the judgment is to recover the incloſure and damages. New Nat. Br. 282, 283. But, if the occupier of a cloſe adjoining to mine, ought to repair the fence between the cloſes, and do not, and his cattle ſtray into my cloſe and do damage, I may diſtrain them damage feaſant, or drive them out, and bring an action of treſpaſs. If my cattle ſtray into his cloſe and do damage, he has not a right to diſtrain them, nor can he ſupport treſpaſs againſt me for the ſame. Should my cattle after ſtraying into his cloſe, ſtray out of the ſame into any highway, or other place, and be loſt, or treſpaſs in the ground of a third perſon, and be by him diſtrained damage feaſant, and kept till replevied, or I have made ſatisfaction, I may maintain an action againſt the defaulter, i. e. againſt the occupier of the adjoining cloſe, for not repairing his fence, whereby ſuch damage hath happened to me. The writ of curia claudenda therefore is grown out of uſe. See title Treſpaſs.

CURIA DOMINI, The lord's houſe, hall or court, where all the tenants attend at the time of keeping courts.

CURIA PENTICIARUM, Is a court held by the ſheriff of Cheſter, in a place there called the Pendice or Pentice: and it is probable its being originally kept under a pent-houſe, or open ſhed covered with boards, gave it this denomination. Blount.

CURNOCK, A meaſure containing four buſhels, or half a quarter. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 12.

CURRICULUS, The year, or courſe of a year: Actum eſt hoc annorum Dominicæ incarnationis quatuor quinquagenis & quinquies, quinis luſtris, & tribus curriculis. This is the year 1028; for four times 50 make 200, and five times 200 make 1000. Then five luſtra are twenty-five years, and three Curriculi, three years; making in all the very year. Blount.

CURRIERS, Perſons that curry and dreſs leather. No currier ſhall uſe the trade of a butcher, tanner, &c. or ſhall curry ſkins inſufficiently tanned, or gaſh any hides of leather, on pain of forfeiting for every hide or ſkin 6*s.* 8*d.* And perſons in London putting leather to be curried to any but freemen of the Curriers' Company; and ſuch curriers not currying the leather ſufficiently, ſhall forfeit the ware or the value, &c. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22. The clauſe relating to freemen is repealed; but if any currier do not curry leather ſent him, within ſixteen days between Michaelmas and Lady-Day, and in eight days at other times, on conviction before a juſtice, he ſhall forfeit 5*l.* to be levied by diſtreſs, &c. yet ſubject to mitigation. 12 Geo. 2. c. 25. Curriers and ſuch as deal in leather, may cut and ſell it in ſmall pieces in their ſhops to any perſons whatſoever. Stat. Ibid.—See titles Leather, Skins, &c.

CURSING, See Swearing.

CURSITORS, Clerici de Curſu.] Clerks belonging to the Chancery, who make out original writs; and are called Clerks of Courſe, in their oath appointed 18 Ed. 3. ſtat. 5. There are of theſe clerks twenty-four in number, which make a corporation of themſelves; and to each clerk is allotted a diviſion of certain counties, in which they exerciſe their functions. 2 Inſt. 670.—See title Proceſs.

CURSONES TERRÆ, Ridges of land. Stat. 14 Ed. 2.

CURSORIÆ, A ſort of light ſhips or ſwift ſailors. Hoveden R. 1.

CURTESY OF ENGLAND, Jus Curialitatis Angliæ.] Is where a man taketh a wife ſeiſed in fee-ſimple, or fee-tail general, or as heireſs in ſpecial tail, and hath iſſue by her, male or female, born alive, which by any poſſi-

bility may inherit, and the wife dies; the husband holds the lands during his life; and is called Tenens per legem Angliæ, or Tenant by the curtesy of England. See title Tenures III. 9.—Though this is called the Curtesy of England, it appears to have been the established law of Scotland, where it was called Curialitas.—It is likewise used in Ireland by virtue of an ordinance of H. III.—So that probably the word curtesy is in this sense understood rather to signify an attendance upon the lord's courts, than to denote any peculiar favour. See 2 Comm. 126.

Four things are requisite to give an estate by the curtesy, viz. Marriage, seisin of the wife, issue, and death of the wife. Co. Lit. 30. If land descend to the wife after the husband hath issue by her; or if the issue be dead at the time of her death, being born alive; the husband shall be tenant by the curtesy. Also if a child is born alive, it is not material whether it is baptised, or ever heard to cry, to make the husband tenant by the curtesy; for if it is born alive, it is enough. Dy. 25: 8 Rep. 34.

The words in the general editions of Littleton, 1 Inst. 29, are oyes ou vife, but in Letton and Machlinia's edition they are neez vif, and are translated by Lord Coke, born alive. May not the word vife in the first instance have been an error for vife, meaning thereby that the issue must be heard, or seen; so as to ascertain its being alive?

But the child must be such as by possibility may inherit; and therefore if land be given to a woman, and the heirs male of her body, and she takes husband and hath issue a daughter, and dies; as this issue cannot possibly inherit, the husband shall not be tenant by the curtesy. Terms de Ley.

If the child is rip'd forth of the mother's belly, after her death, though it be alive, it will not cause tenancy by the curtesy; for this ought to begin by the issue, and be consummate by the death of the wife, and the estate of tenant by the curtesy should avoid the immediate descent. Ibid. A man shall not be tenant by the curtesy of a bare right, title, use, reversion, &c. expectant upon an estate of freehold, unless the particular estate is determined during the coverture; nor of a seisin in law: but if a wife dies before a rent becomes due; or in the case of an advowson, before the church becomes void; the husband shall be tenant by the curtesy, though the wife had only a seisin in law; for in this case no other seisin could be attained. F. N. B. 149: Co. Lit. 29, 30, 40.

Though in strictness of law there cannot be curtesy of Trusts, yet since Lord Coke's time our courts of equity have allowed curtesy, both of trusts and other interests which though in law mere rights and titles, are deemed estates in equity; and made to conform to many of the rules and consequences incident to estates in law. See in 1 Atk. 603, the case of Cashborn v. English, in which Hardwicke C. decreed curtesy of an equity of redemption. See S. C. more fully reported in Vin. tit. Curtesy, E. pl. 23. However, a wife may in point of benefit have a trust of inheritance, which may be so declared as to prevent curtesy; as by directing the profits during the wife's life to be paid for her separate use; for in such case the intention to exclude the husband from curtesy is manifest, and he cannot have an equitable seisin. 3 Atk. 715. It is also proper to remark that though curtesy out of a trust is allowed, yet dower has been refused; a distinction not easily reconcilable with reason, however settled by the current of authorities. See 1 Inst. 29 a; n. 6.

As to Curtesy in Titles and Offices of honour, See 1 Inst. 29 b; and Mr. Hargrave's learned notes there, by which it seems that no such curtesy can take place; though the question appears not to be settled, a decision having been repeatedly avoided thereon.

There is no tenancy by the curtesy of copyhold lands, except there be a special custom for it. But in gavelkind lands, a husband may be tenant by the curtesy without having issue. 1 Inst. 30. But it is only of a moiety of the wife's land, and ceases if the husband marries again. Robinf. Gavelk. l. 2. c. 1. Where a husband is entitled to this tenancy, if after the wife is an idiot, and her estate in the land found: when she dies, he shall not be tenant by the curtesy, for the King's title by relation prevents it. Plowd. 263. If the wife be seised in fee of lands, and attaint of felony, but have issue by her husband, and she is hanged, &c. it is said the husband shall be a tenant by the curtesy: but yet the land will be forfeited; according to Kitch. 159: 21 Ed. 3. 49.

A woman seised of land had two daughters, and covenanted to stand seised to the use of E. her eldest daughter in tail; on condition that she should pay to her other daughter within a certain time 300*l.* And if E. made default, or died without issue before such payment, then the land to go to the second daughter; the mother dying, E. took a husband, and had issue, and died afterwards without any issue living, before the day of payment: it was here held, that her husband should be tenant by the curtesy. 1 Leon. ca. 233.—See Kitch. 159.

CURTEYN, Curtana.] The name of King Edward the Confessor's sword; which is the first sword carried before the Kings of England at their coronation: and it is said the point of it is broken as an emblem of mercy. Mat. Paris. in Hen. III.

CURTILAGE, Curtilagium, from the Fr. Cour, Court, and Sax. Leagh locus.] A court-yard, back-side, or piece of ground lying near and belonging to a dwelling house. See Stats. 4 Ed. 1. c. 1: 35 H. 8. c. 4: 39 Eliz. c. 10: 6 Rep. 64. and Spelm. And though it is said to be a yard or garden, belonging to a house; it seems to differ from a garden, for we find, cum quodam gardino & curtilagio. 15 Ed. 1. n. 34.

CURTILES TERRÆ, Court lands. It is recorded, that among our Saxon ancestors, that the Thanes or nobles who possessed Bockland, or hereditary lands, divided them into Inland and Outland: the Inland was that which lay most convenient for the lord's mansion-house; and therefore the lords kept that part in their own hands, for the support of their families, and for hospitality: afterwards the Normans called these lands Terras Dominicales, the demains, demesnes, or lord's lands: the Germans termed them Terras Indominicatas, lands in the lord's own use: and the Feudists, Terras Curtiles, lands appropriate to the court or house of the lord. Spelm. of Feuds, c. 5.

CUSTANTIA, Custagium, costs.

CUSTODE ADMITTENDO, AND CUSTODE AMOVENDO, writs for the admitting or removing of Guardians. Reg. Orig.

CUSTODES LIBERTATIS ANGLIÆ AUTHORITATE PARLIAMENTI, The stile in which writs and all judicial process did run during the grand rebellion, from the murder of King Charles I. till the Usurper Oliver was declared Protector, &c. mentioned and declared traiterous, by Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 3.

CUSTODIAM

CUSTODIAM DARE, Was taken for a gift or grant for life. Du Cange.

CUSTOM, consuetudo.] Is a law not written, established by long usage, and the consent of our ancestors. No law can oblige a free people without their consent: so wherever they consent and use a certain rule or method as a law, such rule, &c. gives it the power of a law; and if it is universal, then it is common-law: if particular to this or that place, then it is custom. 3 Salk. 112. As to the rise of customs, when a reasonable act once done was found to be good and beneficial to the people, then they did use it often; and by frequent repetition of the act, it became a custom; which being continued without interruption time out of mind, it obtained the force of a law, to bind the particular places, persons, and things concerned therein. Thus a custom had beginning and grew to perfection.

To make a particular custom good, the following are necessary requisites.

1. Antiquity.—That it have been used so long, that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. So that, if any one can show the beginning of it, within legal memory, that is within any time since the first year of Richard I. it is no good custom. For which reason no custom can prevail against an express act of parliament, since the statute itself is a proof of a time when such a custom did not exist. Co. Lit. 113. Therefore a custom that every pound of butter sold in a certain market, should weigh eighteen ounces, is bad; being directly contrary to Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 26, which directs it to contain 16 oz. 3 Term Rep. 271.

2. It must have been continued. Any interruption would cause a temporary ceasing: the revival gives it a new beginning, which will be within time of memory, and thereupon the custom will be void. But this must be understood with regard to an interruption of the right; for an interruption of the possession only, for ten or twenty years, will not destroy the custom. Co. Lit. 114. As if the inhabitants of a parish have a customary right of watering their cattle at a certain pool, the custom is not destroyed, though they do not use it for ten years; it only becomes more difficult to prove: but if the right be any how discontinued for a day, the custom is quite at an end.

3. It must have been peaceable, and acquiesced in; not subject to contention and dispute. Co. Lit. 114. For as customs owe their original to common consent, their being immemorially disputed, either at law or otherwise, is a proof that such consent was wanting.

4. Customs must be reasonable; (Litt. § 212;) or rather, taken negatively, they must not be unreasonable. Which is not always, as Sir Edward Coke says, (1 Inst. 62,) to be understood of every unlearned man's reason, but of artificial and legal reason, warranted by authority of law. Upon which account a custom may be good, though the particular reason of it cannot be assigned; for it sufficeth, if no legal reason can be assigned against it. Thus a custom in a parish, that no man shall put his beasts into the common till the third of October, would be good; and yet it would be hard to show the reason why that day in particular is fixed upon, rather than the day before or after. But a custom, that no cattle shall be put in till the lord of the manor has first put in his, is unreasonable, and therefore bad: for peradventure the lord will never put in his; and then the tenants will lose all their profits. Co. Copyh. § 33.

5. Customs ought to be certain. A custom, that lands shall descend to the most worthy of the owner's blood, is void: for how shall this worth be determined? But a custom to descend to the next male of the blood, exclusive of females, is certain, and therefore good. 1 Ro. Abr. 565. A custom to pay two-pence an acre in lieu of tithes, is good; but to pay sometimes two-pence, and sometimes three-pence, as the occupier of the land pleases, is bad for its uncertainty. Yet a custom to pay a year's improved value for a fine on a copyhold estate, is good; though the value is a thing uncertain; for the value may be ascertained at any time; and the maxim of law is, id certum est, quod certum reddi potest.—A custom that poor house-keepers shall carry away rotten wood in a chase is bad; being too vague and uncertain. 2 Term Rep. 758.

6. Customs, though established by consent, must be (when established) compulsory; and not left to the option of every man, whether he will use them or no. Therefore a custom that all the inhabitants shall be rated toward the maintenance of a bridge, will be good; but a custom, that every man is to contribute thereto at his own pleasure is idle and absurd; and indeed no custom at all.

7. Lastly, customs must be consistent with each other: one custom cannot be set up in opposition to another. For if both are really customs, then both are of equal antiquity, and both established by mutual consent: which to say of contradictory customs is absurd. Therefore if one man prescribes that by custom he has a right to have windows looking into another's garden, the other cannot claim a right by custom to stop up or obstruct those windows: for these two contradictory customs cannot both be good, nor both stand together. He ought rather to deny the existence of the former custom. 9 Rep. 58: See Doug. 190.

As to the Allowance of special customs. Customs in derogation of the Common law must be construed strictly. This rule is founded upon the consideration that a variety of customs in different places upon the same subject is a general inconvenience: the courts therefore will not admit such customs but upon the clearest proofs. 1 Term Rep. 466. Thus by the custom of gavelkind, an infant of fifteen years may by one species of conveyance (called a deed of feoffment) convey away his lands in fee-simple. Yet this custom does not empower him to use any other conveyance, or even to lease them for seven years, for the custom must be strictly pursued. Co. Cop. § 33.—And moreover all special customs must yield to the King's prerogative. Therefore if the King purchases land of the nature of gavelkind, where all the sons inherit equally; yet on the King's demise, his eldest son shall succeed to those lands alone. Co. Litt. 15.

A custom contrary to the public good, or injurious to a multitude, and beneficial only to some particular persons, is repugnant to the law of reason, and consequently void. 2 Danv. 424, 427. Customs ought to be beneficial to all, but may be good where against the interest of a particular person, if for the public good. Dyer 60. A custom is not unreasonable for being injurious to private persons or interests, so as it tends to the general advantage of the people. 3 Salk. 112.

A custom may be good in some cases where a prescription is not: But customs that are good for the substance and matter of them, may yet be bad for the manner; if they are uncertain, or mixed with any other cuſtom that is unreaſonable, &c. 2 Bulſt. 166: 2 Brownl. 198.

A Cuſtom extends over ſome place or vill: A preſcription extends only to particular perſons. Hardw. 293. A preſcription muſt always be had by way of que eſtate. Ibid. See title Preſcription.

Cuſtom that every one who paſſeth over ſuch a bridge, within the lord's manor, and which the lord doth repair, ſhall pay him one penny, is a good cuſtom; but if it be to pay the lord 12*d.* it will be naught, for it is unreaſonable. Calth. Cop. 35: 1 Bulſt. 203.

A cuſtom that a lord ſhall have within his manor liberam faldam, or free-fold throughout the village; and that no other ſhall have it but by agreement with him, and if any take it, the lord may abate the ſame; this hath been held a good cuſtom. 1 Rol. 560. Cuſtom for inhabitants, as ſuch, to have common adjudged void. Gatewood's caſe. 6 Co. 60. A cuſtom, that tenants of a manor ſhall grind all the corn they ſpend in their own houſes, in the lord's mill, &c. is good: But a cuſtom that every inhabitant of a houſe held of the lord, ſhall grind the corn that he ſpends, or ſhall ſell, at his mill, is void. Moor, ca. 1217: Hob. 149. Cuſtom to have a common bakehouſe in a manor or pariſh, for all the tenants or inhabitants, is a good cuſtom. 2 Bulſt. 198.

Cuſtom is and muſt always be alledged to be in many perſons; and ſo it may be claimed by copyholders, or the inhabitants of a place, and when it is claimed, it muſt be as within ſuch a county, hundred, city, borough, manor, pariſh, hamlet, &c. Co. Lit. 110, 113: 4 Rep. 31. A good cuſtom or preſcription hath the force of a grant; as where one and his anceſtors have had a rent time out of mind, and uſed to diſtrain, &c. But a cuſtom that begins by extortion of lords of manors, is judged wanting a lawful commencement, and therefore void: and where cuſtom is amongſt many, and they are all dead but one, the cuſtom is gone. Plowd. 322: Dyer 199.

Cuſtoms for an eldeſt daughter to inherit, or a youngeſt ſon, may be good: For theſe, though contrary to a particular rule of law, may have a reaſonable beginning. Nelſ. Abr. 579. And by cuſtom a woman may be endowed of a moiety of the huſband's lands, &c. Alſo by cuſtom, infants may bind themſelves apprentices, &c. 2 Danv. Abr. 438.

Regularly a man cannot alledge a cuſtom againſt a ſtatute, becauſe that is the higheſt matter of record in law: But a cuſtom may be alledged againſt a negative ſtatute, which is made in affirmance of the Common law, 1 Inſt. 115. Acts of parliament do not always take away the force of cuſtoms. 2 Danv. Abr. 436. A cuſtom is to be poſitively alledged, by uſage in fact. Lutw. 1319.

General cuſtoms which are uſed throughout England, and are the Common law, are to be determined by the judges: But particular cuſtoms, ſuch as are uſed in ſome certain town, borough, city, &c. ſhall be determined by a jury. Doct. & Stud. c. 7, 10: 1 Inſt. 110. Conſuetudo pro lege ſervatur, &c. ſaith Bracton, lib. 3. c. 3. And cuſtom is ſaid to be altera lex: But the judges of the court of B. R. or C. B. can over-rule a cuſtom though it be one of the cuſtoms of London, if it be againſt natural reaſon, &c. 1 Mod. 212.

The law takes particular notice of the cuſtom of Gavelkind and Borough-Engliſh; (Co. Litt. 175;) and there is no occaſion to prove that ſuch cuſtoms actually exiſt, but only that the lands in queſtion are ſubject thereto. All other private cuſtoms muſt be particularly pleaded; (Lit. § 265;) and as well the exiſtence of the cuſtom muſt be ſhewn, as that the thing in diſpute is within the cuſtom alleged. The trial in both caſes is by a jury of 12 men, and not by the judges; except the ſame particular cuſtom has been before tried, determined and recorded in the ſame court. Doct. & Stud. 1, 10: 1 Comm. 76.

As to the manner of laying a cuſtom, and the difference between alledging a thing by way of cuſtom, or by way of preſcription, See 6 Co. 60: Hob. 113: Cro. Eliz. 441: Poph. 201: Style 479: 1 Lev. 176: 1 Vent. 386: 3 Lev. 160: Carth. 192. See further title Preſcription, and as to particular cuſtoms relative to Inheritance, Dower, &c. See titles Copyhold; Gavelkind, &c.

THE CUSTOMS OF LONDON, differ from all others in point of trial, for if the exiſtence of the cuſtom be brought in queſtion, it ſhall not be tried by a jury, but by certificate of the Lord-Mayor and Aldermen, by the mouth of the Recorder. Cro. Car. 516.—Unleſs it be ſuch a cuſtom as the Corporation itſelf is intereſted in, as a right of taking toll, &c. for then the law permits them not to certify in their own behalf. Hob. 85.—And when a cuſtom has once been certified by the Recorder, the judges will take notice of it, and will not ſuffer it to be certified a ſecond time. Dougl. 365.—As to the form in which the recorder ſhall certify a cuſtom, See 1 Burr. 248.

Theſe Cuſtoms of London relate to divers particulars, with regard to trade, apprentices, widows, orphans, &c. As to the cuſtom relative to the diſtribution of a freeman's eſtate, and which now in conſequence of Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 18. § 17, extends only to caſes of inteſtacy, or expreſs agreements made in conſideration of marriage, See title Executor, V. 9.—As to the cuſtom of Foreign Attachment, See title Attachment Foreign.—As to the cuſtom of a feme covert being a ſole trader, See titles Baron & Feme; Bankrupt.—And further in more particular detail, as to the general and local cuſtoms of London, See this Dict. under title London.

It is ſaid, 1 Ro. Rep. 106, that the courts at Weſtminſter of courſe take notice of the cuſtoms of London, but not of any other place.—But this is only where they have been certified; See ante title Cuſtom.

The cuſtoms of London are confirmed by act of parliament. 8 Rep. 126: Cro. Car. 347.

THE CUSTOM OF MERCHANTS, Lex Mercatoria.] A particular ſyſtem of cuſtoms uſed only among one ſet of the King's ſubjects; which however different from the rules of the Common law, is yet ingrafted into it, and made part of it; being allowed for the benefit of Trade, to be of the utmoſt validity in all commercial tranſactions; for it is a maxim in law that cuilibet in arte ſuâ credendum eſt. 1 Comm. 75.

It ſeems that this Cuſtom of Merchants, is only ſo far conſidered as law, that it affords the rule of conſtruction in caſes of contracts, agreements, &c. and other tranſactions in Trade and Commerce. Mr. Chriſtian in his note on the above paſſage of the Commentaries, truely remarks, that the lex mercatoria like the lex & conſuetudo parliamenti, deſcribes only a great diviſion of the laws of England. The laws relating to bills of exchange, inſurance, and all mercantile contracts are as much the general law of the land, as the laws relating to marriage or murder.—And the opinion of Mr. Juſtice Foſter is, that the Cuſtom of Merchants is the general law of the kingdom, and therefore ought not to be left to a jury after it has been ſettled by judicial determinations. 2 Burr. 1226.

See further more particularly as to the effect and influence of this Cuſtom of Merchants, under Bankrupt; Bill of Exchange; Factor; Inſurance; Partnerſhip, and other titles in this Dictionary.

CUSTOMS ON MERCHANDISE. Theſe are enumerated, (1 Comm. 313.) among the perpetual taxes; and are there explained to be the Duties, Toll, Tribute or Tariff payable upon merchandize exported and imported.

The conſiderations, ſays the Commentator, upon which this revenue, or the more antient part of it which aroſe only from exports, was inveſted in the King, were ſaid to be two.—1. Becauſe he gave the ſubject leave to depart the kingdom, and to carry his goods along with him.—2. Becauſe the King was bound of common right to maintain and keep up the ports and havens, and to protect the merchants from pirates. Dyer 165.—Some have imagined they were called with us cuſtoms, becauſe they were the inheritance of the King, by immemorial uſage, and the common-law, and not granted him by any Stat. Dy. 43. pl. 24.—But Sir Edward Coke, 2 Inſt. 58, 9, hath clearly ſhewn that the King's firſt claim to them was, by grant of parliament. 3 E. 1. And indeed this is in expreſs words confeſſed by Stat. 25 E. 1. c. 7; wherein the King promiſes to take no cuſtoms from merchants without the common aſſent of the realm "ſaving, to us and our heirs, the cuſtoms on wool, ſkins and leather formerly granted to us by the commonalty aforeſaid." Theſe were formerly called the hereditary Cuſtoms of the Crown, and were due on the exportation only of the ſaid three commodities, and of none other: which were ſtiled the ſtaple commodities of the kingdom, becauſe they were obliged to be brought to thoſe ports where the King's ſtaple was eſtabliſhed, in order to be there firſt rated and then exported. Danv. 9. They were denominated in the barbarous Latin of our antient records, cuſtuma; not conſuetudines, which is the language of our law, whenever it means merely uſages. The duties on wool, ſheep-ſkins, or wool-fells, and leather, exported, were called cuſtuma antiqua ſive magna; and were payable by every merchant, as well native as ſtranger; with this difference, that merchant-ſtrangers paid an additional toll, viz. half as much again as was paid by natives. The cuſtuma parva et nova were an impoſt of 3 d. in the pound, due from merchant ſtrangers only, for all commodities as well imported as exported; which was uſually called the aliens' duty, and was granted in 31 Edw. 1: 4 Inſt. 29. But theſe antient hereditary cuſtoms, eſpecially thoſe on wool and wool-fells, came to be of little account, when the nation became ſenſible of the advantages of a home manufacture, and prohibited the exportation of wool by St. 11 Ed. III. c. 1.

There is alſo another very antient hereditary duty belonging to the crown, called the priſage or butlerage of wines: which is conſiderably older than the cuſtoms, being taken notice of in the great roll of the Exchequer, 8 Ric. 1. ſtill extant. Madox. Hiſt. Exch. 526, 532. Priſage was a right of taking two tons of wine from every ſhip (Engliſh or Foreign) importing into England twenty tons or more; one before, and one behind, the maſt: which by charter of Edw. 1, was exchanged into a duty of 2 s. for every ton imported by merchant ſtrangers, and called butlerage, becauſe paid to the King's butler. Dav. 8: 2 Bulſt. 254: Stat. Eſta. 16 Edw. 2: Com. Journ. 27, Apr. 1689.

Other Cuſtoms payable upon exports and imports were diſtinguiſhed into ſubſidies, tonnage, poundage and other impoſts. Subſidies were ſuch as were impoſed by parliament upon any of the ſtaple commodities before mentioned over and above the cuſtuma antiqua et magna: tonnage was a duty upon all wines imported, over and above the priſage and butlerage aforeſaid: poundage was a duty impoſed ad valorem, at the rate of 12 d. in the pound on all other merchandiſe whatſoever, and the other impoſts were ſuch as were occaſionally laid on by parliament, as circumſtances and times required. Dav. 11. 12.

Theſe diſtinctions are now in a manner forgotten, except by the officers immediately concerned in this department; their produce being in effect all blended together, under the one denomination of The Cuſtoms.

By theſe we underſtand, at preſent, a duty or ſubſidy paid by the merchant, at the quay, upon imported as well as exported, commodities, by authority of parliament; unleſs where, for particular national reaſons, certain rewards, bounties or drawbacks, are allowed for particular exports or imports. Thoſe of tonnage and poundage, in particular, were at firſt granted, as the old ſtatutes (and particularly 1 Eliz. 19,) expreſs it, for the defence of the realm, and the keeping and ſafeguard of the ſeas, and for the intercourſe of merchandiſe ſafely to come into and paſs out of the ſame. They were at firſt uſually granted only for a ſtated term of years, as, for two years in 5 Ric. II. Dav. 12. but in Henry the Sixth's time, they were granted him for life by a ſtatute in the thirty-firſt year of his reign; and again to Edward IV, for the term of his life alſo: ſince which time they were regularly granted to all his ſucceſſors for life, ſometimes at the firſt, ſometimes at other ſubſequent parliaments, till the reign of Charles the Firſt.

Upon the Reſtoration, this duty was granted to King Charles the Second for life, and ſo it was to his two immediate ſucceſſors; and by three ſeveral Stats. 9 Ann. c. 6: 1 Geo. 1. c. 12: 3 Geo. 1. c. 7, it was made perpetual and mortgaged for the debt of the Public. The cuſtoms thus impoſed by parliament were, till the Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. contained in two books of rates, ſet forth by parliamentary authority; Stat. 12 Car. II. c. 4: 11 Geo. 1. c. 7. Aliens uſed to pay a larger proportion than natural ſubjects, generally called the aliens' duty; now repealed by Stat. 24 Geo. III. ſeſſ. 2. c. 16. except as to ſcavage duties granted to the city of London.

By Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, called the Conſolidation-act, all the former ſtatutes impoſing duties of cuſtoms and exciſe, were repealed with regard to the quantum of the duty; and the two books of rates above-mentioned were declared to be of no avail for the future; but all the former duties were conſolidated, and were ordered to be paid according to a new book of rates annexed to that ſtatute. Before this act was paſſed it could not be ſuppoſed that many perſons beſides Exciſe-men and Cuſtom-houſe-officers could be acquainted with the various duties payable upon the different articles of commerce, which, in many inſtances, were numerous on the ſame article, and lay diſperſed among many acts of parliament. But now by this excellent improvement, may be found the duty upon the importation or exportation of any article; or what exciſe duty any commodity is ſubject to, in an alphabetical table.

Bullion, Wool, and ſome few other commodities may be imported duty-free. All the articles enumerated in the tables or book of rates pay upon importation or exportation, the ſum therein ſpecified, according to their weight, number or meaſure. And all other goods and merchandize, not being particularly enumerated or deſcribed, and permitted to be imported and uſed in Great Britain, ſhall pay upon importation 27 l. 10 s. per cent. ad valorem, or for every 100 l. of the value thereof; but ſubject to a draw-back of 25 l. per cent. upon exportation. Very few commodities pay a duty upon exportation; but where that duty is not ſpecified in the tables, and the exportation is not prohibited, all articles may be exported without payment of duty, provided they are regularly entered and ſhipped; but on failure thereof, they are ſubject to a duty of 5 l. 10 s. per cent. ad valorem. And to prevent frauds, in the repreſentation of the value, a very ſimple and equitable regulation is preſcribed by the act, viz. the proprietor ſhall himſelf declare the value, and if this ſhould appear not to be a fair and true eſtimate, the goods may be ſeized by the proper officer; and four of the commiſſioners of the cuſtoms may direct that the owner ſhall be paid the price, which he himſelf fixed upon them with an advance of 10 l. per cent. beſides all the duty which he may have paid; and they may then order the goods to be publickly ſold, and if they raiſe any ſum beyond what was paid to the owner, and the ſubſequent expences, one half of the overplus ſhall be paid to the officer who made the ſeizure, and the other half to the publick revenue.—This ſtatute (ſays Mr. Chriſtian in his note on 1 Comm. 316, from whence the above is extracted) is of infinite conſequence to the commercial part of the world; it has reduced an important ſubject from a perfect chaos, to ſuch a plain and ſimple form, as to induce every friend to his country to wiſh that ſimilar experiments were made upon other confuſed and entangled branches of our Statute law.

For further matter relating to, or at leaſt intimately connected with, the above ſubject, See titles Navigation-act; Smugglers.

If goods and merchandize are brought by a merchant to a port or haven, and there part thereof ſold, but never put on land, they muſt pay the cuſtoms; and diſcharging them out of the ſhip into another upon the ſale, amounts in law to a putting them upon the land, ſo that if the cuſtom duties are not paid, the goods will be forfeited. Hill. 24 Eliz. 12 Co. 18.

A very great number of Acts of Parliament have been paſſed to prevent frauds in this branch of the revenue, as well as in the Exciſe; and it is more to be wiſhed than hoped, that the meaſure, purſued reſpecting the quantum of the duties, by the Conſolidation act, could be followed by a general act reſtraining every fraud, and containing every regulation, with a preciſe ſtatement of the puniſhment for each offence. But while the diſhoneſt are ingenious to find out means of evading the moſt explicit laws, the honeſt part of the Community muſt forgive the length and intricacy of ſtatutes which ultimately ſecure their liberty and property.

The following are ſhort extracts of ſuch ſtatutes as ſeem moſt material to the preſent purpoſe; beſides thoſe already mentioned.

By Stat. 14 R. 2. c. 10, no Cuſtomer or comptroller of the cuſtoms, ſhall have any ſhips of his own, or meddle with the freight of ſhips. And by Stat. 20 H. 6. c. 5, no ſearcher, ſurveyor, &c. or their clerks, deputies, or ſervants, may have any ſuch ſhips of their own; nor ſhall uſe merchandize, keep a wharf, inn or tavern, or be factor, attorney, &c. to a merchant, under the penalty of 40 l.—By Stat. 3 H. 6. c. 3, Cuſtomers, collectors, or comptrollers, ſhall not conceal cuſtoms duly entered and paid, on pain to forfeit the treble value of merchandize ſo cuſtomed, and to make fine and ranſom to the king. By Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. § 19. If any perſons employed about the cuſtoms and ſubſidies take a bribe, or connive at any falſe entry, they ſhall forfeit 100 l. and be incapable of any employment under the king; and the perſon giving the bribe ſhall forfeit 50 l.—By Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 11 § 24, &c. if an officer of the revenue, ſhall make any colluſive ſeizure of foreign goods, to the intent the ſame may eſcape payment of the duties, he is to forfeit 500 l. and be incapable of ſerving his Majeſty: and the importer and owner ſhall forfeit treble the value of the goods ſo colluſively ſeized, &c.—By Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 28. § 7, officers of the cuſtoms, &c. are not to trade in brandy, coffee, &c. or any exciſeable liquor, on pain of 50 l. and forfeiture of offices.

Officers of the cuſtoms may ſearch ſhips. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. § 4. Having writ of aſſiſtance, may ſearch houſes, § 4. The penalty of abuſing officers, § 6. keepers of wharfs, quays, &c. landing or ſhipping goods, without the preſence of ſome officer of the cuſtoms, ſhall forfeit 100 l.

By Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 21, Where officers of the Cuſtoms are hindered in the execution of their duty, by perſons armed to the number of eight, the offenders are to be tranſported for ſeven years.

By Stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 18, If any goods are put into any veſſel to be carried beyond ſea: or be brought from beyond ſea, and unſhipped to be landed, the duties not being paid, nor agreed-for at the Cuſtom houſe; the ſame ſhall be forfeited, one moiety to the king, the other to the ſeizer, &c. And by ſubſequent ſtatutes, foreign goods taken in at ſea, by any coaſting veſſel, &c. ſhall be forfeited, and treble value.

By Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 35, Where three perſons are aſſembled and armed with fire-arms, &c. to be aſſiſting in the running of goods, they ſhall be guilty of felony and tranſported, and 50 l. be paid for apprehending ſuch offenders: alſo the like reward to any of them for diſcovering others. All perſons two or more in company, found paſſing within five miles from the ſea-coaſts, with any horſes, cart, &c. wherein are put above ſix pounds of tea, or five gallons of brandy, or other foreign goods of 30 l. value, landed without entry, and not having permits, and who ſhall carry offenſive weapons, &c. or aſſault any of the officers, of the Cuſtoms, ſhall be adjudged runners of goods, and be tranſported as felons, and all the goods to be ſeized and forfeited: and ſuſpected perſons lurking near the coaſts, not giving a good account of themſelves, may be ſent by a juſtice to the houſe of correction for a month; and informers to have 20 s. for every offender ſo taken.

If

If any perſon offers any tea, brandy, &c. to ſale, without a permit, the perſons to whom offered may ſeize and carry it to the next warehouſe belonging to the Cuſtoms or Exciſe; and the ſeizers ſhall have a third part, &c. And watermen, carmen, porters, &c. in whoſe cuſtody run goods are found, ſhall forfeit treble value, or be committed for three months.

Ships and veſſels from foreign parts, having on board tea, or brandy, rum, &c. in caſks under ſixty gallons, (except for the uſe of ſeamen) found at anchor or hovering near any port, or within two leagues of the ſhore, and not proceeding in their voyages, unleſs in caſes of unavoidable neceſſity, all ſuch tea, &c. ſhall be forfeited.

Perſons offering any bribe to officers of the Cuſtoms, to connive at the running of goods, to forfeit 50 l. and obſtructing ſuch officers in entering or ſearching ſhips, incurs a forfeiture of 100 l. And if an officer be wounded or beaten on board a ſhip, the offenders to be tranſported, &c.

By Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 34, If any perſons, to the number of three, or more, armed with offenſive weapons, ſhall be aſſembled in order to be aiding in the illegal exportation of goods prohibited to be exported, or the running uncuſtomed goods, or the illegal relanding any goods, or reſcuing the ſame, after ſeizure, from any officer, or from the place where they ſhall be lodged, or in the reſcuing any perſon apprehended for any offence made felony by any act relating to the Cuſtoms or Exciſe, or preventing the apprehending any perſon guilty of any ſuch offence; or in caſe any perſons to the number of three, or more, ſo armed, ſhall be ſo aſſiſting, or, if any perſon ſhall have his face blacked, or wear any maſk, or other diſguiſe, when paſſing with ſuch goods, or ſhall forcibly hinder, obſtruct, aſſault, oppoſe, or reſiſt any officer of his majeſty's revenue, in ſeizing ſuch goods, or ſhall maim or dangerouſly wound any ſuch officer in his attempting to go on board any veſſel, or ſhoot at or dangerouſly wound any ſuch perſon when on board and in the execution of his office, every ſuch perſon ſhall be guilty of felony, and ſuffer death. § 1.

On information on oath of any perſon's being guilty of any of the above offences, the juſtice may certify the information to one of the Secretaries of State, who is to lay it before his Majeſty; whereupon his Majeſty may make an order, requiring the offender to ſurrender himſelf in forty days after publication thereof in the Gazette; and in default thereof, the order being publiſhed twice in the Gazette, and proclaimed in two markets near where the offence was committed, and a copy thereof affixed in ſome public place there, the offender ſhall be attainted of felony, and ſuffer death. § 2. Any perſon harbouring or aiding any ſuch offender after the time for his ſurrender expired, knowing him to have been ſo required to ſurrender, being proſecuted within a year, ſhall be tranſported for ſeven years. § 3. Offences made felony by this act, may be ſued in any county. § 5.

If any officer, &c. in the ſeizing, &c. ſuch goods, or in the endeavouring to apprehend any ſuch offender, ſhall be beat, wounded, maimed, or killed, or the goods be reſcued, the inhabitants of the rape, lath or hundred, unleſs the offender be convicted within ſix months, ſhall forfeit 100 l. to the executors of any officer killed; and pay damages to any officer beat, &c. not exceeding 40 l. and for any goods reſcued, not exceeding 200 l. § 6. A reward of 500 l. for apprehending any offender; a perſon wounded in apprehending an offender to have 50 l. extraordinary, and the executors of a perſon killed, to have 100 l. § 10.

By Stat. 13 & 14. Car. 2. c. 11, Ships and veſſels outward-bound, are not to take in any goods, till the veſſel, &c. is entred with the collectors of the Cuſtoms; and before departure, the contents of the lading are to be brought in under the hands of the laders, &c. Alſo when ſhips arrive from beyond ſea, the maſters are to make a true entry upon oath, of the lading, goods, ſhip, &c. under the penalty of 100 l. And if any concealed goods are found after clearing, for which the duties have not been paid, the maſter of the veſſel ſhall be ſubject to the like penalty.

CUSTOMS AND SERVICES, belonging to the tenure of lands, are ſuch as tenants owe unto their lords; which being with-held from the lord, he may have a writ of cuſtoms and ſervices. See titles Conſuetudinibus & Servitiis.

CUSTOMARY FREEHOLD See title Copyhold.

CUSTOS BREVIUM, A principal clerk belonging to the court of Common Pleas, whoſe office is to receive and keep all the writs returnable in that court, and put them upon files, every return by itſelf; and to receive of the prothonotaries all the records of niſi prius, called the Poſteas; for they are firſt brought in by the clerk of aſſiſe of every circuit to the prothonotary, who enters the iſſue in the cauſes, to enter the judgment: and four days after the return thereof, the prothonotary enters the verdict and judgment thereupon, into the rolls of the court; whereupon he afterwards delivers them over to the cuſtos brevium who binds them into a bundle. He makes entry likewiſe of all writs of covenant, and the concord upon every fine; and maketh forth exemplifications, and copies of all writs and records in his office, and of all fines levied.

The fines after they are egroſſed, are divided between the cuſtos brevium and the chirographer; the chirographer always keeps the writ of covenant and the note, and the cuſtos brevium the concord and the foot of the fine; upon which foot of the fine the chirographer cauſeth the proclamations to be indorſed, when they are proclaimed. This officer is made by the king's letters patent: and in the court of King's Bench, there is alſo a cuſtos brevium & rotulorum, who fileth ſuch writs as are in that court filed, and all warrants of attorney, &c. and whoſe buſineſs it is to make out the records of niſi prius, &c. See titles Chirographer; Common Pleas.

CUSTOS ROTULORUM, Keeper of the Rolls or records of the county. The officer who hath the cuſtody of the rolls or records of the ſeſſions of the peace, and alſo of the commiſſion of the peace itſelf. He is always a juſtice of the peace of the quorum in the county where appointed, and uſually ſome perſon of quality: but he is rather termed an officer or miniſter, than a judge. Lamb. Eiren lib. 4. cap. 3. p. 373. By Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 1, (altered by Stat. 3 & 4 E. 6. c. 1, but reſtored by 1 W. & M. c. 21,) the Cuſtos rotulorum in every county, is appointed by a writing ſigned by the King's hand, which ſhall be a warrant to the Lord

Lord Chancellor to put him in commiſſion: and he may execute his office by deputy; and hath power to appoint the clerk of the peace, &c. See title Clerk of the Peace. The Cuſtos rotulorum, two juſtices of the peace, and the clerk of the peace, are to inroll deeds of bargain and ſale of lands of papiſts, &c. by 3 Geo. 1. cap. 18. See title Papiſts.

DALMATICA, A garment with large open ſleeves, at firſt worn only by biſhops, though ſince made a diſtinction of degrees; ſo called, becauſe it came originally from Dalmatia.

DALUS, DAILUS, DAILIA, A certain meaſure of land.—Et totam Dailiam mariſci tam de roſſa quam de prato, &c. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 211. In ſome places it is taken for a ditch or vale, whence comes dale. The dali prati have been eſteemed ſuch narrow ſlips of paſture, as are left between the ploughed furrows in arable land: which in ſome parts of England are called doles: the preſent Welch uſe this word for low meadow by the river ſide. And this ſeems to be the original name and nature of Deal in Kent, where Cæſar landed, and fought the Britons: Cæſar ad Dole bellum pugnavit.—Cowel.

DAMAGES.

DAMNA.] This term ſignifies generally any hurt or hindrance that a man receives in his eſtate: but particularly, a part of what the jurors are to enquire of and bring in, when an action paſſeth for the plaintiff: for after verdict given of the principal cauſe, the jury are aſked touching coſts and damages, which comprehend a recompence for what the plaintiff hath ſuffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant. Co. Lit. 257. This word damage is taken in law, in two ſeveral ſignifications, the one properly and generally, the other relatively: properly, as it is in caſes wherein damages are founded upon the ſtatutes where coſts are included within the word damages, and taken as damages.

But when the plaintiff declares for the wrong done to him, to the damage of ſuch a ſum, this is to be taken relatively for the wrong which paſſed before the writ brought, and is aſſeſſed by reaſon of the foregoing treſpaſs, and cannot extend to coſts of ſuit, which are future, and of another nature. 10 Rep. 116, 117. See title Coſts.

I. In what Actions Damages may be recovered, and againſt whom.
II. How Damages are to be aſſeſſed, increaſed, and mitigated.

I. In perſonal and mixed actions, damages were recovered at Common law: But in real actions, no damages were recoverable, becauſe none were demanded by the count or writ: Whereas in actions perſonal, the plaintiff counts ad dampnum for the injury; and if he recovers no damages, he hath no coſts. 10 Rep. 111, 117. In a perſonal action, the plaintiff ſhall recover damages only for the tort done before the action brought; and therein he counts for his damages: In a real action, he recovers his damages pending the writ; and therefore never counts for his damages. 10 Rep. 117. By the Stat. of Glouc. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 1, damages are given in real actions, aſſiſes of novel diſſeiſin, mort d' anceſtor, &c. and ſhall be recovered againſt the alienee of a diſſeiſor, as well as againſt the diſſeiſor himſelf; and the demandant ſhall have of the tenant likewiſe coſts of ſuit; but not expences for trouble and loſs of time. 2 Inſt. 288. See further the ſaid Stat. 6 Ed. 1. c. 1: Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 10: 2 Inſt. 284, 286: 2 Danv. Abr. 448.

No damages could be recovered at the Common law, but againſt the wrong-doer, and by him to whom the wrong was done. 2 Inſt. 284. Damages ſhall be recovered in writ of admeaſurement of dower; but not in a writ of admeaſurement of paſture. 2 Danv. 457. In writ of partition, by one co-parcener againſt another, it is ſaid no damages ſhall be had. In a formedon, no damages ſhall be recovered: ſo in a nuper obiit, writ of account, writ of execution, &c. Ibid. 455, 456. Damages and coſts are due in a writ of annuity; and if the jury find for the plaintiff, and do not aſſeſs damages, it will be error; though he may after verdict releaſe the damages, and take judgment for the annuity. 11 Rep. 56: Dyer 320, 369.

In battery, impriſonment, and taking of goods, againſt three perſons; one commits the battery, another the impriſonment, the third takes the goods, all at one time, all are guilty of the whole, and to be charged in damages. 3 Lev. 324. See 10 Rep. 66, 69.

II. In real actions, damages are aſſeſſed by writ of inquiry: When the jury find the iſſue for the plaintiff, they are to aſſeſs the damages. And in actions upon the caſe, &c. where damages are uncertain, it is left to the jury to inquire of them: In debt, which appears certain to the court what it is, the damages aſſeſſed by the jury are ſmall, in fact only nominal, as one ſhilling; and the maſter in B. R. taxeth the coſts; which are added thereto, and called damages. 1 Lill. 390. When judgment is given by default, in action of debt, the court is to aſſeſs the damages, and not the jury; So if judgment by nil dicit, in action of debt.

Where exceſſive damages have been given, or there hath been any miſdemeanor in executing a writ of inquiry; the court hath ſometimes relieved the defendant by a new writ of inquiry. 2 Danv. 464. And where damages are exceſſive, on motion, the defendant may have a new trial. Sytle 465: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 587. In treſpaſs againſt two, one comes and pleads Not guilty, and it is found againſt him; and afterwards another comes and pleads the like, and is found Guilty by another inqueſt; in

In this caſe, the firſt jury ſhall aſſeſs all the damages for the treſpaſs. New Nat. Br. 236. Treſpaſs againſt divers defendants, they plead Not guilty ſeverally, and the jury finds them all Guilty: The jury muſt aſſeſs the damages jointly, for it is but one entire treſpaſs, and made joint by the declaration. 11 Rep. 5.

If action is brought for two ſeveral cauſes of action, one of which is not actionable, if intire damages are given, the verdict is void: Contra if the damages are ſevered. And where damages are intirely aſſeſſed, and they ought not to be given for ſome part; no judgment can be given on the verdict. 10 Rep. 130. Where damages are awarded for delay of execution, and being kept out of the money, they are uſually aſſeſſed by allowing the party what lawful intereſt he might have. 1 Salk. 208.

For money lent, intereſt ſhall be given from the time the money was payable, to the time of liquidating the debt, by the court's giving judgment. 2 Burr. 1081, 6.—So on a bill of exchange, it is uſual to calculate the intereſt up to the time when judgment may be entered up. And it is now ſettled as a general rule, that where a new action may be brought, and a new ſatisfaction obtained on that, for duties or demands ariſen ſince the commencement of the depending ſuit, theſe ſhall not be included in the judgment on the former action. But where the intereſt is an acceſſory to the principal, and the plaintiff cannot bring a new action for intereſt grown due between the commencement of the action and judgment it ſhall be included. Id. 1086, 7.—As to intereſt from the time of the original judgment to the affirmance, in caſe of a writ of error. See Doug. 752 in n: 2 Term Rep. 57, 59, 78, and the Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 10.—A jury may, and now frequently do, give intereſt on book-debts in the name of damages, See Doug. 676.

Where the plaintiff ſhall have no more coſts than damages, unleſs the jury finds more than 40*s.* See title Coſts.

In action upon the caſe the jury may find leſs damages than the plaintiff lays in his declaration; but ought not to find more, though coſts may be increaſed beyond the ſum mentioned in the declaration for damages: The plaintiff may releaſe part of the damages, upon entering up his judgment. 10 Rep. 115. If he does not, but takes judgment for damages (excluſive of coſts) to a larger amount, than laid in the declaration, it is error, and not within any of the ſtatutes of amendment or jeofails, Sandiford v. Been. MSS. In debt againſt a ſheriff or gaoler for an eſcape, the jury cannot give a leſs ſum than the creditor would have recovered againſt the priſoner, viz. the ſum indorſed on the writ and the legal fees of execution. 2 Term Rep. 126.

In actions upon any bond, &c. for non-performance of covenants, the jury ſhall aſſeſs damages for thoſe the plaintiff proves broken; and the plaintiff may aſſign as many breaches as he thinks fit. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. See titles Bond; Covenants. In debt for a penalty in articles the jury ought to aſſeſs damages on the breach aſſigned, under this ſtatute, and ſhall not find the debt. 2 Wilſ. 377.

Damages are not to be given for that which is not contained in the plaintiff's declaration; and only for what is materially alleged. 1 Lill. 381.

When damages double or treble are given in an action newly created by ſtatute; if no damages were formerly recoverable, there the demandant or plaintiff ſhall recover thoſe damages only, and ſhall not have coſts, being a new creation in recompence where there was none before: As upon Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12, for driving of diſtreſſes out of the hundred, &c. whereby damages are given, the plaintiff ſhall recover no coſts, only his damages, becauſe this action is newly given. But in an action upon the Stat. 8 H. 6. c. 9, of forcible entry, which giveth treble damages, the plaintiff ſhall recover his damages and his coſts to the treble amount, by reaſon he was entitled to ſingle damages before by the Common law; and the ſtatute, as part of the damages, increaſes the coſts to treble; and when a ſtatute increaſes damages, coſts ſhall likewiſe be increaſed. 2 Inſt. 289: 10 Rep. 116.

Double, treble damages, &c. are allowed, in ſeveral caſes, by a very great variety of ſtatutes; as, for not ſetting forth tithes; diſtreſſes wrongfully taken; reſcous, though if it be not found by the jury, that the plaintiff hath ſuſtained ſome damage, in caſes where treble damages, &c. are inflicted by law, no damages can be awarded. 2 Danv. Abr. 449.

How damages given to a perſon ſued for an act done in the execution of his office, are to be aſſeſſed and recovered, See Valentine and Faweet, Hardw. 138, 139.

Plaintiff may take judgment de melioribus damnis where ſeveral damages are given, or enter a remittitur. Sabin v. Long, 1 Wilſ. par. 1. fo. 30.

The court in their diſcretion may increaſe the damages in mayhem. Brown v. Seymour, Wilſ. par. 1. fo. 5. and vide 3 Salk. 115: 2 Inſt. 200: 2 Danv. 449, 452.

In what caſes double, treble, and quadruple damages are given, ſee the ſeveral ſtatutes, and further as to Damages in general, Com. Dig. in title Damages.

DAMAGE-CLEER, damna clericorum.] Was a fee aſſeſſed of the tenth part in the Common Pleas, and the twentieth part in the King's Bench and Exchequer, out of all damages exceeding five marks, recovered in thoſe courts, in actions upon the caſe, covenant, treſpaſs, battery, &c. wherein the damages were uncertain; which the plaintiff was obliged to pay to the prothonotary, or the chief officer of the court wherein recovered, before he could have execution for the damages: this was originally a gratuity given to the prothonotaries and their clerks, for drawing ſpecial writs and pleadings; but it is taken away by ſtatute, and if any officer in the King's courts, take any money in the name of damage-cleer, or any thing in lieu thereof, he ſhall forfeit treble the value. Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 6.

DAMAGE-FEASANT, or faiſant.] Is when a ſtranger's beaſts are found in another perſon's ground without his leave or licence, (and without the fault of the poſſeſſor of the cloſe, which may happen from his not repairing his fences,) and there doing damage, by feeding, or otherwiſe, to the graſs, corn, woods, &c. In which caſe, the tenant whom they damage, may diſtrain and impound them, as well by night as in the day, leſt the beaſts eſcape before taken; which may not be done for rent, ſervices, &c. only in the day-time. Stat. 51 H. 3. ſtat. 4: 1 Inſt. 142. If a man take my cattle, and put them into the land of another, the tenant of the land may take theſe cattle damage-feaſant, though I who am the owner, was not privy to the cattle's being there damage-feaſant; and he may keep them againſt me till ſatisfaction of the damages. 2 Danv. Abr. 364.

But

But if one comes to diſtrain damage-feaſant, and to ſeize the cattle, and the owner drives them out before they are taken, he cannot diſtrain them damage-feaſant, but is put to his action of treſpaſs; for the cattle ought to be actually upon the land damage feaſant, at the time of the diſtreſs. 1 Inſt. 161: 9 Rep. 22. He that hath but the poſſeſſion of, and no title to the land, may juſtify taking a diſtreſs damage-feaſant. Plowd. 431. If a man puts cattle to paſture at ſo much a week with another, who after gives notice that he will not have them there any longer; in this caſe the owner of the ground may diſtrain them damage-feaſant, though the cattle be in lawfully at firſt: ſo where a leſſee holds after his eſtate is ended. 43 Ed. 3: Keilw. 69. But the owner of the cattle ſhould have proper notice and reaſonable time allowed for taking away his cattle.

Beaſts belonging to the plough, or beaſts of huſbandry, ſheep, horſes joined to a cart, and it is ſaid a horſe with a rider on it, may be diſtrained damage-feaſant, though not for rent. 1 Sid. 422, 440. But the owner may tender amends, before the cattle are impounded; and then the detainer is unlawful: alſo if when impounded the pound door is open, the owner may take them out. 5 Rep. 76.

A greyhound may be taken damage-feaſant, running after conies in a warren: ſo a man may take a ferret that another hath brought into his warren, and taken conies with. If a perſon bring nets and gins through my warren, I cannot take them out of his hands. 2 Danv. 633. But if men are rowing up my water, and endeavouring with nets to catch fiſh in my ſeveral piſcary, I may take their oars and nets, and detain them as damage-feaſant, to ſtop their further fiſhing; though I cannot cut their nets. Cro. Car. 228. See titles Diſtreſs; Treſpaſs.

DAM, A boundary, or confinement; as to dam up, or dam out: infra damnum ſuum, within the bounds or limits of his own property or juriſdiction. Bract. lib. 2. c. 37.

DAMISELLA, A light damoſell or miſs. Stat. 12 Ed. 1. See Pimp-Tenure.

DAMNUM ABSQUE INJURIA. If one man keeps a ſchool in ſuch a place, another may do ſo likewiſe in the ſame place, though he draw away the ſcholars from the other ſchool; and this is damnum abſque injuria, a loſs without an injury; but he muſt not do any thing to diſturb the other ſchool. 3 Salk. 10.

DAN. Anciently the better ſort of men in this kingdom had the title of Dan; as the Spaniards Don, from the Lat. Dominus.

DANEGELT, or DANE-GELD, danegildum.] Is compounded of the words dane and gelt, money or tribute, and was a tax of 1 s. and after of 2 s. upon every hide of land through the realm, laid upon our anceſtors the Saxons by the Danes, when they lorded it here. Camd. Brit. 83, 142. According to ſome accounts, this tax was levied for clearing the ſeas of Daniſh pirates; which heretofore greatly annoyed our coaſts: but King Ethelred being much diſtreſſed by the continual invaſions of the Danes, to procure peace, was compelled to charge his people with very heavy payments called danegelt, which he paid to the Danes at ſeveral times. Hoveden par. poſt. Annal. 344: Ingulph. 510: Selden's Mare Clauſ. 190. This danegelt was releaſed by Edward the Confeſſor; but levied again by William the Firſt and Second: then it was releaſed again by King Henry the Firſt, and finally by King Stephen.

DANELAGE, The law of the Danes, when they governed a third part of this kingdom. See further, title Merchenlage; Common-law.

DANGERIA, A payment in money made by foreſt tenants, that they might have liberty to plough and ſow in time of pannage or maſt-feeding. Manw. For. Laws.

DAPIFER, à dapes ferendo.] Was at firſt a domeſtick officer, like unto our Steward of the Houſehold; or rather Clerk of the Kitchen: but by degrees it was uſed for any fiduciary ſervant, eſpecially the chief ſteward or head bailiff of an honour or manor. There is mention made in our ancient records of dapifer regis; which is taken for Steward of the King's Houſehold. Cowel.

DARDUS, i. e. A dart: In Wales an oak is called a dar.

DARE AD REMANENTIAM, To give away in fee, or for ever. Glanv. lib. 7. cap. 1. This ſeems to be only of a remainder.

DARREIN, Is a corruption from the Fr. dernier, viz. ultimus, the laſt; in which ſenſe we uſe it: as darrein continuance, &c.

DARREIN PRESENTMENT, Laſt Preſentation.] See title Advowſon III. An aſſiſe of Darrein Preſentment lies when a man, or his anceſtors, under whom he claims, having preſented a clerk to a benefice, who is inſtituted; afterwards upon the next avoidance a ſtranger preſents a clerk, and thereby diſturbs him that is real patron; in which caſe the patron ſhall have this writ, (F. N. B. 31,) directed to the ſheriff to ſummon an aſſiſe or jury, to inquire who was the laſt patron that preſented to the church now vacant, of which the plaintiff complains that he is deforced by the defendant: and, according as the aſſiſe determines that queſtion, a writ ſhall iſſue to the Biſhop; to inſtitute the clerk of that patron, in whoſe favour the determination is made, and alſo to give damages, in purſuance of Stat. Weſt. 2. (13 E. 2.) c. 5. This queſtion, it is to be obſerved, was, before the Stat. 7 Ann. c. 18, entirely concluſive, as between the patron or his heirs and a ſtranger: for, till then, the full poſſeſſion of the advowſon was in him who preſented laſt, and his heirs; unleſs, ſince that preſentation, the clerk had been evicted within ſix months, or the rightful patron had recovered the advowſon in a writ of right; which is a title ſuperior to all others. But that ſtatute having given a right to any perſon to bring a quare impedit, and to recover (if his title be good) notwithſtanding the laſt preſentation by whomſoever made; aſſiſes of darrein preſentment, now not being in any-wiſe concluſive, have been totally diſuſed; as indeed they began to be before; a quare impedit being a more general, and therefore a more uſual, action. For the aſſiſe of darrein preſentment lies only where a man has an advowſon by deſcent from his anceſtors; but the writ of quare impedit is equally remedial, whether a man claims title by deſcent or by purchaſe. 2 Inſt. 355.

DATE OF A DEED. Is the deſcription of the time, viz. the day, month, year of our Lord, year of the reign, &c. in which the deed was made. 1 Inſt. 6. But the ancient deeds had no dates, only of the month and the year; to ſignify that they were not made in haſte, or in the ſpace of a day; but upon longer and more mature deliberation. Blount. If in the date of a deed, the year of our Lord is right, though the year of the King's reign be miſtaken, it ſhall not hurt it. Cro. Jac. 261. A deed was dated 30th March 1701, without anno Domini and anno Regni; and it was adjudged that both the year of the Lord and of the King were implicitly in the deed. 2 Salk. 658. A deed is good, though it hath no date of the day or place, or if the date be miſtaken, or though it hath an impoſſible date, as the 30th of February, &c. But he that doth plead ſuch a deed, without any date, or with an impoſſible date, muſt ſet forth the time when it was delivered. 2 Rep. 5: 1 Inſt. 46. If no date of a deed be ſet forth, it ſhall be intended that it had none; and in ſuch caſe it is good from the delivery; for every deed or writing hath a date in law, and that is the day in which it is delivered: and a deed is no deed till the delivery, and that is the date of it. Mod. Ca. 244: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 525.

An impoſſible date of a bond, &c. is no date at all; but the plaintiff muſt declare on the bond as made at a certain time: and if the expreſs date be inſenſible, the real date is the delivery. 2 Salk. 463. Where there is none, or an impoſſible date, the plaintiff may count of any date. 1 Lill. Abr. 393. If there be a miſtaken date, or a date be impoſſible, &c. the plaintiff may ſurmiſe a legal date in the declaration, whereupon the defendant is to anſwer to the deed, and not to the date. Yelv. 194. If a deed bears date at a place out of the realm, it may be averred that the place mentioned in the deed is in ſome county in England; and here the place is not traverſable; without this the deed cannot be tried. 1 Inſt. 261. A deed may be dated at one time, and ſealed and delivered at another: but every deed ſhall be intended to be delivered on the ſame day it bears date, unleſs the contrary is proved. 2 Inſt. 674. Though there can be no delivery of a deed before the day of the date; yet after, there may. Yelv. 138. So that a deed may be dated back on a time paſt, but not at a day to come. See title Deed.

DATIVE, or DATIF, dativus.] Signifies that which may be given or diſpoſed of at will and pleaſure. Stat. 9 R. 2. c. 4, DAVATA TERRÆ, DAWACH, A portion of land ſo called in Scotland. Skene.

DAY, dies.] A certain ſpace of time, containing twenty-four hours; and if a fact be done in the night, you muſt ſtate it in law-proceedings, in the night of the ſame day. The natural day conſiſts of twenty-four hours, and contains the ſolar day and the night: and the artificial day begins from the riſing of the ſun, and ends when it ſets. See 1 Inſt. 135. Day, in legal underſtanding, is the day of appearance of the parties, or continuance of the ſuit where a day is given, &c. And there is a day of appearance in court by the writ, and by the roll; by writ, when the ſheriff returns the writ; by roll, when he hath a day by the roll, and the ſheriff returns not the writ, there the defendant, to ſave his freehold, and prevent loſs of iſſues, impriſonment, &c. may appear by the day he hath by the roll. Co. Lit. 135.

In real actions there are dies communes, common days; and in all ſummonſes there muſt be fifteen days after the ſummons before the appearance: and before the ſtatute of articuli ſuper chartas, in all ſummons and attachment in plea of land, there ſhould be contained fifteen days. Co. Lit. 134.

As to offences in B. R. if the offence be committed in another county than where the court ſits, and the indictment be removed by certiorari, there muſt be fifteen days between every proceſs and the return thereof; but if it be committed in the ſame county where the bench ſits, they may ſit de die in diem; but this they will very rarely do. Ibid. There is a day called dies ſpecialis, as in an aſſiſe in the King's Bench or Common Pleas, the attachment need not be fifteen days before the appearance; otherwiſe it is before juſtices aſſigned; but generally in aſſiſes the judges may give a ſpecial day at their pleaſure, and are not bound to the common days; and theſe days they may give as well out of term as within.

There is alſo a day of grace, dies gratiæ; and generally this is granted by the court at the prayer of the demandant or plaintiff, in whoſe delay it is; but it is never granted where the King is party, by aid prier of the tenant or defendant; nor where any lord of parliament, or peer of the realm is tenant or defendant.

And ſometimes the day that is quarto die poſt, is called dies gratiæ, for the very day of return is the day in law, and to that day the judgment hath relation, but no default ſhall be recorded till the fourth day be paſt; unleſs it be in a writ of right, where the law alloweth no day but the day of the return. Co. Lit. 135.—See titles Judgment; Term.

There are ſeveral return-days in the terms; and if either of them happen upon a Sunday, the day following is taken inſtead of it; for Sunday is dies non juridicus; and ſo is Aſcenſion day in Eaſter term, St. John Baptiſt in Trinity term, All Saints and All Souls in Michaelmas term, and the Purification of the Virgin Mary in Hilary term. 2 Inſt. 264.—See title Term.

Days in Bank are days ſet down by ſtatute, or order of the court, when writs ſhall be returned, or when the party ſhall appear upon the writ ſerved. See Stat. 51 H. 3. ſtat. 2. & 3: 32 Hen. 8. cap. 21: 16 Car. 1. c. 6: and 24 Geo. 2. c. 48. And by the ſtatute de anno biſſextili, 21 H. 3, the day increaſing in the leap-year, and the day next going before are to be accounted but one day.

It is commonly ſaid that the day of Niſi prius, and the day in the Bank, is all one day; but this is to be underſtood as to pleading, not to other purpoſes. 1 Inſt. 135. But after iſſue found for the plaintiff at the Niſi prius, if a day be given in Bank, and the defendant makes default, judgment ſhall be given againſt him. 2 Danv. Ab. 477. and vide Id. 476.

To be diſmiſſed without day, is to be finally diſmiſſed the court: and when the juſtices before whom cauſes were depending, do not come on the day to which they were continued, whether ſuch abſence be occaſioned by death, or otherwiſe, they are ſaid to be put without day: but may be revived, or recontinued by re-ſummons, re-attachment, &c. See Stat. 1 E. 6. c. 7. Alſo by the Common law, all proceedings upon any indictment, &c. whereon no judgment had been given, were determined by the demiſe of the King, and nothing remained but the indictment, original writ, &c. which were put without day, till re-continued by re-attachment to bring in the defendants to plead de novo: though this is remedied by Stats. 4 & 5 W. 3. c. 18: 1 An. c. 8; by which ſuch proceſs, &c. are to continue in the ſame force after the King's demiſe, as they would have done if he had lived. See titles Diſcontinuance, Proceſs, King.

In action of treſpaſs, if the day laid in the declaration be either before or after the actual day on which the treſpaſs is committed, it is not material, if a treſpaſs be proved. Co. Lit. 283 a. But N. B. The day laid muſt be before before the firſt day of that term of which the declaration is intituled, or if the treſpaſs be committed within the term, there muſt be a ſpecial memorandum of ſome particular day, (if by bill) or of ſome general return day, (if in C. P. or B. R. by original writ) ſubſequent to the day whereon the trepaſs was committed: and ſo as to other actions, where the cauſe of action ariſes within the term. See title Declaration, Pleading.

DAY-LIGHT, See titles Burglary, Robbery.

DAY-RULE, See Day writ.

DAYWERE or LAND, Diurnalis, Diuturna.] As much arable land as could be ploughed up in one day's work; or one journey, as the farmers ſtill call it.

DAY-WRIT, or DAY-RULE; a rule or order of court, permitting a priſoner in cuſtody in the King's Bench priſon, &c. to go without the bounds of his priſon for one day. By a rule of the Court of K. B. Euſter 30 Geo. 3, a priſoner ſhall not have day rules above three days in each term; and to return to priſon before nine in the Evening. The King may grant writ of warrantia diei to any perſon, which ſhall ſave his default for one day, be it in plea of land or other action, and be the cauſe true, or not; and this by his prerogative, quod nota. Br. Prerogative, pl. 142. cites F. N. B. 7.

It is againſt law to grant liberty to priſoners in execution, by other writs than day-writs, (or rules) Chan. Rep. 67.

No priſoner committed by B. R. ought to have the benefit of the day-rule of going abroad in term-time; for their impriſonment is their puniſhment for their contempt, or miſbehaviour. 2 Show. 88. pl. 80.

One in execution had a habeas corpus from the Lord Keeper (which they call a day-writ) returnable three or four days after its teſte. By virtue of this writ, he went to the wine-licence office, but never to any inn of court or Chancery, or to the Lord Keeper's, and this in the vacation. Per Pemberton Ch. J. This is a habeas out of Chancery, which they may ſend at any time, and by virtue of the King's writ, the party was brought out of the priſon-houſe, and that is juſtifiable. Then all the day, ſo long as there was a keeper with him, he was in cuſtody ſtill, and returning to priſon at night, it is well enough, and no eſcape; though Chancery may examine the contempt, that is nothing to B. R. 2 Show. 298. pl. 229.

A priſoner taken on an eſcape-warrant before the ſitting of the court the ſame day, ſhall be diſcharged, if his name was entered with the clerk the night before; but not if it was entered the ſame morning only. 8 Mod. 80.

DAYERIA, Dairy, from day, deie, Sax. dag.] Was at firſt the daily yield of milch-cows, or profit made of them. In Lorrain and Champaign they uſe the word dayer, for the meeting of the day-labouring people to give an account of their daily work, and receive the wages of it. A dairy in the North is called milkneſs; as the dairy-maid is in all parts a milk-maid: ſhe is termed androchia by Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 87. and See Paroch. Antiq. 548.

DAYS-MAN; In the North of England, an arbitrator, or elected judge, is uſually termed a dies-man, or days-man: and Dr. Hammond ſays, that the word day in all idioms ſignifies judgment.

DEADLY FEUD, Is a profeſſion of an irreconcileable hatred, till a perſon is revenged even by the death of his enemy. It is mentioned in Stat. 43 El. c. 13. And ſuch enmity and revenge were allowed by the old Saxon laws; for where any man was killed, if a pecuniary ſatisfaction was not made to the kindred of the ſlain, it was lawful for them to take up arms againſt the murderer, and revenge themſelves on him: and this is called deadly feud; which it is conjectured was the original of an *appeal. DEAD PLEDGE, mortuum vadium.] A pledge of lands or goods. See Mortgage.

DEAF, DUMB, and BLIND. A man who is born deaf, dumb and blind, is looked upon by the law in the ſame ſtate as an idiot: he being ſuppoſed incapable of any underſtanding; as wanting all thoſe ſenſes which furniſh the human mind with ideas. 4 Comm. 304: See F. N. B. 233.—See titles Idiot, Lunatic.

A man who could neither ſpeak nor hear committed felony, and was arraigned and therefore was commanded to priſon. Br. Corone, pl. 216. cites 26 Edw. 3. See Thel. Dig. 6. lib. 1. c. 7.

One who had made his will, and became ill, and (as it ſeems) had loſt his ſpeech; the ſame will was delivered into his hands, and it was ſaid to him, that he ſhould deliver it to the vicar, if it ſhould be his laſt will, otherwiſe he ſhould retain it; and he delivered it to the vicar, and this was held a good will. Thel. Dig. 6. lib. 1. cap. 7. ſ. 8. cites 44 Aſſ. 36.—See title Will.

It appearing by oath, that the defendant was both ſenſeleſs and dumb, and therefore could not inſtruct his counſel to draw his anſwer; it was ordered that no attachment, or other proceſs of contempt, ſhould be awarded againſt the defendant for not anſwering, without ſpecial order of the court. Cary's Rep. 132, cites 22 Eliz. Altham v. Smith.

One that is deaf and wholly deprived of his hearing cannot give, and ſo one that is dumb and cannot ſpeak. Yet (according to the opinion of ſome) they may conſent by ſigns: but it is generally held, that he that is dumb cannot make a gift, becauſe he cannot conſent to it. 1 Inſt. 107.

If however, a blind man has underſtanding, he may deliver a deed ſealed by him. Jenk. 222. pl. 75.

The lord ſhall have the cuſtody of a copyholder that is deaf and dumb; for elſe he ſhall be prejudiced in his rents and ſervices; and adjudged for the grantee of the lord againſt the prochein amy of the copyholder. Cro. Jac. 105.

One born deaf and dumb, who ſignified by ſigns that ſhe underſtood what ſhe was about to do, was allowed to levy a fine of lands; by Bridgman Ch. J. & al' juſtices. Cart. 53.

DEAFFORESTED, Deafforeſtatus.] Diſcharged from being foreſt; or freed and exempted from the foreſt laws. 17 Car. 1. c. 16. There is likewiſe dewarrenata, as well as deafforeſtata; which is when a warren is diſwarrened, or broke up and laid in common.

DEAN, Decanus; from the Greek Δέκα, decem.] An eccleſiaſtical governor or Dignitary, ſo called, as he preſides over ten Canons or Prebendaries at the leaſt. And we call him a Dean, that is next under the biſhop, and chief of the chapter, ordinarily in a cathedral church; the reſt of the ſociety being called capitulum, the chapter. As there are two foundations of cathedral churches in England, the old and the new, the new erected by King Hen. VIII. ſo there are two means of creating theſe Deans: for thoſe of the old foundation, as the Dean of St. Paul's, York, &c. are exalted to their dignity much like biſhops; the King firſt ſending out his congé d'eſire to the chapter to chooſe ſuch Dean, and the chapter then chooſing, the King afterwards yielding his royal aſſent, and the biſhop confirming him, and giving his mandate to inſtall him.

Thoſe of the new foundation, whoſe deaneries were tranſlated from priories and convents, to Dean and Chapter, are donative, and inſtalled by a ſhorter courſe, by virtue of the King's letters-patent, without either election or confirmation; and are viſitable only by the Lord Chancellor, or by ſpecial commiſſion from the King: but the letters-patent are preſented to the biſhop for inſtitution, and a mandate for inſtallment goes forth. 1 Inſt. 95: Davis 46, 47.

The new Deaneries and chapters to old biſhopricks are eight, viz. Canterbury, Norwich, Wincheſter, Durham, Ely, Rocheſter, Worceſter and Carliſle. The new Deaneries and chapters to new biſhopricks are five, Peterborough, Cheſter, Glouceſter, Briſtol and Oxford. 1 Inſt. 95 a. n. 3.

Of the four Welſh Cathedrals, two are without Deans; or rather the dignities of Biſhop and Dean unite in the ſame perſon, the biſhop being deemed quaſi decanus; and having, it is ſaid, both an epiſcopal throne, and a decanal ſtall allotted to him in the choir. Of this kind are the Cathedrals of St. David's and Llandaff.—St. Aſaph and Bangor, the two other Welſh Cathedrals, have the dignity of Dean diſtinct from that of Biſhop, but the patronage of both deaneries is in the reſpective biſhops, they being neither elective by the Chapter, nor donative in the Crown. 1 Inſt. 95 a. n. 4.

In Ireland it ſeems that the King appoints to deaneries, as to biſhopricks by letters-patent. Id. ib.

Various kinds of Deans, beſides Deans of Chapters, are known to our law; and ſeveral diviſions ſeem neceſſary to diſtinguiſh them properly.

Conſidered in reſpect of the difference of office, Deans are of ſix kinds. 1. Deans of Chapters, who are either of cathedral or collegiate churches; though the members of churches of the latter ſort may more properly be denominated colleges than chapters. See title Chapters.—2. Deans of Peculiars; who have ſometimes both juriſdiction and cure of ſouls, as the Dean of Battel in Suſſex; and ſometimes juriſdiction only, as the Dean of the Arches in London; (See title Arches Court) and the Deans of Bocking in Eſſex, and of Croydon in Surrey.—3. Rural Deans, who had firſt juriſdiction over deaneries, as every dioceſe is divided into archdeaconries and deaneries; but afterwards their power was diminiſhed, and they were only the biſhops' ſubſtitutes to grant letters of adminiſtration, probate of wills, &c. And now their office is wholly extinguiſhed, for the archdeacons and chancellors of biſhops execute the authority which Rural Deans had through all the dioceſes of England. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 596, 597. and See 1 Comm. 383.—4. Deans in the Colleges of our Univerſities; who are officers appointed to ſuperintend the behaviour of the members, and to enforce diſcipline.—5. Honorary Deans; as the Dean of the Chapel-Royal at St. James's, who is ſo ſtiled on account of the dignity of the perſon over whoſe chapel he preſides. As to the chapel of St. George, Windſor, there being Canons as well as a Dean, it is ſomething more than a mere chapel, and except in name, reſembles a collegiate church.—6. Deans of Provinces; or as they are ſometimes called Deans of Biſhops. Thus the Biſhop of London, is Dean of the Province of Canterbury; and to him as ſuch, the Archbiſhop ſends his mandate for ſummoning the Biſhops of his Province, when a Convocation is to be aſſembled; which may perhaps account for calling him Dean of the Biſhops; what the other parts of his office are, the books do not explain, nor do they mention whether there is a Dean for the Province of York. See Lyndw.: Gibſ.: 1 Inſt. 95 (a) in n.

Another diviſion of Deans, ariſing from the nature of their office, is into Deans of Spiritual promotions, and Deans of Lay promotions. Of the former kind are Deans of Peculiars, with cure of ſouls, Deans of the Royal Chapels, and Deans of Chapters; though as to theſe laſt, a contrary opinion formerly prevailed. Perhaps too, Rural Deans might be added to the number. Of the latter kind are Deans of Peculiars, without cure of ſouls, who therefore may be, and frequently are, perſons not in holy orders.

In reſpect of the manner of appointment, Deans are —1. Elective; as Deans of Chapters of the old foundation; though they are only ſo (like Biſhops) nominally, and in form; the King, being in fact the real patron.—2. Donative, as thoſe Deans of Chapters of the New Foundation, who are appointed by the King's letters-patent, and are inſtalled, under his command to the Chapter, without reſorting to the Biſhop either for admiſſion, or for a mandate of inſtallment; if that mode of promoting ſtill prevails in reſpect to any of the new deaneries. Deans of the Royal Chapels are alſo donative, the King appointing to them in the ſame way. So too may Deans of Peculiars, without cure of ſouls, be called; as the Dean of the Arches, who is appointed by commiſſion from the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; but this muſt be underſtood in a large ſenſe of the word donative, it being moſt uſually reſtrained to ſpiritual promotions.—3. Preſentative; as ſome Deans of Peculiars with cure of ſouls, and the Deans of ſome chapters of the New Foundation, if not all. Thus the Dean of Battel is preſented by the patron to the Biſhop of Chicheſter and from him receives inſtitution. This Deanery was founded by William the Conqueror. He hath eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction within the liberty of Battel, and is preſentable by the Duke of Montagu, and though inſtituted and inducted by the Biſhop of Chicheſter, is not ſubject to his viſitation. 1 Nelſ. Ab. Thus too the Dean of Glouceſter is preſented by the King to the Biſhop, with a mandate to admit him, and to give orders for his inſtallment.—4. By virtue of another office; as the Biſhop of London is Dean of the Province of Canterbury; and the Biſhop of St. David's, is Dean of his own Chapter.

As to further particulars relative to the manner of coming to the poſſeſſion of Deaneries, ſee a long and learned hiſtorical account in 1 Inſt. 95 (a.) n. 4; from which it appears that the right to appoint Deans of Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, and the mode of appointing them, muſt generally depend, almoſt wholly, upon charters, uſage, or acts of parliament; and if a caſe ſhould, by bare poſſibility, ariſe, where neither of thoſe rules could be had recourſe to, founderſhip ſeems the only true criterion of patronage.

In reſpect of the manner of holding, Deans are either abſolute, or in commendam. But this applies only to Spiritual Deaneries. It is ſaid there are alſo Deputy Deans. A commendatory Dean may, with the Chapter, chooſe a biſhop.

biſhop. And if a Dean be elected biſhop, and before conſecration doth obtain diſpenſation to hold his deanery in commendam, ſuch Dean may well confirm, &c. for his old title remains, and therefore confirmations, and other acts done by him, as Dean, are good in law. Latch 237, 250: Palm. Rep. 460.

A Dean and Chapter are the biſhop's council, to aſſiſt him in the affairs of religion, &c. to conſult in deciding difficult controverſies, and conſent to every grant which the biſhop ſhall make to bind his ſucceſſors, &c.

A Dean that is ſolely ſeiſed of a diſtinct poſſeſſion, hath an abſolute fee in him as well as a biſhop. 1 Inſt. 325. A Deanery is a ſpiritual promotion, and not a temporal one, though the Dean be appointed by the King; and the Dean and Chapter may be in part ſecular, and in part regular. Dyer 10: Palm. 500. As a deanery is a ſpiritual dignity, a man cannot be Dean and Prebendary in the ſame church. Dyer 273.

DEATH OF PERSONS. There is a natural death of a man, and a civil death: natural, where nature itſelf expires, and extinguiſhes; and civil, is where a man is not actually dead, but is adjudged ſo by law; as where he enters into religion, &c. By Stat. 19 C. 2. c. 6, If any perſon for whoſe life any eſtate hath been granted, remain beyond ſea, or is otherwiſe abſent ſeven years, and no proof made of his being living, ſuch perſon ſhall be accounted naturally dead; though if the party be after proved living at the time of eviction of any perſon, then the tenant, &c. may re-enter, and recover the profits. And by Stat. 6 An. c. 18, perſons in reverſion or remainder, after the death of another, upon affidavit that they have cauſe to believe ſuch other dead, may move the Lord Chancellor to order the perſon to be produced; and if he be not produced, he ſhall be taken as dead; and thoſe claiming may enter, &c. See further titles Occupancy, Life-Eſtate.

A man ſeiſed in fee of lands, made a leaſe in reverſion to L. D. for ninety-nine years, to commence after the deaths of J. D. and E. D. who had then a leaſe in poſſeſſion for the like term, if they or either of them ſo long lived: the plaintiff poſitively proved the death of J. D. but as to the death of E. D. the proof was that he had been reputed dead, and no body had heard of him for fifteen years paſt; and the defendant not being able to prove that he was alive at any time within ſeven years, this caſe was adjudged within the Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 6. Carthew 246.

In law proceedings, the death of either party, between the verdict and judgment, ſhall not be error; ſo as judgment be entered in two terms. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 8. See titles Amendment, Error.

A Corporation never dies. 1 Wilſ. 184.

Where the plaintiff dies after a verdict and before the day in bank, though the entry of the judgment be right, yet a ſcire facias muſt be ſued out before execution iſſue. 1 Wilſ. 302.—See titles Judgment, Execution.

Where, on the death of parties to a ſuit, the writ, &c. ſhall abate, See title Abatement.

DEBATING SOCIETIES. See this Dict. titles Holidays, Advertiſements.

DE BENE ESSE. To take or do any thing de bene eſſe, is to accept or allow it as well done for the preſent; but when it comes to be more fully examined or tried, to ſtand or fall according to the merit of the thing in its own nature. As in Chancery, upon motion to have one of the leſs principal defendants in a cauſe examined as a witneſs, the Court (not then thoroughly examining the juſtice of it, or not hearing what may be objected on the other ſide) will often order ſuch a defendant to be examined de bene eſſe, viz. That his depoſitions ſhall be taken, and allowed or ſuppreſſed at the hearing of the cauſe, upon the full debate of the matter, as the Court ſhall think fit; but in the interim they have a well-being, or conditional allowance. 3 Cro. 68.

Where a complainant's witneſſes are aged, or ſick, or going beyond ſea, whereby the plaintiff thinks he is in danger of loſing their teſtimony, the Court will order them to be examined de bene eſſe; ſo as to be valid, if the plaintiff hath not an opportunity of examining them afterwards; as if they die before anſwer, or do not return, &c. In either of which caſes, the depoſitions may be made uſe of in the court of Chancery, or at law: but if parties are alive and well, or do return, &c. after anſwer, theſe depoſitions are not to be of force, for the witneſſes muſt be re-examined.

So alſo at Common law, the judges frequently take bail de bene eſſe, that is, to be allowed or diſallowed upon the exception, or approbation of the plaintiff's attorney; however, in the interim, they are good, or have a conditional allowance. Cowel. Declarations likewiſe are ſometimes delivered de bene eſſe. See titles Declaration, Practice, Proceſs, &c.

DEBENTURE. A ſoldier's debenture, (ſtipendia debita) is in the nature of a bond or bill, to charge the Government to pay the ſoldier creditor, or his aſſigns, the ſum due upon the auditing the account of his arrears: it was firſt ordained by an act made during the Uſurpation, anno 1649, and is mentioned in the act of oblivion, 12 Car. 2. c. 8. They uſe debentures likewiſe in the Exchequer; and debentures are given to the King's ſervants, for the payment of their wages, board-wages, &c. Alſo there are cuſtom-houſe debentures, &c.

DEBET ET DETINET, He oweth and detaineth.] An action ſhall be always in the debet et detinet, when he who makes a bargain or contract, or lends money to another, or he to whom a bond is made, bringeth the action againſt him who is bounden, or party to the contract and bargain, or unto the lending of the money, &c. See New Nat. Br. 119.—See poſt. title Debt II.

DEBET ET SOLET, If a perſon ſues to recover any right, whereof his anceſtor was diſſeiſed by the tenant of his anceſtor, then he uſeth the word debet alone in his writ, becauſe his anceſtor only was diſſeiſed, and the eſtate diſcontinued: but if he ſue for any thing that is now firſt of all denied him, then he uſeth debet et ſolet, by reaſon his anceſtor before him, and he himſelf uſually enjoyed the thing ſued for, until the preſent refuſal of the tenant. Reg. Orig. 140. The writ of fecta ad molendinum is a writ of right, in the debet et ſolet, &c. F. N. B. 98.

DEBT.

DEBITUM.] In common parlance is a ſum of money due from one perſon to another. And if an action be brought, and the plaintiff recovers judgment, he may by law take either the perſon, or his real or perſonal eſtate in execution, i. e. the moiety of his real eſtate, or the whole of the perſonal, if not more than ſufficient for payment of the ſum recovered and charges.

In DEBT I.

In the legal ſenſe of the word, debt is ſaid to be an action which lieth where a man oweth another a certain ſum of money, either by a debt of record, by ſpecialty or by ſimple contract; as on a judgment, obligation, or bargain for a thing ſold, or by contract, &c. and the debtor will not pay the debt at the day agreed; then the creditor ſhall have action of debt againſt him for the ſame. See 2 Comm. 464. If a man contract to pay money for a thing which he hath bought; and the ſeller takes bond for the money, the contract is diſcharged, ſo that he ſhall not have action of debt upon the contract, but on the bond. New Nat. Br. 268.

I. In what Caſes Action of Debt will lie; and by whom, and againſt whom it may be brought.
II. In what Manner it may be brought; as where in the debet and detinet, and where in the detinet only.
III. How it may be extinguiſhed.

I. The legal acceptation of debt, is a ſum of money due by certain and expreſs agreement: as, by a bond for a determinate ſum; a bill, or note; a ſpecial bargain; or rent reſerved on a leaſe; where the quantity is fixed and ſpecific, and does not depend upon any ſubſequent valuation to ſettle it. The non-payment of theſe is an injury, for which the proper remedy is by action of debt, (F. N. B. 119,) to compel the performance of the contract, and recover the ſpecific ſum due. This is the ſhorteſt and ſureſt remedy; particularly where the debt ariſes upon a ſpecialty, that is, upon a deed or inſtrument under ſeal. So alſo, if I verbally agree to pay a man a certain price for a certain parcel of goods, and fail in the performance, an action of debt lies againſt me; for this is alſo a determinate contract: but if I agree for no ſettled price, I am not liable to an action of debt, but a ſpecial action on the caſe, according to the nature of my contract. And indeed actions of debt are now ſeldom brought but upon ſpecial contracts under ſeal; wherein the ſum due is clearly and preciſely expreſſed; for, in caſe of ſuch an action upon a ſimple contract, the plaintiff labours under two difficulties; Firſt, the defendant has here the ſame advantage, as in an action of detinue, that of waging his law, or purging himſelf of the debt by oath, if he thinks proper. 4 Rep. 94. Secondly, in an action of debt, the plaintiff muſt prove the whole debt he claims, or recover nothing at all. For the debt is one ſingle cauſe of action, fixed and determined; and which therefore, if the proof varies from the claim, cannot be looked upon as the ſame contract, whereof the performance is ſued for.—But in actions of debt, where the contract is proved or admitted, if the defendant can ſhew that he has diſcharged any part of it, the plaintiff ſhall recover the reſidue. 1 Rol. Rep. 257: Salk. 664: 3 Comm. 154.

When alſo the damages can be reduced by the averment to a certainty, debt will lie; as on a covenant to pay ſo much per load for wood, &c. So if in an action, in which the plaintiff can only recover damages, there be judgment for him, he can afterwards bring debt for thoſe damages. Bull. N. P. (8vo.) 167.—And as to caſes in which on actions of debt it is not neceſſary to prove the exact ſum laid in the declaration, See at large Doug. 6, 732. in n.

If one binds himſelf in a ſingle obligation, or with condition, to pay money at a day; or to deliver corn, or the like, and do not perform it accordingly, the obligee may bring action of debt for it. F. N. B. 120. A man acknowledges by deed, that he hath ſo much of the money of J. S. due to him in his hands; here debt may be brought: and debt will lie on a tally ſealed. F. N. B. 122: 1 H. 6. 55. A. delivers 20*l* to B. to buy goods, and B. gives a receipt to A. teſtifying the delivery and receipt of the 20*l.* but doth not promiſe to deliver the goods, &c. A. may maintain debt upon this receipt. Dyer 20: 2 Bulſt. 256. If one binds himſelf to pay A. B. 10*l.* at one day, and 10*l.* at another, after the firſt day action of debt lies for 10*l.* being a ſeveral duty. 2 Danv. Abr. 501. The nature of the bond, and of the condition, (if there is any) muſt be carefully attended to, to ſee if by non-payment of the firſt ſum the bond is forfeited. Vide Co. Lit. 292 b.

Action of debt lies upon a parol contract, and ſo doth action on the caſe. 1 Lil. 403. And vide 9 Rep. 87. If goods or money are delivered to a third perſon for my uſe, I may have action of debt or account for them. 2 Danv. 404. Where money is delivered to a perſon, to be re-delivered again, the property is altered, and debt lies: but where a horſe, or any goods are thus delivered, there detinue lies, becauſe the property is not altered; and the thing is known, whereas money is not. Owen, 86: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 603.

Action of debt lies againſt the huſband, for goods which were delivered or ſold to the wife, if they come to the uſe of the huſband. 1 Lil. 400. If one delivers meat, drink, or clothes, to an infant, and he promiſes to pay for them, action of debt, or on the caſe, will lie againſt the infant. Though debt may not be brought on an account ſtated with an infant: and what is delivered muſt be averred to be for the neceſſary uſe of the infant. 1 Lil. Abr. 401.—See title Infant. An attorney ſhall have action of debt againſt his client, for money, which he hath paid to any perſon for the client, for coſts of ſuit, or unto his counſel, &c.

An heir mediate may be ſued in debt as if he were immediate heir, &c. The heir may not bring action of debt for a debt due to his anceſtor; though it be by ſpecialty, by which the party is bound to pay it to him and his heirs: the executor ſhall nevertheleſs have the action. Dyer 368: F. N. B. 120. Action of debt lies not againſt executors, upon a ſimple contract made with the teſtator. 9 Rep. 87.

Before the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 37, the heirs or executors of a man ſeiſed of a rent-ſervice, rent-charge, &c. in fee-ſimple, or fee-tail, had no remedy for the arrearages incurred in the life-time of the owner of ſuch rents: but by that ſtatute, the executors and adminiſtrators of tenants in fee-ſimple, fee-tail, or for life, of any rent, ſhall have action of debt for all arrearages of rent due in the life of the teſtator. 1 Inſt. 162: 2 Danv. 492.

A feme ſole ſeiſed of a rent in fee, &c. which is behind and unpaid, takes huſband, and the rent is behind again, and then the wife dieth, by the ſaid Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 37, the huſband ſhall have the arrears due before marriage, and he hath a double remedy for the ſame. 1 Inſt. 162.

But by Stat. 8 An. c. 17, Any perſon having rent in arrear upon any leaſe for life or lives, may bring action of

of debt for such rent, as where rent is due on a lease for years. Action of debt will lie against a lessee, for rent due after the assignment of the lease; for the personal privity of contract remains, notwithstanding the privity of estate is gone. 3 Rep. 22. But after the death of the lessee, it is then a real contract, and runs with the land. Cro. Eliz. 555. When a lease is ended, the duty in respect of the rent remains, and debt lieth by reason of the privity of contract between lessor and lessee. 2 Cro. 227: 1 Nelf. Abr. 604. If debt be brought by an executor for arrears of rent ended, it is local still, and must be laid where the land lies. Hob. 37. Action of debt may be had against the lessee in any place; but if it be brought against an assignee, it must be where the land lieth: and upon the privity of contract, it is to be brought against the lessee where the land is. Latch 197, 271: 2 Leon. c. 28.

Debt for rent on a lease against assignee is local. Barker v. Dormer, 1 Show. 191.

In some cases action of debt will lie, although there be no contract betwixt the party that brings the action, and him against whom brought; for there may be a duty created by law, for which action will lie. 2 Saund. 343, 366. Debt lieth against a sheriff, for money levied in execution. 1 Lil. Abr. 403. Action of debt lies against a gaoler for permitting a prisoner committed in execution to escape; because thereupon the law makes the gaoler debtor: but where the party is not in execution, there action on the case only lies for damages suffered by the escape. 1 Saund. 218: 1 Lil. Abr. 402.

A person may have debt upon an arbitrament: also debt lies for money recovered upon a judgment, &c. And upon a recovery in the superior courts at Westminster, the plaintiff must bring the action in Middlesex, the record being there; but a sci. fac. to execute judgment, must be where the original was, and follow it. New Nat. Br. 267, 268, &c.

When judgment is had in the King's Bench, and a writ of error brought in the Exchequer chamber, or in Parliament; yet an action of debt will lie on the judgment: in this case, if the plaintiff levies part of his money, by elegit, he may likewise bring debt for the residue. 1 Sid. 184, 236.

Whatever the laws order any one to pay, that becomes instantly a debt, which he hath before-hand contracted to discharge. And this implied agreement it is, that gives the plaintiff a right to institute a second action, founded merely on the general contract, in order to recover such damages or sum of money, as are assessed by the jury, and adjudged by the court to be due from the defendant to the plaintiff in any former action. So that if he hath once obtained a judgment against another for a certain sum, and neglects to take out execution thereupon, he may afterwards bring an action of debt upon this judgment; (1 Rol. Abr. 600, 1;) and shall not be put upon the proof of the original cause of action; but upon showing the judgment once obtained, still in full force, and yet unsatisfied, the law immediately implies, that by the original contract of society the defendant hath contracted a debt, and is bound to pay. This method seems to have been invented, when real actions were more in use than at present, and damages were permitted to be recovered thereon; in order to have the benefit of a writ of capias, to take the defendant's body in execution for those damages; which process was allowable in an action of debt, (in consequence of the Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 17,) but not in an action real. Wherefore, since the disuse of those real actions, actions of debt upon judgment in personal suits have been pretty much discountenanced by the Courts, as being generally vexatious and oppressive, by harrassing the defendant with the costs of two actions instead of one. 3 Comm. 160.

Debt will lie upon the judgment of a Foreign Court, and the plaintiff need not show the ground of the judgment; but it is not to be declared on as a matter of record, for it is here but of the nature of a simple-contract debt: therefore in such case the judgment is sufficient only to establish a demand, and put the defendant to impeach the justice of it, or show the same to have been unduly or irregularly obtained. And as it is but a simple contract, assumpsit will also lie on it.—Walker v. Witter, Doug. 1—6; in which several other cases on the same point are also cited and reported.

If a man recovers debt or damages in London, on action brought there by the custom of the city, which lies not at Common law; when it is become a debt by the judgment, action of debt lies in the courts at Westminster upon this judgment. 2 Danv. 449.

Action of debt will lie for breach of a by-law; or, for amercement in a court-leet, &c. 1 Lil. 400: 5 Rep. 64: Hob. 259. And action of debt is sometimes grounded on an act of parliament; as upon Stat. 2 Ed. 6. c. 13, for not setting out tithes: Stat. 27 El. c. 13, against the hundred for a robbery, &c. Against physicians in London, for practising without licence, by Stat. 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 5.—By assignees of a commission of bankrupt, Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15, &c.—A college shall have action of debt for commons of any student; adjudged, Pasch. 9 Jac. B. R.—And in general, all the cases show that wherever indebitatus assumsit is maintainable, debt also is. Doug. 6. per Buller J.

For debt to a bishop, or parson, after his death, his executors shall have the action: but of a dean and chapter, mayor and commonalty, &c. the successors are intitled to the action of debt. F. N. B. 120. Action of debt lies on a recognisance; so upon a statute-merchant, it being in nature of a bond or obligation: but it is otherwise in case of a statute-staple. 2 Danv. 497.

In bringing this action, it is a general rule, that the party himself, to whom the debt is originally due, whilst he doth live, must bring the action; and after his death, his executors, &c. And the action must be brought against the party himself that doth originally owe the debt, whilst he is living; and after his death, it may be brought against the executor, if he make any; or otherwise against the administrator; and if the Ordinary appoint none, against the Ordinary himself; and if he die possessed of the goods, against his executor, &c. And also against executors of executors in infinitum. Dyer 24, 471: 3 Rep. 9: 2 Brownl. 207.

II. The form of the writ of debt is sometimes in the debet & detinet, and sometimes in the detinet only; that is, the writ states, either that the defendant owes, and unjustly detains the debt or thing in question, or only that he unjustly detains it. It is brought in the debet, as well as detinet, when sued by one of the original contracting parties who personally gave the credit, against the the other who perſonally incurred the debt, or againſt his heirs, if they are bound to the payment; as by the obligee againſt the obligor, the landlord againſt the tenant, &c. But, if it be brought by, or againſt an executor for a debt due to or from the teſtator, this, not being his own debt, ſhall be ſued for in the detinet only. F. N. B. 119. So alſo if the action be for goods, for corn, or an horſe, the writ ſhall be in the detinet only; for nothing but a ſum of money, for which I (or my anceſtors in my name) have perſonally contracted, is properly conſidered as my debt. And indeed a writ of debt in the detinet only, for goods and chattels, is neither more nor leſs, than a mere writ of detinue; and is followed by the very ſame judgment. Raſt. Entr. 174: 3 Comm. 156.

In debt, if it be demanded by original, the proceſs is ſummons, attachment and diſtreſs; and upon a default of ſufficiency, on a nihil returned, proceſs to the outlawry, &c. And the judgment in debt, where the demand is in the debet & detinet, is to recover the debt, damages and coſts of ſuit; and the defendant in miſericordia. 1 Shep. Abr. 523. Where the plaintiff in debt declares on ſome ſpecialty, or contract for a ſum of money, it muſt be certainly demanded, and no other; and the demand cannot be of a leſſer ſum, but it muſt be ſhown how the remainder was ſatisfied: but in an action upon a ſtatute, that gives a certain ſum for the penalty, though leſs be recovered than the plaintiff lays, it will be good. Cro. Jac. 498. If action of debt is brought on a ſpecialty, bill, bond, leaſe, &c. the ſeveral writings muſt be well conſidered by which the plaintiff warrants his action, and the ſum due is to be rightly ſet forth; and if it be debt for rent, the time of commencement, and ending, &c. In debt on ſingle bill or upon judgment, the defendant may plead payment (before the action brought) in bar; and pending an action, on bond, &c. the defendant may bring in principal, intereſt and coſts: and the court ſhall give judgment to diſcharge the defendant. Stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16. See title Bond.

If the action be brought for money, it muſt be in the debet & detinet; but if goods or chattels, it muſt be in the detinet only. 50 Ed. 3. 16: 1 Roll. Abr.—If an executor brings debt for any thing in right of his teſtator, it muſt be in the detinet only. Moor 566: 1 Rol. Abr. 602, 603.

If an executor brings an action upon an obligation made to the teſtator, where the day of payment incurred after the death of the teſtator, yet the writ ſhall be in the detinet only, for he brings the action as executor. Lane 80: S. P. 20 H. 6. 5: 1 Rol. Abr. 602. S. C.

So if a man binds himſelf to the teſtator to pay him 100 l. when ſuch a thing ſhall happen; if it happens after the death of the teſtator, yet the writ by the executor ſhall be in the detinet only. 20 H. 6. 6: 1 Rol. Abr. 602.

If in an account an executor recovers a debt due to his teſtator, in action for the arrearages thereupon, the writ ſhall be in the detinet only, for though the action is converted into a debt by the account, yet it is the ſame thing which was received in the life of the teſtator, Cro. Eliz. 326: Cro. Jac. 545: 5 Co. 31.

If the executor ſells the goods of the teſtator for a certain ſum, he ſhall have action for this in the debet & detinet. 1 Rol. Abr. 602.

If an executor having lands by an extent upon a ſtatute made to the teſtator, and naming himſelf executor, by deed leaſes them for three years, rendering rent, &c. if an action is afterwards brought by him for his rent, it muſt be in the debet & detinet, becauſe it is founded upon his own contract. Lane 80: Cro. Jac. 685: Winch 80, S. C: Brown, 205: 1 Mod. 185. S. P.

So an executor, being leſſee for years of a rectory in the right of the teſtator, may have action upon 2 Ed. 6. c. 13, for not ſetting out tithes in the debet & detinet, becauſe founded upon a wrong in his own time, and by the ſtatute it is given to the party grieved. Cro. Jac. 545.

Alſo action againſt an executor ſhall be in the detinet only, for he is chargeable no farther than he has aſſets. 11 H. 4. 16: 1 Rol. Abr. 603.

In an action againſt an executor for rent, incurred in the life of the teſtator, the writ ſhall be in the detinet only. 11 H. 6. 36: 1 Rol. Abr. 603.

But if an action be brought againſt an executor for the arrearages of a rent, reſerved upon a leaſe for years, and incurred after the death of the teſtator, the writ ſhall be in the debet & detinet, becauſe the executor is charged of his own poſſeſſion. 1 Rol. Abr. 603: Cro. Eliz. 711: Moor 566: 1 Brownl. 56: Cro. Jac. 411. And the declaration is againſt him as aſſignee, not as executor.

If an action is brought againſt baron and feme, upon an obligation entered into by the feme before marriage, it ſhall be in the debet et detinet; for by the marriage all the perſonal goods and power of diſpoſing of the real eſtate are by law given the huſband, which he has to his own uſe, and not as executors, who have them only to the uſe of another. 5 Co. 36: 3 Leon. 206, S. C.

So if an action is brought upon a bond againſt the heir of the obligor, it ſhall be in the debet et detinet, becauſe he hath the aſſets in his own right. 5 Co. 36.

III. If a man accepts an obligation for a debt due by ſimple contract, this extinguiſhes the contract, but the acceptance of an obligation, for a debt due by another obligation, is no bar of the firſt obligation. 13 H. 4. c. 1: 1 Roll. Abr. 604. i. e. if between the ſame parties. See title Bond V: Acceptance: Payment.

In debt upon an obligation, the defendant cannot plead nil debet, but muſt deny the deed by pleading non eſt factum for the ſeal of the party, continuing, it muſt be diſſolved eo ligamine quo ligatum eſt. Hard. 332.

But if the debt be due by ſimple contract, then he may plead nil debet, for it does not appear that there is any debt continuing. Hob. 218.

In debt for rent, if it be by deed, the proper plea is non eſt factum; but if it be without deed, the defendant may plead non demiſit, nothing in arrear, or that he never entered. 2 Inſt. 651: Hard. 332.

In debt for the arrears of an annuity granted for life, nil debet is no good plea, for the action is merely founded upon the deed, for without it no action can be maintained, and though by the death of the grantee the nature of the action is changed, the annuity being determined; yet this proves not but that the action is founded upon the deed. Keilw. 147.

But in debt for the arrears of a rent-charge, by will deviſed to the plaintiff's wife for life, againſt the adminiſtrator of the occupier of the land, nil detinet is a good plea, for the will is no deed, nor wants any delivery; adjudged, and ſaid the action was not ſo much grounded upon the will itſelf as upon the ſtatute, by which men are enabled by will to diſpoſe of their lands and rents iſſuing out thereof. Hard. 322.

by

In debt upon St. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 13, for not ſetting forth tithes, Not guilty, or nil debet are good iſſues; 2 Inſt. 651: Cro. Eliz. 621. S. P; becauſe by the action the defendant is charged with a tort, and if he is not guilty of the tort, he does not owe the debt.

In debt upon a contract, the defendant cannot plead the contract was for a leſs ſum, or otherwiſe than the plaintiff has declared, and traverſe the contract in the declaration laid, but may wage his law. Moor 49. DEBT TO THE KING. Under this word debitum all things due to the King are comprehended; as all rents, fines, iſſues, and amercements, and other duties received or levied by the ſheriff; for debt in the larger ſenſe ſignifies whatever any man owes. 2 Inſt. 198. The King's debt is to be ſatisfied before that of a ſubject, and until his debt be paid, he may protect the debtor from the arreſt of others. And by Stat. 33 H. 3. c. 39, all obligations made to the King ſhall have the ſame force as a Statute-Staple: 1 Inſt. 130. But by Stat. 25 E. 3. ſt. 5. c. 19, notwithſtanding the King's protection, creditors may proceed to judgment againſt their debtors, with a ceſſet executio till the King's debts be paid. Lands, &c. of the King's debtor and accountant, may be ſold as well after his death, as in his life-time: But if the accountant or debtor to the King had a quietus during his life, his heir ſhall be diſcharged of the debt. Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 3. A perſon being in debt to the King, purchaſes a leaſe to him and his wife, and dies: the term in the wife's hands is liable to the debt. 2 Rol. Abr. 157. Though it is ſaid if he purchaſe lands to him and his wife for life, and to their heirs: ſuch lands in the hands of the wife, are not extendible after the huſband's death, for the King's debt. Dyer 255.

If a tenant in tail, becomes indebted to the King, by receipt of the King's money, or otherwiſe: unleſs it be by judgment, recogniſance, obligation, or other ſpecialty originally due to the King, or ſome other to his uſe; and then dies, the land in the hands of the iſſue in tail ſhall not be extended: But it may, in either of thoſe four caſes. 7 Rep. 21, 22. By the Common law, the King for his debt had execution of the body, lands and goods of the debtor: By Magna Charta, 9 H. 3. c. 8. the King's debt ſhall not be levied on lands, where the goods and chattels of the debtor are ſufficient to levy the debt; for in ſuch caſe, the ſheriff ought not to extend the lands and tenements of the King's debtor, or of his heir, &c. 2 Inſt. 19. Alſo pledges ſhall not be diſtrained, when the principal is ſufficient: Though in both caſes it muſt be made appear to the ſheriff; in the one, that there are goods and chattels enough, and in the other, that the ſheriff may levy the King's debt on the principal. Ibid. Sheriffs having received the King's debt, upon their next account are to diſcharge the debtors, on pain to forfeit treble value; and the ſheriffs are to give tallies to the King's debtors on payment. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 19. See Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 35, regulating the ſale of extended eſtates, on motion to the Court of Exchequer, by the Attorney General. The King's debtor committed by the Court of Exchequer to the Fleet, brought into B. R. by habeas corpus, and ſurrendered in diſcharge of his bail, may be removed again to the Fleet by an habeas corpus from the Exchequer. 1 Wilſ. 248.

DEBTEE-EXECUTOR. If a perſon indebted to another makes his creditor or debtee his executor; or if ſuch creditor obtains letter of adminiſtration to his debtor; he may retain ſufficient to pay himſelf before any other creditors whoſe debts are of equal degree. Plowd. 543. See title Executor.

DEBTORS. A work of the nature of this Dictionary is by no means adapted to political diſquiſitions on the propriety of impriſonment for debt—nor to hiſtorical details of the proceedings of foreign nations on the ſubject. The Legiſlature, who are the proper, and indeed the only legal judges, of what regulations on the ſubject are neceſſary, have repeatedly interfered for the relief of honeſt, unfortunate debtors, (too generally a ſmall part of the number confined,) by inſolvent acts; and the liberty of the ſubject, in this particular, has in the preſent reign been much favoured by the laws relative to arreſts.—See title Arreſts; Priſoners. What further, in a Commercial State like Great Britain may be ſafe and neceſſary, will no doubt be done without any hints or ſuggeſtions of private perſons; whoſe opinions, however reſpectable, can be of very little publick weight.

By Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 45, for the Courts of Conſcience in London, Middleſex and Southwark, the proviſions of which are extended by Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 38, nearly totidem verbis, to ALL Courts for the recovery of ſmall debts;—No debtor committed to gaol for a debt not exceeding 20*s.* ſhall be kept in cuſtody on any pretence whatſoever, more than twenty-days—nor for a debt between that and 40 s. more than forty days—then to be diſcharged without payment of fees, on forfeiture by the gaoler of 5 l.—In caſe only of fraudulent concealment of money or goods by the debtor, the time of confinement may be enlarged, in the firſt inſtance to 30 days, and in the latter to 60.

DEBTS, PRIORITY OF, See titles Aſſets; Executor; Mortgage.

DECEIT, Deceptio.] A ſubtle trick or device, whereunto may be referred all manner of craft and colluſion, uſed to deceive and defraud another, by any means whatſoever, which hath no other or more proper name than deceit to diſtinguiſh the offence. Weſt. Symb. ſect. 68.

There is a writ called a WRIT OF DECEIT that lies for one that receives injury or damage from him that doth any thing deceitfully in the name of another perſon; by which he is deceived or injured; which writ is either original or judicial. Reg. Orig. 112: Old Nat. Br. 50.

Deceit is an offence at common law, and by ſtatute: and all practices of defrauding or endeavouring to defraud another of his right, are puniſhable by fine and impriſonment; and if for cheating, by pillory, &c. See title Cheats. Serjeants, counſellors, attornies, and others doing any manner of deceit, are to be impriſoned a year and a day; alſo pleaders by deceit ſhall be expelled the court. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 29.

If a fine be levied by deceit, or if one recover land by deceit, the fine, and the recovery, ſhall be void. 3 Rep. 77. and if a man be attorney for another in a real action againſt the demandant, and afterwards by covin between ſuch attorney and the demandant, the attorney makes default, by which the land is loſt, the tenant who loſt the land ſhall have a writ of deceit againſt the attorney.

F. N. B. 96. So writ of deceit lies to ſet aſide a fine and recovery in C. B. of lands in ancient demeſne. 2 Wilſ. 17.

In a præcipe quod reddat, if the ſheriff return the tenant ſummoned, where he was not ſummoned, by which the defendant loſeth his land by default at the grand cape returned; the tenant ſhall have a writ of deceit againſt him who recovered, and againſt the ſheriff for his falſe return; and by that writ the tenant ſhall be reſtored unto his land again: and the ſheriff ſhall be puniſhed for his falſity. F. N. B. 97. If a man bring a writ of deceit againſt him that recovers in the firſt action, and the ſheriff return him ſummoned, upon which for non-ſummons in that action on finding the ſame the recovery is reverſed; in this caſe the defendant ſhall not have writ of deceit to recover the land again, if he were not ſummoned: but he ſhall have his remedy againſt the ſheriff. Rol. Abr. 621. And where debt was brought, and the defendant pleaded in abatement, and the plea was over-ruled, the attornies on both ſides by deceit between them, to the end the plaintiff might recover his debt, entered another judgment when it ſhould have been a reſpondeas ouſter; and it was held that the writ of deceit would not lie to reverſe the record, but only to recover damages. Ibid. 622.

If in a ſuit or action, another perſon ſhall come into court and pretend he is party to the ſuit, and ſo let judgment be had, or ſome other damage done to the party himſelf; or if one have cauſe to have an action, and another brings it in his name, and lets judgment go by non-ſuit, or the like; the injured party may have this writ of deceit. F. N. B. 96: March 48.

If any one forge a ſtatute, &c. in my name, and ſueth a capias thereupon, for which I am arreſted; I ſhall have a writ of deceit againſt him that forged it, and againſt him who ſued forth the writ of capias, &c. And if a perſon procure another to ſue an action againſt me to trouble me, I ſhall have a writ of deceit. F. N. B. 96.

There are many frauds and deceits provided againſt by ſtatute, relating to artificers, bakers, brewers, victuallers, falſe weights and meaſures, &c. which are liable to penalties and puniſhment in proportion to the offence committed. And writ of deceit lies in various caſes, for not performing a bargain; or not ſelling good commodities, &c. 1 Inſt. 357.

On almoſt all occaſions, where a perſon is deceived or injured, and where anciently remedy was ſought by the writ of deceit, an action on the caſe for damages, in nature of a writ of deceit is now more uſually brought. And indeed it is the only remedy for a lord of a manour in or out of ancient demeſne, to reverſe a fine or recovery had in the king's court, of lands lying within his juriſdiction, which would otherwiſe be thereby turned into frank-fee. And this may be brought by the lord againſt the parties and ceſtui que uſe of ſuch fine and recovery; and thereby he ſhall obtain judgment not only for damages (which are uſually remitted) but alſo to recover his court and juriſdiction over the lands, and to annul the former proceedings. 3 Lev. 415, 419: Raſt. Ent. 100 b: Lutw. 711, 749.

DECENNARY, A town or tithing conſiſting (originally) of ten families of freeholders. Ten tithings compoſed an hundred. The inſtitution of decennaries (or frank-pledges) is imputed to Alfred. In theſe decennaries the whole neighbourhood or tithing of freemen were mutually pledges for each other's good behaviour. 1 Comm. 114. See poſt Deciners.

DECEM TALES. When a full jury doth not appear at a trial at bar; then a writ goes to the ſheriff apponere decem tales, &c. whereby a ſupply is made of jurymen to proceed in the trial. See title Jury.

DECIES TANTUM, A writ that lies on Stat. 38 E. 3. c. 12, againſt a juror, who hath taken money of either party for giving his verdict to recover ten times the ſum taken. See title Jury. This writ alſo lies againſt embraceors that procure ſuch an inqueſt; who ſhall be further puniſhed by impriſonment for a year. Reg. Orig. 188: F. N. B. 171: Stat. 38 Ed. 3. cap. 12.

DECIMATION, Decimatio.] The puniſhing every tenth ſoldier by lot, was termed decimatio legionis: it likewiſe ſignifies tithing, or paying a tenth part. There was a decimation during the time of the Uſurper 1655.

DECINERS, DECENNIERS, or DOZINERS, Decennarii.] In our ancient law, ſuch as were wont to have the overſight of the Friburghs, or views of frank-pledge, for the maintenance of the King's peace; and the limits or compaſs of their juriſdiction was called Decenna, becauſe it commonly conſiſted of ten houſholds; as every perſon, bound for himſelf and his neighbours to keep the peace, was ſtiled Decennier. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 15.

Theſe ſeem to have had large authority in the time of the Saxons, taking knowledge of cauſes within their circuits, and redreſſing wrongs by way of judgment, and compelling men thereunto, as appears in the laws of King Edward the Confeſſor, Lambard, Numb. 32. But of late decennier is not uſed for the chief man of a dizein, or dozein; but he that is ſworn to the king's peace, and by oath of loyalty to the prince, is ſettled in the ſociety of a dozein.

A dozein ſeemed to extend ſo far as a leet extendeth; becauſe in leets the oath of loyalty is adminiſtered by the ſteward, and taken by all ſuch as are twelve years old, and upwards, dwelling within the precinct of the leet where they are ſworn. F. N. B. 161. There are now no other dozeins but leets; and there is a great diverſity between ancient and modern times, in this point of law and government. 2 Inſt. 73. See 1 Comm. 114: 4 Comm. 252: and ante Decennary.

DECLARATION,

Declaratio, Narratio.] A legal ſpecification, on record, of the cauſe of action, by a plaintiff againſt a defendant.

In the King's Bench, when the defendant is brought into court by bill of Middleſex, upon a ſuppoſed treſpaſs, in order to give the court a juriſdiction, the plaintiff may declare in whatever action, or charge the defendant with whatever injury he thinks proper, unleſs he has held him to bail by a ſpecial ac etiam; which the plaintiff is then bound to purſue. And ſo alſo, in order to have the benefit of a capias to ſecure the defendant's perſon, it was the antient practice, and is therefore ſtill warrantable, in the Common Pleas, to ſue out a writ of treſpaſs quare clauſum fregit, for breaking the plaintiff's cloſe: and when the defendant is once brought in upon this writ, the plaintiff declares in what action the nature of his true injury may require; as in an action of covenant, or on the caſe for breach of contract, or other leſs forcible tranſgreſſion: (2 Ventr. 159:) unleſs, by holding the defendant to bail on a ſpecial ac etiam, he has bound himſelf to declare accordingly. 3 Comm. 293. See titles Ac etiam; Capias; Common-Pleas.

In

In either caſe, the declaration ſhould correſpond with the proceſs, in the names and deſcriptions of the parties: for if there be a material variance, the court will ſet aſide the proceedings: unleſs where the proceſs is taken out againſt the defendant by a wrong name, and he appears by his right name, there the plaintiff may declare againſt him by the name in which he appears, ſtating that he was arreſted by the other name: for by appearing, the defendant admits himſelf to be the perſon ſued; and ſo the variance is immaterial. 3 Term Rep. 611.

The ſubſtantial rules of pleading according to which declarations are to be drawn are founded in ſtrong ſenſe and the ſoundeſt and cloſeſt logic, and ſo appear when well underſtood and explained; though by being miſunderſtood and miſapplied, they are often made uſe of as inſtruments of chicane. 1 Burr. 319.

Rules reſpecting the form of the Declaration.—The parties plaintiff or demandant, defendant or tenant, ought to be well named.—The time of a matter charged in the declaration ought to be certainly alledged: and therefore in aſſumpſit, the day being omitted on which the promiſe is made, it is bad. Yel. 94: Pl. Com. 24.—A certain place ought to be alledged where every fact material and traverſable was done. Kitch. 226:—The giſt, and every thing, that is of the eſſence of the plaintiff's action, muſt be ſet forth in the declaration. That ſeems properly to be the eſſence of the action without which the court could have no ſufficient grounds to give judgment. Doct. Pl. 85.—If the declaration be not ſufficient on which to found a judgment, this may be moved in arreſt of judgment after verdict. Ibid.—The declaration muſt ſhew a title in the plaintiff, See Cro. Eliz. 325: Moor 598.—In all caſes where an intereſt or eſtate commences upon condition, the plaintiff ought to ſhew it in his declaration, and aver the performance of it; but when the intereſt of the eſtate paſſes preſently, and veſts in the grantee, and is to be defeated by condition; there the plaintiff may count generally, and the condition ſhall be pleaded by him who is to take advantage of it. 7 Co. 10: Lil. Reg. 418.

The declaration muſt contain ſuch certain affirmation that it may be traverſed; for if there be no certain affirmation to make the declaration itſelf traverſable, it will not be cured after a verdict, becauſe it is a defect in ſubſtance. Co. Lit. 303: Cro. Jac. 361: 2 Bulſt. 214: Cro. Eliz. 33, 441: 2 Saund. 319.—If a declaration be good in part, though bad as to another part, the plaintiff is entitled to judgment for ſo much as is well alledged, eſpecially if it be not of an entire demand. 10 Co. 115: Rol. Abr. 784, 5; 2 Show. 103: 1 Salk. 133: Vide 3 Burr. 1235.

For preventing unneceſſary length of declarations, it has been ſpecially ordered, that in actions of covenant, the declaration is not to repeat more of the deed than is neceſſary for the aſſignment of the breach, and not to repeat the covenant in the concluſion.—In actions of ſlander, long preambles to be forbor'n, and no more inducement than what is neceſſary for the maintenance of the action; but when it requires a ſpecial inducement, or colloquium.—In actions upon general ſtatutes, the declaration not to repeat the ſtatute, but to conclude 'againſt the form of the ſtatute in ſuch caſe made and provided.'—In actions of debt upon judgment had in the Courts at Weſtminſter, to recite only the judgment; but if on a judgment had by, or againſt an executor or adminiſtrator, then the action of debt upon that judgment, to repeat the declaration and judgment. R. M. 1654. § 13.—In a declaration on action founded on a deed, the plaintiff need not ſet forth more than that part which is neceſſary to entitle him to recover. Cowp. 665. And it will be ſufficient to ſtate the ſubſtance and legal effect even of ſuch part; which is ſhorter, and not liable to miſ-recitals and literal miſtakes. The diſtinction is between that which may be rejected as ſurpluſage (which might have been ſtruck out on motion) and what cannot: where the declaration contains impertinent matter, foreign to the cauſe, and which the Maſter on a reference to him would ſtrike out (irrelevant covenants for inſtance), that will be rejected by the Court and need not be proved. But if the very ground of the action is miſſtated, as where the plaintiff undertakes to recite that part of a deed on which the action is founded, and it is miſ-recited, that will be fatal: for then the caſe declared on is different from that which is proved, and he muſt recover ſecundum allegata et probata. Doug. 665. Briſtow v. Wright and another; and the notes there.

Of Declarations, in Chief, De bene eſſe, and By-the-by.—There are two ways in which the plaintiff may declare, the one on the return-day of the writ, which is called, de bene eſſe, conditionally, until ſpecial, or common bail be filed; the other after the day for filing common bail, or when the defendant has juſtified his bail, which is called in chief. If to ſpeed the cauſe, the former is the beſt way of proceeding. And a rule to plead may be given on the ſame day.—When a Declaration is filed de bene eſſe, till common bail or appearance entered, or till ſpecial bail be filed, notice that it is ſo filed muſt be given to the defendant in writing. Impey K. B.

The plaintiff cannot declare in chief, unleſs common bail be filed by the defendant, or plaintiff has done it for him. Smith v. Painter, 2 Term Rep. 719: 1 Term. Rep. 635: Cooke v. Raven. And it muſt be filed the term the writ is returnable. Hardw. 138.

When the defendant has filed common or ſpecial bail for himſelf, any perſon may deliver or file a Declaration againſt him by-the-by, at any time during the term wherein the proceſs againſt the defendant is returnable, ſedente curiâ; and the practice hath been, that the plaintiff, at whoſe ſuit the proceſs is, might declare againſt the defendant in as many actions as he thinks fit, before the end of the next term, after the return of the proceſs. Impey. K. B. 177. See 4 Burr. 2180.

Of the time of declaring.—The plaintiff muſt declare before the end of the term next after the return of the proceſs; or the defendant may ſign a non-pros (except in replevin) without entering any rule to declare, and the defendant ſhall have coſts taxed as uſual. Stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 2. § 5. And no rule to declare need be given in K. B. either by bill or original.

By the general rules of law, a plaintiff muſt declare againſt a defendant within twelve month after the return of the writ. But by the rules of the court, if he do not deliver his Declaration within two terms, the defendant may ſign judgment of non-pros. Though unleſs he takes ſuch advantage of the plaintiff's neglect, the plaintiff may ſtill deliver a Declaration within the year. 2 Term Rep. 112: 3 Term Rep. 123. The defendant cannot ſign a non-pros, unleſs he enter his appearance within the term the writ is returnable. Hardw. 138: 2 Term

Rep. 719. To prevent a non-pros being ſigned, the plaintiff may get a Side-bar rule, if the defendant is not in cuſtody, the laſt day of the ſecond term, for time to declare, until the firſt day of the next term; and he may have as many rules as he likes, from term to term, but there muſt be two in a term, viz. one from the firſt day of the term to the laſt day, and the other from the laſt day to the firſt day of the next term. But the defendant may, if he thinks proper, move the court, that the laſt rule may be peremptory. Impey, K. B.

In all Notices of Declarations, care is to be taken that the cauſe be properly named, as well as the court in which the ſuit is inſtituted; and in notices of Declaration, the nature of the action is to be expreſſed, and at whoſe ſuit proſecuted, and the time limited to plead to ſuch Declaration. R. T. 1 Geo. 2.

Of entitling, and laying the day and place in Declarations.— It is uſual when the cauſe of action will admit of it, to entitle the Declaration generally, of the term in which the writ is returnable; but it ſhould always be entitled, after the time when the cauſe of action is ſtated to have accrued: therefore where the cauſe of action is ſtated to have accrued after the firſt day of the term in which the writ is returnable, the Declaration ſhould be entitled of a ſubſequent day in that term, and not of the term generally; for as a general title refers to the firſt day of the term, upon ſuch a title it would appear, that the action was commenced before the cauſe of it accrued. Yet where the cauſe of action was ſtated to have accrued on the firſt day of the term, the court on demurrer held, that the declaration might be entitled of the term generally, for the delivery of the declaration is the act of the party, and in antient times it could not have been delivered till the ſitting of the court; ſo that the cauſe of action might well have accrued, before the actual delivery of the Declaration. 1 Term Rep. 116: Vide 2 Lev. 176: and 3 Term Rep. 624.

If the cauſe of action ariſes within the term the Declaration is of, then do not entitle it as of the term generally, but make a ſpecial day after the cauſe of action accrued, as, "Thurſday next after the Morrow of All Souls, in Michaelmas Term, in the 32d year of the reign of King George 3." inſtead of "Michaelmas Term" generally.

If the plaintiff declares on a note, the day is material, and an eſſential part of the agreement, from which he cannot vary; ſo on a bond or other writing; but in the caſe of a common aſſumpſit, the day is alledged only for form, and therefore the defendant cannot confine the plaintiff to the day alledged in the Declaration. Str. 21: Vide Co. Lit. 283: Plowd. Com. 24 a.

In other caſes, as in treſpaſs, aſſault, battery, &c. the day is immaterial, but is in general laid after the cauſe of action accrued, and before the term or time of which the Declaration is intitled.

In local actions, where poſſeſſion of land is to be recovered, or damages for an actual treſpaſs, or for waſte, &c. affecting land, the plaintiff muſt lay his Declaration, or declare his injury to have happened in the very county and place where it really did happen; but in tranſitory actions, for injuries that might have happened any where, as debt, detinue, ſlander, and the like, the plaintiff may declare in what county he pleaſes, and then the trial muſt be had in that county in which the Declaration is laid. 3 Comm. 294. See titles Action; Venue.

In action of debt, upon a bond, the plaintiff in his declaration muſt alledge a place where the bond was made, becauſe the jury ſhould come from that place; and if this be omitted, the declaration is ill. Dyer 15, 39: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 619.

It is good to lay large and ſufficient damages in declarations: and damages ſhall not be given for that which is not contained in the declaration, and only for what is materially alledged. 10 Rep. 115: 1 Lill. Abr. 381.

Where a declaration is defective, it is ſometimes aided by the ſtatutes of amendment and jeofails, &c. but they help only matters of form, not matters of ſubſtance. 5 Rep. 35. See titles Amendment: Practice.

On filing Declarations, copies thereof are ſerved on the defendants or their attornies, &c. And by an order of all the judges, (12 W. 3.) the plaintiff's attorney is not obliged to deliver the defendant's attorney the original Declaration; but inſtead of it, is to deliver a true copy of the Declaration; upon delivery or tender whereof, the defendant's attorney ſhall pay for ſuch copy after the rate of 4*d. per* ſheet, &c. and if any perſon refuſe to pay for the copy tendered, the ſaid copy is to be left in the office, with the clerk that keeps the files of Declarations, and thereupon the plaintiff's attorney giving rule to plead, may, for want of a plea, ſign judgment; and before any plea ſhall be received, the defendant's attorney is to pay for the copy of the declaration.

And by another order, (Trin 2 Geo. 2,) in every cauſe, where ſpecial or common bail is filed, and notice given to the plaintiff, a copy of the Declaration ſhall be delivered to the attorney for the defendant, who ſhall pay for it according to the uſual rate; but if the defendant's attorney, or his clerk in his abſence, refuſes to pay for ſuch copy; or if it happens the habitation of the attorney for the defendant, be unknown to the attorney for the plaintiff; then it ſhall be lawful to leave the copy with the officer of the court appointed for filing Declarations, which ſhall be good, giving notice, &c.— There are ſeveral other rules of Court as to the filing and delivering Declarations, &c. for which ſee the ſeveral books of Practice, and further this Dict. titles Practice: Proceſs, Priſoner, &c.

DECREE. The judgment of a court of equity on any bill preferred. See title Chancery.

A decree in Chancery is of the like nature with a judgment at Common-law. Chan. Rep. 234.

Where there is but one witneſs againſt the defendant's anſwer, the plaintiff can have no decree. 1 Vern. 161.

Where no ordinary proceſs upon the firſt decree will ſerve for the execution thereof, there muſt be a new bill to pray execution of the firſt decree by a ſecond decree. 2 Chan. Rep. 127, 128. See title Chancery.

Verbal agreement, though ſubſequent to the decree, yet ſhall not ſtay the execution of it, but the remedy muſt be by original bill. 2 Chan. Caſes 8.

Whenever a decree is entered by conſent, the merits of it ſhall never after be enquired into, unleſs there be an objection, that the word conſent be ſtruck out of the order. MS. Norcot v. Norcot.

Several queſtions and diſputes were heretofore warmly agitated, as to the authority of the Maſter of the Rolls to hear and determine cauſes; and as to his general power power in the Court of Chancery: to quiet which, it was declared by Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 30, that all orders and decrees by him made, except ſuch as by the courſe of the court were appropriated to the great ſeal alone, ſhould be deemed to be valid, ſubject nevertheleſs to be diſcharged or allowed by the Lord Chancellor; and ſo as they ſhall not be inrolled till the ſame are ſigned by his Lordſhip.

If either party to the ſuit thinks himſelf aggrieved by a decree, he may petition the Chancellor for a re-hearing, whether it was heard before the Chancellor himſelf or any of the Judges ſitting for him, or before the Maſter of the Rolls. For in all caſes it is the Chancellor's decree and muſt be ſigned by him before it is enrolled; which is done of courſe, unleſs a re-hearing be deſired. Every petition for a re-hearing muſt be ſigned by two counſel, uſually ſuch as have been concerned in the cauſe; certifying that they apprehend the cauſe is proper to be re-heard. And upon the re-hearing, all the evidence taken in the cauſe, whether read before or not, is then admitted to be read; becauſe it is the decree of the Chancellor himſelf, who only ſits to hear reaſons why it ſhould not be enrolled and perfected, at which time all omiſſions of either evidence or argument may be ſupplied. Gilb. Rep. 151, 2.—But after the decree is once ſigned and enrolled, it cannot be re-heard or reſtified but by Bill of Review, or by appeal to the Houſe of Lords.

A Bill of Review, may be had upon apparent error in judgment, appearing upon the face of the decree; or by ſpecial leave of the court, upon oath made, of the diſcovery of new matter or evidence, which could not poſſibly be had or uſed at the time when the decree paſſed. But no new evidence or matter then in the knowledge of the parties, and which might have been uſed before, ſhall be a ſufficient ground for a Bill of Review. 3 Comm. 454. See further this Dict. title Chancery; and Vin. title Decree.

On a new bill to carry a decree into execution, the Court may vary and alter what is thought proper; but on a re-hearing, no father than the petition extends; but if the petition be againſt the decree in general, though particular reaſons are given, the whole is open; but otherwiſe it is, if the petition be only againſt one or two particulars. Sel. Caſes in Chan. 13, 14.

The rule of court is, that on appeal the whole cauſe is open; but on a re-hearing, only ſo much as is petitioned againſt; if all do not petition, it is open only to the petitioners. S. C. C. 24.

Decree may be altered upon proper application, the ſame term it is pronounced, without a re-hearing.—No original bill can be to vacate a decree ſigned and enrolled.—Matters, proper to be excepted to upon the Maſter's report, ſhall never be objected to a decree after the report confirmed. 7 Vin. Abr. 400.

A decree gained by fraud, may be ſet aſide by petition, as well as a judgment at law by motion: à fortiori may ſuch decree be ſet aſide by bill. 3 P. Wms. 111. If a decree be obtained and enrolled, ſo that the cauſe cannot be re-heard, then there is no remedy but by bill of review, which muſt be on error appearing on the face of the decree, or on matters ſubſequent thereto, as a releaſe, or a receipt diſcovered ſince. 3 P. Wms. 371.

DECRETALS, Decretales.] A volume of the Canon-Law, ſo called, containing the decrees of ſundry Popes; or a Digeſt of the canons of all the councils that pertained to one matter under one head. See title Canon-Law.

DECURIARE. To bring into order. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. p. 243.

DEDBANA, Ded-bane Sax.] An actual homicide, or manſlaughter. Leg. H. 1. c. 85.

DEDI, This word amounts to a warranty in law; as if it be ſaid in a deed or conveyance, That A. B. hath Given, &c. to C. D. it is a warranty to him and his heirs. Co. Lit. 304. Alſo dedi imports a power of giving any thing. Hob. 12. See titles Conveyance: Deed.

DEDICATION-DAY, Feſtum Dedicationis.] The feaſt of dedication of churches, or rather the feaſt-day of the Saint and Patron of a church; which was celebrated not only by the inhabitants of the place, but by thoſe of all the neighbouring villages, who uſually came thither; and ſuch aſſemblies were allowed as lawful: It was uſual for the people to feaſt and drink on thoſe days; and in many parts of England, they ſtill meet every year in villages for this purpoſe, which days are called Feaſts or Wakes. Cowel.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM. Is a writ or commiſſion given to one or more private perſons, for the ſpeeding ſome act appertaining to a judge, or ſome court: And it is granted moſt commonly upon ſuggeſtion, that the party who is to do ſomething before a judge, or in court, is ſo weak that he cannot travel; as where a perſon lives in the country, to take an anſwer in Chancery; to examine witneſſes in a cauſe depending in that court; to levy a fine in the Common Pleas, &c.—On renewing the commiſſion of the peace, there cometh a writ of dedimus poteſtatem out of Chancery, directed to ſome ancient juſtice, to take the oath of him, which is newly inſerted. See title Juſtices.

DEDIMUS POTESTATEM DE ATTORNATO FACIENDO. As the words of writs do command the defendant to appear, &c. anciently the judges would not ſuffer the parties to make attornies in any action or ſuit, without the King's writ of Dedimus Poteſtatem, to receive their attornies: But now by ſtatutes, the plaintiff or defendant may make attornies in ſuits without ſuch writs. New Nat. Br. 55, 56. See title Attornies.

DEED,

FACTUM.] An inſtrument in parchment, or paper, but chiefly in parchment, comprehending a contract or bargain between party and party; or an agreement of the parties thereto, for the matters therein contained: And it conſiſts of three principal points, writing, ſealing and delivery; writing, to expreſs the contents; ſealing, to teſtify the conſent of the parties; and delivery, to make it binding and perfect. Terms de Ley.

I. What a Deed is.
II. The Requiſites to make a good Deed.
III. How a Deed may be avoided.
IV. Shortly, of the inrolling, expoſition and pleading of Deeds.

I. A DEED is a Writing ſealed and delivered by the parties. 1 Inſt. 171. It is ſometimes called a charter, carta, from from its materials; but moſt uſually, when applied to the tranſaction of private ſubjects, it is called a deed, in Latin factum, becauſe it is the moſt ſolemn and authentic act that a man can poſſibly perform, with relation to the diſpoſal of his property; and therefore a man ſhall always be eſtopped by his own deed, or not permitted to aver or prove any thing in contradiction to what he has once ſo ſolemnly and deliberately avowed. Plowd. 434. If a deed be made by more parties than one, there ought to be regularly as many copies of it as there are parties, and each ſhould be cut or indented (formerly in acute angles, inſtar dentium, like the teeth of a ſaw, but at preſent in a waving line) on the top or ſides to tally, or correſpond with the other; which deed, ſo made, is called an Indenture. Formerly, when deeds were more conciſe than at preſent, it was uſual to write both parts on the ſame piece of parchment, beginning at the middle and continuing to the contrary ends, with ſome word or letters of the alphabet written between them; through which the parchment was cut, either in a ſtrait or indented line, in ſuch a manner as to leave half the word on one part and half on the other. Deeds thus made were denominated ſyngrapha by the canoniſts, and with us chirographa, or hand-writings. Mirror, c. 2. § 27; the word cirographum or cyrographum being uſually that which is divided in making the indentures of a fine. See title Chirograph.—But at length indenting only has come into uſe, without cutting through any letters at all; and it ſeems at preſent to ſerve for little other purpoſe, than to give name to the ſpecies of the deed. See further 1 Inſt. 229 (a) in n.—When the ſeveral parts of an indenture are interchangeably executed by the ſeveral parties, that part or copy which is executed by the grantor is uſually called the Original, and the reſt are Counterparts; though of late it is moſt frequent for all the parties to execute every part, which renders them all originals. A deed made by one party only is not indented, but polled or ſhaved quite even; and therefore called a deed-poll, or a ſingle deed. Litt. § 371, 2.

A deed poll is ſaid to be a deed teſtifying that only one of the parties to the agreement hath put his ſeal to the ſame, where ſuch party is the principal or only perſon, whoſe conſent or act is neceſſary to the deed: and it is therefore a plain deed, without indenting, and is uſed when the vendor, for example, only ſeals, and there is no need of the vendee's ſealing a counterpart, becauſe the nature of the contract is ſuch, as to require no covenant from the vendee, &c. Co. Lit. 55.

The ſeveral parts of deeds by indenture, are belonging to the feoffor, grantor, or leſſor, who have one; the feoffee, grantee, or leſſee, who have another; and ſome other perſons, as truſtees, a third, &c. and the deed-poll which is ſingle, and of but one part, is delivered to the feoffee, or grantee, &c.

All the parts of a deed indented, in judgment of law, make but one intire deed; but every part is of as great force as all the parts together, and they are eſteemed the mutual acts of either party, who may be bound by either part of the ſame, and the words of the indenture are the words of either party, &c. But a deed poll is the ſole deed of him that makes it, and the words thereof ſhall be ſaid to be his words, and bind him only. Plowd. 134, 421: Lit. ſ. 370.

II. 1. THE FIRST REQUISITE of a deed is, that there be perſons able to contract and be contracted with, for the purpoſes intended by the deed; and alſo a thing, or ſubject matter to be contracted for; all which muſt be expreſſed by ſufficient names. Co. Lit. 35. So as in every grant, there muſt be a grantor, a grantee, and a thing granted; in every leaſe, a leſſor, a leſſee, and a thing demiſed.

Some perſons are diſabled to contract by Common-law, and ſome by ſtatute; ſome abſolutely, and ſome ſecundum quid only; as in caſe of infants, feme coverts, ideots, perſons non compos mentis, aliens, tenants in tail, eccleſiaſtical perſons, and others; ſome of which may not make any deeds or eſtates by them at all, others but ſo and ſo limited and qualified. Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 28.—See tit. Leaſes.

Diſabilities to make deeds, &c. are chiefly amongſt perſons of non-ſane memory, infants, aliens, women who have huſbands, men who have wives, &c. perſons born deaf and dumb, perſons attaint of treaſon or felony, or, in a præmunire, clerks convict, tenant in tail, eccleſiaſtical perſons, as biſhops, parſons, and the like, with reſpect to lands, &c. which they hold as ſuch; joint-tenants, tenants in common, coparceners, diſſeiſors, diſſeiſſees, &c. See theſe ſeveral titles.

He who has only an eſtate for his own or another's life, or a leaſe for years of land, may give, grant, or charge it at his pleaſure for ſo long as his eſtate laſts; and it will be good to all purpoſes, and againſt all perſons for that time.

And a man who has an eſtate in land to him and his wife, and his heirs, may make what eſtate he will of it, and this will be good againſt all but his wife, and that for her life only. 7 Co. 12: Co. Lit. 42: Perk. § 182.

The King for the greatneſs of his perſon, is diſabled to take by deed in pais; and therefore if a feoffment be made to him there, and livery of ſeiſin be made upon it, this will be void; but he is to take by matter of record, which is of an higher nature than a deed. Fitz. Fait and Feoffment 21.

Leaſes made to the King by colleges, deans and chapters, or any other, having a ſpiritual or eccleſiaſtical living, againſt the Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 10, are reſtrained by the ſame act, as well as leaſes made to common perſons. 5 Co. 14.

The names of the parties to deeds ſerve to diſtinguiſh perſons, and to make the perſon intended certain; yet miſtakes in this, unleſs they be very groſs, will not hurt, nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore conſtat. Bulſt. 21, 22: 2 Bulſt. 302, 303: Co. Lit. 3: Perk. § 36.

But if the name of baptiſm or ſurname be miſtaken, as John for Thomas, &c. this is dangerous. Moor 407, 897. And ſee 2 Bulſt. 70: Perk. § 39.

It is alſo prudent to add the addition of each party, as the place of reſidence, with his or her degree, profeſſion, or myſtery.

There are many deſcriptions of grantors and grantees; as (1) Proper names of baptiſm and ſurnames, and the names of corporations, or bodies politic or corporate. (2) Names of dignities, office, and the like. And theſe (of both ſorts) will admit a deſcription made good by reputation. And ſo land will paſs to one, by the name of a ſon, who is a baſtard; ſo to one by the name of a wife, who who is not a wife, 27 Ed. 3. 85: Bulſt. 3; if they be reputed or known by that name. Hob. 32.

There muſt be ſuch a perſon in eſſe at the time of the deed made as is named, and the parties muſt be able to give, and capable to receive that which is given or granted by the deed. Plowd. 345: Co. Lit. 2, 3: Perk. 43. 52.

And therefore if an annuity be granted to the right heirs of J. S. he being then living, this is void; for there is none ſuch, nor can be whilſt he lives. Perk. § 52. See Cro. Car. 22.

If a man gets another name by common eſteem than his right name, and he is known by his other name, his deed made by this other name may be good. 6 Co. 36: Co. Lit. 3: Perk. § 41.

The miſtake is leſs dangerous where any other part of the deed, or ſome other addition, ſhall make the perſon intended certain. 6 Co. 36: Co. Lit. 3: Perk. § 40.

As to the ſubject-matter of Contracts, Grants, &c. See this Dict. title Grant, and other proper titles.

2. The deed muſt be founded upon good and ſufficient conſideration. Not upon an uſurious contract, (Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 8,) nor upon fraud or colluſion, either to deceive purchaſors bona fide, (Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4,) or juſt and lawful creditors; (Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5;) any of which bad conſiderations will vacate the deed, and ſubject ſuch perſons, as put the ſame in ure, to forfeitures, and often to impriſonment. A deed alſo or other grant, made without any conſideration, is as it were, of no effect; for it is conſtrued to inure, or to be effectual only to the uſe of the grantor himſelf. Perk. § 533. The conſideration may be either a good or a valuable one. See further title Conſideration, and poſt. III.

In deeds, the conſideration is a principal thing to give them effect: and the foundation of deeds ought always to be honeſt. That a deed was executed upon a corrupt agreement, dehors the deed, may be averred in pleading. See the caſe of Collins and Blantern, a new and very peculiar caſe. 2 Wilſ. 341, &c.

3. The deed muſt be written, or (as is the caſe at preſent with many inſtruments, ſuch as Bonds, Policies of Inſurance, &c.) printed; for it may be in any character, or any language; but it muſt be upon paper or parchment. For if it be written on ſtone, board, linen, leather, or the like, it is no deed. Co. Litt. 229: F. N. B. 122.

All the matter and form of a deed, muſt be written before the ſealing and delivery of it; for if a man ſeals and delivers an empty piece of parchment or paper, although he therewithal gives commandment that an obligation or other matter ſhall be written in it, which is done accordingly, yet this will not make it a good deed. Co. Lit. 171: Perk. §. 118, 119: See Moor 28: Hetley 136, 7.

A deed may be written in any hand, as in text, court or Roman hand; or in any language, as in Latin or French, and is as good as a deed written in Engliſh, and in a ſecretary hand. 2 Co. 3.

It may be written either in a piece of looſe paper or parchment, or in a paper or parchment ſewed in a book. Bro. Oblig. 67: Co. Lit. 137, 139.

A deed muſt alſo have the regular Stamps, impoſed on it by the ſeveral ſtatutes, for the increaſe of the public revenue; elſe it cannot be given in evidence.

Formerly many conveyances were made by parol, or word of mouth only, without writing; but this giving a handle to a variety of frauds, the Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, enacts, that no leaſe, eſtate, or intereſt in lands, tenements, or hereditaments, made by livery of ſeiſin, or by parol only, (except leaſes not exceeding three years from the making, and whereupon the reſerved rent is at leaſt two-thirds of the real value) ſhall be looked upon as of greater force than a leaſe or eſtate at will; nor ſhall any aſſignment, grant, or ſurrender of any intereſt in any freehold hereditaments be valid; unleſs in both caſes the ſame be put in writing, and ſigned by the party granting, or his agent, lawfully authoriſed in writing. See title Frauds.

4. The matter written muſt be legally and orderly ſet forth; that is, there muſt be words ſufficient to ſpecify the agreement, and bind the parties; which ſufficiency muſt be left to the courts of law to determine. Co. Lit. 225. For it is not abſolutely neceſſary in law, to have all the formal parts that are uſually drawn out in Deeds, ſo as there be ſufficient words to declare clearly and legally the party's meaning. But, as theſe formal and orderly parts are calculated to convey that meaning in the cleareſt, diſtincteſt, and moſt effectual manner, and have been well conſidered and ſettled by the wiſdom of ſucceſſive ages, it is prudent not to depart from them without good reaſon or urgent neceſſity; therefore they ſhall be recapitulated in their uſual order. See 1 Inſt. 6.

It may in the firſt place be generally obſerved with regard to the words requiſite in a deed; that they depend upon the eſtate intended to be conveyed. If a man would purchaſe lands or tenements in fee-ſimple, it behoves him to have theſe words in his purchaſe, To have and to hold to him and to his heirs; for theſe words, his heirs, (only) make the eſtate of inheritance, in all feoffments and grants. But this is to be underſtood of natural bodies: for if lands be given to a ſole body politic or corporate, (as to a biſhop, parſon, vicar, maſter of an hoſpital, &c.) there, to give him an eſtate of inheritance in his politic or corporate capacity, he muſt uſe theſe words, To have and to hold to him and his ſucceſſors. Co. Lit. 8, &c.

If an eſtate-tail is intended to be created, the words muſt be, To have and to hold to him and to the heirs of his body. See title Fee.

The inſertion of the word heirs or ſucceſſors, as the caſe requires, is therefore abſolutely neceſſary in conveyances of eſtates of inheritance; for if a man purchaſe lands by theſe words, To have and to hold to him for ever, he has but an eſtate for term of life. See Co. Lit. 8 b. &c.

We may now proceed more particularly to obſerve on the formal and orderly parts of a Deed.

The Premiſes are uſed to ſet forth the number and names of the parties, with their additions or titles. They alſo contain the recital, if any, of ſuch deeds, agreements, or matters of fact, as are neceſſary to explain the reaſons upon which the preſent tranſaction is founded; and herein alſo is ſet down the conſideration upon which the deed is made. And then follows the certainty of the grantor, grantee, and thing granted.

Next come the Habendum and Tenendum. The office of the habendum, is properly to determine what eſtate or intereſt is granted by the deed; though this may be performed, and ſometimes is performed in the premiſes.

In

In which caſe the habendum may leſſen, enlarge, explain, or qualify, but not totally contradict or be repugnant to, the eſtate granted in the premiſes. As if a grant be "to A. and the heirs of his body," in the premiſes, habendum "to him and his heirs for ever," or vice verſa, here A. has an eſtate tail, and a fee-ſimple expectant thereon. Co. Litt. 21: 2 Roll. Rep. 19, 23: Cro. Jac. 476. But, had it been in the premiſes, "to him and his heirs," habendum, "to him for life," the habendum would be utterly void. 2 Rep. 23: 8 Rep. 56; for an eſtate of inheritance is veſted in him before the habendum comes, and ſhall not afterwards be taken away, or deveſted, by it. The tenendum, "and to hold," is now of very little uſe, and is only kept in by cuſtom. It was ſometimes formerly uſed to ſignify the tenure, by which the eſtate granted was to be holden; viz. "tenendum per ſervitium militare, in burgagio, in libero ſocagio, &c." But, all theſe being now reduced to free and common ſocage, the tenure is never ſpecified. Before the ſtatute of quia emptores, 18 Ed. 1. ſt. 1, it was alſo ſometimes uſed to denote the lord of whom the land ſhould be holden; but that ſtatute directing all future purchaſers to hold, not of the immediate grantor, but of the chief lord of the fee; this uſe of the tenendum hath been alſo antiquated; though for a long time after we find it mentioned in ancient charters, that the tenements ſhall be holden de capitalibus dominis feodi, but, as this expreſſed nothing more than the ſtatute had already provided for, it gradually grew out of uſe. See title Tenure.

Next follow the Terms of ſtipulation, if any, upon which the grant is made: the firſt of which is the reddendum, or reſervation, whereby the grantor doth create or reſerve ſome new thing to himſelf out of what he had before granted. As "rendering therefore yearly the ſum of ten ſhillings, or a pepper corn, or two days' ploughing, or the like." Under the pure feodal ſyſtem, this render, reditus, return, or rent, conſiſted in chivalry, principally of military ſervices; in villenage, of the moſt ſlaviſh offices; and in ſocage it uſually conſiſts of money, though it may ſtill conſiſt of ſervices, or of any other certain profit. To make a reddendum good, if it be of any thing newly created by the deed, the reſervation muſt be to the grantors, or ſome, or one of them, and not to any ſtranger to the deed. Plowd. 13: 8 Rep. 71. But if it be of ancient ſervices or the like, annexed to the land, then the reſervation may be to the lord of the fee.

Another of the terms upon which a grant may be made is a Condition; as to which ſee fully title Condition.

Next may follow the clauſe of Warranty.

This was anciently inſerted in deeds to ſecure the eſtate to the grantee and his heirs, &c. and was a covenant real, annexed to the land granted, by which the grantor and his heirs were bound to warrant the ſame to the grantee and his heirs, and that they ſhould quietly hold and enjoy it; or upon voucher, &c. the grantor ſhould yield other lands, to the value of what ſhould be evicted. See further title Warranty.

After warranty uſually follow Covenants, or conventions; which are clauſes of agreement contained in a deed, whereby either party may ſtipulate for the truth of certain facts, or may bind himſelf to perform, or give, ſomething to the other. Thus the grantor may covenant that he hath a right to convey; or for the grantee's quiet enjoyment; or the like; the grantee may covenant to pay his rent, or keep the premiſes in repair, &c. If the covenantor covenants for himſelf and his heirs, it is then a covenant real, and deſcends upon the heirs, who are bound to perform it, provided they have aſſets by deſcent, but not otherwiſe: if he covenants alſo for his executors and adminiſtrators, his perſonal aſſets, as well as his real, are likewiſe pledged for the performance of the covenant; which makes ſuch covenant a better ſecurity than any warranty. It is alſo in ſome reſpects a leſs ſecurity, and therefore more beneficial to the grantor; who uſually covenants only for the acts of himſelf, and his anceſtors, whereas a general warranty extended to all mankind. For which reaſons the covenant has in modern practice totally ſuperſeded the other. See fully this Dict. titles Aſſets, Covenant, Aſſignment, Heir.

Laſtly, comes the Concluſion, which mentions the execution and date of the deed, or the time of its being given or executed, either expreſsly, or by reference to ſome day or year before-mentioned. Not but a deed is good, although it mention no date: or hath a falſe date, or even if it hath an impoſſible date, as the 30th of February, provided the real day of its being dated or given, that is delivered, can be proved. Co. Lit. 46: Dyer 28 —See further title Date.

5. A fifth requiſite for making a good deed is the reading of it. This is neceſſary, wherever any of the parties deſire it, and, if it be not done on his requeſt, the deed is void as to him. If he can, he ſhould read it himſelf; if he be blind or illiterate, another muſt read it to him. If it be read falſly, it will be void; at leaſt for ſo much as is miſ-recited: unleſs it be agreed by colluſion, that the deed ſhall be read falſe, on purpoſe to make it void; for in ſuch caſe it ſhall bind the fraudulent party. 2 Rep. 3, 9: 11 Rep. 27.

6. It is requiſite that the party or parties, whoſe deed it is, ſhould ſeal, and now in moſt caſes ſhould ſign it alſo. The uſe of ſeals, as a mark of authenticity to letters and other inſtruments in writing, is extremely ancient. We read of it among the Jews and Perſians in the earlieſt and moſt ſacred records of hiſtory. But in the times of our Saxon anceſtors, they were not much in uſe in England. The method of the Saxons was for ſuch as could write to ſubſcribe their names, and, whether they could write or not, to affix the ſign of the croſs; which cuſtom our illiterate vulgar do, for the moſt part, to this day keep up; by ſigning a croſs for their mark, when unable to write their names. In like manner, the Normans, at their firſt ſettlement in France, uſed the practice of ſealing only, without writing their names: which cuſtom continued, when learning made its way among them, though the reaſon for doing it had ceaſed; and hence the charter of Edward the Confeſſor to Weſtminſter-Abbey, himſelf being brought up in Normandy, was witneſſed only by his ſeal, and is generally thought to be the oldeſt ſealed charter of any authenticity in England. Lamb. Archeion 51.—At the Conqueſt, the Norman lords brought over into this Kingdom their own faſhions; and introduced waxen ſeals only, inſtead of the Engliſh methods of writing their names, and ſigning with the ſign of the croſs. Ingulph. And in the reign of Edward I. every freeman, and even ſuch of the more ſubſtantial villeins as were fit to be put upon juries, had their diſtinct particular ſeals. Stat. Exon. 14 Ed. 1. Coats of Arms were not introduced into ſeals, nor indeed into any other uſe, till about the reign of Richard I. who brought them from the Croiſade in the Holy Land.

This neglect of ſigning, and reſting only upon the authenticity of ſeals, remained very long among us; for it was held in all our books that ſealing alone was ſufficient to authenticate a deed: and ſo the common form of atteſting deeds, "ſealed and delivered," continues to this day; notwithſtanding the Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, before-mentioned, revives the Saxon cuſtom, and expreſsly directs the ſigning, in all grants of lands, and many other ſpecies of deeds: in which therefore ſigning ſeems to be now as neceſſary as ſealing, though it hath been ſometimes held that the one includes the other. 3 Lev. 1: Stra. 764.

7. A ſeventh requiſite to a good deed is, that it be delivered, by the party himſelf or his certain attorney: which therefore is alſo expreſſed in the atteſtation; "ſealed and delivered." A deed takes effect only from this tradition or delivery; for if the date be falſe or impoſſible, the delivery aſcertains the time of it. And if another perſon ſeals the deed, yet if the party delivers it himſelf, he thereby adopts the ſealing; Perk. § 130; and by a parity of reaſon the ſigning alſo, and makes them both his own. A delivery may be either abſolute, that is, to the party or grantee himſelf; or to a third perſon, to hold till ſome condition be performed on the part of the grantee; in which laſt caſe it is not delivered as a deed, but as an eſcrow; that is, as a ſcrowl or writing, which is not to take effect as a deed, till the condition be performed, and then it is a deed to all intents and purpoſes. Co. Lit. 36.

The ſigning is of great uſe, for the ſubſcribing witneſſes to the deed may be dead, when proving their death, and the hand-writing of the party executing the deed, will be ſufficient to eſtabliſh the ſame. If a writing is not ſealed, it cannot be a deed. 3 Inſt. 169: 5 Rep. 23. See farther, 2 Rep. 3: 2 Rol. Abr. 28: 12 Rep. 90: Hob. 96.

If two make a deed, and one of them ſeals it at one time, and the other at another time; this is as good as if they ſealed it together. Lane 32.

If I have ſealed my deed, and after I deliver it to him to whom it is made, or to ſome other by his appointment, and ſay nothing, this is a good delivery.

So if I take the deed in my hand, and uſe theſe, or the like words, here take him; or, this will ſerve; or, I deliver this as my deed; or I deliver him you; theſe are deliveries.

So if I make a deed of land to another, and being upon the land, I deliver the deed to him in the name of ſeiſin of the land; this is a good delivery.

So if the deed be ſealed, or lying in a window, or on a table, and I uſe theſe, or the like words, There he is, take it as my deed: This is a good delivery, and perfects the deed; for, as a deed may be delivered by words without acts, ſo may it alſo be delivered by acts without words. 9 Co. 137: Dyer 167, 192: Co. Lit. 36, 49: 35 Aſſ. pl. 6. Contra, if the party to whom made takes it without any act done purporting to be a delivery. But where parties have come for the purpoſe, and done every thing but delivery, it has been adjudged a good delivery. Cro. Eliz. 7: 1 Leon. 140.

Regularly there may not be two deliveries of a deed, for where the firſt doth take effect, the ſecond is void: Unleſs it be where the deed is delivered to a ſtranger as an eſcrow; as when a deed, good at firſt, becomes void afterwards; or, a feme covert ſeals a deed, and after being ſole, delivers it again, &c. Perk. ſect. 154: Co. Lit. 48: 5 Rep. 119.

The delivery of a deed may be alledged at any time after the date; but not before. Dyer 315. A deed may be good without all the orderly and formal parts; but without delivery, it is no deed. 1 Inſt. 35: 2 Rep. 5.

8. The laſt requiſite to the validity of a deed is, the atteſtation, or execution of it in the preſence of witneſſes: this however is neceſſary, rather for preſerving the evidence, than for conſtituting the eſſence of the deed. Our modern deeds are in reality nothing more than an improvement or amplification of the brevia teſtata mentioned by the feodal writers; (Feud. l. 1. t. 4;) which were written memorandums, introduced to perpetuate the tenor of the conveyance and inveſtiture, when grants by parol only became the foundation of frequent diſpute and uncertainty. To this end they regiſtered in the deed the perſons who attended as witneſſes, which was formerly done without their ſigning their names, (that not being always in their power) but they only heard the deed read; and then the clerk or ſcribe added their names, in a ſort of memorandum, "hiis teſtibus, &c. This like all other ſolemn tranſactions, was originally done only coram paribus, (Feud. l. 2. t. 32,) and frequently when aſſembled in the court-baron, hundred, or county-court, which was then expreſſed in the atteſtation, teſte comitatu, hundredo, &c. Spelm. Gloſs. 228: Madox Formul. N. 221, 322, 660.—Afterwards the atteſtation of other witneſſes was allowed, the trial in caſe of a diſpute being ſtill reſerved to the pares; with whom the witneſſes (if more than one) were aſſociated and joined in the verdict; (Co. Lit. 6;) till that alſo was abrogated by the Stat. of York, 12 Edw. 2. ſt. 1. c. 2. And in this manner, with ſome ſuch clauſe of hiis teſtibus, are all old deeds and charters, particularly Magna Charta witneſſed. And in the time of Sir Edward Coke, creations of nobility were ſtill witneſſed in the ſame manner. 2 Inſt. 77. But in the King's common charters, writs, or letters-patent, the ſtile is now altered: for at preſent the King is his own witneſs, and atteſts his letters patent thus, "witneſs ourſelf at Weſtminſter, &c." a form which was introduced by Richard I. but not commonly uſed till about the beginning of the fifteenth century; nor the clauſe of hiis teſtibus entirely diſcontinued till the reign of Henry VIII; which was alſo the æra of diſcontinuing it, in the deeds of ſubjects, learning being then revived, and the faculty of writing more general; and therefore ever ſince that time the witneſſes have uſually ſubſcribed their atteſtation, either at the bottom, or on the back of the deed. 2 Inſt. 78.

III. From what has been before laid down, it will follow, that if a deed wants any of the eſſential requiſites beforementioned; either, 1. Proper parties, and a proper ſubject matter.—2. A good and ſufficient conſideration.—3. Writing on paper or parchment, duly ſtamped.—4. Sufficient and legal words, properly diſpoſed.—5. Reading if deſired before the execution.—6. Sealing; and, by the ſtatute, in moſt caſes ſigning alſo;—or 7. Delivery, it is a void deed ab initio. It may alſo be avoided by matter ex poſt facto, as 1. By raſure, interlining, or other alteration in any material part; unleſs a memorandum be made thereof at the time of execution and atteſtation. 11 Rep. 27.—2. By breaking off, or defacing the ſeal. 5 Rep. 23.—3. By delivering it up to be cancelled; that is, to have lines drawn over it in the form of a lattice-work or cancelli; though the phraſe is now uſed figuratively for any manner of obliteration or defacing it.—4. By the diſagreement of ſuch, whoſe concurrence is neceſſary, in order for the deed to ſtand; as a huſband where a feme-covert is concerned; an infant, or perſon under dureſs, when thoſe diſabilities are removed; and the like.—5. By the judgment or decree of a court of judicature. This was anciently the province of the court of Star-chamber, and now of the Chancery: when it appears that the deed was obtained by fraud, force, or other foul practice: or is proved to be an abſolute forgery. Toth. 24: 1 Ventr. 348. In any of theſe caſes the deed may be avoided, either in part or totally, according as the cauſe of avoidance is more or leſs extenſive.

More particularly.—If there be any alteration, raſure, or interlining made in any part of the deed before the delivery of it, this will not hurt the deed.

But in ſuch caſes it is policy to make a memorandum of it upon the back of the deed, and to give the witneſſes notice of it, (this is now uſually done in the atteſtation of the deed thus: Sealed and delivered, the word— being firſt interlined, &c.) For otherwiſe, if it be in any place material, as in the name of the grantor, grantee, in the limiting of the eſtate, or the like, and it cannot be proved to be done before the ſealing and delivery of it, eſpecially if it be a deed poll, it is very ſuſpicious. Co. Lit. 37, 225: Perk. § 125, 126, 127, 128, 155.

Where an eſtate cannot have its eſſence without a deed, there, if the deed is raſed in any material part, after the delivery, it makes the eſtate void: but if the eſtate may have eſſence without a deed, then, notwithſtanding it is created by deed, and that deed is raſed, it ſhall not deſtroy the eſtate, but the deed. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 625.

When a choſe in action is created by deed, the deſtruction of ſuch deed is the deſtruction of the duty itſelf; as in caſe of a bond, bill, &c. though it is not ſo, where an eſtate or intereſt is created by a deed. 3 Salk. 120.

If a deed be ſuppreſſed, on proof made that it came to the party's hands, and of its contents, the perſon injured, will have the ſame benefit to hold the eſtate, as if the deed could be produced. 2 Vern. 280. A perſon committed for burning a deed, ſee 2 Vern. 561: Abr. Caſ. Eq. 169. An indorſement on a deed, at the time of the ſealing and delivery, is a part of the ſame: but if an indorſement be after the delivery, it is a new deed. Mod. Caſ. 237.

Deeds, if fraudulently made; when got by corrupt agreement, as on uſurious contract; and when made by force or dureſs, &c. are void: ſo they are for uncertainty, and by reaſon of infancy, coverture, or other diſability in the makers, &c. 2 Rol. Abr. 28: 1 Inſt. 253: 11 Rep. 27.

A deed may be good in part, and void in part; or good againſt one perſon, and void as to another: if all the parts of a deed may by law ſtand together, no one part ſhall make the whole void. And if a deed by any conſtruction of law be conſtrued to have legal operation, the law will not make it utterly void, though it may not operate according to the purport of the deed: alſo the law will tranſpoſe and marſhal clauſes in deeds, to come at their true meaning; but not to confound them. Where the words of a deed may have a double intendment, one ſtanding with law, and the other contrary to it, the intendment that ſtandeth with law ſhall be taken. 1 Lil. Abr. 421: 1 Inſt. 42, 217: 1 Shep. Abr. 540.

IV. DEEDS of Bargain and Sale are to be inrolled, by Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 16. A copy of a bargain and ſale inrolled, ſhall be as ſufficient as the original deed, by Stat. 10 An. c. 18. ſect. 3. But eſtates in fee are now generally granted and conveyed by indentures of leaſe and releaſe. All deeds are to be regiſtered in the counties of York and Middleſex. Stat. 2 & 3 An. c. 4: 5 An. c. 18: 6 An. c. 35: 7 An. c. 20: 8 Geo. 2. c. 6: 25 Geo. 2. c. 4. And it is much to be wiſhed that regiſters were univerſally eſtabliſhed throughout the kingdom. See further titles Bargain and Sale, Conveyance, Inrollment, &c.

It may here be curſorily obſerved, that of conveyances by the Common law, ſome may be called original, or primary conveyances; which are ſuch by means whereof the benefit or eſtate is created, or firſt ariſes: others are derivative, or ſecondary; whereby the benefit or eſtate, originally created, is enlarged, reſtrained, transferred, or extinguiſhed.

Original conveyances are,—1. Feoffment;—2. Gift; 3. Grant;—4. Leaſe;—5. Exchange;—6. Partition. Derivative, are,—7. Releaſe;—8. Confirmation;—9. Surrender;—10. Aſſignment:—11. Defeaſance.—See thoſe titles, and alſo particularly title Conveyance, and 2 Comm. 295,—310.

There are four grounds for the expoſition of deeds. 1. That they may be beneficial to the taker. 2. That where the words may be employed to ſome intent, they ſhall never be void. 3. That the words be conſtrued according to the intention of the parties, and not otherwiſe; and the intent of the parties ſhall take effect, if it may poſſibly ſtand with law. 4. That they are to be conſonant to the rules of the law. And deeds ſhall have a reaſonable expoſition, without injury againſt the grantor, to the greateſt advantage of the grantee. They are to be expounded upon the whole, and if the ſecond part contradicts the firſt, ſuch ſecond part ſhall be void; but if the latter part expounds or explains the former, which it may do, both of them ſhall ſtand. Plowd. 160: Raym. 142: 6 Rep. 36: 1 Inſt. 313: 1 Rol. Rep. 375.

The firſt deed of a perſon, and laſt will, ſtand in force. In deeds indented, all parties are eſtopped, or concluded, to ſay any thing againſt what is contained in the deed. 1 Inſt. 45. And where a deed is by indenture between parties, none can have an action upon that deed, but he who is a party to it; but where it is a deed-poll, one may covenant with another who is not a party to it, to do certain acts, for the non-performance whereof he may bring an action. 2 Lev. 74.

Where a man juſtifies title under a deed, he is to produce the deed: if a deed is alledged in pleading, it muſt be ſhewed to the court, that the court may judge of the validity of it, and whether there are ſufficient words to make a good contract; and when it is ſhewn to the court, the deed ſhall remain in court all the term, in the hands of the cuſtos brevium; but at the end of the term, it ſhall be delivered to the party. If the deed is denied, it muſt remain remain in court till the plea is determined. 10 Rep. 88: Wood 235. A deed, ſet forth with a profert hic in curia, remains in court in judgment of law all that term; and any perſon may, during that term, have benefit by it, though he hath it not ready to ſhew: the adverſe party may take any advantage by the deed that it will afford him. 5 Rep. 74: 1 Nelſ. 625.

But now the deed is not actually brought into court, but generally remains in the hands of the party's attorney, who gives oyer and copy of it to the attorney of the other party, if demanded.

DEEDS, ſtealing of. At Common-law, bonds, bills, and notes, which concern mere choſes in action, were held not to be ſuch goods whereof larceny might be committed: but by Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25, they are put upon the ſame footing, with reſpect to larcenies, as the money they were meant to ſecure. See titles Felony; Robbery.

DEEMSTERS, from the Sax. dema, a judge or umpire.] Are a kind of judges in the Iſle of Man, who, without proceſs, or any charge tothe parties decide all controverſies in that iſland; and they are choſen from among themſelves. Cam. Brit.

DEER-FALD, A park, or deer-fold; Sax. deer, fera, and fald, ſtabulum. Cowel.

DEER-HAYES, Are engines, or great nets made of cords to catch deer; and no perſon not having a park, &c. ſhall keep any of theſe nets, under the penalty of 40*s.* a month. Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 11. See title Game.

DEER-STEALERS. Much of the law relating to theſe offenders is implicated in the general rules relative to hunting in foreſts, &c. for which ſee this Dict. title Game, more at large.

Several ancient ſtatutes have been made to puniſh Deer-ſtealers; and a very ſevere one 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, known by the name of the Black Act againſt thoſe and other offenders.—See title Black Act.

See the ſtatutes 3 E. 1. c. 20, againſt treſpaſſers in parks: 21 Ed. 1. ſt. 2, de maleſactoribus in parcis: 1 H. 7. c. 7, of unlawful hunting in parks by night: 1 Jac. 1. c. 27, againſt ſellers and buyers of deer who are to forfeit 40*s.* Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 28, by which wounding or killing deer in a park is puniſhable with tranſportation.

The above (except the laſt ſtatute 5 Geo. 1. c. 28.) are at leaſt ſuperſeded in uſe if not repealed by Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 30; which though like ſome others of the game laws inaccurately penned, or copied on record, is now generally purſued for the puniſhment of Deer-ſtealers.

By this Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 30, If any perſons ſhall hunt, or take in a ſnare, or kill or wound any red or fallow deer in any foreſt, chaſe, &c. whether incloſed or not; or in any incloſed park, paddock, &c. or be aiding in ſuch offence, they ſhall forfeit 20*l.* for the firſt offence; and alſo 30*l.* for each deer wounded, killed or taken. A game-keeper offending to forfeit double.—For a ſecond offence offenders ſhall be tranſported for 7 years § 1. Juſtices to tranſmit convictions to the ſeſſions. § 2.—Juſtices may grant warrants to ſearch for heads, ſkins, &c. of ſtolen deer and for toils, ſnares, &c. and perſons having ſuch in their poſſeſſion to forfeit from 30*l.* to 10*l.* at the diſcretion of the juſtices. §§ 4, 5, 6.—Perſons unlawfully ſetting nets or ſnares, to forfeit for the firſt offence from 10*l.* to 5*l.*—and for every other offence from 20*l.* to 10*l.* § 7.—Perſons pulling down pales or fences of any foreſt, chaſe, park, paddock, wood, &c. ſubject to the penalties annexed to the firſt offence for killing deer, § 8.—Dogs, guns and engines may be ſeized by park-keepers; and perſons reſiſting ſhall be tranſported for ſeven years. § 9.—Penalties may be levied by diſtreſs; in default of which offenders to be committed for twelve months. § 11. &c.—No certiorari to be allowed, unleſs the party convicted become bound to the proſecutor in 100*l.* to pay him all coſts and damages and to the Juſtice in 60*l.* to proſecute the certiorari with effect. § 19, 20: and ſee § 23, by which latter § it ſeems that convictions are not removeable by certiorari on mere points of informality, in caſe the facts alledged are ſufficient to ſupport the conviction.—See Burn's Juſt. tit. Game V. 1. ii.—1 Hawk. P.C. c. 27. § 60: and this Dict. title Certiorari.—Appeal given to the ſeſſions § 21, &c.—Proſecutions limited to 12 months from the time of the offence committed. § 25.

By Stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 19. deſtroying goſs, furze and fern in foreſts and chaſes, being the covert for deer, ſubjects the offenders to a penalty from 5*l.* to 40*s.* or to 3 months' impriſonment.

DE ESSENDO QUIETUM DE TOLONIO, Is a writ that lies for thoſe who are by privilege free from the payment of toll; on their being moleſted therein. F. N. B. 226. See titles Corporation; Toll.

DE EXPENSIS MILITUM, A writ commanding the ſheriff to levy the expences of a knight of the ſhire for attendance in parliament, being 4*s.* per diem by ſtatute; and there is a like writ de expenſis civium & burgenſium, to levy 2*s.* per diem, for the expences of every citizen and burgeſs of parliament. See Stat. 23 Hen. 6. cap. 14: 4 Inſt. 46: and further title Parliament.

DE FACTO, Signifies a thing actually done; that is done in deed. A king de facto (in fact) is one that is in actual poſſeſſion of a crown, and hath no lawful right to the ſame; in which ſenſe it is oppoſed to a king de jure, (of right,) who hath right to a crown, but is out of poſſeſſion. 3 Inſt. 7.

DEFAMATION, defamatio.] Is when a perſon ſpeaks ſcandalous words of another, as of a magiſtrate, &c. whereby they are injured in their reputation; for which the party offending ſhall be puniſhed according to the nature and quality of his offence; ſometimes by action on the caſe at common law, ſometimes by ſtatute, and ſometimes by the eccleſiaſtical laws.

Defamation is alſo puniſhable by the ſpiritual courts; in which courts it ought to have three incidents. viz. Firſt, It is to concern matters ſpiritual, and determinable in the eccleſiaſtical courts; as for calling a man heretick, ſchiſmatick, adulterer, fornicator, &c. Secondly, that it be a matter ſpiritual only; for if the defamation concern any thing determinable at the common law, the eccleſiaſtical judges ſhall not have conuſance thereof. And Thirdly, although ſuch defamation be merely ſpiritual, yet he that is defamed cannot ſue for damages in the eccleſiaſtical courts; but the ſuit ought to be only for puniſhment of the fault, by way of penance. Terms de Ley. See titles Action; Courts-Eccleſiaſtical; Prohibition.

DEFAULT, Fr. defaut.] Is commonly taken for non-appearance in court, at a day aſſigned; though it extends to any omiſſion of that which we ought to do. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 3; Co. Lit. 259. If a plaintiff makes default in appearance in a trial at law, he will be non-suited; and where a defendant makes default, judgment shall be had against him by default. See titles, Judgment; Nonsuit.

Tenant in tail, tenant in dower, by the curtesy, or for life, losing their lands by default, in a præcipe quod reddat brought against them; they are to have remedy by the writ quod ei deforciat, &c. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 4. And in a quod ei deforciat, where the tenant joined issue upon the mere right, and the jury appearing, the defendant made default; it was adjudged, that in such case final judgment shall be given: but if the tenant had made default, it would be otherwise, for then a petit cape must issue against him, because it may so happen that he may save his default. 1 Nelf. Abr. 627.

By default of a defendant, he is said to be generally out of court to all purposes, but only that judgment may be given against him: and no judgment can be afterwards given for the defendant. Ibid. 628.

When two are to recover a personal thing, the default of one is the default of the other: contra, where they are to discharge themselves of a personalty; where the default of the one is not the default of the other. 6 Rep. 25: 1 Lill. Abr. 425. In an action against two, if the process be determined against one, and the other appears; he shall be put to answer, notwithstanding the default of his companion. 2 Danv. Abr. 480. Where the baron is to have a corporal punishment for a default, there the default of the wife shall not be the default of the husband: but otherwise it is where the husband is not to have any corporal punishment by the default. Ibid. 472, 473.

If a defendant imparl to another day in the same term, and make default at the day, this is a departure in despite of the court: and when the defendant after appearance, and being present in court, upon demand makes departure, it is in despite of the court. Co. Lit. 139.

Suffering judgment to go by default, is an admission of the contract declared on. Stra. 612. After the inquest is taken by default, the defendant can make no suggestion on the roll. Str. 46.

Default, and saver of default, made a large title in the old books of law. See Stats. 52 H. 3. cc. 9, 13, 18, 24: 3 E. 1. c. 1: 42, &c.

DEFAULT IN CRIMINAL CASES. An offender indicted appears at the capias, and pleads to issue, and is let to bail to attend his trial, and then makes default; here the inquest in case of felony shall never be taken by default, but a capias ad audiendam juratam shall issue, and if the party is not taken, an exigent; and if he appear on that writ, and then make default, an exigi facias de novo may be granted: but where upon the capias or exigent the sheriff returns cepi corpus, and at the day hath not his body, the sheriff shall be punished, but no new exigent awarded, because in custody of record. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 202.

DEFAULT OF JURORS. If jurors make default in their appearance for trying of causes, they shall lose and forfeit issues, unless they have any reasonable excuse proved by witnesses, in which case the justices may discharge the issue for default. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 6. See title Jury.

DEFEASANCE, From the Fr. defaire, to defeat or undo.] Is of two sorts. 1. A collateral deed made at the same time with a feoffment or other conveyance, containing certain conditions, upon the performance of which the estate then created may be defeated or totally undone. In this manner mortgages were in former times usually made; the mortgagor enfeoffing the mortgagee, and he at the same time executing a deed of defeasance, whereby the feoffment was rendered void, on re-payment of the money borrowed at a certain day. And this, when executed at the same time with the original feoffment, was considered as part of it by the ancient law; and therefore only indulged: no subsequent secret revocation of a solemn conveyance, executed by livery of seisin, being allowed in those days of simplicity and truth; though when uses were afterwards introduced, a revocation of such uses was permitted by courts of Equity. But things that were merely executory or to be compleated by matter subsequent, (as rents of which no seisin could be had till time of payment; annuities, conditions, warranties and the like,) were always liable to be recalled by defeasances made subsequent to the time of their creation.—2. A Defeasance on a bond, recognisance, or judgment recovered, is a condition which when performed defeats that, in the same manner as the foregoing Defeasance of an estate.—It differs only from the common condition of a bond, in that the one is always inserted in the deed or bond itself, the other is made between the same parties by a separate, and frequently by a subsequent deed. This like the condition of a bond when performed, discharges and disincumbers the estate of the obligor. 2 Comm. 327; 342: See 1 Inst. 236, 7: 2 Sand. 47.

The Defeasance may generally (as in the case of a bond, &c.) be indorsed on the back of the deed.

To make a good Defeasance it must be, 1. By deed; (in the case of indorsement by a deed-poll;) for there cannot be a Defeasance of a deed without deed; and a writing under hand doth not imply it to be a deed. 2. It must recite the deed it relates to, or at least the most material part thereof; or in case of indorsement refer thereto. 3. It is to be made between the same persons that were parties to the first deed. 4. It must be made at the time, or after the first deed, and not before. 5. It ought to be made of a thing defeasible. 1 Inst. 236: 3 Lev. 234.

Inheritances executed by livery, such as estates in fee, or for life, cannot be subject to Defeasance afterwards, but at the time of making the feoffment, &c. only: but executory inheritances, such as leases for years, rents, annuities, conditions, covenants, &c. may be defeated by Defeasance made after the things granted. And it is the same of obligations, recognisances, statutes, judgments, &c. which are most commonly the subject of Defeasance, and usually made after the deed whereto they have relation. Plowd. 137: 1 Rep. 113.

If a man acknowledge a statute to another, and enters into a Defeasance, that if his lands in such a county should be extended, the statute should be void; the Defeasance, will be good and not repugnant, because it is by another deed: but the condition of a bond not to sue the obligation is void for repugnancy, being in the same deed. Moor 1035. Although the condition of an obligation, where it is repugnant to it, be void; it is otherwise in case of a Defeasance, made after the bond, for this shall be good notwithstanding: as where the obligee afterwards grants by deed to the obligor, that he will not sue thereon at all; or not till such a time, or that it shall be discharged, &c. 20 H. 7. 24; Fitz. Bar. 71.

Where a proviſo goes by way of Defeaſance of a covenant, it muſt be pleaded on the other ſide, otherwiſe, where by way of explanation, or reſtriction of the covenant. 2 Salk. 574.

If A. be bound in bond to B. in 20*l.* and he makes a Defeaſance to C. that if he pay him the like ſum, the obligation made by A. ſhall be void; this is no good Defeaſance, becauſe it is not made between the ſame parties: though if a ſtatute be entered into, to huſband and wife, and the huſband alone make a Defeaſance, it may be good. 14 H. 8. 101: 2 Shep. Abr. 488.

A ſtatute, &c. may be defeaſanced on condition of performing a will, and paying legacies to other perſons. 1 Cro. 837. If a Defeaſance of a ſtatute be made, and after another Defeaſance is made by the ſame parties, the firſt Defeaſance becomes void thereby; and the ſecond only is in force, as in caſe of a will. 2 Danv. Abr. 481. Where a ſtatute is acknowledged to two perſons, and one of them makes a Defeaſance, it is ſaid to be a good diſcharge. Ibid. 480. If execution be ſued out before the time in a Defeaſance is paſt, it ſhall be ſet aſide. 1 Lil. 426.

In a Defeaſance of a deed of lands, the perſon to whom made covenants that on payment of a certain ſum, on ſuch a day, he will transfer and re-convey the eſtate back again; and that the maker ſhall enjoy, till default, &c. If the defeaſance be of a judgment, he covenants that on payment of the money, he will enter ſatisfaction on the record; if of a ſtatute or bond, that on payment it ſhall be void, &c. See titles Conveyance; Deed; Mortgage.

DEFENCE, in its true legal ſenſe, ſignifies, not a juſtification, protection, or guard, which is now its popular ſignification; but merely an oppoſing or denial [from the French defendre,] by the defendant of the truth or validity of the plaintiff's complaint. It is a general aſſertion that the plaintiff hath no ground of action, which aſſertion is afterwards extended and maintained in the defendant's plea. For it would be ridiculous to ſuppoſe that the defendant comes and defends (or in the vulgar acceptation, juſtifies) the force and injury, in one line, and pleads that he is not guilty of the treſpaſs complained of, in the next. And therefore in actions of dower, where the demandant does not count of any injury done, but merely demands her endowment, (Raſtal. Entr. 234,) and in aſſiſes of land, where alſo there is no injury alledged, but merely a queſtion of right ſtated for the determination of the recognitors or jury, the tenant makes no ſuch defence. Booth of Real Actions, 118. In writs of entry, where no injury is ſtated in the count, but merely the right of the demandant and the defective title of the tenant, the tenant comes and defends or denies his right, jus ſuum, that is (as it ſeems though with a ſmall grammatical inaccuracy) the right of the demandant, the only one expreſsly mentioned in the pleadings; or elſe denies his own right to be ſuch, as is ſuggeſted by the count of the demandant. And in writs of right the tenant always comes and defends the right of the demandant and his ſeiſin, jus prædicti S. et ſeiſinam ipſius, (Co. Entr. 182,) or elſe the ſeiſin of his anceſtor, upon which he counts, as the caſe may be, and the demandant may reply, that the tenant unjuſtly defends [i. e. denies] his, the demandant's right, and the ſeiſin on which he counts. Nov. Narr. 230. edit. 1534. All which is extremely clear, if we underſtand by defence an oppoſition or denial, but it is otherwiſe inexplicably difficult. The true reaſon of this, ſays Booth, unaccountably, I could never yet find. Booth on Real Act. 94, 112.

The Courts were formerly very nice and curious with reſpect to the nature of the defence, ſo that if no defence was made, though a ſufficient plea was pleaded, the plaintiff ſhould recover judgment: Co. Lit. 127. And therefore the book entitled Novæ Narrationes or The New Talys, [edit. 1534,] at the end of almoſt every count, narratio, or tale, ſubjoins ſuch defence as is proper for the defendant to make. For a general defence or denial was not prudent in every ſituation, ſince thereby the propriety of the writ, the competency of the plaintiff, and the cognizance of the court, were allowed. By defending the force and injury the defendant waved all pleas of miſnomer; by defending the damages, all exceptions to the perſon of the plaintiff; and by defending either one or the other when and where it ſhould behove him, he acknowledged the juriſdiction of the court. But of late years theſe niceties have been very deſervedly diſcountenanced; though they ſtill ſeem to be law, if inſiſted on. 3 Comm. 296—8.

A defendant cannot plead any plea, before he hath made a defence; though this muſt not be intended abſolutely, for in a ſcire facias, a defence is never made. 3 Lev. 182.

DEFEND, defendere.] In our ancient laws and ſtatutes ſignifies to forbid; and there is a ſtatute intitled, Statutum de defenſione portandi arma &c. 7 Ed. 1. In divers parts of England we commonly ſay, God defend, inſtead of God forbid. Blount.

DEFENDANT, defendens.] The party that is ſued in a perſonal action; as tenant is he that is ſued in an action real.

DEFENDEMUS, An ordinary word uſed in grants and donations; and hath this force, that it binds the donor and his heirs to defend the donee, if any one go about to lay any incumbrance on the thing given, other than what is contained in the deed of donation. Bract. lib. 2. c. 16. See title Warranty.

DEFENDER OF THE FAITH, fidei defenſor.] A peculiar title belonging to the King of England, as Catholick, to the King of Spain; and Moſt Chriſtian to the King of France, &c. Theſe titles were given by the Popes of Rome; and that of Defenſor Fidei was firſt conferred by Pope Leo the Tenth on King Henry the Eighth, for writing againſt Martin Luther, and the bull for it bears date quinto Idus Octob. 1521. Lord Herbert's Hiſt. Hen. VIII. 105. But the Pope, on King Henry's ſuppreſſing the houſes of religion, at the time of the Reformation, futilely ſentenced him to be deprived of his title, and depoſed from his crown; though in the 35th year of his reign this title, &c. was confirmed by parliament; which hath continued to be uſed by all ſucceeding Kings to this day. Lex Conſtitutionis, 47, 48.

DEFENDERE SE per Corpus ſuum, To offer duel or combat as a legal trial and appeal. Bract. lib. 3. cap. 26. See title Battel.

DEFENDERE UNICA MANU. Words ſignifying to wage law, and a denial of the accuſation upon oath. See Manus, Wager of Law.

DEFENSA. A park or place fenced in for deer, and defended as a property for that uſe and ſervice. H. Knighton, ſub. ann. 1352.

DEFENSIVA,

DEFENSIVA, A Lord or Earl, of the Marches; who were the wardens or defenders of their country. Cowel.

DEFENSO. That part of any open field or place that was allotted for corn and hay, and upon which there was no common or feeding, was anciently ſaid to be in defenſo: ſo of any meadow ground, that was laid in for hay only. It was likewiſe the ſame of a wood, where part was incloſed and fenced up, to ſecure the growth of the underwood from the injury of cattle. Mon Angl. Tom. 3. p. 306.—Cowel.

DEFENSUM, An incloſure of land, or any fenced ground. Mon. Angl. Tom. 2. p. 114.

DEFORCEMENT. Deforciamentum.] A ſpecies of injury by ouſter or privation of the freehold, where the entry of the preſent tenant or poſſeſſor was originally lawful, but his detainer is now become unlawful. 3 Comm. 172.

For that at firſt the with-holding was with force and violence, it was called a deforcement of the lands or tenements: but now it is generally extended to all kind of wrongful with-holding of lands or tenements from the right owner.—There is a writ called a quod ei deforciat, which lieth where tenant in tail, or tenant for life, loſeth by default, by the Stat. Weſtm. 2. c. 4, he ſhall have a quod ei deforciat againſt the recoveror; and yet he cometh in by courſe of law. 1 Inſt. 331, b. See title Quod ei deforceat—and as to entries with actual force, tit. Forcible Entry.

Deforcement in its moſt extenſive ſenſe, is nomen generaliſſimum ſignifying the holding of any lands or tenement to which another perſon hath a right. Co. Litt. 277. So that this includes as well an abatement, an intruſion, a diſſeiſin, or a diſcontinuance, as any other ſpecies of wrong whatſoever, whereby he that hath right to the freehold is kept out of poſſeſſion. But, as contradiſtinguiſhed from theſe, it is only ſuch a detainer of the freehold, from him that hath the right of property, but never had any poſſeſſion under that right, as falls not within any of thoſe terms. As in caſe where a lord has a ſeignory, and lands eſcheat to him propter defectum ſanguinis, but the ſeiſin of the lands is with-held from him; here the injury is not abatement, for the right veſts not in the lord as heir or deviſee; nor is it intruſion, for it veſts not in him who hath the remainder or reverſion; nor is it diſſeiſin, for the lord was never ſeiſed; nor does it at all bear the nature of any ſpecies of diſcontinuance; but being neither of theſe four, it is therefore a deforcement. F. N. B. 143. If a man marries a woman, and during the coverture is ſeiſed of lands, and aliens, and dies; is diſſeiſed, and dies; or dies in poſſeſſion: and the alienee, diſſeiſor, or heir, enters on the tenements, and doth not aſſign the widow her dower; this is alſo a Deforcement to the widow, by with-holding lands to which ſhe hath a right. F. N. B. 147. In like manner, if a man leaſe lands to another for term of years, or for the life of a third perſon, and the term expires by ſurrender, efflux of time, or death of the ceſtuy que vie; and the leſſee or any ſtranger, who, was at the expiration of the term in poſſeſſion, holds over, and refuſes to deliver the poſſeſſion to him in remainder, or reverſion, this is likewiſe a Deforcement. Finch L. 263: F. N. B. 201, 5, 6, 7.

Deforcements may alſo ariſe upon the breach of condition in law; as if a woman gives lands to a man by deed, to the intent that he marry her, and he will not when thereunto required, but continues to hold the lands: this is ſuch a fraud on the man's part, that the law will not allow it to deveſt the woman's right of poſſeſſion, though his entry being lawful, it does deveſt the actual poſſeſſion, and thereby becomes a Deforcement. F. N. B. 205.

Deforcements may alſo be grounded on the diſability of the party deforced: as if an infant do make an alienation of his lands, and the alienee enters and keeps poſſeſſion; now, as the alienation is voidable, this poſſeſſion as againſt the infant (or, in caſe of his deceaſe, as againſt his heir) is after avoidance wrongful, and therefore a Deforcement. Finch L. 264: F. N. B. 192. The ſame happens, when one of non-ſane memory aliens his lands or tenements, and the alienee enters and takes poſſeſſion, this may alſo be a Deforcement. Finch L. 264: F. N. B. 202.

Another ſpecies of Deforcement is, where two perſons have the ſame title to land, and one of them enters and keeps poſſeſſion againſt the other, as where the anceſtor dies ſeiſed of an eſtate in fee-ſimple, which deſcends to two ſiſters as coparceners, and one of them enters before the other, and will not ſuffer her ſiſter to enter and enjoy her moiety; this is alſo a Deforcement. Finch L. 293, 4: F. N. B. 197.

Deforcement may alſo be grounded on the non-performance of a covenant real; as if a man ſeiſed of lands, covenants to convey them to another, and neglects or refuſes ſo to do, but continues poſſeſſion againſt him; this poſſeſſion being wrongful, is a Deforcement. F. N. B. 146. In levying a fine of lands, the perſon, againſt whom the fictitious action is brought, upon a ſuppoſed breach of covenant, is called the deforciant. And, laſtly, by way of analogy, keeping a man by any means out of a freehold Office is conſtrued to be a Deforcement; though, being an incorporeal hereditament the deforciant has no corporal poſſeſſion. So that whatever injurious with-holding the poſſeſſion of a freehold is not included under abatement, intruſion, diſſeiſin, or diſcontinuance, (See thoſe titles) is compriſed under Deforcement. 3 Comm. 172, 4.

DEFORCEOR, deforciator, from the French forceur, expugnator.] One that overcometh, and caſteth out by force. Britton, cap. 53: Old Nat. Brev. fol. 118: Bract. lib. 4. cap. 1. See title Deforcement.

DEFORCIANT, Mentioned in the Stat. 23 El. c. 3. is the ſame with a deforceor. See title Deforcement.

DEFORCIATIO, Is uſed for a diſtreſs, or holding of goods for ſatisfaction of a debt. Paroch. Antiq. 293.

DEGRADATION, degradatio.] An eccleſiaſtical cenſure, whereby a clergyman is diveſted of his holy orders. There are two ſorts of degrading, by the Canon law; one ſummary, by word only; the other ſolemn, by ſtripping the party degraded of thoſe ornaments and rights which are the enſigns of his order or degree. Selden's Titles of Hon. 787.

Degradation is otherwiſe called depoſition; and in former times the degrading of a clerk was no more than a diſplacing or ſuſpenſion from his office: but the Canoniſts have ſince diſtinguiſhed between a depoſition and a degradation; the one being now uſed as a greater puniſhment than the other, becauſe the biſhop takes from the criminal all the badges of his order, and afterwards delivers him to the ſecular judge, where he cannot purge himſelf of the offence whereof he is convicted, &c.

There

There is likewiſe a degradation of a Lord, or a Knight, &c. at Common law; when they are attainted of treaſon; as Hil. 18 Ed. 2. Andrew Harcla, Earl of Carliſle, who was alſo a Knight, was degraded, and when judgment of treaſon was pronounced againſt him, his ſword was broken over his head, and his ſpurs hewn of his heels, &c. And there is a degrading by act of parliament; for by Stat. 13 Car. 2. cap. 16, William Lord Monſon, Sir Henry Mildmay, and others, were degraded from all titles of honour, dignities, and preheminences, and none of them to bear or uſe the title of Lord, Knight, Eſquire, or Gentleman, or any coat of arms for ever after. See title Peers.

DEHORS, Fr. without.] A word uſed in ancient pleading, when a thing is without the land, &c. or out of the point in queſtion. Vide Hors de ſon fee.

DE INJURIA SUA PROPRIA, abſque tali cauſa, Are words uſed in replications, in actions of treſpaſs. 1 Lil. Abr. 427. When one juſtifies by command or authority derived from another, or if a defendant juſtifies by authority at Common law, as a conſtable by arreſt for breach of the peace; or if he juſtifies by act of parliament, &c. the plaintiff may reply, that he did it of his own wrong, without any ſuch cauſe as the defendant has alleged. Cro. Eliz. 539: 2 Salk. 628. See and this Dict. titles Treſpaſs; Pleading.

DEI JUDICIUM. The old Saxon trial by ordeal was ſo called: becauſe they thought it an appeal to God, for the juſtice of a cauſe, and verily believed that the deciſion was according to the will and pleaſure of Divine Providence. Domeſd. See title Ordeal.

DEIS. The high table of a monaſtry. See Dagus.

DELATURA, Saxon.] An accuſation: and ſometimes it hath been taken for the reward of an informer. Leges H. 1. c. 46: Leges Inæ 20, apud Brompton.

DEL CREDERE. A commiſſion del credere is an undertaking by an inſurance-broker, for an additional premium, to inſure his principal againſt the contingency of the failure of the under-writer. See *Grove & al*ª v. Dubois, 1 Term Rep. 112.

DELEGATES, Commiſſioners of appeal appointed by the King under the Great Seal, in caſes of appeals from the Eccleſiaſtical Court, &c. by Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19. See title Court-Eccleſiaſtical, 6.

DELF. From the Sax. delfan, to dig, or delve.] A quarry or mine, where ſtone or coal, &c. are dug. Stat. 31 Eliz. 7. The word delve for dig, is ſtill retained in ſome parts of this kingdom.

DELIVERANCE. When a criminal is brought to trial, and the clerk in court aſks him whether he is Guilty, or Not guilty, to which he replies Not guilty, and puts himſelf on God and his country, the clerk wiſhes him a good deliverance.

DELIVERY OF DEEDS, See titles Date; Deed.

DEMAND, Fr. demande, Lat. poſtulatum.] A calling upon a man for any thing due. There are two manner of demands, the one in deed, the other in law: in deed, as in a precipe quod reddat, there is an expreſs demand. Every entry on land, diſtreſs for rent, taking of goods, &c. which may be done without words, is a demand in law. 8 Rep. 153.

It is alſo ſaid there are three ſorts of demands: writing without ſpeaking, that is [illegible] one without writing [illegible] for [illegible] made without either word or writing, which is a demand in law, in caſes of entries on lands, &c. As an entry on land, and taking a diſtreſs, are a demand in law of the land and rent, ſo the bringing an action of debt for money due on an obligation is a demand in law of the debt. 1 Lill. 432: 1 Nelſ. Abr. Debts, claims, &c. are to be demanded and made in time, by the ſtatute of Limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, and other ſtatutes; or they will be loſt by law. See title Limitation of Actions.

Where there is a duty, which the law makes payable on demand, no demand need be made; but if there is no duty till demand, in ſuch caſe there muſt be a demand, to make the duty. 1 Lil. 432: Cro. Eliz. 548. Upon a penalty the party need not make a demand, as he muſt in the caſe of a nomine pœnæ; for if a man be bound to pay 20 l. on ſuch a day, and in default thereof to pay 40 l. the 40 l. muſt be paid without demand. 1 Mod. 89. If a man leaſes land by indenture for years, reſerving a rent payable at certain days, and the leſſee covenants to pay the ſaid rent at the days limited; the leſſor is intitled to his rent, without demand, for the leſſee is obliged to pay it at the days, by force of his covenant. 2 Danv. Abr. 101. But if a leſſor makes a leaſe rendering rent, and the leſſee covenant to pay the rent, being lawfully demanded, the leſſee is not bound to pay the rent, without a demand, Ibid. 102.

A perſon makes a leaſe for life, or years, reſerving a rent upon condition, that if the leſſee doth not pay the rent at the day, that then without any demand it ſhall be lawful for the leſſor to re-enter; by this ſpecial agreement of the parties, the leſſor may enter on non-payment of the rent, without any demand. 2 Danv. Abr. 100. A leaſe for years, with condition to be void, on non-payment of the rent, is not void unleſs the rent be demanded; and an intereſt ſhall not be determined, without an actual demand. Hob. 67, 331: 2 Mod. 264. But now by the ſtatutes relative to rents an ejectment may be maintained without an actual entry. See Stats. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 2: 11 Geo 2. c. 19. § 16: and this Dict. titles Ejectment; Leaſe; Rent.

A demand is to be legal, and made in ſuch manner as the law requires: if it be for rent of a meſſuage and lands, it ought to be made at the meſſuage, at the fore door of the houſe, the moſt notorious place: where lands and woods are let together, the rent is to be demanded on the land, as the moſt worthy thing, and on the moſt public part thereof: if wood only be leaſed, the demand muſt be made at the gate of the wood, &c. 1 Inſt. 201: Poph. 58: Vide Dyer 51: 1 Leon. 425: Cro. Eliz. 209.

He that would enter for a condition broken, which tends to the deſtruction of an eſtate, muſt,—1. Demand the rent.—2. Upon the land, if there is no houſe.—3. If there is a houſe, at the fore door; though it is not material whether any perſon be in the houſe or no.—4. If the appointment is at any other place off the land, the demand muſt be at that place.—5. The time of the demand is to be certain, that the tenant may be there, if he will, to pay the rent: and the laſt time of demand [illegible] ent, muſt be ſuch a convenient time before the [illegible] ſetting of the laſt day of payment, as the money [illegible] be numbered. The leſſor or his ſufficient atterney [illegible] upon the land, the laſt day on which the [illegible] to ſuch that he cannot, cannot ſee to tell the money: and if the money thus demanded is not paid, this is a denial in law, though there are no words of denial; upon which a re-entry may be made, &c. 1 Inſt. 201, 202: 4 Rep. 73.—See further title Entry. As to demand of lands, See title Fine.

As a releaſe of ſuits is more large than of quarrels or actions; ſo a releaſe of demands is more large and beneficial than either of them. By a releaſe of all demands, all executions, and all freeholds, and inheritances, executory, are releaſed: by a releaſe of demands to the diſſeiſor, the right of entry in the land, and all that is contained therein, is releaſed. And he that releaſeth all demands, excludes himſelf from all actions, entries, and ſeizures; but a releaſe of all demands, is no bar in a writ of error to reverſe an outlawry. 8 Co. 153, 154.—See title Releaſe.

DEMANDANT, petens.] All civil actions are proſecuted either by demands or plaints, and the purſuer is called demandant, in actions real; and plaintiff, in perſonal actions: in a real action, lands, &c. are demanded. Co. Lit. 127.

DEMEINE, DEMAIN, DEMESNE, Fr.—Lat. dominicum, domanium; alſo written domaine, and ſignifieth patrimonium domini.] Demains according to common ſpeech, are the lord's chief manor-place, with the lands thereto belonging; terræ dominicales, which he and his anceſtors have from time to time kept in their own manual occupation, for the maintenance of themſelves and their families: and all the parts of a manor, except what is in the hands of freeholders, are ſaid to be demains. Copyhold lands have been accounted demains, becauſe they that are the tenants hereof are judged in law to have no other eſtate but at the will of the lord; ſo that it is ſtill reputed to be, in a manner, in the lord's hands: but this word is oftentimes uſed for a diſtinction between thoſe lands that the lord of the manor hath in his own hands, or in the hands of his leſſee demiſed at a rack-rent, and ſuch other land appertaining to the manor, which belongeth to free or copy-holders. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 3. c. 9: Fleta, lib. 5. cap. 5. As demains are lands in the lord's hands manually occupied, ſome have thought this word derived from de manu; but it is from the Fr. demaine, which is uſed for an inheritance, and that comes from dominium, becauſe a man has a more abſolute dominion over that which he keeps in his hands, than of that which he lets to his tenants. Blount.

Domanium properly ſignifies the King's lands in France, appertaining to him in property: and in like manner do we in ſome ſort uſe it here in England; for all lands, it is ſaid, are either mediately or immediately held of the Crown; and when a man in pleading would ſignify his land to be his own, he ſaith, that he is ſeiſed thereof in his demain, (or rather demeſne) as of fee; whereby is meant, that although his land be to him and his heirs, it depends upon a ſuperior lord, and is held by rent or ſervice, &c. Lit. lib. 1. cap. 1. From this it hath been obſerved, that lands in the hands of a common perſon cannot be true demeſnes: and certain it is, that lands in the poſſeſſion of a ſubject, are called demains in a different ſenſe from the demain lands of the Crown. For demains, or domains, in the hands of a ſubject, have their derivation à domo, becauſe they are lands in his poſſeſſion for the maintaining of his houſe: but the domains of the Crown are held of the King, who is abſolute lord, having proper dominion; and not by any feudal tenure of a ſuperior lord, as of fee. Wood's Inſt. 139.

Demain is ſometimes taken in a ſpecial ſignification, as oppoſite to frank-fee: for example, Thoſe lands which were in the poſſeſſion of King Edward the Confeſſor are called ancient demains, or ancient demeſne, and all others frank-free; and the tenants which hold any of thoſe lands are called tenants in ancient demain, or ancient demeſne, and the others tenants in frank-fee, &c. Kitch. 98. See title Ancient Demeſne.

DEMISE, demiſſio.] Is applied to an eſtate either in fee, for term of life, or years, but moſt commonly the latter: it is uſed in writs for any eſtate. 2 Inſt. 483. The word demiſi, in a leaſe for years, implies a warranty to the leſſee and his aſſignee; and upon this word action of covenant lies againſt the heir of the leſſor, if he ouſt the leſſee: it binds the executors of the leſſor, who has fee-ſimple, or fee-tail, where any leſſee is evicted, and the executor hath aſſets; but not the leſſor for life's executors, without expreſs words, that the leſſee ſhall hold his whole term. Dyer 257: Jenk. Cent. 35.—See titles Leaſe; Covenant.

The King's death is in law termed, the demiſe of the King, to his royal ſucceſſor, of his crown and dignity, &c. See King.

DEMISE AND REDEMISE, The conveyance by demiſe and redemiſe is where there are mutual leaſes made from one to another on each ſide, of the ſame land, or ſomething out of it; and is proper upon the grant of a rent-charge, &c.

DEMURRER, from the Lat. demorare, Fr. demeurer.] A pauſe or ſtop, put to any action upon a point of difficulty, which muſt be determined by the Court, before any farther proceedings can be had therein: for in every action the point of controverſy conſiſts either in fact or in law; if in fact, that is tried by the jury; but if in law, that is determined by the Court.

A demurrer therefore, is an iſſue upon matter of law. It confeſſes the facts to be true, as ſtated by the oppoſite party; but denies that by the law ariſing upon thoſe facts, any injury is done to the plaintiff; or that the defendant has made out a lawful excuſe; according to the party which firſt demurs, (demoratur, moratur in lege,) reſts or abides in law upon the point in queſtion. As, if the matter of the declaration be inſufficient in law, (as by not aſſigning any ſufficient treſpaſs, &c.) then the defendant demurs to the declaration.—If on the other hand the defendant's excuſe or plea be invalid, (as if he pleads that he committed the treſpaſs by authority from a ſtranger, without making out the ſtranger's right,) here the plaintiff may demur to the plea: and ſo in every other part of the proceedings.

The form of ſuch demurrer is by averring the declaration or plea, the replication or rejoinder, to be inſufficient in law to maintain the action or the defence; and therefore praying judgment for want of ſufficient matter alledged. Sometimes demurrers are merely for want of ſufficient form in the writ or declaration. But in caſe of exception to the form or manner of pleading, the party demurring, muſt by Stats. 27 Eliz. c. 5: 4 & 5 An. c. 16, ſet forth the cauſes of his demurrer. See titles Amendment, Pleading.—And upon either a general or ſuch ſpecial demurrer, the oppoſite party muſt aver it to be ſufficient, which is called a joinder in demurrer; and then the the parties are at iſſue in point of law; which iſſue, as above mentioned, the judges of the court before which the action is brought muſt determine. 3 Comm. 314: Finch L. lib. 4. c. 40: 1 Inſt. 71.

A demurrer may be to the writ, (i. e. the original, where the proceedings are by original,) to the count, or declaration, or to any part of the pleadings.

A demurrer is admitting the matter of fact, ſince it refers the law ariſing on the fact, to the judgment of the Court; and therefore the fact is taken to be true on ſuch demurrer, or otherwiſe the Court has no foundation on which to make any judgment. Gilb. Hiſt. of C. P. 55.

As a demurrer at Common law did confeſs all matters formally pleaded; ſo now by the ſtatutes a general demurrer does confeſs all matters pleaded, though informally. Hob. 233. But a ſpecial demurrer admits only facts well pleaded.

Demurrers are general, without ſhewing any particular cauſes; or ſpecial, where the cauſes of demurrer are particularly ſet down: and the judgment of the court is not to be prayed upon an inſufficient declaration or plea, otherwiſe than by a demurrer; when the matter comes judicially before the court. If in pleadings, &c. a matter is inſufficiently alledged, that the court cannot give certain judgment upon it, a general demurrer will ſuffice; and for want of ſubſtance, a general demurrer is good: but for want of form, there muſt be a ſpecial demurrer, and the cauſes ſpecially aſſigned. The practice is now, on a ſpecial demurrer, to take advantage of any real error, though not expreſſed, in the cauſes aſſigned.

A man who demurs generally, ſhall take advantage of all matters which are requiſite to ſhew a good right or title in the plaintiff. Plowd. Com. 66 a: Hob. 301.

If a man demurs for form, he muſt ſhew ſpecially the cauſes of demurrer. 2 Rol. 330: Stats. ubi ſupra: R. M. 1654. § 17.

If there be a general demurrer to the declaration, the plaintiff may apply to a judge for a ſummons for leave to amend; if not, he may proceed to join in demurrer, and make up the demurrer-book himſelf, a copy of which he is to deliver to defendant's attorney, and if not paid for on demand, ſign judgment. R. Tr. 12 W. 3. In caſe of a demurrer to a plea, &c. by a plaintiff, the demurrer-book cannot be made up by the defendant, until default made by the plaintiff. R. E. 11 W. 3.

Demurrers likewiſe, are either in actions at law, or in ſuits in equity.

A Demurrer in Equity, is nearly of the ſame nature with a demurrer in law; being an appeal to the judgment of the court, whether the defendant ſhall be bound to anſwer the plaintiff's bill: as for want of ſufficient matter of equity therein contained: or where the plaintiff upon his own ſhewing appears to have no right; or where the bill ſeeks a diſcovery of a thing which may cauſe a forfeiture of any kind, or may convict a man of any criminal miſbehaviour. For any of theſe cauſes, a defendant may demur to a bill in equity; and if on demurrer the defendant prevails, the plaintiff's bill ſhall be diſmiſſed; if the demurrer be over-ruled, the defendant is ordered to anſwer. 3 Comm. 446.

It is allowed a good cauſe of demurrer in Chancery, that a bill is brought for part of a matter only, which is proper for one intire account, becauſe the plaintiff ſhall not ſplit cauſes, and make a multiplicity of ſuits. Vern. 29.

If an original bill be brought for matters, part of which are in a former bill and decree, and part new, or by way of ſupplemental bill; the court will, on a demurrer to ſo much as was contained in the former decree, ſend it to a maſter to ſee what was, and what was not in the firſt bill, and allow the demurrer accordingly. Gilb. E. R. 184. See further, title Chancery.

After the plaintiff and defendant have joined, iſſue in fact, which goes to the whole, neither of them can demur, without conſent of the other. But there may be a demurrer to evidence. Though now it is more uſual to take exceptions to evidence at the bar at Niſi prius, ore tenus, which is tantamount to a demurrer. If doubts ariſe, caſes are made, or points reſerved, and a verdict taken, ſubject to the opinion of the court. See poſt. title Demurrer to Evidence.

If a defendant pleads to part, and demurs to part; the demurrer ſhould firſt be determined, and the iſſue laſt; becauſe upon the trial of the iſſue, the jury may aſſeſs damages as to both. Palm. 517. Where there is a demurrer in part, and iſſue is joined upon the other part, and the plaintiff hath judgment on the demurrer; here he may enter a Non-proſ. as to the iſſue, and proceed to a writ of enquiry upon the demurrer: but otherwiſe he cannot have ſuch writ of inquiry. 1 Salk. 219: See 1 Stra. 532, 574.

If there be three counts in the declaration, to which there is a general demurrer; if any one of the counts be good, judgment muſt be for the plaintiff, if ſuch count can be joined with the other two. 1 Wilſ. 252.

A demurrer is to be ſigned, and argued on both ſides by counſel. After a demurrer is joined, the plaintiff having entered it on the roll, delivers the roll to the Secondary, and makes a motion for a Conſilium or day to argue it, which the court grants of courſe, on the Secondary's reading the record; then the demurrer muſt be entered by the plaintiff in the court-book with the Secondary, who, on his rule ſets down the day appointed for argument, at leaſt four days before the demurrer is argued: and paper-books, containing all the proceedings at length, which are afterwards entered on record, are made and delivered to the judges, two days before argument. See Imp. K. B.

The demurrant argues firſt, and the Court will hear but two counſel on a day, viz. one of a ſide; and, if deſired on either ſide, (unleſs the caſe be very plain,) the court will hear further arguments the next term. If the major part of the judges of the court cannot determine the matter on the demurrer, it is to be ſent into the Exchequer-chamber to be determined by all the judges of England. 1 Inſt. 71. Demurrers are now frequently put in for delay. In ſuch caſes, the party wiſhing to avoid the delay, makes up four demurrer-books, and delivers to the judges, two days before the day when judgment is moved for; which is given of courſe without argument.

When the Court gives judgment on demurrer in debt for the plaintiff in the action, the judgment is for the plaintiff to recover his debt, coſts and damages; but if it be in action on the caſe, a writ of inquiry of damages muſt be awarded, before the plaintiff can have final judgment. If judgment on the demurrer is for the defendant in the action, the judgment is, that the plaintiff take nothing by his writ, bill, &c. and that the defendant go without day. Wood's Inſt. 603.

General demurrer being entered, it cannot be afterwards waved, without leave of the court, but a ſpecial demurrer generally may, unleſs the plaintiff hath loſt a term, or the aſſizes by the defendant's demurring. Impey, K. B.

DEMURRER TO EVIDENCE. This happens where a record or other matter is produced in evidence, concerning the legal conſequences of which there ariſes a doubt in law: in which caſe the adverſe party may, if he pleaſes, demur to the whole evidence; which admits the truth of every fact that has been alledged, but denies the ſufficiency of them all in point of law to maintain or overthrow the iſſue, as the caſe may be. 1 Inſt. 72: 5 Rep. 104. This draws the queſtion of law from the cognizance of the jury to be decided, as it ought, by the court, out of which the record is ſent. 3 Comm. 372.

So if the plaintiff brings witneſſes to prove a fact, and a matter of law ariſeth upon it; if the defendant admits their teſtimony to be true, there alſo the defendant may demur in law: and ſo may the plaintiff demur upon the defendant's evidence. And in theſe caſes, the counſel for the plaintiff and defendant agree the matter of fact in diſpute; and the jury are diſcharged; and the matter of law is referred to the judges to determine.

But where evidence is given for the King, in an information or other ſuit, and the defendant offers to demur upon it, the King's counſel are not obliged to join therein; but the Court ought to direct the jury to find the ſpecial matter. And, indeed, becauſe juries of late uſually find a doubtful matter ſpecially, demurrers upon evidence are now ſeldom uſed. See 5 Rep. 104: 1 Inſt. 72: 2 Inſt. 426.

If the Court doth not agree to a demurrer to evidence in a civil cauſe; they ought to ſeal a bill of exceptions, &c. 9 Rep. 13 —See title Bill of Exceptions.

DEMURRER TO INDICTMENTS. This is incident to criminal caſes, as well as civil, when the fact as alledged is allowed to be true, but the priſoner joins iſſue upon ſome point of law in the indictment; by which he inſiſts that the fact, as ſtated, is no felony, treaſon, or whatever the crime is alledged to be. Thus, for inſtance, if a man be indicted for feloniouſly ſtealing a greyhound, which is an animal in which no valuable property can be had, and therefore it is not felony, but only a civil treſpaſs to ſteal it: in this caſe the party indicted may demur to the indictment; denying it to be felony, though he confeſſes the act of taking it. Some have held, (2 Hal. P. C. 257,) that if on demurrer, the point of law be adjudged againſt the priſoner, he ſhall have judgement and execution, as if convicted by verdict. But this is denied by others; (2 Hawk. P. C. c. 32. § 5, 6;) who hold, that in ſuch caſe he ſhall be directed and received to plead the general iſſue, Not guilty, after a demurrer determined againſt him. Which appears the more reaſonable, becauſe it is clear, that if the priſoner freely diſcovers the fact in court, and refers to the opinion of the court, whether it be felony or no; and upon the fact thus ſhewn, it appears to be felony; the court will not record the confeſſion, but admit him afterwards to plead not guilty. 2 Hal. P. C. 225. And this ſeems to be a caſe of the ſame nature, being for the moſt part a miſtake in point of law, and in the conduct of his pleading; and though a man by miſ-pleading, may in ſome caſes loſe his property, yet the law will not ſuffer him by ſuch niceties to loſe his life. However, upon this doubt, demurrers to indictments are ſeldom uſed; ſince the ſame advantages may be taken upon a plea of Not guilty; or afterwards in arreſt of judgment, when the verdict has eſtabliſhed the fact. See Smith v. Bowen, Mich. 7 An. in which caſe the demurrer was continued on the record with a ceſſet triatio exitûs, &c. and after the demurrer was determined againſt the defendant, a Venire was awarded. See Salk. 59, 60: Dyer 38: 2 Hawk. P. C. ubi ſuprà in n: 4 Comm. 333, 4.

DEMY-SANGUE, Half-blood: where a man marries a woman, and hath iſſue by her a ſon, and the wife dying he marries another woman, by whom he hath alſo a ſon; now theſe two ſons, though they are called brothers, are but brothers of the half-blood, becauſe they had not both one father and mother: and therefore by law they cannot be heirs to one another; for he that claims freehold as heir to another by deſcent, muſt be of the whole blood to him from whom he claimeth. Terms de Ley.—See titles Deſcent, Executor.

DEN, from the Sax. Den. i. e. Vallis, Locus Sylveſtris.] The name of places ending in den, as Biddenden, &c. ſignify the ſituation to be in a valley, or near woods. Blount.

DEN AND STROND, Is a liberty for ſhips or veſſels to run or come aſhore: and King Ed. 1. by charter granted this privilege to the Barons of the Cinque Ports. Placit. temp. Ed. 1.

DENA TERRÆ, A hollow place between two hills; and the word dena is uſed for a little portion of woody ground, commonly called a coppice. Domeſday.

DENARII, A general term for any ſort of pecunia numerata, or ready money. Paroch. Antiq. 320.

DENARII DE CARITATE, Cuſtomary oblations made to Cathedral Churches about the time of Penteceſt, when the pariſh prieſts, and many of their people went in proceſſion to viſit their mother church: this cuſtom was afterwards changed into a ſettled due, and uſually charged upon the pariſh prieſt; though at firſt it was but a gift of charity, or preſent, to help to maintain and adorn the biſhop's ſee. Cartular. Abbat. Glaſton. MS. f. 15.

DENARIUS, An Engliſh penny: it is mentioned in the Stat. Ed. 1. de compoſitione menſurarum, &c.

DENARIUS DEI, God's penny, or earneſt money given and received by the parties to contracts, &c. Cart. Ed. 1. The earneſt money is called Denarius Dei, or God's penny, becauſe, in former times, the piece of money ſo given to bind the contract, was given to God, i. e. To the church, or the poor.

DENARIUS S. PETRI, An annual payment of one penny from every family to the Pope, during the time that the Roman Catholic religion prevailed in this kingdom, paid on the feaſt of St. Peter. See Peter-Pence.

DENARIUS TERTIUS COMITATUS. Of the fines and other profits of the county-courts, originally when thoſe courts had ſuperior juriſdiction before other courts were erected, two parts were reſerved to the King, and a third part or penny to the Earl of the county; who either received it in ſpecie at the aſſiſes and trials, or had an equivalent compoſition for it out of the Exchequer. Paroch. Antiq. 418.

DENBERA,

DENBERA, From the Sax. Den, a vale, and berg, a barrow or hog.] A place for the running and feeding of hogs, wherein they are penned; by ſome called a Swine-comb. Cowel.

DENIZEN, See title Alien.

DENSHIRING OF LAND, Is the caſting parings of earth, turf, and ſtubble into heaps, which when dried are burnt into aſhes, for a compoſt on poor barren land. This method of improvement is uſed on taking in and incloſing common and waſte ground; and in many parts of England is called burn-beating, but in Staffordſhire and other counties, they term it denſhiring of land.

DE NON DECIMANDO Modus. To be diſcharged of tithes. See Modus Decimandi.

DE NON RESIDENTIA CLERICI REGIS, An ancient writ where a perſon was employed in the King's ſervice, &c. to excuſe and diſcharge him of non-reſidence. 2 Inſt. 624.

DENTRIX, A fiſh with many teeth. Chart. Hen. 6. Monaſt. Ramſey.

DEODAND, Deo dandum.] By this is meant whatever perſonal chattel is the immediate occaſion of the death of any reaſonable creature: which is forfeited to the King to be applied to pious uſes, and diſtributed in alms by his high almoner, though formerly deſtined to a more ſuperſtitious purpoſe. 1 H. P. C. 419: Fleta lib. 1. c. 25.

It ſeems to have been originally deſigned as an expiation for the ſouls of ſuch as were ſnatched away by ſudden death; and for that purpoſe ought properly to have been given to Holy Church, in the ſame manner as the apparel of a ſtranger who was found dead, was applied to purchaſe maſſes for the good of his ſoul. And this may account for that rule of law, that no deodand is due, where an infant under the age of diſcretion is killed by a fall from a cart or horſe, or the like, not being in motion; whereas, if an adult perſon falls from thence, and is killed, the thing is certainly forfeited. 3 Inſt. 57: 1 H. P. C. 422. Such infant being preſumed incapable of actual ſin, and therefore not needing a deodand to purchaſe propitiatory maſſes. 1 Comm. 300.

Thus ſtands the law, if a perſon be killed by a fall from a thing ſtanding ſtill. But if a horſe, or ox, or other animal of his own motion, kill as well an infant, as an adult; or if a cart run over him, they ſhall in either caſe be forfeited as deodands; which is grounded upon this additional reaſon, that ſuch misfortunes are in part owing to the negligence of the owner; and therefore he is properly puniſhed by ſuch forfeiture. Bract. l. 3. c. 5.

Where a thing not in motion is the occaſion of a man's death, that part only which is the immediate cauſe is forfeited; as if a man be climbing up the wheel of a cart, and is killed by falling from it, the wheel alone is a Deodand. 1 H. P. C. 422.—But wherever the thing is in motion, not only that part which immediately gives the wound (as the wheel which runs over his body,) but all things which move with it, and help to make the wound more dangerous, (as the cart and loading, which increaſe the preſſure of the wheel,) are forfeited. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 26.

It matters not whether the owner of the thing moving to the death of a perſon were concerned in the killing or not: for if a man kills another with my ſword, the ſword is forfeited. Dr. & Stud. d. 2. c. 51. And therefore in all indictments for homicide, the inſtrument of death, and the value, are preſented and found by the Grand Jury; (as that the ſtroke was given by a certain penknife, value 6*d*.) that the King or his grantee may claim the Deodand. For it is no Deodand, unleſs it be preſented as ſuch by a jury of twelve men. 3 Inſt. 57: 5 Rep. 110: 1 Inſt. 144.

No Deodands are due for accidents happening upon the high ſea, that being out of the juriſdiction of the Common law: but if a man falls from a boat or ſhip in freſh water and is drowned, it hath been ſaid that the veſſel and cargo are in ſtrictneſs of law a Deodand. 3 Inſt. 58: 1 H. P. C. 423: Moll. de Jur. Marit. 2. 225.

Juries however have of late perhaps too frequently taken upon themſelves to mitigate theſe forfeitures, by finding only ſome trifling thing, or part of an entire thing to have been the occaſion of the death. But in ſuch caſes, although the finding by the jury be hardly warrantable by law, the court of K. B. hath generally refuſed to interfere on behalf of the Lord of the Franchiſe, to aſſiſt ſo unequitable a claim. Foſt. on Homic. 266.

Deodands, as well as other forfeitures in general, wrecks, treaſure-trove, &c. may be granted by the King to particular ſubjects as a Royal Franchiſe: and indeed they are for the moſt part granted out to the lords of manors or other liberties; to the perverſion of their original deſign. 1 Comm. 299. & ſeq.

If a man riding over a river, is thrown off his horſe by the violence of the water, and drowned, his horſe is not Deodand; for his death was cauſed per curſum aquæ. 2 Co. 483.

If a perſon wounded by any accident, as of a cart, horſe, &c. die within a year and a day after, what did it, is Deodand: ſo that if a horſe ſtrikes a man, and afterwards the owner ſells the horſe, and then the party that was ſtricken dies of the ſtroke, the horſe, notwithſtanding the ſale, ſhall be forfeited as Deodand. Plowd. 260: 5 Rep. 110.

Things fixed to the freehold; as a bell hanging in a ſteeple, a wheel of a mill, &c. unleſs ſevered from the freehold, cannot be Deodands. 2 Inſt. 281. And there is no forfeiture of a Deodand, till the matter is found of record, by the jury that finds the death; who ought alſo to find and appraiſe the Deodand. 5 Rep. 110: 1 Inſt. 144. After the coroner's inquiſition, the ſheriff is anſwerable for the value, where the Deodand belongs to the King; and he may levy the ſame on the town, &c. Wherefore the inqueſt ought to find the value of it. 1 Hawk. P. C.

Grants of Deodands how to be inrolled, 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 22. ſect. 1. The goods and chattels of felo de ſe, &c. were likewiſe anciently held to be Deodands, and are now forfeitable to the Crown. See title Felo de ſe. 1 Lil. 443.

DE ONERANDO PRO RATA PORTIONIS, A writ where a perſon is diſtrained for rent, that ought to be paid by others proportionably with him. F. N. B. 234. If a man hold twenty acres of land, by fealty and twenty ſhillings rent; and he aliens one acre to one perſon, and another acre to another, &c. the lord ſhall not diſtrain one alienee for the whole rent, but for the rate and value of the land he hath purchaſed, &c. And if he be diſtrained for more, he ſhall have this writ. New Nat. Br. 586.

DEPARTURE. A term of law properly applied to a defendant, who firſt pleading one thing in bar of an action, and being replied unto, in his rejoinder, quits that and ſhews another matter, contrary to, or not purſuing his firſt plea, which is called a departure from his plea: alſo where a plaintiff in his declaration ſets forth one thing, and after the defendant hath pleaded, the plaintiff in his replication ſhews new matter different from his declaration, this is a departure. Plowd. 7, 8: 2 Inſt. 147. But if a plaintiff in his replication depart from his count, and the defendant takes iſſue upon it; if it be found for the plaintiff, the defendant ſhall take no advantage of that departure: though it would have been otherwiſe, if he had demurred upon it. Raym. 86: 1 Lil. Abr. 444.

If a man plead a general agreement in bar, and in his rejoinder alledge a ſpecial one, this is a departure in pleading: and if an action is brought at Common law, and the plaintiff by his replication would maintain it by virtue of a cuſtom, &c. it hath been held a departure. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 638. Where a matter is omitted at firſt, it is a departure to plead it afterwards. Ibid. If in covenant, the defendant pleads performance; and after rejoins that the plaintiff ouſted him, it is a departure from his plea. Raym. 22. In debt upon bond for performance of covenants in a leaſe, the defendant pleaded performance; and afterwards in his rejoinder ſet forth that ſo much was paid in money, and ſo much in taxes, &c. upon demurrer, it was adjudged a departure from the plea; becauſe he had pleaded performance, and afterwards ſet forth other matter of excuſe, &c. 1 Salk. 221.

Debt upon bond for performance of an award, made for payment of money; if the defendant plead performance, and the plaintiff having replied and aſſigned a breach of non-payment, &c. the defendant rejoins that he is ready to pay the money at the day, &c. this is a departure from his plea; for performance is payment of the money; and payment, and ready to pay, are different iſſues. Sid. 10: 4 Leon. 79. In debt upon bond for non-performance of an award; the defendant pleads that the award was, that he ſhould releaſe all ſuits to the plaintiff, which he had done; the plaintiff replies that ſuch an award was made, but that the award was further, that the defendant ſhould pay to the plaintiff ſuch a ſum, &c. the defendant rejoins that true it is, that by the award he was to pay the plaintiff the ſaid ſum, but that the award was alſo, that the plaintiff ſhould releaſe to the defendant all actions, &c. which he had not done; on demurrer this was held a departure from the plea, being all new matter. 2 Bulſt. 39: Godb. 155: 1 Nelſ. 637. After nullum fecerunt arbitrium, the defendant cannot plead that the award is void, without being a departure from the former plea: and if where nul tiel agard is pleaded, then the award is ſet forth, and a joinder that it was not tendered, it is a departure. 1 Lev. 133: Lut. 385.

A departure muſt be always from ſomething that is material; or it will not be allowed: if in treſpaſs for taking goods, the plaintiff reply, that after the taking, the defendant converted them to his own uſe, this being an abuſe, makes a treſpaſs; and the converſion is either trover or treſpaſs at the plaintiff's election, ſo that by his replication he may make it treſpaſs, and be no departure. 1 Salk. 221, 222. In circumſtances of time, &c. laid as to promiſes, the plaintiff is not tied to a preciſe day; for if the defendant by his plea, force the plaintiff to vary, it is no departure from his declaration. 1 Nelſ. 640, 641. And if another place be mentioned in the replication, in action of debt; as this is a perſonal thing, it is no departure, becauſe he who is indebted to another in one place, is ſo in every place. Sid. 228.

If new matter which explains or fortifies the bar be rejoined by the defendant, it is not a departure. 1 Wilſ. 8; 97, 8: Co. Lit. 304 a.

A departure being a denial of what is before admitted, is a ſaying and un-ſaying, and for that an iſſue cannot be joined upon it, it is bad for the incertainty. 1 Lil. 444. See further titles Pleading: Novel Aſſignment: Treſpaſs.

DEPARTURE IN DESPITE OF THE COURT, and entry of it. See title Default.

DEPARTURE OF GOLD AND SILVER, The parting or dividing of thoſe metals, from others that are coarſer. See Stat. 4 H. 7.

DEPOPULATIO AGRORUM, Deſtroying and ravaging a country; an offence where the benefit of clergy was denied at common law. 2 Hal. Pl. 333. See title Clergy, benefit of.

DEPOPULATION, Depopulatio.] Is a waſting or deſtruction; a deſolation or unpeopling of any place, by fire, ſword, peſtilence, &c. 12 Rep. 30.

DEPOPULATORES AGRORUM, Theſe were great offenders, by the ancient common law; ſo called, becauſe by proſtrating and ruining of houſes for habitation of the King's people, they, as it were, depopulated towns and villages, leaving them without inhabitants. See Stat. 4 Hen. 3. c. 2: 3 Inſt. 204. and title Clergy, benefit of.

DEPOSITION, Depoſitio.] The teſtimony of a witneſs, otherwiſe called a deponent, put down in writing by way of anſwer to interrogatories exhibited for that purpoſe, in Chancery, &c. Proof in the High Court of Chancery is by depoſitions of witneſſes; and the copies of ſuch regularly taken and publiſhed, are read as evidence at the hearing. For the purpoſes of examining witneſſes in or near London there is an examiner's office appointed: but for ſuch as live in the county, a commiſſion to examine witneſſes is uſually granted to four commiſſioners, two named of each ſide, or any three or two of them to take the depoſitions there. And if the witneſſes reſide beyond ſea, a commiſſion may be had to examine them there, upon their own oaths; and, if foreigners, upon the oaths of two ſkilful interpreters. And it hath been eſtabliſhed that the depoſition of an Heathen who believes in the Supreme Being taken by commiſſion in the moſt ſolemn manner according to the cuſtom of his own country may be read in evidence. 1 Atk. 21.—The commiſſioners are ſworn to take the examinations truly and without partiality, and not to divulge them till publiſhed in the Court of Chancery; and their clerks are alſo ſworn to ſecrecy. The witneſſes are compellable by proceſs of ſubpœna, as in the courts of Common law, to appear and ſubmit to examination. And when their depoſitions are taken they are tranſmitted to the court with the ſame care that the anſwer of a defendant is ſent. 3 Comm. 449.

After a witneſs is fully examined, the examinations are read over to him, and the witneſs is at liberty to alter, or amend any thing; after which he ſigns them, and then, and not before, the examinations are complete, and good evidence. 1 P. Wms. 415. The ſame practice prevails in the Commons, in Eccleſiaſtical cauſes.

Where

Where a witneſs was examined in a cauſe in Chancery, and, before ſigning his examination died, the Maſter of the Rolls, upon adviſing with the Maſter in Chancery then in court, denied the making uſe of the depoſitions, as being not perfect. 1 P. Wms. 414.

But where, after an order for publication, defendant examined a witneſs, and then perceiving the irregularity (it being after publication) the defendant on the uſual affidavit by himſelf, his clerk in court, and ſolicitor, that they had not ſeen, nor would ſee any of the depoſitions, got an order to re-examine this witneſs; but before re-examination the witneſs died; upon affidavit of this, Ld. Ch. Parker ordered that the defendant might make uſe of the depoſitions, the re-examination being prevented by the act of God. 1 P. Wms. 415.

Depoſitions in the Chancery after a cauſe is determined, may be given in evidence in a trial at bar in B. R. in a ſuit for the ſame matter, between the ſame parties, if the party that depoſed be dead; but not otherwiſe, for if he be living, he muſt appear in perſon in court to be examined, &c. 1 Lil. Abr. 445.

See further as to the admiſſion of written depoſitions in evidence at Common law. Bull. N. P. 229, 239–242, and this Dict. title Evidence.

Depoſitions of informers, &c. taken upon oath before a coroner, upon an inquiſition of death; or before juſtices of peace on a commitment or bailment of felony, may be given in evidence at a trial for the ſame felony; if it be proved on oath that the informer is dead, or unable to travel, or kept away by the procurement of the priſoner; and oath muſt be made that the depoſitions are the ſame that were ſworn before the coroner or juſtice, without any alteration. 2 Hawk. P. C.

Depoſitions taken before a coroner, cannot be given in evidence upon an appeal for the ſame death; becauſe it is a different proſecution from that wherein they were taken: And it has been adjudged, That the evidence given by a witneſs at one trial, could not, in the ordinary courſe of juſtice, be made uſe of againſt a criminal, on the death of ſuch witneſs, at another trial. 2 H. P. C.

The examinations of witneſſes abroad, and of ſuch as are aged or going abroad ae bene eſſe, to be read in evidence, if the trial ſhould be deferred till after their death or departure, are now very frequently effected by mutual conſent in trials at Common law, if the parties are open and candid: and this may alſo be done indirectly at any time, through the channel of a Court of Equity: but ſuch a practice has never yet been adopted directly as a rule of a court of law. Yet where the cauſe of action ariſes in India, and a ſuit is brought thereupon in any of the courts of Weſtminſter, the Court may iſſue a commiſſion to examine witneſſes upon the ſpot, and tranſmit the depoſitions to England. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63.

DEPOSITION is uſed in the law in another ſenſe, viz. To ſignify the depriving a perſon of ſome dignity, See titles Degradation; Deprivation.

Depoſition is alſo taken for death; and dies depoſitionis, the day of one's death. Litt. Dict.

DEPRIVATION, Deprivatio.] A depriving or taking away; as when a biſhop, parſon, vicar, &c. is depoſed from his preferment. Of deprivations there are two ſorts, deprivatio à beneficio, and ab officio; the deprivation à beneficio is when for ſome great crime, &c. a miniſter is wholly deprived of his living: And deprivation ab officio is where a miniſter is for ever deprived of his orders, which is alſo called depoſition or degradation; and is commonly for ſome heinous offence meriting death, and performed by the biſhop in a ſolemn manner. Blount. See Degradation.

Deprivatio à beneficio is an act of the Spiritual Court, grounded upon ſome crime or defect in the perſon deprived by which he is diſcharged from his ſpiritual promotion or benefice, upon ſufficient cauſe proved againſt him. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 641.

Deprivation may alſo be by a particular clauſe in ſome act of parliament: the deprivation of biſhops, &c. is declared lawful by ſtatute 39 Eliz. c. 8. And by the King's commiſſion, as he hath the ſupremacy lodged in him, a biſhop may be deprived: for ſince a biſhop is veſted with that dignity by commiſſion from the King, it is reaſonable he ſhould be deprived, where there is juſt cauſe, by the ſame authority: but the canons direct, that a biſhop ſhall be deprived in a ſynod of the province; or, if that cannot be aſſembled, by the archbiſhop; and twelve biſhops at leaſt, not as his aſſiſtants, but as judges. It has been adjudged, that an archbiſhop may deprive a biſhop for ſimony, &c. for he hath power over his ſuffragans, who may be puniſhed in the archbiſhop's court for any offence againſt their duty. 1 Salk. 134. See title Biſhop.

The cauſes of deprivation are many: if a clerk obtain a preferment in the church, by ſimoniacal contract; if he be an excommunicate, a drunkard, fornicator, adulterer, infidel, ſchiſmatick or heretick; or guilty of murder, manſlaughter, perjury, forgery, &c. If a clerk be illiterate and not able to perform the duty of his church; if he is a ſcandalous perſon in his life and converſation; or baſtardy is objected againſt him: if one be a mere layman, and not in holy orders; or under age, viz. the age of twenty-three years; be diſobedient and incorrigible to his ordinary; or a con-nonformiſt to the canons; if a parſon refuſe to uſe the Common Prayer, or preach in derogation of it; do not adminiſter the Sacraments, or read the Articles of Religion, &c. See titles Parſon; Clergy.

If any parſon, vicar, &c. have one benefice with cure of ſouls, and take plurality, without a faculty or diſpenſation: or if he commit waſte in the houſes and lands of the church, called Dilapidations, all theſe have been held good cauſes for deprivation of prieſts. Degg's Parſon's Counſellor, 98, 99, &c: 3 Inſt. 204. See titles Advowſon, II; Chaplain; Ceſſion. And refuſing to uſe the Common Prayers of the church, plurality of livings, &c. are cauſes of deprivation ipſo facto, in which caſe the church ſhall be void, without any ſentence declaratory; and avoidances by act of parliament need no declaratory ſentence: But in other caſes there muſt be a declaratory ſentence. Dyer 275. See title Parſon.

Where a benefice is only voidable, but not void before ſentence of deprivation, the party muſt be cited to appear; there is to be a libel againſt him, and a time aſſigned to anſwer it, and alſo liberty for advocates to plead, and after all a ſolemn ſentence pronounced: Though none of theſe formalities are required, where the living is made ipſo facto void. Can. 122. If a deprivation be for a thing merely of eccleſiaſtical cognizance, no appeal lies; but the party has his remedy by a commiſſion of review, which is granted by the King of mere grace. Mor 781.

DEPUTY,

DEPUTY, Deputatus.] One that exerciſes an office, &c. in another man's right; whoſe forfeiture or miſdemeanor, ſhall cauſe him, whoſe deputy he is, to loſe his office. The Common law takes notice of deputies in many caſes, but it never takes notice of under-deputies; for a deputy is generally but a perſon authoriſed, who cannot authoriſe another. 1 Lill. Abr. 446. A man cannot make his deputy in all caſes; except the grant of the office juſtify him in it, and where it is to one, to execute by deputy, &c.

And there is a great difference between a deputy and aſſignee of an office; for an aſſignee hath an intereſt in the office itſelf, and doth all things in his own name; for whom his grantor ſhall not anſwer, unleſs in ſpecial caſes. But a deputy hath not any intereſt in the office, but is only the ſhadow of the officer, in whoſe name he doth all things. And where an officer hath power to make aſſigns, he may implicitly make deputies. And a ſheriff may make a deputy, or under-ſheriff, although he have not ſuch expreſs words in his patent. 9 Rep. 49.—Cowel.

A deputy cannot make a deputy; becauſe it implies an aſſignment of his whole power, which he cannot aſſign over; but he may impower another to do a particular act. 1 Salk. 96: Lit. 379.

Judges cannot act by deputy, but are to hold their courts in perſon; for they may not transfer their power over to others. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 9. But it has been adjudged, that recorders may hold their courts by deputy. 1 Lev. 76. The office of Cuſtos Brevium and Chirographer in C. B. cannot be executed by deputy. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 644. A ſteward of a court may make a deputy; and acts of an under-ſteward's deputy have been held good in ſome caſes. Cro. Eliz. 534.

A coroner ought not to execute his office by deputy, it being a judicial office of truſt; and judicial offices are annexed to the perſon. 1 Lil. 446. If the office of parkerſhip be granted to one, he may not grant this to another; becauſe it is an office of truſt and confidence. Terms de Ley.

A bailiff of a liberty, may make a deputy. Cro. Jac. 240. And a conſtable may make a deputy, who may execute the warrant directed to the conſtable, &c. 2 Danv. 482. See title Conſtable.

When an office deſcends to an infant, ideot, &c. ſuch may make a deputy of courſe. 9 Rep. 47. Where an office is granted to a man and his heirs, he may make an aſſignee of that office; and by conſequence a deputy.

A Deputy of an office, hath no intereſt therein, but doth all things in his maſter's name, and his maſter ſhall be anſwerable; but an aſſignee hath an intereſt in the office, and doth all things in his own name, for whom his grantor ſhall not anſwer, unleſs in ſpecial caſes. Terms de Ley.

A ſuperior officer muſt anſwer for his deputy in civil actions, if he is not ſufficient: but in criminal caſes it is otherwiſe, where deputies are to anſwer for themſelves. 2 Inſt. 191, 466: Doct. & Stud. c. 42.

Perhaps this word deraign, and the word deraignment derived from it, may be uſed in the ſenſe of to prove and a proving, by diſproving of what is aſſerted in oppoſition to truth and fact.

DERELICT, Derelictus.] Any thing forſaken or left; or wilfully caſt away. Derelict lands ſuddenly left by the ſea belong to the King: but if the ſea ſhrink back ſo ſlowly that the gain be by little and little, i. e. by ſmall and imperceptible degrees, it ſhall go to the owner of the lands adjoining. DESCENT, or HEREDITARY SUCCESSION; Lat. Deſcenſus: Fr. Diſcent; in which latter way the term is uſually ſpelt in all old law books.] The title whereby a man, on the death of his anceſtor, obtains the freehold eſtate of ſuch anceſtor, by right of repreſentation, as his Heir-at-law.—It is otherwiſe defined; The order or means whereby lands or tenements are derived unto any man from his anceſtor.—An Heir is he upon whom the law caſts the eſtate immediately on the death of his anceſtor: and the eſtate ſo deſcending, is in law called the Inheritance. See 2 Comm. 200. lib. 2. c. 14; from whence much of the following matter is abridged.

It may not be an uſeleſs preliminary obſervation, that the law of Deſcents of real eſtates, is totally diſtinct from that of the Diſtribution of perſonal property; for which latter ſee title Executor III: V. 8.

Deſcent, being created by law, and the moſt ancient title, it is termed the worthieſt means by which land can be acquired; and an Heir is in by that, in preference to a grant, or deviſe, &c. which are called titles by purchaſe. It is a rule in law, that a man cannot raiſe a fee-ſimple to his own right heirs, by the name of heirs, as a purchaſe, either by conveyance or deviſe; for if he deviſe lands to one who is the heir at law, the deviſe is void, and he ſhall take by deſcent. Dyer 54, 126. And it is the ſame where the lands will come to the heir, either in a direct or collateral line; or where the heir comes to an eſtate by way of limitation, when the word heirs is not a word of purchaſe. Ibid. A father hath two ſons by ſeveral venters, and deviſes his land to his wife for life, and after her deceaſe to his eldeſt ſon; though the ſon doth not take the eſtate preſently on the death of his father, he ſhall be in by deſcent, and not by purchaſe, and the deviſe ſhall be void as to him. Style 148: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 645. But it is ſaid he may make his election, and take by deviſe, if he pleaſes.

A man being ſeiſed of lands which he had by the mother's ſide, deviſed them to his heirs on the part of his mother; and it was adjudged, that the deviſee ſhall take by deſcent. 3 Lev. 127. And when the heir takes that which his anceſtor would have taken if living, he ſhall take it by deſcent, and not by purchaſe. 2 Danv. 557. But generally, where an eſtate is deviſed to the heir at law, attended with a charge, as to pay money debts, &c. in ſuch caſe he takes by purchaſe, and not by deſcent. Though conditions to pay money have been conſtrued only a charge in equity; and that they do not alter the deſcent at Common law. 1 Lut. 593: 1 Salk. 241. See further, titles Limitation; Purchaſe; Eſtate; Will.

If one die ſeiſed of land, in which another hath right to enter, and it deſcends to his heir; ſuch deſcent ſhall take away the other's right of entry, and put him to his action for recovery thereof. Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 33: Co. Lit. 237. But a deſcent of ſuch things as lie in grant, as advowſons, rents, commons in groſs, &c. puts not him who hath right to his action. Co. Lit. 237: 2 Danv. Abr. 561. And a deſcent ſhall not take away the entry of an infant; nor of a feme covert, where the wrong was done to her during the coverture. 2 Danv. 563.

The Doctrine of Deſcents, or law of inheritance in fee-ſimple, is a point of the higheſt importance; and is indeed the principal object of the laws of real property in England. All the rules relating to purchaſes, whereby the legal courſe of deſcents is broken and altered, perpetually refer to this ſettled law of inheritance, as a datum or firſt principle univerſally known, and upon which their ſubſequent limitations are to work.

In order therefore to treat a ſubject of this univerſal conſequence the more clearly, it ſeems better to lay aſide ſuch matters as will only tend to cauſe embarraſſment and confuſion. The queſtion, who are, and who are not capable of being heirs, comes more properly under the titles Heir; Attainder; Eſcheat; which ſee. We may alſo paſs over the frequent diviſion of deſcents, into thoſe by Cuſtom, Statute and Common law. As to deſcents by particular cuſtom, as to all the ſons in gavelkind, or to the youngeſt in Borough Engliſh, ſee thoſe titles, and title Cuſtom; and as to deſcents by ſtatute, or fees-tail per formam doni, in purſuance of the Stat. of Weſtm. 2; ſee titles Eſtate; Limitations; Tenure.

As the law of Deſcents depends not a little on the nature of kindred, and the ſeveral degrees of conſanguinity, it will be previouſly neceſſary to ſtate, briefly, the true notion of this kindred or alliance in blood.

CONSANGUINITY, or kindred, is defined by the writers on theſe ſubjects to be vinculum perſonarum ab eodem ſtipite deſcendentium; the connexion or relation of perſons deſcended from the ſame ſtock or common anceſtor. This conſanguinity is either lineal or collateral.

Lineal conſanguinity, is that which ſubſiſts between perſons, of whom one is deſcended in a direct line from the other, as between a man and his father, grandfather, and great grandfather, and ſo upwards, in the direct aſcending line: or between a man and his ſon, grandſon, great-grandſon, and ſo downwards in the direct deſcending line. Every generation, in this lineal direct conſanguinity, conſtitutes a different degree, reckoning either upwards or downwards: the father is related in the firſt degree, and ſo likewiſe is the ſon; grandſire and grandſon in the ſecond; great grandſire and great grandſon in the third. This is the only natural way of reckoning the degrees in the direct line, and therefore univerſally obtains, as well in the civil and canon, as in the Common law.

Collateral kindred anſwers to the ſame deſcription: collateral relations agreeing with the lineal in this, that they deſcend from the ſame ſtock or anceſtor; but differing in this, that they do not deſcend one from the other. Collateral kinſmen are ſuch then as lineally ſpring from one and the ſame anceſtor, who is the ſtirps, or root, the ſtipes, trunk, or common ſtock, from whence theſe relations are branched out. As if a man hath two ſons, who have each a numerous iſſue; both theſe iſſues are lineally deſcended from him as their common anceſtor; and they are collateral kinſmen to each other, becauſe they are all deſcended from this common anceſtor, and all have a portion of his blood in their veins, which denominates them conſanguineos.

The very being of collateral conſanguinity, conſiſts in this deſcent, from one and the ſame common anceſtor. Thus A. and his brother are related; Why? Becauſe both are derived from one father: A. and his firſt couſin are related; Why? Becauſe both deſcended from the ſame grandfather; and his ſecond couſins' claim to conſanguinity is this, that they are both derived from one and the ſame great grandfather. In ſhort, as many anceſtors as a man has, ſo many common ſtocks he has, from which collateral kinſmen may be derived.

The method of computing theſe degrees in the canon law, which our law has adopted (Co. Litt. 23,) is as follows. We begin at the common anceſtor, and reckon downwards; and in whatſoever degree the two perſons, or the moſt remote of them, is diſtant from the common anceſtor, that is the degree in which they are related to each other. Thus A. and his brother are related in the firſt degree; for from the father to each of them is counted only one; A. and his nephew are related in the ſecond degree; for the nephew is two degrees removed from the common anceſtor; viz. his own grandfather, the father of A.

The learned Commentator then proceeds to lay down a ſeries of Rules, or Canons of Inheritance, according to which, eſtates are tranſmitted from the anceſtor to the heir, with an explanatory comment.

I. THE FIRST RULE is, that Inheritances ſhall lineally DESCEND to the iſſue of the perſon who laſt died actually ſeiſed, in infinitum; but ſhall never lineally ASCEND.

By law no inheritance can veſt, nor can any perſon be the actual complete heir of another, till the anceſtor is previouſly dead. Nemo eſt hæres viventis. Before that time the perſon who is next in the line of ſucceſſion is called an heir apparent, or heir preſumptive. Heirs apparent are ſuch, whoſe right of inheritance is indefeaſible, provided they outlive the anceſtor: as the eldeſt ſon or his iſſue, who muſt by the courſe of the Common law be heir to the father whenever he happens to die. Heirs preſumptive are ſuch, who, if the anceſtor ſhould die immediately, would in the preſent circumſtances of things be his heirs; but whoſe right of inheritance may be defeated feated by the contingency of ſome nearer heir being born: as a brother or nephew, whoſe preſumptive ſucceſſion may be deſtroyed by the birth of a child; or a daughter, whoſe preſent hopes may hereafter be cut off by the birth of a ſon. Nay even if the eſtate hath deſcended, by the death of the owner, to ſuch brother, or nephew, or daughter; in the former caſes, the eſtate ſhall be deveſted and taken away by the birth of a poſthumous child; and in the latter, it ſhall alſo be totally deveſted by the birth of a poſthumous ſon. Bro. tit. Deſcent 58.

And beſides this caſe of a poſthumous child, if lands are given to a ſon who dies, leaving a ſiſter his heir; if the parents have at any diſtance of time afterwards another ſon, this ſon ſhall deveſt the deſcent upon the ſiſter, and take the eſtate as heir to his brother. Co. Lit. 11: Doct. & Stud. d. 1. c. 7. So the ſame eſtate may be frequently deveſted by the ſubſequent birth of nearer preſumptive heirs, before it fixes upon an heir apparent. As if an eſtate is given to an only child, who dies; it may deſcend to an aunt, who may be ſtripped of it by an after-born uncle; on whom a ſubſequent ſiſter may enter, and who will again be deprived of the eſtate by the birth of a brother, the heir apparent. Chriſtian's note on 2 Comm. 208.

It ſeems determined that every one has a right to retain the rents and profits which accrued whilſt he was thus legally poſſeſſed of the inheritance. 1 Inſt. 11. in n: 2 Wilſ. 526 —See further as to the entry of a poſthumous heir, Watkins on Deſcents, c. 4.

No perſon can properly be ſuch an anceſtor, as that an inheritance of lands or tenements can be derived from him, unleſs he hath had actual ſeiſin of ſuch lands, either by his own entry, or by the poſſeſſion of his own or his anceſtor's leſſee for years, or receiving rent from a leſſee of the freehold: (Co. Litt. 15:) or unleſs he hath had what is equivalent to corporal ſeiſin in hereditaments that are incorporeal; ſuch as the receipt of rent, a preſentation to the church in caſe of an advowſon, and the like. Co. Litt. 11. But he ſhall not be accounted an anceſtor, who hath had only a bare right or title to enter, or be otherwiſe ſeiſed. The ſeiſin therefore of any perſon, thus underſtood, makes him the root, or ſtock, from which all future inheritance by right of blood muſt be derived: which is very briefly expreſſed in this maxim, ſeiſina facit ſtipitem. Flet. l. 6. c. 2. § 2.

Though it be neceſſary the anceſtor be ſeiſed, yet it is not required that the ſeiſin continue till the death of ſuch anceſtor: for if he had been ſeiſed at any time during his life, and afterwards diſſeiſed, ſtill if he had not parted with his right or property, his heir ſhall inherit. 1 Inſt. 237 b.—See Watkins on Deſcents. If the hereditaments deſcending be in reverſion or remainder, expectant on an eſtate of freehold, the heir may obtain what will be equivalent to an actual ſeiſin, by granting them over for life or in tail. See poſt. VI. as to poſſeſſio fratris.

When therefore a perſon dies ſo ſeiſed, the inheritance firſt goes to his iſſue: as if there be grandfather, father, and ſon, and the father purchaſes lands and dies; his ſon ſhall ſucceed him as heir, and not the grandfather, to whom the land ſhall never lineally aſcend, but ſhall rather eſcheat to the lord. Litt. § 3. This rule, that the inheritance ſhall never lineally aſcend, clearly appears to be of feudal original, and the propriety of it is well defended at ſome length by the learned Commentator, to whom we refer the reader deſirous of inveſtigating the ſubject, as a matter rather of curioſity than utility.

Though an eſtate cannot lineally aſcend, the father may take his ſon's eſtate by an intermediate deſcent; for if the ſon has neither iſſue, nor brothers or ſiſters, the eſtate will deſcend to an uncle, or ſome collateral relation, to whom the father may on his deceaſe be the next heir. And in ſome caſes, the father or mother may inherit immediately from a child. As if either of them are couſin to the child; a caſe of which nature occurs in 2 P. Wms. 613; where a ſon died, ſeiſed in fee of land, without iſſue, brother or ſiſter, but leaving two couſins, his heirs at law, one of whom was his own mother, the queſtion was, whether the mother could take as heir to her ſon. The Maſter of the Rolls was of opinion, that though the heir was alſo mother, this did not hinder her from taking in the capacity or relation of couſin. See 2 Comm. 212. in n.

In 1 Inſt. 8, It is ſaid, that if a man hath iſſue an elder ſon, born out of the King's allegiance, and after hath another ſon born within the realm; the younger ſon ſhall have lands by deſcent from his father in this caſe, and not the elder who had never any inheritable blood in him. Co. Lit. 8.—But if the father in this caſe is to be ſuppoſed a natural-born ſubject at the birth of the iſſue, the child would now be alſo a natural-born ſubject by force of Stats. 7 An. c. 5: 4 Geo. 2. c. 21. But the children of perſons attainted of, or liable to the penalties of, treaſon, or in the ſervice of a foreign ſtate in enmity with Great Britain, are excepted from the benefit of this proviſion. See Stat. 25 E. 3. ſt. 2, which declares that at Common law the children of the King wherever born, may inherit. The ſame ſtatute enables children born abroad to inherit, if at their birth both their parents are within the King's allegiance, and their mothers paſs the ſea, with the licence of their huſbands. See 1 Inſt. 8. in n.

Lord Coke alſo lays it down for law, that if an alien hath iſſue in England two ſons, though theſe ſons are indigenæ, ſubjects born, they cannot inherit to each other. But in the caſe of Collingwood v. Pace, this was denied to be law, and it was expreſsly held that ſuch ſons of aliens were inheritable to each other. See 1 Sid. 193: 1 Ventr. 413. And now by Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 6, natural-born ſubjects may derive a title by deſcent through their parents, though aliens; but Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 39, confines the benefit of the former ſtatute to ſuch heirs as ſhall be living, and capable of taking at the death of the perſon laſt dying ſeiſed; unleſs ſuch heirs happen to be daughters, and there is afterwards a ſon or another daughter, for which caſes the ſtatute makes a ſpecial proviſion. Both theſe acts are extended to Scotland by Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 52. The principle, on which it has been adjudged that the children of an alien may be heirs as betweeen themſelves, though not to their father, ſeems to reach the caſe of children born after their father's attainder. See 1 Inſt. 8. in n.—And further this Dict. titles Alien, Attainder.

II. A SECOND GENERAL RULE, or canon is, that the male iſſue ſhall be admitted before the female. Thus ſons ſhall be admitted before daughters; or, as our law expreſſes it, the worthieſt of blood ſhall be preferred. Hal. H. C. L.

235. As if one hath two ſons, and two daughters, and dies; firſt the eldeſt ſon, and (in caſe of his death without iſſue) then the youngeſt ſon ſhall be admitted to the ſucceſſion in preference to both the daughters.

The reaſon of this, as well as of the preceding rule, muſt be deduced from feodal principles: for, by the genuine and original policy of that conſtitution, no female could ever ſucceed to a proper feud, inaſmuch as females were incapable of performing thoſe military ſervices, for the ſake of which that ſyſtem was eſtabliſhed. But our law does not extend to a total excluſion of females, as the Salic law, and others, where feuds were moſt ſtrictly retained: it only poſtpones them to males; for, though daughters are excluded by ſons, yet they ſucceed before any collateral relations.

III. A THIRD RULE, or Canon of deſcent, is; that where there are two or more males in equal degree, the eldeſt ſon ſhall inherit; but the females all together.

As if a man hath two ſons, and two daughters, and dies; his eldeſt ſon ſhall alone ſucceed to his eſtate, in excluſion of the ſecond ſon and both the daughters; but, if both the ſons die without iſſue before the father, the daughters ſhall both inherit the eſtate as coparceners. Litt. § 5: Hal. C. L. 238. This rule is alſo of feudal original, and aroſe from thence on the eſtabliſhment of that conſtitution in England, by William the Conqueror.

Yet we find, that ſocage eſtates frequently deſcended to all the ſons equally, ſo lately as when Glanvil wrote, in the reign of Henry II. and it is mentioned in the Mirror, (c. 1. § 3,) as a part of our ancient conſtitution, that knights' fees ſhould deſcend to the eldeſt ſon, and ſocage fees ſhould be partible among male children. However, in Henry III.'s time, we find by Bracton, (l. 2. c. 30, 1,) that ſocage lands, in imitation of lands in chivalry, had almoſt entirely fallen into the right of ſucceſſion by primogeniture, as the law now ſtands; except in Kent, where they gloried in the preſervation of their ancient gavelkind tenure, of which a principal branch was the joint inheritance of all the ſons; and except in ſome particular manors and townſhips, where their local cuſtoms continued the deſcent, ſometimes to all, ſometimes to the youngeſt ſon only, or in other more ſingular methods of ſucceſſion.

As to the females, they are ſtill left as they were by the ancient law; for they were all equally incapable of performing any perſonal ſervice: and therefore one main reaſon for preferring the eldeſt ceating, ſuch preference would have been injurious to the reſt: and the other principal purpoſe, the prevention of the too minute ſubdiviſion of eſtates, was left to be conſidered and provided for by the lords, who had the diſpoſal of theſe female heireſſes in marriage. However, the ſucceſſion by primogeniture, even among females, took place as to the inheritance of the Crown; wherein the neceſſity of a ſole and determinate ſucceſſion, is as great in the one ſex, as in the other. 1 Inſt. 165. And the right of ſole ſucceſſion, though not of primogeniture, was alſo eſtabliſhed with reſpect to female dignities and titles of honour. For if a man holds an earldom to him and the heirs of his body, and dies, leaving only daughters; the eldeſt ſhall not of courſe be Counteſs, but the dignity is in ſuſpence or abeyance till the King ſhall declare his pleaſure; for he, being the fountain of honour, may confer it on which of them he pleaſes. Ibid.—See titles Abeyance, Peers.

IV. A FOURTH RULE, or Canon of deſcent, is; that the lineal deſcendants, in infinitum, of any perſon deceaſed, ſhall repreſent their anceſtor; that is, ſhall ſtand in the ſame place as the perſon himſelf would have done, had he been living.

Thus the child, grandchild, or great grandchild, (either male or female) of an eldeſt ſon, ſucceeds before a younger ſon, and ſo in infinitum. Hale H. C. L. 236, 7. And theſe repreſentatives ſhall take neither more nor leſs, but juſt ſo much as their principals would have done. As if there be two ſiſters, and one dies, leaving ſix daughters; and then the father of the two ſiſters dies, without other iſſue: theſe ſix daughters ſhall take among them exactly as much as their mother would have done, had ſhe been living; that is, a moiety of the lands in co-parcenary: ſo that, upon partition made, if the land be divided into twelve parts, the ſurviving ſiſter ſhall have ſix parts, and her ſix nieces, one part each.

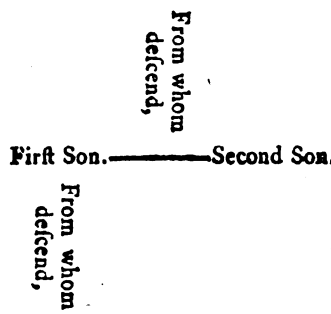
This taking by repreſentation, is called ſucceſſion in ſtirpes according to the roots; ſince all the branches inherit the ſame ſhare that their root, whom they repreſent, would have done. So if the next heirs of a man be ſix nieces, three by one ſiſter, two by another, and one by a third; his inheritance by the laws of England, is divided only into three parts, and diſtributed per ſtirpes, thus; one third to the three elder children who repreſent one ſiſter, another third to the two who repreſent the ſecond, and the remaining third to the one child who is the ſole repreſentative of her mother.

This mode of repreſentation is a neceſſary conſequence of the double preference given by our law, firſt to the male iſſue, and next to the firſt born among the males. For if all the children of three ſiſters were to claim per capita, in their own right, as next of kin to the anceſtor, without any reſpect to the ſtocks from whence they ſprung, and thoſe children were partly male, and partly female, then the eldeſt male among them would exclude not only his own brethren and ſiſters, but all the iſſue of the other two daughters, or elſe the law in this inſtance, muſt be inconſiſtent with itſelf, and depart from the preference which it conſtantly gives to the males, and the firſt born, among perſons in equal degree. Whereas, by dividing the inheritance according to the roots, or ſtirpes, the rule of deſcent is kept uniform and ſteady; the iſſue of the eldeſt ſon excludes all other pretenders, as the ſon himſelf (if living) would have done; but the iſſue of two daughters divide the inheritance between them, provided their mothers (if living) would have done the ſame: and among theſe ſeveral iſſues, or repreſentatives of the reſpective roots, the ſame preference to males, and the ſame right of primogeniture obtain, as would have obtained at the firſt among the roots themſelves, the ſons or daughters of the deceaſed. As 1. if a man hath two ſons, A. and B. and A. dies, leaving two ſons, and then the grandfather dies; now the eldeſt ſon of A. ſhall ſucceed to the whole of his grandfather's eſtate: and if A. had left only two daughters, they ſhould have ſucceeded alſo to equal moieties of the whole, in excluſion of B. and his iſſue. But 2. if a man hath only three daughters, C. D. and E; and C. dies leaving two ſons, D. leaving two daughters, and E.

leaving a daughter and a ſon, who is younger than his ſiſter: here when the grandfather dies, the eldeſt ſon of C. ſhall ſucceed to one third, in excluſion of the younger; and the two daughters of D. to another third in partnerſhip; and the ſon of E. to the remaining third, in excluſion of his eldeſt ſiſter. And the ſame right of repreſentation, guided and reſtrained by the ſame rules of deſcent, prevails downwards in infinitum.

How far the two immediately preceding, and other, caſes in the courſe of this title may be explained by the following ſcheme, the ſtudent is left to determine. It may perhaps afford a hint for ſtatements in more complicated caſes of deſcent. For regular tables of Conſanguinity and Deſcent, See 1 Inſt; The Commentaries; and Watkins's Treatiſe on Deſcent.

1. The PERSON dying ſeiſed.



2. The PERSON dying ſeiſed.

King John, however, who kept his nephew Arthur from the throne, by diſputing this right of repreſentation, did all in his power to aboliſh it throughout the realm. Hale H. C. L. 217, 229. But in the time of his ſon King Henry III. the rule was indiſputably ſettled in the manner here laid down, Bract. l. 2. c. 30. § 2; and ſo it has continued ever ſince. And thus much for lineal deſcents.

V. A FIFTH RULE is, that, on failure of lineal deſcendants, or iſſue of the perſon laſt ſeiſed, the inheritance ſhall deſcend to his collateral relations, being of the blood of the firſt purchaſor, ſubject to the three preceding rules. Thus if A. purchaſe land, and it deſcend to B. his ſon, who dies ſeiſed thereof without iſſue; whoever ſucceeds to this inheritance, muſt be of the blood of A. the firſt purchaſor of this family. Co. Litt. 12. The firſt purchaſor, perquiſitor, is he who firſt acquired the eſtate to his family, whether the ſame was transferred to him by ſale or by gift, or by any other method, except only that of deſcent.

This is a rule almoſt peculiar to our own laws, and thoſe of a ſimilar feudal original; and this rule or canon cannot otherwiſe be accounted for than by recurring to feudal principles, which did not originally permit the deſcent of lands to any but one of the lineal deſcendants of the firſt purchaſor, who in the caſe of a feudum novum, or eſtate purchaſed by the anceſtor himſelf, could only be his own offſpring; ſo that ſuch eſtate could not deſcend even to his brother. See this Dict. title Tenures; I. 3.

But when the feodal rigour was in part abated, a method was invented to let in the collateral relations of the grantee to the inheritance, by granting him a feudum novum to hold ut feudum antiquum; that is, with all the qualities annexed of a feud derived from his anceſtors; and then the collateral relations were admitted to ſucceed even in infinitum, becauſe they might have been of the blood of, that is deſcended from, the firſt imaginary purchaſor.

Of this nature, are all the grants of fee-ſimple eſtates of this kingdom; for there is now in the law of England, no ſuch thing as a grant of a feudum novum, to be held ut novum; unleſs in the caſe of a fee-tail, and there this rule is ſtrictly obſerved, and none but the lineal deſcendants of the firſt donee (or purchaſor) are admitted; but every grant of lands in fee-ſimple, is with us a feudum novum, to be held ut antiquum, as a feud whoſe antiquity is indefinite: and therefore the collateral kindred of the grantee, or deſcendants from any of his lineal anceſtors, by whom the lands might poſſibly have been purchaſed, are capable of being called to the inheritance.

Yet, when an eſtate hath really deſcended in a courſe of inheritance to the perſon laſt ſeiſed, the ſtrict rule of the Feudal law is ſtill obſerved; and none are admitted, but the heirs of thoſe through whom the inheritance hath paſſed; for all others have demonſtrably none of the blood of the firſt purchaſor in them, and therefore ſhall never ſucceed. As, if lands come to A. by deſcent from his mother; no relation of his father (as ſuch) ſhall ever be his heir of theſe lands; and, vice verſa, if they deſcended from his father, no relation of his mother (as ſuch) ſhall ever be admitted thereto; for his father's kindred have none of his mother's blood, nor have his mother's relations any ſhare of his father's blood. And ſo, if the eſtate deſcended from his father's father, the relations of his father's mother, ſhall for the ſame reaſon never be admitted, but only thoſe of his father's father.

Hence the expreſſion heir at law muſt always be uſed with reference to a ſpecific eſtate: for if an only child has taken by deſcent an eſtate from his father, and another from his mother; upon his death without iſſue, theſe eſtates will deſcend to two different perſons. So alſo, if his two grandfathers and two grandmothers, had each an eſtate, which deſcended to his father or mother, being only children, then theſe four eſtates will deſcend to four different heirs. 2 Comm. 222 in n.

This

This then is the great and general principle, upon which the law of collateral inheritances depends; that, upon failure of iſſue in the laſt proprietor, the eſtate ſhall deſcend to the blood of the firſt purchaſor; or, that it ſhall reſult back to the heirs of the body of that anceſtor, from whom it either really has, or is ſuppoſed by fiction of law to have originally deſcended: according to the rule laid down in the year books; M. 12 Ed. IV. 14: Fitzherbert. Abr. t. Diſcent. 2: Brook. Ibid. 38: and Hale H. C. L. 243; "That he who would have been heir to the father of the deceaſed, (and of courſe to the mother, or any other real or ſuppoſed purchaſing anceſtor) ſhall alſo be heir to the ſon;" a maxim that will hold univerſally, except in the caſe of a brother or ſiſter of the half blood, which exception (as we ſhall ſee hereafter) depends upon very ſpecial grounds.

VI. A SIXTH RULE, or canon is, that the collateral heir of the perſon laſt ſeiſed, muſt be his next collateral kinſman, of the whole blood.

Firſt, he muſt be his next collateral kinſman, either perſonally, or jure repreſentationis; which proximity is reckoned according to the canonical degrees of conſanguinity. Therefore, the brother being in the firſt degree, he and his deſcendants ſhall exclude the uncle and his iſſue, who is only in the ſecond. And herein conſiſts the true reaſon of the different methods of computing the degrees of conſanguinity, in the civil law on the one hand, and in the canon and common laws on the other.

When the paternal and maternal lines are both admitted to the inheritance, the moſt remote collateral kinſman in the paternal line, will inherit before the neareſt in the maternal. So that the expreſſion that the collateral heir, muſt be the next collateral kinſman, is qualified by the general rules of deſcent which prefer the male line to the female.

The deſignation of perſon, however, in ſeeking for the next of kin, will come to exactly the ſame end, (though the degrees will be differently numbered,) which-ever method of computation we ſuppoſe the law of England to uſe; ſince the right of repreſentation of the parent by the iſſue, is allowed to prevail in infinitum. Indeed it may be queſtioned how far the introduction of the computation of kindred, either by the canon or civil law, is of uſe in the Common-law doctrine of Deſcents.

This right of repreſentation being eſtabliſhed, the former part of the preſent rule amounts to this; that, on failure of iſſue of the perſon laſt ſeiſed, the inheritance ſhall deſcend to the other ſubſiſting iſſue of his next immediate anceſtor. Thus, if A. dies without iſſue, his eſtate ſhall deſcend to his eldeſt brother, (if more than one) or his repreſentatives; he being lineally deſcended from A's father his next immediate anceſtor. On failure of brethren, or ſiſters, and their iſſue, it ſhall deſcend to the uncle of A. the lineal deſcendant of his grandfather; and ſo on in infinitum.

The elder brother of the whole blood ſhall have land by deſcent, purchaſed by a middle or younger brother, if ſuch die without iſſue; for as to deſcents between brethren, the eldeſt is the moſt worthy of blood to inherit to them as well as to the father. Lit. 3: 3 Rep. 40.

Here it muſt be obſerved, that the lineal anceſtors though (according to the firſt rule) incapable themſelves of ſucceeding to the eſtate, becauſe it is ſuppoſed to have already paſſed them, are yet the common ſtocks from which the next ſucceſſor muſt ſpring.—But though the common anceſtor be thus the root of the inheritance, yet it is not neceſſary to name him in making out the pedigree or deſcent. For the deſcent between two brothers, is held to be an immediate deſcent; and therefore title may be made by one brother, or his repreſentatives, to or through another, without mentioning their common father. 1 Sid. 196: 1 Ventr. 423: 1 Lev. 60: 12 Mod. 619.

The law takes no notice of the diſability of the father in caſe of deſcent, but only of the immediate relation of brothers and ſiſters, as to their eſtates; ſo that the inability of the father doth not hinder the deſcent between them: for example; A man had iſſue a ſon and a daughter, and was attainted of treaſon, and died; the ſon purchaſed lands and died without iſſue; and it was adjudged that notwithſtanding the attainder of the father, the daughter ſhall take by deſcent from her brother, becauſe the deſcent between them was immediate, and the law doth not regard the diſability of the father. 4 Leon. 5. See 4 Rep. 31, 124.

Where a perſon ſeiſed of lands, hath iſſue two daughters, if one of them commits felony, after the father's death, both daughters being alive, a moiety ſhall deſcend to one daughter, and the other ſhall eſcheat. Co. Lit. 163.

But, ſecondly, the heir need not be the neareſt kinſman abſolutely, but only ſub modo; that is; he muſt be the neareſt kinſman of the whole blood; for, if there be a much nearer kinſman of the half blood, a diſtant kinſman of the whole ſhall be admitted, and the other entirely excluded: nay, the eſtate ſhall eſcheat to the lord, ſooner than the half blood ſhall inherit.

A kinſman of the whole blood is he that is derived, not only from the ſame anceſtor, but from the ſame couple of anceſtors. For, as every man's own blood is compounded of the bloods of his reſpective anceſtors, he is only properly of the whole or entire blood with another, who hath (ſo far as the diſtance of degrees will permit) all the ſame ingredients in the compoſition of his blood that the other hath. Thus the blood of A. being compoſed of thoſe of his father and his mother, therefore his brother being from both the ſame parents hath entirely the ſame blood with A; or in other words he is his brother of the whole blood. But if, after the death of A's. father, his mother had married a ſecond huſband, and had iſſue by him; the blood of this iſſue, being compounded of the blood of A.'s mother only, on the one part, but of that of the ſecond huſband, on the other part, it hath therefore only half the ſame ingredients with that of A. himſelf; ſo that ſuch iſſue is only A's brother of the half blood; and for that reaſon they ſhall never inherit to each other. So alſo if the father has two ſons, A. and B. by different venters, or wives; theſe two brethren are not brethren of the whole blood, and therefore ſhall never inherit to each other, but the eſtate ſhall rather eſcheat to the lord. Nay even if the father dies, and his lands deſcend to his eldeſt ſon A. who enters thereon, and dies ſeiſed without iſſue; ſtill B. ſhall not be heir to this eſtate, becauſe he is only of the half blood to A. the perſon laſt ſeiſed: but it ſhall deſcend to a ſiſter (if any) of the whole blood to A; for in ſuch caſes the maxim is, that poſſeſſio fratris facit ſororem eſſe hæredem, the ſeiſin or poſſeſſion of the brother makes the ſiſter to be heir. Yet, had A. died without entry then B.

might have inherited; not as heir to A. his half brother, but as heir to their common father, who was the perſon laſt actually ſeiſed. Hale H. C. L. 238.

Of ſome inheritances there cannot be a ſeiſin, or poſſeſſio fratris: as if the eldeſt brother dies before a preſentation to an advowſon, it will deſcend to the half brother, as heir to the perſon laſt ſeiſed, and not to the ſiſter of the whole blood. 1 Bur. Ec. 11. So of reverſions, remainders and executory deviſes, there can be no ſeiſin or poſſeſſio fratris; and if they are reſerved or granted to A. and his heirs, he who is heir to A. when they come into poſſeſſion is entitled to them by deſcent: that is the perſon who would have been heir to A. if A. had lived ſo long and had then died actually ſeiſed. 2 Woodd. 256: Fearne 448: 2 Wilſ. 29. and ſee further this title ad finem relative to the deſcent of reverſions, &c.—But though a poſſeſſio fratris cannot properly be of a remainder or reverſion expectant upon an eſtate of freehold, yet by the exertion of certain acts of ownerſhip, as by granting them over for term of life, a poſſeſſio fratris of them may be made. 8 Rep. 35 b: 1 Inſt. 15 a; 191 b.—There can be no poſſeſſio fratris of an eſtate-tail; nor of honorary dignities. Nor of the deſcent of the crown, and its poſſeſſions; nor of a mere right. See Watkins on Deſcents. c. 1. § 4. and the authorities there cited.

The total excluſion of the half blood from the inheritance being almoſt peculiar to our own law, is looked upon as a ſtrange hardſhip by ſuch as are unacquainted with the reaſons on which it is grounded. But theſe cenſures ariſe from a miſapprehenſion of the rule, which is not ſo much to be conſidered in the light of a rule of deſcent as of a rule of evidence; an auxiliary rule, to carry a former into execution.

To illuſtrate this rule by example. Let there be A. and B. brothers, by the ſame father and mother, and C. another ſon, of the ſame mother by a ſecond huſband. Now if A. dies ſeiſed of lands, but it is uncertain whether they deſcended to him from his father or mother; in this caſe his brother B. of the whole blood, is qualified to be his heir; for he is ſure to be in the line of deſcent from the firſt purchaſor, whether it were the line of the father or mother. But if B. ſhould die before A. without iſſue, C. the brother of the half blood is utterly incapable of being heir; for he cannot prove his deſcent from the firſt purchaſor, who is unknown; nor has he that fair probability which the law admits as preſumptive evidence, ſince he is to the full as likely not to be deſcended from the line of the firſt purchaſor, as to be deſcended: and therefore the inheritance ſhall go to the neareſt relation poſſeſſed of this preſumptive proof, the whole blood.

And, as this is the caſe in feudis antiquis, where there really did exiſt a purchaſing anceſtor, who is forgotten, it is alſo the caſe in feudis novis held ut antiquis, where the purchaſing anceſtor is merely ideal, and never exiſted but only in fiction of law. Of this nature are all grants of lands in fee-ſimple at this day, which are inheritable as if they deſcended from ſome uncertain indefinite anceſtor, and therefore, any of the collateral kindred of the real modern purchaſor, (and not his own offſpring only) may inherit them, provided they be of the whole blood; for all ſuch are, in judgment of law, likely enough to be derived from this indefinite anceſtor: but thoſe of the half blood are excluded, for want of the ſame probability. Nor ſhould this be thought hard, that a brother of the purchaſor, though only of the half blood, muſt thus be diſinherited, and a more remote relation of the whole blood admitted, merely upon a ſuppoſition and fiction of law; ſince it is only upon a like ſuppoſition and fiction, that brethren of purchaſors (whether of the whole or half blood) are entitled to inherit at all.

This rule as to the excluſion of the half blood, is certainly a very fine-ſpun and ſubtle nicety: but, conſidering the principles upon which our law is founded, it is not an injuſtice, nor always a hardſhip; ſince even the ſucceſſion of the whole blood was originally a beneficial indulgence, rather than a ſtrict right of collaterals: and though that indulgence is not extended to the demi-kindred, yet they are rarely abridged of any right which they could poſſibly have enjoyed before. See this Dict. title Tenures III. 5. The doctrine of the whole blood was calculated to ſupply the frequent impoſſibility of proving a deſcent from the firſt purchaſor; without ſome proof of which (according to our fundamental maxim) there can be no inheritance allowed of. And this purpoſe it anſwers, for the moſt part, effectually enough. It ſeems however that in ſome inſtances, the practice is carried farther than the principle upon which it goes will warrant. It is more eſpecially over-ſtrained, when a man has two ſons by different venters, and the eſtate on his death deſcends from him to the eldeſt, who enters, and dies without iſſue; in which caſe the younger ſon cannot inherit this eſtate, becauſe he is not of the whole blood to the laſt proprietor. This, it muſt be owned, carries a hardſhip with it, even upon feudal principles: for the rule was introduced only to ſupply the proof of a deſcent from the firſt purchaſor; but here, as this eſtate notoriouſly deſcended from the father, and as both the brothers confeſſedly ſprung from him, it is demonſtrable, that the half brother muſt be of the blood of the firſt purchaſor, who was either the father or ſome of the father's anceſtors.

It is moreover worthy of obſervation, that the Crown, (which is the higheſt inheritance in the nation) may deſcend to the half blood of the preceding ſovereign. Plowd. 245: Co. Litt. 15; ſo that it be the blood of the firſt monarch, purchaſor (or in the feudal language) conqueror, conquæſtor, of the reigning family. Thus it actually did deſcend from king Edward VI. to queen Mary, and from her to Queen Elizabeth, who were reſpectively of the half blood to each other. For, the royal pedigree being always a matter of ſufficient notoriety, there is no occaſion to call in the aid of this preſumptive rule of evidence, to render probable the deſcent from the royal ſtock, which was formerly king William the Norman, and is now (by Stat. 12 Will. III. c. 2,) the Princeſs Sophia of Hanover. Hence alſo it is, that in eſtates-tail, where the pedigree from the firſt donee muſt be ſtrictly proved, half blood is no impediment to the deſcent. Lit. § 14, 15; becauſe when the lineage is clearly made out, there is no need of this auxiliary proof. Alſo in titles of honour half blood is no impediment to the deſcent; but a title can only be tranſmitted to thoſe who are deſcended from the firſt perſon ennobled. 1 Inſt. 15. See this Dict. title Peers. How far it might be deſireable to amend the law of deſcents in one or two inſtances, and ordain that the half blood might always inherit, where the eſtate notoriouſly deſcended from it's own proper anceſtor, and, in caſes of new-purchaſed lands or uncertain deſcents, ſhould never be excluded by the whole blood in a remoter degree; or how far a private inconvenience ſhould be ſtill ſubmitted to, rather than a long eſtabliſhed rule ſhould be ſhaken, is for the Legiſlature to determine. See further 2 Comm. 233. in n.

The rule then, together with it's illuſtration, amounts to this; that in order to keep the eſtate of A. as nearly as poſſible in the line of his purchaſing anceſtor, it muſt deſcend to the iſſue of the neareſt couple of anceſtors that have left deſcendants behind them; becauſe the deſcendants of one anceſtor only are not ſo likely to be in the line of that purchaſing anceſtor, as thoſe who are deſcended from both.

In order then to avoid the confuſion and uncertainty that might ariſe between the ſeveral ſtocks wherein the purchaſing anceſtor may be ſought for, another qualification is requiſite, beſides the proximity and entirety; which is that of dignity, or worthineſs, of blood. For,

VII. THE SEVENTH and laſt rule or canon is, that in collateral inheritances the male ſtocks ſhall be preferred to the female; (that is, kindred derived from the blood of the male anceſtors, however remote, ſhall be admitted before thoſe of the blood of the female, however near;) unleſs where the lands have, in fact deſcended from a female.

Thus the relations on the father's ſide are admitted in infinitum, before thoſe on the mother's ſide are admitted at all. Litt. § 4. And the relations of the father's father, before thoſe of the father's mother, and ſo on.—This rule ſeems to have been eſtabliſhed in order to effectuate and carry into execution the fifth rule, or principal canon of collateral inheritance, before laid down; that every heir muſt be of the blood of the firſt purchaſor.

That this was the true foundation of the preference of the agnati or male ſtocks, in our law, will farther appear, if we conſider, that, whenever the lands have notoriouſly deſcended to a man from his mother's ſide, this rule is totally reverſed; and no relation of his by the father's ſide, as ſuch, can ever be admitted to them: becauſe he cannot poſſibly be of the blood of the firſt purchaſor. And ſo, è converſo if the lands deſcended from the father's ſide, no relation of the mother, as ſuch, ſhall ever inherit. 1 Inſt. 14.—See Watkins on Deſcent, c. 5.

But it has been reſolved, that a fine and render of lands, claimed by a party, as heir at law ex parte materna, will alter the quality of the eſtate; ſo that it ſhall deſcend to the heir ex parte paterna. 6 Rep. 63: Carthew 141.

Alſo if a man ſeiſed of land, as heir of the part of his mother, make a feoffment and take back an eſtate to him and his heirs; this, as a purchaſe, alters the deſcent, and if he die without iſſue, the heir of the part of the father ſhall inherit it. Co. Lit. 12.

The ſhort Reſult of all the above rules and explanations is, that when a man (A.) dies ſeiſed of an eſtate in fee-ſimple, it ſhall,—1. In the firſt place, deſcend to his eldeſt ſon and heir or his iſſue.—2. If his line be extinct, then to the ſecond or other ſons of A. reſpectively, in order of birth; or their iſſue; the iſſue of an elder brother being ſtill preferred to the perſon of a younger, that is to ſay, the children of the ſecond ſon, to the 3d ſon himſelf, and ſo on.—3. In default of ſons, or their iſſue, then to all the daughters of A. together, or their iſſue. See ante III. IV.—4. On failure of deſcendants from A. himſelf, then to the iſſue of his father and mother; the eldeſt brother of the whole blood, or his iſſue; or on failure of them, the other whole brothers of A. reſpectively, in order of birth, or their iſſue; or on failure of them, the ſiſters of A. of the whole blood reſpectively, or their iſſue.—5. On failure of deſcendants from the father and mother of A. then to the iſſue of his grand-father and grand-mother by the father's ſide; ſtill tracing the line of relationſhip on the father's ſide, till it entirely fails; when and not before, recourſe muſt be had to the relations of his mother in the ſame regular ſucceſſive order as in the paternal line. See more fully and accurately, 2 Comm. c. 14, p. 200.—240; on the whole of this ſubject, which in ſome points ſeems at firſt inextricably intricate; but will ſoon unfold itſelf to the reſearches of the diligent ſtudent; who to underſtand many parts of it ſhould be intimately acquainted with the law of Tenures. See that title in this Dictionary.

As to the DESCENT of REVERSIONS and REMAINDERS expectant upon eſtates of freehold, ſee Watkins's Eſſay on the Law of Deſcents (1793); from whence ſome curſory obſervations have already been adopted, and the following extract from which, on this part of the ſubject, may be deſerving attention.

"The principles which apply to the deſcent of an eſtate in poſſeſſion do not apply to the deſcent of an eſtate in remainder or reverſion, expectant on an eſtate of freehold, but they apply when the particular eſtate is only for years: a tenant for years being conſidered merely as the bailiff of the freeholder and to hold the poſſeſſion for him. 1 Inſt. 239. b. n. 2.

"When a reverſion or remainder, expectant upon an eſtate of freehold, continues in a courſe of deſcent, without certain acts of ownerſhip exerted, ſuch reverſion, &c. ſtill continually devolves, on the death of each particular heir, to the perſon who can then make himſelf heir to the donor or purchaſor; without any regard to the very heir of the precedent perſon who ſucceeded to it by deſcent; till when the particular eſtate is determined, it ultimately veſts in poſſeſſion in him, who at ſuch determination, is the right heir of ſuch donor, purchaſor or original remainder-man. For as there was no intermediate perſon actually ſeiſed of ſuch reverſion or remainder, no one could be the mean of turning its deſcent, and becoming a new ſtock or terminus; but ſuch ſtock muſt yet be the donor, purchaſor or remainder-man, and muſt ſo continue, (if no alienation be made) till ſuch eſtate ſhall become veſted in poſſeſſion; and conſequently, it will be abſolutely neceſſary to prove, on every devolution, a deſcent, not from the immediate predeceſſor who took by deſcent, (for with him, as ſuch, in this caſe, there is nothing to do) but from the donor, purchaſor, or original remainder-man. Whoever, therefore, can make himſelf heir to ſuch donor, &c. will be entitled to the inheritance in reverſion or remainder, though expectant; but yet not ſo as to be capable of tranſmitting it to his own right heirs, (as ſuch) except by granting it over; till it becomes veſted in poſſeſſion, by the determination of the particular eſtate which ſupported it, or whereon it was expectant, (when it would ceaſe to be a reverſion or remainder,) in him who ſhould be, at that time, the right heir of the donor, &c. which perſon would then become the ſtock of deſcent, and him from whom the future pedigree muſt run on his obtaining an actual ſeiſin of it. "So

"So also with respect to contingencies and executory devises—Thus on a devise to G. in fee; but if he happened to die under the age of twenty one years, leaving no issue, then to P. in fee; after the decease of the testator, P. died in the life-time of G. who afterwards died under the age of twenty-one and without issue; it was held that the lands vested in P's heir at law, upon the happening of the contingency, (viz. on the death of G. under age, and without issue,) but that the interest, while it was contingent, did not so attach in G. who was heir at law to P. on his decease, as to carry it, on his death, to his heir at law, who was not heir at law to P. but that it vested in that person who was heir at law to P. (the first purchasor) at the time of the contingency happening. See 2 Wilf. 29. Goodright and Searle; and cited also in *Fearne on Con. DESCRIPTION, descriptio.] In deeds and grants there must be a certain description of the lands granted, the places where the lands lie, and of the persons to whom granted, &c. to make them good. But wills are more favoured than grants as to those descriptions: and a wrong description of the person will not make a devise void, if there be otherwise a sufficient certainty what person was intended by the testator. 1 Nelf. Abr. 647.

Where a first description of land, &c. is false, though the second is true, a deed will be void: contra, if the first be true, and the second false. See 3 Rep. 2, 3. 8. 10. 28. 33, 34, &c. See titles Deed; Will.

DETINET, See Debet & Detinet.

DETINUE, detinendo.] In the Common law is like actio depositi in the Civil law; and is a writ which lies against him, who having goods or chattels delivered to keep, refuseth to re-deliver them. In this action of detinue it is necessary to ascertain the thing detained in such a manner as that it may be specifically known and recovered. Therefore it cannot be brought for money, corn or the like, for that cannot be known from other money or corn; unless it be in a bag or a sack, for then it may be distinguishably marked. In order therefore to ground an action of detinue, which is only for the detaining, these points are necessary; See 1 Inst. 286; 1. That the defendant came lawfully into possession of the goods, as either by delivery to him or by finding them—2. That the plaintiff have a property.—3. That the goods themselves be of some value.—4. That they be ascertained in point of identity. Upon this the jury, if they find for the plaintiff, assess the several values of the several parcels detained, and also damages for the detention. And the judgment is conditional; that the plaintiff recover the said goods; or, if they cannot be had, their respective values, and also the damages for detaining them. Co. Ent. 170: Cro. Jac. 681.

There is one disadvantage which attends this action, viz. that the defendant is herein permitted to wage his law; (that is, to exculpate himself by oath; See title Wager of Law;) and thereby defeat the plaintiff of his remedy; which privilege in this case is grounded on the confidence originally reposed in the bailee by the bailor, in the borrower by the lender, or the like: from whence arose a strong presumptive evidence, that in the plaintiff's own opinion, the defendant was worthy of credit. See 1 Inst. 295.

For this and other reasons the action of detinue is now much disused, and has given place to the action of Trover. See title Trover; and also title Bailment.

The following cases on the subject of Detinue, may prove matter of use as well as of curiosity, and see further Viner, title Detinue, and Bull. N. P. 49—51.

Detinue may be brought for a piece of gold, of the price of 21 s. though not for 21 s. in money; for here is a demand of a certain particular piece. Bull. N. P. 50.

If a man receiving money from a banker, put part thereof into his bag, and while he is telling the rest, the bag is stolen; no action of detinue, &c. lies; because by putting up the money, he had appropriated it to his own use. Comb. 475. A man lends a sum of money to another, detinue lies not for it, but debt: but if A. bargains and sells goods to B. upon condition to be void, if A. pays B. a certain sum of money at a day; now if A. pays the money, he may have detinue against B. for the goods, though they came not to the hands of B. by bailment, but by bargain and sale. Cro. Eliz. 867: 2 Danv. 510.

If a man delivers goods to A, to deliver to B. B. may have detinue, for the property is in him: and where he delivers them to B. and after grants them to D. he shall not have detinue after the grant, but the grantee shall have it. Yelv. 241: 1 Bulst. 69. When goods are delivered to one, and he delivers them over to another, action of detinue may be had against the second person, and if he delivers them to one that has a right thereto, yet it is said he is chargeable: also if a person to whom a thing is delivered dieth, detinue lieth against his executors, &c. or against any person to whom a thing comes. 2 Danv. Abr. 511.

A man may have a general detinue against another that finds his goods: though if I deliver any thing to A. to re-deliver, and he loses it, if B. finds it and delivers it to C. who has a right to the same, he is not chargeable to me in detinue, because he is not privy to my delivery. 7 H. 6. 22: 9 H. 6. 58.

In actions of detinue, the thing must be once in the possession of the defendant; which possession is not to be altered by act of law, as seisure, &c. And the nature of the thing must continue, without alteration, to intitle one to this action. F. N. B. 138. If I find goods, and before fore the owner brings his action, I ſell them; or they are recovered out of my hands upon an execution, or outlawry againſt the owner, &c. he cannot have detinue againſt me. 12 E. 4. 8: 27 H. 8. 13. But action of detinue will lie againſt him that finds goods, if they are waſted by wilful negligence. Dr. & Stud. 129.

A man buys cloth or other things of another, on a good and perfect contract; if the ſeller keeps the things bought, detinue lieth. Dyer 30, 203. Where one takes my goods into his cuſtody to keep them for me, and refuſes to reſtore them; although he have nothing for the keeping of them, this action will lie. 4 Rep. 84: 29 Aſſ. pl. 28. If I deliver to one a trunk that is locked, with things in it, and keep the key myſelf, and ſomething be taken out of it, writ of detinue lieth not for this: but if the trunk, and all that is in it be taken away, there it lies. 11 Rep. 89: 4 E. 3.

This action will not lie, where a man delivers goods to me, and I bid him take them again, if he refuſes to do it: or where one takes my goods or cattle by wrong as a treſpaſſer; or by way of diſtreſs for rent or as damage-feaſant, &c. Nor for a horſe ſick, when it is taken or lent; if he dies of that ſickneſs. Bro. Detin. 242: 43 E. 3. 21: 21 E. 4. And if it be a ring that is delivered to another, and he breaks it, it is doubted whether action of detinue may lie; becauſe the thing is altered, and cannot be returned as it was: but action on the caſe lieth. And although, where goods are found, and ſold, &c. detinue lies not: yet action upon the caſe of trover and converſion may be brought. 12 E. 4. 8: 18 E. 4. 22.

DETINUE OF CHARTERS. A man may have detinue for deeds and charters concerning land; but if they concern the freehold, it muſt be in C. B. and no other court. Action of detinue lies for charters which make the title of lands; and the heir may have a detinue of charters, although he hath not the land: if my father be diſſeiſed, and dieth, I ſhall have detinue for the charters, notwithſtanding I have not the land; but the executors ſhall not have the action for them. New Nat. Br. 308. If a man keep my charters from me, concerning the inheritance of my land, and I know the certainty of them, and the land; or if they be in a cheſt locked, &c. and I know not their certainty, I may recover them by this writ: ſo where lands are given to me and J. S. and my heirs, and he dies, if another gets the deeds, and if tenant in tail give away the deed of entail, and then die, his iſſue may bring a writ of detinue of charters. Co. Lit. 286: 1 Rep. 2: F. N. B. 138. But if the tenant in fee-ſimple do give away his deeds of the land, his heir may not have this action: and in caſe a woman great with child by her deceaſed huſband keeps the charters from his daughter and heir that concern the land, during the time ſhe is with child, this writ will not lie againſt her. 41 E. 3. 11.

Detinue was brought for a deed, and the plaintiff had a verdict, that the defendant detained the deed, and the jury gave 20*l.* damages, but did not find the value of the deed; and then there iſſued out a diſtringas to deliver the deed, or the value, and afterwards a writ of inquiry was awarded for the value: whereupon the jury found a different value from what the firſt verdict found; and it was adjudged good. Raym. 124: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 649. In detinue of charters, if the iſſue be upon the detinue, and it is found that the defendant hath burnt the charters, the judgment ſhall not be to recover the charters, which it appears cannot be had; but it is ſaid it ſhall be for the plaintiff to recover the land in damages. 2 Rol. Abr. 101: 2 Danv. Abr. 511. For detaining of deeds and charters concerning the inheritance of lands, or an indenture of leaſe, the defendant ſhall not wage his law, as he may in a common action of detinue. 1 Inſt. 295.

DETINUE OF GOODS IN FRANK-MARRIAGE, Is on a divorce between a man and his wife; after which, the wife ſhall have this writ of detinue for the goods given with her in marriage. Mich. 35 E. 1: New Nat. Br. 308.

DEVADIATUS, Is where an offender is without ſureties or pledges. Domeſday.

DEVASTAVIT; OR DEVASTAVERUNT BONA TESTATORIS. A writ that lies againſt executors or adminiſtrators, for paying debts upon ſimple contract, before debts on bonds and ſpecialties, &c. for in this caſe they are liable to action, as if they had ſquandered away, or waſted the goods of the deceaſed, or converted them to their own uſe; and are compellable to pay ſuch debts by ſpecialty out of their own goods, to the value of what they ſo paid illegally. Dyer 232. But if an executor pays debts upon ſimple contract, before he hath any notice of bonds, it is no devaſtavit; and regularly this notice is by an action commenced againſt him, for the law doth not oblige him to take notice of it himſelf, nor of a judgment againſt his teſtator, becauſe he is not privy to acts done either by or againſt him. 1 Mod. 175: 1 Lev. 215.

Where an executor payeth legacies before debts, and hath not ſufficient to pay both, it is a devaſtavit. Alſo where an executor ſells the teſtator's goods at an undervalue, it is a devaſtavit; but this is underſtood where the ſale is fraudulent; for if more money could not be had, it is otherwiſe. Keilw. 59: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 649. Executors keeping the goods of the deceaſed in their hands, and not paying the teſtator's debts; or ſelling them, and not paying off debts, &c. or not obſerving the law which directs them in the management thereof; or doing any thing by negligence or fraud, whereby the eſtate of the deceaſed is miſemployed, are guilty of a devaſtavit, or waſte; and they ſhall be charged for ſo much de bonis propriis, as if for their own debt. 8 Rep. 133. But the fraud or negligence of one executor is not chargeable on the reſt, where there are ſeveral executors. 1 Rol. Abr. 929.

There are ſome caſes in the old books, in which it hath been held, if an executor waſtes the goods of the teſtator, and afterwards makes his executor, and dies, leaving aſſets, that an action of debt will not lie againſt the executor of the waſting executor, upon a ſuggeſtion of a devaſtavit or waſte by the firſt executor; becauſe it is a perſonal wrong which died with him. 3 Leon. 241. But in this caſe there is a difference between a lawful executor, and an executor de ſon tort; for as an executor de ſon tort poſſeſſes himſelf of the goods wrongfully, if he afterwards waſtes them, and dies, leaving aſſets, his executor ecutor shall be charged upon the suggestion of a devastavit in his testator, because he came wrongfully by the goods, and therefore the wrong shall not die with his person. 2 Lev. 133.—See title Executor, V. 1. And before the Stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 7, it was decreed in equity against the executor of a lawful executor, who had wasted the goods, and died, that such executor should be liable to make good to the creditors of the testator, so much as the first executor had wasted, and so far as he had assets of the said first executor. 1 Chanc. Rep. 257.

By the said Stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 7, it is enacted, That if an executor de son tort wastes the goods, and dies, his executors shall be liable in the same manner as their testator would have been, if he had been living. And it has been since adjudged, that a rightful executor, who wastes the goods of the testator, is in effect an executor de son tort for abusing his trust; 3 Mod. 113. And his executor or administrator is made liable to a devastavit, by Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24, which statute makes the Stat. 30 C. 2. c. 7, perpetual.

Debt lies against an executor in the debet and detinet, where there is a judgment against his testator, upon a suggestion only, that he had wasted the goods; and this is a more expeditious way than the old method of sci. fac. inquiry, which was issued to shew cause why the plaintiff should not have execution against the executor de bonis propriis, and thereupon the sheriff returned a devastavit, &c. 1 Lev. 147: 1 Nelf. 653.

A husband is to be charged for waste done by his wife dum sola; but the husband is not chargeable after the death of a wife executrix, on suggestion of a devastavit in a declaration against him. Cro. Car. 603: Lutw. 672. And it has been adjudged, that a feme covert executrix cannot do any waste during the coverture; though for waste done by the husband she shall be charged, if she survive him; but then it must be on a judgment obtained against him, and not on a bare suggestion of a devastavit, &c. 2 Lev. 145. If an executor or administrator confesses judgment, or suffers it to go by default, he thereby admits assets, and is estopped to say the contrary in an action on such judgment suggesting a devastavit. 1 Wilf. 258.—See titles Debt; and further, particularly title Executor, VI. 2.

DEVENERUNT, A writ heretofore directed to the escheator on the death of the heir of the King's tenant under age and in custody, commanding the escheator that by the oaths of good and lawful men he inquire what lands and tenements by the death of the tenant came to the King. Dyer 360. This writ is now disused; but see Stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 11, for preventing frauds and abuses in his Majesty's Customs.

DEVEST, devestire.] Is opposite to invest. As to invest signifies to deliver the possession of any thing to another; so to devest signifieth to take it away. Feud. lib. 1. cap. 7.

DEVISE, from the Fr. deviser, to divide or sort into parcels.] A gift of lands, &c. by a last will and testament. The giver is called the devisor; and he to whom the lands are given, the devisee. A devise in writing is, in construction of law, no deed; but an instrument by which lands are conveyed.

To DEVISE, is to give by will.

The word was formerly, particularly applied to bequests of land; but is now generally used for the gift of any legacies whatever.

For the law relating to Devises, as well of real as personal estates, See fully this Dict. title Will. As to Executory Devises, See title Executory Devise, Estate, Limitation, Remainder.

DICKAR, OR DICKER OF LEATHER, Is a certain quantity, consisting of ten hides, by which leather is bought and sold. Vide Stat. 51 H. 3. st. 1. There are also dickers of iron, containing ten bars to the dicker. This word is thought to come from the Greek δικὰς, which signifies ten. Domesday.

DICTORES AND DICTUM. The one signifies an arbitrator; and the other the arbitrament. Malms. p. 348.

DICTUM DE KENELWORTH. An edict or award, between King Henry the Third and his Barons and others, who had been in arms against him: so called, because it was made at Kenelworth Castle in Warwickshire, anno 51 Hen. 3. It contained a composition of those who had forfeited their estates in that rebellion, which composition was five year's rent of the lands and estates forfeited.

DIEM CLAUSIT EXTREMUM, A writ which issued out of the court of Chancery to the escheator of the county, upon the death of any of the King's tenants in capite, to inquire by a jury of what lands he died seised, and of what value, and who was the next heir to him. This writ to be granted at the suit of the next heir, &c. for upon that, when the heir came of age, he was to sue livery of his lands out of the King's hands. F. N. B. 251.

DIES, See Day.

DIES DATUS, Is a day or time of respite given to the defendant in a suit by the court. Broke.—See Day.

DIES MARCHIÆ, Was the day of congress or meeting of the English and Scotch, appointed annually to be held on the marches or borders, to adjust all differences between them, and preserve the articles of peace. Tho. Walsingham, in Ric. 2. p. 307.

DIEU SON ACT, Are words often used in our old law: and it is a maxim in law, That the act of God, or inevitable inevitable accident, ſhall prejudice no man. Therefore, if a houſe be blown down by tempeſt, thunder or lightening, the leſſee or tenant for life or years, ſhall be excuſed in waſte: likewiſe he hath by the law a ſpecial intereſt to take timber, to build the houſe again for his habitation. 4 Rep. 63: 11 Rep. 82. So when the condition of a bond conſiſts of two parts in the disjunctive, and both are poſſible at the time of the obligation made, and afterwards one of them becomes impoſſible by the act of God, the obligor is not bound to perform the other part. 5 Rep. 22. And where a perſon is bound to appear in court, at a certain day, if before the day he dieth, the obligation is ſaved, &c. See particularly relative to this term, titles Bailment, Carrier.

DIGEST. The book of Pandects of the Civil law; which hath its name from its containing Legalia præcepta excellenter Digeſta. Du Cange.—See title Civil Law.

DIGNITY, dignitas.] Signifies honour and authority; reputation, &c. And dignity may be divided into ſuperior and inferior: as the titles of Duke, Earl, Baron, &c. are the higheſt names of dignity; and thoſe of Baronet, Knight, Serjeant at Law, &c. the loweſt. Nobility only can give ſo high a name of dignity, as to ſupply the want of a ſurname in legal proceedings: and as the omiſſion of a name of dignity may be pleaded in abatement of a writ, &c. ſo it may be where a peer, who has more than one name of dignity, is not named by the Moſt Noble. See title Abatement. No temporal dignity of any foreign nation can give a man a higher title here than that of Eſquire. 2 Inſt. 667.—See titles Addition; Deſcent; Peer.

DIGNITY ECCLESIASTICAL, dignitas eccleſiaſticalis.] Is defined by the Canoniſts to be adminiſtratio cum juriſdictione & poteſtate aliqua conjuncta; of which there are ſeveral examples in Duarenus, de Sacris Eccleſ. &c. lib. 2. c. 6. Dignitates eccleſiaſticæ, are mentioned in the Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 31 & 32. And of church dignities, Cambden in his Britannia, p. 161, reckons in England 544.

DIGNITARIES, dignitarii.] Thoſe who are advanced to any dignity eccleſiaſtical; as a Biſhop, Dean, Archdeacon, Prebendary, &c. But there are ſimple Prebendaries, without cure or juriſdiction, which are not dignitaries. 3 Inſt. 155.

DILAPIDATION, dilapidatio.] Is where an incumbent on a church living ſuffers the parſonage houſe or out-houſes to fall down, or be in decay for want of neceſſary reparation: or it is the pulling down or deſtroying any of the houſes or buildings, belonging to a ſpiritual living, or deſtroying of the woods, trees, &c. appertaining to the ſame; for it is ſaid to extend to the committing or ſuffering any wilful waſte, in or upon the inheritance of the church. Deggs's Parſ. Counſ. 89. It is the intereſt of the church in general to preſerve what belongs to it for the benefit of the ſucceſſors; and the old canons, and our own provincial conſtitutions require the clergy ſufficiently to repair the houſes belonging to their benefices; which, if they neglect or refuſe to do, the biſhop may ſequeſter the profits of the benefice for that purpoſe, &c. Right's Clerg. 143. And by the Canon law, dilapidations are made a debt, which is to be ſatisfied out of the profits of the church; but the Common law prefers debt on contracts, &c. before debt for dilapidations. Hern. 136.

The proſecution in theſe caſes may be brought either againſt the incumbent himſelf, or againſt his executors or adminiſtrators; and the executor or adminiſtrator of him in whoſe time it was done or ſuffered, muſt make amends to the ſucceſſor: and if the proceedings are againſt the incumbent, then they ought to be in the ſpiritual court. That court may alſo proceed againſt an executor, or the ſucceſſor may have an action of the caſe or debt at the Common law, in which action he ſhall recover damages in proportion to the dilapidations. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 656: Parſ. Counſ. 97, 98: Carter 224: 3 Lev. 268.

It is alſo ſaid to be good cauſe of deprivation, if the Biſhop, Parſon, Vicar, or other eccleſiaſtical perſon dilapidates the buildings, or cuts down timber growing on the patrimony of the church unleſs for neceſſary repairs. 1 Ro. Rep. 86: 11 Rep. 98: Godb. 259. And that a writ of prohibition will alſo lie againſt him in the courts of Common law. 3 Bulſt. 158: 1 Ro. Rep. 335.

By Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 10, if any Parſon, &c. ſhall make a gift of his goods and perſonal eſtate to defraud his ſucceſſor of his remedy for dilapidations, ſuch ſucceſſor may have the ſame remedy in the ſpiritual court againſt the perſon to whom ſuch gift is made, as he might have againſt the executors of the deceaſed parſon. And by Stat. 14 Eliz. c. 11, money recovered for dilapidations, is to be employed in the reparations of the ſame houſes ſuffered to be in decay, or the party recovering ſhall forfeit double the value of what he receives, to the King.

If a parſon ſuffers dilapidations, and afterwards takes another benefice, whereby his former benefice becomes void, his ſucceſſor may have an action againſt him, and declare that by the cuſtom of the kingdom he ought to pay him ſo much money as ſhall be ſufficient to repair the dilapidations. 3 Lev. 268. In caſe a parſon comes to a living, the buildings whereof are in decay by dilapidations, and his predeceſſor did not leave a ſufficient perſonal eſtate to repair them, ſo that he is without remedy, he is to have the defects ſurveyed by workmen, and atteſted under their hands in the preſence of witneſſes, which may be a means to ſecure him from the incumbrance brought upon him by the fault of his predeceſſor. Country Parſon's Companion 60.

DILATORY PLEAS, Are ſuch as are put in merely for delay; and there may be a demurrer to a dilatory plea, or iſſue may be taken on the fact, if falſe. If the plea is true in fact, and good in law, and is in abatement, the plaintiff muſt enter up judgment of caſſetur, before he commences a new ſuit. If the plea is adjudged ill, on demurrer, there muſt be a reſpondeas ouſter, and defendant muſt plead another plea. If iſſue in fact, is taken, and found by the jury, for plaintiff, in caſe, &c. they aſſeſs the damages. In debt, the judgment for plaintiff is final, &c. The truth of dilatory pleas is to be made out by affidavit of the fact, &c. by Stat. 4 An. c. 16. § 11.—See title Pleading.

DILLIGROUT, Pottage formerly made for the King's table, on his coronation day: and there was a tenure in ſerjeanty, by which lands were held of the King, by the ſervice of finding this pottage, at that ſolemnity. 39 H. 3.

DIMIDIETAS, Uſed in records for a moiety, or one half.

DIMINISHING the coin, See title Coin.

DIMINUTION, diminutio.] Is where the plaintiff or defendant, on an appeal to a ſuperior court, alledges that part of the record is omitted, and remains in the inferior court not certified; whereupon he prays that it may be certified by certiorari. Co. Ent. 232, 242. Of courſe diminution is to be certified on a writ of error; though if iſſue be joined upon the errors aſſigned, and the matter is entered upon record, which is made a conſilium, in this caſe there muſt be a rule of court granted for a certiorari to certify diminution. 1 Lil. Abr. 245. Diminution cannot be alledged of a thing which is fully certified; but in ſomething that is wanting, as want of an original, or a warrant of attorney, &c. 2 Lev. 206: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 658. And if on diminution alledged, and the plaintiff in error certify one original, &c. which is wrong; and the defendant in error certifies another that is true; the true one ſhall ſtand. Cro. Jac. 597: Cro. Car. 91.

After a writ of error brought, and the defendant hath pleaded in nullo eſt erratum, he cannot afterwards alledge diminution; becauſe by that plea he affirmeth or alloweth the record to be ſuch as is certified upon the writ of error. Godb. 266. But in ſome caſes, diminution hath been alledged, after in nullo eſt erratum pleaded, ex gratiâ curiæ; though not ex rigore juris. Palm. 85. And there is an inſtance, that the court in ſuch a caſe hath awarded a certiorari, to inform their conſcience of the truth of the record in C. B. where the defendant in error had not joined in nullo eſt erratum. 1 Nelſ. 658.—See further title Judgment, Reverſal of.

DIMISSORY LETTERS, literæ dimiſſoriæ.] Are ſuch as are uſed where a candidate for holy orders has a title in one dioceſe, and is to be ordained in another: the proper dioceſan ſends his letters dimiſſory directed to ſome other ordaining biſhop, giving leave that the bearer may be ordained, and have ſuch a cure within his diſtrict. Cowel.

DIOCESE, dioceſis.] Signifies the circuit of every biſhop's juriſdiction. For this realm hath two ſorts of diviſions; one into ſhires or counties, in reſpect to the temporal ſtate; and another into dioceſes, in regard to the eccleſiaſtical ſtate, of which we reckon twenty-one in England, and four in Wales. Co. Lit. 94. Alſo the kingdom is ſaid to be divided in its eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction into two provinces of Canterbury and York; each of which provinces is divided into dioceſes, and every dioceſe into archdeaconries, and archdeaconries into pariſhes, &c. Wood's Inſt. 2.

The bounds of Dioceſes are to be determined by witneſſes and records, but more particularly by the adminiſtration of divine offices. To which purpoſe, there are two rules in the Canon law: in one caſe, upon a diſpute between two biſhops upon this head, the direction is, that they proceed in the buſineſs, by ancient books or writings, and alſo by witneſſes, reputation, and other ſufficient proof: in the other caſe, where the queſtion was, by whom a church built upon the confines of two dioceſes ſhould be conſecrated, the rule laid down is, that it ſhould be conſecrated by the biſhop of that city, who, before it was founded, baptized the inhabitants, and adminiſtered to them other divine offices. Gibſ. 133.

The juriſdiction of the city is not included in the name of dioceſe, ſo ſaith the Canon law: and accordingly, in citations in general viſitations, directed to the clergy, it is ordered to cite the clergy of the city and dioceſe. Gibſ. 133.

A biſhop may perform divine offices, and uſe his epiſcopal habit, in the dioceſe of another, without leave; but may not perform therein any act of juriſdiction, without permiſſion of the other biſhop. Gibſ. 133.

A clergyman dwelling in one dioceſe, and beneficed in another, and being guilty of a crime, may, in different reſpects, be puniſhed in both; that is, the biſhop in whoſe dioceſe he dwells, may proſecute him; but the ſentence, ſo far as it affects his benefice, muſt be carried into execution by the other biſhop. Gibſ. 134.—See titles Biſhop; Clergy; Convocation.

DISABILITY, diſabilitas.] An incapacity in a man to inherit any lands, or take that benefit which otherwiſe he might have done; which may happen four ways; by the act of an anceſtor, or of the party himſelf, by the act of God, or of the law.

1. Diſability, by the act of the anceſtor, is where the anceſtor is attainted of treaſon, &c. which corrupts the blood of his children, ſo that they may not inherit his eſtate. See title Attainder, Deſcent.

2. Diſability, by the act of the party, is where a man binds himſelf by obligation, that upon ſurrender of a leaſe, he will grant a new eſtate to the leſſee; and afterwards he grants over the reverſion to another, which puts it out of his power to perform it.

3. Diſability, by the act of God, is where a perſon is of non-ſane memory, whereby he is incapable to make any grant, &c. So that if he paſſeth an eſtate out of him, it may after his death be made void; but it is a maxim in law, That a man of full age ſhall never be received to diſable his own perſon. See title Lunacy.

4. Diſability, by the act of the law, is where a man by the ſole act of the law, without any thing done by him, is rendered incapable of the benefit of the law; as an alien born, &c. Terms de Ley: 4 Rep. 123, 124: 5 Rep. 21: 8 Rep. 43.—See title Alien.

There are alſo other diſabilities, by the Common law, of ideocy, infancy, and coverture, as to grants, &c. And by ſtatute in many caſes: as papiſts are diſabled to make any preſentation to a church, &c. Officers not taking the oaths, are incapable to hold offices: Foreigners, though naturalized, to bear offices in the government, &c. See the proper titles. A perſon ſhall not be admitted to diſable himſelf to avoid an office of charge, &c. no more than a man ſhall be allowed to ſay that he was an ideot, &c. to avoid an act done by himſelf. Carth. 307. As to the diſability of Diſſenters, See that title, and title Nonconformiſts. As to pleas of diſability in the perſon of the plaintiff, See title Abatement.

DISADVOCARE, To deny, or not acknowledge a thing. Hengham Magna, cap. 4.

DISAGREEMENT, Will make a nullity of a thing, that had eſſence before: and diſagreement may be to certain acts, to make them void, &c. Co. Lit. 380.—See title Agreement.

DISALT, According to Littleton, is to diſable a perſon. Lit. title Diſcontinuance.

DISBOSCATIO, A turning wood ground into arable or paſture.

DISCARCARE,

DISCARCARE, From Dis, and Cargo.] To unlade a ſhip or veſſel by taking out the cargo or goods. Placit. Parl. 18 Ed. 1.—See Carcatus.

DISCEIT, See Deceit.

DISCENT, See Deſcent.

DISCHARGE, On writs and proceſs, &c. is where a man is confined by ſome legal writ or authority, and doth that which by law he is required to do; he is releaſed or diſcharged from the matter for which he was confined. If one be arreſted by a latitat out of B. R. and the plaintiff do not file a declaration againſt the defendant in priſon in two terms, he ſhall be diſcharged on common bail. 1 Lil. Abr. 470. Alſo where a defendant on arreſt is admitted to bail, if the bail bring in the principal before the return of the ſecond ſcire facias iſſued out againſt them, they ſhall be diſcharged. If an obligee diſcharges one joint obligor, where ſeveral are jointly bound, it diſcharges the others. March. 129. And a man may diſcharge a promiſe made to himſelf, &c. Cro. Jac. 483.—See titles Accord; Acquittal; Habeas Corpus; Satisfaction; Bond, &c.

DISCLAIMER, diſclamium, from Fr. clamer, with the privative dis.] Is a plea containing an expreſs denial, or renouncing of a thing; as if a tenant ſue a replevin, upon the diſtreſs of the lord, and the lord avows the taking, ſaying the tenant holds of him as of his lord, and that he diſtrained for the rent not paid, or ſervice not performed: now, if the tenant ſay he doth not hold of him, this is called a diſclaimer, and the lord proving the tenant to hold of him, on a writ of right ſur diſclaimer brought, the tenant ſhall loſe his land. Terms de Ley.

This Diſclaimer by a tenant, is conſidered as a civil crime, and puniſhed accordingly, by forfeiture of lands to the lord, on reaſons moſt apparently feodal. Finch. 270, 1. So if in any court of record, the particular tenant does any act which amounts to a virtual diſclaimer; if he claims any greater eſtate than was granted him at the firſt infeodation; or takes upon himſelf thoſe rights which belong only to tenants of a ſuperiour claſs. 1 Inſt. 252: if he affirms the reverſion to be in a ſtranger by accepting his fine, attorning as his tenant, colluſive pleading, and the like; ſuch behaviour amounts to a forfeiture of his particular eſtate. 1 Inſt. 253: 2 Comm. 275: 3 Comm. 233.

If a writ of præcipe be brought againſt two perſons for land, and one of them, the tenant, ſaith that he is not tenant, nor claims any thing in the lands; this is a diſclaimer as to him, and the other ſhall have the whole land. Terms de Ley. And when a tenant hath diſclaimed, upon action brought againſt him, he ſhall not have reſtitution on writ of error, &c. againſt his own act; but is barred of his right to the land diſclaimed. 8 Rep. 62. But a verbal diſclaimer ſhall not take place againſt a deed of lands: nor ſhall the diſclaimer of a wife during the coverture bar her entry on her lands. 3 Rep. 26.

Baron and Feme may diſclaim for the wife; though if the huſband hath nothing but in right of his wife, he cannot diſclaim. 2 Danv. Abr. 569. Such perſon as cannot loſe the thing perpetually in which he diſclaims, ſhall not be permitted to diſclaim: a biſhop, &c. may not diſclaim, for he cannot diveſt the right out of the church. Though in a quo warranto, at the ſuit of the King, againſt a biſhop or others for franchiſes and liberties, if the biſhop, &c. diſclaims them, this ſhall bind the ſucceſſors. Co. Lit. 102, 103. If a man be vouched becauſe of a reverſion on a leaſe made by himſelf, he cannot diſclaim: but an heir may diſclaim, being vouched upon a leaſe made by his anceſtor. 2 Danv. 569.

A perſon may diſclaim in the principal, and not in the incident; as he that is vouched becauſe of a reverſion, cannot diſclaim in the reverſion, ſaving the ſeigniory. 40 Ed. 3. 27. If the lord diſclaims his ſeigniory, in a court of record, it is extinct, and the tenant ſhall hold of the lord next paramount to the lord diſclaiming. Lit. ſect. 146.

It is ſaid not to be neceſſary, that the writ of right ſur diſclaimer ſhould be brought againſt the perſon that diſclaims; for if it be only againſt him that is found tenant of the land, though he be a ſtranger, it is not material. 2 Danv. 570. By plea of non-tenure, nothing is diſowned but the freehold, which may be good where the tenant hath the reverſion in fee, and not the freehold; but when ſuch tenant diſclaims, or pleads non-tenure and diſclaims, the demandant ſhall have the whole, as the whole is diſclaimed. Ibid.

By Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. ſ. 5, In all actions of treſpaſs quare clauſum fregit, wherein the defendant ſhall diſclaim any title to the land, and the treſpaſs be by negligence or involuntary, the defendant ſhall be admitted to plead a diſclaimer, and that the treſpaſs was by negligence or involuntary, and a tender of ſufficient amends before the action brought; and if the iſſue be found for the defendant, or the plaintiff be nonſuited, the plaintiff ſhall be barred from the ſaid action, and all ſuits concerning the ſame. See title Pleading.

Beſides theſe diſclaimers by tenants of lands, there are diſclaimers in divers other caſes: for there is a diſclaimer of blood, where a perſon denies himſelf to be of the blood or kindred of another, in his plea. F. N. B. 102. And a diſclaimer of goods, as well as lands; as if a man diſclaimeth goods, on arraignment of felony, when he ſhall loſe them, though he be cleared. Standf. P. C. 186. In Chancery, if a defendant by his anſwer renounces the having any intereſt in the thing in queſtion, this is likewiſe a diſclaimer. See title Chancery. And there is a deed of diſclaimer of executorſhip of a will, &c. where an executor refuſes, and throws up the ſame.

DISCONTINUANCE,

DISCONTINUATIO, from Fr. diſcontinuer, ceſſare.] An interruption or breaking off. An injury to real property, which conſiſts in the keeping out the true owner of an eſtate, by a tenant whoſe entry was at firſt lawful, but who wrongfully detains the poſſeſſion afterwards.

This happens when he who hath an eſtate-tail, maketh a larger eſtate of the land than by law he is entitled to do: in which caſe the eſtate is good, ſo far as his power extends who made it, but no further. Finch, L. 190. As if tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee-ſimple, or for the life of the feoffee, or in tail; all which are beyond his power legally to make, for that by the Common law extends no farther than to make a leaſe for his own life: in ſuch caſe, the entry of the feoffee is lawful during the life of the feoffor; but if he retains the poſſeſſion after the death of the feoffor, it is an injury which is termed a diſcontinuance; the ancient legal eſtate, which ought to have ſurvived to the heir in tail being gone; or at leaſt ſuſpended, and for a while diſcontinued. For, in this caſe, on the death of the alienors neither the heir in tail, nor they in remainder or reverſion expectant on the determination of the eſtate-tail, can enter on and poſſeſs the land ſo aliened: but muſt bring their writ, and ſeek to recover poſſeſſion by law. 3 Comm. 172: 1 Inſt. 325: F. N. B. 191, 4.

In the caſe of a Diſſeiſin, (ſee that title) while the poſſeſſion remains in the diſſeiſor, it is a mere naked poſſeſſion unſupported by any right; and the diſſeiſee may reſtore his own poſſeſſion, and put a total end to the poſſeſſion of the diſſeiſor by an entry on the land, without any previous action: but if the diſſeiſor dies, his heir comes to the poſſeſſion of the eſtate by a lawful title: it is the ſame if the diſſeiſor aliens; the alienee comes in by a lawful title. By reaſon of this lawful title, the heir in the firſt inſtance, and the alienee in the ſecond, acquires a preſumptive right of poſſeſſion, which is ſo far good, that even the perſon diſſeiſed loſes by it his right to recover the poſſeſſion by entry; and can only recover it by an action at law. When the right of entry is thus loſt, and the party can only recover by action, the poſſeſſion is ſaid to be diſcontinued. This is the general import of the word diſcontinuance; but in its uſual acceptation it ſignifies the effect of alienations made by huſbands ſeiſed in right of their wives; by eccleſiaſticks ſeiſed in right of their church; or by tenants in tail; thoſe being the three inſtances adduced by Littleton of Diſcontinuance. Thus before the Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20, the alienation of a woman ſeiſed of an eſtate in dower, or of any eſtate of the gift of her huſband, or of any of his anceſtors, was ſaid to be a diſcontinuance: and before the Stats. 32 H. 8. c. 28: 14 Eliz. c. 8, recoveries ſuffered by tenants for life, tenants by the curteſy, or tenants in tail after poſſibility of iſſue extinct, or even by the feoffee of tenant for years, worked a diſcontinuance. See 1 Rep. 14.

It is to be obſerved, that there is a material difference between the ſituation or title of the alienee of any perſon, whoſe alienation makes a diſcontinuance, and the ſituation or title of the heir or alienee of a diſſeiſor; for the heir and alienee of a diſſeiſor immediately claim under a perſon coming in by a wrongful title, and their eſtates though not defeaſible by entry, are immediately defeaſible by action. But the alienee of every perſon, whoſe alienation is ſaid to be a diſcontinuance, [or rather whoſe alienation cauſes a diſcontinuance,] claims by a perſon having a lawful eſtate; and the eſtate of the alienee is unimpeachable during the life of the alienor. It ſhould alſo be obſerved, that a diſcontinuance extends to thoſe caſes only, where a perſon is diſpoſſeſſed of an eſtate of freehold, and where though he has loſt his right of entry, he can ſtill recover the poſſeſſion by action. The peculiar import of the word Diſcontinuance, where applied to the caſes mentioned by Littleton, is thus ſhortly, but forcibly expreſſed by Houard, in his Ancient Laws of the French—"An interruption of the right, which one has on an eſtate, by the ſale which another, charged to preſerve that right, has made of it."—See 1 Inſt. 325 a. And the long and learned note there on the doctrine of Diſcontinuance at large.

By the Common law, the alienation of an huſband who was ſeiſed in right of his wife, worked a diſcontinuance of the wife's eſtate: till the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28, provided, that no act by the huſband alone ſhould work a diſcontinuance of, or prejudice the inheritance or freehold of the wife: but that after his death, ſhe or her heirs may enter on the lands in queſtion. Formerly alſo, if an alienation was made by a ſole Corporation, as a Biſhop or Dean, without conſent of the Chapter, this was a diſcontinuance. F. N. B. 194. But this is now quite antiquated by the diſabling Stats. 1 Eliz. c. 19: 13 Eliz. c. 10; which declare all ſuch alienations abſolutely void ab initio; and therefore at preſent no diſcontinuance can be thereby occaſioned. 3 Comm. 172.

Having ſaid thus much on the general nature of Diſcontinuance, a title which though of conſiderable extent in the old law, is now very much abridged by ſtatute, the following ſelection on the ſubject may be ſufficient in this place: referring the enquiring ſtudent to Com. Dig. title Diſcontinuance, and the other abridgements; for further information when neceſſary.

A Diſcontinuance taketh away an entry only: and to every diſcontinuance it is neceſſary there ſhould be a deveſting or diſplacing of the eſtate, and turning the ſame to a right; for if it be not turned to a right, they that have the eſtate cannot be driven to an action. Co. Lit. 327. And an eſtate-tail cannot be diſcontinued, but where he that makes the diſcontinuance, was once ſeiſed by force of the intail, where the eſtate-tail is executed; unleſs by reaſon of a warranty. Lit. Sect. 637, 641. Alſo if tenant in tail levies a fine, &c. this is no diſcontinuance, till the fine is executed; becauſe if he dies before execution, the iſſue may enter. Co. Lit. 33: 2 Danv. Abr. 572.

A Diſcontinuance may be five ways, viz. by feoffment, fine, recovery, releaſe and confirmation with warranty. 1 Rep. 44. A grant without livery, or a grant in fee without warranty, are no diſcontinuances: an exchange will not make a diſcontinuance; as if tenant in tail exchanges land with another, that is not any diſcontinuance, by reaſon no livery is requiſite thereon. 2 Danv. 57. It is the ſame of a bargain and ſale, &c. And an alteration of ſuch things as lie in grant, and not in livery, works no diſcontinuance; for ſuch grant does no wrong either to the iſſue in tail, or him in reverſion or remainder, becauſe nothing paſſeth but during the life of tenant in tail, which is lawful; and every diſcontinuance worketh a wrong. Co. Lit. 332.

If tenant in tail of a copyhold eſtate, ſurrenders to another in fee, this makes not any diſcontinuance, (except there be a cuſtom for it) but the heir in tail may enter; though this hath been a great queſtion. 1 Leon. 95; 2 Danv. 571. If there be tenant for life, remainder in tail, and remainder in tail, &c. And tenant for life, and he in the firſt remainder in tail levy a fine, this is no diſcontinuance of either of the remainders: 1 Rep. 76. But if there be tenant in tail, remainder in tail, &c. and tenant in tail enfeoffs him in reverſion in fee: or where there is tenant for life, remainder in tail, reverſion in fee, and tenant for life enfeoffs the reverſioner; theſe are diſcontinuances, becauſe there is a mean or immediate eſtate. 1 Rep. 140: Co. Lit. 335: 3 Danv. 575.

If there be tenant in tail, remainder to his right heirs, and he makes feoffment in fee, this is a diſcontinuance; though ſuch tenant that made the feoffment, hath the fee in him. 2 Danv. 572. A man is tenant for life, the remainder in tail, remainder in fee, and the tenant for life makes a feoffment to him in remainder in fee; this is ſuch a diſcontinuance of the eſtate-tail, as produceth a forfeiture. 3 Rep. 59. If a tenant in tail be diſſeiſed, and after, after releaſe with warranty to the diſſeiſor, it will be a diſcontinuance: ſo if he releaſe or confirm to tenant for life. Lit. Sect. 135; 1 Rep. 44. And if, where there is a tenant for life, and remainder in tail, the tenant for life levies a fine to his own uſe; and after tenant for life and he in remainder join in a feoffment by letter of attorney, this is a diſcontinuance of the eſtate-tail and the fee. Dyer 327.

If tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee upon condition, and the condition is broken, the iſſue may enter notwithſtanding this diſcontinuance. Lit. 632. Tenant in tail grants all his eſtate to another, though without livery and ſeiſin; and if that other perſon make a feoffment in fee, it will not be a diſcontinuance to take away the entry of him in reverſion or remainder. Lit. 145: 1 Rep. 46: 10 Rep. 97. A leaſe is made for life, remainder in tail; and he in remainder in tail diſſeiſes the tenant for life, and makes a feoffment in fee, and dies without iſſue, and then tenant for life dieth; this is no diſcontinuance to him in reverſion. Lit. 146: 1 Brown. 36. And if tenant in tail of a rent, common, advowſon, or the like, grant it in fee, it is not a diſcontinuance: nor where ſuch tenant granteth any thing out of land, &c. Lit. 138: Finch's Law 193.

Where a tenant in tail of a manor makes a leaſe for life, not warranted by Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 28, of part of the demeſnes, this is a diſcontinuance of this parcel; and it is ſaid makes it no parcel of the manor. 2 Rol. Abr. 58.

There can be no diſcontinuance by tenant in tail of the gift of the Crown, Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 20. Nor by tenant in tail of fee-farm rents, to bar the remainder veſted by the ſtatute; Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 24. ſ. 6. And ſome diſcontinuances at Common law are now made bars as to the iſſue in tail; though they ſtill remain diſcontinuances in ſome caſes, to him in remainder, &c. ſuch as fines, with proclamations by Stats. 4 H. 7. cap. 24: 32 H. 8. cap. 36. If the huſband levy a fine with proclamations, and dieth, the wife muſt enter, or avoid the eſtate of the conuſee within five years, or ſhe is barred for ever, by the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24. For the Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 28, doth help the diſcontinuance, but not the bar. Co. Lit. 326. Huſband and wife tenant in ſpecial tail, the huſband alone levied a fine to his own uſe, and afterwards he deviſed the land to his wife for life, the remainder over, rendering rent, &c. The huſband dies, the wife enters and pays the rent, and dies: in this caſe it was adjudged, that the fine had barred the iſſue in tail, but not the wife. Dyer 351. The entry of the wife in this caſe was a diſagreement to the eſtate of inheritance, and an agreement to the eſtate for life: but if the wife had not waived the inheritance, the eſtate tail as to the wife had remained. 9 Rep. 135.

If lands be given to the huſband and wife, and to the heirs of their two bodies, and the huſband maketh a feoffment in fee, and dieth; the wife is helped by Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28; and ſo is the iſſue of both their bodies 1 Inſt. 326. The huſband is tenant in tail, the remainder to the wife in tail, the huſband makes a feoffment in fee; by this, the huſband, by the Common law, did not only diſcontinue his own eſtate tail, but his wife's remainder: but by Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 28, after the death of the huſband without iſſue, the wife may enter by the ſaid act. Though if the huſband hath iſſue, and maketh a feoffment in fee of his wife's land, and his wife dieth; the heir of the wife ſhall not enter during the huſband's life, neither by the Common law nor by the ſtatute. 1 Inſt. 326.

A Diſcontinuance may be defeated, where the eſtate that worked it is defeated: as if a huſband make a feoffment of the wife's land upon condition, and after his death, his heir enters on the feoffee for the condition broken; now the diſcontinuance is defeated, and the feme may enter upon the heir, Co. Lit. 336.

DISCONTINUANCE OF PLEA, Is where divers things ſhould be pleaded to, and ſome are omitted; this is a diſcontinuance. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 660, 661. If a defendant's plea begin with an anſwer to part, and anſwers no more, it is a diſcontinuance: and the plaintiff may take judgment by nil dicit, for what is not anſwered: but if the plaintiff plead over, the whole action is diſcontinued. 1 Salk. 139. Debt upon bond of 500*l.* the defendant as to 225*l.* part of it, pleads payment, &c. And upon demurrer to this plea, it was adjudged that there being no anſwer to the reſidue, it is a diſcontinuance as to that, for which the plaintiff ought to take judgment by nil dicit. 1 Salk. 180. Where no anſwer is given to one part, if the plaintiff pleads thereto, he cannot have judgment according to his declaration; for which reaſon it may be a diſcontinuance of the whole. 1 Nelſ. 660. But this is helped after verdict by ſtat. 32 H. 8. c. 30. See titles Amendment; Pleading.

DISCONTINUANCE OF PROCESS. This Diſcontinuance is ſomewhat ſimilar to a nonſuit; for when a plaintiff leaves a chaſm in the proceedings of his cauſe, as by not continuing the proceſs regularly from day to day, and time to time as he ought to do, the ſuit is diſcontinued; and the defendant is no longer bound to attend; but the plaintiff muſt begin again by ſuing out a new original, uſually paying coſts to his antagoniſt. Antiently by the demiſe of the King all ſuits depending in his courts were at once diſcontinued; but to prevent the expence as well as delay attending this rule of law the Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 7, enacts that no action ſhall be diſcontinued by ſuch death of the King. The continuance of the ſuit by improper proceſs, or by giving the party an illegal day, is properly a mis-continuance.

Where an action is long depending, and continued from one term to another, the continuances muſt be all entered, otherwiſe there will be a diſcontinuance; whereupon a writ of error may be brought, &c. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 660. If the plaintiff in a ſuit doth nothing, it is a diſcontinuance, and he muſt begin his ſuit again: and where it is too late to amend a declaration, &c. or the plaintiff is adviſed to proſecute in another court, he is to diſcontinue his ſuit, and proceed de novo. But a diſcontinuance of an action is not perfect till it is entered on the roll, when it is of record. Cro. Car. 236.

The plaintiff cannot diſcontinue his action after a demurrer joined, and entered; or after a verdict, or a writ of inquiry, without leave of the court. Cro. Jac. 35: 1 Lill. Abr. 473. In actions of debt or covenant, after a demurrer joined, the court will give leave to diſcontinue, if there be an apparent cauſe, as if the plaintiff through his own negligence is in danger of loſing his debt: but if the demurrer be argued, then he ſhall not have leave to diſcontinue; nor where he brings another action for the ſame cauſe, and this is pleaded in abatement of the firſt action. Sid. 84.

It has been ruled, upon a motion to diſcontinue, that the court may give leave after a ſpecial verdict; which is not compleat and final; but never after a general verdict. 1 Salk. 178. See Hardw. 200, 1. So after enquiry executed and returned, Carth. 81.

After iſſue and a verdict plaintiff cannot diſcontinue without conſent of defendant, for if plaintiff will not enter up judgment defendant may. Salk. 178.—After demurrer argued and allowed, diſcontinuance may be allowed on payment of coſts. Sty. 76, 116: 3 Lev. 440.

And where a man hath a juſt cauſe of action, for a matter of any conſequence, and unadviſedly demurs to a plain bar, &c. and defendant joins in demurrer, and it is argued, and the court are of opinion the plea is good in law, tho' it may be falſe in fact, the court will, even after giving their opinions, but before judgment given, on motion, permit the plaintiff to withdraw his demurrer, on payment of coſts, and take iſſue.

The plaintiff may if he ſees occaſion diſcontinue before or after declaration delivered by a ſide bar rule on payment of coſts N. on R. Mich. 10 Geo. 2. But in replevin the avowant cannot have ſuch rule.

An appeal may as well be diſcontinued by the defect of the proceſs or proceeding in it, as it may be by the inſufficiency of the original writ, &c. For by ſuch defect, the matter depending is as it were out of court. 1 Lill. 473. A diſcontinuance or miſcontinuance, at common law reverſes a judgment given by default; and diſcontinuance upon a demurrer is error; but a miſcontinuance after appearance is not ſo. 8 Rep. 150: 46 Ed. 3. 30.

Diſcontinuance of proceſs is helped at Common law by appearance: and by Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 30, All diſcontinuances, miſcontinuances and negligences therein, of plaintiff or defendant, are cured after verdict. See tit. Amendment.

DISCOVERT, The law term for a woman unmarried or widow, one not within the bonds of matrimony. Law Fr. Dict.

DISCOVERY, The act of revealing or diſcloſing any matter by a defendant in his anſwer to a bill filed againſt him in a court of equity. See title Chancery.

To adminiſter to the ends of juſtice, without pronouncing a judgment which may affect any rights, the Courts of equity in many caſes compel a diſcovery. This juriſdiction is exerciſed to aſſiſt the adminiſtration of juſtice, in the proſecution or defence of ſome other ſuit, either in the Court of Equity itſelf or in ſome other court: and a diſcovery has been compelled to aid the juriſdiction of a foreign court. But if a bill is brought to aid, by a diſcovery, the proſecution or defence of any proceeding not merely civil, in any other court, as an indictment or information, a Court of Equity will not exerciſe its juriſdiction to compel a diſcovery; and the defendant may demur. 2 Vez. 398. And in the caſe of ſuits merely civil in a Court of ordinary juriſdiction, if that Court can itſelf compel the diſcovery required, a Court of Equity will not interfere. 1 Atk. 288: 1 Vez. 205: 2 Vez. 451.

A bill for a diſcovery muſt ſhew an intereſt in the plaintiff in the ſubject to which the required diſcovery relates; and ſuch an intereſt as intitles him to call on the defendant for the diſcovery. See Finch Rep. 36, 44: 1 Vern. 399.

As the object of a Court of Equity in compelling a diſcovery is either to enable itſelf or ſome other court to decide on matters in diſpute between the parties, the diſcovery ſought muſt be material, either to the relief prayed by the bill, or to ſome other ſuit actually inſtituted, or capable of being inſtituted. If therefore the plaintiff does not ſhew by his bill ſuch a caſe as renders the diſcovery which he ſeeks, material to the relief, if he prays relief; or does not ſhew a title to ſue the defendant in ſome other court; or that he is actually involved in litigation with the defendant or liable to be ſo; and does not alſo ſhew that the diſcovery which he prays is material to enable him to ſupport or defend a ſuit; he ſhews no title to the diſcovery; and conſequently a demurrer to the bill for ſuch purpoſe will be allowed. See Finch Rep. 214: 1 Vez. 205: 2 Vez. 396, 9: 2 Atk. 388: 1 Vern. 204.

The ſituation of a defendant may render it improper for a court of equity to compel a diſcovery; either, 1. becauſe the diſcovery may ſubject the defendant to pains and penalties, or to ſome forfeiture or ſomething in the nature of a forfeiture: or 2. it may hazard his title in a caſe where in conſcience he has at leaſt an equal right with the perſon requiring the diſcovery; though that right may not be clothed with a perfect legal title; as to which latter, ſee 1 Vez. 205: 3 Atk. 453.—It is a general rule that no one is bound to anſwer ſo as to ſubject himſelf to puniſhment, in whatever manner that puniſhment may ariſe; (as by pains and penalties, a criminal proſecution, &c.) or whatever may be the nature of the puniſhment 2 Vez. 245, 451: 1 Vez. 246: 1 Eq. Ab. 131. p. 10: 1 Atk. 450: 2 Atk. 393: Viner title Uſury Q 4: Toth. 135.

But if the plaintiff alone is intitled to the penalties, and expreſsly waves them by his bill, the defendant ſhall be compelled to make the diſcovery; for it can no longer ſubject him to a penalty. 1 Vern. 60.—And though a diſcovery may ſubject a defendant to penalties, to which the plaintiff is not entitled, and which conſequently he cannot wave, yet if the defendant has expreſsly covenanted, not to plead or demur to the diſcovery ſought, which is the common caſe with reſpect to ſervants of the Eaſt India Company, he ſhall be compelled to anſwer. 1 Eq. Ab. 77, 8. Where too a perſon by his own agreement ſubjects himſelf to a payment in the nature of a penalty on his doing a particular act a demurrer, to diſcovery of that act will not be allowed.

It ſeems however that a demurrer will be allowed to any diſcovery which may tend to ſhew the defendant guilty of any moral turpitude, as the birth of a child out of wedlock. Park. 163: but ſee 2 Vez. 451.—But a mother may in ſome caſes be compelled to diſcover where her child was born, though it may lead to prove the child an alien. 2 Vez. 287, 494.

A defendant may likewiſe demur to a bill which may ſubject him to any forfeiture of intereſt; as if a bill is brought to diſcover whether a leaſe has been aſſigned without licence; or whether a defendant entitled during widowhood, or liable to forfeiture of a legacy in caſe of marriage without conſent is married: or to diſcover any matter, which may ſubject a defendant intitled to any office or franchiſe to a quo warranto. See Toth. 69: 1 Vez. 56: 2 C. R. 68: 2 Atk. 392: 2 Vez. 265: 1 Eq. Ab. 131. c. 10.

A defendant may in the ſame manner demur to a diſcovery, which may ſubject him to any thing in the nature of a forfeiture; as to a diſcovery whether he was educated in the popiſh religion, by which he might incur the incapacities incapacities in ſtat. 11 & 12 W. 3. which the ſtat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 60. does not entirely remove: or whether a clergyman was preſented to a ſecond living which avoided the firſt. See 3 Atk. 457: 2 Comm. 661: 3 Bac. Abr: 3 Atk. 453.

See further this Dict. title Chancery; and Mr. Mitford's treatiſe there cited.

DISCRETION, Diſcretio.] When any thing is left to any perſon to be done according to his diſcretion, the law intends it muſt be done with ſound diſcretion, and according to law: and the court of B. R. hath a power to redreſs things that are otherwiſe done, notwithſtanding they are left to the diſcretion of thoſe that do them. 1 Lil. Abr. 477.

Diſcretion is to diſcern between right and wrong; and therefore whoever hath power to act at diſcretion, is bound by the rule of reaſon and law. 2 Inſt. 56, 298. And though there be a latitude of diſcretion given to one, yet he is circumſcribed, that what he does be neceſſary and convenient; without which no liberty can defend it. Hob. 158. The aſſeſſment of fines on offenders committing affrays, &c. and the binding of perſons to the good behaviour, are at the diſcretion of our judges and juſtices of peace. And in many caſes, for crimes not capital, the judges have a diſcretionary power to inflict corporal puniſhment on the offenders. Infants, &c. under the age of diſcretion, are not puniſhable for crimes; and want of diſcretion is a good exception againſt a witneſs. See title Age; and other appoſite titles.

To DISFRANCHISE, Is to take away one's freedom or privilege: it is the contrary to enfranchiſe. And corporations have power to diſfranchiſe members, in certain caſes. See titles Corporation; By-Law.

DISHERISON, A diſinheriting: mentioned in ſtats. 20 Ed. 1: 8 R. 2.

DISHERITOR. One that diſinheriteth, or puts another out of his inheritance. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 39.

DISMES, Decimæ.] Tithes, or the tenth part of all the fruits of the earth, and of beaſts, or labour, due to the clergy. It ſignifieth alſo the tenths of all ſpiritual livings given to the prince, which is called a perpetual diſme. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 3. cap. 35. And formerly this word (tenths) ſignified a tax or tribute levied of the temporalty. Holliugſh. in H. 2. f. 111. For the laws of the diſmes or tithes, See titles Tithes; Taxes.

DISPARAGEMENT. In the time of the old tenures; the matching an heir in marriage under his degree, or againſt decency. Co. Lit. 107: Magn. Chart. c. 6. See this Dict. title Tenures.

TO DISPAUPER. When a perſon by reaſon of his poverty, is admitted to ſue in formâ pauperis; if afterwards, before the ſuit is ended, the ſame party have any lands or perſonal eſtate fallen to him or be guilty of any thing whereby he is liable to have this privilege taken from him, then he is put out of the capacity of ſuing in forma pauperis, and is ſaid to be diſpaupered. See title Coſts II.

DISPENSATION. See title Biſhops; and as to Diſpenſations to hold pluralities; ſee titles Chaplains; Ceſſion.

DISPENSATIONS OF THE KING. If a diſpenſation by the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, is to be in extraordinary matters, or in a caſe that is new, the King and his council are to be conſulted: and it ought to be confirmed under the broad ſeal. The King's authority to grant diſpenſations remains as it did at common law; notwithſtanding ſtat. 25 H. 8. c. 21: Cro. Eliz. 542, 601. See further as to the diſpenſing power of the Crown by non obſtante, &c. this Dict. title King.

DISPERSONARE, To ſcandaliſe or diſparage. Blount.

DISSIGNARE. To break open a ſeal—Sepulto patre teſtamentum diſſignatum eſt. Neubrigenſis, lib. 2. c. 7.

DISSEISIN. From the Fr. Diſſaiſin.]

A ſpecies of injury by ouſter to the freehold eſtate of another.—A wrongful putting out of him that is ſeiſed of the freehold. 1 Inſt. 277. As where a perſon enters into lands or tenements, and his entry is not lawful, and keeps him that hath the eſtate from the poſſeſſion thereof. Bract. lib. 4. c. 3. And diſſeiſin is of two ſorts; either ſingle diſſeiſin, committed without force of arms; or diſſeiſin by force; but this latter is more properly deforcement. Brit. cap. 42, 43.

Seiſin is a technical term to denote the completion of that inveſtiture, by which the tenant was admitted into the tenure, and without which no freehold could be conſtituted, or paſs. Diſſeiſin muſt therefore mean the turning the tenant out of his tenure and uſurping his place and feudal relation —Lord Mansfield in the caſe of Taylor ex dem. Atkyns v. Horde, 1 Burr. 60: 5 Bro. P. C. 247.

Now however from the ſeveral ſtatutes, firſt reſtraining and at length aboliſhing all military tenures, little more is left than the names of feoffment, ſeiſin, tenure and freeholder, without any preciſe knowledge of the things originally ſignified by thoſe terms. Ibid.

In the ſame caſe Lord Mansfield ſaid "Diſſeiſin is a complicated fact, and differs from diſpoſſeſſing. The freeholder by diſſeiſin differs from a poſſeſſor by wrong.—Though the term diſſeiſin happens to be the ſame, the thing ſignified by that word as applied to the two caſes of actual diſſeiſin, or diſſeiſin by election is very different."—In this caſe it was attempted to ſupport a common recovery, by ſuppoſing the tenant to the præcipe, to have gained a freehold by diſſeiſin —The nature of a diſſeiſin was therefore elaborately inveſtigated by the counſel; and the idea of a freehold being gained thereby, learnedly repelled by Lord Mansfield. See further title Fine.

Diſſeiſin therefore ſeems to imply the turning the tenant out of his fee, and uſurping his place and relation.—To conſtitute an actual diſſeiſin it was neceſſary that the diſſeiſor had not a right of entry; (or to uſe the old law expreſſion that his entry was not congeable;) that the perſon diſſeiſed was at the time of the diſſeiſin, in the actual poſſeſſion of the lands; that the diſſeiſor expelled him from them by ſome degree of conſtraint or force; and that he ſubſtituted himſelf to be tenant to the Lord. But how this ſubſtitution was effected, it is difficult, perhaps impoſſible now to diſcover. 1 Inſt. 266. b. in n; 330. b. in n. the latter a very long and abſtruſe note on the ſubject and entering fully into the principles of the caſe abovementioned.

The injuries of Abatement and Intruſion, (ſee thoſe titles) are by a wrongful entry where the poſſeſſion is vacant; but this of Diſſeiſin is an attack upon him who is in actual poſſeſſion, and turning him out of it. The former were an ouſter from a freehold in law; this is an ouſter from a freehold in deed. Diſſeiſin may be effected either in corporeal inheritances, or in incorporeal. Diſſeiſin of things corporeal, as of houſes, lands, &c. muſt be by entry and actual diſpoſſeſſion of the freehold. Co. Litt. 181; as if a man enter either by force or fraud into the houſe of another, and turns, or at leaſt keeps, him or his ſervants out of poſſeſſion. Diſſeiſin of incorporeal hereditaments cannot be an actual diſpoſſeſſion, for the ſubject itſelf is neither capable of actual bodily poſſeſſion, nor diſpoſſeſſion: but it depends on their reſpective natures and various kinds; being in general nothing more than a diſturbance of the owner in the means of coming at, or enjoying them. But all diſſeiſins of hereditaments incorporeal, are only ſo at the election and choice of the party injured; if, for the ſake of more eaſily trying the right, he is pleaſed to ſuppoſe himſelf diſſeiſed. Litt. § 588, 9. Otherwiſe as there can be no actual diſpoſſeſſion, he cannot be compulſively diſſeiſed of any incorporeal hereditaments.

And ſo too, even in corporeal hereditaments, a man may frequently ſuppoſe himſelf to be diſſeiſed, when he is not ſo in fact, for the ſake of entitling himſelf to the more eaſy and commodious remedy, of an aſſiſe of novel diſſeiſin, inſtead of being driven to the more tedious proceſs of a writ of entry. Heng. Parv. c. 7: 4 Burr. 110.

The true injury of an actual or compulſive diſſeiſin according to what has been already ſtated ſeems to be that of diſpoſſeſſing the tenant, and ſubſtituting oneſelf to be the tenant of the lord in his ſtead; in order to which in the times of pure feudal tenure the conſent or connivance of the lord, who upon every deſcent or alienation perſonally gave, and who therefore alone could change, the ſeiſin or inveſtiture, ſeems to have been conſidered as neceſſary. But when in proceſs of time the feodal form of alienations wore off, and the lord was no longer the inſtrument of giving actual ſeiſin, it is probable that the lord's acceptance of rent or ſervice, from him who had diſpoſſeſſed another, might conſtitute a complete diſſeiſin. Afterwards no regard was had to the lord's concurrence, but the diſpoſſeſſor himſelf, was conſidered the ſole diſſeiſor: and this wrong was then allowed to be remedied by entry only, without any form of law, as againſt the diſſeiſor himſelf; but required a legal proceſs againſt his heir or alienee. And when the remedy by aſſiſe was introduced under Henry II. to redreſs ſuch diſſeiſins, as had been committed within a few years next preceding, the facility of that remedy induced others, who were wrongfully kept out of the freehold, to feign or allow themſelves to be ſeiſed, merely for the ſake of the remedy. 3 Comm. 169. &c.

By Magna Charta, 9 Hen. 3. c. 29, No man is to be diſſeiſed or put out of his freehold, but by lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land: and by ſtat. 32 H. 8. c. 33. the dying ſeiſed of any diſſeiſor of or in any lands, &c. having no right therein, ſhall not be a deſcent in law, to take away an entry of a perſon having lawful title of entry; except the diſſeiſor hath had peaceable poſſeſſion five years, without entry or claim by the perſon having lawful title. But if a diſſeiſor having expelled the right owner hath ſuch peaceable poſſeſſion of the lands five years without claim, and continues in poſſeſſion ſo as to die ſeiſed, and the land deſcends to his heirs, they have a right to the poſſeſſion thereof till the perſon that is owner recovers at law; and the owner ſhall loſe his eſtate for ever, if he do not proſecute his ſuit within the time limited by the ſtatute of limitations. Bac. Elem. And if a diſſeiſee levy a fine of the land whereof he is diſſeiſed, unto a ſtranger, the diſſeiſor ſhall keep the land for ever; for the diſſeiſee againſt his own fine cannot claim, and the conuſee cannot enter, and the right which the diſſeiſee had, being extinct by the fine, the diſſeiſor ſhall take advantage of it. 2 Rep. 56. But this is to be underſtood, where no uſe is declared of the fine by the diſſeiſee; when it ſhall enure to the uſe of the diſſeiſor, &c. by Bridgman, C. J. 1 Lev. 128.—See title Claim Continual.

If a feme ſole be ſeiſed of lands in fee, and is diſſeiſed, and then taketh huſband; in this caſe, the huſband and wife, as in right of the wife, have right to enter, and yet the dying ſeiſed of the diſſeiſor, ſhall take away the entry of his wife, after the death of the huſband. Co. Lit. 246. If a perſon diſſeiſes me, and, during the diſſeiſin, he or his ſervant cut down the timber growing upon the land, and afterwards I re-enter into the land, I ſhall have action of treſpaſs againſt him; for the law, as to the diſſeiſor and his ſervants, ſuppoſes the freehold to have been always in me: but if the diſſeiſor be diſſeiſed by another, or if he makes a feoffment, gift in tail, leaſe for life or years, I ſhall not have an action againſt the ſecond diſſeiſor, or againſt thoſe who come in by title: for all the meſne profits ſhall be recovered againſt the diſſeiſor himſelf. 11 Rep. 52: Keilw. 1.

A diſſeiſor in aſſiſe, where damages are recovered againſt him, ſhall recover as much as he hath paid in rents chargeable on the lands before the diſſeiſin. Jenk. Cent. 189. But if the diſſeiſor or his feoffee ſows corn on the land, the diſſeiſee may take it whether before or after ſeverance. Dyer 31, 173: 11 Rep. 46. Where a man hath a houſe in fee, &c. and locks it, and then departs; if another perſon comes to his houſe, and takes the key of the door, and ſays that he claims the houſe to himſelf in fee, without any entry into the houſe, this is a diſſeiſin of the houſe. 2 Danv. Abr. 624. If the feoffor enters on the land of the feoffee, and makes a leaſe for years, &c. it is a diſſeiſin, though the intent of the parties to the feoffment, was, that the feoffee ſhould make a leaſe to the feoffor for life. 2 Rep. 59. If leſſee for years is ouſted by his leſſor; this is ſaid to be no diſſeiſin. Cro. Jac. 678.

A man who enters on another's land, claiming a leaſe for years, who hath not ſuch leaſe, is a diſſeiſor: though if a man enters into the houſe of another by his ſufferance, without claiming any thing, it will not be a diſſeiſin. 9 H. 6. 21, 31: 2 Danv. 625. If a perſon enters on lands by virtue of a grant or leaſe, that is void in law; he is a diſſeiſor. 2 Danv. 630. A leſſee at will, makes a leaſe for years, it is a diſſeiſin, at the election of the leſſor at will: but it is the diſſeiſin of the leſſee at will, not of the leſſee for years. Hill. 7 Car. B. R. If a man enters into the land of an infant, though by his aſſent; this is a diſſeiſin to the infant, at his election. 11 Ed. 3: Aſſ. 87. And if a perſon commands another to enter upon lands, and make a diſſeiſin, the commander is a diſſeiſor, as well as ſuch other; unleſs the command be conditional, when it may be otherwiſe. 22 Aſſ. 99: 2 Danv. 631.

If a man forces another to ſwear to ſurrender his eſtate to him, and he doth ſo, it will be a diſſeiſin of the eſtate. So, forcibly hindring a perſon from tilling his land, is a diſſeiſin of the land. Co. Litt. 161. But if one enter wrongfully into the lands of another, and he accepts rent from ſuch perſon, he ſhall not afterwards be taken for a diſſeiſor. Dyer 173. Where any perſon is diſturbed from entering on land, it is a diſſeiſin: a denial of a rent, when lawfully demanded, is a diſſeiſin of the rent. Co. Litt. 153. Alſo hindring a diſtreſs for rent, by force; or making reſcous of a diſtreſs, are a diſſeiſin of the rent. 2 Danv. 624, 625. An infant, or feme covert, may be a diſſeiſor, but it muſt be by actual entry on lands, &c.

A feme

A feme covert ſhall not be a diſſeiſoreſs, by the act of the baron: if he diſſeiſes another to her uſe, ſhe is not a diſſeiſoreſs; nor if the wife agrees to it during the coverture: yet if after his death, ſhe agrees to it, ſhe is a diſſeiſoreſs. 2 Danv. 626, 627. Aſſiſes that lie againſt diſſeiſors are called writs of diſſeiſin; and there are ſeveral writs of entry ſur diſſeiſin, of which ſome are in the per, and others in le poſt, &c.

After all that has been here ſaid on this head, we muſt conclude by obſerving that writs of aſſiſe on diſſeiſins, are now diſuſed; and the feigned action of ejectment is introduced in their place. It is not amiſs to be acquainted with this learning, but treſpaſs and ejectment ſupply the place of almoſt every kind of aſſiſe. See thoſe titles, and title Aſſiſe of Novel Diſſeiſin.

DISSEISOR, Is in general he that diſſeiſeth or puts another out of his land, without order of law: and a diſſeiſee is he that is ſo put out. 4 Hen. 4. As the king in judgment of law can do no wrong, he cannot be a diſſeiſor. 1 E. 5. 8. A diſſeiſor is to be fined and impriſoned; and the diſſeiſee reſtored to the land, &c. by Stat. 20 H. 3. c. 3. Where a diſſeiſor is diſſeiſed, it is called diſſeiſin upon diſſeiſin. See title Diſſeiſin.

DISSENTERS. Separatiſts from the Church and the ſervice and worſhip thereof. Though the experience of the turbulent diſpoſition of theſe Sectariſts occaſioned in former times ſeveral diſabilities and reſtrictions (perhaps not entirely conſiſtent with the ſpirit of true Toleration) to be laid upon them by abundance of ſtatutes; (See ſtatutes 23 Eliz. c. 1: 29 Eliz. c. 6: 35 Eliz. c. 1: 22 C. 2. c. 1;) yet at length the Legiſlature, with a ſpirit of true magnanimity, extended that indulgence to them which they themſelves, when in power, had held to be countenancing ſchiſm, and had denied to the church of England. The penalties are conditionally ſuſpended by the ſtat. 1 W. & M. ſt. 1. c. 18. "for exempting their majeſties' proteſtant ſubjects, diſſenting from the church of England, from the penalties of certain laws," commonly called the Toleration-act; which is confirmed by ſtat. 10 Ann. c. 2; and declares that neither the laws above-mentioned nor the ſtatutes 1 Eliz. c. 2. § 14: 3 Jac. 1. cc. 4, 5, nor any other penal laws made againſt Popiſh recuſants (except the Teſt Acts) ſhall extend to any Diſſenters, other than papiſts, and ſuch as deny the Trinity: Provided. 1. That they take the oaths of allegiance and ſupremacy; (or make a ſimilar affirmation, being Quakers. See Stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 6;) and ſubſcribe the declaration againſt popery; 2. That they repair to ſome congregation certified to, and regiſtered in, the court of the biſhop or archdeacon, or at the county ſeſſions. 3. That the doors of ſuch meeting houſe ſhall be unlocked, unbarred, and unbolted; in default of which the perſons meeting there are ſtill liable to all the penalties of the former acts.

Diſſenting Teachers, in order to be exempted from the penalties of the Statutes 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4: 15 Car. 2. c. 6: 17 Car. 2. c. 2: 22 Car. 2. c. 1; are alſo to ſubſcribe the articles of religion mentioned in Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 12; (which only concern the confeſſion of the true Chriſtian faith, and the doctrine of the ſacraments;) with an expreſs exception of thoſe relating to the government and powers of the church, and to infant baptiſm; or if they ſcruple ſubſcribing the ſame, ſhall make and ſubſcribe the declaration preſcribed by 19 Geo. 3. c. 44, profeſſing themſelves to be Chriſtians and proteſtants, and that they believe the ſcripture to contain the revealed will of God, and to be the rule of doctrine and practice.

Thus, though the crime of non-conformity is by no means univerſally abrogated, it is ſuſpended and ceaſes to exiſt with regard to theſe Proteſtant Diſſenters, during their compliance with the conditions impoſed by theſe ſtatutes; and under theſe conditions, all perſons who will approve themſelves no papiſts or oppugners of the Trinity are left at full liberty to act as their conſcience ſhall direct them, in the matter of religious worſhip. And if any perſon ſhall willfully, maliciouſly, or contemptuouſly diſturb any congregation, aſſembled in any church, or permitted meeting-houſe, or ſhall miſuſe any preacher, or teacher there, he ſhall (by virtue of the ſame Stat. 1 W. & M.) be bound over to the ſeſſions of the peace, and forfeit 20 l.) But by Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 4, no Mayor or principal magiſtrate, muſt appear at any diſſenting meeting with the enſigns of his office, on pain of diſability to hold that or any other office; the Legiſlature judging it a matter of propriety, that a mode of worſhip, ſet up in oppoſition to the national, when allowed to be exerciſed in peace, ſhould be exerciſed alſo with decency, gratitude, and humility.—Diſſenters alſo who ſubſcribe to the declaration in the Stat. 19 Geo. 3, are exempted (unleſs in the caſe of endowed ſchools and colleges) from the penalties of the Stats. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4: & 17 Car. 2. c. 2; which prohibit (upon pain of fine and impriſonment) all perſons from teaching ſchool, unleſs they be licenſed by the Ordinary, and ſubſcribe a declaration of conformity to the liturgy of the church, and reverently frequent the divine ſervice eſtabliſhed by the laws of this kingdom.

Diſſenters choſen to any parochial or ward offices, and ſcrupling to take the oaths may execute the office by deputy, who ſhall comply with the law in this behalf. Stat. 1 W. & M. ſt. 1. c. 18.—But it appears that they are not ſubject to fine on refuſing to ſerve corporation offices.—For where a freeman of London, was elected one of the ſheriffs, but refuſed to take the office on account of his being a diſſenter, and as ſuch not having received the ſacrament according to the rights of the church of England, within a year before his election, an action was brought againſt him in the Sheriff's Court, for the penalty incurred by ſuch refuſal, and a judgment recovered; which judgment was affirmed, in a writ of error brought in the Court of Huſtings. But the defendant having obtained a ſpecial commiſſion of errors, the Judges Delegates reverſed both judgments; and on a writ of error in Parliament, this judgment of reverſal was affirmed; the judges being (except one) of opinion that the defendant was at liberty to object to the validity of his election on the ground of his own non-conformity. 3 *Bro. DISTILLERS, Of ſtrong waters, ſpirits, &c. are ſubject to divers regulations under the Exciſe-laws, in order to avoid frauds in the revenue; for ſome particulars relative to which ſee this Dict. title Spirituous Liquors; and alſo title Exciſe.

DISTRESS,

DISTRICTIO.] The taking of a perſonal chattel out of the poſſeſſion of the wrong-doer, into the cuſtody of the party injured, to procure a ſatisfaction for the wrong committed. 3 Comm. 6. The term Diſtreſs is alſo applied to the thing taken or diſtrained.

A man may take a diſtreſs for homage, fealty, or any ſervices; for fines and amercements; and for damage-feaſant, &c. And the effect of it is to compel the party either to replevy the diſtreſs, and conteſt the taking in an action againſt the diſtrainer; or, which is more uſual, to compound or pay the debt or duty, for which he was diſtrained.

There are likewiſe diſtreſſes in actions compulſory to cauſe a man to appear in court: and of theſe there is a diſtreſs perſonal, of a man's moveable goods, and profits of lands, &c. for contempt in not appearing after ſummoned; and diſtreſſes real, upon immoveable goods. And none ſhall be diſtrained to anſwer for any thing touching their freeholds, but by the King's writ. Stat. 52 Hen. 3. c. 1.

Diſtreſs is alſo divided into finite and infinite: Finite, is that which is limited by law, how often it ſhall be made to bring the party to trial of action, as once, twice, &c. And infinite, is without limitation, until the party appears; which is likewiſe applicable to jurors not appearing: then it hath had a further diviſion into a grand diſtreſs, and ordinary diſtreſs; the former whereof extends to all the goods and chattels which the party hath within the county. F. N. B. 904: Old Nat. Br. 43, 113: Brit. c. 26. f. 52.

Let us now conſider, more particularly;

I. 1. Who may diſtrain, and for what; 2. And what may be diſtrained.

II. At what Time, and in what Manner, generally the Diſtreſs ſhould be made.

III. Of the Statutes regulating Diſtreſs.

I. 1. THE MOST USUAL INJURY for which a diſtreſs may be taken is, that of non-payment of rent; and it may now be laid down as an univerſal principle, that a Diſtreſs may be taken for any kind of rent in arrear. See poſt. III.—For neglecting to do ſuit to the lord's court, or other certain perſonal ſervice, the lord may diſtrain of common right. Bro. Diſtreſs 15: 1 Inſt. 46.—For amercements in a Court Leet, a diſtreſs may be had of common right; but not for amercements in a Court Baron, without a ſpecial preſcription to warrant it. Brownl. 36. Another injury, for which diſtreſſes may be taken, is, where a man finds beaſts of a ſtranger wandering in his grounds damage feaſant; doing him hurt or damage by treading down his graſs, &c. in which caſe the owner of the ſoil may diſtrain them, till ſatisfaction made to him for the injury he has ſuſtained.—Laſtly, for ſeveral duties and penalties inflicted by ſpecial Acts of Parliaments, remedy by diſtreſs and ſale is given. See poſt. III.

Of common right a perſon may diſtrain for rents, and all manner of ſervices; and for rent reſerved upon a gift in tail, leaſe for life, years, &c. though there be no clauſe of diſtreſs in the deed, ſo as the reverſion be in himſelf: but on a feoffment in fee, a diſtreſs may not be taken, unleſs expreſsly reſerved in the deed. Co. Lit. 57, 205: Doctor and Student, cap. 9.—See Co. Lit. 204.

A man grants a rent out of the manor of D. and further, that if the rent be behind, the grantee ſhall diſtrain for it in the manor of S. this is a rent in the manor of D. and only a penalty on the other manor. 1 Shep. Abr. 567. If a perſon ſeiſed of land in fee, demiſe it to one upon condition to pay his wife 5*l.* a year rent, and if it be behind and in arrear, that ſhe ſhall diſtrain for it; the wife may take a diſtreſs for the rent. Dyer 3, 48. There is a lord and tenant by 3*l.* rent and fealty, the lord dies, and his wife is endowed of the thirds of the ſeigniory; here ſhe may diſtrain for one pound, and the heir for two pounds: ſo if a rent be divided amongſt parceners, each of them may have a diſtreſs for her part; but this may not be till the partition is made. Bro. 45.

If one jointenant make a gift in tail, of the land, reſerving a certain rent, and the rent be in arrear; he may not diſtrain the beaſts of the other jointenant. 33 H. 6. 35. But if A. and B. are tenants in common, and A. leaſes his moiety to C. for years, rendering rent, and C. leaſe it to B. if the rent is behind, A. may take a diſtreſs of the cattle of B. his fellow tenant in common. 7 Rep. 23: Moor 558.

To juſtify taking a diſtreſs, the party muſt ſee he hath good cauſe to diſtrain; that he have power to take the diſtreſs, and from the perſon from whom he takes it; that the thing, for the quality of it, be diſtrainable, and he diſtrain it in due time and place, &c. He who takes a diſtreſs for another, ought to have good warrant for doing it; and muſt do it in his name: and a bailiff or ſervant, may diſtrain for his maſter. 1 Cro. 748: 2 Cro. 436: Godb. 110. A diſtreſs ought to be made of ſuch things whereof the ſheriff may make replevin, and deliver again in as good plight and condition as they were at the time of the taking. Co. Lit. 47.

2. Diſtreſſes are to be of a thing valuable, whereof ſomebody hath a property; things ferae naturae, as dogs, conies, &c. may not be diſtrained. 1 Rol. Abr. 664, 666. It is the ſame of cattle of the plough, beaſts of huſbandry, ſheep, or horſes joined to a cart, with a rider upon it. 1 Vent. 36. This means a diſtreſs for rent, &c. contrà of diſtreſs damage feaſant.

Sheep are equally privileged with averia carucae, and cannot be taken if any other diſtreſs can be found. See 2 Inſt. 133.—But it has been adjudged that beaſts of the plough may be taken for the poor's rate, under Stat. 43 Eliz. becauſe the remedy given by that and other ſtatutes for compelling the payment of particular rates or ſums of money, though called a diſtreſs, is in effect an execution. 1 Burr. 579.—See acc. Saund. on 22 C. 2. againſt Conventicles 39; referred to in Com. Dig. Diſtreſs, (C.) but not cited in 4 Burr.

A horſe with a rider upon his back; or a horſe in an inn, or put into a common; an ax in a man's hand, cutting down wood; or any thing a perſon carries about him; utenſils and inſtruments of a man's trade or profeſſion, or the books of a ſcholar; corn in a mill, or goods in a market to be ſold for the uſe of the public; materials in a weaver's ſhop, for making of cloth; another perſon's garment in the houſe of a taylor, &c. are not diſtrainable; nor is any thing that is fixed to the freehold of a houſe, as a furnace, doors, windows, boards, &c. 1 Sid. 422, 440: Co. Lit. 47: 2 Danv. Abr. 461.

Deer in a private incloſure may be diſtrained. 3 Comm. 8.—Some have thought that a horſe on which one is riding may be diſtrained for damage feaſant. 2 Keb. 596: 1 Sid. 440; but the opinion was extrajudicial, and may be, be queſtioned; for 1 Ro. Ab. 664. (A.) pl. 4: and the caſe in 7 E. 3. Fitz. Ab. Avowry 199, are directly contra. See alſo Cro. Eliz. 549, 596. Some alſo have inclined to think that horſes drawing a cart laden with corn, though one is riding in the cart, may be diſtrained for rent; and for that purpoſe may be ſevered from the cart, if the perſon diſtraining doth not chooſe to take the cart with the corn alſo, all of which, as it ſeems, are equally liable to the diſtreſs. See 2 Keb. 529, 596: Raym. 18: 1 Vent. 36: 1 Sid. 422, 440; in which latter book the reporter makes a query, whether the man's being on the cart, ſhould not privilege the whole team.—If ferrets and nets in a warren be taken damage feaſant it is good; but if they are in the hands of a man, they cannot be diſtrained, any more (ſays the Reporter) than a horſe on which a man is; nor can they be diſtrained if they are out of the warren, 2 E. 2. Avowry 182: 7 E. 3. ib. 199.—See Vin. title Diſtreſs. A.

Goods, cattle, not of the plough, &c. ſheaves of corn; corn in the ſtraw, or threſhed; and carts with corn, (but not victuals) hay in a barn, or ricks of hay; money in a bag ſealed, though not out of a bag, &c. may be diſtrained for rent: and ſo may cattle or goods driving to market, if put into a paſture by the way. Co. Lit. 47: 1 Lutw. 214: Mod. 385. Beaſts of the tenant feeding on commons or waſtes, appendant or appurtenant to the demiſed premiſes, may be diſtrained for rent. 3 Comm. 11.

If a driver of cattle aſks leave of the leſſor to put his cattle into his ground for a night, and he gives leave, as well as the leſſee; yet it is ſaid he is not concluded from diſtraining them for rent. 2 Vent. 59: 2 Danv. 642.

Beaſts that eſcape into the tenant's ground, may be diſtrained for rent, though they have not been levant and couchant. 1 Inſt. 47. This doctrine has been objected to as too general; and ſeveral diſtinctions are taken, the ſum of which ſeems to be, that if a ſtranger's beaſts eſcape into another's land by default of the owner of the beaſts, as by breaking the fences, they may be diſtrained for rent immediately, without being levant or couchant; but that if they eſcape there by default of the tenant of the land, as for want of his keeping a ſufficient fence, then they cannot be diſtrained for rent or ſervice of any kind, till they have been levant and couchant; nor afterwards by a landlord for rent on a leaſe, unleſs on notice, the owner of the beaſts neglects to remove them: though it is ſaid that ſuch notice is not neceſſary, where the diſtreſs is by the lord of the fee for an ancient rent, or by the grantee of a rent charge.—See this ſubject argued at large in Kemp. v Crewes, 2 Lutw. 1573.

If A. brings yarn to his neighbour's houſe to weigh, it cannot be diſtrained by the lord. Noy. n. 298: Vide 15 E. 3. Avowry 216.—See Noy. 68. and S. C. in Cro. Eliz. 549, 596.—For other caſes in which the property of ſtrangers is privileged from diſtreſs, for the ſake of trade and commerce, See Francis v. Wyatt, 3 Burr. 1498. In that caſe the queſtion was, whether a perſon's chariot, which ſtood at a common livery ſtable, could be diſtrained for rent due, from the keeper of the livery ſtable; and the Court after two arguments, appearing to be ſtrongly inclined in favour of the diſtreſs, the owner of the chariot declined bringing the queſtion to a third argument.

The goods of a Carrier are privileged, and cannot be diſtrained for rent, though the waggon wherein loaded, is put into the barn of a houſe, &c. on the road. 1 Salk. 249.

Now by Stat. 2 W. & M. c. 5, ſheaves or cocks of corn, or corn looſe or in the ſtraw, or hay in any hovel ſtack or rick, or otherwiſe on the land, may be diſtrained for rent on demiſe, leaſe, or contract.

At Common law corn growing could not be diſtrained, becauſe it adheres to the freehold. 1 Ro. Ab. 666. H. pl. 4: but by Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, Landlords are impowered to diſtrain all ſorts of corn, graſs, or other product growing on the eſtate demiſed, and to cut and gather them when ripe.

Diſtreſſes for rent are to be reaſonable, and not exceſſive; and not to be taken in the King's highway, or the common ſtreet; or in the ancient fees of the church. 51 H. 3. ſtat. 4: 52 H. 3. c. 1, 2, 3, 4, 15: 9 Ed. 2. ſt. 1. c. 9. Except in caſe of an amercement in the leet.

All diſtreſſes for rent muſt be made on the premiſſes, by the Common law. And by Stat. 8 An. c. 14, if any tenant fraudulently removes goods from off the premiſſes, the landlord may in five days ſeize ſuch goods whereſoever found, as a diſtreſs for the rent in arrear; unleſs the goods are ſold for a valuable conſideration before the ſeizure. By Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, thirty days are allowed. And, whereas at Common law, for rent due the laſt day of the term, the leſſor could not diſtrain; becauſe the term ended before the rent was due, and the leſſee had the whole day to pay it; nor where the leſſee held over his term, for rent incurred during the term, (See 1 Inſt. 47.) now, by the Stat. 8 An. c. 14, where leaſes are expired, a diſtreſs may be taken, provided it be done within ſix months, and during the landlord's title and tenant's poſſeſſion.

Diſtreſſes for ſervices are to be on the land: but for an amercement in a leet, the diſtreſs may be taken any where within the hundred, as well out of the land, as on it, wherever the cattle are of him that is amerced; for the amercement charges only the perſon, and not the land; and for this a diſtreſs may be taken in the high ſtreet. 2 Danv. Abr. 644, 645. The lord cannot diſtrain for amercements in a court-baron, without a preſcription; though he may in the leet: and the goods and cattle of another, may not be taken in diſtreſs on my ground, for an amercement, &c. ſet upon me in a court-leet or court-baron. 11 Rep. 44: 12 H. 7. 13. For ſervices a diſtreſs cannot be taken but where the ſervices are certain; or may be reduced to a certainty. Co. Lit. 96.

II. ALL DISTRESSES muſt be made by day; unleſs in the caſe of damage feaſant; an exception allowed leſt the beaſts ſhould eſcape before they are taken. 1 Inſt. 142.

The landlord might not formerly break open a houſe to make a diſtreſs, for that is a breach of the peace. But when he was in the houſe, it was held that he might break open an inner door. 1 Inſt. 161: Comb. 17. By Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, (See poſt,) he may by aſſiſtance of the peace-officer, break open in the day time any place, whither the goods have been fraudulently removed, and locked up to prevent a diſtreſs; oath being firſt made in caſe it be a dwelling houſe, of a reaſonable ground to ſuſpect that ſuch goods are concealed therein. See 3 Comm. 11.

Where a landlord comes to diſtrain cattle, which he ſees on the tenant's ground, if the tenant, or any other, to prevent the diſtreſs, drives the cattle off the land, the landlord may make freſh purſuit, and diſtrain them:

though if before the diſtreſs, the owner of the cattle tenders his rent, and a diſtreſs is taken afterwards, it is wrongful. 2 Inſt. 107, 160.

A diſtreſs of cattle muſt be brought to the common pound, or be kept in an open place; and if they are put into a common pound, the owner is to take notice of it at his peril; but if in any other open place, notice is to be given to the owner, that he may feed them; and then if the cattle die for want of food, the tenant ſhall bear the loſs; and the landlord may diſtrain again for his rent. 5 Rep. 90: Co. Lit. 47, 96. Where one impounds cattle diſtrained, he cannot juſtify the tying them in the pound: if he ties a beaſt, and it is ſtrangled, he muſt anſwer it in damages. 1 Salk. 248. If the perſon diſtraining damage-feaſant put the diſtreſs in a broken pound, and the diſtreſs eſcapes, he can have no action for the ſame: it is otherwiſe if from a good pound, without his default, when he may have action for the treſpaſs. Salk. Ibid. By Stats. 53 H. 3. c. 4: 1 P. & M. c. 12, none ſhall drive a diſtreſs out of the county, on pain to be fined and amerced: and no diſtreſs of cattle ſhall be driven out of the hundred where taken to any pound, except to a pound overt in the ſame county, and not above three miles diſtant; nor ſhall any diſtreſs be impounded in ſeveral places under the penalty of 5*l.* and treble damages.

By Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19 § 10, perſons diſtraining for rent, may impound the diſtreſs on any convenient part of the land chargeable with the diſtreſs.

After a diſtreſs is in the pound, it is ſaid to be in cuſtodiâ legis, ſo that the owner of it hath no abſolute property therein; and therefore he cannot ſell or forfeit it, nor may the ſame be taken in execution, &c. but it muſt be as a pledge or means to help the party diſtraining to his debt or duty. Co. Lit. 190: Finch L. 135. Cattle diſtrained may not be uſed, becauſe by law they are only as a pledge; unleſs it be for the owner's benefit, by milking, &c. Cro. Jac. 148.

When a diſtreſs is taken of houſehold goods, or other dead things, they are to be impounded in a houſe, or other pound covert, &c. And if the diſtreſs is damaged, the diſtrainer muſt anſwer it. Wood's Inſt. 191. And they are to be removed immediately; except corn or hay, by Stat. 2 W. & M. ſeſſ. 1. cap. 5. But if a landlord doth not remove goods immediately, but quits them till another day, during which time they are taken away, it is not a reſcous, for want of poſſeſſion. Mod. Ca. 215: 1 Nelſ. 672.—See poſt III.

Where goods are unlawfully diſtrained, the owner may reſcue them, before they are impounded; but not afterwards. Co. Lit. 47. But the ſafeſt way is to replevy, as there are few caſes, in law, where a man is allowed to be his own judge, if any.—If lands lie in ſeveral counties, a diſtreſs may be made in one county for the whole rent. Co. Lit. 154. And if a landlord comes into a houſe, and ſeizes upon ſome goods as a diſtreſs, in the name of all the goods in the houſe; this is a good ſeizure of all. 6 Mod. 215.

By Stat. 2 W. & M. c. 5, if any diſtreſs and ſale be made where there is no rent due, the owner of the goods diſtrained ſhall recover double the value of the goods, and full coſts. Alſo by the Common law, if a lord or other perſon ſhall diſtrain ſeveral times for his ſervice or rent, when none is in arrear, the tenant may have an aſſiſe de ſovent diſtreſs, &c. F. N. B. 176.

Where a man is entitled to diſtrain for an entire duty, he ought to diſtrain for the whole at once, and not for part at one time, and part at another. 2 Lutw. 1532. But if he diſtrains for the whole, and there is not ſufficient on the premiſſes, or he happens to miſtake in the value of the thing diſtrained, and ſo takes an inſufficient diſtreſs, He, his executors, &c. may take a ſecond diſtreſs to complete his remedy. Cro. Eliz. 13: Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 7: 4 Burr. 590.

Diſtreſſes muſt be proportioned to the thing diſtrained for. By the Stat. of Marlbridge, 52 H. 3. c. 4, if any man takes a great or unreaſonable diſtreſs, for rent arrere he ſhall be heavily amerced for the ſame. As if the landlord diſtrains two oxen for 12*d.* rent, the taking of both is an unreaſonable diſtreſs. 2 Inſt. 407. But if there were no other diſtreſs nearer the value to be found, he might reaſonably have diſtrained one of them; but for homage, fealty, or ſuit and ſervice, as alſo for parliamentary wages (when they uſed to be paid) it is ſaid no diſtreſs can be exceſſive. Bro. Ab. t. Aſſiſe 291: Prerog. 98. For as theſe diſtreſſes cannot be ſold, the owner upon making ſatisfaction, may have his chattels again. 3 Comm. 12.

The remedy for exceſſive diſtreſſes is, by a ſpecial action on the Stat. of Marlbridge; for an action of treſpaſs is not maintainable upon this account, it being no injury at the Common law. 1 Vent 104: Fitzgib. 85: 4 Burr. 590.—See titles Avowry, Replevin, Recaption, Reſcous, &c.

III. See further as to Diſtreſs 3 Comm. 6, 145; and in the ſeveral abridgments titles Diſtreſs and Replevin, and alſo Gilbert on Replevins.—See alſo Stats. 2 Wm. & M. ſt. 1. c. 5: 8 An. c. 14: 4 Geo. 2. c. 28: 11 Geo. 2. c. 19.

Theſe ſtatutes have made great alterations in the ancient law of diſtreſs, particularly by empowering perſons who diſtrain for rent of any kind, to ſell the diſtreſs for payment of rent in arrear, if the tenant or owner fails to replevy with ſufficient ſecurity, within five days after taking of the diſtreſs, and giving the tenant notice of the cauſe; in this caſe the conſtable is bound to aſſiſt, the goods are to be appraiſed by two ſworn appraiſers, and the overplus, if any, left in the conſtable's hands for the uſe of the owner. This improvement of the remedy by diſtreſs, was firſt introduced by Stat. 2 W. & M. c. 5, with reſpect to rents due on demiſe, or contract; and afterwards by Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28, was extended to rents-ſeck, rents of aſſiſe, and chief-rents. Before theſe two ſtatutes, the remedy by diſtreſs was very imperfect; for the diſtreſs was merely taken nomine pœnæ, to compel ſatisfaction, and could not be ſold or uſed for the profit of the perſon diſtraining, except in caſe of the King and ſome few other inſtances.—See further as to diſtreſſes and other remedies for rent, this Dict. titles Ceſſavit, Rent, Leaſe, &c.

The following extracts will more fully explain the nature of diſtreſs by ſtatute.

By Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, if any tenant of lands or tenements ſhall fraudulently carry away his goods, to prevent diſtreſs, the landlord may, within thirty days after, diſtrain them wherever they ſhall be found, as if they had been on the premiſſes; but no ſuch goods ſhall be diſtrained, diſtrained, if ſold bona fide for valuable conſideration before ſeizure, to any perſon not privy to the fraud. Tenants committing ſuch fraud, or others aſſiſting, ſhall forfeit double the value of the goods carried off, to be recovered by action of debt, &c. And where they ſhall not exceed 50*l.* value, the landlord may exhibit a complaint before two juſtices of peace, who are to examine the fact, and enquire into the value of the goods, and thereupon order the offender to pay double value, leviable by diſtreſs and ſale; and, for want thereof, commit the offender to the houſe of correction for ſix months. Landlords, or their agents, may, with the aſſiſtance of a conſtable, ſeize any goods fraudulently concealed in any houſe, out-houſe, &c.

And in caſe of a dwelling-houſe, on oath firſt made to ſome juſtice, of reaſon to ſuſpect that ſuch goods are therein, may break open the ſame, and diſtrain them: they may alſo diſtrain for rent and cattle, or ſtock of their tenants, feeding in any common; or corn, graſs, hops, fruits, &c. growing on the land, which they ſhall cut, gather, cure and lay up when ripe, in any proper place, giving notice to the tenant within a week where lodged, and diſpoſe thereof towards the ſatisfaction of the rent and charges; the appraiſement to be taken when cut or cured: but, if after a diſtreſs ſo taken, before the product be ripe and gathered, the tenant ſhall pay the rent, and charges of the diſtreſs, the ſaid diſtreſs ſhall ceaſe.

Perſons may ſecure diſtreſſes lawfully taken, and ſell them upon the premiſſes in like manner as may be done off the ſame, by 2 W. & M. ſeſſ. 1. c. 5. And any perſons may go to and from the premiſſes, to view, appraiſe, buy, or take away the goods of the purchaſer; and if a reſcous be made of the diſtreſs, the perſons aggrieved ſhall have the remedy given by the ſaid ſtatute.

Diſtreſſes made for rent juſtly due, ſhall not be unlawful, nor diſtrainers be treſpaſſers ab initio, for any irregularity in the diſpoſition thereof; but the parties grieved to have ſatisfaction for ſpecial damage, in an action on the caſe, &c. But no tenant ſhall recover by ſuch action, if tender of amends, hath been made before the action brought. And in all actions of treſpaſs, or on the caſe relating to the entry, diſtreſs, or ſale, made by landlords for rents, the defendants may plead the general iſſue, and if the plaintiffs become non-ſuit, &c. ſhall recover double coſts of ſuit.

By Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 20, Juſtices of peace, in all caſes, where they are impowered to levy penalties by any act of parliament, are in their warrants of diſtreſs, to limit a time for the ſale of the goods; the Conſtable making ſuch diſtreſs may deduct the reaſonable charges of detaining, keeping, and ſelling ſuch diſtreſs, out of the money ariſing by the ſale; and the overplus, if any, after ſuch charges, and alſo the penalty or ſum of money, ſhall be fully paid, ſhall be returned to the owner of the goods diſtrained; and the Conſtable, if required, ſhall ſhew the warrant to the party whoſe goods are diſtrained, and ſuffer a copy thereof to be taken.—This act not to alter or repeal the Stats. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34, and 1 Geo. 1. c. 6, relating to Diſtreſſes on Quakers for Tithes and Church Rates.

DISTRESS OF THE KING. By the Common law no Subject can diſtrain out of his fee or ſeigniory; unleſs cattle are driven to a place out of the fee, to hinder the lord's diſtreſs, &c. But the King may diſtrain for rent-ſervice, or fee-farm, in all the lands of the tenant whereſoever they be; not only on lands held of himſelf, but of others: where his tenant is in actual poſſeſſion, and the land manured with his own beaſts, &c. 2 Inſt. 132: 2 Danv. Abr. 643.

DISTRESS OF A TOWN. If a town be aſſeſſed to a certain ſum, a diſtreſs may be taken in any part, ſubject to the whole duty. 2 Danv. 643.

DISTRIBUTION of Inteſtates' Eſtates; See title Executor. V. 8.

DISTRICTIONE SCACCARII, The Stat. 51 H. 3. ſtat. 5, as to Diſtreſſes for the King's debt.

DISTRICT, diſtrictus.] A territory, or place of juriſdiction; the circuit wherein a man may be compelled to appear; alſo the place in which one hath the power of diſtraining: and where we ſay hors de ſon fee, out of the fee, it has been uſed for extra diſtrictum ſuum. Brit. c. 120.

DISTRINGAS, A writ directed to the Sheriff, or other officer commanding him to diſtrain a man for a debt to the King, &c. or for his appearance at a day affixed. There is a great diverſity of this writ; which was ſometimes of old called conſtringas. F. N. B. 138. There is alſo a diſtringas againſt Peers and perſons intitled to privilege of parliament, under Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50; by which the effects (in law called the iſſues) levied may be ſold to pay the plaintiff's coſts. And it has been held that this ſtatute extends to all writs of diſtringas. 5 Burr. 2726.—See titles Proceſs; Parliament; (privilege of). In detinue after judgment, the plaintiff may have a diſtringas to compel the defendant to deliver the goods, by repeated diſtreſſes of his chattels. 1 Ro. Ab. 737: Raſt. Entr. 215.—See title Execution.

DISTRINGAS JURATORES, A writ directed to the ſheriff, to diſtrain upon a jury to appear; and return iſſues on their lands, &c. for non-appearance. Where an iſſue in fact is joined to be tried by a jury, which is returned by the ſheriff in a panel upon a venire facias for that purpoſe; thereupon there goes forth a writ of diſtringas jurator', to the ſheriff, commanding him to have their bodies in court, &c. at the return of the writ. 1 Lil. Abr. 483. The writ of diſtringas jur' ought to be delivered to the ſheriff ſo timely, that he may warn the jury to appear four days before the writ is returnable, if the jurors live within forty miles of the place of trial; and eight days if they live farther off. Ibid. 484. There may be an alias, or pluries diſtringas jur' where the jury doth not appear. See titles Jury; Trial.

DIVEST, See Deveſt.

DIVIDENDS OF BANKRUPTS, EFFECTS, See title Bankrupt.

DIVIDEND IN THE EXCHEQUER, Is taken for one part of an indenture. Stat. 10 Ed. 1. c. 11.

DIVIDEND OF STOCKS, A dividable proportionate ſhare of the intereſt of ſtocks erected on public funds; as the Bank, South-Sea, and India ſtocks, &c. See title Funds.

DIVISA, Hath various ſignifications: ſometimes it is uſed for a device, award or decree: ſometimes for deviſe of a portion or parcel of lands, &c. by will: and ſometimes it is taken for the bounds or limits of diviſion of a pariſh or farm, &c. as diviſas perambulare, to walk the bounds of a pariſh; in which ſenſe it has been extended to the diviſion between counties, and given name to towns.

towns, as to the Deviſes, a town in Wiltſhire, ſituate on the confines, the Diviſion of the Weſt Saxon and Mercian kingdoms. Leg. H. 2. cap. 9: Leg. Inæ, c. 44: Leg. H. 1. c. 57. Cowel.

DIVORCE, divortium; à divertendo.] The ſeparation of two, de facto married together, made by law: it is a judgment ſpiritual; and therefore, if there be occaſion, it ought to be reverſed in the ſpiritual court. Co. Lit. 335. And, beſides ſentence of divorce, in the old law, the woman divorced was to have of her huſband a writing called a bill of divorce, which was to this effect, viz. I promiſe that hereafter I will lay no claim to thee, &c.—See title Baron and Feme. III. 2: VI: and particularly XI. See alſo title Marriage.

There are many divorces, mentioned in our books; as cauſâ præcontractûs; cauſâ frigiditatis; cauſâ conſanguinitatis; cauſâ affinitatis; cauſâ profeſſionis, &c. But the uſual divorces are only of two kinds, i. e. à menſa & thoro, from bed and board; and à vinculo matrimonii, from the very bond of marriage. A divorce à menſa & thoro diſſolveth not the marriage; for the cauſe of it is ſubſequent to the marriage, and ſuppoſes the marriage to be lawful: this divorce may be by reaſon of adultery in either of the parties, for cruelty of the huſband, &c. And as it doth not diſſolve the marriage, ſo it doth not debar the woman of her dower; or baſtardize the iſſue, or make void any eſtate for the life of huſband and wife, &c. Co. Lit. 235: 3 Inſt. 89: 7 Rep. 43. The woman under ſeparation by this divorce, muſt ſue by her next friend; and ſhe may ſue her huſband in her own name for alimony. Wood's Inſt. 62.

A divorce à vinculo matrimonii, abſolutely diſſolves the marriage, and makes it void from the beginning, the cauſes of it being precedent to the marriage; as præcontract with ſome other perſon, conſanguinity or affinity, within the Levitical degrees, impotency, impuberty, &c. On this divorce dower is gone; and if by reaſon of præcontract, conſanguinity, or affinity, the children begotten between them are baſtards. Co. Lit. 335: 2 Inſt. 93, 687. But in theſe divorces, the wife, it is ſaid, ſhall receive all again that ſhe brought with her, becauſe the nullity of the marriage ariſes through ſome impediment; and the goods of the wife were given for her advancement in marriage, which now ceaſeth: but this is where the goods are not ſpent; and if the huſband give them away during the coverture, without any colluſion, it ſhall bind her: if ſhe knows her goods unſpent, ſhe may bring action of detinue for them; and as for money, &c. which cannot be known, ſhe muſt ſue in the ſpiritual court. Dyer 62: Nelſ. Abr. 675. This divorce enables the parties to marry again. But in the other caſes, a power for ſo doing muſt be obtained by act of parliament.

Where lands were formerly given to huſband and wife, and the heirs of their bodies in frank-marriage; if they had been afterwards divorced, the wife was to have her whole lands; and by divorce an eſtate-tail of baron and feme, it is ſaid, may be extinct. Godb. 18. After a ſentence of divorce is given in the ſpiritual court cauſâ præcontractûs, the iſſue of that marriage ſhall be baſtards, ſo long as the ſentence ſtands unrepealed: and no proof ſhall be admitted at Common-law to the contrary. Co. Lit. 235: 1 Nelſ. 674. In ſuch caſe, iſſue of a ſecond marriage may inherit until the ſentence is repealed. 2 Leon. 207. If after a divorce à menſa & thoro, either of the parties marry again, the other being living, ſuch marriage is a mere nullity; and by ſentence to confirm the firſt contract, ſhe and her firſt huſband become huſband and wife to all intents, without any formal divorce from the ſecond. 1 Leon. 173. Alſo on this divorce, as the marriage continues, marrying again while either party is living, hath been held to be bigamy within the Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 11.—Cro. Car. 333: 1 Nelſ. 674.

A divorce for adultery was anciently à vinculo matrimonii; and therefore in the beginning of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the opinion of the church of England was, that after a divorce for adultery, the parties might marry again; but in Foliambe's caſe, H. 44 El. in the ſtar-chamber, that opinion was changed; and archbiſhop Bancroft, by the advice of divines, held, that adultery was only a cauſe of divorce à menſa & thoro. 3 Salk. 138.

Sentence of divorce muſt be given in the life of the parties, and not afterwards: but it may be repealed in the ſpiritual court, after the death of the parties. Co. Lit. 33, 244: 7 Rep. 44; 5 Rep. 98. Upon the divorce of a man and his wife, equity will not aſſiſt the wife in recovering dower, at the huſband's death, but ſhall leave her to the law; neither ought the ſpiritual court to grant her adminiſtration, ſhe not being ſuch a wife as is intitled to it; nor will the Chancery decree her a diſtributive ſhare. Preced. Canc. 111, 112.

DIURNALIS, See Dayzvere.

DOCKET, or DOGGET. A brief in writing on a ſmall piece of paper or parchment, containing the effect of a greater writing. Weſt Symbol. par. 2. ſect. 106. And when rolls of judgments are brought into C. B. they are docketted, and entered on the docket of that term; ſo that upon any occaſion you may ſoon find out a judgment, by ſearching theſe dockets, if you know the attorney's name. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20.—See title Judgments. Exemplification of decrees in Chancery and Commiſſions of Bankruptcy, are alſo docketted.

DOCTRINES, illegal, aſſerting, or publiſhing. See titles Libel; Sedition; Treaſon.

DOGS, The law takes notice of a greyhound, maſtiff dog, ſpaniel and tumbler; for trover will lie for them. Cro. Eliz. 125: Cro. Jac. 44. A man hath a property in a maſtiff: and where a maſtiff falls on another dog, the owner of that dog cannot juſtify the killing the maſtiff; unleſs there was no other way to ſave his dog, as that he could not take off the maſtiff, &c. 1 Saund. 84: 3 Salk. 139. The owner of a dog is bound to muzzle him if miſchievous, but not otherwiſe: and if a man doth keep a dog, that uſeth to bite cattle, &c. if after notice given to him of it, or his knowing the dog is miſchievous, the creature ſhall do any hurt, the maſter ſhall anſwer for it. Cro. Car. 254, 487: Stra. 1264.—See titles Action; Treſpaſs.

By Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 18, If any perſon ſhall ſteal any dog or dogs, they ſhall be liable to forfeit for the firſt offence from 30 to 20*l.* or be committed to gaol, for from twelve to ſix months, at the diſcretion of two juſtices—for the ſecond offence to forfeit from 50 to 30*l.* or be impriſoned for from eighteen to twelve months, and alſo whipped.—A puniſhment perhaps not too ſevere for notorious dog-ſtealers; but which may afford a dangerous handle for oppreſſion: and Burn, title Dogs, ſeems ſeriouſly to doubt whether the ſtatute extends to Bitches—a queſtion that we believe has never yet been argued in a court of law.

DOG-DRAW,

DOG-DRAW, The manifeſt deprehenſion of an offender againſt veniſon in a foreſt, when he is found drawing after a deer, by the ſcent of a hound led in his hand: or where a perſon hath wounded a deer, or wild beaſt, by ſhooting at him, or otherwiſe, and is caught with a dog drawing after him to receive the ſame. Manwood, par. 2. cap. 8.—See title Foreſt.

DOGGER, A light ſhip or veſſel: as a Dutch dogger, &c. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 1. and Dogger fiſh, are fiſh brought in thoſe ſhips. Stat. ibid.

DOGGER-MEN, Fiſhermen that belong to dogger-ſhips. 25 H. 8. c. 2.

DOITKIN, or doit. Was a baſe coin of ſmall value, prohibited by the Stat. 3 H. 5. c. 1. We ſtill retain the phraſe, in common ſaying, when we would undervalue a man, that he is not worth a doit. See title Coin.

DO LAW, facere legem.] Is the ſame with to make law. Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 14.

DOLE, dola.] A Saxon word ſignifying as much as pars or portio in the Latin: and anciently where a meadow was divided into ſeveral ſhares, it was called a dole meadow. 4 Jac. 1. c. 11. See Dalus.

DOLEFISH. Seems to be the ſhare of fiſh, which the fiſhermen, yearly employed in the North ſeas, do cuſtomarily receive for their allowance. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 7.

DOLG-BOTE, Sax.] A recompence or amends, for a ſcar or wound. Sax. Dict. LL. Aluredi Reg. cap. 22.

DOLLAR, A piece of foreign coin, paſſing for about 4 s. 6 d. Lex. Mercat.

DOM-BEC OR DOM-BOC, Sax. See Dome-book.

DOME, OR DOOM, from the Sax. dom.] A judgment, ſentence, or decree. And ſeveral words end in dom: as kingdom, earldom, &c. from whence they may be applied to the juriſdiction of a lord, or a king. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. fol. 284.

DOME-BOOK, Liber judicialis;] A book compoſed under the direction of Alfred, for the general uſe of the whole kingdom, containing the local cuſtoms of the ſeveral provinces of the kingdom. This book is ſaid to have been extant ſo late as the reign of Ed. IV; but it is now loſt. It probably contained the principal maxims of the common law, the penalties for miſdemeanors and the forms of judicial proceedings. Thus much at leaſt may be collected from the injunction to obſerve it which is found in the laws of Edward the Elder, ſon of Alfred, c. 1. See alſo Leg. Inæ. c. 29. and Spelm. in verb. Dombec. This book was compiled by Alfred for the uſe of the Court Baron, Hundred and County Court, the Court Leet and Sheriff's tourn. See 1 Comm. 64: 4 Comm. 411. See poſt Domeſday.

DOMESDAY OR DOMESDAY-BOOK: Liber judiciarius, vel cenſualis Angliæ.] A moſt ancient record, made in the time of William I. called the Conqueror, and now remaining in the Exchequer fair and legible, conſiſting of two volumes, a greater and a leſs; the greater containing a ſurvey of all the lands in England, except the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, Weſtmoreland, Durham, and part of Lancaſhire, which it is ſaid were never ſurveyed; and excepting Eſſex, Suffolk, and Norfolk; which three laſt are comprehended in the leſſer volume. There is alſo a third book, which differs from the others in form more than matter, made by the command of the ſame King. And there is a fourth book kept in the Exchequer which is called Domeſday; and, though a very large volume, is only an abridgment of the others. Likewiſe a fifth book is kept in the Remembrancer's office in the Exchequer, which has the name of Domeſday, and is the very ſame with the fourth before mentioned. Our anceſtors had many dome-books. King Alfred had a roll which he called Domeſday; and the Domeſday book made by Will. I. referred to the time of Edward the Confeſſor, as that of King Alfred did to the time of Ethelred; See ante Dome-book. The fourth book of Domeſday having many pictures, and gilt letters in the beginning, relating to the time of King Edward the Confeſſor, this led him who made notes on Fitzherbert's Regiſter into a miſtake in p. 14, where he tells us, that liber Domeſday factus fuit tempore regis Edwardi.

The book of Domeſday was begun by five juſtices, aſſigned for that purpoſe in each county, in the year 1081, and finiſhed anno 1086. And the queſtion whether lands are antient demeſne, or not, is to be decided by the Domeſday of Will. I. from whence there is no appeal: and it is a book of that authority, that even the Conqueror himſelf ſubmitted ſome caſes, wherein he was concerned to be determined by it. The addition of day to this Dome book was not meant with any alluſion to the final day of judgment, as moſt perſons have conceived; but was to ſtrengthen and confirm it, and ſignifieth the judicial deciſive record or book of dooming judgment and juſtice. Hammond's Annot'. Camden calls this book Gulielmi Librum Cenſualem, the Tax-Book of King William; and it was further called Magna Rolla Winton. The dean and chapter of York have a regiſter ſtiled Domeſday; ſo hath the biſhop of Worceſter; and there is an ancient roll in Cheſter caſtle, called Domeſday-Roll. Blount. A tranſcript of the Domeſday book of W. I. has been made and publiſhed, by which the acceſs to it is rendered more familiar to our Antiquaries and Hiſtorians. See Spelm. in verb. Domeſdei, and this Dict. title Tenures, II. 1.

DOMES-MEN. Judges, or men appointed to doom, and determine ſuits and controverſies, hence æg deme, I deem, or judge. Vide days-men.

DOMICELLUS. An obſolete Latin word, anciently given as an appellation or addition to the King's natural ſons in France, and ſometimes to the eldeſt ſons of noblemen there; from whence we borrowed theſe additions: as ſeveral natural children of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaſter, are ſtiled domicelli by the charter of legitimation. 20 R. 2. But according to Thorn, the domicelli were only the better ſorts of ſervants in monaſteries.

DOMIGERIUM, Is ſometimes uſed to ſignify danger; but otherwiſe, and perhaps more properly, it is taken for power over another; ſub domigerio alicujus vel manus eſſe. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 1. cap. 10.

DOMINA, A title given to honourable women, who anciently in their own right of inheritance held a barony. Paroch. Antiq.

DOMINICA IN RAMIS PALMARUM, Palm Sunday. 23 Ed. 1.

DOMINIUM, right or regal power. Paroch. Antiq. 498.

DOMINUS. This word prefixed to a man's name, in ancient times uſually denoted him a knight, or a clergyman; and ſometimes a gentleman, not a knight, eſpecially a lord of a manor.

DOMO REPARANDA, Is a writ that lay for one againſt his neighbour by the fall of whoſe houſe he feared a damage and injury to his own. Reg. Orig. 153.

DOMUS CONVERSORUM. An ancient houſe built or appointed by King Hen. III. for ſuch Jews as were converted to the Chriſtian faith: but King Ed. III. who expelled the Jews from this kingdom, deputed the place for the cuſtody of the rolls and records of the Chancery. See Rolls.

DOMUS DEI, The hoſpital of St. Julian in Southampton, ſo called. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. 440. A name applied to many hoſpitals.

DONATIO CAUSA MORTIS. A death-bed diſpoſition of property ſo called, viz. when a perſon in his laſt ſickneſs, apprehending his diſſolution near, delivers or cauſes to be delivered to another the poſſeſſion of any perſonal goods, (under which have been included bonds, and bills drawn by the deceaſed upon his banker) to keep in caſe of his deceaſe. This gift, if the donor dies, needs not the aſſent of his executor; yet it ſhall not prevail againſt creditors; and is accompanied with this implied truſt, that, if the donor lives, the property thereof ſhall revert to himſelf, being only given in contemplation of death; or mortis cauſa. Prec. Chan. 269: 1 P. Wms. 404, 441: 3 P. Wms. 357: 2 Comm. 514: 2 Vez. 431: Ward v. Turner. This latter caſe collects all the law on the ſubject of donations cauſâ mortis; and particularly conſiders what ſhall be a ſufficient delivery of different kinds of property to give effect to ſuch donations.—There may be a donatio cauſa mortis of bonds bank notes and bills payable to bearer; but not of other promiſſory notes or bills of exchange, theſe being choſes in action which do not paſs by delivery. See further this Dict. titles Legacy; Will.

DONATIVE, donativum.] Is a benefice merely given and diſpoſed of by the patron to a man, without either preſentation to, or inſtitution by, the Ordinary, or induction by his order. F. N. B. 35. Donatives are ſo termed, becauſe they began only by the foundation and erection of the donor. The King might of ancient time found a church or chapel, and exempt it from the juriſdiction of the Ordinary; ſo he may by his letters patent give licence to a common perſon to found ſuch a church or chapel, and make it donative, not preſentable; and that the incumbent or chaplain ſhall be deprived by the founder and his heirs, and not by the biſhop; which ſeems to be the original of donatives in England. See 2 Comm. 22; and this Dict. title Advowſon.

When the King founds a church, &c. donative, it is of courſe exempted from the Ordinary's juriſdiction, though no particular exemption is mentioned; and the Lord Chancellor ſhall viſit the ſame: and where the King grants a licence to any common perſon to found a church or chapel, it may be donative, and exempted from the juriſdiction of the biſhop, ſo as to be viſited by the founder, &c. Co. Litt. 134: 2 Rol. Abr. 230. The reſignation of a donative muſt be to the donor or patron, and not to the Ordinary; and donatives are not only free from all ordinary juriſdiction, but the patron and incumbent may charge the glebe to bind the ſucceſſor: and if the clerk is diſturbed, the patron may bring quare impedit, &c. Alſo the patron of a donative may take the profits thereof when it is vacant. Co. Lit. 344: Cro. Jac. 63.

If the patron of a donative will not nominate a clerk, there can be no lapſe: but the biſhop may compel ſuch patron to nominate a clerk by eccleſiaſtical cenſures; for though the church is exempt from the power of the Ordinary, the patron is not exempted: and the clerk muſt be qualified like unto other clerks of churches; no perſon being capable of a donative, unleſs he be a prieſt lawfully ordained, &c. Yelv. 61. Stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 4: 1 Lill. 488.

There may be a donative of the King's gift with cure of ſouls, as the church of the Tower of London is: and if ſuch donative be procured for money, it will be within the ſtatute of ſimony. Mich. 9 Car. B. R. A parochial church may be donative, and exempt from the Ordinary's juriſdiction. Godolph. 262. The church of St. Mary le Bone in Middleſex is donative, and the incumbent being cited into the ſpiritual court, to take a licence from the biſhop to preach, pretending that it was a chapel, and that the parſon was a ſtipendiary; it was ruled in the King's Bench that it was a donative; and if the biſhop viſit, the court of B. R. will grant a prohibition. 1 Mod. 90: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 676.

If a patron of a donative doth once preſent his clerk to the Ordinary, and the clerk is admitted, inſtituted, and inducted, then the donative ceaſeth; and it becomes a church preſentative. Co. Litt. 344. But when a donative is created by letters patent, by which lands are ſettled upon the parſon and his ſucceſſors, and he is to come in by the donation of the King, and his ſucceſſors; in this caſe, though there may be a preſentation to the donative, and the incumbent come in by inſtitution and induction, yet that will not deſtroy the donative. 2 Salk. 541. All biſhopricks being of the foundation of the King, they were in ancient time donative. 3 Rep. 75. See title, Biſhops.

Donatives have two peculiar properties; one, that the preſentation does not devolve to the king as in other livings when the incumbent is made a biſhop. Ca. Parl. 184.—The other that a donative is within the ſtatute of pluralities, if it is the firſt living; but if a donative is the ſecond benefice taken without a diſpenſation, the firſt would not be void; for the words of the ſtatute are inſtituted and inducted to any other, which are not applicable to donatives. 1 Woodd. 330.—And therefore it ſeems if donatives are taken laſt they may be held with any other preferment.

DONIS, Statute de. The ſtatute of Weſtm. 2. viz. 13. Ed. 1. c. 1. called the ſtatute de donis conditionalibus. This ſtatute revives, in ſome ſort, the ancient feodal reſtraints which were originally laid on alienations; by enacting, that from thenceforth the will of the donor be obſerved, and that the tenements ſo given, (to a man and the heirs of his body) ſhould at all events go to the iſſue, if there were any, or if none, ſhould revert to the donor. ſee 2 Comm. 12; and this Dict. titles Eſtate; Tail; Limitation.

DONOR AND DONEE. Donor is he who gives lands or tenements to another in tail, &c. And the perſon to whom given is the donee.

DOOMSDAY, See Domeſday.

DORTURE, dormitorium.] The common room or chamber, where all the Fryars, or religious of one convent, ſlept and lay all night. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 11.

DOSSALE. Hangings or tapeſtry.—Mat. Par.

DOTE ASSIGNANDA, Is a writ that lay for a widow, where it was found by office, that the King's tenant was ſeiſed of lands in fee, or fee-tail at the day of his death, and and that he held of the King in chief, &c. In which caſe, the widow came into the Chancery, and there made oath, that ſhe would not marry without the King's leave; whereupon ſhe had this writ to the eſcheator, to aſſign her dower, &c. But it was uſual to make the aſſignment of the dower in the Chancery, and to award a writ to the eſcheator, to deliver the lands aſſigned unto her. Stat. 15 Ed. 4. cap. 4: Reg. Orig. 297: F. N. B. 263. See title Dower.

DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET, A writ of dower, that lies for the widow againſt the tenant who bought land of her huſband in his life-time, whereof he was ſolely ſeiſed in fee-ſimple or fee-tail, and of which ſhe is dowable. F. N. B. 147. See the law and the form of the writ in Booth's Real Actions 166. &c. See further title Dower.

DOTIS ADMENSURATIONE, Admeaſurement of dower, where the widow holds more than her ſhare, &c. See titles Admeaſurement; Dower.

DOTKIN, ſee Doitkin.

DOUBLE PLEA, duplex placitum.] Is where a defendant alledgeth for himſelf two ſeveral matters, in bar of the plaintiff's action, when one of them is ſufficient; which ſhall not be admitted: as if a man plead ſeveral things, the one not depending upon the other, the plea is accounted double, and will not be allowed; but if they mutually depend on each other, and the party may not have the laſt plea without the firſt, then it ſhall be received. Kitch. 223. And where a double plea that is wrong, is pleaded; if the plaintiff reply thereto, and take iſſue of one matter; if that be found againſt him, he cannot afterwards move in arreſt of judgment; for by the replication it is allowed to be good. 18 Ed. 4. 17.

If a man pleads two or more matters, when he is compelled to ſhew them, it makes not the plea double; ſo it is where two diſtinct things are pleaded, which require but one anſwer: and in caſe a man pleads two ſeveral matters or things, and only one is material, the other being ſurpluſage, or but matter of inducement, and needing no anſwer, the plea is not double. Hob. 197. Where there are ſeveral inducements to a plea, they ſhall not make the plea double: and double pleas are allowable in aſſiſes of novel diſſeiſin, &c. but not in other actions. Jenk. Cent. 75.

By Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. ſect. 4, It ſhall be lawful for any defendant or tenant in any action or ſuit, or for any plaintiff in replevin, in any court of record, with the leave of the ſame court, to plead as many ſeveral matters thereto, as he ſhall think neceſſary for his defence. That is, in ſo many ſeparate and diſtinct pleas, and where there are more pleas than one. By virtue of this ſtatute defendant is ſaid to plead double, by leave of the court.—See further title Pleading.

DOUBLE QUARREL, duplex querela.] Is a complaint made by any clerk, or other, to the archbiſhop of the province, againſt an inferior Ordinary, for delaying or refuſing to do juſtice in ſome cauſe eccleſiaſtical; as to give ſentence, inſtitute a clerk, &c. and ſeems to be termed a double quarrel, becauſe it is moſt commonly made againſt both the judge, and him at whoſe ſuit juſtice is denied or delayed: the effect whereof is, that the archbiſhop taking notice of the delay, directs his letters under his authentical ſeal to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admoniſh the Ordinary within a certain number of days to do the juſtice required, or otherwiſe to appear before him or his official, and there alledge the cauſe of his delay: and to ſignify to the Ordinary, that if he neither perform the thing enjoined, nor appear and ſhew cauſe againſt it, he himſelf, in his court of audience, will forthwith proceed to do the juſtice that is due. Cowel.

DOVER CASTLE. The conſtable of Dover caſtle ſhall not hold plea of any foreign county within the caſtle gates, except it concern the keeping of the caſtle; nor ſhall he diſtrain the inhabitants of the ports, to plead elſewhere or otherwiſe than as they ought, according to the charters, &c. Stat. 28 Ed. 1. c. 7. See title Cinque Ports.

DOW. To give or endow, from the Latin word do.

DOWAGER, dotata, dotiſſa.] A widow endowed; applied to the widows of Princes, Dukes, Earls, and other great perſonages.

DOWAGER, Queen.] Is the widow of the King, and as ſuch enjoys moſt of the privileges belonging to her as Queen conſort. But it is not high treaſon to conſpire her death, or violate her chaſtity; becauſe the ſucceſſion to the crown is not thereby endangered. But no man can marry her, without ſpecial licence from the King, on pain of forfeiting his lands and goods. 2 Inſt. 18. See Riley's Plac. Parl. 672: 1 Comm. 223. See title King.

DOWER,

DOTARIUM.] The Portion which a Widow hath of the lands of her huſband after his deceaſe, for the ſuſtenance of herſelf, and education of her children. 1 Inſt. 30. See title Tenure, III. 8.

V. Of the Proceedings in Dower.

I. There were formely five kinds of dower in this kingdow. 1. Dower by the Common law; which is a third part of ſuch lands or tenements whereof the huſband was ſole ſeiſed in fee-ſimple, or fee-tail, during the coverture; and this the widow is to enjoy during her life.

2. Dower by cuſtom; which is that part of the huſband's eſtate to which the widow is intitled after the death of her huſband, by the cuſtom of any manor or place, ſo long as ſhe lives ſole and chaſte; and this is more than one third part, for in ſome places ſhe ſhall have half the land, as by the cuſtom of gavelkind; and in divers manors the widow ſhall have the whole during her life, which is called her free-bench: but as cuſtom may inlarge, ſo it may abridge dower to a 4th part. Co. Litt. 33.

3. Dower ad oſtium eccleſiæ; made by the huſband himſelf immediately after the marriage, who named ſuch particular lands of which his wife ſhould be endowed; and in ancient time it was taken, that a man could not by this dower, endow his wife of more than a third part, though of leſs he might: and as the certainty of the land was openly declared by the huſband, the wife after his death might enter into the land of which ſhe was endowed without any other aſſignment. Co. Litt. 34: Lit. § 39.

4. Dower ex aſſenſu patris, which is only a ſpecies of the dower ad oſtium eccleſiæ; which likewiſe was of certain lands named by a ſon who was the huſband, with the conſent of his father then living and always put in writing as ſoon as the ſon was married: and if a woman thus endowed or ad oſtium eccleſiæ, after the death of her huſband, entered into the land allotted her in dower, and agreed thereto, ſhe was concluded to claim any dower by the Common law. Lit. §§ 40, 41.

5. Dower de la pluis belle; which was where the wife was endowed with the faireſt part of her huſband's eſtate.

But of all theſe kinds of Dower, the two firſt are now only in uſe.

II. 1. A Woman to be endowed muſt be the actual wife of the party at the time of his deceaſe. If ſhe be divorced à vinculo matrimonii, ſhe ſhall not be endowed; for ubi nullum matrimonium, ibi nulla dos. Bract. lib. 2. c. 39. § 4. But a divorce à menſa et thoro only, doth not deſtroy the dower; Co. Litt. 32; no, not even for adultery itſelf by the Common law. Yet now by Stat. Weſtm. 2, (13 Ed. 1. c. 34,) if a woman voluntarily leaves (which the law calls eloping from) her huſband, and lives with an adulterer, ſhe ſhall loſe her dower, unleſs her huſband be voluntarily reconciled to her. And in a caſe where John de Camoys had aſſigned his wife by deed, it was decided in parliament, that, notwithſtanding the pretended purgation of the adultery in the ſpiritual court, the wife was not entitled to dower, 2 Inſt. 435. If however after the elopement of a wife, her huſband and ſhe demean themſelves as huſband and wife, it is evidence of reconciliation. Dyer 105. Lady Powys's caſe, where the reconciliation was ſpecially pleaded and allowed.—It was formerly held, that the wife of an ideot might be endowed, though the huſband of an ideot could not be tenant by the curteſy. Co. Litt. 31. But as it ſeems to be at preſent agreed, upon principles of ſound ſenſe, and reaſon, that an ideot cannot marry, being incapable of conſenting to any contract, this doctrine cannot now take place. By the antient law the wife of a perſon attainted of treaſon or felony could not be endowed; to the intent, ſays Staundforde, (P. C. b. 3. c. 3,) that if the love of a man's own life cannot reſtrain him from ſuch atrocious acts, the love of his wife and children may: though Britton, (c. 110.) gives it another turn; viz. that it is preſumed the wife was privy to her huſband's crime. However the Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12, abated the rigour of the common law in this particular, and allowed the wife her dower. But a ſubſequent Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 11, revived the ſeverity againſt the widows of traitors, who are now barred of their dower; (except in the caſe of certain treaſons relating merely to the coin; ſtats. 5 Eliz. c. 11: 18 Eliz. c. 1.: 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26: 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28;) but the widows of felons are not barred. An alien alſo cannot be endowed unleſs ſhe be Queen conſort; for no alien is capable of holding lands. Co. Litt. 31. See poſt at the end of this Div. The wife muſt be above nine years old at her huſband's death, otherwiſe ſhe ſhall not be endowed. Litt. § 36. See 2 Comm. 130.

The wife of a man who is baniſhed ſhall have dower in his life-time; it is held otherwiſe, if he is profeſſed in religion: and a jointreſs of a baniſhed huſband ſhall enjoy her jointure, in his life. Co. Litt. 133: Perk. 5. 307.

If a woman be of the age of nine years, at the death of her huſband, ſhe ſhall be endowed of whatſoever age he is; becauſe after the death of the huſband, the marriage is adjudged lawful. Co. Litt. 33.

The wife of a felo de ſe ſhall have dower. Plow. 261 a. 262 a. So if the huſband be outlawed in treſpaſs, or any civil action, for this works no corruption of blood or forfeiture of lands. Bro. 82: Perk. 388: Co. Litt. 31 a.

If a woman being a lunatick kill her huſband, or any other, yet ſhe ſhall be endowed, becauſe this cannot be felony in her who was deprived of her underſtanding by the act of God; ſo though ſhe be of ſound mind, and refuſed to bring an appeal of his death, when he is killed by another, yet ſhe ſhall be endowed; for this is only a waver of that privilege the law has given her to be avenged of her huſband's murderer; ſo it ſeems if ſhe refuſes to viſit and aſſiſt her huſband in his ſickneſs, yet ſhe ſhall be endowed, for this is only undutifulneſs, which the law does not puniſh with the loſs of her entire ſubſiſtence. Perk. 364, 365.

If a man take an alien to wife and dieth, ſhe ſhall not be endowed, except the wife of the King, who ſhall be endowed by the law of the Crown.—And if a Jew born in England marry a Jeweſs alſo born here, the huſband becomes a chriſtian, purchaſes lands and dies.—The wife, (not being alſo a chriſtian) ſhall not have dower. 1 Inſt. 31 b: 32 a.

In the notes on Mr. Hargrave's edition of Co. Litt. the latter part of the above is confirmed; as to the former there is the following remarkable note. "Anciently a woman alien was not dowable; but by ſpecial act of parliament not printed, Rot. Parl. 8 H. 5. n. 15, all women aliens who from thenceforth ſhould be married to Engliſh men by licence of the King, are enabled to demand their Dower after the death of their huſbands, to whom they ſhould in time to come be married, in the ſame manner as Engliſh women. But this act did not extend to thoſe married before; and therefore in Rot. Parl. 9 H. 5. n. 9, there is a ſpecial act of parliament to enable Beatrice counteſs of Arundel born in Portugal to demand her Dower. Hal. MSS: See Acc. 1 Ro. Ab. 675."—See alſo 9 Vin. 210. (8vo. ed.)

2. A Woman is now by law entitled to be endowed of all lands and tenements, of which her huſband was ſeiſed in fee-ſimple, or fee-tail general at any time during the coverture; and of which any iſſue, which ſhe might have had, might by poſſibility have been heir. Litt. § 36. 53. Therefore if a man, ſeiſed in fee-ſimple, has a ſon by his firſt wife, and afterwards marries a ſecond wife, ſhe ſhall be endowed of his lands; for her iſſue might by poſſibility have been heir, on the death of the ſon, by the former wife. But, if there be a donee in ſpecial tail, who holds lands to him and the heirs of his body begotten on A. his wife; though A. may be endowed of theſe lands, yet if A. dies, and he marries a ſecond wife, that ſecond wife ſhall never be endowed of the lands entailed; for no iſſue, that ſhe could have, could by any poſſibility inherit them. Ibid. § 53.

But in caſe land be given to the huſband and wife in tail, the remainder in tail to the huſband, and the firſt wife dying without iſſue, he marries another wife; this ſecond wife will be intitled to dower, after his death. Lit. § 53: 40 Ed. 3. 4: 2 Shep. Abr. 63. For here he hath hath an eſtate in tail. The wife of a tenant in common, but not a jointenant, ſhall have dower; and ſhe ſhall hold her part in common with the tenants in common. Kitch. 160.

A ſeiſin in law of the huſband will be as effectual as a ſeiſin in deed, in order to render the wife dowable; for it is not in the wife's power to bring the huſband's title to an actual ſeiſin, as it is in the huſband's power to do with regard to the wife's lands; which is one reaſon why he ſhall not be a tenant by the curteſy, but of ſuch lands whereof the wife, or he himſelf in her right, was actually ſeiſed in deed. Co. Litt. 31.—The ſeiſin of the huſband, for a tranſitory inſtant only, when the ſame act which gives him the eſtate conveys it alſo out of him again, (as where by a fine land is granted to a man, and he immediately renders it back by the ſame fine,) will not entitle the wife to dower. Cro. Jac. 615: 2 Rep. 67: Co. Litt. 31: for the land was merely in tranſitu and never veſted in the huſband, the grant and render being one continued act. But, if the land abide in him for the interval of but one ſingle moment, it ſeems that the wife ſhall be endowed thereof. And in ſhort a widow may be endowed of all her huſband's lands, tenements, and hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, under the reſtrictions before mentioned; unleſs there be ſome ſpecial reaſon to the contrary.

Thus, a woman ſhall not be endowed of a caſtle, built for defence of the realm. Co. Litt. 31, 5: 3 Lev. 401: Nor of a common without ſtint; for, as the heir would then have one portion of this common, and the widow another, and both without ſtint, the common would be doubly ſtocked. Co. Litt. 32: 1 Jon. 315. Copyhold eſtates are alſo not liable to dower, being only eſtates at the lord's will; unleſs by the ſpecial cuſtom of the manor, in which caſe it is uſually called the widow's free-bench. 4 Rep. 22. See title Copyhold. But where Dower is allowable, it matters not though the huſband alien the lands during the coverture; for he aliens them liable to dower. Co. Litt. 32.

It is now ſettled that although the huſband may be tenant by the curteſy of a truſt eſtate of inheritance, (ſee title Curteſy,) the wife is not entitled to Dower out of ſuch an eſtate. 3 P. Wms. 229.—The reaſon aſſigned for this is that the wife was not endowed of a uſe at Common Law.—And from analogy to truſts it has been determined that a wife ſhall not be endowed of an equity of redemption, where the eſtate was mortgaged in fee by the huſband previous to the marriage. 1 Bro. C. R. 326.

The following further particulars as to what eſtate a woman ſhall be endowed of are worthy the attention of the Student.

If lands are exchanged by the huſband for other lands, the wife may be endowed of which lands ſhe will, as the huſband was ſeiſed of both; though ſhe may not be endowed of the lands given and taken in exchange. Co. Litt. 31.

Where the eſtate, which the huſband hath during the marriage, is ended, there the wife ſhall loſe her dower. New. Nat. Br. 333. But of an eſtate-tail in lands determined, a woman ſhall be endowed; in like manner as a man may be tenant by the curteſy of her lands. Co. Litt. 31. And if a wife be endowed of her third part, and afterwards evicted by an elder title, ſhe ſhall have a new writ of dower, and be endowed of the other lands. 2 Danv. Abr. 670. Though this is, where it is the immediate eſtate deſcended to the heir; and not when it is the eſtate of an alienee. 9 Rep. 17. The wife is dowable where lands are recovered againſt the huſband by default or covin: and a woman deforced of her dower ſhall recover damages, viz. the value of her dower from her huſband's death. 13 E. 1: 20 H. 3. If the huſband doth not die ſeiſed, after demand and refuſal to aſſign dower to her, ſhe ſhall have damages from the time of the refuſal. Jenk. Cent. 45. She ſhall be endowed of a reverſion, expectant on a term of years; and of a rent reſerved thereon. Lutw. 729. If the huſband hath only an eſtate for life, remainder to another in tail, though the remainder over is to his heirs, the wife ſhall not be endowed. 2 Danv. 656. A woman ſhall not be endowed of the goods of her huſband; nor of a caſtle, or capital meſſuage: but of all other lands and tenements ſhe may. Co. Lit. 35.

A grantee of a rent in fee or tail, dies without heir, his wife ſhall be endowed: but not where the rent ariſes upon a reſervation to the donor and his heirs, on a gift in tail, and the donee dies without iſſue; for this is a collateral limitation. Plowd. 156: F. N. B. 149. If during the coverture, the huſband doth extinguiſh rents by releaſe, &c. yet ſhe ſhall be endowed of them; for as to her dower in the eye of the law, they have continuance. Co. Lit. 32. And where a rent is deſcended to the huſband but he dies before any day of payment; notwithſtanding the wife ſhall be endowed of it. 1 H. 7. 17. If lands are given to the huſband and wife in tail, and after the death of the huſband, the wife diſagrees, ſhe may recover her dower; for by her waiving her eſtate, her huſband in judgment of law was ſole ſeiſed ab initio. 3 Rep. 27. If lands are improved, the wife is to have one third according to the improved value. Co. Lit. 32. And if the ground delivered her be ſowed, ſhe ſhall have the corn. 2 Inſt. 81.

Dower is an inſeparable incident to an eſtate in tail or fee, and cannot be taken away by condition. If one ſeiſed in fee of lands make a gift in tail, on condition that the wife ſhall not have dower, the condition is void. 6 Rep. 41. If tenant in tail die without iſſue, ſo that the land reverts to the donor; or in caſe he covenants to ſtand ſeiſed to uſes, and dies, his wife will be endowed: and a deviſe of land by the huſband to his wife by will, is no bar of her dower, but a benevolence. 8 Rep. 34: Yelv. 51: Bro. Dower. 69. See poſt. IV.

A perſon grants and conveys land to D. and his heirs, on condition, to re-demiſe the ſame back, &c. which afterwards he does, and dies; here D.'s widow may nevertheleſs be endowed. Abr. Caſ. 217. A. is tenant in tail of lands, the remainder to B. in tail, remainder to A. in fee; if A. bargains and ſells the land to C. and his heirs, the wife of the bargainee ſhall have dower, determinable upon the death of the tenant in tail. 10 Rep. 96. And if a feoffment be made upon condition to reinfeoff, and the feoffee take a wife, ſhe may have her dower till re-infeoffment, or an entry made for not doing it: and ſo it is of other defeaſible eſtates. 2 Rep. 59: Perk. §. 420. If one be diſſeiſed, and after doth marry, if he die before entry, his wife ſhall not have dower: and where a perſon recovers land in a real action, and before his entry or execution made he dieth, the wife ſhall not be endowed of this land. 2 Rep. 56: Perk. 377. In theſe caſes the huſband was not actually ſeiſed, ſed qu.? for, as before obſerved, where there is a ſeiſin in law, ſhe ſhall be endowed. Co. Lit. 31, 32. &c. So that theſe caſes depend on the conſtruction of what is, and what is not a ſeiſin in law. And ſee poſt. Div. IV. towards the end, and Perk. 379, 380.

Although of copyhold lands a woman ſhall not be endowed, unleſs there be a ſpecial cuſtom for it; yet if there be a cuſtom to be endowed thereof, then ſhe ſhall have the aſſiſtance of ſuch laws as are made for the more ſpeedy recovery of dower in general, being within the ſame miſchief, and therefore ſhall recover damages within the ſtatute of Merton. 4 Co. 22: Hob 216: 5 Co. 116.

Of tithes women were not dowable till 32 H. 8. c. 7; for before that ſtatute tithes were not a lay fee, but now they are dowable of them. Style's P. R. 122: 11 Co. 25: Co. Lit. 32 a. 159 a: 1 Rol. Abr. 682.

Of an advowſon, be it appendant or in groſs, a woman ſhall be endowed; for this may be divided as to the fruit and profit of it, viz. to have the third preſentation. See Perk. 343, 344: F. N. B. 148, 150: Co. Lit. 32: Cro. Jac. 621: Cro. Eliz. 360: 1 Rol. Abr. 683: Co. Lit. 379: 3 Leon. 155: Cro. Jac. 691.

III. By the old law, grounded on the feodal exactions, a woman could not be endowed without a fine paid to the lord: neither could ſhe marry again without his licence; leſt ſhe ſhould contract herſelf, and ſo convey part of the feud, to the lord's enemy. Mirr. c. 1. § 3. This licence the lord took care to be well paid for; and, as it ſeems, would ſometimes force the dowager to a ſecond marriage, in order to gain the fine. But to remedy theſe oppreſſions, it was provided, firſt by the famous charter of Henry I. A. D. 1101, and afterwards by Magna Charta c. 7, that the widow ſhall pay nothing for her marriage, nor ſhall be diſtrained to marry afreſh if ſhe chooſes to live without a huſband; but ſhall not however marry againſt the conſent of the lord; and farther, that nothing ſhall be taken for aſſignment of the widow's dower, but that ſhe ſhall remain in her huſband's capital manſion-houſe for forty days after his death, during which time her dower ſhall be aſſigned. Theſe forty days are called the widow's quarentine; a term made uſe of in law to ſignify the number of forty days, whether applied to this occaſion or any other. The particular lands, to be held in dower, muſt be aſſigned, by the heir of the huſband, or his guardian; Co. Litt. 34, 5. not only for the ſake of notoriety, but alſo to entitle the lord of the fee, to demand his ſervices of the heir, in reſpect of the lands ſo holden. For the heir by this entry becomes tenant thereof to the lord, and the widow is immediate tenant to the heir, by a kind of ſubinfeudation, or under-tenancy, completed by this inveſtiture or aſſignment; which tenure may ſtill be created, notwithſtanding the ſtatute of quia emptores, becauſe the heir parts, not with the fee-ſimple, but only with an eſtate for life. If the heir or his guardian do not aſſign her dower within the time of quarentine, or do aſſign it unfairly, ſhe has her remedy at law, and the ſheriff is appointed to aſſign it. Co. Litt. 34, 5. Or if the heir (being under age) or his guardian aſſign more than ſhe ought to have, it may be afterwards remedied by a writ of admeaſurement of dower. F. N. B. 148: Finch L. 314: ſt. Weſtm. 2, 13 Ed. 1. c. 7. If the thing of which ſhe is endowed be diviſible, her dower muſt be ſet out by metes and bounds, but if it be indiviſible, ſhe muſt be endowed ſpecially; as of the third preſentation to a church, the third toll-diſh of a mill, the third part of the profits of an office, the third ſheaf of tithe and the like. Co. Litt. 32.

The aſſignment of the lands is for the life of the woman; and if lands are aſſigned to a woman for years, in recompenſe of dower, this is no bar of dower; for it is not ſuch an eſtate therein as ſhe ſhould have. 2 Danv. Abr. 668. Alſo where other land is aſſigned to the woman, that is no part of the lands wherein ſhe claims dower; that aſſignment will not be good or binding: And there muſt be certainty in what is aſſigned; otherwiſe, though it be by agreement, it may be void. 4 Rep. 2: 1 Inſt. 34. If a wife accept and enter upon leſs land than the third of the whole, on the ſheriff's aſſignment ſhe is barred to demand more. Moor 679. But if where a wife is intitled to dower of the lands of her firſt huſband; her ſecond huſband accepts of this dower leſs than her third part, after his death ſhe may refuſe the ſame, and have her full third part. Fitz. Dower, 121.

If a wife having right of dower in the land, accept of a leaſe for years thereof after the death of her huſband, it ſuſpends the dower; though not ſuch acceptance of a leaſe before the huſband's death, &c. for then the wife has only a title to have dower, and not an immediate right of dower. Bro. Ca. 372: Jenk. Cent. 15. A widow accepting of dower of the heir, againſt common right, ſhall hold it ſubject to the charges of her huſband; but otherwiſe it is if ſhe be endowed againſt common right by the ſheriff. 2 Danv. 672. By proviſion of law, the wife may take a third part of the huſband's lands, and hold them diſcharged. Ibid. If dower be aſſigned a woman on condition, or with an exception; the condition and exception are void. Cro. Eliz. 541.

Where there are three manors, one of them may be aſſigned to the wife in dower in lieu of dower in all three; though it is ſaid that a third part of every manor ought to be aſſigned. Moor 12, 47. The ſheriff may aſſign a rent out of the land in lieu of dower; and her acceptance of the rent will bar dower out of the ſame land, but not of other lands. 2 And. 31: Dyer 91: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 680.

A woman intitled to dower cannot enter till it be aſſigned to her, and ſet out either by the heir, tertenant or ſheriff, in certainty. 1 Rol. Abr. 681: Dyer 343: Plowd. 529: Bro. 16: Co. Lit. 34 b. 37 a. b.

None can aſſign dower but thoſe who have a freehold, or againſt whom a writ of dower lies; therefore a tenant by ſtatute merchant, ſtatute ſtaple, or elegit, or leſſee for years cannot aſſign dower, for none of theſe have an eſtate large enough to anſwer the plaintiff's demand. Perk. 403, 404: Co. Lit. 35: Bro. 63, 94: 1 Rol. Abr. 681: 6 Co. 57.

If a woman be dowable of land, meadow, paſture, wood, &c. and any of theſe be aſſigned in lieu of dower of all the reſt, it is good, though it be againſt common right, which gives her but the third part of each, for the heir's enjoyment of the reſidue ſufficiently accounts for her title to what ſhe has. 1 Rol. Abr. 683: Moor, pl. 47, 66.

If lands whereof a woman hath no right to be endowed, or a rent out of ſuch lands be aſſigned in lieu of her dower, this does not bar her demand of dower, for ſhe having no manner of title to thoſe lands, cannot without livery and ſeiſin be any more than tenant at will, which is no ſufficient recompence for an eſtate for life, which her dower was to be. Perk. 407: Co. Lit. 34: 4 Co. 1: Co. Lit. 169: Bro. 3.

If the heir within age aſſign to the wife more land in dower than ſhe ought to have, he himſelf ſhall have a writ of admeaſurement of dower at full age by the Common law: ſo if too much be aſſigned in dower by the heir within age, or his guardian in chivalry; and the heir dies, his heir ſhall have ſuch writ, to rectify the aſſignment; but the heir, in whoſe time the aſſignment of too much was by the guardian, cannot have ſuch writ till his full age, becauſe till then the intereſt of the guardian continues; and if any wrong be done, it is to the guardian himſelf, and not to the heir; if a diſſeiſor aſſigns too much, the heir of the diſſeiſee ſhall have admeaſurement by the Common law. F. N. B. 148, 332: Co. Lit. 39 a: 2 Inſt. 367: 7 H. 2. 4. See Statutes 13 E. 1. c. 7 & 8.

If the heir within age, before the guardian enters, aſſigns too much in dower, the guardian ſhall have a writ of admeaſurement of dower, by the ſtatute of W. 2. c. 7. before which ſtatute the guardian had no remedy becauſe the writ of admeaſurement being a real action, lay not for the guardian, who had but a chattel; alſo by the ſame ſtatute it is provided, that if the guardian purſue ſuch writ feintly, or by colluſion with the wife, the heir at full age ſhall have a writ of admeaſurement, and may alledge the feint pleading or colluſion generally. 2 Inſt 367.

If the wife after aſſignment of dower improves the lands, ſo as thereby they become of greater value than the other two parts, no writ of admeaſurement lies; ſo if they be of greater value, by reaſon of mines open at the time of the aſſignment, no writ of admeaſurement lies, becauſe the land in quantity was no more than ſhe ought to have; and then it is lawful to work the mines, which were open at the time of ſuch aſſignment. F. N. B. 149: 2 Inſt. 368: 5 Co. 12.

IV. Upon preconcerted marriages, and in eſtates of conſiderable conſequence, tenancy in Dower happens very ſeldom: for the claim of the wife to her dower at the Common law, diffuſing itſelf ſo extenſively, it became a great clog to alienations, and was otherwiſe very inconvenient to families. Wherefore ſince the alteration of the ancient law reſpecting Dower ad oſtium eccleſiæ, which hath occaſioned the entire diſuſe of that ſpecies of Dower, jointures have been introduced in their ſtead, as a bar to the claim at Common-law.

A widow may be barred of her Dower, not only by elopement, divorce, being an alien, the treaſon of her huſband, and other diſabilities before-mentioned, (See ante II.) but alſo by detaining the title deeds, or evidences of the eſtate from the heir, until ſhe reſtores them. Ibid. 39. Though if ſhe denies the detainer, and it is found againſt her, ſhe loſes her Dower. Hob. 199: 9 Rep. 19. By the Stat. of Glouceſter, 6 Ed. 1. c. 7, if a dowager aliens the land aſſigned her for Dower, ſhe forfeits it ipſo facto, and the heir may recover it by action. A woman alſo may be barred of her Dower, by levying a fine with her huſband, or ſuffering a recovery of the lands during her coverture. Pig. of Recov. 66: 2 Rep. 74: Plowd. 514.—See title Fine and Recovery.

But the moſt uſual method of barring Dower, is by jointures, as regulated by the Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 10.

A Jointure, which, ſtrictly ſpeaking, ſignifies a joint-eſtate, limited to both huſband and wife, but in common acceptation extends alſo to a ſole eſtate, limited to the wife only, is thus defined by Coke, 1 Inſt. 36. "A competent livelihood of freehold for the wife, of lands and tenements; to take effect, in profit or poſſeſſion, preſently after the death of the huſband; for the life of the wife at leaſt." This deſcription is framed from the Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 10, commonly called the ſtatute of Uſes. (See title Uſes.)—Before the making of that ſtatute, the greateſt part of the land in England was conveyed to uſes; the property or poſſeſſion of the ſoil being veſted in one man, and the uſe, and profits thereof, in another; whoſe directions, with regard to the diſpoſition thereof, the former was in conſcience obliged to follow, and might be compelled by a court of equity to obſerve. Now, though a huſband had the uſe of lands in abſolute fee ſimple, yet the wife was not entitled to any Dower therein; he not being ſeiſed thereof: wherefore it became uſual, on marriage, to ſettle by expreſs deed ſome ſpecial eſtate to the uſe of the huſband and his wife, for their lives, in joint-tenancy, or jointure; which ſettlement would be a proviſion for the wife, in caſe ſhe ſurvived her huſband. At length the ſtatute of uſes ordained, that ſuch as had the uſe of lands, ſhould, to all intents and purpoſes, be reputed and taken to be abſolutely ſeiſed and poſſeſſed of the ſoil itſelf. In conſequence of which legal ſeiſin, all wives would have become dowable of ſuch lands as were held to the uſe of their huſbands, and alſo entitled at the ſame time to any ſpecial lands that might be ſettled in jointure: had not the ſame ſtatute provided, that upon making ſuch an eſtate in jointure to the wife before marriage, ſhe ſhall be for ever precluded from her Dower. 4 Rep. 1, 2.

But in this caſe, theſe four requiſites muſt be punctually obſerved.—1. The jointure muſt take effect immediately on the death of the huſband.—2. It muſt be for the life of the wife herſelf at leaſt, and not pur auter vie, or for any term of years, or other ſmaller eſtate.—3. It muſt be made to herſelf, and no other in truſt for her.—4. It muſt be made in ſatisfaction of her whole Dower, and not of any particular part of it, and muſt be ſo expreſſed to be in the deed; or it may be averred to be ſo. 1 Inſt. 36: 4 Rep. 3: Ow. 33.

If the jointure be made to her after marriage, ſhe has her election after her huſband's death as in Dower ad oſtium eccleſiæ, and may either accept it, or refuſe it, and betake herſelf to her Dower at Common-law, for ſhe was not capable of conſenting to it during coverture.

So where a deviſe is expreſſed to be given in lieu and ſatisfaction of Dower, or where that is the clear and manifeſt intention of the teſtator, the wife ſhall not have both, but ſhall have her choice. 1 Inſt. 366. in n.

If, by any fraud, or accident, a jointure made before marriage proves to be on a bad title, and the jointreſs is evicted, or turned out of poſſeſſion, ſhe ſhall then (by the proviſions of the ſame Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10,) have her Dower pro tanto at the Common-law.

If a woman who is under age at the time of marriage, agrees to a jointure and ſettlement in bar of her Dower, and of her diſtributive ſhare of her huſband's perſonal property, in caſe he dies inteſtate; ſhe cannot afterwards waive it; but is as much bound as if ſhe were of age at the time of the marriage. Drury v. Drury, (or Buckingham E. v. Drury) 3 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 492.

There

There are ſome advantages attending tenants in dower that do not extend to jointreſſes; and ſo vice verſâ, jointreſſes are in ſome reſpects more privileged than tenants in dower. Tenant in Dower by the old Common-law, is ſubject to no tolls or taxes; and hers is almoſt the only eſtate on which, when derived from the King's debtor, the King cannot diſtrain for his debt; if contracted during the coverture: Co. Lit. 31 a: F. N. B. 150. But on the other hand, a widow may enter at once, without any formal proceſs, on her jointure land, as ſhe alſo might have done on Dower ad oſtium eccleſiæ, which a jointure in many points reſembles; and the reſemblance was ſtill greater, while that ſpecies of Dower continued in its primitive ſtate; whereas no ſmall trouble, and a very tedious method of proceeding, is neceſſary to compel a legal aſſignment of Dower. Co. Lit. 36. And, what is more, though Dower be forfeited by the treaſon of the huſband, yet lands ſettled in jointure remain unimpeached to the widow. 1 Inſt. 37. Wherefore Coke very juſtly gives it the preference, as being more ſure and ſafe to the widow, than even Dower ad oſtium eccleſiæ, the moſt eligible ſpecies of any. 2 Comm. 135, &c. An additional advantage is, that a jointure is not forfeited by the adultery of the wife as Dower; and Chancery will decree againſt the huſband a performance of marriage articles, though he alledges and proves that the wife lives ſeparate from him in adultery. Sidney v. Sidney, 3 P. Wms. 269, &c. and the notes to that caſe.

Further as to the means by which a woman may be barred of her Dower.—Where a woman releaſes her right to him in reverſion, her Dower may be extinguiſhed. 8 Rep. 151.

If a woman takes a leaſe for life of her huſband's lands after his death, ſhe ſhall have no Dower, becauſe ſhe cannot demand it againſt herſelf; and if ſhe takes a leaſe for years only, yet ſhe ſhall not ſue to have Dower during theſe years, becauſe it was her own act to ſuſpend the fruit and effect of her Dower during that time. Perk. 350: F. N. B. 149: Mo. pl. 403.

If a recovery be had againſt the huſband by colluſion, this ſhall not bar the wife of Dower; as if the recovery be by confeſſion, or reddition, which are always underſtood to be by colluſion, the huſband alway's acting and concurring in obtaining of them; but it ſeems to have been a very great doubt, whether a recovery by default ſhould not be a bar: and the better opinion being that ſuch recovery was a bar at Common-law, therefore the Stat. W. 2. cap. 4, was made, which ordains that notwithſtanding ſuch recovery by default, &c. pleaded, the tenant ſhall moreover in bar of the Dower ſhew his right to the tenements recovered; and if it be found that he had no right, then ſhall the demandant recover her Dower notwithſtanding ſuch recovery by default againſt her huſband. 2 Inſt. 349: Perk. 376.

By Stat. W. 2. cap. 4, it appears, that if the recoveror had right, then the wife is barred; therefore if the heir of the diſſeiſor be in by deſcent, and the diſſeiſee enters upon him, and marries, and the heir of the diſſeiſor recovers by default, or reddition, in a writ of entry, in nature of an aſſiſe, and the huſband dies, his wife ſhall not have Dower, becauſe he, who recovered, had right to the poſſeſſion by the deſcent; aliter, if this diſſeiſin, deſcent, &c. were after marriage, becauſe the huſband was ſeiſed before of a rightful eſtate during the coverture, whereof his wife had title of Dower, which cannot be defeated by the diſſeiſin, deſcent and recovery, which all happened during the coverture. Perk. 379, 380.

If the huſband levy a fine with proclamation of his lands, and dies, his wife is bound to make her claim within five years after his death; otherwiſe ſhe ſhall be barred of her Dower; for though her title of Dower was not conſummate at the time of the fine levied; yet it being initiate by the marriage and ſeiſin of the huſband, the fine begins to work upon it preſently after the huſband's death; and if ſhe does not claim it within five years after, ſhe ſhall be barred. 2 Co. 93: 10 Co. 49, 99: 3 Inſt. 216: Hob. 265: Mo. pl. 154, 879: Dyer 224: 13 Co. 20.

V. The Wife is, as ſoon as ſhe can after the deceaſe of her huſband, to demand her Dower, leſt ſhe loſe the value from the time of his death: and in action of Dower, the firſt proceſs is ſummons to appear: and if the tenant or defendant do not appear, nor caſt an eſſoin, a grand cape lies to ſeize the lands, &c. By Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 3. every ſummons on the land is to be made fourteen days before the return of the writ, and proclamation made at the church door on a Sunday, or elſe no grand cape to be awarded, but an alias and pluries ſummons till proclamation. But on the return of the writ of ſummons, the attorney for the tenant or defendant may enter with the filazer that the tenant appears, and prays view, &c. Then a writ of view goes out, whereby the ſheriff is to ſhew the tenant the land in queſtion; upon the return of which writ of view, the tenant's attorney takes a declaration, and puts in a plea; the moſt general one is, ne unques ſeizie, &c. viz. that the huſband was never ſeiſed of any eſtate, whereof the wife can be endowed; and when iſſue is joined, you muſt proceed to trial, as in other actions; upon trial, the jury are to give damages for the meſne profits from the death of the huſband (if he die ſeiſed) for which, execution ſhall be made out; and then you have a writ to the ſheriff to give poſſeſſion of a third part of the lands. The ſheriff may give poſſeſſion or ſeiſin to the woman by a clod, or by graſs growing on the land, or by any beaſt being thereon. 40 E. 3: Fitz. Dower 48.—See Impey's Sheriff.

A widow may recover her Dower with a ceſſat executio, in caſe there be any thing objected, precedent to the title of Dower, &c. till that is determined. 1 Nelſ. 684, 687: 1 Salk. 291. Judgment in Dower is to recover a third part of lands and tenements by metes and bounds. A wife may have her writ of dower againſt an heir, an alienee, a diſſeiſor, &c. or againſt any one that has power to aſſign Dower; if the lord enters on the land for an eſcheat, ſhe may bring it againſt him, but to the King ſhe muſt ſue by petition. 9 Rep. 10: Plowd. 141: Dyer 263: Co. Lit. 59. This writ was brought againſt eight perſons feoffees of the huſband after marriage, two confeſſed the action, and the other ſix pleaded to iſſue; here the demandant had judgment to recover the third part of two parts of the land, in eight parts to be divided: and after the iſſue being found for the demandant againſt the other ſix, ſhe recovered againſt them the third part of the ſix parts of the ſame land as her Dower. Dyer 187: Co. Lit. 32.

At

At the Common-law, before the Stat. of W. 1. c. 39, if a woman had accepted any part of her Dower, though never ſo ſmall, of any one tenant in any one county or town, ſhe had no other remedy for the reſidue, but by a writ of right of Dower; for if ſhe brought a writ of dower unde nihil habet, it was a good plea in abatement, that ſhe had accepted ſuch a part of ſuch a tenant, in ſuch a town or county; which being a great miſchief to the woman is remedied by that ſtatute, which provides that it ſhall be no plea in abatement, to ſay that ſhe hath received part of her Dower of any other perſon before the writ purchaſed; and this extends as well to guardian in chivalry as to the tenant of the land, becauſe ſuch guardian is to render her Dower. 2 Inſt. 261.

As to damages in Dower, they are given by the Stat. of Merton, c. 1; but that ſtatute extends only to the poſſeſſory action of dower unde nihil habeat, and not to the writ of right of dower, becauſe they are intended to be given for the detention of the poſſeſſion; and on writs of right, where the right itſelf is queſtionable, no damages are given, becauſe no wrong done till the right be determined; alſo that ſtatute extends only to lands, whereof the huſband died ſeiſed; and therefore judgment for the damages was reverſed, becauſe the jury did not find that the huſband died ſeiſed; for otherwiſe ſhe ſhall have no damages; as if the huſband aliens and takes back an eſtate for life, the wife ſhall recover Dower, but no damages; becauſe this dying ſeiſed was only of an eſtate of freehold; but if he makes a leaſe for years only, rendering rent, ſhe ſhall recover a third part of the reverſion with a third part of the rent and damages, becauſe there he died ſeiſed as the ſtatute ſpeaks. Co. Lit. 32: Dyer 284. pl. 33: Yelv. 112: Dr. & Stud. lib. 2. c. 13. § 166: 2 Inſt. 80.

Damages muſt be after demand of Dower, for the heir is not bound to aſſign this proviſion till demanded, becauſe the law caſts the freehold of the whole upon him, which he cannot divide without the concurrence of the wife; but a demand in pais before good teſtimony is ſufficient; and if the heir appear the firſt day on ſummons, and plead that he hath been always ready, and ſtill is, to render her Dower; ſhe may plead ſuch requeſt; and iſſue may be taken upon it; but the feoffee of the heir cannot plead tout temps priſt, becauſe he had not the land all the time ſince the death of the anceſtor, and therefore ſhe ſhall recover the meſne profits, and damages againſt him, and if he hath not provided his indemnity and recompence againſt the heir, it is his own folly. Co. Lit. 32.

If the heir or feoffee aſſign Dower, and the wife accepteth thereof, ſhe loſes her damages, becauſe having the Dower, which is the principal, ſhe cannot ſue for the damages, which are but conſequential or acceſſory. Co. Lit. 33 a.

Damages are given in Dower from the death of the huſband and to the return of the writ of enquiry, though the writ of ſeiſin iſſued a year before, but was not executed. Hardw. 19, &c. Where there are two jointenants in Dower, and one dies after judgment for damages, and his heir and the other jointenant bring error, the value from the time of the judgment to the affirmance, cannot be recovered againſt the ſurviving plaintiff in error only. Id. 50.—See 2 Stra. 271. On a writ of Dower, damages cannot be awarded by 16 Car. 2. without ſpeeding a writ of enquiry. Hardw. 51.

DOWL and DEAL, A diviſion: from the Brit. Dal, diviſio, from the Sax. dælan, i. e. dividere, and from thence comes the word dealing. So the ſtones which are laid to the boundaries of lands, are called dowle ſtones, i. e. ſuch as divide the lands. Cowel.

DOWRY, Dos Mulieris.] Was in ancient time applied to that which the wife brings her huſband in marriage; otherwiſe called maritagium, or marriage goods: but theſe are termed more properly, goods given in marriage, and the marriage portion. Co. Lit. 31. This word is often confounded with Dower; though it hath a different meaning from it.

DRY RENT, A rent reſerved without clauſe of diſtreſs. See Rent-ſeck.

DUCES TECUM, Is a writ commanding a perſon to appear at a certain day in the Court of Chancery, and to bring with him ſome writings, evidences, or other things which the court would view. Reg. Orig. So ſubpœnas duces tecum, are often ſued out at Common-law, to compel witneſſes, to produce, on trials, at Niſi prius, deeds, bonds, bills, notes, books, or memorandums, &c. which are in their cuſtody or power, and which relate to the iſſue in queſtion. But if they are in the poſſeſſion or power of the adverſe party or his attorney, it is cuſtomary to give notice to the attorney to produce them, and on proof made in open court, before the judge of Niſi prius, of ſuch notice, the court generally compels the attorney, or his client to produce the ſame, if material. If not produced, parol evidence may be given of their contents. See titles Evidence; Trial.

DUCES TECUM LICET LANGUIDUS, A writ directed to the ſheriff, upon a return that he cannot bring his priſoner without danger of death, he being adeo languidus; then the court grants a habeas corpus in the nature of a duces tecum licet languidus. Book Entr. But this is now out of uſe; and where the perſon's life would be endangered by removal, the law will not permit it to be done.

DUCKING-STOOL. See Caſtigatory.

DUES, eccleſiaſtical, non-payment of. Various Dues to the clergy, are cognizable in the ſpiritual court; which makes decrees for their actual payment. Offerings, oblations, and obventions, not exceeding the value of 40*s.* may by Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 6, be recovered in a ſummary way, before two juſtices of peace.

DUEL, Duellum.] In our ancient law is a fight between perſons in a doubtful caſe for the trial of the truth. Fleta.—See title Battel. But this kind of Duel is diſuſed; and what we now call a Duel is, a fighting between two, upon ſome quarrel precedent: wherein, if a perſon is killed, both the principal and his ſeconds are guilty of murder, and whether the ſeconds fight or not. H. P. C. 47, 51.

If two perſons quarrel over night, and appoint to fight the next day; or quarrel in the morning, and agree to fight in the afternoon; or ſuch a conſiderable time after, by which it may be preſumed the blood was cooled; and then they meet and fight a Duel, and one kill the other,

it is murder. 3 Inſt. 52: H. P. C. 48: Kel. 56. And whenever it appears, that he who kills another in a Duel, or fighting on a ſudden quarrel, was maſter of his temper at the time, he is guilty of murder; as if after the quarrel he fall into another diſcourſe, and talk calmly thereon; or alledge that the place where the quarrel happens is not convenient for fighting; or that his ſhoes are too high, if he ſhould fight at preſent, &c. Kel. 56: 1 Lev. 180.

If one challenge another, who refuſes to meet him, but tells him that he ſhall go the next day to ſuch a place about buſineſs, and then the challenger meets him on the road, and aſſaults the other; if the other in this caſe kill him, it will be only manſlaughter; for here is no acceptance of the challenge, or agreement to fight: and if the perſon challenged refuſeth to meet the challenger, but tells him that he wears a ſword, and is always ready to defend himſelf; if then the challenger attack him, and is killed by the other, it is neither murder nor manſlaughter, if neceſſary in his own defence. Kel. 56.—See further at length title Murder; and as to Challenges, title Challenge to Fight.

DUKE, Lat. Dux, Fr. Duc, à Ducendo.] Signified among the ancient Romans, ductorem exercitûs, ſuch as led their armies; ſince which, they were called duces, and were governors of provinces, &c. In ſome nations, the ſovereigns of the country are called by this name; as the Duke of Savoy, &c. In England, the title of Duke is the next dignity to the Prince of Wales: and the firſt Duke we had in England was Edward the Black Prince, ſo famed in our Engliſh hiſtories for heroick actions; who was created Duke of Cornwall in the 11th year of King Ed. III. After which, there were more made in ſuch manner as that their titles deſcended to their poſterity. They are created with ſolemnity, per cincturam gladii, cappæ & circuli aurei in capite impoſitionem. Cambd. Brit. p. 166.—See title Peer.

DUM FUIT INFRA ÆTATEM, A writ whereby an infant who had made a feoffment of his lands, when he came of full age, might recover thoſe lands and tenements which were ſo aliened: and within age, he might enter into the land, and take it back again, and by his entry he ſhould be remitted to his anceſtor's right. New Nat. Br. 426. If the huſband and wife alien the wife's land, during the nonage of both of them, the wife at her full age after the death of the huſband, ſhall have a writ of dum fuit infra ætatem. M. 14 E. 3. By this writ to the ſheriff, he ſhall command A. that he render to B. who is of full age, two meſſuages and lands, &c. which B. demiſed to him, while he was within age, as he ſaith; or into which the ſaid A. hath not entered, but by C. to whom the ſaid B. the ſame demiſed; and unleſs, &c. F. N. B. 477.—See title Infant.

DUM NON FUIT COMPOS MENTIS, Is a writ that lay where a man not of ſound memory aliened any lands or tenements, againſt the alienee. And he ſhall alledge that he was not of ſane memory, but being viſited with infirmity, loſt his diſcretion for a time, ſo as not to be capable of making a grant, &c. New Nat. Br. 449. See title Diſability; Lunatic; and F. N. B. 202.

DUN, Down, Which termination is now varied into don; it ſignifies a mountain or high open place; ſo that the names of thoſe towns which end in dun, or don, as Aſhdon, &c. were either built on hills, or near them in open places. Domeſday.

DUNSETTS, Thoſe who dwell on hills or mountains.

DUNUM; DUNA, Dunnarium, A down or hill. Chart. MSS.

DUODENA, A jury of twelve men. Walſing. 256.

DUODENA MANU, Twelve witneſſes to purge a criminal of an offence. See titles Jurare duodecimâ manu; Wager of Law.

DUPLEX QUERELA, A proceſs eccleſiaſtical. See Double Quarrel.

DUPLICATE. Is uſed for the ſecond letters-patent, granted by the Lord Chancellor, in a caſe wherein he had before done the ſame; which were therefore thought void. Cromp. Juriſd. fol. 215. But it is more commonly a copy or tranſcript of any deed or writing, account, &c. or a ſecond letter, written and ſent to the ſame party and purpoſe as a former, or a copy of diſpatches for fear of a miſcarriage of the firſt, or for other reaſons. See Stat. 4 Car. 2. c. 10.

It is alſo the name of the diſcharge, given by the quarter ſeſſions, &c. to an inſolvent debtor, who takes the benefit of an act, for relief of inſolvent debtors, with reſpect to the impriſonment of their perſons.—See title Inſolvent.—See alſo title Pawnbrokers.

DUPLICITY in pleading. This muſt be avoided as it begets confuſion. Every plea muſt be ſimple, intire, connected and confined to one ſingle point: it muſt never be entangled with a variety of diſtinct independent anſwers to the ſame matter; which muſt require as many different replies, and introduce a multitude of iſſues upon one and the ſame point. See titles Double Plea; Pleading.

DURANTE ABSENTIA, Adminiſtration. An adminiſtration granted when the executor is out of the realm, to continue in force until his return. See this Dict. title Executor.

DURANTE MINORE ÆTATE, Adminiſtration. An infant cannot act as executor until ſeventeen, during which minority this adminiſtration is granted. See title Executor.

DURDEN, A thicket of wood in a valley. Cowel.

DURESS, Durities, Conſtraint.] Whatever is done by a man to ſave either life or limb, is looked upon as done by the higheſt neceſſity and compulſion. Therefore if a man through fear of death or mayhem, is prevailed upon to execute a deed, or do any other legal act, theſe, though accompanied with all other requiſite ſolemnities, may be afterwards avoided, if forced upon him by a well-grounded apprehenſion of loſing his life, or even his limbs in caſe of non-compliance. 2 Inſt. 483.—And the ſame is alſo a ſufficient excuſe for the commiſſion of many miſdemeanours. The conſtraint a man is under in theſe circumſtances, is called in law Dureſs; of which there are two ſorts, Dureſs of Impriſonment, where a man actually loſes his liberty; and Dureſs per minas; (by threats) where the hardſhip is only threatened and impending.

If a man is under Dureſs of Impriſonment, or illegal reſtraint of liberty, until he ſeals a bond or the like, he may alledge this Dureſs, and avoid the extorted bond. But if a man be lawfully impriſoned, and either to procure his diſcharge, or on any other fair account, ſeals a bond or deed, this is not by Dureſs of impriſonment, and he is not at liberty to avoid it. 2 Inſt. 482. See this Dict. title Priſoner.

Dureſs per minas, is either for fear of loſs of life, or elſe for fear of mayhem or loſs of limb. And this fear muſt be upon ſufficient reaſon; non ſuſpicio cujuſlibet vani et meticuloſi hominis, ſed talis qui poſſit cadere in virum conſtantem. Bract. l. 2. c. 5.—A fear of battery, (or being beaten) though never ſo well grounded, is no Dureſs; neither is the fear of having one's houſe burned, or one's goods taken away and deſtroyed; becauſe in theſe caſes, ſhould the threat be performed, a man may have ſatisfaction by recovering equivalent damages; but no ſuitable atonement can be made for the loſs of life or limb. 2 Inſt. 483.—See 1 Comm. 131, 6.

As to criminal caſes.—In time of war or rebellion, a man may be juſtified in doing many treaſonable acts by compulſion of the enemy or rebels, which would admit of no excuſe in time of peace. 1 Hal. P. C. 50. This however ſeems only or at leaſt principally to hold as to poſitive crimes, ſo created by the laws of Society; and which therefore Society may excuſe; but not as to natural offences ſo declared by the laws of God. Therefore though a man may be violently aſſaulted, and hath no other poſſible means of eſcaping death, but by killing an innocent perſon; this fear and force ſhall not acquit him of murder, for he ought rather to die himſelf than eſcape by ſuch means. 1 Hal. P. C. 51. But in ſuch a caſe he is permitted to kill the aſſailant; for there the law of nature and ſelf defence have made him his own protector. 4 Comm. 30.—See this Dictionary, titles Baron and Feme; Felony; Murder, &c.

Further as to civil caſes.—It has been adjudged, that if a man makes a deed by Dureſs done to him by taking of his cattle, though there be no Dureſs to his perſon, yet this ſhall avoid the deed. 2 Danv. Abr. 686. If a perſon threaten another to make a deed to a third perſon, it is by Dureſs, and void; as if ſuch third perſon had made the threatening. 2 Inſt. 482: 3 Inſt. 92: 4 Inſt. 97. And where a man is impriſoned until he makes a bond at another place; if afterwards he doth it when at large, the bond is by Dureſs, and void.

If a perſon be arreſted upon an action at the ſuit of another, and the cauſe of action is not good, if he make a bond to a ſtranger, it is not Dureſs; though if he make it to the plaintiff, it is, and being ſued upon the bond, he may plead it was made by Dureſs, and ſo avoid it: alſo the party ſhall have an action for the falſe impriſonment itſelf. 1 Rep. 119: Perk. § 16: Cromp. Jur. 296: 1 Lil. Abr. 494. If the arreſt is under colour of legal proceſs, the action muſt be a ſpecial action on the caſe, not an action of treſpaſs vi et armis.

If one impriſoned make an obligation by Dureſs, and after he is at large, takes a defeaſance upon it; this will eſtop him to ſay it was made per Dureſs. And where A. and B. by Dureſs to B. ſeal a bond or deed, it may be good as to A. that was never threatened. 3 H. 6. 16: Bro. 17: Mich. 7 Jac. 1.—See 43 E. 3. 10: 2 Danv. 686.

A man ſhall not avoid a deed by Dureſs of a ſtranger: for it hath been held that none ſhall avoid his own bond for the impriſonment or danger of any other than of himſelf only. Cro. Jac. 187. Yet a ſon ſhall avoid his deed by Dureſs of the father: and the huſband ſhall avoid a deed made by Dureſs of the wife; though a ſervant ſhall not avoid a deed made by Dureſs of his maſter, or the maſter the deed ſealed by Dureſs of his ſervant. 2 Danv. 686. If a man is taken by virtue of a proceſs iſſuing out of a court that hath not power to grant it; or in cuſtody on a falſe charge of felony, &c. and for his enlargement and diſcharge gives bond, &c. this may be avoided, as taken by Dureſs. Cro. El. 646: 4 Inſt. 97: Allen 92.

A ſtatute merchant may be avoided by audita querela, becauſe it was made by Dureſs, or impriſonment. A will ſhall be avoided by Dureſs or menace of impriſonment. A feoffment made by Dureſs is voidable; but not void. But no averment ſhall be taken againſt a deed inrolled, that it was made by Dureſs. 1 Rol. Abr. 862: 2 Danv. 685. A marriage had by Dureſs is voidable: and by Stat. 31 H. 6. c. 9, obligations, ſtatutes, &c. obtained of women by force, to marry the perſons to whom made, or otherwiſe, unleſs for a juſt debt, are declared void. If a perſon executes a deed by Dureſs, he cannot plead non eſt factum, becauſe it is his deed; though he may avoid it by ſpecial pleading, and judgment Si actio, &c. 5 Rep. 119. Records may not regularly be ſaid to be made by Dureſs, and therefore ſhall not be avoided by this plea or pretence. 2 Shep. Abr. 319.—See further this Dict. title Fraud; Fine, &c.

DURHAM, The biſhoprick of Durham was diſſolved, and the King to have all the lands, &c. by Stat. 7 Ed. 6. But this act was afterwards repealed, and the biſhoprick newly erected, with all juriſdiction eccleſiaſtical and temporal annexed to the County Palatine. The juſtices of the County Palatine of Durham may levy fines of lands in the county: and writs upon proclamation, &c, are to be directed to the biſhop. Stats. 5 Eliz. c. 27: 31 Eliz. c. 2. Writs to elect members of parliament in the County Palatine of Durham ſhall go to the biſhop or his chancellor, and be returned by the ſheriff, &c. Stat. 25 Car. 2. c. 9.—See further title Counties-Palatine.

As to the Courts of which three Counties, and the Royal Franchiſe of Ely, we may here inſert what was there omitted. They are a ſpecies of private courts of a limited local juriſdiction, and having at the ſame time an excluſive cognizance of pleas in matters both of law and equity. 4 Inſt. 213, 8: Finch. R. 452. In all theſe, as in the Principality of Wales the King's ordinary writs iſſuing under the Great Seal out of Chancery do not run; that is they are of no force. For as originally all jura regalia were granted to the Lords of theſe Counties-Palatine, they had of courſe the ſole adminiſtration of juſtice by their own judges appointed by themſelves, and not by the Crown. It would therefore be incongruous for the King to ſend his writ to direct the judge of another's court in what manner to adminiſter juſtice between the ſuitors. But when the privileges of theſe Counties-Palatine were abridged by Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 24, it was alſo enacted, that all writs and proceſs ſhould be made in the King's name, but ſhould be teſted or witneſſed in the name of the owner of the Franchiſe. Wherefore all writs whereon actions are founded, and which have current authority here, muſt be under the ſeal of the reſpective franchiſes; the two former of which, Cheſter and Lancaſter, are now united to the Crown, and the two latter (Durham and Ely) under the government of their ſeveral biſhops. And the judges of aſſiſe who ſit therein, ſit by virtue of a ſpecial commiſſion from the owners of the ſeveral franchiſes, and under the seal thereof, and not by the usual commissions under the Great Seal of England. 3 Comm. 78.

DURSLEY, Signifies blows without wounding or bloodshed, vulgo dry blows. Blount.

DUSTY-FOOT, See Court of Piepowder.

DUTCHY COURT OF LANCASTER, See titles Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancaster; Counties-Palatine.

DUTIES of persons. Allegiance is the duty of the people, protection the duty of the magistrate; yet they are reciprocally the rights, as well as duties of each other. Allegiance is the right of the magistrate, and protection the right of the people. 1 Comm. 123.

DUTY, Any thing that is known to be due by law, and thereby recoverable, is a duty before it is recovered; because the party interested in the same hath power to recover it. 1 Lill. 495.

DWELLING-HOUSE, A man may assemble people together lawfully (at least if they do not exceed eleven) without danger of raising a riot, rout, or unlawful assembly, in order to protect and defend his house; which he is not permitted to do in any other case. 1 Hal. P. C. 547: 4 Comm. 224.—See titles Burglary; Riot.

DWINED, Consumed; from whence comes the word dwindle.

DYERS, By Stat. 3 & 4 E. 6. c. 2, No dyer may dye any cloth with orchel; or with Brazil, to make a false colour in cloth, wool, &c. on pain of 20*s.* By Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 9, Dyers are to fix a seal of lead to cloths, with the letter M. to shew that they are well mathered, &c. or forfeit 3*s.* 4*d.* per yard. By Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 15, several penalties are inflicted on dyers, who dye any cloths deceitfully, and not throughout with woad, Indico and mather; dying blue with logwood to forfeit 20*l.* Dyers in London are subject to the inspection of the Dyers' Company, who may appoint searchers; and out of their limits, justices of the peace in sessions to appoint them: opposing the searchers, incurs 10*l.* penalty.—See this Dict. title Labourers; Manufacturers.

DYKE-REED, rather DYKE-REVE, An officer that hath the care and oversight of the dykes and drains in fenny countries; as of Deeping fens, &c. mentioned in Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 11.

DYRGE or DIRGE, A mournful song over the dead; from the Teutonick dyrke, laudare, to praise and extol, whence it is a laudatory song. Cowel.

DYRENUM, A ditty or song.—Venire cum toto ac pleno dyreno; to sing harvest home. Paroch. Antiq. 320.

E.

EADLING, See Adeling.

EAHALUS, from the Sax. Eale, Cervisia, & Hus, Domus.] An ale-house: In the laws of King Alfred we often find this word.

EALHORDA. The privilege of assising and selling ale and beer. It is mentioned in a charter of King Hen. II, to the abbot of Glastonbury.

EALDERMAN, or Ealdorman.] Among the Saxons was as much as Earl with the Danes. Cambd. Brit. 107. Also an elder, senator, &c. Ealdermen or aldermen, are now those that are associated to the mayor or chief officer in the common council of a city or borough town. Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 13. See titles Aldermen; Squire's Ang. Sax. Gov. 107, 161, 220, n. 257. n. and Lord Lytt. Hist. H. II. V. 2. 215.

EARL. Sax. Eorle, Lat. Comes.] This it is said was a great title among the Saxons, and is the most ancient of the English peerage, there being no title of honour used by our present Nobility that was likewise in use by the Saxons, except this of Earl; which was usually applied to the First in the Royal Line. Verstegan deriveth this word from the Dutch Ear, i. e. Honour, and Ethel, which signifies Noble: But whencesoever it is derived, the title Earl was at length given to those who were associates to the King in his council and martial actions; and the method of investiture into that dignity was per cincturam gladii, without any formal charter of creation. Dugdale's Warwicksh. 302. William the First, called the Conqueror, gave this dignity in fee to his Nobles, annexing it to this or that county or province; and allotting them for the maintenance of it a certain portion of money arising from the prince's profits, for the pleadings and forfeitures of the provinces. Camd. And formerly one Earl had divers shires under his government, and had lieutenants under him in every shire, such as are now sheriffs; as appears by divers of our old statutes. Cowel.

But about the reign of King John and ever since, our Kings have made Earls of counties, &c. by charter; giving them no authority over the county, nor any part of the profits arising out of it; only sometimes they have had an annual fee out of the Exchequer, &c. An Earl, Comes, was heretofore correlative with commitatus; and anciently there was no Earl, but had a shire or county for his earldom; but of late times the number of Earls very much increasing, several of them have chosen for their titles some eminent part of a county, considerable town, village, or their own seats, &c. Besides these local Earls; there are some personal and honorary; as Earl-Marshal of England; See titles Constable; Court of Chivalry; and others nominal, who derive their titles from the names of their families. Lex Constitutionis, p. 78. Their place is next to a Marquis, and before a Viscount: And as in very ancient times, those who were created Counts or Earls, were of the blood royal; our British monarchs to this day call them in all public writings, "Our most dear Cousin:" They also originally did, and still may use the style of Nos. See titles Countee; Peers; Sheriff.

EARNEST. Money paid in part of a larger sum, or part of the goods delivered, on any contract, &c. which being done by way of earnest, the property of the goods is absolutely bound by it: And the buyer may recover the goods by action, as well as the vendor may the price of them. And by the statute of frauds, Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, No contract for sale of goods, to the value of 10*l.* or more, to be valid, unless such earnest is made or given. See title Frauds.

EASEMENT, Aisiamentum, from the Fr. Aise, Commoditas.] Is defined to be a service or convenience, which one neighbour hath of another, by charter or prescription, without profit; as a way through his land, a sink, or such like. Kitch. 105. A person may prescribe to an easement in the freehold of another, as belonging to some ancient house, or to land, &c. And a way over the land of another; a gate-way, water-course, or washing place on another's ground, may be claimed by prescription as easements. But a multitude of persons cannot prescribe; though for an easement they may plead custom. Cro. Jac. 170: 3 Leon. 254: 3 Mod. 294. To allege an easement by consuevit only, is the best way: And things of necessity shall not be extinguished by unity of possession; but a way of ease may be thus extinguished. Lil. Abr. 496. See title Prescription.

EASTER. The name of a goddess which the Saxons worshipped in the month of April, and so called, because she was the goddess of the East. Blount. In our church it is the feast of the Passover, in commemoration of the sufferings of our Saviour.

EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

A Corporation or "UNITED COMPANY OF MERCHANTS OF ENGLAND TRADING TO THE EAST INDIES;" which name is given to them in Stat. 6 Ann. c. 17. § 13. More explicitly, according to their charter, and the adjustment of their rights by Stat. 9 & 10 Will. 3. c. 44. § 61; trading "into, and from, the East-Indies, in the countries and parts of Asia and Africa, and in, to, and from the islands, ports, havens, cities, creeks, towns, and places of Asia, Africa and America, or any of them beyond the Cape of Good Hope, to the Straights of Magellan, where any trade or traffick of merchandize is or may be used or had, and to and from every of them."

The Laws

EAST-INDIA COMPANY.

The laws relative to this important Company, ſhall be conſidered in the following order.

I. The ORIGIN, and UNION of the Old and New Eaſt India Companies.
II. The STATE of the preſent Eaſt India Company, and the Regulations by certain Statutes, and otherwiſe relating thereto.
III. The RIGHTS, permanent and temporary, of the preſent Eaſt India Company.
IV. STATUTES relative to the preſent Eaſt India Company; particularly the Statute 33 Geo. 3. c. 52, "for ſettling the Government and Trade of India, and for the Appropriation of the Territorial Revenues and Profits of the Trade."

I. THE PASSAGE by ſea to the peninſula of India, and the Eaſtward part of the Continent of Aſia, the preſent ſeats of our Aſiatic trade, was not diſcovered till about the latter end of the 15th century; and, of the various attempts made from hence by individuals, to open a trade thither, none proved ſucceſsful until Queen Elizabeth A. D. 1600, eſtabliſhed the firſt incorporated Company by the name of the London Eaſt India Company. After a long ſeries of diſaſters and loſſes this Company obtained from the country powers of India, at a great expence, the privilege of a limited trade in certain parts of India, and Perſia; and of making ſmall ſettlements or houſes of trade called Factories for the reſidence of their factors and ſervants. In thoſe times the charters of the crown, and the powers which they conveyed were not thought to require parliamentary ſanction; nor was it till after the Reſtoration that the rights or authorities derived under them to the Company, were firſt called in queſtion.

By the interruptions, however, of ſpeculative adventurers, called Interlopers, who had begun to reſiſt the excluſive claims of the Old Company, under their charters, on the ground of their wanting the ſanction of parliamentary authority, and by occaſional failures of inveſtments of goods from abroad, and the then not unfrequent loſſes of ſhips in their paſſage, the commerce of the Company was often chequered with diſaſters and diſappointments.

Notwithſtanding theſe diſcouragements the Company, formed by degrees various factories and houſes of trade, both in India and Perſia. When by this means they had at length become more ſucceſsful, various attempts were made to induce the Crown, and even Parliament itſelf to interpoſe and revoke the charters of the Company; ſome on pretext that every man had an equal right to trade in the Eaſt as well as in the Weſt Indies; while others hoped to effect it on propoſals of terms of advantage in point of public finance, that they might themſelves be erected into an excluſive Company.

Such was the ſtate of things in 1693; when the Company, by an accidental failure in the payment of a ſmall duty which had been impoſed on their capital ſtock, (See Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 15. §§ 10, 12,) gave an opening to Government to determine their charters, rendered void by that default: and though in the ſame year the Crown to obviate all doubts revived their powers and excluſive privileges by a new charter, the Company were obliged to ſubmit to a condition, that their capacity of trading ſhould in future be determinable on three years' notice. The legal obſtacle to the erecting a new Company being thus removed, the Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 44, was paſſed for borrowing two millions on a loan at 8 per cent. towards carrying on the war; and as an encouragement to ſubſcribers it was declared, that they ſhould be incorporated by a charter from the King into a general ſociety; with liberty for each individual member to trade to India, and the other limits of the old Company's excluſive charter; ſo that the value of his exports exceeded not his ſhare of this loan or capital: and that ſuch of the ſubſcribers as ſhould chooſe to convert their ſubſcriptions into a joint ſtock, ſhould be at liberty ſo to do, and be incorporated by a ſeparate charter by the name of The Engliſh Eaſt India Company; with the privilege of trading with and to the amount of ſuch joint ſtock. All perſons but thoſe incorporated, and ſuch as they ſhould licenſe were prohibited from this trade, except the old Company; who had time given them to wind up their commercial affairs.

The act reſerved a power to determine the charters both of the General Society and the New Company after September 1711, on repayment of the loan and three years' notice.

The bulk of the ſubſcribers having agreed to trade as a ſeparate Company, with a joint ſtock, the old Company, to whoſe prejudice the two new corporations were to be erected, found means to become members for a very large proportion of the loan of two millions. With an intereſt thus acquired they joined with the Engliſh Company, and by means of their ſuperior knowledge and poſſeſſions, they obtained a decided influence in the general courts of the new Company, and thus paved the way to that union, which afterwards took place in 1702; and which A. D. 1708 was confirmed by parliament, by Stat. 6 Ann. c. 17. By the terms of this union the warehouſes at home and ſhipping, and alſo all the ſettlements and factories of the old Company in the Eaſt-Indies, Perſia and China, including the iſlands of Bombay and Saint Helena with their dependencies, and all their rights and privileges however derived, became veſted in the United Company; except their Body Politic which was ſurrendered to the Crown.

The curious reader may wiſh to learn what became of the General Society, whoſe members were individually authoriſed to trade, as far as the value of their ſubſcriptions in goods exported from hence. All that can be diſcovered of them is, that though they were actually incorporated by the King's charter, and were therefore legally authorized to ſend ſhips to India or China, it does not with certainty appear that any one ſhip was ever fitted out by them: and that the ſuperior advantages, of being concerned in the trade to be carried on with a joint ſtock, were ſo evident that at the time of the union of the two Companies, out of the whole loan of two millions, only 7, 200 l. then remained the property of the ſeparate traders of the General Society; and that this ſum alſo was ſoon abſorbed in the United Company, whoſe capital or trading ſtock by which their dividend of profits was to be governed, thereupon became fixed at Two Millions.

II. THE

II. THE FIRST ENLARGEMENT of the Company's term took place in 1708: (Stat. 6 Ann. c. 17;) when the United Company bargained with the Public to advance 1,200,000 l. as a loan but without any intereſt; (or, which operated as the ſame thing, at a reduced intereſt of 5 per cent. on the two loans conjointly;) for an extention of their term, in the excluſive trade, of fifteen years; and thus their nominal trading capital on which the dividend was made, became advanced to 3,200,000 l.

In 1712 the Company petitioned Parliament, (on the ground that the term which remained unexpired in their trade was too ſhort to admit their riſking the expences of regaining and ſecuring the pepper trade, which had been engroſſed by the Dutch,) that their corporate capacity might be continued, though the debt due to them from the Public ſhould be redeemed. In conſequence of this petition the Stat. 10 Ann. c. 28 paſſed for repealing all former proviſoes and powers of determining their trade or incorporation; but with power for the Public to redeem the debt at any time after September 1733. And thus the United Company were ſuppoſed to have obtained a perpetuity, as well in the excluſive trade as in all their chartered rights and capacities. They however ſubmitted themſelves in that reſpect, to the pleaſure of Parliament in 1730; when the Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 14. was paſſed for continuing to them their excluſive trade till 1766: for which they gave the Public a premium of 200,000 l. without any return of either principal or intereſt, and alſo agreed to a reduction of the rate of intereſt to 4 per cent. on the debt of 3,200,000 l. and to accept of payment of the principal by inſtallments of 500,000 l.

In 1744 they contracted for and obtained, by Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 17, a further addition of fourteen years in the excluſive trade; for which they lent to the publick one million at 3 per cent.—And in 1750 they agreed by Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 22, to a further reduction of the rate of intereſt on the former debt, to 3 per cent.

Thus grew the debt of 4,200,000 l. from the Public to the United Company, carrying with it an annuity of 126,000 l. This was called the 3 per cent. Eaſt India annuities; and are now conſolidated with the 3 per cent. Bank annuities. See title National Debt.—But the Company's capital or nominal ſum, by which their dividends were governed, continued as before at 3,200,000 l; the million laſt lent having been raiſed by their bonds, and therefore not added to their former capital.

The next renewal, and the laſt previous to Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52; (ſtated at large poſt IV;) was made by contract with the public by Stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 65. § 9; when a further term, determinable in 1794, was granted in the excluſive trade on payment of 400,000 l. in diſcharge of all claims on the Company by the Public, previous to March 1ſt, 1781. But it was provided that after payment of a yearly dividend of 8 per cent. to the holders of India ſtock, the ſurplus of all the net proceeds of their trade and revenues, ſhould be applied, $\frac{3}{4}$ to the uſe of the Public, and the remaining $\frac{1}{4}$ to the uſe of the Company.

The debts incurred by the Company, in the wars ſubſiſting in India at and after that period, prevented any ſuch ſurplus from ariſing; and therefore no participation of revenue took place under this act.—On the contrary the preſſure of thoſe debts, and the compulſory clauſes of an act of 1784, by which the Company were obliged to keep a ſtock of teas always in their ware-houſes, ſufficient for one year's conſumption, rendered it neceſſary for them to enlarge their actual trading capital, by new ſubſcriptions to 5,000,000 l. for which they had the ſanction of Parliament granted them by Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 62; (explained by Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 11;) and Stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 65.

In 1783 the Public agreed to forego any participation of the funds of the Company under the ſaid Stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 65, until certain debts ſhould be diſcharged; and by the Relief act of 1784, the participation, as ſettled in 1781, was to be reſumed as ſoon as the debts therein ſpecified were paid, and the bond debt reduced to a million and a half. See Stats. 22 Geo. 3. c. 83; 24 Geo. 3. c. 34.

Having ſaid thus much relative to the riſe and progreſs of the Company, it may not be unacceptable to ſtate ſhortly the mode of what may be called its internal œconomy.

The books of the Company are at all times open for the admiſſion of every deſcription of perſons, natives or foreigners, who may deſire to become members, and have money to adventure. It knows no diſtinction of profeſſions, religions or even ſexes, and in the general courts there is the moſt perfect equality; every one preſent has the ſame right with another to ſpeak his ſentiments and give his advice. A difference is made only in voting, which when taken by the holding up of hands requires 500 l. ſtock, and when by ballot 1000 l. ſtock, for a ſingle vote, 3000 l. for two votes, 6000 l. for three votes; and 10,000 l. for four votes; which is the largeſt number of votes, any member is allowed to poſſeſs; 2000 l. ſtock qualifies any member to become a candidate for the office of a Director or Chairman.

In the beginning of the year 1794, the number of votes was about 1700—that of actual voters however not much exceeding 1400.

A proprietor of ſtock to the amount of 1000 l. whether man or woman, native or foreigner has a right to give a vote in the General Courts. The Directors are twenty-four in number, including the chairman and deputy chairman; who may be re-elected in turn, ſix each year for four years ſucceſſively. (See poſt. IV.) The meetings or courts of Directors are to be held at leaſt once a week, but are commonly oftner, being ſummoned as occaſion requires. Out of the body of Directors are choſen ſeveral committees, who have the peculiar inſpection of certain branches of the Company's buſineſs; as the Committee of Correſpondence; a Committee of Buying; a Committee of Treaſury; a Houſe Committee; a Committee of Warehouſe; a Committee of Shipping; a Committee of Accounts; a Committee of Law Suits; and a Committee to prevent the growth of private trade. And under Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52, a Committee of Secrecy. See poſt IV.

The bulk of the Company's Exports conſiſts of camblets, cloth, and other woollens; metals, (particularly tin, lead, and copper); naval and military ſtores; and ſilver in bullion.

The Company reſerved to themſelves the excluſive export of cloth, woollens, copper, bullion and military ſtores; and alſo clocks, toys, and other articles ornamented with jewels.

Other

Other articles exported from hence are chiefly purchaſed in India by Europeans, for their own conſumption, and are carried abroad, (in what is called private trade,) by the commanders and officers of the Company's ſhips.—The Company may licenſe whom they pleaſe, to trade in the Eaſt Indies. The officers and ſubordinates of their ſhips, being thirty in number for every ſhip, are allowed the benefit of it, both in export and import, according to their different ranks. This is called private trade; and what they pay for this permiſſion and in lieu of freight is called Company's duties, and forms an article of the Company's profits. The ſervants abroad are alſo frequently permitted to remit home their fortunes in merchandize, for which they pay a freight to the Company. This latter trade is diſtinguiſhed from the former by the name of privileged trade.

Beſides this, abundance of Britiſh goods are ſent to India by illicit trade carried on directly from Great Britain; and alſo by clandeſtine trade from various parts of Europe, in Britiſh ſhips under foreign colours.

See the Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52, poſt. IV. in the 4, 5 and 6th diviſions of the act as there arranged.

The goods Imported by the Company from India, conſiſt chiefly of muſlins, callicoes and other piece goods, raw ſilk, cotton, indigo, pepper, ſalt-petre, opium and various ſorts of drugs; and from China, tea, coffee, and japan and china-ware, the other articles are comparatively of a trifling value.—Sugar has occaſionally been imported in ſmall quantities but being at preſent (January 1794) ſubject to a heavy duty it is in effect nearly prohibited.

The whole average amount of the cuſtoms and inland duties on the Import-trade of India and China to Great Britain, may be eſtimated at upwards of a million per annum; and the ſale amount thereof at nearly ſix millions per annum.

III. The temporary rights of the Company, conſiſt. 1ſt. Of the ſole and excluſive trade with India, and other parts within the limits already deſcribed; ſo that none other of the King's ſubjects can go thither or trade there except it be by leave of the Company; or purſuant to the directions of Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52, poſt. IV.—2*dly*. They have the adminiſtration of the government and revenues of the territories in India, acquired by their conqueſts during their term in the excluſive trade; ſubject nevertheleſs to the various checks and reſtrictions contained in the ſeveral ſtatutes, which veſt that adminiſtration in them.

The rights which the Company poſſeſs in perpetuity, are, to be a Body Corporate and Politick, with perpetual ſucceſſion. See Stats. 3 Geo. 2. c. 14: 17 Geo. 2. c. 17: 21 Geo. 3. c. 65.—To purchaſe, acquire and diſpoſe at will of lands and tenements in Great Britain. In their charter of 10 W. 3. the value in Great Britain was not reſtricted; but by Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 14 § 14, the value therein is not to exceed 10,000*l. per annum*.—By the charter of King William, to make ſettlements to any extent, within the limits of their excluſive trade; build forts and fortifications; appoint governors; erect courts of judicature; coin money; raiſe, train and muſter forces at ſea and land; repel wrongs and injuries, make repriſals on the invaders or diſturbers of their peace; and continue to trade within the ſame limits, with a joint ſtock for ever, although their excluſive right of trading ſhall be determined by parliament. See the three ſtatutes immediately above cited; and as to the forces, Stats. 27 Geo. 2. c. 9: 1 Geo. 3. c. 14: 21 Geo. 3. c. 65: 28 Geo. 3. c. 8, explained by Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 10.

Theſe rights, it appears, the Company hold under the immediate authority of Parliament; they embrace all thoſe of the old chartered Company which ſubſiſted from the year 1600 to 1708, when, as has been already obſerved, they became veſted or abſorbed with all their fortreſſes, ſettlements and factories, and other property real and perſonal, in the preſent United Company.—They are a perpetual Corporation; and although their excluſive right to the trade, and their power of adminiſtering the government and revenues of India, were to be determined, they would ſtill remain an incorporated Company in perpetuity; with the excluſive property and poſſeſſion of Calcutta and Fort William, Madras and Fort St. George, Bombay, Bencoolen and St. Helena, and various other ſettlements and landed eſtates in India: and alſo a right of trading thither, with a joint ſtock; together with all their repoſitories and other conveniences adapted to their commerce and the preſervation of their merchandize, both abroad and at home.

The only privileges they can be conſtitutionally deprived of, are, thoſe of trading to the excluſion of others, and of governing the countries and collecting and appropriating the revenues of India. See poſt IV. Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. Div. 4.

IV. The Statutes moſt intereſting, and of moſt conſequence, beſides thoſe already enumerated and referred to, are Stats. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63: 24 Geo. 3. ſeſſ. 2. c. 25: and 33 Geo. 3. c. 52, of which an abſtract of ſome length ſeemed here neceſſary.

The other ſtatutes now in force relative to the trade and concerns of the Eaſt-India Company, but which it does not ſeem expedient to ſtate at large, are—Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 44. § 69; by which perſons trading to the Eaſt-Indies, are firſt to give ſecurity for cauſing all goods laden on their account in India, to be brought, without breaking bulk, to ſome part of England or Wales, and there to be unladen and put on land. The amount of this ſecurity is regulated by Stat. 6 An. c. 3.—Stat. 7 Geo. 1. c. 5. §§ 32, 33, enabling the Company to borrow money on their Common Seal.—By Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 26, which is now expired, inſurance of ſhips trading to India under foreign commiſſions, was prohibited.—Stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 49. § 1, as to making dividends; and § 3, as to ballots.—See alſo on the ſame point Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 47. § 3.—The ſaid Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 47. in § 4. &c. declares that crimes and oppreſſions againſt His Majeſty's ſubjects in India may be puniſhed by information in the Court of K. B. in England.—Stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 54, as to building new ſhips.—Stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 8, as to the time of electing Directors.—Stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 70, regulating in ſeveral particulars the power of the Supreme Court at Fort William; and of the Governor General and Council of Bengal.

By the Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63, "for eſtabliſhing certain rules and orders for the managen ent of the affairs of the Company, as well in India as in Europe," conſiderable alterations were made in the conſtitution of the Company.

It

It was enacted that the Court of Directors ſhould in future be elected for four years; ſix members annually; but none to hold their ſeats longer than four years. That no perſon ſhould vote at the election of the Directors, who had not poſſeſſed their ſtock twelve months.—This Stat. alſo encreaſed the qualifications for a vote from 500*l.* to 1000*l.* (See ante II.)—The ſtatute ordained that the Mayor's Court of Calcutta, ſhould in future be confined to ſmall mercantile cauſes, to which only its juriſdiction extended before the territorial acquiſitions. That in lieu of this Court, a new one ſhould be eſtabliſhed at Fort William, under the title of the Supreme Court of Judicature, conſiſting of a Chief Juſtice, and three Puiſne Judges; and that theſe judges be appointed by the Crown. That a ſuperiority be given to the preſidency of Bengal, over the other preſidencies in India. That the power of nominating and removing the Governor-General and Council at Fort William and Bengal, ſhould be veſted in the Directors. [By Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 25, it is declared that His Majeſty's approbation of the appointment of the Governor-General and Council of Fort William, is not neceſſary.] The ſalaries of the Judges were alſo fixed at 8000*l.* to the chief juſtice, and 6000*l.* a year to each of the other three. The appointments of the Governor General and Council were fixed the firſt at 25,000*l.* and the four others at 10,000*l.* each, annually.

It has been ſaid, we know not on what foundation, that no proportionable benefit has reſulted from this act to the Company; that on the contrary, this court of juſtice occaſioned much diſcontent to the natives, as well as diſſatisfaction to the Company's ſervants. This being a political queſtion, the diſcuſſion of it is by no means applicable to the deſign of this work.

By Stat. 24 Geo. 3. ſeſſ. 2. c. 25, three things were intended.—1. The eſtabliſhing a power of controul in this kingdom, by which the executive government in India, is connected with that over the reſt of the empire.—2. The regulating the conduct of the Company's ſervants in India, in order to remedy the evils that had prevailed there.—3. The providing for the puniſhment of crimes which might reflect diſgrace upon Great Britain.

1. Six perſons are to be nominated by the King, as Commiſſioners for the affairs of India, of whom one of the Secretaries of State, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the time being ſhall be two, and the Preſident is to have the caſting vote if equally divided. (See poſt. Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. div. 1.) New Commiſſioners are to be appointed at the pleaſure of the Crown.—The Members of this Board of Controul, are ſworn to execute the ſeveral powers and truſts repoſed in them, without favour or affection, prejudice or malice. The Court of Directors are to deliver to this Board, for their approbation or alteration, all minutes, orders, and reſolutions of themſelves, and of the Courts of Proprietors; and copies of all letters, orders, and inſtructions propoſed to be ſent abroad. None to be ſent until after ſuch previous communication on any pretence whatever. The Directors are to appoint the ſervants abroad, but power is given to the King by his Secretary of State, to recall the Governors and Members of the Councils, and all inferior Magiſtrates. The Council of Bengal are ſubjected to the direction of the Company at home; and in all caſes, except thoſe of immediate danger and neceſſity, reſtrained from acting without orders from England.

Another object of this Act is, to redreſs the grievances of the natives of India; to provide for the payment of the debts of the Nabob of Arcot, which are a burden on his country; diſcriminating at the ſame time thoſe which were juſtly incurred, from thoſe which were forced upon him by the injuſtice and extortion of Britiſh oppreſſors; to aſcertain the indeterminate rights and pretenſions, on which ſo many differences aroſe between him and the Rajah of Tanjore; and to deliver the Zemindars, and other native landholders of India, from oppreſſion; and to ſecure to them their poſſeſſions by permanent rules of moderation and juſtice.

2. A material part of this bill is directed alſo againſt the abuſes ſaid to have prevailed in the civil and military departments; enjoining a thorough reviſal of their eſtabliſhment, together with the ſuppreſſion of ſuch places as are found to be uſeleſs, and of ſuch expences as may be conveniently avoided. And in order to prevent any deluſive ſhow of retrenchment, or any future deviation, this reform is directed to be conſtantly ſubmitted in its whole ſtate and progreſs to Parliament. (See alſo Stats. 28 Geo. 3. c. 8.: 31 Geo. 3. c. 10.)

Cadets and writers were heretofore ſent to India in ſuch numbers as to remain a burden upon the Company's eſtabliſhments. Theſe are reduced to a certain complement not to be exceeded.

A ſyſtem of ſucceſſion by ſeniority is eſtabliſhed by the act, to prevent the ſervants of the Company from riſing, merely through intereſt without merit; leaving however to the Councils abroad the power of bringing forward, for reaſons to be by them aſſigned, any perſons of extraordinary merit or capacity. (See poſt. Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52. div. 3.)

3. Security having been heretofore derived to delinquents in India, from the circumſtance of their offences being committed within the territories of Indian princes, ſo as not to come within the cogniſance of the Britiſh Government; this act provides againſt ſuch evaſions in future, by declaring the offence equally puniſhable, in whatever territory of India it is committed. The act of receiving preſents, is declared to be in itſelf extortion, and puniſhable accordingly. The offences of diſobeying orders, and bargaining for offices, are pronounced to be miſdemeanors; and it is provided that offenders ſhall not compound for them with the Company; nor ever be reſtored to appointments in their ſervice. Collectors and receivers are bound by oath not to receive any private gratuity over and above the legal tribute.

With a view to prevent, or more eaſily puniſh the miſconduct of the Company's ſervants, ſeveral regulations were made by this ſtatute for the diſcovery of their property on their return to England from India; but which were all repealed by Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 57. § 31.

The Attorney-General or Court of Directors, may exhibit an information againſt any perſon guilty of the crime of extortion, or other miſdemeanors committed in the Eaſt-Indies, after January 1, 1785; which information is to be tried by Commiſſioners ſelected from both Houſes of Parliament.

The election of theſe Commiſſioners is regulated by Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 57, which in ſubſtance directs as follows. The Lords are to ballot for twenty-ſix of their houſe, and the Commons for forty of their number; their names are again to be put into a box, to be drawn out by lot, in preſence of three Judges, (one of the Court of K. B. one of C. P. and one of the Exchequer) and of the parties; and the defendant may peremptorily challenge thirteen peers and twenty commoners, and he as well as the proſecutor may challenge as many as they pleaſe for cauſe ſhown. The firſt five names of the Peers, and the firſt ſeven names of the Commoners which ſhall be drawn without challenging, ſhall be returned by the three judges to the Lord Chancellor, to inſert their names, with thoſe of the three Judges in a ſpecial commiſſion, for them or any ten of them, of whom one of the Judges always to be one, to hear and determine every ſuch information, and pronounce judgment thereon; ſuch judgment to be enforced by the authority of the Court of K. B. and to be effectual and concluſive to all intents and purpoſes whatſoever.—This as well as the former act alſo, contains many other directions relative to the trial, as alſo relative to the diſpenſing juſtice, both in criminal and civil caſes in India.

The above Stat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 25, is explained by Stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 8. as to the forces, (See ante III. and Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 10,) the annual accounts (ante 2.) and the power of the Commiſſioners as to ſalaries and gratuities.

In conſequence of the regulations adopted under this ſtatute, it has been aſſerted, we believe with truth, that the adminiſtration of our Indian poſſeſſions and trade has become regular and efficient; the credit of the Company has increaſed; the price of India ſtock has advanced; the trade of the Company has been almoſt doubled; the duties paid to the Public augmented; tranquillity for many years maintained, and a neceſſary and politic war ſupported with dignity, and terminated (in 1793) with ſucceſs and honour.

The Stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 52, the commencement of which in India is appointed to take place on the 1ſt of February, 1794, being of the greateſt importance on this ſubject is here preſented in the form which ſeemed beſt adapted to elucidate the purpoſes for which it was paſt. As it concerns,—1. The Controul in Great Britain.—2. The Governments abroad.—3. Patronage and rule of promotion.—4. The general trade.—5. Limitations on the excluſive trade to and from India.—6. What ſhall at preſent be deemed illicit or clandeſtine trade.—7. Appropriations of the Company's revenue.—8. The method of ſuing for forfeitures and penalties, and proceeding as to ſeizures.—9. Regulations of general juſtice in India; and as to the Directors.—10. The ſtatutes repealed.

1. The act provides for the continuation of the Board of Controul in all its parts; except that the perſon firſt named in the King's Commiſſion is to be Preſident; and inſtead of the Commiſſioners being limited to ſix Privy Councillors, the number is indefinite, reſting in the King's pleaſure; of which however the two principal Secretaries of State, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, are to be three; and His Majeſty may if he pleaſes add to the liſt two Commiſſioners not of the Privy Council.

The King may give 5000*l.* a year among ſuch of the Commiſſioners as he pleaſes; which together with the ſalary of the Secretary and Officers, and other expences of the Board, are to be paid by the India Company, and not, as formerly, by the Civil Liſt; the whole not to exceed 16,000 l. per annum.

Oaths are preſcribed for the Commiſſioners and their officers. The office of a Commiſſioner, or chief Secretary, is not to be deemed a new office to diſable them from ſitting in parliament. Nor is the appointment of a Commiſſioner not having a ſalary, or of a Chief Secretary to vacate a ſeat. Three Commiſſioners muſt be preſent to form a Board.

The Powers of the Board are in ſubſtance the ſame as under former acts of parliament. They are to ſuperintend, direct and control all acts, operations and concerns, which relate to the civil or military government and revenues of the Britiſh territorial poſſeſſions in India, ſubject to the reſtrictions after mentioned. They and their officers are to have acceſs to the papers and records of the Company, and to be furniſhed with copies or extracts of ſuch of them as ſhall be required. They are alſo to be furniſhed with copies of all proceedings of General Courts, and Courts of Directors, within eight days; and with copies of all diſpatches from abroad, relating to matters of government or revenue, immediately after their arrival. No orders on thoſe ſubjects are to be ſent by the Company to India, until approved by the Board, and when the Commiſſioners vary or expunge any part of the diſpatches propoſed by the Directors, they are to give their reaſons; and all diſpatches are to be returned to the Court of Directors in fourteen days. The Directors may ſtate their objections to any alterations, and the Commiſſioners are to reconſider them; and if they interfere with what the Directors deem matters of Commerce, the Directors may apply to the King in Council to determine betwixt them. But the Board are reſtricted from the appointment of any of the Company's ſervants. If the Directors, on being called upon to propoſe diſpatches, on any ſubject relating to government or revenue, ſhall fail to do ſo within fourteen days, the Board may originate their own diſpatches on that ſubject.

The Board are not to authoriſe any increaſe of ſalaries, or any allowance or gratuity to be granted to perſons employed in the Company's ſervice, except the ſame ſhall be firſt propoſed by the Company; and their intention and reaſons for ſuch grant are to be certified to both Houſes of Parliament, thirty days before the ſalary can commence.

The Directors are to appoint three of their Members to be a Committee of Secrecy, through whom diſpatches relating to government, war, peace, or treaties, may be ſent to and received from India. This Committee and their clerks to be ſworn to ſecrecy.

Orders of Directors concerning the government or revenues of India, once approved by the Board, are not ſubject to revocation by the general court of proprietors.

2. The forms of government over the preſidencies of Bengal, Fort St. George, and Madras, are continued in all their eſſential parts. For Bengal by a Governor General and three Members of Council. For each of the others, a Governor and three Members. Theſe latter with reſpect to treaties with the native powers of India, levying war, making peace, collecting and applying revenues, levying and employing forces, or other matters of civil or military government, are to be under the control of the Government-General of Bengal; and are in all caſes whatever to obey their orders; unleſs the Directors ſhall have ſent to thoſe ſettlements, any orders repugnant thereto not known to the Government-general; of which in that caſe they are to give the Government-general immediate advice.

The Court of Directors are to appoint to theſe ſeveral governments; namely, the Governor-General, the two other Governors, and the Members of all the Councils; and likewiſe the Commander in Chief of all the Forces, and the three Provincial Commanders in Chief. None of the Commanders in Chief are, ex officio, to be of the Council, but they are not diſqualified from being ſo, if the Directors ſhall think fit to appoint them: and when they are Members of the Council, they are to have precedence of the other Counſellors. The Civil Members of Council, are to be appointed from the liſt of Civil Servants who have reſided twelve years in the ſervice in India.

The Directors may appoint to any of theſe offices proviſionally, but without ſalary, till the perſons appointed ſhall actually ſucceed in poſſeſſion. Any vacancy of Governor-General, or Governor, when no proviſional ſucceſſor is on the ſpot, is to be filled by the ſenior of the Civil Counſellors, till a ſucceſſor ſhall arrive; and the vacant ſeat in Council thereby occaſioned, ſhall be temporarily ſupplied from among the ſenior Merchants, at the nomination of the acting Governor-General, or Governor, if only one Counſellor ſhall then remain; and on other occaſions, the Governor-General and Governors, may ſupply vacancies in Council from the liſt of ſenior Merchants, until ſucceſſors duly appointed ſhall arrive to take their ſeats. In all theſe caſes, the ſalaries and allowances are to follow the acting Members while in office. If the Directors fail to appoint to vacancies in two calendar months, after notification thereof, the King may ſupply them, and the Directors ſhall not remove any perſon ſo appointed. In all other caſes, the Directors have the power of recalling or diſmiſſing any ſervants; and the like general power is veſted in the Crown. Appointments made before the act, not to be diſturbed.

The Commander in Chief of all the Forces, when at either of the ſubordinate ſettlements, is to have a ſeat at the Council Board, but is to have no ſalary in reſpect thereof; and if the provincial commander is a Member of that Council, he may continue to deliberate, but his voice ſhall be ſuſpended as long as the other ſhall remain.

Proviſion is made for ſupplying the place of any Member of Council diſabled from attending by illneſs.

The departure of any Governor, or Member of Government, or Commander in Chief, from India, with intent to come to Europe, or any written reſignation delivered in by them, ſhall be deemed an avoidance of office, and the coming into any part of Europe, ſhall be a ſufficient indication of that intent. No ſalary ſhall be payable to any officer or his agent during abſence, unleſs employed on actual ſervice; and if any officer, unleſs abſent on ſervice, never returns, the ſalary is to be deemed to have ceaſed from the day of his quitting the ſettlement.

The act preſcribes the order and method of conducting buſineſs at the ſeveral Council Boards. Powers are given to the Governor-General, or Governor, to act contrary to the opinions of the other Members of Council, taking upon themſelves the ſole reſponſibility.

Proviſion is made in caſe of the abſence of the Governor-General, and his viſiting any ſubordinate preſidency; and in caſe he ſhall be in the field without a Council, all the governments and officers ſhall obey his orders, and he alone ſhall be reſponſible.

All the governments are laid under reſtrictions to prevent war or extenſion of dominion in India, unleſs hoſtilities againſt the Company or their Allies ſhall render war unavoidable. The Members of ſubordinate governments, acting contrary to this act, or to the directions of the Government-General, may be ſuſpended or diſmiſſed by that government, and further puniſhed. The ſubordinate preſidencies are alſo required to communicate all matters of importance to the ſuperior government with all diſpatch.

The Governor-General, and other Governors, are veſted with powers of apprehending perſons, ſuſpected of illicit correſpondence with the enemies of the Company or of Great Britain. Witneſſes are to be examined, and croſs examined, and their evidence recorded; and the parties may either be tried in India, or ſent home; in the latter caſe, the depoſitions of the witneſſes are alſo to be ſent home, and are to be received in evidence, ſubject to impeachment in reſpect to the competency of the witneſſes.

To the acting Preſident of the ſeveral Council Boards, is given a caſting vote, in all caſes of equality of voices.

3. The Directors are to appoint ſo many cadets and writers only, as to ſupply vacancies according to returns from abroad. Their ages to be from fifteen to twenty-two; unleſs any cadet ſhall have been one year in the King's ſervice, and then his age is not to exceed twenty-five years.

All ſhall have promotion by ſeniority of ſervice only. Three years' ſervice qualifies a civil ſervant for a place of 500*l.* a year—ſix years' for one of 1500*l.*—nine years 3000*l.*—twelve years 4000*l.* or upwards. None to take two offices, where the joint emoluments ſhall exceed this rule. (See ante Stat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 25. div. 2.)

Nearly the ſame regulations are made by this ſtatute, relative to receiving preſents, diſobedience of orders, and bargaining for offices, as have been already mentioned in Stat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 25. div. 3. All the King's ſubjects are made amenable to all courts of competent juriſdiction abroad, and at home, for all crimes committed by them in India. The Company may compound civil actions, but are abſolutely reſtricted from compounding or remitting any judgment or ſentence whatever in criminal caſes.

Servants of the Company, after five years abſence, cannot return with their rank, nor ſerve again, unleſs detained by ſickneſs; or unleſs it be by leave of the Company, on a ballot of three parts in four of the General Court. In caſe of ſickneſs, the Directors are the judges in the civil ſervice; and in the military, the Directors and the Board of Controul jointly.

4. The Company's term is extended for twenty years, from March 1, 1794; ſubject to be determined at or after that period, on three years' previous notice by Parliament, ſignified by the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons; ſubject however as to the trade to and from India to the following limitations, in favour of ſuch private merchants as may chooſe to trade there. In other reſpects, and to and from China, and other places beyond the Cape of Good Hope, the former reſtrictions againſt private traders, are continued in force; and if the exclu-ſive trade thus limited, ſhall be hereafter diſcontinued, the Company are ſtill to retain their corporate capacity with power to trade, with a joint ſtock in common with other people. If however any new ſettlement ſhall be obtained from the Chineſe government, ſeparate from the Continent of Aſia, an export trade thither is preſerved to private merchants under certain regulations; and there is alſo a clauſe to preſerve to the Southern Whalers the benefit of their carrying trade into the Pacific Ocean, by the way of Cape Horn, to the Northward of the Equator, limited to 180 degrees Weſt Longitude of London: and ſhips from Nootka-Sound, are to be licenſed to trade from thence with Japan and China; but are not to bring any goods of the produce or manufacture of thoſe countries to Great Britain. See ante III.

5. All perſons may export and import goods to and from India, in the Company's ſhips; except that they ſhall not export military ſtores, ammunition, maſts, ſpars, cordage, anchors, pitch, tar, or copper; nor import India callicoes, dimities, muſlins, or other piece-goods, made or manufactured with ſilk or cotton, or with ſilk or cotton mixed, or with other mixed materials, unleſs it be done by leave of the Company. If the market ſhall not be ſufficiently ſupplied with excepted articles of import or export, (with an exception of military ſtores and copper,) the Board of Controul may open that trade alſo to individuals. If the Company ſhould not export 1500 tons of copper annually, private traders may export copper, in the Company's ſhips, to the amount of the deficiency.

The Company are to furniſh private traders, till 1796, with 3000 tons of ſhipping yearly, computed on the ſame principle as the Company's own tonnage is computed. The quantity may be increaſed by order of the Board of Controul, to meet the demands of the private traders; and if the Board order more than the Company approve, they may appeal from the order to the King in Council. And the Company are reſtricted from charging any higher freight than 5*l. per* ton outwards, and 15*l. per* ton inwards; except in time of war, or in circumſtances incidental to war, or preparations for war, when they may charge an increaſed rate of freight, in a due proportion to the rates at which they ſhall take up their own ſhipping, but the propoſed increaſe can only be made by the conſent of the Board of Controul; before whom the Directors are alſo required, in 1794, and in every third year afterwards, to lay a ſtatement of the affairs of ſhipping; and to abide by their order, touching any continuance, encreaſe, or abatement of the rate of freight on private trade.

Private traders are required to notify to the Company's Secretary at home, and to the proper officers in India, at a time limited, the quantity of tonnage wanted by them for the enſuing ſeaſon, with the place of deſtination, and the time when the goods will be ready for ſhipping. At home, this notice is to be given before the 31ſt of Auguſt for the ſhips of the enſuing ſeaſon, and before the 15th of September, they are to depoſit the ſum for the tonnage, or give ſecurity to the Directors for payment of it. Before the 30th of October, they are to deliver a liſt of the ſorts and quantities of the goods intended to be ſent. In failure of having them ready, by the day ſpecified in the notice, they are to forfeit their depoſit or the ſecurity, and alſo their tonnage for that turn. Similar rules are preſcribed for ſhipping goods, &c. in India; but it is left to the governments there to fix the times, and to name the officers, to whom notices are to be given. The Company is to have the benefit of all forfeited and vacant tonnage, and if more is demanded for private trade than the quantity limited, every perſon is to have his due proportion; and notice is to be given him thereof ſeven days before the day for making the depoſits. All private trade is to be regiſtered in the Company's books, and, in default of being regiſtered, it is to be conſidered as illicit trade, and puniſhable accordingly.

The reſtrictions of the law againſt the Company's ſervants, or others, from acting as factors for foreigners, or lending money to foreign Companies, or on bottomry of their ſhips, or aſſiſting them with remittances by bills, are repealed. And all legal impediments to the recovery of debts, under any pretence that they were incurred illicitly, and againſt the letter of theſe abrogated laws, are removed; and all perſons in India, not ſpecially prohibited by the Company, or reſtricted by their covenants, are authorized to act as mercantile agents for any who may chooſe to employ them; and if there ſhall be a want of factors (properly qualified and authorized) the Company are to licence free merchants, with the approbation of the Board of controul, ſo that there may be always a proper ſupply of agents for conducting the private trade abroad. But the becoming factors is not to exempt any perſons from being amenable to the general authorities of the governments in India; and all agents are reſtricted from going beyond ten miles from ſome principal ſettlement, without ſpecial leave.

As a further relief to private traders, the duty of 5 per cent. granted by an act of King William, on goods imported in private trade, is, in reſpect to the India trade, repealed; and the Company's former charge of 2 per cent. diſcontinued, and in lieu of theſe, and in ſatisfaction of the expences of unſhipping, hoyage, cartage, warehouſe-room, ſorting, lotting, and ſelling private goods, the Company is to have 3*l. per cent.* on the groſs amount of the ſales of private trade, the cuſtoms thereon included. The repeal or the allowance thus ſubſtituted, is however not to extend to ſpecial engagements made between the Company, and any of their officers touching their privileges.

For the eaſe of manufacturers, who may import any articles of raw materials; rules, or by-laws are to be framed and eſtabliſhed for bringing them to as early a ſale as poſſible; and for preventing any undue preference in the ſales of the ſame commodity amongſt any of the importers, whether the goods belong to the Company or to individuals, the ſales are to be open and public, by inch of candle, and the whole conſignment bought in by the private importer, is to be delivered out to him, on payment only of the duties and other dues thereon. All other goods imported in private trade, are to be ſold and treated as heretofore, according to the by-laws of the Company; and all goods in private trade are to pay to Government the ſame cuſtoms as goods imported by the Company on their own account.

And inaſmuch as the allowance of 3 per cent. and the rates of freight, will be inſufficient to indemnify the Company their actual charges upon private trade, the Legiſlature has exempted the Company from actions for loſſes or embezzlements which a common carrier might, in ordinary caſes, be liable by law to make good to the owner. But the act provides that the Company's officers, and all perſons through whoſe means or negligence any loſs ſhall happen, ſhall be liable to make it good to the owner; and it gives a further remedy to the owner, in certain caſes, to recover ſatisfaction, by enabling him to proſecute under the written engagements or ſecurities taken by the Company for the ſafe keeping of their own merchandize. All the laws prohibiting the import of goods from any other place than that of their growth, and for continuing all prohibitory laws, in reſpect to the conſumption or wearing of foreign manufactures are continued. (See title Navigation-Acts).

6. All the old laws for preventing Clandeſtine Trade with India, and from lending to or aſſiſting, or being concerned with Foreign Companies, or Foreign Traders, are wholly abrogated; and the following proviſions are ſubſtituted in their place; obſerving that the penalties are made to extend only to ſuch of his Majeſty's ſubjects as belong to Great Britain, Guernſey, Jerſey, Alderney, Sark, Man, Faro Iſles, or to the Colonies, Iſlands, or Plantations in America, or the Weſt Indies; and that all veſſels and goods forfeited, may be ſeized by any of the Company's Officers in India or China.

Perſons going unlawfully to India, and trafficking there, forfeit ſhips, veſſels, goods, and merchandize, and double the value thereof: one-fourth to the informers, and three-fourths to the Company, they paying thereout the coſts of proſecution.

Perſons unlawfully going to India, ſhall be deemed unlawful traders, and ſubject to the foregoing penalties and forfeitures, and may alſo be proſecuted as for a crime and miſdemeanor, and be liable to fine and impriſonment. One moiety of the fine goes to the King, the other to the Company, if they proſecute, or elſe to any other informer.

Perſons unlawfully reſorting to India, may be ſeized and ſent home for trial; and on arrival, they are to give bail, or be committed to priſon.

Perſons diſmiſſed the ſervice, or whoſe licenſes ſhall have expired, if they continue in India, are to be conſidered as illicit traders, and are made ſubject to penalties and forfeitures of goods, &c. as ſuch.

Goods ſhipped clandeſtinely, or ſuch as are reſtricted by the act, and goods unſhipped at ſea, ſhall be ſeized and forfeited, with double the value, and the Maſter, or other officer, knowingly permitting or ſuffering the ſame, ſhall forfeit all his wages to the Company; to be deducted out of the monies payable to the owners, and be diſabled from again acting in the ſervice.

Any who ſhall ſolicit for, or accept a foreign commiſſion to ſail to, and trade in India, ſhall forfeit 500*l.* half to the Company, and half to the proſecutor, or the whole to the Company if they ſhall proſecute.

All Governors and Counſellors are prohibited from trading, except for the Company; and all Collectors, Superviſors, and others employed in the Revenues of Bengal, Bahar, and Oriſſa, or their Agents, or any in truſt for them, are prohibited from inland trade, except for the Company. The Judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature in Bengal, are abſolutely prohibited from traffick; and none without the permiſſion of the Company, ſhall trade in ſalt, beetle-nut, tobacco or rice, on pain of forfeiture of the goods, and treble the value, one moiety to the Company, and the other to the proſecutor.

None ſhall ſend goods from India to the Continent of Europe, by any other channel than as allowed by the act, on pain of forfeiture of double the value: but this reſtriction is not to extend to matters of agency, only on the account bonâ fide of any foreign Company, or foreign Merchant.

7. APPROPRIATION. Firſt in India. The territorial revenues are to be applied in the firſt place, in defraying all charges of a military nature. Secondly, In payment of the intereſt of the debts there already, or hereafter to be incurred. Thirdly, In payment of the civil and commercial eſtabliſhments. Fourthly, In payment of not leſs than one million per annum for the Company's inveſtments of goods to Europe, and remittances and inveſtments to China; and the ſurplus, if any, is to be applied in the diſcharge of debts, or ſuch other purpoſes as ſhall be directed from home. The ſum allowed for inveſtments, may from time to time be increaſed to the extent of the diminution made in the annual amount of the intereſt of debts, which ſhall be paid in India, or tranſferred home; for which tranſfer, proviſion is made to an extent of 500,000*l.* a year, by Bills of Exchange to be drawn upon the Company; and if the creditors ſhall not ſubſcribe to that amount, other perſons may ſubſcribe, and the money advanced by them for bills is to be applied in diſcharge of ſuch debts, and this rule is to be continued till the India debt ſhall be reduced to two millions. The Company may increaſe theſe tranſfers home, but the Governments abroad are reſtricted from exceeding the above amount without their orders. (See Stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. —).

Secondly at home. The net produce of the Company's funds at home, after payment of current charges, are thus appropriated. Firſt, In payment of a 10 per cent. annual dividend, on the preſent, or any increaſed amount of the capital ſtock of the Company. Secondly, Of 500,000*l. per annum* to be ſet apart on the firſt of March, and the firſt of September, half yearly; and applied in the diſcharge of the before-mentioned Bills of Exchange, for the aforeſaid reduction of the India debt. Thirdly, Of a like annual ſum of 500,000*l.* to the Exchequer, to be applied by Parliament for the uſe of the Public, and to be paid on the firſt of January, and the firſt of July, half-yearly, by equal inſtalments. And, laſtly, The ſurplus may be applied in the more ſpeedy reduction of the India debt, till reduced to two millions; or in diſcharging debts at home, ſo as not to diminiſh the bond debt below 1,500,000*l.* Subject to theſe appropriations, and after the debt in India is reduced to two millions, and the bond debt at home to 1,500,000*l. one-ſixth* part of the ultimate ſurplus is to be applied to an increaſe of dividend of the capital ſtock, and the remaining five-ſixths, is to be made a guarantee fund, or collateral ſecurity for the Company's capital ſtock, and their dividend of 10 per cent. until ſuch fund, by the monies paid by the Company, and the intereſt thereof, ſhall have amounted to twelve millions; and after that time, the ſaid five-ſixths of the ſurplus is to belong to the Public in full right. Theſe five-ſixths are to be paid into the Bank, and laid out in the purchaſe of redeemable annuities, in the names of the Commiſſioners for the reduction of the national debt, who are alſo to receive the dividends, and lay them out in like manner, until twelve millions have been invested. That being accomplished, the annual dividends of the stock purchased therewith, are, in the first place, to make good any defalcation in the Company's revenues, to pay the 10 per cent. dividend, and subject thereto, those dividends are to belong to the Public. If on the Company's exclusive trade being determined, their own assets shall prove insufficient to make good their debts, and also their capital stock rated at 200 per cent. the excess of such guarantee-fund is to make good the deficiency, as far as it will extend; and in the event of the Company discontinuing their trade altogether, the excess is to belong to the Public. But if the Company shall continue to trade with a joint stock, then the overplus, and the annual dividends thereof, are to remain as a like guarantee for a dividend of 10 per cent. and for the capital rated at 200*l.* per cent. as long as the Company shall trade with a joint stock; but subject to the making good any such deficiencies, the said fund is to be deemed the property of the Public.

If the bond debt at home, or the debts abroad, after being reduced to the sums before limited, shall be again increased, the former appropriation is to be revived until those debts shall be again diminished to their respective standards before limited.

Any deficiency in the funds to make good the 500,000*l.* to the exchequer in any year, is to be made good in the excesses of subsequent years; unless it happens in time of war or by circumstances incidental to war; in which case the deficiencies are not to be carried forward as a debt on the annual funds of the Company, nor to be brought forward as a debt to be paid by the Company, unless only in the event of their assets, on the conclusion of the exclusive trade affording more than sufficient to make good the capital stock rated at 200*l.* per cent: but any excess of such assets beyond that amount, is liable to make good the deficiency of any such payments to the Public; no interest is to be computed in the mean time on such deficiency.

The securities given by the cashiers of the Bank, are to extend to the monies they may receive under this act, and the treasury is to direct the allowances for management; and if the Company make default in any payments, directed by the act, they may be sued, and shall pay 15*l.* per cent. damages, with costs of suit.

The statute directs the manner in which receipts shall be given; and a power is lodged in the treasury, to give the Company further time for payment in cases of exigency. And it is declared that neither the claims of the Public, nor of the Company, to the territories in India, shall be prejudiced by the statute, beyond the prolongation of the term in the exclusive trade. The statute also contains a clause of mutual acquittal of all out-standing demands between the Crown and the Company, to the 24th day of December 1792.

The statute recognizes the rights of the Company to a sum of 467,896*l.* 7*s.* 4*d.* in money and 9,750*l.* East India stock; (which sums constitute the separate fund of the Company, established under the act of 1781;) and it is observed, that it will be more for the general interest of the Company to continue that money employed in trade, computing an interest upon it and to make it a fund for a permanent increase to their dividend of 10*s.* per cent. than to draw it from their trading capital for any sudden distribution. And it then authorizes and limits the Company to make a dividend from this separate fund, and the interest thereof, after the rate of 10*s.* per cent. per annum during their further term in the exclusive trade; and at the end of the term, it gives them a power of disposing of the remainder of this fund as they shall think fit.

The Company are not to grant any pensions or new salaries beyond 200*l.* per annum, to any one person, without the consent of the Board of Controul; and they are to lay before Parliament annually, a list of all their establishments abroad and at home, in which all pensions and new salaries are to be particularly noticed; and also complete accounts of all their affairs, receipts and outgoings of the preceding year, with estimates for the following year.

8. The statute gives a right of suing by action, bill or information, in any of the courts of Westminster, (in which case the venue is to be laid in London or Middlesex,) or in the supreme court of judicature in Bengal, or the Mayor's court at Madras or Bombay; and in such suits the legality of seizures of persons, ships, or goods, is made cognizable. In cases of misdemeanors, the offenders are punishable by fine and imprisonment, and if abroad, they may be sent home, as part of the punishment; and a capias, for arresting the accused party, is given in the first instance, which may be compounded for by bail.

For securing to the crown the duties for goods unlawfully trafficked with, in the cases of forfeiture of goods, the Attorney General may prosecute the offenders, or their partners, by bills in a court of Equity, waving penalties, and the defendants shall make full discovery of their illicit traffick upon oath, and shall be decreed to pay all the duties thereupon to Government, and 30*l.* per cent. on the value of the goods to the Company, and shall be relieved against all other forfeitures. The Company may, in like manner proceed against offenders by bill in equity, and if they fail they shall pay costs. Defendants are to pay costs to the Crown and to the Company, when the decree shall be against them. Other usual regulations are made as to informers, pleading, &c.

9. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Judicature at Fort William, in causes of Admiralty, is made to extend to the High seas at large; whereby a defect in Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63, for constituting that court, is cured.

For increasing the number of magistrates in Bengal, Madras, and Bombay, the supreme court of judicature in Bengal is to issue commissions of the peace, in pursuance of orders issued in council for that purpose; and any of the justices, so appointed, may by order in council, sit also in the courts of oyer and terminer, taking the oaths of justices in England, (excepting the oath prescribed by the act of the 18 Geo. 2, relating to qualification by estate). The proceedings and judgments of justices may be removed to the court of oyer and terminer by certiorari, but cannot be set aside for want of form but on the merits only. The justices may also associate with the judges in causes appealed, when called upon so to do.

The Governments abroad may appoint coroners to take inquests upon the bodies of persons coming to an untimely end, and appoint fees to be paid for that duty.

The

The juſtices of the peace may appoint ſcavengers, and raiſe money by aſſeſſments for cleanſing, watching and repairing the ſtreets of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay; they may alſo licence houſes for retailing ſpirituous liquors, and fix the limits of thoſe towns; and none are to retail ſpirits but ſuch as they ſhall ſo licence, under the penalties of the laws of Great Britain.

A ſpecial oath is preſcribed to be taken in future by the Directors of the Company, prohibitory of their acting as Directors when concerned in buying from, or ſelling to, the Company any goods; and prohibitory of their being concerned in any ſhipping employed by the Company, or accepting any preſent for any appointment of office, or of being concerned in any private trade contrary to the act.

10. The Acts or parts of Acts repealed, are as follows: Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 24. § 81.—The whole of the temporary Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 21: and ſo much of the ſeveral ſtatutes as continued it in force.—Stat. 7 Geo. 1. c. 21. § 1. to § 9.—The whole of Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 26.—Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 14. § 9.—Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 17. § 11:—Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 47. § 1 & 2.—Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63. § 23. to 29. and § 32. to § 35.—Stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 65. § 29.—Stat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 25. § 3. 13, 29 and 31.—the whole of Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 16:—and Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 57. § 32, 33.

The repeal is not to extend to offences committed before the commencement of the act, nor is it to affect the powers of the former Board of Controul, until a new one ſhall be appointed; nor to affect the powers given to the board by Stats. 28 Geo. 3. c. 8: 31 Geo. 3. c. 10, concerning the forces in India.

EASTINTUS, Sax. Eaſt-Tyne.] An Eaſterly coaſt or country; alſo the Eaſt ſtreet, Eaſt ſide of a river, &c. Leg. K. Ed. 1.

EASTLAND COMPANY. This Company ſubſiſted under a charter granted by Queen Elizabeth in 1579, for regulating the commerce into the Eaſt country; a name anciently given, and ſtill continued by mercantile people, to the ports of the Baltick ſea, more particularly thoſe of Pruſſia and Livonia. They were by this charter to enjoy the ſole trade, through the Sound, into Norway, Sweden, Poland, Lithuania, (excepting Narva which was within the charter of the Ruſſia Company,) Pruſſia and alſo Pomerania, from the river Odel, Eaſtward, Dantzick, Elbing and Koningſburg; alſo to Copenhagen and Elſinore, and to Finland, Gothland, Bornholm and Oeland. This charter was confirmed by another from Charles I. in 1629.

By the Stat. 25 Car. 2. c. 7, the following proviſions were made for laying open a very conſiderable part of this trade: It was declared lawful for any native or foreigner at all times to have free liberty to trade into and from Sweden, Denmark and Norway, notwithſtanding the charter to the Eaſtland Merchants or any other charter.—And further that every perſon being a ſubject of this realm might be admitted into the fellowſhip of merchants of Eaſtland on paying 40 s. and no more. § 5, 6.—Which latter proviſion made the trade to the other parts within the limits of the charter eaſily acceſſible.

EGYPTIANS. Egyptiani. Commonly called Gypſies.—Theſe are a ſtrange kind of common-wealth among themſelves, of wandering impoſtors and jugglers who made their firſt appearance in Germany, about the beginning of the ſixteenth century, and have ſince ſpread themſelves all over Europe and Aſia. They were originally called Zinganees by the Turks, from their captain Zinganeus, who, when Sultan Selim conquered Egypt, about the year 1517, refuſed to ſubmit to the Turkiſh yoke, and retired into the deſarts, where they lived by rapine and plunder, and frequently came down into the plains of Egypt, committing great outrages in the towns upon the Nile, under the dominion of the Turks. But being at length ſubdued, and baniſhed from Egypt, they diſperſed themſelves in ſmall parties, into every country in the known world; and as they were natives of Egypt, a country where the occult ſciences, or black art, as it was called, was ſuppoſed to arrive to great perfection, and which in that credulous age, was in great vogue with perſons of all religions and perſuaſions, they found the people wherever they came, very eaſily impoſed on. Mod. Univ. Hiſt. Vol. 43. p. 271.

In the compaſs of a very few years, they gained ſuch a number of idle proſelytes, who imitated their language and complexion, and betook themſelves to the ſame arts of chiromancy, begging and pilfering, that they became troubleſome and even formidable to moſt of the States of Europe. Hence they were expelled from France in the year 1560, and from Spain in 1591. And the government in England, took the alarm much earlier, for in 1530, they are deſcribed by Stat. 22 Hen. 8. c. 10. as "outlandiſh people, calling themſelves Egyptians, uſing no craft or feat of merchandize, who have come into this realm, and gone from ſhire to ſhire, and place to place in great company, and uſed great, ſubtil, and crafty means to deceive the people; bearing them in hand, that they by palmeſtry could tell men, and women fortunes; and ſo many times by craft and ſubtilty have deceived the people of their money, and have alſo committed many heinous felonies and robberies." Wherefore they are directed to avoid [depart] the realm, and not to return, under pain of impriſonment, and forfeiture of their goods and chattels; and, upon their trials for any felonies which they might have committed, they ſhall not be entitled to a jury de medietate linguæ. And afterwards it was enacted by Stats. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 4: 5 Eliz. c. 20, that if any ſuch perſons ſhall be imported into this kingdom, the importer ſhall forfeit 40 l. And if the Egyptians themſelves remain one month in this kingdom; or if any perſon being 14 years old, whether a natural born ſubject or ſtranger, which hath been ſeen or found in the fellowſhip of ſuch Egyptians, or which hath diſguiſed him, or herſelf like them, ſhall remain in the ſame one month, at one or ſeveral times; it is felony, without benefit of clergy. And Sir Matthew Hale informs us, that at one Suffolk aſſizes, no leſs than thirteen gypſies were executed upon theſe ſtatutes, a few years before the Reſtoration. But, to the honour of our national humanity, there are no inſtances more modern than this, of carrying theſe laws into execution. 4 Comm. 165, 6. Now by Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 51, the ſaid act of 5 Eliz. c. 20, is repealed. And the Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. (See title Vagrants) regards them only under the denomination of rogues and vagabonds.

EJECTIONE CUSTODIÆ. Ejectment de Garde.] Is a writ which lieth againſt him that caſteth out the guardian from any land during the minority of the heir. Reg. Orig. 162: F. N. B. 139. There are two other writs not unlike this; the one termed raviſhment de gard, and the other droit de gard. See title Guardian.

EJECTIONE FIRMÆ; or EJECTMENT.

An action at law by which a perſon ouſted or amoved from the poſſeſſion of an eſtate for years, may recover that poſſeſſion: and which action is now uſed as the general mode of trying diſputed titles to lands and tenements.—See 3 Comm. 199. from whence the ſubſequent matter is extracted with addition from other ſources.

A writ of Ejectione firmæ, or action of treſpaſs in Ejectment, lieth where lands or tenements are let for a term of years, and afterwards the leſſor, reverſioner, remainder-man, or any ſtranger, doth eject or ouſt the leſſee of his term, F. N. B. 220. In this caſe he ſhall have his writ of ejection or Ejectment; to call the defendant to anſwer for entering on the lands ſo demiſed to the plaintiff for a term that is not yet expired and ejecting him. And by this writ the plaintiff ſhall recover back his term or the remainder of it, with damages.

Since the diſuſe of real actions, this mixt proceeding is become the common method of trying the title to lands or tenements. It is therefore neceſſary to delineate it's hiſtory, the manner of it's proceſs, and the principles whereon it is grounded.

The writ of covenant, for breach of the contract contained in the leaſe for years, was anciently the only ſpecific remedy for recovering againſt the leſſor a term from which he had ejected his leſſee, together with damages for the ouſter. But if the leſſee was ejected by a ſtranger claiming under a title ſuperior to that of the leſſor or by a grantor of the reverſion, (who might at any time by a common recovery have deſtroyed the term,) though the leſſee might ſtill maintain an action of covenant againſt the leſſor, for non-performance of his contract or leaſe, yet he could not by any means recover the term itſelf. F. N. B. 145. If the ouſter was committed by a mere ſtranger, without any title to the land, the leſſor might indeed, by a real action recover poſſeſſion of the freehold, but the leſſee had no other remedy againſt the ejector but in damages, by a writ of ejectione firmæ, for the treſpaſs committed in ejecting him from his farm. But afterwards, when the courts of equity began to oblige the ejector to make a ſpecific reſtitution of the land to the party immediately injured, the courts of law alſo adopted the ſame method of doing complete juſtice; and, in the proſecution of a writ of ejectment, introduced a ſpecies of remedy not warranted by the original writ, nor prayed by the declaration; (which are calculated for damages merely, and are ſilent as to any reſtitution;) viz. a judgment to recover the term, and a writ of poſſeſſion thereupon. This method ſeems to have been ſettled as early as the reign of Edward IV, though it hath been ſaid to have firſt begun under Hen. VII, becauſe it probably was then firſt applied to it's preſent principal uſe, that of trying the title of the land. Bro. Ab; F. N. B. 220.

The

The better to apprehend the contrivance, whereby this end is effected, it is to be recollected that the remedy by ejectment is, in it's original, an action brought by one who hath a leaſe for years, to repair the injury done him by diſpoſſeſſion. In order therefore to convert it into a method of trying titles to the freehold, it is firſt neceſſary that the claimant do take poſſeſſion of the lands, to empower him to conſtitute a leſſee for years, that may be capable of receiving this injury of diſpoſſeſſion. For it would be an offence, called in our law maintenance, to convey a title to another, when the grantor is not in poſſeſſion of the land: and indeed it was doubted at firſt, whether this occaſional poſſeſſion, taken merely for the purpoſe of conveying the title, excuſed the leſſor from the legal guilt of maintenance. 1 Ch. Rep. Ap. 39.

When therefore a perſon, who hath a right of entry into lands, determines to acquire that poſſeſſion, which is wrongfully with-held by the preſent tenant, he makes (as by law he may) a formal entry on the premiſes, and being ſo in the poſſeſſion of the ſoil, he there, upon the land, ſeals and delivers a leaſe for years to ſome third perſon or leſſee; and, having thus given him entry, leaves him in poſſeſſion of the premiſes. This leſſee is to ſtay upon the land, till the prior tenant, or he who had the previous poſſeſſion, enters thereon a-freſh and ouſts him; or till ſome other perſon (either by accident or by agreement before-hand) comes upon the land, and turns him out, or ejects him. For this injury the leſſee is entitled to his action of ejectment againſt the tenant; or his caſual ejector, which-ever it was that ouſted him, to recover back his term and damages. But where this action is brought againſt ſuch a caſual ejector as is before mentioned, and not againſt the very tenant in poſſeſſion, the Court will not ſuffer the tenant to loſe his poſſeſſion without an opportunity to defend it. Wherefore it is a ſtanding rule, that no plaintiff ſhall proceed in ejectment to recover lands againſt a caſual ejector, without notice given to the tenant in poſſeſſion (if any there be) and making him a defendant if he pleaſes. And, in order to maintain the action, the plaintiff muſt in caſe of any defence, make out four points before the court; viz. Title, Leaſe, Entry, and Ouſter. Firſt, he muſt ſhew a good title in his leſſor, which brings the matter of right entirely before the Court; then, that the leſſor, being ſeiſed or poſſeſſed by virtue of ſuch title, did make him the leaſe for the preſent term; thirdly, that he, the leſſee, or plaintiff did enter or take poſſeſſion in conſequence of ſuch leaſe; and then, laſtly, that the defendant ouſted, or ejected him. Whereupon he ſhall have judgment to recover his term and damages; and ſhall in conſequence, have a writ of poſſeſſion, which the ſheriff is to execute by delivering him the undiſturbed and peaceable poſſeſſion of his term.

This is the regular method of bringing an action of ejectment, in which the title of the leſſor comes collaterally and incidentally before the Court, in order to ſhew the injury done to the leſſee by this ouſter. This method muſt be ſtill continued in due form and ſtrictneſs, (ſave only as to the notice to the tenant,) whenever the poſſeſſion is vacant, or there is no actual occupant of the premiſſes; and alſo in ſome other caſes. But, as much trouble and formality were found to attend the actual making of the leaſe, entry, and ouſter, a new, and more eaſy method of trying titles by writ of ejectment, where there is any actual tenant or occupier of the premiſes in diſpute, was invented by the Lord Chief Juſtice Rolle. Styl. Pract. Reg. 108. (edit. 1657).

This new method entirely depends upon a ſtring of legal fictions; no actual leaſe is made, no actual entry by the plaintiff, no actual ouſter by the defendant, but all are merely ideal, for the ſole purpoſe of trying the title. To this end, in the proceedings, a leaſe for a term of years is ſtated to have been made, by him who claims title, to the plaintiff who brings the action; as by John Rogers to Richard Smith, which plaintiff ought to be ſome real perſon, and not merely an ideal fictitious one who hath no exiſtence, as is frequently though unwarrantably practiſed. 6 Mod. 309. It is alſo ſtated that Smith the leſſee entered; and that the defendant William Stiles, who is called the caſual ejector, ouſted him; for which ouſter he brings this action. As ſoon as this action is brought, and the complaint fully ſtated in the declaration, Stiles, the caſual ejector, or defendant, ſends a written notice to the tenant in poſſeſſion of the lands. e. g. George Saunders, informing him of the action brought by Smith, and tranſmitting him a copy of the declaration; withal aſſuring him that he, Stiles, the defendant, has no title at all to the premiſes, and ſhall make no defence; and therefore adviſing the tenant to appear in court and defend his own title: otherwiſe he, the caſual ejector, will ſuffer judgment to be had againſt him; and thereby the actual tenant, Saunders, will inevitably be turned out of poſſeſſion. On receipt of this caution, if the tenant in poſſeſſion does not within a limited time apply to the court to be admitted a defendant in the ſtead of Stiles, he is ſuppoſed to have no right at all; and upon judgment being had againſt Stiles the caſual ejector, Saunders, the real tenant, will be turned out of poſſeſſion by the ſheriff.

But, if the Tenant in poſſeſſion applies to be made a defendant, it is allowed him upon this condition; that he enter into a rule of court to confeſs, at the trial of the cauſe, three of the four requiſites for the maintenance of the plaintiff's action; viz. the leaſe of Rogers the leſſor, the entry of Smith the plaintiff, and his ouſter by Saunders himſelf, now made the defendant, inſtead of Stiles: which requiſites being wholly fictitious, ſhould the defendant put the plaintiff to prove them, he muſt of courſe be non-ſuited for want of evidence; but by ſuch ſtipulated confeſſion of leaſe, entry and ouſter, the trial will now ſtand upon the merits of the title only.

This done the delaration is altered by inſerting the name of George Saunders (the tenant) inſtead of William Stiles; and the cauſe goes down to trial under the name of Smith (the plaintiff) on the demiſe of Rogers, (the leſſor) againſt Saunders, the now defendant. And herein the leſſor of the plaintiff is bound to make out a clear title, otherwiſe his fictitious leſſee cannot obtain judgment to have poſſeſſion of the land for the term ſuppoſed to be granted. But, if the leſſor makes out his title in a ſatisfactory manner, then judgment and a writ of poſſeſſion ſhall go for Smith, the nominal plaintiff, who by this trial has proved the right of Rogers his ſuppoſed leſſor.

Yet, to prevent fraudulent recoveries of the poſſeſſion, by colluſion with the tenant of the land, all tenants are obliged by Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, on pain of forfeiting three years' rent, to give notice to their landlords, when they they are ſerved with any declaration in ejectment: and any landlord may by leave of the court be made a co-defendant to the action, in caſe the tenant himſelf appears to it, or, if he makes default, though judgment muſt be then ſigned againſt the caſual ejector, yet execution ſhall be ſtayed, in caſe the landlord applies to be made a defendant, and enters into the common rule; a right which indeed the landlord had, long before the proviſion of this ſtatute. (Styl. Pract. Reg. 108, 111, 265: 7 Mod. 70: Salk. 257: Burr. 1301:) in like manner as (previous to the ſtatute of Weſt. 2. c. 3,) if in a real action the tenant of the freehold made default, the remainder-man, or reverſioner had a right to come in and defend the poſſeſſion, leſt, if judgment were had againſt the tenant, the eſtate of thoſe behind ſhould be turned to a naked right. Bract. lib. 5. c. 10. § 14.

A tenant to a mortgagor who does not give him notice of an ejectment brought by the mortgagee to enforce an attornment, is not liable to the penalties of the Stat. 11 Geo. 2: 1 Term Rep. 647.

In ejectment for a chapel, the parſon can only defend for a right to enter and perform divine ſervice. Str. 914.—Notwithſtanding 1 Salk. 250, no man is to be admitted tenant or defendant in ejectment by the common rule, unleſs he hath been in poſſeſſion or received rent, and not a mere ſtranger. Comb. 209.

He who claims title, ſhall be joined as a defendant though the plaintiff oppoſes it. 1 Salk. 256. And therefore even the wife of the leſſor. 257.

The court permitted an heir, who had never been in poſſeſſion, to come in and defend the ejectment. The father under whom he claimed, died juſt after having firſt obtained a ſimilar rule. 4 Term Rep. 122. So a mortgagee. Comberb. 399. As to a ceſtui que truſt, ſee 3 Term Rep. 783: 4 Term Rep. 122.

But if the new defendants whether land-lord, or tenant, or both, after entering into the common rule, fail to appear at the trial, and to confeſs leaſe, entry, and ouſter, the plaintiff Smith muſt indeed be there non-ſuited, for want of proving thoſe requiſites: but judgment will in the end be entered againſt the caſual ejector Stiles; for the condition on which Saunders (the tenant) or his land-lord, was admitted a defendant, is broken, and therefore the plaintiff is put again in the ſame ſituation as if he never had appeared at all; the conſequence of which (we have ſeen) would have been that judgment would have been entered for the plaintiff, and the ſheriff, by virtue of a writ for that purpoſe, would have turned out the tenant Saunders and delivered poſſeſſion to Smith the plaintiff. The ſame proceſs therefore as would have been had, provided no conditional rule had ever been made, muſt now be purſued as ſoon as the condition is broken.

The damages recovered in theſe actions, though formerly their only intent, are now uſually (ſince the title has been conſidered as the principal queſtion) merely nominal, as 1*s*. In order therefore to complete the remedy, when the poſſeſſion has been long detained from him that had the right to it, an action of treſpaſs alſo lies, after a recovery in ejectment, to recover the meſne profits which the tenant in poſſeſſion has wrongfully received. Which action may be brought in the name of either the nominal plaintiff in the ejectment, or his leſſor, againſt the tenant in poſſeſſion: whether he be made party to the ejectment, or ſuffers judgment to go by default. In this caſe the judgment in ejectment is concluſive evidence againſt the defendant, for all profits which have accrued ſince the date of the demiſe ſtated in the former declaration of the plaintiff; but if the plaintiff ſues for any antecedent profits, the defendant may make a new defence. 4 Burr. 668.

Such is the modern way, of obliquely bringing in queſtion the title to lands and tenements, in order to try it in this collateral manner; a method which is now univerſally adopted in almoſt every caſe. It is founded on the ſame principles as the antient writs of aſſize, being calculated to try the mere poſſeſſory title to an eſtate; and hath ſucceeded to thoſe real actions, as being infinitely more convenient for attaining the ends of juſtice; becauſe the form of the proceeding being entirely fictitious, it is wholly in the power of the court to direct the application of that fiction, ſo as to prevent fraud and chicane, and eviſcerate the very truth of the title. The writ of ejectment and it's nominal parties (as was reſolved by all the judges) are judicially to be conſidered as the fictitious form of an action, really brought by the leſſor of the plaintiff againſt the tenant in poſſeſſion; invented, under the controul and power of the court, for the advancement of juſtice in many reſpects; and to force the parties to go to trial on the merits, without being entangled in the nicety of pleadings on either ſide. 4 Burr. 668. See alſo 3 Burr. 1294, 6.

But a writ of ejectment is not an adequate means to try the title of all eſtates, for on thoſe things, whereon an entry cannot in fact be made, no entry ſhall be ſuppoſed by any fiction of the parties. Therefore an ejectment will not lie of an advowſon, a rent, a common, or other incorporeal hereditaments. Brownl. 129: Cro. Car. 492: Str. 54. Except for tithes in the hands of lay appropriators, by the expreſs purview of Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 7; which doctrine hath ſince been extended by analogy to tithes in the hands of the clergy. Cro. Car. 301: 2 Ld. Raym. 789. Nor will it lie in ſuch caſes, where the entry of him that hath right is taken away by deſcent, diſcontinuance, twenty years diſpoſſeſſion, or otherwiſe.

More particularly, for what things ejectment will lie. Ejectment ought to be brought for a thing that is certain; and if it be of a manor, the manor of A. with the appurtenances; if of a rectory, the rectory of B. &c. And ſo many meſſuages, cottages, acres of arable land, meadow, &c. with the appurtenances in the pariſh of, &c. For land, muſt be diſtinguiſhed, how much of one ſort, and how much of another, &c. Cro. Eliz. 339: 3 Leon. 13. Ejectment lies of a church, as of an houſe called the pariſh church of, &c. And a church is a meſſuage, by which name it may be recovered; and the declaration is to be ſerved on the parſon who performs divine ſervice. 11 Rep. 25: 1 Salk. 256.

It lies de uno meſſuagio ſive burgagio; but not de uno meſſuagio ſive tenemento, unleſs it have a vocat' &. &c. to make it good, becauſe of the uncertainty of the word tenement. 1 Sid. 295. But for a meſſuage and tenement hath been allowed. 1 Term Rep. 11. So indeed for a meſſuage or tenement. 3 Wilſ. 23: 3 Mod. 328: 1 Sid. 295. It will lie for a moiety, or third part of a manor or meſſuage, &c. And for a chamber or room of a houſe well ſet forth. 11 Rep. 55, 59: 3 Leon. 210. It lieth de domo, which hath convenient certainty for the ſheriff to deliver poſſeſſion, &c. Cro. Jac. 654. It lies of a cottage or curtilage; of a coal-mine, &c. but not of a common, piſcary, &c. Cro. Jac. 150. For underwood it lies, though a præcipe doth not. 2 Roll. Rep. 482, 483. But for uno clauſo, or una pecia terræ, &c. without certainty of the acres, and their nature, it doth not lie. 11 Rep. 55: 4 Mod. 1. It lieth of a cloſe, containing three acres of paſture, &c. Alſo of ſo many acres of land covered with water; though not de aquæ curſu. Cro. Jac. 435: 1 Brownl. 242. It lies for a prebendal ſtall, after collation to it. 1 Wilſ. 14.

Ejectment lies by the owner of the ſoil for land which is part of the King's Highway, or of an acre of land, deſcribed only by the name of land, though there was a wall and porch and part of a houſe built on it. 1 Burr. 133.

In this action the law requires, that the thing demanded be ſo particularly ſpecified, that the ſheriff may certainly know what to give the poſſeſſion of, if the plaintiff ſhould recover; for the judgment is in order to execution, and the judgment would be vain, if execution could not be had of the thing ſpecifically demanded; but in this action the judges did not confine themſelves to thoſe rules which govern the præcipe, but allowed ſome things to be recovered in this action, which could not be demanded in a præcipe; becauſe ſince the eſtabliſhment of that real action, many things have been added and improved by art, and acquired new appellations that are perfectly underſtood now by the law, which are not found in the ancient law-books; and as men began to contract by new names which were not known in the old law, ſo it was reaſonable to ſuffer the remedy to follow the nature of ſuch contracts. See 2 Ld. Raym. 1470: 2 Stra. 908: 1 Burr. 629. —And in general ejectment does not lie without ſhewing the quantity and quality of the land, and how many acres of arable, meadow and paſture, &c. 11 Co. 55: 1 Salk. 254: 4 Mod. 97.

An Ejectment is a poſſeſſory remedy, and only competent where the leſſor of the plaintiff may enter; therefore it is always neceſſary for the plaintiff to ſhew that his leſſor had a right to enter, by proving a poſſeſſion within twenty years, or accounting for the want of it, under ſome exceptions allowed by the ſtatute; twenty years' adverſe poſſeſſion, is a poſitive title to the defendant; it is not a bar to the action or remedy for the plaintiff only, but takes away his right of poſſeſſion. 1 Burr. 119. Every plaintiff muſt ſhew a right of poſſeſſion, as well as of property, and therefore the defendant needs not plead the ſtatute, as in the caſe of actions. Ibid.

A judgment in ejectment is the recovery of the poſſeſſion; (not of the ſeiſin or freehold;) without prejudice to the right, as it may afterwards appear between the parties. He who enters under it in truth and ſubſtance, can only be poſſeſſed according to right, prout lex poſtulat. If the leſſor have a freehold, he is in as a freeholder: if he has a chattel intereſt he is in as a termor; and in reſpect of the freehold, his poſſeſſion enures according to right. If he has no title, he is in as a treſpaſſer; and, without any re-entry by the true owner, is liable to account for the profits. 1 Burr. 114.

This action of ejectment is rendered a very eaſy and expeditious remedy to landlords whoſe tenants are in arrear, by Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28; which enacts that every landlord, who hath by his leaſe a right of re-entry in caſe of non-payment of rent, when half a year's rent is due, and no ſufficient diſtreſs is to be had, may ſerve a declaration in ejectment on his tenant, or fix the ſame upon ſome notorious part of the premiſes which will be valid, without any formal re-entry or previous demand of rent. And a recovery in ſuch ejectment ſhall be final and concluſive, both in law and equity, unleſs the rent and all coſts be paid or tendered within ſix calendar months afterwards.

The true conſtruction upon this act is, to take off the landlord the inconvenience of his continuing always liable to an uncertainty of poſſeſſion; (from it's remaining in the power of the tenant to offer him a compenſation at any time, in order to found an application for relief in equity;) and to limit and to confine the tenant to ſix calendar months after execution granted, for his doing this; or elſe that the landlord ſhall from thenceforth hold the demiſed premiſes diſcharged from the leaſe. 1 Burr. 619. As to the proviſion of Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 16, in caſes of tenants at rack-rent being one year in arrear and deſerting the premiſes, ſee this Dict. title Rent.— Two Juſtices of peace may in this caſe put the landlord in poſſeſſion.

Where an ejectment is brought againſt a tenant, for the purpoſe of turning him out of his farm, &c. and the tenant actually holds the premiſes of the leſſor of the plaintiff, it is ſometimes neceſſary to give him notice to quit poſſeſſion, in order to maintain an ejectment. Here we may obſerve, that demiſes, where no certain term is mentioned, are held to be tenancies from year to year, which neither party can determine, without reaſonable notice to the other. This notice is, in moſt counties, ſix months, and it muſt in all ſuch caſes, expire at that part of the year, when the tenancy commenced; and therefore it hath been holden, that half a year's notice to quit poſſeſſion muſt be given to ſuch tenant; before the end of which time the landlord cannot maintain an ejectment; unleſs the tenant has attorned to ſome other perſon, or done ſome act diſclaiming to hold as tenant; in which caſe no notice is neceſſary. And the ſame law will apply to the executor of ſuch a tenant. 3 Wilſ. 25. See 1 Term Rep. 160: 4 Term Rep. 361. But after the expiration of a leaſe for a certain term, the tenant continuing in poſſeſſion is deemed a treſpaſſor: and therefore an ejectment which is an action of treſpaſs may be brought without any notice to quit.

Points of practice relating to ejectments. Where there is a tenant in poſſeſſion, in order to proceed againſt him, prepare a declaration, the copy of which, upon ſtamp, you ſerve the tenant with; if there be more than one tenant, each muſt be ſerved with a copy, but if the man is not at home, his wife will do (provided ſhe be ſerved on the premiſes, and ſo ſworn to); this is neceſſary both in town and country cauſes. At the time of ſervice, in all caſes it is requiſite to read over or explain the notice at the foot of the declaration to the perſon ſerved.—Impey K. B. which ſee at length.

The tenant's ſon, daughter, or ſervant, he being out of the way, muſt not be ſerved, unleſs it appear to the court, that ſuch declaration and notice came to his hands, in which caſe it has been held a good delivery; but if the tenant purpoſely keep out of the way to avoid being ſerved, the court on affidavit will grant a rule to ſhew cauſe why that ſhould not be deemed good ſervice.

In

In caſe the ſervant, &c. be ſerved, and motion be made that it be deemed good ſervice, the tenant muſt ſwear that the declaration never came to his hands before the time of ſhewing cauſe, or the court will make the rule abſolute. Trin. 30 Geo. 3. In this caſe to ground ſuch a motion you muſt ſhew endeavours to ſerve him at ſeveral times, &c.

The declaration muſt be ſerved before the eſſoign-day of every term, either in town or country, and the notice muſt be made to appear in the next term after delivery; but the delivery on a Sunday, or on the eſſoign-day of that term wherein the defendant is to appear, will not do.

If the premiſes be in London or Middleſex, the notice muſt be made to appear the firſt day of the next term after ſervice, for if made generally, the tenant in poſſeſſion has the whole term to appear in; but if the tenements lie in any other county, the notice muſt be to appear as of the next term generally.

Ejectment muſt be brought in the county where the lands lie, and the declaration muſt ſet forth the particular pariſh; and the day of the demiſe muſt be laid after the title accrues, otherwiſe the plaintiff will be non-ſuited; and the plaintiff muſt lay the commencement of his ſuppoſed leaſe, to have been precedent to the ejectment by the defendant. 1 Sid. 8: 2 New Ab. 171.

If the title of the leſſor of the plaintiff accrue in Eaſter vacation, yet the plaintiff may deliver his ejectment as of Eaſter term, and ſhall recover thereon, becauſe he makes up his iſſue, or takes judgment as of the next term; otherwiſe the act of the law which ſuppoſes the bill filed as of the firſt day of Eaſter term, before a title accrued to the plaintiff, would be an act of injury to him, and delay his right; for a man ejected out of a leaſe made in term time, could not complain till term was over. 2 Ventr. 174: It muſt be brought within twenty years, by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16: Sid. 432. See ante, and title Limitation of Actions.

It was formerly held that a declaration in ejectment could not be altered or amended after once delivered, in the moſt trivial matters; but it has ſince been held, that an ejectment is a mere fictitious action, and the demiſe mere matter of form, nor does it exiſt, and on application, the demiſe was ordered to be amended; but this was to ſave the plaintiff from being barred by a fine, if he had been obliged to bring a new ejectment; 4 Burr. 2447. Therefore as the demiſe may be altered, there can be no doubt but that other parts leſs material may alſo be amended; the action being invented under the control of the court, for the advancement of juſtice, and merely to try the right in queſtion. 1 Burr. 665. The term may be amended without conſent from five to ten years. Str. 1272, 1211.—A verdict cures a defect in ſetting out the title, though it cannot cure a defective title. 2 Burr. 1159. See title Amendment.

It is neceſſary to prove the defendant or his tenant in poſſeſſion of the premiſes: for the rule is, that the landlord ſhall defend for the premiſes only whereof his tenants are in poſſeſſion; and the party does not admit himſelf to be landlord of any premiſes which the plaintiff may make title to, but of ſuch only as were in poſſeſſion of thoſe tenants. 1 Wilſ. 220.

A new trial may, upon proper grounds, be granted in ejectment, as well as in other caſes. 4 Burr. 2224.

In real actions, where the freehold is recovered the demandant has execution, by the writ of habere facias ſeiſinam; in ejectment, therefore, it is but juſt, that a ſimilar remedy ſhall be permitted to the plaintiff, who, as he now has judgment to recover the poſſeſſion of the land, may put the ſentence of the law in execution by virtue of a writ of habere facias poſſeſſionem, directing the ſheriff to give actual poſſeſſion to the plaintiff, of the land recovered.

This writ may be ſued out though the leſſor of the plaintiff be dead, if teſted the laſt day of the preceding term, 4 Burr. 1970. The legal relation to the day of the teſte is proper to be ſupported in maintenance of a writ of poſſeſſion on a judgment in ejectment. Ibid.

In ejectment, where there are divers defendants, and the freeholds are ſeveral, no defendant may defend for more than is in his own poſſeſſion; and the plaintiff may take judgment againſt his ejector for what remains. 1 Vent. 355: 2 Keb. 524, 531.

If there be two defendants in ejectment, and one of them appears and confeſſes leaſe, entry, and ouſter, but the other does not appear, in that caſe the plaintiff may enter a non-pros, or retraxit againſt him, and go to trial, and have judgment againſt the other defendant. 1 Lord Raym. 717, 718. Alſo if an ejectment be brought againſt two perſons, and after iſſue joined, one dies, and a venire is awarded as to the two defendants, and a verdict againſt two; here, upon ſuggeſtion of the death of one of them upon the roll, judgment ſhall be given for the plaintiff againſt the other for the whole: for it is ſaid this action is grounded upon torts, which are ſeveral in their nature, and one may be found guilty and the other acquitted. Ibid.

Where one brings ejectment of land in two pariſhes, and the whole lies in one, he ſhall recover: alſo if a perſon brings ejectment of one acre in B. and part of it lies in A. he ſhall recover for ſuch part as lies in B. And if one having title to a part only of lands, bringeth an ejectment for the whole, he ſhall recover his part of the lands. Plowd. 429: Cro. Car. 13.

A plaintiff ſhall recover only according to the right which he hath at the time of bringing his action: and one who hath title to the land in queſtion, may on motion be made a defendant in the action with the tenant in poſſeſſion, to defend his title. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 694: 1 Lill. 497, &c. As the poſſeſſion of the land is primarily in queſtion, and to be recovered, that concerns the tenant; and the title of the land, which is tried collaterally, that concerns ſome other, who may be admitted to be a defendant with the tenant: but none other is to be admitted a defendant, but he that hath been in poſſeſſion, or receives the rents, &c.

If the plaintiff can prove his title accrued before the time of the demiſe, and that the defendant hath been longer in poſſeſſion, he ſhall recover antecedent profits; but in ſuch caſe the defendant will be at liberty to controvert his title. Bull. Ni. Pri. 83.

As the plaintiff in ejectment is a mere nominal perſon, and a truſtee for the leſſor; if he releaſe the action, the court may ſet aſide the releaſe, and he ſhall be committed for a contempt; ſo likewiſe if he releaſe an action brought in his name for the meſne profits. 1 Salk. 260: Skinn. 247. If a man is made plaintiff in ejectment without his knowledge, and the defendant appearing, the plaintiff thereupon becomes nonſuit, after which execution is ſued out againſt him; if it appears by his oath that he was made plaintiff without his knowledge or order, he shall be discharged. 34 Car. B. R: 5 An: 1 Lil. 500.

If there be a verdict and judgment against the plaintiff, he may bring another action of trespass and ejectment for the land, it being only to recover the possession, &c. wherein judgment is not final; and it is not like a writ of right, &c. where the title alone is tried. Wood's Inst. 547: Trin. 23 Car. B. R.

The reason of an ejectment being never final is not laid down in the general books on this subject, but in the notes to Eunomus vol. 4. p. 189, it is thus ingeniously stated.—The reason why it is not or cannot be final seems to be this.—That it is impossible from the structure of the record in this action, to plead a former, in bar of another, ejectment brought.—Because 1. The plaintiff and defendant are nominal and exist in most cases on record only; and consequently may be changed in a new action. But the identity both of plaintiff and defendant must be averred in pleading a former action in bar.—2. The term demised may be laid many different ways. An ejectment however, though in its nature not final at law, is capable of being made so in equity: and the Court of Chancery will on proper grounds grant a perpetual injunction; and not permit the possession of lands to be disturbed by a vain incessant litigation of the same question. See 2 Eq. Ab. 171. c. 1: 243. c. 11: 222. c. 1: 1 Bro. P. C. 266, 671: 2 Stra. 404.

Mr. George Saunders,

I am informed that you are in possession of, or claim title to, the premises mentioned in this declaration of ejectment, or to some part thereof; and I, being sued in this action, as a casual ejector, and having no claim or title to the same, do advise you to appear next Hilary term in his Majesty's court of King's Bench wheresoever he shall then be in England, by some attorney of that court, and then and there by a rule to be made of the same court, to cause yourself to be made defendant in my stead; otherwise I shall suffer judgment to be entered against me, and you will be turned out of possession.

Your loving friend

ELECTION, electio.] In law, is when a man is left to his own free will, to take or do one thing or another, which he pleases. And if it be given of several things, he who is the first agent, and ought to do the first act, shall have the election: as if a person make a lease, rendering rent, or a garment, &c. the lessee shall have the election, as being the first agent, by the payment of the one, or delivery of the other. Co. Lit. 144. And if A. covenant to pay B. a pound of pepper or sugar, before Easter; it is at the election of A. at all times before Easter, which which of them he will pay: but if he pays it not before the ſaid feaſt, then afterwards it is at the election of B. to demand and have which he pleaſeth. Dyer 18: 5 Rep. 59: 11 Rep. 51.

If I give to you one of my horſes in my ſtable, there you ſhall have the election; for you ſhall be the firſt agent, by taking or ſeizure of one of them. Co. Lit. 145. If things granted are annual, and to have continuance, the election (where the law gives it him) remains to the grantor, as well after the day as before: but it is otherwiſe when to be performed at once. Ibid. When nothing paſſes to the feoffee or grantee before election to have the one thing or the other, the election ought to be made in the life of the parties; and the heir or executor cannot make the election: but where an eſtate or intereſt paſſes immediately to the feoffee, donee, &c. there election may be made by them, or their heirs or executors. 2 Rep. 36, 37. And when one and the ſame thing paſſeth to the donee or grantee, and ſuch donee or grantee hath election in what manner he will take it, there the intereſt paſſeth immediately, and the party, his heirs, &c. may make election when they will. Co. Litt. 145: 2 Danv. Abr. 761.

Where the election creates the intereſt, nothing paſſes till election; and if no election can be made, no intereſt will ariſe. Hob. 174. If the election is given to ſeveral perſons, there the firſt election made by any of the perſons ſhall ſtand: as if a man leaſes two acres to A. for life, remainder of one acre to B. and of the other acre to C. Now B. or C. may elect which of the acres he will have, and the firſt election by one binds the other. Co. Lit. 145: 2 Rep. 36. If a man leaſes two acres for life, the remainder of one in fee to the ſame perſon; and after licences the leſſee to cut trees in one acre, this is an election that he ſhall have the fee in the other acre. 2 Danv. 762. A real election concerning lands is deſcendible; and election of a tenant in tail may prejudice his iſſue. He in remainder may make an election, after the death of tenant for life; but if the tenant for life do make election, the remainder-man is concluded. Moor, Ca. 247, 832.

A perſon grants a manor, except one cloſe called N. and there are two cloſes called by that name, one containing nine acres, and the other but three acres; the grantee ſhall not in this caſe chooſe which of the ſaid cloſes he will have, but the grantor ſhall have election which cloſe ſhall paſs. 1 Leon. 268. But if one grants an acre of land out of a waſte or common, and doth not ſay in what part, or how to be bounded, the grantee may make his election where he will. 1 Leon. 30. If a man hath three daughters, and he covenants with another, that he ſhall have one of them to diſpoſe of in marriage; it is at the covenantor's election which of his daughters the covenantee ſhall have, and after requeſt ſhe is to be delivered to him. Moor 72: 2 Danv. 762. Where there are three coparceners of lands, upon partition the eldeſt ſiſter ſhall have the election: though if ſhe herſelf make the partition, ſhe loſeth it, and ſhall take laſt of all. Co. Lit. 166.—See title Eſnecy.

In conſideration that a perſon had ſold another certain goods, he promiſed to deliver him the value in ſuch pipes of wine as he ſhould chooſe; the plaintiff muſt make his election before he brings his action. Style 49. An election which of two things ſhall be done, ought not to be made merely by bringing an action; but before, that the defendant may know which he is to do, and it is ſaid he is not bound to tender either before the plaintiff hath made his choice which will be accepted. 1 Mod. 217: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 697.

A condition of a bond is, that the obligor ſhall pay 30*l.* or twenty kine, at the obligee's election, within ſuch a time; the obligee at his peril is to make his election within the time limited. 1 Leon. 69. Though in debt upon bond to pay 10*l.* on ſuch a day, or four cows, at the then election of the obligee, it was adjudged, that it was not enough for the defendant to plead that he was always ready, &c. if the obligee had made his election; for he ought to tender both at the day, by reaſon the word then relates to the day of payment. Moor 246: 1 Nelſ. 694, 695.

If a man hath an election to do one of two things, and he cannot by any default of a ſtranger, or of himſelf, or the obligee, or by the act of God, do the one; he muſt at his peril do the other. 1 Lil. Abr. 506.

Where the law allows a man two actions to recover his right, it is at his election to bring which he pleaſeth: and when a man's act may work two ways, both ariſing out of his intereſt, he hath election given him to uſe it either way. Dyer 20: 2 Rol. Abr. 787. Action of treſpaſs upon the caſe, or action of treſpaſs vi & armis, may be brought againſt one that reſcues a priſoner, at the election of the party damnified by the reſcous. And an action on the caſe, or an aſſiſe lies againſt him that ſurcharges a common, at the election of him that is injured thereby. 1 Lil. 504, 505. Alſo for a rent-charge out of lands, there may be a writ of annuity or diſtreſs, at the election of the grantee: but after the death of the grantor, if the heir be not charged, the election to bring annuity ceaſeth. Dyer 344.

A man was indicted of felony for entering an houſe and taking away money, and found guilty, and burnt in the hand; after which the perſon who loſt the money brought an action of treſpaſs againſt the other for breaking his houſe, and taking away his money; and it was held that the action would lie; for though it was at his election at firſt, either to prefer an indictment or bring an action, yet by the indictment he had made no election, becauſe that was not the proſecution of the party, but of the Crown. Style 347.

If a bargain and ſale be made of lands, which is inrolled, and at the ſame time the bargainor levies a fine thereof to the bargainee, he hath his election to take by one or the other. 4 Rep. 72. A wife hath her election which to take, of a jointure made after marriage, or her dower, on the death of the huſband, and not before. Dyer 358. When a leſſor hath election to charge the leſſee, or his aſſignee, for rent; if he accepts the rent of the aſſignee, he hath determined his election. 3 Rep. 24.

If a perſon hath election to pay or perform one of two things at a day, and he do neither of them at that day, his election is gone: and where a grant is made of two acres of land, the one for life, the other in fee, or in tail, and before any election the feoffee makes a feoffment of both; in this caſe the election will be gone, and the feoffor may enter upon which he will for the forfeiture. 2 Rep. 37. If money on a mortgage be to be paid to a man, his heirs, or executors, the mortgagor hath election to pay it to either: and if in a feoffment it be to pay to the feoffee, his heirs or aſſigns, and he enfeoff another, the the feoffor may pay the money to the firſt or ſecond feoffee, &c. Co. Lit. 210.

In ſome caſes, where one hath cauſe of ſuit, he may ſue one perſon or another at his election; for there is an election of perſons, as well as of things. Dyer 204, 207. A man by deed binds himſelf and his heirs to pay money, and dies; the obligee may chuſe to ſue the heir, or the executors, although both of them have aſſets. Popb. 151. One may have election, when he hath recovered a debt, to have his execution by elegit, fieri facias, or capias ad ſatisfaciendum; but where he takes an elegit, and hath no fruit of it, he may reſort to another writ, though the election be entered on record. Hob. 57: Dyer 60, 369.

There is no election againſt the King in his grants, &c. 1 Leon. 30. And an act becoming void, will determine an election. Hob. 152. As to election with reſpect to one action or another, See 1 Com. Dig. title Action. And this Dict. titles Condition; Agreement.

ELECTION OF A CLERK OF STATUTES-MERCHANT, A writ that lies for the choice of a clerk aſſigned to take bonds called ſtatutes-merchant; and is granted out of the Chancery, upon ſuggeſtion that the clerk formerly aſſigned is gone to dwell at another place, or is under ſome impediment to attend the duty of his office, or hath not lands ſufficient to anſwer his tranſgreſſions, if he ſhould act amiſs, &c. *F. ELECTION OF ECCLESIASTICAL PERSONS. There is to be a free election for the dignities of the church. Stat. 9 Ed. 2. c. 14. And none ſhall diſturb any perſon from making free election, on pain of great forfeiture. If any perſons that have a voice in elections, take any reward for an election in any church, college, ſchool, &c. the election ſhall be void: and if any of ſuch ſocieties reſign their places to others for reward, they incur a forfeiture of double the ſum; and the party giving it, and the party taking it, is incapable of ſuch place. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6. ELEGIT, from the words in the writ, elegit ſibi liberari, becauſe the plaintiff hath choſen this writ of execution. See 3 Comm. 418.] A writ of execution, founded on the Stat. W. 2. 13. E. 1. c. 18; that lies for him who hath recovered debt or damages, or, upon a recognizance in any court againſt one not able in his goods to ſatisfy the ſame; directed to the ſheriff, commanding him to make delivery of a moiety of the party's land, and all his goods, beaſts of the plough excepted. And the creditor ſhall hold the ſaid moiety of the land ſo delivered unto him, until his whole debt and damages are paid and ſatisfied; and during that term he is tenant by elegit. Reg. Orig. 299: Co. Lit. 289.

Upon an elegit, the ſheriff is to deliver one half of all houſes, lands, meadows and paſtures, rents, reverſions, and hereditaments wherein the defendant had any ſole eſtate in fee, or for life, into whoſe hands ſoever the ſame do afterwards come; but not of a right only to land, an annuity, copyhold lands, &c. Dyer 206: 7 Rep. 49: Plowd. 224. And by it, the plaintiff, &c. elects omnia bona & catalla of the defendant, præter boves & aſros de caruca ſua; and alſo a moiety of all the lands which the defendant had at the time of the judgment recovered: but it ought to be ſued within a year and a day after the judgment. F. N. B. 267.

But though by this ſtatute, the lands of the debtor are made liable, as well as his perſonal eſtate; yet if the creditor takes out an elegit, and it appears to the ſheriff, that there are goods and chattels ſufficient of the debtor's, to ſatisfy the debt, he ought not to extend the lands. 2 Inſt. 395. But an elegit executed upon goods only, is not a fieri facias, for a fieri facias is executed by ſale by the ſheriff; but the elegit by the appraiſement of the goods by a jury, and delivery to the party. 1 Sid. 184: 1 Lev. 92: 1 Keb. 105, 261, 465, 556, 692.

Upon this writ the ſheriff is to impanel a jury, who are to make inquiry of all the goods and chattels of the debtor, and to appraiſe the ſame, and alſo to inquire as to his lands and tenements; and upon ſuch inquiſition the ſheriff is to deliver all the goods and chattels (except the beaſts of the plough) and a moiety of the lands to the party, and muſt return his writ, in order to record ſuch inquiſition in that court, out of which the elegit iſſued: and when the jury have found the ſeiſin and value of the land, the ſheriff, and not the jury, is to ſet out and deliver a moiety thereof to the plaintiff, by metes and bounds. Cro. Car. 319.

All writs of execution may be good, though not returned, except an elegit; but that muſt be returned, becauſe an inquiſition is to be taken upon it, and that the court may judge of the ſufficiency thereof. 4 Rep. 65, 74. It has been ruled, that if more than a moiety of the lands is delivered on an elegit by the ſheriff, the ſame is void for the whole. Sid. 91: 2 Salk. 563. And the ſheriff cannot ſell any thing, but what is found in the inquiſi-tion;

tion; and therefore if he ſell a term for years, &c. miſrecited in the inquiſition, as to the commencement thereof, the ſale is void. 4 Rep. 74.

In debt upon bond, the defendant before the trial conveyed his lands to another, &c. but he himſelf took the profits; notwithſtanding this conveyance, a moiety of his lands was extended on an elegit. Dyer 294: 3 Rep. 78. If two perſons have each of them a judgment againſt one debtor and he who hath the firſt judgment, brings an elegit, and hath the moiety of the lands delivered to him in execution; and then the other judgment creditor, ſues out another elegit, he ſhall have only a moiety of that moiety, which was not extended by the firſt judgment. Cro. Eliz. 483.

When lands are once taken in execution on an elegit, and the writ is returned and filed, the plaintiff ſhall have no other execution. 1 Lev. 92. And if the defendant hath lands in more counties than one, and the plaintiff awards an elegit to one county, and extends the lands upon the elegit, and afterwards files the writ, he cannot, after that, ſue out an elegit into the other counties: but he may immediately after entry of the judgment upon the judgment-roll, award as many elegits, into as many counties as he thinks fit, and execute all, or any of them, at his pleaſure. 1 Lil. Abr. 509: Cro. Jac. 246.

A man had lands in execution, upon an elegit, and afterwards moved for a new elegit, upon proof that the defendant had other lands, not known to the creditor, at the time when the execution was ſued out; and it was adjudged, that if he had accepted of the firſt by the delivery of the ſheriff, he could not afterwards have a new elegit; but when the ſheriff returns the writ, he may waive it, and then have a new extent. Cro. Eliz. 310: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 699. Sed qu.

If the defendant dies in priſon, ſo that there is no execution with ſatisfaction, the plaintiff ſhall have an elegit afterwards. 5 Rep. 86. And if all the lands extended on an elegit be evicted by a better title, the plaintiff may take out a new execution. 4 Rep. 66. Where one having land by elegit, is wholly evicted out of it, he may have a further execution, either againſt the defendant's lands or goods, as he might have had at firſt; ſave only, he muſt bring a ſcire facias againſt the defendant, or him that comes in under him; but if the eviction be of part of the land, or for a time only, ſo that the plaintiff may take his full execution by holding it over; there he cannot have any new execution, by the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 5. 2 Shep. Abr. 115.

Where an elegit is ſued upon a judgment, the levying of goods thereon for part only, is no impediment, but the plaintiff may bring another elegit pro reſiduo, and take the lands. 1 Lev. 92. On a nihil returned upon an elegit, there may be brought a capias ad ſatisfaciendum, or fieri facias. 1 Leon. 176. And an elegit may be ſued after a fieri facias returned nulla bona, or where part is levied by it; and after a capias ad ſatisfaciendum returned non eſt inventus. Hob. 57.

A perſon in execution was ſuffered to eſcape, and then he died; the land which he had at the time of the judgment may be extended, by elegit, upon a ſcire facias brought againſt his heir, as tertenant. Dyer 271.

A man may have an aſſiſe of the land which he hath in execution by elegit, if he be deforced thereof. Stat. Weſtm. 2. c. 18. And if tenant by elegit alien the land in fee, &c. he who hath right ſhall have againſt him and the alienee, an aſſiſe of novel diſſeiſin. Ibid. At a trial at bar in C. B. the court delivered for law, that where lands are actually extended, and delivered upon an elegit, a fine levied on thoſe lands, and non-claim, will bar the intereſt of the tenant by elegit. 1 Mod. 217.

If tenant by elegit, be put out of poſſeſſion before he hath received ſatisfaction for his debt, by the heir at law, &c. he may bring action of treſpaſs, or re-enter and hold over till ſatisfied: but after ſatisfaction received, the defendant may enter on the tenant by elegit. 4 Rep. 28, 67. Tenants by elegit, ſtatutes-merchant, &c. are not puniſhable for waſte by action of waſte: but the party, againſt whom execution is ſued, is to have a writ of venire facias ad computandum, &c. and there the waſte ſhall be recovered in the debt: though it is ſaid there is an old writ of waſte in the Regiſter, for him in reverſion againſt tenant by elegit, committing waſte on lands which he hath in execution. 6 Rep. 37: New Nat. Br. 130. On tenant by elegit's accounting, if the money recovered by the plaintiff is levied out of the lands, the defendant ſhall recover his land; and if more be received by waſte, &c. he ſhall have damages. Terms de Ley.—See this Dict. titles Eſtate; Extent; Execution.

ELF-ARROWS, Were flint-ſtones ſharpened on each ſide in ſhape of arrow-heads, made uſe of in war by the ancient Britons; of which ſeveral have been found in England, and greater plenty in Scotland, where it is ſaid the common people imagine they drop from the clouds; or are made by the elves or fairies.

ELISORS, Electors.] In caſes of challenge to the ſheriff and coroners for partiality, &c. the venire to ſummon a jury ſhall be directed to two clerks of the Court, or two perſons of the county named by the Court and ſworn. And theſe two who are called Eliſors ſhall indifferently name or chooſe the jury; and their return is final; no challenge being allowed to their array. Forteſc. de Laud. leg. c. 25: Co. Lit. 158.

ELKE, A kind of yew to make bows of. Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 9.

ELOINE, from the Fr. eſloiſner.] To remove or ſend a great way off: in this ſenſe it is uſed where it is ſaid that if ſuch as are within age be eloined, ſo that they cannot come to ſue perſonally, their next friends ſhall be admitted to ſue for them. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 15.

ELONGATA, Is a return of the ſheriff in replevin, that cattle are not to be found, or are removed, ſo that he cannot make deliverance, &c. 2 Lil. Abr. 454, 458.

ELOPEMENT, from the Belg. E'e matrimonium & loopen, currere; or more probably from the Sax. Gelooran, to depart; the Saxon r being eaſily perverted from its ſhape into a p. Blount.] Is where a married woman of her own accord, goes away and departs from her huſband, and lives with an adulterer. See titles Adultery; Baron and Feme.

ELY, A royal franchiſe or county palatine. See title Counties-Palatine.

EMBARGO, A prohibition upon ſhipping, not to go out of any port, on a war breaking out, &c.

EMBASSADOR, See Ambaſſador.

EMBLEMENTS, from the Fr. emblavence de bled, corn ſprung or put up above ground.] The profits of ſown land: but the word is ſometimes uſed more largely, for any products that ariſe naturally from the ground, as grais,

graſs, fruit, &c. In ſome caſes he who ſowed the corn ſhall have the emblements; and in others not: a leſſee at will ſows the land, he ſhall have the emblements; though if the leſſee determines the will himſelf, he ſhall not have them, but the leſſor. 5 Rep. 116. If leſſee at will ſows the land with grain, or other thing yielding annual profit, and the leſſor enters before ſeverance; yet the leſſee ſhall have it: but where the leſſee plants young fruit-trees, or other trees, or ſows the land with acorns, &c. he ſhall not have theſe: and if ſuch tenant by good huſbandry make the graſs to grow in greater abundance; or ſow the land with hay-ſeed, by which means it is increaſed, if the leſſor enters on the leſſee, the leſſee ſhall not have it, becauſe graſs is the natural profit of the ſoil. Co. Lit. 55, 56.

Where tenant for life ſows the land, and dies, his executors ſhall have the emblements, and not the leſſor or him in reverſion; by reaſon of the uncertainty of the eſtate. Cro. Eliz. 463. And if a tenant for life plants hops, and dies before ſeverance, he in reverſion ſhall not have them, but the executors of tenant for life. Cro. Car. 515. If tenant for years, (if he ſo long live) ſow the ground, and die before ſeverance; the executor of the leſſee ſhall have the corn: and where leſſee for life leaſes for years, if the leſſee for years ſow the land, and after leſſee for life dies before ſeverance, the executor of leſſee for years ſhall have the emblements. 2 Danv. Abr. 765.

So it is alſo if a man be tenant for the life of another; and ceſtui que vie, (he on whoſe life the land is held,) dies after the corn ſown, the tenant pur auter vie ſhall have the emblements. The ſame is alſo the rule if a life-eſtate be determined by the act of law. Therefore if a leaſe be made to huſband and wife during coverture, (which gives them a determinable eſtate for life,) and the huſband ſows the land; and afterwards they are divorced à vinculo matrimonii, the huſband ſhall in this caſe have the emblements; for the ſentence of divorce is the act of the law. 5 Rep. 116. But if an eſtate for life be determined by the tenant's own act, (as by forfeiture for waſte committed; or if a tenant during widowhood, thinks proper to marry;) in theſe and ſimilar caſes, as in that of a tenant at will determining his own tenure, the tenants ſhall not be entitled to take the emblements. 1 Inſt. 55.

If tenant for years ſows ground, and before his corn is ſevered, the term which is certain expires; the leſſor or he in reverſion ſhall have the emblements; but he muſt firſt enter on the lands. 1 Lil. Abr. 511. A leſſee for life or years ſows the land, and after ſurrenders, &c. before ſeverance, the leſſor ſhall have the corn. 2 Danv. 764. If there be leſſee for years upon condition that if he commit waſte, &c. his eſtate ſhall ceaſe; if he ſows the ground with corn, and after doth waſte, the leſſor ſhall have the corn. Co. Lit. 55. And where a lord enters on his tenant for a forfeiture, he ſhall have the corn on the ground. 4 Rep. 21.

Though if a feme copyholder for her widowhood ſows the land, and before ſeverance takes huſband, ſo that her eſtate is determined, the lord ſhall have the emblements; yet if ſuch a feme copyholder durante viduitate, leaſes for one year according to cuſtom, and the leſſee ſows the land, and afterwards the copyholder takes huſband, the leſſee ſhall have the corn. 2 Danv. 764. If a huſband holds lands for life, in right of his wife, and ſow the land, and after ſhe dies before ſeverance, he ſhall have the emblements. Dyer 316: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 701. And where the wife hath an eſtate for years, life, or in fee, and the huſband ſows the land, and dieth, his executors ſhall have the corn. 1 Nelſ. 702. But if the huſband and wife are jointtenants, though the huſband ſow the land with corn, and dies before ripe, the wife and not his executors ſhall have the corn, ſhe being the ſurviving jointenant. Co. Lit. 199.

When a widow is endowed with lands ſown, ſhe ſhall have the emblements, and not the heir. 2 Inſt. 81. And a tenant in dower may diſpoſe of corn ſown on the ground; or it may go to her executors, if ſhe die before ſeverance. 2 Inſt. 80, 81. And by the particular proviſions of Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 11, if a Parſon ſows his glebe, and dies, his executors ſhall have the corn: and ſuch parſon may by will diſpoſe thereof. 1 Rol. Abr. 655.

If tenant by ſtatute-merchant ſows the land, and before ſeverance a caſual profit happens, by which he is ſatisfied, yet he ſhall have the corn. Co. Lit. 55. Lands ſown are delivered in execution upon an extent, the perſon to whom delivered ſhall have the corn on the ground. 2 Leon. 54. And judgment was given againſt a perſon, and then he ſowed the land, and brought a writ of error to reverſe the judgment, but it was affirmed; and adjudged that the recoveror ſhall have the corn. 2 Bulſt. 213.

If a diſſeiſor ſows the land, and afterwards cuts the corn, but before it is carried away, the diſſeiſee enters; the diſſeiſee ſhall have the corn. Dyer 31: 11 Rep. 52. A perſon ſeiſed in fee of land dies, having a daughter, and his wife privement enſeint with a ſon; the daughter enters and ſows the land, and before ſeverance of the corn, the ſon is born; in this caſe the daughter ſhall have the corn, her eſtate being lawful, and defeated by the act of God; and it is for the public good that the land ſhould be ſown. Co. Lit. 55.

A man ſeiſed in fee-ſimple ſows land, and then deviſes the land by will, and dies before ſeverance; the deviſee ſhall have the corn; and not the deviſor's executors. Winch 52: Cro. Eliz. 61. If a perſon deviſes his lands ſown, and ſays nothing of the corn, the corn ſhall go with the land to the deviſee: and when a man ſeiſed of land, in fee or in tail, ſows it, and dies without will, it goes to the executor, and not the heir. 10 Ed. 4. 1 b: 21 H. 6. 30 a: 37 H. 6. 35 b. A deviſee for life dies, he in remainder ſhall have the emblements with the land. Hob. 132.

Tenant in fee ſows the land, and deviſes it to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, and dies; A. dies before ſeverance, B. in remainder ſhall have the corn, and not the executor of the firſt tenant for life. Cro. Eliz. 61, 464. Where there is a right to emblements, ingreſs, egreſs and regreſs are allowed by law, to enter, cut and carry them away, when the eſtate is determined, &c. 1 Inſt. 56.

EMBLERS DE GENTZ, Fr.] A ſtealing from the people: The word occurs in our old rolls of Parliament. Whereas divers murders, emblers de gentz, and robberies are committed, &c. Rot. Parl. 21 Ed. 3. n. 62.

EMBRACEOR, Fr. embraſour.] He that when a matter is in trial between party and party comes to the bar with one of the parties, having received ſome reward ſo to do, and ſpeaks in the caſe; or privately labours the jury, or ſtands in the court to ſurvey and overlook them, whereby they are awed or influenced, or put in fear or doubt doubt of the matter. Stat. 19 H. 7. cap. 13. But lawyers, attornies, &c. may ſpeak in the caſe for their clients, and not be embraceors: alſo the plaintiff may labour the jurors to appear in his own cauſe; but a ſtranger muſt not do it: for the bare writing a letter to a perſon, or parol requeſt for a juror to appear, not by the party himſelf, hath been held within the ſtatutes againſt embracery and maintenance. Co. Lit. 369: Hob. 294: 1 Saund. 391. If the party himſelf inſtruct a juror, or promiſe any reward for his appearance, then the party is likewiſe an embraceor. And a juror may be guilty of embracery, where he by indirect practices gets himſelf ſworn on the tales, to ſerve on one ſide. 1 Lil. 513. There are divers ſtatutes relating to this offence and maintenance. See further title Maintenance, and poſt, Embracery.—See alſo titles Jury; Decies tantum.

EMBRACERY. An attempt to influence a Jury corruptly to one ſide, by promiſes, perſuaſions, entreaties, money, entertainments, and the like. The puniſhment for the perſon embracing, (the Embraceor) is by fine and impriſonment; and for the Juror ſo embraced, if it be by taking money, the puniſhment is, (by various Stats. of Ed. III. viz. 5 E. 3. c. 10: 34 E. 3. c. 8: 38 E. 3. c. 12,) perpetual infamy, impriſonment for a year, and forfeiture of ten-fold value. 4 Comm. 140: See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 85; and the preceding title.

EMBRING DAYS, from embers, cineres, ſo called either becauſe our anceſtors, when they faſted, ſat in aſhes, or ſtrewed them on their heads.] Thoſe days which the ancient Fathers called Quatuor Tempora jejunii, and of great antiquity in the church: they are obſerved on Wedneſday, Friday and Saturday next after Quadrageſima Sunday, (or the firſt Sunday in Lent) after Whitſunday, Holyrood-day in September, and St. Lucy's day about the middle of December. Theſe days are mentioned by Britton, c. 53, and other writers; and particularly in the Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 19. Our almanacks call them the Ember Weeks.

EMBROIDERY. By Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 36, No foreign embroidery, or gold or ſilver brocade, ſhall be imported, upon pain of being forfeited and burnt, and penalty of 100*l.* for each piece. No perſon ſhall ſell or expoſe to ſale any foreign embroidery, gold or ſilver thread, lace, fringe, brocade, or make up the ſame into any garment, upon pain of having it forfeited and burnt, and penalty of 100*l.* All ſuch embroidery, &c. found, may be ſeized and burnt, and the mercer, &c. in whoſe cuſtody it was found, ſhall forfeit 100*l.*—See title Manufactures; Navigation-Acts.

EMENDALS, emenda.] An old word ſtill made uſe of in the accounts of the Society of the Inner Temple; where ſo much in emendals at the foot of an account, on the balance thereof, ſignifies ſo much money in the bank or ſtock of the houſes, for reparation of loſſes or other emergent occaſions: quod in reſtaurationem damni tribuitur. Spelm.

EMENDARE, Emendam ſolvere.] To make amends for any crime or treſpaſs committed. Leg. Edw. Confeſſ. c. 35. Hence a capital crime, not to be attoned by fine, was ſaid to be inemendabile. Leg. Canut. p. 2.

EMENDATIO, Hath been uſed for the power of amending and correcting abuſes, according to ſtated rules and meaſures; as emendatio panni, the power of looking to the aſſize of cloth, that it be of juſt meaſure; emendatio panis & cerviſiæ, the aſſizing of bread and beer, &c.

privileges granted to lords of manors, and executed by their officers appointed in the court-leet, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 196.

EMPANEL, See Impanel.

EMPEROR, imperator.] The higheſt ruler of large kingdoms and territories; a title anciently given to renowned and victorious generals of armies, who acquired great power and dominion. And this title is not only given to the Emperor of Germany, as Emperor of the Romans; but was formerly belonging to the Kings of England, as appears by a charter of King Edgar.

ENBREVER, Fr.] To write down in ſhort. Brit. 56.

ENCAUSTUM, See Incauſtum.

ENCHESON, A French word uſed in our law books and ſtatutes, ſignifying the occaſion, cauſe or reaſon wherefore any thing is done. Stat. 5 Ed. 3. c. 3.

ENDEAVOUR. Where one who has the uſe of his reaſon endeavours to commit felony, &c. he ſhall be puniſhed by our laws, but not to that degree as if he had actually committed it: as if a man aſſault another on the highway, in order to a robbery, but takes nothing from him, this is not puniſhed as felony, becauſe the felony was not accompliſhed; though as a miſdemeanor, it is liable to fine and impriſonment. 3 Inſt. 68, 69, 161: 11 Rep. 98. And in this caſe, by Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 21, the offender ſhall be tranſported. See titles Intendment; Robbery.

ENDOWMENT, The beſtowing or aſſuring of dower on a woman. It is ſometimes uſed metaphorically for the ſettling a proviſion upon a parſon, or building of a church or chapel; and the ſevering a ſufficient portion of tithes, &c. for a vicar, towards his perpetual maintenance, when the benefice is appropriated. See Stats. 15 R. 2. c. 6: 4 H. 4. c. 12.

ENEMY, inimicus.] Is properly an alien or foreigner, who in a public capacity, and in an hoſtile manner, invades any kingdom or country; and whether ſuch perſons come hither by themſelves, or in company with Engliſh traitors, they cannot be puniſhed as traitors, but ſhall be dealt with by martial law. H. P. C. 10, 15. But the ſubjects of a foreign prince coming into England, and living under the protection of the King, if they take up arms, &c. againſt the government, they may be puniſhed as traitors, not as alien enemies. If a priſoner be reſcued by enemies, the gaoler is not guilty of an eſcape; as he would have been if ſubjects had made the reſcue, when he might have a legal remedy againſt them. See Hawk. P. C. and titles Alien; Eſcape; and as to adhering to and ſuccouring the King's enemies, ſee title Treaſon.

ENFRANCHISE, Fr. enfranchir.] To make free, or incorporate a man into any ſociety, &c. It is alſo uſed where one is made a free denizen, which is a kind of incorporation in the Commonwealth.

ENFRANCHISEMENT, Fr. from franchiſe, i. e. libertas.] Is when a perſon is incorporated into any ſociety or body politick; and it ſignifies the act of incorporating. He that by charter is made a denizen, or freeman of England, is ſaid to be enfranchiſed, and let into the general liberties of the ſubjects of the kingdom: and he who is made a citizen of London, or other city, or free burgeſs of any town corporate, as he is made partaker of thoſe liberties that appertain to the corporation, is in the common ſenſe of the word a perſon enfranchiſed. And when a man is enfranchiſed into the freedom of any city or borough, rough, he hath a freehold in his freedom during life; and may not, for endeavouring any thing only againſt the corporation, loſe and forfeit the ſame. 11 Rep. 91. See title Corporation. A villein was ſaid to be enfranchiſed, when he was made free by his lord, and rendered capable of the benefits belonging to freemen.

ENGLECERY, or ENGLESCHIRE, Engleceria.] An old word ſignifying the being an Engliſhman. When Canutus the Dane came to be King of England, he at the requeſt of the Nobility ſent back his army into Denmark, but kept ſome Danes behind to be a guard to his perſon; and he made a law for the preſervation of his Danes (who were often privately made away with by the Engliſh) that if an Engliſhman killed a Dane, he ſhould be tried for the murder; or if he eſcaped, the town or hundred where the fact was done, was to be amerced ſixty-ſix marks to the King: ſo that after this law, whenever a murder was committed, it was neceſſary to prove the party ſlain to be an Engliſhman, that the town might be exempted from the amercement; which proof was called Englecery, or Engleſchire. And whereas if a perſon were privately ſlain, he was in ancient time accounted Francigena, which word comprehended every alien, eſpecially the Danes: it was therefore ordained, that where any perſon was murdered, he ſhould be adjudged Francigena, unleſs Englecery were proved, and that it was made manifeſt he was an Engliſhman. The manner of proving the perſon killed to be an Engliſhman, was by two witneſſes who knew the father and mother, before the Coroner, &c. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 15: Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 30: 7 Rep. 16. This Englecery, by reaſon of the great abuſes and trouble that afterwards were perceived to grow by it, was utterly taken away by Stat. 14 Ed. 3. ſt. 1. c. 4.—See 4 Comm. 195: and this Dict. title Murder.

ENGLISH. Pleas, records, bonds, and proceedings in courts of juſtice, to be in Engliſh. Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26. And ſee Stats. 5 Geo. 2. c. 27: 6 Geo. 2. c. 14: and this Dict. titles Pleading; Proceſs, &c.

ENGLISHMEN, The names of, to be certified into the Chancery who are abroad in Holland and Flanders, &c. and to pay ſuch impoſitions as aliens do. Stat. 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 4.

ENGRAVERS, That ſhall invent, deſign and engrave prints, to have the ſole right of printing them for fourteen years, which ſhall be engraved with the names of the proprietors; and others copying, and ſelling ſuch prints, though by varying, &c. without their conſent, ſhall forfeit 5 l. for every print, and alſo the plates and ſheet, &c. Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 13.—See title Literary Property.

ENGROSSER, See Ingroſſer; Foreſtaller.

To ENHANCE. To raiſe the price of goods or merchandize. See title Foreſtaller.

ENSIENT, or ENSEINT, The being with child. Law Fr. Dict.

ENSIENTURE, or Enſiency, Of any woman condemned for a crime, is no ground to ſtay judgment; but it may be afterwards alledged againſt execution. 2 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 413.

ENTAIL. See title Tail.

ENTERPLEADER, See Interpleader.

ENTIERTIE, from the French entierté, entireneſs.] Is a contradiſtinction in our books to moiety, denoting the whole: and a bond, damages, &c. are ſaid to be entire, when they cannot be divided or apportioned.

ENTIRE TENANCY, Contrary to ſeveral tenancy, and ſignifying a ſole poſſeſſion in one man; whereas the other is a joint or common poſſeſſion in two or more. Brook.

ENTRY, Fr. entrée, i. e. ingreſſus, introitus.] Signifies the taking poſſeſſion of lands or tenements, where a man hath title of entry: and it is alſo uſed for a writ of poſſeſſion. This entry into lands, is where any man enters into or takes poſſeſſion of any lands, &c. in his proper perſon; and is an actual entry when made by a man's ſelf, or by attorney by warrant from him that hath the right; or it is an entry in law, for a continual claim is an entry implied by law, and has the ſame force with it. Lit. § 419. There is a right of entry, when the party claiming may for his remedy either enter into the land, or have an action to recover it: and a title of entry, where one hath lawful entry given him in the lands, which another hath, but has no action to recover till he hath entered. Plowd. 558: 10 Rep. 48: Finch's Law 105.

ENTRY, may be defined to be an extrajudicial and ſummary remedy, againſt certain ſpecies of injury by ouſter, uſed by the legal owner, when another perſon who hath no right, hath previouſly taken poſſeſſion of lands or tenements. In this caſe, the party entitled may make a formal but peaceable entry thereon, declaring that thereby he takes poſſeſſion; which notorious act of ownerſhip, is equivalent to a feodal inveſtiture by the lord: or he may enter on any part of it in the ſame county, declaring it to be in the name of the whole. Lit. § 417. But if it lies in different counties, he muſt make different entries; for the notoriety of ſuch entry or claim to the pares or freeholders of Weſtmorland, is not any notoriety to the pares or freeholders of Suſſex. Alſo if there be two diſſeiſors, the party diſſeiſed muſt make his entry on both; or if one diſſeiſor has conveyed the lands with livery to two diſtinct feoffees, entry muſt be made on both. Co. Litt. 252. For as their ſeiſin is diſtinct, ſo alſo muſt be the act which deveſts that ſeiſin. If the claimant be deterred from entering by menaces or bodily fear, he may make claim as near to the eſtate as he can, with the like forms and ſolemnities: which claim is in force for only a year and a day. Litt. § 422. And this claim, if it be repeated once in the ſpace of every year and day, (which is called continual claim) has the ſame effect with, and in all reſpects amounts to, a legal entry. Ibid. § 419, 23.—See this Dict. title Claim. Such an entry gives a man ſeiſin; or puts into immediate poſſeſſion, him that hath right of entry on the eſtate; and thereby makes him complete owner, and capable of conveying it from himſelf by either deſcent or purchaſe. Co. Lit. 15.

This remedy by entry takes place in three only of the five ſpecies of ouſter, viz. Abatement, Intruſion, and Diſſeiſin; for, as in theſe the original entry of the wrongdoer was unlawful, they may therefore be remedied by the mere entry of him who hath right. But, upon a Diſcontinuance, or Deforcement, the owner of the eſtate cannot enter, but is driven to his action: for herein the original entry being lawful, and thereby an apparent right of poſſeſſion being gained, the law will not ſuffer that that right to be overthrown by the mere act or entry of the claimant. Yet a man may enter on his tenant by ſufferance: for ſuch tenant hath no freehold, but only a bare poſſeſſion; which may be defeated, like a tenancy at will, by the mere entry of the owner. But if the owner thinks it more expedient to ſuppoſe or admit ſuch tenant to have gained a tortious freehold, he is then remediable by writ of entry, ad terminum qui præteriit. 1 Inſt. 57, 237, 8.—See title Diſſeiſin.

On the other hand, in caſe of Abatement, Intruſion, or Diſſeiſin, where entries are generally lawful, this right of entry may be tolled, that is, taken away, by deſcent. Deſcents which take away entries, are when any one, ſeiſed by any means whatſoever of the inheritance of a corporeal hereditament, dies, whereby the ſame deſcends to his heir: in this caſe, however feeble the right of the anceſtor might be, the entry of any other perſon who claims title to the freehold is taken away; and he cannot recover poſſeſſion againſt the heir by this ſummary method, but is driven to his action to gain a legal ſeiſin of the eſtate. Lit. § 385; 413.

In general therefore, no man can recover poſſeſſion by mere entry on lands, which another hath by deſcent. Yet this rule hath ſome exceptions; eſpecially if the claimant were under any legal diſabilities, during the life of the anceſtor, either of infancy, coverture, impriſonment, inſanity, or being out of the realm: in all which caſes, there is no neglect or laches in the claimant, and therefore no deſcent ſhall bar, or take away his entry. Co. Lit. 246. And this title of taking away entries by deſcent, is ſtill farther narrowed by Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 33; which enacts, that if any perſon diſſeiſes or turns another out of poſſeſſion, no deſcent to the heir of the diſſeiſor ſhall take away the entry of him that has right to the land, unleſs the diſſeiſor had peaceable poſſeſſion five years next after the diſſeiſin. But the ſtatute, on feodal reaſons, does not extend to any feoffee or donee of the diſſeiſor, mediate or immediate. Ibid. 256.

By the ſtatute of limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, it is enacted, that no entry ſhall be made by any man upon lands, unleſs within 20 years after his right ſhall accrue. And by Stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16, no entry ſhall be of force to ſatisfy the ſaid ſtatute of limitations, or to avoid a fine levied of lands, unleſs an action be thereupon commenced within one year after, and proſecuted with effect. See further title Claim.

This remedy by entry muſt be purſued, according to Stat. 5 Ric. 2. ſt. 1. c. 8, in a peaceable and eaſy manner; and not with force or ſtrong hand. For, if one turns or keeps another out of poſſeſſion forcibly, this is an injury of both a civil and a criminal nature. The civil is remedied by immediate reſtitution; which puts the ancient poſſeſſor in ſtatu quo; the criminal injury or public wrong, by breach of the King's peace, is puniſhed by fine to the King. See this Dict. title Forcible Entry.

THE WRIT OF ENTRY is a poſſeſſory remedy which diſproves the title of the tenant or poſſeſſor, by ſhowing the unlawful means by which he entered, or continues poſſeſſion. Finch. L. 261. The writ is directed to the Sheriff, requiring him to, "Command the tenant of the land, that he render [in Latin, præcipe quod reddat] to the demandant the land in queſtion, which he claims to be his right and inheritance; and into which, as he ſaith, the ſaid tenant had not entry, but by (or after) a diſſeiſin, intruſion, or the like, made to the ſaid demandant, within the time limited by law for ſuch actions; or that upon refuſal he do appear in court on ſuch a day, to ſhew wherefore he hath not done it." This is the original proceſs, the præcipe, upon which all the reſt of the ſuit is grounded; wherein it appears, that the tenant is required, either to deliver ſeiſin of the lands, or to ſhow cauſe why he will not. This cauſe may be either a denial of the fact, of having entered by or under ſuch means as are ſuggeſted, or a juſtification of his entry, by reaſon of title in himſelf, or in thoſe under whom he makes claim; whereupon the poſſeſſion of the land is awarded to him who produces the cleareſt right to poſſeſs it.

The Writs of entry are of divers kinds, diſtinguiſhed into four degrees, according to which the writs are varied. The firſt degree is a writ of entry ſur diſſeiſin, that lieth for the diſſeiſee, againſt a diſſeiſor, upon a diſſeiſin done by himſelf; and this is called a writ of entry in the nature of an aſſiſe.

Second, a writ of entry ſur diſſeiſin in le per, againſt the heir by deſcent, who is ſaid to be in the per, as he comes in by his anceſtor; and ſo it is if a diſſeiſor make a feoffment in fee, gift in tail, &c. the feoffee and donee are in the per by the diſſeiſor.

Third, A writ of entry ſur diſſeiſin in le per & cui, where the feoffee of a diſſeiſor maketh a feoffment over to another; when the diſſeiſee ſhall have this writ of entry ſur diſſeiſin, &c. of the lands in which ſuch other had no right of entry, but by the feoffee of the diſſeiſor, to whom the diſſeiſor demiſed the ſame, who unjuſtly and without judgment diſſeiſed the demandant. 1 Inſt. 238.

Theſe three degrees thus ſtate the original wrong, and the title of the tenant, who claims under ſuch wrong. If more than two degrees, (that is two alienations or deſcents) were paſt, there lay no writ of entry at the Common-law. For, as it was provided for the quietneſs of men's inheritances, that no one, even though he had the true right of poſſeſſion, ſhould enter upon him who had the apparent right by deſcent or otherwiſe, but he was driven to his writ of entry to gain poſſeſſion; ſo, after more than two deſcents, or two conveyances were paſſed, the demandant, even though he had the right both of poſſeſſion and property, was not allowed this poſſeſſory action; but was driven to his writ of right, a long and final remedy, to puniſh his neglect in not ſooner putting in his claim while the degrees ſubſiſted; and for the ending of ſuits, and quieting of all controverſies. 2 Inſt. 153. But by the Stat. of Marlbridge 52 Hen. 3. c. 30, it was provided, that when the number of alienations or deſcents exceeded the uſual degrees, a new writ ſhould be allowed without any mention of degrees at all. And accordingly,

Fourthly, A new writ has been framed, called a writ of entry in the poſt, which only alledges the injury of the wrong-doer, without deducing all the intermediate title from him to the tenant; ſtating it in this manner; that the tenant had not entry, unleſs after, or ſubſequent to, the ouſter, or injury done by the original diſpoſſeſſor; and rightly concluding, that if the original title was wrongful, all claims derived from thence muſt participate of the ſame wrong. Upon the latter of theſe writs, it is, (the writ of entry ſur diſſeiſin in the poſt,) that the form of our common recoveries of landed eſtates is uſually grounded. See title Fine and Recovery.

This remedial inſtrument, of writ of entry, is applicable to all the caſes of ouſter, except that of Diſcontinuance of tenant in tail, and ſome peculiar ſpecies of Deforcements. Such is that of the deforcement of dower by not aſſigning any dower to the widow within the time limited by the law; for which ſhe has her remedy by writ of dower, unde nihil habet. F. N. B. 147.—See title Dower.

But in general the writ of entry is the univerſal remedy to recover poſſeſſion, when wrongfully with-held from the owner. It were therefore endleſs to recount all the ſeveral diviſions of writs of entry, which the different circumſtances of the reſpective demandants may require, and which are furniſhed by the Laws of England, being plainly and clearly chalked out in that collection of legal forms, the Regiſtrum omnium Brevium, or Regiſter of ſuch writs as are iſſuable out of the King's Courts; upon which Fitzherbert's Natura Brevium is a comment; which ſee; and the ſeveral appropriate titles in this Dict.

In the times of our Saxon anceſtors, the right of poſſeſſion ſeems to have been recoverable only by writ of entry. Gilb. Ten. 42. This writ was then uſually brought in the County Court; and the proceedings in theſe actions were not then ſo tedious, (when the Courts were held, and proceſs iſſued from, and was returnable therein, at the end of every three weeks) as they became after the Conqueſt, when all cauſes were drawn into the King's Courts, and proceſs iſſued only from Term to Term. Hence a new remedy was invented in many caſes to do juſtice to the people, and to determine the poſſeſſion in the proper counties by the King's Judges; this was the remedy by Aſſiſe; as to which, See title Aſſiſe in this Dict. and fully on this ſubject 3 Comm. 174, 184.

Having ſaid thus much in general on the titles Entry, and Writs of Entry, ſubjects now in ſome meaſure rather unuſual than obſolete, the following obſervations, extracts, &c. may be of uſe to the enquiring Student: ſhould any of them ſeem a repetition of what has already been ſaid, it will be generally found they ſtate the point more at large, or on different authorities.

A Writ of Entry in the per and cui, ſhall be maintained againſt none, but where the tenant is in by purchaſe or deſcent; for if the alienation or deſcent be put out of the degree upon which no writ may be made in the per and cui, then it ſhall be made in the poſt. Terms de Ley.

There are five things which put the writ of entry out of the degrees, viz. intruſion; diſſeiſin upon diſſeiſin; ſucceſſion where the diſſeiſor was a perſon of religion, and his ſucceſſor enters; judgment, when a perſon hath had judgment to recover againſt the diſſeiſor; and eſcheat, on the diſſeiſor's dying without heir, or committing felony, &c. on which the lord enters, &c. In all theſe caſes, the diſſeiſee or his heir, ſhall not have a writ of entry within the degrees of the per, but in the poſt; becauſe they are not in by deſcent, or purchaſe. Terms de Ley.

Degrees as to entries are of two ſorts, either by act in law, as in caſe of a deſcent; or by act of the party by lawful conveyance. But no eſtate gained by wrong doth make a degree; ſo that abatement, intruſion, &c. work not a degree; nor doth every change by lawful title, as an eſtate of tenant by the curteſy, by judgment, &c. or of any others that come in the poſt; though a tenancy in dower by aſſignment of the heir doth work a degree, becauſe ſhe is in by her huſband: but an aſſignment of dower by a diſſeiſor, doth not, by reaſon ſhe is in the poſt. Co. Lit. 239.

Though Entry on lands is taken away by deſcent on diſſeiſins, or diſcontinuance, &c. yet a deſcent ſhall not take away the entry of leſſee for ſeven years, nor of tenant by elegit, &c. who have but a chattel, and no freehold; otherwiſe it is of any eſtate for life, or any higher eſtate. Co. Lit. 249.

If a diſſeiſor leaſes for years, and dies ſeiſed of the reverſion, the entry of the diſſeiſee is taken away, becauſe he died ſeiſed of the fee and freehold: but if he had leaſed for life, &c. the entry of the diſſeiſee would not be taken away. Co. Lit. 239. Where the diſſeiſor of an infant dies ſeiſed, and after the infant comes of age, and the heir of the diſſeiſor dies before entry; though he died not ſeiſed of an actual ſeiſin, but a ſeiſin in law; yet his dying ſeiſed takes away the entry of the diſſeiſee. Ibid. If a diſſeiſor makes a feoffment upon condition, and the feoffee dies ſeiſed, and the feoffor enters upon the heir for the breach of the condition, the diſſeiſee may enter upon him; for by the entry of the diſſeiſor, the deſcent is utterly defeated. Lit. ſect. 409.

The title of entry in a feoffor, &c. that hath but a condition, cannot be taken away by any deſcent, becauſe he has no remedy by action to recover the land; ſo that if a deſcent ſhould take away his entry, it would bar him of his right for ever: and the condition remains, and cannot be deveſted and put out of poſſeſſion, as the lands, &c. Co. Lit. 240. If a man recovers lands, and after a ſtranger to the recovery dies ſeiſed, this ſhall not take away the entry of the recoveror; as it was but a title. 2 Danv. Abr. 561. But where a perſon recovers againſt another, and enters and ſues execution, and after the recoveree diſſeiſes him, and dies ſeiſed; this deſcent ſhall take away the entry of the recoveror, for the recovery was executed. Ibid.

If after recovery againſt tenant for life, he dies, and he in remainder enters before execution, and dies ſeiſed, the entry of the recoveror is not taken away. Co. Lit. 238. The entry of the tenant for life, ſhall be good for him in remainder: and if tenant for life make a feoffment in fee, and a ſtranger enters for the forfeiture in the name of the reverſioner; this will be good to veſt the reverſion in him. Lit. 128: 9 Rep. 106. If an infant under age, makes a deed of feoffment, and after his full age the feoffee dies ſeiſed; or a leſſee for life aliens the land, and the alienee dies ſeiſed thereof; or a deviſe be of lands upon condition, and the heir of the diſſeiſor enters and dies ſeiſed: in theſe caſes the entry is gone, and the parties ſhall be put to their action. Lit. 96: 9 H. 6. 25.

If there be tenant for life, remainder to the right heir of J. S. and the tenant for life is diſſeiſed; a deſcent is caſt, and after J. S. dies, and tenant for life alſo dies: by this, the entry of the heir of J. S. is not taken away, for his remainder was in cuſtodid legis. 1 Rep. 134. Where an infant has cauſe of entry, and the deſcent happens while he is within age, it will not bar him of his entry: he that hath the right of entry, muſt be of age, within the four ſeas, of ſound memory; and if it be a woman, ſhe muſt be ſole; and if the party be under age, beyond the ſeas, non compos mentis; in priſon, or a feme covert, at the time of the deſcent, it ſhall not bar. Lit. 147, 402: 21 H. 6. 17.

The whole time from a diſſeiſin is conſiderable; as where feme covert is diſſeiſed, and her huſband dieth, and ſhe takes another huſband, and then a deſcent is caſt; or if one ultra mare be diſſeiſed, and he return into England, and then go beyond ſea again, and there is a deſcent; here the deſcent will bar the entry, becauſe of the interim. 9 H. 7. 24: Dyer 143: 32 H. 8. c. 33.

A woman tenant in tail took huſband, who made a feoffment in fee, and died, and the wife without entry made a leaſe for years; and it was held, that the freehold was not reduced by the leaſe, without an entry made, 1 Leon. ca. 165. The entry of a diſſeiſee, when he duly makes it, ſhall avoid all the meſne charges by the diſſeiſor upon the land: but right of entry may be loſt divers ways; as by acceptance of rent, by him who hath it, and the like. 1 Anderſon 133: Noy Rep. 7. If a man is diſſeiſed of land whereunto a common is appendant, the diſſeiſee cannot uſe the common till he enters on the land to which the common is appendant; for if the diſſeiſee might uſe it, ſo might the diſſeiſor, which would be a double charge on the common: yet if a perſon be diſſeiſed of a manor, to which an advowſon is appendant, he may preſent to the advowſon before entry on the manor. Co. Lit. 122.

A diſſeiſee enters into the land, and continues therein with the diſſeiſor, and manures it with him, claiming nothing of his firſt eſtate; or if the diſſeiſee enters, and takes the profit, as leſſee, &c. of the diſſeiſor; it is ſaid theſe will be an entry that will reduce the firſt eſtate. 2 Danv. 790. If the diſſeiſee commands a ſtranger to put in the cattle of ſuch ſtranger in the land to feed there; this is an entry in law on the land. Co. Lit. 245.

Where entry may be made into land, or any thing, it ſhall not be in the party before entry: if entry cannot be made, but only claim, then it ſhall be in him by claim; and when neither entry nor claim can be made, it ſhall be in him by act of law. 1 Plowd. 133. In caſe the poſſeſſion of land is in no man, but the freehold in law is in the heir that enters, his general entry into one part reduces all into his actual poſſeſſion: but if an entry is to deveſt an eſtate, a general entry into parcel, is good only for that part. Co. Lit. 15. Where an entry is in any part, it muſt be in the name of all: if I enfeoff a perſon of an acre of ground upon condition, and of another acre on condition, and both conditions are broken; here entry into one in name of both acres is not good to reduce both: but if a man make a feoffment of divers parcels upon condition that is broken, there entry into part in name of all the reſt is ſufficient. Co. Lit. 252: 9 H. 7. 25.

A man hath right to enter into lands in divers villages in one county, if he enter upon part of it in one village in the name of all in that county; by this he ſhall have poſſeſſion of the whole. Co. Lit. 252: Dyer 227, 337. If a man diſſeiſe me of one acre at one time, and another acre at another time in the ſame county; my entry into one of them in the name of both is good: though it will not be good, if the diſſeiſin be by two ſeveral perſons, or if the acres lie in ſeveral counties; in which caſe there ought to be ſeveral entries and actions. Co. Lit. 252.

If he who hath right of entry into a freehold, enters into part of it, it ſhall be adjudged an entry into all poſſeſſed by one tenant; but if there be ſeveral tenants poſſeſſed of the freehold, there muſt be ſeveral entries on the ſeveral tenants. 1 Lil. Abr. 515, 516. Special entry into a houſe with which lands are occupied, claiming the whole, is a good entry as to the whole houſe and lands. Ibid. If a huſband enters to the uſe of his wife; or a man enters to the uſe of an infant, or any other, where the entry is lawful; this ſettles the poſſeſſion before agreement of the parties: though it is otherwiſe where a perſon enters to the uſe of one whoſe entry is not lawful; for this veſts nothing in him till agreement, and then he ſhall be a diſſeiſor. 2 Danv. 787. If two jointenants are diſſeiſed, and the diſſeiſor aliens, and one jointenant enters upon the alienee to the uſe of both; this ſettles the freehold in both of them. Ibid. 788. But if one coparcener, &c. enters eſpecially claiming the whole land, ſhe gains the part of her companion by abatement; and it ſhall not ſettle any poſſeſſion in the other. Co. Lit. 243.

The heir is to enter into lands deſcended to him, to entitle him to the profits. Co. Lit. 214. If a younger ſon enters on lands in fee, where the eldeſt ſon dies leaving iſſue; though many deſcents are caſt in his line, yet the heirs of the eldeſt ſon may make an entry on the lands; but if the youngeſt ſon convey away the lands in fee, and the feoffee dies ſeiſed, they may not enter; nor may they enter where the younger ſon diſſeiſes the eldeſt, and dies ſeiſed. Co. Lit. 237, 244: Lit. ſect. 397.

A tenant in tail hath iſſue two ſons, and the eldeſt dies, leaving his wife privement enſient of a ſon, and the younger brother enters, and then the wife of the eldeſt is delivered of a ſon, he may enter upon the younger brother. 2 Danv. 557. See title Deſcent.

An eſtate of freehold will not ceaſe, without entry or claim: alſo a remainder of an eſtate of freehold cannot ceaſe without entry, &c. no more than eſtate of freehold in poſſeſſion. Cro. Eliz. 360. A right of entry preſerves a contingent remainder. 2 Lev. 35. And a grantee of a reverſion, may enter for a condition broken. Plowd. 176.

A leſſee muſt enter into lands demiſed to him; and tho' the leſſor dies before the leſſee enters, yet he may enter: and if the leſſee dies before entry, his executors or adminiſtrators may enter. The leſſee may aſſign over his term before entry, having intereſſe termini; but he may not take a releaſe to enlarge his eſtate; or bring treſpaſs, &c. till actual entry. Though if there be words bargain and ſell in a leaſe, &c. for conſideration of money, the leſſee or bargainee is in poſſeſſion on executing the deed, to make a releaſe, &c. Lit. 59, 454: Co. Lit. 46, 57, 270.

Where a leſſor enters on his leſſee for years, the rent is ſuſpended. 1 Leon. 110. But without entry and expulſion, the leſſee is not diſcharged of his rent to the leſſor; unleſs it be where the leſſor is attainted of treaſon, &c. then the rent is to be paid to the King, who is in poſſeſſion without entry. Sid. 399: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 706.

There is no need of entry to avoid an eſtate in caſe of a limitation, becauſe thereby the eſtate is determined without entry or claim; and the law caſts it upon the party to whom it is limited. If A. deviſes lands to B. and his heirs, and dies, it is in the deviſee immediately; but till entry he cannot bring a poſſeſſory action: and where a poſſeſſion veſts without entry, a reverſion will veſt without claim. 2 Mod. Rep. 7, 8. A bare entry on another, without an expulſion, makes only a feiſin; ſo that that the law will adjudge him in poſſeſſion who hath the right. 3 Salk. 135.

Where a perſon is in a houſe with goods, &c. the houſe may be entered when the doors are open, to make execution. Cro. Eliz. 759. But it muſt be averred that the goods were in the houſe. Lutw. 1428, 1434. And a man cannot enter into a houſe, the doors being open to demand a debt, unleſs he aver that the debtor is within the houſe at the ſame time. Cro. El. 6, 8. So entry may be made on a tenant where rent is in arrear, to take a diſtreſs, &c. See titles Execution; Rent; Demand.

In order to regain poſſeſſion of lands by entry, &c. the manner of entry is thus: If it be a houſe, and the door is open, you go into it, and ſay theſe words.—I do here enter, and take poſſeſſion of this houſe. But if the door be ſhut, then ſet your foot on the groundſel, or againſt the door, and ſay the before words: and if it be land, then go upon the land, and ſay, I here enter and take poſſeſſion of this land, &c. If another do it for you, he muſt ſay, I do here enter, &c. to the uſe of A. B. And it is neceſſary to make it before witneſſes, and that a memorandum be made of it. Litt. 385: Co. Lit. 237, 238.

Where an ejectment will lie, the confeſſion of leaſe, entry, and ouſter is ſufficient in all caſes, except in the caſe of a fine with proclamations, in which caſe it is neceſſary to prove an actual entry; and the leſſor of the plaintiff directing one to deliver a declaration to the tenant in poſſeſſion will not amount to ſuch an entry. See title Ejectment.

ENTRY AD COMMUNEN LEGEM. Is the writ of entry which lies where tenant for term of life, or for term of another's life, or by the curteſy, &c. aliens and dies; he in the reverſion ſhall then have this writ againſt whomſoever is in poſſeſſion of the land. New Nat. Br. 461.

ENTRY AD TERMINUM QUI PRETERIIT. A writ of entry anciently brought againſt tenant for years, who held over his term, and thereby kept out the leſſor; See. New Nat. Brev. 447, 8. But an ejectment is now the common mode of proceeding; and by Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28, tenants for term of years, &c. holding over after demand made, are ſubject to double rent. See titles Rent; Ejectment; Tenant.

ENTRY IN CASU CONSIMILI. Is a writ that lies for him in reverſion by Stat. W. 2. c. 24, againſt tenant for life, or tenant by the curteſy, who aliens in fee, &c. See Caſu Conſimili.

ENTRY IN CASU PROVISO. Where a tenant in dower aliens in fee, or for term of life, or of another's life; then he in the reverſion ſhall have this writ, provided by the Stat. of Glouc. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 7; by which ſtatute it is enacted, "that if a woman alien her dower in fee, or for life, the next heir, &c. ſhall recover by writ of entry."—See title Dower. And the writ may be brought againſt the tenant of the freehold of the land, on ſuch alienation, during the life of the tenant in dower, &c. New Nat. Br. 456.

The above four writs of entry may all be brought either in the per, or in the cui or poſt.

ENTRY SINE ASSENSU CAPITULI. A writ of entry that lay where a biſhop, abbot, &c. aliened lands or tenements of the church, without the aſſent of the Chapter or Convent. F. N. B. 195.

ENURE. In law, to take place or be available; it is as much as effectum: as for example; a releaſe made to tenant for life, ſhall enure, and be of force and effect to him in the reverſion. Lit.

EODORBRICE, from the Sax. eoder, a hedge, and brice, ruptura.] Hedge-breaking: in which ſenſe it is mentioned in the laws of King Alfred cap. 45.

EORLE. Sax. for earl, &c. though made uſe of by the Danes for barons. See Earl.

EPIMENIA. Expences or gifts. Blount.

EPIPHANY. The day when the ſtar appeared to the wiſe men at Chriſt's Nativity, generally called Twelfth-Day.

EPISCOPALIA. Synodals, or other cuſtomary payments from the clergy to their biſhop or dioceſan; which were formerly collected by the rural deans, and by them tranſmitted to the biſhop.—Mon. Ang. tom. 3. pag. 61. Theſe cuſtomary payments have been otherwiſe called onus epiſcopale; and were remitted by ſpecial privilege to free-churches and chapels of the King's foundation, which were exempt from epiſcopal juriſdiction. Kcn. Gloſſ.

EPISCOPUS PUERORUM. It was a cuſtom in former times, that ſome lay perſon about a certain feaſt ſhould plait his heir, and put on the garments of a biſhop, and in them exerciſe epiſcopal juriſdiction, and do ſeveral ludicrous actions, for which reaſon he was called biſhop of the boys: and this cuſtom obtained here long after ſeveral conſtitutions were made to aboliſh it. Mon. Ang. tom. 3. pag. 169.

EQUALITY. The law delights in equality; ſo that when a charge is made upon one, and divers ought to bear it, he ſhall have relief againſt the reſt. 2 Rep. 25. And where a man leaves a power to his wife to give an eſtate among three daughters, in ſuch proportions, as ſhe ſhall think fit: it has been held ſhe muſt divide it equally; unleſs good reaſon be given for doing otherwiſe. Preced. Canc. 256. See title Contribution.

In equity it is a maxim, that "EQUALITY IS EQUITY." See Francis's Maxims, fol. 9, &c.

EQUES AURATUS. Lat.] Is taken for a knight; becauſe anciently none but knights were allowed to beautify and gild their armour with gold: but this word is rather uſed by the heralds than lawyers; for eques auratus is not a word in our law for knight, but miles, and formerly Chevalier. 4 Inſt. 5.

EQUITY.

(SEE generally title CHANCERY.)

ÆQUITAS; quaſi, æqualitas.] Is defined to be a correction, or qualification of the law, generally made in that part wherein it faileth, or is too ſevere. In other words "the correction of that wherein the law, by reaſon of its univerſality, is deficient." 1 Comm. 62. It likewiſe ſignifies the extenſion of the words of the law to caſes unexpreſſed, yet having the ſame reaſon; ſo that where one thing is enacted by ſtatute, all other things are enacted that are of the like degree: for example; the ſtatute of Glouc. gives action of waſte againſt him that holds lands for life or years; and by the equity thereof, a man ſhall have action of waſte againſt a tenant that holds but for one year, or half-year, which is without the words of the act, but within the meaning of it; and the words that enact the one, by equity enact the other. Terms de Ley.

So

So that Equity is of two kinds; the one doth abridge and take from the letter of the law; and the other inlarge and add thereto. Æquitas eſt perfecta quædam ratio, quæ jus ſcriptum interpretatur & emendat. Co. Lit. 24. And ſtatutes may be conſtrued according to equity; eſpecially where they give remedy for wrong, or are for expedition of juſtice, &c. Co. Lit. 24, 54, 76: 2 Inſt. 106, 107. &c.

A Court of Equity cannot now be created by the King, but the ſame muſt be done by Act of Parliament. 4 Inſt. 84.

The diſtinction between Law and Equity, as adminiſtered in different courts, is not at preſent known, nor ſeems to have ever been known, in any other country than England at any time.—With us the Aula regia which was anciently the ſupreme court of judicature, undoubtedly adminiſtered equal juſtice according to the rules of both or either, as the caſe might chance to require: and, when that was broken to pieces, the idea of a Court of Equity, as diſtinguiſhed from a Court of Law, did not ſubſiſt in the original plan of partition. For though equity is mentioned by Bracton l. 2. c. 7. pl. 23, as a thing contraſted to ſtrict law, yet neither in that writer, nor in Glanvill or Fleta, nor yet in Britton, (compoſed under the auſpices and in the name of Edward I. and treating particularly of courts and their ſeveral juriſdictions,) is there a ſyllable to be found relating to the equitable juriſdiction of the Court of Chancery. It ſeems therefore probable, that when the courts of law, proceeding merely upon the ground of the King's original writs, and confining themſelves ſtrictly to that bottom, gave a harſh or imperfect judgment, the application for redreſs uſed to be to the King in perſon aſſiſted by his privy council; (from whence alſo aroſe the juriſdiction of the court of Requeſts, which was virtually aboliſhed by Stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 10;) and they were wont to refer the matter either to the Chancellor and a ſelect committee, or by degrees to the Chancellor only, who mitigated the ſeverity, or ſupplied the defects of the judgments pronounced in the courts of law, upon weighing the circumſtances of the caſe. This was the cuſtom not only among our Saxon anceſtors, before the inſtitution of the Aula regia, but alſo after its diſſolution, in the reign of King Edward I. and perhaps during it's continuance, in that of Henry II. Ll. Ed. e. 2: Lamb. Arch. 59.

When, about the end of the reign of King Edward III. uſes of land were introduced, and though totally diſcountenanced by the courts of Common law, were conſidered as fiduciary depoſits and binding in conſcience by the clergy, the ſeparate juriſdiction of the Chancery as a court of equity began to be eſtabliſhed. Spelm. Gloſs. 106: 1 Lev. 242; John Waltham, who was biſhop of Saliſbury and Chancellor to King Richard II. (by a ſtrained interpretation of the ſtatute of Weſtm. 2. [13 E. 1. c. 24,] enabling the clerks in chancery to form new writs according to the ſpecial circumſtances of each caſe,) deviſed the writ of ſubpœna, returnable in the court of Chancery only, to make the feoffee to uſes accountable to his ceſtui que uſe: which proceſs was afterwards extended to other matters wholly determinable at the Common law, upon fictitious ſuggeſtions; for which therefore the Chancellor himſelf is by Stat. 17 Rich. 2. c. 6, directed to give damages to the party unjuſtly aggrieved. But as the Clergy, had long attempted to turn their eccleſiaſtical courts into courts of equity, by entertaining ſuits pro læſione fidei, as a ſpiritual offence againſt conſcience, in caſe of non-payment of debts or any breach of civil contracts; till checked by the Conſtitutions of Clarendon (10 Hen. 2. c. 15); therefore probably the eccleſiaſtical chancellors, who then held the ſeal, were remiſs in abridging their own new acquired juriſdiction; eſpecially as the ſpiritual courts continued to graſp at the ſame authority as before, till finally prohibited by the unanimous concurrence of all the judges; however, it appears from the Parliament rolls, that in the reigns of Henry IV. and V. the Commons were repeatedly urgent to have the writ of ſubpœna entirely ſuppreſſed, as being a novelty deviſed againſt the form of the Common law. But though the ſtatute 4 Hen. 4. c. 23, was paſſed, whereby judgments at law are declared irrevocable, unleſs by attaint or writ of error, yet in Edward IV.'s time, the proceſs by bill and ſubpœna was become the daily practice of the Court, though it's juriſdiction was not then nearly ſo extenſive as at preſent. Rot. Parl. 14 Ed. 4. no. 33.

In the time of Lord Chancellor Elleſmere, (A. D. 1616) aroſe that notable diſpute between the Courts of law and equity, ſet on foot by Sir Edward Coke, then Chief Juſtice of the court of King's Bench; whether a Court of equity could give relief after or againſt a judgment at the Common law. This conteſt was ſo warmly carried on, that indictments were preferred againſt the ſuitors, the ſolicitors, the counſel and even a Maſter in chancery, for having incurred a præmunire by queſtioning in a Court of equity a judgment in the court of King's Bench, obtained by groſs fraud and impoſition. This matter being brought before the King, was by him referred to his learned counſel for their advice and opinion; who reported ſo ſtrongly in favour of the courts of equity, that his majeſty gave judgment on their behalf. Whitelock of Parl. 2, 390: 1 Ch. Rep. Append. 11.

Lord Bacon who ſucceeded Lord Elleſmere, reduced the practice of the court into a more regular ſyſtem; his ſucceſſors in the reign of Charles I. did little to improve upon his plan; till the appointment of Sir Heneage Finch in 1673, who became afterwards earl of Nottingham. He was a perſon of the greateſt abilities and moſt uncorrupted integrity; a thorough maſter and zealous defender of the laws and conſtitution of his country; and endued with a pervading genius that enabled him to diſcover and to purſue the true ſpirit of juſtice, notwithſtanding the embarraſſments raiſed by the narrow and technical notions which then prevailed in the courts of law, and the imperfect ideas of redreſs which had poſſeſſed the courts of Equity. The reaſon and neceſſities of mankind, ariſing from the great change in property by the extenſion of trade and the abolition of military tenures, co-operated in eſtabliſhing his plan, and enabling him in the courſe of nine years to build a ſyſtem of juriſprudence and juriſdiction, upon wide and national foundations which have alſo been extended, and improved by many great men, who have ſince preſided in chancery. See 3 Comm. 50—56.

The ſame juriſdiction is exerciſed, and the ſame ſyſtem of redreſs purſued, in the Equity-Court of the Exchequer; with a diſtinction however as to ſome few matters, peculiar to each tribunal, and in which the other cannot interfere.

Upon

Upon the abolition of the court of Wards, the care, which the Crown was bound to take as guardian of its Infant Tenants, was totally extinguiſhed in every ſeodal view; but reſulted to the King in his court of Chancery, together with the general protection of all other infants in the kingdom. F. N. B. 27.—When therefore a fatherleſs child has no other guardian, the Court of Chancery has a right to appoint one, and from all proceedings relative thereto, an appeal lies to the Houſe of Lords. The Court of Exchequer can only appoint a guardian ad litem, to manage the defence of the infant if a ſuit be commenced againſt him; a power which is incident to the juriſdiction of every court of juſtice. Cro. Jac. 641: 2 Lev. 163: T. Jon. 90. But when the intereſt of a minor comes before the court judicially, in the progreſs of a cauſe, or upon a bill for that purpoſe filed, either tribunal indiſcriminately will take care of the property of the infant.

As to Ideots and Lunaticks, the king himſelf uſed formerly to commit the cuſtody of them to proper Committees, in every particular caſe; but now, to avoid ſolicitations and the very ſhadow of undue partiality, a warrant is iſſued by the King under his royal ſign manual to the Chancellor, to perform this office for him: and if he acts improperly in granting ſuch cuſtodies, the complaint muſt be made to the King himſelf in council. 3 P. Wms. 108: See Reg. Br. 267. But the previous proceedings on the commiſſion, to enquire whether or no the party be an ideot or a lunatick, are on the law-ſide of the Court of Chancery, and can only be redreſſed (if erroneous) by writ of error in the regular courſe of law.

The king, as parens patriæ, has the general ſuperintendence of all Charities; which he exerciſes by the Chancellor. And, therefore, when neceſſary, the Attorney General, at the relation of ſome informant, (who is uſually called the relator) files ex officio an information in the court of Chancery to have the charity properly eſtabliſhed.

By Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4, authority is given to the lord Chancellor, and to the Chancellor of the duchy of Lancaſter, reſpectively, to grant commiſſions under their ſeveral ſeals, to enquire into any abuſes of charitable donations, and rectify the ſame by decree; which may be reviewed in the reſpective courts of the ſeveral chancellors, upon exceptions taken thereto. But, though this is done in the petty bag office in the court of Chancery becauſe the commiſſion is there returned, it is not a proceeding at Common-law, but treated as an original cauſe in the court of equity. The evidence below is not taken down in writing, and the reſpondent in his anſwer to the exceptions may allege what new matter he pleaſes; upon which they go to proof, and examine witneſſes in writing upon all the matters in iſſue: and the court may decree the reſpondent to pay all the coſts, though no ſuch authority is given by the ſtatute. And as it is thus conſidered as an original cauſe throughout, an appeal lies of courſe from the Chancellor's decree to the Houſe of Peers, notwithſtanding any looſe opinions to the contrary. Duke's Char. Uſes 62, 128: 2 Vern. 118.

By the ſeveral ſtatutes relating to Bankrupts, a ſummary juriſdiction is given to the chancellor, in many matters conſequential or previous to the commiſſions thereby directed to be iſſued; from which the ſtatutes give no appeal.

The juriſdiction of the Court of Chancery doth not however extend to ſome cauſes, wherein relief may be had in the Exchequer. No information can be brought, in Chancery, for ſuch miſtaken charities as are given to the King by the ſtatutes for ſuppreſſing ſuperſtitious uſes. Nor can Chancery give any relief againſt the King, or direct any act to be done by him, or make any decree diſpoſing of or affecting his property; not even in caſes where he is a royal truſtee. Such cauſes muſt be determined in the Court of Exchequer, as a court of revenue; which alone has power over the King's treaſure, and the officers employed in its management, unleſs where it properly belongs to the duchy court of Lancaſter.

In all other matters, what is ſaid of the court of Equity in the Court of Chancery will be equally applicable to the other courts of Equity. Whatever difference there may be in the forms of practice, it ariſes from the different conſtitution of their officers.—See 3 Comm. 426—429.

The learned Commentator then enters into a brief but comprehenſive view of the general nature of Equity; to ſhew that in our courts it is not contrary to, but conſiſtent with, law; a poſition which perhaps will be beſt underſtood by further explanation of the juriſdiction exerciſed by courts of equity, either as aſſiſtant to, concurrent with, or excluſive of the juriſdiction of the courts of Common-law; which is here done in an abridgment from Fonblanque's Treatiſe of Equity pp. 10. &c. in n.

EQUITY is aſſiſtant to the juriſdiction of the Courts of law; 1ſt. By removing legal impediments to the fair deciſion of a queſtion depending in courts of law. 2dly. By compelling a diſcovery which may enable them to decide. 3dly. By perpetuating teſtimony, when in danger of being loſt, before the matter to which it relates can be made the ſubject of judicial inveſtigation. It may alſo be ſaid to be aſſiſtant, by rendering the judgments of courts of law effective, as by providing for the ſafety of property in diſpute pending a litigation; and by counteracting fraudulent judgments, &c; and by putting a bound to vexatious and oppreſſive litigation.—It exerciſes a concurrent juriſdiction with courts of law, in moſt caſes of fraud, accident, miſtake, account, partition, and dower. It claims an excluſive juriſdiction, in all matters of truſt, and confidence; and wherever, upon the principles of univerſal juſtice, the interference of a court of judicature is neceſſary to prevent a wrong, and the poſitive law is ſilent. See Mitford's Treatiſe on the Pleadings in Chancery.

To purſue this diviſion of the juriſdiction of Courts of Equity with that minuteneſs which is neceſſary to a particular acquaintance with its powers, would lead to an inveſtigation too extenſive. Some ſhort notice ſhall be taken of the general objection that is urged againſt the claims of Courts of Equity to a concurrence of juriſdiction in ſome caſes with Courts of law. This concurrence of juriſdiction may, in the greater number of caſes in which it is exerciſed, be juſtified by the propriety of preventing a multiplicity of ſuits; for as the mode of proceeding in courts of law requires the plaintiff to eſtabliſh his caſe, without enabling him to draw the neceſſary ceſſary evidence from the examination of the defendant, juſtice could never be attained at law in thoſe caſes where the principal facts to be proved by one party are confined to the knowledge of the other party. In ſuch caſes, therefore, it becomes neceſſary for the party, in want of ſuch evidence, to reſort to the extraordinary powers of a Court of Equity, which will compel the neceſſary diſcovery; and the court having acquired cognizance of the ſuit, for the purpoſe of diſcovery, will entertain it, for the purpoſe of relief, in moſt caſes of fraud, account, accident, and miſtake; and for other reaſons will entertain ſuits for partition and dower, though diſcovery be not neceſſary to the plaintiff's caſe.

The caſe (and, it ſeems, the only caſe) in which fraud cannot be relieved againſt in equity, concurrently with courts of law, though diſcovery be ſought, is the caſe of fraud, in obtaining a will; which, ſince the caſe of Kerrick v. Bransby, 3 Brown's Parl. Caſ. 358, is conſtantly referred to a court of law in the ſhape of an iſſue, deviſavit vel non. That courts of equity have a concurrence of juriſdiction with courts of law, in all other matters of fraud; See White v. Huſſey, Pre. Ch. 14: Hungerford v. Earle, 2 Vern. 261: Colt v. Woollaſton, 2 Pr. Wms. 156: Stent v. Baillis, 2 P. Wms. 220: 2 Comyns's Digeſt, titles Chancery; Fraud.

The juriſdiction exerciſed by Courts of Equity in matters of account, is, in many caſes, bounded by the diſcovery: as where a ſuit is inſtituted for an account of waſte of timber, without praying an injunction, the plaintiff cannot have a decree for relief. Jeſus College v. Bloome, 3 Atk. 262: Piers v. Piers, 1 Vez. 521. But where the bill ſeeks an account of ore dug, the court will decree it, (Biſhop of Wincheſter v. Knight, 1 P. Wms. 406;) becauſe the working of a mine is a kind of trade. Story v. Lord Windſor, 2 Atk. 630. Yet, even in that caſe, the plaintiff muſt ſhew a poſſeſſion. Sayer v. Pierce, 1 Vez. 232. Neither will Equity, in all caſes, decree an account of meſne profits; for where a man has title to the poſſeſſion of lands, and makes an entry, whereby he becomes entitled to damages at law for the time that poſſeſſion was detained from him, he ſhall not after his entry, turn that action at law into a ſuit in equity, and bring a bill for an account of the profits, except in the caſe of an infant, or ſome other very particular circumſtances. Tilly v. Bridges Pre. C. 252: Owen v. Apice, 1 Ch. Rep. 17. The particular circumſtances excepted by the Lord Keeper, in laying down this rule, extend to all thoſe caſes, which involve an equity, which the plaintiff cannot make available at law. Coventry v. Hall, 2 Ch. Rep. 134: Duke of Bolton v. Deane, Pre. Ch. 5, 6: Dormer v. Forteſcue, 3 Atk. 129, 30: Townſend v. Aſh, 3 Atk. 336: Norton v. Frecker, 1 Atk. 524: See alſo Curtis v. Curtis, Rolls, 2 Bro. C. R. 622.

The juriſdiction exerciſed by our courts of equity, in moſt caſes of accident, preſents a very ſtriking inſtance of their anxiety to prevent innovation on the juriſdiction of courts of law: their interference being generally founded on ſome circumſtance, which prevents the party being relievable at law; as where a bond or other inſtrument or ſecurity, is loſt, equity will interfere, by compelling a diſcovery from the defendant, and will relieve upon ſuch diſcovery; but the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief, upon a mere ſuggeſtion that the bond, inſtrument, or ſecurity, is loſt; but is required, for the purpoſe of relief, to annex to his bill, an affidavit to ſuch effect. 3 Atk. 17: Mitford's Treatiſe 112. And, as a further ſecurity againſt innovation, it muſt appear that the loſs of the deed or inſtrument obſtructs the plaintiff in ſeeking relief at law: for the loſs of a deed is not always a ground to come into a Court of Equity for relief; if there was no more in the caſe, although he is entitled to have a diſcovery of that, whether loſt or not, courts of law, admit evidence of the loſs of a deed, proving the exiſtence of it and its contents, juſt as a Court of Equity does. There are two grounds to come into equity for relief, annexing an affidavit to the bill. Firſt, where the deed is deſtroyed or concealed by the defendant, and whenever that is the caſe, the plaintiff is intitled to have relief in this court, upon the reaſon in Lord Hunſdon's caſe. Hob. 109. Another is, where the plaintiff cannot recover at law, without making profert of the deed in pleading at law. Whitfield v. Fauſſet, 1 Vez. 392: 2 Atk. 61.

The judgment of the Court of King's Bench in Read v. Brookman, (3 Term Rep. 151,) ſeems to have relieved the obligee from the neceſſity of coming into equity, upon the mere circumſtance of the bond or inſtrument being loſt; by allowing him to ſtate ſuch circumſtances in his declaration, as a reaſon for not making profert of it; but, upon this caſe being cited in Chancery as furniſhing an objection to the plaintiff's ſuit in equity, he being relievable at law, Lord Thurlow obſerved, that the Court of King's Bench having determined to give relief in a caſe formerly relievable only in equity was not a reaſon for excluding the ancient, peculiar, and at leaſt concurrent juriſdiction of courts of equity. Atkinſon v. Leonard, 3 Bro. C. R. 218. This concurrence of juriſdiction as to this kind of accident, may therefore be conſidered to extend to all caſes, in which the deed, or inſtrument has been deſtroyed, or is concealed by the defendant, or has been loſt by the plaintiff; though of the contents of ſuch inſtrument the plaintiff has other evidence, of which he might avail himſelf at law. But where the relief ſought in equity is upon the loſs of a bill of exchange, or promiſſory note, the plaintiff muſt, by his bill, offer to give ſecurity, as an indemnity to the defendant, againſt any demand being made upon him in reſpect of ſuch loſt bill or note. Walmſley v. Child, 1 Vez. 341.

To eſtabliſh the origin of any branch of legal or equitable juriſdiction is always difficult, and ſeldom neceſſary, provided the exerciſe of ſuch juriſdiction is ſanctioned by the dictates of reaſon, and found to be conducive to the ends of ſubſtantial juſtice; and ſuch will appear to be the nature and tendency of the juriſdiction exerciſed by our courts of equity, in caſes of Partition, upon a reference to the difficulties which obſtructed the mode of proceeding at Common-law: and though many of thoſe difficulties are removed by Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 31; yet ſtill, if the parties are in any degree complicated, it is extremely difficult to proceed at law, or where the tenants in poſſeſſion are ſeiſed of particular eſtates only; for the perſons entitled in remainder cannot be bound by the judgment, in a writ of partition. Mitford's Treatiſe p. 110. Neither can a feme covert be bound by partition by writ. Co. Litt. 166 a. which, it ſhould ſeem, ſhe may be by decree and commiſſion in equity. Martyn v. Perryman. 1 Ch. Rep. 125: On theſe conſiderations, and the almoſt conſtant occaſion that the parties have for a diſcovery, is founded this branch of equitable jurisdiction; in the exercise of which our courts of equity are constantly governed by an anxious attention to the legal title of the plaintiff: for though, at law, it be sufficient to allege seisin, yet, in equity the plaintiff must shew his title. Cartwright v. Pultney, 2 Atk. 380. And if the defendant conteit the legal title, the court will dismiss the bill. Bishop of Ely v. Konrick. Bunb. 322. but see Parker v. Gerrard, Ambler 236. And as a further mean to prevent innovation and vexatious suits, courts of equity will never allow costs on bills of partition; courts of law allowing none on the proceeding by writ. Metcalf v. Beckwith. 2 P. Wms. 376.—Mitford's Treatise 111. And this rule prevails, notwithstanding the unequal interests of the parties. Parker v. Gerard, Ambler 236.—See on this subject of Partition in Equity also 1 Inst. 169 b. and the notes there; which are very ingeniously combated, we may say refuted, by Mr. Fonblanque; who sums up the result in the foregoing paragraph.

The jurisdiction of our courts of equity, in matters of Dower, for the purpose of assisting the widow with a discovery of the lands or title deeds, or of removing impediments to her rendering her legal title available at law, has never been doubted. But it has been questioned, whether equity could give relief in those cases, in which there appeared to be no obstacle to her legal remedy. Wallis v. Everard, 3 Ch. R. 87. It seems now, however to be settled, that the widow labours under so many disadvantages at law, from the embarrasments of trust terms, &c. that she is fully entitled to every assistance that a Court of Equity can give her, not only in paving the way for her, to establish her right at law, but also by giving complete relief when the right is ascertained. Curtis v. Curtis, 2 Brown C. R. 634: and Lucas v. Calcraft. there cited. And in the exercise of this jurisdiction, courts of equity will even enforce a discovery against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, Williams v. Lambe. 3 Bro. Ch. Rep. 264. And though the widow should die before she had established her right to dower, equity will, in favour of her personal representatives, decree an account of the rents and profits of the lands, of which she afterwards appeared dowable.

With respect to the exclusive jurisdiction exercised by our courts of equity, in matters of trust, and in those cases where the principles of substantial justice entitle the party to relief, but the positive law is silent, it seems impossible to define with exactness its boundaries, or to enumerate with precision its various principles. In the course of this work, however, a variety of instances appear, from which the wisdom of this branch of equitable jurisdiction will be fully and satisfactorily established, and to which at present it may be sufficient to refer. See particularly titles Chancery: Fraud: Trust, &c. &c.

The essential difference (says Blackstone) between Law and Equity principally consists in the different modes of administering justice in each, in the mode of proof, the mode of trial, and the mode of relief. Upon these, and upon two other accidental grounds of jurisdiction, viz. the true construction of securities for money lent and the form and effect of a trust or second use, hath been principally erected that structure of jurisprudence, which prevails in our courts of equity, and is inwardly bottomed upon the same substantial foundations as the system of the courts of Common-law.

As to the mode of proof. When facts, or their leading circumstances, rest only in the knowledge of the party, a court of equity applies itself to his conscience, and purges him upon oath with regard to the truth of the transaction; and, that being once discovered, the judgment is the same, in equity as it would have been at law. But, for want of this discovery at law, the courts of equity have acquired a concurrent jurisdiction with every other court in all matters of account. 1 Chan. C. 57. As incident to accounts, they take a concurrent cognizance of the administration of personal assets. 2 P. Wms. 145; Consequently of debts, legacies, the distribution of the residue, and the conduct of executors and administrators. 2 Chan. C. 152. As incident to accounts, they also take the concurrent jurisdiction of tithes, and all questions relating thereto. 1 Eq. C. Ab. 367; of all dealings in partnership, 2 Vern. 277; and many other mercantile transactions; and so of bailiffs, receivers, factors and agents. Ibid. 638.

From the same fruitful source, the compulsive discovery upon oath, the courts of equity have acquired a jurisdiction over almost all matters of fraud. 2 Chan. C. 46; all matters in the private knowledge of the party, which though concealed, are binding in conscience; and all judgments at law, obtained through such fraud or concealment. And this not by impeaching or reversing the judgment itself, but by prohibiting the plaintiff from taking an advantage of a judgment, obtained by suppressing the truth. 3 P. Wms. 148: Year book, 22 Ed. IV. 37. p. 21. See title Discovery.

The mode of trial, is by interrogatories administered to the witnesses, upon which their depositions are taken in writing, wherever they happen to reside. If therefore the cause arises in a foreign country, and the witnesses reside upon the spot; if, in causes arising in England, the witnesses are abroad, or shortly to leave the kingdom; or if the witnesses residing at home are aged or infirm; any of these cases lays a ground for a court of equity to grant a commission to examine them, and (in consequence) to exercise the same jurisdiction, which might have been exercised at law, if the witnesses could probably attend. See title Depositions.

With respect to the mode of relief. The want of a more specific remedy, than can be obtained in the courts of law, gives a concurrent jurisdiction to a Court of Equity in a great variety of cases. To instance in executory agreements. A Court of Equity will compel them to be carried into strict execution, unless where it is improper or impossible; instead of giving damages for their non-performance. Eq. Ca. Ab. 16. And hence a fiction is established, that what ought to be done shall be considered as being actually done, and shall relate back to the time when it ought to have been done originally; and this fiction is so closely pursued through all its consequences, that it necessarily branches out into many rules of jurisprudence, which form a certain regular system. 3 P. Wms. 215. So, of waste, and other similar injuries, a Court of Equity takes a concurrent cognizance, in order to prevent them by injunction. 1 Ch. Rep. 14: 2 Ch. C. 32. Over questions that may be tried at law, in a great multiplicity of actions, a Court of Equity assumes a jurisdiction, to prevent the expence and vexation of endless litigation and suits. 1 Vern. 308: Pre. Ch. 261: 1 Pr. Wms. 672: Stra. 404. In various kinds of fraud it assumes a concurrent jurisdiction, not only for the sake of a discovery but of a more extensive and specific relief. 2 P. Wms. 156; as by setting aside fraudulent deeds, decreeing re-conveyances, or directing an absolute conveyance merely to stand as a security. 1 Vern. 32: 1 P. Wms. 239: 1 Vern. 237: 2 Vern. 84. and thus, lastly, for the sake of a more beneficial and complete relief by decreeing a sale of lands, a Court of Equity holds plea of all debts, incumbrances, and charges, that may affect it or issue thereout. 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 337.

As to the construction of securities for money lent; when courts of Equity held the penalty of a bond to be the form, and that in substance it was only as a pledge to secure the repayment of the sum bonâ fide advanced with a proper compensation for the use, they laid the foundation of a regular series of determinations, which have settled the doctrine of personal pledges or securities, and are equally applicable to mortgages of real property. The mortgagor continues owner of the land, the mortgagee of the money lent upon it: but this ownership is mutually transferred, and the mortgagor is barred from redemption, if, when called upon by the mortgagee, he does not redeem within a time limited by the Court; or he may, when out of possession, be barred, by length of time, by analogy to the statute of limitations. See also titles Bond; Mortgage; Penalty.

The form of a Trust, or second use, gives the courts of Equity an exclusive jurisdiction, as to the subject matter of all settlements and devises in that form, and of all the long terms created in the present complicated mode of conveyancing. This is a very ample source of jurisdiction: but the trust is governed by very nearly the same rules, as would govern the estate in a court of law, if no trustee was interposed; 2 P. Wms. 645, 668, 9, And, by a regular positive system established in the courts of Equity, the doctrine of trusts is now reduced to as great a certainty as that of legal estates in the courts of Common-law. See 3 Comm. 436—440.

EQUITY OF REDEMPTION, on mortgages. If where money is due on a mortgage, the mortagee is desirous to bar the equity of redemption, he may oblige the mortgagor either to pay the money or to be foreclosed of his equity; which is done by proceedings in the court of Chancery. But the Chancery cannot shorten the time of payment of the mortgage money, where it is limited by express covenant; though it may lengthen it: and then upon non-payment, the practice is to foreclose the equity of redemption of the mortgagor. 2 Vent. 364.

To foreclose the Equity, a bill in Chancery is exhibited; to which an answer is put in, and a decree being obtained, a Master in Chancery is to certify what is due for principal, interest and costs, which is to be paid at a time prefixed by the decree, whereupon the premisses are to be reconveyed to the mortgagor; or, in default of payment, the mortgagor is ordered to be foreclosed from all equity of redemption, and to convey the premises absolutely to the mortgagee.

A fine or non-claim will bar equity of redemption: but in a common mortgage, a covenant to restrain it shall not be regarded in Chancery. 2 Vent. 365. If the condition of a mortgage is, that the mortgagor only should redeem during life, or that he and the heirs of his body shall do it; yet the general heir shall have the equity of redemption, for if the principal and interest be offered, the land is free. 1 Vern. 30, 190. And it is held, though a bond be conditioned, that if the money be not paid at such a time, then for a further sum the mortgagee shall have the land absolutely, as a purchasor, &c. in such case a man may also redeem. Ibid. 488.—See at large this Dict. title Mortgage.

EQUIVALENT, Commissioners are appointed by statute to examine and state the debts due to Scotland on the Union by way of equivalent; and provision is made for payment of the same by a yearly annuity, &c. Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 20. See title Scotland.

EQUUS COOPERTUS. A horse equipped with saddle and furniture. Leg. 16 E. 1.

ERIACH. By the Irish Brehon law, in case of murder, the brehon or judge compounded between the murderer and the friends of the deceased who prosecuted, by causing the malefactor to give unto them, or to the child or wife of him that was slain, a recompence, which was called an eriach. 4 Comm. 313.

ERMINE OR ERMINAGE STREET, See Watling Street.

ERMINS, From the Fr. ermine.] A fur of great value, much used in robes of state. See title Customs.

ERN, The names of places ending in Ern, are said to imply a melancholy situation; from the Sax. Ern, i. e. Locus Secretus.

ERNES. The loose scattered ears of corn, that are left on the ground, after the binding or cocking of it: It is derived from the old Teutonic Ernde, Harvest; Ernten, to cut or mow corn: hence to earn is in some places to glean. Kennet's Gloss.

ERRANT, Itinerant.] Is applied to justices of the circuit, and bailiffs at large, &c. See Eyre.

ERRATICUM. A waif, or stray; an erring or wandering beast. Constit. Normann. A. D. 1080.

ERROR. Fr. Erreur.]

Signifies something wrong in pleading or process, &c. whereupon a writ is brought for remedy thereof, called a Writ of Error; in Latin, de errore corrigendo.

A Writ of error is a commission to judges of a superior court, by which they are authorised to examine the record, upon which a judgment was given in an inferior court, and on such examination to affirm or reverse the same, according to law. Jenk. Rep. 25: 2 Inst. 40: Yelv. 202: Hardw. 340. But yet if by the writ of error the plaintiff therein may recover, or be restored to any thing, it may be released by the name of an action. Co. Lit. 288 b. See Post. Div. II. V. There is also a writ of error to reverse a fine, and which must be prosecuted within twenty years by Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 14. See titles Fine and Recovery.

A Writ of error to some superior Court of Appeal is the principal method of redressing erroneous judgments in the King's Courts of record, having power to hold plea of debt or trespass above 40*s*.—it lies for some supposed mistake in the proceedings of such Court; for, to amend errors in a base court, not of record, a writ of false judgment lies. Finch L. 484. The writ of error only lies upon matter of law, arising on the face of the proceedings; so that no evidence is required to substantiate or support it, there being no method of reversing an error in the determination of facts, but by an attaint or a new trial, to correct the mistakes of the former verdict. See 3 Lev. P. C. 8vo. ed. 515.

ERROR.

Formerly ſuitors were much perplexed by writs of error brought upon very ſlight and trivial grounds; as mis-ſpellings and other miſtakes of the clerks, all which are now effectually helped by the ſtatutes of amendment and jeofails; and particularly by Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 13, it is enacted, that all writs of error wherein there ſhall be any variance from the original record, or other defect, may be amended by the Court, and made agreeable to the record: and where any verdict hath been given in any action, ſuit, &c. in any of the Courts at Weſtminſter or other court of record, the judgment thereon ſhall not be ſtayed or reverſed for any defect or fault in form or ſubſtance in any bill, writ, &c. or for variance in any ſuch writs from the declaration and other proceedings; but this ſtatute not to extend, to any appeal of felony or proceſs, on indictment information and appeal. Such writ of error to be brought and proſecuted with effect within twenty years; by Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 14.—Stat. 16 & 17 C. 2. c. 8, enacts that in all actions, real, perſonal or mixt, the death of either party between verdict and judgment ſhall not be alledged for error.—By Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 80, impoſing a ſtamp-duty on warrants of attorney, it is provided that no action ſhall be ſtaid, nor any judgment, ſentence, &c. reverſed by reaſon of omiſſion or defect in the entring, or filing of record, the memorandum or minute directed. By theſe and other ſtatutes all trifling exceptions are ſo thoroughly guarded againſt, that writs of error cannot now be maintained but for ſome material miſtake aſſigned. See titles Amendment; Judgment.

If a writ of error be brought to reverſe any judgment of an inferior Court of record where the damages are leſs than 10*l*; or if it is brought to reverſe the judgment of any ſuperior court after verdict, he that brings the writ, or that is plaintiff in error muſt (except in ſome peculiar caſes) find ſubſtantial bail; to prevent delays by frivolous pretences of appeal; and for ſecuring payment of coſts and damages. See title Coſts. And as to bail in ſuch caſes, See Stats. 3 Jac. 1. c. 8: 13 C. 2. ſt. 2. c. 2: 16 & 17 C. 2. c. 8: 19 Geo. 3. c. 70.

A writ of error lies from the inferior courts of record in England into the King's Bench, and not into the Common Pleas. Finch L. 480: Dy. 250. And before Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 28, it lay from the King's Bench in Ireland to the King's Bench in England. It likewiſe may be brought from the Common Pleas at Weſtminſter to the King's Bench, and then from the King's Bench the cauſe is removable to the Houſe of Lords. From proceedings on the law ſide of the Exchequer, a writ of error lies into the Court of Exchequer-Chamber, before the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treaſurer, and the Judges of K. B. and C. P. and from thence it lies to the Houſe of Peers. From proceedings in K. B. in debt, detinue, covenant, account, caſe, ejectment or treſpaſs originally begun there by bill (except where the King is a party) it lies to the Exchequer-Chamber, before the Juſtices of C. P. and Barons of the Exchequer; and from thence alſo to the Houſe of Lords. Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8.—But where the proceedings in K. B. do not firſt commence therein by bill, but by original writ ſued of out Chancery, this takes the caſe out of the general rule laid down by the ſtatute; ſo that the writ of error then lies without any intermediate ſtage of appeal directly to the Houſe of Lords, the dernier reſort for the ultimate deciſion of every civil action. 1 Ro. Rep. 264: 1 Sid. 424: 1 Saund. 346: Carth. 180: Comb. 295.—Each Court of Appeal in their reſpective ſtages may, upon hearing the matter of law in which the error is aſſigned, reverſe or affirm the judgment of the inferior courts; but none of them are final ſave only the Houſe of Peers, to whoſe judicial deciſions all other tribunals muſt therefore ſubmit and conform their own. See 3 Comm. 406—411.

In criminal caſes alſo, judgments may be reverſed by writ of error; which lies from all inferior criminal juriſdictions to the Court of K. B. and from K. B. to the Houſe of Peers: It may be brought for notorious miſtakes in the judgment or other parts of the record: as where a man is found guilty of perjury and receives the judgment of felony, or for other leſs palpable errors ſuch as any irregularity, omiſſion, or want of form in the proceſs of outlawry or proclamations; the want of a proper addition to the defendant's name, according to the ſtatute (ſee title Abatement); for not properly naming the ſheriff, or other officer of the court, or not duly deſcribing where his county court was held: for laying an offence committed in the time of the late King, to be done againſt the peace of the preſent; and for many other ſimilar cauſes, which (though allowed out of tenderneſs to life and liberty) are not much to the credit or advantage of national juſtice. See titles Outlawry: Indictment, &c.

Theſe writs of error to reverſe judgments in caſes of miſdemeanors, are not to be allowed of courſe, but on ſufficient probable cauſe ſhewn to the Attorney General; and then they are underſtood to be grantable of common right, et ex debito juſtitiæ. But writs of error to reverſe attainders in capital caſes are allowed only ex gratiâ; and not without expreſs warrant under the King's ſign manual, or at leaſt by the conſent of the Attorney General. 1 Vern. 170, 5. Thoſe therefore can rarely be brought by the party himſelf, eſpecially where he is attainted for an offence againſt the State; but they may be brought by his heir or executor after his death. But the eaſier and more effectual way, is to reverſe ſuch attainder by Act of Parliament. See titles Attainder; Judgment.

Having ſaid thus much generally, we may now proceed particularly to enquire,

I. 1. By whom, againſt whom; and 2. at what Time, this Writ may be brought.
II. 1. In what Caſes it will lie; and 2. how it is to be brought.

VI. Of the Judgment to be given on a Writ of Error.

I. 1. Any perſon damnified by error in record, or that may be ſuppoſed to be injured by it, may bring a writ of error to reverſe it, whether he be party or no; but principal and bail cannot join in a writ of error. And where there are ſeveral defendants, if one of them releaſe the errors, he may be ſummoned and ſevered, and the others may reverſe the judgment. 6 Rep. 26: Hob. 72.

Judgment againſt two, one brought a writ of error, and held it ſhould be quaſhed with coſts; that it could not be amended, and that if the other party would not join, the defendant defendant who choſe to bring a writ of error, muſt proceed by ſummons and ſeverance. Hardw. 135, 136.

No perſon can reverſe a thing for error, unleſs the error be to his prejudice. 5 Rep. 38. One in remainder may have writ of error upon judgment given againſt tenant in tail: But he in reverſion or remainder ſhall not have writ of error, in the life-time of tenant for life, on judgment given againſt ſuch tenant, becauſe they cannot be parties grieved in his time. 2 Nelſ. Abr. 712.

No perſon can bring a writ of error to reverſe a judgment who was not party or privy to the record, or who was not injured by the judgment, and therefore to receive advantage by the reverſal thereof. 1 Rol. Abr. 747: Dyer 90.

So a writ of error does not lie againſt any but him, who is party or privy to the firſt judgment, his heirs, executors, or adminiſtrators. 1 Rol. Abr. 747: Dyer 90.

And therefore, on a judgment for recovery of land, the writ muſt be brought againſt him who was party to the judgment, although he hath nothing in the land, and not againſt the tenant; and on ſuch writ the judgment may be reverſed; but there muſt go a ſcire facias againſt all the tertenants. 1 Rol. Abr. 749: 1 Rol. Rep. 302:

Upon this rule, that none ſhall have a writ of error to reverſe a judgment, but he who is privy to, or hath ſome prejudice thereby, it hath been reſolved, that if one hath lands on the part of his mother, and loſeth them by erroneous judgment, and dies, the heir of the part of the mother ſhall have the writ of error. 1 Leon. 261: 2 Sid. 56: See Owen, 68: Godb. 377.

So the younger ſon, when intitled to the land by the cuſtom of Borough-Engliſh, ſhall bring the writ of error, and not the heir at Common-law: for this remedy deſcends with the land. Owen, 68: 1 Leon. 261: 4 Leon. 5.

So if there be an erroneous judgment, in the caſe of tenant in tail female, the iſſue female, and not the ſon, ſhall bring a writ of error. Dyer 90: 1 Leon. 261. 1 Rol. Abr. 747.

So if a man ſettles land to the uſe of himſelf and the heirs of his body, the remainder to his own right heirs, and dies, leaving iſſue only a daughter, who levies a fine, and dies without iſſue, and J. S. brings a writ of error as couſin and collateral heir of the daughter, yet he ſhall never reverſe the fine; for there could no right deſcend to him from the daughter, becauſe ſhe had but an eſtate tail, which determined by her death without iſſue; and it does not appear, that the remainder in fee was in the daughter as right heir, wherefore J. S. ſhall not reverſe the fine, quia de non apparentibus & non exiſtentibus eadem eſt ratio, eſpecially in a court of judicature, where the judges can take notice of nothing that does not come judicially before them, and appear in the pleading. Dyer 89: Cro. Eliz. 469: 3 Lev. 36.

If there be ſeveral parties to an erroneous fine, they ſhall all join with the party that is to enjoy the land, though they themſelves can have nothing; and this is ſaid to be neceſſary only by way of conformity. 1 Rol. Abr. 747: Dyer 89.

But if tenant for life, and he in remainder in fee, (being an infant) join in a fine, the infant alone may bring error for the error in reſpect of the perſon of the infant, which is the cauſe of the action for him, and for no other. 1 Leon. 31; 2 Cro. Eliz. 115.

A writ of error may be brought by him that is made party by the law, though he was not originally party to the ſuit, as he who comes in as a vouchee. 1 Rol. Abr. 748, 755.

If a man is indicted for felony, and thereupon a capias and exigent are awarded, but he dies before attainder, his adminiſtrators may have error upon this award of the exigent, becauſe by the award of the exigent, his goods were forfeited; and this is ad grave damnum, &c. though the principal judgment can never be given. 11 Co. 41. b.

Writ of error lies in B. R. to reverſe a fine levied in the Common Pleas, and to cancel the ſame if it be erroneous: And if there be not an original, or not proper writs of covenant, or if there be any fraud, &c. writ of error may be brought to make the fine void. Co. Lit. 9. See titles Fine and Recovery.

2. It was formerly holden, that a writ of error could not be brought before the judgment given; and if it bore teſte before, it was no ſuperſedeas, for the words of the writ are, Si judicium redditum ſit, &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 749. But it ſeems now agreed, that a writ of error that bears teſte before the judgment is good; and this is the uſual courſe for preventing and ſuperſeding execution; but the judgment muſt be given before the return of the writ. March 140: 1 Vent. 255: Moor 461: 3 Keb. 308: 1 Vent. 96: Latch. 133. and ſee 1 Term Rep. 279.

But a writ of error, that bears teſte before any plaint entered, is not good. March 140.

So where the defendant, upon an indictment of barretry, brought a writ of error, bearing teſte before the aſſiſe: it was diſallowed, becauſe if ſuch practice ſhould obtain, it would diſappoint all proceedings there. 1 Vent. 255: 3 Keb. 308.

A writ of error cannot be brought after twenty years. Hardw. 345. The ſtatute of limitations muſt be pleaded to a writ of error, as well as to an original action. Id. 346.

II. 1. Writ of error will not lie in the Exchequer chamber on judgment in replevin in B. R. nor on judgment in action of ſcandalum magnatum. 2 Nelſ. 708, 709. But on judgment in replevin in C. B. there may be writ of error brought in B. R. The Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8, (ſee poſt. Div. III.) is only to relieve on the merits of the cauſe, as it ſtood on the firſt judgment.

Error de recordo quod coram vobis reſidet lies in the court of B. R. for errors in fact in the judgment of the ſame court; as nonage of the parties, want of an original, &c. which doth not proceed from the error of the judges; and this writ is allowed without bail. Cro. Jac. 254. And errors in fact may be corrected in C. B. the ſame term, without this writ, which lies not in the Exchequer chamber. Ibid. 620.

If judgment is given in B. R. in civil actions, a writ of error will not lie in the ſame court, only for errors in fact triable by a jury; but upon a judgment in criminal caſes, error will lie in B. R. whether the error be in fact or in law; though it lies alſo in Parliament. 3 Salk. 147.

Where a judgment in C. B. is affirmed upon a writ of error in B. R. and afterwards a ſcire facias is brought on that judgment, and the plaintiff hath judgment thereon; no writ of error lieth in the Exchequer Chamber, becauſe the the record was not in B. R by bill, but by writ of error. 1 Roll. Rep. 264: 3 Salk. 148 —See 1 Salk. 263.

Writ of error cannot be brought on any record which is not a judgment. 1 Salk. 145.

The Court of B. R. having allowed the ſufficiency of a return to a writ of mandamus, and therefore refuſed to grant a peremptory writ, the party applying brought his writ of error in Parliament. Held that no writ of error lay in this caſe, it being merely an award of the court, and not a ſtrict formal judgment. 3 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 505.

The Court of C. P. have held, that, though writ of error may lie on a judgment of nonſuit, yet the Court will on motion to take out execution grant it, as ſuch writ of error muſt be evidently merely for the purpoſe of delay and vexation. 1 H. Black. Rep. 432.

No writ of error will lie of any judgment that is not given in a court of record; nor of a judgment given in an inferior court, as the county-court, &c. Co. Lit. 288 b. Nor of a decree or ſentence in Chancery proceeding according to equity. 37 Hen. 6: Bro. Error 95: 1 Rol. Abr. 744. But of a judgment given in the limited Court of Chancery, called the Petty-bag, which proceeds according to the Common-law, and holds plea of ſcire facias for repeal of the King's letters-patent, &c. a writ of error lies in B. R. 1 Rol. Abr. 744: Dyer 315: 4 Inſt. 80: Flow. 393.

Error lies for variance between the original writ and declaration; or want of an original: and where proceedings are ſo erroneous, as not to be amended; for faults in verdicts, executions, &c. or when any thing material is omitted in a judgment, writ of error lies, and the judgment ſhall be reverſed: ſo where the ſtiles of inferior courts are wrong or inſufficiently named, &c. their judgments may be reverſed. But where faults are ſmall, they ſometimes paſs as vitium clerici. 2 Nelſ. Abr. 714, 715, 721, &c. 728.

By the practice of the Court of Common Pleas, a defendant coming in by capias utlagatum the ſame term in which an exigent is returnable, may avoid the outlawry without a writ of error, by ſhewing that he purchaſed a ſuperſedeas out of the ſame court, and delivered it to the ſheriff before the quinto exactus, &c; or by ſhewing any other matter apparent on record, which makes the outlawry erroneous, as the want of an original, or the omiſſion of proceſs, or want of form in a writ of proclamation, &c. or a return by a perſon appearing not to be ſheriff, or a variance between the original and exigent, or other proceſs, or the want of ſuch addition as is required by Stat. 1 H. 5. c. 5: 2 Hawk. P. C. 659—661: 1 Rol. Abr. 742, 3.—And ſee Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 23. §§ 13, 14.

If one be attainted upon an erroneous indictment, he cannot be relieved but by writ of error, for the judgment being quod ſuſpendatur, &c. which is the judgment of law due for the offence, it muſt be preſumed to have been given, for that he was guilty of the offence; but if judgment of acquittal is given upon ſuch indictment, the King need bring no writ of error; but the offender may be newly indicted, for the judgment being quod eat ſine die, &c. may be given as well for the inſufficiency of the indictment, as for the party's innocence. 3 Inſt. 214.

Alſo any judgment whatſoever, given by perſons who had no good commiſſion to proceed againſt the perſon condemned, may be falſified, by ſhewing the ſpecial matter, without writ of error, becauſe it is void; as where a commiſſion authorizes to proceed on an indictment taken before A. B. C. and twelve others, and by colour thereof the commiſſioners proceed on an indictment taken before eight perſons only. 3 Inſt. 231: 2 Hawk. P. C. 459.

If one is attainted of felony, and after, by relation of a general pardon, the felony is pardoned, he ſhall be diſcharged, for he hath no remedy by writ of error, to reverſe the attainder. 6 Co. 5 a.

Wherever a new juriſdiction is erected by act of parliament, and the court or judge, that exerciſes this juriſdiction, acts as a court or judge of record, according to the courſe of the Common-law, a writ of error lies on their judgments; but where they act in a ſummary method, or in a new courſe different from the Common-law, there a writ of error lies not, but a certiorari. 1 Salk. 263. See title Certiorari.

2. Error in the King's Bench is thus proſecuted: the curſitor of the county makes out the writ of error, from a præcipe or copy of the declaration left with him; which is to be allowed with the clerk of the errors, and a certificate of the allowance of the writ muſt be ſerved on the defendant's attorney in error; alſo the plaintiff's attorney in the action, is to procure an original to warrant his judgment; and warrants of attorney muſt be filed, and bail put in, where required, &c. And then the proceedings are by ſcire facias ad audiendum errores againſt the plaintiff in the action, wherein judgment was obtained; and the writ of error being received by the ſheriff to whom directed, he is to give notice to the plaintiff in error to ſhew cauſe why execution ſhould not be on the judgment, and make a return to that purpoſe; then a rule is to be given with the clerk of the rules for the plaintiff in error to aſſign his errors by ſuch a day, which if he ſhall not do before the rule is out, the plaintiff in the original action may take out execution againſt him.

If the plaintiff in error aſſign errors in the record, then the defendant muſt plead In nullo eſt erratum, and thereupon enter the cauſe with the clerk of the papers, for the errors to be argued; and paper books for the counſel and judges, are to be made out, &c. If ſome part of the record be not returned, a certiorari muſt be prayed to bring it into court; and if matters of fact are alledged in error, as nonage, death of the plaintiff, &c. a proper plea muſt be made thereto, and iſſue thereupon taken and tried as in any other iſſue: but if only matters of law are aſſigned, the errors are argued by counſel on both ſides, and the judgment is either reverſed or affirmed: and when judgment is affirmed, the defendant in error may proceed againſt the defendant in the action, by taking out execution on the affirmetur, or bringing action of debt on the judgment; or he may proſecute the bail by ſcire facias upon their recogniſance. But it is ſaid by ſome, that an aſſignment of errors in fact and in law, is bad on demurrer; by others, that the aſſignment of error in law may ſtand, and the fact be conſidered as nothing. Sed quere, Where there is an error in fact, if the writ of error ought not to be coram vobis reſidens, i. e. in the court where the judgment was given. In this caſe, however, we muſt except the want of warrants of attorney, &c. which are facts; and it is every day's practice to aſſign ſuch, with errors in law; and the uſual courſe is, if defendant in error does not pray a certiorari, for the plaintiff to pray it.

When

When a judgment is reverſed or affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, the tranſcript of the record thereof will be remitted back to the Court of K. B. to be entered up at the end of the judgment there: and if ſuch judgment ſhall be affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber, yet a writ of error may be brought thereupon returnable in parliament.

If you would bring a writ of error in parliament to reverſe a judgment in B. R. there muſt be a petition to the King for his warrant, which petition has the allowance of the Attorney-General, and then the King writes on the top of it Fiat Juſtitia; whereupon a writ of error is made out by the clerk of the errors. And then the Lord Chief Juſtice of B. R. carries the record, and a tranſcript thereof, up to the Houſe of Lords in full Parliament, and after they are examined there, leaves the tranſcript with the Lords, but brings back the record: and this being done, the attorney for the defendant in error, gets ſome Lord to move that the plaintiff in error may aſſign his errors; but if for the plaintiff, motion is to be made, that upon his aſſigning errors, the defendant may appear and make his defence, and counſel be heard on both ſides: then, after the judgment is either affirmed or reverſed, the clerk of the parliament remands the tranſcript of the record into B. R. with the affirmation or reverſal thereof, to be entered upon the record of the ſaid court, which court, if affirmed, awards execution, &c. Dyer 385.—See Comp. 843.

A writ of error in parliament is made returnable immediately; or on a prorogation to the next ſeſſion, and it doth not determine by a prorogation. But if a parliament is diſſolved before the errors are heard, it is otherwiſe. And on motion, execution hath been granted in B. R. on a judgment in ſuch a caſe, the record being never out of the court. Raym. 5: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 731.

Where a writ of error was brought in B. R. in the life-time of Geo. I. but was not argued till after the acceſſion of Geo. II. when the judgment was affirmed, on a writ of error in parliament, this judgment was reverſed; it being held that the firſt writ of error, The King being ſole plaintiff in the cauſe, was abſolutely abated. This was the caſe of the Deanery of Armagh in Ireland. 3 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 507.

When appeals lay to England to reverſe a judgment given in the King's Bench in Ireland, a writ was procured from the curſitor, directed to the Chief Juſtice of the Court of B. R. in Ireland, requiring him to ſummon the plaintiff in the action there, to appear in K. B. to anſwer the errors; whereupon a tranſcript of the record was ſent over, (not the record itſelf of the judgment, which remained in Ireland,) and when the errors were argued, if the judgment was reverſed, there went a writ to the Chief Juſtice of Ireland to reverſe it; ſo that the judgment was not actually reverſed here, but there. And where the judgment in Ireland was affirmed here, there could be no writ of execution granted here; but on affirmance of the judgment a writ went, reciting all the proceedings, directed to the judges of B. R. in Ireland, commanding them to iſſue proceſs of execution. Cro. Car. 368: 1 Salk. 321.

The party bringing the writ of error is to cauſe the roll where the judgment is entered, to be marked with the word error in the margin, that the other party may have notice on the record that the writ of error is brought, and this marking of the roll, on giving notice thereof, is as it were a ſuperſedeas in itſelf to hinder execution: Though a ſuperſedeas is to be made out, allowed and left with the ſheriff of the county: and the plaintiff's attorney is not obliged to ſearch the record, whether writ of error is brought or not; but may make out execution upon the judgment, if no ſuperſedeas be taken forth, or he hath no notice of the writ of error. Trin. 24 Car. B. R.

On a writ of error of a judgment in the Common Pleas, or other inferior court, in every adverſary ſuit, the record itſelf ſhall be removed, that it may remain as a precedent and evidence of the law in the like caſes. 1 Rol. Abr. 753: 5 Co. 39.

But in the caſe of a fine the tranſcript only is removed, for fines are only a more ſolemn acknowledgement or contract of the parties, and therefore are no memorials of the law, and need only be affirmed or vacated; if the former, the contract ſtands as it was; if the latter, the juſtices of B. R. may ſend for the fine itſelf, and reverſe it, or they may ſend a writ to the treaſurer and chamberlain to take it off the file; beſides, ſhould the record itſelf be removed and affirmed, it could not be ingroſſed for want of a chirographer in B. R. 1 Rol. Abr. 752: 1 Bendl. 51: Dyer 89: Godb. 248: 2 Rol. Rep. 233: F. N. B. 20.—See title Fine and Recovery.

If the Judges of the Common Pleas, or other judges upon a writ of error, will not certify all the record, the party that ſues the writ of error may alledge diminution of the record, and pray a writ to the juſtices that certified the record before, to certify the whole record. F. N. B. 25 a. But diminution cannot be alledged upon a writ of error brought upon a judgment in any inferior court. 1 Sid. 40.—Yet ſee infra.

By Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 8, he that brings writ of error, to reverſe a judgment in a ſuperior court, in all caſes after a verdict, or in any action of debt, upon bond for payment of money only, or on a contract, muſt put in good ſureties to proſecute his writ of error with effect, and pay the debt and damages if judgment be affirmed: and by Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. § 5, this is extended to writs of error to reverſe judgments in inferior courts where the damages are under 10*l.* If bail be not put in, on the writ of error brought upon a judgment in the courts at Weſtminſter, in thoſe caſes where bail is required, the writ of error is no ſuperſedeas to the execution; though ſuch writ is in being, until a nolle proſequi is entered, or judgment affirmed, &c. And it is the ſame where inſufficient bail is given, on rule to put in better bail, or juſtify thoſe put in, which if the plaintiff doth not do, execution is ordered upon the judgment, with a non obſtante to the writ of error, &c. Mich. 9 W. 3. B. R.

A plaintiff in error is, in the time appointed by the rule for that purpoſe, to certify the record into B. R. or the court will grant a nolle proſequi on the writ of error. Mich. 22 Car. B. R.—See poſt Div. V.

The court will not let the plaintiff in error quaſh his own writ of error; though they may grant leave to diſcontinue it. 5 Mod. 67. If a verdict is for a defendant in error, and judgment is affirmed, coſts are allowed by Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 10, on occaſion of the delay of execution. And by Stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16, upon quaſhing writs of error, for defect or variance from the record, &c. the defendant is to have coſts as if judgment were affirmed. When a writ of error is not in delay of execution, as where it is brought after the execution is executed, the plaintiff ſhall not have damages and coſts. Cro. Jac. 636.

When a writ of error is brought to reverſe a judgment in an inferior court, though the record is not certified as it ought, yet execution cannot be ſued; but on certificate of the neglect, &c. a writ of execution of the judgment may be iſſued. 1 Lil. Abr. 526. Upon a writ of error, if the clerk below will certify the record wrong, action on the caſe lies againſt him; and if he make no return, the plaintiff may have the writ of execution out of Chancery. Mod. Caſ. 245.

If erroneous judgment be for the defendant in an inferior court, and it is reverſed in B. R. and the merits appear for the plaintiff, he ſhall have judgment; but if the merits be againſt the plaintiff, the defendant ſhall have new judgment, in like manner as in the Exchequer Chamber; for the judges are to reform, as well as to affirm or reverſe. 7 Mod. 2, 3. If a writ of error to reverſe a judgment be diſcontinued for want of proſecution; execution cannot be had upon the judgment, until the diſcontinuance is certified from the court where diſcontinued. 1 Lil. 518. If a writ of error is brought to remove a record of a judgment given in C. B. and the plaintiff in error leaves the record there, without removing it before the return of the writ; or in caſe there be a longer return day than is convenient in the writ of error, as if it is purchaſed the beginning of Michaelmas term, and made returnable in Hilary term; the court may award execution, although the writ of error be delivered. Jenk. Cent. 180: Dyer 245.

III. Erroneous judgments given in the court of B. R. were only reformed by the parliament till Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 8. By that ſtatute, a writ of error lies out of the Chancery upon all judgments given in the King's Bench, when the ſuit is by bill, (except the King is a party to the ſuit) returnable in the Exchequer Chamber, before the Judges of the Common Pleas, and Barons of the Exchequer, &c. who may examine the errors, and reverſe or affirm the judgment; other than for errors, concerning the juriſdiction of the court, or want of form in writs, pleadings, &c. and after the errors are examined, and judgment affirmed or reverſed, the record is ſent back to the King's Bench, to proceed and award execution; but if the ſuit is by original writ, or on qui tam, &c. where the King is party, writ of error lies only in parliament.

A qui-tam action of debt is a civil ſuit. Comp. 382. And a writ of error on it, lies from the King's Bench to the Exchequer Chamber. Doug. 353.—See title Exchequer.

Not only on reverſing or affirming a judgment, the Exchequer Chamber is to ſend back the record into B. R. but alſo if the plaintiff in the writ of error is nonſuit, or if the ſuit is diſcontinued in the Court of Exchequer Chamber, the record ſhall be ſent back: and the Court of Exchequer ſhall give coſts and damages to the plaintiff in the original action for his delay, &c. though if the plaintiff in error was plaintiff in the original action, there no coſts can be given. 2 And. 122: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 707.

Where a writ of error determines in the Exchequer Chamber, by abatement or diſcontinuance, the judgment is not again in B. R. till a remittitur is entered. 1 Salk. 261. The Exchequer Chamber doth not award a ſci. fac. ad audiend. errores; but notice is given to the parties concerned. 1 Vent. 34.

The court of parliament is the ſupreme court, where anciently cauſes of great conſequence, as between the Magnates Regni, were heard and determined; hence the dernier reſort is to the Houſe of Lords, to which a writ of error lies; and therefore, if a writ of error be brought of a judgment in the King's Bench into the Exchequer Chamber, and there the judgment is reverſed; yet a writ of error lies of ſuch judgment into parliament, and the lords may reverſe ſuch ſecond judgment. Show. Parl. Caſ. 24, 110: 1 Vent. 334: Raym. 330: 2 Jon. 99: 2 Lev. 232.

So a writ of error lies into parliament upon a judgment in B. R. either in a cauſe brought there by writ of error, or originally commenced there. 1 Rol. Abr. 745.

And though upon a judgment in the King's Bench, ſince the Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 8, the party may elect either to bring a writ of error in the Exchequer Chamber, or in parliament; yet if the cauſe commenced in the King's Bench by original writ, there lies no writ of error but into parliament; alſo if he elects to bring error in the Exchequer Chamber regularly, he cannot after bring error in parliament upon the firſt judgment. 1 Saund. 346. Carth. 180. S. P.—See 2 Rol. Abr. 492: 2 Lev. 232.

To reverſe a judgment given in the Court of Common Pleas, the writ of error is made returnable in the King's Bench, and error is not to be brought in parliament: though where a writ of error is brought in B. R. upon a judgment given in C. B. and the judgment is reverſed or affirmed in B. R. the party grieved may have writ of error returnable in parliament. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 1: 1 Lil. Abr. 519, 521. Erroneous judgment in the Court of Exchequer, is to be examined by the Lord Chancellor, &c. with ſome of the juſtices, and ſuch other ſage perſons as they think fit; and if any error be found, they ſhall correct the rolls, and ſend them into the Exchequer, in order to make execution, &c. Stat. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 12.

No writ of error lies in Banco or Banco Regis, upon a judgment given within the five ports; but by cuſtom ſuch judgment is examinable by bill in nature of a writ of error coram domino cuſtode ſeu gardiano quinque portuum apud curiam ſuam de Shepway. 4 Inſt. 224.—See title Cinque-Ports.

If a judgment be given in the court of ſtannaries of the Dutchy of Cornwall, no writ of error lies upon this in Banco or Banco Regis, becauſe it hath not been uſed; but of this there may be an appeal to the guardian of the Stannaries, and from him to the Prince; and when there is no Prince, to the King's Privy Council. 1 Rol. Abr. 745.—See 4 Inſt. 230: 2 Danv. Abr. 304.

Upon a judgment given in the Huſtings in London, a writ of error lies at St. Martin's before certain juſtices. 1 Rol. Abr. 745: 1 Lev. 309: 2 Saund. 253. S. P. and upon a judgment of the ſaid juſtices, a writ of error lies in parliament. See 2 Leon. 107.—See title Diſſenters.

In Wales, at the Great Seſſions, there a writ of error lay on perſonal actions to the council of the Marches of Wales; and if they gave an erroneous judgment, it was final; for Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 16, ordained this writ to the council there; and no writ of error was granted of ſuch erroneous judgment: upon errors in real or mixed actions however in Wales, writ of error lay into the King's Bench. Jenk. Cent. 71. And ſo now it does in perſonal actions by Stat. 1 W. & M. c. 27.—See title Courts of Wales.

In

In some cases a writ of error lies in the same court wherein the record is.

If upon a judgment in B. R. there be error in the process, or through the default of the clerks, it shall be reversed in the same court by writ of error sued there before the same justices. F. N. B. 21: Poph. 181: 1 Rol. Abr. 746.

So if one is indicted of treason or felony in B. R. or being indicted elsewhere, the indictment is removed in B. R. and by process of that court he is erroneously outlawed, and so returned; a writ of error may be brought in B. R. for the reversal thereof. 3 Inst. 214.

Also if an erroneous judgment in point of law be given in B. R. upon an indictment in London, a writ of error may be brought in the same court; for though in civil cases error does not lie in the same court, unless for a matter of fact; yet in criminal cases it lies as well for an error in law as fact. 1 Sid. 208.

But if an erroneous judgment be given, and the error lies in the judgment itself, and not in the process, a writ of error does not lie in B. R. of such judgment. 1 Rol. Abr. 746.

If a record is removed by writ of error out of the Common Pleas into the King's Bench, and the writ of error for insufficiency is quashed in the King's Bench, the plaintiff in error may have a writ coram vobis residen'. But such new writ is not a superscdeas in itself as the first writ was, and therefore he must move the court for a supersedeas, and put in bail thereon. Carth. 363, 9.

So if such second writ be quashed for insufficiency, yet the court will grant a new or second writ of error coram vobis residen'. As also a supersedeas on putting in bail; for such second writ being void, is as if there had been none before. Carth. 369, 370.

IV. The parties, upon the removal of the record by the writ of error, have no day in court given to either of them; so that if the plaintiff in error delay to sue forth his fci. fac. ad audiend. errores, the defendant hath no way to compel him, but by suing out a scire facias quare executionem non, &c. And if thereupon the plaintiff in error doth not plead that his errors are assigned, but suffer judgment to pass upon two nihils, no errors afterwards assigned shall prevent execution. Carth. 41. The fci. fac. ad audiendum errores is only used in B. R. In the Exchequer Chamber notice is given. It is said the usual practice is, that the defendant in the writ of error, by consent doth voluntarily take notice of the assignment of errors, and this consent is testified by his pleading In nullo est errat' and then there is no occasion for a scire facias ad audiend. error'. Ibid.

Errors are to be assigned in the term, or the writ of error will be quashed. 1 Lil. Abr. 524. When the record is in court by writ of error, the plaintiff in error is to assign his errors; and may have a scire facias before the record is entered: and the manner of assigning errors, according to the ancient practice, is to put a bill into court, and say in the bill, in hoc erratum est, &c. shewing in certain in what things. F. N. B. 20. The assignment of error, in omnibus erratum is not good; for the judgment is founded upon the original writ, count, pleading, issue, process, trial, and so is manifold. Jenk. Cent. 84. Errors in law not assigned in the record, may be assigned after a scire facias ad audiend' errores; as the record is in court; but it is not so of a warrant of attorney, which is an error in fact, and not upon record. Ibid. 140: 5 Rep. 37.

If one in execution brings error, he ought to assign the errors in his proper person: and in cases of outlawry for felony, errors sufficient must be certainly alledged in writing, before the writ of error is allowed. Jenk. Cent. 165, 179. Where a recovery is had, and error brought, if the original writ doth not abate by death; but is abateable only, as by entry into the land pending the writ, or coverture, acquisition of a dignity, a partial array returned, aid denied, &c. that should have been pleaded, and were not: these shall not be assigned for error; for they are waived. 9 Rep. 47: 21 H. 6. 29.

The assigning general errors is to say that the declaration, &c. is not sufficient in law: and that judgment was given for the plaintiff, where it ought to have been for the defendant: and the errors of a judgment are now to be assigned on the record, to appear with it to the court.

If the plaintiff in error assigns errors in fact, and errors in law, which are not assignable together, and the defendant in error pleads in nullo est erratum; this is a confession of the error in fact, and the judgment must be reversed, for he should have demurred for the duplicity. Style 69: 1 Lev. 76: Salk. 268: 6 Mod. 113, 206.

Also if an error in fact be well assigned, in nullo est erratum is a confession of it, for the defendant ought to have joined issue upon it, so as to have it tried by the country. 1 Sid. 93: Raym. 59. Because, in nullo est erratum is in the nature of a demurrer, which confesses the fact, if well pleaded, or well assigned.

But if an error in fact be ill assigned, in nullo est erratum is no confession of it; as if it be assigned, that such a one at the time of the return of the venire was not sheriff, and the record be removed into B. R. by certiorari, there in nullo est erratum is no confession of that error, because the record is not in court, that being no part of the record, for the plea is in nullo est erratum in recordo. Cro. Jac. 12, 29, 521: Raym. 231: Cro. Car. 421: 1 Rol. Ab. 758.

So if the plaintiff in error assigns an error in fact, viz. that the defendant, who was an infant, did not appear by guardian, but by attorney, and concludes with hoc paratus est verificare, instead of concluding to the country, as he ought to do, though the defendant in error pleads in nullo est erratum, yet it shall not amount to a confession, but shall be taken only for a demurrer. Yelv. 58.

Also if an error in fact, that is not assignable, be assigned, and in nullo est erratum be pleaded, it is no confession; as if it be assigned, that such a day there was no court of Common Pleas sitting, because that is against the record, and in such case in nullo est erratum is only a demurrer; so if a man says he did not appear, and the record says he did, in nullo est erratum is no confession, but a demurrer, because it is against the record. Cro. Car. 12, 29, 52: Yelv. 58: Raym. 231: 1 Vent. 252: 3 Keb. 259: 1 Lev. 76.

It has been held, that an error in fact cannot be assigned in the Exchequer Chamber: though by some authorities, errors in fact may be assigned as errors in law. 2 Mod. 194: 2 Nels. Abr. 708.

By Stat. 20 Car. 2. c. 6, In actions real, personal, and mixed, the death of either party between verdict and judgment, shall not be alledged for error.

It seems a general rule, that nothing can be assigned for error that contradicts the record; for the records of the courts of justice being things of the greatest credit, cannot be queſtioned but by matters of equal notoriety with themſelves; wherefore, though the matter aſſigned for error ſhould be proved by witneſſes of the beſt credit, yet the judges would not admit of it. 1 Rol. Abr. 757.

An original writ of the ſame term, in which final judgment is given, will not warrant that judgment, if it appear upon the ſame record, that there have been proceedings of a preceding term. 1 Wilſ. 181.

Hence it is, that in a writ of error to reverſe a fine, the plaintiff cannot aſſign, that the conuſor died before the teſte of the dedimus, becauſe that contradicts the record of the conuſance taken by the commiſſioners, which evidently ſhews that the conuſor was then alive, becauſe they took his conuſance after they were armed with the commiſſion, and the dedimus iſſued. Dyer 89: 1 Rol. Abr. 757.—See title Fine and Recovery.

V. The defendant in error may plead a releaſe of all errors, or a releaſe of all ſuits, and theſe pleas, if found for him, will for ever bar the plaintiff in error. 1 Rol. Abr. 788.

So where by a writ of error the plaintiff ſhall recover, or be reſtored to any perſonal thing, as debt, damage, or the like, a releaſe of all actions perſonal is a good plea; and when land is to be recovered or reſtored in a writ of error, a releaſe of actions real is a good bar; but where by a writ of error the plaintiff ſhall not be reſtored to any perſonal or real thing, a releaſe of all actions real or perſonal is no bar. Co. Lit. 288 b: 8 Co. 152: 1 Rol. Abr. 788: 2 Rol. Abr. 405.

Alſo if a man loſes in a real action, and he releaſes all his right to the land, and ſo where there is a fine levied, this ſhall bar him of his writ of error; for no perſon can bring a writ of error to reverſe a judgment that is not intitled to the land, &c. for the courts of law will not turn out the preſent tenant, unleſs the demandant can make out a clear title; poſſeſſion always carrying with it the preſumption of a good title, till the right owner appears. 1 Rol. Abr. 747, 788: Dyer 90 a: 3 Leo. 36: Cro. Eliz. 469: 1 Rol. Abr. 789. If the tenant, pending a præcipe againſt him, aliens in fee, and after judgment is given againſt him, and he brings a writ of error; this feoffment is not any bar to the writ, becauſe he was privy to the judgment after. 1 Rol. Abr. 788: Bridg. 77: 1 Rol. Rep. 306. In a writ of error to reverſe a common recovery, it is no good plea, that the plaintiff pending the writ of error hath entered into part, for before the poſſeſſion was taken from him, he might have error to reverſe the judgment, though not to have reſtitution. 1 Lev. 72.—See title Fine and Recovery.

In a ſci. fac. againſt a tertenant, he may plead a releaſe of error, though he be not privy to the judgment. 9 H. 6. 43: Bro. 9. S. C.

But the tertenants cannot plead in abatement of the writ of error, but only in bar as a releaſe, &c. in maintenance of their title. 1 Lev. 72.

After in nullo eſt erratum pleaded, the party affirms the record to be perfect, and he is foreclоſed to ſay there is error in it: though the court is not reſtrained from examining into it. 1 Salk. 270. The judges are not bound to ſearch for errors in the record, which were not aſſigned; but may if they will; and if they find error they ought to reverſe the judgment. Jenk. Cent. 159.

VI. A judgment, as being an intire thing, cannot be reverſed in part, and ſtand good as to other part; or be reverſed as to one party, and remain good againſt the reſt: though if there be error in awarding execution, the execution only ſhall be reverſed, and not the judgment. Hob. 90: Carth. 235. If judgment is entered againſt joint defendants, when one of them is dead, the judgment ſhall be reverſed for error as to all of them; for in ſuch caſe the plaintiff ought to make a ſpecial entry of the death of the party, with Nihil ulterius verſus eum fiat, and then take judgment only againſt the others. Ibid. 149.

The Court of Exchequer Chamber have not any authority, but to reverſe or affirm the judgment, &c. for they cannot make execution. Cro. Eliz. 108. But where judgment is given for the defendant, and the plaintiff brings a writ of error; if the judgment is reverſed, the court which reverſes the judgment ſhall give judgment for the plaintiff, as the other court ought to have done. Yelv. 117, 118. In the Exchequer Chamber, after reverſal of a judgment, &c. in B. R. the court gave judgment, that the plaintiff recover, &c. but becauſe they wanted power to award a writ of inquiry which was neceſſary, being on a demurrer, therefore it was ſent back into B. R. for the execution of that writ, and thereupon to give final judgment: but if the judgment is againſt the plaintiff in B. R. upon a ſpecial verdict, and that judgment is reverſed in the Exchequer Chamber, there being no writ of inquiry requiſite, the Court of Exchequer Chamber doth not only give judgment of reverſal, but a compleat judgment for the plaintiff in the action. Carth. 181. If erroneous judgment be had by conſent of parties, it may be reverſed in the Exchequer Chamber; for conſent of parties may not change the law; but if the conſent is entered upon and made part of the record, it may be good. Hob. 5: Cro. Eliz. 664. The reverſal in the Exchequer Chamber, is res judicata: no writ of error lies upon ſuch judgment, except in parliament; and it is by ſix judges at leaſt, by Stats. 27 Eliz. c. 8: 31 Eliz. c. 1.

When judgment is given in B. R. for the plaintiff in error, there ſhall be only a judicium revocetur, &c. entered with coſts: if for the defendant in error, that the plaintiff nil capiat per breve ſuum de errore. The Chief Juſtice of B. R. &c. or the eldeſt judge ought to allow a writ of error, which is in judgment of law a ſuperſedeas until the errors are examined, and the judgment affirmed or reverſed. Cro. Jac. 534. As a plaintiff having erroneous judgment may reverſe it; and new judgment may be given for him, ſo if a judgment is reverſed, the plaintiff may bring a new action for the ſame cauſe. 1 Lev. 310. Where a judgment is pleaded in bar of another action, &c. and judgment given on that plea; writ of error may be had to reverſe the ſecond judgment. Cro. Eliz. 503: Jenk. Cent. 259. And debt lies upon a judgment in B. R. after a writ of error brought; which is only a ſuperſedeas to the execution. 1 Lev. 153. But the court will ſtay proceedings in ſuch action on giving judgment.

In a writ of error upon a judgment in treſpaſs againſt ſeveral, if the judgment be erroneous, becauſe one of the defendants was within age, and appeared by attorney, the judgment ſhall be reverſed in toto againſt all. 1 Rol. Abr. 776: Cro. Jac. 289, 303: Allen 74, 75: Style 121, 125, 406.

ERTHMIOTUM, An ancient word for a meeting of the neighbourhood to compromiſe differences among themſelves; it is mentioned in Leg. Hen. 1. c. 57.

ESBRANCATURA, from the Fr. eſbrancher.] Cutting off branches or boughs in foreſts, &c. Hoved. 784.

ESCALDARE, To ſcald: Escaldare porcos, was one of our ancient tenures in ſerjeanty; as appears by the inquiſition of the ſerjeancies and knights fees in the 12th and 13th years of King John, within the counties of Eſſex and Hertford. Lib. Rub. Scaccar' MS. 137.

ESCAMBIO, derived from the Span. cambier to change.] Was a licenſe granted to make over bills of exchange to another beyond the ſea: for by the Stat. 5 R. 2. c. 2, no merchant ought to exchange or return money beyond ſea, without the King's licence. *Reg. ESCAPE, ESCAPIUM, from the Fr. eſchapper, i. e. effugere, to fly from.] A violent or privy evaſion out of ſome lawful reſtraint; as where a perſon is arreſted or impriſoned, and gets away before he is delivered by due courſe of law. Staundf. P. C. cap. 26, 27.—Terms de Ley.

Eſcapes are either (A) in civil, or (B) in criminal, caſes.

(A) As to ESCAPES in CIVIL CASES.

I. 1. Where the party ſhall be ſaid to be legally committed, ſo that the ſuffering him to go at large will be adjudged an Eſcape; 2. What degree of Liberty, or going at large, ſhall be deemed an Eſcape; 3. What Perſons are anſwerable for an Eſcape.

II. 1. Of the Difference between voluntary and negligent Eſcapes; and 2. Between Eſcapes on Meſne Proceſs and Execution.

III. 1. Of the Nature of the Action to be brought for an Eſcape; and 2. Of the Manner of laying it.

IV. Of the Party's Defence ſued for the Eſcape; and therein of pleading freſh Suit.

I. 1. It ſeems agreed as a general rule, that wherever a ſheriff or other officer hath a perſon in cuſtody, by virtue of an authority from a court which hath juriſdiction over the matter, that the ſuffering ſuch a perſon to go at large is an eſcape, for he cannot judge of the validity of the proceſs or other proceedings of ſuch court, and therefore cannot take advantage of any errors in them; hence the law allows him, in an action of falſe impriſonment, to plead ſuch authority, which will excuſe him, though it be erroneous; but if the court has no juriſdiction of the matter, then all is void, and conſequently the officer not puniſhable for ſuffering a perſon taken upon ſuch void authority to eſcape. Moor 274: Dyer 66, 175, 306: Poph. 203: 1 Leon. 30: 5 Co. 64: 8 Co. 141 b: Cro. Jac. 280, 289: 2 Bulſt. 64, 237, 256. If a ca. ſa. iſſue after a year and a day, without ſuing out a ſcire facias, this error will not excuſe the ſheriff in an eſcape. Cro. Car. 288: Salk. 273. But though a ſheriff may not take advantage of an erroneous proceſs; yet he ſhall of a void proceſs, on which it is no eſcape to let a priſoner go.

If at the petition of A. and the reſt of the creditors of B. a commiſſion under the ſtatutes againſt bankrupts is iſſued out againſt B. and thereupon the commiſſioners ſit and offer interrogatories to C. and he refuſes to be examined, and by them is thereupon committed to priſon, and the gaoler ſuffers him to eſcape, as the commiſſioners had ſufficient authority to commit, and A. was prejudiced by the eſcape, he may maintain an action againſt the gaoler. 1 Rol. Rep. 47: Moor 834, pl. 1123, S. C.

The ſheriff cannot be charged with an eſcape before he had the party in actual cuſtody by a legal authority; and therefore if an officer, having a warrant to arreſt a man, ſee him ſhut up in a houſe, and challenge him as his priſoner, but never actually have him in his cuſtody, and the party get free, the officer cannot be charged with an eſcape. Bro. Eſcape 22.

But if A. is arreſted, and in the actual cuſtody of the ſheriff, and afterwards another writ is delivered to him at the ſuit of J. S. upon the delivery of the writ, A. by conſtruction of law is immediately in the ſheriff's cuſtody, without an actual arreſt; and if he eſcapes, the plaintiff may declare, that he was arreſted by virtue of the ſecond writ, which is the operation it has by law, and not according to the fact. 5 Co. 89. But where the ſheriff, not having actually arreſted a defendant, but accepted the undertaking of an attorney to put in bail, who put in bail, and the ſheriff had returned a cepi corpus, held per Lord Mansfield at Surry aſſizes, ſummer 1775, in Hodgson and Akerman, Eſq. that the ſheriff was not liable, upon a writ of non eſt inventus, on another proceſs, to an action, either for an eſcape or a falſe return, or for negligence in not taking the defendant, no actual negligence being proved; and the plaintiff was non-ſuited.

Note, the writ returned cepi corpus was a latitat, returnable three or four days after the other proceſs, which was an original, but that difference was not, in this caſe, conſidered as material.

If a perſon out upon bail renders himſelf in diſcharge of his bail, and a reddidit ſe is entered in the judge's book, and a committitur filed in the office, and the priſoner afterwards eſcapes; yet if no notice was given to the marſhal of ſuch render, nor no entry made of the commitment in his book, the priſoner ſhall not be deemed in cuſtody ſo as to charge the marſhal with an eſcape; but it ſeems this matter cannot be inſiſted upon after trial. 1 Salk. 272, 3. Vide poſt.

It hath been held, that entering a commitur upon the roll was not ſufficient to charge the marſhal with any eſcape, without proving an actual impriſonment; but that proving the party to be actually in priſon, though there be no entry made in the marſhal's book is ſufficient. 1 Sid. 220: 1 Keb. 775.

And now, for the greater ſecurity of creditors, and the better to enable them to prove the actual cuſtody of the priſoner, it is enacted, by Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. §. 9, "That if any one, deſiring to charge any perſon with any action or execution, ſhall deſire to be informed by the marſhal or warden, or their reſpective deputies, or by any other keeper of any other priſon, whether ſuch perſon be a priſoner in his cuſtody, or not, the ſaid marſhal or warden, or ſuch other keeper, ſhall give a true note in writing thereof, to the perſon ſo requeſting the ſame, or to his lawful attorney, upon demand, at his office for that purpoſe, or, in default thereof, ſhall forfeit the ſum of 50*l.* and if ſuch marſhal or warden, or their reſpective deputy, &c. exerciſing the ſaid office, or other keeper, &c. of any other priſon, ſhall give a note in writing that ſuch perſon is an actual priſoner in his or their cuſtody, every ſuch note ſhall be taken as a ſufficient evidence, that ſuch perſon was at that time a priſoner in actual cuſtody."

A committitur upon the roll is good evidence in eſcape, without an entry in the marſhal's book. Ld. Raym. 705.

2. Every perſon in priſon by proceſs of law is to be kept in ſaltâ & arctâ cuſtodiâ, in order to compel them the more ſpeedily to pay their debts, and make ſatisfaction to their creditors. Plowd. 36: 3 Co. 44: 2 Inſt. 381: 1 Rol. Abr. 805.

If therefore a defendant being taken in execution, be afterwards ſeen at large, for any the ſhorteſt time, even before the return of the writ, this is an eſcape. 2 Ld. Rep. 1048.

Perſons in the King's Bench and Fleet priſons, are to be actually detained within the ſaid priſons; and if they eſcape, action of debt lies againſt the warden, &c. 1 R. 2. c. 12. But now the marſhal or warden grant the liberty of the rules to ſuch as they think proper, (not criminally charged,) on proper ſecurity. Keepers of thoſe priſons ſuffering priſoners either upon contempt or meſne proceſs, or in execution, to be out of the rules (except on rule of court, &c.) are guilty of an eſcape; and perſons conniving at an eſcape ſhall forfeit 500*l. &c.* by 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. And by this ſtatute, where any priſoner in execution eſcapes, the creditor may have any other new execution againſt him.

If the bailiff of a liberty, who has the return and execution of writs, remove a priſoner taken in execution to the county gaol, ſituated out of the liberty, and there deliver him into the cuſtody of the ſheriff, this is an eſcape for which an action of debt lies. 2 Term Rep. 5.

By Stat. 5 An. c. 9, If any perſon in cuſtody, for not performing any decree in Chancery, &c. eſcape, the party for whom the money is decreed may have the ſame remedy againſt the ſheriff, as if the priſoner had been in cuſtody on execution. A priſoner in execution ſhould not be allowed to go out of the gaol; for if he goes out, though he returns again, it is an eſcape. 3 Rep. 43, 44: 2 Inſt. 260, 381. And yet in London, by ſpecial cuſtom there, in ſome caſes the priſoner may go abroad with his keeper, and it will be no eſcape. Ibid.—See Hob. 202. Where the Juſtice of the court, and plaintiff in the ſuit, agree that the priſoner ſhall be at liberty, and he go out and return at his time; it is no eſcape: but this may not be without the ſheriff's conſent. Dyer 275.

If a plaintiff by word licenſe the ſheriff to deliver the priſoner, no action will lie for this as an eſcape. 27 H. 8. 24.

If there be an eſcape by the plaintiff's conſent, when he did not intend it, the law is hard that the debt ſhould be thereby diſcharged; as where one was in execution in B. R. and ſome propoſals being made to the plaintiff in behalf of the priſoner, ſeeing there was ſome likelihood of an accommodation, the plaintiff conſented to a meeting in a certain place in London, and deſired the priſoner might be there, who came accordingly: this was held to be an eſcape, with the plaintiff's conſent, and he could never after be in execution at his ſuit for the ſame matter. 2 Mod. 136.

It hath been adjudged no eſcape to let a priſoner go where the ſheriff hath the priſoner in cuſtody, if it be before the return of the writ: it is ſufficient if the officer have the party at the return of the writ. &c. Moor 299: 1 Salk. 401: 2 Nelſ. 739, 740. Yet it hath been held, that where a habeas corpus is granted to bring a perſon into court, if the ſheriff on the way let him go at large in the county, or carry him round about a great way, &c. it will be an eſcape. 1 Mod. 116. And an eſcape in one place is an eſcape in all places; for a priſoner being once eſcaped, and at large, it ſhall be intended he is confined to no place. 1 Lil. Abr. 537. Committing the marſhal of the Marſhalſea to priſon, was held an eſcape in law of all the priſoners there. See Style 375.

If a woman, warden of the Fleet priſon, marries her priſoner, or if a ſheriff, &c. marries a woman in execution with him, in either caſe it will be deemed an eſcape in law. Plowd. 17.

If a man hath judgment againſt two perſons, and both are taken in execution, if the ſheriff ſuffer one of them to eſcape, he ſhall be anſwerable for the whole debt, though he hath one of them ſtill in cuſtody. 1 Rol. Abr. 810. But in an action on the caſe, tried before Lord Mansfield, in Surry, for an eſcape of one of two defendants, under very favourable circumſtances for the officer, his Lordſhip left it to the jury, whether they would find the whole of plaintiff's debt, in damages, or only half, and the jury found only half.

By Stat. 8 & 9 Wil. 3. cap. 27. ſect. 8, It is enacted, "That if the marſhal or warden for the time being, or their reſpective deputy or deputies, or other keeper or keepers of any other priſon or priſons, ſhall, after one day's notice in writing given for that purpoſe, refuſe to ſhew any priſoner committed in execution, to the creditor, at whoſe ſuit ſuch priſoner was committed or charged, or to his attorney, every ſuch refuſal ſhall be adjudged to be an eſcape in law."

3. In civil actions the ſheriff is to anſwer for the eſcape of his bailiff; as the bailiff is for that of his ſervant: and action on the caſe lies againſt the ſheriff for an eſcape upon meſne proceſs, becauſe the plaintiff is prejudiced in his ſuit by it. Cro. Eliz. 623, 625: 1 Danv. Abr. 183.—See alſo Cro. Jac. 419: Dyer 241.—See Bull. Ni. Pri. 59, 60. Where a perſon is in cuſtody on meſne proceſs, and being outlawed after judgment at the ſuit of another, the judgment creditor brings a warrant on a capias utlagatum, and delivers it to the ſheriff's officer, who hath him in cuſtody; if the officer afterwards permits the perſon to eſcape, though he refuſe to execute the warrant, the ſheriff is chargeable in action on the caſe. 5 Rep. 89.

Where one has the cuſtody of a gaol of freehold or inheritance, and commits it to another perſon, who is inſufficient, the ſuperior is anſwerable for all eſcapes ſuffered by his inferior; but if the inferior be ſufficient, the action ſhould be brought againſt him, and not againſt the ſuperior. See 9 Co. 98: 2 Jon. 60: 2 Lev. 158: 1 Vent. 314: 2 Mod. 119: 4 Rep. 98.

Alſo by Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 27. ſect. 11, it is enacted, "That the offices of marſhal of the King's Bench priſon and warden of the Fleet, ſhall be executed by the ſeveral perſons to whom the inheritance of the priſons, priſon-houſes, &c. of the ſaid priſons, or either of them, ſhall then belong reſpectively, in his or their reſpective proper perſon, &c. or by their ſufficient deputies; for which deputies, and for all forfeitures, eſcapes, and other miſdemeanors in their offices by ſuch deputies permitted,

&c.

&c. the ſaid perſon in whom the aforeſaid inheritances reſpectively are, ſhall be anſwerable; and the profits and inheritances of the ſaid offices ſhall be ſequeſtered, &c. to make ſatisfaction for ſuch forfeitures, eſcapes, &c. reſpectively, as if permitted, &c. by the perſons themſelves, in whom the reſpective inheritance of the ſaid priſons ſhall then be."

A priſoner eſcapes out of the King's Bench, or Marſhalſea, or the Fleet; the keeper of the priſon out of which he eſcaped is to be charged with it; but if the eſcape be from either of the Counters, the action muſt be brought againſt the ſheriffs of London. Dyer 278: 3 Rep. 52.

Action of eſcape againſt the warden of the Fleet for an eſcape upon meſne proceſs; the priſoner returns to the Fleet the ſame day, and the plaintiff afterwards proceeds to final judgment againſt him, yet the action lies againſt the warden. 1 Wilſ. 294. In an eſcape upon meſne proceſs out of the borough court, brought in B. R. againſt the bailiff thereof, the defendant ſhall not take advantage in B. R. of any error in the proceſs below. 1 Wilſ. 255.

Action of eſcape will not lie againſt the executor or adminiſtrator of a ſheriff, &c. for an eſcape, becauſe it was perſonal, and moritur cum perſona: but it may be otherwiſe if there be a judgment recovered againſt the ſheriff before he died. Dyer 322. See poſt III. 2.

If there are two ſheriffs of the ſame place, and an action of eſcape is brought againſt them both, if one of them dies, yet the writ ſhall not abate; for it being in nature of a treſpaſs, and merely perſonal, the party can only have remedy againſt the ſurvivor. Cro. Eliz 625. But the death ſhould be ſuggeſted. By Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. ſect. 7, the death of one plaintiff or defendant, where the action will ſurvive to, or againſt the ſurvivor, ſhall not abate the ſuit. But the death muſt be ſuggeſted on the roll. See title Abatement.

An old ſheriff omits turning over a priſoner in execution to the new ſheriff, it is ſaid to be an eſcape; ſo where there are two executions againſt a man, and in the indenture of turning over mention is made but of one, &c. 3 Rep. 71.

II. There are two kinds of eſcapes; voluntary and negligent: Voluntary, is when one arreſts another for felony, or other crime, and lets him go by conſent; in which caſe the party that permits the eſcape is eſteemed guilty of the crime committed, and muſt anſwer for it: Negligent eſcape, is when one is arreſted, and afterwards eſcapes againſt the will of him that arreſted him, or had him in cuſtody; and is not purſued by freſh ſuit, and taken again before the party purſuing hath loſt ſight of him. Cromp. Juſt. 36. And for theſe negligent eſcapes, the gaoler, &c. is to be fined. One negligent eſcape will not amount to a forfeiture of a gaoler's office, as one voluntary one will; but many negligent eſcapes will do it: and the fine for ſuffering a negligent eſcape of a perſon attainted, was by the Common law of courſe 100*l.* and in other caſes at the diſcretion of the court. 3 Lev. 288: 2 Lev. 81.—See poſt as to Eſcapes in Criminal Caſes.

If any priſoner eſcapes who was in execution, his creditors may retake him by cap. ad ſatisfac. or bring action of debt on the judgment, or a ſcire facias againſt him, &c. 1 Vent. 269: 3 Salk. 160. If a man eſcapes, with the conſent of the gaoler in a civil caſe, he cannot retake him. 3 Rep. 32, 52: 1 Sid. 330. But the plaintiff may retake him at any time. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27.

If the plaintiff permit the priſoner to eſcape, he cannot afterwards retake him; and if the body and goods, &c. of a conuſor are taken in execution upon a ſtatute-merchant, if the conuſee agree that he ſhall go at large, it is a diſcharge of the whole execution, and the conuſor ſhall have his lands again: it is otherwiſe if the ſheriff had permitted him to eſcape, the execution on the lands would not be diſcharged. 2 Nelſ. Abr. 737.

A difference is to be obſerved between permiſſive and negligent eſcapes, with reſpect to the ſheriff; for if a ſheriff ſuffer a priſoner voluntarily to go at large, the ſheriff cannot retake him even upon freſh ſuit; and if he does, the priſoner may have an action of treſpaſs againſt him. Carter 212.

An eſcape from the rules of the King's Bench priſon, without the Marſhal's knowledge, is not a voluntary eſcape. 2 Term Rep. 126.

If the marſhal of the King's Bench, or warden of the Fleet, or any other who hath the keeping of priſons in fee, ſuffer a voluntary eſcape, it is a forfeiture of the office. 3 Mod. 146: Carter 212. And there is likewiſe a farther penalty of 500*l.* added by 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. above-mentioned.

There is this difference between an eſcape on meſne proceſs and execution; if the ſheriff arreſt a perſon on meſne proceſs, and he is reſcued by J. S. he may return the reſcue, and ſuch return is good, and no action of eſcape lies againſt him after ſuch return; but the court will iſſue proceſs againſt ſuch reſcuer, or fine him; for in this caſe, though the ſheriff may, yet he is not obliged to raiſe the poſſe comitatûs. 1 Rol. Abr. 807: 1 Jon. 207: 1 Rol. Rep. 388: 3 Lev. 46. But after judgment on a capias ad ſatisfaciendum, the ſheriff cannot return a reſcue, for in ſuch caſe the ſheriff is obliged to raiſe the poſſe comitatûs, if needful, and therefore, if he return a reſcue, an action of eſcape lies, or a new capias; for the return of an ineffectual execution is as none. 1 Rol. Abr. 807: Cro. Car. 240, 255: 8 Co. 42.—See Ni. Pri. 59, 60, and 6 Rep. 51: Cro. Eliz. 868. and this Dictionary title Reſcue.

III. 1. At Common law the plaintiff had no remedy againſt the ſheriff for an eſcape, whether upon meſne proceſs, or in execution, but by ſpecial action upon the caſe. 2 Inſt. 382: 1 Show. 176: 2 Saund. 54: Hard. 30.

But now, by an equitable conſtruction of Weſtm. 2, 13 E. 1. cap. 11, action of debt is given againſt the ſheriff; and by Stat. 1 Rich. 2. cap. 12, againſt the warden of the Fleet; (which extends to all gaolers and keepers of priſons though infants or feme coverts. 2 Ind. 382;) for eſcapes in execution.

The plaintiff, at his election, may maintain either an action upon the caſe, or debt, for an eſcape in execution. Cro. Jac. 361, 533, 619: Cro. Eliz. 877: Dyer 278 b. See 1 Jon. 144; 1 Sid. 364. S. C.

If a priſoner in cuſtody upon a capias utlagatum is ſuffered to eſcape, the plaintiff may either maintain an action qui tam againſt the ſheriff, or bring an action of debt againſt him in his own right. Cro. Jac. 361, 533, 619: Cro. Eliz. 877.

An action of eſcape is not a local action, and therefore if one eſcape out of the Marſhalſea, which is in Surry, the the action may be laid in Middlesex. Dyer 278 b. See 1 Jon. 144: 1 Sid. 364. S. C.

It is usual now, on an escape on mesne process, to declare against the sheriff, &c. in case: on execution, in debt.

The distinction seems now to be thus settled —If a sheriff or gaoler suffers a prisoner, who is taken upon mesne process to escape, he is liable to an action on the case. Cro. Eliz. 625: Comb. 69.—But if, after judgment, a gaoler or sheriff permits a debtor to escape who is charged in execution for a certain sum; the debt immediately becomes his own, and he is compellable by action of debt, being for a sum liquidated and ascertained, to satisfy the creditor his whole demand. 2 Inst. 382.

In debt against the sheriff or gaoler for an escape, the jury cannot give a less sum than a creditor would have recovered against the prisoner, viz. the sum indorsed on the writ, and the legal fees of execution. 2 Term Rep. 126.

2. In this action it is not necessary to set forth all the formalities required by law in other cases. Cro. Eliz. 877: See 2 Show. 424.

Therefore, if upon a judgment obtained by the testator, the executor brings a scire facias, and has judgment, whereupon a capias ad satisfac. issues, and B. is arrested, and suffered to escape, the plaintiff, in an action against the sheriff for this escape, may declare briefly upon the judgment in the scire facias, without shewing the gradual proceedings at length, as is usually done in an action of debt upon a judgment. Carth. 148, 149: 3 Mod. 324, S. C: Cro. Eliz. 877.

So if a defendant is arrested on a special capias, founded on an original returnable in B. R. in action for his escape, it is not necessary to set forth the original.

If the plaintiff declares that he sued out a writ of execution against J. S. without setting forth any judgment, and that the defendant suffered him to escape; this is an incurable fault; for by this means he lost the benefit of pleading nul tiel record, which he might do if the plaintiff had set forth the judgment. 1 Saund. 37, 38: 1 Lev. 191. and 1 Sid. 306. S. C. See title Debt.

If A. recovers against B. as executor, and has him in execution and the sheriff suffers him to escape, the action must be brought as executor in the detinet only, and not in the debet and detinet. 1 Lutw. 893: Comb. 114: S. C.

If the plaintiff declares, that the prisoner was committed, and escaped, but does not say, prout patet per recordum; yet upon a general demurrer this shall be good; for the gist of the action was the escape, and the commitment only inducement. 2 Salk. 565: 5 Mod. 8. S. C. See 3 Lev. 393.

If in escape the plaintiff declares, that he had J. S. and his wife in execution, and that the defendant suffered them to escape, and the jury find specially, that the husband only was taken in execution (it being for a debt due from the wife before coverture) and that he escaped; this is sufficient, and the plaintiff shall have judgment; for the substance of the issue is found, though not pursuant to the declaration. 1 Sid. 5.

So in an action on the case for the escape of A. where the jury found that A. was taken by J. S. the former sheriff, and not by the defendant, the present sheriff; but finding that he was legally in his custody, and that he suffered him to escape, the plaintiff had judgment. Cro. Jac. 380.

An administratrix may maintain an action in her own name against the marshall for the escape of a prisoner in execution on a judgment obtained by her as administratrix. 2 Term Rep. 126.

Under a count for a voluntary escape, the plaintiff may give evidence of a negligent escape: and the defendant may plead a re-taking on a fresh pursuit to such count without traversing the voluntary escape. Id. Ibid.

In debt for an escape against the sheriff, the indorsement of non est inventus on the ca. sa. is sufficient evidence of its having been delivered to him. But a legal arrest must be proved in such action. Cowp. 63.

By the Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 27. sect. 12, it is enacted. "That it shall be lawful for any person, having cause of action against the warden of the Fleet prison, upon bill filed in the courts of Common Pleas or Exchequer against the warden, and a rule being given to plead thereto to be out eight days at most after filing such bill, to sign judgment against the warden, unless he plead to the bill within three days after such rule is out."

IV. If the prison takes fire, by means whereof the prisoners escape, this shall excuse the sheriff, and he may well plead it. 1 Rol. Abr. 808.

So if the prison is broke by the King's enemies, this shall excuse the sheriff, for he can have no remedy over against them. 4 Co. 84: 1 Rol. Abr. 808.

But if the prison was broke by rebels and traitors; the King's subjects, this shall not excuse him, for he may have his remedy over against these. Ibid.

When a prisoner tortiously escapes from the custody of the gaoler, he may be retaken; and the sheriff, &c. may pursue a person escaping into that or any other county; and if he retakes the prisoner on fresh pursuit before action brought, it shall excuse the sheriff, for there the prisoner shall be said to be in execution still. 3 Rep. 44: Cro. Jac. 657: 1 Jon. 144: 1 Rol. Abr. 808. And where the sheriff is to answer the debt and damages for such escape, he shall have his counter-remedy against the party escaping; and may take him at any time and place, and imprison him till he hath satisfied the sheriff as much as he hath paid to the plaintiff; or he may bring an action upon the case against the prisoner, and so relieve himself. 5 Rep. 52: Cro. Eliz. 393.

It was formely held that the sheriff, &c. might give fresh pursuit in evidence, and need not have pleaded it. See 1 Mod. 116: 1 Sid. 13.

But now, by Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 27. sect. 6. it is enacted, "That no retaking on fresh pursuit shall be given in evidence, unless the same be specially pleaded; nor shall any special plea be allowed, unless oath be first made in writing by the defendant, and filed in the proper office of the respective courts, that the prisoner for whose escape such action is brought, did, without his consent, privity or knowledge, make such escape; and if such affidavit shall at any time afterwards appear to be false, and the defendant shall be convicted thereof by due course of law, he shall forfeit the sum of 500*l*." See title Sheriff.

A voluntary return of a prisoner, after an escape, before action brought is equivalent to a re-taking on a fresh pursuit: but it must be pleaded. 2 Term Rep. 126.

(B). Next as to ESCAPES IN CRIMINAL CASES.

I. 1. What ſhall be deemed an Eſcape; 2. where it ſhall be adjudged Voluntary, and where Negligent.
II. Where the Priſoner may be re-taken after an Eſcape, and where the Eſcape is excuſed by ſuch a Re-taking; or by Killing the Priſoner, if he cannot be re-taken.
III. 1. How the Officer ſuffering an Eſcape is to be indicted, and 2. how the Eſcape is to be tried and adjudged.
IV. Of the Puniſhment of 1. voluntary, and 2. negligent Eſcapes; and 3. Of Perſons aiding and aſſiſting Priſoners to attempt their Eſcape.

I. 1. A man muſt be committed to priſon by lawful mittimus; or breach of priſon and eſcaping is not felony. If a party is committed for treaſon, to break priſon and eſcape is but felony; but if a priſoner let out traitors, it will be treaſon. H. P. C. 109: 2 Inſt. 590. Where one is impriſoned for petit larceny, or killing a man ſe defendendo, &c. to break priſon and eſcape is not felony; and if a priſon be ſet on fire, not by the privity of the priſoner he may break priſon for the ſafety of his life. 2 Inſt. 590. A gaoler refuſing to receive a perſon arreſted by the conſtable for felony, whereby he is let go, is guilty of an eſcape; but there muſt be an actual arreſt, which arreſt muſt be juſtifiable, to make an eſcape; for if it be for a ſuppoſed crime, where no crime was committed, and the party is neither indicted nor appealed, &c. it is no eſcape to ſuffer a perſon to go at large. Fitz. Coron. 224: Bro. Eſca. 27, 28. If a private perſon arreſt another for ſuſpicion of felony, he is to deliver him to a public officer, who ought to have the cuſtody of him; for if he let him go, it will be an eſcape. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. And if no officer will receive him, he is to deliver him to the townſhip where arreſted; or get him bailed.

A. a mere private man, knows B. to have committed felony, and thereupon arreſts him; he is lawfully in cuſtody of A. until he be diſcharged, by delivering him to a conſtable or common gaol; and therefore if he voluntarily ſuffers ſuch perſon to eſcape, though he were no officer, nor B. indicted, it is felony in A. But it is otherwiſe if he never takes him nor attempts it, and lets him go. 1 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 594. Juſtices of peace in their ſeſſions are empowered to inquire of eſcapes of perſons arreſted, and impriſoned for felony. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 3.

2. There can be no doubt, but that where-ever an officer, who hath the cuſtody of a priſoner, charged with and guilty of a capital offence, doth knowingly give him his liberty, with an intent to ſave him, either from his trial or execution, he is guilty of a voluntary eſcape, and thereby involved in the guilt of the ſame crime of which the priſoner was guilty and ſtood charged with. And it ſeems to be the opinion of Sir Matthew Hale, that in ſome caſes an officer may be adjudged guilty of ſuch eſcape, who hath not ſuch intent, but only means to give his priſoner that liberty which by the law he hath no colour of right to give him.

Thus, to bail a perſon not bailable by law is a negligent eſcape. Plowd. 476. And it is ſaid that the crime is equal in a juſtice of peace, for taking a felon out of priſon, without bail; or ſuffering him to go at large without committment, &c. where the offender confeſſeth the felony, as it is in the caſe of a gaoler's permiting an eſcape. Dalt. 382.

If the gaoler ſo cloſely purſue the priſoner, who flies from him, that he retake him without loſing ſight of him, the law looks on the priſoner ſo far in his power all the time, as not to adjudge ſuch a flight to amount at all to an eſcape; but if the gaoler once loſe ſight of the priſoner, and afterwards retake him, he ſeems in ſtrictneſs to be guilty of an eſcape; and à fortiori therefore, if he kill him in the purſuit, he is in like manner guilty, tho' he never loſt ſight of him, and could not otherwiſe take him, not only becauſe the King loſes the benefit he might have had from the attainder of the priſoner, by the forfeiture of his goods, &c. but alſo becauſe the public juſtice is not ſo well ſatisfied by the killing him in ſuch an extrajudicial manner. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. See poſt. Div. II.

II. It ſeems to be clearly agreed by all the books, that an officer making a freſh purſuit after a priſoner, who hath eſcaped through his negligence, may retake him at any time after, whether he find him in the ſame or in a different county. And it is ſaid generally in ſome books, that an officer who hath negligently ſuffered a priſoner to eſcape, may retake him where-ever he finds him, without mentioning any freſh purſuit; and indeed, ſince the liberty gained by the priſoner is wholly owing to his own wrong, there ſeems to be no reaſon he ſhould take any manner of advantage from it. But where a gaoler hath voluntarily ſuffered a priſoner to eſcape, it is ſaid by ſome that he can no more juſtify the retaking him, than if he had never had him in cuſtody before, becauſe by his own free conſent he hath admitted, that he hath nothing to do with him.

Wherever a priſoner, by the negligence of his keeper, gets ſo far out of his power that the keeper loſes ſight of him, the keeper is finable at the diſcretion of the court, notwithſtanding he retook him immediately after; for it ſeems agreed, that this is to be adjudged a negligent eſcape, which implies an offence, and conſequently that it muſt be puniſhable. It is true indeed, that in an action againſt a gaoler for ſuffering one arreſted in a civil action to eſcape, it is a good excuſe for the gaoler, that, before the action brought, he took the priſoner upon freſh ſuit, which is well maintained by ſhewing that he purſued him immediately after notice of the eſcape, though it were ſome hours after it, and retook him; but it does not from hence follow, that the like excuſe will ſerve for the negligent eſcape of a criminal, becauſe this is an offence againſt the publick, but the other is only a private damage to the party: neither will it be an hardſhip to the officer, to be expoſed to ſuch puniſhment as the court, in diſcretion, ſhall think fit to impoſe upon him for the negligent eſcape of a criminal, as it would be to be liable to an action of eſcape, for ſuffering a perſon in his cuſtody, in a civil action, to eſcape; for that in the former caſe the court would moderate his fine according to the circumſtances of the whole matter, and would certainly mitigate, if not wholly excuſe it, if he ſhould appear to have taken all reaſonable care: but in the other caſe, if he ſhould be liable to an action, his judgment would not lie in the diſcretion of the court, but he would be bound to pay the whole debt, for which the party was in cuſtody, if the eſcape ſhould be adjudged againſt him. However it is certain, that it will be no advantage to a gaoler to re-take his priſoner, after he has been fined for the eſcape, as is ſhown in the precedent ſection of Hawk. P. C. alſo it is clear that he cannot excuſe himſelf by killing a priſoner in the purſuit, though he could not poſſibly retake him; but muſt, in ſuch caſe, be contented to ſubmit to ſuch fine as his negligence ſhall appear to deſerve. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

III. 1. The indictment muſt expreſsly ſhew, that the party was actually in the defendant's cuſtody for a crime, action, or commitment for it; and that it is not ſufficient to ſay, that he was in the defendant's cuſtody, and charged with ſuch a crime; for that a perſon in cuſtody may be ſo charged, and yet not be in cuſtody by reaſon of ſuch charge: and it ſeems alſo, that every ſuch indictment muſt expreſsly ſhew that the priſoner went at large. Alſo it ſeems neceſſary, to ſhew the time when the offence was committed, for which the party was in cuſtody, not only that it may appear, that it was prior to the eſcape, but alſo that it was ſubſequent to the laſt general pardon. Alſo it ſeems clear, that every indictment for a voluntary eſcape muſt alledge that the defendant felonicè & voluntariè A. B. ad largum ire permiſit; and muſt alſo ſhew the ſpecies of the crime for which the party was impriſoned; for it is not ſufficient to ſay in general, that he was in cuſtody for felony, &c.

The crime of the priſoner eſcaping, for which the gaoler is anſwerable, muſt be ſuch as it was at the time of the eſcape; as where a perſon is commited for dangerouſly wounding another, it is treſpaſs only, and not felony, till the party wounded is dead: and he who ſuffers another to eſcape who was in cuſtody for felony, cannot be arraigned for ſuch eſcape as for felony, until the principal is attainted, but he may be indicted and tried for miſpriſion before the attainder of the principal. And in high treaſon it is ſaid the eſcape is immediately puniſhable, whether the party eſcaping be ever convicted or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. See poſt. IV. 1.

2. Where perſons, being preſent in a court of record, are committed to priſon by ſuch court, the keeper of the gaol is bound to have them always ready, whenever the court ſhall demand them of him; and if he ſhall fail to produce them at ſuch demand, the court will adjudge him guilty of an eſcape, without any further inquiry, unleſs he have ſome reaſonable matter to alledge in his excuſe; as that the priſon was ſet on fire, or broke open by enemies, &c. for he ſhall be concluded, by the record of the commitment, to deny that the priſoners were in his cuſtody. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

As to other priſoners who are not ſo committed, but are in the cuſtody of a gaoler, ſheriff, conſtable, or other perſon, by any other means whatſoever, it ſeems agreed, that the perſon who has them in cuſtody is in no caſe puniſhable for their eſcape, except in ſome ſpecial caſes, until it be preſented; for by Stat. Weſt. 1. c. 3, it is enacted that "Nothing be demanded nor taken, nor levied by the ſheriff, nor by any other, for the eſcape of a thief, or felon, until it be judged for an eſcape by the juſtices in eyre; and that he who does otherwiſe, ſhall reſtore to him or them that have paid it, as much as he or they have taken or received, and as much alſo unto the King."

It hath been adjudged, that this ſtatute reſtrains not the court of King's Bench from receiving ſuch preſentments; for that its juriſdiction includes in it that of juſtices in eyre, and this court is itſelf the higheſt court of eyre. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

It is farther enacted by Stat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 14, "That the eſcape of thieves and felons, and the chattels of felons, and of fugitives, and alſo eſcapes of clerks convicts, out of their ordinary's priſon, from thenceforth to be judged before any of the King's juſtices, ſhall be levied from time to time, as they ſhall fall, as well of the time paſt as time to come." By which it ſeems to be implied, that other juſtices, as well as thoſe in eyre, may take cogniſance of eſcapes; and it is certain, that juſtices of gaol-delivery may puniſh juſtices of peace for a negligent eſcape, in admitting perſons to bail, who are not bailable. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

And it is farther enacted, by Stat. 1 Rich. 3 cap. 3, "That juſtices of peace ſhall have authority to inquire, in their ſeſſions, of all manner of eſcapes of every perſon arreſted and impriſoned for felony."

Wherever an eſcape is finable, the preſentment of it is traverſable; but where the offence is amerciable only, there the preſentment is of itſelf concluſive; ſuch amercements being reckoned among thoſe minima de quibus non curat lex; and this diſtinction ſeems to be well warranted by the old books. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

IV. 1. A voluntary eſcape amounts to the ſame kind of crime, and is puniſhable in the ſame degree, as the offence of which the party was guilty, and for which he was in cuſtody, whether it be treaſon, felony, or treſpaſs; and whether the perſon eſcaping were actually committed to ſome gaol, or under an arreſt only, and not committed; and whether he were attainted, or only accuſed of ſuch crime, and neither indicted nor appealed: and it is ſaid to be no excuſe of ſuch eſcape, that the priſoner had been acquitted on an indictment of death, and only committed till the year and day be paſſed, to give the widow or heir of the deceaſed, an opportunity of bringing their appeal, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

But the officer cannot be thus puniſhed till the original delinquent hath actually received judgment, or been attainted upon verdict, confeſſion, or outlawry of the crime for which he was ſo committed or arreſted: otherwiſe it might happen that the officer might be puniſhed for treaſon or felony, and the perſon arreſted and eſcaping might be acquitted of the charge againſt him. But, before the conviction of the principal party, the officer thus neglecting his duty may be fined and impriſoned for a miſdemeanor. 1 Hal. P. C. 588, 9: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

Alſo ſuch an eſcape, ſuffered by one who wrongfully takes upon him the keeping of a gaol, ſeems to be puniſhable in the ſame manner as if he were never ſo rightfully intitled to ſuch cuſtody; for that the crime is in both caſes of the very ſame ill conſequence to the public; and there ſeems to be no reaſon that a wrongful officer ſhould have greater favour than a rightful, and that for no other reaſon, but becauſe he is a wrongful one. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

Alſo if the warrant of a committment do plainly and expreſsly charge the party with treaſon or felony, but in ſome other reſpect be not ſtrictly formal, yet it ſeems, that that it may be probably argued, that the gaoler ſuffering an eſcape, is as much puniſhable, as if the warrant were perfectly right. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

None ſhall ſuffer capitally for the crime of another; ſo that a principal gaoler is only finable for a voluntary eſcape ſuffered by his deputy. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

2. Whoever de facto occupies the office of gaoler is liable to anſwer for a negligent eſcape; and it is no way material whether his title to the office be legal or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. A ſheriff is as much liable to anſwer for an eſcape ſuffered by his bailiff, as if he had actually ſuffered it himſelf, and the court may charge either the ſheriff or bailiff for ſuch an eſcape; and if a deputy gaoler be not ſufficient to anſwer a negligent eſcape, his principal muſt anſwer for him; but if the gaoler who ſuffers an eſcape, have an eſtate for life, or years in the office, it is not agreed how far he in reverſion is liable to be puniſhed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

Wherever a perſon is found guilty, upon an indictment, or preſentment, of a negligent eſcape of a criminal actually in his cuſtody, he ought to be condemned in a certain ſum to be paid to the King, which ſeems moſt properly to be called a Fine.

It hath been holden, that a negligent eſcape may be pardoned by the King before it happens, but that a voluntary one cannot ſo be pardoned. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

And it ſeems by the Common law, the penalty for ſuffering the negligent eſcape of a perſon attainted, was of courſe 100*l.* and for ſuffering ſuch eſcape of a perſon indicted, and not attainted, was 5*l.* but if the perſon eſcaping were neither attainted nor indicted, it ſeems that it was left to the diſcretion of the court to aſſeſs ſuch a reaſonable forfeiture as ſhould ſeem proper; and if the party had twice eſcaped, it ſeems, that the penalties above mentioned were of courſe to be doubled; yet it ſeems, that the forfeiture was to be no greater for ſuffering a priſoner, committed on two ſeveral accuſations, to eſcape, than if he had been committed but on one. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19.

As to the manner offences of this kind are puniſhable by ſtatute, it is recited by Stat. 5 Ed. 3. c. 8, "That perſons indicted of felonies in times paſt, had removed the indictments before the King and there yielded themſelves, and by the marſhals of the King's Bench had been incontinently let to bail, and after had done many evil deeds. &c." And thereupon it is enacted, "That if any ſuch priſoner be found wandering out of priſon, by bail, or without bail, and that he be found at the King's ſuit, or at the ſuit of the party, the marſhal which ſhall be found thereof guilty, ſhall have half a year's impriſonment, and be ranſomed at the King's will; and the juſtices ſhall thereof make inquiry when they ſee time; and as to the marſhals, it ſhall be done within the verge that which reaſon will. And in caſe that the marſhals ſuffer by their aſſent ſuch priſoners to eſcape, they ſhall be at law, as before the time of the ſtatute they had been. And the King intendeth not by this ſtatute to loſe the eſcape, where he ought to have the ſame."

Alſo it is enacted by Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 10. "That every ſheriff have the cuſtody of the King's common gaols, during the time of his office, except all gaols whereof any perſon or perſons have the keeping of eſtate of inheritance.—And that all letters patent made for term of life, or years, of the keeping of the ſaid gaols, &c. ſhall be annulled and void."—The penalties for eſcapes inflicted by the ſubſequent part of this ſtatute, have been expired above 200 years. See Ruffhead's Statutes: 1 Burn's Juſt. and Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 20. § 35. p. 207.

3. By Stat. 16 Geo. 2. c. 31, It is enacted, That perſons who any ways aſſiſt a priſoner, committed for treaſon, or felony, to attempt his eſcape from any gaol, ſhall be adjudged guilty of felony and be tranſported; and if the priſoner be committed for any other crime; or upon proceſs for 100*l.* debt, &c. the offenders are liable to fine and impriſonment. And where any perſon conveys any arms, inſtrument or diſguiſe, to a priſoner in gaol for felony, &c. or for his uſe, in order to an eſcape, it is likewiſe felony and tranſportation. Alſo if one aſſiſt any priſoner to eſcape from any conſtable, or other officer or perſon in whoſe cuſtody he is, by virtue of a warrant of commitment for felony, it is declared to be the like offence.

See alſo Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. § 5: 24 Geo. 3. c. 56; where to aſſiſt felons convict to make their eſcape from the perſons to whom they are delivered to be tranſported is felony without clergy. See 3 P. Wms. 439.

The indictment on the above Stat. 16 Geo. 2. c. 31, muſt ſtate that the inſtruments were conveyed to the priſoner, with a deſign to effectuate his eſcape. But no indictment can be maintained on this ſtatute for contributing to the eſcape of a priſoner committed on ſuſpicion only. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 21. § 11.

See further, relative to this ſubject of aſſiſting priſoners to eſcape, this Dict. title Reſcue: and 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 21.

See further as connected with the general ſubject of Eſcape, titles Priſon-breaking, Priſoner.

ESCAPE-WARRANT. If any perſon committed or charged in cuſtody in the King's Bench or Fleet priſon, in execution, or on meſne proceſs, &c. go at large; on oath thereof before a judge of the court where the action was brought, an eſcape-warrant ſhall be granted, directed to all ſheriffs, &c. throughout England, to retake the priſoner, and commit him to gaol where taken, there to remain till the debt is ſatisfied: and a perſon may be taken on a Sunday upon an eſcape-warrant. Stat. 1 Ann. c. 6. And the judges of the reſpective courts may grant warrants, upon oath to be made before perſons commiſſioned by them to take affidavits in the country, (ſuch oath being firſt filed) as they might do upon oath made before themſelves. 5 Ann. c. 9.

A ſheriff ought not to receive a perſon taken on eſcape-warrant, &c. from any but an officer; not from the rabble, &c. which is illegal. 3 Salk. 149. A perſon being arreſted and carried to Newgate by virtue of an eſcape-warrant, moved to be diſcharged, becauſe he ſaid he was abroad by a day-rule when taken; but it appearing by affidavit, that he was taken upon the eſcape-warrant before the court of B. R. ſat that morning, they refuſed to ſet him at liberty. 2 Ld. Raym. 927.

ESCHEAT. Eſcaeta: from the old French eſcheoir to fall, or happen.] The caſual deſcent, in the nature of forfeiture, of lands and tenements within his manor to a lord; either on failure of iſſue of the tenant dying ſeiſed, or on account of the felony of ſuch tenant. See this Dict. title Tenure, II. 7: and 2 Comm. 251—256.

By attainder, for treaſon or other felony, the blood of the perſon attainted is ſo corrupted, as to be rendered no longer inheritable. Great care muſt be taken to diſtinguiſh between forfeiture of lands to the King, and this ſpecies of eſcheat to the lord; which, by reaſon of their ſimilitude in ſome circumſtances, and becauſe the crown is very frequently the immediate lord of the fee, and therefore entitled to both, have been often confounded together. But in fact eſcheat operates in ſubordination to this more antient and ſuperior law of forfeiture. 2 Inſt. 64: Salk. 85: See title Forfeiture; Tenure.

The doctrine of eſcheat upon attainder, taken ſingly, is this; that the blood of the tenant, by the commiſſion of any felony; (under which denomination all treaſons were formerly compriſed. 3 Inſt. 15: ſt. 25 Ed. 3. c. 2. § 12;) is corrupted and ſtained, and the original donation of the feud is thereby determined. Upon the thorough demonſtration of which guilt, by legal attainder, the feudal covenant and mutual bond of fealty are held to be broken, the eſtate inſtantly falls back from the offender to the lord of the fee, and the inheritable quality of his blood is extinguiſhed and blotted out for ever. In conſequence of which corruption and extinction of hereditary blood, the land of all felons would immediately reveſt in the lord, but that the ſuperior law of forfeiture intervenes, and intercepts it in it's paſſage; in caſe of treaſon for ever, in caſe of other felony, for only a year and a day. 2 Inſt. 36: See title Tenure II. 7.

It has been holden, that a ſaving againſt the corruption of blood in a ſtatute concerning felony, doth by conſequence ſave the land to the heir, ſo as not to eſcheat; becauſe the eſcheat to the lord for felony is only pro defectu tenentis, occaſioned by the corruption of blood: but it hath been adjudged, that a ſaving againſt the corruption of blood, in a ſtatute concerning treaſon, doth not ſave the land to the heir: for in treaſon the land goes to the King by way of immediate forfeiture. 3 Inſt. 47: 1 Salk. 85.

Inheritances of things not lying in tenure, as of rents, commons, &c. cannot eſcheat to the lord, becauſe there is no tenure: nor deſcend, by reaſon the blood is corrupted: though they are forfeited to the King by an attainder of treaſon, and the profits of them ſhall be alſo forfeited to the King on attainder of felony, during the life of the offender; and after his death it is ſaid the inheritance ſhall be extinguiſhed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 49. which ſee.

In caſes of eſcheat, the blood of the tenant being utterly corrupted and extinguiſhed, it follows, not only that all that he has at the time of his offence committed ſhall eſcheat from him, but alſo that he ſhall be incapable of inheriting any thing for the future. This farther illuſtrates the diſtinction between forfeiture and eſcheat. If therefore a father be ſeiſed in fee, and the ſon commits treaſon and is attainted, and then the father dies: the land ſhall eſcheat to the lord, becauſe the ſon by the corruption of his blood, is incapable to be heir, and there can be no other heir during his life, but nothing ſhall be forfeited to the King, for the ſon never had any intereſt in the lands to forfeit. Co. Litt. 13. In this caſe the eſcheat operates, and not the forfeiture; but in the following inſtance the forfeiture works, and not the eſcheat. As where a new felony is created by act of parliament, and it is provided (as is frequently the caſe) that it ſhall not extend to corruption of blood: here the lands of the felon ſhall not eſcheat to the lord, but yet the profits of them ſhall be forfeited to the King for a year and a day, and ſo long after as the offender lives. 3 Inſt. 47. See titles Attainder; Forfeiture.

Huſband and wife, tenants in ſpecial tail; the huſband is attained of treaſon and executed, leaving iſſue; on the death of the wife the lands ſhall eſcheat, becauſe the iſſue in tail ought to make his conveyance by father and mother, and from the father he cannot by reaſon of the attainder. Dyer 322. If tenant in fee-ſimple is attainted of treaſon, and executed, upon his death the fee is veſted in the King, without office found; yet he muſt bring a ſcire facias againſt the tertenants; lands ſhall never eſcheat to a lord of whom they are holden, until office found. 3 Rep. 10.

Eſcheat ſeldom happens to the lord for want of an heir to an eſtate; but when it doth, before the lord enters, the homage jury of the lord's court ought to preſent it. 2 Inſt. 36. Land ſhall eſcheat to the lord, where heirs are born after attainder of felony, 3 Rep. 40. Though if the King pardons a felon before conviction, the lord ſhall not have his lands by eſcheat; for the lord hath no title before attainder. Owen 87: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 744. If on appeal of death or other felony, proceſs is awarded againſt the party, and pending the proceſs he conveyeth away the land, and after is outlawed, the conveyance is good to defeat the lord of his eſcheat: but if where a perſon is indicted of felony, pending the proceſs againſt him, he conveys away his land, and afterwards is outlawed, the conveyance ſhall not prevent the lord of his eſcheat. Co. Lit. 13. See further this Dict. titles Attainder; Corruption of Blood; Forfeiture.

As a conſequence of this doctrine of eſcheat, all lands of inheritance immediately reveſting in the lord, the wife of the felon was liable to loſe her dower, till the Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12: and ſtill by Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 11, the wife of one attaint of high treaſon ſhall not be endowed. See title Dower.

There is one ſingular inſtance in which lands held in fee-ſimple are not liabe to eſcheat to the lord, even when their owner is no more, and hath left no heirs to inherit them. And this is the caſe of a Corporation; for if that comes by any accident to be diſſolved, the donor or his heirs ſhall have the land again in reverſion, and not the lord by the eſcheat; which is perhaps the only inſtance where a reverſion can be expectant on a grant in fee ſimple abſolute. See title Corporation.

ESCHEATOR, eſcaetor.] Was an officer appointed by the Lord Treaſurer, &c. in every county, to make inqueſts of titles by eſcheat; which inqueſts were to be taken by good and lawful men of the county, impanelled by the ſheriff. Stats. 14 Ed. 3. c. 8: 34 Ed. 3. c. 13: 8 H. 6. c. 16. Theſe eſcheators found offices after the death of the King's tenants, tenants, who held by knight-ſervice, or otherwiſe of the King; and certified their inquiſitions into the Exchequer; and Fitzherbert called them officers of record. F. N. B. 100. No eſcheator could continue in his office above one year: and whereas before the ſtatute of Weſtm. 1. c. 24, Eſcheators, ſheriffs, &c. would ſeize into the King's hands the freehold of the ſubjects, and thereby diſſeiſe them; by this act it is provided that no ſeizure can be made of lands or tenements into the King's hands, before office found. 2 Inſt. 206. And no lands can be granted before the King's title is found by inquiſition. Stat. 18 H. 6. c. 6. The office of eſcheator is an ancient office, and was formerly of great uſe to the crown; but having its chief dependance on the court of wards, which is taken away by act of parliament, it is now in a manner out of date. 4 Inſt. 225. There was anciently an officer called Eſcheator of the Jews. Clauſ. 4 Ed. 1. m. 7.

ESPOUSALS, ſponſalia.] Are a contract or mutual promiſe between a man and a woman to marry each other; and where marriages may be conſummated, eſpouſals go before them. Marriage or matrimony is ſaid to be an eſpouſal de præſenti, and a conjunction of man and woman in a conſtant ſociety. Wood's Inſt. 57. See title Marriage.

ESQUIRE. from the Fr. Eſcu. and the Lat. Scutum, in Greek σκυτος which ſignifies an hide of which ſhields were anciently made and afterwards covered.] An Eſquire was originally he who attending a knight in the time of war, did carry his ſhield, whence he was called Eſcuier in French, and Scutifer or Armiger, (i. e. armour-bearer) in Latin.

Hotoman ſaith, that thoſe whom the French call Eſquires were a military kind of vaſſals, having jus ſcuti, viz. liberty to bear a ſhield, and in it the enſigns of their family, in token of their gentility or dignity: but this addition hath not now for a long time had any relation to the office or employment of the perſon to whom it hath been attributed, as to carrying of arms, &c. but has been merely a title of dignity, and next in degree to a knight.

A ſheriff of a county being a ſuperior officer, retains the title of Eſquire during his life; in reſpect of the great truſt he has in the common-wealth. The chief of ſome ancient families are eſquires by preſcription. Blount.

Eſquires and Gentlemen are confounded together by Sir Edward Coke, 2 Inſt. 668. He there obſerves that every Eſquire is a Gentleman, and a gentleman is defined to be one qui arma gerit, who bears coat armour; the grant of which adds gentility to a man's family. It is indeed a matter ſomewhat unſettled what conſtitutes the diſtinction, or who is a real Eſquire; for it is not an eſtate, however large, that confers this rank upon its owner. Camden who was himſelf a herald, diſtinguiſhes them the moſt accurately. And he reckons up four ſorts of them. 1. The eldeſt ſons of knights, and their eldeſt ſons in perpetual ſucceſſion. 2. The eldeſt ſons of younger ſons of peers, and their eldeſt ſons in like perpetual ſucceſſion; both which ſpecies of eſquires Spelman calls armigeri natalitii; as he denominates the ſons themſelves of peers armigeri honorarii.—3. Eſquires created by the King's letters patent or other inveſtiture, and their eldeſt ſons; ſee poſt Eſquires of the King. 4. Eſquires by virtue of their offices; as juſtices of the peace and others who bear any office of truſt under the crown: [if ſtiled Eſquires by the King in their commiſſions and appointments.] To theſe may be added eſquires of Knights of the Bath, each of whom conſtitutes three at his inſtallation; and all foreign, nay Iriſh peers; for not only theſe but even the eldeſt ſons of peers of Great Britain, though frequently titular lords, are only eſquires in law, and muſt ſo be named in all legal proceedings.—Barriſters at law ſeem alſo now in full poſſeſſion of the title of Eſquire, though originally, as it ſhould ſeem, attained by uſurpation; and being perhaps nearly the ſame kind of unneceſſary addition to their ſuperior degree, as if it were to be annexed or prefixed to that of M. A. or L. L. D.

The Court of C. P. however refuſed to hear an affidavit read, becauſe a Barriſter named in it was not called Eſquire. 1 Wilſ. 224.—See 1 Comm. 406; and the notes there. Spelm. Gloſſ. 43. and this Dict. title Precedency.

ESQUIRES OF THE KING. Are ſuch who have the title by creation: theſe, when they are created, have put about their necks a collar of S. S. and a pair of ſilver ſpurs is beſtowed on them: and they were wont to bear before the Prince in war, a ſhield or lance. There are four eſquires of the King's body, to attend on his Majeſty's perſon. Camd. 111.—Theſe are now diſuſed.

ESSENDI QUIETUM DE TOLONIO. A writ to be quit of toll; it lies for citizens and burgeſſes of any city or town that by charter or preſcription ought to be exempted from toll, where the ſame is exacted of them. Reg. Orig. 258. See titles Toll; Corporation; London.

ESSOIGN or ESSOIN. Eſſonium, Fr. Eſſoine.] An excuſe for him that is ſummoned to appear and anſwer to an action, or to perform ſuit to a court baron, &c. by reaſon of ſickneſs and infirmity, or other juſt cauſe of abſence. It is a kind of imparlance, or craving of a longer time, that lies in real, perſonal and mixed actions: and the plaintiff as well as the defendant ſhall be eſſoigned to ſave his default. Co. Litt. 131. For the mode of entring an Eſſoin, See Raſt. 520.

The cauſes that ſerve to eſſoin, and the eſſoins are divers under theſe heads. 1. Eſſoin de ultra mare whereby the defendant ſhall have forty days. 2. De terrâ ſanctâ, where defendant ſhall have a year and a day. 3. De malo veniendi, which is likewiſe called the common eſſoin. 4. De malo lecti, wherein the defendant may by writ be viewed by four knights. 5. De ſervitio Regis: Bract. lib. 5: Britton, cap. 122: Fleta. lib. 6. And beſides the common eſſoign de malo veniendi, i. e. by falling ſick in coming to the court, and other eſſoins abovementioned, there were ſeveral other excuſes, to ſave a default in real actions; as conſtraint of enemies, the falling among thieves, floods of water, and breaking down of bridges, &c. 2 Co. Inſt. 125.

After iſſue joined in dower, quare impedit, &c. one eſſoin only ſhall be allowed. Stat. 52 H. 3. c. 13. And in writs of aſſiſe, attaints, &c. after the tenant hath appeared, he ſhall not be eſſoined; but the inqueſt ſhall be taken by default. St. 3 Ed. 1. c. 42. Eſſoin ultra mare will not be allowed, if the tenant be within the four ſeas; but it ſhall be turned to a default, c. 44. There is no eſſoin permitted for an appellant. St. 13 Ed. 1. c. 28. Nor doth eſſoin lie where any judgment is given; or the party is diſtrained by his lands; the ſheriff is commanded to make him appear; after the party is ſeen in court, &c. 12 Ed. 2. ſt. 2.

An eſſoin de ſervitio Regis lies not when the party is a woman; in a writ of dower; where the party hath an attorney in his ſuit, &c. Ibid. The eſſoign day in court is regularly the firſt day of the term; but the fourth day after is allowed of favour. 1 Lill. 540, 569: 1 Inſt. 135.

A corporation is not entitled to an eſſoin. And the court diſcourages eſſoins, and will be glad to uſe any means to prevent ſuch delay of the defendant. 2 Term Rep. 16: 2 Wilſ. 164.—An eſſoin lies not on a capias to arreſt; and the plaintiff may declare and ſign judgment, if no plea. 2 Str. 1194.

ESSOIN DAY OF THE TERM. The firſt return in every term, is, properly ſpeaking, the firſt day in that term: And thereon the court ſits to take eſſoins, or excuſes for ſuch as do not appear according to the ſummons of the writ: wherefore this is uſually called the eſſoin day of the term. But the perſon ſummoned hath three days' grace, beyond the return of the writ in which to make his appearance, and if he appears on the fourth day inclusive, the quarto die poſt, it is ſufficient. 3 Comm. 277: See title Term.

ESSOIN DE MALO VILLÆ. Is when the defendant is in court the firſt day; but gone without pleading, and being afterwards ſurpriſed by ſickneſs, &c. cannot attend, but ſends two eſſoiners, who openly proteſt in court that he is detained by ſickneſs in ſuch a village that he cannot come, pro lucrari & pro perdere; and this will be admitted, for it lies on the plaintiff to prove whether the eſſoin is true or not.

ESTATE.

Fr. Eſtat. Lat. Status.] That title or intereſt which a man hath in lands or tenements, &c.

An Eſtate in lands, tenements and hereditaments, (ſays Blackſtone) ſignifies ſuch intereſt as the tenant hath therein; ſo that if a man grants all his eſtate in Dale to A. and his heirs, every thing that he can poſſibly grant ſhall paſs thereby. Co. Litt. 345. It ſignifies the [ſtate] condition, or circumſtance, in which the owner ſtands, with regard to his property. And, to aſcertain this with preciſion and accuracy, eſtates may be conſidered in a threefold view: firſt, with regard to the quantity of intereſt which the tenant has in the tenement; ſecondly, with regard to the time at which that quantity of intereſt is to be enjoyed; and, thirdly, with regard to the number and connections of the tenants.

Firſt with regard to the quantity of intereſt which the tenant has in the tenement, this is meaſured by its duration and extent. Thus, either his right of poſſeſſion is to ſubſiſt for an uncertain period, during his own life, or the life of another man; to determine at his own deceaſe, or to remain to his deſcendants after him; or it is circumſcribed within a certain number of years, months, or days; or, laſtly, it is infinite and unlimited, being veſted in him and his repreſentatives for ever. And this occaſions the primary diviſion of eſtates, into ſuch as are freehold, and ſuch as are leſs than freehold.

An

ESTATE.

An eſtate of freehold, liberum tenementum, or frank-tenement, is defined by Britton c. 32, to be "the poſſeſſion of the ſoil by a freeman." And St. Germyn, (Dr. & Stud. b. 2. d. 22,) tells us "that the poſſeſſion of the land is called in the law of England the frank-tenement, or freehold." Such eſtate therefore, and no other, as requires actual poſſeſſion of the land, is legally ſpeaking freehold: which actual poſſeſſion can, by the courſe of the Common-law, be only given by the ceremony called livery of ſeiſin, which is the ſame as the feodal inveſtiture. And from theſe principles we may extract this deſcription of a freehold; that it is ſuch an eſtate in lands as is conveyed by livery of ſeiſin; or, in tenements of an incorporeal nature, by what is equivalent thereto. And accordingly it is laid down by Littleton § 59, that where a freehold ſhall paſs, it behoveth to have livery of ſeiſin. As therefore eſtates of inheritance and eſtates for life could not by Common-law be conveyed without livery of ſeiſin, theſe are properly eſtates of freehold; and, as no other eſtates were conveyed with the ſame ſolemnity, therefore no others are properly freehold eſtates. 2 Comm. 103, 4.

Mr. Chriſtian, in his note on the above paſſage ſays; a freehold eſtate, ſeems to be any eſtate of inheritance, or for life, in either a corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, exiſting in or ariſing from real property of free tenure; that is, now, of all which is not copyhold. The learned Commentator himſelf has elſewhere informed us, that "tithes and ſpiritual dues are freehold eſtates, whether the land out of which they iſſue are bond or free; being a ſeparate and diſtinct inheritance from the lands themſelves." And, in this view, they muſt be diſtinguiſhed and excepted from other incorporeal hereditaments, iſſuing out of lands, as rents, &c. which in general will follow the nature of their principal, and cannot be freehold, unleſs the ſtock from which they ſpring be freehold alſo. 1 Blackſt. Tracts, 116.

Eſtates of freehold, may then be conſidered, either as eſtates of inheritance, or eſtates not of inheritance.—The former are again divided into inheritances abſolute, otherwiſe called fee-ſimple, and inheritances limited; one ſpecies of which is uſually called fee-tail.

As to eſtates and tenants in fee-ſimple, See this Dict. titles Fee, and Fee-ſimple.

Limited fees, or ſuch eſtates of inheritance as are clogged and confined with conditions or qualifications of any ſort may be divided into two kinds. 1. Qualified or baſe fees. 2. Fees conditional, ſo called at the Common-law; and afterwards fees-tail in conſequence of the ſtatute de donis. As to theſe latter ſee this Dict. titles Tail and Fee-Tail.—A baſe or qualified Fee is ſuch a one as has a qualification ſubjoined thereto, and which muſt be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. As in the caſe of a grant to A. and his heirs tenants of the manor of Dale; in this inſtance whenever the heirs of A. ceaſe to be tenants of that manor, the grant is entirely defeated.—This eſtate is a fee, becauſe by poſſibility it may endure for ever in a man and his heirs; yet as that donation depends upon the concurrence of collateral circumſtances which qualify and debaſe the purity of the donation, it is therefore a qualified or baſe fee. 2 Comm. 109. See 1 Inſt. 27.

Of eſtates of freehold, not of inheritance but, for life only, ſome may be called conventional, as being expreſsly created by the act of the parties; others are merely legal, or created by conſtruction and operation of law. As to eſtates for life expreſsly created by deed or grant, ſee this Dict. title Life Eſtate.—As to the eſtate of tenant in tail after poſſibility of iſſue extinct, ſee titles Tail and Fee-Tail.—As to tenant by the Curteſy and tenant in Dower, ſee thoſe titles.

Of eſtates leſs than freehold there are three ſorts; 1. Eſtates for years: 2. Eſtates at will: as to both which ſee this Dict. title Leaſe: 3. Eſtates by ſufferance: as to which ſee this Dict. title Sufferance.

Beſides theſe ſeveral diviſions of eſtates, in point of intereſt, another ſpecies may be mentioned, viz. Eſtates upon condition; as to which ſee at large title Condition; and titles Mortgage; Statute Merchant; Statute-Staple; Elegit.

According to the above diviſion Eſtates are conſidered ſolely with regard to their duration or the quantity of intereſt which the owners have therein. With regard to the time of their enjoyment, when the actual receipt of the rents and profits begins, Eſtates may be conſidered as either in poſſeſſion or expectancy;—Of expectancies, there are two ſorts; one created by the act of the parties, called a Remainder; the other by act of law, called a Reverſion.—Of eſtates in poſſeſſion, (which are ſometimes called eſtates executed, whereby a preſent intereſt paſſes to and abides in the tenant, not depending on any ſubſequent circumſtance or contingency, as in the caſes of eſtates executory) little or nothing is to be peculiarly obſerved; all the eſtates already ſpoken of, and treated of under the titles referred to, are of this kind. But the doctrine of eſtates in expectancy, contains ſome of the niceſt and moſt abſtruſe learning in the Engliſh law.—And as to ſo much of it as relates to Remainders and Reverſions, ſee this Dict. under thoſe titles, and titles Executory Deviſe; Limitation.

Eſtates, with regard to the certainty and the time of the enjoyment of them, are diſtinguiſhed by Fearne in the introduction to his Eſſay on Contingent Remainders and Executory Deviſes, into. 1. Eſtates veſted in poſſeſſion. 2. Eſtates veſted in intereſt; as reverſions; veſted remainders; ſuch executory deviſes, future uſes, conditional limitations and other future intereſts as are not referred to, or made to depend on, a period or event that is uncertain. 3. Eſtates contingent; as Contingent Remainders; and ſuch executory deviſes, future uſes, conditional limitations and other future intereſts as are referred to, or made to depend on an event that is uncertain.—An eſtate is veſted, when there is an immediate fixed right of preſent or future enjoyment.—An eſtate is veſted in poſſeſſion, when there exiſts a right of preſent enjoyment.—An eſtate is veſted in intereſt when there is a preſent fixed right of future enjoyment.—An eſtate is contingent when a right of enjoyment is to accrue, on an event which is dubious and uncertain.

With reſpect to the number and connections of their owners, the tenants who occupy and hold them, Eſtates of any quantity or length of duration, whether in actual poſſeſſion or expectancy may be held in four different ways; in ſeveralty; in joint tenancy; in coparcenary; in common.—He that holds lands in ſeveralty, or is ſole tenant thereof, is he that holds them in his own right only, without any other being joined or connected with him in point of intereſt during his eſtate therein. This is the moſt common and uſual way of holding an eſtate; and all eſtates are ſuppoſed to be of this ſort, unleſs unleſs where they are expreſsly declared to be otherwiſe; and in laying down general rules and doctrines, they are uſually applied to ſuch eſtates as are held in ſeveralty. As to eſtates in joint-tenancy, in coparcenary and in common, ſee titles Joint-tenants: Parceners.

As to the title to eſtates, ſee this Dict. Title; and the references there; and as to the different nature of eſtates according to their ſeveral tenures, ſee this Dict. tit. Tenure.

Eſtates are acquired divers ways, viz. by deſcent from a father to the ſon, &c. Conveyance, or grant from one man to another; by gift or purchaſe; deed or will: And a fee-ſimple is the largeſt eſtate that can be in law. 1 Lil. 541.

Eſtates are real, of lands, &c. or perſonal, of goods or chattels; otherwiſe diſtinguiſhed into freeholds, that deſcend to the heir, and chattels which go to the executors: Some eſtates are made by the words of deeds, and others made by law; as an eſtate in frank-marriage given to a couſin, makes a gift in tail.

Alſo there is an eſtate that is implied, where tenant in tail bargains and ſells his land to a man and his heirs; by this he hath an eſtate deſcendible, and determinable upon the death of the tenant in tail. Co. Lit: 10 Rep. 97. If I give lands in Dale to a certain perſon for life, and after to his heirs or right heirs, he hath the fee ſimple; and if it be to his heirs males, he will have an eſtate-tail. 1 Rep. 66. A man grants to one and his heirs and aſſigns for his life, and a year over; this is an eſtate for life only. 39 E. 3. 25: Lit. 46. If a leaſe be made, and not expreſſed for what number of years, it is an eſtate at will. 2 Shep. Abr. 81.

The word eſtate generally in deeds, grants, and conveyances, comprehends the whole in which the party hath an intereſt or property, and will paſs the ſame. 3 Mod. 46. A perſon in poſſeſſion of an eſtate mortgaged in fee, by will gave it to his two daughters, and their heirs; one of them married, and then died: And it being a queſtion, whether her ſhare ſhould be held real or perſonal eſtate, and go to the heir, or her huſband adminiſtrator? It was adjudged for the heir; for here the mortgaged lands ſhall deſcend as other lands of inheritance, and be ſubject to the ſame rules. Preced. Canc. 266. In ſuch caſe, if the mortgage in fee be paid off, the money ſhall be conſidered as land, and belong to his heirs, as the eſtate in the land would have done. Ibid. See title Mortgage.

Perſonal eſtate was deviſed by a man to his wife for life, and what ſhe left at her death to be divided between his kindred: He died, and the widow married again; this deviſe over was held good in equity, on a bill brought to have an inventory taken of the eſtate, and ſecurity given not to imbezzle it. But if the ſame were of ſmall value, that the widow could not live thereupon, without ſpending the ſtock, it would be otherwiſe. See titles Will; Executory Deviſe.

How far the Acceptance of one Eſtate ſhall deſtroy another.

If a leſſee for term of twenty years, accepts of a leaſe of the ſame land for ten years, by the leſſee's acceptance of the new leaſe, the term of twenty years is determined in law. 2 Roll. Abr. 469.

Leaſe for years to R. B. rendering rent; the next year a leaſe was made of the ſame lands to the lady P. for ninety-nine years; the next year the ſame lands were demiſed to the ſaid R. B. for forty-one years, who accepted the leaſe, but that did not extinguiſh his firſt leaſe; becauſe the leſſor by making the intermediate leaſe to the lady P. had only a reverſion, and could not afterwards give any intereſt to R. B. But if it had not been for this intermediate leaſe, then the acceptance of the ſecond leaſe for forty-one years had been a ſurrender of the firſt. Hutt. 104.

If a man hath a leaſe for years, which is good in law, and afterwards accepts a new leaſe of the ſame lands, which is void in law, this is no ſurrender in law of the good leaſe. Hutt. 105. Baker v. Willoughby; Mills v. Whitewood, ibid. S. P.

A man, in conſideration of a marriage to be had with M. R. made an eſtate to her for life of certain lands in full ſatisfaction of her dower: afterwards they married, and the huſband died, and the widow brought a writ of dower againſt the heir, who pleaded in bar the acceptance of the eſtate for life: adjudged no good plea; for ſuch acceptance did not bar her of her dower at the Common-law, becauſe ſhe had no title of dower when the acceptance was made; and beſides no collateral acceptance can bar any right of inheritance or freehold. See 4 Rep. 1. Vernon's caſe, and this Dict. title Dower.

A man made a leaſe of a manor for thirty years, excepting the wood, &c. and afterwards made a leaſe of the woods to the ſame leſſee for ſixty years, and a third leaſe to him of the manor for thirty years, without any exception; reſolved, that by the acceptance of this future leaſe, the leaſe for ſixty years was ſurrendered; becauſe by ſuch acceptance the leſſee had affirmed, that the leſſor had authority to make a new leaſe. 5 Rep. 11: Ives's caſe.

In a ſpecial verdict in treſpaſs, the caſe was, a leaſe was made to huſband and wife for their lives, and afterwards they accepted a new leaſe for themſelves and their ſon: habendum to all three of them, a die datûs indenturæ, for the term of their lives with a letter of attorney to make livery: adjudged, that the acceptance of a ſecond leaſe, to commence a die datûs, was a ſurrender of the firſt, and this by the expreſs agreement in writing of the leſſees themſelves; for otherwiſe the leſſor had no power to make a new leaſe. Moor 636.

ESTOPPEL, From the Fr. Eſtouper, i. e. Oppilare, obſtipare.] An impediment or bar to a right of action ariſing from a man's own act: or where he is forbidden by law, to ſpeak againſt his own deed; for by his act or acceptance he may be eſtopped to alledge or ſpeak the truth. F. N. B. 142; Co. Lit. 352. If a perſon is bound in an obligation by the name of A. B. and is afterwards ſued by that name on the obligation; now he ſhall not be received to ſay in abatement, that he is miſnamed, but ſhall anſwer according to the obligation, though it be wrong; and foraſmuch as he is the ſame perſon that was bound, he is eſtopped and forbidden in law to ſay contrary to his own deed; otherwiſe he might take advantage of his own wrong, which the law will not ſuffer. Terms de Ley. If a man enters into a bond, with condition to give to another all the goods which are deviſed to him by the father; in this caſe the obligor is eſtopped to plead that the father made no will, but he may plead that he had not any goods deviſed to him by his father. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 751.

In a deed, all the parties are eſtopped to ſay any thing againſt what is contained in it: it eſtops a leſſee to ſay that that the leſſor had nothing in the land, &c. And parties and privies are bound by eſtoppel. Lit. 58: Co. Lit. 352: 4 Rep. 53. None but privies and parties ſhall regularly have advantage by eſtoppels: But if a man makes a leaſe of part of a term whereby he is eſtopped; and after aſſign away the term, the aſſignee will be eſtopped alſo. 30 H. 6. 2: 4 Rep. 56. In eſtoppels, both parties muſt be eſtopped; and therefore, where an infant or feme covert makes a leaſe, they are not eſtopped to ſay that it is not their deed, becauſe they are not bound by it; and as to them it is void. Cro. Eliz. 36. See title Deed. And though eſtoppels conclude parties to deeds to ſay the truth; yet jurors are not concluded, who are ſworn ad veritatem de & ſuper præmiſſis dicendam: For they may find any thing that is out of the record; and are not eſtopped to find truth in a ſpecial verdict. 4 Rep. 53: Lut. 570.

An eſtoppel ſhall biud only the heir, who claims the right of him to whom the eſtoppel was. 8 Rep. 53. Acceptance of rent from a diſſeiſor by the diſſeiſee, may be an eſtoppel: And a widow accepting leſs than her thirds for dower, is an eſtoppel, &c. 2 Danv. Abr. 130, 671.

Our books mention three kinds of eſtoppel, viz. By matter of record, by matter in writing, and by matter in pais. Co. Lit. 352. If a feoffment be made to two, and their heirs, and the feoffor afterwards levies a fine to them, and the heirs of one of them; this will be an eſtoppel to the other to demand fee-ſimple according to the deed; for the fine ſhall enure as a releaſe. 6 Rep. 7, 44. The taking of a leaſe by indenture of a man's own land, whereof he is ſeiſed in fee, is an eſtoppel to claim the fee during the term. Moor, Ca. 323: And. 121. A leaſe is made to one man for eighty years, and then to another by deed indented for the ſame term, this ſecond leaſe may be good by way of eſtoppel: And if the firſt determine by ſurrender, forfeiture, &c, the ſecond leſſee ſhall have the land. Co. Rep. 155. If a leſſor at the time of making the leaſe hath nothing in the land, but after he gets it by purchaſe or deſcent, it is a good leaſe by eſtoppel. Dyer 256: Plowd. 344: Co. Lit. 47. A recital in a deed ſhall not eſtop a perſon, unleſs it be of a particular fact, or where it is material; when it may be an eſtoppel. Cro. Eliz. 362.

The lord, by deed indented, reciting that his tenant holds of him by ſuch ſervices, whereas he doth not, confirms to the tenant, ſaving the ſervices; it is no eſtoppel to the tenant. 35 H. 6. 33: Plowd. 130. If one make a deed by dureſs of impriſonment, and when he is at large makes a defeaſance to it; he is eſtopped to ſay it was per dureſs. Bro. Defeaſ. 17. Where the condition of a bond is in the particularity, as to infeoff J. S. of the manor of D. or to pay ſuch a ſum of money as he ſtands bound to pay to W. S. or to ſtand to the ſentence of J. S. in a matter of tithes in queſtion between them; here the party is eſtopped to deny any of theſe things, which in the condition he did grant: But if a condition be in the generality, to enfeoff one of all his lands in D. or to be nonſuit in all actions, &c. it is no eſtoppel. Dyer 196: 18 Ed. 4. 54.

If a man in pleading confeſs the thing he is charged with, be cannot afterwards deny it: Though a plaintiff ſhall not be eſtopped to alledge any thing againſt that which before he hath ſaid in his writ, or declaration; and one may not be eſtopped by the record upon which he was non-ſuited. 21 H. 7. 24: 2 Leon. 3. 17.

An eſtoppel ought to be certain and affirmative, and a matter alledged that is not traverſable, ſhall not eſtop; one may not be eſtopped by acceptance, before his title accrued; an eſtoppel muſt be inſiſted and relied on; and where there is eſtoppel againſt eſtoppel, it puts the matter at large. Co. Lit. 352: Hob. 207. Eſtoppels are to be pleaded relying on the eſtoppel; without demanding judgment ſi actio, &c. 4 Rep. 53. See title Pleading.

ESTOVERS, See title Common of Eſtovers. This word hath been taken for any kind of ſuſtenance; as Bracton uſes it, for that ſuſtenance or allowance, which a man committed for felony is to have out of his lands or goods for himſelf and his family during his impriſonment. Bract. lib. 3. tract 2. cap. 18. And the Stat. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 3, applies it to an allowance in meat, clothes, &c. In which ſenſe it has been uſed for a wife's alimony.

ESTOVERIIS HABENDIS, Writ de. A writ at Common law, for a woman divorced from her huſband, à menſâ & thoro, to recover her alimony, ſometimes called her eſtovers. 1 Lev. 6. See title Baron and Feme.

ESTRAY, Extrahura, from the old Fr. Eſtrayeur.] Is any beaſt that is not wild, found within a lordſhip, and whoſe owner is not known. In which caſe if it be tried and proclaimed according to law in the church and two neareſt market-towns on two market-days, and is not claimed by the owner within a year and a day, it belongs to the king; and now moſt commonly, by grant of the crown to the lord of the liberty. Brit. cap. 17. Any beaſts may be eſtrays, that are by nature tame or reclaimable, and in which there is a valuable property as ſheep, oxen, ſwine and horſes.—But animals upon which the law ſets no value, as a dog or cat; and animals feræ naturæ, as a bear or wolf cannot be conſidered as eſtrays. 1 Comm. 289. Swans may be eſtrays, but no other fowl, and are to be proclaimed, &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 878. If the beaſt ſtray to another lordſhip within the year, after it hath been an eſtray, the firſt lord cannot re-take it, for, until the year and day be paſt, and proclamation made as aforeſaid, he hath no property; and therefore the poſſeſſion of the ſecond lord is good againſt him. Cro. Eliz. 716: Finch L. 177. If the cattle were never proclaimed, the owner may take them at any time: And where a beaſt is proclaimed as the law directs, if the owner claims it in a year and a day, he ſhall have it again; but muſt pay the lord for keeping. 1 Rol. Abr. 879: Finch 177.

An owner may ſeize an eſtray, without telling the marks, or proving the property, (which may be done at the trial, if conteſted,) and tendering amends generally is good in this caſe, without ſhewing the particular ſum; becauſe the owner of the eſtray is no wrong-doer, and knows not how long it has been in the poſſeſſion of the lord, &c. which makes it different from treſpaſs, where a certain ſum muſt be tendered. 2 Salk. 686. In caſe of an eſtray the lord ought to make a demand of what the amends ſhould be for the keeping; and then if the party thinks the demand unreaſonable, he muſt tender ſufficient amends; but if what he tenders is not enough, the lord ſhall take iſſue, and it is to be ſettled by the jury. Noy 144. A beaſt eſtray is not to be uſed in any manner, except in caſe of neceſſity; as to milk a cow, or the like, but not to ride an horſe. Cro. Jac. 148: 1 Rol. 673. Eſtrays of the the Foreſt are mentioned in the ſtatute of 27 H. 8. cap. 7. The King's cattle cannot be eſtrays or forfeited, &c.

ESTREAT, Extractum.] The true copy or note of ſome original writing or record, and eſpecially of fines, amercements, &c. impoſed on the rolls of a court, to be levied by the bailiff or other officer. F. N. B. 57, 76. Stat. Weſtm. 2. c. 8.—Juſtices, commiſſioners, &c. are to deliver their eſtreats into the Exchequer yearly after Michaelmas: And fines to have writs, which ſhall be entered in the eſtreat, in order as they are entered in the Chancery Rolls, &c. Stats. 51 H. 3. ſtat. 5: 16 Ed. 2. Theſe eſtreats relate to fines for crimes and offences, defaults and negligences of parties in ſuits and officers, non-appearance of defendants, and jurors, &c. And all forfeited recognizances are to be firſt eſtreated in the Exchequer, by ſheriffs of counties; on which proceſs iſſues to levy the ſame to the uſe of the King. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 22.

Eſtreats are to be levied on the right perſons: And ſheriff's eſtreats muſt be in two parts, indented and ſealed by the ſheriff, and two juſtices of the peace; who are to view them, and one of them is to remain with the ſheriff, and the other with the juſtices. Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 15. The eſtreats of fines, at the quarter-ſeſſions, are to be made by the juſtices; and to be double, one whereof is to be delivered to the ſheriff by indenture. Stat. 14 R. 2. cap. 11. Fines, poſt fines, forfeitures, &c. muſt be eſtreated into the Exchequer twice a year, on pain of 50*l.* And officers are to deliver in their returns of eſtreats upon oath. Stats. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 22: 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. ESTREPE, Fr. Eſtropier.] To make ſpoil in lands to the damage of another, as of the reverſioner, &c.

ESTREPEMENT, Eſtrepamentum from the Fr. Eſtropier, mutilare, or from the Lat. Extirpare.] Any ſpoil made by tenant for life, upon any lands or woods, to the prejudice of him in reverſion; It alſo ſignifies the making land barren by continual ploughing. Stat. 6 Ed. 1. cap. 13. It ſeems by the derivation, that eſtrepement is the unreaſonable drawing away the heart of the ground, by ploughing and ſowing it continually, without manuring or other good huſbandry, whereby it is impaired: And yet eſtropier ſignifying mutilare, may no leſs be applied to the cutting down trees, or lopping them further than the law allows. In ancient records, we often find vaſtum & eſtrepamentum facere; to make ſtrip and waſte.

This word is uſed for a writ, which lies in two caſes; the one, by the Stat. of Glouc. 6 E. 1. c. 13, when a perſon having an action depending, as a formedon, writ of right, &c. ſues to prohibit the tenant from making waſte, during the ſuit; the other is for the demandant, who is adjudged to recover ſeiſin of the land in queſtion, after judgment and before execution ſued by the writ of habere facias poſſeſſionem, to prevent waſte being made till he gets into poſſeſſion. Reg. Orig. 76: Reg. Judic. 33: F. N. B. 60, 61: 3 Inſt. 328.

In ſuing out theſe two writs, this difference was formerly obſerved; that in actions merely proſſeſſory where no damages are recovered, a writ of Eſtrepement might be had at any time pendente lite, nay, even at the time of ſuing out the original writ or firſt proceſs: but in an action where damages were recovered, the demandant could only have a writ of eſtrepement, if he was apprehenſive of waſte, after verdict had; for with regard to waſte done before the verdict was given, it was preſumed the jury would conſider that in aſſeſſing the damages. F. N. B. 60, 1. But now it ſeems to be held by an equitable conſtruction of the Stat. of Glouc. and in advancement of the remedy, that a writ of eſtrepement to prevent waſte, may be had in every ſtage, as well of ſuch actions wherein damages are recovered, as of thoſe wherein only poſſeſſion is had of the lands; for perhaps the tenant may not be able to ſatisfy the demandant his full damages. Ib. 61. And therefore now in an action of waſte itſelf to recover the place waſted, and alſo damages, a writ of eſtrepement will lie as well before as after judgment. For the plaintiff cannot recover damages for more waſte than is contained in his original complaint: neither is he at liberty to aſſign or give in evidence any waſte made after ſuing out the writ: it is therefore reaſonable that he ſhould have this writ of preventive juſtice, ſince he is in his preſent ſuit debarred of any further remedy. 5 Rep. 115.

If a writ of eſtrepement forbidding waſte be directed and delivered to the tenant himſelf, as it may be, and he afterwards proceeds to commit waſte, an action may be carried on upon the foundation of this writ, wherein the only plea of the tenant can be, non fecit vaſtum contra prohibitionem; and if upon verdict it be found that he did, the plaintiff may recover coſts and damages; or the party may proceed to puniſh the defendant for the contempt. Moor 100.

As a writ of eſtrepement may be directed either to the tenant and his ſervants, or to the ſheriff; if it be directed to the tenant and his ſervant, and they are duly ſerved with it, if they afterwards commit waſte, they may be committed to priſon for this contempt of the writ. But it is ſaid not to be ſo, when directed to the ſheriff, becauſe he may raiſe the poſſe comitatûs to reſiſt them who make waſte. Hob. 85. Though it hath been adjudged, that the ſheriff may likewiſe impriſon offenders, if he be put to it; and that he may make a warrant to others to do it. 5 Rep. 115: 2 Inſt. 329.

The writ of eſtrepement lies properly where the plaintiff in a real action ſhall not recover damages by his action; and as it were ſupplies damages; for damages and coſts may be recovered for waſte, after the writ of eſtrepement is brought. See Moor 100: 2 Inſt. 328. If tenants commit waſte in houſes aſſigned a feme for dower, on her bringing action of dower, writ of eſtrepement lies. 5 Rep. 115: See Cro. Eliz. 114: Moor 622. But pending a writ of partition between coparceners, if the tenant commit waſte, this writ will not be granted; becauſe there is equal intereſt between the parties, and the writ will not lie, but where the intereſt of the tenant is to be diſproved. Goldſb. 50: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 754.

EVASION, Evaſio.] A ſubtle endeavouring to ſet aſide truth, or to eſcape the puniſhment of the law; which will not be indured. If a perſon ſays to another that he will not ſtrike him, but will give him a pot of ale to ſtrike firſt, and accordingly he ſtrikes, the returning of it is puniſhable; and if the perſon firſt ſtriking be killed, it is murder; for no man ſhall evade the juſtice of the law, by ſuch a pretence to cover his malice. 1 *H. EVICTION, From evinco to overcome.] A recovery of land, &c. by form of law. If land is evicted, before the time of payment of rent on a leaſe, no rent ſhall be paid by the leſſee. 10 Rep. 128. Where lands taken on extent are evicted or recovered by better title, the plaintiff ſhall have a new execution. 4 Rep. 66. If a widow is evicted of her dower or thirds, ſhe ſhall be endowed in the other lands of the heir. 2 Danv. Abr. 670. And if on an exchange of lands, either party is evicted of the lands given in exchange, he may enter on his own lands. 4 Rep. 121.

EVIDENCE,

Evidentia.] Proof by teſtimony of witneſſes, on oath; or by writings or records.

It is called Evidence, becauſe thereby the point in iſſue in a cauſe to be tried, is to be made evident to the jury; for probationes debent eſſe evidentes & perſpicuæ. Co. Lit. 283. The evidence to a jury ought to be upon the oath of witneſſes; or upon matters of record, or by deeds proved, or other like authentical matter, 1 Lil. Abr. 547. And evidence containeth teſtimony of witneſſes, and all other proofs to be given and produced to a jury for the finding of any iſſue joined between parties. Co. Lit. 283.

The ſyſtem of evidence, as now eſtabliſhed in our courts of Common-law, is very full, comprehenſive and refined; a ſummary of the law on the ſubject is here preſented.

The nature of the preſent work will not allow room for the numberleſs niceties and diſtinctions of what is, or is not, legal evidence to a jury. A few of the general heads and leading maxims, relative to this point, as well in civil, as criminal caſes, together with ſome obſervations on the manner of giving Evidence, are firſt ſelected.

Evidence, as has been already remarked, ſignifies that which demonſtrates, makes evident or clear, or aſcertains the truth of the very fact or point in iſſue, either on the one ſide or on the other; and no evidence ought to be admitted to any other point. Therefore upon an action of debt, when the defendant denies his bond by the plea of non eſt factum, and the iſſue is, whether it be the defendant's deed or no, he cannot give a releaſe of this bond in Evidence, for that does not deſtroy the bond, and therefore does not prove the iſſue which he has choſen to rely upon, viz. that the bond has no exiſtence.

Again; Evidence in the trial by jury is of two kinds, either that which is given in proof, or that which the jury may receive by their own private knowledge.—As to the latter ſee title Jury.—The former, or Proofs, (to which in common ſpeech the name of Evidence is uſually confined) are either written; or parol, that is by word of mouth. Written proofs, or Evidence, are, 1, Records; and 2, Ancient deeds of 30 years ſtanding, which prove themſelves; but 3, Modern deeds; and, 4, Other writings, muſt be atteſted and verified by parol evidence of witneſſes. And the one general rule that runs through all the doctrine of trials is this, that the beſt evidence the nature of the caſe will admit of ſhall always be required, if poſſible to be had; but if not poſſible, then the beſt evidence that can be had ſhall be allowed. For if it be found there is any better evidence exiſting than is produced, the very not producing it is a preſumption, that it would have detected ſome falſehood that at preſent is concealed. Thus, in order to prove a leaſe for years, nothing elſe ſhall be admitted, but the very deed of leaſe itſelf, if in being; but if that poſitively be proved to be burnt or deſtroyed, (not relying on any looſe negative, as that it cannot be found, or the like,) then an atteſted copy may be produced; or parol evidence given of it's contents. So, no evidence of a diſcourſe with another will be admitted, but the man himſelf muſt be produced; yet in ſome caſes, (as in proof of any general cuſtoms, or matters of common tradition or repute,) the courts admit of hearſay evidence, or an account of what perſons deceaſed have declared in their life-time: but ſuch evidence will not be received of any particular facts. So too, books of accounts, or ſhop-books, are not allowed of themſelves to be given in evidence for the owner, but a ſervant who made the entry may have recourſe to them to refreſh his memory: and, if ſuch ſervant (who was accuſtomed to make thoſe entries) be dead, and his hand be proved, the book may be read in evidence. Bull. N. P. 282, 3: Salk. 285. But as this kind of evidence, even thus regulated, would be much too hard upon the buyer at any long diſtance of time, the Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 12, (the penners of which ſeem to have imagined that the books of themſelves were evidence at Common-law) confines this ſpecies of proof to ſuch tranſactions as have happened within one year before the action brought; unleſs between merchant and merchant in the uſual intercourſe of trade. For accounts of ſo recent a date, if erroneous, may more eaſily be unravelled and adjuſted.

With regard to parol Evidence, or Witneſſes; there is a proceſs to bring them in by writ of ſubpœna ad teſtificandum; which commands them, laying aſide all pretences and excuſes, to appear at the trial on pain of one hundred pounds, to be forfeited to the king; to which the Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 9, has added a penalty of 10*l.* to the party aggrieved, and damages equivalent to the loſs ſuſtained by want of his evidence. But no witneſs, unleſs his reaſonable expences be tendered him, is bound to appear at all; nor if he appears, is he bound to give evidence till ſuch charges are actually paid him: except he reſides within the bills of mortality, and is ſummoned to give evidence within the ſame. This compulſory proceſs, to bring in unwilling witneſſes, and the additional terrors of an attachment in caſe of diſobedience, are of excellent uſe in the thorough inveſtigation of truth.

EVIDENCE.

All witneſſes of whatever religion or country, that have the uſe of their reaſon, are to be received and examined, except ſuch as are infamous, or ſuch as are intereſted in the event of the cauſe. All others are competent witneſſes; though the jury from other circumſtances will judge of their credibility. Infamous perſons are ſuch as may be challenged as jurors, propter delictum; and therefore ſhall never be admitted to give evidence to inform that jury, with whom they were too ſcandalous to aſſociate. Intereſted witneſſes may be examined upon a voir dire, if ſuſpected to be ſecretly concerned in the event; or their intereſt may be proved in court. Which laſt is the only method of ſupporting an objection to the former claſs; for no man is to be examined to prove his own infamy. And no counſel, attorney, or other perſon, intruſted with the ſecrets of the cauſe by the party himſelf, ſhall be compelled, or perhaps allowed, to give evidence of ſuch converſation or matters of privacy, as came to his knowledge by virtue of ſuch truſt and confidence: but he may be examined as to mere matters of fact, as the execution of a deed or the like, which might have come to his knowledge without being intruſted in the cauſe. Bull. N. P. 284: 1 Vent. 97.

One witneſs (if credible) is ſufficient evidence to a jury of any ſingle fact; though undoubtedly the concurrence of two or more corroborates the proof. Yet our law conſiders that there are many tranſactions to which only one perſon is privy; and therefore does not always demand the teſtimony of two, as the civil law univerſally requires.

Poſitive proof is always required, where from the nature of the caſe it appears it might poſſibly have been had. But, next to poſitive proof, circumſtantial evidence or the doctrine of preſumptions muſt take place: for when the fact itſelf cannot be demonſtratively evinced, that which comes neareſt to the proof of the fact, is the proof of ſuch circumſtances which either neceſſarily, or uſually attend ſuch facts; and theſe are called preſumptions, which are only to be relied upon till the contrary be actually proved. Stabitur præſumptioni donec probetur in contrarium. Co. Litt. 373. Violent preſumption is many times equal to full proof; for there thoſe circumſtances appear, which neceſſarily attend the fact. Ibid. 6. As if a landlord ſues for rent due at Michaelmas 1754, and the tenant cannot prove the payment, but produces an acquittance for rent due at a ſubſequent time, in full of all demands, this is a violent preſumption of his having paid the former rent, and is equivalent to full proof; for though the actual payment is not proved, yet the acquittance in full of all demands is proved, which could not be without ſuch payment; and it therefore induces ſo forcible a preſumption, that no proof ſhall be admitted to the contrary. Gilb. Evid. 161. Probable preſumption ariſing from ſuch circumſtances as uſually attend the fact, hath alſo its due weight: as if, in a ſuit for rent due in 1754, the tenant proves the payment of the rent due in 1755; this will prevail to exonerate the tenant; (Co. Litt. 373;) unleſs it be clearly ſhewn that the rent of 1754, was retained for ſome ſpecial reaſon, or that there was ſome fraud or miſtake: for otherwiſe it will be preſumed to have been paid before that in 1755, as it is moſt uſual to receive firſt the rents of longeſt ſtanding. Light, or raſh preſumptions have no weight or validity at all.

The oath adminiſtered to the witneſs, is not only that what he depoſes ſhall be true, but that he ſhall alſo depoſe the whole truth: ſo that he is not to conceal any part of what he knows, whether interrogated particularly to that point or not. And all this evidence is to be given in open court, in the preſence of the parties, their attorney, the counſel, and all by-ſtanders; and before the judge and jury: each party having liberty to except to it's competency, which exceptions are publickly ſtated, and by the judge are openly and publickly allowed or diſallowed, in the face of the country. And if either in his directions or deciſions he mis-ſtates the law by ignorance, inadvertence, or deſign, the counſel on either ſide may require him publickly to ſeal a bill of exceptions; ſtating the point wherein he is ſuppoſed to err: See title Bill of Exceptions.—Or if the legal effect of a record or other evidence is doubted, this may be tried on a Demurrer to Evidence; See that title.—3 Comm. 367—372.

The true theory of Evidence is admirably explained in Bull. Ni. Pri. part VI. from Gilbert's Law of Evidence; and it concludes with taking a view of all the general Rules of Evidence together, from whence the following abſtract is given.

1. The firſt general rule is that the beſt evidence muſt be given that the nature of the thing is capable of. The true meaning of this rule is that no ſuch evidence ſhall be brought as ex naturâ rei ſuppoſes ſtill a greater evidence behind; in the party's poſſeſſion or power, for ſuch evidence is altogether inſufficient and proves nothing. But if it is proved that an original deed, will, &c. is in the hands of the adverſe party, or is deſtroyed without default of the party who ought to produce it, a copy will be admitted; becauſe then ſuch copy is the beſt evidence.

2. No perſon intereſted in the queſtion can be a witneſs. There is no rule in more general uſe and none that is ſo little underſtood. See 1 Term Rep. 302. And there are ſome exceptions to it. e. g. 1. A party intereſted will be admitted in a criminal proſecution in moſt inſtances; 2. he may be admitted for the ſake of trade and the common uſage of buſineſs; as porters, apprentices, &c. to prove delivery of goods, &c. though it tend to clear themſelves of neglect. See 3 Term Rep. 29: Str. 647, 1083. 3. Where no other evidence is reaſonably to be expected. 4. Where he acquires the intereſt by his own act, after the party who calls him as a witneſs has a right to his evidence. 5. Where the poſſibility of intereſt is very remote. See 1 Term Rep. 163, 4, and more at length, this title, Div. II. 1.

3. The third general rule is, that hearſay is no evidence.—For no evidence is to be admitted but what is upon oath and if the firſt ſpeech were without oath, another oath that there was ſuch a ſpeech makes it no more. Beſides, if the ſpeaker be living, it is not the beſt evidence. But hearſay has been admitted in corroboration of a witneſs's teſtimony.

4. In all caſes where a general character or behaviour is put in iſſue, evidence of particular facts may be admitted; but not where it comes in collaterally.

5. Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione ſuppletur, nam quod ex facto oritur ambiguum, verificatione facti tollitur.

6. In every iſſue the affirmative is to be proved. A negative cannot regularly be proved, and therefore it is ſufficient to deny what is affirmed until it be proved: but but when the affirmative is proved, the other party may conteſt it with oppoſite proofs, of ſome matter or propoſition totally inconſiſtent with what is affirmed.

7. No evidence need be given of what is agreed by the pleadings. For the jury are only ſworn to try the matter in iſſue between the parties, ſo that nothing elſe is properly before them.

8. Whenſoever a man cannot have the advantage of the ſpecial matter by pleading, he may give it in evidence on the general iſſue. See title Pleading.

9. If the ſubſtance of the iſſue be proved, it is ſufficient. As to this, ſee alſo titles Pleading; Modo et Forma.

The doctrine of evidence IN CRIMINAL CASES is, in moſt reſpects, the ſame as that upon civil actions. There are however a few leading points, wherein by ſeveral ſtatutes and reſolutions a difference is made between civil and criminal evidence.

1. In all caſes of high treaſon, petit treaſon, and miſpriſion of treaſon, by Stats. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12, and 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 11, two lawful witneſſes are required to convict a priſoner; unleſs he ſhall willingly and without violence confeſs the ſame. By Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10, a farther exception is made as to treaſons in counterfeiting the King's ſeals or ſignatures, and treaſons concerning coin current within this realm; and more particularly by c. 11, the offences of importing counterfeit foreign money current in this kingdom, and impairing, counterfeiting, or forging any current coin. The Stats. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 25: 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28, in their ſubſequent extenſions of this ſpecies of treaſon do alſo provide, that the offenders may be indicted, arraigned, tried, convicted and attainted, by the like evidence, and in ſuch manner and form, as may be had and uſed againſt offenders for counterfeiting the King's money. But by Stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3, in proſecutions for theſe treaſons to which that act extends, the ſame rule (of requiring two witneſſes) is again enforced; with this addition, that the confeſſion of the priſoner, which ſhall countervail the neceſſity of ſuch proof, muſt be in open court. In the conſtruction of which act it hath been holden, that a confeſſion of the priſoner, taken out of court, before a magiſtrate or perſon having competent authority to take it, and proved by two witneſſes; is ſufficient to convict him of treaſon. Foſter 240, 4. But haſty unguarded confeſſions, made to perſons having no ſuch authority, ought not to be admitted as evidence under this ſtatute. And indeed, even in caſes of felony at the Common-law, they are the weakeſt and moſt ſuſpicious of all teſtimony; ever liable to be obtained by artifice, falſe hopes, promiſes of favour, or menaces; ſeldom remembered accurately, or reported with due preciſion; and incapable in their nature of being diſproved by other negative evidence. By the ſame Stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3, it is declared that both witneſſes muſt be to the ſame overt act of treaſon; or one to one overt act, and the other to another overt act of the ſame ſpecies of treaſon, and not of diſtinct heads or kinds: and no evidence ſhall be admitted to prove any overt act not expreſsly laid in the indictment. See 2 State Trials 144: Foſter 235. And therefore in Sir John Fenwick's caſe, in King William's time, where there was but one witneſs, an act of parliament, (Stat. 8 W. 3. c. 4,) was made on purpoſe to attaint him of treaſon, and he was executed. 5 State Trials 40. But in almoſt every other accuſation, one poſitive witneſs is ſufficient; except in caſes of indictments for perjury, where one witneſs is not ſufficient, becauſe then there is only one oath againſt another. 10 Mod. 194.

2. From the reverſal of colonel Sydney's attainder by act of parliament in 1689, (8 State Trials 472,) it may be collected that the mere ſimilitude of hand-writing in two papers ſhewn to a jury, without other concurrent teſtimony, is no evidence that both were written by the ſame perſon. 2 Hawk. P. C. 431; yet undoubtedly the teſtimony of witneſſes, well acquainted with the party's hand, that they believe the paper in queſtion to have been written by him, is evidence to be left to a jury. Lord Preſton's caſe, A. D. 1690. 4 State Trials 463: Francia's caſe A. D. 1716, 6 State Trials 69: Layer's caſe A. D. 1722, Ibid. 279: Henzey's caſe, A. D. 1758: 4 Burr. 644.

3. By the Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 27, a mother of a baſtard child, concealing its death, muſt prove by one witneſs that the child was born dead; otherwiſe ſuch concealment ſhall be evidence of her having murdered it. See title Baſtard.

4. All preſumptive evidence of felony ſhould be admitted cautiouſly: for the law holds, that it is better that ten guilty perſons eſcape, than that one innocent ſuffer. And Sir Matthew Hale in particular lays down two rules moſt prudent and neceſſary to be obſerved. 1. Never to convict a man for ſtealing the goods of a perſon unknown, merely becauſe he will give no account how he came by them, unleſs an actual felony be proved of ſuch goods: and, 2. Never to convict any perſon of murder or manſlaughter, till at leaſt the body be found dead: on account of two inſtances he mentions, where perſons were executed for the murder of others, who were then alive, but miſſing. 2 Hal. P. C. 200.

Laſtly it was an antient and commonly received practice, (1 State Trials paſſim,) that as counſel was not allowed to any priſoner accuſed of a capital crime, ſo neither ſhould he be ſuffered to exculpate himſelf by the teſtimony of any witneſſes. And therefore it deſerves to be remembered to the honour of Mary I, that ſhe firſt deſired ſuch evidence to be received in a court of juſtice. Afterwards in one particular inſtance (when embezzling the queen's military ſtores was made felony by Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 4,) it was provided that any perſon, impeached for ſuch felony, "ſhould be received and admitted to make any lawful proof that he could, by lawful witneſs or otherwiſe, for his diſcharge and defence;" and in general the courts grew ſo heartily aſhamed of a doctrine ſo unreaſonable and oppreſſive, that a practice was gradually introduced of examining witneſſes for the priſoner, but not upon oath. 2 Lulſt. 147: Cro. Car. 292. The conſequence of this ſtill was, that the jury gave leſs credit to the priſoner's evidence, than to that produced by the Crown. Sir Edward Coke proteſts very ſtrongly againſt this tyrannical practice: declaring that he never read in any act of parliament, book, caſe, or record, that in criminal caſes the party accuſed ſhall not have witneſſes ſworn for him; and therefore there is not ſo much as ſcintilla juris againſt it. 3 Inſt. 79. See alſo 2 Hal. P. C. 283, and his Summary 264. And the Houſe of Commons were ſo ſenſible of this abſurdity, that, in the bill for abolishing hoſtilities between England and Scotland, (Stat. 4 Jac. 1. c. 1,) when felonies committed by Engliſhmen in Scotland were ordered to be tried in one of the three Northern counties, they inſiſted on a clauſe and carried it againſt the efforts of both the Crown and the Houſe of Lords, againſt the practice in the courts of England, and the expreſs law of Scotland, "that in all ſuch trials for the better diſcovery of the truth, and the better information of the conſciences of the jury and juſtices, there ſhall be allowed to the party arraigned the benefit of ſuch credible witneſſes, to be examined upon oath as can be produced for his clearing and juſtification." At length by Stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3, the ſame meaſure of juſtice was eſtabliſhed throughout all the realm, in caſes of treaſon within the act: and it was afterwards declared by Stat. 1 Ann. ſt. 2. c. 9, that in all caſes of treaſon and felony, all witneſſes for the priſoner ſhould be examined upon oath, in like manner as the witneſſes againſt him. 4 Comm. 356—360.

Having given the foregoing general view, more minute information on this ſubject may be thus claſſed,

I. Of written Evidence: Wherein of Matters of Record as alſo of Writings under Seal, and other Writings and Depoſitions in Chancery or other Courts.

II. Unwritten Evidence: Wherein—

1. Who may be Witneſſes.
2. Of the Number of Witneſſes, and of compelling them to appear; as alſo of the Manner of their giving Evidence.
3. Of parol, preſumptive, and hear-ſay Evidence.

I. Evidence by records and writings, Is where acts of parliaments, ſtatutes, judgments, fines and recoveries, proceedings of courts, and deeds, &c. are admitted as evidence. A general act of parliament may be given in evidence; and need not be pleaded; and of theſe the printed ſtatute-book is good evidence: But in the caſe of a private act, a copy of it is to be examined by the records of parliament, and it is to be pleaded. Trials per pais 177, 232. Journals and other proceedings in the Houſe of Commons have been held to be no evidence. State Trials, vol. 3. 470; Though it is otherwiſe, vol. 3. 800. A hiſtory of England, or printed trial, may not be read as evidence. 1 Lil. 557. Camden's Britannia was not allowed as evidence: But it has been held, that an hiſtory may be evidence of the general hiſtory of the realm, though not of a particular cuſtom, &c. Skinner's Rep. 623.

An exemplification of the inrolment of letters patent under the great ſeal, may be pleaded in evidence. 3 Inſt. 173. This exemplification is a copy or tranſcript of letters patent made from the inrollment thereof, and ſealed with the great ſeal. But neither an exemplification nor conſtat was pleadable at Common-law, becauſe there was only the tenor of an enrollment; and the tenor of a record is not pleadable; but they are now pleadable by Stats. 3 & 4 E. 6. c. 4: 13 Eliz. c. 6.

A patent may be exemplified under the great ſeal in Chancery; and alſo any record or judgment in any of the courts at Weſtminſter, under the proper ſeal of each court: all which exemplifications may be given in evidence to a jury. 1 Lil. 583: Shep. 134. A rule made, or writ filed, in any court at Weſtminſter, may be exemplified in the court where made or filed. But nothing but matter of record ought to be exemplified. 3 Inſt. 173.

Records and inrolments prove themſelves; and a copy of a record or inrolments ſworn to, may be given in evidence. Co. Lit. 117, 262. A tranſcript of a record in another court, may be given in evidence to a jury. 1 Lil. Abr. 551. There is a difference between pleading a record, and giving the record in evidence; if it be pleaded, it muſt be ſub pede ſigilli, or the judges cannot judge thereof: Though where it is given in evidence, if it be not under the ſeal, the jury may find the ſame, if they have other good matter of inducement to prove it. Style's Rep. 22.

A fine or recovery may be given in evidence, without vouching the roll of the recovery; for the part indented is the uſual evidence that there is ſuch a fine: But it is ſaid the fine ought to be ſhewn with the proclamations under ſeal. 10 Rep. 92: 2 Rol. Abr. 574.

By Stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 20, where any perſon has purchaſed or ſhall purchaſe for a valuable conſideration, any eſtate, whereof a recovery was neceſſary to complete the title, ſuch perſon, and all claiming under him, having been in poſſeſſion from the time of ſuch purchaſe, ſhall and may after the end of 20 years from the time of ſuch purchaſe, produce in evidence the deed, making a tenant to the præcipe, and declaring the uſes; and the deed ſo produced (the execution thereof being duly proved) ſhall be deemed ſufficient evidence, that ſuch recovery was duly ſuffered, in caſe no record can be found of ſuch recovery, or the ſame ſhould appear not regularly entered. Provided the perſon making ſuch deed had a ſufficient eſtate, and power to make a tenant to the præcipe, and to ſuffer ſuch common recovery.

A record of an inferior court, hath been rejected in evidence, and the party put to prove what was done: And proceedings of county courts, courts baron, &c. may be tried by a jury; for it hath been adjudged, that they cannot be proved by the rolls, but by witneſſes. Lit. 75. But court-rolls of a court baron, when ſhewn, are good evidence; and in many caſes, copies of the court-rolls are allowed as evidence. Trials per pais 178, 228.

Inrolment of a deed is proved on certifying it by an examined atteſted copy; though inrolment of a deed which needs no inrolment, or by which the eſtate does not paſs, is only evidence to ſome purpoſes. 3 Lev. 387.

By Stat. 10 An. c. 18, where any bargain and ſale inrolled is pleaded with a profert, the party to anſwer ſuch profert may produce a copy of the inrollment.

With reſpect to the production of Deeds in evidence, the general rule is, that the deed itſelf muſt be given in evidence, and muſt be proved by one witneſs at the leaſt. But if the oppoſite party produce the deed on notice, it ſhall be read without any proof of the execution. Bull. N. P. 254: 2 Term Rep. 41.

An ancient deed proves itſelf, where poſſeſſion has gone accordingly: But later deeds muſt be proved by witneſſes. Co. Lit. 6. If all the witneſſes to a deed are dead, continual and quiet poſſeſſion is preſumptive evidence of the truth of it; yet it may receive farther credit by compariſon of hands and ſeals. Wood's Inſt. 599. When witneſſes to deeds are dead, their hand-writing muſt be proved, 2 Inſt. 118. And where there are ſeveral witneſſes to a deed, and they are all dead but one, a ſubpœna muſt be taken out againſt the living witneſs, and ſtrict inquiry made after him, and affidavit is to be made that he cannot be found, before the hand-writing of the deceaſed witneſſes are to be proved. 1 Lill. 556.

An old deed proved to have been found among deeds and evidences of lands, may be given in evidence to a jury; though the executing of it cannot be proved and made out.

out. 3 Salk. 153. A deed may be good evidence, though the ſeal is broken off: And where a deed is burnt, &c. the judges may allow it to be proved by witneſſes, that there was ſuch a deed, and this be given in evidence. 1 Lev. 25. But the court will not allow the jury, on a trial at bar, to carry deeds, writings or books with them out of court, as evidence to conſider of, but ſuch as have been proved: Though by the aſſent of parties, or by aſſent of the court without the parties, they may be delivered to the jurors. Cro. Eliz. 421. All deeds or writings under ſeal, and given in evidence, they may have; and nothing which was not given in evidence, for the court gives their direction to the jury upon the evidence given in court. 1 Lil. 313.

It is dangerous to ſuffer any, who by law ought to ſhew forth any deed, to prove in evidence, that there was ſuch a deed, which they had ſeen or read, &c. For there might be imperfections in the deed, or it may be on condition, with limitation, &c. 10 Rep. 92. A deed, though ſealed and delivered, if not ſtamped according to act of parliament, cannot be pleaded or given in evidence in any court. See Stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. cap. 21, and ſeveral ſubſequent ſtatutes; the latter of which extend to bills, notes, receipts, agreements, &c. And theſe ſtamps have been frequently the means of detecting forgeries; for the Stamp-office put ſecret marks on the ſtamps, which from time to time are varied: ſo that where a deed is forged of a date antecedent, it may eaſily be diſcovered by ſtamps being upon it, not in uſe at the time it bears date. A deed cannot be proved by a counterpart of it or copy, if the original is in being, and may be had; though it may be when the original cannot be procured. Co. Lit. 225: 10 Rep. 92. The counterpart of an ancient deed hath been allowed to be given in evidence. Mod. Caſ. 225. But it hath been held that the counterpart of a deed, without other circumſtances, is not ſufficient evidence; unleſs in caſe of a fine, when a counterpart is good evidence of itſelf. 1 Salk. 287.

Where a deed was cancelled by fraud, that being proved, it was allowed to be evidence in an action under the deed. Hetl. 138. The recital of a deed is no evidence without ſhewing the deed; or proving that there was ſuch a deed, and it is loſt. Co. Lit. 352: Vaugh. 74. Recital of a leaſe, in a deed of releaſe, is good evidence, that there was ſuch a leaſe againſt the releaſor, and thoſe claiming under him; but not againſt others, except there be proof that there was ſuch a leaſe. 1 Salk. 286. A ſettlement ſet forth in a bill in Chancery, and admitted in the anſwer; and where it was proved that the deed was in the poſſeſſion of ſuch a one, &c. hath been adjudged a good evidence of the deed of ſettlement where not to be found. 5 Mod. 384.

The probate of a will, when it concerns perſonal eſtate only, may be given in evidence: But where title of lands is claimed under a will, the original will muſt be ſhewn, not the probate: Though if the will be proved in the Chancery, copies of the proceedings there will be evidence. 2 Rol. Abr. 687: Trials per pais 234: 1 Salk. 286: and Raym. 335. In certain caſes the Ledger-book of the Eccleſiaſtical Court in which the will is entered, is ſufficient evidence, being a roll or record of the court. Bull. N. P. 245, 6.

A bill in Chancery has been admitted as ſlight evidence againſt the complainant: An anſwer in Chancery is evidence againſt the defendant himſelf, though not againſt others. 1 Vent. 66: Trials per pais 167. But when a party gives an anſwer in Chancery in evidence at a trial, though he inſiſt to read only ſuch a part of it; yet the other ſide may require to have the whole read. 5 Mod. 10. As in caſe of a writing permitted to be read to prove one part of an evidence, which may be read to prove any other part of the evidence given to the jury.

Depoſitions of witneſſes in Chancery between the ſame parties, may be given in evidence at law, if the witneſſes are dead, and the bill and anſwer proved. Trials per pais 167, 207, 234. Regularly depoſitions in Chancery, of a witneſs, may not be given in evidence, if he be alive; unleſs he be in another kingdom, not ſubject to the dominion of our King. Ibid. 359. But depoſitions in Chancery, after anſwer, between the ſame parties, may be read as evidence, though the witneſſes are not dead, if they cannot be found on ſearch. Shower 3: 1 Salk. 278. Depoſitions in Chancery in perpetuam rei memoriam, are not to be given in evidence, ſo long as the parties are living. 1 Salk. 286. And it hath been adjudged, that theſe depoſitions to perpetuate teſtimony, on a bill exhibited, ſhall not be admitted as evidence at a trial at law, except an anſwer be put in. Raym. 335. If depoſitions are taken out of the realm, he who makes them is ſuppoſed there ſtill, and they ſhall be read as evidence; but if it appears he is in England, they cannot be read, but he muſt come in perſon. 1 Lil. 555. Things done beyond ſea may be be given in evidence to a jury; and the teſtimony of a public notary of things done in a foreign country, will be good evidence. 6 Rep. 47.

Depoſitions cannot be given in evidence againſt any perſon who was not party to the ſuit; and the reaſon is, becauſe he had not liberty to croſs-examine the witneſſes; and it is againſt natural juſtice that a man ſhould be concluded in a cauſe to which he never was a party. Hardr. 22, 472: Bunb. 50. pl. 84—91: pl. 148—321. pl. 403: 9 Mod. 229: Carth. 181: Vern. 113: Gilb. Evid. 62: Ch. Prec. 212. See this Dict. title Depoſitions.

Depoſitions in the Eccleſiaſtical courts may not be given in evidence to a jury at a trial; but a ſentence may in a cauſe of tithes, &c. And the ſentence of the Spiritual court is concluſive evidence in cauſes within their juriſdiction. 1 Salk. 290: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 761.

Depoſitions before a coroner are admitted as evidence, the witneſſes being dead. 1 Lev. 180: Likewiſe they have been admitted where a witneſs hath gone beyond ſea. 2 Nelſ. Abr. 760. The confeſſion of a priſoner before a magiſtrate, &c. may be given in evidence againſt him: See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. and the notes there. The examination of an offender need not to be on oath, but muſt be ſubſcribed by him, if he confeſſes the fact; and then be given in evidence upon oath by the juſtice of the peace who took the ſame. The examination of others muſt be on oath, and proved by the juſtice, or his clerk, &c. as to their evidence, if they are dead, unable to travel, or kept away by the priſoner. H. P. C. 19, 162: Kel. 18, 55: Wood's Inſt. 647.

The examination of an informer before a juſtice, taken on oath, and ſubſcribed, may be given in evidence on a trial if he be dead, or not able to travel, &c. which is to be made out on oath. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46.

By Stats. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13: 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10, Juſtices of peace ſhall examine perſons brought before them them for felony, and those who brought them, and certify such examination to the next gaol-delivery: but the examination of the prisoner shall be without oath, and the others upon oath; and these examinations shall be read against an offender upon an indictment, if the witnesses be dead. Bull. N. P. 242.

A verdict against one, under whom either the plaintiff or defendant claims, may be given in evidence against the party so claiming; but not if neither claim under it. Mich. 1656. B. R. In ejectment where the plaintiff hath title to several lands, and brings action of ejectment against several defendants, if he recovers against one, he shall not give that verdict in evidence against the rest. 3 Mod. 141.

In a court of common law, a decree in Chancery is no evidence. Letters may be produced as evidence against a man, in treason, &c. Although a witness swear to the hand and contents of a letter, if he never saw the party write, he shall not be allowed as evidence. Skin. 673. In general cases the witness should have gained his knowledge from seeing the party write; but under some circumstances, that is not necessary; as where the hand-writing to be proved is of a person residing abroad, one who has frequently received letters from him in a course of correspondence, would be admitted to prove it though he had never see him write.—So where the antiquity of the writing makes it impossible for any living witness to swear he ever saw the party write. On an indictment for writing a treasonable libel, proof of the hand-writing is sufficient, without proof of the actual writing. Bull. N. P. 236.

Since no witnesses are present when goldsmiths' notes or promissory notes are given, such notes are allowed as evidence of the receipt of money, or other thing. 1 Salk. 283. A church-book some writers say is not to be admitted as evidence; though others say it may. Cro. Eliz. 411. It is said copies of public books of corporations, &c. shall be evidence. 1 Lev. 25: 1 Lil. 551. But as to books of corporations, where things are entered not of record, the originals are to be produced as evidence.

A pedigree drawn by a herald at arms, will not be admitted for evidence, without shewing the records or ancient books from whence taken; for the entries in the herald's office are no records, but only circumstantial evidence: But a copy of an inscription on a grave-stone, has been given in evidence in such a case. 2 Rol. Abr. 686, 687. An almanack wherein the father had writ the day of the nativity of his son was allowed in evidence to prove the nonage of the son. Raym. 84.

Matter in law ought not to be given in evidence at a trial, but only matters of fact, unless it be in case of a special verdict; matter in law is disputable, and reserved to be spoken to in arrest of judgment. Vaugh. 143. 147. In debt the defendant may give in evidence, that he paid money on an obligation before the day, &c. 2 Nels. Abr. 755. And a release may be given in evidence on nil debet. 5 Mod. 18. Though in indebitatus assumpsit the plaintiff shall not give any specialty in evidence to prove his debt, as a bond, indenture, &c. because he may bring action of debt upon that specialty. Moor 340.

Entry and expulsion may be given in evidence in debt for rent: Coverture may be given in evidence to avoid a deed, &c. Mod. Cas. 230. Usurious contracts, &c. may be given in evidence. 2 Nels. 756. Fraud may be given in evidence, on the general issue: And tampering with witnesses may be given in evidence against a party &c. 5 Rep. 60. But many things are to be pleaded; as justifications without title, in trespass, &c. and cannot be given in evidence upon Not guilty. Trials per pais 404. If in trespass Not guilty be pleaded; a licence may not be given in evidence to excuse the trespassor; for it must be pleaded. Kel. 59. And if the issue in detinue is non detinet, it shall not be given in evidence that the goods were pledged for money, and the money not paid; this is not good without pleading it: But a gift of the goods by the plaintiff may be given in evidence. Co. Lit. 283. But in an action of trover, for goods, evidence that they were pledged, for money lent or owing, and the money not being paid, or tendered, is a good bar to the action.

So in an issue in waste, no waste done, the defendant may give in evidence, that it came by lightning, tempest, or enemies; but that he repaired before action brought, must be specially pleaded, &c. 1 Inst. 282. If an issue be taken on the cutting of twenty oaks, evidence may be for ten; because either is a breach of covenant not to do waste. 2 Shep. Abr. 142. In ejectione firmæ, the plaintiff declares for 100 acres of land, and gives evidence only for forty, it will be good for so much. Cro. Eliz. 13. But if the point in issue be the sealing and delivery of a lease, and the witnesses prove it sealed and delivered, but did not know the lessor that sealed it: Or where proof is not made of livery and seisin, on issue of a lease for life: Or if on an issue upon a taking by capias ad satisfaciendum, and evidence be of taking by capias utlagatum, &c; in all these cases the evidence will not be good to maintain the issue. Plowd. 14: Kelw. 55, 59: Hob. 55. See further titles Pleading: General Issue: Copy.

II. 1. The King cannot be a witness under his sign manual, &c. 2 Rol. Abr. 686. Though it has been allowed he may, in relation to a promise made in behalf of another. Hob. 213. A peer produced as an evidence, ought to be sworn. 3 Keb. 631. It is no exception to an evidence, that he is a judge, or a juror, to try the person; for a judge may give evidence going off from the Bench. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. And a juror may be an evidence as to his particular knowledge; but then it must be on examination in open court, not before his brother jurors. 1 Lill. 552. Members of corporations shall be admitted or refused to give evidence in actions brought by corporations, as their interest is small or great; whereby it may be judged whether they will be partial or not. 2 Lev. 231, 241. But they will not generally be admitted; though inhabitants not free of the corporation may be good witnesses for the corporation, as their interest is not concerned; and members may be disfranchised on these occasions. Ibid. 236.

In actions against church-wardens and overseers of the poor for recovery of money mis-spent on the parish account, the evidence of the parishioners, not receiving alms, shall be allowed. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. cap. 11. In informations or indictments for not repairing highways and bridges, the evidence of the inhabitants of the town, corporation, &c. where such highways lie, shall be admitted. Stat. 1 Ann. cap. 18.

By Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 29, In actions on penal statutes, inhabitants of any place are witnesses to prove an offence, though though the penalty be given to the poor, or otherwiſe for the benefit of the ſaid pariſh or place, provided the penalty does not exceed 20*l*.

Kinſmen, though never ſo near, tenants, ſervants, maſters, attornies for their clients, and all others that are not infamous, and which want not underſtanding or are not parties in intereſt, may give evidence in a cauſe; though the credit of ſervants is left to the jury. 2 Rol. Abr. 685: 1 Vent. 243. A counſellor, attorney, or ſolicitor, is not to be examined as an evidence againſt their clients, becauſe they are obliged to keep their ſecrets; but they may be examined, as to any thing of their own knowledge before retained, not as counſel or attorney, &c. 1 Vent. 97.

The bail cannot be an evidence for his principal. If the plaintiff makes one a defendant in the ſuit, on purpoſe to impeach his teſtimony, under a pretence of his being a party in intereſt, he may nevertheleſs be examined de bene eſſe; and if the plaintiff prove no cauſe of action againſt him, his evidence ſhall be allowed in the cauſe, 2 Lill. Abr. 701. But in civil ſuits, and indictments for treſpaſſes, &c. the plaintiff or proſecutor uſually goes through his evidence, and thoſe defendants who are not affected, are ſometimes by direction of the judge, acquitted, and then give evidence for the other defendant or defendants, and ſometimes they have been examined, without the form of an acquittal. If a man makes himſelf a party in intereſt, after a plaintiff or defendant has an intereſt in his evidence, he may not by this deprive them of the benefit of his teſtimony. Skin. Rep. 586.

One that hath a legacy given him by will, is not a good witneſs to prove the will; but if he releaſe his legacy, he may be a good evidence. Skin. 704. It is the ſame of a deed; he that claims any benefit by it, may not be an evidence to prove that deed, in regard of his intereſt: And a perſon any ways concerned in the ſame title of land in queſtion, will not be admitted as evidence. Ibid. 705. But it has been held, that an heir apparent may be a witneſs concerning a title of land; and yet a remainder-man, who hath a preſent intereſt, cannot. 1 Salk. 385. If a legatee is permitted to be ſworn and examined, the counſel cannot afterwards except againſt his evidence. 1 Ld. Raym. 730.

To obviate all difficulties and inconveniences, it is enacted by Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 6, That any deviſe to a perſon being witneſs to any will or codicil, ſhall be void: And ſuch perſon ſhall be admitted as a witneſs—And that any creditor atteſting a will or codicil, by which his debt is charged upon land, ſhall be admitted as a witneſs to the execution, notwithſtanding ſuch charge—The credit of every ſuch witneſs being left to the conſideration of the court and jury.

Witneſſes competent at law, are competent to prove a nuncupative will by Stat. 4 Ann c. 16. ſ. 14: The ſon of a legatee is no witneſs to a will in the ſpiritual court; nevertheleſs it is held, he may be a good evidence to prove a nuncupative will, within the intent of the ſtatute of frauds. 1 L. Ray. 85. See title Will.

A grantee who is a bare truſtee, it is ſaid, is a good witneſs to prove the execution of the deed made to himſelf. 1 P. Wil. 290: If an action is brought againſt many perſons for taking of goods, one of them concerned may be admitted as an evidence againſt the reſt. Comberb. 367, See 1 Mod. 282: In criminal caſes, as of robbery on the highway, in action againſt the hundred; in rapes of women, or where a woman is married by force, &c. a man or a woman may be an evidence in their own cauſe. 1 Vent. 243. And in private enormous cheats, a perſon may give evidence in his own cauſe, where no body elſe can be a witneſs of the circumſtances of the fact, but he that ſuffers. 1 Salk. 286. Upon an information on the ſtatute againſt uſury, he that borrows the money, after he hath paid it, may be an evidence; but not before. Raym. 191.

An alien infidel, may not be an evidence; but a Jew may, and be ſworn on the Old Teſtament. 1 Inſt. 6. A quaker ſhall not be permitted to give evidence in any criminal cauſe, (unleſs he will take an oath): Though on other occaſions, his ſolemn affirmation ſhall be accepted inſtead of an oath. Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 34. See title Quaker.—The oath of a Gentoo ſworn according to the circumſtances of his religion, has been admitted in a civil matter. 1 Atk. 21. And by Willes, C. J. an infidel in general, is an admiſſible witneſs, for the term does not imply that he is an atheiſt; but wherever it appears that a witneſs has no idea of a God or religion, he ſhall not be permitted to give his teſtimony. 1 Atk. 40, 45.

Perſons non ſanæ memoriæ; thoſe that are attainted of conſpiracy, or in a præmunire upon the ſtatute 5 Eliz. c. 1; Popiſh recuſants convict, on the Stat. 3 Jac. I. c. 5, are diſabled to give evidence; but ſee contra 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 12. ſ. 6. So perſons convicted of felony, perjury, &c. And if one by judgment hath ſtood on the pillory, or been whipped; for his infamy he ſhall not be admitted to give evidence, whilſt the judgment is in force: But the record of conviction muſt be produced, on objecting againſt his teſtimony; and the witneſs ſhall not be aſked any queſtion to accuſe himſelf, though his credit may be impeached by other evidences, as to his character in general, ſo as not to make proof of particular crimes, whereof he hath not been convicted. 3 Inſt. 108, 219: 3 Lev. 426. If after a man hath ſtood in the pillory, &c. he be pardoned, he may be an evidence: And notwithſtanding judgment of the pillory infers infamy at common law; by the civil and canon law it imports no infamy, unleſs the cauſe for which the perſon was convicted was infamous; and therefore ſuch may be a good witneſs to a will, if not convicted of any infamous act. 3 Lev. 426, 427. It has been held, that it is not ſtanding in the pillory, diſables a perſon to give evidence; but ſtanding there upon a judgment for an infamous crime, as forgery, &c. If for a libel, a man may be a witneſs. 5 Mod. 74: 3 Nelſ. Abr. 557.

Perſons excommunicated cannot be witneſſes, becauſe being excluded out of the church, they are ſuppoſed not to be under the influence of any religion. But perſons outlawed may be witneſſes, becauſe they are puniſhed in their properties and not in the loſs of their reputation, and the outlawry has no manner of influence on their credibility. Bull. N. P. 292, 3.

A man is convicted of felony, and afterwards pardoned, he may be a good evidence. Raym. 369. So where burnt in the hand, which is quaſi a ſtatute pardon; and it is ſaid this burning in the hand reſtores the offender to his credit. Ibid. 330. A perſon who was condemned to be hanged for burglary, but having a pardon for tranſportation, hath been allowed to be a good evidence. 5 Mod. 18. One outlawed for treaſon and pardoned may be an evidence.

State

State Trials, vol. 3. 515. Perſons acquitted, or guilty of the ſame crime, (while they remain unconvicted) may be evidence againſt their fellows. Kel. 17. Though no evidence ought to be given of what an accomplice hath ſaid, who is not in the ſame indictment. State Trials, vol. 2. 414. An informer may be a witneſs, though he is to have part of the forfeiture, where no other witneſſes can be had. Wood's Inſtit. 598. Members of either Houſe of Parliament may be witneſſes on impeachments. State Trials, vol. 2. 632.

Ideots, madmen, and children, are excluded from giving evidence for want of ſkill and diſcernment.

2. In addition to what has been already ſaid as to the number of witneſſes, we may mention that it is required by Stat. 29 Car. 2. cap. 3, "That all deviſes of lands ſhall be atteſted and ſubſcribed in the preſence of the teſtator, by three or four credible witneſſes, or elſe ſhall be void." See title Will.

If a witneſs, ſerved with a proceſs in a civil cauſe, refuſe to appear, being tendered reaſonable charges, and having no lawful excuſe, action on the caſe lies againſt him, whereon damages ſhall be recovered: And a feme covert not appearing, action may be brought againſt the huſband and her. Stat. 5 Eliz. cap. 9: 1 Leon. 112.

If there is a doubt that a witneſs will not attend, the beſt way is to ſerve him with the original ſubpœna, keeping a copy, and if he is at any diſtance from the place of trial, tender reaſonable charges: if he does not appear at the trial, call him three times on his ſubpœna, and then, if occaſion requires, the party may bring his action, or move for an attachment.

In a criminal cauſe, if a witneſs refuſe to appear and give evidence, being ſerved with proceſs, the court will put off the trial, and grant attachment againſt him; and, as refuſing to give evidence is a great contempt, the party may be committed and fined. 1 Salk. 278.

Preventing evidence to be given againſt a criminal, is puniſhable by fine and impriſonment; and a perſon was fined one thouſand marks in ſuch a caſe. Hill. 1663. B. R. Perſons diſſuading a witneſs from giving evidence, &c. and jurors or others diſcloſing evidence given, are likewiſe offences puniſhed by fine and impriſonment. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22.

By Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 71. § 16, (made to prevent horſe-ſtealing, and which ſee under that head,) The juſtice before whom complaint ſhall be made for any offence againſt the act, may ſummon any perſon, other than the party complained againſt, to appear before him to give evidence; and in caſe ſuch perſon ſhall wilfully refuſe or neglect to attend or give evidence, he ſhall forfeit 10*l.* and in default of payment, or in caſe of inability ſhall ſtand committed to gaol, for not more than two months, nor leſs than one. And ſimilar puniſhments are inflictedby other ſtatutes.

Where neceſſity requires, witneſſes may be examined apart in court, till they have given all they have to ſay in evidence; ſo that what one has depoſed, may not induce another to give his evidence to the ſame effect. Forteſc. 54.

A witneſs ſhall not be examined where his evidence tends to clear or accuſe himſelf of a crime. State Trials, vol. 1. 557. Nor is he bound to give any anſwer by which he confeſſes or accuſes himſelf of any crime. And a witneſs ſhall not be croſs-examined till he hath gone through the evidence on the ſide whereon produced. Ibid. vol. 2. 772. The court in criminal caſes, is to examine the witneſſes, and not the priſoner or proſecutors. Ibid. vol. 1. 143. Though in eaſe of the court, counſel are frequently admitted to examine the evidence. An evidence ſhall not be permitted to read his evidence, but he may look on his notes to refreſh his memory. Ibid. vol. 4. 45. An evidence may not recite his evidence to the jury, after gone from the bar, and he hath given his evidence in court; if he doth, the verdict may be ſet aſide. Cro. Eliz. 159. One that is to be an evidence at a trial, ought not to be examined before the trial, but by the conſent of both parties, and a rule of court for that purpoſe.

No evidence ought to be produced againſt a man in a trial for his life, but what is given in his preſence. State Trials, vol. 4. 227. And evidence ſhall not be given againſt the priſoner for any other crime than that for which proſecuted. Ibid. vol. 3. 947. A priſoner may bring evidence to prove that the witneſſes gave a different teſtimony before a juſtice of peace, or at another trial: though he may not call witneſſes to diſprove what his own witneſſes have ſworn. Ibid. vol. 2. 623, 792. And no objection can be made to the evidence after verdict given. vol. 4. 35. It is juſtifiable to maintain or ſubſiſt an evidence, but not to give him any reward; for this, if proved, will avoid his teſtimony. Ibid. vol. 2. 470.

A witneſs ſhall not be examined to any thing that does not relate to the matter in iſſue. Ibid. vol. 2. 343. And where an iſſue is not perfect, no evidence can be applied, nor can the juſtices proceed to trial. Brownl. 42, 47, 435. If evidence doth not warrant and maintain the ſame thing that is in iſſue, the evidence is defective, and may be demurred upon; but proving the ſubſtance is ſufficient. Trials per Pais 425. Evidence may be given of facts before and after the time they are laid in the indictment. And where a place is laid only for a venue in an indictment, or an appeal, (and not made part of the deſcription of the fact) proof of the ſame crime may be made at any other place in the ſame county; and after a crime hath been proved in the county where laid, evidence may be given of other inſtances of the ſame crime, in another county, to ſatisfy the jury. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46.

But where a certain place is made part of the deſcription of the fact againſt the defendant, the leaſt variation as to ſuch place between the evidence and indictment is fatal. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. It hath been alſo adjudged, that where an indictment ſets forth all the ſpecial matter, in reſpect whereof the law implies malice, variance between the indictment and evidence as to the circumſtances of the fact, doth not hurt; ſo that the ſubſtance of the matter be found by the evidence. Ibid.

The burthen of proving lies on the plaintiff; and the preſumption ſhall ſtand, until the contrary appear: though that which plainly appeareth, need not be given in evidence. 7 Rep. 40: Co. Lit. 233. The defendant's counſel is to conclude by way of anſwer to the evidence given to the jury by the plaintiff's: but he who doth begin to maintain the iſſue to be tried, ought to conclude and ſum up the evidence given, which is no more than to put the jury in mind how he hath proved his cauſe. 1 Lill. 551. When a witneſs hath been fully examined by the party producing him, and croſs examined by counſel for the adverſe party, the court will ſometimes aſk a queſtion or two of the witneſs, when the jury may put any queſtions they think proper to the judge, for him to put to the witneſs, after which counſel on either ſide ſide cannot aſk a ſingle queſtion of the witneſs, without leave of the court; and in fact the uſual method is to pray the court, if not improper, to aſk ſuch a queſtion, or to examine to ſuch a fact, &c. which may have dropped from the witneſs, after both counſel had finiſhed their examination of him. If it is proper and neceſſary, the court will do it, otherwiſe not.

3. It ſeems to have been agreed, as a general rule, (even before the ſtatute of frauds and perjuries,) that no parol evidence could be admitted to controul what appeared on the face of a deed or will, not only from the danger of perjury, but from a preſumption, that whatſoever the parties at that time had in contemplation, was reduced into writing. 5 Co. 68 a. b: 8 Co. 155 a: Kelw. 49.

But this rule has received a relaxation, eſpecially in the courts of equity, where a diſtinction has been taken between evidence, that may be offered to a jury, and ſuch as may be uſed only to inform the conſcience of the court; viz. that in the firſt caſe no ſuch evidence ſhould be admitted; becauſe the jury might be inveigled thereby; but that in the ſecond it could do no hurt, becauſe the court were judges of the whole matter, and could diſtinguiſh what weight and ſtreſs ought to be laid on ſuch evidence. 2 Vern. 98, 337, 625.

Alſo to aſcertain a fact, parol evidence hath been admitted to explain the intent of the teſtator: as where the teſtator had two ſons both named John, and he deviſed lands to his ſon John; here parol evidence was admitted to ſhew which of his ſons he meant; and it being proved, that one of his ſons of that name had been abſent ſeveral years beyond ſea, and that the teſtator apprehended that he was dead, the deviſe was held good, and that the other ſhould take; for without ſuch evidence the will muſt be void. 2 Vern. 98, 337, 625. So parol evidence may be admitted to explain the intent of a teſtator in cancelling a will. Cowp. 53.

Parol evidence to prove that a bond was given, in lieu of dower, refuſed. 1 Wilſ. 34. Parol proof admitted that the teſtator intended his wife executrix ſhould have the reſidue undiſpoſed of. Id. 313. Debt upon bond with condition for payment of money to Lydia Dovey, who is a third perſon, ſhe declares the defendant owes her nothing, and upon proof thereof, a verdict was for the defendant; ſuch declaration was properly given in evidence, for Lydia Dovey is to be conſidered as the real plaintiff. Id. 257.

Parol evidence ſhall not be admitted to annul or ſubſtantially vary a written agreement. 3 Wilſ. 275: Str. 794: 3 Teren Rep. 590. So parol evidence ſhall not be received, to prove an additional rent payable by a tenant, beyond that expreſſed in the written agreement for a leaſe. 2 Bl. Rep. 1249.

Parol evidence may be admitted to prove other conſiderations than thoſe mentioned in a deed; as where the conditions mentioned in the deed were 10,000*l.* and natural love and affection, and the premiſes were worth 30,000*l.* an iſſue was directed to try whether natural love and affection made any part of the conſideration; and it being found that they did not, the deed was ſet aſide. 7 Bro. P. C. 70: cited 3 Term Rep. 473.

By the ſtatute of frauds, ſeveral things muſt be evidenced by writing, of which, before that ſtatute, parol evidence had been ſufficient. See this Dict. title Fraud.

Sometimes violent preſumption will be admitted for evidence without witneſſes; as where a perſon is run through the body in a houſe, and one is ſeen to come out of the houſe with a bloody ſword, &c. But on this the court ought not to judge haſtily. 1 Inſt. 6, 673. And though preſumptive and circumſtantial evidence may be ſufficient in felony, it is not ſo in treaſon. State Trials, vol. 4. p. 307.

Perſons once in being ſhall be intended ſtill living, if the contrary is not proved. 2 Rol. Rep. 461. But now by Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 6, it is enacted, "That if any perſon or perſons, for whoſe life or lives eſtates have been, or ſhall be granted, ſhall remain beyond the ſeas, or elſewhere abſent themſelves in this realm, by the ſpace of ſeven years together, and no ſufficient and evident proof made of the life or lives of ſuch perſon or perſons reſpectively, in any action commenced for the recovery of ſuch tenements by the leſſors or reverſioners, in every ſuch caſe the perſon or perſons, upon whoſe life or lives ſuch eſtate depended, ſhall be accounted as naturally dead; and in every action brought for the recovery of the ſaid tenements, by the leſſors or reverſioners, their heirs or aſſigns, the judges, before whom ſuch action ſhall be brought, ſhall direct the jury to give their verdict, as if the perſon ſo remaining beyond the ſeas, or otherwiſe abſenting himſelf, were dead." See title Life-Eſtate.

As to hearſay evidence, it ſeems agreed, that what another has been heard to ſay, is no evidence, becauſe the party was not on oath; alſo, becauſe the party, who is affected thereby, had not an opportunity of croſs-examining; but ſuch ſpeeches or diſcourſes may be made uſe of by way of inducement or illuſtration of what is properly evidence. 1 Mod. 383: Skin. 402.

Alſo what a witneſs hath been heard to ſay at another time, may be given in evidence, in order either to invalidate or confirm the teſtimony he gives in court. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. So what a perſon accuſed of a crime hath been heard to ſay at another time, may be given in evidence at his trial, for or againſt him. Id. ib.

A witneſs by hearſay of a ſtranger ſhall not be allowed, except perhaps to confirm the evidence of a witneſs that ſpoke of his knowledge. Wood's Inſtit. 644.

If a perſon who gave evidence in a former trial, be dead; upon proof of his death, any perſon who heard him give evidence, may be admitted to give the ſame evidence between the ſame parties; but a copy of the record of the trial when the evidence was given ought to be produced. 3 Inſt. 2: Lill. Abr. 705.

And evidence given at one trial in criminal caſes, has been held not to be evidence at another's trial. 2 State Trials, 863.

As to evidence in paſſing a bill of attainder, ſee 5 State Trials, 114, 124, 132, 676. But the ſame evidence is requiſite on an impeachment in parliament, as in private courts.

EWE, ewa.] A German word ſignifying law; it is mentioned in Leg. W. 1.

EXACTION, is defined to be a wrong done by an officer, or one in pretended authority, by taking a reward or fee for that which the law allows not. The difference between exaction and extortion is this: extortion is where an officer extorts more than his due, when ſomething is due to him; and exaction is, when he wreſts a fee or reward, where none is due; for which the offender is to be fined and impriſoned, and render to the party twice as much as the money he ſo takes. *Co. EXAMINERS IN THE CHANCERY, examinatores.] Two officers of that court, who examine upon oath, witneſſes produced by either ſide, in London, or near it, on ſuch interrogatories as the parties to any ſuit exhibit for that purpoſe; and ſometimes the parties themſelves are, by particular order, likewiſe examined by them. In the country, witneſſes are examined by commiſſioners, (uſually attornies not concerned in the cauſe,) on the parties joining in commiſſion, &c. See title Depoſitions.

EXANNUAL ROLL. In the old way of exhibiting ſheriff's accounts, the illeviable fines and deſperate debts were tranſcribed into a roll under this name; which was yearly read, to ſee what might be gotten. Hale's Sher. Acco. 67.

EXCAMBIATORES, A word uſed anciently for exchangers of land: but Cowel ſuppoſes them to be ſuch as we now call brokers, that deal upon the Exchange between merchants.

EXCEPTION, exceptio.] Is a ſtop or ſtay to an action; and divided into dilatory and peremptory. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 5. In law proceedings, it is a denial of a matter alledged in bar to the action; and in Chancery it is what is alledged againſt the ſufficiency of an anſwer, &c. The counſel in a cauſe are to take all their exceptions to the record at one time; and before the court hath delivered any opinion thereon. 1 Lil. Abr. 559. And on an indictment for treaſon, &c. exception is to be taken for miſnaming, falſe Latin, &c. before any evidence is given in court; or the indictment ſhall be good. Stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. See titles Indictment; Treaſon.

Where, by a general pardon, any particular crime is excepted; if a perſon be attainted, &c. of that offence, he ſhall have no benefit of the pardon. 6 Rep. 13: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 765. And when a pardon is with an exception as to perſons, the party who pleads it ought to ſhew, that he is not any of the parties excepted. 1 Lev. 26. A negative expreſſion may be taken to enure to the ſame intent as an exception; for an exception in its nature is but a denial of what is taken to be good by the other party, either in point of law or pleading. And exceptio in non exceptis firmat regulam. 1 Lill. 559.

EXCEPTION TO EVIDENCE, &c. See this Dict. title Bill of Exceptions.

EXCEPTION IN DEEDS AND WRITINGS, Keeps the things from paſſing thereby; being a ſaving out of the deed, as if the ſame had not been granted: but it is to be a particular thing out of a general one, as a room out of an houſe, ground out of a manor, timber out of land, &c. And it muſt not be of a thing expreſsly granted in a deed: alſo it muſt be of what is ſeverable from, and not inſeparably incident to, the grant. Co. Lit. 47: 1 Lev. 287: Cro. El. 244.

Where an exception goeth to the whole thing granted or demiſed, the exception is void. Cro. El. 6. A man makes a leaſe of a manor, excepting all courts, &c. the exception is void as to the courts; for having leaſed the manor, it cannot be ſuch without courts. Hob. 108: Moor 870. A leaſe was made of all a man's lands in L. excepting his manor of H. and he had no lands in L. but the ſaid manor; it was adjudged that the manor paſſed, and that the exception was void. Hob. 170: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 764. A leaſe of an houſe and ſhops, except the ſhops; though this may extend to other ſhops, it is void as to the ſhops belonging to the houſe demiſed, becauſe it is repugnant to the leaſe. Dyer 265.

If an exception croſſes the grant, or is repugnant to it, the ſame is void: and if there be a ſaving or exception out of an exception, it may make a particular thing as if never excepted; as if a leaſe be made of a rectory, excepting the parſonage-houſe, ſaving to the leſſee a chamber; this chamber not being excepted out of the leaſe, ſhall paſs by the leaſe of the rectory. Hob. 72. 170: Cro. El. 372: Owen 20.

By exception of trees, the ſoil is not excepted, but only ſufficient nutriment for the trees: for the leſſee ſhall have the paſture growing under them, though the leſſor ſhall have all the benefit of the trees, maſt, fruit, &c. and the trees are parcel of the inheritance. 5 Rep. 11: 11 Rep. 48, 50. But it has been adjudged, that, by an exception of woods, underwood and coppices, the ſoil of the coppices is excepted. Poph. 146: Cro. Jac. 487. If a leſſee for years aſſign over his term, excepting the trees, &c. the exception is not good; becauſe no one can have a ſpecial property in the trees, but the owner of the land. 2 Nelſ. 764. Though where leſſee for life makes a leaſe for years excepting the wood, &c. this may be a good exception, although he hath not any intereſt in it but as a leſſee, in regard he is chargeable in waſte, &c. and hath not granted his whole term. Cro. Jac. 296: 1 Lill. Abr. 560. Theſe exceptions are commonly in leaſes for life and years; and muſt be always of a thing in eſſe. Co. Lit. 47. See titles Grant: Deed: Leaſe: Condition.

EXCHANGE, Excambium or cambium; with the Civilians, permutatio.] The King's Exchange, is the place appointed by the King for exchange of plate or bullion for the King's coin, &c. Theſe places have been divers heretofore; but now there is only one, viz. the Mint in the Tower. See Stats. 25 Ed. 3. ſt. 5. c. 12: 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 19. and this Dict. titles Coin: Money.—There is alſo a Royal Exchange of Merchants in London.

Exchange among merchants is a commerce of money, or a bartering or exchanging of the money of one city or country for that of another: money in this ſenſe, is either real or imaginary; real, any real ſpecies current in any country at a certain price, at which it paſſes by the authority of the State, and of its own intrinſic value: and by imaginary money is underſtood, all the denominations made uſe of to expreſs any ſum of money, which is not the juſt value of any real ſpecies. Lex Mercatoria.

The methods of exchange for money uſed in England ought to be par pro pari, according to value for value: and our exchange is grounded on the weight and fineneſs of our own money, and the weight and fineneſs of that of other countries, according to their ſeveral ſtandards, proportionable in their valuation; which being truly and juſtly made, reduces the price of the exchange of money of any nation or country to a certainty. But this courſe of exchange is of late abuſed, and money is become a merchandiſe, that riſes and falls in its price in regard to the plenty and ſcarcity of it. At London, all exchanges are made upon the pound ſterling of 20 s. In the Low Countries, France and Germany, upon the French crown; Spain and Italy, &c. upon the ducat; and at Florence, Venice, and other places in the Streights, by the dollar and florin. See title Bill of Exchange.

Exchanges of Goods and Merchandise, Were the original and natural way of commerce, precedent to buying; for there was no buying till money was invented; though in exchanging, both parties are as buyers and ſellers, and both equally warrant. 3 Salk. 157.

Exchange of Lands. A mutual grant of equal intereſt in lands or tenements, the one in conſideration of the other: and is uſed peculiarly in our Common-law for that compenſation which the warrantor muſt make to the warrantee, value for value, if the land warranted be recovered from the warrantee. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 16: Accomp. Conv. 1 vol. 170. Alſo there is a tacit condition of reentry in this deed, on the lands given in exchange, in caſe of eviction; and on the warranty to vouch and recover over in value, &c. For if either of the parties is evicted, even of a part, the exchange is defeated. 4 Rep. 121: Cro. Eliz. 903.

The word Exchange is ſo individually requiſite and appropriated by law to this caſe, that it cannot be ſupplied by any other word, or expreſſed by any circumlocution. 1 Inſt. 50, 51. The eſtates exchanged muſt be equal in quantity of intereſt, value is immaterial; as fee-ſimple for fee-ſimple, a leaſe for 20 years for a leaſe for 20 years, and the like. Litt. § 64, 5. And the exchange may be of things that lie either grant or in livery. But no livery of ſeiſin, even in exchanges of freehold, is neceſſary to perfect the conveyance; for each party ſtands in the place of the other, and occupies his right, and each of them hath already had corporal poſſeſſion of his own land. Litt. § 62.—Entry however muſt be made on both ſides; for if either party die before entry, the exchange is void for want of ſufficient notoriety. 1 Inſt. 50.

An exchange may be made of lands in fee-ſimple, fee-tail, for life, &c. The eſtates granted are to be equal, as fee-ſimple for fee-ſimple, &c. though the lands need not be of equal value, or of the like nature: for a rent in fee iſſuing out of land, may be exchanged for land in fee; Lit. 63, 64: Co. Lit. 50, 51. If an exchange be made between tenant for life, and tenant in tail after poſſibility of iſſue extinct, the exchange is good; becauſe their eſtates are equal. 11 Rep. 80: Moor 665.

An exchange made between tenant in tail, and another, of unequal intereſt, may be good during his life; but his iſſue, when of full age, ſhall avoid it. And exchanges made by infants; by perſons non ſanæ memoriæ; a huſband of the wife's lands, &c. are not void, but voidable only; by the infant at his full age, the heir of the perſon non ſanæ memoriæ, and the feme after the death of the huſband, who may waive the poſſeſſion and diſagree to them. Perk. § 277, 281.

Two jointenants and two tenants in common may exchange their lands: and by this deed, freeholds paſs without livery and ſeiſin; but the word exchange is to be uſed; and there muſt be execution of the exchange, by entry on the lands in the life of the parties, or the exchange will be void. 1 Inſt. 51: 1 Mod. 91.

Littleton expreſſes himſelf concerning an exchange as of a tranſaction between two; and in the caſe of Eton College, 2 Wilſ. part 3. p. 483, the court held, that an exchange in the ſtrict legal ſenſe of the word, cannot be between three; the principles of it not being applicable to more than two diſtinct contracting parties, for want of the mutuality and reciprocity on which its operation ſo intirely depends; and the caſe, above mentioned, of tenants in common exchanging with jointenants is not irreconcileable to this rule; becauſe though four perſons may be named, yet they conſtitute only two diſtinct parties; and conſequently there is the ſame reciprocity as if the tranſaction were between two perſons only.—And this applies to any number of perſons, if ſo conjoined, as to make only two diſtinct relative parties. 1 Inſt. 50 b. 51 a. in notis.

Sometimes lands intended to paſs by exchange, not having the qualities and incidents of exchanged lands, may paſs by way of gift or grant; as if two perſons are ſeiſed of two acres of land, and one of them by deed gives his acre to the other, and the other his acre to him, and each of them gives livery of ſeiſin upon his acre given in exchange; here the acres will paſs from one to the other, but not in a way of exchange, becauſe there was no word of exchange in the deed. Litt. ſect. 62: Perk. 253.

A man grants to another lands in fee-ſimple, for lands in tail by way of exchange; or land in tail, for lands for life, &c. theſe deeds will not take effect as exchanges. Fitz. Exchange 15, 64: Co. Lit. 64. If tenant in tail give his land in exchange, for other land of the ſame eſtate tail, the iſſue in tail may make it good if he will, or avoid the exchange. 1 Rep. 96. A feoffment is made to A. and B. and the heirs of A. and they exchange the land for other lands; this will be good, and they ſhall hold the lands in the ſame nature that the land given in exchange was held. Perk. § 277.

If a lord releaſe to the tenant his ſervices in tail, in exchange of land given to the lord in exchange in tail alſo, it is ill: but if leſſee for life of one acre, give another acre to his leſſor in tail, in exchange for a releaſe from him of that acre, habendum in tail in like manner, it is a good exchange. Perk. § 219, 276, 283. In caſe two perſons make an exchange of land, and limit no eſtate; each ſhall have an eſtate for life, by implication: but if an expreſs eſtate be limited to one for life, and none to the other, it will be void. 19 H. 6. 27. And to make a good exchange, both the things muſt be in eſſe at the time of the exchange. Co. Lit. 50: 3 Ed. 4. 10.

But an exchange may be made to take effect in future, as well as preſently; for if it be, that after the feaſt of Eaſter A. B. ſhall have ſuch lands in D. in exchange for his lands in S. this is good. Perk. § 265.

By a ſpecial kind of agreement, an exchange may be of unequal eſtates. Moor, c. 209. The condition and warranty in exchanges run to the parties in privity; not to an aſſignee, &c. And if after two have exchanged lands, one of them releaſes to the other the warranty in law, it will not deſtroy the exchange. 4 Rep. 122: 1 Rol. Abr. 815. The parties themſelves, and all privies and ſtrangers for the moſt part may take advantage of exchanges void by any defect or accident: contra, if they are voidable, &c. 1 Rep. 105: Dyer 285.

EXCHANGE OF CHURCH LIVINGS. Theſe exchanges are now ſeldom uſed, except that parſons ſometimes exchange their churches, and reſign them into the biſhop's hands: and this is not a perfect exchange till the parties are inducted; for if either dies before they both are inducted, the exchange is void. Wood's Inſt. 284: 2 Comm. 323.

By Stat. 31 El. c. 6. § 8, If any incumbent of any benefice with cure of ſouls, ſhall corruptly reſign or exchange the ſame; or corruptly take for or in any reſpect of the reſigning or exchanging the ſame, directly or indirectly, any penſion, ſum of money, or other benefit whatſoever; as well the giver as the taker, ſhall loſe double the value of the ſum; half to the Crown, and half to him that ſhall ſue for the ſame. See this Dict. titles Simony: Advowſon.

If two parſons by one inſtrument agree to exchange their benefices, and in order thereto reſign them into the hands of the Ordinary, ſuch exchange being executed on both parts, is good; and each may enjoy the other's living: but the patrons muſt preſent them again to each living; and if they refuſe to do it, or the Ordinary will not admit them reſpectively, then the exchange is not executed; and in ſuch caſe either clerk may return to his former living, even though one of them ſhould be admitted, inſtituted and inducted to the benefice of the other; which is expreſſed in the exchange itſelf, and the proteſtation uſually added to it. 2 Rep. 74: Rol. Abr. 814.

EXCHANGEORS. Thoſe that return money by bills of exchange. See Excambiatores. 5 R. 2. c. 2.

EXCHEQUER.

SCACCARIUM, from the Fr. eſchequier, i. e. abacus, tabula luſoria, or from the Germ. ſchatz, viz. theſaurus.] An ancient Court of record, wherein all cauſes touching the revenue and rights of the crown are heard and determined; and where the revenues of the crown are received. Camden in his Britan. p. 113, ſaith, This court took its name à tabulâ ad quam aſſidebant, the cloth which covered it being party coloured, or chequered: we had it from the Normans, as appears by the Grand Cuſtumary, cap. 56; where it is deſcribed to be an aſſembly of high juſticiers, to whom it appertained to amend that which the inferior juſticiers had miſdone, and unadviſedly judged, and to do right to all as from the Prince's mouth; and this ſeems the origin of the Court of Exchequer-Chamber.

The Court of Exchequer is inferior in rank, not only to the court of King's Bench, but to the Common Pleas alſo; it is a very ancient court of record, ſet up by William the Conqueror, as a part of the aula regia, though regulated and reduced to it's preſent order by king Edward I; and intended principally to order the revenues of the crown, and to recover the king's debts and duties. 4 Inſt. 103—116. It is called the Exchequer, ſcaccarium, from the chequed cloth, reſembling a cheſs-board, which covers the table there; and on which when certain of the king's accounts are made up, the ſums are marked and ſcored with counters. It conſiſts of two diviſions: the receipt of the Exchequer, which manages the royal revenue; and the court or judicial part of it; which latter is again ſub-divided into a court of Equity, and a court of Common-law.

The Court of Equity is held in the Exchequer Chamber before the Lord Treaſurer, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the chief baron, and three puiſne Barons. Theſe Mr. Selden conjectures (title Hon. 2, 5, 16,) to have been anciently made out of ſuch as were Barons of the kingdom or parliamentary barons; and thence to have derived their name; which conjecture receives great ſtrength from Bracton's explanation of Magna Carta, c. 14, which directs that the earls and barons be amerced by their peers; that is, ſays he, by the barons of the Exchequer l. 3. tr. 2. c. 1. § 3.

The primary and original buſineſs of this court is to call the King's debtors to account, by bill filed by the attorney general; and to recover any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, any goods, chattels, or other profits or benefits, belonging to the crown. So that by their original conſtitution the juriſdiction of the courts of Common Pleas, King's Bench, and Exchequer, was entirely ſeparate and diſtinct: the Common Pleas being intended to decide all controverſies between Subject and Subject; the King's Bench to correct all crimes and miſdemeanors that amount to a breach of the King's peace; and the Exchequer to adjuſt and recover the King's revenue. See this Dict. titles Courts: King's Bench: Common Pleas. But as, by a fiction, almoſt all ſorts of civil actions are now allowed to be brought in the King's Bench, in like manner, by another fiction, all kinds of perſonal ſuits may be proſecuted in the court of Exchequer. For as all the officers and miniſters of this court have, like thoſe of other ſuperior courts, the privilege of ſuing and being ſued only in their own court; ſo alſo the King's debtors and farmers, and all accomptants of the exchequer, are privileged to ſue and implead all manner of perſons in the ſame court of equity, that they themſelves are called into. They have likewiſe privilege to ſue and implead one another, or any ſtranger, in the ſame kind of Common-law actions (where the perſonalty only is concerned) as are proſecuted in the court of Common Pleas.

This gives origin to the Common-law part of their juriſdiction; which was eſtabliſhed merely for the benefit of the King's accomptants; and is exerciſed by the barons only of the Exchequer, and not the treaſurer or chancellor. The writ upon which all proceedings here are grounded is called a quo minùs: in which the plaintiff ſuggeſts that he is the King's farmer or debtor, and that the defendant hath done him the injury or damage complained of; quo minùs ſufficiens exiſtit, (by which he is the leſs able,) to pay the King his debt or rent. And theſe ſuits are expreſsly directed, by what is called the ſtatute of Rutland, 10 E. 1. c. 11, to be confined to ſuch matters only, only, as ſpecially concern the King or his miniſters of the Exchequer. And by the articuli ſuper cartas, 28 Ed. 1. c. 4, it is enacted, that no Common Pleas be thenceforth holden in the Exchequer, contrary to the form of the great charter. But now, by the ſuggeſtion of privilege, any perſon may be admitted to ſue in the Exchequer; as well as the King's accomptant. The ſurmiſe of being debtor to the King, is therefore become matter of form and mere words of courſe, and the court is open to all the nation equally. The ſame holds with regard to the equity ſide of the court: for there any perſon may file a bill againſt another upon a bare ſuggeſtion that he is the King's accomptant; but whether he is ſo, or not, is never controverted.

In this court on the equity ſide, the clergy have long uſed to exhibit their bills for the non-payment of tithes, in which caſe the ſurmiſe of being the King's debtor is no fiction, they being bound to pay him their firſt fruits, and annual tenths. But the Chancery has of late years obtained a large ſhare in this buſineſs. See this Dict. titles Chancery: Equity.

An appeal from the equity ſide of this court lies immediately to the Houſe of Peers; but from the Common-law ſide, in purſuance of the Stat. 31 E. 3. c. 12, a writ of error muſt be firſt brought into the court of Exchequer Chamber. And from the determination there had, there lies in the dernier reſort, a writ of error to the Houſe of Lords. 3 Comm. 44. See this Dict. titles Decree: Equity: Error.

Some perſons think there was an Exchequer under the Anglo-Saxon Kings; but our beſt hiſtorians are of opinion, that it was erected by King William the Firſt, its model being taken from the tranſmarine Exchequer, eſtabliſhed in Normandy long before that time. Madox's Hiſt. Exchcq.

In the reign of Hen. the Firſt, there was an Exchequer, which has continued ever ſince: and the judges of the court were at that time ſtiled Barones Scaccarii, and adminiſtred juſtice to the ſubjects. In ancient times the Barons of the Exchequer dealt in affairs relating to the ſtate, or public ſervice of the crown and realm: and were greatly concerned in the preſervation of the prerogative, as well as the revenue of the crown; for at the Exchequer it was the care of the Treaſurer and Barons to ſee that the rights of the crown were no ways invaded. Lex Conſtitutionis 198.

On account of the authority and dignity of the court of Exchequer, anciently it was held in the King's palace; and the acts thereof were not be examined or controlled in any other of the King's ordinary courts of juſtice: the Exchequer was the great repoſitory of records, wherein the records of the other courts at Weſtminſter, &c. were brought to be laid up in the Treaſury there. And writs of the Chancery were ſometimes made forth at the Exchequer; writs of ſummons to aſſemble parliaments, &c. Ibid.

The Exchequer has been commonly held at Weſtminſter, the uſual place of the King's reſidence; but it hath been ſometimes holden at other places, as the King pleaſed; as at Wincheſter, &c. And in the Exchequer there are reckoned ſeven courts, viz. the court of Pleas; the court of Accounts; the court of Receipts; the court of the Exchequer-Chamber (being the aſſembly of all the judges of England for difficult matters in law); the court of Exchequer-Chamber for Errors in the court of Exchequer; for Errors in the King's Bench; and the court of Equity in the Exchequer Chamber. 4 Inſt. 119.

But, according to the uſual diviſion for the diſpatch of all common buſineſs, the Exchequer is divided (as has been already noticed) into two parts; one whereof is converſant eſpecially in the judicial hearing and deciding of cauſes pertaining to the Prince's coffers, anciently called Scaccarium Computorum; the other is the Receipt of the Exchequer, which is properly employed in the receiving and payment of money. And it has been obſerved, that about the time of the Conqueſt there was very little money in ſpecie in the realm; for then the tenants of knights' fees anſwered their lords by military ſervices: and till the reign of King Hen. I. the rents or farms due to the King were generally rendered in proviſions and neceſſaries for his houſhold; but in that reign the ſame were changed into money; and afterwards, in ſucceeding times, the crown revenue was changed or paid into the Exchequer chiefly in gold and ſilver. Lex Conſtitutionis, p. 208.

By ſtatute, all ſheriffs, bailiffs, &c. are to account in the Exchequer before the Treaſurer and Barons: and annual rolls are to be made of the profits of counties, &c. Alſo inquiſitors ſhall be appointed in every county, of debts due to the King. 51 H. 3. ſt. 5: 10 Ed. 1. Stat. Rutl. And all fines of counties for the whole year are to be ſent into the Exchequer. Stat. de Vicecom. 14 Ed. 2. c. 1. Perſons impeached in the Exchequer, may plead in their own diſcharge; and there ſhall be writs for diſcharging perſons, &c. 5 R. 2. c. 10, 14. The officers of the receipt may receive and take for their fees 1 d. in the pound for ſums iſſued out, &c. 5 & 6 W. & M. cap. 20.

Officers of the Exchequer are without delay to receive money brought thither: and the money on the receipt is to be kept in cheſts under three different locks and keys, kept by three ſeveral officers, &c. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 28.

In the Court of Equity the proceedings are by Engliſh bill and anſwer, agreeable to the practice of the High Court of Chancery.

In this court the Attorney General brings bills for any matters concerning the King; and any perſon grieved in any cauſe proſecuted againſt him on behalf of the King, may bring his bill againſt the Attorney General to be relieved in equity, in which caſe the plaintiff muſt attend the King's Attorney with a copy of the bill, and procure him to anſwer the ſame; and Mr. Attorney may call any that are intereſted in the cauſe, or any officer or others, to inſtruct him in the making of his anſwer, ſo as the King be not prejudiced thereby; and his anſwer is to be put in without oath. 4 Inſt. 109, 112, 118.

The Exchequer is now ſaid to be the laſt of the four courts at Weſtminſter; governed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Lord Chief Baron, and three other Barons, who are the ſovereign auditors of England, and the judges of the court. There alſo ſits in this court a Curſitor Baron, who adminiſters the oath of all high-ſheriffs, under-ſheriffs, bailiffs, auditors, receivers, collectors, controllers, ſurveyors, and ſearchers of all the cuſtoms in England.

The Chancellor or Under Treaſurer hath the cuſtody of the ſeal of this court. The King's Attorney General is made privy to all manner of pleas that are not ordinary and of courſe, courſe, which riſe upon the proceſs of the court; and he puts into court in his own name, informations of concealments of cuſtoms, ſeizures, &c. And alſo for intruſions, waſtes and incroachments upon any of the King's lands; or upon penal ſtatutes, forfeitures, &c.

The Remembrancers keep the records of the court betwixt the King and his ſubjects, and enter the rules and orders there made: one is called the King's Remembrancer, and the other the Lord Treaſurer's Remembrancer: The Remembrancer for the King hath all manner of informations upon penal ſtatutes uſed in his office only; and he calls to account, in open court, all the great Accountants of the Crown, Collectors of Cuſtoms, &c. he makes out writs of privilege, enters judgments of pleas; and all matters upon Engliſh bill are remaining in his office.

The Remembrancer for the Lord Treaſurer makes out all the eſtreats; he ſets down in his book the debts of all ſheriffs, and takes their foreign accounts; and iſſues out writs and proceſs in many caſes, &c. And theſe Remembrancers have ſeveral attornies to do buſineſs under them; who by ſtatute are not to iſſue out of the Remembrancer's office, any writs upon ſuppoſition, but upon juſt grounds, &c. 1 Jac. 1. c. 26.

There are two Chamberlains that keep the keys of the Treaſury, where the records lie, with the book of Domeſday, &c. They may ſit in court if they pleaſe, but not intermeddle with any thing; unleſs it be relating to the ſheriffs, in the pricking whereof they have a vote. See poſt Stat. 23 Geo. 3, at the end of this article. And beſides the Chamberlains, there is a Clerk of the Pipe, in whoſe cuſtody are conveyed out of the King's and Treaſurer's Remembrancer, &c. as water through a pipe, all accounts and debts due to the King.

The Controller of the Pipe; who is ſaid to be the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Clerk of the Eſtreats, who receives the eſtreats from the Remembrancer's office, and writeth them out to be ſerved for the King, &c. The Foreign Opposer, who oppoſes or makes a charge on all ſheriffs, &c. of their green wax, i. e. fines, iſſues, amerciaments, recogniſance, &c. certified in eſtreats annexed to the writ, under the ſeal in green wax, and delivereth the ſame to the Clerk of the Eſtreats to be put in proceſs. The Auditors, that take the accounts of the King's Receivers, Collectors, &c. and perfect them. The four Tellers, whoſe buſineſs to receive and pay all money is well known. The Clerk of the Pells, from his parchment rolls, called Pellis Receptorum. The Clerk of the Nibils, who makes a roll of ſuch ſums as the ſheriff upon proceſs returns Nihil, &c. The Clerk of the Pleas, in whoſe office all officers and privileged perſons are to ſue and be ſued; and here are divers Under Clerks employed in ſuits commenced or depending in this court. There is a Clerk of the Summons; Secondaries in the offices of the Remembrancers; Secondaries of the Pipe: Marſhal, &c.

By Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 82, The offices of the two Chamberlains, the Tally-cutter, Uſher of the Exchequer, and the ſecond Clerks to each Teller, ſhall, after the death, ſurrender, forfeiture or removal of the perſons intereſted in them, be aboliſhed. § 1, 4.

Upon the death, &c. of the two Chamberlains, inſtead of the tally now uſed to denote the receipt of money, there ſhall be ſubſtituted an indented cheque receipt. § 2.—And upon the death, &c. of the Uſher, the chief officer in each office ſhall ſupply his place. § 3.

After the death, &c. of the preſent Auditor, Clerk of the Pells, either of the four Tellers, or two Chamberlains, the payment of all ſalaries, fees and emoluments to the ſaid officers, ſhall ceaſe, and in lieu thereof, certain annual ſalaries are made payable, viz. To the Auditor 4200*l.* his chief Clerk 1000*l.* Clerk of the Pells 3000*l.* his firſt Clerk 1000*l.* The four Tellers each 2700*l.* Each of their firſt Clerks 1000*l.* Theſe are to appoint ſuch other clerks and officers as they think fit, to be approved of by the Treaſury. § 5.

All fees as heretofore (See Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 99,) to be received by the firſt Clerk to the Clerk of the Pells; [200*l.* of whoſe ſalary is on that account;] two thirds thereof to be applied to the ſinking fund, and one-third to pay the above ſalaries. § 9.

The houſes of the Auditor, four Tellers and Uſher, ſhall after the death, &c. of the preſent poſſeſſors be veſted in his Majeſty, and not annexed to the offices. § 10.—And no office in the receipt of the Exchequer may be granted either in poſſeſſion or reverſion, in any other manner than ſubject to this act. § 11.

The Court of Exchequer-Chamber was firſt erected by ſtatute 31 Ed. 3. c. 12; to determine cauſes upon writs of error from the Common-law ſide of the Court of Exchequer. And to that end it conſiſts of the Lord Chancellor, and Lord Treaſurer, taking unto them the juſtices of the King's Bench, and Common Pleas. In imitation of which, a ſecond Court of Exchequer-Chamber was erected by Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8, conſiſting of the Juſtices of the Common Pleas, and the Barons of the Exchequer; before whom writs of error may be brought to reverſe judgments in certain ſuits originally begun in the court of King's Bench. See this Dict. title Error: 3 Comm. 56.

Into the court alſo of Exchequer-Chamber, (which then conſiſts of all the judges of the three ſuperior courts, and ſometimes the Lord Chancellor alſo,) are ſometimes adjourned from the other courts ſuch cauſes, as the judges upon argument find to be of great weight and difficulty, before any judgment is given upon them in the court below. 4 Inſt. 119: 2 Bulſtr. 146.

In the abovementioned court of Exchequer-Chamber, eſtabliſhed under Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 8, there are no more than two return-days in every term; one is called the general affirmance day, being appointed by the judges, to be held a few days after the beginning of every term, for the general affirmance or reverſal of judgments: the other is the adjournment day, which is uſually held a day or two before the end of every term. On the firſt of theſe days, judgments are affirmed, or reverſed, or writs of error non-proſſed; the intent of the latter is, to finiſh ſuch matters as were left undone at the former; on which laſt day alſo (as well as on the firſt) judgments may be affirmed, or reverſed, or writs of error non-proſſed, on paying a fee extraordinary to the clerk of the Errors, and ſetting down the cauſe for affirmance two days before the adjournment day. *Impey K. EXCISE.

From the Belg. acciiſſe tributum.] An inland impoſition paid, ſometimes on the conſumption of the commodity, or frequently upon the retail ſale, which is the laſt ſtage before the conſumption.

This

EXCISE.

This is doubtleſs, (ſays Blackſtone, 1 Comm. 318,) impartially ſpeaking, the moſt œconomical way of taxing the ſubject; the charges, of levying collecting and managing the exciſe duties being conſiderably leſs in proportion than in other branches of the revenue. It alſo renders the commodity cheaper to the conſumer than charging it with cuſtoms to the ſame amount would do. But at the ſame time the rigour and arbitrary proceedings of exciſe laws, ſeem hardly compatible with the temper of a free nation. For the frauds that might be committed in this branch of the revenue, unleſs a ſtrict watch is kept, make it neceſſary wherever it is eſtabliſhed, to give the officers a power of entering and ſearching the houſes of ſuch as deal in exciſeable commodities, at any hour of the day; and in many caſes, of the night likewiſe And (for the ſame reaſons) the proceedings in caſe of tranſgreſſions are ſummary and ſudden, to the excluſion of the trial by jury.

Its original eſtabliſhment was in 1643, when it was introduced by the Parliament then in rebellion againſt King Charles I. Its progreſs was gradual, being at firſt laid upon thoſe perſons and commodities where it was ſuppoſed the hardſhip would be leaſt perceivable viz. The makers and venders of beer, ale, cyder and perry; and was afterwards impoſed on ſuch a multitude of commodities that it might fairly be denominated general.

Upon the reſtoration of Charles II, it having then been long eſtabliſhed, and its produce well known, ſome part of it was given to the crown by way of purchaſe for the feodal tenures and other oppreſſive parts of the hereditary revenue. And notwithſtanding the objections eternally raiſed againſt it, by the intereſted or the patriotic, it has from time to time been impoſed on a vaſt variety of articles.

Brandies and other ſpirits are now exciſed at the diſtillery: Printed ſilks and linens at the printer's.—Starch and hair-powder at the maker's.—Gold and ſilver wire, at the wire-drawer's.—Plate in the hands of the vendor, who pays yearly for a licence to ſell it.—Lands and goods ſold by auction, for which a pound rate is payable by the auctioneer who is alſo charged with an annual duty for his licence; coaches and other wheel carriages, for which the occupier is exciſed; though not with the ſame circumſtances of arbitrary ſtrictneſs, as in moſt other inſtances.—To theſe we may add coffee and tea, chocolate and cocoa paſte, for which the duty is paid by the retailer.—All artificial (home-made) wines commonly called Sweets.—Paper and paſteboard firſt when made, and again if ſtained or printed. Malt.—Vinegars.—And the manufacture of glaſs; for all which the duty is paid by the manufacturer.—Hops, for which the perſon that gathers them is anſwerable.—Candles and Soap, which are paid for at the maker's.—Malt liquors brewed for ſale, which are exciſed at the brewery.—Cyder and Perry at the vendor's.—And leather and Skins at the tanner's.—A liſt which no friend to his country would wiſh to ſee further increaſed.—1 Comm. c. 8. p. 320.

To the above liſt however are now to be added.—Foreign Wines; in the hands of the importer, merchant or conſignee.—Coaches, on being built, at the coach maker's, who muſt alſo have a licence.—Tobacco and Snuff at the manufacturer's.—And bricks and tiles; See title Bricks.

It has been very judiciouſly obſerved, that the grievances of the exciſe exiſt more, perhaps, in apprehenſion than in reality.—Actions and proſecutions againſt officers, commiſſioners and juſtices for miſconduct in exciſe caſes are very rarely heard of in courts of law. It is certainly an evil, that a fair dealer cannot have the benefit of any ſecret improvement in the management of his trade or manufactory; yet it ſeems more than equivalent to the Public at large, that by the ſurvey of the exciſe, the commodity is preſerved from many ſhameful adulterations; as experience has fully proved ſince wine was made ſubject to the exciſe laws.

The exciſe, like the cuſtoms, is neceſſarily regulated by a multiplicity of ſtatutes; the abridgment of which would form no ſmall volume; See title Cuſtoms.—The following ſhort extracts from Burn's Juſtice title Exciſe, where this ſubject is more fully ſtated, will convey the information moſt uſeful to the ſtudent.

One principal head office of Exciſe is to be kept in London, or within ten miles thereof, to which all other offices in the kingdom ſhall be ſubordinate and accountable; which ſaid office ſhall be managed by ſuch commiſſioners as the King ſhall appoint. Stats. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. § 46: 5 W. c. 20. § 16.

And all the places within the bills of Mortality ſhall be under the immediate care and management of the ſaid head-office; and ſuch and ſo many ſubordinate commiſſioners and ſub-commiſſioners, and other officers ſhall be appointed by the King in other places, as he ſhall think fit. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. § 48.

The exciſe office in all places where it ſhall be appointed, ſhall be kept open from 8 in the morning, till 2 in the afternoon. Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 26. § 12.

The commiſſioners or ſub-commiſſioners ſhall appoint under their hands and ſeals, ſuch perſons as they ſhall think needful in each market town, to be there upon every market day, in ſome known and public place; for receiving entries and duties, and performing all other things touching the revenue of exciſe: and if ſuch office be not ſo kept in each market town, the commiſſioners or others neglecting or refuſing, ſhall for every market day forfeit 10*l.* And ſuch perſon as ſhall come to ſuch market town to make his entry or payment, and tender the ſame accordingly, and be able to prove ſuch tender by oath of one witneſs, ſhall not be liable to any penalty for ſuch weekly or monthly entries or payments, as ſhould have been made or paid on ſuch market day. Stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 11. § 10.

The kingdom of England and Wales (excluſive of the bills of Mortality) is divided into about 50 collections; ſome called by names of particular counties; others by the names of great towns; where one county is divided into ſeveral collections, or where a collection comprehends the contiguous parts of ſeveral counties, every collection is ſubdivided into ſeveral diſtricts, within which there is a Superviſor; and each diſtrict is parcelled into out-rides and foot walks, within each of which there is a Gauger or ſurveying officer. Gilb. Exch. Append.

The commiſſioners or ſub-commiſſioners, in their reſpective circuits and diviſions, ſhall conſtitute under their hands and ſeals, ſuch and ſo many gaugers as they ſhall find needful. Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. § 33.

In order to which, he who would be made a gauger, muſt procure a certificate, that he is above 21, and under 30 years of age; that he underſtands the four firſt rules of arithmetick; that he is of the communion of the church church of England; how he has been employed, or what buſineſs he hath followed; that he is not incumbered with debts; whether ſingle or married; and if married how many children he has, for if he has above two, he cannot (by the rules of the office) be admitted. Gilb. Exch. App.

He muſt alſo nominate two perſons to be his ſureties, and it muſt be certified that they are of ſufficient ability; and that the ſaid certificate is of his own hand-writing: ſuch certificate, written by him, muſt be ſigned by the ſupervisor of exciſe where the party applying lives. id.

At the bottom of his certificate muſt be his affidavit, that neither he nor any elſe to his knowledge, hath, directly, or indirectly, given or promiſed to give any treat, fee, gratuity, or reward, for his obtaining or endeavouring to obtain an order for his being inſtructed. id.

When an order for inſtruction is granted, it is directed to an experienced officer, who receives ſuch perſon as his pupil: and the like books, as officers have, being delivered to ſuch pupil, he goes with and attends the officer, who inſtructs him, and he takes ſurveys, and in his own book makes the like entries as if he was an officer, until the inſtructor certifies that he is fully inſtructed. id.

After he is thus certified for, and until he is employed, he is called an expectant, being to wait till a vacancy happens. id.

No perſon ſhall be capable of intermeddling with any office relating to the Exciſe, until he ſhall, before two juſtices in the county where his employment ſhall be, or before a baron of the Exchequer, take the oaths of allegiance and ſupremacy, together with an oath of office which is to be certified to and recorded by the next Quarter-Seſſions. Stat. 12 C. 2. c. 24. § 47, 48. and ſee Stat. 15 C. 2. c. 11. § 57.

The buſineſs of the Supervisor is to be continually ſurveying the houſes and places of the perſons within his diſtrict liable to duties: and to obſerve and ſee whether the officers duly make their ſurveys, and make due entries thereof in their books and in their ſpecimen-papers; and every ſupervisor is in his own book to enter what he himſelf does each day and part thereof; and alſo ſet down the behaviour, good and bad, the diligence or negligence, of the ſeveral officers of his diſtrict: and at the end of every ſix weeks to draw out a diary of every day's buſineſs, and of the remarks made each day of the ſeveral officers in his diſtrict, and to tranſmit ſuch diary at the end of every ſix weeks to the chief office. Gilb. Exch. Append.

Each commiſſioner takes and peruſes a proportion of theſe diaries; and when he meets with any remarkable complaint againſt any officer, he communicates it to the reſt, who thereupon come to an agreement, either to admoniſh, reprimand, reduce, or diſcharge. For ſmall faults, officers are admoniſhed; for great ones reprimanded; for greater, reduced: but for the greateſt diſcharged. The commiſſioner who peruſes the diary writes in the margin, admoniſh, reprimand, or as the caſe is. id.

Theſe diaries, after having been thus written upon are delivered to the clerk of the diaries, who in a book, called the reprimand book, places the admonitions, reprimands and the like, to each officer's account, and writes every offender word thereof. Which reprimand book is reſorted to upon diſcovering new faults; and if it is there found that the officer has before been admoniſhed and reprimanded ſo often, that there are no hopes of his amending, he is then diſcharged. The ſaid book is likewiſe reſorted to, when application is made for advancing or preferring an officer into a better poſt. Frequent admonitions or reprimands, are a bar to preferment, unleſs they are of old ſtanding; but if for three years laſt he ſtands pretty clear of admonitions and reprimands, thoſe of elder date are not much regarded. id.

The Collector's buſineſs is, every ſix weeks to go his rounds, and in the intervals of rounds, he is to be aſſiſting in proſecuting offenders before the juſtices; he is alſo to peruſe the ſupervisor's diaries, and where he finds an officer complained of, is to examine him and the ſupervisor, and having heard both, is in the margin to write his opinion of each fact; he is alſo to have an eye how the ſupervisors and officers of his collection perform their duties, and from the vouchers he tranſcribes into his book, the charge on each particular perſon in his collection. id.

For faults, gaugers are reduced, either to be only aſſiſtants, or from foot walks to out-rides; ſupervisors are reduced to be again only gaugers: and collectors are reduced to be ſupervisors. id.

In ſome inſtances, diſcharged officers, after having for a competent time been thereby kept out of pay, are again reſtored; but if twice diſcharged are never again reſtored, unleſs one of the diſcharges appears to have been occaſioned by a miſrepreſentation of the caſe. Id.

EXCOMMENGEMENT, Law French.] Excommunition. Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 3.

EXCOMMUNICATION, Excommunicatio.] An eccleſiaſtical cenſure, divided into the greater and the leſſer; by the latter a perſon is excluded from the communion of the church only; by the former from that communion, and alſo from the company of the faithful; and incapacitated from performing any legal act.

The ſentence of excommunication was inſtituted originally for preſerving the purity of the church; but eccleſiaſtics did not ſcruple to convert it into an engine for promoting their own power, and inflicted it on the moſt frivolous occaſions. Robertſ. Hiſt. Emp. Charles V. 2 vol. 109, &c.

If the judge of any ſpiritual court excommunicates a man for a cauſe, of which he hath not the legal cognizance, the party may have an action againſt him at common law; and he is alſo liable to be indicted at the ſuit of the King. 1 Inſt. 134: 2 Inſt. 527, 623.

An excommunicated perſon is diſabled to do any act that is required to be done by one that is probus and legalis homo. He cannot ſerve upon juries, cannot be a witneſs in any court, and which is the worſt of all, cannot bring an action either real or perſonal to recover lands or money due to him. Litt. §. 201. And on forty days' contumacy, the defendant is liable to be taken on a writ of Excommunicato capiendo and impriſoned till he is reconciled to the church, when he may be freed by a writ of Excommunicato deliberando. 2 Inſt. 189: 8 Rep. 68. See more fully thoſe titles Poſt. In caſe of ſubtraction of tithes a more ſummary and expeditious aſſiſtance is given by the ſtatutes 27 H. 8. c. 20: 3 H. 8. c. 7, which enact that on complaint by the eccleſiaſtical judge of any contempt or miſbehaviour of a defendant, in any ſuit for tithes, any privy councillor or any two juſtices of the peace, (or in caſe of diſobedience to a definitive ſentence any two juſtices of the peace,) may commit the party to priſon without bail or mainprize, till he enters into a recognizance with ſufficient ſureties to give a due obedience to the proceſs and ſentence of the court.

As to pleading excommunication in a plaintiff, ſee title Abatement, I. 2. b.

We may next proceed to conſider more particularly,

I. In what Caſes, and by whom, Perſons may be Excommunicated.

II. Of the Proceedings in Excommunications; and how the Excommunicated are abſolved.

Excommunication is generally for contempt in not appearing, or not obeying a decree, &c. And in other reſpects the cauſes of it are many; as for matters of hereſy, refuſing to receive the ſacrament, or to come to church; incontinency, adultery, ſimony, &c. A man may not be excommunicated for matter of defamation, &c.

In ſome caſes perſons incur excommunication ipſo facto by act of parliament; but they are to be firſt convicted of the offence by law, and the conviction is tranſmitted to the Ordinary. Dyer 275: 1 Ventr. 146.

By Stat. 5 and 6 Ed. 6. c. 4, "If any perſon ſhall ſmite, or lay violent hands upon any other, either in any church or church-yard, then ipſo facto every perſon ſo offending ſhall be deemed excommunicate, and be excluded from the fellowſhip and company of Chriſt's congregation."

And it is further enacted by the ſaid ſtatute, "That if any perſon ſhall maliciouſly ſtrike any perſon with any weapon, in any church or church-yard, or ſhall draw any weapon in any church or church-yard, to the intent to ſtrike another with the ſame weapon, then every perſon ſo offending ſhall ſtand ipſo facto excommunicated as aforeſaid." See title Church.

By the Stat. 3 Jac. 1 cap. 5. §§ 11 & 12, it is enacted, "That every popiſh recuſant convict ſhall ſtand to all intents and purpoſes diſabled, as a perſon lawfully excommunicated." See this Dict. title Papiſt.

None but the biſhop is to certify excommunication, unleſs the biſhop be beyond ſea, or in remotis; or except the certificate be by one that hath ordinary juriſdiction, &c.

Anno 38 H. 3, Boniface archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the other biſhops, with burning tapers in their hands, in Weſtminſter-Hall before the King, and the other Eſtates of the realm, denounced a curſe and excommunication againſt the breakers of the liberty of the church: and by Stat. 9 E. 3, Biſhops may excommunicate, not only all perturbers of the peace of the church, but alſo felons, and other offenders, &c. And by the eccleſiaſtical laws, excommunicated perſons are not permitted to have Chriſtian burial.

The biſhop's certificate, if he die before the return of the writ, ſhall not be received, for his ſucceſſor ſhall certify; the ſignificavit muſt mention that the party lived within the dioceſe where he was excommunicated, and by what biſhop; if it be pleaded, the time when is to be ſhewn; and excommunication muſt be declared in the eccleſiaſtical court before they proceed, &c. 8 Rep. 68. Cro. Jac. 82: Moor, Ca. 667: Latch. 174: Hetley 86. See this Dict. title Abatement, I. 2. 6.

It hath been adjudged, that the ſpiritual court hath not power to meddle with the body of any perſons whatſoever, or to ſend proceſs to take them; for if a perſon is excommunicated for contempt, &c. they ought to certify it into the Chancery, whence it is ſent into B. R. and thence iſſues proceſs. Cro. Eliz. 741. See poſt. title Excommunicato Capiendo.

If a perſon be unjuſtly excommunicated for a matter of which the ſpiritual court hath not conuzance, and he is taken on a writ of excommunicato capiendo, the party grieved ſhall have a writ out of Chancery to the ſheriff, to deliver him out of priſon. 2 Inſt. 623: 12 Co. 76: F. N. B. 141.

So if the ſpiritual court proceeds inverſo ordine; as if they refuſe a copy of the libel, &c. a prohibition ſhall go, with a clauſe to abſolve and deliver the party injured. 1 Sid. 232.

Alſo if a man be excommunicated, and offers to obey and perform the ſentence, and the biſhop refuſeth to accept it, and to aſſoil him, he ſhall have a writ to the biſhop, requiring him, upon performance of the ſentence, to aſſoil him; and the reaſon thereof is, for that by the excommunication the party is diſabled to ſue any action, or to have any remedy for any wrong done unto him, ſo long as he ſhall remain excommunicate; and alſo the party grieved may have his action upon his caſe againſt the biſhop, in like manner as he may when the biſhop doth excommunicate him for a matter which belongeth not to the eccleſiaſtical conuſance; alſo the biſhop, in thoſe caſes, may be indicted at the ſuit of the King. 2 Inſt. 623.

But if the excommunication be for a juſt cauſe, the party muſt make preſent ſatisfaction before he can be abſolved, or he muſt put in caution, that he will hereafter perform that which the biſhop ſhall reaſonably and according to law enjoin him; which caution, in the Civil law, is of three ſorts. 1. Fidejuſſoria, as when a man bindeth himſelf with ſureties to perform ſomewhat. 2. Pignoratio, or realis cautio, as when a man engageth goods or mortgageth lands for the performance. 3. Juratoria, when the party who is to perform any thing, taketh a corporal oath to do it; which laſt is now the moſt frequent method.

This method of taking caution was held to be againſt law. 1 Bulſt. 122.——But was afterwards on great debate held to be good; and that the biſhop having a diſcretionary power herein, it was as much in his option to take caution by obligation as by either of the two other methods. 2 Lev. 36: Raym. 225.

If after a perſon is excommunicated, there comes a general act of pardon, which pardons all contempts, &c. it ſeems that this offence is taken away without any formal abſolution. See Cro. Car. 199: Cro. Jac. 212: 8 Co. 68: 1 Jon. 227: 2 Lev. 36: Gibſ. Cod. 1110.

EXCOMMUNICATIO CAPIENDO. A writ directed to the ſheriff for apprehending him who ſtands obſtinately excommunicated. If within forty days after ſentence of excommunication has been publiſhed in the Church, the offender does not ſubmit and abide by the ſentence of the Spiritual Court, the biſhop may ſignify, i. e. certify, ſuch contempt to the King in Chancery. Upon which there iſſues out this writ to the ſheriff of the county, called, from the biſhop's certificate, a ſignicavit: or, from its effect, a writ de excommunicato capiendo. And the sheriff shall thereupon take the offender and imprison him in the county gaol till he is reconciled to the church, and such reconciliation certified by the bishop. F. N. B. 62. By the Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 23, Writs de excommunicato capiendo shall issue out of the court of Chancery in term-time, and be returnable in B. R. &c. They shall be brought sealed into the King's Bench, and there opened and delivered of record to the sheriff, and there must be twenty days between the teste and the return: and if the sheriff return a non est inventus on the writ, a capias with proclamation is to be granted for the party to yield his body to gaol under the penalty of 10*l.* And if he do not appear on the first capias and proclamation, a second is to go forth, and he is to forfeit 20*l. &c.*

But, by this statute, if in the excommunicato capiendo, the party excommunicated hath not a sufficient addition, as to his place of dwelling, &c. according to 1 H. 5. c. 5; or if in the significavit it is contained, that the excommunication proceeds upon a cause of contempt, or some original matter of heresy; for refusing to have a child baptized, to receive the sacrament, to come to divine service, or for error in matters of religion and doctrine, for incontinency, usury, simony, perjury in the ecclesiastical courts, or idolatry; he shall not incur the penalties in this act, for his contempt in not rendering himself prisoner upon the capias, &c. So that the statute doth not require the capias with proclamations, and the penalties in other cases, besides the ten cases mentioned. 2 Inst. 661.

And it has been adjudged, where a person has been excommunicated, and none of those causes were contained in the significavit, that the person excommunicate should be discharged of the penalties; but not of the excommunication. 3 Mod. 89. It has also been held, that for any of the causes expressed in the statute there ought to go a capias with a penalty, and be an addition to the writ: in other cases it is not necessary; and if then the capias be with a penalty, the court will not discharge the party, but the penalty only: but for want of addition, in cases where that is required, the party shall be discharged upon motion. 1 Salk. 294, 295.

EXCOMMUNICATO DELIBERANDO, A writ to the sheriff for delivery of an excommunicate person out of prison, upon certificate from the ordinary of his conformity to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. F. N. B. 63: Reg. Orig. 67. And where a man is unduly excommunicated, he may be delivered in some cases by an habeas corpus; and sometimes by pleading, as well as by an excommunicato deliberando: also sometimes by prohibition, &c. And on a general pardon, the party may have a writ to the bishop to absolve him. 12 Rep. 76: Latch. 205: Godb. 272. If a plaintiff in an action be excommunicate, and after he gets letters of absolution; on shewing them in court, he may have a re-summons, &c. upon his original. 1 Inst. 133.

EXCOMMUNICATO RECIPIENDO, or rather Re-capiendo.] A writ whereby persons excommunicated being for their obstinacy committed to prison, and unlawfully delivered, before they have given caution to obey the authority of the church, are commanded to be sought after, retaken, and imprisoned again. Reg. Orig. 67.—If a person after his commitment escapes, and the sheriff has not returned his writ, a capias excommunicatum de novo shall go, otherwise if the writ be returned. Mod. Ca. 78.

EXECUTION. EXECUTIO.] Signifies the last performance of an act, as of a judgment, &c. It is the obtaining possession of any thing recovered by judgment of law. 1 Inst. 289.

Sir Edw. Coke, in his Reports, makes two sorts of executions; one final, another with a quousque, tending to an end: an execution final is that which makes money of the defendant's goods, or extends his lands, and delivers them to the plaintiff, which he accepts in satisfaction, and is the end of the suit, and all that the king's writ requires to be done; the other writ with a quousque, though it tendeth to an end, is not final: as in case of a capias ad satisfaciendum, which is not a final execution, but the body of the party is to be taken, to the intent the plaintiff be satisfied his debt, &c. and the imprisonment of the defendant not being absolute, but until he do satisfy the same. 6 Rep. 87.

EXECUTION, in the usual legal sense of the word, is a judicial writ grounded on the judgment of the court from whence it issues: and is supposed to be granted by the court at the request of the party at whose suit it is issued, to give him satisfaction on the judgment which he hath obtained: and therefore an execution cannot be sued out in one court, upon a judgment obtained in another. Impey. K. B.

This Execution, or putting the law in force, is performed in different manners according to the nature of the action upon which it is founded, and of the judgment which is had or recovered.

If the plaintiff recovers in an action real or mixed, whereby the seisin or possession of land is awarded to him, the writ of execution shall be an Habere facias seisinam, or writ of seisin of a freehold; or an Habere facias possessionem, or writ of possession of a chattel interest. Finch L. 470. See this Dict. those titles. These are writs directed to the sheriff of the county, commanding him to give actual possession to the plaintiff of the land so recovered: in the execution of which the sheriff may take with him the posse comitatûs, or power of the county; and may justify breaking open doors, if the possession be not quietly delivered. See post. III. 3. But if it be peaceably yielded up, the delivery of a twig, a turf, or the ring of a door in the name of seisin, is sufficient execution of the writ. 3 Comm. 412.

Upon a presentation to a benefice recovered in a quare impedit, or assise of darrein presentment the execution is by a writ de clerico admittendo; directed not to the sheriff, but to the bishop or archbishop, and requiring him to admit and institute the clerk of the plaintiff. See titles Admittendo clerico: Advowson.

In other actions, where the judgment is that something special be done or rendered by the defendant, then in order to compel him so to do, and to see the judgment executed, a special writ of execution issues to the sheriff according to the nature of the case. As upon an assise of nuisance or quod permittat prosternere, where one part of the judgment is that the nusance be removed, a writ goes to the sheriff to abate it at the charge of the party; which likewise issues in case of an indictment. Comb. 10. See title Nusance.

Upon a replevin the writ of execution is the writ de retorno habendo; to have a return of the cattle distrained; and if the distress be eloigned, the defendant shall have a Capias in Withernam; but on the plaintiff's tendering the damages and ſubmitting to a fine, the proceſs in Withernam ſhall be ſtayed. 2 Leon. 174. See titles Replevin: Diſtreſs: Withernam. In detinue, after judgment the plaintiff ſhall have a diſtringas to compel the defendant to deliver the goods by repeated diſtreſſes of his chattels: (1 Ro. Ab. 737: Raſt. Ent. 215:) or elſe a ſcire facias againſt any third perſon in whoſe hands they may happen to be, to ſhew cauſe why they ſhould not be delivered: and if the defendant ſtill continues obſtinate, then (if the judgment be by default or on demurrer) the ſheriff ſhall ſummon an inqueſt to aſcertain the value of the goods and the plaintiff's damages: which (being either ſo aſſeſſed, or by the verdict in caſe of an iſſue; Bro. Ab. tit. Damages, 29,) ſhall be levied on the perſon or goods of the defendant. See title Detinue. So that after all, in Replevin and Detinue, the only actions for recovering the ſpecific poſſeſſion of perſonal chattels, if the wrong-doer be very perverſe, he cannot be compelled to the reſtitution of the identical thing taken or detained; but he has ſtill his election to deliver the goods or their value. Keilw. 64.

Executions, in actions where money only is recovered, as a debt or damages, are of five ſorts. 1. Againſt the body of the defendant. 2. Againſt his goods and chattels.—3. Againſt his goods and the profits of his lands. 4. Againſt his goods and the poſſeſſion of his lands. 5. Againſt all three, his body, lands, and goods.

1. The firſt of theſe ſpecies of execution is by writ of capias ad ſatisfaciendum; (ſhortly called a Ca. ſa.) to take and impriſon the body of the debtor till ſatisfaction be made for the debt, coſts and damages. See this Dict. title Capias. Sir Edward Coke gives a ſingular inſtance where a defendant in 14 E. 3, was diſcharged from a capias becauſe he was of ſo advanced an age that he could not undergo the pain of impriſonment. 1 Inſt. 289. This writ is an execution of the higheſt nature, inaſmuch as it deprives a man of his liberty till he makes the ſatisfaction awarded; and therefore when a man is once taken in execution upon this writ, no other proceſs can be ſued out againſt his lands or goods. Only by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 24, if the defendant dies while charged in execution upon this writ, the plaintiff may after his death ſue out a new execution againſt his lands, goods, or chattels.

If a Ca. Sa. is ſued out, and a non eſt inventus is returned thereon, the plaintiff may ſue out a proceſs againſt the bail, if any were given; who ſtipulate in this triple alternative, that the defendant ſhall, if condemned in the ſuit, ſatisfy the plaintiff his debt and coſts; or ſurrender himſelf a priſoner; or that they will pay it for him: as therefore the two former branches of the alternative are neither of them complied with, the latter muſt immediately take place. Lutw. 1269, 1273. In order to which a writ of ſcire facias may be ſued out againſt the bail, commanding them to ſhew cauſe why the plaintiff ſhould not have execution againſt them for his debt and damages: and on ſuch writ if they ſhew no ſufficient cauſe, or the defendant does not ſurrender himſelf on the day of the return, or of ſhewing cauſe, the plaintiff may have judgment againſt the bail; and take out a writ of Ca. Sa. or other proceſs of execution againſt them. See titles Bail; Scire Facias.—poſt. II.

2. The next ſpecies of execution is againſt the goods and chattels of the defendant; and is called a writ of Fieri Facias; from the words in it where the ſheriff is commanded that he cauſe to be made of the goods and chattels of the defendant, the ſum or debt recovered. This lies as well againſt privileged perſons, peers, &c. as other common perſons: and againſt executors or adminiſtrators with regard to the goods of the deceaſed. The ſheriff may not break open any outer doors to execute either this writ or the writ of Ca. Sa; but muſt enter peaceably; and may then break open any inner door belonging to the defendant in order to take the goods. 5 Rep. 92: Palm. 54. See poſt. III. 3. And the ſheriff may ſell the goods and chattels of the defendant, even an eſtate for years which is a chattel real, (8 Rep. 171,) till he has raiſed enough to ſatisfy the judgment and coſts: firſt paying the landlord of the premiſes, upon which the goods are found, the arrears of rent then due, not exceeding one year's rent in the whole. Stat. 8 Anu. c. 14. See titles Diſtreſs: Rent. If part only of the debt be levied on a Fieri Facias, the plaintiff may have a Ca. Sa. for the reſidue. 1 Ro. Ab. 904: Cro. Eliz. 344. See further this Dict. title Fieri Facias.

3. A third ſpecies of execution is by writ of Levari facias; which affects a man's goods and the profits of his lands by commanding the ſheriff to levy the plaintiff's debt on the lands and goods of the defendant; whereby the ſheriff may ſeize all his goods, and receive the rents and profits of his lands, till ſatisfaction be made to the plaintiff. Finch L. 471. Little uſe is now made of this writ; the remedy by elegit which takes poſſeſſion of the lands themſelves, being much more effectual. But, as a ſpecies of this levari facias, may be conſidered a writ of execution proper only to eccleſiaſticks: which is given when the ſheriff upon a common writ of execution ſued, returns that the defendant is a beneficed clerk, having no lay fee. In this caſe a writ goes to the biſhop of the dioceſe, in the nature of a levari or fieri facias to levy the debt and damages de bonis eccleſiaſticis which are not to be touched by lay hands: and thereupon the biſhop ſends out a ſequeſtration of the profits of the clerk's benefice, directed to the churchwardens to collect the ſame, and pay them to the plaintiff till the full ſum be raiſed. Reg. Orig. 300: Burn. E. L. 329: 2 Inſt. 472: Jenk. 207. See further title Levari Facias.

4. The fourth ſpecies of execution is by the writ of Elegit, which is a judicial writ given by Stat. W. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 18, either upon judgment for a debt or damages; or upon the forfeiture of a recognizance taken in the King's court. By the common law, a man could only have ſatisfaction of goods, chattels, and the preſent profits of lands by the two writs of execution laſt mentioned, (2 and 3.); but not the poſſeſſion of the lands themſelves; which was a natural conſequence of the feodal principles prohibiting alienation of lands. See this Dict. title Tenure.

By this writ of Elegit, the defendant's goods and chattels are not ſold, but only appraiſed; and all of them, except oxen and beaſts of the plough, are delivered to the plaintiff, at ſuch reaſonable appraiſement and price, in part of ſatisfaction of his debt. If the goods are not ſufficient, then the moiety or one half of his freehold lands, which he had at the time of the judgment given, whether held in his own name, or any other in truſt for him are alſo to be delivered to the plaintiff: to hold till out of the rents and profits thereof the debt be levied, or till the defendant's intereſt be expired; as till the death of the defendant, if he be be tenant for life, or in tail. 2 Inſt. 395: Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3.

It is upon feodal principles alſo, that copyhold lands are not liable to be taken in execution upon a judgment. 1 Ro. Ab. 888. But in caſe of a debt to the King, it appears by Magna Charta, c. 8, that it was allowed by the common law for him to take poſſeſſion of the lands till the debt was paid.

This execution or ſeizing of lands by elegit is of ſo high a nature, that after it the body of the defendant cannot be taken: but if execution can only be had of the goods becauſe there are no lands, and ſuch goods are not ſufficient to pay the debt, a Ca. Sa. may then be had after the elegit; for ſuch elegit is in this caſe no more in effect than a fieri facias. Hob. 58.

Thus it appears that body and goods may be taken in execution; or land and goods; but not body and land too upon any judgment between ſubject and ſubject, in the courſe of the common law; But

5. Upon ſome proſecutions given by ſtatute; as in the caſe of recognizances or debts acknowledged on Statute Merchant, or Statute Staple; (purſuant to Stat. 13 E. 1. de Mercatoribus: 27 E. 3. c. 9; See this Dict. thoſe titles;) upon forfeiture of theſe the body lands and goods may all be taken at once in execution to compel the payment of the debt. The proceſs hereon is uſually called an Extent or extendi facias; becauſe the ſheriff is to cauſe the lands, &c. to be appraiſed to their full extended value, before he delivers them to the plaintiff, that it may be certainly known how ſoon the debt will be ſatisfied. F. N. B. 131. See this Dict. title Extent.

By Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39, all obligations made to the King ſhall have the ſame force, and of conſequence the ſame remedy to recover them, as a ſtatute ſtaple: though indeed before this ſtatute, the King was entitled to ſue out execution againſt the body lands and goods of his accountant or debtor. 3 Rep. 12. And his debt ſhall in ſuing out execution be preferred to that of every other creditor who hath not obtained judgment before the King commenced his ſuit. Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39, § 74.

The King's judgment alſo affects lands which the King's debtor hath at, or after the time of contracting his debt, or which any of his officers mentioned in Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 4, hath at or after the time of his entering on the office: ſo that if ſuch officer of the Crown aliens for a valuable conſideration, the land ſhall be liable to the King's debt, even in the hands of a bonâ fide purchaſer: though the debt due to the King was contracted by the vendor many years after the alienation. 10 Rep. 55, 6: 8 Rep. 171. And ſee Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 35; which enables the court of Exchequer on application by the Attorney General, by motion, to order the eſtate of any debtor to the King, and of the heirs and aſſigns of ſuch debtor, in any lands extended, to be ſold as the court ſhall direct; the conveyance to be made by the remembrancer of the court, by Bargain and Sale, to be inrolled in that court.

Judgments between ſubject and ſubject related, even at common law, no farther back than the firſt day of the Term in which they were recovered, in reſpect of the lands of the debtor; and did not bind his goods and chattels but from the date of the writ of execution: and now by the ſtatute of frauds 29 Car. 2. c. 3, the judgment ſhall not bind the land in the hands of a bonâ fide purchaſer, but only from the day of actually ſigning the ſame, which is directed by the ſtatute to be punctually entered on the record: nor ſhall the writ of execution bind the goods in the hands of a ſtranger or a purchaſer, (Skin. 257,) but only from the actual delivery of the writ to the ſheriff or other officer, who is therefore ordered to indorſe on the back of it the day of his receiving the ſame. See further this Dict. title Judgment: and as to the prerogative of the crown, Poſt. IV. 2; and on the ſubject in general, 3 Comm. c. 26.

The reader may now purſue his enquiries under the following diviſions:

I. Of the Nature and ſeveral Kinds of Executions, and what Things were liable thereto at Common-law, &c.

II. Of the Judgments on which the ſeveral Executions may be taken out, and where the Party ſhall be concluded by the Election of one of them, &c.

III. 1. By whom, againſt whom. 2. At what Time, Executions may be ſued. 3. By whom, and how they ſhall be Executed. 4. How they are to be releaſed and diſcharged.

IV. 1. To what Time Executions ſhall relate, ſo as to avoid Alienation; 2. Of the King's Prerogative in reſpect of Executions.

V. 1. Of the Party's Remedy againſt irregular Executions; 2. Of the Offence of obſtructing Execution.

I. The writs of execution at Common-law were only a fieri facias on the goods and chattels, and a levari facias to levy the debt or damages upon the land and chattels: The ca. ſa. was given by conſtruction of the Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 17; And the elegit by Stat. Weſm. 2. c. 18: which makes the body liable, and the future profits of lands &c. 1 Inſt. 154: 2 Inſt. 394.

The reaſon why by the Common-law, where a ſubject had execution for debt or damages, he could not have the body of the defendant, or his lands in execution, (unleſs it were in ſpecial caſes) was, that the defendant's body might be at liberty, not only to follow his own affairs and buſineſs, but alſo to ſerve his King and country; and taking away the poſſeſſion of his lands would hinder the following of his huſbandry and tillage. 2 Inſt. 394.

Though neither the body nor lands of the debtor on a judgment could be taken in execution at Common-law, but only his goods; yet in action of debt againſt an heir, upon the bond of his anceſtor, his land which he had by diſcent was ſubject to be taken in execution. 3 Rep. 11. In action of debt againſt the heir upon his anceſtor's band, there was judgment by nihil dicit: and it was held that the plaintiff ſhould have execution againſt the heir, of any of his own lands or goods. Dyer 89, 149. Judgment was had againſt the heir by nil dicit, and a ſcire facias being brought againſt him to have execution, he pleaded riens per diſcent; it was adjudged that this plea was too late after the judgment by nil dicit, and the execution ſhall be on his own lands. Dyer 344.

But there is a difference between a ſcire facias and an action of debt brought againſt an heir upon a bond of his anceſtor, in which the heir is named. Poph. 193. On a judgment for the debt of an anceſtor, where the heir hath made over lands deſcended to him, execution may be taken againſt ſuch heir to the value of the land, &c. for the debt of his anceſtor, as if it were his own debt. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14, § 5. See title Fraud.

If a perſon have judgment given againſt him for debt or damages, or be bound in a recognizance and dieth, and his heir be within age, no execution ſhall be ſued of the lands during the minority; and againſt an heir within age, no execution ſhall be ſued upon a ſtatute merchant or ſtaple, &c. 1 Inſt. 290.

No execution for damages recovered in a real action, ſhall be had by capias ad ſatisfaciendum: but where a man hath judgment to recover lands and damages, he may have execution of both together. 8 Rep. 141.

Whatever may be aſſigned or granted may be taken on an execution. Nothing can be taken in execution that cannot be ſold, as deeds, writings, &c. Bank-notes, &c. cannot be taken in execution; as they remain, in ſome meaſure, choſes in action. Hardw. 53.

If there are chattels ſufficient, the ſheriff ought not to take the lands; nor may things fixed to the freehold, goods bought bonâ fide, goods pawned, &c. be taken in execution. 8 Rep. 143, And if a defendant hides his goods in ſecret places, ſo that the plaintiff cannot take them in execution, it is ſaid no action will lie againſt him. 5 Rep. 92, 93.

The ſheriff cannot take the goods of a ſtranger, for he is to take the goods of the party only at his peril. And if a bailiff on a fi. fa. againſt the goods of A. take thoſe of B. an action of treſpaſs lies againſt the ſheriff. Doug. 40. If on execution againſt one of two partners, the partnerſhip effects be taken and ſold, the court will order the ſheriff to pay over to the other, a ſhare of the produce, proportioned to his ſhare in the partnerſhip effects, to be aſcertained by the maſter. Doug. 650. Eddie v. Davidſon.

If the plaintiff cannot find ſufficient effects to ſatisfy his judgment, the court will order the ſheriff to retain for his uſe money which he has levied in an action at the ſuit of the defendant. Doug. 231.—See further Com. Dig. title Execution, (C.) 4.

II. When a judgment is ſigned, execution may be taken out immediately upon it, and need not be delayed till it is entered, it being a perfect judgment of the court before entered. Co. Lit. 505. And if the judges of the court of B. R. ſee one againſt whom there is a judgment of that court walk in Weſtminſter hall, they may ſend an officer to take him up, if the plaintiff deſire it, without a writ of execution. 7 Mod. 52. If execution be not ſued within a year and a day after judgment, where there is no fault in the defendant, as if writ of error be not brought, &c. there muſt be a ſcire facias to revive the judgment, which in that time may be had without moving the court; but if it be of longer ſtanding, the court is to be moved for it. 1 Inſt. 290: 2 Inſt. 771. But if the defendant be outlawed after judgment, (as he may where he cannot be taken in execution, or hath no lands or goods to pay the debt, &c. when the ſuit is commenced by original,) the plaintiff need not renew the judgment by ſcire facias to obtain execution after a year. 1 Inſt. 290.

It hath been adjudged, that by the Common-law, if a man was outlawed after judgment in debt, the plaintiff was at the end of his ſuit, and he could have no other proceſs after that perſonally; but was put to his new original, &c. 2 Neſſ. Abr. 772. If one be arreſted upon proceſs in B. R. and puts in bail; and afterwards the plaintiff recovers, and the defendant renders not himſelf according to law, in ſafe-guard of his bail, the plaintiff may at his election take execution againſt the principal, or his bail after judgment againſt them; but if he takes the bail, he ſhall never afterwards meddle with the principal. Cro. Jac. 320.

If one recovers jointly againſt two in debt, the execution muſt be joint againſt them: the court cannot divide an execution, which is intire, and grounded on the judgment. Mich. 24 Car. B. R.

A man and his wife recovered in an action of debt againſt the defendant 100*l.* and damages; then the wife died, and the huſband prayed to have execution upon this judgment: the court at firſt inclined, that it ſhould not ſurvive to the huſband, but that adminiſtration ought to be committed of it, as a thing in action; but at laſt they agreed that the huſband might take out execution, for that by the judgment it became his debt due to him in his own right. Cro. Car. 608: 1 Mod. Rep. 179, 180. See titles Baron and Feme.

If judgment be againſt two, on the death of one, the plaintiff ſhall have execution by ſcire facias againſt the ſurvivor; and though he pleads, that the other defendant has an heir alive, &c. it will not prevent it. Raym. 26. And where two perſons recover in debt, and before execution one of them dies; it has been held that execution may be ſued in both their names by the ſurvivor, and it will be no error; which may be done without a ſcire facias. Ney. 150. An execution may be executed after the death of the defendant; for his executor being privy, is bound as well as the teſtator: and where execution is once begun, it cannot be delayed, unleſs there appears irregularity; and audita querela is no ſuperſedeas to it, nor ſhall any thing ſtop the ſheriff from ſelling, &c. Cro. Eliz. 73: Comberb. 33, 389.

Though a man can have but one execution; yet it muſt be intended an execution with ſatisfaction, and the body of the defendant is no ſatisfaction, only a pledge for the debt. 5 Rep. 486. When therefore a perſon dies in execution, it is without ſatisfaction; ſo that the plaintiff may have a fieri facias againſt the goods, or elegit againſt the lands. This was not ſo at Common-law. Hob. 57; but it is given by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 24. Where a perſon however was taken on a capias utlagatum, and died in priſon, the plaintiff having choſen this execution, which is the higheſt in law; it has been held that the defendant dying, the law will adjudge it a ſatisfaction. Cro. Eliz. 850.

If an execution be executed and filed, the party can have no other execution upon that judgment; becauſe there can be but one execution with ſatisfaction upon one judgment: But if the execution be not returned and filed, another execution may be had: and if only part of the debt be levied on a fieri facias, another writ of execution may be ſued out for the reſidue thereof. 1 Lill. Abr. 565. If one take out any writs of execution, and they have no effect, he may have other writs on their failure. Hob. 57.

In caſe any priſoner committed in execution ſhall eſcape, any creditor, at whoſe ſuit he ſtands charged, may retake him by a new capias ad ſatisfaciendum, or ſue forth any other kind of execution, as if the body of ſuch priſoner had never been taken in execution. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. See title Eſcape. Where two are bound jointly, and and severally, and judgment is had against both of them, if one in execution escapes, the creditor may take out execution against the other; but if he go by licence of the creditor, then the other will be discharged. Cro. Car. 53. If one in execution be delivered by privilege of parliament, when the privilege ceases, the plaintiff may sue out a new execution against him. St. 1 Jac. 1. c. 13.

III. 1. No person is intitled to, or can sue out execution, who is not privy to the judgment, or intitled to the thing recovered, as heir, executor, or administrator to him who has judgment. 1 Rol. Abr. 889.

If one have judgment to recover lands, and die before execution, his heir shall have it; and where tenant in tail recovers and dies before the execution without issue, he in remainder may sue out execution: an heir is to have execution for lands, and the executor or administrator for damages. Co. Litt. 251: Dyer 26. The executors of executors may sue out execution of a judgment; but an administrator getting judgment in behalf of the intestate, and then dying, neither his executor, or administrator shall take out the execution, but the administrator de bonis non administratis of the first intestate. 5 Rep. 9. And see Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 8.

But if an administrator, durante minori ætate of an executor, recovers in debt, and before execution the executor comes of age, he shall have a scire facias on this judgment; for carrying on the suit in right of the executor, made the executor privy thereto. 1 Rol. Abr. 888-9.

If a man has judgment for the arrears of rent, and dies, his executor shall sue out execution, and not the heir; for by the recovery it becomes a chattel vested, to which the executor is intitled. 1 Rol. Abr. 880.

If a statute be entered into, to husband and wife, and the husband dies, the wife shall take out execution. 1 Rol. Abr. 889. So if husband and wife recover lands and damages, and the husband dies, the wife shall have execution of the damages, and not the executors of the husband. 1 Rol. Abr. 342, 889, 890. See tit. Baron and Feme.

If there be judgment in debt against two, and one dies, a scire facias lies against the other alone, reciting the death; and he cannot plead, that the heir of him that is dead has assets by descent, and demand judgment, if he ought to be charged alone; for at Common-law, the charge upon a judgment, being personal, survived, and the statute of Westm. 2, that gives the elegit, does not take away the remedy of the plaintiff at Common-law; and therefore the party may take out his execution which way he pleases; for the words of the statute are, sit in electione; but if he should, after the allowance of this writ and revival of the judgment, take out an elegit to charge the land, the party may have remedy by suggestion, or else by audita querela. Raym. 26: 1 Lev. 30: 1 Keb. 92, 125. S. C.

By the Common-law, if judgment be given against a man for debt, or damages, and the defendant dies before execution sued, his heir within age is not liable to execution during his minority; but the parol must demur (i. e. the plea must stand still) in such case till he comes of age. Co Lit. 290 a: 1 Rol. Abr. 140.

And this privilege of infancy does not only protect the infant, but all others who are affected by the judgment; as if there be father and two daughters, and judgment be given for debt against the father, who dies, one of the daughters being within age, partition being made, the eldest shall not be charged alone, but shall have the benefit of her sister's minority, which puts a stop to the execution. Co. Lit. 290 a.

There can be no execution taken out against a member of parliament during privilege of parliament: also no capias can issue against a peer; for even in the case of a private person at Common-law, the body was not liable to creditors; and the statute of Ed. 3, which subjects the body, does not extend to peers, because their persons are sacred: the law also supposes, that persons thus distinguished by the King, have wherewithal otherwise to satisfy their creditors. 6 Co. 52: Hob. 61: Cro. Car. 205.

A capias ad satisfaciendum may be executed upon a prisoner in prison for felony; and if he be acquitted of the felony, the sheriff is to keep him. 1 Lil. Abr. 567. But where a person is in prison for criminal matters, he ought not to be charged with a civil action without leave of the court; yet if he be charged, he shall not be discharged. Raym. 58. See 7 Mod. 153; and this Dict. title Prisoner.

A ca. sa. will lie against a man who is outlawed for felony, and he may be taken in execution at the suit of a common person. Owen 69. And if he was taken upon a capias utlagat. which was at the King's suit, he shall be in execution at the suit of the party, if he will. Moor 566. But this is not without prayer of the party: and if after a judgment given, the judges of their own heads, or at the request of any person, without prayer of the plaintiff, commit the defendant to prison; by this he shall not be said to be in execution for the plaintiff. Dyer 297. If one arrested be in prison for debt, and judgment is had against him; though it be in arrest on a latitat or capias, he shall not be in execution upon the judgment, unless the plaintiff prays it of record; or sues a capias ad satisfaciendum, and delivers it to the sheriff. Dyer 197, 306: Jenk. Cent. 165.

2. At Common-law, in real actions, where land was recovered, the demandant, after the year, might take out a scire facias to revive his judgment; because the judgment being particular in the real action, quoad the lands with a certain description, the law required, that the execution of that judgment should be entred upon the roll, that it might be seen, whether execution was delivered of the same thing of which judgment was given: a scire facias issued to shew cause, why execution should not be. 2 Inst. 471: 5 Co. 88: Cro. Eliz. 416: 6 Mod. 288.

But if the plaintiff, after he had obtained judgment in any personal action, had lain quiet, and had taken no process of execution within the year, he was put to a new original upon his judgment, and no scire facias was issuable at law on the judgment, because there was not a judgment for any particular thing in the personal action, with which the execution could be compared; therefore after a reasonable time, which was a year and a day, it was presumed to be executed, and the law allowed him no scire facias to shew cause why there should not be execution; but if the party had slipped his time, he was put to his action on the judgment, and the defendant was obliged to shew how that debt, of which the judgment was an evidence, was discharged. 2 Inst. 469: Carth. 30, 31: 1 Sid. 351.

To remedy this, and to make the forms of proceeding more uniform in both actions, the ſtatute of Weſtm. 2. cap. 45, gave the ſcire facias to the plaintiff to revive the judgment, where he had omitted to ſue execution within the year after judgment obtained.

A ſcire facias lies on a judgment in ejectment; for the words of the act are, Sive ſervitia, ſive conſuetudines, ſive alia quæcunque irrotulata, which comprehend all judgments, and give the like remedy on them by ſcire facias, as the demandant had on a judgment in a real action at Common law. 1 Sid. 351: 2 Salk. 600.

But though the general rule be, that the plaintiff cannot take out execution after the year and day without a ſcire facias, yet the rule muſt be underſtood with ſome reſtrictions.

If a Fi. fa; Ca. ſa; or Elegit, be taken out within the year and returned and awarded on the roll, the ſame may be continued from term to term to the time of the execution thereof, although after the year: and be as effectual as if the judgment had been revived by ſcire facias. N. on R. E. 5 Geo. 2. But a Fi. fa. muſt be left with the proper officer before he will make the entry on the roll returned by the ſheriff. Imp. K. B.

If the defendant brings a writ of error, and thereby hinders the plaintiff from taking his execution within the year, and the plaintiff in error is nonſuit, or the judgment affirmed, the defendant in error may proceed to execution after the year without a ſcire facias, becauſe the writ of error was a ſuperſedeas to the execution, and the plaintiff muſt acquieſce till he hears the judgment above; beſides while the cauſe is ſtill ſub judice, it is not known whether the plaintiff ſhall recover, or not, and the year for the execution ought to be accounted from the final judgment given. Cro. Jac. 364: Yelv. 7: 1 Rol. Abr. 899: 4 Leon. 197: 5 Co. 88: Carth. 236-7: 6 Mod. 288.

So if the plaintiff hath a judgment, with ſtay of execution for a year, he may, after the year, take out his execution without the ſcire facias, becauſe the delay is by conſent of parties, and in favour of the defendant; and the indulgence of the plaintiff ſhall not turn to his prejudice, nor ought the defendant to be allowed any advantage of it, when it appears to be done for his advantage, and at his inſtance. 6 Mod. 288: 1 Rol. Rep. 104.

But if the defendant had been tied up by an injunction out of Chancery for a year, yet he cannot take out execution without a ſcire facias, becauſe the courts of law do not take notice of Chancery injunctions, as they do of writs of error; beſides, in that caſe it had been no breach of the injunction to have taken out the execution within the year, and continued it down by vic' non miſit breve, which cannot be done in the caſe of a writ of error, becauſe that removes the record out of the court where the judgment was; and therefore there can be no proceedings below till it be affirmed, and returned to the inferior courts. 1 Salk. 322: 6 Mod. 288. S. C.

In debt, if defendant acknowledge the action for part, and as to the remainder pleads to iſſue, and the plaintiff hath judgment for that he confeſſeth; here he may not have execution till the iſſue is tried for that which he is to recover damages: though if he releaſes the damages, he may have execution preſently for the reſt. Rol. 897.

3. All judgments of inferior courts in debt are to be executed in the peculiar juriſdictions where given, and cannot be removed to be executed by the ſuperior courts. Cro. Car. 34.

Now by Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. § 4, where final judgment ſhall be obtained in any ſuit in any inferior court of record, any of the courts at Weſtminſter on affidavit thereof, and that execution has iſſued againſt the defendant's perſon or effects, and that they are not to be found within the juriſdiction of ſuch inferior court, may cauſe the record of the judgment to be removed into ſuch ſuperior court, to iſſue execution thereon, in the ſame manner as in judgment obtained in the ſaid ſuperior courts.

If a judgment given in another court be affirmed, or reverſed for error in B. R. becauſe the proceedings in the court below are entered upon record in the King's Bench, the party ſhall have execution in that court: And ſo if a judgment of debt, &c. in the Common Pleas be affirmed in B. R. on a writ of error. 5 Rep. 88. Though where the record of a judgment given in C. B. is removed into B. R. the party cannot take out execution upon it, without a ſcire facias quare executionem habere non debeat. 1 Lill. Abr. 562. And where a writ of error is brought in the Exchequer Chamber, to reverſe a judgment in B. R. if the judgment is affirmed there, yet that court cannot make out execution upon the judgment affirmed; but the record muſt be tranſmitted back to the court of King's Bench, where execution muſt be done. 1 Lill. 565. See title Error.

As an execution is an entire thing, he who begins muſt end it; a new ſheriff may diſtrain an old one to ſell the goods on a diſtringas nuper vicecom' and to bring the money into court, or ſell and deliver the money to the new ſheriff; and the authority of the old ſheriff continues by virtue of the firſt writ, ſo that when he hath ſeized, he is compellable to return the writ, and liable to anſwer the value according to the return; likewiſe by the ſeizure the property of the goods, &c. is diveſted out of the defendant, and he is diſcharged, whereby no further remedy can be had againſt him. 1 Salk. 322: 3 Salk. 159.

A ſheriff ſhall have his fees for executions, upon a writ of capias ad ſatisfaciendum for the whole debt; upon a fieri fac. according to the ſum levied; and on an elegit it is held by ſome, that he ſhall have fees according to what is levied, and by others for the whole debt recovered, becauſe the plaintiff may keep the land till he is ſatisfied the intire debt. 1 Salk. 333. Where the ſheriff hath a fieri facias or ca. ſa. againſt a man, and before execution, he pays him the money, execution may not be done afterwards; if it be, treſpaſs or falſe impriſonment lies. 5 Rep. 93: 12 Car. B. R. See title Sheriff.

It is laid down as a general rule in our books, that the ſheriff in executing any judicial writ, cannot break open the door of a dwelling-houſe; this privilege, which the law allows to a man's habitation, ariſes from the great regard the law has to every man's ſafety and quiet, and therefore protects them from the inconveniences which muſt neceſſarily attend an unlimited power in the ſheriff and his officers in this reſpect; hence, every man's houſe is called his caſtle. 5 Co. 91, &c.: 3 Inſt. 162: Moor 668: Yelv. 28: Cro. Eliz. 908: Dalt. Sher. 350.

Yet in favour of executions, which are the life of the law, and eſpecially in caſes of great neceſſity, or where:

where the ſafety of the King and Commonwealth are concerned, this general caſe hath the following exceptions.

1ſt. That whenever the proceſs is at the ſuit of the King, the ſheriff or his officer may, after requeſt to have the door opened, and refuſal, break and enter the houſe to do execution, either on the party's goods, or take his body, as the caſe ſhall be. 5 Co. 91 b.

2dly. So in a writ of ſeiſin or habere facias poſſeſſionem in ejectment, the ſheriff may juſtify breaking open the door, if denied entrance by the tenant: for the end of the writ being to give the party full and actual poſſeſſion, conſequently the ſheriff muſt have all power neceſſary for this end; beſides, in this caſe the law does not, after the judgment, look upon the houſe as belonging to the tenant, but to him who has recovered. 5 Co. 91.

3dly. Alſo this privilege of a man's houſe relates only to ſuch execution as affects himſelf; and therefore if a fieri facias be directed to the ſheriff to levy the goods of A. and it happens that A.'s goods are in the houſe of B. if after requeſt made by the ſheriff to B. to deliver theſe goods, he refuſes, the ſheriff may well juſtify the breaking and entring his houſe. 5 Co. 93 a: 1 Sid. 186.

4thly. It hath been adjudged, that the ſheriff, on a fieri facias may break open the door of a barn, ſtanding at a diſtance from the dwelling houſe, without requeſting the owner to open the door; in the ſame manner as he may enter a cloſe, &c. 1 Sid. 186: 1 Keb. 698. S. C.

5thly. So on a fieri facias, when the ſheriff or his officers are once in the houſe, they may break open any chamber-door or trunks for the compleating execution. 2 Show. 87.

6thly. So if the ſheriff's bailiffs enter the houſe, the door being open, and the owner locks them in, the ſheriff may juſtify breaking open the door, for the ſetting at liberty the bailiffs; for if, in this caſe, he were obliged to ſtay till he could procure a homine replegiando, it might be highly inconvenient; alſo it ſeems, that in this caſe, the locking in the bailiffs is ſuch a diſturbance to the execution, that the court will grant an attachment for it. Palm. 52: Cro. Jac. p. 555. S. C: 2 Roll. Rep. 132: S. C.

7thly. That if the ſheriff in executing a writ, breaks open a door, where he has no authority for ſo doing by law, yet the execution is good, and the party has no other remedy but an action of treſpaſs againſt the ſheriff. 5 Co. 93 a.

If the ſheriff refuſes to execute any judicial writ; this is a contempt to the court, for which an attachment will be granted. 1 Salk. 323.

So if he executes the writ, and makes a falſe return, the party injured may have an action on the caſe againſt him. 1 Salk. 323.

4. By a releaſe of all ſuits, execution is gone; for no one can have execution without prayer and ſuit, but the King only, in whoſe caſe the judges ought to award execution ex officio, without any ſuit: And a releaſe of all executions bars the King. By releaſe of all debts or duties, the defendant is diſcharged of the execution, becauſe the debt or duty on which it is founded is diſcharged: But if the body of a man be taken in execution, and the plaintiff releaſe all actions, yet he ſhall remain in execution. Co. Lit. 291. If a judgment is given in action of debt, and the defendant taken in execution, the plaintiff releaſeth the judgment, the body ſhall be diſcharged of the execution. And if the plaintiff after judgment releaſeth all demands, the execution is diſcharged. Ibid. where one is in execution at my ſuit, and I bid the ſheriff let him go; this is a good diſcharge and releaſe both to the party and ſheriff. Popb. 207.

But if the plaintiff make a releaſe to the defendant being in execution, or other act amounting to a diſcharge; it will not be a diſcharge ipſo facto, but by this means he may have the ſame. 5 Rep. 86: Dyer 152.

By Stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 28, if a defendant charged in execution for any debt not exceeding 100 l. (extended by Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 44, for five years to 200 l.) will, ſurrender all his effects to his creditors (except his apparel, bedding and tools of his trade not amounting in the whole to the value of 10 l.) and will make oath of his punctual compliance with the ſtatute, ſuch priſoner may be diſcharged unleſs the creditor inſiſts on detaining him; in which caſe he ſhall allow him 2 s. 4 d. per week to be paid on the firſt day of every week, and on failure of regular payment the priſoner ſhall be diſcharged, Yet the creditor may at any future time have execution againſt the lands and goods of ſuch defendant though never more againſt his perſon. And on the other hand the creditors may as in caſe of bankruptcy, compel under pain of tranſportation for ſeven years, ſuch debtor to make a diſcovery and ſurrender of all his effects for their benefit; whereupon he is alſo entitled to the like diſcharge of his perſon. See further tit. Priſoner: Inſolvent.

Perſons thus charged in execution in order to take the benefit of theſe acts are to exhibit a petition to the court whence the proceſs iſſued, with an account of their whole eſtate upon oath, praying to be diſcharged, &c. And thereupon the court ſhall order the priſoner to be brought up, and his creditors ſummoned at a certain day, when the court in a ſummary way is to examine into the ſame, &c. and order the eſtate and effects of the priſoner to be aſſigned to the creditors by indorſement on the back of the petition. § 13.

The priſoners (except in London and Weſtminſter) before they petition any of the courts, from whence the proceſs iſſued, for a rule to be brought up, are to give notice to their creditors in writing, that they deſign to petition, and alſo a true copy of the account or ſchedule of their whole eſtates which they intend to deliver into the court, &c. And then, upon ſuch petition, the priſoners ſhall have a rule of court to be brought to the next aſſizes for the county, at an expence not exceeding 12 d. a mile, to be paid to the officer out of the effects of the priſoners, &c. And the creditors muſt be ſummoned to appear at the ſaid aſſiſes by order ſerved on them, or left at their houſes thirty days before; and at the aſſiſes, the judges on examination ſhall determine the matter, and give judgment and relief; a record of which judgment is to be returned and certified to the court whence the proceſs iſſued, on which the priſoners were taken in execution. No perſon charged in execution, ſhall be allowed to exhibit a petition to any court at law to be diſcharged, purſuant to the above acts, unleſs it be done before the end of the next term after he is charged; and thoſe ſtatutes ſhall not relate to any one taken on a capias for running cuſtomable goods, &c. § 14, 15.

IV.

IV. 1. Writs of execution bind the property of goods only from the time of the delivery of the writs to the ſheriff; who upon receipt thereof indorſes the day of the month when received: But land is bound from the day of the judgment. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3: Cro. Car. 149. But the judgment muſt be docketed according to the directions of Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20; by which for the greater ſecurity of purchaſers, it is enacted, that the clerk of the eſſoins of the court of C. B. the clerk of the doggets of the court of King's Bench, and the maſter of the office of pleas in the court of Exchequer, ſhall make and put into an alphabetical dogget, by the defendant's names, a particular of all judgments by confeſſion, non ſum informatus, nihil dicit, &c. entered in their ſeveral courts, &c. and that no judgment not doggeted, and entered in the books as aforeſaid, ſhall affect any lands or tenements as to purchaſers or mortgagees, or have any preference againſt heirs, executors or adminiſtrators, in their adminiſtration of their anceſtors, teſtators, or inteſtate's eſtates. See title Judgment.

Notwithſtanding this ſtatute, if after the writ delivered to the ſheriff, and before execution is executed, the defendant becomes bankrupt, that will hinder execution. 3 Salk. 159. See title Bankrupt.

The plaintiff takes out execution by fieri facias againſt the defendant; all the goods and chattels that he had at the time of the execution, will be liable to it: And where debt or damages are recovered, the plaintiff ſhall have execution of any land the defendant had at the time of the judgment; not of the lands he had the day when the firſt writ was purchaſed. Rol. Abr. 892. By Stat. 29 C. 2. c. 3, Sheriffs may deliver in execution all lands whereof others ſhall be ſeiſed in truſt for him againſt whom execution is had, on a judgment, &c.

The ſale of goods for a valuable conſideration, after judgment, and before execution awarded, is good: And if judgment be given againſt a leſſee for years, and afterwards he ſelleth the term before execution, the term aſſigned bonâ fide is not liable; alſo if he aſſign it by fraud, and the aſſignee ſells it to another for a valuable conſideration, it is not liable to execution in the hands of the ſecond aſſignee. Godb. 161: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 783. If a perſon has a bill of ſale of any goods, in nature of a ſecurity for money, he ſhall be preferred for his debt to one who hath obtained a judgment againſt the debtor before thoſe goods are ſold; for till execution lodged in the ſheriff's hands, a man is owner of his goods, and may diſpoſe of them as he thinks fit, and they are not bound by the judgment. Preced. Ch. 286. But where a man generally keeps poſſeſſion of goods after ſale, it will make the ſame void againſt others, by the ſtatute of fraudulent conveyances. And where on an execution, the owner of the goods by agreement was to have the poſſeſſion of them upon certain terms; afterwards another got judgment againſt the ſame perſon, and took thoſe goods in execution: It was adjudged they were liable, and that the firſt execution was by fraud, and void againſt any ſubſequent creditor; becauſe there was no change of the poſſeſſion, and ſo no alteration of property. Ibid. 287. See title Fraud.

A fieri facias being executed fraudulently, a fieri facias at the ſuit of another perſon afterwards ſhall ſtand good, and be preferred; and on trial, it is a matter proper to be left to a jury. 1 Wilſ. 44.

Where two writs of fieri facias againſt the ſame defendant are delivered to the ſheriff on different days; and no ſale is actually made of the defendant's goods, the firſt execution muſt have the priority, even though the ſeizure was firſt made under the ſubſequent execution. 1 Term Rep. 729.—But where the ſheriff has given a bill of ſale to the perſon claiming under the ſecond execution, this entitles the latter to ſecure his debt, and the ſheriff is liable to the plaintiff who delivered the firſt writ. Ib. 731.

Execution may be made of lands that the defendant hath by purchaſe after the judgment; although he ſell the ſame before execution. Roll. 892.

The Stat. 8 An. c. 14, directs that where there is an execution againſt goods or chattels, of a tenant for life, or years, the plaintiff before removal of the goods by the execution is to pay the landlord the rent of the land, &c. ſo as there be not above a year due; and if more be due, paying a year's rent, the plaintiff may proceed in his execution, and the ſheriff ſhall levy the rent paid, as well as the execution money.

But a ground-landlord cannot come in for a year's rent in the caſe of an execution againſt an under-leſſee: for the ſtatute only extends to the immediate landlord. Str. 787. And the landlord muſt give the ſheriff notice, or he is not bound. 1 Str. 97. Vide 2 Wilſ. 140.

2. The King by his prerogative, may have execution of the body, lands, or goods of his debtor, at his election. Hob. 60: 2 Inſt. 19: 2 Rol. Abr. 472.

As to the King's execution of goods, the ſame relates to the time of the awarding thereof, which is the teſte of the writ, as it was in the caſe of a common perſon at law; for though by the 29 Car. 2. cap. 3, no execution ſhall bind the property of goods, but from the time of the delivery of the writ to the ſheriff; yet as this act does not extend to the King, an extent of a later teſte ſuperſedes an execution of the goods by a former writ; becauſe by the King's prerogative at Common-law, if there had been an execution at the ſubject's ſuit, and afterwards an extent, the execution was ſuperſeded till the extent was executed, becauſe the Public ought to be preferred to private property. 2 New. Abr. 365.

If the King's debt be prior on record, it binds the lands of the debtor, into whoſe hands ſoever they come, becauſe it is in the nature of an original charge upon the land itſelf, and therefore muſt ſubject every body that claims under it; but if the lands were aliened in whole, or in part, as by granting a jointure before the debt contracted, ſuch alienee claims prior to the charge, and in ſuch caſe the land is not ſubject. See 2 Roll. Abr. 156-7: Moor 126: 3 Leon. 239, 240: 4 Leon 10.

Execution for the King's debt, or prerogative execution, is always preferred before any other executions. 7 Rep. 20. And if a defendant is taken by capias ad ſatisfaciendum, and before the return thereof a prerogative writ iſſues from the Exchequer, for the debt of the King, teſted a day before he was taken, here he ſhall be held in execution for the King's debt and that of the ſubject. Dyer 197. Lands intailed in the hands of the iſſue in tail, when ſubject to the King's extent, and where not, ſee 7 Rep. 21. See alſo this Dict. titles King; Extent.

V. 1. An execution may be ſet aſide as irregular, by ſuperſedeas; and the party have reſtitution, &c. Carthew 460, 461, 468. It hath been reſolved, that a writ of error is a ſuperſedeas from the time of the allowance: though if a writ of execution be executed before the writ of error is allowed, it may be returned afterwards. 1 Salk. 321. No writ of execution ſhall be ſtayed by any writ of error or ſuperſedeas, after verdict and judgment, in any action upon the caſe for payment of money, covenant, detinue, treſpaſs, &c. until recognizance be entered into as directed by 3 Jac. 1. cap. 8. &c. Judgment was had againſt a perſon at Briſtol, and his goods attached there; and the court of B. R. being moved to ſtay the execution until a writ of error brought ſhould be determined, they granted a habeas corpus, but nothing to ſtay the execution. 1 Bulſt. 268. See title Error.

A defendant cannot plead to any writ of execution, (tho' he may in bar of execution to a ſcire facias brought;) but if he hath any matter after judgment to diſcharge him of the execution, he is to have audita querela. Co. Lit. 290. Or, move the court for relief, which is now the uſual method.

If huſband and wife are taken in execution for the debt of the wife, the wife ſhall be diſcharged; for the huſband being in execution, the wife ſhall not be ſo alſo, and becauſe the wife hath nothing liable to the execution. 1 Lev. 51.

The execution of a liberate is good without being returned; and where a man is taken upon a ca. ſa. the execution is good, though the writ is not returned: And ſo in all caſes where no inqueſt is to be taken, but only lands delivered, or ſeiſin had, &c. which are only matters of fact. 4 Rep. 67: 5 Rep. 89.

2. There were anciently caſtles, fortreſſes and liberties, where they reſiſted the ſheriff in executing the King's writs, which creating great inconvenience, the ſtatute of Weſtm. 2. cap. 39. (13 Ed. 1.) hindered the ſheriff from returning reſcuers to the King's writ of execution, and directed him to take the poſſe comitatûs. See the Stat. and 2 New Abr. 368.

The judges conſtrued the words of the ſtatute to extend only to executions, and not to writs on meſne proceſs; that the ſheriff was not obliged to carry the poſſe comitatûs where the man was bailable, for they did not preſume, that in ſuch caſes the King's writ would be diſobeyed. 2 New Abr. 368.

The original of commitment for contempts ſeems to be derived from this ſtatute; for ſince the ſheriff was to commit thoſe who reſiſted the proceſs, the judges who awarded ſuch proceſs muſt have the ſame authority to vindicate it; hence, if any one offers any contempt to his proceſs, either by word or deed, he is ſubject to impriſonment during pleaſure, viz. from whence they ſhall not be delivered without the King's ſpecial commandment; 2 New Abr. 368. See titles Debt; Error.

See further on Executions in civil caſes, in general Com. Dig. that title, &c.

EXECUTION OF CRIMINALS, Muſt in all caſes as well capital as otherwiſe, be performed by the ſheriff or his deputy; whoſe warrant for ſo doing was anciently by precept under the hand and ſeal of the judge, as is ſtill practiſed in the court of the Lord High Steward upon the execution of a peer. 2 Hale 409. Though in the court of the peers in parliament it is done by writ from the King; afterwards it was eſtabliſhed, that in caſe of life the judges may command execution to be done without any writ. Finch 478. And now the uſage is for the judge to ſign the calendar, a liſt of all the priſoners' names with the ſeparate judgments in the margin which is left with the ſheriff: the ſheriff on receipt of this warrant is to do execution within a convenient time, which in the country is left at large: in London, the Recorder, after reporting to the King in perſon the caſe of the ſeveral priſoners, and receiving his royal pleaſure that the law muſt take its courſe, iſſues his warrant to the ſheriffs directing them to do execution at the day and place aſſigned. See 4 State Trials 332: Foſt. 43: 4 Comm. 403.

It is held by Coke (3 Inſt. 52,) and Hale (2 H. P. C. 272, 412,) that even the King cannot change the puniſhment of the law by altering hanging (or burning when uſed) into beheading; tho' when beheading is part of the ſentence, the King may remit the reſt. And notwithſtanding ſome examples to the contrary, Coke maintains that judicandum eſt legibus, non exemplis. But others have thought, and more juſtly, that this prerogative being founded in mercy, and immemorially exerciſed by the crown, is part of the Common-law. Foſt. 270: F. N. B. 241 b: 19 Rym. Fœd. 284: For hitherto, in every inſtance all theſe exchanges have been for more merciful kinds of death; and how far this may alſo fall within the King's power of granting conditional pardons, (viz. by remitting a ſeverer kind of death, on condition that the criminal ſubmits to a milder,) is a matter that may bear conſideration. 4 Comm. 404.—There are ancient precedents wherein men condemned to be hanged for felony have been beheaded by force of a ſpecial warrant from the King. Bract. 104: Staundf. 13.

Subſequent juſtices have no power by the Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 7, to award execution of perſons condemned by former judges; but if judgment has not been paſſed on the offenders, the other juſtices may give judgment and award execution, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. Execution ought to be in the ſame county where the criminal was tried and convicted; except the record of the attainder be removed into B. R. which may award execution in the county where it ſits. 3 Inſt. 31, 211, 217.

If, upon a record removed, an outlawed perſon confeſs himſelf to be the ſame perſon, execution ſhall be had; but if he deny it, and the King's Attorney confeſſes he is not, he ſhall be diſcharged; though if the Attorney-General take iſſue upon it, the ſame ſhall be tried. 2 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 402, 463. If a perſon, when attainted, ſtands mute to a demand why execution ſhall not go againſt him, the ordinary execution ſhall be awarded. 2 Hawk. P. C. In caſe a man condemned to die, come to life after he is hanged, as the judgment is not executed till he is dead, he muſt be hung again. Finch 389: 2 Hal. P. C. 412: 2 Hawk. P. C: 4 Comm. 406. And ſo was the law of old; for if a criminal thus eſcaped and fled to ſanctuary he was not permitted to abjure the realm. Fitz. Ab. title Corone. 335.

The body of a traitor or felon is forfeited to the King by the execution; and he may diſpoſe of it as he pleaſes. The execution of perſons under the age of diſcretion is uſually reſpited, in order to obtain a pardon. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 8.

By the Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 37, perſons convicted of murder are to be executed the day next but one after ſentence; [unleſs that happens to be Sunday; for which reaſon murderers are generally tried on a Friday to afford them a merciful reſpite of one day more to prepare for eternity;] and their bodies delivered to ſurgeons to be anatomiſed. The judge may ſtay the ſentence, and appoint the body to be hung in chains or anatomiſed, but not buried.—And, by the ſaid ſtatute, to reſcue the body of any ſuch malefactor from the cuſtody of the ſheriff after execution, is made felony, puniſhable by tranſportation for ſeven years.—And to reſcue ſuch criminal going to, or during execution, is felony without benefit of clergy. See this Dict. title Reſcue. Under this act the time and place of the execution are part of the judgment, but in no other caſe whatever. 4 Comm. 404. See further title Murder; and as to theſe executions in general, titles Treaſon, Felony and other proper titles.

Execution may be avoided by a reprieve or a pardon; whereof the former is only temporary, the latter (as to which, ſee this Dict. title Pardon) is permanent.

A REPRIEVE, from reprendre to take back, or more immediately from the participle repris;] Is the withdrawing of a ſentence for an interval of time; whereby the execution is ſuſpended. This may be ex arbitrio judicis, either before or after judgment; as where the judge is not ſatisfied with the verdict, or the evidence is ſuſpicious, or the indictment is inſufficient, or he is doubtful whether the offence be within clergy; or ſometimes if it be a ſmall felony, or any favourable circumſtances appear in the criminal's character in order to give room to apply to the crown for either an abſolute or conditional pardon. Theſe arbitrary reprieves may be granted or taken off by the juſtices of gaol delivery, although their ſeſſion be finiſhed and their commiſſions expired; but this rather by common uſage than of ſtrict right. 2 Hal. P. C. 412.

Reprieves may alſo be ex neceſſitate legis.

If a woman quick with child be condemned either for treaſon, or felony, ſhe may alledge her being with child in order to get the execution reſpited; and thereupon the ſheriff, or marſhal ſhall be commanded to take her into a private room, and to impanel a jury of matrons to try and examine whether ſhe be quick with child or not; and if they find her quick with child, the execution ſhall be reſpited till her delivery. But it is agreed, that a woman cannot demand ſuch reſpite of execution by reaſon of her being quick with child more than once; and that ſhe can neither ſave herſelf by this means from pleading upon her arraignment, nor from having judgment pronounced againſt her upon her conviction. Alſo it is ſaid, both by Staundford and Coke, that a woman can have no advantage from being found with child, unleſs ſhe be alſo found quick with child. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 51. § 9, 10.

Another cauſe of regular reprieve is if the offender become non compos between the judgment and the award of execution. 1 Hal. P. C. 370. For regularly though a man be compos when he commits a capital crime, yet if he becomes non compos after, he ſhall not be indicted; if after indictment, he ſhall not be convicted; if after conviction, he ſhall not receive judgment; if after judgment, he ſhall not be ordered for execution: for the law knows not but he might have offered ſome reaſon, if in his ſenſes, to have ſtayed theſe reſpective proceedings. It is therefore an invariable rule when any time intervenes between the attainder and the award of execution, to demand of the priſoner what he hath to alledge why execution ſhould not be awarded againſt him; and if he appears to be inſane, the Judge, in his diſcretion, may and ought to reprieve him.

The party may alſo plead in bar of execution; which plea may be either pregnancy; (of which above;) the King's pardon, an act of grace; (See title Pardon;) or laſtly diverſity of perſon viz. that he is not the ſame that was attainted and the like. In this laſt caſe a jury ſhall be impanelled to try this collateral iſſue, namely the identity of his perſon; and not whether guilty or innocent; for that has been decided before; and in theſe collateral iſſues the trial ſhall be inſtanter, and no time allowed the priſoner to make his defence or produce his witneſſes unleſs he will make oath that he is not the perſon attainted. 1 Sid. 72: Foſt. 42. Neither ſhall any peremptory challenges of the jury be allowed the priſoner; though formerly ſuch challenges were held to be allowable whenever a man's life was in queſtion. 1 Lev. 61: Foſt. 42, 6.—Staundf. P. C. 163: Co. Litt. 157: Hal. Sum. 259.

Every Judge who hath power to order execution, hath power to grant a reprieve; and execution is often ſtaid on condition of tranſportation. See Stat. 8 Geo. 3. c. 15, for a power given to judges of aſſiſe to reprieve for the purpoſe of obtaining a conditional pardon. See alſo this Dict. titles Tranſportation: Felony: Clergy. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 51.—But no priſoner convicted of any felony, for which he cannot have his clergy, at the Seſſions at the Old Bailey for London and Middleſex, &c. ought to be reprieved but in open Seſſions; and reprieves are not to be granted otherwiſe but by the King's expreſs warrant. Kel. 4.

EXECUTIONE FACIENDA IN WITHERNAMIUM. A writ that lies for taking his cattle, who hath conveyed the cattle of another out of the county, ſo that the ſheriff cannot replevy them. Reg. Orig. 82. See title Replevin.

EXECUTIONE JUDICII. Is a writ directed to the judge of an inferior court to do execution upon a judgment therein, or to return ſome reaſonable cauſe wherefore he delays the execution. F. N. B. 20. If execution be not done on the firſt writ, an alias ſhall iſſue, and a pluries with this clauſe, vel cauſam nobis ſignifices quare, &c. And if upon this writ execution is not done, or ſome reaſonable cauſe returned why it is delayed, the party ſhall have an attachment againſt him who ought to have done the execution, returnable in B. R. or C. B. New Nat. Br. 43. If the judgment be in a court of record, this writ ſhall be directed to the juſtices of the court where the judgment was given, and not unto the officer of the court; for if the officer will not execute the writs directed unto him, nor return them as he ought, the judges of the court may amerce him. Ibid. See title Execution III. 3, and the Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. there mentioned.

One may have a writ de executione judicii out of the Chancery to execute a judgment, in an inferior court, although a writ of error be brought to remove the record, and reverſe the judgment: if he that brings the writ of error do not take care to have the record tranſcribed, and the writ of error returned up in due time. 1 *Lil. EXECUTIVE POWER. The ſupreme executive power of theſe kingdoms is veſted by our laws in a ſingle perſon, the King, or Queen, for the time being. 1 Comm. 190, &c. See title King.

EXECUTOR. Lat.] One appointed by a man's laſt will and teſtament, to perform or execute the contents thereof after the teſtator's deceaſe; and to have the diſpoſing of all the teſtator's ſubſtance according to the tenor of the will: he anſwers to the hæres deſignatus or teſtamentarius in the Civil law, as to debts, goods and chattels of his teſtator. Terms de Ley.

The rights powers and duties of EXECUTORS and ADMINISTRATORS, being in many reſpects ſimilar, and the ſeveral determinations in the books, being generally applicable to both, it ſeems moſt methodical and uſeful to conſider them together; for which purpoſe, reference is made from title Adminiſtrator to this place. I. 1. In caſe a perſon makes no diſpoſition of his effects by will, he is ſaid to die inteſtate; and in ſuch caſes, it is ſaid, that by the old law, the king was entitled to ſeize upon his goods, as the general truſtee of the kingdom. 9 Rep. 38.—This prerogative the king continued to exerciſe for ſome time, by his own miniſters of juſtice; and probably in the county court where matters of all kinds were determined; and it was granted as a franchiſe to many lords of manors and others, who have to this day a preſcriptive right to grant adminiſtration to their inteſtate tenants and ſuitors, in their own Courts-baron, and other courts, or to have their wills there proved, in caſe they make any. 9 Rep. 37. Afterwards the crown, in favour of the church, inveſted the prelates with this branch of the prerogative; and then the Ordinary might ſeize the goods and keep them without waſting; and alſo might give, alien or ſell them at his will, and diſpoſe of the money in pios uſus; being thus, probably, merely the king's almoner in his dioceſe. Finch Law 173, 4: Plowd. 277.

As the Ordinary had thus the diſpoſition of inteſtates' effects, the probate of wills of courſe followed; for it was thought juſt and natural, that the will of the deceaſed ſhould be proved to the ſatisfaction of the prelate, whoſe right of diſtributing his goods was ſuperſeded thereby.

By degrees, through an abuſe of this power of the Ordinary, often complained of before it was redreſſed, the Popiſh clergy ſecured the inteſtate's eſtate to themſelves, without paying even his lawful debts; for which reaſon it was enacted by Stat. Weſtm. 2. (13 E. 1. A.D. 1285.) c. 19, that the Ordinary ſhall be bound to pay the debts of the inteſtate, ſo far as his goods will extend, in the ſame manner as executors were bound in caſe of a will.—But ſtill the reſidue remained in the hands of the Ordinary, and the continued abuſe of this power at length produced the Stat. 31 E. 4. c. 11; (A.D. 1357;) which provides, that in caſe of inteſtacy, the Ordinary ſhall depute the neareſt and moſt lawful friends of the deceaſed to adminiſter his goods, which adminiſtrators are put upon the ſame footing, with regard to ſuits, and to accounting, as executors.—The next and moſt lawful friend is interpreted to be the next of blood, who is under no legal diſabilities. 9 Rep. 39.—The Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 5, enlarges the power of the eccleſiaſtical judge a little more; permitting him to grant adminiſtration either to the widow or the next of kin, or to both of them, at his diſcretion; and where two or more perſons are in the ſame degree of kindred, gives the Ordinary his election to accept which he pleaſes. 1 Sid. 179: Raym. 93: 1 Show. 351: 1 Salk. 36.

On this footing now ſtands the general law relative to the appointment of adminiſtrators—Who are the next of blood, or as it is uſually called next of kin, is ſtated poſt. III. & V. 8.

2. The Ordinary ought not to repeal letters of adminiſtration which he hath duly granted; but if they are granted to ſuch perſons who ought not by law to have them, he may revoke them. 1 Lill. 38. For juſt cauſe they may be revoked, as where a perſon is a lunatick, &c. And if granted where not grantable, they may be repealed by the delegates. 1 Lev. 157, 186. If adminiſtration is granted, and afterwards a will is produced and proved, the adminiſtration ſhall be revoked; and all acts done by the adminiſtrator are void. 2 Rol. Abr. 907. If a citation is granted againſt a ſtranger adminiſtrator, and his adminiſtration is revoked by ſentence, yet all acts done by him bonâ fide as adminiſtrator are good till the revocation; the adminiſtration being only voidable. 6 Rep. 18: 8 Rep. 135. But if there is any fraud, a creditor may have relief upon the Stat. 13 Eliz. cap. 5. And when the firſt adminiſtration is merely void, as granted by a wrong perſon, &c. it is otherwiſe: ſo when there is an appeal from the grant of the adminiſtration, to ſuſpend the former decree. 5 Rep. 30. Adminiſtration was granted to J. S. and he releaſed all actions, and afterwards the adminiſtration was revoked, and declared void; this releaſe was held good. 1 Brownl. 51. Qu. If it had been without conſideration? If an adminiſtrator gives goods away, and then adminiſtration is revoked or repealed, 'tis ſaid the gift is good; except it be by covin, when it ſhall be void only againſt a creditor by ſtatute: and where the adminiſtrator after many goods adminiſtered, had his adminiſtration revoked, and it was committed committed to B. who ſued the firſt adminiſtrator for goods unduly adminiſtered, it was held that there was no remedy but in Chancery. 6 Rep. 19: Clayt. 44: 4 Shep. Ab. 89: See Hob. 266.—But in ſuch a caſe as this it ſeems that the ſecond adminiſtrator might maintain an action at law againſt the firſt, for money had and received, &c. or trover for any goods remaining in his poſſeſſion, or by him converted and not duly adminiſtered.

In 2 Leon 155, it is ſaid, where the firſt adminiſtration is void, the adminiſtrator who under that adminiſtration takes the goods is a treſpaſſer. Letters of adminiſtration obtained by fraud are void. 3 Rep. 78: 6 Rep. 18, 19: 8 Rep. 143.

See the ſeveral caſes on this part of the ſubject collected in 1 Com. Dig. title Adminiſtrator (B. 8,); the reſult of which (as given in 4 Burn's Eccleſiaſtical Law 236,) is, that an adminiſtration may be repealed, although not arbitrarily, yet where there ſhall be a juſt cauſe for ſo doing; of which the temporal courts are to judge.

II. All perſons are capable of being Executors, that are capable of making wills, and many others beſides; as feme-coverts and infants: nay even infants unborn, or in ventre ſes meres may be made Executors. Weſt. Symb. p. 1. § 635.

A popiſh recuſant convict cannot be an executor. 9 Rep. 37. A mayor and commonalty may be executors. 1 Rol. Abr. 915. And if the King is made executor, he appoints others to take the execution of the will upon them, and to take account. 5 Rep. 29.

It ſeems agreed, that by our law, an alien, or one born out of the allegiance of our King, may be an executor or adminiſtrator; alſo it hath been adjudged, that ſuch a one ſhall have adminiſtration of leaſes as well as perſonal things, becauſe he hath them in auter droit, and not to his own uſe. Off. of Ex. 17.

But it has been long doubted, whether an alien enemy ſhould maintain an action as executor; for on the one hand it is ſaid, that by the policy of the law, alien enemies ſhall not be admitted to actions to recover effects, which may be carried out of the kingdom to weaken ourſelves and enrich the enemy, therefore public utility muſt be preferred to private convenience; but on the other hand it is ſaid, that thoſe effects of the teſtator are not forfeited to the King by way of reprifal, becauſe they are not the alien enemy's, for he is to recover them for others; and if he allows ſuch alien enemies to poſſeſs the effects as well as an alien friend, he muſt allow them power to recover, ſince in that there is no difference, and by conſequence he muſt not be diſabled to ſue for them; if it were otherwiſe, it would be a prejudice to the King's ſubjects, who could not recover their debts from the alien executor, by his not being able to get in the aſſets of the teſtator. Cro. Eliz. 683: Moor 431: Carter 49, 191: Skin. 370.

But an excommunicated perſon cannot be an executor or adminiſtrator, for by the excommunication he is excluded from the body of the church, and is incapable to lay out the goods of the deceaſed to pious uſes. Co. Lit. 134: Swinb. 349: Godolph. 85.

No infant can act as Executor till the age of 17 years; till which time adminiſtration muſt be granted to ſome other durante minore ætate. Went. Off. of Ex. c. 18: 6 Rep. 67: 4 Inſt. 335.

And if the right of adminiſtration devolves on an infant, adminiſtration durante minore ætate is to be granted till he arrives at 21. Godolph. 102: 5 Co. 29: Hob. 250: Yelv. 128.

And as ſuch an adminiſtrator is but in nature of a curator for the infant, and has no intereſt or benefit in the teſtator or inteſtate's eſtate, but in right of the infant, it has been always held diſcretionary in the Ordinary to whom to grant it, and therefore it hath been frequently adjudged, that he is not obliged within the Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 5, to grant it to the next of kin either of the deceaſed, or the infant. Hob. 250: 1 Vent. 219: 1 Keb. 549: 3 Mod. 24: 1 New. Abr. 381.

If an infant, and one of full age, are made executors, he who is of full age may take out adminiſtration durante minori ætate of the infant, and may declare as executor or adminiſtrator durante minori ætate; and there is no abſurdity in this caſe, that there ſhould be an executor and adminiſtrator to the ſame party. 1 New. Abr. 381.

In like manner as it may be granted durante abſentiâ or pendente lite; when the executor is out of the realm; 1 Lutw. 342; or when a ſuit is commenced in the Eccleſiaſtical court, touching the validity of the will. 2 P. Wms. 589. 590.

The appointment of an executor is eſſential to the making of a will; (Went. c. 1: Plowd. 281;) and it may be performed either by expreſs words, or ſuch as ſtrongly imply the ſame: but if the teſtator makes an incomplete will without naming any executors, or if he names incapable perſons, or if the executors named refuſe to act (See 9 Rep. 37: Went. Off. Ex. 38,) in any of theſe caſes adminiſtration muſt be granted cum teſtamento annexo to ſome other perſons; (1 Rol. Ab. 907: Comb. 20;) and then the duty of the adminiſtrator, as alſo when he is conſtituted only durante minore ætate, &c. is very little different from that of an Executor, See Glanvil, l. 7. c. 6.

A man may appoint two or more perſons to be joint Executors, and they are accounted in law but as one perſon. See poſt. V. 3, 5.—Such joint executors ſhall not be charged by the acts of their companions, any further than for effects actually come to their hands. Moor 620: Cro. Eliz. 318: 2 Leon. 209.—But if two or more executors join in a receipt [in writing] and one of them only actually receives the money, each is liable for the whole, as to creditors at law; but not as to legatees, or next of kin. 1 Salk. 318.—If joint executors by agreement among themſelves, agree that each ſhall intermeddle with a certain part of the teſtator's eſtate, yet each ſhall be chargeable for the whole (to creditors) by agreeing to the others' receipts. Hard. 314.

III. If the deceaſed died wholly inteſtate, without making either will or executors, then general letters of adminiſtration muſt be granted to ſuch adminiſtrator as the Stats. 31 E. 3. c. 11, and 29 H. 8. c. 4, (See ante 1,) direct; in conſequence of which it is to be obſerved; 1ſt. That the Ordinary is compellable to grant adminiſtration of the goods of the wife to the huſband, or his repreſentatives; (Cro. Car. 106; Stat. 20 Car. 2. c. 3: 1 P. Wms. 381;) and of the huſband's effects to the widow, or next of kin. Salk. 36: Stra. 532.—2dly. That among the kindred, thoſe are to be preferred that are the neareſt in degree to the inteſtate.—3dly. That this nearneſs of degree ſhall be reckoned according to the computation of the civilians; (Pre. Ch. 593;) and not of the canoniſts, which the law of England adopts in the deſcent of real eſtates; (See title Deſcent)—And therefore in the firſt place the children, or on failure of children, the parents of the deceaſed are entitled to adminiſtration; both which are indeed in the firſt degree, but the children are allowed the preference. Godolph. p. 2. c. 34. § 1: 2 Vern. 125.—Then follow brothers; grandfathers; (Pre. Ch. 527: 1 P. Wms. 41;) uncles, or nephews; (Atk. 455;) and the females of each claſs reſpectively; and Laſtly, Couſins.—4th. The half blood is admitted to the adminiſtration as well as the whole; for they are of the kindred of the inteſtate, and only excluded from inheritances of land, upon feodal reaſons. Therefore the brother of the half blood ſhall exclude the uncle of the whole blood; (1 Vent. 425;) And the Ordinary may grant adminiſtration to the ſiſter of the half, or the brother of the whole blood, at his own diſcretion. Aleyn, 36: Sty. 74. See poſt. V. 8.—5. If none of the kindred will take out adminiſtration, a creditor may by cuſtom do it. Salk. 38.—6thly. If the Executor refuſes, or dies inteſtate, the adminiſtration may be granted to the reſiduary legatee, in excluſion of the next of kin. 1 Sid. 281: 1 Vent. 219. And laſtly the Ordinary may, in defect of all theſe, commit adminiſtration, (as he might have done before the Stat. 31 E. 3. c. 11: Plowd. 278;) to ſuch diſcrete perſon as he approves of: or (in theſe caſes as well as in that of an Executor's refuſal, Cro. El. 92,) may grant him letters ad colligendum bona defuncti, which neither makes him executor nor adminiſtrator; his only buſineſs being to keep the goods in his ſafe cuſtody; (Went. ch. 14;) and to do other acts for the benefit of ſuch as are entitled to the property of the deceaſed. 2 Inſt. 398. If a baſtard who has no kindred, being nullius filius, or any one elſe that has no kindred, dies inteſtate, and without wife or child, it hath formerly been held, (Salk. 37,) that the Ordinary might ſeize his goods, and diſpoſe of them in pios uſus. But the uſual courſe now is, for ſome one to procure letters patent, or other authority from the King; and then the Ordinary of courſe grants adminiſtration to ſuch appointee of the crown. 3 P. Wms. 33.

IV. The intereſt, veſted in the executor by the will of the deceaſed, may be continued and kept alive by the will of the ſame executor; ſo that the executor of A.'s executor, is to all intents and purpoſes the executor and repreſentative of A. himſelf; See 25 Ed. 3. ſt. 5. c. 5: 1 Leon. 275; but the executor of A.'s adminiſtrator, or the adminiſtrator of A.'s executor, is not the repreſentative of A. Bro. Abr. title Adminiſtrator 7. For the power of an executor is founded upon the ſpecial confidence and actual appointment of the deceaſed; and ſuch executor is therefore allowed to tranſmit that power to another, in whom, he hath equal confidence: but the adminiſtrator of A. is merely the officer of the Ordinary, preſcribed to him by act of parliament, in whom the deceaſed has repoſed no truſt at all; and therefore, on the death of that officer, it reſults back to the Ordinary to appoint another. And, with regard to the adminiſtrator of A.'s executor, he has clearly no privity or relation to A. being only commiſſioned to adminiſter the effects of the inteſtate executor, and not of the original teſtator. Wherefore in both theſe caſes, and whenever the courſe of repreſentation from executor to executor is interrupted by any one adminiſtration, it is neceſſary for the Ordinary to commit adminiſtration afreſh, of the goods of the deceaſed not adminiſtered by the former executor or adminiſtrator. And this adminiſtrator, de bonis non, is the only legal repreſentative of the deceaſed in matters of perſonal property. Sty. 225. But he may, as well as an original adminiſtrator, have only a limited or ſpecial adminiſtration committed to his care, viz. of certain ſpecific effects, ſuch as a term of years and the like; the reſt being committed to others. 1 Roll. Abr. 908: Godolph. p. 2. c. 30: Salk. 36: 1 New Abr. 385. See alſo the Stats. 43 Eliz. c. 8: 30 Car. 2. c. 7.

If an executor dies before probate, ſuch an executor's executor cannot prove the will, becauſe he is not named therein, and no one can prove a will but he who is named executor in it; but if the firſt executor had proved the will, then his executor might have been executor to the firſt teſtator, there requiring no new probate. 1 Salk, 299.

Though an executor of an executor may thus be executor to the firſt teſtator; yet he may take upon him the executorſhip of his own teſtator, and refuſe to intermeddle with the eſtate of the other: and if the firſt executor refuſes, (as if he dies before probate,) his executor ſhall not adminiſter to the firſt teſtator. Dyer 372.

V. 1. The duty and office of Executors and Adminiſtrators in general are very much the ſame; excepting, firſt, that the executor is bound to perform a will, which an adminiſtrator is not, unleſs where a teſtament is annexed to his adminiſtration, and then he differs ſtill leſs from an executor: and, ſecondly, that an executor may do many acts before he proves the will; Wentw. ch. 3; but an adminiſtrator may do nothing till letters of adminiſtration are iſſued; for the former derives his power from the will and not from the probate; the latter owes his entirely to the appointment of the Ordinary. Com. 51.

If a ſtranger takes upon him to act as executor, without any juſt authority; (as by intermeddling with the goods of the deceaſed, 5 Rep. 33, 34; and many other tranſactions, Wentw. ch. 14: Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 8; he is called in law an Executor of his own wrong, [de ſon tort,] and is liable to all the trouble of an executorſhip, without any of the profits or advantages: but merely doing acts of neceſſity or humanity, as locking up the goods, or burying the corps of the deceaſed, will not amount to ſuch an intermeddling, as will charge a man as executor of his own wrong. Dyer 166. Such a one cannot bring any action himſelf in right of the deceaſed, (Bro. Abr. title Adminiſtrator 8,) but actions may be brought againſt him. And, in all actions by creditors againſt ſuch an officious intruder, he ſhall be named an executor, generally; (5 Rep. 31;) for the moſt obvious concluſion, which ſtrangers can form, from his conduct is that he hath a will of the deceaſed, wherein he is named executor, but hath not yet taken probate thereof, 12 Mod. 471. He is chargeable with the debts of the deceaſed, ſo far as aſſets comes to his hands. Dyer 166. And as againſt creditors in general, ſhall be allowed all payments made to any other creditor in the ſame or ſuperior degree. 1 Chan. Caſ. 33. himſelf only excepted; in which he differs from a rightful executor. 5 Rep. 30: Moor 527. And though, as againſt the rightful executor or adminiſtrator, he he cannot plead ſuch payment, yet it ſhall be allowed him in mitigation of damages; (12 Mod. 441. 471;) unleſs perhaps upon a deficiency of aſſets, whereby the rightful executor may be prevented from ſatisfying his own debt. Wentw. ch. 14.

When there is a rightful executor, and a ſtranger poſſeſſes himſelf of the teſtator's goods, without doing any further act as executor, he is not an executor de ſon tort, but a treſpaſſer; Dyer 105: Rol. Abr. 918. See 5 Rep. 82. An executor of his own wrong may be ſued as executor; and he ſhall be ſued for legacies, as well as a rightful executor. Noy 13. Though an executor de ſon tort cannot maintain any ſuit or action, becauſe he cannot produce any will to juſtify it, yet he will be ſeverely puniſhed for a falſe plea; for in ſuch caſe the execution ſhall be awarded for the whole debt, though he meddled with a thing of very ſmall value. Noy 69.

Debt was brought againſt an executor of his own wrong, who pleaded that he never was executor, nor adminiſtred as ſuch; it was held, not to be material whether he had aſſets or no, but to prove that he had adminiſtered any thing was enough; for this would make him chargeable with the debt: but if he had not pleaded falſely, he would have been liable for no more than the value of the goods of the deceaſed. Style 120.

If an executor of his own wrong poſſeſſes himſelf of goods, and afterwards adminiſtration is granted him, he may by virtue thereof retain goods for his own debt. 5 Rep. 30. And where a man took poſſeſſion of an inteſtate's goods wrongfully, and ſold them to another, and then took out adminiſtration, it was adjudged that the ſale was good by relation. Moor 126. An executor de ſon tort ſhall be allowed in equity, all ſuch payments which a rightful executor ought to have paid. 2 Chanc. Rep. 33. See further poſt. VI. 2, and this Dict. title Devaſtavit.

2. The executor or adminiſtrator muſt bury the deceaſed in a manner ſuitable to the eſtate which he leaves behind him. Neceſſary funeral expences are allowed, previous to all other debts and charges; but if the executor, or adminiſtrator be extravagant, it is a ſpecies of devaſtation or waſte of the ſubſtance of the deceaſed; and ſhall only be prejudicial to himſelf, and not to the creditors or legatees of the deceaſed. Salk. 196: Godolph. p. 2. c. 26. § 2. See poſt. VI. 2, and this Dict. title Devaſtavit.

3. The executor or adminiſtrator durante minore ætate, or durante abſentiâ, or cum teſtamento annexo, muſt prove the will of the deceaſed: which is done either in common form, which is only upon his own oath before the Ordinary, or his ſurrogate; or per teſtes, in more ſolemn form of law, in caſe the validity of the will be diſputed. Godolph. p. 1. c. 20. § 4. When the will is ſo proved, the original muſt be depoſited in the regiſtry of the Ordinary; and a copy thereof in parchment is made out under the ſeal of the Ordinary; and delivered to the executor or adminiſtrator, together with a certificate of its having been proved before him: all which together is uſually ſtiled the probate.

If there are many executors of a will, and one of them only proves the will, and takes upon him the executorſhip, it is ſufficient for all of them; but the reſt after may join with him, and intermeddle with the teſtator's eſtate: but if they all of them refuſe the executorſhip, none of them will ever afterwards be admitted to prove the will; the Ordinary in this caſe grants adminiſtration with the will annexed. 9 Rep. 37: 1 Rep. 113: Perk. 485.

As the teſtator has thought the executor appointed a proper perſon to be intruſted with his affairs, the Ordinary cannot adjudge him diſabled or incapax; but a mandamus ſhall iſſue from B. R. for the Ordinary to grant probate of the will, and admit the executor, if he refuſe him: neither can the Ordinary inſiſt upon ſecurity from the executor, as the teſtator hath thought him able and qualified. 1 Salk. 299.

And although an executor becomes bankrupt, yet it is ſaid the Ordinary cannot grant adminiſtration to another: but if an executor become non compos, the Spiritual Court may commit adminiſtration for this natural diſability. 1 Salk. 307. If an executor takes goods of the teſtator's, and convert them to his own uſe; or if he either receive or pay debts of the teſtator, or give bond for payment; make acquittances for them, or demand the teſtator's debts as executor; or give away the goods of the teſtator, &c. theſe are an adminiſtration, ſo that he cannot afterwards refuſe the executorſhip: and it has been held, that if the wife of the teſtator take more apparel than is neceſſary, it is an adminiſtration. Offic. Exec. 39.

It is uſual when there is a conteſt about a will, or when the right of adminiſtration comes in queſtion, to enter a caveat in the Spiritual Court, which by their law is ſaid to ſtand in force for three months. Godolph. 258: Goldſb. 119: 2 Rol. Rep. 6: Cro. Jac. 463, 4.

But it is ſaid, that our law takes no notice of a caveat, and that it is but a mere cautionary act done by a ſtranger, to prevent the Ordinary from doing wrong; and that thefore, if adminiſtration be granted pending a caveat, this is valid in our law, though by the law in the Spiritual Court, it may be ſuch an irregularity as will be ſufficient to repeal it. 1 Rol. Rep. 191: Cro. Jac. 463: 2 Rol. Rep. 6.

In defect of any will, the perſon entitled to be adminiſtrator, muſt alſo at this period take out letters of adminiſtration under the ſeal of the Ordinary; whereby an executorial power to collect and adminiſter, that is, diſpoſe of the goods of the deceaſed, is veſted in him: and he muſt by Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10, enter into a bond with ſureties, faithfully to execute his truſt. If all the goods of the deceaſed lie within the ſame juriſdiction, a probate before the Ordinary, or an adminiſtration granted by him, are the only proper ones: but if the deceaſed had bona notabilia, or chattels to the value of a hundred ſhillings, in two diſtinct dioceſes or juriſdictions, then the will muſt be proved, or adminiſtration taken out, before the metropolitan of the province, by way of ſpecial prerogative: 4 Inſt. 335; Hence the courts, where the validity of ſuch wills is tried, and the offices where they are regiſtered, are called the prerogative courts, and the prerogative offices, of the provinces of Canterbury and York. Lynedewode, who flouriſhed in the beginning of the 15th century, and was official to archbiſhop Chicheley, interprets theſe hundred ſhillings to ſignify ſolidos legales; of which he tells us ſeventy-two amounted to a pound of gold, which in his time was valued at fifty nobles or 16*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* He therefore computes (Provinc. l. 3. t. 13,) that the hundred ſhillings, which conſtituted bona notabilia, were then equal in current money to 23*l.* 3*s.* $0\frac{1}{4}$. This will account for what is ſaid in our antient books, that bona notabilia in the dioceſe of London (4 Inſt. 335, Godolph. p. 2. c. 22,) and indeed every where elſe (Plowd. 281,) 231,) were of the value of ten pounds by compoſition: for, if we purſue the calculations of Lynedewode to their full extent, and conſider that a pound of gold is now almoſt equal to an hundred and fifty nobles, we ſhall extend the preſent amount of bona notabilia, to nearly 70*l.* But the makers of the canons of 1603, underſtood this antient rule to be meant of the ſhillings current in the reign of James I. and have therefore directed (Can. 92,) that five pounds ſhall for the future be the ſtandard of bona notabilia; ſo as to make the probate fall within the archiepiſcopal prerogative. Which prerogative (properly underſtood) is grounded upon this reaſonable foundation: that as the biſhops themſelves were originally the adminiſtrators to all inteſtates in their own dioceſe, and as the preſent adminiſtrators are in effect no other than their officers or ſubſtitutes, it was impoſſible for the biſhops, or thoſe who acted under them, to collect any goods of the deceaſed, other than ſuch as lay within their own dioceſes, beyond which their epiſcopal authority extends not. But it would be extremely troubleſome, if as many adminiſtrations were to be granted, as there are dioceſes within which the deceaſed had bona notabilia; beſides the uncertainty which creditors and legatees would be at, in caſe different adminiſtrators were appointed, to aſcertain the fund out of which their demands were to be paid. A prerogative is therefore very prudently veſted in the metropolitan of each province, to make in ſuch caſes one adminiſtration ſerve for all.

4. The executor or adminiſtrator is to make an inventory of all the goods and chattels, whether in poſſeſſion or action of the deceaſed; which he is to deliver in to the Ordinary upon oath, if thereunto lawfully required. Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 5: By Stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. § 6, No adminiſtrator ſhall be cited into court to render an account of the perſonal eſtate of his inteſtate, otherwiſe than by an inventory thereof, unleſs at the inſtance of ſome perſon in behalf of a minor, or having a demand out of ſuch eſtate as a creditor, or next of kin; nor ſhall be compellable to account before any Ordinary or judge empowered by the act of 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 10, otherwiſe than as aforeſaid. See 9 Rep. 39: 2 Inſt. 600: Raym. 407.

5. He is to collect all the goods and chattels ſo inventoried; and to that end he has very large powers and intereſts conferred on him by law; being the repreſentative of the deceaſed; Co. Litt. 209; and having the ſame property in his goods as the principal had when living, and the ſame remedies to recover them. And if there be two or more executors, a ſale or releaſe by one of them ſhall be good againſt all the reſt. Dyer, 23: Cro. Eliz. 347: Sid. 33: Brownl. 183; unleſs ſuch releaſe be obtained by fraud. Moor. 620: Cro. Eliz. 318: 2 Leon. 209: but in caſe of adminiſtrators it is otherwiſe. 1 Atk. 460. Whatever is ſo recovered, that is of a ſaleable nature and may be converted into ready money, is called aſſets in the hands of the executor or adminiſtrator, that is, ſufficient or enough (from the French aſſez) to make him chargeable to a creditor or legatee, ſo far as ſuch goods and chattels extend. Whatever aſſets ſo come to his hands, he may convert into ready money, to anſwer the demands that may be made upon him: See 6 Rep. 47: Co. Lit. 374. In actions againſt executors, the jury muſt find aſſets to what value, for the plaintiff ſhall recover only according to the value of aſſets found. 1 Ro. Rep. 58. As to real aſſets by deſcent, ſee this Dict. title Aſſets.

The chattels real and perſonal of the teſtator coming to the executor, are leaſes for years, rent due, corn growing and cut, graſs cut and ſevered, &c. cattle, money, plate, houſhold goods, &c. Co. Lit. 118: Dyer 130, 537. An executor having a leaſe for years of land in right of the deceaſed, if he purchaſe the fee, whereby the leaſe is extinct, yet this leaſe ſhall continue to be aſſets, as to the creditors and legatees. 1 Rep. 87: Bro. Leaſe 63. Though a plantation be an eſtate of inheritance, yet being in a foreign country, it is a chattel in the hands of executors to pay debts. 1 Vent. 358. The executor is not only intitled to all perſonal goods and chattels of the teſtator, of what nature ſoever they are; but they are alſo accounted to be in his poſſeſſion, though they are not actually ſo; for he may maintain an action againſt any one who detains them from him: he is likewiſe intitled to things in action; as right of execution on a judgment, bond, ſtatute, &c. Alſo to money awarded on arbitration, where the party dies before the day, &c. Co. Lit. 209: 2 Vent. 249: 1 Danv. Abr. 549.

If goods of the teſtator are kept from the executor, he may ſue for them in the Spiritual Court, or at common law; and if one ſeiſed of a meſſuage in fee, &c. hath goods in the houſe, and makes a will and executors, and dies, the executors may enter into the houſe, and carry away the goods. Lit. 60. An executor may, in convenient time after the teſtator's death, enter into a houſe deſcended to the heir, for removing and carrying away the goods; ſo as the door be open, or the key be in the door. Offic. Exec. 8. He may take the goods and chattels to himſelf, or give power to another to ſeize them for him. 9 Rep. 38. If an executor with his own goods redeem the goods of the teſtator; or pays the teſtator's debts, &c. the goods of the teſtator ſhall, for ſo much, be changed into the proper goods of the executor. Jenk. Cent. 188.

Where a man by will deviſes that his lands ſhall be ſold for payment of debts, his executors ſhall ſell the land, to whom it belongs to pay the debts. 2 Leon. c. 276. And if lands are deviſed to executors to be ſold for payment of the teſtator's debts, thoſe executors that act in the executorſhip, or that will ſell, may do it without the others. Co. Lit. 113. By Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 4; Bargains and ſales of lands, &c. deviſed to be ſold by executors, ſhall be as good, if made by ſuch of the executors only as take upon them the execution of the will, as if all the executors had joined in the ſale. If lands are thus deviſed to pay debts, a ſurviving executor may ſell them; but if the deviſe be, that the executor ſhall ſell the land, and not of the land to them to be ſold, here being only an authority, not an intereſt; if one dies the other cannot ſell. 1 Lev. 203.

6. The Executor or Adminiſtrator muſt pay the debts of the deceaſed. In payment of debts he muſt obſerve the rules of priority; otherwiſe, on deficiency of aſſets, if he pay thoſe of a lower degree firſt, he muſt anſwer thoſe of a higher out of his own eſtate. And firſt he may pay all funeral charges, and the expences of proving the will, and the like. Secondly, debts due to the King on record or ſpecialty. 1 And. 129. Thirdly, ſuch debts as are by particular ſtatutes to be preferred to all others; others; as the forfeitures for not burying in woollen; (Stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 3;) money due upon poor rates (Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 38;) for letters to the poſt-office (Stat. 9 Ann. c. 10;) and ſome others. Fourthly, debts of record; as judgments (docquetted according to the Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20.) ſtatutes and recognizances. (4 Rep. 60: Cro. Car. 363.) Fifthly, debts due on ſpecial contracts; as for rent; (for which the leſſor has often a better remedy in his own hands, by diſtraining;) or upon bonds, covenants, and the like under ſeal. (Wentw. ch. 12.)

Laſtly, debts on ſimple contracts, viz. upon notes unſealed and verbal promiſes. Among theſe ſimple contracts, ſervants' wages are by ſome (1 Rol. Abr. 927.) with reaſon preferred to any other: and ſo ſtood the antient law, according to Bracton. (lib. 2. c. 26.) and Fleta, (b. 2. c. 56. § 10.) Among debts of equal degree, the executor or adminiſtrator is allowed to pay himſelf firſt; by retaining in his hands ſo much as his debt amounts to. 10 Mod. 496. If a creditor conſtitutes his debtor his executor, this is a releaſe or diſcharge of the debt whether the executor acts or not. (Plowd. 184: Salk. 299.) provided there be aſſets ſufficient to pay the teſtator's debts: for, though this diſcharge of the debt ſhall take place of all legacies, yet it were unfair to defraud the teſtator's creditors of their juſt debts by a releaſe which is abſolutely voluntary. Salk. 303: 1 Rol. Abr. 921: 5 Rep. 30: 8 Rep. 136. But if a perſon dies inteſtate, and the Ordinary commits adminiſtration to a debtor, the debt is not thereby extinguiſhed, for he comes in only by the act of law, not by the act of the party. 5 Rep. 136: 1 Salk. 306.—See alſo 1 Cha. Rep. 292: Moor 855: Hutt. 128.

If no ſuit is commenced againſt him, the executor may pay any one creditor in equal degree his whole debt; though he has nothing left for the reſt, for, without a ſuit commenced, the executor has no legal notice of the debt. Dyer 32: 2 Leon. 60.

Pending a bill in equity againſt an executor, he may pay any other debt of a higher nature, or of as high a nature, where he has legal aſſets: but where there is a final decree againſt an executor, if he pays a bond, it is a miſ-payment; for a decree is in nature of a judgment. 2 Salk. 507.

If there be ſeveral debts due on ſeveral bonds from the teſtator, his executor may pay which bond debt he pleaſes, except an action of debt is actually commenced againſt him upon one of thoſe bonds; and in ſuch caſe, if, pending an action, another bond creditor brings another action againſt him, before judgment obtained by either of them, he may prefer which he will by confeſſing a judgment to one and paying him, which judgment he may plead in bar to the other action. Vaugh. 89. See Sid. 21. But this judgment confeſſed muſt be before plea. The uſual way is, if there is time, and an executor or adminiſtrator is deſirous of preferring another creditor of equal degree with him who ſues, is, inſtantly, before plea to confeſs a judgment, and then plead it, with a plene adminiſtravit ultra.

If judgment for 100*l.* is ſuffered, and the plaintiff compounds for 60*l.* the judgment for the whole ſum ſhall not be allowed to keep off other creditors. 8 Rep. 133. Judgments are not to be kept on foot by fraud. Sid. 230: 1 Vent. 76.

On a Sci. Fac. againſt an executor, he cannot plead fully adminiſtred, but muſt plead ſpecially that no goods of the teſtator came to his hands, whereby he might diſcharge the debt; for he may have fully adminiſtred, and yet be liable to the debt, where goods of the teſtator's afterwards come to his hands. 1 Lill. 568: Cro. Eliz. 575. In Scire Facias againſt executors, upon a judgment againſt their teſtator, they pleaded Plene Adminiſtravit, by paying debts upon bonds ante notitiam: It was adjudged no plea, for at their peril they ought to take notice of debts upon record, and firſt pay them; and though the recovery be in another county than that where the teſtator lived: but where an action is brought againſt executors in another county than where they live, and they not knowing thereof, pay debts upon ſpecialty, it is good. Cro. Eliz. 793.

Where day of payment is paſt, the penalty of a bond is the ſum due at law, but where the day of payment is not come, the ſum in the condition is the debt, and the executor cannot cover the aſſets any further. The Bank of England v. Morrice, Widow. Annaly 224.

A bill may be exhibited in the Chancery againſt an executor, to diſcover the teſtator's perſonal eſtate; and thereupon he ſhall be decreed to pay debts and legacies, Abr. Ca. Eq. 238. If a perſon being executor, and his teſtator greatly indebted, be deſirous to pay the aſſets as far as they will go, and that his payments may not be afterwards queſtioned, he may bring a bill in equity againſt all the teſtator's creditors, in order that they may, if they will, conteſt each other's debts, and diſpute who ought to be preferred in payment. 2 Vern. 37.

Where there are only equitable aſſets, they muſt be equally paid amongſt all the creditors; for a debt by judgment, and ſimple contract is in conſcience equal. 2 Peere Williams 416. As to what are legal, and what equitable aſſets, ſee Vin. Abr. title Payment. And it is held, that bonds, and other debts, ſhall be paid equally, by executors, where a perſon has deviſed lands to them, to be ſold for the payment of his debts. 1 P. Wms. 430.

A debt deviſed by the teſtator, is not to be paid by the debtor to the legatee but to the executor who can give a ſufficient diſcharge for it, and is anſwerable to the legatee if there be ſufficient aſſets. If an executor pays out the aſſets in legacies, and afterwards, debts appear, of which he had no notice, which he is obliged to pay; the executor by bill in Chancery may force the legatees to refund. Chan. Rep. 136, 149. One legatee paid ſhall refund againſt another, and againſt a creditor of the teſtator, that can charge the executor only in equity: but if an executor pays a debt upon ſimple contract, there ſhall be no refunding to a creditor of a higher nature. 2 Vent. 360.

The following extracts from Mr. Cox's admirable notes to his edition of Peer Williams's Reports; (1 P. Wms. 294, 679;) will ſerve as a general ſummary or abridgment of the determinations, relative to the application of the different funds of a teſtator's eſtate, in payment of his different debts.

The perſonal eſtate of a teſtator ſhall in all caſes be primarily applied in diſcharge of his perſonal debt (or general legacy) unleſs he by expreſs words, or manifeſt intention exempt it. 2 Atk. 625: 3 Atk. 202: Haſſewood v. Pope, 3 P. Wms. 324: French v. Chichester, 1 Bro. P. C. 193:

C.*: Samuel v. Wake, 1 Bro. C. R. 144: Ancaſter (D) v. Mayor, Bro. C. R. 454.—Yet it may be ſo exempted; as in Bampfield v. Wyndham, Pre. Ch. 101: Wainewright v. Bendlowes, 2 Vern. 718: Amb. 581: Stapleton v. Colville, Talb. 202: Walker v. Jackſon, 2 Atk. 624: Anderton v. Cooke, 1 Bro. C. R. 456, 7. and the caſe of Kynaſton & Kynaſton cited there.—Holiday v. Bowman, cited 1 Bro. C. R. 145: Webb. v. Jones, 2 Bro. B. R. 60.

Every loan creates a debt from the borrower whether there be a bond or covenant for payment or not. Cope v. Cope, 2 Salk. 449: Howel v. Price, 1 P. Wms. 291: Balſh v. Hyam, 2 P. Wms. 455: King v. King, 3 P. Wms. 458.

So the perſonal eſtate ſhall be liable although ſuch perſonal debt be alſo ſecured by mortgage. Howell v. Price, 1 P. Wms. 291. Cope v. Cope, 3 Salk. 449: Pockley v. Pockley, 1 Vern 36: King v. King, 3 P. Wms. 360: Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 436: Robinſon v. Gee, 1 Ves. 251: Belvedere (E) v. Rochfort, 6 Bro. P. C. 520.—Philips v. Philips, 2 Bro. C. R. 272.

So lands ſubject to or deviſed for payment of debts, ſhall be liable to diſcharge ſuch mortgaged lands either deſcended or deviſed. Bartholomew v. May, 1 Atk. 487: Tweedale (MSS.) v. Coventry, (E) 1 Bro. C. R. 240. Even though the mortgaged lands be deviſed expreſsly ſubject to the incumbrance, 2 P. Wms. 366: Serle v. St. Eloy.—So lands deſcended ſhall exonerate mortgaged lands deviſed. Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 424.—So unincumbered lands and mortgaged lands both being ſpecifically deviſed (but expreſsly "after payment of all debts") ſhall contribute in diſcharge of ſuch mortgage. Carter v. Barnardiſton, 1 P. Wms. 505: 2 Bro. P. C. 1.

But in all theſe caſes the debt being conſidered as the perſonal debt of the teſtator himſelf, the charge on the real eſtate is merely collateral. The rule therefore is otherwiſe where the charge is on the real eſtate principally, although there be a collateral perſonal ſecurity. Coventry (Counteſs) v. Coventry (E), 2 *P. With reſpect to the priority of application of real aſſets, when the perſonal eſtate is either exempt or exhauſted; it ſeems that, Firſt, the real eſtate expreſsly deviſed for payment of debts ſhall be applied: Secondly, to the extent of ſpecialty debts, the real eſtate deſcended: Thirdly the real eſtate ſpecifically deviſed ſubject to a general charge of debts. Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 424: Powis v. Corbet, 3 Atk. 566: Wride v. Clarke, 2 Bro. C. R. 261 n: Davies v. Topp, Id. 259 n: Donne v. Lewis. Id. 257.

It being the object of a Court of equity that every claimant upon the aſſets of a deceaſed perſon ſhall be ſatisfied, as far as ſuch aſſets can, by any arrangement conſiſtent with the nature of the reſpective claims, be applied in ſatisfaction thereof; it has been long ſettled that where one claimant has more than one fund to reſort to, and another claimant only one, the firſt claimant ſhall reſort to that fund on which the ſecond has no lien Lanoy v. Athol (D), 2 Atk. 446: Lacam v. Mertins, 1 Ves. 312: Mogg v. Hodges, 2 Ves. 53.

If therefore a ſpecialty creditor, whoſe debt is a lien on the real aſſets receive ſatisfaction out of the perſonal aſſets, a ſimple contract creditor ſhall ſtand in the place of the ſpecialty creditor againſt the real aſſets, ſo far as the latter ſhall have exhauſted the perſonal aſſets in payment of his debt. 2 C. C. 4: Sagitary v. Hyde, 1 Vern. 455: Neave v. Alderton, 1 Eq. Ab. 144: Wiſon v. Fielding, 2 Vern. 763: Galton v. Hancock, 2 Atk. 436.—And legatees ſhall have the ſame equity as againſt aſſets deſcended. Culpepper v. Aſton, 2 C. C. 117: Bowman v. Reeve, Pre. Ch. 578: Tipping v. Tipping, 1 P. Wms. 730: Lucy v. Gardner, Bunb. 137: Lutkins v. Leigh, Talb. 54.—So where lands are ſubjected to payment of all debts, a legatee ſhall ſtand in the place of a ſimple contract creditor, who has been, ſatisfied out of perſonal aſſets. Haſlewood v. Pope, 3 P. Wms. 323. So where legacies by will are charged on the real eſtate, but not the legacies by codicil, the former ſhall reſort to the real aſſets upon a deficiency of the perſonal aſſets to pay the whole. Maſters v. Maſters, 1 P. Wms. 422: Bligh v. Darnley (E), 2 P. Wms. 620: Hyde v. Hyde, 3 C. R. 83.

But from the principles of theſe rules, it is clear that they cannot be applied in aid of one claimant, ſo as to defeat the claim of another and therefore a pecuniary legatee ſhall not ſtand in the place of a ſpecialty creditor as againſt land deviſed; though he ſhall as againſt land deſcended. Scott v. Scott, Amb. 383: Clifton v. Burt, 1 P. Wms. 678: and Haſlewood v. Pope, 3 P. Wms. 324: But ſuch legatee ſhall ſtand in the place of a mortgagee who has exhauſted the perſonal aſſets to be ſatisfied out of the mortgaged premiſes though ſpecifically deviſed. Lutkins v. Leigh, Talb. 53: Forreſter v. Ld. Leigh, Amb. 171. for the application of the perſonal aſſets in caſe of the real eſtate mortgaged, does not take place to the defeating of every legacy. Oneal v. Mead, 1 P. Wms. 693: Tipping v. Tipping, Id. 730: Davies v. Gardner, 2 P. Wms. 190: Ryder v. Wager, Id. 335.

It is now ſettled that the Court of Chancery will not marſhall aſſets in favour of a charitable bequeſt ſo as to give it effect out of the perſonal chattels, it being void ſo far as it touches any intereſt in land. Mogg v. Hodges, 2 Ves 52: Attorney General v. Tyndal, Amb. 614: Foſter v. Blagden, Amb. 704: Hillyard v. Taylor, Id. 713. II. and it is to be obſerved that none of the rules abovementioned ſubject any fund to a claim to which it was not before ſubject; but only take care that the election of one claimant ſhall not prejudice the claims of the others. 2 Atk. 438: 1 Ves. 312.

7. When the debts are all diſcharged, the legacies claim the next regard; which are to be paid by the executor ſo far as his aſſets will extend: but he may not give himſelf the preference herein, as in the caſe of debts. 2 Vern. 434: 2 P. Wms. 25. See title Legacy.—The aſſent of an executor to legacies is held neceſſary to entitle the legatee; but as this aſſent may be compelled, ſee March 97, it does not ſeem neceſſary to ſtate the effect of a diſſent where there are aſſets ſufficient to anſwer anſwer both debts and legacies. Where there are not aſſets the aſſent of the executor to a legacy would ſubject him to a devaſtavit.—See Co. Litt. 111: Keilw. 128: Perk. 570: Plowd. 525, 543: 4 Rep. 28: Cro. Eliz. 719. and this Dict. title Legacy.

8. When all the debts and particular legacies are diſcharged, the ſurplus or reſiduum muſt be paid to the Reſiduary Legatee, if any be appointed by the will; and if there be none, it was long a ſettled notion that it devolved to the executor's own uſe, by virtue of his executorſhip. Perkins 525.—But whatever ground there might have been formerly for it, this opinion ſeems now to be underſtood, with the following reſtriction; that although where the executor has no legacy at all, the reſiduum ſhall in general be his own, yet wherever there is ſufficient on the face of a will, (by means of a competent legacy or otherwiſe) to imply that the teſtator intended his executor ſhould not have the reſidue, the undeviſed ſurplus of the eſtate ſhall go to the next of kin, the executor then ſtanding upon exactly the ſame footing as an adminiſtrator. Prec. Chan. 323: 1 P. Wms. 7, 544: 2 P. Wms. 338: 3 P. Wms. 43, 194: Stra. 559: Lawſon v. Lawſon, Dom. Proc. 28 April 1777.

The reſult of the many caſes on this ſubject, (as ingeniouſly ſtated in a note of Mr. Cox's to his edition of P. Wms. vol. 1. p. 550,) appears to be this.

By law the appointment of an Executor veſts in him beneficially, all the perſonal eſtate of the teſtator not otherwiſe diſpoſed of; but wherever courts of Equity have ſeen, on the face of the will, ſufficient to convince them that the teſtator did not intend the executor to take the ſurplus, they have turned the executors into truſtees for thoſe on whom the law would caſt the ſurplus, in caſe of a complete inteſtacy, i. e. the next of kin; as where the executors are expreſsly called executors in truſt, or where any other expreſſions occur, ſhewing the office only to be intended them, and not the beneficial intereſt. Pring v. Pring, 2 Vern. 99: Rachfield v. Careleſs, 2 P. Wms. 158: Graydon v. Hicks, 2 Atk. 18: Dean v. Dalton, 2 Bro. C. R. 634: Bennet v. Bachelor, 3 Bro. C. R. 28. So where there there is a reſiduary clauſe, but the name of the reſiduary legatee is not inſerted. Wheeler v. Sheers, Moſel. 288: Cloyne (Biſhop) v. Young, 2 Vez. 91: North (Lord) v. Purdon, 2 Vez. 495. Or where the reſiduary legatee dies in the life-time of the teſtator, Nicholls v. Criſp. Amb. 769: Bennett v. Bachelor, 3 Bro. C. R. 28.

So a pecuniary legacy to a ſole executor affords a ſufficient argument to exclude him from the reſidue; as it is abſurd to ſuppoſe a teſtator to give expreſsly a part of the fund to the perſon he intended to take the whole. Cook v. Walker, cited 2 Vern. 676: Joſlin v. Brewett, Bunb. 112: Davers v. Dewes, 3 P. Wms. 40. And it is ſettled (notwithſtanding the caſe of Ball v. Smith, 2 Vern. 675,) that the wife being the executrix ſhall make no difference, as appears as well by the caſes mentioned in Farrington v. Knightley, (1 P. Wms. 544. and ſeq.) as by 2 Eq. Ab. 444. p. 58: Martin v. Rebow, 1 Bro. C. R. 154. So equal pecuniary legacies to two or more executors ſhall exclude them from the ſurplus. Petit v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 7; and the ſeveral caſes there mentioned, and 3 Bro. C. R. 110. Neither will legacies to the next of kin vary the rule. Andrew v. Clark, 2 Vez. 162.

But wherever the legacy is conſiſtent with the intent that the executor ſhould take the whole, a court of equity will not diſturb his legal right: and therefore where the gift to the executor is only an exception out of another legacy, it ſhall not exclude him from the reſidue, becauſe it is neceſſary to make ſuch exception expreſsly. Griffith v. Rogers, Pre. Ch. 231: Hoſkins v. Hoſkins, Pre. Ch. 263: Granville (Ld.) v. Beaufort, (Dſs.) 1 P. Wms. 114: Jones v. Weſtcombe, Pre. Ch. 316: Newſtead v. Johnſton, 2 Atk. 45: 2 Eq. Ab. 444. p. 58. So the ſame principle ſeems to have prevailed in Lawſon v. Lawſon, 7 Bro. P. C. 511. So a legacy to one only of two or more executors ſhall exclude neither from the ſurplus; becauſe the teſtator might intend to ſuch a one, a preference pro tanto, Coleſworth v. Branguin, Pre. Ch. 323: Maſon v. Hawkins, 4 Bro. P. C. 1: Johnſton v. Twiſt, cited 2 Vez. 167: Cloyne (Bp.) v. Young, 2 Vez. 91: Wilſon v. Iwatt, 2 Vez. 166. The ſame rule and reaſon hold, where ſeveral executors have unequal pecuniary legacies. Braſbridge v. Woodroffe, 2 Atk. 69: Bowker v. Hunter, 1 Bro. C. R. 328: although in the laſt caſe the following were objected as authorities againſt the determination, viz. 2 Vern. 677: Pre. Ch. 92: 2 Vern. 361: and Vachel v. Jefferies, Pre. Ch. 169: and 1 Bro. P. C. 167.

Then as to ſpecific legacies, it is determined that a ſpecific legacy will exclude a ſole executor, Randal v. Bookey, 2 Vern. 425: Southat v. Watſon, 3 Atk. 226: Martin v. Rebow, 1 Bro. C. R. 154. and alſo that diſtinct ſpecific legacies of unequal value to ſeveral executors, ſhall not exclude them. Blinkhorne v. Feaſt, 2 Vez. 27: and the language of Lord Hardwicke in Southat v. Watſon, treats ſpecific and pecuniary legacies as ſtanding preciſely upon the ſame ground in queſtions of this nature. See title Legacy.

However no caſe occurs in the books in which diſtinct ſpecific legacies of equal value to ſeveral executors have excluded them from the ſurplus. And the argument which ſupports this rule as to pecuniary, certainly does not apply with equal force to ſpecific legatees; ſince it is very probable that a teſtator may wiſh to diſtribute ſpecific quantities of ſtock, or particular debts, &c. &c. amongſt his executors in ſome particular manner; although equally in point of value and conſiſtently with an intention that they ſhould take the ſurplus. The caſe of Shrimpton v. Stanhope, cited 3 Atk. 230, is not a caſe of diſtinct ſpecifick legacies; for it appears from Reg. Lib. B. 1736. fo. 104, that the teſtator there gave ſome ſpecific legacies to a man and his wife jointly, whom he alſo made his executors. And ſo in Willis v. Brady, Barn. 64, and theſe caſes therefore ſeem like legacies to a ſole executor.

With regard to the admiſſion of parol evidence, in caſes of this kind, ſee Rachfield v. Careleſs, 2 P. Wms. 158; and Rutland (D.) v. Rutland (Dſs.) 2 P. Wms. 210: and Mr. Cox's notes on the former of thoſe caſes.

Concerning the Adminiſtrator indeed there was formerly much debate, whether or no he could be compelled to make any diſtribution of the inteſtate's eſtate. Godol. p. 2. c. 32. For though (after the adminiſtration was taken in effect from the Ordinary, and transferred to the relations of the deceaſed) the ſpiritual court endeavoured to compel a diſtribution, and took bonds of the adminiſtrator for that purpoſe, they were prohibited by the temporal Courts, and the bonds declared void at law. 1 Lev. 233: Cart. 125: 2 P. Wms. 447. And the right of the huſband not only to adminiſter, but alſo to enjoy exclu-ſively, the effects of his deceaſed wife, depends ſtill on this doctrine of the common law: the ſtatute of frauds declaring only, that the ſtatute of diſtribution does not extend to this caſe. But now theſe controverſies are quite at an end; for by the ſtatute commonly called the Statute of Diſtribution, 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. (explained by 29 Car. 2. c. 30.) it is enacted, that the ſurpluſage of inteſtates' eſtates, (except of femes coverts, which are left as at common law. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. § 25.) ſhall, after the expiration of one full year from the death of the inteſtate, be diſtributed in the following manner. One third ſhall go to the widow of the inteſtate, and the reſidue in equal proportions, to his children, or if dead, to their repreſentatives, that is, their lineal deſcendants: if there are no children or legal repreſentatives, ſubſiſting, then a moiety ſhall go to the widow, and a moiety to the next of kindred in equal degree and their repreſentatives, if no widow, the whole ſhall go to the children; if neither widow nor children, the whole ſhall be diſtributed among the next of kin in equal degree and their repreſentatives: but no repreſentatives are admitted, among collaterals, farther than the children of the inteſtate's brothers and ſiſters. Raym. 496: Lord Raym. 571.

The next of kindred, here referred to, are to be inveſtigated by the rules of conſanguinity, as thoſe who are entitled to letters of adminiſtration, of whom ſufficient has already been ſaid, (ante. III.) And therefore by this ſtatute, the mother, as well as the father, ſucceeded to all the perſonal effects of their children, who died inteſtate, and without wife or iſſue; in excluſion of the ſons and daughters, the brothers and ſiſters of the deceaſed. And ſo the law ſtill remains with reſpect to the father; (See 1 P. Wms. 48.) And the father need not adminiſter. (Pr. Ch. 260.) But by Stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 17, if the father be dead, and any of the children die inteſtate, without wife or iſſue, in the life-time of the mother, ſhe and each of the remaining children, or their repreſentatives, ſhall divide his effects in equal portions.—And in caſe a man die leaving a wife and a mother and brothers and ſiſters, the wife ſhall have only a moiety, the remainder going to his mother, brothers and ſiſters equally. 2 P. Wms. 344.

This ſtatute of diſtribution bears in its principle a near reſemblance to our ancient Engliſh law, previous to the ſtatute of wills, by which, (See Glanvil, l. 2. c. 5: Bracton, l. 2. c. 26: Fletal, 2. c. 57;) a man's goods were to be divided into three equal parts; of which one went to his heirs or lineal deſcendants, another to his wife, and the third was at his own diſpoſal; or if he died without a wife, he might then diſpoſe of one moiety, and the other went to his children. And ſo if he had no children, the wife was entitled to one moiety, and he might bequeath the other; but if he died without either wife or iſſue, the whole was at his own diſpoſal. The ſhares of the wife and children were called their reaſonable parts; and the writ de rationabili parte bonorum was given to recover them. F. N. B. 122.

By the ſame Statute of diſtributions it is directed that no child of the inteſtate (except his heir at law,) on whom he ſettled in his life-time any eſtate in lands, or pecuniary portion, equal to the diſtributive ſhares of the other children, ſhall have any part of the ſurpluſage with their brothers and ſiſters; but if the eſtates ſo given them, by way of advancement, are not quite equivalent to the other ſhares, the children ſo advanced ſhall have ſo much only as will make them equal. And this with reſpect to goods and chattels is part of the ancient cuſtom of London, of the Province of York, and of Scotland: and with regard to lands deſcending in coparcenary, that it hath always been, and ſtill is, the common law of England, under the name of botchpot.

It may be obſerved that the doctrines and limits of repreſentation, laid down in the ſtatute of Diſtribution, ſeem to have been in ſome meaſure alſo borrowed from the civil law: whereby it will ſometimes happen, that perſonal eſtates are divided per capita, and ſometimes per ſtirpes; whereas the Common-law, knows no other rule of ſucceſſion but that per ſtirpes only. They are divided per capita, to every man an equal ſhare, when all the claimants claim in their own rights, as in equal degree of kindred, and not jure repræſentationis, in the right of another perſon. As if the next of kin be the inteſtate's three brothers, A. B. and C; here his effects are divided into three equal portions, and diſtributed per capita, one to each: but if one of theſe brothers, A. had been dead leaving three children, and another, B. leaving two; then the diſtribution muſt have been per ſtirpes; viz. one third to A's, three children, another third to B's two children; and a remaining to C. the ſurviving brother: Yet if C. had alſo been dead, without iſſue, then A's, and B's, five children, being all in equal degree to the inteſtate, would take in their own rights per capita; viz. each of them one fifth part. Prec. Chanc. 54.

A queſtion hath been made, if a father die inteſtate, leaving only one ſon, which ſon alſo dies inteſtate, whether adminiſtration ſhould be granted, to the next of kin, of the father or of the ſon? The latter determination hath been, that, by this ſtatute of diſtribution of inteſtate's eſtates, a right is veſted in one child, where there is one and no more (viz.) a right to ſue for the eſtate; and by conſequence, if he die, before the eſtate is recovered and actually in his poſſeſſion, it muſt go to his adminiſtrator, and not to the adminiſtrator of the father. Palmer v. Allcock, 3 Mod. 58: Vide Shower 26. and 2 Vern. 274.

So where a perſon died inteſtate, leaving two, who were next a-kin, in equal degree to him; one of them died inteſtate within the year, and before diſtribution; adjudged, that an intereſt was veſted in him, and his next of kin ſhall have the adminiſtration, like the caſe of a reſiduary legatee dying before probate of the will, (viz.) his next of kin ſhall have the adminiſtration, and the next of the teſtator. Show. 25.

9. The Statute of Diſtributions expreſsly excepts and reſerves the cuſtoms of the city of London, of the province of York, and of all other places having peculiar cuſtoms of diſtributing inteſtates' effects. So that, though in thoſe places, the reſtraint of deviſing is removed, their antient cuſtoms remain in full force, with reſpect to the eſtates of inteſtates.

In the city of London, (Ld. Raym. 1329,) and province of York, (2 Burn. Eccl. Law 746.) as well as in the kingdom of Scotland, (Ibid. 782.) and probably alſo in Wales, (concerning which there is little to be gathered, but from the Stat. 7 & 8 W. III. c. 38.) the effects of the inteſtate, after payment of his debts are in general divided according to the antient univerſal doctrine of the pars rationabilis. If the deceaſed leaves a widow and children, children, his ſubſtance (deducting for the widow's her apparel and the furniture of her bed-chamber, (which in London is called the widow's chamber) is divided into three parts, one of which belongs to the widow, another to the children, and the third to the adminiſtrator; if only a widow, or only children they ſhall reſpectively, in either caſe, take one moiety, and the adminiſtrator the other, 1 P. Wms. 341: Salk. 246.—If neither widow nor child, the adminiſtrator ſhall have the whole. 2 Show. 175.—And this portion or dead man's part, the adminiſtrator was wont to apply to his own uſe. (2 Freem. 85: 1 Vern. 133.) till the Stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. declared that the ſame ſhould be ſubject to the ſtatute of Diſtribution. So that if a man dies worth 1800 l. perſonal eſtate, leaving a widow and two children, this eſtate ſhall be divided into eighteen parts; whereof the widow ſhall have eight, ſix by the cuſtom, and two by the ſtatute; and each of the children five, three by the cuſtom, and two by the ſtatute; if he leaves a widow and one child, ſhe ſhall have ſtill eight parts, as before; and the child ſhall have ten, ſix by the cuſtom and four by the ſtatute, if he leaves a widow and no child, the widow ſhall have three fourths of the whole, two by the cuſtom and one by the ſtatute; and the remaining fourth ſhall go by the ſtatute to the next of kin. It is alſo to be obſerved, that if the wife be provided for by a jointure before marriage in bar of her cuſtomary part, it puts her in a ſtate of non-entity, with regard to the cuſtom only; (2 Vern. 665: 3 P. Wms. 16.) but ſhe ſhall be entitled to her ſhare of the dead-man's part under the ſtatute of Diſtribution, unleſs barred by ſpecial agreement. 1 Vern. 15: 2 Chan. Rep. 252. and if any of the children are advanced by the father in his life-time with any ſum of money, (not amounting to their full proportionable part) they ſhall bring that portion into hotchpot with the reſt of the brothers and ſiſters, but not with the widow, before they are entitled to any benefit under the cuſtom; (2 Freem. 279: 1 Equ. Caſ. Abr. 155: 2 P. Wms. 526;) but if they are fully advanced, the cuſtom entitles them to no farther dividend. 2 P. Wms. 527.

Thus far in the main the cuſtoms of London and of York agree: but beſides certain other leſs material variations there are two principal points in which they conſiderably differ. One is, that in London the ſhare of the children (or orphanage part) is not fully veſted in them till the age of twenty-one, before which they cannot diſpoſe of it by teſtament (2 Vern. 558.) and, if they die under that age, whether ſole or married, their ſhare ſhall ſurvive to the other children; but after the age of twenty-one, it is free from any orphanage cuſtom, and in caſe of inteſtacy, ſhall fall under the ſtatute of Diſtributions, Prec. Chanc. 537. The other, that in the province of York, the heir at Common-law, who inherits any land either in fee or in tail, is excluded from any filial portion or reaſonable part. 2 Burn. 754.

VI. 1. Againſt an adminiſtrator and for him, action will lie, as for and againſt an executor, and he ſhall be charged to the value of the goods, and no further; unleſs it be by his own falſe plea, or by waſting the goods of the inteſtate. An executor or adminiſtrator ſhall never be charged de bonis propriis, but where he doth ſome wrong; as by ſelling the teſtator's goods, and converting the money to his own uſe, concealing or waſting them, or by pleading what is falſe. Dyer 210: 2 Roll. Rep. 295. But this plea muſt be of a fact, within his own knowledge. If an adminiſtrator plead plene adminiſtravit, and 'tis found againſt him, the judgment ſhall be de bonis propriis, becauſe 'tis a falſe plea, and that upon his own knowledge. 2 Cro. 191: Contrà where he pleads ſuch a plea, and that he hath no more than to ſatisfy ſuch a judgment, &c. the recovery ſhall be de bonis teſtatoris, &c. 2 Rol. Rep. 400. This muſt mean, where ſuch plea is true in fact. Upon plenè adminiſtravit pleaded by an adminiſtrator, the plaintiff muſt prove his debt, or he ſhall recover but a penny damages, though there be aſſets; becauſe the plea only admits the debt, but not the quantum. 1 Salk. 296.

Special bail is not required of adminiſtrators or executors in any action brought againſt them for the debt of the inteſtate; except where they have waſted the goods of the deceaſed: nor ſhall coſts be had againſt them. Vide tit. Coſts. See Cro. Eliz. 503: Yelv. 168: Hut. 69: 2 Rol. Rep. 87: 1 Salk. 207: 3 Salk. 106. Not even on a writ of error where judgment is affirmed. Where an adminiſtrator is plaintiff, he muſt ſhew by whom adminiſtration was granted; for that only intitles him to the action: but if an adminiſtrator is defendant, the plaintiff need not ſet forth by whom adminiſtration was granted, for it may not be within his knowledge. Sid. 228: 1 Lutw. 301. Generally an adminiſtrator ſhall be charged by others, for any debt or duty due from the deceaſed, as he himſelf might have been charged in his life-time; ſo far as he hath any of the inteſtate's eſtate, to diſcharge the ſame. Co. Lit. 219: Dyer 14.

If a man have judgment for land in a real or mixed action, and for damages, and then dies; his executor or adminiſtrator, not the heir, ſhall have execution for the damages; but not for the land. Fitz. Admin. 53: March 9.

2. For the goods of the teſtator, taken from them, or for treſpaſs upon the land, &c, Executors may, before the will proved, bring action of treſpaſs, detinue, &c. And if they ſell cattle, or other goods of the teſtator, before the will is proved, they may have actions for the money payable, before the ſame is proved. Offic. Exec. 35. It has been ruled, that an executor may commence an action before probate; but he cannot declare upon it, without producing in court the letters teſtamentary: he is not like an adminiſtrator, who hath no right till adminiſtration committed; for his right is the ſame before, as after probate of the will, and the not proving it, is only an impediment to the action. 1 Salk. 303.

[Probate obtained before trial of the action ſeems ſufficient, unleſs oyer of the letters teſtamentary is demanded; for it is of the will, not the probate, profert is made, and on the trial, for any matters relative to the perſonal eſtate, with which the executors have to do, the probate is the proper proof of the will. J. M.]

Executors may maintain action of trover for goods converted in the life of the teſtator. Cro. Eliz. 377. And by the Stat. Weſtm. 2. (13 E.) c. 23, executors ſhall have a writ of account, and the like action and proceſs, as the teſtator might have had,—By Stat. 4 E. 3. c. 7, the executors may bring actions for treſpaſs done to their teſtator, as for goods and chattels carried away in his life, and ſhall recover their damages in the ſame manner as he ſhould have done.—By Stat. 25 E. 3. ſt. 5. c. 5, executors of executors ſhall have actions of debt, account, and of goods goods taken away of the firſt teſtator's; and have execution of ſtatutes, &c. and ſhall anſwer to others, ſo far as they recover goods of the firſt teſtator, as the firſt executor's—As to proceſs againſt Executors, See Stat. 9 E. 3. c. 3.

Formerly, if an executor waſted goods and left an executor, and died leaving aſſets, his executor ſhould not be chargeable, becauſe it was a perſonal tort. 2 Lev. 120; but now it is otherwiſe by the Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24.

The law ſubjects the executors to every perſon's claim and action, which he had againſt the teſtator, except as to a treſpaſs vi et armis, &c. committed by the teſtator; for which reaſon the executor is ſaid to be the teſtator's aſſignee, and to repreſent the perſon of the teſtator: but for perſonal wrongs done by the teſtator to the perſon, or goods, &c. of another, the executor doth not repreſent him: becauſe perſonal actions die with the perſon. Co. Lit. 209: 9 Rep. 89. See title Action.

Nothing can be debt in the executor, which was not debt in the teſtator. Cro. Eliz. 232. A promiſe to pay to an executor, when the teſtator is not named, is not good. Cro. Jac. 570. But a teſtator may bind his executors as to his goods, though he himſelf is not bound. Ibid. And an executor may recover a duty due to the teſtator, though he be not named. Dyer 14. Action lies againſt an executor upon a collateral promiſe made and broken by the teſtator. Cro. Jac. 663. The teſtator's aſſumpſit to do any collateral thing, as to build an houſe, &c. which is not a debt, binds executors. Jenk. Cent. 290, 336. Aſſumpſit lies upon a contract of the teſtator; and the reaſon is the ſame upon a promiſe, where the teſtator had a valuable conſideration. Palm. 329. Though a debt upon a ſimple contract of the teſtator, cannot be recovered of the executor by action of debt; yet it may by aſſumpſit. 1 Lev. 200: 9 Rep. 87.

If two perſons are jointly bound, and one of them dies, the ſurvivor only ſhall be charged, and not the other's executor. Paſch. 16 Car. 2. When there are two executors, if one of them dies, action is to be brought againſt the ſurviving executor, and not the executor of the deceaſed: but in equity the teſtator's goods are liable in whoſeſoever's hands they are. 1 Leon. 304: Chan. Rep. 57.

If there be no aſſets, the obligee executor may ſue the heir of the obligor teſtator in action of debt upon his bond. 1 Salk. 304: 1 Lil. Abr. 575.

If an executor releaſes all actions, ſuits and demands, it extends only to demands in his own right, not ſuch as he hath as executor. Show. 153. An executor ſhall be charged with rent in the detinet, if he hath aſſets; and if he continues the poſſeſſion, he ſhall be charged in the debet and detinet, in reſpect of the perception of the profits, whether he hath aſſets or not. 1 Lev. 127. But an executor is not ſuable in the debet and detinet for part, and in the detinet for the other part; becauſe they require ſeveral judgments, viz. De bonis propriis for the debet and detinet and de bonis teſtatoris for the detinet. 3 Lev. 74. See title Debet and Detinet.

If an executor has a term, and the rent reſerved is more than the value of the premiſes, in action brought againſt him for it, in the debet and detinet, he may plead the ſpecial matter, viz. That he hath no aſſets, and that the land is of leſs value than the rent, and demand judgment if he ought not to be charged in the detinet tantum: and he cannot waive the leaſe; without renouncing the whole executorſhip. 1 Salk. 297.

One executor cannot regularly ſue another at law; but he may have relief in equity: In the eye of the law all are but as one executor; and moſt acts done by, or to any of them, are eſteemed acts done by, or to all of them. 1 Rol. Abr. 918. If where one executor is ſued, he plead that there is another executor, he ought to ſhew that he hath adminiſtered. 1 Lev. 161. And he only that adminiſters is to be ſued in actions againſt executors; but actions brought by executors are to be in the name of all of them, though ſome do not take upon them the executorſhip. 1 Rol. 924: Jenk. Cent. 106, 107. If any executor refuſes to join in an action, with his co-executors, he muſt be ſummoned and ſevered.

An executor is not diſabled by outlawry to ſue for the debts of the teſtator.

By the Stat. of Frauds 29 Car. 2. c. 3, No action ſhall charge an executor to anſwer damages out of his own eſtate, upon any promiſe to another, unleſs there be be ſome writing thereof ſigned by the party to be charged therewith. See Rann v. Hughes, 4 Bro. P. C.

By Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 8. § 1, On any judgment after verdict, had by or in the name of an executor, or adminiſtrator; an adminiſtrator de bonis non may ſue forth a ſcire facias, and take execution upon ſuch judgment. If an executor makes himſelf a ſtranger to the will of the teſtator, or pleads Ne unques executor or any falſe plea, and it is found againſt him, judgment ſhall be de bonis propriis; in other caſes de bonis teſtatoris. Cro. Jac. 447.

If on a ſcire facias againſt an executor, the ſheriff return a devaſtavit; the plaintiff ſhall have judgment and execution de bonis propriis of the defendant: and if nulla bona be returned, he may have a capias ad ſatisfaciend. or an elegit. 2 Nelſ. 791: Dyer 185. But one executor ſhall not be charged with a devaſtavit made by his companion; for the act of one ſhall charge the other no further than the goods of the teſtator in his hands amount to. Cro. Eliz. 318.

If an executor does any waſte, or miſ-employs the eſtate of the deceaſed, or doth any thing by negligence or fraud, &c. it is a devaſtavit and he ſhall be charged for ſo much out of his own goods. 8 Rep. 133. And a new executor may have an action againſt a former executor, who waſted the goods of the deceaſed; or the old one may remain chargeable to creditors, &c. Hob. 266.

If an executor takes an obligation in his own name, for a debt due by ſimple contract to the teſtator, this ſhall charge him as much as if he had received the money; for the new ſecurity hath extinguiſhed the old right, and is quaſi a payment to him. Off. of Ex. 158: Yelv. 10: 1 Lev. 189.

So if the executor ſues a perſon in trover and converſion, in which he has a right to recover; and afterwards he and the defendant come to an agreement, that he ſhall pay the executor ſuch a ſum at a future day, and the party fails, this is a devaſtavit; and he ſhall anſwer ad valorem. 2 Lev. 189: 2 Jon. 83 S. C.: 1 Vern 474. S. C.

It is a devaſtavit to permit intereſt to run in arrear, and then ſuffer judgment for it; and want of aſſets to pay before the incurring of it by the adminiſtrator ſhall not be intended unleſs it be expreſsly pleaded. 2 Lev. 40: Hil. 23 & 24 Car. 2. B. R. Seaman v. Dee.

An executor in caſe of a devaſtavit is in nature of a truſtee of an eſtate. Chan. Caſes 304.

EXECUTORY DEVISE.

EXECUTORY ESTATE, Is where an eſtate in fee created by deed or fine is to be afterwards executed by entry, livery, writ, &c. Leaſes for years, rents, annuities, conditions, &c. are called inheritances executory. Wood's Inſt. 293. Eſtates executed are when they paſs preſently to the perſon to whom conveyed, without any after-act. 2 Inſt. 513. See title Eſtate.

EXECUTORY DEVISE, The Deviſe of a future intereſt. A Deviſe that veſts not at the death of the teſtator, but depends on ſome contingency which muſt happen before it can veſt. 1 Eq. Caſ. Abr. 186.

An executory deviſe differs from a remainder in three very material points. 1. That it needs not any particular eſtate to ſupport it. 2. That by it a fee-ſimple or other leſs eſtate, may be limited after a fee-ſimple. 3. That by this means a remainder may be limited of a chattel intereſt, after a particular eſtate for life created in the ſame. See title Remainder and 2 Comm. 172—5.

1. The firſt caſe happens when a man deviſes a future eſtate to ariſe upon a contingency: and, until that contingency happens, does not diſpoſe of the fee-ſimple, but leaves it to deſcend to his heir at law. As if one deviſes land to a feme-ſole and her heirs, upon her day of marriage: here is in effect a contingent remainder without any particular eſtate to ſupport it; a freehold commencing in futuro. This limitation though it would be void in a deed, yet is good in a will, by way of executory deviſe. 1 Sid. 153. For, ſince by a deviſe a freehold may paſs without corporal tradition or livery of ſeiſin, (as it muſt do if it paſſes at all) therefore it may commence in futuro; becauſe the principal reaſon why it cannot commence in futuro in other caſes, is the neceſſity of actual ſeiſin, which always operates in præſenti. And, ſince it may thus commence in futuro, there is no need of a particular eſtate to ſupport it, the only uſe of which is to make the remainder, by its unity with the particular eſtate, a preſent intereſt. And hence alſo it follows, that ſuch any executory deviſe not being a preſent intereſt, cannot be barred by a recovery, ſuffered before it commences. Cro. Jac. 593. See this Dict. title Fine and Recovery.

2. By executory deviſe a fee, or other leſs eſtate, may be limited after a fee. And this happens where a deviſor deviſes his whole eſtate in fee, but limits a remainder thereon to commence on a future contingency. As if a man deviſes land to A. and his heirs; but, if he dies before the age of twenty-one, then to B. and his heirs: this remainder alſo, though void in a deed, is good by way of executory deviſe. 2 Mod. 289.

In both theſe ſpecies of executory deviſes, the contingencies ought to be ſuch as may happen within a reaſonable time, as within one or more life or lives in being, or within a moderate term of years; for Courts of Juſtice will not indulge even wills ſo as to create a perpetuity; which the law abhors. 12 Mod. 287: 1 Vern. 164: 1 Salk. 229. The utmoſt length that has been hitherto allowed for the contingency of an executory deviſe of either kind to happen in, is that of a life or lives in being, and one and twenty years afterwards. As when lands are deviſed to ſuch unborn ſon of a feme-covert as ſhall firſt attain the age of twenty one, and his heirs; the utmoſt length of time that can happen before the eſtate can veſt, is the life of the mother and the ſubſequent infancy of her ſon, and this hath been decreed to be a good executory deviſe. Forr. 232. This limit was taken from the time in which an eſtate may be rendred unalienable by a ſtrict ſettlement. An executory deviſe to an unborn ſon, of a man, may be ſuſpended a few months beyond the life of the father and twenty-one years afterwards; by a poſthumous birth.

3. By executory deviſe a term of years may be given to one man for his life, and afterwards limited over in remainder to another which could not be done by deed: for by law the firſt grant of it, to a man for life, was a total diſpoſition of the whole term; a life eſtate being eſteemed of a higher and larger nature than any term for years. 8 Rep. 95.

And, at firſt, the courts were tender, even in the caſe of a will of reſtraining the deviſee for life from aliening the term, but only held, that in caſe he died without exerting that act of ownerſhip, the remainder over ſhould then take place; for the reſtraint of the power of alienation, eſpecially in very long terms was introducing a ſpecies of perpetuity. Bro. tit. Chattels 23: Dyer 74. But, ſoon afterwards it was held, that the deviſee for life hath no power of aliening the term ſo as to bar the remainderman. Dyer 358: 8 Rep. 96; yet, in order to prevent the danger of perpetuities, it was ſettled, that though ſuch remainders may be limited to as many perſons ſucceſſively as the deviſor thinks proper, yet they muſt all be in eſſe during the life of the firſt deviſee; for then, as it is expreſſed, all the candles are lighted and are conſuming together, and the ultimate remainder is in reality only to that remainder-man who happens to ſurvive the reſt. It was alſo ſettled that ſuch remainder may not be limited to take effect, unleſs upon ſuch contingency as muſt happen (if at all) during the life of the firſt deviſee. 1 Sid. 451: Skinn. 341: 3 P. Wms. 358.

Having ſaid thus much on Executory Deviſes in general, ſubſequent information may be thus divided.

I. Of Executory Deviſes of Lands of Inheritance.
II. Of Executory Deviſes of Terms for Years.

I. If a particular eſtate is limited, and the inheritance paſſes out of the donor, this is a contingent remainder; but where the fee by a deviſe is veſted in any perſon, and to be veſted in another upon contingency, this is an executory deviſe: and in all caſes of executory deviſes, the eſtates deſcend until the contingencies happen. Raym. 28: 1 Lutw. 798. Where a contingent eſtate limited, depends upon a freehold, which is capable of ſupporting a remainder, it ſhall never be conſtrued an executory deviſe, but a remainder. And ſo it is, if the eſtate be limited by words in præſenti, as when a perſon deviſes his lands to the heirs of A. B. who is living, &c. Though if the ſame were to the heir of A. after his death, it would be as good as an executory deviſe. 2 Saund. 380: 4 Mod. 255.

One by will deviſes land to his mother for life, and after her death, to his brother in fee; provided, that if his wife, being then enſeint, be delivered of a ſon, then the land to remain to him in fee, and dies, and the ſon is born; in this caſe it was held, that the fee of the brother ſhall ceaſe, and veſt in the ſon, by way of executory deviſe, on the happening of the contingency; and here ſuch fee eſtate enures as a new original deviſe to take effect when the firſt fails. Dyer 33, 127: Cro. Jac. 592. A remainder of a fee may not be limited by the rules rules of law after a fee simple; for when a man hath parted with his whole estate, there cannot remain any thing for him to dispose of: but of late times a distinction hath been made between an absolute fee-simple, and a fee-simple which depends upon a contingency, or is conditionally limited; especially where such a contingency may happen in the course of a few years, or of one or two lives; and where such a remainder is limited by will, it is called an executory devise. 2 Nelf. Abr. 797.

An estate devised to a son and his heirs, upon condition that if he did not pay the legacies given by the will within such a time, that then the land should remain to the legatees, &c. and their heirs: this limitation of a fee in remainder, after a fee limited to the son, being upon the contingency, of the son's failing in payment of the legacies, was adjudged good by way of executory devise. Cro. Eliz. 833. And where the father devised his lands to his youngest son and his heirs, and if he die without issue, the eldest son being alive, then to him and his heirs; this was held a good remainder in fee to the eldest brother, after the conditional contingent estate in fee to the youngest, as depending upon the possibility that he might be alive when his youngest brother died without issue; and his dying without issue, was a collateral determination of his estate, whilst the other was living. Godb. 282: 2 Nelf. Abr. 798.

There can be no executory devise after an estate-tail generally limited, because that would tend to a perpetuity; and a contingency is too remote where a man must expect a fee upon another's dying without issue, generally: But dying without issue, living another, may happen in a little time, because it depends upon one life; and therefore a devise of a fee-simple to one, but to remain to another upon such a contingency, is now held good by executory devise. Cro. Jac. 695.

If a devise be "to A. for ever, that is, if he shall have a son or sons who shall attain 21, but if A. shall die without son or sons to inherit, that the son of B. shall inherit:" this is a fee in A. with an executory devise to the son of B. who shall take if A. die without issue, or if the issue die before 21. 1 Bro. C. R. 147.

If a devise be to the second son, then unborn, of A. B. and after his decease, or accession to his paternal estate, then to his second son and his heirs-male, with remainders over: such second son of A. B. when born, will take an estate in tail-male by way of executory devise, determinable on the accession of the family estate, and in the mean time the lands descend to the heir of the testator. 2 Blac. Rep. 1159.

II. It has now been long fully settled, that a term for years, or any chattel interest, may be given by an executory devise to an unborn child of a person in existence, when it attains the age of 21; and that the limits of executory devises of real and personal property are precisely the same. Fearne.

It is very common to bequeath chattel-interests to A. and his issue, and if he dies without issue to B. It seems now to be determined, that where the words are such as would have given A. an estate tail in real property; in cases of personal property the subsequent limitations are void, and A. has the absolute interest: But if it appear from any clause or circumstance in the will, that the testator intended to give it over, only in case A. had no issue living at the time of his death, upon that event the subsequent limitation will be good as an executory devise. See Fearne and the cases referred to in Cox's P. W. iii. 262.

Formerly where a term of years, (which is but a chattel) was devised to one; and that if he died, living another person, it should remain to the other person, during the residue of the term, such a remainder was adjudged void: For a devise of a chattel to one for an hour, was a a devise of it for ever. Dyer 74. But it was afterwards held, that a remainder of a term to one, after it was limited to another for life, was good: In a case where a testator having a term, devised that his wife should have the lands for so many years of the term as she should live; and that after her death the residue thereof should go to his son and his assigns; and this was the first case wherein an executory remainder of a term for years was adjudged good. Dyer 253, 358.

A person possessed of a term, devised it to his wife for eighteen years, and after to his eldest son for life, after to the son's eldest issue male during life; though he have no such issue, at the time of the devise, and death of the devisor, if he has before his own death, he shall have it as an executory devise. 1 Rol. 612. But if one devise a term to his wife for life; the remainder to his first son for life, and if he dies without issue, to his second son, &c. the remainder to the second son is void, and no executory devise; yet where the dying without issue living at a person's death, may be confined to one life, it hinders not a remainder over. 1 Eq. Abr. 194.

Executory devises, as to terms for years, are not extended beyond a life or lives; they ought to arise within the compass of one life. 1 Salk. 229. Where there is an executory devise, there needs not any particular estate to support it; and because the person who is to take upon contingency, hath not a present but future interest, his estate cannot be barred by a common recovery. 2 Nelf. Abr. 797, 798. It is held executory devises, and limitations of the trust of a term, are governed alike. 1 Vern. 234.

Lessee for years devised all his term to his son, and his will was, that his wife should have the occupation and profits of the lands, during the minority of his son, &c. and he made her sole executrix, and died; she afterwards proved the will, then she sold the term, and died; adjudged that this sale was void against her son, because it shall be intended that the devise to the wife, shall precede the devise to the son, though it followed in words, and then she will not have the whole term, but only so much thereof for so long time as she should live, before her son came of age; and that the remainder was to vest in him, upon the contingency of his living till he came of full age. Plow. Com. 53. 519.

The husband being possessed of a term for years, devised the lease itself to his wife for her life, and after her death to her children unpreferred; it was insisted for the wife, that she had the whole term, the devise being of the lease itself, and the lands are not mentioned throughout the will; but adjudged that the wife had only an estate for so many years of the lease as she should live, and that so much as remained unexpired at her death, was to vest in the children upon the contingency of their living at that time. 1 And. 61; 2 Leon. 92: 3 Leon. 89; Gald. 26.

EXEMPLIFICATION,

EXEMPLIFICATION or LETTERS PATENT &c. See title Evidence.

EXEMPLIFICATIONE, A writ granted for the exemplification of an original record. Reg. Orig. 290.

EXEMPTION, Exemptio] A privilege to be free from ſervice or appearance; as knights, clergymen, &c. are exempted from appearing at the county-court by ſtatute, and Peers from being put upon inqueſts. 6 Rep. 23. Perſons ſeventy years of age, apothecaries, &c. are alſo exempted by law from ſerving on juries: and juſtices of peace, attorneys, &c. from pariſh offices: 2 Inſt. 247. There is an exemption from tolls, &c. by the King's Letters Patent: And a writ of exemption, or of eaſe, to be quit of ſerving on juries, and all public ſervice. Shep. Epitom. 1049. See further the proper titles in this Dict.

EXENNIUM or EXHENIUM, A gift or preſent; and more properly a new year's gift.

EXERCITUALE, A heriot; paid only in arms, horſes, or military accoutrements. Leg. Edw. Conf. 1.

EXETER. By letters patent under the Great Seal, the ſcite of the caſtle of Exon (part of the dutchy of Cornwall) to be granted to ſome perſons appointed by the juſtices in quarter-ſeſſions for the county of Devon, for the term of 99 years, to the uſe of the ſaid county and for other public uſes; under the ancient yearly rent of 10*l. per annum*, payable to the crown. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 19.

EXFREDIARE, From ex and the Sax. Frede, Frith, Peace.] To break the peace, or commit open violence. Leg. H. 1. c. 13.

EX GRAVI QUERELA, A writ that lies for him to whom any lands or tenements in fee are deviſed by will, (within any city, town or borough, wherein lands are deviſeable by cuſtom,) and the heir of the deviſor enters, and detains them from him. Reg. Orig. 244: Old Nat. Br. 87. And if a man deviſes ſuch lands or tenements unto another in tail, with remainder over in fee, if the tenant in tail enter, and is ſeiſed by force of the intail, and afterwards dieth without iſſue; he in remainder ſhall have the writ ex gravi querela to execute that deviſe. New Nat. Br. 441. Alſo where tenant in tail dies without iſſue of his body, the heir of the donor, or he who hath the reverſion of the land, ſhall have this writ in the nature of a formedon in the reverter. Ibid. If a deviſor's heir be ouſted by the deviſee, by entry on the lands; he may not after have this writ, but is to have his remedy by the ordinary courſe of the common law. Co. Lit. 111.—If the claimant's title accrues within twenty years, the moſt eligible method of proceeding, is now by Ejectment.

EXHIBIT, Exhibitum.] Where a deed, or other writing is in a ſuit in Chancery exhibited to be proved by witneſſes, and the examiner or commiſſioners appointed certify on the back of it, that the deed or writing was ſhewed to the witneſs, to prove it at the time of his examination, and by him ſworn to; this is then called an exhibit in law proceedings. The ſame under a commiſſion of bankrupt.

EXHIBITIO. An allowance for meat and drink, ſuch as was cuſtomary among the religious appropriators of churches, who uſually made it to the depending vicar: the benefaction ſettled for the maintaining of ſcholars in the Univerſities, not depending on the foundation, are called exhibitions. Paroch. Antiq. 304.

EXIGENDARIES. See Exigenter.

EXIGENT, or Exigi facias.] A writ that lies where the defendant in an action perſonal cannot be found, nor any thing of his within the county, whereby to be attached or diſtrained; and is directed to the ſheriff, to proclaim and call him five county-court days, one after another, charging him to appear upon pain of outlawry: It is called exigent, becauſe it exacteth the party, i. e. requires his appearance or forth-coming to anſwer the law; and if he come not at the laſt day's proclamation, he is ſaid to be quinquies exactus (five times exacted,) and is outlawed. Cromp. Juriſ. 188.

The ſtatutes requiring proclamations on exigents awarded in civil actions, are 6 Hen. 8. c. 4: 31 Eliz. cap. 3. Exigents are to be awarded againſt receivers of the King's money, who detain the ſame; and againſt conſpirators, rioters, &c. Stat. 18 Ed. 3. c. 1. And a writ of proclamation ſhall be iſſued to the ſheriff to make three proclamations in the county where the defendant dwells, for him to yield himſelf, &c. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 3.

The writ of exigent alſo lies in an indictment of felony, where the party indicted cannot be found: And upon ſuing out an exigent for a criminal matter before conviction, there ſhall be a writ of proclamation, &c. 3 Inſt. 31. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 22. If a perſon indicted of felony abſent himſelf ſo long that the writ of exigent is awarded, his withdrawing will be deemed a flight in law whereby he will be liable to forfeit his goods; and though he renders himſelf upon the exigent, after ſuch withdrawing, and is found Not guilty, it is ſaid the forfeiture ſhall ſtand. 5 Rep. 110: 3 Inſt. 232. After a capias directed to the ſheriff to take and impriſon a perſon, &c. if he cannot be taken, an exigent is awarded: And after a judgment in a civil action, the exigent is to go forth after the firſt capias; but before judgment there muſt be a capias, alias and pluries. 4 Inſt. 177. If the defendant be in priſon, or beyond ſea, &c. he or his executors may reverſe the award of the exigent. See further this Dict. title Outlawry.

EXIGENTER, Exigendarius.] An officer of the court of Common Pleas; of which officers there are four in number: They make all exigents and proclamations, in actions where proceſs of outlawry doth lie; and alſo writs of ſuperſedeas, as well as the prothonotaries, upon ſuch exigents made out in their offices. But the iſſuing writs of ſuperſedeas is taken from them by an officer in the ſame court, conſtituted by letters patent by King James the Firſt.

EXIGI FACIAS, See Exigent.

EXILE. A baniſhment, or driving one away from his country. And this exile is either by reſtraint, when the government forbids a man, and makes it penal to return; or it is voluntary, where he leaves his country upon diſguſt, but may come back at pleaſure. 2 Leo. 191.

One natural and regular conſequence of perſonal liberty, under the laws of England is that every Engliſhman may claim a right to abide in his own country ſo long as he pleaſes, and not to be driven from it unleſs by ſentence of the law. Exile and Tranſportation are both puniſhments unknown to the common law; and wherever the latter is inflicted, it is either by the choice of the criminal himſelf to eſcape a capital puniſhment, or by the expreſs direction of ſome ſtatute. See Magna Charta, c. 29; which expreſsly declares that no freeman ſhall be baniſhed unleſs by the judgment of his peers, or by the laws of the land. And for the provisions of the Habeas Corpus Act, ſt. 31 Car. 2. c. 2, (termed by Blackſtone a ſecond Magna Charta and ſtable bulwark of our liberties,) with reſpect to ſending Engliſhmen priſoners to Scotland, Ireland, or beyond the ſeas; ſee titles Falſe Impriſonment; Habeas Corpus.

Soldiers and ſailors form neceſſary exceptions to theſe rules; but it is ſaid the King cannot even conſtitute a man Deputy, or Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, nor make one a foreign Ambaſſador, againſt his will: ſince theſe in reality might be no more than honourable exiles. 2 Inſt. 46.

See further on this ſubject, this Dict. titles Abjuration, Clergy, Felony, Tranſportation.

EXILIUM, Signifies in law conſtruction, a ſpoiling: And by the ſtatute of Marlbridge it ſeems to extend to the injury done to tenants, by altering their tenure, ejecting them, &c. and this is the ſenſe that Fleta determines, who diſtinguiſhes between vaſtum, deſtructio and exilium; for he tells us that vaſtum and deſtructio are almoſt the ſame, and are properly applied to houſes, gardens or woods; but exilium is when ſervants are infranchiſed, and wards unlawfully turned out of their tenements. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 11. See Stat. Marlb. c. 25.

EXITUS, Iſſue or off-ſpring: and applied to the iſſues or yearly rents and profits of lands. Stat. Weſt. 2. c. 45. See title Iſſues.

EXLEGALITUS, He who is proſecuted as an outlaw. Leg. Edw. Confeſ. c. 38.

EX MERO MOTU, Words uſed in the King's charters and letters patent, to ſignify that he grants them of his own will and mere motion, without petition or ſuggeſtion of any other: And the intent and effect of theſe words, is to bar all exceptions that might be taken to the charters or letters patent, by alledging that the King in granting them was abuſed by falſe ſuggeſtions. Kitch. 352. When the words ex mero motu are made uſe of in any charter, they ſhall be taken moſt ſtrongly againſt the King. 1 Co Rep. 451.

EX OFFICIO. The power a perſon has by virtue of an office, to do certain acts, without being applied to: as a juſtice of peace may not only grant ſurety of the peace, at the complaint or requeſt of any perſon, but he may demand and take it ex officio, at diſcretion, &c. Dalt. 270.

Ex Officio Informations. Informations at the ſuit of the King, filed by the Attorney-General, as by virtue of his office; without applying to the court wherein filed, for leave, or giving the defendant any opportunity of ſhewing cauſe why it ſhould not be filed. See title Information.

EXONERATIONE SECTÆ, A writ that lay for the King's ward, to be free from all ſuit to the county-court, hundred court, leet, &c. during wardſhip. F. N. B. 158.

Exoneratione Sectæ ad Curiam Baron'. A writ of the ſame nature, ſued by the guardian of the King's ward, and directed to the ſheriff or ſtewards of the court, that they do not diſtrain him, &c. for not doing ſuit of court. New Nat. Br. 352. And if the ſheriff diſtrain tenants in ancient demeſne to come to the ſheriff's torn or leet, they may have a writ commanding the ſheriff to ſurceaſe, &c. Ibid. 359. Likewiſe if a man have lands in divers places in the county, and he is conſtrained to come to the leet where he is not dwelling, when he reſides within the precinct of any other leet, &c. then he ſhall have this writ to the ſheriff to diſcharge him from coming to any other court-leet than in the hundred where he dwelleth. Ibid. 357.

By the common law, parſons ſhall not be diſtrained to come to court leets, for the lands belonging to their churches; and if they be, they may have the writ exoneratione ſectæ, &c. F. N. B. 394. So ſhall a woman holding land in dower, if ſhe is diſtrained to do ſuit of court for ſuch land; when the heir has lands ſufficient in the ſame county. Ibid.

EX PARTE, Of the one part; as a commiſſion in Chancery ex parte, is that which is taken out and executed by one ſide or party only, on the other party's neglecting or refuſing to join: When both plaintiff and defendant proceed, it is a joint commiſſion.

Ex parte talis, Is a writ that lies for a bailiff or receiver, who having auditors aſſigned to take his account, cannot obtain of them reaſonable allowance, but is caſt into priſon. And the courſe in this caſe is to ſue this writ out of the Chancery, directed to the ſheriff to take four mainpernors to bring his body before the barons of the Exchequer at a certain day, and to warn the lord to appear at the ſame time. F. N. B. 129.

EXPECTANT, Having relation to or depending upon; and this word is uſed in the law with fee, as fee-expectant.

Expectancy, Eſtates in; are of two ſorts; one created by act of the parties, called a remainder; the other by act of law, called a reverſion. See titles, Eſtate; Remainder; Reverſion; Executory Deviſe.

EXPEDITATE, Expeditare.] In the laws of the foreſt, ſignifies to cut out the ball of the dog's fore-feet, for the preſervation of the King's game: But the ball of the foot of a maſtiff is not to be taken out, but the three claws of the fore-foot on the right ſide are to be cut off by the ſkin. Cromp. Juriſd. 152: Manwood, cap. 16. This relates to every man's dog who lives near the foreſt; and was formerly done once in every three years: and if any perſon keeps a great dog not expeditated, he forfeits to the King 3*s.* 4*d.* 4 Inſt. 308. See title Foreſt.

EXPEDITATÆ ARBORES, Trees rooted up or cut down to the roots.—Fleta, lib. 2. c. 41.

EXPENDITORS, Perſons appointed by commiſſioners of ſewers to pay, diſburſe, or expend the money collected by the tax for the repairs of ſewers, &c. when paid into their hands by the collectors, on the reparations, amendments and reformations ordered by the commiſſioners, for which they are to render accounts when thereunto required. Laws of Sewers 87, 88. See title Sewers. The ſteward who ſuperviſes the repair of the banks and water-courſes in Romney Marſh, is called the Expenditor.

EXPENSÆ LITIS, Coſts of ſuit, allowed a plaintiff or defendant, recovering in his action. See title Coſts.

EXPENSIS MILITUM NON LEVANDIS, &c. An ancient writ to prohibit the ſheriff from levying any allowance for knights of the ſhire, upon thoſe that hold lands in ancient demeſne. Reg. Orig. 261. For there was alſo a writ de expenſis militum levandis, for levying expences for knights of the parliament, &c. Reg. Orig. 191. See title Parliament.

EXPLEES, The rents or profits of an eſtate, &c. See Eſplees.

EXPLORATOR, A ſcout; alſo a huntſman, or chaſer.

EXPORTATION,

EXPORTATION, The ſhipping or carrying out the native commodities of England for other countries; mentioned in the ſtatutes relating to the Cuſtoms. See this Dict. title Navigation Acts.

EXPOSITION OF DEEDS, ſhall be favourable, according to the apparent intent: and be reaſonable and equal, &c. Co. Lit. 313. See title Deed.

EX POST FACTO, Is a term uſed in the law, ſignifying ſomething done after another thing that was committed before. And an act done, or eſtate granted, may be made good by matter ex poſt facto, that was not ſo at firſt, by election, &c. As ſometimes a thing well done at firſt, may afterwards become ill. 5 Rep. 22: 8 Rep. 146. See title Statute.

To EXTEND, Extendere.] To value the lands or tenements of one bound by a ſtatute, who hath forfeited his bond, at ſuch an indifferent rate, as by the yearly rent the creditor may in time be paid his debt. F. N. B. See the next article.

EXTENDI FACIAS, or EXTENT, Extenta.] A writ of execution, or commiſſion to the ſheriff for the valuing of lands or tenements; and ſometimes the act of the ſheriff or other commiſſioner upon this writ. Bro. 313. See this Dict. title Execution. This term is alſo uſed for the eſtimate or valuation of lands, which when made to the utmoſt value, is ſaid to be the full extent; whence come our extended rents, or rack rents.

If one bound to the King by ſpecialty, or to others by ſtatute, recognizance, &c. hath forfeited it; ſo that by the yearly rent of the debtor's lands, the creditor is to be paid his debt; upon this the creditor may ſue a writ to the ſheriff out of the Chancery to deliver him the lands and goods to the value of the debt, which is termed a liberate. F. N. B. 131. This is after the extent directed to the ſheriff to ſeize and value the lands, &c. of the debtor, to the utmoſt extent. 4 Rep. 67.

Lands and goods are to be appraiſed and extended by the inqueſt of twelve men, and then delivered to the creditor, in order to the ſatisfaction of his debt: every extent ought to be by inquiſition and verdict, by the Stat. Weſtm. 2. And the ſheriff cannot execute the writ without an inquiſition. Cro. Jac. 569.

The body of the cogniſor, and all lands and tenements that were his at the time of the ſtatute, &c. entered into, or afterwards, into whoſe hands ſoever they come, are liable to the extent. 2 Inſt. 396. But copyhold lands are chargeable only during the life of the cogniſor; and may not be extended by elegit, ſo as to admit a ſtranger to have intereſt in the lands held by copy, without the admittance of the lord. Lands in ancient demeſne, annuities, rents, &c. are extendible. 1 Rol. Abr. 88. Two parts of an entire rent may be delivered upon an extent by the ſheriff. Cro. Eliz. 742. But if the cogniſor of a ſtatute have a rent-charge, and before the extent he purchaſe parcel of the land; the rent is gone, and ſhall not be in execution: 'Tis otherwiſe if he purchaſes after extent of the rent. Dyer 206. A reverſion of lands, &c. may not be extended; but a plaintiff had judgment for his debt and damages de reverſione cum acciderit, and a ſpecial elegit to extend the moiety, &c. 2 Sid. 86: Dyer 373.

An advowſon in groſs is not extendible on elegit, &c. Stat. Weſtm. 2. cap. 18. An office of truſt cannot be extended, becauſe 'tis not aſſignable; and nothing ſhall be extended, but what may be aſſigned over. Dyer 7. Though an office is extendible in equity. Chanc. Rep. 39. Goods and chattels, as leaſes for years, cattle, &c. in the cogniſor's own hands, and not ſold for valuable conſideration, are ſubject to the extent. As the lands are to be delivered to the party at a reaſonable yearly value, ſo the goods ſhall be delivered in extent at a price that is reaſonable: And on a ſcire facias ad computand' the cogniſee is to account according to the extended value; not the real value of the land. Hardr. 136. If the extenders appraiſe and value the lands too high, the cogniſee at the return of the writ may pray that they may take and retain the lands at the rate appraiſed; and then 'tis ſaid he may have execution againſt their lands for the debt; but this may not be on elegit. Cro. Jac. 12. It has been adjudged, that at the return of the writ the cogniſee may refuſe the lands, &c. extended, if over valued. Cro. Car. 148.

Where lands are extended at under-value, and delivered in execution, the cogniſee hath an intereſt in the land, which cannot be diveſted by finding of ſurpluſage. Cro. Eliz. 266: Cro. Jac. 85. The cogniſor cannot enter upon the cogniſee, when ſatisfaction is received for the debt, but is put to his ſcire facias on an extent: Though on an elegit, the defendant may enter becauſe the land is only awarded, till the debt, which is certain, is ſatisfied; whereas on extent, the land is to be held until the debt, damages and coſts, &c. are ſatisfied: And the cogniſee being in by matter of record, ſhall not be put out but by matter of record, viz. a ſcire facias brought againſt him. 4 Rep. 67: March's Rep. 207, 208. Sed qu. Where is the difference? Is not the tenant by elegit in by matter of record?

After an extent returned, a liberate ſhall go to the ſheriff, reciting the extendi facias and return, and commanding that he deliver the goods and lands to the conuſee (under a ſtatute-ſtaple, &c.) ſi per extentum et pretium illa habere voluit. F. N. B. 131: Lutw. 432.

The cogniſee hath no abſolute property in lands by the extent, till the delivery upon the liberate; but notwithſtanding, by the very extent they are in cuſtodiâ legis for his benefit. Cro. Car. 106, 148. No actual ſeiſin can be on an extent, and a cogniſee of a ſtatute ſtaple, &c. cannot bring ejectment before the liberate; nor can the ſheriff upon the liberate turn the tertenant out of poſſeſſion, as he may upon a hab. fac. poſſeſſionem. 1 Vent. 41. Where there is an extent upon a ſtatute, and a liberate thereupon, but not returned, yet it is good; though regularly, when inquiſitions are taken, the writ ought to be returned. 4 Rep. 67: 1 Lill. Abr. 592. The ſheriff may be charged to make a return of his writ, if he put the cogniſee in poſſeſſion of part only; and ſo the cogniſee may have poſſeſſion of the whole. 2 Nelſ. Abr. 774. But it is ſaid if a perſon ſuing out an extent, die before the return of a writ, the ſheriff may not proceed in his inquiſition, &c. afterwards; for there muſt be a proſecution de novo.

After a full and perfect execution had by extent, returned, and of record, there ſhall never be any re-extent upon an eviction: But by Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 5, if lands delivered in execution on a judgment, ſtatute or recognizance ſhall be evicted, without fraud, or default of the tenant, who holds them in execution, before the debt and damages are wholly levied, the recoveror or conuſee may have a ſcire facias againſt the perſon on whom the execution was firſt ſued, his heirs, executors or aſſigns, of lands then liable, returnable in the ſame Court, 40 days after the teſte; and if the defendant makes default, or ſhews not cauſe, the Chancellor or Juſtices of the court where the ſcire facias is returned ſhall make a new writ of the like nature of the former execution for levying the reſidue of the debt. Co. Lit. 290.

If lands be extended upon a miſtake, &c. a re-extent may be had; ſee Dyer 299. If part of the lands is evicted, the cogniſee is to hold over the reſidue of the land till the debt is ſatisfied. 4 Rep. 66. When lands are delivered in extent, it is as if the cogniſee had taken a leaſe thereof for years, until the debt is ſatisfied; and he ſhall never afterwards take out a new execution: the cogniſee having accepted the land upon the liberate, the law preſumes the debt to be ſatisfied. 1 Lutw. 429. An extent was filed, and though it was diſcovered that lands were omitted, the court would not grant a re-extent. Sid. 356. By Stat. 16 & 17 C. 2. c. 5, (made perpetual by Stat. 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 2;) when any judgment, ſtatute or recognizance ſhall be extended (within twenty years after ſuch judgment, &c. had,) the ſame ſhall not be avoided or delayed by occaſion that any part of the lands extendible are omitted out of ſuch extent: ſaving to the parties whoſe lands ſhall be extended, their remedy for contribution againſt thoſe whoſe lands are omitted; except heirs within age.

Where a feri facias iſſues, and is delivered to the ſheriff to be executed, the property of the goods is veſted by the delivery, and an extent afterwards for the King comes too late. Comb. 123: See alſo 2 Black. Rep. 1294: Doug. 415, 599. See title this Dict. Execution.

EXTINGUISHMENT; from Lat. Extinguo.] The Extinction or annihilation of a right, eſtate, &c.; by means of its being merged in, or conſolidated with, another, generally a greater or more extenſive, right or eſtate. Wherever a right, title, or intereſt is deſtroyed, or taken away by the act of God, operation of law, or act of the party, this in many books is called an Extinguiſhment. Co. Lit. 147, b: 1 Ro. Ab. 933.

This Extinguiſhment is of various natures, as applied to various rights; viz. Eſtates, Commons, Copyholds, Debts, Liberties, Services, and Ways: See more at large under thoſe titles; what follows will give ſome general information on the ſubject.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF ESTATES. If a man hath a yearly rent out of lands, and afterwards purchaſes the lands whereout it ariſeth, ſo that he hath as good an eſtate in the land as in the rent; now both the property and rent are conſolidated or united in one poſſeſſor; and therefore the rent is ſaid to be extinguiſhed. Alſo where a perſon has a leaſe for years, and afterwards buys the property; this is a conſolidation of the property and fruits, and is an extinguiſhment of the leaſe: But if a man have an eſtate in land but for life or years, and hath a higher eſtate, as a fee ſimple, in the rent; the rent is not extinguiſhed, but in ſuſpence for a time; for after the term, the rent ſhall revive. Terms de Ley.

Extinguiſhment of a rent is a deſtroying of the rent by purchaſe of the land; for no one can have a rent going out of his own land; though a perſon muſt have as high an eſtate in the land, as in the rent, or the rent will not be extinct. Co. Litt. 147. If a perſon hath a rent-charge to him and his heirs iſſuing out of lands, and he purchaſeth any part of the land to him and his heirs; as the rent is intire and iſſuing out of every part of the land, the whole rent-charge is extinguiſhed: though it is not ſo where one hath a rent-ſervice, and purchaſeth part of the land out of which it iſſues; rent ſervice being apportionable according to the value of the land, ſo that it ſhall only extinguiſh the rent for the land purchaſed. Lit. 222: Co. Lit. 148. And if the grantee of a rent-charge purchaſes parcel of the lands, and the grantor by his deed granteth that he may diſtrain for the rent in the reſidue of the land, this amounts to a new grant. Co. Lit. 147. See titles Grant; Eſtate.

If a man be ſeiſed of a rent-charge in fee, and grants it to another and his heirs, and the tenant attorns; the grantor is without remedy for the rent in arrear before his grant; and ſuch arrears become as it were extinct. Vaugh. 40: 1 Lill. Abr. 594. A. B. made a leaſe for years of lands to another, and afterwards granted a rent-charge to C. D. who deviſed the ſaid rent to the ſaid A. B. till 100 l. ſhould be levied; then to B. G. and died: Adjudged that by the deviſe to A. B. the rent was ſuſpended, and that a perſonal thing once ſuſpended by the act of the party is extinguiſhed for ever. Dyer 140.

If tenant for life, makes a leaſe for years, rendring rent, and afterwards the reverſion deſcends to the tenant for life; this is not an extinguiſhment of the term; but it is otherwiſe if he have the reverſion by purchaſe. 1 Co. Rep. 96. A jointenant for life purchaſes the land in reverſion, it will extinguiſh the eſtate for life for a moiety, and ſever the joint-tenure. 2 Rep. 60. Lands are given to two men, and the heirs of their bodies; though they have an eſtate for life jointly, and ſeveral inheritances, yet the eſtate for life is not extinct: Contrà, if it be by ſeveral conveyances; as where a leaſe is made to two for their lives, and after the leſſor grants the reverſion to them and their heirs, &c. here the life eſtate will be extinguiſhed. Co. Lit. 182.

If one after his title begun to be tenant by the curteſy, make a feoffment in fee upon condition, and enter for the condition broken; the eſtate is extinct, ſo that if his wife die, he ſhall not be tenant by the curteſy. 1 Rep. 18. Where a man hath an eſtate for his own life, and for another's life at once; the eſtate pour auter vie will be extinguiſhed in the eſtate for his own life, which is greater in law than the other. 11 Rep. 87: Dyer 11. See Bro. 409: Moor 94: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 821.

When the freehold cometh to the term, the eſtate for years is extinct. 2 Nelſ. Ab. 820. Where the remainder of a term is granted over to another, if the party in poſſeſſion purchaſe the fee-ſimple, though by this means his intereſt is extinguiſhed; yet that ſhall not defeat the reverſionary intereſt. 10 Rep. 52: 2 Nelſ. 820.

A fine, &c. of lands, will extinguiſh a term: and by purchaſe of an eſtate in fee-ſimple, an eſtate-tail in land is extinct. 9 Rep. 139. But if a fee-ſimple and fee-tail meet together by deſcent, the eſtate-tail will not be extinguiſhed. 3 Rep. 61. Deſcent of lands to the ſame perſon who has a term, will extinguiſh the term. Moor 286.

When a leſſor enters tortiouſly upon the leſſee againſt his conſent, the rent is extinguiſhed 2 Lev. 143. But it has been adjudged, that rent is not extinct by the entry of the leſſor, but only ſuſpended; and revives by the leſſee's re-entry. Dyer 361. An infant has a rent, and purchaſes

purchaſes the land out of which it is iſſuing; by this the rent will be ſuſpended, but not extinct. Bro. Extinguiſh. A man leſſee for years takes a wife, or woman leſſee a huſband, that hath the reverſion after the leaſe; here the term is not extinguiſhed. 12 Rep. 81. See title Baron and Feme.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF COMMON. By purchaſing lands wherein a perſon hath common appendant, the common is extinguiſhed. Cro. Eliz. 594. A commoner releaſes his common in one acre, it is an extinguiſhment of the whole common. Show. Rep. 350. And where a perſon hath common of vicinage, if he incloſes any part of the land, all the common is extinct. 1 Brownl. 174.

But if one hath common appendant in a great waſte, belonging to his tenant, and the lord improve part of the waſte leaving ſufficient; if he after make a feoffment to the commoner of the land improved, this will be no extinguiſhment. Dyer 339: Hob. 172. A commoner aliens part of his land, to which the common doth belong; the common is not extinct, but ſhall be divided. 2 Shep. Abr. 152. See title Common.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF COPYHOLD. It is laid down as a general rule, that any act of the copyholder's, which denotes his intention to hold no longer of his lord, and amounts to a determination of his will, is an extinguiſhment of his copyhold. Hutt. 81: Cro. Eliz. 21: 1 Jon. 41.

As if a copyholder in fee accepts a leaſe for years of the ſame land from the lord, this determines his copyhold eſtate; or if the lord leaſes the copyhold to another, and the copyholder accepts an aſſignment from the leſſee, his copyhold is extinct. Moor 184: 2 Co. 16 b: Godb. 11, 101.

So if a copyholder bargains and ſells his copyhold to the leſſee for years of the manor, his copyhold is thereby extinguiſhed; or if he joins with his lord in a feoffment of the manor, his copyhold is thereby extinct, for theſe are acts which denote his intention to hold no longer by copy. Hutt. 65: 1 Jon. 41. S. C: Godb. 11.

So if a copyholder accepts to hold of his lord, by bill under the lord's hand, this determines his copyhold; ſo if he accepts an eſtate for life by parol, if with livery, this is an extinguiſhment; otherwiſe not; for without livery nothing but an eſtate at will paſſes, which cannot merge or extinguiſh an eſtate at will. 1 And. 199: Latch. 213.

If one ſeiſed of a manor in right of his wife lets lands by indenture for years, this doth not deſtroy the cuſtom as to the wife; for after the death of her huſband ſhe may demiſe it again by copy. Cro. Eliz. 459.

So if a copyhold is in the hands of a ſubject, who after becomes King, the copyhold is extinct, for it is below the Majeſty of a King to perform ſuch ſervile ſervices; yet after his deceaſe the next that hath right ſhall be admitted, and the tenure revived. 2 Sid. 82: 4 Co. 24: Cro. Eliz. 252. See 2 Leon. 208: 4 Co. 26 b: Cro. Eliz. 103. And a copyhold eſtate is extinct whenever it becomes not demiſeable by copy. Coke's Copyholder. 62. See further title Copyhold.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF DEBT. If feme ſole debtee take the debtor to huſband; or there be two joint obligors in a bond, and the obligee marries one of them; or in caſe a perſon is bound to a feme ſole and another, and ſhe takes the obligor to huſband; in theſe caſes, the debt will be extinguiſhed. 8 Rep. 136. And if a debtor makes the debtee his executor, or him and another executor, and they take the executorſhip upon them; or if the debtee makes his debtor executor, &c. it is an extinguiſhment of the debt, and it ſhall never revive. Plowd. 184. 1 Salk. 304. But where a debtee or debtor executor legally refuſeth; or he and others being made executors they all refuſe, then the debt is revived again. Plowd. 185. See titles Baron and Feme: Executor.

It is agreed as a general rule, that a creditor's accepting a higher ſecurity than he had before, is an extinguiſhment of the firſt debt; as if a creditor by ſimple contract accepts an obligation, this extinguiſhes the ſimple contract debt. 1 Rol. Abr. 470, 471, 604: 6 Co. 44.

So if a man accepts a bond for a legacy, he cannot ſue for his legacy in the ſpiritual court; for by the deed the legacy is extinct, and it is become a mere debt at Common-law. Yelv. 38.

So if a bond-creditor obtains judgment on the bond, or has judgment acknowledged to him, he cannot afterwards bring an action on the bond; for the debt is drowned in the judgment, which is a ſecurity of a higher nature than the bond. 6 Co. 44 b.

But theſe caſes muſt be underſtood where the debtor himſelf enters into theſe ſecurities; and therefore if a ſtranger give bond for a ſimple-contract due by another, this does not extinguiſh the ſimple contract debt; but if upon making the contract, a ſtranger gives bond for it, or, being preſent, promiſes to give bond for it, and after does ſo, the debt by ſimple contract is extinguiſhed, the obligation being made upon, or purſuant to the contract. 2 Leon. 110.

But the accepting a ſecurity of an inferior nature is by no means an extinguiſhment of the firſt debt; as if a bond be given in ſatisfaction of a judgment. Cro. Jac. 579: 2 Brownl. 29: Cro. Jac. 649, 650.

Alſo the accepting a ſecurity of equal degree is no extinguiſhment of the firſt debt; as where an obligee has a ſecond bond given to him; for one deed cannot determine the duty upon another. Cro. Eliz 304, 716, 727: 1 Brownl. 74: Lit. Rep. 58: Cro. Car. 86.

Though a bond is taken for a ſimple contract debt, yet if it is after an act of bankruptcy, the ſimple contract is not extinguiſhed. Stran. 1042.

By a releaſe of part of a debt due on bond, the whole is gone, and the obligation extinguiſhed. Bro. Contract. 80: 1 And. 235.—See further titles Acceptance: Bond.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF LIBERTIES. Liberties and franchiſes granted by the King, may ſometimes be extinguiſhed, and ſometimes not. Moor 474. When the King grants any privileges, liberties or franchiſes, which were in his own hands, as parcel of the flowers of the crown, ſuch as bona felonum, fugitivorum & utlagatorum, waifs, ſtrays, deodand, wreck on the ſea, &c. if they come to the crown again, they are drowned and extinct in the crown, and the King is ſeiſed of them jure coronæ: but if liberties of fairs, markets or other franchiſes, and juriſdictions, be erected and created by the King, they will not be extinguiſhed, nor their appendances ſevered from the poſſeſſions. 9 Rep. 25. A man has liberties by preſcription, if he takes letters patent of them, the preſcription will be gone and extinct; for things of a higher determine thoſe of a lower nature. 2 H. 7. 5. See title King.

EXTINGUISHMENT

EXTINGUISHMENT OF SERVICES. The lord purchaſes or accepts parcel of the tenancy, out of which an intire ſervice is to be paid or done; by this the whole ſervice will be extinct: but if the ſervice be pro bono publico, then no part of it ſhall be extinguiſhed; and homage and fealty are not ſubject to extinguiſhment, by the lord's purchaſing part of the land. 6 Rep. 1, 105: Co. Lit. 149. If the lord and another perſon do purchaſe the lands, whereout he is to have ſervices, they are extinct: alſo by ſeverance of the ſervices, a manor may be extinguiſhed. Co. Lit. 147: 1 And. 257. See title Tenure.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF WAYS. If a man hath a highway as appendant, and after purchaſes the land wherein this way is, the way is extinct. Terms de Ley. Though a way of neceſſity to market, or church, or to arable land, &c. is not extinguiſhed by purchaſe of ground, or unity of poſſeſſion. 11 H. 7. 25: Co. Litt. 155. See title Way.

EXTIRPATIONE. A judicial writ, either before or after judgment, that lies againſt a perſon who when a verdict is found againſt him for land, &c. doth maliciouſly overthrow any houſe, or extirpate any trees upon it. Reg. Jud 13, 56.

EXTOCARE. To grub up lands, and reduce them to arable or meadow. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 71.

EXTORTION, extorſio, from extorqueo, to wreſt away.] In a large ſenſe, any oppreſſion under colour of right; it is uſually applied to that abuſe of publick juſtice which conſiſts in the unlawful taking by an officer, &c. by colour of his office, of any money, or valuable thing, from a perſon where none at all is due, or not ſo much is due, or before it is due. Co. Lit. 368: 10 Rep. 102. See title Bribery; Fees.

The diſtinction between bribery and extortion ſeems to be this. The former offence conſiſts in the offering a preſent or receiving one if offered; the latter, in demanding a fee or preſent, by colour of office.

At the Common law, which was affirmed by the ſtatute of Weſtm. 1. c. 26, it was extortion for any miniſter of the King, whoſe office did any way concern the adminiſtration and execution of juſtice, or the common good of the ſubject, to take any reward for doing his office, except what he received from the King: though reaſonable fees for the labour and attendance of officers of the courts of juſtice are not reſtrained by ſtatute, which are ſtated and ſettled by the reſpective courts; and it has been thought expedient to allow theſe officers to take certain immediate fees in many caſes. 2 Inſt. 209: 3 Inſt. 149: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 68.

The taking of money by virtue of an office, implies the act to be lawful; but to take any money by colour of an office, implies an ill action: and the taking being for expedition of buſineſs, is judged by colour of the office, and unlawful. 2 Inſt. 206: Co. Lit. 368.

Yet according to ſome it ſeems that an officer, who takes a reward which is voluntarily given to him, and which has been uſual in certain caſes, for the more diligent or expeditious performance of his duty, cannot be ſaid to be guilty of extortion; for without ſuch a premium it would be impoſſible in many caſes to have the laws executed with vigour and ſucceſs. 2 Inſt. 210: 3 Inſt. 149: Co. Lit. 368.

But it has been always held, that a promiſe to pay an officer money for the doing of a thing, which the law will not ſuffer him to take any thing for, is merely void, however freely and voluntarily it may appear to have been made. 1 Rol. Abr. 16: 1 Rol. Rep. 313: Noy 76: 1 Jon. 65: Cro. Eliz. 654: Moor 468: Cro. Jac. 103.

It is extortion to oblige an executor to prove a will in the biſhop's court, and to take fees thereon, knowing the ſame to have been proved in the Prerogative Court. Str. 73.—Or in a ſheriff's officer to admit a priſoner to bail, upon an agreement to receive a certain ſum when the priſoner ſhould pay to a third perſon another ſum of money. 2 Burr. 924.—To arreſt a man in order to obtain a releaſe from him, 8 Mod. 189.—In a gaoler to obtain money from his priſoner by any colourable means. 8 Mod. 226: Stra. 575.—Or in a church-warden colore officii. 1 Sid. 307.—In a miller, if he takes more toll than is due by cuſtom. Ld. Raym. 159. Or a commiſſary for abſolution. 3 Leon. 268.—Or a ferry-man more for his ferry. 4 Mod. 101.—Or to ſeize upon the place where a fair is held, and by building ſtalls to force an exorbitant price for them. Ld. Raym. 150.—Or in an under-ſheriff to refuſe to execute proceſs till his fees are paid. Salk. 330.—Or to take a bond for his fee before execution is ſued out. Hut. 53. Or for a coroner to refuſe his view until his fees be paid. 3 Inſt. 149.

Extortion, by the Common-law is ſeverely puniſhed, on indictment, by fine and impriſonment, and removal of officers from the offices wherein committed. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 68. By the Stat. 3 Ed. 1, Inferior officers of juſtice, &c. guilty of extortion, are to render, by c. 26, double, and by c. 30, treble value; and there are divers other ſtatutes for puniſhing extortions of ſheriffs, bailiffs, gaolers, clerks of the aſſiſe, and of the peace, attornies and ſolicitors, &c. See Stats. 23 H. 6. cc. 7; 9. See title Sheriff. 33 Hen. 8. c. 24: 29 Eliz. c. 4: 1 Jac. 1. c. 10: 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 41: 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23: 3 Geo. 1. c. 15: 17 Geo. 3. c. 26. § 6. As to the extortion of officers of the cuſtoms, diſtraining merchants for undue charges, &c. See Stat. 28 H. 6. c. 5; and this Dict. title Cuſtoms.

In caſes of extortion, there muſt be a poſitive charge and that the perſon charged with it took ſo much extorſivè or colore officii; which words are as eſſential as proditorie or felonice for treaſon or felony. 2 Salk. 680.

Officers may be jointly indicted of extortion as they may be jointly guilty of the offence. 1 Salk. 382.

The place, where the extortion was committed, ſhould be ſet down in the declaration. See Pl. C. c. 200. The ſum certain extorted muſt be particularly ſet forth, and he cannot ſay, that the defendant did extort divers ſums from divers men generally. Godb. 438. pl. 583. Mich. 4 Car.

The indictment, (which may be brought at the Seſſions Str. 73,) or information, muſt ſtate the fact particularly. 3 Leon. 268: 25 E. 3. ſt. 3. c. 9: 11 Mod. 80. It muſt alſo ſpecify the time when the offence was committed. 4 Mod. 101, 3. But although it be omitted to be ſtated for what the thing extorted was taken, it is good after verdict. Sid. 91. And in general the Court of K. B. will oblige the party to demur to a defective indictment for extortion. 5 Mod. 13. And whatever may be the ſum, if there is proof only of a ſhilling taken, the defendant is guilty: for the taking is the offence and not the contract. Ld. Raym. 149. And he alſo who aſſiſts is equally guilty, for there are no acceſſaries in extortion. Str. 73.

Againſt

Againſt attornies for extortion, action may be brought, and the party grieved ſhall have treble damages and coſts; but information will not lie on the Stat. 3 Jac. 1 cap. 7. Sid. 434: 2 Nelſ. 822.

If an officer by terrifying another in his office, take more than his ordinary fees or duties he is guilty of extortion which may be compared to unlawful uſury, &c. And Crompton ſays, that wrong done by any man is a treſpaſs; but exceſſive wrong is properly extortion. Cromp. Juſt. 8. And extortion has been deemed more odious than robbery, becauſe it carries an appearance of truth; and is often accompanied with perjury in officers, &c. by breaking their oaths of office.

EXTRACTA CURIÆ. The iſſues or profits of holding a court ariſing from the cuſtomary fees, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 572.

EXTRACTS of writings or records, being notes thereof. See title Eſtreats.

EXTRAJUDICIAL. Is when judgment is had in a cauſe, not depending in that court where given; or wherein the judge has not juriſdiction.

EXTRAPAROCHIAL. Out of any pariſh; any thing privileged and exempt from the duties of a pariſh.—See this Dict. title Poor.

EXTRAVAGANTS. Certain conſtitutions of the Popes, ſo called, becauſe extra corpus canonicum Gratiani, five extra decretorum libros vagantur. Du Cange.

EXTUMÆ. Reliques in churches and tombs.—Cartular. Abbat. Glaſton. MS.

EXUPERARE. To overcome; ſometimes it ſignifies to apprehend or take, as, exuperare vivum vel mortuum Leg. Edm. c. 2.

EY, Inſula, an iſland.] where the names of places end in ey, it denotes them an iſland. As Ramſey, is the iſland of Rams; Sheppy, the iſland of Sheep; Herſey, the iſland of Harts, &c.

EYERY of hawks. See title Aerie.

EYRE. Vide Eire, and Juſtices in Eyre.

F.

F Is a letter wherewith felons, &c. are branded and marked with an hot iron, on their being admitted to the benefit of clergy. See this Dict. title Clergy.

FABRICK LANDS, Are lands given towards the re-building or repairing of cathedral and other churches; for in ancient times, almoſt every perſon gave by his will more or leſs, to the fabrick of the cathedral or pariſh church where he lived; and lands thus given were called fabrick lands, being ad fabricam reparandum: theſe lands are mentioned in the Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 8.

FACTA ARMORUM, Feats of arms, juſts, tournaments, &c. Hiſ. Joh. Brompton, in R. 1. p. 1261.

FACTO, In fact; as where any thing is actually done, &c. See De facto.

FACTOR, The agent of a merchant abroad, reſiding in this country; or è contra.—A Factor is authoriſed by a letter of Attorney, with a ſalary or allowance for his care. He muſt purſue his commiſſion ſtrictly; and the ſame perſon may be factor for many different merchants. Mal. 81.

If the principal give the factor a general commiſſion to act for the beſt, he may do for him as he thinks fit; but otherwiſe he may not. Though in commiſſions at this time, it is common to give the factor power in expreſs words, to diſpoſe of the merchandize, and deal therein as if it were his own; by which the factor's actions will be excuſed, though they occaſion loſs to his principal. Lex Mercat: Mal. 81: Str. 1178.

Goods remitted to a factor ought to be carefully preſerved; and he is accountable for all lawful goods which ſhall come to his hands; yet if the factor buy goods for his principal, and they receive damage after in his poſſeſſion, through no negligence of his, the principal ſhall bear the loſs; and if a factor be robbed, he ſhall be diſcharged in account brought againſt him by his principal. 4 Rep. 83. See title Bailment.

If the factor has orders from his principal not to ſell any goods but in ſuch a manner, and breaks thoſe orders, he is liable to the loſs or damage that ſhall be received thereby: and where any goods are brought or exchanged without orders, it is at the merchant's curteſy whether he will accept of them, or turn them on his factor's hands. When a factor has bought, or ſold goods purſuant to orders, he is immediately to give advice of it to his principal; leſt the former orders ſhould be contradicted before the time of his giving notice, whereby his reputation might poſſibly ſuffer: and where a factor has made a conſiderable profit for his principal, he muſt take due care in the diſpoſition of the ſame; for without commiſſion or particular orders, he is anſwerable. A factor ſhall ſuffer for not obſerving orders; and no factor acting for another man's account in merchandize, can juſtify receiving from the orders of his principal, though there may be a probability of advantage by it: if he make any compoſition with creditors without orders, he ſhall anſwer it to his principal. Lex Mercatoria.

Factors ought to obſerve the contents of all letters from their principals, or written to them by their order. A merchant is anſwerable in action upon the caſe for the deceits of his factor, in ſelling goods abroad: and as ſomebody muſt be a loſer by ſuch deceit, it is more reaſonable that he who employs, and puts confidence in the deceiver, ſhould loſe, than a ſtranger. 1 Salk. 289.

Factors are liable to the ſtatutes concerning bankrupts. Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30, § 39. See title Bankrupt. Factor not to buy cattle on his own account. Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 40. § 11. See title Cattle.

A bare commiſſion to a factor to ſell and diſpoſe of merchandize, is not ſufficient power for the factor to entruſt any perſon, or to give a further day of payment than the day of the ſale of the goods; for in this caſe, on the delivery of the one he ought to receive the other: and by the general power of doing as if it were his own, he may not truſt an unreaſonable time, viz. beyond one or three months, &c. the uſual time allowed for the commodities diſpoſed of; if he doth, he ſhall be anſwerable to his principal out of his own eſtate. 1 Bulſt. 102: But in 2 C. C. 57, it is ſaid that by his general commiſſion a factor has authority to ſell upon credit.

If a Factor buys goods on account of his principal, where he is uſed ſo to do, the contract of the factor ſhall oblige the principal to a performance of the bargain; and the principal is the proper perſon to be proſecuted, on non-performance: but if the factor enters into a charter-party of affreightment with a maſter of a ſhip, the contract obliges him only; unleſs he lades aboard generally his principal's goods, then both the principal and lading become liable for the freight and not the factor. Goldſb. 137.

It is a general rule that where a factor, who is authoriſed to ſell goods in his own name, makes the buyer debtor to himſelf, though he is not anſwerable to his principal for the debt, if the money be not paid; yet he has a right to receive it, if it be paid, and his receipt is a diſcharge to the buyer. The factor may compel ſuch payment by action, and the buyer cannot defend himſelf by ſaying that the principal was indebted to him more than the amount. Comp. 255, 6. Where goods are ſold by a factor at his own riſk, for which he has an additional allowance, the vendee is not anſwerable to the owner. Stra. 1182. See Del credere.

Though a factor has power to ſell, and thereby bind his principal, yet he cannot bind or affect the property of the goods by pledging them as a ſecurity for his own debt, though there is the formality of a bill of parcels and a receipt. Stran. 1178.

If a

If a factor sells goods as his own, by indorsement of the bill of lading, though no delivery is made, the goods being at sea, the vendee shall keep possession unless fraud appears between him and the factor. 4 Burr. 2046: 1 Blac. Rep. 629. See post, the last paragraph of this article.

It hath been held in Equity, that if one employs a factor, and entrusts him with the disposal of merchandize, and the factor receives the money, and dies indebted in debts of a higher nature, and it appears by evidence, that this money was vested in other goods, and remains unpaid, those goods shall be taken as part of the merchant's estate, and not the factor's; but if the factor have the money, it shall be looked upon as the factor's estate, and must first answer the debts of superior creditors, &c. for as money has no ear mark, Equity cannot follow that in behalf of him who employed the factor. 1 Salk. 160.

If a person doth employ a factor to sell goods, who sells them on credit, and before the money is paid dies indebted, more than his assets will pay; this money shall be paid to the principal merchant, and not to the factor's administrator, but thereout must be deducted what was due for commission: for a factor is in nature only of a trustee for his principal. 2 Vern. 638.

Bills remitted to a factor or banker, while unpaid, are in the nature of goods unsold, and if the factor become bankrupt, must be returned to the principal, subject to such lien as the factor may have thereon. 2 Blac. Rep. 1154.

A factor has a Lien on goods consigned to him, not only for incident charges, but as an item of mutual account, for the general balance due to him, so long as he retains the possession; if he parts with the possession, he parts with his lien. See 1 Burr. 489: 1 Blac. Rep. 104. If he be surety in a bond for his principal, he has a lien on the price of the goods sold by him for his principal to the amount of the sum he is bound for. Coup. 251. A dyer, merely as a manufacturer has not a general lien; but a packer being in the nature of a factor has. 4 Burr. 2214.

A factor has no lien on goods for a general balance, unless they come into his actual possession: and if in consideration of goods being consigned to him he accept bills drawn by the consignor, and pay part of the freight, and become insolvent before the bills are due, and before the goods get into his actual possession; the consignor may stop them in transitu. 1 Term Rep. 119. If a factor accept bills drawn by his principal upon the faith of consignments agreed to be made by the principal to the factor, and both of them become bankrupts before a cargo consigned come into possession of the factor; the factor's assignees have no property in such cargo, and cannot recover the produce of it, against the assignees of the principal, if the latter have sold it, and received the purchase money. 1 Term Rep. 783. See 4 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 47.

The consignor may stop goods in transitu before they get into the hands of the consignee, in case of the insolvency of the consignee; but if the consignee assign the bills of lading to a third person for a valuable consideration, the right of the consignor as against such assignee is divested. There is no distinction between a bill of lading indorsed in blank, and an indorsement to a particular person. 4 Bro. P. C. (8vo. ed.) 57. See 2 Term Rep. 63: 1 H. Blac. Rep. 357: And further as to stopping goods in transitu 2 Term Rep. 674: 3 Term Rep. 465.—See further this Dict. title Merchant.

FACTORAGE, Is the wages or allowance paid and made to a factor by the merchant. The gain of factorage is certain, however the success proves to the merchant; but the commissions and allowances vary according to the customs and distance of the country. in the several places where factors are resident: Lex Mercat. See title Factor.

FACTUM, a man's own act and deed; fact or feat; particularly used in the civil law, for any thing stated and made certain. See Fait.

FACULTY, facultas.] As restrained from the original and active sense, to a particular understanding in law, is used for a privilege granted to a man by favour and indulgence, to do that which by law he ought not to do. And for the granting of these, there is an especial court under the Archbishop of Canterbury, called the Court of the Faculties; and the chief officer thereof the Master of the Faculties; who has power by the Stat. 25 H. 8. cap. 21, to grant dispensations; as to marry persons without the banns first asked, (and every diocesan may make the like grants) to ordain a deacon under age, for a son to succeed the father in his benefice, one to have two, or more benefices incompatible, &c. And in this court are registered the certificates of bishops and noblemen granted to their chaplains, to qualify them for pluralities and non-residence. 4 Inst. 337. See title Chaplain.

FASTING MEN, In Mon. Angl. tom. 1. pag. 100, are rendered to signify vassals: but Cowel thinks they rather mean pledges or bondsmen; which, by the custom of the Saxons, were fast bound to answer for one another's peaceable behaviour. See Festing-men.

FAG, A knot or excrescency in cloth; and in this sense it is used in the statute 4 Ed. 4. cap. 1. The fag-end, signifies that end of a piece of cloth or linen, where the weaver ends his piece, and works up the worst part of his materials.

FAGGOT, A badge wore in the times of popery, by persons who had recanted and abjured what was then adjudged to be heresy: those were condemned not only to the penance of carrying a faggot, as an emblem of what they had merited, to such an appointed place of solemnity; but, for a more durable mark of infamy, they were to have the sign of a faggot embroidered on the sleeve of their upper garment: and if this badge or faggot was at any time left off, it was often alledged as the sign of apostacy.

FAIDA, Malice or deadly feud. Leg. H. 1. c. 88.

FAILURE OF RECORD, Is when an action is brought against a man, who alledges in his plea matter of record in bar of the action, and avers to prove it by the record; but the plaintiff saith, Nul tiel record, viz. denies there is any such record: upon which, the defendant hath day given him by the court to bring it in; and if he fails to do it, then he is said to fail of his record, and the plaintiff shall have judgment to recover. Terms de Ley. In debt upon an escape, the plaintiff declared, that he had obtained a judgment in an inferior court, upon which the defendant was taken, and the sheriff suffered him to escape; the defendant pleaded Nul tiel record, and being at issue, the record was certified at the day; by which it appeared that there were several variances in the continuances and process; but because the plaint, count, and judgment certified, agreed with the plaintiff's declaration, it was held that those variances made no failure of record. Hob. 179.

In Formedon for the manor of Isfield, the defendant pleaded in bar a common recovery of the ſaid manor againſt the donee in tail, who replied Nul tiel record, and the defendant having brought in the record, it appeared that the recovery was of the manor of Iffield; and adjudged, that this being in a common recovery, ſhall be no failure of record for this ſmall variance, but ſhall be amended, being the miſpriſion of the clerk. 5 Rep. 46. And where a fine with proclamations was levied, and upon an iſſue of Nul tiel record, on which it was brought in at the day, tho' the year of the King was left out in the proclamations made in one term, as it was expreſſed in the proclamations of the other two terms, they were held to be right, and the omiſſion no failure of record. Dyer 234. If a judgment, &c. be reverſed for error, Nul tiel record may be pleaded. 8 Rep. 142. And where the tenor only of a record, &c. is brought in, it is a failure of record. Dyer 187.

FAINT-ACTION. Fr. feinte.] A feigned action; ſuch that although the words of the writ are true, yet for certain cauſes the plaintiff hath no title to recover thereby; but a falſe action is properly where the words of the writ are falſe. Co. Litt. 361.

FAINT-PLEADER. A fraudulent, falſe or colluſory manner of pleading to the deceit of a third perſon; againſt which, among other things, was made the Stat. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 19.

FAIR-PLEADER. See title Beau-pleader.

FAIR. Fr. foire, Lat. feriæ, nundinæ.] A ſolemn or greater ſort of market, granted to any town by privilege, for the more ſpeedy and commodious providing of ſuch things as the ſubject needeth; and the utterance of what commodities we abound in above our own uſes and occaſions: and both our Engliſh and the French word ſeems to come from feriæ [feſtivals]; becauſe it is incident to a fair that perſons ſhall be privileged from being moleſted or arreſted in it, for any other debt, or contract than what was contracted in the ſame, or at leaſt was promiſed to be paid there. See Stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 2, made perpetual by 1 R. 3. c. 6: and this Dict. title Courts of Pie-powders. See alſo Stats. 2 E. 3. c. 15: 5 E. 3. c. 5: 27 H. 6. c. 5: 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 7: 18 Eliz. c. 21.

I. The Right to a Fair, and the Manner of holding it.
II. The Duty, Power, and Intereſt of the Owners of Fairs.—How far a Sale in a Fair changes the Property of a Thing therein ſold, See this Dict. title Market.

I. The firſt inſtitution of fairs and markets ſeems plainly to have been for the better regulation of trade and commerce, and that merchants and traders might be furniſhed with ſuch commodities as they wanted, at a particular mart, without that trouble and loſs of time, which muſt neceſſarily attend travelling about from place to place; and therefore as this is a matter of univerſal concern to the commonwealth: ſo it hath always been held, that no perſon can claim a fair or market, unleſs it be by grant from the King, or by preſcription, which ſuppoſes ſuch a grant. 2 Inſt. 220: 3 Mod. 123.

And therefore, if any perſon ſets up any ſuch fair or market, without the King's authority, a quo warranto lies againſt him; and the perſons who frequent ſuch fair, &c. may be puniſhed by fine to the King. 3 Mod. 127.

Alſo it ſeems, that if the King grants a patent for holding a fair or market, without a writ of ad quod damnum executed and returned, that the ſame may be repealed by ſcire facias; for though ſuch fairs and markets are a benefit to the commonwealth; yet too great a number of them may become nuſances to the public, as well as a detriment to thoſe who have more ancient grants. 3 Lev. 222.

Fairs are generally kept once or twice in the year; and it has been obſerved, that fairs were firſt occaſioned by the reſort of people to the feaſt of Dedication, and therefore in moſt places the fairs, by old cuſtom, are on the ſame day with the wake or feſtival of that Saint to whom the church was dedicated; and for the ſame reaſon they were kept in the church-yard, till reſtrained by Stat. 13 E. 1. ſt. 2. c. 6: 2 Inſt. 221. Blount. The Court of Pie-powder is incident to every fair, &c. By Stat. 2 Ed. 3. c. 15, fairs are not to be kept longer than they ought by the lords thereof, on pain of their being ſeized into the King's hands, until ſuch lords have paid a fine for the offence; and proclamation is to be made how long fairs are to continue.—By Stat. 5 E. 3. c. 5, no merchant ſhall ſell any goods or merchandiſe at a fair after the time of the fair is ended, under the penalty of forfeiting double the value of the goods ſold, one fourth part thereof to the proſecutor, and the reſt to the King. Any citizen of London may carry his goods or merchandiſe to any fair or market in England at his pleaſure. See Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 9; and this Dict. title London.

It ſeems clearly agreed, that if a perſon hath a right to a fair or market, and another erects a fair or market ſo near his, that it becomes a nuſance to his fair, &c. that for this detriment and injury done to him, an action on the caſe lies; for it is implied in the King's grant, that it ſhould be no prejudice to another. 2 Rol. Abr. 140.

Alſo, although the new market be held on a different day, yet an action on the caſe lies; for this, by foreſtalling the ancient market, may be a greater injury to the owner, than if held on the ſame day with his. 2 Saund. 172: 1 Mod. 69. See title Market.

If a man hath a fair or market, and a ſtranger diſturbs thoſe who are coming to buy or ſell there, by which he loſes his toll, or receives ſome prejudice in the profits ariſing from his fair, &c. an action on the caſe lies. 1 Rol. Abr. 106: 2 Vent. 26, 28. So if upon a ſale in a fair a ſtranger diſturbs the lord in taking the toll, an action upon the caſe lies for this. 1 Rol. Abr. 106.

The King is the ſole judge where fairs and markets ought to be kept; and therefore it is ſaid, that if he grants a market to be kept in ſuch a place, which happens not to be convenient for the country, yet the ſubjects can go to no other; and if they do, the owner of the ſoil where they meet is liable to an action at the ſuit of the grantee of the market, 3 Mod. 123. But if no place be limited for keeping a fair by the King's grant, the grantees may keep it where they pleaſe, or rather where they can moſt conveniently; and if it be ſo limited, they may keep it in what part of ſuch place they will. 3 Mod. 108.

At what time fairs are to be held, ſee Stat. 27 H. 6. c. 5. & 1 Car. 1. c. 1: 29 Car. 2. c. 7: and this Dict. title Holidays.

II. Owners

II. Owners and governors of fairs are to take care that every thing be ſold according to juſt weight and meaſure; for that and other purpoſes they may appoint a clerk of the fair or market, who is to mark and allow all ſuch weights, and for his duty herein can only take his reaſonable and juſt fees. See 4 Inſt. 274: Moor 523: 1 Salk. 327.

Fairs and markets are ſuch franchiſes as may be forfeited; as if the owners of them hold them contrary to their charter, as by continuing them a longer time than the charter admits, by diſuſer, and by extorting fees and duties where none are due, or more than are juſtly due. 2 Inſt. 220: Finch 164: 3 Mod. 108.

As to their intereſt, it ariſes chiefly from tolls. Toll payable at a fair or market is a reaſonable ſum of money due to the owner of the fair or market, upon ſale of things tollable within the fair or market, or for ſtallage, pickage, or the like. 2 Inſt. 222: 2 Jon. 207.

But this is not incident to a fair or market without ſpecial grant; for where it is not granted, ſuch a fair or market is accounted a free fair or market. 2 Inſt. 220: Cro. Eliz. 559.

Toll is a matter of private benefit to the owner of the fair or market, and not incident to them; therefore if the King grants a fair or market, and grants no toll, the patentee can have none, and ſuch fair or market is counted free. Cro. Eliz. 558: 2 Inſt. 220. S. P.: 2 Lutw. 1336. S. P. reſolved.

Alſo if the King, at the time he grants a fair or market, grants a toll, and the ſame is outrageous and exceſſive, the grant of the toll is void, and the ſame becomes free. 2 Inſt. 220: 2 Lutw. 1336. But the King, after he grants a fair or market, may grant that the patentee may have a reaſonable toll; but this muſt be in conſideration of ſome benefit accruing from it to thoſe who trade and merchandiſe in ſuch fair or market. 2 Inſt. 221.

No toll ſhall be paid for any thing brought to the fair or market, before the ſame is ſold, unleſs it be by cuſtom time out of mind, and upon ſuch ſale the toll is to be paid by the buyer; and therefore my Lord Coke ſays, that a fair or market by preſcription is better than one by grant. 2 Inſt. 221.

And by ſtat. Weſtm. 1. cap. 31. "Touching them that take outrageous toll, contrary to the common cuſtom of the realm in market towns, it is provided, that if any do ſo in the King's town, which is let in fee-farm, the King ſhall ſeize into his own hand the franchiſe of the market; and if it be another's town, and the ſame be done by the lord of the town, the King ſhall do in like manner; and if it be done by a bailiff, or any mean officer, without the commandment of his lord, he ſhall reſtore to the plaintiff as much more, for the outrageous taking, as he had of him, if he carried away his toll, and ſhall have forty days' impriſonment."

But where by cuſtom a toll is due upon the ſale of any goods in a fair or market, and he who ought to pay it refuſes, an action on the caſe lies againſt him. 1 Rol. Abr. 103, 104, 106.

Some perſons however are exempt from payment of toll, and if the King or any of his progenitors have granted to any to be diſcharged of toll, either generally, or ſpecially; this grant is good to diſcharge him of all tolls to the King's own fairs or markets, and of the tolls, which, together with any fair or market have been granted after ſuch grant of diſcharge; but cannot diſcharge tolls formerly due to ſubjects either by grant or preſcription. 2 Inſt. 221.

Alſo the King himſelf ſhall not pay toll for any of his goods; and if any be taken, it is puniſhable within the ſtatute Weſtm. 1. cap. 31: 2 Inſt. 221. So tenants in ancient demeſne are free and quit from all manner of tolls in fairs and markets, whether ſuch tenants hold in fee, or for life, years, or at will. 2 Inſt. 221: 4 Inſt. 269: 1 Rol. Abr. 321.

But this privilege does not extend to him who is a merchant, and gets his living by buying and ſelling, but is annexed to the perſon in reſpect of the land, and to thoſe things which grow and are the produce of the land. F. N. B. 228: 2 Leon. 191: Cro. Eliz. 227: 2 Inſt. 221: 1 Rol. Abr. 321, 2.

Owners of fairs and markets are to appoint toll-takers or book-keepers, on pain of 40 s. and they ſhall enter and give account of horſes ſold, &c. Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 7: 31 Eliz. c. 12. See further titles Toll: Horſes: Market.

FAIT, factum.] A deed or writing, lawfully executed to bind the parties thereto. See title Deed.

FAIT ENROLLE, Fr.] A deed of bargain and ſale, &c. and forging the inrollment of it is a great miſdemeanor, but not forgery within the Stat. 5 Eliz: 1 Keb. 568.

FAITOURS, Fr.] In the ſtatute 7 R. 2. cap. 5, is uſed for evil doers; and may be interpreted idle livers, from faitardiſe, which ſignifies a kind of ſleepy diſeaſe, proceeding from too much ſluggiſhneſs: and in the ſame ſtatute it ſeems to be ſynonimous with vagabonds. Terms de Ley. See titles Poor; Vagrants.

FALANG, A jacket or cloſe coat, Blount.

FALCATURA, One day's mowing of graſs; a cuſtomary ſervice to the lord by his inferior tenants: falcata was the graſs freſh mowed, and laid in ſwathes; and falcator the ſervile tenant performing the labour. Kennet's Gloſſ.

FALDA, A ſheepfold.—Rot. Chart. 6 Hen. 3.

FALDAGE, faldagium.] A privilege which ſeveral lords antiently reſerved to themſelves, of ſetting up folds for ſheep in any fields within their manors, for the better manurance of the ſame; and this was uſually done not only with their own but their tenants' ſheep, which they call fecta faldæ. This faldage is termed in ſome places a fold courſe; and in old charters faldſoca, i. e. libertas faldæ, or faldagii.

FALDÆ CURSUS, A ſheep walk or feed for ſheep. 2 Vent. 139.

FALDFEY, FALD-FEE, A fee or rent paid by ſome cuſtomary tenants for liberty to fold their ſheep upon their own land.

FALDISTOR, Sax.] The higheſt ſeat of a biſhop, incloſed round with a lettice. Cowel.

FALDWORTH, A perſon of age, that he may be reckoned of ſome decennary. Du Freſne.

FALERÆ, Lat. phaleræ.] The tackle and furniture of a cart or wain. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. 256.

FALSE ACTION. If brought againſt one, whereby he is caſt into priſon, and dies pending the ſuit, the law giveth no remedy in this caſe, becauſe the truth or falſhood of the matter cannot appear before it is tried: and if the plaintiff be barred or nonſuited, at Common-law, regularly all the puniſhment is amercement. Jenk. Cent. 161. See Faint Action. But if one commence a bailable action againſt another and hold him to bail thereon, either without a reaſonable cauſe, or for ſomething conſiderable, more than what is bonâ fide due, an action upon the caſe will lie for the vexation and injury. See title Action. II.

FALSE CLAIM. By the foreſt laws, is where a man claims more than is his due, and is amerced and puniſhed for the ſame. A perſon had a grant, by charter, of the tenth of all the veniſon in the foreſt of Lancaſter, viz. In carne tantum ſed non in corio; and becauſe he made a falſe claim, by alledging that he ought to have the tenth of all veniſon within the foreſt, as well in carne, as in corio, therefore he was in miſericordia de decima venationis ſuæ in corio non percipiendo. Manwood, c. 25.

FALSE FORM. In proceedings at law, is aided by a verdict; though not where there is want of certainty, &c. 1 Keb. 734. 876. See titles Amendment: Error.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

FALSUM IMPRISONAMENTUM.] A treſpaſs committed againſt a perſon, by arreſting and impriſoning him without juſt cauſe, contrary to law; or where a man is unlawfully detained without legal proceſs; it is alſo uſed for a writ which is brought for this treſpaſs.

To conſtitute the injury of falſe impriſonment two points are neceſſary: the detention of the perſon and the unlawfulneſs of ſuch detention. Every confinement of the perſon is an impriſonment whether it be in a common priſon, or in a private houſe, or in the ſtocks, or even by forcibly detaining one in the public ſtreets. 2 Inſt. 589. Unlawful or falſe impriſonment conſiſts in ſuch confinement or detention without ſufficient authority: which authority may ariſe either from ſome proceſs from the courts of juſtice, or from ſome warrant from a legal officer having power to commit, under his hand and ſeal, and expreſſing the cauſe of ſuch commitment. 2 Inſt. 46. See this Dict. titles Arreſt; Commitment: Conſtable.—Such authority may alſo ariſe from ſome other ſpecial cauſe; warranted, for the neceſſity of the thing, either by Common or Statute law: as the arreſting of a felon by a private perſon without warrant; the impreſſing of mariners for the public ſervice; or the apprehending waggoners (under Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78,) for miſbehaviour in the publick highways. Falſe impriſonment may alſo ariſe by executing a lawful warrant or proceſs at an unlawful time, as on a Sunday. See titles Arreſt; Sunday.

The means of removing the actual injury of falſe impriſonment are four fold; by writs of mainprize; odio et atia; homine replegiando; and habeas corpus. See this Dict. under thoſe titles. The remedy for a ſatisfaction for the injury is by action of treſpaſs vi et armis uſually called an action of falſe impriſonment; which is generally accompanied with a charge of aſſault and battery alſo: and therein the party ſhall recover damages for the injury he has received.

The moſt atrocious degree of this offence, that of ſending any ſubject of this realm a priſoner into parts beyond the ſeas, whereby he is deprived of the friendly aſſiſtance of the laws to redeem him from ſuch his captivity, is criminally puniſhed with the pains of præmunire, and incapacity to hold any office, without a poſſibility of pardon. Stat. 31 C. 2. c. 2. See this Dict. titles Exile; Habeas corpus.—And by the Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 13, to carry any one by force out of the four Northern counties, or impriſon him within the ſame, in order to ranſom him, or make ſpoil of his perſon or goods, is felony without benefit of clergy in the principals and all acceſſaries before the fact. Inferior degrees of this offence of falſe impriſonment are alſo puniſhable by indictment, and the delinquent may be fined and impriſoned. 4 Comm. 218.

By the ſtatute of Limitations, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, this action muſt be brought within four years; which has been conſtrued to be from the end of any continued impriſonment. Salk. 420.—By Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44, actions againſt juſtices of peace, or conſtables acting under their warrants, muſt be brought within ſix months; and one month's notice of bringing the action muſt be given them; and by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 12, thoſe officers may plead the general iſſue, and give the ſpecial matter in evidence. See this Dict. titles Juſtice: Conſtable: Action.

No action of falſe impriſonment lies againſt a judge of a court of record for any act done by him in the execution of his office, nor for any miſtake of judgment. Salk. 396. See 1 Term Rep.

The King cannot give any power to impriſon, where impriſonment may not be awarded by the Common-law. 2 Brownl. 18: And if a perſon is impriſoned on any by-law of a corporation, &c. it is falſe impriſonment; becauſe a by-law to impriſon is againſt Magna Charta, quod nullus liber homo impriſonetur, &c. 5 Rep. 64. It is the ſame of a cuſtom to impriſon perſons; but it is incident to a court of record to impriſon. 2 Nelſ. Abr. 827.

If a juſtice of peace, &c. commits a perſon without juſt cauſe, it is falſe impriſonment; and a conſtable cannot impriſon a man at his pleaſure, to compel him to do any thing required by law: but is to carry him before a juſtice. 1 Leon. 327.

In falſe impriſonment brought againſt an officer of an inferior court, if he juſtify an arreſt by virtue of their warrant, he muſt intitle the court to juriſdiction, or the action lies againſt him. March. pl. 195. If erroneous proceſs iſſues out of a court that hath juriſdiction of the matter, and the bailiff or officer executes it, whereby the party is impriſoned, the officer ſhall be excuſed in action of falſe impriſonment: but if the court out of which the proceſs iſſues hath no cognizance of the cauſe, it is otherwiſe; for in ſuch caſe the whole proceedings are coram non judice, and the officer will not be excuſed. 10 Rep. 75. See titles Arreſt: Conſtable.

An officer hath a warrant upon a capias ad ſatisfaciend' againſt an earl, or counteſs, &c. who are privileged in their perſons, and he arreſts them: it is ſaid action of falſe impriſonment will not lie againſt the officer, becauſe he is not to examine the judicial act of the court, but to obey. 6 Rep. 56: 10 Rep. 75.

If an arreſt is made by one who is no legal officer, it is falſe impriſonment, for which action lies. Co. Lit. 69. An action of falſe impriſonment lies againſt a bailiff for arreſting a perſon without warrant, though he afterwards receives a warrant: and ſo it is if he arreſt one after the return of the writ is paſt; for it is then without writ. 2 Inſt. 53. If a ſheriff, or any of his bailiffs, arreſts a man out of his county, &c. or after the ſheriff is diſcharged of his office; or a perſon arreſts one on a juſtice's warrant after his commiſſion is determined, &c. it will be falſe impriſonment. Dyer 41. And if the ſheriff, after he hath arreſted a man lawfully, when a legal diſcharge comes to him, as a ſuperſedeas, or the like, do not then diſcharge the party, he may be ſued in this action. 2 R. 1. 12: Fitzh. 253.

In caſe the plaintiff in a ſuit brings an unlawful warrant to a ſheriff, and ſhews him the defendant, requiring him to make the arreſt; or if he bring a good warrant and direct the ſheriff to a wrong man, &c. for this the action of falſe impriſonment will lie againſt both. Bro. Treſp. 59, 307: Faux. Impr. 19: 1 Brownl. 211. If a warrant be granted to arreſt, or apprehend a perſon, where there are ſeveral of the name, and the bailiff or other officer arreſts a wrong perſon, he is liable to action of falſe impriſonment; and he is to take notice of the right party at his peril. Dyer 244: Moor 457.

A man arreſted on a Sunday may bring his action of falſe impriſonment; but one has been refuſed to be releaſed in ſuch a caſe. 5 Mod. 95. See titles Arreſt: Sunday. If a bailiff demand more than his juſt fees, when offered him, and keep a perſon in cuſtody thereupon, it is falſe impriſonment and puniſhable: and if a ſheriff, or gaoler keeps a priſoner in gaol, after his acquittal, for any thing except for fees, it is unlawful impriſonment. 2 Inſt. 482: Wood. 16. If a man falſely impriſons A. B. and the gaoler detains him till he pays ſo much money, he ſhall have action of falſe impriſonment, and taking ſo much money from him againſt ſuch perſon. Mod. Caſ. 179.

Unlawful or falſe impriſonment is ſometimes called dureſs of impriſonment, where one is wrongfully impriſoned 'till he ſeals a bond, &c. 2 Inſt. 482. See title Dureſs.

An impriſonment will be unlawful, and give this action, although the cauſe be good, when he that makes it doth the ſame without any colour of authority; or if he has a colour, yet if he hath no good authority, from the court, &c. or where a court or officer hath power, but do not well make it out; or when the authority is well made forth, and not rightly purſued and executed. 4 Rep. 64: 8 Rep. 67: Dyer 242. And all perſons male or female, that have a hand in a wrong impriſonment, ſhall be ſued in action of falſe impriſonment; and the party grieved may ſue any one of them for it. Co. Lit. 57: Bro. Treſp. 113, 256.

A man under arreſt, or in the ſtocks, &c. is ſaid to be in priſon: And in a common arreſt, where lawful, the officer may make any place his priſon, becauſe the writ commands that Habeas Corpus ejus coram, &c. apud Weſtm. which is a general authority. 1 Salk. 401.

It is not in every caſe where a man is wrongfully impriſoned, that an action vi et armis, for falſe impriſonment will lie, but in ſome caſes, it muſt be an action on the caſe, as where a warrant iſſues againſt a man, without legal cauſe, and he is, under colour of that authority, wrongfully impriſoned, as there was colour of authority, the action muſt be caſe, and not treſpaſs vi et armis, and ſo in ſimilar caſes. J. M.—See title Action.

In criminal caſes, where a man is falſely impriſoned, he may bring a Habeas Corpus, and upon return of the writ, ſetting forth the cauſe of the commitment, if it appears to be againſt law, he ſhall be diſcharged; or he may be bailed, if it be doubtful, &c. 4 Inſt. 182. See titles Habeas Corpus: Impriſonment.

FALSE JUDGMENT, Falſum Judicium.] A writ that lieth where falſe judgment is given in the county-court, court baron, or other courts not of record. F. N. B. 17, 18. See title Error.

A judgment may be falſified, reverſed or avoided without a writ of error for matters foreign to, or debors, the record; that is, not apparent upon the face of it, ſo that they cannot be aſſigned for error in the ſuperior court, which can only judge from what appears in the record itſelf; and therefore if the whole record be not certified, or not timely certified by the inferior court, the party injured thereby, in both civil and criminal caſes, may allege a Diminution of the record, and cauſe it to be rectified. See this Dict. title Diminution. Thus if any judgment whatever be given by perſons who had no good commiſſion to proceed againſt the perſon condemned, it is void; and may be falſified by ſhewing the ſpecial matter without writ of error. As where a commiſſion iſſues to A. and B. and twelve others or any two of them, of which A. or B. ſhall be one, to take and try indictments, and any of the other twelve proceed without the interpoſition or preſence of either A. or B. in this caſe all proceedings, trials, convictions and judgments are void for want of a proper authority in the commiſſioners, and may be falſified upon bare inſpection without the trouble of a writ of error. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 50. § 2. It being a high miſdemeanor in the judges ſo proceeding, and little, if any thing, ſhort of murder in them all, in caſe the perſon ſo attainted be executed and ſuffer death. 4 Comm. 390.

So likewiſe if a man purchaſes land of another, and afterwards the vendor is, either by outlawry or his own confeſſion, convicted and attainted of treaſon or felony previous to the ſale or alienation; whereby ſuch land becomes liable to forfeiture or eſcheat: now upon any trial the purchaſor is at liberty, without bringing any writ of error, to falſify, not only the time of the felony or treaſon ſuppoſed, but the very point of the treaſon or felony itſelf; and is not concluded by the confeſſion or outlawry of the vendor: though the vendor himſelf is concluded, and not ſuffered then to deny the fact which he had by confeſſion or ſlight acknowledged. But if ſuch attainder of the vendor was by verdict, on the oath of his peers, the alienee cannot be received to falſify or contradict the fact of the crime committed; though he is at liberty to prove a miſtake in time: or that the offence was committed after the alienation and not before. 3 Inſt. 231: 1 Hal. P. C. 361.

This writ may be brought on a judgment in a plea, real or perſonal: and for errors in the proceedings of inferior courts, or where they proceed without having juriſdiction, writ of falſe judgment lieth: though the plaintiff aſſign errors in a writ of falſe judgment, he ſhall not ſay,

In

In hoc erratum eſt, &c. but unde queritur diverſimodo ſibi falſum judicium factum fuiſſe judicium in hoc, &c. Moor 73: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 829. If a writ of falſe judgment abate for any fault in the writ, the plaintiff ſhall not have Scire facias ad audiend' errores, upon the record certified, becauſe it comes without an original: but if the plaintiff dies, and falſe judgment is given in the inferior court, his heir ſhall have a Sci. fac. ad audiend' error. againſt him who recovered upon that record which is removed into C. B; and where the plaintiff in a writ of falſe judgment is nonſuit, it was formerly a queſtion, whether the other party ſhall ſue execution upon this record ſo removed againſt the plaintiff, without ſuing out a Scire facias; but it has been adjudged, that he may do it, Hil. 23 Hen. 6: New Nat. Br. 39.

When a record is removed into C. P. by writ of falſe judgment, if the party alledges variance between the record removed, and that on which judgment was given, the trial ſhall be by thoſe who were preſent in court when the record was made up. 2 Lutw. 957: Stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 4. A man ſhall not have a writ of falſe judgment but in a court where there are ſuitors; for if there be no ſuitors, there the record cannot be certified by them. New Nat. Br. 40. Where falſe judgment is given on a writ of juſticies, directed to the ſheriff, the party grieved ſhall have a writ of falſe judgment; although the judgment be for debt, or treſpaſs above the ſum of 40 s. Ibid.

Where a record of a judgment in the county-court was vicious, and the judgment reverſed in C. B. the ſuitors were ordered to be amerced a mark, and the county clerk fined 5 l. And if a plaintiff in an inferior court declare for more than 40 s. Judgment ſhall be reverſed by writ of falſe judgment: but where damages are laid under that ſum, coſts may make it amount to more. 1 Mod. 249: 2 Mod. 102, 206.

Upon falſe judgment before bailiffs, or others who hold plea by preſcription, in every ſum in debt by bill before them a party ſhall not have a writ of falſe judgment; but a writ of error thereupon. M. 4 E. 4. For defaults of tenants for life, in writs of right, &c. writ of falſe judgment lies by him in reverſion: and this writ may be brought againſt a ſtranger to the judgment, if he be tenant of the land. A judgment ſhall be intended good till reverſed by writ of falſe judgment, &c. See titles Accedas ad Curiam; Attaint.

FALSE LATIN. Before the ſtatute directing law proceedings to be in Engliſh, if a Latin word was ſignificant though not good Latin, yet an indictment, declaration, or fine, ſhould not be made void by it: but if the word was not Latin, nor allowed by the law, and it were in a material point, it made the whole vicious. 5 Rep. 121: 2 Nelſ. 830.

FALSE NEWS. Spreading falſe news, to make diſcord between the King and nobility, or concerning any great man of the realm, is puniſhed by Common-law, with fine and impriſonment, which is confirmed by ſtatutes Weſtm. 1, 3 Ed. 1. c. 34: 2 Rich. 2. ſtat. 1. c. 5: 12 Ric. 2. c. 11. See 2 Inſt. 226: 3 Inſt. 198.

FALSE OATH, See title Perjury.

FALSE PLEA. In præcipe quod reddat againſt two, if the one comes and takes the intire tenancy upon him, upon which they are at iſſue, and it is found againſt the tenant, by this he ſhall loſe his moiety; for it is found againſt the tenant for his part, becauſe it is tried per pais upon iſſue; contra, of plea to the writ by demurrer. Note the difference. Br. Peremptory, pl. 73. cites 8 Ed. 3. 17.

Plaintiff in a ſuit in Chancery againſt an executor, ſhall have the ſame advantage thereof, as if the ſame plea were found falſe by verdict at law; and ſhall have all the ſame conſequences here, as follow on a falſe plea at law to all intents. 2 Cha. Caſ. 201.—See titles Plea, and Pleading.

FALSE PROPHECY. See title Prophecy.

FALSE RETURN. On a falſe return by a mayor, &c. to a mandamus, or by a ſheriff, &c. to a writ, a ſpecial action on the caſe will lie. See title Action.

FALSE TOKENS. Where perſons get money or goods into their hands, by forged letters, or other counterfeit means, they are puniſhable by impriſonment, &c. See title Cheats.

FALSE VERDICT. A writ of attaint lieth, to inquire whether a jury of twelve men have given a falſe verdict; that ſo the judgment following thereupon may be reverſed. It is allowed in almoſt every action except in a writ of right. See titles Attaint: Jury: Trial.

TO FALSIFY. To prove a thing to be falſe. Perk. 383.

FALSIFYING A RECORD. A perſon that purchaſes land of another, who is afterwards outlawed of felony, &c. may falſify the record, not only as to the time wherein the felony is ſuppoſed to have been committed, but alſo as to the point of the offence: but where a man is found guilty by verdict, a purchaſor cannot falſify as to the offence; though he may for the time, where the party is found guilty generally in the indictment, &c. becauſe the time is not material upon evidence. And any judgment given by perſons who had no good commiſſion to proceed againſt the perſon condemned, may be falſified by ſhewing the ſpecial matter, without writ of error. Alſo where a man is attainted of treaſon or felony, if he be afterwards pardoned by parliament, the attainder may be falſified by him or his heir, without plea. 2 Hawk. P. C.

FALSIFYING A RECOVERY. Iſſue in tail may falſify a recovery ſuffered by tenants for life, &c. And it has been held, that a perſon may falſify a recovery had by the iſſue in tail, where an eſtate-tail is before bound by a fine. 2 Nelſ. Abr. 831. But where there is tenant for life, remainder in tail, and reverſion in fee, tenant for life ſuffers a common recovery, in which he in remainder is vouched, and the uſes declared to him, who had the remainder in tail; adjudged, that by the recovery all remainders and reverſions are barred, and that they could not falſify this recovery. 10 Rep. 43.

He in reverſion ſuffered a common recovery, and declared the uſes; his heir ſhall not falſify it by pleading that his father had nothing at the time of the recovery, becauſe he is eſtopped to ſay he is not tenant to the præcipe. Godb. 189. An infant brought an aſſiſe in B. R. pending which action the tenant brought an aſſiſe againſt the infant in C. B. for the ſame land, and had judgment by default, which he pleaded in bar to the aſſiſe brought by the infant; who ſet forth all this matter in his replication, and that the demandant, at the time of the ſecond writ brought, was tenant of the land, and prayed that he might falſify this recovery; and it was held that he might becauſe he could not have writ of error, or attaint. Godb. 271: Cro. Eliz. 284. It has been determined, that a recovery covery is not ſo firm, but it may be falſified in point of recovery of the thing itſelf, between the ſame parties. Ibid.—See titles Fine and Recovery.

FALSIFYING A VERDICT. Where in any real action, there is a verdict againſt tenant in tail, the iſſue can never falſify ſuch verdict in the point directly tried; but only in a ſpecial manner, as by ſaying that ſome evidence was omitted, &c. 2 Ld. Raym. 1050. See titles Trial: New Trial: Jury: Verdict.

FALSONARIUS. A forger.—Hoveden 424.

FALSO RETURNO BREVIUM. A writ that lieth againſt the ſheriff who hath execution of proceſs, for falſe returning of writs. Reg. Jud. 43.

FAMILIA. Signifies all the ſervants belonging to a particular maſter; but in another ſenſe it is taken for a portion of land, ſufficient to maintain one family: It is ſometimes mentioned by our writers to be a Hide of land, which is alſo called a Manſe; and ſometimes Carucata or a plough-land. Blount.

FANATICKS. Perſons ſuppoſing themſelves inſpired. A general name for Quakers, Anabaptiſts, and other ſectaries and diſſenters from the church of England. See Stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 6.

FANATIO, Menſis Fanationis.] The fawning ſeaſon or fence-months in foreſts. Kennet's Gloſſ. See title Fence-Month.

FARANDMAN. Sax.] A traveller or merchant ſtranger, to whom by the laws of Scotland juſtice ought to be done with all expedition, that his buſineſs or journey be not hindered. Skene c. 104.

FARDEL OF LAND. Fardella Terræ.] Is generally accounted the fourth part of a Yard Land; but according to Noy, (in his Compleat Lawyer, p. 57,) It is an eighth part only, for there he ſays that two fardels of land make a nook, and four nooks a yard land.

FARDING DEAL. Quadrantata terræ.] is the fourth part of an acre: and beſides quadrantata terræ, we read of obolata, denariata, ſolidata, and librata terræ, which probably ariſe in proportion of quantity from the farding-deal, as an half-penny, penny, ſhilling or pound in money, riſe in value; and then muſt obolata be half an acre, denariata an acre, ſolidata twelve acres, and librata terræ twelve ſcore acres of land: but ſome hold obolata to be but half a perch, and denariata a perch; and there is mentioned viginti libratas terræ vel redditus, in Reg. Orig. 94, 248, whereby it ſeems that librata terræ is ſo much as yields 20 s. per annum. F. N. B. 87. Spelm. Gloſſ.

FARE. Sax.] A voyage or paſſage by water; but more commonly the money paid for ſuch paſſage, in which ſenſe it is now uſed. See Stat. 3 P. & M. cap. 16. So for what we pay an hackney or ſtage coachman for our carriage.

FARINAGIUM. Toll of meal or flour.—Ordin. Inſul. de Jerſey 17 Edw. 2.

FARLEU. Is money paid by tenants in the Weſt of England in lieu of a heriot: and in ſome manors in Devonſhire, farleu is diſtinguiſhed to be the beſt goods; as heriot is the beſt beaſt, payable at the death of a tenant. Cowel.

FARLINGARII. Whoremongers and adulterers. Sax.

FARM, OR FERM. Lat. firma, from the Sax. feorme, i. e. Food; and feorman to feed or yield victuals.] A large meſſuage and land, taken by leaſe under a certain yearly rent, payable by the tenant; and in former days, about the time of William the Firſt, called the Conqueror, theſe rents were reſerved to the lords in victuals and other neceſſaries ariſing from the land; but afterwards in the reign of King Hen. 1. were altered and converted into money. Terms de Ley. A farm is moſt properly the chief meſſuage in a village; and it is a collective word, conſiſting of divers things gathered in one, as a meſſuage, land, meadow, paſture, wood, common, &c. Locare ad firmam is to let or ſet to farm; and the reaſon of it may be in reſpect of the firm or ſure hold the tenants thereof have above tenants at will. A farm in Lancaſhire is called Ferm holt; in the North a Tack; and in Eſſex a Wike: And ferm is taken in various ways. Plowd. 195.

FARMER. He that holds a farm, or is tenant or leſſee thereof. Terms de Ley. And it is ſaid generally every leſſee for life or years, although it be but of a ſmall houſe and land, is called Farmer, as he is that occupieth the farm: as this word implies no myſtery, except it be that of huſbandry, huſbandman is the proper addition of a farmer. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 115. By ſtatute, no parſon or ſpiritual perſon may take farms or leaſes of land, on pain of forfeiting 10 l. per month, &c. See title Clergyman.—No perſon whatſoever ſhall take above two farms together, and they to be in the ſame pariſh, under the penalty of 3 s. 4 d. a week. Stats. 25 H. 8. c. 13: 32 H. 8. c. 28. ſ. 4.

FARTHING. Was the fourth part of a Saxon penny, as it is now of the Engliſh penny.

FARTHING OF GOLD. quaſi fourth thing.] A coin uſed in ancient times, containing in value the fourth part of a Noble. It is mentioned in the ſtat. 9 H. 5. cap. 7, where it is ordained, that there ſhall be good and juſt weight of the noble, half noble, and farthing of gold, &c.

FARTHING OF LAND. Seems to differ from Farthing-deal; for it is a large quantity of land: in a ſurvey book of the manor of Weſt Slapton in Com. Devon is entered thus: A. B. holds ſix farthings of land at 12 l. per annum.

FARUNDEL of land. See title Farding-deal.

FASIUS. Fr. Faiſſeau.] A faggot of wood. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 238.

FAST-DAYS, Are days of faſting and humiliation, appointed to be obſerved by publick authority. There are fixed days of faſting injoined by our Church, at certain times in the year, mentioned in ancient ſtatutes, particularly the 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 19. and 5 El. c. 5. And by Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 14, the 30th of January is ordained to be a day of faſting and repentance, for the murder of King Charles I. Other days of faſting which are not fixed, are occaſionally appointed by the King's Proclamation. Though abſtinence from eating of fiſh is required on thoſe days, by our laws; it is made penal to affirm that any forbearing of fleſh, or eating of fiſh is neceſſary to ſalvation. 1 Hawk. P. C. See Embring Days.

FASTERMANS, among the Saxons were pledges. Leg. Ed. Confeſſ. cap. 38. Vide Fæſtingmen.

FAT, VAT, OR WATE, Is a large wooden veſſel uſed by maltſters and brewers, for meaſuring of malt with expedition, containing eight buſhels or a quarter. Stats. 1 H. 5. c. 10: 11 H. 6. c. 8. It is alſo a veſſel made uſe of by brewers to run their wort into, and by others for the making of ſalt at Droitwich in the county of Worceſter.

FATUA MULIER, A whore. Du Freſne.

FAUSETUM, A faucet, muſical pipe or flute.

FAUTORS,

FAUTORS, Favourers or ſupporters of others; abettors of crimes, &c.

FEAL. The tenants by knight ſervice did ſwear to their lords to be feal and leal, i. e to be faithful and loyal. Spelm. de Parliament, 59. See Fealty.

FEALTY, Fidelitas, Fr. Faulté, i. e. Fidei, fidei, obſequii et ſervitii ligamen, quo particulariter vaſſalus domino aſtringitur. Spelm.] The oath taken at the admittance of every tenant, to be true to the lord of whom he holds his land: and he that holds lands by the oath of fealty, has it in the freeſt manner; becauſe all perſons that have fee, hold per filem et fiduciam, that is, by fealty at leaſt. Smith de Repub. Ang. lib. 3. c. 8. And fealty is incident to all manner of tenures except frankalmoigne and tenancy at will. See title Tenures; I. 6, et paſſim. This fealty, which is uſed in other nations, as well as England, at the firſt creation of it bound the tenant to fidelity; the breach whereof was the loſs of his fee.

It is uſually mentioned with homage, but differs from it; being an obligation permanent, which binds for ever: and theſe differ in the manner of the ſolemnity, for the oath of homage is taken by the tenant kneeling; but that of fealty is taken ſtanding, and includes the ſix following things, viz.

1. Incolume, that he do no bodily injury to the lord. 2. Tutum, that he do no ſecret damage to him in his houſe, or any thing which is for his defence. 3. Honeſtum, that he do him no injury in his reputation. 4. Utile, that he do no damage to him in his poſſeſſions. 5. Facile, and 6. Poſſibile, that he render it eaſy for the lord to do any good, and not make that impoſſible to be done, which was before in his power to do: all which is compriſed in Leg. Hen. 1. c. 5.

Fealty has likewiſe been divided into general and ſpecial; general, to be performed by every ſubject to his prince; and ſpecial, required only of ſuch as in reſpect of their fee, are tied by oaths to their lords. Grand Cuſtum. Normand.

By ſtat. 17 Ed. 2. ſt. 2, the form of this oath is appointed, and as now obſerved, it runs as follows, viz. I A. B. will be to you my lord C. true and faithful, and bear to you fealty and faith for the lands and tenements which I hold of you: and I will truly do and perform the cuſtoms and ſervices that I ought to do to you. So help me God. The oath is adminiſtered by the lord or his ſteward; the tenant holding his right hand upon the book, and repeating after the lord, &c. the words of the oath; and then kiſſing the book. Terms de Ley.

The law with reſpect to fealty continues the ſame as when Lord Coke wrote; (See 1 Inſt. 686. in note:) for it does not appear to be varied by Stat. 12 C. 2. c. 24, or any other ſtatute made ſince: but it is no longer the practice to exact the performance of fealty. In the caſe of copyholders it is become a thing of courſe on admitting them to enter a reſpite of fealty; but with reſpect to ſuch as hold by other tenures it is never thought of. In Wood's Inſt. 183, it is ſaid that leſſees for life or years ought to do fealty to their lords for the lands they hold.—However it may not be amiſs to remember that the title to fealty ſtill remains; that it is due from all tenants except tenants in frankalmoigne, and ſuch as hold at will or by ſufferance, and if required muſt be iterated at every change of the lord; it differing in this reſpect from homage, which except in ſpecial caſes is only due once; that the receiving of it is at leaſt attended with the advantage of preſerving the memory of tenures; which though perhaps ſufficiently done in the caſe of copyholds by the admittances and by the payment of fines and quit-rents and continual render of other ſervices, may be very neceſſary in caſes where fealty is the only ſervice due; and laſtly, that the law for compelling the performance of fealty has provided the remedy by diſtreſs, which is an inſeparable incident to all ſervices due by tenure, and, in the caſe of fealty cannot as it is ſaid, be exceſſive. See 1 Inſt. 68 a: 103 b: 104 a b: 152 b: 2 Inſt. 107: 4 Co. 8, b.

FEASTS, Anniverſary times of feaſting and thankſgiving, as Chriſtmas, Eaſter, Whitſuntide, &c. The four feaſts which our laws eſpecially take notice of, are the feaſts of the annunciation of the bleſſed Virgin Mary, of the nativity of St. John the Baptiſt, of St. Michael the Archangel, and of St. Thomas the Apoſtle; (or in lieu of the laſt, the birth of our Lord Chriſt,) on which quarterly days, rent on leaſes is uſually reſerved to be paid. See Stats. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 3: 12 Car. 2. c. 30.

FEE; and FEE-SIMPLE.—Tenant in fee-ſimple, is he which has lands or tenements to hold to him and his heirs for ever. Litt. c. 1. § 1.

The word fee is ſometimes uſed for the compaſs or circuit of a lordſhip or manor, as we ſay the lord of the fee, &c. as well as the particular eſtate of the tenant: and alſo for a perpetual right incorporeal; as to have the keeping of priſons, &c. in fee. Bract. Lib. 2. c. 5: Old Nat. Br. 41. And when a rent or annuity is granted to one and his heirs, it is a fee perſonal. Co. Lit. 1, 2.

As to the general nature and origin of eſtates in fee-ſimple, and the other eſtates ariſing therefrom, See this Dict. titles Eſtate; Tenure, III. 5. It is therefore in this place ſufficient to inquire,

I. In what Things one may have a Fee-ſimple.
II. By what Means ſuch an Eſtate may be acquired.
III. By what Words it may be created.

I. A man may have an eſtate, in fee-ſimple of all lands or tenements or other things real. Co. Lit. 1 b. Of lordſhips, advowſons, commons, eſtovers, and all hereditaments. Co. Lit. 4 a. So he may have a fee-ſimple in things mixed; as in franchiſes, liberties, &c. Co. L. 2 a.

So if a man grants to another and his heirs all woods, underwoods, timber-trees or others in ſuch a part of a foreſt, ſaving the ſoil; the grantee has a fee to take in alieno ſolo. R. 8 Co. 137 b.

So, in things perſonal; as in annuity. Co. Lit. 2 a. In a dignity granted to him and his heirs. Co. Lit. 2. a. In a ſwan-mark. 7 Co. 17. In a part or ſhare of the New River water. Ca. Parl. 207.

So, in the patronage of an hoſpital, or other thing created de novo, in which there was not a precedent eſtate, a man may have a fee to him and his heirs, qualified in a particular manner: as if a Queen conſort inſtitutes an hoſpital, and reſerves the patronage ſibi & reginis Angliæ ſuccedentibus. Ca. Ch. 214.

But in eſtates in eſſe before ſuch deſultory inheritance it cannot be: as the dutchy of Cornwall limited to the prince & filiis regis Angliæ primogenitis, ſhall not be good, except when limited by act of parliament. 8 Co. 16.

II. A

II. A man may take a fee by deſcent or by purchaſe.

In what manner a man may take by deſcent, ſee under title Deſcent.

With reſpect to purchaſers, it is to be noted, that ſome are incapable of purchaſing.

An alien cannot purchaſe any lands in England. Vaugh. 227, 291: 7 Co. 16; 17, 18: Dyer, 2. pl. 8. See Alien.

All perſons attainted of treaſon or felony are incapable of purchaſing. 2 New Abridg. 249: Co. Lit. 8. a. See Dig. Feud. lib. 2. tit. 23, 24: Vigellius 242, 350: Spel. Gloſſ. 214, 215.

If a man be attainted of felony, and after purchaſe land, and dies, the King ſhall have it by his prerogative, and not the lord of the fee; becauſe his perſon being forfeited to the King, he cannot purchaſe but for the King. Co. Lit. 2 b.

A monſter not having human ſhape cannot purchaſe or inherit, but an hermaphrodite ſhall inherit or purchaſe ſecundum prævalentiam ſexûs incaleſcentis; one born deaf and dumb may inherit; ſo may one born deaf, dumb and blind, becauſe it is for their advantage; but they cannot contract, becauſe they cannot underſtand the ſigns of contracting; an infant, an ideot, and a perſon of non-ſane memory may inherit, becauſe the law, in compaſſion to their natural infirmities, preſumes them capable of property; ſo alſo an infant or a perſon of non-ſane memory may purchaſe, becauſe it is intended for his benefit, and the freehold is in him till he diſagree thereto, becauſe an agreement is preſumed, it being for their benefit, and becauſe the freehold cannot be in the grantor, contrary to his own act, nor can be in abeyance, for then a ſtranger would not know againſt whom to demand his right; if at full age, or after recovery of his memory they agree thereto, they cannot avoid it; but if they die during minority or lunacy, the heirs may avoid it; for they ſhall not be ſubject to the contracts of perſons who wanted capacity to contract; ſo, if after his memory recovered, the lunatick or perſon non compos die without agreement to the purchaſe, their heirs may avoid it. Co. Lit. 2. 8: 2 Vent. 303. See title Eſtate.

A feme covert is capable of purchaſing; for ſuch an act does not make the property of the huſband liable to any diſadvantage, nor does it ſuppoſe a ſeparate will or power of contracting in the wife; but here the will of the wife is ſuppoſed the mind of the huſband, (he not objecting,) ſince no man is ſuppoſed not to aſſent to that which is for his benefit; but in this caſe the huſband may diſagree, and it ſhall avoid the purchaſe. Co. Lit. 3 a. See title Baron and Feme.

By the ſtat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 4, Papiſts are diſabled from purchaſing lands, &c. See title Papiſt.

Perſons capable of purchaſing may gain a fee-ſimple by feoffment; or by fine, or common recovery; which are of the nature of a feoffment upon record; or by grant, or by exchange, releaſe, or confirmation, which are in the nature of grant; or by bargain and ſale; or by covenant to ſtand ſeiſed; or by deviſe. See title Eſtate.

So a man may gain a fee by wrong; as by diſſeiſin, abatement, or intruſion. See thoſe titles.

III. It is the word heirs makes the inheritance; and a man cannot have a greater eſtate. Lit. 1. To have fee-ſimple implies, that it is without limitation to what heirs, but to heirs generally: though it may be limited by act of parliament. 4 Inſt. 206. If one give or grant land to J. S. and his heirs; and if he die without heirs, that J. D. ſhall have it to him and his heirs: by this J. S. hath a fee ſimple, and J. D. will have no eſtate. Dyer 4, 33. This means by parol, with livery and ſeiſin, or by deed, &c. but not by will.

Where land is given or granted by fine, deed or will, in poſſeſſion, reverſion, or remainder, to another and his heirs; it will be a fee ſimple. Plowd. 134. And if land be granted to a man and his heirs, habendum to him for life only, and livery of ſeiſin is made; it is a fee-ſimple eſtate, becauſe a fee is expreſſed in the grant. 2 Rep. 23.

A leaſe is granted to one for a term of years, and after that the leſſee ſhall have the land to him and his heirs by the rent of 10 l. a year; if the grantor make livery upon it, 'tis a fee-ſimple: otherwiſe but for years. Co. Lit. 217. Where lands are granted to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, the remainder to the right heirs of A. here A. hath a fee ſimple. 20 Hen 6. 35: Bro. Eſt. 34, 35. A gift or grant to a man's wife during life, after to him in tail, and after to his right heirs; he will have a fee-ſimple eſtate. 2 Rep. 91.

If lands are granted to a man and his ſucceſſors, this creates no fee-ſimple: but if ſuch a grant be made to a corporation, it is a fee-ſimple; and in caſe of a ſole corporation, as a biſhop, parſon, &c. a fee-ſimple is to them and their ſucceſſors. Co. Lit. 8. b: Wood 119. An eſtate granted to a perſon, to hold to him for ever, or to him and his aſſigns for ever, is only an eſtate for life; the word heirs being wanted to make it fee-ſimple: but in wills, which are more favoured than grants, the fee ſimple and inheritance may paſs without the word heirs. Co. Lit. 19, 9.

And by deed of feoffment a fee-ſimple may be created, which would be an eſtate-tail by will; as where lands are given to another, and his heirs male, &c. without the word body. Hob 32. A gift to a man and his children, and their heirs, is a fee-ſimple to all that are living. Co. Lit. 8: Lit. Rep. 6.

A feoffment to B. & heredibus, without ſaying ſuis, gives him a fee-ſimple. Co. Lit. 8 b. So to a ſon and the heirs of his father. Semb. Co. Lit. 220. b. So to B. & liberis ſuis and their heirs; if he has iſſue, it gives them a joint eſtate in fee. Co. Lit. 9 a. So to B. heredibus & ſucceſſoribus ſuis, gives a fee. Co. Lit. 9 a.

So a grant to the King in perpetuum gives him a fee, without the words, his heirs or ſucceſſors, for he never dies. Co. Lit 9 b. So a feoffment to a corporation aggregate in perpetuum gives a fee; for it never dies. Co. Lit. 9 b: 1 Rol. 832. l. 55.

Or, to a corporation ſole, to be held in frankalmoigne. Co. Lit. 9 b: 1 Roll. 833. l 5. So if A. re-enfeoffs B. adeo plené as B. enfeoffed him, he has a fee without the word, heirs. Co. Lit. 9 b.—This muſt mean where A. had an eſtate in fee of the feoffment of B 1 Rol. 833. l. 12. So a grant to the church of B. gives a fee, without the word, heirs or ſucceſſors. 1 Rol. 833. l. 3.

And a limitation to the right heirs of B. gives a fee, without the words, and their heirs. 1 Rol. 133 l. 16. So a fee may be given without the words, his heirs, by fine ſur conuzance de droit come ceo, &c. Co. Lit. 9 b. or by a common recovery. Co. Lit. 9 b.

So a fee paſſes without the words, his heirs, where a man gives land with his daughter, &c. in frankmarriage.

Co. Lit. 9 b. If a parcener, or joint-tenant releaſes to his companion. Co. Lit. 9 b. If the lord, &c. releaſes to the tertenant; which enures by way of extinguiſhment. Co. Lit. 9 b. If a man releaſes a mere right; as where a diſſeiſſee releaſes to the diſſeiſſor all his right. Co. Lit. 9 b.

So, if a rent be granted upon partition, for owelty (or equality) of partition. Co. Lit. 9, 10. So if a peer be ſummoned to parliament by writ, he has a fee in his dignity, without the word heirs. Co. Lit. 9 b. So, by the foreſt law, if the King at a juſtice ſeat, grants to another an aſſart in perpetuum, without more, he has a fee. Co. Lit. 10 a. So, by cuſtom, a grant of a copyhold, ſibi & ſuis, or ſibi & aſſignatis, may give the inheritance. 4 Co. 29 b.

A fee ſimple determinable upon a contingency, is a fee to all intents; though not ſo durable as abſolute fee. Vaugh. 273. But ſee title Executory Deviſe.

In pleading eſtates in fee-ſimple, they may be alledged generally; but the commencement of eſtates-tail, and other particular eſtates, muſt regularly be ſhewn. Co. Lit. 303. The fee-ſimple eſtate, being the chief and moſt excellent; he who hath it in lands or tenements may give, grant, or charge the ſame by deed or will at his pleaſure; or he may make waſte or ſpoil upon it: And if he bind himſelf and his heirs to warranty, or for money by obligation, or otherwiſe, and leave ſuch land to the heir, it ſhall be charged with warranty and debts: Alſo the wife of a man that is ſeiſed of ſuch an eſtate, ſhall be endowed; and the huſband of a woman having this eſtate, ſhall be tenant by the curteſy. Co. Lit. 273: Dyer 330. Perk. § 236.

Though fee-ſimple is the moſt ample eſtate of inheritance, it is ſubject to many incumbrances; as judgments, ſtatutes, mortgages, fines, jointures, dower, &c. And there is a fee-ſimple conditional, where the eſtate is defeaſible by not performing the condition; and a qualified fee-ſimple, which may be defeated by a limitation, &c. This is called a baſe fee, upon which no reverſion or remainder can be expectant. Co. Lit. 18: 10 Rep. 97.

FEE-TAIL. See title Tail.

FEE FARM, Feodi Firma.] Or fee-farm rent; is when the lord, upon creation of the tenancy, reſerves to himſelf and his heirs, either the rent for which it was before let to farm, or was reaſonably worth, or at leaſt a fourth part of the value; without homage, fealty, or other ſervices, beyond what are eſpecially compriſed in the feoffment. 2 Inſt. 44. By Fitzherbert, a third part of the yearly value of the land may be appointed for the rent, where lands are granted in fee-farm, &c. F. N. B. 110. And Lord Coke ſays, fee-farm rents may be one half, a third, or fourth part of the value. Co. Lit. 143. See 2 Comm. 43: Dyer 627, in note, and the notes to 1 Inſt. 143.

Theſe fee farm rents ſeem to be more or leſs, according to the conditions or conſideration of the purchaſe of the lands out of which they are iſſuing. It is the nature of fee farm, that if the rent be behind and unpaid for the ſpace of two years, then the feoffor or his heirs may bring an action to recover the lands, &c. Brit. c. 66. num. 4. See title Ceſſavit.

Feodi firma appellatur, cum quis, ex dono vel conceſſione alterius, prædia tenuerit ſibi et hæredibus ſuis, reddendo vel dimidiam, vel tertiam, vel ad minus quartam partem veri valoris. Tenens hujuſmodi ad nulla ſervitia obligatur, niſi quæ in ipſâ Chartâ continentur: exceptâ fidelitate, quæ omnibus tenuris incumbit. Spelm. Gloſs. 221.

FEE-FARM RENTS OF THE CROWN. The fee farm rents remaining to the Kings of England from their ancient demeſnes, were many of them alienated from the crown in the reign of King Charles II. By Stats. 22 Car. 2. c. 6: 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 24, (explained by Stat. 10 An. c. 18,) the King was enabled by letters-patent to grant fee-farm rents due in right of his crown, or in right of his dutchies of Lancaſter and Cornwall, except quit-rents, &c. to truſtees to make ſale thereof, and the truſtees were to convey the ſame by bargain and ſale to purchaſers, &c. who may recover the ſame as the King might. But it has been obſerved, that men were ſo very doubtful of the title to alienations of this nature, that while theſe rents were expoſed to ſale for ready money, ſcarce any would deal for them, and they remained unſold: but what made men earneſt to buy them, was the hope upon ſome of his Majeſty's other payments, which occaſioned perſons to reſort to this as the moſt eligible in the preſent juncture: No tenant in tail of any of the ſaid rents is enabled to bar the remainder. FEES, Certain perquiſites allowed to officers in the adminiſtration of juſtice, as a recompence for their labour and trouble; aſcertained either by acts of parliament, or by ancient uſage, which gives them an equal ſanction with an act of parliament. 2 New Abr. 463.

I. In what Caſes Fees are due.
II. At what Time they may be demanded.

I. At common law no officer, whoſe office related to the adminiſtration of juſtice, could take any reward for doing his duty, but what he was to receive from the King. Co. Lit. 368: 2 Inſt. 176, 208, 9.

And this fundamental maxim of the common law is confirmed by Weſtm. 1. cap. 26. which enacts, "That no ſheriff, or other King's officer, ſhall take any reward to do his office, but ſhall be paid of that which they take of the King; and that he who ſo doth ſhall yield twice as much, and ſhall be puniſhed at the King's pleaſure."

This ſtatute comprehends eſcheators, coroners, bailiffs, gaolers, the King's clerk of the market, aulnager, and other inferior miniſters and officers of the King, whoſe offices do any way concern the adminiſtration or execution, of juſtice. 2 Inſt. 209.

And ſo much hath this law been thought to conduce to the honour of the King and welfare of the ſubject, that all preſcriptions whatſoever, which have been contrary to it, have been holden void; as where by preſcription the clerk of the market claimed certain fees for the view and examination of all weights and meaſures, and it was held merely void. 4 Inſt. 274: Moor 523: 2 Inſt. 209: 2 Rol. Abr. 226.

But it hath been holden, that the fee of 20*d.* commonly called the bar fee, which hath been taken time out of mind, by the ſheriff, of every priſoner who is acquitted; and alſo the fee of one penny, which was claimed by the coroner of every viſne, when he came before the juſtices in eyre, are not within the meaning of the ſtatute, becauſe they are not demanded by the ſheriff or coroner for doing any thing relating to their offices, but claimed as perquiſites of right belonging to any of them. 2 Inſt. 210: Staun. P. C. 49.

Alſo it is holden by Lord Coke, that within the words of the ſtatute 34 Ed. 1. which are, "No tallage or aid ſhall be taken or levied by us or our heirs in our realm, without the good will and aſſent of archbiſhops, biſhops, earls, barons, knights, burgeſſes, and other freemen of the land;" no new offices can be erected with new fees, or old offices with new fees; for that is a tallage upon the ſubject, which cannot be done without common aſſent by act of parliament. 2 Inſt. 533.

Yet it is holden, that an office erected for the public good, though no fee is annexed to it, is a good office; and that the party, for the labour and pains which he takes in executing it, may maintain a quantum meruit, if not as a fee, yet as a competent recompence for his trouble. Moor 808.

All fees allowed by acts of parliament become eſtabliſhed fees; and the ſeveral officers intitled to them may maintain action of debt for them. 2 Inſt. 210. All ſuch fees as have been allowed by the courts of juſtice to their officers, as a recompence for their labour and attendance, are eſtabliſhed fees: and the parties cannot be deprived of them without an act of parliament. Co. Lit. 368: Prec. Chan. 551.

Where a fee is due by cuſtom, ſuch cuſtom, like all others, muſt be reaſonable; and therefore where a perſon libelled in the ſpiritual court for a burying fee due to him for every one who died in his pariſh, though buried in another; the court held this unreaſonable, and a prohibition was granted. Hob. 175: 1 Rol. Abr. 557, 559. S. C. adjudged.

The plaintiff brought an action on the caſe for fees due to him as Uſher of the Black Rod, and obtained a verdict. Stran. 747. No fee ſhall be taken for a report upon a reference from any court. St. 1 Jac. 1. c. 10.—Certain fees of ſheriffs ſettled. St. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. See title Sheriff.—Fees on niſi prius records out of the Exchequer to be the ſame as on other records. St. 23 Geo. 2. c. 26. § 10.—Fees of juſtices' clerks to be regulated. St. 26 Geo. 2. c. 14: 27 Geo. 2. c. 16. Debt lies for the ſheriff's fees for executing an elegit. Lord Raym. 1212.

As to the quantum of the fees due, it muſt be obſerved in general, that it is extortion for any officer to take more for executing his office, than is allowed by act of parliament, or is the known and ſettled fee in ſuch caſe. 10 Co. 102 a: Co. Lit. 368.

As to the fees of ſheriffs for executions, by St. 29 Eliz. cap. 4. it is enacted, "That it ſhall not be lawful for any ſheriff, &c. nor for any of their officers, &c. by colour of their office, to take of any perſon, directly or indirectly, for the ſerving and executing of any extent or execution upon the body, lands, goods or chattels of any perſon, more recompence than in this preſent act appointed, i. e. twelve-pence of and for every twenty ſhillings where it exceedeth not one hundred pounds; and ſix-pence of and for every twenty ſhillings, over and above the ſaid ſum of 100*l.* that he or they ſhall ſo levy or extend, and deliver in execution, or take the body in execution for; upon pain, that the perſon offending, ſhall forfeit, to the party grieved, his treble damages; and ſhall forfeit the ſum of 40*l.* for every time that he, they, or any of them ſhall do the contrary."

II. It is extortion for any officer to take his fee before it is due; and therefore where an under-ſheriff refuſed to execute a capias ad ſatisfaciendum till he had his fees, the court held, that the plaintiff might bring an action againſt him for not doing his duty, or might pay him his fees, and then indict him for extortion. Co. Lit. 368: 10 Co. 102 a: 1 Salk. 330.

Officer muſt obey a writ, though fees unpaid. Stran. 814. Proceſs muſt be obeyed though fees are not tendered. Stran. 1262. If an habeas corpus ad ſubjiciendum be directed to a gaoler, he muſt bring up the priſoner although his fees were not paid him; and he cannot excuſe himſelf of the contempt to the court, by alledging that the priſoner did not tender him his fees. 1 Keb. 272. pl. 57. So as to an habeas corpus ad faciendum & recipiendum. March 89: 2 Keb. 280: 2 Inſt. 178: 1 Keb. 566. cont.

But if the gaoler brings up the priſoner by virtue of ſuch habeas corpus, the court will not turn him over till the gaoler be paid all his fees; nor, according to ſome opinions, till he be paid all that is due to him for the priſoner's diet: for that a gaoler is compellable to find his priſoner ſuſtenance. See 1 Rol. Rep. 338: Co. Lit. 295: 9 Co. 87: Plowd. 68 a: 2 Rol. Abr. 32: 2 Jon. 178.

If a perſon pleads his pardon, the judges may inſiſt on the uſual fee of gloves to themſelves and officers, before they allow it. Fitz. Coron. 294: Pulton de Pace 88: Keling 25: 2 Jon. 56: 1 Sid. 452.

If an erroneous writ be delivered to the ſheriff, and he executes it, he ſhall have his fees, though the writ be erroneous. 1 Salk. 332. It ſeems to be laid down in the old books as a diſtinction, that upon an extent of land upon a ſtatute, the ſheriff is to have his fees, ſo much per pound according to the ſtatute immediately; but that upon an elegit he is not to have them till the liberate. Poph. 156: Winch 51. *S. Fees of Attornies and Officers, Are conſiderations allowed them as a recompence for their labour: and in reſpect to officers, they are granted over and above their ſalaries, to excite them to diligence in executing their offices. They differ from wages which are paid to ſervants for certain work and labour done in a certain ſpace; whereas fees are diſburſed to officers, &c. for the tranſacting of buſineſs which occaſionally occurs. If a client, when his buſineſs in court is diſpatched, refuſeth to pay the officer his court fees; the court on motion will grant an attachment againſt him, on which he ſhall be committed until the fees are paid. 1 Lill. Abr. 598. Eccleſiaſtical courts have not power to eſtabliſh fees: But if a perſon bring a quantum meruit in B. R. &c. for fees, and the jury find for him, then they become eſtabliſhed fees. 1 Salk. 333.

A ſolicitor in Chancery may exhibit his bill for his fees for buſineſs done in that court; and ſo he may where the buſineſs is done in another court, if it relates to another demand the plaintiff makes in chancery. 1 Vern. 203: 2 Chan. Ca. 153. But it hath been held, that chancellors, regiſters and proctors who are officers of temporal profit, and whoſe fees do not relate to the juriſdiction of the ſpiritual court, cannot ſue for them in the ſpiritual court. An attorney may have action of debt for his fees, and alſo of counſel, and coſts of ſuit: as a counſellor is not bound to give counſel till he has his fee; it is ſaid he can have no action for it: Though it has been held otherwiſe. *F. There were no fees due to ſheriffs for executing their offices, till the Stat. 29 Eliz. c. 4; which allows them fees for executing writs of execution, &c. By the Stat. of Weſtm. 2, 13 E. 1. cc. 42, 44, the ancient fees of officers of courts of juſtice were ordained: And by ſtatutes, the fees of ſheriffs, gaolers, bailiffs, &c. are limited.

FEIGNED ACTION, See title Faint Action.

FEIGNED ISSUE, If, in a ſuit in equity, any matter of fact is ſtrongly conteſted, the court uſually directs the matter to be tried by a jury; eſpecially ſuch important facts as the validity of a will, or whether A. is the heir at law to B. or the exiſtence of a modus decimandi, or real and immemorial compoſition for tithes. But as a jury cannot be ſummoned to attend a court of equity, the fact is uſually directed to be tried in the court of King's Bench, or at the aſſiſes, upon a feigned iſſue. For this purpoſe, a feigned action is brought, wherein the pretended plaintiff declares that he laid a wager of 5 l. with the defendant, that A. was heir at law to B; then he avers that he is ſo; and brings his action for the 5 l. the defendant allows the wager, but avers that A. is not the heir to B. and thereupon that iſſue is joined, which is directed out of Chancery to be tried: and thus the verdict of the jurors at law determines the fact in the court of equity. 3 Comm. 452. If it is a matter of great difficulty and conſequence, the direction may be for a trial at bar, with leave of the court. See titles Chancery; Equity.

FELE HOMAGERS, Were faithful ſubjects; from the Sax. fai, i. e. fides.

FELO DE SE, One that commits felony by laying violent hands upon himſelf, or commits any unlawful malicious act, the conſequence of which is, his own untimely death. When a perſon with deliberation and direct purpoſe kills himſelf, by hanging, drowning, ſhooting, ſtabbing, &c. he becomes felo de ſe; but the perſon that commits this felony, muſt be of the age of diſcretion, and compos mentis: And therefore if an infant under fourteen years of age, or a lunatick during his lunacy, or one diſtracted by a diſeaſe, or an ideot, kills himſelf, it is not felony. 3 Inſt. 44: Dalt. ch. 145. Alſo if a perſon during the time that he is non compos mentis giveth himſelf a mortal wound, though he dieth thereof when he recovers his memory, he is not felo de ſe; becauſe at the time of the ſtroke he was not compos mentis: Dalt. 342. 344. And he who deſires and perſuades another man to kill him, is not a felo de ſe; his aſſent being void in law, and the perſon killing him a murderer. Kelw. 136. It is felo de ſe where a man maliciouſly attempts to kill another, and falls upon his ſword, or ſhooting at another the gun burſts, whereby he kills himſelf; but he muſt be the only agent. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27: 1 Hal. P. C. 413.

A felo de ſe cannot make a will of goods and chattels; [or rather ſuch will, if made, is void;] for they are forfeited by the act and manner of his death: but he may make a deviſe of his lands, for they are not ſubject to forfeiture. Plowd. 261.

A felo de ſe ſhall forfeit all his goods and chattels real and perſonal; but not until it is lawfully found by the oath of twelve men, before the coroner on view of the body, that he is felo de ſe. 3 Inſt. 55. By the return of the inquiſition the goods, &c. are veſted in the King: Though it hath been ſaid, that the goods of a felo de ſe are forfeited before inquiſition, viz. immediately upon committing the fact. 1 Lev. 8: but ſee 5 Rep. 110, where it is adjudged that they are not forfeited till it is found of record. The lands of inheritance of a felo de ſe are not forfeited, by reaſon he was not attainted in his life-time: nor is ſuch a perſon's wife barred of dower, or his blood corrupted. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. If a judgment is obtained by a plaintiff in any action, and the plaintiff hangs himſelf, ſo as to become felo de ſe, the debt is forfeited to the King. 1 Saund. 36: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 840. Goods are forfeited to the King by a felo de ſe, for the loſs of a ſubject, and breach of the peace. 1 Plowd. 261. This forfeiture has relation to the time of the act done, in the felon's life-time which was the cauſe of his death. As if the huſband and wife be poſſeſſed jointly of a term of years, in land, and the huſband drown himſelf, the land ſhall be forfeited to the King; and the wife ſhall not have it by ſurvivorſhip. For by the act of caſting himſelf into the water he forfeits the term; which gives a title to the King, prior to the wife's title by ſurvivorſhip; which could not accrue till the inſtant of her huſband's death. Finch L. 216. But theſe forfeitures are, perhaps too often, ſaved, by the coroner's jury finding their verdict lunacy; to which they are inclined on a favourable interpretation, that it is impoſſible for a man in his ſenſes to do a thing ſo contrary to nature; but if this argument be good, ſelf-murder can be no crime, becauſe a madman cannot be guilty of any crime. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27.

If a perſon felo de ſe is ſecretly made away with that the coroner cannot view the body; preſentment is to be made of it by juſtices of peace, &c. to entitle the King to the forfeiture of goods. 5 Rep. 110. Where a perſon is found felo de ſe, who, on account of lunacy, &c. ought not to be ſo; or where one is returned non compos when in truth the party is felo de ſe, &c. if there be no fault in the coroner, or incertainty in the inquiſition, a melius inquirendum will not be granted; but the inquisition is traverſable in B. R. 3 Mod. 238: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 840. A pardon of murder, doth not pardon felo de ſe; but a pardon of all felonies and forfeitures doth. By cuſtom and practice, the body of a felo de ſe is buried in the highway, with a ſtake driven through the body.

FELONS GOODS. The ſtatute de prærogativa regis, 17 Ed. 2. c. 1, grants to the King, among other things, the goods of felons and fugitives. If the King grant to a man and his heirs felons' goods, the grantee cannot deviſe them, &c. on the ſtatute 32 H. 8. c. 1, becauſe they are not of a yearly value; but where a perſon is ſeiſed of a manor, to which they are appendant, it is otherwiſe, for they will paſs as appurtenant. 3 Rep. 32. See titles Flight; Forfeiture.

FELONY.

FELONIA.] A general term of law including generally, all capital crimes, below treaſon. 4 Comm. 98. This word is of feudal original; but as to the derivation of which authors differ. Some deduce it, fancifully enough as it ſeems, from φωλος Gr. an impoſtor; from fallo Lat. to deceive; and Coke (1 Inſt. 391,) ſays it is crimen felleo animo perpetratum.—All, however, agree that it is ſuch a crime as occaſions a forfeiture of the offender's lands or goods; this therefore gives great probability to Spelman's derivation from the Teutonick or German fee, a feud or fief, and lon, price or value. Spelm. in verb. Felon.—Felony according to this derivation, is then the ſame as pretium feudi; the conſideration for which a man gives up his fief or eſtate; as in common ſpeech it is ſaid, ſuch an act is as much as one's life or eſtate is worth. In this ſenſe, it will clearly ſignify the feodal forfeiture, or rather the act by which an eſtate is forfeited or eſcheats to the lord. See 4 Comm. 95.

FELONY, in the general acception of law, compriſes every ſpecies of crime which occaſioned, at Common-law, the forfeiture of lands or goods. This moſt frequently happens in thoſe crimes for which a capital puniſhment, either was or is liable to be inflicted: for thoſe felonies which are called clergyable, or to which the benefit of clergy extends, were antiently puniſhed with death in lay or unlearned offenders, though now by the ſtatute-law that puniſhment is for the firſt offence univerſally remitted. See this Dict. title Clergy, Benefit of. Treaſon itſelf (ſays Coke 3 Inſt. 15,) was antiently compriſed under the name of Felony. And not only all offences now capital are in ſome degree or other, felony; but this is likewiſe the caſe with ſome other offences, which are not puniſhed with death; as ſuicide, where the party is already dead; homicide by chance medley, or in ſelf-defence; and petty larceny or pilfering: all which are, ſtrictly ſpeaking Felonies, as they ſubject the committers of them to forfeitures. So that upon the whole the only adequate definition of Felony ſeems to be this viz. "An offence which occaſions a total forfeiture, of either lands or goods or both, at the Common law; and to which, capital or other puniſhment may be ſuperadded, according to the degree of guilt." 4 Comm. 94.

As felony may be without inflicting capital puniſhment, ſo it is poſſible that capital puniſhment may be inflicted for an offence which is no felony; as in caſe of Herely by the Common-law, which though capital, never worked any forfeiture of lands or goods, an inſeperable incident to felony. 3 Inſt. 43. Of the ſame nature was the puniſhment of ſtanding mute, which at Common-law was capital, but without any forfeiture, and was therefore no felony. In ſhort the true criterion of Felony is forfeiture, for in all felonies which are puniſhable by death, the offender loſes all his lands in fee-ſimple, and alſo his goods and chattels; in ſuch as are not ſo puniſhable, his goods and chattels only. 1 Inſt. 391.

The idea of felony is ſo generally connected with that of capital puniſhment, that it ſeems hard to ſeparate them; and to this uſage the interpretations of law now conform. For if a ſtatute makes any new offence felony, the law implies that it ſhall be puniſhed with death (viz. by hanging,) as well as by forfeiture, unleſs the offender prays the benefit of clergy. Hawk. P. C. i. c. 41. § 4; ii. c. 48. So where a ſtatute decrees an offence to undergo judgment of life and member, the offence becomes a Felony, though that preciſe word be omitted; but the words of the ſtatute muſt not in ſuch caſe be the leaſt doubtful or ambiguous. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 41. §§ 1, 2.

Under the word felony in commiſſions, &c. is included petit treaſon, murder, homicide, burning of houſes, burglary, robbery, rape, &c. chance medley, ſe defendendo and petit larceny. All felonies puniſhable according to the courſe of the Common-law, are either by the Common-law, or by ſtatute. Piracy, robbery, and murder on the ſea are puniſhable by the civil and ſtatute law. 1 Inſt. 391.

Felony, by the Common-law, is againſt the life of a man; as murder, manſlaughter, felo de ſe, ſe defendendo, &c. Againſt a man's goods, ſuch as larceny, and robbery: Againſt his habitation, as burglary, arſon or houſe-burning; and againſt public juſtice, as breach of priſon. 3 Inſt. 31.

It is not very eaſy to recapitulate the vaſt variety of offences which are made Felony, by the almoſt innumerable ſtatutes which have been from time to time found neceſſary, to reſtrain mankind within thoſe bounds which the ſecurity of Society requires.—Unfortunately theſe are continually increaſing; as the penalties of death or tranſportation have, after repeated trials, in many inſtances been found by experience, to be the only means of preventing the increaſe of crimes; from the commiſſion of which milder puniſhments were inſufficient to deter offenders.

A general liſt is here ſubjoined of Felonies by ſtatute; within clergy, and without. For the particulars relative to each offence, this Dictionary may be conſulted under the proper titles; ſee particularly titles Larceny; Robbery; Acceſſary.

Before the reign of K. Hen. I. felonies were puniſhed with pecuniary fines; for he was the firſt who ordered felons to be hanged, about the year 1108. The judgment againſt a man for felony hath been the ſame ſince the reign of that King, i. e. That he be hanged by the neck till dead; which is entered ſuſpendatur per collum, &c. 4 Inſt. 124. Felony was anciently every capital crime perpetrated with an evil intention: All capital offences by the Common-law, came generally under the title of felony; and could not be expreſſed by any word but felonicè; which muſt of neceſſity be laid in an indictment of felony. Co. Lit. 391. It is always accompanied with an evil intention; and therefore felony cannot be imputed to any other motive. But the bare intention to commit a felony is ſo very criminal, that at the Common-law it was puniſhable as felony, where it miſſed of its effect through ſome accident; and now the party may be ſeverely fined for ſuch an intention. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 25.

Felony is puniſhed with loſs of life, and of lands not entailed, goods and chattels; And felony ordinarily works corruption corruption of blood; unleſs a ſtatute making an offence felony, ordains it ſhall be otherwiſe, as ſome ſtatutes do. See title Attainder.

The puniſhment of a perſon for felony, by our ancient books, is, 1ſt, To loſe his life, 2dly, To loſe his blood, as to his anceſtry, and ſo as to have neither heir nor poſterity. 3dly, To loſe his goods. 4thly, To loſe his lands; and the King ſhall have annum, diem & vaſtum, to the intent that his wife and children be caſt out of the houſe, his houſe pulled down, and all that he had for his comfort or delight deſtroyed. 4 Rep. 124. A felony by ſtatute incidentally implies, that the offender ſhall be ſubject to the like attainder and forfeiture, &c. as is incident to a felon at Common-law. 3 Inſt. 47, 59, 90.

All felonies are ſeveral, and cannot be joint; ſo that a pardon of one felon cannot diſcharge another: but the felony of one man may be dependant upon that of another, and the pardon of the one by a neceſſary conſequence enure to the benefit of the other, as in caſes of principal and acceſſary, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C.

Private perſons may arreſt felons by their own authority, or by warrant from a juſtice of peace: And every private perſon is bound to aſſiſt an officer to take felons, &c. 2 Hawk, P. C. ſee title Conſtable.

But one ought not to be arreſted upon ſuſpicion of felony, except there be probabilis cauſa ſhewed for the ground of the ſuſpicion. 1 Lil. Abr. 603. If a felony is not done by a man, but ſome perſon elſe, if another hath probable cauſe to ſuſpect he is the felon, and accordingly doth arreſt him, this is lawful, and may be juſtified: But to make good ſuch juſtification, there muſt be in fact a felony committed by ſome perſon, without which there can be no ground of ſuſpicion. 2 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 78. And as to the perſon, there ought to be a reaſonable cauſe to ſuſpect him, otherwiſe the arreſt will be illegal. See titles Arreſt; Conſtable.

A private man arreſting one for felony, cannot juſtify breaking doors, to take the party ſuſpected; but he doth it at his peril, viz. if in truth he be a felon, it is juſtifiable; but if innocent, then it is not: To prevent a murder or manſlaughter, private perſons may break doors open. 2 Hale 82. Officers may break open a houſe to take a felon, or any perſon juſtly ſuſpected of felony; and if an officer hath a warrant to take a felon, who is killed in reſiſting, it is not felony in the officer; but if the officer is killed, it is otherwiſe. Dalt. 289.

Perſons indicted of felony, &c. where there are ſtrong preſumptions and circumſtances of guilt, are not repleviſable; but for larceny, &c. when perſons are committed who are of good reputation, they may be bailed. 2 Hawk. P. C. The former part of the poſition muſt be, with an exception to the power of the court of King's Bench. See title Bail.

If one be committed to priſon for one felony, the juſtices of gaol delivery may try him for another felony, for which he was not committed, by virtue of their commiſſion, 1 Lil. 602.

In the higheſt crime, and in the loweſt ſpecies of felony, viz. in petit larceny, and in all miſdemeanors, ſtanding mute hath always been equivalent to conviction. But upon appeals or indictments for other felonies, or petit treaſon, the priſoner was not by the ancient law looked upon as convicted, ſo as to receive judgment for the felony, but ſhould, for his obſtinacy, have received the terrible ſentence of penance, or peine fort & dure. If a felon ſtands mute by the act of God, the felony is to be inquired of by jury, and whether the priſoner be the ſame perſon, and all other matters in the ſame manner as if the criminal had pleaded. And it may be inquired of by inqueſt of office, whether he do ſo of malice or by the act of God. 2 Hawk. P. C. See 4 Comm. 325. and this Dict. titles Peine fort & dure; Trial.

Where a married woman commits felony, in company with her huſband, it ſhall be preſumed to be done by his command, and ſhe ſhall be excuſed. 3 Inſt. 310. See title Baron and Feme VII.

If a man's horſe be going into the ground of another, and he takes it felleo animo, not as damage-feaſant, it is no finding, but felony: But if A's ſheep ſtray into the flock of B. and he drives the ſame along with his flock, or by miſtake ſhears them, this is not a felony; though if he knew them to be another perſon's, and marks them with his mark, is an evidence of felony. 1 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 506.

Where one ſteals another's goods, and a third perſon feloniouſly takes them from him; he is a felon as to both the others. And when there is a pretence of title to things unlawfully taken, it may be only a trick to colour felony; and the ordinary diſcovery of a felonious intent is, if the party doth it ſecretly, or being charged with the goods denies it. 1 H. P. C. 507, 509. If a perſon to whom goods are delivered on a pretended buying them, runs away with them, it is felony: and a gueſt ſtealing plate ſet before him at an inn, &c. is felony; alſo perſons who have the charge of things, as a ſervant of a chamber, &c. may be guilty of felony: and the leaſt removing of a thing in attempts of felony, is felony, though it be not carried off. 3 Inſt. 308: Raym. 275.

But goods muſt not be of a baſe nature; ſuch as dogs, &c. nor feræ naturæ, as deer, hares, &c. except they be made tame, when it will be felony to ſteal them. If any turkeys, geeſe, poultry, fiſh in a trunk, &c. are taken away, it is felony. 3 Inſt. 309, 310. Stealing of tame peacocks, is felony; ſo of herons and young hawks in their neſts: it is otherwiſe of pheaſants, partridges, conies, &c. although they be ſo kept that they cannot eſcape; if they be not reclaimed, and known. Jenk. Cent. 204. As to cats, dogs, monkeys, and the like; though it be not felony to take them, treſpaſs lies for them. Jenk. Ibid.

FEME COVERT, A married woman; ſaid to be covert baron. See title Baron and Feme.

FEME SOLE, Fr.] A woman alone, that is unmarried. Feme Sole Merchant; A married woman who by the cuſtom of London trades on her own account, independent of her huſband. See titles Baron and Feme: London.

FENCE, A hedge, ditch, or other incloſure of land for the better manurance and improvement of the ſame. And where a hedge, and ditch join together, in whoſe ground or ſide the hedge is, to the owner of that land belongs the keeping of the ſame hedge or fence, and the ditch adjoining to it on the other ſide, in repair and ſcoured. Par. Offic. 188. An action on the caſe or treſpaſs lies, for not repairing of fences, whereby cattle come into the ground of another, and do damage. 1 Salk. 335. Alſo it is preſentable in the Court-Baron, &c. By ſtat. 9 Geo. 3. c. 29. deſtroying fences ſet up for incloſing commons is made felony, but within benefit of clergy. See this Dict. titles Common; Incloſure.

FENCE-MONTH, menſis fanationis, menſis prohibitionis, or menſis vetitus.] Is a month wherein female deer in foreſts, &c. do fawn, and therefore it is unlawful to hunt in foreſts during that time; which begins fifteen days before Midſummer, and ends fifteen days after it, being in all thirty days. Manw. part 2. cap. 13: Stat. 20 Car. 2. cap. 3. Some ancient foreſters call this month the defence-month, becauſe then the deer are to be defended from being diſturbed, and the interruptions of fear and danger; as there are certain defence-months for fiſh, particularly ſalmons, as appears by the Stat. Weſtm. 2. cap. 47, &c. Serjeant Fleetwood ſaith, that the fence-month hath been always kept with watch and ward, in every bailiwick throughout the whole foreſt, ſince the time of Canutus. Fleetwood's Foreſt Laws, p. 5.

FENGELD, Sax.] A tax or impoſition, exacted for the repelling of enemies. MS. Antiq.

FENS, paludes.] Low marſhy grounds, or lakes for water; for the draining whereof in this kingdom ſeveral ſtatutes have been enacted, which are chiefly local; and of which the following abridgments are retained as a ſpecimen.

The ſtatutes 4 Jac. 1. cc. 8, 13, make proviſion for draining and ſecuring from inundation the drowned grounds and marſhes of Leſneſs and Fants in Kent; and the fens and low grounds in the Iſle of Ely. The St. 15 Car. 2. cap. 17, appoints William Earl of Bedford, and other adventurers, a corporation, for the draining of Bedford Level in Bedfordſhire, conſiſting of a governor, bailiffs, and conſervators, &c. who have power to lay and levy taxes within the great level of the fens; and alſo to erect works within the ſame, for carrying the water to the ſea, making ſatisfaction to the owners of lands for injury received; throwing down any of which works, incurs treble damages, &c.

By St. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 11, Deeping fens, &c. in Lincolnſhire, are to be drained from water; and Edward Earl of Manchester, and ſeveral others are declared undertakers thereof, on certain truſts, with power to erect banks, bridges, drains, locks, ſluices, &c. for recovery of the ſaid fens; and aſſeſſees of lands held by the adventurers under the truſtees, may hold aſſemblies for making of bye laws, for the management of the works of draining; they may charge the owner of the lands by an acre tax, &c. and on default of payment, ſell the defaulter's lands, &c.

The St. 11 Geo. 2. c. 34, ordains that commiſſioners ſhall be appointed, for effectually draining and preſerving of the fens in the Iſle of Ely in Cambridgeſhire; who are authoriſed to make drains, dams, &c. and proper works thereon: and the ſaid commiſſioners may charge proprietors with a proportionable acre-tax, viz. for Waterden Fen, at the rate of 5*s.* and Redmoor, Cawdle Fen, and the Holts, at 2*s.* an acre by the year, for four years; and afterwards at an yearly rate, not exceeding 1*s.* 6*d. per* acre; they may likewiſe borrow money for maintaining and effecting the works, by aſſigning over the duties: perſons obſtructing the draining to forfeit 100*l.* and if any perſon ſhall burn any of the engines erected, he ſhall be impriſoned three years; and being convicted again of the like offence, to be guilty of felony. And for raiſing money, for draining and future preſervation of Deeping fens, a rate of 20*s.* an acre is to be paid, by all the taxable land owners, according to agreement of the proprietors; levied by diſtreſs of goods, or ſale of defaulter's lands; which may be alſo mortgaged to raiſe the money &c. by 11 Geo. 2. c. 39.

By the Stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 18, commiſſioners are appointed for draining and preſerving certain fen lands in the ſeveral pariſhes of Maney, Upwell, Welney, Downham, Witcham, and in a certain extra-parochial place in Byal Fen, within the iſle of Ely, and county of Cambridge, who may make an aſſeſſment of 1*s.* 6*d. per* acre yearly, on which they may borrow money, with like powers, authorities and directions as in Stat. 11 Geo. 2. cap. 34.

By Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 19, Any perſon convicted of maliciouſly cutting or deſtroying any bank, mill, engine, flood-gate or ſluice, for draining the lands in Bedford level ſhall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. By Stats. 11 Geo. 2. c. 34: 14 Geo. 2. c. 24: 21 Geo. 2. c. 18, the ſecond offence in ſetting fire to engines for draining the fens mentioned in thoſe acts is alſo made felony without benefit of clergy.

By Stat. 22 H. 8. c. 11. cutting down and deſtroying the dikes in Norfolk and Ely is made felony.—And by Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 32. removing the materials of ſea walls or banks incurs a forfeiture of 20*l.*

FEODALITY, Fealty. See title Fealty; Tenures, I. 6.

FEODARY, or FEUDARY, feudatarius.] An officer of the court of wards, appointed by the maſter of that court by virtue of the ſtatute 32 Hen. 8. c. 26; whoſe buſineſs was to be preſent with the eſcheator in every county at the finding of offices of lands, and to give in evidence for the King as well concerning the value as the tenure; and his office was alſo to ſurvey the lands of the ward, after the office found, and to rate it. He did likewiſe aſſign the King's widows their dowers; and receive all the rents of wards, lands within his circuit, which he anſwered to the receiver of the court. This office was wholly taken away by the operation of ſtatute 12 Car. 2. cap. 24, aboliſhing tenures.

FEODATARY or FEUDATARY, The tenant who held his eſtate by feodal ſervice; and grantees, to whom lands in feud or fee were granted by a ſuperior lord, were ſometimes called homagers; and in ſome writings are termed vaſſals, feuds and feodataries. See title Tenures, I.

FEOFFMENT, Feoffamentum, from the verb feoffare; donatio feudi.] A gift or grant of any manors, meſſuages, lands or tenements, to another in fee, to him and his heirs for ever, by the delivery of ſeiſin and poſſeſſion of the thing given or granted.—In every feoffment, the giver or grantor is called the feoffor, and he that receives by virtue thereof, is the feoffee. Littleton ſays, the proper difference between a feoffor and a donor, is, that the one gives in fee-ſimple, the other in fee-tail. Litt. lib. 1. cap. 6.

Blackſtone, (2 Comm. 399,) defines feoffment to be the gift of any corporeal hereditament to another. The deed of feoffment is our moſt antient conveyance of lands; and in records we often find fees given to knights under the phraſes of de veteri feoffamento, and de novo feoffamento; the firſt whereof were ſuch lands as were given or granted by by King Henry I. And the others, such as were granted after the death of the said King, since the beginning of the reign of Henry II. At Common-law the usual conveyance was by feoffment, to which delivery (shortly called livery) and seisin were necessary, the possession being thereby given to the feoffee; but if livery and seisin could not be made, by reason there was a tenant in possession, the reversion was granted, and the particular tenant attorned. Co. Lit. 9. 49. A feoffment is said, in some respects, to excel the conveyance by fine and recovery; it clearing all disseisins, abatements, intrusions, and other wrongful estates, which no other conveyance doth: and for that it is so solemnly and publicly made, it has been of all other conveyances the most observed. West. Symb. 235: Plowd. 554. See this Dict. titles Conveyance; Deed; and 2 Comm. c. 20: Shep. Touchst. c. 9. and the notes to the 8vo edition 1791.

This conveyance is now but very little used; except where no consideration passes, as in case of trustees of lands for a corporation, &c. It is still however a formal, valid, and effectual mode of conveyance: but has been of late years almost entirely superseded by the conveyance by Lease and Release. See this Dict. under that title; as also titles Bargain and Sale; Conveyance; Deed.

It will be found useful to consider the learning relating to feoffments according to the following division.

I. Of what Things a Feoffment may be made.
II. Who may make a Feoffment, and how it is to be made.
III. Of the different Kinds of Livery; with their Effects and Operations.

I. A Feoffment may be of a messuage, land, meadow, pasture, or other corporeal hereditament, and of a moiety, third, or fourth part of it; that lies in livery.

So a Feoffment may be made of lands, in which a man has no fixed estate; as, if he has twelve acres to be annually assigned in such a meadow; and livery in any acre, which he has at the time of the feoffment, is sufficient. Co. Lit. 4 a; 48 b: 2 Rol. 10. l. 40—50.

So, if a feoffment be of fifty acres towards the North in such a moor, which contains 100 acres, livery in any of them is sufficient. 2 Rol. 11. l. 5: Dy. 372 b.

So, if two manors be divided alternis vicibus between parceners, either may make a feoffment of her manor; and the deed ought to comprehend both; and she shall make livery in one secundum formam chartæ this year, and in the other the next year. Co. L. 48 b.

But a feoffment cannot be made of a thing of which livery cannot be given; as, of incorporeal inheritances, rent, advowson, common, &c. 2 Rol. 1. l. 20. Though it be an advowson, &c. in gross. Cont. 11 H. 6. 4: Acc. 2 Rol. 1. l. 21.

So a feoffment of lands, which are uncertain till a future act, is void; for livery does not operate in futuro: as, if A. agrees by indenture to convey 20 l. per annum in land to such an use, and 20 s. per annum to such an use, and makes a feoffment of all his lands to the uses in the indenture; it will be void for all but that where livery was made, it not being ascertained which shall be to one use, and which to the other. R. 1 Rol. 187.

In a deed of feoffment, there must be a good feoffor, that is, one able to grant the thing conveyed by the deed; a feoffee capable to take it; and a thing grantable, and granted in the manner the law requireth. Co. Lit. 42, 49, 190.

See further of what things a feoffment may be made Com. Dig. Feoffment (A. 2.) Vin. Ab. Feoffment (C.)

II. If a person non compos makes a feoffment, and gives livery himself, this is allowed on all hands to be good to bind himself, so that he can by no process or plea avoid the feoffment, and restore himself to the possession; the same law of an ideot; and the reason is, because the investiture being made before the pares curiæ, their solemn attestation could not be defeated by the person himself, because it is presumed they are competent judges of the ability of the feoffor to make such feoffment. 2 Rol. Abr. 2: Co. Lit. 247: 4 Co. 125 a: Show. Parl. Cases 153. and see title Ideots and Lunaticks; and post. II.

But if an infant makes a feoffment, and makes livery himself, this shall not bind him, but he himself may avoid it by writ of dum fuit infra ætatem; yet the feoffment of the infant is not void in itself, as well because he is allowed to contract for his benefit, as that there ought to be some act of notoriety to restore the possession to him equal to that which transferred it from him. 4 Co. 125: 2 Rol. Abr. 2: 8 Co. 42, 43: Whittingham's case.

Yet if an infant makes a feoffment, and a letter of attorney to make livery, that is void; so if a person non compos makes a surrender or release, this is void in law; so if he makes a letter of attorney to give livery; but the heir at law after the death of the person of non-sane memory, or ideot, may avoid his feoffment; and so may the King upon an office found of his lunacy during his life. 8 Co. 45: Co. Litt. 247 a: 4 Co. 125 a: 2 Rol. Abr. 2: Show. Par. Cases. 153.

There must be livery of seisin in all feoffments, and gifts, &c. where a corporeal inheritance or freehold doth pass; and without livery, the deed is no feoffment, gift or demise. Lit. 59: 8 Rep. 82. But a freehold may pass without livery, by the statute 27 H. 8. c. 10. By force of which statute, a feoffment to the use of the feoffor, feoffee, &c. supplies the place of livery and seisin. Wood's Inst. 239.

But a feoffment may not be of such things whereof livery and seisin may not be made; for no deed of feoffment is good to pass an estate without livery of seisin; and if either of the parties die before livery, the feoffment is void. Plowd. 214, 219. Though where a feme feoffor made a feoffment of lands with livery in view, and then married the feoffee before the livery was executed by actual entry; it was adjudged the livery might be executed after marriage, the feoffee having not only an authority to enter, but an interest passed by the livery in view, and the woman did all on her part to be done, 1 Vent. 186.

A man may either give or receive livery in deed by letter of attorney; for since a contract is no more than the consent of a man's mind to a thing, where that consent or concurrence appears, it were unreasonable to oblige each person to be present at the execution of the contract, since it may as well be performed by any other person delegated for that purpose by the parties to the contract. Co. Lit. 52: 2 Rol. Abr. 8.

But such delegation, or authority to give or receive livery, must be by deed, that it may appear to the court, that the attorney had a commission, to represent the parties ties that are to give or take the livery, and whether the authority was purſued. Co. Lit. 48 b: 52 a.

If a man be diſſeiſed, and makes a deed of feoffment, and a letter of attorney to enter and take poſſeſſion of the land, and afterwards to make livery, according to the form of the charter, it will be a good feoffment, though he was out of poſſeſſion at the time of the deed made: for the feoffment takes effect by the livery, and not by the deed. Co. Lit. 48, 52.

A feoffment being a Common-law conveyance, and executed by livery, makes a tranſmutation of eſtate; but a conveyance on the ſtatute of uſes, as a covenant to ſtand ſeiſed, &c. makes only a tranſmutation of poſſeſſion, and not of eſtate. 2 Lev. 77: 1 Vent. 378. A feoffment to the uſe of A. for life, the remainder to B. If A. refuſes to take the eſtate, B. ſhall take preſently, becauſe the whole eſtate is out of the feoffor by livery; but if it had been by covenant to ſtand ſeiſed, he ſhould not have taken till after the death of A. but it would reſt in the covenantor, who ſhall have the uſe in the mean time. 2 Lev. 77: 1 Leon. Ca 279. Before the Stat. Weſtm. 1, if a man had made feoffment in fee, without declaring any uſe, it ſhould have been to the uſe of the feoffee; though now by that ſtatute, where no conſideration or declaration of uſe is expreſſed, it ſhall go to the feoffor himſelf. 2 Leon. 15, 16. If I convey lands by feoffment, which I have on the part of the mother, to J. S. and his heirs, without conſideration; the uſe will be void, and the land ſhall return again to me and my heirs on the part of the mother; yet if I declare the uſe to me and my heirs, or upon ſuch feoffment reſerve a rent in like manner, it ſhall go to my heirs at the Common-law, it being a new thing divided from the land. Hob. 31: Co. Lit. 13, 231: 1 Rep. 100: Dyer 134. Where a man makes a feoffment, without any conſideration; by that the eſtate and poſſeſſion paſſes, but not the uſe, which ſhall deſcend to his heir. 1 Leon. 182.

A feoffment in fee is made to the uſe of ſuch perſons, and for ſuch eſtates, as the feoffor ſhall appoint by his will, or to the uſe of his laſt will; by operation of law the uſe veſts in the feoffor, and he is ſeiſed of a qualified fee, viz. until he makes his will, and declares the uſes; and after the will is made, it is only directory, for nothing paſſes by it but all by the feoffment. 6 Rep. 18: Aloor 567. A feoffment in fee, upon condition, &c. was inrolled, but no livery made; and it was adjudged no good feoffment, but the inrollment ſhall conclude the perſon to ſay that it was not his deed. Poph. 6: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 844. If a bargain and ſale of lands be not inrolled, and the bargainor deliver livery and ſeiſin of the lands ſecundum formam chartæ, &c. it has been held a good feoffment. 2 And. 68.

A feoffment in fee made upon condition not to alien, the condition is void; becauſe it is repugnant to the eſtate; but if livery is had, the feoffment will be good againſt the feoffor: and a bond with condition that the feoffee ſhall not alien, is ſaid to be good. Co. Lit. 206: Cro. Jac. 596. If a man makes a feoffment of lands on condition that the feoffee ſhall give the lands to the feoffor, and his wife in ſpecial tail, remainder to the heirs of the feoffor; and he dies before ſuch gift is made, the feoffee ought to make it as near the intent of the condition as may be, viz. to the wife without impeachment of waſte, remainder to the heirs of the body of her huſband, on her body begotten, and remainder to the huſband's right heirs. In caſe the feoffor, and his wife both die, the feoffee then ſhould make the eſtate to the iſſue, and heirs of the body of his father and mother begotten, remainder to the right heirs of the huſband or father. Co. Lit. 219, 220.

Tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee; the inheritance of the tail is not given to the feoffee by the feoffment, nor is he thereby tenant in tail; for none ſhall be tenant in tail but he only who is comprehended in the gift made by the donor. But it gives away all the immediate eſtate the feoffor had. Plowd. 562: Hob. 335. If leſſee for life, and the reverſioner in fee, make a feoffment in fee by deed, each gives his eſtate; the leſſee his by livery, and the fee from him in remainder. 6 Rep. 15: Lil. Abr. 609. A feoffment was made habendum to the feoffee and his heirs, after the death of the feoffor, and livery was made: yet it was held to be a void feoffment, for an eſtate of freehold in lands cannot begin at a day to come: but where a leſſor made a leaſe for lives, and granted the reverſion to another for life, whoſe eſtate for life was to begin after the death of the ſurvivor of the other leſſees for life, this was adjudged a good eſtate in reverſion for life. Hob. 171: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 846.

If the huſband alone make a feoffment of his wife's land, or of both their lands, his wife being on the land and diſagreeing to it; this will be good againſt all perſons but the wife: alſo ſo it is, if one jointenant make a deed of feoffment of the whole land his companion being then upon it; or if a man diſſeiſe me of my lands, and then enfeoff another thereof, whilſt I am upon the land, &c. Perk. § 219, 220.

Every gift or feoffment of lands made by fraud or maintenance, ſhall be void; and the diſſeiſee, notwithſtanding ſuch alienation, ſhall recover againſt the firſt diſſeiſor his land and double damages; provided he commence his ſuit in a year after the diſſeiſin, and that the feoffor be pernor of the profits. Stat. 1 R. 2. c. 9. III. Livery may be by deed; or in law; which latter is alſo called livery within view.

The livery in deed, is the actual tradition of the land, and is made either by the delivery of a branch of a tree or a turf of the land, or ſome other thing, in the name of all the lands and tenements contained in the deed; and it may be made by words only without the delivery of any thing; as if the feoffor being upon the land, or at the door of the houſe, ſays to the feoffee, I am content that you ſhould enjoy this land according to the deed; or enter into this houſe or land, and enjoy it according to the deed; this is a good livery to paſs the freehold, becauſe in all theſe caſes, the charter of feoffment makes the limitation of the eſtate, and then the words ſpoken by the feoffor on the land, are a ſufficient indicium to the people preſent, to determine in whom the freehold reſides during the extent of the limitation; beſides, the words, being relative to the charter of feoffment, plainly denote an intention to enfeoff. Co. Lit. 48 a: 9 Co. 137 b. Thorowgood's caſe. 6 Co. 26. Sharp's caſe. 2 Rol. Abr. 7. And ſee Cro. Jac. 80. which ſeems contrà.

But if a man without any charter, being in his houſe, ſays, I here demiſe you this houſe, as long as I live, paying 20 l. per annum, this paſſes no freehold but only an eſtate eſtate at will; becauſe the word demiſe denotes only the extent of the limitation of the eſtate intended to be conveyed; but bare words of limitation, without ſome acts or words to diſcover the intention of the feoffor to deliver over the poſſeſſion, are not ſufficient to convey the freehold; for if a charter of feoffment be made to a man and his heirs, this, without ſome other act, or word to give the poſſeſſion, only paſſes an eſtate at will, becauſe the act of delivery is requiſite to the perfection of the charter; but beſides the charter of feoffment, there muſt be ſome act or words to deliver over the poſſeſſion, before the feoffee can enjoy it purſuant to the charter. 6 Co. 26: 2 Rol. Abr. 7: Co. Lit. 48: Cro. Eliz. 482: 9 Co. 138: Moor, pl. 632.

Livery in deed is thus performed.—The feoffor, leſſor, or his attorney, (for this may be as effectually done by deputy or attorney as by the principals themſelves in perſon,) come to the land, or to the houſe; and there in the preſence of witneſſes declare the contents of the feoffment or leaſe on which livery is to be made: and then the feoffor, if it be of land doth deliver to the feoffee, all other perſons being out of the ground, a clod or turf or a twig or bough there growing with words to this effect, "I deliver theſe to you in the name of ſeiſin of all the lands and tenements contained in this deed." But if it be of a houſe, the feoffor muſt take the ring or latch of the door, the houſe being quite empty, and deliver it to the feoffee in the ſame form; and then the feoffee muſt enter alone and ſhut the door, and then open it, and let in the others. 1 Inſt. 48: Weſt. Symb. 251.

If the conveyance or feoffment be of divers lands, lying ſcattered in one and the ſame county, then in the feoffor's poſſeſſion, livery of ſeiſin of any parcel, in the name of the reſt ſufficeth for all; but if they be in ſeveral counties there muſt be as many liveries as there are counties, Lit. § 414. Alſo if the lands be out on leaſe, though all be in the ſame county, there muſt be as many liveries as there are tenants; becauſe no livery can be made in this caſe but by the conſent of the particular tenant; and the conſent of one will not bind the reſt. Dy. 18.

In all theſe caſes it is prudent and uſual to indorſe the livery of ſeiſin on the back of the deed; ſpecifying the manner, place, and time, of making it, together with the names of the witneſſes. Co. Lit. 48.

The livery within view, or the livery in law, is, when the feoffor is not actually on the land, or in the houſe, but being in ſight of it ſays to the feoffee, I give you yonder houſe, or land, go and enter into the ſame, and take poſſeſſion of it accordingly; this ſort of livery ſeems to have been made at firſt only at the court barons, which were antiently held ſub dio, (in the open air) in ſome open part of the manor, from whence a general ſurvey or view might have been taken of the whole manor, and the pares curiæ eaſily diſtinguiſhed that part which was then to be transferred. Pollex. 47. This livery in law cannot be given or received by attorney, but only by the parties themſelves, 1 Inſt. 48.

This latter ſort of livery alſo is not perfect to carry the freehold, till an actual entry made by the feoffee, becauſe the poſſeſſion is not actually delivered to him, but only a licence or power given him by the feoffor to take poſſeſſion of it; and therefore, if either the feoffor or feoffee die before livery, and entry made by the feoffee, the livery within the view becomes ineffectual and void; for if the feoffor dies before entry, the feoffee cannot afterwards enter, becauſe then the land immediately deſcends upon his heir, and conſequently no perſon can take poſſeſſion of his land without an authority delegated from him who is the proprietor; nor can the heir of the feoffee enter, becauſe he is not the perſon to whom the feoffor intended to convey his land, nor had he an authority from the feoffor to take poſſeſſion; beſides, if the heir of the feoffee were admitted to take poſſeſſion after his father's death, he would come in as a purchaſer, whereas he was mentioned in the feoffment to take as the repreſentative of his anceſtor, which he cannot do, ſince the eſtate never veſted in his anceſtor. Co. Lit. 48 b: 2 Rol. Abr. 3, 7: 1 Vent. 186: Moor 85: Pollex. 48.

The livery within view may be made of lands in another county than where the lands lie, becauſe the tranſlation of the feud was often made at the court-baron, in the preſence of pares curiæ; and theſe courts being held ſub dio, the pares could have a diſtinct view of every part of the manor; and therefore were proper to atteſt this ſort of inveſtiture, though the lands were in a different county, for notwithſtanding that, they might have been part of the ſame manor, for which the court was held. Co. Lit. 48 b.

This ceremony was firſt inſtituted, that the pares of the county might, upon any diſpute relating to the freehold, determine in whom it was lodged; and from thence be the better enabled to determine in whom the right was. Hence therefore it is, that if a man makes a feoffment, or leaſe for life, to commence in futuro, and makes livery immediately, the livery is void, and only an eſtate at will paſſes to the feoffee; for the deſign of the inſtitution would fail, if ſuch livery were effectual to paſs the freehold; for it would be no evidence, or notoriety of the change of the freehold, if after the livery made, the freehold ſtill remained in the feoffor; the uſe of the inveſtiture would rather create than prevent the uncertainty of the freehold, and in many caſes would put men to fruitleſs trouble and expence in purſuit of their right; for by that means, after a man had brought his præcipe againſt a perſon, whom he ſuppoſed to be tenant to the freehold, and had proceeded in it a conſiderable time, the writ might abate by the freehold's veſting in another, by virtue of a livery made before the purchaſe of the writ. Another reaſon why ſuch future intereſts cannot be allowed to paſs by any act of livery was becauſe no man would be ſafe in his purchaſe, if the operation of livery might create an eſtate, to commence many years after the livery was made; and though they have allowed a future intereſt, to commence by way of leaſe, yet that had no ſuch ill effect in making purchaſes uncertain, becauſe antiently they were under the power of the freeholder, who by recovery might deſtroy them; and now, unleſs ſuch leaſes are made upon good conſiderations, they are fraudulent againſt a purchaſer; and it is not to be preſumed that leaſes at great diſtances ſhould be purchaſed for value. Cro. Eliz. 451: 2 Vent. 204: Co. Lit. 217: 5 Co. 94 b.

Hence, by the way, we may account why a freehold in reverſion or remainder cannot be granted in futuro, though there no livery is neceſſary to paſs it; as where A. is tenant for life, remainder to B. in fee; A. makes a leaſe for years to C. and afterwards grants the land to

D. habend' from Michaelmas next enſuing, for life; this grant to D. was adjudged void, though C. attorned to it after Michaelmas, becauſe ſuch future grants create an uncertainty of the freehold; and the tenant of the freehold being the perſon who is to anſwer the ſtranger's præcipe, and who was anſwerable to the lord for the ſervices, it were unreaſonable to permit him by any act of his own, to prevent or delay the proſecution of their right. Cro. Eliz. 451: 2 Vent. 204: Co. Lit. 217: 5 Co. 94 b: 2 Co. 55, Buckler's caſe: 2 And. 29: Moor 423: Cro. Eliz. 450, 585: Hob. 170, 171: 5 Co. 94: 1 Rol. Rep. 261.

FIERI FACIAS, A judicial writ of execution, that lies where judgment is had for debt or damages recovered in the King's courts; by which writ the ſheriff is commanded to levy the debt and damages of the goods and chattels of the defendant, &c. Old Nat. Br. 152. See this Dict. title Execution.

This writ, though mentioned in the ſtatute W. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 18, is a writ of execution at Common law, and is called a fieri facias, becauſe the words of the writ, directed to the ſheriff, are quod fieri facias de bonis & catallis, &c. and from theſe words the writ takes its denomination. Co. Litt. 290 b.

This writ is to be ſued out within a year and a day after judgment; or the judgment muſt be revived by ſcire facias: but if a fieri facias ſued in time, be not executed, a ſecond fieri facias, or elegit may be ſued out; and it is ſaid ſome years after, without a ſcire facias, provided continuances are entered from the firſt fi. fa. which it is alſo held may be entered after the ſecond fi. fa. taken out, unleſs a rule is made that proceedings ſhall ſtay, &c. Sid. 59: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 776. If a man recover debt againſt A. B. and levy part of it by fieri facias, and this writ is returned; yet he may take the body in execution by capias for the reſt of the debt. Rol. Abr. 904. The ſheriff on a fieri facias is to do his beſt endeavours to levy the money upon the goods and chattels of the defendant; and for that purpoſe to inquire after his goods, &c. And the plaintiff may inquire and ſearch if he can find any, and give notice thereof to the ſheriff, who ex officio is to take and ſell them if he can, or if not, by a writ of venditioni exponas. 2 Shep. Abr. 111.

There may be a teſtatum fieri facias into another county, if the defendant hath not goods enough in the county where the action is laid to ſatisfy the execution; and the fieri facias for the ground of the teſtatum, may be returned of courſe by the attornies, as originals are. 2 Salk. 589. If all the money is not levied on a fieri facias, the writ muſt be returned before a ſecond execution can be iſſued; becauſe it is to be grounded on the firſt writ, by reciting that all the money was not levied. 1 Salk. 318.

Where the ſheriff ſells goods which he levied by fieri facias, and doth not pay the money, action of debt will lie againſt him; for the defendant is diſcharged as to the plaintiff, and the ſheriff is now become his debtor in law; and if the ſheriff die after he hath levied the debt, the like action will lie againſt his executors, as it is a duty when levied. March. Rep. 13: Cro. Car. 387.

If a ſheriff that hath ſeized goods by fieri facias is going out of his office, he muſt deliver them to the new ſheriff, and return his writ executed pro tanto; and he ought not to deliver them to the owner, by reaſon the writ of execution is warranted by record, and therefore the diſcharge thereof muſt appear by record. Yelv. 44. Upon a fieri facias the ſheriff returned, that he had levied goods ad valentiam of the debt; the return being filed, a motion was made that he might bring in the money, which not being done, an attachment was granted, and then the ſheriff appeared and prayed to amend the return, for that the goods were damaged by lying, and he could not get buyers; but it was adjudged that the return ſhall not be altered, for he might have returned this at firſt by way of excuſe; and having returned that he had levied goods ad valentiam, he ſhall pay the money. Sid. 407.

The ſheriff cannot deliver the goods by him taken in execution to the plaintiff, in ſatisfaction of his debt; becauſe his authority is to ſell the goods. Lut. 589: 1 Lil. Abr. 611. And if a ſheriff ſells the goods taken by fieri facias at under-price, the ſale is good, and the defendant can have no remedy; though where there appears to be covin between the ſheriff and the buyer, the owner ſhall have his action upon the caſe. Keilw. 64: 1 Salk. 28. On a fieri facias the ſheriff has power to take any thing but wearing cloaths; and if the defendant hath two gowns, &c. it is ſaid he may ſell one. If the ſheriff executes a writ of fieri facias, he may afterwards return nulla bona, if there appear a prerogative writ; or, on better information, that the goods taken were not the defendant's. Comb. 356, 432.

By

By the ſeizure of the goods, the ſheriff hath a property in them; but goods of a ſtranger, &c. in the poſſeſſion of the defendant ſhall not be ſeized in execution; for the ſheriff at his peril muſt take notice whoſe goods they are: though, if the ſheriff inquires by a jury, where the property is lodged, and it is found that they are the defendant's goods, when they are not, this will indemnify the ſheriff. Dalt. Sher. 60: Wood's Inſt. 608.

The ſheriff cannot break open the door of an houſe to execute a fieri facias upon the goods of the owner or occupier; but a man's houſe ſhall be a protection for his own goods only, and not for the goods of another. 5 Rep. 91: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 775. If the defendant is a beneficed clergyman, and the ſheriff returns quod eſt clericus beneficiatus, &c. a writ ſhall go to the biſhop of the dioceſe to levy the debt de bonis eccleſiaſticis, who thereupon ſends forth a ſequeſtration of the profits of the clerk's benefice, directed to the churchwardens, &c. But this writ of ſequeſtration muſt be renewed every Term. 2 Inſt. 4, 472, 627.

By virtue of a fieri facias a term for years may be ſold, as well as any other goods, and without an inqueſt or jury: alſo corn growing may be ſold. 8 Rep. 96: 1 Rol. Abr. 892. And if the ſheriff on a fieri facias, &c. ſelleth a term for years, and after that the judgment is reverſed; the term ſhall not be reſtored, but the money for which it is ſold. 4 Rep. 141.

But where a term is delivered to the plaintiff upon an elegit, and then the elegit is reverſed, reſtitution ſhall be of the term. Cro. Jac. 246. When upon a fieri facias the ſheriff ſells a term; reciting it falſely, as to its commencement and ending, &c. the ſale is void, becauſe there is no ſuch term, yet if he recites it generally, and being of divers years yet to come, ſells all the intereſt which the defendant had in the land, the ſale will be good. 4 Rep. 74.

If an execution is ſued on a fi. fa. and the defendant dies before it is executed, it may be ſerved on the defendant's goods in the hands of his executor or adminiſtrator. Cro. Eliz. 181. Two fieri facias's are delivered the ſame day to the ſheriff againſt the ſame perſon; he is bound to execute that firſt, which was firſt delivered; and if he executes the laſt firſt, he muſt anſwer it to the party who brought the firſt, who may bring an action againſt him; but the execution ſhall ſtand good. 1 Salk. 330.

A man had a judgment for debt againſt another, and on a fi. fa. the ſheriff took his goods in execution, but the plaintiff ſuffered the goods to remain in the hands of the debtor, and would not let the ſheriff proceed any further: A. B. having alſo a judgment againſt this debtor, on a fieri facias, ſeized upon the ſame goods, and it was held good, for the former was a fraudulent execution. 7 Mod. 37, 38.

On a writ of fieri facias againſt one partner, the ſheriff may take the goods of both; yet the vendee ſhall have only a moiety thereof in common with the other. Comb. 207. By the Common law, goods were bound from the day of the teſte of the writ; but by Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. ſect. 16, they are bound only from the time of delivery thereof, &c. Ibid. See Godb. 147. and further this Dict. titles Sheriff; Extent; Execution.

FIFTEENTHS, A tribute or impoſition of money, antiently laid generally upon cities, boroughs, &c. through the whole realm; ſo called, becauſe it amounted to a fifteenth part of that which each city or town was valued at, or a fifteenth of every man's perſonal eſtate according to a reaſonable valuation. And every town knew what was a fifteenth part, which was always the ſame; whereas a ſubſidy raiſed on every particular man's lands or goods, was adjudged uncertain; and in that regard the fifteenth ſeems to have been a rate formerly laid upon every town; according to the land, or circuit belonging to it. Camd. Brit. 171.

There are certain rates mentioned in Domeſday, for levying this tribute yearly; but ſince, though the rate be certain, it is not to be levied but by parliament. By 31 Ed. 3. c. 13, a fifteenth was granted, for pardon, &c. The 7 Ed. 6. c. 4, granted a ſubſidy and two fifteenths by the temporalty, &c. And in the 1, 5, &c. Eliz. and 1, 3, and 18 Jac. 1, fifteenths and tenths were granted for maintaining the wars, &c.—See Cowell; 1 Com. 309; and this Dict. title Taxes.

FIGHTING AND QUARRELLING, Is prohibited by ſtatute, in a church, or church-yard, &c. on pain of excommunication, and other corporal puniſhment. Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 4. See title Church.

FIGHTWITE, Sax.] A mulct for fighting, or making a quarrel to the diſturbance of the peace.

FIGURES, It was moved to quaſh an indictment, becauſe the year of our Lord in the caption was in figures. But per Hale, Ch. J. the year of the King is enough. Mod. 78. pl. 40: Mich. 22 Car. 2. Anon: Sid. 40: Keb. 19: Sti. 88: 2 Lev. 102.

The Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 14, Allows the expreſſing numbers by figures in all writs, &c. pleadings, rules, orders and indictments, &c. in courts of juſtice, as have been commonly uſed in the ſaid courts, notwithſtanding any thing in the Stat. 4 Geo. 2. 26. See titles Pleading; Error; Amendment.

FILACER, FILAZER OR FILIZER, Filizarius, from Lat. Filum.] An officer of the court of Common Pleas, ſo called, as he files thoſe writs whereon he makes out proceſs. There are fourteen of theſe filazers in their ſeveral diviſions and counties, and they make forth all writs and proceſſes upon original writs, iſſuing out of Chancery, as well real, as perſonal and mixed, returnable in that court: and in actions merely perſonal, where the defendants are returned ſummoned, they make out pones or attachments; which being returned and executed, if the defendant appears not, they make forth a diſtringas, and ſo ad infinitum, or until he doth appear; if he be returned nihil, then proceſs of capias infinite, &c. They enter all appearances and ſpecial bails, upon any proceſs made by them: and make the firſt ſcire facias on ſpecial bails, writs of habeas corpus, diſtringas nuper vicecomitem vel balli-vum, and all ſuperſedeas's upon ſpecial bail: in real actions, writs of view, of grand and petit cape, of withernam, &c. alſo writs of adjournment of a term, in caſe of public diſturbance, &c.

And until an order of court, 14 Jac. 1, they entered declarations, imparlances and pleas, and made out writs of execution, and divers other judicial writs, after appearance: but that order limited their proceedings to all matters before appearance, and the prothonotaries to all after. The filazers of the Common Pleas have been officers of that court before the Stat. 10 H. 6. c. 4, wherein they are mentioned: and in the King's Bench, of later times, there have been filazers, who make out proceſs upon original original writs returnable in that court, on actions in general.

FILE, Filacium.] A thread, ſtring or wire, upon which writs, and other exhibits in courts and offices are faſtened or filed, for the more ſafe keeping and ready turning to the ſame. A file is a record of the court; and the filing of proceſs of a court, makes it a record of it. 1 Lil. 112. An original writ may be filed after judgment given in the cauſe, if ſued forth before; declarations, &c. are to be filed: and affidavits muſt be filed, ſome before read in court; and ſome preſently when read in court. Ibid. 113. Before filing a record removed by certiorari, the juſtices of B. R. may refuſe to receive it, if it appears to be for delay, &c. and remand it back for the expedition of juſtice: but if the certiorari be once filed, the proceedings below cannot be revived. An indictment, &c. cannot be amended after filed. See this Dict. titles Certiorari: Amendment.

FIELD-ALE OR FILKDALE; A kind of drinking in the field, by bailiffs of hundreds; for which they gathered money of the inhabitants of the hundred to which they belonged: but it has been long ſince prohibited. Bract: 4 Inſt. 307.

FILICETUM, A ferny ground.—Co. Lit. 4.

FILIOLUS, Is properly a little ſon; a godſon.—Dugd. Warwickſh. 697.

FILUM AQUÆ, The thread or middle of the ſtream where a river parts two lordſhips: Et habeant iſtas buttas uſque ad filum aquæ prædictæ. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. f. 390: File du Mer the high tide of the ſea. Rot. Parl. 11 H. 4. It is alſo the middle of any river or ſtream which divides counties, townſhips, pariſhes, manors, liberties, &c.

FINDERS, Mentioned in ſeveral ancient ſtatutes, ſeem to be the ſame with thoſe which we now call Searchers who are imployed for the diſcovery of goods imported, or exported, without paying cuſtom. See title Cuſtoms.

FINE OF LANDS.

THE LAW on this ſubject, of itſelf very extenſive, is alſo cloſely implicated with that of Recoveries.—A definition of both terms is therefore here given, with ſome idea of the diſtinct nature of thoſe aſſurances.—It might perhaps have been eligible to have brought together the law on both thoſe ſubjects, but that was, to the preſent editor, more deſirable than practicable. See therefore this Dict. title Recovery, for what relates excluſively thereto.

A FINE. Finis, or Finalis Concordia; from the words with which it begins; and alſo from its effect in putting a final end to all ſuits and contentions.] A ſolemn amicable agreement or compoſition of a ſuit, (whether that ſuit be real or fictitious,) made between the demandant and tenant, with the conſent of the judges; and enrolled among the records of the court, where the ſuit was commenced; by which agreement freehold property may be transferred, ſettled and limited. See Cruiſe on Fines, 1ſt edit. 4, 89, 92.

Shepherd ſays, ſometimes it is taken for "a final agreement or conveyance upon record for the ſettling and ſecuring of lands and tenements;" and ſo it is deſignated by ſome to be, "an acknowledgement, in the king's court, of the land or other things to be his right that doth complain:" and by others "a covenant made between parties and recorded by the juſtices:" and by others "a friendly, real, and final agreement amongſt parties, concerning any land, or rent, or other thing whereof any ſuit or writ is hanging between them in any court:" and by others more fully "an inſtrument of record of an agreement concerning lands, tenements, or hereditaments; duly made by the king's licence, and acknowledged by the parties to the ſame, upon a writ of covenant, writ of right, or ſuch like, before the Juſtices of the Common Pleas or others thereunto authoriſed, and engroſſed of record in the ſame court; to end all controverſies thereof, both between themſelves which be parties and privies to the ſame, and all ſtrangers not ſuing or claiming in due time." Shep. Touchſt. c. 3; and the authorities there cited.

The moſt diſtinguiſhable properties of a Fine are, 1, The extinguiſhing dormant titles by barring ſtrangers; unleſs they claim within five years. 2. Barring the iſſue in tail immediately. [But not barring the remainders or reverſions, which depend on the eſtate-tail barred; except where the tenant in tail has the immediate reverſion in fee in himſelf. See Cruiſe on Fines, 2d edit. 176: 1 Show. 370: 1 Salk. 338: 4 Mod. 1.] 3. Binding Femes Covert, ſee poſt. IV.—Theſe conſtitute the peculiar qualities on account of which a Fine is moſt uſually, if not always, reſorted to, as one of the moſt valuable of the Common Aſſurances of the realm: being now in fact a fictitious proceeding to transfer or ſecure real property by a mode more efficacious than ordinary conveyances. 1 Inſt. 121 a. note 1, 2:—for which ſee, at full length, Mr. Hargrave's excellent Abridgement of the Hiſtory of Fines and their purpoſes.

Fines being agreements ſolemnly made in the king's courts were deemed to be of equal notoriety with judgments in writs of right; and therefore the common law allowed them to have the ſame quality of barring all who ſhould not claim within a year and a day. See Plowd. 357. Hence we may probably date the origin and frequent uſe of Fines as feigned proceedings. But this puiſſance of a Fine was taken away by Stat. 34 E. 3. c. 16: and this ſtatute continued in force till Stat. 1 Ric. 3. c. 7. and 4 H. 7. c. 24; which revived the ancient law, though with ſome change; proclamations being required to make Fines more notorious, and the time for claiming being enlarged, from a year and a day to five years. See poſt. 1. The force of Fines on the rights of ſtrangers being thus regulated it has ever ſince been a common practice to levy them merely for better guarding a title againſt claims, which, under the common ſtatutes of limitation, might ſubſiſt with a right of entry for 20 years; and with a right of action for a much longer time. 1 Inſt. ubi ſupra and ſee poſt.

A RECOVERY.—In its moſt extenſive ſenſe is a reſtitution to a former right by the ſolemn judgment of a court of juſtice. In its general acceptation a Common Recovery is a judgment in a fictitious ſuit, brought againſt the tenant of the freehold, obtained in conſequence of a default made by the perſon who is laſt vouched to warranty in ſuch fictitious ſuit. Cruiſe on Recoveries, 1, 120, 121, 137.

The Common Recovery that is uſed for aſſurance of land is nothing elſe but fictia juris or a certain form or courſe ſet down by law to be obſerved for the better aſſuring of lands and tenements to men. And this is ſomewhat after the example of Recovery upon title, which is without conſent and contrary to the will of him againſt whom the ſame is had: for there is ſo this a colourable ſuit, wherein there is a demandant who is called the recoveror, and a tenant who is called the recoveree; and one that is called (or vouched) to warrant upon a ſuppoſed warranty, who is called the vouchee. Shep. Touchſt. c. 3. and the authorities there cited.

Conſidered as a legal aſſurance or conveyance, it is a Fiction of law, adopted for the purpoſe of deſtroying that ſpecies of perpetuity which was created by the ſtatute de donis; (13 E. 1. ſt. 1. c. 1;) and whereby all tenants in tail are enabled, by purſuing the proper form, to bar their eſtates-tail. 10 Rep. 37. And not only this, but it is alſo a bar to ALL remainders and reverſions depending on ſuch eſtate-tail ſo barred; and to all charges and incumbrances created by the perſons in remainder and reverſion. 1 Rep. 62. But a common recovery does not bar an executory deviſe unleſs the executory deviſee comes in as a vouchee. Fearne 306: Pigot 134: Cro. Jac. 590: Palm. 131—And by Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 15, no eſtate held by ſtatute-merchant, ſtaple, or elegit ſhall be avoided by means of a feigned recovery.—And ſee alſo this Stat. and Stat. of Glouceſter, 1 E. 1. c. 11, as to termors for years.

DISTINCTIONS. Though a Recovery, generally ſpeaking, is a more extenſive ſpecies of conveyance than a Fine; to guard an eſtate againſt all claims and incumbrances, yet the operation of each is not ſeldom neceſſary in aid of the other. A Fine is therefore often levied for the purpoſe of creating a good tenant to the præcipe, on which the Recovery is ſuffered: and a Recovery is frequently ſuffered in order to operate as a diſcontinuance of an eſtate-tail, for the purpoſe of barring remainders or reverſions depending on ſuch eſtates-tail; and thus a conveyance by Fine and Recovery, if unreverſed, bars all the world.

A Fine is technically ſaid to be levied—A Recovery to be ſuffered.—Good writers however have but too frequently confounded the terms.

The Student may now purſue his enquires under the following heads:

I. Generally, of the Nature, ſeveral Kinds, and Effect, of a Fine.
II. Further, of the various Sorts of Fines; and how a Fine operates.
III. Of what Things a Fine may be levied.
IV. By whom, and to whom it may be levied; and ſee poſt VI.
V. Before whom, and in what Manner it may be levied.
VI. Who may be barred by a Fine, and who not.
VII. How a Fine may be reverſed, for Error or Fraud; and of amending Fines.

I. Under this head it will be neceſſary to explain, 1, The nature of a Fine. 2, Its ſeveral kinds. 3, Its force and effect.

1. A Fine is ſometimes ſaid to be a feoffment of record; Co. Lit. 50: though it might with more accuracy be called an acknowledgement of a feoffment on record. By which is to be underſtood, that it has at leaſt the ſame force and effect with a feoffment, in the conveying and aſſuring of lands: though it is one of thoſe methods of transferring eſtates of freehold by the common law, in which livery of ſeiſin is not neceſſary to be actually given; the ſuppoſition and acknowledgment thereof in a court of record, however fictitious, inducing an equal notoriety. But, more particularly, a Fine may be deſcribed to be an amicable compoſition or agreement of a ſuit, either actual or fictitious, by leave of the king or his juſtices; whereby the lands in queſtion become, or are acknowledged to be, the right of one of the parties. Co. Litt. 120. In its original it was founded on an actual ſuit, commenced at law for recovery of poſſeſſion of the land or other hereditaments; and the poſſeſſion thus gained by ſuch compoſition was found to be ſo ſure and effectual, that fictitious actions were, and continue to be, every day commenced, for the ſake of obtaining the ſame ſecurity.

Fines are of equal antiquity with the firſt rudiments of the law itſelf; are ſpoken of by Glanvil. l. 8. c. 1, and Bracton. l. 5, tr. 5. c. 28, in the reigns of Henry II, and Henry III; as things then well known and long eſtabliſhed: and inſtances have been produced of them even prior to the Norman invaſion. Plowd. 369. So that the Stat. 18 E. 1, called modus levandi fines, did not give them original, but only declared and regulated the manner in which they ſhould be levied, and carried on. And that is as follows:

Firſt; The party to whom the land is to be conveyed or aſſured, commences an action or ſuit at law againſt the other, generally an action of covenant, though a Fine may alſo be levied on a writ of meſne, of warrantia chartæ, or de conſuetudinibus et ſervitiis; (Finch L. 278;) by ſuing out a writ of præcipe called a writ of covenant: the foundation of which is a ſuppoſed agreement or covenant, that the one ſhall convey the lands to the other; on the breach of which agreement the action is brought. On this writ there is due to the king, by antient prerogative, a primer fine, or a noble for every five marks of land ſued for; that is, one-tenth of the annual value. 2 Inſt. 511.—The ſuit being thus commenced, then follows:

Secondly; The licentia concordandi, or leave to agree the ſuit: for, as ſoon as the action is brought, the defendant, knowing himſelf to be in the wrong, is ſuppoſed to make overtures of peace and accommodation to the plaintiff; who accepting them, but having upon ſuing out the writ, given pledges to proſecute his ſuit, which he endangers if he now deſerts it without licence, he therefore applies to the court for leave to make the matter up. This leave is readily granted, but for it there is alſo another Fine due to the king by his prerogative, which is an ancient revenue of the crown, and is called the king's ſilver, or ſometimes the poſt fine, with reſpect to the primer fine before-mentioned. And it is as much as the primer fine, and half as much more, or ten ſhillings for every five marks of land; that is, three twentieths of the ſuppoſed annual value. 5 Rep. 39: 2 Inſt. 511: Stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 14.

Thirdly comes the concord, or agreement itſelf, after leave obtained from the court; this is uſually an acknowledgment from the deforciants (or thoſe who keep the other out of poſſeſſion) that the lands in queſtion are the right of the complainant. And from this acknowledgment, or recognition of right, the party levying the Fine is called the cognizor, and he to whom it is levied the cognizee. This acknowledgement muſt be made either openly in the Court of Common Pleas, or before the Lord Chief Juſtice of that court, or elſe before one of the judges of that court; or two or more commiſſioners in the country, empowered by a ſpecial authority called a writ writ of dedimus poteſtatem; which judges and commiſſioners are bound by St. 18 E. 1. ſt. 4, to take care that the cognizors be of full age, ſound memory, and out of priſon. If there be any feme covert among the cognizors, ſhe is privately examined whether ſhe does it willingly and freely, or by compulſion of her huſband.

The concord being the compleat Fine, it ſhall be adjudged a Fine of that term in which the concord was made, and the writ of covenant returnable. 1 Salk. 341. A concord cannot be of any thing but what is contained in the writ of covenant: and the note of the Fine remaining with the Chirographer, it hath been held, eſt principale recordum. 3 Leon. 234.

Though one concord will ſerve for lands that lie in divers counties; yet there muſt be ſeveral writs of covenant. 3 Inſt. 21: Dyer 227. A concord of a Fine may have an exception of part of the things mentioned therein: and if more acres are named, than a man hath in the place, or are intended to be paſſed; no more ſhall paſs by the Fine than is agreed upon. 1 Leon. 81: 3 Bulſt. 317, 318.

By theſe acts all the eſſential parts of a Fine are compleated: and if the cognizor dies the next moment after the Fine is acknowledged, provided it be ſubſequent to the day on which the writ is made returnable, ſtill the Fine ſhall be carried on in all its remaining parts. Comb. 71. See poſt. VII.

Fourthly, comes the note of the Fine: which is only an abſtract of the writ of covenant, and the concord; naming the parties, the parcels of land, and the agreement; this muſt be enrolled of record in the proper office, by direction of St. 5 H. 4. c. 14.

The fifth part is the foot of the Fine, or concluſion of it: which includes the whole matter, reciting the parties, day, year and place, and before whom it was acknowledged or levied. Of this there are indentures made or engroſſed at the Chirographer's office, and delivered to the cognizor and the cognizee; uſually beginning thus, "Hæc eſt finalis concordia; This is the final agreement;" and then reciting the whole proceeding at length. And thus the Fine is completely levied at common law.

By ſeveral ſtatutes, ſtill more ſolemnities are ſuperadded, in order to render the Fine more univerſally public, and leſs liable to be levied by fraud or covin. And firſt, by St. 27 E. 1. c. 1. the note of the Fine ſhall be openly read in the court of Common Pleas, at two ſeveral days in one week, and during ſuch reading all pleas ſhall ceaſe. By Stat. 5 H. 4. c. 14: 23 Eliz. c. 3, all the proceedings on Fines, either at the time of acknowledgement, or previous, or ſubſequent thereto, ſhall be enrolled of record in the Court of Common Pleas. By St. 1 Ric. 3. c. 7, confirmed and enforced by St. 4 Hen. 7. c. 24, the Fine, after engroſſment, ſhall be openly read and proclaimed in court (during which all pleas ſhall ceaſe) ſixteen times; viz. four times in the term in which it is made, and four times in each of the three ſucceeding terms; which is reduced to one in each term by St. 31 Eliz. c. 2; and theſe proclamations are indorſed on the back of the record. It is alſo enacted by St. 23 Eliz. c. 3, that the Chirographer of Fines ſhall, every term, write out a table of the Fines levied in each county in that term, and ſhall affix them in ſome open part of the Court of Common Pleas all the next term, and ſhall alſo deliver the contents of ſuch table to the ſheriff of every county, who ſhall at the next aſſiſes fix the ſame in ſome open place in the court, for the more public notoriety of the Fine.

2. FINES, thus levied are of four kinds:

Firſt, What, in law French, is called a Fine "ſur cognizance de droit, come ceo que il ad de ſon done;" or, a Fine upon acknowledgment of the right of the cognizee, as that which he hath of the gift of the cognizor. This is the beſt and ſureſt kind of Fine, for thereby the deforciant, in order to keep his covenant with the plaintiff, of conveying to him the lands in queſtion, and at the ſame time to avoid the formality of an actual feoffment and livery, acknowledges in court a former feoffment or giſt in poſſeſſion, to have been made by him to the plaintiff. This Fine therefore is ſaid to be a feoffment of record; the livery, thus acknowledged in court, being equivalent to an actual livery: ſo that this aſſurance is rather a confeſſion of a former conveyance, than a conveyance now originally made; for the deforciant, or cognizor, acknowledges, cognoſcit, the right to be in the plaintiff, or cognizee, as that which he hath, de ſon done, of the proper gift of himſelf, the cognizor.

Secondly, a Fine "ſur cognizance de droit tantum," or, upon acknowledgment of the right merely; not with the circumſtance of a preceding gift from the cognizor. This is commonly uſed to paſs a reverſionary intereſt, which is in the cognizor. For of ſuch reverſions there can be no feoffment, or donation with livery ſuppoſed; as the poſſeſſion during the particular eſtate belongs to a third perſon. Moor. 629. It is worded in this manner, "that the cognizor acknowledges the right to be in the cognizee; and grants for himſelf and his heirs that the reverſion, after the particular eſtate determines, ſhall go to the cognizee." Weſt. Symb. p. 2. § 95.

Thirdly a Fine "ſur conceſſit," is where the cognizor, in order to make an end of diſputes, though he acknowledges no precedent right, yet grants to the cognizee an eſtate de novo, uſually for life or years, by way of ſuppoſed compoſition. And this may be done reſerving a rent, or the like; for it operates as a new grant. Weſt. p. 2. § 66.

Fourthly, A Fine, "ſur done, grant, et render," is a double fine, comprehending the Fine ſur cognizance de droit come ceo, &c. and the Fine ſur conceſſit: and may be uſed to create particular limitations of eſtate: and this to perſons who are ſtrangers, or not named in the writ of covenant; whereas the Fine ſur cognizance de droit come ceo, &c. conveys nothing but an abſolute eſtate, either of inheritance or at leaſt of freehold. Salk. 340. In this laſt ſpecies of Fines, the cognizee, after the right is acknowledged to be in him, grants back again or renders to the cognizor, or perhaps to a ſtranger, ſome other eſtate in the premiſes. But, in general, the firſt ſpecies of Fine, ſur cognizance de droit come ceo, &c. is the moſt uſed; as it conveys a clear and abſolute freehold, and gives the cognizee a ſeiſin in law, without any actual livery; and is therefore called a Fine executed; whereas the others are but executory. See poſt. II.

3. The force and effect of a Fine, principally depend, at this day, on the common law and the two ſtatutes, 4 H. 7. c. 24: and 32 H. 8. c. 36. The antient common-law, with reſpect to this point, is very forcibly declared by the St. 18 E. 1. ſt. 4, in theſe words, "And the reaſon, why ſuch ſolemnity is required in paſſing a Fine, is this, becauſe the Fine is ſo high a bar, and of ſo great force, and of a nature so powerful in itself, that it precludes not only those which are parties and privies to the Fine, and their heirs, but all other persons in the world, who are of full age, out of prison, of sound memory, and within the four seas, the day of the Fine levied; unless they put in their claim on the foot of the Fine within a year and a day." But this doctrine of barring the right by non-claim, was abolished for a time by 34 E. 3. c. 16. which admitted persons to claim, and falsify a Fine, at any indefinite distance. Litt. § 441; whereby as Sir Edward Coke observes, 2 Inst. 581, great contention arose, and few men were sure of their possessions, till the parliament held in 4 H. 7, reformed that mischief, and excellently moderated between the latitude given by the statute, and the rigour of the common law. For the statute then made (Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 241,) restored the doctrine of non-claim, but extended the time of claim. So that now, by that statute, the right of all strangers whatsoever is barred, unless they make claim, by way of action or lawful entry, not within one year and a day, as by the common law, but within five years after proclamations made: except feme-coverts, infants, prisoners, persons beyond the seas, and such as are not of whole mind: who have five years allowed to them and their heirs after the death of their husbands, their attaining full age, recovering their liberty, returning into England, or being restored to their right mind.

It seems to have been the intention, to have covertly, by this statute, extended Fines to have been a bar of estates-tail. But doubts having arisen whether they could, by mere implication, be adjudged a sufficient bar, which they were expressly declared not to be by the statute de donis; the St. 32 H. 8. c. 36, was thereupon made; which removes all difficulties, by declaring that a Fine levied by any person of full age, to whom, or to whose ancestors lands have been entailed, shall be a perpetual bar to them and their heirs claiming by force of such entail: unless the Fine be levied by a woman after the death of her husband, of lands which were, by the gift of him, or his ancestors, assigned to her in tail for her jointure; or unless it be of lands entailed by Act of Parliament or letters patent, and whereof the reversion belongs to the crown. See Stat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 20.

From this view of the common law, regulated by these statutes, it appears, that a Fine is a solemn conveyance on record from the cognizor to the cognizee; and that the persons bound by a Fine are Parties, Privies, and Strangers.

The Parties are either the cognizors, or cognizees; and these are immediately concluded by the Fine, and barred of any latent right they might have, even though under the legal impediment of coverture. And indeed, as this is almost the only act that a feme covert, or married woman, is permitted by law to do, (and that because she is privately examined as to her voluntary consent, which removes the general suspicion of compulsion by her husband,) it is therefore the usual and almost the only safe method, whereby she can join in the sale, settlement, or incumbrance, of any estate. See post. IV.

Though a wife may thus join her husband in either a Fine or Recovery to convey her own estate and inheritance, or an estate settled upon her by her husband as her jointure, or to convey the husband's estates discharged of dower; (See Cruise: Piggot;) yet if a jointress after her husband's death levies a Fine or suffers a Recovery without the consent of the heir, or the next person entitled to an estate of inheritance, the Fine or Recovery is void, and is also a forfeiture of her estate, by Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20. See post IV.

Privies to a Fine are such as are any way related to the parties who levy the Fine, and claim under them by any right of blood, or other right of representation. Such are the heirs general of the cognizor; the issue in tail since the statute of H. 8; the vendee; the devisee; and all others who must make title by the persons who levied the Fine. For the act of the ancestor shall bind the heir, and the act of the principal, his substitute, or such as claim under any conveyance made by him subsequent to the Fine so levied. 3 Rep. 87.

Strangers to a Fine are all other persons in the world, except only parties and privies. And these are also bound by a Fine, unless within five years after proclamation made, they interpose their claim; provided they are under no legal impediments, and have then a present interest in the estate. The impediments, as hath before been said, are coverture, infancy, imprisonment, insanity, and absence beyond sea; and persons, who are thus incapacitated to prosecute their rights, have five years allowed them to put in their claims after such impediments are removed. Persons also that have not a present, but a future interest only, as in remainder or reversion, have five years allowed them to claim in, from the time that such right accrues. Co. Lit. 372. And if within that time they neglect to claim, or (by the Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16,) if they do not bring an action to try the right, within one year after making such claim, and prosecute the same with effect, all persons whatsoever are barred of whatever right they may have, by force of the statute of non-claim. See this Dict. title Claim.

But, in order to make a Fine of any avail at all, it is necessary that the parties should have some interest or estate in the lands to be affected by it. Else it were possible that two strangers by a mere confederacy, might defraud the owners by levying Fines of their lands; for if the attempt be discovered, they can be no sufferers, as to the estate in question, but must only remain in statu quo; whereas if a tenant for life levies a Fine, it is an absolute forfeiture of his estate to the remainder-man or reversioner, if claimed in proper time. Co. Lit. 251. It is not therefore to be supposed that such tenants will frequently run so great a hazard; but if they do, and the claim is not duly made within five years after their respective terms expire, the estate is for ever barred by it. 2 Lev. 52. Yet where a stranger, whose presumption cannot thus be punished, officiously interferes in an estate which in no wise belongs to him, his Fine is of no effect: and may at any time be set aside (unless by such as are parties or privies thereunto) by pleading that "partes finis nihil habuerunt." Hob. 334. And even if a tenant for years, who hath only a chattel interest and no freehold in the land, levies a Fine, it operates nothing, but is liable to be defeated by the same plea. 5 Rep. 123: Hard. 401. See post. VII.—Wherefore when a lessee for years is disposed to levy a Fine, it is usual for him to make a feoffment first, to displace the estate of the reversioner, and create a new freehold by disseisin. Hardr. 402: 2 Lev. 52. See this Dict. title Recovery.

In

In order to puniſh criminally ſuch as thus put the eſtate of another to the hazard, as far as in them lies, the Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 26, makes it felony without benefit of clergy to acknowledge or procure to be acknowledged, any Fine, Recovery, Judgment, &c. in the name of any perſon not privy or conſenting to the ſame.

II. FINES are generally divided into thoſe with, and without, proclamations; that with proclamations, is termed a Fine according to the ſtatutes 1 R. 3. c. 7: 4 H. 7. c. 24. And ſuch a Fine, every Fine that is pleaded is intended [ſuppoſed] to be, if it be not ſhewn what Fine it is. 3 Rep. 86.

If tenant in tail levies a Fine, and dies before all the proclamations are made, though the right of the eſtate tail deſcends upon the iſſue, immediately on the death of the anceſtor, yet if proclamations are made afterwards, ſuch right ſhall be barred by the Fine, by the ſtatutes 4 H. 7. c. 24; 32 H. 8. c. 36: 3 Rep. 84.

The Fine without proclamations is called a Fine at the Common Law, being levied in ſuch manner as was uſed before the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24; and is ſtill of the like force by the common law, to diſcontinue the eſtate of the cogniſor, if the Fine be executed. A Fine alſo with or without proclamations is either executed or executory: A Fine executed is ſuch a Fine as of its own force gives preſent poſſeſſion to the cogniſee, without any writ of ſeiſin to enter on the lands, &c. as a Fine ſur cogniſance de droit come ceo; and in ſome reſpects a Fine ſur Releaſe, &c, is ſaid to be executed. A Fine executory doth not execute the poſſeſſion in the cogniſee, without entry or action, but requires a writ of ſeiſin; as the Fine ſur conuzance de droit tantum, &c. unleſs the party be in poſſeſſion of the lands; for, if he be in poſſeſſion at the time of levying the Fine, there need not be any ſuch writ, or any execution of the Fine; and then the Fine will enure by way of extinguiſhment of right, not altering the eſtate or poſſeſſion of the cogniſee, however it may better it. Weſt. § 20.

Since the ſtatute of uſes, 27 H. 8, writs of poſſeſſion are never ſued out where Fines are levied to uſes; for the ſtatute executing the poſſeſſion to the uſe, the cogniſee is immediately in poſſeſſion without attornment; and by Stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16, attornment after a Fine is become unneceſſary. Booth, 250: Pig. 49: Cruiſe 59.

Fines are likewiſe ſingle or double; ſingle, where an eſtate is granted by the cogniſor to the cogniſee, and nothing is thereby rendered back again from the cogniſee to the cogniſor. The double Fine is that which doth contain a grant or render back again from the cogniſee, of the land itſelf; or of ſome rent, common, or other thing out of it, and by which remainders are limited, &c. Weſt. §§ 21, 30. A Fine is alſo ſometimes called a double Fine, when the lands lie in ſeveral counties.

Lands that are bought of divers perſons may paſs by one Fine, and then the writ of covenant muſt be brought by all the vendees againſt all the vendors, and they muſt every one of them warrant for himſelf and his heirs; and ſuch a Fine is good. Shep. Touchſt. c. 2. p. 19. And ſuch joint Fines ſeem reaſonable, when the ſeveral purchaſes are of ſmall value, though they are ex gratiâ. See Wilſ. on Fines, 47; where an order of the Chancellor is inſerted, authorizing the curſitor to ſtay the writ when there is more than one demandant and one deforciant, except coparceners, jointenants and tenants in common. It is now the practice to permit two ſeparate purchaſes to be comprized in one Fine on an affidavit that the value of them together does not exceed 200 l.

The firſt kind of Fine ſur cognizance de droit come ceo, &c. is a ſingle Fine levied with proclamations, according to the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24. It is, as has been already ſaid, the principal and ſureſt kind of Fine: and this becauſe it is ſaid to be executed, as it gives preſent poſſeſſion (at leaſt in law) to the cogniſee, ſo that he needs no writ of hab. fac. ſeiſinam, or other means for execution thereof; for it admits the poſſeſſion of the lands, of which the Fine is levied, to paſs by the Fine, ſo that the cogniſee may enter and the eſtate is thereby in him, to ſuch uſes as are declared in the deed to lead the uſes thereof; but if it be not declared by deed to what uſe the Fine was levied, ſuch Fine ſhall be to the uſe of the cogniſor that levied the ſame. 2 Inſt. 513. If the cogniſee of a Fine levied of lands, pay money unto the cogniſor at the time of the Fine levied, and there is no uſe declared of the Fine, the law will conſtrue the Fine to the uſe of the cogniſee: and if there be no money paid by the cogniſee, nor any uſe declared, the Fine ſhall enure to the cogniſor that levied it. Paſch. 23 Car. B. R. Where a Fine is levied to the uſe of two perſons in tail, &c. in conſideration of marriage, though the deed to lead its uſes doth not mention any marriage had between them, yet it hath been adjudged, that the eſtate-tail is executed before marriage; for the Fine doth carry the uſes, and they are perfected by the Fine, notwithſtanding the conſideration is perfected afterwards; but without a Fine, the marriage muſt be had, before any uſe could ariſe. 1 Leon. 138.

If a feme covert alone declares the uſes of a Fine intended to be levied by huſband and wife of her land, and the huſband alone declares other uſes; it hath been held that both declarations of uſes are void, and the uſe ſhall follow the ownerſhip of the lands: But in another caſe it was determined that the uſes declared by the wife were void; and the uſes declared by the huſband, good only againſt himſelf, during the coverture. If huſband and wife levy a Fine of the lands of the wife, and he alone declares the uſes, this ſhall bind the wife, if her diſſent doth not appear; becauſe otherwiſe it ſhall be intended that ſhe did conſent. 2 Rep. 56, 59. Though there be a variance between a deed declaring uſes, and the Fine levied; yet, if nothing appears to the contrary, ſuch Fine by conſtruction of law ſhall be to the uſes declared in the deed, and which is evidence thereof: and where a Fine varies from a former deſcription, it has been held that a new deed made after, will declare the uſes of the Fine. It is not abſolutely neceſſary, to inſert the word Uſe, in the declaration of uſes of Fines; for any words which ſhew the intent of the parties will be ſufficient. 1 Ld. Raym. 289, 290.

A Fine ſur conuzance de droit come ceo, &c. may not be levied to any perſon but one that is party to the writ of covenant; though a vouchee, after he hath entered into the warranty to the demandant, it is ſaid, may confeſs the action, or levy a Fine to the demandant, for he is then ſuppoſed to be tenant of the land, though he is not a party to the writ; and yet a Fine levied by the vouchee to a ſtranger is void. No ſingle Fine can be with a remainder over to another perſon not contained in it: But if A. levy a Fine to B. ſur conuzance de droit come ceo, and

B. by the ſame concord grants back the land again to A. for life, remainder to E. the wife of A. for her life, remainder to A. and his heirs; this will be a good Fine. Plowd. 248, 249.

The ſecond ſort of Fine ſur conuzance de droit tantum, is ſaid to be a Fine executory, and much of the nature of a Fine ſur conceſſit; Though it is moſt commonly made uſe of to paſs a reverſion, it is alſo ſometimes uſed by tenant for life, to make a releaſe (in nature of a ſurrender) to him in reverſion, but not by the word ſurrender; for it is ſaid a particular tenant, as for life, &c. cannot ſurrender his term to him in reverſion by Fine; but he may grant and releaſe to him by Fine. Plowd. 268: Dyer 216. A Fine upon a releaſe, &c. ſhall not be intended to be to any other uſe, but to him to whom it is levied. 3 Leon. 61.

The Fine ſur conceſſit, uſed to grant away eſtates for life or years, is alſo executory, ſo that the cogniſees muſt enter, or have a writ of hab. fac. ſeiſinam to obtain poſſeſſion; if the parties to whom the eſtate is limited, at the time of levying ſuch Fine, be not in poſſeſſion of the thing granted.

The Fine ſur done grant & render, is partly executed and partly executory; and as to the firſt part of it, is altogether of the ſame nature with a Fine ſur conuzance de droit come ceo; but as to the ſecond part containing a grant and render back, it is taken in law to be rather a private conveyance or charter between party and party, and not as a writ of judgment upon record: and this render is ſometimes of the whole eſtate, and ſometimes of a particular eſtate, with remainder or remainders over; or of the reverſion; and ſometimes with reſervations of rent and clauſe of diſtreſs, and grant thereof over by the ſame Fine. 5 Rep. 38.

A. B. and C. D. levied a Fine of lands, and the cogniſee by the ſame Fine rendered back the land to A. B. in tail, reſerving a rent to himſelf, &c. the rent and reverſion; ſhall paſs, though in one Fine; and it ſhall enure as ſeveral Fines. Cro. Eliz. 727.

It is ſaid, a grant and render of land, cannot be immediately in primo gradu to a perſon who is no party to the writ; but mediately, or in ſecundo gradu, it may. 3 Rep. 514: Bro. 108. The Fine with grant and render, differs from the Fine ſur conuzance de droit come ceo, &c. as that muſt be levied of the land in the original; but the grant and render may be of another thing than is expreſſed in the original: though to make a good grant and render, the land rendered muſt paſs to the cogniſee by the Fine; for he cannot render what he hath not. 3 Rep. 98, 510.

A man may not by this Fine reſerve to himſelf a leſs eſtate by way of remainder than the fee: and the render of a rent (if any be) muſt be to one of the parties to the Fine and not to a ſtranger. Dyer 33, 69: 2 Rep. 39. To make a leaſe for years, &c. by Fine with a render; the leſſee muſt acknowledge the land to be the right of the leſſor that is ſeiſed thereof; and then ſuch leſſor grants and renders the ſame back again to the leſſee, for a certain number of years, reſerving rent, &c. and this is a good Fine: but if the leſſor be tenant in tail, then to bind him, he and the leſſee are to acknowledge the tenements the right of A. B. who is to render the ſame Fine to leſſee for years, the remainder to the leſſor and his heirs, &c. 44 Ed. 3. 45: 2 Leon. 206.

A Fine and Render is a conveyance at common law, and makes the cogniſor, on the render back, a new purchaſer; by which, lands ariſing on the part of the mother, may go to the heirs on the part of the father, &c. 1 Salk. 337.

A Fine and Deed to lead the uſes are to be conſidered as one conveyance; and therefore the Fine operates according to the declaration of uſes. Doug. 45: 2 Wilſ. 220.

All ſorts of Fines in general may enure as a confirmation of a former eſtate, which was defeaſible before. 1 Sand. 261. So a Fine may enure by way of extinguiſhment; therefore, if tenant in tail makes a leaſe, or other eſtate to A. and afterwards levies a Fine to B. the leaſe, or other eſtate, ſhall be indefeiſible; for his right during ſuch former eſtate was extinct by the Fine. R. Jon. 60: Cro. Jac. 689. See this Dict. title Eſtates.

Where a Fine and Recovery is of ſo many acres in S. the party intereſted ſhall have his election where and in what parts of the eſtate the Fine and Recovery ſhould operate. Blany (Ld.) v. Mahon; Bro. P. C.

A Fine does not aſcertain, but only compriſes the lands whereof it is levied; ſo that it is in all caſes extremely proper to have a declaration of uſes; that the very lands comprehended in the Fine, and intended to paſs by it, may be preciſely aſcertained. 1 Cruiſe, cap. 7.

Fine by E. to the uſe of himſelf for life, remainder to his wife that ſhould be at the time of his death, for life; remainder to the ſon of E. in tail. E. took to wife A. A Fine levied by E. and A. his wife, who afterwards ſurvived him, and other uſes declared, is no bar to her, becauſe it was uncertain who would be the perſon; but had the perſon been certain, there perhaps, notwithſtanding it was but a poſſibility, it might have been a bar; per Walmſley, J. Cro. Eliz. 826. pl. 31.

III. A FINE may be levied of every ſpecies of real property, as of an houſe, or meſſuage, manor, caſtle, office, rent, &c. and in general it may be laid down as a certain rule, that a Fine may be levied of every thing, whereof a præcipe quod reddat lies; &c. or of any thing, whereof a præcipe quod faciat lies; as cuſtoms, ſervices, &c; or whereof a præcipe quod permittat, or præcipe quod teneat may be brought. 2 Inſt. 513.

As Fines may be levied of things in poſſeſſion, ſo they may be levied of a remainder, or reverſion, or of a right in futuro. 3 Rep. 90.

So now, ſince the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 7, (ſee title Tithes,) it may be levied of rectories, vicarages, tithes, penſions, oblations, and all eccleſiaſtical inheritances made temporal. Of a chantry. So it may be of a ſeignory. Of all ſervices; as homage, fealty, &c. Weſt. Of common of paſture. Of a corody. Of an office; as of the cuſtody of a foreſt. Of a boilary. Of two pools and a fiſhery in the water of D. Of an annuity. See Weſt Symb. 6, 7: Shep. Touchſt. c. 2.

A Fine may be, and uſually is, levied of a ſhare in the New River Water, by the deſcription of ſo much land covered by water; and when a Fine and Recovery of ſuch ſhare is neceſſary, in regard the New River runs through the ſeveral counties of Hertford, Middleſex and London, there muſt be three ſeveral Fines and Recoveries. 2 P. Wms. 128.

Where money is agreed to be laid out in lands to be ſettled in tail, a Fine cannot be levied of the money, but a decree of a court of Equity can bind it, as much as a Fine alone could have bound the land if it had been bought and ſettled. 1 P. Wms. 130: 2 Atk. 453: 3 Atk. 447: 1 Vez. 146: and See 1 P. Wms. 471, 485: 1 Bro. C. R. 223.

Fines may be levied of all things in eſſe, tempore finis, which are inheritable; but not of things uncertain; or of lands held in tail by the king's letters patent; of land reſtrained from ſale by act of parliament, or of lands in right of a man's wife, without the wife, &c. 5 Rep. 225. Weſt. § 25. Nor of common without number. Cruiſe, 121.

A Fine may be levied of a rent-charge, or of a chief rent; and if a perſon who has a rent-charge, levies a Fine of the land, out of which the rent-charge iſſues, it will bar the rent-charge though the Fine be levied of the land, and not of the rent-charge. Cruiſe, c. 7; and the authorities there cited.

A Fine may be levied of an undivided moiety, or fourth part of a manor, as well as of the whole. 3 Rep. 88. But where a Fine is levied of a manor, nothing but a real manor will paſs, and not a manor by reputation only. Cruiſe, c. 7.

The word tenement is not a ſufficient deſcription of any thing whereof a Fine is to be levied: for a tenement may conſiſt of an advowſon, a houſe or land of any kind: and therefore a Fine levied of a tenement is void, or at leaſt voidable by writ of error; but a Fine of a meſſuage or tenement would probably be now held good. Cruiſe, c. 7. See title Ejectment.

And almoſt any kind of contract may be made and expreſſed by a Fine, as by a deed, and therefore it may be ſo made that one of the parties ſhall have the land, and the other a rent out of it; and that one ſhall have it for a time, and another for another time; alſo a leaſe for years, or a jointure for a wife, may be made; and a gift in tail, and a remainder over, may be limited and created thereby. 1 Rep. 76.

IV. THE KING, and all perſons who may lawfully grant by deed, may levy a Fine; but not infants, ideots, lunaticks, &c. 7 Rep. 32. A corporation-ſole may levy a Fine of land which he has in his corporate capacity; but biſhops, deans, and chapters, parſons, &c. are reſtrained from levying of Fines to bind their ſucceſſors. But a Fine cannot be levied by a corporation aggregate; for it cannot act but by attorney, and it cannot make conuſance by attorney. All perſons that may be grantees, or that may take by contract, may take by Fine; though in caſes of infants, feme coverts, perſons attainted, aliens, &c. who, it it is ſaid, may take by Fine, before the ingroſſing of the Fine, there goes a writ to the juſtices of C. B. quod permittant finem levari. Lit. 669. Tenant in fee-ſimple, fee-tail general, or ſpecial, tenant in remainder or reverſion, may levy a Fine of their eſtates; ſo may tenant for life, to hold to the cogniſee for life of tenant for life; but a perſon who is tenant, or hath an intereſt only for years, cannot levy a Fine of his term to another. 3 Rep. 77: 5 Rep. 124.

It is not neceſſary to be in poſſeſſion of the freehold, in order to levy a Fine; but if any one entitled to the inheritance, or to a remainder in tail, levies a Fine, it will bar his iſſue, and all heirs who derive their title through him. Hob. 333.

A Fine by a man non compos, though it ought not to be levied, binds for ever when it is levied. So a Fine by a man attainted for treaſon, or felony, binds all but the king, or the lord of the fee. Weſt. Symb. 3. a: See 2 Wilſ. 220. So a Fine by an infant, or feme covert without her huſband, binds till it be avoided. Vide Com. Dig. tit. Baron and Feme, (P. 1.) Enfant, (B. 2.):—See 2 Black. Rep. 1205, a Fine acknowledged de bene eſſe by a feme covert, whoſe huſband was abroad, before the Lord Chief Juſtice then in Court.

If commiſſioners take a Fine of an infant, &c. the court will grant an attachment againſt them; and upon examination and inſpection, the Fine ſhall be vacated. R. Skin. 24.

Lands aſſured for dower, or term of life, or in tail, to any woman by means of her huſband, or his anceſtors, cannot be conveyed away from her by Fine, &c. without her act; but if a woman and her huſband levy a Fine of her jointure, ſhe is barred of the ſame; though if the jointure be made after coverture, when the wife hath an election to have her jointure, or dower on the huſband's death, it is ſaid this will be no bar of her dower in the reſidue of the land of the huſband. Dyer, 358: Leon. 185. See titles Dower: Jointure.

No Fine of the huſband alone, of the lands of the wife, ſhall hurt her, but that ſhe or her heirs, or ſuch as have right, may avoid it; but if ſhe joins with him, it ſhall bind her and her heirs. Women covert ought to be cautious in levying Fines with their huſbands of their own lands; and if a married woman under age levies a Fine of her lands ſhe cannot reverſe it during her huſband's life, nor after his death, if ſhe be of full age when he dies; but if the huſband dies during her minority, ſhe may. Dyer 359: Wood's Inſt. 243. A married woman ought not to be admitted alone without her huſband to levy a Fine; and if ſhe be received, the huſband may avoid the Fine by entry; but if he do not, it is good to bar her and her heirs, except ſhe be an infant at the time of the Fine levied; the huſband and wife together may diſpoſe of her land, &c. 12 Rep. 122. If baron and feme levy a Fine, the feme within age, ſhe may be brought into court by habeas corpus, and if it be found by inſpection, that ſhe is under age, it hath been adjudged, where the baron and feme brought a writ of error, that as to both, quod finis revocetur. 1 Leon. 116, 117: 3 Salk. 168.

Huſband and wife, tenants in ſpecial tail, the huſband only levies a Fine, this bars the iſſue in tail; but it remains in right to the wife as to herſelf, and to all the eſtates and remainders depending upon it, and all the conſequences of benefit to herſelf and others, ſo long as ſhe lives, as if the Fine had not been levied. Hob. 257, 259. If a huſband make a feoffment of the wife's land, upon condition; which is broken, and the feoffee levies a Fine, and the huſband and wife die having iſſue, and five years paſs; the heir is barred to enter as heir to the father upon the condition, but he ſhall have five years after the death of his father, as heir to his mother. Plowd. 367. When the huſband and wife join in a Fine of the wife's lands, all the eſtate paſſeth from her, and he is joined only for conformity; ſo that if the Fine levied by huſband and wife in ſuch a caſe be reverſed, ſhe ſhall have reſtitution. 2 Rep. 57, 77. A huſband and his wife covenanted to levy a Fine of the lands of the wife, to the uſe of the heirs of the body of the huſband on the wife, remainder to the huſband in fee; both dying without iſſue, it was held that the heir of the wife had the title, becauſe the the limitation, to the heirs of the body of the husband, was merely void, there being no precedent estate of freehold for life, &c. to support it as a remainder. 2 Salk. 675: 4 Mod. 253.

As to femes covert, the books which say, that a Fine shall not bind a woman under coverture unless she be examined, must not be understood as if it were in her power to reverse the Fine for want of her examination, but they are to be understood in this sense, that the Judge ought not to receive a Fine from a feme covert without examining her, lest it should not proceed from her own freedom and choice; but if such a Fine be once admitted, and recorded without any examination, though the judge has omitted a very necessary part of his duty, yet the Fine shall stand, and neither the feme nor her heirs shall be admitted to aver that she was not examined; for that were to lessen the credit of the judgment of the courts of justice, which is the highest evidence of the law. 2 New Abr. 527: See 1 Inst. 121 a. in the note already referred to; in which arguments are brought to prove (apparently with great force and justice) that the common notion, of a Fine binding femes covert merely by reason of the secret examination of the wife by the judges, is incorrect. If the secret examination by itself was so operative, the law would provide the means of effectually adding that form to ordinary conveyances, and so make them conclusive to femes covert equally with a Fine. But it is clearly otherwise; and except in the case of conveyances by custom there must be a suit depending for the freehold, and inheritance; or the examination, being extrajudicial, is ineffectual. This mode of binding femes covert by the judgment of the court in a real action, appears to have arisen from admitting them and their husbands jointly to defend actions brought against the feme for her estate, the adverse judgment on which was final against the feme.—When the transition was made to the case of friendly suits, the form of secret examination was introduced to avoid any undue influence of the husband. That the examination of a feme in other cases does not bind her to the alienation of her property, See 2 Inst. 673: Keilw. 4—20.—The just explanation therefore of the subject seems to be, that the pendency of a real action for the freehold of the land, in consequence of previously takingout an original writ, (without which preliminary, even at this day a Fine is a nullity,) should be deemed the primary cause of a Fine's binding a feme covert; and that her secret examination on taking the acknowledgement of the Fine, is only a secondary cause of this operation of Fines; See this Dict. title Baron and Feme VIII.

If a widow having an estate in dower accept of a Fine, and by the same Fine render back the land for 100 years, &c. this is a forfeiture of her estate within the Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20. See ante I. 3.

A. seised in fee levied a Fine to himself for life, remainder to his wife in tail-male for her jointure: had issue male; husband and wife levied a Fine and suffered a recovery.—After the death of the husband and wife issue male entered by force of the Stat. 11 H. 7. and held lawful. This case is out of the letter, though within the remedy of the statute, for she neither levied the Fine, &c. being sole, or with any after-taken husband but by herself with the husband who made the jointure. Co. Litt. 365 b. See further Vin. Abr. Jointress I. K. Bac Abr. Discontinuance (D); as to what shall be deemed a forfeiture within the stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20; and who shall take advantage of it.

If tenant for life grants a greater estate by Fine than for his own life, it is a forfeiture: and if there be tenant for life, and remainder for life, and the tenant for life levy a Fine to him in remainder and his heirs, both their estates are forfeited; the tenant for life by levying the Fine, and the remainder-man for life by accepting it. 2 Lev. 209. Where a Fine is levied by tenant for life, for a greater estate, the Fine may be good; but it is a forfeiture of the estate of tenant for life, whereof he in remainder, &c. may take present advantage and enter: and when a person enters for a forfeiture, all estates are avoided. Dyer 111. Tho' if such a tenant for life levy a Fine sur grant et release to the cognisee for the life of tenant for life; or by a Fine grant a rent out of the land for a longer time, the Fine is good, and there will be no forfeiture of the estate of tenant for life: so likewise if a Fine be levied of lands by tenant for life to a stranger, who thereby acknowledges all his right to be in the tenant for life, and releases to him and his heirs. 27 Ed. 1. 1: 44 Ed. 3. 36.

If there be tenant in tail upon condition not to alien, or discontinue the lands, &c. if he doth, the donor to re-enter; and his issue levy a Fine of the land, this is a forfeiture of the estate. 1 Leon. 292. An estate being settled on husband and wife for life, remainder to first and other sons in tail, with remainders over; after the birth of their eldest son, they by release and Fine, mortgaged the lands: on a bill exhibited against the son to redeem, &c. he pleaded the marriage settlement of his father and mother, whereby they were but tenants for life, and that his Fine was a forfeiture of their estate; and so it was adjudged. Preced. Canc. 591. But it is said where a wife by settlement has only a trust for life, if she joins with her husband in a mortgage in fee and Fine of the lands; this trust is not forfeited, as it would be in case of a legal estate. 1 P. Wms. 147.

As to Fines levied by an infant, though strictly speaking all contracts made by infants are in their own nature void, because a contract is an act of the understanding, which during their infancy, they are presumed to want; yet civil societies have so far supplied that defect, and taken care of them, as to allow them to contract for their benefit and advantage, with power to recede from and vacate it when it may prove prejudicial to them; now the method to set aside such a contract must be by matter of equal notoriety with the manner in which it was made; and therefore if an infant levies a Fine, which is no more than his own agreement recorded as the judgment of the court, he must reverse it by writ of error, and this must be brought during his minority, that the court of B. R. may by inspection determine the age of the infant; but the judges may in such cases inform themselves by witnesses, church-books, &c. 2 New Abr. 526: Co. Litt. 380 b: Moor 76: 2 Rol. Abr. 15: Bro. tit. Error: Bro. tit. Fines, 74, 79: 2 Inst. 482: 2 Bulst. 320: 12 Co. 122. See this Dict. title Infant and the stat. 7 Ann. c. 19, there cited.

With regard to idiots and lunaticks, it is necessary to distinguish between their acts done in pais, and those solemnly acknowledged on record; though the law is clear, that in neither case are they admitted to disable themselves, for the insecurity that may arise in contracts from counterfeit madness and folly, but their heirs and executors may avoid such acts in pais by pleading the disability; because, becauſe, if they can prove it, it muſt be preſumed real, ſince nobody can be thought to counterfeit it, when he can expect no benefit from it himſelf 4 Co. 124: 12 Co. 124: Co. Lit. 247: Bro. tit. Fait, 62: Cro. Eliz. 398, 622: F. N. B. 202.

But neither the lunatick himſelf, nor his heir, can vacate any act of his done in a court of record; and therefore if a perſon non compos acknowledges a Fine, it ſhall ſtand againſt him and his heirs; for though the judge ought not to admit of a Fine from a man under that diſability, yet when it is once received, it ſhall never be reverſed, becauſe the record and judgment of the court being the higheſt evidence in the law, preſumes the conuſor, at that time, capable of contracting; and therefore the credit of it is not to be conteſted, nor the record avoided by any averment againſt the truth of it. 4 Co. 124: 12 Co. 124: 2 Inſt 483: Bro. tit. Fines, 75: Co. Lit. 247. See this Dict. title Idiots and Lunaticks.

By the Common-law if an infant or ideot has by any neglect or contrivance been permitted to levy a Fine, his declaration of the uſes thereof will be good, ſo long as the Fine remains in force; and if the Fine is never reverſed his declaration of the uſes will be binding and concluſive on him and his heirs for ever: becauſe the law will not preſume that a Fine, which is a ſolemn act on record has been levied by a perſon labouring under ſuch diſabilities; and therefore until the Fine which is the principal is annulled, the declaration of the uſes thereof will remain good. Thus ſtands the Common-law on this point; but as the Court of Chancery has, in many inſtances, compelled perſons who had obtained eſtates under a Fine in a fraudulent manner to reconvey them to thoſe who were really entitled thereto; ſo that Court will interpoſe its authority in caſes of this kind, and not ſuffer the declaration of uſes of a Fine levied by an ideot to bar his heirs; as no ſpecies of fraud can be more evident, than that of obtaining a conveyance from a perſon of this diſcription. Cruiſe c. 15. and ſee poſt VII.

V. FINES are now levied in the court of Common Pleas at Weſtminſter, on account of the ſolemnity thereof, ordained by the Stat. 18 Ed. 1. ſt. 4; before which time they were ſometimes levied in the Exchequer, in the County-Courts, Courts Baron, &c. They may be acknowledged before the Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, as well in, as out of, court; and two of the juſtices of the ſame court, have power to take them in open court: alſo juſtices of aſſiſe may do it by the general words of their patent or commiſſion; but they do not uſually certify them without a ſpecial writ of dedimus poteſtatem. 2 Inſt. 512: Dyer 224. The Chief Juſtice of C. P. may, by the prerogative of his place, take cogniſance of Fines in any place out of the court; and certify the ſame without any writ of dedimus poteſtatem. But the Chief Juſtice of England cannot, nor any other of the juſtices, except the Chief Juſtice of C. P. who hath this ſpecial authority by cuſtom and not by any ſtatute. 9 Co. Read.

The King by patent or commiſſion, with a non obſtante, may give power to A. and B. juſtices of aſſiſe in a circuit, when A. is not a judge of either of the benches, only a ſerjeant at law, &c. to take the cogniſance of all Fines jointly and ſeverally; and upon ſuch a commiſſion, the cogniſance of a Fine taken by A. will be good, without any dedimus poteſtatem ſued out before, or after it. Jenk. Cent. 277.

Fines may be, and are levied in the city of Cheſter, by ſtat. 43 Eliz. c. 15.

In the county palatine of Cheſter, by ſtat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 23.

In the county palatine of Lancaſter ſtat. 37 H. 8. c. 19.

In that of Durham by ſtat. 5 Eliz. c. 27: And in the courts of great ſeſſions in Wales by ſtat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 26. § 40.

The tenure of Ancient Demeſne being a ſpecies of privileged villenage, the tenants thereof could not ſue or be ſued for their lands in the King's courts of Common-law, but had the privilege of having juſtice adminiſtered to them in the court of the manor by petit writ of droit cloſe directed to the bailiffs of the King's manors or to the lord of the manor whereof the lands were held. In conſequence of this principle no Fine could be levied by a tenant in ancient demeſne in the court of Common Pleas; but as ſuch tenants were allowed to commence actions in the court of the manor, they were alſo permitted to compound their ſuits; by which means Fines have at all times been levied of lands held in ancient demeſne upon little writs of right cloſe in the court of the manor. Theſe Fines work a diſcontinuance; and the reaſon is becauſe the freehold is recovered in the action; every recoveror being ſuppoſed to recover a fee-ſimple; and the recovery of the fee ſimple muſt work a diſcontinuance. 1 Cruiſe 93 b: edition 1786.

Fines are alſo taken by commiſſioners in the country, impowered by dedimus poteſtatem; the writ of dedimus doth ſurmiſe, that the parties who are to acknowledge the Fine are not able to travel to Weſtminſter for the doing thereof: theſe commiſſions, general and ſpecial, iſſue out of the Chancery. By the Common-law all Fines were levied in court; but the Stat. of Carliſle, 15 Ed. 2, allows the dedimus poteſtatem to commiſſioners, who may be puniſhed for abuſes, and the Fines taken before them ſet aſide: and it is ſaid an information may be brought by him in reverſion againſt commiſſioners, who take the caption of a Fine, where a married woman, &c. is an infant. 3 Lev. 36.

In the levying of Fines in court, a pleader ſhall ſay Sir juſtice congé d' accorder, &c. i. e. he deſires leave to accord or agree: and when the ſum for the King's Fine is agreed, after proclamation and crying the peace the pleader ſhall repeat the ſubſtance of the Fine, &c. See Stat. de Finibus, 18 Ed. 1. ſt. 4.

Touching the form of Fines, it is to be conſidered upon what writ or action the concord is to be made: and there muſt firſt paſs a pair of indentures between the conuſor and conuſee, whereby the conuſor covenants to paſs a Fine to the conuſee of ſuch things, by a time limited; and theſe indentures preceding the Fine, are ſaid to lead the uſes of the Fine. But by the ſtat. 4 Ann. c. 16, the uſes of a Fine, &c. may be declared after the Fine levied, and be good in law. Upon this the writ of covenant is brought by the conuſee againſt the conuſor, who then yields to paſs the Fine before the judge; and ſo the acknowledgement being recorded, the conuſor and his heirs are preſently concluded, and all perſons (ſtrangers not excepted) after five years paſt; and if the writ, whereon the Fine is grounded, be not a writ of covenant, which is uſual, but of warrantia chartæ, or a writ of right, or of cuſtoms and ſervices, &c. then the writ is to be ſerved upon the party that is to acknowledge the Fine; and he appearing doth it accordingly. Weſt. § 23: Dyer 179.

It is the ſtatute de finibus 18 E. 1. ſt. 4, which directs that a final concord cannot be levied in the King's court, without original writ. And when a Fine is paſſed, it is to be in the preſence of the parties, who are to be of full age, and good memory; and if a feme covert be one, ſhe is to be privately examined if ſhe conſent freely; for if ſhe doth not, the Fine cannot be levied. By ſtat. 1 R. 3. c. 7, when a Fine is ingroſſed and read and proclaimed in the court of C. B. a tranſcript is to be ſent to the juſtices of aſſiſe, and another to the juſtices of the peace of the county where the land lieth, to be openly proclaimed at their ſeveral ſeſſions, which being certified, concludes all perſons; but quere whether this is not ſuperſeded by the Stat. 4 H. 7. c 24, which declares that the proclamations in court being made, the Fine ſhall be final? See ante I.

The day and year of acknowledging a Fine, and warrant of attorney for the ſuffering a recovery, are to be certified with the concord: and an office is erected for the inrolment of writs for Fines, &c. the fees whereof are limited and appointed by ſtat. 23 Eliz. c. 3.

VI. See GENERALLY as to the effect of a Fine ante I. 3.—More particularly,

Intereſts in eſtates which may be barred by Fine, are either intereſts by Common-law, or by cuſtom; as copyholds, &c. And if I have a fee-ſimple, and am diſſeiſed, and the diſſeiſor levies a Fine with proclamations, and I do not claim within five years after, I and my heirs (allowance being made for impediments) are barred for ever. Plowd 353: 3 Rep. 79. If a man purchaſe lands of another in fee, and after, finding his title to be bad, and that a ſtranger hath right to the land, levies a Fine thereof with intent to bar him; and he ſuffers five years to paſs without claim, &c. he is barred of his right for ever: and in theſe caſes none ſhall be relieved in equity. 3 Rep. Doct. & Stud. 83. 155.

Femes covert have five years after the death of their huſbands, to avoid the Fine of the huſband of the wife's lands; and alſo to claim their dower; and if they do not make their claim in that time by action or entry, they are barred by ſtatute. Dyer 72: 2 Rep. 93.

An infant ſhall have five years after he comes of age, although he was in his mother's womb at the time of the Fine levied Plowd. 359. And an infant is allowed time, during his minority, to reverſe his own fine and prevent the bar; and if not reverſed during that time, their Fines will be good. Aſſ. pl. 53.

Strangers out of the realm at the time of the Fine levied, ſhall have five years after their return to prevent the bar; and ſo if they were in England when the Fine was levied, and within five years are ſent in the King's ſervice by his commandment Plowd. 366. A perſon in Scotland or Ireland ſhall be ſaid to be out of the realm. 4 H. 7. c. 24.

Lunatics, &c. ſhall have five years after the cure of their maladies, though the infirmity happen after the Fine levied, if before the laſt proclamation. Plowd. 367: Dyer 3.

And they who have divers defects have five years after the laſt infirmity removed; but if the impediments are once wholly gone, and afterwards the party relapſes into the like again, the five years ſhall begin immediately after the firſt removal; and if the party dies, his heir ſhall not have a new five years. Plowd. 375: Dyer 233.

If a feme covert dies during the coverture, being no party to the Fine, &c. or if an infant being party to the Fine, and having preſent right, dies in his infancy: if a perſon beyond ſea when the Fine was levied, never return &c. a perſon in priſon dies whilſt therein: or if one non compos, &c. dies ſuch, in all theſe caſes, their heirs are not limited to any time. 2 Inſt. 519, 520. Five years are given after a remainder falls; and five years after the forfeiture of tenant for life Plowd. 374.

A future intereſt of another perſon, cannot be barred by Fine and non claim, until five years after it happens; as in caſe of a remainder or reverſion. 2 Rep. 93: Raym. 151. And where there is no preſent nor future right in land, &c. only a poſſibility at the time of levying the Fine, a perſon may enter and claim when he pleaſes. 10 Rep. 49. Alſo when there is only right to a rent, &c. iſſuing out of lands, and not the land in the Fine, the perſons that have it are not barred at all. 5 Rep. 124.

No Fine bars any eſtate in poſſeſſion or reverſion, which is not devеſted, or put to a right. 9 Rep. 106. He that at the time of a Fine levied had not any title to enter ſhall not be immediately barred by the Fine: but this is in caſe of an intereſt not turned to a right, where a man is not bound to claim; and not in the caſe of tenant in tail, barring his iſſue. See ſtat. 32 H. 8. c. 36.

When an eſtate is put to a right, and there comes a Fine and non-claim, it is a perpetual bar. Carter 82, 162. A Fine, ſur grant et render was levied, and a ſcire facias brought and judgment given, and alſo writ of ſeiſin awarded, but not executed: and afterwards a ſecond Fine was levied and executed, and five years paſſed; it was the opinion of the court that the ſecond Fine barred the firſt. March's Rep. 194: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 864.

If a man attainted of treaſon or felony, levy a fine of his land, this, as to the King, and lord of whom the land is held, is void, and no bar to their title of forfeiture: but as to all others it is a good bar. 2 Shep. Abr. 241. One levied a fine, and then was outlawed for treaſon and died; the heir reverſed the outlawry, and it was held the wife ſhould have her dower. if ſhe bring her action within five years. Moor c. 876. A Fine is levied by leſſee for life, &c. who continues the poſſeſſion, and pays the rent; it ſhall not bind the leſſor, who ſhall have five years claim after the determination of the leſſee's eſtate, &c. 3 Rep. 77, 78. If one doth levy a Fine of my land, while I am in poſſeſſion, this will not hurt me; nor where a ſtranger levies a Fine of my lands let to a tenant, if the tenant pays me his rent duly: And if there is tenant in tail, or for life, remainder in tail, &c. and the firſt tenant in tail or for life, bargains and ſells the land by deed inrolled, and levies a Fine to the bargainee, the remainders are not bound; for the law adjudges them always in poſſeſſion. 9 Rep. 106.

Leſſees who pretend title to the inheritance of the lands, cannot by Fine bar the inheritance. 3 Rep. 77. But if a leaſe is made for years, and the leſſor before entry of the leſſee levies a Fine with proclamations, and the leſſee doth not make his claim within five years, the leſſee is barred, and no relief can be had for him; for though the leſſee for years cannot levy a Fine, yet he ſhall be barred by a Fine levied by the tenant of the land, &c. 5 Rep. 124. If a perſon hath a remainder depending on an an eſtate for years, and the termor is diſſeiſed, and a Fine is levied and five years paſs, &c. the termor and reverſioner are barred: becauſe the termor might preſently have entered, and he in remainder had an aſſiſe. Weſt. § 183. In caſe a perſon enters upon, and puts out a copyholder, and the diſſeiſor doth levy a Fine of the lands, if the copyholder ſuffer five years to paſs after the diſſeiſin and Fine, without making any claim, the intereſt of the copyholder and his lord are hereby barred for ever: And if a copyholder makes a feoffment in fee upon good conſideration, and the feoffee levies a Fine with proclamations, and five years paſs, the lord is barred; but if a copyholder himſelf levies a Fine, and five years do paſs, the lord is not barred, for the copyholder not having a freehold, the Fine will be be void. Wood's Inſt. 247, 248.

A Fine of ceſtui que truſt ſhall bar and transfer a truſt, as it would an eſtate at law, if it were on a good conſideration. Chan. Rep. 49. And it is ſaid that ſuch a Fine with proclamations and five years non-claim will bar the remainder of a truſt eſtate. 1 Vern. 226. And Fines of ceſtui que uſe are as good as if levied of immediate poſſeſſions, &c. 2 Nelſ. Abr. 860.

Where the anceſtor is barred by the Fine, there for the moſt part the heir is barred alſo. 9 Rep. 105. Although the iſſue in tail be within age, out of the realm, &c. when a Fine is had and the proclamations paſſed, the eſtate tail ſhall be barred. 3 Rep. 84. The tenant in tail, to him and the heirs male of his body, hath three ſons, the ſecond levies a Fine in the life of the father, and the father dies; here the eldeſt is not barred. But if the elder die without iſſue, living the ſecond, it is a bar to the third. Hob. 333: Jenk. Cent. 96. Tenant in tail diſcontinues: the diſcontinuee levies a Fine with proclamations, and five years paſs without claim in the life of tenant in tail; In this caſe the iſſue may have a formedon, and ſhall not be barred; for his father could not claim. It is otherwiſe where he is diſſeiſed, and the diſſeiſor levies ſuch Fine; there the tenant in tail may claim, &c. Jenk. Cent. 192.

A tenant for life, and he that is next in remainder in tail join in a Fine; it is a good bar to the iſſue in tail for ever, ſo long as that eſtate-tail ſhall continue. 10 Rep. 96.

If one makes his title as heir by another, and not by him that levied the Fine, he is not barred. Alſo he that is privy in blood only, and not in eſtate, is not within the ſtatutes to be barred by a Fine: as if lands are given to a man and the heirs female of his body, and he hath a ſon and a daughter, and the ſon levies a Fine, and dies without iſſue, this is no bar to the daughter; for notwithſtanding ſhe be heir to his blood, yet ſhe is not heir to the eſtate, nor need make her conveyance to it by him; but if her father had levied the Fine, it would have been otherwiſe. Trin. 21 Jac. See Cro. Jac. 689.

A Fine, &c. cannot deſtroy an executory eſtate, which depends upon contingencies, as it is uncertain whether there will ever be an eſtate in being for the Fine to work upon; but a Fine and Recovery will bar an eſtate in remainder, as that is an eſtate veſted. 1 Lill. Abr. 617. See title Recovery. Eſtates by ſtatute-merchant, ſtatute-ſtaple, and elegit, may be barred, if a Fine is levied, and thoſe that have right ſuffer five years to paſs without claim, &c.

5 Rep. 124. If a Fine be levied of lands in ancient demeſne it doth not bar by the ſtatute of non-claim, Lut. 781.—See ante V.

In the caſe of Bourne v. Hunt, where tenant in tail of lands in ancient demeſne levied a Fine, in the court of ancient demeſne for three lives with warranty; then levied a ſecond Fine with warranty to the uſe of himſelf and his heirs; and then bargained and ſold to one and his heirs, the following points were determined: 1ſt. That a Fine may be levied in courts of ancient demeſne.—2dly. That ſuch Fines are no bar to the iſſue in tail, but that they work a diſcontinuance: 3dly. That the diſcontinuance determined with the three lives, and that the ſecond Fine made no diſcontinuance. 4thly. That the iſſue in tail have twenty years to make their entry after the expiration of the leaſe for lives.—See 1 Com. Rep. 93: (Roſe's ed.) Bro. P. C.

As Deans, Biſhops, Parſons, &c. are prohibited by ſtatute to levy Fines, and may not have a writ of right; they are not barred by five years non-claim, and their non-claim will not prejudice their ſucceſſors. Plowd. 238, 375.

By the ancient Common-law, he that had right was to make his claim, &c. within a year and a day of the Fine levied and the execution thereof, or he was barred for ever: But this bar is now gone; and if Fine without proclamations according to the Common-law be now levied, he that hath right may make his claim or entry, at any time to prevent the bar. *Co. Where a Fine may be a bar as to ſome lands, and not as to other lands, See F. N. B. 98. A Fine was levied, and five years paſſed without bringing a writ of error; and it was held a good bar within the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 14: Cro. Jac. 333. But it has been adjudged that where five years paſs, that ſhall not hinder, where the Fine is erroneous. 2 Nelſ. Abr. 838.

Although a bill in equity is not ſuch an action as will avoid a Fine, if the ſubject matter of the ſuit be of legal juriſdiction, yet ſtill in ſome inſtances the filing a bill in a Court of equity, will prevent the bar ariſing from a Fine and non-claim: and in caſes of this kind the court will direct a trial at law, with an order that the defendant ſhall not ſet up a Fine in bar of the plaintiff's claim: upon the ſame principles that ſuch court ſometimes directs that the defendants in a ſuit at law ſhall not plead the ſtatute of Limitations. 1 Cruiſe 329. See Pincke v. Thornycroft, 1 Bro. C. R. 289: Bro. P. C.

A. ſeiſed in fee levied a Fine to himſelf for life, remainder to his wife in tail-male for her jointure; had iſſue male; huſband and wife levied a Fine and ſuffered a recovery.—After the death of the huſband and wife iſſue-male entered by force of the ſtat. 11 H. 7; and held lawful. This caſe is out of the letter, though within the remedy of the ſtatute, for ſhe neither levied the Fine, &c. being ſole, or with any after-taken huſband, but by herſelf with the huſband who made the jointure. Co. Litt. 305 b.—See further Vin. Abr. Jointreſs I. K: Bac. Abr. Diſcontinuance (D); as to what ſhall be deemed a forfeiture within the ſtat. 11 H. 7. c. 20; and who ſhall take advantage of it.

VII. FINES MAY BE REVERSED for error, ſo as the writ of error be brought in twenty years, &c. and not afterwards by Stat. 10 and 11 W. 3. c. 14. Which 20 years are to be computed from the time of the Fine levied, and not from the time the title accrued. 2 Stra. 1257.

No perſon can bring a writ of error to reverſe a Fine, or any judgment, that is not intitled to the land, of which the Fine was levied; for the courts of law will not turn out the preſent tenant, unleſs the demandant can make out a clear title, poſſeſſion always carrying with it the preſumption of a good title till the right owner appears; beſides, where the plaintiff in the writ of error cannot make out a title, he can receive no damage by the Fine, which the writ of error always ſuppoſes to be done, tho' it ſhould be erroneous; and therefore it is no leſs than trifling with the courts of juſtice, to ſeek relief when he cannot make it appear that he has received any injury. 1 Roll. Abr. 747: Dyer 90: 3 Lev. 36.

But if there be ſeveral parties to an erroneous Fine, they ſhall all join with the party that is to enjoy the land, tho' they themſelves cannot have any thing. 1 Roll. Abr. 747: Dyer 89.

There muſt be an actual entry to avoid a Fine. The delivery of a declaration in ejectment does not amount to an entry ſufficient for this purpoſe; even though the defendant appears to it, and confeſſes leaſe entry and ouſter; for there muſt be an actual entry made animo clamandi, whereas in ejectment there is only a fictitious or ſuppoſed entry for the purpoſe of making a demiſe. Berrington v. Parkhurſt, Bro. P. C: 2 Stra. 1086. See 1 Vent. 42: 3 Burr. 1897: Doug. 483, 5.—But no entry is neceſſary where the Fine is levied without proclamations; for the ſtat. 4 H. 7. c. 24, does not extend to ſuch a Fine, and it may be avoided at any time within 20 years. 2 Wilſ. 45.—The entry, when neceſſary, muſt be made by the perſon who has a right to the lands or by ſome one appointed by him. 1 Inſt 258 a.

Nothing can be aſſigned for error that contradicts the record; for the records of the courts of juſtice, being things of the greateſt credit, cannot be queſtioned but by matters of equal notoriety with themſelves; wherefore, though the matter aſſigned for error ſhould be proved by witneſſes of the beſt credit, yet the judges would not admit it. 1 Rol. Abr. 757.

If there be error in proclamations it ſhall be taken as a good Fine at common law. 3 Rep. 86. A Fine may ſtand though the proclamations according to the ſtatute are irregular, for Fines are matters of record and remain in ſubſtance and form as they were before. Plowd. 265.

Hence it is, that in a writ of error to reverſe a Fine, the plaintiff cannot aſſign that the conuſor died before the teſte of the dedimus poteſtatem, becauſe that contradicts the record of the conuzance taken by the commiſſioners, which evidently ſhews, that the conuſor was then alive, becauſe they took his conuſance after they were armed with the commiſſion and the dedimus iſſued. Dyer 89 b: 1 Rol. Abr. 757: Cro. Eliz. 469.

But the plaintiff in error may ſay, that after the conuſance taken, and before the certificate thereof returned, the conuſor died; becauſe this is conſiſtent with the record. 1 Rol. Abr. 757.

By the chirograph of a Fine the caption appeared to be on the 23d of December, whereas in fact the Fine was not acknowledged till the 2d of March following, and this was offered to be proved. But the court refuſed to admit the evidence, being of opinion, that no proof of the time of acknowledging a Fine ought to be admitted contrary to, or againſt the chirograph thereof: and that the record which is the chirograph of a Fine, cannot be falſified till it is vacated or reverſed. Say and Seal Ld. v. Lloyd. 1 Salk. 341: 10 Mod. 40: Bro. P. C.

If there is any difference between the record of the Fine, which remains in the poſſeſſion of the chirographer, deemed the principale recordum, and the record which remains with the cuſtos brevium, the latter ſhall be amended, and made according to the former. 3 Leon. 183.

If a leſſee for years, or a diſſeiſſee, or one that hath right only to a reverſion or remainder, levy a Fine to a ſtranger that hath nothing in the land, this Fine will be void or voidable as to the ſtranger; and he that hath cauſe to except againſt it, may ſhew that the freehold and ſeiſin was in another at the time of the Fine levied, and that partes finis nihil habuerunt tempore levationis finis, and by this avoid the Fine: and yet a diſſeiſſor, who hath a fee-ſimple by wrong in him, may levy a Fine to a ſtranger that hath nothing in the land, like unto one that is rightfully ſeiſed of land in fee, &c. and it will be a good Fine. Plowd. 353: 3 Rep. 87. If the conuſor of a Fine hath nothing in the land paſſed, at the time of the Fine levied, the Fine may be avoided: But where the conuſor or conuſee is ſeiſed of an eſtate of freehold, whether by right or by wrong, the Fine will be a good Fine in point of eſtate. 41 E. 3. c. 14: 22 H. 6. c. 43.

Fines are not reverſible for raſure, interlineation, miſ-entry, &c. or any want of form; but it is otherwiſe if of ſubſtance. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 3. A Fine ſhall not be reverſed for ſmall variance, which will not hurt it; nor is there occaſion for a preciſe form in a render upon a Fine, becauſe it is only an amicable aſſurance upon record. 5 Rep. 38. If a Fine be levied of lands in a wrong pariſh, though the pariſh in which they lie be not named, it will be a good Fine, and not erroneous, being an amicable aſſurance: and a Fine of a cloſe may be levied by a lieu conus in a town, without mentioning the town, vill, &c. Godb. 440: Cro. Jac. 574: 2 Mod. 47. If there be want of an original, or no writs of covenant for lands in every county; or if there is any notorious error, in the ſuing out a Fine, or any fraud or deceit, &c. writ of error may be had to make void the Fine. Co. Lit. 9: Cro. Eliz. 469. So if either of the parties dies before finiſhed, &c. And if the conuſor of a Fine die before the return of the writ of covenant, (though after the caption of the Fine) it is ſaid it may be reverſed. 3 Salk. 168.

If either of the parties conuſors die after the king's ſilver is entered, the Fine ſhall be finiſhed, and be good. Cro. Eliz. 469.

If the king's ſilver is not entered before the conuſor's death, the Fine may be reverſed for error. 3 Mod. 140. But in 2 Ld. Raym. 850, it is ſaid, if a Fine be acknowledged before commiſſioners in the country in the long vacation, and before the next term the conuſor dies; though no writ of covenant was ſued, nor king's ſilver entered; yet the Common Pleas will permit the conuſee to enter the Fine as of Trinity Term preceding. See further Vin. Abr. Fine. F. b. 6. In the caſe of Watts v. Birkett, however, where the conuſor died before the return of the writ of the covenant, the Fine was ſet aſide after it had been completed, becauſe the Poſt Fine or king's ſilver, due at the return of the writ of covenant, and not before, became due and was paid after the death of the conuſor. 1 Wilſ. part. 1. p. 115.

A writ

A writ of error may be brought in B. R. to reverſe a Fine levied in C. B. and the tranſcript only, not the very record of the Fine, is removed in theſe caſes: But if the court of B. R. adjudge it erroneous; then a certiorari goes to the chirographer to certify the Fine itſelf, and when it comes up it is cancelled. 1 Salk. 341: And where on a writ of error in B. R. to reverſe a Fine in C. B. the Fine was affirmed; a writ of error coram vobis reſiden' hath been allowed to lie. Ibid. 357. The court of B. R. will not reverſe a Fine without a ſci. fac. returned againſt the tertenant, becauſe the cogniſees are but nominal perſons. Ibid. 339. Though a Fine may be ſet aſide, by pleading that neither of the parties had any thing in the eſtate, at the time of levying the Fine; yet thoſe that are privy to the perſon that levied the Fine, are eſtopped to plead this plea. 3 Rep. 88. In pleading a Fine or recovery to uſes, the deed need not be ſet forth; but the pleader is to ſay, that the Fine, &c. was levied to ſuch uſes, and produce the deeds in evidence to prove the uſes. 8 W. 3. B. R.

Fines may be avoided where they are obtained by fraud, covin, or deceit, though there be no error in the proceſs; and that may be done either by writ of diſceit or averment, ſetting forth the fraud or covin. Cro. Eliz. 471.

Thus if a Fine be levied of land in ancient demeſne, the lord ſhall have a writ of diſceit againſt the conuſor and the tenant, and by that avoid the Fine. F. N. B. 98 a. Moor. 6. See ante, V. VI.

If a Fine be levied to ſecret uſes to deceive a purchaſer, and the conuſee pleads the Fine in bar, the purchaſer may aver the fraud in avoidance of the Fine, by 27 Eliz. cap. 4; and ſuch averment is not contrary to the record, becauſe it admits the Fine, but ſets it aſide for the covin and fraud in obtaining it. 3 Co. 8 a: Plowd. 49 a.

So if a Fine be levied upon an uſurious contract, it may be avoided by averment, becauſe ſuch Fine being levied for ends the law has prohibited, the law will not encourage any evaſion out of the act, nor ſuffer ſuch uſurious contracts to be ſupported by the ſolemn acts of the courts of juſtice againſt the intention of the act. 3 Co. 80.

A fraudulent obtaining of a Fine, or irregularity therein, cannot be relieved againſt in Chancery; but the relief muſt be ſought in the court where the Fine was levied, though the officers may be examined and puniſhed, if they did it criminaliter. And where one was perſonated on levying a Fine, it was not ſet aſide in equity, but a reconveyance ordered of the land. Prec. Ch. 150, 151. For though the court of Chancery does not ſet aſide a Fine ſo fraudulently obtained, nor ſend the party aggrieved to the court of C. P. to get it reverſed, yet it conſiders all thoſe who have taken an eſtate by ſuch a Fine, with notice of the fraud, as truſtees for the perſons who have been defrauded, and decrees a reconveyance of the lands; on the general ground of laying hold of the ill conſcience of the parties to make them do that which is neceſſary for reſtoring matters to their ſituation. 1 Cruiſe 314: See Toth. 101: 1 Eq. Ab. 259: 1 Vez. 289: 2 Vern. 307.

In ſome caſes the court will vacate a Fine upon motion to prevent the parties the trouble and expence of a writ of error. 3 Lev. 36: 2 Wilſ. 115. In Hubert's caſe (Cro. Eliz. 521.) where one levied a Fine in the name of another, not privy nor conſenting thereto, the Fine was declared void by a vacat on the roll; and the Lord Keeper in that caſe ſaid he had always noted this difference—If one of my name levy a Fine of my land, I may well confeſs and avoid this Fine by ſhewing the eſpecial matter, for that ſtands well with the Fine. But if a ſtranger who is not of my name levies a Fine of my land in my name, I ſhall not be received to aver, that I did not levy the Fine, but another in my name; for that is merely contrary to the record: and ſo it is of all recognizances and other matters of record; but I conceive when the fraud appears to the court, as here, they may well enter a vacat on the roll, and ſo make it no Fine; although the party cannot avoid it by averment during the time that it remains as a record.—The offence of levying a Fine in another's name is puniſhed with death by the ſtat. 2 Jac. 1. c. 26, before mentioned. See ante I, 3. ad fin. If a Fine be levied by a perſon who got poſſeſſion under a forged deed, equity will decree againſt the Fine. 2 Atk. 380.

A record of a Fine may be amended, (if the king's ſilver is paid) for miſpriſion of the clerk. 5 Rep. 43.

While the parties are alive, the court will not grant leave for the amendment of a Fine, in the chriſtian name of the plaintiff, for that amounts to making a new Fine. 2 Blac. Rep. 816.—Neither while the parties are alive will they permit the Fine to be amended in the term. 2 Blac. Rep. 788: 3 Wilſ. 249, 250.

Where the deed to lead the uſes is general, and it appears only by affidavit that the intent was to levy the Fine of a greater number of acres than it mentions, the court will not permit an amendment to increaſe the number of acres. 2 Blac. Rep. 102-3.

FINE ADNULLANDO LEVATO DE TENEMENTO QUOD FUIT DE ANTIQUO DOMINICO. A writ directed to the juſtices of C. B. for diſannulling a Fine levied of lands in antient demeſne, to the prejudice of the lord. Reg. Orig. 15. See title Fine.

FINES FOR ALIENATIONS; Were Fines paid to the king by his tenant in chief, for licence to alien their lands according to the Stat. 1 Ed. 3 c. 12; But theſe are taken away by the Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, aboliſhing all tenures but free and common ſocage.

The premiums given on renewal of leaſes, are alſo termed Fines; and there are Fines for alienations of copyholds paid to the Lord. See titles Leaſe; Copyhold.

FINES, FOR OFFENCES. Fine, in this ſenſe, is amends, pecuniary puniſhment, or recompence for an offence committed againſt the king and his laws, or againſt the lord of a manor: In which caſe a man is ſaid finem facere de tranſgreſſione cum rege, &c. Reg Jud. f. 25. a: Cowell.

It ſeems that originally all puniſhments were corporal; but that after the uſe of money, when the profits of the courts aroſe from the money paid out of the civil cauſes, and the Fines and confiſcations in criminal ones, the commutation of puniſhments was allowed of, and the corporal puniſhment which was only in terrorem, changed into pecuniary, whereby they found their own advantage.

This begat this diſtinction between the greater and the leſſer offences; for in the crimina majora there was at leaſt a Fine to the king, which was levied by a capiatur; but upon the leſſer offences there was only an amercement, which was affeered, and for which a diſtringas, or action of debt lay. 2 New Ab. 502.

The diſcretionary Fines (and diſcretionary length of impriſonment) which the courts of juſtice are enabled to impoſe, may ſeem an exception to the general rule, that the puniſhment of every offence is aſcertained by the law. But the general nature of the puniſhment, is in theſe, as in other caſes fixed and determinate; though the duration and quantity of each muſt frequently vary, from the aggravations, or otherwiſe, of the offence, the quality and condition of the parties, and from innumerable other circumſtances.

The quantum in particular of pecuniary Fines, neither can nor ought to be aſcertained by an invariable law. Our ſtatute law therefore has not often aſcertained the quantity of Fines, nor the common law, ever; it directing certain offences to be puniſhed by Fine in general, without ſpecifying the certain ſum; which is fully ſufficient, when we conſider that however unlimited the power of the Court may ſeem, it is far from being wholly arbitrary; but its diſcretion is regulated by law. For the Bill of Rights St. 1 W. & M. ſt. 2. c. 2, has particularly declared, that exceſſive Fines ought not to be impoſed, nor cruel and unuſual puniſhments inflicted: and the ſame ſtatute further declares, that all grants and promiſes of Fines and forfeitures of particular perſons, before conviction, are illegal and void. Now the bill of Rights was only declaratory of the old conſtitutional law: and accordingly we find it expreſsly holden, long before, that all ſuch previous grants are void; ſince thereby, many times, undue means, and more violent proſecution, would be uſed for private lucre, than the quiet and juſt proceeding of law would permit. 2 Inſt. 48.

The reaſonableneſs of Fines in criminal caſes has alſo been uſually regulated by the determination of Magna Charta c. 14, concerning amercements for miſbehaviour by the ſuitors in matters of civil right. "Liber homo non amercietur pro parvo delicto niſi ſecundum modum ipſius delicti, et pro magno delicto, ſecundum magnitudinem delicti; ſalvo contenemento ſuo: et mercator eodem modo, ſalvâ merchandiſâ ſuâ; et villanus eodem modo amercietur, ſalvo wainagio ſuo." A rule, that obtained even in Henry II's time, (Glan. l. 9. cc. 8, 11.) and means only, that no man ſhall have a larger amercement impoſed upon him than his circumſtances or perſonal eſtate will bear: ſaving to the landholder his contenement or land; to the trader his merchandize; and to the countryman his wainage or team and inſtruments of huſbandry. In order to aſcertain which, the great charter alſo directs, that the amercement, which is always inflicted in general terms (ſit in miſericordia) ſhall be ſet, ponatur, or reduced to a certainty by the oath of good and lawful men of the neighbourhood. Which method, of liquidating the amercement to a preciſe ſum, was uſually performed in the ſuperior courts by the aſſeſſment or affeerment of the coroner, a ſworn officer choſen by the neighbourhood, under the equity of the ſtat. Weſt. 1. c. 18, and then the judges eſtreated them into the Exchequer. F. N. B. 76. But in the court-leet and court-baron it is ſtill performed by affeerors or ſuitors ſworn to affeere, that is, tax and moderate the general amercement according to the particular circumſtances of the offence and the offender: the affeeror's oath is conceived in the very terms of Magna Charta. Fitzh. Surv. c 11. Amercements impoſed by the ſuperior courts on their own officers and miniſters were affeered by the judges themſelves; but when a pecuniary mulct was inflicted by them on a ſtranger (not being party to any ſuit) it was then denominated a Fine. 8 Rep. 40. And the antient practice was, when any ſuch Fine was impoſed, to inquire by a jury quantum inde regi dare valeat per annum, ſalva ſuſtentatione ſua et uxoris, et liberorum ſuorum. Gilb. Exch. c. 5. And ſince the diſuſe of ſuch inqueſt it is never uſual to aſſeſs a larger Fine than a man is able to pay, without touching the implements of his livelyhood; but to inflict corporal puniſhment, or a limited impriſonment, inſtead of ſuch Fine as might amount to impriſonment for life. And this is the reaſon why Fines in the King's court are frequently denominated Ranſoms, becauſe the penalty muſt otherwiſe fall upon a man's perſon unleſs it be redeemed or ranſomed by a pecuniary Fine. Mirr. c. 5. § 3: Lamb. Eir. 575.—According to an antient maxim, qui non habet in crumenâ luat in corpore. Yet where any ſtatute ſpeaks both of Fine and ranſom, it is holden that the ranſom ſhall be treble to the Fine at leaſt. Dyer 232.—See 4 Comm. 378—380.

I. Who may fine and amerce, and for what.
II. How Fines, &c. may be mitigated and aggravated; as alſo how they may be recovered, and to whom they are payable.

I. Where a ſtatue impoſes a Fine at the will and pleaſure of the king, that is intended of his judges, who are to impoſe the Fine. 4 Inſt. 71. Courts of record only can fine and impriſon a perſon, (except as aftermentioned). And ſuch a court may fine for an offence committed in court in their view, or by confeſſion of the party recorded in court. 1 Lill. Ab. 621. A man ſhall be fined and impriſoned for all contempts done to any court of record, againſt the commandment of the king's writ, &c. 9 Rep. 60.

If a perſon is arreſted coming to the courts of juſtice to anſwer a writ, the offender doing it ſhall be fined for the contempt: But there has been a difference made where it is done by the plaintiff in the writ, and a ſtranger, who it is ſaid ſhall not be fined. 9 H. 6. c. 55: 1 Danv. 469.

If an officer of the court neglects his duty, and gives not due attendance; a clerk of the peace doth not draw an indictment well in matter of form, or return thereof, upon a certiorari to remove the indictment in B. R; if a ſheriff, &c. make an inſufficient return of a habeas corpus iſſuing out of B. R. &c. or if juſtices of the peace proceed on an indictment after a certiorari iſſued to remove the indictment; the court may fine them. 1 Lil. 620. When a juror at the bar will not be ſworn, he may be fined. 7 H. 6. c. 12. And if one of the jury depart without giving his verdict; or any of the jury give their verdict to the court before they are all agreed, they may be fined. 8 Rep. 38: 40 Aſſ. 10.

Alſo the ſheriff in his torn, and the ſteward of a court-leet, have a diſcretionary power, either to award a Fine, or amercement for contempt to the court; as for a ſuitor's refuſing to be ſworn, &c. and the ſteward of a court-leet may

may either amerce or fine an offender, upon a preſentment &c. for an offence not capital, within his juriſdiction. Keilw. 66: Kitchin 43, 51.

It is ſaid, that ſome courts may impriſon, but not fine, as the conſtables at the petit ſeſſions. 11 Co. 44: 1 Rol. Rep. 74: 11 Co. 43 b. Alſo ſome courts cannot fine or impriſon, but amerce, as the county, hundred, &c. 11 Co. 43 b. But ſome courts can neither fine, impriſon, nor amerce; as eccleſiaſtical courts held before the Ordinary, archdeacon, &c. or their commiſſaries, and ſuch who proceed according to the Canon, or Civil Law. 11 Co. 44 a.

Every court of record may enjoin the people to keep ſilence under a pain; and impoſe reaſonable Fines, not only on ſuch as ſhall be convicted before them of any crime, on a formal proſecution, but alſo on all ſuch as ſhall be guilty of any contempt in the face of the court; as by giving opprobrious language to the judge, or obſtinately refuſing to do their duty as officers of the court. 11 H. 6. 12 b: 1 Rol. Abr. 219: 8 Co. 38: 11 Co. 43: Cro. Eliz. 581: 1 Sid. 145.

If a dead body in priſon, or other place whereon an inqueſt ought to be taken. be interred, or ſuffered to lie ſo long, that it putrify, before the coroner hath viewed it, the gaoler, or townſhip ſhall be amerced. 1 Keb. 278: 2 Hawk P. C If any homicide be committed, or dangerous wound given, whether with or without malice, or even by miſadventure, or in ſelf defence, in any town, or in the lanes or fields thereof, in the day-time, and the offender eſcape, the town ſhall be amerced; and if out of a town, the hundred ſhall be amerced. 3 Inſt. 53: 4 Inſt. 183: Cro. Car. 252: 3 Leon. 207: 2 Inſt. 315: Dyer 210.

Beſides Fines impoſed for offences, it ſeems, that regularly there was a Fine or amercement in all actions; for if the plaintiff or demandant did not prevail, it was thought reaſonable that he ſhould be puniſhed for his unjuſt vexation; and therefore there was judgment againſt him, quod ſit in miſericordia pro falſo clamore. 8 Co. 39: F. N. B. 75.

Hence when the plaintiff takes out a writ, the ſheriff, before the return of it, was formerly obliged to take pledges of proſecution, which, when Fines and amercements were conſiderable, were real and reſponſible perſons, and anſwerable for thoſe amercements; but being now ſo very inconſiderable, that they are never levied, they are only formal pledges entered, viz. John Doe and Richard Roe. 1 Saund. 227. See this Dict. tit. Bail.

In all actions, where the judgment is againſt the defendant, it was to be entered with a miſericordia, or a capiatur; and herein the difference is, that if it be an action of debt, or founded on a contract, the entry is ideo in miſericordia, without aſſeſſing any ſum in certain, which was afterwards aſſeered by the coroners in the proper county; but if it were in action of treſpaſs, the court ſet the Fine, and levied it by a capiatur. 8 Co. 60: 1 Rol. Abr. 212, 219: Cro. Eliz. 844: Cro. Jac. 255: Therefore,

In actions quare vi et armis, as treſpaſs, and the like; if judgment paſs againſt the defendant in a court of record, he ſhall be fined. 8 Rep. 59. But in actions which have not ſomething of force, or fraud, or deceit to the court; if the defendant come the firſt day he is called, and tender the thing demanded to the plaintiff, he is not to be fined. 4 Rep. 49: 8 Rep. 59, 60, 99: 3 Aſſ. 9: 22 Aſſ. 82: 1 Danv. Abr. 471: 1 Vent. 116.

All capiatur Fines are taken away by Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 12. See title Capias pro Fine.

II. A Fine may be mitigated the ſame term it was ſet, being under the power of the court during that time; but not afterwards. T. Raym. 376. And Fines aſſeſſed in court by judgment upon an information, cannot be afterwards mitigated. Cro. Car. 251. If a Fine certain is impoſed by ſtatute on any conviction, the court cannot mitigate it; but if the party comes in before conviction, and ſubmits to the court, they may aſſeſs a leſs Fine; for he is not convicted, and perhaps never might. The court of Exchequer may mitigate a Fine certain, becauſe it is a court of equity, and they have a privy ſeal for it. 3 Salk. 33.

If an exceſſive Fine is impoſed at the ſeſſions, it may be mitigated at the King's Bench 1 Vent. 336. A defendant being indicted for an aſſault, confeſſed it, and ſubmitted to a ſmall Fine; and it was adjudged that in ſuch a caſe he may produce affidavits to prove on the proſecutor, that it was ſon aſſault, and that in mitigation of the Fine; though this cannot be done after he is found Guilty. 1 Salk. 55. If a perſon is found Guilty of a miſdemeanor upon indictment, and fined, he cannot move to mitigate the Fine, unleſs he appear in perſon; but one abſent may ſubmit to a Fine, if the clerk in court will undertake to pay it. 1 Vent. 209, 207: 1 Salk. 55: 2 Hawk. 446.

It is a common practice in the court of B. R. to give a defendant leave to ſpeak with the proſecutor, i. e. to make ſatisfaction for the coſts of the proſecution, and alſo for damages ſuſtained, that there may be an end of ſuits; the court at the ſame time ſhewing, on that account, an inclination to ſet a moderate Fine on behalf of the King. Wood's Inſt. 653. And in caſes where coſts are not given by law, after a proſecutor has accepted coſts from the defendant, he cannot aggravate the Fine; becauſe having no right to demand coſts, if he takes them, it ſhall be intended by way of ſatisfaction of the wrong. 2 H. P. C. 292. See this Dict. title Coſts.

All Fines belong to the King, and the reaſon is, becauſe the courts of juſtice are ſupported at his charge; and wherever the law puts the King to any charge for the ſupport and protection of his people, it provides money for that purpoſe. Bract. 129. When a perſon is fined to the King, notwithſtanding the body remains in priſon, it is ſaid the King ſhall be ſatisfied the Fine out of the offender's eſtate. 4 Leon. c. 393.

By the Common-law, the King, or Lord may, at their election, diſtrain, or bring an action of debt for a Fine or amercement. Cro. Eliz. 581: Savil 93: Raſt. Ent. 151, 553, 606: 2 H. 4. 24 b: 10 H 6. 7: Raym. 68. But with reſpect to Fines, ſet in inferior courts, every avowry, or declaration of this kind ought expreſly to ſhew, that the offence was committed within the juriſdiction of the court, for if it were not, all the proceedings were coram non judice, and a court ſhall not be preſumed to have juriſdiction where it doth not appear to have one. Hob. 129: Raſt. Ent. 553: Co. Ent. 572. Alſo it is adviſable to allege, that the offence was committed, as well as preſented, and to ſhew the names of the preſentors and the aſſeerors in ſetting forth a preſentment or affeerment, and alſo to ſhew that proper notice was given of holding the court. But for this, See Hawk. P. C.

Of common right, a diſtreſs is incident to every Fine and amercement, in a torn or leet, for offences within the juriſdiction thereof; but if the offence were only the neglect of a duty created by cuſtom, and of a private nature, it is clear, that there muſt be a cuſtom to warrant a diſtreſs, and perhaps ſuch cuſtom is alſo neceſſary, though the duty be of a public nature. 2 Hawk. P. C.

Alſo the Sheriff, or Lord may for ſuch Fines or amercements diſtrain the goods of the offender even in the highway, or in land not holden of the lord, unleſs ſuch land be in the poſſeſſion of the crown. 1 Rol. Abr. 670: 2 Inſt. 104. But ſuch Fines and amercements being for a perſonal offence, no ſtranger's beaſts can lawfully be diſtrained for them, though they have been levant and couchant upon the lands of the offender. Owen 146: Noy 20.

A joint award of one Fine againſt divers perſons is erroneous; it ought to be ſeveral againſt each defendant, for otherwiſe one who hath paid his part might be continued in priſon till the others have paid theirs, which would be in effect to puniſh for the offence of another. 2 Hawk. P. C. Fines to the King are eſtreated into the Exchequer.

FINES TO THE KING; Fines le Roy.] Under this head are included Fines for original writs. On originals on treſpaſs on the caſe, where the damages are laid above 40*l.* a Fine is paid, viz. from 40*l.* damages to 100 marks, (66*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*) 6*s.* 8*d.* From 100 marks to 100*l.* the Fine is 10*s.* From 100*l.* to 200 marks, 13*s.* 4*d.* From 200 to 250 marks, 16*s.* 8*d.* From 250 to 300 marks or 200*l.* it is 1*l.* Fine; and ſo for every 100 marks more, you pay 6*s.* 8*d.* and every 100*l* further 10*s.* Every 100*l.* pays 10*s.* Fine. R. H. 6. W. & M. Fines are alſo paid for original writs in debt; for every writ of 40*l.* debt, 6*s.* 8*d.* and if it be of 100 marks, but 6*s.* 8*d* and for every 100 marks 6*s.* 8*d.* &c. alſo for every writ of plea of land, if it be not a writ of right patent, which is for the yearly value of 5 marks, 6*s.* 8*d.* and ſo according to that rate. 19 H. 6. 44: 7 H. 6. 33: New Nat. Br. 212. See title Fines of Lands.

FINE NON CAPIENDO PRO PULCHRE PLACITANDO. A writ to inhibit officers of courts to take Fines for fair pleading. Reg. Orig. 179

FINE CAPIENDO PRO TERRIS, &c. A writ lying where a perſon upon conviction of any offence by jury, hath his lands and goods taken into the King's hand, and his body is committed to priſon; to be remitted his impriſonment, and have his lands and goods redelivered him, on obtaining favour for a ſum of money, &c. Reg. Orig. fol. 142.

FINE PRO REDISEISINA CAPIENDA, A writ that lies for the releaſe of one impriſoned for a diſſeiſin, on payment of a reaſonable Fine. Reg. Orig. 222.

FINE FORCE, Is where a perſon is forced to do that which he can no ways help; ſo that it ſeems to ſignify an abſolute neceſſity or conſtraint not avoidable. Old Nat. Br. 68: Stat. 35 H. 8 c. 12.

FINIRE, To fine, or pay a Fine upon compoſition, and making ſatisfaction, &c. The ſame with fi em facere, mentioned in Leg. H. 1. c. 53. And in Brompton, p. 1105. and in Hoveden, p. 783.

FINITIO, Death, ſo called; becauſe vita finitur mortu. Blount.

FINORS OF GOLD AND SILVER, Are thoſe perſons who purify and ſeparate gold and ſilver from coarſer metals, by fire and water. They are not to allay it; or ſell the ſame, ſave only to the maſter of the mint, goldſmiths, &c. ſtat. 4 H. 7. c. 2.

FIRDFARE AND FIRDWITE; See Ferdfare and Ferdwit.

FIRDERINGA, A preparation to go into the army. Leg. H. 1.

FIRE and FIRE-COCKS. By ſtat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 78, (the laſt building act,) Churchwardens in London and within the bills of mortality, are to fix fire cocks, &c. at proper diſtances in ſtreets, and keep a large engine and hand engine for extinguiſhing fire, under the penalty of 10*l.* § 75. And to prevent fires, workmen in the city of London, &c. muſt erect party-walls between buildings of brick or ſtone, of a certain thickneſs, &c. under penalties, inflicted by various ſections of the act. On the breaking out of any fire, all the conſtables and beadles ſhall repair to the place with their ſtaves, and be aſſiſting in putting out the ſame, and cauſing people to work, § 85. No action ſhall be had againſt any perſon in whoſe houſe or chamber a fire ſhall accidentally begin. § 86. See this Dict. title Waſte, and alſo ſtat. 6 Ann. c. 31, now ſaid to be made perpetual. 1 Inſt. 530. in n. 7.

By the ſaid ſtat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 78, Rewards for aſſiſtance are payable to the firſt turncock 10*s.*—To the firſt engine not exceeding 30*s.*—The ſecond not exceeding 20*s.*—The third 10*s.*—To be paid by the churchwardens or overſeers, but not without the approbation of an alderman or juſtice of the peace.—The churchwardens, &c. to be repaid by the inhabitant if the fire begins in a chimney. §§ 76, 77, 78—Inſurance offices may lay out the inſurance in rebuilding the premiſes, if the party ſuffering does not give ſecurity to do ſo: or in caſe of diſagreement, not ſettled within 60 days. § 83.

Firemen exempt from being impreſſed § 82.—Penalty on ſervants firing houſes by negligence, 100*l.* or 18 months impriſonment § 84. Reſtrictions on boiling turpentine, 25 Geo. 3. c. 77. See this Dict. tit. Arſon; Burning; Arſon.

FIREBARE, Sax.] A beacon or high tower by the ſea ſide, wherein are continual lights, either to direct ſailors in the night, or to give warning of the approach of an enemy. See title Beacon.

FIREBOTE, Fuel for firing for neceſſary uſe, allowed by law, to tenants out of the lands, &c. granted them. See Eſtovers.

FIRE-ORDEAL, See title Ordeal.

FIRE-WORKS. No perſon whatſoever ſhall make, ſell, &c. ſquibbs, rockets, ſerpents, &c. or caſes, moulds, &c. for making ſuch ſquibbs, and every ſuch offence ſhall be adjudged a common nuſance, and perſons making or ſelling ſquibbs ſhall forfeit 5*l.*

Perſons throwing or firing ſquibbs, &c. or ſuffering them, &c. to be thrown or fired from their houſes incur a penalty of 20*s.* Likewiſe perſons throwing, caſting or firing, or aiding or aſſiſting in the throwing, caſting or firing of any ſquibbs, rockets, ſerpents, or other fire-works, in or into any public ſtreet, houſe, ſhop, river, highway, road or paſſage, incur the like penalty of 20*s.* and on non-payment may be committed to the houſe of correction. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 7.

This

This ſtatute does not take from any perſon injured, by throwing of ſquibbs, &c. the remedy at Common-law; for the party may maintain a ſpecial action on the caſe or treſpaſs, &c. for recovery of full damages.

FIRMA, Victuals or proviſions; alſo rent, &c. See title Farm.

FIRMA ALBA, Rent of lands let to farm, paid in ſilver, not in proviſion for the lord's houſe. See Alba Firma.

FIRMA NOCTIS, A cuſtom or tribute anciently paid towards the entertainment of the King for one night, according to Domeſday.—Comes Meriton T. R. E. reddebat firmam unius noctis, &c. i. e. proviſion or entertainment for one night, or the value of it. Temp. Reg. Edw. Confeſſ.

FIRMATIO, Firmationis Tempus. Doe ſeaſon, as oppoſed to buck ſeaſon. 31 H. 3. Firmatio ſignifies alſo a ſupplying with food. Leg. Inæ, cap. 34.

FIRMURA, Free firmage, W. de Creſſi gave to the monks of Blyth, a mill, cum liberâ firmurâ of the dam of it. Reg. de Blyth. This has been interpreted liberty to ſcour and repair the mill dam, and carry away the ſoil, &c. Blount.

FIRST-FRUITS, Primitiæ.] The profits after avoidance, of every ſpiritual living for the firſt year, according to the valuation thereof in the King's books. Theſe were given in ancient times to the Pope throughout all chriſtendom; and were firſt claimed by him in England of ſuch foreigners as he beſtowed benefices on here by way of proviſion; afterwards they were demanded of the clerks of all ſpiritual patrons, and at length of all other clerks on their admiſſion to benefices: but upon the throwing off the Pope's ſupremacy in the reign of Hen. VIII. they were tranſlated to, and veſted in, the King; as appears by the Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 3; and a new valor beneficiorum, was then made by which the clergy are at preſent rated. This valor beneficiorum is what is commonly called, The King's books: a tranſcript of which is given in Ecton's Theſaurus and Bacon's Liber Regis. And for the ordering thereof, there was a court erected, 32 H. 8, but diſſolved ſoon after.

Though by Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 4, theſe profits are reduced again to the crown, yet the court was never reſtored; for all matters formerly handled therein, were transferred to the Exchequer, within the ſurvey of which court they now remain.

By Stat. 26 H 8, the Lord Chancellor, Biſhops, &c. are impowered to examine into the value of every eccleſiaſtical benefice and preferment in their ſeveral dioceſes; and clergymen entered on their livings before the Firſt fruits are paid or compounded for, are to forfeit double value. But Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 4, ordains, that if an incumbent on a benefice do not live half a year, or is ouſted before the year expire, his executors are to pay only a fourth part of the Firſt fruits; and if he lives the year, and then dies, or be ouſted in ſix months after, but half the Firſt fruits ſhall be paid; if a year and a half, three quarters of them; and if two years then the whole; not otherwiſe. The archbiſhops and biſhops have four years allowed for the payment, and ſhall pay one quarter every year, if they live ſo long upon the biſhoprick: other Dignitaries in the church pay theirs in the ſame manner as rectors and vicars. By the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 8, no tenths are to be paid for the firſt year, as then the Firſt-fruits are due, and by ſeveral ſtatutes of Anne, if a benefice be under 50 l. per annum clear yearly value, it ſhall be diſcharged of the payment of Firſt-fruits and tenths.

This Queen alſo reſtored to the church what had at firſt been thus indirectly taken from it, not by remitting the tenths and Firſt-fruits entirely, but by applying theſe ſuperfluities of the larger benefices to make up the deficiencies of the ſmaller; for this purpoſe ſhe granted a charter, confirmed by Stat. 2 Ann. c. 11, whereby all the revenue of the Firſt-fruits and tenths is veſted in truſtees for ever, to form a perpetual fund for the augmentation of poor livings, under 50 l. a year. This is uſually called Queen Anne's bounty, which has been ſtill further regulated by ſubſequent ſtatutes; though it is to be lamented that the number of ſuch poor livings is ſo great, that this bounty, extenſive as it is, will be ſlow, and almoſt imperceptible in its operation; the number of livings under 50 l. certified by the biſhops at the commencement of the undertaking being 5597; the revenues of which, on a general average, did not exceed 23 l. per ann. See 1 Comm. 285, 6. cum notis ib.

FISH, FISHERIES AND FISHING.

MANY acts of parliament have been made to regulate domeſtic and foreign fiſheries, and the ſale of fiſh.—The following is a very general abridgment of them.

By Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 17, (made perpetual by St. 3 Car. 1. c. 4,) No fiſherman ſhall uſe any net or engine, to deſtroy the fry of fiſh: and perſons uſing nets for that purpoſe, or taking ſalmon or trout out of ſeaſon, or any fiſh under certain lengths, are liable to forfeit 20*s.* and juſtices of peace, and the lords of leets have power to put the acts in force. By Stat. 2 H. 6. c. 15, No perſon may faſten nets, &c. acroſs rivers to deſtroy fiſh, and diſturb paſſage of veſſels, on pain of 5 l.—By Stat. 31 H. 8. c. 2, None ſhall fiſh in any pond or mote, &c. without the owner's licence, on pain of three months impriſonment. Under Stats. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 25, and 4 W. & M. c. 23, No perſon ſhall take any fiſh in any river, without the conſent of the owner, under the penalty of 10*s.* for the uſe of the poor, and treble damage to the party grieved, leviable by diſtreſs of goods; and for want of diſtreſs, the offender is to be committed to the houſe of correction for a month: alſo nets, angles, &c. of poachers may be ſeized, by the owners of rivers, or by any perſons by warrant from a juſtice of peace, &c. See tit. Game; and poſt, Fiſhing, right of.

By St. 5 Geo. 3. c. 14, Perſons ſtealing or deſtroying fiſh in fiſh-ponds, or receiving ſtolen fiſh, are to be tranſported for ſeven years. See tit. Black Act.—And a forfeiture of 5 l. to the owner of the fiſhery, is made payable by perſons taking or deſtroying (or attempting ſo to do) any fiſh in any river or other water within any incloſed ground being private property.

The Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 21, was made for the increaſe and preſervation of ſalmon in rivers in the counties of Southampton and Wilts; requiring that no ſalmon be taken between the 1ſt of Auguſt and 12th of November, or under ſize, &c. And by Stat. 1 Geo 1. c. 18, altered as to the river Ribble, by Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 26, Salmon taken in the rivers Severn, Dee, Wye, Ware, Ouſe, &c. are to be 18 inches long at leaſt: or the perſons catching them ſhall forfeit 5 l.; and ſea fiſh long muſt be of the length length following, viz. Bret and turbot 16 inches, brill and pearl 14, codlin, baſs and mallet 12, ſole and place 8, flounders 7, whiting 6 inches long, &c. on pain of forfeiting 20*s.* to the poor, and the fiſh. By Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 33, Perſons that import any fiſh, contrary to the 1 Geo. 1. c. 18, for better preventing freſh fiſh taken by foreigners being imported into this kingdom, &c. ſhall forfeit 100*l.* to be recovered in the courts at Weſtminſter, one moiety to informers, and the other to the poor; and maſters of ſmacks, hoys, boats, &c. in which the fiſh ſhall be imported, or brought on ſhore, forfeit 50*l.*

Beſides the above, thus particularized, the following ſtatutes relate to the ſame ſubject.—Weſtm. 2. (13 E. 1.) c. 47, and 13 R. 2. c. 19, as to Salmon and their fence months.—31 E. 3. ſt. 2. c. 1. and 35 E. 3. (Ordin. of Herrings) as to foreſtalling Herrings.—31 E. 3. ſt. 2. c. 2, ſelling of herrings at Yarmouth.—Id. c. 3. as to Stock fiſh and Salmon.—17 R. 2. c. 9, appoints juſtices to be conſervators of rivers.—14 H. 6. c. 6, as to foreigners ſelling fiſh. —22 E. 4 c. 2: 11 H. 7. c. 23, as to pickled ſalmon and herrings.—2 & 3 E. 6. c. 6, forbids the granting licences to fiſh in foreign parts.—5 Eliz. c. 5, as to toll of fiſh.—39 Eliz. c. 10, (continued by 3 Car. 1. c. 4, and 16 Car. 1. c. 4, though repealed by 43 Eliz. c. 9,) as to aliens fiſhing. —1 Jac. 1. c. 23, as to treſpaſs by herring fiſhers.—3 Jac. c. 12, wears—13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 28, as to pilchard fiſhery. —15 Car. 2. c. 16,—Packing herrings.—Newfoundland fiſhery.—30 Car. 2. c. 9, Severn fiſhery.—4 Ann. c. 15, Stower fiſhery.—2 Geo. 2. c. 19, Oyſter fiſhery in Medway (and ſee tit. Oyſters.)—9 Geo. 2. c. 33, Lobſter fiſhery on the coaſt of Scotland.—11 Geo. 3. c. 27: 15 Geo. 3. c. 43, Salmon fiſhery in the Tweed.—16 Geo. 3. c. 36, Cornwall pilchard fiſhery, and ſee alſo Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 45.

Various ſtatutes have been made as to the particular ſupply and ſale of fiſh in London and Weſtminſter, viz.

Stat. 17 R. 2. c. 9, Appoints the Mayor of London conſervator of the Thames—Stats. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 4: 9 An. c. 26: 3 Geo. 2. c. 27, and 2 Geo. 3. c. 15; for regulating Billingſgate market; The Water bailiff's duty; and the Fiſhmongers' Company.—A long and particular Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 49, to eſtabliſh an open fiſh-market in Weſtminſter has not, it is believed, been ever put in force.—Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 21, regulates the fiſhery in the Thames and Medway, and Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44, was paſſed to protect officers in their duty, under the ſeveral ſtatutes againſt foreſtallers of fiſh, &c.—Finally the Stats. 29 Geo. 2. c. 39, and 33 Geo. 2. c. 27, were made to regulate the ſale of fiſh at the firſt hand in the fiſh-markets in London and Weſtminſter; and to prevent ſaleſmen of fiſh buying fiſh to ſell again on their own account; and to allow bret and turbot, brill, and pearl, although under the reſpective dimenſions mentioned in 1 Geo. 1. c. 18, to be imported and ſold: and to puniſh perſons who ſhall take or ſell any ſpawn, brood, or fry of fiſh, unſizable fiſh, or fiſh out of ſeaſon, or ſmelts under the ſize of five inches.

By this latter act every maſter of a veſſel is to give a true account of the ſeveral ſorts of fiſh brought alive to the Nore in his veſſel, and if after ſuch arrival, he ſhall wilfully deſtroy or throw away any of the ſaid fiſh, not being unwholeſome or unmarketable, &c. he is liable to be committed to the houſe of correction, and kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding two months nor leſs than one. And ſee farther Stat. 2 Geo. 3. c. 15. for the better ſupplying the cities of London and Weſtminſter with fiſh, by means of fiſh machines, and to reduce the exorbitant price thereof; and to protect and encourage Fiſhermen.

For ſo much concerning the ſeveral national fiſheries as relate to the commerce and navigation of the country, See title Navigation-Acts V.

The Newfoundland Fiſheries are at preſent regulated under Stats. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 24, 25: 15 Geo. 3. c. 31: 26 Geo. 3. c. 26: 28 Geo. 3. c. 35: 29 Geo. 3. c. 53.

FISHING, RIGHT OF, AND PROPERTY OF FISH. It has been held, that where the lord of the manor hath the ſoil on both ſides the river, it is a good evidence that he hath the right of fiſhing, and it puts the proof upon him who claims a free fiſhery; but where a river ebbs and flows, and is an arm of the ſea, there it is common to all, and he who claims a privilege to himſelf muſt prove it; for if treſpaſs is brought for fiſhing there, the defendant may juſtify that the place where, is an arm of the ſea, in which every Subject of our lord the king hath and ought to have free fiſhery.

In the Severn, the ſoil belongs to the owners of the land on each ſide; and the ſoil of the river Thames, is in the king, &c. but the fiſhing is common to all. 1 Mod. 105. He who is owner of the ſoil of a private river, hath a ſeparate or ſeveral fiſhery; and he that hath free-fiſhery hath a property in the fiſh, and may bring a poſſeſſory action for them; but communis piſcaria is like the caſe of all other commons. 2 Salk. 637.

There are three ſorts of Fiſheries or Piſcaries. Free Fiſhery; Several (or ſeparate) Fiſhery; and Common of Piſcary.

Common of Piſcary is a liberty of fiſhing in another man's water. 2 Comm. 34. See tit. Common. A Free Fiſhery, or excluſive right of fiſhing in a public river, is a royal franchiſe: this differs from a Several Fiſhery; becauſe he that has a ſeveral fiſhery muſt alſo be (or at leaſt derive his right from) the owner of the ſoil. It differs alſo from a common of piſcary, in that the free fiſhery is an excluſive right, the common of piſcary is not ſo; and therefore in a free fiſhery a man has property in the fiſh before they are caught: in a common of piſcary, not till afterwards. 2 Comm. 39, 40; which ſee. As to a free fiſhery no new franchiſe can at preſent be granted of it, by the expreſs proviſion of Magna Charta, c. 16; and the franchiſe muſt be at leaſt as old as the reign of Hen. II. 2 Comm. 417. One that has a cloſe pond in which there are fiſh, may call them piſces ſuos in an indictment, &c. But he cannot call them as bona & catalla, if they be not in trunks. There needs no privilege to make a fiſh pond; as there doth in caſe of a warren. Mod. Ca 183 See further this Dict. title Game.

FISHERMEN. By Stat. 9 Ann. c. 26, There ſhall be a maſter, wardens and aſſiſtants of the Fiſhmongers' Company in London, choſen yearly at the next court of the Lord Mayor and Aldermen after the tenth of June, who are are conſtituted a court of aſſiſtants: and they ſhall meet once a month at their common hall, to regulate abuſes in fiſhery, regiſter the names of fiſhermen, and mark their boats, &c.

FISHGARTH, A dam or wear in a river, made for the taking of fiſh; eſpecially in the rivers of Ouſe and Humber.

FISH ROYAL, Whale and Sturgeon which the King is intitled to when either thrown on ſhore or caught near the coaſts. Plowd. 315. See tit. King.

FLACO, A place covered with ſtanding water. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 209.

FLAX, See Hemp.

FLECTA, A feathered or fledged arrow; a fleet arrow.

FLEDWITE OR FLIGHTWITE, from Sax. Flyth, Fuga, et Wite, Mulcta.] In our ancient law ſignified a diſcharge from amerciaments, where a perſon having been a fugitive came to the peace of our Lord the King of his own accord, or with licence. Raſtal.

FLEET, Sax. Fleot, i. e. Flota, a place of running-water, where the tide or float comes up.] A priſon in London, ſo called from a river or ditch that was formerly there, on the ſide whereof it ſtood. To this priſon men are uſually committed for contempt to the King and his laws, particularly againſt the courts of juſtice; or for debt, when perſons are unable or unwilling to ſatisfy their creditors: there are large rules, and a Warden or Keeper belonging to the Fleet Priſon, &c. By Stat. 1 Geo. 2. c. 32, the then Warden of the Fleet was diſabled to hold any office, for his notorious oppreſſions of the priſoners; and the King was impowered to grant the ſaid office to ſuch perſon as he ſhould think fit, &c. See titles Gaol: Gaoler: Priſoner.

FLEET-DITCH. The Corporation of London were enabled by Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 22, to fill up Fleet Ditch, and make the ſoil level with the ſtreets: and the fee is veſted in the Mayor and Commonalty. And at the time of building Blackfriars Bridge the ditch was arched over, and ſo filled up to the foot of the bridge, that the ground became level with Fleet-ſtreet.

FLEET OF SHIPS, See title Navy.

FLEM, Flema, from Sax. Flean, to kill or ſlay.] An outlaw; and by virtue of the word Flemaſtare were claimed bona felonum; as may be collected from a quo warranto, Temp. Ed. 3.

FLEMENEFRIT, FLEMENESFRINTHE, FLYMENAFRYNTHE.] The receiving or relieving of a fugitive or outlaw. Leg. Inæ, c. 29, 47: LL. H. 1. c. 10, 12.

FLEMESWITE, Sax.] Fleta, interprets it habere catalla fugitivorum. Lib. 1. c. 47.

FLETA. The title of an ancient law-book, ſuppoſed to have been written by a Judge who was confined in the Fleet priſon. temp. E. 1. Nicolſon's Hiſtorical Engliſh Library 225.

FLIGHT, For crimes committed, See Fugam fecit.

FLOOD-MARK: The mark which the ſea makes on the ſhore, at flowing water and the higheſt tide: it is alſo called High-water Mark.

FLORENCE, An ancient piece of Engliſh gold coin: every pound weight of old ſtandard gold was to be coined into fifty Florences, to be current at ſix ſhillings each; all which made in tale fifteen pounds, or into a proportionate number of half Florences or quarter pieces; by indenture of the Mint, 18 Ed. 3.

FLORIN, A foreign coin; in Spain, 4 s. 4 d. Germany, 3 s. 4 d. and Holland, 2 s.

FLOTA NAVIUM, A fleet of ſhips.—Rot. Francia, 6 R. 2. m. 21.

FLOTAGES, Such things as by accident ſwim on the top of great rivers; the word is ſometimes uſed in the commiſſions of Water Bailiffs.

FLOTSAM, Is where a ſhip is ſunk or caſt away, and the goods are floating upon the ſea. 5 Rep. 106: Flotſam, Jetſam and Lagan are mentioned together; Jetſam being where any thing is caſt out of the ſhip when in danger, and the ſhip notwithſtanding periſheth; and Lagan is when heavy goods are thrown over board before the wreck of the ſhip, which ſink to the bottom of the ſea, but are tied to a cork or buoy in order to be found again. 5 Rep. 106. The King ſhall have Flotſam, Jetſam and Lagan, when the ſhip is loſt, and the owners of the goods are not known; but not otherwiſe. F. N. B. 122. Where the proprietors of the goods may be known, they have a year and a day to claim Flotſam. 1 Keb. 657. Flotſam, Jetſam, &c. any perſon may have by the King's grant, as well as the Lord Admiral, &c. See 1 Comm. 292. and this Dict. title Wreck.

FOCAGE, Focagium.] Houſe-bote or Fire-bote.

FOCAL, A right of taking wood for firing: Mon. Angl. Tom. 1. p. 779.

FODDER, Sax. Foda, i. e. Alimentum.] Any kind of meat for horſes, or other cattle: among the Feudiſts it was uſed for a prerogative of the Prince, to be provided with corn and other meat for his horſes, by his ſubjects, in his wars or other expeditions. Hotom de verb. Feudal.

FODERTORIUM, Proviſion or fodder, to be paid by cuſtom to the King's purveyor. Cartular. MS.

FŒNUS NAUTICUM, Bottomry; See that title; and title Inſurance.

FŒSA, Fr. Foiſſon.] Graſs, herbage. Mon. Angl. Tom. 2. p. 506.

FOGAGE, Fogagium.] Fog or rank after-graſs, not eaten in ſummer. LL. Foreſtar. Scot. c. 16.

FOITERERS, Vagabonds. Blount. See Faitours.

FOLC-LANDS, Sax.] Copyhold lands; ſo called in the time of the Saxons, as charter lands were called Boc-lands, Kitch. 174. Folkland was terra vulgi or popularis, the land of the vulgar people, who had no certain eſtate therein, but held the ſame under the rents and ſervices accuſtomed or agreed, at the will only of their Lord the Thane; and it was therefore not put in writing, but accounted prædium ruſticum & ignobile. Spelm. of Feuds, cap. 5. See this Dict. titles Copyhold; Tenure.

FOLC-MOTE, OR FOLK-MOTE, Sax.] Folgemot, Conventus populi.] Is compounded of Folk, populus, and mote or gemote, convenire; and ſignified originally, as Somner in his Saxon Dictionary ſays, a general aſſembly of the people to conſider of, and order matters of the commonwealth: See Leg. Edw. Confeſſ. cap. 35. Spelman ſays the folcmote was a ſort of annual parliament, or convention of the Biſhops, Thanes, Aldermen and Freemen, upon every May-day yearly; where the laymen were ſworn to defend one another, and the King, and to preſerve the laws of the kingdom, and then conſulted of the common ſafety. But Dr. Brady infers from the laws of our Saxon Kings that it was an inferior court, held before the King's Reeve or ſteward, every month to do Folk right, or compoſe poſe ſmaller differences, from whence there lay appeal to the ſuperior courts. Brady's Gloſſ. p. 48. Squire ſeems to think the Folcmote, not diſtinct from the ſhiremote, or common general meeting of the county. Angl. Sax. Gov. 155 n.

Manwood mentions folkmote as a court holden in London, wherein all the folk and people of the city did complain of the Mayor and Aldermen, for miſgovernment within the ſaid city: and this word in Stowe's time continued in uſe among the Londoners; and denoted Celebrem ex tota civitate conventum. Stowe's Survey.

According to Kennet, the folkmote was a common council of all the inhabitants of a city, town or borough, convened often by ſound of bell to the Mote Hall or Houſe; or it was applied to a larger congreſs of all the freemen within a county, called the Shire-mote, where formerly all knights and military tenants did fealty to the King, and elected the annual ſheriff on the firſt of October; till this popular election, to avoid tumults and riots, devolved to the King's nomination. After which the City Folkmote was ſwallowed up in a ſelect committee or Common Council, and the County Folk-mote, in the Sheriff's Tourn and Aſſiſes. The word Folkmote was alſo uſed for any kind of popular or public meeting; as of all the tenants at the Court-Leet or Court Baron, in which ſignification it was of a leſs extent. Paroch. Antiq. 120.—See further this Dict. title Parliament.

FOLDAGE AND FOLD-COURSE, A liberty to fold ſheep, &c. See Faldage; Faldfee.

FOLGARII, Menial ſervants; Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 10. Houſe-keepers by the Saxons were called Husfaſtene, and their ſervants or followers, Folgheres or Folgeres. LL. Hen. 1. c. 9.

FOOL, A Natural; one ſo from the time of his birth. See title Idiots and Lunatics.

FOOT OF A FINE. See title Fine.

FOOT-GELD. From Sax. Fot, Pes; and Geldan, ſolvere. Pedis redemptio.] An amercement for not cutting out and expeditating the balls of great dogs' feet in the foreſt: to be quit of foot-geld is a privilege to keep dogs within the foreſt unlawed, without puniſhment. Manwood, par. 1. p. 86. See title Foreſt.

FORAGE, Fr. Fourage.] Hay and ſtraw for horſes, particularly for the uſe of horſe in an army.

FORBARRE, To bar or deprive one of a thing for ever. See ſtats. 9 R. 2. c. 2: 6 H. 6. c. 4.

FORBATUDUS, The aggreſſor ſlain in combat.

FORBISHER OF ARMOUR, Forbator.] Si quis forbator arma alicujus ſuſceperit, ad purgandum, &c. LL. Aluredi, MS. c. 22.

FORCE, Vis.] Is moſt commonly applied in pejorem partem, the evil part, and ſignifies any unlawful violence. It is defined by Weſt to be an offence, by which violence is uſed to things or perſons; and he divides it into ſimple and compound; ſimple force, is that which is ſo committed that it hath no other crime accompanying it; as if one by force do only enter into another man's poſſeſſion, without doing any other unlawful act: mixed or compound force, is when ſome other violence is committed with ſuch a fact, which of itſelf alone is criminal; as where any one by force enters into another man's houſe, and kills a man, or raviſhes a woman, &c. And he makes ſeveral other diviſions of this head. Weſt. Symbol. pa. 2. ſect. 65. Lord Coke ſays, there is alſo a force implied in law; as every treſpaſs, reſcous, or diſſeiſin, implieth it; and an actual force, with weapons, number of perſons, &c. where threatning is uſed to the terror of another. Co. Lit. 257. By law any perſon may enter a tavern; and a landlord may enter his tenant's houſe to view repairs, &c. But if he that enters a tavern, commits any force or violence: or he that enters to view repairs, breaketh the houſe, &c. it ſhall be intended that they entered for that purpoſe. 8 Rep. 146. All force is againſt the law; and it is lawful to repel force by force: there is a maxim in our law, quod alias bonum et juſtum eſt, ſi per vim vel fraudem petatur, malum et injuſtum eſt. 3 Rep. 78. Where a crime in itſelf capital, is endeavoured to be committed by force, it is lawful to repel that force by the death of the party attempting. 4 Comm. 181. See title Murder.

FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

An Offence againſt the public peace which is committed by violently taking or keeping poſſeſſion of lands and tenements, with menaces, arms and force, and without the authority of the law; whereby he who hath right of entry is barred or hindred. See 4 Comm. 148. At Common-law, any one who had a right of entry into lands, &c. might regain poſſeſſion thereof by force; but this liberty being much abuſed, to the breach of the public peace, it was found neceſſary that it ſhould be reſtrained. By Stat. 5 R. 2. ſt. 1. c. 8, all forcible entries are puniſhed with impriſonment and ranſom at the King's will. And by Stats. 15 R. 2. c. 2: 8 H. 6. c. 9: 31 Eliz. c. 11: 21 Jac. 1. c. 15, upon any forcible entry or forcible detainer after peaceable entry, into any lands (or benefices of the church) one or more Juſtices of the peace, taking ſufficient power of the county, may go to the place, and there record the force upon his own view, as in caſe of riots; and upon ſuch conviction may commit the offender to gaol till he makes fine and ranſom to the King. And moreover the juſtice or juſtices have power to ſummon a jury to try the forcibly entry or detainer complained of: and if the ſame be found by that jury, then beſides the fine on the offender, the juſtices ſhall make reſtitution, by the ſheriff, of the poſſeſſion, without inquiring into the merits of the title; for the force is the only thing to be tried, puniſhed and remedied by them; and the ſame may be done by indictment at the general Seſſions. But this proviſion does not extend to ſuch as endeavour to maintain poſſeſſion by force, where they themſelves or their anceſtors have been in peaceable enjoyment of the lands, &c. for three years immediately preceding. 4 Comm. 148. And this may be alledged in ſtay of reſtitution, and reſtitution is to be ſtayed till that be tried, if the other will traverſe the ſame, &c. Dalt. 312. See T. Raym. 85: 1 Sid. 149: Salk. 260.

Indictment for forcible entry muſt be laid of liberum tenementum, &c. to have reſtitution by ſtats. 15 R. 2. c. 2: 8 H. 6. c. 9, &c. But by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 15, Juſtices of peace may give like reſtitution of poſſeſſion to tenants for years, tenant by elegit, ſtatute ſtaple, &c. and copyholders, as to freeholders, ſince which ſtatute the eſtate of the perſon ouſted muſt be ſtated, for perhaps he is only tenant at will. Semb. 1 Salk. 260: R. 1 Sid. 102. See farther as to what ſhall be a good indictment, Com. Dig. title Forcible Entry (D. 4.)

Having ſaid thus much generally, we may proceed more particularly to enquire,

I. What ſhall be deemed a Forcible Entry and Detainer under the foregoing Statutes.

II. What Remedy is provided in ſuch Caſes.

I. By ſtat. 5 R. 2. ſt. 1. c. 8, "None ſhall make any entry, into any lands or tenements, (or benefice of holy church ſtat. 15 R. 2. c. 2; or other poſſeſſions, ſtat. 8 H. 6. c. 9. § 2,) but where entry is given by the law; and in ſuch caſe not with ſtrong hand or with multitude of people, but only in peaceable and eaſy manner; on pain of impriſonment and ranſom at the King's will.

When one or more perſons armed with unuſual weapons violently enter into the houſe or land of another; or where they do not enter violently, if they forcibly put another out of his poſſeſſion; or if one enters another's houſe, without his conſent, although the door be open, &c. theſe are all forcible entries puniſhable by law. Co. Lit. 257. So when a tenant keeps poſſeſſion of the land at the end of his term againſt the landlord, it is a forcible detainer. And if a leſſee takes a new leaſe of another perſon, whom he conceives to have better title, and at the end of the term keeps poſſeſſion againſt his own landlord, this is a forcible detainer. Cro. Jac. 199. Alſo perſons continuing in poſſeſſion of a defeaſible eſtate after the title is defeated, are puniſhable for forcible entry; for continuing in poſſeſſion afterwards, amounts in law to a new entry. Co. Lit. 256, 257. And an infant or feme-covert may be guilty of forcible entry within the ſtatutes in reſpect of violence committed by them in perſon; but not for what is done by others at their command, their commands being void. Co. Lit. 257, 357.

If a man have two houſes next adjoining, the one by a defeaſible title, and the other by a good title; and he uſes force in that he hath by the good title to keep perſons out of the other houſe, this is a forcible detainer. 2 Shep. Abr. 203. A man enters into the houſe of another by the windows, and then threatneth the party, and he for fear doth leave the houſe, it is a forcible entry: ſo if one enter a houſe when no perſon is therein, with armed men, &c. Moor Caſ. 185. If a perſon after peaceable entry, ſhall make uſe of arms to defend his poſſeſſion, &c. it will be forcible detainer: a man puts another out of his houſe by force, if he then puts in one of his ſervants in a peaceable manner, who keeps out the party, &c. it will be a forcible entry, but not a detainer; but if himſelf remaineth there with force, this makes a forcible detainer. If I hear that perſons will come to my houſe to beat me, &c. and I take in force to defend myſelf, it is no forcible detainer; though where they are coming to take lawful poſſeſſion only, it is otherwiſe. 2 Shep. 203.

This offence may be committed of a rent, as well as of a houſe or land: as where one comes to diſtrain, and the tenant threatens to kill him, or forcibly makes reſiſtance, &c. 2 Shep. 201. But forcibly entry cannot be of a way or other eaſement; or of a common or office. 1 Hawk. P. C. So no man can be guilty of forcible entry, for entring with violence into lands or houſes in his own ſole poſſeſſion at the time of entry; as by breaking open doors &c. of his houſe detained from him by one who has the bare cuſtody of it; but jointenants, or tenants in common, may be guilty of forcible entry, and holding out their companions. A perſon is not guilty of a forcible detainer, by barely refuſing to go out of a houſe, and continuing therein in deſpight of another. And no words alone can make a forcible entry, although violent and threatning, without force uſed by the party. 1 Lill. Abr. 514.

A forcible entry may be committed by a ſingle perſon as well as by 20, and all who accompany a man when he makes a forcible entry ſhall be adjudged to enter with him, whether they actually come upon the lands or not. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 64.

The ſame circumſtances of violence or terror which will make an entry forcible will make a detainer forcible alſo. And a detainer may be forcible whether the entry were forcible or not. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 64.

If a Juſtice of peace come to view a force in a houſe, and they refuſe to let him in; this of itſelf will make a forcible detainer in all caſes; but it muſt be upon complaint made. Dalt. 312.

II. The Remedy may be, by action; or by Juſtices of peace upon view; or by indictment or inquiſition.

By Stat. 8 H. 6. c. 9. § 6, "If any perſon be put out or diſſeiſed of any lands or tenements in forcible manner, or put out forcibly and after holden out with ſtrong hand, the party grieved ſhall have aſſize of novel diſſeiſin, or writ of treſpaſs againſt the diſſeiſor; and if he recover, (or if any alienation be made to defraud the poſſeſſor of his right, which is alſo declared by the ſtatute to be void,) he ſhall have treble damages, and the defendant ſhall alſo make fine and ranſom to the King."

But in an action on this ſtatute if the defendant make title which is found for him, he ſhall be diſmiſſed without any enquiry concerning the force; however puniſhable he may be for that at the King's ſuit. 1 Hawk. P. C: Dalt. c. 129.

If in treſpaſs or aſſiſe upon this ſtatute the defendant is condemned by non ſum informatus; he ſhall pay treble damages and treble coſts: adjudged, and affirmed in error. For the words of the ſtatute give them where the recovery is by verdict, or otherwiſe in due manner. Jenk. Cent. 197.

The party grieved if he will loſe the benefit of his treble damages and coſts may be aided and have the aſſiſtance of the Juſtices at the general Seſſions by way of indictment on this ſame ſtatute. Which being found there, he ſhall be reſtored to his poſſeſſion by a writ of reſtitution granted out of the ſame court to the ſheriff. Dalt. c. 129.

Indictment of forcible entry lies not only for lands, but for tithes; alſo for rents: but not againſt a lord entering a common with force, for which the commoner may not indict him, becauſe it is his own land. Cro. Car. 201, 486.

For a more ſpeedy remedy the party grieved may complain to any one Juſtice or to a mayor, ſheriff or bailiff, within their liberties; and it is provided by ſtats. 15 R. 2. c. 2: 8 H. 6. c. 9, that after complaint made to ſuch juſtice, &c. he ſhall within a convenient time at the coſts of the party grieved take ſufficient power of the county, and go to the place where ſuch force is made, and if he ſhall find ſuch force, ſhall cauſe the offenders to be arreſted, and make a record of ſuch force by him viewed; and the offenders ſo arreſted ſhall be put in the next gaol, there to abide convict by the record of the same justice until they have made fine and ransom to the King.

As to restitution to the party injured, it is enacted by the said stat. 8 H. 6. c. 9, though that the persons making such entry be present, or else departed before the coming of the Justice, he may notwithstanding in some town next to the tenements so entered, or in some other convenient place, have power to enquire by a jury of the county as to the persons making such forcible entry and detainer; and the Justice may make his precept to the sheriff, who is to summon the jury. And if such forcible entry or detainer be found before such Justice, then the said Justice shall cause to reseise the lands and tenements so entered or holden, and shall restore the party put out to the full possession of the same. And by the stat. 31 Eliz. c. 11, if on an indictment of forcible entry, &c. it is found against the party indicted, he shall pay such costs and damages as the Judges or Justices shall assess.

Under the above Stat. 15 R. 2. c. 2, any Justice of the peace upon view of the force, may make a record of it, and commit the offender. And this, without a writ directed to him to execute the statutes: and upon any information without a complaint of the party. So every justice may take the sheriff, and posse commitatus, to restrain; or he may break open a house to remove the force. Dalt. c. 44. The record made by a Justice upon view, shall be a conviction, and is not traversable: and ought to be certified to B. R. or the next assises, or quarter-sessions. And if a defect appears, in the conviction, to B. R. it shall be quashed. 1 Sid. 156. See 8 Co. 121. The Justices have power to fine on view: but are not bound to do it on the spot, but may take a reasonable time to consider. See Str. 794: Ld. Raym. 1515.

The Justices, on forcible detainer, may punish the force upon view, and fine and imprison the offenders; Sid. 156. And it hath been held, that in forcible entry and detainer, the jury are to find all or none; and not the detainer, without the forcible entry. 1 Vent. 25.

An indictment will lie at Common law for a forcible entry, though generally brought on the above statutes. But it must shew on the face of it sufficient actual force. 3 Burr. 1702, 1732.

An indictment for a forcible detainer, ought to shew, that the entry was peaceable, Cro Jac. 151.

Indictments for forcibly entry must set forth, that the entry was manu forti, to distinguish this offence from other trespasses vi et armis; and there are many niceties to be observed in drawing the indictment, otherwise it will be quashed. Cro. Jac. 461: Dalt. 298. There must be certainty in this indictment; and no repugnancy, which is an incurable fault. An indictment of forcible entry was quashed, for that it did not set forth the estate of the party: so where the defendant hath not been in possession peaceably three years before the indictment, without saying before the indictment found, &c. And force shall not be intended when the judgment is generally laid, for it must be always expressed. 2 Nelf. Abr. 867, 869.

The Justice may make restitution, (after inquisition found) to the party ousted, by himself, or by his precept to the sheriff. T. Raym. 85: Carth. 496. So restitution shall be made upon an indictment at the quarter-sessions. H. P. C. 140.

An indictment of forcible entry may be removed from before Justices of peace into the court of B. R. coram rege, which court may award restitution. 11 Rep. 65. And the justices before whom such indictment was found, may, after traverse tendered, certify or deliver the indictment into the King's Bench, and refer the proceeding thereupon to the justices of that court.

So justices of jail delivery, upon an indictment before them. So re-restitution shall be, after an ill restitution awarded. Sav. 68: Cro. Jac. 151. So restitution shall be to a disseisor ousted by the force of the disseisee. To a lessee, though the lessor, who was disseised, thereby opposes it. To a copyholder though his lord opposes it. vide Dalt. c. 132.—Contrà before Stat. 21 Jac. c. 15. See Dy. 142 a. in marg.

A copyholder cannot be disseised, because he hath no freehold in his estate; but he may be expelled. And a copyhold tenant may be restored, where he is wrongfully expelled; but if the indictment be only of disseisin, as he may not be disseised, there can be no restitution but at the prayer of him who hath the freehold. Yelv. 81: Cro. Jac. 41. Possession of the termor is the possession of him in reversion: and when a lessee for years is put out of possession by force, restitution must be to him in reversion, and not to the lessee; and then his lessee may re-enter. 1 Leon. 327. A termor may say that he was expelled, and his landlord in reversion disseised; or rather that the tenant of the freehold is disseised, and he, the lessee for years, expelled. 4 Mod. 248: 2 Nelf. Abr. 869. If a disseisee within three years makes a lawful claim, this is an interruption of the possession of the disseisor, H. P. C. 139. Though it has been adjudged, that it is not the title of the possessor, but the possession for three years, which is material. Sid. 149. Since the Stat. 5 R. 2. st. 1. c. 8, if one be seised of lands, and another having good right to enter, doth accordingly enter manu forti, he may be indicted notwithstanding his right, &c. 3 Salk. 170. For a forcible detainer only it is said there is no restitution; the plaintiff never having been in possession. 1 Vent. 23: Sid. 97, 99.

No restitution shall be awarded to an advowson, common, rent, &c. for it shall only be to land. Dalt. c. 44. Nor, where he, who used force has the possession by operation of law: as if a disseisee enters, and afterwards, by force, ousts his disseisor, the possession shall not be restored; for it was revested in the disseisee by his entry. Dalt. c. 132. Nor, if a lessor enters by force, upon the lessee, for a forfeiture; nor to any other than him who was ousted by force, or to his heir. Salk. 587. Or any abator, after the death of the ancestor. Dalt. c. 132. Nor if the party tenders a traverse to the inquisition. 1 Sid. 287. Upon a certiorari delivered to remove an indictment, it shall be stayed. H. P. C. 141. Or, if the indictment appears insufficient. H. P. C. 140. And in such case restitution granted may be stayed before execution. H. P. C. 140. So restitution shall not be, after a conviction by a Justice upon his view. 1 Vent. 308. Nor by justices of assise, gaol delivery, or justices of peace; if the indictment was not found before them, H. P. C. 140: Dalt. c. 44, 131. So restitution shall not be, unless immediately; not four or five years afterwards. Carth. 496.

A record of justices of peace of forcible entry, is not traversable; but the entry and force, &c. may be traversed in writing, and the justices may summon a jury for trial of the traverse. 1 Salk. 353. The finding of the force being in nature of a presentment by the jury, is traversable; and if the Justices of peace refuse the traverse, and and grant reſtitution, on removing the indictment into B. R. there the traverſe may be tried; and on a verdict found for the party, &c. a re-reſtitution ſhall be granted. Sid. 287: 2 Salk. 588. If no force is found at a trial thereof before juſtices, reſtitution is not to be granted; nor ſhall it be had till the force is tried; nor ought the Juſtices to make it in the abſence of the defendant, without calling him to anſwer. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 64.

No other Juſtices of peace but thoſe before whom the indictment was found, may either at ſeſſions, or out of it, award reſtitution; the ſame Juſtices may do it in perſon, or make a precept to the ſheriff to do it, who may raiſe the power of the county to aſſiſt him in executing the ſame. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 64. And the ſame juſtices of peace may alſo ſuperſede the reſtitution, before it is executed; on inſufficiency found in the indictment, &c. But no other Juſtices, except of the court of B. R. A certiorari from B. R. is a ſuperſedeas to the reſtitution; and the juſtices of B. R. may ſet aſide the reſtitution after executed, if it be againſt law, or irregularly obtained, &c. 1 Salk. 154. If juſtices of peace exceed their authority, an information may be brought againſt them. A conviction for forcible entry, before a fine is ſet, may be quaſhed on motion; but after a fine is ſet, it may not; the defendant muſt bring writ of error. 2 Salk. 450.

If a plaintiff proceeds not criminally by indictment for forcible entry, but commences a civil action on the caſe, on Stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 9, the defendant is to plead Not guilty; or may plead any ſpecial matter, and traverſe the force; and the plaintiff in his replication muſt anſwer the ſpecial matter, and not the traverſe; and if it be found againſt the defendant, he is convicted of the force of courſe; whereupon the plaintiff ſhall recover treble damages and coſts. 3 Salk. 169.

A reverſioner cannot bring action of forcible entry, becauſe he cannot be expelled, though he may be diſſeiſed. Dyer 141. The words in the writ to maintain the action are, that the defendant expulit & diſſeiſivit, &c. yet it is ſaid that every diſſeiſin implies an expulſion in forcible entry. Cro. Jac. 31.

Though forcible entry is puniſhable either by indictment or action; the action is ſeldom brought, but the indictment often. But in many caſes it may be much more for the benefit of the party to bring the action.

If a Forcible entry or detainer ſhall be made by three perſons or more, it is alſo a riot, and may be proceeded againſt as ſuch, if no inquiry hath before been made of the force. Dalt. c. 44.

FOREIGN, Fr. foraign, Lat. forinſecus, extraneus.] Strange or outlandiſh, of another country, or ſociety; and in our law, is uſed adjectively being joined with divers ſubſtantives in ſeveral ſenſes. Kitch. 126.

FOREIGN ATTACHMENT, See title Attachment, foreign.

FOREIGN COURT. At Lemſter (anciently called Leominſter) there is the borough and the foreign court; which laſt is within the juriſdiction of the manor, but not within the liberty of the bailiff of the borough: ſo there is a foreign court of the honour of Glouceſter. Clauſ. 8 Ed. 2. Foreign bought and ſold was cuſtom within the city of London, which, being found prejudicial to the ſellers of cattle in Smithfield, was aboliſhed.

FOREIGN KINGDOM; FOREIGN LAWS AND CUSTOMS. A Foreign Kingdom is one under the dominion of a foreign prince; ſo that Ireland, or any other place, ſubject to the crown of England, cannot with us be called foreign; though to ſome purpoſes they are diſtinct from the realm of England. If two of the king's ſubjects fight in a foreign kingdom, and one of them is killed, it cannot be tried here by the common law: but it may be tried and determined in the court of the Conſtable and Marſhal, according to the civil law; or the fact may be examined by the Privy Council, and tried by commiſſioners appointed by the king in any county of England, by ſtatute 33 H. 8. c. 23. 3 Inſt. 48. One Hutchinſon killed Mr. Colſon abroad in Portugal, for which he was tried there and acquitted, the exemplification of which acquittal he produced under the Great Seal of that kingdom; and the king being willing he ſhould be tried here, referred it to the judges, who all agreed, that the party being already acquitted by the laws of Portugal, could not be tried again for the ſame fact here. 3 Keb. 785.

If a Stranger of Holland, or any foreign kingdom, buys goods at London, and gives a note under his hand for payment, and then goes away privately into Holland; the ſeller may have a certificate from the Lord Mayor, on proof of ſale and delivery of the goods: upon which the people of Holland will execute a legal proceſs on the party. 4 Inſt. 38. Alſo at the inſtance of an ambaſſador or conſul, ſuch a perſon of England, or any criminal againſt the laws here, may be ſent from a foreign kingdom hither. Where a bond is given, or contract made in a foreign kingdom, it may be tried in the King's Bench, and laid to be done in any place in England. Hob. 11: 2 Bulſt. 322.

An agreement made in France, on two French perſons marrying, touching the wife's fortune, has been decreed here to be executed, according to the laws of England; and that the huſband ſurviving ſhould have the whole; but relief was firſt given for a certain ſum, and the reſt to be governed by the cuſtom of Paris. *Preced. A. and B. being inhabitants of the United States of America, while thoſe States were colonies of Great Britain, and before the rebellion of them as colonies, B. executes a bond to A.—During the rebellion, after the declaration of independence by the American Congreſs, but before the Independence of America was acknowledged by Great Britain, both parties are attainted; their property confiſcated, and veſted in the reſpective States of which they were were inhabitants, by the legiſlative acts of thoſe States then in rebellion, and a fund provided for the payment of the debts of B. Afterwards the independence of America is acknowledged by Great Britain. Under all theſe circumſtances A. may maintain an action on the bond againſt B. in England.

Judgment of the court of King's Bench (affirming the judgment of C. P.) Affirmed. Bro. P. C.

Though all theſe judgments appear unanimous, the two former, and perhaps all three of them, were given in ſome meaſure upon different grounds. But it appears upon the two firſt deciſions to be a principle not judicially controverted, that "the penal laws of one country cannot be taken notice of, to affect the laws and rights of citizens (or ſubjects of ſuch country, becoming citizens,) of another; the penal laws of foreign countries being ſtrictly local, and affecting nothing more than they can reach, and can be ſeized by virtue of their authority." See 3 Term Rep. 733, 5: 1 H Black. Rep. 135.

In the caſe of Dudley v. Folliott, the court having no doubt about the law, and thinking that it would lead to the diſcuſſion of improper topics, would not permit the queſtion to be argued. That was the caſe of a covenant in a conveyance of lands in America, made during the time of the rebellion, (April, 1780) "that the grantor had a legal title, and that the grantee might peaceably enjoy, &c. without the leaſt interruption, &c. of the grantor and his heirs, or of any other perſon whomſoever."—The court were of opinion that this covenant was not broken by the States of America ſeizing the lands, as forfeited, for an act done previous to the conveyance, notwithſtanding the ſubſequent acknowledgment of independence. 3 Term Rep. 584.

FOREIGN PLANTATIONS; AND DOMINIONS OF THE CROWN. As to the former of theſe, ſee this Dict. tit. Plantations. As to any foreign dominions which may belong to the perſon of the king by hereditary deſcent, by purchaſe or other acquiſition, as the territory of Hanover and his majeſty's other property in Germany; as theſe do not in any wiſe appertain to the crown of theſe kingdoms they are entirely unconnected with the laws of England, and do not communicate with this nation in any reſpect whatſoever The Engliſh Legiſlature, warned by paſt experience, wiſely inſerted in the act of Settlement, which veſted the crown in the preſent family, the following clauſe, "That in caſe the crown and imperial dignity of this realm ſhall hereafter come to any perſon not being a native of this kingdom of England, this nation ſhall not be obliged to engage in any war for the defence of any dominions or territories which do not belong to the crown of England, without conſent of Parliament." Stat. 12 & 13. W. 3. c. 3.

FOREIGN PLEA. A plea in objection to a judge, where he is refuſed as incompetent to try the matter in queſtion, becauſe it ariſes out of his juriſdiction. Kitch. 75: Stat. 4 Hen. 8. c. 2. If a plea of iſſuable matter is alledged in a different county from that wherein the party is indicted or appealed, by the common law, ſuch pleas can only be tried by juries returned from the counties wherein they are alledged. But by the Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 14, § 5, all foreign pleas triable by the country, upon an indictment for petit treaſon, murder or felony, ſhall be forthwith tried without delay, before the ſame juſtices before whom the party ſhall be arraigned, and by the jurors of the ſame county where he is arraigned, notwithſtanding the matter of the pleas is alledged to be in any other county or counties: though as this ſtatute extends not to treaſon, nor appeals, it is ſaid a foreign iſſue therein muſt ſtill be tried by the jury of the county wherein alledged. 3 Inſt. 17: H. P. C. 255: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 40. §§ 6, 7. In a foreign plea in a civil action the defendant ought to plead to that place where the plaintiff alledges the matter to be done in his declaration; and the defendant may plead a foreign plea whether the matter is tranſitory, or not tranſitory; but in the laſt caſe he muſt ſwear to it. Sid. 234: 2 Nelſ. 871. When a foreign plea is pleaded, the court generally makes the defendant put it upon oath, that it is true; or will enter up judgment for want of a plea. See 5 Mod. 335. Foreign anſwer is ſuch an anſwer as is not triable in the county where made; and foreign matter is that matter which is done in another county, &c. See futher titles Pleading; Indictment.

FOREIGN SERVICE, Is that whereby a meſne lord holds of another, without the compaſs of his own fee: or that which the tenant performs either to his own lord, or to the lord paramount out of the fee. Kitch. 299. Felonies in ſerving Foreign States, are reſtrained and puniſhed by ſtat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 4; which makes it felony for any perſon whatever to go out of the realm, to ſerve any foreign Prince or State, without having firſt taken the oath of allegiance before his departure. And it is felony alſo for any Gentleman, or perſon of higher degree, or who hath borne office in the army, to go out of the realm to ſerve ſuch foreign Prince or State, without previouſly entering into a bond with two ſureties, not to be reconciled to the See of Rome, or enter into any conſpiracy againſt his natural Sovereign. See the ſtat. §§ 18, 19.—By ſtat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 30, enforced by ſtat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 17, if any ſubject of Great Britain ſhall enliſt himſelf, or if any perſon ſhall procure him to be enliſted in any foreign ſervice, or detain or embark him for that purpoſe without licence under the king's ſign manual, he ſhall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy; but if the perſon ſo ſeduced, ſhall within 15 days diſcover his ſeducer, he ſhall on conviction of the ſeducer be indemnified —By ſtat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 17, it is enacted that to ſerve under the French King, as a military officer ſhall be felony without benefit of clergy: and to enter into the Scotch brigade in the Dutch ſervice without previouſly taking the oaths of allegiance and abjuration ſhall incur a forfeiture of 500 l. See further this Dict. titles Allegiance; Contempt; Treaſon.

FOREJUDGER, forisjudicatio.] A judgment whereby a perſon is deprived of or put by, the thing in queſtion. Bract. lib. 4. FORESCHOKE, Derelictum.] Forſaken; in one of ou ſtatutes, it is ſpecially uſed for lands or tenements ſeiſed by a lord, for want of ſervices performed by the tenant, and quietly held by ſuch lord beyond a year and a day; now the tenant, who ſeeth his land taken into the hands of the lord, and poſſeſſed ſo long, and doth not purſue the courſe appointed by law to recover it, doth in preſumption of law diſavow or forſake all the right he hath to the ſame; and then ſuch lands ſhall be called foreſchoke. See Stat. 10 Ed. 2. c. 1.

FOREST.

FORESTA; SALTUS.] A great or vaſt wood; locus ſylveſtris & ſaltuoſus. Our law writers define it thus; Foreſta eſt locus ubi feræ inhabitant vel includuntur; others ſay it is called Foreſta, quaſi ferarum ſtatio, vel tuta manſio ferarum. Manwood, in his Foreſt Laws, gives this particular definition of it: A Foreſt is a certain territory or circuit of woody grounds and paſtures, known in its bounds and privilege, for the peaceable being and abiding of wild beaſts, and fowls of foreſt, chaſe and warren, to be under the king's protection for his princely delight: repleniſhed with beaſts of venary or chaſe, and great coverts of vert for ſuccour of the ſaid beaſts; for preſervation whereof there are particular laws, privileges and officers belonging thereunto. Manw. part 2. c. 1.

Foreſts are of that antiquity in England, that (except the New Foreſt in Hampſhire, erected by William called The Conqueror, and Hampton Court, erected by King Hen. VIII, (ſee ſtat. 31 H. 8. c. 5,) it is ſaid there is no record or hiſtory doth make any certain mention of their erections and beginnings; though they are mentioned by ſeveral writers; and in divers of our laws and ſtatutes. 4 Inſt. 319. Our ancient hiſtorians tell us, that New Foreſt was raiſed by the deſtruction of twenty-two pariſh churches, and many villages, chapels and manors, for the ſpace of thirty miles together; which was attended with divers judgments, as they are termed, on the poſterity of King Will. I. who erected it; for William Rufus was there ſhot with an arrow, and before him Richard the brother of Hen. I. was there killed; and Henry, nephew to Robert, the eldeſt ſon of the Conqueror, did hang by the hair of the head in the boughs of the foreſt like unto Abſalom. Blount.

Beſides the New Foreſt, there are ſixty eight other Foreſts in England; thirteen chaſes, and more than ſeven hundred parks: the four principal Foreſts are New Foreſt on the Sea, Shirewood Foreſt on the Trent, Dean Foreſt on the Severn, and Windſor Foreſt on the Thames. The way of making a Foreſt is thus: Certain commiſſioners are appointed under the Great Seal of England, who view the ground intended for a Foreſt, and fence it round with metes and bounds; which being returned into the Chancery, the King cauſes it to be proclaimed throughout the county where the land lieth, that it is a Foreſt, and to be governed by the laws of the Foreſt, and prohibits all perſons from hunting there without his leave; and then he appointeth officers fit for the preſervation of the vert and veniſon, and ſo it becomes a Foreſt on record. Manw. c. 2. Though the King may erect a Foreſt on his own ground and waſtes, he may not do it in the ground of other perſons, without their conſent; and agreements with them for that purpoſe ought to be confirmed by parliament. 4 Inſt. 300.

Proof of a Foreſt appears by matter of record; as by the eyres of the juſtices of the Foreſts, and other courts, and officers of Foreſts, &c. and not by the name in grants. 12 Rep. 22. As parks are incloſed with wall, pale, &c. ſo Foreſts and chaſes are incloſed by metes and bounds; ſuch as rivers, highways, hills; which are an incloſure in law; and without which there cannot be a Foreſt. And in the eye of the law, the boundaries of a foreſt go round about it as it were a brick wall, directly in a right line the one from the other, and they are known either by matter of record, or preſcription. 4 Inſt. 317. Bounds of a Foreſt may be aſcertained by commiſſion from the Lord Chancellor; and commiſſioners, ſheriffs, officers of Foreſts, &c. are impowered to make inqueſts thereof. Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 1. c. 16. Alſo the boundaries of foreſts are reckoned a part of the foreſt; for if any perſon kill or hunt any of the King's deer in any highway, river, or other incluſive boundary of a Foreſt, he is as great an offender as if he had killed or hunted deer within the Foreſt itſelf. 4 Inſt. 318.

By the grant of a Foreſt, the game of the Foreſt do paſs; and beaſts of the Foreſt are the hart, hind, buck, doe, boar, wolf, fox, hare, &c. The ſeaſons for hunting whereof are as follow, viz. that of the hart and buck begins at the Feaſt of St. John Baptiſt, and ends at Holy-rood day; of the hind and doe, begins at Holy-rood, and continues till Candlemas; of the boar, from Chriſtmas to Candlemas; of the fox, begins at Chriſtmas, and continues till Lady-day; of the hare, at Michaelmas, and laſts till Candlemas. Dyer 169: 4 Inſt. 316.

Not only game, &c. are incident to a Foreſt, but alſo a Foreſt hath divers ſpecial properties. 1. A Foreſt truly and ſtrictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the King; for none but the King hath power to grant commiſſion to any one to be a Juſtice in eyre of the foreſt: but if the King grants a Foreſt to ſubject, and granteth further that upon requeſt made in Chancery, he and his heirs ſhall have juſtices of the Foreſt, than the ſubject hath a Foreſt in law. 4 Inſt. 314: Cro. Jac. 155.

The ſecond property of a foreſt is the Courts; as the Juſtice-ſeat, the Swainmote, and court of Attachment. The third property is the officers belonging to it; as firſt, the juſtices of the Foreſt, the warden or warder, the verderors, foreſters, agiſters, regarders, keepers, bailiffs, beadles, &c. See title Attachment of the Foreſt.

As to the COURTS. The moſt eſpecial court of a Foreſt is the Swainmote, which is no leſs incident to it than a court of piepowder to a fair: and, if this fail, there is nothing remaining of the Foreſt, but it is turned into the nature of a Chaſe. Manw. c. 21: Compt. Jur. 146.

The court of Attachment or woodmote in Foreſts, is kept every forty days; at which the Foreſters bring in the attachment de viridi et venatione, and the preſentments thereof, and the verderors do receive the ſame, and inroll them; but this court can only inquire, not convict.

vict. The court of Swainmote is holden before the verderors as judges, by the ſteward of the ſwainmote, thrice in the year: the ſwains or freeholders within the Foreſt are to appear at this court, to make inqueſts and juries; and this court may inquire de ſuperoneratione Foreſtariorum et aliorum miniſtrorum Foreſtæ, et de eorum oppreſſionibus populo noſtro illatis: and alſo may receive and try preſentments certified from the court of Attachments, againſt offences in vert or veniſon. And this court may inquire of offences, and convict alſo, but not give judgment, which muſt be at the juſtice-ſeat. 4 Inſt. 289.

The Court of Regard, or Survey of Dogs is holden likewiſe every third year, for expeditation, or lawing of dogs, by cutting off to the ſkin three claws of the fore feet, to prevent their running at or killing of deer. No other dogs but maſtiffs are to be thus lawed or expeditated, for none other were permitted to be kept within the precincts of the Foreſt, it being ſuppoſed that the keeping of theſe, and theſe only, was neceſſary for the defence of a man's houſe. 4 Inſt. 303.

The principal court of the Foreſt is the Court of the Chief Juſtice in Eyre, or Juſtice-Seat, which is a court of record, and hath authority to hear and determine all treſpaſſes, pleas, and cauſes of the Foreſt, &c. within the Foreſt, as well concerning vert and veniſon, as other cauſes whatſoever; and this court cannot be kept oftener than every third year. As before other Juſtices in Eyre, it muſt be ſummoned forty days at leaſt before the ſitting thereof; and one writ of ſummons is to be directed to the ſheriff of the county, and another writ Cuſtodi foreſtæ, Domini Regis vel ejus locum tenenti, &c. Which writ of ſummons conſiſts of two parts: Firſt, to ſummon all the officers of the Foreſt, and that they bring with them all records, &c. Secondly, All perſons who claim any liberties or franchiſes within the Foreſt, and to ſhew how they claim the ſame. It may alſo proceed to try preſentments in the inferior courts of the Foreſt, and to give judgment upon conviction of the Swainmote. And the Chief Juſtice may therefore after preſentment made, or indictment found, but not before, iſſue his warrant to the officers of the Foreſt to apprehend the offenders. Stats. 1 E. 3. c. 8: 7 R. 2. c. 4.—This court being a court of record, may fine and impriſon for offences within the Foreſt, and therefore if there be erroneous judgment at the juſtice-ſeat, the record may be removed by writ of error into B. R. or the Chief Juſtice in Eyre may adjourn any matter to that court. 4 Inſt. 291, 5, 313.

Theſe Juſtices in Eyre were inſtituted by Henry II. A. D. 1184: and their courts were formerly held very regularly; but the laſt court of Juſtice-ſeat of any note, was that holden in the reign of Charles I. before the Earl of Holland; the rigorous proceedings at which are reported by Sir W. Jones. After the Reſtoration, another was held, pro formâ only, before the Earl of Oxford: but ſince the æra of the Revolution in 1688, the Foreſt laws have fallen into total diſuſe, to the great advantage of the Subject. See 3 Comm. 73.—Much therefore of what follows is matter rather of curioſity than uſe.

There is but one Chief Juſtice of the Foreſts on this ſide Trent, and he is named Juſticiarius Itinerans Foreſtarum, &c. citra Trentam; and there is another, Capitalis Juſticiarius; and he is Juſticiarius Itinerans omnium Foreſtarum ultra Trentam, &c. who is a perſon of greater dignity, than knowlege in the laws of the Foreſt; and therefore when Juſtice ſeats are held, there are aſſociated to him ſuch as the King ſhall appoint, who, together with him determine omnia placita foreſtæ, &c. 4 Inſt. 315.—By Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 35, Juſtices of the King's Foreſts may make deputies.

A Juſtice in Eyre cannot grant licence to ſell any timber, unleſs it be ſedente curiâ, or after a writ of ad quod damnum: and it hath been reſolved by all the judges, that though Juſtices in Eyre, and the King's officers within his Foreſts, have charge of veniſon, and of vert or green-hue, for the maintenance of the King's game, and all manner of trees for covert, browſe and pannage; yet when timber of the Foreſt is ſold, it muſt be cut and taken by power under the Great Seal, or the Exchequer Seal, by view of the Foreſters, that it may not be had in places inconvenient for the game: and the Juſtice in Eyre, or any of the King's officers in the Foreſt, cannot ſell or diſpoſe of any wood within the Foreſt without commiſſion; ſo that the Exchequer and the officers of the Foreſt have diviſum imperium, the one for the profit of the King, the other for his pleaſure: Alſo no officer of the Foreſt can claim windfalls, or dotard trees, for their perquiſites, becauſe they were once parcel of the King's inheritance; but they ought to be ſold by commiſſion, for the King's beſt benefit. Read on Stat. 3 vol. p. 304, 5.

If any officers cut down wood, not neceſſary for browſe, &c. they forfeit their offices. 9 Rep. 50. The lord of a Foreſt may by his officers enter into any man's wood within the regard of the Foreſt, and cut down browſewood for the deer in winter. A preſcription for a perſon to take and cut down timber-trees in a Foreſt, without view of the Foreſter, it is ſaid may be good: but of this quære, without allowance of a former eyre, &c. If a man hath wood in a Foreſt, and hath no ſuch preſcription, the law will allow him to fell it, ſo as he does not prejudice the game, but leave ſufficient vert; but it ought to be by writ of ad quod damnum, &c. 4 Inſt: Cro. Jac. 155. And every perſon in his own wood in a foreſt may take houſe-bote and hay-bote, by view of the Foreſter; and ſo may freeholders by preſcription, copyholders by cuſtom, &c: 1 Ed. 3. ſt. 2. c. 2. The wood taken by view of the Foreſter, ought to be preſented at the next Court of Attachment, that it was by view, and may appear of record.

Fences, &c. in Foreſts and chaſes, muſt be with low hedges, and they may be deſtroyed, though of forty years continuance, if they were not before. Cro. Jac. 156. He whoſe wood is in danger of being ſpoiled, for want of repairing fences by another, ought to requeſt the party to make good the hedges; and if he refuſe, then he muſt do it himſelf, and have action on the caſe againſt the other that ſhould have done it. 1 Jones 277.

A perſon may have action at Common-law for a treſpaſs in a Foreſt, as to wood, &c. to recover his right. Sid. 296.

The Chief Warden of the Foreſt is a great officer, next to the Juſtices of the Foreſt, to bail and diſcharge offenders; but he is no judicial officer; and the conſtable of the caſtle where a Foreſt is, by the Foreſt law is Chief Warden of the Foreſt, as of Windſor Caſtle, &c.

A Verderor is a judicial officer of the Foreſt, and choſen in full county, by the King's writ: his office is to obſerve and keep the aſſiſes or laws of the Foreſts, and view, receive, and inroll, the attachments and preſentments of all treſpaſſes of the Foreſt, of vert and veniſon, and to do equal right and juſtice to the people: the verderors are the chief judges of the Swainmote court; although the Chief Warden, or his deputy, uſually ſits there. 4 Inſt. 292.

The Regarder is to make regard of the Foreſt, and to view and inquire of offences, concealments, defaults of Foreſters, &c. Before any juſtice-ſeat is holden, the Regarders of the Foreſt muſt make their regard, and go thro' and view the whole Foreſt, &c. They are miniſterial officers, conſtituted by letters patent of the King, or choſen by writ to the ſheriff. 4 Inſt. 291.

A Foreſter is, in legal underſtanding, a ſworn officer miniſterial of the Foreſt, and is to watch over the vert and veniſon, and to make attachments and true preſentments of all manner of treſpaſſes done within the Foreſt: a Foreſter is alſo taken for a Woodward: this officer is made by letters patent, and it is ſaid the office may be granted in fee, or for life. 4 Inſt. 293. Every Foreſter, when he is called at a court of juſtice-ſeat, ought upon his knees to deliver his horn to the Chief Juſtice in Eyre; ſo every Woodward ought to preſent his hatchet to my Lord.

A Riding Foreſter is to lead the King in his hunting. 1 Jones 277. The office of Foreſter, &c. though it be a fee-ſimple, cannot be granted or aſſigned over without the King's licence. 4 Inſt. 316. If a Foreſter by patent for life, is made juſtice of the ſame foreſt pro hac vice, the foreſterſhip is become void; for theſe offices are incompatible, as the foreſter is under the correction of the juſtice, and he cannot judge himſelf. 1 Inſt. 313.

An Agiſter's office is to attend upon the King's woods and lands in a Foreſt, receive and take in cattle, &c. by agiſtment, that is to depaſture within the foreſt, or to feed upon the pannage, &c. And this officer is conſtituted by letters patent. 4 Inſt. 293. Perſons inhabiting in the foreſt may have common of herbage for beaſts commonable within the Foreſt; but by the Foreſt law, ſheep are not commonable there, becauſe they bite ſo cloſe that they deſtroy the vert; and yet it has been held, that ſheep may be commonable in Foreſts by preſcription. 3 Bulſt. 213.

There may be a preſcription for common in a Foreſt at all times of the year; though it was formerly the opinion of our judges, that the fence-month ſhould be excepted. 3 Lev. 127. A Foreſt may be diſafforeſted and laid open; but right of common ſhall remain. Poph. 93. He that hath a grant of the herbage or pannage of a park, or Foreſt, cannot take any herbage or pannage, but of the ſurpluſage over and above a competent and ſufficient paſture and feeding for the game; and if there be no ſurpluſage, he that hath the herbage and pannage cannot put in any beaſts; if he doth, they may be driven out. Read. on Stat. vol. 3. 305. None may gather nuts in the Foreſt without warrant.

A Ranger of a Foreſt is one whoſe buſineſs is to rechaſe the wild beaſts from the purlieus into the Foreſt, and to preſent offences within the purlieu, and the Foreſt, &c. And though he is not properly an officer in the Foreſt, yet he is a conſiderable officer of, and belonging to it.

The Beadle is a foreſt officer, that warns all the courts of the Foreſt, and executes proceſs, makes all proclamations, &c. 4 Inſt. 313.

There are alſo Keepers or Bailiffs of walks in Foreſts and chaſes, who are ſubordinate to the Verderors, &c. And theſe officers cannot be ſworn on any inqueſts, or juries out of the Foreſt. If any man hunts beaſts within a Foreſt, although they are not beaſts of the Foreſt, they are puniſhable by the Foreſt laws; becauſe all hunting there, without warrant is unlawful. 4 Inſt. 314.

If a deer be hunted in a Foreſt, and afterwards by hunting it is driven out of the Foreſt, and the Foreſter follows the chaſe, and the owner of the ground where driven kills the deer there; yet the Foreſter may enter into the lands and retake the deer: for property in the deer is in this caſe by purſuit. 2 Leon. 201. He that hath any manner of licence to hunt in a Foreſt, chaſe, park, &c. muſt take heed that he do not abuſe his licence, or exceed his authority; for if he do, he ſhall be accounted a treſpaſſer ab initio, and be puniſhed for that fact as if he had no licence at all. Manw. 280, 288.

Every lord of parliament, ſent for by the King, may, in coming and returning, kill a deer or two in the King's Foreſt or chaſe through which he paſſes; but it muſt not be done privily, without the view of the Foreſter, if preſent; or, if abſent, by cauſing one to blow a horn, becauſe otherwiſe he may be a treſpaſſer, and ſeem to ſteal the deer. Chart. Foreſt. c. 11: 4 Inſt. 308.

Lex Foreſtæ is a private law, and muſt be pleaded. 2 Leon. 209. But it hath been obſerved, that the laws of the Foreſt are eſtabliſhed by act of parliament, and for the moſt part contained in Charta de Foreſta, 9 H. 3. ſt. 2. c. 2: 34 Ed. 1. ſt. 5.

By the law of the Foreſt, receivers or treſpaſſers in hunting or killing of deer, knowing them to be ſuch, or any of the King's veniſon, are principal treſpaſſers; though the treſpaſs was not done to their uſe or benefit, as the Common-law requires; by which the ſubſequent agreement amounts to a commandment: but if the receipt be out of the bounds of the Foreſt, they cannot be puniſhed by the laws of the Foreſt, being not within the Foreſt juriſdiction, which is local. 4 Inſt. 317.

If a treſpaſs be done in a Foreſt, and the treſpaſſer dies, it ſhall be puniſhed after his death in the life-time of the heir, contrary to the Common-law. Hue and cry may be made by the Foreſt law for treſpaſs, as to veniſon; though it cannot be purſued but only within the bounds of the Foreſt. 4 Inſt. 294. And for not purſuing hue and cry in the Foreſt, a townſhip may be fined and amerced. In every treſpaſs and offence of the Foreſt in vert or veniſon, the puniſhment is, to be impriſoned, ranſomed, and bound to the good behaviour of the Foreſt, which muſt be executed by a judicial ſentence by the Lord Chief Juſtice in Eyre of the Foreſt.

If any Foreſter find any perſon hunting without warrant, he is to arreſt his body, and carry him to priſon, from whence he ſhall not be delivered without ſpecial warrant from the King, or his juſtices of the Foreſt, &c. But by Stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 8, Perſons are bailable if not taken in the manner, as with a bow ready to ſhoot, carrying away deer killed, or ſmeared with blood, &c. Though if one be not thus taken, he may be attached by his goods. 4 Inſt. 289.

The Warden of the Foreſt ſhall let ſuch to mainpriſe until the eyre of the Foreſt; or a writ may be had out of the Chancery to oblige him to do it; and if he refuſe to deliver the party, a writ ſhall go to the ſheriff to attach the Warden, &c. who ſhall pay treble damages to the party grieved and be committed to priſon, &c. Stat. 1 Ed. 3.

1 Ed. 3. c. 8. No Officer of the Foreſt may take or impriſon any perſon without due indictment, or per main ouure, with his hand at the work; nor ſhall conſtrain any to make obligation againſt the aſſiſe of the Foreſt, on pain to pay double damages, and to be ranſomed at the King's will. Stat. 7 R. 2. c. 4.

A Foreſter ſhall not be queſtioned for killing a treſpaſſer, who (after the peace cried unto him) will not yield himſelf; ſo as it be not done out of ſome former malice. ſtat. 21 Ed. 1. ſt. 1. But if treſpaſſers in a Foreſt, &c. kill a man who oppoſes them, although they bore no malice to the perſon killed, it is murder; becauſe they were upon an unlawful act, and therefore malice is implied. Rol. Abr. 548. And if murder be committed by ſuch treſpaſſers, all are principals. Kel. 87.

If a man comes into a Foreſt in the night-time, the Foreſter cannot juſtify beating him before he makes reſiſtance; but if he reſiſts, he may juſtify the battery. Perſons may be fined for concealing the killing of deer by others; and ſo for carrying a gun, with an intent to kill the deer; and he that ſteals veniſon in the Foreſt, and carries it off on horſeback, the horſe ſhall be forfeited, unleſs it be that of a ſtranger ignorant of the fact. Where heath is burnt in a Foreſt, the offenders may be fined: and if any man cuts down buſhes and thorns, and carries them away in a cart, he is fineable, and the cart and horſes ſhall be ſeized by the Foreſt laws. But a man may preſcribe to cut wood, &c. And every freeman within the Foreſt may on his own ground make a mill-dyke, or arable land, without incloſing ſuch arable; but if it be a nuſance to others, it is puniſhable. Chart. Foreſt. c. 11: 12 Rep. 22. And if any having woods in his own ground, within any Foreſt, or chaſe, ſhall cut the ſame by the King's licence, &c. he may keep them ſeveral and incloſed, for ſeven years after felling. Stat. 22 E. 4. c. 7

By Charta de Foreſta, 9 H. 3 ſtat. 2. c. 2, No man ſhall loſe life or member for killing the King's deer in a Foreſt, &c. but ſhall be fined; and if he have nothing to pay the fine, he ſhall be impriſoned a year and a day; and then be delivered, if he can give good ſecurity not to offend for the future; and if not, he ſhall abjure the realm: Before this ſtatute, it was felony to hunt the King's deer. 2 Inſt. 120. To hunt in a Foreſt, park, &c. in the night, diſguiſed, if denied or concealed, upon examination before a juſtice of peace, it is felony: but if confeſſed, it is only fineable. Stat. 1 H. 7. c. 7. Keepers, &c. may ſeize inſtruments uſed in unlawful cutting of trees. Stat. 4 Geo. 3 c. 31.

The cruel and inſupportable hardſhips which the Foreſt laws created to the Subject, occaſioned our anceſtors to be as zealous for their reformation, as for the relaxation of the feodal rigours and the other exactions introduced by the Norman family. And accordingly we find, in hiſtory the immunities of Carta de Foreſta as warmly contended for, and extorted from the King with as much difficulty, as thoſe of Magna Charta itſelf. By this charter confirmed in parliament many Foreſts were diſafforeſted or ſtripped of their oppreſſive privileges; and regulations made in the regimen of ſuch as remained. And by a variety of ſubſequent ſtatutes together with the long acquieſcence of the Crown without exerting the Foreſt laws, this prerogative is become no longer a grievance to the ſubject. Comm.

FORESTAGIUM, Duty payable to the King's Foreſters. Chart. 18 Ed. 1.

FORESTALLING, Foreſtallamentum, from the Sax. fore, before, & ſtal a ſtall.] To intercept on the highway. Spelman ſays, it is viæ obſtructio, vel itineris interceptio; with whom agrees Coke on Lit. fol. 161. And, according to Fleta, foreſtalling ſignificat obſtructionem viæ vel impedimentum tranſitûs et fugæ averiorum, &c. lib. 1. c. 24. In our law, foreſtalling is the buying or bargaining for any corn, cattle or other merchandiſe, by the way, as they come to fairs or markets to be ſold, before they are brought thither; to the intent to ſell the ſame again, at a higher and dearer price.

All endeavours to inhance the common price of any victuals or merchandiſe, and practices which have an apparent tendency thereto, whether by ſpreading falſe rumours, or buying things in a market before the accuſtomed hour, or by buying and ſelling again the ſame thing in the ſame market, &c. are highly criminal by the Common-law; and all ſuch offences anciently came under the general appellation of foreſtalling. 3 Inſt. 195, 196. And ſo jealous is the Common-law of practices of this nature, which are a general inconvenience and prejudice to the people, and very oppreſſive to the poorer ſort, that it will not ſuffer corn to be ſold in the ſheaf before thraſhed; for by ſuch ſale the market is in effect foreſtalled. 3 Inſt. 197: H. P. C. 152.

Foreſtalling, Ingroſſing, and Regrating, are offences generally claſſed together as of the ſame nature and equally hurtful to the Public. Ingroſſing ſeems derived from the words in and groſs great or whole; and regrating from re, again, and grater Fr. to ſcrape, from the dreſſing or ſcraping of cloth or other goods in order to ſell the ſame again.

Several ſtatutes were from time to time made againſt theſe offences in general, and alſo ſpecially with reſpect to particular ſpecies of goods according to their ſeveral circumſtances; all of which from the 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 14, downwards, and all acts for enforcing the ſame are repealed by ſtat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 71; by the preamble of which it ſhould ſeem that the remedy was found worſe than the diſeaſe. But theſe offences ſtill continue puniſhable upon indictment at the Common-law by fine and impriſonment.

The offence of foreſtalling the market is an offence againſt public trade. This was deſcribed by the ſaid Stat. 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 14, to be the buying or contracting for any cattle, merchandize or victual coming in the way to the market or diſſuading perſons from bringing their goods or proviſions there; or perſuading them to enhance the price when there; any of which practices makes the market dearer to the fair trader.

Regrating was deſcribed by the ſame ſtatute to be the buying of corn, or other dead victual, in any market; and ſelling it again in the ſame market, or within 4 miles of the place. For this alſo enhances the price of the proviſions, as every ſucceſſive ſeller muſt have a ſucceſſive profit.

Ingroſſing was alſo deſcribed to be the getting into one's poſſeſſion or buying up large quantities of corn or other dead victuals with intent to ſell them again. This muſt be of courſe injurious to the Public, by putting it in the power of one or two rich men to raiſe the price of proviſions at their own diſcretion.

The above deſcriptions given by the ſtatute ſerve as a guide for the indictment of theſe offences at Common-law, and are therefore here preſerved.

The total ingroſſing of any commodity, with intent to ſell it at an unreaſonable price is an offence indictable and fineable at Common-law. Cro. Car. 232.

Salt has been held to be within the proviſions againſt foreſtalling, as a neceſſary victual; but not hops, nor apples or other fruits. See ſtat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 15, which ſeems yet in force; prohibiting butchers, brewers, bakers, poulterers, cooks and fruiterers, from conſpiring not to ſell victuals, but at certain prices, on penalty of 10*l.* for the firſt offence, 20*l.* for the ſecond, 40*l.* for the third, &c. and if ſuch conſpiracy be made by any company, or body corporate, the corporation ſhall be diſſolved.

FORFANG OR FORFENG, from the Sax. Fore, ante & fangen, prendere. Antecaptio vel Præventio.] The taking of proviſion from any one in fairs or markets, before the King's Purveyors are ſerved with neceſſaries for his majeſty. Chart. Hen. 1. Hoſp. Sanct. Barth. Lond. Anno 1133.

FORFEITURE.

FORISFACTURA, from the Fr. Forfait.] The effect, or penalty, of tranſgreſſing ſome law. For an ingenious diſcuſſion to prove the propriety and policy of ſuch puniſhment, ſee Mr. Charles Yorke's "Conſiderations on the Law of Forfeitures" corrected and enlarged 8vo. 1775. —See alſo this Dict. title Tenures III. 10.

Forfeiture is defined by Blackſtone to be a puniſhment annexed by law to ſome illegal act or negligence in the owner of lands, tenements or hereditaments: whereby he loſes all his intereſt therein, and they go to the party injured, as a recompence for the wrong, which either he alone or the publick together with him hath ſuſtained. 2 Comm. 267.

Lands, tenements and hereditaments may be forfeited in various degrees and by various means. Forfeitures may therefore be divided into civil and criminal. The latter will be preſently conſidered more at large under this title.

Civil Forfeitures ariſe either by alienation contrary to law; as in mortmain; for which ſee this Dict. under that title; to Aliens ſee title Alien; or by particular tenants when they are greater than the law entitles them to make. This latter alienation diveſts the remainder or reverſion and is alſo a forfeiture to him whoſe right is attacked thereby. 1 Inſt. 251.

Forfeiture in civil caſes may alſo accrue by non-preſentation to a benefice, when it is called a Lapſe; See this Dict. tit. Advowſon. By Simony; See that title. By non-performance of Conditions; See title Condition.—By Waſte; See that title.—By breach of copyhold cuſtoms; See title Copyhold; or laſtly by Bankruptcy; See that title.

I. Of Forfeitures in Civil Caſes.

II. Of Forfeitures in Criminal Caſes: and herein.

1. Generally for what Crimes ſuch Forfeitures are inflicted; and to what Time they bear relation.
2. More particularly; what Eſtates are ſubject to Forfeiture.
3. When Forfeitures may be ſeized.

I. As to alienations by particular tenants; if tenant for his own life aliens, by feoffment or fine, for the life of another, or in tail, or in fee; theſe being eſtates, which either muſt or may laſt longer than his own, the creating them is not only beyond his power, and inconſiſtent with the nature of his intereſt, but is alſo a Forfeiture of his own particular eſtate to him in remainder or reverſion. Litt. § 415. For this there ſeem to be two reaſons; Firſt, becauſe ſuch alienation amounts to a renuntiation of the feodal connection and dependence; it implies a refuſal to perform the due renders and ſervices to the lord of the fee, of which fealty is conſtantly one, and it tends in it's conſequence to defeat and deveſt the remainder or reverſion expectant: as therefore that is put in jeopardy, by ſuch act of the particular tenant, it is but juſt, that, upon diſcovery, the particular eſtate ſhould be forfeited and taken from him, who has ſhewn ſo manifeſt an inclination to make an improper uſe of it: The other reaſon is, becauſe the particular tenant, by granting a larger eſtate than his own, has by his own act determined and put an entire end to his own original intereſt; and on ſuch determination the next taker is entitled to enter regularly, as in his remainder or reverſion. 2 Comm. 274.

Another reaſon aſſigned for theſe Forfeitures is, that the act done is incompatible with the eſtate which the tenant holds, and againſt the implied condition on which he holds it. As in the caſe of a tenant for life or years enfeoffing a ſtranger in fee-ſimple, this is a breach of the condition which the law annexes to his eſtate, viz. that he ſhall not attempt to create a greater eſtate than he himſelf is entitled to. 1 Inſt. 215. So if tenant for life, or years, or in fee, commit felony, this is a breach of the implied condition annexed to every feodal donation that they ſhould not commit felony. 2 Comm. 153.

The ſame law, which is thus laid down with regard to tenants for life, holds alſo with reſpect to all tenants of the mere freehold, or of chattel intereſts: But if tenant in tail aliens in fee, this is no immediate Forfeiture to the remainder-man, but a mere diſcontinuance of the eſtate-tail, which the iſſue may afterwards avoid by due courſe of law: for he in remainder or reverſion hath only a very remote, and barely poſſible intereſt therein, until the iſſue in tail is extinct. See this Dict. tit. Diſcontinuance.

But in caſe of ſuch Forfeitures, by particular tenants, all legal eſtates by them before created, (as if tenant for 20 years grants a leaſe for 15,) and all charges by them lawfully made on the lands ſhall be good and available in the law. For the law will not hurt an innocent leſſee for the fault of his leſſor; nor permit the leſſor, after he has granted a good and lawful eſtate, by his own act to avoid it, and defeat the intereſt which he himſelf hath created. 1 Inſt. 233: 2 Comm. 275.

Equivalent, both in it's nature and it's conſequences, to an illegal alienation by the particular tenant, is the civil crime of Diſclaimer; as to which See this Dict. title Diſclaimer.

If Tenant, for life, in dower, by the curtesy, or after possibility of issue extinct, or lessee for years, tenant by statute-merchant, staple, or elegit, of lands or tenements that lie in livery, shall make any absolute or conditional feoffment in fee, gift in tail, lease for any other life than his own, &c. or levy a fine sur conusance de droit come ceo, &c. or suffer a common recovery thereof: or being impleaded in a writ of right brought against him, join the mise upon the mere right, or admit the reversion to be in another; or in a quid juris clamat, claim the fee-simple; or if lessee for years being ousted, bring an assise ut de libero tenemento, &c.—by either of these things, there will be a Forfeiture of estate. Plowd 15: 1 Rep 15: 8 Rep. 144: Co. Lit. 251: Dyer 152. 324: 1 Bulst. 219.

But where the land granted by tenant for life, or years, is not well conveyed; or the thing does not lie in livery, as a rent, common, or the like; he will not forfeit his estate: and therefore if a feoffment, gift in tail, or lease for another's life, made by the tenant for life, is not good, for want of words in making it, or due execution in the livery and seisin, this shall not produce a Forfeiture. 2 Rep. 55.

When tenant in tail makes leases, not warranted by the statute; a copyholder commits waste, refuses to pay his rent, or do suit of court; one to whom an estate is granted upon condition, does not perform the same; in all these cases Forfeitures are incurred. 1 Rep. 15.

Entry for a Forfeiture ought to be by him, who is next in reversion, or remainder after the estate forfeited. As, if tenant for life or years commits a Forfeiture, he who has the immediate reversion, or remainder, ought to enter; though he has the fee, or only an estate-tail. 1 Rol. 857. l. 45, 50; 858. l. 5.

It shall be a dispensation of the Forfeiture, if he in reversion, or remainder be a party to the estate made, and accept it: as, if a husband, seised in right of his wife for life, leases to him in reversion for his own life. 1 Rol. 856. l. 10.

Also Offices may be forfeited by neglect of duty, &c. See title Office.

II. 1. The true reason, and only substantial ground, of any FORFEITURE FOR CRIMES, consist in this: that all property is derived from Society, being one of those civil rights conferred on individuals in exchange for that degree of natural freedom, which every man must sacrifice when he enters into social communities. If therefore a member of any national community violates the fundamental contract of his association, by transgressing the municipal law, he forfeits his right to such privileges as he claims by that contract; and the State may very justly resume that portion of property, or any part of it which the laws have before assigned him. Hence in every offence of an atrocious kind, the laws of England have exacted a total confiscation of the moveables or personal estate; and in many cases perpetual, in others only a temporary loss, of the offender's immoveables or landed property: and have vested them both in the King, as the person supposed to be offended, being the one visible magistrate in whom the majesty of the Public resides. 1 Comm. 299.

The offences which induce a Forfeiture of lands and tenements are principally the following six. 1 Treason. 2 Felony. 3 Misprision of Treason. 4 Præmunire. 5 Drawing a weapon on a Judge; or striking any one in the presence of the King's courts of justice. 6 Popish Recusancy; or non-observance of certain laws enacted in restraint of papists.

Forfeiture in criminal Cases is two-fold; of real and personal estates. First as to Real Estates.

By Common-law on attainder of high treason a man forfeits to the King all his lands and tenements of inheritance whether fee-simple or fee-tail, and all his right of entry on lands and tenements, which he had at the time of the offence committed or at any time afterwards: to be for ever vested in the Crown. And also the profits of all lands and tenements, which he had in his own right for life or years, so long as such interest shall subsist. Co. Lit. 392: 3 Inst. 19: 1 Hal. P. C. 240: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 49.

This forfeiture relates backwards to the time of the treason committed so as to avoid all intermediate sales and incumbrances, but not those before the fact. 3 Inst. 211. A wife's jointure is not forfeitable for the treason of her husband: because settled upon her previous to the treason committed. But her dower is forfeited by the express provision of Stat. 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 11, repealing in that particular Stat. 1 E. 6. c. 12. The husband notwithstanding shall be tenant by the curtesy of the wife's lands if the wife be attainted of treason, for that is not prohibited by the statute. 1 Hal. P. C. 359. But though, after attainder, the forfeiture relates back to the time of the treason committed, yet it does not take effect unless an attainder be had, of which it is one of the fruits: and therefore if a traitor dies before judgment pronounced, or is killed in open rebellion, or is hanged by martial law, it works no Forfeiture of his lands; for he never was attainted of treason; and by the express provision of Stat. 34 E. 3. c. 12, there shall be no Forfeiture of lands for treason, of dead persons, not attainted in their lives.—Yet if the Chief Justice of the King's Bench (the supreme coroner of all England) in person upon the view of the body of one killed in open rebellion, records it, and returns the record into his own court, both lands and goods shall be forfeited. 4 Rep. 57.

Forfeiture of lands and tenements to the Crown for treason is by no means derived from the feodal policy, but was antecedent to the establishment of that system in this island. See this Dict. title Tenures III. 10.—But in certain treasons relating to the coin it is provided by some of the more modern statutes which constitute the offence, that it shall work no Forfeiture of lands, save only for the life of the offender: and, by all, that it shall not deprive the wife of her dower. See Stats. 5 Eliz. c. 11: 18 Eliz. c. 1.:—8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26: 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28.—And in order to abolish such hereditary punishment entirely, it was provided by Stat. 7 An. c. 21, that after the decease of the late Pretender no attainder for treason should extend to the disinheriting of any heir, nor to the prejudice of any person other than the traitor himself. By which the law of Forfeitures for high treason would by this time have been at an end, had not a subsequent statute intervened to give them a longer duration, namely the Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 39, by which the operation of the indemnifying clauses in Stat. 7 Ann. c. 21, is still farther suspended till the death of the sons of the late Pretender. See 4 Comm. 384; and this Dict. title Attainder.

In petit treason, misprision of treason and felony, the offender also forfeits all his chattel interests absolutely; and he profits of all estates of freehold during life; and after his death all his lands and tenements in fee simple, (but not those in tail) to the Crown for a short period of time: for the King shall have them for a year and a day, and may commit therein what waste he pleases; which is called the King's Year, Day, and Waſte. 2 Inſt. 37: 3 Inſt. 39. Formerly the King had a liberty of committing waſte on the lands of felons, by pulling down their houſes, extirpating their gardens, ploughing their meadows, and cutting down their woods. But this tending greatly to the prejudice of the Huſbandry, it was agreed in the reign of Hen. I, that the King ſhould have the profits of the land for a year and a day, in lieu of the deſtruction he was otherwiſe at liberty to commit; and therefore Magna Carta, c. 22, provides that the King ſhall only hold ſuch lands for a year and day, and then reſtore them to the lord of the fee; without any mention of waſte. See Mirr. c. 4. § 16: Flet. l. 1. c. 28. But the ſtatute 17 E. 2, de prærogativâ regis ſeems to ſuppoſe that the King ſhall have his year, day, and waſte, and not the year and day inſtead of waſte: which Lord Coke and the Mirror very juſtly conſider as an encroachment, tho' a very ancient one, of the royal prerogative. Mirr. c. 5. § 2: 2 Inſt. 37.

This year, day and waſte are now uſually compounded for; but otherwiſe they regularly belong to the crown, and after their expiration the land would have deſcended to the heir, (as in gavel-kind tenure it ſtill does,) did not its feodal quality intercept ſuch deſcent and give it by way of eſcheat to the Lord. See titles Tenure; Eſcheat.

Theſe Forfeitures of lands for felony alſo ariſe only upon attainder; and therefore a felo de ſe forfeits no lands of inheritance or freehold, for he never is attainted as a felon. 3 Inſt. 55. They likewiſe relate back to the time of the offence committed, as well as Forfeitures for treaſon; ſo as to avoid all intermediate charges and conveyances. 4 Comm. 386.

Theſe are all the Forfeitures of real eſtates created by the Common-law as conſequential upon attainders by judgment of death or outlawry. The particular Forfeitures created by the ſtatutes of Præmunire and others are here omitted, being rather a part of the judgment and penalty inflicted by the reſpective ſtatutes, than conſequences of ſuch judgment, as in treaſon and felony they are. See Poſt. II.

As a part of the Forfeiture of real eſtates, may be mentioned, the Forfeiture of the profits of lands during life: which extends to two other inſtances beſides thoſe already ſpoken of; the ſtriking in Weſtminſter Hall, or drawing a weapon upon a judge there ſitting in the King's courts of juſtice. 3 Inſt. 141. And it ſeems that the ſame Forfeiture is incurred by reſcuing a priſoner in or before any of the courts there, committed by the judges. Cro. Jac. 307.

The Forfeiture of Goods and Chattels accrues in every one of the higher kinds of offence: in high treaſon or miſpriſion thereof; petit treaſon; felonies of all ſorts, whether clergyable or not: ſelf murder, or felo de ſe; petit larceny; ſtanding mute; challenging above 35 Jurors; and the above mentioned offences of ſtriking, &c. in Weſtminſter Hall For Flight alſo, on an accuſation of treaſon, felony, or even petit larceny, whether the party be found guilty or acquitted, if the jury find the flight, the party ſhall forfeit his goods and chattels; for the very flight is an offence, carrying with it a ſtrong preſumption of guilt; and is at leaſt an endeavour to elude and ſtifle the courſe of juſtice preſcribed by the law. But the jury very ſeldom find the flight; Forfeiture, being looked upon, ſince the vaſt increaſe of perſonal property, as too large a penalty for an offence to which a man is prompted by the natural love of liberty. 4 Comm. 387.

There are ſome remarkable differences between the Forfeiture of lands, and of goods and chattels. 1. Lands are forfeited upon attainder, and not before: goods and chattels are forfeited by conviction. Becauſe in many of the caſes where goods are forfeited there never is any attainder; which happens only where judgment of death or outlawry is given; therefore in thoſe caſes the Forfeiture muſt be upon conviction, or not at all; and being neceſſarily upon conviction in thoſe, it is ſo ordered in all other caſes: for the law loves uniformity. 2. In outlawries for treaſon or felony lands are forfeited only by the judgment, but the goods and chattels are forfeited by a man's being firſt put in the exigent, without ſtaying till he is quinto exactus, or finally outlawed, for the ſecreting himſelf ſo long from juſtice is conſtrued a flight in law. 3 Inſt. 232. (See this Dict. tit. Outlawry.) 3. The forfeiture of lands has relation to the time of the fact committed ſo as to avoid all ſubſequent ſales and incumbrances; but the Forfeiture of goods and chattels has no relation backwards, ſo that thoſe only which a man has at the time of conviction ſhall be forfeited. Therefore a traitor or felon may bonâ fide ſell any of his chattels real or perſonal for the ſuſtenance of himſelf or family between the fact and conviction; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 49. For perſonal property is of ſo fluctuating a nature that it paſſes through many hands in a ſhort time; and no buyer could be ſafe if he were liable to return the goods which he had fairly bought, provided any of the prior vendors had committed a treaſon or felony. Yet if they be colluſively and not bonâ fide parted with, merely to defraud the crown, the law, and particularly Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5. will reach them; for they are all the while truly and ſubſtantially the goods of the offender; and as he, if acquitted, might recover them himſelf, as not parted with for a good conſideration, ſo in caſe he happens to be convicted, the law will recover them for the King. 4 Comm. 388.

2. Where land comes to the crown, as forfeited by attainder of treaſon, all meſne tenures of common perſons are extinct; but if the King grant it out, the former tenure ſhall be revived, for which a petition of right lies. 2 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 254. In Treaſon, all lands of inheritance, whereof the offender was ſeiſed in his own right, were forfeited by the Common-law; and rights of entry, &c. And the inheritance of things not lying in tenure, as of rent-charges, commons, &c. ſhall be forfeited in high treaſon: but no right of action whatſoever to lands of inheritance is forfeited, either by the common or ſtatute law. 2 Hawk P. C. c. 49.

By Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 13, All lands, tenements, &c. are forfeited in treaſon. And the King ſhall be adjudged in poſſeſſion of lands and goods forfeited for treaſon on the attainder of the offender, without any office found, ſaving the right of others. See Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 20. Lands and hereditaments in fee ſimple and fee tail, are forfeited in high treaſon: but lands in tail could not be forfeited only for the life of tenant in tail, till the ſtatute 26 H. 8. c. 13, by which ſtatute, they may be forfeited.

Upon outlawry in treaſon or felony, the offender ſhall forfeit as much as if he had appeared, and judgment had been given againſt him; ſo long as the outlawry is in force. 3 Inſt. 52, 212.

Gavelkind land in Kent is not forfeited by committing of felony; and by a felony only, intailed lands are not forfeit. S. P. C. 3. 26.

Land

Land that one hath in truſt; or goods and chattels in right of another, or to another's uſe, &c. will not be liable to Forfeiture. Though leaſes for years, in a man's own, or his wife's right, eſtates in jointenancy, &c. and all ſtatutes, bonds, and debts due thereby, and upon contracts, &c. ſhall be forfeited. Co. Lit. 42, 151: Staund. 188.

A married man guilty of felony, forfeits his wife's term; and if a wife kill her huſband, the huſband's goods are forfeited. Jenk. Cent. 65. In manſlaughter, the offender forfeits goods and chattels, and in chance-medley and ſe defendendo, goods and chattels; but the offenders may have their pardon of courſe. Co. Lit. 319.

Thoſe that are hanged by Martial Law in the time of war, forfeit no lands. Co. Lit. 13. And for robbery or piracy, &c. on the ſea, if tried in the Court of Admiralty, by the Civil Law, and not by jury, there is no forfeiture: but if a perſon be attainted before commiſſioners by virtue of the Stat. 28 Hen. 8. c. 15, there it works a Forfeiture. 1 Lil. Abr.

In caſes of felony the profits of lands whereof a perſon, attainted of felony, is ſeiſed of an eſtate of inheritance in right of his wife; or of an eſtate for life only in his own right; are forfeited to the King, and nothing is forfeited to the Lord. 3 Inſt. 19: Fitz. Aſſ. 166.

Goods of perſons that fly for a felony, are forfeited to the Lord of the franchiſe, when the flight is found of record. 2 Inſt. 281.

In a præmunire, lands in fee-ſimple are forfeited, with goods and chattels. Co. Lit. 129.

Before the ſtatute of 1 E. 6. cap. 12, the wife not only loſt her dower at Common law, but alſo her dower ad oſtium eccleſiæ, or ex aſſenſu patris, or by ſpecial cuſtom (except that of gavelkind,) by the huſband's attainder of treaſon, or capital felony, whether committed before or after marriage. Co. Lit. 31 b: 37 a: 41 a: F. N. B. 150: Perk. § 308: Bro. tit. Dower 82: Plowd. 261.

But the wife forfeited lands given jointly to her huſband and her, whether by way of frank marriage or otherwiſe, only for the year, day, and waſte. Co. Lit. 37: 3 Inſt. 216.

By Stat. 1 E. 6. cap. 12. par. 17, It was enacted that albeit any perſon ſhall be attainted of any treaſon or felony whatſoever; yet notwithſtanding every woman, that ſhall fortune to be the wife of the perſon ſo attainted, ſhall be endowable and enabled to demand, have, and enjoy her dower, in like manner and form as tho' her huſband had not been attainted, &c. This however was repealed as to treaſon by 5 & 6 E. 6. cap. 11. par. 9. See ante I.

Though Lord Coke, expreſsly makes dower ex aſſenſu patris, as well as the dowers at Common-law and ad oſtium eccleſiæ, liable to be defeated at Common-law, by the huſband's treaſon or felony; 1 Inſt. 37 a: yet ſome have inclined to think that this St. 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 11, doth not extend to dower ex aſſenſu patris, ſo that that ſhall not be forfeitable on the treaſon of the huſband.—And in 1 Inſt. 35 b, Lord Coke mentions that according to ſome opinions the wife loſes dower ex aſſenſu patris, if after the aſſent the father was attainted of treaſon.—See 1 Inſt. 41 a: in note.

If the huſband ſeiſed of lands in fee, makes a feoffment and then commits treaſon, and is attainted of it, the wife ſhall not recover dower againſt the feoffee. Bendl. 56: Dyer 140; Co. Lit. 111 a. So if the huſband is attainted of treaſon, and afterwards pardoned, yet the wife ſhall not recover dower; but of lands purchaſed by the huſband after the pardon, the wife ſhall be endowed. 3 Leon. 3: Perk. ſect. 391.

If a huſband having levied a fine with proclamation, is erroneouſly attainted of treaſon, and the five years paſs after his death, and then the outlawry is reverſed, the fine and non-claim are no bar till five years are paſſed after the reverſal, becauſe the wife could not ſue for her dower while the attainder ſtood in force, neither could ſhe any way reverſe it. 3 Inſt. 216: Moor 639. pl. 879.

After the making of the above mentioned ſtatute 1 E. 6. cap. 12, it ſeems to have been doubted, whether the wife ſhould not loſe her dower in caſe of any new felony made by act of parliament; therefore where ſeveral offences have been made felony ſince, care has been taken to provide for the wife's dower. 2 New Abr. 584. See 12 Vin. Abr. tit. Forfeiture. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 49.

If a woman after a rape, conſent to the raviſher, ſhe ſhall loſe her dower after the death of her huſband, &c. Stat. 6 R. 2. c. 6. And if any maiden or woman child above twelve, and under ſixteen years of age, ſhall agree to be taken away and deflowered, or contract with any man for marriage againſt the will and without the conſent of her father; or, if he be dead, her mother or guardian appointed by her father's will, ſhe ſhall forfeit her land of inheritance for her life. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 8.

Artificers going out of the kingdom and teaching their trades to foreigners, are liable to forfeit their lands, &c. by Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 27. Similar Forfeitures likewiſe are inflicted by ſeveral other penal ſtatutes. See title Manufacturers.

In all caſes where a penalty or Forfeiture is given by ſtatute, without ſaying to whom it ſhall be, or a limitation for a recompence for the wrong to the party, it belongs to the King, Stra. 50, 828: 2 Vent. 267. And ſuch Forfeitures ſhall be conſtrued favourably. Cowp. 585, 8.

3. Goods or lands of one arreſted for felony, ſhall not be ſeized before he is convict or attaint of the felony; on pain of forfeiting double value. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 3. Goods of a felon, &c. cannot be ſeized before Forfeited; though they may be inventoried, and a charge made thereof before indictment. Wood's Inſt. 659 Where goods of a felon are pawned before he is attainted, the King ſhall not have the Forfeiture of the goods till the money is paid to him to whom they were pawned. 3 Inſt. 17: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 874, 875.

After conviction by judgment, or outlawry, for high-treaſon, &c. a commiſſion goes to perſons named by the King or by the Attorney General, to inquire, what lands and tenements the offender had at the time of the treaſon committed, and the value; and that they ſeize them into the King's hands. And the inquiſition taken thereon ſhall be returned to the Court of Exchequer, and filed in the office of the King's Remembrancer. Lut. 997. So after conviction for felony, a ſcire facias ſhall go againſt the vill, or any other, who has the goods in his cuſtody. S. P. C. 194. But if any one has title to the goods or lands found by inquiſition to be the goods or lands of the offender, he may make his claim by pleading his title. Lut. 998. To which the Attorney General ſhall demur, or reply. Vid. Com. Dig. title Prærogative, (D. 83, 84.)

A copyholder ſurrenders to the uſe of his will; the deviſee is convicted of felony and hanged before admittance, tance, the lands are not forfeited to the lord but deſcend to the heir of the ſurrenderor. 2 Wilſ. 13.

Forfeiture differs from confiſcation, in that Forfeiture is more general; whereas confiſcation is particularly applied to ſuch as are forfeit to the King's Exchequer, and confiſcate goods are ſaid to be ſuch as nobody doth claim. Staundf. P. C. 186.

There is a full Forfeiture, plena foriſfactura, otherwiſe, called plena uita, which is a Forfeiture of life and member, and all that a man hath. Leg. H. 1 c. 88. And there is mention in ſome ſtatutes, of Forfeiture at the King's will, of body, lands, and goods, &c. 4 Inſt. 66. See further on this ſubject this Dict. titles Attainder; Corruption of Blood; Felony; Treaſon, &c. and Com. Dig. tit. Forfeiture.

FORFEITURE OF MARRIAGE, Foriſfactura maritagii.] A writ which anciently lay againſt him, who, holding by knights-ſervice, and being under age, and unmarried, refuſed her whom the lord offered him without his diſparagement, and married another. F. N. B. fol. 141.: Reg. Orig. fol. 163. See title Tenure.

FORFEITED ESTATE. Several ſtatutes have been from time to time paſſed, appointing Commiſſioners of Forfeited Eſtates, on rebellions in this kingdom and Ireland: Thus by Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3 c. 3, all lands and tenements, &c. of perſons attainted or convicted of treaſon or rebellion in Ireland, were veſted in ſeveral commiſſioners and truſtees for ſale thereof. And by ſeveral Stats. temp. Geo. I, commiſſioners were appointed to inquire of Forfeited Eſtates in England and Scotland, on the rebellion at Preſton, &c. And the eſtates of perſons attainted of treaſon were veſted in His Majeſty for public uſes; but afterwards in truſtees to be ſold for the uſe of the Public; and it was provided that the purchaſers ſhould be Proteſtants.

FORGAVEL, Forgabulum.] A ſmall reſerved rent in money, or quit-rent. Cartular. Abbat. de Reading MS. f. 88.

FORGE, Forgia.] A ſmith's Forge, to melt and work iron. Chart. Heu. 2.

FORGERY, From Fr. Forger, i. e. accudere, fabricare, to beat on an anvil, to forge or form.] The fraudulent making or alteration of any Deed, Writing, Inſtrument, Regiſter, Stamp, &c. to the prejudice of another man's right. An offence puniſhable, according to its circumſtances, by fine, impriſonment, pillory, tranſportation and death.

By Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 14, to forge or make, or knowingly to publiſh or give in evidence, any forged deed, court-roll, or will, with intent to affect the right of real property, either freehold or copyhold, is puniſhed by a Forfeiture to the party grieved, of double coſts and damages; by the offender's ſtanding in the pillory and having both his ears cut off and his noſtrils ſlit and ſeared; by Forfeiture to the crown of the profits of his lands, and by perpetual impriſonment. For any Forgery relating to a term of years, or annuity, bond, obligation, acquittance, releaſe or diſcharge of any debt or demand of any perſonal chattels, the ſame Forfeiture is given to the party grieved, and on the offender is inflicted the pillory, loſs of one ear, and a year's impriſonment.—The ſecond offence, in both caſes, being felony without benefit of clergy.

Beſides this general act, a multitude of others, ſince the Revolution, when paper credit was firſt eſtabliſhed, have inflicted capital puniſhment on the following ſpecies of Forgery, viz.—The forging, altering or uttering as true when forged, of any Bank-notes, bills or other ſecurities; See Stats. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 20. § 36: 11 Geo. 1. c. 9: 12 Geo. 1. c. 32: 15 Geo 2. c. 13: 13 Geo. 3. c. 79; and this Dict. title Bank of England.—Exchequer-bills; by the ſeveral acts for iſſuing them.—South ſea Bonds; See Stats. 9 An. c. 21: 6 Geo. 1. cc. 4, 11: 12 Geo. 1. c. 32.—Lottery Tickets or orders: by the ſeveral Lottery-acts.—Army or Navy Debentures; Stats 5 Geo. 1. c 14: 9 Geo. 1. c. 5 —Eaſt India Bonds; Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 32.—Writings under the Seal of the London or Royal-Exchange Aſſurance: Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 18; and of other Corporations by the Stats. eſtabliſhing them.—Of the hand-writing of the Receiver of the pre-fines; Stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 14; or of the Accountant General and other officers of the court of Chancery.—Of a Letter of Attorney or other Power to receive or tranſfer Stock or annuities; of tranſfers and dividend-warrants; and on the perſonating a proprietor thereof to receive or transfer ſuch funds or dividends. Stats. 8 Geo. 1. c. 22: 9 Geo. 1. c. 12: 31 Geo. 2. c. 22. § 77: 33 Geo. 3. c. 30. —Alſo on the perſonating or procuring to be perſonated any ſeaman or perſon entitled to wages, prize-money, &c. for perjury in obtaining probate or adminiſtration to receive ſuch wages, &c. and the forging, procuring to be forged, or publiſhing a forged ſeaman's will and power. Stats. 31 Geo. 2. c. 10: 9 Geo. 3. c. 30. and See Stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 34.—to which may be added counterfeiting Mediterranean paſſes from the Admiralty, Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 18.— —the forging or imitating ſtamps, to defaud the publick revenue; by the ſeveral ſtamp-acts; [the re-uſing them is made ſingle Felony by Stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 48, puniſhable with 7 years tranſportation.]—Forging of any marriage regiſter or licence, Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33.—Counterfeiting or removing ſtamp or mark on plate, 24 Geo. 3. ſt. 2. c. 53. [a ſimilar offence is puniſhable with 14 years tranſportation by Stat. 13 Geo. 3 cc. 52, 59.]—Forging the frank on a general poſt letter. Stat. 24 Geo. 3. ſt. 2. c. 37.

Beſides theſe there are certain general laws with regard to Forgery. By Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25, the firſt offence in forging or procuring to be forged, acting or aſſiſting therein, or uttering or publiſhing as true any forged deed, will, bond, bill of exchange, promiſſory note, and indorſement or aſſignment of ſuch bill or note, or any acquittance or receipt for money or goods, with an intention to defraud any perſon; (or corporation, Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 22. § 78;) is made Felony without benefit of clergy.—And by Stats. 7 Geo. 2. c. 22: 18 Geo. 3. c. 18, it is equally penal to forge or cauſe to be forged, or uttered as true, a counterfeit acceptance of a bill of exchange, or the number or principal ſum of any accountable receipt, for any note, bill, or other ſecurity for money, or any warrant or order for payment of money, or delivery of goods.

By the above, and a number of other general and ſpecial proviſions, there is now hardly a caſe poſſible to be conceived wherein Forgery that tends to defraud, whether in the name of a real or fictitious perſon, is not made a capital crime. See Foſt. 116, and this Dict. title Bills of Exchange, V 3.

A deed forged in the name of a perſon who never had exiſtence is within the Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25: for the ſtatute doth uſe the words the deed of any perſon, or the deed of another or any words of like import, but any deed. Lord Coke's deſcription of Forgery (3 Inſt. 169,) "When the act is done in the name of another perſon;"

is

is apparently too narrow, and only takes in that ſpecies of Forgery which is moſt commonly practiſed; but there are many other ſpecies of Forgery which will not come within the letter of that deſcription. Foſt. 116.

There can be no Forgery where none can be prejudiced by it but the perſon doing it. 1 Salk. 375.

Forgery by the common law extends to falſe and fraudulent making or altering of a deed or writing, whether it be a matter of record, in which ſeems to be included a pariſh regiſter; which is puniſhable by fine, impriſonment, and corporal puniſhment at the diſcretion of the court, or any other writing, deed, or will, 3 Inſt. 169: 1 Rol. Abr. 65: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 70. Not only where one makes a falſe deed; but where a fraudulent alteration is made of a true deed, in a material part of it, as by making a leaſe of the manor of Dale, and it appears to be a leaſe of the manor of Sale, by changing the letter D. into an S. or by altering a bond, &c. for 500*l.* expreſſed in figures, to 5000*l.* by adding a new cypher, theſe are Forgery: ſo it is, if one finding another's name at the bottom of a letter, at a conſiderable diſtance from the other writing, cauſes the letter to be cut off, and a general releaſe to be written above the name, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 70.

Alſo a writing may be ſaid to be forged, where one being directed to draw up a will for a ſick perſon, doth inſert ſome legacies therein falſely of his own head; though there be no Forgery of the hand or ſeal; for the crime of Forgery conſiſts as well in endeavouring to give an appearance of truth to a meer falſity, as in counterfeiting a man's hand, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 70: 3 Inſt. 170. But a perſon cannot regularly be guilty of Forgery by an act of omiſſion; as by omitting a legacy out of a will, which he is directed to draw for another: though it has been held, that, if the wilful omiſſion of a bequeſt to one cauſe a material alteration in the limitation of an eſtate to another, as if the deviſor directs a gift for life to one man, and the remainder to another in fee, and the writer omit the eſtate for life, ſo that he in remainder hath a preſent eſtate upon the death of the deviſor, not intended to paſs, this is Forgery. Noy. 118: Moor 760.

If a feoffment be made of land, and livery and ſeiſin is not indorſed when the deed is delivered, and afterwards on ſelling the land for a valuable conſideration to another, livery is indorſed upon the firſt deed; this hath been adjudged Forgery both in the feoffor and feoffee; becauſe it was done to deceive an honeſt purchaſer. Moor. 665. And when a perſon knowingly falſifies the date of a ſecond conveyance, which he had no power to make, in order to deceive a purchaſer, &c. he is ſaid to be guilty of Forgery. 3 Inſt. 169: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 70.

It ſeems to be no way material, whether a forged inſtrument be made in ſuch manner, that if it were in truth ſuch as it is counterfeited for, it would be of validity or not. 1 Sid. 142. The counterfeiting writings of an inferior nature, as letters and ſuch like, it hath been ſaid, is not properly Forgery; but the deceit is puniſhable.—But in the caſe of John Ward, of Hackney, it was determined that to forge a releaſe or acquittance for the delivery of goods, although not under ſeal was Forgery at common law. See Barn. K. B 10: Ld. Raym. 737, 1461: 5 Mod. 137: Raym. 81: Stra. 747.

Where there is a penalty in an obligation, &c. the party grieved by a forged releaſe thereof, ſhall recover double the penalty as damages, and not double the debt appearing in the condition. 3 Inſt. 172. If a perſon is informed by another that a deed is forged, if he afterwards publiſhes it as true, he is within the danger of the ſtatute. 3 Inſt. 171. The King may pardon the corporal puniſhment of Forgery which tends to common example; but the plaintiff cannot releaſe it: if the plaintiff releaſe or diſcharge the judgment or execution, &c. it ſhall only diſcharge the coſts and damages; and the judges ſhall proceed to judgment upon the reſidue of the pains, and award execution upon the ſame. 5 Rep. 50.

A perſon convicted of Forgery, and adjudged to the pillory, &c. whereby he becomes infamous, is not allowed to be a witneſs; but ſuch conviction is a good exception to his evidence. And one convicted of this crime, may be challenged on a jury, ſo as to be incapable to ſerve as a juror; and it hath been holden, that exceptions to perſons found guilty of perjury or Forgery, as well as felony, &c. are not ſalved by a pardon. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 43. § 25. The court of B. R. will not ordinarily, at the prayer of the defendant, grant a certiorari for a removal of an indictment of Forgery, &c. 1 Sid. 54. See titles Certiorari: Indictment. See further on this ſubject of Forgery. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 70, at length.

FORISFAMILIARI. When a ſon accepts of his father's part of lands, in the life-time of the father, and is contented with it; he is ſaid foriſfamiliari to be diſcharged from the family, and cannot claim any more. Blount.

FORLAND, or Foreland, Forlandum.] Lands extending further or lying before the reſt: A Promontory. Mon. Angl. Tom. 2. fol. 332.

FORLER-LAND. Land in the biſhoprick of Hereford granted or leaſed dum epiſcopus in epiſcopatu ſteterit, ſo as the ſucceſſor might have the ſame for his preſent revenue: this cuſtom has been long ſince diſuſed, and the land thus formerly granted is now let by leaſe as other lands, though it ſtill retains the name by which it was anciently known. Butterfield's Surv. 56.

FORM, Is required in law proceedings, otherwiſe the law would be no art; but it ought not to be uſed to enſnare or intrap. Hob. 232. Matters of Form in pleas that go to the action, may be helped on a general demurrer; as when a plea is only in abatement. 2 Ld. Raym. 1015. The formal part of the law or method of proceeding, cannot be altered but by parliament: for, if once thoſe were demoliſhed, there would be an inlet to all manner of innovation in the body of the law itſelf. 1 Comm. 142.

FORMA PAUPERIS, See title Coſts, II.

FORMEDON, Breve de formâ donationis.] A writ that lieth for him who hath right to lands or tenements by virtue of any intail.

Upon alienation by a tenant in tail, whereby the eſtate-tail is diſcontinued, and the remainder or reverſion is, by failure of the particular eſtate, diſplaced and turned to a mere right, the remedy is by this action of formedon (ſecundum formam doni) which is in the nature of a writ of right, and is the higheſt action that Tenant in tail can have. Finch. L. 267: Co. Lit. 316. For Tenant in tail cannot have an abſolute writ of right, which is confined to ſuch only as claim in fee-ſimple: and for that reaſon this writ of formedon was granted him by the ſtatute de donis; (Weſtm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 1;) which is therefore emphatically called his writ of right. F. N. B. 255.

is

This writ is diſtinguiſhed into three ſpecies; a Formedon in the deſcender, in the remainder, and in the reverter.

A writ of Formedon in the deſcender lieth where a gift in tail is made, and the tenant in tail aliens the lands intailed, or is diſſeiſſed of them and dies; in this caſe the heir in tail ſhall have this writ of formedon in the deſcender, to recover theſe lands ſo given in tail, againſt him who is then the actual tenant of the freehold. In which caſe the demandant is bound to ſtate the manner and form of the gift in tail, and to prove himſelf heir ſecundum formam doni. F. N. B. 211, 212.

A Formedon in the remainder lieth where a man giveth lands to another for life or in tail, with remainder to a third perſon in tail or in fee; and he who hath the particular eſtate dieth without iſſue inheritable, and a ſtranger intrudes upon him in remainder, and keeps him out of poſſeſſion. In this caſe the remainder-man ſhall have this writ of formedon in the remainder, wherein the whole form of the gift is ſtated, and the happening of the event upon which the remainder depended. This writ is not given in expreſs words by the ſtatute de donis: but is founded upon the equity of the ſtatute, and upon this maxim in law, that if any one hath a right to land, he ought alſo to have an action to recover it. See F. N. B. 217.

A Formedon in the reverter lieth where there is a gift in tail, and afterwards by the death of the donee or his heirs without iſſue of his body, the reverſion falls in upon the donor his heirs or aſſigns; in ſuch caſe the reverſioner ſhall have this writ to recover the lands, wherein he ſhall ſuggeſt the gift, his own title to the reverſion minutely derived from the donor, and the failure of iſſue upon which his reverſion takes place. F. N. B. 219: 8 Rep. 88. This lay at common law, before the ſtatute de donis, if the donee aliened before he had performed the condition of the gift by having iſſue, and afterwards died without any. Finch. L. 268.

The time of limitation in a Formedon, by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, is twenty years, within which ſpace of time after his title accrues, the demandant muſt bring his action, or elſe is for ever barred. See 3 Comm. 191—3.

There is a writ of Formedon in deſcender, where partition of lands, held in tail, is made among parceners, &c. and one alieneth her part; in this caſe her heir ſhall have this writ; and by the death of one ſiſter without iſſue, the partition is made void, and the other ſhall have the whole land as heir in tail. Alſo there is a writ of formedon in ſimul tenuit, that lies for a coparcener againſt a ſtranger upon the poſſeſſion of the anceſtor; which may be brought without naming the other coparcener who hath her part in poſſeſſion. This writ may be likewiſe had by one heir in Gavelkind, &c. of lands intailed; and where the lands are held without partition. New Nat. Brev. 476, 7, 481.

Where a fee-ſimple is demanded in a Formedon in reverter, the taking of the profits ought to be alledged in the donor, and donee: if an eſtate tail is demanded, it muſt be alledged in the donee only. 1 Lutw. 96.

There are ſeveral pleas both in bar and in abatement, which the tenant may plead to this action; ſuch as non-tenure, which is a plea in abatement, and by which the tenant ſhews, that he is not tenant of the freehold, or of ſome part thereof, at the time of the writ brought, or at any time ſince; which is called the pleading non-tenure generally. Booth 28.

Special non-tenure is where the tenant ſhews what intereſt and eſtate he hath in the land demanded, as that he is tenant for years, in ward, by ſtatute merchant, elegit, or the like; and therefore the plea of ſpecial non-tenure muſt always ſhew who is tenant. Booth 29. See 1 Brownl. 153.

At common law, non-tenure of parcel of an intire thing, as a manor, &c. abated the whole writ; but now by the Stat. 25 E. 3. cap. 16, it is enacted, "That by the exception of non-tenure of parcel, no writ ſhall be abated, but only for that parcel whereof the non-tenure was alledged." Booth 29: 1 Mod. 181.

If the tenant pleads non-tenure of the whole, he need not ſhew who is tenant: but in a plea of non-tenure of parcel, he muſt ſhew who is tenant, and this even before the ſtatute; for the common law would not ſuffer a writ, good in part, to be wholly deſtroyed, except the tenant ſhewed the demandant how he might have a better. 1 Mod. 181. The tenant cannot, after a general imparlance, plead non-tenure of part, though he may plead non-tenure of the whole. 3 Lev. 55.

The writ of Formedon is now rarely brought; the trying titles by Ejectment ſupplying its place, in an eaſier manner. See Booth of Real Actions.

FORMELLA, A certain weight of about 70lbs. mentioned in the Statute of weights and meaſures, Stat. 51 H. 3.

FORNAGIUM, or Furnagium, Fr. Fournage, Furnage.] The fee taken by a lord of his tenant, bound to bake in the lord's common oven, (in furno domini) or for a permiſſion to uſe their own; this was uſual in the Northern parts of England. Plac. Parl. 18 Ed. 1. And ſee Aſſiſa panis et cerviſiæ, 51 H. 3.

FORNICATION, Fornication; from the Fornices in Rome, where lewd women proſtituted themſelves for money.] Whoredom, or the act of incontinency in ſingle perſons; for if either party is married, it is Adultery. The Stat. 1 H. 7. c. 4, mentions this crime; which by an act made anno 1650, during the times of the Uſurpation, was puniſhed with three months' impriſonment for the firſt offence; and the ſecond offence, it is ſaid, was made felony. Scobel's Collect. The Spritual Court hath cogniſance of this offence; but by Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 44, the ſuit muſt be inſtituted within eight months, and not at all after the intermarriage of the parties offending: and formerly courts-leet had power to inquire of and puniſh Fornication and adultery; in which courts the king had a fine aſſeſſed on the offenders, as appears by the book of Domeſday. 2 Inſt. 488.

FORPRISE, Forpriſum.] An exception or reſervation: This word is frequently inſerted in leaſes and conveyances, wherein excepted and forpriſed is an uſual expreſſion. In another ſignification it is taken for any exaction; according to Thorn. anno 1285.

FORSES, Catatudæ.] Water-falls, ſo called in Weſtmorland. Camd. Britan.

FORSPEAKER, An attorney or advocate in a cauſe. Blount.

FORTIA, Power, dominion, or juriſdiction: whence infortiare Placitum, to enforce a plea by judges aſſembled. Leg. H. 1. c. 29.

FORTIORI, à fortiori or multo fortiori, is an argument often uſed by Littleton, to this purpoſe: If it be ſo in a feoffment paſſing a new right, much more is it for the reſtitution of an ancient right, &c. Co. Lit. 253, 260.

FORTILICE AND FORTILITY, Fortelleſcum.] A fortified place, bulwark or caſtle; as it is ſaid within the towns and fortilities of Berwick and Carliſle. Stat. 11 *H.*7. c. 18.

FORTLET, Fr.] A place or fort of ſome ſtrength; or rather a little fort. Old Nat. Brev. 45.

FORTS AND CASTLES, The Stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 6, extends to forts and other places of ſtrength within the realm; the ſole prerogative as well of erecting, as manning, and governing of which belongs to the king, in his capacity of General of the kingdom. 2 Inſt. 30.

No Subject can build a caſtle or houſe of ſtrength imbattled, or other fortreſs defenſible without the licenſe of the king; for the danger which might enſue, if every man at his pleaſure might do it. 1 Inſt. 5: 1 Comm. 263.

FOSSA, A ditch full of water; wherein women committing felony were drowned: It has been likewiſe uſed for a grave, in ancient writings. See Furca.

FOSSATUM, FOSSATURA, Lat.] A ditch, or place fenced round with a ditch or trench; alſo it is taken for the obligations of citizens to repair the city ditches. The work or ſervice done by tenants, &c. for repairing and maintenance of ditches is called foſſatorum operatio; and the contribution for it foſſagium. Kennet's Gloſſ.

FOSSEWAY, or the Foſſe, from Foſſus, digged.] One of the four ancient Roman ways through England. See title Wattling-ſtreet.

FOSTERLEAN, Sax.] A nuptial gift; the jointure or ſtipend for the maintenance of the wife.

FOTHER OR FODDER, From Teuton. Fuder.] A weight of lead containing eight pigs, and every pig one and twenty ſtone and a half; ſo that it is about a ton or common cart load: Among the plumbers in London it is nineteen hundred and a half; and at the mines it is two and twenty hundred weight and a half. Skene.

FOVEA, A place for burial of the dead. Stat. Eccl. Paulin. London. MS. 29.

FOUNDATION, The founding and building of a college or hoſpital is called foundatio, quaſi fundatio, or fundamenti locatio. Co. lib. 10. The king only can found a college; but there may be a college in reputation, founded by others. Dyer 267. If it cannot appear by inquiſition, who it was that founded a church or college, it ſhall be intended it was the king; who has power to found a new church, &c. Moor 282. The king may found and erect an hoſpital, and give a name to the houſe, upon the inheritance of another, or licence another perſon to do it upon his own lands; and the words fundo, creo, &c. are not neceſſary in every foundation, either of a college or hoſpital made by the king; but it is ſufficient if there be words equivalent: The incorporation of a college or hoſpital is the very foundation; but he who endows it with land is the founder; and to the erection of an hoſpital nothing more is requiſite but the incorporation and foundation. 10 Rep. Caſe of Sutton's Hoſp.

Perſons ſeiſed of eſtates in fee-ſimple, may erect and found hoſpitals for the poor, by deed inrolled in Chancery, &c. which ſhall be incorporated, and ſubject to ſuch viſitors as the founder ſhall appoint, &c. Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5. Where a corporation is named, it is ſaid the name of the founder is parcel of the corporation. 2 Nelſ. 886. Though the foundation of a thing may alter the law, as to that particular thing; yet it ſhall not work a general prejudice. 1 Lil. Abr. 634. By Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 37, The Crown may grant licence to alien in mortmain. By Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 36, Gifts in mortmain by will, &c. are reſtrained; but there are exceptions with reſpect to Univerſities and Royal Colleges. See this Dict. titles Corporation; Univerſity; Mortmain.

FOUNDER OF METAL, From Fr. Fouudre, to melt or pour.] He that melts metal, and makes any thing of it by pouring or caſting it into a mould. See Stat. 17 R. 2. c. 1, this Dict. title Money: Hence, Bell-founder, a fount of letter, &c.

FOURCHER, Fr. Fourchir; Lat. Furcare, becauſe it is two-fold.] A putting off, or delaying of an action; and has been compared to ſtammering, by which the ſpeech is drawn out to a more than ordinary length of time; ſo a ſuit is prolonged by fourching, which might be brought to a determination in a ſhorter ſpace: The device is commonly uſed when an action or ſuit is brought againſt two perſons, who being jointly concerned, are not to anſwer till both parties appear; and is where the appearance or eſſoin of one will excuſe the other's default, and they agree between themſelves that one ſhall appear or be eſſoined one day, and for want of the other's appearing, have day over to make his appearance with the other party; and at that day allowed the other party doth appear, but he that appeared before doth not, in hopes to have another day by adjournment of the party who then made his appearance. Terms de Ley.

This is called fourcher; and in the ſtatute of Weſt. 1. c. 42, it is termed fourcher by eſſoin; where are words to this effect, viz. coparceners, jointenants, &c. may not fourch by eſſoin, to eſſoin ſeverally; but ſhall have only one eſſoin, as one ſole tenant. And in ſtat. Glouc. 6 Ed. 1. c. 10, it is uſed in like manner: The defendants ſhall be put to anſwer without fourching, &c. 2 Inſt. 250.

FRACTION. The law makes no fraction of a day; if any offence be committed, in caſe of murder, &c. the year and day ſhall be computed from the beginning of the day on which the wound was given, &c. and not from the preciſe minute or hour. See Co. Litt. 255. and this Dict. titles Murder: Appeal.

An act of record will not admit any diviſion of a day, but is ſaid to be done the firſt inſtant of the day. Mo. 137.

In preſumption of law, when a thing is to be done upon one day, all that day is allowed to do it in, for the avoiding of fractions in time, which the law admits not of, but in caſe of neceſſity. Sti. 119.

Insurance for H.'s life; H. died on the last day; per Holt Ch. J. the law makes no fraction in a day; yet, in this case, he dying after the commencement, and before the end of the last day, the insurer is liable, because the insurance is for a year, and the year is not complete till the day be over; yet, if A. be born on the 3d day of September, and on the second day of September, twenty-one years afterwards, he makes his will, this is a good will, for the law will make no fraction of a day, and by consequence he was of age. 2 Salk. 625. FRACTITIUM, Arable land. Mon. Angl. Tom. 2. 873.

FRACTURA NAVIUM, Wreck of shipping at sea.

FRAMPOLE FENCES, Such fences as the tenants in the manor of Writtle in Essex, set up against the lord's demesnes; and they are intitled to the wood growing on those fences, and as many poles as they can reach from the top of the ditch with the helve of an axe, towards the reparation of their fences. It is thought the word frampole comes from the Sax. frempul profitable; or that it is a corruption of francpole, because the poles are free for the tenants to take: But Chief Justice Brampton, whilst he was steward of the court of the manor of Writtle, acknowledged that he could not find out the reason why those fences were called frampole; so that we are at a loss to know the truth of this name etymologically. Blount.

FRANCHILANUS, A freeman. Chart. H. 4. Francus homo is used for a freeman, in Domesday-book.

FRANCHISE, Fr.] A privilege or exemption from ordinary jurisdiction; as for a corporation to hold pleas to such a value, &c. And sometimes it is an immunity from tribute, when it is either personal or real, that is belonging to a person immediately; or by means of this or that place whereof he is a chief or member. Cromp. Jurisd. 141.

There is also a Franchise royal; which seems to be that where the King's writ runs not. 21 H. 6. c. 4. But Franchise royal is said by some authors to be where the King grants to one and his heirs, that they shall be quit of toll, &c. Bract. lib. 2. c. 5.

Franchises, are a species of incorporeal hereditaments. Franchise and Liberty are used as synonimous terms; and their definition is "A royal privilege or branch of the King's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a Subject." Finch L. 164.—Being therefore derived from the crown, they must arise from the King's grant; or in some cases may be held by prescription, which pre-supposes a grant. Finch. L. 164. The kinds of them are various and almost infinite: They may be vested either in natural persons or in bodies politick; in one man or many: But the same identical franchise that has before been granted to one, cannot be bestowed on another, for that would prejudice the former grant. 2 Rol. Ab. 191: Keilw. 196.

The Principality of Wales is a Franchise.—To be a County-Palatine is also a Franchise, vested in a number of persons. It is likewise a Franchise for a number of persons to be incorporated, and subsist as a Body-politick; with a power to maintain perpetual succession, and do corporate acts: and each individual member of such corporation is also said to have a Franchise or freedom. Other Franchises are, to hold a Court-Leet: to have a Manor or Lordship; or at least to have a lordship paramount: to have Waifs, Wrecks, Estrays, Treasure trove, Royal-fish, Forfeitures and Deodands: to have a Court of one's own, or liberty of holding pleas, and trying causes: to have the Conusance of Pleas, which is a still greater liberty, being an exclusive right, so that no other court shall try causes arising within that jurisdiction: (See this Dict. title Cognizance:) to have a Bailiwick, or liberty exempt from the sheriff of the county, wherein the grantee only and his officers are to execute all process: to have a Fair or Market, with the right of taking Toll, either there or at any other public places, as at bridges, wharfs or the like; which tolls must have a reasonable cause of commencement (as in consideration of repairs, or the like,) else the Franchise is illegal and void: 2 Inst. 220: (See this Dict. titles Fair; Toll:) or lastly to have a Forest, Chase, Park, Warren or Fishery, endowed with privileges of royalty. F. N. B. 230. See this Dict. title Forest, &c.

Usage may uphold Franchises, which may be claimed by prescription, without record either of creation, allowance or confirmation; and wreck of the sea, waifs, strays, fairs and markets, and the like, are gained by usage, and may become due without any matter of record. But goods of felons and outlaws, and such like, grow due by charter, and cannot be claimed by usage, &c. 2 Inst. 281: 9 Rep. 27.

It hath been adjudged, that grants of Franchises, made before the time of memory, ought to have allowance, within the time of memory, in the King's Bench, or before the barons of the Exchequer, or by some confirmation on record; and it is said they are not records pleadable, if they have not the aid of some matter of record within time of memory; and such ancient grants, after such allowance, shall be construed as the law was when they were made, and not as it hath been since altered: But Franchises granted within time of memory are pleadable without any allowance or confirmation; and if they have been allowed or confirmed as aforesaid, the Franchises may be claimed by force thereof, without shewing the charter. 9 Rep. 27, 28: 2 Inst. 281, 494.

There have been formerly several ancient prerogatives derived from the crown; besides the Franchises aforementioned; as power to pardon felony, make justices of assise, and of the peace, &c: But by the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 24, they were resumed and re-united to the crown. The King cannot grant power to another to make strangers born, denizens here, because such power is by law inseparably annexed to his person. 7 Rep. 25.

By Magna Charta c. 1, and several ancient statutes, the Church shall have all her liberties and Franchises inviolable: And the Lords spiritual and temporal shall enjoy their liberties, &c. and the King may not deprive them of any of them. 14 Ed. 3. st. 2. c. 1: 2 H. 4. c. 1.

By Magna Charta, c. 37, The Franchises and liberties of the city of London, and all other cities, towns, &c. are confirmed. By Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 24, all writs, processes, &c. in Franchises, are to be made in the King's name; and stewards, bailiffs, and other ministers of liberties, shall attend the justices of assise, and make due execution of process, &c.

Some Franchises, as York, Bristol, &c. have return of writs, to whom mandates are directed from the courts above, to execute writs and process: And a mayor or bailiff of a town, may have liberty to keep courts, and hold pleas in a certain place, according to the courſe of the Common-law; and power to draw cauſes out of the King's courts, by an excluſive juriſdiction: But the cauſes here may be removed to the ſuperior courts. Co. Lit. 114: 4 Inſt. 87, 224.

Sheriffs of counties, within which is any Franchiſe, the lord whereof is intitled to a return of writs, ſhall, on his requeſt, appoint one or more deputies, to reſide at ſome place near, there to receive all writs in the ſheriff's name, and under his ſeal to iſſue warrants for their due execution; and the Lord Chancellor is to ſettle the charges to be paid any ſuch deputy, &c. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 18.

A Franchiſe hath no relation to the county wherein it lies, as has been generally held; for it is not neceſſary to ſet forth the county when any thing is ſhewn to be done within a liberty or Franchiſe. Trin. 23 Car. B. R.

If a Franchiſe fails to adminiſter juſtice within the ſame, the Franchiſe ſhall not be allowed; but on any ſuch failure, the court of B. R. may compel the owners of the Franchiſe, &c. to do juſtice; for that court ought to ſee juſtice equally diſtributed to all perſons. 1 Lill. Abr. 635.

Wherever the King is party to a ſuit, as in all informations and indictments, the proceſs ought to be executed by the ſheriff, and not by the bailiff of any Franchiſe, whether it have the clauſe non omittas, &c. or not; for the King's prerogative ſhall be preferred to any Franchiſe. 2 Hawk. P. C. A ſheriff upon a non omittas, or on a capias vilagatum, or quo minùs, may enter and make arreſts in a Franchiſe. 1 Lill. 635. An arreſt by the ſheriff within a Franchiſe on a common writ, is ſaid to be good, though the officer be ſubject to an action at the ſuit of the lord of the Franchiſe, &c. See title Arreſt.

Franchiſes may be forfeited and ſeized where they are abuſed, for miſ-uſer, or non-uſer; and when there are many points, a miſ-uſer of any one will make a Forfeiture of the whole on a quo warranto brought. Kitch. 65. For contempt of the King's writ, in a county palatine, &c the liberties may be ſeized, and the offenders fined; and the temporalities of a biſhop have been adjudged to be ſeized until he ſatisfied the King for ſuch a contempt, on information exhibited, &c. Cro. Car. 253. The biſhop of Durham pretending he had ſuch a Franchiſe, that the King's writ was not to come there, and becauſe one brought it thither he impriſoned him; this being proved upon an information brought againſt him, it was adjudged he ſhould pay a fine to the King, and loſe his liberties. 2 Shep. Abr. 250.

If a perſon claims Franchiſes which he ought not to have, it is an uſurpation upon the King; and not ſhewing his title, the King ſhall take from him his Franchiſe. Poph. 180: 1 Bulſt 54 The King's Bench will not grant an information on private uſurpation of Franchiſes, but the proper remedy is to proceed by quo warranto. Hardw. 261.

If Franchiſes and liberties are granted to the King, which were before in eſſe, as flowers of his crown, and afterwards by eſcheat, ſurrender or otherwiſe, come back to the crown, they are re-united to the crown, and the King has them in jure coronæ as before. 9 Co. 25 b. So if liberties, franchiſes, &c. which were appendant to a manor, come with the manor to the King, the appendancy is extinct, and the King is re-ſeiſed of them in jure coronæ. 9 Co. 25 b: Cro. Eliz. 591: 1 And. 87.—See Jon. 286. But if Franchiſes, liberties, &c. created de novo, by the King come back to the crown, they are not merged or extinguiſhed in the crown. 9 Co. 25 b: 1 And. 87.—See Cro. El. 592: Dy. 327 a: Com. Dig. title Franchiſe (G).

Diſturbance of Franchiſes happens, when a man has the Franchiſe of holding a court-leet, of keeping a fair or market, of free warren, of taking toll, of ſeizing waifs or eſtrays, or, in ſhort, any other ſpecies of Franchiſe whatſoever, and he is diſturbed or incommoded in the lawful exerciſe thereof. As if another by diſtreſs, menaces, or perſuaſions, prevail upon the ſuitors not to appear at my court; or obſtruct the paſſage to my fair or market; or hunts in my free warren; or refuſes to pay me the accuſtomed toll; or hinders me from ſeizing the waif or eſtray, whereby it eſcapes, or is carried out of my liberty: In all caſes of this kind, and which are of a variety too extenſive to be here enumerated, an injury is done to the legal owner of the Franchiſe; his property is damnified: and the profits ariſing from ſuch his Franchiſe are diminiſhed. To remedy which, as the law has given no other writ, he is therefore entitled to ſue for damages by a ſpecial action on the caſe: or in caſe of toll, may take a diſtreſs, if he pleaſes. 3 Comm. 236.

FRANCIGENÆ, Was anciently the general appellation of all foreigners. Vide Englecery.

FRANCLAINE, Uſed in ancient authors to denote a freeman or a gentleman. Forteſcue.

FRANK, A French gold coin, worth twenty ſols, which is a livre, about ten pence ½ d. Engliſh money.

FRANKALMOIGN, Libera Eleemoſyna.] A tenure by ſpiritual ſervice, where an eccleſiaſtical corporation, ſole or aggregate, holdeth land to them and their ſucceſſors, of ſome lord and his heirs in free and perpetual alms: And perpetual ſuppoſes it to be a fee-ſimple; tho' it may paſs without the word ſucceſſors. Litt. § 133: Co. Lit. 94. A lay perſon cannot hold in free alms: And when a grant is in Frankalmoign, no mention is to be made of any manner of ſervice. Lit. 137. None can hold in Frankalmoign but by preſcription, or by force of ſome grant made before the ſtatute of Mortmain, 7 Ed. 1. ſt. 2: 18 Ed. 1. ſt. 1. c. 3. So that the tenure cannot at this day be created, to hold of a founder and his heirs in free alms: But the King is not reſtrained by the ſtatutes; nor a Subject licenſed or diſpenſed with by the King, to make ſuch a grant, &c. Co. Lit. 98, 99. And if an eccleſiaſtical perſon holds lands by fealty and certain rent, the lord may at this time confirm his eſtate, to hold to him and his ſucceſſors in Frankalmoign; for the former ſervices are extinct, and nothing is reſerved but that he ſhould hold of him which he did before; whereby this change and alteration is not within the Stat. 18 Ed. 1, of quia emptores terrarum. Lit. § 140, 540: Co. Lit. 99, 306.

Tenure in Frankalmoign is incident to the inheritable blood of the donor or founder; except in caſe of the King, who may grant this tenure to hold of him and his ſucceſſors. Lit. 135. And the reaſon why a grant in Frankalmoign, ſince the Stat. 18 Ed. 1, (quia emptores) is void, except cept in the caſe of the King, &c. is becauſe none can hold land by this tenure, but of the donor; whereas the ſtatute injoins, that it be held of the Chief Lord, by the ſame ſervice by which the feoffor held it; though the King may grant away any eſtate, and reſerve the tenure to himſelf. Co. Lit. 99, 223.

The ſervice which eccleſiaſtical corporations were bound to render for lands held in Frankalmoign was not certainly defined, but only in general, to pray for the ſouls of the donor and his heirs, dead or alive; and therefore they did no fealty (which is incident to all other ſervices but this) becauſe this divine ſervice was of a higher and more exalted nature. Lit. § 134, 5.

This is the tenure by which almoſt all the ancient Monaſteries and Religious houſes held their lands; and by which the parochial clergy and very many eccleſiaſtical and eleemoſynary foundations hold them to this day. The nature of the ſervice being, upon the Reformation, altered and made conformable to the doctrines of the Church of England. It was an old Saxon tenure, and continued under the Norman Revolution; from the reſpect then ſhewn to religion and religious men: which is alſo the reaſon that tenants in Frankalmoign were diſcharged of all other ſervices, except the trinoda neceſſitas of repairing the highways, building caſtles and repelling invaſions. See Bract. l. 4. tr. 1. c. 28. § 1: Seld. Jan. 1. 42.

Even at preſent, this is a tenure of a nature very diſtinct from all others, being not in the leaſt feodal, but merely ſpiritual. For this reaſon, if any perſon that holds lands or tenements in Frankalmoign, make any failure in doing ſuch divine ſervice as they ought, the lord may make complaint of it to the Ordinary or viſitor; which is the King, if he be founder; or a Subject where he was appointed viſitor upon the foundation; and the Ordinary, &c. may puniſh the negligence, according to the eccleſiaſtical laws. Lit. 136: Co. Lit. 96.

In this particular, tenure in Frankalmoign materially differs from what was called tenure by Divine Service: in which tenants were obliged to do ſome ſpecial divine ſervices in certain: as to ſing ſo many maſſes, to diſtribute ſuch a ſum in alms, and the like; which being expreſsly defined and preſcribed, could with no kind of propriety be called free alms; eſpecially as for this, if unperformed, the lord might diſtrain without any complaint to the viſitor. Lit. § 137: Britt. c. 66.

Theſe donations in Frankalmoign are now out of uſe, as none but the King can make them; but they are expreſsly excepted, by name, in the Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, (§ 7,) aboliſhing tenures, and therefore ſubſiſt in many inſtances at the preſent day. 2 Comm. 101. c. 6.

FRANK-CHASE, A liberty of free chaſe; by which all perſons that have lands within the compaſs thereof, are prohibited to cut down any wood, &c. without the view of the foreſter, though it be in their own demeſnes. Cromp. Juriſ. 187.

FRANKED LETTERS, See title Poſt: Parliament.

FRANK-FEE Freehold lands which are held exempted from all ſervices, but not from homage. In the regiſter of writs we find that is frank fee, which a man holds at the Common-law, to him and his heirs; and not by ſuch ſervice, as is required in ancient demeſne, according to the cuſtom of the manor: And that the lands in the hand of King Edward the Confeſſor, at the making of the book of Domeſday, were ancient demeſne, and all the reſt frank-fee; wherewith Fitz-Herbert agrees. Reg. Orig. 12: F. N. B. 161. Theſe lands were exempted from all ſervices, but not from homage.—Bro. tit. Demeſne 32, ſays, that land which is in the hands of the King or lord of any manor, or being ancient demeſne of the crown (viz. the demeſnes) is called Frank-fee; and that which is in the hands of the tenant, is ancient demeſne only. The author of the Terms of the Law defines a Free-fee to be a tenure pleadable at the Common-law; and not in ancient demeſne. Cowel: Blount. See title Ancient Demeſne.

FRANK-FERM. Lands or tenements, changed in the nature of the fee by feoffment, &c. out of knight ſervice, for certain yearly ſervices. Britton, c. 66. See title Fee-farm.

FRANK-FOLD, See Foldage.

FRANK-LAW, Libera Lex.] The benefit of the free and Common-law of the land. You may find what it is by the contrary, from Crompton in his Juſtice of Peace; where he ſays, he that for any offence loſeth his Frank-law, falls into theſe miſchiefs, viz. He may never be impannelled upon any jury or aſſiſe; or be permitted to give any teſtimony: If he hath any thing to do in the King's courts, he muſt not attend them in perſon, but appoint his attorney therein for him: And his lands ſhall be eſtreated, and his body committed to priſon, &c. Cromp. Juriſ. 156: Lib. Aſſiſ. 59.

FRANK-MARRIAGE, Liberum Maritagium.] A tenure in tail ſpecial where a man ſeiſed of land in fee-ſimple, gives it to another with his daughter, ſiſter, &c. in marriage; to hold to them and their heirs: This tenure groweth from theſe words in the gift, i. e. Sciant, &c. me A. B. dediſſe & conceſſiſſe, &c. T. B. filio meo & Annæ uxori ejus, filiæ, &c. in liberum maritagium, unum meſſuagium, &c. Litt. § 17: Weſt. Symb. par. 1. lib. 2. § 303. The effect of which words is, That they ſhall have the land to them and the heirs of their bodies; and ſhall do no ſervices to the donor, except fealty, until the fourth degree. Glanvil, lib. 7. c. 18. And Fleta gives this reaſon why the heirs do no ſervice until the fourth degree: Ne donatores vel eorum hæredes per homagii receptionem à reverſione repellantur. And why in the fourth deſcent and downward, they ſhall do ſervices to the donor; quia in quarto gradu vehementer præſumitur, quod terra eſt pro defectu hæredum donatorum reverſura. Fleta, lib. 3. c. 11; and ſee Bracton, lib. 2. c. 7.

Bracton alſo divides marriage into liberum maritagium and maritagium ſervitio obligatum; which laſt was where lands were given in marriage, with a reſervation of the ſervices to the donor, which the donee and his heirs were bound to perform for ever; but neither he, or the next two heirs, were obliged to do homage, which was to be done when it came to the fourth degree, and then, and not before, they were required to be performed both ſervices and homage. Bract. lib. 2. A gift of lands by one man to another with a wife in frank-marriage, amounts by implication of law to a gift in tail; which in this caſe may be created without the words heirs or body. Lit. 17: Wood's Inſt. 120. A gift in Frank-marriage might be made as well after as before marriage: And ſuch a gift was a fee-ſimple before the ſtatute of Weſtm. 2; but ſince, it is uſually a fee-tail: Though this tenure is now grown out of uſe it is ſtill capable of ſubſiſting in law: It is liable to no ſervice but fealty. See 2 Comm 115. c. 7.

FRANK-PLEDGE, Franci plegium, from Fr. Franc, Liber, and pledge, fidejuſſor.] A pledge or ſurety for the behaviour of Freemen; it being the ancient cuſtom of this kingdom, borrowed from the Lombards, that for the preſervation of the public peace, every free-born man at the age of fourteen, (religious perſons, clerks, &c. excepted) ſhould give ſecurity for his truth towards the King and his ſubjects, or be committed to priſon; whereupon a certain number of neighbours, uſually became bound one for another, to ſee each man of their pledge forth-coming at all times, or to anſwer the tranſgreſſion done by any gone away: And whenever any one offended, it was forthwith inquired in what pledge he was, and then thoſe of that pledge either produced the offender within one and thirty days, or ſatisfied for his offence. This was called Frank-pledge; and this cuſtom was ſo kept, that the ſheriffs at every county-court, did from time to time take the oaths of young perſons as they grew to fourteen years of age, and ſee that they were ſettled in one decennary or other; whereby this branch of the ſheriff's authority was called viſus franci plegii, or view of Frank-pledge. At this day no man ordinarily giveth other ſecurity for the keeping of the peace, than his own oath; ſo that none anſwereth for the tranſgreſſion of another, but every perſon for himſelf. 4 Inſt. 78. Living under Frank-pledge has been termed living under law, &c. See this Dict. titles Court-leet; Decennary; Deciner.

FRANK TENEMENT, A poſſeſſion of freehold lands and tenements. See Freehold.

FRASSETUM, A corruption of fraxinetum.] A wood or woody ground, where aſh-trees grow. Co. Lit. 4.

FRATER CONSANGUINEUS. A brother by the father's ſide.

FRATER NUTRICIUS. Uſed in ancient deeds for a baſtard brother. Malmſb.

FRATER UTERINUS. A brother by the mother's ſide.

FRATERIA, A fraternity, brotherhood or ſociety of religious perſons, who were bound to pray for the good health and life, &c. of their living brethren, and the ſouls of thoſe that were dead: in the ſtatutes of the cathedral church of St. Paul in London, collected by Ralph Baldock, Dean, A. D. 1295, there is one chapter de frateria beneficiorum eccleſiæ S. Pauli, &c.

FRATERNITIES, See title Corporation.

FRATRES CONJURATI, Sworn brothers or companions; ſometimes thoſe were ſo called who were ſworn to defend the King againſt his enemies. Hoveden, p. 445: Leg. W. 1: Leg. Ed. 1. c. 35.

FRATRES PYES, Pied friars.] Certain friars, wearing black and white garments; of whom mention is made by Walſingham. p. 124.

FRATRIAGIUM. A younger brother's inheritance; Whatever the ſons or brothers poſſeſs of the eſtate of the father, they enjoy it ratione fratriagii, and are to do homage to the elder brother for it, who is bound to do homage for the whole to the ſuperior lord. Bract. lib. 2. c. 35.

FRAUD. Fraus Lat.] Deceit in grants and conveyances of lands, and bargains and ſales of goods, &c. to the damage of another perſon; which may be either by ſuppreſſion of the truth, or ſuggeſtion of a falſehood.

On this ſubject of FRAUD, we may enquire,

I. What Acts are fraudulent at Common-law, and in Equity.

II. What Acts are fraudulent by Statute.

I. It may be laid down as a general rule, that, without the expreſs proviſion of any act of parliament, all deceitful practices in defrauding, or endeavouring to defraud, another of his known right, by means of ſome artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honeſty, are condemned by the Common-law, and puniſhable according to the heinouſneſs of the offence. Co. Lit. 3 b; Dyer 295. Such as cauſing an illiterate perſon to execute a deed to his prejudice, by reading of it over to him in words different from thoſe in which it was written, &c. 1 Sid. 312, 431.

Alſo it is a rule, that a wrongful manner of executing a thing ſhall avoid a matter that might have been executed lawfully. Co. Litt. 35: 41 Aſſ. 28: 47 Aſſ. 29: 1 Rol. Abr. 420, 549: Co. Lit. 357: Poph. 64, 100.

A deed not fraudulent at firſt may become ſo afterwards. And if one add a ſeal to a note which is good without it, he ſhall loſe his ſecurity. 2 Vern. 123, 162.

As to frauds in contracts and dealings, the Common-law ſubjects the wrong-doer, in ſeveral inſtances, to an action on the caſe; as if a perſon, having the poſſeſſion of goods, ſell them to another, affirming them to be his own, when in truth they are not, an action on the caſe lies. 1 Rol. Abr. 90: Cro. Jac. 474. But if A. poſſeſſed of term for years, offers to ſell it to B. and ſays, that a ſtranger would have given him twenty pounds for this term, by which means B. buys it, tho' in truth A. was never offered twenty pounds, no action on the caſe lies, tho' B. is hereby deceived in the value. 1 Rol. Abr. 91, 101: 1 Sid. 146: Yelv. 20. S. P.

If on a treaty for the purchaſe of a houſe, the defendant affirms the rent to be more than it is, whereby the plaintiff is induced to give more than the houſe is worth, this is a fraud. 1 Salk. 211: 1 Lev. 102: 1 Sid. 146: 1 Keb. 510, 518, 522. S. P. And ſee Kel. 24, 81: 1 Show. 50, 51.

Where a perſon is party to a Fraud, all that follows by reaſon of that Fraud ſhall be ſaid to be done by him. Cro. Jac. 469 But when Fraud is not expreſsly averred, it ſhall not be preſumed; nor ſhall the court adjudge it to be ſo, till the matter is found by a jury. 10 Rep. 56.

All Frauds and deceits, for which there is no remedy by the ordinary courſe of law, are properly cogniſable in equity; and it is admitted, that matters of Fraud were one of the chief branches to which the juriſdiction of Chancery was originally confined. 4 Inſt. 84. It would be endleſs to enumerate the ſeveral caſes, wherein relief has been given againſt Frauds: but the following inſtances are too material to be omitted.

Wherever Fraud or ſurpriſe can be imputed to, or collected from the circumſtances of the tranſaction, Equity will interpoſe and relieve againſt it. Toth. 101, 2: 2 Ch. Ca. 103: Finch 161: 2 P. Wms. 203, 270: 3 P. Wms. 130: 2 Vern. 189: 2 Atk 324: 2 Vez. 407. It is ſaid however that it muſt not be underſtood, from caſes of this kind being generally brought into equity, that the courts of law are incompetent to relieve; for where the Fraud can be clearly eſtabliſhed, courts of law exerciſe a concurrent juriſdiction with courts of equity; and will relieve by making making void the inſtrument obtained by ſuch corrupt agreement or Fraud. 1 Burr. 396: Wood's Inſt. 296. Therefore where the obligor was an unlettered man, and the bond was not read over to him, he was allowed to plead this circumſtance in an action on the bond. 9 H. 5. 15. cited 11 Co. 27 b. So if the bond be in part read to an unlettered man, and ſome of its material contents be omitted or miſ-repreſented. 2 Rol. Ab. 28. p. 8. It is obſervable that Lord Coke in the ſame paſſage where he confines the juriſdiction of courts of equity to ſuch "frauds covin and deceit, for which there is no remedy by the ordinary courſe of law," ſeems to admit that all frauds were not relievable at law. See 3 Inſt. 84.

The Chancery may decree a conveyance to be fraudulent, merely for being voluntary, and without any trial at law; yet it has been inſiſted, that Fraud or not, was triable only by a jury. Pre. Ch. 14, 15.

A poor man was drawn in to ſell an eſtate, at a great under-value; but no Fraud appearing, though the purchaſe was not a fair bargain, the ſeller could not be relieved in equity, to ſet it aſide. Preced. Canc. 206.

There does not appear to be a ſingle caſe in the books in which it has been held that mere inadequacy of price alone is a ground for a court of equity to annul an agreement, though executory, if the ſame appear to have been fairly entered into, and underſtood by the parties, and capable of being ſpecifically performed; ſtill leſs does it appear to have been conſidered as a ground for reſcinding an agreement actually executed. See Gilb. Rep. 155: Bro. P. C. Keen v. Stukeley.—2 Atk. 251: Ambl. 18. To ſet aſide a conveyance there muſt be an inequality of price ſo ſtrong, groſs and manifeſt, that it muſt be impoſſible to ſtate it to a man of common ſenſe, without producing an exclamation at the inequality of it. 1 Bro. C. R. 9: and ſee 2 Bro. C. R. 179 in n. A ſtrong argument in ſupport of this rule may be drawn from thoſe caſes in which loſing bargains have been actually eſtabliſhed and decreed. See 2 Vern. 423: 1 Eq. Ab. 170: 2 Vez. 422: 1 Bro. C. R. 158.—But tho' courts of equity will not relieve againſt agreements merely on the ground of the conſideration being inadequate, yet if there be ſuch inadequacy as to ſhew that the perſon did not underſtand the bargain he made, or was ſo oppreſſed that he was glad to make it, knowing its inadequacy, it will ſhew a command over him which may amount to a Fraud. 2 Bro. C. R. 175. See alſo 1 Bro. C. R. 558: Herne v. Meers: 2 Vez. 155: 2 P. Wms. 203.

A. being tenant in tail, remainder to his brother B. in tail, A. not knowing of the intail, makes a ſettlement on his wife for life for her jointure, without levying a fine, or ſuffering a recovery, which B. who knew of the intail ingroſſes, but does not mention any thing of the intail, becauſe, as he confeſſed in his anſwer, if he had ſpoke any thing of it, his brother, by a recovery, might have cut off the remainder, and barred him; and altho' after A.'s death, B. recovered in ejectment againſt the widow by force of the intail; yet ſhe was relieved in Chancery, and a perpetual injunction granted for this Fraud in B. in concealing the intail; which if it had been diſcloſed, the ſettlement might have been made good by a recovery. Preced. Chanc. 35: 2 Vern. 239.

So where a mother being abſolute owner of a term, the ſame being limited to her in tail, is preſent at a treaty for her ſon's marriage, and hears her ſon declare, that the term was to come to him at his mother's death, and is a witneſs to the deed, whereby the reverſion of the term is ſettled on the iſſue of the marriage after the mother's death; ſhe was compelled in equity to make good the ſettlement. 2 Vern. 150.

Where the defendant, on a treaty of marriage for his daughter with the plaintiff, ſigned a writing comprifing the terms of the agreement, and afterward deſiring to elude the force thereof, and get looſe from his agreement, ordered his daughter to put on a good humour, and get the plaintiff to deliver up that writing, and then marry him, which ſhe accordingly did, and the defendant ſtood by at the corner of a ſtreet to ſee them go by to be married; The plaintiff was relieved on the point of Fraud. 1 Eq. Ab. 20: 2 Vern. 373.

It ſeems agreed that if a woman on the point of marriage, charge, or convey her property to a mere ſtranger, for whom ſhe was not under even a moral obligation to provide, that ſuch conveyance will be decreed a Fraud on the marital rights. 2 C. R. 41: 2 Vez. 264.

If A. has a prior incumbrance on an eſtate, and is a witneſs to a ſubſequent mortgage, but does not diſcloſe his own incumbrance; this is ſuch a Fraud in him for which his incumbrance ſhall be poſtponed. 2 Vern. 151. And ſee 2 Vern. 554. So if A. having a mortgage on a leaſehold eſtate lends the mortgage deed to the mortgagor, with an intent to borrow more money; that is ſuch a Fraud in the mortgagee, for which his mortgage ſhall be poſtponed to the ſubſequent incumbrance. 2 Vern. 726: 1 Eq. Ab. 321.—See this Dict. title Mortgage.

If a copyholder, by his will intending to give the greateſt part of his eſtate to his godſon, and the other part to his wife, is perſuaded by the wife to nominate her to the whole, on a promiſe that ſhe would give the godſon the part deſigned for him; it will be decreed againſt the wife on the point of Fraud, though there was no memorandum thereof in writing purſuant to the ſtatute of Frauds and Perjuries. Preced. Canc. 3.

Since the caſes of Kerrick v. Bransby, (Bro. P. C.) and Webb v. Cleverden, (2 Atk. 424,) it appears to have been ſettled that a will cannot be ſet aſide in equity for Fraud and impoſition; becauſe a will of perſonal eſtate may be ſet aſide for Fraud in the eccleſiaſtical court, and a will of real eſtate may be ſet aſide at law: for in ſuch caſes, as the animus teſtandi is wanting, it cannot be conſidered as a will. 2 Atk. 324: 3 Atk. 17.—Though equity will not ſet aſide a will for Fraud, nor reſtrain the probate of it in the proper court, yet if the Fraud be proved, it will not aſſiſt the party practiſing it, but will leave him to make what advantage he can of it. 2 Vern. 76. But if the validity of the will has been already determined and acted upon, equity will reſtrain proceedings in the prerogative court, to controvert its validity. 1 Atk. 628. That the party prejudiced by the Fraud may file a bill in equity for a diſcovery of all its circumſtances is unqueſtionable: the invariable practice in ſuch caſes is to ſeek relief, and the iſſue directed is to furniſh the ground upon which the court is to proceed in giving relief. Fonblanque's Treat. Eq. c. 2. § 3, in n.

If a ſecurity be obtained from a perſon by Fraud and practice, upon a pretence of a demand that is fictitious, it will be relieved againſt in equity. 2 Vern. 123, 632.

There are likewiſe ſeveral inſtances, where a parol agreement intended to be reduced into writing, but prevented by Fraud, has been decreed in equity, notwithſtanding the ſtatute of Frauds and Perjuries; as where upon upon a marriage treaty, inſtructions were given by the huſband to draw a ſettlement, which he privately countermanded, and afterwards drew in the woman by perſuaſions and aſſurances of ſuch ſettlement to marry him; It was decreed, that he ſhould make good the ſettlement. 1 Eq. Ab. 19. So where a parol agreement was concerning the lending of money on a mortgage, and the covenants propoſed were an abſolute deed from the mortgagor and a deed of defeaſance from the mortgagee, and after the mortgagee had got the deed of conveyance, he refuſed to execute the defeaſance; It was decreed againſt him on the point of Fraud. 1 Eq. Ab. 90. See title Agreement.

II. By St. 1 R. 2. c. 9, no gift or feoffment of lands or goods ſhall be made by Fraud for maintenance. And the diſſeiſees ſhall have their recovery againſt the firſt diſſeiſors as well of their lands as of double damages, without regard to ſuch alienations. See alſo Stats. 4 H. 4. c. 7: 11 H. 6. c. 3; and this Dictionary titles Diſſeiſin: Forcible Entry.

By Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 4, (and ſee Stat. 50 E. 3. c. 6,) All deeds of gift of goods made in truſt for the uſe of perſons making the ſaid gifts, with intent to defraud creditors, ſhall be null and void.

By Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5, (made perpetual by Stat. 29 Eliz. c. 5,) Every feoffment, gift, alienation and conveyance of lands or goods, leaſes, rents, &c. and every bond, judgment and execution with intent to defraud creditors or others, ſhall (only againſt creditors and others whoſe actions ſhall be thereby defrauded or delayed) be of none effect; all parties and privies to ſuch conveyances, bonds, &c. ſhall forfeit one year's value of the lands and the whole of the goods, or money contained in the bond, &c. half to the crown and half to the party grieved; and ſuffer half a year's impriſonment.—This ſtatute not to extend to any eſtate made on good conſiderations bonâ fide to perſons not having notice of ſuch Fraud.

By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4, (made perpetual by Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 18,) Every conveyance, charge, leaſe or incumbrance of any lands made with intent to defraud purchaſers ſhall be deemed utterly void as againſt ſuch purchaſers and all claiming under them.—The parties and privies to ſuch conveyances ſhall forfeit one year's value of the land and ſuffer half a year's impriſonment.—The ſtatute expreſsly excepts any conveyance made for good conſideration and bonâ fide.—If any perſon ſhall make any conveyance or limitation of lands with a clauſe of revocation, and after ſuch conveyance ſhall convey or charge the ſame lands for money or other good conſideration, the ſaid firſt conveyance againſt the ſaid vendees ſhall be void.—Lawful mortgages made bonâ fide on good conſideration are excepted.—By the ſame act ſtatutes-merchant and ſtatutes-ſtaple are to be entered in the office of the clerk of the recognizances. See this Dict. thoſe titles.

By Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, (known more commonly by the name of The Statute of Frauds, and by which various proviſions are made as to Contracts, Wills, &c. which ſee in this Dict. under titles Agreement; Aſſumpſit; Wills, &c.;) All leaſes, eſtates of freehold, or terms for years, or any uncertain intereſt in lands, made by livery and ſeiſin only, or by parol, and not put in writing and ſigned by the parties or their agents ſhall have the force of leaſes at will only.—Except leaſes not exceeding the term of three years at two thirds of the improved value.—And no leaſes, eſtates or intereſts of lands, either of freehold or terms of years, or any uncertain intereſt, not being copyhold, ſhall be aſſigned, granted or ſurrendered, unleſs by deed or note in writing ſigned by the parties or their agents: or by the operation of law.

By Stat. 3 (or 3 & 4) W. & M. c. 14, made perpetual by Stat. 6 W. 3. c. 14, all wills or appointments of lands, or of any rent, &c. out of the ſame ſhall be deemed, only as againſt Creditors by bond or ſpecialty binding the heir, to be fraudulent and void.—And every ſuch creditor ſhall have his action of debt upon his bonds and ſpecialties againſt the heir at law of ſuch obligors, and ſuch deviſees jointly.—This ſtatute however excepts diſpoſitions for the payment of debts and raiſing portions for children in purſuance of marriage contracts made before marriage: It further provides that where any heir at law ſhall be liable to pay his anceſtor's debt, in reſpect of lands deſcended to ſuch heir, and ſhall alien the ſame before action brought, ſuch heir ſhall be anſwerable to the creditor in an action of debt to the value of the land aliened; but the lands bonâ fide aliened before action brought ſhall not be liable.—Every deviſee however, made liable by the ſtatute, ſhall be chargeable, in the ſame manner as the heir, tho' the lands deviſed ſhall be aliened before action brought.

The Stats. 50 E. 3. c. 6: 3 H. 7. c. 4, expreſsly declare all gifts, &c. of goods and chattels intended to defraud creditors, to be null and void; creditors might however ſtill in ſome caſes be defrauded, by their debtors' executing powers of appointment (veſted in them by ſettlement, &c.) in favour of mere volunteers, unleſs courts of equity interpoſed, and made ſuch voluntary appointment in the firſt place ſubject to payment of debts. 2 Vern. 319, 465: 2 Vez. 1. But tho' courts of equity will ſubject a voluntary appointment to payment of debts, yet they will not interfere where the debtor has not executed his power of appointment. 2 Vern. 465: 2 Vez. 1. See alſo Hob. 9, as to the rule of law.

As the Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5, not only declares all deeds made in Fraud of creditors to be null and void, but ſubjects the parties to ſuch Fraud, to the penalties and forfeitures above-mentioned, it ſhould ſeem that the proviſions of this act ought to be conſtrued ſtrictly; but Lord Manſfield has ſaid, that the Stats. 13 El. c. 5: 27 El. c. 4, cannot receive too liberal a conſtruction, or be too much extended in ſuppreſſion of Fraud. Cowp. 434.

The object of the Legiſlature was evidently to protect creditors from thoſe Frauds which are frequently practiſed by debtors under the pretence of diſcharging a moral obligation: for as to thoſe gifts or conveyances which want even a good or meritorious conſideration for their ſupport, their being voluntary ſeems to have been always a ſufficient ground to conclude that they were fraudulent: but tho' the ſtatute protects the legal right of creditors againſt the Fraud of their debtors, it anxiouſly excepts from ſuch imputation the bonâ fide diſcharge of a moral duty. It therefore does not declare all voluntary conveyances, but all fraudulent conveyances to be void: and whether the conveyance be fraudulent or not is declared to depend on the conſideration being good, and alſo bonâ fide. 1 Ch. Ca. 99, 291: 1 Vent. 194: 1 Mod. 119: 1 Atk. 15: Cowp. 708.

A good

A good conſideration is that of blood, or of natural love and affection. See this Dict. title Conſideration. A gift made for ſuch conſideration ought certainly to prevail, unleſs it be found to break in upon the legal rights of others; in that caſe it is equally clear it ought to be ſet aſide. If therefore a man being indebted convey to the uſe of his wife or children, ſuch conveyance would be within the ſtatute; for tho' the conſideration be good, yet it is not bonâ fide; that is, the circumſtances of the grantor render it inconſiſtent with that good faith which is due to his creditors. Fonblanque's Treat. Eq. c. 4. § 12. in notes.

If there be a voluntary conveyance of real eſtate, or chattel intereſt by one not indebted at the time, tho' he afterwards becomes indebted, if that voluntary conveyance was for a child, and there is no particular evidence or badge of Fraud to deceive ſubſequent creditors, that will be good; but if any mark of fraud, colluſion or intent to deceive ſubſequent creditors appear, that will make it void. 2 Vez. 11: See alſo 2 Atk. 481: 1 Atk. 13: Cowp. 711.

But the grantor's being indebted is not the only badge of Fraud; ſeveral other circumſtances are enumerated in Twyne's Caſe, (3 Rep:) as furniſhing a ſtrong preſumption that the tranſaction is malâ fide. Gifts made in ſecret are liable to ſuſpicion of Fraud: a general gift of all a man's goods may be reaſonably ſuſpected to be fraudulent, even tho' there be a true debt owing to the party to whom made. The ſeveral marks or badges of Fraud, in a gift or grant of goods are, if it be general, without exception of ſome things of neceſſity; if the donor ſtill poſſeſſes and uſes the goods; if the deed be ſecretly made; if there be a truſt between the parties; or if it be made pending the action. 3 Rep. 80—82.—If alſo the conveyance contain a power of revocation, or a power to mortgage, it will be conſidered as fraudulent againſt creditors. 2 Vern. 510.—So if the grantor be allowed to continue in poſſeſſion of lands, the conveyance being abſolute. 2 Bulſt. 218.—So if the conveyance or gift be in general of the whole or the greater part of the grantor's property, ſuch conveyance or gift would be preſumed to be fraudulent; for no man can voluntarily diveſt himſelf of all, or the moſt of what he has, without being aware that future creditors will probably ſuffer for it. In ſhort if the tranſaction be chargeable with any circumſtance ſufficiently ſtrong to raiſe a preſumption of its being a Fraud, it cannot be ſupported, unleſs ſome other conſideration be interpoſed to obviate the objection ariſing from the general nature of the tranſaction: as where the huſband after marriage being indebted conveyed an eſtate to truſtees, to the ſeparate uſe of his wife: it was held that the truſtees having undertaken to indemnify him againſt his wife's debts, was ſufficient to ſupport the ſettlement as a valuable conſideration. 2 Bro. C. R. 90. But if this tranſaction had been with a view to defraud creditors, it would probably have been ſet aſide; for if the tranſaction be not bonâ fide, the circumſtance of its being even for a valuable conſideration will not alone take it out of the ſtatute. Cowp. 434: 2 Atk. 477.

But tho' creditors may under the above and other circumſtances avoid a voluntary conveyance, yet it is binding on the party making it and all claiming under him. Cro. Jac. 270: 1 Eq. Ab. 168: 22 Vin. Ab. 16—18: 1 Vern. 100, 132, 464: 2 Vern. 475: 22 Vin. Ab. 24. pl. 3. And if there be two or more voluntary conveyances, the firſt ſhall prevail, unleſs the latter be for payment of debts. 1 Ch. Rep. 92: 2 Ch. Rep. 199.

A conveyance, if made of lands by Fraud, is not void by the Stat. 13 El. c. 5, againſt all perſons; but only againſt thoſe who afterwards come to the land upon valuable conſideration. Cro. Eliz. 445: Cro. Jac. 271.

A diſtinction has been taken between the claims of real creditors, and a debt founded in maleficio: for A. having brought an action againſt B. for criminal converſation with A's wife B. aſſigned his eſtates to truſtees in truſt to pay the ſeveral debts mentioned in a ſchedule, and ſuch other debts as he ſhould name. A. recovered 5000 l. damages and brought his bill to ſet aſide this deed as fraudulent, but the Court held that it was not fraudulent either in law or equity: for the plaintiff was no creditor at the time of making the deed: and though it were made with an intent to prefer his real creditors before this debt when it ſhould come to be ſuch, yet it was conſcientious ſo to do. But the plaintiff was held to have an intereſt in the ſurplus after payment of the other debts. Pre. Ch. 105.

On the conſtruction of the Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4, it has been held that every voluntary conveyance ſhall be preſumed to be fraudulent againſt a ſubſequent purchaſer. 1 Vent. 194: 1 Cha. Ca. 100, 217: Cro. Jac. 158. But if the conveyance, tho' voluntary, appear to have been made for a meritorious conſideration; and without Fraud or covin, it ſhall not be void againſt a ſubſequent purchaſer; for there is no part of the act which affects voluntary ſettlements eo nomine unleſs they are fraudulent. Doe v. Routledge, Cowp. 708. See alſo, 2 Wilſ. 356: Forreſt 64: 2 Vern. 44. As to what ſhall be deemed a meritorious conſideration, ſee the above caſes, and alſo, 1 Vern. 408, 467: 1 Atk. 265. And though a conveyance be covinous in its creation it may acquire validity by ſubſequent matter; as where the land conveyed is afterwards aliened or ſettled for valuable conſideration. 1 Sid. 133, 4: Skin. 423: 3 Lev. 387. It has alſo been held that a purchaſer, to avail himſelf of this act, muſt be a purchaſer for money or other valuable conſideration. 3 Co. 83 a: Cro. Eliz. 444. See alſo Com. Dig. Fraud. 4 I. 2: 1 Eq. Ab. 353.

Gooch's Caſe, (5 Co. 60 b,) determines that a purchaſer ſhall avoid a fraudulent conveyance, notwithſtanding his notice of the Fraud, but this can by no means bear out the inference that all voluntary conveyances are fraudulent, and therefore abſolutely void, though the purchaſer have notice of them. The terms of Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4. § 2, ſeem to be ſufficiently diſtinct to confine its operation to ſuch conveyances as are made with an intent to defraud and deceive ſubſequent purchaſers; but it were difficult to maintain that a conveyance was made with intent to defraud a perſon who before he became a purchaſer had full notice of ſuch conveyance. See 2 Lev. 105.—The policy of the act was to prevent Fraud; the conſtruction moſt favourable to ſuch purpoſe is that which excludes all temptation to the practice of it. A voluntary deed, as has already been noticed, is binding on the party and all claiming under him as ſubſequent volunteers; and to allow him to defeat his bounty in favour of a purchaſer for valuable conſideration without notice is merely to prefer a higher conſideration: but to allow a purchaſer with notice to ſuperſede the claims of a volunteer ſeems to encourage a breach of the reſpect morally due to the their claims and intereſts of others: and may render the proviſions of a ſtatute, intended by the legiſlature to be preventive of Fraud, the moſt effectual inſtrument of accompliſhing it.—This point ſeems deſerving of conſideration; for if the conſtruction of this act which has certainly prevailed in favour of purchaſers with notice were traced, it would probably appear to have originated in the opinion, that the ſtatute avoids all voluntary conveyances whatever; though, as very ſtrongly obſerved by Lord Mansfield in Doe v. Routlege, (Cowp. 708,) it merely affects fraudulent conveyances. Fonblanque, Treat. Eq. c. 4. § 13. in n.

Before the above Stat. 3 W. & M. c. 14, againſt fraudulent deviſes bond and other ſpecialty creditors whoſe debts did not immediately affect the lands of their debtors, were liable to be defrauded, either by their debtor deviſing his lands, or by the alienation of the heir before any action could be brought againſt him. To obviate theſe the ſtatute was made, by the proviſions of which the bond-creditor is in ſome degree protected againſt the Fraud of the debtor or his heir. But the ſtatute having expreſsly excepted deviſes for payment of debts or children's portions, bond and other ſpecialty creditors whoſe demands do in their nature affect the land are ſtill liable to be prejudiced by the right of their debtor to deviſe his real eſtate; for if he deviſe ſubject to the payment of debts, his ſimple contract creditors will be entitled to be paid pari paſſu with ſuch bond or other ſpecialty creditors; for in conſcience their debts are to be equally favoured, being equally due. 1 Ch. Ca. 32, 248: 2 Ch. Ca. 54: 3 Ch. Rep. 7: 1 Vern. 63, 101: 2 Vern. 61, 763.—And even creditors who are barred by the ſtatute of Limitations ſhall be let in. 2 Vern. 141. And tho' it has been held in ſome caſes, that if the eſtate be deviſed to the executor for payment of debts, ſuch circumſtance will render the eſtate legal aſſets, yet it ſeems now to be ſettled that this ſhall not occaſion the produce of it, when ſold, to be applied as it would in the eccleſiaſtical court, but the eſtate muſt nevertheleſs be conſidered as equitable aſſets. Newton v. Bennet, 1 Bro. C. R. 135. and Silk v. Prime, in the note there. But if the eſtate deſcends to the heir charged with the payment of debts, it will ſtill be legal aſſets. 1 P. Wms. 430: 2 Atk. 290.—See this Dict. titles Executor V. 6: Aſſets.

The following caſes may ſerve further to elucidate the foregoing principles.

If a man ſeiſed of land in fee, make a feoffment of it to divers uſes, with remainders over, &c. with power of revocation by writing under hand and ſeal; here if he for good conſideration doth enter into a recogniſance, the land ſhall be charged with the ſame: ſo if A. reſerves to himſelf power to revoke by the aſſent of B. and then bargains to another. Bridg. 22: Lane 22. And where one hath made an eſtate with the power of revocation; and after with intent to deceive a purchaſer he makes a feoffment, &c. to a ſtranger, to extinguiſh the power, and then ſells the land for a valuable conſideration; in this caſe both the conveyances ſhall be fraudulent as to the purchaſer. 2 Rep. 83.

A man made a leaſe for twenty-one years, in truſt for his daughter till marriage; and if ſhe married with his conſent, then to her during the term; this, till marriage, has been held fraudulent as to a purchaſer: but after marriage it is good, becauſe marriage is an advancement to the daughter, and taking effect made it upon valuable conſideration, which a marriage is always taken to be, and the huſband was drawn in by this conveyance to marry her. 1 Sid. 133.

If a father makes a feoffment to another, for the advancement of daughters, or his younger ſons, or for payment of his debts; and afterwards infeoffs his eldeſt ſon or heir, that is not Fraud or colluſion within the ſtatute, for he is bound in law to make proviſion for his children: but where there is a grandfather, father, and two ſons, and the grandfather (living the father) conveys his land to either of the ſons, this is out of the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 1; becauſe it is not a common thing ſo to do, and the father ought to have the immediate care of his children; though if he is dead, then it belongeth to the grandfather. 6 Rep. 76. If a man levy a fine to the uſe of himſelf for life, remainder to his ſon in tail, and after ſells the fee-ſimple to another, he as a purchaſer ſhall avoid this conveyance upon the Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 4; becauſe it was voluntary, and therefore fraudulent; ſo it had been if he had ſettled the remainder on his wife, unleſs there had been a conſideration on a precedent marriage. Sid. 133: 3 Salk. 174.

A deed, as has been already ſaid, may be voluntary, and not fraudulent; thus where a father having an extravagant ſon, ſettles his land ſo that he may not ſpend all; this is good, though there is no conſideration of money. 1 Mod. 119.

An infant promiſed, on his marriage, to ſettle his eſtate when he came of age, upon himſelf and his iſſue; and this was held a ſufficient conſideration, though an infant by law is not compellable to fulfil ſuch promiſe. 2 Lev. 147. A perſon, in conſideration that his ſon is to marry the daughter of A. B. covenants to ſtand ſeiſed of lands to the uſe of his ſon for life; and after to other ſons in reverſion or remainder: the uſes thus limited in remainder, ſhall be fraudulent as to any purchaſer of the land, tho' the firſt be upon good conſideration. And although the conſideration of marriage is good; if there be a power to revoke annexed to the deed, it will be void as to purchaſers. Lane 22.

If a man after marriage, make a voluntary conveyance of land for a jointure, or maintenance for his wife, and afterwards ſell the land for money, to one that hath no notice of it; in this caſe the conveyance, made to the uſe of the wife, ſhall be ſaid to be fraudulent: and yet if a perſon upon a marriage, before the marriage, and in conſideration thereof, or after marriage, in conſideration of a portion given or money paid, convey his land to the uſe of his wife, &c. it will not be a fraudulent deed. Cro. Jac. 158. A feme covert joins with her huſband in the alienation of her jointure, and hath a new deed of ſettlement of other lands dated the ſame day in lieu thereof, without articles or agreement precedent to this ſecond ſettlement; this is not fraudulent againſt a purchaſer, though the lands in the new ſettlement are more in value than thoſe in the firſt; for the old ſettlement being deſtroyed, and a new one made on the ſame day, it ſhall be preſumed that there was an agreement for it. 2 Lev. 70, 71.

The huſband who married a wife an inheritrix, promiſed, that if ſhe would join with him in a ſale of her land, and let him have the money to pay his debts, that he would leave her 400 l. at his death; about ſix months after after the lands were ſold, he gave bond to a ſtranger to leave his wife the 400*l.* And it was adjudged, that this was not fraudulent as to creditors, but good againſt them. 2 Lev. 148. A perſon makes a voluntary conveyance, and then mortgages the ſame land, and the firſt deed is upon a trial found fraudulent; then he to whom the deed was made, exhibited his bill in equity to redeem the mortgage; and it was held, that though the firſt deed was fraudulent, quoad the mortgage money, yet it was good to paſs the equity of redeption. Chan. Rep. 59.

Where a leaſe is made with a proviſo that if the leſſor pays 10*s.* the leaſe ſhall be void; becauſe 10*s.* is not the value of the leaſe and land, but only limited as a power of revocation, it is fraudulent as to a purchaſer. Cro. Jac. 455. And if a man makes an aſſignment of his leaſe, and yet keeps poſſeſſion of the lands, the deed of aſſignment will be adjudged fraudulent. In Chancery it has been decreed, that if a man conveys his land to friends in truſt, to the uſe of his children, &c. to defraud a purchaſer, the truſt ſhall go in equity to the purchaſer; alſo it ſhall be liable for debts, to ſatisfy the ſame. Tothil. 43, 44. A huſband aſſigned a term of his wife's, in truſt for his wife; and it was held fraudulent againſt purchaſers. Chan. Rep. 225.

By the Common-law, an eſtate made by fraud, ſhall be avoided only by him who hath a former right, title, intereſt, debt or demand. 3 Rep. 83. If one indebted do really ſell lands, though to avoid payment of debts; if the vendee be not privy to the intent, the ſale to him is good: for as to the vendee, there is no fraud in the caſe. Mich. 24 Car. B. R. A man gives his goods to his ſon, they are nevertheleſs liable as to his creditors; but if he gives them to one of his creditors, without any truſt or covin, it ſhall not be fraudulent to make him liable to other creditors. 3 Salk. 174.

If tenant for life commit a forfeiture, and he in the reverſion enters, this ſhall be as a fraudulent conveyance with reſpect to creditors. Vent. 257. Fraudulent gifts, or grants of goods to defraud the lord of his heriot, ſhall be void; and the value of the goods forfeited, under Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5.

Fraudulent conveyances to multiply votes at election of Knights of the ſhire, ſhall be taken againſt the perſons making them as free and abſolute; and all ſecurities for redeeming and reſtoring, &c. to be void. Stat. 10 Ann. c. 23. See title Parliament. A preſentation to a benefice; or adminiſtration of goods, obtained by Fraud, are void; and ſo is ſale of goods by Fraud, although in open market, &c. Where a fraudulent deed or conveyance is aſſigned upon a valuable conſideration, the Fraud is purged thereby. 1 Ld. Raym. 88.

Groſs criminal Frauds are puniſhable by way of indictment or information; ſuch as playing with falſe dice, cauſing an illiterate perſon to execute a deed to his prejudice, &c. for theſe and ſuch like offences the party may be puniſhed not only with fine and impriſonment, but alſo with ſuch farther infamous puniſhment, as the Judges in their diſcretion ſhall think proper. Cro. Jac. 497: 2 Rol. Abr. 78: 2 Rol. Rep. 107: 1 Keb. 849: 6 Mod. 42: 1 Sid. 312, 431: Noy 99, 103: Moor 630: Cro. Eliz. 531: 1 Mod. 46: 2 Jon. 64: 6 Mod. 105: 1 Salk. 379. FRAUS LEGIS. If a perſon having no manner of title to a houſe, procure an affidavit of the ſervice of a declaration in ejectment, and thereupon gets judgment; and, by virtue of a writ of hab. fac. poſſeſſionem, turns the owner out of poſſeſſion of the houſe, and ſeizes and converts the goods therein to his own uſe, he may be puniſhed as a felon; becauſe he uſed the proceſs of the law with a felonious purpoſe, in fraudem legis. Raym. 276; Sid. 254.

FREDUM, A compoſition anciently made by a criminal, to be freed from proſecution, of which the third part was paid into the Exchequer. Formerly compoſitions were paid for crimes in general, particularly for murder. The magiſtrate was to determine the compoſition, and protect the offender againſt the violence of reſentment. FREDWIT, A liberty to hold courts, and make amerciaments, &c. Cowel.

FREE-BENCH, Francus bancus; ſedes libera.] That eſtate in copyhold lands which the wife hath on the death of her huſband for her dower, according to the cuſtom of the manor: but it is ſaid the wife ought to be eſpouſed a virgin; and is to hold the land only ſo long as ſhe lives ſole and continent. Kitch. 102. Of this Free-Bench ſeveral manors have ſeveral cuſtoms; and Fitzherbert calls it a cuſtom, whereby in certain cities the wife ſhall have the whole lands of the huſband for her dower, &c. F. N. B. 150. In the manors of Eaſt and Weſt Embourne in the county of Berks, and the manor of Torre in Devonſhire, and other parts of the Weſt of England, there is a cuſtom, that when a copyhold tenant dies, his widow ſhall have her Free-bench in all his cuſtomary lands, dum ſola & caſta fuerit; but if ſhe commits incontinency, ſhe forfeits her eſtate: yet nevertheleſs, on her coming into the court of the manor, riding backwards on a black ram, with his tail in her hand, and ſaying the words following, the ſteward is bound by the cuſtom to re-admit her to her Free-bench; the words are theſe,

Here I am,
Riding on a black ram,
Like a whore as I am:
And for my crincum crancum,
I have loſt my bincum bancum;
And for my tail's game,
Have done this worldly ſhame;
Therefore pray Mr. Steward, let me have my land again.

FREE-CHAPEL, Libera capella.] A chapel ſo called, becauſe it is exempt from the juriſdiction of the dioceſan. Thoſe chapels are properly Free-chapels which are of the King's foundation, and by him exempted from the Ordinary's viſitation; alſo chapels founded within a pariſh for the ſervice of God, by the devotion and liberality of pious men, over and above the mother-church, and endowed with maintenance by the founders, which were free for the inhabitants of the pariſh to come to, were therefore called Free-chapels. Reg. Orig. 40, 41. The Free-chapel of St. Martin-le-Grand is mentioned in the Stat. 3 Ed. 4. c. 4, as are others likewiſe by ancient ſtatutes: but theſe chapels were given to the King, with the chantries, &c. By Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 14. See title Monaſteries.

FREEHOLD, Liberum tenementum.] That land or tenement which a man holds in fee-ſimple, fee-tail, or for term of life. Bract. lib. 2. c. 9. It is deſcribed to be of two ſorts: freehold in deed, and freehold in law; the firſt being the real poſſeſſion of lands, &c. in fee, or for life; the other, the right a perſon hath to ſuch lands or tenements, before his entry or ſeiſure. Freehold is alſo extended to offices, which a man holds either in fee, or during life: and, in the regiſter of writs it is ſaid, that he who holds land upon an execution of a ſtatute-merchant until he is ſatisfied the debt holds as freehold to him and his aſſigns, and the ſame of a tenant by elegit; but ſuch tenants are not in fact Freeholders, only as Freeholders for their time, till they have received the profits of the land to the value of their debt, Reg. Judic. 68, 73. A leaſe for ninety-nine years, &c. determinable upon a life or lives, is not a leaſe for life to make a Freehold, but a leaſe for years, or chattel determinable upon life or lives; and an eſtate for one thouſand years is not a Freehold, or of ſo high a nature as an eſtate for life. Co. Lit. 6. He that hath an eſtate for the term of his own life, or the life of another, hath a Freehold, and no other of a leſs eſtate; though they of a greater eſtate have a Freehold, as tenant in fee, &c. Lit. 57.

When a man pleads liberum tenementum generally, it ſhall be intended that he hath an eſtate in fee; and not a bare eſtate for life, Cro. Eliz. 87. An eſtate of Freehold cannot by the Common-law commence in futuro; but it muſt take place preſently in poſſeſſion, reverſion, or remainder. 5 Rep. 94.

A man made a deed of gift to his ſon and his heirs, of lands after his death, and no livery was made; now if there had been livery, it had been void, becauſe a Freehold cannot commence in futuro: and it has been held, that it ſhall not enure as a covenant to ſtand ſeiſed, by reaſon of the word give; by which was intended a tranſmutation of the eſtate, and not to paſs it by way of uſe. March. Rep. 50, 51. Whatſoever is part of, or fixed to the Freehold goes to the heir; and glaſs windows, wainſcot, &c. affixed to the houſe are parcel of the houſe, and cannot be removed by tenants. 4 Rep. 63, 64. But it hath been adjudged, that if things neceſſary for trade, &c. are affixed to the Freehold by the leſſee, he may take them down and remove them, ſo as he do it before the end of the term, and he do not thereby injure the Freehold. 1 Salk. 368. See title Heir.

Any thing fixed to the Freehold may not be taken in diſtreſs for rent or in execution, &c. It is not felony at Common-law, only trespaſs, to ſteal or take any thing annexed to the Freehold; ſuch as lead on a church, or houſe, corn or graſs growing on the ground, apples on a tree, &c. Though if they are ſevered from the Freehold, whether by the owner or a thief, if he ſevered them at one time, and took them away at another, it was larceny to take them. 12 Aſſ. 32: 1 Hawk. P. C. And now by Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 32, To ſteal lead on houſes, &c. is made felony.

The ſtatute of Magna Charta, c. 29, ordains, "that no perſon ſhall be diſſeiſed of his Freehold, &c. but by judgment of his peers, or according to the law of the land;" which does not only relate to common diſſeiſins, but the King may not otherwiſe ſeize into his hands the Freehold of the ſubject. Wood's Inſt. 614. None ſhall diſtrain any freeholders to anſwer for their Freeholds, or any thing touching the ſame, without the King's writ. Stat. 52 H. 3. c. 22. Nor ſhall any perſon be compelled to anſwer for his Freehold, before any lord of a manor, &c. Stat. 15 R. 2. c. 12; See this Dict. title Liberty.—As to the Freehold qualifications neceſſary in certain caſes, See this Dictionary titles Parliament; Jury, &c. and further for the definition and deſcription of Freehold eſtates, title Eſtate.

FREEHOLDERS, Such as hold any freehold eſtate. By the ancient laws of Scotland, Freeholders were called milites; and freehold, in this kingdom, hath been ſometimes taken in oppoſition to villenage, it being lands in the hands of the gentry and better ſort of tenants, by certain tenure, who were always Freeholders, contrary to what was in the poſſeſſion of the inferior people, held at the will of the lord. Lambard.

FREEMAN, Liber homo.] One diſtinguiſhed from a ſlave; that is born or made free; and theſe have divers privileges beyond others. In the diſtinction of a Freeman from a vaſſal under the feudal policy, liber homo was commonly oppoſed to vaſſus or vaſſallus; the former, denoting an allodial proprietor; the latter, one who held of a ſuperior. See title Tenures.

The title of a Freeman is alſo given to any one, admitted to the freedom of a corporate town, or of any other corporate body, conſiſting, among other members, of thoſe called Freemen. See titles Corporation; London.

FREIGHT, Fr. fret.] The money paid for carriage of goods by ſea; or in a larger ſenſe, it is taken for the cargo, or burthen of the ſhip. Ships are freighted either by the ton, or by the great; and in reſpect of time, the freight is agreed for, at ſo much per month, or at a certain ſum for the whole voyage. If a ſhip freighted by the great, happens to be caſt away, the freight is loſt; but if a merchant agrees by the ton, or at ſo much for every piece of commodities, and by any accident the ſhip is caſt away, if part of the goods is ſaved, it is ſaid ſhe ought to be anſwered her freight pro rata: and when a ſhip is inſured and ſuch a misfortune happens, the inſured commonly transfer thoſe goods over to the aſſurers, towards a ſatisfaction of what they make good. Lex Mercat.

If freight is agreed for the lading and unlading of cattle at ſuch a port, and ſome die before the ſhip arrives there, the whole Freight ſhall be paid for the living and the dead; but if the agreement be for tranſporting them, Freight ſhall be only paid for the living: it is the ſame of ſlaves. Ibid. 85. The lading of a ſhip in conſtruction of law, is bound for the Freight; the Freight being in point of payment preferred before any other debts to which the goods ſo laden are liable, though ſuch debts as to time were precedent to the Freight. Hil. 27 Car. 2.

B. R.

B. R. If part of the lading be on ſhip-board, and through ſome misfortune happening to the merchant, he has not his full lading aboard at the time agreed, the maſter ſhall have Freight by way of damage, for the time thoſe goods were on board; and is at his liberty to contract with another, leſt he loſe his ſeaſon and voyage: and where a ſhip is not ready to take in, or the merchant not ready to lade his goods aboard, the parties are not only ſo at liberty, but the perſon damnified may bring an action againſt the other and recover his damages ſuſtained. Leg. Rhod.

If the freighter of a ſhip ſhall lade on board prohibited goods, or unlawful merchandize, whereby the ſhip is detained, or the voyage impeded; he ſhall anſwer the Freight agreed for Style 220. And when goods are laden aboard, and the ſhip hath broke ground, the merchant may not afterwards unlade them; for if he then changes his mind, and reſolves not to venture, but will unlade again, by the marine law the Freight becomes due. If a maſter Freights out his ſhip, and afterwards ſecretly takes in goods unknown to the firſt laders, by the law marine he forfeits his Freight: and if a maſter of a ſhip ſhall put into any other port than what the ſhip was freighted to, he ſhall anſwer damages to the merchant; unleſs he is forced in by ſtorm, enemies, or pirates; and in that caſe he is obliged to ſail to the port agreed, at his own expence. Leg. Oleron. A ſhip is freighted ſo much out and ſo much in, there ſhall be no Freight due till the voyage is performed; ſo that if the ſhip be caſt away, coming home, the Freight outwards, as well as inwards, are both gone. 1 Brownl. 21: Mal. 98, and ſee 2. Ch. Ca. 75: 2 Vern. 212: and alſo Dougl. 541, 2, that where a ſhip periſhes, the whole Freight from the laſt place or time of payment will be loſt. And if no freight be payable till the return, if the ſhip is loſt returning, the freight outwards ſhall be loſt as well as that inwards. Mal. 98.

The goods carried, generally, are a ſecurity for the Freight, and the maſter is not bound to deliver them without payment. Dougl. 104.

If a freighted ſhip becomes diſabled without the maſter's fault, he has his option to re-fit, (if poſſible, in convenient time) or to hire another ſhip to carry the goods. If the merchant will not agree to this, the maſter is entitled to the full freight for the whole voyage. 2 Burr. 882: 1 Bl. Rep. 190.

The maſter ſhall have his Freight tho' the goods are ſpoiled, if the merchant takes them.—The merchant may abandon all, tho' all are not loſt: but he cannot abandon ſome and take ſome: if he abandon all, he is excuſed Freight.—If the ſhip is diſabled or taken when part of the voyage is performed, without fault of the Maſter, he ſhall be paid a rateable proportion of the Freight. 2 Burr. 882.—See further this Dict. titles Charter-party: Inſurance: Merchant.

FRENDWITE, From Sax. freond, amicus, & wite mulcta.] A mulct or fine exacted of him who harboured his outlawed friend. Blount. But ſee Fleta, lib. 1. c. 7.

FRESCA, Freſh water, or rain, and land floods. Chart. Antiq. in Somner of Gavelkind, p. 132.

FRESH DISSEISIN, Friſca diſſeiſina, from Fr. frais recens; & diſſeiſir, poſſeſſione ejicere.] That diſſeiſin, which a man might formerly ſeek to defeat of himſelf, and by his own power, without reſorting to the King, or the law; as where it was not above fifteen days old, or of ſome other ſhort continuance. Britton, c. 5. Of this, Bracton writes at large, concluding it to be arbitrary. Lib. 4. c 5. See title Diſſeiſin.

FRESH FINE, A fine levied within a year paſt: it is mentioned in the ſtatute of Weſtm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. ſt. 2. c. 45.

FRESH FORCE, friſca fortia.] Is a force newly done in any city, borough, &c. And if a perſon be diſſeiſed of any lands or tenements within ſuch a city, or borough, he who hath a right to the land, by the uſage and cuſtom of the ſaid city, &c. may bring his aſſiſe, or bill of freſh force, within forty days after the force committed; and recover the lands. F. N. B. 7: Old Nat. Br. 4. This remedy may be alſo had where any man is deforced of any lands, after the death of his anceſtor, to whom he is heir; or after the death of tenant for life, or in tail, in dower, &c. within forty days after the title accrued; and in a bill of freſh force, the plaintiff or demandant ſhall make proteſtation to ſue in the nature of what writ he will, as aſſiſe of mortdanceſtor, of novel diſſeiſin, intruſion, &c. New Nat. Br. 15. The aſſiſe or bill of freſh force is ſued out without any writ from the Chancery; but after the forty days, there is to be a writ out of Chancery, directed to the mayor, &c. But this writ is obſolete ſince Ejectments have come in uſe for recovering the poſſeſſion of lands, &c.

FRESH SUIT, or Purſuit, Recens inſecutio.] Such a preſent and earneſt following of an offender, where a robbery is committed, as never ceaſes from the time of the offence done or diſcovered, until he be apprehended. Vide poſt. And the benefit of ſuch purſuit of a felon is, that the party purſuing ſhall have his goods reſtored to him; which otherwiſe are forfeited to the King. Staundf. Pl. Cor. lib. 3. cap. 10. & 12. When an offender is thus apprehended, and indicted, upon which he is convicted, the party robbed ſhall have reſtitution of his goods; and though the party robbed do not apprehend the thief preſently, but that it be ſome time after the robbery, if the party did what in him lay to take the offender; and notwithſtanding in ſuch caſe he happen to be apprehended by ſome other perſon, it ſhall be adjudged freſh purſuit. Terms de Ley. It has been anciently holden, that to make a freſh ſuit, the party ought to make hue and cry with all convenient ſpeed, and to have taken the offender himſelf, &c. But at this day, if the party hath been guilty of no groſs negligence, but hath uſed all reaſonable care in inquiring after, purſuing, and apprehending the felon, he ſhall be allowed to have made ſufficient freſh ſuit. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. Alſo it is ſaid, that the judging of freſh ſuit is in the diſcretion of the court, though it ought to be found by the jury; and the juſtices may, if they think fit, award reſtitution without making any inquiſition concerning the ſame. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. See title Hue and Cry.

Where a gaoler immediately purſues a felon, or other priſoner, eſcaping from priſon, it is freſh ſuit, to excuſe the gaoler: and if a lord follow his diſtreſs into another's ground, on its being driven off the premiſſes, this is called freſh ſuit; ſo where a tenant purſues his cattle, that eſcape or ſtray into another man's lands, &c. Freſh ſuit may may be either within the view, or without; as to which the law makes ſome difference: and it has been ſaid, that freſh ſuit may continue for ſeven years. 3 Rep: S. P. C. See titles Arreſt: Eſcape; Diſtreſs.

FRIBURGH, or FRITHBURGH, Fridburgum, from the Sax. frid i. e. pax, & borge, fidejuſſor.] The ſame with frank pledge; the one being in the time of the Saxons, and the other ſince the Conqueſt: of theſe friburghs, Bracton treats, lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 10. And they are particularly deſcribed in the laws of King Edward, ſet out by Lambard, fol. 143. Fleta likewiſe writes on this ſubject, lib. 1. cap. 47. And Spelman makes a difference between friborg and frithborg; ſaying the firſt ſignifies libera ſecuritas, and the other pacis ſecuritas. Although friburghs or frithburghers were anciently required as principal pledges or ſureties for their neighbours, for the keeping of the peace, yet certain great perſons, were a ſufficient aſſurance for themſelves, and their menial ſervants. Skene. See title Court Let.

FRIDSTOLL; FRITHSTOW: Sax. frid, pax, & ſtol, ſedes.] A ſeat, chair, or place of peace. In the charter of immunities granted to the church of St. Peter in York by Hen I, and confirmed anno 5 H. 7, Fridſtoll is expounded cathedra pacis & quietudinis, &c. And there were many ſuch in England; but the moſt famous was at Beverley, which had this inſcription: hæc ſedes lapidea freedſtoll dicitur, i. e. pacis cathedra, ad quam reus fugiendo perveniens, omnimodam habet ſecuritatem. Camd. See titles Abjuration: Sanctuary.

FRIENDLESS MAN, The old Saxon word for an outlaw; becauſe he was, upon his expulſion from the King's protection, denied all help of friends, after certain days: nam forisfecit amicos. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 12. See title Frendwite.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES. Aſſociations, chiefly among the moſt induſtrious of the lower and middling claſs of tradeſmen for the purpoſe of affording each other relief in ſickneſs; and their widows and children ſome aſſiſtance at their death. Theſe have been thought worthy the protection of the Legiſlature, to prevent frauds which had ariſen from the irregular principles on which many of them were conducted.

The Stat. 33 Geo. 3 c. 54, provides that any number of perſons may form themſelves into a ſociety, and raiſe among themſelves a fund for their mutual benefit, and make rules and impoſe fines.—The rules, declaring the purpoſe for which ſuch ſocieties are eſtabliſhed, are to be exhibited to the Quarter Seſſions, who may annul or confirm them; in which latter caſe they are to be ſigned by the clerk of the peace. No rule thus confirmed to be altered but at a general meeting of the Society, and ſubject to the controul of the Seſſions.—Societies may appoint officers, who are to give ſecurities for their truſt, the treaſurer or truſtees by bond, to the Clerk of the peace and other perſons to the treaſurer or truſtees; which bonds are exempted from the ſtamp duty. Committee of not leſs than 11 members may be appointed: their powers to be declared by the Society and ſubject to their controul.—Treaſurers and truſtees are enabled to lay out ſubſcriptions in purchaſe of ſtock, &c. and to ſell and change funds for the uſe of the Society; to render accounts and pay over balances.—In caſe of miſbehaviour of truſtees, application to be made to the Court of Chancery in which proceedings are to be free of all expence of fees, ſtamps, &c. and counſel to be aſſigned gratis by the court.—Executors or aſſignees of truſtees, &c. dying or becoming bankrupt to pay the demands of the Society in the firſt place.—Effects of the Societies veſted in treaſurers and truſtees who may bring and defend actions.—Societies not to be diſſolved without conſent of five-ſixths of the members; rules entered in a book to be received as evidence.—Societies may receive donations.—Complaints of members againſt ſtewards, &c. to be ſettled by two juſtices.—If rules direct diſputes to be ſettled by arbitration, the award of the arbitrators ſhall be final.—Members of Societies producing certificates of ſteward, &c. not to be removeable from any pariſh till actually chargeable; and ſimilar proviſions are made relative to this, as to other certificates under the poor laws. (See this Dict. title Poor.)

Thus have the Legiſlature, with that humanity which peculiarly diſtinguiſhes the Britiſh conſtitution, taken under their care a ſet of men who, tho' generally uſeful and induſtrious, are but too apt not to be ſufficiently conſcious of the benefits conferred upon them, by a form of Government in which Charity is enforced and regarded as a ruling principle.

FRIER, Lat. Frater, Fr. Frere] The name of an order of religious perſons, of which there were four principal branches, viz. 1. Minors, Grey Friers, or Franciſcans. 2. Auguſtines. 3. Dominicans, or Black Friers. 4. White Friers, or Carmelites; of which the reſt deſcend. See Stat. 4 H. 7. cap. 17: Lyndewood de Relig. Domibus, c. 1.

FRIER-OBSERVANT, frater obſervans.] A branch of the Franciſcan friers, who were minors, as well as the Conventuals and Capuchins. They were called Obſervants becauſe they are not combined together in any cloiſter, convent, or corporation, as the Conventuals are; but tied themſelves to obſerve the rules of their order more ſtrictly than the Conventuals, and upon a ſingularity of zeal ſeparated themſelves from them, living in certain places of their own chuſing. Zach. de Rep. Eccleſ. de Regular. c. 12. They are mentioned in the Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 12.

FRILING, FREOLING, From Sax. Freoh, Liber & Ling, progenies.] A freeman born.

FRIPERER, Fr. Fripier, i. e. Interpolator.] One that ſcours and furbiſhes up old cloths to ſell again; a kind of broker. See Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 21; and title Brokers.

FRISCUS, Freſh uncultivated ground.—Mon. Angl. Tom. 2. p. 56.

FRITH, Sax.] A wood, from Frid, Pax; for the Engliſh Saxons held woods to be ſacred, and therefore made them ſanctuaries. Sir Edward Coke expounds it a plain between woods, or a lawn. Co. Lit. 5. Camden in his Britannia, uſeth it for an arm of the ſea, or a ſtreight, between two lands, from the word Fretum.

FRITHBRECH, Pacis violatio.] The breaking of the ace. LL. Æthelred, c 6. See Gribbrieche.

FRITHGEAR, From Sax. Frith or Frid, Pax, & Gear, Annus.] The year of jubilee, or of meeting for peace and friendſhip. Somn.

FRITHGILD, A Guildhall; alſo a company or fraternity.

FRITHMAN,

FRITHMAN, One belonging to such fraternity or company. Blount.

FRITHMOTE, Is mentioned in the records of the county palatine of Chester: Per Frithmote J. FRITHSOKE, FRITHSOKEN, From Sax. Frith, pax & socne, libertas.] Surety of defence, a jurisdiction for the purpose of preserving the peace; according to Fleta, libertas habendi franci plegii; seu immunitatis locus.—Cowel: Blount.

FRODMORTEL, rather FREOMORTEL, From Sax Freo, free, and Morthdel, Homicide] An immunity for committing manslaughter.—Mon. Ang. Tom. 1. p. 173.

FRUIT, Stealing of.] By Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 32, To rob orchards or gardens of fruit growing therein, may be punished by fine, whipping, &c and by Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 48, fine and imprisonment may be inflicted on persons destroying fruit trees —See title Larceny.

FRUMGYLD, Sax.] The first payment made to the kindred of a person slain, towards the recompence of his murder —LL. Edmund.

FRUMSTOL, The chief seat or mansion house; which is called by some the Homestal. Leg. Inæ. c. 38.

FRUSCA TERRÆ, Waste and desart lands. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 327.

FRUSTURA, From Fr. Froissure.] A breaking down; also a ploughing or breaking up: Frustura domorum is house-breaking: and Frustura terræ, new broke land. Mon. Angl. Tom. 2. p. 394.

FRUSTRUM TERRÆ, A small piece or parcel of land, Domesday.

FRUTECTUM, A place where shrubs, or tall herbs do grow. Mon. Angl. Tom. 3. p. 22.

FUAGE, In the reign of King Edward III, The Black Prince, having Aquitain granted him, laid an imposition of fuage upon the subjects of that dukedom, i. e. 12 d. for every fire. Rot. Parl. 25 Ed. 3. And it is probable, that the hearth money imposed Anno 16 Car. 2, took its original from hence. See title Fumage.

FUEL. If any person shall sell billet-wood or faggots for fuel under the assise, &c. on presentment thereof upon oath by six persons sworn by a justice of peace, the party may be set on the pillory in the next market town, with a faggot, &c. bound to some part of his body. None are to buy fuel but such as will burn it, or retail it to those who do; on pain to forfeit the treble value; also no person may alter any mark or assise of fuel, on the like forfeiture. Stats. 7 E. 6. c. 7: 43 Eliz. c. 14, and see title Billet Wood.

FUER, Fr. Fuir, Lat. Fugere.] Flight is used substantively though it be a verb; and is two-fold, fuer in fait, or in facto, when a man doth apparently and corporally fly; and fuer in ley, in lege, when being called in the county court he appeareth not, which is flight in the interpretation of the law. Staundf. Pl. Cor. lib. 3. c. 22.

FUGA CATALLORUM, A drove of cattle; fugatores carrucarum, waggoners who drive oxen, without beating or goading. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 78.

FUGACIA. A chase; So fugatio, is hunting, or the privilege to hunt. Blount.

FUGAM FECIT, Is where it is found by inquisition, that a person fled for felony, &c. And if flight and felony be found on an indictment for felony, or before the coroner, where a murder is committed, the offender shall forfeit all his goods, and the issues of his lands, till he is acquitted or pardoned: and it is held, that when one indicted of any capital crime, before justices of Oyer, &c. is acquitted at his trial, but found to have fled, he shall, notwithstanding his acquittal, forfeit his goods: but not the issues of his lands, because by acquittal the land is discharged, and consequently the issues. 3 Inst. 218. The party may in all cases, except that of the coroner's inquest, traverse the finding of a fugam fecit; and the particulars of the goods found to be forfeited, may be always traversed; also whenever the indictment against a man is insufficient, the finding of a fugam fecit will not hurt him. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 49. Making default in appearance on indictment, &c. whereby outlawry is awarded, is a flight in law. See this Dict. titles Exigent: Outlawry: Forfeiture.

FUGITIVES GOODS, Bona Fugitivorum.] The goods of him that flies upon felony, which after the flight lawfully found on record, do belong to the King or Lord of the manor. 5 Rep 109.

FUGITIVES OVER SEA. By two ancient and obsolete, if not expired, statutes 9 E. 3. c. 10: 5 R. 2. st. 2. c. 2, To depart this realm over the sea, without the King's licence, except it were great men and merchants, and the King's soldiers, incurred forfeiture of goods: and masters of ships, &c. carrying such persons beyond sea, forfeited their vessels; also if any searcher of any port, negligently suffered any persons to pass, he should be imprisoned, &c. See titles Aliens; Allegiance; Foreign Service; Treason.

FUNERAL CHARGES, As to the payment of these by an executor, See title Executor V. 2.

A person died in debt, and 600 l. was laid out in his funeral; decreed the same should be a debt, payable out of a trust estate, charged with payment of debts, he being a man of great estate and reputation in his country, and buried there; but had he been buried elsewhere, it seemed his funeral might have been more private, and the court would not have allowed so much. Prec. Ch. 27.

Where a citizen of London devised 700 l. for mourning, the question was, if it should come out of the whole estate, or out of the legatory part only; it was insisted that if there had been no direction by the will, or if the will had directed, that the expences of the funeral should not exceed such a sum, there the deduction must have been out out of the whole eſtate. Per cur. Mourning deviſed by the will, muſt come out of the legatory part, and not to leſſen the orphanage and cuſtomary part. 2 Vern. 240.

Executor is not liable to pay for funeral expences, unleſs he contracts for it. 12 Mod. 256.

Settlements for ſeparate maintenance of the wife ſhall never extend to funeral charges; and though ſhe made a will, (according to a power given her) and an executor, and gave ſeveral legacies, but there was no reſiduum for the executor, the huſband's eſtate in the hands of a deviſee ſubject to the payment of debts was made liable to the funeral charges of the wife. 9 Mod. 31.

In ſtrictneſs no funeral expences are allowable againſt a creditor, except for the coffin, ringing the bell, parſon, clerk, and bearer's fees; but not for pall or ornaments; per Holt. 1 Salk. 296. Ten pounds is enough to be allowed for the funeral of one in debt; per Holt. Baron Powell in his circuit would allow but 11 s. 6 d. as all the neceſſary charge. Comb. 342. Quære, If 40 s. is not now the uſual ſum in caſe of an inſolvent? GAME-LAWS.

THE GAME-LAWS are A Syſtem of poſitive regulations introduced and confirmed by ſeveral ſtatutes: the proviſions of which aſcertain and eſtabliſh certain Qualifications of property enabling or allowing perſons to kill Game: and impoſing Penalties, as well on ſuch qualified perſons for irregularities in killing Game, as on unqualified perſons for hunting or killing Game at all.

Theſe Laws have been the ſubject of much diſcuſſion; they have been ſtiled even from the Bench, (See 1 Term Rep. 49,) an oppreſſive remnant of the ancient arbitrary Foreſt laws, under which, in darker ages, the killing one of the king's deer was equally penal with murdering one of his Subjects. See this Dict. title Foreſt, and 4 Comm. c. 33. II. 2. On the other hand the object of them has been well defined to be, the preſervation of the ſeveral ſpecies of theſe animals which would ſoon be extirpated by a general liberty: and the prevention of idleneſs and diſſipation in huſbandmen, artificers and others of lower rank. 2 Comm. 411. b. 2. c. 27. Though when the learned Commentator ſtates the other purpoſe of theſe laws to be the encouragement of agriculture by giving every man an excluſive dominion over his own ſoil; and the preventing inſurrections by diſarming the bulk of the people; he ſeems rather incorrect: as, in the firſt of theſe inſtances, a Freeholder of 99 l. per annum, or a leaſeholder of 149 l. whatever may be otherwiſe his excluſive dominion, has no right to kill Game on his own eſtate: and the latter motive ſeems more invidiouſly ſtated than is uſual with that great and liberal writer; ſince any perſon, though unqualified, may keep and uſe a gun, provided it is not for the purpoſe of deſtroying the Game. Andr. 255: Stra. 495, 1098: 2 Term Rep. 18.

Our eſteemed Commentator alſo advances a poſition, "That no man but he who has a Chaſe or Free-warren by grant from the Crown, or preſcription, which ſuppoſes one, can juſtify hunting or ſporting upon another man's ſoil; nor indeed, in thorough ſtrictneſs of common law, either hunting or ſporting at all," even on his own ground. 2 Comm. 416. b. 2. c. 27. In conformity to which notion he conſiders the qualifications to kill Game as more properly exemptions from the penalties inflicted by ſtatute-law. 4 Comm. 175.

Theſe concluſions he deduces from the two following principles; that the King as ultimate proprietor of all the lands in England has a right to take theſe beaſts feræ naturæ on the lands of any of his Subjects, and that, being bona vacantia, they are the King's by right of his prerogative: It follows then that he has power to grant theſe franchiſes to another, to enable him to do the ſame; and that no perſon is therefore, by the Game-laws, abridged of any right poſſeſſed previouſly to the making them. The above is the ſubſtance of the reaſoning of this celebrated writer on this ſubject; but his premiſes as well as his concluſion are very ſtrenuouſly, and apparently ſucceſsfully, combated by his annotator Mr. Chriſtian, in his notes on the paſſages above alluded to: in conformity to which we have already ſtiled the Game-laws, "A Syſtem of poſitive regulations by the ſtatute-law of the kingdom."

Having ſaid thus much on this topic, any further conſiderations on the policy or propriety of theſe laws, would here be unbecoming; ſtrict they certainly are, and by many deemed ſevere; a very general ſtatement of them is here inſerted, under the following heads:

I. The Qualifications to kill Game.
II. Penalties on qualified and unqualified Perſons.
III. Of Treſpaſſes in Hunting, &c.

For further matter connected with this title, ſee this Dict. under the heads, Foreſt; Chaſe; Park; Warren; Deer; Fiſh; Swans; Pigeons; Black Act; and, other appoſite titles: and the ſtat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 54, for preſervation of the Game in Scotland.

I. 1. THE QUALIFICATIONS for killing Game, to ſtate them as conciſely as poſſible, are, 1; The having a Freehold Eſtate of 100 l. per ann. 2; A Life-eſtate or Leaſehold for 99 years of 150 l. per annum: 3; Being the ſon and heir-apparent of an Eſquire, or of any perſon of ſuperior degree: 4; Being the owner or keeper of a foreſt, park, chaſe, or warren. 4 Comm. 175. All other perſons are termed Unqualified.

The qualification by eſtate for killing Game in the reign of Richard II, was 40 s. a year; in the reign of James I. it was advanced to 10 l. a year; and after that, in ſome inſtances to 40 l. a year; and at laſt in the reign of Charles II. it was raiſed to 100 l. a year. Not that the laws became gradually more ſevere; but as the value of money decreaſed, the qualification was raiſed in proportion, the eſtate continuing nearly the ſame; for an eſtate of 40 s. a year in the reign of Richard II. was not much inferior to an eſtate of 100 l. a year in the reign of Charles II. And the penalty for deſtroying the Game was even more ſevere then, than it is now. Thoſe antient laws relating to the Game are ſtill in force, and are generally enacted ſo to be by the ſubſequent ſtatutes; it is therefore neceſſary, in order to have a thorough knowledge of this matter, to be acquainted with the proviſions contained in them.

The firſt qualification relating to the Game was by ſtat. 13 R. 2. ſt. 1, c. 13; by which it is enacted that no layman which hath not lands or tenements of 40 s. a year, nor clergyman if he be not advanced to 10 l. a year, ſhall have or keep any greyhound, hound, nor other dog, to hunt; nor ſhall uſe ferrets, hays, nets, hare-pipes, nor cords, nor other engines, for to take, or deſtroy hares nor conies, nor other Gentlemen's Game, on pain of a year's impriſonment. And ſee ſtat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 30.

The next qualification by eſtate or degree to kill Game, was by ſtat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27. § 3; whereby it is enacted, that every perſon who ſhall keep any greyhound for courſing of deer or hare, or ſetting dog, or net to take pheaſants or partridges, (except he be ſeiſed, in his own right or the right of his wife, of 10 l. a year eſtate of inheritance, or 30 l. a year of a lives eſtate, or goods to the value of 200 l. or be the ſon of a knight or a lord, or the ſon and heir-apparent of an eſquire,) and be thereof convicted, he ſhall be committed to gaol for three months; or pay 20 s. to the uſe of the poor, and become bound with two ſureties not to offend again in like manner.

The next qualification relates to deer and conies only, in ſtat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 13; by which it is enacted, that if any perſon not having hereditaments of 40 l. a year, or not worth in goods 200 l. ſhall uſe any gun or bow to kill any deer or conies; or ſhall keep any bu kſtall, nets, or coney dogs (except he have grounds incloſed, and uſed for the keeping of deer or conies, the increaſing of which ſaid conies ſhall amount to the value of 40 s. a year; or keepers, or warreners in their parks, warrens, or grounds); in such case any person having lands or hereditaments of 100 l. a year in fee, or for life, may take from such person to his own use for ever, such guns, bows, bucktalls, nets, and coney dogs.

The next qualification relates to pheasants and partridges only, and is as follows: Every free warrener, lord of a manor, or freeholder seised in his own or his wife's right of 40 l. a year of inheritance, or lives estate of 80 l. or worth in goods 400 l. may take pheasants and partridges (in the day time only) in his own free warren, manor, or freehold, betwixt Michaelmas and Christmas yearly. Stat 7 Jac. 1. c. 11. § 7.

The last general qualification by estate or degree to kill Game, and which is now most to be regarded, is in stat. 22 and 23 Car. 2. c. 25; by which, every person not having lands and tenements, or some other estate of interest, in his own or his wife's right, of the clear yearly value of 100 l per annum;—Or for term of life, or having lease or leases of 99 years, or for any longer term, of the clear yearly value of 150 l. (other than the son and heir apparent of an esquire, or [of] other person of higher degree, and the owners and keepers of forests, parks, chases, or warrens, being stocked with deer or conies for their necessary use, in respect of the said parks, chases, forests, or warrens,) is declared to be a person by the laws of this realm, not allowed to have or keep for himself or any other person, any guns, bows, greyhounds, setting dogs, ferrets, coney dogs, lurchers, hays, nets, lowbels, harepipes, gins, snares, or other engines for the taking and killing of Game. § 3.

Every person using any dog, gun, or engine for taking Game (except Game-keepers; see that title;) shall deliver his name and place of abode to the clerk of the peace, and take out an annual certificate or licence on a stamp of three guineas. But these certificates not to authorise unqualified persons to kill Game. Stats. 25 Geo. 3. c. 50: 31 Geo. 3. c. 21.

One having an estate of 103 l. a year, mortgaged a part of it of the value of 14 l. a year, which being copyhold was surrendered to the mortgagee, who was thereupon admitted tenant, but never entered on the premises, the mortgagor continuing in possession and paying interest. It was held that the mortgagor under these circumstances was not a qualified person. Cald. 230. Burn J. title Game IV.

The stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25, is loosely worded, and the stops are no part of the original statute. It has been determined that the clause relative to qualification by freehold estate, terminates with the words per annum; and that a life-estate being of an inferior quality, ought to be coupled with leasehold, whereof 150 l. a year is necessary to constitute a qualification. A clergyman's benefice is a life estate. Lowndes v. Lewis, Cl. Cald. 188.

In the case of Jones v. Smart, after much argument it was decided, that a diploma conferring the degree of Doctor of Physic granted by either of the Universities in Scotland, does not give a qualification to kill Game under stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25; and that an Esquire or other person of higher degree as such is not qualified under that act, though the son of an esquire, or the son of other person of higher degree is qualified. 1 Term Rep. 44. A Doctor of Physic of the English Universities, is not qualified as such. Id. 53.

II. The Penalties, and regulations for recovering them, are so numerous under the various statutes, and sometimes, if not inconsistent, at least not easily reconcilable, that it is scarcely possible to methodize them in the limits prescribed by this work; or to avoid confusion and uncertainty in the recapitulation of them. Several are here enumerated. The exact Student must consult the Statute book and Burn's Justice, title Game: but must be careful not to trust too implicitly to the latter, or to his own interpretation of the former.

It may be observed, as a preliminary provision, that, by stat. 8 Geo. 1, c. 19, where any person for any offence against any law in being, at the making of the said act for the better preservation of the Game, shall be liable to pay any pecuniary penalty or sum of money, on conviction before a Justice of the peace, the prosecutor may either proceed to recover the same in such manner, or he may sue for the same [before the end of the second term after the offence committed 26 Geo. 2. c. 2;] by action of debt, or on the case, bill, plaint, or information, in any court of record at Westminster, wherein if he recovers he shall have double costs: provided that the offender shall not be prosecuted both ways; and in case of a second prosecution, he may plead in his defence the former prosecution pending, or the conviction or judgment thereupon had. And by stat. 2 Geo. 3. c. 19. whereas a moiety of the penalty by several acts is directed to be applied to the use of the poor of the parish where the offence was committed, by reason whereof inhabitants of the said parish have been disallowed to give evidence; it is enacted, that in order to enable the inhabitants to give evidence, it shall be lawful for any person to sue for the whole of such penalty to his own use, and if he recovers he shall have double costs; such action to be brought within six months after the offence committed.

By stat. 33 H. 8. c. 6, which is now considered as obsolete, if not superseded by subsequent statutes, shooting with a cross-bow, hand-gun or demihake, by a person not having 100 l. a year, incurs a penalty of 10 l. Handguns are to be of a yard in length in the stock and gun; and in this old statute a power is given to qualified persons to seize and destroy unlawful guns.

No person shall take pheasants or partridges with engines in another man's ground, without licence, on pain of 10 l. stat. 11 H. 7. c. 17.—If any person shall take or kill any pheasants or partridges, with any net in the night-time, they shall forfeit 20 s. for every pheasant, and 10 s. for every partridge taken; and hunting with spaniels in standing corn, incurs a forfeiture of 40 s. stat. 23 Eliz. c. 10. Those who kill any pheasant, partridge, duck, heron, hare, or other game, are liable to a forfeiture of 20 s. for every fowl and hare; and selling, or buying to sell again, any hare, pheasant, &c. the forfeiture is 10 s. for each hare, or partridge—20 s. for a pheasant—40 s. for a deer. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27.

Killing in the night a hare, partridge, or pheasant, by a person qualified or unqualified. 5 l. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 25.

To kill, take, or destroy; or to use any gun, dog, snare, net, or engine, with intent to kill, &c. any hare, partridge, or other game, in the night; (viz. between 7 at night, and 6 in the morning, from October 12 to February 12; and between 9 and 4 from February 12 to October 12;) or in the day on Sunday or Christmas day;

firſt offence, from 20*l.* to 10*l.*—ſecond offence, from 30*l* to 20*l*—third and other offences, 50*l.*—In caſe of a third offence, the party ſhall be bound in a recognizance to be tried at the Seſſions, and if the penalty is not paid, may be puniſhed with from twelve to ſix months' impriſonment. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 80. The information to be laid within one month. Penalty, half to the informer, and half to the poor.

Selling Game; qualified or unqualified, 5*l* Stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 12.—Unqualified perſon ſelling or expoſing to ſale hare, partridge, pheaſant, or other Game; 5*l.* or three months' impriſonment. If Game is found in the ſhop, houſe or poſſeſſion of any poulterer, ſalesman, fiſhmonger, cook, or paſtry-cook, not qualified to kill, this ſhall be deemed an expoſing to ſale. Stats. 5 Ann. c. 14: 9 Ann. c. 25. § 2: 28 Geo. 2. c. 12.

Higlers, chapmen, carriers, inn keepers, victuallers, &c. having in their cuſtody, hare, pheaſant, partridge, heath-game, &c. (except ſent by ſome perſon qualified to kill game) ſhall forfeit for every hare and fowl 5*l.* to be levied by diſtreſs and ſale of their goods, being proved by one witneſs, before a Juſtice; and for want of diſtreſs ſhall be committed to the houſe of correction for three months: one moiety of the forfeiture to the informer, and the other to the poor. And if any perſons ſhall drive wild fowls with nets, between the firſt day of July and the firſt of September, they ſhall forfeit 5*s.* for every fowl. Stats 5 Ann. c. 14: 9 Ann. c. 25. Penalties for killing and deſtroying game, are recoverable not only before juſtices of peace by the ſeveral ſtatutes; but alſo by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any of his Majeſty's courts at Weſtminſter; and the plaintiff, if he recovers, ſhall likewiſe have double coſts. Stat. 8 G. 1. c. 19.

No certiorari ſhall be allowed to remove any conviction or other proceeding on the ſtat. 5 Ann. c. 14. into any court at Weſtminſter, unleſs the party convicted become bound to the party proſecuting with ſufficient ſureties, in the ſum of 50*l.* to pay the proſecutor his coſts and charges, &c. after the conviction confirmed, or a procedendo granted. Stat. 5 Ann. c. 14.

Perſons convicted of entering warrens, in the night-time, and taking or killing conies there, or aiding or aſſiſting therein, may be puniſhed by tranſportation, or by whipping, fine or impriſonment. Perſons convicted on this act, not liable to be convicted under any former act. This act does not extend to the deſtroying conies in the day-time, on the ſea and river banks in the county of Lincoln, &c. No ſatisfaction to be made for damages occaſioned by ſuch laſt mentioned entry, unleſs they exceed 1*s.* Stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 14.

Killing, carrying, ſelling, buying, or having in poſſeſſion, a partridge between February 12, and September 1, or pheaſant between February 1, and October 1; by any perſon qualified or not qualified, 5*l.* Stat. 2 Geo. 3. c. 19. Hawking, to catch ſuch game between July 1, and Auguſt 31; 40*s.* for hawking, and 20*s.* for each partridge, &c. Stat. 7 Jac. 2. c. 11. § 2.

Keeping or uſing grey-hounds, ſetting dogs, lurchers, hays, or engines to kill or deſtroy game, by one unqualified, 5*l.* Stat. 5 Ann. c. 14.—Keeping or uſing the above named, or any other dogs or engines for ſuch purpoſe 20*s.* or not leſs than 5*s.* Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. § 2.

Trading a hare in the ſnow; by a perſon qualified or unqualified; 6*s.* 8*d.* Stat. 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 10.—Three months' impriſonment or 20*s.* fine. ſtat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27.

Uſing Snares for hares; by one qualified, or unqualified; one month's impriſonment or 10*s.* fine. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. § 6. deſtroying Game with engines; 20*s.* for each pheaſant, &c. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27.

A Juſtice of peace, or Lord of a manor within his manor, may take away Game out of the poſſeſſion of an unqualified perſon. Stat. 5 Ann. c. 14. § 4.—Unqualified perſons having Game in their poſſeſſion and not giving an account how they came by it, ſhall forfeit from 20*s.* to 5*s.* or ſuffer confinement to hard labour for from one month to ten days. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. § 3.

Perſons deſtroying, buying, or ſelling Game, informing againſt others buying, or ſelling Game, or offering ſo to do, to be indemnified. Stat. 5 Ann. c. 14. § 3.

Uſing dogs, guns, or engines for taking or killing Game, without a certificate 20*l.*—Refuſing to produce certificate, or to tell his true name and place of abode to a certificated perſon, 50*l.* Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 50.

By the yearly mutiny-acts, if any Officer or Soldier ſhall, without leave of the lord of the manor under his hand and ſeal, deſtroy any hare, coney, pheaſant, partridge, pigeon, or other fowl, poultry, or fiſh, or his Majeſty's Game, and be convicted thereof, on oath of one witneſs, before one Juſtice; every officer ſo offending ſhall forfeit 5*l.* to the poor, and the commanding officer upon the place, for every offence committed by any ſoldier under his command, ſhall forfeit 20*s.* in like manner. And if upon conviction by the juſtices, and demand made thereof by the conſtable or overſeers of the poor, he ſhall not in two days pay the ſaid penalties, he ſhall forfeit his commiſſion. Burn J.

By Stat. 4 & 5 W. 3. c. 23. § 10, It is provided, that whereas great miſchiefs do enſue by inferior tradeſmen, apprentices and other diſſolute perſons, neglecting their trades and employments, who follow hunting, fiſhing, and other Game, to the ruin of themſelves and damage of their neighbours, therefore if any ſuch perſon ſhall preſume to hunt, hawk, fiſh, or fowl (unleſs in company with the maſter of ſuch apprentice duly qualified) he ſhall not only be ſubject to other penalties (according to the various ſtatutes,) but if he be proſecuted for treſpaſs in coming on any perſon's lands, and be found guilty, the plaintiff ſhall not only recover damages againſt him, but alſo full coſts.

An unqualified perſon may go out to beat the hedges, buſhes, &c. with a qualified perſon; and to ſee the Game purſued or deſtroyed; provided the unqualified perſon has no gun or other engine with him for the deſtruction of the Game; without being ſubject to any penalty. R. v. Newman, Lofft. 178: Burn. J. tit. Game, IV.

Two perſons, uſing a greyhound together to deſtroy Game cannot be convicted in ſeparate penalties under ſtat. 5 Ann. c. 14. § 4; for it is only one offence, and the Magiſtrate ſhould only convict them in one penalty. 4 Term Rep. 809. So if a man not qualified goes a hunting and kills never ſo many hares on the ſame day, it is but one offence, and the ſtatute impoſes the penalty for the keeping and uſing the dogs and engines, and not for killing the hares. 10 Mod. 26: Com. Rep. 274. and Roſe's notes p. 278: Cowp. 646.

In an Action, qui tam, on the Game laws, it is ſufficient to ſay that a perſon is not qualified generally, without out ſhewing that he had not 100*l.* a year, or any other eſtate which makes a qualification. 2 Com. Rep. 522. But on Conviction it is neceſſary that all the qualifications ſhould be negatively ſet out in the information; and it muſt be averred that the defendant had not the particular qualifications mentioned in the ſtatute 22 & 23 C. 2 c. 25; becauſe it muſt be made out before the Juſtice that he had no ſuch qualification as the law requires: and therefore the Juſtice ought to return that he had no manner of qualification, before he can convict the defendant. See 1 Burr. 148: 2 Lord Raym. 1415: 1 Stra. 66: Dougl. 345: But the evidence need not (and indeed how can it?) negative every ſpecific qualification. 1 Term Rep. 125.

A perſon was convicted before a Juſtice of peace upon the ſtatute, for keeping a gun, not having 100*l. per ann.* and the conviction being removed into B. R. was quaſhed, for not ſaying when the defendant had not 100*l.* a year; for it might be he had ſuch eſtate at the time when he kept the gun, though not at the conviction, and the offence and time ought to be certainly alledged. 3 Mod. 280.

To convict an offender there muſt be an information on oath, and a ſummons to appear. 2 Burn. B. R. 34, 77, 101. The informer muſt be ſworn, and examined in the preſence of the defendant; and it is not ſufficient if his depoſition previouſly made is read over in the defendant's preſence. 1 Term Rep. 125. Or he may be convicted on his own confeſſion before a Juſtice. Stra. 546. The informer cannot be a witneſs. Lord Raym. 1545: Andr. 240. Theſe offences, where the juſtices have ſummary juriſdiction, are not indictable. Stra. 679.

In an action of debt on ſtat. 5 Ann. c. 14, for keeping and uſing a dog to kill the Game, it is neceſſary to ſhew what ſort of dog it was. 2 Com. Rep. 575. The word Hound is not ſufficiently deſcriptive, not being mentioned in the ſtatute. 2 Stra. 1126. See Reſe's Com. Rep. 577, in n —Keeping a forbidden dog is penal, though he is not uſed; keeping and uſing are diſtinct offences. Stra. 496: Cald. 175.

It ſeems that an Apothecary is not an inferior tradeſman within the ſtat. 4 & 5 W. 3 c. 23. § 10: though the word Inferior ſeems applicable rather to the man than to the trade; ſo that two perſons of the ſame trade may be, one ſuperior, and the other inferior. 2 Wilſ. 70: Burn J. tit. Game, IV. A huntſman going out with hounds without his maſter, is not a diſſolute perſon within the meaning of that act. He may however be a treſpaſſer; but if the damages recovered againſt him are under 40*s.* he ſhall not be liable to full coſts. 2 Black. Rep. 900.

III. One General Remark on this ſubject is the moſt forcible ſtatement of the greateſt hardſhip impoſed by the Game laws; and which might probably be remedied without great inconvenience. Though a freeholder of leſs than 100*l.* a year, &c. is forbidden to kill a partridge, even upon his own eſtate, yet nobody elſe (not even the lord of the manor, unleſs he hath a grant of free warren) can do it without committing a treſpaſs and ſubjecting himſelf to an action. 4 Comm. c. 33. II. 2.

If a man ſtarts any Game within his own grounds, and follows it into another's, and kills it there, the property remains in himſelf. 11 Mod. 75. And this is grounded on reaſon and natural juſtice: for the property conſiſts in the poſſeſſion; which poſſeſſion commences by the finding it in his own liberty, and is continued by the immediate purſuit. And ſo if a ſtranger ſtarts Game in one man's chaſe, or free warren, and hunts it into another liberty, the property continues in the owner of the chaſe or warren, this property ariſing from privilege, and not being changed by the act of a mere ſtranger. Or if a man ſtarts Game on another's private grounds and kills it there, the property belongs to him in whoſe ground it was killed, becauſe it was alſo ſtarted there, the property ariſing ratione ſoli: Lord Raym. 251. Whereas if, after being ſtarted there, it is killed in the grounds of a third perſon, the property belongs not to the owner of the firſt ground, becauſe the property is local; nor yet to the owner of the ſecond, becauſe it was not ſtarted in his ſoil; but it veſts in the perſon who ſtarted and killed it; though guilty of a treſpaſs againſt both the owners. Lord Raym. ib: 7 Mod. 18.—See 2 Comm. 419, and Mr. Chriſtian's note there; in which he obſerves that theſe diſtinctions never could have exiſted, if the doctrine were true, that all the Game was the property of the king, for in that caſe the maxim in æquali jure potior eſt conditio poſſidentis, muſt have prevailed. 2 Comm. c. 27. II. ad fin.

The Common Law allows the hunting of foxes, and other ravenous beaſts of prey, in the ground of another perſon; though a man may not dig and break the ground to un-earth them, without licence; if he doth, the owner of the ground may maintain an action of treſpaſs for it. 2 Roll. 538: Cro. Jac. 321. An action was brought againſt a perſon for entering another man's warren: the defendant pleaded that there was a pheaſant on his land, and his hawk purſued it into the plaintiff's ground; it was reſolved that this doth not amount to a ſufficient juſtification, for in this caſe he can only follow his hawk, and not take the game. Poph. 162. Though it is ſaid to be otherwiſe where the ſoil of the plaintiff is not a warren. 2 Rol. Abr. 567. If a man in hunting ſtarts a hare upon his own ground, and follows and kills it on the ground of another, yet ſtill the hare is his own, becauſe of the freſh ſuit; but if a man ſtarts a hare upon another perſon's ground, and hunts and kills it there, he is ſubject to an action. Cro. Car. 553.

If a perſon hunt upon the ground of another, ſuch other perſon cannot juſtify killing of his dogs; as appears by 2 Roll. Abr. 567. But ſee Cro. Jac. 44. contrà & 3 Lev. 28.

A perſon may juſtify a treſpaſs in following a fox with hounds over the grounds of another, if he do no more than is neceſſary to kill the fox; becauſe foxes are noxious animals. 1 Term Rep. 334. See Nicholas v. Badger, 2 Ro. Ab. 558. B. p. 2. S. P.

Game Keeper] One who has the care of keeping and preſerving the Game, being appointed thereto by a Lord of a Manor.

Game keepers were firſt introduced by the preſent qualification act, 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25; and various regulations have been made reſpecting them by ſubſequent ſtatutes. As all theſe ſtatutes ſeem to be in force in ſome degree at preſent, and as it is a ſubject intereſting to Sportſmen, a ſhort abſtract of them according to their chronology, will be acceptable.

The ſtat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25, authoriſes Lords of manors of the degree of an eſquire to appoint under their hands and ſeals Game-keepers, who ſhall have power within the manor to ſeize guns, dogs, nets, and engines, kept by unqualified perſons, to deſtroy Game; and by a warrant from a Juſtice of peace, to ſearch in the day time time the houſes of unqualified perſons upon good ground of ſuſpicion, and to ſeize for the uſe of the Lord, or to deſtroy guns, dogs, nets, &c. kept for the deſtruction of the Game. This ſtatute does not limit the number of thoſe to whom ſuch power and authority may be given. The ſtat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. § 4. gives to theſe Game-keepers the ſame protection in reſiſting offenders in the night-time, as the law affords to the keepers of antient parks. The ſtat. 5 Ann. c. 14. § 4, permits any lord or lady of a manor to empower Game-keepers to kill Game within the manor.

The ſtat. 9 Ann. c. 25. § 1, enacts, that no lord or lady of a manor ſhall appoint more than one Game-keeper, within one manor, with the power of killing Game; and his name ſhall be entered with the clerk of the peace. And by ſtat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 11, the Game-keeper who ſhall have the power to kill Game within the manor, ſhall either be a qualified perſon, a domeſtic ſervant, or a perſon employed to kill for the ſole uſe of the Lord or Lady of the manor. The only uſe of appointing a qualified perſon a Game-keeper is, to give him the power, as before deſcribed, of ſeizing the dogs, guns, and other engines of unqualified perſons within the manor.

By ſtat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 11, no Lord of a manor is to make or appoint any perſon to be a Game-keeper, with power to take and kill hare, pheaſant, partridge, or other game, unleſs ſuch perſon be qualified by law ſo to do; or be truly and properly a ſervant to the ſaid lord, or immediately employed to take and kill game for the ſole uſe or benefit of the ſaid lord: and any perſon not qualified, or not employed as aforeſaid, who, under pretence of any qualification from any lord of a manor, ſhall take or kill any hare, &c. or keep or uſe any dogs to kill and deſtroy the game, ſhall for every ſuch offence incur ſuch forfeitures, pains, and penalties, as are inflicted by the ſtats. 5 Ann. c. 14: 9 Ann. c. 25. By this laſt ſtatute, no game-keeper can qualify any perſon to kill game, or to keep guns, dogs, &c.

Where game-keepers ought to have a Juſtice of peace's warrant, to take away guns from unqualified perſons, ſee Comb. 305.

By ſtats. 25 Geo. 3. c. 50; 31 Geo. 3. c. 21, every deputation of a Game-keeper ſhall be entered with the Clerk of the peace of the county in which the manor lies; and for a certificate thereof ſhall be charged one guinea.

By ſtat. 5 Ann. c. 14. § 4, any Juſtice of peace may within his county take either game, or dogs, and inſtruments kept for the deſtruction of Game, from unqualified perſons, and retain them for his own uſe. But it has been decided, that though Game-keepers are liable to the ſame penalties as unqualified perſons for killing Game out of their reſpective manors, yet no one is juſtified in taking from them their dogs and guns when they are out of the limits of their lord's manor, even in purſuit of Game. 2 Wilſ. 387.

No Lord of a manor can grant to another perſon the power of appointing a Game-keeper, without a conveyance alſo of the manor. A right to a manor cannot be tried in a penal action under the Game laws. 5 Term Rep. 19. This power of appointing a Game-keeper has, no doubt, introduced the very erroneous notion, that a lord of a manor has a peculiar right to the Game, ſuperior to that of any other land-owner within the manor, although the eſtate of ſuch land-owner be a ſufficient qualification to entitle him to follow the amuſements of a ſportſman.

Game-keepers we have ſeen, were firſt created by ſtat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25; by the preceding qualification-act, 7 Jac. 1. c. 11, their power was given to the conſtable and headborough; and it ſeems that it was transferred to the perſons appointed by Lords of manors for no other reaſon than becauſe it was probable they were the moſt intereſted in the preſervation of the Game, by having in general the moſt extenſive range to purſue it in, viz. upon their own eſtates and waſtes. And the ſtat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25, appears to be the firſt inſtance, either in our ſtatutes, reports, or law treatiſes in which Lords of manors are diſtinguiſhed from their land-owners with regard to the Game. 2 Comm. 418. n.

Appointment of a Game-keeper, by a Lord of a Manor.

TO all People to whom theſe preſents ſhall come, I. T. lord A. lord of the manor of B. in the county of, &c. have (by virtue of ſeveral acts of parliament lately made for the preſervation of the Game) nominated, authoriſed and appointed, and by theſe preſents do nominate, authoriſe and appoint E. D. of, &c. to be my Gamekeeper of and within my manor, &c. in the county of, &c. aforeſaid, with full power and authority, according to the direction of the ſtatutes in that caſe made, to kill Game for my uſe; and to take and ſeize all ſuch guns, greyhounds, ſetting dogs, and other dogs, ferrets, trammels, hays, or other nets, ſnares or engines, for the taking, killing or deſtroying of hares, pheaſants, partridges, or other Game, as within the ſaid manor, of, &c. and the precincts thereof, ſhall be kept or uſed by any perſon or perſons not legally qualified to do the ſame; and farther to act and do all and every thing and things which belong to the office of a Game-keeper, purſuant to the direction of the ſaid acts of parliament, during my will and pleaſure; for which this ſhall be his ſufficient warrant. Given under my hand and ſeal, &c.

GAMING, OR GAMES UNLAWFUL, Ludi vani. The playing at tables, dice, cards, &c. King Ed. III. in the 39th year of his reign, injoined the exerciſe of ſhooting and of artillery, and forbad the caſting of the bar, the hand and foot-balls, cock-fighting, & alios ludos vanos; but no effect followed from it, till they were ſome of them forbidden by act of parliament. 11 Rep. 87. In the 28*th* of Hen. VIII. proclamation was made againſt all unlawful games, and commiſſions awarded into all the counties of England, for the execution thereof; ſo that in all places, tables, dice, cards and bowls, were taken and burnt. Stow's Annals, 527. At length by ſtat. 33 H. 8. c. 9, the Legiſlature interfered; and Juſtices of peace, and head officers in corporations, are by that act impowered to enter houſes ſuſpected of unlawful Games; and to arreſt and impriſon the gameſters, till they give ſecurity not to play for the future: alſo the perſons keeping unlawful gaming-houſes, may be committed by a juſtice, until they find ſureties not to keep ſuch houſes; who ſhall forfeit 40*s.* and the Gameſters 6*s.* 8*d.* a time: and if the King licenſe the keeping of Gaming-houſes, it is againſt law, and void.—The ſame ſtatute alſo provides that, no artificer, apprentice, labourer, or ſervant, ſhall play at any tables, tennis, dice, cards, bowls, &c. out of Chriſtmas time, on pain of 20*s.* for every offence; and at Chriſtmas, they are to play in their maſter's houſe, or preſence: but any nobleman, or gentleman, having 100*l.* per annum num eſtate, may licenſe his ſervants or family to play within the precincts of his houſe, or garden, at cards, dice, tables, or other games, as well among themſelves, as others repairing thither. This act is to be proclaimed once a quarter, in every market-town by the reſpective mayors, &c. and at every aſſiſes and ſeſſions.

A perſon was convicted of keeping a cock pit; and the Court reſolved it to be an unlawful Game, within the ſtat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 9, and fined him 40*s.* a day. Keb. 510. But if the gueſts in an inn or tavern, call for a pair of dice, or tables, and for their recreation play with them, or if any neighbours play at bowls, for their recreation, or the like, theſe are not within the ſtatute; if the houſe be not kept for Gaming, nor the Gaming be for lucre or gain. Dalt. c. 46.

By the ſtat. 16 Car. 2. c. 7, if any perſon, of what degree ſoever, ſhall by fraud, deceit, or unlawful device, in playing at cards, dice, tables, bowls, cock-fighting, horſe-races, foot-races, or other Games or paſtimes, or bearing a ſhare in the ſtakes, betting, &c. win any money, or valuable thing, he ſhall forfeit treble the value, one moiety to the crown, and the other to the party grieved, proſecution being in ſix months; in default whereof, the laſt mentioned moiety is to go to ſuch other perſon as will proſecute within one year, &c. And by the ſaid ſtatute if any perſon ſhall play at cards, &c. other than for ready money; or bet, and ſhall loſe above 100*l.* at one time or meeting, upon tick (i. e. ticket) he ſhall not be bound to make it good, but the contract or tick and ſecurity ſhall be void, and the winner ſhall forfeit treble the value.

By the ſtat. 9 Ann. cap. 14, all notes, bills, bonds, judgments, mortgages, or other ſecurities, given for money won by playing at cards, dice, tables, tennis, bowls, or other Games; or by betting on the ſides of ſuch as play at any of thoſe Games, or for repayment of any money knowingly lent for ſuch gaming or betting, ſhall be void: And where lands are granted by ſuch mortgages or ſecurities, they ſhall go to the next perſon, who ought to have the ſame as if the grantor were actually dead, and the grants had been made to the perſon ſo intitled after the death of the perſon ſo incumbering the ſame. If any perſon playing at cards, dice, or other Game, or betting, ſhall loſe the value of 10*l.* at one time, to one or more perſons, and ſhall pay the money, he may recover the money loſt by action of debt, within three months afterwards; and if the loſer do not ſue, any other perſon may do it, and recover the ſame, and treble the value with coſts, one moiety to the proſecutor, and the other to the poor: And the perſon proſecuted ſhall anſwer upon oath, on preferring a bill to diſcover what ſums he hath won.—Perſons by fraud or ill practice, in playing at cards, dice, or by bearing a ſhare in the ſtakes, &c. or by betting, winning any ſum above 10*l.* ſhall forfeit five times the value of the thing won, and ſuffer ſuch infamy and corporal puniſhment, as in caſes of wilful perjury, being convicted thereof on indictment or information; and the penalty ſhall be recovered by action, by ſuch perſon as will ſue for the ſame. And if any one ſhall aſſault and beat, or challenge to fight any other perſon, on account of money won by gaming, upon conviction thereof, he ſhall forfeit all his goods and ſuffer impriſonment for two years. Alſo by this ſtatute, any two or more Juſtices of peace, may cauſe ſuch perſons to be brought before them as they ſuſpect to have no viſible eſtates, &c. to maintain them; and if they do not make it appear that the principal part of their expences is got by other means than gaming, the Juſtices ſhall require ſecurities for their good behaviour for a twelvemonth; and in default of ſuch ſecurity, commit them to priſon until they find it: And playing or betting during the time, to the value of 20*s.* ſhall be deemed a breach of good behaviour, and a forfeiture of their recogniſances.

Where it ſhall be proved before any Juſtice of peace, that any perſon hath uſed unlawful games contrary to Stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 9, the Juſtice may commit ſuch offender to priſon, till he enter into a recogniſance that he ſhall not from thenceforth, at any time to come, play at any unlawful Game. Stat. 2 Geo. 2 cap. 28.—For better preventing exceſſive and deceitful gaming; the ace of hearts, faron, baſſet, and hazard, are declared to be lotteries by cards or dice; and perſons ſetting up theſe games are liable to the penalty of 200*l.* And every perſon who ſhall be an adventurer, or play or ſtake therein, forfeits 50*l.* Likewiſe the ſale of any houſe, plate, &c. in the way of lottery by cards, &c. is adjudged void, and the things to be forfeited to any perſon that will ſue for the ſame. 12 Geo 2. cap. 28.—The game of paſſage, and all other games with one or more dice, or any thing in that nature, having figures or numbers thereon, (back-gammon and games now played with thoſe tables only excepted) ſhall be deemed games or lotteries by dice, within the ſtat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 28: And ſuch as keep any office or table for the ſaid game, &c. or play thereat, are ſubject to the penalties in that act. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. cap. 19.

Playing at, or keeping any houſe or place for playing at the game of roulet, otherwiſe roly-poly, or any other game with cards or dice already prohibited, incurs the penalties in Stat. 12 Geo. 2. cap. 28. Perſons loſing 10*l.* and paying the ſame, may ſue the the winner, and recover the ſame with coſts: And on a bill in equity the court may decree the ſame to be paid. The perſons who have juriſdiction to determine informations on the ſtatutes againſt gaming, may ſummon witneſſes, who, on refuſing to appear and give evidence, ſhall forfeit 50*l.* No privilege of parliament ſhall be allowed on proſecutions for keeping a Gaming-houſe. Perſons loſing or winning 10*l.* at one time, or 20*l.* in 24 hours, may be indicted and fined five times the value to be paid to the poor. Stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 34.

By ſtat. 30 Geo. 1. c. 24, If any perſon licenſed to ſell liquors ſhall knowingly ſuffer any gaming in their houſe or grounds, with cards, dice, draughts, ſhuffle boards, miſſiſſippi, or billiard tables, ſkittles, or ninepins, by any Journeymen, labourers, ſervants, or apprentices, he ſhall forfeit 40*s.* for the firſt, and 10*l.* for every ſubſequent, offence; three-fourths to the poor, and one-fourth to the informer.—Any journeyman, &c. ſo gaming, ſhall forfeit from 20*s.* to 5*s.*—No certiorari to be granted; but appeal given to the next Seſſions; and perſons puniſhed by this act, not to be puniſhed by any other law.

See the ſtat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36, againſt unlicenſed houſes for muſick, dancing, &c. the keeper of which, ſhall forfeit 100*l.* and further this Dict. title Bawdy houſe: Play-houſes; and 1 Salk. 344, 5: 5 Mod. 13: Mod. Ca. 122.

From the above ſtatutes and the ſeveral determinations in the books, it may be obſerved, that at common law, the playing at cards, dice, &c. when practiſed innocently, and as a recreation, was not unlawful. 2 Vent. 175. But common gaming-houſes were always conſidered as nuiſances in the eye of the law. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 75. § 6: and as the practice was found to encourage idleneſs and debauchery, the ſtat. 33 H. 8. c. 9, was paſſed to reſtrain it among the inferior ſort of people. And on this ſtatute Noy had a writ to remove bowling-alleys as common nuiſances. 3 Keb. 465. Gentlemen were however ſtill left free to purſue their pleaſure in this way, until the ſtat. 16 Car. 2. c. 7; the preamble of which ſtates the inconveniences to be remedied as ariſing from the immoderate uſe of Gaming. The proviſions of this ſtatute however were ſoon found to be inſufficient; and the ſtat. 9 Ann. c. 14, was made for the more effectually ſuppreſſing this pernicious vice. The ſubſequent ſtatutes, already enumerated above, ſuperadded further penalties to reſtrain this faſhionable crime: which may ſhew, ſays Blackſtone, that our laws againſt Gaming are not ſo deficient, as ourſelves and our magiſtrates in putting thoſe laws in execution. 4 Comm. 173.

Betting on horſe-races is within the general words of the ſtat. 9 Ann. c. 14; (other Game whatſoever;) 2 Stra. 1159: 2 Wilſ. 309. See Black. Rep. 706, and this Dict. tit. Horſe-races.—So is Cricket. 1 Wilſ. part 1, p. 220. So is a foot-race: and a foot-man running againſt time is a foot-race: but to bring it within the ſtatute, it muſt appear that a perſon was engaged in ſuch Game, and a wager was laid on his ſide. 2 Wilſ. 36.—But on a wager between two perſons on the lives of their two fathers, the winner has been allowed to maintain an action. Burr. 2802.

Where two perſons played at all-fours for two guineas a game, from Monday evening to Tueſday evening, without any interruption, except for an hour or two at dinner, the plaintiff loſt fourteen guineas, for which he brought his action on ſtat. 9 Ann. c. 14, and this was held to be one ſitting.—One time in the act means one ſtake or bet; and is diſtinguiſhed from one ſitting, which means a courſe of play where the company never parts though the party may not be actually gaming the whole time. 2 Black. Rep. 1226.

On a conviction for Gaming under ſtat. 9 Ann. c. 14, the judgment is only that the defendant is convicted: and the Court cannot ſet a fine of five times the value, but a new action muſt be brought upon that judgment for the forfeiture. 2 Stra. 1048.

The ſtatutes againſt Gaming have rendered it now leſs frequently neceſſary to reſort to Courts of Equity, which appear to have often interpoſed, prior to the ſtat. 16 Car. 2, for the purpoſe of reſtraining the winner from proceeding at law againſt the loſer upon the ſecurity which he had obtained for the money won. See 14 Vin. Ab. 8. pl. 1, 3: 2 Eq. Ab. 184: Chan. Rep. 47.

It is obſervable that the ſtat. 16 Car. 2, declares that the contract for money loſt at play, and all ſecurities given for it ſhall be utterly void; but the ſtat. 9 Ann, confines itſelf to the ſecurities for money won or lent at play.—Upon which it has been determined that though both the ſecurity and the contract are void as to money won at play, only the ſecurity is void as to money lent at play: and that the contract remains, and the lender may maintain his action for it. 2 Burr. 1077: 2 Stra. 1249.

The ſtatutes having declared the ſecurity void, a bill of exchange given for money won at play, cannot be recovered upon, even by an indorſee for valuable conſideration, and without notice; the original vice of the conſideration affecting the ſecurity, even in the hands of an innocent and bonâ fide holder. 2 Stra. 1155: Dougl. 636, 736. And it ſeems that if money be paid on ſuch ſecurity, it may be recovered back: for payment under a void ſecurity cannot be ſupported: nor does the limitation of three months, (within which time the loſer of money actually paid at the time it is loſt muſt bring his action to recover it back,) extend to payments on account of ſuch void ſecurities. Ambl. 269.

GAOL AND GAOLER.

GAOLA, Fr. Geole, i. e. Caveola, a cage for birds; uſed metaphorically for a priſon.] A ſtrong place or houſe for keeping of debtors, &c. and wherein a man is reſtrained of his liberty to anſwer an offence done againſt the laws: Every County hath two gaols, one for Debtors, which may be any houſe where the Sheriff pleaſes; the other for the peace and matters of the crown, which is the County Gaol.

I. Of Erecting and Repairing Gaols.
II. To what Place, and at whoſe Charge, Offenders are to be committed; and how they are to be kept and regulated.
III. Of the Offence of breaking Gaol.

I. GAOLS are of ſuch univerſal concern to the Public, that none can be erected by any leſs authority than an act of parliament. 2 Inſt. 705. All priſons and gaols belong to the King, although the Subject may have the cuſtody or keeping of them. 2 Inſt. 100, 589. It is ſaid, that none can claim a priſon as a franchiſe, unleſs they have alſo a gaol-delivery; and that therefore the Dean and Chapter of Weſtminſter, though they have the cuſtody of the Gatehouſe priſon, yet as they have no gaol-delivery, muſt ſend a kalendar of the priſoners to Newgate. 1 Salk. 343: 7 Mod. 31.

By ſtat. 14 Ed. 3. cap. 10, it is enacted, that the Sheriffs ſhall have the cuſtody of the Gaols as before, and ſhall put in under-keepers for whom they will anſwer. This ſtatute is confirmed by ſtat. 19 H. 7. cap. 10.

Although divers lords of liberties have the cuſtody of priſons, and ſome in fee, yet the priſon itſelf is the King's, pro bono publico; and therefore it is to be repaired at the common charge. 2 Inſt. 589.

The Juſtices, or the greater number of them within the limits of their commiſſion, upon preſentment of the Grand Jury at the aſſizes (or ſeſſions; ſtat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29. § 13;) of the inſufficiency or inconveniency of the County-gaol may contract with any perſon for the building, finiſhing or repairing the ſame. Stats. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 19. §§ 1, 2. The expence thereof to be paid by the Treaſurer out of the general county rates, ſtat. 12 Geo. 2. § 29. But this, (by ſaid Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3,) not to extend to gaols held by inheritance, nor to charge any perſons in any town town or liberty, which have common gaols for felons, and commiſſioners of aſſiſe or gaol-delivery, with any aſſeſſment to the making the common gaol of the ſhire.

By ſtat. 24 Geo. 3. ſt. 2. c. 54, the Juſtices, at their general quarter ſeſſions, or the major part of them, not being leſs than ſeven, on preſentment made by the Grand jury, of the inſufficiency, inconveniency, or want of repair of the gaol, may contract for the building, repairing, or enlarging the ſame: or for erecting any new gaol upon any ſcite within two miles from that of the old gaol; and in that caſe for the ſelling the old gaol, and the ſcite thereof, and the materials and land belonging thereto. In certain caſes alſo Juſtices may build a new gaol in any part of the county; which is always to be divided into ſeparate apartments with divers conveniences for the benefit of the health and morals of the priſoners, which are enforced by ſtat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 46.

II. Juſtices of peace may not commit felons, and other criminals to the counters in London, or other priſons, but the common gaols, for legally they cannot impriſon any where but in the common gaol. Co. Lit. 9, 119. But the houſe of correction, and the counters of the ſheriffs of London, are the common priſons for offenders for the breach of the peace, &c.

By ſtat. 5 H. 4. cap. 10, it is enacted, "That none ſhall be impriſoned by any juſtice of the peace, but only in the common gaol, ſaving to lords and others, who have gaols, their franchiſe in this caſe."—This ſtatute is only declaratory of the common law. 2 Inſt. 43.

But the court of King's Bench may commit to any priſon in the kingdom which they ſhall think moſt proper, and the offender ſo committed or condemned to impriſonment cannot be removed or bailed by any other court. Moor 666. pl. 913: 1 Sid. 145. See ſtat. 31 C. 2. c. 2. § 12.

And as priſoners ought to be committed at firſt to the proper priſon, ſo ought they not to be removed from thence, except in ſome ſpecial caſes. To which purpoſe, by the ſaid ſtat. 31 Car. 2. c. 2. ſect. 9, it is enacted, "That if any Subject of this realm ſhall be committed to any priſon, or in cuſtody of any officer, for any criminal or ſuppoſed criminal matter, he ſhall not be removed into the cuſtody of any other; unleſs it be by a habeas corpus, or other legal writ; or where the priſoner is delivered to the conſtable, &c. to be carried to ſome common gaol; or where any perſon is ſent by order of any judge of aſſiſe, or juſtice of the peace, to any common work-houſe, or houſe of correction; or where the priſoner is removed from one priſon to another within the ſame county, in order to a trial or diſcharge by due courſe of law; or in caſe of ſudden fire or infection, or other neceſſity; upon pain that he who makes out, ſigns, or counterſigns, or obeys, or executes ſuch warrant, ſhall forfeit to the party grieved one hundred pounds for the firſt offence, two hundred pounds for the ſecond, &c." See ſtat. 19 Car. 2. cap. 4, for impowering juſtices of the peace to remove priſoners in caſe of infection.

By ſtat. 11 & 12 Will. 3. c. 10, All murderers and felons ſhall be impriſoned in the common gaol, and the ſheriffs ſhall have the keeping of the gaol.

Offenders committed to priſon, are to bear the charges of their conveying to gaol; or, on refuſal, their goods ſhall be ſold for that purpoſe, by virtue of a juſtice of peace's warrant; and if they have no goods, a tax is to be made by conſtables, &c. on the inhabitants of the pariſh where the offenders were apprehended. Stat. 3 Jac. 1. cap. 10. And by ſtat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 3, The expence of conveying poor offenders to gaol, or the houſe of correction, ſhall be paid by the treaſurer of the county, except in Middleſex.

For the Relief of Priſoners in gaols, juſtices of peace in ſeſſions have power to tax every pariſh in the county, not exceeding 6*s.* 8*d.* per week, leviable by conſtables, and diſtributed by collectors, &c. 14 Eliz. cap. 5. See alſo ſtat. 12 C. 2. c. 29. And by ſtat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 46, the Juſtices in ſeſſions may order ſuch ſums as they ſhall think neceſſary to be paid out of the county-rate towards aſſiſting ſuch priſoners as are not able to work, or being able, cannot procure employment ſufficient to maintain themſelves in food and raiment, and not otherwiſe provided for by law.

Various proviſions have been, from time to time, made for the relief of poor priſoners, and ſetting them to work. By ſtat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 20, It is enacted, "That all ſheriffs, gaolers, &c. ſhall permit their priſoners to ſend for neceſſary food where they pleaſe; nor demand any greater fee for their commitment or diſcharge, than what is allowable." Alſo it is thereby directed, that an inquiry be made into all charities given for the benefit of poor priſoners.

By ſtat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 67, Every gaoler is, on forfeiture (of 50 l. if a county gaoler, and 20 l. if another;) to deliver in at the Michaelmas ſeſſions yearly, a certificate ſtating how far the proviſions made by various ſtatutes for the benefit of priſoners, are obſerved in his gaol.—The following are the ſtatutes to be particularized in ſuch Certificate:

"The ſtat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 20, enacts, that felons and debtors ſhall be kept ſeparate.—Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 40, enacts, That no gaoler ſhall ſell, lend, uſe, give away, or ſuffer any ſpirituous liquors within any gaol; and that a copy of the clauſes prohibiting thereof ſhall be hung up in the gaol.—Stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 28, enacts, The clerk of the peace ſhall cauſe a liſt of the fees payable by debtors, and the rules and orders for the government of gaols and priſons, to be hung up in the court where the aſſiſes or ſeſſions are held, and ſend another copy to the gaoler, who ſhall cauſe the ſame to be hung up in a conſpicuous part of the gaol.—Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 58, enacts that clergymen may be provided to officiate in gaols.—Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 20, enacts that perſons acquitted, or diſcharged on proclamation for want of proſecution ſhall be diſcharged immediately in open court and without fee.—Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 59, enacts that the walls and ceilings of cells in gaols ſhall be ſcraped and white-waſhed, at leaſt once a year: that the cells ſhall be kept clean and ſupplied with freſh air by ventilators, &c.—that there ſhall be two rooms ſet apart, for the ſick—that a warm and cold bath or bathing tubs ſhall be provided—that a Surgeon or Apothecary ſhall be appointed with a ſalary—That this act ſhall be hung up in the gaol." And by ſtat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 45, Priſoners diſcharged may, on application, be conveyed to their ſettlement by a vagrant paſs. See title Vagrant.

Thus humane have the Legiſlature continually ſhewn themſelves, in repeatedly interfering for the health and comfort of thoſe who are conſidered generally as the mere out-caſts of Society; to employ them alſo in uſeful induſtry, and thus turn their minds to good from evil, has been another attempt no leſs praiſe-worthy than the former.

The Juſtices in general ſeſſions may provide a convenient ſtock of materials for ſetting poor priſoners to work, to be paid for by the treaſurer out of the general county-rate: and may pay and provide fit perſons to overſee and ſet ſuch priſoners on work; and make the orders needful as to regulating the accounts, for puniſhing neglects and abuſes, and for beſtowing the profits of their labour for the relief of the priſoners. Stats. 19 C. 2. c. 4. § 1: 12 Geo. 2. c. 29: 31 Geo. 3. c. 46.

As to other matters relative to the eaſe, or to prevent the oppreſſion, of Priſoners, ſee this Dict. title Habeas Corpus: Tranſportation: Arreſt: and Burn's J. tit. Gaol.

III. The offence of Priſon-breaking by the common law, was no leſs than felony; and this whether the party were committed in a criminal, or civil caſe, or whether he were actually within the walls of the priſon, or only in the ſtocks, or in the cuſtody of any perſon who had lawfully arreſted him, or whether he were in the King's priſon, or one belonging to a lord, or franchiſe. 2 Inſt. 589: Staundf. P. C. 31: Cro. Car. 210.

But now, by the ſtatute 1 Ed. 2. ſtat. 2. de frangentibus priſonam, "None from henceforth that breaketh priſon ſhall have judgment of life, or member, for breaking of priſon only, except the cauſe for which he was taken and impriſoned did require ſuch judgment, if he had been convict thereupon according to the law and cuſtom of the realm; albeit in times paſt it hath been uſed otherwiſe." So that to break priſon and eſcape, when one is lawfully committed for any treaſon or felony, remains ſtill felony, as at the common law: and to break priſon, (whether it be the county gaol, the ſtocks, or other uſual place of ſecurity,) when lawfully confined upon any other inferior charge is ſtill puniſhable as a high miſdemeanor by fine and impriſonment. 4 Comm. c. 10: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 18.

Any place whatſoever, wherein a perſon under a lawful arreſt for a ſuppoſed capital offence is reſtrained from his liberty, whether in the ſtocks or ſtreet, or in the common gaol, or the houſe of a conſtable, or private perſon, or the priſon of the Ordinary, is a priſon within the ſtatute. 2 Inſt. 589: Dyer. 99. pl. 60: Crom. 38: Cro. Car. 210: Hale's P. C. 107.

There muſt be an actual breaking, for the words felonicè fregit priſonam, which are neceſſary in every indictment for this offence, cannot be ſatisfied without ſome actual force or violence; and therefore if the priſoner, without the uſe of any violent means, go out of the priſon doors, which he finds open by the negligence or conſent of the gaoler, or if he eſcape through a breach made by others without his privity, he is guilty of a miſdemeanor only, and not of felony. 2 Inſt. 589: Hale's P. C. 108: Staundf. P. C. 31.

Nor will the breaking of priſon, which is neceſſitated by any accident, happening without any default of the priſoner, as where the priſon is fired by lightning, or otherwiſe, without his privity, and he breaks out to ſave his life, come within the ſtatute. Plowd. 136: 2 Inſt. 590: Hale's P. C. 108. Nor is it felony to break a priſon, unleſs the priſoner eſcape. Keilw. 87. a.

If the impriſonment be for any offence made capital by a ſubſequent ſtatute, the breach of priſon is as much within the act of 1 Ed. 2. ſtat. 2, as if the offence had always been felony; but if the offence, for which a man is committed, were but a treſpaſs at the time when he breaks the priſon, and afterwards become felony by a ſubſequent matter; as where one committed for having dangerouſly wounded a man, who afterwards dies, breaks the priſon before he dies, the fiction of law, (which to many purpoſes makes the offence a felony ab initio,) ſhall not be carried ſo far as to make the priſon-breach alſo a felony, which, at the time when it was committed, was but a miſdemeanor. Hale's P. C. 108: 2 Inſt. 591: Plowd. 258.

It ſeems the better opinion, that if the offence, for which the party was committed, be in truth but a treſpaſs, the calling it felony in the mittimus, will not make the breaking of the gaol amount to felony; and that on the other ſide, if the offence were in truth a capital one, the calling it a treſpaſs in the mittimus will not bring it within the ſtatute; for the cauſe of impriſonment is what the ſtatute regards; and that is the offence, which can neither be leſſened, nor increaſed by a miſtake in the mittimus. But for this, ſee 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 18.

The offence of breaking priſon is but felony, whatſoever the crime were for which the party was committed, unleſs his intent were to favour the eſcape of others who were committed for treaſon, for that will make him a principal in the treaſon. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 18.

The felony of breach of priſon is within clergy, though the offence for which the party was committed be excluded clergy. 1 Hal. H. P. C. 612.

He that breaks priſon may be proceeded againſt for ſuch crime before he be convicted of the crime for which he is committed, becauſe the breach of priſon is a diſtinct independent offence; but the ſheriff's return of a breach of priſon is not a ſufficient ground to arraign a man, without an indictment. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 18.

It is not ſufficient to indict a man generally, for having felonioufly broken priſon; but the caſe muſt be ſet forth ſpecially, that it may appear he was lawfully in priſon, and for a capital offence. Hale's P. C. 109: 2 Inſt. 591.

If A. arreſt B. for ſuſpicion and carry him to the common gaol, and there deliver him; if he breaks priſon and be indicted on it, there muſt be the following averments in the indictment: that there was a felony done, and that A. having probable cauſe to ſuſpect B. had arreſted and committed him, and that he broke the priſon; all which muſt be proved on the trial. But where a felon is taken by capias and committed, and breaks priſon, there needs no ſuch averment, &c. becauſe all appears by matter of record. 2 Inſt. 590: Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 10.

For further matter relative to Gaols and Priſoners, ſee this Dict. titles Arreſt: Commitment: Debtor: Eſcape: Execution: Falſe Impriſonment: Inſolvent: Marſhalſea: 2 Hawk. P. C. and the title (Gaoler) immediately following.

GAOLER. The maſter of a priſon; one that hath the cuſtody of the place where priſoners are kept. Sheriffs muſt make ſuch gaolers for which they will anſwer. But if there is a default in the gaoler, action lies againſt him for an eſcape, &c. 2 Inſt. 592. In common caſes, the ſheriff, or gaoler, is chargeable at the diſcretion of the party; though the ſheriff is moſt uſually charged. He who hath the cuſtody of the gaol wrongfully, or of right, ſhall be charged with the eſcape of priſoners; and if he that hath the actual poſſeſſion be not ſufficient, his ſuperior ſhall anſwer. 2 Hawk. P. C.

It is ſaid that for his own ſecurity a gaoler may hamper a felon with irons to prevent his eſcape. 1 Hal. H. P. C. 601: Dalt. c. 170: and that a gaoler is no way puniſhable for keeping even a debtor in irons. 2 Hawk. P. C.

But

But it has been obſerved that this proceeding, even in the caſe of a felon, (much more in that of a debtor,) can only be intended where the officer has juſt reaſon to fear an eſcape; as where the priſoner is unruly, or makes any attempt to that purpoſe: but otherwiſe notwithſtanding the too common practice of gaolers, it ſeems altogether unwarrantable, and contrary to the mildneſs and humanity of the laws of England, by which gaolers are forbidden to put their priſoners to any pain or torment: and Lord Coke, 2 Inſt. 381, is expreſs, that by the common law it might not be done. 1 H. H. 601. And if the gaoler keep the priſoner more ſtrictly than he ought of right, whereof the priſoner dieth, this is felony in the gaoler by the common law. And this is the cauſe that if a priſoner die in gaol the coroner ought to ſit upon him: and if the death was owing to cruel and oppreſſive uſage on the part of the gaoler, or any officer of his, it will be deemed wilful murder in the perſon guilty of ſuch dureſs. 3 Inſt. 91: Foſt. 321, 2. But if a criminal endeavouring to break the gaol, aſſault his gaoler, he may be lawfully killed by him in the affray. 1 Hawk. P. C.: 1 H. H. 496. See ante Gaol III. and this Dict. titles Eſcape: Murder.

A perſon in execution in the King's Bench priſon was put in irons by the Marſhal: and the Court ordered the Marſhal to keep his priſoner according to law: and in this caſe they ſaid the gaoler might juſtify putting him in irons if he feared an eſcape; or if the priſoner was unruly. 7 Mod. 52. In the ſecond year of Geo. II, Sir William Rich being laid in irons in the Fleet priſon, had his irons taken off by order of the Houſe of Commons; who thereupon began an inquiry into the conduct of Gaolers, which produced ſome of the wholeſome laws mentioned hereafter, and under title Gaol.

By ſtat. 14 Ed. 3. cap. 10, "If any keeper of a priſon, or under-keeper, by too great dureſs of impriſonment, and by pain, make any priſoner that he hath in his ward to become an appellor againſt his will, he is guilty of felony." See title Acceſſary.

By ſtat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 10, It is enacted, that the Sheriffs and gaolers ſhall receive, and ſafely keep in priſon, from henceforth ſuch thieves and felons, by the delivery of the conſtables and townſhips, without taking any thing for the receipt; and the juſtices to deliver the gaol, ſhall have power to hear their complaints, that will complain againſt the Sheriffs and Gaolers in ſuch caſe, and moreover to puniſh the Sheriffs and Gaolers, if they be found guilty.

By ſtat. 3 H. 7. c. 3, The Sheriff and every other perſon, having authority or power of keeping of gaol, or of priſoners for felony, ſhall certify the names of all priſoners in his cuſtody to the juſtices of gaol-delivery.

If any perſon aſſault a gaoler, for keeping a priſoner in ſafe cuſtody, he may be fined and impriſoned. 1 Hawk. P. C. Where a Gaol is broken by thieves, the Gaoler is anſwerable; not if it be broken by enemies. 3 Inſt. 52.

It ſeems clearly agreed, that a Gaoler by ſuffering voluntary eſcapes, by abuſing his priſoners, by extorting unreaſonable fees from them, or by detaining them in gaol, after they have been legally diſcharged, and paid their juſt fees, forfeits his office; for that in the grant of every office it is implied, that the grantee execute it faithfully and diligently. Co. Lit. 233: 9 Co. 5: 3 Mod. 143.

By ſtat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27, The Marſhal of the King's Bench and Warden of the Fleet taking any reward to connive at priſoners' eſcape, ſhall forfeit 500 l. and their office, and be rendered for ever after incapable of executing any ſuch office.

It hath been reſolved, that a forfeiture by a Gaoler who hath but a particular intereſt, as of him who hath cuſtody of a gaol for life, or years, does not affect him in remainder, or reverſion, who hath the inheritance, but that upon ſuch forfeiture his title ſhall accrue, and not go to the King. Popb. 119: 2 Lev. 71: Raym. 216: 3 Lev. 288.

By ſtat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27, It is enacted, That the office of Marſhal of the King's Bench, and Warden of the Fleet, ſhall be executed by thoſe who have the inheritance of the ſaid priſons, or their deputies, &c. and the profits of their office may be ſequeſtered on motion to the Court of B. R. to ſatisfy a judgment had againſt them for eſcape.

By Stat. 3 Geo. 1. cap. 15, None ſhall purchaſe the office of Gaoler, or any other office pertaining to the high ſheriff, under pain of 500 l.

By ſtat. 24 Geo. 3. ſt. 2. c. 54, a Gaoler ſhall not directly or indirectly ſell liquors to the priſoners, or keep, or be concerned in, or benefited by any tap-houſe, tap-room, tap, or licenſe for that purpoſe, on pain of 10 l. for each offence: The Juſtices in ſeſſions may make allowance to Gaolers in lieu of profits formerly derived to them from the ſale of liquors.

By Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 46. § 8, Gaolers are, on the firſt day of every aſſiſes to make a return of the ſize and condition of Gaols, the number of priſoners, &c. therein. See further title Gaol.

GAOL-DELIVERY. The adminiſtration of juſtice being originally in the crown, in former times our Kings in perſon rode through the realm once in ſeven years, to judge of and determine crimes and offences; afterwards Juſtices in eyre were appointed; and ſince Juſtices of Aſſiſe and gaol-delivery, &c. A commiſſion of a gaol delivery is a patent in nature of a letter from the King to certain perſons, appointing them his juſtices, or two, or three, of them, and authoriſing them to deliver his gaol, at ſuch a place, of the priſoners in it; for which purpoſe, it commands them to meet at ſuch a place, at the time they themſelves ſhall appoint; and informs them that for the ſame purpoſe the king hath commanded his ſheriff of the ſame county to bring all the priſoners of the gaol, and their attachments before them, at the day appointed. Cromp. Juriſd. 125: 4 Inſt. 168.

By Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 3, Thoſe that have the cuſtody of gaols muſt certify the names of all the priſoners to the juſtices of gaol-delivery in order to their trial or diſcharge, on pain of 5 l.

Juſtices of gaol-delivery are impowered by the Common law to proceed upon indictments of felony, treſpaſs, &c. and to order execution or reprieve: And they have power to diſcharge ſuch priſoners, as upon their trials ſhall be acquitted; alſo all ſuch againſt whom, upon proclamation made, no evidence appears to indict them; which Juſtices of oyer and terminer, &c. may not do. 2 Hawk. P. C. But theſe juſtices have nothing to do with any perſon not in cuſtody of the priſon, except in ſome ſpecial caſes; as if ſome of the accomplices to a felony be in ſuch priſon, and ſome of them out of it, the juſtices may receive an appeal againſt thoſe who are out of the priſon, as well as thoſe who are in it; which appeal, after the trial of ſuch priſoners, ſhall be removed into B. R. and proceſs iſſue from thence againſt the reſt. Fitz. Coron. 77: S. P. C. 64. Such juſtices have no more to do with one let to mainpriſe, than if he were at large; for ſuch perſon cannot be ſaid to be a priſoner, ſince it is not in the power of his ſureties to detain him in their cuſtody: And where any perſon is bailed there he is in the cuſtody of his ſureties, and they may detain him where they pleaſe. 2 H. P. C. 25. Though per Holt. Ch. J. If a perſon be let to bail, yet he is in law in priſon, and his bail are his keepers; and therefore the juſtices of gaol delivery may take an indictment againſt him, as well as if he was actually in gaol. And they may take indictments not only of felony, but alſo of high treaſon, if the offenders are in priſon, and try and give judgment upon them, like unto commiſſioners of oyer and terminer; though it has been formerly held otherwiſe. 2 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 35. Juſtices of gaol-delivery may puniſh thoſe who unduly bail priſoners; as being guilty of a negligent eſcape, S. P. C. 77: 25 Ed. 3. 39. They are alſo to puniſh ſheriffs and gaolers, refuſing to take felons into their cuſtody from conſtables, &c. Stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 10; and have authority to puniſh many particular offences by ſtatute.

The granting a new commiſſion of gaol-delivery, or of the peace, in a town corporate, ſhall not avoid the former commiſſion. 2 & 3 Ph. & Mar. c. 18. Juſtices of gaol-delivery may act in their counties. 12 Geo. 2. c. 27.—See titles Aſſiſe: Circuits: Judges: Juſtices.

GARB, Garba, from the Fr. Garbe, alias Gerbe, i. e. faſcis.] A bundle or ſheaf of corn. Chart. Foreſt. cap. 7. And in ſome places it is taken for an handful, viz. Garba aceris ſit ex triginta peciis. Fleta lib. 2. cap. 12. Garba ſagittarum is a ſheaf of arrows containing twenty-four. Skene.

GARBLE, Is to ſever the droſs and duſt from ſpice, drugs, &c. Garbling is the purifying and cleanſing the good from the bad; and may come from the Italian Garbo, i. e. Finery or neatneſs; and thence probable we ſay, when we ſee a man in a neat habit, that he is in a handſome Garb. Cowel.

GARBLER OF SPICES, An officer of antiquity in the city of London, who may enter into any ſhop, warehouſe, &c. to view and ſearch drugs and ſpices, and garble and make clean the ſame, or ſee that it be done. And anciently all drugs, &c. were to be cleanſed and garbled before ſold, on pain of forfeiture, or the value. By Stat. 6 Ann. cap. 16. this officer is to be appointed by the Court of Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Common Council to Garble ſpices at the requeſt of the owner, but not otherwiſe.

GARCIO, Fr. Garçon.] A groom or ſervant. Pla. Cor. 21 Ed. 1. Garcio ſtolæ, groom of the ſtole to the King: And in the Iriſh language, (according to Toland) garſon is an appellative for any menial ſervant. Kennet's Gloſſ.

GARCIONES. Servants who follow the camp.—Ingulph. 886: Walſing. 242.

GARD, GARDIAN, &c. See Guard and Guardian.

GARDEBRACHE, Fr. Gardebrace.] An armour or vambrace for the arm. Chart. K. Hen. 5.

GARDENS. Robbing of orchards or gardens of fruit growing therein, is puniſhable criminally by whipping, ſmall fines, impriſonment, and ſatisfaction to the party wronged, according to the nature of the offence. See ſtat. 43 Eliz. c. 7: and title Trees; Treſpaſs: Felony.

GARDEROBE, Garderoba.] A wardrobe; a cloſet or ſmall apartment, for hanging up clothes. See 2 Inſt. 255.

GARDIA, Is a word uſed by the feudiſts for cuſtodia: Lib. Feud. 1.

GARE, A coarſe wool, full of ſtaring hairs, ſuch as grow about the ſhanks of ſheep. See ſtat. 31 Ed. 3. cap. 2.

GARLANDA, A chaplet, coronet, or garland. Mat. Paris.

GARNESTURA, Victuals, arms, and other implements of war, neceſſary for the defence of a town or caſtle. Mat. Paris. Ann. 1250.

To GARNISH, To warn; to garniſh the heir, ſignifies in law to warn the heir. Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 3.

GARNISHMENT, Fr. Garnement, from Garnir, i. e. inſtruere.] In a legal ſenſe intends a warning given to one for his appearance, for the information of the Court and explaining a cauſe. For example; one is ſued for the detinue of certain writings delivered; and the defendant alledging that they were delivered to him by the plaintiff, and another perſon, upon condition, prays that the other perſon may be warned to plead with the plaintiff, whether the condition be performed or not; in this petition he is ſaid to pray Garniſhment; which may be interpreted either a warning of that other, or a furniſhing the court with all parties to the action, whereby it may thoroughly determine the cauſe; and until he appears and joins, the defendant is as it were out of the court. Cromp. Juriſ. 211: F. N. B. 106. A writ of ſcire facias is to go forth againſt the other perſon to appear and plead with the plaintiff; and when he comes and thus pleads, it is called enterpleader: If the garniſhee be returned ſcire feci, and make default, judgment will be had to recover the writings, and for their delivery, againſt the defendant; and if the Garniſhee appears and pleads, if the plaintiff recovers, he ſhall have damages. Raſt. 213: 1 Brownl. 147.

Garniſhment is generally uſed for a warning; as garniſher le court is to warn the court; and reaſonable Garniſhment, is where a perſon hath reaſonable warning. Kitch. 6. In the Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 3, we read, upon a Garniſhment or two nihils returned, &c. And further, ſome contracts are naked, ſans garnement, and ſome furniſhed, &c.—See title Interpleader.

GARNISHEE; Such third perſon or party in whoſe hands money is attached within the liberties of the city of London, by proceſs out of the ſheriff's court; ſo called, becauſe he hath had Garniſhment or warning, not to pay the money to the defendant, but to appear and anſwer to the plaintiff creditor's ſuit. Vide Attachment Foreign.

GARNISTURE, A furniſhing or providing. Pat. 17 Ed. 3. Vide Garneſtura.

GARSUMMUNE, Gerſuma, or Gerſoma, A Fine or amerciament. Domeſday; Spelm. Gloſſ.

GARTER, Garterium, Fr. Jartier, i. e. Periſcelis, Faſcia poplitaria.] Signifies in divers ſtatutes, and elſewhere a ſpecial garter, being the enſign of a noble order of knights, inſtituted by King Ed. III. anno Dom. 1344, called Knights of the Garter: It is alſo taken for the principal King at arms, among our Engliſh heralds, attending upon the Knights thereof; created by King Hen. V.

The firſt dignity after that of nobility, is that of a Knight of the Order of Saint George, or of the Garter. Indeed many Sovereign Princes have been proud of the order, order, and considered themselves as highly honoured by our Sovereign's conferring it on them. See titles Knights: Precedency.

GARTH, A little back-side or close in the North of England; being an ancient British word; gardd in that language signifying garden, and pronounced and writ garth; also a dam or wear, &c.

GARTHMAN As there are fishgarths or wears for catching of fish, so there are Garthmen; for by statute 17 R. 2. c. 9, it is ordained, that no fisher nor Garthman shall use any nets or engines to destroy the fry of fish, &c. This word is supposed to be derived from the Scottish gart, which signifieth inforced, or compelled; the fish being forced by the wear to pass in at a loop where they are taken.

GASTALDUS, A governor of the country, whose office was only temporary, and who had jurisdiction over the common people. Blount.

GATE, At the end of the names of places, signifies a way or path, from the Sax. geat, i. e. porta, the custody of the gates of the city of London, is granted to the Lord Mayor, &c. by Chart. King Hen. 4. See London.

GAVEL, Sax. gafel.] Tribute, toll, custom or yearly revenue; of which we had in old time several kinds. See title Gabel.

GAVELET, gaveletum.] An ancient and special kind of cessavit used in Kent, where the custom of gavel-kind continues, whereby a tenant, if he with-holds his rents and services due to the lord, shall forfeit his land: it was intended where no distress could be found on the premisses, so that the lord might seize the land itself in the nature of a distress, and keep it a year and a day; within which time, if the tenant came and paid his rent, he was admitted to his tenement to hold it as before; but if not, the lord might enter and enjoy the same. The lord was to seek by the award of his court, from three weeks to three weeks, to find some distress upon the land or tenement, until the fourth court; and if in that time he could find none, at the fourth court it was awarded that the tenement should be seized as a distress, and kept in the lord's hands a year and a day without manuring; and if the tenant did not in that time redeem it, by paying the rent and making amends to the lord, the lord having pronounced his process by witnesses at the next county court, was awarded by his court to enter and manure the tenement as his own: and if the tenant would afterwards have it again, he was to make agreement with the lord. Fitz. Cess. 60: Terms de Ley.

Gaveletum is as much as to say to cease, or to let to pay the rent; and consuetudo de gavelet was not a rent or service, but a rent or service with-held, denied or detained, causing the forfeiture of the tenement. Dict.

The word gavelet in its original signification imported rent: but it means also a process for the recovery of rent peculiar to Kent, and London.—The gavelet thus prevailing by the custom of Kent may be used whether there is a sufficient distress on the land or not; but is restricted to gavelkind tenure. Robins. on Gavelk. 243. To London this writ was given for rent-service generally by Stat. 10 E. 2; which is therefore called the statute of Gavelet. But by the words of the statute this latter gavelet only lies where the lord cannot obtain payment by distress. See Spelm voc. Gaveletum: Wright's Ten. 197.

This remedy of gavelet as well as that of cessavit is now fallen wholly into disuse; nor, whilst they continued in use, were they applicable except where the tenure was in fee. Booth on Real Act. 133. See 1 Inst. 142. n. 2. and this Dict. titles Cessavit: Distress: Tenure.

GAVELET IN LONDON, breve de gaveleto in London, pro redditu ibidem, quia tenementa fuerunt indistringibilia.] The writ used in the hustings of London; where the parties, tenant and demandant, appear by scire facias, to shew cause why the one should not have his tenement again on payment of his rent, or the other recover the lands, on default thereof.

GAVELGELD, Payment of tribute or toll. Mon. Ang. tom. 3.

GAVELKIND.

A Tenure or Custom, annexed and belonging to lands in Kent, whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death among all his sons; or the land of the brother among all the brethren, if he have no issue of his own. Lit. 210. See title Tenures III. 12.

All the lands in England, it is said were of the nature of Gavelkind before the year 1066, and descended to all the issue equally; but after the Conquest (as it is called) when knight-service was introduced, the descent was restrained to the eldest son for the preservation of the tenure. Lamb. 167: 3 Salk. 129. Except in Kent, for the supposed reason of which see Blount in v. Gavelkind, who relates the story of the Kentish men surrounding Will. I. with a moving wood of boughs, and thus obtaining a confirmation of their ancient rights.

In the reign of Hen. VI. there were not above thirty or forty persons in all Kent that held by any other tenure than this of Gavelkind; which was afterwards altered upon the petition of divers Kentish gentlemen, in much of the land of that county, so as to be descendible to the eldest son, according to the course of the Common-law, by the Stat. 31 H. 8. cap. 3. Though the custom to devise Gavelkind land, and the other qualities and customs remain. Co. Lit. 140. By the Stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. cap. 26. all Gavelkind lands in Wales were made descendible to the heir, according to the Common-law; whereby it appears, that the tenure of Gavelkind was likewise in that Principality.

Blackstone relies on the nature of tenure in Gavelkind as a pregnant proof that tenure in free socage was a remnant of Saxon Liberty. It is universally known what struggles the Kentish-men made to preserve their ancient liberties, and the success with which those struggles were attended. And as it is principally here that we meet with the custom of Gavelkind, we may fairly conclude that this was a part of those liberties; agreeable to Mr. Selden's opinion that Gavelkind, before the Norman Conquest was the general custom of the realm.—The distinguishing properties of this tenure are various. Some of the principal are; that the tenant is of sufficient age to alien his estate, by feoffment, at the age of fifteen.—That the estate does not escheat in case of an attainder and execution for felony.—That in most places the tenant had power of devising lands by will before the statute for that purpose was made. Fitz. N. B. 198: Cro. Car. 561.—The descent of the lands, as above-stated; which was indeed anciently the most usual course of descent all over England. Glanvil, l. 7. c. 3, though in particular cases particular customs prevailed.

These

These among other properties distinguished this tenure in a more remarkable manner; and yet it is said to be only a species of a socage tenure, modified by the custom of the country; the lands, being holden by suit of court and fealty, which is a service in its nature certain. Wright 211. See this Dict. title Tenure III. 12. Wherefore by a charter of King John, Hubert Arch-bishop of Canterbury was authorited to exchange the Gavel-kind tenures holden of the See of Canterbury into tenures by Knight's service: and by the above mentioned statute of 31 Hen. 8. c. 3, for disgavelling lands in Kent, they are directed to be descendible, for the future, like other lands which were never holden by service of Socage. Now the immunities which the tenants in Gavelkind enjoyed were such as cannot be conceived should be conferred on mere plowmen and peasants: from all which the learned Commentator conceives it to be sufficiently clear that tenures in free socage are in general of a nobler original than is assigned by Littleton, or after him by the bulk of common lawyers. 2 Comm. 84, 5. c. 6.

A father having Gavelkind lands, had three sons, one of whom died in the life-time of his father, leaving issue a daughter; and it was held that the daughter shall inherit the part of her father jure repræsentationis, and yet she is not within the words of the custom of dividing the land between the heirs male, for she is the daughter of a male and heir by representation. 1 Salk. 243. The heir at the age of fifteen years, it is said, may give and sell his lands in Gavelkind, and shall inherit. Co. Lit. 111. The custom of Gavelkind, is not altered, though a fine be levied of the lands at Common-law; because it is a custom that runs with the land. 6 E. 6.

Land in Gavelkind was devised to the husband and wife for life, remainder to the next heir male of their bodies, &c. They had three sons, and it was adjudged that the eldest son should not have the whole. Dyer 133. A donee in tail, of Gavelkind lands had issue four sons; and it was held, that all should inherit: but if a lease for life is made of Gavelkind, remainder to the right heirs of A. B. who hath issue four sons, in this case the eldest son shall inherit the remainder, because, in case of purchase, there can be but one right heir. 1 Rep. 102. If Gavelkind lands come to the crown, and are regranted to hold in capite, &c. the land shall descend to all the heirs male as Gavelkind. Nelf. Abr. 895.

A wife shall be endowed of Gavelkind land, of a moiety of the land whereof her husband died seised, during her widowhood. Co. Lit. 111. And it has been adjudged, that the widow cannot have election to demand her thirds or dower at Common-law, so as to avoid the custom, by which she shall lose her dower, if she marry a second husband. Moor 260. But see 1 Leon. 62. See title Dower.

The husband shall be tenant by the curtesy of half the Gavelkind lands of the wife, during the time he continues unmarried, without having any issue by his wife; but if he marry, he shall forfeit his tenancy by the curtesy. Co. Lit. 111. If the husband had issue by his wife, and she die, he shall be tenant by the curtesy of the whole land; and though he marry, he shall not forfeit his tenancy. Mich. 21 Car. B. R: 1 Lil. Abr. 649.

It was formerly supposed that although a father was attainted of treason or felony, the heir of Gavelkind land should inherit, for the custom, as said, was, 'the father to the bough and the son to the plough.' Doct. & Stud. c. 10. But, it has been held, that, in matters of treason, which strike at the foundations of policy and government, even Gavelkind lands are forfeitable, and always were. See title Forfeiture.

A rent in fee granted out of Gavelkind lands, shall descend in Gavelkind to all the heirs male, as the lands would have done; it being of the same nature with the land itself. 2 Lev. 138: 1 Mod. 97.

All lands in Kent shall be taken to be Gavelkind, except those which are disgavelled by particular statutes. 1 Mod. 98. If lands are alledged to be in Kent, it shall be intended that they are Gavelkind; if the contrary doth not appear. 2 Sid. 153. By Hale Ch. J. Gavelkind law, is the law of Kent, and is never pleaded, but presumed; and it has been held, that the superior courts may take notice of Gavelkind generally without pleading: though not of the special custom of devising it, which ought to be pleaded specially. 1 Mod. 98: Cro. Car. 465: Lutw. 236, 754.

The Gavelkind descent of lands in Ireland was an incident to the custom of Tanistry: and as such fell to the ground with its Principal, in consequence of a solemn judgment against the latter in a case Ann. 5 Jac. 1. See Dav. Rep. 28. But in the reign of Queen Ann the policy of weakening the Roman-Catholick interest in Ireland was the cause of an Irish statute to make the lands of Papists descendible according to the gavelkind custom unless the heir conformed within a limited time. See Rob. on Gavelk. c. 17. However now by an Irish statute of the present reign (17 & 18 Geo. 3. c. 49,) the descent of the lands of Papists is again reduced to the course of the Common-law. 1 Inst. 176. n. 1.

GAVELMAN, A tenant liable to tribute.—Somner of Gavelkind, pag. 33. And hence Gavelkind has been thought to be land in its nature taxable. Blount. See Tenures III. 12.

GAVELMED, The duty or work of mowing grass, or cutting of meadow land, required by the lord from his customary tenants; Consuetudo falcandi quæ vocatur gavelmed. Somn.

GAVELCESTER, Sax. Sextarius Vectigalis.] A certain measure of rent-ale: and among the articles to be charged on the stewards and bailiffs of the manors belonging to the church of Canterbury in Kent, according to which they were to be accountable, this of old was one; de gavelceſter cujuslibet bracini braciati infra libertatem manerionum, viz. unam lagenam & dimidiam cervisiæ. This duty elsewhere occurs under the name of tolcester; in lieu whereof the Abbot of Abingdon was wont of custom to receive the penny mentioned by Selden in his Dissertation annexed to Fleta, cap. 8. Nor does it differ from what is called oak-gavel in the Glossary at the end of Hen. 1. Law's Sax. Dict.

GAVEL-WERK, Sax.] Was either manu opera, by the hands and person of the tenant, or carropera, by his carts or carriages. Philips of Purvey.

GAUGETUM, A gauge or ganging, done by the gauger; and the true English gauge is mentioned, in Rot. Parl. 32 Ed. 1.

GAUGER,

GAUGER, Gaugeator, Fr. gauchir, i. e. in gyrum torquere.] An officer appointed by the King, to examine all tuns, pipes, hogſheads, barrels and terces of wine, oil, honey, &c. and to give them a mark of allowance, as containing lawful meaſure, before they are ſold in any place: and becauſe his mark is a circle made with an iron inſtrument for that purpoſe, it ſeems to have its name from thence. Of this officer and his office, there are many ſtatutes; as by Stat. 27 Ed. 3. cap. 8, all wines, &c. imported, are to be gauged by the King's gaugers, or their deputies. By Stat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 5, Selling wine before gauged, incurs forfeiture of the value. And by Stat. 23 Hen. 6. cap. 15, the gauge-penny is to be paid gaugers, on gauging wines. The Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 8, ordained, that beer, &c. imported, ſhall be gauged by the Maſter and Wardens of the Coopers' company. See ſtat. 12 Car. 2. c. 4.

The wardens of the Coopers, ſhall attend to gauge veſſels upon requeſt, 23 Hen. 8. c. 4. Gaugers may take ſamples not exceeding half a pint, 32 Geo. 2. c. 29. See titles Brewers: Exciſe.

GEASPECIA. In a charter of the privileges of Newcaſtle upon Tyne, renewed anno 30 Eliz. we find ſturgiones, porpecias, (i. e. porpoiſes) delphinos, geaſpecia, viz. grampois, &c.

GEBURSCIP, Geburſcipa] Neighbourhood or adjoining diſtrict. Leg. Edw. Confeſſ. cap. 1.

GEBURUS, A country inhabitant of the ſame geburſhip, or village; from the Sax. gebure, a carl ploughman, or farmer. Cowel.

GELD, Geldum. Mulcta; compenſatio delicti & pretium rei.] Hence, in our antient laws, wergeld or weregild was uſed for the value or price of a man ſlain; and orfgeld of a beaſt: likewiſe money or tribute; for it is ſaid, Et ſint quieti de geldis, danegeldis, hengeldis, hlodwita, &c. Chart. Rich. 2. Priorat. de H. in Devon. Pat. 5 E. 4. Angeld is the ſingle value of a thing, twigeld, double value, &c.

GELDABLE, Geldabilis.] That is liable to pay tax or tribute. Camden, dividing Suffolk into three parts, calls the firſt geldable, becauſe ſubject to taxes; from which the other two parts were exempt, as being eccleſiæ donatæ. The word is mentioned in the Stat. 27 Hen. 8. cap. 26. But in an old MS. it is expounded to be that land, or lordſhip, which is ſub diſtrictione curiæ vicecom.' 2 Inſt. 701.

GEMOTE, Sax. i. e. conventus.] An aſſembly. Leg. Edw. Conf. cap. 35. See Alderman: Ealdorman: Folc-mote: Mote: Wittena-gemote: Parliament.

GENEATH, Villanus; Regis Geneath, is the King's villain. LL. Inæ, MS. cap. 19.

GENERAL ISSUE, Is a plea to the fact of Not Guilty, in criminal caſes, in order to trial, by the country, or by peers, &c. H. P. C. 254. In civil ſuits, there are various pleas, which are general iſſues, according to the ſpecies of the action, as in Treſpaſs, Not Guilty, in Caſe on promiſes, non aſſumpſit, &c. See title Pleading.

GENERATIO. When an old abbey, or religious houſe had ſpread itſelf into many colonies, or depending cells, that iſſue or offſpring of the mother monaſtery was called generatio; quaſi proles & ſoboles matricis domus. Annal. Waverl. 1232.

GENERALE. The ſingle commons, or ordinary proviſion of the religious, were termed generale, as their general allowance, diſtinguiſhed from their pietantiæ, or pittances; which on extraordinary occaſions were thrown in as over commons. Theſe are deſcribed amongſt other cuſtoms. Cartular. Glaſton. MS. fol. 10.

GENERALS OF ORDERS, Chiefs of the ſeveral orders of monks, friars, and other religious ſocieties.

GENEVA, A ſtrong water or ſpirit. Vide Diſtillers.

GENTLEMAN, Generoſus.] Is compounded of two languages, from the Fr. gentil, i. e. honeſtus, vel honeſto loco natus, and the Sax. mon. a man; thus meaning a man well born. The Italians call thoſe gentil homini whom we ſtyle gentleman; the French (heu quantum mutati!) under their ancient monarchy, diſtinguiſhed ſuch by the name of gentilhomme: and the Spaniards keep up to the meaning of the word, calling him hidalgo or hijo d' alga, who is the ſon of a man of account; ſo that gentlemen are ſuch whom their blood or race doth make known.

Under the denomination of Gentlemen, are compriſed all above yeomen: whereby noblemen are truly called Gentlemen. Smith de Rep. Ang. lib. 1. cc. 20, 21. A Gentleman is generally defined to be one, who, without any title, bears a coat of arms, or whoſe anceſtors have been freemen; and by the coat that a Gentleman giveth, he is known to be, or not to be, deſcended from thoſe of his name, that lived many hundred years ſince.

There is ſaid to be a Gentleman by office, and in reputation, as well as thoſe that are born ſuch. 2 Inſt. 668. And we read that J. Kingſton was made a Gentleman by King Rich. II. Pat. 13 R. 2. par. 1. Gentilis homo for a Gentleman, was adjudged a good addition. Hil. 27 Ed. 3. But the addition of eſquire, or Gentleman, was rare before 1 Hen. 5. tho' that of knight is very ancient. 2 Inſt. 595, 667. See title Precedency.

GENTLEWOMAN, generoſa.] Is a good addition for the eſtate and degree of a woman, as generoſus is for that of a man; and if a Gentlewoman be named ſpinſter in any original writ, appeal, &c. it hath been held that ſhe may abate and quaſh the ſame. 2 Inſt. 668. But it ſeems that Spinſter is in general, a good addition, for an unmarried woman, as ſingle woman is, for one who being unmarried hath had a baſtard.

GENTILITY, gentilitas.] Is loſt by attainder of treaſon, or felony, by which perſons become baſe and ignoble, &c.

GENU. A generation.—Succeſſit Ethelbaldo Offa quinta Genu. Malmſb. lib. 1. c. 4.

GENUS, Lat.] The general ſtock, extraction, &c. as the word office in law is the genus, or general; but the Sheriff, &c. is the ſpecies of it, or particular. 2 Lill. Abr. 528.

Genus, among metaphyſicians and logicians, denotes a number of beings, which agree in certain general properties, common to them all; ſo that a genus is, in fact, only an abſtract idea, expreſſed by ſome general name or term; or rather a general name or term, to ſignify what is called an abſtract idea.

GIFT, donum, donatio.] A conveyance, which paſſeth either lands or goods. A Gift is of a larger extent than a Grant, being applied to things moveable and immoveable; yet as to things immoveable, when ſtrictly taken, it is applicable only to lands and tenements given in tail; but gifts and grants are ſaid to be alike in nature and often confounded. Wood's Inſt. 260.

The conveyance of lands by Gift is properly applied to the creation of an eſtate-tail, as Feoffment is to that of an eſtate in fee, and Leaſe to that of an eſtate for life or years. It differs in nothing from a feoffment but in the nature of the eſtate paſſing by it: for the operative words of conveyance in this caſe are Do, or Dedi—I give, or Have given; and Gifts in tail are equally imperfect without livery of ſeiſin as feoffments in fee-ſimple. Lit. § 59. And this is the only diſtinction that Littleton ſeems to take when he ſays, "it is to be underſtood that there is feoffor and feoffee; donor and donee; leſſor and leſſee." Litt. § 57; viz. feoffor is applied to a feoffment in fee-ſimple; donor to a Gift in tail, and leſſor to a leaſe for life or years or at will. In common acceptation Gifts are frequently confounded with Grants. See title Grant. 2 Comm. 316. c. 20.

Gifts or Grants for the transferring of perſonal property are thus to be diſtinguiſhed from each other: that Gifts are always gratuitous; Grants are upon ſome conſideration or equivalent: and they may be divided with regard to their ſubject matter into Gifts or grants of chattels real, and Gifts or grants of chattels perſonal. Under the former head may be included all leaſes for years of land, aſſignments and ſurrenders of theſe leaſes; and all the other methods of conveying an eſtate leſs than freehold. See this Dict. titles Deed; Conveyance; Eſtate. Theſe however very ſeldom carry the outward appearance of a Gift, however freely beſtowed: being uſually expreſſed to be made in conſideration of blood, or natural affection; or of 5*s.* or 10*s.* nominally paid to the Grantor: and in caſe of leaſes, always reſerving a rent, though it be but a pepper corn; any of which conſiderations will in the eye of the law convert the gift, if executed, into a grant: if not executed, into a contract. 2 Comm. 440. c. 30.

Grants or Gifts of chattels-perſonal are the act of transferring the right and the poſſeſſion of them, whereby one man renounces, and another immediately acquires, all title and intereſt therein: which may be done either in writing or by word of mouth, atteſted by ſufficient evidence, of which the delivery of poſſeſſion is the ſtrongeſt and moſt eſſential. But this conveyance, when merely voluntary, is ſomewhat ſuſpicious: and is uſually conſtrued to be fraudulent, if creditors or others become ſufferers thereby; and particularly, by Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 4, all deeds of gift of goods, made in truſt to the uſe of the donor ſhall be void, becauſe otherwiſe perſons might be tempted to commit treaſon or felony without danger of forfeiture: and the creditors of the donor might alſo be defrauded. And by Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5, every grant or gift of chattels as well as lands with an intent to defraud creditors or others, ſhall be void as againſt ſuch perſons to whom ſuch fraud would be prejudicial, but as againſt the grantor or giver himſelf ſhall ſtand good and effectual: and all perſons, partakers in, or privy to ſuch fraudulent grants, ſhall forfeit the whole value of the goods, one moiety to the King, and the other to the party grieved; and alſo on conviction ſuffer half a year's impriſonment. See 3 Rep. 82: and this Dict. title Fraud.

A true and proper Gift or Grant is always accompanied with delivery of poſſeſſion, and takes effect immediately: as if A. gives to B. 100 l. or a flock of ſheep, and puts him in poſſeſſion of them directly, it is then a gift executed in the donee; and it is not in the donor's power to retract it, though he did it without any conſideration or recompence; Jenk. 109; unleſs it be prejudicial to creditors, or the donor were under any legal incapacity, as infancy, coverture, dureſs, or the like: or if he were drawn in, circumvented, or impoſed upon, by falſe pretences, ebriety, or ſurpriſe. But if the Gift does not take effect by delivery of immediate poſſeſſion, it is then not properly a Gift but a contract; and this a man cannot be compelled to perform, but upon good and ſufficient conſideration. 2 Comm. 441. c. 30. See this Dict. title Aſſumpſit: Conſideration: Contract.

A Gift may be by deed, in word, or in law: all goods and chattels perſonal may be given without deed, except in ſome ſpecial caſes; and a free Gift is good without a conſideration. Perk. 57.

Whenever any Gift ſhall be made, in ſatisfaction of a debt, it is proper to make it in a public manner before neighbours, that the goods and chattels be appraiſed to the full value, and the Gift expreſsly made in ſatisfaction of the debt; and that on the Gift, the donee take poſſeſſion of them, &c. Hob. 230. See title Fraud.

If a man intending to give a jewel to another, ſay to him, Here I give you my ring with the ruby in it, &c. and with his own hand delivers it to the party, this will be a good gift; notwithſtanding the ring bear any other jewel, being delivered by the party himſelf, to the perſon to whom given. And if a perſon give a horſe to another, being preſent, and bid him take the horſe, though he call the man by a wrong name, it will be a good Gift; but it would be otherwiſe if the horſe were delivered for the uſe of another perſon, being abſent: there a miſtake of the name would alter the caſe. Bac. Max. 87. A Gift muſt be certain; therefore to give or grant another his horſes or cows, that may be ſpared, will be void; though if one give to A. B. his horſe, or his cow, he may take which he will. Bro. Done 90.

As to Gifts in law, when a man is married to a woman, all her goods and chattels by gift in law become the huſband's; but then he is liable for her debts: ſo if a man is made executor, the law gives him all the goods and chattels of the teſtator, ſubject to his debts. 1 Inſt. 351. See titles Baron and Feme: Executor.

If a perſon make a ſuit of cloaths for another, and put it upon him to uſe and wear, this will be a gift or grant in law of the apparel made. Co. Lit. 351. This muſt mean if there was not any employment, and if the taylor, therefore, meant to give the cloaths.

A man by deed did give and grant, bargain and ſell, alien, enfeoff and confirm to his daughter certain lands: but no conſideration of money was mentioned, nor was the deed inrolled; there was likewiſe no conſideration of natural affection expreſſed, (other than what was implied implied in naming the grantee his daughter,) and there was no livery indorſed, or any found to have been made; nor was the daughter in poſſeſſion at the time of the deed made: and in B. R. it was adjudged by the court that the deed was good, and carried the eſtate to the daughter by way of covenant to ſtand ſeiſed, &c. 1 Mod. 157.

The words give and grant, in deeds of Gift, &c. of things which lie in grant, will amount unto a grant, a feoffment, a Gift, releaſe, confirmation or ſurrender, at the election of the party, and may be pleaded as a Gift, or grant, releaſe, &c. at his election. Co. Lit. 301. And words ſhall be marſhalled ſo in Gifts and grants, that where they cannot take effect according to the letter, the law will make ſuch conſtruction as that the Gift by poſſibility may take effect: benignè ſunt interpretationes chartarum propter ſimplicitatem laicorum. Co. Lit. 183. If a perſon gives or grants land, and does not ſay in what pariſh or county it lies; yet if there be any other thing to deſcribe it, as lately belonging to ſuch a perſon, &c. or other circumſtantial matter, it may be averred where the land lieth, and ſo the Gift be good. Bro. Grant 53: 9 Rep. 47. All corporeal and immoveable things that lie in livery, ſuch as manors, meſſuages, cottages, lands, woods, and the like, may be given and granted in fee, for life, or years at firſt; and be aſſignable over after, from man to man in infinitum. 1 Rol. Abr. 44. And where a man gives and grants wood to another on his lands, or 20 s. for it to be received out of the ſame lands, &c. here the wood paſſes by the Gift preſently, with power to chooſe to have the money. 1 Rol. Abr. 47. A deed of Gift of lands or goods may be made upon condition; and on a Gift or ſale of goods, the delivery of 6 d. or a ſpoon, &c. is a good ſeiſin of the whole. Wood's Inſt. 234. GILDA MERCATORIA, A mercantile meeting or aſſembly. If the King grants to a ſet of men to have gildam mercatoriam, this is alone ſufficient to incorporate and eſtabliſh them for ever. 10 Rep. 30: 1 Ro. Ab. 513. See titles Corporation; Guild.

GILDING METALS. By certain ancient ſtatutes, now obſolete, the gilding any metal but ſilver, and church ornaments; or ſilvering any thing except the apparel of peers, &c. and metal for knights' ſpurs, is liable to forfeiture of ten times the value, and a year's impriſonment. None ſhall gild rings or other things made of copper or latten, on pain to forfeit 5 l. to the King, and damages to the party deceived. For gilding ſilver wares, no perſon may take above 4 s. 8 d. for a pound of troy weight, under penalties. Stats. 5 H. 4. c. 13: 2 H. 5. c. 4: 8 H. 5. c. 3. GLAVEA, An hand dart. Blount.

GLEANING, LEASING OR LESING, From Fr. Glaner, quaſi graner; colligere grana.—Teuton. Abrleſen, ex ahr, ſpica, & leſen, colligere.—Minſhew in v. Glean.] It hath been ſaid, that by the Common-law and cuſtom of England, the poor are allowed to enter and glean upon another's ground, after the harveſt, without being guilty of treſpaſs; which humane proviſion ſeems borrowed from the Moſaical law. 3 Comm. 212, 213: Trials per pais c. 15. p. 438, 534.

But it is now poſitively ſettled by a ſolemn judgment of the Court of Common Pleas that a right to glean in the harveſt-field cannot be claimed by any perſon at Common-law. Neither have the poor of a pariſh, legally ſettled, ſuch right. Gould J. diſſented from this opinion, quoting the paſſages in the Moſaical law, (Levit. c. 19. vv. 9, 10; c. 23. v. 22. and See Deut. c. 24. v. 19,) and 4 Burr. 1927, together with the recognition of the cuſtom or privilege in a private act of parliament for an incloſure in Baſingſtoke pariſh. The other Judges however were of opinion that it would be dangerous and impolitic to admit Gleaning to be a right, and in fact would be prejudicial to the poor themſelves, now provided for under various poſitive ſtatutes. They alſo remarked that the cuſtom of Gleaning or Leaſing was various in various places, and was in many places reſtricted to particular corn, and could not therefore be ſet up as an univerſal Common-law right; that it would be opening a tempting door, to fraud and idleneſs, and had never been ſpecifically recognized by any judicial determination. 1 H. Black. Rep. 51—63.

GLEBE, gleba.] Church-land; moſt commonly taken for the land belonging to a pariſh church, beſides the tithes. If any parſon, vicar, &c. hath cauſed any of his Glebe-land to be manured and ſown at his own coſts, with any corn or grain, the incumbents may deviſe all the profits and corn growing upon the ſaid Glebe by will, under Stat. 28 Hen. 8. c. 11. And if a parſon ſows his Glebe and dies, the executors ſhall have the corn ſown by the teſtator. But if the Glebe be in the hands of a tenant, and the parſon dies after ſeverance of the corn, and before his rent due; it is ſaid, neither the parſon's executors, nor the ſucceſſor, can claim the rent, but the tenant may retain it, and alſo the crop, unleſs there be a ſpecial covenant for the payment to the parſon's executors proportionably, &c. Wood's Inſt. 163. Sed qu; If this caſe would not come within the equity of Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. ſ. 15, which gives right of action to the repreſentative of tenant for life, for any portion of rent in arrear at the time of his death?

Exchange of Glebe land, will not bind the ſucceſſor. Noy 5.

Prohibition was moved for to a parſon for digging new coal-mines in his Glebe, and alſo for felling trees; for it is waſte, and prohibited by the ſtatute de non proſternend' arbores, &c. The court held it lay not for the mines; for then no mines in Glebe could ever be opened. Lev. 107.

By the ſaid Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 11, Every ſucceſſor, on a month's warning, after induction, ſhall have the manſion-houſe and the Glebe belonging thereto, not ſown at the time of the predeceſſor's death. He that is inſtituted may enter into the Glebe-land before induction, and has right to have it againſt any ſtranger; per Coke Ch. J. Roll. R. 192.

There is a writ grounded on the Stat. articuli cleri, cap. 6; where a parſon is diſtrained in his Glebe-lands by ſheriffs, or other officers; againſt whom attachment ſhall iſſue. New Nat. Br. 386, 387. See titles Parſon; Vicar; Church; Tithes, &c.

GLOMERELLS, Commiſſaries appointed to determine differences between ſcholars of a School or Univerſity, and the townſmen of the place: in the edict of the biſhop of Ely, anno 1276, there is mention of the Maſter of the Glomerells.

GLOVE-SILVER. Money cuſtomarily given to ſervants to buy them gloves, as an encouragement for their labours.—Glove money has been alſo applied to extraordinary rewards given to officers of courts, &c. It is now given on the circuits, by the barriſters, to the judges' crier.

GLOVES. The Stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 19, reſtrains the importation and ſale of foreign Gloves and mitts: and one ſection of the Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c 55. alſo reſtrains the importation of foreign leather not completely made into Gloves, but cut into ſhapes, or tranks.—By this latter act a ſtamp duty was impoſed on Gloves ſold, which is now repealed.

GOD AND RELIGION, Offences againſt. Apoſtacy is an offence againſt God and religion. It was formerly the object only of the Eccleſiaſtical courts, which corrected the offender pro ſalute animæ. But now, by Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3 c. 32. If any perſon educated in, or having made profeſſion of, the Chriſtian religion, ſhall by writing, printing, teaching, or adviſed ſpeaking, deny the Chriſtian religion to be true, or the Holy Scriptures to be of divine authority, he ſhall upon the firſt offence be rendered incapable to hold any office or place of truſt; and for the ſecond, be rendered incapable of bringing any action, being guardian, executor, legatee, or purchaſer of lands, and ſhall ſuffer three years' impriſonment without bail. To give room however for repentance, if within four months after the firſt conviction the delinquent will in open court publickly renounce his error, he is diſcharged for that once, from all diſabilities.

Hereſy is another offence, for which the offender is ſubject only to eccleſiaſtical cenſure, by Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 9. See 4 Comm. 42, 65. As to Reviling of the ordinances, Non-conformity, Blaſphemy, Swearing and Curſing, Witchcraft, Religious Impoſtors, Simony, Sabbath-breaking, Drunkenneſs and Lewdneſs; and this Dict. under thoſe ſeveral titles.

GOLDA, A mine, according to Blount. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. pag. 610.

GOLD AND SILVER LACE and Thread. Perſons that ſell orrice lace, mixed with other metal or materials than gold, ſilver, ſilk and vellum, ſhall forfeit 2*s.* 6*d.* for every ounce: and there ſhall be allowed at leaſt ſix ounces of gold and ſilver prepared and reduced into plate, to cover four ounces of ſilk, except large twiſt, frize, &c. And laying the ſame on greater proportions of the ſilk, or in any other manner than directed, incurs the like forfeiture of 2*s.* 6*d.* the ounce. Copper, and lace inferior to ſilver, is to be ſpun upon thread, yarn or incle, and not on ſilk; but this does not extend to Tiſſel apparel, uſed in theatres. No gold or ſilver lace, thread, fringe or wire, &c. may be imported, on pain of being forfeited and burnt, and 100*l.* penalty. Stat. 15 Geo 2. c. 20. See 28 Geo. 3. c. 7. The importation and making up of gold and ſilver lace, embroidery, brocade, &c. is prohibited, by Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 36. See further titles Wire-Drawers: Embroidery: Navigation-Acts.

GOLDSMITHS. Gold and ſilver manufactures are to be aſſayed by the warden of the Goldſmiths' Company in London, and marked; and gold is to be of a certain touch. Stat. 28 E. 1. c. 20. By Stat. 37 E. 3. c. 7, Goldſmiths were to have their own marks on plate, after the ſurveyors have made their aſſay; and falſe metal was to be ſeized and forfeited to the King. Work of ſilver made by Goldſmiths, &c. is to be as fine as Sterling, except the ſolder neceſſary; and marking other work, incurs a forfeiture of double value. Stat. 2 H. 6. c. 14.

Goldſmiths, ſhall not take above 1*s.* the ounce of gold beſide the faſhion, more than the buyer may be allowed for it at the King's exchange: and if the work of any Goldſmith be marked and allowed by the maſter and wardens of the myſtery, and afterwards found faulty; the wardens and and corporation ſhall forfeit the value of the thing ſo ſold or exchanged. Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 15.

Molten ſilver is not to be tranſported by Goldſmiths before it is marked at Goldſmiths' Hall, and a certificate made thereof on oath; and officers of the Cuſtoms may ſeize ſilver ſhipped otherwiſe. Stat. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 17. The cities of York, Exeter, Briſtol, Cheſter, Norwich, and town of Newcaſtle, are alſo appointed places for aſſaying and marking wrought plate of Goldſmiths, &c. Stats. 12 W. 3. c. 4: 1 Ann. c. 9.

A duty is granted on ſilver plate of 6 d. per ounce; and Goldſmiths are to make entries thereof with the weight, on pain of 100 l. &c. And Goldſmiths muſt work their plate according to the old ſtandard; which is to be touched, aſſayed and marked before expoſed to ſale. Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 11.

Gold plate made by Goldſmiths ſhall contain 22 carrats of fine gold: and ſilver plate 11 ounces and two pennyweight of ſilver, in every pound troy, or they forfeit 10 l. And no Goldſmith ſhall ſell any ſuch plate, until marked with the firſt letters of the maker's chriſtian and ſurname, the marks of the city of London being the leopard's head, lion paſſant, &c. and thoſe made uſe of by the aſſayers at York, Exeter, &c. All perſons making plate, are to enter their marks, names and places of abode in the aſſay-office; they are likewiſe to ſend with the plate required to be marked, a particular account thereof, in order to be entered, &c. or forfeit 5 l. The Aſſayers determine what ſolder is neceſſary about plate, and judge of the workmanſhip, and for good cauſe may refuſe to aſſay it; and if any parcel be diſcovered of a coarſer allay than the ſtandard, it may be broke and defaced; alſo the fees for aſſaying and marking are particularly limited, &c. Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 26. See further title Wire-drawers.

GOLDWIT, or GOLDWICH, Perhaps a golden mulct; in the records of the Tower, there is mention of conſuetudo vocata, Goldwith vel Goldwich.

GOLIARDUS, A jeſter or buffoon. Mat. Paris. 1229.

GOOD ABEARING, Bonus Geſtus.] Signifies an exact carriage or behaviour of a ſubject towards the King and the people; whereunto ſome perſons, upon their miſbehaviour are bound; and he that is bound to this, is ſaid to be more ſtrictly bound than to the peace; becauſe where the peace is not broken, the ſurety de bono geſtu may be forfeited by the number of a man's company, or by their weapons. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 2. c. 2: See Stat. 34 Ed. 3. c. 1.

GOOD BEHAVIOUR, Surety for the Good behaviour is ſurety for the peace, and differs very little from Good abearing. A Juſtice of peace may demand it ex officio, according to his diſcretion, when he ſees cauſe; or at the requeſt of any other under the King's protection: his warrant alſo is to be iſſued when he is commanded to do it by writ of ſupplicavit out of Chancery or *B. Sir Edward Coke derives this word from Gurges, a deep pit of water, and calls it a Gors, or Gulf; but this ſeems to be a miſtake, for in Domeſday it is called Gourt and Gort, the French word for a wear. *Co. GOTE, Sax. Geotan, i. e. Fundere.] A ditch, ſluice or gutter, mentioned in ſtat. 23 H. 8 c. 5.

GOVERNMENT.

By this word, in common ſpeech, is underſtood the Conſtitution of our country as exerciſed, according to the principles of Limited Monarchy, under the Legiſlature of King, Lords and Commons. For the principles of this Government and Conſtitution, and its peculiar excellencies in preference to all others, ſee this Dict. paſſim; and particularly under titles King; Parliament; Treaſon; Tenure; Habeas Corpus; Liberties; Jury; and other appoſite titles.

When Civil Society is once formed, Government at the ſame time reſults of courſe, as neceſſary to preſerve and to keep that ſociety in order. Unleſs ſome Superior be conſtituted, whoſe commands and deciſions all the members are bound to obey, they would ſtill remain as in a ſtate of nature without any judge upon earth to define their rights and redreſs their wrongs. But as all the members which compoſe this ſociety were naturally equal, it may be aſked, in whoſe hands are the reins of Government to be entruſted? To this the general anſwer is eaſy; but the application of it to particular caſes has occaſioned one half of thoſe miſchiefs, which are apt to proceed from miſguided political zeal. In general, all mankind will agree that Government ſhould be repoſed in ſuch perſons, in whom thoſe qualities are moſt likely to be found, the perfection of which is among the attributes of him who is emphatically ſtiled The Supreme Being; the three grand requiſites of wiſdom, of goodneſs and of power: wiſdom to diſcern the real intereſt of the community; goodneſs to endeavour always to purſue that real intereſt: and ſtrength or power, to carry this knowledge and intention into action. Theſe are the natural foundations of Sovereignty, and theſe are the requiſites that ought to be found in every well conſtituted frame of Government.

How the ſeveral forms of Government we now ſee in the world at firſt actually began, is matter of great uncertainty, and has occaſioned infinite diſputes. However they began, or by what right ſoever they ſubſiſt, there is and muſt be in all of them a Supreme, irreſiſtible, abſolute, uncontrolled authority, in which the jura ſummi imperii, or the rights of Sovereignty reſide. And this authority is placed in thoſe hands wherein, (according to the opinion of the founders of ſuch reſpective States, either expreſsly given or collected, from their tacit approbation,) the qualities requiſite for ſupremacy, wiſdom, goodneſs, and power, are the moſt likely to be found.

The political writers of antiquity will not allow more than three regular forms of government. The firſt when the Sovereign Power is lodged in an aggregate aſſembly conſiſting of all the free-members of a community, which is called a Democracy; the ſecond when it is lodged in a council, compoſed of ſelect members, and then it is ſtiled an Ariſtocracy; the laſt when it is entruſted in the hands of a ſingle perſon, and then it takes the name of a Monarchy. All other ſpecies of Government, they ſay are either corruptions of, or reducible to, theſe three.

By the Sovereign Power, is meant the power of making laws; for wherever that power reſides, all others muſt conform to, and be directed by it, whatever appearance the outward form and adminiſtration of the Government may put on. For it is at any time at the option of the Legiſlature to alter that form and adminiſtration by a new edict or rule, and to put the execution of the laws into whatever hands it pleaſes; by conſtituting one or a few, or many executive magiſtrates: and all the other powers of the State muſt obey the legiſlative power in the diſcharge of their ſeveral functions, or elſe the Conſtitution is at an end.

In a Democracy, where the right of making laws reſides in the People at large, public virtue, or goodneſs of intention is more likely to be found, than either of the other qualities of Government. Popular aſſemblies are frequently fooliſh in their contrivance, and weak in their execution; but generally mean to do the thing that is right and juſt, and have always a degree of patriotiſm or public ſpirit. In Ariſtocracies there is more wiſdom to be found, than in the other frames of Government; being compoſed, or intended to be compoſed, of the moſt experienced citizens. But there is leſs honeſty than in a Republic, and leſs ſtrength than in a Monarchy. A Monarchy is indeed the moſt powerful of any; for by the entire conjunction of the legiſlative and executive powers all the ſinews of Government are knit together, and united in the hand of the Prince; but then [in abſolute Monarchies] there is imminent danger of his employing that ſtrength to improvident or oppreſſive purpoſes.

Thus theſe three ſpecies of Government have, all of them, their ſeveral perfections and imperfections. Democracies are uſually the beſt calculated to direct the end of a law, Ariſtocracies to invent the means by which that end ſhall be obtained; and Monarchies to carry thoſe means into execution. The antients, had in general no idea of any other permanent form of Government but theſe three: for though Cicero declares himſelf of opinion, "eſſe optimè conſtitutam rempublicam, quæ ex tribus generibus illis, regali, optimo, et populari, ſit modicè confuſa," yet Tacitus treats this notion of a mixed Government, formed out of them all, and partaking of the advantages of each, as a viſionary whim, and one that, if effected, could never be laſting or ſecure.

But, happily for us of this Iſland, THE BRITISH CONSTITUTION has long remained, and it is to be hoped will long continue, a ſtanding exception to the truth of this obſervation. For, as with us, the Executive Power of the laws is lodged in a ſingle perſon, they have all the advantages of ſtrength and diſpatch, that are to be found in the moſt abſolute Monarchy: and as the Legiſlature of this kingdom is intruſted to three diſtinct powers, entirely independent of each other; firſt the King; ſecondly the Lords ſpiritual and temporal, which is an Ariſtocratical aſſembly of perſons ſelected for their piety, their birth, their wiſdom, their valour, or their property; and thirdly, the Houſe of Commons, freely choſen by the People from among themſelves, which makes it a kind of Democracy; as this aggregate body, actuated by different ſprings, and attentive to different intereſts, compoſes the Britiſh Parliament, and has the ſupreme diſpoſal of every thing; there can be no inconvenience attempted by either of the three branches, but which will be withſtood by one of the other two; each branch being armed with a negative power, ſufficient to repel any innovation which it ſhall think inexpedient or dangerous.

Here then is lodged the Sovereignty of the Britiſh Conſtitution; and lodged as beneficially as is poſſible for Society. For in no other ſhape could we be ſo certain of finding the three great qualities of Government ſo well and ſo happily united. If the ſupreme power were lodged in any of the three branches ſeparately, we muſt be expoſed to the inconveniences, of either Abſolute Monarchy, Ariſtocracy, or Democracy, and ſo want two of the three principal ingredients of good policy, either virtue wiſdom, or power. If it were lodged in any two of the branches; for inſtance in the King and houſe of Lords, our laws might be providentially made, and well executed, but they might not have always the good of the people in view: If lodged in the King and Commons, we ſhould want that circumſpection and mediatory caution which the wiſdom of the Peers is to afford: if the ſupreme rights of Legiſlature were lodged in the two houſes only, and the King had no negative upon their proceeding, they might be tempted to incroach upon the royal prerogative, or perhaps to aboliſh the kingly office, and thereby weaken (if not totally deſtroy) the ſtrength of the Executive Power. But the conſtitutional Government of this Iſland is ſo admirably tempered and compounded, that nothing can endanger or hurt it, but deſtroying the equilibrium of power between one branch of the Legiſlature and the reſt. For if ever it ſhould happen that the independence of any one of the three ſhould be loſt, or that it ſhould become ſubſervient to the views of either of the other two, there would ſoon be an end of our Conſtitution. 1 Comm. 48,—52. Introd.

The effect of ſo dire a change, or the means of judging whether in any ſuppoſable event, it may or may not have taken place, is a theme that may ſerve to agitate politicians, but which it would not be proper to diſcuſs in this place. Revolutions in Government are ſubject to no fixed previous laws; and the dreadful experience of France at this moment, (October 1794) will teach every true lover of the Britiſh Conſtitution to be cautious of violating its principles, either through too fond an attachment to the perſon or privileges of the Monarch, or too ardent and dangerous a zeal for the Liberties of the People. Theſe, in our Conſtitution are not oppoſed to, but dependent on, each other, and an exaggeration of either would inevitably lead to the ruin of both.

Contempts and miſpriſions againſt the King's perſon and Government, may be by ſpeaking or writing againſt them; curſing or wiſhing him ill, giving out ſcandalous ſtories concerning him, or doing any thing that may tend to leſſen him in the eſteem of his ſubjects, may weaken his government, or may raiſe jealouſies between him and his people. It has alſo been held an offence of this ſpecies to drink to the pious memory of a traitor; or for a clergyman to abſolve perſons at the gallows, who there perſiſt in the treaſons for which they die; theſe being acts which impliedly encourage rebellion. And for this ſpecies of contempt, a man may not only be fined and impriſoned, but ſuffer the pillory, or other infamous corporal puniſhment. 1 Hawk. P. C.: 4 Comm. 13. c. 9.

In

In cases of conspiracy or meditated treason against, the King and Government, it is not unusual to vest a power in the King of apprehending and detaining suspected persons without bail or mainprise; which as to them operates as a suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act. For this purpose the Stats. 1 W. & M. c. 2: 6 Anne c. 15: 1 Geo. 1. c. 8, 39, and divers others have been from time to time passed: The last of this kind was Stat. 34 Geo. 3. c.—— when, after the example of France, several conspiracies were carrying on to establish a Democracy in these kingdoms to the overthrow of that Constitution; which is the deserved subject of panegyrick by the learned Commentator, from whom the preceding extracts on this subject are submitted to the attention of the Student.

GOVERNORS of the Chest at Chatham, Officers appointed to take care of, and relieve the poor and maimed seamen belonging to the Royal Navy.

GRACE. Acts of parliament for a general and free pardon, are called Acts of Grace.

GRADUATES, Graduati.] Are scholars who have taken degrees in an university.

GRAFFER, Fr. Greffier, i. e. Scriba.] A notary or scrivener, used in the ancient Stat. 5 H. 8. c. 1.

GRAFFIO, GRAVIO, A landgrave, or earl—Nec princeps, nec Graffio, hanc lenitatem mutare audeat. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 100.

GRAFFIUM, A writing-book, register, or cartulary of deeds and evidences. Annal Eccl. Menevensis apud. Angl. Sacr. par. 1. p. 653.

GRAIL, Gradale, or Graduale.] A gradual or book, containing some of the offices of the Romish church.—Gradale, sic dictum, a gradalibus in tali libro contentis. Lyndewood. Provincial. Ang. lib. 3. It is sometimes taken for a mass-book, or part of it, instituted by Pope Celestine, Anno. 430.

GRAIN, The twenty-fourth part of a penny-weight. Merch. Dict. Also grain signifies any corn sown on ground; and there is what is so called in the top of the ear, less than corn. Lit. Aleyn's Rep. 80.

GRAND ASSISE, A writ in a real action to determine the right of property in lands. See titles Jury; Magna Assisa.

GRAND CAPE, A writ on plea of land, where the tenant makes default in appearance at the day given, for the King to take the land into his hands, &c. Reg. Jud. 1. See Cape Magnum.

GRAND DAYS, Those days in the Terms which are solemnly kept in the Inns of Court and Chancery, i. e. Candlemas Day in Hilary term, Ascension Day in Easter term, St. John the Baptist's Day in Trinity term, and All Saints Day in Michaelmas term; which days are Dies non Juridici, or no days in court.

GRAND DISTRESS, is a writ so called, not for the quantity of it, for it is very short, but for its quality; for the extent thereof is very great, being to all the goods and chattels of the party distrained within the county: it lies in two cases, either when the tenant or defendant is attached, and appears not, but makes default; or where the tenant hath once appeared, and after makes default, then this writ is had by the Common law in lieu of a Petit Cape. Stats. West. 1. cap. 44: 52 H. 3. c. 9.

GRAND JURY, The jury that find bills of indictment before Justices of peace, and gaol-delivery or of Oyer & Terminer, &c. They ought only to hear witnesses for the King; and to find a bill on probable evidence; because it is but an accusation, and the party is to be put upon his trial afterwards. But if the bill be against A. for murder, and the Grand Jury, on the evidence before them, be satisfied it was se defendendo, &c. and so return it specially; the court may remand them to consider better thereof, or hear the evidence at the bar, and accordingly direct the Grand Jury. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 157, 158. Where a Grand Jury refuses to present things, within their charge, &c. a new Grand inquest may be impanelled, to inquire of the concealment of the former; on whose defaults presented, they shall be amerced. 2 Hale's P. C. 155. A Grand Juror disclosing to any one indicted, the evidence that appeared against him, is guilty of a high misprision, and liable to be fined and imprisoned. 4 Comm. 126. See at large titles Indictment; Jury.

GRAND SERJEANTY, An ancient tenure, by military service. See titles Chivalry; Tenure; Serjeanty.

GRANGE, Grangia.] A house or farm where corn is laid up in barns, granaries, &c. and provided with stables for horses, stalls for oxen, and other things necessary for husbandry. This definition is agreeable to Spelman. According to Mr. Warton, Grange is strictly and properly the farm of a monastery, where the religious reposited their corn. Grangia Lat. from Granum. But in Lincolnshire, and other Northern counties, they call every lone house, or farm, which stands solitary, a Grange. Steveens's Shakespear.

Dr. Johnson in his dictionary derives the word from Grange, French, and defines it, a farm, generally: a farm with a house, at a distance from neighbours.

GRANGEARIUS, Is the person who has the care of such a place, for corn and husbandry: and there was anciently a granger, or grange-keeper belonging to religious houses, who was to look after their granges, or farms in their own hands. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 8: Cartular. St. Edmund, MS. 323.

GRANT.

DONATIO; CONCESSIO In the Common-law, a conveyance in writing of incorporeal things, not lying in livery and which cannot pass by word only; as of reversions, advowsons in gross, tithes, rents, services, common in gross, &c. It has also been taken generally, for every gift and Grant of any thing whatsoever. Co. Lit. 172: 3 Rep. 63. Grants are made by such persons as cannot give but by deed: he that granteth is termed the Grantor, he to whom the Grant is made is the Grantee. West. Symb. 234.

Grant is the regular method, by the Common-law, of transferring the property of incorporeal hereditaments or such things whereof no livery can be had. Co. Litt. 9. For which reason all corporeal hereditaments as lands and houses are said to lie in livery, and the others as advowsons, commons, rents, reversions, &c. to lie in Grant. Ib. 172. And the reason is given by Bracton, "Traditio, [livery] nihil aliud est quàm rei corporalis, de personâ in personam, de manu in manum translatio, aut in possessionem inductio: sed res incorporales quæ sunt ipsum jus rei vel corpori inhærens, traditionem non patiuntur." Bract. l. 2, c. 18. Incorporeal hereditaments therefore pass merely by delivery of the deed. And in seignories or reversions of lands, such Grant, together with the attornment of the tenant, tenant, (while attornments were requiſite) were held to be of equal notoriety with, and therefore equivalent to, a feoffment and livery of lands in immediate poſſeſſion. It therefore differs but little from a feoffment, except in its ſubject-matter, for the operative words therein commonly uſed are Dedi et conceſſi; Have given and granted; 2 Comm. 316. c. 20. See further this Dict. titles Conveyance; Deed; Gift.

I. What Things and Intereſts may be granted; by what Deſcription; and how Grants ſhall be conſtrued.

II. Who may make Grants; and who may take by Grant.

I. A Man cannot grant that which he hath not, or more than he hath: though he may covenant to purchaſe an eſtate, and levy a fine to uſes, which will be good. A perſon may grant a reverſion, as well as a poſſeſſion; but the law will not allow Grants of titles only, or imperfect intereſts, or of ſuch intereſts as are merely future. Bac. Max. 58. A bare poſſibility of an intereſt, which is uncertain; a right of entry, or thing in action, cauſe of ſuit, &c. may not be granted over to a ſtranger. Perk. Sect. 65: 2 Inſt. 214: 4 Rep. 66.

It was formerly held, that by a Grant of all a man's goods and chattels, bonds would paſs; now it is held the contrary, that the words Goods and Chattels do not extend to bonds, deeds or ſpecialties, being things in action, unleſs in ſpecial caſes. 8 Rep. 33: Co. Lit. 152: The ſtat. 2 Geo. 2. cap. 25, was found neceſſary to make the ſtealing ſuch bonds, &c. felony, as in caſe of other goods and chattels.

In Grants there muſt be a foundation of intereſt, or they will not be binding: If a perſon grants a rent-charge out of lands, when he hath nothing in the land, the grant will be void. Perk. 15. Though it is ſaid, if a man grant an annual rent out of land, wherein he hath no kind of intereſt, yet it may be good to charge the perſon of the grantor. Owen Rep. 3. A man may grant an annuity for him, and his heirs, to commence after his death, and it ſhall charge the heir. Bac. Max. 58. And after the Grant of an annuity, &c. is determined, debt lies for the arrears; and the perſon of the tertenant will be charged. 7 Rep. 39. If a common perſon grants a rent, or other thing that lies in Grant, without limitation of any eſtate, by the delivery of the deed, a freehold paſſes: but if the King make ſuch a Grant of a rent, &c. it is void for uncertainty. Danv. Rep. 45 a.

A Grant to a man, with a blank for his chriſtian name is void, except to an officer known by his office, when it muſt be averred: and it is the ſame where the grantee's chriſtian name is miſtaken. Cro. Eliz. 328.

Grants may be void by incertainty, impoſſibility, being againſt law, on a wrong title, to defraud creditors, &c. Co. Lit. 183. Such things as lie in Grant, may not be granted or held without deed: and if any thing not grantable, is granted with other things, the Grant will be void for all. 2 Shep. Abr. 269, 271, 273. Truſts and confidences are perſonal things, and may not be granted over to others in moſt caſes; as offices of truſt, and the like: but all kinds of chattels real and perſonal, are grantable, Perk. § 90: Plowd. 141, 379.

If one grant any thing that lies in livery, or Grant, and that is in eſſe at the time of the Grant, in fee, or for life, and the eſtate is to begin at a day to come; this for the moſt part will be void: but a leaſe or Grant for years, may be good in futuro; and may be to one for term of years, or years determinable on lives, and after to another, to begin at the end of that eſtate. 5 Rep. 1: Dyer 58. Where a man hath a reverſion after an eſtate for life of land, and he grants a rent out of it; the Grant is good, and will faſten upon the land after the eſtate of the tenant for life is ended: and if a perſon grant rents, &c. and a ſtranger take them at that time; in this caſe the Grant will be good, for one may not be out of poſſeſſion of theſe things but at his pleaſure. Perk. 92, 98. If a man grants that to one, that he hath granted before to another, for the like term, &c. the ſecond Grant will be void. Dyer 23: Perk. § 102. Grants are uſually made by theſe words, viz. Have Given, Granted and Confirmed, &c. And words in Grants ſhall be conſtrued according to a reaſonable ſenſe, and not be ſtrained to what is unlikely. Hob. 304. Alſo it hath been adjudged, that Grants ſhall be expounded according to the ſubſtance of the deed, not the ſtrict grammatical ſenſe; and agreeable to the intention of the parties. Co. Lit. 146, 313.

To every good Grant the following things are requiſite: 1. That there be a perſon able to grant. 2. A perſon capable of the thing granted. 3. That there be a thing grantable. 4. That it be granted in ſuch manner as the law requires. 5. That there be an agreement to, and acceptance of, the thing granted, by him to whom made. And 6. There ought to be an attornment where needful. Co. Lit. 73. But Grants and conveyances are good without attornment of tenants, notice being given them of the Grants, by ſtat. 4 Ann. c. 16. § 9. Grants are taken moſt ſtrongly againſt the grantor in favour of the grantee: the grantee himſelf is to take by the Grant immediately, and not a ſtranger, or any in futuro; and if a Grant be made to a man and his heirs, he may aſſign at his pleaſure, though the word Aſſigns be not expreſſed. Lit. 1: Saund. 322. The uſe of any thing being granted, all is granted neceſſary to enjoy ſuch uſe: and in the Grant of a thing, what is requiſite for the obtaining thereof is included. Co. Lit. 56. So that if timber trees are granted, the grantee may come upon the grantor's ground to cut and carry them away. 2 Inſt. 309: Plowd. 15.

Where the principal thing is granted, the incident ſhall paſs; but the principal will not paſs by the Grant of the incident. Co. Lit. 152. A lord of a manor cannot grant the ſame, and reſerve the Court Baron, it being inſeparably incident. Co. Lit. 313. A Grant of a manor, without the word cum pertinentiis, will paſs all things belonging to the manor: the Grant of a farm will alſo paſs all lands belonging to it; but a Grant of a meſſuage paſſes only the houſe, out-houſes and gardens. Owen's Rep. 51. Tot' il' maner' de A. may be taken in the ſingular, or plural number; and daſhes and abbreviations in Grants ſhall be ſo taken that the Grant be not void. 9 Rep. 48. When lands are granted by deed, the houſes which ſtand thereon will paſs; houſes and mills paſs by the Grant of all lands, becauſe that is the moſt durable thing on which they are built. 4 Rep. 86: 2 And. 123. By Grant of all the lands, the woods will paſs: and if a man grant all his trees in a certain place, this paſſeth the ſoil; though an exception of wood extends to the trees only, not the ſoil. 1 Rol. Rep. 33. Dyer 19: 5 Rep. 11.

Trees

Trees in boxes will not paſs by the grant of the land, &c. as they are ſeparate from the freehold. Mod. Caſes, 170. A man grants all his wood that ſhall grow in time to come; it is a void grant, not being in eſſe. 3 Leon. 37. A grant de veſturâ terræ paſſeth not the freehold; therefore the grantee hath no authority to dig in it by virtue of ſuch a grant. Ow. 37. By the grant of lands in the poſſeſſion of another, it is good if ſuch other be in poſſeſſion, let the poſſeſſion be by right, or wrong. 1 Rol. Rep. 23. If a grant is general, and the lands granted reſtrained to a certain vill, the grantee ſhall have no lands out of the vill. 2 Rep. 33. It has been held, that where a grant is made of lands and tenements in D. copyhold lands will not paſs; for they cannot paſs otherwiſe than by ſurrender. Owen, 37.

Where lands are certainly deſcribed in a Grant, with a recital as granted to A. B. &c. though they were not thus granted, it has been adjudged, that the grant was good. 10 Rep. 110. If a firſt deſcription of lands in a grant is falſe, notwithſtanding the ſecond be true, nothing will paſs by it; though if the firſt be true, and the ſecond falſe, the grant may be good. 3 Rep. 10. The word grant, where it is placed among other words of demiſe, &c. ſhall not enure to paſs a property in the thing demiſed; but the grantee ſhall have it by way of demiſe. Dyer, 56.

Of grants ſome charge the grantor with ſomething he was not charged with before; others diſcharge the grantee of ſomething wherewith he was before charged, or chargeable. If a man grant to me a rent-charge; and after I grant to him, that he ſhall not be ſued for this rent; this is good to bar me of bringing an action, though I may ſtill diſtrain for the rent: And if one grants to his leſſee for life or years, that he ſhall not be impeached for waſte; it will be a good diſcharge, and may be pleaded. 7 H. 6. 43: Bro. Grant, 175: Keilw. 88. See 1 Rep. 147: 10 Rep. 48. and this Dict. tit. Condition.

II. Any Natural Perſon, or Corporate Body, (not prohibited by law, as infants, feme coverts, monks, &c.) may make a grant of lands, and be a grantor; and an infant, or woman covert, may be a grantee. Though the infant at his full age may diſagree to the grant, and the huſband diſagree to the grant to his wife. Perk. 3, 4, 43. See titles Infant: Baron and Feme, &c.

But herein the law diſtinguiſhes between ſuch grants as are void, and only voidable; the firſt of which are all ſuch gifts, grants or deeds, made by an infant, which do not take effect by delivery of his hand; as if an infant give a horſe, and no delivery of the horſe with his hand, and the donee take the horſe by force of the gift, the infant ſhall have an action of treſpaſs, for the grant was merely void. But if an infant enters into an obligation, makes a feoffment, levies a fine, or ſuffers a recovery, theſe are not void, only voidable. Perk. §§ 12, 13, 19. See title Infant.

A grant by a feme covert is void, for no act of her's can transfer that intereſt which the inter-marriage has veſted in the huſband. See 2 New Abr. 648: Perk. §6. See title Baron and Feme.

Grants made by perſons non ſanæ memoriæ, are good againſt themſelves; but they are voidable by their heirs, &c. A man that is born dumb, or dumb and deaf, if he have underſtanding, by making ſigns, he may grant his land to another; not one who is born deaf, dumb, and blind alſo. Co. Lit. 2. See title Ideot. A perſon attainted of treaſon, or felony, may make a deed of gift, or grant, and it ſhall be good againſt all perſons, except the King, and the lord of whom the lands are held; and for relief in priſon, they may be good againſt them likewiſe. Co. Lit. 2: Perk. § 26, 31.

The grants of perſons under dureſs are void; that is, if they were made under an apprehenſion of ſome bodily hurt, or if the grantor were impriſoned without cauſe, and the grantee refuſed to releaſe or diſcharge him, unleſs he made ſuch grant. 2 Inſt. 483. But menacing to burn houſes, or ſpoil or carry away the party's goods, are not ſufficient to avoid the grant; for if he ſhould ſuffer what he is threatened, he may ſue and recover damages in proportion to the injury done him. 4 Inſt. 485: Perk. § 18. See title Dureſs.

If there be father and ſon of the ſame name, and the father grants an annuity by his name, without any addition, it ſhall be intended the grant of the father; and if the ſon being of the ſame name with his father grant an annuity without any addition; yet the grant is good, for he cannot deny his deed. Perk. § 37.

There are but few (if any) perſons excluded from being grantees, therefore a man attainted of felony, murder, or treaſon, may be a grantee; ſo the King's villein, an alien, one outlawed in a perſonal action, or a baſtard, may be grantees. Perk. § 48. A baſtard who is known to be the ſon of ſuch a one, may purchaſe, or be a grantee by ſuch reputed name; for all ſurnames were originally acquired by reputation. Co. Lit. 3. 2 Rol. Abr. 43, 4.

A feme covert may be a grantee, therefore if a rent-charge be granted to a feme covert, and the deed is delivered to her without the privity of her huſband, and the huſband dies before any diſagreement made by him, and before any day of payment, the grant is good, and ſhall not be avoided, by ſaying, that the huſband did not agree, &c. but the diſagreement of the huſband ought to be ſhewn. Perk. § 43. See title Baron and Feme.

Although aggregate Corporations are inviſible, and exiſt only in ſuppoſition of law, yet they are capable of taking by grant, for the benefit of the members of the corporation. Co. Lit. 9: 1 Saund. 344.

GRANTS OF THE KING.—The King's grants are matters of public record: for the King's excellency is ſo high in the law, that no freehold may be given to, nor derived from him, but by matter of record. Doct. and Stud. b. 1. d. 8.—To this end a variety of offices are erected, communicating in a regular ſubordination one with another, through which all the King's grants muſt paſs, and be tranſcribed and enrolled; that the ſame may be narrowly inſpected by his officers, who will inform him if any thing contained therein is improper, or unlawful to be granted. Theſe grants whether of lands, honors, liberties, franchiſes, or aught beſides are contained in charters or letters patent; that is open letters, literæ patentes; ſo called becauſe they are not ſealed up, but expoſed to open view, with the great ſeal pendant at the bottom: and are uſually directed or addreſſed by the King to all his ſubjects at large. And therein they differ from certain other letters of the King, ſealed alſo with his great ſeal, but directed to particular perſons and for particular purpoſes: which which therefore not being designed for public inspection are closed up and sealed on the outside, and are thereupon called writs close, literæ clausæ; and are recorded in the close-rolls, in the same manner as the others are in the patent-rolls. 2 Comm. 346. c. 21.

Grants or letters-patent must first pass by bill; which is prepared by the Attorney and Solicitor-General, in consequence of a warrant from the crown: and is there signed, that is subscribed at top, with the King's own sign manual, and sealed with his privy signet, which is always in the custody of the principal Secretary of State: and then sometimes it immediately passes under the great seal, in which case the patent is subscribed in these words, per ipsum regem, By the King himself.—Otherwise the course is to carry an extract of the bill to the keeper of the privy seal who makes out a writ or warrant thereupon to the Chancery, so that the sign manual is the warrant to the privy seal, and the privy seal is the warrant to the great seal: and in this last case the patent is subscribed, per breve de privato sigillo; By writ of privy seal. But there are some grants which only pass through certain offices, as the Admiralty or Treasury, in consequence of a sign-manual, without the confirmation of either the signet, the great, or the privy seal. 2 Comm. c. 21. See 9 Rep. 18: 2 Inst. 555.

The manner of granting by the King does not more differ from that by a Subject, than the construction of his grants when made. A grant made by the King at the suit of the grantee, shall be taken most beneficially for the King, and against the party; whereas the grant of a Subject is construed most strongly against the grantor. Wherefore it is usual to insert in the King's grants, that they are made, not at the suit of the grantee, but ex speciali gratiâ, certâ scientiâ, et mero motu regis; of the King's special favour, certain knowledge, and mere motion, and then they have a more liberal construction. Finch L. 100: 10 Rep. 112.

A Subject's grant shall be construed to include many things besides what are expressed, if necessary for the operation of the grant. Therefore, in a private grant of the profits of land for one year, free ingress, egress and regress to cut and carry away those profits are also inclusively granted; and if a feoffment of land was made by a lord to his villein, this operated as a manumission, for he was otherwise unable to hold it. Co. Litt. 56: Litt. § 206. But the King's grant shall not enure to any other intent, than that which is precisely expressed in the grant. As if he grants land to an alien, it operates nothing; for such grant shall not also enure to make him a denizen, that so he may be capable of taking by grant. Bro. Ab. Patent, 62: Finch L. 110.

When it appears from the face of the grant that the King is mistaken, or deceived, either in matter of fact or of law, as in case of false suggestion, misinformation, or misrecital of former grants; or if his own title to the thing granted be different from what he supposes; or if the grant be informal; or if he grants an estate contrary to the rules of law, in any of those cases the grant is absolutely void. Fretm. 172. For instance, if the King grants lands to one and his heirs-male, this is merely void: for it shall not be an estate-tail, because there want words of procreation, to ascertain the body out of which the heirs shall issue: neither is it a fee-simple as in common grants it would be, because it may reasonably be supposed that the King meant to give no more than an estate-tail: the grantee is therefore, if any thing, nothing more than tenant at will. Finch, 101, 2: Bro. Ab. Estates, 34; Patents, 104: Dy. 270: Dav. 45: 5 Rep. 94: More 293.

To prevent deceits of the King with regard to the value of estates granted, it is particularly provided by stat. 1 H. 4. c. 6, that no grant of his shall be good, unless in the grantee's petition for them, express mention be made of the real value of the lands. Other statutes have also been passed relative to this subject. The King's grantee shall not forfeit for non-payment of rent, where the rent has been answered before process issued. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 25. Grants of felons' goods how to be inrolled.—Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 22. § 1. The Crown restrained from granting lands, except for thirty-one years, &c. Forfeited estates excepted. Stat. 1 Ann. stat. 1. c. 7. §§ 5, 8. See title Forfeiture.

Before the statute de prerogativa Regis, dowers, advowsons, and other things, have passed by the general grant of the King; but by that statute they are to be granted in express words. 1 Rep. 50.

The King's grant is good for himself and successors, though his successors are not named. Yelv. 13.

The King may not grant away an estate tail in the Crown, &c. And the law takes care to preserve the inheritance of the King for the benefit of the successor. 2 And. 154: Style 263: See Jenk. Cent. 307. A grant may not be made by the King which tends to a monopoly, against the interest and liberty of the Subject: Nor can the King make a grant non obstante any statute made, or to be made; if he doth, any subsequent statute prohibiting what is granted, will be a revocation of the grant. 11 Rep. 87: Dyer 52. Where the King is restrained by the Common law to make a grant, if he makes a grant non obstante the Common law, it will not make the grant good: but when he may lawfully make a grant, and the law requires he should be fully apprised of what he grants, and not be deceived, a non obstante supplies it, and makes the grant good: If the words are not sufficient to pass the thing granted, a non obstante will not help. 4 Rep. 35: Nelf. Abr. 904. If a grant is made by the King, and a former grant is in being of the same thing, if it be not recited, the grant will be void: And reciting a void grant, when there is another good, may make the King's grant void. Dyer 77: Cro. Car. 143. And there may be a non obstante to a former grant. 5 Rep. 94: Moor, 293.

The King's grants may be void, by reason of uncertainty; as if debts and duties are granted, without saying in particular what duties, &c. 12 Rep. 46. But where there is a particular certainty preceding they shall not be destroyed by any incertainty or mistake which follows: and there is a distinction where a mistake of title is prejudicial to the King, and when it is in some description of the thing which is supplemental only, and not material or issuable. 1 Mod. 195. The King grants the manor of D. which he has by the attainder of a certain person, &c. and in fact the King hath it not so; this grant is void. 10 Rep. 109.

If the King grants a messuage of the value of 5*l.* a year to A. B. and it be of the yearly value of 10*l.* the value being in the same sentence with the grant, will make it void: Though if it be mentioned in another sentence it may be good. Jenk. Cent. 261. The grant of the the King to a Corporation, that they ſhall not be impleaded for lands, nor for any cauſe ariſing there, elſewhere than before themſelves, doth not bind the King where he is party: and the king by his grant cannot exclude himſelf from proſecuting pleas of the crown; for it concerns the public government. Keilw. 88: Dyer 376: Jenk. Cent. 190.

The King cannot grant a thing intruſted to him in reſpect of his ſovereignty: as, the lapſe of a church, before, or after it becomes void. 2 Rol. 187. l. 32, 35. Nor purveyance, butlerage, priſage, &c. 2 Rol. 187. l. 35. Nor, the power to make a diſpenſation of a ſtatute. 7 Co. 36 b. So he cannot grant the lands, or goods, of a recuſant-convict, before the commiſſion returned. 2 Rol. 184. l. 20. Nor the lands or goods of one attainted of treaſon, before his attainder. Dyer 108. a.

So the King cannot grant the proſecution, or execution of any penal ſtatute to another; for it is intruſted with him as the head of the public-weal. R. 7 Co. 37 a. Nor, the penalty or benefit of a penal ſtatute, before it be recovered. 7 Co. 36 b; 37 a. Nor any fine or forfeiture of a particular perſon, before he be convicted.—Declared by Stat. 1 W. & M. ſtat. 2. c. 2, that ſuch grant or promiſe is illegal and void. See title Forfeiture; and further as to the ſubject of this article, title King.

GRANTZ, Is uſed for grandees, in the Par. Roll 6 Ed. 3 m. 5, 6.—Et les d.tz Countz, Barons, & autre Grantz, &c.

GRASS-HEARTH, The graſing or turning up the earth with a plough; whence the cuſtomary ſervice for the inferior tenants of the manor of Amerſden, in Oxfordſhire, to bring their ploughs and do one day's work for their lord, was called graſs-hearth or graſs hurt: and we ſtill ſay the ſkin is graſed or ſlightly hurt, and a bullet graſes on any place, when it gently turns up the ſurface of what it ſtrikes upon. Parech. Antiq. 496, 497.

GRAVA, A little wood or grove:—Mon. Ang. Tom. 2. p. 198: Co. Lit. 4.

GRAVARE ET GRAVATIO, An accuſation or impeachment. Leg. Etheld. cap. 19.

GRAVE. The names of places ending with grave come from the Sax. graf, a wood, thicket, den or cave.

GRAVERS, Of ſeals and ſtones ſhall give to every one their weight of ſilver and gold, on pain of impriſonment. Stat. 7 Ed. 3. cap. 7; now obſolete.

GRAZIER, Pecuarius.] A breeder or keeper of cattle, mentioned in the Stat. 25 Hen. 8. cc. 2, 13. See Cattle.

GREAT MEN. This expreſſion is ſometimes, in ancient ſtatutes, underſtood of the Temporal Lords in the higher houſe of Parliament, and ſometimes of the members of the Houſe of Commons. See tit. Parliament.

GREAT SEAL OF ENGLAND. See titles Chancellor; Treaſon.

GREE, Fr. Gre. i. e. Good liking or allowance.] Satisfaction; as to make gree to the parties, is to agree with and ſatisfy them for an offence done. And where it is ſaid in our ſtatutes, that judgment ſhall be put in ſuſpence till gree is made to the King of his debt; it is taken for ſatisfaction. Stats. 1 R. 2. c. 15: 25 Ed. 3. c. 19.

GREEN CLOTH, Of the King's Houſhold, ſo termed from the green cloth on the table, is a court of juſtice compoſed of the Lord Steward, Treaſurer of the Houſehold, Comptroller, and other officers; to which is committed the government and overſight of the King's court, and the keeping of the peace within the verge, &c.

GREENHEW OR GREENHUE, The ſame as vert in foreſts, &c. Manwood, par. 2. cap. 6. num. 5. See title Foreſt.

GREENLAND COMPANY. A joint ſtock of 40,000 l. was, by ſtatute, to be raiſed by ſubſcribers, who were incorporated: And the Company to uſe the trade of catching whales, &c. into and from Greenland, and the Greenland ſeas; they might make By-laws for government, and of perſons employed in their ſhips, &c. Stat. 4. & 5 W. 3. cap. 17. But by ſtat. 1 Ann c. 16, any perſons who will adventure to Greenland for whale fiſhing, ſhall have all privileges granted to the Greenland Company. See this Dict. titles Fiſh, Fiſheries, and Fiſhing; Navigation Acts.

GREEN SILVER. There is an ancient cuſtom within the manor of Writtel, in the county of Eſſex, that every tenant whoſe fore-door opens to Greenbury, ſhall pay a halfpenny yearly to the lord, by the name of green ſilver. The term ſilver, here, muſt mean rent.

GREEN-WAX. Is where eſtreats are delivered to the ſheriffs out of the Exchequer, under the ſeal of that court, made in green wax, to be levied in the ſeveral counties: this word is mentioned in Stat. 7 H. 4. c. 3.

GREENWICH HOSPITAL. A duty was laid on all foreign-built ſhips for the relief of decayed ſeamen in Greenwich Hoſpital, &c. by Stat. 1 Jac. 2. cap. 18. And every ſeaman ſhall allow out of his wages 6 d. a month, for the better ſupport of the ſaid hoſpital: for which duty receivers are appointed, who may depute officers of the cuſtoms, &c. to collect the ſame, and examine on oath maſters of ſhips, *&c. See Garcio.

GROOM-PORTER, An officer or ſuperintendant over the royal gaming-tables; in Latin he is ſtiled Aulæ Regiæ Janitor Primarius.

GROSS, Groſſus.] In groſs, abſolute, intire, not depending on another; as anciently a villein in groſs was ſuch a ſervile perſon as was not appendant or annexed to the Lord, or manor, nor to go along with the tenure as appurtenant to it; but was like the other perſonal goods and chattels of his lord, at his lord's pleaſure and diſpoſal: ſo alſo advowſon in groſs differs from advowſon appendant, being diſtinct from the manor. Co. Lit. 120. See 2 Comm. 22.

GROSSE BOIS, Fr. Gros bois, i. e. great wood.] Signifies ſuch wood as by the common law or cuſtom is reputed timber. 2 Inſt. 642.

GROSS, (COMMON IN, or Common at large,) is ſuch as is neither appendant nor appurtenant, to land, but is annexed to a man's perſon; being granted to him and his heirs by deed: or it may be claimed by preſcriptive right, as by parſon of a church, or the like corporation ſole. This is a ſeparate inheritance, entirely diſtinct from any landed property. See tit. Common.

GROSS-WEIGHT, The whole weight of goods or merchandiſe, duſt and droſs mixed with them, and of the cheſt, bag, &c. out of which tare and tret are allowed. Merchant's Dict.

GROT, Fr.] A den, cave, or hollow place in the ground; alſo a ſhady woody place, with ſprings of water. L. Fr. Dict.

GROUNDAGE, A cuſtom or tribute paid for the ſtanding of a ſhip in a port.

GROUSE, The red and black heath game, for preſerving of which, no heath, furze or fern ſhall be burnt on any heaths, moors or other waſtes, between the 2d of February and 24th of June. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. See title Game.

GROWME. An engine to ſtretch woollen cloth after it is woven; See the ancient ſtat. 43 Ed. 3. c. 10.

GROWTH-HALFPENNY, A rate ſo called; and paid in ſome places for the tithe of every fat beaſt, ox, or other unfruitful cattle. Clayton's Rep. 92.

GRUARII, From the Fr. Gruyer.] The principal officers of the foreſt in general.

GUARD, Fr. Garde, Lat. Cuſtodia.] A cuſtody or care of defence. And ſometimes it is uſed for thoſe that attend upon the ſafety of the Prince, called the life-guard, &c. ſometimes ſuch as have the education and guardianſhip of infants; ſometimes for a writ touching wardſhip, as droit de garde, ejectione de gard, and raviſhment de gard. F. N. B. 139. See title Guardian.

GUARDIAN.

FR. Gardein, LAT. Cuſtos, Guardianus.] One who hath the charge or cuſtody of any perſon or thing; but commonly he who hath the cuſtody and education of ſuch perſons as are not of ſufficient diſcretion to guide themſelves and their own affairs, as children and ideots; (uſually the former); being as largely extended in the common law as Tutor and Curator among the civilians. Blount.

I. The ſeveral kind of Guardians; who may be Guardians; and how Appointed.

II. Of the Guardian's Intereſt in the Body and Lands of the Ward, and what he may lawfully do, ſo as to bind the Infant.

III. Of the Infant's remedy againſt the Guardian, and of obliging him to Account.

I. A Guardian is either legitimus, teſtamentarius, datus, or cuſtumarius: he that is a legitimate or lawful Guardian is ſo jure communi, or jure naturali; the firſt as Guardian in chivalry, in fact, or in right; the other de jure naturali, as father or mother: A teſtamentary Guardian was allowed even by the common law; the body of the minor was to remain with him who was appointed, till the age of fourteen; and as for his goods it might be longer, or as long as the teſtator appointed; Guardianus datus, was one appointed by the father in his life-time, or by the Lord Chancellor after the death of the father; and where there is a Guardianſhip by the common law, the Lord Chancellor can order and intermeddle; but where by ſtatute, he cannot remove either the child, or the Guardian: Guardianſhip by cuſtom, is of orphans by the cuſtom of London, and other cities and boroughs; and in copyhold manors, by the cuſtom it may belong to the lord of the manor to be guardian himſelf, or to appoint one. 3 Salk. Rep. 176, 177.

The Guardianſhips by the common law, were Guardians in chivalry; Guardians by nature, ſuch as the father or mother; Guardians in ſocage, who are the next of blood, to whom the inheritance cannot deſcend, if the father does not order it otherwiſe; and Guardian becauſe of nurture, when the father by will appoints one to be Guardian of his child. Co. Lit. 18: 2 Inſt. 305: 3 Rep. 37.

The ſeveral Guardians now in uſe, may be thus enumerated: 1 By Nature; 2. For Nurture; 3. In Socage; 4. By Statute; 5. By Cuſtom of London and other cities and boroughs; (which however, from particular exceptions, do not fall under the general law.) 6. By Election of the Infant; 7. By appointment of the Chancellor; 8. Ad litem; 9. By appointment of the Eccleſiaſtical Court.

1. The Father and (in ſome caſes) the Mother of the child are Guardians by nature. For if an eſtate be left to an infant, the father is by common law the Guardian, and muſt account to his child for the profits. 1 Inſt. 88. But an executor may not pay to a father a legacy left to an infant; 1 P. Wms. 285. See titles Executor: Legacy. And with regard to daughters it ſeems by conſtruction of ſtat. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 8, that the father might by deed or will aſſign a Guardian to any woman child under the age of 16: and if none be ſo aſſigned, the mother ſhall in this caſe be Guardian. 3 Rep. 39.

The ſaid ſtat. 4 & 5 P. & M. provides, under ſevere penalties, as fine and impriſonment for years, "That nobody ſhall take away any maid or woman child unmarried, being within the age of ſixteen years, out of or from the poſſeſſion, cuſtody or governance, and againſt the will of the father of ſuch maid or woman child, or of ſuch perſon or perſons to whom the father of ſuch maid, or woman child by his laſt will and teſtament, or by any other act in his life-time, hath [appointed] or ſhall appoint, aſſign, bequeath, give or grant, the order, keeping, education and governance of ſuch maid or woman child." See this Dict. titles Marriage: Rape.

The

The direct object of the above ſtatute, was to prevent the taking away or marrying maidens under 16, againſt the conſent of their parents. But the ſtatute has prohibited it in terms which imply that the cuſtody and education of ſuch females ſhould belong to the father and mother, or the perſon appointed by the former. It is obſervable on this ſtatute that though the title is confined to maidens being inheritors, and the preamble ſpeaks only of ſuch as be heirs apparent, or have real or perſonal eſtate, yet the enacting part mentions maidens under 16 generally. See 1 Inſt. 88 b. n. 14. For determinations on this ſtatute ſee Ratcliff's Ca.; 3 Co. 57: Poph. 204: Cro. Car. 465: 1 Sid. 362: 2 Mod. 128: 3 Mod. 84, 168.

Many books, eſpecially ſome of modern date, are very indiſcriminate when they mention Guardianſhip by nature. Sometimes the Father is ſtiled Guardian by nature, of his heir apparent, for the time, in general terms; ſuch as at firſt appear to intimate that no other anceſtor except the father, not even the mother, is entitled to the Guardianſhip in that right: and accordingly Comyns makes this inference from the language of the books; though perhaps too haſtily. See Com. Dig. tit. Guardian, (C): 3 Co. 38. a: 6 Co. 22 b; there cited. In other caſes it appears that the father being dead, the mother may have a writ of treſpaſs quare conſanguineum et hæredem cepit; which imports that ſhe may alſo be Guardian by nature of her heir apparent. The ſilence in one book as to other anceſtors, and the expreſs excluſion of the grandfather in another book, without the neceſſary explanation, tend to an opinion that all anceſtors, except the father and mother, are really excluded. See 1 Inſt. 84 b: 6 Co. 22 b. However in another place it appears that the grandfather and other anceſtors may be Guardians by nature of their heirs apparent, as well as the father and mother; though being liable to be poſtponed to others, where the father is not, both they and the mother have a a title diſtinguiſhable from his, in point of inferiority. 3 Co. 38 a. Further, ſome modern books do not confine Guardianſhip by nature to heirs apparent, but denominate the father and mother the natural Guardians of all their children: and ſometimes even the parents of illegitimate iſſue, ſeem to have been treated as their natural Guardians. 1 Vez. 158: 2 Atk. 15, 70: 9 Mod. 117. Sometimes alſo the Guardianſhip of female children under 16, as impliedly given to the father and mother, by the above mentioned ſtat. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 8, is ſaid to be jure naturæ. See the ſtat. & 3 Co. 38 b.

On the whole it ſeems, that not only the Father but alſo the Mother and every other anceſtor may be Guardians by nature, though with conſiderable differences, ſuch as denote the ſuperiority of the father's claim. The father hath the firſt title to Guardianſhip by nature, the mother the ſecond: as to other anceſtors, if the ſame infant happens to be heir-apparent to two, perhaps priority of the poſſeſſion of the perſon of the infant might probably be allowed to decide the queſtion. While the tenure by Knight's ſervice continued there was another difference, which more ſtrongly marked the ſuperiority of the father's claim: for he was intitled to the cuſtody of the infant's perſon even againſt the Lord in chivalry; a preference not allowed to the mother or other relations; and this diverſity appears to reconcile the determinations in the old books, which apply only to caſes in which the right to the infant's perſon was in conteſt with the lord in chivalry. 3 Co. 38 b. Ratcliffe's Ca. According to the ſtrict language of our law, only an heir apparent can be the ſubject of Guardianſhip by nature: which reſtriction is ſo true that it hath even been doubted, whether ſuch Guardianſhip can be of a daughter whoſe heirſhip, though denominated apparent, yet being liable to be ſuperſeded by the birth of a ſon, is in effect rather of the preſumptive kind. 3 Co. 38 b: 1 Inſt. 84 a. Therefore when the term of Guardianſhip by nature is extended to children in general, or to any beſides ſuch as are heirs apparent, it is not conformable to its legal ſenſe, but muſt be underſtood to have reference to ſome rule independent of the common law; as the dictates of nature, and the principles of general reaſon. Yet we muſt not however conclude that parents have not a right to the cuſtody of their other children, for the law gives them this cuſtody till the age of 14 by the Guardianſhip for nurture, next mentioned, which though it differs from that by nature, not only in name, but alſo in duration, and ſome other particulars, is founded on a like conformity to the order of nature. 1 Inſt. 88 b. n. 12.

This Guardianſhip by nature continues till the infant attains the age of 21; it extends no further than the cuſtody of the infant's perſon. Carth. 386: 1 Inſt. 84. It yields, as to the cuſtody of the perſon, to Guardianſhip in ſocage, where the title to both Guardianſhips concur in the ſame individuals. 1 Inſt. 88 b. (See poſt 3.) but Guardianſhip in ſocage ending at 14, it ſeems that after that age the father, or other anceſtor having a like title to both Guardianſhips becomes Guardian by nature till the infant's age of 21. See Carth. 384. Laſtly the father may diſappoint the mother and other anceſtors of the Guardianſhip by nature, by appointing a teſtamentary Guardian under the ſtats. 4 & 5 P. & M. & 12 Car. 2. See poſt. 4.

2. Guardians for nurture are of courſe the Father or Mother till the infant attains the age of 14 years. Moor, 738: 3 Rep. 38. In default of father or mother the Ordinary uſually aſſigns ſome diſcreet perſon to take care of the infant's perſonal eſtate, and to provide for his maintenance and education. 2 Jones, 90: 2 Lev. 163. See poſt. 9. This Guardianſhip by nurture, only occurs where the infant is without any other Guardian; and it has been ſaid that none can have it except the father or mother. 8 E. 4. 7 b: Bro. Gard. 70: 3 Co. 38. It extends no further than the cuſtody and government of the infant's perſon; and determines at 14 in the caſe both of males and females. ibid. Comyns refers to Fleta, as if according to that ancient book, grandfathers and great grandfathers might be Guardians by nurture. But the ſtatute cited by him doth not point at this ſpecies of Guardian, it deſcribing the patria poteſtas in general, and being apparently borrowed from the text of the Roman Law; nor will it bear the leaſt application to Guardianſhip as our own law regulates it. 1 Inſt. 88 b. in n. 13. ad fin.

3. Guardians in Socage, are alſo called Guardians by the common law. Wardſhip is incident to tenure in ſocage, but of a nature very different from that which was formerly incident to knight-ſervice. For if the inheritance deſcend to an infant under 14, the wardſhip of him does not, nor ever did, belong to the lord of the fee: becauſe in this tenure no military or other perſonal ſervice being required, there was no occaſion for the lord to take the rofits in order to provide a proper ſubſtitute for his inant tenant. See this Dict. title Tenure.

This kind of Guardianſhip takes place only when the minor is entitled to ſome eſtate in lands; and then by the common law the Guardianſhip devolves upon his Next-of-kin, to whom the inheritance cannot poſſibly deſcend; as where the eſtate deſcended from his father, in this caſe his uncle by the mother's ſide cannot poſſibly inherit this eſtate, and therefore ſhall be the Guardian. Litt. § 123. For the law judges it improper to truſt the perſon of an infant in his hands, who may by poſſibility become heir to him; that there may be no temptation, nor even ſuſpicion of temptation, for him to abuſe his truſt. 1 Comm. c. 17. And though this proviſion has been conſidered as ariſing from harſh and barbarous principles, experience ſhews that it is founded in ſound policy and humanity. See 2 P. Wms. 262: 1 Inſt. 88.

Guardianſhip in ſocage, like that in chivalry, ſprings wholly out of tenure. It is for this reaſon that the title to it cannot ariſe, unleſs the infant is ſeiſed of lands, or other hereditaments, lying in tenure, holden by ſocage. 1 Inſt. 87 b. Like Guardianſhip in chivalry, it is deemed to take place on a deſcent only, though the contrary has been argued. 2 Mod. 176. The title to this Guardianſhip is without any diſtinction between the whole and the half blood. If there are two or more diſintereſted relations in equal degree, he who firſt gains poſſeſſion of the heir ſhall have the cuſtody of him; except where they happen to be brothers or ſiſters, or to be the infant's lineal anceſtors, the law preferring the eldeſt in the former caſe, and the father or other male anceſtor in the latter. But if the infant derives lands both by deſcent ex parte paternâ and ex parte maternâ, in which caſe it may be poſſible not to find any next of kin incapable of inheriting to the infant, the next of kin on either ſide firſt ſeizing the infant is entitled to the cuſtody of his perſon; and the cuſtody of the lands coming ex parte paternâ goes to the maternal heir, and ſo vice-verſâ. Should, however, the infant derive lands by deſcent in ſuch a way, as lets in both the paternal and maternal blood ſucceſſively to the inheritance, but with a preference of the former, it ſeems unſettled who ſhall have the Guardianſhip. If the perſon entitled to be Guardian in ſocage is himſelf under cuſtody of a Guardian, the latter is entitled to the cuſtody of both, to the former in his own right, and to the latter pur cauſe de Ward, that is, in right of his wardſhip of the former; A ſpecies of Guardianſhip diſtinct from all others above enumerated. And it ſeems that only Guardian in chivalry and in ſocage could be Guardian pur cauſe de Ward. See 2 Ro. Ab. 35, 40: Vaugh. 184.

Guardianſhip in ſocage, being wholly for the infant's benefit and not in any reſpect for the Guardian's profit, is not a ſubject either of alienation, forfeiture or ſucceſſion, as Wardſhip in chivalry was; and conſequently if the Guardian in ſocage becomes incapable or dies, the Wardſhip devolves on the perſon next in degree of kindred to the infant, not being inheritable to him. Some ancient caſes ſeem to ſhew that under certain circumſtances Guardianſhip in ſocage might be aſſignable. See F. N. B. 143. P.: Fitz. Ab. Garde 161. But according to the doctrine and practice of later times, the acknowledged qualities of Guardianſhip in ſocage being, that it is a perſonal truſt wholly for the infant's benefit, and neither tranſmiſſible by ſucceſſion nor deviſable, they are not conſiſtent with its being aſſignable; and there is Lord Chief Juſtice Vaughan's authority for ſaying, that even in his time common experience proved the contrary. See Plowd. 293: Vaugh. 181: Gilb. Rep. Eq. 177.

This Guardianſhip extends not only to the perſon and ſocage-eſtates of the infant, but alſo to his hereditaments not lying in tenure; and even to his copyhold eſtates, unleſs there is a ſpecial cuſtom for the Lord's appointing a Guardian of them. 1 Inſt. 87 b: 1 Ro. Ab. 40; Egleton's Ca: Hutt. 17: 2 Lutw. 1181. But whether the Guardian in ſocage is intitled to take into his cuſtody the infant's perſonal eſtate, is not aſcertained by any expreſs authority. It ſeems however that perſonalty is included except where by the cuſtom of a particular place it happens to be liable to a different cuſtody: and this opinion is founded on the idea that the cuſtody of an infant's perſon draws after it the cuſtody of every ſpecies of property for which the law hath not otherwiſe provided: which receives ſome countenance from the inſtances of copyholds, and hereditaments not lying in tenure: for including which it will be difficult to account by any other reaſon than that above given for including perſonalty. It is alſo ſtrongly confirmed by the manner in which the ſtat. 12 C. 2. c. 24, regulates the power of the Guardian, which it enables a father to appoint: after authoriſing ſuch Guardian to take the cuſtody of the infant's perſonal eſtate, as well as of his lands, tenements, and hereditaments, it provides that he may bring ſuch action or actions in relation thereunto, as by law a Guardian in common ſocage might do; words almoſt neceſſarily importing that the perſonal eſtate is equally an object of the cuſtody of Guardian in ſocage with the infant's real property; though a contrary opinion is hinted by Vaughan. C. J. See Vaugh. 186.

Guardianſhip in ſocage is ſuperſeded both as to the body and lands, if the father exerciſes his power, of appointing a teſtamentary or other Guardian according to ſtat. 12 C. 2. c. 24. (See poſt. 4.) And regularly it ends, when the infant whether male or female, attains 14: though ſome ſay that this muſt be underſtood only where another Guardian, either by election of the infant or otherwiſe, is ready to ſucceed; and that the Guardianſhip in ſocage continues in the mean time. Andr. 313. At that age however it ſeems the heir may ouſt the Guardian in ſocage and call him to account for the rents and profits. Litt. § 123: Co. Litt. 89. It was in this particular of Wardſhip as alſo in that of marriage, and in the certainty of the render or ſervice, that the ſocage tenures had ſo much the advantage of the military ones. See tit. Tenure. But as the Wardſhip ceaſed at 14, this diſadvantage attended it; that young heirs being left at ſo tender an age to chooſe their own Guardians till 21, might make an improvident choice. Therefore when almoſt all the lands in the kingdom were turned into ſocage tenures, by the ſtat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, that ſtatute, gave the power of appointing the teſtamentary Guardian next mentioned. If no ſuch appointment be made, the Court of Chancery will frequently interpoſe, and name a Guardian, to prevent an infant heir from improvidently expoſing himſelf to ruin. 2 Comm. 88. c. 6. See poſt. 7.

4. The Statute 12 Car. 2. c. 24, conſidering the imbecility of judgment in children of the age of 14, and the abolition of Guardianſhip in chivalry; (which laſted till 21. See poſt. 11;) enacts, that any Father, under age or of full age, may by deed or will atteſted by two witneſſes, diſpoſe diſpoſe of the cuſtody of his child, either born or unborn, to any perſon, except a popiſh recuſant, either in poſſeſſion or reverſion till ſuch child attains the age of 21. Theſe are called Guardians by ſtatute; or Teſtamentary Guardians.

The ſubſtance of this Parliamentary regulation is, that the father ſhall have the power, though under 21.—That he ſhall have it as to all his children under 21, and unmarried at his deceaſe, or born after—That he may appoint any perſon except popiſh recuſants—That the appointment may be either in poſſeſſion or remainder—That he may appoint the Guardianſhip to laſt till 21; or any leſs time—That the appointment ſhall be effectual againſt all claiming as Guardians in ſocage or otherwiſe—That the Guardian ſo appointed ſhall have raviſhment of ward or treſpaſs, and recover damages for the Ward's benefit—That the Guardian ſhall have the cuſtody of the infant's eſtate both real and perſonal, and have the ſame actions in relation to them as a Guardian in ſocage.—Finally, that the ſtatute ſhall not prejudice the cuſtom of London, or any other city or corporate town. For caſes on the conſtruction of this ſtatute, See Vin. Ab. and Com. Dig. tit. Guardian. The nature of this new kind of Guardianſhip, which the ſtatute profeſſedly models after that in ſocage, except as to duration, is particularly diſcuſſed in the caſe of Bedell v. Conſtable; Vaugh. 177; and in Lord Shaftesbury's Caſe, 2 P. Wms. 102: Gilb. 172.

A father cannot appoint Guardians under this ſtatute to a natural child; but where he has named Guardians by his will to an illegitimate child, the Court of Chancery will appoint the ſame perſons Guardians without any reference to a maſter for his approbation. 2 Bro. C. R. 583.

Though there is no decided caſe that Guardians can be appointed for a child, by a Stranger, during the life of the parent, yet the law will take care that the child ſhall be educated according to his expectations; in caſes where the child is benefited by the will, &c. of ſuch ſtranger. See Powell v. Clever, 2 Bro. C. R. 500.

A grandfather cannot appoint Guardians to his grandſon under this ſtatute: but he may give his eſtate to him on condition that certain perſons be his Guardians; and if the father of the legatee do not ſubmit to the will, the Chancery will make the father's oppoſition work a forfeiture of his ſon's eſtate. Ambl. 306.

5. We may here juſt mention that there is another ſpecies of cuſtomary Guardianſhip beſides that in London and certain cities and boroughs; where by the ſpecial cuſtom of a manor the Lord names, or is himſelf the Guardian of an infant copyholder. See Com. Dig. tit. Copyhold. (K. 5.)—The nature of this Guardianſhip, depends wholly on the cuſtom of the particular manor; and though it is not expreſsly ſaved by the ſtat. 12 Car. 2; yet it has been held that the father's appointment of the cuſtody of his child under that ſtatute, will not extend to copyhold eſtates. 2 Lutw. 1181: 3 Lev. 395: Comb. 253.

6. The right of electing a Guardian by an infant, ariſes only when from a defect in the law, (or rather in the execution of it,) the infant finds himſelf wholly unprovided with a Guardian. This may happen either before 14, when the infant has no ſuch property as attracts a Guardianſhip by tenure, and the father is dead without having executed his power of appointment, and there is no mother; or after 14, when the cuſtody of the Guardian in ſocage terminates, and there is no appointment by the father under the ſtat. 12 Car. 2. Lord Coke only takes notice of ſuch election where the infant is under 14; and as to this omits to ſtate how, and before whom it ſhould be made; ſee 1 Inſt. 87 b; nor does this defect ſeem ſupplied by any prior or cotemporary writer. As to a Guardian after 14, it appears from the ending of Guardianſhip in ſocage, at that age, as if the common law deemed a Guardian afterwards unneceſſary. However ſince the ſtat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, it has been uſual in defect of an appointment under the ſtatute, to allow the infant to elect one for himſelf; and this practice appears to have prevailed even in ſome degree before the Reſtoration. Such election is ſaid to be frequently made before a Judge on the circuit. 1 Veſ. 375. But this form does not ſeem eſſential. The late Lord Baltimore when he was turned of 18, having no Teſtamentary Guardian, and being under the neceſſity of having one for ſome ſpecial purpoſes relative to his proprietary government of Maryland, named a Guardian by deed; a mode adopted by the advice of Counſel—It ſeems in fact as if there was no preſcribed form of an infant's electing a Guardian after 14, any more than there is before, and therefore election by parol, though unſolemn, might be legally ſufficient. The deficiency in precedents on this occaſion is eaſily accounted for; this kind of Guardianſhip being of very late origin, unnoticed as it ſeems by any writer before Coke except Swinburn; (Teſtam. edit. 1590. 97 b;) and there being yet no caſes in print to explain the powers incident to it, or whether the infant may change a Guardian ſo conſtituted by himſelf. Coke, though profeſſing to enumerate the different ſorts of Guardianſhip, omits this in one place; whence perhaps it may be conjectured that in his time it was in ſtrictneſs ſcarcely recogniſed as legal. 1 Inſt. 88 b. in n.

7. As to Guardian by appointment of the Lord Chancellor; it is not eaſy to ſtate how this juriſdiction was acquired: It is certainly of no very ancient date, though now indiſputable. The firſt inſtance of ſuch a Guardian, appointed on petition without bill, was in the year 1696, in the caſe of one Hampden. But ſince that time the Court of Chancery has exerciſed this power, without its being once called in queſtion; therefore in the caſe of Lady Teynham v. Leonard, in Dom. Proc. An. 1724, the Counſel for the reſpondent ſtated it as a thing fixed, that the Lord Chancellor was entruſted with that part of the Crown's prerogative, which concerned the Guardianſhip of infants. Bro. P. C. Under the ſame idea too, the marriage Act, ſtat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33, (§ 11,) refers to the Chancellor for the appointment of a Guardian, to conſent to marriage, where the infant is without a Guardian and the mother is not living. 1 Inſt. 88 b. in n. See alſo 1 Bro. C. R. 556. The Court never appoints a Guardian to a woman after marriage. 1 Vez. 157.

8. All Courts of Juſtice have a power to aſſign a Guardian to an infant to ſue, or defend actions, if the infant comes into court and deſires it: or a Judge at his chambers, at the deſire of the infant, may aſſign a perſon named by him to be his Guardian; but this laſt is no record until entered and filed by the clerk of the rules: F. N. B. 27. L: 1 Inſt. 88 b. n. (16): 135 b. n. (1): 1 Lil. 656: 2 Leon. 238. And this is called a Guardian ad litem. See title Equity.

9. Guardian

9. Guardian by appointment of the Eccleſiaſtical Court ſeems now perfectly inſignificant, and merely on a par with other Guardians ad litem. The right of appointment is however claimed by that Court, as to perſonal eſtate; and, if there is no other Guardian by tenure or otherwiſe, for the perſon alſo; but the following detail will ſhew with how little effect.

Swinburne takes notice of ſuch a Guardian; but confines his obſervations on the appointment, and his extent of power, to the cuſtom within the province of York. Teſtam. 1*ſt ed.* 99 b. In a caſe in the court of K. B. Lord Hale admitted the right of the Eccleſiaſtical Court to appoint a Curator of the perſonal eſtate; and after that Judge's death the Court inclined to the ſame opinion. 2 Lev. 162: T. Jo. 90. In another caſe, ſoon after, the ſame court allowed the right as to the infant's portion but denied it over the perſon. 3 Keb. 384. In the next caſe, the queſtion as to the right was largely debated on a plea in prohibition. This alleged that by the common law, uſed and approved in England, if any perſon by his will deviſes any goods to his children, the Ordinary before whom the will is proved hath uſed to commit the cuſtody of the ſons and their portions till 14, and of the daughters and their portions till 12, except where they are in the cuſtody of any other by reaſon of tenure, or by the father's appointment: and if any perſon detained ſuch infants, or their portions, the Ordinary hath alſo uſed to compel the delivery of them by Eccleſiaſtical cenſures. 2 Lev. 217. But on a demurrer this plea was over-ruled, and the prohibition ordered to ſtand, the latter being founded on the libel in the ſuit in the Eccleſiaſtical Court, which had ſtated the right in a more extenſive way, viz. that by the Eccleſiaſtical Law, every perſon having the tuition of any infant under age, by the will of the father, or per judicem competentem, ought to have the cuſtody of the infant and ſuit in the Eccleſiaſtical Court for the detainer. After this caſe nothing appears in the books on the ſubject for a long time, but a curſory notice by Lee, J. of the Eccleſiaſtical Court's appointment without objection, ſaying the courſe of that court is, that if the infant is under ſeven years of age, they chooſe a Curator, but if he is ſeven, he chooſes. Fitzgib. 164. By a looſe note of a later caſe it appears that Lord Hardwicke ſaid, that only Guardians ad litem can be appointed by the Eccleſiaſtical Court. 14 Vin. Abr. 176. pl. 7. in n. In another caſe however, reported more at length, the ſame Judge reprobated it as a preſumption in the Eccleſiaſtical Court to appoint a Guardian of the perſon and eſtate, and declared their appointment except when a ſuit was depending to be an interference with his power as Chancellor; and even recommended to the Attorney General to conſider whether a quo warranto would not lie in ſuch a caſe againſt the Eccleſiaſtical Court. 3 Atk. 631. In a ſubſequent caſe in B. R. (Miſs Catley's) the power of appointment in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts was conſidered as confined to Guardians ad litem, and therefore perfectly inſignificant. 3 Burr. 1436. See 1 Inſt. 88 b. in n.

The above recapitulation, as to Guardians, is excluſive of any thing relative to the Royal family. See the arguments in the caſe on the King's right, in reſpect to the education and marriage of his grand-children, which was referred to the Judges in the reign of Geo. I. Fort. 401. See alſo the ſtat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 11; and this D. tit. King.

The following miſcellaneous obſervations may ſerve further to illuſtrate the above propoſitions:

Guardianſhip is a thing cogniſable by the temporal courts, where a deviſe is made of it, which courts are to judge whether the deviſe be purſuant to the ſtatute. 1 Vent. 207.

The huſband of a woman under age cannot diſavow a Guardian made by the court for his wife. 1 Vent. 185. An infant, it is ſaid, cannot revoke the authority of the Guardian: but the court may diſcharge one Guardian, and aſſign another at their diſcretion; and the juſtices of Niſi prius, &c. may aſſign a new Guardian. Palm. 252: Style 456: Noy. 49: 1 Danv. Abr. 604.

The eldeſt ſon of the half blood ſhall be Guardian in ſocage, to a ſon by a ſecond venter; and when the minor attains the age of fourteen years, he may chuſe his Guardian before a judge, at his chambers, or in court, or in the Chancery. Cro. Jac. 219. Though a father is Guardian by nature, yet a man may be Guardian to an infant againſt his father, for prevention of waſte; which is a forfeiture of Guardianſhip. Hard. 96.

If a woman hath iſſue a ſon by a former huſband, and marries a ſecond huſband, ſeiſed of ſocage lands, by whom ſhe has iſſue another ſon, and the huſband and wife die, leaving the ſecond ſon under fourteen, his brother of the half blood ſhall be Guardian in ſocage; as next of kin, to whom the inheritance cannot deſcend. Cro. Eliz. 825: 2 And. 171: Moor 635: 2 Jon. 17.

An infant, ideot, lunatick, non compos, one blind and dumb, deaf and dumb, or leper removed, cannot be Guardian in ſocage. Co. Lit. 88 b.

It is clearly agreed, That the King, as pater patriæ, is univerſal Guardian of all infants, ideots and lunaticks, who cannot take care of themſelves; and as this care cannot be exerciſed otherwiſe than by appointing them proper curators or committees, it ſeems alſo agreed, that the King may, as he has done, delegate the authority to his Chancellor; therefore at this day, the court of Chancery is the only proper court which hath juriſdiction in appointing and removing Guardians, and in preventing them and others from abuſing their perſons or eſtates. 2 Inſt. 14: 4 Co. 126: Staundf. Præ. 37. See title Ideots and Lunaticks, and ante 7.

And as the Court of Chancery is now inveſted with this authority, hence in every day's practice we find that court determining, as to the right of Guardianſhip, who is the next of kin, and who the moſt proper Guardian; as alſo orders are made by that court on petition, or motion, for the proviſion of infants during any diſpute herein; as likewiſe Guardians removed or compelled to give ſecurity; they and others puniſhed for abuſes committed on infants, and effectual care taken to prevent any abuſes intended them in their perſons or eſtates; all ſuch wrongs and injuries being reckoned a contempt of that court, it having by an eſtabliſhed juriſdiction, the protection of all perſons under natural diſabilities. 2 Mod. 177.

II. Though Guardianſhip in Chivalry is now aboliſhed by ſtat. 12 C. 2. c. 24, already ſo often mentioned; it may be uſeful as well as curious to conſider the following ſummary concerning it. See 1 Inſt. 88 b; n. 11.

This guardianſhip could only be where the eſtate veſted in the infant by deſcent.—All males under 21 at the anceſtor's death were liable to it; but not females unleſs they were under 14.—It extended not only to the perſon of the infant, but alſo to all ſuch of his lands and tenements as were within the Guardian's ſeigniory; and if the King was Guardian in reſpect of a tenure in capite, then to the whole of the infant's eſtate of whomſoever holden, whatever the tenure; and whether lying in tenure or not.—If the infant heir held lands by knight's ſervice of ſeveral lords, each had the wardſhip of the land within his ſeigniory; and as to the body, the wardſhip of it belonged to that lord of whom the tenure was moſt ancient, he being ſtiled the lord by priority, and the others lords by poſteriority: but if any lands of the infant were holden of the King by knight's ſervice in capite, he was intitled to the wardſhip both of the infant's body and all his lands ſo held of the crown or of others by knight's ſervice.

This guardianſhip continued over males till 21, over females till 16 or marriage, when it determined; if the tenure were of a Subject, the heir might enter on the lord immediately; but if the King had the wardſhip, then the heir was not entitled to take poſſeſſion of the land without ſuing for livery to the Crown, which was a proceſs both nice and expenſive. See 1 Inſt. 77 a.—It had a preference with reſpect to the cuſtody of the infant's body over every other ſpecies of wardſhip, except only that of the father where the infant was his heir apparent; even the mother being excluded.—It entitled the lord to make ſale of the marriage of the infant, ſubject only to the reſtriction of not diſparaging; and if the infant refuſed the marriage tendered by the lord, or married after ſuch a tender and againſt the lord's conſent; in the former caſe the infant was liable to the payment of a ſum equal to the value of the marriage, that is to the profit which the lord might have made by the ſale of it; in the latter caſe, the heir female paid the ſame ſum as for a refuſal, but the heir male was charged the double value, which was called a forfeiture of marriage.—The Guardian in chivalry was not accountable for the profits made of the infant's land during the wardſhip, but received them for his own private emolument, ſubject only to the bare maintenance of the infant.—Laſtly, Guardianſhip in chivalry being deemed more an intereſt for the profit of the Guardian, than a truſt for the benefit of the Ward, was ſaleable and transferrable like the ordinary ſubjects of property, to the beſt bidder; and if not diſpoſed of was tranſmiſſable to the lord's perſonal repreſentatives.

The above general explication of the nature of wardſhip in chivalry may well excite a ſtrong idea of the evils neceſſarily incident to it: and it is natural to wonder how this ſpecies of Guardianſhip ſhould be patiently endured for ſeveral centuries after the conqueſt, and even remain unreformed by any effectual checks to ſoften its rigour till it was wholly taken away at the Reſtoration; the true period when Britons gained more real liberty, than any other that can be named in hiſtory; by no means even excepting the Revolution: and of this propoſition the Habeas-corpus-act and the ſtatute for aboliſhing tenures are moſt pregnant proofs; ſtatutes both made in the reign of Car. II. and as far preferable to the vaunted Bill of rights, as practical liberty is to theoretical doctrines.

Perhaps the facility of evading this Guardianſhip in chivalry, which could only be on a deſcent, may account both for its being ſo long ſubmitted to, and for its producing conſequences leſs extenſively pernicious than ſeem almoſt neceſſarily incident to it. Various modes of preventing the deſcent were practiſed. One was enfeoffing the heir in the anceſtor's life time: another, the enfeoffing ſtrangers on condition to pay a ſum, far exceeding the value of the land, at a time ſo fixed as to correſpond with the heir's coming of age, who might then enter for breach of the condition. See Stat. Marlebridge, 52 H. 3 c. 6: 2 Inſt. 109. When theſe modes were declared to be fraudulent, and therefore checked by the ſaid ſtatute, a third more fit to attain the ſame end ſucceeded; for uſes and truſts being invented, and Guardianſhip in chivalry being only of legal eſtates, it became the faſhion to make feoffments to uſes, as well for preventing wardſhip, as for avoiding reliefs and forfeitures, and indirectly exerciſing the power of deviſing; and thus the heir taking only the uſe of the land on a deſcent, inſtead of becoming the legal tenant, he of courſe eſcaped being in wardſhip. This evaſion continued in practice till 4 Hen. VII, when the Legiſlature thought proper once more to interfere, in favour of the lord, and made the heir of ceſtui que uſe liable to wardſhip in chivalry. See Stat. 4 Hen. 7. c. 17: 1 Inſt. 84 b: 2 Inſt. 110. For ſome time after this there ſeems to have been no other means of preventing wardſhip in chivalry than the anceſtor's making a leaſe for life, with remainder to his heir apparent in fee; but this protection of wardſhip in chivalry was ſoon followed by a great diminution of its profits, for in the ſucceeding reign the ſtatutes of Wills gave the power of deviſing, ſo as to deprive the lord of the wardſhip of two thirds of the land holden by knight's ſervice: in which contracted ſtate this odious ſpecies of Guardianſhip was ſuffered to languiſh, till it was entirely aboliſhed, with the other oppreſſive appendages of military tenures, by the famous ſtatute 12 Car. 2. c. 24.—See 2 Inſt. 110, 111: Smith's Rep. Angl. (Engliſh edit.) b. 3. c. 5; Staunf. P. C. 4 Inſt. 188: Cromp. Juriſd. 112 a.—125: Mad. Exch. 221: Ley on Wards, and Liv: 1 Inſt. lib. 2. c. 4: and the abridgments tit. Garde and Gardian.

Guardian in Socage ſhall make no waſte, nor ſale of the inheritance, but keep it ſafely for the heir: and where there hath been ſome doubt of the ſufficiency of a Guardian in ſocage, the Chancery hath obliged him to give ſecurity. 2 Mod. 177. Alſo a Guardian may be ordered to enter into ſecurity by recogniſance, not to ſuffer a female infant to marry whilſt in his cuſtody; and to permit other relations to viſit her, &c. 2 Lev. 128. And the court of Chancery will make ſuch Guardian give ſecurity not to marry the infant without the court is firſt acquainted with it. 2 Chan. Rep. 237.

Before the ſtat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, Tenant in ſocage might have diſpoſed of his land, in truſt for the benefit of the heir; but it is ſaid he could not deviſe or diſpoſe of the Guardianſhip or cuſtody of the heir from the next of kin to whom the land could not deſcend, becauſe the law gave the Guardianſhip to ſuch next of kin. Keilw. 186. But now tenant in ſocage may nominate whom he pleaſes to have the cuſtody of the heir, and the land ſhall follow the Guardianſhip, as an incident given by law to attend the cuſtody; and ſuch ſpecial Guardian cannot aſſign the cuſtody by any act, the truſt being perſonal; nor ſhall it go to the executor or adminiſtrator of the Guardian, but determines by his death. Vaugh 180: Dyer 189.

As

As the law hath inveſted Guardians not with a bare authority only, but alſo with an intereſt till the Guardianſhip ceaſes; ſo it hath provided ſeveral remedies for Guardians againſt thoſe who violate that intereſt: at Common-law there were remedies both droitural and poſſeſſory, to recover the Guardianſhip. 2 Inſt. 90: 9 Co. 72.

A Guardianſhip of a minor is an intereſt in the body and lands, &c. of one within age. Guardians to infants, appointed by the court to ſue, may acknowledge ſatisfaction upon the record, for a debt recovered at law for the infant. Trin. 23 Car. 2. B. R. A Guardian in ſocage may keep courts, in the infant's manors, in his own name, grant copies, &c. He is dominus pro tempore, and hath an intereſt in the lands. Cro. Jac. 91. Such Guardian may let the land for years, and avow in his own name and right; and his leſſee for years may maintain ejectment: but he cannot preſent to an advowſon, for which he may not lawfully account; and the infant muſt preſent of whatſoever age. Cro. Jac. 98, 99. Though it is ſaid, if the infant be within the age of diſcretion, his Guardian may preſent. 8 E. 2. 10. See 1 Inſt. 89 a; and this Dict. tit. Advowſon.

In another place Lord Coke extends the doctrine ſo far as to ſay that the infant ſhall preſent whatſoever his age may be. 3 Inſt. 156. But ſome ſuppoſe the Guardian to have the right of preſenting in the name of the infant, in general; others admit the right of the infant; but add that if he be of ſuch tender years as not to have any diſcretion, then the Guardian ſhould preſent for him. Vin. Abr. tit. Guardian 2. pl. 2. But the law ſeems now ſettled in the full extent of Lord Coke's opinion; by a determination of Lord Chancellor King. An advowſon was conveyed to truſtees on truſt to preſent ſuch perſon as the grantor his heirs and aſſigns ſhould by deed appoint: and, on the principle that an infant of any age may preſent, the Chancellor confirmed an appointment by an infant heir, though it appeared that the child was not a year old, and that the Guardian guided the child's hand in making his mark and putting his ſeal. 2 Eq. Ab.; Infant B pl. 3: Vin. Abr; Collation. A. pl. 10. and ſee 3 Atk. 710. It ſtill remains however undecided whether the want of diſcretion might not induce a court of equity to controul the exerciſe of this right by an infant, in caſe a preſentation ſhould be obtained without the concurrence of his Guardian. 1 Inſt. 89 a. in n. 1.

A Guardian for nurture of the minor, appointed by will, hath power to make leaſes at will only. Cro. Eliz. 678, 734. A teſtamentary Guardian cannot make a leaſe of the infant's lands; but ſuch leaſe is abſolutely void. 2 Wilſ. 129, 135. Guardians are to take the profits of the minor's lands, &c. to the uſe of the minor, and account for the ſame: they ought to ſell all moveables in a reaſonable time, and turn them into land or money, except the minor is near of age, and may want ſuch goods himſelf: and they ſhall pay intereſt for money in their hands, which might have been put out at intereſt; in which caſe it ſhall be preſumed the Guardians made uſe of it themſelves. 3 Salk. 177.

III. The Power and reciprocal duty of a Guardian and Ward are the ſame pro tempore as that of a parent and child; but the Guardian when the Ward comes of age is bound to give him an account of all that he has tranſacted on his behalf, and muſt anſwer for all loſſes by his wilful default or negligence. In order therefore to prevent diſagreeable conteſts with young gentlemen, it has become a practice for many Guardians, of large eſtates eſpecially, to indemnify themſelves by applying to the Court of Chancery, acting under its direction and accounting annually before the officers of that court. And that court in caſe any Guardian abuſes his truſt will check and puniſh him, and ſometimes proceed to the removal of him and appoint another in his ſtead. 1 Sid. 424: 1 P. Wms. 703. See 1 Comm. 463. c. 17, and ante I. 7.

At Common-law, both a prohibition of waſte, and an action of waſte, lay againſt a guardian in chivalry and a guardian in ſocage, for voluntary, but not for permiſſive waſte, or waſte done by a ſtranger. 2 Inſt. 305.

By the Common-law, guardians in ſocage are accountable to the infant, either when he comes to the age of fourteen years, or at any time after, as he thinks fit. Co. Lit. 87. And ſo is one who is Guardian by nature after the infant's age of 21. See ante I. 1; and 1 Inſt. 886. n. 9. But the Guardian on his account, ſhall have allowance of all reaſonable expences; and if he is robbed of the rents and profits of the land, without his default or negligence, he ſhall be diſcharged thereof upon his account; for he is in the nature of a bailiff or ſervant to the infant, and undertakes no otherwiſe than for his diligence and fidelity. Co. Lit. 89 a.

But againſt a teſtamentary or other Guardian, whoſe authority doth not determine till the infant is 21, or being a female attains that age or marries, the infant cannot have action of account before; for the rule of the Common-law is that account ſhall not lie while the Guardianſhip continues. But in equity the infant may by prochein amie ſue his Guardian for an account during the minority. 2 Vern. 342: 2 P. Wms. 119: 1 Ves. 91: 3 Atk. 625.

A Guardian cannot be charged in account as a receiver: becauſe then he would loſe his coſts and expences: theſe it is ſaid being in general allowed only to Guardians and bailiffs and not to receivers. See 1 Inſt. 89 a; n. 2; 172 a.

If a Guardian takes a bond for the arrears of rent, he thereby makes it his own debt, and ſhall be charged with it. 2 Chan. Rep. 97. If a man during a perſon's infancy receives the profits of an infant's eſtate, and continues to do ſo for ſeveral years after the infant comes of age, before any entry is made on him; yet he ſhall account for the profits throughout, and not during the infancy only. 1 Eq. Abr. 280. A receiver to the Guardian of an infant, who has had his account allowed him by the Guardian, ſhall not be obliged to account over again to the infant when he comes of age. Preced. Chan. 535.

A Guardian ſhall anſwer for what is loſt by his fraud, negligence or omiſſion; but not for any caſual events, as where the thing had been well but for ſuch an accident. Litt. 123. By ſtatute Mag. Cart. 9 H. 3. c. 3, Guardians were to retain the lands till the heir comes of age, and then reſtore the ſame as fully ſtocked, &c. as received. By ſtat. 6 An. c. 18, Perſons who are Guardians or truſtees for infants holding over, without the conſent of the perſon next intitled, ſhall be adjudged treſpaſſers, and be accountable for profits, &c. By ſtat. 4 Ann. c. 16. § 27, Action of account may be brought againſt the executors or adminiſtrators of a Guardian, &c.

FORM of ELECTION of a GUARDIAN by a MINOR.

KNOW all Men by these presents, That I A. B. son and heir, of, &c. deceased, being now about the age of eighteen years, have elected and chosen, and by these presents do elect and chuse C. D. of &c. to be Guardian of my person and estate, until I shall attain the age of twenty-one years, and I do hereby promise to be ruled and governed by him in all things touching my welfare; and I do authorise and impower the said C. D. to enter upon and take possession of all and every my messuages, lands, tenements, hereditaments and premisses whatsoever, situate, lying and being in, &c. in the county of, &c. or elsewhere, whereunto I have or may have any right or title, and to let and set the same, and receive and take the rents, issues and profits thereof, for my use and benefit, during the term aforesaid; giving and hereby granting unto the said C. D. my full power in the said premisses; and whatsoever he shall lawfully do or cause to be done in the premisses, by virtue hereof, I do hereby promise to ratify and confirm. In witness, &c.

As to Orphans under the custom of London, See that title.

GARDIAN DE L' ESTEMARY, The Guardian or warden of the Stannaries, or mines in the county of Cornwall, &c. See title Stannaries.

GUARDIANS DE L' EGLISE, Churchwardens. See that title.

GUARDIANS OF THE PEACE, Those that have the keeping of the peace; wardens or conservators thereof. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. c. 3. See title Justices of the Peace.

GUARDIAN (OR WARDEN) OF THE CINQUE PORTS. A Magistrate that hath the jurisdiction of the ports or havens, which are commonly called the Cinque Ports, who has there all the authority and jurisdiction the Admiral of England has in places not exempt: and Camden believes this Warden of the Cinque Ports was first erected among us in imitation of the Roman policy, to strengthen the sea coasts against enemies, &c. Camd. Br. 238. See title Cinque Ports.

GUARDIAN OF THE SPIRITUALTIES, The person to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed, during the vacancy of the see, is called by this name. See stat. 25 H. 8. cap. 21. and also stat. 3 E. 1. c. 21, in which the word Guardian seems applicable to this officer. The Archbishop is Guardian of the Spiritualties on the vacancy of any see within his province; but when the archiepiscopal see is vacant, the dean and chapter of the archbishop's diocese are Guardians of the Spiritualties, viz. the Spiritual jurisdiction of his province and diocese is committed to them. 2 Rol. Abr. 22, 223. The Guardian of the Spiritualties it is said may be either Guardian in law, jure magistratûs, as the archbishop is of any diocese in his province; or Guardian by delegation, being he whom the archbishop or vicar general doth for the time appoint. The Guardian of the Spiritualties hath all manner of ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the courts, power of granting licences and dispensations, probate of wills, &c. during the vacancy, and of admitting and instituting clerks presented; but such Guardians cannot, as such, consecrate or ordain, or present to any benefices. See stat. 13 Eliz. c. 12: Wood's Inst. 25, 27.

GUARDIAN OF THE TEMPORALTIES. Custos Temporalium.] The person to whose custody a vacant see or abbey was committed by the King.—Who as steward of the goods and profits was to give an account to the escheator, and he into the Exchequer.—His trust continued till the vacancy was supplied, and the successor obtained the King's writ de restitutione temporalium, which was usually after consecration. Dict.

GUEST, Sax. Gest, Fr. Gist. a stage of rest in a journey. A lodger or stranger in an inn, &c. See titles Inns and Innkeepers.

GUIDAGE, Guidagium.] An old legal word, signifying that which is given for safe conduct through a strange land, or unknown country. Est guidagium quod datur alicui, ut tuto conducatur per terram alterius. Consuetud. Burgund. p. 119: 2 Inst. 526.

GUILD, from Sax. Guildan, to pay.] A fraternity or company, because every one was gildare, i. e. to pay something toward the charge and support of the company. The original of these guilds and fraternities is said to be from the old Saxon law, by which neighbours entered into an association and became bound for each other, to bring forth him who committed any crime, or make satisfaction to the party injured, for which purpose they raised a sum of money among themselves, and put into a common stock, whereout a pecuniary compensation was made according to the quality of the offence committed. From hence came our fraternities and guilds; and they were in use in this kingdom long before any formal licences were granted for them: though at this day they are a company combined together, with orders and laws made by themselves, by the prince's licence. Camd.

Guilda Mercatoria, or the Merchants' Guild, is a liberty or privilege granted to merchants, whereby they are enabled to hold certain pleas of land, &c. within their own precinct. 37 Ed. 3: 15 R. 2. King Ed. III. in the 14th year of his reign, granted licence to the men of Coventry to erect a Merchants' Guild, and also a fraternity of brethren and sisters, with a master or warden, and that they might make chantries, bestow alms, do other works of piety, and constitute ordinances touching the same, &c. And King Hen. IV. in the 4th year of his reign gave licence to found a Guild of the Holy Cross at Stratford upon Avon. Antiq. Warwickshire. 119, 522. Guild, or Gild, is also used for a tribute, or tax, an amercement, &c. 27 Ed. 3: 11 H. 6: 15 Car. 2. See Geld; and more fully titles Corporation: London.

GUILD-HALL, The chief hall of the city of London, for the Meeting of the Lord Mayor and Commonalty of the city, making laws and ordinances, holding of courts, &c. Gildarum nomine continentur non solum minores fraternitatus, sed ipsæ etiam civitatum communitates. Spelm. It also signifies the chief hall of other cities and corporate towns; the Sessions-hall in King-Street, Westminster, is called the Guild-hall.

GUILDHELDA TEUTONICORUM. The fraternity of Easterling merchants in London, called the Still-yard. See Stat. 22 Hen. 8. c. 8.

GUILD-RENTS, Rents payable to the crown, by any guild or fraternity; or such rents as formerly belonged to religious Guilds, and came to the crown at the general dissolution of monasteries, being ordered to be sold by the Stat. 22 Car. 2. cap. 6.

GUILDER, A Foreign coin: the German guilder is 3 s. 8 d. and the golden one in ſome parts of Germany 4 s. 9 d. In Portugal it paſſes for 5 s. but the Poland and Holland gelder is but 2 s. In Holland, merchants keep their accounts in Guilders, &c.

GULE OF AUGUST, Gula Auguſti, Goule d' Aout.] The day of St. Peter ad Vincula, which is celebrated on the 1ſt of Auguſt, and called the Gule of Auguſt, from the Lat. Gula a throat; for this reaſon, (as pretended) that one Quirinus, a tribune, having a daughter that had a diſeaſe in her throat, went to Pope Alexander, (the ſixth from St. Peter,) and deſired of him to ſee the chains that St. Peter was chained with under Nero, which requeſt being granted, ſhe the ſaid daughter kiſſing the chains, was cured of her diſeaſe; whereupon the Pope inſtituted this feaſt in honour of St. Peter; and, as before, this day was termed only the calends of Auguſt, it was on this occaſion called indifferently either St. Peter's day ad Vincula, from what wrought the miracle, or the Gule of Auguſt, from that part of the virgin whereon it was wrought. Durand's Rationale Divinorum, lib. 7. cap. 19. It is mentioned F. N. B. 62: Plowd. 316: Stat. Weſtm. 2. cap. 30.

GUNS. See titles Arms: Game.

GUNPOWDER. It is lawful for all perſons, as well ſtrangers as natural-born ſubjects, to import any quantities of Gunpowder or ſalt-petre, brimſtone, and other materials for the making thereof, and to make and ſell Gunpowder, &c. Stat. 16 Car. 1. cap. 21.

To obtain an excluſive patent for the ſole making or importation of gunpowder or arms, or to hinder others from importing them, incurs the penalties of præmunire by Stats. 16 Car. 1. c. 21: 1 Jac. 2. c. 8.

The Stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 61, reduces into one and repeals all former acts relative to the making, keeping, and carrying of Gunpowder.

By this act it is provided, that no perſon ſhall make gunpowder but in the regular manufactories, eſtabliſhed at the time of making the ſtatute, or licenſed by the Seſſions purſuant to the proviſions in § 13, &c. on forfeiture of the Gunpowder and 2 s. per pound, § 1.—Peſtle mills not to be uſed; on the like penalty, § 2.—Only 40 pounds of powder to be made at one time under one pair of ſtones; except battle-powder a fine fowling powder ſo called, made at Battel and elſewhere in Suſſex, §§ 3. 5.—Not more than 40 hundred weight to be dried at one time in one ſtove. § 6.—only the quantity abſolutely neceſſary for immediate uſe to be kept in or near the place of making, except in brick or ſtone magazines 50 yards at leaſt from the mill, § 7. All Gunpowder makers to have a brick or ſtone magazine near the Thames below Blackwall to keep the Gunpowder when made, on penalty of 25 l. per month; and 5 l. a day for not removing it when made, with all poſſible diligence. § 8. Charcoal not to be kept within 20 yards of the mill, § 10.—No dealer to keep more than 200 pounds of powder, nor any perſon not a dealer more than 50 pounds, in the cities of London and Weſtminſter or within 3 miles thereof; or within any other city, borough or market town or one mile thereof; or within two miles of the King's palaces or magazines, or half a mile of any parith church; on pain of forfeiture and 2 s. per pound; except in licenſed mills; or to the amount of 300 pounds for the uſe of collieries within 200 yards of them. § 12.—§§ 13, 14, 15. 16, contain proviſions reſpecting the licenſing mills, building magazines, &c.—Not more than 25 barrels to be carried in any land carriage, nor more than 200 barrels by water (unleſs going beyond ſea or coaſt-wiſe;) each barrel to contain not more than 100 pounds.—Various means are directed for the ſafe conveyance, in both caſes, and to prevent all danger and delay, § 18.—22. Juſtices of peace may ſearch mills, houſes, carriages, &c. § 23.—Outward bound ſhips to take in, and homeward bound to diſcharge their gunpowder at or below Blackwall; and be ſearched by the officers of the Trinity houſe. § 24, 5. Penalties to be recovered before two juſtices; and proſecutions to be within 14 days, § 26, 7.—General exceptions are made as to his majeſty's mills, ſtorehouſes and magazines; and as to powder ſent with the army or militia; and exported or carried coaſtwiſe below Blackwall § 29, 30.

It ſeems that erecting powder mills, or keeping magazines near a town is a nuiſance at Common-law, puniſhable by indictment or information. Stra. 1169: And ſee § 15, of the above mentioned ſtatute.

HABEAS CORPUS,

THE SUBJECT'S WRIT OF RIGHT, in cases where he is aggrieved by illegal imprisonment: Founded on the Common law, and secured by various statutes; of which the last and most powerful, the stat. 31 Car. 2. c. 2, is emphatically stiled THE HABEAS CORPUS ACT; and is at least next in importance, if not indeed as relates to modern times, superior in its beneficial effect, to Magna Charta. See 2 Inst. 55, 615: 4 Inst. 182: Cro. Jac. 543: 2 Ro. Ab. 69: Com. Journ. April 1st, 1628.

Next to Personal Security the law of England regards, asserts, and preserves, the personal Liberty of individuals against all imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law —This is a right strictly natural, and the laws of England have never abridged it without sufficient cause; nor can it ever be abridged in this kingdom at the mere discretion of the magistrate, without the explicit permission of the laws.—The language of the Great Charter is, that no freeman shall be taken or imprisoned, but by the lawful judgment of his equals, or by the law of the land. Mag. C. c. 29. And many subsequent old statutes expressly direct that no man shall be taken or imprisoned by suggestion or petition to the King or his Council, unless it be by legal indictment, or the process of the Common law. See Stats. 5 E. 3. c. 9: 25 E. 3. st. 5. c. 4: 28 Ed. 3. c. 3. By the Petition of Right, 3 Car. 1, it is enacted that no freeman shall be imprisoned or detained without cause shewn, to which he may make answer according to law.—By stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 10, if any person be restrained of his liberty, by order or decree of any illegal court, or by command of the King's Majesty in person, or by warrant of the council board, or of any of the privy council, he shall upon demand of his counsel have a writ of Habeas Corpus, to bring his body before the court of King's Bench or Common Pleas; who shall within three court days determine whether the cause of his commitment be just, and thereupon do as to justice shall appertain. And by the Habeas Corpus Act, stat. 31 C. 2. c. 2. the methods of obtaining this writ are so plainly pointed out and enforced, that so long as this statute remains unimpeached, no Subject of England can be long detained in prison, except in those cases in which the law requires and justifies such detainer: And lest this act should be evaded by demanding unreasonable Bail or sureties for the prisoner's appearance, it is declared by stat. 1 W. & M st. 2. c. 2, that excessive bail ought not to be required. 1 Comm. 135. c. 1.

Of great importance to the Public is the preservation of this personal liberty: for if once it were left in the power of any, the highest, Magistrate to imprison arbitrarily, whenever he or his officers thought proper, there would soon be an end of all other rights and immunities. And yet sometimes when the State is in real danger, even this measure may be necessary. But the happiness of our Constitution is, that it is not left to the Executive Power to determine when the danger of the State is so great as to render this measure expedient; for it is the Parliament only, or Legislative Power, consisting of King, Lords and Commons, that, wherever it sees proper, can authorize one branch of it, the Crown, by suspending the Habeas Corpus Act for a short and limited time, and in certain specified particulars, to imprison suspected persons without giving any reason for so doing. An experiment which ought only to be tried, and which we believe has never been tried, but in cases of extreme emergency: and in these the nation parts with a portion of its liberty for a while in order to preserve the whole for ever. See 1 Comm. c. 1; 136,—and this Dict. title Government; ad fin.

Having said thus much in general we may pursue our enquiries under the following heads.

I. The Nature, various kinds, and Effects of this Writ.
II. Further, by whom, and in what cases, it is grantable.
III. What shall be a Proper return of such Writ.
IV. Of Bailing, Discharging or Remanding a Prisoner, brought up on a Habeas Corpus.

For other matters connected with this subject see this Dict. titles Bail; Commitment; Arrest; Gaoler, &c. and as to the Habeas corpora Juratorum, See title Jury. I.

I. THE WRIT of Habeas Corpus is the most celebrated writ in the English law. Various kinds of it are made use of by the courts at Westminster for removing prisoners from one court into another for the more easy administration of justice.

One of those is the Habeas corpus ad respondendum, when a man hath a cause of action against one, who is confined by the process of some inferior court; in order to remove the Prisoner and charge him with this new action in the court above. 2 Mod. 198. For inferior courts being tied down to causes arising within their own jurisdiction, the party would be without remedy, unless allowed to sue in another court; but it seems, that regularly a person confined in B. R. cannot be removed to C. B. by this writ, nor vice versa; for in these cases there can be no defect of justice, as these courts have conusance as well of local, as transitory actions. Dyer 197 a: 249. pl. 84; 296, 307: 1 Mod. 235: Style Pract. Regist. 330.

The Habeas corpus ad satisfaciendum, is used when a Prisoner hath had judgment against him in an action, and the plaintiff is desirous to bring him up to some superior court to charge him with process of execution. 2 Lill. Prac. Reg. 4.

On this writ the attorney for the plaintiff must endorse the number roll of the judgment on the back of the writ. Style Regist. 331.

Habeas Corpus upon a capi, where the party is taken in execution in the court below.—So upon an attachment out of Chancery, and a capi corpus returned by the sheriff, the next step is a Habeas Corpus; for the sheriff having executed the command of the writ of attachment by taking the body, he cannot carry him out of the county without the King's writ. Dist.

Of the same nature are writs of Habeas Corpus ad prosequendum, testificandum, deliberandum, &c. which issue when it is necessary to remove a prisoner, in order to prosecute, or bear testimony in any court, or to be tried in the proper jurisdiction wherein the fact was committed. See Sty. Reg. 331, 119, 126, 230: Comb. 17, 48.

Lastly, as relates to writs of Habeas Corpus for these confined purposes, may be mentioned the common writ ad faciendum et recipiendum; which issues only in civil cases out of any of the courts in Westminster Hall, when a person is sued in some inferior jurisdiction, and is desirous to remove the action into the superior court; commanding the inferior judges to produce the body of the defendant, together with the day and cause of his caption and detainer; whence this writ is frequently denominated an Habeas Corpus cum causâ; to do and receive whatsoever the King's court shall consider in that behalf.—In this case the body is to be removed by Habeas Corpus; but the proceedings, by certiorari. 3 Bac. Abr. This is a writ grantable of common right without any motion in court; and instantly supersedes all proceedings in the court below. 2 Mod. 306. But in order to prevent the surreptitious discharge of prisoners, it is ordained by Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13, that no Habeas Corpus shall issue to remove any prisoner out of any gaol, unless signed by some Judge of the Court out of which it is awarded. And to avoid vexatious delays by removal of frivolous causes, it is enacted by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 23, that where the Judge of an inferior court of record is a barrister of three years' standing, no cause shall be removed from thence by Habeas Corpus or other writ, after issue or demurrer deliberately joined.—That no cause, if once remanded to the inferior court by writ of procedendo or otherwise, shall ever afterwards be again removed; and that no cause shall be removed at all, if the debt or damages laid in the declaration do not amount to the sum of 5 l.—But an expedient having been found out to elude the latter branch of the statute, by procuring a nominal plaintiff to bring another action for 5 l. or upwards; (when by the course of the Court the Habeas Corpus removed both actions together;) it is therefore enacted by stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 29, that the inferior court may proceed in such actions as are under the value of 5 l. notwithstanding other actions may be brought against the same defendant to a greater amount. And by stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70, no cause under the value of 10 l. shall be removed by Habeas Corpus, or otherwise, into any superior court unless the defendant so removing the same shall give special bail for payment of the debt and costs. See 3 Comm. c. 8.

No writ of Habeas Corpus, or other writ to remove a cause out of an inferior court, shall be allowed, except delivered to the Judge of the court, before the jury to try the cause have appeared, and before any of them are sworn. Stat. 3 Eliz. cap. 5.

See further, Impey's Practice in K. B. as to the mode of suing out a Habeas Corpus for the purpose of removing a Debtor to the King's Bench prison.

But the Great and efficacious Writ in all manner of illegal confinement, is that of HABEAS CORPUS AD SUBJICIENDUM: directed to the person detaining another, and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner, with the day and cause of his caption and detention, ad faciendum, subjiciendum et recipiendum; to do, submit to, and receive whatsoever the Judge or court awarding such writ shall consider in that behalf. 8 St. Tr. 142.

This is a high prerogative writ, and therefore, by the Common law, issuing out of the court of King's Bench, not only in term-time, but also during the vacation, by a fiat from the Chief Justice or any other of the Judges; and running into all parts of the King's dominions: for the King is at all times entitled to have an account why the liberty of any of his Subjects is restrained, whenever that restraint may be inflicted. Cro. Jac. 543. If it issues in vacation, it is usually returnable before the Judge himself who awarded it, and he proceeds by himself thereon, unless the term should intervene, and then it may be returned in Court. Burr. 856, 460, 542, 606.

If the party were privileged in the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer, as being, or supposed to be, an officer or suitor of the Court, this Habeas Corpus ad subjiciendum might also by Common-law have been awarded from thence. 2 Inst. 55: 4 Inst. 290: 2 Hal. P. C. 144: 2 Vent. 22. And if the cause of imprisonment were palpably illegal, they might have discharged him. Vaugh. 155. But if he were committed for any criminal matter, they could only have remanded him or taken bail for his appearance in the Court of K. B. which occasioned the Common Pleas for some-time to discountenance such applications. Carter 221: 2 Jon. 13. But since the stat. 16 Car. 2. c. 10, above recited, expressly mentioned the Courts of K. B. and C. P. as co-ordinate in this jurisdiction, it hath been holden that every Subject of the kingdom is equally entitled to the benefit of the Common-law writ in either of those courts at his option. 2 Mod. 198. It hath also been said that the like Habeas Corpus may issue out of the Court of Chancery in vacation; but upon the famous application to Lord Nottingham by Jenks, notwithstanding the most diligent searches, no precedent could be found where the chancellor had issued such a writ in vacation, and therefore his Lordship refused it. See 4 Inst. 182: 2 Hal. P. C. 147: 3 Comm. 132. c. 8.

In the King's Bench and Common Pleas it is necessary to apply for it by motion to the Court, as in the case of all other prerogative writs; (as Certiorari, Prohibition, Mandamus, &c;) which do not issue as of mere course, without shewing some probable cause why the extraordinary power of the crown is called in to the party's assistance. 2 Mod. 306: 1 Lev. 1. For, as was argued, by Lord Chief Justice Vaughan, "it is granted on motion because it cannot be had of course; and there is therefore no necessity to grant it: for the Court ought to be satisfied that the party hath a probable cause to be delivered." 2 Jon. 13. And this seems the more reasonable, because, when once granted, the person to whom it is directed can return no satisfactory excuse for not bringing up the body of the prisoner. Cro. Jac. 543. So that if it issued of mere course, without shewing to the court or Judge some reasonable ground for awarding it, a traitor or felon under sentence of death, a soldier or mariner in the the King's ſervice, a wife, a child, a relation, or a domeſtick confined for inſanity or other prudential reaſons might obtain a temporary enlargement by ſuing out an Habeas Corpus, tho' ſure to be remanded as ſoon as brought up to the Court. And therefore Coke when Chief Juſtice did not ſcruple to deny a Habeas Corpus to one confined, by the Court of Admiralty, for piracy; there appearing on his own ſhewing ſufficient grounds to confine him. 3 Bulſt. 27: and ſee 2 Ro. Rep. 138. On the other hand if a probable ground be ſhewn, that the party is impriſoned without juſt cauſe, and therefore hath a right to be delivered, the writ of Habeas Corpus is then a Writ of Right which "may not be denied, but ought to be granted to every man that is committed, or detained in priſon, or otherwiſe reſtrained tho' it be by command of the King, the privy council, or any other." Com. Journ. Ap. 1, 1628. See 2 Inſt. 615.

The perſonal liberty of the Subject, as has been already obſerved, is a natural inherent right which cannot be ſurrendered or forfeited, unleſs by the commiſſion of ſome great and atrocious crime; and which ought not to be abridged in any caſe without the ſpecial permiſſion of law. To aſſert an abſolute exemption from impriſonment in all caſes is inconſiſtent with every idea of law and political ſociety; and in the end would deſtroy all civil liberty, by rendering it's protection impoſſible: but the glory of the Engliſh law conſiſts in clearly defining the times, the cauſes, and the extent, when, wherefore, and in what degree, the impriſonment of the Subject may be lawful. This it is which induces the abſolute neceſſity of expreſſing upon every commitment the reaſon for which it is made; that the Court upon an Habeas Corpus may examine into its validity; and according to the circumſtances of the caſe may diſcharge, admit to bail, or remand the priſoner.—Yet early in the reign of Charles I. the Court of K. B. determined that they could not upon an Habeas Corpus either bail or deliver a priſoner, tho' committed without any cauſe aſſigned, in caſe he was committed by the ſpecial command of the King, or by the Lords of the privy council. 7 St. Tr. 136. This drew on a parliamentary enquiry, and produced the Petition of right 3 Car. I, already mentioned; which recites this illegal judgment, and enacts that no freeman hereafter ſhall be ſo impriſoned or detained. Some evaſions however of this ſtatute, in favour of the Crown, gave riſe to the ſtat. 16 Car. I. c. 10, already ſtated; and even after this ſome ſhifts and devices, not very creditable to the Judges of that time, were made uſe of to the ſame unpopular end. See 3 Comm. 134, 5; § 8.

Other abuſes had alſo crept into daily practice, which had in ſome meaſure defeated the benefit of this great conſtitutional remedy. The party impriſoning was at liberty to delay his obedience to the firſt writ, and might wait till a ſecond and a third, called an alias and a pluries, were iſſued, before he produced the party; and many other vexatious ſhifts were practiſed to detain State Priſoners in cuſtody. But whoever will attentively conſider the Engliſh Hiſtory may obſerve, that the flagrant abuſe of any power, by the Crown or its miniſters, has always been productive of a ſtruggle which either diſcovers the exerciſe of that power to be contrary to law, or (if legal) reſtrains it for the future. This was the caſe in the preſent inſtance. The oppreſſion of an obſcure individual gave birth to the famous HABEAS CORPUS ACT, 31 Car. 2. c. 2; which is frequently conſidered as another Magna Charta of the kingdom; and by conſequence and analogy has alſo in ſubſequent times reduced the general method of proceeding on theſe writs, (though not within the reach of that ſtatute, but iſſuing merely at the common law,) to the true ſtandard of Law and Liberty.

The Statute itſelf enacts, 1. That on complaint and requeſt in writing by or on behalf of any perſon committed and charged with any crime; (unleſs committed for Treaſon or Felony expreſſed in the warrant; or as acceſſary, or on ſuſpicion of being acceſſary, before the fact, to any petit treaſon or felony, plainly expreſſed in the warrant; or unleſs he is convicted or charged in execution by legal proceſs;) the Lord Chancellor or any of the twelve Judges, in vacation, upon viewing a copy of the warrant, or affidavit that a copy is denied, ſhall (unleſs the party has neglected for two terms to apply to any court for his enlargement,) award a Habeas Corpus for ſuch priſoner, returnable immediately before himſelf, or any of the Judges; and upon the return made, ſhall, within two days, diſcharge the party, if bailable, upon giving ſecurity to appear and anſwer to the accuſation in the proper court of Judicature.—2. That ſuch writs ſhall be indorſed, as granted in purſuance of this act, and ſigned by the perſon awarding them.—3. That the writ ſhall be returned, and the priſoner brought up within a limited time, according to the diſtance, not exceeding in any caſe twenty days; upon tender of the charges not exceeding 1*s.* per mile, and ſecurity by his own bond to pay the charges of his return, if remanded, and not to eſcape —4. That any officer or keeper neglecting to make due returns, or not delivering to the priſoner or his agent, within ſix hours after demand, a copy of the warrant of commitment, or ſhifting the cuſtody of a priſoner from one to another, without ſufficient reaſon or authority (ſpecified in the act) ſhall for the firſt offence forfeit 100 l. and for the ſecond offence 200 l. to the party grieved, and be diſabled to hold his office.—5. That no perſon once delivered by Habeas Corpus, ſhall be recommitted for the ſame offence on penalty of 500 l.—6. That every perſon committed for Treaſon or Felony ſhall, if he requires it, the firſt week of the next term, or the firſt day of the next ſeſſion of Oyer and Terminer, be indicted in that term or ſeſſion, or elſe admitted to bail; unleſs the King's witneſſes cannot be produced at that time: and if acquitted, or if not indicted and tried in the ſecond term or ſeſſion, he ſhall be diſcharged from his impriſonment for ſuch imputed offence: but that no perſon after the aſſizes ſhall be opened for the county, in which he is detained, ſhall be removed by Habeas Corpus, till after the aſſizes are ended; but ſhall be left to the juſtice of the Judges of aſſize.—7. That any ſuch priſoner may move for and obtain his Habeas Corpus, as well out of the Chancery or Exchequer, as out of the King's Bench or Common Pleas; and the Lord Chancellor or Judges denying the ſame, on ſight of the warrant, or oath that the ſame is refuſed, ſhall forfeit ſeverally to the party grieved, the ſum of 500 l.—8. That this writ of Habeas Corpus ſhall run into the counties Palatine, Cinque-ports, and other privileged places, and the iſlands of Jerſey and Guernſey.—9. That no inhabitant of England (except perſons contracting, or convicts praying, to be tranſported; or perſons having committed ſome capital offence in the place to which they are ſent to be tried;) shall be sent prisoner to Scotland, Ireland, Jersey, Guernsey, or any places beyond the seas, within or without the King's dominions: on pain that the party committing, his advisers, aiders, and assistants, shall forfeit to the party grieved, a sum not less than 500*l.* to be recovered with treble costs; shall be disabled to bear any office of trust or profit; shall incur the penalties of præmunire; and shall be incapable of the King's pardon.

This is the substance of that great and important statute, which extends (we may observe) only to the case of commitments for such criminal charge, as can produce no inconvenience to public justice by a temporary enlargement of the prisoner: all other cases of unjust imprisonment being left to the Habeas Corpus at common law. But even upon writs at the common law it is now expected by the Court, agreeable to ancient precedents, and the spirit of the act of Parliament, that this writ should be immediately obeyed, without waiting for any alias or pluries; otherwise an attachment will issue. 4 Burr. 856.

By all these admirable regulations, judicial as well as parliamentary, the remedy is now complete for removing the injury of unjust and illegal confinement. A remedy the more necessary, because the oppression does not always arise from the ill nature, but sometimes from the mere inattention, of Government. For it frequently happens in foreign countries, (and has happened in England during temporary suspensions of the statute,) that persons apprehended upon suspicion have suffered a long imprisonment, merely because they were forgotten. 3 Comm. 135, 8; c. 8.

II. IT IS CLEAR, that both by the Common law, as also by the statute, the Courts of Chancery and King's Bench have jurisdiction of awarding this writ of Habeas Corpus, and that without any privilege in the person for whom it is awarded; but it seems, that by the common law the court of King's Bench could only have awarded it in term time, but that the Chancery might have done it as well out of as in term, because that court is always open. 2 Inst. 55: 4 Inst. 290: 2 And. 297: 2 Jon. 13, 14, 17. Any of the courts at Westminster may award it. See Vaugh. 155; and the Habeas Corpus Act; Ante I.

If the Habeas Corpus issues out of Chancery, and on the return thereof the Lord Chancellor finds that the party was illegally restrained of his liberty, he may discharge him, or if he finds it doubtful, he may bail him; but then it must be to appear in the court of King's Bench, for the Chancellor hath no power in criminal causes; or the Chancellor may commit the party to the Fleet, and in term-time may propriis manibus deliver the record into the King's Bench, together with the body; and thereupon the court of King's Bench may proceed to bail, discharge, or commit the prisoner. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 247: 2 Hawk. P. C. 114, 115.

No Habeas Corpus lies for an enemy, prisoner of war, however ill used or deceived. 2 Black. Rep. 1324. Nor for a prisoner of war, the subject of a Neutral Power, taken in the enemy's service, into which he was forced, when taken prisoner by them in an English ship. 2 Burr. 765.

If sailors on board a ship are to be produced as witnesses, and have been served with a subpœna, and say they will not attend; a Habeas Corpus ad testificandum may be applied for to the Chief Justice, on affidavit of that fact, and that they are material witnesses; but without which no Habeas Corpus can issue. Comp. 672.

The Court thought there could be no Habeas Corpus to bring up a prisoner at war to be a witness. Lord Mansfield said the presence of witnesses who are prisoners of war, was generally obtained by an order from the Secretary of State: and an application was made for a Habeas Corpus to bring up such a prisoner, but without success. Afterwards a rule was granted to shew cause why the defendant should not consent either to admit of the fact of the capture, or that the prisoner should be examined upon interrogatories. Dougl. 420. (403) Furley v. Newnham.

Besides the efficacy of the writ of Habeas Corpus in liberating the Subject from illegal confinement in a public prison, it also extends it's influence to remove every unjust restraint of personal freedom in private life, though imposed by a husband or a father; but when women or infants are brought before the Court by a Habeas Corpus, the court will only set them free from an unmerited or unreasonable confinement, and will not determine the validity of a marriage, or the right to the guardianship, but will leave them at liberty to chuse where they will go; and if there be any reason to apprehend they will be seized in returning from the court, they will be sent home under the protection of an officer. But if a child is too young to have any discretion of its own, then the court will deliver it into the custody of its parent, or the person who appears to be its legal guardian. See 2 Burr. 1434; where all the prior cases are considered by Lord Mansfield. See also 1 Black. Rep. 386: Stra. 982: 2 Lord Raym. 1354: 4 Burr. 1991.

If a party be imprisoned against law, though he is intitled to a Habeas Corpus, yet he may have an action of false imprisonment, in which he shall recover damages in proportion to the injury done him. Fitz. Corpus cum Causa 2: 9 H. 6. 44 a: 2 Inst. 55: 10 H. 7. 17: 5 Co. 64: 11 Co. 98, 99.

If a person be in custody, and also indicted for some offence in the inferior court, there must, besides the Habeas Corpus to remove the body, be a certiorari to remove the record; for as the certiorari alone removes not the body, so the Habeas Corpus alone removes not the record itself, but only the prisoner with the cause of his commitment; therefore, although upon the Habeas Corpus, and the return thereof, the court can judge of the sufficiency or insufficiency of the return and commitment; and bail or discharge, or remand the prisoner, as the case appears upon the return; yet they cannot upon the bare return of the Habeas Corpus give any judgment, without the record itself be removed by certiorari: but the same stands in the same force it did, though the return should be adjudged insufficient, and the party discharged thereupon of his imprisonment; and the court below may issue new process upon the indictment. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 210, 211: 1 Salk. 352: Comb. 2.

If the Chief Justice of the King's Bench, commit one to the Marshall by his warrant, he ought not to be brought to the bar by rule, but by Habeas Corpus. 1 Salk. 349.

III. IN extrajudicial commitments, the warrant of commitment ought to be returned in hæc verba on a Habeas Corpus: but when a man is committed by a court of record, it is in the nature of an execution for a contempt, and in such case the warrant is never returned.

5 Mod.

5 Mod. 156. The cauſe of impriſonment muſt be particularly ſet forth in the return of the Habeas Corpus, or it will not be good, for by this the court may judge of it; and with a paratum habeo, that they may either diſcharge, bail, or remand the priſoner. 2 Nelſ. Abr. 915: Cro. Jac. 543. If a commitment is without cauſe, or no cauſe is ſhewn, a priſoner may be delivered by Habeas Corpus. 1 Salk. 348.

It has been adjudged, that on a commitment by the Houſe of Commons, of perſons for contempt and breach of privilege, no court can deliver on a Habeas Corpus: but Holt Ch. J. was of a contrary opinion. 2 Salk. 404, 503. See this Dict. tit. Bail II: Commitment.—A writ of error may be allowed by the King in ſuch a caſe, &c. and it is not to be denied ex debito juſtitiæ; though it has been a doubt, whether any writ of error lay upon a judgment given on a Habeas Corpus. 2 Salk 404, 503. A man may not be delivered from the commitment of a court of Oyer and Terminer, by Habeas Corpus, without writ of error: and where there appears to be good cauſe, and a defect only in the form of the commitment, he ought not to be diſcharged. 1 Salk. 348.

For a falſe return there is regularly no other remedy againſt the officer, than an action on the caſe at the ſuit of the party grieved, and an information or indictment at the ſuit of the King. 6 Mod. 90: 1 Salk. 349. But no action lies until the return be filed. 1 Salk. 352.

As upon the return of the writ the court is to judge, whether the cauſe of the commitment and detainer be according to law, or againſt it; ſo the officer or party in whoſe cuſtody the priſoner is, muſt, according to the command of the writ, certify on the return thereof, the day, cauſe of caption, and detainer. Vaugh. 137.

Where a man is committed for any crime either at common law or by act of Parliament, for which he is puniſhable by indictment, a return that he was committed, till diſcharged by due courſe of law, is good. But if the commitment be in purſuance of a ſpecial authority, the terms of the commitment muſt be ſpecial and exactly purſue that authority; and therefore if it do not appear on the return to have been according to that authority, the return will be bad. 2 Black. Rep. 806, 7.

It ſeems to be agreed, that no one can in any caſe controvert the truth of the return to a Habeas Corpus, or plead or ſuggeſt any matter repugnant to it; yet it hath been holden, that a man may confeſs and avoid ſuch a return by admitting the truth of the matters contained in it, and ſuggeſting others not repugnant, which take off the effect of them. Cro. Eliz. 821: 5 Co. 71 b. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 78.

It ſeems, that, before the return filed, any defect in form, or the want of an averment of a matter of fact, may be amended; but this muſt be at the peril of the officer, in the ſame manner as if the return were originally what it is after the amendment. 1 Mod. 102, 103.

But after the return is filed, it becomes a record of the court, and cannot be amended. 1 Mod. 102, 103.

IV. Upon the return of the Habeas Corpus the priſoner is regularly to be diſcharged, bailed or remanded; but if it be doubtful which the Court ought to do, it is ſaid that the priſoner may be bailed to appear de die in diem till the matter is determined. 5 Mod. 22: Style 16.

By the Petition of Right, 16 Car. 1. cap. 10, already mentioned, the court muſt within three days after the return of the Habeas Corpus, either diſcharge, bail or remand the priſoner. But it ſeems that a commitment by the court of King's Bench to the Marſhalſea, is a remanding, being an impriſonment within the ſtatute. 5 Mod. 22.

Alſo it hath been ruled, that the court of King's Bench, may, after the return of the Habeas Corpus is filed, remand the priſoner to the ſame gaol from whence he came, and order him to be brought up from time to time, till they ſhall have determined whether it is proper to bail, diſcharge, or remand him abſolutely. 1 Vent. 330.

And though in doubtful caſes the court is to bail, or diſcharge the party on the return of the Habeas Corpus, yet if a perſon be convicted, and the conviction on the return of the Habeas Corpus appears only defective in point of form, it is at the election of the court either to diſcharge the party, or oblige him to bring his writ of error. 1 Salk. 348: 5 Mod. 19, 20.

If a perſon be committed by the Admiralty in execution, he is not removable by Habeas Corpus into B. R. to anſwer an action brought againſt him there; but it might be otherwiſe if an action had been before depending. 1 Salk. 351. Where there is an action in B. R. precedent to the King's ſuit, on which the party is out on bail, Habeas Corpus may be brought by the bail, &c. and the priſoner turned over; though this was greatly oppoſed in favour of the King's execution. Ibid. 353.

If the Steward of an inferior court proceeds, after an Habeas Corpus delivered and allowed, the proceedings are void; and the court of B. R. will award a ſuperſedeas; and grant an attachment againſt the ſteward for the contempt. Cro. Car. 79, 256. An Habeas Corpus ſuſpends the power of the court below, ſo that if they proceed, it is void, and coram non judice. And on a Habeas Corpus, if the record be filed, no procedendo can go to the court below; but where a record below is not filed, or not returned, it may be granted. 1 Salk 352.

A Habeas Corpus cum cauſâ removes the body of the party for whom granted, and all the cauſes depending againſt him; (but ſee ſtat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 29. ante I;) and if upon the return thereof the officer doth not return all the cauſes, &c. it is an eſcape in him. 2 Lil. Abr. 2. A judge will not grant a Habeas Corpus in the vacation, for a priſoner to follow his ſuits; but the court may grant a ſpecial Habeas Corpus for a priſoner to be at his trial in the vacation-time. Ibid. 3. And the court may grant a Habeas Corpus to bring a priſoner, not in priſon on execution, out of priſon, to be a witneſs at a trial; though it is at the peril of the party ſuing out the writ, that the priſoner do not eſcape. Style 119. And where there is no colluſion, even a priſoner in execution may be brought up as a witneſs. 3 Burr. 1440. But no perſon ought to take out a Habeas Corpus for any one in priſon, without his conſent; except it be to turn him over to B. R. or charge him with an action in court. 2 Lil. A man brought into B. R. by Habeas Corpus, ſhall not be removed thence till he has anſwered there; he ſhall be detained until then, and after he may be removed. 1 Salk. 350.

A perſon is in cuſtody upon a criminal, and alſo on a civil, matter; if he would move himſelf by Habeas Corpus, there there ought to be but one Habeas Corpus on the crown side or plea side, and both causes are to be returned. Mod. Cas. 133. If there be judgment against a defendant in the court of B. R. and another in C. B. on which he is in execution in the Fleet, he may have an Habeas Corpus to remove himself into B. R. where he shall be in custody of the Marshal for both debts. Dyer, 132.

Where an action is founded on the custom of London, for a thing actionable there, and not elsewhere; if it be removed by Habeas Corpus, a procedendo shall be granted: but the declaration itself ought to be returned upon the Habeas Corpus, and then the court will see what was the cause, &c. For the special matter and all the proceedings are to be in the return in this case; as well as in an action on a by-law, to take notice thereof. Carth. 75, 76. Before a Habeas Corpus is returned and filed, it may be amended; but not afterwards. 2 Lil. Abr. 2.

A feme covert was arrested in London, as a sole-trader, and discharged, by a judge of B. R. on Habeas Corpus, bail being put in to appear in B. R. The next term, on motion, the court granted a procedendo, affidavit of plaintiff's cause of action, &c. being made; for plaintiff could only proceed in London. See Lavie v. Phillips; 3 Bur. 1776; wherein the reason of the procedendo being granted, is fully discussed and determined.

HABENDUM. See title Deed. II. 4.

In a lease or grant to two persons, if the habendum be to one for life, and the remainder to the other for life, this alters the general implication of the jointenancy, which would pass by the premisses, if the habendum were not. 2 Rep. 55. And where things which lie in grant are conveyed, to take effect barely on delivery of the deed of grant, without other ceremony; in such case, if the habendum be for a less estate than in the premisses, or be repugnant to it, the habendum is void: but when any ceremony is requisite to the perfection of an estate granted, and not a bare delivery only of the deed; and to the estate limited by the habendum, nothing is required to perfect it; there, though the habendum is of a less estate than the premisses, the habendum shall stand good, and qualify the estate granted in the premisses. 2 Rep. 23.

An habendum may not only qualify what is granted in the premisses; but it may also enlarge what it thus granted, or explain the premisses: though the habendum shall never introduce one who is a stranger to the premisses. 1 Jones 4: 3 Leon. 60. If a bargain and sale be made without expressing to whom, although it were habendum to A. B. who is a party to the deed, it is not good; because the habendum is only to limit an estate, and not to give any thing. Cro. Eliz. 585. 903: 2 Lil 8: If one thing be granted in the premisses of a deed, habendum with another thing, which is not appendant, &c. this other thing shall not pass. Hob. 161, 172. None can take by any deed, who is not named in the premisses: but though an estate limited by the habendum to a man that is no party, is void by way of estate, it may be good in remainder. Hob. 313: Godb. 51.

HABENTIA, Riches: In some ancient charters, habentes homines is taken for rich men; and we read, Nec Rex suum pastum requirat, vel habentes homines quos nos dicimus feasting men. Mon. Angl. Tom. 1. p. 100.

HABERDASHERS. If any persons work hats with foreign wool, and not having served an apprenticeship to the trade, &c. they shall forfeit the goods and 5*l.* And no person may dye any caps with bark, &c. but only with copperas and gall, or woad and madder. Stat. 8 Eliz. cap. 7. None shall make hats or felts, that hath not served seven years in felt-making; nor retain any but journeymen who have lawfully served; or have above two apprentices at once, and those not for less than seven years time, &c. on pain of 5*l.* a month: but hat-makers may employ their own children in the trade.—And the masters and wardens of Haberdashers in London, calling to them one of the company of Cappers, and another of the Hat-makers, and mayors, &c. of towns and corporations, may search all hatters and punish them that offend, by fines. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 17. To prevent the exportation of hats out of the plantations abroad, which may be seized, and offenders are liable to 500*l.* penalty; and for regulating the trade of hat-making there; &c. See stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 22, and this Dict. title Navigation Acts.

HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM, A judicial writ that lies where one hath recovered a term for years in action of ejectione firmæ, to put him into possession. F. N. B. 167. And one may have a new writ, if a former be not well executed. Mich. 21 Car. 1. B. R. A sheriff delivered possession in the morning, by virtue of an habere facias possessionem, and some time in the same day, after he was gone, the defendant turned the plaintiff out of possession; it was held, that if he had been turned out immediately, or whilst the sheriff or his officers were there, an attachment might be granted against the defendant; for this had been a disturbance in contempt of the execution; but it being several hours after the plaintiff was in possession, the court doubted, but agreed to grant a new habere facias, &c. 1 Salk. 321.

If the sheriff deliver possession of more than is contained in the writ of habere facias possessionem, an action on the case will lie against him, or an assise for the lands. Style 238. The sheriff cannot return upon this writ that another is tenant of the land by right, but must execute the writ, for that will not come in issue between the demandant and him. 6 Rep. 52. See this Dict. titles Ejectment: Execution.

HABERE FACIAS SEISINAM. A writ directed to the sheriff, to give seisin of a freehold estate recovered in the King's courts, by ejectione firmæ, or other action. Old Nat. Br. 154. The sheriff may raise the posse comitatus in his assistance, to execute these writs: and where a house is recovered in a real action, or by ejectment, the sheriff may break open the doors to deliver possession and seisin thereof; but he ought to signify the cause of his coming, and request that the doors may be opened. 5 Rep. 91. This writ also issues sometimes out of the records of a fine, to give the cognisee seisin of the land whereof the fine is levied. West. Symb. par. 2. And there is a writ called Habere Facias Seisinam, ubi Rex habuit annum, diem & vastum; for the delivery of lands to the Lord of the fee, after the King hath had the year, day, and waste in the lands of a person convict of felony. Reg. Orig. 156. See title Execution.

HABERE FACIAS VISUM, A writ that lies in divers cases in real actions, as in formedon, &c. where a view is required to be taken of the lands in controversy. Reg. Jud. 26, 28, &c. F. N. B. See title Jury.

HAKETON, A military coat of defence. Walſ. in Ed. 3.

HALF-BLOOD, Is no impediment to deſcents of fee-ſimple lands of the crown, or to dignities, or in deſcent of eſtates tail: but in other caſes it is an impediment. Adminiſtration is grantable to the Half Blood of the deceaſed, as well as to the whole blood; and Half-Blood ſhall come in for a ſhare of an inteſtate's perſonal eſtate, equally with the whole blood, they being next of kin, in equal degree. Style 74: 1 Vent. 307: Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 10. See titles Deſcent: Executor.

HALFENDEAL, The moiety, or one half of a thing; as fardingdeal is a quarter, or fourth part of an acre of land, &c.

HALF-MARK, Dimidia Markæ.] A noble, or ſix ſhillings-and eight-pence in money. If a writ of right is brought, and the ſeiſin of the plaintiff, or his anceſtor, be alledged, the ſeiſin is not traverſable by the defendant, but he muſt render the Half Mark for the inquiry of the ſeiſin: which is as much as to ſay, that though the defendant ſhall not be admitted to deny, that the plaintiff or his anceſtors were ſeiſed of the land in queſtion, and to prove his denial; yet he may be allowed to tender half a mark in money, to have an inquiry made, whether the plaintiff, &c. were ſo ſeiſed, or not. F. N. B. 5: Old Nat. Br. 25. But in a writ of advowſon brought by the King, the defendant may be permitted to traverſe the ſeiſin, by licence, obtained from the King's ſerjeant; ſo that the defendant ſhall not be obliged to proffer the Half Mark, &c. F. N. B. 31.

HALF-SEAL, Is what is uſed in the Chancery, for ſealing of commiſſions to delegates, upon any appeal to the court of delegates, either in eccleſiaſtical or marine cauſes. Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 5.

HALLAMSHIRE, A part of the county of York, anciently ſo called in which the town of Sheffield ſtands. See ſtat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 23.

HALLMOTE or HALLIMOTE, Sax. Heall, i. e. Aula, & Gemote, Conventus.] That court among the Saxons, which we now call a court baron; and the etymology is from the meeting of the tenants of one hall or manor. The name is ſtill kept up in ſeveral places in Herefordſhire; and in the records of Hereford, this court is entered as follows, viz. Hereford Palatium, ad Halimot ibidem tent' 11 Die Octob. Anno Regni Regis Hen. 6, &c. It hath been ſometimes taken for a convention of citizens in their public hall, where they held their courts, which was alſo called Folkmote and Halmote: But the word Halimote is rather the lord's court held within the manor, in which the differences between the tenants were determined. See Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 10.

HALYMOTE, Is properly an holy or eccleſiaſtical court; but there is a court in London, formerly held on the Sunday next before St. Thomas's day, called the halymote or holy court, Curia Sanctimonûs, for regulating the bakers of the city, &c. Blount. See title London.

HALYWERCFOLK, Holyworkfolk, or people who enjoyed lands by the ſervice of repairing or defending a church or ſepulchre; for which pious labours they were exempt from all feodal and military ſervices. It did ſignify ſuch of the province of Durham in particular, as held their lands to defend the corpſe of St. Cuthbert; and who claimed the privilege not to be forced to go out of the biſhoprick, either by the King or Biſhop. Hiſt. Dunelm. apud Wartoni Ang. Sax. par. 1. p. 749: Mon. Angl. 1, 512: Blount.

HAM, A Saxon word, uſed for a place of dwelling; a village or town: hence the termination of ſome of our towns, as Nottingham, Buckingham, &c. Alſo a home cloſe, or little narrow meadow is called ham. Blount.

HAMBLING or HAMELING or DOGS, The ancient term uſed by foreſters for expeditating. Manwood.

HAMBURGH COMPANY. This, the oldeſt of our Trading Companies and heretofore more uſually called Merchants Adventurers, took warning from the repeated complaints made of their monopoly (the laſt of which was in 1661) and facilitated the admiſſion by private regulations made by themſelves. Add to this, it was, like the Hudſon's Bay Company without any parliamentary ſanction; and had not been able even during the reigns of Charles II. and James II. to protect its excluſive privileges againſt the ſeparate adventurers. See Reeves's Law of Shipping and Navigation.

HAMESECKEN. Burglary or nocturnal houſe breaking, was by our antient law called Hameſecken, as it is in Scotland to this day. 4 Comm. 223. See tit. Burglary.

HAMFARE, Breach of the peace in a houſe. Brompton in Legibus H. 1. c. 80. See Homeſoken.

HAMLET; HEMEL; HAMPSEL, From the Sax. Ham, i. e. Domus, and Germ. Let, Membrum.] A little village, or part of a village or pariſh; of which three words, hamlet is now only uſed; though Kitchen mentions the other two, Hamel and Hamſel. By Spelman there is a difference between villam integram, villam dimidiam, and hamletam; a hamlet being quæ medietatem friborgi non obtinuit, hoc eſt, ubi 5 capitales plegii non deprehenſi ſint. Stowe expounds it to be the ſeat of a freeholder. Several country towns have hamlets, as there may be ſeveral hamlets in a pirith; and ſome particular places may be out of a town or hamlet, though not out of the county. Weſt. 3.

HAMSOCA or HAMSOKEN. See Homeſoken.

HANAPER OFFICE. One of the offices ſo called, belonging to the Court of Chancery. Writs relating to the buſineſs of the Subject and their returns, were, according to the ſimplicity of ancient times, originally kept in an hamper, in hanaperio; and the others, relating to ſuch matters wherein the Crown is immediately, or mediately concerned, were preſerved in a little ſack or bag, in parvâ bagâ; and thence hath ariſen the diſtinction, of the Hanaper Office, and petty-bag office, which both belong to the Common-law Court in Chancery. 3 Comm. 49. See title Chancery.

HANDY-WARP, A kind of cloth. Stat. 4 & 5 Ph. & M. c. 5.

HANGWITE alias HANGWIT, From Sax. Hangan, i. e. ſuſpendere, & wite, mulcta.] A liberty granted to a perſon, whereby he is quit of a felon or thief hanged without judgment; or eſcaped out of cuſtody. Raſtal. We read it interpreted to be quit de laron pendu ſans ſerjeans le Roy, i. e. without legal trial: and elſewhere, mulcta pro latrone præter juris exigentiam ſuſpenſo vel elapſo. And it may ſignify a liberty, whereby a lord challenges the forfeiture for him who hangs himſelf within the lord's fee. Domeſday.

HANIG, A term for cuſtomary labour to be done and performed. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 264.

HANPER or HANAPER, Haniperium.] The Hanaper of the Chancery; it ſeems to be the ſame as fiſcus originally in the Latin. 10 R. 2. c. 1. See Hanaper.

HANSE, An old Gothick word.] A Society of Merchants, for the good uſage and ſafe paſſage of merchandiſe from one kingdom to another. The Hanſe or mercatorum ſocietas, was and in part yet is endowed with many large privileges by Princes within their territories; and had four principal ſeats or Staples, where the Almain, or German and Dutch merchants, being the founders of this ſociety, had an eſpecial houſe: one of which was here in London, called the Steel-Yard. Ortelius's Index ad Theatr. verbo Aſiatici.

HANS TOWNS, Probably from the German Hanſa, i. e. Societas.

Towards the middle of the thirteenth century, the nations around the Baltick were extremely barbarous, and infeſted that ſea with their piracies: this obliged the cities of Lubeck and Hamburgh, ſoon after they began to open ſome trade with theſe people, to enter into a league of

of mutual defence. They derived such advantages from this union, that other towns acceded to their confederacy, and in a short time eighty of the most considerable cities scattered through those vast countries which stretch from the bottom of the Baltick, to Cologne on the Rhine, joined in the famous Hanseatic league, which became so formidable, that its alliance was courted, and its enmity dreaded by the greatest monarchs. The members of this powerful association formed the first systematic plan of commerce, known in the middle ages, and conducted it by common laws enacted in their general assemblies. Robertson's Hist. Emp. Char. V. 1 V. 79, 80. See Id. fo. 336.

HANTELODE, An arrest, from the Germ. Hant, an hand, and load, i e. laid; manûs immissio: As arrests are made by laying hold on the debtor, &c.

HAP, Fr. Happer, i. e. Rapere, to catch.] Is of the same signification with us as in the French; as to hap the rent, is where partition being made between two parceners, and more land allowed to one than the other, she that has most of the land charges it to the other, and she haps the rent, whereon assise is brought, &c. This word is used by Littleton, where a person happeth the possession of a deed poll. Lit. § 8.

HAQUE, A little hand gun, prohibited to be used by stats. 33 H. 8. c. 6: 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 14. There is the half haque or demy haque, within those acts. See titles Arms: Game.

HAQUEBUT, A bigger sort of hand-gun than the haque, from the Teuton, hacke luyse; it is otherwise called an harquebus, vulgarly a hagbut. See Stats. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 14: 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2. and titles Arms: Game.

HARATIUM, From the Fr. Haras.] A race of horses and mares, kept for breed; in some parts of England termed a stud of mares. &c. Spelm. Gloss.

HARBINGER, An officer of the King's house, &c.

HARBOURS AND HAVENS. Upon the principles of our constitution which places the Executive Power in the hands of the Monarch, the King has the prerogative of appointing Ports and Havens or such places only, for persons and merchandise to pass into and out of the realm, as he in his wisdom seems proper. By the feodal law all navigable rivers and havens were computed among the regalia and were subject to the Sovereign of the State. And in England it hath always been holden, that the King is lord of the whole shore, and particularly is the guardian of the ports and havens, which are the inlets and gates of the realm. F. N. B. 113: Dav. 9, 56. Therefore as early as the reign of King John, we find ships seized by the King's officers for putting in at a place that was not a legal port. Madox. Hist. Exc. 530. These legal ports were undoubtedly at first assigned by the crown; since to each of them a court of portmote is incident, the jurisdiction of which must flow from the royal authority. 4 Inst. 148. The great ports of the sea are also referred to, as well known and established by stat. 4 Hen. 4. c. 20, which prohibits the landing elsewhere under pain of confiscation: and the Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 11. recites that the franchise of lading and discharging had been frequently granted by the crown.

But though the King had a power of granting the franchise of havens and ports, yet he had not the power of resumption or of narrowing and confining their limits when once established; but any person had a right to lade or discharge his merchandize in any part of the haven: whereby the revenue of the customs was much impaired and diminished, by fraudulent landings in obscure and private corners. This occasioned the Stats. 1 Eliz. c. 11: 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. § 14; which enabled the Crown by commission to ascertain the limits of all Ports, and to assign proper Wharfs and Quays in each port, for the exclusive landing and lading of merchandize. 1 Comm. 264. c. 7. See further this Dict. tit. Navigation Acts.

By the Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 22, If any master of a ship shall cast out of any ship, riding in any haven, &c. any ballast, &c. but only on land, where the tide never flows or runs, he may be fined by the justices, not more than 5 l. nor less than 40 s. As soon as any ship shall be sunk, stranded, or run on shore in any harbour, &c. or be brought or drove in, or be there in a ruinous condition, and there be suffered to remain, and the owner shall begin to carry away the rigging; on summons of the owner, or commander, a justice may seize the ship, &c. and by sale thereof raise money to clear the harbour.

Many other acts of parliament have been made for repairing and improving particular harbours and havens of this kingdom; such as stats. 23 Hen. 8. cap. 7: 27 H. 8. c. 23; relating to the havens and ports of Plymouth, Portsmouth, Falmouth, &c. in Devonshire and Cornwall; and none shall labour in tin works, near rivers of those havens, but shall prevent the fall of stones and gravel therein.—Casting and unlading ballast, rubbish, &c. in any harbour, haven, or road, incurred a penalty of 5 l. by stat. 34 Hen. 8. cap. 9.—The Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 1, was for repairing Orford haven in Suffolk; and Stats. 13 & 14 Car. 2: 4 Geo. 1. c. 13, &c. for the reparation of Dover harbour, &c. And duties are granted by these statutes, towards effecting thereof. Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 14, was made for opening Southwold haven in Suffolk. Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 18, was made for improving Sunderland harbour in Durham. See Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 8, for improving and inlarging the harbour of Leith.

HAW, A ſmall parcel of land ſo called in Kent; as a Hemphaw or Beanhaw, lying near the houſe, and incloſed for thoſe uſes. Sax. Dict. But Sir Edward Coke, in an ancient plea concerning Feverſham in Kent, ſays Hawes are houſes. Co. Lit. 5. See Haga, Haia.

HAWGH or HOWGH, A green plot in a valley; a word uſed in the North of England. Camd.

HAWBERK alias HAWBERT, Fr. i. e. Lorica.] He who held lands in France by finding a coat or ſhirt of mail, and to be ready with it when he ſhall be called, was ſaid to have hauberticum feudum, Fief de Haubert: and Hawberk, with our anceſtors, had the ſame ſignification, and ſo it ſeems to be uſed in the ſtat. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 6.

HAWKS. The ſtealing of an hawk, or concealing it, after proclamation made by the ſheriff, is felony with clergy: But this extends only to long-winged Hawks, of the kind of falcons; and not to gos hawks or ſparrow hawks. Stats. 34 Ed. 3. c. 22: 37 Ed. 3. c. 19: 3 Inſt. 97. None ſhall kill, or ſcare away, any hawks from the coverts where they uſe to breed, on pain of 10 l. to be recovered before juſtices of the peace, and divided between the King and proſecutor. Stat. 11 Hen. 7. cap. 17. A Hawk taken up, muſt be delivered to the ſheriff, if taken up by a mean perſon to be proclaimed in the towns of the county, &c. An action of trover and converſion lies for an Hawk reclaimed, and which may be known by her vervels, bells, &c. See further title Game.

HAWKERS. Thoſe deceitful fellows who went from place to place, buying and ſelling braſs, pewter, and other goods and merchandize, which ought to be uttered in open market, were of old ſo called; and the appellation ſeems to grow from their uncertain wandering, like perſons that with Hawks ſeek their game where they can find it. They are mentioned in Stat. 33 Hen. 8. cap. 4.

HAWKERS, PEDLARS and PETTY CHAPMEN, are ſuch perſons as travel from town to town with goods and merchandize, and are under the control of Commiſſioners who are to licence them for that purpoſe under ſtats. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 25: 29 Geo. 3. c. 26.

Traders in the linen and woollen manufactures, ſending their goods to markets and fairs, and ſelling them by wholeſale; makers of goods, ſelling thoſe of their own making; and makers and ſellers of Engliſh bone-lace, going from houſe to houſe, &c. are excepted out of the acts, and not to be taken as Hawkers. Stats. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 4: 4 Geo. 1. c. 6.—and ſee ſtat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 26. § 20.

Hawkers of news papers, pamphlets, &c. are expreſsly excepted in the ſtatutes from the proviſions and regulations applied to other hawkers.—See titles News-papers, Stamps, &c. The ſtat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 26, directs that Hawkers, Pedlars, &c. ſhall pay a duty of 4 l. per year for a licence for themſelves and 4 l. more for every beaſt employed by them.—Before obtaining this licence each of them is to produce a certificate ſigned by a clergyman and two reputable inhabitants in his place of reſidence of his good behaviour. §§ 3, 5, 6, 7.

Selling one parcel of ſilk handkerchiefs, ſhall not make a man a hawker or pedlar. Burr. 609.

The ſaid Stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 26; alſo provides that ſuch hawkers ſhall not ſell their things by auction; that the words Licenſed Hawker ſhall be marked on all packs, boxes, waggons, ſhops, and handbills uſed by ſuch hawkers on penalty of 10 l. a like penalty is impoſed on unlicenſed hawkers ſo marking their packs, &c. §§ 8, 9.—Hawkers ſelling ſmuggled goods ſhall forfeit their licenſe and be incapable of having another granted them. § 10.—The Stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 43, prohibiting hawkers to carry foreign cambrick or lawn is repealed by Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. § 23: c. 32. § 19. See title Cambrick.

Trading without a licence, or refuſing to ſhew it, incurs a penalty of 12 l. half to the informer, and half to the poor; or on non-payment to ſuffer as a vagrant. Stats. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 27. § 3: 3 & 4 Ann. c. 4. § 4.—Under Stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 26. § 11, the penalty is 10 l. half to the King and half to the informer.—Hawkers refuſing to produce their licences, or lending or borrowing licences, to forfeit 40 l. And they may be detained till they produce their licences. Stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 26. §§ 13, 14.—Counterfeiting licences 50 l. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 27. § 5.—100 l. Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 5.

Hawkers not to ſell in cities or market towns where they do not reſide, except on fairs or market days. §§ 16, 17. See 2 Term Rep. 273.

If Hawkers and pedlars, offer any tea, or ſpirituous liquors to ſale, though they have permits, the ſame may be ſeized as forfeited; By Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 35.

HAY, Haya, Fr. Haye.] A hedge or incloſure; alſo a net to take game, See Haia.

HAY-BOTE, A liberty to take thorns and other wood, to make and repair hedges, gates, fences, &c. either by tenant for life or years: it is alſo ſaid to be wood, for the making of rakes and forks, with which men make hay. See Co. Litt. 41; and title Bote.

HAY

HAY AND STRAW, AND HAY-MARKET. Carts of Hay, which ſtand to be ſold in the Hay-Market, are to pay 3 d. and ſtraw 1 d. per load; and ſhall not ſtand loaden with Hay after three o'clock in the afternoon, &c. on pain of forfeiting 5 s. Hay ſold in London, &c. between the firſt of June and the laſt of Auguſt, being new Hay is to weigh 60 pounds a truſs; and old Hay the reſt of the year 56 pounds, under the penalty of 1 s. 6 d. for every truſs offered to ſale, &c. See further as to Hay and Straw, Stats. 2 W. & M. ſt. 2. c. 8. §§ 16, 17: 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 17. § 1: 31 Geo. 2. c. 40.—Whitechapel Hay-Market under Stat. 11 Geo. 3. c. 15, is to be held from 7 in the morning to 1 in the afternoon, from Lady-day to Michaelmas, and from 8 to 12 during the other half-year.

HAYWARD, From the Fr. Haye, ſepes, & Garde, Cuſtodia.] One who keeps a common herd of cattle of a town; and the reaſon of his being called Hayward may be, becauſe one part of his office is to ſee that they neither break nor crop the hedges of incloſed grounds, or for that he keeps the graſs from hurt and deſtruction. He is an officer appointed in the Lord's Court; And is to look to the fields, and impound cattle that do treſpaſs therein; to inſpect that no pound breaches be made, and if any be, to preſent them at the leet, &c. Kitch. 46. There may be a cuſtom in a manor, to have a ſurveyor of the fields or Hayward, and for him to diſtrain cattle damage-feaſant. See Agillarius.

HAZARD, An unlawful game at dice: and thoſe who play at it are called Hazaaors: Plac. Trin. 2 Hen. 4. Suſſex 10. See title Gaming.

HEADBOROW, OR HEADBOROUGH, From Sax. Head, caput, & Borge, fidejuſſor.] Signifies him who is head of the frank-pledge in boroughs; and who had a principal government within his own pledge: as he was called Headborough, ſo he was alſo ſtiled borowhead, borſholder, third-borough, tithingman, &c. according to the uſage and diverſity of ſpeech in ſeveral places. Lamb. Theſe Headboroughs were the chief of the ten pledges; the other nine being denominated handborows, or inferior pledges: Headborows are now a kind of conſtables. See this Dict. titles Conſtable: Tithing.

HEADLAND, The upper part of ground left for the turning of the plough; whence the headway. Paroch. Antiq. 587.

HEAD-PENCE, Was an exaction of a certain ſum heretofore collected by the ſheriff of Northumberland of the inhabitants of that county, without any account therefore to be made to the King; which was aboliſhed by Stat. 23 H. 6. c. 7.

HEAD-SILVER, Paid to lords of leets. See Common Fine.

HEALFANG OR HALSFANG, From Sax. Hals, Collum, and Fang, capere.] That puniſhment, quâ alicui collum ſtringatur. Colliſtrigium. The Pillory. Sometimes it is taken for a pecuniary mulct, to commute for ſtanding in the pillory; payable to the King or Chief Lord. Leg. H. 1. cap. 11.

HEALTH, Injuries to.] Injuries affecting a man's health, are whereby any unwholeſome practices of another a man ſuſtains any apparent damage in his vigor or conſtitution. As by ſelling him bad proviſions or wine; 1 Rol. Abr. 90; by the exerciſe of a noiſome trade, which infects the air in his neighbourhood; 9 Rep. 57: Hut. 135; or by the neglect, or unſkilful management of his phyſician, ſurgeon or apothecary. For it hath been ſolemnly reſolved, that mala praxis is a great miſdemeanor and offence at Common-law, whether it be for curioſity and experiment, or by neglect; becauſe it breaks the truſt which the party had placed in his phyſician, and tends to his deſtruction. Ld. Raym. 214. Theſe are wrongs or injuries unaccompanied by force, for which there is a remedy in damages, by ſpecial action of treſpaſs on the caſe. 3 Comm. 122.

As to offences againſt the public health of the nation, there are various proviſions, as with reſpect to the plague. Stats. 1 Jac. 1. c. 31: 26 Geo. 2. c. 6: 29 Geo. 2. c. 8. See title Plague. As to unwholeſome proviſions, 51 Hen. 3. ſtat. 6: Ord. pro Piſtor. c. 7: 12 Car. c. 25. See titles Butchers: Bakers: Wines: Cattle, &c.

HEARTH-MONEY, A tax formerly levied, but now aboliſhed. Vid Chimney-Money.

HEBBER-MEN, Fiſhermen, or poachers below London Bridge, who fiſh for whitings, ſmelts, &c. commonly at ebbing water; mentioned in one of the articles of the Thames Jury, at the court of Conſervancy of the river Thames, printed anno 1632. And thoſe perſons are puniſhable by Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 15. See title London.

HEBBING-WEARS, Are wears or engines made or laid at ebbing water. Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 5. See title Sewers.

HEBDOMAS, Lat.] A week. See Week.

HEBDOMADIUS, The week's man, canon or prebendary in the cathedral church, who hath the care of the choir, and the officers belonging to it, for his own week. Reg. Epiſc. Hereford. MS. See Ebdomadarius.

HECK, An engine to take fiſh in the river Ouſe. Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 18.

HECCAGIUM, Is ſuppoſed to be rent paid to the lord of the fee for liberty to uſe the engines called Hecks.

HEDA, A ſmall haven, wharf, or landing place. Domeſd. See Hith.

HEDAGIUM, Toll or cuſtomary duties paid at the hith or wharf, for the landing goods, &c. from which exemption was granted by the King to ſome particular perſons and ſocieties. Cartular. Abbat. de Radings, MS. f. 7.

HEDGE-BOTE, Is neceſſary ſtuff to make hedges, which the leſſee for years, &c. may of common right take in his ground leaſed. See Hay-bote: Bote.

HEDGE-BREAKERS. By the Stat. 43 Eliz. cap. 7. Hedge-breakers, &c. ſhall pay ſuch damages as a juſtice of peace ſhall think fit; and if not able to pay the damages, ſhall be committed to the conſtable to be whipped. And by Stat. 15 C. 2. c. 2, conſtables, and others, may apprehend perſons ſuſpected of Hedge-ſtealing, and carry them before a juſtice; where not giving a good account how they came by wood, &c. they are not only to make ſuch recompence as the juſtice of peace ſhall adjudge, but pay a ſum not exceeding 10 s. for the uſe of the poor, or be ſent to the houſe of correction for a month; perſons convicted of buying ſtolen wood, ſhall forfeit treble value to him from whom taken. See title Woods.

HEIR,

HÆRES; AB HÆREDITATE.] Is One ex juſtis nuptiis procreatus, who ſucceeds by deſcent to lands, tenements and hereditaments, being an eſtate of inheritance. The eſtate muſt be Fee, becauſe nothing paſſeth jure hæreditatis but Fee; and by the Common-law a man cannot be Heir to goods goods and chattels: Tho' the civilians call him hæredem, qui ex teſtamento ſuccedit in univerſum jus teſtatoris.

Heirs, are included in the word aſſigns in grants, &c. If a woman keeps lands from the Heir, on pretence of being big with child by the Heir's anceſtor, her deceaſed huſband, the writ de ventre inſpiciendo is to be granted to ſearch her, &c. that the heir be not defrauded. F. N. B. 227.

Heirs may have divers writs, as writ of Mortdanceſter, Entre ad communem legem, In caſu proviſo, and conſimili caſu, quod permittat, &c. The Heir may bring an ejectment of copyhold lands before admittance. 2 Wilſ. 14.

I. Some Writers have made a diſtinction of Hæres ſanguinis, & hæreditatis; a man may be hæres ſanguinis to a father or anceſtor, and yet upon diſpleaſure, be defeated of his inheritance: And there is an ultimus hæres, being he to whom lands come by eſcheat, for want of lawful heir, &c. i. e. The Lord of whom the lands are held, or the King. Bract. lib. 7. cap. 17. See title Eſcheat: Tenure. But the moſt uſual diviſion is, that of Heir apparent; Heir preſumptive; (as to both which ſee title Deſcent. Canon 1;) Heir general; Heir ſpecial; Heir by cuſtom; and Heir by deviſe, called Hæres factus.

Bonds and bargains with an Heir apparent, &c. to have double or treble the money lent, after his father's death, &c. are ſet aſide in equity; but it is by paying what was lent bona fide, with intereſt, if the obligor applies for relief; though in caſe the obligee ſues, he ſhall not recover what was really lent; for that would be to aſſiſt fraud. 1 Vern. 141, 359. Where young Heirs enter into any bond, Chancery relieves againſt it, without evidence of actual impoſition; becauſe there is a ſuppoſed diſtreſs, and preſumption of a liableneſs to be impoſed on. Barnardiſt. 481. See Treat. Eq.

A deviſee under a will defectively executed repreſented the will as duly executed, and for a ſmall ſum gained a releaſe from the Heir; the releaſe was ſet aſide. 1 P. Wms. 239.—So where a ſon, who on his father's death was remainder-man in tail, ſold his remainder at an under rate, the Court of Chancery ſet aſide the conveyance. Id. 310.

The rule upon which Courts of Equity in theſe caſes proceed, is not merely in reſpect of the age of the Heir contracting. 3 P. Wms, 131. In Wiſeman v. Beake, Mr. Wiſeman was nearly 40 years of age, and a Proctor in the Commons: In Curwyn v. Milner the Heir was about 27 years of age; and in Gwynne v. Heaton the plaintiff was 23 years old; which tho' not an advanced age, is beyond that which the law recogniſes as the age of diſcretion. But the real object which the rule propoſes is, to reſtrain the anticipation of expectancies, which muſt from its very nature furniſh to deſigning men an opportunity to practiſe upon the inexperience or paſſions of a diſſipated man. And this being the object of the rule, its operation is not confined to Heirs, but extends to all perſons, the preſſure of whoſe wants may be conſidered as obſtructing the exerciſe of that judgment which might otherwiſe regulate their dealings. 2 Vern. 346: Forreſt. 111: 2 Atk. 34. and ſee 2 Vez. 281. 516: 1 Wilſ. 229; and this Dict. titles Fraud: Agreement.

It has been ſaid that if the Heir has no maintenance from the father, but is turned out upon unreaſonable diſpleaſure, there perhaps, the bargain, if not exceſſively beyond the proportion of ſuch aſſurances ſhall ſtand; becauſe it is not to ſupply the luxury and prodigality of the Heir, but to keep him from ſtarving. Treat. Eq. c. 2. § 12. But in Gwynne v. Heaton, Thurlow, C. was of opinion, that this circumſtance was intitled to no weight whatever: nor does there appear to be any caſe in which ſuch difference has been proceeded upon by the Court of Chancery; and there are ſeveral caſes where it has been entirely diſregarded. See 2 Ch. Ca. 120: 1 P. Wms. 310: 1 Wils. 320.

Heir general. The Heir general or Heir at Common-law is he who after his father or anceſtor's death hath a right to, and is introduced into, all his lands, tenements and hereditaments. But he muſt be of the whole blood, not a baſtard, alien, &c.

None but the Heir general, according to the courſe of the Common-law, can be Heir to a warranty, or ſue an appeal of the death of his anceſtor. Co. Lit. 14 a: Cro. Jac. 217, 218.

If a condition be annexed to Borough-Engliſh or Gavelkind lands, and the condition is broken, the Heir at common law ſhall enter; for the condition is a thing of new creation, and collateral to the land: But when the eldeſt ſon enters, the Heir or Heirs by cuſtom, ſhall enjoy the land; for by breach of the condition they are reſtored to their ancient eſtates. Cro. Eliz. 204: Plow. 28: Co. Lit. 11, 12.

Special Heir, Is the iſſue in tail claiming per formam doni; and as the ſtatute de donis preſerves the eſtate to him, his anceſtor cannot grant or alien, nor make any rightful eſtate of freehold to another, but for term of his own life. Lit. § 613.

Heir by cuſtom. A cuſtom in particular places varying the rules of deſcent at Common-law is good; ſuch as the cuſtom of Gavelkind, by which all the ſons ſhall inherit and make but one Heir to their anceſtor; but the general cuſtom of Gavelkind lands extends to ſons only, but a ſpecial cuſtom, that if one brother dies without iſſue, all his brothers may inherit, is good. Co. Lit. 140.

Heir by deviſe, or Hæres factus, is only a deviſee of lands, being made ſo by the will of the teſtator, and has no other right or intereſt than the will gives him. 3 Co. 42. a.

It has been held in Chancery, that ſuch an Heir ſhall have the aid of the perſonal eſtate in diſcharging the debts of the teſtator. 1 Vern. 36, 7. But this muſt be underſtood of an hæres factus of the whole eſtate, who ſhall have the benefit of the perſonal eſtate, but a deviſee of particular lands ſhall not. Preced. Chanc. See title Executor V. 6; Aſſets.

II. The

II. The Eldest Son, after the death of his father, is at Common-law his heir, &c. And if there be grandfather, father, and ſon, and the father die before the grandfather, and after the grandfather die ſeiſed; the land ſhall go to the ſon or daughter of the father, and not to any other children of the grandfather. Bro. 303. And this heir is called hæres jure repræſentationis, becauſe he doth repreſent his father's perſon: but if, in this caſe, the father die without any child; his next eldeſt brother ſhall have the land as heir, or, for want of a brother, it deſcends to the ſiſters of the father. Ibid. A man having iſſue only a daughter, dies, leaving his wife with child of a ſon, which is afterwards born; here the ſon after his birth is heir to the land, but till then the daughter is to have it. 9 H. 6. 23: Perk. 521. See at large title Deſcent.

There are ſome perſons who cannot be heir; as a baſtard born out of lawful wedlock; an alien, born out of the King's allegiance, though in wedlock; a man attainted of treaſon or felony, whoſe blood is corrupted; theſe laſt cannot be heirs propter delictum; and an alien cannot be heir, propter defectum ſubjectionis; nor may one made denizen by letters patent; though it is otherwiſe of a perſon naturalized by act of parliament. Co. Lit. 8: 2 Danv. Abr. 552. A baſtard by continuance, may be heir againſt a ſtranger; and an hermaphrodite may be heir, and take according to that ſex which is moſt prevalent; but a monſter, who hath not human ſhape cannot be heir, although a perſon deformed may. Co. Lit. 7. Ideots and Lunaticks, perſons excommunicate, attainted in præmunire, outlaws in debt, &c. may be heirs. 2 Danv. 553.

The word heir is not a good deſcription of a perſon in the life-time of the anceſtor; and an eldeſt ſon ſhall not take by the name of heir in the life-time of his father. 2 Leon. 70. A man cannot raiſe a fee-ſimple eſtate to his right heirs, by the name of heirs, as a word of purchaſe by conveyance or otherwiſe; but in ſuch caſe the heir ſhall be in by deſcent: Fortior & potentior eſt diſpoſitio legis quàm hominis. Hob. 30: 2 Lill. Abr. 11.

By the law of England, no perſon can take to himſelf an inheritance in fee-ſimple by deed, without the word heirs; but he may by deviſe: tho' in caſes where the word heir is wanting, it has been adjudged that if there were other words equivalent, and the intereſt in the thing granted paſſeth by the conſideration only, without any further ceremony in the law, an eſtate in fee may paſs. 2 Nelſ. Abr. 928. In a deviſe by will, or exchange, &c. the word heirs is not neceſſary: but eſtates of inheritance which are otherwiſe conveyed, require it. Jenk. Cent. 196. See this Dict. titles Deed; Deviſe; Limitation.

The word Heir is nomen collectivum, and extends unto all Heirs: and under heirs, the heirs of heirs are comprehended in infinitum; if lands are given to a man and his heirs, all his heirs are ſo totally in him, that he may give his lands to whom he will. Trin. 23 Jac. 1: Noy. 56.

The Heir is favoured by the Common-law; and the anceſtor could not give away his lands by will from his heir at law, without the conſent of the heir, till the ſtatute 32 H. 8. c. 1: 2 Lill. 11. Dubious words in a will ſhall be conſtrued for the benefit of the Heir; and not to diſinherit him: and the Heir at law is preferred in Chancery in a doubtful caſe. Noy 185: Chanc. Rep. 7. Where lands were deviſed to the heirs of J. S. then living; it was held that his eldeſt ſon ſhould have them, though in ſtrictneſs he was not heir during his father's life, but heir apparent: But this was by reaſon of the words then living, which make it a deſcription of the perſon. Preced. Chanc. 57.

As a limitation to the Heirs of the body of A. then living, ſhall be good as a deſignatio perſonæ, notwithſtanding the rule non eſt hæres viventis; ſo a limitation to the Heirs of the body of A. then begotten ſhall prevail. See 1 P. Wms. 229: 1 Bro. P. C. 489: 2 Black. Rep. 1010.

The caſes in which it has been held that the perſon deſcribed as an Heir ſpecial need not anſwer both parts of the deſcription, by being actually Heir, as well as that ſpecies of Heir denoted by the deſcription, ſeem to have materially broken in upon the doctrine of Lord Coke on the ſubject. See 1 Inſt. 24 b. and which doctrine has been purſued in many caſes excluſive of thoſe on which Lord Coke relied: particularly in Counden v. Clerke, Hob. 29: Southcot v. Stowell, 1 Freem. 216: Lord Oſſulſton's caſe, 3 Salk. 336: and Dawes v. Ferrers, 2 P. Wms. 1: Starling v. Ettrick. Pre. Ch. 54. Mr. Hargrave has very ably attempted to vindicate the propriety of Lord Coke's doctrine, obſerving that it may be doubted whether there is a paſſage in all his works more capable of ſtanding the ſevereſt teſt of modern criticiſm; and having examined the circumſtances of the caſes ſuppoſed to have weakened its authority concludes his note, (p. 32 a,) with remarking that Lord Cowper's judgment in Newcomen v. Barkham, which was materially ſhaken in its principle by what fell from Lord Hardwicke, in decreeing upon the bill of review, is the only direct authority againſt Lord Coke.—In a following note however, (p. 164 a,) Mr. Hargrave candidly admits that ſince his writing his former note, a caſe has been publiſhed in which the court of King's Bench, after three arguments, decided againſt applying the above rule to a Will; Wills v. Palmer, 5 Burr. 2615. and that in another, which was alſo three times argued, the Court of Exchequer had refuſed to apply the rule to a Marriage-ſettlement. Evans d. Burtenſhaw v. Weſton, M. 1774, or H. 1775.—This concurrence of authority, the reſult of ſo much deliberation, for both Courts appear to have weighed the ſubject with the moſt anxious attention, ſeems to have given a weight to the decree in Newcomen v. Barkham, beyond that to which Ld. Hardwicke thought the principle entitled. It is however well worth the Student's while to conſult Mr. Hargrave's obſervations in ſupport of Lord Coke's doctrine, that to take as a purchaſer by deſcription of a ſpecial heir, every part of the deſcription muſt unite in the claimant. See alſo Fearne on Cont. Rem. 4th edit. p. 319. and 2 Wilſ. p. 20.

III. 1. Conditions and Covenants-real, or ſuch as are annexed to eſtates, ſhall deſcend to the Heir, and he alone ſhall take advantage of them. 43 Ed. 3. c. 4: 1 And. 55.

And this is not only where there are expreſs words, but alſo where there are none; for the law by implication reſerves the condition to the Heir of the feoffor, &c; for being prejudiced by the diſpoſition, it is but reaſonable that he ſhould take the ſame advantage that his anceſtor whom he repreſents might. 1 Rol. Abr. 407, 472.

If a man ſeiſed of lands in right of his wife, makes a feoffment in fee upon condition, and dies, and after the condition is broken, the Heir of the huſband ſhall enter; for though no right deſcended to him, yet the title of entry by by force of the condition which was created upon the feoffment, and reſerved to the feoffor and his Heirs, deſcended. 8 Co. 43: Co. Lit. 202 a: 336 b.

The Heir ſhall take advantage of a nomine pœnæ; for being incident to the rent, it ſhall deſcend to the Heir, being a ſecurity or penalty to engage the payment of the rent; therefore whoever has a right to the rent, ought in reaſon to have the penalty, which is to oblige the tenant to pay it. Co. Lit. 162 b.

If a man leaſes for years, and the leſſee covenants with the leſſor, his executors and adminiſtrators, to repair and leave it in good repair at the end of the term, and the leſſor dies, &c. his Heir may have an action upon this covenant; for this is a covenant which runs with the land, and ſhall go to the Heir, though he is not named: and it appears that it was intended to continue after the death of the leſſor, inaſmuch as his executors, &c. are named. 3 Lev. 92: Skin. 305.

If A. enfeoff B. upon condition that if the Heir of A. pays to B. &c. 20*s.* then he and his Heirs may re-enter; this is a good condition, of which the Heir of A. may take advantage, and yet A. himſelf never can. Co. Lit. 214 b.

III. 2. As the Heir-at-law is the proper and only perſon, who can take advantage of conditions, &c. annexed to the real eſtate; ſo he ſhall be bound by all ſuch conditions, &c. which run with the land, whether ſuch conditions were annexed to the eſtate by the original feoffor, grantor, or immediate anceſtor. 1 Rol. Abr. 421.

If a gift be made in tail on condition, that the donee ſhould not diſcontinue, and the donee hath iſſue two daughters, and one of them diſcontinues, the donor ſhall enter and evict them both; becauſe it was the original condition annexed to the whole eſtate, that no part of it ſhould be diſcontinued. Co. Lit. 165.

But note, that neither tenant in tail, nor his iſſue can be reſtrained from aliening by fine and recovery; though they may be reſtrained from aliening by feoffment, or other tortious act, which amounts to a diſcontinuance.

So where one deviſed lands to A. and the Heirs male of his body, provided, that if he does attempt to alien, that then immediately his eſtate ſhall ceaſe, and B. ſhall enter, and A. makes a feoffment in fee, and thereupon B. enters; and it was adjudged againſt B. and that the condition was void, becauſe non conſtat what ſhall be adjudged an attempt, and how it ſhall be tried. 1 Vent. 321: 3 Keb. 787, Piers and Winn.

Alſo where a condition is annexed to the eſtate given to the Heir, and which goes in abridgment and reſtraint thereof, the ſame ſhall in ſome caſes be conſtrued a limitation; for if it were a condition, nobody could take advantage of it but the Heir. Dyer 316: 10 Co. 41: 1 Vent. 199. As if a copyholder in Borough Engliſh ſurrender to the uſe of his will, and after deviſes to his wife for life, remainder to his eldeſt ſon, paying 40*s.* to each of his brothers and ſiſters within two years after the death of his wife, &c. this is a limitation, and not a condition; for if it ſhould be a condition, it would extinguiſh in the Heir, and there would be no remedy for the money. Cro. Eliz. 204: 3 Co. 20 b: 2 Leon 114. S. C. Vide farther as to the doctrine of the Heir being bound, &c. Vaughan. 271: 2 Mod. 26. S. C: Cro. Eliz. 833. 919: Moor 644. pl. 891: Noy 51.

But wherever the anceſtor makes a conveyance or diſpoſition on condition, which goes in reſtraint and abridgment of the eſtate of the heir, he muſt have notice of it; for having a good title by deſcent, he is not obliged to take notice of ſuch condition at his peril, as others muſt do. 8 Co. Francia's caſe.

If the perſon of the anceſtor be bound in reſpect of his land, which deſcends to the Heir, he ſhall be charged: as, if by a ſubſidy to be aſſeſſed upon every one having 20*s. per annum*, A. be charged and die; his Heir ſhall pay it, for it runs with the land. R. Mo. 17.

Heir is nomen collectivum; and therefore, if a condition be, that if his heir does not pay ſuch a rent-charge, the eſtate ſhall go to B. if the Heir of the Heir does not pay, the condition is broken. R. Cro. Jac. 145.

It has been held, that the Heir is never chargeable without an expreſs lien and aſſets; and even then, no longer than he hath aſſets, for he is not obliged to keep them till he is charged: But if he has aſſets, he ought to plead truly, and confeſs them; otherwiſe judgment ſhall be given againſt him de terris propriis, for it is then his debt. Jones 88: 3 Salk. 179. When a man recovers againſt an Heir, by default or verdict, on pleading riens per deſcent, a ſpecial judgment de terris deſcenſis, may be entered againſt the Heir, and the plaintiff, (praying it) ſhall have all the lands by deſcent in execution: though if the judgment be general againſt the Heir, without praying ſuch ſpecial judgment he can only have a moiety of the lands by elegit. Plowd. 439: 2 Leon. 16. Here the plaintiff may ſurmiſe, that the Heir hath ſuch land by deſcent, and pray to have execution of all his land. Dyer 149: Rol. 72. The judgment and execution ſhall be general, unleſs the Heir acknowledge the action, and ſhews that he hath ſo much by deſcent; but if he will not ſhew what he hath by deſcent, he loſes the benefit of the law. Cro. Eliz. 692.

If the Heir, in caſe where the anceſtor hath bound himſelf and his Heirs, have never ſo much land come to him by gift in tail, or conveyance of the father, and not by deſcent, he is not chargeable at all: and ſo it is for any eſtate but what is in fee ſimple; as where lands are granted to J. S. and his Heirs during the life of another, &c. the Heir ſhall not be charged for this, no more than for the land entailed. 10 Rep. 98. See poſt. 4. No lands can be charged but fee ſimple; therefore, in a ſuit againſt the Heir, the judgment is only for the land deſcended, and not for other lands, &c. but where it is by his own fault, as by a falſe plea, or the like. Co. Lit. 102, 376.

A man binds himſelf and his Heirs in an obligation, and hath lands and Heirs on the part of the father, and the part of the mother; the Heirs and lands of both, and not of one alone, muſt be charged in debt: and the plaintiff ſhall have ſeveral actions; and the execution ſhall ſtay, till it may be had againſt both of them. 2 Rep. 25: Hob. 25. Alſo if one bind himſelf and his Heirs, and leave land at Common-law, and lands in gavelkind; the obligee muſt ſue all the Heirs. Hob. 25. An Heir ſued on a ſpecialty, ſhall have his age; and if one of the Heirs be within age, the parol ſhall be ſtayed for all. Moor cap. 203.

A collateral Heir is chargeable for the debt of his anceſtor: but the declaration muſt be ſpecial, and he is to be charged as collateral Heir, not as immediate Heir; and if a ſon happens between, who dies, he muſt be ſaid uncle uncle and Heir of the ſon, who was Heir of the debtor, &c. Cro. Car. 151. And a child born, though he lives but an hour, has the fee of lands veſted in him as Heir. Hetl. 134. In a writ a man need not ſhew how he is Heir; but he muſt in a declaration, &c. though it is only for form to ſet forth how a perſon is Heir, becauſe it is not traverſable; and Heir, or no Heir, is iſſuable. Moore 885. If an Heir ought to confeſs the debt on action brought againſt him, and the debt be not denied, it muſt be admitted. 1 Lutw. 442.

Debt againſt the Heir, upon the bond of his anceſtor, is to be brought in the debet and detinet, becauſe the Heir himſelf is bound; and not in the detinet only, though that is cured by verdict. Sid. 342: 1 Lev. 224. An Heir is not bound by the bond of the anceſtor, unleſs he is expreſsly bound: and if in a bond a man bind his Heirs, but not himſelf, the bond is void. 2 Saund. 136: Cro. Jac. 570. Alſo a man ſhall never bind his Heir to warranty, where he himſelf was not bound: if he make a feoffment in fee, and bind his Heirs only to warranty, the feoffment is void, for the Heir ſhall be bound to warranty in ſuch caſes only, where the anceſtor was bound, without which it cannot deſcend upon him. Co. Lit. 386. And warranties and eſtoppels ſhall deſcend upon the Heir general, and not upon any ſpecial Heir, &c. So that if a man convey land with warranty againſt him and his Heirs, his Heir on the mother's part ſhall not be vouched by this, ſo long as there is an Heir on the father's part, &c. Hob. 24.

A grant of an annuity, muſt be for a man and his Heirs, to bind the Heir, although there be aſſets; and when he is named, the Heir ſhall not be bound except there be aſſets. Co. Litt. 144. Where a perſon covenants with another to perform any act, if his Heir be not named, he is not bound by it: but in covenants of others, that concern the inheritance, the Heir ſhall have the benefit of them, though not named. 5 Rep. 8: 1 Rol. Abr. 520. An Heir may enter for a condition broken, when the condition is annexed to lands, and take advantage of it; becauſe if there had been no condition, the land would have deſcended to him. And an Heir may perform a condition, to ſave the land. 2 Nelſ. Abr. 929.

The Heir muſt be expreſsly named, otherwiſe he is not chargeable, and the reaſon why the heir is not chargeable in this caſe, as the executor in caſe of a bond entred into by the teſtator, without being named, is this; by the Common-law only the goods and chattels of the debtor, and the annual profits of the land as they aroſe, and not the land itſelf, were liable to execution for debt or damages, becauſe theſe being the ſecurity the creditor depended upon, they were liable in the hands of his repreſentative or executor, as well as in the hands of the debtor himſelf; hence it was, that the executor was bound by the debt of the teſtator, ſo far as he had chattels or aſſets, though he was not named in the contract; but the land was not liable to execution, becauſe it was preſerved from the perſonal contracts and engagements of the tenant, that he might be the better able to anſwer the feudal duties to the lord, which were the life and ſupport of government; therefore the land not being originally liable to the demand in the hands of the obligor, muſt be much leſs liable in the hands of the Heir, who was not comprehended in the contract. 2 Inſt. 19: Plow. 440: Hob. 60.

But if A. had granted, for him and his Heirs, to B. and his Heirs, ſuch a rent out of his lands; in this caſe, the Heirs being comprehended in the contract, are bound to make good the grant, ſo far as they have aſſets by deſcent from the grantor; and this was allowed at Common-law, becauſe the grantee of the rent had the land originally in view for his ſecurity; and by the grant itſelf having it in his power to diſtrain the land for the rent, it was equal to the Heir, whether the land anſwer the rent by diſtreſs, or by an execution upon a judgment in a writ of annuity. 1 Rol. Abr. 226: Peſham 87: Hob. 58: Dyer 344 b: Co. Lit. 144 b.

If the anceſtor bind himſelf in a ſtatute, recognizance, &c. the Heir is liable, not only as tertenant, but alſo as Heir, otherwiſe he could not have his age; and cannot oblige a purchaſer, whether for valuable conſideration, or without, to contribute, but one Heir may oblige another to contribute; as if a man ſeiſed of two acres, the one deſcendible, according to the courſe of the Common-law, the other in Borough Engliſh, acknowledge a ſtatute, &c. the Heir at Common-law ſhall oblige the Borough Engliſh Heir to contribute: ſo one coparcener ſhall oblige the other to contribute; or if the conuzor had lands, ſome deſcendible to the Heirs of the father, and ſome deſcendible on the Heirs of the mother, the Heir on the part of the father ſhall compel the Heir on the part of the mother to contribute; & ſic vice verſa. 3 Co. 12. Sir William Herbert's caſe. See poſt. 4.

III. 3. Not only land, but rent not due at the death of the anceſtor leſſor, ſhall go to the Heir; ſo corn ſown by a tenant for years, where his term expires before the corn is ripe; every thing faſtened to the freehold, timber-trees, deeds belonging to the inheritance; deer, conies, pigeons, fiſh, &c. 2 Nelſ. Abr. 927. An Heir ſhall enforce the adminiſtrator to pay debts with perſonal eſtate, to preſerve the inheritance. Chan. Rep. 280, 293. If an executor hath aſſets, he is compellable in equity to redeem a mortgage, for the benefit of the Heir; and it is the ſame where the Heir is charged in debt. Hard. 511. For the perſonal eſtate received the benefit. When the Heir is ſued for the debt of his anceſtor, and pays it, he ſhall be reimburſed by the executor of the obligor, who hath perſonal aſſets. 1 Chanc. Rep. 74. But in action of debt brought upon a bond againſt an Heir, it is no good plea for the Heir to ſay, that the executors have aſſets in their hands. Dyer 204. For a creditor may ſue either Heir or executor, and Heirs and executors are both chargeable upon ſpecialties. If an Heir hath aſſets, and the executor alſo, it is at the election of the obligee to have action of debt againſt the one, or the other; but he ſhall not charge them doubly, 2 Plowd. 433. See title Executor. Whether the Heir hath land by deſcent ſhall be tried and enquired of, with the value, by a jury, to make the Heir anſwerable. 5 Mod. 122.

The Heir ſhall not have money due on mortgages in fee, if he be not particularly named, but the executor; and if the day be paſt, although the Heir be named, the executor ſhall have it. Co. Lit. 210: 1 Ventr. 348. See titles Executor, V. 6: Mortgage.

The following is a ſpecification of what goods and chattels go to the Heir.

Goods and chattels annexed to the freehold go to the Heir, and not to the executor, or adminiſtrator: as, the

So, millſtones, &c. fixed to a mill. So a term for years to attend the inheritance does not go to the executor, but to the heir. R 2 Ch. Ca. 156, 160. So deer in a park, conies in a warren, and doves in a dove-houſe, go with the inheritance to the Heir. So, fiſh in a pond, or piſcary. Co. Lit. 8. a: R. Owen 20: 1 Rol. 916. l. 45, 50. So, apples, and other fruits growing at the death of the anceſtor. Off. Ex' 84. So roots, &c. within the ſoil. Ib. 89. So a coat armour, pennons, tombſtone, and monuments in a church, in honour of the anceſtor. Co. Lit. 18 b. So charters, deeds, and evidences of lands, with the cheſts in which they are preſerved. If a nobleman, knight, eſquire, &c. be buried in a church, and have his coat of arms, and pennons with his arms, and ſuch other enſigns of honour as belong to his degree, ſet up in the church, or if a grave-ſtone or tomb be laid or made, &c. for a monument of him; in this caſe, albeit the freehold of the church be in the parſon, and that theſe be annexed to the freehold, yet cannot the parſon, or any, take them, or deface them, but he is ſubject to the Heir, and his heirs, in the honour and memory of whoſe anceſtor they were ſet up. Co. Lit. 18 b. And ſee 1 Rol. Abr. 625: Noy. 104: Godbolt 200: Cro. Jac. 367: 2 Bulſt. 151.

Where money is covenanted to be laid out in a purchaſe of land to be ſettled on A. in fee; on A.'s dying before the money is laid out, his Heir, and not his executor ſhall have it. 1 P. Wms. 483. So where, though by a voluntary contract, money is agreed to be laid out in land, the Court will execute ſuch agreement in favour of the Heir. 2 P. Wms. 171. On the ſame principle where one articled to buy land and died; his executor ſhall pay the money, but his Heir ſhall have the lands. Id. 632. And in all caſes where it is a meaſuring caſt between an executor and an Heir, the latter ſhall in equity have the preference. Id. 176.

A younger brother beyond ſea having contracted to buy a real eſtate of his elder brother, made his will charging his eſtate with great legacies, but his will was attested by only two witneſſes. Afterwards the teſtator died without iſſue, leaving his elder brother his executor and Heir: the Heir may retain out of the aſſets the whole purchaſe money, though intitled to the land again as Heir. 2 P. Wms. 291.

III. 4. It is clear, that the Heir may bring any real action droitural, in right of his anceſtor, but cannot regularly bring any perſonal action, becauſe he has nothing to do with the aſſets, or perſonal contracts of his anceſtor. Co. Lit. 164. If an erroneous judgment be given againſt the anceſtor, by which he loſeth the lands, the Heir may bring a writ of error. 1 Rol. Abr. 747: Dyer 90: Godb. 337. And if one hath lands on the part of his mother, and loſeth by erroneous judgment, and dies, the Heir of the part of the mother ſhall have the writ of error. 1 Leon. 261: 2 Sid. 56. So the younger ſon, when intitled to the land by the cuſtom of Borough Engliſh, ſhall bring the writ of error, and not the Heir at Common-law, for this remedy deſcends with the land. Owen 68: 1 Leon. 261: 4 Leon. 5. and ſee Bridgm. 71. So if there be an erroneous judgment againſt tenant in tail female, the iſſue female, and not the ſon, ſhall bring a writ of error. Dyer 90: 1 Leon. 261: 1 Rol. Abr. 747. See further Dyer 89: Cro. Eliz. 469: 3 Lev. 36; and title Error. I. 1.

If J. S. binds himſelf and his Heirs, in a bond, and thereupon Judgment is obtained againſt J. S. and J. S. makes his will, and his Heir at law executor, and dies, leaving lands which deſcended to his Heir, yet he ſhall not have a writ of error as Heir, for he is not privy to the judgment; and when an extent is made upon him, it is as tertenant; but after the lands are taken in execution, he may have a writ of error. Becauſe he is prejudiced by the judgment, and by the reverſal will receive benefit. Sty. 38, 9.

The Heir at law may, in right of his anceſtor, maintain an action of debt for rent reſerved on a leaſe, made by his anceſtor, (accrued after the death of the anceſtor) for the rent is part of the lands, and incident to the reverſion; but for arrears of rent incurred in the life-time of the anceſtor, neither the Heir, nor the executor, could by the Common-law maintain an action; for as to the Heir, they were conſidered as part of the perſonal eſtate, and as to the executor, he could not repreſent his teſtator as to any contracts relating to the freehold and inheritance. 11 H. 6. 15: 19 H. 6. 41: Co. Lit 162 a. But now, by ſtat. 32 H. 8. cap. 37, an executor may maintain an action of debt for ſuch arrears; for which ſee tit. Debt.

Where the anceſtor binds himſelf, and his heirs, in an obligation, the obligee may ſue the Heir, or executor, or the adminiſtrator of the executor, at his election, and may have execution of the land deſcended to the Heir; for the Common-law having allowed the action of debt againſt the Heir, he could have no benefit by the action, unleſs he were permitted to have execution of the lands which deſcended to the Heir. Plowd. 441: 3 Co. 12 a: Cro. Jac. 450: 1 And. 7.

But the body of the Heir is protected, for it would be moſt unreaſonable to ſubject the Heir to the payment of his anceſtor's debts, any farther than to the value of the aſſets deſcended. Dyer 81 pl. 62; 207. pl. 15: Moor pl. 203: Co. Lit. 103, 290.

By the common law, if the heir before an action brought againſt him had aliened the aſſets, the obligee was without any remedy; but if he only aliened, pending the writ, the lands, which he had by deſcent at the time of the original purchaſed, had been liable. Co. Lit. 102.

In conſequence of this doctrine, that the lien ſhall have relation to the time of the original purchaſed, it hath been adjudged, that if there had been two creditors to J. S. whoſe Heir is bound, viz. A. and B. and A. files an original in C. B. and hath judgment thereon. Trin. Term, 2 Jac. 2, by default, and thereupon a general elegit iſſues againſt all the lands of the Heir, and a moiety thereof thereof is delivered to A.—B. on a bill filed in B. R. 1 & 2 Jac. 2. has a ſpecial judgment againſt the aſſets confeſſed by the Heir, Trin Term, 3 Jac. 2; though B.'s judgment be ſubſequent to A.'s, yet it appearing that his bill or original was filed before A.'s, the judgment ſhall have relation thereto; therefore he muſt be firſt ſatisfied. Carth. 245.

So it ſeems in the above caſe, that though A's judgment had been on an original actually filed before B.'s, that B. muſt have been preferred, becauſe his judgment was general againſt the heir, and the execution a general and common execution by elegit, and not againſt the aſſets only by way of extent; therefore ſuch a general judgment will not operate by way of relation to the original, but binds only, as in common caſes, from the time of the judgment given. Carth. 246. Per Cur'.

But now, in relief of creditors againſt the alienation of lands deſcended, &c. it is enacted by ſtat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 14; "That in all caſes, where any Heir at law ſhall be liable to pay the debt of his anceſtor, in regard of any lands, tenements or hereditaments deſcending to him; and ſhall ſell, alien, or make over the ſame, before any action brought or proceſs ſued out againſt him; that ſuch Heir at law ſhall be anſwerable for ſuch debt or debts, in an action or actions of debt to the value of the ſaid land ſo by him ſold, aliened, or made over; in which caſes all creditors ſhall be preferred, as in actions againſt executors and adminiſtrators; and ſuch execution ſhall be taken out upon any judgment or judgments ſo obtained againſt ſuch Heir to the value of the ſaid land, as if the ſame were his own proper debt or debts; ſaving that the lands, tenements and hereditaments bona fide aliened before the action brought, ſhall not be liable to ſuch execution."

But it is by the act provided, "That where any action of debt upon any ſpecialty is brought againſt any heir, he may plead riens per diſcent at the time of the original writ brought, or the bill filed againſt him. And the plaintiff in ſuch action may reply, that he had lands, tenements or hereditaments from his anceſtor before the original writ brought, or the bill filed: and if, upon iſſue joined thereupon, it be found for the plaintiff, the jury ſhall inquire of the value of the lands, tenements or hereditaments ſo deſcended, and thereupon judgment ſhall be given, and execution ſhall be awarded as aforeſaid: but if judgment be given againſt ſuch heir by confeſſion of the action without confeſſing the aſſets deſcended, or upon demurrer, or nihil dicit, it ſhall be for the debt and damages, without any writ to inquire of the lands, tenements or hereditaments ſo deſcended."

Before this act, if the anceſtor had deviſed away the lands, a creditor by ſpecialty had no remedy either againſt the Heir, or deviſee. Abr. Eq. 149.—To provide againſt which miſchief, it is by the ſame ſtatute enacted, "That all wills and teſtaments, limitations, diſpoſitions, or appointments, of or concerning any manors, meſſuages, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or of any rent, profit, term, or charge out of the ſame, whereof any perſon or perſons at the time of his, her, or their deceaſe ſhall be ſeiſed in fee-ſimple, poſſeſſion, reverſion, or remainder, or have power to diſpoſe of the ſame by his, her, or their laſt wills or teſtaments, ſhall be deemed and taken (only as againſt ſuch creditor or creditors as aforeſaid, his, her, and their heirs, ſucceſſors, executors, adminiſtrators and aſſigns, and every of them,) to be fraudulent, and clearly, abſolutely, and utterly void, fruſtrate, and of none effect; (any pretence, colour, feigned or preſumed conſideration, or any other matter or thing to the contrary notwithſtanding.)"

And that ſuch creditors may be enabled to recover their debts, it is further enacted, "That, in the caſes before mentioned, every ſuch creditor may maintain an action of debt upon ſuch bonds and ſpecialties, againſt the heirs at law of ſuch obligors, and ſuch deviſees jointly, by virtue of this act; and ſuch deviſees ſhall be liable and chargeable for a falſe plea, in the ſame manner as any heir ſhould have been for falſe plea, or for not confeſſing the lands or tenements to him deſcended."

It is, however, by this act further provided, "That where there is any limitation or appointment, deviſe or diſpoſition of any lands, &c. for the raiſing or payment of any real or juſt debt, or any portion or ſum of money, for any child, other than the Heir at law, according to or in purſuance of any marriage contract, or agreement in writing bona fide made, before ſuch marriage, the ſame ſhall be in full force, and the lands, &c. ſhall be holden and enjoyed by ſuch perſons, and their Heirs, executors, adminiſtrators and aſſigns, for whom the ſaid limitation &c. was made, and by their truſtees and their Heirs, executors, adminiſtrators and aſſigns, for ſuch eſtate or intereſt, as ſhall be ſo limited, &c. until ſuch debt or debts, portion or portions ſhall be raiſed, paid and ſatisfied."

And it is further enacted, "That all and every deviſee and deviſees, made liable by that act, ſhall be liable and chargeable in the ſame manner as the Heir at law, by force of the act, notwithſtanding the lands, tenements, and hereditaments to him or them deviſed, ſhall be aliened before the action brought."

In the conſtruction of this ſtatute it hath been holden, that though a man is prevented thereby from defeating his creditors by will, that yet any ſettlement or diſpoſition he ſhall make in his life-time of his lands, whether voluntary or not, will be good againſt bond creditors; for that was not provided againſt by the ſtatute, which only took care to ſecure ſuch creditors from any impoſition, which might be ſuppoſed in a man's laſt ſickneſs; but if he gave away his eſtate in his life-time, this prevented the deſcent of ſo much to the Heir, conſequently took away their remedy againſt him, who was only liable in reſpect of the lands deſcended; and as a bond is no lien whatſoever on lands in the hands of the obligor, much leſs can it be ſo, when they are given away to a ſtranger. Eq. Ab. 149. See title Fraud, II.

As to the manner of pleading and replying under this ſtatute; See Carth. 35: 5 Mod. 122.

It ſeems that neither before, nor ſince, this ſtatute, the executor or adminiſtrator of the heir are liable; for the perſon of the heir is not chargeable, but with reſpect to the land; and if, before the ſtatute, the heir had aliened before action brought, he ſhould not be charged for the profits he received; which is evident from the plea of riens per diſcent the day of the writ purchaſed; much leſs could his executor, nor can he yet, unleſs ſome ſtatute make him ſo: for an executor is but in nature of a truſtee for the perſonalty, and not at all privy to the inheritance. Trin. 32 Car. 2. in C. B. 3 New Abr. 28.

If there be judgment in debt againſt two, and one dies, a ſcire facias lies againſt the other alone, reciting the death, and he cannot plead that the heir of him who is dead has aſſets by deſcent, and demand judgment if he ought to be charged alone: for, at common law, the charge upon a judgment, being perſonal, ſurvived, and the ſtatute of Weſtm. 2, that gives the elegit, does not take away the remedy of the plaintiff at common law, therefore the party may take out his execution which way he pleaſes; for the words of the ſtatute are ſit in electione: but if he ſhould, after the allowance of the writ, and revival of the judgment, take out an elegit to charge the land, the party may have remedy by ſuggeſtion, or elſe by audita querela 1 Lev. 30: Raym. 26: 1 Keb. 92.

As to a ſequeſtration, and to ſhew that a decree ſhall have the ſame authority to bind the perſonal aſſets, as a judgment at law, and therefore ſhall go pari paſſu to be paid off and diſcharged. Vide 1 Vern. 143: 3 Lev. 355: 2 Vern. 37, 88-9. and this Dict. title Executor, V. 6.

III. 5. Where the anceſtor binds himſelf and his Heirs, all his lands of freehold, and which deſcend in fee ſimple, are aſſets by deſcent, and ſhall be liable, as far as they extend, to anſwer the anceſtor's obligations. See Bro. tit. Aſſets: Fit. tit. Aſſets: 1 Rol. Abr. 269. tit. Aſſets. A reverſion after a leaſe for years made by the anceſtor is preſent aſſets, ſo that the Heir cannot plead riens per diſcent in delay of execution of the rent and reverſion, though the plaintiff cannot have benefit of the reverſion till the leaſe be determined. 1 Salk. 354-5: 7 Mod. 42: 2 Mod. 50, 51. Hern's Plead. 320.

So a reverſion expectant upon the determination of an eſtate for life is quaſi aſſets, and ought to be pleaded ſpecially by the Heir, and the plaintiff in ſuch caſe may take judgment of it cum acciderit. Carth. 129. But a reverſion in fee expectant upon an eſtate tail is not aſſets, becauſe it lies in the will of the tenant in tail to dock and bar it at his pleaſure. 6 Co. 58: 1 Rol. Abr. 269.

If A. hath iſſue B. and C. and conveys lands to the uſe of himſelf for life, the remainder to B. in tail male, the remainder to his own right Heirs, and A. dies, and the reverſion deſcends to his ſon, who dies without iſſue, ſo that the tail is ſpent, and C. enters, theſe lands ſhall be aſſets to anſwer the debt of his father. Carth. 127: 3 Lev. 286: 3 Mod. 223. S. C.

The lands (as hath been obſerved) muſt deſcend to the Heir; and therefore it was formerly held, that if he took by purchaſe, as if the teſtator deviſed them to him, paying ſo much, or if he deviſed lands to one of the two, and his Heirs at law jointly, that thoſe lands were not aſſets; but if he deviſed one part to A. another to B. and another to his Heir at law, this third part was aſſets. Cro. Eliz. 431: 2 Mod. 286.

By the ſtatute of frauds and perjuries, (29 Car. 2. c. 3.) it is enacted, That if land come to the Heir by reaſon of a ſpecial occupancy, they ſhall be chargeable in his hands as aſſets by deſcent, as in caſes of lands in fee-ſimple; and in caſe there be no ſpecial occupant thereof, it ſhall go to the executors or adminiſtrators of the party that had the eſtate thereof by virtue of the grant, and ſhall be aſſets in their hands. Alſo by the ſaid ſtatute, §§ 10, 11. where lands are ſettled in truſt, and deſcend in fee to the Heir of ceſtuy que truſt; the ſame ſhall be aſſets in the ſame manner as lands in poſſeſſion, but he ſhall not by reaſon of any plea or other matter be chargeable to pay the condemnation out of his own eſtate.—See 2 Vern. 248. and this Dict. tit. Fraud.

An equity of redemption of an inheritance is aſſets, for the Heir having a right in equity, that ought in equity to ſatisfy a bond debt. 4 Chanc. Caſ. 148. Tenant in tail ſuffers a recovery to let in a mortgage of 500 years, then limits the land to the old uſes, and makes his will, and deviſes all his lands for the payment of his debts; the redemption was limited to him, his Heirs and aſſigns; and the court thought that the equity of redemption of this mortgage, ſhould be aſſets to ſatisfy creditors, or a ſubſequent grantee of an annuity. Precd. Chanc. 39. A right without any eſtate in poſſeſſion, reverſion or remainder, is not aſſets till it be recovered and reduced into poſſeſſion. 6 Co. 58.

HEIRESS, The female heir to to a man, having an eſtate of inheritance in lands; and where there are ſeveral joint heirs, they are called Co-heirs or Co-heireſſes. As to ſtealing an heireſs, and marrying her againſt her will; See Forcible Marriage.

HEIR-LOOME, From the Sax. Heir, i. e. Hæres, & Loome, Membrum.] Comprehends divers implements of houſhold, ſuch as the firſt beſt bed and other things, which by the cuſtom of ſome countries have belonged to a houſe for certain deſcents, and are never inventoried after the deceaſe of the owner as chattels, nor do they go to the executor, but accrue to the Heir with the houſe itſelf by cuſtom, and not by the Common-law: theſe are not deviſable by teſtament; for the law preſers the cuſtom before a deviſe, which takes not effect till after the death of the teſtator, and then they are veſted in the Heir by the cuſtom. Co. Lit. 18, 185. But ſale in a man's life-time might make it otherwiſe. The ancient jewels of the Crown are Heir-looms, and ſhall deſcend to the next ſucceſſor; and are not deviſable by will. 1 Inſt. 185. And Heir-looms in general are ſaid to extend to all large houſhold implements not eaſily moved. See Spelman.

It is ſaid, that the word by time hath obtained a more general ſignification than at firſt it did bear, comprehending all implements of houſhold, as tables, preſſes, cupboards, bedſteads, wainſcot, and ſuch like: which, by the cuſtom of ſome countries, have belonged to a houſe during certain deſcents, as before-mentioned.

Per Holt Ch. J. goods in groſs cannot be an Heir-loom, but they muſt be things fixed to the freehold, as old benches, tables, &c. 12 Mod. 519, 520. Alſo on this ſubject, vide 12 Co. 104, 105. Corven's caſe. and ante title Heir. III. 3.

HEGIRA, The Mahometan Æra, or computation of time; beginning from the flight of Mahomet from Mecca, 16 July, anno 622. As the years of the Hegira conſiſt of only 354 days, they are reduced to the Julian calendar by multiplying the year of the Hegira by 354, dividing the product by 365, ſubtracting the intercalary days, or as many times as there are four years in the quotient, and adding 622 to the remainder.

HELSING, A braſs coin among the Saxons, equivalent to our halfpenny.

HELM, Thatch or ſtraw. Cowell. Sometimes called Halm.—Helm, is alſo a Saxon word, ſignifying a covering for the head in war. Alſo, that part of a coat of arms, which bears the creſt.—The ſteerage, or rudder in a ſhip, or other veſſel.

HELOWE-WALL,

HELOWE-WALL, the hell-wall or end wall, that covers and defends the reſt of the building. From Saxon helan, to cover or heal; whence a thatcher, ſlater or tiler, who covers the roof of a houſe, is in the Weſtern parts called a hellier.—Paroch. Antiq. p. 573: See Kennet's Gloſſary.

HEMP AND FLAX. By ſtat. 33 H. 8. c. 17, None may water hemp or flax in any river, running water, ſtream, brook, or common pond, where beaſts are uſed to be watered, but only in their ſeveral ponds, &c. for that purpoſe, on pain of 20*s.* By ſtat. 15 Car. 2. c. 15, Any perſons may in any place or corporate town privileged, or unprivileged, ſet up manufactures of Hemp or Flax; and perſons coming from abroad, uſing the trade of Hemp or flax dreſſing, and of making thread, weaving cloth made of Hemp or Flax, or making tapeſtry hangings, twine or nets for fiſhery, cordage, &c. after three years, ſhall have the privileges of natural-born ſubjects.

HEPTARCHY, The Kingdom of England was formerly, under the Saxons, divided into an Heptarchy, conſiſting of ſeven independent kingdoms, peopled and governed by different clans and colonies; Theſe were all reduced into one kingdom by Egbert King of the Weſt Saxons in the year 827 or 828.—Egbert is therefore ſtiled the firſt King of England. See 4 Comm. c. 33.

HERALD, HERALT, or HEROLD, Ital. heraldo, Fr. herault, quaſi herus altus.] An officer at arms. Verſtegan thinks it may be derived from two Dutch words, viz. Here, exercitus et Healt, pugil magnanimus; as if he ſhould be called the Champion of the Army: and the Romans called Heralds, feciales. Polydore, lib. 19, deſcribes them thus: Habent inſuper apparitores miniſtros, quos Heraldos dicunt, quorum præfectus Armorum Rex vocitatur; hii belli et pacis Nuncii; Ducibus, Comitibuſque a Rege factis inſignia aptant, ac eorum funera curant. The function of theſe officers, as now exerciſed with us, is to denounce war, proclaim peace, and to be employed by the King in martial meſſages: they are examiners and judges of gentlemens coat of arms, and conſervators of genealogies; and they marſhal the ſolemnities at the coronations, and funerals of princes, and other great men.

The three chief Heralds, are called Kings at Arms; of which Garter is the principal, inſtituted by King Henry V. whoſe office is to attend the Knights of the Garter at their ſolemnities, and to marſhal the funerals of the nobility: and King Edward IV. granted the office of King of Heralds to one Garter, cum feudis et proficuis ab antiquo, &c. The next is Clarencieux or Clarentius, ordained by Edward IV. who attaining the dukedom of Clarence by the death of George his brother, (whom he beheaded for aſpiring to the crown,) made the Herald who belonged to that dukedom a King at arms, and called him Clarencieux; his proper office is to marſhal and diſpoſe the funerals of all the leſſer nobility, knights and eſquires, thro' the realm, on the South ſide of the Trent. The third is Norroy, quaſi North Roy, whoſe office and buſineſs is the ſame on the North ſide of Trent, as Clarentius on the South, which is intimated by his name, ſignifying the Northern King, or King at Arms of the North parts. Theſe three officers are diſtinguiſhed as follows, viz. Garter Rex Armorum Anglicorum; indefinitè; Clarencieux, Rex Armorum partium Auſtralium: Norroy, Rex Armorum partium Borealium.

Beſides the Kings at Arms, there are ſix inferior Heralds, according to their original, as they were created to attend Dukes and great Lords, in martial expeditions, i. e. York, Lancaſter, Cheſter, Windſor, Richmond and Somerſet; the four former inſtituted by King Edward III. and the two latter by Edward IV. and Henry VIII. To theſe, upon the coming of King George to the crown, on account of his Hanoverian dominions, a new Herald was made, called Hanover Herald; and another ſtiled Glouceſter, King at Arms. Anno 11 Geo. 1. And laſtly, to the ſuperior and inferior Heralds, are added four others, called Marſhals or Purſuivants at Arms, who commonly ſucceed in the places of ſuch Heralds as die, or are preferred; and they are Blue-mantle, Rouge-croſs, Rouge-dragon, and Portcullis: all equipped with proper enſigns, badges and diſtinctions.

The ancient Heralds have been made a corporation or college under the Earl Marſhall of England, with certain privileges by the Kings of this realm: Conceſſerunt, &c. Heraldi Armorum, et omnes alii Heraldi, proſecutores ſive Purſuivandi armorum, qui pro tempore fuerint, imperpetuum, ſint unum corpus corporatum, in re, facto, et nomine; habeantque ſucceſſionem perpetuam, nec non quodam ſigillum commune, &c. Dat. &c. *Spelm. HERBAGE, HERBAGE, Herbagium.] The green pasture and fruit of the earth, provided by nature for the bite or food of cattle: it is also used for a liberty that a person hath to feed his cattle in the ground of another person; or in the forest, &c. Cromp. Jurisd. 197.

He that hath Herbage of a forest by patent may have trespass for the grass, but not for trees or the fruit of them; and he may take beasts damage-feasant, and have quare clausum fregit, and by such grant may inclose the forest. Yet grantee of Herbage may inclose, and may have action of trespass quare clausum fregit. But though he that hath Herbage may inclose, yet he that hath reasonable Herbage cannot. Dy. 285. and see 2 Ro Rep. 356.

Grantee of Herbage of a park cannot dispark it Godb. 419. A lease was made of a manor with all gardens, orchards, yards, &c. and with all the profits of a wood, excepting to lessor forty acres, to take at his pleasure; per Dyer, The wood is not comprized within the lease, but the lessee shall only have the profits, as pannage, herbage, &c. 4 Leon. 8. HERBAGIUM ANTERIUS, The first crop of grass or hay in opposition to after-math and second cutting.—Paroch. Antiq. pag. 459.

HERBERY or HERBURY, An Inn. Cowell.

HERBENGER or HARBINGER, from the French herberger, that is, hospitio accipere.] An officer in the King's house, who goes before and allots the noblemen, and those of the household their lodgings. Kitchin, fol. 176. It is also used for an innkeeper.

HERBERGAGIUM, Lodgings to receive guests in the way of hospitality. Cowell.

HERBERGATUS, Spent in an inn. Cowell.

HERBIGARE, To harbour, to entertain, from heribergum, heriberga, Saxon here berg, a house of entertainment.—Somner's Antiq. p. 248. Hence our herbinger or harbinger, who provides harbour or house-room, &c.

HERCE, HERCIA, an harrow. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 77.—It signifies also a candlestick set up in churches, made in the form of an harrow, in which many candles were placed at the head of a cenotaph.

HERCIARE, from the French hercer, to harrow. See 4 Inst. fol. 270.

HERDEWICH, or HERDEWIC, Herdewycha.] A grange or place for cattle and husbandry. Mon. Angl. 3. part.

HERDWERCH, HEORDWERCH. Herdsman's work, or customary labours done by the shepherds, herdsmen, and other inferior tenants at the will of their lord. Cowell, edit. 1727: Regist. Eccles. Christi Cant. MS.

HEREBANNUM, Sax. Here, exercitus, & Ban, edictum, multa.] A mulct, for not going armed into the field, when called forth. Spelm. Under the feudal policy, every free man, was under an obligation to serve the State. If, upon being summoned into the field, any freeman refused to obey, a full herebannum, i. e. a fine of sixty crowns, was to be exacted from him, according to the law of the Franks. This fine was levied with such rigor, that if any person was insolvent, he was reduced to servitude, and continued in that state until such time as his labour should amount to the value of the herebannum. The Emperor Lotharius rendered the penalty more severe, by confiscating the goods of the person refusing, and banishing him. Robertson's Char. V. 1 V. 216, 217.

HEREBOTE, From the Sax. Here, and Bode a messenger.] The King's edict commanding his subjects into the field; from the Saxon here, exercitus, and bode a messenger. Cowell.

HEREDITAMENTS, Hæreditamenta.] All such immoveable things, whether corporeal or incorporeal, which a man may have to him and his heirs by way of inheritance; and which, if they are not otherwise devised, descend to him that is next heir, and fall not to the executor as chattels do. See stat. 32 Hen. 8 cap. 2. It is a word of very great extent, comprehending whatever may be inherited or come to the Heir; be it real, personal or mixed, and though it is not holden, or lieth not in tenure. Co. Lit. 6 16. And by the grant of hereditaments in conveyances, manors, houses, and lands of all sorts, rent, services, advowsons, &c pass. Ibid. Hæreditamentum est omne quod jure hereditario ad heredem transit.

Hereditaments are of two kinds, corporeal and incorporeal. Corporeal consist of such as affect the senses; such as may be seen and handled by the body: Incorporeal are not the object of sensation, can neither be seen nor handled, are creatures of the mind, and exist only in contemplation.

Corporeal Hereditaments consist wholly of substantial and permanent objects, all which may be comprehended under the general denomination of land only. For land says Coke, comprehendeth in its legal signification any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever, as arable, meadows, pastures, woods, moors, waters, marshes, furzes, and heath. 1 Inst. 4. It legally includes also all castles, houses, and other buildings; for they consist, saith he, of two things; land which is the foundation; and the structure thereupon: so that if I convey the land or ground, the structure or building passeth therewith. It is observable that water is here mentioned as a species of land which may seem a kind of solecism; but such is the language of the law: and therefore one cannot bring an action to recover possession of a pool, or other piece of water, by the name of water only; either by calculating its capacity, as for so many cubical yards; or, by superficial measure, for twenty acres of water, or by general description, as for a pond, a water course, or a rivulet: but he must bring his action for the land that lies at the bottom, and must call it twenty acres of land covered with water. Brownl. 142. For water is a moveable wandering thing, and must of necessity continue common by the law of nature: so that there can only be a temporary, transient, usufructuary property therein: wherefore, if a body of water runs out of A.'s pond into B.'s. A. has no right to reclaim it. But the land, which that water covers, is permanent, fixed, and immoveable: and therefore in this there may be a certain substantial property; of which the law will take notice, and not of the other.

Land hath also in its legal signification, an indefinite extent, upwards as well as downwards. Cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad cælum, is the maxim of the law; upwards, therefore, no man may erect any building, or the like, to overhang another's land: and downwards, whatever is in a direct line, between the surface of any land and the center of the earth belongs to the owner of the surface; as is every day's experience in the mining countries. So that the word land includes not only the face of the earth, but every thing under it or over it. And therefore if a man grants all his lands, he grants thereby all all his mines of metal and other foſſils, his woods, his waters, and his houſes, as well as his fields and meadows. Not but the particular names of the things are equally ſufficient to paſs them, except in the inſtance of water; by a grant of which nothing paſſes but a right of fiſhing. Co. Lit. 4. But the capital diſtinction is this; that by the name of a caſtle, meſſuages, toft, croft, or the like, nothing elſe will paſs, except what falls with the utmoſt propriety under the term made uſe of; but by the name of Land, which is nomen generaliſſimum, every thing terreſtial will paſs. 1 Inſt. 4, 5, 6. By the name of a Caſtle, one or more manors may be conveyed; and è converſo by the name of a manor, a caſtle may paſs. 1 Inſt. 5: 2 Inſt. 31. See 2 Comm. 17, 19.

An Incorporeal Hereditament is a right iſſuing out of a thing corporate (whether real or perſonal) or concerning, or annexed to, or exerciſable within the ſame. Co. Lit. 19, 20. It is not the thing corporate itſelf, but ſomething collateral thereto; as a rent iſſuing out of lands, &c. or an office belonging to jewels, &c. Or, according to logicians, Corporeal Hereditaments are the ſubſtance which may be always ſeen, always handled; Incorporeal Hereditaments are but a ſort of accidents, which inhere in, and are ſupported by that ſubſtance; and may belong or not belong to it, without any viſible alteration therein. Their exiſtence is merely in idea, and abſtract contemplation, though their effects and profits, which are totally diſtinct, may be frequently objects of our bodily ſenſes. 2 Comm. 20. Theſe Incorporeal Hereditaments are ſtated in the Commentaries to be principally of ten ſorts; Advowſons; Tithes; Commons; Ways; Offices; Dignities; Franchiſes; Corodies, or Penſions; Annuities, and Rents. HERESLITA, OR HERESSA, OR HERESLIZ, A hired ſoldier, that departs without licence; derived from the Saxon here, exercitus, and ſliten, to depart, according to Co. 4 Inſt. f. 128.

HERESY, Hæreſis.] Among Proteſtants, is ſaid to be a falſe opinion repugnant to ſome point of doctrine clearly revealed in ſcripture, and either abſolutely eſſential to the Chriſtian faith, or at leaſt of moſt high importance. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 2. § 1.

Anciently, under the general name of Hereſy there have been comprehended three ſorts of crimes; 1. Apoſtacy, when a Chriſtian apoſtatizes to Paganiſm. 2. Witchcraft, 3. Formal Hereſy, which ſeems to be an apoſtacy from the eſtabliſhed religion; for which, and the ſeveral ways of determining, puniſhing, and the difference between the Civil and Imperial laws, Popiſh canons, and the laws of England concerning hereſy, ſee a large account in 1 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 383—410.

It ſeems difficult preciſely to determine what error ſhall amount to Hereſy, and what not; but the ſtatute 1 Eliz. cap. 1. which erected the High Commiſſion court, having reſtrained it to ſuch as are either determined by ſcripture, or by one of the four firſt general councils, or by ſome other council, by expreſs words of ſcripture, or by parliament, with the aſſent of the convocation; theſe rules are at preſent generally thought the beſt directions concerning this matter. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 2. § 2.

By the Common-law, one convicted of Hereſy, and refuſing to abjure it, or falling into it again after he abjured it, might be burnt, by force of the writ de hæretico comburendo, which iſſued out of Chancery upon a certificate of ſuch conviction; but he forfeited neither lands nor goods, becauſe the proceedings againſt him were only pro ſalute animæ. F. N. B. 269: 3 Inſt. 43: Doctor and Student, lib. 2. cap. 29: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 2. § 10.

This writ de Hæretico comburendo is thought by ſome to be as ancient as the Comman-law itſelf. However it appears from thence that the conviction of Hereſy by the Common-law was not in any petty eccleſiaſtical court, but before the Archbiſhop himſelf in a Provincial Synod; and that the delinquent was delivered over to the King to do as he ſhould pleaſe with him: ſo that the Crown had a controul over the Spiritual Power, and might pardon the convict by iſſuing no proceſs againſt him; the writ de hæretico comburendo being not a writ of courſe, but iſſuing only by the ſpecial direction of the King in council. F. N. B. 269: 1 Hal. P. C. 395.

But in the Reign of Henry IV, when the eyes of the chriſtian world began to be open, and the ſeeds of the proteſtant religion (though under the opprobious name of Lollardy) took root in this kingdom; the Clergy taking advantage, from the King's dubious title, to demand an increaſe of their own power obtained an act of parliament, (ſtat. 2 H. 4. c. 15,) which ſharpened the edge of perſecution to its utmoſt keenneſs. For by that ſtatute the Dioceſan alone, without the intervention of a Synod, might convict of heretical tenets; and unleſs the convict abjured his opinions, or if after abjuration he relapſed, the ſheriff was bound ex officio, if required by the biſhop, to commit the unhappy victim to the flames without waiting for the conſent of the Crown. By Stat. 2 H. 5. c. 7, Lollardy was alſo made a temporal offence, and indictable in the King's courts; which did not thereby gain an excluſive, but only a concurrent juriſdiction, with the biſhop's conſiſtory.

Afterwards when the final reformation of religion began to advance, the power of the eccleſiaſtics was ſomewhat moderated; for though what Hereſy is, was not then preciſely defined, yet we are told in ſome points what it is not. The Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 14, Declaring, that offences againſt the ſee of Rome are not Hereſy; and the Ordinary being thereby reſtrained from proceeding in any caſe upon mere ſuſpicion; that is, unleſs the party be accuſed cuſed by two credible witneſſes, or an indictment for Hereſy be firſt previouſly found in the King's courts of Common-law. And yet the ſpirit of perſecution was not then abated, but only diverted into a lay channel. For in ſix years afterwards by Stat. 31 Hen. 8. c. 14, the bloody law of the Six Articles was made; which eſtabliſhed the ſix moſt conteſted points of popery; tranſubſtantiation, communion in one kind, the celibacy of the clergy, monaſtic vows, the ſacrifice of the maſs, and auricular confeſſion; which points were "determined and reſolved by the moſt godly ſtudy, pain, and travail of his majeſty: for which his moſt humble and obedient Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and temporal and the Commons, in parliament aſſembled, did not only render and give unto his highneſs their moſt high and hearty thanks," but did alſo enact and declare all oppugners of the firſt to be Hereticks, and to be burnt with fire; and of the five laſt to be felons, and to ſuffer death. The ſame ſtatute eſtabliſhed a new and mixed juriſdiction of Clergy and Laity for the trial and conviction of Hereticks; the reigning prince being then equally intent on deſtroying the ſupremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, and eſtabliſhing all other Romiſh corruptions of the chriſtian religion.

It would be unneceſſary to perplex this detail with the various repeals and revivals of the ſanguinary laws in the two ſucceeding reigns; we may therefore proceed directly to the reign of Queen Elizabeth; when the Reformation was finally eſtabliſhed. By ſtat. 1 Eliz. c. 1, all former ſtatutes relating to Hereſy are repealed, which leaves the juriſdiction of Hereſy as it ſtood at Common-law; viz. as to the infliction of common cenſures, in the Eccleſiaſtical Courts; and in caſe of burning the Heretic in the Provincial Synod only. 5 Rep. 23: 12 Rep. 56, 92. Sir Matthew Hale indeed is of a different opinion, and holds that ſuch power reſides in the Dioceſan alſo, tho' he agrees that in either caſe the writ de hæretico comburendo was not demandable of common right, but grantable or otherwiſe merely at the King's diſcretion. 1 Hal. P. C. 405. But the principal point now gained was, that by this ſtatute a boundary is for the firſt time ſet to what ſhall be accounted Hereſy; nothing for the future being ſo to be determined, but only ſuch tenets, which have been heretofore ſo declared 1. By the words of the canonical ſcriptures. 2. By the firſt four General Councils or ſuch others as have only uſed the words of the Holy Scriptures; or, 3. which ſhall be hereafter ſo declared by the parliament, with the aſſent of the Clergy in Convocation. Thus was Hereſy reduced to a greater certainty than before; though it might not have been the worſe to have defined it in terms ſtill more preciſe and particular; as a man continued ſtill liable to be burnt for what perhaps he did not underſtand to be Hereſy, till the eccleſiaſtical judge ſo interpreted the words of the canonical ſcriptures.

For the writ de Hæretico comburendo remained ſtill in force, and there are inſtances of its being put in execution upon two Anabaptiſts in the ſeventeenth of Elizabeth, and two Arians in the ninth of James I. But it was totally aboliſhed, and Hereſy again ſubjected only to eccleſiaſtical correction pro ſalute animæ by virtue of Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 9; for in one and the ſame reign our lands were delivered from the ſlavery of military tenures; our bodies from arbitrary impriſonment by the Habeas Corpus act; and our minds from the tyranny of ſuperſtitious bigotry, by demoliſhing this laſt badge of perſecution in the Engliſh law. 4 Comm. 46—9.

The following determinations will further explain the hiſtory and progreſs of proceedings in Hereſy; and thoſe relative to the temporal courts ſeem to be yet undiſputed law, as far as they are now applicable.

By the Common-law with us, the Convocation of the clergy or Provincial Synod, might and frequently did proceed to the ſentencing of Hereticks, and, when convicted left them to the ſecular power, whereupon the writ of hæretico comburendo might iſſue. Bro. tit. Hereſy: 2 Rol. Abr. 226.

It is alſo agreed, that every Biſhop may convict perſons of Hereſy within his own dioceſe, and proceed by church cenſures againſt thoſe who ſhall be convicted; but it is ſaid, that no ſpiritual judge, who is not a biſhop, hath this power; and it hath been queſtioned, whether a conviction before the Ordinary were a ſufficient foundation whereon to ground the writ de hæretico comburendo, as it is agreed that a conviction before the Convocation was. F. N. B. 269: 12 Co. 56, 57: 3 Inſt. 40: Gibſ. Codex 401: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 2. § 4: State Trials, Vol. 2. 275.

It ſeems agreed, that regularly the Temporal Courts have no conuſance of Hereſy, either to determine what it is, or to puniſh the Heretick as ſuch, but only as a diſturber of the public peace; that therefore, if a man be proceeded againſt as an Heretick in the ſpiritual court, pro ſalute animæ, and think himſelf aggrieved, his proper remedy is to bring his appeal to a higher eccleſiaſtical court, and not to move for a prohibition, from a temporal one. 27 H. 8. 14 b: 5 Co. 58: Hob. 236.

Yet a Temporal Judge may incidentally take knowledge whether a tenet be heretical or not; as where one was committed by force of ſtat. 2 H. 4. c. 15, for ſaying, that he was not bound by the law of God to pay tithes to the curate; another for ſaying, that tho' he was excommunicated before men, yet he was not ſo before God; the temporal courts on an habeas corpus in the firſt caſe, and in an action of falſe impriſonment in the other, adjudged neither of the points to be Hereſy within that ſtatute, for the King's courts will examine all things which are ordained by ſtatute. 3 Inſt. 42: 1 Rol. Rep. 110: 2 Bulſt. 300.

In quare impedit if the biſhop plead that he refuſed the clerk for Hereſy, it ſeems that he muſt ſet forth the particular point, that it may appear to be heretical to the court wherein the action is brought. 5 Co. 58: 1 And. 191: 3 Leon. 199: 3 Lev. 314. See title Quare Impedit.

HERIOT:

HERIOTUM, Sax. heregeat; bellicæ apparatus, from here, exercitus, an army, and geat, fuſus, effuſus.] Signified originally a tribute given to the lord of a manor for his better preparation for war. By the laws of Canutus, at the death of the great men of this realm, ſo many horſes and arms were to be paid as they were in their reſpective life-times obliged to keep for the King's ſervice. Spelm. Sir Edw. Coke makes Heriot, or heregat, (from herus lord) the lord's beaſt: And it is now taken for the beſt beaſt, whether it be horſe, ox, or cow, that the tenant dies poſſeſſed of, due and payable to the lord of the manor: and in ſome manors, the beſt goods, piece of plate, &c. Kitch. 133.

There is this difference between Heriot and Relief; Heriot has been generally a perſonal, and Relief always a predial ſervice.

It appears not only from Spelman's conjectures, but likewiſe from the laws themſelves of King Canutus, that the Danes were the firſt inventors of Heriots, and that it was a political inſtitution of theirs, whereby the Daniſh tenants were to hold by military ſervice, and their arms and horſes, at their deaths, to revert to the Public; by that means putting the whole ſtrength and defence of the kingdom into their hands; committing only the affairs of agriculture, and the improvement of the nation to the Engliſh, though they thereby enjoyed greater freedom and immunities in their tenures than the Daniſh tenants. Spelm. 287.

As to the ſeveral kinds of Heriots, ſome are due by cuſtom, ſome by tenure, and ſome by reſervation on deeds executed within time of memory; thoſe due by cuſtom, are the moſt frequent, and aroſe by the contract or agreement of the lord and tenant, in conſideration of ſome benefit or advantage accruing to the tenant; and for which an Heriot, as the beſt beaſt, beſt piece of houſhold furniture, &c. became due, and belonged to the lord, either on the death or alienation of the tenant, and which the lord may ſeize, either within the manor or without, at his election, Dyer 199 b: Bro. title Heriot 2, 3.

Heriots are therefore now to be conſidered as uſually divided into two ſorts; Heriot-ſervice and Heriot-cuſtom. The former, being ſuch as are due upon a ſpecial reſervation in a grant or leaſe of lands, therefore amount to little more than a mere rent. 2 Saund. 166. The latter ariſe upon no ſpecial reſervation whatſoever, but depend merely upon immemorial uſage and cuſtom. Co. Cop. § 24. The latter, of which we are here principally to ſpeak, are defined to be "a cuſtomary tribute of goods and chattels, payable to the Lord of the fee, on the deceaſe of the owner of the land." 2 Comm. c. 28.

Upon the plan of the Daniſh eſtabliſhment, already noticed, did William the Conqueror faſhion his law of reliefs, when he aſcertained the preciſe relief to be taken of every tenant in chivalry; and, contrary to the feodal cuſtom and the uſage of his own duchy of Normandy, required arms and implements of war to be paid inſtead of money. LL. Guil. Conq. c. 22, 23, 24. See this Dict. titles Relief: Tenure II. 5.

The Daniſh compulſive Heriots, being thus tranſmuted into reliefs, underwent the ſame ſeveral viciſſitudes as the feodal tenures, and in ſocage eſtates do frequently remain to this day in the ſhape of a Double Rent payable at the death of the tenant: the Heriots which now continue among us, and preſerve that name, ſeeming rather to be of Saxon parentage, and at firſt to have been merely diſcretionary. Lambard, Peramb. of Kent. 492.

Theſe are now for the moſt part confined to Copyhold Tenures and are due by cuſtom only, which is the life of all eſtates by copy, and perhaps are the only inſtance where cuſtom has favoured the Lord. For this payment was originally a voluntary donation or gratuitous legacy of the tenant; perhaps in acknowledgement of his having been raiſed a degree above villeinage, when all his goods and chattels were quite at the mercy of the Lord: and cuſtom which has on the one hand confirmed the tenant's intereſt in excluſion of the Lord's will, has on the other hand eſtabliſhed this diſcretional piece of gratitude into a permanent duty. An Heriot may alſo appertain to free land, that is held by ſervice and ſuit of court; in which caſe it is moſt commonly a copyhold enfranchiſed, whereupon the Heriot is ſtill due by cuſtom. Bracton ſpeaks of Heriots as frequently due on the death of both ſpecies of tenants, which he obſerves, magis fit de gratiâ quam de jure; in which Fleta and Britton agree: thereby plainly intimating the original of this cuſtom to have been merely voluntary, as a legacy from the tenant, though now the immemorial uſage has eſtabliſhed it as of right in the Lord. Bract. l. 2. c. 36. § 9: Fleta l. 3. c. 18: Britton, c. 69.

This Heriot is, as has been ſaid, ſometimes the beſt live beaſt, or averium, which the tenant dies poſſeſſed of, which is particularly denominated the villein's relief, in the 29th law of King William the Conqueror; ſometimes the beſt inanimate good, under which a jewel or piece of plate may be included: but it is always a perſonal chattel, which immediately on the death of the tenant who was the owner of it, being aſcertained by the option of the Lord, becomes veſted in him as his property; and is no charge upon the lands, but merely on the goods and chattels. Hob. 60. The tenant muſt be the owner of it, elſe it cannot be due; and therefore on the death of a feme-covert no Heriot can be taken; for ſhe can have no ownerſhip in things perſonal. Keilw. 84: 4 Leon. 239. In ſome places there is a cuſtomary compoſition in money, as 10*s.* or 20*s.* in lieu of a Heriot, by which the lord and tenant are both bound, if it be an indiſputable antient cuſtom; but a new compoſition of this ſort, will not bind the repreſentatives of either party; for that amounts to the creation of a new cuſtom, which is now impoſſible. Co. Cop. § 31: See 2 Comm. 422—4. c. 28.

The following extracts will further elucidate this ſubject.—Heriot-ſervice is payable on the death of Tenant in fee-ſimple; and Heriot-cuſtom upon the death of Tenant for life: Co. Lit. 185.

If an Heriot is reſerved upon a leaſe, it is Heriot-ſervice, and incident to the reverſion. Lutw. 1366, 7. For a Heriot goes with the reverſion, as well as rent; and the grantee of the reverſion ſhall have it. 2 Saund. 166.

Although an Heriot reſerved upon a leaſe is called an Heriot-ſervice; yet it is not like the caſe where a man holds land by the ſervice of paying an Heriot, &c. becauſe where a Heriot is reſerved on leaſe, the proper remedy is either a diſtreſs, or action of covenant grounded on the contract, for the leſſor cannot ſeize, as the lord of a manor may do, the beaſt of his tenant who holds of him by Heriot-ſervice. Keilw. 82, 84. See Poſt.

There may be a covenant in leaſes for lives, &c. to render the beſt beaſt, or ſo much money for an Heriot, at the election of the leſſor; in which caſe the leſſor muſt give notice which he will accept, before action may be brought for it, or a diſtreſs taken. &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 19.

For Heriot-ſervice, the lord may diſtrain any beaſt belonging to the tenant on the land: Alſo it has been held, that the lord may diſtrain any man's beaſts which are upon the land, and retain them until an Heriot is ſatisfied. Co. Litt. 185: Litt. Rep. 33: Cro. Car. 260. And if the tenant deviſeth away all his goods, &c. yet the lord ſhall have his Heriot on the death of the tenant. Stat. 13 Eliz. cap. 5.

When a Heriot is to be paid by a certain life-holder of his own goods, an aſſignee is not liable to pay the Heriot; his goods not being the goods of ſuch life. Cro. Car. 313: 2 Nelſ. 932. If the lord purchaſe part of the tenancy, Heriot-ſervice is extinguiſhed; but it is not ſo of Heriot-cuſtom. 8 Rep. 105.

It hath been ſolemnly adjudged, that for an Heriot-ſervice, or for a Heriot reſerved by way of tenure, the lord may either ſeize or diſtrain; for when the tenant agrees that the lord ſhall on his death have the beſt beaſt, &c. the lord hath his election which beaſt he will take, and by ſeizing thereof reduces that to his poſſeſſion, wherein he had a property at the death of the tenant, without the concurring act of any other perſon; and it is not like the caſe where the leſſor reſerves 20 s. or a robe; for there the leſſee has his election which he will pay, and being to do the firſt act the lord cannot ſeize, but muſt diſtrain. Plow. 96. adjudged. Cro. Eliz. 589.

So it hath been ruled, that for a Heriot-cuſtom or ſervice the lord may ſeize as well in the manor as out; but if he diſtrain, it muſt be in the manor. See 1 Salk. 356: 1 Show. 81. S. P: 3 Mod. 231. But it is now ſtated as poſitive law, that for Heriot-cuſtom, which Coke ſays, Co. Cop. § 25, lies only in prender, and not in render, the lord may ſeize the identical thing itſelf, but cannot diſtrain any other chattel for it. Cro. Eliz. 590: Cro. Car. 260: 3 Comm. 15. c. 1. And this is confirmed by the following authorities.

For Heriot-cuſtom, the lord is to ſeize, not diſtrain; and he may ſeize the beſt beaſt, &c. though out of the manor, or in the King's highway, becauſe he claims it as his proper goods, by the death of the tenant, which he may ſeize in any place where he finds it. Kitch. 267: 2 Inſt. 132: 2 Nelſ. Abr. 931: Plowd. 96: Keilw. 82, 4: 1 Salk. 356: Bro. tit. Heriot, 2, 3.

And it is ſaid, that this liberty muſt be underſtood to be annexed to ancient tenures, on which the lords had many privileges, and not to be extended to thoſe which are created within time of memory, upon particular reſervations. HIGHWAY:

VIA REGIA.] A publick paſſage for the King's people; for which reaſon it is called the King's Highway.

Under this title are comprehended Bridges repaired by the pariſh or townſhip. As to County Bridges, See this Dict. title Bridges.

The law relating to Turnpike-roads as well as that concerning Highways, being in a great meaſure, regulated by ſtatutes, the proviſions of which are in ſome degree implicated with, and frequently refer to each other, the whole is here digeſted and abridged according to the following diviſions.

I. Of the various Sorts of Highways, &c.
II. Of the Right to, the claiming, and changing and enlarging of Highways.
III. Of Repairs, at Common-Law.
IV. Of Nuſances, at Common Law, in Highways.
V. Of proceedings relative to repairing Highways, Nuſances in them, &c.
VI. Regulation of { (A) HIGHWAYS / (B) TURNPIKE-ROADS } by Statute.

I. It ſeems, that anciently there were but four Highways in England, which were free and common to all the King's ſubjects, and through which they might paſs without any toll, unleſs there was a particular conſideration for it; all others, which we have at this day, are ſuppoſed to have been made through the grounds of private perſons, on writs of ad quod damnum, &c. which being an injury to the owner of the ſoil, it is ſaid that they may preſcribe for toll without any ſpecial conſideration. 3 New Abr. 54: 1 Mod. 231: 2 Mod. 143.

There are (ſays Lord Coke) three kinds of ways: 1. A foot-way, called in Latin iter. 2. A pack and prime way, which is both a horſe and foot-way, called in Latin actus. 3. A cart-way, called in Latin via or aditus, which contains the other two, and alſo a cart way; and is called via regia, if it be common to all men; and communis ſtrata, if it belong only to ſome town or private perſon. Co. Lit. 56 a.

But, notwithſtanding theſe diſtinctions, it ſeems, that any of the ſaid ways which is common to all the King's ſubjects, whether it lead directly to a market-town or only from town to town, may properly be called a Highway; that any ſuch cart-way may be called the King's Highway; that a river common to all men may alſo be called a Highway; and that nuſances in any of the ſaid ways are puniſhable by indictment: otherwiſe they would not be puniſhed at all: for they are not actionable unleſs they cauſe a ſpecial damage to ſome particular perſon; becauſe, if ſuch action would lie, a multiplicity of ſuits would enſue. See 2 Term Rep. —. But it ſeems, that a way to a pariſh church, or to the common fields of a town, or to a village, which terminate there, may be called a private way, becauſe it belongs, not to all the King's ſubjects, but only to the particular inhabitants of ſuch pariſh, houſe or village, each of which, as it ſeems, may have an action for a nuſance therein. Palm. 389: Cro. Eliz. 63. 664: 1 Vent. 189, 208: 3 Keb. 28: Co. Lit. 56: 6 Mod. 255: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 1.

A ſtreet built upon a perſon's own ground is a dedication of the Highway ſo far only as the publick has occaſion for it, viz. for a right of paſſage, not as to the abſolute poſſeſſion of the ſoil. Stra. 1004.

If paſſengers have uſed time out of mind, when the roads are bad, to go by outlets on the land adjoining to a Highway in an open field, ſuch outlets are parcel of the Highway; and therefore if they are ſown with corn, and the tract founderous, the King's ſubjects may go upon the corn. 1 Rol. Abr. 390: Cro. Car. 366. S. C.: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 2. But it is not a good juſtification in treſpaſs that the defendant has a ſpecific right of way over the plaintiff's land, and that he had gone upon the adjoining land, becauſe the way was impaſſable by being overflowed by a river. Taylor v. Whitehead Doug. 745-9.

Though every Highway is ſaid to be the King's, yet this muſt be underſtood ſo as that in every Highway the King and his Subjects may paſs and repaſs at their pleaſure. But the freehold, and all the profits, as trees, &c. belong to the lord of the ſoil, or to the owner of the lands on both ſides of the way. Alſo the lord or owner of the ſoil ſhall have an action of treſpaſs for digging the ground. But the lord of a rape, within which there are ten hundreds, may preſcribe to have all the trees growing within an Highway within this rape, though the manor or ſoil adjoining belongs to another: for uſage to take the trees is a good mark of ownerſhip. 1 Rol. Abr. 392: 1 Brownl. 42: Keilw. 141.

II. A Man may have a way either by preſcription or grant, by reſervation, by implication, or by owelty of partition, and ſhall not in a cur' claudend' be obliged to ſhew which way he claims it; but it will be ſufficient for him to alledge debet & ſolet, &c. but in a bar or replication, he muſt ſhew his title preciſely. 1 Vent. 274: 2 Lev. 148: 3 Keb. 528, 531. But he who preſcribes for a way, muſt ſhew in certain whether it is a foot, horſe, or cart way. Yel. 163.

But it ſeems, that if a man hath a way for carriages from D. to Blackacre over my cloſe, and after he purchaſes land adjoining to Blackacre, he cannot uſe the ſaid way with carriages to the land adjoining, for then it may be very prejudicial to my cloſe; but it ſeems, if I will help myſelf, I muſt ſhew the ſpecial matter, and that he uſed it for the land adjoining. 1 Rol. Abr. 391.

A way muſt not be claimed as appendant or appurtenant to a houſe, becauſe it is only an eaſement, and no intereſt. Yelv. 159. But it may be quaſi appendant thereto, and as ſuch paſs by grant thereof. Cro. Jac. 190.

A man may preſcribe for a way from his houſe through a certain cloſe, &c. to church, though he himſelf has lands next adjoining to his ſaid houſe, through which of neceſſity he muſt firſt paſs; for the general preſcription ſhall be applied only to the lands of others. Palm. 387, 388: 2 Rol. Rep. 397.

An ancient Highway cannot be changed without an inquiſition found on a writ of ad quod damnum, that ſuch change will be no prejudice to the Public; and it is ſaid, that if one change a Highway without ſuch authority, he may ſtop the new way whenever he pleaſes; neither can the King's ſubjects, in an action brought againſt them for going over ſuch new way, juſtify generally as in a common Highway, but ought to ſhew ſpecially, by way of excuſe, how the old way was obſtructed, and a new one ſet out; neither are the inhabitants bound to keep watch in ſuch new way, or repair it, or to make amends for a robbery committed in it. Cro. Car. 266: Vaugh. 341: Yelv. 141: 1 Burr. 465: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 3.

But it hath been holden, that if a water, which hath been an ancient Highway, by degrees changes its courſe, and goes over different ground from that whereon it uſed to run, yet the Highway continues in the new channel in the ſame manner as in the old. 22 Aſſ. 93: 1 Rol. Abr. 390.

An owner of land, over which there is an open road may incloſe it by his own authority, but he is bound to leave ſufficient ſpace and room for the road, and he is obliged to repair it till he throws up the incloſure. But if he alter or change the road by the legal courſe of a writ of ad quod damnum, he is not obliged to repair the new road, unleſs the jury impoſe ſuch a condition on him: for otherwiſe it ſtands juſt as it did before, even though it was at firſt open and ſhould be directed by the jury to be incloſed. And a private act of parliament for incloſing lands which veſts a power in commiſſioners to ſet out new roads by their award, is equally ſtrong as to theſe conſequences as a writ of ad quod damnum. See 1 Burr. 456.

As to the regulation by ſtatute, See poſt. VI. (A) 9.

III. Of Common right, the general charge of repairing Highways lies on the occupiers of lands in the pariſh wherein they lie; but it is ſaid that the tenants of the lands adjoining are bound to ſcour their ditches. 1 Rol. Abr. 39: March 26: 1 Vent. 90. 183: 8 Hen. 7. 5.

If a pariſh is part in one county, and part in another, and the Highways, in one county are out of repair, the whole pariſh ſhall contribute to the repair; but there may be an agreement between the inhabitants, that the one ſhall repair one part, and the other the other; and ſuch agreement is good between themſelves, and for breach, the one may have an action upon the caſe againſt the other; but in indictment they ſhall take no advantage of theſe agreements, for as to the King they are equally liable. 1 Mod. 112: 1 Vent. 256: 3 Keb. 301.

A Highway lying within a pariſh, the whole pariſh is of common right bound to repair it; except it appears that it ought to be repaired by ſome particular perſon either ratione tenuræ, or by preſcription. 1 Vent. 183. Style 163.

If a pariſh lie in two diſtinct counties, an indictment may be brought againſt that part of the pariſh in which the ruinous road lies. 4 Burr. 2511. But it muſt appear upon the face of the indictment by what right the charge is laid upon the particular diviſion of any pariſh, which is in one county only. 5 Burr. 2700, 2: As that they have repaired time out of mind. Andr. 276: Hardw. 259; and ſee 2 Term Rep. 513.

But though the pariſh be obliged of common right to repair the Highways in it, yet it is certain, that particular perſons may be bound to repair the Highway, by reaſon of incloſure or preſcription; as where the owner of lands not incloſed, next adjoining to the Highway, incloſes his lands on both ſides of it; in which caſe he is bound to make a perfect good way, and ſhall not be excuſed by making it good as it was before the incloſure, if it were then any way defective, becauſe by the incloſure he takes from the people the liberty of going over the lands adjoining to the common track. 1 Rol. Abr. 390: Cro. Car. 366: 1 Sid. 464.

Alſo it is ſaid, that if one incloſe land on one ſide, which hath anciently been incloſed on the other ſide, he ought to repair all the way; but that if there be no ſuch ancient incloſure on the other ſide, he ought to repair but half the way. 1 Sid. 464.

Therefore, if there be an old hedge time out of mind belonging to A. on the one ſide of the way, and B. having land lying on the other ſide, makes a new hedge, there B. ſhall be charged with the whole repair. 1 Sid. 464: 2 Keb. 665: 2 Saund. 157. But if A. makes a hedge on the one ſide of the way, and B. on the other, they ſhall be chargeable by moieties. 1 Sid. 464: 2 Keb. 665;

665. But it seems clear, that wherever a person makes himself liable to repair a Highway by reason of inclosure, that by throwing of it open again, he thereby frees himself from the burthen of any future reparation. 2 Saund. 160; See ante II.

In a writ of ad quod dammum, and inquisition found thereupon, after the person hath once made the road; (and N. B. it is not necessary the whole new road should go through his own soil;) the parishioners ought to keep it in repair: because being discharged from repairing the old road, no new burthen is laid upon them; their labour is only transferred from one place to another. But if the new road lies in another parish, the person who sued out the writ, and his heirs ought to keep it in repair, because the inhabitants of the other parish gaining no benefit from the old road being taken away, it would be imposing a new charge upon them for which they enjoyed no compensation. 3 Atk. 772.

Particular persons may be bound to repair a Highway, by prescription, or in respect of inclosure of the land wherein the road lies; and it is said, that a corporation aggregate may be charged by a general prescription, that it ought and hath used to do it, without shewing any consideration in respect whereof they had used to do it, because such a corporation never dies, neither is it any plea, that they have done it out of charity; but it is said, that such a general prescription is not sufficient to charge a private person, because no man is bound to do a thing which his ancestors have done, unless it be for some special reason; as having lands descended to him holden by such service, &c. but it seems, that an indictment charging a tenant of lands in fee with having used of right to repair such a way ratione tenuræ terræ suæ, without adding that his ancestors, or those whose estate he hath, have so done, is sufficient, for it is implied. 27 Ass. 8: 27 Ed. 4. 38: Bro. Prescription 49, 70: Keilw. 52 a: Latch. 206: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 5—8.

And it seems certain in all those cases, whether a private person be bound to repair a Highway by inclosure or prescription, that the parish cannot take advantage of it on the general issue, but must plead it specially; that therefore, if to an indictment against the parish, for not repairing a Highway, they plead Not-guilty, this shall be intended only that the ways are in repair, but does not go to the right of reparation. 1 Mod. 112: 3 Keb. 301: 1 Vent. 256.

At Common law it is said, that all the county ought to make good the reparations of a Highway, where no particular persons are bound to do it; by reason the whole county have their ease and passage by the said way. Co. Rep. 13. By the ancient Common-law, villages are to repair their Highways, and may be punished for their decay; and if any do injure or straighten the Highway, he is punishable in the King's Bench, or before justices of the peace in the Court-Leet, &c. 27 Ass. 63: Cromp. Jurisd. 76. See post V.

As to Private ways.—If one grants a way, and afterwards digs trenches in it to my hindrance, I may fill them up again. But if a way which a man has, becomes not passable, or becomes very bad, by the owner of the land tearing it up with his carts, so that the same be filled with water, yet he who has the way cannot dig the ground to let out the water, for he has no interest in the soil. Godb. 52, 3. But in such case he may bring his action against the owner of the land for spoiling the way, or perhaps he may go out of the way, upon the land of the wrong-doer, as near to the bad way as he can. But where a private way is spoiled by those who have a right to pass thereon, and not through the default of the owner of the land, it seems that they who have the use and benefit of the way, ought to repair it, and not the owner of the soil, unless he is bound thereto by custom or special agreement. 2 Burr. 382.

In an action on the case for not repairing a private road leading through the defendant's close, it is sufficient to allege that the defendant as occupier of the close is bound to repair. 3 Term Rep. 766.

For further matter as to repairs of Highways, See post VI. (A). 2, 3, 6.

IV. It is clearly agreed to be a Nusance to dig a ditch, or make a hedge a-cross the Highway, or to erect a new gate, or to lay logs of timber in it, or generally to do any other act which will render it less commodious. Kitchin. 34: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 48. Also it is a Nusance for an heir, (and for which he may be indicted,) to continue an incroachment, or other nusance to a Highway begun by his ancestor, because such continuance thereof amounts, in the judgment of law, to a new nusance. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 61. Also it is agreed, that it is no excuse for him who lays logs in the Highway, that he laid them only here and there so that the people might have a passage through them by windings and turnings. 2 Rol. Abr. 137: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 49.

It is a nusance to suffer the Highway to be incommoded by reason of the foulness, &c. of the adjoining ditches, or by boughs of trees hanging over it, &c. And it is said, that the owner of land next adjoining to the Highway, ought of common right to scour his ditches; but that the owner of land next adjoining to such land, is not bound by the Common-law so to do without a special prescription; also it is said, that the owner of trees hanging over an Highway, to the annoyance of travellers, is bound by the Common-law to lop them; and it is clear that any other person may lop them, so far as to avoid the nusance. 8 H. 7. 5 a: Kitch. 34: Dalt. cap. 26: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 52.

But it is no nusance for an inhabitant of a town to unlade billets, &c. in the street before his house, by reason of the necessity of the case, unless he suffer them to continue there an unreasonable time. 2 Rol. Abr. 137, 265.

Any one may justify pulling down, or otherwise destroying a common nusance, as a new gate or house erected in a Highway; and it hath been holden, that there is no need, in pleading such justification to shew that as little damage was done as might be. 2 Rol. Abr. 144: Cro. Car. 184: 1 Jon. 221: 2 Salk. 458.

Though all nusances are punishable by indictment with fine and imprisonment, it is said, that one convicted of a nusance to the Highway, may be commanded by the judgment to remove it at his own costs, &c. 2 Rol. Abr. 84: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 75. § 14. See 2 Stra. 686.

A gate erected in a Highway is a common nusance, because it interrupts the people in that free and open passage, which they before enjoyed and were lawfully intitled to; but where such a gate has continued time out of mind, it shall be intended that it was set up at first by consent, on a composition with the owner of the land on the the laying out the road, in which caſe the people had never any right to a freer paſſage than what they ſtill enjoy. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 75. § 9. If one has a private way without a gate, and a gate is hung up, an action on the caſe lies, for the party hath not his way as he had before. Litt. Rep. 267.

See further as to nuſances in Highways poſt V: and of their puniſhment by ſtatute, poſt VI. (A) 4.

V. As to the general doctrine with reſpect to Indictments, &c. upon this ſubject, Mr. Serjeant Hawkins has laid down the following rules:

Firſt, That it is ſafe in every ſuch indictment to ſhew both the place from which, and alſo the place to which, the way ſuppoſed to be out of repair doth lead; yet exceptions, for want of ſuch certainty, have ſometimes been diſallowed: (See 4 Burr. 2091: Lucas 383.) However it ſeems certain, That there is no neceſſity to ſhew that a Highway leads to a market town, becauſe every Highway leads from town to town. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 86.

An indictment againſt the pariſh of B. for not repairing a road leading from A. to B. is excluſive of B. and therefore bad: and it is not aided by a ſubſequent allegation that a certain part of the ſame Highway, ſituate in B. is in decay, &c. 3 Term Rep. 513.—See 1 H. Black. Rep. 351; that in pleading a publick Highway it is not neceſſary to ſtate any termini. So in an indictment for a nuſance in a Highway, it is not neceſſary to mention the termini. Stra. 44.

2dly, That it is neceſſary in every ſuch indictment expreſsly to ſhew in what place the nuſance complained of was done; for which cauſe an indictment for ſtopping a way at D. leading from D. to C. is not good; for it is impoſſible that a way leading from D. ſhould be in D. and no other place is alledged. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 87.

So alſo in a preſentment the Highway muſt be alleged to lie in the pariſh, otherwiſe the pariſh is not bound to repair. Cowp. 111; Stra. 181.—But if there be two vills in a pariſh, it is not neceſſary, in an indictment for a nuſance, to ſhew in which vill the nuſance lies. Say. 119.

3dly, That every ſuch indictment ought alſo certainly to ſhew to what part of the Highway the nuſance did extend, as by ſhewing how many feet in length, and how many feet in breadth it contained; or otherwiſe the defendant will neither know of the certainty of the charge, againſt which he is to make his defence, neither will the court be able from the record to judge of the greatneſs of the offence, in order to aſſeſs a fine anſwerable thereunto; and upon this ground it hath been adjudged, that an indictment for ſtopping a certain part of the King's Highway at K. is bad, for the incertainty thereof. Alſo it hath been reſolved, that the place wherein ſuch a nuſance is alleged, is not ſufficiently aſcertained in ſuch an indictment, by ſhewing that it contained ſo many feet in length, and ſo many in breadth, by eſtimation. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 88.

An indictment for a nuſance in laying ſoil in a Highway is not bad for want of the length and breadth of the nuſance being ſet out. Say. 98.—Nor for a nuſance in digging two grips or ditches in a common footway. Say. 197.—Nor for a nuſance, that a certain Highway and bridge are in a ruinous condition. Say. 301.

4thly, That every ſuch indictment muſt ſhew, that the way wherein a nuſance is alledged, is a common Highway; for which cauſe it hath been reſolved, That an indictment for a nuſance to a horſeway, without adding that it was a Highway, is bad; and upon the ſame ground it ſeemeth alſo, That an indictment for a nuſance to a common footway to the church of D. for all the pariſhioners of D. is not good; yet it ſeems, that if thoſe laſt words, viz. for all the pariſhioners of D. had been omitted, ſuch an indictment might be maintained. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 89.

5thly, That it is not ſafe in an indictment againſt a common perſon for not repairing a Highway, which he ought to have done in reſpect of the tenure of certain lands, barely to ſay that he was bound to repair it ratione tenuræ terræ, without adding ſuæ. Alſo it is ſaid, that in an indictment againſt a biſhop, &c. for not repairing a Highway, in reſpect to certain lands, it ought to be ſhewn in what capacity he ought to repair it, becauſe otherwiſe it cannot be known in what capacity the proceſs is to be awarded againſt him. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 90.

If a man be charged to repair ratione tenuræ, he may throw it upon the pariſh by the general iſſue. Stra. 184.—And it hath been held upon conſideration that ratione tenuræ is ſufficient without ſuæ. Stra. 187. Hawkins poſitively ſtates that the defendant ought not to plead quod non debuit reparare without ſhewing who ought. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 94; cites 1 Sid. 140: Carth. 213: 11 Mod. 273: 12 Mod. 13.

6thly, That in every ſuch indictment the fact alledged againſt the defendant muſt be expreſſed in ſuch proper terms, that it may clearly appear to the court to have been a nuſance; and for this cauſe it hath been reſolved, That a preſentment for diverting a Highway is not good, becauſe a Highway cannot be diverted, but muſt always continue in the ſame place where it was, howſoever it be obſtructed, and a new way made in another place. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 91.

It hath been reſolved, That an indictment againſt a man for ſtopping a Highway in his own land, is good, without laying the offence done vi et armis. Alſo it is ſaid, That a preſentment that a Highway in ſuch a place is decayed by the default of the inhabitants of ſuch a town, is good, without naming any perſon in certainty. But it hath been adjudged, than an indictment againſt particular perſons muſt ſpecially charge them every one; for which cauſe it hath been reſolved, that an indictment againſt ſeveral for not repairing their ſtreets, that they, & eorum uterque, did not repair them, is not good. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76. § 92.

Upon an indictment for not repairing a Highway, if the defendant produce a certificate before trial, that the way is repaired, he ſhall be admitted to a fine: but after verdict, the certificate is too late, for then he muſt have a conſtat to the ſheriff, who ought to return that the way is repaired, becauſe the verdict, which is a record, muſt be anſwered by a record. Raym. 215. And where the defendants, indicted for not repairing a common foot-way, confeſſed the indictment, and ſubmitted to a fine; it was held, that the matter was not ended by their being fined; but that writs of diſtringas ſhall be awarded in infinitum till the court of B. R. is certified that the way is repaired, as it was when it was at beſt; but the defendants are not bound to put it in better repair than it has been time out of mind. 1 Salk. 358: 6 Mod. 163. If a defendant hath made a Highway as good as it is capable of being made, it was said, in an extraordinary case, this shall not discharge him, on an information against him; though it may be a mitigation of his fine. 3 Salk. 183. Also it is no excuse for the inhabitants of a parish indicted at Common-law, for not repairing the Highways, that they have done the work required by statute; for the statutes are made in aid of the Common-law: and when the statute work is not sufficient, rates and assessments are to be made. Dalt. c. 26.

It is said, that if the right or title to repair such ways come in question, upon suggestion and affidavit made thereof, a certiorari may be had to remove the indictment into B. R.

A person may be indicted for not repairing a house standing upon a Highway which is ruinous, and like to fall down, to the danger of travellers, whatever be his tenure, which in such case is not material. 1 Salk. 357.

If there be a common foot-way through a close by prescription, and the owner of the close ploughs up the way, and sows it, and lays thorns at the side of it, passengers may go over another foot-way in the same close, without being trespassers. Yelv. 142. And if a Highway is not sufficient, any passenger may break down the inclosure of it, and go over the land, and justify it till a sufficient way is made. 3 Salk. 182.

Erecting a gate cross a Highway, though not locked, but opening and shutting at pleasure, is esteemed a nusance; for it is not so free and easy a passage, as if there had been no gate: and the usual way of redressing nusances of this kind, is by indictment; but every person may remove the nusance, by cutting or throwing it down, if there be occasion so to do; and it hath been held, that though there are many gates across Highways, they must be anciently set up, and it shall be intended by licence from the King upon the writ of ad quod damnum. Cro. Car. 184. See ante IV.

VI. (A) Of Highways.

1. The Statute duty.
2. Assessment of Rates and other funds for the Repair of Highways.
3. Of the Appointment of the Surveyor, and his duty.
4. Of Nusances by Statute.
5. The Number of Horses in Carriages.
6. Of presenting Highways.
7. Of levying Assessments, Penalties and Forfeitures; and other general provisions to enforce the Execution of the Act.
8. Of Defendants in Actions on the Statutes, &c.
9. Of Changing and Enlarging Highways.

1. By stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 34, which repeals and consolidates the provisions of all former statutes on this subject, Occupiers of 50 l. a year keeping a team of three horses shall send the same and two men to do statute-duty for six days in every year.—And so for another six days in every year for every further 50 l. a year.—So also every person who shall occupy 50 l. in any other parish than where he resides.—Every person occupying 50 l. a year, but not keeping a team, shall send a team; a person not keeping a team, but occupying under 50 l. a year either where he does or does not reside, to pay the surveyor in lieu of duty for every 20 s. a year 1 d. for every day's duty.—A person keeping a team and not occupying 30 l. a year shall only send one man with the team.

Lands suffered to lie fresh, neither occupied or let, are liable to the performance of the duty; to be satisfied by their Owners. Palm. 389.

The livings of the clergy are liable as other estates. Watf. 40: 2 Inst. 784.

Whoever shall keep a cart and horse, and not a team, shall send the same, and one labourer, or pay the composition at the option of the surveyor.—Persons above 18 and under 60 not occupying 4 l. a year, not being apprentices or menial servants, if they have not otherwise performed or commuted shall, by themselves or deputy, perform the six days' duty.—A person keeping a coach or carriage and no team, and not occupying 50 l. a year shall pay 1 s. a day for each horse or the composition before mentioned at the option of the surveyor.—If the carriages required are not necessary, the owners shall send 3 men or pay 4 s. 6 d.—The labourers shall furnish themselves with proper instruments for the statute-labour; and shall with the teams, &c. work 8 hours a day.—If persons do not send a sufficient labourer besides the driver, or if the labourers disobey the surveyor, he may discharge them and recover the forfeiture against the master, as he might in case none had been sent at all. § 35.

A stand-cart and one horse to be reckoned half a team; a cart and two horses as two-thirds.—And if the duty require it, the surveyor may order it to be performed with a waggon. § 36.

The surveyor shall give four days' notice to the occupiers, &c. of the statute-duty required, and the days when. (See Ld. Raym. 858.) Persons making default in sending the team and men, to forfeit 10 s.—in sending cart, horse and man 3 s.—in sending cart, horse and two men 5 s.—in sending a labourer 1 s. 6 d.—The forfeitures to be applied to the Highways; the surveyor to be impartial. § 37.

The statute duty may be compounded for, as the Justices shall direct, at the rate of 4 s. 6 d. for a team; 2 s. for a cart and horse; 3 s. for a cart and 2 horses; and 4 d. for a day's personal labour, § 38.

Justices of cities, corporations, &c. are to execute this act within their jurisdictions. § 54.

If a necessity should arise in any particular place, the Justices may supersede the liberty of compounding, and order the statute-duty to be performed in kind; and lots shall be drawn which of the inhabitants shall so perform it. § 39.

The Justices may mitigate the composition, where part of the land occupied lies in another parish. § 40.

Sect. 41, Settles the manner in which the surveyors shall give notice of the time and place for compounding, and how such compositions shall be paid.

Where a draught or plough is kept and no carriage, 1 s. shall be paid for every horse or pair of oxen. § 42.

The Inhabitants may appoint 3 separate months in the year for seed-time, hay, and corn-harvest in which no Statute-duty shall be performed. §. 43.

The Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 58, empowers the Justices in special sessions in certain cases to apply the funds of Turnpike roads in aid of the statute-duty on Highways.

By Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 25. §. 23, Persons serving in the militia are exempted from statute-duty during their service.

The

The performance of this ſtatute-duty is no anſwer to an indictment for not repairing. Dalt. c. 26.

The inhabitants of a pariſh into which a road is turned by Turnpike-truſtees are not bound to do ſtatute work thereon. 1 Black. 603.

2. The Seſſions may order a rate not exceeding 6 d. in the pound to defray the expences of procuring materials, &c. for the repairs. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 30.

If the funds are exhauſted, and they and the labour appointed by the act, are inſufficient to keep the Highways in ſufficient repair, the Seſſions may cauſe an equal aſſeſſment for that purpoſe; provided the ſaid rate of 6 d. and this aſſeſſment do not exceed 9 d. per pound. §§ 45, 46.

Feoffees or truſtees of lands granted for the repair of Highways ſhall let them to the beſt advantage, and the Seſſions may enquire into the management thereof. § 52.

3. Of the Appointment of the Surveyor. By the ſaid Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 1, The officers and Pariſhioners ſhall aſſemble yearly on 22*d* of September at 11 in the morning, when the majority ſhall make a liſt of ten pariſhioners each poſſeſſing a real eſtate of 10 l. a year or renting 30 l. or worth 100 l. perſonally.—If a ſufficient number of this deſcription cannot be found, the deficiency ſhall be ſupplied by the moſt able inhabitants.—Within three days after, the conſtable ſhall ſend a copy of the liſt to the Juſtice of the diviſion, and the original liſt to the ſpecial Seſſions after Michaelmas ſeſſion; and give notice to the perſons named, to appear at the Seſſion and accept the office of ſurveyor (if appointed) or ſhew cauſe to the contrary.—The Juſtices, at ſuch ſpecial Seſſions ſhall appoint one, two or more ſurveyors from the ſaid liſt, preferring ſuch as are qualified; which ſhall be notified to the perſons choſen who ſhall be ſurveyors for the next year.—If any named in the liſt refuſe to ſerve, they ſhall forfeit 5 l.—And the Juſtices may appoint inhabitants of the county living within three miles of the pariſh; who on refuſal ſhall forfeit 50 s.—A ſurveyor ſerving one year ſhall be exempt for the three following.—If no liſt is returned, or the perſon appointed refuſes to ſerve; two Juſtices at ſpecial Seſſion may appoint a ſurveyor with a ſalary to be paid from the forfeitures, but not to exceed ⅓ of the 6 d. rate—The Juſtices may order the collector to return an account of the ſaid aſſeſſment.—Officers neglecting their duty to forfeit 40 s.

It ſeems that the preſence of the pariſh officers is not abſolutely eſſential to the legality of the meeting, provided it is in other reſpects fair and regular. 4 Burr. 2454.—More Surveyors than one are comprehended under, and underſtood by the word ſurveyor in this act. See Sect. 5, of the act.—If the liſt has been improperly procured, the Juſtices may reject it. 4 Burr. 2454.

Where a ſurveyor with a ſalary is appointed, the juſtices ſhall alſo appoint an aſſiſtant, who ſhall forfeit 50 s. on refuſal to ſerve; and another be appointed, liable alſo to 50 s. for refuſing; and they may then appoint one with a ſalary.—An aſſiſtant ſerving one year ſhall not be appointed again for three years, without his own conſent. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 2.

The Surveyor ſhall give ſecurity by bond, if required. § 3.

By § 5, It is provided that two parts in three of the pariſhioners aſſembled may recommend a Surveyor with a ſalary to the Juſtices.—And if the Surveyor dies or becomes incapable during the interval of the Seſſions, two Juſtices may appoint a perſon to officiate until the Seſſion.

The ſalaries of Surveyors in cities, &c. muſt be approved by two thirds of the pariſhioners. § 54.

As to the Surveyor's duty.—By § 4. of the ſame act, the aſſiſtant ſhall obey the Surveyor, and account to him for money received, under forfeiture of double the amount.—And for any neglect he ſhall forfeit, not more than 5 l. nor leſs than 40 s. at the diſcretion of the Juſtices.—The Surveyor is to draw on the aſſiſtant for ſums of 40 s. or upwards.

Surveyors ſhall view the Highways, and give notice to remove obſtructions or encroachments by hedges, &c. and if not remedied within twenty days the Surveyor may do it at the charge of the party offending, who ſhall alſo forfeit 1 d. per foot. § 12. and See poſt. 4.

The Surveyor ſhall upon oath inform two Juſtices of all Highways, bridges, &c. repairable by tenure which are out of repair.—And if they are not repaired on notice to the perſons chargeable they ſhall be preſented at the Seſſions. § 23. See. 1 Black. 602; and poſt. 6.

Juſtices at ſpecial Seſſions may order which of the Highways ſhall be firſt repaired. § 25.

Sect. 26, directs how, where, and in what manner the ſurveyor ſhall erect direction poſts in croſs roads, &c.

Sects. 27 & 28, State where and in what manner the Surveyor may get materials for the repairs; and § 29, how materials ſhall be obtained where there are not ſufficient within the pariſh.—As to this latter, See 1 Burr. 382.—The Surveyor enabled to contract. § 50.

The Surveyor is to fence off all pits and holes made in digging materials, on forfeiture of 10 s. and on neglect after notice from 40 s. to 10 l. § 31.—Materials dug for the uſe of a different pariſh than that in which they lie, ſhall be removed only between the 1ſt of April and 1ſt of November or in a hard froſt. § 32.

The penalty for damaging bridges, mills, &c. between 20 s. and 5 l. at the diſcretion of the Juſtices. § 33.

Sect. 48, Directs in what manner the Surveyor or his executors, &c. ſhall keep his accounts; which are to be examined at a veſtry, afterwards by a Juſtice, and further if neceſſary at a ſpecial Seſſions.—See 2 Burr. 746.

Surveyors neglecting their duty ſhall forfeit between 10 s. and 5 l. at the diſcretion of the Juſtices. § 51.

If the Surveyor receives money due to the turnpike roads he ſhall pay it to the treaſurer, and how it is to be applied. § 44.

4. By the ſaid Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 7, The Surveyor ſhall give ten days' notice to the landholders next adjoining the road to cut and prune their hedges; and upon default the Juſtices may order the ſame to be done; and if ſuch order is not complied with, in ten days, the Surveyor ſhall cut and prune at the expence of the owner of the land, who ſhall pay over and above 2 s. for every 24 feet of hedge, and 2 s. for every tree; and ſee § 12 of this act mentioned under the laſt head.

The landholder ſhall make proper ditches and drains, and keep them properly ſcowered and in repair on pain of 10 s. § 8.—And where the old ditches are not ſufficient, the Surveyor ſhall order new ones to be made. § 14.

No ſmall tree or buſh whereby a man may lurk, ſhall ſtand within 200 feet of a Highway.—See ſtat. Wincheſter (13 Ed. 1. ſt. 2.) c. 5; which was repealed by 7 Geo. 3. c. 42; but revived by 8 Geo. 3. c. 5. § 3.

Sect.

Sect. 13, of the said act, 13 Geo. 3. c. 78, directs the season in which hedges shall be pruned and trees felled.

No tree, bush or shrub shall grow within 15 feet from the centre of any Highway, unless for ornament, &c. § 6.

Whoever shall lay any stone, timber, &c. in a Highway for five days so as to obstruct or injure the same, shall forfeit 10*s.* § 9.—And if not removed within five days after notice by the surveyor, it shall be sold. § 10.—Obstructions by carriages, unless for a reasonable time to unload, forfeit 10*s.* § 11.

Penalty for incroaching upon Highways 40*s.* and the incroachment may be taken down by the surveyor. § 64.

No ale-houses suffered on bridges where tolls are kept, on penalty of 5*l.* § 63.

Penalty for damaging banks, causeways, mile-stones, &c. from 10*s.* to 5*l.* or commitment to the house of correction. § 53. [The same provisions are made as to turnpike roads by 13 Geo. 3. c. 84.]

5. The number of horses in the several carts and waggons with wheels of various breadths is settled by § 56, of the said Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78; and the time of prosecution for penalties is so limited by § 57, as to render it necessary for an informer to be pretty diligent.

Justices at sessions may licence an additional number, and stop proceedings for the forfeiture. §§ 58, 59. See 4 Burr. 2260.

The owner's name, &c. to be painted on all carriages on forfeiture of from 20*s.* to 5*l.* § 59.

Penalty for negligent or impertinent behaviour of drivers not more than 20*s.* if owners of carriages, or 10*s.* if not; who may be apprehended with or without warrant by a person seeing the offence committed. § 60.

This statute does not restrain the Subject, who receives any injury by a driver, &c. of any carriage, from suing the owner thereof at Common-law, or from punishing the driver for wilful offence, by indictment, as the nature of the case may require. But then the party prosecuting must waive the benefit of proceeding, under this statute, in the summary way thereby prescribed. J. M.

The forms to be observed in proceedings are settled in the schedule annexed to the act.—Abstracts of the act are to be given to the surveyor. §§ 70, 71.

6. Under the said Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 24, (and see § 81,) Justices of assise upon view, and justices of peace upon view, or on information on oath by the surveyor, may present at the assises, great sessions of Wales, or quarter sessions, any Highway, causeway or bridge out of repair, within the jurisdiction and county where they lie.—And no such presentment nor any indictment shall be removed by certiorari [on the part of the defendant (a)] until traverse and judgment.—But if the right to repair is in question, the defendant may remove the proceedings.—And every such presentment shall have equal force as if it had been found by a jury.—Saving the right of traverse as to the fact of non-repair, as well as to the right of repairing.—The justices may order the prosecution to be at the expence of the limit, and on conviction may fine the offender.

(a) On the part of the prosecution a presentment may be removed before traverse and judgment; for the restriction was to prevent delay by defendants. Cowp. 78. And if the Quarter Sessions exceed their authority; as to order a surveyor to make out his account before a special sessions, such proceedings may be removed by a certiorari and quashed; for their power in such case is not original but appellate. Leache's Hawkins i. c. 76. § 80, and the authorities there cited: and see 2 Stra. 1209.

The Justices are compellable by mandamus to receive a general traverse. Burr. 1532: 1 Black. 468.

[Since compiling the above abstract, the Stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 74, was passed repealing §§ 34, 35 & 39 of the Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78; and re-enacting them in all particulars, except as relates to poor and indigent persons; whom two Justices, in special or petty sessions, may as they see fit, on their application, excuse and exempt from performing any personal labour, and from paying any composition in lieu thereof.]

7. Assessments may be levied by distress, and the surveyor shall be a competent witness. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. §§ 68, 69.

Forfeitures, &c. to be levied by distress. §§ 73, 74.

Convictions shall be made on confession, the oath of one witness, or view of the justice.—Inhabitants competent witnesses. § 77.

The prosecutor may proceed for a forfeiture above 40*s.* either as directed by the act, or by action of debt, in a court of record, and recovering shall have double costs. § 75.

It may not be improper to observe, that there are very good opinions, against the general method of declaring in debt, directed by the act, and that a declaration, thus framed could not be supported, on demurrer; for, the act creating a variety of offences, where the forfeiture is a pecuniary one, the defendant cannot be prepared to defend the charge, not knowing what may be given in evidence on the trial, i. e. what kind of offence may then be alledged against him, but such declaration being directed by an act of parliament, it is a very doubtful point. J. M.

Ten days notice before action commenced and none to be brought after a month [See post § 82,] has expired. § 76.

No distress unlawful, or the party to be deemed a trespasser for want of form. § 79.

The court may award costs to either party, according to the circumstances. § 65.

A defendant indicted for not repairing ratione tenuræ shall on submission pay costs. 1 Black. 602.

All forfeitures shall be paid into the hands of such persons as the court inflicting them shall direct for the benefit of the Highways; on penalty, for the misapplication, of double the sum received.—And if any forfeiture is levied upon a particular inhabitant for the default, or on account of the parish, the sessions may cause a rate to be levied within one month by the surveyor for reimbursing him. § 47.

The court will also grant a mandamus for a rate to reimburse a particular district for a fine paid on the conviction of another district in the same parish, both bound to repair; but such mandamus must be special. Doug. 422: Stra. 211.

The parishioners may agree to bear the charges of any prosecution or defence. § 66.—But public notice shall be given of every meeting of the parish. § 67.

Forfeiture for opposing the execution of the act, and on officers neglecting to execute warrants; from 40*s.* to 10*l.* or imprisonment till paid. § 72.

Juſtices are empowered to adminiſter oaths for the purpoſes of the act. § 78.—And on giving fit notice they may hold a ſpecial ſeſſions. § 62.

8. Perſons aggrieved may appeal to the Quarter ſeſſions, giving notice thereof within 6 days after the cauſe aroſe, and entering into a recogniſance with one ſurety within 4 days after notice; and on notice of ſuch appeal all proceedings to be returned to the ſeſſions on pain of 5 l.—The ſeſſions ſhall hear the appeal in a ſummary way, and decide finally, and award coſts as the deciſion ſhall be. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 81.

Limitation of actions 3 months, and treble coſts to defendant. § 82.

9. By the ſaid Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 15, Every publick cartway ſhall be 20 feet wide, and every horſe-way 8 feet wide.

Two juſtices, upon view, may order Highways to be widened or diverted; ſo as not to exceed 30 feet in breadth, and ſo as not to pull down any building, or incroach on any garden, court, or yard.—The ſurveyor ſhall make ſatisfaction to the owners for the ground which ſhall be neceſſary for ſuch purpoſes.—If the owners refuſe to treat, or cannot be found, or will not accept the ſatisfaction offered by the ſurveyor, the ſeſſions upon certificate ſhall impannel a jury who ſhall aſſeſs the value, not exceeding 40 years, purchaſe; and upon tender thereof, or leaving the ſame with the clerk of the peace, the ground ſhall be for ever diveſted and become a publick Highway.—But all ſubterranean property of value which can be acquired without injuring the ſurface of the Highway is ſaved to the owners of the land.—And all timber and wood thereon ſhall be felled within a month, and laid upon the adjoining land for the benefit of the owner; and the ſeſſions may order a rate, not exceeding 6*d.* in the pound yearly, to pay for ſuch purchaſe. § 16.

The old Highway to be ſold, in which a preference is to be given to the occupiers of the adjoining lands; and if it lead to any land, houſe or place, the ſale ſhall be ſubject to ſuch right of paſſage.—And upon tender or payment of the money, the land ſhall veſt in the purchaſer, ſaving the right of all ſubterranean property to thoſe who would otherwiſe have been entitled. § 17.

If the jury ſhall aſſeſs a greater ſum than what the ſurveyor offered, the coſts ſhall be paid from the ſurveyor's fund; if a leſs ſum, by the owners of the land. § 18.

Two juſtices may divert any Highway, not in the ſituation before deſcribed, if the owners of the land through which the new road is to paſs will conſent; and may purchaſe, ſtop up and ſell, as in roads to be widened or diverted.—Perſons aggrieved by any ſuch proceedings, or by any writ of ad quod damnum for this purpoſe may appeal to the next ſeſſions [See Leache's Hawkins i. c. 76. § 31. in the notes.]—No old way ſhall be ſtopped up before the new way is compleated.—New Highways which have been acquieſced in for 12 months ſhall become incontrovertible. § 19. See Doug. 749: 2 Show. 28: Lev. 1234: W. Jon. 296: Ld. Raym. 725: 3 Comm. 36.

No common land lying between the fences of any old Highway ſhall be incloſed.—And land between the fences not being common, exceeding 30 and not extending to 50 feet in breadth ſhall not be ſtopped till ſatisfaction is made to the owners for all the land exceeding 30 feet.—And if the old road ſhall have paſt through common land, or if the ſpace between the fences, the land not being common, ſhall exceed 50 feet in breadth, the reſpective owners of ſuch land ſhall hold and enjoy the old Highway, making ſatisfaction for the ſame. § 20.

Where a footway is diverted through a different part of the ſame lands, no ſatisfaction ſhall be made, except the new road ſhall be longer, or that part of the land of greater value.—If the footway ſhall not go through the ſame perſon's lands, ſatisfaction ſhall be made to the owner of the new land by the award of two perſons and an umpire. § 21.

Two juſtices, upon view, may ſtop up and ſell, or may divert all Highways which are uſeleſs and burdenſome to the pariſh. § 22.—But this is not a general power; but tied up to a particular caſe; and is given only where there is a new road to be ſet out. Page v. Howard, Cald. Ca. 228.

It often happening that a Highway is in two pariſhes (See ante III,) and even frequently that the boundaries of pariſhes paſs through the middle of Highways, the Stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 64, provides, that on complaint or application by a ſurveyor, two juſtices may determine what parts of Highways lying in two pariſhes ſhall be repaired by each; for which purpoſe they may order boundary ſtones to be erected, and annex a plan of the Highway and the diviſion of it to their order, which plan is to be filed by the Clerk of the peace; the coſts of ſuch order to be paid by both pariſhes.

(B) Of Turnpike roads.—

The Turnpike Roads of England are placed under the management and direction of certain truſtees, who are uſually appointed by the reſpective acts of parliament occaſionally paſſed for the making and repairing particular roads. But the powers of theſe acts being confined to ſeparate and diſtinct objects, it was thought expedient to paſs ſome general laws which ſhould apply in common to all truſtees and turnpike roads in general throughout the kingdom.—Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 76. App.

The laſt general turnpike act, and that now in force, is the Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. and this act by 21 Geo. 3. c. 20. is extended to all acts of parliament made ſince it, or to be made hereafter for the purpoſe of regulating particular turnpikes.

In analyzing and abbreviating this act therefore we ſhall follow nearly the plan of the laſt ingenious editor of Hawkins, referring to his book for fuller information. Conſidering

Acting as a Truſtee is evidence of being one. § 64.

Where the firſt or any other day of meeting has elapſed, any 5 Truſtees may appoint a meeting of the whole body, on giving 20 days notice. § 49. [explained and amended by Stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 63. § 1.]

No meeting ſhall be adjourned longer than 3 months; and all buſineſs is to be done between 10 A. M. & 2 P. M. § 50.

If Truſtees exceed their power in erecting gates, the juſtices may order them to be removed. § 51.

Truſtees may adminiſter oaths neceſſary under the act. § 84.

Seven Truſtees may farm out the tolls by auction upon one month's notice, deſcribing the particular tolls to be let, and ſpecifying their produce the preceding year. § 31.—The ſame ſection directs the method in which the bidding at ſuch auction ſhall be conducted, and that farmers of the tolls ſhall not take more than the regular rates on penalty of 5*l.* on them, or 40*s.* on the gate-keepers. § 31.

Seven Truſtees on a month's notice may reduce or advance the tolls as they ſee convenient; but if the toll is mortgaged, they muſt have the conſent of four fifths of the creditors. § 29.

Five Truſtees may direct proſecution for nuiſances at the expence of the truſt; provided they can prove the fact by one witneſs. § 47.

Two Truſtees may ſupply the vacancy of toll-keeper, till a general meeting. § 54.

The Truſtees may agree for proportion of repairs with thoſe who are bound to repair by reaſon of tenure, incloſure, &c. § 62.

They ſhall hang up at the toll-gates tables of the rates of toll and of the different weights and number of horſes allowed to carriages, § 66.

They ſhall erect mile-ſtones, direction poſts, flood-poſts, &c. § 41. [And ſee Highways. VI. (A) 4.]

2. Five truſtees may order Weighing-engines to be erected at ſuch gates, within their juriſdiction, as they ſee proper. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 1. [See 1 Burr. 377.]

No ſide gate to be erected, unleſs on order of nine truſtees (being a majority preſent) on 21 days notice; and no toll to be paid for paſſing only 100 yards through the ſame, unleſs over ſome expenſive bridge. § 34.

The different burthens which carriages are allowed are ſettled at large by § 1. and the additional toll to be paid for extra weight, is determined by Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 82. § 2.—And by § 3. of the ſaid act 13 Geo. 3. c. 84, carriages employed in huſbandry or in carrying manure are exempted from being weighed.

Any truſtee, officer or creditor may cauſe carriages not paſſed above 300 yards through any gate to return and be weighed on tendering the driver 1*s.* which ſhall be refunded if the weight is found exceſſive. § 3.

If the toll-keeper neglects to weigh ſuſpected carriages, or to receive the additional toll, he ſhall forfeit 5 l. § 2.

The truſtees ſhall make places within 300 yards of every gate, for carriages to turn.—A liſt of the truſtees and officers, ſhall be hung in the houſe of every gate where there is a Weighing-engine.—A driver refuſing to return ſhall forfeit 40*s.* and any peace officer may drive the carriage back to be weighed. § 4.

The quarter ſeſſions upon complaint may order Weighing-engines to be erected, § 7. and where two roads meet the truſtees may erect one Weighing-engine for both. § 8.

No compoſition to be made for tolls, unleſs the carriages have fellies 6 inches broad. § 9.

The penalty for endeavouring to evade the tolls by unloading goods, &c. before the carriage arrives at the Weighing-engine 5*l.*—and the driver may be committed to the houſe of correction for a month. § 10.—Penalty on endeavouring to avoid the Weighing-engine; on the owner of a carriage from 20*s.* to 5*l.*—the driver from 10*s.* to 50*s.* § 11.

Toll-gates ought not to be erected in the middle of great towns, ſo as to obſtruct the neceſſary intercourſe. 1 Burr. 377.

Carriages going on 16 inch rollers may be drawn with any number of horſes. § 14. [and by Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 82. § 5. ſhall only pay half-tolls.]

On proſecution for penalties, information to be made of the offence within 3 days, and action commenced within one month. § 15.

Penalty for taking off horſes and altering the diſtance of the wheels to avoid the toll. 5 l. § 17.

Penalty on perſons paſſing through gates without paying tolls, or aſſaulting collectors, reſcuing cattle, &c. between 40*s.* and 10*l.* § 75.

Truſtees may allow a ſufficient number of horſes up hills, riſing more than 4 inches in a yard. And one juſtice may ſtop proſecution for penalties in drawing with a greater number of horſes than allowed; if it appear neceſſary from deep ſnows, &c. § 18. [See Highway act. § 59.]

No carriages with leſs than 9 inch fellies, ſhall be drawn by horſes in pairs, except ſuch as having 6 inch fellies, ſhall be permitted by 7 truſtees, and except carriages drawn by 2 horſes only. § 20.

Juſtices in Wales may licence an increaſed number of horſes. § 59.

Any perſon may apprehend the driver of a carriage not marked, or drawn by too many horſes, &c. § 21.

Extraordinary high tolls for particular roads may be reduced by 5 truſtees. § 22.

4. As to certain exemptions from toll,—See under the head immediately preceding, as to carriages moving on rollers; and under Div. 3. as to carriages employed in huſbandry; and as to the former ſee alſo § 26 of the act.

No exemption from tolls ſhall be taken by carriages carrying any particular kind of goods, unleſs they have 6 inch fellies (except by carriages employed in huſbandry.) Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 24.

And no exemption ſhall be taken by carriages with 6 inch fellies, unleſs the tire of ſuch fellies lie flat, or do not deviate more than one inch from a flat ſurface. § 25.

No chaiſe-marine, coach, landau, berlin, chaiſe, chair, calaſh, or hearſe, nor any royal artillery or ammunition carriage; nor any cart drawn by one horſe or two oxen; nor any carriage of 9 inch ſellies, carrying one block of ſtone and piece of timber, &c.—ſhall be ſubject to the tolls of this act. § 27.

No toll ſhall be taken for carriages working on the repair of highways or turnpike roads. § 60.

No toll ſhall be taken for any horſes of ſoldiers or officers on their march or on duty, nor for any baggage-waggons; nor ſhall ſuch carriages be weighed at any engine. 18 Geo. 3. c. 63.

The mail-coaches are exempted from toll by Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 57.

Perſons taking fraudulent advantage of any exemptions, ſhall forfeit between 40 s. and 5 l. 13 G. 3. c. 84. § 28.

5. The Surveyors ſhall ſee that the duty required by the ſeveral particular Turnpike acts is done, and that the compoſitions ariſing therefrom are applied to the repair of the reſpective roads; on penalty of 40 s.—And when two truſt-roads lie in the ſame pariſh, and the duty ſhall exceed three days, the juſtices ſhall apportion the duty between each road. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 32.

No Surveyor ſhall gather ſtones without the conſent of the owners of the land, or licence from a juſtice, after the owner ſhall have been ſummoned and refuſe to appear. § 61.

Satisfaction ſhall be made for materials, § 71, in the ſame manner as directed by the Highway act, § 29. And by § 36, materials may be contracted for (but no ſurveyor ſhall have any ſhare therein, under forfeiture of 10 l. and being incapacitated). See Highway act § 50.

The inhabitants or perſons who were liable to repair any old road, ſhall continue liable to repair any new road which may be made in lieu of the old one.—And if the parties cannot agree in what proportion they are liable to repair it, it ſhall be ſettled by two juſtices: for which proportion, a groſs or annual ſum may be fixed to be paid, with the conſent of the parties at a Veſtry for that purpoſe. § 63.

But this does not extend to the repair of walls or fences on the ſides of ſuch new roads, only to the ſurface of the roads. 2 Term Rep. 232.

Where Turnpike roads are indicted, the Court may proportion the fine and coſts between the inhabitants and the Truſtees; but ſo as not to endanger the ſecurity of the creditors. § 33.

6. If the Overſeer of any Turnpike road ſhall ſuffer any nuiſance, (ſuch as heaps of ſtones, rubbiſh, &c.) to remain for 4 days, within 10 feet on either ſide the middle of ſuch road, he ſhall forfeit 40 s. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 37.

As to nuiſances by encroachments of other perſons within 30 feet of the road, &c. a penalty of 40 s. is impoſed, in the ſame manner as by § 64, of the Highway act. § 38.

7. Subſcribers who ſhall ſign any writing to advance money, ſhall be bound by their ſubſcription, and on 21 days default, the Treaſurer may ſue for the ſame. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 35.

Mortgagees of tolls, having poſſeſſion of them, ſhall account, on oath, for all the monies which ſhall ſo come to their hands, after 14 days notice from 5 Truſtees, or forfeit 10 l. § 52.

Penalty for a mortgagee holding over after his money is paid—Double the money received, and treble coſts. § 53.

8. If a diſcharged gate-keeper refuſes to deliver up the toll-houſe, &c. within four days after notice of a new appointment, any juſtice may order him to be removed, and put the new toll-keeper in poſſeſſion. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 54.

Gate-keepers and toll-gatherers on notice from 5 Truſtees, ſhall account for money received by them, on penalty of 5 l. § 55.

No perſon reſiding in a toll-houſe, ſhall be removable as a pauper, unleſs chargeable; nor ſhall he thereby gain a ſettlement, or be aſſeſſed to any publick or parochial levy. § 56.

Gate-keepers permitting horſes or carriages not allowed by the act, to paſs the gates ſhall forfeit 40 s. § 57.

All officers, their executors and adminiſtrators, ſhall within 10 days, after notice by 5 truſtees, deliver up all books, &c. on penalty of 20 l. § 45.

Treaſurers and Surveyors ſhall give bond for the diſcharge of their duty. § 65. [which bond by Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 18, § 15, muſt be on ſtamps.]

Officers of pariſhes and of the truſt neglecting to put the act into execution, ſhall forfeit 10 l. § 73.

Juſtices may act notwithſtanding they are creditors. § 74.

9. When the powers for providing materials, enlarging and turning Turnpike roads, &c. and calling forth the ſtatute duty, are ineffectual, and when more ample powers are given by the Highway act; the Surveyor of the Turnpike roads, with the approbation of the Truſtees, may execute and enforce theſe powers, for the benefit of the Turnpike roads, under the reſtrictions in the Highway act. Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84. § 70.

The Highway and Turnpike acts are ſimilar in the following particulars, viz. § 72 of the Turnpike act anſwers to § 70 of the Highway act—§ 74 to 77 & 78.—§ 7, to 73 —§ 77 to 74.—§ 78 & 79 to 75 & 76 [except the former, giving full, the latter double coſts.] § 80 to 79 —§ 81 to 80.—§ 82 & 83 to 81.—§ 85 to 82. For all which ſections of the Highway act, ſee before VI. (A).

10. By St. 1 Geo. 2. ſt. 2. c. 19, To deſtroy any publick Turnpike gate, or the rails or fences thereto belonging, ſubjects the offender to hard labour for 3 months, and to be publickly whipped.

By Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 33, On conviction at the aſſiſes, the offender may be tranſported for 7 years—and on a ſecond offence, or on demoliſhing any Turnpike houſe, he ſhall be guilty of felony and tranſported for 7 years.

In both theſe caſes the proſecution muſt be within 6 months, and on the convict's returning from tranſportation he ſhall ſuffer death.

By Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 20, Perſons guilty of the above offences, or deſtroying any chain, &c. placed to prevent perſons from paſſing without paying toll, or reſcuing any offender, ſhall ſuffer death without benefit of clergy.

The two laſt mentioned acts are made perpetual by ſtat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 16.

By ſtat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 84, if any perſon ſhall commit any of the offences aforeſaid, or ſhall deſtroy any crane or machine for weighing carriages, &c. he ſhall be tranſported for ſeven years, or committed to priſon not exceeding three years at the diſcretion of the Court.

By the laſt mentioned act it is provided, that unleſs the offender is convicted within twelve months, the hundred ſhall make ſatisfaction for the damages.

HIGHWAYMEN. A reward of 40*l.* is given for the apprehending and taking of a Highwayman; to be paid within a month after conviction, by the sheriff of the county, &c. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 8. See titles Robbery; Rewards.

HIGLER, A name frequently mentioned in our statutes, for a person who carries from door to door, and sells by retail, small articles of provisions, &c. they are laid under various restraints by the statute laws. See titles Game; Holidays; Hawkers.

HIIS TESTIBUS, Words anciently added in deeds, after In cujus rei testimonium; which witnesses were first called, then the deed read, and their names entered down: but this clause of hiis testibus in the deeds of Subjects has been disused since the reign of King Hen. 8. Co. Lit. 6. See title Deed.

HINDENI HOMINES, From the Sax. Hindene, i. e. Societas.] A society of men: and in the time of the Saxons, all men were ranked into three classes, and valued, as to satisfaction for injuries, &c. according to the class they were in; the highest class were valued at twelve hundred shillings, and were called Twelfhindmen: the middle class valued at six hundred shillings, and caller Sexhindmen: and the lowest, at ten pounds, or two hundred shillings, called Twyhindmen: their wives were termed Hindas. Brompt. Leg. Alfred. cap. 12, 30, 31.

HINE, Sax.] Rather perhaps Hind. A servant, or one of the family; but is properly a term for a servant in husbandry, and he that oversees the rest is called the Master-hine. Stat. 12 R. 2. c. 4.

HINEFARE, Sax. Hine, a servant, and fare, a going or passage.] Signifies the loss or departure of a servant from his master. Domesday.

HINEGELD, See Hidgild.

HIRCISCUNDA, The division of an inheritance among heirs. Sax.

HIRD, Domestica vel intrinseca familia. Inter. Pla. Trin. 12 Edw. 2: Ebor. 48. MS.

HIREMAN, A Subject; from the Sax. Hiran, i. e. Obedire, to obey; or it may be one who serves in the King's hall, to guard him; from hird, aula, and man, homo. Du Fresne: Cowell.

HIRING. A contract by which a qualified property may be transferred to the hirer. Hiring is always for a price, stipend, or recompence. By this contract the possession and a transient property is transferred for a particular time or use, on condition and agreement to restore the goods, &c. so hired, as soon as the time is expired or use performed; together with the price or stipend, either expressly agreed on by the parties, or left to be implied by law according to the value of the service. 2 Comm. 454. See title Bailment; Poor, (Settlement of.)

HIRST OR HURST, A little wood. Domesday.

HITH, See Hythe.

HLAFORDSOCNA, The Lord's protection; from the Sax. Hlaford, dominus, and socn, libertas. Nec dominus homini libero hlafordsocnam prohibeat. Leg. Adelstan, cap. 5.

HLASOCNER, The benefit of the law; from the Sax. lega, lex, and socn, libertas.

HLOTH, An unlawful company, from seven to thirty-five. Qui de hloth fuerit accusatus, abneget per centum viginti hidas, vel sit emendet; that is, he who is accused for being at an unlawful rout, let him purge himself tot sacramentalibus quot is qui 120 hidas æstimatur; or, let him clear himself by a mulct, which is called hlothbote. Cowell.

HLOTHBOTE, A mulct set on him who is in a riot. From the Sax. hloth, turma, and bote, compensatio. See the preceding article.

HOST-MEN, An ancient gild, or fraternity at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, who dealt in sea-coal; they are mentioned Stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 3. See title Coals.

HOBLERS OR HOBILERS, Hobellarii.] Were light horse-men; or certain tenants bound by their tenure to maintain a little light horse, for giving notice of any invasion made by enemies, or such like peril towards the sea side; of which mention is made in Stats. 18 Ed. 3. c. 7: 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 8 See Camd. Britan. They were to be Ad omnem motum agiles, &c. And we read, Duravit vocabulum usque ad ætatem H. 8. Gentzdarmes and Hobelours. Spelm. Pryn's Animad. on 4 Inst. f. 307: Hobeleris, Rot. Parl. 21 Ed. 3. Sometimes the word signifies those who used bows and arrows, See Thorn Anno 1364. Cowel.

HOCCUS SALTIS, Seems to be a hoke, hole or lesser pit of salt. See Domesday, (Worcestershire.)

HOCKETTOR, or HOCQUETEUR, An old French word for a knight of the post, a decayed man, a basket carrier. 3 Par. Inst. f. 175: Stat. Ragman.—Cowel.

HOCK-TUESDAY MONEY, Was a duty given to the landlord, that his tenants and bond-men might solemnize that day on which the English mastered the Danes, being the second Tuesday after Easter week. Cowell. See Hokeday.

HOGA, HOGIUM, HOCH, A mountain or hill, from the Germ. Hoogh, altus; or from the Sax. Hou—Du Cange.

HOGASTER, Hogastrum.] A little hog; it also signifies a young sheep. Fleta lib. 2. c. 79. See Hoggacius.

HOGENHINE, Sax.] See Third-Night-Awn-hind.

HOGGACIUS, HOGGASTER, A sheep of the second year. Regula computi domûs de Farendon: MS. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. MS. And indeed in many, especially the Northern parts of England, sheep after they lose the name of lambs, are called hogs; as in Kent, tags. Cowell.

HOGSHEAD, A vessel of wine, or oil, &c. containing in measure 63 gallons; i. e. half a pipe, and the fourth part of a ton. See stat. 1 R. 3. c. 13.

HOGGUS, HOGIETUS, A hog or swine, beyond the growth of a pig. Chart. Antiq.

HOGS, The keeping of hogs in any city or market town is indictable as a public nuisance. Salk. 460. Indeed it seems the keeping hogs in any neighbourhood (if they stink much, so as to be troublesome) is indictable. See title Nuisance: London, and the stat. 2 W. & M. st. 2. c. 8. § 20.—See as to hogs and hogs flesh, tit. Cattle.

HOKEDAY, Called otherwise Hock Tuesday, dies Martis, quam quindenam Paschæ vocant.] Was a day so remarkable in ancient times, that rents were reserved payable thereon: and in the accounts of Magdalene College in Oxford, there is a yearly allowance pro mulieribus hockantibus, in some manors of theirs in Hamtshire, where the men hock the women on Monday, & contra on Tuesday; the meaning of it is, that on that day the women in merriment stop the way with ropes, and pull passengers to them, desiring something to be laid out in pious uses. See Hock-Tuesday-Money.

HOLDES,

HOLDES, Bailiffs of a town or city, from the Sax. hold, i. e. ſummus præpoſitus. Others are of opinion that it ſignifies a general; for hold in Saxon doth alſo ſignify ſummus imperator. Leges Alured. de Weregildis.

HOLDING OVER A TERM, &c. Lands were deviſed to A. till 800 l. raiſed. Reſolved, that if the Heir at law, or he in reverſion or remainder, in caſe of leaſe or limitation for life, enters upon A. or on him to whom the lands are devited or limited, and expels him, it is in the election of him ſo expelled, either to bring his action and recover the meſne profits which ſhall be accounted parcel of the ſum, or he may re-enter and hold over till he ſhall levy the entire ſum, not accounting the time of his expulſion. But otherwiſe, if the expulſion was by a ſtranger. 4 Rep. 82: See titles, Term: Limitation: Eſtate.

The expreſſion hath alſo another ſenſe, i. e. Where a term is expired, and premiſſes are held by the tenant or perſon in poſſeſſion, afterwards, againſt the will of the landlord, or perſon claiming the eſtate and poſſeſſion. By Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28, In caſe any tenant for years, &c. or other perſon claiming under or by colluſion with ſuch tenant, ſhall wilfully hold over after the determination of ſuch term, and demand made in writing for recovering poſſeſſion of the premiſſes, he ſhall pay, for the time he continues, at the rate of double the yearly value. See titles Ejectment: Diſtreſs; Rent.

HOLM, Sax. hulmus, inſula amnica.] An iſle or fenny ground, according to Bede; or a river iſland. And where any place is called by that name, or this ſyllable is joined with any other in the names of places, it ſignifies a place ſurrounded with water; as the Flatholmes and Stepholmes in the Severn near Briſtol: but if the ſituation of the place is not near the water; it may then ſignify a hilly place; Holm in Saxon being alſo a hill or cliff, ——— Cum duobus Holmis in campis de Wedone.—Mon. Angl. Tom. 2. p. 262.

HOLT, Sax.] A wood: wherefore the names of towns beginning or ending with holt, as Buckholt, &c. denote that formerly there was great plenty of wood at thoſe places.

HOLY-DAYS AND FASTING-DAYS. See Stat. Weſtm. 1; 3 Ed. 1. c. 51, as to holding aſſiſes in Lent, and this Dict. title Juſtices of Aſſize.—Stats. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 19: 5 Eliz. c. 5, as to eating fiſh on Fiſh days; now obſolete—and Stat. 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 3, appointing thoſe now called Red Letter Days.

Fairs and markets not to be kept on Sundays and principal feſtivals, except four Sundays in Autumn, 27 H. 6. c. 5. Shoe-makers in London not to ſell or ſit on their goods on Sundays, &c. 4 Ed. 4. c. 7: 1 Jac. 1. c. 22. §. 29. (obſolete)—Penalty for not reſorting to church on Sundays and holy days, 1 Eliz. c. 2. ſ. 14. See this Dict. title Sunday.

HOLYHEAD, Rock ſalt may be uſed in its ſalt-works. 6 Ann. c. 12. ſect. 2. See title Navigation Acts.

HOMAGE, Homagium.] Is a French word derived from homo, becauſe, when the tenant does his ſervice to the Lord, he ſays, I become your man. Co. Lit. 64.

The Stat. 12 C. 2. c. 24, which was made to free the Subject from the burthen of Knight's ſervice, and the oppreſſive conſequences of tenures in capite, amongſt other proviſions, wholly diſcharges all tenures from the incident of Homage; not becauſe Homage itſelf was any grievance, but becauſe, though not wholly, yet it was more properly an incident to Knight's ſervice, which that ſtatute aboliſhed. But, while Homage continued, it was far from being a mere ceremony; for the performance of it, where due, materially concerned both lord and tenant in point of intereſt and advantage. See 1 Inſt. 67 b. in n. at length, as alſo 65 a: 67 a: 68 a: in the notes, and this Dict. title Tenures.

Notwithſtanding the law on this ſubject is thus become obſolete, the curious reader may not be diſpleaſed with the following ſhort extracts relative thereto.

In the original grants of lands and tenements by way of fee, the Lord did not only oblige his tenants to certain ſervices; but alſo took a ſubmiſſion with promiſe and oath, to be true to him as their lord and benefactor; and this ſubmiſſion, which is the moſt honourable, being from a freehold tenant, is called Homage. Stat. 17 E. 2. ſt. 2. The Lord of the fee for which Homage is due, takes Homage of every tenant, as he comes to the land or fee: but women perform not Homage but by their huſbands, as Homage eſpecially relates to ſervice in war; and a corporation cannot do Homage, which is perſonal, and they cannot appear but by attorney: alſo a biſhop or religious man, may not do Homage, only fealty; but the archbiſhop of Canterbury does Homage on his knees to our Kings at their coronation; and it is ſaid the biſhop of the Iſle of Man did Homage to the Earl of Derby; though Fulbec reconciles this, when he ſays that a religious man may do Homage, but may not ſay to his Lord, Ego devenio homo veſter, I become your man, becauſe he has profeſſed himſelf to be God's man, but he may ſay, I do unto you Homage, and to you ſhall be faithful and loyal. Britton, cap. 68.

Homage, ſay the ancient authors, is either, by ligeance; by reaſon of tenure: or Homage anceſtrel.

Homage by ligeance is inherent and inſeparable to every Subject, See titles Allegiance; Oaths.—Homage by tenure is a ſervice made by tenants to their Lords according to their eſtate; and Homage anceſtrel, is where a man and his anceſtors have time out of mind held their land of the lord by Homage; and ſuch ſervice draws to it warranty from the Lord, and acquittal of all other ſervices to other Lords, &c. Brac. lib. 3: F. N. B. 269: Lit. Sect. 85. But, according to Sir Edw. Coke, there muſt be a double preſcription for Homage anceſtrel, both in the blood of the Lord and of the tenant; ſo that the ſame tenant, and his anceſtors, whoſe heir he is, is to hold the ſame land of the ſame Lord and his anceſtors, whoſe heir the Lord is, time out of memory, by Homage, &c. and therefore there was but little land holden by Homage anceſtrel. Co. Lit. 100 b. Though in the manor of Whitney in Herefordſhire, there was one Weſt who held lands by this tenure. Dict.

Homage tenure is incident to a freehold, and none ſhall do or receive Homage, but ſuch as have eſtates in fee-ſimple, or fee tail, in their own right or right of another. Kitch. 131. Seiſin of Homage is ſeiſin of fealty, and inferior ſervices, &c. And the Lord only ſhall take Homage, and not the ſteward, whoſe power extends but to fealty. 4 Rep. 8.

When a tenant made his Homage to the Lord, he was to be ungirt, and his head uncovered, and his Lord was to ſit, and he ſhould kneel, and hold his hands together together between his Lord's hands, and say; I become your man from this day forward, for life, for member, and for worldly honour, and unto you shall be true and faithful, and bear you faith for the lands that I hold of you, saving the faith that I owe to our Sovereign Lord the King: And the Lord so sitting should kiss the tenant, &c. 17 Ed. 3: Lit. § 85. See 2 Comm. 53. c. 4.

When Sovereign Princes did Homage to each other for lands held under their respective sovereignties, a distinction was always made between simple Homage, which was only an acknowledgment of tenure (7 Rep. 7;) and liege homage, which included fealty, and the services consequent upon it.—Thus when Edward III. in 1329 did Homage to Phillip VI. of France, for his ducal dominions on that Continent, it was warmly disputed of what species the Homage was to be, whether liege or simple homage. 1 Comm. 367. c. 10.

HOMAGE JURY, A Jury in a Court-Baron, consisting of tenants that do Homage to the Lord of the fee; and these by the Feudists are called pares curiæ: they enquire and make presentment of defaults and deaths of tenants, admittances, and surrenders, in the Lord's court, &c. Kitch. See title Court Baron.

HOMAGER, One that does or is bound to do Homage to another.

HOMAGIO RESPECTUANDO, Was a writ to the escheator, commanding him to deliver seisin of lands to the heir of the King's tenant, notwithstanding his Homage not done. F. N. B. 269. And the heir at full age was to do Homage to the King, or agree with him for respiting the same. New Nat. Br. 563.

HOMAGIUM REDDERE, To renounce Homage, when the vassal made a solemn declaration of disowning and defying his lord. For which, there was a set form and method prescribed by the feudal laws. Bracton, lib. 2. cap. 35. sect. 35. This is the meaning of a passage in Richardus Hostoldnesis de Bello Standard, p. 321. And of Mat. Paris. sub anno 1188. Cowel. edit. 1727.

HOMESOKEN, HOMSOKEN, OR HAMSOKEN, AND HAMSOCA, From the Sax. ham, i. e. domus, habitatio; and socne, libertas, immunitas.] The privilege or freedom which every man hath in his house; and he who invades that freedom is properly said facere Homesoken. This we take to be what we now call burglary, a crime of a very heinous nature, because it is not only a breach of the King's peace, but a breach of that liberty which a man hath in his house, which should be his castle, and therefore ought not to be invaded. See Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 23: Du Cange: Ll. Canuti. cap. 39: Rastal.

It is also taken for an impunity to those who commit this crime. W. Thorn, p. 2030.

HOMESTALL. A mansion-house. See Frumstol.

HOMICIDE;

HOMICIDIUM.] The killing of any Human Creature: This is of three kinds; justifiable, excusable, and felonious. The first has no share of guilt at all, the second very little; but the third is the highest crime against the law of nature that a man is capable of committing. 4 Comm. c. 14; from whence the plan of this title, and much of the subsequent matter is extracted.

Offences against the life of a man come under the general name of Homicide, which in our law signifies the killing of a man, by a man. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 26. § 2: Bracton, lib. 3. c. 4.

I. Of Justifiable Homicide.
1. By unavoidable Necessity, under command of the Law.
2. By permission of Law; For advancement of Publick Justice.
3. ——————— For prevention of Crimes, in themselves Capital.

II. Of Excusable Homicide,
Per infortunium; or Misadventure Se Defendendo.
1. Wherein these are distinct.
2. Wherein they agree.

III. Of Felonious Homicide.
1. Self Murder; or Felo de se.
2. Manslaughter } Which two should be carefully
3. Murder } compared with each other.
4. Petit Treason.

I. 1. JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE may be owing to some unavoidable necessity, without any will, intention, or desire, and without any inadvertence or negligence in the party killing, and therefore without any shadow of blame; it is either of a publick or private nature.

That of a publick nature is such as is occasioned by the due execution or advancement of publick justice. That of a private nature is such as happens in the just defence of a man's person, house or goods. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 3.—The first of these may happen by virtue of such an office as obliges one, in the execution of public justice, to put a malefactor to death, who has forfeited his life by the laws and verdict of his country. This is an act of necessity, and even of civil duty; and therefore not only justifiable, but commendable, where the law requires it. But the law must require it, otherwise it is not justifiable: therefore wantonly to kill the greatest of malefactors, a felon, or a traitor, attainted or outlawed, deliberately, uncompelled, and extrajudicially, is murder. 1 Hal. P. C. 497: Bract. fol. 120.

There must be no malice coloured under pretence of necessity, for wherever a person who kills another, acts in truth upon malice, and takes occasion from the appearance of necessity to execute his revenge, he is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 2: 2 Rol. Rep. 120, 121; Kelynge 28: Bract. lib. 3. cap. 4.

Farther, if judgment of death be given by a judge not authorised by lawful commission, and execution is done accordingly, the judge is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28: § 4: 1 Hal. P. C. 497. And upon this account Sir Matthew Hale himself, though he accepted the place of a Judge of the Common Pleas under Cromwell's government, (since it is necessary to decide the disputes of civil property in the worst of times,) yet declined to sit on the crown side at the Assises, and try prisoners; having very strong objections to the legality of the Usurper's commission; a distinction perhaps rather too refined, since the punishment of crimes is at least as necessary to Society, as maintaining the boundaries of property.

The judgment, by virtue whereof any person is put to death, must be given by one who has jurisdiction in the cause; for otherwise both Judge and officer may be guilty guilty of felony. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28: Dalt. cap. 98: 10 Co. 76: 22 Ed. 4. 33 a: H. P. C. 35.—And therefore if the Court of Common Pleas give a judgment on an appeal of death, or Juſtices of Peace on an indictment for treaſon, and award execution, which is executed, both the judge who gives, and the officers who execute, the ſentence are guilty of felony; becauſe the courts having no more juriſdiction over theſe crimes than mere private perſons, their proceedings thereon are merely void, and without foundation.—But if the Juſtices of Peace, on an indictment for treſpaſs, arraign a man of felony, and condemn him, and he be executed, the juſtices only are guilty of felony, and not the officers who execute their ſentence: for the Juſtices had a juriſdiction over the offence, and their proceedings were irregular and erroneous only, but not void. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. §§ 5, 6, and the authorities there cited.—Alſo ſuch judgment, when legal, muſt be executed by the proper officer, or his appointed deputy; for no one elſe is required by law to do it, which requiſition it is, that juſtifies the Homicide. If another perſon does it of his own head, it is held to be murder: even though it be the judge himſelf. 1 Hal. P. C. 501: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28: Dalt. Juſ. c. 150. It was formerly held, that any one might as lawfully kill a perſon attainted of treaſon or felony, as a wolf or other wild beaſt; and anciently a perſon condemned in appeal of death, was delivered to the relations of the deceaſed, in order to be executed by them. 1 Inſt. 128 b: 2 Aſſ. pl. 3: S. P. C. 13 a: 11 H. 4. 12 a: Plowd. Com. 306 b: 3 Inſt. 131. But at this day, it ſeems agreed, if the judge, who gives the ſentence of death, and à fortiori if any private perſon execute the ſame, or if the proper officer himſelf do it without lawful command, they are guilty of felony. 27 Aſſ. 41: Bro. Appeal 69: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 8, 9. This Judgment muſt alſo be executed, ſervato juris ordine; it muſt purſue the ſentence of the court. If an officer beheads one who is adjudged to be hanged, or vice verſa, it is murder: for he is merely miniſterial, and therefore only juſtified when he acts under the authority and compulſion of the law; but if a ſheriff changes one kind of death to another, he then acts by his own authority, which extends not to the commiſſion of Homicide; and beſides, this licence might occaſion a very groſs abuſe of his power. Finch L. 31: 3 Inſt. 52: 1 Hal. P. C. 501. The King indeed may remit part of a ſentence; as in the caſe of treaſon, all but the beheading: but this is no change, no introduction of a new puniſhment, and in the caſe of felony, where the judgment is to be hanged, the King (it hath been ſaid) cannot legally order, even a peer, to be beheaded. 3 Inſt. 52, 212: See Foſt. 267; where it is ſaid that if the officer varieth from the judgment, of his own head, and without warrant or the colour of authority, he is guilty of felony at leaſt, if not of murder; but not if he is authoriſed by cuſtom or warrant from the crown. For although the King cannot by his prerogative vary the execution, ſo as to aggravate the puniſhment beyond the intention of the law; yet it doth not follow, that he who may remit part of the judgment, or wholly pardon the offender, cannot mitigate his puniſhment with regard to the pain or infamy of it. But this doctrine is more fully conſidered in another place. See titles Pardon: Execution (Criminal): Judgment (Criminal).

2. Homicides, committed for the advancement of public juſtice, are;—Where an officer, in the execution of his office, either in a civil or criminal caſe, kills a perſon that aſſaults and reſiſts him. 1 Hal. P. C. 494: 1 Hawk. P. C.—If an Officer, or any private perſon, attempts to take a man charged with felony, and is reſiſted; and in the endeavour to take him, kills him. 1 Hal. P. C. 494.—In caſe of a riot, or rebellious aſſembly, the officers endeavouring to diſperſe the mob are juſtifiable in killing them, both at Common-law, and by the Riot-act, Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 5: 1 Hal. P. C. 495: 1 Hawk. P. C. 161. And in caſe a ſtranger interpoſes to part the combatants in an affray, giving notice to them of that intention, and they aſſault him; if in the ſtruggle he ſhould chance to kill, this would be juſtifiable Homicide; for it is every man's duty to interpoſe for the preſervation of the publick peace, and for the prevention of miſchief. Foſt. 272.—Where the priſoners in a gaol, or going to gaol, aſſault the gaoler or officer, and he in his defence kills any of them, it is juſtifiable, for the ſake of preventing an eſcape. 1 Hal. P. C. 496.—If treſpaſſers in foreſts, parks, chaſes, or warrens, will not ſurrender themſelves to the keepers, they may be ſlain, by virtue of the Stat. 21 E. 1. ſt. 2. de malefactoribus in pareis; and 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 10. —If a perſon having actually committed felony will not ſuffer himſelf to be arreſted, but ſtand on his own defence, or fly, ſo that he cannot poſſibly be apprehended alive by thoſe who purſue, whether private perſons or public officers, with or without a warrant from a magiſtrate, he may be lawfully ſlain by them. So if even an innocent perſon be indicted of a felony, where no felony was committed, yet if he will not ſuffer himſelf to be arreſted by an officer who has a warrant, he may be lawfully killed, for there is a charge againſt him on record, to which he is bound at his peril to anſwer. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. §§ 11, 12: 22 Aſſ. 55: Bro. Cor. 87, 89: S. P. C. 13: 3 Inſt. 221: Dalt. cap. 98: H. P. C. 36: Crom. 30.—Where a ſheriff, &c. attempting to make a lawful arreſt in a civil action, or to retake one who has been arreſted and made his eſcape, is reſiſted by the party, and unavoidably kills him in the affray. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 17: 1 Rol. Rep. 189: H. P. C. 37: 3 Inſt. 56: Crom. 24 a: Dalt. cap. 98. And in ſuch caſe the officer is not bound to give back, but may ſtand his ground and attack the party, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 18: H. P. C. 31. But no private perſon of his own authority can arreſt a man for a civil matter, as he may for felony, &c. 1 Hawk. c. 28. § 19: Crom. 30 b. Neither can the ſheriff himſelf lawfully kill thoſe who barely fly from the execution of any civil proceſs. 1 Hawk. c. 28. § 20: H. P. C. 37.

And in all theſe caſes, there muſt be an apparent neceſſity on the officer's ſide, viz. that the party could not be arreſted or apprehended, the riot could not be ſuppreſſed, the priſoners could not be kept in hold, the deer-ſtealers could not but eſcape, unleſs ſuch Homicide were committed: otherwiſe without ſuch abſolute neceſſity, it is not juſtifiable.

Laſtly, If the champions in a trial by battle, killed either of them the other, ſuch Homicide was juſtifiable, and was imputed to the juſt judgment of God, who was thereby preſumed to have decided in favour of the truth. 1 Hawk. P. C. 71. See title Battel.

3. Such

3. Such Homicide as is committed for the prevention of any forcible and atrocious crime, is juſtifiable by the law of nature; and alſo by the law of England, as it ſtood ſo early as the time of Bracton, and as it is ſince expreſsly declared by Stat. 24 Hen 8. c. 5. See Bract. fol. 155. If any perſon attempts a robbery or murder of another, or attempts to break open a houſe in the night time, (which extends alſo to an attempt to burn it,) and ſhall be killed in ſuch attempt, the ſlayer ſhall be acquitted and diſcharged. 1 Hal. P. C. 488. And not only the maſter of a houſe, but a lodger or a ſojourner who kills an aſſailant intending to commit murder or robbery, is within the protection of the law. Cro. Car. 544. This reaches not to any crime unaccompanied with force, as picking of pockets, or to the breaking open of any houſe in the day time, unleſs it carries with it an attempt of robbery alſo. 4 Comm. c. 14.

Juſtifiable Homicide of a private nature, in the juſt defence of a man's perſon, houſe or goods, may happen either by the killing of a wrong-doer, or an innocent perſon. And firſt, the killing of a wrong-doer in the making of ſuch defence, may be juſtified in many caſes; as where a man kills one who aſſaults him in the highway to rob or murder him; or the owner of a houſe, or any of his ſervants, or lodgers, &c. kill one who attempts to burn it, or to commit therein murder, robbery, or other felony; or a woman kills one who attempts to raviſh her; or a ſervant coming ſuddingly and finding his maſter robbed and ſlain, falls upon the murderer immediately and kills him; for he does it in the height of his ſurpriſe, and under juſt apprehenſions of the like attempt upon himſelf; but in other circumſtances, he could not have juſtified the killing of ſuch an one, but ought to have apprehended him, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 21: 24 H. 8. cap. 5: Dalt. cap. 98.

Neither ſhall a man in any caſe juſtify the killing another by a pretence of neceſſity, unleſs he were himſelf wholly without fault in bringing that neceſſity upon himſelf; for if a man, in defence of an injury done by himſelf, kill any perſon whatſoever, he is guilty of manſlaughter at leaſt; as where divers rioters wrongfully with-hold a houſe by force, and kill thoſe who attack it from without, and endeavour to burn it. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 22: Crom. 27 b: H. P. C. 56.

Neither can a man juſtify the killing another in defence of his houſe or goods, or even of his perſon, from a bare private treſpaſs; and therefore he that kills another, who, claiming a title to his houſe, attempts to enter it by force and ſhoots at it, or that breaks open his windows in order to arreſt him, or that perſiſts in breaking his hedges after he is forbidden, is guilty of man-ſlaughter; and he, who in his own defence kills another that aſſaults him in his houſe in the day-time, and plainly appears to intend to beat him only, is guilty of Homicide ſe defendendo, for which he forfeits his goods, but is pardoned of courſe; yet it ſeems, that a private perſon, and, à fortiori, an officer of juſtice, who happens unavoidably to kill another endeavouring to defend himſelf from, or ſuppreſs dangerous rioters, may juſtify the fact, inaſmuch as he only does his duty in aid of public juſtice. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 23: H. P. C. 40. 57: Cro. Car. 538: Dalt. cap. 98.

According to the opinion of Mr. Serjeant Hawkins, A perſon who without provocation is aſſaulted by another in any place whatſoever, in ſuch a manner as plainly ſhews an intent to murder him, as by diſcharging a piſtol, or puſhing at him with a drawn ſword, &c. may juſtify killing ſuch an aſſailant, as much as if he had attempted to rob him. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 24 &c: N. Bendl 47: 1 And. 41: Crom. 27 b. 28 b: Dalt. cap. 98: S. P. C. 15 a: 3 Inſt. 57: Bacon 33. For other caſes, vide Cro. Car. 338: March 5.

The Roman Law alſo juſtifies Homicide, when committed in defence of the chaſtity either of one's ſelf or relations: The Engliſh Law alſo juſtifies a woman killing one who attempts to raviſh her; Rac. Elem. 34: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 21; and ſo too, the huſband or father may juſtify killing a man, who attempts a rape upon his wife or daughter; but not if he takes them in adultery by conſent, for the one is forcible and felonious, but not the other. 1 Hal. P. C. 485, 6. And there ſeems no doubt but the forcibly attempting a crime of a ſtill more deteſtible nature, may be equally reſiſted by the death of the unnatural aggreſſor. For the one uniform principle that runs through our own, and all other laws, ſeems to be this; that where a crime, in itſelf capital, is endeavoured to be committed by force, it is lawful to repel that force by the death of the party attempting. 4 Comm. c. 14.

In theſe inſtances of juſtifiable Homicide, it may be obſerved, that the Slayer is in no kind of fault whatſoever, not even in the minuteſt degree; and is therefore to be totally acquitted and diſcharged, with commendation rather than blame. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 3.

But that is not quite the caſe in excuſable Homicide, the very name whereof imports ſome fault, ſome error, or omiſſion; ſo trivial however, that the law excuſes it from the guilt of felony, though in ſtrictneſs it judges it deſerving of ſome little degree of puniſhment. See the next Diviſion.

II. 1. HOMICIDE per infortunium; or MISADVENTURE, is where a man doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another: as where a man is at work with a hatchet, and the head thereof flies off and kills a ſtander-by; or where a perſon qualified to keep a gun, is ſhooting at a mark, and undeſignedly kills a man: for the act is lawful, and the effect is merely accidental. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. So where a perſon is moderately correcting his child, a maſter his apprentice or ſcholar, or an officer puniſhing a criminal, (as by whipping,) and happens to occaſion his death, it is only miſadventure; for the act of correction was lawful: but if he exceeds the bounds of moderation, either in the manner, the inſtrument, or the quantity of puniſhment, and death enſues, it is Manſlaughter at leaſt; and in ſome caſes (according to the circumſtances) murder; for the act of immoderate correction is unlawful. 1 Hal. P. C. 473, 4.—Where an officer of the impreſs ſervice in the navy, fires at a boat in order to bring her to, and kills a man, it is impoſſible that the offender ſhould be made guilty of more than manſlaughter, eſpecially if he fires in the manner uſual upon ſuch occaſions. Cowp. 832. per Ld. Mansfield.

A tilt or a tournament, the martial diverſion of our anceſtors, was however an unlawful act; and ſo are boxing and ſword-playing, the ſucceeding amuſements of their poſterity: and therefore if a knight in the former caſe, or a gladiator in the latter, be killed, ſuch killing is felony of manſlaughter. But, if the King command, or permit ſuch diverſion, it is ſaid only to be miſadventure; for then the act is lawful. 1 Hal. P. C. 473: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 8. Likewiſe to whip another's horſe whereby he runs over a child and kills him, is held to be accidental death in the rider, for he has done nothing unlawful: but it is manſlaughter in the perſon who whipped him; for the act was a treſpaſs, and at beſt a piece of idleneſs of inevitably dangerous conſequence. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 3.

Where one lawfully uſing an innocent diverſion, as ſhooting at butts, or at a bird, &c. by the glancing of an arrow, or ſuch like accident, kills another, this is only Homicide by miſ-adventure. Keilw. 108: Bro. Cor. 148; See Kelynge 41.—So where a perſon happens to kill another in playing a match of foot-ball, wreſtling, or ſuch like ſports which are attended with no apparent danger of life, and intended only for the trial, exerciſe and improvement of the ſtrength, courage and activity of the parties. Keilw. 108, 136: Crom. 29 a: 11 H. 7. 23 a: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. §§ 6, 7, 8.

In general, if death enſues in conſequence of an idle, dangerous, and unlawful ſport, the ſlayer is guilty of manſlaughter, and not miſadventure only, for theſe are unlawful acts. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 9: 1 Hal. P. C. 472: Foſt. 261. Thus, if a man kills another by ſhooting at a deer, &c. in a third perſon's park, in the doing whereof he is a treſpaſſer; or by ſhooting of a gun, or throwing ſtones in a city or highway, or other place where men uſually reſort, by throwing ſtones at another wantonly in play, which is a dangerous ſport, and has not the leaſt appearance of any good intent; or by doing any other ſuch idle action as cannot but indanger the bodily hurt of ſome one or other; or by tilting or playing at hand-ſword without the King's command; or by parrying with naked ſwords, covered with buttons at the points, or with ſwords in the ſcabbards, or ſuch like raſh ſports, which cannot be uſed without the manifeſt hazard of life, he is guilty of manſlaughter. 1 Hawk. P. C. 29. § 9: H. P. C. 31, 32, 58: Hob. 134. But ſee poſt III.

Where the defendant came to town in a chaiſe, and before he got out of it, fired his piſtols, which by accident killed a woman, King, Ch. J. ruled it to be manſlaughter. Str. 481.

Homicide, in ſelf-defence, or Se-defendendo, upon a ſudden affray, is alſo excuſable, rather than juſtifiable, by the Engliſh law. This ſpecies of ſelf-defence muſt be diſtinguiſhed from that already mentioned, ante I. 3, as calculated to hinder the perpetration of a capital crime; which is not only a matter of excuſe, but of juſtification. But the ſelf-defence, which we are now ſpeaking of, is that whereby a man may protect himſelf from an aſſault or the like, in the courſe of a ſudden brawl or quarrel, by killing him who aſſaults him. And this is what the law expreſſes by the word chance-medley, or (as ſome rather chooſe to write it) chaud-medley; the former of which in its etymology ſignifies a caſual affray, the latter an affray in the heat of blood or paſſion, both of them of pretty much the ſame import; but the former is in common ſpeech too often erroneouſly applied to any manner of Homicide by miſadventure; whereas it appears by the Stat. 24 Hen. 8. c. 5, and our ancient books (Staun. P. C. 16,) that it is properly applied to ſuch killing as happens in ſelf-defence, upon a ſudden rencounter. 3 Inſt. 55, 7: Foſt. 275, 6. This right of natural defence does not imply a right of attacking: for, inſtead of attacking one another for injuries paſt or impending, men need only have recourſe to the proper tribunals of juſtice: they cannot therefore legally exerciſe this right of preventive defence, except in ſudden and violent caſes, when certain and immediate ſuffering would be the conſequence of waiting for the aſſiſtance of the law. Wherefore to excuſe Homicide, by the plea of ſelf-defence, it muſt appear that the ſlayer had no other poſſible (or, at leaſt, probable) means of eſcaping from his aſſailant.

It is frequently difficult to diſtinguiſh this ſpecies of Homicide (upon chance-medley, in ſelf-defence,) from that of man-ſlaughter, in the proper legal ſenſe of the word. 3 Inſt. 55. But the true criterion between them ſeems to be this: when both parties are actually combating at the time when the mortal ſtroke is given, the ſlayer is then guilty of man-ſlaughter: but if the ſlayer hath not begun to fight, or (having begun) endeavours to decline any farther ſtruggle, and afterwards being cloſely preſſed by his antagoniſt, kills him to avoid his own deſtruction, this is Homicide excuſable by ſelf-defence. Foſt. 277. For which reaſon the law requires, that the perſon who kills another in his own defence, ſhould have retreated as far as he conveniently or ſafely can, to avoid the violence of the aſſault, before he turns upon his aſſailant; and that not fictitiouſly, or in order to watch his opportunity, but from a real tenderneſs of ſhedding his brother's blood. And though it may be cowardice, in time of war between two independent nations, to flee from an enemy; yet between two fellow-ſubjects, the law countenances no ſuch point of honour: becauſe the King and his Courts are the vindices injuriarum, and will give to the party wronged all the ſatisfaction he deſerves. 1 Hal. P. C. 481, 3. The party aſſaulted muſt therefore flee as far as he conveniently can, either by reaſon of ſome wall, ditch, or other impediment, or as far as the fierceneſs of the aſſault will permit him, for it may be ſo fierce as not to allow him to yield a ſtep, without manifeſt danger of his life, or enormous bodily harm; and then, in his defence, he may kill his aſſailant inſtantly. 1 Hal. P. C. 483. And as the manner of the defence, ſo is alſo the time to be conſidered: for if the perſon aſſaulted does not fall upon the aggreſſor till the affray is over, or when he is running away, this is revenge and not defence. Neither under the colour of ſelf-defence, will the law permit a man to ſcreen himſelf from the guilt of deliberate murder: for if two perſons A. and B, agree to fight a duel, and A, gives the firſt onſet, and B, retreats as far as he ſafely can, and then kills A, this is murder; becauſe of the previous malice and concerted deſign. 1 Hal. P. C. 479. But if A. upon a ſudden quarrel aſſaults B, firſt, and upon B.'s returning the aſſault, A, really and bonâ fide flees, and being driven to the wall, turns again upon B, and kills him; this may be ſe defendendo, according to ſome of our writers. 1 Hal. P. C. 482: Though others have thought this opinion too favourable; inaſmuch as the neceſſity, to which he is at laſt reduced, originally aroſe from his own fault. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 17.

And it is now agreed, that if a man ſtrike another upon malice prepenſe, and then fly to the wall, and there kill him in his own defence, he is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 17: S. P. C. 15 a: Crom. 28 a: Dalt. cap. 98: Kelynge 58: H. P. C. 42. See poſt. III. 3.

Under this excuſe, of ſelf-defence, the principal civil and natural Relations are comprehended; therefore maſter and ſervant, parent and child, huſband and wife, killing an aſſailant in the neceſſary defence of each other reſpectively, are excuſed; the act of the Relation aſſiſting being conſtrued the ſame as the act of the party himſelf. 1 Hal. P. C. 484.

Homicide ſe defendendo, or by ſelf-defence, ſays Hawkins, ſeems to be, where one who has no other poſſible means of preſerving his life from one who combats with him on a ſudden quarrel, or of defending his perſon from one who attempts to beat him, (eſpecially if ſuch attempts be made upon him in his own houſe) kills the perſon by whom he is reduced to ſuch an inevitable neceſſity. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 13, &c: H. P. C. 40: S. P. C. 15.

And not only he who on an aſſault retreats to a wall, or ſome ſuch ſtreight, beyond which he can go no further before he kills the other, is adjudged by the law to act upon unavoidable neceſſity: but alſo he who being aſſaulted in ſuch a manner, and in ſuch a place, that he cannot go back without manifeſtly indangering his life, kills the other without retreating at all. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 14: Bro. Coro. 125: 43 Aſſ. 31: 3 Inſt. 56: H. P. C. 41.

And notwithſtanding a perſon, who retreats from an aſſault to the wall, give the other divers wounds in his retreat, yet if he give him no mortal one till he get thither, and then kill him, he is guilty of Homicide ſe defendendo only. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 15: H. P. C. 41: Crom. 28: S. P. C. 15 a.

And an officer who kills one that reſiſts him in the execution of his office, and even a private perſon that kills one who felonioufly aſſaults him in the highway, may juſtify the fact without ever giving back at all. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 16: H. P. C. 41: 3 Inſt. 56: Crom. 28 a.

There is one ſpecies of Homicide ſe defendendo, where the party ſlain is equally innocent as he who occaſions his death: and yet this Homicide is alſo excuſable from the great univerſal principle of ſelf-preſervation, which prompts every man to ſave his own life preferable to that of another, where one of them muſt inevitably periſh. As, among others, in that caſe mentioned by Lord Bacon, where two perſons being ſhipwrecked, and getting on the ſame plank, but finding it not able to ſave them both, one of them thruſts the other from it, whereby he is drowned. He who thus preſerves his own life at the expence of another man's, is excuſable, through unavoidable neceſſity, and the principle of ſelf-defence; ſince their both remaining on the ſame weak plank is a mutual, though innocent, attempt upon, and endangering of each other's life. See Bac. Elem. c. 5: 4 Comm. c. 14.

2. The circumſtances wherein theſe two ſpecies of Homicide, by miſadventure and ſelf-defence, agree, are in the blame and puniſhment. For the law ſets ſo high a value upon the life of a man, that it always intends ſome miſbehaviour in the perſon who takes it away, unleſs by the command or expreſs permiſſion of the law. In the caſe of miſadventure, it preſumes negligence, or at leaſt a want of ſufficient caution in him who was ſo unfortunate as to commit it; who is therefore not altogether faultleſs. And as to the neceſſity which excuſes a man who kills another ſe defendendo, Lord Bacon entitles it neceſſitas culpabilis, and thereby diſtinguiſhes it from the former neceſſity of killing a thief or a malefactor. Bac. Elem. c. 5. For the law intends that the quarrel or aſſault aroſe from ſome unknown wrong, or ſome provocation, either in word or deed: and ſince, in quarrels, both parties may be, and uſually are, in ſome fault, and it ſcarcely can be tried who was originally in the wrong, the law will not hold the ſurvivor entirely guiltleſs. But it is clear, in the other caſe, that where I kill a thief that breaks into my houſe, the original fault can never be upon my ſide. The law beſides may have a farther view, to make the crime of Homicide more odious, and to caution men how they venture to kill another upon their own private judgment, by ordaining that he who ſlays his neighbour, without an expreſs warrant from the law ſo to do, ſhall in no caſe be abſolutely free from guilt.

The Penalty inflicted by our laws in theſe caſes is ſaid, by Sir Edward Coke to have been antiently no leſs than death; 2 Inſt 248, 315;-which however is with reaſon denied by later and more accurate writers. 1 Hal. P. C. 425: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 20: Foſt. 282. &c. It ſeems rather to have conſiſted in a forfeiture, ſome ſay of all the goods and chattels, others of only part of them, by way of fine or weregild: which was probably diſpoſed of, in pios uſus, according to the humane ſuperſtition of the times, for the benefit of his ſoul, who was thus ſuddenly ſent to his account, 'with all his imperfections on his head.' Foſt. 287. But that reaſon having long ceaſed, and the penalty (eſpecially of a total forfeiture) growing more ſevere than was intended, in proportion as perſonal property has become more conſiderable, the delinquent has now, and has had as early as our records will reach, a pardon, and a writ of reſtitution of his goods as a matter of courſe and right, only paying for ſuing out the ſame. Foſt. 283: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 2. And indeed to prevent this expence, in caſes where the death has notoriouſly happened by miſadventure or in ſelf defence, the Judges will uſually permit, (if not direct) a general verdict of acquittal. Foſt. 288.

It ſeems clear that neither of theſe Homicides, by miſadventure or ſe defendendo, are felonious, becauſe they are not accompanied with a felonious intent, which is neceſſary in every felony. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 19: 3 Inſt. 56: 2 Inſt. 149.

And from hence it ſeems plainly to follow, that they were never puniſhable with loſs of life: And the ſame alſo farther appears from the writ De odio & atiâ, by virtue whereof, if any perſon committed for killing another, were found guilty of either of theſe Homicides, and no other crime, he might be bailed; and indeed it ſeems to be againſt natural juſtice to condemn a man to death, for what is owing rather to his misfortune than his fault. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 20.

It is true indeed, that ſome of our beſt authors have argued from the ſtatute of Marlbridge, ch. 26, which enacts, that murdrum de cætero non adjudicetur, ubi infortunium tantummodo adjudicatum eſt, &c. that, before this ſtatute, homicides by miſadventure, or ſe defendendo, were adjudged murder, and conſequently puniſhed by death. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 21: 2 Inſt. 56: S. P. C. 16.

But to this it may be anſwered, that murder in thoſe days ſignified only the private killing of a man, by one who was neither ſeen nor heard by any witneſs; for which the offender, if found, was to be tried by ordeal, and if he could not be found, the town in which the fact was done, was to be amerced ſixty-ſix marks, unleſs it could be proved that the perſon killed was an Engliſhman: otherwiſe it was preſumed he was a Dane or Norman, who in thoſe days were often privately made away with by the Engliſh. And it being a doubt whether Homicide by miſadventure, &c. were to be eſteemed murder in this ſenſe, it ſeems to have been the chief intent of the makers of this ſtatute to ſettle this queſtion. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 22: Bract. 134 b; 135 a: Kelynge 121.

However it is certain, that notwithſtanding neither of theſe offences be felonies, yet a perſon guilty of them is not bailable by Juſtices of peace, but muſt be committed till the next coming of the Juſtices of eyre or gaol-delivery. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 23: H. P. C. 98, 99: 2 Inſt. 315: Dalt. cap. 98. But ſuch offender may be brought up by habeas corpus, before any of the twelve judges, and bailed.

Indeed, anciently a perſon committed for the death of a man, might ſue out the writ de odio & atiâ, which by Magna Charta c. 16, is grantable without fee; and if thereon, by an inqueſt taken by the ſheriff, he were found to have done the fact by miſadventure, or ſe defendendo, he might be mainpriſed by twelve men, upon the writ de ponendo in ballium. But ſuch writs and enquiries were taken away by the ſtatute of Glouceſter, c. 9. and St. 28 Ed. 3. c. 9, and though perhaps they were again revived by St. 42 Ed. 3. c. 1, which makes all ſtatutes contrary to Magna Charta void, yet at this day they ſeem to be obſolete, and, indeed, uſeleſs; inaſmuch as the party may probably be ſooner delivered in the uſual courſe, by the coming of the Juſtices of gaol-delivery. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 24: S. P. C. 77 g: 2 Inſt. 43, 315: 9 Co. 56: Co. Bail and Mainprize, c. 10.

It is alſo agreed, that no one can excuſe the killing another, by ſetting forth in a ſpecial plea, that he did it by miſadventure, or ſe defendendo, but that he muſt plead 'Not guilty', and give the ſpecial matter in evidence. And that wherever a perſon is found guilty of ſuch Homicide, either by a ſpecial indictment for the ſame, or by a verdict ſetting forth the circumſtances of the caſe on a general indictment of murder or Homicide, he ſhall be diſcharged out of priſon upon bail, and forfeit his goods: But, that upon removing the record by certiorari into Chancery, he ſhall have his pardon of courſe, without ſtaying for any warrant from the King to that purpoſe. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 25: 4 H. 7. 2 a: Keilw. 53 a; 108 b: 2 Inſt. 316: S. P. C. 15 b; 16 b: Dalt. cap. 96, 98: F. N. B. 246. C. H.

III. Felonious Homicide, is an act of a very different nature from the former, being the killing of a human creature, of any age or ſex, without juſtification or excuſe. This may be done either by killing one's ſelf or another perſon.

1. Self-Murder, is ranked among the higheſt crimes, being a peculiar ſpecies of felony; a felony committed on one's ſelf. The party muſt be of years of diſcretion, and in his ſenſes, elſe it is no crime. But this excuſe ought not be ſtrained to that length, to which our Coroners' Juries are too apt to carry it, viz. that the very act of ſuicide is an evidence of inſanity; as if every man, who acts contrary to reaſon, had no reaſon at all: for the ſame argument would prove every other criminal non compos, as well as the ſelf-murderer. The law very rationally judges, that every melancholy or hypochondriac fit does not deprive a man of the capacity of diſcerning right from wrong, and therefore if a real lunatic kills himſelf in a lucid interval, he is felo de ſe as much as another man. 1 Hal. P. C. 412.

As to the puniſhment which human laws inflict on this crime; they can only act upon what he has left behind him, his reputation and fortune: on the former, by an ignominious burial in the highway, with a ſtake driven through his body; on the latter, by the forfeiture of all his goods and chattels to the King.

In this, as well as all other felonies, the offender muſt be of the age of diſcretion, and compos mentis; and therefore, an infant killing himſelf under the age of diſcretion, or a lunatick during his lunacy, cannot be a felo de ſe. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 1: Crom. 30 a, b; 31 a: H. P. C. 28: Dalt. cap. 92: 3 Inſt. 54.

Our laws have always had ſuch an abhorrence of this crime, that not only he who kills himſelf with a deliberate and direct purpoſe of ſo doing, but alſo in ſome caſes he who maliciouſly attempts to kill another, and in purſuance of ſuch an attempt unwillingly kills himſelf, ſhall be adjudged in the eye of the law a felo de ſe; for whereever death is cauſed by any act done with a murderous intent, it makes the offender a murderer; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 4: Dalt. cap. 92, 144: 44 E. 3. 44: 44 Aſſ. 55: Bro. Cor. 12, 14: S. P. C. 16: H. P. C. 28, 29: Pult. 119 b: Crom. 28.

He who kills another upon his deſire or command, is in the judgment of the law as much a murderer, as if he had done it merely of his own head; and the perſon killed is not looked upon as a felo de ſe, inaſmuch as his aſſent was merely void, being againſt the law of God and man. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 6: Keilw. 136: Moor 754.

Further as to what a Felo de ſe ſhall forfeit, it ſeems clear, that he ſhall forfeit all chattels real or perſonal which he hath in his own right; and alſo all chattels real whereof he is poſſeſſed either jointly with his wife, or in her right; and alſo all bonds and other perſonal things in action, belonging ſolely to himſelf; and alſo all perſonal things in action, and, as ſome ſay, entire chattels in poſſeſſion to which he was intitled jointly with another, on any account, except that of merchandize. But it is ſaid, that he ſhall forfeit a moiety only of ſuch joint chattels as may be ſevered, and nothing at all of what he was poſſeſſed of as executor or adminiſtrator. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. §. 7. However the blood of a felo de ſe is not corrupted, nor his lands of inheritance forfeited, nor his wife barred of her dower. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 8: Plowd. Com. 261 b: 262 a: 1 Hal. P. C. 413.

Not any part of the perſonal eſtate is veſted in the King, before the ſelf-murder is found by ſome inquiſition; and conſequently the forfeiture thereof, is ſaved by a pardon of the offence before ſuch finding. 5 Co. 110 b: 3 Inſt. 54: 1 Saund. 362: 1 Sid. 150, 162. But if there be no ſuch pardon, the whole is forfeited immediately after ſuch inquiſition, from the time ſuch mortal wound was given, and all intermediate alienations are avoided. Plowd. Com. 260: H. P. C. 29: 5 Co. 110. And ſuch inquiſitions ought to be by the Coroner ſuper viſum corporis, if the body can be found; and an inquiſition ſo taken, as ſome ſay, cannot be traverſed. H. P. C. 29: 3 Inſt. 55. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 9, 10, 11.

But if the body cannot be found, ſo that the coroner, who has authority only ſuper viſum corporis, cannot proceed, the inquiry may be by Juſtices of peace; (who by their commiſſion have a general power to inquire of all felonies;) or in the King's Bench, if the felony were committed in the county where that court ſits; and ſuch inquiſitions are traverſable by the executor, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 12: 3 Inſt. 55: H. P. C. 29: 2 Lev. 141.

Alſo all inquiſitions of this offence being in the nature of indictments, ought particularly and certainly to ſet forth the circumſtances of the fact; and in the concluſion add, that the party in ſuch manner murdered himſelf. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 13: 3 Lev. 140: 3 Mod. 100: 2 Lev. 152. Yet if it be full in ſubſtance, the coroner may be ſerved with a rule to amend a defect in form. 1 Sid. 225, 259: 3 Mod. 101: 1 Keb. 907: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 15.

By the rubrick in the Common Prayer, before the burial office, (confirmed by ſtat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4,) perſons who have laid violent hands upon themſelves, ſhall not have that office uſed at their interment.—See further on this ſubject this Dict. tit. Felo de ſe.

The other ſpecies of criminal Homicide is that of killing another man. But in this there are alſo degrees of guilt, which divide the offence into Manſlaughter, and Murder. The difference between which may be partly collected from what has been incidentally mentioned in the preceding articles; and principally conſiſts in this, that Man-ſlaughter (when voluntary) ariſes from the ſudden heat of the paſſions; Murder from the wickedneſs of the heart.

2. MANSLAUGHTER is therefore thus defined; The unlawful killing of another, without malice, either expreſs or implied: which may be either voluntarily, upon a ſudden heat; or involuntarily, but in the commiſſion of ſome unlawful act. 1 Hal. P. C. 466. And hence it follows, that in Manſlaughter there can be no acceſſories before the fact; becauſe it muſt be done without premeditation.

As to the firſt, or voluntary branch: if upon a ſudden quarrel two perſons fight, and one of them kills the other, this is Manſlaughter: and ſo it is, if they, upon ſuch an occaſion go out and fight in a field; for this is one continued act of paſſion, and the law pays that regard to human frailty, as not to put a haſty and deliberate act upon the ſame footing with regard to guilt. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. §§ 29, 30. So alſo if a man be greatly provoked, as by pulling his noſe, or other great indignity, and immediately kills the aggreſſor, though this is not excuſable ſe defendendo, ſince there is no abſolute neceſſity for doing it, to preſerve himſelf; yet neither is it murder, for there is no previous malice; but it is Manſlaughter. Kelyng. 135. But in this, and in every other caſe of Homicide, upon provocation, if there be a ſufficient cooling-time for paſſion to ſubſide and reaſon to interpoſe, and the perſon ſo provoked afterwards kills the other, this is deliberate revenge, and not heat of blood, and accordingly amounts to murder. Foſt. 296. So if a man takes another in the act of adultery with his wife, and kills him directly upon the ſpot; this is not abſolutely ranked in the claſs of juſtifiable Homicide, as in caſe of a forcible rape, but it is Manſlaughter. 1 Hal. P. C. 486. It is however the loweſt degree of it, and therefore in ſuch a caſe, the court directed the burning in the hand to be gently inflicted, becauſe there could not be a greater provocation. Raym. 212. Manſlaughter therefore on ſudden provocation differs from Excuſable Homicide ſe defendendo in this: that in one caſe there is an apparent neceſſity, for ſelf-preſervation, to kill the aggreſſor; in the other no neceſſity at all, being only a ſudden act of revenge. 4 Comm. c. 14.

The ſecond branch, or involuntary Manſlaughter differs alſo from Homicide excuſable by miſadventure, in this; that miſadventure always happens in conſequence of a lawful act, but this ſpecies of manſlaughter in conſequence of an unlawful one. As if two perſons play at ſword and buckler, unleſs by the King's command, and one of them kills the other, this is manſlaughter, becauſe the original act was unlawful; but it is not murder, for the one had no intent to do the other any perſonal miſchief. 3 Inſt. 56. So where a perſon does an act, lawful in itſelf, but in an unlawful manner, and without due caution and circumſpection: as when a workman flings down a ſtone or piece of timber into the ſtreet, and kills a man; this may be either miſadventure, manſlaughter, or murder, according to the circumſtance under which the original act was done; if it were in a country village where few paſſengers are, and he calls out to all people to have a care, it is miſadventure only; but if it were in London, or other populous town, where people are continually paſſing, it is manſlaughter, though he gives loud warning; and murder, if he knows of their paſſing, and gives no warning at all, for then it is malice againſt all mankind. Kel. 43: 3 Inſt. And, in general when an involuntary killing happens in conſequence of an unlawful act, it will be either murder or manſlaughter according to the nature of the act which occaſioned it. If it be in proſecution of a felonious intent, or in it's conſequences naturally tended to bloodſhed, it will be murder; but if no more was intended than a mere civil treſpaſs, it will only amount to manſlaughter. 4 Comm. c. 14. See poſt. 3. more at large.

Our ſtatute law has ſeverely animadverted on one ſpecies of criminal negligence, whereby the death of a man is occaſioned. For by Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 31, if any Waterman between Graveſend and Windſor receives into his boat or barge a greater number of perſons than the act allows, and any paſſenger ſhall then be drowned, ſuch waterman is guilty (not of manſlaughter, but) of felony, and ſhall be tranſported as a felon.

Next as to the Puniſhment of this degree of Homicide: the crime of manſlaughter amounts to felony, but within the benefit of clergy; and the offender ſhall be burnt in the hand, and forfeit all his goods and chattels.

But there is one ſpecies of manſlaughter, which is puniſhed as murder, the benefit of clergy being taken away from it by ſtatute; namely, the offence of mortally ſtabbing another, though done upon ſudden provocation. For by ſtat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 8, when one thruſts or ſtabs another, who has not then a weapon drawn, or who hath not then firſt ſtricken the party ſtabbing, ſo that he dies thereof within ſix months after, the offender ſhall not have the benefit of clergy, though he did it not of malice aforethought. This ſtatute was made on account of the frequent quarrels, and ſtabbing with ſhort daggers, between the Scotch and the Engliſh, at the acceſſion of James the Firſt; and, being therefore of a temporary nature, ought perhaps to have expired with the miſchief which which it meant to remedy. 1 Lord Raym. 140. It was however continued indefinitely by St. 3 Car. 1. c. 4: and by ſtat. 16 (or 17) C. 1. c. 4, till ſome other act ſhall be made touching the continuance or diſcontinuance thereof.—It ſeems that in point of ſolid and ſubſtantial juſtice, it cannot be ſaid that the mode of killing, whether by ſtabbing, ſtrangling, or ſhooting, can either extenuate or enhance the guilt; unleſs where, as in the caſe of poiſoning, it carries with it an internal evidence of cool and deliberate malice. But the benignity of the law hath conſtrued the ſtatute ſo favourably in behalf of the Subject, and ſo ſtrictly when againſt him, that the offence of ſtabbing now ſtands almoſt upon the ſame footing, as it did at the Common-law. Foſt. 299, 300. Thus, (not to repeat the caſes before mentioned, of ſtabbing an adultereſs, &c. which are barely manſlaughter, as at Common-law) in the conſtruction of the ſtatute it hath been doubted, whether if the deceaſed had ſtruck at all before the mortal blow given, this does not take it out of the ſtatute, though in the preceding quarrel the ſtabber had given the firſt blow; and it ſeems to be the better opinion, that this is not within the ſtatute. Foſt. 301: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 6. Alſo it hath been reſolved, that the killing a man by throwing a hammer or other blunt weapon is not within the ſtatute; and whether a ſhot with a piſtol be ſo or not, is doubted. 1 Hal. P. C. 470. And if the party ſlain had a cudgel in his hand, or had thrown a pot or a bottle, or diſcharged a piſtol at the party ſtabbing, this is a ſufficient having a weapon drawn on his ſide within the words of the ſtatute. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 8.

It is generally holden, that this ſtatute is but declarative of the Common-law, and in the conſtruction thereof, the following points have been alſo reſolved. 1 Bulſt. 87: Kelyng 55.

That he who actually gives the ſtroke, and not any of thoſe who may be ſaid to do it by conſtruction of law, as being preſent, and aiding and abetting the fact, are within the ſtatute; from whence it follows, That if it cannot be proved by whom the ſtroke was given, none can be found guilty within the ſtatute. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 7: H. P. C. 58: Aleyn 44.

That there is no need to lay the concluſion of the indictment contra formam ſtatuti, becauſe the ſtatute makes no new offence, but only takes away the privilege of clergy from an old one, and leaves it to the judgment of the Common-law; from whence it follows, that a perſon indicted on the ſtatute, may be found guilty of manſlaughter generally. Alſo from the ſame ground it hath been reſolved, That if an indictment lay, and a verdict alſo find, a fact to be contra formam ſtatuti, which cannot poſſibly be ſo, as that A. and B. aided and abetted C. contra formam ſtatuti, yet neither ſuch indictment nor verdict are void; but A. and B. ſhall be dealt with in the ſame manner as they ſhould have been, if theſe words contra formam ſtatuti had been wholly omitted, becauſe the ſubſtance of the indictment being found, they may be rejected as ſenſeleſs and ſurpluſage: And, à fortiori, therefore it is certain, that they ſhall do no hurt to an indictment or verdict containing a fact which may be within the ſtatute. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 9: H. P. C. 58, 266: Allen 47: Cro. Jac. 283.

That, as theſe words, contra formam ſtatuti, do not vitiate an indictment which would be good without them; ſo alſo, they will not ſupply a defect in a vitious one, which does not ſpecially purſue the ſtatute. 1 Hawk. P. C. c 30. § 10: H. P. C. 58.

A priſoner whoſe caſe may be brought within this ſtatute, is commonly arraigned upon two indictments, one at Common-law for murder, and the other upon the ſtatute. Foſt. 299.—But the ſame circumſtances which at Common-law will ſerve to juſtify, excuſe or alleviate a charge of murder, have always had their due weight in proſecutions, grounded on this ſtatute. Foſt. 298.—As where a huſband ſtabs an adulterer whom he ſeizes in the act. 1 Vent. 158: Raym. 212.—Or where a man is aſſaulted by thieves in his houſe, the thieves having no weapon drawn, nor having ſtruck him; and he ſtabs one of them. Stra. 469. Or where an officer entering violently into the chamber of a gentleman to arreſt him, but without announcing the purpoſe for which he came, is ſtabbed by the gentleman with his ſword. Kel. 136: 1 Hale 470: Sty. 467.—Or where upon an outcry of thieves a perſon who had innocently hidden himſelf in a cloſet, was miſtaken for the thief and ſtabbed in the dark. See 1 Hale 42, 474: Cro. Car. 538: W. Jon. 429: Kely. 136; and many other inſtances of this kind which were held not to be within the ſtatute. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. in n.

3. The term of MURDER (as a crime) was antiently applied only to the ſecret killing of another; Dial. de Scacch. l. 1. c. 10; which the word moerda ſignifies in the Teutonic language; and it was defined, "homicidium quod, nullo vidente, nullo ſciente, clam perpetratur: Glanv. lib. 14. c. 3: for which the vill wherein it was committed, or (if that were too poor) the whole hundred, was liable to a heavy amercement; which amercement itſelf was alſo denominated murdrum. Bract. l. 3. tr. 2. c. 15. § 7: Stat. Marl. c. 26: Foſt. 281. The word murdre in our old ſtatutes alſo ſignified any kind of concealment or ſtifling: So in the ſtat. of Exeter, 14 E. 1. "je riens ne celerai ne ſuffrerai etre celé ne murdré." which is thus tranſlated in Fleta, l. 1. c. 18. § 4. "Nullum veritatem celabo, nec celari permittam, nec murdrari." And the words "pur murdre le droit" in the articles of that ſtatute, are rendered in Fleta, ibid. § 8 "pro jure alicujus murdriendo." The word murdrum, (by ſome derived from the Sax. Morth, whence, (as it is ſaid) comes the barbarous Latin Mordrum, & Murdrum, in French Meurtre; though the word Murdrare, evidently comes from the Latin Morti dare), was a word in uſe long before the reign of King Canutus, which ſome would have to ſignify a violent death; and ſometimes the Saxons expreſſed it by morthlad & morth weorc, a deadly work: But the Sax. morth relates generally to mors.

The uſage of fining the vill or the hundred was common among the antient Goths, in Sweden and Denmark, who ſuppoſed the neighbourhood, unleſs they produced the murderer to have perpetrated, or at leaſt connived at, the murder: and, according to Bracton, it was introduced into this kingdom by King Canute to prevent his countrymen the Danes from being privily murdered by the Engliſh; and was afterwards continued by William the Conqueror, for the like ſecurity of his own Normans. Bract. l. 3. tr. 2. c. 15: 1 Hal. P. C. 447. And therefore if, upon inquiſition had, it appeared that the perſon ſlain was an Engliſh man, (the preſentment whereof was denominated Engleſcherie) the county ſeems to have been excuſed from this burthen. Bract. ubi ſupra. See this Dict. tit. Englecery.

Englecery. But, this difference being totally aboliſhed by Stat. 14 E. 3. c. 4, we muſt define murder in quite another manner; without regarding whether the party ſlain was killed openly or ſecretly, or whether he was of Engliſh or foreign extraction. See Staunf. P. C. l. 1. c. 10, as alſo 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31; where it is ſaid that in the ancient times above alluded to, the open killing of a man through anger or malice was not called murder; but voluntary Homicide. Bract. 121 a; 134 b; 135 a: Kel. 121.

The law concerning Engleſcherie having been aboliſhed by Stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 4, the killing of an Engliſhman or foreigner through malice prepenſe, whether committed openly or ſecretly, was by degrees called murder; and Stat. 13 Rich. 2. c. 1, which reſtrains the King's pardon in certain caſes, does in the preamble, under the general name of murder, include all ſuch Homicide as ſhall not be pardoned without ſpecial words; and, in the body of the act, expreſſes the ſame by murder, or killing by await, aſſault, or malice prepenſed. And doubtleſs the makers of ſtat. 23 H. 8. cap. 1, which excluded all wilful murder of malice prepenſe from the benefit of clergy, intended to include open, as well as private Homicide, within the word murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 2: S. P. C. 18 b; 19 a.

By Murder, therefore, ſays Hawkins at this day we underſtand, the wilful killing of any Subject whomſoever, through malice forethought, whether the perſon ſlain be an Engliſhman or foreigner. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 3.

Murder is thus defined, or rather deſcribed, by Sir Edward Coke; "When a perſon of ſound memory and diſcretion, unlawfully killeth any reaſonable creature in being, and under the King's peace, with malice aforethought, either expreſs or implied." 3 Inſt. 47. The beſt way of examining the nature of this crime will be by conſidering the ſeveral branches of this definition.

Firſt, murder muſt be committed by a perſon of ſound memory and diſcretion: for lunaticks or infants, as was formerly obſerved, are incapable of committing any crime; unleſs in ſuch caſes where they ſhew a conſciouſneſs of doing wrong, and of courſe a diſcretion, or diſcernment, between good and evil.

One under the age of diſcretion, or non compos mentis, cannot be guilty of murder; though if it appears by circumſtances, that the infant did hide the body, &c. it is felony. H. P. C. 43: 3 Inſt. 46, 54.

If an infant under twelve years old, hath an extraordinary wit, that it may be preſumed he knows what he does, and he kill another, it may be felony and murder; otherwiſe it ſhall not. 3 H. 7. 13: Plowd. 191.

See the caſe of William York, at Bury, Summer aſſiſes in 1748. Foſter's Rep. 70. and this Dict. tit. Infant I.

Next, murder happens when a perſon of ſuch ſound diſcretion unlawfully killeth. The unlawfulneſs ariſes from the killing without warrant or excuſe: and there muſt alſo be an actual killing to conſtitute murder; for a bare aſſault, with intent to kill, is only a great miſdemeanor, though formerly it was held to be murder. See 1 Hal. P. C. 425.

A perſon indicted for intending to murder the Maſter of the Rolls, Term Mich. 16 Car. 2; and for offering a ſum of money to another perſon to do it, ſaying at the ſame time, that "if he would not perpetrate the crime, he would do it himſelf;" upon his conviction, the court declared that this was a heinous offence, and not only indictable, but fineable; and the offender was fined one thouſand marks, committed to priſon for three months, and ordered to find ſureties for his good behaviour during life. 1 Lev. 146.

The killing may be by poiſoning, ſtriking, ſtarving, drowning, and a thouſand other forms of death, by which human nature may be overcome. And if a perſon be indicted for one ſpecies of killing, as by poiſoning, he cannot be convicted by evidence of a totally different ſpecies of death, as by ſhooting with a piſtol, or ſtarving. But where they only differ in circumſtances, as if a wound be alledged to be given by a ſword, and it proves to have ariſen from a ſtaff, an ax, or a hatchet, this difference is immaterial. 3 Inſt. 319: 2 Hal. P. C. 185. Of all ſpecies of deaths, the moſt deteſtable is that of poiſon; becauſe it can of all others be the leaſt prevented either by manhood or forethought. 3 Inſt. 48. And therefore by the ſtat. 22 Hen. 8. c. 9, it was made treaſon, and a more grievous and lingering kind of death was inflicted on it than the Common-law allowed; namely, boiling to death: but this act did not live long, being repealed by Stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12; which declares that all wilful killing by poiſoning of any perſon ſhall be adjudged wilful murder, of malice prepenſed.

There was alſo, by the antient Common-law, one ſpecies of killing held to be murder which may be dubious at this day, as there hath not been an inſtance wherein it has been held to be murder, for many ages paſt; namely by bearing falſe witneſs againſt another, with an expreſs, premeditated deſign to take away his life, ſo as the innocent perſon be condemned and executed. Mirror c. 1. § 9, 19: Brit. c. 52: Bracton l. 3. c. 4. There is no doubt but this is equally murder in foro conſcientiæ as killing with a ſword; though the modern law (to avoid the danger of deterring witneſſes from giving evidence upon capital proſecutions, if it muſt be at the perils of their own lives,) has not yet puniſhed it as ſuch. See 3 Inſt. 48: Foſt. 131. and this Dict. tit. Perjury.

A gaoler knowing a priſoner to be infected with an epidemic diſtemper, confines another priſoner againſt his will, in the ſame room with him, by which he catches the infection, of which the gaoler had notice, and the priſoner dies; this is a felonious killing. Stra. 856: 9 St. Tr. 146. So to confine a priſoner in a low, damp, unwholeſome room, not allowing him the common conveniences, which the decencies of nature require, by which the habits of his conſtitution are ſo affected as to produce a diſtemper of which he dies; this is alſo a felonious Homicide. Stra. 884: Ld. Raym. 1578.—For although the law inveſts gaolers with all neceſſary powers, for the intereſt of the common-wealth, they are not to behave with the leaſt degree of wanton cruelty to their priſoners, O. B. 1784, p. 1177.—And thoſe were deliberate acts of cruelty, and enormous violations of the truſt the law repoſeth in it's miniſters of juſtice. Foſt. 322.

In ſome caſes a man ſhall be ſaid, in the judgment of the law, to kill one who is in truth actually killed by another, or by himſelf; as where one by dureſs of impriſonment compels a man to accuſe an innocent perſon, who, on his evidence, is condemned and executed; or where one incites a madman to kill himſelf or another: or where one lays poiſon with an intent to kill one man, which is afterwards accidentally taken by another who dies thereof. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 7: S. P. C. 36: 3 Inſt. 91: Dalt. cap. 93: Plowd. Com. 474.

If

If a man however does such an act, of which the probable consequence may be, and eventually is death, such killing may be murder although no stroke be struck by himself, and tho' no killing may be primarily intended; as was the case of the unnatural son, who exposed his sick father to the air, against his will, by reason whereof he died. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 5; of the harlot, who laid her child under leaves in an orchard, where a kite struck it and killed it. 1 Hal. P. C. 432; and of the parish officers, who shifted a child from parish to parish, till it died for want of care and sustenance. Palm. 545. So also, in general any one who, assuming to take care of another, refuses them necessary subsistence, or by any other severity, though not of a nature to produce immediate death, as by putting the party in such a situation as may possibly be dangerous to life or health, if death actually and clearly ensues in consequence of it, it is murder.—And this mode of killing is of the most aggravated kind, because a long time must unavoidably intervene before the death can happen, and also many opportunities of deliberation, and reflection, O. B. 1784 p. 455: R. v. S. Self, O. B. 1784: Feb. Sessi. 1776.

If a man hath a beast that is used to do mischief; and he, knowing it, suffers it to go abroad, and it kills a man, even this is manslaughter in the owner: but if he had purposely turned it loose, though barely to frighten people and make what is called sport, it is as much murder, as if he had incited a bear or dog to worry them. See 1 Hal. P. C. 431.

Hawkins says, that he who wilfully neglects to prevent a mischief, which he may and ought to provide against, is, as some have said, in judgment of the law, the actual cause of the damage which ensues; and therefore if a man have an ox or horse, which he knows to be mischievous, by being used to gore or strike at those who came near them, and do not tie them up, but leave them to their liberty, and they afterwards kill a man, according to some opinions, the owner may be indicted, as having himself killed him; and this is agreable to the Mosaical law. However, it is agreed by all, such a person is guilty of a very gross misdemeanor. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 1: Fitz. Corone 311: S. P. C. 17 a: Crom. 24 b: Dalt. cap. 93: Pult. 122 b: H. P. C. 53: Exodus, c. 2. v. 29.

If a physician or surgeon gives his patient a potion or plaister to cure him, which contrary to expectation kills him, this is neither murder, nor manslaughter, but misadventure; and he shall not be punished criminally, however liable he might formerly have been to a civil action, for neglect or ignorance. Mirror c. 4. § 16. But it hath been holden, that if he is not a regular physician or surgeon, who administers the medicine, or performs the operation, it is manslaughter at the least. Britt. c. 5: 4 Inst. 251. Yet Sir Matthew Hale very justly questions the law of this determination. 1 Hal. P. C. 430.

In order also to make the killing murder, it is requisite that the party die within a year and a day after the stroke received, or cause of death administered; in the computation of which, the whole day upon which the hurt was done shall be reckoned the first. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 9.

But if a person hurt by another, die thereof within a year and a day, it is no excuse for the other, that he might have recovered, if he had not neglected to take care of himself. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 10: 3 Inst. 53: Kelynge 26: 1 Keb. 17.

If one dies within a year and a day, through disorderly living, it shall be no excuse, the wound will be judged the principal cause of his death; but if one wounded die after that time, the law will presume he died a natural death. 3 Inst. 53: H. P. C. 55: Kel. 26. If a man receive a wound that is not mortal; but either for want of help, or by neglect, it turns to a fever, &c. which causes the party's death, it is murder: so it is, where a man has some disease, which possibly would terminate his life in half a year, and another wounds him, that it hastens his end, &c. But if, by ill applications of the party, or those about him, of unwholesome medicines, the wounded person dies; if this plainly appears, it is not murder: by Hale; Hist. P. C. 428.

As to the place where such killing is within the conusance of the law; it seems that the killing of one who is both wounded and dies out of the realm, or wounded out of the realm and dies here, cannot be determined at Common-law, because it cannot be tried by a jury of the neighbourhood where the fact was done. But it is agreed, that the death of one who is both wounded and dies beyond sea, and it is said by some, that the death of him who dies here of a wound given there, may be heard and determined before the Constable and Marshal, according to the Civil law, if the King please to appoint a Constable. And it seemeth also to be clear, that such a fact being examined by the privy council, may by force of St. 33 H. 8. cap. 23, be tried (in relation to the principal offenders, but not as to the accessaries) before commissioners appointed by the King, in any county of England. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 11: 3 Inst. 48: 2 Inst. 51: Co. Lit. 75: S. P. C. 65 a: Bro. Appeal 153: Cro. Car. 247: 1 And. 195. A commission was issued, against Captain Rocke for killing Mr. Ferguson, at the cape of Good Hope.

A murder at sea was anciently cognisable only by the Civil law; but now by force of Stats. 27 H. 8. c. 4: 28 H. 8. c. 15, it may be tried and determined before the King's Commissioners in any county of England, according to the course of the Common-law; yet the death of one who is at land, of a wound received at sea, is neither determinable at Common-law, nor by force of either of these statutes: but it seems, that it may be tried by the Constable and Marshal, or before the commissioners appointed in pursuance of the aforesaid statute of 33 H. 8. c. 23: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 12: 3 Inst. 48, 49: 1 Leon. 270: H. P. C. 54: 3 Inst. 48.

The Commissioners to be appointed under Stats. 27 & 28 H. 8, are the Admiral, or his deputy, and three or four more (among whom two Common law judges are constantly appointed, who in effect try all prisoners); the indictment being first found by a Grand Jury of 12 men, and afterwards tried by another jury. This is now the only method of trying marine felonies in the Court of Admiralty. The Judge of the Admiralty still presiding therein, just as the Lord Mayor presides at the Sessions in London. 4 Comm. 269. See this Dict. tit. Admiralty.

And it is said by some, that the death of one who died in one county, of a wound given in another, is not indictable at all at Common-law, because the offence was not complete in either county, and the jury could enquire only of what happened in their own county. But it hath been holden by others, That if the corpse were carried into the county where the stroke was given, the whole might be enquired of by a jury of the same county. And it is agreed, that an appeal might be brought in either county, and

and the fact tried by a jury returned jointly from each. And at this day, by force of St. 2 & 3 Ed 6. c. 24, the whole is triable by a jury of the county wherein the death ſhall happen, on an indictment found, or appeal brought, in the ſame county. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 13: 3 Inſt. 48, 49: Bro. Coro. 140, 141, 143: Indictm. 3: S. P. C. 90. c: 6 H. 7. 10 a: Finch Law 411: S. P. C. 182: Bro. Appeal 3. 80. 83. 85. 149.

Alſo by force of St. 26 H. 8. cap. 6, a murder in Wales may be enquired of in an adjoining Engliſh county, but appeals muſt ſtill be brought in the proper county. 1 Hawk. P. C. Cro. Car. 247: 1 Jon. 255: 1 Lev. 118: Latch 12. 118: Wilſ. 320.

By Stat. 2 Geo. 2. cap. 21, it is enacted that where any perſon ſhall be feloniouſly ſtricken or poiſoned upon the ſea, or at any place out of England, and ſhall die of the ſame in England; or where any perſon ſhall be feloniouſly ſtricken or poiſoned within England, and ſhall die of ſuch ſtroke or poiſoning upon the ſea, or out of England, an indictment thereof found by jurors of the county in England, in which ſuch death, ſtroke or poiſoning ſhall happen, whether it be found before any coroner upon view of ſuch dead body, or before juſtices of peace, or other juſtices who ſhall have authority to inquire of murders, ſhall be as effectual, as well againſt the principals as the acceſſories, as if ſuch ſtroke or poiſoning and death, and the offence of ſuch acceſſories, had happened in the ſame county; and every ſuch offender ſhall have the like defences (except challenges for the hundred) as if ſuch ſtroke or poiſoning and death, and the like offence of ſuch acceſſories, had happened in the ſame county where ſuch indictment ſhall be found. See title Indictment II.

Farther; the perſon killed muſt be "a reaſonable creature in being, and under the King's peace," at the time of the killing; therefore to kill an alien, a Jew, or an outlaw, who, are all under the King's peace and protection, is as much murder as to kill the moſt regular born Engliſhman, except he be an alien enemy in time of war. 3 Inſt. 50: 1 Hal. P. C. 433. To kill a child in it's mother's womb, is now no murder, but a great miſprifion: but if the child be born alive, and dieth by reaſon of the potion or bruiſes it received in the womb, it ſeems by the better opinion to be murder in ſuch as adminiſtered or gave them. 3 Inſt. 50: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 16. But ſee 1 Hal. P. C. 433.

It ſeems alſo agreed, that where one counſels a woman to kill her child when it ſhall be born, who afterwards kills it in purſuance of ſuch advice, he is an acceſſary to the murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 17: Dyer 186: 3 Inſt. 51.

But, as there is one caſe where it is difficult to prove the child's being born alive, namely, in the caſe of the murder of baſtard children by the unnatural mother, it is enacted by ſtat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 27, "that if a woman be delivered of a child, which if born alive, ſhould by law be a baſtard; and endeavours privately to conceal it's death, by burying the child or the like; the mother ſo offending ſhall ſuffer death as in the caſe of murder, unleſs ſhe can prove by one witneſs at leaſt that the child was actually born dead." See title Baſtard. II. 2.

Laſtly, the killing muſt be committed with malice aforethought, to make it the crime of murder. This is the grand criterion which now diſtinguiſhes murder from other killing, and this malice prepenſe, malicia præcogitata, is not ſo properly ſpite or malevolence to the deceaſed in particular, as any evil deſign in general: the dictate of a wicked, depraved and malignant heart. Foſt. 256: un diſpoſition à faire un male choſe. 2 Rol. Rep. 461. and it may be either expreſs, or implied in law. Expreſs is, when one with a ſedate, deliberate mind, and formed deſign, doth kill another; which formed deſign is evidenced by external circumſtances, diſcovering that inward intention; as lying in wait, antecedent menaces, former grudges, and concerted ſchemes to do him ſome bodily harm. 1 Hal. P. C. 451. This takes in the caſe of deliberate duelling, where both parties meet avowedly, with an intent to murder; thinking it their duty, as gentlemen, and claiming it as their right, to wanton with their own lives and thoſe of their fellow creatures; without any warrant or authority from any power, either divine or human, but in direct contradiction to the laws both of God and man; and therefore the law has juſtly fixed the crime and puniſhment of murder, on them, and on their ſeconds alſo. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 21. & ſeq.

As to the firſt inſtance of this kind, it ſeems agreed, that wherever two perſons in cold blood meet and fight, on a precedent quarrel, and one of them is killed, the other is guilty of murder, and cannot help himſelf by alledging that he was firſt ſtruck by the deceaſed; or that he had often declined to meet him, and was prevailed upon to do it by his importunity; or that it was his only intent to vindicate his reputation, or that he meant not to kill, but only to diſarm his adverſary: For ſince he deliberately engaged in an act in defiance of the laws, he muſt at his peril abide the conſequences thereof. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 21: 1 Bulſt. 86, 7: 2 Bulſt. 147: Crom. 22 b: 1 Rol. Rep. 360: 3 Bulſt. 171: H. P. C. 48.

From hence it clearly follows, that if two perſons quarrel over night, and appoint to fight the next day, or quarrel in the morning, and agree to fight in the afternoon, or ſuch a conſiderable time after, by which, in common intendment, it muſt be preſumed that the blood was cooled, and then they meet and fight, and one kill the other, he is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 22: 3 Inſt. 51: H. P. C. 48: Kelynge 56: 1 Lev. 180.

And wherever it appears, from the whole circumſtances of the caſe, that he who kills another on a ſudden quarrel was maſter of his temper at the time, he is guilty of murder; as if after the quarrel he fall into other diſcourſe, and talk calmly thereon: or perhaps if he has ſo much conſideration as to ſay, that the place wherein the quarrel happens, is not convenient for fighting; or that if he ſhould fight at preſent, he ſhould have the diſadvantage by reaſon of the height of his ſhoes, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 23: Kelynge 56: 1 Sid. 177: 1 Lev. 180.

If A. on a quarrel with B. tells him that he will not ſtrike him, but that he will give B. a pot of ale to ſtrike him, and thereupon B. ſtrike, and A. kills him, he is guilty of murder; for he ſhall not elude the juſtice of the law by ſuch pretence to cover his malice. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 24: H. P. C. 48.

In like manner, if B. challenge A. and A. refuſe to meet him; but in order to evade the law, tells B. that he ſhall go the next day to ſuch a town about his buſineſs, and accordingly B. meet him the next day in the road to the ſame town, and aſſault him, whereupon they fight, and A. kills B. he is, in the opinion of Hawkins, guilty of murder, unleſs it appear by the whole circumſtances that he gave B. ſuch information accidentally, and not with a deſign to give him an opportunity of fighting. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 25: Crom. 22 b: H. P. C. 48.

And at this day it ſeems to be ſettled, That if a man aſſaults another with malice prepenſe, and after be driven by him to the wall, and kill him there in his own defence, he is guilty of murder in reſpect of his firſt intent. Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 26: Crom. 22 b: Dalt. cap. 93: H. P. C. 47: Kelynge 58. Mawgridge's caſe.

And it hath been adjudged, that even upon a ſudden quarrel, if a man be ſo far provoked by any bare words or geſtures of another, as to make a puſh at him with a ſword, or to ſtrike at him with any other ſuch weapon as manifeſtly indangers his life, before the other's ſword is drawn, and thereupon a fight enſue, and he who made ſuch aſſault kill the other, he is guilty of murder; becauſe that by aſſaulting the other in ſuch an outrageous manner, without giving him an opportunity to defend himſelf, he ſhewed that he intended not to fight with him, but to kill him, which violent revenge is no more excuſed by ſuch a ſlight provocation, than if there had been none at all. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 27: Crom. 23 a. b: Dalt. cap. 93: Kelynge 61. Mawgridge's caſe.

But it is ſaid, that if he who draws upon another in a ſudden quarrel, make no paſs at him till his ſword is drawn, and then fight with him, he is guilty of manſlaughter only; becauſe that by neglecting the opportunity of killing the other, he was on his guard, and in a condition to defend himſelf, with like hazard to both, he ſhewed that his intent was not ſo much to kill, as to combat with the other; in compliance with thoſe common notions of honour, which prevailing over reaſon, during the time that a man is under the tranſports of a ſudden paſſion, ſo far mitigate his offence in fighting, that it ſhall not be adjudged to be of malice prepenſe. Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 28: Kelynge 55, 61, 131: 2 Rol. Rep. 461.

And if two happen to fall out upon a ſudden, and preſently agree to fight, and each of them fetch a weapon, and go into the field, and there one kills the other, he is guilty of manſlaughter only, becauſe he did it in the heat of blood, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 29: H. P. C. 48: 3 Inſt. 51.

And ſuch an indulgence is ſhewn to the frailties of human nature, that where two perſons, who have formerly fought on malice, are afterwards to all appearance reconciled, and fight again on a freſh quarrel, it ſhall not be preſumed that they were moved by the old grudge, unleſs it appear by the whole circumſtances of the fact. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 30: Crom. 23 a: Dalt. cap. 93: H. P. C. 49: 1 Rol. Rep. 360.

But the law ſo far abhors all duelling in cold blood, that not only the principal who actually kills the other, but alſo his ſeconds are guilty of murder, whether they fought or not; and ſome have gone ſo far as to hold, that the ſeconds of the perſons killed are alſo equally guilty, in reſpect of that countenance which they give to their principals in the execution of their purpoſe, by accompanying them therein, and being ready to bear a part with them: but perhaps the contrary opinion is the more plauſible; for it ſeems too ſevere a conſtruction to make a man by ſuch reaſoning the murderer of his friend, to whom he was ſo far from intending any miſchief, that he was ready to hazard his own life in his quarrel. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 32: H. P. C. 51: Dalt. cap. 93.

Any formed deſign of doing miſchief may be called malice; and therefore not only ſuch killing as proceeds from premeditated hatred or revenge againſt the perſon killed, but alſo in many other caſes, ſuch as is accompanied with thoſe circumſtances that ſhew the heart to be perverſely wicked, is adjudged to be of malice prepenſe or aforethought, and conſequently murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 18: Kelynge 127: Stran. 766.

If a man happen to kill another in the execution of a malicious and deliberate purpoſe to do him a perſonal hurt, by wounding or beating him; or in the wilful commiſſion of any unlawful act, which neceſſarily tends to raiſe tumults and quarrels, and conſequently cannot but be attended with the danger of perſonal hurt to ſome one or other; he ſhall be adjudged guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 10: H. P. C. 52, 57: Kelynge 117.

A fortiori, He ſhall come under the ſame conſtruction, who, in the purſuance of a deliberate intention to commit a felony, chances to kill a man, as by ſhooting at tame fowl with an intent to ſteal them, &c. for ſuch perſons are by no means favoured, and they muſt at their peril take care of the conſequence of their actions; and it is a general rule, that wherever a man intending to commit one felony, happens to commit another, he is as much guilty as if he had intended the felony which he actually commits. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 11: 3 Inſt. 56: Kelynge 117: H. P. C. 52.

If any one ſhoot at any wild fowl upon a tree, and the arrow killeth any reaſonable creature afar off, without any evil intent in him, this is miſadventure; for it was not unlawful to ſhoot at the wild fowl: But if he had ſhot at a cock or hen, or any tame fowl of another man's, and the arrow by miſchance had killed a man; if his intention was to ſteal the poultry (which muſt be collected from circumſtances) it will be murder by reaſon of that felonious intent: but if it was done wantonly, and without that intention, it will be barely manſlaughter. Foſt. 258, 9.

The rule before laid down ſuppoſeth, that the act from which death enſued, was malum in ſe. For if it was barely malum prohibitum, as ſhooting at game by a perſon not qualified by ſtatute-law to keep or uſe a gun for that purpoſe; the caſe of a perſon offending, will fall under the ſame rule as that of a qualified man. For the ſtatutes prohibiting the deſtruction of the game under certain penalties, will not, in a queſtion of this kind, enhance the accident beyond its intrinſick moment. Foſt. 259.

If upon a ſudden provocation one beats another in a cruel and unuſual manner, ſo that he dies, though he did not intend his death, yet he is guilty of murder by expreſs malice; that is, by an expreſs evil deſign, the genuine ſenſe of malitia. As when a park-keeper tied a boy, that was ſtealing wood, to a horſe's tail, and dragged him along the park; when a maſter corrected his ſervant with an iron bar, and a ſchoolmaſter ſtamped on his ſcholar's belly; ſo that each of the ſufferers died; theſe were juſtly held to be murders, becauſe the correction being exceſſive, and ſuch as could not proceed but from a bad heart, it was equivalent to a deliberate act of ſlaughter. 1 Hal. P. C. 454, 473, 474. Neither ſhall He be guilty of a leſs crime, who kills another in conſequence of ſuch a wilful act, as ſhews him to be an enemy to all mankind in general; as going deliberately, and with an intent to do miſchief, upon a horſe uſed to ſtrike, or coolly diſcharging a gun among a multitude of people. Ld. Raym. 143: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 12.

And it is no excuſe that he intended no harm to any one in particular, or that he meant to do it only for ſport, or to frighten the people, &c. H. P. C. 32, 44: 3 Inſt. 57: Dalt. cap. 93, 97: 11 H. 7. 23 a: Bro. Coro. 229.

So if a man reſolves to kill the next man he meets, and does kill him, it is murder, although he knew him not; for this is univerſal malice. And, if two or more come together to do an unlawful act againſt the King's peace, of which the probable conſequence might be bloodſhed, as to beat a man, to commit a riot, or to rob a park: and one of them kill a man, it is murder in them all, becauſe of the unlawful act, the malitia præcogitata, or evil intended before-hand. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 46.

Murder occaſioned through an expreſs purpoſe to do ſome perſonal injury to him who is ſlain, is properly ſaid to be of expreſs malice: Such as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, principally intended for ſome other purpoſe, and not expreſſed in its nature to do a perſonal injury to him in particular that is killed, is moſt properly malice implied. Kel. 129, 130.

In many caſes where no malice is expreſſed, the law will imply it: as, where a man wilfully poiſons another, in ſuch a deliberate act the law preſumes malice, though no particular enmity can be proved. 1 Hal. P. C. 455. And if a man kills another ſuddenly, without any, or without a conſiderable provocation, the law implies malice; for no perſon, unleſs of an abandoned heart, would be guilty of ſuch an act, upon a ſlight or no apparent cauſe. No affront, by words or geſture only, is a ſufficient provocation, ſo as to excuſe or extenuate ſuch acts of violence as manifeſtly endanger the life of another. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 33: 1 Hal. P. C. 455, 6. But if the perſon ſo provoked had unfortunately killed the other, by beating him in ſuch a manner as ſhewed only an intent to chaſtiſe and not to kill him, the law ſo far conſiders the provocation of contumelious behaviour as to judge it only manſlaughter, and not murder. Foſt. 291. In like manner if one kills an officer of juſtice, either civil or criminal, in the execution of his duty, or any of his aſſiſtants endeavouring to conſerve the peace, or any private perſon endeavouring to ſuppreſs an affray; or apprehends a felon, knowing his authority, or the intention with which he interpoſes; the law will imply malice; and the killer ſhall be guilty of murder. 1 Hal. P. C. 457: Foſt. 308, &c. And if one intends to do another felony, and undeſignedly kill a man, this is alſo murder. 1 Hal. P. C. 465. Thus if one ſhoots at A. and miſſes him, but kills B. this is murder; becauſe of the previous felonious intent, which the law transfers from one to the other. The ſame is the caſe where one lays poiſon for A; and B, againſt whom the priſoner had no malicious intent, takes it, and it kills him; this is likewiſe murder. 1 Hal. P. C. 466. So alſo if one gives a woman with child a medicine to procure abortion, and it operates ſo violently as to kill the woman, this is murder in the perſon who gave it. 1 Hal. P. C. 429.

As to ſuch murder as happens in killing another without any provocation, or but upon a ſlight one; it is to be obſerved, that wherever it appears that a man killed another, it ſhall be intended primâ facie that he did it maliciouſly, unleſs he can make out the contrary, by ſhewing that he did it on a ſudden provocation, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 32: Kelynge 27.

Alſo it ſeems to be agreed, that no breach of a man's word or promiſe, no treſpaſs either to lands or goods, no affront by bare words or geſtures, however falſe or malicious it may be, and aggravated with the moſt provoking circumſtances, will excuſe Him from being guilty of murder, who is ſo far tranſported thereby, as immediately to attack the perſon who offends him, in ſuch a manner as manifeſtly endangers his life, without giving him time to put himſelf upon his guard, if he kills him in purſuance of ſuch aſſault, whether the perſon ſlain did at all fight in his defence or not: for ſo baſe and cruel a revenge cannot have too ſevere a conſtruction. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 33: Kelynge 131, 135: 2 Rol. Rep. 460, 461: Dalt. cap. 93: Cro. Eliz. 779: Noy 171: 1 Sid. 277: 1 Levinz 180: Hob. 121. con: 1 Jon. 432 a.

But if a perſon ſo provoked had beaten the other only in ſuch a manner, that it might plainly appear that he meant not to kill, but only chaſtiſe him; or if he had reſtrained himſelf till the other had put himſelf on his guard, and then in fighting with him had killed him, he had been guilty of manſlaughter only. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 34: Kelynge 55, 61, 131.

And of the like offence ſhall he be adjudged guilty, who ſeeing two perſons fighting together on a private quarrel, whether ſudden or malicious, takes part with one of them, and kills the other. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 35: Kelynge 61, 136: Cro. Jac. 296: 12 Co. 87.

If two having malice fight, and the ſervant of one of them, not knowing of the malice, killeth the other, this is murder in the maſter, and manſlaughter in the ſervant: Though if there be a conſpiracy to kill a man, but no malice againſt his ſervant; if the ſervant be ſlain, the malice againſt the maſter ſhall be conſtrued to extend to his ſervant: and the killing the ſervant is murder. Dyer 128.

He cannot be thought guilty of a greater crime, than manſlaughter, who finding a man in bed with his wife, or being actually ſtruck by him, or pulled by the noſe, or fillipped upon the forehead, immediately kills him; or who happens to kill another in a contention for the wall; or in the defence of his perſon from an unlawful arreſt; or in the defence of his houſe from thoſe who, claiming a title to it, attempt forcibly to enter it, and to that purpoſe ſhoot at it, &c. or in the defence of his poſſeſſion of a room in a public houſe, from thoſe who attempt to turn him out of it, and thereupon draw their ſwords upon him; in which caſe the killing the aſſailant hath been holden by ſome to be juſtifiable; but it is certain, that it can amount to no more than manſlaughter. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 36: H. P. C. 57: 3 Inſt. 57: Kelynge 51, 137: Crom. 27 a.

Nor was he judged criminal in a higher degree, who ſeeing his ſon's noſe bloody, and being told by him, that he had been beaten by ſuch a boy, ran three quarters of a mile, and having found the boy, beat him with a ſmall cudgel, whereof he afterwards died. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 48: Cro. Jac. 296: 12 Co. 87.

Nor was he thought more criminal, who duped and encouraged by a concourſe of people, threw a pick-pocket into a pond adjoining to the road, in order to avenge the theft, by ducking him, but without any apparent intention to take away his life, and the pick-pocket was drowned; for although this mode of puniſhment is highly unjuſtifiable and illegal, yet the law reſpects the infirmities and imbecilities of human nature, where certain provocations are given: O. B. 85, N°. 751.—So alſo where three Scotch ſoldiers were drinking together in a public houſe, one of them ſtruck ſome ſtrangers that were drinking in another box, with a ſmall rattan; they having uſed ſeveral opprobrious epithets, reviling the character of the Scotch nation: an altercation enſued, and one of the ſtrangers laid hold of the ſoldier who had ſtricken, and threw him againſt a ſettle.—The altercation increaſed, and when the ſoldiers had paid the reckoning the ſtrangers again ſhoved him from the room into the paſſage; upon this, the ſoldier exclaimed, that "he did not mind killing an Engliſh man, more than eating a meſs of crowdy;" the ſtranger, aſſiſted by another perſon, then violently puſhed the ſoldier out of the houſe, whereupon the ſoldier inſtantly turned round, drew his ſword, and ſtabbed the ſtranger to the heart. This was adjudged Manſlaughter. 5 Burr. 2799.—But in every caſe of Homicide, upon provocation, how great ſoever it be, if there is ſufficient time for paſſion to ſubſide, and for reaſon to interpoſe, ſuch Homicide will be murder. Foſt. 278, 296: 1 Hale 486: 1 Vent. 158: Raym. 212: Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 31. § 37. in n.

When one executes his revenge, upon a ſudden provocation, in ſuch a cruel manner, with a dangerous weapon, as ſhews a malicious intention to do miſchief; and death enſues, it is expreſs malice and murder from the nature of the fact. Kel. 55, 61, 65, 130. A man chided his ſervant, and upon ſome croſs anſwer given, he having a hot iron in his hand ran it into the ſervant's belly, of which he died, this was adjudged murder. Kel. 64.

If a perſon is treſpaſſing upon another, by breaking his hedges, &c. and the owner upon ſight thereof take up a hedge-ſtake, and give him a ſtroke on the head, whereof he dies, this is murder, becauſe it is a violent act beyond the proportion of the provocation. H. P. C. And where a boy was upon a tree in a park cutting of wood, and the keeper bids him come down, which he did; and then the keeper ſtruck him ſeveral blows with a cudgel, and afterwards with a rope tied him to his horſe's tail, and the horſe ran away with him and killed him; this was held to be murder out of malice, the boy having come down at the keeper's command. Cro. Car. 139: H. P. C.

As to ſuch murder as happens in killing one whom the perſon killing intended to hurt in a leſs degree; it is to be obſerved, that wherever a perſon in cool blood by way of revenge, unlawfully and deliberately beats another in ſuch a manner that he afterwards dies thereof, he is guilty of murder, however unwilling he might have been to have gone ſo far. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 38: Kelyn. 119. Mawgridge's caſe: H. P. C. 49, 50, 51, 52.

Alſo it ſeems, that he who upon a ſudden provocation executeth his revenge in ſuch a cruel manner, as ſhews a cool and deliberate intent to do miſchief, is guilty of murder, if death enſue; as where the keeper of a park finding a boy ſtealing wood, tied him to a horſe's tail and beat him, whereupon the horſe ran away with him and killed him. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 39: Cro. Car. 131: 1 Jon. 198: Palm. 545: H. P. C. 49.

As to the caſes where ſuch killing ſhall be adjudged murder, which happen in the execution of an unlawful action, principally intended for ſome other purpoſe, and not to do a perſonal injury to him in particular who happens to be ſlain, they are as follow. And firſt, Such killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, whereof the principal intention was to commit another felony; it ſeems agreed, that wherever a man happens to kill another in the execution of a deliberate purpoſe to commit any felony, he is guilty of murder; as where a perſon ſhooting at tame fowl, with an intent to ſteal them, accidentally kills a man; or where one ſets upon a man to rob him, and kills him in making reſiſtance; or where a perſon ſhooting at, or fighting with one man with a deſign to murder him, miſſes him, and kills another. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 40, 41: Kelynge 117: H. P. C. 46, 50: Dalt. cap. 93: Moore 87.

And not only in ſuch caſes, where the very act of a perſon having ſuch a felonious intent, is the immediate cauſe of a third perſon's death, but alſo where it any way occaſionally cauſes ſuch a misfortune, it makes him guilty of murder; and ſuch was the caſe of the huſband, who gave a poiſoned apple to his wife, who eat not enough of it to kill her, but innocently, and againſt the huſband's will and perſuaſion, gave part of it to a child who died thereof; ſuch alſo was the caſe of the wife who mixed ratſbane in a potion ſent by an apothecary to her huſband, which did not kill him, but afterwards killed the apothecary, who to vindicate his reputation taſted it himſelf, having firſt ſtirred it about. Neither is it material in this caſe, that the ſtirring of the potion might make the operation of the poiſon more forcible than otherwiſe it would have been; for inaſmuch as ſuch a murderous intention, which of itſelf perhaps in ſtrictneſs might juſtly be made puniſhable with death, proves now in the event the cauſe of the King's loſing a Subject, it ſhall be as ſeverely puniſhed as if it had had the intended effect, the miſſing whereof is not owing to any want of malice, but of power. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 42: Plow. Com. 474: 9 Co. 91.

But if one happened to be poiſoned by ratſbane laid in order to deſtroy vermine, the perſon by whom he is ſo killed, is guilty of Homicide per infortunium only, becauſe his intentions were wholly innocent. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 43.

Alſo if a third perſon accidentally happen to be killed by one engaged in a combat with another upon a ſudden quarrel, it ſeems that he who kills him is guilty of manſlaughter only; but it hath been adjudged, that if a juſtice of peace, conſtable or watchman, or even a private perſon be killed in the endeavouring to part thoſe whom he ſees fighting, the perſon by whom he is killed, is guilty of murder; and that he cannot excuſe himſelf by alledging that what he did was in a ſudden affray in the heat of blood, and through the violence of paſſion; for he who carries his reſentment ſo high as not only to execute his revenge againſt thoſe who have affronted him, but even againſt ſuch as have no otherwiſe offended him but by doing their duty, and endeavouring to reſtrain him from breaking through his, ſhews ſuch an obſtinate contempt contempt of the law, that he is no more to be favoured than if he had acted in cool blood. 1 Hawk P. C. c. 31. § 44: H. P. C. 45, 50: 3 Inst. 52: Dalt. cap. 93: Savil 67: Kelynge 66: 22 Ass. 71: 4 Co. 40 b: 9 Co. 68: Crom. 25 a. b.

Yet it hath been resolved, that if the third person slain in such a sudden affray, do not give notice for what purpose he comes, by commanding the parties in the King's name to keep the peace, or otherwise manifestly shewing his intention to be not to take part in the quarrel, but to appease it, he who kills him is guilty of manslaughter only, for he might suspect that he came to side with his adversary. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 45: Kelynge 66. If the officer be within his proper district, and known, or but generally acknowledged to have the office he assumeth, the law will presume that the party killed had due notice of his intent, especially if it be in the day time. Fost. 135, 311.

As to such killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, where the principal design is to commit a bare breach of the peace, not intended against the person of him who happens to be slain; it seems clear that where divers persons resolve generally to resist all opposers in the commission of any such breach of the peace, and to execute it in such a manner as naturally tends to raise tumults and affrays; as by committing a violent disseisin with great numbers of people, hunting in a park, &c. and in so doing happen to kill a man, they are all guilty of murder; for they must at their peril abide the event of their actions, who wilfully engage in such bold disturbances of the public peace, in open opposition to, and defiance of, the justice of the nation. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 46: Savil 67: Moore 86: Palm. 35: Crom. 24 b. 25 a: H. P. C. 47: 5 Mod. 285: Dyer 128. pl. 60: S. P. C. 17 b.

The fact however must appear to have been committed strictly in prosecution of the purpose for which the party was assembled. Prin. P. L. 234:—Therefore if divers persons be engaged in an unlawful act, and one of them with malice prepense against one of his companions, finding an opportunity, kills him, the rest are not concerned in the guilt of that act. Kely. 112: because it hath no connection with the crime in contemplation. Prin. P. L. 235.—So where two men were beating another man in the street, a stranger made some observations upon the cruelty of the act, upon which one of the two men gave him a mortal stab with a knife. Both the men were indicted as principals in the murder, yet although both were doing an unlawful act in beating the man, as the death of the stranger did not ensue upon that act, and it appearing that only one of them intended any injury to the person killed, the judges were of opinion that he could not be guilty either as principal or accessary: and upon the case of R. v. Thompson, Kely. 66, 7, he was acquitted. 8 Mod. 164: 12 Mod. 629: Yet see 12 Mod. 256:—Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 31. § 46, in n.

Where divers rioters, having forcible possession of a house, afterwards killed the person whom they had ejected, as he was endeavouring in the night forcibly to regain the possession, and to fire the house, they were adjudged guilty of manslaughter only, notwithstanding they did the fact in maintenance of a deliberate injury; perhaps for this reason, because the person slain was so much in fault himself. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 47: Crom. 28 b: H. P. C. 56.

But if in such, or any other quarrel, whether it were sudden or premeditated, a justice of peace, constable or watchman, or even a private person, be slain in endeavouring to keep the peace, and suppress the affray, he who kills him is guilty of murder; for notwithstanding it was not his primary intention to commit a felony, yet inasmuch as he persists in a less offence with so much obstinacy as to go on in it to the hazard of the lives of those who no otherwise offend him, but by doing their duty in maintenance of the law, which therefore affords them its more immediate protection, he seems to be in this respect equally criminal, as if his intention had been to commit a felony. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 48: H. P. C. 45: Dalt. cap. 93: 3 Inst. 52: Kelyn. 66: 22 Ass. 71: 4 Co. 40 b: 9 Co. 68: Crom. 25. See supra.

If one attack another to rob him, and by the resistance of the party kills him, this is murder. 3 Inst. 52: Dalt. 344. A person stands by and encourages or commands another to murder a man; or if he come with others on purpose to kill him, and stand by while the other persons commit the fact: It will be murder in them all. Plowd. 98: 11 Rep. 5. And if two or more persons come together to do an unlawful act, as to beat a man, rob a park, &c. and one of them kills a person, this is murder in all present, aiding or assisting, or that were ready to aid and assist: All will be said to intend the murder. 3 Inst. 56: Dalt. 347: H. P. C. 31. And such persons will be judged to be present who are in the same house, though in another room, or in the same park, although half a mile off, &c. H. P. C. 47: Kel. 87, 116, 127. See tit. Accessary.

Several persons having conspired to enter the King's park, and to hunt and carry away deer, with design of killing any one that should oppose them; though the keeper's servant began the assault, and required them first to stand, whereupon they fled, and one of the keeper's men discharged a piece at them, and they continued their flight until he laid violent hands upon one of the offenders, and then, and not before, they killed one of the keeper's servants, this was held to be murder; as they were doing an unlawful act, the law implies malice, and they ought not to have fled, but to have surrendered themselves. Roll. Rep. 20.

As to such killing, as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, the principal motive whereof was to assist a third person; it seems clear, that if a master maliciously intending to kill another take his servants with him, without acquainting them with his purpose, and meet his adversary and fight with him, and the servants seeing their master engaged take part with him, and kill the other, they are guilty of manslaughter only, but the master of murder. Pl. Com. 100, 101 a: Crom. 23: Dalt. cap. 93: H. P. C. 51, 52: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 49—Though if the master have malice, and he tells his servants of it, and that his intention is to kill the party, and they go with the master, if they kill another, it is murder both in master and servant. Dy. 26: 9 Rep. 66: Plowd. 100.

And therefore it follows à fortiori, that if a man's servant or friend, or even a stranger, coming suddenly, see him fighting with another and side with him, and kill the other; or seeing his sword broken lend him another, wherewith he kills the other, he is guilty of manslaughter only. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 50: Crom. 26 b: H. P. C. 57: Dalt. cap. 94: 1 Rol. Rep. 407, 408: 3 Bulst. 206: H. P. C. 52.

Yet

Yet in this very caſe, if the perſon killed were a bailiff, or other officer of juſtice, reſiſted by the maſter, &c. in due execution of his duty, ſuch friend or ſervant, &c. are guilty of murder, whether they knew the perſon ſlain were an officer or not. Kelynge 67, 86, 87. But perhaps it may be objected, that in this laſt caſe there ſeems to be no more malice than in the former; and ſuch third perſon being wholly ignorant that the party killed was an officer, ſeems to be no more in fault than if he had been a private perſon. To this it may be anſwered, that all fighting is highly unlawful, and that he who on a ſudden ſeeing perſons engaged in it, is ſo far from endeavouring to part them, as every good Subject ought, that he takes part with one ſide, and fights in the quarrel, without knowing the cauſe of it, ſhews a high contempt of the laws, and a readineſs to break through them on a ſmall occaſion, and muſt at his peril take heed what he does; and conſequently might perhaps in ſtrict juſtice be adjudged in the foregoing caſes to act with malice, which doth not always ſignify a particular ill-will againſt the perſon killed, as appears by many of the above-mentioned caſes; and tho' ſuch perſons be favoured in reſpect of the ſuddenneſs of the occaſion where both the quarrel and the perſons are private, yet he muſt not expect ſuch indulgence, where the fight, in which he ſo raſhly engages, was begun in oppoſition to the juſtice of the nation, and a perſon happens to be killed thereby who engaged in maintenance thereof, and on that account is under its more particular care; and it may be juſtly challenged, that his oppoſers be made examples to deter others from joining in ſuch unwarrantable quarrels. 1 Sid. 160: Noy 50: Plow. Com. 100.—See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 51-53.

But if a man ſeeing another arreſted, and reſtrained from his liberty, under colour of a 'preſs-warrant or civil proceſs, &c. by thoſe who in truth have no ſuch authority, happen to kill ſuch treſpaſſers' in reſcuing the perſon oppreſſed, he ſhall be adjudged guilty of manſlaughter only, notwithſtanding the injured perſon ſubmitted to them, and endeavoured not to reſcue himſelf; and the perſon who reſcued him, did not know that he was illegally arreſted; for ſince in the event it appears, that the perſons ſlain were treſpaſſers, covering their violence with a ſhew of juſtice, he who kills them is indulged by the law, which in theſe caſes judges by the event, which thoſe who engage in ſuch unlawful actions muſt abide at their peril. Kelynge 66, 137: Crom. 27 a, Dent's caſe: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 54.—But the principles upon which this caſe was determined, are very elegantly and warmly controverted by Mr. Juſtice Foſter, p. 315—318.

There were two men in an inner chamber, quarrelling, and together by the ears; a brother of one of them ſtanding at the door, that could not get in, cried to his brother to make him ſure, and preſently after he gave the other a mortal wound; this was held manſlaughter in him that ſtood at the door. Shep. Abr. 493.

As to ſuch killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, whereof the direct deſign was to eſcape from an arreſt, it ſeems to be agreed that whoever kills a ſheriff, or any of his officers, in the lawful execution of civil proceſs, as on arreſting a perſon upon a capias, &c. is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 55: Dalt. cap. 93: H. P. C. 45: Crom. 24 a.

Neither is it any excuſe to ſuch a perſon, that the proceſs was erroneous, (for it is not void by being ſo,) or that the arreſt was in the night, or that the officer did not tell him for what cauſe he arreſted him, and out of what court, (which is not neceſſary when prevented by the party's reſiſtance): or that the officer did not ſhew his warrant, which he is not bound to do at all, if he be a bailiff commonly known, nor without a demand, if he be a ſpecial one. 9 Co. 66, 68: Cro. Jac. 280, 486: 6 Co. 68 b: 69 a: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 56.

Yet the killing of an officer in ſome caſes will be manſlaughter only; as, where the warrant by which he acts gives him no authority to arreſt the party; as where a bailiff arreſts J. S. a baronet, who never was knighted; by force of a warrant to arreſt J. S. knight. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. §. 57: Cro. Car. 372: 1 Jon. 346: 12 Co. 49. So where a good warrant is executed in an unlawful manner; as if a bailiff be killed in breaking open a door or window to arreſt a man; or perhaps if he arreſt one on a Sunday ſince ſtat. 29 Car. 2. cap. 7. by which all ſuch arreſts are made unlawful. H. P. C. 46: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 58.

If a bailiff is killed in executing a lawful warrant, &c. it is murder: Nor is it any excuſe to the perſon, that the proceſs was erroneous; or that the arreſt was in the night; that the officer did not tell him for what cauſe he arreſted him; or that he did not ſhew his warrant, &c. being a bailiff commonly known. 9 Rep. 68, 69: Cro. Jac. 280, 486. But if a bailiff who is not executing his office is killed, it is not murder; for he ought to be duly executing his office, by ſerving the proceſs of the law, wherein he is aſſiſted cum poteſtate Regis & Legis. Cro. Car. 537: 2 Lill. Abr. 212. Therefore where the warrant by which he acts gives him no authority to arreſt the party; as where a bailiff arreſts a wrong perſon, or J. S. a baronet, by force of a warrant to arreſt J. S. knight; or if a good warrant is executed in an unlawful manner; as if a bailiff be killed in breaking open a door, or window, to arreſt a man; or perhaps if he arreſt one on a Sunday; ſince the ſtat. 29 Car. 2. c. 7, by which all ſuch arreſts are made unlawful, and he is ſlain; malice ſhall not be implied to make it murder, but it ſhall be manſlaughter only. H. P. C. 46: Cro. Car. 372: 12 Rep. 49: 1 Hawk. c. 31. § 58. If bailiffs come to a houſe to arreſt a perſon, and the houſe being locked they attempt to break in, whereupon the ſon of the perſon intended to be arreſted, ſhoots and kills one of them, it is not murder. Jones 429: See Foſter's Rep. 135, 138. 270, 308, 312, 318, 321.

A perſon was arreſted, and another not knowing the cauſe of the ſtruggle, but ſeeing ſwords drawn, and to prevent miſchief, came and defended the party arreſted, and in the ſcuffle the bailiff was killed; it was reſolved to be no murder in the perſon doing it, but that all that were preſent and aſſiſting, knowing of the arreſt, were principal murderers. Kel. 86. Though it has been held in ſuch a caſe, that the perſon offending is guilty of murder, whether he knew that the perſon ſlain were an officer or not; for all fighting is unlawful, and he who, ſeeing perſons engaged in it, takes part with one ſide, and fights in the quarrel without knowing the cauſe of it, eſpecially where the fight is begun in oppoſition to the juſtice of the nation, ſhews a readineſs to break through the laws on a ſmall occaſion, and muſt at his peril take heed what he doth. 1 Sid. 160: Noy 50. See ante.

As to ſuch killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, whereof the principal purpoſe was to uſurp an illegal illegal authority; it seems clear, that if persons take upon them to put others to death, either by virtue of a new commission wholly unknown to our laws, or by virtue of an unknown jurisdiction, which clearly extends not to cases of this nature; as if the court of Common Pleas cause a man to be executed for treason or felony; or the Court Martial, in time of peace, put a man to death by the martial law, both the judges and officers are guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 59: H. P. C. 46.

But where persons act by virtue of a commission, which, if it were strictly regular, would undoubtedly give them full authority, but which happens to be defective only in some point of form; it seems that they are no way criminal. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 60.

As to such killing as happens in the execution of an unlawful action, where no mischief was intended at all, it is said, that if a person happen to occasion the death of another, in doing any idle wanton action, which cannot but be attended with the manifest danger of some other; as by riding with a horse known to be used to kick among a multitude of people, by which he means no more than to divert himself by putting them in a fright, he is guilty of murder. 1 Hawk. 87.

It has been already mentioned to have been anciently holden, that if a person not duly authorized to be a physician or surgeon, undertake a cure, and the patient die under his hand, he is guilty of felony; but in as much as the books wherein this opinion is holden were written before the statute of 23 H. 8. c. 1, which first excluded such felonious killing, as may be called wilful murder or malice prepense, from the benefit of clergy, it may be well questioned, whether such killing shall be said to be of malice prepense, within the intent of that statute; however, it is certainly highly rash and presumptuous for unskilful persons to undertake matters of this nature; and indeed the law cannot be well too severe in this case, in order to deter ignorant people from endeavouring to get a livelihood by such practice, which cannot be followed without the manifest hazard of the lives of those who have to do with them: but surely the charitable endeavours of those gentlemen who study to qualify themselves to give advice of this kind, in order to assist their poor neighbours, can by no means deserve so severe a construction from their happening to fall into some mistakes in their prescriptions, from which the most learned and experienced cannot always be secure. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 31 § 62: S. P. C. 16 b: Pult. 32 b: Crom. 27: 43 Ed. 3. 33 b: Fitz. Coron. 163. See Dalt. cap. 93.

It were endless to go through all the cases of Homicide which have been adjudged either expressly or impliedly, malicious: the above therefore may suffice as a pretty ample specimen: and we may make it for a general rule that all Homicide is malicious and of course amounts to murder, unless where, 1. justified by the command or permission of the law; 2. excused on the account of accident or self-preservation; or 3. alleviated into manslaughter, by being either the involuntary consequence of some act, not strictly lawful, or (if voluntary) occasioned by some sudden and sufficiently violent provocation. And all these circumstances of justification, excuse, or alleviation, it is incumbent upon the prisoner to make out, to the satisfaction of the court and jury: the latter of whom are to decide whether the circumstances alleged are proved to have actually existed; the former, how far they extend to take away or mitigate the guilt. For all Homicide is presumed to be malicious, until the contrary appeareth upon evidence. Foft. 255.

The punishment of murder, and that of manslaughter were formerly one and the same; both having the benefit of clergy: so that none but unlearned persons, who least knew the guilt of it, were put to death for this enormous crime. 1 Hal. P. C. 450. But by several statutes the benefit of clergy is taken away from murderers through malice prepense, their abettors, procurers, and counsellors. See Stats. 23 Hen. 8. c. 12: 1 Ed. 6. c. 12: 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 4. And tit. Clergy, Benefit of.

The Principal in murder is therefore now ousted of clergy in all cases, and the Accessary before is also ousted of clergy in all cases, but the Accessary after is in no case ousted of clergy. 2 Hale's H. 344.

In atrocious cases, it was frequently usual for the court to direct the murderer, after execution to be hung upon a gibbet in chains near the place where the fact was committed: but this was no part of the legal judgment; and the like is still sometimes practised in the case of notorious thieves. But now in England, it is enacted by stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 37, that the Judge before whom any person is found guilty of wilful murder, shall pronounce sentence immediately after conviction, unless he sees cause to postpone it; and shall in passing sentence direct him to be executed on the next day but one (unless the same shall be Sunday, and then on the Monday following) and that his body be delivered to the surgeons to be dissected and anatomized; and that the Judge may direct his body to be afterwards hung in chains, but in no wise to be buried without dissection. See Foft. 107. And during the short but awful interval between sentence and execution the prisoner shall be kept alone, and sustained only with bread and water. But a power is allowed to the Judge upon good and sufficient cause to respite the execution and relax the other restraints of the act. See tit. Execution of Criminals.

At a meeting of the Judges to consider of this act there was some doubt whether hanging in chains might ever be made part of the sentence; but on debate it was agreed by nine judges, that in all cases within the act, the judgment for dissecting and anatomizing only should be part of the sentence, and if it should be thought adviseable, the judge might afterwards direct the hanging in chains by special order to the sheriff, pursuant to the power given by the act. Foft. 107.

4. By the Roman law Parricide, or the murder of one's parents or children, was punished in a much severer manner than any other kind of Homicide. But the English laws treat it no otherwise than as simple murder, unless the child was also the servant of his parent; probably under the idea of the impossibility of committing so enormous a crime.

But though the breach of natural relation is unobserved, yet the breach of civil or ecclesiastical connections, when coupled with murder denominates it a new offence, no less than a species of treason, called parva proditio, or Petit Treason: which is however nothing else but an aggravated degree of murder; although, on account of the violation of private allegiance, it is stigmatized as an inferior species of treason. And thus, in the antient Gothic constitution, we find the breach both of natural and civil relations ranked in the same class with crimes against the State and Sovereign.

PETIT

PETIT TREASON, according to the ſtat. 25 E. 3. c. 2, may happen three ways: by a ſervant killing his maſter, a wife her huſband, or an eccleſiaſtical perſon (either ſecular or regular,) his ſuperior, to whom he owes faith and obedience. A ſervant who kills his maſter whom he has left upon a grudge conceived againſt him during his ſervice, is guilty of petit treaſon, for the traiterous intention was hatched while the relation ſubſiſted between them, and this is only an execution of that intention. 1 Hawk. P. C. 89: 1 Hal. P. C. 380. So if a wife be divorced à menſa et thoro, ſtill the vinculum matrimonii ſubſiſts; and if ſhe kills ſuch divorced huſband, ſhe is a traitreſs. 1 Hal. P. C. 381.

A wife divorced cauſâ adulterii vel ſævitiæ, is ſtill within this law, becauſe the bond of matrimony is not thereby diſſolved, and ſhe may again lawfully cohabit with her huſband. But a divorce cauſâ conſanguinitatis vel pre-contractûs, entirely diſſolves the nuptial tie, and annihilates the very character of wife.—Therefore a wife de facto only, and not de jure cannot commit this crime, for ſhe has no lawful lord to whom ſhe owes ſubjection and obedience.—Neither can a huſband be guilty of this crime by killing his wife de jure, for there is no reciprocity of obedience and ſubjection.—Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 32. § 7.

A clergyman is underſtood to owe canonical obedience to the biſhop who ordained him, to him in whoſe dioceſe he is beneficed, and alſo to the metropolitan of ſuch ſuffragan or dioceſan biſhop; and therefore to kill any of theſe is petit treaſon. 1 Hal. P. C. 381. As to the reſt, whatever has been ſaid, or remains to be obſerved, with reſpect to wilful murder, is alſo applicable to the crime of petit treaſon, which is no other than murder in it's moſt odious degree: except that the trial ſhall be as in caſes of high treaſon, before the improvements therein made by the ſtatutes of William 3. Foſt. 337. But a perſon indicted of petit treaſon may be acquitted thereof, and found guilty of manſlaughter or murder. Foſt. 106: 1 Hal. P. C. 378: 2 Hal. P. C. 184; and in ſuch caſe it ſhould ſeem that two witneſſes are not neceſſary, as in caſe of petit treaſon they are. Which crime is alſo diſtinguiſhed from murder in it's puniſhment. 4 Comm. c. 14.

An appeal of death will lie, and autrefoits acquit or attaint in murder is a good bar, in petit treaſon; and è converſo. 2 Hale 246, 253: 3 Inſt. 213. It is included in a pardon under the name of murder. 1 Hal. 378. And the offender may be indicted either for petit treaſon, murder or manſlaughter, and tried and found guilty on ſuch indictment, of either of thoſe crimes reſpectively, according as the caſe may appear upon the evidence. 1 Hal. 378: Foſter 326.—But if the proſecutor be appriſed of the real caſe, he ought to adapt the bill to the truth of the fact. Foſt. 104, 326. For though the offences are to moſt purpoſes conſidered as ſubſtantially the ſame, yet there is, as we have ſeen, ſome difference with regard to the judgment; and alſo a very material one with regard to the trial. Foſt. 327.—On the trial the priſoner is entitled to a peremptory challenge of thirty five. Foſt. 327.—Two witneſſes, it is alſo poſitively ſtated, by Foſter, are required both on the indictment and at the trial. Foſt. 337: See ſtat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12: And the ſtat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 11, by general words extending to all treaſons, requireth that the witneſſes, if living, ſhall be examined in perſon upon the trial in open court. Depoſitions therefore taken before the coroner, or informations taken by a juſtice of the peace, are not evidence whereon to ground a conviction of petty treaſon, if the party be living, though unable to travel, or kept out of the way by the priſoner, or his procurement. Foſt. 337. cites ſtat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13: 1 Hale 305: 2 Hale 284.

The puniſhment of petit treaſon, in a man, is to be drawn and hanged, and in a woman was formerly to be drawn and burned, but which latter ſentence is now changed to hanging by ſtat. 30 Geo. 3. c. 48. See title Judgment in criminal caſes. Perſons guilty of petit treaſon were firſt debarred the benefit of clergy by ſtat. 12 H. 7. c. 7, which has been ſince extended to their aiders, abettors, and counſellors, by ſtat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 1: 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 4. See title Clergy Benefit of.

HOMINATIO. Domeſday, tit. Northampton Sockmanni de Riſden.—The muſtering of men; alſo the doing of homage. Cowell edit. 1727.

HOMINE CAPTO IN WITHERNAMIUM. A writ to take him that hath taken any bondman or woman, and led him or her out of the country, ſo that he or ſhe cannot be replevied according to law. Reg. Orig. fol. 79. See this Dict. tit. Withernam.

HOMINE ELIGENDO AD CUSTODIENDAM PECIAM SIGILLI PRO MERCATORIBUS EDITI. A writ directed to a corporation, for the choice of a new perſon to keep one part of the ſeal appointed for Statutes merchant, when a former is dead, according to the ſtatute of Acton-Burnel. Reg. Orig. 178.

HOMINE REPLEGIANDO. A writ to bail a man out of priſon: F. N. B. fol. 6: Reg. Orig. fol. 77.

This writ lies where a perſon is in priſon, (not by ſpecial commandment of the King, or his Judges, or for any crime or cauſe irrepleviſable,) directed to the ſheriff to cauſe him to be replevied: in the ſame manner that chattels taken in diſtreſs may be replevied; and if the perſon be conveyed out of the ſheriff's juriſdiction, he may return, that the defendant hath eſſoined the plaintiff's body, ſo that he cannot deliver him; then the plaintiff ſhall have a capias in withernam to take the defendant's body, and keep him without bail or mainprize till he produces the party. 3 Comm. 129. c. 8. And if the ſheriff return non eſt inventus in that writ againſt the body, the plaintiff ſhall have a capias againſt the defendant's goods, &c.. F. N. B. 66: New Nat. Br. 151, 152.

Where one takes away ſecretly, or keeps in his cuſtody another man againſt his will, upon oath made thereof, and a petition to the Lord Chancellor, he will grant a writ of replegiari facias, with an alias and pluries, upon which the ſheriff returns an elongatus, and thereupon iſſues out a capias in withernam: and when the party is taken, the ſheriff cannot take bail for him; but the court where the writ is returnable may, if they think fit, grant a habeas corpus to the ſheriff to bring him into court and bail him. 2 Lill. 23.

In a Homine replegiando it hath been adjudged, that it doth not differ from a common replevin, on which the ſheriff muſt return a deliberari feci, or an excuſe why he doth not: that where he cannot make deliverance, if he return an elongatus, the defendant is not concluded by that return return to plead non cepit: and after the return of an elongatus, and a capias in withernam, if the defendant pleads this plea, he ſhall be bailed, for the withernam is no execution: and after a defendant is bailed upon the capias in withernam, there may be a new withernam againſt him. And it was held, that in a homine replegiando after an elongatus returned, if the defendant comes in gratis, and calls for a declaration, and pleads non cepit, he ſhall not be obliged to give bail, but if he come in upon the return of the capias, he muſt give bail, and ſhall not be admitted to it till he call for a declaration, and plead non cepit. 2 Salk. 381.

The ſheriff returned an elongavit in a homine replegiando, and then a capias in withernam went forth; afterwards the defendant, having entered an appearance, moved for a ſuperſedeas to the withernam, and offered to plead non cepit; which was oppoſed, unleſs he would give bail to deliver the perſon, in caſe the iſſue was found againſt him: though it was ruled, that if any property had been pleaded in the party then the defendant ought to give bail to deliver him; but he ſays he hath not the perſon, and therefore non cepit is a proper plea, and he ſhall put in bail to appear de die in diem. In this caſe the defendant ſhall not be compelled to gage deliverance; and a ſuperſedeas was granted to the withernam. See 4 Mod. 183.

A homine replegiando cannot be brought either by the wife herſelf, or by her prochein amy againſt her huſband; and the nature and proceedings in the writ ſhew it to be ſo. Ch. Prec. 492.

This writ is now ſeldom uſed to deliver a perſon out of cuſtody, being ſuperſeded by the more beneficial effects of the writ of Habeas Corpus. See that title.

HOMINES; A term applied to a ſort of feudatory tenants, who claimed a privilege of having their cauſes and perſons tried only in the court of their lord: and when Gerard de Canvil, Anno 5 R. 1, was charged with treaſon and other miſdemeanors, he pleaded that he was Homo comitis Johannis, &c. and would ſtand to the law and juſtice of his court. Paroch. Antiq. 152.

HOMIPLAGIUM; Is uſed in the laws of Hen. 1. cap. 80, for the maiming a man. Si quis in domo vel curia Regis fecerit homicidium vel homiplagium.

HOMO. This Latin word includes both man and woman, in a large or general underſtanding. 2 Inſt. 45.

HOMSTALE. A home-ſtall, or manſion-houſe. As in a charter granted about the 5 Ed. I. Cowell.

HOND-HABEND, See Hand-habend. It alſo ſignifies the right which the lord hath of determining the offence in his court.

HONEY. All veſſels of honey are to be marked with the name of the owner, and be of a certain content, under penalties; and if any honey ſold, be corrupted with any deceitful mixture, the ſeller ſhall forfeit the honey, &c. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 8.

HONOUR, Is, beſides the general ſignification, uſed eſpecially for the more noble ſort of Seigniories, on which other inferior Lordſhips or Manors depend, by performance of ſome cuſtoms or ſervices to thoſe who are lords of them; (though anciently honor and baronia ſignified the ſame thing.) See Spelman, in v. Honor. The manner of creating theſe Honours by act of parliament, may in part be collected out of the ſtatute of 33 Hen. 8. cc. 37, 38.

In the early times of our legal conſtitution, the King's greater barons, who had a large extent of territory held under the crown, granted out frequently ſmaller manors to inferior perſons to be holden of themſelves; which do now therefore continue to be holden under a ſuperior lord, who is called in ſuch caſes the lord paramount over all theſe manors: and his ſeignory is frequently termed an Honour, not a manor; eſpecially if it hath belonged to an ancient feodal baron, or hath at any time been in the hands of the crown. 2 Comm. 91. c. 6. See title Tenure.

An Honour ought to conſiſt of lands, liberties, and franchiſes. 1 Bulſt. 197: 2 Rol. 72. l. 48. And it is the moſt noble ſeigniory. Co. Lit. 108 a. One or more manors may be parcel of an Honour. 2 Rol. 72. l. 45. So a foreſt may be appendant to it. 2 Rol. 73. l. 3.

An Honour originally ſhall be created by the King. Co. Lit. 108 a. Every Honour muſt be holden of the King. R. 1 Bul. 195. And if it be aſſigned, or granted over to another, it ſhall not be holden of a Subject. For it may be granted by the King to a Subject. A man may claim an Honour by grant, or by preſcription. But the King at this day cannot make an Honour by grant, without an act of parliament. R. 1 Bul. 195, 196: Co. Lit. 108 a. See Cowell title Honour.

The following is a liſt of Honours within the realm, viz. Ampthill, (by Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 37.) Aquila, (formerly Pevenſey) Arundel, (See poſt) Abergavenny, Boloine, Berkhamſtead, Beaulieu, Barnard's Caſtle, Bullingbroke, Barſtable, Bonenia, Brecknock, Brember, Bedford, Clare, Crevecure, Clun, Chriſtchurch, Cockermouth, Cormayls, Candicut, Cariſbrook, Clifford Caſtle, Cheſter, Carmarthen, and Cardigan, Donnington Caſtle, (by ſtat. 37 H. 8. c. 18,)—Dudley, and Dover Caſtle, Eye, and Egremond.

The Honour of Eaſt and Weſt Greenwich, Glamorgan, Gloceſter, Grentmeſnil, Gower, Grafton, (by ſtat. 33 H. 8. c. 38,)—Haganet, Hampton Court, (by ſtat. 31 H. 8. c. 5,)—Huntindon, (in Herefordſhire) Hevenyngham, Hawenden-Caſtle, Hertford, and Halton, Lancaſter, Lincoln, Leiceſter, Lovetot, Hinckley, Kingſton upon Hull, (by ſtat. 37 H. 8. c. 18.)—Kington, and Folkingham.

The Honour of Montgomery, Mowbray, Middleham, and Maidſtone, Nottingham, Newelbn or Newelme, Oakhampton, St. Oſith, (by ſtat. 37 H. 8. c. 18,)—Oxford.

The Honour of Plimpton, Peverel, Pickering, Raleigh, Richard's Caſtle, Skipton, Stafford, Strigul, Tickhil, Tremanton, Totneſs, Theony, Tamworth.

The Honour of Wigmore, Wallingford, Weſtminſter (by ſtat. 37 H. 8. c. 18,)—Windſor, Wormgay, Whirwelton, (in Yorkſhire) Werk, Whitchurch, and Warwick, Webley, and Tutbury.

The King granted to a Subject a great manor, called an Honour, and paſſed it by the name of an Honour, and well. Jenk. 277. pl. 99.

It is illegal to purchaſe honour (as a dukedom) for money. Vern. 5. See title Peers.

At this day the Earl of Arundel only hath his Earldom by preſcription, the beginning of which is not within the memory of any one; ſo that his Earldom is the moſt ancient in the realm. 1 Bulſt. 196.—See title Peers.

HONOUR-COURTS, Are courts held within the honours, or manors laſt noticed, mentioned in the ſtat. 33 Hen. 8. cap. 37. There is alſo a Court of Honour of the Earl Marſhal of England, &c. which determines diſputes concerning precedency and points of Honour. 2 Hawk. P. C. This court of Honour, which is alſo exerciſed to do juſtice to Heralds, is a court by preſcription, and has a priſon belonging to it, called the White Lyon in Southwark. 2 Nelſ. 935. See title Court of Chivalry.

HONOURARY (or HONORARY) FEUDS, Are titles of nobility, descendible to the eldest son in exclusion of all the rest. See title Tenures.

HONOURARY SERVICES, Are those that are incident to the tenure of Grand Sergeanty, and commonly annexed to some honour. Stat. 12 Car. 2. 29.

HONTFONGENETHEF. Cum omnibus aliis libertatibus tantummodo hontfongenethef mihi retento.—Charta Wil. Comitis Mateſialſci. In Mon. Angl. 1 par. fo. 724.

This should have been written hondfangenethef, and signifies a thief, taken with hondhabend, i. e. having the thing stolen in his hand. Cowell.—See Backberind.

HOPCON, Signifies a valley, in Domesday Book; so do hope, hawgh and howgh. Cowell. edit. 1727.

HOPS AND HOP-BINDS. Penalty on importing or using corrupt hops, stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 18.—No bitter to be used in brewing but hops, Stat. 9 Ann. c. 12. § 24.—No hops to be imported into Ireland from other parts but Great Britain, Stat. 5 G. 2. c. 9.—Landing foreign hops before duty paid, hops to be burnt, and ship forfeited, Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 19.—Penalty on sophisticating hops, 7 Geo. 2. c. 19. sect. 2.—Cutting hop-binds, 10 Geo. 2. c. 32. sect. 4.—By Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 37. sect. 6, Unlawfully and maliciously cutting hop-binds is made felony without benefit of clergy.—The duty upon hops is a branch of the Excise and regulated by many statutes made for the purpose.

HORA AURORÆ, The morning bell, or what we now call the four o'clock bell, was anciently called Hora Auroræ; as our eight o'clock bell, or the bell in the evening, was called Ignitegium or Coverfeu. Cowell.

HORDERA, from the Sax. Hord, Thesaurus.] A treasurer: and hence we have the word Hord or Hoard, as used for treasuring or laying up a thing. Leg. Adelstan. cap. 2.

HORDERIUM, A hoard, a treasury, or repository. L. Canuti, c. 104.

HORDEUM PALMALE. Beer-barley, which in Norfolk is called sprat-barley, and battledore-barley; and in the marches of Wales cymridge, it being broader in the ear, and more like a band than the common barley, which in old deeds is called Hordeum quadragesimale. Cowell.

HORNE-BEAME POLLENGERS. Trees so called, that have been usually lopped, and are about twenty years growth, and therefore not tithable. Plowden, fol. 407: Soby's case.

HORNEGELD, from the Saxon word horn, cornu, and geld, solutio.] A tax within a forest, to be paid for horned beasts. Cromp. Jurisd. 197. And to be free thereof is a privilege granted by the King unto such as he thinketh good. Cowell, edit. 1727.

HORN WITH HORN, OR HORN UNDER HORN. The promiscuous feeding of bulls and cows, or all horned beasts, that are allowed to run together upon the same common. Spelman. To which may be added, that the commoning of cattle horn with horn, was properly when the inhabitants of several parishes let their common herds run upon the same open spacious common, that lay within the bounds of several parishes, and therefore, that there might be no dispute upon the right of tithes, the bishop ordains, that the cows should pay all profit to the minister of the parish where the owner lived, &c. Cowell.

HORNAGIUM. Horngeld; See that title.

HORNERS. No stranger was to buy any English horns gathered or growing in London, or within twenty-four miles thereof, by the Stat. 4 Ed. 4. c. 8. And none may sell English horns unwrought to any stranger, or send them beyond sea, on pain of forfeiting double value: the wardens of Horners in London may search all wares, &c. stat. 7 Jac. 1. cap. 14. See title London.

HORS DE SON FEE, Fr. i. e. out of his fee.] An exception to avoid an action brought for rent or services, &c. issuing out of land, by him that pretends to be the lord; for if the defendant can prove that the land is without the compass of his fee, the action falls. Broke. In an avowry, a stranger may plead generally hors de son fee; and so may tenant for years: and such stranger to the avowry, being made a party, is at liberty to plead any matter in abatement of it. 9 Rep. 30: 2 Mod. 104. A tenant in fee-simple ought either to disclaim, or plead Hors de son fee. 1 Danv. Abr. 655: Vide 9 Rep; Bucknal's case, 22 Hen. 6. 2, 3: Keilw. 73, 14: Aff. pl. 13: Co. Lit. 1 b: 2 Mod. 103, 104; & 14 Vin. Abr. tit. Hors de son fee. See title Pleading.

HORSE-BREAD, Inn-keepers shall not make horse-bread. Statutes. 13 Ric. 2. stat. 1. c. 8: 4 Hen. 4. c. 25. Permitted to bake horse-bread, Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 41.

HORSES.

Were not to be conveyed out of the realm, without the King's licence, &c. on pain of forfeiture, by an ancient statute, 11 H. 7. c. 13. Persons having lands of inheritance in parks, &c. were ordered to keep two mares apt to bear foals thirteen hands high, for the increase of the breed of horses, on pain of 40*s.* for every month they are wanting; and not suffer them to be leaped by stoned horses under fourteen hands, on a certain penalty by stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 6. And for the preservation of a strong breed of Horses, stone-horses above two years old are directed to be fifteen hands high, or they shall not be put into forests or commons, where mares are kept, upon pain of forfeiture; and scabbed or infected Horses shall not be put into common fields, under the penalty of 10*s.* leviable by the Lord of the leet. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 13; still in force.

Stealing of any horse, gelding, or mare, is felony without benefit of clergy; but accessaries to this offence are not excluded clergy. stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12: 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 33. The first made stealing horses geldings or mares felony; a doubt was entertained whether this extended to the stealing one horse, &c. on which the latter act was passed. And if any Horse that is stolen be not sold according to the statute 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 7; the owner may take the Horse again wherever he finds him, or have action of detinue, &c. To prevent Horses being stolen and sold in private places, this stat. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 7, provides, that owners of fairs and markets shall appoint toll-takers or book-keepers, who are to enter the names of buyers and sellers of Horses, &c. And to alter the property, the Horses must be rid or stand in the open fair one hour; and all the parties to the contract must be present with the Horse.—And by stat. 31 Eliz. cap. 12, sellers of Horses are to procure vouchers of the sale to them; and the names of the buyer, seller and voucher, and price of the Horse are to be entered in the toll taker's book, and a note thereof delivered to the buyer; and if any person shall ſhall ſell a Horſe without being known to the book-keeper, or bringing a voucher; or if any one ſhall vouch without knowing the ſeller: or the book-keeper ſhall make an entry without knowing either, in either of theſe caſes the ſale is void, and a forfeiture is incurred of 5 l. and the ſaid ſtatute provides that a Horſe ſtolen, though ſold according to the direction of the act, may be redeemed and taken by the owner within ſix months, repaying the buyer what he ſhall ſwear he gave for the ſame.

By ſtat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 7, Any perſon maliciouſly killing or deſtroying any horſes in the night ſhall be guilty of felony, puniſhable by tranſportation for ſeven years.—Maliciouſly hurting or wounding horſes in the night, to forfeit treble damages to the owner.

Duties are impoſed by ſtats. 24 Geo. 3. ſt. 2. c. 31: 25 Geo. 3. c. 47: 29 Geo. 3. c. 49, or perſons keeping Horſes to ride or draw in a carriage.—Theſe are now 10 s. for one horſe;—5 s. additional (i. e. in the whole 15 s.) for a ſecond horſe;—7 s. 6 d. additional (i. e. 17 s. 6 d.) each for a third, fourth and fifth horſe; and where ſix or more are kept 20 s. for each except the firſt.—The ſtat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 79, excepts Horſes bona fide uſed in huſbandry, trade, and on particular occaſions only; ſuch as going to church, or market, or election for a member of parliament, &c. The ſaid ſtat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 31, allows horſe dealers to be exempted from the tax on taking out an annual licenſe paying 10 l. in London, &c. and 5 l. elſewhere.—As to poſt horſes and the duty on them, See title Poſt.—As to Horſes in Hackney Coaches. See title Coach.

Horſe-ſtealing having got to a great pitch, and many of thoſe uſeful animals having been ſtolen, merely for the purpoſe of ſelling them as dogs meat, and for their hides, the following ſtatute was made to put a ſtop to this iniquitous traffick.

By Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 71, No perſon ſhall keep any place for ſlaughtering any horſe or other cattle, not killed, for butcher's meat, without taking out a licence at the general quarter ſeſſions, to be granted upon a certificate of the miniſter and churchwardens that the perſon applying is proper to be truſted with the carrying on ſuch buſineſs. § 1.

Such licence to be ſigned by the Juſtices at ſeſſions, and a copy entered in a book to be kept for that purpoſe by the clerk of the peace, and all perſons ſo licenſed ſhall cauſe to be painted over their gates, their name and the words "licenſed for ſlaughtering Horſes purſuant to an act paſſed in the 26th year of his Majeſty King George III." § 2.

Every occupier of ſuch licenſed ſlaughter-houſe ſhall, ſix hours previous to the ſlaughtering any live horſe, or to the flaying any horſe brought dead to the ſlaughtering houſe, give notice in writing to the after-mentioned inſpector, who is to take an exact account of the height, age, colour and particular marks of every horſe, &c. and keep the ſame in a book. [ſee ſect. 5.] And no ſuch Horſe ſhall be ſlaughtered or flay'd but between 8 in the morning and 4 in the evening, from October to March, both incluſive, and between 6 in the morning and 8 in the evening from April to September both incluſive. § 3.

Every perſon ſo licenſed ſhall at the time any horſe, &c. ſhall be brought, make an entry in a book of the name and abode, and profeſſion of the owner, and alſo of the perſon who ſhall bring the ſame to be ſlaughtered or flayed and the reaſon why the ſame is ſo brought; which book ſhall, at all times be open for the examination of the inſpector, and produced before any juſtice, when required. § 4.

The pariſhioners in veſtry ſhall annually or oftner appoint one or more perſons to be inſpectors of ſuch ſlaughtering houſe: And in caſe ſuch inſpector ſhall upon examination of any Horſe, &c. intended to be ſlaughtered believe that ſuch Horſe, &c. is free from diſeaſe, and in a ſound and ſerviceable ſtate, or that the ſame has been ſtolen, he ſhall prohibit the ſlaughtering ſuch Horſe, &c. for not exceeding 8 days; and in the mean time ſhall cauſe an advertiſement to be inſerted in ſome public newſpaper twice or oftner (unleſs the owner of ſuch Horſe ſhall ſooner claim the ſame) at the expence of the occupier of ſuch ſlaughtering houſe; who on refuſal to pay the ſame, ſhall forfeit double the amount, to be raiſed by diſtreſs. § 5.

Every inſpector may at all times in the day or night, but if in the night, then in the preſence of a conſtable, enter into and inſpect any place kept for ſlaughtering horſes by licenſed perſons, and take an account of the Horſes, &c. there. § 6.

In caſe any perſon offering to ſale or bringing any Horſe, &c. to be ſlaughtered or flayed ſhall refuſe to give an account of himſelf, or of the means the ſame came into his poſſeſſion, or if there be reaſon to ſuſpect that ſuch Horſe, &c. is ſtolen; ſuch perſon ſhall be carried before a juſtice of peace, who ſhall commit him for not more than 6 days to be further examined, and if ſuch juſtice ſhall be ſatisfied that ſuch Horſe, &c. is ſtolen, the perſon bringing the ſame is to be committed to gaol to be dealt with according to law. § 7.

Any perſon keeping ſuch ſlaughtering houſe tranſgreſſing the rules before laid down by the act, ſhall be guilty of felony and puniſhed by fine and impriſonment, and ſuch corporal puniſhment by whipping, or ſhall be tranſported for not more than 7 years, as the court ſhall direct. § 8.

Any ſuch perſon deſtroying or defacing with lime, or burying the hide or ſkin of any horſe, &c. or being guilty of any offence againſt this act for which no puniſhment or penalty is provided ſhall be adjudged guilty of a miſdemeanor, and puniſhed by fine and impriſonment and ſuch corporal puniſhment by whipping, as the court ſhall direct. § 9.

Making falſe entries ſubjects the party to a forfeiture not exceeding 20 l. nor leſs than 10 l. to be levied by diſtreſs; half to the informer and half to the poor; and in caſe the offender ſhall not have effects to the amount of the penalty, he may be committed to hard labour in the houſe of correction for not more than 3 months, nor leſs than one. § 10.

The book of the inſpector ſhall be produced at every general quarter ſeſſions. § 12.

If any perſon ſhall occaſionally lend any barn or place for ſlaughtering any horſe, &c. without taking out ſuch licence he ſhall forfeit not more than 20 l. nor leſs than 10 l. half to the informer and half to the poor; or be committed to gaol for not more than 3 months nor leſs than 1, unleſs the penalty is ſooner paid. § 13.

This act does not extend to curriers, &c. nor to farriers, nor perſons killing Horſes, &c. to feed their own dogs. § 14.

If any currier, tanner, &c. ſhall under colour of their trades, knowingly kill any ſound horſe, or boil the fleſh thereof to ſell, ſuch tradeſman becomes an offender under the act, and ſhall forfeit not more than 20 l. nor leſs than 10 l. § 15.

[The forms of the ſeveral convictions are ſpecified in the act.]

HORSES HIRED, Action of treſpaſs on the caſe lies for abuſing a horſe hired, by immoderate riding, &c. And a difference has been made in our law between hiring a horſe, and borrowing one to go a journey: for in the firſt caſe the party may ſet his ſervant, &c. upon the horſe, but not in the ſecond. 1 Mod. 210. See title Bailment.

HORSES FOR THE KING'S SERVICE. None ſhall take the Horſe of any perſon to ſerve the King without the owner's conſent, or ſufficient warrant, on pain of impriſonment, &c. ſtat. 20 R. 2. c. 5.

HORSE-RACES, For ſmall ſums, having encouraged idleneſs, and impoveriſhed the meaner ſort of people; it is enacted, that no perſon ſhall run any horſe at a race, unleſs it be his own, nor enter more than one horſe for the ſame plate, upon pain of forfeiting the horſes; and no plate, is to be run for under 50 l. on the penalty of 500 l. Alſo every horſe race muſt be begun and ended in the ſame day, &c. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. cap. 19.

Horſes at races to be entered by the owners, 13 Geo. 2. c. 19. Horſe-racing with horſes carrying ſmall weights, prohibited. Ib. Horſes may run for the value of 50 l. with any weight and at any place, 18 Geo. 2. c. 34. ſect. 11.

A plaintiff ſhall not be allowed to recover a wager on ſuch an horſe-race, as is illegal within the ſtatute. 4 Term Rep. 1. A match for 25 l. a ſide is a match for 50 l. See this Dict. tit. Gaming.

The ſtat. 24 Geo. 3. c. 31, impoſes an annnual duty of 2 guineas on Race-Horſes.

HORSTILERS, Fr. Hoſteliers.] Is uſed for Innkeepers: and in ſome old books the word hoſtlers is taken in the ſame ſenſe. ſtat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 2. The executors of Horſtelers are not chargeable, for their faults. 1 Keb. 682.

HOSPES GENERALIS, A great chamberlain.—Volumus, quantum ad hoſpitia pertinet, omnes indifferenter noſtro hoſpiti generali obediant, &c. Du Cange.

HOSPITALLERS, Hoſpitalarii.] Were the knights of a religious order, ſo called becauſe they built an hoſpital at Jeruſalem, wherein pilgrims were received. To theſe Pope Clement transferred the Templars, which order, by a council held at Vienne in France, he ſuppreſſed for their many and great offences. The inſtitution of their order was firſt allowed by Pope Gelaſius the Second anno 1118; and confirmed in this kingdom by Parliament, and had many privileges granted them, as immunities from payment of tithes, &c. Their privileges were reſerved to them by Magna Charta cap. 37; and the right of the King's Subjects vindicated from the uſurpation of their juriſdiction, by the ſtatute of Weſtm. 2. cap. 43. Their chief abode is now in Malta, an iſland given them by the Emperor Charles V. after they were driven from Rhodes by Solyman the Magnificent, Emperor of the Turks; and for that they are now called Knights of Malta. All the lands and goods of theſe knights here in England were given to the King, by 32 Hen. 8. c. 34: See Mon. Angl. 2 par. fol. 489: Tho. Walſingh. in Hiſt. E. II: Stowe's Ann. ib. See title Knights Templars.

HOSPITALS

Are either Aggregate, in which the maſter or warden and his brethren have the eſtate of inheritance; or Sole, in which the maſter, &c. only has the eſtate in him, and the brethren, or ſiſters, having college, and common ſeal in them, muſt conſent, or the maſter alone has the eſtate not having college, or common ſeal. So Hoſpitals are eligible, donative, or preſentative. 1 Inſt. 342. a.

The Maſter of the Hoſpital, who has college, and common ſeal, may have a writ of right; for the right, and inheritance is in him. If he has no college, or common ſeal, he may have a juris utrum. Co. Lit. 341 b: 342 a.

Any perſon ſeiſed of an eſtate in fee-ſimple may by deed inrolled in Chancery erect and found an Hoſpital for the ſuſtenance and relief of the poor, to continue for ever; and place ſuch heads, &c. therein as he ſhall think fit: and ſuch Hoſpital ſhall be incorporated, and ſubject to ſuch viſitors, &c. as the Founder ſhall nominate; alſo ſuch corporations have power to take and purchaſe lands not exceeding 200 l. per annum, ſo as the ſame be not holden of the King, &c. and to make leaſes for twenty-one years, reſerving the accuſtomed yearly rent: but no Hoſpital is to be erected unleſs upon the foundation it be endowed with lands or hereditaments of the clear yearly value of 10 l. per annum. Stat. 39 Eliz. cap. 5; made perpetual by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. § 1.

It has been adjudged upon this ſtatute, that if lands given to an Hoſpital be at the time of the foundation or endowment of the yearly value of 200 l. or under, and afterwards they become of greater value by good huſbandry, accidents, &c. they ſhall continue good to be enjoyed by the Hoſpital, although they be above the yearly value of 200 l. And goods and chattels (real or perſonal) may be taken of what value ſoever. 2 Inſt. 722. And if one give his land then worth 10 l. a year to maintain poor, &c. and the land after comes to be worth 100 l. a year, it muſt all of it be employed to increaſe their maintenance, and none of it may be converted to private uſe. 8 Rep. 130.

If a deviſe be to the poor people maintained in the Hoſpital of St. Lawrence in Reading, &c. (where the mayor and burgeſſes capable to take in mortmain, do govern the Hoſpital) albeit the poor, not being a corporation, are not capable by that name to take; yet the deviſe is good; and commiſſioners appointed to enquire into lands given to Hoſpitals, &c. may order him that hath the land to aſſure it to the mayor and burgeſſes for the maintenance of the Hoſpital. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4. See titles Charitable Uſes, Mortmain.

A gift muſt be to the poor, and not to the aged or impotent of ſuch a pariſh, without expreſſing their poverty; for poverty is the principal circumſtance to bring the gift within the ſtat. 43 Eliz. c. 4. Although at Common-law a corporation may be of an Hoſpital, that is in poteſtate of certain perſons to be governors of the Hoſpital and not of the perſons placed therein: the ſafeſt way upon the ſtat. 39 Eliz. c. 5, is firſt to prepare the Hoſpital, and to place the poor therein, and to incorporate the perſons therein placed; and after the incorporation, to convey the lands, tenements, &c. to the ſaid corporation, by bargain and ſale, or otherwiſe, between the Founder of the one part, and the maſter and brethren, &c. of the other part, in conſideration of 5 s. in hand paid by the maſter of the ſaid Hoſpital, &c. 2 Inſt. 724, 725. And the Founder Founder cannot erect an Hospital for years, lives, or any other limited time, but it must be for ever, according to the Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5. See 10 Rep. 17, 34.

The Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4, under which Commissions may be awarded to certain persons to enquire of lands or goods given to Hospitals; and the Lord Chancellor is empowered to issue commissions to commissioners for enquiring by a jury, of all grants, abuses, breaches of trust, &c. of lands given to charitable uses, does not extend to lands given to any college or hall in the Universities, &c. nor to any hospital over which special governors are appointed by the Founders; and it shall not be prejudicial to the jurisdiction of the bishop or ordinary, as to his power of inquiry into and reforming abuses of Hospitals, by virtue of the Stat. 2 Hen. 5. st. 1. c. 1. &c. See this Dict. tit. Charitable Uses.

These commissioners may order houses to be repaired, by those who receive the rents; see that the lands be let at the utmost rent; and on any tenant's committing waste, by cutting down and sale of timber, they may decree satisfaction, and that the lease shall be void. Hil. 11 Car. Where money is kept back, and not paid, or paid where it should not, they have power to order the payment of it to the right use: and if money is detained in the hands of executors, &c. any great length of time, they may decree the money to be paid, with damages for detaining it. Duke Read. 123. See 4 Rep. 104.

The Hospital of St. Cross near Winchester, and several other large hospitals, were anciently founded by particular statutes, or acts of parliament. And King Charles I. granted to the Mayor and commonalty of London the keeping of Bethlem Hospital, and the manors and lands belonging to it. Also there is now an Hospital in London for Foundling Children, under the care of governors and guardians, who may purchase lands or tenements to the value of 4000 l. a year: and they are to receive as many such children, as they think fit, which may be brought to the Hospital and shall there be bred up and employed, or placed apprentice to any trade, or the sea service, the males till the age of twenty-four, and the females till twenty-one. They may likewise be let out or hired, &c. See Stats. 13 Geo. 2. cap. 29: 29 Geo. 2. c. 29. § 13: 30 Geo. 2. c. 26. § 14—See also stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 82, regulating Lying-in Hospitals, and ordering them to be licenced. HOSTELAGIUM, a right to have lodging and entertainment; reserved by Lords in the houses of their tenants. Cartular. Radinges, M. S. 157.

HOSTELER, Hostellarius. From the Fr. hosteler, i. e. hospes.] An Inn-keeper, See Stat. 31 E. 3. st. 2. c. 2: and this Dict. title Hostelers.

HOSTLERS, Inn-keepers, See Stat. 9 Ed. 3. st. 2. c. 2.

HOSTERIUM, A hoe, an instrument well known: Chart. Antiq.

HOSTIÆ, Hoast bread, or consecrated wafers in the Holy Eucharist: and from this word hostia, Somner derives the Sax. husel, used for the Lord's supper, and huslian to administer the sacrament; which were kept long in our old English, under housel, and to housal. Paroch. Antiq. 270.

Shakespeare uses the term unhouseled, &c. in Hamlet; meaning that his father gave up the ghost, without having the holy bread, or sacrament, administered to him. See Fabian's Chron. edit. 1516. fo. 14.

HOSTILARIUS, An hospitaller.

HOSTILARIA, HOSPITALARIA, A place or room in religious houses, allotted to the use of receiving guests and strangers; for the care of which there was a peculiar officer appointed, called Hostillarius, and Hospitalarius. Cart. Eccl. Elv MSS.

HOSTRICUS, Austricus, from the Lat. astur.] a goshawk. Paroch. Antiquities, p. 569.

HOTCHPOT, In partem positio.] A word brought from the Fr. hotchepot, used for a confused mingling of divers things together, and among the Dutch it signifies flesh cut into pieces, and sodden with herbs or roots; but by a metaphor it is A blending or mixing of lands given in marriage, with other lands in fee falling by descent: as if a man seised of thirty acres of land in fee, hath issue only two daughters, and he gives with one of them ten acres in marriage to the man that marries her; and dies seised of the other twenty acres: now she that is thus married, to gain her share of the rest of the land, must put her part given in marriage, into Hotchpot, i. e. she must refuse to take the sole profits thereof, and cause her land to be mingled with the other; so that an equal division may be made of the whole between her and her sister, as if none had been given to her; and thus for her ten acres she shall have fifteen, otherwise her sister will have the twenty acres of which her father died seised. Lit. 55: Co. Lit. lib. 3. cap. 12.

This seems to be a right of waiving a provision, made for a child in a man's life-time, at his death, though as it depends upon frank-marriage, and gifts of lands therein, it now seldom happens. See this Dict. tit. Parceners.

But there a bringing of money into Hotchpot, upon the clauses and within the intent of the statute for distribution of intestates' estates, Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. Where a certain sum is to be raised, and paid to a daughter for her portion, by a marriage settlement, this has been decreed to be an advancement by the father in his life-time, within the meaning of the statute, though future and contingent; and if the daughter would have any further share of her father's personal estate, she must bring this money into Hotchpot; and shall not have both the one and the other. 1 Eq. Ab. 253; See 2 Vern. 638. and this Dict. tit. Executor, V. 8.

By the custom of London, there is likewise a term of Hotchpot, where the children of a freeman are to have an equal share of one third part of his personal estate, after his death. Preced. Canc. 3. See title London: & title Executor, V. 9.

There is also in the Civil law collatio bonorum answerable to this, whereby if a child advanced by the father, do after his father's decease challenge a child's part with the rest he must cast in all that he had formerly received, and then take out an equal share with the others. Cowell. See farther Britton, c. 72: Lit. sect. 267, 268: 2 Comm. 190. 517.

HOVEL, Mandra.] A place wherein husbandmen set their ploughs and carts out of the rain or sun. Law Lat. Dict.

HOUNSLOW HEATH, A large heath containing 4293 acres of ground and extending into several parishes; so much thereof as is in the King's inheritance, and fit for pasture, meadow, or other several grounds, shall be of the nature of copyhold lands; or the steward of the manor may let it for twenty-one years, &c. and the lessees may improve the same. Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 2.

HOUR, Hora.] Is a certain space of time of sixty minutes, twenty-four of which make the natural day. It is not material at what hour of the day one is born. Co. Lit. 135. See titles Age: Fraction: Time.

HOUSAGE, A fee paid for housing goods by a carrier, or at a wharf or key, &c. Shep. Epit. 1725.

HOUSE, Domus.] A place of dwelling or habitation; also a family or household. Every man has a right to air and light, in his own house; and therefore if any thing of infectious smell be laid near the house of another, or his lights be stopped up and darkened by buildings, &c. they are nusances punishable by our laws. 3 Inst. 231: 1 Danv. Abr. 173. But for a prospect, which is only matter of delight, no action will lie for its being stopped. 9 Rep. 58. See title Nusance.

The dwelling house of every man, is as his castle; therefore if thieves come to a man's house to rob or kill him, and the owner or his servant kill the thieves in defending him and his house, that is not felony, nor shall he forfeit any thing. 2 Inst. 316. See title Homicide. A man ought to use his own house, so as not to damnify his neighbour: and one may compel another to repair his house, in several cases, by the writ de domo reparanda. 1 Salk. Rep. 360. Doors of a house may not be broke open on arrests, unless it be for treason. or felony, &c. H. P. C. 137: Plowd. 5: 5 Rep. 91. Se tit. Arrest.

Several things have been resolved on the subject, as to the protection a man's house affords him, as, 1. That every man's house is as his castle, as well to defend him against injuries as for his repose. 2. Upon recovery in any real action or ejectment, the sheriff may break the house and deliver seisin, &c. to the plaintiff, the writ being habere facias seisinam or possessionem; and after judgment it is not the house of the defendant in right and judgment of law. 3. In all cases, where the King is party, the sheriff (if no door be open) may break the party's house to take him, or to execute other process of the King, if he cannot otherwise enter; but he ought first to signify the cause of his coming, and request the door to be opened; and this appears by the Stat. Westm. 1. c. 17, which is only in affirmance of the Common-law; and without default in the owner, the law will not suffer a house to be broken. 4. In all cases, when the door is open, the sheriff may enter and make execution at the suit of any Subject, either of body or goods; but otherwise where the door is shut, there he cannot break it to execute process at the suit of a Subject. 5. Though a house is a castle for the owner himself and his family and his own goods, &c. yet it is no protection for a stranger flying thither, or the goods of such an one, to prevent lawful execution; and therefore in such case, after request to enter, and denial, the sheriff may break the house. 5 Rep. 91 a to 93 a.

From the particular and tender regard which the law of England has to a man's house arises in part the animadversion of the law upon eaves-droppers, nusancers and incendiaries: and to this principle it must be assigned that a man may assemble people together lawfully (at least if they do not exceed eleven) without danger of raising a riot, rout, or unlawful assembly, in order to protect and defend his house, which he is not permitted to do in any other case. 4 Comm. c. 19. p. 223 cites 1 Hal. P. C. 547.

HOUSEBOLD AND HAYBOLD, Seem to signify housebote and hedgebote, in Mon. Ang. 2. par. fol. 633: Cowell, edit. 1727.

HOUSEBOTE, A compound of house and bote, i. e. compensatio; signifies estovers, or an allowance of necessary timber out of the lord's wood, for the repairing and support of a house or tenement. And this belongs of common right to any lessee for years or for life: but if he take more than is needful, he may be punished by an action of waste. Housebote, says Co. on Lit fo. 41, is twofold, *viz. HOUSE OF CORRECTION. In every county of England there shall be a House of correction built at the charge of the county, with conveniencies for the setting of people to work, or every justice of peace shall forfeit 5 l. and the justices in sessions are to appoint governors or masters of such Houses of correction, and their salaries, &c. which are to be paid quarterly by the treasurer out of the county stock: These governors are to set the persons sent on work, and moderately correct them, by whipping, &c. and to yield a true account every quarter-sessions of persons committed to their custody; and if they suffer any to escape or neglect their duty, the justices may fine them. See Stats. 7 Jac. 1. c. 4: 14 Geo. 2. c. 33.

The House of correction is chiefly for the punishing of idle and disorderly persons; parents of bastard children, beggars, servants running away; trespassers, rogues, vagabonds, &c. Poor persons refusing to work are to be there whipped, and set to work and labour: and any person who lives extravagantly, having no visible estate to support him, may be sent to the House of correction, and set at work there, and may be continued there until he gives the justice satisfaction in respect to his living; but not be whipped. A person ought to be convicted of vagrancy, &c. before he is ordered to be whipped. 2 Bulst. 351: Sid. 281. Bridewell is a prison for correction in London, and one may be sent thither. Style 57.

And the justices are to take care that the House of correction be provided with proper materials for relieving, employing and correcting persons sent to the same: And two justices shall visit the same twice or oftener in a year, and examine examine into the eſtate and management thereof, and report the ſame at the Seſſions. The governor or maſter of a Houſe of correction miſbehaving himſelf, may be fined or turned out, at the diſcretion of the juſtices. Offenders liable to be ſent to the Houſe of correction, where the time and manner of their puniſhment is not expreſsly limited by law, may be committed until the next Seſſions, ot until diſcharged by due courſe of law.

HUE-AND-CRY,

HUTESIUM ET CLAMOR; from two French words Huer and Crier, both ſignifying to ſhout or cry aloud.] Manwood in his Foreſt Law, cap. 19. num. 11, ſaith, that Hue in Latin, eſt vox dolentis, as ſignifying the complaint of the party, and Cry is the purſuit of the felon upon the highway upon that complaint; for if the party robbed, or any in the company of one robbed or murdered, come to the conſtable of the next town, and deſire him to raiſe the Hue and Cry, that is, make the complaint known, and follow the purſuit after the offender, deſcribing the party, and ſhewing as near as he can which way he went; the conſtable ought forthwith to call upon the pariſh for aid in ſeeking the felon, and if he be not found there, then to give the next conſtable notice, and the next, until the offender be apprehended, or at leaſt until he be thus purſued unto the ſea ſide. Of this See Bracton, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 5: Smith de Rep. Anglor. lib. 2. cap. 20, and the Stat. of Wincheſter, 13 Edw. 1: Stats. 28 Ed. 3. 11: 27 Eliz. 13.

The Normans had ſuch purſuit with a Cry after offenders, which they called Clamor de haro; See Grand Cuſtumary, cap. 54. And it may probably be derived from harrier, flagitare. Hue is uſed alone in Stat. 4 Ed. 1. ſt. 2. In the ancient records this is called Huteſium & clamor. See 2 Inſt. fol. 172.

But the clamor de haro was not a purſuit after offenders, but a challenge of any thing to be his own after this manner, viz. He who demanded the thing did with a loud voice, before many witneſſes, affirm it to be his proper goods, and demanded reſtitution. This the Scots call huteſium; and Skene ſaith, it is reduced from the French oyer, i. e. audire, (or rather oyez,) being a Cry uſed before a proclamation; the manner of their Hue and Cry he thus deſcribeth; If a robbery be done, a horn is blown, and an out-cry made, after which, if the party flee away, and doth not yield himſelf to the King's bailiff, he may lawfully be ſlain, and hanged upon the next gallows. See Skene in v. Huteſium.

In Rot. Clauſ. 30 H. 3. m. 5, we find a command to the King's treaſurer, to take the city of London into the King's hands, becauſe the citizens did not, ſecundum legem & conſuetudinem Regni, raiſe the Hue and Cry for the death of Guido de Aretto and others who were ſlain. Cowell.

Hue and Cry, is alſo defined the purſuit of an offender from town to town till he be taken; which all that are preſent when a felony is committed, or a dangerous wound given, are by the Common-law, as well as by the ſtatute, bound to raiſe againſt the offenders who eſcape, on pain of fine and impriſonment. 3 Inſt. 116, 117: 2 Inſt. 172: Dalt. Juſtice, cap. 28, 109: Fitz. Coron. 395: Cro. Eliz. 654.

The raiſing of Hue and Cry is enjoined by the Common law, which may be called a raiſing of it at the ſuit of the King; as well as by ſeveral acts of parliament, which may be called a raiſing of it at the ſuit of a private perſon. 3 New Abr. 61.

HUE AND CRY, ſays Blackſtone, is the old Common-law proceſs, of purſuing with horn and with voice, all felons, and ſuch as have dangerouſly wounded another. Bract. l. 3. tr. 2. c. 1. § 1: Mirr. c. 2. § 6. It is alſo mentioned in Stat. Weſtm. 1, 3 E. 1. c. 9, and 4 E. 1. de officio coronatoris. But the principal ſtatute relative to this matter, is that of Wincheſter 13 E. 1. cc. 1, 4, which directs, that from henceforth every county ſhall be ſo well kept, that immediately upon robberies and felonies committed, freſh ſuit ſhall be made from town to town, and from county to county; and that Hue and Cry ſhall be raiſed upon the felons, and they that keep the town ſhall follow with Hue and Cry, with all the town and the towns near; and ſo Hue and Cry ſhall be made from town to town, until they be taken and delivered to the ſheriff. And, that ſuch Hue and Cry may more effectually be made, the Hundred is bound by the ſame ſtatute c. 3, to anſwer for all robberies therein committed, unleſs they take the felon; which is the foundation of an action againſt the Hundred in caſe of any loſs by robbery. By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13, no Hue and Cry is ſufficient, unleſs made with both horſemen and footmen. And by Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16, the conſtable or like officer refuſing or neglecting to make Hue and Cry, forfeits 5 l. half to the King and half to the proſecutor, with full coſts; and the whole vill or diſtrict is ſtill in ſtrictneſs liable to be amerced, according to the law of Alfred, if any felony be committed therein, and the felon eſcapes. Hue and Cry may be raiſed either by precept of a Juſtice of the peace, or by a peace officer, or by any private man that knows of of a felony. 2 Hal. P. C. 100, 104. The party raiſing it muſt acquaint the Conſtable of the vill with all the circumſtances which he knows of the felony, and the perſon of the felon; and thereupon the Conſtable is to ſearch his own town, and raiſe all the neighbouring vills, and make purſuit with horſe and foot; and in the proſecution of ſuch Hue and Cry the Conſtable and his attendants have the ſame powers, protection, and indemnification, as if acting under the warrant of a Juſtice of peace. But if a man wantonly or maliciouſly raiſes an Hue and Cry, without cauſe, he ſhall be ſeverely puniſhed as a diſturber of the public peace. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 12. § 5.

As to Hue and Cry at Common-law, it ſeems to be clearly agreed, that a private perſon who hath been robbed, or who knows that a felony hath been committed, is not only authorized to levy Hue and Cry, but is alſo bound to do it under pain of fine and impriſonment. 2 Inſt. 172: 3 Inſt. 116: 1 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 464.

From hence it follows, that although it is a good courſe, as Lord Hale ſays, to have a precept or warrant from a juſtice of peace for raiſing Hue and Cry, yet it is neither of abſolute neceſſity, nor ſometimes convenient, for the felons may eſcape before the juſtice can be found; alſo Hue and Cry was part of the law before the Stat. 1 Ed. 3. cap. 16, which firſt inſtituted juſtices of the peace. 2 Hal. H. P. C. 99.

It is incumbent upon conſtables to purſue Hue and Cry when called upon, and they are ſeverely puniſhable if they neglect it: and it prevents many inconveniencies if they be there; for it gives a greater authority to their purſuit, and enables the purſuant, in his aſſiſtance, to plead the general iſſue upon the ſtatutes 7 Jac. 1. cap. 5: 21 Jac. 1. cap. 12; without being driven to ſpecial pleading: therefore, to prevent inconveniences which may happen by unruline's, it is moſt adviſable that the conſtable be called: yet upon a robbery, or other felony committed, Hue and Cry may be raiſed by the country in the abſence of the conſtable; and in this there is no inconveniency, for if Hue and Cry be raiſed without cauſe, they that raiſe it are puniſhable by fine and impriſonment. 2 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 99, 100.

The regular method of levying Hue and Cry is for the party to go to the conſtable of the next town, and declare the fact, and deſcribe the offender, and the way he is gone; whereupon the conſtable ought immediately, whether it be night or day, to raiſe his own town, and make ſearch for the offender; and upon the not finding him, to ſend the like notice, with the utmoſt expedition to the conſtables of all the neighbouring towns, who ought in like manner to ſearch for the offender, and alſo to give notice to their neighbouring conſtables, and they to the next, till the offender be found. 3 Inſt. 116: Dalt. Juſtice. cap. 28: Cromp. 178: 2 Hawk. P. C. 75.

The conſtable is not only to make ſearch in his own vill, but alſo to raiſe all the neighbouring vills, who are all to purſue the Hue and Cry with horſemen as well as footmen until the offender be taken. 2 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 101. In caſe of Hue and Cry once raiſed and levied upon ſuppoſal of a felony committed, though in truth there was no felony committed; yet thoſe who purſue Hue and Cry may arreſt, and proceed as if a felony had been really commited. 2 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 101: 5 H. 5 a: 21 H. 7. 28 a. per Rede: 2 Ed. 4. 8 & 9: 29 Ed. 3. 39: 2 Inſt. 173: 2 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 102.

If Hue and Cry be raiſed againſt a perſon certain for felony, though poſſibly he is innocent, yet the conſtables, and thoſe that follow the Hue and Cry, may arreſt and impriſon him in the common gaol, or carry him to a juſtice of the peace. 2 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 102.

If the perſon purſued by Hue and Cry be in a houſe and the doors are ſhut, and refuſed to be opened upon demand of the conſtable, and notice given of his buſineſs, he may break open the doors; and this he may do in any caſe where he may arreſt, tho' it be only on ſuſpicion of felony, for it is for the King and Commonwealth, and therefore a virtual non omittas is in the caſe; and the ſame law is upon a dangerous wound given, and a Hue and Cry levied upon the offender. 7 Ed. 3. 16 b: 2 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 102. See title Conſtable.

It ſeems in this caſe, that if he cannot be otherwiſe taken, he may be killed, and the neceſſity excuſeth the conſtable. 1 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 102. See title Homicide.

Upon Hue and Cry levied againſt any perſon, or where any Hue and Cry comes to a conſtable, whether the perſon be certain or uncertain, the conſtable may ſearch in ſuſpected places within his vill, for the apprehending of the felons. Dalt. cap. 28: 2 Ed. 4. 8 b: Cromp. de Pace 178: 2 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 103. See title Conſtable.

But though he may ſearch ſuſpected places or houſes, yet his entry muſt be by open doors, for he cannot break open doors barely to ſearch, unleſs the perſon againſt whom the Hue and Cry is levied be there, and then it is true he may; therefore, in caſe of ſuch a ſearch, the breaking open the door is at his peril, viz. juſtifiable if he be there; but it muſt be always remembered, that in caſe of breaking open a door, there muſt be firſt a notice given to them within, of his buſineſs, and a demand of entrance, and a refuſal, before doors can be broken. 2 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 103. See title Conſtable.

If the Hue and Cry be not againſt a perſon certain, but by the deſcription of his ſtature, perſon, clothes, horſe, &c. the Hue and Cry doth juſtify the conſtable, or other perſon, following it, in apprehending the perſon ſo deſcribed, whether innocent or guilty, for that is his warrant; it is a kind of proceſs that the law allows, (not uſual in other caſes) viz. to arreſt a perſon by deſcription. 2 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 103.

But if the Hue and Cry be upon a robbery, burglary, manſlaughter or other felony committed, but the perſon that did the fact is neither known nor deſcribed by perſon, clothes or the like; yet ſuch a Hue and Cry is good as hath been ſaid, and muſt be purſued, though no perſon certain be named or deſcribed. 2 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 103.

And therefore in this caſe, all that can be done is, for thoſe who purſue the Hue and Cry, to take ſuch perſons as they have probable cauſe to ſuſpect; as for inſtance, ſuch perſons as are vagrants, that cannot give an account where they live, whence they are, or ſuch ſuſpicious perſons as come late into their inn or lodgings, and give no reaſonable account where they had been, and the like. 2 Ed. 4. 8 b: 2 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 103.

There can be no doubt but that both by the Common-law, as alſo by the ſeveral ſtatutes which injoin the levying of Hue and Cry, they who neglect to levy one, (whether officers of juſtice or others) or who neglect to purſue it when rightly levied, are puniſhable by indictment, and may be fined and impriſoned for ſuch neglect, 2 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 104.

We

We ſhall proceed to enquire more particularly, 1. On what robbery Hue and Cry may be raiſed, and how it ought to be purſued: 2. Of bringing the Action; at what Time; and the Evidence neceſſary; and what ſhall excuſe the Hundred: 3. Of levying the Money.

1. The levying of Hue and Cry is enjoined by ſeveral acts of parliament, and to this purpoſe it is enacted by Stat. Weſtm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 9, "That all be ready and apparelled at the ſummons of the ſheriff, to purſue and arreſt felons."

Though ſome imagined that Hue and Cry was grounded on this ſtatute; yet Lord Coke ſays, That it was uſed long before, as appears even by this ſtatute, which, inſtead of introducing a new law, inforces obedience to that which was founded on the ancient laws of the realm. 2 Inſt. 171.

By the ſtatute of 4 Ed. 1, De officio coronatoris, Hue and Cry ſhall be levied for all murders, burglaries, men ſlain, or in peril to be ſlain, as otherwhere is uſed in England; and all ſhall follow the Hue and ſteps as near as they can.

Next came the Stat. of Wincheſter, the effect of which has been already ſtated.

By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13. § 2, it is enacted, "That the inhabitants and reſiants of every hundred (with the franchiſes within the precinct thereof) wherein negligence, fault or defect of purſuit and freſh ſuit after Hue and Cry made ſhall happen to be, ſhall anſwer and ſatisfy the one moiety of all ſuch money and damages as ſhall be recovered againſt the hundred, with the franchiſes therein, in which any robbery or felony ſhall be committed, to be recovered by action of debt, &c. by and in the name of the clerk of the peace for the time being, of or in every ſuch county, and recovery by the party or parties robbed ſhall be, without naming the chriſtian name or ſurname of the ſaid clerk of the peace; which moiety ſo recovered ſhall be to the uſe of the inhabitants of the hundred where any ſuch robbery, &c. ſhall be committed."

It ſeems to be admitted, that no kind of robbery will make the hundred liable, but that which is done openly, and with force and violence; and that therefore the private ſtealing, or taking any thing from the party, does not come within the ſtatutes which make the hundred liable, becauſe the hundred is not liable for not preventing the robbery, but becauſe they did not apprehend the robbers, which in private felonies, and of which they had no notice, it would be difficult, if not impoſſible, for them to do. 7 Co. 6, 7: 2 Salk. 614.

Alſo it hath been adjudged, and is admitted in all the books which ſpeak of this matter, that a robbery in a houſe, whether it be by day or by night, does not make the hundred liable: The reaſons whereof are, that every man's houſe is in law eſteemed his caſtle, which he himſelf is obliged to defend, and into which no man can enter, to ſee what is doing there, without his leave; alſo being done in a houſe, the inhabitants of the hundred cannot be preſumed to have notice of it, ſo as to be able to apprehend the offenders. 7 Co. 6 a. Sendil's caſe.

But if a perſon be aſſaulted in the highway, and carried into a houſe, and there robbed, it ſeems the hundred ſhall be liable; for otherwiſe the proviſion made by the ſtatute would be eluded. 1 Sid. 263. and ſee 1 Salk. 614: 7 Mod. 159. Alſo it does not ſeems neceſſary, that the robbery ſhould be committed in the highway, nor alledged to have been ſo by the plaintiff in his declaration. 7 Mod. 159. It may be in a private way, or be in a coppice; and in both caſes the hundred ſhall be chargeable. 2 Salk. 614. and vide Carth. 71: 1 Mod. 221: 3 Mod. 258: 1 Show. 60: Comb. 150. S. C.

It is clearly agreed that for a robbery committed in the night the hundred is not chargeable, becauſe they cannot be preſumed to have notice thereof, ſo as to be able to apprehend the robbers. 7 Co. 6 b: 2 Inſt. 569: 3 Leon. 350.

But yet it is not neceſſary that the robbery ſhould be committed after ſun-riſe, and before ſun-ſet, for if there be as much day-light at the time, that a man's countenance may be diſcerned thereby, though it be before ſun-riſe or after ſun-ſet, the hundred ſhall be liable. 7 Co. 6 a: Cro. Jac. 106: 1 And. 158: 1 Leon. 57: Savil 33: vide Carth. 71: Comb. 150: 3 Mod. 258: 1 Show. 60. S. P.

It hath been held, that if robbers drive or oblige the waggoner to drive his waggon from the highway by day, but do not rob or take any thing till night, that yet this is a robbery in the day-time ſo as to charge the hundred. 1 Sid. 263: 7 Mod. 159: Hutton 125.

If he that is robbed, after Hue and Cry, make no further purſuit after the robbers, action lies againſt the hundred. 4 Leon. 180. The party robbed is not bound to purſue the robbers himſelf, or to lend his horſe for that purpoſe; but ſtill has his remedy againſt the hundred, if they are not taken: tho' if any of them are taken, either within forty days after the robbery, or before the plaintiff recovers, the hundred is diſcharged. Sid. 11. When a man is robbed on a Sunday, on which day perſons are ſuppoſed to be at church, and none ought to travel, the hundred is not liable. See ſtat. 27 El. c. 13. But where a robbery is done on a Sunday, tho' the hundred is not chargeable, Hue and Cry ſhall be made by Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 7; And if a perſon be robbed going to church in a country town or village, on a Sunday, which is a religious duty required by law, it has been held an action lies againſt the hundred; but not if one be robbed on that day in other travelling for pleaſure, &c. which is prohibited by ſtatute.—6 Geo. 1. C. B. per King, chief juſtice.

And it was formerly ruled by three judges on the Stat. of Winton, where a man was robbed on a Sunday, in time of divine ſervice, and made Hue and Cry, that the hundred ſhould be charged; for many perſons are neceſſitated to travel on this day; as phyſicians, &c. 2 Cro. 496: 2 Rol. 59: Godb. 280: See 2 Neſſ. Abr. 937, 938. A robbery muſt be an open robbery, that the country may take notice of it, to make the hundred anſwerable. 7 Rep. 6.

A man is ſet upon and aſſaulted by robbers in one hundred, and carried into a wood, &c. in another hundred, near the highway, and there robbed; the action ſhall be brought againſt the hundred where the robbery was done as particularly expreſſed in the ſtatute, and not the hundred where the man was taken or aſſaulted; becauſe the aſſault is not the efficient cauſe of the robbery, as a ſtroke is the cauſe of murder. 2 Salk. 614; 7 Mod. 157.

But where goods are taken from a man in one hundred, and opened in another; where they are firſt taken or ſeized, they are ſtolen; and the robbery is committed. 2 Lill. Abr. 27.

By the Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16, no proceſs for appearance is to be ſerved againſt the hundred, &c. for a robbery committed, but on the high conſtable, who ſhall give notice of it in one of the principal market-towns, &c. and then enter an appearance, and defend the action. By Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 24, No perſon ſhall recover on any of the ſtatutes of Hue and Cry, above 200*l.* unleſs the perſon or perſons ſo robbed ſhall at the time of ſuch robbery be together in company, and be in number two at the leaſt, to atteſt the truth of his or their being ſo robbed.

And by Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 3. § 116, and 4 Geo. 3. c. 2. § 118, no receiver general of the land-tax, or his agents, can ſue the hundred for a robbery, unleſs the perſons carrying the money be three in company.

2. The general doctrine as to actions is as follows. Where a robbery is done on the highway, in the day-time, of any day except Sunday, the hundred where committed is anſwerable for it: but notice is to be given of it, with convenient ſpeed, to ſome of the inhabitants of the next village, to the intent that they may make Hue and Cry for the apprehending of the robbers, or no action will lie againſt the hundred: and if any of the robbers are taken within forty days, and convicted, the hundred ſhall be excuſed.

In 3 Lev. 320, it is ſaid, that upon ſearch of the parliament roll it appears, that the ſtatute of Winton gives only forty days to the county, and that the ſtatute 28 Ed. 3. c. 11, is but a confirmation thereof; and accordingly it was adjudged good, where the plaintiff brought an action on the ſtatute of Winton, and declared that he was robbed, and none of the robbers taken within forty days, according to the ſaid ſtatute, and with this the modern precedents agree, as Raſt. Ent. 406: Co. Ent. 351: Hern. 215.: Theſ. Brev. 141: 2 Salk. 376.

If a ſervant be robbed in the abſence of his maſter, of his maſter's money, it is clear that the maſter may maintain an action for it againſt the hundred, but then the ſervant muſt make oath that he knew not any of the robbers. Cro. Car. 37. Alſo the ſervant being robbed in his maſter's abſence, may himſelf maintain an action againſt the hundred, and may declare that he was poſſeſſed ut de bonis ſuis propriis, &c. And though the jury find that he was robbed of his maſter's money, yet ſhall he recover; for the ſervant is poſſeſſed ut de bonis ſuis propriis, againſt all, and in reſpect of all, but him that hath the very right. 2 Salk. 613-4: 4 Mod. 303: Comb. 263: 1 Sid. 45.

If a ſervant be robbed in the preſence of the maſter, the maſter muſt ſue; and the oath of the maſter is ſufficient. 2 Salk. 613: Carth. 147.

There muſt be an oath, vide Carth. 145: 2 Salk. 613; 1 Show. 94: 3 Mod. 287.

Where a ſervant is robbed, he muſt be examined and ſworn; but if the maſter be preſent, it is a robbery of him. Show. 241: 1 Leon. 323. If a quaker be robbed, or a man's ſervant being a quaker, and either refuſe to take an oath of the robbery, and that he did not know any of the robbers, the hundred is not anſwerable; for the Stat. of 27 Eliz. c. 13, was made to prevent combination between perſons robbed and the robbers. 2 Salk. 613.

But the maſter's oath where the ſervant is a quaker, or otherwiſe, and being robbed in his preſence, will maintain the action in his own name. Carth. 146. And a plaintiff had judgment on his oath, though his ſervant that was robbed with him knew one of the robbers. When a carrier is robbed of another man's goods, he or the owner may ſue the hundred; but the carrier is to give notice, and make oath, &c. though the owner of the goods brings the action. 2 Saund. 380.

If A. and B. travelling together are robbed of a ſum of money, to which they are both jointly intitled, they may both join in an action againſt the hundred; but otherwiſe if they had ſeparate and diſtinct intereſts. Dyer 370 a. pl. 59.

By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13. § 11, it is enacted, That no perſon that ſhall happen to be robbed ſhall maintain any action, or take any benefit of the ſtatutes which make the hundred liable, except the perſon ſo robbed ſhall, with as much convenient ſpeed as may be, give notice of the robbery ſo committed unto ſome of the inhabitants of ſome town, village or hamlet, near unto the place where any ſuch robbery ſhall be committed.

In the conſtruction of this clauſe of the ſtatute it hath been holden, That if a perſon be robbed in a highway in diviſis hundredorum, he need not give notice to the inhabitants of each hundred, but notice to either of them is ſufficient. Cro. Jac. 675, See Cro. Car. 41, 379: 1 Show. 94.

It hath been reſolved, that though the notice given be five miles from the place where the robbery was committed, that it is ſufficient; the reaſon whereof is, becauſe that the party, who is a ſtranger to the country, cannot have conuzance of the neareſt place or town. March. 11: and ſee 2 Leon. 82.

Alſo if the party robbed give notice with as much convenient ſpeed as may be, though he be otherwiſe remiſs in not purſuing the robbers, or refuſes to lend his horſe for that purpoſe, yet he ſhall not loſe his action for this, nor the hundred be excuſed. March 11: 2 Leon. 82.

Now by Stat. 8 Geo. 2. cap. 16. § 1, it is further enacted, "That no perſon ſhall maintain any action againſt the hundred, unleſs he ſhall, (beſides the notice already required by the Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13,) with as much convenient ſpeed as may be, after any robbery committed, give notice thereof to one of the conſtables of the hundred, or to ſome conſtable, borſholder, headborough or tithingman of ſome town, pariſh, village, hamlet or tithing near unto the place where ſuch robbery ſhall happen, or ſhall leave notice in writing of ſuch robbery at the dwelling houſe of ſuch conſtable, &c. deſcribing, ſo far as the nature and circumſtances of the caſe will admit, the felon, and the time and place of the robbery, and alſo ſhall, within the ſpace of twenty days next after the robbery committed, cauſe public notice to be given thereof in the London Gazette, therein likewiſe deſcribing, ſo far as the nature and circumſtances of the caſe will admit, the felon, and the time and place of ſuch robbery, together with the goods and effect whereof he was robbed."

By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13. § 11, it is enacted, "That the party robbed ſhall not have any action, except he ſhall firſt, within twenty days next before ſuch action to be brought, be examined upon his corporal oath, before ſome juſtice of the peace of the county where the robbery was committed, whether he knows the parties that committed mitted the robbery, or any of them; and if, upon examination, it be confeſſed, that he knows the parties, or any of them, that then he ſhall, before the action be commenced, enter into ſufficient bond by recognizance before the ſaid juſtice, effectually to proſecute the ſame perſon and perſons."

In the conſtruction of this clauſe of the ſtatute, the following points have been holden;

That if the party does not know the robbers at the time of the robbery committed, tho' he happens to know them afterward, it is not material. March 11.

It hath been adjudged, that the oath may be taken before a juſtice of the county, though not in the county at the time of adminiſtering it. 1 Jones 239.

As to giving bond for payment of coſts, by Stat. 8 Geo. 2. cap. 16. it is enacted, "That, before any action commenced, the party ſhall go before the chief clerk, or ſecondary, or the filazer of the county wherein ſuch robbery ſhall happen, or the clerk of the pleas of that court wherein ſuch action is intended to be brought, or their reſpective deputies, or before the ſheriff of the county wherein the robbery ſhall happen, and enter into a bond to the high conſtable, or high conſtables of the hundred in which the robbery ſhall be committed, in the penal ſum of one hundred pounds with two ſufficient ſureties to be approved of by ſuch chief clerk, &c. with condition for ſecuring to ſuch high conſtable or high conſtables, the due payment of his or their coſts, after the ſame ſhall be taxed by the proper officer, in caſe the plaintiff in ſuch action ſhall happen to be nonſuited, or ſhall diſcontinue the action, or in caſe judgment ſhall be given on demurrer, or a verdict againſt him."

Coſts are always given in actions on the ſtatutes of Hue and Cry, where damages are recovered. 1 Term Rep. 72.

By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13. § 9, The action is to be brought within one year after the robbery committed.

In the conſtruction of this ſtatute it hath been holden; That if a perſon be robbed the 9th of October 13 Jac. and ſo laid that the teſte of the writ be the 9th October 14 Jac. that this is not purſuant to the ſtatute; and that in this action, which is penal againſt the hundred, there is no reaſon to exclude the day on which the fact was done, nor to make ſuch conſtruction as is done in proteſtions and the inrolment of deeds, which have always received a benign interpretation. Hob. 139, 140: Moor 878. pl. 1233: 1 Brownl. 156. S. C. Vide 1 Sid. 139: 1 Keb. 495.

An action was brought by the maſter, on the ſtatute of Winton, for a robbery committed on his ſervant, in which he declared of an aſſault and battery done to himſelf, (though then 50 miles from the place), alſo that he made oath that he did not know any of the perſons; the iſſue was entered of record, and the jury appeared at the bar ready to try it; but being for other buſineſs adjourned to another day, the plaintiff obſerving his miſtake moved to amend, by declaring of a robbery on his ſervant, &c. and it appearing that the year in which the action muſt be brought was expired, and conſequently the action muſt be loſt if not allowed, the court, after long debate and conſideration of former precedents, admitted him to amend. 3 Lev. 347.

It ſeems that, from the neceſſity of the caſe, the party himſelf that was robbed is to be admitted as a witneſs, but then his teſtimony muſt be corroborated by collateral proof and circumſtances, and ſuch as may induce a jury to believe that a robbery was actually committed, and that the party loſt what he declared for. 2 Leon. 12.

By Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16, it is enacted, "That in any action againſt any hundred, any perſon inhabiting within the hundred, or any franchiſe thereof, ſhall be admitted as witneſs for or on behalf of the hundred."

If an action againſt the hundred be diſcontinued, on a new action brought, there muſt be a new oath taken within forty days before the laſt action brought. Sid. 139. In action upon the ſtatute of Hue and Cry, the declaration is good, though the plaintiff doth not ſay, that the juſtice of peace who took the oath lived prope locum where the robbery was committed. And oath was made before a juſtice of peace of the county where the robbery was done, in a place of another neighbouring county; and it was held good. Cro. Car. 211.

If a juſtice of peace refuſe to examine a perſon robbed, and to take his oath, action on the ſtatute lies againſt the juſtice. 1 Leon. 323. It is ſafe to ſay the plaintiff gave notice at ſuch a place, near the place where the robbery was done; and though that place where notice is given be in another hundred or county, yet it is good enough; for a ſtranger may not know the confines of the hundred or county. Cro. Car. 41, 379: 3 Salk. 184.

If there be a miſtake of the pariſh in the declaration where the robbery was, if it be laid in the right hundred it is well enough. 2 Leon. 212. And though the party puts more in his declaration than he can prove, for ſo much as he can prove it ſhall be good. Cro. Jac. 348.

Upon a trial in theſe caſes, the party muſt file his original, and be ſure to have a true copy thereof, and witneſſes to prove it; and he muſt alſo have the affidavit or oath, and a witneſs to prove the taking it. 2 Lill. Abr. 25.

By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13. § 8, it is enacted, "That where any robbery is committed by two, or a greater number of malefactors, and that it happen any one of the ſaid offenders to be apprehended by purſuit, to be made according to the ſtatutes, that then, no hundred or franchiſe ſhall in any wiſe incur the penalty loſs or forfeiture mentioned in the ſtatutes, although the reſidue of the malefactors ſhall happen to eſcape." See 1 Vent. 118, 325: Raym. 221: 2 Lev. 4.

If Hue and Cry be made towards one part of the county, and an inhabitant of the hundred apprehends one of the robbers within another, this is a taking within the ſtatute. 1 Vent. 118, 119.

By the Stat. 8 Geo. 2. cap. 16. it is enacted, "That no hundred, or franchiſe therein, ſhall be chargeable by virtue of any of the ſtatutes, if any one or more of the felons, by whom ſuch robbery ſhall be committed, be apprehended within the ſpace of forty days next after public notice given in the London Gazette, as by the ſtatute is provided."

3. By Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 13. § 14. it is enacted, "That after execution of damages by the party or parties ſo robbed had, it ſhall be lawful (upon complaint made by the party charged) to and for two juſtices of the peace (whereof one to be of the quorum) of the ſame county, inhabiting within the hundred, or near unto the ſame where any ſuch execution ſhall be had, to aſſeſs and tax rateably and proportionably, according to their diſcretions, all and every the towns, pariſhes, villages and hamlets, as well of the ſaid hundred where any ſuch robbery ſhall be committed, as of the liberties within the ſaid hundred, to and toward an equal contribution, to be had and made for the relief of the inhabitants, againſt whom the party or parties robbed before that time had execution."

The conſtables, &c. are to levy the money and pay it over to the juſtices, and they are to deliver it over to the inhabitants, for whoſe uſe it was collected.

The ſame taxation is to be in caſes where there is default or negligence of purſuit and freſh ſuit, for the benefit of inhabitants having damages or money levied on them, (See ante 1.)

By the Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16, already referred to, after judgment againſt the hundred, no proceſs ſhall be ſerved on the high conſtable or any inhabitant: but the ſheriff on receipt of the writ of execution ſhall ſhew it gratis to two juſtices of the peace in or near the hundred, who ſhall ſpeedily cauſe an aſſeſſment to be levied purſuant to the Stat. 27 El. c. 13. and alſo for the neceſſary expences of the high conſtable above the coſts and damages recovered, of which, on notice from the two juſtices, he ſhall give an account and proof on oath to their ſatisfaction, having firſt cauſed his attorney's bill to be taxed. § 4.

The ſheriff ſhall pay the money levied to the parties without fee, and indorſe the day of receiving the writ of execution, and not be called upon for a return till ſixty days after. And See Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 46. § 34.

And the like aſſeſſment ſhall be in caſe the plaintiff be nonſuit, diſcontinue, or have a verdict or judgment on demurrer againſt him, if by inſolvency of the plaintiff or his ſureties, he cannot be reimburſed on the bond of 100*l.* penalty; and the money levied ſhall be paid to the juſtices for the high conſtable in ten days after it is levied. § 7, 8. of ſaid Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16.

And the juſtices may limit a time not exceeding thirty days for levying ſuch aſſeſſment; and the officer appointed refuſing or neglecting to levy and pay the money, &c. in ſuch time, forfeits double the ſum. § 9, 10.

If there be judgment againſt the hundred, it may be levied againſt the inhabitants of the ſame hundred by fieri facias. So it may be levied upon any one, who has lands in his poſſeſſion within the hundred, though he has no houſe nor lodging there; for he is an inhabitant. R. 2 Saund. 423.—Upon a leſſee, or purchaſer after the robbery committed. R. Noy 155.—So it may be levied upon one or two of the inhabitants. But if a man come to inhabit in an hundred after a robbery done, he ſhall not be charged, *R. HUNDRED.

HUNDREDUM, Centuria.] A part or diviſion of a Shire; ſo called, either becauſe of old each hundred found 100 ſidejuſſors of the King's peace, or a hundred able men for his wars. But more probably it is ſo called, becauſe it was compoſed of an hundred families. It is true, Brompton tells us, that an hundred contains centum villas; and Giraldus Cambrenſis writes, that the Iſle of Man hath 343 villas. But in theſe places the word villa muſt be taken for a country family; for it cannot mean a village, becauſe there are not above 40 villages in that iſland. So where Lambard ſays, that an hundred is ſo called, à numero centum hominum, it muſt be underſtood of an hundred men, who are heads or chiefs of ſo many families.

Theſe were firſt ordained by King Alfred, the 29th King of the Weſt Saxons: Lambard verbo Centuria. This dividing counties into hundreds, for better government, King Alfred brought from Germany: For there centa, or centena, is a juriſdiction over an hundred towns. See 1 Comm. 115: Introd. § 4.

In ancient times, it was ordained for the more ſure keeping of the Peace, that all free-born men ſhould caſt themſelves into ſeveral companies by 10 in each company, and that every of theſe ten men ſhould be ſurety and pledge for the forth-coming of his fellows. For which cauſe theſe companies in ſome places were called tithings, and as ten times ten makes an 100, ſo becauſe it was alſo appointed that ten of theſe tithings ſhould at certain times meet together for matters of greater weight, therefore that general aſſembly was called an hundred.—Lamb. Conſt.

The hundred is governed by an high conſtable or bailiff; and formerly there was regularly held in it the hundred-court for the trial of cauſes though now fallen into diſuſe. In ſome of the more Northern counties theſe hundreds are called wapentakes. 1 Comm. Introd. § 4. p. 115: and See 4 Comm. c. 33.

This is the original of hundreds, which ſtill retain the name, but the juriſdiction is devolved to the county-court, ſome few excepted, which have been by privilege annexed to the crown, or granted to ſome great Subject, and ſo remain ſtill in the nature of a franchiſe. This has been ever ſince the Stat. 14 Ed. 3. ſt. 1. cap. 9, whereby theſe hundred-courts, formerly farmed out by the Sheriff to other men, were all, or the moſt part reduced to the County-court, and ſo remain at preſent.

But now, by hundred-courts we underſtand ſeveral franchiſes, wherein the ſheriff has nothing to do by his ordinary authority, except they of the hundred refuſe to do their office. See Weſt part 1: Symbol, lib. 2. ſect. 228. Ad hundredum poſt Paſcha, & ad proximum hundredum poſt feſtum St. Mich.—Mon. Angl. 2 par. f. 293 a.

An hundred is to have juriſdiction or power to adminiſter juſtice in 100 vills, or of 100 men, or of 100 pariſhes. Br. Court Baron, pl. 8. cites 8 H. 7. 3. per Rede.

Every ward in London is an hundred in a county, and every pariſh in London is a vill in an hundred. 9 Rep. 66 b.

Hundreds

Hundreds were either parcel of the counties, and there the sheriffs did constitute bailiffs, (viz. those hundreds which were anciently parcel of the farm of the sheriffs, that the statute 2 Ed. 3. c. 12, speaks of); or else they were such as were granted out, which the lord of the hundred sometimes held at farm, and sometimes in fee, called hundreds in fee, liberties of hundreds, franchises of hundreds. Kent. 405.

In the time of King Alfred the kingdom was in gross, and then divided into counties and hundreds, and all persons then came within one hundred or other; and then the King's relations had the government of them, and therefore they were called Consanguinei; (cousins) and so are the Earls, (Comites) Lord lieutenants, styled at this day; but when the office became troublesome, there were ordained Vicecomites, (Sheriffs) which name remains to this day, and the others continue to be called Consanguinei, but have no power in the county, having only the honorary name of Earls or Comites of such or such a county, &c. For the better government of these counties, the Vicecomites had two courts; but out of those the King granted petty leets and courts-baron; but the tourn of the sheriff had yet a superintendant power, they being derived out of the sheriff's tourn. See Dyer 13.

The King afterwards granted away some hundreds in fee-simple, and some franchises, and the last excluded the King utterly, but the hundreds granted in fee were not wholly exempt. On this arose some confusion, and the parliament hereon took notice, that the execution of justice was by this much interrupted, and therefore came the statute of Linc. 9 Ed. 2. st. 2; That sheriffs should be sufficient persons, and have lands in the county, and so be able to answer both the King and county, and that bailiffs and farmers of hundreds should be sufficient men. And at this time hundreds were grantable for years.

Then came the statute of 2 Ed. 3. cc. 4, 5; That sheriffs should continue but for one year. But this took not away the whole inconvenience: for the Crown still granted away bailiwicks and hundreds, for lives, at rents at such excessive dear rates, that made them endeavour to make up their money by unlawful means; and therefore came the statutes 2 Ed. 3. cap. 12: 14 Ed. 3. cap. 9. By the first it was enacted, That all hundreds and wapentakes granted by the King shall be annexed to the county, and not severed. And by the other statute, that all should be annexed, and the sheriff should have power to put in bailiffs, for which he will answer, and no more should be granted for the future; and one reason of this was, because the King granted away hundreds, and abated not the sheriff's farm. Ang. 2 Show. 98, 99.

Hundreds are liable to penalty on exportation of wool, 7 & 8 Will. 3. c. 28. § 8.—Liable to damages sustained by riotously pulling down buildings, 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 5. § 6.—By killing cattle, cutting down trees, burning houses, &c. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. § 7: 29 Geo. 2. c. 36. § 9. By destroying turnpikes, or works on navigable rivers, 8 Geo. 2. c. 20. § 6.—By cutting hop-binds; 10 Geo. 2. c. 32. § 4.—By destroying corn to prevent exportation, 11 Geo. 2. c. 22. § 5.—By wounding officers of the customs, 19 Geo. 2. c. 34. § 6.—Or by destroying woods, &c. 29 Geo. 2. c. 36. § 9.—So in cases of robbery. See title Hue and Cry.—So for the destruction of mines or pits of coal. Burn's J. title Hundred. See this Dict. under the several titles.

Inhabitants within the hundred may be witnesses for the hundred, 8 Geo. 2. c. 16.

The word hundredum is sometimes taken for an immunity or privilege, whereby a man is quit of money or customs due to the hundreds. Cowell.

HUNDRED-COURT, Is only a larger court-baron, being held for all the inhabitants of a particular hundred instead of a manor. The free suitors are here the judges, and the steward the register, as in the case of a court-baron. It is not a Court of record, and it resembles a court-baron in all points, except that in point of territory it is of a greater jurisdiction.

According to Blackstone, its institution was probably co-eval with that of hundreds themselves, introduced, though not invented, by Alfred, being derived from the polity of the ancient Germans. See 1 Comm. Introd. § 4. and this Dict. titles County Court; Court Baron; Court Leet; Constable, Hundred, &c.

HUNDREDORS, hundredarii.] Persons serving on juries, or fit to be impanelled thereon for trials, dwelling within the hundred where the land in question lies. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 6. And default of Hundredors was a challenge or exception to panels of sheriffs, by our law, till the Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. cap. 16. ordained, that, to prevent delays by reason of challenges to panels of jurors for default of Hundredors, &c. writs of venire facias for trial of any action in the courts at Westminster, shall be awarded of the body of the proper county where the issue is triable. See title Jury I. II.

Hundredor also signifies him that hath the jurisdiction of the hundred, and is in some places applied to the bailiff of an hundred. See Stats. 13 Ed. 1. c. 38: 9 Ed. 2: 2 Ed. 3: Horn's Mirror, lib. 1.

HUNGER. According to the present doctrine, Hunger will not justify stealing food, to relieve a present necessity. 1 Hal. P. C. 54. And the doctrine seems just, as (on conviction) a judge may respite and a King pardon, an advantage which is wanting in many States; particularly those which are democratical. The ancient doctrine, (that it would justify) if now in force, might open a door to many villanies. And, in this commercial state, those who can labour need not fear starving. Those that cannot, and who are poor, the laws have made a provision for. See 4 Comm. 31.

HUNTING. By stat. 1 Hen. 7. c. 7. unlawful hunting, in any legal forest, park or warren, not being the King's property, by night, or with painted faces declared to be single felony. And by Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, Appearing armed with faces blacked, or disguised, to hunt, wound, kill, or steal deer, to rob a warren, or steal fish, is felony, without benefit of clergy. See titles Deer Stealers: Game: Black Act.
