PREFACE.

THE UTILITY of a Dictionary, containing not only a Definition and Explanation of the Terms uſed in the Science of the ENGLISH LAW, but alſo a general Summary of the Theory and Practice of the Law itſelf, having been ſo fully evinced by the ſucceſs of Ten Editions of the Work on which the Volumes here preſented to the Reader are founded; any obſervations upon that ſubject would be ſuperfluous:—Something, however, is requiſite to introduce the following Sheets; as due both to the Proprietors and the Editor of this General Law-Dictionary; which is offered to the attention and patronage, not only of THE PROFESSION, but of ALL who wiſh to obtain a knowledge of the Duties impoſed upon them, and the Rights ſecured to them, by the Laws of their Country.

IT IS NOW more than Four Years ſince the Proprietors of JACOB's Law-Dictionary (the laſt Edition of which was publiſhed in the year 1782) applied to the preſent Editor, to prepare the Work for republication. This he very cheerfully undertook; imagining at firſt that nothing more could be required than to employ his attention on ſuch Statutes and Reports as the courſe of time had produced ſince that Edition: little aware that a thorough Reviſal of the whole had become abſolutely neceſſary, from the numerous Improvements in our Law; which had by no means been ſufficiently attended to, either in that, or even in the preceding Edition.

A CURSORY PERUSAL of Jacob's Dictionary ſoon convinced the Writer, that, to render the Work really uſeful to the Profeſſion and the Public, in the preſent State of the Law, much Labour, Time, and Study muſt be employed; that unremitting Diligence alone could collect and digeſt the materials for ſuch a Compilation; and that, ſtrictly keeping in view JACOB's original Plan, it would demand ſome Judgment ſo to arrange, ſimplify, and methodize the Information obtained, as to preſerve the general Character of the Work, and yet to introduce every proper Correction and Improvement.

To THIS TASK then he ſeriouſly applied himſelf.—He firſt carefully examined the Text, as it ſtood in the Tenth Edition.—Here he found much ſound Learning on the Origin and Antiquity of our Law, defaced with unſkilful Interpolations: Innumerable Statutes, long repealed, detailed at large as Exiſting Laws *: The other Statutes quoted throughout the Work, (by continued errors of the Preſs through various Editions,) incorrectly cited: Except in ſome few inſtances, a want of Method, and Poverty of Language, pervading the whole body of the Work: And the Improvements of our Law, during the laſt Thirty Years and more, either wholly paſſed over, or very ſuperficially noticed.

HIS NEXT STEP, therefore, was to correct the Errors which appeared.—Solely to perform this was a long and tedious labour: Every Statute quoted has been examined; and it is by no means an exaggeration to ſay, that many thouſand Errors, in this particular alone, have been detected and amended.—To eraſe whatever was ſuperſeded or contradicted by modern Laws or Determinations, was next requiſite: And, when thus much was performed, a vaſt void remained, to be filled up with a Summary of the State of the Law, as at preſent exiſting.

IN MANY INSTANCES, where the Law relative to one Subject was ſcattered through the Book, the whole has been brought together under a ſingle Title, conſolidated, re-arranged, and enlarged; and the proper References made from Title to Title †. In ſome few others, it was found convenient to remove the whole of a Title, as it ſtood in the former Work; and to ſupply its place by a New Abridgment of the Law on that particular Subject ‡.—In no caſe, however, has any alteration been made, without mature conſideration, and a ſincere wiſh for the Improvement of the Work, and the Inſtruction of the Reader.

IN THE NEXT PLACE, The Editor conſidered himſelf called upon to introduce many New Titles; ſome on the Origin and Antiquity of our Law §; and ſeveral connected with the Commercial Concerns of the Country ‖; which had for the moſt part been entirely omitted, or at beſt very ſlightly referred to, by JACOB or his Continuators.—Theſe Additions, it is believed, do not make leſs than One Fourth Part of the preſent Volumes.

* Titles HIGHWAYS, TURNPIKES; and others.

† AWARD, ARBITRATION;—HOMICIDE, MURDER, MANSLAUGHTER;—EXECUTOR, ADMINISTRATOR;—ADVOWSON, PRESENTATION, USURPATION; and very many others.

‡ BANKRUPT, BILL OF EXCHANGE, HIGHWAYS, WILLS, &c.

§ TENURES, &c. ‖ EAST INDIA COMPANY, NAVIGATION-ACTS, INSURANCE, &c. &c.

PREFACE.

To ENABLE HIMSELF to perfect the Plan which his Mind ſoon formed, in the order above ſtated, The Editor has applied to all ſuch Publications as ſeemed more immediately adapted to his purpoſe.

THE STATUTES have been peruſed with peculiar care and diligence: Almoſt all which are material, even to the end of the Seſſion of Parliament in 1796, are introduced; and throughout the Work, it is believed, that none are omitted to be noticed which paſſed before the Thirty-third year of the preſent Reign. The long time which the Dictionary has taken in going through the Preſs, has therefore, it is hoped, on the whole, operated rather to the benefit than the prejudice of All who may have occaſion to conſult it.

To THE excellent Series of modern TERM-REPORTS in the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall, which have appeared within the laſt ten years:—To the various new Editions of former Reports, and other Law-Books of long-eſtabliſhed reputation; in alluding to which, it would be injuſtice not to particulariſe The Coke upon Littleton, Peere Williams's Reports, and Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown:—Together with many other ſmaller Volumes well deſerving notice, as including Syſtems of particular branches of the Law:—To all theſe recourſe has been had; and the Information contained in them has been applied to the preſent purpoſe, with a care and attention which, the Editor truſts, have not been totally fruitleſs.

BUT, above all, THE COMMENTARIES of the learned Blackſtone have been fully and freely applied to, and the moſt material parts of them adopted; ſometimes abridged; but more frequently enlarged by Additions from the various ſources above alluded to. The Edition laſt publiſhed has been uſed, whenever the Term of its publication allowed; and many of the new Notes there introduced have been added to the maſs of modern intelligence here preſented to the Reader.

WHENEVER, in conſulting any of the above Authorities, the Writer of this had occaſion to queſtion or differ from the poſitions there laid down, he intended to ſtate his diſſent, with modeſty and candour.—To Error every Author is liable—Opere in longo fas eſt. Many miſtakes have been ſilently corrected in all the Books conſulted on this occaſion. The Editor ſeeks only that Indulgence which he has beſtowed, with a liberality more unbounded than can well be imagined.

SYSTEMATICAL

PREFACE.

SYSTEMATICAL RULES, and their Exceptions, ſeem in general of more conſequence than a multiplied variety of Caſes: Rules give the effect of Caſes, without the tediouſneſs of their detail. It has been ſaid by a very eminent Lawyer, "That precedents are frequently rather apt to confound; that every Caſe has its own peculiar circumſtances, and therefore ought to ſtand on its own bottom." On this Maxim chiefly are all the Additions to the Work compiled, and the whole re-digeſted: The Deviations from it, where they ſtill occur, have frequently ariſen, rather from a deference to the names of former Editors, and from a deſire of not making alterations which might be thought merely capricious, than from a conviction of the neceſſity or propriety of ſuch a mode of Compilation.

THE PRINCIPLE therefore of this Dictionary, thus enlarged and improved, is, to convey to the Uninformed a competent general Knowledge of every ſubject connected with the LAW, TRADE, and GOVERNMENT, of theſe Kingdoms: To ſhow the Origin, Foundation, Progreſs, and preſent State of our POLICY and JURISPRUDENCE. —Information of this nature muſt intereſt every Man of liberal Education, in whatever ſphere: To Magiſtrates, whether ſuperior or ſubordinate, it will be found particularly uſeful: By Lawyers it will, doubtleſs, be applied to, as a Digeſt of Learning previouſly obtained; and an Index to further Inquiries on the Theory and Practice of our Law, in all its various branches.

IN ENDEAVOURING to complete an Undertaking of ſuch length and importance, The Editor is fully conſcious that many Errors and Inadvertencies muſt, even yet, have eſcaped;—Omiſſions, he hopes, there are now but few;—and for the Inconſiſtencies which muſt inevitably appear, he relies for pardon on the good ſenſe of all who are competent to judge on a Work ſo multifarious and extenſive.

IT WAS impoſſible to enter into the great variety of Subjects contained in theſe Volumes, without being occaſionally led into obſervations, which apply rather to the Syſtem of Politics, and the general Theory of Government, than to the confined Queſtion of Law: This Licence was neceſſarily taken by former Editors of JACOB; and was uſed, to ſome extent, by COWEL in his Interpreter.

THE TRUE INTEREST of Nations would beſt be conſulted by preſerving the greateſt Harmony between thoſe, whom it ſeems to be the buſineſs and the pleaſure of political (at leaſt of party) Writers,—"more ſtudious to divide than to unite,"—to ſet at variance. GOVERNMENT has no Rights, and the PEOPLE have no Duties, inconſiſtent with the true welfare of each other: The reciprocal conditions of their

Friendſhip

PREFACE.

Friendſhip and Security may be compriſed in two words—PROTECTION and OBEDIENCE. It has been the conſtant wiſh of The Editor, in compiling the following Sheets, to place in the ſtrongeſt light every Argument and Deciſion which may tend to ſhow, what care the Laws and Conſtitution of GREAT BRITAIN have progreſſively taken to enforce both thoſe Principles, and to guard Britons againſt the fatal conſequences which muſt attend a violation of either.

THE INDULGENCE of the Reader is yet a little longer requeſted, to a few words, which The Editor hopes to be excuſed for ſtating, reſpecting Himſelf.

ANXIOUS, from very early youth, to become a Member of the Profeſſion to which he has the honour to belong, it was his misfortune to be compelled, by certain untoward circumſtances, to enter into that Profeſſion, and into Life, prematurely; without either Education or Experience, ſufficient to enable him to perform the Duties impoſed upon him by ſuch a ſituation. He very ſoon perceived his deficiencies, and endeavoured to ſupply them by diligent ſtudy and obſervation. A few years brought him near the point at which he aimed: But at the moment when aſſiſtance was moſt wanted, he was diſappointed of receiving it; through his own neglect, in omitting to apply to thoſe who were really capable and deſirous to have afforded it. He retired, for awhile, from his public practice at the Bar; and betook himſelf to more ſilent, but not leſs laudable, Employments. He found Friends;—where indeed he leaſt expected them! He has ſince ſucceeded in life beyond his merits—almoſt beyond his hopes. His former Literary Efforts have not been thought wholly unworthy approbation; on the preſent he reſts with ſomewhat more confidence, though with no ſmall portion of fear; ſince his future fate and purſuits may depend on its ſucceſs. On the Candour of THE PUBLIC (more particularly of THE PROFESSION) he relies; and whether he ſhall retain the Pen, or reſume the Gown, in public or in private, it ſhall be his unceaſing ſtudy to deſerve that Encouragement, which ſeldom fails to await on well-meant Endeavours, and honourable Exertions.

A

Modern Law Dictionary;

CONTAINING

The PRESENT STATE of the LAW in THEORY and PRACTICE;

With a DEFINITION of its TERMS; and the HISTORY of its RISE and PROGRESS.

AB, From the word abbot, in the beginning of the name of any place, ſhows that probably it once belonged to ſome abbey; or that an abbey was founded there. Blount.

ABACOT. A cap of ſtate wrought up in the form of two crowns; worn by our ancient Britiſh kings. Chron. Angl. 1463: Spelm. Gloſſ.

ABACTORS, abactores, ab abigendo.] Stealers and drivers away of cattle by herds, or in great numbers. Cowel.

ABACUS. Arithmetick: from the abacus, or table ſtrewed with duſt, on which the antients made their characters and figures. Cowel: Du Freſne. Hence ABACISTA. An Arithmetician. Cowel.

ABANDUM, abandonum.] Any thing ſequeſtered, proſcribed or abandoned. Abandon, i. e. in bannum res miſſa; a thing banned or denounced as forfeited and loſt; from whence, to abandon, deſert, or forſake as loſt and gone. See Title Inſurance.

ABARNARE, from Sax. Abarian.] To diſcover and diſcloſe to a magiſtrate any ſecret crime. Leg. Canuti, c. 104.

ABATAMENTUM. An entry by interpoſition. 1 Inſt. 277. See the ſucceeding articles.

TO ABATE, from the Fr. Abattre.] To proſtrate, break down, or deſtroy; and in law to abate a caſtle or fort is, to beat it down. Old Nat. Br. 45: Stat. Weſtm. 1. c. 17. Abattre maiſon, to ruin or caſt down a houſe, and level it with the ground; ſo to abate a nuiſance is to deſtroy, remove, or put an end to it.

To abate a writ, is to defeat or overthrow it, by ſhowing ſome error or exception. Brit. c. 48.—In the ſtatute de conjunctim feoffatis, it is ſaid the writ ſhall be abated; i. e. diſabled and overthrown. Stat. 34 E. 1. ſt. 1.—So it is ſaid an appeal ſhall abate, and be defeated by reaſon of covin or deceit. Staundf. P. C. 148.—And the juſtices ſhall cauſe the ſaid writ to be abated and quaſhed. Stat. 11 H. 6. c. 2.

The word abate, is alſo uſed in contradiſtinction to diſſeiſe; for as he that puts a perſon out of poſſeſſion of his houſe, land, &c. is ſaid to diſſeiſe; ſo he that ſteps in between the former poſſeſſor, and his heir, is ſaid to abate; he is called an abator, and this act of intruſion or interpoſition is termed an abatement. 1 Inſt. 277 a: Kitch. 173: Old Nat. Br. 91, 115.

ABATEMENT. For its leaſt uſual meanings ſee the two preceding articles.

In its preſent moſt general ſignification it relates to writs or plaints; and means, the quaſhing or deſtroying the plaintiff's writ or plaint.

A Plea in Abatement is, a plea put in by the defendant, in which he ſhews cauſe to the court why he ſhould not be impleaded or ſued; or if impleaded, not in the manner and form he then is; therefore praying that the writ or plaint may abate; that is, that the ſuit of the plaintiff may for that time ceaſe. 1 Inſt. 134 b, 277: F. N. B. 115: Cowel: Gilb. H. C. P. 186: Terms de Ley 1.

On this ſubject ſhall be conſidered

I. The various Pleas in Abatement.
   1. To the Juriſdiction of the Court.
   2. To the Perſon of the Plaintiff.
      a. Outlawry.
      b. Excommunication.
      c. Alienage.
      d. Attaint; and other Pleas in Abatement.
   3. To the Perſon of the Defendant.
      a. Privilege.
      b. Miſnomer.
      c. Addition.
   4. To the Writ and Action.
   5. To the Count or Declaration.
   6. On Account of; a. The Demiſe of the King.
      b. The Marriage } of the Parties.
      c. The Death }

II. The Time and Manner of pleading in Abatement; and herein of pleading in Bar or Abatement.

III. The Judgment in Abatement.

I. 1. The courts of Weſtminſter have a ſuperintendancy over all other courts, and may, if they exceed their jurisdiction, reſtrain them by prohibition; or, if their proceedings are erroneous, may rectify them by writs of error and falſe judgment. Nothing ſhall be intended within the juriſdiction of an inferior court, but what is expreſsly alleged; ſo that where an action on promiſe is brought in ſuch inferior court, not only the promiſe, but the conſideration of it (i. e. the whole cauſe of action) muſt be alleged to ariſe within that juriſdiction; ſuch inferior courts being confined in their original creation, to cauſes ariſing within the expreſs limits of their juriſdiction; and therefore if a debtor who has contracted a debt out of ſuch limited juriſdiction, comes within it, yet he cannot be ſued there for ſuch debt.

There are no pleas to the juriſdiction of the courts at Weſtminſter in tranſitory actions, unleſs the plaintiff by his declaration ſhews that the cauſe of action accrued within a county palatine, or it be between the ſcholars of Oxford, or Cambridge. 4 Inſt. 213: 1 Sid. 103.

There is a difference between a franchiſe to demand conuſance, and a franchiſe ubi breve domini regis non currit. For in the firſt caſe the tenant or defendant ſhall not plead it, but the lord of the franchiſe muſt demand conuſance; but in the other caſe the defendant muſt plead it to the writ. 4 Inſt. 224. See Titles, Franchiſe, Conuſance, County Palatine.

Where a franchiſe, either by letters patent or preſcription, hath a privilege of holding pleas within their juriſdiction, if the courts at Weſtminſter intrench on their privileges, they muſt demand conuſance; that is, deſire that the cauſe may be determined before them: for the defendant cannot plead it to the juriſdiction. And the reaſon is, becauſe when a defendant is arreſted by the king's writ, within a juriſdiction where the king's writ doth not run, he is not legally convened, and therefore he may plead it to the juriſdiction; but the creating a new franchiſe does not hinder the king's writ from running there as before, but only grants juriſdiction to the lord of the liberty. Bacon's Abr. tit. Courts. (D. 3.)

If the court has not a general juriſdiction of the ſubject, the defendant muſt plead to the juriſdiction, for he cannot take advantage of it on the general iſſue. And in every plea to the juriſdiction another juriſdiction muſt be ſtated. Cowp. 172.

The pleas to the juriſdiction, are either that the cauſe of action, or the perſon of the party, is not the object of the juriſdiction of the court; of the firſt ſort are pleas that the land is held in Ancient demeſne, or that the cauſe of action aroſe in the County Palatine, or within the Cinque Ports, or other inferiour courts, having peculiar local juriſdiction. Of the latter ſort is the plea of Privilege; but which is generally conſidered rather as a plea to the perſon of the defendant. See this Dictionary under thoſe titles; and poſt, Diviſion 3. a. of the preſent head.

2. a. Outlawry may be pleaded in abatement, becauſe the plaintiff having refuſed to appear to the proceſs of the law, thereby loſes its protection; but this is only a diſability till the outlawry is reverſed, or till he has obtained a charter of pardon. 1 Inſt. 128: Lit. § 197: Dy. 23, 222: Aſſ. 49: Br. Nonability, 25.

This diſability is only pleadable when the plaintiff ſues in his own right; for if he ſues in auter droit as executor or adminiſtrator, or as mayor with his commonalty, outlawry ſhall not diſable him; becauſe the perſon or body whom he repreſents has the privilege of the law. When the plaintiff brings a writ of error to reverſe an outlawry, the outlawry in that ſuit or in any other ſhall not diſable him. The outlawry itſelf muſt not be an objection, for that would be exceptio ejuſdem rei cujus petitur diſſolutio; and if a man were outlawed at ſeveral men's ſuits, and one ſhould be a bar to another, he could never reverſe any of them. 1 Inſt. 128: Doct. Plac. 396, 7.

When outlawry is pleaded in abatement, the plaintiff ſhall not reply that the outlawry is erroneous, for it is good till reverſed. 1 Lutw. 36.

As to the time and manner of pleading outlawry, ſee poſt, under Diviſion II. of this title Abatement.

Outlawry in a county palatine cannot be pleaded in any of the courts of Weſtminſter, for the plaintiff is only ouſted of his law within that juriſdiction. Gilb. Hiſt. C. P. 200: Fitz. Coron. 233. It has been ſuggeſted, but ſurely without reaſon, that outlawry, in the county palatine of Lancaſter, may be pleaded in the courts of Weſtminſter; becauſe that county was erected by act of parliament in the time of E. 3; whereas thoſe of Cheſter and Durham are by preſcription. 12 E. 4. 16: Doct. Plac. 396.

b. A perſon excommunicated is diſabled to do any judicial act; as to proſecute any action at law; (tho' he may be ſued;) be a witneſs, &c.

Excommunication is a good plea even to an executor or adminiſtrator, tho' they ſue in auter droit; for an excommunicated perſon is excluded from the body of the church, and is incapable to lay out the goods of the deceaſed to pious uſes; alſo it is one of the effects of excommunication, that he cannot be a proſecutor or attorney for any other perſon, and therefore cannot repreſent the deceaſed. 1 Inſt. 134: 43 E. 3. 13: Thel. 11.

But in an action brought by officers with their corporation, the defendant ſhall not plead excommunication in the officers; becauſe a corporation cannot be excommunicated as ſuch; and they ſue and anſwer by attorney. Thel. 11: 30 E. 3. 4: 1 Inſt. 134: 4 Inſt. 340.

Excommunication is no plea in a qui tam action; the ſtatute giving the informer ability to ſue. 12 Co. 61.

When excommunication is pleaded in the plaintiff, he ſhall not reply that he has appealed from the ſentence; for it is in force until repealed, and whilſt it is in force he cannot appear in any of the courts of juſtice; but he may reply that he is abſolved, for then his diſability is taken away. Bro. Excom. 3: 3 Bulſt. 72: 20 H. 6. 25: Roll. 226.

When prohibition is brought againſt a biſhop and he pleads excommunication againſt the plaintiff, and in the excommunication there is no cauſe thereof ſhewn, this is not a good plea; for in ſuch caſe it will be intended, that the excommunication was for endeavouring to hinder the biſhop's proceeding, by application to the temporal court; and if ſuch excommunication were allowed, it would deſtroy all prohibitions. Thel. 10, 11: 28 E. 3. 27: 8 Co. 68.

c. Alienage is a plea in abatement, now diſcouraged and but ſeldom uſed; the following however appears to be ſtill law on the ſubject.

It may be pleaded in abatement, in an action real, perſonal or mixed that the demandant or plaintiff is an alien, alien, if he be an alien enemy; and in an action real or mixed, that he is an alien, though he be in amity. But in an action personal it is no plea that he is an alien if he be in amity. 1 Inst. 129 b: Ast. Ent. 11: 9 E. 4. 7: Yelv. 198: 1 Bulst. 154: Bro. tit. Denizen. But see 1 Ld. Raym. 282.

Where the defendant pleads that the plaintiff is an alien, in abatement of the writ, it is triable where the writ is brought, and the replication must conclude to the country; but otherwise, it is said, where it is pleaded in bar, that the plaintiff is an alien, the replication must conclude with an averment. Salk. 2: West. 5: Amb. 394.

Where the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was an alien, born at Rouen in the kingdom of France, within the ligeance of the king of France; the plaintiff replied that he was an alien friend, born at Hamburgh, within the ligeance of the Emperor, and traversed that he was born at Rouen; Holt inclined that it was an ill traverse and offered an ill issue. Comb. 212. See title Aliens.

d. Attaint; It may be pleaded in abatement, that the plaintiff is attainted of treason or felony; or attainted in a præmunire; or that he hath abjured the realm. 1 Inst. 128 a, 129 b, 130 a: Noy. 1: Sho. 155.

Popish Recusancy, can no longer be considered as pleadable since the stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 32. See tit. Papist.

Coverture; It is also pleadable in abatement to the person of the plaintiff that she is a feme covert. 1 Inst. 132 b. and that she is the wife of the defendant. 1 Bro. Ent. 63. And by the defendant that she is herself a feme covert. Lutw. 23: Barnes 334. See tit. Baron and Feme, and post. 6, b.

Joint Actions; Of pleas in abatement for want of proper parties. See Com. Dig. tit. Abatement (E. 8.) (F. 4.) See also tit. Action, Jointenants, &c.

A defendant may plead in abatement to the person of the plaintiff, that there never was any such person in rerum naturâ. See Com. Dig. tit. Abatement (E. 16.)

3. a. The officers of each court enjoy the privilege of being sued only in those courts to which they respectively belong; because of the duty they are under of attending those courts, and left their clients' causes should suffer if they were drawn to answer to actions in other courts. 2 Mod. 297: Vaugh. 155: 2 H. 7. 2: 2 Ro. Ab. 272: 1 Lutw. 44, 639. So a baron of the Cinque Ports, is to be impleaded within that jurisdiction. See Com. Dig. tit. Abatement. (D. 3.) and this Dict. tit. Cinque Ports.

But this is to be understood when the plaintiff can have the same remedy against the officer in his own court, as in that where he sues him; for if money be attached in an attorney's hands by foreign attachment in the sheriff's court in London, the attorney shall not have his privilege; because in this case the plaintiff would be remediless. 1 Saund. 67, 8.

So if a writ of entry, or other real action be brought against an attorney of the king's bench, he cannot plead his privilege; for the king's bench hath not cognizance of real actions. 1 Saund. 67.

So if an attorney of the Common Pleas be sued in a criminal appeal, he shall not have his privilege; for his own court hath not cognizance of this action. 38 H. 6. 29 b: 9 E. 4. 35: Cro. Car. 585: 1 Leon. 189: 2 Leon. 156.

This privilege, which the courts indulge their officers with, is restrained to such suits only as they bring in their own right; for if they sue or are sued as executors or administrators, they then represent common persons and are entitled to no privilege. Hob. 177.

So if an officer of one court sue an officer of another court, the defendant shall not plead his privilege; for the attendance of the plaintiff is as necessary in his court as that of the defendant in his; and therefore the cause is legally attached in the court where the plaintiff is an officer. 2 Mod. 298: 2 Lev. 129: 2 Ro. Ab. 275, pl. 4: Moor. 556.

So if a privileged person brings a joint action, or if an action be brought against him and others, he shall not have his privilege; but if the action can be severed without doing any injury, the officer shall have his privilege. Dy. 377: Godb. 10: 2 Ro. Ab. 275: 2 Lev. 129: 1 Vent. 298, 9.

An officer shall not have his privilege against the king. Bro. Superfed. 1: 2 Ro. Ab. 274. But in a qui tam action, at the suit of an informer, he shall have his privilege. Lil. Reg. 7: 3 Lev. 398: Lutw. 193.

If a person who hath the privilege of being sued in another court, be in actual custody of the marshal of K. B. he cannot plead his privilege; but otherwise where he is bailed, and so only legally supposed in custody. 1 Salk. 1: Comb. 390.

The court of K. B. will take notice of the privilege of their own officers; as where a filazer of the king's bench was arrested by writ, he was discharged on common bail; being an immediate officer of the court where his attendance was absolutely necessary. Salk. 544. But where an attorney of the common pleas was sued by bill in the court of K. B. on motion for his being discharged the court denied it and put him to plead his privilege. 1 Mod. Ent. 26. See 1 Wils. 306: 2 Black. Rep. 1085.

After a general imparlance an officer cannot plead his privilege, because by imparling he affirms the jurisdiction of the court, but after a special imparlance he may plead his privilege. Bro. Priv. 25: 22 H. 6. 6, 22, 71: 1 Ro. Rep. 294: 1 Sid. 29: 2 Ro. Ab. 273, 9: Hardr. 365: 1 Lutw. 46: 1 Salk. 1. And now the common practice is to use a special imparlance. See further this Dict. tit. Privilege. Indeed no plea in abatement is good after a general imparlance. 4 Term Rep. 227.

b. Misnomer, is the using one name for another, the misnaming either of the parties. This may be pleaded in abatement by the defendant, whether the misnomer is in his own name, or in that of the plaintiff; and this in christian or surname, name of dignity, name of office or addition. See post. and Com. Dig. tit. Abatement. (E. 18.) (F. 17.)

But though a defendant may by pleading in abatement take advantage of a misnomer, yet in such plea he must set forth his right name, so as to give the plaintiff a better writ. Finch. 363: 9 H. 5, 1.—which is the intent of all pleas in abatement. 4 Term Rep. 227.

Where a defendant comes in gratis, or pleads by the name alledged by the plaintiff, he is estopped to allege any thing against it. Sty. 440. Where one is misnamed in a bond, the writ should be in the right name, and the count show that defendant, by such a name made the bond. To a plea of misnomer the plaintiff may reply, that defendant was known by the name in the writ. 1 Salk. 6, 7.

One defendant cannot plead misnomer of his companion, for the other defendant may admit himself to be the perſon in the writ. 1 Lutw. 36. The defendant, though his name be miſtaken, is not obliged to take advantage of it; and therefore if he be impleaded by a wrong name, and afterwards impleaded by his right name, he may plead in bar the former judgment, and aver that he is the ſame perſon. Gilb. H. C. P. 218.

Where an indictment for a capital crime is abated for miſnomer of the defendant, the court will not diſmiſs him, but cauſe him to be indicted de novo by his true name. 2 Hawk. P. C. 523. See further this Dict. title Miſnomer.

c. Addition, is a title given to a man beſides his chriſtian and ſurname, ſetting forth his eſtate, degree, trade, &c. Of eſtate, as yeoman, gentleman, eſquire, &c. Of degree as knight, earl, marquis, duke, &c. Of trade as merchant, clothier, carpenter, &c. There are likewiſe additions of place of reſidence as London, York, Briſtol, &c. If one be both a duke and earl, &c. he ſhall have the addition of the moſt worthy (i. e. ſuperior) dignity. 2 Inſt. 669. But the title of duke, marquis, earl, &c. are not properly additions but names of dignity. Terms de Ley 20. The title of knight or baronet is part of the party's name [as is alſo clarencieux or king at arms, &c.] and ought to be exactly uſed; but the titles of eſquire, gentleman, yeoman, &c. being no part of the names are merely additions. 1 Lil. 34. An earl of Ireland is not an addition of honour here in England, but ſuch perſon muſt be called by his chriſtian and ſurname with the addition of eſquire only; ſo ſons of Engliſh noblemen, though they have titles given them by curteſy in reſpect of their families, if they are ſued, muſt be named by their chriſtian and ſurnames, with the addition of eſquire; as, A. B. Eſq. commonly called Lord A. 1 Inſt. 16 b: 2 Inſt. 596, 666.

By the common law, if a man that had no name of dignity was named by his chriſtian and ſurname in all writs it was ſufficient. If he had an inferior name of dignity, as knight, &c. he ought to be named by his chriſtian and ſurname, with the name of dignity; but a duke, &c. might be ſued by his chriſtian name only, and name of dignity, which ſtands for his ſurname. 2 Inſt. 665, 6. By ſtat. 1 H. 5. c. 5, it is enacted that in ſuits or actions where proceſs of outlawry lies, (See 1 Salk. 5,) additions are to be made to the name of the defendant to ſhew his eſtate, myſtery, and place of dwelling; and that writs not having ſuch additions ſhall be abated, if the defendant take exception thereto, but not by the court ex officio. See Cro. Jac. 610: 1 Ro. Rep. 780. If a city be a county of itſelf, wherein are ſeveral pariſhes, addition thereof, as of London is ſufficient. But addition of a pariſh not in a city muſt mention the county, or it will not be good. 1 Danv. 237.

The name of earl if omitted abates the writ; Dav. Rep. 60 a; and it ſhall not be amended, Hob. 129: 1 Vent. 154. But if a perſon is created an earl pending the action, bill, or ſuit, it ſhall not abate. See ſtat. 1 E. 6. c. 7. § 3. But there muſt be an entry on the roll ſtating that after the laſt continuance, ff. on ſuch a day and year, the king by his letters patent created, &c. ſetting them forth with a profert in curiâ, &c. which the ſaid defendant doth not deny, &c. 1 Mod. Ent. 31, 32.

If there are two perſons father and ſon, with the ſame name and addition, in an action brought againſt the ſon, he ought to be diſtinguiſhed by the appellation of the younger, added to his other deſcription, or the writ may be abated; but in an action againſt the father he need not be diſtinguiſhed by the appellation of the elder. See 2 Hawk. P. C. 187.

On the whole it is proper to obſerve as to miſnomers and want of addition, that the courts of Weſtminſter will not abate a writ for a trifling miſtake; and will in all caſes amend, if poſſible, ſee title Amendment.

4. The writ being the foundation of the ſubſequent proceedings, great certainty and exactneſs is requiſite, to the end that no perſon be arreſted or attached by his goods, unleſs there appear ſufficient grounds to warrant ſuch proceedings; ſo that if the writ vary materially from that in the regiſter, or be defective in ſubſtance, the party may take advantage of it. See 5 Co. 32: 9 H. 7. 16: 10 E. 3. 1: Hob. 1, 51, 52, 80: Carth. 172. But where the writ ſhall not abate for variance from the regiſter, ſo that it be equivalent, ſee Hob. 1, 51, 52.

Where a demand is of two things, and it appears the plaintiff hath action only for one, the writ may not be abated in the whole, but ſhall ſtand for that which is good; but if it appear that tho' the plaintiff cannot have this writ which he hath brought for part, he may have another, the writ ſhall abate in the whole. 11 Rep. 45: 1 Saund. 285.

In caſe adminiſtration be granted, after the action brought, and this appears, the plaintiff's writ ſhall abate. Hob. 245.

It is a good plea in abatement that another action is depending for the ſame thing; for whenever it appears on record, that the plaintiff has ſued out two writs againſt the ſame defendant, for the ſame thing, the ſecond writ ſhall abate; and it is not neceſſary that both ſhould be pending at the time of the defendant's pleading in abatement; for if there was a writ in being at the time of ſuing out the ſecond, it is plain the ſecond was vexatious and ill, ab initio. But it muſt appear plainly to be for the ſame thing; for an aſſize of lands in one county ſhall not abate an aſſize in another county, for theſe cannot be the ſame lands. 4 H. 6. 24: 9 H. 6. 12: 5 Co. 61: Doct. Pl. 10.

In general writs, as treſpaſs, aſſize, covenant, where the ſpecial matter is not alledged, and the plaintiff is non-ſuited before he counts, and the ſecond writ is ſued pending the other, yet the former ſhall not be pleaded in abatement; becauſe it doth not appear to the court that it was for the ſame thing; for the firſt writ being general, the plaintiff might have declared for a diſtinct thing from what he demanded by the ſecond writ; but when the firſt is a ſpecial writ, and ſets forth the particular demand, as in a precipe quod reddat, &c. there the court can readily ſee that it is for the ſame thing; and therefore though the plaintiff be non-ſuited before he counts, yet the firſt ſhall abate the ſecond writ, it being apparently brought for the ſame thing. 5 Co. 61: Doct. Pl. 11, 12. In an action of debt, &c. another action depending in the courts of Weſtminſter for the ſame matter is a good plea in abatement; but a plea of an action in an inferior court is not good, unleſs judgment be given. 5 Co. 86: and ſee 5 Co. 62.

If a ſecond writ be brought teſted the ſame day the former is abated, it ſhall be deemed to be ſued out after the abatement of the firſt. Allen 34.

If an action pending in the ſame court, be pleaded to a ſecond action brought for the ſame thing, the plaintiff may may pray that the record may be inſpected by the court, or demand oyer of it, which if not given him in convenient time he may ſign his judgment. Dy. 227: Carth. 453, 517.

In action of debt on a judgment, defendant cannot plead a writ of error brought and pending either in bar or abatement; but the court uſually ſtays proceedings on terms till the error is decided. 1 Bac. Abr. 14.

5. After the party ſuing has declared, the party impleaded may demand oyer of the writ; and then if there be any fault or inſufficiency in the count for a cauſe apparent in itſelf, or if there be a variance between the count and the writ, or between the writ and a record, ſpecialty, &c. mentioned in the count, the party impleaded ought to ſhew it by his pleading. Tbel. lib. 10. c. 1. § 5: Fitz. Count. 27.

Defendant may plead in abatement of a declaration where the action is by original; but if it be by bill he muſt plead in abatement of the bill only. 5 Mod. 144. A little variance between the declaration and the bond pleaded will not vitiate the declaration; but uncertainty will abate it. Plowd. 84. The variance of the declaration from the obligation, or other deed on which it is grounded, will ſometimes abate the action. Hob. 18, 116: Moor. 645. And if a declaration aſſign waſte in a town not mentioned in the original writ, the writ of waſte ſhall abate. Hob. 38.

Likewiſe where the declaration is otherwiſe defective, in not purſuing the writ, or not ſetting forth the cauſe of action with that certainty which the law requires, or laying the offence in a different county from that in which the writ is brought. 1 New Abr. 6.

6. a. As to the demiſe of the king; at common law, all ſuits depending in the king's courts were diſcontinued by the death of the king; ſo that the plaintiffs were obliged to commence new actions, or to have re-ſummons or attachment on the former proceſſes, to bring the defendant in; but to prevent the inconvenience, expence and delay which this occaſioned, the ſtat. 1 E. 6. c. 7, was made.

Proceedings on an information, in nature of a quo warranto, are not abated by the demiſe of the crown. 2 Stra. 782. Where the king brings a writ of error in quare impedit, it abates by his death. 2 Stra. 843.

b. With reſpect to the marriage of the parties; coverture is a good plea in abatement, which may be either before the writ ſued, or pending the writ. By the firſt the writ is abated de facto, but the ſecond only proves the writ abateable; both are to be pleaded, with this difference, that coverture, pending the writ, muſt be pleaded, after the laſt continuance; whereas coverture before the writ brought, may be pleaded at any time, becauſe the writ is de facto abated. Doct. Pl. 3: 1 Leon. 168, 169: Vide 2 Ld. Raym. 1525: Comb. 449: Lut. 1639.

If a writ be brought by A. and B. as baron and feme, whereas they were not married until the ſuit depended, the defendant may plead this in abatement; for though they cannot have a writ in any other form, yet the writ ſhall abate, becauſe it was falſe when ſued out. Fitz. Brief, 476. If a writ be brought againſt a feme covert as ſole, ſhe may plead her coverture; but if ſhe neglects to do it, and there is a recovery againſt her as a feme ſole, the huſband may avoid it by writ of error, and may come in at any time and plead it. Latch. 24: Stile 254, 280: 2 Roll. Rep. 53: If an action be brought in an inferior court againſt a feme ſole, and pending the ſuit ſhe intermarries, and afterwards removes the cauſe by habeas corpus; and the plaintiff declares againſt her as a feme ſole, ſhe may plead coverture at the time of ſuing the habeas corpus; becauſe the proceedings here are de novo; and the court takes no notice of what was precedent to the habeas corpus; but upon motion on the return of the habeas corpus, the court will grant a procedendo. For though this be a writ of right, yet where it is to abate a rightful ſuit, the court may refuſe it; and the plaintiff had bail below to this ſuit, which by this contrivance he might be ouſted of, and poſſibly by the ſame means of the debt. 1 Salk. 8.

In ejectment againſt baron and feme, after verdict for the plaintiff, baron dies between the day of Niſi prius and the day in Bank; adjudged that the writ ſhould ſtand good againſt the feme, becauſe it is in nature of a treſpaſs, and the feme is charged for her own act; and therefore the action ſurvives againſt her. So if the wife had died, the baron ſhould have judgment entered againſt him. Cro. Jac. 356: Cro. Car. 509: 1 Roll. Rep. 14: Moor 469.

If a feme ſole plaintiff, after verdict, and before the day in Bank, takes huſband, ſhe ſhall have judgment, and the defendant cannot plead this coverture, for he has no day to plead it at. Cro. Car. 232: 1 Bulſt. 5.

If an original be filed againſt a feme ſole, and before the return ſhe marries, you may declare againſt her without taking notice of her huſband, for her intermarriage is no abatement of the writ in fact, but only makes it abateable. Comb. 449: 1 Roll. Rep. 53.

'Tis now in general held, that if a feme ſole commences an action, and pending the ſame marries, the ſuit is abated; but that it is otherwiſe with reſpect to a feme ſole defendant, as ſhe ſhall not take advantage of her own act. See further, title Baron and Feme.

c. The general rule is, that whenever the death of any party happens pending the writ, and yet the plaintiff is in the ſame condition as if ſuch party were living, there ſuch death makes no alteration or abatement of the writ. 1 New Abr. 7.

The death of a plaintiff did generally at common law abate the writ before judgment, till the ſtat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11; which declares that neither the death of plaintiff or defendant after interlocutory judgment ſhall abate it, if the action might be originally proſecuted by and againſt the executors or adminiſtrators of the parties: and if there are two or more plaintiffs or defendants, and one or more die, the writ or action ſhall not abate, if the cauſe of action ſurvives to the ſurviving plaintiff, or againſt the ſurviving defendant, but ſuch death being ſuggeſted on record the action ſhall proceed. For the caſes previous to this ſtatute, ſee Cro. Eliz. 652: 1 Inſt. 139: Dy. 279: Hard. 151. 164: Stile 299: 3 Mod. 249: Cro. Car. 426: 1 Jones 367: 1 Rol. Abr. 756: 1 Show. Rep. 186: 1 Vent. 34: 3 Mod. 249.

But in a writ of error, if there be ſeveral plaintiffs, and one dies, the writ ſhall abate, becauſe the writ of error is to ſet perſons in ſtatu quo, before the erroneous judgment given below; and they that are plaintiffs in error were diſtinct ſufferers in the judgment, ſince there might be different executions iſſued thereupon, and different repreſentatives were by ſuch judgment affected; and by conſequence the ſurvivor cannot proſecute the writ of error for the whole, leſt by a colluſive perſuaſion, or by negligence or deſign he ſhould hurt the repreſentative of the deceaſed. Bridg. 78: Yelv. 208: 10 Co. 1351: 1 Vent.

34: 1 Sid. 419. cont. But if any of the defendants in error die, yet all things ſhall proceed, becauſe the benefit of ſuch judgment goes to the ſurvivor, and he only is to defend it. Sid. 419: Yelv. 208: 1 L. Raym. 439. If there be ſeveral perſons named as plaintiffs in the writ, and one of them was dead at the time of purchaſing the writ, this may be pleaded in abatement; becauſe it falſifies the writ; and becauſe the right was in the ſurvivors, at the time of ſuing the writ, and the writ not according to the caſe. 20 Hen. 6. 30: 18 E. 4. 1: 2 H. 7. 16: 1 Brownl. 3, 4: Clift. Ent. 6: Raſt. Ent. 126.

By ſtat. 17 Car. 2. c. 8, (made perpetual by 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. § 5,) it is enacted, that the death of either of the parties between verdict and judgment, ſhall not be alledged for error, ſo as judgment be entered within two terms after ſuch verdict. See 1 Salk. 8: 2 Ld. Raym. 1415: Sid. 385.—See tit. Amendment.

II. A plea in abatement muſt be put in within four days after the return of the writ, becauſe the perſon coming in by the proceſs of the court ought not to have time to delay the plaintiff. Lutw. 1181: 2 Stra. 1192.

But if a declaration be delivered againſt one in cuſtody, he has the whole term to plead in abatement. Salk. 515.

If the declaration be delivered in the vacation, or ſo late in term, that defendant is not bound to plead to it that term, he may plead in abatement, within the firſt four days of next term.

As pleas in abatement enter not into the merits of the cauſe, but are dilatory, the law has laid the following reſtrictions on them. Firſt, by the ſtatute of 4 & 5 Ann. cap. 16. for amendment of the law, no dilatory plea is to be received unleſs on oath, and probable cauſe ſhewn to the court. Secondly, no plea in abatement ſhall be received after reſpondeas ouſter, for then they would be pleaded in infinitum. 2 Saund. 41. Thirdly, they are to be pleaded before imparlance. See Yelv. 112: 1 Lutw. 46, 178: 2 Lutw. 1117: Doct. Pla. 224: 4 Term Rep. 227. 520: Except where antient demeſne is pleaded; for this may be done after imparlance, becauſe the lord might reverſe the judgment by writ of diſceit, and it goes in bar of the action itſelf. For this ſee Dyer in marg. 210: Stile 30: Latch. 83: 5 Co. 105: 9 Co. 31. Han. Ent. 103.

A plea in abatement muſt be ſigned by counſel, and filed with the clerk of the papers; and without an affidavit annexed to it, judgment may be ſigned. Impey's Inſtruct. Cler. K. B.

With reſpect to pleas to the juriſdiction of the court, it is to be obſerved that the defendant muſt plead in propriâ perſonâ; for he cannot plead by attorney without leave of the court firſt had, which leave acknowledges the juriſdiction; for the attorney is an officer of the court; and if he put in a plea by an officer of the court, that plea muſt be ſuppoſed to be put in by leave of the court. 1 New Abr. 2.

The defendant muſt make but half defence, for if he makes the full defence quando & ubi curia conſideraverit, &c. he ſubmits to the juriſdiction of the court. Lutw. 9: 1 Show. Rep. 386.

If a plea is pleaded to the juriſdiction of the court, it ought to conclude with a prayer of judgment in this manner, viz. The ſaid defendant prays judgment, whether the court will take any further cognizance of the ſaid plea. 1 Mod. Ent. 34.

Pleas in diſability of the plaintiff, may not be pleaded after a general imparlance: 1 Lutw. 19. In pleading outlawry in diſability in another court, the ancient way was to have the record of the outlawry itſelf ſub pede ſigilli by certiorari and mittimus; (See Doct. Pl. 393: Stam. 103: Fitz. Coron. 233;) but this being very expenſive, it is now ſufficient to plead the capias utlagatum under the ſeal of the court from whence it iſſues; for the iſſuing of execution could not be without the judgment; and therefore ſuch execution is a proof to the court that there is ſuch a judgment, which is a proof that the defendant's plea of matter of record is proved by a matter of record; and conſequently appears to the court not to be merely dilatory; and therefore on ſhewing ſuch execution, if the plaintiff will plead nul tiel record, the court will give the defendant a day to bring it in. Co. Lit. 128: Doct. Plac. See tit. Outlawry.

Outlawry may be pleaded in bar, after it is pleaded in abatement, becauſe the thing is forfeited, and the plaintiff has no right to recover. 11 H. 7. 11: 2 Lutw. 1604.

Outlawry may be always pleaded in abatement, but not in bar, unleſs the cauſe of action be forfeited. Co. Lit. 128. b: Doct. Pl. 395.

In perſonal actions, where the damages are uncertain, outlawry cannot be pleaded in bar; but in actions on the caſe, where the debt to avoid the law wager, is turned into damages, there outlawry may be pleaded in bar, for it was veſted in the king, by the forfeiture, as a debt certain, and due to the outlaw; and the turning it into damages, whereby it becomes uncertain, ſhall not diveſt the king of what he was once lawfully poſſeſſed of. 2 Lutw. 1604: 3 Lev. 29: 2 Vent. 282: 3 Leon. 197, 205: Cro. Eliz. 204: Owen 22.

Where excommunication is pleaded, it is not ſufficient to ſhew the writ de excommunicato capiendo under the ſeal of the court; for the writ is no evidence of the continuance of the excommunication, ſince he may be abſolved by the biſhop, and that will not appear in the king's court, becauſe ſuch aſſoilment is not returned into the king's court from whence the ſignificavit is ſent.

Alienage may be pleaded either in bar or abatement: In the latter caſe to an alien in league; in the former to an alien enemy. 1 Inſt. 129 b. See ante I. 2. c.

If a plea in abatement be pleaded to the perſon of the plaintiff, there it muſt conclude, if he ought to be compelled to anſwer. 1 Mod. Ent. 34.

In all pleas of abatement which relate to the perſon, there is no neceſſity of laying a venue, for all ſuch pleas are to be tried where the action is laid. 1 Bac. Abr. 15.

If it be pleaded to the writ, then the plea concludes with the prayer of judgment of the writ, and that the writ may be quaſhed. When it is to the action of the writ, there he ſhould ſhew that the party ought not to have that writ, but by the matter of his plea ſhould intimate to him how he ſhould have a better. Latch. 178. Reſpondere non debet is a proper beginning to a plea to the juriſdiction of the court, but a plea of ne unques executor, ought to begin with petit judic' de billâ 5 Mod. 132, 133. 146: 1 Saund. 283: 2 Saund. 97. 189, 190. 339: Lutw. 44: Show. 4.—In a replication to a plea in abatement where matter of fact is pleaded, the plaintiff muſt pray his damages; but where matter of law is pleaded, the plaintiff muſt only pray that his writ may be maintained. 1 Ld. Raym. 339. 594: 2 Ld. Raym. 1022.—If one pleads matter of abatement, and concludes in bar, Et petit judicium ſi actionem actionem habere debet, though he begins in abatement, and the matter be also in abatement, yet the conclusion being in bar, makes it a bar; and the reason is, because you admit the writ by concluding specially against the action. 18 H. 6. 27: 32 H. 6. 17: 36 H. 6. 18: 22 H. 6. 536: 1 Show. 4. 2 Ld. Raym. 1018.—If a man pleads matter in bar, and concludes in abatement, it shall be taken for a plea in bar, from the nature and reason of the thing; for the plaintiff can have no writ if he has not a cause of action, and therefore the court will take the plea to be in bar. 37 H. 6. 24: 36 H. 6. 24: 2 Mod. 6.

The nature of a plea in abatement is to intitle the plaintiff to a better writ; See 4 Term Rep. 227; and it hath been expressly resolved, that where the plea is in abatement, and it is of necessity that the defendant must disclose matter of bar, he shall have his election to take it either by way of bar or abatement. 2 Roll. Rep. 64. Salkild v. Shilton. In short, whatever destroys the plaintiff's action, and disables him for ever from recovering, may be pleaded in bar. But the defendant is not always obliged to plead in bar, but may plead in abatement, as in replevin for goods, the defendant may plead property in himself, or in a stranger, either in bar or in abatement, for if the plaintiff cannot prove property in himself, he fails of his action for ever; and it is of no avail to him who has the property if he has it not. 1 Vent. 249. 2 Lev. 92: 1 Salk. 5. 94: Carth. 243.

Where matter of bar may be pleaded in abatement, vide 2 Ld. Raym. 1207, 1208.

If a defendant together with a plea in abatement plead also a plea in bar, or the general issue, he thereby waves the plea in abatement; and the plea in bar or general issue only shall be tried. 2 Hawk. P. C. 277, and the authorities there cited.

III. If issue be taken upon a plea to the writ, judgment against the defendant is peremptory; but if there be a demurrer, the judgment is then, only that the plaintiff answer over. Yelv. 12: Allen 66.

Whatever matters are pleaded in abatement of an appeal or indictment of felony, and found against the defendant, yet he may afterwards plead over to the felony. 2 Hawk. P. C. 277. But in criminal cases, not capital, on demurrer in abatement adjudged against the party, the court will give final judgment, and not respondeas ouster. Ibid. 471.

In appeals of mayhem and all civil actions (except assizes of mort d'ancestor, novel disseisin, nuisance and juris utrum) if a plea in abatement triable by the county be found against the defendant, he shall not be suffered afterwards to plead any new matter, but final judgment shall be given against him. 2 Hawk. P. C. 277; and see the authorities there cited.

Upon a judgment in waste for the damages recovered, the defendant demurs partly in abatement, and partly in bar, the court shall give judgment in chief. Show. 255. In debt, if the defendant pleads in abatement to the writ, to which the plaintiff imparls, and at the day given, the defendant makes default, judgment is final upon the default, though the plea was only in abatement. 10 E. 4. 7: Mod. Cases 5. The judgment for the defendant, on a plea in abatement, is quod breve, or narratio cassetur; if issue be joined on a plea in abatement, and it be found for the plaintiff, it shall be peremptory against the defendant, and the judgment shall be quod recuperet, because the defendant chusing to put the whole weight of his cause upon this issue, when he might have had a plea in chief, is an admittance that he had no other defence. Yelv. 112: 2 Show. 42: Str. 532. and in this case the jury who try that issue shall assess the damages.

If there be two defendants and they plead two several pleas in abatement, and there be issue to one and demurrer to the other, if the issue be found for the defendant the court will not proceed on the demurrer; and sic vice versa, for either way the writ is abated, and the other plea becomes useless. Hob. 250: 1 Bac. Abr. 15.

ABATOR, See Abate.

ABATUDA. Any thing diminished.—Moneta abatuda, is money clipped or diminished in value. Cowel: Du Fresne.

ABBACY, abbatia.] The government of a religious house, and the revenues thereof, subject to an abbot, as bishoprick from bishop.

ABBAT, or Abbot; abbas, Lat.—abbé, Fr.—abbud, Sax. by some derived from the Syriac abba, pater.] A spiritual lord or governor, having the rule of a religious house. Of these abbots here in England some were elective, some presentative; and some were mitred, and some were not; such as were mitred had episcopal authority within their limits, being exempted from the jurisdiction of the diocesan; but the other sort of abbots were subject to the diocesan in all spiritual government. The mitred abbots were lords of parliament, and called abbots sovereign, and abbots general, to distinguish them from the other abbots. And as there were abbots, so there were also lords priors, who had exempt jurisdiction, and were likewise lords of parliament. Some reckon twenty-six of these lords abbots and priors that sat in parliament. Sir Edw. Coke says, there were twenty-seven parliamentary abbots and two priors. 1 Inst. 97. In the parliament 20 R. 2, there were but twenty-five; but anno 4 Ed. 3, in the summons to the parliament at Winton more are named. And in Monasticon Anglicanum there is also mention of more, the names of which were as follow: abbots of St. Austin Canterbury, Ramsey, Peterborough, Croyland, Evesham, St. Bennet de Hulmo, Thornby, Colchester, Leicester, Winchcomb, Westminster, Cirencester, St. Albans, St. Mary York, Shrewsbury, Selby, St. Peter's Gloucester, Malmsbury, Waltham, Thorney, St. Edmunds, Beaulieu, Abingdon, Hide, Reading, Glastonbury and Osney,—And priors of Spalding, St. John's of Jerusalem, and Lewes.—To which were afterwards added the abbots of St. Austin's Bristol, and of Bardeny, and the priory de Sempringham. See also Spelman's Glossary. These abbeys and priories were founded by our ancient kings and great men, from the year 602 to 1133. An abbot with the monks of the same house were called the convent, and made a corporation. Terms de Ley 4.—By stat. 27 H. 8. c. 28, all abbeys, monasteries, priories, &c. not above the value of 200*l. per ann.* were given to the king, who sold the lands at low rates to the gentry. Anno 29 H. 8, the rest of the abbots, &c. made voluntary surrenders of their houses to obtain favour of the king; and anno 31 H. 8, a bill was brought into the house to confirm those surrenders; which passing, completed the dissolution, except the hospitals and colleges, which were not dissolved, the first till the 33d, and the last till the 37th of H. 8; when commissioners were appointed to enter and seize the said lands, &c.

ABBATIS. An avener or ſteward of the ſtables; an oſtler. Spelm.

ABBROCHMENT, abbrocamentum.] The foreſtalling of a market or fair. MS. Antiq.

ABBUTTALS. See Abuttals.

To ABDICATE, abdicare.] To renounce or refuſe any thing. Terms de Ley 5.

ABDICATION, abdicatio.] In general, is where a magiſtrate or perſon in office, renounces and gives up the ſame, before the term of ſervice is expired. And this word is frequently confounded with reſignation, but differs from it, in that abdication is done purely and ſimply; whereas reſignation is in favour of ſome other perſon. Chamb. Dict. 'Tis ſaid to be a renunciation, quitting and relinquiſhing, ſo as to have nothing further to do with a thing; or the doing of ſuch actions as are inconſiſtent with the holding of it. On king James II's leaving the kingdom, and abdicating the government, the Lords would have had the word deſertion made uſe of; but the Commons thought it was not comprehenſive enough, for that the king might then have liberty of returning. The Scots called it a forefaulture (forfeiture) of the crown, from the verb forisfacio.—This word was fully canvaſſed in the Parliamentary Debates, at that time.

ABDITORIUM. An abditory or hiding place, to hide and preſerve goods, plate, or money; and is uſed for a cheſt in which reliques are kept, as mentioned in the inventory of the church of York, Mon. Ang. p. 173.

ABEREMURDER, aberemurdrum.] Plain or downright murder; as diſtinguiſhed from the leſs heinous crimes of man-ſlaughter and chance-medley. It is derived from the Saxon æbere, apparent, notorious, and morth, murder; and was declared a capital offence, without fine or commutation, by the laws of Canute, cap. 93; and of Hen. 1. cap. 13. Spelm.

To ABET, abettare, from the Saxon a, (ad vel uſque) and bedan or beteren, to ſtir up or incite.] In our law ſignifies to encourage or ſet on; the ſubſtantive abetment is uſed for an encouraging or inſtigation. Staundf. Pl. Cr. 105. An abettor (abettator) is an inſtigator or ſetter on; one that promotes or procures a crime. Old Nat. Br. 21. See Title Acceſſary.

ABEYANCE, or abbayance, from the Fr. bayer, to expect.] Is what is in expectation, remembrance, and intendment of law. By a principle of law, in every land there is a fee-ſimple in ſomebody, or it is in abeyance; that is, though for the preſent it be in no man, yet it is in expectancy, belonging to him that is next to enjoy the land. 1 Inſt. 342. The word abeyance hath been compared to what the civilians call hæreditatem jacentem; for as the civilians ſay lands and goods jacent, ſo the common lawyers ſay that things in like eſtate are in abeyance; as the logicians term it in poſſe, or in underſtanding; and as we ſay in nubibus, that is, in conſideration of law. See Plowd. Rep. 547.

If a man be a patron of a church, and preſents one thereto, the fee of the lands and tenements pertaining to the rectory is in the parſon; but if the parſon die, and the church become void, then the fee is in abeyance, until there be a new parſon preſented, admitted, and inducted; for the patron hath not the fee, but only the right to preſent, the fee being in the incumbent that is preſented. Terms de Ley 6.

If a man makes a leaſe for life, the remainder to the right heirs of J. S. the fee-ſimple is in abeyance until J. S. dies. 1 Inſt. 342. If lands be leaſed to A. B. for life, the remainder to another perſon for years, the remainder for years is in abeyance, until the death of the leſſee for life; and then it ſhall veſt in him in remainder as a purchaſer, and as a chattel ſhall go to his executors. 3 Leon. 23. Where tenant for term of another's life dieth, the freehold of the lands is in abeyance till the entry of the occupant. 1 Inſt. 342 b.

Fee-ſimple in abeyance cannot be charged until it comes in eſſe ſo as to be certainly charged or aliened; though by poſſibility it may fall every hour. 1 Inſt. 378.

The neceſſity there was in the old law, that there ſhould always be ſome perſon to do the feudal duties, to fill the poſſeſſion and to anſwer the actions which might be brought for the fief, introduced the maxim that the freehold could never be in abeyance. (See 2 Wilſ. 165.) But it was admitted there were ſome caſes in which the inheritance when ſeparated from the freehold might be ſo. But this abeyance or ſuſpenſion of the inheritance could not but be conſidered with a very jealous eye, and it was agreed that it ſhould be diſcountenanced and diſcouraged as much as poſſible, and allowed upon none but the moſt urgent occaſions.—The chief reaſons of this may be found in Blackſtone's argument in the caſe of Perryn and Blake; and Mr. Hargrave's obſervations on the rule in Shelly's caſe. To theſe reaſons the modern law has added her marked and unremitted odium of every reſtraint upon alienation; it being clear that no reſtraint could be more effectual than the admiſſion of a ſuſpenſion of the inheritance. The ſame principles have in ſome degree given riſe to the well known rule of law, that a preceding eſtate of freehold is indiſpenſably neceſſary for the ſupport of a contingent remainder; and they influence in ſome degree the doctrines reſpecting the deſtruction of contingent remainders. See 1 Inſt. 216 a, and 342 b. and the notes there.

As to the abeyance of titles of honour, and their being revived by the royal nomination, ſee 1 Inſt. 165 a; where Lord Coke ſays, that if an earl of Cheſter die, leaving more daughters than one, the eldeſt ſhall not of right be a counteſs, but the king, may for the uncertainty, confer the dignity on which daughter he pleaſes. And this doctrine, ſays Mr. Hargrave in his note, is undoubtedly law, though our books furniſh little matter on the ſubject; and there are many inſtances of an exertion of this prerogative. One of the moſt remarkable took place in the perſon of the late Mr. Norborn Berkley who in 1764 was called to the Houſe of Peers in right of the old barony of Botetourt, after an abeyance of ſeveral centuries, and was allowed to ſit according to the antiquity of that barony. See Caſ. in Dom. Proc. 1764. Another inſtance was in the caſe of Sir Francis Daſhwood, late Lord De Spencer; for in 1763 he was called to the antient barony of that name in right of his deceaſed mother, who was eldeſt ſiſter and one of the co-heirs of an earl of Weſtmorland, on whoſe death that barony had become in abeyance, and being ſo ſummoned he took his ſeat as premier baron in place of Lord Abergavenny, who before poſſeſſed that diſtinction.

ABILITY to inherit. See title Alien.

ABISHERING or ABISHERSING. Is underſtood to be quit of amercements. It originally ſignified a forfeiture feiture or amercement, and is more properly miſhering, miſherſing, or miſkering, according to Spelman. It hath, ſince been termed a liberty or freedom; becauſe whereever this word is uſed in a grant or charter, the perſons to whom made, have the forfeitures and amercements of all others, and are themſelves free from the controul of any within their fee. Raſtal's Abr: Terms de Ley 7.

ABJURATION, abjuratio.] A forſwearing or renouncing by oath: in the old law it ſignified a ſworn baniſhment, or an oath taken to forſake the realm for ever. Staundf. Pl. C. l. 2. c. 40.

Formerly in king Edward the Confeſſor's time, and other reigns down to the 22 H. 8, (in imitation of the clemency of the Roman emperors towards ſuch as fled to the church,) if a man had committed felony here, and he could fly to a church or church-yard before his apprehenſion, he might not be taken from thence to be tried for his crime; but on confeſſion thereof before the juſtice, or before the coroner, he was admitted to his oath, to abjure or forſake the realm; which privilege he was to have forty days, during which time any perſons might give him meat and drink for his ſuſtenance, but not after, on pain of being guilty of felony: See Horn's Mirror, lib. 1. But at laſt, this puniſhment being but a perpetual confinement of the offender to ſome ſanctuary, wherein (upon abjuration of his liberty and free habitation) he would chuſe to ſpend his life, (as appears by the ſtat. anno 22 H. 8. c. 14,) this privilege was aboliſhed by ſtat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 28; and this kind of abjuration ceaſed. 2 Inſt. 629.

As to the effect of abjuration, on the marriage tie, ſee tit. Baron & Feme.

In its modern and now more uſual ſignification, it extends to the perſon as well as place; as for a man to abjure the Pretender by oath, is to bind himſelf not to own any regal authority in the perſon called the Pretender, nor ever to pay him any obedience, &c. See on this ſubject, tit. Nonconformiſts, Oaths, Papiſt, Recuſants, &c.

ABOLITION. A deſtroying or effacing, or putting out of memory: it alſo ſignifies the leave given by the king, or judges, to a criminal accuſer to deſiſt from further proſecution. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21.

TO ABRIDGE, abbreviare, from the Fr. abbreger.] To make ſhorter in words ſo as to retain the ſenſe and ſubſtance. And in the common law it ſignifies particularly the making a declaration or count ſhorter, by ſevering ſome of the ſubſtance from it: a man is ſaid to abridge his plaint in aſſize, and a woman her demand in action of dower, where any land is put into the plaint or demand which is not in the tenure of the defendant; for if the defendant pleads non-tenure, joint-tenancy, &c. in abatement of the writ, as to part of the lands, the plaintiff may leave out thoſe lands, and pray that the tenant may anſwer to the reſt. See Brook. tit. Abridgment, vide 21 H. 8. c. 3.

ABRIDGEMENT. A large work contracted into a narrow compaſs. See tit. Books, Literary Property.

ABROGATE, abrogare.] To diſannul or take away any thing: to abrogate a law, is to lay aſide or repeal it. Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 3.

ABSENTEES, or des abſentees. A parliament ſo called, was held at Dublin 10 May, 8 Hen. 8. And mentioned in letters patent, dated 29 Hen. 8. 4 Inſt. 354.

ABSOLVE. See Aſſoile.

ABSONIARE. A word uſed by the Engliſh Saxons in the oath of fealty, and ſignifying to ſhun or avoid.—As in the form of the oath among the Saxons recorded by Somner.

ABSQUE HOC. See title Traverſe.

ABUTTALS, from the French abutter or abouter, to limit or bound.] The buttings and boundings of lands, Eaſt, Weſt, North or South, with reſpect to the places, by which they are limited and bounded. Camden tells us that limits were diſtinguiſhed by hillocks raiſed in the lands called Botentines, whence we have the word butting. The ſides on the breadth of lands are properly adjacentes, lying or bordering; and the ends in length abbuttantes, abutting or bounding. The boundaries and abuttals of corporation and church lands, and of pariſhes, are preſerved by an annual proceſſion. Boundaries are of ſeveral ſorts; ſuch as incloſures of hedges, ditches and ſtones in common fields, brooks, rivers, and highways, &c. of manors and lordſhips.

ACCAPITARE, accapitum. To pay relief to lords of manors.—Capitali domino accapitare. Fleta, l. 2. c. 50.

ACCEDAS AD CURIAM. A writ to the ſheriff where a man hath received falſe judgment in a hundred court, or court baron. It iſſues out of the Chancery, but is returnable into B. R. or C. B. And is in the nature of the writ de falſo judicio, which lies for him that had received falſe judgment in the county-court. In the Regiſter of Writs, it is ſaid to be a writ that lies as well for juſtice delayed, as for falſe judgment; and that it is a ſpecies of the writ recordare, the ſheriff being to make record of the ſuit in the inferior court, and certify it into the king's court. Reg. Orig. 9, 56: F. N. B. 18: Dyer 169.

ACCEDAS AD VICECOMITEM. Where a ſheriff hath a writ called Pone delivered to him, but ſuppreſſeth it, this writ is directed to the coroner, commanding him to deliver a writ to the ſheriff. Reg. Orig. 83.

ACCEPTANCE, acceptatio.] The taking and accepting of any thing in good part, and as it were a tacit agreement to a preceding act, which might have been defeated and avoided, were it not for ſuch acceptance had.

The acceptance of uncertain things, as cuſtoms, &c. made over, may not be pleaded in ſatisfaction of a certain ſum due on bond. Cro. Car. 193. If a woman hath title to an eſtate of inheritance, as dower, &c. ſhe ſhall not be barred by any collateral ſatisfaction or recompence: and no collateral acceptance can bar any right of inheritance or freehold, without ſome releaſe, &c. 4 Rep. 1. When a man is entitled to a thing in groſs, he is not bound to accept it by parcels; and if a leſſor diſtrain for rent, he is not obliged to accept part of it; nor in action of detinue, part of the goods, &c. 3 Salk. 2.

Debt upon bond conditioned for the obligor to make an aſſurance of ſuch lands to ſuch uſes as in the condition mentioned; the defendant pleaded, that he had made a feoffment of the ſame lands to other uſes than in the condition expreſſed, which the obligee had accepted; upon demurrer it was adjudged an ill plea; for the obligor ought not to vary from the uſes ſet forth in the condition. 1 Brownl. 60.

Acceptance of a leſs ſum may be in ſatisfaction of a greater ſum, if it be before the day on which the money becomes due. 3 Bulſt. 301. See title Payment.

ACCESSARY or ACCESSORY. Acceſſorius, Particeps criminis.] One guilty of a felonious offence, not principally, but by participation; as by command, advice, or concealment, &c.

Abettors and Accomplices alſo come in ſome meaſure under the name, though the former not ſtrictly under the legal definition, of Acceſſories. An Abettor is one who, ſtirs up, incites, inſtigates or encourages, or who commands, counſels or procures, another to commit felony; and in many, indeed in almoſt all caſes, is now conſidered as much a principal as the actual felon, in ſome caſes more, as in the caſe of murder. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. l. 2. c. 29. § 7, 8: & c. 33. § 98—103. An Accomplice is one of many equally concerned in a felony, and is generally applied to thoſe who are admitted to give evidence againſt their fellow criminals, for the furtherance of juſtice which might otherwiſe be eluded; and this is done on the ancient principle of law relative to Approvers. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. l. 2. c. 37. § 3, 7, & notes: 4 Comm. 329.

The following extracts from Blackſtone's Commentaries, (4 Comm. 34—40 & 323) with ſome ſlight additions inſerted, ſeem to be moſt proper to give the reader a methodized general idea of the ſubject.—Conſult alſo Hale's Hiſt. P. C. and Hawk. P. C. for fuller information.

I. Of Principals.—A man may be principal in an offence in two degrees. A principal in the firſt degree, is he that is the actor, or abſolute perpetrator of the crime; and in the ſecond degree, he who is preſent, aiding and abetting the fact to be done. 1 Hale's P. C. 615.—Which preſence need not always be an actual immediate ſtanding by, within ſight or hearing of the fact; but there may be alſo a conſtructive preſence, as when one commits a robbery or murder, and another keeps watch or guard at ſome convenient diſtance. Foſter 350. And this rule hath alſo other exceptions: for, in caſe of murder by poiſoning, a man may be a principal felon, by preparing and laying the poiſon, or perſuading another to drink it, (Keb. 52,) who is ignorant of its poiſonous quality, (Foſter 349,) or giving it to him for that purpoſe; and yet not adminiſter it himſelf, nor be preſent when the very deed of poiſoning is committed. 3 Inſt. 138. And the ſame reaſon will hold, with regard to other murders committed in the abſence of the murderer, by means which he had prepared before-hand, and which probably could not fail of their miſchievous effect. As by laying a trap, or pitfall, for another, whereby he is killed; letting out a wild beaſt, with an intent to miſchief; or exciting a madman to commit murder, ſo that death thereupon enſues: in every of theſe caſes the party offending is guilty of murder as a principal in the firſt degree. For he cannot be called an acceſſary, that neceſſarily preſuppoſing a principal; and the poiſon, the pitfall, the beaſt, or the madman cannot be held principals, being only the inſtruments of death. As therefore he muſt be certainly guilty either as principal or acceſſary, and cannot be ſo as acceſſary, it follows that he muſt be guilty as principal: and if principal, then in the firſt degree, for there is no other criminal, much leſs a ſuperior in the guilt, whom he could aid, abet, or aſſiſt. 1 Hale's P. C. 617: 2 Hawk. P. C. 441, 2.

II. Of Acceſſories.—An Acceſſory is he who is not the chief actor in the offence, nor preſent at its performance, but is ſome way concerned therein, either before or after the fact committed. In conſidering the nature of which degree of guilt, we will, examine 1ſt. What offences admit of acceſſories, and what not: 2. Who may be an acceſſory before the fact: 3. Who may be an acceſſory after it: 4. How acceſſories, conſidered merely as ſuch, and diſtinct from principals are to be treated: 5. Of acceſſories or accomplices accuſing principals.

1. In high treaſon there are no acceſſories, but all are principals: the ſame acts, that make a man acceſſory in felony, making him a principal in high treaſon, upon account of the heinouſneſs of the crime. 3 Inſt. 138: 1 Hale's P. C. 613. Beſides, it is to be conſidered, that the bare intent to commit treaſon is many times actual treaſon; as imagining the death of the king, or conſpiring to take away his crown. And, as no one can adviſe and abet ſuch a crime without an intention to have it done, there can be no acceſſories before the fact, ſince the very advice and abetment amount to principal treaſon. But this will not hold in the inferior ſpecies of high treaſon, which do not amount to the legal idea of compaſſing the death of the king, queen, or prince. For in theſe, no advice to commit them, unleſs the thing be actually performed, will make a man a principal traitor. Foſter 342. In petit treaſon, murder and felonies with or without benefit of clergy, there may be acceſſories: except only in thoſe offences, which by judgment of law are ſudden and unpremeditated, as manſlaughter and the like, which therefore cannot have any acceſſories before the fact. 1 Hale's P. C. 615. So too in petit larceny, and in all crimes under the degree of felony, there are no acceſſories either before or after the fact: but all perſons concerned therein, if guilty at all, are principals. 1 Hale's P. C. 613. the ſame rule holding with regard to the higheſt and loweſt offences; though upon different reaſons. In treaſon all are principals, propter odium delicti; in treſpaſs all are principals, becauſe the law, quæ de minimis non curat, does not deſcend to diſtinguiſh the different ſhades of guilt in petty miſdemeanors. It is a maxim that acceſſorius ſequitur naturam ſui principalis: 3 Inſt. 139: and therefore an acceſſory cannot be guilty of a higher crime than his principal, being only puniſhed as a partaker of his guilt. So that if a ſervant inſtigates a ſtranger to kill his maſter, this being murder in the ſtranger as principal, of courſe the ſervant is acceſſory only to the crime of murder, though had he been preſent and aſſiſting he would have been guilty, as principal, of petty treaſon, and the ſtranger of murder. 2 Hawk. P. C. 441, 2.

Though generally an act of parliament, creating a felony, renders (conſequentially) acceſſaries before and after, within the ſame penalty, yet the ſpecial penning of the act of parliament in ſuch caſes ſometimes varies the caſe. Thus the ſtatute of 3 Hen. 7. c. 2, againſt taking away maidens, &c. makes the offence and the procuring and abetting, abetting, yea and wittingly receiving alſo, to be all equally principal felonies, and excluded of clergy. 1 Hale's P. C. 614.

In what caſes acceſſaries are excluded from clergy, ſee tit. Felonies without Clergy.

2. Sir Matthew Hale (5 Hale's P. C. 615, 616) defines An acceſſory before the fact to be one, who being abſent at the time the crime was committed, doth yet procure, counſel, or command another to commit a crime. Herein abſence is neceſſary to make him an acceſſory: for if ſuch procurer, or the like, be preſent he is guilty of the crime as principal. If A. then adviſes B. to kill another, and B. does, in the abſence of A. now B. is principal, and A. is acceſſory in the murder. And this holds though the party killed be not in rerum naturâ at the time of the advice given. As if A. the reputed father, adviſes B. the mother of a baſtard child, unborn, to ſtrangle it when born, and ſhe does ſo, A. is acceſſory to the murder. Dyer 186. And it is alſo ſettled, (Foſter 125,) that whoever procureth a felony to be committed, though it be by the intervention of a third perſon, is an acceſſory before the fact. It is likewiſe a rule, that he who in anywiſe commands or counſels another to commit an unlawful act is acceſſory to all that enſues upon that unlawful act, but is not acceſſory to any act diſtinct from the other; as if A. commands B. to beat C. and B. beats him ſo that he dies, B. is guilty of murder as principal, and A. as acceſſory; but if A. commands B. to burn C.'s houſe, and he in ſo doing commits a robbery, now A. though acceſſary to the burning, is not acceſſary to the robbery, for that is a thing of a diſtinct and unconſequential nature. 1 Hale's P. C. 617. But if the felony committed be the ſame in ſubſtance with that which is commanded, and only varying in ſome circumſtantial matters; as if, upon a command to poiſon A. he is ſtabbed or ſhot, and dies, the commander is ſtill acceſſory to the murder, for the ſubſtance of the thing commanded was the death of A. and the manner of its execution is a mere collateral circumſtance. 2 Hawk. P. C. 443. By ſtat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9, benefit of clergy is taken away from acceſſories before the fact to burglary, by commanding, counſelling, &c.

3. An acceſſory after the fact may be, where a perſon, knowing a felony to have been committed, receives, relieves, comforts, or aſſiſts the felon. 1 Hale's P. C. 618. Therefore to make an acceſſory ex poſt facto, it is in the firſt place requiſite that he knows of the felony committed. 2 Hawk. P. C. 446. In the next place, he muſt receive, relieve, comfort, or aſſiſt him. And, generally, any aſſiſtance whatever given to a felon, to hinder his being apprehended, tried, or ſuffering puniſhment, makes the aſſiſter an acceſſory. As furniſhing him with a horſe to eſcape his purſuers, money or victuals to ſupport him, a houſe or other ſhelter to conceal him, or open force or violence to reſcue or protect him. 2 Hawk. P. C. 444, 5. So likewiſe to convey inſtruments to a felon to enable him to break gaol, or to bribe the gaoler to let him eſcape, makes a man an acceſſory to the felony. And by ſtat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7. the receiving a pirate or any veſſel or goods piratically taken renders the receivers acceſſory to the piracy. But to relieve a felon in gaol with cloaths or other neceſſaries, is no offence: for the crime imputable to this ſpecies of acceſſory is the hindrance of public juſtice, by aſſiſting the felon to eſcape the vengeance of the law. 1 Hale's P. C. 624. To buy or receive ſtolen goods, knowing them to be ſtolen, falls under none of theſe deſcriptions; it was therefore at common law a mere miſdemeanor, and made not the receiver acceſſory to the theft, becauſe he received the goods only, and not the felon. 1 Hale's P. C. 620. To remedy this the ſtat. 3 W. & M. c. 9; & 1 Anne, c. 9, were paſſed againſt ſuch receivers; and now by the ſtat. 5 Anne, c. 31, and 4 Geo. 1. c. 11, all ſuch receivers are made acceſſories (where the principal felony admits of acceſſories) Foſter 73; and may be tranſported for fourteen years; and in the caſe of receiving linen goods ſtolen from the bleaching-grounds, are by ſtat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 27, declared felons without benefit of clergy.

The felony muſt be complete at the time of the aſſiſtance given; elſe it makes not the aſſiſtant an acceſſary. As if one wounds another mortally, and after the wound given, but before death enſues, a perſon aſſiſts or receives the delinquent, this does not make him acceſſory to the homicide; for till death enſues, there is no felony committed. 2 Hawk. P. C. 447. But ſo ſtrict is the law where a felony is actually complete, in order to do effectual juſtice, that the neareſt relations are not ſuffered to aid or receive one another. If the parent aſſiſts the child or the child his parent, if the brother receives the brother, the maſter his ſervant, or the ſervant his maſter, or even if the huſband relieves his wife, who may have any of them committed a felony, the receivers become acceſſories, ex poſt facto. 3 Inſt. 108: 2 Hawk. P. C. 320. But a feme covert cannot become an acceſſory by the receit and concealment of her huſband; for ſhe is preſumed to act under his coercion, and therefore ſhe is not bound, neither ought ſhe to diſcover her lord. 1 Hale's P. C. 621.

4. The general rule of the ancient law is, that acceſſories ſhall ſuffer the ſame puniſhment as their principals; if one be liable to death, the other is alſo liable. 3 Inſt. 188. Why, then, it may be aſked, are ſuch elaborate diſtinctions made between acceſſories and principals, if both are to ſuffer the ſame puniſhment? For theſe reaſons; 1ſt, To diſtinguiſh the nature and denomination of crimes, that the accuſed may know how to defend himſelf when indicted: the commiſſion of an actual robbery being quite a different accuſation from that of harbouring the robber. 2dly, Becauſe, though by the antient common law the rule is as before laid down, that both ſhall be puniſhed alike, yet now by the ſtatutes relating to the benefit of clergy, a diſtinction is made between them; acceſſories after the fact being ſtill allowed the benefit of clergy in all caſes (except horſe-ſtealing, ſtat. 31 Eliz. c. 12; and ſtealing of linen from bleaching-grounds, ſtat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 27) which is denied to the principals, and acceſſories before the fact, in many caſes; as among others in petit treaſon, murder, robbery, and wilful burning. 1 Hale's P. C. 615. And perhaps if a diſtinction were conſtantly to be made between the puniſhment of principals and acceſſories, even before the fact, the latter to be treated with a little leſs ſeverity than the former, it might prevent the perpetration of many crimes, by increaſing the difficulty of finding a perſon to execute the deed itſelf; as his danger would be greater than that of his accomplices, by reaſon of the difference of his puniſhment. Beccar. c. 37. 3dly, Becauſe no man formerly could be tried as acceſſory till after the principal was convicted, or at leaſt he muſt have been tried at the ſame time with him, though that law is now much altered. 4thly, Becauſe, though a man be indicted as acceſſory and acquitted, he may afterwards be indicted as principal; for an acquittal of receiving or counſelling a felon is no acquittal of the felony itſelf: but it is a matter of ſome doubt, whether if a man be acquitted as principal, he can be afterwards indicted as acceſſory before the fact; ſince thoſe offences are frequently very nearly allied, and therefore an acquittal of the guilt of one may be an acquittal of the other alſo. 1 Hale's P. C. 625, 626: 2 Hawk. P. C. 529, 530: Foſter 361. But it is clearly held, that one acquitted as principal may be indicted as acceſſory after the fact; ſince that is always an offence of a different ſpecies of guilt, principally tending to evade the public juſtice, and is ſubſequent in its commencement to the other. Upon theſe reaſons the diſtinction of principal and acceſſory will appear to be highly neceſſary, though the puniſhment is ſtill much the ſame with regard to principals and ſuch acceſſories as offend before the fact is committed.

By the old common law, the acceſſory could not be arraigned till the principal was attainted, unleſs he choſe it, for he might waive the benefit of the law; and therefore principal and acceſſory might and may ſtill be arraigned and plead, and alſo be tried together. But otherwiſe if the principal had never been indicted at all, had ſtood mute, had challenged above thirty-five jurors peremptorily, had claimed the benefit of clergy, had obtained a pardon, or had died before attainder, the acceſſory in any of theſe caſes could not be arraigned: for non conſtitit whether any felony was committed or no, till the principal was attainted; and it might ſo happen that the acceſſory ſhould be convicted one day, and the principal acquitted the next, which would be abſurd. However, this abſurdity could only happen, where it was poſſible that a trial of the principal might be had ſubſequent to that of the acceſſory; and therefore the law ſtill continues that the acceſſory ſhall not be tried ſo long as the principal remains liable to be tried hereafter. But by ſtat. 1 Anne, c. 9, if the principal be once convicted, and before attainder, (that is, before he receives judgment of death or outlawry) he is delivered by pardon, the benefit of clergy, or otherwiſe; or if the principal ſtands mute, or challenges peremptorily above the legal number of jurors, ſo as never to be convicted at all; in any of theſe caſes in which no ſubſequent trial can be had of the principal, the acceſſory may be proceeded againſt, as if the principal felon had been attainted; for there is no danger of future contradiction. And upon the trial of the acceſſory, as well after as before the conviction of the principal, it ſeems to be the better opinion, and founded on the true ſpirit of juſtice, that the acceſſory is at liberty (if he can) to controvert the guilt of his ſuppoſed principal, and to prove him innocent of the charge, as well in point of fact, as in point of law. Foſter 365, &c. By the ſtat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 24, the acceſſory is indictable in that county where he was acceſſory, and ſhall be tried there, as if the felony had been committed in the ſame county; and the juſtices before whom the acceſſory is, ſhall write to the juſtices, &c. before whom the principal is attainted, for the record of the attainder. 1 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 623.

Where the principal is not attainted, but diſcharged by being burnt in the hand only, the acceſſory after the fact ought to be diſcharged without burning in the hand, on being put to his book. Cro. Car. 561, pl. 3.

Where there are two principals, the attainder of one of them gives ſufficient foundation to arraign the acceſſory. Jenk. Cent. 76.

5. The old doctrine of approvements, when one criminal appealed or accuſed his accomplices in order to obtain his pardon is now grown into diſuſe; but is fully provided for in the caſe of coining, robbery, burglary, houſe-breaking, horſe-ſtealing and larceny, (from ſhops, warehouſes, ſtables and coach-houſes) by ſtat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 8: 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 17: 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23: & 5 Anne, c. 31: which enact, that if any ſuch offender, being out of priſon, ſhall diſcover two who have committed the like offences, he ſhall on their conviction, in caſes of burglary or houſe-breaking, receive the reward of 40*l.* given to perſons apprehending ſuch felons; and in general be entitled to a pardon of all capital offences, excepting only murder and treaſon, and of them alſo in caſes of coining; but under ſtat. 15 Geo. 2. c. 28. the pardon extends only to offences by coinage. And in caſes of ſtealing iron, lead or other metals, the accomplice convicting receivers ſhall (under ſtat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 30) be pardoned all ſuch offences. It is uſual alſo for juſtices of peace to admit accomplices to other felonies, to be witneſſes againſt their fellows; on an implied confidence that, in caſe of a complete diſcovery without prevarication or fraud, they ſhall receive a pardon; but to which they are not entitled of right. Leach's Hawk. l. 2. c. 37. § 7, and notes: 3 Comm. 330.

ACCORD. Fr.] Is an agreement between two or more perſons, where any one is injured by a treſpaſs, or offence done, or on a contract, to ſatisfy him with ſome recompence; which accord, if executed and performed, ſhall be a good bar in law, if the other party after the accord performed, bring an action for the ſame treſpaſs, &c. Terms de Ley.

I. In what caſes
II. In what manner
} Accord may be pleaded.

I. When a duty is created by deed in certainty, as by bill, bond, or covenant to pay a ſum of money, this duty accruing by writing, ought to be diſcharged by matter of as high a nature; but when no certain duty ariſes by deed, but the action is for a tort or default, &c. for which damages are to be recovered, there an accord with ſatisfaction is a good plea. 6 Rep. 43. In accord, one promiſe may be pleaded in diſcharge of another, before breach; but after breach, it cannot be diſcharged without a releaſe in writing. 2 Mod. 44. Accord with ſatisfaction upon a covenant broken, is a good plea in ſatisfaction and diſcharge of the damages. Lutw. 359. And accord made before the covenant broken, hath been adjudged a good bar to an action of covenant, as it may be in ſatisfaction of damage to come. 1 Danv. Abr. 546.

ACCOUNT.

If a contract without deed is to deliver goods, &c. there money may be paid by accord in satisfaction; but if one is bound in an obligation to deliver goods, or to do any collateral thing, the obligee cannot by accord give money in satisfaction thereof: though when one is bound to pay money, he may give goods or any other valuable thing in satisfaction. 9 Rep. 78: 1 Inst. 212. Where damages are uncertain, a leſſer thing may be done in satisfaction, and in ſuch caſe an accord and ſatisfaction is a good plea; but in action of debt on a bond, there a leſſer ſum cannot be paid in ſatisfaction of a greater. 4 Mod. 88. Accord with ſatisfaction is a good plea in perſonal actions, where damages only are to be recovered; and in all actions which ſuppoſe a wrong vi & armis, where a capias and exigent lie at the common law, in treſpaſs and ejectment, detinue, &c. accord is a good plea: So in an appeal of maihem. But in real actions it is not a good plea. 4 Rep. 1, 9, 70: 9 Rep. 77. Of late it hath been held, that upon mutual promiſes an action lies, and conſequently, there being equal remedy on both ſides, an accord may be pleaded without execution, as well as an arbitrament. Raym. 450: 2 Jones 158. Acceptance of the thing agreed on in theſe accords is the only material thing to make them binding. Hob. 178: 5 Mod. 86.

II. Accord executed only is pleadable in bar, and executory not. 1 Mod. 69. See Com. Dig. title Accord (C) Alſo in pleading it, it is the ſafeſt by way of ſatisfaction, and not of accord alone. For if it be pleaded by way of accord, a preciſe execution thereof in every part muſt be pleaded: but, by way of ſatisfaction, the defendant need only alledge, that he paid the plaintiff ſuch a ſum, &c. in full ſatisfaction of the accord, which the plaintiff received. 9 Rep. 80. The defendant muſt plead, that the plaintiff accepted the thing agreed upon in full ſatisfaction, &c. And if it be on a bond, it muſt be in ſatisfaction of the money mentioned in the condition, and not of the bond; which cannot be diſcharged but by writing under hand and ſeal. Cro. Jac. 254, 650. See further Com. Dig. tit. Accord. See tit. Acceptance, Award, Bond, Eſtate, Leaſe, Rent, Payment.

ACCOUNT or ACCOMPT; computus.] Is a writ or action which lies againſt a bailiff or receiver to a lord or others, who by reaſon of their offices and buſineſſes are to render accompt, but refuſe to do it. F. N. B. 116.

This action is now ſeldom uſed; but the moſt liberal, extenſive and beneficial action is for money had and received by defendant to plaintiff's uſe, which will lie in almoſt (if not in every) caſe where one hath money of another's in his hands, which he ought to pay him. This form of action is equivalent to a bill in equity. An action on the caſe on inſimul computaſſent is alſo uſual for the balance of a ſettled account. The action of account however lies in the following caſes.

If a perſon receives money due to me upon an obligation, &c. I may either have an action of accompt againſt him as my receiver; or action of debt, or on the caſe, as owing me ſo much money as he hath received. 1 Lill. 33. If I pay money in my own wrong to another, I may bring an action againſt him for ſo much money received to my uſe; but then he may diſcharge himſelf by alledging it was for ſome debt, or to be paid over by my order to ſome other perſon, which he hath done, &c. 1 Lill. 30. But if a man have a ſervant, whom he orders to receive money, the maſter ſhall have accompt againſt him, if he were his receiver. Co. Lit. 172. If money be received by a man's wife to his uſe, action of accompt lies againſt the huſband, and he may be charged in the declaration as his own receipt. Co. Lit. 295. Account does not lie againſt an infant; but it lies againſt a man or woman, that is guardian, bailiff, or receiver, being of age and diſcovert: and though an apprentice is not chargeable in this action, for what he uſually receives in his maſter's trade, yet upon collateral receipts he ſhall be charged as well as another. Co. Lit. 172: Roll. Abr. 117: 3 Leon. 92.

As to other actions of accompt, they will not lie of a thing certain; if a man delivers 10*l.* to merchandize with, he ſhall not have account of the 10*l.* but of the profits, which are uncertain: and this is one reaſon why this action will not lie for the arrears of rent. 1 Danv. Abr. 215. Action of account may be brought againſt a factor that ſells goods and merchandizes upon credit, without a particular commiſſion ſo to do, though the goods are bona peritura. 2 Mod. 100. If there are two demands in a declaration, to which the defendant pleads an accompt ſtated, the plaintiff can never after reſort to the original contract, which is thereby merged and diſcharged in the accompt: if A. ſells his horſe to B. for 10*l.* and there being divers other dealings between them, they come to an accompt upon the whole, and B. is found in arrear 5*l.* A. muſt bring his inſimul computaſſet for it; but if there be only one debt betwixt the parties, entering into an accompt for that would not determine the firſt contract. 1 Mod. Rep. 206: 2 Mod. 44. It has been held, that mutual demands on an accompt are not extinguiſhed by ſettling it, and promiſe to pay the balance; wherefore aſſumpſit lies for the original debt. Fitzgib. 44. A man having received of another 100*l.* to be employed in merchandize abroad, covenants at his return to accompt to him; this doth not alter the caſe, but notwithſtanding the covenant, action of accompt may be brought. 2 Bulſt. 256. And if I deliver to another perſon goods or money beyond ſea, to be delivered again to me in England at a certain place, and he delivers it not, I may be relieved by this action. F. N. B. 18.

Accompt may be brought againſt the following perſons: If a man makes one his bailiff of a manor, &c. he ſhall have a writ of accompt againſt him as bailiff; where a perſon makes one receiver, to receive his rents or debts, &c. he ſhall have accompt againſt him as receiver, and if a man makes one his bailiff and alſo his receiver, then he ſhall have accompt againſt him in both ways. Alſo a perſon may have a writ of accompt againſt a man as bailiff or receiver, where he was not his bailiff or receiver; as if a man receive money for my uſe, I ſhall have an accompt againſt him as receiver; or if a perſon deliver money unto another to deliver over unto me, I ſhall likewiſe have accompt againſt him as my receiver: ſo if a man enter into my lands to my uſe, and receive the profits thereof I ſhall have accompt againſt him as bailiff. 9 H. 6: 36 H. 6: 10 R. 2: Fitz. Accompt. 6.

A judgment in accompt, as receiver, is no bar to action of accompt as bailiff; but 'tis ſaid a bailiff cannot be charged as receiver, nor a receiver as bailiff; becauſe then he might be twice charged. 2 Lev. 127: 1 Danv. Abr. 220, 221. The heir may have writ of accompt before or after his full age, againſt a guardian in ſocage; and if he ſue the guardian for profits of his lands taken before before he is fourteen years old, he must charge him as guardian; but if it be for taking the profits after that age, there he must sue him as bailiff. Lit. 124: F. N. B. 118. Where an heir sues a stranger that doth intermeddle with his land, he shall charge him in accompt as guardian. F. N. B. 18.

A man devises lands to be sold by his executors, and the money thence arising to be distributed amongst his daughters; action of accompt lies in this case, for the daughters against the executors. Jenk. Cent. 215: 2 Roll. Abr. 285. An action of accompt lies against a bailiff, not only for what profits he hath made and raised, but also for what he might have made and raised by his care and industry, his reasonable charges and expences deducted. Co. Lit. 172. In this instance the action of accompt may be preferable to that for money had and received.—One merchant may have accompt against another, where they occupy their trade together; and if one charges me as bailiff of his goods ad mercandizandum, I must answer for the increase, and be punished for my negligence; but if he charges me as receiver ad computandum, I must be answerable only for the bare money or thing delivered. F. N. B. 117: Co. Lit. 272: 2 Leon. Ca. 245.

If a bailiff or receiver make a deputy, action of accompt will not lie against the deputy, but against him. 1 Leon. 32.

Statutes.—In the writ of accompt the process by the common law was summons, attachment, and distress infinite. The statute of Marlbridge (52 H. 3. c. 23) gave attachment by the body, if the bailiff had no lands by which he might be distrained. 2 Inst. 380,—By the stat. Westm. 2. (13 E. 1. st. 1.) c. 11, if the accountant be found in arrearages the auditors that are assigned to him have power to award him to prison.—In the process of outlawry, &c. the stat. 13 E. 3. c. 23, gives an action of accompt to the executors of a merchant; the statute 25 Ed. 3. c. 5, to executors of executors; the statute of 31 Ed. 3. c. 11, to administrators: and by the statute 3 and 4 Ann. c. 16, actions of account may be brought against the executors and administrators of every guardian, bailiff and receiver, and by one jointenant, tenant in common, his executors and administrators against the other as bailiff, for receiving more than his share, and against their executors and administrators; and the auditors appointed by the court may examine the party on oath.

It may be proper to say something concerning the Plea and Judgment in account; and though the order may seem somewhat irregular, it will be necessary first to explain the nature of the judgment, which being rightly understood, the distinctions as to the method of pleading will be more easily conceived.

The usual judgment is quod computet, on which the defendant is taken by capias ad computandum; but there are two judgments in this writ, for if the defendant cannot avoid the suit by plea, judgment is first given, That he do accompt; and having done this before the auditors, there is another judgment entered, that the plaintiff shall recover of the defendant so much as is found in arrear. 11 Rep. 40. The first judgment is but an award of the court, like a writ to enquire of damages; and these two judgments depend one upon another; for if judgment be to accompt, and the party die before he hath accounted, the executor cannot proceed in the action, but it must be begun again; and no writ of error will lie upon the first till after the second judgment. Ibid.

With respect to the plea, the following distinctions are to be noticed:

What may be pleaded in bar to the action, shall not be allowed to be pleaded before the auditors. Cro. Car. 82, 161. Some pleas are in bar of the accompt, and others in discharge before auditors; and some pleas will be allowed before auditors, that will not be in bar to the accompt, Dyer 21: 11 Rep. 8. In accompt the plaintiff declared of the receipt of money by the hands of a stranger; the defendant pleaded a gift of the money afterwards by the plaintiff; this was a good plea as well in bar of the action, as before auditors. Winch. 9.

The pleas in this action are, quod nunquam fuit receptor; quod plenè computavit, &c. It is no plea by an accomptant that he was robbed; unless he alledges it was without his default and negligence, and then it will be a good plea. Co. Lit. 89. That the defendant never was bailiff, is the general bar; and it is a good plea in bar, by claiming a property in the things to be accounted for. 29 E. 3. 47. A defendant, as receiver, cannot wage his law, where he receives the money by another's hands: 'tis otherwise where he received it of the plaintiff himself. 1 Cro. 919.

It may be proper to add, that the process in accompt is summons, pone and distress; and, upon a nihil returned, the plaintiff may proceed to outlawry. The statute of Limitations, 21 J. 1. c. 16, doth not bar a man who is a merchant from bringing action of accompt for merchandize at any time; but all other actions of accompt are within the statute.

In Chancery upon an accompt of fifteen or twenty years standing, the defendant may be allowed to prove, on his own oath, what he cannot otherwise make proof of; but here the particulars must be named, as to whom the money was paid, for what, and when, &c. 1 C. Rep. 146. And a defendant shall be discharged upon his oath of sums under 40*s*; though it is held a plaintiff shall not so charge another, or be allowed any thing in equity on his oath. 2 C. Cas. 249: 1 Vern. 283. See Oath. Vide Comyns's Digest, tit. Accompts.—Kydd's Com. Dig. Introduction to that title.

ACCOUNTANT-GENERAL. An officer in the court of Chancery, appointed by act of parliament, to receive all money lodged in court. He is to convey the money to the Bank, and take the same out by order; and he is only to keep the account with the Bank; for the Bank is to be answerable for all money received by them, and not the Accountant-General, &c. stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 32. No fees shall be taken by this officer or his clerks, on pain of being punished for extortion; but they are to be paid salaries. ACCOUNTS PUBLICK. By statute 25 Geo. 3. c. 52, the patents formerly granted to Lord Sondes and Lord Mountstuart as auditors of the imprest are vacated, and the annual sum of 7000*l.* each is made payable to them during their respective lives. § 1. 3.

Under this act his Majesty appoints five commissioners by letters patent; two of whom are to be comptrollers of the army accounts; salaries are granted to each, paid out of

of the aggregate fund, not exceeding in the whole 4000 l. Theſe are ſtiled The Commiſſioners for auditing the public accounts; and hold their offices quamdiu ſe bene geſſerint, (except the comptrollers of army accounts who continue commiſſioners ſo long only as they are comptrollers) Before they act they take an oath before the chancellor of the exchequer "faithfully, impartially and truly to execute the powers and truſts veſted in them." § 4.

The Treaſury appoint officers, clerks, &c. for making up and preparing for declaration the publick accounts of the kingdom, with ſalaries; and allow for all charges out of the aggregate fund to an amount not exceeding 6000 l. per annum, which is in lieu of all fees and perquiſites. § 5.

The commiſſioners under this act are inveſted with all the powers, and ſubject to the ſame duties and controul as the auditors of the impreſt formerly were; except as altered by the act. The commiſſioners adminiſter oaths to the officers and clerks for the performance of their duties. § 8: and to accountants. § 12, 13. For their mode of proceeding ſee the act.

ACEPHALI. The levellers in the reign of king Hen. 1; who acknowledged no head or ſuperior. Leges Hen. 1; Du Cange.

AC ETIAM BILLÆ:—And alſo to a bill to be exhibited for 20 l. debt, &c.] Words in, or a clauſe of, a writ, where the action requires bail. The ſtat. 13 Car. 2. ſt. 2. c. 2, which enjoins the cauſe of action to be particularly expreſſed in the writ or proceſs which holds a perſon to bail, hath ordained the adding of this clauſe in writs to the uſual complaints of treſpaſs, which latter gives cognizance to the court, while that of debt authoriſes the arreſt. This ought not to be made out againſt a peer of the realm, or upon a penal ſtatute, or againſt an executor or adminiſtrator, or for any debt under 10 l. in the ſuperior courts. Nor in any action of account, action of covenant, &c. unleſs the damages are 10 l. or more; nor in action of treſpaſs, or for battery, wounding or impriſonment; except there be an order of court for it, or a warrant under the hand of one of the judges of the court out of which the writ iſſues. 1 Lill. Abr. 13. See North's Life of Lord keeper Guildford, fol. 99, 100. Impey's Inſtructor Clericalis, K. B. and C. P. and this Dictionary tit. Arreſt, Bail.

ACHAT, Fr. Achet.] A contract or bargain. Purveyors by ſtat. 34 Ed. 3. c. 2, were called Achators.

ACHERSET, An ancient meaſure of corn, conjectured to be the ſame with our quarter or eight buſhels.

ACHOLITE, Acholitus.] An inferior church ſervant, who next under the ſubdeacon, followed or waited on the prieſt and deacons, and performed the meaner offices of lighting the candles, carrying the bread and wine, and paying other ſervile attendance.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENT-MONEY, Is a ſum paid in ſome parts of England by the copyhold tenants on the death of their landlords, as an acknowledgment of their new lords; in like manner as money is uſually paid on the attornment of tenants.

ACQUIETANDIS PLEGIIS, A writ of juſticies, lying for the ſurety againſt a creditor, who refuſes to acquit him after the debt is ſatisfied, Reg. of Writs 158.

ACQUIETANTIA DE SHIRIS ET HUNDREDIS, To be free from ſuits and ſervices in ſhires and hundreds.

ACQUIETARE, quietum reddere.] To acquit. Dr. Wilk Gloſſ It alſo ſometimes ſignifies to pay. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. fol. 199.

ACQUITTAL, from the French word Acquitter, and the Latin compound Acquietare.] To free or diſcharge. It ſignifies in one ſenſe to be free from entries and moleſtations of a ſuperior lord for ſervices iſſuing out of lands; (See Termes de la Ley;) and in another ſignification (the moſt general) it is taken for a deliverance and ſetting free of a perſon from the ſuſpicion of guilt; as he that on trial is diſcharged of a felony, is ſaid to be acquietatus de feloniâ; and if he be drawn in queſtion again for the ſame crime, he may plead auter-foits acquit; as his life ſhall not be twice put in danger for the ſame offence. 2 Inſt. 385.

Acquittal in fact, is when a perſon is found Not guilty of the offence by a jury, on verdict, &c. But in murder, if a man is acquitted, appeal may be brought againſt him. 3 Inſt. 273.

If one be acquitted on an indictment of murder, ſuppoſed to be done at ſuch a time; and after indicted again in the ſame county, for the murder committed at another time: here, notwithſtanding that variance, the party may plead auter foits acquit, by averring it to be the ſame felony; ſo where a perſon is indicted a ſecond time, for robbery upon the ſame perſon, but at another vill, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. Where a man is diſcharged on ſpecial matter found by the grand jury, yet he may be indicted de novo ſeven years afterwards, and cannot plead this acquittal; as he may upon the ſpecial matter found by the petty jury, and judgment given thereon. Ibid. 246. See alſo Leach's Hawkins, c. 26. § 64.

If a perſon is lawfully acquitted on a malicious proſecution, he may bring his action, &c. for damages, after he hath obtained a copy of the indictment; but it is uſual for the judges of gaol delivery to deny a copy of an acquittal to him who intends to bring an action thereon, when there was probable cauſe for a criminal proſecution. Carth. Rep. 421. See Leach's Hawkins, c. 23. § 142, &c. By ſtat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 1, if either principal or acceſſary be acquitted on an indictment for murder, the court may remit him to priſon, or bail him, at their diſcretion till the year and day (for appeal) be paſſed.

ACQUIT-

ACQUITTANCE, Acquietantia.] Signifieth a diſcharge in writing, of a ſum of money, or debt due; as, where a man is bound to pay rent, reſerved upon a leaſe, &c. and the party to whom due, on receipt thereof, gives a writing under his hand witneſſing that he is paid; this will be ſuch a diſcharge in law, that he cannot demand and recover the ſum or duty again, if the acquittance be produced. Terms de Ley 15: Dyer 6, 25, 51. An acquittance is a diſcharge and bar in the law to actions, &c. And if one acknowledges himſelf to be ſatisfied by deed, it may be a good plea in bar, without any thing received; but an acquittance, without ſeal, is only evidence of ſatisfaction, and not pleadable.

'Tis obſerved, that a general receipt or acquittance in full of all demands, will diſcharge all debts, except ſuch as are on ſpecialty, viz. bonds, bills, and other inſtruments ſealed and delivered; on which account thoſe can be deſtroyed only by ſome other ſpecialty of equal force, ſuch as a general releaſe, &c. There being this difference between that and the general acquittance. See Cro. Jac. 650.

But in ſome caſes a court of equity will order accounts to be opened, even after an acquittance in full of all demands.

And now, in the ſuperior courts of law, the producing an acquittance will not bar the action, if the plaintiff can by any means ſhew a miſtake, and that he has not been paid, or paid ſo much as the acquittance is for.

In ſome caſes payment may be refuſed, unleſs an acquittance is given. Thus the obligor is not bound to pay money upon a ſingle bond, except an acquittance be given him by the obligee; nor is he obliged to pay the money before he hath the acquittance. But in caſe of an obligation with a condition, it is otherwiſe; for there one may aver payment. And by ſtat. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 16, if an action of debt is brought upon a ſingle bill, and the defendant hath paid the money, ſuch payment may be pleaded in bar of the action.

A ſervant may give an acquittance for the uſe of his maſter, where ſuch ſervant uſually receives his maſter's rents, &c. and a maſter ſhall be bound by it. Co. Lit. 112. The manner of tender and payment of money ſhall be generally directed by him who pays it, and not by him who receives it; and the acquittance ought to be given accordingly.

ACRE, from the German Acker, Ager.] A quantity of land, containing in length 40 perches, and in breadth four perches; or in proportion to it, be the length or breadth more or leſs. By the cuſtoms of various countries, the perch differs in quantity, and conſequently the acre of land. It is commonly about 16 feet and a half, but in Staffordſhire it is 24 feet. According to the ſtatute 24 Hen. 8 c. 14, concerning the ſowing of flax, it is declared that 160 perches make an acre, which is 40 multiplied by four; and the ordinance of meaſuring land, 33 Ed. 1. ſt. 6, agrees with this account. The word acre formerly meant an open ground or field; as caſtle-acre, weſt acre, &c. and not a determined quantity of land.

ACRE, or ACRE FIGHT; an old ſort of duel fought by ſingle combatants, Engliſh and Scotch, between the frontiers of their kingdoms, with ſword and lance; this duelling was alſo called camp fight, and the combatants, champions, from the open field that was the place of trial.

ACTILIA, Military utenſils. D. Cange.

ACTION, Actio,] Is the form of a ſuit given by law for recovery of that which is one's due; or it is a legal demand of a man's right. Co. Lit. 285. The learned Bracton thus defines it, Actio nihil aliud eſt quam jus proſequendi in judicio quod alicui debetur. Actions are either criminal or civil; criminal to have judgment of death, as appeals of death, robbery, &c. or only to have judgment for damage to the party, fine to the king and impriſonment, as appeals of maihem, &c. Co. Lit. 284: 2 Inſt. 40. Civil actions are ſuch as tend only to the recovery of that which by reaſon of any contract, &c. is due to us; as action of debt, upon the caſe, &c. 2 Inſt. 61.

Under criminal actions may be claſſed actions penal; which lie for ſome penalty or puniſhment on the party ſued, be it corporal or pecuniary. Bract.

Actions upon ſtatute, brought upon the breach of any ſtatute, whereby an action is given to the perſon injured that lay not before; as where one commits perjury to the prejudice of another, the party that is injured may have a writ upon the ſtatute. Such action is now obſolete.

Actions popular, given on the breach of ſome penal ſtatute, which every man hath a right to ſue for himſelf and the king, by information, action, &c. And becauſe this action is not given to one eſpecially, but generally to any that will proſecute, it is called action popular; and from the words uſed in the proceſs, (qui tam pro domino rege ſequitur quam pro ſe ipſo, who ſues as well for the king as for himſelf,) it is called a qui tam action. See title Information.

Civil Actions are divided into real, perſonal, and mixed. Action real is that action whereby a man claims title to lands, tenements, or hereditaments, in fee, or for life: and theſe actions are poſſeſſory, or aunceſtrel; poſſeſſory, of a man's own poſſeſſion and ſeiſin; or aunceſtrel of the poſſeſſion or ſeiſin of his anceſtor.

Action perſonal is ſuch as one man brings againſt another, on any contract for money or goods, or on account of any offence or treſpaſs; and it claims a debt, goods, chattels, &c. or damages for the ſame.

Action mixed is an action that lieth as well for the thing demanded, as againſt the perſon that hath it; in which the thing is recovered, and likewiſe damages for the wrong ſuſtained: it ſeeks both the thing whereof a man is deprived, and a penalty for the unjuſt detention. But detinue is not an action mixed, notwithſtanding the thing demanded and damages for withholding it be recovered; for it is an action merely perſonal, brought only for goods and chattels.

In a real action, ſetting forth the title in the writ, ſeveral lands held by ſeveral titles may not be demanded in the ſame writ; in perſonal actions ſeveral wrongs may be comprehended in one writ. 8 Rep. 87. A bar is perpetual in perſonal actions, and the plaintiff is without remedy, unleſs it be by writ of error or attaint: but in real actions, if the defendant be barred, he may commence an action of a higher nature, and try the ſame again. 5 Rep. 33. Action of waſte ſued againſt tenant for life, is in the realty and perſonalty; in the realty, the place waſted being to be recovered, and, in the perſonalty, as treble damages are to be recovered. Co. Lit. 284.

Many perſonal actions die with the perſon. Real actions ſurvive. If leſſee for years commit waſte, and dies, action of waſte may not be had againſt his executor or adminiſtrator, for waſte done by the deceaſed. And where a keeper of a priſon permits one in execution to eſcape, and afterwards dieth, no action will lie againſt his executors.

tors. This muſt be underſtood, of that kind of keeper, to whom the priſon actually belongs, as the marſhal, the warden of the Fleet, &c. not of a gaoler who acts as ſervant to a ſheriff, &c. for in ſuch caſe, the death of the gaoler, is not any bar to an action againſt the ſheriff, to whom in fact, the priſon actually belongs. Co. Lit. 53. Action of debt lies not againſt executors upon a contract for the eating and drinking of the teſtator. 9 Rep. 87. But an action on the caſe on promiſes will lie againſt an executor or adminiſtrator on the promiſes of their teſtator or inteſtate. An executor cannot bring an appeal of larceny from the teſtator, for it is a mere perſonal action. H. P. C. 184: S. P. C. 50. And an appeal of death is a perſonal action given to the heir; and like others ſhall therefore die with the perſon. 2 Hawk. P. C. 244.

In all actions merely perſonal ariſing ex delicto, for wrongs actually done or committed by the defendant, as treſpaſs, battery, and ſlander, the action dies with the perſon. 4 Inſt. 315; and it never ſhall be revived either by or againſt the executors or other repreſentatives. For neither the executors of the plaintiff have received, nor thoſe of the defendant committed, in their own perſonal capacity, any manner of wrong or injury. But in actions ariſing ex contractu, by breach of promiſe and the like, where the right deſcends to the repreſentatives of the plaintiff, and thoſe of the defendant have aſſets to anſwer the demand, though the ſuits ſhall abate by the death of the parties, yet they may be revived againſt, or by, the executors, (March 14,) being indeed rather actions againſt the property than the perſon. 3 Comm. 302.

Again, actions are either local or tranſitory. Actions real and mixed, ejectment, waſte, treſpaſſes quare clauſum fregit, &c. are to be laid in the ſame county where the land lieth: perſonal and tranſitory actions, as debt, detinue, aſſault and battery, &c. may be brought in any county. Co. Lit. 282. Except againſt juſtices and officers of corporations and pariſhes, (under ſtat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 12,) or againſt officers acting under particular acts of parliament; which frequently direct actions againſt them, to be laid in the reſpective counties, where the facts happen. Actions tranſitory may be laid in any county, although the ſtatute 6 R. 2, enacted, That writs of debt, account, &c. ſhould be commenced in the county where the contracts were made; for that ſtatute was never put in uſe; and yet generally actions have been laid in the county where the cauſe of them was ariſing, except as above. If the cauſe of action ariſe in two counties, an action may be brought in either county; but if a nuſance be erected in one county, to the damage of a man in another, the aſſiſe muſt be brought in conſinio comitatuum. Mich. 8 Ann. B. R. By ſtat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 4. all ſuits on penal ſtatutes ſhall be laid in the county where the offence was committed. See tit. Venue.

Actions likewiſe are ſaid to be perpetual and temporary: Perpetual, thoſe which cannot be determined by time; and all actions may be called perpetual that are not limited to time for their proſecution: Temporary actions are thoſe that are expreſsly limited: and ſince the ſtatute of limitations, (21 Jac. 1. c. 16,) all actions ſeem to be temporary; or not ſo perpetual, but that they may in time be preſcribed againſt; a real action may be preſcribed againſt within five years, on a fine levied, or recovery ſuffered. See tit. Limitation of Actions.

Actions are alſo joint or ſeveral; joint, where ſeveral perſons are equally concerned, and the one cannot bring the action, or cannot be ſued, without the other; ſeveral, in caſe of treſpaſs, &c. done, where perſons are to be ſeverally charged, and every treſpaſs committed by many is ſeveral. 2 Leon. 77.

As to joining ſeveral matters in one action the following is to be obſerved.

In perſonal actions, ſeveral wrongs may be joined in one writ; but actions founded upon a tort, and on a contract, cannot be joined, for they require different pleas and different proceſs. 1 Keb. 847: 1 Vent. 366. So where there is a tort by the common law, and a tort by ſtatute, they may not be joined; though where ſeveral torts are by the common law, they may be joined, if perſonal. 3 Salk. 203.

Trover and aſſumpſit may not be joined; but in an action againſt a common carrier, the plaintiff may declare in caſe upon cuſtom of the realm, and alſo upon trover and converſion; for not guilty anſwers to both. 1 Danv. Abr. 4. Debt upon an amerciament, and upon a mutuatus, may be joined in one declaration. Wilſ. p. 1. 248. So caſe for a miſfeaſance and negligence may be joined with a count in trover, in the ſame declaration. Ib. par. 2. 319. Two counts may be joined in the ſame declaration, where there is the ſame judgment in both. Ib. 321. And any action may be joined, where the plea of not guilty goes to all. 8 Rep. 47. But, it ſeems, ejectment and battery cannot be joined; for after verdict, where ſeveral damages were found, the plaintiff was allowed to releaſe thoſe for the battery, and had judgment for the ejectment. 1 Danv. 3. If this is law, it ſhews that cauſes of action cannot in every inſtance be joined, where the ſame plea will go to the whole. The doctrine in Danvers, ſeems to be law, for ſuppoſing, ejectment, aſſault, and battery, &c. joined in one action, and a general verdict on not guilty for the plaintiff; a new execution on ſuch a judgment muſt be framed. Indeed the joining two ſuch actions, ſeems rather abſurd. Although perſons may join in the perſonalty, they ſhall always ſever in actions concerning the realty; and waſte being a mixed action, ſavouring of the realty, that being more worthy, draws overs the perſonalty with it. 2 Mod. 62. A perſon cannot, as adminiſtrator, &c. join an action for the right of another, with any action in his own right; becauſe the coſts will be entire, and it cannot be diſtinguiſhed how much he is to have as adminiſtrator, and how much for himſelf. 1 Salk. 10. See a variety of caſes, well ſelected and digeſted on this ſubject. Com. Dig. tit. Action.

It remains now to conſider,

I. By whom, and againſt whom, Actions may be brought.

II. What particular Actions are adapted to particular Caſes.

It may be previouſly obſerved that an action does not lie before a cauſe of action accrued; and if it be not pleaded in abatement, yet if it appears on the record, it may be moved in arreſt of judgment; 2 Lev. 197: Carth. 114: vide Sho. 147; or aſſigned for error; Cro. Eliz. 325. See further Kyd's Com. Dig. tit. Abatement, (G. 6.) and Action, (E.)

In ſome caſes, certain things are required by act of parliament to be done by the plaintiff, previous to the commencement of an action, or he cannot recover; as in actions againſt juſtices of the peace, a month's notice muſt be given by ſtat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44.—vide Morgan's Vade Mec. 20.

ACTION II.

I. In all actions there muſt be a perſon able to ſue; the party ſued muſt be one ſueable for the thing laid; and the plaintiff is to bring his right and proper action which the law gives him for relief. 1 Shep. Abr. 20. There are three ſorts of damages or wrongs, either of which is a ſufficient foundation for an action. 1. Where a man ſuffers damages in his fame and credit. 2. Where one has damage to his perſon, as by battery, impriſonment, &c. which reſpects his liberty. 3. Where a perſon ſuffers any damage in his property. Carth. Rep. 416.

A man attainted of treaſon or felony, convict of recuſancy, an outlaw, excommunicated perſon, convict of præmunire, an alien enemy, &c. cannot bring an action, till pardon, reverſal, abſolution, &c. But executors or adminiſtrators, being outlawed, may ſue in the right of the teſtator or inteſtate, though not in their own right. A feme covert muſt ſue with her huſband; and infants are to ſue by guardian, &c. Co. Lit. 128. Actions may be brought againſt all perſons, whether attainted of treaſon or felony, a convict recuſant, outlawed or excommunicate, &c. and a feme covert muſt be ſued with her huſband. A ſcire facias, or any writ to which the defendant may plead, or by which the plaintiff may recover, is an action. 6 Rep. 3: Salk. 5. See tit. Abatement.

II. There are various kinds of actions, ſuited to different caſes, as actions of COVENANT, DEBT, DETINUE, TRESPASS, TROVER, &c. which ſee under their reſpective titles.

But where the law has made no proviſion, or rather, where no general action could well be framed before hand, the ways of injuring, and methods of deceiving being ſo various, every perſon is allowed to bring a ſpecial action on his own caſe. 1 New Abr. 44: Co. Lit. 56. a: 6 Mod. 53, 54.

This action is, in practice, become the moſt univerſal of any; as moſt of the other actions may, under particular circumſtances, be reſolved into this, which it will be neceſſary, therefore, to conſider ſomewhat largely.

Action upon the caſe is a general action given for redreſs of wrongs and injuries, done without force, and not particularly provided againſt by law, in order to have ſatisfaction for damage; and (by ſtat. 19 H. 7. c. 9,) in actions upon the caſe, the like proceſs is to be had as in actions of treſpaſs or debt. It is called action on the caſe, becauſe the whole cauſe or caſe, as much as in the declaration (except time and place) is ſet down in the writ; and there is no other action given in the caſe, ſave only where the plaintiff hath his choice to bring this or another action. Formerly, all actions were ſued in the court of Common Pleas, and there the foundation of the ſuit is, a writ, called an original, whereupon the capias is grounded, and which original contains the nature of the plaintiff's complaint at large; and it is the ſame where ſuits are commenced in B. R. by original out of Chancery.

In all caſes, where a man has a temporal loſs, or damage by the wrong of another, he may have an action upon the caſe to be repaired in damages. But the particular damage muſt be ſpecially alledged.

This action, as hath been intimated, lies in a great variety of inſtances, which are particularly enumerated in COMYNS's Digeſt. Of theſe the chief are,

1. Action on the caſe for WORDS; which is brought for words ſpoken or written which affect a perſon's life, reputation, office, or trade, or tend to his loſs of preferment, in marriage or ſervice, or to his diſinheritance, or which occaſion him any particular damage. This action therefore will lie for charging another with any capital or other crime. To ſay of another he is a traitor, action lies. 1 Bulſtr. 145. But if one call another a ſeditious, traiterous knave, no action lieth; becauſe the words imply an intention only, and not an unlawful act. 4 Rep. 19 Nor to ſay of a man he deſerves to be hanged; nor to call another a rogue generally, or ſay he will prove him to be a rogue; though it will lie to ſay a man is a rogue on record. 4 Rep. 15: Danv. 92. Words which charge a perſon with being a murderer, highwayman, or thief, in expreſs terms, are held actionable. 1 Rol. Abr. 47. Though for ſaying ſuch a one would have taken his purſe on the highway, or have robbed him, an action lies not; for nothing is ſhewn to be done in order thereto. Cro Eliz. 250. Likewiſe to ſay a man was in gaol for ſtealing any thing is not actionable, for the words do not affirm the theft. Danv. 140. But to ſay, I think A B committed ſuch a felony; or, I dreamt he ſtole a horſe, &c. theſe words are actionable. Dal. 144: 1 Danv. 105. If a felony be done, and common fame is, that ſuch a perſon did it, although one may charge or arreſt him on ſuſpicion of that felony; yet a man may not affirm that he did the ſame, for he may be innocent all the while, and therefore affirming it hath been held actionable. Hob. 138, 203, 381.

It was heretofore held, that no action would lie for words importing a charge of murder, without an averment that the perſon ſaid to be killed was dead; but the latter and better opinion is, that the party ſhall be intended to be dead, unleſs the contrary appears in the pleadings. 1 Vent. 117: Cro. Jac. 489: Sid. 53: Cro. Eliz. 560, 823. Though quære if the party is proved alive? So words accuſing of ſodomy. 1 Sid. 373.

When ſuch words are ſpoken of another maliciouſly, for which, if true, the party ſpoken of might be puniſhed criminally, action lies; as, to ſay of a perſon, he hath perjured himſelf; or that he would prove him perjured; or that he was forſworn in the court of Chancery, Common Pleas, &c. are actionable; but not to call a perſon forſworn man, unleſs it be ſaid in a court of record. 3 Inſt. 163: Danv. 87, 89. To ſay a man hath forged an obligation, &c. and he will prove it; this is actionable. Danv. 130.

Some writers make a difference, where the ſubſequent words are introduced by the word and; as, you are a thief, and have ſtolen, &c. which are additional, and ſhall not correct; and the word for; as you are a thief, for you have, &c. Hob. 386: Style 115: Godb. 89. The words, He is a maintainer of thieves, and keeps none but thieves in his houſe, will not ſupport an action, unleſs it be averred that he knew them to be thieves. Cro. Eliz. 746.

To ſay an alehouſe-keeper keeps a bawdy-houſe, action lies. Cro. Eliz. 582. Though to ſay of an inn-keeper, that he harbours rogues, &c. is not actionable; for his inn is common to all gueſts. 2 Roll. Rep. 136. To ſay of another he hath the French pox, action will lie. Cro. Jac. 430: See Noy, 151. To call a man a whore-maſter, or a woman whore, no action lies; for theſe are merely ſpiritual offences. Danv. Abr. 80. But calling a woman whore in London, is actionable, as ſhe is liable to be puniſhed niſhed by the cuſtom of the city. See Com. Dig. tit. Action upon the Caſe for Defamation. (D. 10.)

Words likewiſe are actionable which tend to the diſgrace or detriment of a perſon in office, or of a man in the exerciſe of his profeſſion or trade.

Calling an officer in the government, &c. Jacobite, hath been held actionable; not of a private perſon. 7 Mod. Ca. 107. To ſay a juſtice of peace doth not adminiſter juſtice, is actionable. Cro. Eliz. 358. And ſo for other diſgrace in his office. But words relating to a man's office, muſt have a plain and direct meaning, to charge him with ſome crime that is puniſhable; and be ſpoken of his office, or otherwiſe they are not actionable. 6 Mod. 200. Thus the plaintiff, being a juſtice of peace, the defendant ſaid Mr. Stukely covereth and hideth felonies, and is not worthy to be a juſtice of peace; actionable, for though his office is not named, the words neceſſarily refer to it. 4 Rep. 16: See 1 Leon. 335: 1 Vent. 50.

Slander, &c. brought by a doctor of the civil law, who was alſo a juſtice of peace and chancellor of the biſhoprick of Norwich, for theſe words, he is not fit to be a chancellor or a juſtice of peace, he is a knave, a raſcal, and a villain, he is not fit to practice, he ought to have his gown pulled over his ears; actionable. 2 Lutw. 1288.

The defendant ſpoke to an officer, (viz.) You have cozened the State of 20,000*l. and I will prove it, for you have received* 25,000*l. of the office, and not compounded for it, and have foiſted in words in the order of your commiſſion*; actionable. Style 436.

In offices of profit, for ſuch words as impute the want either of underſtanding, ability, or integrity to execute them, this action lies. But in offices of honour, words that impute want only of ability, are not actionable; as to ſay of a juſtice of peace, He a juſtice of peace! he is an aſs, and a beetleheaded juſtice: the reaſon is, becauſe a man cannot help his want of ability, as he may his want of honeſty; otherwiſe where words impute diſhoneſty or corruption. 2 Salk. 695. But if ſpecial damage can be proved, it is actionable; and indeed in every caſe, where ſpecial damage can be proved, an action will lie.

As to words tending to the diſgrace or detriment of a man in his profeſſion or trade; where the words are diſgracing to a man's profeſſion, they alſo muſt appear to be ſpoken preciſely of it; for to ſay a perſon hath cozened one in the ſale of certain goods, is not actionable; unleſs you ſhew that the party lived by ſuch ſelling. 1 Roll. Abr. 62.

To ſay of a doctor in divinity, Doctor S. is robbing the church; and at another time Doctor S. hath robbed the church; actionable. Cro. Car. 301, 417.

In caſe, &c. in which the plaintiff declared, that he was inſtituted and inducted into a parſonage in, &c. and that he executed the office of a paſtor in that church for the ſpace of four years, and that the defendant ſaid of him, You are a drunkard, a whore-maſter, a common ſwearer, and a common liar, and you have preached falſe doctrine, and deſerve to be degraded; after a verdict for the plaintiff, it was objected, that the words are not actionable, becauſe they import no civil or temporal damage to the plaintiff; but adjudged actionable; for, if true, he may be degraded, and ſo loſe his freehold. Allen, 63.

Theſe words ſpoken of a preaching parſon, Parrat is an adulterer, and had two children by B. G.'s wife, and I will cauſe him to be deprived for it; not actionable; for 'tis a ſpiritual defamation, and puniſhable in that court. Cro. Eliz. 502.

To ſay of a counſellor, that he is no lawyer; that they are fools who come to him for law, and that he will get nothing by the law, action lies. 1 Danv. 113. And it is the ſame to ſay, he hath diſcloſed ſecrets in a cauſe.

To call a doctor of phyſic fool, aſs, empirick, and mountebank, or ſay he is no ſcholar, are actionable. Cro. Car. 270. So to ſay of a ſchoolmaſter, put not your ſon to him, for he will come away as very a dunce as he went. Hetl. 71. Where one ſays of a midwife, that many have periſhed for her want of ſkill, an action will lie. Cro. Car. 211. If one calls a merchant bankrupt, action lies. 1 Leon. 336. And to call a trading perſon bankrupt, or knave, is actionable. 1 Danv. 90. Alſo if one ſay of a merchant, that he is a beggarly fellow, and not able to pay his debts; or ſay of a perſon that he is a runaway, and dares not ſhew his face, by reaſon whereof he is diſgraced and injured in his calling, theſe are actionable. Raym. 184.

Words tending to the loſs of preferment in marriage, &c. are actionable. Thus to ſay that a woman hath a baſtard, or is with child; or that a certain perſon hath had the uſe of her body, whereby ſhe loſes her marriage, action lies, i. e. by reaſon of the ſpecial damage. If a man is in treaty with a woman to marry, and another tells him, ſhe is under a pre-contract; this doth not imply a ſcandal, but yet, if falſe, an action will lie if ſhe loſes her marriage by means of thoſe words. To ſay of a man that he lay with a certain woman, &c. by which he loſes his marriage, is actionable; for in theſe caſes there is a temporal damage. 1 Danv. 81.

As to words tending to a perſon's diſinheritance, if one ſays of another that has land by deſcent, that he is a baſtard; action upon the caſe, lies, as it tends to his diſinheritance. Co. Ent. 28. But to ſay of a ſon and heir apparent, that he is a baſtard, action lies not until he is diſinherited, or is prejudiced thereby. 1 Danv. 83. To ſlander the title of another perſon to his lands is actionable; but the words muſt be falſe, and be ſpoken by one that neither hath, nor pretendeth title to the land himſelf; and who is not of counſel to him that pretends right. 4 Rep. 17. If a man ſhall pretend title to the land another hath in poſſeſſion, and hath no colour of title to it; and ſhall ſay he hath ſuch a deed or conveyance of it, where in truth he hath none, or if he hath any, it is a counterfeit and forged deed, and he knows it to be ſo; in this caſe the words may bear an action; but if there be any colour for what is ſaid, they will not be actionable. Cro. Jac. 163: Yelv. 80, 88. And the party of whom the words are ſpoken muſt have, or be likely to have, ſome ſpecial damage by the ſpeaking of them; as that he is hindered in the ſale of his lands, or in his preferment in marriage, &c. without which it is ſaid action doth not lie. 1 Cro. 99: Cro. Jac. 213, 397: Poph. 187: 2 Bulſt. 90. The affirming that another hath title to the land, where actionable, ſee 4 Rep. 175.

If A. ſays, that B. ſaid that C. did a certain ſcandalous thing, C. ſhall have action againſt A. with averment that B. never ſaid ſo, whereby A. is the author of the ſcandal. Suppoſing B. did not in fact ſay ſo. Cro. Jac. 406. See 1 Roll. Abr. 64.

It is to be obſerved in general, that though ſcandalous words are ſpoken before a man's face, or behind his back, by way of affirmation, or report, when drunk, or ſober; and although they are ſpoken in any other than the Engliſh language, if they are underſtood by the hearers, they are actionable; alſo words may be actionable in one county, which are not ſo in another, by the different conſtruction, &c. 4 Rep. 14: Hob. 165, 236. But if the defendant can make proof of the words, he may, in an action for damages, plead a ſpecial juſtication. Co. Ent. 26. The words to maintain this action muſt be direct and certain, that there may be no intendment againſt them; but as ſome words ſeparate, without others joined with them, are not actionable; ſo ſome words that are actionable may be qualified by the precedent or ſubſequent words, and all the words are to be taken together. 4 Rep. 17: 1 Cro 127: Moor Ca. 174, 331: vide 4 Rep. 20: Hob. 126. Where words ſpoken are ſomewhat uncertain, they may by apt averments be made certain and actionable. 2 Bulſt. 227. So by the pleadings of the parties, and verdict of a jury for the plaintiff. Cro. Jac. 107. The thing charged by the words muſt be that which is poſſible to have been done; for if it be of a thing altogether and apparently impoſſible, no action lies. 4 Rep. 16. No action will lie for words ſpoken in purſuit of a proſecution in an ordinary courſe of juſtice; as where a lawyer, in pleading his client's cauſe, utters words according to his inſtructions; as ſaying of one he is a baſtard, when this is to defend the party's own title where he himſelf doth claim to be heir of the land that is in queſtion, theſe words will not bear an action. Cro. Jac. 90: 4 Rep. 13.

In this action the nature of the words muſt be ſet forth with the manner of ſpeaking them, when and where ſpoken, and before whom, and the damage thereby to the plaintiff; that his credit was, and how, impaired, with the aggravating circumſtances; but it matters not whether the plaintiff doth in his declarationſet forth all the circumſtantial words as they are ſpoken; ſo as to ſhew the very words that are actionable, and the ſubſtance of them, &c.

There is no branch of the law in which the decided caſes are ſo contradictory to each other, and the deciſions ſo frequently irreconcileable to their avowed principles, as this action on the caſe for words; many caſes in the old authors are certainly not law, and the faireſt obſervation on the ſubject is that "what words are actionable or not, will be more ſatisfactorily determined by an accurate application of the general principles, on which ſuch actions depend, than by a reference to adjudged caſes, eſpecially thoſe in old Authors." See the caſe of Onſlow v. Horne, 3 Wilſ. 177; where the principles are well explained.

2. Action on the caſe likewiſe lies upon an Aſſumpſit or undertaking; and ſuch action is founded on a contract either expreſs or implied by law, and the verdict gives the party damages in proportion to the loſs he has ſuſtained by the violation of the contract. 4 Co. 92: Moor 657. See tit. Aſſumpſit.

3. It has been premiſed, that a ſpecial action on the caſe lies in all inſtances wherein no general action could be framed; it will be neceſſary therefore to point out ſome of thoſe particular caſes to which it is moſt peculiarly applicable.

It was formerly held, that if my fire, by misfortune, burnt the goods of another man, for this wrong he ſhould have action on the caſe againſt me; and if my ſervant put a candle or other fire in any place in my houſe, and this burnt my houſe and the houſe of my neighbour, action of the caſe lay for him againſt me: 1 Danv. 10 But this action is now deſtroyed by ſtat. 6 Ann. c. 31. See tit. Fire, Waſte.

Action on the caſe likewiſe lies againſt Carriers and others upon the cuſtom of England. See tit. Carrier.

A common Inn-keeper is chargeable for goods ſtolen in his houſe. See tit. Inns and Inn-keeper.

This action lies for Deceit in contracts, bargains, and ſales; if a vintner ſells wine, knowing it to be corrupt, as good and not corrupt, though without warranty, action lies. Danv. 173. So if a man ſells a horſe, and warrants him to be ſound of his limbs, if he be not, action on the caſe lies. A perſon warrants a horſe, wind and limb, that hath ſome ſecret diſeaſe known to the ſeller, but not to the buyer, this action may be brought; though if one ſell a horſe and warrant him ſound, and he hath at the time viſible infirmities, which the buyer may ſee, action on the caſe will not lie. Yelv. 114: Cro. Jac. 675. Where one ſells me any wares or commodities, and is to deliver that which is good, but delivers what is naught; or ſells any thing by falſe or deceitful weights and meaſures, with or without warranty, action on the caſe lies; and ſo where a man doth ſell corrupt victuals, as bread, beer, or other thing for food, and knows it to be unwholeſome. Dyer 75: 4 Rep. 18: Cro. Jac. 270. Yet if the buyer or his ſervant ſhall ſee and taſte the victuals, &c. and like and accept the ſame, no action can be maintained. 7 H. 4. 16. Nor will caſe lie upon a warranty of what is out of a man's power, or of a future thing; as that a horſe ſhall carry a man thirty miles a day, or the like. Finch 188. If a man ſells certain packs of wool, and warrants that they are good and merchantable, if they are damaged, action on the caſe lies againſt him. 1 Danv. 187. The bare affirmation by the ſeller of a particular ſort of diamond, without warranting it to be ſuch, will not maintain an action. Cro. Jac. 4, 196. But where a man hath the poſſeſſion of a perſonal thing, the affirming it to be his own is a warranty that it is ſo; though it is otherwiſe in caſe of lands, where the buyer at his peril is to ſee that he hath title. 1 Salk. 210. If a perſon ſells to another cattle or goods, that are not his own, action on the caſe lies; ſo if he warrants cloth to be of ſuch a length, that is deficient of it. See tit. Deceit.

For Neglect or Malfeaſance; as if a taylor, &c. undertakes to make a ſuit of clothes, and ſpoils them, action lies: and if a carpenter promiſes to repair my houſe before a certain day, and doth not do it, by which my houſe falls: or if he undertakes to build a houſe for me, and doth it ill, action on the caſe lies. 1 Danv. 32. If a ſurgeon neglects his patient, or applies unwholeſome medicines, whereby the patient is injured, this action lieth. And if a counſel retained to appear on ſuch a day in court, doth not come, by which the cauſe miſcarries, action lies againſt him: ſo if after retainer, he become of counſel to the adverſary againſt the plaintiff. 11 H. 6. 18.

Where a ſmith promiſes to ſhoe my horſe well, if he pricks him, action on the caſe lies; and ſo when he refuſes to ſhoe him, on which I travel without, and my horſe is damaged. For ſtopping up a water-courſe or way; way; breaking down a party wall; ſtopping of ancient lights, and for any private nuſance to a man's water, light, or air, whereby a perſon is damnified, this action lieth. Cro. Eliz. 427: Yelv. 159.

Where any one perſonates another, for cheating at gaming, where a ſurety is not ſaved harmleſs, &c. 2 Inſt. 193.

If I lend another my horſe to ride ſo far; and he rides further, or forward and backward, or doth not give him meat, this action lieth. Cro. Eliz. 14. And where one lends me a horſe for a time, if he take him from me within that time, or diſturb me before I have done what I hired him for; action on the caſe lies: and though I ride the horſe out of the way in my journey, he may not take him from me. 8 Rep. 146. See tit. Bailment. This action lies for keeping a dog accuſtomed to bite ſheep, if the owner knew the vicious quality of the dog. But not for a man's dog running at my ſheep, though he kills them, if it be without his conſent, and he did not know that the dog was accuſtomed to bite ſheep. Vide 1 Danv. Abr. 19: Hetl 171.

Action on the caſe will lie againſt a Gaoler for putting irons on his priſoner; or putting him in the ſtocks, or not giving ſufficient ſuſtenance to him, being committed for debt. F. N. B. 83. The maſter may in many caſes have this action againſt his ſervant, ſteward, or bailiff, for any ſpecial abuſe done to him, and for negligence, &c. Alſo it lies for taking or enticing away my ſervant, and retaining him; or threatening a ſervant, whereby I loſe his ſervice. Lane 68: Cro. Eliz. 777: 1 Shep. Abr. 52, 59. A ſervant is truſted with goods and merchandize conſigned to him by a merchant, to pay the cuſtoms for them, and diſpoſe of them to profit; if he deceive the merchant, and have allowance for it on his account, and, to defraud the king, lands ſome of the goods without paying the cuſtoms, by which they are forfeited, action on the caſe lieth. Lane 65: Cro. Jac. 266.

If I truſt one to buy a leaſe or other thing for me, and he buyeth it for himſelf, or doth not buy it, this action lies againſt him; but if he doth his endeavour it ſufficeth. Bro. 117. Where a man is diſturbed in the uſe of a ſeat in the church, which he hath had time out of mind; a ſteward is hindered in the keeping of his courts; a keeper of a foreſt diſturbed in taking the profits of his office; a bailiff in diſtraining for an amerciament, or the like; action on the caſe will lie. Bendl. 89: Lib. Intr. 5: Moor 987. An action on the caſe lies for him in reverſion, againſt a ſtranger, for damage to his inheritance, though there be a term in eſſe. 3 Lev. 360. Alſo if a leſſor comes to the houſe he has demiſed, to ſee if it be out of repair, or any waſte be done, and meets with any diſturbance therein; or if one diſturbs a parſon in taking his tithes, this action lies. Cro. Jac. 478: 2 Inſt. 650. And for ſetting up a new mill on a river, to the prejudice of another who hath an ancient mill, an action will lie. Lib. Intr. 9.

Action on the caſe likewiſe lies for and againſt commoners, &c. for injuries done in commons. Sty. 164: Sid. 106: Cro Jac. 165: 2 Inſt. 474. See tit. Common.

Action on the caſe may likewiſe be brought for malicious proſecutions: where a ſuit is without ground, and one is arreſted, action on the caſe lies for unjuſt vexation: And for falſely and maliciouſly arreſting a perſon for more than is due to the plaintiff, whereby the defendant is impriſoned, for want of bail; or if it be on purpoſe to hold him to bail, action on the caſe will lie, after the original action is determined. 1 Lev. 275: 1 Salk. 15. An action likewiſe lies againſt ſheriffs, for default in executing writs; permitting eſcapes, &c.

Actions on the caſe likewiſe lie for conſpiracy, eſcape and reſcous, nuſances, &c. which ſee under the ſeveral titles. And for a general abridgment of the law on this ſubject, ſee Com. Dig. tit. Action.

ACTION PREJUDICIAL, (otherwiſe called preparatory, or principal) Is an action which ariſes from ſome doubt in the principal; as in caſe a man ſues his younger brother for lands deſcended from his father, and it is objected againſt him that he is a baſtard; now this point of baſtardy is to be tried before the cauſe can any further proceed: and therefore it is termed prejudicialis, quia prius judicanda. Bract. lib. 3. c. 4. numb. 6: Cowel.

ACTION OF A WRIT, Is a phraſe of ſpeech uſed, when one pleads ſome matter, by which he ſhews the plaintiff had no cauſe to have the writ he brought, yet it may be that he may have another writ or action for the ſame matter. Such a plea is called a plea to the action of the writ; whereas, if by the plea it ſhould appear that the plaintiff hath no cauſe to have an action for the thing demanded, then it is called a plea to the action. Cowel: Termes de la Ley.

ACTIONARE, i. e. In jus vocare, or to proſecute one in a ſuit at law. Thorn's Chron.

ACTO, Acton, Aketon, Fr. Hauqueton.] A coat of mail. Du Freſne.

ACTON BURNEL. The ſtatute of 11 Ed. 1. ann. 1283, ordaining the ſtatute merchant: it was ſo termed from a place named Acton-Burnel, where it was made; being a caſtle formerly belonging to the family of Burnel, and afterwards of Lovel, in Shropſhire. Cowel: Termes de la Ley.

ACTOR. The proctor or advocate in civil courts or cauſes. Actor dominicus, was often uſed for the lord's bailiff or attorney. Actor eccleſiæ was the ancient forenſick term for the advocate or pleading patron of a church. Actor villæ was the ſteward or head bailiff of a town or village. Cowel.

ACTS DONE, Are diſtinguiſhed into acts of God, the acts of the law, and acts of men. The act of God ſhall prejudice no man: as where the law preſcribeth means to perfect or ſettle any right or eſtate; if by the act of God the means, in ſome circumſtances, become impoſſible, no party ſhall receive any damage thereby. Co. Lit. 123: 1 Rep. 97. As in an action on the caſe a bargeman may juſtify, by pleading that there were ſeveral paſſengers in his barge, and a ſudden tempeſt ariſing, all the goods in the barge were thrown overboard to ſave the lives of the paſſengers. See tit. Carrier.

The acts of the law are eſteemed beyond the acts of man: and when to the perfection of a thing divers acts are required, the law hath moſt regard to the original act. 8 Rep. 78. The law will conſtrue things to be lawfully done, when it ſtandeth indifferent whether they ſhould be lawful or not: but whatſoever is contrary to law is accounted not done. Co. Lit. 42: 3 Rep. 74. Our law doth favour ſubſtantial more than circumſtantial acts; and regards deeds and acts more than words: and the law doth not require unneceſſary things. Plowd. 10.

As to acts of men; that which a man doth by another, ſhall be ſaid to be done by himſelf; but perſonal things cannot be done by another. Co. Lit. 158. A man cannot not do an act to himself, unless it be where he hath a double capacity; no person shall be suffered to do any thing against his own act; and every man's acts shall be construed most strongly against himself. Plowd. 140. But if many join in an act, and some may not lawfully do it, it shall be adjudged the act of him who might lawfully do the same. Dyer 192. Acts that men are forced by necessity and compulsion to do, are not regarded: and an act done between persons shall not injure a stranger not party or privy thereto. Plow. 19: 6 Rep. 16.

Where mutual acts are to be done, who is to do the first act, see tit. Condition.

ACTS OF PARLIAMENT. See tit. Statute.

ACTUARY, actuarius.] A clerk that registers the acts and constitutions of the Convocation.

ADCREDULITARE. To purge one's self of an offence by oath. Leges Inæ, c. 36.

ADDITION. The title or estate, and place of abode given to a man besides his name. See tit. Abatement. I. 3. (c.)

ADELING, Ethling or Edling, from the Saxon ædelan, noble or excellent.] A title of honour amongst the Anglo-Saxons; properly belonging to the king's children; it being usual for the Saxons to join the word ling to the paternal name, signifying a son, or the younger. King Edward the Confessor having no issue, and intending to make Edgar, his nephew, the heir of the kingdom, gave him the stile and title of Adcling. It was also used among the Saxons for the nobles in general. Spelm. Gloss: Lamb.

ADEMPTION. A taking away of a legacy. See Legacy.

AD INQUIRENDUM. A judicial writ commanding enquiry to be made of any thing relating to a cause depending in the king's courts. It is granted upon many occasions for the better execution of justice. Reg. Judic. See tit. Writ of Inquiry.

ADJOURNMENT, adjournamentum. Fr. adjournement.] A putting off until another time or place. As adjournment in eyre, (by stat. 2 E. 3. c. 11. & 25 E. 3. c. 18.) is an appointment of a day, when the justices in eyre will sit again. A court, the parliament, and writs, &c. may be adjourned; and the substance of the adjournment of courts is to give licence to all parties that have any thing to do in court to forbear their attendance, till such a time. Every last day of the term, and every eve of a day in term, which is not dies juridicus, or a law day, the court is adjourned. 2 Inst. 26. The terms may be adjourned to some other place, and there the King's Bench and other courts at Westminster be held: and if the king puts out a proclamation for the adjournment of the term, this is a sufficient warrant to the keeper of the Great Seal to make out writs accordingly; and proclamation is to be made, appointing all persons to keep their day, at the time and place to which, &c. 1 And. 279: 1 Lev. 176. Though by Magna Charta the court of Common Pleas is to be held at Westminster, yet necessity will sometimes supersede the law, as in the case of a plague, a civil war, &c. In the first year of Charles I. a writ of adjournment was delivered to all the justices, to adjourn two returns of Trinity term: and in the same year Michaelmas term was adjourned until crastino animarum to Reading; and the king by proclamation signified his pleasure, that his court should be there held. Cro. Car. 13, 27. In the 17th of Charles II. the court of B.R. was adjourned to Oxford, because of the plague; and from thence to Winsor; and afterwards to Westminster again. 1 Lev. 176, 178.

On a foreign plea pleaded in assise, &c. the writ shall be adjourned into the Common Pleas to be tried; and after adjournment, the tenant may plead a new plea pursuant to the first; but if he pleads in abatement a plea triable by the assise, on which it is adjourned, he cannot plead in bar afterwards, &c. 1 Danv. Abr. 249. The justices of assise have power to adjourn the parties to Westminster, or to any other place; and by the express words of Magna Charta, (cap. 12,) they may adjourn, &c. into C. B. before the judges there. Dyer 132.

If the judges of the court of King's Bench, &c. are divided in opinion, two against two, upon a demurrer or special verdict (not on a motion) the cause must be adjourned into the Exchequer Chamber, to be determined by all the judges of England. 3 Mod. 156: 5 Mod. 335.

ADIRATUS, Strayed, lost. See Bract. l. 3. tract. 2. c. 32.

AD JURA REGIS. A writ brought by the king's clerk presented to a living, against those that endeavour to eject him, to the prejudice of the king's title. Reg. of Writs, 61.

AD LARGUM, At large: It is used in the following and other expressions: title at large, assise at large, verdict at large; to vouch at large, &c.

ADLEGIARE, or alcier in Fr.] To purge himself of a crime by oath. See the laws of king Alfred, in Brompt. Chron. cap. 4 & 13.

ADMEASUREMENT, Writ of, admensuratio.] Is a writ brought for remedy against such persons as usurp more than their share. It lies in two cases; one is termed admeasurement of dower, (admensuratio dotis,) where a man's widow after his decease holdeth from the heir more land, &c. as dower, than of right belongs to her: and the other is admeasurement of pasture, (admensuratio pasturæ,) which lies between those that have common of pasture, where any one or more of them surcharge the common. Reg. Orig. 156. 171. In the first case the heir shall have this writ against the widow whereby she shall be admeasured, and the heir restored to the overplus; and in the last case it may be brought against all the other commoners, and him that surcharged; for all the commoners shall be admeasured. Termes de Ley. 23. See tit. Common and Dower.

ADMINICLE, adminiculum.] Aid, help, or support. See stat. 1. E. 4. c. 1.

ADMINISTRATOR, Lat.] He that hath the goods of a man dying intestate committed to his charge by the Ordinary, for which he is accountable when thereunto required. For matters relating to this title, and to Administration in general, see tit. Executor.

ADMINISTRATRIX, Lat.] She that hath goods and chattels of an intestate committed to her charge, as an administrator.

ADMIRAL. Admiralius, admirallus, admiralis, capitaneus or custos maris, from the French amerel, or from the Saxon, aen mereal, over all the sea; and in ancient time the office of the admiralty was called custodia maritimæ Angliæ. Co. Lit. 260. Many other fanciful derivations are recapitulated in Spelman's Glossary, and see Com. Dig. tit. Admiralty—The term appears to have been first used temp. E. 1. and the first Admiral of England, by name, was Richa. d Fitz Alan Earl of Arundel 10 Ric. 2.] A High Officer or magistrate, having the government of the king's navy; and (in his court of Admiralty) the determining of all causes belonging to the sea and offences committed thereon.—The office is now usually executed by Commissioners who, by stat. 2 W. & M. stat. 2. c. 2, are declared to have the ſame authorities juriſdictions and powers as the Lord High Admiral, who is uſually underſtood by this term in law, not adverting to the naval diſtinctions.

Under this head therefore ſhall be included all that relates as well to ſuch ADMIRAL as to the COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

The warden of the Cinque Ports has the juriſdiction of Admiral within thoſe ports exempt from the admiralty of England, 4 Inſt. 223: 2 Inſt. 556: 2 Jon. 67: 1 Jenk. 85. It appears that antiently the Admirals of England had juriſdiction of all cauſes of merchants and mariners, happening not only upon the main ſea, but in all foreign parts within the king's dominions, and without them, and were to judge them in a ſummary way, according to the laws of Oleron and other ſea laws. 4 Inſt. 75. In the time of king Ed. 1. and king John, all cauſes of merchants and mariners, and things ariſing upon the main ſea, were tried before the lord Admiral: but the firſt title of Admiral of England, expreſsly conferred upon a ſubject, was given by patent of king Rich 2, to the earl of Arundel and Surry. In the reign of Ed. 3. the court of admiralty was eſtabliſhed, and Ric. 2. limited its juriſdiction.

By the ſtatute 13 Rich. 2 ſt. 1 c. 5, it is enacted, that upon complaint of encroachments made by the admirals and their deputies, the admirals and their deputies ſhall meddle with nothing done within the realm, but only with things done upon the ſea. For the conſtruction of this ſtatute, ſee 2 Bulſtr. 323: 3 Bulſtr. 205: 13 Co 52.

By ſtat. 15 Ric. 2. c. 3, it is declared, that all contracts, pleas and quarrels, and other things done within the bodies of counties by land or water, and of wreck, the admiral ſhall have no conuſance, but they ſhall be tried, &c. by the law of the land; but of the death of a man, and of mayhem done in great ſhips, being in the main ſtream of great rivers beneath the points near the ſea, and in no other place of the ſame river, the admiral ſhall have conuſance; and alſo to arreſt ſhips in the great flotes, for the great voyages of the king and the realm, ſaving to the king his forfeitures; and ſhall have juriſdiction in ſuch flotes during ſuch voyages, only ſaving to lords, &c. their liberties.

By the ſtatute 2 Hen. 4. c. 11, reciting the 13 R. 2. c. 5, it is enacted, that he that finds himſelf aggrieved againſt the form of the ſtatute, ſhall have his action by writ grounded upon the caſe againſt him that ſo purſues in the admiralty, and recover double damages againſt him, and he ſhall incur the pain of 10l. if he be attainted.

By ſtat. 27 H. 8. c. 4, All offences of piracy, robbery, and murder done on the ſea, or within the admiral's juriſdiction, ſhall be tried in ſuch places of the realm as ſhall be limited in the king's commiſſions, directed to the lord admiral and his lieutenant and deputies and other perſons to determine ſuch offences after the common courſe of law, as if the ſame offences had been done on land.

By the ſtatute 28 Hen. 8. cap. 15, "all treaſons, felonies, robberies, and murders, &c. upon the ſea, or within the admiralty juriſdiction, ſhall alſo be tried in ſuch ſhires and places in the realm, as ſhall be limited by the king's commiſſion, as if done on land, and the conſequences of the offences are the ſame. See 3 Inſt. 111, 112. But in caſes which would be manſlaughter at land the jury is always directed to acquit. Foſter 288.

It was held, Yelv. 134, That by force of this ſtatute, acceſſaries to robbery, &c. could not be tried; but this is remedied by 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 7; by which their aiders and comforters, and the receivers of their goods are made acceſſaries, and to be tried as pirates by 28 Hen. 8. cap. 15; alſo the ſaid ſtatute 11 & 12. W. 3, directs how pirates may be tried beyond ſea, according to the civil law, by commiſſion under the great ſeal of England.—See title Piracy.

By the ſtatute 5 Eliz. cap. 5, ſeveral offences in the act mentioned, if done on the main ſea, or coaſts of the ſea, being no part of the body of any county, and without the precinct juriſdiction and liberties of the cinque-ports, and out of any haven and pier, ſhall be tried before the admiral or his deputy, and other juſtices of oyer and terminer, according to the ſtatute of 28 H. 8. c. 15.

By the ſtatute 1 Ann. cap. 9. captains and mariners belonging to ſhips, and deſtroying the ſame at ſea, ſhall be tried in ſuch places as ſhall be limited by the king's commiſſion, and according to 28 H. 8. c. 15. The ſtatute 10 Ann. cap. 10. directs how the trial ſhall be had of officers and ſoldiers, that either upon land out of Great Britain, or at ſea, hold correſpondence with a rebel enemy. See tit. Piracy, Treaſon.

And by the ſtatute 4 Geo. 1. cap. 11, all perſons who ſhall commit any offence for which they ought to be adjudged pirates, felons, or robbers, by 11 & 12 W 3, may be tried and judged for every ſuch offence according to the form of 28 H. 8. c. 15, and ſhall be excluded from the benefit of clergy.

The juriſdiction of the lord admiral therefore is confined to the main ſea, or coaſts of the ſea, not being within any county. Thus, the admiralty hath cogniſance of the death or maim of a man, committed in any ſhip riding in great rivers, beneath the bridges thereof, next the ſea: but by the common law, if a man be killed upon any arm of the ſea, where the land is ſeen on both ſides, the coroner is to enquire of it, and not the admiral; for the county may take cogniſance of it; and where a county may inquire, the lord admiral hath no juriſdiction. 3 Rep. 107.

All ports and havens are infrà corpus comitatûs, and the admiral hath no juriſdiction of any thing done in them: between high and low water-mark, the common law and admiral have juriſdiction by turns; one upon the water and the other upon the land. 3 Inſt. 113. By the ſtatutes for diſciplining the navy, every commander, officer and ſoldier of ſhips of war, ſhall obſerve the commands of the admiral, &c. on pain of death or other puniſhment. See tit. Navy.

Under theſe ſtatutes the lord admiral hath power to grant commiſſions to inferior vice-admirals, &c. to call courts martial, for the trial of offences againſt the articles of war; and theſe courts determine by plurality of voices, &c. See tit. Navy.

The Admiralty is ſaid not to be a court of record, by reaſon it proceeds by the Civil law. 4 Inſt. 135. But the admiralty has juriſdiction where the common law can give no remedy; and all maritime cauſes, or cauſes ariſing wholly upon the ſea, it hath cogniſance of. Vide as to the juriſdiction of the admiralty, 1 Com. Dig. tit. Admiralty. The admiralty hath juriſdiction in caſes of freight, mariners wages, breach of charter-parties, though made within the realm; if the penalty be not demanded: and likewiſe in caſe of building, mending, ſaving, and victualling ſhips, &c. ſo as the ſuit be againſt the ſhip, and and not againſt the parties only. 2 Cro. 216. Mariners' wages are contracted on the credit of the ſhip, and they may all join in ſuits in the admiralty; whereas at common law they muſt all ſever: the maſter of a ſhip contracts on the credit of the owners, and not of the ſhip; and therefore he cannot proſecute in the admiralty for his wages. 1 Salk. 33. It is allowed by the common lawyers and civilians, that the lord admiral hath cogniſance of ſeamens wages, and contracts, and debts for making ſhips; alſo of things done in navigable rivers, concerning damage done to perſons, ſhips, goods, annoyances of free paſſage, &c. And of contracts, and other things done beyond ſea, relating to navigation and trade by ſea. Wood's Inſt. 218. But if a contract be made beyond ſea, for doing of an act or payment of money within this kingdom; or the contract is upon the ſea, and not for a marine cauſe, it ſhall be tried by a jury; for where part belongs to the common law, and part to the admiral, the common law ſhall be preferred. And contracts made beyond ſea may be tried in B. R. and a fact be laid to be done in any place in England, and ſo tried here. 2 Bulſtr. 322.

Where a contract is made in England, and there is a converſion beyond ſea, the party may ſue in the admiralty, or at common law. 4 Leon. 257. An obligation made at ſea, it has been held, cannot be ſued in the admiral's court, becauſe it takes its courſe, and binds according to the common law. Hob. 12. The court of admiralty can not hold plea of a matter ariſing from a contract made upon the land, tho' the contract was concerning things belonging to the ſhip: but the admiralty may hold plea for the ſeamens wages, &c. becauſe they become due for labour done on the ſea; and the contract made upon land, is only to aſcertain them. 3 Lev. 60. Though where there is a ſpecial agreement in writing, by which ſeamen are to receive their wages, in any other manner than uſual; or if the agreement at land be under ſeal, ſo as to be more than a parol contract, it is otherwiſe. 1 Salk. 31. See Hob. 79.

If the maſter pawns the ſhip on the high ſea out of neceſſity for tackling or proviſion, without the conſent of the owners, it ſhall bind them; but 'tis otherwiſe where the ſhip is pawned for the maſter's debt: the maſter can have no credit abroad, but upon the ſecurity of the veſſel; and the admiralty gives remedy in theſe caſes. 1 Salk. 35. The maſter hath a right to hypothecate the ſhip, for any debt, incurred on her account. Vide Co. Lit. 134, 140. Tho' the agreement is made, and the money lent at land. 1 Lord Raym. 152. Benzen v. Jefferies. Sale of goods (taken by piracy) in open market, is not binding by the admiralty law, the owner may therefore retake them; but at common law the ſale is binding, of which the admiralty muſt take notice. 1 Roll. Abr. Vide 1 Vent. 308.

If a ſhip is taken by pirates upon the ſea, and the maſter, to redeem the ſhip, contracts with the pirates to pay them 50*l.* and pawns his perſon for it, and the pirates carry him to the iſle of S. and there he pays it with money borrowed, and gives bond for the money, he may ſue in the admiralty for the 50*l.* becauſe the original cauſe aroſe upon the ſea, and what followeth was but acceſſory and conſequential. Hard. 183.

If goods delivered on ſhip-board are imbezilled, all the mariners ought to contribute to the ſatisfaction of the party that loſt his goods, by the maritime law, and the cauſe is to be tried in the admiralty. 1 Lill. 363. By the cuſtom of the admiralty, goods may be attached in the hands of a third perſon, in cauſa meritima & civili, and they ſhall be delivered to the plaintiff, after defaults, on caution to reſtore them, if the debt, &c. be diſproved in a year and a day; and if the party refuſe to deliver them, he may be impriſoned quouſque, &c. March Rep. 204.

The court of admiralty may cauſe a party to enter into bond in nature of caution or ſtipulation, like bail at common law; and if he render his body, the ſureties are diſcharged; and execution ſhall be of the goods, or of the body, &c. not of the lands. Godb. 260: 1 Shep. Abr. 129: See 1 Salk. 33: T. Ray. 78: 2 Lord Ray. 1206: Fitz. 197.

A perſon in execution, on judgment in the admiral's court, upon a contract made on the land in New England was diſcharged, being out of the admiralty juriſdiction. 3 Cro. 607: 1 Cro. 685. And where ſailors' cloaths were bought in St. Katherine's pariſh near the Tower, London, which were delivered in the ſhip; on a ſuit in the admiralty for the money, prohibition was granted; for this was within the county: ſo of a ſhip lying at Blackwall, &c. Owen 122: Hughes's Abr. 113. But the admiralty may proceed againſt a ſhip, and the ſails and tackle, when they are on ſhore, although alledged to be detained at land; yet upon alledging offer of a plea, claiming property therein, and refuſal of the plea, on this ſuggeſtion a prohibition ſhall be had. 1 Show. 179.

If there be a war with the Dutch, and an Engliſhman, having letters of mark, takes an Oſtender for a Dutch ſhip, and brings it into a haven, and libels againſt it to have it condemned as a prize; but ſentence be given that it is no prize; the Oſtender may libel in the admiralty againſt the captain, for the damage the ſhip received while it lay in the port; for the original taking being at ſea, the bringing it into the port, in order to have it condemned, is but a conſequence thereof. 1 Lev. 243: 1 Sid. 367.

If an Engliſh ſhip takes a French ſhip, the French being in enmity with us, and ſuch ſhip is libelled againſt, and after due notice on the exchange, &c. declared a lawful prize, the king's proctor may exhibit a libel in the admiralty court, to compel the taker (who converted the lading to his own uſe) to anſwer the value of the prize to the king; although it was objected, that by the firſt ſentence the property was veſted in the king, and that this ſecond libel was in nature of an action of trover, of which the court of admiralty cannot hold plea. Carth. 399.—[This muſt be underſtood of a capture without the authority of letters of marque or repriſal.]

If the owner of a ſhip victuals it and furniſhes it to ſea, with letters of repriſal, and the maſter and mariners when they are at ſea commit piracy upon a friend of the king, without the notice or aſſent of the owner, yet by this the owner ſhall loſe his ſhip by the admiralty law, and our law ought to take notice thereof. 1 Roll. Abr. 530. But ſee 1 Roll. Rep. 285.

By the civil law and cuſtom of merchants, if the ſhip be caſt away, or periſh through the mariners' defaults, they loſe their wages; ſo if taken by pirates, or if they run away; for if it were not for this policy, they would forſake the ſhip in a ſtorm, and yield her up to enemies in any danger. 1 Sid. 179: 1 Mod. 93: 1 Vent. 146.

The admiralty court may award execution upon land; tho' not hold plea of any thing ariſing on land. 4 Inſt.

141. And upon letters miſſive or requeſt, the admiralty here may award execution on a judgment given beyond ſea, where an Engliſhman flies or comes over hither, by impriſonment of the party, who ſhall not be delivered by the common law. 1 Roll. Abr. 530. When ſentence is given in a foreign admiralty, the party may libel for execution of that ſentence here; becauſe all courts of admiralty in Europe are governed by the civil law. Sid. 418. Sentences of any admiralty in another kingdom are to be credited, that ours may be credited there, and ſhall not be examined at law here; but the king may be petitioned, who may cauſe the complaint to be examined; and, if he finds juſt cauſe, may ſend to his ambaſſador where the ſentence was given, to demand redreſs, and, upon failure thereof, will grant letters of marque and repriſal. Raym. 473.

If one is ſued in the admiralty, contrary to the ſtatutes 13 R. 2. ſtat. 1. c. 5; & 15 R. 2. c. 3, he may have a ſuperſedeas, to cauſe the judge to ſtay the proceedings, and alſo have action againſt the party ſuing. 10 Rep. 75. A ſhip being privately arreſted by admiralty proceſs only, and no ſuit, it was adjudged a proſecution within the meaning of the ſtatutes; and double damages, &c. ſhall be recovered. 1 Salk. 31, 32.

By ſtat. 8 Eliz. c. 5, if an erroneous judgment is given in the admiralty, appeal may be had to delegates appointed by commiſſion out of chancery, whoſe ſentence ſhall be final. See 4 Inſt. 339. But from the prize court (ſee poſt) appeal lies to commiſſioners conſiſting of the privy council. Doug. 614. Appeals may be brought from the inferior admiralty courts to the lord high admiral: but the lord warden of the cinque ports hath juriſdiction of admiralty exempt from the admiralty of England. A writ of error doth not lie upon a ſentence in the admiralty, but an appeal. 4 Inſt. 135, 339. There are alſo vice-admiralty courts in the king's foreign dominions, from which (except in caſe of prizes) appeals may be brought before the courts of admiralty in England, as well as to the king in council. 3 Comm. 69.

The Admiral, of right, had anciently a tenth part of all prize goods, but which is taken away by ſtat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 4; which veſts the property of all ſhips taken, and condemned as prize in the admiralty courts, in the admirals, captains, ſailors, &c. being the captors, according to proportions to be ſettled by the king's proclamation. This ſtatute alſo enables the admiralty to grant letters of marque. (See tit. Privateers). For the mode of proceeding in condemning prizes, ſee the ſt. & Doug. 614; 4 Term Rep. 382, as to the commiſſioners of Appeal.

By the ſtat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 3, his majeſty's commiſſion to all the privy councillors then and for the time being, and to the lord chief baron of the court of exchequer, the juſtices of the king's bench and common pleas, and barons of the ſaid court of exchequer, then and for the time being, for hearing and determining appeals from ſentences in cauſes of prizes pronounced in the courts of admiralty, in any of his majeſty's dominions, declared valid, although ſuch chief baron, juſtices and barons are not of the privy council. But no ſentence ſhall be valid, unleſs the major part of the commiſſioners preſent be of the privy council. See Kyd's Com. Dig. tit. Admiralty.

ADMISSION, admiſſio.] Is properly the ordinary's declaration that he approves of the parſon preſented to ſerve the cure of any church. Co. Lit. 344. a. When a patron of a church has preſented to it, the biſhop upon examination admits the clerk by ſaying admitto te habilem. Co. L. 344, a. Action on the caſe will not lie againſt the biſhop, if he refuſe to admit a clerk to be qualified according to the canons (as for any crime or impediment, illiteracy, &c.) but the remedy is by writ quare non admiſit, or admittendo clerico brought in that county where the refuſal was. 7 Rep. 3. As to the cauſes of refuſal by the ordinary to admit to a benefice, ſee tit. Parſon; Quare impedit.

ADMITTANCE. See Copyhold.

ADMITTENDO CLERICO. Upon the right of preſentation to a benefice being recovered in quare impedit, or on aſſiſe of darrein preſentment, the execution is by this writ; directed, not to the ſheriff, but to the biſhop or his metropolitan, requiring them to admit and inſtitute the clerk of the plaintiff. 3 Comm. 412: Reg. Orig. 31, 33. See tit. Parſon & Quare Impedit.

If a perſon recovers an advowſon, and ſix months paſs; yet, if the church be void, the patron may have a writ to the biſhop; and if the church is void when the writ comes to the biſhop, the biſhop is bound to admit his clerk. Vide Hut. 24: Hob. 152, 4: 2 Inſt. 273, and 3 Com. Dig. Where a man recovers againſt another than the biſhop, this writ ſhall go to the biſhop; and the party may have an alias and a pluries, if the biſhop do not execute the writ, and an attachment againſt the biſhop, if need be. New Nat. Br. 84. In a quare impedit betwixt two ſtrangers, if there appears to the court a title for the king, they ſhall award a writ unto the biſhop, for the king.

ADMITTENDO IN SOCIUM. A writ for aſſociating certain perſons to juſtices of aſſize. Reg. Orig. 206. knights and other gentlemen of the county are uſually aſſociated with judges, in holding their aſſizes on the circuits.

ADNICHILED, from the Latin nihil, or nichil.] Annulled, cancelled, or made void. Stat. 28 Hen. 8.

AD QUOD DAMNUM. A writ to enquire whether a grant intended to be made by the king will be to the damage of him or others. F. N. B. 221, 2; and it ought to be iſſued before the king grants certain liberties; as a fair, market, &c. which may be prejudicial to others: it is directed to the ſheriff, Terms de Ley 25.

Stat. 27 Ed. 1. ſtat. 2. § 1, ordains, that ſuch as would purchaſe new parks ſhall have writs out of chancery to enquire concerning the ſame. In like manner they ſhall do that will purchaſe any fair, market, warren, or other liberty. § 4.

This writ is likewiſe uſed to enquire of lands given in mortmain to any houſe of religion, &c. And it is a damage to the country, that a freeholder who hath ſufficient lands to paſs upon aſſizes and jury, ſhould alien his lands in mortmain, by which alienation his heir ſhould not have ſufficient eſtate after the death of the father to be ſworn in aſſizes and juries. F. N. B. 221.

The writ of ad quod damnum is alſo had for the turning and changing of ancient highways; which may not be done without the king's licence obtained by this writ, on inquiſition found that ſuch a change will not be detrimental to the public. Terms de Ley 26: Vaugh. Rep. 341. Ways turned without this authority are not eſteemed highways, ſo as to oblige the inhabitants of the hundred to make amends for robberies; nor have the ſubjects an intereſt therein to juſtify going there. 3 Co. 267. If any one change an highway without this authority, he may ſtop the way at his pleaſure. See tit. Highway.

The river Thames is an highway, and cannot be diverted without an ad quod damnum; and to do ſuch a thing ought to be by patent of the king. Noy 105.

If there be an ancient trench or ditch coming from the ſea, by which boats and veſſels uſed to paſs to the town, if the ſame be ſtopped in any part by outrageouſneſs of the ſea, and a man will ſue to the king to make a new trench, and to ſtop the ancient trench, &c. they ought firſt to ſue a writ of ad quod damnum; to enquire what damage it will be to the king or others. F. N. B. 225. E.

And if the king will grant to any city the aſſiſe of bread and beer, and the keeping of weights and meaſures, an ad quod damnum ſhall be firſt awarded, and when the ſame is certified, &c. then to make the grant. F. N. B. 225. E.

It appears by the writs in the regiſter, that in antient times, upon every grant, confirmation, &c. or licence made by the king, a writ ad quod damnum was to be firſt awarded, to enquire of the truth thereof, and what damage the king might have by the ſame; but now the practice is contrary; and in the patents of common grants of licence, a diſpenſation by non obſtante is inſerted.

ADRECTARE, addreſſare, i. e. ad rectum ire, recto ſtare.] To do right, ſatisfy, or make amends. Gerv. Dorobern. anno 1170.

AD TERMINUM QUI PRETERIIT. A writ of entry, that lay for the leſſor or his heirs, where a leaſe has been made of lands or tenements, for term of life or years; and after the term is expired, the lands are withheld from the leſſor by the tenant, or other perſon poſſeſſing the ſame. F. N. B. 201.

Now by ſtat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28, tenants wilfully holding over, after demand and notice in writing for delivering poſſeſſion, ſhall pay double the yearly value. See tit. Ejectment.

ADVENT, adventus.] A time containing about a month preceding the feaſt of the nativity (the advent or arrival) of our Saviour. It begins from the Sunday that falls either upon St. Andrew's day, being the 30th of November, or next to it, and continues to the feaſt of Chriſt's nativity, commonly called Chriſtmas. Our anceſtors ſhewed great reverence and devotion to this time, in regard to the approach of the ſolemn feſtival: for in adventu domini nulla aſſiſa debet capi. But the ſtatute Weſt. 1. (3 E. 1.) c. 51, ordained that, notwithſtanding the uſual ſolemnity and times of reſt, it ſhould be lawful (in reſpect of juſtice and charity, which ought at all times to be regarded) to take aſſiſes of novel diſſeiſin, mort d'anceſtor, &c. in the time of Advent, Septuageſima, and Lent. This is alſo one of the ſeaſons, from the beginning of which to the end of the octaves of the Epiphany, the ſolemnizing of marriages is forbidden, without ſpecial licence, as we may find from theſe old verſes,

Conjugium adventus prohibet, Hilarique relaxat;
Septuagena vetat, ſed Paſchæ octava reducit;
Rogatio vetitat, concedit Trina poteſtas.

AD VENTREM INSPICIENDUM. See Ventre Inſpiciendo.

ADVERTISEMENTS. Under ſtat. 9 Anne, c. 6. § 5; and 10 Anne, c. 26. § 109, 100*l.* penalty is impoſed on all perſons (the latter particularly mentioning Printers) publiſhing the keeping of any office for illegal inſurances on marriage, &c. or offices eſtabliſhed under the pretence of improving ſmall ſums. The ſeveral penalties alſo impoſed under the Lottery acts, (ſee this Dictionary, tit. Lottery,) extend to printers and publiſhers of news-papers inſerting the advertiſements of illegal lottery adventurers; and to diſtributers of hand-bills, &c. 4 Term Rep. 414; and ſeveral printers of papers who had incurred ſuch penalties ignorantly, were indemnified by ſtat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 61.

By ſtat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36. ſ. 1, any perſon publicly advertiſing a reward with no queſtions aſked, for the return of things ſtolen or loſt, or making uſe of words in ſuch advertiſement, purporting that ſuch reward ſhall be given without ſeizing, or making enquiry after, the perſon producing ſuch thing ſo ſtolen or loſt, or promiſing in any ſuch advertiſement to return to any perſon, who may have bought, or advanced money upon ſuch thing the money ſo paid or advanced, or any reward for the return of ſuch thing; and any perſon (ſuch as the printers of news-papers, &c.) printing or publiſhing ſuch advertiſement ſhall forfeit 50*l.*

By ſt. 21 Geo. 3. c. 49, any perſon advertiſing or cauſing to be advertiſed any public entertainment or meeting for debating on the Lord's day to which perſons are to be admitted by money or tickets ſold, and any perſon printing or publiſhing any ſuch advertiſement, ſhall forfeit 50*l.* for each offence. § 3.

AD VITAM AUT CULPAM. An office is expreſſed to be ſo held, which is to determine only by the death or delinquency of the poſſeſſor; or which, in other words is held quamdiù ſe bene geſſerit. See ſtat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 7, on Scotch Juriſdictions.

ADULTERY, adulterium, quaſi ad alterius thorum; Anno 1 Hen. 7. cap. 7, and in divers old authors termed advowtry.] The ſin of incontinence between two married perſons; or if but one of the perſons be married, it is nevertheleſs adultery: but in this laſt caſe it is called ſingle adultery, to diſtinguiſh it from the other, which is double. This crime is ſeverely puniſhed by the laws of God, and the antient laws of the land: (See the laws of King Edmund, c. 4: Laws of Canute, par. 2. c. 6, 50: Leg. H. 1. c. 12.) the Julian law, among the old Romans, made it death; but in moſt countries at this time the puniſhment is by fine, and ſometimes baniſhment: in England it is puniſhed eccleſiaſtically by penance, &c. It is a breach of the peace, and as ſuch antiently indictable, but not now. Salk. 552. The uſual mode of puniſhing adulterers at preſent is by action of crim. con. (as it is commonly expreſſed,) to recover damages; which are aſſeſſed by the jury, in proportion to the heinſuſneſs of the crime, and are frequently very heavy and ſevere.

Before the ſtat. 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 1. which makes malicious maiming felony, it was a queſtion, whether cutting off the privy members of a man, taken in adultery with another man's wife, was felony or not? And it is now held that ſuch provocation may juſtify the homicide of the adulterer by the injured huſband, in the moment of injury. 1 Hale 488. See tit. Baron & Feme. III.

ADVOCATE. The patron of a cauſe aſſiſting his ent with advice, and who pleads for him: it is the ſame in the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical law, as a counſellor at the common law. The eccleſiaſtical, or church advocate, was originally of two ſorts; either an advocate of the cauſes and intereſt of the church, retained as a counſellor and pleader of its rights; or an advocate, advocatus, an Advowee or Avowee. Blount: Fleta lib. 5. c. 14: Britt. c. 29. Both theſe offices at firſt belonged to the founders of churches and convents, and their heirs, who were bound to protect and defend their churches, as well as to nominate or preſent to them.—But when the patrons grew negligent in their duty, or were not of ability or intereſt in the courts of juſtice, then the religious began to retain law advocates, to ſolicit and proſecute their cauſes. Vide Spelman.

ADVOCATIONE DECIMARUM, A writ that lies for tithes, demanding the fourth part, or upwards, that belong to any church. Reg. Orig. 29.

ADVOW, or Avow, advocare.] To juſtify or maintain an act formerly done, ſee Avowry; it alſo ſignifies to call upon or produce; antiently when ſtolen goods were bought by one, and ſold to another, it was lawful for the right owner to take them wherever they were found, and he in whoſe poſſeſſion they were found, was bound advocare, i. e. to produce the ſeller to juſtify the ſale; and ſo on till they found the thief. Afterwards the word was taken for any thing which a man acknowledged to be his own, or done by him, and in this ſenſe it is mentioned in Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 5. par. 4.

ADVOWSON, Advocatio.] The right of preſentation to a church or benefice: and he who hath this right to preſent is ſtiled patron: becauſe they that originally obtained the right of preſentation to any church, were maintainers of, or benefactors to, the ſame church: it being preſumed that he who founded the church will avow and take it into his protection, and be a patron to defend it in its juſt rights. When the Chriſtian religion was firſt eſtabliſhed in England, kings began to build cathedral churches, and to make biſhops: and afterwards, in imitation of them, ſeveral lords of manors founded particular churches on ſome part of their own lands, and endowed them with glebe; reſerving to themſelves and their heirs a right to preſent a fit perſon to the biſhop, when the ſame ſhould become void. See 2 Comm. 21—3.

Under this head ſhall be conſidered,

I. The ſeveral kinds of advowſon.

II. How advowſons may lapſe.

III. How they may be gained by uſurpation.

IV. Of the right of preſentation.

For the law relating to appropriations and impropriations of benefices, ſee tit. Appropriation.

I. Advowſons are of two kinds; appendant, and in groſs: Appendant, is a right of preſentation dependant upon a manor, lands, &c. and paſſes in a grant of the manor as incident to the ſame; and when manors were firſt created, and lands ſet apart to build a church on ſome part thereof, the advowſon or right to preſent to that church became appendant to the manor. Advowſon in groſs is a right ſubſiſting by itſelf, belonging to a perſon, and not to a manor, lands, &c. So that when an advowſon appendant is ſevered by deed or grant from the corporeal inheritance to which it was appendant, then it becomes an advowſon in groſs. Co. Lit. 121, 122.

If he that is ſeiſed of a manor, to which an advowſon is appendant, grants one or two acres of the manor, together with the advowſon; the advowſon is appendant to ſuch acre; eſpecially after the grantee hath preſented. Watſon's Compleat Incumbent, c. 7.

But this feoffment of the acre with the advowſon ought to be by deed, to make the advowſon appendant; and the acre of land and the advowſon ought to be granted by the ſame clauſe in the deed; for if one, having a manor with an advowſon appendant, grant an acre parcel of the ſaid manor, and by another clauſe in the ſame deed grants the advowſon; the advowſon in ſuch caſe ſhall not paſs as appendant to the acre; but if the grant had been of the intire manor, the advowſon would have paſſed as appendant. So if a huſband, ſeiſed in right of his wife of a manor to which an advowſon is appendant, doth alien the manor by acres to divers perſons, ſaving one acre; the advowſon ſhall be appendant to that acre. Or if a leſſee for life of a manor to which an advowſon belongs, alien one acre, with the advowſon appendant, the advowſon is thereby appendant to that acre. Watſ. c. 7.

The right of advowſon, tho' appendant to a manor, caſtle or the like, may be ſevered from it in other ways, and being ſevered, becomes an advowſon in groſs; and this may be effected divers ways: as, 1. If a manor or other thing to which it is appendant is granted, and the advowſon excepted. 2. If the advowſon is granted alone, without the thing to which it was appendant. 3. If an advowſon appendant is preſented to by the patron, as an advowſon in groſs. Gibſ. 757.

A diſappendancy may alſo be temporary; that is, the appendancy, tho' turned into groſs, may return; as, 1. If the advowſon is excepted in a leaſe of a manor for life; during the leaſe, it is in groſs, but when the leaſe expires it is appendant again. 2. If the advowſon is granted for life, and another enfeoffed of the manor with the appurtenances; in ſuch caſe at the expiration of the grant it ſhall be appendant; and ſo in other caſes.

But with reſpect to the king, by the ſtatute of prærogativa regis, 17 Ed. 2. c. 15, When the king giveth or granteth land or a manor with appurtenances; without he make expreſs mention in his deed or writing, of advowſon, the king reſerveth to himſelf ſuch advowſons, albeit that among other perſons it hath been obſerved otherwiſe.

Yet when he reſtoreth, as in caſe of the reſtitution of a biſhop's temporalties; then advowſons paſs without expreſs mention, or any words equivalent thereto. 10 Co. 64.

The law, in the caſe of a common perſon, is thus ſet down by Rolle, out of the antient books: If a man ſeiſed of a manor to which an advowſon is appendant, aliens that manor, without ſaying with the appurtenances (and even without naming the advowſon) yet the advowſon ſhall paſs; for 'tis parcel of the manor. 2 Rol. Abr. 60.

An advowſon being an inheritance incorporeal, and not lying in manual occupation, cannot paſs by livery; but may be granted by deed, or by will, either for the inheritance, or for the right of one or more turns, or for as many as ſhall happen within a time limited.

But this general rule, with regard to advowſons in groſs, next avoidances, and the like, is to be underſtood with two limitations.

Firſt, That it extends not to eccleſiaſtical perſons of any kind or degree, who are ſeiſed of advowſons in the right of their churches; nor to maſters and fellows of colleges, nor to guardians of hoſpitals, who are ſeiſed in right of their houſes; all theſe being reſtrained (the biſhops by the 1 Eliz. cap. 19, and the reſt by the 13 Eliz. cap. 10,) from making any grants but of things corporeal, of which a rent or annual profit may be reſerved; and advowſons and next avoidances, which are incorporeal and lie in grant, cannot be of that ſort; and therefore ſuch grants, however confirmed, are void againſt the ſucceſſor; though they have been adjudged to be good againſt the grantors (as biſhop, dean, maſter, or guardian) during their own times.

Secondly, A grant of the next avoidance may be aſſigned before the avoidance happens. 2 Rol. Ab. 45, &c. But an avoidance cannot be granted by a common perſon after it is fallen: while the church is abſolutely void. Mo. 89: Dy. 129 b.: 26 a: 283 a: & ſee 2 Wilſ. 197; and a grant of the advowſon made after the church is actually fallen vacant is equally void; not as is ſaid in the old books, becauſe it is a choſe in action; but becauſe ſuch grants might (indeed inevitably would) encourage ſimony. 2 Burr. 1510, 1. See tit. Simony, and ſee Kyd's Com. Dig. tit. Advowſon.

If two have a grant of the next avoidance, and one releaſeth all right and title to the other while the church is void: ſuch releaſe is void. But the king's grant of a void turn hath been adjudged to be good. 3 Leon. 196: Dy. 283, a: Hob. 140.

If one be ſeiſed of an advowſon in fee, and the church doth become void, the void turn is a chattel; and if the patron dieth before he doth preſent, the avoidance doth not go to his heir, but to his executor. Watſ. c. 9.

But if the incumbent of a church be alſo ſeiſed in fee of the advowſon of the ſame church, and die; his heir, and not his executors, ſhall preſent; for altho' the advowſon doth not deſcend to the heir at the death of the anceſtor, and by his death the church become void, ſo that the avoidance may be ſaid in this caſe to be ſevered from the advowſon before it deſcend to the heir, and veſted in the executor; yet both the avoidance and deſcent to the heir happening at the ſame inſtant, the title of the heir ſhall be preferred as the more antient and worthy. Watſ. c. 9. fo. 72. See Watkins on Deſcents, p. 62: 3 Lev. 47.

Tenant by the curteſy may be of an advowſon, when the wife dies before avoidance. 1 Inſt. 29. a.

By laſt will and teſtament, the right of preſenting to the next avoidance, or the inheritance of an advowſon, may be deviſed to any perſon; and if ſuch deviſe be made by the incumbent of the church, the inheritance of the advowſon being in him, it is good, tho' he die incumbent; for altho' the teſtament hath no effect but by the death of the teſtator, yet it hath an inception in his lifetime. And ſo it is, tho' he appoint by his will who ſhall be preſented by the executors, or that one executor ſhall preſent the other, or doth deviſe that his executors ſhall grant the advowſon to ſuch a man. Watſ. c. 10.

Advowſons are either preſentative, collative, or donative.

An advowſon preſentative is, where the patron does preſent or offer his clerk to the biſhop of the dioceſe, to be inſtituted in his church.

This may be done either by word or writing. The king may preſent by word, or in writing under any ſeal; who otherwiſe cannot do any legal act, but by matter of record; or by letters patent under the great ſeal. But where a corporation aggregate doth preſent, it muſt be under ſeal. The preſentation to a vicarage doth of common right belong to the parſon. If a feme covert hath title to preſent, the preſentation muſt be by huſband and wife and in both their names, except in caſe of the queen conſort. Wood's Inſt. 155, &c.

A guardian by ſocage or by nurture cannot preſent to a vacant living in right of the infant heir, or in his name, becauſe he can make no benefit of it, or account for it, though it is ſometimes practiſed, and made good by time. Therefore the infant ſhall preſent of whatſoever age. Vide Co. Lit. 17 b. If a common patron preſents firſt one clerk, and then another, the biſhop may inſtitute which he pleaſes; unleſs he revokes the preſentation of one of them before he is admitted by the biſhop. If there is a right of nomination in one, and a right of preſentation in another, to the ſame benefice; he that has the right of nomination is the true patron, and the other is obliged to preſent the clerk which is nominated. 1 Inſt. 156.

An advowſon collative is that advowſon which is lodged in the biſhop; for collation is the giving of a benefice by a biſhop, when he is the original patron thereof, or he gains a right by lapſe.

Collation differs from inſtitution in this; that inſtitution is performed by the biſhop upon the preſentation of another, and collation is his own act of preſentation; and it differeth from a common preſentation, as it is the giving of the church to the parſon; and preſentation is the giving or offering the parſon to the church. But collation ſupplies the place of preſentation and inſtitution; and amounts to the ſame as inſtitution, where the biſhop is both patron and ordinary. 1 Lil. Ab. 273.

A biſhop may either neglect to collate, or he may make his collation without title; but ſuch a wrongful collation doth not put the true patron out of poſſeſſion; for after the collatee of the biſhop is inſtituted and inducted, the patron may preſent his clerk; collation in this caſe being to be intended only as a priviſional incumbency to ſerve the church. 1 Inſt. 344.

Where a biſhop gives a benefice as patron, he collates by writ jure pleno; when by lapſe, jure devoluto. The collation by lapſe is in right of the patron. F. N. B. 31. See poſt, Lapſe II.

An advowſon donative is, when the king or other patron (in whom the advowſon of the church is lodged) does, by a ſingle donation in writing, put the clerk into poſſeſſion, without preſentation, inſtitution, or induction. Donatives are either of churches parochial, chapels, prebends, &c. and may be exempt from all ordinary juriſdictions, ſo that the ordinary cannot viſit them, and conſequently cannot demand procurations. If the true patron of a church or chapel donative doth once preſent to the ordinary, and his clerk is admitted and inſtituted, it becomes a church preſentative, and ſhall never have the privilege of a donative afterwards. Yet if a ſtranger preſents to ſuch a donative, and inſtitution is given, all is void. 1 Inſt. 158.

The right of donation deſcends to the heir (the anceſtor dying ſeiſed, where the church became void in his lifetime) and not to the executor; which it would had it been a preſentative benefice. 2 Wilſon 150, 1.

There is not any caſe in the books to exclude the heir of a donative from his turn in this caſe. And a patron of a donative can never be put out of poſſeſſion by an uſurpation. Id. ibid.

II. A Lapſe is a title given to the ordinary, to collate to a church, by the neglect of the patron to preſent to it within ſix months after avoidance. Or a lapſe is a devolution of a right of preſenting from the patron to the biſhop; from the biſhop to the archbiſhop; from the archbiſhop to the king. The term in which the title by lapſe commences from one to the other ſucceſſively is ſix months, or half a year according to the calendar, not accounting twenty-eight days to the month, as in other caſes, becauſe this computation is by the Eccleſiaſtical law; and becauſe tempus ſemeſtre, in the ſtat. of Weſt. 2. chap. 5, is intended of half a year, the whole year containing 365 days; which being divided, the half year for the patron to preſent is 182 days. The day in which the church becomes void is not to be reckoned as part of the ſix months. Wood's Inſt. 160: Hob. 30: 4 Rep. 17: 6 Rep. 62.

Where a patron preſents his clerk before the biſhop hath collated, the preſentation is good, notwithſtanding the ſix months are paſt, and ſhall bar the biſhop, who cannot take any advantage of the lapſe: and ſo if the patron makes his preſentation before the archbiſhop hath collated, although twelve months are paſt; but if the biſhop collates after twelve months, this bars not the archbiſhop. 2 Rol. Ab. 369: 2 Inſt. 273. If a biſhop doth not collate to benefices of his own gift, they lapſe at the end of ſix months to the archbiſhop; and if the archbiſhop neglects to collate within ſix months to a benefice of his gift, the king ſhall have it by lapſe. Dr. & Stud. c. 36. And if a church continues void ſeveral years by lapſe, the ſucceſſor of the king may preſent. Cro. Car. 258. But if the king hath a title to preſent by lapſe, and he ſuffers the patron to preſent, and the preſentee dies, or reſigns before the king hath preſented, if the preſentation is real, and not by covin, he hath loſt his preſentation; for lapſe is but for the firſt and next turn, and by the death of the incumbent, a new title is given to the patron; though it hath been adjudged that the king in ſuch caſe may preſent at any time as long as that preſentee is incumbent. 2 Cro. 216: Moor 244. When the patronage of the church is litigious, and one party doth recover againſt the other in a quare impedit, if the biſhop be not named in the writ, and ſix months paſs while the ſuit is depending, lapſe ſhall incur to the biſhop: if the biſhop be named in the writ, then neither the biſhop, archbiſhop, or king can take the benefice by lapſe: and yet it is ſaid, if the patron within the ſix months brings a quare impedit againſt the biſhop, and then the ſix months paſs without any preſentation by the patron, lapſe ſhall incur to the biſhop. 2 Rol. Ab. 365: 6 Rep. 52: 1 Inſt. 344: Hob. 270.

Where the biſhop is a diſturber, or the church remains void above ſix months by his fault, there ſhall be no lapſe. 1 Inſt. 344. A clerk preſented being refuſed by the biſhop for any ſufficient cauſe, as illiterature, ill life, &c. he is to give the patron notice of it, that another may be preſented in due time, otherwiſe the biſhop ſhall not collate by lapſe; becauſe he ſhall not take advantage of his own wrong, in not giving notice to the patron as he ought to do by law. Dyer 292. And if an avoidance is by reſignation, which muſt neceſſarily be to the biſhop, by the act of the incumbent, or by deprivation, which is the act of the law; lapſe ſhall not incur to the biſhop, till ſix months after notice given by him to the patron: When the church becomes void by the death of the incumbent, &c. the patron muſt preſent in ſix months without notice from the biſhop, or ſhall loſe his preſentation by lapſe. Dyer 293, 327: 1 Inſt. 135: 4 Rep. 75. And it is expreſsly provided, by ſtat. 13 Eliz. c. 12, that no title conferred by lapſe ſhall accrue upon any deprivation ipſo facto, but after ſix months' notice of ſuch deprivation, given by the ordinary to the patron.

In the caſes of deprivation and reſignation where the patron is to have notice before the church can lapſe, the patron is not bound to take notice from any body but the biſhop himſelf, or other ordinary, which muſt be perſonally given to the party, if he live in the ſame country; and ſuch notice muſt expreſs in certain the cauſe of deprivation, &c. If the patron live in a foreign county, then the notice may be publiſhed in the pariſh church, and affixed on the church door. Cro. Eliz. 119: Dyer 328. And this notice muſt be given, even though the patron himſelf proſecute the incumbent to deprivation. 6 Rep. 29.

There are avoidances by act of parliament, wherein there muſt be a judicial ſentence pronounced to make the living void: if a man hath one benefice with cure, &c. and take another with cure, without any diſpenſation to hold two benefices, in ſuch caſe the firſt is void by the ſtatute 21 H. 8. c. 13; if it was above the value of 8*l.* During an avoidance, it is ſaid that the houſe and glebe of the benefice are in abeyance: but by the ſtat. 28 H. 8. c. 11, the profits ariſing during the avoidance are given to the next incumbent towards payment of the firſt fruits; tho' the ordinary may receive the profits to provide for the ſervice of the church, and ſhall be allowed the charges of ſupplying the cure, &c. for which purpoſe the churchwardens of the pariſh are uſually appointed.

If a clerk is inſtituted to a benefice of the yearly value of 8*l.* and before induction accepts another benefice with cure, and is inſtituted, the firſt benefice is void by the ſtat. 21 H. 8. c. 13: for he who is inſtituted only, is properly ſaid to have accepted a benefice within the words of the act. 4 Rep. 78.

But if he is inducted into a ſecond benefice, the firſt is void in facto & jure, and not voidable only, quoad, the patron, and until he preſents another; and in ſuch caſe the patron ought to take notice of the avoidance at his peril, and preſent within the ſix months. Cro. Car. 258.

In caſes where there ought to be notice, if none is given by the biſhop or archbiſhop in a year and a half, whereby lapſe would come to the king if it had been given; here the lapſe ariſes not to the king, where no title aroſe to the inferior ordinary. Dyer 340. And it has been adjudged, that lapſe is not an intereſt, like the patronage, but an office of truſt repoſed by law in the ordinary; and the end of it is, to provide the church a rector, in default of the patron: and it cannot be granted over; for the grant of the next lapſe of a church, either before it falls, or after, is void. F. N. B. 34. Alſo if lapſe incurs, and then the ordinary dies, the king ſhall preſent, and not the ordinary's executors, becauſe it is rather an adminiſtration, than an intereſt. 25 E. 3. 4. A lapſe may incur againſt an infant or feme covert, if they do not preſent within ſix months. 1 Inſt. 246. But there is no lapſe againſt the king, who may take his own time; and plenarty ſhall be no bar againſt the king's title, becauſe nullum tempus occurrit regi. 2 Inſt. 273: Dyer 351. By preſentation and inſtitution, a lapſe is prevented; though the clerk is never inducted: and a donative cannot lapſe either to the ordinary or the king. 2 Inſt. 273: See 2 Comm. 276, and 4 Comm. 105.

III. The Uſurpation of a church benefice is when one that hath no right preſents to the church; and his clerk is admitted and inſtituted into it and hath quiet poſſeſſion ſix months after inſtitution before a quare impedit brought. It muſt commence upon a preſentation, not a collation, becauſe by collation the church is not full; but the right patron may bring his writ at any time to remove the uſurper. 1 Inſt. 227: 6 Rep. 30.

No one can uſurp upon the king; but an uſurpation may diſpoſſeſs him of his preſentation, ſo as he ſhall be obliged to bring a quare impedit. 3 Salk. 389. One coparcener or joint-tenant cannot uſurp upon the other; but where there are two patrons of churches united, if one preſents in the other's turn, it is an uſurpation. Dy. 259. A preſentation which is void in law, as in caſe of ſimony or to a church that is full, makes no uſurpation. 2 Rep 93.

In this caſe of uſurpation the patron loſt, by the common law, not only his turn of preſentment, but alſo the perpetual inheritance of the advowſon; ſo that he could not preſent again upon the next avoidance, unleſs in the mean time he recovered his right, by a real action, viz. a writ of right of advowſon. 3 Comm. 243. See further tit. Darrein Preſentment: Quare impedit.

But biſhops in ancient times, either by careleſſneſs or colluſion, frequently inſtituting clerks upon the preſentation of uſurpers, and thereby defrauding the real patrons of their right of poſſeſſion, it was in ſubſtance enacted by ſtat. Weſtm. 2. (13 E. 1.) c. 5. § 2, "that if a poſſeſſory action be brought within ſix months after the avoidance, the patron ſhall (notwithſtanding ſuch uſurpation and inſtitution) recover that very preſentation;" which gives back to him the ſeiſin of the advowſon. Yet ſtill if the true patron omitted to bring his action within ſix months, the ſeiſin was gained by the uſurper, and the patron, to recover it, was driven to the long and hazardous proceſs of a writ of right. To remedy which it was farther enacted by ſtatute 7 Anne, c. 18, "that no uſurpation ſhall diſplace the eſtate or intereſt of the patron, or turn it to a mere right; but that the true patron may preſent upon the next avoidance, as if no ſuch uſurpation had happened." So that the title of uſurpation is now much narrowed, and the law ſtands upon this reaſonable foundation: that if a ſtranger uſurps my preſentation, and I do not purſue my right within ſix months, I ſhall loſe that turn without remedy, for the peace of the church, and as a puniſhment for my own negligence; but that turn is the only one I ſhall loſe thereby. Uſurpation now gains no right to the uſurper, with regard to any future avoidance, but only to the preſent vacancy: it cannot indeed be remedied after ſix months are paſt; but during thoſe ſix months, it is only a ſpecies of diſturbance. 3 Comm. 244.

IV. Advowſons were formerly moſt of them appendant to manors, and the patrons parochial barons; the lordſhip of the manor, and patronage of the church were ſeldom in different hands till advowſons were given to religious houſes; but of late times the lordſhip of the manor and the advowſon of the church have been divided; and now not only lords of manors, but mean perſons have, by purchaſe, the dignity of patrons of churches, to the great prejudice thereof. By the common law the right of patronage is a real right fixed in the patrons or founders, and their heirs, wherein they have as abſolute a property as any other man hath in his lands and tenements: for advowſons are a temporal inheritance, and lay fee; they may be granted by deed or will, and are aſſets in the hands of heirs or executors. Co. Lit. 119. A recovery may be ſuffered of an advowſon; a wife may be endowed of it; a huſband tenant by the curteſy; and it may be forfeited by treaſon or felony. 1 Rep. 56: 10 Rep. 55. If an advowſon deſcends to coparceners, and the church after the death of their anceſtors, becomes void, (by ſtat. Weſtm. 2. (13 E. 1:) ſtat. 1. c. 5,) the eldeſt ſiſter ſhall firſt preſent. And when coparceners, jointenants, &c. are ſeiſed of an advowſon, and partition is made, to preſent by turns; by ſtat. 7 Anne, c. 18, each ſhall be ſeiſed of their ſeparate eſtate.

Preſentation is properly the act of a patron offering his clerk to the biſhop of the dioceſe, to be inſtituted in a church or benefice of his gift, which is void. 2 Lil. Abr. 351.

An alien-born cannot preſent to a benefice in his own right; for if he purchaſes an advowſon, and the church becomes void, the king ſhall preſent after office found that the patron is an alien. 2 Nelſ. 1290. And by ſtat. 7 R. 2. c. 12, no alien ſhall purchaſe a benefice in this realm, nor occupy the ſame, without the king's licence, on pain of a præmunire.

Papiſts are diſabled to preſent to benefices, and the Univerſities are to preſent, &c. But a Popiſh recuſant may grant away his patronage to another, who may make preſentation, where there is no fraud: See ſtat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. § 18, 19: 1 W. & M. c. 26: 12 Anne, c. 14: & 1 Jon. 19. But by ſtat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 17. § 5, Grants of advowſons by papiſts are void, unleſs made for a valuable conſideration to a proteſtant purchaſer, and only for the benefit of proteſtants; and deviſes of advowſons, by papiſts are alſo void.

All perſons who have ability to purchaſe or grant, have likewiſe ability to preſent to vacant benefices: but a dean and chapter cannot preſent the dean; nor may a clergyman who is patron preſent himſelf, though he may pray to be admitted by the ordinary, and the admiſſion ſhall be good.

Coparceners are but as one patron, and ought to agree in the preſentation of one perſon; if they cannot agree, the eldeſt ſhall preſent firſt alone, and the biſhop is obliged to admit his clerk, and afterwards the others in their order ſhall prefer their clerks; jointenants and tenants in common, muſt regularly join in preſentation, and if either preſent alone, the biſhop may refuſe his clerk; as he may alſo the clerk preſented by the major part of them; but if there are two jointenants of the next avoidance, one may preſent the other, and two jointenants may preſent a third, but not a ſtranger.

If a rector is made biſhop, the king ſhall preſent to the rectory unleſs he grant to the biſhop, before he is conſecrated, a diſpenſation to hold it with his biſhoprick; but if an incumbent of a church is made a biſhop, and the king preſents or grants that he ſhould hold the church in commendam which is quaſi a preſentation, a grantee of the next avoidance or preſentation hath loſt it, the king having the next preſentation. See 2 Stra. 841, that this preſentation is not confined to the life-time of the biſhop promoted.

promoted. If the king preſent to a church by lapſe, where he ought to preſent pleno jure, and as patron of the church, ſuch a preſentation is not good; for the king is deceived in his grant, by miſtaking his title, which may be prejudicial to him; the preſenting by lapſe entitling only that preſentation: The lord chancellor preſents to the king's benefices under 20*l.* &c. 2 Rol. Ab. 354: 3 Inſt. 156: Co. Lit. 186: 2 Nelſ. Ab. 1288, 1290: 2 Lil. 351.

The king may repeal a preſentation before his clerk is inducted; and this he may do by granting the preſentation to another, which, without any farther ſignification of his mind, is a revocation of the firſt preſentation. Dyer 290, 360.

If two patrons preſent their clerks to a church, the biſhop is to determine who ſhall be admitted by a jus patronatûs, &c. Moor 499.

A clerk may be refuſed by the biſhop, if the patron is excommunicate, and remains in contempt 40 days. 2 Ro. Ab. 355. As to refuſal for the inſufficiency of the clerk preſented, ſee tit. Parſon.

If the biſhop refuſes to admit the clerk preſented, he muſt give notice of his refuſal, with the cauſe of it, forthwith; and on ſuch notice the patron muſt preſent another clerk, within ſix months from the avoidance, if he thinks the objection againſt his firſt clerk contains ſufficient cauſe of refuſal; but if not, he may bring his quare impedit, againſt the biſhop. 2 Rol. Ab. 364. See ante, Lapſe II.

If a defendant, or any ſtranger, preſents a clerk pending a quare impedit, and afterwards the plaintiff obtains judgment, he cannot, by virtue of that judgment, remove him, who was thus preſented; but he is to bring a ſcire facias againſt him to ſhew cauſe quare executionem non habet; and then, if it be found that he had no title, he ſhall be amoved. The way to prevent ſuch a preſentation, is to take out a nè admittas to the biſhop; and then the writ quare incumbravit lies, by virtue whereof the incumbent ſhall be amoved, and put to his quare impedit, let his title be what it will; but if a nè admittas be not taken out, and another incumbent ſhould come in by good title pendente lite, he ſhall hold it. Sid. 93: Cro. Jac. 93.

When a biſhop hath a preſentation in right of his biſhoprick, and dies, neither his executor, nor heir, ſhall have the void turn, but the king; in whoſe hands are the temporalties; and he hath a right to preſent on an avoidance after the ſeizure, on death of the biſhop.

Tenant in tail of an advowſon, and his ſon, and heir joined in the grant of the next preſentation, tenant in tail died; this grant was held void as to the ſon and heir, becauſe he had nothing in the advowſon at the time he joined with his father in the grant. Hob. 45.

If a preſentation itſelf bears date while the church is full of another clerk, it is void; and where two or more have a title to preſent by turn, one of them preſents, his clerk is admitted, inſtituted and inducted, and afterwards deprived, he ſhall not preſent again, but that preſentation ſhall ſerve his turn: though where the admiſſion and inſtitution of his clerk is void, there the turn ſhall not be ſerved; as if after induction he neglects to read the thirty-nine articles, &c. his inſtitution is void by the ſtat. 13 Eliz. and the patron may preſent again, F. N. B. 33: 5 Rep. 102.

The right of preſenting to a church, may paſs from one ſeiſed of the ſame by the patron's acknowledging of a ſtatute, &c. which being extended, if the church becomes void, during the conuſee's eſtate, the conuſee may preſent. Owen 49.

Where a common perſon is patron, he may preſent by parol, as well as by writing to the biſhop; Co. Lit. 120. A preſentation doth not carry with it the formality of a deed; but it is in the nature of a letter miſſive by which the clerk is offered to the biſhop; and it paſſeth no intereſt, as a grant doth, being no more than a recommendation of a clerk to the ordinary to be admitted. But where a plaintiff declared upon a grant of the next preſentation, and on oyer of the deed it appeared to be only a letter written by the patron to the father of the plaintiff, that he had given his ſon the next preſentation; adjudged that it would not paſs by ſuch letter, without a formal deed. Owen 47.

Right of preſentation may be forfeited in ſeveral caſes; as by attainder of the patron, or by outlawry, and then the king ſhall preſent: and if the outlawry be reverſed where the advowſon is forfeited by the outlawry, and the church becomes void after, the preſentation is veſted in the crown; but if at the time of the outlawry, the church was void, then the preſentation was forfeited as a chattel, and on reverſing the ſame, the party ſhall be reſtored to it. By appropriation without licence from the crown, right of preſentation may be forfeited; tho' the inheritance in this caſe is not forfeited, only the king ſhall have the preſentation in nature of a diſtreſs, till the party hath paid a fine for his contempt. By alienation in fee of the advowſon by a grantee for life of the next avoidance, a preſentation is forfeited; and after ſuch alienation the grantor may preſent, but then he muſt enter for the forfeiture of the grantee, in the life-time of the incumbent, to determine his eſtate before the preſentation veſts in him on the incumbent's death. And by ſimony it may be likewiſe forfeited and loſt. Moor 269: Plowd 299: 2 Roll. Ab. 352: ſtat. 31 Eliz. c. 6. § 5: See Simony, &c.

ADVOWSON OF THE MOIETY OF THE CHURCH, advocatio medietatis eccleſiæ.] Is where there are two ſeveral patrons and two ſeveral incumbents in one and the ſame church, the one of the one moiety, the other of the other moiety thereof. Co. Lit. 17 b. —— Medietas advocationis, a moiety of the advowſon, is where two muſt join in the preſentation, and there is but one incumbent: But ſee ſtat. 7 Anne, c. 18, mentioned in tit. Advowſon IV.

ADVOWSON OF RELIGIOUS HOUSES. Where any perſons founded any houſe of religion, they had thereby the advowſon or patronage thereof, like unto thoſe who built and endowed pariſh churches. And ſometimes theſe patrons had the ſole nomination of the abbot, or prior, &c. either by inveſtiture or delivery of a paſtoral ſtaff: or by direct preſentation to the dioceſan; or if a free election were left to the religious, a congé d'eſlire, or licence for election, was firſt to be obtained of the patron, and the elect confirmed by him. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 147, 163.

AERIE, aeria accipitrum.] An airy of goſhawks, is the proper term for hawks, for that which of other birds we call a neſt. And it is generally ſaid to come from the French word aire, a hawk's neſt. Stelman derives it from Sax. eghe, an egg, ſoftened into eye, uſed to expreſs a brood of pheaſants,) and thence eyrie, or as above aerie, a place a place or repoſitory for eggs. The liberty of keeping theſe aeries of hawks was a privilege, granted to great perſons: and the preſerving the aeries in the king's foreſts was one ſort of tenure of lands by ſervice.

ÆSTIMATIO CAPITIS, pretium hominis.] King Athelſtane ordained that fines ſhould be paid for offences committed againſt ſeveral perſons according to their degrees and quality, by eſtimation of their heads. Creſſ. Ch. Hiſt. 834: Leg. Hen. 1.

ÆTATE PROBANDA.] A writ that lay to enquire, whether the king's tenant holding in chief by chivalry, was of full age to receive his lands into his own hands. It was directed to the eſcheator of the county; but is now diſuſed, ſince wards and liveries are taken away by the ſtatute. Reg. Orig. 294.

AFFEERERS, afferatores, from the Fr. affier, to affirm.] Are thoſe who in courts-leet upon oath, ſettle and moderate the fines and amercements; and they are alſo appointed for moderating amercements, in courts-baron. See tit. Leet.

AFFIANCE, from the Latin Affidare, i. e. fidem dare.] The plighting of troth between a man and a woman, upon agreement of marriage. Lit. ſect. 39.

AFFIDARE, To plight one's faith, or give or ſwear fealty, i. e. fidelity. Affidari to be muſtered and enrolled for ſoldiers. M. S. Dom. de Farendon 22, 55.

AFFIDATIO DOMINORUM, An oath taken by the lords in parliament, anno 3 Hen. 6. Rot. Parl.

AFFIDATUS, A tenant by fealty.

AFFIDAVIT, An oath in writing; and to make affidavit of a thing, is to teſtify it upon oath. An affidavit, generally ſpeaking, is an oath in writing, ſworn before ſome perſon who hath authority to adminiſter ſuch oath: and the true place of habitation and true addition of every perſon who ſhall make an affidavit, is to be inſerted in his affidavit. 1 Lill. Abr. 44, 46. Affidavits ought to ſet forth the matter of fact only, which the party intends to prove by his affidavit; and not to declare the merits of the cauſe, of which the court is to judge. 21 Car. I. B. R. The plaintiff or defendant (having authority to take affidavits) may take affidavit in a cauſe depending; yet it will not be admitted in evidence at the trial, but only upon motions. 1 Lill. 44. When an affidavit hath been read in court, it ought to be filed, that the adverſe party may ſee it, and take a copy. Paſch. 1655. An affidavit taken before a maſter in Chancery will not be of any force in the court of King's Bench, or other courts, nor ought to be read there; for it ought to be made before one of the judges of the court wherein the cauſe is depending, or a commiſſioner in the country, appointed for taking affidavits. Sty. 455: By Stat. 29 Car. II. c. 5, The judges, &c. of the courts at Weſtminſter by commiſſion may impower perſons in the ſeveral counties of England to take affidavits concerning matters depending in their ſeveral courts, as maſters in Chancery extraordinary uſed to do. Where affidavits are taken by commiſſioners in the country according to the ſtatute 29 Car. II. and 'tis expreſſed to be in a cauſe depending between two certain perſons, and there is no ſuch depending, thoſe affidavits cannot be read, becauſe the commiſſioners have no authority to take them; (and for that reaſon the party cannot be convicted of perjury upon them); but if there is ſuch a cauſe in court and affidavits taken concerning ſome collateral matter, they may be read. Salk. 461.

Affidavits are uſually for certifying the ſervice of proceſs, or other matters touching the proceedings in a cauſe; or in ſupport of, or againſt motions, in caſes, where the court determines matters, &c. in a ſummary way.

If a perſon exhibits a bill in equity for the diſcovery of a deed, and prays relief thereupon, he muſt annex an affidavit to his bill, that he has not ſuch deed in his poſſeſſion, or that it is not in his power to come at it; for otherwiſe he takes away the juriſdiction of the common law courts, without ſhewing any probable cauſe why he ſhould ſue in equity. 1 Chan. Ca. 11, 231: 1 Vern. 59, 180, 247.

But if he ſeeks diſcovery of the deed only, or that it may be produced at a trial at law, he need not annex ſuch affidavit to his bill; for it is not to be preſumed that in either of theſe caſes he would do ſo abſurd a thing, as exhibit a bill, if he had the deed in his poſſeſſion. 1 Vern. 180, 247.

In bills of interpleader, the party who prefers it muſt make affidavit that he does not collude with either of the other parties. 1 New Abr. 66.

An affidavit muſt ſet forth the matter poſitively, and all material circumſtances attending it, that the court may judge whether the deponent's concluſion be juſt or not. 1 New Abr. 66.

And therefore on motion to put off a trial for want of a material witneſs, it muſt appear that ſufficient endeavours were made uſe of to have him at the time appointed, and that he cannot poſſibly be preſent, though he may on further time given. 7 Mod. 121: Comb. 421, 422.

There being one affidavit againſt another relating to a judgment, the matter was referred to a trial at law upon a feigned iſſue, to ſatisfy the conſcience of the court as to the fact alledged Comberb. 399.

See Stat. 17 Geo. II. c. 7, for taking and ſwearing affidavits to be made uſe of in any of the courts of the county palatine of Lancaſter.

The Stat 12 Geo. 1. c. 29, requires the cauſe of action to be 10*l.* to hold to ſpecial bail; and both the ſtatute and the eſtabliſhed rules of the court require a poſitive affidavit to be made of the debt; and not couched in words of reference, except in the caſe of executors, aſſignees, &c. 1. Term Rep. 83: 4 Term Rep. 176. and they muſt ſwear to their belief of the debt.

The affidavit muſt be made by a perſon competent to be a witneſs, therefore a perſon convicted of felony is not admiſſible. 5 Mod. 74: Salk. 261. Nor a pick-pocket returned from tranſportation. Barnes 79. Affidavits made by illiterate perſons ſhould be perfectly explained to them. See 4 Term Rep. 284.

Where there is a good cauſe of action and a proper affidavit, defendant may be held to bail; and the court (of K. B.) will not go out of the affidavit or prejudge the cauſe, by entering into the merits. 1 Salk. 100. Plaintiff therefore muſt ſtand or fall by his affidavit, it being the conſtant and uniform practice not to receive a ſupplemental or explanatory affidavit on the part of plaintiff; nor a counter or contradictory one on the part of defendant. 2 Str. 1157: 1 Wilſ. 335.

But in C. P. where the firſt affidavit is defective, yet it is allowed to be ſupplied by another, on ſhewing cauſe againſt a common appearance. Barnes 100: 2 Wilſ. 224: 2 Black. Rep. 850.

AFFIRMATION, An indulgence allowed by law to the people called Quakers, who in caſes where an oath is required from others, may make a ſolem affirmation that what they ſay is true. See Quakers.

AFFORARE, To affeer (which ſee); to ſet a value or price on a thing. Du Cange.

AFFORATUS, Appraiſed or valued, as things vendible in a fair or market. Cartular. Glaſton. M. S. fol. 58.

AFFORCIAMENT, afforciamentum.] A fortreſs, ſtrong hold, or other fortification. Pryn. Animad. on Coke, fol. 184.

AFFORCIARE, To add, to increaſe or make ſtronger. Bact. lib. 4. c. 19. viz. in caſe of diſagreement of the jury, let the aſſiſe be increaſed.

AFFOREST, afforeſtare.] To turn ground into a foreſt. Chart. de Foreſt. c. 1. When foreſt ground is turned from foreſt to other uſes, it is called diſafforeſted. Vide Foreſt.

AFFRAY, Is derived from the Fr. word effrayer, to affright, and it formerly meant no more; as where perſons appeared with armour or weapons not uſually worn, to the terror of others. See ſtat. 2 Ed. 3. c. 3. But now it ſignifies a ſkirmiſh or fighting between two or more, and there muſt be a ſtroke given, or offered, or a weapon drawn, otherwiſe it is not an affray. 3 Inſt. 158. An affray is a public offence to the terror of the king's ſubjects; and ſo called, becauſe it affrighteth and maketh men afraid. 3 Inſt. 158.

From this laſt definition it ſeems clearly to follow, that there may be an aſſault, which will not amount to an affray; as where it happens in a private place, out of the hearing or ſeeing of any, except the parties concerned; in which caſe it cannot be ſaid to be to the terror of the people.

Alſo it is ſaid, that no quarrelſome or threatening words whatſoever ſhall amount to an affray; and that no one can juſtify laying his hands on thoſe who ſhall barely quarrel with angry words, without coming to blows; yet it ſeemeth that the conſtable may at the requeſt of the party threatened, carry the perſon who threatens to beat him before a juſtice in order to find ſureties.

Alſo, it is certain, that it is a very high offence to challenge another, either by word or letter, to fight a duel, or to be the meſſenger of ſuch a challenge; or even barely to endeavour to provoke another to ſend a challenge, or to fight; as by diſperſing letters to that purpoſe, full of reflections, and inſinuating a deſire to fight. See on this ſubject Leach's Hawkins, i. cap. 63, & ii. cap. 10. § 17; c. 13. § 8; c. 14. § 8.

But admitting that bare words do not, in the judgment of law, carry in them ſo much terror as to amount to an affray, yet it ſeems certain, that in ſome caſes there may be an affray, where there is no actual violence; as where a man arms himſelf with dangerous and unuſual weapons, in ſuch a manner as will naturally cauſe a terror to the people; which is ſaid to have been always an offence at the common law, and is ſtrictly prohibited by ſtatute 2 Ed. 3. c. 3. See tit. Riding Armed. To make an affray in any of the king's inferior courts of juſtice is highly finable. 3 Inſt. 141: 12 Co. 71.

As to the power of conſtables and others in caſes of affray, ſee this Dictionary, tit. Conſtable III. 1.

A juſtice of peace may commit affrayers, until they find ſureties for the peace. And there is no doubt but that a juſtice of peace may and muſt do all ſuch things to that purpoſe, which a private man or conſtable are either enabled or required by the law to do: but it is ſaid, that he cannot without a warrant authorize the arreſt of any perſon for an affray out of his own view; yet it ſeems clear, that in ſuch caſe he may make his warrant to bring the offender before him, in order to compel him to find ſureties for the peace. See Leach's Hawkins, P. C. i. cap. 63.

It is inquirable in the court leet; and puniſhable by juſtices of peace in their ſeſſions, by fine and impriſonment. And it differs from aſſault, in that it is a wrong to the public; whereas aſſault is of a private nature. Lamb. lib. 2. yet indictment lies, as being a breach of the public peace.

AFFREIGHTMENT, affretamentum.] The freight of a ſhip, from the French fret, freight. Pat. 11. Hen. 4. See Charter-party.

AFFRI, vel Affra, Bullocks, or horſes or beaſts of the plough.—Mon. Angl. par. 2. f. 291. And in the county of Northumberland, the people to this day call a dull or ſlow horſe, a falſe aver or afer. Spelm. Gloſſ.

AFRICAN COMPANY. In the ninth year of King William III. the trade to a great portion of Africa, was in the hands of The Royal African Company, which under a charter from Charles II. enjoyed an excluſive trade from the port of Sallee, in South Barbary to the Cape of Good Hope, both incluſive, with all the iſlands near adjoining to thoſe coaſts. A new arrangement of this trade was made by ſtat. 9 & 10. W. III. c. 26; by which the trade was opened; but this act continued in force only 13 years; and not being renewed, the whole trade reverted again to the excluſive claim of the company.

This African trade was put on a new footing by ſtat. 23 Geo. II. c. 31; which made it lawful for all the king's ſubjects freely to trade between the port of Sallee in South Barbary and the Cape of Good Hope. Thus was the trade taken out of the hands of the Royal African Company. The act then goes on to provide, that all perſons trading to that coaſt between Cape Blanco and the Cape of Good Hope, ſhould be a body corporate by the name of The Company of Merchants trading to Africa; the admiſſion to which company was made very eaſy, namely by the payment of only 40 s. The trade between the port of Sallee and Cape Blanco was left open to all perſons whatſoever. By ſtat. 25 Geo. II. c. 40, (ſee ſt. 24 Geo. II. c. 49) all the forts caſtles and factories on the coaſt, from the port of Sallee to the Cape of Good Hope, belonging to the old company, were transferred to, and veſted in the new company; for the like purpoſe of protecting and facilitating the trade. By ſtat. 4 Geo. III. c. 20. the fort of Senegal lately ceded by France to Great Britain was in like manner veſted in the new company.

The fort of Senegal had been ceded to France by the peace of 1783, and the French King guaranteed to Great Britain the poſſeſſion of Fort James and the river Gambia both lying between the fort of Sallee and Cape Rouge. On that occaſion it was thought more beneficial for the trade, that the forts, settlements and factories between those ports which, by stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 44, (repealing the above act of 4 Geo. 3. c. 20) had been vested in the King, should be revested in the company; this was accordingly done by stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 65. The same freedom of trading there was, notwithstanding, continued to all the king's subjects.

By stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 19. § 11, 12. which regards this trade, some regulations were made as to importing from Gibraltar, merchandize the produce of the Emperor of Morocco's dominions.

AGE, ætas, Fr. age.] In common acceptation signifies a man's life from his birth to any certain time, or the day of his death: it also hath relation to that part of time wherein men live. But in the law it is particularly used for those special times which enable persons of both sexes to do certain acts, which before through want of years and judgment they are prohibited to do. As for example; a man at twelve years of age ought to take the oath of allegiance to the king: at fourteen, which is his age of discretion, he may consent to marriage, and chuse his guardian: and at twenty-one he may alien his lands, goods and chattels: a woman at nine years of age is dowable; at twelve she may consent to marriage; at fourteen she is at years of discretion, and may chuse a guardian; and at twenty-one she may alienate her lands, &c. Co. Lit. 78.

There are several other ages mentioned in our ancient books, relating to aid of the lord, wardship, &c. now of no use. Co. Lit. The age of twenty-one is the full age of man or woman; which enables them to contract and manage for themselves, in respect to their estates, until which time they cannot act with security to those who deal with them; for their acts are in most cases either void or voidable. Perk.

Fourteen is the age by law to be a witness; and in some cases a person of nine years of age hath been allowed to give evidence. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. § 27. None may be a member of parliament under the age of twenty-one years; and no man can be ordained priest till twenty-four; nor be a bishop till thirty years of age. See tit. Infant; also tit. Baron & Feme; Dower; Pleading.

AGE-PRIER, ætatem precari, or ætatis precatio.] Is when an action being brought against a person under age for lands which he hath by descent, he by petition or motion shews the matter to the court, and prays that the action may stay till his full age, which the court generally agrees to. Terms de Ley 30. See Parol Demurrer.

AGENFRIDA. The true lord or owner of any thing. Leg. Inæ, c. 50. apud Brompt. c. 45.

AGENHINE. See Third-Night-Awn-hinde.

AGENT AND PATIENT. When the same person is the doer of a thing, and the party to whom done: as where a woman endows herself of the best part of her husband's possessions, this being the sole act of herself to herself, makes her agent and patient. Also if a man be indebted unto another, and afterwards he makes the creditor his executor, and dies, the executor may retain so much of the goods of the deceased as will satisfy his debt; and by this retainer he is agent and patient, that is, the party to whom the debt is due, and the person that pays the same. But a man shall not be judge in his own cause, quia iniquum est aliquem jure rei esse judicem. 8 Rep. 118, 138.

AGILD, free from penalties, not subject to the customary fine or imposition. Sax. a gild, fine mulcta. Leges Aluredi, cap. 6.

AGILER, From the Sax. a gilt. (without fault) an observer or informer. Blount.

AGILLARIUS, Anciently an hey-ward, herd ward or keeper of cattle in a common field, sworn at the lord's court by solemn oath —There were two sorts, one of the town or village, the other of the lord of the manor. Cowel. See Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 534, 576.

AGIST, (from the Fr. giste, a bed or resting-place.) Signifies to take in and feed the cattle of strangers in the king's forest, and to gather up the money due for the same. Chart. de Foresta. 9 H. 3. c. 9. The officers appointed for this purpose are called agisters, or gist-takers, and are made by the king's letters patent: there are four of them in every forest wherein the king hath any pawnage. Manw. Forest-Laws, c. 11 to 80. They are also called agistators, to take account of the cattle agisted.

AGISTMENT, agistamentum.] Is where other men's cattle are taken into any ground, at a certain rate per week: it is so called, because the cattle are suffered agister, that is, to be levant and couchant there: and many great farms are employed to this purpose. 2 Inst. 643. Our graziers call cattle which they thus take into keep gistments; and to gise or juice the ground, is when the occupier thereof feeds it not with his own stock, but takes in the cattle of others to agist or pasture it. Agistment is likewise the profit of such feeding in a ground or field; and extends to the depasturing of barren cattle of the owner, for which tithes shall be paid to the parson. There is agistment of sea-banks, where lands are charged with a tribute to keep out the sea. Terræ agistatæ are lands whose owners are bound to keep up the sea-banks. Spelm. in Romney-Marsh. AGITATIO ANIMALIUM IN FORESTA. The drift of beasts in the forest. Leg. Forest.

AGIUS, Gr. i. e. holy. Mon. Angl. p. 15, 17.

AGNUS DEI. A piece of white wax in a flat oval form, like a small cake, stamped with the figure of the lamb, and consecrated by the pope. By stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2, Agnus Dei, crosses, &c. are not permitted to be brought into this kingdom, on pain of præmunire.

AGREEMENT, agreamentum, aggregatio mentium.] A joining together of two or more minds in any thing done, or to be done. Plowd. 17. The joint consent of two or more parties to a contract or bargain; or rather, the effect of such consent.

On this subject free use has been made of the new edition (1793) of "A Treatise of Equity," vol. 1, with the very copious and useful marginal notes and references, by Mr. Fonblanque. The Editor of this Dictionary had only an opportunity, on the present occasion, of applying to the first volume of that very useful performance. The subject seems to divide itself in the following manner:

I. Who may be parties to, or bound by an agreement.

II. The various kinds of agreements; and of the assent and disagreement of parties.

III. Of

III. Of the operation of the ſtatute of frauds; and herein of evidence to explain agreements.

IV. Of compelling the performance of agreements; and herein of fraud in making them.

I. A perſon non compos is not capable of entering into any agreement. See tit. Ideots and Lunatics.

Alſo an infant, for the ſame reaſon, is generally incapable of contracting, except for neceſſaries, &c. See tit. Infant.

A wife during the intermarriage is incapable of entering into any agreement in pais, being under power of her huſband. See tit. Baron and Feme.

The anceſtor ſeiſed in fee may by his agreement bind his heir; therefore if A. agrees to ſell lands, and receives part of the purchaſe money, but dies before a conveyance is executed, and a bill is brought againſt the heir, he will be decreed to convey, and the money ſhall go to the executor; eſpecially if there are more debts due than the teſtator's perſonal eſtate is ſufficient to pay. 2 Vern. 215: Abr. Eq. 265. But if tenant in tail agrees to convey, or bargains and ſells the lands for valuable conſideration, without fine or recovery, and dies before the fine or recovery be levied or ſuffered, the iſſue is not bound either in law or equity; for equity cannot ſet aſide the ſtatute de donis; which ſays, That voluntas donatoris obſervetur; nor can the court ſet up a new manner of conveyancing, and thereby ſuperſede fines and recoveries; for thereby the king would loſe the perquiſites by fines, or the writs of entry and fines for alienation. Hob. 203: 1 Chan. Ca. 171: 1 Lev. 239: 2 Vent. 350. Yet

If there be tenant in tail in equity as of a truſt, or under an equitable agreement, and he for valuable conſideration bargains and ſells the land without fine or recovery, this ſhall bind his iſſue, becauſe the ſtatute de donis doth not extend to it, being an intail in equity and a creature of the court. 1 Chan. Ca. 234: 2 Chan. Ca. 4: 1 Vern. 13 440: 2 Vern. 33, 583, 72

II. On this head ſhall be conſidered,

1ſt, An Agreement executed already at the beginning; as where money is paid for the thing agreed, or other ſatisfaction made. 2dly, An agreement after an act done by another; as where one doth ſuch a thing, and another perſon agrees to it afterwards, which is executed alſo: and 3dly, An agreement executory, or to be performed in futuro. This laſt ſort of agreement may be divided into two parts; one certain at the beginning, and the other when, the certainty not appearing at firſt, the parties agree that the thing ſhall be performed upon the certainty known. Terms de Ley 31. See tit. Condition; Contract; Covenant.

Every agreement ought to be perfect, full and compleat, being the mutual conſent of the parties; and ſhould be executed with a recompence, or be ſo certain as to give an action or other remedy thereon. Plowd. 5. Any thing under hand and ſeal which imports an agreement will amount to a covenant: and a proviſo, by way of agreement, amounts likewiſe to a covenant; and action may be brought upon them. 1 Lev. 155.

If any eſtate in poſſeſſion or reverſion be made to me, I muſt agree to it, before it will be ſettled; for I may refuſe, and ſo avoid it: a releaſe, deed, or bond, is made and delivered to another to my uſe, this will veſt in me without any agreement of mine; but, if I diſagree to it, I make the deed void. Dyer 167. And regularly where a man hath once diſagreed to the party himſelf, he can never after agree: and obligation being made to my uſe, and tendered to me, if I refuſe it, and after agree again and will accept it; now this agreement afterwards will not make the obligation good, that was void by the refuſal. Co. Lit. 79: 5 Rep. 119.

An agreement may be as well in the party's abſence, as in his preſence; but a diſagreement muſt be to the perſon himſelf to whom made. 2 Rep. 69. When an eſtate is made to a feme covert, it is good, till diſagreement, without any agreement of the huſband: though a new eſtate granted to the wife where ſhe hath an eſtate before, as by the taking of a new leaſe, and making a ſurrender in law, will not veſt till the huſband agree to it. Hob. 204.

That an aſſent on the part of the perſon who takes, is alſo eſſential to all conveyances and contracts; for where a man is to be veſted with an intereſt, his acceptance is neceſſary; See 2 Ventr. 198: 2 Salk. 618: 2 Leon. p. 72. pl. 97: 5 Vin. Ab. 508. pl. 1. See Thompſon v. Leach, 2 Ventr. 198, in which this ſubject is very elaborately diſcuſſed by Ventris, J. See alſo Butler and Baker's caſe, 3 Co. 26.

III. Beſides the bare words of an agreement, the common law, to prevent impoſition, ordained certain ceremonies where an intereſt was to paſs; and therefore appointed livery for things corporeal, and a deed for things incorporeal. Yet in equity where there was a conſideration, the want of ceremonies was not regarded. However, in former times, courts of equity were very cautious of relieving bare parol agreements for lands, not ſigned by the parties nor any money paid; (2 Freem. 216;) although they would ſometimes give the party ſatisfaction for the loſs he had ſuſtained. And now by the ſtat. of 29 Car. 2. cap. 3, commonly called the Statute of Frauds, if an agreement be by parol, and not ſigned by the parties, or ſomebody lawfully authorized by them, (Pre. Ch. 402,) if ſuch agreement be not confeſſed in the anſwer, it cannot be carried into execution. But where, in his anſwer, the defendant allows the bargain to be complete, and does not inſiſt on any fraud, there can be no danger of perjury; becauſe he himſelf has taken away the neceſſity of proving it. (Pre. Ch. 208, 374: 1 Vez. 221, 441: Amb. 586.) So if it be carried into execution by one of the parties, (2 Vern. 455: Pre. Chan. 519: 2 Freem. 268: Amb. 586: 2 Stra. 783: Bunb. 65, 94: 9 Mod. 37: 1 Vez. 82, 221, 297, 441: 3 Atk. 4: 1 Bro. Rep. 404: 2 Bro. Rep. 566. MSS. 4th July, 1786,) as by delivering poſſeſſion, and ſuch execution be accepted by the other, he that accepts it muſt perform his part; for where there is a performance, the evidence of the bargain does not lie merely upon the words, but upon the fact performed: See 2 Bro. Rep. 566. And it is unconſcionable, that the party that has received the advantage, ſhould be admitted to ſay, that ſuch contract was never made. So, if the ſigning by the other party, or reducing the agreement into writing, be prevented by fraud, it may be good. Pre. Ch. 526: 5 Vin. Ab. 521. pl. 31: 1 Vern. 296. And although parol agreements are bound by the ſtatute, and agreements are not to be part parol, and part in writing; yet a depoſit, or collateral ſecurity for the performance of the written agreement, is not within the purview of the ſtatute 2 Vern. 617: 1 Bro. Rep. 269: 19*th April*, 1785, MSS. See Treatiſe of Equity, i. 164—175.

It was determined, very ſoon after the paſſing of the ſtatute of frauds, that an agreement ſigned by one of the parties, ſhould be binding on the party ſigning it. 2 Ch. Ca. 164: And in Sir James Lowther v. Carill, 1 Vern. 221, the court appears to have thought, that one of the parties making alterations in the draft, and ſending it to the other to execute, who did execute it, would bring the caſe out of the ſtatute. But the authority of this latter deciſion ſeems to be done away by Lord Macclesfield's decree in Hawkins v. Holmes, 1 P. Wms. 770; by which his lordſhip held, that unleſs in ſome particular caſes, where there has been an execution of the contract, by entering upon and improving the premiſſes, the party's ſigning the agreement is abſolutely neceſſary for completing it; and that to put a different conſtruction upon it would be to repeal it; and his lordſhip therefore held, that the defendant having altered the draft with his own hand, was not a ſigning to take it out of the ſtatute; though the vendor afterwards executed the conveyance, and cauſed it to be regiſtered. But this queſtion received more particular conſideration in the caſe of Stokes v. Moore, at Serjeant's Inn Hall, March 1, 1786, in which caſe the court delivered their opinions that the ſignature required by the ſtatute is to have the effect of giving authenticity to the whole of the inſtrument; and where the name is inſerted in ſuch a manner as to have that effect, it did not much ſignify in what part of the inſtrument it was to be found; as in the formal introduction to a will. [Thus, "This is the laſt will and teſtament of me A. B."—written with the teſtator's own hand has been deemed a ſufficient ſigning.] But it could not be imagined, that a name inſerted in the body of an inſtrument, and applicable to particular purpoſes, could amount to ſuch an authentication as the ſtatute required; [Thus, in notes of an agreement, "Mr. A. to do ſo and ſo," tho' written by A. himſelf, not a ſufficient ſigning;] upon which, as well as upon another ground, the bill was diſmiſſed. See Mr. Cox's note (1) to Hawkins v. Holmes, 1 P. Wms. 770.

If a defendant confeſs the agreement charged in the bill, there is certainly no danger of fraud or perjury in decreeing the performance of ſuch agreement. But it is of conſiderable importance to determine whether the defendant be bound to confeſs or deny a merely parol agreement not alledged to be in any part executed; or if he do confeſs it, whether he may not inſiſt on the ſtatute, in bar of the performance of it? See Treatiſe of Equity, p. 168. note (d) where this ſubject is very accurately and ably diſcuſſed. To allow a ſtatute, having the prevention of frauds for its object, to be interpoſed in bar of the performance of a parol agreement, in part performed, were evidently to encourage one of the miſchiefs which the legiſlature intended to prevent. It is therefore an eſtabliſhed rule, that a parol agreement, in part performed, is not within the proviſions of the ſtatute. See Whitchurch v. Bevis, 2 Bro. Rep. 566.

As to what acts amount to a part performance, the general rule is, that the acts muſt be ſuch as could be done with no other view or deſign than to perform the agreement, and not ſuch as are merely introductory, or ancillary to it. Gunter v. Halſey, Amb. 586: Whitbread v. Brockhurſt, 1 Bro. Rep. 412. The giving of poſſeſſion is therefore to be conſidered as an act of part performance. Stewart v. Denton, MSS. 4*th July*, 1786; but giving directions for conveyances, and going to view the eſtate, are not. Clerk v. Wright, 1 Atk. 12: Whaley v. Bagnal, 6 Bro. P. C. 45. Payment of money is alſo ſaid to be an act of part-performance; Lacon v. Martins, 3 Atk. 4. But it ſeems that payment of a ſum, by way of earneſt, is not; Seagood v. Meale, Pre. Ch. 560: Lord Pengall v. Roſs, 2 Eq. Ca. Ab. 46. pl. 12: Simmons v. Cornelius, 1 Ch. Rep. 128: But ſee Voll v. Smith, 3 Ch. Rep. 16, and Anon. 2 Freem. 128.

In the caſe of Seagood v. Meale, Pre. Ch. 561, it is ſaid, that "where a man on promiſe of a leaſe to be made to him, lays out money in improvements, he ſhall oblige the leſſor afterwards to execute the leaſe; becauſe it was executed on the part of the leſſee." This dictum is ſanctioned by the ſpirit of equity, and ſeems to do away the deciſions which require, even under the circumſtance of premiſſes being improved, an averment of its being part of the parol agreement that it ſhould be reduced into writing.

A letter not only takes an agreement in conſideration of marriage out of the ſtatute, but alſo, agreements reſpecting lands, &c. Ford v. Compton, 2 Bro. Rep. 32: Tawney v. Crowther, 2 Bro. Rep. 318. But whenever a letter is relied on as evidence of an agreement, it muſt be ſtamped before it can be read. Ford v. Compton. It muſt alſo diſtinctly furniſh the terms of the agreement. Seagood v. Meale, Pre. Ch. 560: Stra. 426: Clark v. Wright, 1 Atk. 12; or it muſt at leaſt refer to ſome written inſtrument, in which the terms are ſet forth; Tawney v. Crowther. It muſt likewiſe appear, that the other party accepted ſuch terms, and acted in contemplation of them.

Where an agreement in writing is executed, it were not only againſt the expreſs proviſions of the ſtatute of frauds, but alſo againſt the policy of the common law, to allow of parol evidence, for the purpoſe of adding to, or varying the terms of the agreement. 2 Atk. 383: 3 Atk. 8: Bunb. 65: 3 Wilſ. 275. But if it be alledged, that ſome material part of the agreement was omitted, by fraud, or that the intention of the parties was miſtaken and miſapprehended by the drawers of the deed, in ſuch caſes, it ſeems, evidence will be admiſſible, even tho' the agreement be executed. 2 Atk. 203: 2 Vern. 98: 2 Vern. 547: 2 Ch. Ca. 180: à fortiori, ſuch evidence will be admiſſible where the agreement is executory. 3 Atk. 388: 1 Ves. 456. It may be material to obſerve, where evidence dehors the deed is admitted to ſhew what was the conſideration of the agreement, that the conſideration to be proved muſt be conſiſtent with the conſideration ſtated. 3 Term Rep. 474: Fulbeck's Parallel, p. 9. And if the deed ſpecify the conſideration to have been a ſum of money, evidence is not admiſſible, in order to ſuperadd another conſideration, as natural love and affection, &c. 2 P. Wms. 204: 1 Ves. 128: Nor, if the conſideration fail, can evidence be admitted to ſupport the conveyance as a gift. 2 Ves. 627: 1 Atk. 294: 3 Bro. Rep. 156; and though the deed ſpecify a particular conſideration and other conſiderations, generally, no conſideration but that expreſſed ſhall be intended. Cro. Eliz. 343: but qu. whether other conſiderations might not be proved.

IV. It has been ſaid that where the contract is good at law, equity will carry it into execution; but this propoſition is too generally ſtated; for though equity will enforce the ſpecific performance of fair and reaſonable contracts, where the party wants the thing in ſpecie, and cannot have it in any other way; yet, if the breach of the contract can be, or was intended to be, compenſated in damages, courts of equity will not interpoſe. See Errington v. Anneſley, 2 Bro. Rep. 341: Cudd v. Rutter, 1 P. Wms. 570: Capper v. Harris, Barb. 135.

It is aſſuredly a general rule, that courts of equity will, under certain circumſtances, enforce the ſpecific performance of agreements, for the non performance of which the party would be entitled to damages at law: but as the decreeing of ſpecific performance is in the diſcretion of the court, it muſt not be conſidered as an univerſal rule; for if the plaintiff's title be involved in difficulties which cannot be immediately removed, equity will not compel the defendant to take a conveyance; though perhaps, he might at law be ſubject to damages for not completing his purchaſe. See Marlow v. Smith, 2 P. Wms. 198: Shapland v. Smith, 1 Bro. Rep. 75: Cooper v. Denne 21ſt July 1792. MSS.

Qu. Whether courts of equity will decree an agreement entered into by letter, if a deed appear to have been afterwards framed, (but not executed,) varying the terms expreſſed in the letter? See Coke v. Maycall, 2 Vern. 34. Or if the terms be varied by parol. See Jordan v. Sawkins, 3 Bro. Rep. 388. And as a letter ſetting forth the terms of an agreement, takes the agreement out of the ſtatute, it being a ſufficient ſigning; ſo, it ſeems, it is a ſufficient ſigning, if a perſon, knowing the contents, ſubſcribe the deed as a witneſs only. Welford v. Beazeley 3 Atk. 503.

In the civil law, counter letters, and all ſecret acts which make any change in agreements, are of no manner of effect with reſpect to the intereſt of a third perſon. 1 Vern. 240, 348, 475: 2 Vern. 466: 1 P. Wms. 768: 2 Vez 375: 1 Bla. Rep. 363: for this would be an infidelity contrary to good manners and the public intereſt. In caſes of this nature it is not neceſſary that the fraud reſpect an article expreſsly contracted for; but any repreſentation, miſleading the parties contracting, on the ſubject of the contract, is within the principle which governs this claſs of caſes. See 1 Bro. Rep. 543. and ſtated in Mr. Cox's note to Roberts v. Roberts 3 P. Wms. 74.

The principle of the rule there laid down, though it has been moſt frequently applied to agreements in fraud of marriage, extends to every other ſpecies of agreements; therefore, where a tradeſman compounding his debts, privately agreed with ſome of his creditors to pay them the whole of their debts, by which they were induced to appear to accept of the compoſition; ſuch private agreement was held to be a fraud on the other creditors, 2 Vern. 71, 602: 1 Atk. 105; and it ſeems that ſuch fraud is now relievable at law, 2 Term Rep. 763: The caſe of Lewis v. Chaſe, 1 P. Wms. 620, is however irreconcilable with this principle; it may therefore be material to obſerve, that it is very much ſhaken, if not over-ruled, by ſeveral ſubſequent caſes, particularly Smith v. Bromley, Doug. 670. But though private agreements in fraud of third perſons, be void, yet if a bond or note be given by A. the more effectually to enable B. to bring about a match, &c. ſuch bond or note may be recovered upon at law, Monteſiori v. Monteſiori. 1 Bla. Rep. 363. And a conveyance of land for ſuch purpoſe, notwithſtanding a defeaſance, will be ſuſtained in equity, 13 Vin. Ab. 545: 2. Bro. P. C. 88.

AID, See tit. Taxes; Tenure, I. 8. 11. 6.

AID-PRAYER, auxilium petere.] A word made uſe of in pleading, for a petition in court to call in help from another perſon that hath an intereſt in the thing conteſted; this gives ſtrength to the party praying in aid, and to the other likewiſe, by giving him an opportunity of avoiding a prejudice growing towards his own right. As tenant for life, by the curteſy, for term of years, &c. being impleaded, may pray in aid of him in reverſion; that is, deſire the court that he may be called by writ to alledge what he thinks proper for the maintenance of the right of the perſon calling him, and of his own. F. N. B. 50.

Aid ſhall be granted to the defendant in ejectione firmæ, when the title of the land is in queſtion: leſſee for years ſhall have aid in treſpaſs; and tenants at will: but tenant in tail ſhall not have aid of him in remainder in fee; for he himſelf hath the inheritance. Danv. Abr. 292. In a writ of replevin, the avowry being for a real ſervice, aid is granted before iſſue; and in action of treſpaſs after iſſue joined, if there be cauſe, it ſhall be had for the defendant, tho' never for the plaintiff. Jenk. Cent. 64: Fitz. Abr. 7. There ought to be privity between a perſon that joins in aid and the other to whom he is joined; otherwiſe joinder in aid ſhall not be ſuffered. Danv. 318. There is a prayer in aid of patrons, by parſons, vicars, &c. And between coparcencers, where one coparcencer ſhall have aid of the other to recover pro rata. Co. Lit. 341. b. And alſo ſervants, having done any thing lawfully in right of their maſters ſhall have aid of them. Terms de Ley 34.

AID OF THE KING, auxilium regis.] Is where the king's tenant prays aid of the king, on account of rent demanded of him by others. A city or borough, that hold a fee-farm of the king, if any thing be demanded againſt them which belongs thereto, may pray in aid of the king: and the king's bailiffs, collectors, or accountants ſhall have aid of the king. In theſe caſes the proceedings are ſtopp'd till the king's counſel are heard to ſay what they think fit, for avoiding the king's prejudice: and this aid ſhall not in any caſe be granted after iſſue; becauſe the king ought not to rely upon the defence made by another, Jenk. Cent. 64: Terms de Ley 35. See ſtats. 4 Ed. I. c c. 1, 2: 14 Ed. III. ſt. 1. c. 14: & 1 H. 4. c. 8: See alſo Com. Dig. tit. Aide.

AILE, or aiel of the French aieul, avus.] A writ which lies where a man's grandfather being ſeiſed of lands and tenements in fee ſimple the day that he died, and a ſtranger abateth or entreth the ſame day, and diſpoſſeſſes the heir of his inheritance. F. N. B. 222. See tit. Aſſize of Mort d'anceſtor.

AL or ALD; from Saxon, eald, age.] This ſyllable in the beginning of the names of places denotes antiquity; as Aldborough, Aldworth, &c.—Blount.

ALANERARIUS, A manager and keeper of dogs, for the ſport of hawking, from alanus, a dog, known to the ancients. Du Freſne But Mr. Blount renders it a faul-coner.

ALBA, the alb.] A ſurplice or white ſacerdotal veſt anciently uſed by officiating prieſts.

ALBA

ALBA FIRMA. When quit-rents, payable to the Crown by freeholders of manors, were reserved in silver, or white money, they were anciently called white rents, or blanch farms, reditus albi; in contradistinction to rents reserved in work, grain, &c. which were called reditus nigri, or black male. 2 Inst. 19: & vide 2 Inst. 10, where it seems used for a species of tenure. See tit. Blanch firmes

In Scotland this kind of small payment is called blench-holding, or reditus albæ firmæ. 2 Comm. 43.

ALBERGELLUM, halsberga] An habergeon; a defence for the neck. Hoveden 611.

ALBINATUS JUS, Is the droit d'aubaine in France, whereby the king at the death of an alien, is entitled to all he is worth, unless he has peculiar exemption. Com. 372. Albinatus is derived from alibi natus, Spelm. Gloss. 24 This was repealed by the laws of France in June 1791.

ALBUM, see Alba Firma.

ALDER, the first; as alder best, is the best of all; alder liefest, the most dear.

ALDERMAN, Sax. ealderman, Lat. aldermannus.] Hath the same signification in general as senator, or senior: but at this day, and long since, those are called aldermen who are associates to the civil magistrates of a city or town corporate. See Spelm. Gloss. 25. An alderman ought to be an inhabitant of the place, and resident where he is chosen; and if he removes he is incapable of doing his duty in the government of the city or place, for which he may be disfranchised. Mod. Rep. 36. Alderman Langham was a freeman of the city of London, and chosen alderman of a ward, and being summoned to the court of aldermen he appeared, and the oath to serve the office was tendered to him, but he refused to take it, in contempt of the court, &c. whereupon he was committed to Newgate; and it was held good. March. Rep. 179.

The aldermen of London, &c. are exempted from serving inferior offices; nor shall they be put upon assises, or serve on juries, so long as they continue to be aldermen. 2 Cro. 585. See tit. London.

In Spelman's Glossary we find that we had anciently a title of aldermannus totius Angliæ; mentioned in an inscription on a tomb in Ramsey abbey. And this officer was in nature of Lord Chief Justice of England. Spelm. Alderman was one of the degrees of nobility among the Saxons, and signified an earl; sometimes applied to a place, it was taken for a general, with a civil jurisdiction as well as military power; which title afterwards was used for a judge, but it literally imports no more than elder.

There was likewise aldermannus hundredi, (the alderman of the hundred,) which dignity was first introduced in the reign of Hen. 1. Du Fresne. Cowel.

ALÆ ECCLESIÆ, The wings or side-isles of the church; from the French, Les ailes de l'Eglise.

ALECENARIUM, A sort of hawk called a lanner. See Putura.

ALEHOUSES, Are to be licensed by justices of peace, who take recognizances of alehouse-keepers not to suffer disorders in their houses; and they have power to put down alehouses, &c. But the act is not to restrain selling of ale in fairs. Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 25. Alehouse keepers are liable to a penalty of 20*s.* for keeping alehouses without license; not exceeding 40*s.* nor under 10*s.* for selling ale in short measure; and 10*s.* for permitting tippling, &c. and persons retailing ale or beer, alehouse keepers, &c. shall sell their ale by a full ale quart or pint, according to the standard in the Exchequer, marked from the said standard; and sub-commissioners, or collectors of excise, are to provide substantial ale quarts and pints in every town in their divisions; and mayors and chief officers to mark measures, or forfeit 5*l.* by statute 1 Jac. 1. c. 9: and see stat. 4 Jac. 1. c. 5: 21 Jac. 1. c. 7: 1 Car. 1. c. 4: 3 Car. 1. c. 4: 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 15. See tit. Inns; Brewers.

By the stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 41, Justices on granting licences are to take recognizances in 10*l.* with sureties in the like sum for the maintaining good order. Licences to be granted to none, not licensed the preceding year, unless they produce certificates of their good character. Licence only to extend to that place for which it was granted. Licenses to be granted on the first of September, or within twenty days after, yearly, and to be for one yearly only; penalty for selling ale, &c. without a licence, by this and subsequent acts, first offence 40*s.* second offence 4*l.* third offence 6*l.*

As to licences see the above statutes and stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 12: 5 Geo. 3. c. 46: 30 Geo. 3. c. 38: and lastly 32 Geo. 3. c. 59: by which last act no person can sell wine by retail to be drank in his own house, who has not also an ale licence. See tit. Drunkenness.

ALER SANS JOUR, Fr.] To go without day; viz. to be finally dismissed the court, because there is no further day assigned for appearance. Kitch. 146.

ALE-SILVER, A rent of tribute annually paid to the lord mayor of London, by those that sell ale within the liberty of the city. Antiq. Purvey. 183.

ALESTAKE, A may-pole called alestake, because the country people drew much ale there; but it is not the common may-pole, but rather a long stake drove into the ground, with a sign on it, that ale was to be sold.

ALE-TASTER, Is an officer appointed in every court leet, sworn to look to the assize and goodness of ale and beer, &c. within the precincts of the lordship. Kitch. 46. In London there are ale conners, who are officers appointed to taste ale and beer, &c. in the limits of the city.

ALFET, Sax. Alfæth.] A cauldron or furnace, wherein boiling water was put for a criminal to dip his arms in up to his elbow, and there hold it for some time. Du Cange. See tit. Ordeal.

ALIAS, A second or further writ, issued from the courts at Westminster, after a capias, &c. sued out without effect.

ALIAS DICTUS, Is the manner of description of a defendant, when sued on any specialty; as a bond, &c. where after his name, and common addition, then comes the alias dict. and describes him again by the very name and addition, whereby he is bound in the writing. Dyer 50: Jenk. Cent. 119. See Misnomer.

ALIEN, Alienus, Alienigena.] Generally speaking, one born in a foreign country, out of the allegiance of the king. Under this head shall be briefly introduced the present state of the law, in particular, as to I. Aliens, II. Denizens. III. Naturalized Subjects. IV. Of the general effect of the Laws on Aliens.

I. An ALIEN born may purchase lands or other estates, but not for his own use, for the king is thereupon entitled tled to them. 1 Inſt. 2. and the notes there. But under the ſtat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 14, aliens are enabled to lend money on the ſecurity of mortgages of eſtates in the Weſt India Colonies, and may have every remedy to recover the money lent, except foreclofing the mortgage and obtaining poſſeſſion of the land; which is poſitively prohibited by the ſtatute. Nor ſhall a woman alien, wife of a natural born ſubject, be endowed. 7 Rep. 25. a: 1 Inſt. 31. b. but ſee the note there contra. Nor a Jeweſs wife of a huſband converted to the Chriſtian religion. Id. ib. See this Dict. tit. Dower. An alien may however acquire a property in goods, money, and other perſonal eſtate, or may hire a houſe for his habitation. 7 Rep. 17. For perſonal eſtate is of a tranſitory or moveable nature, and this indulgence is neceſſary for the advancement of trade. Aliens alſo may trade as freely as other people, only they are ſubject to certain higher duties at the Cuſtom Houſe; and there alſo ſome obſolete ſtatutes, (1 Ric. 3. c. 9: 14 H. 8. c. 2: 21 H. 8. c. 16: 22 H. 8. c. 13: 32 H. 8. c. 16:) prohibiting alien artificers to work for themſelves in this kingdom, and making void all leaſes of houſes or ſhops to aliens; [See tit. Artificers;] but it is generally held that theſe were virtually repealed by ſtat 5 Eliz. c. 7, prohibiting the importation of ſome foreign manufactures; ſee however 1 Inſt. 2. in note. Alſo an alien may bring an action concerning perſonal property; and may make a will and diſpoſe of his perſonal eſtate. Lutw. 34. Theſe rights of aliens muſt be underſtood of alien friends only; for alien enemies have no rights, no privileges, unleſs by the king's ſpecial favour during the time of war. 1 Comm. 372. and ſee Cro. Eliz. 683: Skin. 370.

Where it is ſaid that an alien is one born out of the king's dominions or allegiance, this muſt be underſtood with ſome reſtrictions. The common law was abſolutely ſo, with only a very few exceptions; ſo that a particular act of parliament, (ſtat. 29 Car. II. c. 6,) was neceſſary after the reſtoration to naturalize children of Engliſh ſubjects born in foreign parts during the troubles. This maxim of law proceeded on a general principle that every man owes natural allegiance where he is born, and cannot owe two ſuch allegiances at once. Yet the children of the king's ambaſſadors born abroad were always held to be natural born ſubjects. 7 Rep. 11. § 18. the father owing no local allegiance to the foreign prince; and repreſenting the king of England; and by the ſtat. 25 E. 3. ſt. 2, it is declared to be the law of the crown of England, that the king's children wherever born are of ability to inherit the crown; and to encourage foreign commerce it is enacted by the ſame ſtatute, that all children born abroad, provided both their parents were at the time of the child's birth in allegiance to the king, and the mother had paſſed the ſeas by her huſband's conſent, might inherit as if born in England. See Cro. Car. 601: Mar. 91: Jenk. Cent. 3.

By ſeveral more modern ſtatutes (7 Ann. c. 5: 10 Ann. c. 5: 4 Geo. 2. c. 21: and 13 Geo. 3. c. 21,) theſe reſtrictions are ſtill further taken off; ſo that all children born out of the king's ligeance, whoſe fathers (or grandfathers by the father's ſide) were natural born ſubjects, though their mothers were aliens, are now deemed to be natural born ſubjects themſelves to all intents and purpoſes, unleſs their ſaid anceſtor were attainted, or baniſhed beyond ſea for high treaſon; or were at the birth of ſuch children in the ſervice of a prince at enmity with Great Britain. See ſtat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 21. [The iſſue of an Engliſh woman by an alien, born abroad is an alien. 1 Vent. 422: 4 Term Rep. 400, ſolemnly decided.] But grand-children of ſuch anceſtors ſhall not be privileged in reſpect of the aliens duty, except they be proteſtants and actually reſide within the realm; nor ſhall be enabled to claim any eſtate or intereſt, unleſs the claim be made within five years after the ſame ſhall accrue.

The children of aliens born here in England, are, generally ſpeaking, natural-born ſubjects, and entitled to all the privileges of ſuch. 1 Comm. 373.

II. A DENIZEN is an alien born, but who has obtained, ex donatione regis, letters patent to make him an Engliſh ſubject; a high and incommunicable branch of the royal prerogative. 7 Rep. 25. A denizen is in a kind of middle ſtate between an alien and natural-born ſubject, and partakes of both of them. He may take lands by purchaſe or deviſe, which an alien may not; but cannot take by inheritance. 11 Rep. 67; for his parent through whom he muſt claim, being an alien had no inheritable blood; and therefore could convey none to the ſon. And upon a like defect of hereditary blood the iſſue of a denizen born before denization cannot inherit to him; but his iſſue born after may, to the excluſion of that born before. 1 Inſt. 8: Vaugh. 285. But by ſtat. 11 & 12 Wil. 3. c. 6, all perſons being natural born ſubjects may inherit as heirs to their anceſtors, though thoſe anceſtors were aliens. See alſo ſtat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 39, by which this ſtatute of Wil. 3. is reſtrained to perſons in being at the death of the anceſtor; and diveſts the eſtate from daughters infavour of after-born ſons. Both theſe acts are extended by ſtat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 52, to Scotland.

A Denizen is not excuſed from paying the alien's duty and ſome other mercantile burthens. See ſtat. 22 H. 8. c. 8. And no denizen can be of the privy council, or either houſe of parliament, or have any office of truſt civil or military, or be capable of any grant of lands, &c. from the crown. Stat. 12 W. 3. c. 2.

III. NATURALIZATION cannot be performed but by act of parliament; for by this an alien is put in the ſame ſtate as if he had been born in the king's ligeance; except only that he is (by the ſtat. 12 W. 3,) incapable, as well as a denizen, of being a member of the privy council or parliament, holding offices, grants, &c. No bill for naturalization can be received without ſuch diſabling clauſe in it; (ſtat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 4.) nor without a clauſe diſabling the perſon from obtaining any immunity in trade thereby, in any foreign country; unleſs he ſhall have reſided in Great Britain for ſeven years next after the commencement of the ſeſſion in which he is naturalized; (ſtat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 84;) neither can any perſon be naturalized or reſtored in blood unleſs he hath received the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper within one month before the bringing in of the bill; and unleſs he alſo takes the oaths of allegiance and ſupremacy in the preſence of the parliament. (ſtat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 2.) But theſe proviſions have been uſually diſpenſed with by ſpecial acts of parliament previous to bills of naturalization of any foreign princes or princeſſes. See ſtatutes 4 Ann. c. 1: 7 Geo. 2. c. 3: 9 Geo. 2. c 24: 4 Geo 3. c. 4. &c.

Theſe are the principal diſtinctions between Aliens, Denizens, and Natives; diſtinctions which it hath been frequently endeavoured within the preſent century to ſay almoſt almoſt totally aſide by one general naturalization-act for all foreign proteſtants. An attempt which was once carried into execution by ſtat. 7 Ann. c. 5; but this after three years' experience was repealed by ſtat. 10 Ann. c. 5; except the clauſe for naturalizing the children of Engliſh parents born abroad. However, every foreign ſeaman who in time of war ſerves two years on board an Engliſh ſhip by virtue of the king's proclamation, is by ſtat. 13. Geo. 2. c. 3, ipſo facto naturalized, under the like reſtrictions as in ſtat. 12 W. 3. c. 2. And all foreign Proteſtants and Jews, upon their reſiding ſeven years in any of the American colonies, without being abſent above two months at a time, and all foreign Proteſtants ſerving two years in a military capacity there, or being three years employed in the whale fiſhery, without afterwards abſenting themſelves from the king's dominions for more than one year, and none of theſe falling within the incapacities declared by ſtat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 21. (viz. attaint, &c.) ſhall, on taking the oath of allegiance and abjuration, or in ſome caſes an affirmation to the ſame effect, be naturalized to all intents and purpoſes as if they had been born in this kingdom; except as to ſitting in parliament or the privy council, and holding offices or grants of land, from the crown, in Great Britain or Ireland. See ſtatutes 13 Geo. 2. c. 7: 20 Geo. 2. c. 44: 22 Geo. 2. c. 45: 2 Geo. 3. c. 25: 13 Geo. 3. c. 25: 20 Geo. 3. c. 20. They therefore are admiſſible to all other privileges, which Proteſtants or Jews born in this kingdom are entitled to. What thoſe privileges are with reſpect to Jews in particular was the ſubject of very high debate about the time of the famous Jew bill; ſtat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 26; which enabled all Jews to prefer bills of naturalization in parliament without receiving the ſacrament as ordained by ſtat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 2: but this act continued only a few months, and was then repealed by ſtat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 1.

IV. An alien enemy coming into this kingdom, and taken in war, ſhall ſuffer death by the martial law; and not be indicted at the common law, for the indictment muſt conclude contra ligeantiam ſuam, &c and ſuch was never in the protection of the king. Molloy de Jur. Marit. 417. Aliens living under the protection of the king, may have the benefit of a general pardon. Hob. 271. No alien ſhall be returned on any jury, nor be ſworn for trial of iſſues between ſubject and ſubject, &c. but where an alien is party in a cauſe depending, the inqueſt of jurors are to be half denizens, and half aliens: but in caſes of high treaſon, this is not allowed. 2 Inſt. 17. See ſtat. 27 E. 3. c. 8, that where both parties are aliens the inqueſt ſhall be all aliens, and ſtat. 28 E. 3. c. 13. as to trials between denizens and aliens; See alſo 1 Com. Dig. tit. Alien. (C. 8.)

Tho' aliens are ſubject to the laws, and in enormous offences (as murder, &c.) are liable in the ordinary courſe of juſtice, yet it may be too harſh to puniſh them on a local ſtatute.—Thus, a French priſoner indicted for privately ſtealing from a ſhop was acquitted of that by the direction of the judge, and found guilty of the larceny only. Forſt 188.

A very great influx of Frenchmen into England having been cauſed in the years 1792 and 1793 by the troubles in France, and there being cauſe to ſuſpect that ſome of them were ſent here for dangerous and unjuſtifiable purpoſes, an act was paſſed, ſtat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 4, commonly called the Alien-Bill, compelling the maſters of ſhips arriving from foreign parts, under certain penalties, to give an account at every port of the number and names of every foreigner on board to the cuſtom-houſe officers appointing juſtices and others to grant paſſports to ſuch aliens; and giving the king power to reſtrain and to ſend them out of the kingdom on pain of tranſportation, and on their return, of death. The ſame act alſo directs an account to be delivered of the arms of aliens, which, if required, are to be delivered up, and aliens were not to go from one place to another in the kingdom without paſſports. This act was in the firſt inſtance temporary; and tho' oppoſed in both houſes, was proved by circumſtances of a very ſerious nature, to have been abſolutely neceſſary.

By the various acts of parliament above mentioned, moſt, if not all of the niceties of the old law relative to aliens are obviated and reduced to plain and intelligible rules. See 1 Comm. 366—375: 1 Inſt. 2 and 8, and the notes there; and 7 Rep Calvin's caſe. As to deſcents between aliens collaterals, Collingwood v. Pace, 1 Vent. 413: 1 Sid. 193. As to pleading alienage, ſee tit. Abatement. And for further matter on the whole of the ſubject, Com. Dig. tit. Alien.

ALIENATION, from alienare, to alien.] A transferring the property of a thing to another: it chiefly relates to lands and tenements; as to alien land in fee, is to ſell the fee-ſimple thereof, &c And to alien in mortmain, is to make over lands or tenements to a religious houſe or body politic. Fines for alienations are taken away by ſtat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, except fines due by particular cuſtoms of manors. All perſons who have a right to lands may generally alien them to others: but ſome alienations are forbidden: as an alienation by a particular tenant, ſuch as tenant for life, &c. which incurs a forfeiture of the eſtate. Co. Lit. 118. For if leſſee for life, by livery, alien in fee, or make a leaſe for the life of another, or gift in tail, it is a forfeiture of his eſtate: ſo if tenant in dower, tenant for another's life, tenant for years, &c. do alien for a greater eſtate than they lawfully may make. Co. Lit. 233, 251. Conditions in feoffments, &c. that the feoffee ſhall not alien, are void. Co. Lit. 206: Hob. 261. And it is the ſame where a man poſſeſſed of a leaſe for years, or other thing, gives and ſells his whole property therein, upon ſuch condition: but one may grant an eſtate in fee, on condition that the grantee ſhall not alien to a particular perſon, &c. And where a reverſion is in the donor of an eſtate, he may reſtrain an alienation by condition. Lit. 361: Wood's Inſt. 141. Eſtates in tail, for life, or years, where the whole intereſt is not parted with, may be made with condition not to alien to others, for the preſervation of the lands granted in the hands of the firſt grantee.

ALIMONY, alimonia, Nouriſhment or maintenance.] In a legal ſenſe, it is taken for that allowance which a married woman ſues for and is entitled to, upon ſeparation from her huſband. Terms de Ley 38. See tit. Baron and Feme.

ALLAUNDS, ab alanis, Scythicæ gente, Hare-hounds.

ALLAY, Lat. allaya.] The mixture of other metals with ſilver or gold. This allay is to augment the weight of the ſilver or gold, ſo as it may defray the charge of coinage, and to make it the more fuſile. A pound weight of ſtandard gold, by the preſent ſtandard in the mint, is twenty-twenty-two carats fine, and two carats allay: and a pound weight of right ſtandard ſilver conſiſts of eleven ounces two-penny weight of fine ſilver, and eighteen penny weight of allay. Lowndes's Eſſay upon Coins, pag. 19. & 9 H. 5. ſt. 1. c. 11.

ALLEGIANCE, allegiantia, formerly called ligeance, from the Latin alligare & ligare; i. e. ligamen fidei.] The natural and lawful and faithful obedience which every ſubject owes to his prince. It is either perpetual, where one is a ſubject born; or where one hath the right of a ſubject by naturalization, &c. or it is temporary, by reaſon of reſidence in the king's dominions. To ſubjects born, it is an incident inſeparable; and as ſoon as born, they owe by birth-right obedience to their ſovereign: and it cannot be confined to any kingdom, but follows the ſubject whereſoever he goeth. The ſubjects are hence called liege people, and are bound by this allegiance to go with the king in his wars, as well within as without the kingdom. 1 Inſt. 129 a: 2 Inſt. 741. 7 Co. 4. Calvin's Caſe.

By the common law, all perſons above the age of twelve years were required to take the oath of allegiance in courts-leet.

And there are ſeveral ſtatutes requiring the oath of allegiance and ſupremacy, &c to be taken under penalties: juſtices of peace may ſummon perſons above the age of eighteen years to take theſe oaths. 1 Eliz. cap. 1: 1 W. & M. c. 1, 8. 1 Ann. ſtat. 1. c. 22. For the other ſtatutes reſpecting allegiance ſee 5 Eliz. c. 1. ſect. 5: 3 Jac. 1. c. 4: 7 Jac. 1. c. 6: 25 Car. 2. c. 2: 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 24 & 27: 13 & 14 W. 3. c. 6: 1 Ann. c. 22: 6 Ann. c. 14: 8 Ann. c. 15: 1 Geo. 1. c. 13: 2 Geo. 2. c. 31: 6 Geo. 3. c. 53. By the ſtat 3 Jac. 1. c. 4. if any natural born ſubject be withdrawn from his allegiance and reconciled to the pope or ſee of Rome, or ſhall promiſe obedience to any other Prince or State, he, his procurers, counſellors, aiders and maintainers, ſhall incur the guilt of High Treaſon.

ALLEGIARE, to defend or juſtify by due courſe of law. Leges Alured. cap. 4. Spelm.

ALLER, This word is uſed to make what is added to ſignify ſuperlatively; as aller good is the greateſt good. See Alder. Aller ſans jour, ſee Aler.

ALLEVIARE, to levy or pay an accuſtomed fine. Cowel.

ALLOCATION, allocatio.] In a legal ſenſe, an allowance made upon account in the Exchequer; or more properly a placing or adding to a thing.

ALLOCATIONE FACIENDA, A writ for allowing to an accountant ſuch ſums of money as he hath lawfully expended in his office; directed to the lord treaſurer, and barons of the Exchequer, upon application made. Reg. Orig. 206.

ALLOCATO COMITATU, A new writ of exigent allowed, before any other county court holden, on the former not being fully ſerved, or complied with, &c. Fitz. Exig. 14.

ALLODIAL. This is where an inheritance is held without any acknowledgement to any lord or ſuperior; and therefore is of another nature from that which is feodal. Allodial lands are free lands, which a man enjoys without paying any fine, rent, or ſervice to any other. Alodium. In Domeſday book it ſignifies a free manour; and alodarii Lords Paramount. Kent: Co. Litt. 1, 5. & ſee 2 Comm. 45, &c. And this Dict. tit. Tenure.

ALLUMINOR, from the Fr. allumer, to enlighten.] One who anciently illuminated, coloured or painted upon paper or parchment, particularly the initial letters of ancient charters and deeds. The word is uſed ſtat. 1 R. 3. c. 9.

ALMANACK, Is part of the law of England, of which the courts muſt take notice, in the returns of writs, &c. but the almanack to go by is that annex'd to the Book of Common Prayer. Mod. Caſ. 41, 81. See tit. Year.

The diverſity of fixed and moveable feaſts was condemned per tot. cur. for we know neither the one nor the other but by the almanacks, and we are to take notice of the courſe of the moon. 6 Mod. 150, 160: Paſch. 3 *Ann. It was ſaid that the court might judicially take notice of almanacks, and be informed by them; and cited Robert's caſe in the time of Lord Catline; and Coke ſaid, that ſo was the caſe of Galery v. Bunbury, and judgment accordingly. 1 Leo. 242. pl. 328: Paſch. 29 *Eliz. ALMARIA, for armaria: The archives or as they are ſometimes ſtiled muniments of a church or library.—Gervaſ. Dorob. in R. 2.

ALMNER, or ALMONER, eleemoſynarius.] An officer of the king's houſe, whoſe buſineſs it is to diſtribute the king's alms every day. He ought to admoniſh the king to beſtow his alms, eſpecially upon ſaints' days and holidays; and he is likewiſe to viſit the ſick, widows that are poor, priſoners and other neceſſitous people, and to relieve them under their wants; for which purpoſe he hath the forfeitures of deodands, and the goods of fel'as deſe, allowed him by the king. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 22. The lord almoner has the diſpoſition of the king's diſh of meat, after it comes from the table, which he may give to whom he pleaſes; and he diſtributes four-pence in money, a two-penny loaf of bread, and a gallon of beer; or inſtead thereof three-pence daily at the court gate to twenty-four poor perſons of the king's pariſh, to each of them that allowance. This officer is uſually ſome biſhop.

ALMSFEOH, or almesfeoh, Saxon for alms money: It has been taken for what we call Peter-Pence, firſt given by Ina king of the Weſt Saxons, and anciently paid in England on the firſt of Auguſt. It was likewiſe called romefeoh, romefeot, and heorthpening. Selden's Hiſt. Tithes 217.

ALMUTIUM, A cap made with goats or lambs' ſkins, the part covering the head being ſquare, and the other part hanging behind to cover the neck and ſhoulders. Monaſticon tom. 3. p. 36: W. Thorn. 1330.

ALNAGE Fr. aulnage.] A meaſure, particularly the meaſuring with an ell.

ALNAGER, or aulnager, Fr. alner, Lat. ulniger.] Is properly a measure by the ell; and the word aulne in French signifieth an ell. An aulnager was heretofore a public sworn officer of the king's, whose place it was to examine into the assise of cloths made throughout the land, and to fix seals upon them; and another branch of his office was to collect a subsidy or aulnage duty granted to the king. He had his power by stat. 25 Ed. 3. stat. 4. c. 1. and several other ancient statutes; which appointed his fees, and inflicted a punishment for putting his seal to deceitful cloth, &c. viz. a forfeiture of his office, and the value. 27 Ed. 3. stat. 1. c. 4: 3 R. 2. c. 2. There were afterwards three officers belonging to the regulation of cloathing, who bear the distinct names of searcher, measurer, and aulnager; all which were formerly comprised in one person. 4 Inst. 31: Cowel.

By 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 20. Alnage duties are taken away.

ALNETUM, A place where alders grow; or a grove of alder trees. Domesday-Book.

ALODIUM, see Allodium.

ALOVERIUM, A purse. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 82. par. 2.

ALTARAGE, altaragium.] The offerings made upon the altar, and also the profit that arises to the priest by reason of the altar, obventio altaris. Mich. 21 Eliz. It was declared that by altarage is meant tithes of wool, lambs, colts, calves, pigs, chickens, butter, cheese, fruits, herbs, and other small tithes with the offerings due: the case of the vicar of West-Hadden in Northamptonshire. But the word altarage at first is thought to signify no more than the casual profits arising to the priest, from the people's voluntary oblations at the altar; out of which a portion was assigned by the parson to the vicar: since that, our parsons have generally contented themselves with the greater profits of glebe, and tenths of corn and hay; and have left the small tithes to the officiating priests: and hence it is that vicarages are endowed with them. Terms de Ley 39. 2 Cro. 516.

It seems to be certain, that the religious, when they allotted the altarage in part, or in whole to the vicar or chaplain, did mean only the customary and voluntary offerings at the altar, for some divine office or service of the priest, and not any share of the standing tithes, whether predial or mixt. Kenn. Paroch. Antiq. Gloss.

In the case of Franklyn and the master and brethren of St. Cross, T. 1721, it was decreed, that where altaragium is mentioned in old endowments, and supported by usage, it will extend to small tithes, but not otherwise. Bunb. 79.

ALTERATION, alteratio, Is the changing of a thing: and when witnesses are examined upon exhibits, &c. they ought to remain in the office, and not to be taken back into private hands, by whom they may be altered. Hob. 254.

ALTO & BASSO, Ponere se in arbitrio in alto & basso, means the absolute submission of all differences.

AMABYR, vel AMVABYR, A custom in the honour of Clun, belonging to the earls of Arundell: Pretium virginitatis domino solvendum. LL. eccl. Gul. Howeli Dha, regis Walliæ. This custom Henry earl of Arundel released to his tenants, Anno 3 & 4 P. & M.

AMBACTUS, A servant or client. Cowel.

AMBASSADOR, legatus.] A person sent by one Sovereign [Power] to another with authority by letters of credence to treat on affairs of state. 4 Inst. 153. And ambassadors are either ordinary, or extraordinary; the ordinary ambassadors are those who reside in the place whither sent; and the time of their return being indefinite, so is their business uncertain, arising from emergent occasions; and commonly the protection and affairs of the merchants is their greatest care: the extraordinary ambassadors are made pro tempore, and employed upon some particular great affairs, as condolements, congratulations, or for overtures of marriage, &c. Their equipage is generally very magnificent; and they may return without requesting of leave, unless there be a restraining clause in their commission. Molloy 144.

An agent represents the affairs only of his master; but an ambassador ought to represent the greatness of his master, and his affairs. Ibid. By the laws of nations, none under the quality of a sovereign prince can send any ambassador; a king that is deprived of his kingdom and royalty, hath lost his right of legation. No subject, though ever so great, can send or receive an ambassador; and if a viceroy does it, he will be guilty of high treason: the electors and princes of Germany have the privilege of sending and reception of ambassadors; but it is limited only to matters touching their own territories, and not of the state of the empire. It is said there can be no ambassador without letters of credence from his sovereign, to another that hath sovereign authority: and if a person be sent from a king or absolute potentate, though in his letters of credence he is termed an agent, yet he is an ambassador, he being for the Public. 4 Inst. 153.

Ambassadors may, by a precaution, be warned not to come to the place where sent; and if they then do it, they shall be taken for enemies; but being once admitted, even with enemies in arms, they shall have the protection of the laws of nations, and be preserved as princes. Moll. 146. If a banished man be sent as an ambassador to the place from whence he is banished, he may not be detained or molested there. 4 Inst. 153. But if he be not received or admitted as ambassador, he has no privilege as such; and an ambassador may be refused in respect of him by whom sent; or in respect of the person sent; as if he is notoriously flagitious; or if he be disagreeable to the state to which he is sent. An ambassador ought not however to be refused without cause.—See Grotius and Molloy, cited Com. Dig. tit. Ambassador. The killing of an ambassador has been adjudged high treason. 3 Inst. 8. Some ambassadors are allowed, by concession, to have jurisdiction over their own families; and their houses permitted to be sanctuaries; but where persons who have greatly offended fly to their houses, after demand and refusal to deliver them up, they may be taken from thence. Ambassadors cannot be defended when they commit any thing against the state, or the person of the king with whom they reside. 4 Inst. 152. An ambassador, guilty of treason against the king's life, may be condemned and executed; but for other treasons, he shall be sent home, with demand to punish him, or to send him back to be punished. 4 Inst. 152. 1 Roll. Rep. 185.

If a foreign ambassador commits any crime here, which is contra jus gentium, as treason, felony, &c. or any other crime against the law of nations, he loseth the privilege of an ambassador, and is subject to punishment as a private alien; and he need not be remanded to his sovereign, but but of curteſy. Danv. Abr. 327. But if a thing be only malum prohibitum by an act of parliament, private law, or cuſtom of the realm, and it is not contra jus gentium, an ambaſſador ſhall not be bound by them. 4 Inſt. 153. And it is ſaid ambaſſadors may be excuſed of practices againſt the ſtate where they reſide, (except it be in point of conſpiracy, which is againſt the law of nations) becauſe it doth not appear whether they have it in mandatis; and then they are excuſed by neceſſity of obedience. Bac. Max. 26.

By the civil law, the perſon of an ambaſſador may not be arreſted; and the moveable goods of ambaſſadors, which are accounted an acceſſion to their perſons, cannot be ſeiſed on, as a pledge, nor for payment of debts, though by leave of the king or ſtate where they are reſident; but on refuſal of payment, letters of requeſt are to go to his maſter, &c. Molloy 157. Danv. 328. The law of nations touching ambaſſadors in its full extent, is part of the law of England; and the act 7 An. c. 12, is only declaratory. Barbuit's Caſe, Rep. temp. Ld. Talb. 281; and ſee 3 Burr. 1748.

By our ſtatute law, (ſtat. 7 An. c. 12.) An ambaſſador, or public miniſter, or his domeſtic ſervants, regiſtered in the ſecretary's office, and thence tranſmitted to the ſheriff's office of London and Middleſex, are not to be arreſted; if they are, the proceſs ſhall be void, and the perſons ſuing out and executing it ſhall ſuffer ſuch penalties and corporal puniſhments as the lord chancellor or either of the chief juſtices ſhall think fit. Alſo the goods of an ambaſſador, ſhall not be diſtrained. Stat. ibid. See 1 Comm. 254. The perſons claiming privilege as ſervants of an ambaſſador, muſt be ſuch as are really and bona fide retained and regiſtered in that capacity; and the act itſelf expreſsly prohibits its extenſion to merchants and traders liable to the ſtatutes of bankruptcy. See Fitzgib. 200: Stra. 797: 1 Wilſ. 20, 78, 9: 3 Wilſ. 33: 2 Stra. 797: 2 Ld. Raym. 1524: 3 Burr. 1676: 4 Burr. 2016, 7: and Com. Dig. tit. Ambaſſador.

AMBIDEXTER, Lat. One that plays on both ſides. In a legal ſenſe, it is taken for a juror or embraceor, who takes money of the parties for giving his verdict; ſee tit. Juries. ſtat. 5 Ed. III.

AMBRA, Sax. amber, Lat. amphora.] A veſſel among the Saxons; it contained a meaſure of ſalt, butter, meal, beer, &c. Leg. Inæ Weſt. Sax.

AMBRY, The place where the arms, plate, veſſels, and every thing which belonged to houſekeeping were kept; and probably the ambry at Weſtminſter is ſo called, becauſe formerly ſet apart for that uſe: or rather the aumonery, from the Latin eleemoſynaria, an houſe adjoining to an abbey, in which the charities were laid up for the poor.

AMENABLE, Fr. amener. To bring or lead unto: or amainable, from the Fr. Main, a hand.] Signifies tractable, that may be led or governed: and in our books it is commonly applied to a woman, that is governable by her huſband. Cowel Interp. It alſo, in the modern ſenſe, ſignifies to be reſponſible, or ſubject to anſwer, &c. in a court of juſtice.

AMENDMENT, emendatio.] The correction of an error committed in any proceſs, which may be amended after judgment; and if there be any error in giving the judgment, the party is driven to his writ of error; though where the fault appears to be in the clerk who writ the record, it may be amended. Terms de Ley 39.

At common law there was little room for amendments, which appears by the ſeveral ſtatutes of amendments and jeofails, and likewiſe by the conſtitution of the courts; for, ſays Britton, the judges are to record the parols [or pleas] deduced before them in judgment; alſo, ſays he, Ed. 1. granted to the juſtices to record the pleas pleaded before them, but they are not to eraſe their records, nor amend them, nor record againſt their inrollment, nor any way ſuffer their records to be a warrant to juſtify their own miſdoings, nor eraſe their words, nor amend them, nor record againſt their inrollment. This ordinance of Ed. 1. was ſo rigidly obſerved, that when juſtice Hengham, in his reign, moved with compaſſion for the circumſtances of a poor man who was fined 13 s. 4 d. eraſed the record, and made it 6 s. 8 d. he was fined 800 marks, with which, it is ſaid, a clock-houſe at Weſtminſter was built, and furniſhed with a clock; but as to the clock, it has been denied by authors of credit, clocks not being in uſe till a century afterwards. Notwithſtanding what is mentioned above, there were ſome caſes that were amendable at common law.

Original writs are not amendable at common law, for if the writ be not good, the party may have another; judicial writs may and have been often amended. 8 Rep. 157.

Whatever at common law might be amended in civil caſes, was at common law amendable in criminal caſes, and ſo it is at this day: reſolved by Holt Ch. J. Powell and Powis J. 1 Salk. 51. pl. 14.

Tho' miſawarding of proceſs on the roll might be amended at Common law the ſame term, becauſe it was the act of the court; yet if any clerk at common law iſſued out an erroneous proceſs on a right award of the court, that was never amended in any caſe at the common law. 1 Salk. 51. pl. 14.

Anciently all pleas were ore tenus at the bar; and then if any error was ſpied in them, it was preſently amended. Since that cuſtom is changed, the motion, to amend, becauſe all in paper, ſucceeded in the room of it; and it is a motion that the court cannot refuſe: but they may refuſe it if the party deſiring it refuſe to pay coſts, or the amendment deſired ſhould amount to a new plea. 10 Mod. 88.

Miſtakes are now effectually helped by the ſtatutes of amendment and jeofails; the latter ſo called, becauſe when a pleader perceived any ſlip in the form of his proceeding, and acknowledges ſuch error, (jeo faile or j'ai faillé); he is at liberty by thoſe ſtatutes to amend it, which amendment is ſeldom actually made, but the benefit of the act is attained by the courts overlooking the exception, 2 Stra. 1011. Theſe ſtatutes are in the whole 12 in number, and are here recapitulated chronologically, by which all trifling exceptions are ſo thoroughly guarded againſt, that writs of error cannot ſince be maintained, but for ſome material miſtake aſſigned. 3 Comm. 407; which ſee, and Buller's Ni. Pri. (Ed. 1793.) 320. and for a more extended view of the caſes, in which amendments may or may not be made, See Com. Dig. tit. Amendment.

By ſtat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 6. no proceſs ſhall be annulled or diſcontinued, by the miſpriſion of the clerk in miſtaking in writing one ſyllable or one letter too much or too little; but it ſhall be amended.

The judges afterwards conſtrued this ſtatute ſo favourably, that they extended it to a word; but they were not ſo well agreed, whether they could make theſe amendments, as well after as before judgment; for they thought their authority was determined by the judgment; therefore by ſtat. 9 H. 5. c. 4. it is declared that the judges ſhall have the ſame power, as well after as before judgment, as long as the record in proceſs is before them. Gilb. H. C. B. 110.

This ſtatute is confirmed by ſtatute 4 Hen. 6. c. 3. with an exception, that it ſhall not extend to proceſs on outlawry, or to records or proceſſes in Wales. But according to 2 Sand. 40, this laſt exception, and the like exception in 8 Hen. 6. c. 15. ſeem to be annulled by the ſtatute 27 Hen. 8. c. 26, by which it is enacted, that the laws of England ſhall be uſed, practiſed and executed in Wales.

Though the foregoing ſtatutes gave the judges a greater power than they had before, yet it was found that they were too much cramped, having authority to amend nothing but proceſs, which they did not conſtrue in a large ſignification, ſo as to comprehend the whole proceedings in real and perſonal actions, and criminal and common pleas, but confined it to the meſne proceſs and jury proceſs; 8 Co. 157 a. And therefore, to enlarge the authority of the courts, the ſtatute 8 Hen. 6. c. 12, gives power to amend what they ſhall think in their diſcretion to be the miſpriſion of their clerks in any record, proceſs, and plea, warrant of attorney, writ, pannel, or return. Gilb. H. C. P. 110.

There are only two ſtatutes of amendments, viz. the 14 Ed. 3. ſtat. 1. c. 6. and 8 H. 6. c. 12 & 15. the reſt are reckoned to be ſtatutes of jeofails, and not of amendments; per Powell J. 1 Salk. 51. pl. 14. Mich. 3 Ann. B. R. in the caſe of The Queen v. Tutchin.—And ibid. he held that the 8 H. 6, was only to inlarge the ſubject-matter of 14 Ed. 3. and that 14 E. 3. extends only to proceſs out of the roll, viz. writs that iſſue out of the record, and not to proceedings in the roll itſelf: but that the 14 Ed. 3. extends not to the king, becauſe of theſe words, (challenge of the party) and that the ſtatute 8 H. 6. has always been conſtrued in limitation of the act of Ed. 3. and the exception in the ſtatute of H. 6. was only ex abundanti cautela; and all judges and ſages of the law in all ages have taken it not to extend to the crown; and the caſes on the other ſide are not to be relied upon.

Farther by ſtat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 15. "The king's juſtices, before whom any miſpriſion ſhall be found, be it in any records and proceſſes depending before them, as well by way of error as otherwiſe, or in the returns of the ſame, by ſheriffs, corouers, bailiffs of franchiſes, or any other, by miſpriſion of the clerks of any of the ſaid courts, or of the ſheriffs, coroners, their clerks, or other officers, clerks, or other miniſters whatſoever, in writing one letter or one ſyllable too much or too little, ſhall have power to amend the ſame."

As theſe ſtatutes only extended to what the juſtices ſhould interpret the miſpriſion of their clerks, and other officers, it was found by experience, that many juſt cauſes were overthrown for want of form, and other failings, not aided by this ſtatute, though they were good in ſubſtance; and therefore the ſtatutes of jeofail were made. Gilb. H. C. B. 111.

By ſtat. 32 H. 8. c. 30, it is enacted, "That if the jury have once paſſed upon the iſſue, though afterwards there be found a jeofaile in the proceedings, yet judgment ſhall be given according to the verdict." The ſtat. 18 Eliz. c. 14. ordains, "That after verdict given in any court of record, there ſhall be no ſtay of judgment, or reverſal, for want of form in a writ, count, plaint, &c. or for want of any writ original or judicial; or by reaſon of inſufficient returns of ſheriffs, &c." By ſtat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 13, "If a verdict ſhall be given in any court of record, the judgment ſhall not be ſtayed or reverſed for variance in form between the original writ or bill and the declaration, &c. or for want of averment of the party's being living, ſo as the perſon is proved to be in life; or for that the venire facias is in part miſ-awarded; for miſnomer of jurors, if proved to be the perſons returned; want of returns of writs, ſo as a pannel of jurors be returned and annexed to the writs; or for that the return-officer's name is not ſet to the return, if proof can be made that the writ was returned by ſuch officer, &c."

The ſtat. 16 and 17 Car. 2. c. 8. (called by Twiſden J. an omnipotent act, 1 Vent. 100; and made perpetual by ſtat. 22 and 23 Car. 2. c. 4.) enacts, "That judgment ſhall not be ſtayed or reverſed after verdict in the courts of record at Weſtminſter, &c. for default in form; or for that there are not pledges to proſecute upon the return of the original writ, or becauſe the name of the ſheriff is not returned upon it, for default of alledging and bringing into court of any bond, bill or deed, or of alledging or bringing in letters teſtamentary, or of adminiſtration; or for the omiſſion of vi & armis, or contra pacem, miſtaking the Chriſtian name or ſurname of either party, or the ſum of money, day, month or year, &c. in any declaration or pleading, being rightly named in any record, &c. preceding; nor for want of the averment of hoc paratus eſt verificare, or for not alledging prout patet per recordum, for that there is no right venire, if the cauſe was tried by a jury of the proper county or place; nor ſhall any judgment after verdict, by confeſſion, cognovit actionem, &c. be reverſed for want of miſericordia or capiatur, or by reaſon that either of them are entered, the one for the other, &c. but all ſuch defects, not being againſt the right of the matter of the ſuit, or whereby the iſſue or trial are altered, ſhall be amended by the judges; though not in ſuits of appeal, of felony, indictments, and informations, on penal ſtatutes, which are excepted out of the act.

By ſtat. 4 and 5 An. c. 16, all the ſtatutes of jeofails ſhall extend to judgments entered by confeſſion, nil dicit, or non ſum informatus in any court of record, and no ſuch judgment ſhall be reverſed, nor any judgment or writ of inquiry of damages thereon ſhall be ſtayed for any defect which would have been aided by thoſe ſtatutes, if a verdict had been given, ſo as there be an original writ filed, &c.—By ſtat. 9 Ann. c. 20. § 7, this act and all other ſtatutes of jeofails are extended to writs of mandamus and informations in the nature of a quo warranto. The ſtatutes of amendment and jeofails not being conſtrued to extend to criminal proceedings, or on penal ſtatutes in general. Bull. N. P. 325: 2 Mod. 144. But a mandamus may not be amended after return. 4 Term Rep. 689. The ſtat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 13. ordains, That, after verdict given, judgment ſhall not be ſtayed or reverſed for defect in form or ſubſtance in any bill or writ, or for variance therein from the declaration, or any other proceedings.

An action for a falſe return of a member of parliament on the ſtat. 7 and 8 W. 3, for double damages, is remedial, tho' founded on a law that is penal, ſo within the ſtatutes of jeofails. 1 Wilſ. 125.

By

By the foregoing ſtatutes (from 14 E. 3. c. 6; to 8 H. 6. c. 15,) the faults and miſtakes of clerks are in many caſes amendable: the miſpriſion of a clerk in matter of fact is amendable; though not in matter of law. Palm. 258. If there be a miſtake in the legal form of the writ, it is not amendable: there is a diverſity between the negligence and ignorance of the clerk that makes out writs; for his negligence (as if he have the copy of a bond, and do not purſue it), this ſhall be amended; but his ignorance in the legal courſe of original writs is not amendable. 8 Rep. 159. A party's name was miſtaken in an original writ; and it appearing to the court that the curſitor's inſtructions were right, the writ was amended in court; and they amended all the proceedings after. 2 Vent. 152: Cro. Car. 74. If a thing which the plaintiff ought to have entered himſelf, being a matter of ſubſtance, be totally omitted, this ſhall not be amended; but otherwiſe it is, if omitted only in part and miſentered. Danv. Abr. 346. By the common law a writ of error, returned and filed, could not be amended; becauſe it would alter the record: but now by ſtat. 5 Geo. 1. the writs of error, wherein there ſhall be any variance from the original record, or other defect, may be amended by the court where returnable.

In an aſſumpſit, the defendant pleads Not Guilty, thereupon iſſue is joined, and found for the plaintiff, he ſhall have judgment, tho' it is an improper iſſue in this action; for as there is a deceit alledged, Not Guilty is an anſwer thereto, and it is but an iſſue miſjoined, which is aided by ſtatute Cro. Eliz. 407. If in debt upon a ſingle bill, the defendant pleads payment, without an acquittance, and iſſue is joined and found for the plaintiff, tho' the payment without acquittance is no plea to a ſingle bill, he ſhall have judgment, becauſe the iſſue was joined upon an affirmative and a negative, and a verdict for the plaintiff. Mich. 37 and 38 Eliz. 5 Rep. 43. An ill plea and iſſue may be aided by the ſtatute of jeofails, after a verdict: and if an iſſue joined be uncertain and confuſed, a verdict will help it. Cro. Car. 316: Hob. 113. The ſtatutes likewiſe help when there is no original, and where there is no bill upon the file, it is aided after verdict by ſtatute, but when there is an original, which is ill, that is not aided. Cro. Jac. 185, 480: Cro. Car. 282. The ſtatute of jeofails 16 and 17 Car. 2, helps a miſ-trial in a proper county, but not where the county is miſtaken. 1 Mod. 24.

When the award of a writ of enquiry on the roll is good, the writ ſhall be amended by the roll. Carth. 70. The court cannot amend to make a new writ; or to alter a good writ, and adapt it to another purpoſe, &c. only when the writ is bad and vicious on the face of it. Mod. Caſ. 263, 316. Annaly 367.

With reſpect to declarations, a declaration grounded on an original writ may not be amended, if the writ be erroneous: though if it be on a bill of Middleſex or a latitat, it is amendable. 1 Lill. Abr. 67.

A plaintiff may amend his declaration in matter of form after a general iſſue pleaded, before entry thereof, without payment of coſts: if he amend in ſubſtance, he is to pay coſts, or give imparlance; and if he amend after a ſpecial plea, though he would give imparlance, he muſt pay coſts. 1 Lill. 58. A declaration in ejectment, laid the demiſe before the time; this was not amendable, for it would alter the iſſue, and make a new title in the plaintiff, 1 Salk. 48. The plaintiff declared on the ſtatute of Winton for a robbery done to himſelf, when it ſhould have been of his ſervants; he had leave to amend. 3 Lev. 347. If a defendant pleads a plea to the right, or in abatement, the plaintiff may amend his declaration; but not where he demurs, for this fault may be the cauſe of the demurrer. 1 Salk 50. A demurrer may be amended after the parties have joined in demurrer, if it be on y in paper. Style 48. Where a plea ſhall be amended when in paper, or on record, &c. ſee the ſtatute 4 Geo. II. c. 26.

As to the amendments of records, &c. an iſſue entered upon record, with leave of the court may be amended; but not in a material thing, or in that which will deface the record. 1 Lill. Abr. 61. A record may be amended by the court in a ſmall matter, after iſſue joined, ſo as the plea be not altered. Danv. Abr. 338. If on a writ of error a record is amended in another court in affirmance of the judgment, it muſt be amended in the court where judgment was given. Hardr. 505. Where the record of niſi prius does not agree with the original record, it may be amended after verdict, provided it do not change the iſſue: but a record ſhall not be amended to attaint the jury, or prejudice the authority of the judge. A general or ſpecial verdict may be amended by the notes of the clerk of aſſiſe in civil cauſes; but not in criminal actions. 1 Salk. 47. The iſſue roll ſhall be amended by the imparlance roll, which is precedent; but a roll may not be amended after verdict, when there is nothing to amend it by; tho' ſurpluſage may be rejected, and ſo make it good. Cro. Car. 92: 1 Sid. 135.

In an action on the ſtatute of uſury, a verdict was given for the plaintiff, and taken on one of the counts, in the declaration.—The other counts being found for defendant —Motion in arreſt of judgment.—The principal cauſe was, the chriſtian name of one of the perſons mentioned in that count (rightly named, in that count, before) was miſtaken in the iſſue roll, which had been carried in, whereby the count was rendered abſurd, and bad. The court gave leave to file a right bill, (the proceedings being by bill,) and afterwards amended the iſſue roll, by the bill —The niſi prius roll was right.—Gardner qui tam v. Brown B. R. Trin. T. 15 Geo. 3. This was done, as an amendment at common law.

A miſtake of the clerk in entering a judgment; as where it was that the defendant recovered, inſtead of the plaintiff, &c. was ordered to be amended. Cro. Jac. 631: Hutt. 41. A judgment may be amended by the paper book ſigned by the maſter. 1 Salk. 50. At common law, the judges may amend their judgments of the ſame term; and by ſtatute of another term. 8 Rep. 156: 14 E. 3. If judgments are not well entered, on payment of coſts they will be ordered to be ſo: when judgments are entered, 'tis ſaid the defects therein being the act of the court, and not the miſpriſion of the clerk, are not amendable. Golſb. 104. Miſtakes in returns of writs, fines and recoveries, made by mutual aſſent of parties may be amended. 5 Rep. 45. Judgment ſhall not be ſtaid after verdict, for that an original wants form, or varies from the record in point of form, which are amendable. 5 Rep. 45. After verdict given in any court of record, there ſhall be no ſtay of judgment for want of form in any writ, or inſufficient returns of ſheriffs, variance in form between between the original writ and declaration, &c. ſtat. 32 H. 8. 18 Eliz. Vide 5 Geo. 1. c. 13. The poſtea may be amended by the judge's notes. 1 Wilſ. 33: 2 Stra. 1197. S. C. As to amendments in informations by the attorney general, ſee 4 Term Rep. 457, 8.

Amendments are uſually made in affirmance of judgments; and ſeldom or never to deſtroy them: and where amendments were at common law, the party was to pay a fine for leave to amend. 3 Salk. 29.

AMERCIAMENT, amerciamentum, (from the Fr. merci) ſignifies the pecuniary puniſhment of an offender againſt the king or other lord in his court, that is found to be in miſericordia, i. e. to have offended, and to ſtand at the mercy of the king or lord. The author of Terms de Ley ſaith, that amerciament is properly a penalty aſſeſſed by the peers or equals of the party amerced, for the offence done; for which he putteth himſelf at the mercy of the lord. Terms de Ley 40. And by the ſtatute of Magna Charta, c. 14. a freeman is not to be amerced for a ſmall fault, but proportionable to the offence, and that by his peers. 9 H. 3. c. 4. Amerciaments are a more merciful penalty than a fine; for which if they are too grievous, a releaſe may be ſued by an ancient writ founded on Magna Charta, called moderata miſericordia. See New Nat. Brev. 167: F. N. B. 76. The difference between amerciaments and fines, is this; fines are ſaid to be puniſhments certain, and grow expreſsly from ſome ſtatute; but amerciaments are ſuch as are arbitrarily impoſed. Kitch. 78. Alſo fines are impoſed and aſſeſſed by the court: amerciaments by the country; and no court can impoſe a fine, but a court of record: other courts can only amerce. 8 Rep. 39, 41.

A court-leet can amerce for public nuiſances only. 1 Saund. 135. For a fine and all amerciaments in a court-leet, a diſtreſs is incident of common right; but for amerciament in a court baron, diſtreſs may not be taken but by preſcription. 11 Rep. 45. When an amerciament is agreed on, the lord may have an action of debt, or diſtrain for it, and impound the diſtreſs, or ſell it at his pleaſure; but he cannot impriſon for it. 8 Rep. 41, 45. Vide the caſe of the Duke of Beaford v. Alcock, B. R. 1 Wilſ. 248. See tit. Leet.

There is alſo amercement in pleas in the courts of record, when a defendant delays to tender the thing demanded by the king's writs, on the firſt day. Co. Lit. 116. And in all perſonal actions without force, as in debt, detinue, &c. if the plaintiff be nonſuited, barred, or his writ abate for matter of form, he ſhall be amerced: but if on judicial proceſs, founded on a judgment and record, the plaintiff be nonſuited, barred, &c. he ſhall not be amerced. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 206. And an infant, if nonſuited, is not to be amerced: Jenk. Cent. 258. The capias pro fine is taken away by 5 W. & M. c. 12.

The amerciament of the ſheriff, or other officer of the king, for miſconduct, is called amerciament royal. Termes de Ley. Amerciaments are likewiſe in ſeveral other caſes. See tit. Fines for Offences.

AMESSE, ſee Amictus.

AMI, vide Amy.

AMICIA, ſee almutium.

AMICTUS. The uppermoſt of the ſix garments worn by prieſts, tied round the neck, and covering the breaſt and heart—Amictus, alba, cingulum, ſtola, manipulus et planeta.—Theſe were the ſix garments of prieſts.

AMICUS CURIÆ. If a judge is doubtful or miſtaken in matter of law, a ſtander-by may inform the court, as amicus curiæ. 2 Co. Inſt. 178. In ſome caſes, a thing is to be made appear by ſuggeſtion on the roll by motion; ſometimes by pleading, and ſometimes as amicus curiæ. 2 Keb. 548. Any one as amicus curiæ may move to quaſh a vicious indictment; for if there were a trial and verdict, judgment muſt be arreſted. Comberb. 13. A counſel urged, that he might, as amicus curiæ, inform the court of an error in proceedings, to prevent giving falſe judgment; but it was denied, unleſs the party was preſent. 2 Show. Rep. 297.

AMITTERE LEGEM TERRÆ, or LIBERAM LEGEM. To loſe and be deprived of the liberty of ſwearing in any court: as to become infamous, renders a perſon incapable of being an evidence. Vide Glanvil, lib. 2. And ſee the ſtatute 5 Eliz. cap. 9. againſt perjury. So a man that is outlawed, &c. is ſaid to loſe his law, i. e. is put out of the protection of the law, as leaſt ſo far as relates to the ſuing in any of his majeſty's courts of juſtice, though he may be ſued.

AMMOBRAGIUM. A ſervice, ſuggeſted by Spelman to be the ſame as Chevage; which ſee.

AMNESTY, amneſtia, oblivio.] An act of pardon or oblivion, ſuch as was granted at the reſtoration by king Charles II.

AMNITUM INSULÆ. Iſles upon the Weſt coaſt of Britain. Blount.

AMORTIZATION, amortizatio, Fr. amortiſſement.] An alienation of lands or tenements in mortmain, viz. to any corporation or fraternity, and their ſucceſſors, &c. And the right of amortization is a privilege or licence of taking in mortmain. In the ſtatute de libertatibus perquirendis; an. 27 Ed. 1. ſt. 2, the word amortiſement is uſed.

AMORTISE, Fr. amortir.] To alien lands in mortmain.

AMPLIATION, ampliatio.] An enlargement; in law a referring of judgment, till the cauſe is further examined.

AMY, amicus.] In law prochein amy is the next friend to be truſted for an infant. And infants are to ſue by prochein amy (i. e. next friend) or guardian, and defend by guardian. Alien amy is a foreigner here ſubject to ſome prince in friendſhip with us.

AN, JOUR & WASTE. See Year, Day and Waſte.

ANCESTOR, anteceſſor, or predeceſſor.] One that has gone before in a family: but the law makes a difference between what we commonly call an anceſtor and a predeceſſor; the one being applied to a natural perſon and his anceſtors, and the other to a body politic and their predeceſſors. Co. Lit. 78. b.

ANCESTREL. What relates to or hath been done by one's anceſtors; as homage anceſtrel, &c.

ANCHOR. Is a meaſure of brandy, &c. containing ten gallons. Lex Mercat.

ANCHORAGE, ancoragium.] A duty taken of ſhips for the uſe of the haven where they caſt anchor. MS. Arth. Trevor, Arm. The ground in ports and havens belonging to the king, no perſon can let any anchor fall thereon, without paying therefore to the king's officers.

ANCIENTS. Gentlemen of the inns of court. In Gray's inn the ſociety conſiſts of benchers, ancients, barriſters, and ſtudents under the bar; and here the ancients are of the oldeſt barriſters. In the Middle Temple, ſuch as as have gone through, or are paſt their readings, are termed ancients: the inns of Chancery conſiſt of ancients and ſtudents or clerks; and from the ancients one is yearly choſen the principal or treaſurer.

ANCIENT DEMESNE, or demain; vetus patrimonium domini,] Is a tenure whereby all the manors belonging to the crown in the days of St. Edward and William, called the Conqueror, were held. The number and names of all manors, after a ſurvey made of them, were written in the book of Domeſday; and thoſe which by that book appear to have at that time belonged to the crown, and are contained under the title terra regis, are called ancient demeſne. Kitch. 98. The lands which were in the poſſeſſion of Edward the Confeſſor, and were given away by him, are not at this day ancient demeſne, nor any others, except thoſe writ down in the book of Domeſday; and therefore, whether ſuch lands are ancient demeſne or not, is to be tried only by that book. 1 Salk. 57: 4 Inſt. 269: Hob. 188: 1 Brownl. 43. F. N. B. 16. D.

But if the queſtion is, whether lands be parcel of a manor which is ancient demeſne, this ſhall be tried by a jury. For 'parcel or not parcel' is matter of fact, 9 Rep. caſe of the abbot of Strata Marcella, Salk. 56. 774. and ſee 2 Burr. 1046.

Fitzherbert tells us, that tenants in ancient demeſne had their tenures from ploughing the king's lands, and other works towards the maintenance of the king's freehold, on which account they had liberties granted them. F. N. B 14, 228. And there were two ſorts of theſe tenures and tenants; one that held their lands freely by charter; the other by copy of court-roll, according to the cuſtom of the manor. Brit. c. 66. The tenants holding by charter cannot be impleaded out of their manor; for if they are, they may abate the writ by pleading their tenure: they are free from toll, for all things bought and ſold concerning their ſubſtance and huſbandry. And they may not be impanelled upon any inqueſt. F. N. B. 14. If tenants in ancient demeſne are returned on juries, they may have a writ de non ponendis in aſſiſis, &c. and attachment againſt the ſheriff. 1 Rep. 105. And if they are diſturbed by taking duties of toll, or by being diſtrained to do unaccuſtomed ſervices, &c. they may have writs of Monſtraverunt, to be diſcharged. See F. N. B. 14: New Nat. Br. 32, 35: 4 Inſt. 269. Theſe tenants are free as to their perſons; and their privileges are ſuppoſed to commence by act of parliament; for they cannot be created by grant at this day. 1 Salk. 57.

Lands in ancient demeſne are extendible upon a ſtatute merchant, ſtaple, or elegit. 4 Inſt. 270. No lands ought to be accounted ancient demeſne but ſuch as are held in ſocage; and whether it be ancient demeſne or not, ſhall be tried by the book of Domeſday. A leſſee for years cannot plead in ancient demeſne: nor can a lord in action againſt him plead ancient demeſne, for the land is frankfee in his hands. Danv. Abr. 660.

In real actions, ejectment, replevin, &c. ancient demeſne is a good plea; but not in actions merely perſonal. Danv. 658. If in ancient demeſne a writ of right cloſe be brought, and proſecuted in nature of a formedon; a fine levied there by the cuſtom, is a bar: and if this judgment be reverſed in C. B. that court ſhall only adjudge, that the plaintiff be reſtored to his action in the court of ancient demeſne; unleſs there is ſome other cauſe, which takes away its juriſdiction. Jenk. Cent. 87. Dyer 373. See the ſtatutes 9 H. 4. c. 5. & 8 H. 6. c. 26. to prevent depriving lords in ancient demeſne of their juriſdiction by colluſion.

A fine in the king's courts will change ancient demeſne to frank-fee at common law; ſo if the lord enfeoffs another of the tenancy; or if the land comes to the king, &c. 4 Inſt. 270. See Fine. But if the lord be not a party, he may have a writ of diſceit, and avoid the fine or recovery; for lands in ancient demeſne were not originally within the juriſdiction of the courts of Weſtminſter; but the tenants thereof enjoy this amongſt other privileges, not to be called from the buſineſs of the plough by any foreign litigation. 1 Rol. Abr. 327. If the lord be party, then the lands become frank-fee, and are within the juriſdiction of the courts of Weſtminſter, for the privilege of ancient demeſne being eſtabliſhed for the benefit of lord and tenant, they may deſtroy it at pleaſure. 2 Rol. Abr. 324: 1 Salk. 57.

With reſpect to pleading, it is to be obſerved, that in all actions wherein, if the demandant recover, the lands would be frank-fee, ancient demeſne is a good plea. 1 Rol. Abr. 322.

Therefore in all actions real, or where the realty may come in queſtion, ancient demeſne is a good plea; as aſſiſe, writ of ward of land, writ of account againſt a bailiff of a manor, writ of account againſt a guardian, &c. See 4 Inſt. 270: 1 Rol. Abr. 322, 323.

In replevin ancient demeſne is a good plea, becauſe by intendment the freehold will come in queſtion. Godb. 64. 1 Bulſt. 108.

In an ejectione firmæ ancient demeſne is a good plea; for by common intendment the right and title of the land will come in queſtion; and if in this action it ſhould not be a good plea, the ancient privileges of thoſe tenants would be loſt, inaſmuch as moſt titles at this day are tried by ejectment. Hob. 47: 1 Bulſt. 108: Hetl. 177: Cro. Eliz. 826.

But in all actions merely perſonal, as debt upon a leaſe, treſpaſs quare clauſum fregit, &c. ancient demeſne is no plea. Hob. 47: 5 Co. 105. For further matter ſee Kyd's Com. Dig. tit. Ancient Demeſne.

ANCIENTY, Fr. Ancienté, Lat. Antiquitas.] Elderſhip or ſeniority. This word is uſed in the ſtat. of Ireland, 14 Hen. 3.

ANDENA, A ſwath in mowing: it likewiſe ſignifies as much ground as a man can ſtride over at once.

ANELACIUS, A ſhort knife or dagger. Mat. Paris 277.

ANFELDTYHDE, or according to Somner, Anfealtible, A ſimple accuſation; for the Saxons had two ſorts of accuſations, viz. ſimplex and triplex: that was called ſingle, when the oath of the criminal and two more was ſufficient to diſcharge him; but his own oath, and the oaths of five more were required to free him à triplici accuſatione. Blount. See Leg. Adelſtani, cap. 19. apud Brompton.

ANGARIA, Fr. Angaire; interpreted Perſonal Service.] A troubleſome vexatious duty or ſervice which tenants were obliged to pay their lords; and they performed it in their own perſons. Impreſſing of ſhips. Blount. See alſo Spelman & Cowel; the former of whom gives ſome fanciful derivations under this word, and v. Perangaria. It ſeems that it may be eaſily and rationally derived from Angor. Lat.

ANGELICA VESTIS, A monkiſh garment which laymen put on a little before their deaths, that they might have the benefit of the prayers of the monks. It was from them called angelicus, becauſe they were called angeli, who by their prayers animæ ſaluti ſuccurebant. And the word ſuccurrendum, in our old books, is underſtood of one who had put on the habit, and was near death. Monaſticon, 1 tom. p. 632.

ANGEL, An ancient Engliſh coin value 10*s.*

ANGILD, Angildum] The bare ſingle valuation or compenſation of a criminal; from the Sax. An one, and gild, payment, mulct, or fine. Tuigild was the double mulct or fine; and trigild the treble, according to the rated ability of the perſon. Laws of Ina. c. 20: Spelm.

ANHLOTE, A ſingle tribute or tax. The words anhlote and anſcot are mentioned in the laws of William the Conqueror; and their ſenſe is, that every one ſhould pay according to the cuſtom of the country, his part and ſhare, as ſcot and lot, &c. Leg. W. 1. c. 64.

ANIENS, Fr.] Void, being of no force. F. N. B. 214.

ANNALES, Yearlings, or young cattle from one to two years old.

ANNATS, Annates.] This word has the ſame meaning with firſt-fruits, ſtat. 25 H. 8. c. 20. The reaſon of the name is, becauſe the rate of the firſt-fruits paid for ſpiritual livings, is after the value of one year's profit.

ANNEALING OF TILE, ſtat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 4. From the Saxon, Onælan, Accendere, ſignifies the burning or hardening of tile.

ANNIENTED, from the Fr. Aneantir.] Abrogated, fruſtrated, or brought to nothing. Lit. ſect. 741.

ANNIVERSARY DAYS, Dies Anniverſarii.] Solemn days appointed to be celebrated yearly in commemoration of the death or martyrdom of ſaints; or the days whereon, at the return of every year, men were wont to pray for the ſouls of their deceaſed friends, according to the cuſtom of the Roman Catholics, mentioned in the ſtatute of 1 Ed. 6. c. 14. This was in uſe among our ancient Saxons, as may be ſeen in Lib. Rameſ. ſect. 134. The anniverſary, or yearly return of the day of the death of any perſon, which the religious regiſtered in their obitual or martyrology, and annually obſerved in gratitude to their founders and benefactors, was by our forefathers called a year-day and a mind-day, i. e. a memorial day.

ANNI NUBILES, ſee tit. Age.

ANNO DOMINI, The computation of time from the incarnation of our Saviour; which is generally inſerted in the dates of all public writings, with an addition of the year of the king's reign, &c. The Romans began their æra of time from the building of Rome; the Grecians computed by Olympiads, and the Chriſtians reckon from the birth of Jeſus Chriſt.

ANNOISANCE, ANNOYANCE, or Noiſance, Nuiſance, thus termed in ſtat. 22 H. 8. c. 5. Vide titles Nuiſance and Highways.

ANNUA PENSIONE, An ancient writ for providing the king's chaplain unpreferred with a penſion. It was brought where the king had due to him an annual penſion from an abbot or prior, for any of his chaplains whom he ſhould nominate, (being unprovided of livings) to demand the ſame of ſuch abbot or prior. Terms de la Ley 43: Reg. Orig. 165, 307.

ANNUALE, ANNUALIA. A yearly ſtipend anciently aſſigned to a prieſt for celebrating an anniverſary, or for ſaying continued maſſes one year, for the ſoul of a deceaſed perſon.

ANNUITY, Annuus redditus; A yearly payment of a certain ſum of money, granted to another for life, for years, or in fee, to be received of the grantor or his heirs, ſo that no freehold be charged therewith; whereof a man ſhall never have aſſiſe or other action, but a writ of annuity. Terms de Ley 44: Reg. Orig. 158: Co. Lit. 144. b.

To make a good grant of an annuity, no particular technical mode of expreſſion is neceſſary. For if a man grants an annuity to another, to be received out of his coffers, or to be received out of a bag of money, or to be received of a ſtranger, yet this is ſufficient to charge his perſon, and the ſubſequent words ſhall be rejected. 1 Rol. Abr. 227.

If a man grant a rent out of land, in which he has nothing, proviſo that he be not charged for this in a writ of annuity, it ſhall be a good annuity; for the proviſo, being repugnant, is void. Co. Lit. 146 a: 2 Bulſt. 149. See 6 Co. 58 b.

If a man grant a rent-charge out of his land, the grantee has an election to take it as a rent; or as an annuity. Lit. ſect. 219: 2 Bulſt. 148.

The treatiſe called Doctor and Student, dial. 1. cap. 3, ſhews ſeveral differences between a rent and an annuity, viz. that every rent is iſſuing out of land; but an annuity chargeth the perſon only, as the grantor and his heirs, who have aſſets by deſcent.

If no lands are bound for the payment of an annuity, a diſtreſs may not be taken for it. Dyer 65.

But if an annuity iſſue out of land, (which of late it often doth) the grantee may bring a writ of annuity, and make it perſonal, or an aſſiſe, or diſtrain, &c. ſo as to make it real. Co. Lit. 144. And if the grantee take a diſtreſs, yet he may afterwards have a writ of annuity, and diſcharge the land, if he do not avow the taking, which is in nature of an action. 1 Inſt. 145. But if the grantee of a rent bring an aſſiſe for it, he ſhall never after have writ of annuity; he having elected this to be a rent; ſo if the grantee of an annuity avow the taking of a diſtreſs in a court of record. Danv. Abr. 486. And if the grantee purchaſe part of the land out of which an annuity is iſſuing, he ſhall never after have a writ of annuity. Co. Lit. 148.

Where a rent-charge, iſſuing out of lands, granted by tenant for life, &c. determines by the act of God; as an intereſt was veſted in the grantee, it is in his election to make it a rent-charge, and ſo charge the lands therewith, or a perſonal thing to charge the perſon of the grantor in annuity. 2 Rep. 36. A. ſeiſed of lands in fee, he and B. grant an annuity or rent-charge to another; this prima facie is the grant of A. and confirmation of B. But the grantee may have a writ of annuity againſt both. If two men grant an annuity of 20*l. per ann.* although the perſons be ſeveral, if the deed of grant be not for them ſeverally, yet the grantee ſhall have but one annuity againſt them. Co. Lit. 144.

When a man recovers in a writ of annuity he ſhall not have a new writ of annuity for the arrears due after the recovery, but a ſcire facias upon the judgment, the judgment being always executory. 2 Rep. 37. No writ of annuity lieth for arrearages only when an annuity is determined, but for the annuity and arrearages, Co. Lit. 285. Though, if a rent-charge be granted out of a leaſe for years, it hath been adjudged that the grantee may bring annuity when the leaſe is ended. Moor, cap. 450. Where an an annuity is granted to one for life, during the term he ſhall have a writ of annuity; and when that is determined, then his executors may have action of debt; for the realty is reſolved into the perſonalty. 4 Rep. 49. New Nat. Br. 287.

If the annuitant of an annuity payable half yearly, ſince the laſt term of payment, die before the half year is completed, nothing is due for the time he lives. 3 Atk. 260. So if a grant be made to A. for life to be paid at the feaſt of Eaſter or within 20 days after, and he die after Eaſter within 20 days, it has been ſaid his executor ſhall not have it, for the laſt day was the time of payment. Dal. 1.

Upon a rent created by way of reſervation, no writ of annuity lies. Danv. 483. Writ of annuity may not be had againſt the grantor's heir, unleſs the grant be for him and his heirs; and there muſt be aſſets to bind the heir, by grant of annuity by his anceſtor, when he is named. Co. Lit. 144: 1 Roll. Abr. 226. But it is otherwiſe in caſe of the grant of a rent out of land, or a grant of a rent whereof the grantor is ſeiſed, for this charges the land, but an annuity charges the perſon only. Br. Charge, pl. 54.

An annuity granted by a biſhop, with confirmation of dean and chapter, ſhall bind the ſucceſſor of the biſhop. New Nat. Br. 340. If the king grant an annuity, it muſt be expreſſed by whoſe hands the grantee ſhall receive it, as the king's bailiff, &c. or the grant will be void; for the king may not be ſued, and no perſon is bound to pay it, if not expreſſed in the patent. New Nat. Br. 341. If, where an annuity is granted pro decimis, the grantor is diſturbed of his tithes, the annuity ceaſeth; and ſo it is where any annuity is granted to a perſon pro conſilio, and the grantee refuſeth to give counſel; for where the cauſe and conſideration of the grant amounts to a condition, and the one ceaſes, the other ſhall determine. Co. Lit. 204.

There are now very few, if any, grants of annuities, without a covenant for payment, expreſſed or implied; and therefore, where a diſtreſs can't be made, or is not approved of, the grantee may bring an action of covenant, and recover the arrears in damages, with coſts of ſuit. And that action is now uſually brought, real actions and writs of annuity being much out of uſe.

ANNUITIES FOR LIFE. To guard againſt the fraudulent and oppreſſive practices of uſurious money-lenders, exerciſed on young heirs and other neceſſitous perſons entitled to property in expectancy, the legiſlature found it neceſſary to interpoſe by the following act.

By ſtat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 26, a memorial of every deed, bond, or other aſſurance, whereby any annuity or rent-charge ſhall be granted for life, or for term of years, or greater eſtate determinable on lives, ſhall within 20 days of the execution (excluſive of the day of execution: 5 Term Rep. 283), be inrolled in Chancery; ſuch memorial to contain the date of the deed, the name of all the parties, and for whom any of them are truſtees, and of all the witneſſes; and to ſet forth the annual ſum to be paid, and the name of the perſon for whoſe life the annuity is granted, and the conſideration; otherwiſe every ſuch deed and aſſurance ſhall be void. § 1, 2.

In every deed, &c. whereby any annuity ſhall be granted, the conſideration really (which ſhall be in MONEY only) and alſo the name of the perſon by whom, and on whoſe behalf the conſideration ſhall be advanced ſhall be ſet forth in words at length, otherwiſe ſuch deed ſhall be void. § 3.

If any part of the conſideration ſhall be (directly or indirectly) returned to, or retained by the party advancing the ſame, or if the conſideration or any part ſhall be in goods, the annuitant may apply to the court in which any action is brought, to ſtay proceedings, and the court may order the aſſurance to be cancelled, and any judgment to be vacated. § 4.

All contracts for the purchaſe of any annuity with any infant under 21 years of age ſhall be UTTERLY VOID; notwithſtanding any attempt to confirm the ſame on the infant's coming of age. And all perſons ſoliciting infants to grant annuities, or advancing money to them on condition of their granting annuities when of age, or engaging them by oath or promiſe not to plead infancy. And ſolicitors or brokers demanding gratuities for procuring money (beyond 10*s. per cent.*) ſhall all be judged guilty of miſdemeanors, and liable to fine, impriſonment, and corporal puniſhment. § 6, 7.

This act does not extend to any annuity given by will or marriage ſettlement, or for the advancement of a child; nor to any ſecured on lands of equal annual value whereof the grantor is ſeiſed in fee ſimple or fee tail in poſſeſſion, or ſecured by actual tranſfer in the funds, the dividends being of equal value with the annuity; nor to any voluntary annuity without pecuniary conſideration; nor to annuities granted by corporations, or under act of parliament; nor where the annuity does not exceed 10*l.* unleſs there be more than one to the ſame grantor, nor in truſt for the ſame perſon. § 8.

A deed not regiſtered according to the directions of the above act, is abſolutely void and not merely voidable. 2 Term Rep. 603. See alſo 4 Term Rep. 463, 494, 500, 694, 790, 824.

Notes given as part of the conſideration (which if actually given bonâ fide are to be underſtood as money) muſt be circumſtantially ſet out in the memorial, that the court may ſee whether a full conſideration was given or not. 3 Term Rep. 288.—The redemption of a former annuity, at a higher price than it was purchaſed at, is a good conſideration. 5 Term Rep. 283.

If the ſecurity be ſet aſide for want of complying with the formalities of the act, the conſideration, if fair and legal, may be recovered back by the grantee in action of aſſumpſit, againſt the perſon actually receiving ſuch conſideration money, but not againſt a ſurety. 1 Term Rep. 732: 2 Term Rep. 366.

How far the act extends to annuities granted previous to its paſſing, ſee 1 Term Rep. 267, 8.

APOTHECARIES, are exempted from ſerving offices. See tit. Conſtable, Churchwarden. Their medicines are to be ſearched and examined by the phyſicians choſen by the college of phyſicians, and if faulty ſhall be burnt, &c. 32 Hen. 8. c. 40: 1 M. ſtat. 2. c. 9. And apothecaries to the army are to make up their cheſts of medicines at Apothecaries' Hall, there to be openly viewed, &c. under the penalty of 40*l.* See Phyſicians.

APPARATOR, or APPARITOR, A meſſenger that ſerves the proceſs of the ſpiritual court. His duty is to cite the offenders to appear; to arreſt them; and to execute the ſentence or decree of the judges, &c. See ſtat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 5.

If a monition be awarded to an apparitor, to ſummon a man, and he upon the return of the monition avers that he had ſummoned him, when in truth he had not, and the defendant be thereupon excommunicated; an action on the caſe at common law will lie againſt the apparitor for the falſhood committed by him in his office, beſides the puniſhment inflicted on him by the eccleſiaſtical court for ſuch breach of truſt. Ayl. Parerg. 70: 2 Bulſt. 264.

APPARATOR COMITATUS, An officer formerly called by this name; for which the ſheriffs of Buckinghamſhire had a conſiderable yearly allowance; and in the reign of queen Elizabeth, there was an order of court for making that allowance; but the cuſtom and reaſon of it are now altered. Hale's Sher. Acco. 104.

APPARLEMENT, from the Fr. Pareillement, i. e. in like manner.] A reſemblance or likelihood; as apparlement of war. Stat. 2 R. 2. ſt. 1. c. 6.

APPARURA, Furniture and implements. Carrucarum apparura is plough tackle, or all the implements belonging to a plough. Blount.

APPEAL, Is uſed in two ſenſes.

1. It ſignifies the removal of a cauſe from an inferior court or judge to a ſuperior. From the French verb neuter, APPELLER, of the ſame ſignification. As relative to this ſenſe ſee the proper titles in this Dictionary. It may be well alſo in this place to obſerve the difference between an appeal from a court of equity, and a writ of error from a court of law. Firſt, the former may be brought upon any interlocutory matter; the latter upon nothing but only a definitive judgment. Secondly, that on writs of error the Houſe of Lords pronounces the judgment; on appeals it gives direction to the court below to rectify its own decree. 3 Comm. 55.

2. When ſpoken of as a criminal proſecution, it denotes an accuſation by a private ſubject againſt another for ſome heinous crime; demanding puniſhment on account of the particular injury ſuffered, rather than for the offence againſt the publick. And in this ſenſe it is derived from the French verb active, APPELLER, to call upon, ſummon or challenge one. 4 Comm. 312. Or the accuſation of a felon at common law by one of his accomplices, which accomplice was then called an approver. (See tit. Acceſſary) Co. Lit. 287. See alſo Bract. lib. 3: Brit. c. 22, 25: Staundf. lib. 2. c. 6.

CRIMINAL APPEALS are either capital or not capital—But of the latter ſort appeals de pace, de plagis, de impriſonamento, and of mayhem, are now become obſolete being turned into actions of treſpaſs long ſince. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. 235. of the laſt however a few words ſhall be ſaid hereafter. Capital appeals are either of Treaſon or Felony. The latter may be ſubdivided into 1. Appeals of Death, or as they are otherwiſe called Appeals of Murder. 2. Appeals of Larceny or Robbery. 3 Apeals of Rape. 4. Appeals of Arſon, which laſt are now entirely obſolete. 1 Inſt. 288 a. and ſee 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23.

This private proceſs for the puniſhment of publick crimes, probably had its original in thoſe times, when a private pecuniary ſatisfaction, or weregild was conſtantly paid to the party injured, or his relations to expiate enormous offences. As therefore during the continuance of this cuſtom, a proceſs was certainly given, for recovering the weregild by the party to whom it was due; it ſeems that when theſe offences by degrees grew no longer redeemable, the private proceſs was ſtill continued in order to inſure the infliction of puniſhment upon the offender, though the party injured was allowed no pecuniary compenſation. 4 Comm. 313, 4.

It was alſo anciently permitted (as above hinted) for one ſubject to appeal another of high Treaſon, either in the courts of common law (Britt. c. 22.) or in parliament; or, for treaſons committed beyond the ſeas, in the court of the high conſtable and marſhal. The cognizance of appeals in the latter ſtill continues in force; and ſo late as 1631, there was a trial by battle awarded in the court of chivalry on ſuch appeal of treaſon; [By Donald Lord Rae againſt David Ramſey. Ruſhw. vol. 2. part 2. p. 112.] But the cognizance of appeals for treaſon in the common law courts was virtually aboliſhed by ſtat. 5 E. 3. c. 9: & 25 E. 3. [ſtat. 5. c. 4.] (1 Hale P. C. 349, 359:) and in Parliament expreſsly by ſtat. 1 H. 4. c. 14. See 4 Comm. 314.

On this ſubject Mr. Kyd the ingenious editor of Comyns's Digeſt makes the following uſeful remark.—It does not appear that the appeal of treaſon is taken away by this ſtatute (1 H. 4. c. 14,) or any other. The ſtat. 5 E. 3. c. 9, only ſays, that none ſhall be attached, &c. againſt the form of the great charter and the laws of the land. The ſtat. 25 E. 3. [ſtat. 5.] c. 4, goes a little farther and ſays "that none ſhall be taken by petition or ſuggeſtion to the king or to his council, but by indictment or preſentment, or by proceſs made by writ original at the common law." It is conceived that a writ of appeal is a writ original; (2 Hawk. 232: 5 Burr. 2643;) therefore if an appeal of treaſon was part of the common law, theſe theſe ſtatutes do manifeſtly not take it away. The ſtat. 1 H. 4. c. 14. applying only to appeals in parliament. See Com. Dig. tit. Appeal (A. 1.)

However, as there has been no inſtance of any ſuch appeal, before any court of common law, either ſince the making the ſtat. 1 H. 4. c. 14, nor for many years before, the law relating to ſuch appeals ſeems wholly obſolete at this day. Leach Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 23. § 29.

An Appeal of Felony may be brought for crimes committed either againſt the parties themſelves or their relations. The crimes againſt the parties themſelves are Larceny, Rape, Maihem, and Arſon. The only crime againſt one's relation, for which an appeal can be brought is that of killing him, either by murder or manſlaughter. 4 Comm. 314. (But this ſeems an unguarded aſſertion in the learned commentator, as an appeal is given to the huſband, next of kin, &c. by ſtat. in caſe of Rape. See poſt. III. Appeal of Rape.)

Appeal of Death cannot be brought by every relation, but only by the wife for the death of her huſband, Magna Charta c. 34. or by the heir male for the death of his anceſtor; which heirſhip was alſo confined by an ordinance of king Henry the Firſt to the four neareſt degrees of blood. Mirr. c. 2. § 7. It is given to the wife on account of the loſs of her huſband; therefore if ſhe marries again before or pending her appeal, it is loſt and gone; (2 Inſt. 68, 317). or if ſhe marries after judgment, ſhe ſhall not demand execution. (2 Hawk. P. C. 243. by which it ſeems that the Court may award execution ex officio—ſed dubitatur). The heir muſt alſo be heir male, and ſuch a one as was the next heir by the courſe of the common law at the time of the killing of the anceſtor (H. P. C. 182.) But this rule has three exceptions. 1ſt. If the perſon killed leaves an innocent wife, ſhe only and not the heir ſhall have the appeal. 2d. If there be no wife, and the heir be accuſed of the murder, the perſon who next to him would have been heir male, ſhall bring the appeal. 3d. If the wife kill her huſband the heir may appeal her of the death (1 Leon. 326: 1 Inſt. 33.) And by the ſtat. of Gloceſter 6 E. 1. c. 9. all appeals of death muſt be ſued within a year and a day after the completion of the felony by the death of the party; which ſeems to be only declaratory of the old common law. 4 Comm. 314, 5.

Theſe ſeveral appeals may be brought previous to any indictment; and if the appellee be acquitted thereon he cannot be afterwards indicted of the ſame offence. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 35. § 15. [But if the appellant does not proſecute his appeal, or if he releaſe to the appellant, the appellee may be indicted. 3 Inſt. 131: Staund. 147, 8.] But if a man be acquitted on an indictment for murder, or found guilty and pardoned by the king, ſtill he ought not (in ſtrictneſs) to go at large, but be impriſoned or let to bail till the year and day be paſt, by virtue of ſtat. 3 H. 7. c. 1. in order to be furthering to anſwer an appeal for the ſame felony, though if he has been found guilty of manſlaughter, or on indictment, and has had the benefit of clergy and ſuffered the judgment of the law, he cannot afterwards be appealed. 4 Comm. 315.

If the defendant on an indictment is convicted of manſlaughter, and allowed his clergy, ſome of the books ſay the heir may lodge an appeal immediately before clergy had: and others ſay clergy ought to be granted, and that it is unreaſonable an appeal ſhould interpoſe preſently to prevent judgment. 3 Inſt. 131. If a perſon, immediately after the verdict of manſlaughter, put in an appeal of murder, and before the appeal is arraigned, the defendant demands his benefit of clergy; this is a good bar to appeal, and praying of clergy, is having of clergy, though the court delay calling the party to judgment, &c. 1 Salk. 60, 62. Kel. 93. But formerly it was held, that the court might delay the calling a convict to judgment, and thereby hinder him from his clergy, and make him liable to an appeal, eſpecially if the appeal were depending: and where the record of a conviction of manſlaughter is erroneous, or inſufficient, &c. the offender cannot plead the conviction and clergy had therein, in bar of an appeal or ſecond indictment, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 36. § 12, 14.

If the appellee be acquitted, the appellor (by ſtat. Weſtm. 2: 13 E. 1. c. 12,) ſhall ſuffer one year's impriſonment and pay a fine to the king, beſides damages to the party; and if the appellor be incapable to make reſtitution in damages, his abettors ſhall do it for him, and alſo be liable to impriſonment. This proviſion as was foreſeen by the author of Fleta (lib. 1. c. 34. § 48.) proved a great diſcouragement to appeals; ſo that thenceforward they ceaſed to be in common uſe. 4 Comm. 316.

If the appellee be found guilty, he ſhall ſuffer the ſame judgment, as if he had been convicted by indictment; but with this remarkable difference; that on an indictment the king may pardon and remit the execution; but on an appeal, being the ſuit of a private ſubject, to make atonement for the private wrong, the king can no more pardon it than he can remit the damages recovered in an action of battery. 4 Comm. 316. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 37. § 35: Jenk. 160. pl. 4. [But by the expreſs proviſion of ſtat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 8. an accomplice convicting two others guilty of robbery ſhall have the king's pardon, which ſhall be a good bar to an Appeal of Robbery.]

The puniſhment of the offender may however be remitted and diſcharged by the concurrence of all parties intereſted in the appeal. 1 Hale P. C.

Having ſaid thus much on the ſubject of appeals in general, the following miſcellaneous matter may ſerve for further elucidation on. I. Appeals of Death; II Appeals of Maihem; III. Appeals of Rape; IV. Appeals of Robbery.—The ſtudent who wiſhes for the moſt ample information on this ſubject muſt apply to Hawkins P. C. vol. ii. and Com. Dig. tit. Appeal.

I. For the proceedings on an appeal of Death, ſee the caſe of Bigby widow v. Kennedy, 5 Burr. 2643; where they are detailed much at length and with great exactneſs.

At the common law, a woman as well as a man might have an appeal of death of any of her anceſtors, and therefore the ſon of a woman ſhall at this day have an appeal, if he be heir at the death of the anceſtor, for the ſon is not diſabled, but the mother only; for the ſtatute of Mag. Ch. c. 34. ſays propter appellum fœminæ. 2 Inſt. 68. the huſband ſhall not have appeal for the death of his wife, but the heir only. Danv. Ab. 1. 488.

The judges are ſo far bound to take notice of this ſtatute, that if a woman brings an appeal of death of her father, or of any other beſides her huſband, they ought ex officio to abate it, tho' the defendant takes no exception to it. 2 Hawk. P. C. cap. 23. ſ. 42.

A feme ſhall have appeal where ſhe ſhall have no dower, as where ſhe elopes from her baron. Br. Appeal. pl. 17. cites 50 E. 3. 15. per Ingleby.

The wife is to be a wife de facto to be intitled to appeal; 2 Inſt. 68, 317. Where a woman has judgment in appeal, of the death of her huſband, ſhe cannot have execution if ſhe do not perſonally pray it: a judge went to a woman great with child, to know if ſhe would have execution? She ſaid, Yes, and the appellee was hanged. Jenk. Cent. 137.

An ideot, or a perſon born deaf and dumb, or one attainted of treaſon or felony, or outlawed in a perſonal action, ſo long as ſuch attainder or outlawry continues in force, cannot bring any appeal whatſoever. H. P. C. 183: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 30.

The appellant is to commence his appeal in perſon; but he may proceed by attorney, having a ſpecial warrant of attorney filed. 1 Salk. 60. The appeal muſt be brought in a year and a day after the death of the perſon murdered: and the count muſt ſet forth the fact, and the length and depth of the wound, the year, day, hour, place where done, and with what weapon, &c. And that the party died in a year and a day. 2 Inſt. 665. & ſtat. 6 Ed. 1. c. 9. principal and acceſſaries before and after are to be joined in appeal. Danv. Abr. 493. And this is to be obſerved, though the acceſſary is guilty in another county. ſtat. 3 H. 7. c. 1.

An appeal is proſecuted two ways; either by writ, or bill: appeal by writ is when a writ is purchaſed out of chancery by one for another, to the intent he may appeal a third perſon of ſome felony committed by him, finding pledges that he ſhall do it: appeal by bill is where a man of himſelf gives up his accuſation in writing, offering to undergo the burden of appealing the perſon therein named. Bracton.

This appeal may be brought by bill before the juſtices in the King's Bench; before juſtices of goal delivery, and commiſſioners of oyer and terminer, &c. or before the ſheriff and coroner, in the county court: but the ſheriff and coroner have only power to take and enter the appeal and count, for it muſt be removed by certiorari into B. R.

In appeal by original, principals and acceſſaries are generally charged alike without diſtinction, till the plaintiff counts: but 'tis otherwiſe in appeals by bill. Danv. 494.

There is but one appeal againſt the principal and acceſſary: if the principal is acquitted, it ſhall acquit the acceſſary; and both ſhall have damages againſt the appellant on a falſe appeal, or the acceſſary may bring a writ of conſpiracy. 2 Inſt. 383.

If the defendant in appeal is attaint, or acquit: or the plaintiff nonſuit after appearance, which is peremptory, no other appeal lies. H. P. C. 188. If there be an indictment and appeal depending at the ſame time againſt the ſame perſon, the appeal ſhall be tried firſt, if the appellant be ready. Kel. 107. Otherwiſe the king would deſtroy the ſuit of the party. Jenk. 160. pl. 4.

The caſe of other appeals than of murder, as of robbery, rape, &c. are notwithin ſtat. 3 H. 7. c. 1; and therefore autrefoits acquit, upon an indictment within the year, ſtands at common law a good bar to an appeal of robbery, or any offence other than murder or manſlaughter; and yet the judges at this day never forbear to proceed upon an indictment of robbery, rape, or other offence, though within the year, becauſe appeals of robbery eſpecially are very rare, and of little uſe, ſince the ſtatute of 21 H. 8. cap. 11, gives reſtitution to the proſecutor as effectually as upon an appeal. 2 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 250.

A charter of pardon is no bar of an appeal; and if the party be outlawed, &c. in appeal, and the king pardon him, a ſcire facias ſhall iſſue againſt the appellant, who may pray execution, notwithſtanding ſuch pardon; but if returned ſci. fec. and he appears not, then the appellee ſhall upon the pardon be diſcharged. H. P. C. 251. A peer in appeal of murder ſhall not be tried by his peers, but by a common jury; though he ſhall upon an indictment for murder. Vide ſtat. 3 H. 7. c. 1. directing appeals before the ſheriff and coroners, or at king's bench, or gaol delivery; and ſtat 1 H. 4. c. 14. (mentioned before) that no appeals are to be purſued in parliament.

And where appeal of death is brought, the defendant cannot juſtify ſe defendendo; but muſt plead not guilty, and the jury are to find the ſpecial matter. Bro. App. 122. 3 Salk. 37.

The court ex officio will quaſh the writ for apparent faults appearing on the face of the writ; as where the ſenſe is defective for want of a material word, or where it wants thoſe words of art which the law has appropriated for the deſcription of the offence. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 97.

Alſo the court will abate the writ when the declaration varies from the writ in ſome material point, either as to the reign of the king, or as to the county wherein the fact is laid, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 98.

A releaſe of all manner of actions, or of all actions criminal, or of all actions concerning pleas of the crown, or of all appeals, or of all demands, is a good bar of any appeal; but a releaſe of all perſonal actions does not bar an appeal of felony, being an action of an higher nature. Cro. Jac. 283: Yelv. 204: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 135.

If the appellee pleads a ſpecial plea, which does not amount to a confeſſion of the fact, he muſt at the ſame time plead over to the felony, except in ſpecial caſes; as where ſuch plea would be prejudicial to him, or where his plea declines the juriſdiction of the court. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 137: Carth. 56.

In appeal of murder brought by the wife for the death of her huſband; the appellee pleaded, that ſhe was never lawfully married to her huſband, but did not plead over to the felony; adjudged, that this plea being to be tried by the ordinary upon his certificate, whether the marriage was lawful or not, in ſuch caſe the defendant need not plead over to the felony; but where the plea is triable by the common law, he muſt plead over to the felony. Cro. Eliz. 224.

II. Appeal of Maihem, Is the accuſing one that hath maimed another: but this being generally no felony, it is in a manner but an action of treſpaſs; and nothing is recovered by it but damages. In an action of aſſault and maiming, the court may increaſe damages, on view of the maihem, &c. And though maihem is not felony, in appeals and indictments of maihem, the words felonicè maihemiavit are neceſſary. 3 Inſt. 63. Bracton calls appeal of maihem appellum de plagis & maihemio, and writes a whole chapter upon it. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 24. In an appeal of maihem, the defendant pleads that the plaintiff had brought an action of treſpaſs againſt him, for the ſame wounding, and had recovered, and damages given, &c. and this was a good plea in bar of the appeal; becauſe in both actions damages only are to be recovered. 4 Rep. 43. And where there is a recovery in aſſault and battery, battery, &c. the jury give damages according to the hurt, which was done, and it ſhall be intended a maihem at that time; and therefore appeal of maihem, doth not lie. Hob. 94: 1 Leon. 318. In appeal of maihem, the appellant ought not to plead in abatement of the writ, and likewiſe over to the maihem; if he doth, he will loſe the benefit of his plea to the writ. Moor 457: See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 16—28.

III. Appeal of Rape, Lies where a rape is committed on the body of a woman. 3 Inſt. 30. A ſeme covert, without her huſband, may bring appeal of rape: and ſtat. 6. R. 2. c. 6. gives power where a woman is raviſhed, and afterwards conſents to it, for a huſband, or a father, or next of kin, there being no huſband, to bring appeal of rape: alſo the criminal, in ſuch caſe, may be attainted at the ſuit of the king. 3 Inſt. 131: 6 R. 2. cap. 6.

If a woman be raviſhed by her next of kin, and conſents to him, and has neither huſband nor father, the next of kin to him ſhall have the appeal; for he has diſabled himſelf by the rape, whereby he becomes a felon. 2 Inſt. 434.—Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 632. S. P. cites 28 H. 6. Corone 459.—2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. ſ. 64. S. P.

If there be no huſband, nor father, then the appeal is given to the heir, whether male or female. Hale's P. C. 186.

This ſtatute, as to the huſband, ſhall be conſtrued ſtrictly, and be intended of a huſband in poſſeſſion, tho' there be good cauſe of divorce; for he is her huſband till a divorce be had. See Br. Parliament, pl. 89. cites 31 H. 4. 13, 14: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. ſ. 62. ſays, that ne unques accouple, &c. is a good plea, and ſhall be tried by the biſhop's certificate, who, if the marriage were unlawful by reaſon of a pre-contract, ought to certify againſt the appellant.

The ſtatute of Weſtm. 1. c. 13. which reduced the crime of rape to a treſpaſs, enacts that appeal of rape ſhall be brought within forty days, but by ſtat. Weſtm. 2. c. 34. which makes this offence felony, no time is limited for the proſecution; ſo that it may be brought in any reaſonable time. H. P. C. 186. Appeal of rape is to be commenced in the county where committed: and if a woman be aſſaulted in one county, and raviſhed in another, the appeal of rape lies in that county where ſhe was raviſhed. H. P. C. 186. It is held, that though formerly the defendant might have his clergy, 'tis taken away by the ſtat. 18 Eliz. c. 17: Dyer 201. See further on this ſubject, 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 58—73.

IV. Appeal of Robbery, or Larceny. A remedy given by the common law, where a perſon is robbed of his goods, &c. to have reſtitution of the goods ſtolen: as they could not be reſtored on indictment at the king's ſuit, this appeal was judged neceſſary. 3 Inſt. 242. If a man robbed make freſh purſuit after, and apprehend and proſecute the felon, he may bring appeal of robbery at any time afterwards. Staundf. 62.

An infant ſhall have an appeal of robbery. St. P. C. 60. b. cap. 9.

Appeal of felony lies againſt a feme covert without her baron. St. P. C. 62. cap. 11.

So it lies againſt an infant; and ſo of all others who may commit felony. St. Pl. C. 62. cap. 11.

A woman at this day may have an appeal of robbery, &c. for ſhe is not reſtrained thereof. 2 Inſt. 68.

Adjudged, that an appeal of robbery may be brought by the party robbed twenty years after the offence committed, and that he ſhall not be bound to bring it within a year and a day, as he muſt do in appeal of murder. 4 Leon. 16.

But the courts of law would now ſcarce permit a proſecution after ſuch a length of time, unleſs good cauſe could be ſhewn why it had not been ſooner commenced, as that the offender had fled the kingdom, and was but juſt returned, &c.

If one man robs ſeveral perſons, every one of them may have appeal: likewiſe if the robber be attainted at the ſuit of one, he ſhall be tried at the ſuit of the reſt, ſo as their appeals were commenced before the attainder. Danv. Abr. 494. In appeal of robbery, the plaintiff muſt declare of all the things whereof he is robbed, or they ſhall be forfeited to the king; for the appellant can have reſtitution for no more than is mentioned in his appeal. 3 Inſt. 227. By the Year-book 21 Ed. 1. 16, reſtitution of goods was granted upon an outlawry, in appeal of robbery; but a perſon having preferred an indictment againſt a robber, and afterwards an appeal, on which he was outlawed, the plaintiff moved to have reſtitution of his goods, and it was denied. 2 Leon. 108.

If the count or declaration in appeal of burglary be ſufficient, and the defendant is convicted at the ſuit of the party upon the appeal; he ſhall not be again impeached for the ſame offence at the king's ſuit. 4 Rep. 39 By ſtat. 21 H. 8. c. 11, the like reſtitution of ſtolen goods may be had on indictments after attainder, as on appeals: and appeals of robbery are now much out of uſe. See further 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 23. § 44—57; and this Dict. tit. Robbery.

APPEAL TO ROME. At the reformation in the reign of H. 8. the kingdom entirely renounced the authority of the ſee of Rome; and therefore by the ſeveral ſtatutes 24 H. 8. c. 12. and 25 H. 8. c. 19 and 21, to appeal to Rome from any of the king's courts, (which tho' illegal before, had at times been connived at); to ſue to Rome for any licence or diſpenſation; or to obey any proceſs from thence are made liable to the pains of præmunire; and by ſtat. 5 Eliz. c. 1, to defend the pope's juriſdiction in this realm is a præmunire for the firſt offence, and high treaſon for the ſecond. See tit. Papiſts.

Where an appeal in an eccleſiaſtical cauſe is made before the biſhop, or his commiſſary, it may be removed to the archbiſhop; and if before an archdeacon, to the court of arches, and from the arches to the archbiſhop; and when the cauſe concerns the king, appeal may be brought in fifteen days from any of the ſaid courts to the prelates in convocation. St. 24 H. 8. c. 12 — and the ſtat. 25 H. 8. c. 19, gives appeals from the archbiſhop's courts to the king in chancery, who thereupon appoints commiſſioners finally to determine the cauſe; and this is called the court of delegates: there is alſo a court of commiſſioners of review; which commiſſion the king may grant as ſupreme head, to review the definitive ſentence given on appeal in the court of delegates.

APPEARANCE, In the law ſignifieth the defendant's filing common or ſpecial bail, when he is ſerved with copy of, or arreſted on any proceſs out of the court at Weſtminſter: and there can be no appearance in the court of B. R. but by ſpecial or common bail. There are four ways for defendants to appear to actions, in the ſon, or by attorney; by perſons of full age: and by guardians, or next friend, by infants. Show. 165.

By the common law, the plaintiff or defendant, demandant or tenant, could not appear by attorney without the king's ſpecial warrant by writ or letters patent, but ought to follow his ſuit in his own proper perſon; by reaſon whereof there were but few ſuits. Co. Lit. 128: 2 Inſt. 249. But it is now the common courſe for the plaintiff or defendant, in all manner of actions where there may be an attorney, to appear by attorney, and put in his warrant without any writ from the king for that purpoſe. And therefore, generally, in all actions real, perſonal, and mixt, the demandant or plaintiff, tenant or defendant, may appear by attorney. F. N. B. 26.

But in every caſe, where the party ſtands in contempt, the court will not admit him to appear by attorney, but oblige him to appear in perſon. As if he comes in by a cepi corpus upon an exigent. F. N. B. Or, if he be outlawed. 2 Co. 462, 616.

But by ſtat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. Perſons outlawed in any caſe, except for treaſon or felony, may appear by attorney to reverſe the ſame without bail; except where ſpecial bail ſhall be ordered by the court.

In all caſes where proceſs iſſues forth to take the party's body, if a common appearance only, and not ſpecial bail is required, there every ſuch party may appear in court in his proper perſon, and file common bail. 1 Lill. Abr. 85: Hil. 22 Car. B. R.

In a capital criminal caſe the party muſt always appear in perſon, and cannot plead by attorney: alſo in criminal offences, where an act of parliament requires that the party ſhould appear in perſon; and likewiſe in appeal, or on attachment. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 1.

On an indictment, information or action, for any crime whatſoever under the degree of capital, the defendant may, by the favour of the court, appear by attorney; and this he may do as well before plea pleaded, as in the proceeding after, till conviction. 1 Lev. 146: Keilw. 165: Dyer 346: *Cro. But, when defendant has filed common or ſpecial bail for himſelf, any perſon may deliver or file a declaration againſt him by the bye, at any time during the term wherein the proceſs againſt the defendant is ret. ſedente curia; and the practice has been, that the plaintiff, at whoſe ſuit the proceſs is, might declare againſt the defendant, in as many actions as he thinks fit, before the end of the next term, after the ret' of the proceſs. Impey's Pract. K. B. 177: 4 Burr. 2180.

Attornies ſubſcribing warrants to appear, are liable to attachment, upon non-appearance. And where an attorney promiſes to appear for his client, the court will compel him to appear and put in common bail, in ſuch time as is uſual by the courſe of the court; and that although the attorney ſay he hath no warrant for appearance: nor ſhall repealing a warrant of attorney, to delay proceedings, excuſe the attorney for his not appearing, who may be compelled by the court. See Impey's Pract. K. B. 189, cites R. M. 1654. The defendant's attorney is to file his warrant the ſame term he appears, and the plaintiff the term he declares, under penalties by ſtat. 4 and 5 Ann c 16.

If an attorney appears, and judgment is entered againſt his client, the court will not ſet aſide the judgment, tho' the attorney had no warrant, if the attorney be able and reſponſible; for the judgment is regular, and the plaintiff is not to ſuffer when in no default; but if the attorney be not reſponſible or ſuſpicious, the judgment will be ſet aſide; for otherwiſe the defendant has no remedy, and any one may be undone by that means. 1 Salk. 86.

APPENDANT, appendens.] Is a thing of inheritance, belonging to another inheritance that is more worthy. As an advowſon, common, court, &c. may be appendant to a manor, a manor, common of fiſhing, appendant to a freehold: land appendant to an office: a ſeat in a church to a houſe, &c. But land is not appendant to land, both being corporeal, and one thing corporeal may not be appendant to another that is corporeal; but an incorporeal thing may be appendant to it. Co. Lit. 121: 4 Rep. 86: Danv. Abr. 500. A foreſt may be appendant to an honour; and waifs and eſtrays to a leet. Co. Lit. 367. And incorporeal things, advowſons, ways, courts, commons, and the like, are properly parcel of and appendant to corporeal things; as houſes, lands, manors, &c. Plowd. 170: 4 Rep. 38.—If one diſſeiſe me of common appendant belonging to my manor, and during the diſſeiſin I ſell the manor; by this the common is extinct for ever. 4 E. 3. 21: 11 Rep. 47. Common of eſtovers cannot be appendant to land; but to a houſe to be ſpent there. Co. Lit. 120. By the grant of a meſſuage, the orchard and garden will paſs as appendant.

Appendants are ever by preſcription, and this makes a diſtinction between appendants and appurtenances, for appurtenances may be created in ſome caſes at this day; as if a man at this day grant to a man and his heirs, common in ſuch a moor for his beaſts, levant or couching upon his manor; or if he grant to another common of eſtovers or turbary in fee-ſimple, to be burnt or ſpent within his manor; by theſe grants, theſe commons are appurtenant to the manor, and ſhall paſs by the grant thereof; in the civil law it is called *adjunctum. APPORTIONMENT, apportionamentum.] Is a dividing of a rent, &c. into parts, according as the land out of which it iſſues is divided among two or more. If a ſtranger recovers part of the land, a leſſee ſhall pay, having regard to that recovered, and what remains in his hands. Where the leſſor recovers part of the land or enters for a forfeiture into part thereof, the rent ſhall be apportioned. Co. Lit. 148. If a man leaſes three acres, rendring rent, and afterwards grants away one acre, the rent ſhall be apportioned. Co. Lit. 144. Leſſee for years leaſes for years, rendring rent, and after deviſes this rent to three perſons, this rent may be apportioned. Danv. Abr. 505. If a leſſee for life or years under rent, ſurrenders part of the land, the rent ſhall be apportioned: but where the grantee of a rent-charge purchaſes part of the land, there all is extinct at law. Moor 231. But he ſhall have relief in equity. Fonblanque's Treatiſe of Equity i. 379. A rent-charge, iſſuing out of land, may not be apportioned: nor ſhall things entire, as if one holds lands by ſervice to pay yearly to the lord, at ſuch a feaſt, a horſe, &c. Co. Lit. 149. But if part of the land, out of which a rent-charge iſſues, deſcends to the grantee of the rent, this ſhall be apportioned. Danv. 507.

A grantee of rent releaſes part of the rent to the grantor, this doth not extinguiſh the reſidue, but it ſhall be apportioned: for here the grantee dealeth not with the land, only the rent. Co. Lit. 148. On partition of lands out of which a rent is iſſuing, the rent ſhall be apportioned. Danv. Abr. 507. And where lands held by leaſe rendring rent are extended upon elegit, one moiety of the rent ſhall be apportioned to the leſſor. Ibid. 509. If part of lands leaſed is ſurrounded by freſh water, there ſhall be no apportionment of rent; but if it be ſurrounded with the ſea, there ſhall be an apportionment of the rent. Dyer 56.

The ſtat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 15, has in certain caſes altered the law as to the apportioning of rents, in point of time; it being thereby enacted, "That if any tenant for life ſhall happen to die before, or on the day on which any rent was reſerved or made payable upon any demiſe or leaſe of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, which determined on the death of any ſuch tenant for life, that the executors or adminiſtrators of ſuch tenant for life, ſhall and may, in an action on the caſe, recover, of and from ſuch under-tenant or under-tenants of ſuch lands, tenements, and hereditaments, if ſuch tenant for life die on the day on which the ſame was made payable, the whole, or if before ſuch day, then a proportion of ſuch rent, according to the time ſuch tenant for life lived, of the laſt year, or quarter of a year, or other time in which the ſaid rent was growing due as aforeſaid, making all juſt allowances, or a proportionable part thereof reſpectively."

Before this ſtatute, the rent, by the death of a tenant for life, was loſt; for the law would not ſuffer his repreſentative to bring an action for the uſe and occupation, much leſs if there was a leaſe, and the remainder-man had no right, becauſe the rent was not due in his time; nor could equity relieve againſt this hardſhip by apportioning the rent. 1 P. Wms. 392. The legiſlature having, however, by the above ſtatute, interpoſed in favour of tenants for life, its proviſions have, by an equitable conſtruction, been extended to tenants in tail. Amb. Rep. 198: 2 Bro. C. Rep. 659.

But though the executor of tenant for life is now intitled to an apportionment of the rent, yet the dividends of money directed to be laid out in lands, and in the mean-time to be inveſted in government ſecurities, and the intereſt and dividends to be applied, as the rents and profits would in caſe it were laid out in land, were held not to be apportionable, though tenant for life died in the middle of the half year. 3 Atk. 502: Amb. Rep. 279: 2 Vez. 672: and the authority of the caſe on the will of Lord C. J. Holt, 3 Vin. Abr. 18. pl. 3. was denied. But where the money is laid out in mortgage till a purchaſe could be made, the intereſt is apportionable, 2 P. Wms. 170. This diſtinction, however, may be referred to intereſt on a mortgage being in fact due from day to day, and so not properly an apportionment: whereas the dividends accruing from the publick funds are made payable on certain days, and therefore not apportionable; and upon the principle of this distinction the Master of the Rolls decreed an apportionment of maintenance-money, it being for the daily subsistence of the infant. 2 P. Wms. 501. See also Mr. Cox's note (1). And the principle extending to a separate maintenance for a feme covert, such apportionment has, in such case, been allowed at law. 2 Black. Rep. 1016. 2. Whether equity would not apportion dividends of money in the funds, directed to be applied for the maintenance of an infant, or secured by the husband as a separate provision for his wife, as it would be difficult for them to find credit for necessaries, if the payment depended on their living to the end of a quarter? That equity will not in general apportion dividends, see 3 Bro. Ch. Rep. 99.

As to apportionment of fines paid on renewal of leases by tenant for life, see 1 Bro. Ch. Rep. 440: 2 Bro. Ch. Rep. 243. and the cases there referred to.

In what cases eviction of part of the land is a ground for apportionment, see Co. Litt. 148. See Fonblanque's Treat. of Equity 376.

A man purchases part of the land where he hath common appendant, the common shall be apportioned: of common appurtenant it is otherwise, and if by the act of the party, the common is extinct. 8 Rep. 79. Common appendant and appurtenant may be apportioned on alienation of part of the land to which it is appendant or appurtenant. Wood's Inst. 199. If where a person has common of pasture sans number, part of the land descends to him, this being intire and uncertain cannot be apportioned: but if it had been common certain, it should have been apportioned. Co. Lit. 149.

APPORTUM, from the Fr. [apport.] Signifies properly the revenue or profit which a thing brings in to the owner: and it was commonly used for a corody or pension. It hath also been applied to an augmentation given to an abbot out of the profits of a manor for his better support.

APPRENTICE, apprenticius, [Fr. apprenti, from apprendre to learn.] A young person bound by indentures to a tradesman or artificer, who upon certain covenants is to teach him his mystery or trade.

It will be proper under this head to consider.

I. Who may be bound apprentices, and in what manner; and who are compellable to receive them.

II. How they are to be provided for and governed during their apprenticeship, and in what manner they are to be assigned, &c.

III. What trades may not be exercised without having served an apprenticeship.

IV. For what offences they are punishable, and how.

Of apprentices acquiring settlement, see tit. Settlement.

[For more full matter relative to apprentices, particularly parish apprentices, see Mr. Const's edition of Bott's Poor Laws.]

I. It seems clearly agreed, that by the common law infants, or persons under the age of twenty-one years, cannot bind themselves apprentices, in such a manner as to intitle their masters to an action of covenant, or other action against them for departing from their service, or other breaches of their indentures; which makes it necessary, according to the usual practice, to get some of their friends to be bound for the faithful discharge of their offices, according to the terms agreed on. 11 Co. 89 b. 2 Inst. 379, 580: 3 Leon. 63: 7 Mod. 15. And notwithstanding stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. enacts, that although persons bound apprentices shall be within age at the time of making their indentures, they shall be bound to serve for the years in their indentures contained, as if they were at full age at the time of making of them; it hath been held, that although an infant may voluntarily bind himself an apprentice, and, if he continue an apprentice for seven years, he may have the benefit to use his trade; yet neither at the common law, nor by any words of the above mentioned statute, can a covenant or obligation of an infant, for his apprenticeship, bind him; but if he misbehave himself, the master may correct him in his service, or complain to a justice of peace, to have him punished according to the statute: but no remedy lieth against an infant upon such covenant. Cro. Car. 179: Cro. Jac. 194. S. P.

But if any one entices an apprentice from his master's service, or harbours him after notice, the master may maintain a special action on the case, against the person so doing. Vide 1 Salk. 380.

By the custom of London, an infant unmarried, and above the age of fourteen, may bind himself apprentice to a freeman of London, by indenture with proper covenants; which covenants, by the custom of London, shall be as binding as if he were of full age. Moor 134: 2 Bulst. 192: 2 Rol. Rep. 305: Palm. 361: 1 Mod. 271: 2 Keb. 687. But a waterman's apprentice is not, within the custom of London, to bind himself being under twenty-one. 6 Mod. 69.

A freeman's widow may take a maid apprentice for seven years, and inrol her as a youth; if she be above fourteen years old: and if an exchange woman, that hath a husband free of London, take such apprentice, she shall be bound to the husband; and may be made free, at the end of the apprenticeship, if she be then unmarried. Lex Londinen. 48.

By Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. sect. 35. The justices may compel certain persons under age to be bound as apprentices, and on refusal may commit them, &c. And by stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, and 18 Geo. 3. c. 47. churchwardens and overseers of the poor may bind out the children of the poor to be apprentices, with the consent of two justices; if boys till 21, if girls till that age or marriage. And if any person refuse to accept a poor apprentice, he shall forfeit 10*l.* Stat 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30. § 5. Also justices of peace and churchwardens, &c. may put out poor boys apprentice to the sea-service. Stat. 2 & 3 Ann. c. 6. and 4 Ann. c. 19. And by stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 3. apprentices bound out by publick charities are regulated. See title Chimney-Sweepers.

As to the manner of their being bound;

By the ſtatute 5 El. c. 4. ſect. 25, an apprentice muſt be bound by deed indented; and this muſt be complied with for all purpoſes except for the obtaining a ſettlement.

Indentures muſt alſo be inrolled in all towns corporate under ſtat. 5 Eliz. c. 5, and 5 Geo. 2. c. 46; and in London, by the cuſtom, in the chamberlain's office there.

In London, if the indentures be not inrolled before the chamberlain within a year, upon a petition to the mayor and aldermen, &c. a ſcire fac' ſhall iſſue to the maſter, to ſhew cauſe why not inrolled; and if it was through the maſter's default, the apprentice may ſue out his indentures, and be diſcharged: otherwiſe if through the fault of the apprentice, as if he would not come to preſent himſelf before the chamberlain, &c. for it cannot be inrolled, unleſs the apprentice be in court and acknowledge it. 2 Rol. Rep. 305: Palm. 361: 1 Mod. 271.

Indentures are likewiſe to be ſtamped, and are chargeable with ſeveral duties by act of parliament.

By ſtat. 8 Ann. c. 9, made perpetual by ſtat. 9 Ann. c. 21, a duty of 6*d.* in the pound under 50*l.* and 12*d.* in the pound for ſums exceeding it, given with apprentices (except poor apprentices) is granted. And if the full ſum agreed be not inſerted, or the duty not paid, indentures ſhall be void, and apprentices not capable of following trades; and the maſters are liable to 50*l.* penalty.

But there are ſeveral ſtatutes allowing further time to pay the duties and ſtamp indentures, thro' neglect omitted, &c. And acts of indemnity of this nature are uſually paſſed every two or three years.

The payment of the duties on apprentice-fees is enforced by ſeveral acts, 18 Geo. 2. c. 22; & 20 Geo. 2. c. 45; the former of which provides, that if the apprentice ſhall pay the duties, on the neglect of the maſter, he may recover back the apprentice fee; and the latter, that if no ſuit is commenced, and the maſter ſhall pay double duties within two years after the end of the apprenticeſhip, the indentures ſhall be valid, or the apprentice may pay them, and in ſuch caſe recover double the apprentice-fee, by action, from his maſter.

The ſtats. 5 Eliz. c. 4 & 5 direct who ſhall take apprentices, and direct that every cloth-worker, fuller, ſhearman, weaver, taylor, or ſhoe-maker, taking three apprentices, ſhall have one journeyman, and for every other apprentice above three, alſo one journeyman. ſ. 33.—Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 17, allows only two apprentices at a time to batters and felt-makers; (except a ſon apprentice;)—and ſtat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 5, allows only two to Norwich-weavers, who muſt then have alſo two journeymen.

As by the ſtat. of 5 Eliz. c. 4, the juſtices of the peace, have a power of impoſing an apprentice on a maſter, in conſequence thereof an indictment lies for diſobedience to their orders, either in not receiving, or receiving and after turning off, or not providing for ſuch apprentice; for tho' an act of parliament preſcribe an eaſier way of proceeding by complaint; yet that does not exclude the remedy by indictment. 6 Mod. 163: 1 Salk. 381.

II. The juſtices of peace may diſcharge an apprentice not only on the default of the maſter, but alſo on his own default; for in ſuch caſe it is but reaſonable that the contracts, which were made by their authority, ſhould be diſſolved by the ſame power. Skin. 108: 5 Mod. 139: 2 Salk. 471.

And under the ſaid ſtat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. juſtices, or the Seſſions, may hear and determine diſputes between maſters and apprentices; and the Seſſions may diſcharge the apprentice, and vacate the indentures, or correct the apprentice.

An order of juſtices on the maſter to return money is good, tho' it is not averred that he had any with the apprentice; for the order being to return money, is as neceſſary a proof of the receipt of it, as if it had been expreſsly alleged: and the court held, that the juſtices had juriſdiction to oblige the maſter to refund. Trin. 7 Geo. 2. in B. R. The King v. Amies; tho' an order of this nature has been quaſhed. Bott, (by Conſt) i. 513.

By the ſtat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 19, Any two juſtices, upon complaint of any apprentice put out by the pariſh, or with whom no more than 5*l.* was paid, of any mis-uſage, refuſal of neceſſary proviſions, cruelty, or other ill treatment by his maſter, may ſummon the maſter to appear before them; and upon proof of the complaint on oath, to their ſatisfaction, (whether the maſter be preſent or not, if ſervice of the ſummons be proved,) to diſcharge ſuch apprentice by warrant or certificate, for which no fee ſhall be paid; and on complaint of the maſter againſt any ſuch apprentice, touching any miſdemeanor, miſcarriage, or ill behaviour, the juſtices may puniſh the offender by commitment to the houſe of correction, there to be corrected and kept to hard labour, not exceeding a calendar month; or otherwiſe by diſcharging ſuch offender. Either party may appeal to the Seſſions, and the determination there is to be final. By 31 G. 2. c. 11, This act is extended to ſervants in huſbandry, though hired for leſs than a year.

By ſtat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 25, Apprentices (with whom leſs than 10*l.* premium is paid) abſenting themſelves during their apprenticeſhip, ſhall ſerve an equal time beyond their term.—In London, apprentices are all under the controul of the chamberlain, whoſe juriſdiction is ſaved in the ſeveral ſtatutes.—The ſtat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 57, makes ſome additional regulations as to the puniſhing and relieving pariſh apprentices.

With regard to the aſſigning of apprentices, it hath been held, that an apprentice is not aſſignable. He cannot be bound nor diſcharged without deed. 1 Salk. 68. pl. 7. Mich. 13 W. 3. B. R.

But though an apprentice is not aſſignable, yet ſuch aſſignment amounts to a contract between the two maſters, that the child ſhould ſerve the latter. 1 Salk. 68. pl. 7: Mich. 13 W. 3. B. R. Caſter v. Eccles Pariſh.

By the cuſtom of the city of London, alſo an apprentice may be turned over from one maſter to another; and if the maſter refuſe to make the apprentice free at the end of the term, the chamberlain may make him free: in other corporations, there muſt be a mandamus to the mayor, &c. to make him free in ſuch caſe. Danv. Abr. 421: Wood's Inſt. 51.

But it hath been held, that tho' juſtices of peace have a juriſdiction of diſcharging apprentices, and may bind them to other maſters, that they cannot turn them over; and therefore an order that an apprentice, whoſe maſter was dead, ſhould ſerve the remainder of his time with his maſter's widow's ſecond huſband, was quaſhed; becauſe the juſtices have nothing to do about turning over an apprentice: and tho' he applied to them, that could not give them a juriſdiction. Comb. 324.

It ſeems agreed, that, if a man be bound to inſtruct an apprentice in a trade for ſeven years, and the maſter dies, that the condition is diſpenſed with, being a thing perſonal; but if he be bound further, that in the mean time he will find him in meat, drink, and cloathing and other neceſſaries, here the death of the maſter doth not diſpenſe with the condition, but his executors ſhall be bound to perform it as far as they have aſſets. 1 Sid. 216: 1 Keb. 761, 820: 1 Lev. 177.

But if a perſon is bound apprentice by a juſtice of peace, and the maſter happens to die before the term expired, the juſtices have no power to oblige his executor, by their order, to receive ſuch apprentice and maintain him; for by this method the executor is deprived of the liberty of pleading plene adminiſtravit, (which he may do, in caſe covenant be brought againſt him,) and muſt maintain the apprentice, whether he hath aſſets or not. Carth. 231: 1 Salk. 66: 1 Show. 405. It is ſaid, however, that the executor or adminiſtrator may bind him to another maſter for the remaining part of his time. Burn.

But it is ſaid, that in this caſe of the maſter's dying, by the cuſtom of London the executor muſt put the apprentice to another maſter of the ſame trade. 1 Salk. 66. per Holt Ch. J.

By ſtat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 57, in caſe of the death (§ 3) or inſolvency (§ 8) of the maſter or miſtreſs of a pariſh-apprentice (with a premium not exceeding 5 l.) the juſtices, ſhall by indorſement on the indenture, direct the apprentice to ſerve another maſter, &c. and ſo toties quoties. And maſters, &c. of apprentices under ſtat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30, may with conſent of two juſtices aſſign them.

Whatever an apprentice gains is for the uſe of his maſter; and whether he was legally bound or no, is not material, if he was an apprentice de facto. Salk. 68. For inticing an apprentice to embezzle goods, indictment will lie. 1 Salk. 380. A maſter may be indicted for not providing for, or for turning away, an apprentice. If a maſter gives an apprentice licenſe to leave him it cannot afterwards be recalled. Mod. Caſ. 70. If an apprentice marries, without the maſter's privity, that will not juſtify his turning him away, but he muſt ſue his covenant. 2 Vern. 492. By the cuſtom of the city of London a freeman may turn away his apprentice for gaming. Ibid. 241. Though if a maſter turns an apprentice away on account of negligence, &c. equity may decree him to refund part of the money given with him. 1 Vern. Rep. 450. As no apprentice can be made without writing; ſo none may be diſcharged by his maſter, but by writing under his hand, and with the allowance of a juſtice of peace, by ſtatute. Dalt. 121.

III. As to the exerciſing of trades.

By the common law no man may be prohibited to work in any lawful trade, or in more trades than one, at his pleaſure. 11 Co. 53.

So that without an act of parliament no man may be reſtrained, either from working in any lawful trade; or uſing divers myſteries or trades; therefore an act of parliament made to reſtrain any perſon herein, muſt be taken ſtrictly, and not favourably as acts made in affirmance of the common law. Burn.

It is enacted by the 5 Eliz. cap. 4. ſect. 31, "That it ſhall not be lawful to any perſon or perſons, other than ſuch as now do lawfully uſe or exerciſe any art, myſtery, or manual occupation, to ſet up, occupy, uſe or exerciſe any craft, myſtery or occupation, now uſed or occupied within the realm of England or Wales, except he ſhall have been brought up therein ſeven years, at the leaſt, as an apprentice; nor to ſet any perſon on work in ſuch myſtery, art or occupation, being not a workman at this day, except he ſhall have been apprentice, as is aforeſaid; or elſe having ſerved as an apprentice, as is aforeſaid, ſhall or will become a journeyman, or hired by the year; upon pain that every perſon willingly offending, or doing the contrary, ſhall forfeit and loſe for every default forty ſhillings for every month."

It hath been ruled, that there are many trades within the general words and equity of this act, beſides thoſe which are particularly enumerated therein; yet it ſeems agreed, and hath frequently been adjudged, that in every indictment, &c. it muſt be alleged, that it was a trade at the time of making the ſtatute, for the words thereof are, any craft, myſtery or occupation, now uſed, &c. from whence it ſeems to follow, that a new manufacture, which to all other purpoſes may be called a trade, is yet not a trade within this ſtatute. 2 Salk. 611: Palm. 528: 1 Sid. 175.

Alſo it ſeems agreed, that the act only extends to ſuch trades as imply myſtery and craft, and require ſkill and experience; that therefore merchants, huſbandmen, gardeners, &c. are not within the ſtatute; and on this foundation it hath been held, that a hemp-dreſſer is not within the ſtatute, as not requiring much learning or ſkill, and being what every huſbandman doth uſe for his neceſſary occaſions. 8 Co. 130: 2 Bulſt. 190: Cro. Car. 499.

It is clearly agreed, that the following the common trade of a brewer, baker or cook, is within the ſtatute, as unſkilfulneſs herein may be very prejudicial to the lives and healths of his majeſty's ſubjects; but it is at the ſame time agreed, that the exerciſing of any of theſe trades in a man's own houſe or family, or in a private perſon's houſe, is not within the reſtraint of the ſtatute. 11 Co. 54 a: Cro. Car. 499: Hob. 183, 211: Moor 886: 8 Co. 129: Palm. 542: Lit. Rep. 251: Bridg. 141.

It hath been held, that this ſtatute doth not reſtrain a man from uſing ſeveral trades, ſo as he had been an apprentice to all; wherefore it indemnifies all petty chapmen in little towns and villages, becauſe their maſters kept the ſame mixed trades there before. Carth. 163.

A man may exerciſe as many trades as he hath worked at, or ſerved as an apprentice to, for ſeven years. 2 Wilſ. 168.

It hath been reſolved, that there is no occaſion for any actual binding, but that the following a trade for ſeven years, is a ſufficient qualification within the ſtatute. 1 Salk. 67: 2 Salk. 613.

By ſtats. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 11, and 5 Eliz. c. 4, Aliens and denizens are reſtrained to uſe any handicraft or trade therein mentioned, unleſs they have ſerved ſeven years apprenticeſhip within the realm, under the penalty of 40*s. per* month. Hutt. 132. But it hath been adjudged, that if an apprentice ſerve ſeven years beyond ſea, he ſhall be excuſed from the penalties of the ſtatute. 5 Eliz. c. 4. And ſo if he ſerves ſeven years, tho' he was never bound. 1 Salk. 76.

So it hath been held, that ſerving five years to a trade out of England and two in England, is ſufficient to ſatisfy the ſtatute; but that there muſt be a ſervice of a full time; and therefore ſerving five years in any country, where where by the law of the country more is not required, will not qualify a man to uſe the trade in England. Ca. in Law and Eq. 70.

By the ſtatute 31 Eliz. cap. 5. ſect. 7, It is enacted, "That all ſuits for uſing a trade without having been brought up in it, ſhall be ſued and proſecuted in the general quarter ſeſſions of the peace, or aſſiſes in the ſame county where the offence ſhall be committed; or otherwiſe inquired of, heard and determined in the aſſiſes, or general quarter ſeſſions of the peace in the ſame county where ſuch offence ſhall be committed, or in the leet within which it ſhall happen."

In the conſtruction of this ſtatute it hath been held, that it reſtrains not a ſuit in the king's bench or exchequer, for ſuch offence happening in the ſame county where theſe courts are ſitting; for the negative words of the ſtatute are not, that ſuch ſuits ſhall not be brought in any other court, but that they ſhall not be brought in any other county; and the prerogative of theſe high courts ſhall not be reſtrained without expreſs words. Cro. Jac. 178: Hob. 184: 1 Salk. 373.

But where the offence is in a different county, ſuch ſuits in theſe, or any other courts out of the proper county ſeem to be within the expreſs words of the ſtatute. Hob. 184, 327: Cro. Jac. 85.

Infants voluntarily binding themſelves apprentice, and continuing ſeven years, ſhall have the benefit of their trades; but a bond for their ſervice ſhall not bind them. Cro. Car. 179. See the ſeveral ſtatutes enabling ſoldiers and mariners to exerciſe trades.

IV. As to their puniſhment for particular offences, it is to be obſerved, That

At common law, a ſervant or apprentice, without any regard to age, may be guilty of felony in feloniouſly taking away the goods of their maſter, tho' they were goods under their charge, as a ſhepherd, butler, &c. and may at this day for any ſuch offence be indicted, as for felony at common law; but at common law, if a man had delivered goods to his ſervant to keep, or carry for him, and he carried them away animo furandi; this was conſidered only a breach of truſt, but not felony. 1 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 505, 666.

But now by the ſtatute of 21 H. 8. cap. 7, It is enacted, that ſervants guilty of a breach of truſt in embezzling money, goods, &c. delivered to them to the value of 40*s.* or above, are guilty of felony; with a proviſo nevertheleſs, that the act do not extend to apprentices, nor to perſons under the age of eighteen years.

By ſtat. 12 Anne ſt. 1. cap. 7, clergy is taken from perſons ſtealing in any houſe or out-houſe, to the value of 40*s.* except as to apprentices under the age of fifteen years robbing their maſters. 1 Hale's P. C. 666, 667: See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 11—16.—See tit. Servants.

APPROPRIATION, appropriatio, from the Fr. approprier.] The annexing of an eccleſiaſtical benefice to the proper and perpetual uſe of ſome religious houſe, biſhoprick, college, or ſpiritual perſon, to enjoy for ever; in the ſame way as impropriation is the annexing a benefice to the uſe of a lay perſon or corporation; that which is an appropriation in the hands of religious perſons being uſually called an impropriation in the hands of the laity. See Com. Dig. tit. Advowſon. (D. E.) It is computed that there are in England 3845 impropriations.

This contrivance ſeems to have ſprung from the policy of monaſtic orders. At the firſt eſtabliſhment of parochial clergy, the tithes of the pariſh were diſtributed in four parts—one for the biſhop; one to maintain the fabrick of the church; a third for the poor; and the 4th for the incumbent. The Sees of the biſhops becoming amply endowed, their ſhares ſunk into the others; and the monaſteries inferring that a ſmall part was enough for the officiating prieſts, appropriated as many benefices, as they could by any means obtain, to their own uſe; undertaking to keep the church in repair, and to have it conſtantly ſerved. But in order to compleat ſuch appropriation effectually, the king's licence and conſent of the biſhop muſt firſt be obtained; becauſe they might both, ſome time or other have an intereſt by lapſe in the benefice; if it were not in the hands of a corporation which never dies. The conſent of the patron is alſo neceſſarily implied, becauſe the appropriation could originally be made to none but to ſuch ſpiritual corporation as is alſo the patron of the church; the whole being indeed nothing elſe but an allowance for the patrons to retain the tithes and glebe in their own hands, without preſenting any clerk. Plowd. 496—500.

When the appropriation is thus made, the appropriators and their ſucceſſors are perpetual parſons of the church; and muſt ſue and be ſued in all matters concerning the rights of the church by the name of parſons. Hob. 307.—An appropriation cannot be granted over. Ibid.

This appropriation may be ſevered and the church become diſappropriate two ways. 1ſt. If the patron or appropriator preſent a clerk who is inſtituted and inducted to the parſonage; for ſuch incumbent is to all intents and purpoſes complete parſon; and the appropriation being once ſevered can never be reunited again, unleſs by a repetition of the ſame ſolemnities. Co. Litt. 46: 7 Rep. 13. And, when the clerk ſo preſented is diſtinct from the vicar, the rectory thus veſted in him becomes what is called a fine-cure; becauſe he has no cure of ſouls, having a vicar under him to whom that cure is committed; though this is not the only mode of creating fine-cures. See 2 Burn's Ecc. Law 347. Alſo if the corporation to which the benefice is annexed is diſſolved the parſonage becomes diſappropriate at common law. 1 Comm. 386.

In this manner may appropriations be made at this day; and thus were moſt, if not all, now exiſting, originally made. At the diſſolution of the monaſteries by ſtat. 27 H. 8. c. 28, and 31 H. 8. c. 13, the appropriations belonging to thoſe religious houſes (being more than one third of all the pariſhes in England) would at common law have been diſappropriated; had not a clauſe been inſerted in thoſe ſtatutes to give them to the king, in the ſame manner as the alien priories had before been. 2 Inſt. 584.—and from hence have ſprung all the lay impropriations or ſecular parſonages in the kingdom; they having been afterwards granted out from time to time by the crown. See 1 Comm. 384, &c.: 11 Rep. 11; Gibſ. 719.—See alſo tit. Parſon, Vicar.

APPROPRIARE COMMUNIAM, to incloſe or appropriate any parcel of land, that was before open common, and thus to diſcommon it.

APPROVE, approbare.] To augment a thing to the utmoſt: to approve land is to make the beſt benefit of it, by increaſing the rent, &c. 2 Inſt. 474.

APPROVEMENT, Is where a man hath common in the lord's waſte, and the lord makes an incloſure of part of the waſte for himſelf, leaving ſufficient common with egreſs and regreſs for the commoners. Reg. Jud. 8, 9. See tit. Common.

The word Approvement is alſo uſed for the profits of the lands themſelves. Cromp. Juriſd. 152. And the ſtatute of Merton 20 H. 3. c. 4, makes mention of land newly approved. F. N. B. 71. Approvement is alſo the ſame with improvement.

APPROVER, or PROVER, approbator.] One that confeſſing felony committed by himſelf, appealed or accuſed others to be guilty of the ſame crime. See tit. Acceſſary, II. 5. He is called approver becauſe he muſt prove what he hath alleged; and that proof was anciently by battle, or the country, at the election of him appealed: and the form of this accuſation you may find in Cromp. Juſt. 250: See alſo Bracton, lib. 3: Staunf. Pl. Cor. 52. If a perſon indicted of treaſon or felony, not diſabled to accuſe, upon his arraignment, before any plea pleaded, and before competent judges, confeſſeth the indictment, and takes an oath to reveal all treaſons and felonies that he knoweth of; and therefore prays a coroner to enter his appeal, or accuſation againſt thoſe that are partners in the crime contained in the indictment; ſuch a one is an approver. 3 Inſt. 129: H. P. C. 192.

When a perſon hath once pleaded not guilty, he cannot be an approver. 3 Inſt. 129. And perſons attainted of treaſon or felony ſhall not be approvers; their accuſation will not then be of ſuch credit as to put a man upon his trial. 2 Hawk. 205. Vide 5 H. 4. cap. 2, as to charters of pardon.

Infants under age of diſcretion may not be approvers: and it being in the diſcretion of the court to ſuffer one to be an approver, this method of late hath ſeldom been practiſed. See tit. Acceſſary II. 5; tit. Appeal; and Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 24.

APPROVERS. In old ſtatutes, bailiffs of lords in their franchiſes are called their approvers: and approvers in the marches of Wales were ſuch as had licence de vendre & acheter beaſts, &c. But by the ſtatute 2 Ed. 3. c. 12, approvers are ſuch as are ſent into counties to increaſe the farms of hundreds, &c. held by ſheriffs. Such perſons as have the letting of the king's demeſnes, in ſmall manors, are called approvers of the king (approbatores regis) ſtat. 51 H. 3. ſt. 5. And in the ſtat. 1 Ed. 3. ſt. 1. c. 8, ſheriffs are called the king's approvers.

APPRUARE, To take to his own uſe or profit. ſtat. W. 2. c. 20.

APPURTENANCES, pertinentiæ derived from the French appartenir, to belong to.] Signify things both corporeal and incorporeal appertaining to another thing as principal: as hamlets to a chief manor; and common of paſture, piſcary, &c. Alſo liberties and ſervices of tenants. Brit. cap. 39. If a man grant common of eſtovers to be burnt in his manor, theſe are appurtenant to the manor; for things appurtenant may be granted at this day. Co. Lit. 121. Common appurtenant may be to a houſe, paſture, &c. Out-houſes, yards, orchards, and gardens are appurtenant to a meſſuage; but lands cannot properly be ſaid to be appurtenant to a meſſuage. 1 Lill. Abr. 91. And one meſſuage cannot be appurtenant to another. Ibid. Lands cannot, in the true ſenſe of the words cum pertinentiis, be appurtenant to the houſe; but the word pertinens may be taken in the ſenſe of uſually letten or occupied with the houſe. Plowd. 170. See Cro. El. 704. contrà; but it ſeems now ſettled that lands will not paſs by the word appurtenances, but only ſuch things which do properly belong to the houſe. Palm. 375: Godb. 352. S. C: Cro. Car. 57: Hutt. 85. S. C: Litt. Rep. 8. S. C.

Lands, a common, &c. may be appurtenant to a houſe; though not a way. 3 Salk. 40. Grant of a manor, without the words cum pertinentiis, 'tis ſaid will paſs all things belonging to the manor. Owen's Rep. 31. Where a perſon hath a meſſuage, &c. to which eſtovers are appurtenant, and it is blown down or burnt by the act of God; if the owner re-edify it, in the ſame place and manner as before, he ſhall have the ancient appurtenances. 4 Rep. 86. A turbary may be appurtenant to a houſe; ſo a ſeat in a church, &c. but not to land; for the things muſt agree in nature and quality. 3 Salk. 40: Vide tit. Appendant, and ſee *Plo. ARCHERY, A ſervice of keeping a bow, for the uſe of the lord to defend his caſtle.—Co. Litt. ſect. 157.

ARCHDEACON, archidiaconus.] Is one that hath eccleſiaſtical dignity, and juriſdiction over the clergy and laity next after the biſhop throughout the dioceſe, or in ſome part of it only. Archdeacons had anciently a ſuperintendant power over all the parochial clergy in every deanery in their precincts; they being the chiefs of the deacons; though they have no original juriſdiction, but what they have got is from the biſhop, either by preſcription or compoſition; and Sir Simon Degg tells us, that it appears an archdeacon is a mere ſubſtitute to the biſhop; and what authority he hath is derived from him, his chief office being to viſit and inquire, and epiſcopo nunciare, &c. In ancient times archdeacons were employed in ſervile duties of collecting and diſtributing alms and offerings; but at length, by a perſonal attendance on the biſhops, and a delegation to examine and report ſome cauſes, and commiſſions to viſit the remoter parts of the dioceſes, they became, as it were, overſeers of the church; and by degrees advanced into conſiderable dignity and power.

Lanfranc,

Lanfranc, archbiſhop of Canterbury, was the firſt prelate in England who inſtituted an archdeacon in his dioceſe, which was about the year 1075. And an archdeacon is now allowed to be an ordinary, as he hath a part of the epiſcopal power lodged with him. He viſits his juriſdiction once every year: and he hath a court, where he may inflict penance, ſuſpend, or excommunicate perſons, prove wills, grant adminiſtrations, and hear cauſes eccleſiaſtical, &c. ſubject to appeal to the biſhop of the dioceſe under ſtat. 24 Hen. 8. c. 12. It is one part of the office of an archdeacon to examine candidates for holy orders, and to induct clerks within his juriſdiction, upon receipt of the biſhop's mandate. 2 Cro. 556: 1 Lev. 193: Wood's Inſt. 30.

Archdeaconries are commonly given by biſhops, who do therefore prefer to the ſame by collation: but if an archdeaconry be in the gift of a layman, the patron doth preſent to the biſhop, who inſtitutes in like manner as to another benefice; and then the dean and chapter do induct him, that is, after ſome ceremonies place him in a ſtall in the cathedral church to which he belongeth, whereby he is ſaid to have a place in the choir. Watſ. c. 15.

Archdeacons, by ſtat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. are to read the Common Prayer and declare their aſſent thereunto, as other perſons admitted to eccleſiaſtical benefices; and alſo muſt ſubſcribe the ſame before the ordinary; but they are not obliged by ſtat. 13 Eliz. c. 12, to ſubſcribe and read the thirty-nine articles; for altho' an archdeaconry be a benefice with cure, yet it is not ſuch a benefice with cure as ſeems to be intended by that ſtatute, which relates only to ſuch benefices with cure as have particular churches belonging to them. Watſ. c. 15. And they are to take the oaths at the ſeſſions, as other perſons qualifying for offices.

The judge of the archdeacon's court (where he doth preſide himſelf) is called the official. Wood's Inſt. 30.

Where the archdeacon hath a peculiar juriſdiction, he is totally exempt from the power of the biſhop, and the biſhop cannot enter there, and hold court; and in ſuch caſe, if the party who lives within the peculiar be ſued in the biſhop's court, a prohibition ſhall be granted: for the ſtatute intends that no ſuit ſhall be per ſaltum: but if the archdeacon hath not a peculiar, then the biſhop and he have a concurrent juriſdiction, and the party may commence his ſuit either in the archdeacon's court or the biſhop's, and he hath election to chooſe which he pleaſeth: and if he commence in the biſhop's court, no prohibition ſhall be granted; for if it ſhould, it would confine the biſhop's court to determine nothing but appeals, and render it incapable of having any cauſes originally commenced there. L. Raym. 123.

An archdeacon is a miniſterial officer, and cannot refuſe a churchwarden elected by the pariſh. Rex v. Martin Rice, L. Raym. 138.

ARCHES COURT, curia de arcubus.] The chief and moſt ancient conſiſtory court belonging to the archbiſhop of Canterbury for the debating of ſpiritual cauſes. It is ſo called from the church in London, commonly called St. Mary Le Bow, (de Arcubus) where it was formerly held; which church is named Bow Church from the ſteeple which is raiſed by pillars, built archwiſe, like ſo many bent bows. Cowel.

The judge of this court is ſtiled the Dean of the Arches, or Official of the Arches court: he hath extraordinary juriſdiction in all eccleſiaſtical cauſes, except what belong to the prerogative court; alſo all manner of appeals from biſhops or their chancellors or commiſſaries, deans and chapters, archdeacons, &c. firſt or laſt are directed hither: he hath ordinary juriſdiction throughout the whole province of Canterbury, in caſe of appeals; ſo that upon any appeal made, he, without any farther examination of the cauſe, ſends out his citation to the appellee, and his inhibition to the judge from whom the appeal was made. Of this ſee more 4 Inſt. 337. But he cannot cite any perſon out of the dioceſe of another, unleſs it be on appeal, &c. Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 9.

In another ſenſe the dean of the arches has a peculiar juriſdiction of thirteen pariſhes in London, called a deanery, (being exempt from the authority of the biſhop of London) of which the pariſh of Bow is the principal. The perſons concerned in this court, are the judge, advocates, regiſters, proctors, &c. And the foundation of a ſuit in theſe courts, is a citation for the defendant to appear; then the libel is exhibited, which contains the action, to which the defendant muſt anſwer; whereupon the ſuit is conteſted, proofs are produced, and the cauſe determined by the judge, upon hearing the advocates on the law and fact; when follows the ſentence or decree thereupon.

This court, as alſo the court of peculiars, the admiralty court, the prerogative court, and the court of delegates, (for the moſt part,) is now held in the hall belonging to the college of Civilians, commonly called Doctors Commons. Floy. 21.

From this court the appeal is to the king in chancery; by ſtat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19.

ARERIESMENT, Surpriſe, affrightment.—To the great arerieſment and eſtenyſement of the Common law. Rot. Parl. 21 Ed. 3.

ARIERBAN, The edict of the ancient French and German kings, &c. commanding all their tenants to come into the army: if they refuſe, then to be deprived of their eſtates.—See Spelm. in v. Aribannum, &c.

ARENTARE, To rent out, or let at a certain rent. Conſuetud. Domûs de Farendon, MS. fol. 53.

ARGENTUM ALBUM, Silver coin, or pieces of bullion that anciently paſſed for money. See Alba Firma.

ARGENTUM DEI, God's money; i. e. money given in earneſt upon the making of any bargain; hence comes arles, earneſt.

ARGIL, or ARGOIL, Clay, lime, and ſometimes gravel; alſo the lees of wine, gathered to a certain hardneſs. Law Fr. Dict.

ARGUMENTOSUS, ingenious, mentioned by our hiſtorian Neubrigenſis Lib. 1. c. 14.

ARIETUM LEVATIO, An old ſportive exerciſe, ſuppoſed to be the ſame with running at the quintain. See Stevens's Shakſpeare, Edit. 1793. vol. vi. p. 27, 175.

ARMA DARE, To dub or make a knight. Arma capere, or ſuſcipere to be made a knight. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. p. 288. Walſingham, p. 507. The word arma, in theſe places, ſignifies only a ſword; but ſometimes a knight knight was made by giving him the whole armour. Ordericus Vitalis, lib. 8. de Henrico, &c.

ARMA LIBERA, A ſword and a lance which were uſually given to a ſervant when he was made free. Leg. Will. cap. 65.

ARMA MOLUTA, Sharp weapons that cut, oppoſed to ſuch as are blunt, which only break or bruiſe. Bract. lib. 3. They are called arma emolita by Fleta, lib. 1. c. 33. par. 6.

ARMA REVERSATA, A puniſhment when a man was convicted of treaſon or felony: thus our hiſtorian Knighton, ſpeaking of Hugh Spencer, tells us, Primo veſtierunt eum uno veſtimento cum armis ſuis reverſatis. Lib. 3. p. 2546.

ARMARIA, Vide Almaria.

ARMIGER, Eſquire. A title of dignity, belonging to ſuch gentlemen as bear arms: and theſe are either by curteſy, as ſons of noblemen, eldeſt ſons of knights, &c. Or by creation, ſuch as the king's ſervants, &c. The word armiger has been alſo applied to the higher ſervants in convents. Paroch. Antiq. 576. See title, Eſquire, and Spelman in v.

ARMISCARA, Is a ſort of puniſhment decreed or impoſed on an offender by the judge. Malmſb. lib. 3. p. 97: Walſingham, p. 430. At firſt it was to carry a ſaddle at his back in token of ſubjection. Brampton ſays, that in the year 1176, the king of the Scots promiſed king Hen. 2. at York, Lanceam & ſellam ſuam ſuper altare Sancti Petri ad perpetuam hujus ſubjectionis memoriam offerre. See Spelm. in v.

ARMOUR and ARMS, In the underſtanding of law, are extended to any thing that a man wears for his defence, or takes into his hands, or uſeth in anger to ſtrike or caſt at another. Cromp. Juſt. 65. Arms are alſo what we call in Latin inſignia, enſigns of honour; as to the original of which, it was to diſtinguiſh commanders in war; for the ancient defenſive armour being a coat of mail, &c. which covered the perſons, they could not be diſtinguiſhed, and therefore a certain badge was painted on their ſhields, which was called arms; but not made hereditary in families till the time of king Rich. 1. on his expedition to regain Jeruſalem from the Turks: and beſides ſhields with arms, they had a ſilk coat drawn over their armour, and afterwards a ſtiff coat, on which their arms were painted all over, now the herald's coat of arms. Sid. 352.

By ſtat. 13 R. 2. ſt. 1. c. 2, The conſtable (Lord High Conſtable) ſhall have cognizance of contracts touching deeds of arms done out of the realm; but it ſeems he cannot puniſh for painting coats of arms, &c. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 4. § 5—8. and this Dict. tit. Conſtable.

By the common law it is an offence for perſons to go or ride armed with dangerous and unuſual weapons: but gentlemen may wear common armour according to their quality, &c. 3 Inſt. 160.

By ſtat. 7 E. 1. ſt. 1, The king may prohibit force of arms, and puniſh offenders according to law; and herein every ſubject is bound to be aiding. And by ſtat. 2 E. 3. c. 3, enforced by ſtats. 7 R. 2. c. 13, and 20 R. 2. c. 1, None ſhall come with force and arms before the king's juſtices, nor ride nor go armed in affray of the peace, on pain to forfeit their armour, and ſuffer impriſonment, &c.

Under theſe ſtatutes none may wear (unuſual) armour publicly upon pretence of protecting his perſon; but a man may aſſemble his neighbours to protect his houſe without tranſgreſſing the act. 1 Hawk. P. C. 267. But no wearing of arms is within the ſtat. unleſs they are ſuch as terrify, therefore the weapons of faſhion, as ſwords, &c. or privy coats of mail may be worn. Id. ib. And one may arm to ſuppreſs riots or dangerous inſurrections. Id. 268.

By the Bill of Rights, 1 W. & M. ſt. 2. c. 2, It is declared that "the ſubjects which are Proteſtants may have arms for their defence ſuitable to their conditions as allowed by law." See ſtat. 33 H. 8. c. 6. and tit. Game and Conſtable III. 2.

Embezzling the king's armour felony; ſtat. 31 Eliz. c. 4. Armour may be exported, unleſs prohibited by proclamation; ſtat. 12 Car. 2. c. 4. Importing arms or ammunition prohibited; 1 Jac. 2. c. 8.

ARNALIA, Arable grounds. This word is mentioned in Domeſday, tit. Eſſex.

ARNALDIA, Arnoldia; A diſeaſe that makes the hair fall off like the alopecia, or like a diſtemper in foxes. Rog. Hoveden, p. 693.

AROMATARIUS, Latin.] A word often uſed for a grocer, but held not good in law proceedings. 1 Vent. 142.

ARPEN, or Arpent. An acre or furlong of ground: and according to the old French account in Domeſday-book, 100 perches make an arpent. The moſt ordinary acre, called l'arpent de France, is one hundred perches ſquare: but ſome account it but half an acre.

ARPENTATOR, A meaſurer or ſurveyor of land.

ARQUEBUSS, Fr. Arquebuſe.] A ſhort hand-gun, a caliver or piſtol; mentioned in ſome of our antient ſtatutes. Law Fr. Dict.

ARRACK, A duty and exciſe is payable for arrack imported from the Eaſt Indies; See tit. Navigation-Acts.

ARRAIATIO PEDITUM, Is uſed in Pat. 1. Ed. 2. for the arraying of foot ſoldiers.

ARRAIERS, Arraiatores.] Such officers as had the care of the ſoldiers' armour, and whoſe buſineſs it was to ſee them duly accoutred. In ſeveral reigns commiſſioners have been appointed for this purpoſe.

ARRAIGN, from the Fr. arranger, To ſet a thing in order; hath the ſame ſignification in law: but the true derivation is from the French arraiſonner, i. e. ad rationem ponere.] To call a man to anſwer in form of law. A priſoner is arraigned, when he is indicted and brought to trial: and to arraign a writ of aſſiſe, is to cauſe the demandant to be called to make the plaint, in ſuch manner as the tenant may be obliged to anſwer. Co. Lit. 262. But no man is properly arraigned but at the ſuit of the king, upon an indictment found againſt him, or other record wherewith he is to be charged: and this arraignment is to take care that the priſoner do appear to be tried, and hold up his hand at the bar, for the certainty of the perſon, and plead a ſufficient plea to the indictment. Co. Lit. 262, 263.

The priſoner is to hold up his hand only in treaſon and felony; but this is merely a ceremony: if he owns that he is the perſon, it is ſufficient without it; and then upon his arraignment his fetters are to be taken off; and he is to be treated with all the humanity imaginable. 2 Inſt. 315: 3 Inſt. 35.—A peer need not hold up his hand. 4 St. Trials 211, 508.

Priſoners are now generally tried in their irons, becauſe taking them off is uſually attended with great pain and trouble.

An attainder of high treaſon has been reverſed for the omiſſion of an arraignment. 2 Hawk. P. C. 438, which ſee for further matter as to Arraignment.

If in action of ſlander for calling one thief, the defendant juſtifies that the plaintiff ſtole goods, and iſſue is thereon taken; if it be found for the defendant in B. R. and for felony in the ſame county where the court ſits, or before juſtices of aſſiſe, &c. he ſhall be forthwith arraigned upon this verdict of twelve men, as on an indictment. 2 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 151.

The pleas upon arraignment are either the general iſſue, Not guilty; plea in abatement, or in bar; and the priſoner may demur to the indictment: he may alſo confeſs the fact, but then the court has nothing more to do than to proceed to judgment againſt him.

For the ſolemnity of the arraignment and trial of a priſoner, See Dalt. chap. 185. p. 515.

ARRAY, arraya ſive arraiamentum.] An old French word, ſignifying the ranking or ſetting forth of a jury of men impanelled upon a cauſe. And when we ſay to array a panel, that is, to ſet forth the men impanelled one by another. F. N. B. 157. To challenge the array of the panel, is at once to except againſt all the perſons arrayed or impanelled, in reſpect of partiality, &c. Co. Lit. 156. If the ſheriff be of affinity to either of the parties; or if any one or more of the jurors are returned at the nomination of either party; or for any other partiality; the array ſhall be quaſhed. The word array alſo relates, in a particular manner, to military order, as to conduct perſons armed, &c. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 3.

ARREARAGES, arreragia, from the French arriere, retro, behind.] Money unpaid at the due time, as rent behind; the remainder due on an account; or a ſum of money remaining in the hands of an accountant.

ARRENATUS, arraigned, accuſed. Rot. Parl. 21 Ed. 1.

ARRENTATION, from the Spaniſh arrendar, ad certum redditum dimittere.] The licenſing the owner of lands in the foreſt, to incloſe them with a low hedge and ſmall ditch, according to the aſſiſe of the foreſt, under a yearly rent: ſaving the arrentations is ſaving a power to give ſuch licences. Ordin. Foreſtæ, 34 Ed. 1. ſt. 5.

ARREST, arreſtum from the Fr. arrêter, to ſtop, or ſtay.] A reſtraint of a man's perſon, obliging him to be obedient to the law: and it is defined to be the execution of the command of ſome court of record or officer of juſtice. An arreſt is the beginning of impriſonment, where a man is firſt taken, and reſtrained of his liberty, by power or colour of a lawful warrant: alſo it ſignifies the decree of a court, by which a perſon is arreſted. 2 Shep. Abr. 299.

ARRESTS are either in civil or criminal caſes.

An arreſt in a civil cauſe is defined to be the apprehending or reſtraining one's perſon by proceſs in execution of the command of ſome court, or officer of juſtice. Wood's Inſt. 575.

There are ſeveral ſtatutes, ſecuring the liberty of the ſubject, againſt unlawful arreſts and ſuits. See Magna Charta, c. 29: 3 Ed. 1. c. 35: and See tit. Barrator.

Some perſons are alſo privileged from arreſts, viz. peers of the realm, members of parliament, peereſſes by birth (1 Inſt. 131: 2 Inſt. 50: 4 Bacon's Ab. 228;) peers of Scotland, (2 Str. 990;) a peereſs by marriage, (Co. Lit. 16: 6 Co. 53: Dyer 79;) members of convocation actually attending thereon, (St. 8 H. 6. c. 1:) biſhops, ambaſſadors, or the domeſtic ſervant of an ambaſſador, really & bonâ fide in that capacity. (St. 7 Ann. c. 12: 3 Wilſ. 33: 2 Str. 797: 2 Ld. Raym. 1524: 4 Burr. 2016, 17: 3 Burr. 1676:) the king's ſervants, (1 Raym. 152: 8 Mod. 12:) marſhall, warden of the Fleet, (1 Vent. 65:) clerks, attornies, and all other perſons attending the courts of juſtice, (4 Inſt. 72: 2 Inſt. 551: 12 Mod. 163:) clergymen performing divine ſervice, and not merely ſtaying in the church with a fraudulent deſign, (Stats. 50 E. 3. c. 5: 1 R. 2. c. 16:) ſuitors, (Bro. Privil. 57:) witneſſes ſubpœna'd, and other perſons neceſſarily attending any court of record upon buſineſs; (Sir T. Raym. 101: 1 Vent. 11: Rules in Chan. 217: 3 Inſt. 141.) A bankrupt coming to ſurrender, or within forty-two days after his ſurrender (St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. § 5: and See Cowp. 156:) witneſſes properly ſummoned before commiſſioners of bankrupt, or other commiſſioners under the great ſeal, (1 Atk. 54:) but not creditors coming to prove their debts (4 Term Rep. 377:) heirs, executors, or adminiſtrators. R. M. 1654: except on perſonal contracts by themſelves (1 T. Rep. 716:) or in caſes of devaſtavit (1 Salk. 98:) ſailor or voluntier ſoldier: (unleſs the debt is twenty pounds.) Stat. 1 Geo. 2. c. 14. § 15: 31 Geo. 3. c. 13. § 65. See Barnes 114: 1 Str. 2, 7: 1 Black. Rep. 29, 30:—Officers of courts are allowed theſe privileges only where they ſue or are ſued in their own right; not if as executors or adminiſtrators, nor in joint actions. Hob. 177: Dyer 24. p. 150: 2 Sid. 157: Latch. 199: Godb. 10: 2 Rol. Abr. 274.

But this privilege does not extend to Iriſh or other foreign peers, (2 Inſt. 48: 3 Inſt. 70.) or to peereſſes by marriage, if they afterwards intermarry with commoners. Co. Lit. 16: 2 Inſt. 50: 7 Co. 15, 16.

And though the ſervants of peers neceſſarily employed about their perſons and eſtates, could not formerly be arreſted; (2 Str. 1065: 1 Wilſ. 278:) yet this privilege ſeems to have been taken away by the ſt. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50. § 2.

Members of corporations aggregate, and hundredors, not being liable to a capias, cannot be arreſted in their corporate capacity, or on the ſtatutes of hue and cry, &c. Bro. tit. Corp. 43: 3 Keb. 126, 7. Corporations muſt be made to appear by diſtringas. Finch. 353: 3 Salk. 46.

In an action againſt huſband and wife, the huſband alone is liable to be arreſted, and ſhall not be diſcharged until he have put in bail for himſelf and wife; 1 Vent. 49: 1 Mod. 8; and if ſhe is arreſted, ſhe ſhall be diſcharged on common bail. 1 Term Rep. 486: 1 Salk. 115. See tit. Bail.

A clerk of the court ought not to be arreſted for any thing which is not criminal, becauſe he is ſuppoſed to be always preſent in court to anſwer the plaintiff. 1 Lill. 94. Arreſts are not to be made within the liberty of the king's palace: nor may the king's ſervants be arreſted in any place, without notice firſt given to the lord chamberlain, that he remove them, or make them pay their debts. Vide tit. Ambaſſador.

There is this difference between arreſts in civil and criminal caſes; that none ſhall be arreſted for debt, treſpaſs, &c. or other cauſe of action, but by virtue of a precept or commandment out of ſome court: but for treaſon, felony, or or breach of the peace, any man may arreſt without warrant or precept. Terms de Ley 54.

The abuſes of gaolers and ſheriff's officers towards their priſoners are well reſtrained and guarded againſt by Stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 28; the chief proviſions of which are, that an officer ſhall not carry his priſoner to any tavern, &c. without his conſent, nor charge him for any liquor but ſuch as he ſhall freely call for, nor demand for caption or attendance any other than his legal fee, nor exact any gratuity-money, nor carry his priſoner to gaol within twenty-four hours after his arreſt, unleſs the priſoner refuſes to go to ſome ſafe houſe (except his own) of his own chooſing. Nor ſhall any officer take for the diet, lodging or expences of his priſoner more than ſhall be allowed by an order of ſeſſions. Bailiffs to ſhew a copy of the act to priſoners, and to permit peruſal thereof; and the priſoner to ſend for his own victuals, bedding, &c.

Sheriffs and their officers to take no reward for doing their office but according to law. Stats. 3 E. 1. c. 26: 20 E. 3. c. 6: 1 H. 4. c. 11: Co. Lit. 368: 23 H. 6. c. 9. Plowd. 465.

The fees now allowed by the Maſter for arreſts on meſne proceſs in town are 10*s.* 6*d.* in the country 1*l.* 1*s.* and 1*s.* per mile. Impey's Sheriff 122.

By Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 7. No writ, proceſs, warrant, &c. (except in caſes of treaſon, felony, or for breach of the peace) ſhall be ſerved on a Sunday; on pain that the perſon ſerving them ſhall be liable to the ſuit of the party grieved, and anſwer damages, as if the ſame had been done without writ: an action of falſe impriſonment lies for arreſt on a Sunday, and the arreſt is void. 1 Salk. 78. A defendant was arreſted on a Sunday by a writ out of the Marſhalſea; and the court of B. R. being moved to diſcharge him, it was denied; and he was directed to bring action of falſe impriſonment. 5 Mod. Rep. 95. The defendant being taken upon a Sunday, without any warrant, and locked up all that day; on Monday morning a writ was got againſt him, by which he was arreſted; it was ruled, that he might have an action of falſe impriſonment, and that an attachment ſhould go againſt thoſe who took him on the Sunday. Mod. Caſ. 96. Attachments have been often granted againſt bailiffs for making arreſts on Sunday: but affidavit is uſually made, that the party might be taken upon another day. 1 Mod. 56. A perſon may be retaken on a Sunday, where arreſted the day before, &c. Mod. Caſ. 231. And a man may be taken on a Sunday on an eſcape-warrant: or on freſh purſuit when taken the day before. 2 Ld. Raym. 1028: 2 Salk. 626. when he goes at large out of the rules of the King's Bench or Fleet priſon, &c. Stat. 5 Ann. c. 9. Alſo Bail may take the principal on a Sunday, and confine him till Monday, and then render him. 1 Atk. 239: 6 Mod. 251. A party cannot be arreſted on a Sunday on an attachment for non-performance of an award, it being only in the nature of a civil execution. 1 T. Rep. 266, denies 1 Atk. 581.

By Stats. 12 Geo. 1. c. 29: and 5 Geo. 2. c. 27, both made perpetual by Stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 3, No perſon can be arreſted, or held to bail, on a writ ſued out of the ſuperiour courts, unleſs the cauſe of action be 10*l.* or upwards.

And now by Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 70. No perſon can be arreſted or held to bail upon proceſs out of any inferior court for leſs than 10*l.* but proceedings are to be had in inferior courts according to the directions of 12 Geo. 1. c. 29, extended by 19 Geo. 3. to debts under 10*l.*

By § 3. of 19 Geo. 3. c. 70, ſo much of all acts of parliament for the recovery of debts within certain diſtricts, as gives power to arreſt debtors for leſs than 10*l.* is repealed. And by § 4, when final judgment is obtained in ſuch ſuits, and defendant cannot be found within the juriſdiction, the ſuperior courts may iſſue execution.

By Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 9, No perſon is to be held to bail in Wales on proceſs out of the courts at Weſtminſter for leſs than 20*l.*

In trover the defendant may be held to bail of courſe. 2 Str. 1122: Cowp. 529. For this is more an action of property than a tort. 1 Wilſ. 23.

In an action of debt on a judgment, whether after verdict or by default, defendant cannot be arreſted if he was previouſly held to bail in the original action. Say. 160.

It is now ſettled both in K. B. and C. P. that a defendant may be arreſted in an action on a judgment for 10*l.* for damages and coſts though the original debt alone were under 10*l.* 4 Term Rep. 570. on the authority of 2 Black. Rep. 1274; (though it had been otherwiſe ruled in K. B. 2 Burr. 1389: 4 Burr. 2117: 5 Burr. 2660: Cowp. 128.)

Bail cannot be had in an action on the ſecond judgment, where bail has been given on the firſt. 2 Str. 782.

In what caſes ſpecial bail ſhall be required, See tit. Bail.

Formerly one great obſtruction to public juſtice, civil as well as criminal, was the number of privileged places, ſuch as the Mint, Savoy, &c. under pretence of their being ancient palaces; but theſe ſanctuaries for iniquity are now aboliſhed, and the oppoſing any proceſs therein is made highly penal by Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. § 15: 9 Geo. 1. c. 28. § 1: and 11 Geo. 1. c. 22; by which perſons oppoſing the execution of proceſs, or abuſing the officer, if he receives any bodily hurt, are declared guilty of felony.

When a perſon is apprehended for debt, &c. he is ſaid to be arreſted: and writs expreſs arreſt by two ſeveral words capias and attachias, to take and catch hold of a man; for an officer muſt actually lay hold of a perſon, beſides ſaying he arreſts him, or it will be no lawful arreſt. 1 Lill. Abr. 96. If a bailiff be kept off from making an arreſt, he ſhall have an action of aſſault: and where the perſon arreſted makes reſiſtance, or aſſaults the bailiff, he may juſtify beating of him. If a bailiff touches a man, which is an arreſt, and he makes his eſcape, it is a reſcous, and attachment may be had againſt him. 1 Salk. 79. If a bailiff lays hold of one by the hand, (whom he had a warrant to arreſt) as he holds it out at the window, this is ſuch a taking of him, that the bailiff may juſtify the breaking open of the houſe to carry him away. 1 Vent. 306.

When a perſon has committed treaſon or felony, &c. doors may be broke open to arreſt the offender; but not in civil caſes, except it be in purſuit of one arreſted; or where a houſe is recovered by real action, or in ejectment, to deliver poſſeſſion to the perſon recovering. Plowd. 5 Rep. 91. Action of treſpaſs, &c. lies for breaking open a houſe to make arreſt in a civil action. Mod. Caſ. 105. But if it appears a bailiff found an outer door, door, &c. open, he may open the inner door to make an arreſt. Comb. 327.

In the caſe of Lee v. General Gaſel, the court of King's Bench determined, that the chamber door of a lodger, is not to be conſidered as his outer door; but that the ſtreet door being open, the officers had a right to force open the chamber door, the defendant being in the room, and refuſing to open it. Cowp. 1.

Alſo it is enacted by the 3 & 4 Jac. 1. par. 35, That upon any lawful writ, warrant or proceſs awarded to any ſheriff or other officer, for the taking of any popiſh recuſant, ſtanding excommunicated for ſuch recuſancy, it ſhall be lawful, if need be, to break any houſe. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 14. § 10.

But it hath been reſolved, that where juſtices of peace are, by virtue of a ſtatute, authoriſed to require perſons to come before them to take certain oaths preſcribed by ſuch ſtatute, the officer cannot lawfully break open the doors. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 14. § 11.

An arreſt in the night, as well as the day, is lawful. 9 Rep. 66. And every one is bound by the common law to aſſiſt not only the ſheriff in the execution of writs, and making arreſts, &c. but alſo his bailiff that hath his warrant to do it. 2 Inſt. 193. A bailiff upon an arreſt ought to ſhew at whoſe ſuit, out of what court the writ iſſues, and for what cauſe, &c. when the party arreſted ſubmits himſelf to the arreſt: a bailiff, ſworn and known, need not ſhew his warrant, though the party demands it; nor is any other ſpecial bailiff bound to ſhew his warrant, unleſs it be demanded. 9 Rep. 68, 69: Cro. Jac. 485. If an action is entered in one of the compters of London, a city ſerjeant may arreſt the party without the ſheriff's warrant. 1 Lill. Abr. 94. And by the cuſtom of London, a debtor may be arreſted before the money is due, to make him find ſureties: but not by the common law. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 258.

If a wrong perſon is arreſted; or one for felony, where no felony is done, &c. it will be falſe impriſonment.

By Glynn Ch. J. Mich. 1658. If one be arreſted by the ſheriff of the county, within a liberty, without a non omittas, yet the arreſt is good; for the ſheriff is ſheriff of the whole county, but the bailiff of the liberty may have his action againſt the ſheriff, for entering of his liberty. But upon a quo minus, a ſheriff may enter any liberty, and execute it impunè. Pract. Reg. 72.

With regard to arreſts in criminal caſes, it hath already been obſerved, that for treaſon, felony, or breach of the peace, any perſon may arreſt without warrant or precept. But the king cannot command any one by word of mouth to be arreſted; for he muſt do it by writ, or order of his courts, according to law: nor may the king arreſt any man for ſuſpicion of treaſon, or felony, as his ſubjects may; becauſe, if he doth wrong, the party cannot have an action againſt him. 2 Inſt. 186.

Arreſts by private perſons are in ſome caſes commanded. Perſons preſent at the committing of a felony muſt uſe their endeavours to apprehend the offender, under penalty of fine and impriſonment. 3 Inſt. 117: 4 Inſt. 177.

And for this cauſe, by the common law, if any homicide be committed, or dangerous wound given, whether with, or without malice, or even by miſadventure or ſelf-defence, in any town, or in the lanes or fields thereof, in the day time, and the offender eſcape, the town ſhall be amerced, and if out of a town, the hundred ſhall be amerced. 3 Inſt. 53.

And ſince the ſtatute of Wincheſter, c. 5, which ordains that walled towns ſhall be kept ſhut from ſun-ſetting to ſun-riſing; if the fact happen in any ſuch town by night, or by day, and the offender eſcape, the town ſhall be amerced. 3 Inſt. 53.

And, as private perſons are bound to apprehend all thoſe who ſhall be guilty of any of the crimes above mentioned in their view, ſo alſo are they, with the utmoſt diligence, to purſue and endeavour to take all thoſe who ſhall be guilty thereof, out of their view, upon a hue and cry levied againſt them. 3 Inſt. 117.

Every private perſon is bound to aſſiſt an officer, requiring him to apprehend a felon.

As to the arreſting of offenders by private perſons of their own authority, permitted by law for the prevention of treaſon or felony only intended to be done; any one may lay hold of a perſon, whom he ſees upon the point of committing treaſon, or felony, or doing an act which would manifeſtly endanger the life of another, and detain him, till it may be reaſonably preſumed he has changed his purpoſe. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 12. § 19.

As to arreſts for inferior offences, no private perſon can arreſt another for a bare breach of the peace after it is over; but it is held, that a private man may arreſt a night-walker, or a common cheat going about with falſe dice, and actually caught playing with them, in order to have him before a juſtice of peace; and the arreſt of any other offenders, by private perſons, for offences in like manner ſcandalous, and prejudicial to the public, ſeems juſtifiable. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 12. § 20.

With regard to arreſts by public officers, they may be made either with or without proceſs.

Arreſts without proceſs may be made by watchmen, conſtables, bailiffs of towns, or juſtices of peace. For the power of watchmen, See Stat. Wincheſter, c. 4. It has been holden, that this ſtatute was made in affirmance of the common law, and that every private perſon may by the common law arreſt any ſuſpicious night-walker, and detain him till he give a good account of himſelf. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 13. § 6.

As to arreſts by conſtables, See tit. Conſtable III. 1, 2.

'Tis the better opinion at this day, that any conſtable, or even a private perſon, to whom a warrant ſhall be directed from a juſtice of peace, to arreſt a particular perſon for felony, or any other miſdemeanor within his juriſdiction, may lawfully execute it, whether the perſon mentioned in it be, in truth, guilty or innocent; and whether he were before indicted of the ſame offence or not, and whether any felony were, in truth, committed or not: for, however the juſtice himſelf may be puniſhable for granting ſuch a warrant, without ſufficient grounds, it is reaſonable that he alone be anſwerable for it, and not the officer, who is not to examine or diſpute the reaſonableneſs of his proceeding. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 13. § 11.

The doctrine of general warrants (i. e. to apprehend all the authors and publiſhers of libels, or generally all perſons ſuſpected of any particular crime, without mentioning the name of the perſon accuſed) ſeem exploded as illegal. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 13. § 10; and the note there as to Wilkes's caſe. But it is to be obſerved that the term general warrant uſed by Hawkins in that place, does not ſeem to mean a warrant, without the name of the party being ſpecified, but one which does not contain the ſpecific charge againſt the party. See the caſe of Money v. Leach, and alſo 4 Comm. 291.

The great point gained by theſe determinations, was the reſcuing perſons from the malice or ignorance of the inferior miniſters of juſtice.

With regard to arreſts by bailiffs of towns, their power is founded on the above-mentioned ſtatute of Wincheſter, c. 4. And as to arreſts by juſtices of peace, arreſts by their command are either by word of mouth or by warrant.

A juſtice of peace may, by word of mouth, authoriſe any one to arreſt another, who ſhall be guilty of an actual breach of the peace in his preſence, or ſhall be engaged in a riot in his abſence. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 13. § 14: Dalt. c. 117.

And a juſtice of peace may lawfully grant a warrant for apprehending, or arreſting perſons charged with treaſon, felony, premunire, or any other offence againſt the peace; and generally, wherever a ſtatute gives one or more juſtices of peace a juriſdiction over any offence, any one juſtice of peace may, by his warrant, cauſe ſuch offenders to be arreſted and brought before him. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 13. § 15.

But it is ſaid, that anciently no one juſtice of peace could legally make out a warrant for an offence againſt a penal ſtatute, or other miſdemeanor; cognizable only by a ſeſſions of two or more juſtices; for that one ſingle juſtice of peace hath no juriſdiction of ſuch offence, and regularly thoſe only who have juriſdiction over a cauſe can award proceſs concerning it. Yet the long, conſtant, univerſal, and uncontrolled practice of juſtices of peace ſeems to have altered the law in this particular, and to have given them an authority, in relation to ſuch arreſts, not now to be diſputed. Id. § 16.

A juſtice of peace may juſtify the granting a warrant for the arreſt of any perſon upon ſtrong grounds of ſuſpicion of felony, or miſdemeanor, but he ſeems to be puniſhable, as well at the ſuit of the king, as of the party grieved, if he grant any ſuch warrant groundleſsly, or maliciouſly, without ſuch a probable cauſe as might induce a candid and impartial man to ſuſpect the party to be guilty. Id. § 18.

Every warrant ought to be under the hand and ſeal of the juſtice of peace, and ſpecify the day it was made out: if it be for the peace or good behaviour, it is adviſable to ſet forth the ſpecial cauſe upon which it is granted, but if it be for treaſon or felony, or other offences of an enormous nature, it is ſaid that it is not neceſſary to ſet forth the ſpecial cauſe, and it ſeems to be rather diſcretionary than neceſſary to ſet it forth in any caſe. Id. § 21—25.

The warrant may be directed to the ſheriff, bailiff, conſtable, or to any indifferent perſon by name, who is no officer; for, though the juſtice may authoriſe any one to be his officer, whom he pleaſes to make ſuch, yet it is moſt adviſable to direct to the conſtable of the precinct wherein it is to be executed; for that no other conſtable, and à fortiori no private perſon, is compellable to ſerve it. Id. § 27.

A bailiff or conſtable, if they be ſworn, and commonly known to be officers, and act within their own precincts, need not ſhew their warrant to the party, notwithſtanding he demand the ſight of it; but that theſe and all other perſons whatſoever making an arreſt, ought to acquaint the party with the ſubſtance of their warrant; and all private perſons to whom ſuch warrants ſhall be directed, and even officers, if they be not ſworn and commonly known, and even theſe, if they act out of their own precincts, muſt ſhew their warrants, if demanded. Id. § 28.

And therefore Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 20, provides, that in all caſes where a juſtice is empowered by ſtatute to iſſue a warrant of diſtreſs for levying a penalty, the officer executing ſuch warrant, if required ſhall ſhew the ſame to the defendant, and ſuffer a copy to be taken.

The ſheriff, having ſuch warrant directed to him, may authoriſe others to execute it; but every other perſon, to whom it is directed, muſt perſonally execute it; yet, it ſeems, that any one may lawfully aſſiſt him. Id. § 29.

After preſentment or indictment found in felony, &c. the firſt proceſs is a capias, to arreſt and impriſon the offender: and if the offender cannot be taken, an exigent is awarded in order to outlawry. H. P. C. 209. For further matter See tit. Debtors.

ARREST OF JUDGMENT. To move in arreſt of judgment, is to ſhew cauſe why judgment ſhould be ſtaid, notwithſtanding verdict given. Judgment may be arreſted for good cauſe in criminal caſes, as well as civil; if the indictment be inſufficient, &c. 3 Inſt. 210.

Arreſts of judgment ariſe from intrinſic cauſes appearing upon the face of the record; for a judgment can never be arreſted but for that which appears on the face of the record itſelf. Ld. Raym. 232. Motions in arreſt of judgment may be made at any time before judgment ſigned. Dougl. 747: Str. 845. Sunday is no day, 4 Burr. 21, 30. nor a dies non. It is a rule to ſhew cauſe, therefore needs no notice to be given, nor yet an affidavit to ground it on, as it ariſes out of the record; and after judgment upon demurrer, there can be no ſuch motion made, as the court will not ſuffer any one to tell them that the judgment they gave on mature deliberation is wrong. It is otherwiſe indeed in the caſe of judgment by default, for that is not given in ſo ſolemn a manner; or if the fault ariſes on the writ of inquiry or verdict, for then the party could not alledge it before. Str. 425.

It may be made after motion for a new trial diſcharged, Dougl. 716: 1 Burr. 334. and if arreſted, each party pays his own coſts, Cowp. 407.

After verdict a man may alledge any thing in the record, in arreſt of judgment, which may be aſſigned for error after judgment. 2 Roll. Abr. 716. And judgment after verdict, ſhall not be arreſted for an objection that would have been good on demurrer. 3 Burr. 1725. For further matter See tit. Amendment, Judgment; and for cauſes of arreſt of judgment, See 3 Comm. 393, 4.

ARREST OF ENQUEST is to plead in arreſt of taking the enqueſt, upon the former iſſue, and to ſhew cauſe why an enqueſt ſhould not be taken. Bro. tit. Replead.

ARRESTANDIS BONIS NE DISSIPENTUR, A writ which lay for a man whoſe cattle or goods are taken by another, who during the conteſt doth or is like to make them away, not being of ability to render ſatisfaction. Reg. Orig. 126.

ARRESTANDO IPSUM QUI PECUNIAM RECEPIT, &c. Is a writ that lay for apprehending a perſon who hath taken the king's preſt-money to ſerve in wars, and hides himſelf when he ſhould go. Reg. Orig. 24.

ARRESTO

ARRESTO FACTO SUPER BONIS MERCATORUM ALIENIGENORUM, A writ that lay for a denizen againſt the goods of aliens found within this kingdom, in recompence of goods taken from him in a foreign country, after denial of reſtitution. Reg. Orig. 129. This the ancient civilians called clarigatio; but by the moderns it is termed repriſalia.

ARRETTED, arrectatus, quaſi, ad rectum vocatus.] 'Is where a man is convened before a judge, and charged with a crime. Staundf. Pl. Co. 45. And it is ſometimes uſed for imputed or laid unto; as no folly may be arretted to one under age. Littleton, cap. Remitter. Chaucer uſeth the verb arretteth, that is, lays blame, as it is interpreted. Bracton ſays, ad rectum habere malefactorem, i. e. to have the malefactor forth-coming, ſo as he may be charged, and put to his trial. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 10. And in another place, rectatus de morte hominis, charged with the death of a man.

ARROWS. By an ancient ſtatute, all heads for arrows ſhall be well brazed, and hardened at the point with ſteel, on pain of forfeiture and impriſonment: and to be marked with the mark of the maker. Stat. 7 H. 4. c. 7.

ARRURA,—In the black book of Hereford, De Operationibus Arruræ, ſignifies days' work of ploughing; for antiently cuſtomary tenants were bound to plough certain days for their lord. Una arrura, one day's work at the plough: and in Wiltſhire, earing is a day's ploughing. Paroch. Antiq. p. 41. See Aratrum terræ.

ARSON, from ardeo, to burn.] Houſe-burning, which is felony at common law. 3 Inſt. 66. It muſt be maliciouſly, voluntarily, and an actual burning: not putting fire only into a houſe, or any part of it, without burning; but if part of the houſe is burnt, or if the fire doth burn, and then goeth out of itſelf, it is felony. 2 Inſt. 188: H. P. C. 85. and it muſt be the houſe of another, for if a man burns his own houſe only, though with intention to burn others, it was not at common law felony, but a great miſdemeanor, puniſhable with fine, pillory, &c. But a pauper may be guilty of this offence by burning the public workhouſe. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 39 § 3. and in note.

If a houſe is fired by negligence or miſchance, it cannot amount to arſon. 3 Inſt. 67: H. P. C. 85. Where one burns the houſe of another, if it be not wilful and malicious, it is not felony, but only treſpaſs: therefore if A. ſhoot unlawfully in a gun at the cattle or poultry of B. and by means thereof ſets another's houſe on fire, this is not arſon; for though the act he was doing was unlawful, yet he had no intent to burn the houſe. 1 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 569. By Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 13, to burn corn in the four Northern counties, is felony without clergy. And the Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 7, makes it felony to ſet barns, ſtables, ſtacks of corn, hay, &c. on fire in the night-time, or any out-houſes, or buildings: but the offender may be tranſported for ſeven years.

By 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, (made perpetual by 31 Geo. 2. c. 42,) Setting fire to any houſe, barn, or out-houſe, or to any hovel, cock, mow, or ſtack of corn, ſtraw, or wood, or to reſcue any offender is made felony without benefit of clergy.—Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 58. App. 4. § 3.

As to other malicious burnings; by Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 6. § 4, to burn any cart loaded with fuel, incurs 10*l.* penalty and treble damages. By Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23, to burn the covert for red or black game, one month's impriſonment; and by Stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 19, to burn the covert for deer or game, a penalty between 40*s.* and 5*l.* By Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 48, to burn any wood or coppice is felony. By Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 32, to ſet fire to a coal mine, felony without clergy. By Stat. 9 Geo. 3. c. 29, to burn any mill, felony without clergy, if proſecuted within eighteen months.

The offence of Arſon was denied the benefit of clergy, by Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 1; but that Stat. was repealed by Stat. 1 E. 6. c. 12; and arſon was afterwards held to be ouſted of clergy, with reſpect to the principal offender, only by inference from the Stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 4; which expreſsly denied it to the acceſſory before the fact: though now it it expreſsly denied to the principal in all caſes within the Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. 4 Comm. 223. which See and Leach's Hawk. P. C. vol. i. and ii.

ARSER IN LE MAIN, burning in the hand, is the puniſhment of criminals that have the benefit of clergy. Terms de Ley.

ARSURA, The trial of money by fire, after it was coined. In Domeſday we read, reddit 50*l. ad* arſuram, which is meant of lawful and approved money, whoſe allay was tried by fire.

ART AND PART, Is a term uſed in Scotland and the North of England; when one charged with a crime, in committing the ſame, was both a contriver of, and acted his part in it.

ARTHEL, A Britiſh word, and more truly written arddelw, or according to the South Welſh ardhel, ſignifying to avouch; as if a man were taken with ſtolen goods in his hand, he was to be allowed a lawful arthel (or vouchee) to clear him of the felony: it was part of the law of Howel Dha; according to whoſe laws every tenant holding of any other than of the prince or the lord of the fee, paid a fine pro defenſione regiâ, which was called arian ardhel. The privilege of arthel occaſioning a delay and exemption of criminals from juſtice, proviſion was made againſt it by Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 6.—Blount.

ARTICULI CLERI, (articles of the clergy.) Are ſtatutes containing certain articles relating to the church and clergy, and cauſes eccleſiaſtical. 9 E. 2. Stat. 1.

ARTICULUS, An article, or complaint, exhibited by way of libel, in a court Chriſtian. Sometimes the religious bound themſelves to obey the ordinary, without ſuch formal proceſs. Paroch. Antiq. p. 344.

ARTIFICERS, See tit. Manufactures and Manufacturers.

A ſtranger, artificer in London, &c. ſhall not keep above two ſtrangers ſervants; but he may have as many Engliſh ſervants and apprentices as he can get, Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 16. Artificers in wool, iron, ſteel, braſs, or other metal, &c. perſons contracting with them to go out of this kingdom into a foreign country, ſhall be fined not exceeding 100*l.* and be impriſoned three months: and Engliſh artificers going abroad, not returning in ſix months after warning given by our ambaſſadors, &c. ſhall be diſabled to hold lands by deſcent or deviſe, be incapable to take any legacy, &c. and deemed aliens. Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 27.

By the Stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 13, Perſons convicted of ſeducing artificers in the manufactures of Great Britain or Ireland, out of the dominions of the crown of Great Britain, to forfeit 500*l.* and to be impriſoned for twelve months; for the ſecond offence to forfeit 1000*l.* and be impriſoned two years. See alſo Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 71; 15 Geo. 3. c. 5; and 21 Geo. 3. c. 37; by which heavy penalties are inflicted on maſters of ſhips aſſiſting in ſuch ſeduction.

ARUNDEL. See Honour.

ARUNDINETUM, A ground or place where reeds grow. 1 Inſt 4. And it is mentioned in the book of Domeſday.

ARVIL-SUPPER, A feaſt or entertainment made at funerals, in the North part of England: arvil bread is the bread delivered to the poor at funeral ſolemnities. Cowel. And arvil, arval, arfal, are uſed for the burial or funeral rights.

ASCESTERIUM, Archiſterium, arciſterium, aciſterium, alcyſterium, architrium, from the Greek.] A monaſtery. It often occurs in old hiſtories. Du Cange ASSACH, or Aſſath, Was a cuſtom of purgation uſed of old in Wales, by which the party accuſed did clear himſelf by the oaths of 300 men. It is mentioned in ancient MSS. and prevailed till the time of Hen. 5, when it was abrogated. 1 H. 5. c. 6: Spelm. and See ſtat. 27 H. 8. c. 7.

ASSART, Aſſartum from the Fr. Aſſartir, To make plain.] Aſſartum eſt quod redactum eſt ad culturam. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 21. And the word aſſartum is by Spelman derived from exertum, to pull up by the roots: for ſometimes it is wrote eſſart. Others derive it from exaratum or exartum, which ſignifies to plow or cut up. Manwood, in his Foreſt Laws, ſays it is an offence committed in the foreſt, by pulling up the woods by the roots, that are thickets and coverts for the deer, and making the ground plain as arable land; this is eſteemed the greateſt treſpaſs that can be done in the foreſt to vert or veniſon, as it contains in it waſte and more; for whereas waſte of the foreſt is but the felling down the coverts which may grow up again, aſſart is a plucking them up by the roots, and utterly deſtroying them, ſo that they can never afterwards ſpring up again. See the Red book in the Exchequer. But this is no offence if done with licence; and a man may, by writ of ad quod damnum, ſue out a licence to aſſart ground in the foreſt, and make it ſeveral for tillage. Reg. Orig 257. Hence are lands called aſſarted: and formerly aſſart rents were paid to the crown for foreſt lands aſſarted See ſtat. 22 Car. 2 c. 6. Aſſartments ſeem to be uſed in the ſame ſenſe in Rot. Parl. Of aſſarts you may read more in Cromp. Juriſ p. 203. And Charta de Foreſta, anno 9 H. 3. c. 4; Manwood, part 1. p 171.

ASSAULT, Aſſultus, from the Fr. Aſſayler.] An attempt or offer, with force and violence, to do a corporal hurt to another; as by ſtriking at him, with or without a weapon. But no words whatſoever, be they ever ſo provoking, can amount to an aſſault, notwithſtanding the many ancient opinions to the contrary. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 62. § 1: See alſo Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. c. 3: 22 Lib. Aſſ. pl. 60.

Aſſault does not always neceſſarily imply a hitting, or blow; becauſe, in treſpaſs for aſſault and battery, a man may be found guilty of the aſſault, and excuſed of the battery. 1 Hawk. P C 263. But every battery includes an aſſault; therefore if the aſſault be ill laid, and the battery good, it is ſufficient. Id. ib.

If a perſon in anger lift up or ſtretch forth his arm, and offer to ſtrike another; or menace any one with any ſtaff or weapon, it is treſpaſs and aſſault in law: and if a man threaten to beat another perſon, or lie in wait to do it, if the other is hindered in his buſineſs, and receives loſs thereby, action lies for the injury. Lamb. lib. 1: 22 Aſſ. pl. 60.

Any injury whatſoever, be it never ſo ſmall, being actually done to the perſon of a man, in an angry or revengeful, or rude or inſolent manner, as by ſpitting in his face, or any way touching him in anger, or violently joſtling him, are batteries in the eye of the law. 1 Hawk. P. C. 263, 4.—from the Fr. Battre to beat or ſtrike.

In many caſes a man may juſtify an aſſault; thus, to lay hands gently upon another, not in anger, is no foundation of an action of treſpaſs and aſſault: the defendant may juſtify molliter manus impoſuit in defence of his perſon, or goods; or of his wife, father, mother, or maſter; or for the maintenance of juſtice. Bract. 9 E. 4: 35 H. 6. c. 51.

A ſervant, &c. may juſtify an aſſault in defence of a maſter, &c. but not è contra. Ld. Raym.

If an officer, having a warrant againſt one who will not ſuffer himſelf to be arreſted, beat or wound him in the attempt to take him, he may juſtify it; ſo if a parent in a reaſonable manner chaſtiſe his child, or maſter his ſervant, being actually in his ſervice at that time, or a ſchoolmaſter his ſcholar, or a gaoler his priſoner, or even a huſband his wife (for reaſonable and proper cauſe,) or if one confine a friend who is mad, and bind and beat him, &c. in ſuch manner as is proper in his circumſtances; or if a man force a ſword from one who offers to kill another; or if a man gently lays his hand on another and thereby ſtay him from inciting a dog againſt a third perſon; if I beat one (without wounding him, or throwing at him a dangerous weapon) who wrongfully endeavours with violence to diſpoſſeſs me of my lands or goods, or the goods of another delivered to me to be kept for him, and who will not deſiſt upon my laying my hand gently on him and diſturbing him; or if a man beat, wound or maim one who makes an aſſault upon his perſon, or that of his wife, parent, child, or maſter; or if a man fight with, or beat one who attempts to kill any ſtranger; if the beating was actually neceſſary, to obtain the good end propoſed, or rendered neceſſary in ſelf-defence; in all theſe caſes it ſeems the party may juſtify the aſſault and battery. See 1 Hawk. P. C. 259. and the ſeveral authorities there cited.

And on an indictment the party may plead Not guilty, and give the ſpecial matter in evidence; but in an action he muſt plead it ſpecially. 6 Mod. 172. Suppoſing it matter of juſtification.—If of excuſe, it is ſaid it may be given in evidence, on the general iſſue. Bull. N. P. 17.

Alſo in caſes of aſſault, for the aſſault of the wife, child, or ſervant, the huſband, father, and maſter, may have action of treſpaſs, per quod ſervitium amiſit. In caſe of a wife, huſband and wife ſhould join in the action for the perſonal abuſe of the wife, (the huſband not having ſuſtained any damage). If the huſband has been damnified, as by tearing her cloaths, &c. or loſs of her aſſiſtance, &c. in his domeſtic concerns, for that peculiar injury to himſelf he alone muſt ſue.

As to parent and child, maſter and ſervant, unleſs injury accrues to the parent or maſter, the child or ſervant may ſue.

For an aſſault, the wrong-doer is ſubject both to an action at the ſuit of the party, wherein he ſhall render damages; and alſo to an indictment at the ſuit of the king.

king, wherein he ſhall be fined according to the heinouſneſs of the offence. 1 Hawk. 263.

But if both are depending at one time, unleſs in very particular caſes, the attorney general, will, on application, grant a nolle proſequi, if the party will not diſcontinue his action.

Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11, enacts, That where there are ſeveral defendants to any action of aſſault, &c. and one or more acquitted, the perſon ſo acquitted ſhall recover coſts of ſuit; unleſs the judge certify that there was a reaſonable cauſe for making ſuch perſon a defendant or defendants to ſuch action.

If any perſon aſſault a privy councillor, in the execution of his office, it is felony. ſtat. 9 Ann. c. 16.

Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. ſect. 11 If any perſon ſhall wilfully and maliciouſly aſſault any perſon in the public ſtreets or highways, with an intent to tear, ſpoil, cut, burn or deface, and ſhall tear, ſpoil, cut, burn, or deface the garments, &c. of ſuch perſon, it is felony; and the offender may be tranſported for ſeven years.

Aſſaulting perſons in a forcible manner, with intent to commit robbery, is made felony and tranſportation, by ſtat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 21. And aſſaulting or threatening a counſellor at law, or attorney employed in a cauſe againſt a man; or a juror giving verdict againſt him; his adverſary for ſuing him, &c. is puniſhable on an indictment, by fine and impriſonment, for the contempt. 1 Hawk. 58. There are other aſſaults puniſhable in a preciſe peculiar manner viz.—ſtat. 5 Hen. 4. c. 6, & 11 Hen. 6. c. 11, render aſſaults on members of parliament more than uſually penal, upon non-ſurrender on proclamation. Stat 9 E. 2. ſtat. 1. c. 3, gives a double criminal proceſs againſt thoſe who aſſault clergymen, indictment for the temporal offence, and proceſs in the eccleſiaſtical court, for the ſpiritual one. By ſtat. 5 Eliz. c. 4, ſervants aſſaulting their maſter, miſtreſs, or overſeer may be impriſoned twelve months on conviction before two juſtices: By ſtat. 9 Ann. c. 14. § 8, to aſſault, beat or challenge another on account of money won by gaming incurs forfeiture of goods and two years' impriſonment. By ſtat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, to aſſault another by wilfully ſhooting at him is felony without clergy. By ſtat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 34, aſſaulting a maſter woolcomber or weaver, &c. for not complying with the demands of workmen, is felony and tranſportation for ſeven years.

ASSAY of weights and meaſures, (from the Fr eſſay, i.e. a proof or trial). Is the examination of weights and meaſures, by clerks of markets, &c. Reg. Orig. 279.

ASSAYER OF THE KING, Aſſajator regis.] An officer of the king's mint, for the trial of ſilver; he is indifferently appointed between the maſter of the mint and the merchants that bring ſilver thither for exchange. See tit. Gold and Silver; and Money.

ASSAYERS, Of plate made by goldſmiths, &c. See tit. Goldſmiths.

ASSAYSIARE, To aſſociate, to take as fellow judges; a word uſed in old charters. Cart. Abbat. Glaſt. MS. § 57.

ASSECURARE, Adjecurare.] To make ſecure by pledges, or any ſolemn interpoſition of faith. In the charter of peace between Hen 2. and his ſons, this word is mentioned. Hoveden, anno 1174.

ASSEMBLY UNLAWFUL, See tit. Riot.

ASSENT, or conſent. To a legacy of goods, the aſſent of the executor is neceſſary. See tits. Executor and Legacy.

Aſſent of Dean and Chapter in making leaſes of church lands; vide Leaſes. Of the major part of corporations, in making by-laws, Vide Bye Laws. Of aſſents to agreements. See tit. Agreement.—See alſo other proper titles.

ASSESSORS, Thoſe that aſſeſs public taxes. There are aſſeſſments of pariſh duties, for raiſing money for the poor, repairing of highways, &c. made and levied by rate on the inhabitants; as well as aſſeſſments of public taxes, &c. See Aſſeſſors.

ASSETS, Fr. Aſſez, i. e. Satis.] Goods enough to diſcharge that burden which is caſt upon the executor or heir, in ſatisfying the debts and legacies of the teſtator or anceſtor. Bro. tit. Aſſets.

Aſſets are real, or perſonal; where a man hath lands in fee-ſimple, and dies ſeiſed thereof, the lands which come to his heir are aſſets real: and where he dies poſſeſſed of any perſonal eſtate, the goods which come to the executors are aſſets perſonal.

Aſſets are alſo divided into aſſets per deſcent, and aſſets inter maines. Aſſets by deſcent, is where a perſon is bound in an obligation, and dies ſeiſed of lands which deſcend to the heir, the land ſhall be aſſets, and the heir ſhall be charged as far as the land to him deſcended will extend.

Aſſets inter maines, is when a man indebted makes executors, and leaves them ſufficient to pay his debts and legacies; or where ſome commodity or profit ariſeth to them in right of the teſtator, which are called aſſets in their hands. Terms de Ley 56, 77.

As to aſſets by deſcent it is to be obſerved, that by the common law, if an heir had ſold or aliened the lands which were aſſets, before the obligation of his anceſtor was put in ſuit, he was to be diſcharged, and the debt was loſt: but by ſtatute, 3 W. & M. c. 14, made perpetual by 6 Will. 3. c. 14, the heir is made liable to the value of the land by him ſold, in action of debt brought againſt him by the obligee, who ſhall recover to the value of the ſaid land, as if the debt was the proper debt of the heir; but the land which is ſold or aliened bonâ fide before the action brought, ſhall not be liable to execution upon a judgment recovered againſt the heir in any ſuch action.

And by ſtat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. § 10, Lands of ceſtuy que truſt ſhall be aſſets by deſcent; and by the ſame ſtat § 12, Eſtates pur autre vie ſhall be aſſets in the hands of the heir, if it come to him by reaſon of a ſpecial occupancy; and where there is no ſpecial occupant, it ſhall go to the executors or adminiſtrators of the party that had the eſtate thereof by virtue of the grant, and ſhall be aſſets in their hands.

Where a man binds himſelf and his heirs in a bond; and dies leaving iſſue two ſons, if the eldeſt ſon enters on the lands by deſcent as heir to the father, and die without iſſue; and then the youngeſt ſon enters, he ſhall be charged with aſſets as heir to the father. Dyer 368. Lands which come to the heir by purchaſe ſhall not be aſſets; for it is only lands by deſcent that are aſſets. 1 Danv. Abr. 577.

A reverſion in fee, depending upon an eſtate tail, is not aſſets; becauſe it lies in the will of the tenant in tail to dock and bar it by fine, &c. 6 Rep. 56. But after the tail is ſpent, it is aſſets. 3 Mod. 257. And a reverſion on an eſtate for life or years ſhall be aſſets. A reverſion expectant upon the determination of an eſtate for life is aſſets, and ought to be pleaded ſpecially by the heir; and the plaintiff in ſuch caſe may take judgment of it cum acciderit. Dyer 371: Carthew 129. An advowſon is aſſets; but not a preſentation to a church actually void, which may not be ſold. Co. Lit. 374.

And lands by deſcent in ancient demeſne will be aſſets in debt. But a copyhold eſtate deſcending to an heir is not aſſets; nor is any right to an eſtate aſſets, without poſſeſſion, &c. till recovered and reduced into poſſeſſion. Danv. 577.

An annuity is no aſſets, for it is only a choſe en action. Br. Aſſets per Deſcent, pl. 26.

Equity of redemption of an eſtate mortgaged, and a term for years to attend the inheritance are aſſets. 3 Leon. 32. An heir may plead riens per deſcent, but the plaintiff may reply that he had lands from his anceſtor; and ſpecial matter may be given in evidence, &c. 5 Rep. 60. A ſpecial judgment againſt aſſets ſhall only have relation to, and bind the land from the time of filing the original writ or bill. Carth. 245: See tit. Heir.—and Com. Dig. tit. Aſſets.

Aſſets alſo are either legal or equitable; of the former ſome have been ſpecified above; for the latter ſee Com. Dig. tit. Chancery, (2 G. 1.) &c.

As to aſſets inter maines. See tit. Executor, V. 5.

ASSIDERE, or Aſſedare, To tax equally; to aſſeſs. Mat. Pariſ. annō 1232. Sometimes it hath been uſed to aſſign an annual rent, to be paid out of a particular farm, &c

To ASSIGN, aſſignare.] Hath various ſignifications; one general, as to ſet over a right to another, or appoint a deputy, &c. another ſpecial, to ſet forth or point at; as to aſſign error, aſſign falſe judgment, waſte, &c. And in aſſigning of error, it muſt be ſhewn where the error is committed; in falſe judgment, wherein the judgment is unjuſt; in waſte, wherein eſpecially the waſte is done. F. N. B. 19, 112: Reg. Orig. 72. Alſo juſtices are ſaid to be aſſigned to take aſſiſes. ſtat. 11 H. 6. c. 2.

ASSIGNS or ASSIGNEES, aſſignatus. Lat.] Thoſe who are aſſigned, deputed or appointed by the act of the party, or the operation of law, to do any act, or enjoy any benefit on their own accounts and riſks—an aſſignee being one that poſſeſſes a thing in his own right; but a deputy, he that acts in right of another. Perkins. Aſſignee by deed is when a leſſee of a term, &c. ſells and aſſigns the ſame to another, that other is his aſſignee by deed: aſſignee in law is he whom the law ſo makes, without any appointment of the perſon; as an executor is aſſignee in law to the teſtator. Dyer 6. But if there be aſſignee in deed, aſſignee in law is not allowed: if one covenant to do a thing to J. S. or his aſſigns by a day, and before that day he dies; if before the day he name any aſſignee, the thing muſt be done to his aſſignee named; otherwiſe to his executor or adminiſtrator, who is aſſignee in law. 27 H. 8. 2.

He is called aſſignee, who hath the whole eſtate of the aſſignor: and an aſſignee, though not named in a condition, may pay the money to ſave the land; but he ſhall not receive any money, unleſs he be named, Co. Lit. 215. Aſſignees may take advantage of forfeitures on conditions, when they are incident to the reverſion, as for rent, &c. 1 And 82. What covenants affect or benefit aſſignees ſee tit. Covenant, Condition.

Under the word aſſigns, ſhall be included the aſſignee of an aſſignee in perpetuum, the heir of an aſſignee, or the aſſignee of an heir. Co. Lit. 384 b: Plowd. 173: 5 Co. 16, 17 b. So the aſſignee of an aſſignee's executor. 2 Show. 57. And a deviſee. 2 Show. 39: Godb. 161. But if an obligation be, to pay ſuch perſons as he ſhall name by his will, or writing; there muſt be an expreſs nomination, and his executor ſhall not take as aſſignee. Mo. 855.—An adminiſtrator is an aſſignee. Moor 44.

ASSIGNMENT, Aſſignatio.] The ſetting over or transferring the intereſt a man hath in any thing to another.

Herein ſhall be conſidered principally what things are aſſignable.—As to what covenants, &c. affect or benefit aſſignees, See tit. Condition, Covenant.

Aſſignments may be made of lands in fee, for life, or years; of an annuity, rent-charge, judgment, ſtatute, &c. but as to lands they are uſually of leaſes and eſtates for years, &c. And by the ſtatute of frauds, ſtat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, no eſtate of freehold, or term for years, ſhall be aſſigned but by deed in writing ſigned by the parties; except by operation of law. A poſſibility, right of entry, title for condition broken, a truſt, or thing in action, cannot be granted or aſſigned over. Co. Litt. 214.

But though a bond, being a choſe in action, cannot be aſſigned over ſo as to enable the aſſignee to ſue in his own name, yet he has by the aſſignment ſuch a title to the paper and wax, that he may keep or cancel it. Co. Lit. 232. And in the aſſignment of bonds, &c. is always contained a power of attorney to receive and ſue in the aſſignor's name.

Alſo in equity a bond is aſſignable for a valuable conſideration paid, and the aſſignee alone becomes intitled to the money; ſo that if the obligor, after notice of the aſſignment, pays the money to the obligee, he will be compelled to pay it over again. 2 Vern. 595: In the caſe of a policy of inſurance the court of K. B. will ſo far take notice of an aſſignment, as to permit an action to be brought in the name of the aſſignor. 1 Term Rep. 26. And the aſſignor who has become a bankrupt may ſue the debtor for the benefit of the aſſignee. Id. 619.

As to bare rights and poſſibilities ſee Com. Dig. tit. Aſſignment (C).

Tho' a poſſibility or contingent intereſt, be not grantable at law, yet (whether in real or perſonal eſtate) it is transmiſſible and deviſeable; Cro. Jac. 509: 1 P. Wms. 566: Forreſter 117: 8 Vin. Abr. 112. pl. 38: 2 Atk. 616: 1 Vez. 236: Pollexfen 44: 3 Term Rep. 88: 2 Burr. 1131: 1 Bro. Rep. 181: Fearne's Con. Rem. 444.—The caſes in the books, (1 C. R. 18: 1 Ch. Caſ. 8: Pollex. 31, 44: 1 P. Wms. 572: 3 P. Wms. 132: 2 Freem. 250: 9 Mod. 101: 2 P. Wms. 608,) abundantly prove, that intereſts in contingency, reſpecting perſonal eſtates are aſſignable in equity; but it may be material to obſerve, that in the caſe of aſſignments of ſuch intereſts, Equity requires the aſſignee to ſhew that he gave a valuable conſideration for the intereſt aſſigned; and therefore will not interpoſe to aſſiſt volunteers. But courts of equity will eſtabliſh aſſignments of contingent intereſts againſt executors, adminiſtrators, or heirs at law, even where ſuch aſſignments are made, not for conſideration of money, but in conſideration of love and affection, and advancement of children. 1 Vez. 409. ſee Fonblanque's Treatiſe of Equity i. 203.

An aſſignee muſt take the ſecurity aſſigned, ſubject to the ſame equity that it was in the hands of the obligee; as if on a marriage treaty the intended husband enters into a marriage-brokage bond, which is afterwards assigned to creditors, yet it still remains liable to the same equity, and is not to be carried into execution against the obligor. 2 Vern. 428.

Where there is a bond for the performance of the covenants in a lease, if the lessee assigns the lease, he may likewise assign the bond; but this must be before any of the covenants are broken; but if any of the covenants are broken, and the lessee afterwards assigns the lease and bond, and the assignee puts the bond in suit, for those breaches, it is maintenance. Godb. 81.

'Tis enacted by the statute 7 Jac. 1. c. 15, That a debtor to the king shall not assign any debts to him, but such as did originally grow due to the debtor; afterwards there was a debtor to the husband in 2000*l.* by a statute; the husband made his wife executrix, and died; she married again one G. D. who was indebted to the king, and then the husband and wife assigned this statute to the king in satisfaction of the debt due to him; adjudged, that the assignment was good, for tho' the second husband had the statute in right of his wife, and by consequence the debt was not originally due to him; yet because he might release the statute, it is the same thing as if it had been originally taken in his name. 2 Cro. 324.

An office of trust is not grantable or assignable to another; and therefore it was adjudged, that the office of a filazer, which was an office of trust could not be assigned; nor could it be extended upon a statute. Dyer 7.

A bare power is not assignable, but where it is coupled with an interest it may be assigned: 2 Jon. 206: 2 Mod. 317.

Arrears of rent, &c. is a chose in action, and not assignable. See Skin. 6.

It hath been doubted if a lease for years, before entry and possession, be assignable. See Show. 291.

A lessee out of possession cannot make any assignment of his term off the land; but must first enter, and recontinue his possession; or seal and deliver the deed upon the land, which puts the assignee into actual possession. Dalis. 81. But it has been adjudged that where lessee for years of the crown is put out of his estate by a stranger, yet he may assign the term, though he is not in possession; because the reversion being in the crown, he cannot lawfully be put out of possession, but at his own will. Cro. Eliz. 275.

If lessee for years assign all his term in his lease to another, he cannot reserve a right in the assignment; for he hath no interest in the thing by reason of which the rent reserved should be paid; and where there is no reversion there can be no distress: but debt may lie upon it, as on a contract. 1 Lill. Abr. 99. Where the executor of a lessee assigns the term, debt will not lie against him for rent incurred after the assignment; because there is neither privity of contract, nor estate between the lessor and executor: but if the lessee himself assigns his lease, the privity of contract remains between him and the lessor, although the privity of estate is gone by the assignment, and he shall be chargeable during his life; but after his death, the privity of contract is likewise determined. 3 Rep. 14, 24. Although a lessee make an assignment over of his term, yet debt lies against him by the lessor or his heir; (not having accepted rent from the assignee;) but where a lessee assigns his term, and the lessor his reversion, the privity is determined, and debt doth not lie for the reversioner against the first lessee. Moor 472. Vide Barker v. Dormer. 1 Sho. 191.

A man made a lease, provided that the lessee or his assigns should not alien the premisses without licence of the lessor, &c. who after gave licence to the lessee to alien; by this the lessee or his assigns may alien in infinitum. 4 Rep. 119.

Adjudged, that some things in respect of their nature are not assignable, or to be granted over; as for instance, if the donee in tail holdeth of the donor by fealty, he cannot assign it over to another, because fealty is incident to, and inseparable from, the reversion; so if the founder of a college grant his foundation, though it be to the king, the grant is void, because it is inseparable from his blood. 11 Rep. 66. b, in Magdalen College's case.

Several things are assignable by acts of parliament, which seem not assignable in their own nature; as promissory notes and bills of exchange by stat. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9; bail-bonds by the sheriff, by 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16; a judge's certificate for taking and prosecuting a felon to conviction, by 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23; a bankrupt's effects by the several statutes of bankruptcy.

A lease was made for years of lands, excepting the woods; the lessor grants the trees to the lessee, and he assigns the land over to another; the trees do not pass by this assignment to the assignee. Goldsb. 188.

Where tenant for years assigns his estate, no consideration is necessary; for the tenant being subject to payment of rent, &c. is sufficient to vest an estate in the assignees: in other cases some consideration must be paid. 1 Mod. 263. The words required in assignments are, grant, assign and set over; which may amount to a grant, feoffment, lease, release, confirmation, &c. 1 Inst. 301. In these deeds the assignor is to covenant to save harmless from former grants, &c. That he is owner of the land, and hath power to assign; that the assignee shall quietly enjoy, and to make further assurance; and the assignee covenants to pay the rent, and perform the covenants, &c.

ASSIMULARE, To put highways together: it is mentioned in Leg. Hen. 1. c. 8.

ASSISA CADERE, This word ſignifies to be non-ſuited; as when there is ſuch a plain and legal inſufficiency in a ſuit, that the complainant can proceed no further on it. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 15: Bracton, lib. 2. c. 7.

ASSISA CADIT IN JURATAM, Is where a thing in controverſy is ſo doubtful, that it muſt neceſſarily be tried by a jury. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 15: See poſt Attaint.

ASSISA CONTINUANDA, A writ directed to the juſtices of aſſiſe for the continuation of a cauſe, when certain records alledged cannot be produced in time by the party that has occaſion to uſe them. Reg. Orig. 217.

ASSISA PROROGANDA, Is a writ directed to the juſtices aſſigned to take aſſiſes, for the ſtay of proceedings, by reaſon of the party's being employed in the king's buſineſs. Reg. Orig. 208.

ASSISE, Fr. Aſſis.] According to our ancient books is defined to be an aſſembly of knights, and other ſubſtantial men, with the Juſtice, in a certain place, and at a certain time appointed. Cuſtum. Normand. cap. 24. This word is properly derived from the Latin verb aſſideo, to ſit together; and is alſo taken for the court, place or time, when and where the writs and proceſſes of aſſiſe are handled or taken. And in this ſignification aſſiſe is general; as when the juſtices go their ſeveral circuits with commiſſion to take all aſſiſes; or ſpecial, where a ſpecial commiſſion is granted to certain perſons (formerly oftentimes done) for taking an aſſiſe upon one or two diſſeiſins only. Bract. lib. 3.

Concerning the general aſſiſe, all the counties of England are divided into ſix circuits; and two judges are aſſigned by the king's commiſſion to every circuit, who hold their aſſiſes twice a year in every county; (except, Middleſex, where the king's courts of record do ſit, and where his courts for his counties palatine are held;) and theſe judges have five ſeveral commiſſions.

1. Of oyer and terminer, directed to them and many other gentlemen of the county, by which they are empowered to try treaſons, felonies, &c. and this is the largeſt commiſſion they have.

2. Of gaol delivery, directed to the judges and the clerk of aſſiſe aſſociate, which gives them power to try every priſoner in the gaol committed for any offence whatſoever, but none but priſoners in the gaol; ſo that one way or other they rid the gaol of all the priſoners in it.

3. Of aſſiſe, directed to themſelves only, and the clerk of aſſiſe, to take aſſiſes, and do right upon writs of aſſiſe brought before them by ſuch as are wrongfully thruſt out of their lands and poſſeſſions; which writs were heretofore frequent, but now men's poſſeſſions are ſooner recovered by ejectments, &c.

4. Of niſi prius, directed to the judges and clerk of aſſiſe, by which civil cauſes grown to iſſue in the courts above, are tried in the vacation by a jury of twelve men of the county where the cauſe of action ariſes; and on return of the verdict of the jury to the court above, the judges there give judgment.

Theſe cauſes by the courſe of the courts are uſually appointed to be tried at Weſtminſter in ſome Eaſter or Michaelmas Term, by a jury returned from the county wherein the cauſe of action ariſes; but with this proviſo, niſi prius, unleſs before the day prefixed, the judges of aſſize come into the county in queſtion.—This they are ſure to do in the preceding vacation.

5. A commiſſion of the peace, in every county of the circuits; and all juſtices of the peace of the county are bound to be preſent at the aſſiſes; and ſheriffs are alſo to give their attendance on the judges, or they ſhall be fined. Bacon's Elem. 15, 16, &c. 3 Comm. 60, 269.

There is a commiſſion of the peace, oyer and terminer and gaol delivery of Newgate, held eight times in a year, for the city of London and county of Middleſex, at Juſtice Hall in the Old Bailey, where the lord mayor is the chief judge.

In Wales there are but two circuits, North and South Wales; for each of which the king appoints two perſons learned in the laws to be judges; ſtat. 18 Eliz. c. 8. If juſtices ſit by force of a commiſſion, and do not adjourn the commiſſion, it is determined. 4 Inſt. 265.

The conſtitution of the juſtices of aſſiſe was begun by Hen. 2; though ſomewhat different from what they now are: and by Magna Charta juſtices ſhall be ſent through every county once a year, who, with the knights of the reſpective ſhires, ſhall take aſſiſes of novel diſſeiſin, &c. in their proper ſhires, and what cannot be determined there ſhall be ended by them in ſome other place in their circuit; and if it be too difficult for them, it ſhall be referred to the juſtices of the bench, there to be ended. 9 Hen. 3. c. 12.

There are ſeveral ſtatutes as to holding the aſſiſes at particular places in certain counties.

ASSISE is likewiſe uſed for a jury, where aſſiſes of novel diſſeiſin are tried: the panels of aſſiſes ſhall be arrayed, and a copy indented delivered by the ſheriff, &c. to the plaintiffs and defendants ſix days before the ſeſſions, &c. if demanded, on pain of 40 l. by ſtat. 6 Hen. 6. cap. 2. And aſſiſe, is taken for a writ for recovery of poſſeſſion of things immoveable, whereof any one and his anceſtors have been diſſeiſed. Likewiſe, in another ſenſe, it ſignifies an ordinance or ſtatute as Aſſiſa Panis et Cervifiæ. Reg. Orig. 279.

ASSISE OF NOVEL DISSEISIN, Aſſiſa novæ diſſeiſinæ.] See Diſſeiſin.

An aſſiſe of novel diſſeiſin is a remedy maximè feſtinum, for the recovery of lands or tenements, of which the party was diſſeiſed. 2 Inſt. 410. And it is called novel diſſeiſin, becauſe the juſtices in eyre went their circuits from ſeven years to ſeven years; and no aſſiſe was allowed before them them, which commenced before the laſt circuit, which was called an ancient aſſiſe; and that which was upon a diſſeiſin ſince the laſt circuit, an aſſiſe of novel diſſeiſin. Co. Lit. 153 b.

An aſſiſe is called feſtinum remedium. 1. Becauſe the tenant ſhall not be eſſoined. 2. Shall not caſt a protection. 3. Shall not pray in aid of the king. 4. Shall not vouch any ſtranger, except he be preſent, and will enter preſently into warranty; ſo of receipt. 5. The parol ſhall not demur for the nonage of the plaintiff or defendant. 8 Co. 50: Booth 262.

It lies where tenant in fee-ſimple, fee-tail, or for term of life, is put out and diſſeiſed of his lands, or tenements, rents, common of paſture, common way, or of an office, toll, &c. Glanv. lib. 10: Reg. Orig. 197: Aſſiſe muſt be of an actual freehold in lands, &c. and not a freehold in law: it lieth of common of paſture, where the commoner hath a freehold in it, and the lord or other perſons feed it ſo hard, that all the graſs is eat up; but then the plaintiff muſt count and ſet forth how long the land was fed, and alledge per quod proficuum ſuum ibidem amiſit, &c. 9 Rep. 113. One may have an aſſiſe of land and rents or of ſeveral rents, and offices and profits in his ſoil, all in one writ: and if it be of a rent-charge, or rent-ſeck, it ſhall be general de libero tenemento in ſuch a place, and all the lands and tenements of the tenants charged ought to be named in the writ; but in aſſiſe for rent ſervice it is otherwiſe. Dyer 31. An aſſiſe may be brought for an office held for life; but then it muſt be an office of profit, not of charge only: of the toll of a mill, or market, aſſiſe lieth; though it may not be brought of ſuit to a mill. 8 Rep. 46, 47.

An aſſiſe was brought of the office of a filazer of the court of Common Pleas, and the demandant counted de libero tenemento, and alledged ſeiſin, by taking money for a capias, and the poſt was put in view where the officer ſate. Dyer 114.

An aſſiſe lieth of the office of regiſter of the admiralty, and the demandant laid a preſcription to it, viz. quod quilibet hujuſmodi perſona, who ſhould be named by the admiral, ſhould be regiſter of the admiralty for life. Dyer 153.

It lieth of offices of woodward, park keeper, and keeper of chaſes, warrener, &c. but theſe are not at common law; but by the ſtatute of Weſt. 2. c. 25. becauſe they are of profits to be taken in alieno ſolo: it likewiſe lieth of all other offices and bailiwicks in fee. 8 Rep. 47.

In an aſſiſe of a new office, it ought to be ſhewed what profits belong to it; but it is otherwiſe of an ancient office, becauſe it is preſumed, that the profit thereof is ſufficiently known. 8 Rep. 45, 49.

Tenants in common ſhall each have a ſeveral aſſiſe for his moiety, or part, becauſe they are ſeiſed by ſeveral titles; but twenty jointenants ſhall have but one aſſiſe in all their names, becauſe they have but one joint title; ſo if there are three jointenants, and one of them releaſeth all his right to one of his companions, and then the other two are diſſeiſed of the whole, they ſhall have but one aſſiſe in both their names, for the two parts, becauſe they had a joint title to it at the time of the diſſeiſin, and he to whom the releaſe was given ſhall have an aſſiſe in his own name, becauſe of that part he is tenant in common. Co. Lit. 196.

If leſſee for years, or tenant at will, be ouſted, the leſſor, or he in remainder, may have aſſiſe, becauſe the freehold was in him at the time of the diſſeiſin. Kel. 109. Aſſiſe lies for tithes, by ſtat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 7: Cro. Eliz. 559. But not for an annuity, penſion, &c. In ſome caſes an aſſiſe will lie, where ejectment will not. Ejectment will not lie de piſcariâ, by reaſon the ſheriff cannot deliver poſſeſſion of it; but an aſſize will lie for it, as it may be viewed by the recognitors. Cro. Car. 534. Aſſiſe will ſometimes lie where treſpaſs vi & armis doth not. Vid. 8 Rep. 47: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 276.

By Magna Charta, 9 Hen. 3. cap. 12, aſſiſes of novel diſſeiſin, &c. ſhall be taken in the proper counties, by the king's juſtices: and for eſtovers of wood, profit taken in woods, corn to be received yearly in a certain place; and for toll, tonnage, &c. and of offices in fee, an aſſiſe ſhall be; alſo for common of turbary, and of fiſhing, appendant to freehold, &c.

In an aſſiſe, the plaintiff muſt prove his title, then his ſeiſin and diſſeiſin: but ſeiſin of part of a rent is ſufficient to have aſſiſe of the whole; and if a man who hath title to enter ſet his foot upon the land and is ouſted, that is a ſufficient ſeiſin.

As the writ of aſſiſe reſtores the party to the actual ſeiſin of his freehold, for ſo are the words of the writ, viz. facias tenementum illud ſeiſiri, &c. conſequently the party that brings the writ muſt found it upon an actual ſeiſin, which he has been deveſted of, for otherwiſe this remedy is not commenſurate to his caſe. See 2 Rol. Abr. 463.

Therefore if there be lord and tenant by rent-ſervice, and the lord grants the ſervices to another, and the tenant attorns by a penny, this being given by way of attornment, is not ſufficient ſeiſin to ground an aſſiſe on; ſecus if the penny had been given by way of ſeiſin of the rent. Lit. ſect. 565: Co. Lit. 315: 4 Co. 9: 10 Co. 127.

The firſt proceſs in this action is an original writ iſſued out of chancery, directed to the ſheriff, commanding him to return a jury, who are called the recognitors of the aſſiſe. An aſſiſe is to be arraigned on the day the writ is returnable, on which day the defendant is to count, and the tenant is to appear and plead inſtantly. Style Reg. 88.

If in an aſſiſe no tenant of the freehold be mentioned, the defendant may plead it; and where one defendant pleads, no tenant of the freehold named in the writ, if this is found, the writ ſhall abate quoad all. Dyer 207.

On ſuch a plea of the defendant, the plaintiff ſays that he hath made a feoffment to perſons unknown, and he himſelf hath continually taken the profits; if then they are at iſſue upon the taking the profits, and it be found againſt the defendant, it ſhall not be inquired of the points of the aſſiſe, for the diſſeiſin is acknowledged. 1 Danv. Abr. 584. And if the deed of the anceſtor of the plaintiff be pleaded in bar, and this is denied, and found for the plaintiff; the aſſiſe ſhall not inquire of the points of the writ, but only of the damages. Ibid. 585.

In this ſuit, if the defendant fail to make good the exception which he pleads, he ſhall be adjudged a diſſeiſor, without taking the aſſize; and ſhall pay the plaintiff double damages, and be impriſoned a year. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. cap. 25. In aſſiſe the tenant pleads in bar, and the plaintiff makes title, but the tenant doth neither anſwer nor traverſe the title; in this caſe the aſſiſe ſhall be awarded at large. Cro. Eliz. 559. And if any other title is found for the plaintiff, he ſhall recover. Bro. Aſſ. 281. If a tenant pleads in abatement in an aſſiſe, he muſt at the ſame time plead over in bar; and no imparlance ſhall be allowed, without good cauſe: and where there are ſeveral defendants, and any of them do not appear the firſt day, the aſſiſe ſhall be taken againſt them by default. Paſch. 5 W. 3.

If aſſiſe be brought againſt a leſſee, he may not plead aſſiſa non; for that is the form of the plea in bar for tenant of the freehold: he ought to plead the ſpecial matter, viz his leaſe, the reverſion in the plaintiff, and that he is poſſeſſed, and ſo in without wrong. Jenk. Cent. 142. An aſſiſe is to be firſt arraigned, and the plaintiff's counſel prays the court that the defendant may be called; whereupon he is called; and if the defendant appears, then his counſel demand oyer of the writ of aſſiſe, and the return of it; which is granted; and then he prays leave to imparl to a ſhort time after, and the jury is adjourned to that day: at the day given by the court, the defendant is again called, and upon his appearance, he pleads to the aſſiſe; and upon this an iſſue is joined between the parties, and the jurors are ſworn to try the iſſue, the counſel proceeding to give them their evidence: after the trial the court gives judgment, and the plaintiff recovering is to have writ of ſeiſin, &c. 1 Lill. Abr. 105, 106.

The jurors that are to try the aſſiſe are to view the thing in demand: by writ of aſſiſe the ſheriff is commanded, Quod faciat duodecim liberos & legales homines de vicineto, &c. Videre tenementum illud, & nomina eorum imbreviari, & quod ſummoneat eos per bonas ſummonitiones, quod ſint coram juſtitiariis, &c. parati inde facere recognitionem, &c.

By Weſtm. 2. cap. 25, A certificate of aſſiſe is given, which is a writ for the party grieved, by a verdict or judgment given againſt him in an aſſiſe, when he had ſomething to plead, as a record or releaſe, which could not have been pleaded by his bailiff; or when the aſſiſe was taken againſt himſelf by default, to have the deed tried, and the record brought in before the juſtices, and the former jury ſummoned to appear before them at a certain day and place, for a further examination and trial of the matter. See Booth 215, 287: 4 Co. 4 b: 2 Inſt. 26: F. N. B. 181: 3 Comm. 389.

The plaint need not be ſo certain in aſſiſe as in other writs; the judgment being to recover per viſum recognitorum; and if the plaint be but ſo certain as that the recognitors may put the demandant into poſſeſſion, it is ſufficient. Dyer 84.

To prevent frequent and vexatious diſſeiſins, it is enacted by the ſtatute of Merton, 20 Hen. III. c. 3, that if a perſon diſſeiſed recover ſeiſin of the land again, by aſſiſe of novel diſſeiſin, and be again diſſeiſed of the ſame tenements by the ſame diſſeiſor, he ſhall have a writ of re-diſſeiſin; and, if he recover therein, the re-diſſeiſor ſhall be impriſoned; and, by the ſtatute of Marlberge 52 Hen. III. c. 8, ſhall alſo pay a fine to the king: to which the ſtat. Weſtm. 2. (13 E. 1.) c. 26, hath ſuperadded double damages to the party aggrieved. In like manner by the ſame ſtatute of Merton, when any lands or tenements are recovered by aſſiſe of mort d'anceſtor, or other jury, or any judgment of the court, if the party be afterwards diſſeiſed by the ſame perſon againſt whom judgment was obtained, he ſhall have a writ of poſt-diſſeiſin, againſt him; which ſubjects the poſt-diſſeiſor to the ſame penalties as a re-diſſeiſor. The reaſon of all which, as given by Sir Edward Coke, (2 Inſt. 83, 84,) is becauſe ſuch proceeding is a contempt of the king's court, and in deſpite of the law. 3 Comm. 188: See Reg. Orig. 208: F. N. B. 190: Co. Lit. 154: 2 Inſt. Com. on ſtat. W. 2: New Nat. Br. 417, 420.

For proceedings in writ of aſſiſe of novel diſſeiſin, See Plowd. 411, 412.

The court of Common Pleas or King's Bench may hold plea of aſſiſes of land in the county of Middleſex, by writ out of Chancery. 1 Lill. Abr. 105. And in cities and corporations an aſſiſe of freſh force lies for recovery of poſſeſſion of lands, within forty days after the diſſeiſin, as the ordinary aſſiſe in the county. F. N. B. 7.

ASSISE OF MORT D'ANCESTOR, Aſſiſa mortis anteceſſoris.] Is a writ that lay where a man's father, mother, brother, ſiſter, uncle, aunt, &c. died ſeiſed of lands, tenements, rents, &c. that were held in fee, and after their death a ſtranger abated. Reg. Orig. 223. It is good as well againſt the abator, as any other in poſſeſſion of the land; but it lies not againſt brothers or ſiſters, &c. where there is privity of blood between the perſon proſecuting and them. Co. Lit. 242. And it muſt be brought within the time limited by the ſtatute of Limitations, [50 years, 3 Comm. 189,] or the right may be loſt by negligence.

If tenant by the curteſy alien his wife's inheritance, and dieth, the heir of the wife ſhall have an aſſiſe of mort d'anceſtor, if he have not aſſets by deſcent from the tenant by the curteſy; and the ſame ſhall be as well where the wife was not ſeiſed of land the day of her death, as where ſhe was ſeiſed thereof. New Nat. Br. 489. A warden of a college, &c. ſhall have aſſiſe of mort d'anceſtor of rent where his predeceſſor was ſeiſed. And a man may have aſſiſe of mort d'anceſtor of rents, againſt ſeveral perſons in ſeveral counties; having in the end of the writ ſeveral ſummons againſt the tenants: and the proceſs in this writ, is ſummons againſt the party; and if he makes default at the day of the aſſiſe returned, then the plaintiff ought to ſue out a re-ſummons; and if he makes default again, the aſſiſe ſhall be taken, &c. Bro. Aſſiſ. 88. In a mort d'anceſtor, if the tenant ſays, the plaintiff is not next heir, and this is found againſt him, the points of the writ ſhall be inquired of: and in this caſe, the aſſiſe may find, that though the plaintiff be the next heir, yet he is not next heir as to this land; for this is in regard of their inquiry at large. Br. Mort d'An. 47: 1 Danv. Abr. 584. Damages ſhall be recovered in the aſſiſe of mort d'anceſtor; but it lieth not of an eſtate-tail, only where the anceſtor was ſeiſed in demeſne as of fee. Bro. Aſſiſ. If a man be barred in aſſiſe of novel diſſeiſin, upon ſhewing a diſcent, or other ſpecial matter, he may have mort d'anceſtor, or writ of entry ſur diſſeiſin, &c. 4 Rep. 43.

If the abatement happened on the death of one's grandfather or grandmother, then an aſſiſe of mort d'anceſtor no longer lies, but a writ of ayle, or de avo; if on the death of the great grandfather, or great grandmother, then a writ of beſayle, or de proavo; but if it mounts one degree higher, to the treſayle, or grandfather's grandfather, or if the abatement happened upon the death of any collateral relation, other than thoſe before mentioned, the writ is called a writ of coſinage, or de conſanguineo. Finch L. 266, 267. And the ſame points ſhall be inquired of, in all theſe actions anceſtrel, as in an aſſiſe of mort d'anceſtor, they being of the very ſame nature. ſtat.

Weſtm. 2. (13 E. 1.) c. 20; though they differ in this point of form, that theſe anceſtrel writs (like all other writs of præcipe) expreſsly aſſert a title in the demandant, (viz. the ſeiſin of the anceſtor at his death, and his own right of inheritance) the aſſiſe aſſerts nothing directly, but only prays an inquiry whether thoſe points be ſo. 2 Inſt. 399. There is alſo another anceſtrel writ, denominated a nuper obiit, to eſtabliſh an equal diviſion of the land in queſtion, where on the death of an anceſtor, who has ſeveral heirs or co-heireſſes, one enters and holds the others out of poſſeſſion. F. N. B. 197: Finch. L. 293: Leg. Orig. 226: New Nat. Br. 437, 8: Booth on Real Actions. But a man is not allowed to have any of theſe actions anceſtrel for an abatement, conſequent on the death of any collateral relation, beyond the 4th degree; (Hale on F. N. B. 221.) though in the lineal aſcent he may proceed ad infinitum. (Fitzh. Abr. tit. Coſinage 15.) 3 Comm. 186.

It was always held to be law, that where lands were deviſable in a man's laſt will by the cuſtom of the place, there an aſſiſe of mort d'anceſtor, did not lie. For, where lands were ſo deviſable, the right of poſſeſſion could never be determined by a proceſs, which inquired only of theſe two points, the ſeiſin of the anceſtor, and the heirſhip of the demandant. And hence it may be reaſonable to conclude, that when the ſtatute of wills, 32 Hen. 8. c. 1, made all ſocage lands deviſable, an aſſiſe of mort d'anceſtor could no longer be brought of lands held in ſocage. See 1 Leon. 267; and that now, ſince the ſtat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, (which converts all tenures, a few only excepted, into free and common ſocage,) no aſſiſe of mort d'anceſtor can be brought of any lands in the kingdom; but that, in in caſe of abatements, recourſe muſt be properly had to the writs of entry. 3 Comm. 187.

It is to be obſerved moreover, that theſe writs are now almoſt obſolete, being in a great meaſure ſuperſeded by the action of ejectment, which anſwers almoſt all the purpoſes of real actions; except in ſome very peculiar caſes.

ASSISE DE UTRUM, or aſſiſa juris utrum.] See tit. Juris utrum.

ASSISE OF THE FOREST, Aſſiſa de foreſta.] Is a ſtatute touching orders to be obſerved in the king's foreſt. Manwood 35. The ſtatute of view of frank-pledge, anno 18 Ed. 2, is alſo called the aſſiſe of the king: and the ſtatute of bread and ale, 51 H. 3, is termed the aſſiſe of bread and ale. And theſe are ſo called, becauſe they ſet down and appoint a certain meaſure, or order, in the things they contain. There is further an aſſiſe of nuſance, aſſiſa nocumenti, where a man maketh a nuſance to the freehold of another, to redreſs the ſame. And beſides Littleton's diviſion of aſſiſes, there are others mentioned by other writers, viz. aſſiſe at large, brought by an infant to enquire of a diſſeiſin, and whether his anceſtor were of full age, good memory, &c. when he made the deed pleaded, whereby he claims his right.

Aſſiſe in point of aſſiſe; aſſiſa in modum aſſiſæ.] Which is when the tenant as it were ſetting foot to foot with the demandant, without any thing further, pleads directly to the writ, no wrong, no diſſeiſin.

Aſſiſe out of the point of aſſiſe, is when the tenant pleadeth ſomething by exception; as a foreign releaſe, or foreign matter triable in a foreign county; which muſt be tried by a jury, before the principal cauſe can proceed.

Aſſiſe of right of damages, is where the tenant confeſſeth an ouſter, and referring it to a demurrer in law, whether it were rightly done or not, is adjudged to have done wrong; whereupon the demandant ſhall have a writ of aſſiſe to recover damages. Bract. lib. 4: F. N. B. 105. Aſſiſes are likewiſe awarded by default of tenants, &c. —Of the Grand Aſſiſe ſee tit. Jury.—For further particulars relative to Aſſiſe in general, ſee Com. Dig. and ante tit. Aſſiſe.

ASSISORS, aſſiſores.] Sunt qui aſſiſas condunt aut taxationes imponunt.—In Scotland, (according to Skene) they are the ſame with our jurors; and their oath is this:

We ſhall leil ſuith ſay,
And na ſuith conceal, for nathing we may,
So far as we are charged upon this aſſiſe,
Be [by] God himſelf, and be [by] our part of paradiſe,
And as we will anſwer to God, upon
The dreadful day of dome.

ASSISUS, Rented or farmed out for ſuch an aſſiſe, or certain aſſeſſed rent in money or proviſions. Terra aſſiſa was commonly oppoſed to terra dominica; this laſt being held in domain, and occupied by the lord, the other let out to inferior tenants. And hence comes the word to aſſeſs or allot the proportion and rates in taxes and payments by aſſeſſors.

ASSOCIATION, aſſociatio.] Is a writ or patent ſent by the king, either at his own motion or at the ſuit of a party plaintiff, to the juſtices appointed to take aſſiſes, or of oyer and terminer, &c. to have others aſſociated unto them. And this is uſual where a juſtice of aſſiſe dies; and a writ is iſſued to the juſtices alive to admit the perſon aſſociated: alſo where a juſtice is diſabled, this is practiſed. F. N. B. 185: Reg. Orig. 201, 206, 223. The clerk of the aſſiſe is uſually aſſociate of courſe; in other caſes, ſome learned ſerjeants at law are appointed. It hath been holden, that an aſſociation after another aſſociation allowed and admitted, doth not lie; nor are the juſtices then to admit other aſſociation in that writ afterwards, ſo long as that writ and commiſſion ſtand in force. Br. Aſſiſ. 386: Mich. 32 H. 6. The king may make an aſſociation unto the ſheriff upon a writ of rediſſeiſin, as well as upon aſſiſe of novel diſſeiſin. New Nat. Br. 416, 417. ſee ante tit. ASSUMPSIT, from the Lat. Aſſumo.] Is taken for a voluntary promiſe, by which a man aſſumes or takes upon him to perform or pay any thing to another: it comprehends any verbal promiſe, made upon conſideration, and the civilians expreſs it diverſely, according to the nature of the promiſe, calling it ſometimes pactum, ſometimes promiſſionem, or conſtitutum, &c. Terms de Ley. An action upon the caſe on aſſumpſit (or as it is alſo expreſſed, on promiſes) is an action the law gives the party injured by the breach or non-performance of a contract legally entered into; it is founded on a contract either expreſs or implied by law; and gives the party damages in proportion to the loſs he has ſuſtained by the violation of the contract. 4 Co. 92: Moor 667.

Here is is to be conſidered,

I In what caſes an aſſumpſit is or is not the proper action.
II. What words will create an aſſumpſit.
III. What conſideration is ſufficient.
IV. Of the proceedings.

I. In every action upon aſſumpſit, there ought to be a conſideration, promiſe, and breach of promiſe. 1 Leon. 405. For

The law diſtinguiſhes between a general indebitatus aſſumpſit and a ſpecial aſſumpſit: for though they come under the denomination of actions on the caſe, and the party is to be recompenced in damages alike in both, yet the firſt ſeems to be of a ſuperior nature, and will lie in no caſe but where debt will lie; but for a particular undertaking, or collateral promiſe to diſcharge the debt or duty of another, a ſpecial aſſumpſit muſt be brought. 1 New Abr. 163.

Action on the caſe on aſſumpſit lies, for not making a good eſtate of land ſold, according to promiſe; not paying money upon a bargain and ſale, according to agreement; not delivering goods upon promiſe, on demand; this is by expreſs aſſumpſit; an implied aſſumpſit is where goods are ſold, or work is done, &c. without any price agreed upon; in an action on the caſe by quantum meruit or quantum valebat the law implies a promiſe and ſatisfaction to the value.

When one becomes legally indebted to another for goods ſold, the law implies a promiſe that he will pay this debt; and if it be not paid, indebitatus aſſumpſit lies. 1 Danv. Abr. 25. And indebitatus aſſumpſit lies for goods ſold and delivered to a ſtranger ad requiſitionem of the defendant. Ibid. 27. But on indebitatus aſſumpſit for goods ſold, you muſt prove a price agreed on, otherwiſe the action will not lie; though this is helped by laying a quantum meruit, with the indebit. aſſumpſit, wherein if you fail in proof of the price agreed on, you may recover the value. Wood's Inſt. 536.

If A. and B. having dealings with each other, make up their accounts, and B. is found in arrear, and promiſes to pay the balance, an aſſumpſit lies againſt him, on infimul computaſſent and A. need not bring a writ of account. Cro. Jac. 69: Yelv. 70. S. P: 1 Rol. Abr. 7. S. P: 1 Rol. Rep. 396: Bulſt. 208: Moor 854.

So if A. gives money, or delivers goods to B. to merchandize therewith, and B. promiſes to render an account, aſſumpſit lies on this expreſs promiſe, as well as account. 1 Salk. 9.

So if a tenant, being in arrear for rents, ſettles an account of arrears with his landlord, and promiſes to pay him the ſum in which he is found in arrear, an aſſumpſit lies on this promiſe. 1 Rol. Abr. 9: Bro. Account 81: Raym. 211: 2 Keb. 813: Vide Style 131, 283: Cro. Jac. 602. So on a balanced account between two partners tho' including items not connected with the partnerſhip. 2 Term Rep. 479, 483.

But if the obligor in a bond, without any new conſideration, as forbearance, &c. promiſes to pay the money, an aſſumpſit will not lie, but the obligee muſt ſtill purſue his remedy by action of debt. 1 Rol. Abr. 8: Hutt. 34: Cro. Eliz. 240 ſeems contra.

Where a man comes to buy goods, and they agree upon a price and a day for the payment, and the buyer takes them away, an aſſumpſit for the money is the proper action, for trover will not lie for the goods, becauſe the property was changed by a lawful bargain, and by that bargain the buyer was to convert the goods before the money was due. 1 New Abr. 167.

If a man and a woman, being unmarried, mutually promiſe to marry each other, and afterwards the man marries another woman, by which he renders himſelf incapable of performing his contract, an aſſumpſit lies, in which the woman ſhall recover damages. Carter 233.

An indebitatus aſſumpſit lies for money by cuſtom due for ſcavage; adjudged upon a ſpecial verdict, by which it was found, that the ſum demanded was due by cuſtom, but that there was no expreſs promiſe to pay it. 2 Lev. 174.

If one receives my rent, under pretence of title, I may have an indebitatus aſſumpſit againſt him. 2 Mod. 263.

If a feme ſole marries a man, who in truth is married to another woman, and he makes a leaſe of her lands and receives the rents, ſhe may bring an indebitatus aſſumpſit againſt him for ſo much money received to her uſe; adjudged after verdict. 1 Salk. 28.

Where action is brought upon a contract, if the plaintiff miſtakes the ſum agreed upon, he fails in his action; but if he brings it upon the promiſe in law, ariſing from the debt, there, though he miſtakes the ſum, he ſhall recover. Alleyn 29. Every contract made between parties, implies a mutual promiſe for performance: and yet an action may be brought on a reciprocal promiſe by one againſt the other, although he who brings it hath not performed on his ſide. Dyer 30, 75. When an aſſumpſit or promiſe is the ground of the action, it muſt be preciſely ſet forth. 3 Lev. 319. If a promiſe be made without limitation of time for its performance, reaſonable time ſhall be allowed, if there be an immediate conſideration for it; and not time during life. 1 Lill. Abr. 112. On promiſe to deliver a thing ſuch a day, the party is bound to do it without requeſt. 1 Lev. 284. But if a promiſe be to do any thing upon requeſt, the requeſt is neceſſary to intitle the plaintiff to the action, on which it ſhall ariſe. 1 Lev. 48. Tho' in every indebitatus aſſumpſit, 'tis alledged the defendant promiſed to pay on requeſt and that he was requeſted, and refuſed payment, yet no requeſt is ever proved. The time for the performance of the promiſe being elapſed, and the promiſe not performed, the law preſumes requeſt, unleſs in a particular caſe where a thing is not to be done, until requeſt. Every executory contract, and debt that is not upon record, or on a ſpecialty, which may be turned into damage, imports in it an aſſumpſit in law, and one may have debt or action on the caſe upon it at his election; for when a man doth agree to pay money, or to deliver any thing, he thereby promiſeth to pay or deliver it. Plowd. 128: 1 Cro. 94.

Every

ASSUMPSIT II.

Every contract executory implies an assumpsit to pay money at the day agreed, or immediately, if no time be limited. Mo. 667.

The assumpsit in an agreement that will be binding and give action, must be compleat and perfect, and duly pursued and observed: and if the party that makes the assumpsit, and he to whom it is made, agree together, and a bond is given and taken for what is promised; by this the assumpsit is discharged. Also where an assumpsit is to stand to an award, if the award made be void; it will make the assumpsit void. Yelv. 87: 2 Leon. ca. 223: 1 Leon. 170. Indeb. assump. lies by a prothonotary against an attorney, for fees for work done for defendant as attorney. Holt's Rep. 20.

Indebitatus assumpsit lies for a customary fine; super mortem domini. Show. 35. Indebitatus assumpsit lies upon a personal contract for a sum in gross, as pro rebus venditis; per Holt Ch. J. Show. 36.

Indebitatus lies for fees for being knighted. Show. 78.

Indebitatus assumpsit lies for money paid by mistake, on an account or deceit; but not for money paid knowingly on illegal consideration, as an usurious bond. Salk. 22.

Assumpsit lies in many cases where debt lies, and in many where debt doth not lie. 2 Burr. 1005, which see for many cases where assumpsit will lie; as also, 1 Term Rep. 236.

Indebitatus assumpsit lies on a judgment of a foreign court without declaring upon or proving the grounds or cause of action; and if the judgment was obtained unfairly, defendant must shew it. Doug. 1, 4.

Though, assumpsit lies not for rent usually reserved on leases; yet if a man promise to pay, without a lease, so much a week as long as A. B. &c. permits him to enjoy a warehouse, &c. which is a special cause of promise, this action will lie. 2 Cro. 592. Now by 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 14, where the demise is not by deed, the landlord may recover his rent in an action on the case, for use and occupation.

Where a person pays money upon a mistake; or if he receives more from another in a reckoning than he ought, or more fees than should be taken, an assumpsit lies. 1 Salk. 22: Comb. 447. If a man receives money for the use of another person, assumpsit may be had against him, which supplies the place of action of account: and where money was deposited on a wager, an indebitatus lay for money received to a man's use. Show. 117.

If where a promise is made, one part of it is against law, and another part of it lawful, this is ground sufficient for assumpsit. 4 Rep. 94.

The person to whom a promise is made, shall have the action; and not those who are strangers, or for whose benefit it is intended. Danv. 64. Nor shall action be brought against one for what another receives, nor at his request, &c. 1 Salk. 23. But if a man delivers money to A. B. to my use, I may have an action on the case against him for this money. If a man accounts, and upon the account is found in arrear to a certain sum, and presently in consideration thereof assumes to pay the debt at a day; action on the case lies for this after the day. Yelv. 70. And on a promise to pay a sum of money at so much a month, an action on the case may be brought before the whole is payable; for it is grounded upon the promise, which is broken by every non-payment, and damages may be recovered. 2 Cro. 504.—See title Debt.

II. Some agreements though never so expresly made are deemed of so important a nature, that they ought not to rest in verbal promise only, which cannot be proved but by the memory of witnesses. To prevent which, the statute of frauds and perjuries, 29 Car. 2. c. 3, enacts, that in the five following cases no verbal promise shall be sufficient to ground an action upon, but at the least some note or memorandum of it shall be made in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith. 1. Where an executor or administrator promises to answer damages out of his own estate. 2. Where a man undertakes to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another. 3. Where any agreement is made, upon consideration of marriage. 4. Where any contract or sale is made of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein. 5. And, lastly, where there is any agreement that is not to be performed within a year from the making thereof. In all these cases a mere verbal assumpsit is void.

The same statute provides that no contract for sale of goods for the price of 10*l.* or upwards shall be good, except the buyer actually receive part of the goods sold, or give earnest; or there be some note or memorandum in writing of the bargain being made by the parties or their agents.

A letter written by a party is a sufficient memorandum. 3 Burr. 1663. And see tit. Agreement.

A parol promise of marriage between parties is not within the statute. Str. 34: 5 Mod. 411: Salk. 24.

As to promises for the debt, &c. of another.

If a person for whose use goods are furnished be liable at all, any other promise by a third person to pay that debt, must be in writing. 2 Term Rep. 80.

And there is no distinction between a promise to pay for goods furnished to a third person made before they are delivered, and one after. 2 Term Rep. 80; Cowp. 227.

But if the credit was given to the promiser originally, and the party furnishing the goods cannot recover against the person for whose use they were furnished, then the person promising is liable; as if one say "let A. have goods and I will pay you;" or "look to me for payment." Com. Dig. tit. Action upon the Case on Assumpsit. (F. 3.)

The intent of the parties by and to whom the promise or assumpsit is made, is more to be regarded than the form of words, and this intent and meaning is to be followed, not in the letter, but the substance of it; if a promise be to provide wedding cloaths for a woman, this shall be taken for such cloaths to be worn on the wedding or feast-day according to the dignity of the person. Poph. 182: Yelv. 87: 3 Cro. 53.

All promises and contracts are to receive a favourable interpretation; and such construction is to be made, where any obscurity appears, as will best answer the intent of the parties; otherwise a person, by obscure wording of his contract, might find means to evade and elude the force of it. Hence it is a general rule, that all promises shall be taken most strongly against the promiser, and are not to be rejected, if they can by any means be reduced to a certainty.

If a man promises another, in consideration that he will assign to him a certain term, to pay him 10*l.* this is a good assumpsit, though the time of assignment and payment be not appointed; for the 10*l.* shall be paid in a convenient time after the assignment, which also must be done done in a convenient time, and he ſhall not have time during his life. 1 Roll. Abr. 14, 15.

If there be an agreement to enter into an obligation for performance of a thing of a certain value, without mentioning in what ſum, it ſhall be according to the value. 1 Sid. 240.

III. The conſideration is the ground of the common action on the caſe: and no action on the caſe lieth againſt a man for a promiſe where there is no conſideration why he ſhould make the promiſe. 1 Danv. 53.

A conſideration altogether executed and paſt was anciently held not to be ſufficient to maintain an aſſumpſit, but this doctrine is denied by the court of K. B. 3 Burr. 1671. See alſo Cro. Eliz. 282, by which it appears that tho' the conſideration were executed, it would be ſufficient if laid at plaintiff's requeſt.

If an infant promiſe after full age to pay a debt incurred in his infancy, this will bind him. 1 Term Rep. 648.

If A. undertakes to do a thing without hire, as to take brandies out of one cellar, and to lay them down in another cellar, no action lies for the non-feaſance; but if he enters on the doing it, action lies for a miſ-feaſance, if it be through his own neglect, or miſmanagement, becauſe it is a deceit; but not if by mere accident; per Holt, 1 Salk. 26: Vide 3 Salk. 11.

Where the doing a thing will be a good conſideration, a promiſe to do that thing will be ſo too; per Holt, Ch. J. 12 Mod. 459.

Parting with my note to the defendant is a good conſideration. 7 Mod. 12, 13.

An aſſumpſit may be upon a general conſideration; but it doth not lie where the plaintiff has an obligation to pay the money, which is a ſtronger lien than aſſumpſit; nor when the party has a recogniſance for the duty, &c. Jenk. Cent. 293.

Love or friendſhip are not conſiderations to ground actions upon. 2 Leon. 30. Alſo idle and inſignificant conſiderations are looked upon as none at all; for whereever a perſon promiſes without a benefit ariſing to the promiſor, or loſs to the promiſee, it is looked upon as a void promiſe. 2 Bulſt. 269.

Laſtly, it is to be obſerved, that conſiderations may be void as being againſt law, for if they are wicked and ill in themſelves, or unlawful, by being prohibited by ſome act of parliament, they are void; therefore if an officer, who, by the duty of his office, is obliged to execute writs, promiſes, in conſideration of money paid him, to ſerve a certain proceſs, an aſſumpſit will not lie on this promiſe; for the receipt of the money was extortion, and the conſideration is unlawful. 1 Rol. Abr. 16.

Implied contracts, are ſuch as do not ariſe from the expreſs determination of any court, or the poſitive direction of any ſtatute; but from natural reaſon, and the juſt conſtruction of law: which extends to all preſumptive undertakings and aſſumpſits: which, though never perhaps actually made, yet conſtantly ariſe, upon this general implication and intendment of the courts of judicature, that every man hath engaged to perform what his duty or juſtice requires. Thus, if I employ a perſon to tranſact any buſineſs for me, or perform any work, the law implies that I undertook, or aſſumed to pay him ſo much as his labour deſerved. And if I neglect to make him amends, he has a remedy for this injury, by bringing his action on the caſe upon this implied aſſumpſit; wherein he is at liberty to ſuggeſt, that I promiſed to pay him ſo much as he reaſonably deſerved, and then to aver that his trouble was really worth ſuch a particular ſum, which the defendant has omitted to pay. But this valuation of his trouble is ſubmitted to the determination of a jury; who will aſſeſs ſuch a ſum in damages as they think he really merited. This is called an aſſumpſit on a quantum meruit. There is alſo an implied aſſumpſit on a quantum valebat, which is very ſimilar to the former; being only where one takes up goods or wares of a tradeſman, without expreſsly agreeing for the price. There the law concludes, that both parties did intentionally agree, that the real value of the goods ſhould be paid; and an action on the caſe may be brought accordingly, if the vendee refuſes to pay that value.

Another ſpecies of implied aſſumpſit is, when one has had and received money belonging to another, without any valuable conſideration given on the receiver's part; for the law conſtrues this to be money had and received for the uſe of the owner only; and implies, that the perſon ſo receiving promiſed and undertook to account for it to the true proprietor: And if he unjuſtly detains it, an action on the caſe lies againſt him for the breach of ſuch implied promiſe and undertaking; and he will be made to repair the owner in damages equivalent to what he has detained in ſuch violation of his promiſe. This is applicable to almoſt every caſe where the defendant has received money, which ex æquo et bono, he ought to refund. 2 Burr. 1012.

This ſpecies of aſſumpſit lies in numberleſs inſtances for money the defendant has received from a third perſon; which he claims title to, in oppoſition to the plaintiff's right, and which he had by law authority to receive from ſuch third perſon. 2 Burr. 1008.

One great benefit which ariſes to ſuitors from the nature of this action, is, that the plaintiff need not ſtate the ſpecial circumſtances, from which he concludes, that ex æquo et bono, the money received by the defendant, ought to be deemed as belonging to him: he may declare generally that the money was received to his uſe, and make out his caſe at the trial. 2 Burr. 1010.

This is equally beneficial to the defendant. It is the moſt favourable way in which he can be ſued: he can be liable no further than the money he has received; and againſt that may go into every equitable defence upon the general iſſue; he may claim every equitable allowance; he may prove a releaſe without pleading it; in ſhort, he may defend himſelf by every thing, which ſhews that the plaintiff, ex æquo et bono, is not intitled to the whole of his demand, or to any part of it.

This action will lie to recover premiums of inſurance paid by the inſured to the lottery-office-keeper. Cowp. 790. But it will not lie to recover back winnings paid by the lottery-office-keeper or inſurer of lottery tickets. 4 Burr. 1984.

If two perſons engage jointly in a ſtock-jobbing tranſaction and incur loſſes, and employ a broker to pay the differences, and one of them repay the broker with the privity and conſent of the other the whole ſum, he may recover a moiety from the other, in an action for money paid to his uſe. 3 Term Rep. 418.

But

But in such a case of an illegal transaction, if one partner pay money for another, without an express authority he cannot recover it back. ib.

And, generally, assumpsit for money paid, laid out, and expended will not lie when the money has been paid against the express consent of the party for whose use it is supposed to have been paid. 1 Term Rep. 20.

See title Consideration.

IV. The plaintiff must set forth every thing essential to the gist of the action, with such certainty, that it may appear to the court that there were sufficient grounds for the action; for if any thing material be omitted, it cannot appear to the court whether the damages given by the jury were in proportion to the demand, or whether the party was at all intitled to a verdict. And therefore, in an action upon the case, the plaintiff cannot declare quod cum the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff in such a sum, and that the defendant, in consideration thereof, super se assumpsit to pay, &c. without shewing the cause of the debt. 10 Co. 77.

If in an assumpsit the plaintiff declares, quod cum there were several reckonings and accounts between the plaintiff and defendant; and at such a day, &c. insimul computaverunt for all debts, reckonings and demands; and the defendant upon the said account was found to be in arrear the sum of 20 l. in consideration whereof the defendant promised to pay, &c. this is a good declaration, without shewing it was pro mercimoniis, or otherwise, wherefore he should have an account; for an account may be for divers causes, and several matters and things may be included and comprised therein, which in pede computi are reduced to a sum certain, and thereupon being indebted to the plaintiff, it is sufficient to ground an action. Cro. Car. 116.

If in an assumpsit the plaintiff declares, that the defendant did assume and promise to pay to the plaintiff so much money, and also to carry away certain wood before such a day; the defendant as to the money cannot plead that he paid it, and as to the carriage of the wood, non assumpsit, for the promise being intire, cannot be apportioned. March 100.

On an assumpsit in law, payment, or any other matter that excuses payment, may be given in evidence, on the general issue. In an assumpsit in deed, it must be pleaded. Gilb. Evid. 204, 5.

If the plaintiff declares upon an indebitatus assumpsit, and upon a quantum meruit, and the defendant pleads, that after the said several promises made, and before the action brought, the plaintiff and defendant came to an account concerning divers sums of money, and that the defendant was found in arrear to the plaintiff 30 l. and thereupon, in consideration that the defendant promised to pay the said 30 l. the plaintiff likewise promised to release and acquit the defendant of all demands, this is a good plea; for by the account the first contract is merged. 2 Mod. 43, 44.

The defendant cannot plead that he revoked his promise; as if A. is in execution at the suit of B. and J. S. desires B. to let him go at large, and that he will satisfy him; to which B. agrees; though J. S. before any thing is done in pursuance of this promise and agreement, comes to B. and tells him, that he revokes his promise, and that he will not stand to it; yet such revocation cannot be pleaded in bar to the action. 1 Rol. Abr. 32.

In an action upon an assumpsit, if the consideration be executory; as if one promises, to do something for me, in consideration of something to be done before by me, to or for him, if I will sue him for that he is to do for me, I must aver, that I have done that which was first to be done by me, for till that be done I may not maintain an action upon the promise. *Cro. To ATTACH, Attachiare, From the Fr. attacher.] To take or apprehend by commandment of a writ or precept. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. cap. 16. It differs from arrest, in that he who arresteth a man carrieth him to a person of higher power to be forthwith disposed of; but he that attacheth keepeth the party attached, and presents him in court at the day assigned; as appears by the words of the writ. Another difference there is, that arrest is only upon the body of a man; whereas an attachment is oftentimes upon his goods. Kitch. 279. A capias taketh hold of immoveable things, as lands or tenements, and properly belongs to real actions, but attachment hath place rather in personal actions. Bract. lib. 4: Fleta, lib. 5. cap. 24.

ATTACHIAMENTA BONORUM, A distress taken upon goods or chattels, where a man is sued for personal estate or debt, by the legal attachiators or bailiffs, as security to answer an action. There is likewise attachiamenta de spinis & bosco, a privilege granted to the officers of a forest, to take to their own use, thorns, brush, and wind-fall within their precincts. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. p. 209.

ATTACHMENT, Is a process from a court of record, awarded by the justices at their discretion, on a bare suggestion, or on their own knowledge; and is properly perly grantable in cases of contempts, against which all courts of record, but more especially those of Westminster-hall, and above all the court of B. R. may proceed in a summary manner. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 22; See 1 Wilf. 300.

The most remarkable instances of contempts seem reducible to the following heads,—1. Contempts of the king's writs. 2. Contempts in the face of a court. 3. Contemptuous words or writings concerning the court. 4. Contempts of the rules or awards of the court. 5. Abuse of the process of the courts. 6. Forgeries of writs and other deceipts tending to impose on the court. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 33.

All courts of record have a kind of discretionary power over their own officers, and are to see that no abuses be committed by them, which may bring disgrace on the courts themselves; therefore if a sheriff or other officer shall be guilty of a corrupt practice in not serving a writ; as if he refuse to do it, unless paid an unreasonable gratuity from the plaintiff, or receive a bribe from the defendant, or give him notice to remove his person or effects, in order to prevent the service of any writ; the court which awarded it may punish such offences in such a manner as shall seem proper by attachment. Dyer 218. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 2.

But if there be no palpable corruption, nor extraordinary circumstance of wilful negligence or obstinacy, the judgment whereof is to be left to the discretion of the court, it seems not usual to proceed in this manner; but to leave the party to his ordinary remedy against the sheriff, either by action or by rule to return the writ, or by an alias and pluries, which if he have no excuse for not executing, an attachment goes of course. Hob. 62, 264: Noy 101: F. N. B. 38: Finch 237: 5 Mod. 314, 315.

Attachment lies against attornies for injustice, and base dealing by their clients, in delaying suits, &c. as well as for contempts to the court. 2 Hawk. c. 22. § 11. If affidavits to ground an attachment are full as to the charge; yet if the party deny such charge by as plain and positive affidavits, he shall be discharged; but if he take a false oath, he may be indicted of perjury. Mod. Caf. in L. & E. 81.

Against sheriffs making false returns of writs, and against bailiffs for frauds in arrests, and exceeding their power, &c. attachment may be had. For contempts against the king's writs; using them in a vexatious manner; altering the teste, or filling them up after sealed, &c. attachment lies. And for contempts of an enormous kind, in not obeying writs, &c. attachment may issue against peers. 2 Hawk. c. 22. § 33, &c. For persuading jurors not to appear on a trial, attachment lies against the party, for obstructing the proceeding of the court. 1 Lill. 121. The court of B. R. may award attachments against any inferior courts usurping a jurisdiction, or acting contrary to justice. Salk. 207. Though it is usual first to send out a prohibition.

Attachment lies for proceeding in an inferior court, after a habeas corpus issued, and a supersedeas to stay proceedings. 21 Car. B. R. And attachment may be granted against justices of peace, for proceeding on an indictment after a certiorari delivered to them to remove the indictment. 1 Lill. 121. But it does not lie against a corporation, the mode of compulsion being by sequestration. Comp. 377. Attachment lies against a lord that refuses to hold his court, after a writ issued to him for that purpose, so that his tenant cannot have right done him. New Nat. Br. 6, 27.

An attachment is the proper remedy for disobedience of the rules of court; as of those made in ejectment, arbitrament, &c. So where a defendant in account, being adjudged to account before the auditors, refuses to do it, unless they will allow matter disallowed by the court before; or where one refuses to pay costs taxed by the master, whose taxation the law looks upon as a taxation by the court. 1 Mod. 21: 1 Salk. 71.

But an attachment is not granted for disobedience of a rule of Nisi prius, unless it be first made a rule of court; nor for disobedience of a rule made by a judge at his chamber, unless it be entered; nor for disobedience of any rule without personal service. 1 Salk. 84.

Also an attachment is proper for abuses of the process of the court; as for suing out execution where there is no judgment; bringing an appeal for the death of one known to be alive; making use of the process of a superior court, to bring a defendant within the jurisdiction of an inferior court, and then dropping it, using such process in a vexatious, oppressive, or unjust manner, without colour of serving any other end by it. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 33, &c. It seems also that counsellors are punishable by attachment for foul practices. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 30. Gaolers are thus punishable for misbehaviour in their offices. Id. ib: Witnesses for non-attendance on a trial. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 22. § 33. in n.—Peers are liable to attachment for certain outrageous contempts, as a disobedience to a writ of habeas corpus, and generally of other writs. Id. ib.

Attachments are usually granted on a rule to shew cause, unless the offence complained of be of a flagrant nature, and positively sworn to; in which last case the party is ordered to attend, which he must do in person, as must every one against whom an attachment is granted; and if he shall appear to be apparently guilty, the court in discretion, on consideration of the nature of the crime, and other circumstances, will either commit him immediately, in order to answer interrogatories to be exhibited against him concerning the contempt complained of, or will suffer him to enter into recognizance to answer such interrogatories; which if they be not exhibited within four days, the party may move to have the recognizance discharged; otherwise he must answer them, though exhibited after the four days; but in all cases, if he fully answer them, he shall be discharged as to the attachment, and the prosecutor shall be left to proceed against him for the perjury, if he thinks fit; but if he deny part of the contempts only, and confess other part, he shall not be discharged as to those denied, but the truth of them shall be examined, and such punishment inflicted as from the whole shall appear reasonable; and if his answer be evasive as to any material part, he shall be punished in the same manner as if he had confessed it. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 1: 1 Salk. 84: 6 Mod. 73: 2 Jones 178.

Upon all these examinations the master is to make his report, and the party is then and not before acquitted, or adjudged in contempt. Hardw. 23. and in the latter case is either immediately sentenced or committed to the marshal; unless the Court waive giving judgment (as they sometimes do from motives of lenity) and order the recognizance to be discharged, 3 Burr. 1256; or the

On attachment the party is not obliged to anſwer any interrogatories tending to convict him of any other offence. Stra. 444; or which may ſubject him to a penalty. Hardw. 239.

Corporation courts have ſometimes power by charter to iſſue attachments, and ſome courts-baron grant attachments of debt. Kitch. 79.

ATTACHMENT FOREIGN, is an attachment of the goods of foreigners, found in ſome liberty, to ſatisfy their creditors within ſuch liberty. Carth. Rep. 66.

Foreign Attachment under the cuſtom of London is thus; if a plaint be entered in the court of the mayor, or the ſheriff againſt A. and the proceſs be returned nichil, and thereupon plaintiff ſuggeſts that another perſon within London is indebted to A. the debtor ſhall be warned (whence he his called the garniſhee,) and if he does not deny himſelf to be indebted to A. the debt ſhall be attached in his hands. Com. Dig. tit. Attachment foreign, cites 22 E. 4. 30.

The plaint may be exibited in the mayor's or the ſheriffs' court; but the proceeding in the former is the moſt advantageous. Id. ib.

This cuſtom of foreign attachment is ſaid to prevail in Exeter and other places. Sed qu.

But a foreign attachment cannot be had when a ſuit is depending in any of the courts at Weſtminſter. Cro. Eliz. 691. And nothing is attachable but for a certain and due debt: though by the cuſtom of London money may be attached before due, as a debt; but not levied before due. Sid. 327: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 282, 283.

Foreign attachments in London, upon plaint of debt, are made after this manner; A. oweth B. 100*l.* and C. is indebted to A. 100*l.* B. enters an action againſt A. of 200*l.* and by virtue of that action a ſerjeant attacheth 100*l.* in the hands of C. as the money of A. to the uſe of B. which is returned upon that action. The attachment being made, and returned by the ſerjeant, the plaintiff is immediately to fee an attorney before the next court, or the defendant may then put in bail to the attachment, and nonſuit the plaintiff: four court days muſt paſs before the plaintiff can cauſe C. the garniſhee, in whoſe hands the money was attached, to ſhew cauſe why B. ſhould not condemn the 100*l.* attached in the hands of C. as the money of A. the defendant in the action (though not in the attachment) to the uſe of B. the plaintiff: and the garniſhee C. may appear in court by his attorney, wage his law, and plead that he hath no money in his hands of the defendant's, or other ſpecial matter; but the plaintiff may hinder his waging of law, by producing two ſufficient citizens to ſwear that the garniſhee had either money or goods, in his hands, of A. at the time of the attachment, of which affidavit is to be made before the lord mayor, and being filed, may be pleaded by way of eſtoppel: then the plaintiff muſt put in bail, that if the defendant come within a year and a day into court, and he can diſcharge himſelf of the money condemned in court, and that he owed nothing to the plaintiff at the time in the plaint mentioned, the ſaid money ſhall be forth-coming, &c. If the garniſhee fail to appear by his attorney, being warned by the officer to come into court to ſhew cauſe as aforeſaid, he is taken by default for want of appearing, and judgment given againſt him for the goods and money attached in his hands, and he is without remedy either at common law or in equity; for if taken in execution, he muſt pay the money condemned, though he hath not one penny, or go to priſon; but the garniſhee appearing to ſhew cauſe why the money or goods attached in his hands ought not to be condemned to the uſe of the plaintiff, having feed an attorney may plead as aforeſaid, that he hath no money or goods in his hands, of the party's againſt whom the attachment is made; and it will then be tried by a jury, and judgment awarded, &c. but after trial, bail may be put in, whereby the attachment ſhall be diſſolved, but the garniſhee, &c. and his ſecurity will then be liable to what debt the plaintiff ſhall make out to be due, upon the action: and an attachment is never thoroughly perfected, till there is a bail, and ſatisfaction upon record. Privileg. Lond.

But the original defendant muſt be ſummoned and have notice; otherwiſe judgment againſt the garniſhee will be erroneous; and the money paid or levied in execution, or it will not diſcharge the debt from the garniſhee to the defendant: (though it was alledged that the cuſtom of the city court is to give no notice.) 3 Wilſ. 297: 2 Black. Rep. 834: See 1 Ld. Raym. 727.

Where a foreign attachment is pleaded to an action, the cuſtom is to ſet forth, that he who levied the plaint ſhall have execution of the debt owing by himſelf, and by which he was attached, if the plaintiff in the original action ſhall not diſprove it within a year and a day; now if the plaintiff in the action below doth not ſet forth ſuch conditional judgment given by the court, it is wrong, becauſe he doth not bring his caſe within the cuſtom. Vide 2 Lutw. 985.

In aſſumpſit, &c. there was evidence given, that the debt was attached by the cuſtom of London before the action brought, and that it was condemned there before the plea pleaded; and this evidence was given upon the general iſſue non aſſumpſit; and it being inſiſted for the defendant, that this ſhould relate ſo as to defeat the plaintiff's action, it was adjudged, that where there is an attachment and condemnation before the action brought, it may be given in evidence upon the general iſſue, becauſe there is an alteration of the property; but if the attachment be only before the action brought, and the condemnation afterwards, the attachment may be pleaded in abatement, and the condemnation may be pleaded in bar, but ſhall not be given in evidence on the general iſſue, becauſe by the condemnation the property is altered, but not before. 1 Salk. 280, 291.

Action of debt, &c. the defendant pleaded in bar, that there was a cuſtom in London to attach the debt before the day of payment came; et per curiam, ſuch a cuſtom may be good, but to have judgment to recover the debt before the day of payment is come, cannot be a good cuſtom, becauſe the debtee himſelf could not recover in ſuch caſe, and therefore he who made the attachment ſhall not. This cuſtom was pleaded, that the debtee in perſon, or by his attorney, may ſwear that the debt is due; but this cannot be good as to the attorney: it was agreed, that goods might be attached by a foreign attachment, and that the value thereof ought to be found before judgment; but that this plea was ill, becauſe the defendant did not aver it, viz. et hoc paratus eſt verificare. W. Jones 406.

A ſum of money was to be paid at Michaelmas, and it was attached before that day; adjudged, that a foreign attachment cannot reach a debt before it is due; therefore, though the judgment on the attachment was after Michaelmas, yet the money being attached before it was due, it is for that reaſon void. Cro. Eliz. 184. For further matter See Com. Dig. tit. Attachment, foreign Attachment.

Money due to an executor or adminiſtrator, as ſuch, cannot be attached. It would give a ſimple contract creditor priority over judgments, &c. Fiſher v. Lane and others, 3 Wilſ. 297. Nor truſt-money in the hands of the garniſhee. See Doug. 380.

In an action on the caſe the plaintiff had judgment againſt the defendant, and he owing 60*l.* to one G. D. he entered a plaint againſt him in London, and attached the 60*l.* in the hands of the ſaid defendant, againſt whom the plaintiff had recovered as aforeſaid, and had execution according to the cuſtom; afterwards the plaintiff brought a ſci. fa. againſt the defendant, to ſhew cauſe why he ſhould not have execution upon the judgment which he had recovered, to which the defendant pleaded the execution upon the attachment; and upon demurrer to that plea it was adjudged againſt the defendant, becauſe a duty which accrueth by matter of record, cannot be attached by the cuſtom of London; for judgments obtained in the king's courts ſhall not be defeated or avoided by ſuch particular cuſtoms, they being of ſo high a nature, that they cannot be reached by attachment. 1 Leon. 29.

Debtor and creditor being both citizens of London, the debtor delivered ſeveral goods to the Exeter carrier then in London, to carry and deliver them at Exeter, and the creditor attached them in the hands of the carrier for the debt due to him from his debtor; adjudged, that the action ſhould be diſcharged, becauſe the carrier is priviledged in his perſon and goods, and not only in the goods which are his own, but in thoſe of other men, of which he is in poſſeſſion, for he is anſwerable for them. 1 Leon. 189.

An executor ſubmitted to an award, and the arbitrators awarded, that the defendant ſhould pay the executor 350*l.* This money is not attachable in his hands by any creditor of his teſtator, though it is aſſets in his hands when recovered; becauſe it was not due to the teſtator tempore mortis, and the cuſtom of foreign attachments extends only to ſuch debts. 1 Vent. 111.

ATTACHMENT OF THE FOREST, Is one of the three courts held there. Manwood 90, 99. The lower court is called the attachment; the middle one, the ſwainmote; the higheſt, the juſtice in Eyre's ſeat. The court of attachment ſeemeth to be ſo called, becauſe the verderors of the foreſt have therein no other authority, but to receive the attachments of offenders againſt vert and veniſon, taken by the reſt of the officers, and to enroll them, that they may be preſented and puniſhed at the next juſtice ſeat, Manwood 93. And this attaching is by three means; 1. By goods and chattels. 2. By the body, pledges, and mainpriſe. 3. By the body only. This court is kept every forty days. See Crompton, in his Court of the Foreſt.

ATTAINDER, attincta and attinctura.] The ſtain or corruption of the blood of a criminal capitally condemned; the immediate inſeparable conſequence, by the common law, on the pronouncing the ſentence of death.

He is then called attaint, attinctus, ſtained or blackened. He is no longer of any credit or reputation; he cannot be a witneſs in any court; neither is he capable of performing the functions of another man: for by an anticipation of his puniſhment, he is already dead in law. 3 Inſt. 213. This is after judgment: for there is great difference between a man convicted, and attainted; though they are frequently through inaccuracy confounded together; when judgement is once pronounced, both law and fact conſpire to prove him completely guilty; and there is not the remoteſt poſſibility left of any thing to be ſaid in his favour. Upon judgment therefore of death, and not before, the attainder of a criminal commences: or upon ſuch circumſtances as are equivalent to judgment of death; as judgment of outlawry on a capital crime, pronounced for abſconding or fleeing from juſtice, which tacitly confeſſes the guilt. And therefore either upon judgment of outlawry, or of death, for treaſon or felony, a man ſhall be ſaid to be attainted. 4 Comm. 380, 1.

A man is attainted by appearance, or by proceſs: attainder on appearance is by confeſſion, or verdict, &c. Confeſſion, when the priſoner upon his indictment being aſked whether Guilty or Not guilty, anſwers Guilty, without putting himſelf upon his country; (and formerly confeſſion was allowed before the coroner in ſanctuary; whereupon the offender was to abjure the realm, and this was called attainder by abjuration). Attainder by verdict is when the priſoner at the bar pleadeth Not guilty, and is found guilty by the verdict of the jury of life and death. And attainder by proceſs, (otherwiſe termed attainder by default or outlawry,) is when the party flieth, and is not found, until he hath been five times publickly called or proclaimed in the county, on the laſt whereof he is outlawed upon his default. Staundf. Pl. Co. 44. 122. 182. Alſo perſons may be attainted by act of parliament.

Acts of attainder of criminals have been paſſed in ſeveral reigns, on the diſcovery of plots and rebellions, from the reign of king Charles II. when an act was made for the attainder of ſeveral perſons guilty of the murder of king Charles I. to this time; among which, that for attainting Sir John Fenwick, for conſpiring againſt king William, is the moſt remarkable; it being made to attaint and convict him of high treaſon on the oath of one witneſs, juſt after a law had been enacted, That no perſon ſhould be tried or attainted of high treaſon where corruption of blood is incurred, but by the oath of two lawful witneſſes, unleſs the party confeſs, ſtand mute, &c. Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 3. But in the caſe of Sir John Fenwick, there was ſomething extraordinary; for he was indicted of treaſon, on the oaths of two witneſſes; though but one only was produced againſt him on his trial. It was alledged Sir John had tampered with, and prevailed on one of the witneſſes to withdraw.

The conſequences of attainder are forfeiture and corruption of blood; which latter cannot regularly be taken off but by act of parliament. Co. Lit. 391. b.

As to forfeiture of lands, &c. by attainder, See this Dict. tit. Forfeiture. As to Corruption of Blood, this operates upwards and downwards, ſo that an attainted perſon can neither inherit lands or other hereditaments from his anceſtors, nor retain thoſe he is already in poſſeſſion of, nor tranſmit them by deſcent to any heir; but the ſame ſhall eſcheat to the lord of the fee, ſubject to the king's ſuperior right of forfeiture: and the perſon attainted ſhall alſo obſtruct all deſcents to his poſterity, wherever they are obliged to derive a title through him to a remoter anceſtor. See tits. Tenure, Deſcent, Forfeiture.

This is one of thoſe notions which our laws have adopted from the feodal conſtitutions, at the time of the Norman conqueſt, as appears from its being unknown in thoſe tenures which are indiſputably Saxon, or Gavelkind: wherein, though by treaſon, according to the antient Saxon laws, the land is forfeited to the king, yet no corruption of blood, no impediment of deſcent enſues; and, on judgment of mere felony, no eſcheat accrues to the lord. And therefore as every other oppreſſive mark of feodal tenures is now happily worn away in theſe kingdoms, it is to be hoped that the corruption of blood, with all its connected conſequences not only of preſent eſcheat, but of future incapacities of inheritance even to the twentieth generation, may in proceſs of time be aboliſhed by act of parliament: as it ſtands upon a very different footing from the forfeiture of lands for high treaſon, affecting the king's perſon or government. And indeed the legiſlature has, from time to time, appeared very inclinable to give way to ſo equitable a proviſion; by enacting that, in certain treaſons reſpecting the papal ſupremacy, Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 1; and the public coin, Stats. 5 Eliz. c. 11: 18 Eliz. c. 1: 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26: 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28; and in many of the new made felonies, created ſince the reign of Henry the Eighth by act of parliament, corruption of blood ſhall be ſaved. But as in ſome of the acts for creating felonies (and thoſe not of the moſt atrocious kind,) this ſaving was neglected, or forgotten to be made, it ſeems to be highly reaſonable and expedient to antiquate the whole of this doctrine by one undiſtinguiſhing law: eſpecially as by the ſtat. of 7 Ann. c. 21, (the operation of which is poſtponed by St. 17 Geo. 2. c. 39,) after the death of the ſons of the late Pretender, no attainder for treaſon will extend to the diſinheriting any heir, nor the prejudice of any perſon, other than the offender himſelf; which virtually aboliſhes all corruption of blood for treaſon, though (unleſs the legiſlature ſhould interpoſe,) it will ſtill continue for many ſorts of felony. 4 Comm. 388, 9.

In treaſon for counterfeiting the coin, although by the ſtatutes corruption of blood is ſaved, yet the lands of the offender are forfeited immediately to the king on attainder, it being a diſtinct penalty from corruption of blood: for the corruption may be ſaved, and the forfeiture remain, &c. And accordingly ſo it is provided by ſome ſtatutes. 1 Salk. 85.

Attainders may be reverſed or falſified, by writ of error, or by plea. If by writ of error, it muſt be by the king's leave, &c. and when by plea, it may be by denying the treaſon, pleading a pardon by act of parliament, &c. 3 Inſt. 232.

By a king's taking the crown upon him, all attainders of his perſon are ipſo facto purged, without any reverſal. 1 Inſt. 26: Finch. L. 82: Wood 17. This was the declaration of parliament, made in favour of Henry the 7th. See 1 Comm. 248.

The Stat. 8 W. 3. c. 5, requires Sir George Barclay, major general Holmes, and other perſons to ſurrender themſelves to the lord chief juſtice, or ſecretaries of ſtate; or to be attainted. By the 13 W. 3. c. 3, the pretended Prince of Wales is under attainder of treaſon, &c. And by 1 Geo. 1. c. 16, the Duke of Ormond and others are attainted. And beſides theſe acts of attainder, bills for inflicting pains and penalties are ſometimes paſt; as that againſt the biſhop of Rocheſter; Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 17.

ATTAINT, attincta.] A writ that lieth to enquire whether a jury of twelve men gave a falſe verdict; (Finch. 484;) that ſo the judgment following thereupon, may be reverſed: and this muſt be brought in the life-time of him for whom the verdict was given, and of two at leaſt of the jurors who gave it. This lay at the common law, only upon writs of aſſiſe; and ſeems to have been co-eval with that inſtitution by king Henry II. at the inſtance of his chief juſtice Glanvil: being probably meant as a check upon the vaſt power then repoſed in the recognitors of aſſiſe, of finding a verdict according to their own perſonal knowledge, without the examination of witneſſes. And even here it extended no further than to ſuch inſtances, where the iſſue was joined upon the very point of aſſiſe (the heirſhip, diſſeiſin, &c.) and not on any collateral matter; as villainage, baſtardy, or any other diſputed fact.

In theſe caſes the aſſiſe was ſaid to be turned into an inqueſt or jury, (aſſiſa vertitur in juratam,) or that the aſſiſe ſhould be taken in modum juratæ, et non in modum aſſiſæ; that is, that the iſſue ſhould be tried by a common jury or inqueſt, and not by recognitors of aſſiſe: (Bract. l. 4. tr. 1. c. 34. § 2, 3, 4.—tr. 3. c. 17: tr. 5. c. 4. § 1, 2: Flet. l. 5. c. 22. § 8: Co. Ent. 61. b: Booth. 213:) and then it ſeems that no attaint lay againſt the inqueſt or jury that determined ſuch collateral iſſue: Br. 4. 1. 34 2: Flet. l. 5. c. 22. Neither is mention made by our antient writers, of ſuch a proceſs obtaining after the trial by inqueſt or jury, in the old Norman or feodal actions proſecuted by writ of entry. Nor did any attaint lie in treſpaſs, debt, or other action perſonal, by the old common law: becauſe thoſe were always determined by common inqueſts or juries. Year B. 28 E. 3. 15: 17 Aſſ. pl. 15: Flet. 5. 22. 16. At length the ſt. of Weſtm. 1, (3 E. 1.) c. 38. allowed an attaint to be ſued upon inqueſts, as well as aſſiſes, which were taken upon any plea of land or of freehold. But this was at the king's diſcretion, and is ſo underſtood by the author of Fleta, (l. 5. c. 22. § 8. and 16,) a writer contemporary with the ſtatute; though Sir Ed. Coke, (2 Inſt. 130. 237,) ſeems to hold a different opinion. Other ſubſequent ſtatutes, (1 E. 3. ſt. 1. c. 6; 5 E. 3. c. 7: 28 Ed. 3. c. 8,) introduced the ſame remedy in all pleas of treſpaſs, and the ſtat. 34 E. 3. c. 7. extended to all pleas whatſoever, perſonal as well as real; except only the writ of right, in ſuch caſes where the miſe or iſſue is joined on the mere right, and not on any collateral queſtion. For though the attaint ſeems to have been generally allowed in the reign of Henry the Second, at the firſt introduction of the grand aſſiſe, (which at that time might conſiſt of only twelve recognitors, in caſe they were all unanimous) yet ſubſequent authorities have holden, that no attaint lies on a falſe verdict given upon the mere right, either at common law or by ſtatute; becauſe that is determined by the grand aſſiſe, appealed to by the party himſelf, and now conſiſting of ſixteen jurors. Bract. 290: Flet. 5, 227: Britt. 243 b: 12 Hen. 6: 6 Bro. Abr. tit. Atteint 42; 1 Roll. Abr. 280.

The jury who are to try this falſe verdict, muſt be twenty-four, and are called the grand jury; for the law wills not that the oath of one jury of twelve men ſhould be attainted or ſet aſide by an equal number, nor by leſs indeed than double the former. Bract. l. 4. tr. 5. c. 4. § 1: Flet. l. 5. c. 22. § 7. If the matter in diſpute be of 40*l.* value in perſonals, or of forty ſhillings a year in lands and tenements, then by ſtat. 15 Hen. 6. c. 5, each grand juror muſt have a freehold to the annual value of twenty pounds. And he that brings the attaint can give no other evidence to the grand jury, than what was originally given to the petit: for as their verdict is now trying, and the queſtion is, whether or no they did right upon the evidence that appeared to them, the law adjudged it the higheſt abſurdity to produce any ſubſequent proof upon ſuch trial, and to condemn the prior juriſdiction for not believing evidence which they never knew. But thoſe againſt whom it is brought are allowed, in affirmance of the firſt verdict, to produce new matter; (Finch. L. 486;) becauſe the petit jury may have formed their verdict upon evidence of their own knowledge, which never appeared in court. If the grand jury found the verdict a falſe one, the judgment by the common law was, that the jurors ſhould loſe their liberam legem and become for ever infamous; ſhould forfeit their goods and the profits of their lands; ſhould themſelves be impriſoned, and their wives and children thrown out of doors; ſhould have their houſes raſed, their trees extirpated, and their meadows ploughed; and that the plaintiff ſhould be reſtored to all that he loſt by reaſon of the unjuſt verdict. But as the ſeverity of this puniſhment had its uſual effect, in preventing the law from being executed, therefore by the ſtat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 24, (revived by 23 Hen. 8. c. 3; and made perpetual by 13 Eliz. c. 25;) an attaint is allowed to be brought after the death of the party, and a more moderate puniſhment was inflicted upon attainted jurors, viz. perpetual infamy, and, if the cauſe of action were above 40*l.* value, a forfeiture of 20*l.* a-piece by the jurors; or if under 40*l.* then 5*l.* a-piece, to be divided between the king and the party injured. So that a man may now bring an attaint either upon the ſtatute or at common law, at his election; (3 Inſt. 164;) and in both of them may reverſe the former judgment. But the practice of ſetting aſide verdicts upon motion, and granting new trials, has ſo ſuperſeded the uſe of both ſorts of attaints, that very few inſtances of an attaint appear in our books later than the fixteenth century. Cro. Eliz. 309: Cro. Jac. 90.

It may be matter of ſome curioſity however, and perhaps of uſe, under this head, to ſtate ſo much of the old law as tends further to explain,

I. By and againſt whom attaint may be brought.
II. In what caſes it will lie.
III. Of the proceedings in attaint.

I. The party grieved may have writ of attaint againſt the other party, (whether plaintiff or defendant) and againſt the jurors or ſuch of them as ſhall be then living: it is ſaid any one that is hurt by the falſe verdict may bring this writ; and if the verdict be for matter of land, the remedy commonly runs with the land, ſo that any party or privy, as an heir or executor may have it. F. N. B. 109: Co. Lit. 294: 1 And. 24. 5.

Where treſpaſs is brought againſt baron and feme, and the plaintiff recovers, the baron alone ſhall not have attaint, for it ſhall be brought according to the record. Br. Baron and Feme, pl. 22. Succeſſors of a parſon ſhall have error or attaint of judgment againſt the predeceſſor. Br. Attaint, pl. 110. None ſhall have attaint but he that may be reſtored to the thing loſt by the judgment; per Bramſtone Ch. J. Mar. 210. Reverſioners may have an attaint upon a falſe verdict, &c. againſt a particular tenant, who ſhall be reſtored to his poſſeſſion, and the reverſioner to his arrearages. ſtat. 9 R. 2. c. 3. This action muſt be brought againſt the jurors, and the parties to the firſt ſuit; or, if the parties be dead, their heirs, or executors, or any other for the moſt part that recovered by the firſt judgment. Dyer 201. If all the jurors but one are dead, the action is gone, and no attaint can be brought; and where any one dies depending the ſuit, it is gone; but not by the death of the defendant that recovered in the firſt action. Dyer 139: Hob. 227.

II. Attaint lies where a jury gives a verdict contrary to evidence: where a judge declares the law erroneouſly, judgment may be reverſed; but in this caſe the jury ſhall be excuſed. Vaugh. 145. Attaint lies not for that which is not given in evidence; nor upon an inqueſt of office, &c. or when a thing found is impertinent to the iſſue, Hob. 53: Co. Lit. 355. And no attaint lieth where the king is ſole party, and the jury find for him. 4 Leon. 46. aliter where the ſuit is tam pro domino rege quam pro ſeipſo. 4 Leon. 46. An attaint may be brought where any material falſehood is found, though ſome truth may be found with it; as where a jury ſhall find a man guilty of many treſpaſſes, who is guilty but of one treſpaſs. So if a jury find any thing againſt the common or ſtatute law, that all men are to take notice of, this may make them chargeable in attaint. Bro. 44: Hob. 227.

The jury may be attainted two ways; 1ſt, where they find contrary to evidence; 2dly, where they find out of the compaſs of the allegata. But to attaint them for finding contrary to evidence is not eaſy, becauſe they may have evidence of their own conuſance of the matter by them, or they may find upon diſtruſt of the witneſſes, or their own proper knowledge; but if they find upon evidence that does not prove the allegata, there it is eaſy to ſubject them to an attaint, becauſe it is manifeſt that what is ſo found is an evidence not correſponding to their iſſue, and this was the only curb they had over the jurors; for the judge being beſt maſter of the allegata, if they did not follow his direction touching the proof, they were then liable to the danger of an attaint; and therefore ſince the judges, from the difficulty of attainting the jury have granted new trials, whereby jurors have been freed freed from the fear of attaint, they have taken a great liberty in giving verdicts; but ſince the attaint is only diſuſed, and not taken away, 'tis neceſſary that a certain matter ſhould be brought before them; and therefore in treſpaſs, the quantity and value of the thing demanded muſt be ſo conveniently deſcribed, that if the jury find damages beyond ſuch quantities and value, it may be apparently exceſſive, and they ſubject to the attaint; and ſo on ſpecial contracts, they muſt be ſet forth ſo preciſely, that if evidence be given of another contract, and not in the allegations, and yet the jury find for the plaintiff, they may be ſubject to an attaint; and were it otherwiſe, if the plaintiff had a jury to his turn, and the judge ſhould direct that the plaintiff be non-ſuit, yet if the plaintiff would ſtand the trial, the judge muſt give poſitive directions to find for the defendant; and there would be no means of compelling the jury to find according to the direction of the judge, if they were not under the terror of an attaint, if they did otherwiſe; ſo this is the only curb that the law has put in the hands of the judges to reſtrain jurors from giving corrupt verdicts. Gilb. H. C. B. 128.

III. The proceſs to be iſſued is directed by ſtat. 23 H. 8. c. 3, already mentioned: and by the ſaid ſtatute if any of the petit jury appear at the return of the writ of attaint, the plaintiff ſhall aſſign the falſe oath of the verdict untruly given. And if the defendant, or any of the petit jury appear not on diſtreſs, the grand inqueſt ſhall be taken by default.

The petit jury can plead no plea, but ſuch as may excuſe them of the falſe oath. 1 Rol. Abr. 285.

In the court of King's Bench and Common Pleas, and the court of Huſtings of London, attaint may be brought; and the plaintiff ſetting aſide the verdict, ſhall have reſtitution, &c. But if the firſt verdict be affirmed, the plaintiff ſhall be impriſoned and fined. 11 H. 7. c. 21.

In attaint the parties and the jury appeared and demanded oyer of the record upon which the attaint was founded, which record being in the Common Pleas, they had it, and thereupon the plaintiff aſſigned the falſe oath; the defendants pleaded, that they made a good and lawful oath; upon which they were at iſſue, and in the ſame term the record was removed by a writ of error into the King's Bench; adjudged, that notwithſtanding it was thus removed, the court of Common Pleas might proceed if the proceſs for the grand jury were returned. Dyer 284.

Attaint was brought in the Common Pleas againſt a jury, for a verdict given in the King's Bench, whereupon the record was removed from that court to the Common Pleas, and there the verdict was affirmed; adjudged, that the plaintiff in the action ſhall have execution according to the verdict, for the record is in the King's Bench, and nothing but the tenor thereof in the Common Pleas; but if the verdict had been ſet aſide, and execution had been had upon it before it was ſet aſide, then the court of Common Pleas might have awarded reſtitution to the party grieved. Cro. Eliz. 371.

A non-ſuit in attaint is peremptory: and no ſuperſedeas is grantable upon attaint. Co. Lit. 227.

An attaint as well as a writ of error ſhall follow the nature of the action upon which it is founded; ſo that if ſummons and ſeverance lies in the firſt action, it ſhall do ſo likewiſe in the attaint, but this is not a ſuperſedeas as a writ of error is; adjudged likewiſe, if damages are recovered againſt ſeveral in a nation of conſpiracy, all of them muſt join in an attaint, and the non-ſuit of one of them ſhall not hurt the reſt. 6 Rep. 25.

In an attaint the plaintiff ſhall recover againſt all the jurors, tenants, and defendants, the coſts and damages, which he ſhall ſuſtain by delay or otherwiſe in that ſuit: and if the defendant's plea in bar be found againſt him, the plaintiff will have judgment to be reſtored to what he loſt, with damages. ſtats. 11 H. 6. c. 4. and 15 H. 6. c. 5.

ATTORNEY, attornatus.] Is one that is appointed by another man to do any thing in his abſence. Weſt. Symb: Crompt. Juriſdict. 105. An attorney is either publick, in the courts of record, the King's Bench and Common Pleas, &c. and made by warrant from his client: or private, upon occaſion for any particular buſineſs, who is commonly made by letter of attorney. In ancient times, thoſe of authority in courts had it in their power whether they would ſuffer men to appear or ſue by any other but themſelves: and the king's writs were to be obtained for the admiſſion of attornies: but, ſince that, attornies have been allowed by ſeveral ſtatutes. Attornies may be made in ſuch pleas whereon appeal lieth not: in criminal caſes there will be no attornies admitted. See ſtat. Glouc. 6 Ed. 1. ſt. 1. c. 8. An infant ought not to appear by attorney, but by guardian, for he cannot make an attorney, but the court may aſſign him a guardian; 1 Lill. Abr. 138. Infants, after they come to full age, may ſue by attorney, though admitted before by guardian, &c. In action againſt baron and feme, the feme being within age, ſhe muſt appear by guardian: but if they bring an action, the huſband ſhall make attorney for both. 1 Danv. Abr. 602. Where baron and feme are ſued, though the wife cannot make attorney, the huſband may do it for both of them. 2 Sand. 213 One non compos mentis, being within age, is to appear by guardian; but after he is of age he muſt do it by attorney. *Co. ATTORNIES AT LAW, Are ſuch perſons as take upon them the buſineſs of other men, by whom they are retained.

Before the ſtatute of Weſt. 2. c. 10, [13 Ed. 1. A. D. 1285,] all attornies were made by letters patent under the great ſeal, commanding the juſtices to admit the perſon to be his attorney. Theſe patents, where they were obtained, ſeemed to have been inrolled by a proper officer, called the clerk of the warrants; and alſo the courts inrolled thoſe patents on which any proceedings were. If ſuch letters patent could not be obtained, the perſons were obliged to appear each day in court in their proper perſons. Gilb. H. C. P. 32, 33.

The ſaid ſtatute of Weſt. 2. c. 10, gives to all perſons a liberty of appearing, and appointing an attorney, as if they had letters patent; and therefore the clerk of the warrants received each perſon's warrant, and upon the warrant it equally appeared to the court, that he had appointed ſuch a one his attorney to the end of the cauſe, unleſs revoked; ſo that on each act there is no occaſion of the plaintiff's and defendant's preſence, as was uſed before that time. This authority continues till judgment, and for a year and a day, and afterwards to ſue out execution, and for a longer time, if they continue execution; but if not, the judgment is ſuppoſed to be ſatisfied; and to make it appear otherwiſe, the plaintiff muſt again come into court, which he either does by a ſcire fac' or an action of debt on the judgment. Gilb. H. C. P. 33.

The attornies of B. R. are of record as well as the attornies of C. B. 1 Roll. 3. And it is now the common courſe for the plaintiff and defendant to appear by attorney. F. N. B. 26. D. But where the party ſtands in contempt, the court will not admit him by attorney, but oblige him to appear in perſon. ib. 262. Outlawry is excepted by ſtat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18, unleſs where the court orders ſpecial bail. By ſtat. 13 W. 3. c. 6, attornies are to take the oaths to government under penalties and diſability to practiſe. By ſtat. 1 H. 5. c. 4, "no ſheriff, ſheriff's clerk, receiver, nor ſheriff's bailiff ſhall be attorney in the king's courts during the time he is in office with any ſuch ſheriff."

In Trinity Term 31 Geo. 3, a rule of court was made to prevent the admiſſion of perſons under irregular articles of clerkſhip, &c. chiefly to prevent the clerks of attornies from acting as principals. See 4 Term Rep. 379.

Parties to fines, as well demandant or plaintiff as tenants or defendants, that will acknowledge their right of lands unto others in pleas of warrantia chartæ, covenant, &c. before the fines paſs, ſhall appear perſonally, ſo that their age, ideocy, or other default (if any be) may be diſcerned: provided that if any, by age, impotency, or caſualty, is not able to come into court, one of the juſtices ſhall go to the party and receive his cognizance, and ſhall take with him a knight or man of good fame. Barons of the exchequer and juſtices ſhall not admit attornies, but in pleas that paſs before them, and where they be aſſigned. Reſerving to the Chancellor his authority in admitting attornies, and to the Chief Juſtices. ſtat. 15 Ed. 2. ſtat. 1.

In reſpect of the ſeveral courts, there are attornies at large, and attornies ſpecial, belonging to this or that court only. An attorney may be a ſolicitor in other courts, by a ſpecial retainer: one may be attorney on record, and another do the buſineſs; and there are attornies who manage buſineſs out of the courts, &c. ſtat. 4 H. 4. c. 18, was enacted, that the juſtices ſhould examine attornies, and remove the unſkilful; and attornies ſhall ſwear to execute their offices truly, &c. and by ſtat. 33 H. 6. c. 7, the number of attornies in Norfolk and Suffolk were limited.

By 3 Jac. 1. c. 7, attornies, &c. ſhall not be allowed any fees laid out for counſel, or otherwiſe, unleſs they have tickets thereof ſigned by them that receive ſuch fees; and they ſhall give in true bills to their clients of all the charges of ſuits, under their hands, before the clients ſhall be charged with the payment thereof. If they delay their client's ſuit for gain; or demand more than their due fees and diſburſements, the clients ſhall recover coſts and treble damages; and they ſhall be for ever after diſabled to be attornies. None ſhall be admitted attornies in courts of record, but ſuch as have been brought up in the ſaid courts, or are well practiſed and ſkilled; and of an honeſt diſpoſition; and no attorney ſhall ſuffer any other to follow a ſuit in his name, on pain of forfeiting 20 l. to be divided between the king and the party grieved. This ſtatute, as to fees to counſel, doth not extend to matters tranſacted in inferior courts, but only to ſuits in the courts of Weſtminſter Hall. Carth. 147.

By the ſtat. 12 Geo. 1. cap. 29, If any who hath been convicted of forgery, perjury, ſubornation of perjury, or common barratry, ſhall practiſe as an attorney or ſolicitor in any ſuit or action in any court, the judge where ſuch action ſhall be brought hath power to tranſport the offender for ſeven years, by ſuch ways, and under ſuch penalties as felons.

The act 2 Geo. 2. c. 23, ordains, That all attornies ſhall be ſworn, admitted and inrolled, before allowed to ſue out writs in the courts at Weſtminſter; and after the firſt of December 1730 none ſhall be permitted to practiſe but ſuch as have ſerved a clerkſhip of five years to an attorney, and they ſhall be examined, ſworn and admitted in open court; and attornies ſhall not have more than two clerks at one time, &c. Every writ and copy of any proceſs ſerved on a defendant, and alſo every warrant made out thereon, ſhall be indorſed with the name of the attorney by whom ſued forth; and no attornies or ſolicitors ſhall commence any action for fees till a month after the delivery of their bills ſubſcribed with their hands: alſo the parties chargeable may in the mean time get ſuch bills taxed, and upon the taxation the ſum remaining due is to be paid in full of the ſaid bills, or in default the parties ſhall be liable to attachment, &c. And the attorney is to pay the coſts of taxation, if the bill be reduced a ſixth part. A penalty of 50 l. inflicted, and diſability to practiſe, for acting contrary to this ſtatute.

By ſt. 6 Geo. 2. cap. 27, Attornies of the courts at Weſtminſter may practiſe in inferior courts.

By 12 Geo. 2. c. 13. Attornies, &c. that act in any county-court, without being admitted according to the ſtatute 2 Geo. 2. c. 23, ſhall forfeit 20 l. recoverable in the courts of record; and no attorney, who is a priſoner in any priſon, ſhall ſue out any writ, or proſecute ſuits; if he doth, the proceedings ſhall be void, and ſuch attorney, &c. is to be ſtruck off the roll. But ſuits commenced before by them may be carried on. A quaker ſerving a clerkſhip, and taking his ſolemn affirmation inſtead of an oath, ſhall be admitted an attorney.

ATTORNEY.

By the ſtat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 46, Perſons bound clerks to attornies or ſolicitors are to cauſe affidavits to be made and filed of the execution of the articles, names and places of abode of attorney or ſolicitor, and clerk, and none to be admitted till the affidavits be produced and read in court; no attorney having diſcontinued buſineſs to take any clerk. Clerks are to ſerve actually during the whole time, and make affidavits thereof. Perſons admitted ſworn clerks in Chancery, or ſerving a clerkſhip to ſuch, may be admitted ſolicitors. By the ſtat. 23 G. 2. c. 26, Any perſon duly admitted a ſolicitor, may be admitted an attorney, without any fee for the oath, or any ſtamp to be impreſſed on the parchment, whereon his admiſſion ſhall be written, in the ſame manner as by ſtat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 23. § 20, Attornies may be admitted ſolicitors.

By ſtat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 80, Every admitted attorney, ſolicitor, notary, proctor, agent or procurator, ſhall annually take out a ſtampt certificate [with a 5 l. ſtamp if within the bills of mortality, and 3 l. if elſewhere,] from the courts in which they practiſe, on penalty of 50 l.

Attornies of courts, &c. ſhall not receive or procure any blank warrant for arreſts from any ſheriff, without writ firſt delivered, on pain of ſevere puniſhment, expulſion, &c. And no attorney ſhall make out a writ with a clauſe ac etiam billæ, &c. where ſpecial bail is not required by law. Paſch. 15 Car. 2. See tit. Appearance. Action upon the caſe lies for a client againſt his attorney, if he appear for him without a warrant; or if he plead a plea for him, for which he hath not his warrant. 1 Lill. Abr. 140. But if an attorney appear without warrant, and judgment is had, againſt his client, the judgment ſhall ſtand, if the attorney be reſponſible: contra, if the attorney be not reſponſible. 1 Salk. 88.

Action lies againſt an attorney for ſuffering judgment againſt his client by nil dicit, when he had given him a warrant to plead the general iſſue: this is underſtood where it is done by covin. 1 Danv. Abr. 185. If an attorney makes default in a plea of land, by which the party loſes his land, he may have a writ of deceipt againſt the attorney, and recover all in damages. Ibid. An attorney owes to his client ſecrecy and diligence, as well as fidelity; and if he take reward on the other ſide, or cauſe an attorney to appear and confeſs the action, &c. he may be puniſhed. Hob. 9.

But action lies not againſt an attorney retained in a ſuit, though he knows the plaintiff hath no cauſe of action; he only acting as a ſervant in the way of his profeſſion. 4 Inſt. 117: 1 Mod. 209. Though, where an attorney or ſolicitor is found guilty of a groſs neglect, the court of Chancery has in ſome caſes ordered him to pay the coſts. 1 P. Wms. 593. He who is attorney at one time, is attorney at all times, pending the plea. 1 Danv. 609. And the plaintiff or defendant may not change his attorney, while the ſuit is depending, without leave of the court, which would reflect on the credit of attornies; nor until his fees are paid. Mich. 14 Car. A cauſe is to proceed notwithſtanding the death of an attorney therein; and not be delayed on that account. For if an attorney dieth, the plaintiff or defendant may be required to make a new attorney. 2 Keb. 275.

Attornies are liable to be puniſhed in a ſummary way, either by attachment, or having their names ſtruck out of the roll for ill practice, attended with fraud and corruption, and committed againſt the obvious rules of juſtice and common honeſty; but the court will not eaſily be prevailed on to proceed in this manner, if it appears, that the matter complained of was rather owing to neglect or accident than deſign; or if the party injured has other remedy by act of parliament, or action at law. 12 Mod. 251, 318, 440, 583, 657, 4 Mod. 367.

If an attorney, defendant in an action, does not appear in due time, plaintiff may ſign a forejudger, which enables him to ſtrike the defendant off the roll, and then he may be ſued as a common perſon (ſtat. 2 H. 4. c. 8,) and cannot be proceeded againſt by bill.—On making ſatisfaction to the plaintiff, an attorney ſo forejudged, may be reſtored. See Impey's Inſtructor Clericalis C. P. 521.

Sometimes attornies are ſtruck off the roll on their own application, for the purpoſe of being called to the bar, &c. and in this caſe, they muſt be diſbarred by their inn, before they are re-admitted attornies. Dougl. 114.

An attorney convicted of felony ſtruck off the roll. Cowp. 829.

They are alſo liable to be puniſhed for baſe and unfair dealings towards their clients, in the way of buſineſs, as for protracting ſuits by little ſhifts and devices, and putting the parties to unneceſſary expence, in order to raiſe their bills; or demanding fees for buſineſs that was never done; or for refuſing to deliver up their client's writings with which they had been entruſted in the way of buſineſs; or money which has been recovered and received by them to their client's uſe, and for other ſuch like groſs and palpable abuſe. 2 Hawk. P. C. 144: 8 Mod. 306: 12 Mod. 516.

In a criminal caſe the attorney for defendant may be his bail. Doug. 467. See tit. Bail.

Payment to the attorney, is payment to the principal. Dougl. 623: 1 Black. R. 8.

An action lies againſt an attorney for neglecting to charge a perſon in execution at his client's ſuit, according to a rule of court; although it ſeems it was rather want of judgment than negligence. 3 Wilſ. 325:—But the court will not proceed againſt him for it in a ſummary way. 4 Burr. 2060.

An attorney has a lien on the money recovered by his client, for his bill of coſts: if the money come to his hands he may retain to the amount of his bill. He may ſtop it in tranſitu if he can lay hold of it; if he apply to the court, they will prevent it's being paid over until his demand is ſatisfied. If the attorney give notice to the defendant not to pay till his bill be diſcharged, a payment by the defendant after ſuch notice, would be in his own wrong, and like paying a debt which has been aſſigned after notice. Dougl. 238.

The court under circumſtances, will entertain a ſummary juriſdiction over an attorney in obliging him to deliver up deeds, &c. on ſatisfaction of his lien, tho' they came into his hands as ſteward of a court and receiver of rents. 3 Term R. 275. See 1 Salk. 87: 1 Lill. 148: Mod. Caſ. Law & Eq. 306. the latter that an attorney cannot detain papers delivered to him on a ſpecial truſt for money due to him in that very buſineſs.

Attornies have the privilege to ſue and be ſued only in the courts at Weſtminſter, where they practiſe: they are not obliged to put in ſpecial bail, when defendants; but when they are plaintiffs, they may inſiſt upon ſpecial bail in all bailable caſes. 1 Vent. 299: Wood's Inſt. 450. But an attorney of one court, may in that court, hold an attorney of another court to bail. Attornies ſhall not be choſen into offices, againſt their wills. See tit. Abatement, Privilege.

ATTORNEY OF THE DUTCHY COURT OF LANCASTER, Attornatus curiæ ducatûs Lancaſtriæ.] Is the ſecond officer in that court; and ſeems for his ſkill in law to be there placed as aſſeſſor to the chancellor, and choſen for ſome ſpecial truſt repoſed in him, to deal between the king and his tenants. Cowel.

ATTORNEY GENERAL, Is a great officer under the king, made by letters patent. It is his place to exhibit informations, and proſecute for the crown, in matters criminal; and to file bills in the Exchequer, for any thing concerning the king in inheritance or profits; and others may bring bills againſt the king's attorney. His proper place in court, upon any ſpecial matters of a criminal nature, wherein his attendance is required, is under the judges, on the left hand of the clerk of the crown: but this is only upon ſolemn and extraordinary occaſions; for uſually he does not ſit there, but within the bar in the face of the court.

ATTORNMENT, Attornamentum from the French tourner, to turn.]—Sir Martin Wright and many other writers have laid it down as a general rule, that by the old feudal law the feudatory could not alien the feud without the conſent of the lord; nor the lord alien or transfer his ſeignory without the conſent of his feudatory. Wright's Tenures 30, 31. It is certain that this doctrine formerly prevailed in England; if not at leaſt to equal extent in other countries.

This neceſſity of the conſent of the tenant to the alienation of the lord gave riſe in our old law to the doctrine of attornment; which at common law, ſignified only the conſent of the tenant to the grant of the ſeignory, whereby he agreed to become the tenant of the new lord. But after the ſtatute quia emptores terrarum, (18 Ed. 1. ſt. 1,) was paſſed, by which ſubinfeudation was prohibited, it became neceſſary that when the reverſion or remainderman after an eſtate for years, for life or in tail, granted his reverſion or remainder, the particular tenant ſhould attorn to the grantee. The neceſſity of attornment was, in ſome meaſure; avoided by the ſtatute of uſes; (27 H. 8. c. 10;) as by that ſtatute the poſſeſſion was immediately executed to the uſe; and by the ſtatute of Wills; (34 & 35 H. 8. c. 5;) by which the legal eſtate is immediately veſted in the deviſee.

Attornments however ſtill continued to be neceſſary in many caſes; but both their neceſſity and efficacy are now almoſt totally taken away; for by ſtat. 4 Ann. c. 16. ſ. 9, It is enacted, That all grants and conveyances of manors, lands, rents, reverſions, &c. by fine, or otherwiſe, ſhall be good without the attornment of the tenants; but notice muſt be given of the grant, to the tenant, before which he ſhall not be prejudiced by payment of any rent to the grantor, or for breach of the condition for nonpayment. And by ſtat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, attornments of lands, &c. made by tenants to ſtrangers claiming title to the eſtate of their landlords ſhall be null and void, and their landlord's poſſeſſion not affected thereby: though this ſhall not extend to vacate any attornment made purſuant to a judgment at law, or with conſent of the landlord; or to a mortgagee on a forfeited mortgage.

Till the paſſing of theſe ſtatutes, the doctrine of attornment was one of the moſt copious and abſtruſe points of the law. But theſe acts having made attornment both unneceſſary and inoperative, the learning upon it may be ſaid to have become near entirely uſeleſs. See 1 Inſt. 309.

AVAGE, or Aviſage. A rent or payment by tenants of the manor of Writtle in Eſſex, upon St. Leonard's day, 6 November, for the privilege of pannage in the lord's woods, viz. for every pig under a year old, an halfpenny; for every yearly pig, one penny; and for every hog above a year old, two-pence. Blount.

AUCTIONS and AUCTIONEERS, Under ſtats. 17 Geo. 3. c. 50: 19 Geo. 3. c. 25, 56: 21 Geo. 3. c. 17: 22 Geo. 3. c. 66: 32 Geo. 3. c. 11, every Auctioneer muſt take out an annual licence; paying within the bills of mortality 1 l. 3 s. and without 5 s. 9 d. and under theſe ſtatutes and ſtat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, (explained by ſtatutes 29 Geo. 3. c. 63: 30 Geo. 3. c. 26: 32 Geo. 3. c. 41, containing certain exemptions) duties are impoſed on goods ſold by auction; which duties are a charge on the auctioneer, not on the purchaſer. 2 Burn. 237

The practice of puffing, as it is called, at auctions was in Bexwell v. Chriſtie, (Cowp. 395,) conſidered as illegal; but the legiſlature having enacted that property put up to ſale at auction ſhall, upon the knocking down the hammer, ſubject the auctioneer to the payment of certain duties, unleſs ſuch property can, by the mode preſcribed by the act be ſhewn to have been bought in by the owner himſelf, or by ſome perſon by him authoriſed, ſeems indirectly to have given a ſanction to this practice which may materially affect the authority of the deciſion in Walker v. Gaſcoigne, and the opinion in Bexwell v. Chriſtie: ſee 2 Bro. C. R. 326. and the ſtat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 37. § 20. Fonblanque's Treatiſe of Equity, i. 215.

AUDIENCE COURT, Curia audientiæ Cantuarienſis.] A court belonging to the archbiſhop of Canterbury, having the ſame authority with the court of arches, though inferior to it in dignity and antiquity. It was held in the archbiſhop's palace; and in former times the archbiſhops were wont to try and determine a great many eccleſiaſtical cauſes in their own palaces; but before they pronounced their definitive ſentence, they committed the matter to be argued by men learned in the law, whom they named their auditors; and ſo in time it grew to one ſpecial man, who at this day is called cauſarum negotiorumque audientiæ Cantuarienſis auditor officialis. And to the office of auditor was formerly joined the chancery of the archbiſhop, which meddleth not with any point of contentious juriſdiction, that is, deciding of cauſes between party and party, but only ſuch as are of office, and eſpecially as are voluntariæ juriſdictionis; as the granting the cuſtody of ſpiritualties, during the vacancy of biſhopricks, inſtitutions to benefices, diſpenſations, &c. but this is now diſtinguiſhed from the audience. The auditor of this court anciently by ſpecial commiſſion was vicar general to the archbiſhop, in which capacity he exerciſed eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction of every dioceſe becoming vacant within the province of Canterbury. 4 Inſt. 337. But now theſe three great offices of official principal of the archbiſhop, dean or judge of the peculiars, and official of the audience are, and have been for a long time paſt, united in one perſon under the general name of Dean of the arches. Johnſ. 254.

The archbiſhop of York hath in like manner his court of audience. Johnſ. 255. See Arches' court.

AUDITA

AUDITA QUERELA.

AUDITA QUERELA. A writ whereby a defendant, againſt whom judgment is recovered, and who is therefore in danger of execution, or perhaps actually in execution, [or on a ſtatute-merchant, ſtatute-ſtaple or recognizance,] may be relieved upon good matter of diſcharge, which has happened ſince the judgment: as if the plaintiff hath given him a general releaſe; or if the defendant hath paid the debt to the plaintiff, without procuring ſatisfaction to be entered on the record. In theſe and the like caſes wherein the defendant hath good matter to plead, but hath had no opportunity of pleading it, (either at the beginning of the ſuit, or puis darrein continuance, which muſt always be before judgment,) an audita querela lies, in the nature of a bill in equity, to be relieved againſt the oppreſſion of the plaintiff. It is a writ directed to the court ſtating that the complaint of the defendant had been heard (auditâ querelâ defendentis,) and then, ſetting out the matter of the complaint, it at length enjoins the court to call the party before them, and, having heard their allegations and proofs, to cauſe juſtice to be done between them, Finch. L. 488: F. N. B. 102. It alſo lies for Bail, when judgment is obtained againſt them by ſcire facias to anſwer the debt of their principal, and it happens afterwards that the original judgment againſt their principal is reverſed: for here the Bail, after judgment had againſt them, have no opportunity to plead this ſpecial matter, and therefore they ſhall have redreſs by audita querela; (1 Rol. Abr. 308;) which is a writ of a moſt remedial nature, and ſeems to have been invented, leſt in any caſe there ſhould be an oppreſſive defect of juſtice, where a party, who hath good defence, is too late to make it in the ordinary forms of law. But the indulgence now ſhewn by the courts in granting a ſummary relief upon motion, in caſes of ſuch evident oppreſſion, (Lord Raym. 439: 1 Salk. 93,) has almoſt rendered uſeleſs the writ of audita querela and driven it quite out of practice. 3 Comm 406.

Some part of the old law on this ſubject is here ſtated; to give the ſtudent a general idea of this circuitous proceeding —If neceſſary to enter more at large into this learning, let him look into Viner's Abridgment, and Comyns's Digeſt.

On a ſtatute, the conuſor or his heir may bring audita querela, before execution is ſued out; but this may not be done by a ſtranger to the ſtatute, or a purchaſer of the land. 1 Danv. Abr. 630: 3 Rep. 13. If a leſſee covenants for him and his aſſigns to repair, and the leſſee aſſign over, and the covenant is broken; if the leſſor ſues one of them and recovers damages, and then ſues the other, he may bring audita querela for his relief. Bro. 74. And where a man hath goods from me by my delivery, and another takes them from him, ſo that he is liable to both our ſuits: and one of us ſue and recover againſt him, and then the other ſues him, his remedy is by this writ. Dyer 232. One binds himſelf and his heirs in an obligation, if the obligee recover of the heir, and after ſue the executors for the ſame cauſe, &c. they may have the writ audita querela. Plowd. 439. If two joint and ſeveral obligors are ſued jointly, and both taken in execution, the death or eſcape of one will not diſcharge the other, ſo as to give him this action; but if ſuch obligors be proſecuted ſeverally, and a ſatisfaction is once had againſt one of them, or againſt the ſheriff upon the eſcape of one, the other may have it. Hob. 58: 5 Rep. 87. Judgment is had againſt a ſheriff on an eſcape of a perſon in execution, and after the firſt judgment is reverſed for error; the ſheriff ſhall have relief by audita querela. 8 Rep. 142.

If a plaintiff, that ſues as adminiſtrator, and recovers judgment and ſues out execution, has his letters of adminiſtration revoked; the defendant muſt be relieved by audita querela. Style 417.

If A. being within age becomes bail for B. and after two ſcire fa. and nihil returned, judgment is given againſt A. &c. he may have an audita querela, and avoid the recognizance, and ſo the judgment thereupon of conſequence ſhall be avoided. Yelv. 155.

But if A. being within age enters into a bond to B. who procures C. without any warrant, to appear for A. and confeſſes a judgment thereupon, yet A. ſhall not have an audita querela, but he muſt take his remedy by action of diſceit againſt the attorney. Cro. Jac. 694.

The writ of audita querela may be had, where a recogniſance or ſtatute entered into is defective, and not good; or being upon an uſurious contract, by dureſs of impriſonment, or where there is a defeaſance upon it, &c. Moor, Ca. 1097: 1 Brownl. 39: 2 Bulſt. 320. So upon ſhewing an acquittance of the cogniſee, on a ſuggeſtion that he had agreed to deliver up the ſtatute: 1 Rol. 309. Where one enters into a ſtatute, and after ſells his lands to divers purchaſers; or judgment is had againſt a man, who leaves land to ſeveral heirs, &c. and one of the purchaſers, or one heir alone is charged, he may have this writ againſt the reſt to contribute to him. 3 Rep. 44: 2 Bulſt. 15.

Where a ſtatute or recogniſance is acknowledged before one who hath not power to take it, and afterwards the cogniſor makes a feoffment of the land to another, and the cogniſee taketh out execution, in ſuch caſe the feoffee may have an audita querela, and avoid the execution. Dyer 27, 35.

If A. enters into a ſtatute to B. and pays the money at the day aſſigned, upon which the ſtatute is cancelled, and after B. forges a new ſtatute in the name of A. in this caſe A. may relieve himſelf by audita querela; for the forged ſtatute having all the eſſentials of a true one, the court was obliged to look on it as ſuch till the contrary appeared; which the cogniſor could not ſet forth before execution, having no day to appear judicially in court, and therefore is put to this writ to avoid the execution founded on the injuſtice of the pretended conuſee. F. N. B. 104.

If upon an elegit the ſheriff takes an inquiſition, and there are ſeveral lands found ſubject to the extent, and ſeveral values found, and the ſheriff returns, that he has delivered ſome of the lands in particular for the moiety, where it appears according to the values found, that an equal moiety is not delivered to the party who recovered, but more than a moiety; yet this is not void, nor is it a diſſeiſin by the entry, but only voidable by audita querela, 1 Rol. Abr. 305.

If two executors ſue execution for damages recovered by the teſtator, where one hath releaſed, an audita querela lies againſt both. 1 Rol. Abr. 312.

If A. cogniſee of a ſtatute releaſes to the tenant all right, intereſt, and demand, together with all ſuits and executions, and afterwards ſues execution, the tertenant ſhall have an audita querela to ſet aſide this execution. Cro. Eliz. 40: 1 And. 133.

So in treſpaſs or other action, if it be found for the plaintiff by niſi prius, and after, before the day in bank, the plaintiff releaſes to the defendant, and after judgment is given for the plaintiff, the defendant ſhall have an audita querela upon this matter; becauſe he could not plead the releaſe at the day in bank. 1 Rol. Abr. 307.

In an audita querela, the proceſs is a venire facias, diſtringas, alias, pluries; and if non eſt inventus be returned, or that he hath nothing, the plaintiff ſhall have a capias againſt the defendant. F. N. B. 104: Dyer 297. b.

If an audita querela is founded on a record, or the perſon bringing it is in cuſtody, the proceſs upon it is a ſcire facias; but if founded on matter of fact, or the party is at large, then the proceſs is a venire. 1 Salk. 92.

And if there be a default by the defendant upon a ſcire feci, or two nihils returned, the plaintiff ſhall have judgment. 1 Salk. 93. But, where an audita querela is ſued quia timet, and the party is at large, there ſhall never be a ſcire facias. 1 Salk. 92: 1 Inſt. 100 a.

An audita querela ſhall be granted out of the court, where the record upon which it is founded, remains, or it may be returnable in the ſame court. F. N. B. 105 b. And therefore if a man recover in B. R. or C. B. the defendant, having a releaſe after judgment, and before execution, ſhall ſue the audita querela out of B. R. or C. B. where the record is. F. N. B. 105. So, if a recognizance be acknowledged in C. B. and execution be ſued upon it after releaſe, the defendant ſhall ſue the audita querela out of C. B. F. N. B. 105. But an audita querela may be by original; and upon a judgment in C. B. it goes out of chancery returnable in C. B. F. N. B. 105.

The writ of audita querela ſhall be allowed only in open court. 1 Bulſt. 140: 2 Bulſt. 97: 2 Show. 240.

Upon audita querela brought, a ſuperſedeas ſhall go to ſtay execution: and the judgment in this action is, to be diſcharged of execution. Heb. 2. If an audita querela be unduly gotten, upon a falſe ſurmiſe, it may be quaſhed. 1 Bulſt. 140. This writ lies not after judgment upon a matter which the party might have pleaded before. Cro. Eliz. 35. A bare ſurmiſe is not ſufficient to avoid a judgment; but generally ſome ſpecialty muſt be ſhewn. Cro. Jac. 579. Upon a releaſe or other deed pleaded, no ſuperſedeas will be granted till the plaintiff in the audita querela hath brought his witneſſes into court to prove the deed: and if execution be executed before, bail is to be put in by allowance of the court. 1 Lill. Abr. 151.

Upon a motion for an allowance of an audita querela, it was held, that bail muſt be given in court and not elſewhere; unleſs in caſes of neceſſity, to be allowed by the court, and then it may be put in before two judges. Palm. 422.

A man nonſuited in an audita querela, may have a new writ. F. N. B. 104. When lands are extended on any ſtatute, &c. before the time, audita querela lieth. 22, 46 E. 3. A writ in the nature of an audita querela, has been made out returnable in B. R. on a ſpecial pardon, ſetting forth the whole matter. Jenk. Cent. 109.

AUDITOR, Lat.] An officer of the king, or other perſon or corporation, who examines yearly the accounts of all under-officers, and makes up a general book, which ſhews the difference between their receipts and charge, and their ſeveral allowances, commonly called allocations: as the auditors of the exchequer take the accounts of thoſe receivers who collect the revenues. 4 Inſt. 106. Receivers general of fee-farm rents, &c. are alſo termed auditors, and hold their audits for adjuſting the accounts of the ſaid rents at certain times and places appointed. And there are auditors aſſigned by the court to audit and ſettle accounts in actions of account, and other caſes, who are proper judges of the cauſe, and pleas are made before them, &c. 1 Brownl. 24.—See tit. Account.

AUDITOR OF THE RECEIPTS, An officer of the exchequer, that files the tellers' bills, and having made an entry of them, gives the lord treaſurer, &c. weekly, a certificate of the money received; he makes debentures to the tellers, before they pay any money; and takes their accounts: he alſo keeps the black book of receipts, and the treaſurer's key of the treaſury, and ſeeth every teller's money locked up in the treaſury. 4 Inſt. 107.

AUDITORES, the ſame with audientes, i. e. the catechumens, or thoſe who were newly inſtructed in the myſteries of the Chriſtian religion before they were admitted to baptiſm; and auditorium was that place in the church where they ſtood to hear, and be inſtructed, now called the nave of the church: and in the primitive times, the church was ſo ſtrict in keeping the people together in that place, that the perſon who went from thence in ſermon time was excommunicated. Blount.

AUDITORS OF THE IMPREST, Officers in the exchequer, who formerly had the charge of auditing the great accounts of the king's cuſtoms, naval and military expences, &c. But who are now ſuperſeded by the Commiſſioners for auditing the publick accounts. See title Accounts Publick.

AVENAGE. from the Lat. avena.] A certain quantity of oats paid by a tenant to his landlord as a rent, or in lieu of ſome other duties. Blount.

AVENOR, avenarius, from the Fr. avoine, oats.] An officer belonging to the king's ſtables, that provided oats for his horſes; mentioned Stat. 13 Car. 2. cap. 8.

AVENTURÆ, Adventures or trials of ſkill at arms; military exerciſes on horſeback.—Aſſiſa de armis: Brady's Append. Hiſt. Eng. 250: Addit. Mat. Paris, p. 149.

AVENTURE, (properly adventure). A miſchance cauſing the death of a man: as where a perſon is ſuddenly drowned, or killed by any accident, without felony. Co. Lit. 391.

AVERA, quaſi overa, from the Fr. ouvre and ouvrage, velut operagium.] Signifies a day's work of a ploughman, formerly valued at 8 d. It is found in Domeſday. 4 Inſt. 269.

AVERAGE, averagium.] Is ſaid to ſignify ſervice which the tenant owes to his lord by horſe or carriage: but it is more commonly uſed for a contribution that merchants and others make towards their loſſes, who have their goods caſt into the ſea, for the ſafeguard of the ſhip, or of the other goods and lives of thoſe perſons that are in the ſhip, during a tempeſt. It is in this ſenſe called average, becauſe it is proportioned and allotted after the rate of every man's goods carried. See title Inſurance.

Average is likewiſe a ſmall duty, paid to maſters of ſhips when goods are ſent in another man's ſhip, for their care of the goods, over and above the freight.

AVERAGE OF CORN FIELDS, The ſtubble or remainder of ſtraw and graſs left in corn fields after the harveſt is carried away. In Kent it is called the gratten, and in other parts the roughings, &c.

AVER

AVER CORN, Is a reſerved rent in corn, paid by farmers and tenants to religious houſes: and ſignifies, by Somner, corn drawn to the lord's granary, by the working cattle of the tenant. 'Tis ſuppoſed that this cuſtom was owing to the Saxon cyriac ſceat, a meaſure of corn brought to the prieſt annually on St Martin's day, as an oblation for the firſt-fruits of the earth: under which title the religious had corn-rent paid yearly; as appears by an inquiſition of the eſtate of the abbey of Glaſtonbury. A. D. 1201.

AVER LAND, Seems to have been ſuch lands as the tenants did plough and manure, cum averiis ſuis, for the proper uſe of a monaſtery, or the lords of the ſoil. Mon. Angl.

AVER PENNY, (or average penny). Money paid towards the king's averages or carriages, or to be freed thereof.—Raſtal.

AVER SILVER, A cuſtom or rent formerly ſo called. Cowel.

AVERIA, Cattle: Spelman deduces the word from the Fr. ouvrer, to work, as if chiefly working-cattle: though it ſeems to be more probably from avoir, to have or poſſeſs: the word ſometimes including all perſonal eſtate, as catalla did all goods and chattels. This word is uſed for oxen or horſes of the plough; and in a general ſenſe any cattle.——Averia elongata; ſee Elongata.

AVERIIS CAPTIS IN WITHERNAM. A writ for the taking of cattle to his uſe, who hath cattle unlawfully diſtrained by another, and driven out of the county where they were taken, ſo that they cannot be replevied by the ſheriff. Reg. Orig. 82. See tit. Diſtreſs.

AVERMENT, verificatio, from the Fr. averer, i. e. verificare, teſtari.] Is an offer of the defendant to make good or juſtify an exception pleaded by him in abatement or bar of the plaintiff's action: and it ſignifies the act, as well as the offer, of juſtifying the exception; and not only the form, but the matter thereof. Co. Lit. 362. Averment is either general, or particular; general, which concludes every plea, &c. containing matter affirmative, and ought to be with theſe words, and this he is ready to verify, &c. Particular averment is when the life of tenant for life, or of tenant in tail, &c. is averred. Ibid. As to general averments ſee tit. Pleading. With reſpect to particular averments, the following quotations may ſerve as examples.—See further Vin. Abr. tit. Averment.

He that claims eſtate from tenant for life, or in tail, or from parſon of a church, ought to aver his life. Br. Eſtate, pl. 18.

Where one thing is to be done in conſideration of another, on contracts, &c. there muſt be an averment of performance, but where there is promiſe againſt promiſe, there needs no averment; for each party hath his action, 1 Lev. 87. The uſe of averment being to aſcertain what is alledged doubtfully, deeds may ſometimes be made good by averment, where a perſon is not certainly named; but when the deed itſelf is void for uncertainty, it cannot be made good by averment. 5 Rep. 155. Averment cannot be made againſt a record, which imports in itſelf an uncontrolable verity. Co. Lit. 26: Jenk. 232.

Where a ſtatute is recited, there one may not aver that there is no ſuch record; for generally an averment, as this is, doth not lie againſt a record; for a record is a thing of ſolemn and high nature, but an averment is but the allegation of the party, and not ſo much credit in law to be given to it, Lil. P. R. 155.

Averment lies not againſt the proceedings of a court of record. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. ſect. 14. Nor ſhall it be admitted againſt a will concerning lands. 5 Rep. 68. And an averment ſhall not be allowed where the intent of the teſtator cannot be collected out of the words of the will. 4 Rep. 44. One may not aver a thing contrary to the condition of an obligation, which is ſuppoſed to be made upon good deliberation, and before witneſſes, and therefore not to be contradicted by a bare averment. 1 Lill. Abr. 156.

An averment of a wicked and unlawful conſideration of giving a bond, may well be pleaded, though it doth not appear on the face of the deed: and any thing which ſhews an obligation to be void may well be averred, although it doth not appear on the face of the bond. Adjudged on demurrer, after two arguments in the caſe of Collins and Blantern, C. B. Eaſter, 7 Geo. 3: 2 Wilſon, 347.

If an heir is ſued on the bond of his anceſtor, it muſt be averred that the heirs of the obligor were expreſsly bound. 2 Saund. 136. In declaring you ſhew that the obligor bound his heirs.—Another conſideration than that mentioned in a deed, may be averred, where it is not repugnant or contrary to the deed. Dyer 146. But a conſideration may not be averred, that is againſt a particular expreſs conſideration; nor may averment be againſt a conſideration mentioned in the deed, that there was no conſideration given. 1 Rep. 176: 8 Rep. 155. If an eſtate is made to a woman that hath a huſband, by fine or deed, for her life; in this caſe it may be averred to be made to her for her jointure, although there be another uſe or conſideration expreſſed. 4 Rep. 4. Averment may be of a uſe upon any fine, or common recovery; though not of any other uſe than what is expreſſed in it: it may be received to reconcile a fine, and the indenture to lead the uſes. Dyer 311: 2 Bulſt. 235: 1 And. 312.

If one has two manors known by the name of W. and levies a fine or grants an annuity out of his manor of W. he ſhall by averment aſcertain which of them it was; per cur. 6 Mod. 235: Cha. Rep. 138.

If a piece of ground was anciently called by one name, and of late is called by another, and it is granted to me by this new name; an averment may be taken that it is all one thing, and it will make it good. Dyer 37, 44. No averment lies againſt any returns of writs, that are definitive to the trial of the thing returned; as the return of a ſheriff upon his writs, &c. But it may be where ſuch are not definitive; and againſt certificates upon commiſſions out of any court: alſo againſt the returns of bailiffs of franchiſes, ſo that the lords be not prejudiced by it. Dyer 348: 8 Rep. 121: 2 Cro. 13.

As to Averments in actions on the caſe for words, See tit. Action II. 1.

A ſpecial averment muſt be made upon the pleading of a general pardon, for the party to bring himſelf within the pardon. Hob. 67. A perſon may aver he is not the ſame perſon on appeal of death in favour of life. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 305.

Where a man is to take a benefit by an act of parliament, there in pleading he muſt aver, that he is not a perſon excepted; but where he claims no benefit by it, but only to keep that which he had before, in ſuch caſe it is not neceſſary to make ſuch averment. Plow. Com. 87, 488.

Pleas merely in the negative, ſhall not be averred, becauſe they cannot be proved: nor ſhall what is againſt preſumption of law, or any thing apparent to the court. Co. Lit. 362, 373. By ſtatute 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, no exception or advantage ſhall be taken upon a demurrer, for want of averment of hoc paratus eſt, &c. except the ſame be ſpecially ſet down for cauſe of demurrer. See tit. Amendment.

AVERRARE. To carry goods in a waggon, or upon loaded horſes, a duty required of ſome cuſtomary tenants. Cartular. Glaſton. MS. f. 4.

AUGEA, A ciſtern for water. Reg. Eccl. Well. MS.

AUGMENTATION, augmentatio.] The name of a court erected 27 H. 8; for determining ſuits and controverſies relating to monaſteries and abbey lands. The intent of this court was, that the king might be juſtly dealt with touching the profits of ſuch religious houſes, as were given to him by act of parliament. It took its name from the augmentation of the revenues of the crown, by the ſuppreſſion of religious houſes: and the office of augmentation, which hath many curious records, remains to this day, though the court hath been long ſince diſſolved. Terms de Ley 68.

AVISAMENTUM, Advice, or counſel——De aviſamento & conſenſu concilii noſtri conceſſimus, &c. was the common form of our ancient kings' grants.

AULA, i. e. A court-baron, aula ibidem tent' die, &c. Aula eccleſiæ is that which is now termed navis eccleſiæ. Eadm. lib. 6. p. 141.

AULNAGE See ALNAGE.

AUMONE, Fr. aumoſne, alms.] Tenure in aumone is where lands are given in alms to ſome church, or religious houſe, upon condition that a ſervice or prayers ſhall be offered at certain times for the repoſe of the donor's ſoul. Brit. 164. Vide Frankalmoign.

AUNCEL or AUNSEL-WEIGHT, quaſi hand-ſale-weight, or from anſa, the handle of the balance.] An antient manner of weighing, by the hanging of ſcales or hooks at each end of a beam or ſtaff, which by lifting up in the middle with one's finger or hand, diſcovered the equality or difference between the weight at one end and the thing weighed at the other. This weighing, being ſubject to great deceit, was prohibited by ſeveral ſtatutes, and the even balance commanded in its ſtead. But notwithſtanding, it is ſtill uſed in ſome parts of England: and what we now call the ſtilliards, a ſort of hand-weighing among butchers, being a ſmall beam with a weight at one end, (which ſhews the pounds by certain notches) ſeems to be near the ſame with the auncel-weight.—See tit. Weights and Meaſures.

AUNCIATUS.] Antiquated. Brompton, lib. 2. cap. 24. par. 6.

AVOIDANCE, In the general ſignification, is when a benefice is void of an incumbent; in which ſenſe it is oppoſed to plenarty. Avoidances are either in fact, as by death of the incumbent; or in law: and may be by ceſſion, deprivation, reſignation, &c. See tit. Advowſon.

AVOIRDUPOIS, or averdupois. Fr. avoir du poids, i. e. habere pondus, aut juſti eſſe ponderis.] A weight different from that of troy-weight, which contains but twelve ounces in the pound, whereas this hath ſixteen ounces: and in this reſpect it is probably ſo called, becauſe it is of greater weight than the other. It alſo ſignifieth ſuch merchandizes as are weighed by this weight; and is mentioned in divers ſtatutes. See tit. Weights.

AVOW See Advow.

AVOWEE, Of a church benefice. Britt. c. 29. See Advocate.

AVOWRY. Is where a man takes a diſtreſs for rent or other thing, and the party on whom taken ſues forth a replevin, then the taker ſhall juſtify his plea for what cauſe he took it; and if in his own right, he muſt ſhew the ſame, and avow the taking; but if he took it in right of another, he muſt make cogniſance of the taking, as bailiff or ſervant to the perſon in whoſe right he took the ſame. Terms de Leys 70: 2 Lill. 454. The avowry muſt contain ſufficient matter for judgment to have return: but ſo much certainty is not required in an avowry as in a declaration; and the avowant is not obliged to alledge ſeiſin within the ſtatute of limitations. Nor ſhall a lord be required to avow on any perſon in certain; but he muſt alledge ſeiſin by the hands of ſome tenant within forty years. Stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 19: 1 Inſt. 268. In avowry ſeiſin in law is ſufficient, ſo that where a tenant hath done homage or fealty, it is a good ſeiſin of all other ſervices to make an avowry, though the lord, &c. had not ſeiſin of them within ſixty years. See Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 2: 4 Rep. 9. A man may diſtrain and avow for rent due from a copyholder to a lord of a manor; and alſo for heriots, homage, fealty, amercements, &c. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 315.

If a perſon makes an avowry for two cauſes, and can maintain his avowry but for one of them, it is a good avowry: and if an avowry be made for rent, and it appears that part of it is not due, yet the avowry is good for the reſt: ſuppoſing ſufficient rent due to juſtify a diſtreſs. An avowry may be made upon two ſeveral titles of land, though it be but for one rent; for one rent may depend upon ſeveral titles. 1 Lill. Abr. 157: Saund. 285. If a man takes a diſtreſs for rent reſerved upon a leaſe for years, and afterwards accepts a ſurrender of the lands, he may nevertheleſs avow, becauſe he is to have the rent due, notwithſtanding the ſurrender. 1 Danv. Abr. 652. Where tenant in tail aliens in fee, the donor may avow upon him, the reverſion being in the donor, whereunto the rent is incident. Ibid. 650. If there be tenant for life, remainder in fee, the tenant for life may compel the lord to avow upon him: but where there is tenant in tail, with ſuch remainder, and the tenant in tail makes a feoffment, the feoffee may not compel the lord to avow upon him. 1 Danv. Abr. 648: Co. Lit. 268. If the tenant enfeoffs another, the lord ought to avow upon the feoffor for the arrearages before the feoffment, and not upon the feoffee. 1 Danv. 650. The lord may avow upon a diſſeiſor. 20 Hen. 6. And if a man's tenant is diſſeiſed, he may be compelled to avow, by ſuch tenant or his heir. A defendant in replevin may avow or juſtify; but if he juſtifies he cannot have a return. 3 Lev. 204. The defendant need not aver his avowry with an hoc paratus eſt, &c. By Stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 19, it is enacted, That if in any replegiare for rents, &c. the avowry, cogniſance, or juſtification be found for the defendant, or the plaintiff be nonſuit, &c. the defendant ſhall recover ſuch damages and coſts as the plaintiff ſhould have had, if he had recovered. See Bull. N. P. 57, that this ſtatute does not extend to an avowry for a nomine pœnæ or eſtray. And by Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 7, When a plaintiff ſhall be nonſuit before iſſue in any ſuit of replevin, &c. removed or depending in any of the courts courts at Weſtminſter, the defendant making ſuggeſtion in the nature of an avowry for rent, the court on prayer ſhall award a writ to inquire of the ſum in arrear, and the value of the diſtreſs, &c. upon return whereof the defendant ſhall recover the arrears, if the diſtreſs amounts to that value, or elſe the value of the diſtreſs with coſts; and where the diſtreſs is not found to the value of the arrears, the party may diſtrain for the reſidue. See titles Diſtreſs and Replevin.

AURUM REGINÆ, The queen's gold.—This is a royal revenue belonging to every queen-conſort during her marriage, from every perſon who hath made a voluntary offering or fine to the king, of ten marks or upwards, in conſideration of any grants, &c. by the king to him; and it is due in the proportion of one-tenth part more, over and above the entire fine to the king. 1 Comm. 221.

AUSCULTARE. Formerly perſons were appointed in monaſteries to hear the monks read, and direct them how, and in what manner they ſhould do it with a graceful tone or accent, to make an impreſſion on their hearers, which was required before they were admitted to read publickly in the church; and this was called auſcultare. See Lanfrancus in Decretis pro ordine Benedict. c. 5

AUSTURCUS, and Oſturcus, A goſhawk; from whence we uſually call a faulconer, who keeps that kind of hawks, an oſtringer. In ancient deeds there has been reſerved, as a rent to the lord, unum auſturcum.

AUTER DROIT, An expreſſion uſed where perſons ſue or are ſued in another's right; as executors, adminiſtrators, &c.

AUTERFOITS ACQUIT, Is a plea by a criminal that he was heretofore acquitted of the ſame treaſon or felony: for one ſhall not be brought into danger of his life, for the ſame offence more than once. 3 Inſt. 213. Except by appeal of death which is a private ſuit. See tit. Appeal. There is alſo plea of auterfoits convict, and auterfoits attaint; that he was heretofore convicted, or attainted, of the ſame felony. In appeal of death, auterfoits acquit, or auterfoits attaint, upon indictment of the ſame death, is no plea. H. P. C. 244. But in other caſes where a perſon is attainted, it is to no purpoſe that he ſhould be attainted a ſecond time. And conviction of manſlaughter, where clergy is admitted thereon, will bar any ſubſequent proſecution for the ſame death. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 35, 36.

AUTHORITY, Is nothing but a power to do ſomething: it is ſometimes given by word, and ſometimes by writing: alſo it is by writ, warrant, commiſſion, letter of attorney, &c. and ſometimes by law. The authority that is given muſt be to do a thing lawful; for if it be for the doing any thing againſt law, as to beat a man, take away his goods, or diſſeiſe him of his lands, this will not be a good authority to juſtify him that doth it. Dyer 102: Keilw. 89. An authority given to another perſon, to do that which a man himſelf cannot do, is void: and where an authority is lawful, the party to whom given muſt do the act in the name of him who gave the authority. 11 Rep. 87. Where an authority is given by law, it muſt be ſtrictly purſued; and if a perſon acting under ſuch authority, exceeds it, he is liable to an action for the exceſs.

An authority in ſome caſes cannot be transferred.—Thus a perſon who has an authority to do any act for another, muſt execute it himſelf, and cannot transfer it to another: for this being a truſt and confidence repoſed in the party, cannot be aſſigned to a ſtranger whoſe ability and integrity were not ſo well thought of by him for whom the act was to be done. 9 Co. 77 b: 1 Rol. Abr. 330.

Some authorities likewiſe determine with the life of the perſon who gave them.

The authority given by letter of attorney muſt be executed during the life of the perſon that gives it; becauſe the letter of attorney is to conſtitute the attorney my repreſentative for ſuch a purpoſe, and therefore can continue in force only during the life of me that am to be repreſented. 2 Rol. Abr. 9: Co. Lit. 52.

But if any corporation aggregate, as a mayor and commonalty, or dean and chapter, make a feoffment and letter of attorney to deliver ſeiſin, this authority does not determine by the death of the mayor or dean, but the attorney may well execute the power after their death: becauſe the letter of attorney is an authority from the body aggregate, which ſubſiſts after the death of the mayor or dean, and therefore may be repreſented by their attorney; but if the dean or mayor be named by their own private name, and die before livery, or be removed, livery after ſeems not good. Co. Lit. 52: 2 Rol. Abr. 12.

It is a rule that every authority ſhall be countermandable, and determine by the death of him that gives it, &c. But where an intereſt is coupled with an authority, there it cannot be countermanded or determined. And. 1: Dyer 190: and See Viner's Abridgment tit. Authority.

A deviſe to another to have the diſpoſing, ſelling, and letting his land; ſo a deviſe to his ſon, but that his wife ſhall take the profits; ſo a deviſe, that his executor ſhall have the overſight and dealing of his lands; ſo a deviſe to an infant in tail, but that G. D. ſhall have the overſight of his will, and the education of his ſon till of age, and, to receive, ſet, and let for him; theſe and ſuch like words give the deviſee an authority, but no intereſt. Dyer 26. b, 331: 2 Leon. 221: 3 Leon. 78. 216: Moor 635. S. P. Cro. Eliz. 674, 678, 734.

The law makes a difference where lands are deviſed to executors to ſell, and where the deviſe is, that his lands ſhall be ſold by his executors; for in the firſt caſe an intereſt paſſes to the executors, becauſe the lands are expreſsly deviſed to them, but in the other caſe they have only an authority to ſell. Goldſ. 2: Dyer 219; Moor 61: Keilw. 107 b: 1 And. 145.

The teſtator deviſed, that his executors ſhould receive the iſſues and profits of his lands till his ſon came of age, to pay his debts and legacies, and to breed up his younger children; the teſtator died, ſo did the executor, during the minority of the ſon, having firſt made J. S. his executor; adjudged, that this executor of an executor may diſpoſe of the iſſues and profits for the purpoſes mentioned in the will during the infancy of the ſon; becauſe the firſt executor had not only a bare authority, but an intereſt veſted in him. Dyer 210.

Where the teſtator gives another authority to ſell his lands, he may ſell the inheritance, becauſe he gave him the ſame power he had himſelf, and in ſuch caſe the purchaſer ſhall be in by the deviſe. 2 Rep. 53.

An authority may be apportioned or divided, but an intereſt is inſeparable from the perſon, and where an act, which is in its nature indifferent, will work two ways, the the one by an authority, and the other by an intereſt, the law will attribute it to the intereſt. But where an intereſt and authority meet, if the party declare, that the thing ſhall take effect by virtue of his authority, there it ſhall prevail againſt the intereſt. 6 Rep. 17.

In many caſes authorities muſt be ſtrictly executed according to the power given.

If a man deviſe that his executors ſhall ſell his land, this gives but a naked authority; and the lands, till the ſale is made, deſcend to the heir at law; and in this caſe all muſt join in the ſale; and if one die, it being a bare authority, cannot ſurvive to the reſt. Co. Lit. 112 b: 113 a: 181 b.

But if a man by will give land to executors to be ſold, and one of them die, the ſurvivors may ſell; for the truſt being coupled with an intereſt, ſhall ſurvive together with it. Co. Lit. 113 b: 181 b.

If a letter of attorney be to make livery upon condition, ſo as to make a conditional feoffment, and the attorney delivers ſeiſin abſolutely, the livery is not good; becauſe the attorney had no authority to create an abſolute fee-ſimple; and therefore ſuch abſolute feoffment ſhall not bind the feoffor, becauſe he gave no ſuch authority. 2 Rol. Abr. 9.

If a warrant of attorney be given to make livery to one, and the attorney makes livery to two; or if the attorney had authority to make livery of Black-Acre, and he made livery of Black-Acre and White-Acre, though the attorney has in theſe caſes done more, yet there is no reaſon that ſhall vitiate what he has done purſuant to his power, ſince what he did beyond it is a perfect nullity, and void. Perk ſect. 189.

If a letter of attorney be given to two jointly to take livery, and feoffor makes livery to one in the abſence of the other, in the name of both, this is void; becauſe they being appointed jointly to receive livery, are to be conſidered but as one. Co. Lit. 49. b: 2 Rol. Abr. 8.

But if a letter of attorney be made to three conjunctim & diviſim, and two only make livery, this is not good, becauſe not purſuant to their authority; for the delegation was to them all three, or to each of them ſeparately; yet if the third was preſent at the time of the livery made by two, though he did not actually join with them in the act of livery, yet the livery is good; becauſe when they all three are upon the land for that purpoſe, and two make livery in the preſence of the third, there is his concurrence to the act, though he did not join in it actually, ſince he did not diſſent to it. Dyer 62: 1 Rol. Abr. 329: Co. Lit. 181 b: 1 Rol. Rep. 299: Yelv. 26.

If a letter of attorney be given to A. to make livery of lands already in leaſe, the attorney may enter upon the leſſee in order to make livery; becauſe, whilſt the leſſee continues in poſſeſſion, the attorney cannot deliver ſeiſin of it; and therefore, to execute the power given him by the letter of attorney, it is neceſſary he ſhould have a power to enter upon the leſſee. Co. Lit. 52: Poph. 103: Dyer 131 a: 340 a.

If a ſheriff makes a warrant to four or three, or a capias jointly or ſeverally to arreſt one, two of them may arreſt the party, for the greater expedition of juſtice. Co. Lit. 181: Palm. 52: 2 Rol. Rep. 137.

So if the lord gives licence to a copyholder for life, to leaſe the copyhold for five years, if the copyholder tamdiu vixerit, and he leaſes it for five years generally without limitation, this is a good execution, and purſuant to the licence; for the leaſe is determinable by his death, by a limitation in law; and therefore as much is implied by law, as if he had made an actual limitation. 1 Rol. Abr. 330, 331: Cro. Jac. 436. S. C.—See further tit. Power, and Vin. Abr. tit. Authority.

AUTUMN. The decline of the ſummer. Some computed the years by autumns; but the Engliſh Saxons by winters; Tacitus ſays, that the ancient Germans knew the other diviſions of the year, but did not know what was meant by autumn.

AUTUMNALIA, Thoſe fruits of the earth which are ripe in autumn or harveſt.

AUXILIUM AD FILIUM MILITEM FACIENDUM ET FILIAM MARITANDAM. A writ formerly directed to the ſheriff of every county where the king or other lord had any tenants, to levy of them an aid towards the knighting of a ſon, and the marrying of a daughter. F. N. B. 82: See tit. Aid, Tenure.

AUXILIUM CURIÆ, A precept or order of court for the citing or convening of one party, at the ſuit and requeſt of another, to warrant ſome thing. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. 477.

AUXILIUM FACERE ALICUI IN CURIA REGIS. To be another's friend and ſolicitor in the king's courts; an office undertaken for and granted by ſome courtiers to their dependants in the country. Paroch. Antiq. 126.

AUXILIUM REGIS, The king's aid, or money levied for the king's uſe, and the public ſervice; as where taxes are granted by parliament. See title Aid, Taxes.

AUXILIUM VICECOMITI, A cuſtomary aid or duty anciently payable to ſheriffs, out of certain manors for the better ſupport of their offices. See Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 245. An exemption from this duty was ſometimes granted by the king: and the manor of Stretton in Warwickſhire was freed from it by charter. 14 H. 3. M. 4.

AWAIT, Seems to ſignify what we now call waylaying, or lying in wait to execute ſome miſchief. By ſtat. 13 R. 2. ſt. 2. c. 1, It is ordained that no charter of pardon ſhall be allowed before any juſtice for the death of a man ſlain by await, or malice prepenſed, &c.

AWARD, from the Fr. Agard.] Perhaps becauſe it is impoſed on both parties to be obſerved by them. Dictum quod ad cuſtodiendum ſeu obſervandum partibus imponitur. Spelm.

That act by which parties refer any matter in diſpute between them, to the private deciſion of another party (whether one perſon or more) is called a Submiſſion; the party to whom the reference is made an Arbitrator or Arbitrators: when the reference is made to more than one, and proviſion made, that in caſe they ſhall diſagree, another ſhall decide, that other is called an Umpire. The judgment given or determination made by an arbitrator or arbitrators is termed an Award; that by an umpire an Umpirage, or leſs correctly an award.

The following ſyſtem of the law on this ſubject is chiefly collected from, and follows the plan of Kyd's Treatiſe on the Law of Awards, 8vo. 1791.

The ſubject may be conveniently diſtributed under the following heads;

I. The

AWARD I. II.

I. The Submiſſion.
II. The Parties thereto.
III. The Subject of the Reference.
IV. The Arbitrators and Umpire.
V. The Award or Umpirage.
VI. The Remedy to compel Performance, on an Award or Umpirage properly made.
VII. Of the Means of procuring Relief againſt it, when improperly made. And VIII. The Effect, in precluding the Parties from ſuing on the original Cauſe of Action, or Subject of Reference.

I. THE SUBMISSION may be purely by the act of the parties themſelves; or it may be by their act, with the interpoſition of a court of juſtice: in either caſe it may be either verbal or in writing; the general practice, as well as the moſt ſafe is to prefer the latter.

When the ſubmiſſion is in writing, it is moſt commonly by mutual bonds, given by the parties each to the other, in a certain ſum penal, on condition, to be void on performance of the award; but ſuch bonds may be given to a third perſon or even to the arbitrator himſelf (Comb. 100); and they may be given by other perſons than the parties themſelves, who will incur the forfeiture if the parties do not perform the award. The ſubmiſſion may alſo be by indenture, with mutual covenants to ſtand to the award. 2 Mod. 73.

It is uſual in articles of co-partnerſhip, to inſert a proviſion, that all diſputes between the partners ſhall be referred to arbitration. This has ſo far the effect of a ſubmiſſion, that one of the parties cannot ſue another either at law or in equity, for any matter within the terms or meaning of the proviſo, without having firſt had an actual reference, which has proved ineffectual, or a propoſal by the plaintiff to refer, and a refuſal by the defendant. See 2 Atk. 585, (569): 2 Brownl. c. 336.

All the caſes of awards reported in the books, for a long ſeries of years, appear to have been made on ſubmiſſions, by the act of the parties only; but when mercantile tranſactions came to be frequently the ſubject of diſcuſſion in the courts, it was ſoon found, that a judge and jury were very unfit to unravel a long and intricate account; and it therefore became a practice, in caſes of that kind, and others, which ſeemed to be proper for the ſame tribunal, to refer the matters, by conſent of parties, under a rule of niſi prius; which was afterwards made a rule of that court, out of which the record proceeded, and performance of the award was enforced by proceſs of contempt. This practice does not appear to have begun before the reign of Charles II. for the reports of that period ſhew, that it was not before the latter end of that reign, that the courts granted their interference without reluctance. Their utility, however, was at length ſo well underſtood, that by Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 15. it was enacted, "That it ſhall and may be lawful to and for all traders and merchants, and others, deſiring to end by arbitration, any controverſy, ſuit or quarrel, for which there is no other remedy, but by perſonal action, or ſuit in equity, to agree that their ſubmiſſion of their ſuit to the award or umpirage of any perſon or perſons, ſhould be made a rule of any of his Majeſty's courts of record; and to inſert ſuch their agreement in their ſubmiſſion, or the condition of the bond or promiſe whereby they oblige themſelves reſpectively; which agreement being ſo made and inſerted, may on producing an affidavit thereof, made by the witneſſes thereunto, or any one of them, in the court of which the ſame is agreed to be made a rule, and on reading and filing the ſaid affidavit in court, be entered of record in ſuch court; and a rule ſhall thereupon be made by the ſaid court, that the parties ſhall ſubmit to, and finally be concluded by the arbitration or umpirage, which ſhall be made concerning them, by the arbitrators or umpire, purſuant to ſuch ſubmiſſion; and in caſe of diſobedience to ſuch arbitrator or umpirage, the party neglecting or refuſing, ſhall be ſubject to all the penalties of contemning a rule of court."—On this ſtatute, and awards made in conſequence, ſee 1 Stra. 1, 2: 2 Stra. 1178: 10 Mod 332, 3: Barnes 55, 8: 1 Salk. 72: Comyns 114: 1 Ld. Raym. 664.

The extent of the ſubmiſſion may be various, according to the pleaſure of the parties; it may be of one particular matter only, or of many, or of every ſubject of litigation between them.

It is proper to fix a time, within which the arbitrators ſhall pronounce their award: but where the ſubmiſſion limits no time for the making of the award, that ſhall be underſtood to be within convenient time; and if in ſuch a caſe the party requeſt the arbitrators to make an award, and they do not, a revocation of the authority afterwards will be no breach of the ſubmiſſion. 2 Keb. 10, 20.

The ſubmiſſion, being the voluntary agreement of the parties, the words of it muſt be ſo underſtood, as to give a reaſonable conſtruction to their meaning, and to make their intention prevail: and where there is a repugnancy in the words of the ſubmiſſion, the latter part ſhall be rejected, and the former ſtand. Poph. 15, 16.

It has been ſaid, that as all authority is in its nature revocable, even though made irrevocable, therefore a ſubmiſſion to an award may be revoked by either of the parties; ſuch at leaſt was the determination under the old law as reported in the year-books, and ancient reporters, but now it may reaſonably be ſuppoſed, that the courts would ſuſtain an action on the caſe, for countermanding the authority of the arbitrator. A caſe is reported in two books, one being evidently nothing more than a looſe note; 1 Sid. 281; the other report is at length, and the manner of the pleadings diſtinctly given; the breach being aſſigned in a diſcharge by the defendant of the arbitrators from making any award; and the judgment of the court without much heſitation in favour of the plaintiff. 2 Keb. 10, 20, 24.

This applies only, however, to the caſe of an expreſs revocation; not to that which muſt neceſſarily be implied by conſtruction of law from another act of the party. Thus, if a woman while ſole, ſubmit to arbitration, and marry before the making of the award, or before the expiration of the time for making it, the marriage operates as a revocation. W. Jones 388: 3 Keb. 9, 745.

II. EVERY ONE who is capable of making a diſpoſition of his property, or a releaſe of his right, may make a ſubmiſſion to an award; but no one can, who is either under a natural or civil capacity of contracting. Therefore a married woman cannot be party to a ſubmiſſion, whatever may be the ſubject of diſpute, whether ariſing ariſing before or after her marriage; but the huſband may ſubmit for himſelf and his wife. Str. 351.

On the principle that an infant cannot bind himſelf for any thing but neceſſaries, it is clear he cannot be party to a ſubmiſſion; whether the matter in diſpute be an injury done to him, or an injury done by him to another; but a guardian may ſubmit for an infant, and bind himſelf that he ſhall perform the award. See Comb. 318, Roberts v. Newbold; which eſtabliſhed this principle, in contradiction to former determinations.

An executor or adminiſtrator may ſubmit a matter in diſpute between another and himſelf, in right of his teſtator and inteſtate; but it is at his own peril; for if the arbitrator do not give him the ſame meaſure of juſtice as he would be entitled to at law, he muſt account for the deficiency to thoſe intereſted in the effects. See Dyer 216 b: 217 a: Com. Dig. Admin. (I. i.): 3 Leon. 53: and Barry v. Ruſh, 1 Term Rep. 691.

So the aſſignees of a bankrupt may ſubmit to arbitration any diſputes, between their bankrupt and others, provided they purſue the directions of the ſtat. 5 Geo. II. c. 30. § 34; on the conſtruction of which ſee 1 Atk. 91.

Thoſe only who are actually parties to the ſubmiſſion ſhall be bound by the award —For the caſe of partners ſee 2 Mod. 228,—Of co-pariſhioners, Mudy v. Oſam, Litt 30.

So, in general, a man is bound by an award, to which he ſubmits for another, Alſop v. Senior, 2 Keb. 707, 718. And ſee Bacon v. Dubarry; the caſe of an attorney ſubmitting for his principal without authority from him. 1 Ld. Raym. 246: See Kyd on Awards, p. 27: and Colwell v. Child, 1 Rep. Ch. 104: 1 Ca. Ch. 86.

But if a man authoriſe another on his behalf, to refer a diſpute, the award is binding on the principal alone. Dyer 216 b; 217. unleſs the agent binds himſelf for the performance of the principal. 1 Wilſ 28. 58.

When there are ſeveral claimants on one ſide, and they all agree to ſubmit to arbitration, and ſome only enter into a bond to perform the award, the award ſhall bind the reſt. Wood & al. v. Thompſon & al. M. 24 Car. B. R: Rol. Abr. tit. Arbitr. F. 11.

Where there are two on one ſide, though they will not be bound the one for the other, yet if the award be general, that they ſhall do one entire thing, both ſhall be bound to performance of the whole. Cro. Car. 434.

If the huſband and wife ſubmit to arbitration any thing in right of the wife, the wife ſhall after the death of the huſband, be bound by the award. Lumley v. Hutton, 1 Rol. Rep. 268, 9.

An award creates a duty which ſurvives to executors or adminiſtrators; they ſhall therefore on the one hand be compelled to the performance if made againſt their teſtator or inteſtate; and on the other may take advantage of it, if made in his favour. 2 Vent. 249: 1 Ld. Raym. 248.

And it is a general rule, that all thoſe who would be bound by an award may take advantage of it.

Generally ſpeaking, a ſubmiſſion of all matters between the parties, when there are more perſons than one, either on one or both ſides, is the ſame as a ſubmiſſion of all matters between the parties, any or either of them. Comyns 328. and therefore on ſubmiſſion by A. and B. on the one ſide, and C. and D. on the other, the award may be of matters between A and C. alone, or between A. and B. together, with C. alone, or vice verſâ; and money may be awarded to be paid accordingly. This rule however may be controlled by the words of the ſubmiſſion, in which it is in this caſe more particularly requiſite to be very exact. See Kyd on Awards 121: 8 Co. 98. a: Hardr. 399: 1 Vern. 259: Com. 547: Rol. Abr. tit. Arbitr. D. 5. and O. 8.

III. THOUGH the courts have at all times manifeſted a general diſpoſition to give efficacy to awards, yet there are ſome caſes in which they have refuſed them their protection, becauſe the ſubjects on which they were made were not the proper objects of ſuch reference.

The only motive which can influence a man to refer any ſubject of diſpute to the deciſion of an arbitrary judge, is, to have an amicable and eaſy ſettlement of ſomething which in its nature is uncertain. An award therefore is of no avail when made of debt on a bond for the payment of a ſum certain, whether it be ſingle or with a condition to be void on the payment of a leſs ſum; nor if made of debt for arrears of rent aſcertained by a leaſe; nor of covenant to pay a certain ſum of money; Blake's Caſe, 6 Co. 43, 4; nor of debt on the arrears of an account as formerly taken before auditors in an action of account; 1 Lev. 292. nor of damages recovered by a judgment; Gouldſb. 91, 2. for in all theſe caſes the demand is aſcertained. But ſee Lumley v. Hutton, Rol. Abr. tit. Arbitr. B. 8. and Coxat v. Sharp, 1 Keb. 937; as it ſeems that when joined with other demands of an uncertain nature, thoſe which are certain may alſo be ſubmitted; even in the caſe of a verdict and judgement.

But in general where the party complaining could recover by action only uncertain damages, the ſubject of complaint may be the object of a reference to arbitration; as any demand not aſcertained by the agreement or contract of the parties though the claimant demand a ſum certain; as a claim of 5*l.* for different expences in the ſervice of the other party. Sower v. Bradfield, Cro. Eliz. 422 So an action of account may be ſubmitted; for till the account be taken, the ſum remains uncertain. Rol. Abr. tit Arbitr. R. 4.

It is ſaid, and it appears juſtly, that all kinds of perſonal wrong, the compenſation for which is always uncertain, depending on the verdict of a jury may be ſubmitted to arbitration; where the injury done to the individual, is not conſidered, by the policy of the ſtate, as merged in the publick crime, which latter can never be the ſubject of arbitration.

In the caſe of deeds when no certain duty accrues by the deed alone, but the demand ariſes from a wrong or default ſubſequent, together with the deed, as in the caſe of a bond to perform covenants, or covenant to repair a houſe, there the demand, being for damages for a breach, may be ſubmitted to award. Blake's Caſe, 6 Co. 43, 4: Cro. Jac. 59 However in all caſes where the demand ariſes on a deed, the ſubmiſſion ought alſo to be by deed; becauſe a ſpecialty cannot be anſwered but by a ſpecialty. Lumley v Hutton, before quoted.

Much doubt and uncertainty ſeems anciently to have prevailed on the queſtion, "How far a diſpute concerning land could be referred to an arbitrator; and how far, on an actual reference, the parties were bound by his award." But it appears that the real difficulty was how to enforce an award made on a reference of a diſpute concerning land; for whenever the ſubmiſſion was by bond, it was almoſt univerſally held, that the party who did not perform the award forfeited the bond. Keilway 43, 45.

The preſent rule of law therefore is that "Where the parties might by their own act have transferred real property, or exerciſed any act of ownerſhip with reſpect to it, they may refer any diſpute concerning it to the deciſion of a third perſon, who may order the ſame acts to be done, which the parties themſelves might do by their own agreement." Knight v. Burton, 6 Mod. 231: Truſlove v. Aſcwre, Cro. El. 223: Dy. 183. in marg.

As real property cannot be transferred by the parties themſelves without deed, wherever that makes a part of the diſpute, the ſubmiſſion as well as the award, [and whatever act, is by the award, directed to be performed by the parties, as to real property,] muſt alſo be by deed.

IV. Every one whom the law ſuppoſes free, and capable of judging, whatever may be his character for integrity or wiſdom, may be an Arbitrator or Umpire; becauſe he is appointed by the choice of the parties themſelves, and it is their folly if they chooſe an improper perſon.

An infant cannot be an arbitrator; nor a married woman; nor a man attainted of treaſon or felony. But an unmarried woman may be an arbitratrix. Ducheſs of Suffolk's caſe, 8 E. 4. 1: Br. 3[illegible].

It is a general rule of law, founded on the firſt principles of natural juſtice, that a man cannot take on himſelf to be judge in his own cauſe; but ſhould he be nominated an arbitrator, by or with the conſent of the oppoſite party the objection is waived; and the award ſhall be valid. Matthew v. Allerton, Comb. 218: 4 Mod. 226: Hunter v. Benniſon, Hardr. 43.

The nomination of the Umpire is either made by the parties themſelves, at the time of their ſubmiſſion, or left to the diſcretion of the arbitrators. Where two arbitrators (as is moſt frequently the caſe) have this power, the law provides that the choice ſhall be fair and impartial, and that it ſhall not even be left to chance, an election being an act of the will and underſtanding. 2 Vern. 485.

There is no part of the law relative to awards in which ſo much uncertainty and confuſion appear in the reported caſes, as on this reſpecting the Umpire. The time when the power of the Arbitrators ceaſes, and that of the Umpire begins; the time when the Umpire may be nominated; and the effect of his nomination have, each in its turn, proved queſtions of ſufficient magnitude to exerciſe and diſtract the genius of the lawyers. The time limited for the Umpire to make his umpirage, has ſometimes been the ſame with that limited for the Arbitrators to make their award. It is now however moſt uſual, and certainly more correct to prolong the time beyond that period.

In this caſe of a prolongation of time, the authority of the Arbitrators is determined, and that of the umpire immediately begins on the expiration of the time ſpecified to be allowed to the Arbitrators. Lumley v. Hutton.

The point on which, on all the forms of ſubmiſſion, the greateſt difficulty has been felt, has been to decide whether any conduct of the arbitrators can authoriſe the Umpire to make his umpirage before the expiration of the time limited for their making their award.

On this head the following ſeems to be undeniably the cleareſt and moſt accurate opinion. If the Arbitrators do in fact make an award within the time allowed to them, that ſhall be conſidered as the real award; if they make none, then the umpirage ſhall take place; and there is here no confuſion as to the concurrence of authority with reſpect to the time. The Umpire has no concurrence abſolutely, but only conditionally, if the arbitrators make no award within their time. This applies equally to the caſe where the Umpire is confined to the ſame time with the arbitrators, and to that where a further time is given to him. Chaje v. Dare, Sir T. Jones 168: ſee alſo, Godb. 241: 1 Lev. 174, 285: 1 Ld. Raym. 671: 12 Mod. 512: Lutw. 541, 4: Cro. Car. 263: 1 Mod. 274: Sir T. Raym. 205: 1 Salk. 71.

It is now finally determined that the Arbitrators may nominate an Umpire before they proceed to conſider the ſubject referred to them; and that this is ſo far from putting an end to their authority, that it is the faireſt way of chooſing an umpire. 2 Term Rep. 645. And it is in fact not unuſual for the parties to make it a condition in the ſubmiſſion that the umpire ſhall be choſen by the Arbitrators, before they do any other act. They may alſo, when a further day is given to the Umpire, and the choice left to them in general terms, chooſe him at any time after the expiration of their own time, provided it be before the time limited for him. 3 Keb. 387: Freem. 378: 2 Mod. 169.

From the opinion that the arbitrators having once elected an Umpire had executed their authority, it has been thought to follow as a neceſſary conſequence, that if they elected one who refuſed to undertake the buſineſs they could not elect another. This opinion has been ſupported by two Chief Juſtices, but over-ruled (ſurely with propriety) by determinations of the Court. 3 Lev. 263: 2 Vent. 113: Palm. 289: 2 Saund. 129: 1 Salk. 70: 1 Ld. Raym. 222: 12 Mod. 120.

When the perſon to whom the parties have agreed to refer the matters in diſpute between them has conſented to undertake the office, he ought to appoint a time and place for examining the matter, and to give notice of ſuch appointment to the parties or to their attornies; if the ſubmiſſion be by rule of reference at niſi prius, the witneſſes ſhould be ſworn at the bar of the court, or afterwards, (if neglected) before a judge.

The parties muſt attend the arbitrators, according to the appointment, either in perſon or by attorney, with their witneſſes and documents. The arbitrators may alſo, if they think proper, examine the parties themſelves, and call for any other information.

Where a time is limited for making the award, it cannot be made after that time, unleſs it be prolonged. When the ſubmiſſion is by the mere act of the parties, that prolongation may be made by their mutual conſent; otherwiſe a rule of court is neceſſary for the purpoſe.

The law has ſecured each of the parties againſt the voluntary procraſtination of the other, by permitting the arbitrator on due notice given to proceed without his attendance. Waller v. King, 9 Mod. 63: 2 Eq. Ab. 92. c. 3; or the willing party may preſs his opponent by rule of court to attend the arbitrator, who on failure may make his award without ſuch attendance. Hetley v. Hetley, in Scac: Mich. 1789.

It has been formerly held that an Umpire cannot proceed on the report of the arbitrators, but muſt hear the whole matter anew; but there ſeems to be no good reaſon why the Umpire, if he think proper, may not take thoſe points on which the arbitrators agree to be as they report them. The nature of his duty is only to make a final determination on the whole ſubject of diſpute, where the arbitrators cannot do it, and by adopting their opinion as far as they agree, and incorporating it with his own on the other points, he effectually makes that final determination. And in this manner Umpires do uſually act: and they are juſtified in ſo doing unleſs requeſted to re-examine the witneſſes. 4 Term Rep. 589.

Though the words in the ſubmiſſion which regulate the appointment of an Umpire, be not perfectly correct; but might from the grammatical order ſeem to imply that the Arbitrators and the Umpire, ſhould all join together to make an award, yet an award made by the arbitrators without the participation of the umpire, will be conſidered as ſatisfying the terms of the ſubmiſſion. Rol. Abr. tit. Arbitr. p. 6.—And on the other hand, an umpirage made by the umpire jointly with the arbitrators is good; their approbation, ſhewn by joining with him, being mere ſurpluſage, does not render the inſtrument purporting to be his umpirage in any degree leſs the act of his judgment. Soulſby v. Hodgſon, 2 Blackſt. 463.

Unleſs it be expreſsly provided in the ſubmiſſion, that a leſs number than all the arbitrators named may make the award, the concurrence of all is neceſſary; and where ſuch a proviſo is made, all muſt be preſent, unleſs thoſe who do not attend had proper and ſufficient notice, and are wilfully abſent. Barnes 57.

As to the neceſſity impoſed on the arbitrators or umpire of giving notice of their award, the following are the cleareſt determinations. If the award be made before the day limited in the ſubmiſſion, the parties ſhall not be bound by any thing awarded to be done before that day, unleſs they have notice; but they muſt take notice at their peril of any thing ordered at the day. 8 E. 4. 1: Br. 37: Keilway 175: ſee Cro. El. 97; Cro. Car. 132, 3.

It has long been the practice to guard againſt the conſequences of the want of notice, by inſerting a proviſo in the condition of the arbitration-bond not only that the award ſhall be made, but that it ſhall be delivered to the parties by a certain day; and then the bond will not be forfeited by non performance, unleſs the party not performing had notice; and the award ought to be delivered to all the perſons who are parties on either ſide. Hungate's Caſe, 5 Co. 103: Cro. El. 885: Mo. 642.

The object of every reference is a final and certain determination of the controverſies referred. A reſervation of any point for the future deciſion of the arbitrator, or of a power to alter the award, is inconſiſtent with that object; and therefore it is eſtabliſhed as a general rule that ſuch a reſervation is void: but the reſervation of a mere miniſterial act, as the meaſuring of land, the calculation of intereſt at a rate ſettled, &c. does not vitiate the award. 12 Mod. 139: 2 Ro. Rep. 189, 214, 215: Palm. 110, 146: Cro. Jac. 315: Hob. 218: Lutw. 550: Hardr. 43.

The ſubmiſſion to the deciſion of an individual, ariſes from the confidence which the parties repoſe in his integrity and ſkill; and is merely perſonal to him; it is therefore inconſiſtent that the arbitrators or umpire ſhould delegate any part of their authority to another; and ſuch delegation is abſolutely void. But it was ſettled in the caſe of Lingood v. Eade, 2 Atk. 501, (515,) that arbitrators where they award the ſubſtance of things to be done, may refer it to another to ſettle the manner in which it ſhall be put in execution.

Since the introduction of references at niſi prius, there can be no queſtion, but the arbitrator has a juriſdiction over the coſts of the action, as well as over the ſubject of the action itſelf; unleſs ſome particular proviſion is made to the contrary by the form of the ſubmiſſion. Inſtead of aſcertaining the coſts, the arbitrator may refer them to be taxed by the proper officer of the court, but to no one elſe. 2 Atk. 504, (519): 1 Salk. 75: 6 Mod. 195: Hardw. 181: Barnes 56, 8: 1 Sid. 358: Str. 737, 1035: Com. 330. When it is agreed that coſts ſhall abide the event, it means the legal event. See 3 Term Rep. 139. And alſo as to awarding the coſts of the arbitration, 2 Term Rep. 645. And the arbitrators may award damages to either party, though in point of law there was no cauſe of action. 2 Vent. 243. If the arbitrator takes no notice of the coſts, but awards mutual releaſes, it ſhall be preſumed to be meant that each party ſhall pay his own coſts. See Kyd, 143.

V. EVERY AWARD ſhould be conſiſtent with the terms of the ſubmiſſion; the whole authority of the arbitrators being derived from thence.—Therefore,

1. The Award muſt not extend to any matter not comprehended in the ſubmiſſion: thus if the ſubmiſſion be confined to a particular ſubject of diſpute, while there are other things in controverſy between the parties, an award which extends to any of theſe other things is void as far as it reſpects them. 2 Mod. 309.

If two ſubmit to the award of a third perſon all demands between them; without more; the word, demands, implies all matters between them concerning the lands of both parties which are the ſubjects of variance. 1 Ld. Raym. 115: Keilw. 99.

If the ſubmiſſion be, "of all cauſes of action, ſuits, debts, reckonings, accounts, ſums of money, claims and demands," an award, "to releaſe all bonds, ſpecialties, judgments, executions and extents," is within the ſubmiſſion; for as all debts are ſubmitted, of courſe a releaſe may be awarded of the ſecurities for them. 2 Saund. 190.

Where the ſubmiſſion is, "of all debts, treſpaſſes and injuries," an award "to releaſe all actions, debts, duties and demands," does not exceed the ſubmiſſion; the word injuries comprehending demands. 3 Bulſt. 312.

The rule however is not ſo ſtrictly interpreted as to extend to every thing literally beyond the ſubmiſſion; if the award be of any thing depending on the principal, it is good. Rol. Arb. B. 2: C. 4, 5, 6.

Thus if the ſubmiſſion be of all treſpaſſes, and the award be, "that one ſhall pay to the other 10*l.* and that he ſhall enter into a bond for the ſum;" this is good, becauſe it only renders the award more effectual. Kyd. 96.

In like manner if it can reaſonably be preſumed that nothing is in reality awarded beyond the ſubmiſſion it has in general been ſupported. 10 Co. 131, 2: Jenk. 264: Rol. Arb. 21: ſee 6 Mod. 232.

On the ſubmiſſion of a particular difference when there are other matters in controverſy, though an award of a general releaſe is void; yet the proof of ſuch other diſputes exiſting is thrown on the party objecting. 2 Mod. 309:

309: 1 Sid. 154: Vide Hob. 190. (See poſt. Div. 3. of this head).

If in a ſimilar caſe the arbitrators award "that all ſuits ſhall ceaſe," this ſhall be confined to ſuits relating to the ſubject of the ſubmiſſion, and void only for the reſidue. 1 Ro. Rep. 362: 2 Ro. Rep. 192: Cro. Jac. 663.

On a diſpute between a parſon and one of his pariſhioners, whether the tithes ſhould be paid in kind or not; the arbitrator awarded that the parſon ſhould have 7*l.* for the tithes due before the ſubmiſſion, and that the pariſhioner ſhould pay 4*l.* annually for the future tithes. This was held to be a good award, becauſe the ſubmiſſion comprehended a queſtion concerning the future rights. Rol. Arb. D. 8. But an award made on the 23d of June, ordering ſo much rent to be paid, which by the award itſelf appeared not to be due till the 24th, was held bad. 10 Mod. 204.

If partners refer all matters in difference between them, the arbitrators may diſſolve the partnerſhip. 1 Black. Rep. 475.

Where the ſubmiſſion is by reference at niſi prius, the order in which the words are placed in the rule of reference, gives no material diſtinction with reſpect to the power of the arbitrator. If the reference be "of all matters in diſpute in the cauſe between the parties," the power of the arbitrator is confined ſolely to the matters in diſpute in that ſuit. If it be "of all matters in difference between the parties in the ſuit," his power is not confined to the ſubject of that particular cauſe, but extends to every matter in diſpute between them. 2 Black. 1118: 2 Term Rep. 644, 5: 3 Term Rep. 626.

As an award of a thing out of the ſubmiſſion cannot be enforced by an action at law, ſo neither ſhall a man by ſuch an award be precluded from claiming his right in equity. Finch. Rep. 141.

2. The award ſhould not extend to any who is a ſtranger (that is, not a party) to the ſubmiſſion. Thus if two ſubmit to arbitration concerning the title to certain lands, and the arbitrators award that all controverſies touching the land ſhall ceaſe; and that one of the parties, his wife and ſon, his heir apparent, by his procurement, ſhall make to the other ſuch aſſurance of the land as the other ſhall require, this is void; becauſe the wife and ſon are ſtrangers to the ſubmiſſion. Rol. Arb. N. 9: and ſee Samon's Ca. 5 Rep. 77 b.

Lord Coke (10 Rep. 131 b,) ſays, that an award is void, which directs money to be paid by one of the parties to a third perſon not included in the ſubmiſſion; but this muſt be underſtood to hold good only when ſuch payment can be of no benefit to the other party; for an award that one of the parties ſhall pay ſo much to the creditor of the other, in diſcharge of a debt, is unqueſtionably good. 1 Ld. Raym. 123: Rol. Arb. E. 6. F. 8.

And in general a diſtinction is taken between the caſe of an act awarded to be done by a ſtranger, and that of an act awarded to be done to him, by a party to the ſubmiſſion: in the latter caſe the award is ſaid to be good; and if the ſtranger will not accept the money awarded to be paid to him the party's obligation is ſaved. 3 Leon. 62.

So where a ſtranger is only an inſtrument to the performance of the award, no objection ſhall be allowed on that account: as if it be, that one of the parties ſhall ſurrender his copyhold into the hands of two tenants of the manſion who ſhall preſent the ſurrender; this award is good. Rol. Arbitr. E. 7, 8: 1 Keb. 569: and ſee Diviſion 4 of this head.

If the perſons comprehended in the award were in contemplation of the ſubmiſſion, though they were not directly parties to it, yet the award is good. Lutw. 530, 571: 1 Mar. 78: Comyns 183: Rol. Arb. B. 18.

An award ſhall not affect the rights of perſons not parties to the ſubmiſſion. Finch. 180, 4. and ſee Id. 141.

3. The award ought not to be of part only of the things ſubmitted. This however muſt be underſtood with a conſiderable degree of limitation; for though the words of the ſubmiſſion be more comprehenſive than thoſe of the award, yet if it do not appear that any thing elſe was in diſpute between the parties, beſide what is comprehended in the award, it will be good. 8 Co. 98: Rol. Arb. L. 5.

If a ſubmiſſion be "of all the premiſſes or of any part of them," in this caſe the arbitrator may undoubtedly make an award of part only. Rol. Arb. L. 6.

If an award be made of all matters except a bond, and of this it be awarded that it ſhall ſtand, the award is good; for it ſhall be preſumed there was no cauſe to diſcharge the bond. Cro. Jac. 277, 400: Bridg. 91.

If arbitrators award for one thing, and ſay that they will not meddle with the reſt, all is void; becauſe they have not purſued their authority. Cro. El. 858: ſee Dy. 216, 217.

Where a ſubmiſſion is of certain matters ſpecifically named, with a proviſional clauſe "ſo that the award be made of and upon the premiſſes," the arbitrator ought to make his award of all, otherwiſe it will be void. 8 Co. 98: Goldſb. 125: Rol. Arbitr. L. 9.

But where the ſubmiſſion is general of all matters in difference between the parties; though there ſhould happen to be many ſubjects of controverſy between them, if only one be ſignified to the arbitrator, he may make his award of that: he is, in the language of Lord Coke, in the place of a judge, and his office is to determine according to what is alledged and proved. It is the buſineſs of the parties grieved, who know their own particular grievances, to ſignify their cauſes of controverſy to the arbitrator; for he is a ſtranger, and cannot know any thing of their diſputes but what is laid before him. 8 Co. 98 b: 1 Brownl. 63: 2 Brownl. 309.

In the caſe of ſuch a general ſubmiſſion, if an award concerning one thing only be made, it ſhall be preſumed (till the contrary be ſhewn by the party objecting) that nothing elſe was referred. Cro. Jac. 200, 355: 1 Burr. 274 et ſeq. But the arbitrators ought to decide on all matters laid before them, or they cannot do complete juſtice. And it is ſaid that on a reference by rule of a court of equity, the award ought to comprehend all the matters referred. 1 C. C. 87, 186.

It is however no valid objection to an award that the arbitrator had notice of a certain demand, and that he made no award of that, if in other reſpects the award be good; as, though the ſum in queſtion may not be mentioned in the award, the arbitrator may have ſhewn his opinion that the demand was unfounded; as, by ordering general releaſes, &c. See 1 Saund. 32.

An award of one particular thing for the ending of an hundred matters in difference is ſufficient, provided it concludes to them all. 1 Keb. 738: 1 Lev. 132, 3.

4. If an award be to do any thing which is againſt law, it is void, and the parties are not bound to perform it. Rol. Arbitr. G: 1 Sid. 12: 2 Vent. 243. So alſo is an award of a thing which is not phyſically or morally poſſible, or in the power of the party to perform; as that he ſhall deliver up a deed which is in the cuſtody or power of a perſon, over whom he has no controul. 12 Mod. 585: and ſee Rol. tit. Arbitr. And an award that the defendant ſhall be bound with ſureties ſuch as the plaintiff ſhall approve, is void; for it may be impoſſible to force the approbation of the plaintiff. 3 Mod. 272, 3. But in this caſe the party ſhould enter into a bond himſelf and tender it to the plaintiff.

Where an award is that one of the parties ſhall procure a ſtranger to do a thing, there is a diſtinction taken between the caſe where he has no power over the ſtranger, to compel him, and where he has power either by the common law or by bill in equity. In the former caſe the award is void, for ſo much as concerns the ſtranger. In the latter it is good. Rol. Arbitr. F. 1: 248 n. 11: March. 18: 1 Mod. 9.—(See ante Diviſion 2.)

Neither muſt an award be to do a thing unreaſonable; nor by the performance of which the party awarded to do the acts may ſubject himſelf to an action from another. Rol. Arbitr. E. 2, 3; F. 10: 2 Bulſt. 39: 1 Keb. 92: 1 Ro. Rep. 6: Cro. Car. 226: 3 Lev. 153.

What ſhall or ſhall not be unreaſonable, is however matter of conſtruction in which the caſes differ conſiderably. See Rol. Arb. B. 12; J. 4. 5: 2 Mod. 304.

An award muſt not be of a thing which is merely nugatory, without any advantage to the parties. Rol. Arb. J. 10—15. And if a man and a woman ſubmit to arbitration, and it be awarded that they ſhall intermarry, this is ſaid not to be binding (Id. ib.) for one reaſon among others, that it cannot be preſumed to be advantageous to them. Mutual releaſes are advantageous, and therefore an award of them is good. Freem. 51.

5. The Award muſt be certain and final. As the intention of the parties in ſubmitting their diſputes to arbitration, is to have ſomething aſcertained, which was uncertain before, it is a poſitive rule that the award ought to be ſo plainly expreſt, that the parties may certainly know what it is they are ordered to do. 5 Co. 77 b: 78 a.

On the conſtruction of certainty and uncertainty the caſes are multifarious; and it may be obſerved, that they principally depend on ſuch circumſtances as are peculiar to each caſe, and very ſeldom form any general precedent. The rule therefore ſerves better to regulate the conduct of arbitrators, than the numerous exceptions: as it is the intereſt of the party againſt whom the award is made to be ingenious in finding out objections, an award cannot be too particular or preciſe in laying down what is to be done by the parties, and the manner, time and place of their doing it. Though the two latter have been deemed immaterial (Stra. 905,) yet it is ſafeſt to ſpecify them.

Awards are now ſo liberally conſtrued, that trifling objections are not ſuffered to prevail againſt the manifeſt intent of the parties. See 1 Burr. 277. and poſt Diviſion 6. In favour of the equitable juriſdiction of the arbitrators, if that, to which the objection of uncertainty is made, can be aſcertained either by the context of the award, or from the nature of, and circumſtances attendant on the thing awarded, or by a manifeſt reference to ſomething connected with it, the objection ſhall not prevail. See 2 Ld. Raym. 1076: 12 Mod. 585: Lutw. 545: Stra. 903. Where there is no date to the award, it ſhall be taken as dated from the day of the delivery which may be aſcertained by averment; and all other uncertainties may be helped by proper averments in pleading. 1 Ld. Raym. 246, 612: Cro. Eliz. 676: Sty. 28: 2 Saund. 292.

As an award muſt be certain, ſo alſo muſt it be final; (at the time of making it; ſee 1 Sid. 59: Lut. 51: Comb. 456); in order to prevent any future litigation on the ſubject of the ſubmiſſion.

On this principle, an award that each party ſhall be nonſuited in the action which he has brought againſt the other, is not good; becauſe (amongſt other reaſons) a nonſuit does not bar them from bringing a new action: but an award that a party ſhall diſcontinue his action, or enter a retraxit, is good. Godb. 276: Rol. Arbitr. F. 7.

An award—that all ſuits ſhall ceaſe—or, that a bill in chancery ſhall be diſmiſſed—or, that a party ſhall not commence or proſecute a ſuit—is final; for it ſhall be taken to mean, that the debt and action ſhall ceaſe for ever; that alone being a ſubſtantial performance of the award. 6 Mod 33, 232: 2 Ld. Raym 961, 4: 1 Salk. 74, 5: Rol. Arb O 7. But ſee 2 Stra. 1024.

Laſtly the Award muſt be mutual; not giving an advantage to one party without an equivalent to the other.

The principal requiſite, however, to form that mutuality, about which ſo much is ſaid in all the caſes uſually claſſed under this rule, is nothing more than that the thing awarded to be done ſhould be a final diſcharge, and ſatisfaction of all debts and claims by the party in whoſe favour the award is made, againſt the other, for the matters ſubmitted; and therefore the preſent rule amounts to nothing more than a different form of expreſſion of that which requires that an award ſhould be final. See Comb. 439: 1 Ld. Raym. 246: Cro. Eliz. 904: Comyns 328.

6. The rules which at preſent govern the conſtruction of awards are, that they ſhall be interpreted, as deeds, according to the intention of the arbitrators. That they ſhall not be taken ſtrictly, but liberally, according to the intent of the parties ſubmitting, and according to the power given to the arbitrators. 1 Burr. 277: 2 Atk. 504 (519)—That all actions mentioned in the award, ſhall be conſtrued to mean, all actions over which the arbitrators have power by the ſubmiſſion—That if there be any contradiction in the words of an award, ſo that the one part cannot ſtand conſiſtently with the other, the firſt part ſhall ſtand and the latter be rejected; but that if the latter be only an explanation of the former, both parts ſhall ſtand. Palm. 108: 3 Bulſt. 66, 7.—And that where the words of an award have any ambiguity in them, they are always to be conſtrued in ſuch a manner as to give effect to the award. 6 Mod. 35.

Much unneceſſary difficulty occurs in all the old reports on the conſtruction that ought to be put on the award of a Releaſe; but it is now clearly ſettled, that an award of releaſes up to the time of making the award, is not altogether void; but that it ſhall be conſtrued ſo as to ſupport the award; and that for two reaſons. 1ſt. That it ſhall be preſumed that no difference has ariſen ſince the time of the ſubmiſſion, unleſs it be ſpecially ſhewn that there there has: 2d. That a releaſe to the time of the ſubmiſſion is a good performance of an award, ordering a releaſe to the time of the award; not becauſe the meaning of the arbitrators is ſo, but becauſe their meaning muſt be controuled ſo far as it is void, by conſtruction of law. 10 Mod. 201: 6 Mod. 33, 5: 2 Ld. Raym. 964, 5: 1 Ld. Raym. 116. ſee 12 Mod. 8, 116, 589: Godb. 164, 5: 2 Keb. 431: 1 Sid. 365.

Formerly, if one part of an award was void, the whole was conſidered ſo: now however, it is the rule of the courts, in many caſes, to enforce the performance of that, which had it ſtood by itſelf, would have been good, notwithſtanding another part may be bad. 12 Mod. 534: but if that part of the award, which is void, be ſo connected with the reſt, as to affect the juſtice of the caſe between the parties, the award is void for the whole. Cro. Jac. 584.

When, from the tenor of the award, it appears that the arbitrator has intended that his award ſhould be mutual, awarding ſomething in favour of one of the parties as an equivalent for what he has awarded in favour of the other; if then that which is awarded on the one ſide, be void, ſo that performance of it cannot be enforced, the award is void for the whole, becauſe that mutuality, which the arbitrator intended, cannot be preſerved. Yel. 98: Brown. 92: Rol. Arb. K. 15: Cro. Jac. 577, 8.

If one entire act awarded to be done on one ſide, comprehend ſeveral things, for ſome of which it would be good, and for others not, the award is bad for the whole, becauſe the act cannot be divided. Cro. Jac. 639.

When it appears clearly that both parties have the full effect of what was intended them by the arbitrator, though ſomething be awarded which is void; yet the award ſhall ſtand for the reſt. 1 Ld. Raym. 114: Lutw. 545: and ſee 12 Mod. 588.

An award ought regularly to be made in writing, ſigned and ſealed by the arbitrators, and the execution properly witneſſed: It may however be made by parol, if it is ſo expreſsly provided in the ſubmiſſion.

7. It is not in all caſes abſolutely neceſſary that performance ſhould be exactly according to the words of the award; if it be ſubſtantively and effectually the ſame, it is ſufficient. 3 Bulſt. 67. And if the party, in whoſe favour the award is made, accept of a performance differing in circumſtances from the exact letter of the award, that is ſufficient; for conſenſus tollit errorem. 3 Bulſt. 67.

Where the concurrence and preſence of both parties is not abſolutely neceſſary to the performance, each ought to perform his part without requeſt from the other, 1 Ld. Raym. 233, 4. and ſee Rol. Arb. Z. 6.—If an award order that the defendant ſhall re-aſſign to the plaintiff, certain mortgaged premiſes, it will be a breach if he do not re-aſſign without requeſt. 1 Ld. Raym. 234.

If the award be to pay at, on or before a particular day, payment before the day is equivalent to payment on the day. 3 Keb. 675, 6.

A conſiderable number of years having elapſed ſince the making of the award, is no objection to the parties being called upon to perform it. Finch. Rep. 384: nor can the ſtatute of Limitations (21 Jac. 1. c. 16. § 3) be pleaded in bar. 2 Saund. 64.

On an award, that one party ſhall enter into a ſecurity for money, (note, bond, &c.) the giving the ſecurity is a performance of the award; and on non-payment, the perſon to whom it is given can only proceed againſt the other on that ſecurity, and not on the ſubmiſſion or arbitration bond. Bendl. 15: Stra. 903, 1082.

VI. THE REMEDY to compel performance of an award is various, according to the various forms of the ſubmiſſion.

Though the ſubmiſſion be verbal, an action may be maintained on the award, whether it be for the payment of money, or for the performance of a collateral act. 1 Ld. Raym. 122: and ſee ante Diviſion 1.

Where the award is either verbal, or in writing, for the payment of money, and made on a ſubmiſſion, either by parol or by deed, the action on the award may be an action of debt: it may alſo be an action of aſſumpſit: and in all other caſes on a parol ſubmiſſion, an aſſumpſit is the only ſpecies of action that can be maintained. 1 Leon. 72: Cro. Jac. 354.

In all actions on the award, it muſt neceſſarily be ſhewn, in direct unequivocal terms, that the parties ſubmitted; before the award can be properly introduced; 2 Stra. 923. the ſubmiſſion too muſt be ſo ſtated as to correſpond with the award, and to ſupport it. 2 Lev. 235: 2 Show. 61.

When the action is on a mutual aſſumpſit, to pay a certain ſum on requeſt, if the defendant ſhould not ſtand to the award; an actual requeſt to pay that ſum, before the action brought, muſt be poſitively ſtated. 1 Saund. 33: 2 Keb. 126.

When the ſubmiſſion is by bond, if the award be for payment of money, an action of debt on the award lies, as well as an action on the bond; but the latter is the action moſt uſually brought; in this the order of pleading commonly obſerved is, that the plaintiff declares on the bond, as in ordinary caſes of action on a bond; the defendant then prays oyer of the condition, which being ſet forth, he pleads that the arbitrators or the umpire made no award; then the plaintiff replies, not barely alledging that they did, but ſetting forth the award at large, and aſſigning the breach by the defendant; (as to which ſee poſt. and Winch 121: Yelv. 24, 78, 153: 1 Ld. Raym. 114, 123: 2 Vent. 221: 3 Lev. 293:) and on that the whole queſtion ariſes as on an original declaration.—The defendant then either rejoins, that they made "no ſuch award," (Jenk. 116: Cro. Jac. 200: Palm. 511,) on which the plaintiff takes iſſue—or, he demurs, and the plaintiff joins in demurrer. Vid. Stra. 923: Freem. 410, 415: 1 Sid. 370: 3 Burr. 1729, 30: 5 E. 4. 108: Brooke pl. 33: Cro. Eliz. 838.

Every thing neceſſary to ſhew that the award was made according to the terms of the ſubmiſſion, muſt be ſtated by the plaintiff. Lutw. 536: 2 Ld. Raym. 989, 1076. Where alſo by the terms of the award, performance on the part of the plaintiff, is a condition precedent to that on the part of the defendant; there the plaintiff muſt ſhew that he has done every thing neceſſary to entitle him to call on the oppoſite party.—But tender by the plaintiff, and refuſal by the defendant, will be ſufficient, unleſs the thing to be done by the plaintiff can be done without the concurrence of the other. Hardr. 43, 44.

A material variance between the real award and that ſet forth in the pleadings, will be fatal to the plaintiff; and and if on the trial the jury doubt whether the variance is material or not, a ſpecial verdict may be taken for the opinion of the court. 1 Salk. 72: 1 Ld. Raym. 715. S. C.: 1 Burr. 278.

In an action on the award, the defendant may plead 'that he did not ſubmit;' but in an action on the bond ſuch a plea is not good. 1 Sid. 290: 2 Stra. 923.

More exactneſs is required in ſetting forth a written than a verbal award—in the former nothing muſt be alledged by inducement. 2 Vent. 242. The breach muſt alſo be aſſigned, with ſuch preciſion, as to ſhew that the award was made of the thing in which the breach was alledged. 1 Rol. Rep. 8: Cro. Jac. 339: 2 Bulſt. 93. and in an action on the aſſumpſit, to perform the award, the plaintiff may aſſign ſeveral breaches. Jenk. 264, and ſee Yelv. 35. But in an action on the arbitration bond, where ſeveral things are ordered to be done by the defendants, it is not neceſſary to aſſign breaches of every matter, becauſe the breach of any one is a forfeiture of the penalty of the bond; and when the plaintiff has once recovered, then he can never maintain another action on the ſame bond, to recover the penalty again on a ſecond breach. 2 Wilſ. 276, 9. and vide Id. 293. S. P.

If the defendant ſet forth the award, and alledge the performance generally, and then on a breach being aſſigned in the replication, he rejoin and ſhew a ſpecial performance, this will be a departure. 1 Ld. Raym. 234.

It has ſeveral times happened, that the defendant by ſetting forth an award, partially, has impoſed conſiderable difficulty on the plaintiff how to anſwer him. (See 1 Keb. 568: 1 Saund. 326: 3 Lev. 165: Lutw. 525). In this caſe if the plaintiff demand oyer of the award, and have it ſet forth at full length, aſſigning a breach in the ſame manner as if the defendant had pleaded no award, he will be ſecure againſt any objection from the manner of pleading. Lutw. 451: and ſee Godb. 255: 1 Rol. Rep. 6.

If from the default of the defendant no award has been made within the time limited, the plaintiff may, to the plea of no award, reply that default of the defendant. See 8 Co. 81.—On a ſubmiſſion by bond, providing that the award ſhall be made within a limited time, though that time is enlarged by mutual conſent, and the award made within the enlarged time, an action cannot be maintained on the bond to recover the penalty for non-performance. 3 Term Rep. 529. n.—And as to ſuch enlargement of time, ſee 2 Term Rep. 643, 4: 3 Term Rep. 601.

On the practice obtaining, of references at Niſi Prius, performance of the award was conſequently enforced by means of an attachment, and the following is the preſent courſe of proceeding to obtain that remedy.—The award muſt be tendered to the party bound to perform it, and on his refuſal to accept it, affidavit muſt be made of the due execution of the award, and of ſuch tender and refuſal; and on that, application made to the court to make the order of Niſi Prius a rule of court; a copy of this rule muſt be perſonally ſerved on the party, and if he ſtill refuſe to accept the award, an affidavit muſt be made of ſuch ſervice and refuſal; on which the court will grant an attachment of courſe. 1 Crompt. Pract. 264. When the award is accepted, but the money being demanded is not paid, an affidavit muſt be made of ſuch refuſal, and of the due execution of the award. 2 Black. Rep. 990, 1.—Where there is any diſpute as to the proper performance of an award, it is diſcretionary in the court to grant or refuſe an attachment. 1 Stra. 695: 1 Burr. 278.

When an award is not for the payment of money, but for the performance of any collateral act, it may ſometimes be enforced by a bill in equity, on which the court will decree a ſpecifick performance. See 1 Atk. 74, (62): 1 Eq. Ab. 51: 1 C. R. 46: 3 C. R. 20: 2 Vern. 24: 3 P. Wms. 187, 9, 190. But though a court of equity may aſſiſt a plaintiff to procure the execution of an award, it will not compel a defendant to diſcover a breach by which he may charge himſelf with the penalty of a ſubmiſſion bond. Biſhop v. Biſhop, 1 C. R. See the next Diviſion.

VII. RELIEF may be obtained againſt an award, made contrary to the preſcribed rules of law, when the award is put in ſuit. But when the ſubmiſſion is by the mere act of the parties, the defendant is not permitted to impeach the conduct of the arbitrators, at law; ſo as to make it a defence to an action on the award or ſubmiſſion bond. See 1 Saund. 327: 2 Wilſ. 149. In ſuch caſe the only relief is in equity. 2 Vezey 315. But a court of equity will not interfere to ſet aſide an award, where the ſubmiſſion is voluntary, (or by order of Niſi Prius, 1 C. C. 140: 1 Vern. 157,) except for corruption or improper conduct in the arbitrators: or where the award appears on the face of it to be contrary to the rules of equity; as, to the prejudice of an infant, &c. 1 C. C. 276, 279, 280: 3 Atk. 529. (496): 2 Eq. Ab. 63, 4: 3 C. R. 49: Ambl. 245.

In bills to have an award ſet aſide for corruption or partiality, it is uſual to make the arbitrators defendants; together with the party in whoſe favour the award is made. Finch. Rep. 141: 3 Atk. 644, 397. The arbitrators may plead the award in bar; but they muſt ſhew themſelves impartial, or the court will make them pay coſts. 2 Atk. 396, (412).

Where the ſubmiſſion is by order of Niſi Prius, or under the ſtat. 9 & 10 W. 3. a court of equity will not entertain a bill to relieve againſt an award for corruption or partiality, unleſs the court of law has not afforded that relief, on application; or the time for complaining at law under the ſtatute is elapſed. 2 Atk. 155, (162), 396, (412): 2 Vez. 316, 7: See Bunb. 265.

By the ſtat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 15. It is enacted, That "any arbitration or umpirage, procured by corruption, or undue means, ſhall be void; and be accordingly ſet aſide by any court of law or equity, ſo as complaint be made to the court, where the rule for ſubmiſſion is made, before the laſt day of the next term after ſuch arbitration made and publiſhed to the parties." See 1 Stra. 301: 2 Burr. 701: Barnes 55, 7. But it ſeems that a court of equity may relieve, on manifeſt grounds, after the time required, by the act, for complaint at law, though no ſuch complaint is made at all in the common law courts. Bunb. 265: 1 Barn. K. B. 75, 152.

Where the ſubmiſſion is by reference at Niſi Prius, there is no time limited for making an application to ſet aſide an award for any cauſe. 2 Atk. 155, (162): Str. 301: 2 Burr. 701.—When the ſubmiſſion is according to the ſtatute, no application can be made to have the award ſet aſide till the ſubmiſſion be actually made a rule of court, which may be either before or after making the award. 1 Stra. 301: 2 Vez. 317: 2 Str. 1178: 3 P. Wms. 362.

The AWARD VIII.

The moſt frequent ſubject of complaint againſt an award, ariſes from ſome imputed miſconduct of the arbitrators, and when the complaint is made out, it is generally ſucceſsful: as if one of the arbitrators unjuſtly exclude the reſt from the award; or hold private meetings with one of the parties. 2 Vern. 515: or appoint an umpire by lot. Id. 485: or manifeſt any other undue partiality. Id. 101, 251: 3 P. Wms. 262: 2 Vez. 216, 8: 1 Vez. 317.

If it appear that the arbitrators went on a plain miſtake, either as to the law or in a point of fact, that is an error appearing on the face of the award, and ſufficient to ſet it aſide. 2 Vern. 705.—So if the arbitrators appear to have an intereſt in the ſubject of reference. 2 Vern. 251. So alſo where any circumſtance is ſuppreſſed or concealed from either of the arbitrators, and the arbitrator declares that had he known the circumſtance, he would have made a different award. 1 Atk. 77, (64).

Where the ſubmiſſion is under the ſtatute, or by reference at Niſi Prius, the court will on ſome occaſions ſend back the award to be re-conſidered, on ſuggeſtion that the arbitrator had not ſufficient materials before him, and perhaps too to rectify any trifling or apparent miſtake; but ſuch application muſt be made in the former caſe within the time preſcribed by the ſtatute. 2 Term Rep. 781.

VIII. AN AWARD may be pleaded in bar to every action brought, for a cauſe or complaint which had been previouſly referred to the arbitrators, on which the award was made. See 4 Term Rep. 146.

The award thus pleaded, muſt have all the qualities neceſſary to conſtitute a good award; and muſt be ſuch, if it be pleaded without performance, that the plaintiff may have a remedy to compel performance: but if performance be alledged, as it may be (See 1 Ro. Rep. 7, 8: Cro. Jac. 339: 2 Bulſt. 93; Rol. Arbitr. F. 2: Al. 86: 3 Leon. 62:) even a void award may frequently be a good bar. An award however which is in itſelf uncertain, and cannot be aſcertained by averment, cannot be pleaded in bar. 2 Saund. 292; 2 Keb. 736.

The caſes which have determined an award not to be pleadable in bar, where it does not create a new duty, ſeem irreconcileable to the preſent ſtate of the law on the ſubject—particularly as they allow that an action may be maintained on the ſubmiſſion, whether that is by bond or otherwiſe. 1 Ld. Raym. 248: 12 Mod. 130: Comb. 440: 1 Salk. 69: Lutw. 56, 7.

An award however which does not extend to the whole of the thing demanded, is reaſonably not a good plea to an action on the demand. Al. 5: 1 Ld. Raym. 612. See Lutw. 51. And in order to make an award a good plea, it muſt appear that both parties were equally bound by it.

Where the plaintiff lays ſeveral counts in his declaration, and the award from the terms of it, can only be a bar to one of them; if in reality they are all for the ſame cauſe, the beſt way of pleading ſeems to be, to plead the award to that count to which it is anſwerable in terms; and the general iſſue to the reſt. Kyd. 245.

There were antiently ſome diſtinctions in the manner of pleading an award, with reſpect to the neceſſity of alledging performance of the thing awarded, which are not now eſſential, for ſince it has been held that an action will lie on the mere ſubmiſſion, it is in no caſe neceſſary for the defendant in pleading an award in bar of an action, to alledge performance of the thing awarded, unleſs where the award is void, and conſequently the plaintiff could not enforce it. 1 Ld. Raym. 122.

THE READER is thus preſented with a compleat abridgment of the law on this ſubject. Were it accurately attended to, and were the arbitrators uninfluenced by motives of partiality, arbitration would be a very deſirable way to put an end to many ſuits, inſtead of affording grounds of new proceedings, as they now too frequently do.—As it is, the ſubjects moſt proper for arbitration ſeem to be (in the words of the author, to whom we have confeſſed ourſelves ſo much indebted on this ſubject) "Long and intricate accounts —Diſputes of ſo trifling a nature, that it is of little importance to the parties in whoſe favour the deciſion may be given, provided at all events there be a deciſion—and—queſtions on which the evidence is ſo uncertain, that it is much better to have a deciſion whether right or wrong, than that the parties ſhould be involved in continual litigation."

BATCHELOR, Baccalaureus, from the Fr. bachelier, viz. tyro, a learner:] In the univerſities there are batchelors of arts, &c. which is the firſt degree taken by ſtudents, before they come to greater dignity. And thoſe that are called batchelors of the companies of London, are ſuch of each company, as are ſpringing towards the eſtate of thoſe that are employed in council, but as yet are inferiors; for every of the twelve companies conſiſts of a maſter, two wardens, the livery, (which are aſſiſtants in matters of council, or ſuch as the aſſiſtants are choſen out of) and the batchelors, in other companies called the yeomanry. The word batchelor is alſo uſed and ſignifies the ſame with knight-batchelor, a ſimple knight, and not knight banneret, or knight of the Bath. The name of batchelor was alſo applied to that ſpecies of eſquire, ten of whom were retained by each knight banneret on his creation. Anno 28 E. 3, a petition was recorded in the Tower, beginning thus: A noſtre Seigneur le Roy monſtrent votre ſimple batchelor, Johan de Bures, &c. Batchelor was anciently attributed to the admiral of England, if he were under the degree of a baron. In Pat. 8 R. 2. we read of a baccalaureus regis. Touching the further etymology of this word, See Spelman.

The term batchelor alſo denotes in law a man who has never been married; and as ſuch, taxes have at times been levied, or the taxes laid on others increaſed, if paid by batchelors: as in the caſe of the duty on ſervants under ſtat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 43.

BAJ

BAIL,

BAIL, ballium, from the Fr. bailler, which comes of the Greek Βαλλειν, and ſignifies to deliver into hands.] Is uſed in our common law for the freeing or ſetting at liberty of one arreſted or impriſoned upon any action, either civil or criminal, on ſurety taken for his appearance at a day and place certain. Bract. lib. 3. tract 2. cap. 8. The reaſon why it is called bail, is becauſe by this means the party reſtrained is delivered into the hands of thoſe that bind themſelves for his forth-coming, in order to a ſafe keeping or protection from priſon: and the end of bail is to ſatisfy the condemnation and coſts, or render the defendant to priſon.

With reſpect to bail in civil caſes it is to be obſerved, that there is both common and ſpecial bail: common bail is in actions of ſmall concernment, being called common, becauſe any ſureties in that caſe are taken; whereas in cauſes of greater weight, and value, ſpecial bail or ſurety muſt be taken, and they according to the value. 4 Inſt. 179. See tit. Appearance.

By ſtat. 23 Hen. 6. c. 9, Sheriffs, &c. are to let to bail perſons by them arreſted by force of any writ, in any perſonal action, &c. upon reaſonable ſureties, having ſufficient within the county to keep their days in ſuch place, &c. as the writs require.

Bail and mainprize are often uſed promiſcuouſly in our law books, as ſignifying one and the ſame thing, and agree in this notion, that they ſave a man from impriſonment in the common gaol; his friends undertaking for him before certain perſons for that purpoſe authorized, that he ſhall appear at a certain day, and anſwer whatever ſhall be objected to him, in a legal way. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15, § 29: 4 Inſt. 180. The chief difference is, that a man's mainpernors are barely his ſureties, and cannot impriſon him themſelves to ſecure his appearance, as his bail may, who are looked upon as his gaolers, to whoſe cuſtody he is committed, and therefore may take him upon a Sunday, and confine until the next day, and then render him. 6 Mod. 231: Ld. Raym. 706: 12 Mod. 275.

Special bail, are two or more perſons who undertake generally or in a ſum certain, that if the defendant be convicted, he ſhall ſatisfy the plaintiff, or render himſelf to the cuſtody of the marſhal; generally there are but two perſons who become bail for a defendant.

Where the defendant has been arreſted or diſcharged out of cuſtody, upon giving a bail-bond to the ſheriff, he muſt at the return of the writ, to diſcharge ſuch bond, appear thereto, namely, by putting in ſpecial bail, or, as it is termed, bail above, ſo called, in contradiſtinction to the ſheriff's bail, or bail below; nor can he render himſelf in diſcharge of ſuch bond, without firſt putting in bail above. 5 Burr. 2683.

By rule M. 1654, no attorney ſhall be bail for a defendant in any action; nor his clerk. Cowp. 228 n: Vide Dougl. Rep. 466, that an attorney may be admitted as bail in a criminal caſe.

No ſheriff's officer, bailiff, or other perſons concerned in the execution of proceſs, ſhall be permitted to be bail in any action or ſuit depending in K. B. nor perſons outlawed after judgment. R. M. 14 Geo. 2. The keeper of the Poultry Compter was rejected. Dougl. 466.

I. Of Bail in Civil Cases—In actions of battery, treſpaſs, ſlander, &c. though the plaintiff is likely to recover large damages, ſpecial bail is not to be had, unleſs by order of court, and the proceſs is marked for ſpecial bail: nor is it required in actions of account, or of covenant, except it be to pay money; nor againſt heirs or executors, &c. for the debt of the teſtator, unleſs they have waſted the teſtator's goods. 1 Danv. Abr. 681.

If baron and feme are ſued, the huſband muſt put in bail for both, but if the huſband does not appear upon the arreſt, the wife muſt file common bail before ſhe can be diſcharged; for otherwiſe the plaintiff could not proceed to obtain judgment. Goldſ. 127: Cro. Eliz. 370: Cro. Jac. 445: Style 475: 1 Mod. 8: 6 Mod. 17, 105.

A feme covert was diſcharged out of cuſtody, becauſe ſhe was arreſted without her huſband; though the writ was ſued againſt both, and non eſt inventus returned as to the huſband. 1 Term Rep. 486; See tit. Arreſt.

In all actions brought in B. R. upon any penal law, the defendant is to put in but common bail. Yelv. 53. In actions where damages are uncertain, bail is to be at the diſcretion of the court: on a dangerous aſſault and battery, upon affidavit of ſpecial damages, a judge's hand may be procured for allowance of an ac etiam in the writ: and in action of ſcandalum magnatum the court on motion ordered ſpecial bail. Raym. 74. When bail is taken by the chief juſtice, or other judge on a habeas corpus, the bail taken in the inferior court is diſmiſſed; though the laſt bail be not filed preſently, nor till the next term. Yelv. 120, 121. Yet it has been held, where a cauſe is removed out of an inferior court by habeas corpus, if the bail below offer themſelves to be bail above, they ſhall be taken, not being excepted againſt below, unleſs the cauſe comes out of London. For the ſufficiency of the bail there is at the peril of the clerk, and he is reſponſible to the plaintiff: ſo that the plaintiff had not the liberty of excepting againſt them, and the clerk is not reſponſible for their deficiency in the court above, though he was in London. 1 Salk. 97.

In London it is ſaid, ſpecial bail is to be given in action of account, &c. But on removal by habeas corpus into B. R. that court will accept common bail. 2 Keb. 404.

There is not only bail to appear, &c. on writs of error; but alſo in audita querela, a recogniſance of bail muſt be acknowledged; and upon a writ of attaint, to proſecute, &c. Jenk. Cent. 129.

By the ſtat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 8, No execution ſhall be delayed by any writ of error or ſuperſedeas thereupon, unleſs bail ſhall be given, in double the ſum adjudged, to proſecute the writ of error with effect; and alſo to ſatisfy the debt, damages, and coſts adjudged, &c.

If a cauſe removed from an inferor court, be remanded back by procedendo the ſame term, the original bail in the inferior court are chargeable, but not if remanded in another term. Cro. Jac. 363. One taken on a writ of execution is not bailable by law; except an audita querela be brought; but where a writ of error is brought and allowed, if the defendant be not in execution, there ſhall not be an execution awarded againſt him, at the requeſt of the bail, though he be preſent in court. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 331. The bail ought not to join with the principal, nor the principal with the bail, in a writ of error to reverſe the judgment againſt either. Cro. Jac. 384.

On capias ad ſatisfaciendum againſt the defendant returned non eſt inventus, ſcire facias is to iſſue againſt the bail, or an action may be brought. Where a defendant renders his body in discharge of the bail, the plaintiff is by the rules of the court to make his choice of proceeding in execution, whether he will charge body, goods or lands. 1 Lill. 183. And if the principal after judgment renders not himself in discharge of his bail, it is at the election of the plaintiff to take out execution either against him or proceed against his bail: but if he takes the bail in execution, though he hath not full satisfaction, he shall never after take the principal; and if the principal be taken, he may not after meddle with the bail.

Where two are bail, although one be in execution, the plaintiff may take the other. Cro. Jac. 320: 2 Bulst. 68. If a principal render himself, and there is none to require his commitment, the court is ex officio to commit him; and if the plaintiff refuse him, he shall be discharged, and an entry made of it upon the record. Moor, Cas. 1249: 1 Leon. 59: See Hob. 210.

There must be an exoneretur entered, to discharge the bail. If the defendant dies before a capias ad satisfac. against him returned and filed, the bail will be discharged. 2 Lill. 177.

The Bail upon a writ of error cannot render the party in their discharge; because they are bound in a recognisance that the party shall prosecute the writ of error with effect, or pay the money if judgment be affirmed. 1 Lill. Abr. 173: 2 Cro. 402: 3 Mod. 87. Nor can the Bail in such case surrender the principal, though he become a bankrupt pending the writ of error. 1 Term Rep. 624.

Before a scire facias taken out against bail, the principal may render his body in discharge of the bail: and if the bail bring in the principal before the return of the second sci. fac. against them, they shall be discharged. 1 Rol. Abr. 250: 1 Lill. 471. Anciently the bail were to bring in the principal upon the first scire fac. or it would not be allowed. 3 Bulst. 182.

If the bail mean to acquit themselves of their recognisance entirely, and run no hazard of the death of the defendant, then they must render him in their discharge, before the return of the ca. sa.; as the death of the principal afterwards will not discharge them. 2 Wilf. 67: 2 Cro. 165: Jon. 139: Str. 511. But if they do not, then they have until the return day, (if the proceedings be by bill) sedente curiâ, of the first scire facias, if it be returned scire feci, but if a nihil is returned thereon, then until the return day, sedente curiâ of the second sci. fa. N. on R. E. 5 Geo. 2. And if the proceedings be by original, they have till the quarto die post of the return of the first sci. fa. if returned scire feci; if not, then till the quarto die post of the return day of the second. 4 Burr. 2134: 1 Wilf. 270. If an action be brought then eight days in full term after the return. R. Trin. 1 An.—See further Impey's and the other books of practice.

If Bail surrender the principal at or before the return of the second scire facias, it is good, although there be not immediate notice of it to the plaintiff; and if, through want of notice, he is at further charge against the bail, that shall not vitiate the surrender, but the bail shall not be delivered till they pay such charges: if at any time, after the return of the capias, the bail surrender the principal at a judge's chamber, and he thereupon is committed to the tipstaff, from whom he escapes, &c. this will not be a good surrender: but if it be before or on a capias returned, it is otherwise, the one being an indulgence, and the other matter of right. Mod. Cas. 238.

When a person makes his escape out of prison, and is retaken and bailed; the bail shall be discharged on writ to the sheriff commanding him to keep the prisoner in discharge of the bail. Stat. 1 Ann. st. 2. c. 6. § 3.

The judges of the courts at Westminster have power by statute to appoint commissioners in every county to take recognizances of bail, in causes depending in their courts; and to make such rules for justifying the bail as they shall think fit, &c. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 4.

The commissioners are to take bail, but are obliged by rule of court to keep a book wherein are the names of the plaintiff, defendant, and bail, and the person who transmits the same, and who makes affidavit that the recognisance was duly acknowledged in his presence: on such affidavit the judges make a conditional allocatur, and the bail are to stand absolute, unless the plaintiff except against them within twenty days, and if he excepts, the bail may justify by affidavit before the commissioners in the country. Gilb. H. C. B. 32.

If a defendant puts in bail by a wrong name, the proceedings shall nevertheless be good; for otherwise every man impleaded may give a false name to his attorney by which he will be bailed, and then plead it in arrest of judgment. Goldsb. 138. But it hath been held, that if the bail be entered in one name, and the declaration and all the proceedings are by a contrary name, it will be erroneous. Cro. Eliz. 223. So if there is bail, and the bail be taken off the file, the plaintiff is without remedy: though where a habeas corpus and bail-piece were lost in B. R. new ones were ordered to be made out. Style 261.

Stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 26, enacts, That it is felony without benefit of clergy to acknowledge, or procure to be acknowledged, any bail in the name of another person not privy or consenting thereto; provided that it shall not corrupt the blood, or take away dower.

Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. cap. 4. s. 4, enacts, That any person representing or personating another before commissioners appointed to take bail, shall be adjudged guilty of felony.

Special bail, which is taken before a judge, or by commissioners in the country, when accepted, is to be filed; after twenty days notice given of putting in special bail before a judge, on a capi corpus, if there be no exception, the bail shall be filed in four days. 1 Lill. Abr. 174. Upon a capi corpus twenty days are allowed to except against the bail: so on a writ of error; and you need not give notice; but you cannot take out execution without giving a four days rule to put in better bail: in all other cases, notice must be given. Upon a habeas corpus, eight and twenty-days are appointed to except against the bail, and after that, if it be not excepted against, it shall be filed in four days. 1 Salk. 98: R. M. 8 An.

The exception to bail put in before a judge, must be entered in the bail-book, at the judge's chambers at the side of the bail there put in, after this manner: I do except against this bail, A. B. attorn. for the plaintiff. And if there be no such exception, the defendant's attorney may take the bail-piece from the judge's chamber, and file it. Bail is not properly such until it is filed, when it is of record: but it shall be accounted good, till the same is questioned and disallowed.

Bail cannot be justified before a judge in his chamber, except it be by consent, or for necessity in vacation; but in

in the latter case they ought to be justified again in term, and upon that the defendant is compelled to accept a declaration to go to trial at the assises, if it be an issuable term; and upon putting in bail, it is not enough to give notice of their being put in, but it ought to be of their names, places of abode, and trade or vocation, that the plaintiff may know how to enquire after them. 6 Mod. 24, 25.

It being doubtful whether Sunday should be reckoned as one day in notice to justify bail, it was determined per cur. that for the future Sunday shall not be counted one, (it not being a proper day to enquire after bail); but two days notice must be given, of which Sunday shall not be one; upon motion for defendant to justify bail, notice was served Saturday June 23, to justify bail Monday 25; the notice being insufficient, the bail was not suffered to justify. Notes in C. B. 220.

After the plaintiff has entered his exception, and given notice thereof to the defendant, the bail, (to discharge the bond) must personally appear in court within the time limited by the rules thereof, and justify themselves; [or by affidavit, if taken before commissioners in the country,] and the plaintiff may oppose them by his counsel; if it appear they are insufficient, the court will reject them, and leave the plaintiff at liberty to proceed upon the bail-bond, or against the sheriff.

Bail coming to justify and not being present at the sitting of the court, must wait until the rising.

Generally, bail are opposed on five grounds with effect. 1st, That there is some mistake in the notice to justify; namely, that it should have been given two days previous, instead of one; 2dly, That the bail have assumed names that are either feigned, or belong to other persons, contrary to the Stats. 21 Jac. 1: and 4 & 5 W. & M. But the court will not vacate the proceedings against the party personated, until the offender be convicted. 1 Vent. 301; nor can a conviction take place, until the bail-piece be filed. 2 Sid. 90: 3d. A third ground of opposing bail is, that they are not house-keepers; if they be, the rent paid is immaterial, though under 10*l.* Loft 148; nor is it necessary they should have been assessed to the poor's rate. Ibid 328. 4thly. They may be opposed on the ground of their not being worth double the sum sworn to, after payment of all their debts. Under this head may be ranked bankrupts, who have not obtained their certificates; or such as have been twice bankrupts, and not paid 15*s.* in the pound. M. 24 Geo. 3. Lastly, after the expiration of the rule to bring in the body. Loft 438: M. 20 Geo. 3.

If the bail do not justify at the day given (being the last day they have) they are out of court. Nor can they justify after the rule upon the sheriff, to bring in the body is expired; without leave of the court. Loft. 88.

In case the defendant by neglect has suffered the plaintiff to take an assignment of the bond, and he has lost a trial; if he would wish to try the cause, he must move the court for that purpose on a special affidavit containing merits; if it be in term time, if in vacation, he may apply and obtain a judge's order, which will be granted, upon putting in and perfecting bail, paying the costs incurred, receiving a declaration in the original action, pleading issuably, and taking short notice of trial, so as not to delay the plaintiff, and consenting that the bond stand as a security. But the court of K. B. has not yet said, that the plaintiff shall take judgment on the actions upon the bond, although the practice in the Common Pleas is so.

If the bond be irregularly assigned, defendant may move the court to set the proceedings aside for irregularity, upon an affidavit, stating the particular facts.

If the court stay the proceedings on the bond, the defendant is not at liberty to plead in abatement, but in chief. Salk. 519; nor will the court order the bond to be delivered up to be cancelled, on the ground of a misnomer. 3 Term Rep. 572.

Pending a rule to set aside proceedings for irregularity, and to stay the proceedings, plaintiff took an assignment of the bond in the mean-time; the court agreed that the proceedings were totally suspended, by an act of the court, and made the rule absolute to set aside the assignment of the bond, as having been made too soon. 4 Term Rep. 176.

The court may adjudge bail sufficient, when the plaintiff will not accept of it. Also the court on motion, or a judge at his chamber, will order a common appearance to be taken, when special bail is not required, on affidavit made by the defendant of the smallness of the debt due, &c. The putting in of a declaration, and the acceptance of it by the defendant's attorney with the privity of the plaintiff's attorney, is an acceptance of the bail.

When a sheriff hath taken good bail of the defendant, he will on a rule return a cepi, and assign the bail-bond to plaintiff, which may be done by indorsement without stamp; so as it be stampt before action brought thereupon; and then the defendant and bail may be sued on the bond, by the plaintiff in his own name, i.e. as assignee of the sheriff. Stat. 4 & 5 Anne. c. 16. The action must be brought in the same court, where the original writ was sued out. 3 Burr. 1923: 1 Burr. 642. The venue may be laid in any county. Str. 727: 2 Ld. Raym. 1455. But if the plaintiff takes an assignment of the bail-bond, though the bail is insufficient, the court will not amerce the sheriff. 1 Salk. 99.

In case the defendant doth not put in bail, the attorney for the plaintiff is to call on the sheriff for his return of the writ; and so proceed to an attachment against the sheriff. If on a cepi corpus no bail is returned, a rule will be made out to bring in the defendant's body. Though a defendant, with leave of the court, may deposit money in court instead of bail; and in such case the plaintiff shall be ordered to waive other bail. Lill. Abr. Trin. 23 Car. B. R.

If more damages, &c. are recovered than mentioned in the plaint, or than the sum wherein the bail is bound, the bail will not be liable for the surplus. 1 Salk. 102.

A bail cannot be witness for the defendant at the trial; but the court, on motion, will discharge the bail, upon giving other sufficient bail. Wood's Inst. 582. Bail-pieces are written on a small square piece of parchment, with the corners cut off at the bottom.——For further matter see the books of practice.

II. As to BAIL for CRIMES. At common law bail was allowed for all offences except murder, 2 Inst. 109. And if the party accused could find sufficient sureties, he was not to be committed to prison; for all persons might be bailed till convicted of the offence. 2 Inst. 186. But by statute it was after enacted, that in case of homicide the offender should not be bailed: and by our statutes, murderers, derers, out-laws, houſe-burners, thieves openly defamed, &c. are not bailable; but where perſons are accuſed of larceny, as acceſſaries to felony, or under light ſuſpicion, they may be admitted to bail. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 15.

One indicted and found guilty of the death of a man by miſadventure, as by caſting a ſtone over a houſe, and by chance killing a man, woman, or child, is not bailable. 3 Ed. 3. Corone 354.

One indicted of conſpiracy, viz. that he with others conſpired falſely to indict another of murder or felony, by means whereof he was indicted, and afterwards convicted, ſhall not be bailed. The reſolution of all the judges, upon the queſtion demanded by King Ed. III. himſelf, as appears. 27 Aſſ. 1.

One indicted for burglary may be bailed. 29 Aſſ. 44.

One indicted on ſuſpicion of robbery was outlawed, and taken on the outlawry, and brought writ of error, and being brought to B. R. by habeas corpus, prayed to be bailed, and took two exceptions to the indictment; 1ſt. That he was in priſon, and knew nothing of the outlawry; 2dly. That the charge is too general, and no body proſecutes; but per Roll Ch. J. He cannot be bailed. Sty. 418. But ſee Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18, which enacts, that perſons outlawed, except for treaſon or felony, may appear by attorney and reverſe the ſame without bail; except ſpecial bail ſhall be ordered by the court: and that perſons arreſted upon any capias utlagatum, except for treaſon or felony, may be diſcharged by an attorney's engagement to appear: and in caſes where ſpecial bail is required, the ſheriff may take bond with ſureties.

By the common law the ſheriff might bail perſons arreſted on ſuſpicion of felony, or for other offence bailable; but he hath loſt this power by the Stat. 1 Ed. 4. c. 2. Juſtices of peace may let to bail perſons ſuſpected of felony, or others bailable, until the next ſeſſions: though where perſons are arreſted for manſlaughter or felony, being bailable by law, they are not to be let to bail by juſtices of peace but in open ſeſſions, or where two juſtices (quorum unus) are preſent; and the ſame is to be certified with the examination of the offender, and the accuſers bound over to proſecute, &c. 3 H. 7. c. 3: 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. § 3: not to reſtrain juſtices in London and Middleſex, and towns corporate. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. § 6. If a perſon be dangerouſly wounded, the offender may be bailed till the perſon is dead; but it is uſual to have aſſurance from ſome ſkilful ſurgeon, that the party is like to do well. 2 Inſt. 186. A man arreſted and impriſoned for felony, being bailable, ſhall be bailed before it appears whether he is guilty or not; but when convicted, or if on examination he confeſſeth the felony, he cannot be bailed. 4 Inſt. 178.

It is to be obſerved, that the Stat. Weſt. 1, 3 Ed. 1. c. 15. above mentioned, doth not extend to the judges of B. R. &c. only to ſheriffs and other inferior officers. H. P. C. 98, 99—Likewiſe, juſtices of gaol delivery not being within the reſtraint of the ſtatute of Weſtm. 1. may bail perſons convicted before them of homicide by miſadventure, or ſelf defence, the better to enable them to purchaſe their pardon. Cromp. 154 a: H. P. C. 101: F. N. B. 246: S. P. C. 15.

Alſo it ſeems that in diſcretion they may bail a perſon convicted before them of manſlaughter, upon ſpecial circumſtances; as if the evidence againſt him were ſlight, or if he had purchaſed his pardon. H. P. C. 101: Cromp. 153.

The court of B. R. has power to bail in all caſes, whatſoever, and will exerciſe their diſcretion in all caſes not capital; in capital caſes where innocence may be fairly preſumed; and in every caſe where the charge is not alledged with ſufficient certainty. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 15. § 80. in note, where ſeveral caſes are enumerated.

It is to be obſerved, that with reſpect to the nature of the offence, although this court is not tied down by the rules preſcribed by the ſtat. of Weſtm. 1; yet it will in diſcretion pay a due regard to thoſe rules, and not admit a perſon to bail who is expreſsly declared to be irrepleviſable, without ſome particular circumſtances in his favour. 2 Inſt. 185, 186, 189: H. C. P. 104: 1 Salk. 61: 3 Bulſt. 113: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 80: 5 Mod. 454.

And therefore if a perſon be attainted of felony, or convicted thereof by verdict general or ſpecial, or notoriouſly guilty of treaſon or manſlaughter, &c. by his own confeſſion or otherwiſe, he is not to be admitted to bail; without ſome ſpecial motive to induce the court to grant it. Kelynge 90: Dyer 79: 1 Bulſt. 87: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 80.

Upon a commitment of either houſe of parliament, when it ſtands indifferent on the return of the habeas corpus, whether it be legal, or not, the court of B. R. ought not to bail a priſoner. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 15. § 73. But if it be demanded in caſe a ſubject ſhould be committed by either of the Houſes for a matter manifeſtly out of their juriſdiction, what remedy can he have? I anſwer (ſays the learned and cautious Serjeant Hawkins) as this is a caſe which I am perſuaded will never happen, it ſeems needleſs over nicely to examine it. See Leach's notes, 2 Hawk. P. C. cap. 15. § 73. from the caſes cited there (viz. The Hon. Alex. Murray's, 1 Wilſ. 299: John Wilkes's, 2 Wilſ. 158: Entick v. Carrington, 11 St. Tr. 317: Braſs Croſby's, 3 Wilſ. 188: 2 Blackſt. 755,) it appears that the courts in Weſtminſter Hall have been poſitively of opinion, "that they have no power to decide on the privileges of Parliament; that the rights of the Houſe of Commons are paramount to the juriſdiction of thoſe courts; that the Commons are the excluſive arbiters of their own peculiar privileges; that their power of commitment is inherent in the very nature of their conſtitution; and finally that their adjudication is tantamount to a conviction, and their commitment equal to an execution; and that no court can diſcharge a priſoner committed in execution by another court."

However, a perſon committed for a contempt, by order of either Houſe of Parliament, may be diſcharged by B. R. after a diſſolution or prorogation, which determine all orders of parliament: alſo it is ſaid on an impeachment, when the parliament is not ſitting, and the party has been long in priſon, B. R. may bail him. The court of B. R. hath bailed perſons committed to the Fleet Priſon by the Lord Chancellor; when the crime of commitment was not mentioned, or only in general terms, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 76.

And B. R. having the control of all inferior courts, may at their diſcretion bail any perſon unjuſtly committed by any of thoſe courts. In admitting a perſon to bail in the court of B. R. for felony, &c. a ſeveral recogniſance is is entered into to the king in a certain ſum from each of the bail, that the priſoner ſhall appear at a certain day, &c. And alſo that the bail ſhall be liable for the default of ſuch appearance, body for body. And it is at the diſcretion of juſtices of the peace, in admitting any perſon to bail for felony, to take the recogniſance in a certain ſum, or body for body: but where a perſon is bailed by any court, &c. for a crime of an inferior nature, the recogniſance ought to be only in a certain ſum of money, and not body for body. 2 Hawk. c. 15. § 83. And the bail are to be bound in double the ſum of the criminal. Where perſons are bound body for body, if the offender doth not appear, whereby the recogniſance is forfeited, the bail are not liable to ſuch puniſhment to which the principal would be adjudged if found guilty, but only to be fined, &c. Wood's Inſt. 618. If bail ſuſpect the priſoner will fly, they may carry him before a juſtice to find new ſureties; or to be committed in their diſcharge. 1 Rep. 99.

The courts of King's Bench, Common Pleas and Exchequer, in term time, and the Chancery in the term or vacation, may bail perſons by the habeas corpus act; ſee title Habeas Corpus.

To refuſe bail when any one is bailable on the one hand; or on the other to admit any to bail who ought not by law to be admitted, or to take ſlender bail, is puniſhable by fine; &c. 2 Inſt. 291: H. P. C. 97. And ſee farther, 3 Edw. 1. c. 15: 27 Edw. 1. St. 1. c. 3: 4 Edw. 3. c. 2: 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13: & 31 Car. 2. c. 2.

No perſon ſhall be bailed for felony by leſs than two; and it is ſaid not to be uſual for the King's Bench to bail a man on a habeas corpus, on a commitment for treaſon or felony, without four ſureties; the ſum in which the ſureties are to be bound, ought to be never leſs than 40*l.* for a capital crime; but it may be higher in diſcretion, on conſideration of the ability and quality of the priſoner, and the nature of the offence; and the ſureties may be examined on oath concerning their ſufficiency, by him that takes the bail; and if a perſon be bailed by inſufficient ſureties, he may be required either by him who took the bail, or by any other who hath power to bail him, to find better ſureties, and on his refuſal may be committed; for inſufficient ſureties are as none. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 4: H. P. C. 97.

But juſtices muſt take care, that under pretence of demanding ſufficient ſurety, they do not make ſo exceſſive a demand, as in effect amounts to a denial of bail; for this is looked upon as a great grievance, and is complained of as ſuch by 1 W. & M. St. 2. c. 2, (the bill of rights); by which it is declared, that exceſſive bail ought not to be required. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15.

BAILIFF, ballivus.] From the French word bayliff, that is, præfectus provinciæ, and as the name, ſo the office itſelf was anſwerable to that of France; where there were eight parliaments, which were high courts from whence there lay no appeal, and within the precincts of the ſeveral parts of that kingdom which belonged to each parliament there were ſeveral provinces to which juſtice was adminiſtered by certain officers called bailiffs: and in England we have ſeveral counties in which juſtice hath been, and ſtill is, in ſmall ſuits, adminiſtered to the inhabitants, by the officer whom we now call ſheriff or viſcount; (one of which names deſcends from the Saxons, the other from the Normans;) and though the ſheriff is not called bailiff, yet it is probable that was one of his names alſo, becauſe the county is often called balliva: as in the return of a writ, where the perſon is not arreſted, the ſheriff ſaith, Infra-nominatus A. B. non eſt inventus in balliva mea, &c. Kitch. Ret. Brev. fol. 285. And in the ſtatute of Magna Charta, cap. 28, and 14 Ed. 3. c. 9, the word bailiff ſeems to compriſe as well ſheriffs, as bailiffs of hundreds.

As the realm is divided into counties, ſo every county is divided into hundreds; within which in ancient times the people had juſtice adminiſtered to them by the ſeveral officers of every hundred, which were the bailiffs. And it appears by Bracton, (lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 34.) that bailiffs of hundreds might anciently hold plea of appeal and approvers: but ſince that time the hundred courts, except certain franchiſes, are ſwallowed in the county-courts; and now the bailiff's name and office is grown into contempt, they being generally officers to ſerve writs, &c. within their liberties. Though in other reſpects, the name is ſtill in good eſteem; for the chief magiſtrates in divers towns, are called bailiffs: and ſometimes the perſons to whom the king's caſtles are committed are termed bailiffs, as the bailiff of Dover Caſtle, &c.

Of the ordinary bailiffs there are ſeveral ſorts, viz. bailiffs of liberties; ſheriffs' bailiffs; bailiffs of lords of manors; bailiffs of huſbandry, &c.

Bailiffs of liberties are thoſe bailiffs who are appointed by every lord within his liberty, to execute proceſs and do ſuch offices therein, as the bailiff errant doth at large in the county; but bailiffs errant or itinerant, to go up and down the county to ſerve proceſs, are out of uſe.

Bailiffs of liberties and franchiſes, are to be ſworn to take diſtreſſes, truly impanel jurors, make returns by indenture between them and ſheriffs, &c. and ſhall be puniſhed for malicious diſtreſſes, by fine and treble damages, by ancient ſtatutes. Vide 12 Ed. 2. St. 1. c. 5: 14 Ed. 3. St. 1. c. 9: 20 Ed. 3. c. 6: 1 Ed. 3. St. 1. c. 5: 2 Ed. 3. c. 4: 5 Ed. 3. c. 4: 11 H. 7. c. 15: 27 H. 8. c. 24: 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. § 10.

The bailiff of a liberty, may make an inquiſition and extent upon an elegit. The ſheriff returned on a writ of elegit, that the party had not any lands but within the liberty of St. Edmund's Bury, and that J. S. bailiff there had the execution and return of all writs, and that he inquired quired and returned an extent by inquiſition, and the bailiff delivered the moiety of the lands extended to the plaintiff, who by virtue thereof entered, &c. This was held a good return. Cro. Car. 319. Theſe bailiffs of liberties cannot arreſt a man without a warrant from the ſheriff of the county: and yet the ſheriff may not enter the liberty himſelf, at the ſuit of a ſubject, (unleſs it be on a quo minus, or capias utlagatum) without clauſe in his writ, Non omittas propter aliquam libertatem, &c. If the ſheriff, &c. enters the liberty without ſuch power, the lord of the liberty may have an action againſt him; though the execution of the writ may ſtand good. 1 Vent. 406: 2 Inſt. 453.

Sheriffs' bailiffs are ſuch who are ſervants to ſheriffs of counties to execute writs, warrants, &c. Formerly bailiffs of hundreds were the officers to execute writs; but now it is done by ſpecial bailiffs, put in with them by the ſheriff. A bailiff of a liberty is an officer which the court takes notice of; though a ſheriff's bailiff is not an officer of the court, but only the ſheriff himſelf. Paſch. 23 Car. 1. B. R. The arreſt of the ſheriff's bailiff is the arreſt of the ſheriff; and if any reſcous be made of any perſon arreſted, it ſhall be adjudged done to the ſheriff: alſo if the bailiff permit a priſoner to eſcape, action may be brought againſt the ſheriff. Co. Lit. 61, 168. Sheriffs are anſwerable for miſdemeanors of their bailiffs; and are to have remedy over againſt them. 2 Inſt. 19. The latter are therefore uſually bound in an obligation for the due execution of their offices, and thence are called bound bailiffs; which the common people have corrupted to a more humble appellation.

There are thirty-ſix ſerjeants at mace in London who may be termed bailiffs, and they each give ſecurity to the ſheriffs.

By Stat. 14 E. 3. c. 9, Sheriffs ſhall appoint ſuch bailiffs for whom they will anſwer; and by Stat. 1 H. 5. c. 4, no ſheriff's bailiff ſhall be attorney in the king's court. R. M. 1654.

Bailiffs of lords of manors are thoſe that collect their rents, and levy their fines and amercements: but ſuch a bailiff cannot diſtrain for an amercement without a ſpecial warrant from the lord or his ſteward. Cro. Eliz. 698. He cannot give licence to commit a treſpaſs, as to cut down trees, &c. though he may licence one to go over land, being a treſpaſs to the poſſeſſion only, the profits whereof are at his diſpoſal. Cro. Jac. 337, 377. A bailiff may by himſelf, or by command of another take cattle damage-feaſant upon the land. 1 Danv. Abr. 685. Yet amends cannot be tendered to the bailiff, for he may not accept of amends, nor deliver the diſtreſs when once taken. 5 Rep. 76. Theſe bailiffs may do any thing for the benefit of their maſters, and it ſhall ſtand good till the maſter diſagrees; but they can do nothing to the prejudice of their maſters. Lit. Rep. 70.

Bailiffs of courts-baron ſummon thoſe courts, and execute the proceſs thereof; they preſent all pound breaches, cattle-ſtrayed, &c.

Bailiffs of huſbandry are belonging to private men of good eſtates, and have the diſpoſal of the under-ſervants, every man to his labour; they alſo fell trees, repair houſes, hedges, &c. and collect the profits of the land for their lord and maſter, for which they render account yearly, &c.

Beſides theſe there are alſo bailiffs of the foreſt, of which ſee Manwood, part 1. page 113.

An Appointment of a Bailiff of a Manor.

KNOW all men by theſe preſents, That I W. B. of, &c. Eſq; lord of the manor of D. in the county of G. Have made, ordained, deputed and appointed, and by theſe preſents do make, ordain, depute, and appoint J. G. of, &c. my bailiff, for me and in my name, and to my uſe, to collect and gather, and to aſk, require, demand and receive of all and every my tenants, that have held or enjoyed, or now do, or hereafter ſhall hold or enjoy, any meſſuages, lands, or tenements, from, by, or under me, within my ſaid manor of D. all rents, and arrears of rent, heriots, and other profits, that now are, or hereafter ſhall become payable, due, owing or belonging to me, within the ſaid manor; and, in default of payment thereof, to diſtrain for the ſame from time to time, and ſuch diſtreſs or diſtreſſes to impound, detain and keep, until payment be made of the ſaid rents and profits, and the arrears thereof. And I do alſo further impower and authorize the ſaid J. G. to take care of and inſpect into all and every my meſſuages, lands and woods within the ſaid manor, and to take an account of all defects, decays, waſtes, ſpoils, treſpaſſes, or other miſdemeanors, committed or permitted within my ſaid manor, or in any meſſuages, lands or woods there; and from time to time, to give me a juſt and true account in writing thereof: and further to act and do all other things that to the office of a bailiff of the ſaid manor belongs and appertains, during my will and pleaſure. In witneſs, &c.

BAILIWICK, balliva.] Is not only taken for the county; but ſignifies generally that liberty which is exempted from the ſheriff of the county, over which the lord of the liberty appointeth a bailiff with ſuch powers within his precinct, as an under-ſheriff exerciſeth under the ſheriff of the county; ſuch as the bailiff of Weſtminſter, &c. Stat. 27 Eliz. cap. 12: Wood's Inſt. 206.

BAILMENT, from bailler Fr. to deliver.] "A delivery of goods in truſt, upon a contract expreſſed or implied that the truſt ſhall be faithfully executed on the part of the bailee:" [the perſon to whom they are delivered.] 2 Comm. 451. which ſee: to which Sir W. Jones adds, "and the goods re-delivered as ſoon as the time or uſe, for which they were bailed ſhall have elapſed or be performed." Law of Bailments, p. 117.

It is to be known that there are ſix ſorts of bailments which lay a care and obligation on the party to whom goods are bailed; and which conſequently ſubject him to an action, if he miſbehave in the truſt repoſed in him.

1. A bare and naked bailment, to keep for the uſe of the bailor, which is called depoſitum; and ſuch bailee is not chargeable for a common neglect, but it muſt be a groſs one to make him liable. 2 Str. 1099.

2. A delivery of goods which are uſeful to keep, and they are to be returned again in ſpecie, which is called accommodatum, which is a lending gratis; and in ſuch caſe the borrower is ſtrictly bound to keep them: for if he be guilty of the leaſt neglect, he ſhall be anſwerable, but he ſhall not be charged where there is no default in him. See poſt.

3. A delivery of goods for hire, which is called locatio or conductio; and the hirer is to take all imaginable care, and reſtore them at the time; which care if he ſo uſe, he ſhall not be bound.

4. A delivery by way of pledge, which is called vadium; and in ſuch goods the pawnee has a ſpecial property;

perty; and if the goods will be the worſe for uſing, the pawnee muſt not uſe them; otherwiſe he may uſe them at his peril; as jewels pawned to a lady, if ſhe keep them in a bag, and they are ſtolen, ſhe ſhall not be charged; but if ſhe go with them to a play, and they are ſtolen, ſhe ſhall be anſwerable. So if the pawnee be at a charge in keeping them, he may uſe them for his reaſonable charge; and if notwithſtanding all his diligence he loſe the pledge, yet he ſhall recover the debt. But if he loſe it after the money tendered, he ſhall be chargeable, for he is a wrong doer; after money paid (and tender and refuſal is the ſame) it ceaſes to be a pledge, and therefore the pawnor may either bring an action of aſſumpſit, and declare that the defendant promiſed to return the goods upon requeſt; or trover, the property being veſted in him by the tender.

5. A delivery of goods to be carried for a reward, of which enough is ſaid under title Carrier. It may here be added, that the plaintiff ought to prove the defendant uſed to carry goods, and that the goods were delivered to him or his ſervant to be carried. And if a price be alledged in the declaration, it ought to be proved the uſual price for ſuch a ſtage; and if the price be proved there need no proof, the defendant being a common carrier: but there need not be a proof of a price certain.

6. A delivery of goods to do ſome act about them (as to carry) without a reward, which is called by Bracton, mandatum, in Engliſh, an acting by commiſſion; and though he be to have nothing for his pains, yet if there were any neglect in him, he will be anſwerable, for his having undertaken a truſt is a ſufficient conſideration; but if the goods be miſuſed by a third perſon, in the way, without any neglect of his, he would not be liable, being to have no reward.

The above is taken from Lord Chief Juſtice Holt's opinion, in the caſe of Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 909. as abridged, Bull. N. P. 72. See alſo Sir W. Jones's Eſſay on the Law of Bailment, p. 35: Com. Rep. 133. with Mr. Roſe's notes; and on this ſubject 2 Inſt. 89: 4 Rep. 83: 1 Rol. Ab. 338: 1 Inſt. 89 b: Doct. & St. 129: 1 New Ab. 243.

Having mentioned Sir W. Jones's Eſſay on the Law of Bailment, we cannot help recommending it to the attention of the rational ſtudent; and for the uſe of ſuch, extracting the following analyſis, which will in general be found to be conſonant with the determinations in the books, and convey much knowledge in a ſhort compaſs. Sir W. Jones differs in a few points from Lord Holt, and Lord Coke, and his reaſons are deſerving of much attention.

"I. DEFINITIONS.—1. Bailment, as before at the beginning of this article.—2. Depoſit is a bailment of goods to be kept for the bailor without recompence.—3. Mandate is a bailment of goods, without reward, to be carried from place to place, or to have ſome act performed about them.—4. Lending for uſe is a bailment of a thing for a certain time to be uſed by the borrower without paying for it.—5. Pledging, is a bailment of goods by a debtor to his creditor, to be kept till the debt be diſcharged.—6. Letting to hire is, (1) a bailment of a thing to be uſed by the hirer for a compenſation in money; or (2) a letting out of, work and labour to be done, or care and attention to be beſtowed, by the bailee on the goods bailed, and that for a pecuniary recompenſe; or (3) of care and pains in carrying the things delivered from one place to another, for a ſtipulated or implied reward.—7. Innominate bailments are thoſe where the compenſation for the uſe of a thing, or for labour and attention is not pecuniary; but either (1) the reciprocal uſe or the gift of ſome other thing; or (2) work and pains reciprocally undertaken; or (3) the uſe or gift of another thing in conſideration of care and labour; and converſely.—8. Ordinary neglect, is the omiſſion of that care, which every man of common prudence, and capable of governing a family, takes of his own concerns.—9. Groſs neglect, is the want of that care which every man of common ſenſe, how inattentive ſoever, takes of his own property. See Poſt. II. 8.—10. Slight neglect is the omiſſion of that diligence which very circumſpect and thoughtful perſons uſe in ſecuring their own goods and chattels.—11. A naked contract is a contract made without conſideration or recompence.

"II. THE RULES which may be conſidered as axioms flowing from natural reaſon, good morals, and ſound policy, are theſe—1. A bailee who derives no benefit from his undertaking, is reſponſible only for groſs neglect.—2. A bailee who alone receives benefit from the bailment, is reſponſible for ſlight neglect.—3. When the bailment is beneficial to both parties, the bailee muſt anſwer for ordinary neglect—4. A ſpecial agreement of any bailee to anſwer for more or leſs, is in general valid.—5. All bailees are anſwerable for actual fraud, even though the contrary be ſtipulated.—6. No bailee ſhall be charged for a loſs by inevitable accident or irreſiſtible force, except by ſpecial agreement.—7. Robbery by force is conſidered as irreſiſtible; but a loſs by private ſtealth, is preſumptive evidence of ordinary neglect.—8. Groſs neglect is a violation of good faith.—9. No action lies to compel performance of a naked contract.—10. A reparation may be obtained by ſuit for every damage occaſioned by an injury.—11. The negligence of a ſervant acting by his maſter's expreſs or implied order, is the negligence of the maſter.

"III. From theſe rules the following PROPOSITIONS are evidently deducible.—1. A depoſitary is reſponſible only for groſs neglect; or in other words for a violation of good faith—2. A depoſitary whoſe character is known to his depoſitor, ſhall not anſwer for mere neglect, if he take no better care of his own goods, and they alſo be ſpoiled or deſtroyed.—3. A mandatary to carry is reſponſible only for groſs neglect, or a breach of good faith.—4. A mandatary to perform a work is bound to uſe a degree of diligence adequate to the performance of it.—5. A man cannot be compelled by action to perform his promiſe of engaging in a depoſit or a mandate; but,—6. A reparation may be obtained by ſuit for damage occaſioned by the non performance of a promiſe to become a depoſitary, or a mandatary.—7. A borrower for uſe is reſponſible for ſlight negligence.—8. A pawnee is anſwerable for ordinary neglect.—9. The hirer of a thing is anſwerable for ordinary neglect.—10. A workman for hire muſt anſwer for ordinary neglect of the goods bailed, and muſt apply a degree of ſkill equal to his undertaking.—11. A letter to hire of his care and attention, is reſponſible for ordinary negligence—12. A carrier for hire by land or by water is anſwerable for ordinary neglect

"IV.

" IV. EXCEPTIONS, to the above rules and propoſitions.—1. A man who ſpontaneouſly and officiouſly engages to keep or to carry the goods of another, though without reward, muſt anſwer for ſlight neglect.—2. If a man through ſtrong perſuaſion and with reluctance undertake the execution of a mandate, no more can be required of him, than a fair exertion of his ability.—3. All bailees become reſponſible for loſſes by caſualty or violence, after their refuſal to return the things bailed; on a lawful demand.—4. A borrower and a hirer are anſwerable in all events, if they keep the things borrowed or hired after the ſtipulated time, or uſe them differently from their agreement.—5. A depoſitary and a pawnee are anſwerable in all events if they uſe the things depoſited or pawned.—6. An inn-keeper is chargeable for the goods of his gueſt within his inn, if the gueſts be robbed by the ſervants or inmates of the keeper.—7. A common carrier by land or by water, muſt indemniſy the owner of the goods carried if he be robbed of them.

" V. It is no exception but a COROLLARY from the rules that Every bailee is reſponſible for a loſs by accident or force, however inevitable or irreſiſtible; if it be occaſioned by that degree of negligence for which the nature of his contract makes him generally anſwerable."

The caſes cited and commented on by Sir Wm. Jones, beſides the above of Coggs v. Bernard, and which lead to the whole law on this ſubject, are 1 Str. 128, 145: 2 Stra. 1099: Allen. 93: Fitz. Detinue 59, (Bonion's caſe, the earlieſt on the ſubject): 8 Rep. 32: 1 Wilſ. 281: Burr. 2298: 1 Vent. 121, 190, 238: Carth. 485, 7: 2 Bulſt. 280: 1 Ro. Ab. 2, 4, 10: 2 Ro. Jo. 159: 4 Rep. 83 b. (Southcote's caſe): 1 Inſt. 89 a. Many of them however more peculiarly applicable to carriers.

The following caſes may ſerve to illuſtrate the above principles.

A man leaves a cheſt locked up with another to be kept, and doth not make known to him what is therein; if the cheſt and goods in it are ſtolen, the perſon who received them ſhall not be charged for the ſame, for he was not truſted with them. And what is ſaid as to ſtealing is to be underſtood of all other inevitable accidents: but it is neceſſary for a man that receives goods to be kept, to receive them in a ſpecial manner, viz. to be kept as his own, or at the peril of the owner. 1 Lill. Abr. 193, 194. And vide 1 Rol. Abr. 338: 2 Show. pl. 166.

If I deliver 100*l.* to A. to buy cattle, and he beſtows 50*l.* of it in cattle, and I bring an action of debt for all, I ſhall be barred in that action for the money beſtowed and charges, &c. but for the reſt I ſhall recover. Hob. 207.

If one deliver his goods to another perſon, to deliver over to a ſtranger; the deliverer may countermand his power, and require the goods again; and if the bailee refuſe to deliver them, he may have an action of account for them. Co. Litt. 286.

If A. delivers goods to B. to be delivered over to C. C. hath the property, and C. hath the action againſt B. for B. undertakes for the ſafe delivery to C. and hath no property or intereſt but in order to that purpoſe. 1 Rol. Abr. 606: ſee 1 Bulſt. 68, 69, where it is ſaid that in caſe of converſion to his own uſe the bailee ſhall be anſwerable to both.

But if the bailment were not on valuable conſideration, the delivery is countermandable; and in that caſe, if A. the bailor bring trover, he reduces the property again in himſelf, for the action amounts to a countermand; but if the delivery was on a valuable conſideration, then A. cannot have trover, becauſe the property is altered; and in trover the property muſt be proved in the plaintiff. 1 Bulſt. 68: ſee 1 Leon. 30.

And where a man delivers goods to another to be redelivered to the deliverer at ſuch a day, and before that day the bailee doth ſell the goods in market overt; the bailor may at the day ſeize and take his goods, for the property is not altered. Godb. 160.

If A. borrows a horſe to ride to Dover, and he rides out of his way, and the owner of the horſe meets him, he cannot take the horſe from him; for A. has a ſpecial property in the horſe till the journey is determined; and being in lawful poſſeſſion of the horſe, the owner cannot violently ſeize and take it away; for the continuance of all property is to be taken from the form of the original bargain, which in this caſe was limited till the appointed journey was finiſhed. Yelv. 172. But the owner may have an action on the caſe againſt the bailee for exceeding the purpoſes of the loan; for ſo far it is a ſecret and fallacious abuſe of his property; but no general action of treſpaſs, becauſe it is not an open and violent invaſion of it. 1 Rol. Rep. 128.

As to borrowing a thing periſhable, as corn, wine, or money, or the like, a man muſt, from the nature of the thing, have an abſolute property in them; otherwiſe it could not ſupply the uſes for which it was lent; and therefore he is obliged to return ſomething of the ſame ſort, the ſame in quantity and quality with what is borrowed. Dr. & Stud. 129.

But if one lend a horſe, &c. he muſt have the ſame reſtored. If a thing lent for uſe be uſed to any other end or purpoſe than that for which it was borrowed, the party may have his action on the caſe for it, though the thing be never the worſe; and if what is borrowed be loſt, although it be not by any negligence of the borrower, as if he be robbed of it; or where the thing is impaired or deſtroyed by his neglect, admitting that he put it to no more ſervice than that for which borrowed, he muſt make it good: ſo where one borrows a horſe, and puts him in an old rotten houſe ready to fall, which falls on and kills him, the borrower muſt anſwer for the horſe. But if ſuch goods borrowed periſh by the act of God, (or rather, as Sir Wm. Jones ſays it ought more reverentially to be termed, by inevitable accident,) in the right uſe of them; as where the borrower puts the horſe, &c. in a ſtrong houſe, and it falls and kills him, or it dies by diſeaſe, or by default of the owner, the borrower ſhall not be charged. 1 Inſt. 89: 29 Aſſ. 28: 2 H. 7, 11.

If one delivers a ring to another to keep, and he breaks and converts the ſame to his own uſe; or if I deliver my ſheep to another to be kept, and he ſuffers them to be drowned by his negligence; or if the bailee of a horſe, or goods, &c. kill or ſpoil them, in theſe caſes action will lie. 5 Rep. 13: 15 E. 4. 20 b: 12 E. 4. 13.

If a man deliver goods to another, the bailee ſhall have a general action of treſpaſs againſt a ſtranger, becauſe he is anſwerable over to the bailor; for a man ought not to be charged with an injury to another, without being able to retire to the original cauſe of that injury, and in amends there to do himſelf right. 13 Co 69: 14 Hen. 4, 28: 25 H. 7, 14.

BALANCE OF TRADE, A computation of the value of all commodities which we buy from foreigners, and on the other ſide the value of our own native products, which we export into neighbouring kingdoms; and the difference or exceſs between the one ſide and the other of ſuch account or computation is called the balance of trade.

BALCANIFER, or baldakinifer, i. e. A ſtandard bearer. Matt. Pariſ. Anno 1237.

BALCONIES To houſes in London, are regulated by the Building Act, 14 Geo. 3. c. 78. § 48, &c.

BALE, (Fr.) A pack, or certain quantity of goods or merchandize; as a bale of ſilk, cloth, &c. This word is uſed in the ſtatute 16 R. 2. c. 3, and is ſtill in uſe.

BALENGER, By the Stat. 28 H. 6. c. 5, ſeems to have been a kind of barge, or water veſſel. But elſewhere it rather ſignifies a man of war. Walſing. in R. 2.

BALEUGA, A territory or precinct. Chart. Hen. 2. See Bannum.

BALISTARIUS, A baliſter or croſs-bow man. Gerard de la War is recorded to have been baliſtarius domini regis, &c. 28 & 29 Hen. 3.

BALIVA, A bailiwick, or juriſdiction. See tit. Bailiwick.

BALIVO AMOVENDO, A writ to remove a bailiff from his office, for want of ſufficient land in the bailiwick. Reg. Orig. 78. See tits. Bailiff, Sheriff.

BALKERS, Are derived from the word balk, becauſe they ſtand higher, as it were on a balk or ridge of ground, to give notice of ſomething to others. Shep. Epitom. vide Conders.

BALLARE, To dance, Spelm. Perhaps in this ſenſe it may be underſtood in Fleta. lib. 2. c. 87. de caſeatrice; Anglicè Dairy maid.

BALLAST, Is gravel or ſand to poiſe ſhips, and make them go upright: and ſhips and veſſels taking in ballaſt in the river Thames, are to pay ſo much a ton to Trinity Houſe Deptford; who ſhall employ ballaſt-men, and regulate them, and their lighters to be marked, &c. on pain of 10*l.* Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 29.

BALLIUM, A fortreſs or bulwark. Matt. Weſtm. An. 1265.

BAN, or bans, from the Brit. ban. i. e. clamor.] A proclamation, or public notice; any public ſummons, or edict, whereby a thing is commanded or forbidden. It is a word ordinary among the feudiſts; and for its various ſignifications, ſee Spelman v. bannum. The word bans in its common acceptation is uſed for the publiſhing matrimonial contracts, which is done in the church before marriage; to the end that if any man can ſpeak againſt the intention of the parties, either in reſpect of kindred, precontract, or for other juſt cauſe, they may take their exception in time, before the marriage is conſummated: and in the canon law, Bannæ ſunt proclamationes ſponſi & ſponſæ in eccleſiis fieri ſolitæ. But there may be a faculty or licence for the marriage, and then this ceremony is omitted. See tit. Marriage.

BANCALE, A covering of eaſe and ornament for a bench, or other ſeat; Monaſticon tom. 1. p. 222.

BANE, from the Sax. bana, a murderer.] Signifies deſtruction or overthrow: as, I will be the bane of ſuch a man, is a common ſaying; ſo when a perſon receives a mortal injury by any thing, we ſay it was his bane: and he who is the cauſe of another man's death, is ſaid to be le bane, i. e. malefactor. Bract. lib. 2. tract. 8. cap. 1.

BANERET, banerettus, miles vexillarius] Sir Thomas Smith, in his Repub. Angl. cap. 18, ſays, is a knight made in the field, with the ceremony of cutting off the point of his ſtandard, and making it as it were a banner, and accounted ſo honourable that they are allowed to diſplay their arms in the king's army as barons do, and may bear arms with ſupporters. See Camden and Spelman, from whom it appears bannerets are the degree between barons and knights. Spelm. in v. Banerettus. It is ſaid that they were anciently called by ſummons to parliament: and that they are next to the barons in dignity, appears by the ſtats. 5 R. 2. Stat. 2. cap. 4; and 14 R. 2. c. 11.—William de la Pole was created baneret by K. Edward the Third by letters patent, Anno Regni ſui 13. And thoſe banerets, who are created ſub vexillis regiis, in exercitu regali, in aperto bello, & ipſo rege perſonaliter præſente, explicatis, take place of all baronets; as we may learn by the letters patent for creation of baronets. 4 Inſt. 6. Some maintain that knights bannerets ought not to be made in a civil war: but Hen. 7. made divers bannerets upon the Corniſh commotion, in the year 1495. See Selden's Titles of Honours, f. 799.

BANISHMENT, Fr. baniſſement; Exilium, abjuratio.] is a forſaking or quitting of the realm; and a kind of civil death, inflicted on an offender: there are two kinds of it, one voluntary and upon oath, called abjuration, and the other upon compulſion for ſome offence. Staundf. Pl. Cr. f. 117. See tits. Abjuration, Tranſportation.

BANK, Lat. baucus, Fr. banque.] In our common law, is uſually taken for a ſeat or bench of judgment; as Bank le Roy, the King's Bench, Bank le Common Pleas, the Bench of Common Pleas, or the Common Bench; called alſo in Latin Bancus Regis, and Bancus Communium Placitorum. Cromp. Juſt. 67, 91. Jus Banci, or the privilege of the Bench, was anciently allowed only to the king's judges, qui ſummam adminiſtrant juſtitiam; for inferior courts were not allowed that privilege.

There are, in each of the terms, ſtated days, called days in bank, dies in banco, that is, days of appearance in the court of Common Pleas. They are generally at the diſtance of about a week from each other, and regulated by ſome feſtival of the church. On ſome one of theſe days in bank all original writs muſt be made returnable; and therefore they are generally called the returns of that term. See tit. Day.

A bank, in common acceptation, ſignifies a place where a great ſum of money is depoſited, returned by exchange, or otherwiſe diſpoſed of to profit.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND is managed by a governor and directors, eſtabliſhed by parliament, with funds for maintaining thereof, appropriated to ſuch perſons as were ſubſcribers; and the capital ſtock, which is enlarged by divers ſtatutes, is exempted from taxes, accounted a perſonal eſtate aſſignable over, not ſubject to forfeiture; and the company make dividends of the profits half yearly, &c. The funds are redeemable by the parliament, on paying the money borrowed: and the Company of the Bank is to continue a corporation, and enjoy annuities till redeemed, &c. During the continuance of the Bank, no body politick, &c. other than the Company, shall borrow any sums on bills payable at demand; and forging the seal of the Bank, and forging or altering Bank-notes, or tendering such forged notes in payment, demanding to have them exchanged for money, &c. and forging the names of cashiers of the Bank, are all capital felonies. See the several statutes 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 20: 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 20: 11 Geo. 1. c. 9: 12 Geo. 1. c. 32: 15 Geo. 2. c. 13. And officers or servants of the Company, that imbezzle any Bank-note, &c. wherewith they are intrusted, being duly convicted, shall suffer death as felons.

By Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 79, Persons not authorised by the Bank, making or using moulds, for the marking of paper, with the words Bank of England, visible in the substance, or having such moulds in their possession, are guilty of felony without benefit of clergy: And persons issuing notes and bills engraved to resemble those of the Bank, or having the sum expressed in white characters on a black ground, may be punished by imprisonment, not exceeding six months. But innocent persons possessed of such notes carrying them for payment, not affected.

See Stat. 34 Geo. 2. c. 4, to regulate the holding general courts and courts of directors.

See the several statutes 21 Geo. 3. cc. 14, 60: 22 Geo. 3. c. 8: 23 Geo. 3. c. 35: 24 Geo. 3. sess. 2. cc. 10, 39: 25 Geo. 3. c. 32: 29 Geo. 3. c. 37. and a vast variety of previous statutes as to the continuance of the Bank charter.

By Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 33, the Bank is to keep in hand only 600,000 l. above the sum necessary to pay the current dividends—the remaining surplus to be applied to the use of the Public.

BANKERS, The monied goldsmiths first got the name of bankers in the reign of K. Charles the Second; but bankers now are those private persons in whose hands money is deposited and lodged for safety, to be drawn out again as the owners have occasion for it. See the preceding title.

BANKRUPT, A Trader, who secretes himself or does certain other acts, tending to defraud his creditors. 2 Comm. 285, 471. The word itself is derived from bancus or banque, the table or counter of a tradesman; (Du-fresne i 969;) and ruptus broken, denoting thereby one whose shop or place of trade is broken or gone; though others rather choose to adopt the French word route a trace or track—a bankrupt, say they, being one who has removed his banque, leaving but a trace behind. Cowel: 4 Inst. 277.—It is observable that the title of the first English statute concerning this offence; Stat. 34 H. 8. c. 4, "against such persons as do make bankrupt" is a literal translation of the French idiom, qui font banque route. 2 Comm. 472. n.

The Bankrupt-law is a system of positive regulations by various statutes, the construction of which have produced the multiplied cases on the subject, from whence the following principles and rules are extracted.—These statutes are,—Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 7: (which almost totally altered the old Stat. 34 Hen. 8. c. 4, mentioned above): 1 Jac. 1. c. 15: 21 Jac. 1. c. 19: 10 An. c. 15: 7 Geo. 1. c. 31: 5 Geo. 2. c. 30, continued at present by 28 Geo. 3. c. 24. § 2: 19 Geo. 3. c. 32: 24 Geo. 2. v. 57: 4 Geo. 3. c. 33.

On this subject, recourse has chiefly been had to Cooke's Bankrupt Laws; together with the Commentaries, and the modern reported determinations.

The matter, to suit the present purpose, has thus been arranged.

I. Who may be a Bankrupt.
II. By what Acts a Person may become so.
III. A general View of the Proceedings on, and Effects of a Commission of Bankruptcy.
1. As they relate to the Bankrupt himself.
2. As they transfer his Estate and Property.
IV. To this it has seemed necessary to add some more minute Particulars, as to the following Parts of the Subject:
1. Of the petitioning Creditor's Debt.
2. Of the Proof of Debts.
3. Of Creditors by Marriage Articles.
4. Of Contingent Debts.
5. Of Annuitants and certain other peculiar Creditors.
6. Of removing the Assignees.
7. Of Partners.
V. Practical Notes and Forms.

I. The Statute, 13 Eliz. c. 7, enacts "That any merchant or other person, being subject or denizen, using or exercising the trade of merchandize, by way of bargaining, exchange, rechange, bartery, chevisance, or otherwise, in gross or by retail, or seeking his or her trade or living by buying and selling"—may become bankrupts.—Drawing and redrawing bills of exchange, may in certain cases be considered as trading. 1 Atk. 128. See Cowp. 745.

Every person being a trader, and capable of making binding contracts, is liable to become a bankrupt.—As a nobleman, member of parliament, clergyman, &c. And where it is said, that farmers, innkeepers, &c. cannot be bankrupts, it means, in respect to that particular description; and not as affording protection, if in any other shape they come within the bankrupt-laws.—But Infants and Married women cannot be bankrupts.—As to the latter however, there are exceptions; for a feme covert in London, being a sole trader according to the custom, is liable to a commission of bankruptcy; and, as repeated determinations have settled that a feme covert living apart from her husband, as a feme sole, is liable to execution for debts contracted by her, there seems no doubt that such a married woman is equally liable to a commission of bankruptcy.—But if a feme sole trader, commit an act of bankruptcy, and afterwards marry and live with her husband, she cannot be made a bankrupt. Ex parte Mear, See Cooke B. L. c. 3. § 1: 4 Term Rep. 362. and this Dictionary tit. Baron and Feme.

Buying only, or selling only, will not qualify a man to be a bankrupt; but it must be both buying and selling, and thereby attempting to get a livelihood. 2 Comm. 476: 2 Wilf. 171.

There can be no such thing as an equitable bankruptcy; it must be a legal one; and the party must be a trader in his own right, for if a person that is a trader, makes another his executor, who only disposes of the stock of his trade, it will not make the executor a trader, and liable to a commission of bankruptcy. 2 P. Wms. 429: 1 Atk. 102.

Any

Any perſon trading to England, whether native, denizen or alien, though never reſident as a trader in England, may be a bankrupt, if he occaſionally come to this country and commit an act of bankruptcy. Cowp. 398, 402: Raym. 375: Salk. 110.

If a merchant gives over his trade, and ſome years after becomes inſolvent for money he owed while a merchant, he may be a bankrupt: but if it be for new debts, or old debts continued on new ſecurity, it is otherwiſe. 1 Vent. 5, 29.

To enumerate every trade ſufficient to make a man a bankrupt would be tedious. The following ſeem now ſettled; and ſome others are enumerated which have afforded cauſe of diſpute, chiefly from the particular facts of the caſe—It is to be premiſed, that a chapman, or one that buys and ſells any thing, though his dealing does not come under the denomination of any particular trade, may become a bankrupt.

* Bankers, brokers, coal-dealers, factors, ſcriveners, vintners, brick-makers, butchers, bakers, brewers, clothiers, goldſmiths, dyers, iron-manufacturers who buy iron and work it into wares, lock-ſmiths, milliners, nailors, plumbers, ſales-men, ſhoe-makers, ſmiths and farriers. 2 Wilſ. 170, 2: 4 Burr. 2148: 3 Mod. 330: Cro. Jac. 585: 2 Ld. Raym. 1480: 2 Comm. 476: 3 Mod. 330: 1 Ro. Ab. 60. pl. 11.

For the probable principle why the Legiſlature has ſubjected traders to the bankrupt laws, and not ſuffered other people to be included in them, See Port v. Turton, 2 Wilſ. 172.

[In this caſe and that of allum-manufacturers, though they ſeem to differ, the ſame principle is recognized, viz. "If a man exerciſes a manufacture upon the produce of his own land, as a neceſſary or uſual mode of reaping and enjoying that produce, and bringing it advantageouſly to market, he ſhall not be conſidered as a trader, though he buys materials or ingredients—as in the caſe of cheeſe, cyder, allum, and coal-mines; and the like.—But where the produce of land is merely the raw materials of a manufacture, and uſed as ſuch, and not as the mode of raiſing the produce of the land; in ſhort, where the produce of the land is an inſignificant article, compared with the expence of the whole manufacture, there in truth he is, and ought to be conſidered as a trader.—As this diſtinction turns on the nature and manner of exerciſing the manufacture, and the motive with which it is carried on, it depends ſo much upon the light in which a jury ſees the whole tranſaction, the law and the fact are ſo blended together, that it is hardly poſſible to diſtinguiſh them."]

II. To LEARN what the particular Acts of Bankruptcy are, which render a man a bankrupt, the ſeveral ſtatutes muſt be conſulted, and the reſolutions of the courts thereon;—Among theſe are to be reckoned.

1. To depart the realm, or from his dwelling houſe, with intent to defraud or hinder his creditors. St. 13 Eliz. c. 7.

2. To begin to keep his houſe privately, to abſent himſelf from and avoid his creditors. Stat. ib.

3. To procure or ſuffer himſelf willingly to be arreſted, without juſt or lawful cauſe; to ſuffer himſelf to be outlawed; or to yield himſelf to priſon. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 7: 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. ſect. 2.

4. Willingly or fraudulently to procure his goods, money or chattels, to be attached or ſequeſtered. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15.

5. To make any fraudulent grant or conveyance of his lands, tenements, goods, or chattels, to the intent or whereby his creditors ſhall and may be defeated or delayed for the recovery of their juſt debts. Stat. ib.

6. Being arreſted for debt, to lie in priſon two months after his arreſt, upon that or any other arreſt, or detention for debt, Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 19.

7. To obtain privilege, other than that of parliament againſt arreſt. Stat. ib.

8. Being arreſted for 100*l.* or more, to eſcape out of priſon. Stat. ib.

9. To prefer to any court, any petition or bill againſt any of the creditors, thereby endeavouring to enforce them to accept leſs than their juſt debts, or to procure time, or longer days of payment, than was given at the time of their original contracts. Stat. ib.

10. For a bankrupt to pay, ſatisfy, or ſecure the petitioning creditor his debt, is an act of bankruptcy which ſhall ſuperſede that commiſſion, and be ſufficient on which to ground another: and ſuch petitioning creditor ſhall loſe his debt, to be divided among the other creditors. See Cooke's B. L. c. 4. § 1: St. 5 G. 2. c. 30. §24.

11. Neglecting to make ſatisfaction for any juſt debt, to the amount of 100*l.* within two months after ſervice of legal proceſs, for ſuch debt, upon any trader, having privilege of parliament, is an act of bankruptcy. Stat. 4 G. 3. c. 33.

The Legiſlature having thus by poſitive laws, declared what acts ſhall be conſidered as criterions of inſolvency or fraud, whereon to ground a commiſſion; none other can be admitted by inference or analogy. Therefore it is not an act of bankruptcy for a trader ſecretly to convey his goods out of his houſe, and conceal them, to prevent their being taken in execution, nor to give money for notice, when a writ ſhould come into the Sheriff's office. 1 Ld. Raym. 725: Bull. N. P. 40. So if a trader procure his goods fraudulently to be taken in execution, or makes a fraudulent ſale of them, is not an act of bankruptcy, though void againſt creditors. 4 Burr. 2478: Cowp. 429.

Many of the acts of bankruptcy above deſcribed are in themſelves equivocal, and capable of being explained by circumſtances; for to bring them within the purview and meaning of the ſtatute, it is abſolutely neceſſary they ſhould be done to defraud and delay creditors from recovering their juſt debts.

The better to obtain a clear and comprehenſive view of the deciſions on this part of the ſubject, each act of bankruptcy on which any queſtion appears to have been raiſed, ſhall be conſidered ſeparately; premiſing that the ſtatutes of bankrupts are local, and do not extend to acts done in foreign countries, or other dominions of Great Britain. Cowp. 398.

Departing the realm, will not be an act of bankruptcy unleſs done with a view of defrauding or delaying creditors; but if it appear that they are in fact delayed, by ſuch abſence, it will be the ſame as if the original departure was fraudulent. Bull. N. P. 39: Com. Dig. tit. Bankrupt (C. 1): 1 Atk. 196, 240: Cooke's B. L. Vernon v. Hankey.

Beginning to keep houſe, or otherwiſe to abſent himſelf. Denial to a creditor is primâ facie evidence of this act of bankruptcy. But as the ſtatute requires it to be with an intent to delay or defraud creditors; the mere denial is therefore capable of being explained by circumſtances, ſuch as ſickneſs, company, buſineſs, or even the lateneſs of the hour at which the creditor calls.—Neither will an order by the debtor to his ſervant to deny him be ſufficient. For where a trader gave orders to his ſervant to deny him to creditors on the 26th of May, but was not actually denied to a creditor till the 28th, the court held the actual denial and not the order conſtituted the act of bankruptcy. Bull. N. P. 39: 1 Atk. 201: Cooke cites Hawkes v. Sanders, T. 24 G. 3.

Keeping in another man's houſe or chamber, having no houſe of his own, or on ſhip board, is an act of bankruptcy; ſo a miller keeping his mill. Com. Dig. tit. Bankrupt.

Any keeping houſe for the purpoſe of delaying a creditor, even for a very ſhort time, will be an act of bankruptcy; notwithſtanding the party afterwards goes abroad and appears in publick. 2 Stra. 809: 2 Term Rep. 59.

A general denial will not be ſufficient, but it muſt be a denial to a creditor who has a debt at that time due; for if he is only a creditor by a note payable at a future day, a denial to him will be no act of bankruptcy. 7 Vin. 6. pl. 14.

It frequently happens that traders in declining circumſtances call their creditors together to inſpect their affairs; and determine whether a commiſſion ſhall iſſue againſt them or not; and if thought adviſable, it is uſual for the trader to deny himſelf to a creditor, for the purpoſe of making an act of bankruptcy. However it ſeems doubtful how far ſuch concerted denial will be an act of bankruptcy to affect the intereſt of third perſons. See 1 Black. Rep. 441: Bull. N. P. 39.

Departing from his dwelling houſe may become an act of bankruptcy or not, according to the motive by which the party is impelled; if it be done with a view of defrauding his creditors, or even delaying them, and his abſence be but for a ſingle day, it will be an act of bankruptcy; and his very abſenting himſelf is ſufficient primâ facie evidence of an intention to defraud or delay his creditors; but it muſt be a voluntary abſenting and not by means of an arreſt. 1 Salk. 110: 1 Burr. 484: 2 Stra. 809: Green 53.

Suffering himſelf to be outlawed. An outlawry in Ireland does not make one a bankrupt; but in the county palatine of Durham it does. However an outlawry does not appear to be an act of bankruptcy, unleſs it be ſuffered with intent to defraud creditors. Com. Dig. tit. Bankrupt: Stone 124: Billing. 94: Good. 23: 1 Lev. 13.

Yielding himſelf to priſon, is to be intended of a voluntary yielding for debt; and if a perſon capable of paying, will notwithſtanding, from fraudulent motives, voluntarily go to priſon, it is an act of bankruptcy. Bill. 95: Good. 25: Vin. tit. Creditor and Bankrupt 62.

Willingly

Willingly or fraudulently procuring his goods to be attached or ſequeſtered, which is a plain and direct endeavour to diſappoint his creditors of their ſecurity. 2 Comm. 478.—The attachment here meant, and which the legiſlature had in view, is that ſort of attachment only by which ſuits are commenced; as in London and other places where that ſpecies of proceſs is uſed. Cowp. 427.

Making any fraudulent conveyance of his lands or goods.—A fraudulent grant, to come within the meaning of the ſtatute, muſt be by deed; therefore a fraudulent ſale of goods not by deed, is no act of bankruptcy in itſelf; but being a ſcheme concerted at the eve of bankruptcy, to cheat innocent perſons, in order to ſecure particular creditors, is ſuch a fraud as ſhall render the ſale void. 4 Burr. 2478.

A grant or conveyance fraudulent within Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 5, or 27 Eliz. c. 4, is an act of bankruptcy. Com. Dig.: Cooke.

A trader before he becomes a bankrupt may prefer one creditor to another; and may pay him his debt; or may make him a mortgage, with poſſeſſion delivered, or may aſſign part of his effects; but a preference of one creditor to the reſt, by conveying by deed all his effects to him, is a fraud upon the whole bankrupt law, and an act of bankruptcy. 1 Burr. 467.

Whether a tranſaction be fair or fraudulent, is often a queſtion of law; it is the judgement of law upon facts and intents; but tranſactions valid as between the parties may be fraudulent by reaſon of covin, colluſion, or confederacy to injure third perſons. 2 Burr. 827: 1 Burr. 467.

Nor will the caſe be different, if the aſſignment is made to indemnify a ſurety; for the inconvenience and miſchief ariſing from an undue preference is the ſame. Cooke's B. L. 78: Dougl. 282.

An equal diſtribution among creditors who equally give a general perſonal credit to the bankrupt, is anxiouſly provided for, ever ſince the act 21 Jac. 1. c. 19; therefore when a bankrupt, by deed, conveys all his effects to truſtees to pay all but one creditor, it is fraudulent and an act of bankruptcy. 1 Burr. 477.

But though a conveyance by deed of all a bankrupt's effects, or ſo much of his ſtock in trade, as to diſable him from being a trader, or all his houſehold goods, is itſelf an act of bankruptcy; a conveyance of part is very different; that may be publick, fair and honeſt. As a trader may ſell, ſo may he openly transfer many kinds of property by way of ſecurity. What aſſignment of part will or will not be fraudulent, muſt depend on the particular circumſtances of the caſe; but a colourable exception of a ſmall part of his eſtate or effects, will not prevent the deed being declared fraudulent; for the law will never ſuffer an evaſion to prevail to take a caſe out of the general rule, which is ſo eſſential to juſtice. 1 Black. Rep. 441: 2 Black. Rep. 362, 996: 1 Burr. 477.

An aſſignment by deed of part of a trader's effects, will be good, if made bonâ fide, and poſſeſſion delivered; and indeed the not delivering poſſeſſion being only evidence of fraud, may be explained by circumſtances. 1 Burr. 478, 484. But an aſſignment even of only part of a trader's effects, to a fair creditor, will if done in contemplation of bankruptcy itſelf become the very act. 3 Wilſ. 47: Cowp. 124.

Procuring any protection except privilege of parliament. If any one be protected as the king's ſervant, it does not make him bankrupt. Skin. 21. By Stat. 7 Ann. c. 12. § 5, declaring the privilege of ambaſſadors and their train, it is expreſsly enacted, That no merchant, or other trader whatſoever, within the deſcription of any of the ſtatutes againſt bankrupts, ſhall have any benefit of that act.

Being arreſted for debt and lying two months in priſon. The ſtatute does not make the mere being arreſted an act of bankruptcy. The moſt ſubſtantial trader is liable to be arreſted; but the preſumption of inſolvency ariſes from his lying in priſon two months without being able to get bail; nor will this preſumption be obviated by a mere formal bail, put in for the purpoſe of changing from one cuſtody to another. Where bail is really put in, the bankruptcy only relates to the time of the ſurrender; but when it is only formal bail, it will have relation to the firſt arreſt. 1 Burn 437: ſee Salk. 109: Bull. N. P. 38.

Eſcape out of priſon on arreſt for 100*l. or more.* The act clearly intends ſuch an eſcape, as ſhews he means to run away and thereby to defeat his creditors; it muſt be an eſcape againſt the will of the ſheriff, for a man ſhall not be made a criminal, where he has not the leaſt criminal intention to diſobey any law. 1 Burr. 440.

It is not an act of bankruptcy for a banker to refuſe payment, if he appears, and keeps his ſhop open. 7 Mod. 139: S. C. C. 42.

An act of bankruptcy if once plainly committed, can never be purged, even though the party continues to carry on a great trade. 2 Term Rep. 59. But if the act was doubtful, then circumſtances may explain the intent of the firſt act, and ſhew it not to have been done with a view to defraud creditors. But if after a plain act of bankruptcy, a man pays off and compounds with all his creditors be becomes a new man. 1 Burr. 484: 1 Salk. 110.

III. THE PROCEEDINGS on a commiſſion of bankrupt, depend entirely on the ſeveral ſtatutes of bankruptcy; all which are blended together, and digeſted into a conciſe methodical order in 2 Comm. 480, and here adopted with additions.

1. There muſt be a petition to the Lord Chancellor by one creditor to the amount of 100*l.* or by two to the amount of 150*l.* or by three or more to the amount of 200*l.*; which debts muſt be proved by affidavit. (St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.) Upon which he grants a commiſſion to ſuch diſcreet perſons as to him ſhall ſeem good, who are then ſtiled commiſſioners of bankrupt. St. 13 Eliz. c. 7. of theſe commiſſioners there are ſeveral exiſting liſts, which take the commiſſions of bankruptcy in turn. The petitioners, to prevent malicious applications, muſt be bound in a bond to the Lord Chancellor for 200*l.* to make the party amends in caſe they do not prove him a bankrupt. And if, on the other hand, they receive any money or effects from the bankrupt, as a recompence for ſuing out the commiſſion, ſo as to receive more than their rateable dividends of the bankrupt's eſtate, they forfeit not only what they ſhall have ſo received, but their whole debt. Theſe proviſions are made, as well to ſecure perſons in good credit from being damnified by malicious petitions, as to prevent knaviſh combinations between the creditors and bankrupt, in order to obtain the benefit of a commiſſion. When the commiſſion is awarded and iſſued, iſſued, the commiſſioners are to meet at their own expence, and take an oath for the due execution of their commiſſion, and to be allowed a ſum not exceeding 20*s.* per diem, each, at every ſitting. And no commiſſion of bankrupt ſhall abate, or be void by the death of the bankrupt ſubſequent to the commiſſion. St. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. nor upon any demiſe of the crown. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. The granting a commiſſion of bankruptcy is not diſcretionary, but a matter of right. 1 Vern. 153.

By Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. § 25, the petitioning creditor is directed at his own coſts, to proſecute the commiſſion until aſſignees ſhall be choſen; which coſts are to be aſcertained by the commiſſioners at the meeting for the choice of aſſignees; and are to be paid by the aſſignees to the petitioning creditor out of the firſt money or effects received by them, under the commiſſion.—But theſe coſts may be taxed by a Maſter in Chancery, on petition to the Lord Chancellor. Cooke's B. L. c. 1. § 3.

Notwithſtanding the ſtatute 5 Geo. 2. has provided a remedy againſt maliciouſly ſuing out commiſſions of bankrupt, yet it is held not to take away the common law remedy by an action for damages, but that the party may proceed at law to obtain ſuch redreſs for the injury he has ſuſtained, as a jury may think he is entitled to. 3 Burr. 1418: 1 Atk 144.

If more than two of the commiſſioners ſhould die, by which means there would not be a ſufficient number to execute it, or if the commiſſion ſhould be loſt, it muſt be renewed; upon which renewal only half the fees are paid, and the commiſſioners under the renewed commiſſion proceed from that ſtep which was left incomplete by the former. Cooke B. L.

The commiſſioners are firſt to receive proof of the perſon's being a trader, and having committed ſome act of bankruptcy; and then to declare him a bankrupt, if proved ſo; and to give notice thereof in the Gazette, and at the ſame time to appoint three meetings. At one of theſe meetings, an election muſt be made of aſſignees or perſons to whom the bankrupt's eſtate ſhall be aſſigned, and in whom it ſhall be veſted for the benefit of the creditors; and aſſignees are to be choſen by the major part in value of the creditors who ſhall then have proved their debts; and one creditor, if to a ſufficient amount may chuſe himſelf aſſignee; but aſſignees may be, if neceſſary, originally appointed by the commiſſioners, and afterwards approved or rejected by the creditors: but no creditor ſhall be admitted to vote in the choice of aſſignees, whoſe debt on the balance of accounts does not amount to 10*l.* And at the third meeting at fartheſt, which muſt be on the forty-ſecond day after the advertiſement in the Gazette, (unleſs the time be enlarged by the Lord Chancellor; which it may not be for more than fifty days, unleſs on ſpecial circumſtances of involuntary default by the bankrupt, 1 Atk. 222,) the bankrupt, upon notice alſo perſonally ſerved upon him, or left at his uſual place of abode, muſt ſurrender himſelf perſonally to the commiſſioners; which ſurrender (if voluntary) protects him from all arreſts till his final examination is paſt: and he muſt thenceforth in all reſpects conform to the directions of the ſtatutes of bankruptcy; or, in default of either ſurrender or conformity, he ſhall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy, and ſhall ſuffer death, and his goods and eſtate ſhall be diſtributed among his creditors. Stat. 5 Geo. II. c. 30.

In caſe the bankrupt abſconds, or is likely to run away, between the time of the commiſſion iſſued, and the laſt day of ſurrender, he may by warrant from any judge or juſtice of the peace be apprehended and committed to the county gaol, in order to be forth-coming to the commiſſioners; who are alſo empowered immediately to grant a warrant for ſeizing his goods and papers. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30: and ſee 1 Atk. 240.

When the bankrupt appears, the commiſſioners are to examine him, touching all matters relating to his trade and effects. They may alſo ſummon before them, and examine the bankrupt's wife; (St. 21 Jac. 1. c. 19: ſee 1 P. Wms. 610, 611;) and any other perſon whatſoever, as to all matters relating to the bankrupt's affairs. And in caſe any of them ſhould refuſe to anſwer, or ſhall not anſwer fully, to any lawful queſtion, or ſhall refuſe to ſubſcribe ſuch their examination, the commiſſioners may commit them to priſon without bail, till they ſubmit themſelves and make and ſign a full anſwer; the commiſſioners ſpecifying in their warrant of commitment the queſtion ſo refuſed to be anſwered. And any gaoler, permitting ſuch perſon to eſcape, or go out of priſon, ſhall forfeit 500*l.* to the creditors. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

The bankrupt, upon this examination, is bound upon pain of death to make a full diſcovery of all his eſtate and effects, as well in expectancy as poſſeſſion, and how he has diſpoſed of the ſame; together with all books and writings relating thereto: and is to deliver up all in his own power to the commiſſioners; (except the neceſſary apparel of himſelf, his wife, and children;) or, in caſe he conceals or embezzles any effects to the amount of 20*l.* or withholds any books or writings, with intent to defraud his creditors, he ſhall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy; and his goods and eſtate ſhall be divided among his creditors. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. And unleſs it ſhall appear, that his inability to pay his debts aroſe from ſome caſual loſs, he may, upon conviction by indictment for ſuch groſs miſconduct and negligence, be ſet upon the pillory for two hours, and have one of his ears nailed to the ſame and cut off. St. 21 Jac. 1. c. 19.

And ſo careful is the law to avoid any fraud, diſhoneſty or concealment, on the part of the bankrupt, that an agreement by the friends of the bankrupt, to pay a ſum in conſideration that the creditors would not examine him as to particular points, is void. Nerot v. Wallace, 3 Term Rep. 17.

After the time allowed to the bankrupt for ſuch diſcovery is expired, any other perſon voluntarily diſcovering any part of his eſtate, before unknown to the aſſignees, ſhall be entitled to five per cent. out of the effects ſo diſcovered, and ſuch farther reward as the aſſignees and commiſſioners ſhall think proper. And any truſtee wilfully concealing the eſtate of any bankrupt, after the expiration of the two and forty days, ſhall forfeit 100*l.* and double the value of the eſtate concealed, to the creditors. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

Hitherto every thing is in favour of the creditors; and the law ſeems to be pretty rigid and ſevere againſt the bankrupt; but, in caſe he proves honeſt, it makes him full amends for all this rigor and ſeverity. For if the bankrupt hath made an ingenuous diſcovery, (of the truth and ſufficiency of which there remains no reaſon to doubt), and hath conformed in all points to the directions of the law; and, if in conſequence thereof, the creditors, creditors, or four parts in five of them in number and value, (but none of them creditors for leſs than 20*l.*) will ſign a certificate to that purport; the commiſſioners are then to authenticate ſuch certificate under their hands and ſeals, and to tranſmit it to the Lord Chancellor, and he, or two of the judges whom he ſhall appoint, on oath made by the bankrupt that ſuch certificate was obtained without fraud, may allow the ſame; or diſallow it upon cauſe ſhewn by any of the creditors of the bankrupt. Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

If no cauſe be ſhewn to the contrary, the certificate is allowed of courſe, and then the bankrupt is entitled to a decent and reaſonable allowance out of his effects for his future ſupport and maintenance, and to put him in a way of honeſt induſtry. This allowance is alſo in proportion to his former good behaviour, in the early diſcovery of the decline of his affairs, and thereby giving his creditors a larger dividend. For, if his effects will not pay one half of his debts, or ten ſhillings in the pound, he is left to the diſcretion of the commiſſioners and aſſignees, to have a competent ſum allowed him, not exceeding three per cent. but if they pay ten ſhillings in the pound, he is to be allowed five per cent. if twelve ſhillings and ſix-pence, then ſeven and a half per cent. and if fifteen ſhillings in the pound, then the bankrupt ſhall be allowed ten per cent. provided, that ſuch allowance do not in the firſt caſe exceed 200*l.* in the ſecond 250*l.* and in the third 300*l* St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

Beſides this allowance, he has alſo an indemnity granted him of being free and diſcharged for ever from all debts owing by him at the time he became a bankrupt; even though judgment ſhall have been obtained againſt him, and he lies in priſon upon execution for ſuch debts. And for that among other purpoſes, all proceedings in commiſſions of bankrupt are, on petition, to be entered of record, as a perpetual bar againſt actions to be commenced on this account; though in general, the production of the certificate, properly allowed, ſhall be ſufficient evidence of all previous proceedings. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

The allowing the certificate of a bankrupt, will not diſcharge his ſureties; but if a bankrupt obtains his certificate before his bail are fixed, it will diſcharge them; but if not till after they are fixed, they will remain liable notwithſtanding the certificate, for it has no relation back; and till allowed it is nothing. And if the creditor proves his debt, with intent to obſtruct the certificate, it does not preclude him from purſuing his legal remedies; and even if he had received his debt, or part of it, under the commiſſion, ſtill he might proceed to fix the bail who would be entitled to their remedy, ſo far as they are oppreſſed, by audita querela, or by motion. 1 Atk. 84: 1 Burr. 244: 2 Burr. 716: 2 Black. 812.

However, the bankrupt's certificate, obtained after judgment in an action upon a bail-bond againſt the bankrupt himſelf, will not diſcharge the bail-bond, although it diſcharged the original debt, for it is a new and diſtinct cauſe of action. 1 Burr. 436: 2 Stra. 1196: 1 Wilſ. 41.

The certificate does not diſcharge a bankrupt from his own expreſs collateral covenant, which does not run with the land 4 Burr. 2443.—Nor from a covenant to pay rent. 4 Term Rep. 94.

A bankrupt after a commiſſion of bankruptcy ſued out, may, in conſideration of a debt due before the bankruptcy, and for which the creditor agrees to accept no dividend or benefit, under the commiſſion, make ſuch creditor a ſatisfaction, in part, or for the whole of his debt, by a new undertaking or agreement, and aſſumpſit will lie upon ſuch new promiſe or undertaking. 1 Atk. 67.

If a bankrupt has his certificate, and an action be brought againſt him afterwards for a debt precedent to the commiſſion, he may plead his certificate, or otherwiſe he is without relief. 2 Vern. 696, 697.

The common method of pleading is, generally, that he became a bankrupt within the intent and meaning of the ſtatutes made and in force concerning bankrupts, and that the cauſe of action accrued before he became a bankrupt. This general plea is given by Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. ſect. 7.

Though a creditor of a bankrupt under 20*l.* is excluded from aſſent or diſſent to the certificate, yet as he is affected by the conſequence of allowing the certificate, he hath right to petition, and ſhew any fraud againſt allowing the certificate. 7 Vin. Abr. 134. pl. 18.

No allowance or indemnity ſhall be given to a bankrupt, unleſs his certificate be ſigned and allowed; and alſo if any creditor produces a fictitious debt, or is induced by money or notes to ſign his certificate, and the bankrupt does not make diſcovery of it, but ſuffers the fair creditors to be impoſed upon, he loſes all title to theſe advantages. St. 24 Geo. 2. c. 57. ſee Doug. 216, 673. Neither can he claim them, if he has given with any of his children above 100*l.* for a marriage portion, unleſs he had at that time ſufficient left to pay all his debts, or if he has loſt at any one time 5*l.* or in the whole 100*l.* within a twelvemonth before he became a bankrupt, by any manner of gaming or wagering whatſoever; or, within the ſame time has loſt to the value of 100*l.* by ſtock jobbing.

Alſo to prevent the too common practice of frequent and fraudulent or careleſs breaking, a mark is ſet upon ſuch as have been once cleared by a commiſſion of bankrupt, or have compounded with their creditors, or have been delivered by an act of inſolvency. Perſons who have been once cleared by any of theſe methods, and afterwards become bankrupts again, unleſs they pay full 15*s.* in the pound, are only thereby indemnified as to the confinement of their bodies; but any future eſtate they ſhall acquire remains liable to their creditors, excepting their neceſſary apparel, houſehold goods, and the tools and implements of their trades. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. But money gained by his trade or profeſſion for the neceſſary maintenance of himſelf and family, may be recovered by action by an uncertificated bankrupt. Chippendale v. Tomlinſon, Co. B L.

2. By the Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 7, The commiſſioners ſhall have full power to diſpoſe of all the bankrupt's lands and tenements, which he had in his own right at the time when he became a bankrupt, or which ſhall deſcend or come to him at any time afterwards, before his debts are ſatisfied or agreed for; [and all lands and tenements which were purchaſed by him jointly with his wife or children to his own uſe, (or ſuch intereſt therein as he may lawfully part with,) or purchaſed with any other perſon, upon ſecret truſt, for his own uſe;] and cauſe them be appraiſed to their full value, and to ſell the ſame, by deed indented and inrolled, or divide them proportionably among his creditors. This ſtatute expreſsly included not not only freehold, but cuſtomary and copyhold lands: and the lord of the manor is thereby bound to admit the aſſignee, (See Cro. Car. 568: 1 Atk. 96,) but did not extend to eſtates tail, farther than for the bankrupt's life; nor to equities of redemption on a mortgaged eſtate, wherein the bankrupt has no legal intereſt, but only an equitable reverſion. Whereupon the ſtatute 21 Jac. 1. c. 19. enacts, that the commiſſioners ſhall be impowered to ſell or convey, by deed indented and inrolled, any lands or tenements of the bankrupt, wherein he ſhall be ſeiſed of an eſtate-tail in poſſeſſion, remainder or reverſion, unleſs the remainder or reverſion thereof ſhall be in the crown; and that ſuch ſale ſhall be good againſt all ſuch iſſue in tail, remainder-men and reverſioners, whom the bankrupt himſelf might have barred by a common recovery, or other means; and that all equities of redemption upon mortgaged eſtates, ſhall be at the diſpoſal of the commiſſioners; for they ſhall have power to redeem the ſame, as the bankrupt himſelf might have done, and after redemption to ſell them. And the commiſſioners may ſell a copyhold entailed by cuſtom. Stone, 127: Billing. 148. And alſo, by this and a former act, 1 Jac. 1. c. 15, all fraudulent conveyances to defeat the intent of theſe ſtatutes are declared void; but it is provided, that no purchaſer bonâ fide, for a good or valuable conſideration, ſhall be affected by the bankrupt-laws, unleſs the commiſſion be ſued forth within five years after the act of bankruptcy committed. See Cooke's B. L. c. 8.

If there be two joint-tenants, and the one becomes bankrupt and dies, Billingburſt is of opinion the bankrupt's part ſhall be ſold, and that there ſhall be no ſurvivorſhip; becauſe the bankrupt's moiety is bound by the ſtatutes, and alſo the bankrupt had power to ſell the ſame in his life-time, and might depart with it. And by Stat. 1 Jac. c. 15, (See ante III. 1,) The Commiſſioners after the bankrupt's death, may proceed in execution, in and upon the commiſſion, for and concerning the offender's lands, tenements, &c. in ſuch ſort as if the offender had been living; which they cannot do, if the ſurvivorſhip is held to take place.

If the bankrupt be a joint-tenant in fee, for life or years, the commiſſioners may ſell a moiety. So if he be ſeiſed in right of his wife, they may ſell during the coverture. 1 Com. Dig. 530.

In caſe of a patron becoming bankrupt, the commiſſioners may ſell the advowſon of the living; but if the church be void at the time of the ſale, the vendee ſhall not preſent to the void turn, but the bankrupt himſelf, becauſe the void turn of a church is not valuable. 1 Burn's Eccl. Law, 4 ed. p. 125.

The commiſſioners may ſell offices of inheritance and for terms of years; but an office concerning the execution of juſtice (and therefore within 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 16,) cannot be ſold. 1 Atk. 213. But a place that does not concern the execution of juſtice, but only the police, may be ſold. 1 Atk. 210, 215.

If a mortgage is made by a bankrupt, tenant in tail, without ſuffering a recovery, the aſſignees ſhall take advantage of this defect, and hold the land clear of the mortgage. 1 Wilſ. 276.

The commiſſioners may aſſign a poſſibility of right belonging to the bankrupt. 3 P. Wms. 132.

When aſſignees are choſen under a commiſſion, all the eſtate and effects of the bankrupt, whether they be goods in actual poſſeſſion, or debts, contracts, and legacies, and other choſes in action, are veſted in them by aſſignment; (but until the aſſignment the property is not transferred out of the bankrupt;) and every new acquiſition previous to the certificate will veſt in the aſſignees; but as to future real eſtates, there muſt be a new aſſignment of them. 1 Atk. 253: Belling. 118: 1 P. Wms. 385, 6.

The commiſſioners, by their warrant, may cauſe any houſe or tenement of the bankrupt to be broke open, in order to enter and ſeize the ſame. See 2 Show. 247.

When the aſſignees are choſen or approved by the creditors, the commiſſioners are to aſſign every thing over to them: and the property of every part of the eſtate is thereby as fully veſted in them, as it was in the bankrupt himſelf, and they have the ſame remedies to recover it. 12 Mod. 324.

The commiſſioners in England may ſell the bankrupt's goods in Ireland; and, (notwithſtanding a dictum of Lord Manſfield to the contrary, See Dougl. 151,) it ſeems now decided, that, by the aſſignment of the commiſſioners, all the bankrupt's property, whether in England or abroad, is conveyed to the uſe of his creditors. See Hunter v. Potts, 4 Term Rep. 182. and Cooke's B. L. c. 8. § 10.

If a man ſends bills of exchange, or conſigns a cargo, and the perſon to whom he ſends them, has paid the value before, though he did not know of the ſending them at that time, the ſending of them to the carrier, will be ſufficient to prevent the aſſignees from taking theſe goods back, in caſe of an intervening act of bankruptcy. 4 Burr. 2239.

But if the goods were ſent, in contemplation of bankruptcy, and to give a preference to a former creditor, if the act of bankruptcy is committed before the creditor receives the property, and aſſents to it, the commiſſioners may aſſign it, as part of the bankrupt's effects, and it will veſt in the aſſignees. 4 Burr. 2235.

All queſtions of preference turn upon the action being complete, before an act of bankruptcy committed, for then the property is transferred; otherwiſe an act of bankruptcy intervening, veſts the property in the hands and diſpoſal of the law. If a man were to make a payment, but the evening before he becomes bankrupt, independant of the act of parliament, and in a courſe of dealing and trade, it would be good. Where an act is done, that is right to be done, and the ſingle motive is not to give an unjuſt preference, the creditor will have a preference. Cowp. 123.

If a merchant conſigns goods to a trader, and before their arrival, the conſignee becomes bankrupt, if the merchant can prevent the goods getting into the bankrupt's hands, the commiſſioners' aſſignment will not affect them. 2 Vern. 203: 1 Atk. 248: Cowp. 296.

The future profits ariſing from a bankrupt's perſonal labour are not ſubject to the aſſignment. Chippendale v. Tomlinſon, T. 25 Geo. 3. B. R.

The property veſted in the aſſignees is the whole that the bankrupt had in himſelf, at the time he committed the firſt act of bankruptcy, or that has been veſted in him ſince, before his debts are ſatisfied or agreed for; therefore when the commiſſion is awarded, the commiſſion, and the property of the aſſignees, ſhall have a relation, or reference, back to the firſt and original act of bankruptcy. 4 Burr. 32. Inſomuch that all tranſactions of

of the bankrupt, are from that time, abſolutely null and void; either with regard to the alienation of his property, or the receipt of his debts, from ſuch as are privy to his bankruptcy; for they are no longer his property, or his debts, but thoſe of the future aſſignees. Therefore even if a banker pay the draft of a trader keeping caſh with him after knowledge of an act of bankruptcy, the aſſignees may recover the money. 2 Term Rep. 113: 3 Bro. C. R. 313: Vernon v. Harkey, and See 2 Term Rep. 287. And, if an execution be ſued out, but not ſerved and executed on the bankrupt's effects till after the act of bankruptcy, it is void as againſt the aſſignees. But the king is not bound by this fictitious relation, nor is within the ſtatutes of bankrupts; 1 Atk. 262: W. Jones 202: 2 Show. 480; for if, after the act of bankruptcy committed, and before the aſſignment of his effects, an extent iſſues for the debt of the crown, the goods are bound thereby. Vin. Abr. tit. Creditor and Bankrupt 104: Cooke's B. L. c. 14. § 7.

As theſe acts of bankruptcy however may ſometimes be ſecret to all but a few, and it would be prejudicial to trade to carry this notion to it's utmoſt length, it is provided by Stat. 19 Geo. II. c. 32, that no money paid by a bankrupt to a bonâ fide or real creditor, in a courſe of trade, even after an act of bankruptcy done, ſhall be liable to be refunded. Nor (by Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15,) ſhall any debtor of a bankrupt that pays him his debt, without knowing of his bankruptcy, be liable to account for it again. The intention of this relative power being only to reach fraudulent tranſactions, and not to diſtreſs the fair trader.

Sale of goods by a bankrupt after an act of bankruptcy is not merely void, the contract is good between the parties; but it may be avoided by the commiſſioners or aſſignees at pleaſure; therefore they may either bring trover for the goods, as ſuppoſing the contract may be void, or may bring debt or aſſumpſit for the value, which affirms the contract. 3 Salk. 59. pl. 2: 2 Term Rep. 143: 4 Term Rep. 216, 7.

And ſo if a bankrupt on the eve of bankruptcy, fraudulently deliver goods to a creditor. 4 Term Rep. 211.

The aſſignees may purſue any legal method of recovering the property veſted in them, by their own authority; but cannot commence a ſuit in equity, nor compound any debts owing to the bankrupt, nor refer any matters to arbitration, without the conſent of the creditors, or the major part of them, in value, at a meeting to be held in purſuance of notice in the Gazette. St. 5 Geo. II. c. 30. § 38: See 1 Atk. 91, 107, 210, 253: Cooke's B. L. c. 14.

When they have got in all the effects they can reaſonably hope for, and reduced them to ready money, the aſſignees muſt, after 4, and within 12 months after the commiſſion iſſued, give 21 days notice to the creditors of a meeting for a dividend or diſtribution; at which time they muſt produce their accounts, and verify them upon oath, if required: [and under St. 5 Geo. II. c. 30. § 6, by affidavit if living in the country, and if Quakers by affirmation.] And then the commiſſioners ſhall direct a dividend to be made, at ſo much in the pound, to all creditors who have before proved, or ſhall then prove their debts. This dividend muſt be made equally, and in a rateable proportion, to all the creditors, according to the quantity of their debts; no regard being had to the quality of them. Mortgages indeed, for which the creditor has a real ſecurity in his own hands, are entirely ſafe, for the commiſſion of bankrupt reaches only the equity of redemption. Finch. Rep. 466: 2 Rep. 25. So are alſo perſonal debts, where the creditor has a chattel in his hands, as a pledge or pawn for the payment, or has taken the debtor's lands or goods in execution. But, otherwiſe, judgments, and recognizances, (both which are debts of record, and therefore at other times have a priority,) and alſo bonds and obligations by deed or ſpecial inſtrument, (which are called debts by ſpecialty, and are uſually the next in order,) theſe are all put on a level with debts by mere ſimple contract, and all paid pari paſſu. St. 21 Jac. c. 19. Nay, ſo far is this matter carried, that, by the expreſs proviſion of the St. 7 Geo. 1. c. 31, (See St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. § 22: Cowp. 243.) debts not due at the time of the dividend made, as bonds or notes of hand payable at a future day certain, ſhall be proved and paid equally with the reſt, allowing a diſcount or drawback, in proportion. Ld. Raym. 1549: Stra. 949, 1211: 2 P. Wms. 396: 3 Wilſ. 17.

And inſurances and obligations upon bottomry or reſpondentia, bonâ fide made by the bankrupt, though forfeited after the commiſſion is awarded, ſhall be looked upon in the ſame light as debts contracted before any act of bankruptcy. St. 19 Geo. 2. c. 32; alſo annuity-bonds though not forfeited at the time of the bankruptcy. Cowp. 540. but ſee 2 Blac. R. 110. b.—And Policies of Inſurances for Life. Dougl. (2d edit.) 166.

Within eighteen months after the commiſſion iſſued, a ſecond and final dividend ſhall be made, unleſs all the effects were exhauſted by the firſt. St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. It is the duty of aſſignees to make a dividend as early as poſſible after the time given by ſtatute. And if they neglect to do ſo, and keep the money in their own hands they will be liable to pay intereſt for it. 1 Atk. 90: Cooke B. L. c. 7. § 3.

And if any ſurplus remains after ſelling his eſtates, and paying every creditor his full debt, it ſhall be reſtored to the bankrupt. St. 13 El. c. 7. This is a caſe which ſometimes happens to men in trade, who involuntarily, or at leaſt unwarily commit acts of bankruptcy, by abſconding and the like, while their effects are more than ſufficient to pay their creditors. And, if any ſuſpicious or malevolent creditor will take the advantage of ſuch acts, and ſue out a commiſſion, the bankrupt has no remedy, but muſt quietly ſubmit to the effects of his own imprudence, except that, upon ſatisfaction made to all the creditors, the commiſſion may be ſuperſeded. 2 Cha. Ca. 144. This caſe may alſo happen, when a knave is deſirous of defrauding his creditors, and is compelled by a commiſſion, to do them that juſtice, which otherwiſe he wanted to evade. And therefore, though the uſual rule is, that all intereſt on debts carrying intereſt ſhall ceaſe from the time of iſſuing the commiſſion, yet, in caſe of a ſurplus left after payment of every debt, ſuch intereſt ſhall again revive, and be chargeable on the bankrupt, or his repreſentatives. 1 Atk. 244.

The Superſedeas is a writ iſſuing under the great ſeal, to ſuperſede the commiſſion, and this writ may be iſſued at the diſcretion of the Lord Chancellor, when the creditors of the bankrupt agree to ſuperſede the commiſſion; or becauſe the party appears not to have been a trader; that the party had not committed an act of bankruptcy; that the commiſſion was not opened till three months after it iſſued; or that he has paid all his creditors. 1 Atk. 154: 2 Cha. Ca. 192: Sel. Ca. Cha. 46: 1 Atk. 135: 1 Atk. 244: Ex parte Nutt, 1 Atk. 102.

Though the uſual courſe is for the Lord Chancellor to order a feigned iſſue to try the bankruptcy at law, yet if it appears plainly to have been taken out fraudulently and vexatiouſly, the court will at once ſuperſede the commiſſion, and order the petitioning creditor's bond to be aſſigned. 1 Atk. 128, 144, 218.

IV. 1. The acts of parliament relating to bankrupts, being made for the relief of creditors, none but a creditor could at any time have taken out a commiſſion; and now he muſt have a legal demand to the amount ſpecified in St. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. § 23. But a debt in equity will in no circumſtances be a foundation for a commiſſion; therefore if a legal demand is not in its own nature aſſignable, the aſſignee, notwithſtanding his equitable claim, cannot be a petitioning creditor, Forreſt. 248: Ch. Ca. 191: Freem. 270: 1 Atk. 147: 2 Vez. 407: 2 Stra. 899: 1 P. Wms. 783.

It is generally underſtood, that the commiſſion muſt iſſue on the petition of ſome creditor capable of claiming relief under it; and therefore that if the debt of the petitioning creditor appears to have been contracted ſubſequent to a ſecret act of bankruptcy committed by the trader, no commiſſion ought to be granted upon his petition. 2 Str. 744, 6: 1042: 1 Atk. 73.

A debt at law, notwithſtanding the ſtatute of Limitations has incurred, will ſupport a commiſſion; for the ſtatute does not extinguiſh the debt, but the remedy, and the leaſt hint will revive it. 2 Black. Rep. 703.

It has been determined, that a creditor, by notes bought in at 10*s.* in the pound, was a creditor for the full ſum, and might take out a commiſſion. 1 P. Wms. 783.

A creditor, before the party entered into trade, may on account of ſuch debt, ſue out a commiſſion, but a creditor for a debt contracted after leaving off trade, cannot. But when a commiſſion is ſued out, thoſe creditors who have become ſuch ſince the quitting trade, may come in and ſhare the dividend with thoſe who were creditors before or during the trading, provided they are not barred by a prior act of bankruptcy. 12 Mod. 159: Ld. Raym. 287: 1 Sid. 411: Dougl. 282.

If a creditor has his debtor in execution, he cannot petition for a commiſſion of bankruptcy; for the body of the debtor being in execution, is a ſatisfaction of the debt, in point of law. Therefore where a commiſſion had iſſued on the petition of a creditor who had the bankrupt in execution, it was upon that account ſuperſeded. 3 Wilſ. 271: 1 Stra. 653.

Nor has the petitioning creditor the ordinary election to ſue the bankrupt at law, or come under the commiſſion as other creditors have; (See poſt. 2.) for if he was to elect to proceed at law, the commiſſion muſt be ſuperſeded, which would affect thoſe creditors who had proved debts under it. 1 Atk. 154.

2. Debts may be proved at any of the publick meetings appointed by the commiſſioners; the uſual proof is the oath of the creditor, which if not objected to by the bankrupt himſelf, or any of thoſe creditors, is generally eſteemed ſufficient; but if any objection is raiſed, the demand muſt be further ſubſtantiated by evidence. For though the creditor ſhould make a poſitive oath of the debt, the commiſſioners, if they conceive themſelves to have juſt grounds to doubt its fairneſs, ought to admit it only as a claim; and if it is not made out to their ſatisfaction, it may be rejected. 1 Atk. 71, 221.

Upon the principle of equality among the creditors proving under the commiſſion, the privilege of debtors to come in and prove their debts and bankrupts to be diſcharged therefrom, is co-extenſive and commenſurate; therefore a man ſhall not prove a debt and proceed in an action at law, at the ſame time. However, the court will not abſolutely ſtop him from bringing an action, but put him to his election; and ſhould he elect to proceed at law, he will ſtill be allowed to prove his debt, for the purpoſe of aſſenting to, or diſſenting from the certificate; which permiſſion is abſolutely requiſite, to make his remedy at law of any avail, for ſhould the bankrupt procure his certificate, he will be thereby diſcharged from that action, as well as from all debts contracted before the act of bankruptcy. 1 Atk. 83, 119, 220: 1 P. Wms. 562.

If the creditor, before he proves his debt, proceeds at law againſt the bankrupt, he cannot be obliged to make his election till a dividend is declared. And where the creditor has already proceeded at law, he is not at liberty to come in, and prove his debt under the commiſſion, without relinquiſhing his proceedings at law; unleſs by order from the great ſeal, for the purpoſe of aſſenting to, or diſſenting from the certificate. See 1 Atk. 219: 2 Black. Rep. 1317.

But the modern determinations, ſupported by ſome of earlier date, have moſtly put the creditor to his election before a dividend, provided a reaſonable time is afforded the creditor to inform himſelf of the bankrupt's affairs. Cooke's B. L. c. 6. § 2.

The being choſen aſſignee, will not prevent the creditor from ſuing the bankrupt at law, if he has not proved his debt; for in that caſe he can only be conſidered as a creditor at large; and even if he has proved his debt and choſen himſelf aſſignee, he may ſtill elect to proceed at law, and be diſcharged as a creditor under the commiſſion. 1 Atk. 153, 221. But a petitioning creditor has not this election; ſee ante 1.

A debt made void by ſtatute, ought not to be permitted to be proved; as a debt on an uſurious contract; and though the rule of the court of Chancery is, upon a bill to be relieved againſt demands of uſurious intereſt, not to make void the whole debt, but to make the party pay what is really due; yet in a commiſſion of bankruptcy, the aſſignees have a right to inſiſt that the whole is void, as an uſurious contract. And unleſs the aſſignees and creditors ſubmit to pay what is really due, the Lord Chancellor has not power to order it; and applications of this nature have been frequently refuſed. 2 Vez. 489: 1 Atk. 125: ſee Dougl. 716.

If the bankrupt's eſtate is in arrear for taxes, the collector, when he comes to prove the debt, muſt produce his authority, that the commiſſioners may judge of the legality of it. Corporations uſually have a clerk or treaſurer who is the perſon to prove debts due to them; he muſt however produce his appointment under ſeal to the commiſſioners. Every ſecurity that a creditor has for his debt, muſt be produced at the time of his proving, when the commiſſioners will mark them as having been exhibited.

exhibited. In the ſame manner, any perſon acting for another, muſt produce his authority to the commiſſioners and they will mark them as exhibits. Cooke's Bankrupt Law. One inhabitant of a pariſh may prove for himſelf and the other inhabitants. 1 Atk. 111: and ſee Cooke's B. L. c. 4. § 1.

In caſe of debts uncertain in point of liquidation, as between two merchants in balancing accounts, the matter reſts upon a claim to aſcertain the ſum that was due at the time of the bankruptcy. So where a creditor cannot aſcertain his debt with certainty ſufficient to enable him to ſwear to it, or is not able in other reſpects ſatisfactorily to ſubſtantiate it; or where the agent of a creditor cannot produce his authority, and in many other caſes where there appears a probable foundation of a demand, though not ſufficiently made out, it is uſual for the commiſſioners to ſuffer a claim to be entered; but that will not entitle the party to a dividend, which he cannot receive without completely proving his debt. If a claim is not ſubſtantiated in a reaſonable time, the commiſſioners may ſtrike it out; and they generally do ſo before a dividend is declared, unleſs ſufficient reaſon is offered to them for prolonging the time; but the creditor is notwithſtanding afterwards at liberty to prove his debt, and receive his ſhare upon any future dividends. However in ſuch caſes where there has not been groſs neglect, the Chancellor will make an order that ſuch creditor ſhall be paid his proportion of the firſt dividend out of the money in the aſſignees' hands, upon condition that it does not break in upon any former dividend. 3 Wilſ. 271: Cooke's B. L.

Aliens as well as denizens may come in as creditors; for all ſtatutes concerning bankrupts extend to aliens. Hob. 287: ſee Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 19.

3. The diſtinction of debts payable in futuro on a day certain, and debts depending upon contingency, has given riſe to frequent queſtions, whether the bankrupt's wife or her truſtees ſhould be admitted to prove the ſum ſettled on her by marriage-articles, under a commiſſion againſt her huſband.

Lord Hardwicke, on a petition ex parte Wincheſter, (1 Atk. 117: Dav. 535,) ſtated the diſtinctions of the ſeveral caſes. The firſt head of caſes is where a bond is given by a huſband to pay a ſum of money in his life-time to truſtees, to be laid out in truſt for himſelf and his wife, or children; and in caſe the huſband ſurvives, to the uſe of himſelf; if in this caſe the huſband becomes a bankrupt, this being a debt due in his life-time, and before the bankruptcy, the court will let in the truſtees to prove ſuch debt, according to the truſts.

The ſecond head is, where a perſon gives a covenant to pay to truſtees a ſum of money for the benefit of the wife or children after his death; and alſo a judgment by way of collateral ſecurity to ſuch covenant, and afterwards becomes bankrupt; this being a debt at law, may be proved under the commiſſion.

The third is, where the father gives a bond to his intended ſon-in-law on the marriage of his daughter, to pay a ſum of money after his death and intereſt in the mean time, on particular days and times, and there is a breach of the condition of the bond, and the father becomes bankrupt; this is a legal debt not depending on a contingency, and therefore may be proved.

The fourth head is, where a man covenants in conſideration of a marriage portion paid him, for his heirs, executors and adminiſtrators to pay to truſtees a ſum of money after his deceaſe, in caſe his wife ſurvives him. This caſe depending on a contingency, is materially different from the others; becauſe in thoſe there was a remedy at law before the commiſſion iſſued; and it ſeems now to be ſettled, that on a contingent proviſion for a wife, ſhe cannot be admitted as a creditor. 3 Wilſ. 271: ſee 2 P. Wms. 497: 2 Ld. Raym. 1546: 7 Vin. 72. pl. 7: Dav. 254, 524: 1 Atk. 113, 115, 120.—And this though it be particularly conditioned or provided that ſuch debt ſhall be proveable.—Ex parte Hill: ex parte Matthews: Cooke's B. L.

But notwithſtanding the general rule ſeems to be thus eſtabliſhed, the caſe will be different, if the aſſignees are obliged to come into equity to compel the performance of a truſt; for then as they require equity, they ſhall be obliged to do equity, and ſecure the ſettlement to the wife. 1 Atk. 114: 2 Vern. 662.

4. Contingent debts are ſaid not to be included in Stat. 7 Geo. 1. c. 31. becauſe it being uncertain whether they will ever become due or not, it is impoſſible to make ſuch abatement of 5 l. per cent. as that act directs, and therefore they cannot be within it. And this doctrine has been conſtantly followed and admitted as appears by the caſes allowed, in the diviſion (3) immediately preceding; the principle therefore, that contingent creditors cannot be admitted to prove their debts, where the act of bankruptcy is prior to the happening of the contingency, is clear and indiſputable. 1 Atk. 118. But many queſtions have ariſen as to what debts ſhall be ſaid to be contingent within the meaning of the rule.

One having only a cauſe of action cannot come in and prove it as a debt; becauſe the damages that may be given are conſidered merely as contingent; even in caſe of a bond of indemnity, where the condition is broken. 3 Wilſ. 270: 2 Stra. 1169. And this though the ſurety is called upon and liable to pay the debt, if it is not actually paid. 1 Term Rep. 599.

So if a leſſee plows up meadow ground, for which he is bound to pay the leſſor a certain ſum of money as a penalty, that penalty cannot be proved as a debt under the commiſſion: nor if a man be bound in an obligation, in a certain ſum to perform covenants, and the obligor before he becomes a bankrupt, breaks thoſe covenants, the obligee cannot prove this as a debt. If a bond by a principal and ſurety has not been forfeited, before the ſurety became bankrupt, the debt cannot be proved under his commiſſion, but he may be ſued upon it notwithſtanding his certificate. Doug. 155: 3 Wilſ. 270. The bankruptcy of the leſſee is no bar to an action on covenant (made before his bankruptcy) brought againſt him for rent due after the bankruptcy. 4 Term Rep. 94. But when judgment is obtained in any action, it then becomes ſuch a debt as may be proved, and the judgment, when ſigned, relates to the verdict. Ib. 2 Black. 1317.

Where a man undertakes to pay a ſum of money for another, his undertaking alone will not create a debt capable of being proved under a commiſſion; and if an act of bankruptcy intervenes between the undertaking, and the actual payment, it can never be proved, and the creditor can only reſort to the bankrupt perſonally. But if the party engaging to pay the debt of another, is taken in execution for that debt, his impriſonment is conſidered as a payment and ſatisfaction of the debt ſufficient to give him a right of proving under the commiſſion. Cowp. 525: 3 Wilſ. 13.

If the party engaging to ſecure the debt of another himſelf becomes bankrupt before that debt is payable by the principal, the creditor cannot prove under his commiſſion. Cowp. 460.

Where a man becomes bail for another, it is conſidered as a contingent debt. And if the bail commit an act of bankruptcy before the judgment, it cannot be proved under the commiſſion. 2 Stra. 1043: 3 Wilſ. 262.

5. The general rule as to common annuities is, that where one is entitled to an annuity from another, which is not a rent-charge on land, or on a ſpecifick part of the grantor's eſtate, but perſonal, to be paid by him, who afterwards becomes bankrupt, it is only a general demand on him and his eſtate; and there is nothing a debt on his eſtate but the arrears of the annuity at the time of the bankruptcy, unleſs the penalty of the annuity-bond has become forfeited; for otherwiſe the payments accruing afterwards became a debt after the bankruptcy, and cannot be proved. But where there has been a forfeiture prior to the bankruptcy, in order to prevent the injuſtice of admitting the creditor only to prove the arrears, and the great inconvenience that would enſue if the annuity ſhould be received from time to time, as an accruing debt on the eſtate, by which means the diviſion of the eſtate would be perpetual, and there could be no final dividend during the annuitant's life, the court of Chancery puts it in another ſhape of ſetting a value on the annuity, becauſe it was only a general perſonal demand. And in ſetting this value, conſideration muſt be had of the time the annuitant has enjoyed it. 2 Vez. 490: 1 Atk. 251: 2 Black. 1107.

In caſe of an apprentice where the maſter becomes bankrupt, commiſſioners recommend it to the creditors to allow him a groſs ſum out of the eſtate for the purpoſe of binding him to another maſter; as it would be hard to make him come in as a creditor under the commiſſion; but this though it is equitable and juſt, muſt be conſidered as an indulgence, and not a right; for the court can only order him to be admitted as a creditor. 1 Atk. 149, 261.

A bond though it be not aſſignable at law, may be proved under the commiſſion by the aſſignee; but the aſſignor muſt join in the depoſition that he hath not received the debt or any part thereof, or any ſecurity or ſatisfaction for the ſame. Cooke's B. L.

In bills of exchange and promiſſory notes, there is a double contract; the firſt between the principal debtor and creditor; and alſo an implied contract, that the principal debtor will indemnify the ſurety, ſo that if the creditor, the indorſee, comes upon the ſurety the indorſor, the indorſor or his aſſignees may come in againſt the original or principal debtor. This is the caſe between principal and ſurety, and is likewiſe the caſe where an indorſor is barely a ſurety, and no conſideration is paid by the original drawer. 1 Atk. 123.

The holder of a bill of exchange is entitled to prove his debt under the commiſſion againſt the drawer, acceptor and indorſor, and to receive a dividend from each, upon his whole debt, provided he does not in the whole receive more than 20*s.* in the pound. 1 Atk. 107. But in this caſe if the creditor has actually received part of his debt under a commiſſion, he can only prove the remainder under another. See 2 P. Wms. 89, 407: 1 Atk. 109, 129: 2 Vez. 114, 5.

Creditors are not allowed to prove intereſt on notes or bills, unleſs it is expreſſed in the body of them. But the creditor may prove the full ſum for which the notes were given, notwithſtanding he received 5*l. per cent.* diſcount. Cooke's B. L.: 1 Atk. 151.

A child living with the father and earning money for itſelf, may, if the father receives that money, be admitted a creditor under the commiſſion againſt him. 2 Vez. 675.

A landlord having a legal right to diſtrain goods while they remain on the premiſſes, the iſſuing a commiſſion of bankrupt againſt the tenant, and the meſſenger's poſſeſſion of the tenant's goods, will not hinder him from diſtraining for rent; for it is not ſuch a cuſtodia legis as an execution; and even there the law allows the landlord a year's rent. And the aſſignment of the commiſſioners of the bankrupt's eſtate and effects is only changing the property of the goods, and while upon the premiſſes they remain liable to be diſtrained. 1 Atk. 102, 3, 4.

And as a creditor after proving his debt may elect to abide by ſuch proof, or relinquiſh it and proceed at law, ſo a landlord who is conſidered in a highter degree than a common creditor, may make his election to waive his proof, in his diſtreſs for rent. Cooke's B. L.—But particular circumſtances may deprive the landlord of this right; as if he neglects to diſtrain, and ſuffers the goods to be ſold by the aſſignees. 1 Atk. 104: See 1 Bro. C. R. 427. And a landlord may diſtrain before the end of the term by cuſtom, as in Norfolk. 2 Term Rep. 600. A proviſoe in a leaſe, that it ſhall be void in caſe of the bankruptcy of the leſſee is valid. 2 Term Rep. 133.

If an executor becomes bankrupt, as he acts in auter droit, his bankruptcy does not take away the right of executorſhip; and the legatees or creditors of the teſtator cannot prove under the commiſſion, unleſs the bankrupt has committed a devaſtavit.—But though a bankrupt executor may ſtrictly be the proper hand to receive the aſſets, yet if his aſſignees have received any of the property, the Chancellor may appoint a receiver, with whom the aſſignees ſhall account: 1 Atk. 101: or direct the bankrupt himſelf to be admitted a creditor for what he may be intitled to as executor, and order the dividend to be paid into the Bank. See Cooke's B. L. c. 6. § 3. The effects poſſeſſed by a bankrupt as executor, are not liable to the aſſignment of the commiſſioners. 3 Burr. 1369.

Commiſſioners after a man becomes a bankrupt compute intereſt upon debts no lower than the date of the commiſſion.—And a ſpecialty creditor cannot have intereſt beyond the penalty contained in his ſecurity; but a creditor by note carrying intereſt may receive the full amount. 1 Atk. 79, 80.

If a bankrupt is a factor, and goods are conſigned to him or his order, which come to his poſſeſſion; though he has the power of immediately ſelling them, and taking the money, in which caſe the conſignor can only come as a general creditor upon his eſtate, yet notwithſtanding the legal property the factor had in, and power over them, if they remain in ſpecie in his hands, they ſhall be delivered to the principal, who has a lien upon upon them as his own property; and the bankrupt only as agent and truſtee for him—And even where the factor had ſold the goods, and taken notes for them, it has been determined that the original owner had a ſpecifick lien upon, and was intitled to the notes. 2 Vez. 586: 1 Atk. 232.

6. If the aſſignees miſbehave in the truſt repoſed in them, they may be removed by petition to the Chancellor. So if an aſſignee himſelf becomes bankrupt, that will be a ſufficient ground for his removal. 3 Atk. 97: 7 Vin. Abr. 77.—Or if the commiſſioners act improperly at the choice of aſſignees. When an aſſignee is removed he muſt join with the old aſſignee, and the commiſſioners in making an aſſignment to the new aſſignee. The common practice, where only one aſſignee is removed, is, to make him join with his companion in aſſigning to the new aſſignee, and to the one retained, whereby a man is made to convey to himſelf, which appears abſurd. The moſt feaſible plan ſeems for the old aſſignees to convey to a third perſon, in truſt, that he ſhould immediately re-convey to the old and new appointed aſſignee. See Cooke's B. L.

Aſſignees are in the nature of truſtees, and where they employ an agent to receive or pay money, and he abuſes this confidence, an aſſignee cannot be diſtinguiſhed from any other truſtee, who if his agent deceive him, muſt anſwer over to the ceſtui que truſts. For the chief conſideration of the creditors in the choice of aſſignees is certainly the ability of the perſons, that they may be reſponſible for the ſums they receive from the bankrupt's eſtate. 1 Atk. 88, 90.

But the negligence of one aſſignee ſhall not hurt another joint aſſignee, where he is not at all privy to any private and perſonal agreement entered into by his brother aſſignee. Id. ib.

If an aſſignee becomes a bankrupt, and has applied any of the money received by him in that capacity, to his own uſe, the commiſſioners are to be conſidered as ſpecialty creditors; becauſe the aſſignees executed a counterpart of the aſſignment to them, and the agreement being under hand and ſeal, makes it in the nature of a ſpecialty debt, and therefore they may come upon his real eſtate. 1 Atk. 89.

7. If there is a joint commiſſion againſt two partners, they muſt be each found bankrupts; and though one of them ſhould die, the commiſſion may ſtill go on; but if one of the joint-traders be dead, at the time of the taking out the commiſſion, it abates, and is abſolutely void. Cooke's B. L.

It was formerly the practice, where there were ſeveral partners, to take out ſeparate commiſſions againſt each, as well as a joint-commiſſion; but this has been ſince diſcountenanced, it being the common courſe of the court upon petition, to make an order for the ſeparate creditors to come in and prove their debts under the joint commiſſion; and that the aſſignees ſhould keep diſtinct accounts of the ſeveral eſtates; and this may be done, becauſe the aſſignment in the caſe of a joint commiſſion is of the whole eſtate. But on the other hand, where ſeparate commiſſions are taken out againſt joint-traders, it ſeems to have been the opinion that joint-creditors could not prove their debts under the ſeparate commiſſion, except for the purpoſe of aſſenting to, or diſſenting from, the certificate; but that they muſt proceed to take out a joint-commiſſion. Cooke's B. L.: 1 Atk. 138, 98. But it ſeems now to be conſidered that a joint-commiſſion cannot legally be ſupported while there is a ſeparate one ſubſiſting; becauſe a trader having been declared a bankrupt, the whole of his property is aſſigned under the firſt commiſſion, and till he obtains his certificate he is incapable of trading or contracting for his own benefit. However it is certain that in practice joint-commiſſions are taken out after the parties have been declared bankrupts under ſeparate commiſſions, by which means great expence is ſaved, and the joint effects diſpoſed to better advantage; and therefore in a fair caſe and where it can be made appear that the bankrupt's eſtate will be benefited by proſecuting a joint commiſſion, the Lord Chancellor, to make it valid, will ſuperſede the prior ſeparate one. Coxp. 824: 1 Atk. 252: Cooke's B. L. c. 1. § 2.

Joint creditors are entitled to a diſtribution of the joint or partnerſhip eſtate, without the ſeparate creditors being permitted to participate with them; but notwithſtanding ſeparate creditors are not entitled to ſhare the dividend of the joint-property, until the joint-creditors have received 20*s.* in the pound, yet they are upon petition, let in to prove their reſpective ſeparate debts under the joint-commiſſion, paying contribution to the charge of it; and as the joint or partnerſhip eſtate is in the firſt place to be applied to pay the joint or partnerſhip debts, ſo in like manner the ſeparate eſtate ſhall be in the firſt place applied to pay all the ſeparate debts. This is ſettled as a rule of convenience; and it is reſolved, that if there be a ſurplus of the joint-eſtate beſides what will pay the joint-creditors, the ſame ſhall be allotted in due proportions to the ſeparate eſtate of each partner, and applied to pay the ſeparate creditors. And on the other hand if there be a ſurplus of the ſeparate eſtate, beyond what will ſatisfy the ſeparate creditors, it ſhall go to ſupply any deficiency that may remain as to the joint-creditors. 1 Atk. 68: 2 Vern. 706: Dav. 373: 2 P. Wms. 501.

Where perſons in trade [e. g. A. B. and C.] have been connected together in various partnerſhips, and a joint-commiſſion taken out againſt them all, an order has been made for keeping diſtinct accounts of the different partners, as well as of the ſeparate eſtates of each partner. But when there have been various partnerſhips [e. g. A. & B. and A. & C.] and a joint-commiſſion is taken out againſt one firm, in which ſome of the parties were not engaged, there can be only the common order for keeping the diſtinct accounts of the joint and ſeparate eſtate. Cooke's B. L. c. 6. § 15.

On a joint-debt, if ſeparate commiſſions are taken out againſt the joint-debtors, the creditor may prove his whole debt, under each commiſſion, and receive a dividend ſo as he does not obtain more than 20*s.* in the whole. Cooke's B. L.

Where there is a joint and ſeveral creditor, he muſt according to the rule of the court now firmly eſtabliſhed, make his election whether he will come in upon the joint or the ſeparate eſtate; that is, which he will come in upon in preference; for which-ever he may elect, he will be entitled to come in upon the ſurplus of the other, if there ſhould be any. And in order to make his election, he muſt have a reaſonable time to enquire into the ſtate of the different funds, but he is not intitled to defer ſuch election until a dividend be declared. Cooke's B. L. c. 6. § 15.

An act of bankruptcy by one partner, is to many purpoſes a diſſolution of the partnerſhip, by virtue of the relation in the ſtatutes, which avoids all the acts of a bankrupt, from the day of the bankruptcy; and from the neceſſity of the thing, all his property being veſted in the aſſignees who cannot carry on a trade. But after a diſſolution of partnerſhip by agreement, by an execution, or by a bankruptcy, the partner out of poſſeſſion of the partnerſhip effects, has the ſame lien, on any new goods brought in which he had upon the old. One partner has not, after a diſſolution, a right to change the poſſeſſion, or to make an actual diviſion of the ſpecifick effects; for one partner may be a creditor of the partnerſhip to ten times the value of all the effects. The other partner in that caſe can only have a right to an account of the partnerſhip, and to the balance due to him, if any, on that account; and no perſon deriving under the partner can be in a better condition than himſelf; his executor ſtands in the very ſame light. So the aſſignees under a commiſſion of bankruptcy againſt one partner muſt be in the ſame ſtate. They can only be tenants in common of an undivided moiety, ſubject to all the rights of the other partner. 4 Burr. 2176: Cowp. 448, 471: 12 Mod. 446.

If a partner is a creditor on the partnerſhip account, he can have no ſatisfaction but out of the ſurplus, which ſhall remain after the joint-creditors are paid; for the joint-creditors rely upon the oſtenſible ſtate of the fund, and give credit to it accordingly. But Lord Hardwicke ſaid, that where there are joint and ſeparate creditors, if one partner lends a ſum of money to the partnerſhip, the creditors of his ſeparate eſtate have a right to this in the firſt place. 1 Atk. 287; Vez. jun. 167.

But this has ſince been determined contrary, as where there was a joint commiſſion againſt two partners, and a ſeparate one againſt one of them. The petitioners, aſſignees under the ſeparate commiſſion, petitioned to be admitted creditors under the joint-commiſſion, for a ſum of money brought by their bankrupt into the partnerſhip, beyond his ſhare, and as being therefore a creditor on the partnerſhip for that ſum; but refuſed, on the principle that he cannot be a creditor on the partnerſhip in competition with the joint creditors. Cooke's B. L. c. 13.

So, where one partner has taken more than his ſhare out of the joint-fund, the joint-creditors, as the rule ſeems to be now ſettled, cannot be admitted to prove againſt the ſeparate eſtate of the partner who drew out the money, until his ſeparate creditors are ſatisfied, unleſs it can be ſhewn that the partner acted fraudulently, with a view to benefit his ſeparate creditors, at the expence of the joint-creditors. Cooke's B. L. c. 13: See tit. Partners.

One partner may be a creditor of another, and may, if he continues ſolvent, prove his debt under a ſeparate commiſſion. 1 Atk. 225: 2 C. R. 226: Cooke's B. L. c. 13.

If there be two partners, and one of them becomes bankrupt, and, on a ſeparate commiſſion being ſued out againſt him, his certificate is allowed; this does not only diſcharge the bankrupt of what he owed ſeparately, but alſo of what he owed jointly, and on the partnerſhip account; becauſe by the act of parliament, the bankrupt, upon making a full diſcovery, and obtaining his certificate, is to be diſcharged of all debts. 3 P. Wms. 24.

Where two partners are bankrupts, and a joint commiſſion is taken out againſt them, if they obtain an allowance of their certificate, this will bar as well their ſeparate as their joint-creditors. 3 P. Wms. 24.

Before the ſtatute 10 Ann. cap. 15, if there were two partners, and only one party became bankrupt, and a ſeparate commiſſion was taken out againſt him; there was no doubt but the diſcharge of that bankrupt, diſcharged him from all debts which he owed in his joint as well as private capacity; but the great queſtion was, whether, by ſuch diſcharge of the bankrupt, the partner of the bankrupt ſhould likewiſe be diſcharged from ſuch debts as he was diſcharged of; and therefore that ſtatute has enacted, that the partner ſhall not be diſcharged.

V. Practical Notes, and Forms.

The firſt ſtep to be taken towards procuring a Commiſſion of Bankruptcy, is for the creditor to make an affidavit of his debt before a Maſter in Chancery; or if he reſides altogether in the country, before a Maſter extraordinary there, to be filed in the Secretary of Bankrupts' Office in London, and exhibited to the commiſſioners at their firſt meeting.—The following is the form of an affidavit:

A. B. of, &c. maketh oath that John Wilſon of Chelmſford, in the county of Eſſex, ſhop-keeper, is juſtly and truly indebted unto him, this deponent, and to Thomas Abel his partner, in the ſum of 100 l. and upwards; for goods ſold and delivered by this deponent, and his ſaid partner, to and for the uſe of the ſaid John Wilſon; and this deponent further ſaith, that the ſaid John Wilſon is become a bankrupt, within the true intent and meaning of ſame or one of the ſtatutes made, and now in force concerning bankrupts, as this deponent hath been informed and believes.

Sworn at the Public Office, the 1*ſt day of* September 1784, before me Peter Holford.

When the affidavit is ſworn, it is carried to the Secretary of Bankrupts' Office, where the party ſuing for the commiſſion enters into the bond. See III. 1.

The clerk of the bankrupts fills up a blank petition in the name of the perſon that makes the affidavit; and annexes the affidavit and bond to the petition, when he prefers the ſame to the Lord Chancellor.

This petition is anſwered in a few days, and the petitioning creditor has a commiſſion without any further trouble.

A Commission of Bankrupt.

GEORGE the Third, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, king, defender of the Faith, &c. to our truſty and well-beloved William Bumpſtead, Henry Hunter, Henry Cowper, Henry Ruſſel, eſquires, and Richard Hargrave, *gentleman, greeting. J. Yorke.

Having got the commiſſion, the petitioning creditor muſt employ one of the meſſengers to ſummon a meeting of the major part of the commiſſioners to open the ſame; when the petitioning creditor, muſt come prepared, to prove his debt, and the party a bankrupt, within the ſtatutes.

Oath to be adminiſtered by the Commiſſioners to Witneſſes, upon their Examination.

YOU are here produced, as witneſſes, by virtue of a commiſſion out of the high court of Chancery, to us, and others directed, to be by us examined, concerning the bankruptcy of John Wilſon, of, &c. Now to all ſuch queſtions and interrogatories as ſhall be aſked you, by virtue of this commiſſion of bankrupt, concerning the ſaid John Wilſon, his trade or profeſſion, his abſconding, and other acts which he hath done or ſuffered, by which he may be diſcovered to be a bankrupt, and alſo concerning his lands and tenements, goods and chattels, debts and duties, frauds and concealments, and other matters and things, in obedience to the ſaid commiſſion, and purſuant to the ſeveral ſtatutes made concerning bankrupts, you, and every of you ſhall, true and direct anſwer make, and ſwear the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

So help you God.

All the depoſitions muſt be ſigned by the witneſſes. If the party is a Quaker, then inſtead of ſwear, ſay, "You ſhall ſolemnly, ſincerely, and truly, declare, and affirm."

Immediately upon the commiſſioners' declaring the party a bankrupt, they iſſue their warrant for ſeizure of his effects and the meſſenger by virtue thereof ſeizes the effects, and continues to keep poſſeſſion 'till the commiſſioners have executed the aſſignment.

The application to enlarge the time for the bankrupt's ſurrender, muſt be by petition to the great ſeal, ſix days at leaſt before the laſt ſitting appointed in the Gazette; this petition may be either in the name of the bankrupt, or of his aſſignees.

It is uſual for the commiſſioners to recommend, and the creditors to agree, to return the bankrupts their rings, monies, &c. particularly the jewels, &c. of their wives.

If the bankrupt happens to be a foreigner, and does not underſtand Engliſh, his Engliſh examination muſt be interpreted, and read to him in the language he underſtands, by a perſon verſed in both languages, who muſt be firſt ſworn to interpret truly; of which oath and interpretation there muſt be a memorandum made and annexed to the bankrupt's examination.

If the bankrupt does not ſurrender himſelf to the commiſſioners by 12 o'clock at night of the laſt day given, the meſſenger warns him ſo to do, by a proclamation made by him in the middle of Guildhall; the commiſſioners continuing ſitting till that time.

Form of a Bankrupt's Certificate.

To the Right Honourable the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain.

WE whoſe names and ſeals are hereunto ſubſcribed and ſet, being the major part of the commiſſioners, named and authorized in and by a commiſſion of bankruptcy, awarded and iſſued againſt John Thomas, of, &c. (as deſcribed in the commiſſion) bearing date at Weſtminſter, the 8th day of, &c. directed to William Bumpſtead, &c. do humbly certify to your Lordſhip, that the major part of the commiſſioners by the ſaid commiſſion authoriſed, having begun to put the ſaid commiſſion into execution, did find that the ſaid John Thomas became a bankrupt, ſince the 10th day of May, 1784, and before the date, and ſuing forth of the ſaid commiſſion, within the true intent and meaning of the ſtatutes made, and now in force concerning bankrupts, or ſome of them; and did thereupon declare and adjudge him a bankrupt accordingly. And we further humbly certify to your Lordſhip, that the ſaid John Thomas being ſo declared a bankrupt, the major part of the commiſſioners by the ſaid commiſſion authoriſed, purſuant to the directions of the act of parliament made in the 5th year of the reign of his late majeſty king Geoge II. intitled 'An act to prevent the committing of frauds by bankrupts, did cauſe due notice to be given and publiſhed in the London Gazette of ſuch commiſſion being iſſued, and of the times and places of three ſeveral meetings of the ſaid commiſſioners, within 42 days next after ſuch notice (the laſt of which meetings, was appointed to be on the forty-ſecond day); at which time the ſaid John Thomas was required to ſurrender himſelf to the ſaid commiſſioners named in the ſaid commiſſion, or the major part of them, and to make a full diſcloſure and diſcovery of his eſtate and effects; and the creditors of the ſaid John Thomas, were deſired to come prepared, to prove their debts, and to aſſent to or diſſent from the making this certificate. And we further humbly certify to your Lordſhip, that ſuch three ſeveral meetings of the major part of the commiſſioners by the ſaid commiſſion authoriſed, were had purſuant to ſuch notice ſo given and publiſhed; and that at one of thoſe meetings the ſaid John Thomas did ſurrender himſelf to the major part of the commiſſioners, by the ſaid commiſſion authoriſed, and did ſign ſign and ſubſcribe ſuch ſurrender, and did ſubmit to be examined from time to time upon oath, by and before the major part of the commiſſioners, by the ſaid commiſſion authoriſed: and in all things to conform to the ſeveral ſtatutes made and now in force concerning bankrupts; and particularly to the ſaid act made in the 5th year of his late majeſty's reign. And we further humbly certify to your Lordſhip, that at the laſt of the ſaid three meetings, the ſaid John Thomas finiſhed his examination, before the major part of the ſaid commiſſioners, by the ſaid commiſſion authoriſed, according to the directions of the ſaid laſt mentioned act, and upon ſuch his examination, made a full diſcloſure and diſcovery of his eſtate and effects; and in all things conformed himſelf to the ſeveral ſtatutes made and now in force concerning bankrupts, and particularly according to the directions of the ſaid ſtatute made in the 5th year of his late majeſty's reign; and there doth not appear to us any reaſon to doubt of the truth of ſuch diſcovery, or that the ſame is not a full diſcovery of all the eſtate and effects of the ſaid John Thomas. And we further humbly certify to your Lordſhip, that the creditors whoſe names or marks are ſubſcribed to this certificate, are full 4 parts in 5 in number and value of the creditors of the above named John Thomas, who are creditors for not leſs than 20l. reſpectively, and who have duly proved their debts under the ſaid commiſſion; and that it doth appear to us by due proof by affidavit in writing, that ſuch ſeveral ſubſcribing creditors, or ſome perſon by them reſpectively duly authoriſed thereunto, did, before our ſigning hereof, ſign this certificate, and teſtify their conſent to our ſigning the ſame, and to the ſaid John Thomas having ſuch allowance and benefit, as by the ſaid laſt mentioned act are allowed to bankrupts, and to the ſaid John Thomas being diſcharged from his debts, in purſuance of the ſame act. In witneſs whereof we have hereunto ſet our hands and ſeals, this —— day of —— in the —— year of the reign of &c. and in the year of our Lord 1784.

We the creditors of the above-named John Thomas, whoſe names, or marks are hereunder ſubſcribed, do hereby teſtify and declare our conſent, that the major part of the commiſſioners, by the above-mentioned commiſſion authoriſed, may ſign and ſeal the certificate above written; and that the ſaid John Thomas may have ſuch allowance and benefit as are given to bankrupts by the act of parliament made in the 5th year of the reign of his late majeſty king George II, intituled, "An act to prevent the committing of frauds by bankrupts;" and be diſcharged from his debts in purſuance of the ſame act.

C. D.

The meſſengers have printed forms of certificates, therefore the beſt way is to get a blank from them.

If any perſon ſign the bankrupt's certificate by virtue of a letter of attorney, ſuch letter of attorney muſt be left at the bankrupts' office.

The certificate, together with the affidavit of ſeeing the creditors ſign it, and alſo letters of attorney, (if any ſuch there be) muſt be lodged with the ſecretary of bankrupts; who will thereupon give the meſſenger an authority to the printer of the Gazette, to inſert an advertiſement therein ſignifying that the acting commiſſioners have certified to the great ſeal, that the bankrupt hath conformed, and that the certificate will be allowed and confirmed, unleſs cauſe ſhewn to the contrary, within twenty-one days from the date of the ſaid advertiſement.

If no cauſe is ſhewn within the 21 days, againſt the allowance of the certificate, the Lord Chancellor will allow the ſame, by the following ſubſcription on the ſaid certificate:

"—— day of —— 1784.

WHEREAS the uſual notice hath been given in the London Gazette, of —— the —— day of ——, laſt, and none of the creditors of the above-named John Thomas have ſhewn any cauſe to the contrary: I do allow and confirm this certificate.

THURLOW, C."

CERTIFICATE for a Judge or Juſtice of Peace, to grant his Warrant for apprehending and committing a Bankrupt.

In the Matter of John Thomas, a Bankrupt.

WE whoſe names are hereunto ſubſcribed, and ſeals ſet, do hereby certify, that a commiſſion of bankrupt, under the great ſeal of Great Britain, grounded upon the ſeveral ſtatutes made and now in force concerning bankrupts, bearing date at Weſtminſter, the —— day of June, inſtant, hath been awarded and iſſued againſt John Thomas, of, &c. and directed to William Bumpſtead, &c. thereby giving full power and authority to 4 or 3 of them to execute the ſame. And we do further certify, that we, being the major part of the commiſſioners, by the ſaid commiſſion authoriſed, have proceeded in the execution of the ſaid commiſſion, and have found upon the due examination of witneſſes, and other good proof upon oath before us had and taken, that the ſaid John Thomas, before the date, and ſuing forth of the ſaid commiſſion, became bankrupt to all intents and purpoſes within the compaſs, true intent, and meaning of the ſeveral ſtatutes made and now in force concerning bankrupts, or within ſome or one of them, before the date and ſuing forth of the ſaid commiſſion. Given under our hands and ſeals at Searl's Coffee-houſe, Lincoln's Inn, in the county of Middleſex, this —— day of June, in the year of our Lord 17—.

Witneſs John Knight.

BARGAIN AND SALE, Is an inſtrument whereby the property of lands and tenements is for valuable conſideration granted and transferred from one perſon to another: it is called a real contract upon a valuable conſideration, for paſſing of lands, tenements and hereditaments, by deed indented and inrolled. 2 Inſt. 672.

Since the introduction of uſes and truſts, and the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10, for transferring the poſſeſſion to the uſe, the neceſſity of livery of ſeiſin for paſſing a freehold in corporeal hereditaments, has been almoſt wholly ſuperſeded; and in conſequence of it, the conveyance by feoffment is now very little in uſe. Before the ſtatute of Uſes, equitable eſtates of freehold might be created through the medium of truſts, without livery; and by the operation of the ſtatute, legal eſtates of freehold may now be created in the ſame way. They who framed the ſtatute of Uſes, evidently foreſaw, that it would render livery unneceſſary to the paſſing of a freehold; and that a freehold of ſuch things as do not lie in grant would become transferable by parol only, without any ſolemnity whatever. To prevent the inconveniences which might ariſe from a mode of conveyance ſo uncertain in the proof, and ſo liable to miſconſtruction and abuſe, it was enacted in the ſame ſeſſion of parliament, that an eſtate of freehold ſhould not paſs by bargain and ſale only, unleſs it was by indenture inrolled in one of the courts at Weſtminſter, or in the county where the lands lie; ſuch inrollment to be made within 6 months after the date of the indenture. Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 16: See 2 Inſt. 675: Dy. 229: Poph. 48: Dalt. 63. The objects of this proviſion evidently were, firſt, to enforce the contracting parties to aſcertain the terms of the conveyance by reducing it into writing; ſecondly, to make the proof of it eaſy, by requiring their ſeals to it, and conſequently the preſence of a witneſs; and laſtly, to prevent the frauds of ſecret conveyances, by ſubſtituting the more effectual notoriety of enrollment, for the more antient one of livery. But the latter part of this proviſion, which if it had not been evaded, would have introduced almoſt an univerſal regiſter of conveyances of the freehold, in caſe of corporeal hereditaments, was ſoon defeated by the invention of the conveyance by leaſe and releaſe, which ſprung from the omiſſion to extend the ſtatute to bargains and ſales for terms of years: (See 8 Co. 93: 2 Ro. Ab. 204: 2 Inſt. 671:) and the other parts of the ſtatute were neceſſarily ineffectual in our courts of equity, becauſe theſe were ſtill left at liberty to compel the execution of truſts of the freehold, though created without deed or writing. The inconveniences from this inſufficiency ſufficiency of the ſtatute of Inrollmements are now in ſome meaſure prevented by Stat. 29 Ch. 2. c. 3, which provides againſt conveying any lands or hereditaments, for more than three years, or declaring truſts of them, otherwiſe than by writing. 1 Inſt. 48 a. n. 3.

This may ſerve at preſent to illuſtrate the doctrine of Bargain and Sale; but to obtain a clear and diſtinct idea of this part of the Law, ſee further titles Conveyance, Deed, Feoffment, Leaſe and Releaſe, Uſe, &c. and 1 Inſt. by Hargrave and Butter.

I. All things, for the moſt part, that are grantable by deed in any other way, are grantable by bargain and ſale; and lands, rents, advowſons, tithes, &c. may be granted by it, in fee-ſimple, fee-tail, for life, &c. 1 Rep. 176: 11 Rep. 25.

Any freehold or inheritance in poſſeſſion, reverſion or remainder upon an eſtate for years, or life, or in tail, may be bargained and ſold, but the deed ſhall be inrolled. 2 Co. 54: Dyer 309: 2 Inſt. 671.

But if tenant for life bargains and ſells his land by deed inrolled, it will be a forfeiture of his eſtate. 4 Leon. 251.

But a man ſeiſed of a freehold may bargain and ſell for years, and this ſhall be executed by the ſtatute of Uſes. 27 H. 8. c. 10.

A man poſſeſſed of a term cannot bargain and ſell it ſo as to be executed by the ſtatute. 2 Co. 35, 36: Poph. 76.

A bargain and ſale of the profits of land, is a bargain and ſale of the land itſelf; for the profits and the land are the ſame thing in ſubſtance. Dyer 71.

A rent in eſſe may be bargained and ſold, becauſe this is a freehold within the ſtatute; and before the ſtatute a rent newly created might be bargained and ſold, becauſe when money, as an equivalent, was given, and ceremonies or words of law were wanting, the Chancery ſupplied them; but it ſeems, that ſince the ſtatute, a rent newly created cannot be bargained and ſold, becauſe there ought to be a freehold in ſome other perſon, to be executed in ceſtui que uſe; but here can be no ſeiſin of his rent in the bargainor, becauſe no man can be ſeiſed of a rent in his own land, and conſequently there can be no eſtate to be executed in the bargainee, Kelw. 85: 1 Co. 126: 1 And. 327: 1 Jones 179: Sed qu. de hoc.

If A. by indenture inrolled bargains and ſells lands to B. and his heirs, with a way over other lands of A. this is void as to the way; for nothing but an uſe paſſes by the deed, and there can be no uſe of a thing not in eſſe, as a way, common, &c. before they are created. Cro. Jac. 189.

II. 1. The King, and all other perſons that cannot be ſeiſed to a uſe, cannot bargain and ſell, for at common law, when a man had ſold his land for money without giving livery, the uſe only paſſed in equity, and this is now executed and becomes a bargain and ſale by the ſtatute: but antecedent to any ſuch execution there muſt be a uſe well raiſed, which cannot be without a perſon capable of being ſeiſed to a uſe, which the king is not, there being no means to compel him to perform the uſe or truſt; for the Chancery has only a delegated power from the king over the conſciences of his ſubjects; and the king is the univerſal judge of property, and ought to be perfectly indifferent, and not to take upon him the particular defence of any man's eſtate as a truſtee. Bro. Feoffment to Uſes 33: Hard. 468: Poph. 72.

If tenant in tail bargains and ſells his land in fee, this paſſes an eſtate determinable upon the life of the tenant in tail; for at common law the uſe could not be granted of any greater eſtate than the party had in him; now tenant in tail had an inheritance in him, but he could diſpoſe of it only during his own life; and therefore when he ſells the uſe in fee, ceſtui que uſe has a kind of an inheritance, yet determined within the compaſs of a life; and the ſtatute executes it in the ſame manner as he has the uſe, and conſequently he will have ſome properties of a tenant in fee, and ſome of a tenant for life only; but if tenant for life bargains and ſells in fee, this paſſes only an eſtate for life, for he could not paſs the uſe of an eſtate for life to the bargainee, and the ſtatute executes the poſſeſſion as the party has the uſe. 10 Co. 96, 98: 1 Saund. 260, 261: 1 Co. 14, 15: Co. Lit. 151.

A man may bargain and ſell to a corporation, for they may take a uſe, though the money be given by the governors in their natural capacity. 10 Co. 24, 34: 2 Rol. Abr. 788.

A man may bargain and ſell to his ſon; but then the conſideration of money ought to be expreſſed, and it ought to have all the other circumſtances of bargain and ſale; but this ſhall operate as a covenant to ſtand ſeiſed, if there be none but the conſideration of natural love and affection expreſſed. 7 Co. 40: 2 Co. 24: Cro. Eliz. 394: 1 Vent. 137: 1 Lev. 56. But if a ſon and heir bargains and ſells the inheritance of his father, this is void, becauſe he hath no right to transfer; the ſame law of a releaſe. Keilw. 84: Co. Lit. 265.

If an infant bargains and ſells his land by deed indented and inrolled, yet he may plead non-age; for notwithſtanding the ſtatute the bargainee claims by the deed as at common law, which was, and therefore is ſtill defeazible by non-age. 2 Inſt. 673.

If a huſband ſeiſed of lands, in right of his wife, or tenant in tail bargains and ſells the trees growing on the lands, and dies before ſeverance, the bargainee cannot afterwards cut them down and take them away. Mo. 41. See tit. Baron and Feme. IV.

If there be two jointenants, and one of them makes a bargain and ſale of his own eſtate in fee, and then the other dies, the other moiety ſhall ſurvive to the bargainor: for ſince the freehold is in the bargainor the inheritance continues; but if ſuch jointenant had bargained and ſold totum ſtatum ſuum in fee, though he died before inrollment; yet, if the deed were afterwards inrolled, the moiety would not ſurvive, but would paſs to the bargainee. Cro. Jac. 53: Co. Lit. 186: 1 Bulſt. 3.

2. The very words bargain and ſell are not of abſolute neceſſity in this deed, for other words equivalent will ſuffice; as if a man ſeiſed of lands in fee ſell the ſame to another, by the words alien or grant, the deed being made in conſideration of money, and indented and inrolled, will be an effectual bargain and ſale. In ſhort, whatever whatever words upon valuable conſideration would have raiſed an uſe of any lands, &c. at common law, the ſame would amount to a bargain and ſale within this act; as if a man by deed, &c. for a valuable conſideration covenants to ſtand ſeiſed to the uſe of another, &c. 2 Inſt. 672: Cro. Jac. 210: Mo. 34: Cro. Eliz. 166.

III. 1. There muſt be a good conſideration given, or at leaſt ſaid to be given, for lands, in theſe deeds; and for a competent ſum of money, is a good conſideration; but not the general words for divers conſiderations, &c. Mod. Ca. 777. Where money is mentioned to be paid in a bargain and ſale, and in truth no money is paid, ſome of our books tell us this may be a good bargain and ſale; becauſe no averment will lie againſt that which is expreſsly affirmed by the deed, except it comes to be queſtioned whether fraudulent or no, upon the ſtatute againſt fraudulent deeds. Dyer 90. If no conſideration of money is expreſſed in a deed of bargain and ſale, it may be ſupplied by an averment, that it was made for money: and after a verdict on a trial, it ſhall be intended that evidence was given, at the trial, of money paid. 1 Ventr. 108. If lands are bargained and ſold for money only, the deed is to be inrolled according to the ſtatute; but if it be in conſideration of money, and natural affection, &c. the eſtate will paſs without it. 2 Inſt. 672: 2 Lev. 56.

If a man in conſideration of ſo much money to be paid at a day to come, bargains and ſells, the uſe paſſes preſently, and after the day the party has an action for the money, for it is a ſale, be the money paid preſently or hereafter. Dyer 337 a.

2. If the deed of bargain and ſale be not inrolled within the ſix months, (which are to be reckoned after twenty-eight days to the month, the day of the date taken excluſively,) it is of no force; ſo that if a man bargains and ſells his land to me, and the trees upon it, although the trees might be ſold by deed without inrolment, yet in this caſe if the deed be not inrolled, it will be good neither for the trees nor the land. Dyer 90: 7 Rep. 40: 2 Bulſt. 8. A bargain and ſale of a manor to which an advowſon is appendant by indenture not inrolled, will not paſs the advowſon or the manor, for it was to go as appendant. Bro. Caſ. 240.

But in ſome caſes, where a deed will not enure by way of bargain and ſale, by reaſon of ſome defect therein, it may be good to another purpoſe. Dyer 90.

If two bargains and ſales are made of the ſame land, to two ſeveral perſons, and the laſt deed is firſt inrolled; if afterwards the firſt deed is alſo inrolled within ſix months, the firſt buyer ſhall have the land; for when the deed is inrolled, the bargainee is ſeiſed of the land from the delivery of the deed, and the inrolment ſhall relate to it. Hob. 165: Wood's Inſt. 259. Neither the death of the bargainor or bargainee, before the inrolment of the deed of bargain and ſale, will hinder the paſſing of the eſtate to the bargainee: but the eſtate of freehold is in the bargainor, until the deed is inrolled; ſo that the bargainee cannot bring any action of treſpaſs before entry had: though it is ſaid he may ſurrender, aſſign, &c. Cro. Jac. 52: Co. Lit. 147.

A bargainee ſhall have rent which incurs after the bargain and ſale, and before the inrolment. Sid. 310. Upon the inrolment of the deed, the eſtate ſettles ab initio, by the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 16; which ſays, that it ſhall not veſt, except the deed be inrolled; and when it is inrolled, the eſtate veſts preſently by the ſtatute of Uſes. 1 Danv. Abr. 696.

If ſeveral ſeal a deed of bargain and ſale, and but one acknowledge it, and thereupon the deed is inrolled; this is a good inrolment within the ſtatute. Style 462. None can make a bargain and ſale of lands, that hath not the actual poſſeſſion thereof at the time of the ſale; if he hath not the poſſeſſion, the deed muſt be ſealed upon the land, to make it good. 2 Inſt. 672: 1 Lill. 290.

Houſes and lands in London, and any city, &c. are exempted out of the ſtatute of Inrolments. 2 Inſt. 676. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 342.—See further tit. Inrollment.

IV. In pleading a bargain and ſale the deed itſelf muſt be ſhewn under ſeal. 1 Inſt. 225. For though the inrollment being on record is of undoubted veracity, being the tranſaction of the court; yet the private deed has not the ſanction of a record, though publickly acknowledged and inrolled; for it might have been falſely and fraudulently dated, or ill executed. Co. Lit. 225 b. 251 b: 2 Inſt. 673: 4 Co. 71: 5 Co. 53: 2 Rol. Rep. 119.

It muſt likewiſe be ſet forth that the inrolment was within ſix months, or ſecundum formam ſtatuti, &c. vide Allen 19: Carter 221: Style 34. S. C.

In pleading a bargain and ſale, the party ought regularly to aver payment of the money. 1 Leon 170: See Moor 504.

In replevin the caſe upon the pleadings was, that the defendant made a title under bargain and ſale, inrolled within ſix months, and the ſtatute of uſes, and did not ſhew that it was in conſideration of money; but adjudged, that after a verdict, as this caſe was, it ſhall be intended, that evidence was given at the trial, of money paid. 1 Vent. 108.

The party that claims by any bargain and ſale, muſt ſhew in what court the deed is inrolled, becauſe he muſt ſhew all things in certain that make out his title; otherwiſe his adverſary would be put to an infinite ſearch before he could traverſe with ſecurity. Yelv. 213: Cro. Jac. 291. S. C: Yelv. 313.

BARKARY, barkaria, corticulus.] A tan-houſe or place to keep bark in for the uſe of tanners. New Book Entr. tit. Aſſiſe, Corp. Polit. 2.

BARON, baro.] Is a French word, and hath divers ſignifications here in England. Firſt, it is taken for a degree of nobility next to a viſcount. Bracton, lib. 1. cap. 8, ſays they are called barones, quaſi robur belli. In which ſignification it agrees with other nations, where baroniæ are as much as provinciæ: ſo that barons are ſuch as have the government of provinces as their fee holden of the king; ſome having greater and others leſs authority within their territories. It is probable, that formerly, in this kingdom, all thoſe were called barons that had ſuch ſeigniories as we now call courts-baron; as they were called ſeigneurs in France, who had any manor, or lordſhip: and ſoon after the conqueſt, all ſuch came to parliament, and ſat as peers in the lords' houſe. But when by experience it appeared that the parliament was too much thronged by theſe barons, who were very numerous it was in the reign of King John ordained that none but the barones majores ſhould come to parliament, who, for their extraordinary wiſdom, intereſt, or quality, ſhould be ſummoned by writ. After this, men obſerving the eſtate of nobility to be but caſual, and depending merely upon the king's will, they obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male, who were called barons by letters patent, or by creation, whoſe poſterity are now by inheritance thoſe barons that are called lords of the parliament; of which kind the king may create at his pleaſure. Nevertheleſs there are ſtill barons by writ, as well as barons by letters patent: and thoſe barons who were firſt by writ, may now alſo juſtly be called barons by preſcription, for that they and their anceſtors have continued barons, beyond the memory of man. 2 Inſt. 48. See tit. Peers. The original of barons by writ, Camden refers to king Hen. 3; and barons by letters patent, or creation, commenced 11 R. 2: Camb. Brit. pag. 109. To theſe is added a third kind of barons, called barons by tenure, which are ſome of our ancient barons; and likewiſe the biſhops, who, by virtue of baronies annexed to their biſhopricks, always had place in the lords' houſe of parliament, as barons by ſucceſſion. Seager of Honour, lib. 4. cap. 13.

There are alſo barons by office; as the barons of the Exchequer, barons of the Cinque Ports, &c. In ancient records, the word baron includes all the nobility of England, becauſe regularly all noblemen were barons, though they had a higher dignity; and therefore the charter of King Ed. 1, which is an expoſition of what relates to barons in Magna Charta, concludes teſtibus archiepiſcopis, epiſcopis, baronibus, &c. And the great council of the nobility, when they conſiſted, beſides earls and barons, of dukes, marquiſſes, &c. were all comprehended under the name de la councell de baronage. Glanv. cap. 4. Theſe barons have given them two enſigns to remind them of their duties; firſt, a long robe of ſcarlet, in reſpect whereof they are accounted de magno concilio regis; and ſecondly they are girt with a ſword, that they ſhould ever be ready to defend their king and country. 2 Inſt. 5. A baron is vir notabilis & principalis: and the chief burgeſſes of London were in former times barons, before there was a lord mayor, as appears by the city ſeal, and their ancient charters.—Henricus 3. Rex. Sciatis nos conceſſiſſe & hac præſenti charta noſtra confirmaſſe baronibus noſtris de civitate noſtra London quod eligant ſibi mayor de ſeipſis ſingulis annis, &c. Spelm. Gloſſ. The earls-palatine and marches of England had anciently their barons under them; but no barons but thoſe who held immediately of the king were peers of the realm. 'Tis certain the king's tenants were called barons; as we may find in Mat. Paris, and other writers: and in days of old, all men were ſtiled barons, whence the preſent law term of baron and feme for huſband and wife; which ſee.

BARONY, baronia.] Is that honour and territory which gives title to a baron; comprehending not only the fees and lands of temporal barons, but of biſhops alſo who have two eſtates; one as they are ſpiritual perſons, by reaſon of their ſpiritual revenues and promotions; the other grew from the bounty of our Engliſh kings, whereby they have barronies and lands added to their ſpiritual livings and preferments. The baronies belonging to biſhops are by ſome called regalia, becauſe ex ſola liberalitate regum eis olim conceſſa, & a regibus in feudum tenentur. Blount. Barony, Bracton ſays, (lib. 2. cap. 34,) is a right indiviſible; and therefore if an inheritance be to be divided among coparceners, though ſome capital meſſuages may be divided, yet ſi capitale meſſuagium ſit caput comitatûs vel caput baroniæ, they may not be parcelled. In ancient times thirteen knight fees and a quarter made a tenure per baroniam, which amounted to 400 marks per annum.

BARONET, baronettus.] Is a dignity or degree of honour, which hath precedency before all knights, as knights of the bath, knights batchelors, &c. except Bannerets, made ſub vexillis regiis in exercitu regali in aperto bello, & ipſo rege perſonaliter præſente. This order of baronets was inſtituted by King James I. in the year 1611, and was then a purchaſed honour, for the purpoſe of raiſing money to pay troops ſent out to quell ſome inſurgents in the province of Ulſter in Ireland—The arms of which province, being a red or bloody hand, every baronet has added, on his creation, to his coat of arms. Their number at firſt was but two hundred; but now they are without limitation: they are created by patent with an habendum ſibi & hæredibus maſculis, &c.

BARON AND FEME. The law term for Huſband and Wife.

Our law conſiders marriage in no other light than as a civil contract. The holineſs of the matrimonial ſtate, is left entirely to the eccleſiaſtical law; the temporal courts not having juriſdiction to conſider unlawful marriage as a ſin, but merely as a civil inconvenience. The puniſhment therefore, or annulling of inceſtuous and unſcriptural marriages, is the province of the Spiritual Court.—Taking marriage in a civil light, the law treats it as it does all other contracts; on this part of the ſubject therefore, as well as on what relates to marriage promiſes, marriage ſettlements, &c. See this Dict. title Marriage.

By marriage, the huſband and wife are one perſon in law. 1 Inſt. 112.—that is, the very being or legal exiſtence of the woman, is ſuſpended during the marriage; or at leaſt is incorporated and conſolidated into that of her huſband: under whoſe wing, protection and cover ſhe performs every thing; and is therefore called in our law-french a feme-covert, [fœmina viro cooperta]; is ſaid to be covert-baron, or under the protection and influence of her huſband, her baron or lord; and her condition during her marriage is called her coverture. Therefore if an eſtate be granted or conveyed to an huſband and wife and their heirs, they do not take by moieties, as other jointenants, but the intire eſtate is in both. 2 Lev. 39. And if an eſtate be granted to an huſband and wife, and another perſon, the huſband and wife have but one moiety, and the other perſon the other moiety. Litt. § 291.—A woman may be attorney for her huſband; for that implies no ſeparation from, but is rather a repreſentation of her lord. F. N. B. 27. Upon this principle of an union of perſon in huſband and wife, depend almoſt all the legal rights, duties and diſabilities, that either of them acquire by the marriage.

We may conſider the effect of theſe rights, duties and diſabilities, according to the following arrangement.

I. 1. Of Grants and Contracts between Huſband and Wife;
2. Of their being Evidence for or againſt each other.

II. What Acts and Agreements of the Wife before Marriage bind the Huſband.

III. 1. Of the Huſband's Power over the Perſon of his Wife, and of her Remedy for any Injury done to her by him.
2. Of Actions by him for criminal Converſation with her.

IV. Of

IV. Of his Intereſt in her Eſtate and Property; and her's in his, as to her Paraphernalia.

V. Where the Huſband ſhall be liable to the Wife's Debts contracted before Marriage; and therein of a Wife that is Executrix or Adminiſtratrix.

VI. Of her Contracts during Marriage, and how far the Huſband is bound by ſuch Contracts; and where a Wife ſhall be conſidered as a Feme Sole.

VII. Where ſhe alone ſhall be puniſhed for a criminal Offence, and where the Huſband ſhall be anſwerable for what ſhe does in a civil Action.

VIII. What Acts done by the Huſband, or Wife alone, or jointly with the Wife, will bind the Wife; and therein of her Agreement or Diſagreement to ſuch Acts after the Death of the Huſband.

IX. Where the Huſband and Wife muſt join in bringing Actions.

X. Where they muſt be jointly ſued.

XI. Of the Effect of Divorce; and of ſeparate Maintenance, Alimony and Pin-Money.

I. 1. At common law a man could neither in poſſeſſion, reverſion or remainder, limit an eſtate to his wife; but by Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10, a man may covenant with other perſons to ſtand ſeiſed to the uſe of his wife; or may make any other conveyance to her uſe, but he may not covenant with his wife to ſtand ſeiſed to her uſe. A man may deviſe lands by will to his wife, becauſe the deviſe doth not take effect till after his death. Co. Litt. 112.

As to deviſes by femes covert. See tit. Deviſe, Will.

According to ſome books, by cuſtom of a particular place, as of York, the wife may take by immediate conveyance from the huſband. Fitz. Preſcription 61.: Bro. Cuſtom. 56. And it ſeems that a donatio cauſâ mortis by huſband to wife may be good; becauſe that is in the nature of a legacy. 1 P. Wms. 441.

Where the huſband or wife act en autre droit, the one may make an eſtate to the other; as if the wife has an authority by will to ſell, ſhe may ſell to her huſband. 1 Inſt. 112 a: 187 b. and the notes there.

If the feme obligee take the obligor to huſband, this is a releaſe in law. The like law is if there be two femes obligees, and the one take the debtor to huſband. 1 Inſt. 264 b: Cro. Car. 551.

In the caſe of Smith v. Stafford, (Hob. 216,) the huſband promiſed the wife before marriage, that he would leave her worth 100*l.* The marriage took effect, and the queſtion was, whether the marriage was a releaſe of the promiſe. All the judges but Hobart were of opinion, that as the action could not ariſe during the marriage, the marriage could not be a releaſe of it. The doctrine of this caſe ſeems to be admitted in the caſe of Gage v. Acton; (1 Salk. 325: 12 Mod. 290;) the caſe there aroſe upon a bond executed by the huſband to the wife before marriage, with a condition, making it void if ſhe ſurvived him, and he left her 1000*l.* Two of the judges were of opinion that the debt was only ſuſpended, as it was on a contingency which could not by any poſſibility happen during the marriage. But Lord C. J. Holt differed from them; he admitted that a covenant or promiſe by the huſband to the wife, to leave her ſo much in caſe ſhe ſurvives him is good, becauſe it is only a future debt on a contingency, which cannot happen during the marriage, and that is precedent to the debt; but that a bond-debt was a preſent debt, and the condition was not precedent but ſubſequent, that made it a preſent duty; and the marriage was conſequently a releaſe of it. The caſe afterwards went into Chancery; the bond was there taken to be the agreement of the parties and relief accordingly decreed. 2 Vern. 481.—A like decree was made in the caſe of Carnl v. Buckle, 2 P. Wms. 243: and ſee 2 Freem. 205.—See tit. Bankrupt IV. 3.

A. before marriage with M. agrees with M. by deed in writing, that ſhe, or ſuch as ſhe ſhould appoint, ſhould, during the coverture, receive and diſpoſe of the rents of her jointure, by a former huſband, as ſhe pleaſed. It was decreed that, This agreement being with the feme herſelf before marriage, was by the marriage extinguiſhed. Chan. Ca. 21. But where a man before marriage articled with the feme to make a ſettlement of certain lands, before the marriage ſhould be ſolemnized; they intermarried before the ſettlement, and then the baron died: On a bill by the widow for an execution of the articles, it was decreed againſt the heir at law of the baron, that the articles ſhould be executed. 2 Vent. 343.

2. In trials of any ſort, Huſband and Wife are not allowed to be evidence, for or againſt each other; partly becauſe it is impoſſible their teſtimony ſhould be indifferent; but principally becauſe of the union of perſon: and therefore if they were admitted to be witneſſes for each other, they would contradict one maxim of law, "nemo in propriâ cauſâ teſtis eſſe debet;" and if againſt each other, they would contradict another maxim, "nemo tenetur ſeipſum accuſare." But where the offence is directly againſt the perſon of the wife, this rule has been uſually diſpenſed with; (State Trials, vol. 1. Lord Audley's caſe, Stra. 633;) and therefore by Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 2, in caſe a woman be forcibly taken away and married, ſhe may be a witneſs againſt ſuch her huſband, in order to convict him of felony. For in this caſe ſhe can with no propriety be reckoned his wife; becauſe a main ingredient, her conſent, was wanting to the contract: and alſo, there is another maxim of law, that no man ſhall take advantage of his own wrong; which the raviſher here would do, if by forcibly marrying a woman he could prevent her from being a witneſs, who is perhaps the only witneſs to that very fact. 1 Comm. 443, 4.

The huſband cannot be a witneſs againſt the wife, nor the wife againſt the huſband, to prove the firſt marriage on an indictment, on Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 11, for a ſecond marriage. But the ſecond wife or huſband may be a witneſs; the ſecond marriage being void. Bull. N. P. 287: 1 Hal. P. C. 693.

In Raym. 1, there is an opinion, that a huſband and wife may be witneſſes againſt one another in treaſon; but the contrary is adjudged, 1 Brownl. 47: ſee 2 Keb. 403: and 1 H. P. C. 301.—The rule in Lord Audley's caſe, is denied to be law, Raym. 1; and perhaps was admitted on the particular circumſtances of the facts which were deteſtable in the extreme, the huſband having aſſiſted in the rape of his wife.—In an information againſt two, one for perjury, and the other for ſubornation, in ſwearing on the trial of an ejectment, that a child was ſuppoſititious, the huſband of one of the defendant's was admitted to give evidence of the birth, but refuſed as to the ſubornation. Stra. 377: 2 Keb. 403: Mar. 120.—And the evidence of a wife has been diſallowed even againſt others, where her huſband might be indirectly in danger. Dalt. 540: Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. 607, 8.—A huſband and wife may demand ſurety of the peace againſt each each other, and their evidence must then of necessity be admitted against each other. 1 Hawk. P. C. 253: see Stra. 1231; and the other authorities cited by Hawkins.

The wife of a bankrupt may be examined by the commissioners —See tit. Bankrupt, III 1.

It seems that a wife may be evidence to prove a fraud on the husband, particularly if she were party thereto, as in case of a marriage-brocage agreement. Sid. 431: see post. II. And in cases of seduction. L. E. 55.—And in civil actions, where the husband is not concerned in the action, but the evidence is collateral to discharge the defendant, by charging the husband. 1 Stra. 504; and see 1 Stra. 527.

II. As by marriage the husband and wife become one person in law, therefore such an union works an extinguishment or revocation of several acts done by her before the marriage; and this not only for the benefit of the husband, but likewise of the wife, who, if she were allowed at her pleasure to rescind and break through, or confirm several acts, might be so far influenced by her husband, as to do things greatly to her disadvantage. 4 Co. 60: 5 Co. 10: Keilw. 162: Co. Lit. 55: Hetl. 72: Cro. Car. 304.

But in things which would be manifestly to the prejudice of both husband and wife, the law does not make her acts void; and therefore if a feme sole makes a lease at will, or is lessee at will, and afterwards marries, the marriage is no determination of her will, so as to make the lease void; but she herself cannot without the consent of her husband determine the lease in either case. 5 Co. 10.

So where a warrant of attorney was given to confess a judgment to a feme sole, the court gave leave, notwithstanding the marriage, to enter up judgment; for that the authority shall not be deemed to be revoked or countermanded, because it is for the husband's advantage; like a grant of a reversion to a feme sole, who marries before attornment, yet the tenant may attorn afterwards: otherwise if a feme sole gives a warrant of attorney, and marries, for that is to charge the husband. 1 Salk. 117, 399.

But if a feme sole makes her will, and devises her land to J. S. and afterwards marries him, and then dies, yet J. S. takes nothing by the will, because the marriage was a revocation of it. 4 Co. 60.—See tits. Devise, Will.

Equity will set aside the intended wife's contracts, though legally executed, when they appear to have been entered into with an intent to deceive the husband, and are in derogation of the rights of marriage; as where a widow made a deed of settlement of her estate, and married a second husband, who was not privy to such settlement; and it appearing to the court, that it was in confidence of her having such estate that the husband married her, the court set aside the deed as fraudulent; so where the intended wife, the day before her marriage, entered privately into a recognizance to her brother, it was decreed to be delivered up. See 2 Chan. Rep. 41, 79, 81: 2 Vern. 17: 2 Viz. 264: see ante I. 2.

But where a widow, before her marriage with a second husband, assigned over the greatest part of her estate to trustees for children by her former husband; though it was insisted that this was without the privity of the husband, and done with a design to cheat him, yet the court thought, that a widow might thus provide for her children before she put herself under the power of a husband; and it being proved that 8000*l.* was thus settled, and that the husband had suppressed the deed, he was decreed to pay the whole money, without directing any account. 1 Vern. 408.

III. 1. By marriage the husband hath power over his wife's person; and by the old law he might give her moderate correction. 1 Hawk. P. C. 258; but this power was confined within reasonable bounds. Moor. 874: F. N. B. 80.—In the time of Charles II. this power of correction began to be doubted. 1 Sid. 113: 3 Keb. 433. The courts of law however, still permit a husband to restrain a wife of her liberty, in case of any gross misbehaviour, Stra. 478, 875. But if he threaten to kill her, &c. she may make him find surety of the peace, by suing a writ of supplicavit out of Chancery, or by preferring articles of the peace against him in the court of King's Bench, or she may apply to the Spiritual Court for a divorce, propter sævitiam. Crom. 28. 136: F. N. B. 80: Hetl. 149. cont. 1 Sid. 113, 116: Dalt. c. 68: Lamb. 7: Crom. 133.

So may the husband have security of the peace against his wife. Stra. 1207.

But a wife cannot, either by herself or her prochein amy, bring a homine replegiando against her husband; for he has by law a right to the custody of her, and may, if he think fit, confine her, but he must not imprison her; if he does, it will be a good cause for her to apply to the Spiritual Court for a divorce propter sævitiam; and the nature and proceedings in the writ de homine replegiando shew that it cannot be maintained by the wife against her husband. Prec. in Ch. 492.

The courts of law will grant a habeas corpus to relieve a wife from unjust imprisonment.

2. The ground of the action for adultery, is the injury done to the husband, by alienating the affections of his wife, destroying the comforts arising from her company and that of her children, and imposing on him a spurious issue.

In this action the plaintiff must bring proof of the actual solemnization of a marrriage; nothing shall supply its place: cohabitation or reputation are not sufficient, nor any collateral proof whatever. 4 Burr. 2057: Bull. N. P. 27: Doug. 162: Esp. N. P. 343.—But it is not necessary to prove a marriage according to the ceremony of the church of England; if the parties are Jews, Quakers, &c. proof of a marriage according to their rites is sufficient. Bull. N. P. 28.—The confession of the wife will be no proof against the defendant; but a discourse between her and the defendant may be proved, and the defendant's letters to her; but the wife's letters to the defendant will be no evidence for him. Id.

The injury in case of adultery being great, the damages are generally considerable, but depend on circumstances; such on the one hand as go in aggravation of damages, and to shew the circumstances and property of defendant; or on the other hand, such as go in extenuation of the offence, and mitigation of damages. Bull. N. P. 27: Esp. 343, 4.—The defendant may prove particular acts of criminality in the wife, previous to her guilt with him, but not her general character, in extenuation. Id. ib.

If a woman is suffered by her husband to live as a common prostitute, and a man is thereby drawn into crim. con. no no action at the ſuit of the huſband will lie; but if the huſband does not know this, it goes only in mitigation of damages. Id. ib.

It is now determined that if the huſband conſent to his wife's adultery, this will go in bar of his action. 4 Term Rep. 657, in the caſe of Duberly v. Gunning.—See 12 Mod. 232.

It ſeems to be in the diſcretion of the court to grant a new trial in this action, on account of exceſſive damages; but which they will be very cautious in doing. 4 Term Rep. 651.

If adultery be committed with another man's wife without any force, but by her own conſent, though the huſband may have aſſault and battery, and lay it vi & armis, yet they ſhall in that caſe puniſh him below for that very offence; for an indictment will not lie for ſuch an aſſault and battery; neither ſhall the huſband and wife join in an action at common law; and therefore they proceed below, either civilly, that is, to divorce them, or criminally, becauſe they were not criminally proſecuted above. 7 Mod. 81.

IV. As to the lands of the wife. The freehold or right of poſſeſſion of all her lands of inheritance, veſts in the huſband immediately upon the marriage, the right of property ſtill being preſerved to her. 1 Inſt. 351 a: 273 b: 326 b. in note. This eſtate he may convey to another.—An incorrect ſtatement in the book called Caſes in Equity, temp. Ld Talbot, p. 167. of what was delivered by his lordſhip in the caſe of Robinſon v. Cummins, ſeems to have given riſe to a notion that the huſband could not make a tenant to the præcipe of his wife's eſtate for the purpoſe of ſuffering a common recovery of it, without the wife's previouſly joining in a fine; but it now ſeems to be a ſettled point that he can. See Cruiſe on Recoveries; and poſt. tit. Fine and Recovery.—By Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28, leaſes of the wife's inheritance muſt be made by indenture, to which the huſband and wife are both parties, to be ſealed by the wife, and the rent to be reſerved to the huſband and wife, and to the heirs of the wife; and the huſband ſhall not alien the rent longer than during the coverture, except by fine levied by huſband and wife.—By the ſame act it is provided that no fine or other act done by the huſband only of the inheritance or freehold of his wife ſhall be any diſcontinuance thereof, or prejudicial to the wife or her heirs, but they may enter according to their rights; fines whereunto the wife is party and privy [and the above mentioned leaſes] only excepted. As to alienations of a huſband's eſtate by a woman tenant in dower, &c. ſee Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20, which makes them void. See poſt. Div. VIII. and alſo tit. Forfeiture.

As to chattels real, and things in action of the wife; where the huſband ſurvives the wife.

At the common law, no perſon had a right to adminiſter. The ordinary might grant adminiſtration to whom he pleaſed, till the ſtatutes which gave it to the next of kin, and if there were perſons of equal kindred, whichever took adminiſtration firſt was entitled to the ſurplus. The ſtatute of diſtribution was made to prevent this. Where the wife was entitled only to the truſt of a chattel real, or to any choſe in action, or contingent intereſt in any kind of perſonalty, it ſeems to have been doubted, whether if the huſband ſurvived her he was intitled to the benefit of it or not. See 1 Inſt. 351: 4 Inſt. 87: Rol. Ab. 346: All. 15: Cro. Eliz. 466: 3 C. R. 37: Gilb. Ca. Eq 234.—See tit. Executor. I. 1: V. 8.

Upon the conſtruction of the ſtatute of Diſtributions, (ſee tit. Executor, V. 8,) it has been held that the huſband may adminiſter to his deceaſed wife; and that he is entitled for his own benefit to all her chattels real, things in action, truſts, and every other ſpecies of perſonal property, whether actually veſted in her, and reduced into poſſeſſion, or contingent, or recoverable only by action or ſuit.—It was however made a queſtion after the Stat. 29 Car. 2 c. 3. § 25. whether if the huſband having ſurvived his wife, afterwards die, during the ſuſpenſe of the contingency upon which any part of his wife's property depended, or without having reduced into poſſeſſion ſuch of her property as lay in action or ſuit, his repreſentative or his wife's next of kin were entitled thereto. But by a ſeries of caſes it is now ſettled, that the repreſentative of the huſband is entitled as much to this ſpecies of his wife's property, as to any other; that the right of adminiſtration, follows the right of the eſtate, and ought in caſe of the huſband's death, after the wife, to be granted to the next of kin of the huſband. See Mr. Hargrave's Law Tracts 475. And that if adminiſtration de bonis non of the wife is obtained by any third perſon, he is a truſtee for the repreſentative of the huſband. See 1 P. Wms. 378, 382.

If the wife ſurvive the huſband.—As to this point, there is a material difference with reſpect to chattels real, and goods, cattle, money, and other chattels perſonal.—All chattels perſonal, become the property of the huſband immediately on the marriage; he may diſpoſe of them, without the conſent or concurrence of his wife; and at his death, whether he dies in her life-time, or ſurvives her, they belong to his perſonal repreſentative. See 10 Co. 42: 2 Inſt. 510.

With reſpect to her chattels real, as leaſes for years, there is a diſtinction between thoſe which are in the nature of a preſent veſted intereſt in the wife, and thoſe in which ſhe has only a poſſible or contingent intereſt. To explain this fully, it ſeems proper to mention, that it was formerly held that a diſpoſition of a term of years to a man for his life, was ſuch a total diſpoſition of the term, that no diſpoſition could be made of the poſſible reſidue of the term; or at leaſt that if it was made, the firſt deviſee might diſpoſe of the whole term, notwithſtanding the deviſe of the reſidue. This is reported (Dy. 74,) to have been determined by all the judges in a caſe in 6 Ed. 6. The Court of Chancery firſt broke through this rule, and ſupported ſuch future diſpoſitions when made by way of truſt; their example was followed by the courts of law in Mat. Manning's caſe, 8 Rep. 94 b. and Lampet's caſe, 10 Rep. 46 b. This diſpoſition of the reſidue of a term, after a previous diſpoſition of it to one for life, operates by way of executory deviſe, and the intereſt of the deviſee of the reſidue is called a poſſibility. This poſſible intereſt in a term of years differs from a contingent intereſt created by way of remainder. If a perſon limits a real eſtate to A. for life, and after the deceaſe of A. and if B. dies in A.'s life-time, to C. for a term of years; this operates not as an executory deviſe, but as a remainder, and therefore is not to be conſidered as a poſſibility, but as a contingent intereſt.

Now if a perſon marries a woman poſſeſſed of, or entitled to the truſt of a preſent, actual, and veſted, intereſt in in a term of years, or any other chattel real, it ſo far becomes his property, that he may diſpoſe of it during her life; and if he ſurvives her, it veſts in him abſolutely; but if he makes no diſpoſition of it, and ſhe ſurvives him, it belongs to her, and not to his repreſentatives: nor is he in this caſe intitled to diſpoſe of it from her by will. Prec. Ch. 418: 2 Vern. 270.

If a perſon marries a woman entitled to a poſſible or contingent intereſt in a term of years, if it is a legal intereſt, that is ſuch an intereſt, as upon the determination of the previous eſtate, or the happening of the contingency, will immediately veſt in poſſeſſion in the wife, there the huſband may aſſign it; unleſs perhaps in thoſe caſes where the poſſibility, or contingency, is of ſuch a nature, that it cannot happen during the huſband's life-time. 1 Inſt. 46 b: 10 Rep. 51 a: Hutt. 17: 1 Salk. 326. But it is an exception to this rule, at leaſt in equity, that if a future or executory intereſt in a term or other chattel, is provided for the wife, by or with the conſent of the huſband, there he cannot diſpoſe of it from the wife, as it would be abſurd to allow him to defeat his own agreement. But this ſuppoſes the proviſion to be made before marriage; for if made ſubſequent, it is a mere voluntary act, and void againſt an aſſignee for a valuable conſideration. 1 Cha. Ca. 225: 1 Vern. 7, 18: 1 Eq. Ab. 58.

If a wife have a chattel real en auter droit, as executor or adminiſtrator, the huſband cannot diſpoſe of it. 1 Inſt. 351 a. But if the wife had it as executrix to a former huſband, the huſband may diſpoſe of it. 3 Wilſ. 277.—And if a woman be jointenant of a chattel real, and marries and dies, the huſband ſhall not have it, but it ſurvives to the other jointenant. 1 Inſt. 185 b.—And the huſband hath not power over a chattel real, which the wife hath as guardian. Plowd. 294.

Things in action do not veſt in the huſband till he reduces them into poſſeſſion. It has been held that the huſband may ſue alone, for a debt due to the wife upon bond; but that if he join her in the action, and recover judgement and die, the judgment will ſurvive to her. 1 Vern. 396: ſee All. 36: 2 Lev. 107: 2 Vez. 677. The principle of this diſtinction appears to be, that his bringing the action in his own name alone, is a diſagreement to his wife's intereſt, and implies it to be his intention that it ſhould not ſurvive to her; but if he brings the action in the joint names of himſelf and his wife, the judgment is that they both ſhould recover; ſo that the ſurviving wife, and not the repreſentative of the huſband, is to bring the ſcire facias on the judgment. In 3 Atk. 21, Lord Hardwicke is reported to ſay, that at law if the huſband has recovered a judgment for a debt of the wife, and dies before execution, the ſurviving wife, not the huſband's executors, is entitled.

Theſe appear to be the general principles of the courts of Law, reſpecting the intereſt which the huſband takes in, and the power given him over the things in action of his wife; but the courts of Equity have admitted many very nice diſtinctions reſpecting them.

1. A ſettlement made before marriage, if made in conſideration of the wife's fortune, entitles the repreſentative of the huſband dying in his wife's life-time, to the whole of her things in action; but it has been ſaid, that if it is not made in conſideration of her fortune, the ſurviving wife will be entitled to the things in action, the property of which has not been reduced [into his power] by the huſband in his life-time; ſo if the ſettlement is in conſideration of a particular part of her fortune, ſuch of the things in action as are not compriſed in that part, it has been ſaid, ſurvive to the wife. See Pre. Ch. 63: 2 Vern. 502: Talb. 168. In the caſe of Blois v. Counteſs of Hereford, (2 Vern. 501,) a ſettlement was made for the benefit of the wife, but no mention was made of her perſonal eſtate; it was decreed to belong to the repreſentative of the huſband; and it was then ſaid, that in all caſes where there was a ſettlement equivalent to the wife's portion, it ſhould be intended that he is to have the portion, though there is no agreement for that purpoſe. See Eq. Ab. 69.

2. If the huſband cannot recover the things in action of his wife but by the aſſiſtance of a Court of Equity, the court upon the principle, that he who ſeeks equity, muſt do equity, will not give him their aſſiſtance to recover the property, unleſs he either has made a previous proviſion for her, or agrees to do it out of the property prayed for; or unleſs the wife appears in court, and conſents to the property being made over to him. 2 P. Wms. 641: 3 P. Wms. 12: Toth 179: 2 Vez. 669. Neither will the court, where no ſettlement is made for the wife, direct the fortune to be paid to the huſband, in all caſes where ſhe does appear perſonally and conſent to it. 2 Vez. 579. It appears to be agreed, that the intereſt is always payable to the huſband, if he maintains his wife. 2 Vez. 561, 2; yet where the huſband receives a great part of the wife's fortune, and will not ſettle the reſt, the court will not only ſtop the payment of the reſidue of her fortune, but will even prevent his receiving the intereſt of the reſidue, that it may accumulate for her benefit. 3 Atk. 21.

3. Voluntiers and aſſignees under a commiſſion of bankruptcy, are in caſes of this nature ſubject to the ſame equity as the huſband; and are therefore required by the court, if they apply for it's aſſiſtance in recovering the wife's fortune, to make a proper proviſion for her out of it. 2 Atk. 420: 1 P. Wms. 382. But if the huſband actually aſſigns either a truſt term of his wife, or a thing in action, for a valuable conſideration, the court does not compel the aſſignee to make a proviſion for the wife. 1 Vern. 7. See 1 Vern. 18.—and Cox's P. Wms. i. 459, in note, where Lord Thurlow is reported to have ſaid in a caſe before him "that he did not find it any where decided, that if the huſband makes an actual aſſignment by contract for a valuable conſideration, the aſſignee ſhould be bound to make any proviſion for the wife; but that a court of equity has much greater conſideration, for an aſſignment actually made by contract, than for an aſſignment made by mere operation of law; for in this latter caſe the creditor ſhould be exactly in the caſe of the huſband, and ſubject preciſely to the ſame equity in favour of the wife."

4. But notwithſtanding the uniform and earneſt ſolicitude of the courts of equity, to make ſome proviſion for the wife out of her fortune, in thoſe caſes where the huſband, or thoſe claiming under him by act of law, cannot come at it, without the aſſiſtance of thoſe courts, ſtill it does not appear that they have ever interfered to prevent its being paid the huſband, or to inhibit him from recovering it at law. 2 Atk. 420.—In Pre. Ch. 414, it is obſerved, that if the truſtees pay the wife's fortune, it is without remedy.

5. Money

5. Money due on mortgage is considered as a thing in action. It seems to have been formerly understood that as the husband could not dispose of lands mortgaged in fee, without the wife, the estate remaining in the wife, carried the money along with it, to her and her representatives; but that as to the trust and the absolute power of a term of years, there was nothing to keep a mortgage debt, secured by a term, from going to the husband's representatives: but this distinction no longer prevails; and it is now held that tho' in the case of a mortgage in fee, the legal fee of the lands in mortgage continues in the wife, she is but a trustee, and the trust of the mortgage follows the property of the debt. See 1 P. Wms. 458: 2 Atk. 207.

6. If baron and feme have a decree for money in right of the feme, and then the baron dies, the benefit of the decree belongs to the feme, and not to the executor of the husband. This was certified by Hyde, Ch. J. and his certificate confirmed by Lord Chancellor. 1 Cha. Ca. 27. If the wife has a judgment, and it is extended upon an elegit, the husband may assign it without a consideration. So if a judgment be given in trust for a feme sole, who marries, and by consent of her trustees is in possession of the land extended, the husband may assign over the extended interest; and by the same reason, if the feme has a decree, to hold and enjoy lands until a debt due to her is paid, and she is in possession of the land under this decree, and marries, the husband may assign it without any consideration, for it is in nature of an extent. 3 P. Wms. 200.

The above summary on this part of the law relative to baron and feme, is principally taken from the ingenious and laborious notes on 1 Inst.—To which may be added the following miscellaneous observations.

7. If a lease be conveyed by a feme sole, in trust for the use of herself, if she afterwards marries, it cannot be disposed of by the husband: if she dies, he shall not have it, but the executors of the wife. March 44: See 2 Vern. 270.

If a feme having a rent for life takes husband, the baron shall have action of debt for the rent incurred during the coverture, after the death of the feme. 1 Danv. 719. And arrears due in the life-time of the husband, after his death, shall survive to the wife, if she outlives him, and her administrators after her death. 2 Lut. 1151. A feme lessee for life, rendering rent, takes husband and dies, the baron shall be charged in action of debt for the rent which was grown due during the coverture, because he took the profits out of which the rent ought to issue. Keilw. 125: Raym. 6.

If a feme covert sues a woman in the spiritual court for adultery with her husband, and obtains a sentence against her, and costs; the husband may release these costs, for the marriage continues, and whatever accrues to the wife during coverture, belongs to the husband; per Holt Ch. J. on motion for prohibition. 1 Salk. 115.

But if the husband and wife be divorced a mensâ & thoro, and the wife has her alimony, and sues for defamation or other injury, and there has costs, and the husband releases them, this shall not bar the wife, for these costs come in lieu of what she hath spent out of her alimony, which is a separate maintenance, and not in the power of her husband. 1 Rol. Rep. 426: 3 Bulst. 264: 1 Rol. Abr. 343: 2 Rol. Abr. 293: 1 Salk. 115.

A legacy was given to a feme covert, who lived separate from her husband, and the executor paid it to the feme, and took her receipt for it: yet on a bill brought by the husband against the executor, he was decreed to pay it over again, with interest. 1 Vern. 261.

If husband is attainted of felony, and pardoned on condition of transportation for life, and afterwards the wife becomes intitled to an orphanage share of personal estate, it shall not belong to the husband, but to the wife. 3 P. Wms. 37.

Trinkets and jewels given to a wife before marriage, become the husband's again by marriage, and are liable to his debts, if his personal estate is not sufficient. 2 Atk. 104.

8. And as the husband may generally acquire a property in all the personal substance of the wife, so in one particular instance the wife may acquire a property in some of her husband's goods, which shall remain to her after his death, and not go to his executors. These are called her paraphernalia; which is a term borrowed from the Civil Law, and is derived from the Greek, signifying something over and above her dower. Our law uses it to signify the apparel and ornaments of the wife suitable to her rank and degree; and therefore even the jewels of a Peeress usually worn by her, have been held to be paraphernalia. Moor 213.—These she becomes entitled to at the death of her husband, over and above her jointure or dower, and preferably to all other representatives. Co. Car. 343, 7: 1 Ro. Ab. 911: 2 Lron. 166.—Neither can the husband devise by his will such ornaments or jewels of his wife; though during his life, perhaps he hath the power to sell or give them away. Noy's Max. c. 49: 2 Comm. 436.—But if she continue in the use of them, till his death, she shall afterwards retain them against his executors and administrators, and all other persons except creditors, where there is a deficiency of assets. 1 P. Wms. 730.—And her necessary apparel is protected even against the claim of creditors. Noy's Max. c. 49.

That the widow's paraphernalia are subject to the debts, but preferred to the legacies of the husband; and that the general rules of marshalling assets are applicable in giving effect to such priority, see not only 1 P. Wms 730. quoted above, but also 2 P. Wms. 544: 2 Atk. 104, 642: 3 Atk. 369, 393: 2 Vez. 7: See also Cha. Ca. 240: 1 C. R. 27.

In one place Rolle says, the wife shall have a necessary bed and apparel. 1 Rol. 911. l. 20.—See further on the subject of Paraphernalia. Com. Dig. tit. Baron and Feme (F. 3.)

V. If a Feme sole indebted takes husband; her debt becomes that of the husband and wife, and both are to be sued for it; but the husband is not liable after the death of the wife, unless there be a judgment against both during the coverture. 1 Rol. Abr. 351: F. N. B. 120. Where there is judgment against a feme sole, who marries and dies, the baron shall not be charged therewith: though if the judgment be had upon scire facias against baron and feme, and then the feme dies, he shall be charged. 3 Mod. 186. In action brought against a feme sole, if pending the act on, she marries, this shall not abate the action; but the plaintiff may proceed to judgment and execution against her, according as the action was commenced. 1 Ld. Ray. 217: Trin. 12 W. 3. And if habeas corpus be brought to remove the cauſe, the plaintiff is to move for a procedendo on the return of the habeas corpus: alſo the court of B. R. may refuſe it, where brought to abate a juſt action. 1 Salk. 8.

In general the huſband is liable to the wife's debts, contracted before marriage, whether he had any portion with her or not; and this the law preſumes reaſonable, becauſe by the marriage the huſband acquires an abſolute intereſt in the perſonal eſtate of the wife, and has the receipt of the rents and profits of her real eſtate during coverture; alſo whatever accrues to her by her labour, or otherwiſe, during the coverture, belongs to the huſband; ſo that in favour of creditors, and that no perſon's act ſhould prejudice another, the law makes the huſband liable to thoſe debts with which he took her attached. F. N. B. 265: 20 Hen. 6. 22 b: Moor 468. 1 Rol. Abr. 352: 3 Mod. 186.

If baron and feme are ſued on the wife's bond, entered into by the feme before marriage, and judgment is had thereupon, and the wife dies before execution, yet the huſband is liable; for the judgment has altered the debt. 1 Sid. 337.

If judgment be againſt huſband and wife, he dies, and ſhe ſurvives, execution may be againſt her. 1 Rol. Abr. 890. l. 10, 50: See poſt X.

Where a man marries a widow executrix, &c. her evidence ſhall not be allowed to charge her ſecond huſband with more than ſhe can prove to have actually come to her hands. Agreed per cur. Abr. Eq. Ca. 227. Hil. 1719.

D. confeſſed a judgment to F. who made his wife, the plaintiff, executrix, and died; ſhe adminiſtered and married a ſecond huſband, and then ſhe alone, without her huſband, acknowledged ſatisfaction, though no real ſatisfaction was made. The court held that this was not good. Sid. 31.

A wife adminiſtratrix under 17 ſhall join with her huſband in an action; per Twiſden, J. Mod. 297.

If a feme executrix takes baron, and he releaſes all actions, this ſhall be a bar during the coverture without queſtion; by the juſtices. Br. Releaſes, pl. 29.

If a feme executrix take baron, and the baron puts himſelf in arbitrament for death of the teſtator, and award is made, and the baron dies, the feme ſhall be barred; per tot' cur'. Brooke ſays, that from hence it ſeems to him, that the releaſe of the baron without the feme is a good bar againſt the feme; quod conceditur, anno 39 H. 15; and therefore there he excepted thoſe debts in his releaſe, otherwiſe they had been extinct. Br. Releaſes, pl. 79.

If a man marries an adminiſtratrix to a former huſband, who in her widowhood waſted the aſſets of her inteſtate, the huſband is liable to the debts of the inteſtate, during the life of the wife; and this ſhall be deemed a devaſtavit in him. Cro. Car. 603.

VI. Every gift, grant, or diſpoſition of goods, lands, or other thing whatſoever, and all obligations and feoffments made by a feme covert, without her huſband's conſent, are void. 1 H. 5, 125: Fitz. Covert. 18.

The huſband is obliged to maintain his wife in neceſſaries: yet they muſt be according to his degree and eſtate, to charge him; and neceſſaries may be ſuitable to a huſband's degree of quality, but not to his eſtate; alſo they may be neceſſaries, but not ex neceſſitate to charge the huſband. 1 Mod. 129: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 354. If a woman buys things for her neceſſary apparel, though without the conſent of her huſband, yet the huſband ſhall be bound to pay it. Brownl. 47. And if the wife buys any thing for herſelf, children, or family, and the baron does any act precedent or ſubſequent whereby he ſhews his conſent, he may be charged thereupon. 1 Sid. 120. The expences of a feme covert's funeral, paid by her father, while her huſband had left her, and was gone abroad, deemed neceſſaries. H. Black. Rep. 90. Though a wife is very lewd, if ſhe cohabits with her huſband, he is chargeable for all neceſſaries for her, becauſe he took her for better, for worſe: and ſo he is if he runs away from her, or turns her away: but if ſhe goes away from her huſband, then as ſoon as ſuch ſeparation is notorious, whoever gives her credit doth it at his peril, and the huſband is not liable, unleſs he take her again. 1 Salk. 119: ſee 1 Stra. 647, 706: and as to actions againſt femes covert having eloped ſee 2 Black. Rep. 1079.

If a man cohabits with a woman, allows her to aſſume his name, and paſſes her for his wife, though in fact he is not married to her, yet he is liable to her contracts for neceſſaries; and therefore ne unques accouple is a bad plea in an action on the caſe for the debt of a wife; it is good only in dower or an appeal. Bull. N. P. 136: Eſp. N. P. 124.

Although a husband be bound to pay his wife's debts for her reaſonable proviſion, yet if ſhe parts from him, eſpecially by reaſon of any misbehaviour, and he allows her a maintenance, he ſhall never after be charged with her debts, till a new cohabitation; but if the husband receive her, or come after her, and lie with her but for a night, that may make him liable to the debts. Paſch. 3 Ann: Mod. Caſ. 147, 171. If there be an agreement in writing between husband and wife to live ſeparate, and that ſhe ſhall have a ſeparate maintenance, it ſhall bind them both till they both agree to cohabit again; and if the wife is willing to return to her husband, ſhe may; but it has been adjudged, that the husband hath no coercive power over the wife to force her, though he may viſit her, and uſe all lawful means in order to a reconciliation. Mich. Geo. 1. Mod. Ca. in L. & E. 22.

Where there is a ſeparation by conſent, and the wife hath a ſeparate allowance, thoſe who truſt her, do it upon her own credit. 1 Salk. 116. If a husband makes his wife an allowance for clothes, &c. which is conſtantly paid her, it is ſaid he ſhall not be charged. 1 Sid. 109. And if he forbids particular perſons to truſt her, he will not be chargeable: but a prohibition in general, by putting her in the news-papers, is no legal notice not to truſt her. 1 Vent. 42.

It may now ſafely be aſſumed as a principle, that "where the husband and wife part by conſent, and ſhe has a ſeparate maintenance from the husband, ſhe ſhall in all caſes be ſubject to her own debts"—This was firſt finally decided and ſettled in the caſe of Ringſtead v. Lady Lanesborough, M. 23 Geo. 3. and H. 23 Geo. 3, where in actions againſt the defendant for goods ſold ſhe pleaded coverture; and the plaintiff's replication "that ſhe lived ſeparate and apart from her husband, from whom ſhe had a ſeparate maintenance; and ſo was liable to her own debts," was on demurrer holden to be good; and plaintiff had judgment.—In the above caſe the plea alſo ſtated that the husband lived in Ireland, which being out of the proceſs of the court, ſome ſtreſs was laid on it in the deciſion; but in the caſe of Barwell v. Brooks, H.

24 Geo. 3. it was decided as a general principle, that the husband was not liable in any caſe where the wife lived apart, and had a ſeparate maintenance; and this principle was recognized in Corbett v. Poelnitz which followed it. 1 Term Rep. 5.

It has been ſaid, that when the husband and wife live apart, the wife muſt have a ſeparate maintenance from the huſband, in order to diſcharge him. 4 Burr. 2078.—But this opinion ſeems much ſhaken by that of Lord Mansfield, in 1 Term Rep. 5—11, where he ſays, the caſes (already mentioned) do not reſt on one or two circumſtances, but on the great principle which the court has laid down "that where a woman has a ſeparate eſtate, and acts and receives credit as a feme ſole, ſhe ſhall be liable as ſuch"—A principle which extends further than the facts of any caſes yet determined.—And it ſeems that now a determination in 12 Mod. 603, where coverture and the life of the husband in Ireland was given in evidence in an action againſt a woman who had traded for 12 years as a widow, is not law.

The baron in an account ſhall not be charged by the receipt of his wife, except it came to his uſe. 1 Danv. 707. Yet if ſhe uſually receives and pays money, it will bind him in equity. Abr. Caſ. Eq. 61. And why not in law, in an action for money had and received? For goods ſold to a wife, to the uſe of the husband, the huſband ſhall be charged, and be obliged to pay for the ſame. Sid. 425.

If the wife pawn her cloaths for money, and afterwards borrows money to redeem them, the husband is not chargeable unleſs he were conſenting, or that the firſt ſum came to his uſe. 2 Show. 283.

If a wife takes up clothes, as ſilk, &c. and pawns them before made into clothes, the husband ſhall not pay for them, becauſe they never came to his uſe; otherwiſe if made up and worn, and then pawned; per Holt Ch. J. at Guildhall. 1 Salk. 118.

A wife may uſe the goods of her husband, but ſhe may not diſpoſe of them: and if ſhe takes them away, it is not felony, for ſhe cannot by our law ſteal the goods of her husband; but if ſhe delivers them to an adulterer, and he receives them, it will be felony in him. 3 Inſt. 308, 310.

If the baron is beyond ſea in any voyage, and during his abſence the wife buys neceſſaries, this is a good evidence for a jury to find that the baron aſſumpſit. Sid. 127.

A husband who has abjured the realm, or who is baniſhed, is thereby civiliter mortuus; and being diſabled to ſue or be ſued in right of his wife, ſhe muſt be conſidered as a feme ſole; for it would be unreaſonable that ſhe ſhould be remedileſs on her part, and equally hard on thoſe who had any demands on her, that, not being able to have any redreſs from the husband, they ſhould not have any againſt her. Bro. Baron and Feme, 66: Co. Lit. 133; 1 Rol. Rep. 400: Moor 851: 3 Bulſt. 188: 1 Bulſt. 140: 2 Vern. 104.

In aſſumpſit the defendant proved that ſhe was married, and her husband alive in France, the plaintiff had judgment, upon which, as a verdict againſt evidence, ſhe moved for a new trial, but it was denied; for it ſhall be intended that ſhe was divorced: beſides the husband is an alien enemy, and in that caſe, why is not his wife chargeable as a feme ſole? 1 Salk. 116: Deerly v. Ducheſs of Mazarine.

By the cuſtom of London, if a feme covert trades by herſelf, in a trade with which her husband does not intermeddle, ſhe may ſue and be ſued as a feme ſole. 10 Mod. 6.

But in ſuch caſe ſhe cannot give a bond and warrant of attorney to confeſs a judgment: and when ſued as a feme ſole, ſhe muſt be ſued in the courts of the city of London; for if ſued in the courts above, the husband muſt be joined. So the wife alone cannot bring an action in the courts above, but only in the city courts; and this even though her husband be dead; if the cauſe of action accrued in his life time. 4 Term Rep. 361, 2.

Where a married man is tranſported for any felony, &c. the wife may be ſued alone, for any debt contracted by her, after the tranſportation. 1 Term Rep. 9.

VII. In ſome caſes the command or authority of the husband, either expreſs or implied, will privilege the wife from puniſhment, even for capital offences. And therefore if a woman commit bare theft or burglary by the coercion of her husband, (or even in his company which the law conſtrues a coercion,) ſhe is not guilty of any crime, being conſidered as acting by compulſion, and not of her own will.

But for crimes mala in ſe, not being merely offences againſt the laws of ſociety, ſhe is anſwerable; as for murder and the like; not only becauſe theſe are of a deeper die; but alſo ſince in a ſtate of nature, no one is in ſubjection to another, it would be unreaſonable to ſcreen an offender from the puniſhment due to natural crimes, by the refinements and ſubordinations of civil ſociety. In treaſon alſo, (the higheſt crime which a member of ſociety can, as ſuch, be guilty of) no plea of coverture ſhall excuſe the wife: no preſumption of the husband's coercion ſhall extenuate her guilt. 1 Hale's P. C. 47. And this as well becauſe of the odiouſneſs and dangerous conſequence of the crime itſelf, as becauſe the huſband having broken through the moſt ſacred tie of ſocial community, by rebellion againſt the ſtate, has no right to that obedience from a wife which he himſelf as a ſubject has forgotten to pay. 4 Comm. 28, 29. (But ſhe ſhall not be conſidered criminal for receiving her huſband, though guilty of treaſon, nor for the receiving another offender jointly with her husband. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 1. § 11. in note.)—See tit. Acceſſary.

If alſo a feme commit a theft of her own voluntary act, or by the bare command of her husband, or be guilty of treaſon, murder or robbery, though in company with, or by coercion of her husband, ſhe is puniſhable. 1 Hawk. P. C c. 1. § 11.—The diſtinction between her guilt in burglary or theft and robbery, ſeems to be, that in the former, if committed through the means of her husband "ſhe cannot know what property her husband may claim in the goods taken; 10 Mod. 63;" but in robbery the wife has an opportunity of judging in what ſort of right the goods are taken. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 1. § 9. in note.

If the wife receive ſtolen goods of her own ſeparate act, without the privity of her husband, or if he knowing thereof, leave the houſe and forſake her company, ſhe alone ſhall be guilty as acceſſary. 22 Aſſ. 40: Dalt. 157: 1 Hale P. C. 516.

In inferior miſdemeanors alſo, another exception may be remarked; that a wife may be indicted and ſet in the pillory with her husband, for keeping a brothel; for this is an offence touching the domeſtick œconomy or government of the houſe, in which the wife has a principal ſhare; and is alſo ſuch an offence as the law preſumes to be generally conducted by the intrigues of the female ſex. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 12: 10 Mod. 63.

A feme covert generally ſhall anſwer, as much as if ſhe were ſole, for any offence not capital againſt the common law or ſtatute; and if it be of ſuch nature, that it may be committed by her alone, without the concurrence of her husband, ſhe may be puniſhed for it without the huſband by way of indictment, which being a proceeding grounded merely on the breach of the law, the husband ſhall not be included in it for any offence to which he is no way privy. 9 Co. 71: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 9: See Moor 813: Hob. 93: Noy 101: Savil 25: Cro. Jac. 482: 11 Co. 61.

A feme may be indicted alone for a riot. Dalt. 447.—For ſelling gin againſt the Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 23: Str. 1120.—For recuſancy. Id. ib: Hob. 96: 1 Sid. 410: 11 Co. 64: Sav. 25.—For being a common ſcold. 6 Mod. 213, 239.—For aſſault and battery. Salk. 384.—For foreſtalling. Sid. 410.—For uſury. Skin. 348.—For barratry. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 81. § 6. See c. 1: § 13.—For a forcible entry. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 64. § 35.—For keeping a gaming-houſe. 10 Mod. 335.—Keeping a bawdy-houſe, if the husband does not live with her. 1 Bac. Abr. See ante—For treſpaſs or ſlander. Keilw. 61: Ro. Ab. 251: Leon 122: Cro. Car. 376.—See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 13. in note.

A man muſt anſwer for the treſpaſſes of his wife: if a feme covert ſlander any perſon, &c. the husband and wife muſt be ſued for it, and execution is to be awarded againſt him. 11 Rep. 62.—See poſt. X.

Husband and wife may be found guilty of miſance, battery, &c. 10 Mod 63.

If the wife incur the forfeiture of a penal ſtatute, the husband may be made a party to an action or information for the ſame; as he may be generally to any ſuit for a cauſe of action given by his wife, and ſhall be liable to anſwer what ſhall be recovered thereon. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 1.

VIII. A wife is ſub poteſtate viri, and therefore her acts ſhall not bind her, unleſs ſhe levy a fine, &c. when ſhe is examined in private, whether ſhe doth it freely, or by compulſion of the husband; if baron and feme levy a fine, this will bar the feme: and where the feme is examined by writ, ſhe ſhall be bound; elſe not. 1 Lanv. Abr. 708. See ante IV.

If a common recovery be ſuffered by husband and wife of the wife's lands, this is a bar to the wife; for ſhe ought to be examined upon the recovery. Pl. Com. 514 a: 10 Co. 43 a. 1 Rol. 347. l. 19.

So if husband and wife are vouchees in a common recovery, the recovery ſhall be a bar, though the wife be not examined; for though it be proper that ſhe be examined, yet that is not neceſſary, and is frequently omitted. 1 Sid. 11: Sti. 319, 320.

A recovery, as well as a fine by a feme covert, is good to bar her, becauſe the præcipe in the recovery anſwers the writ of covenant in the fine, to bring her into court, where the examination of the judges deſtroys the preſumption of the law, that this is done by the coercion of the husband, for then it is to be preſumed they would have refuſed her. 10 Co. 43: 2 Rol. Abr. 395.

By the cuſtom in ſome cities and boroughs, a bargain and ſale by the husband and wife, where the wife is examined by the mayor or other officer, binds the wife after the husband's death. 2 Inſt. 673.—And it ſeems that by Stat. 34 Hen. 8. c. 22, all ſuch cuſtomary conveyances ſhall be of force notwithſtanding the Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 28. See ante Div. IV.

So by cuſtom in Denbigh in Wales, a ſurrender by huſband and wife, where the wife is examined in court there, binds the wife and her heirs as a fine does; and this cuſtom is not taken away by Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 26; for it is reaſonable and agreeable to ſome cuſtoms in England. Dy. 363 b.

So a ſurrender of a copyhold by husband and wife, the wife being examined by the ſteward, binds the wife. Com. Dig. tit. Baron and Feme (G. 4) there cites Litt. 274; but which is to a different purpoſe.

A wife is diſabled to make contracts, &c. 3 Inſt. 110. And if a married woman enters into bond as feme ſole, if ſhe is ſued as feme ſole, ſhe may plead Non eſt factum, and the coverture will avoid her bond. 1 Lil. Abr. 217. A feme covert may plead non aſſumpſit, and give coverture in evidence, which makes it no promiſe, &c. Raym. 395.

In caſe money be due to the husband by bill or bond, or for rent on a leaſe, and it is paid to the wife; this ſhall not prejudice him, if after payment he publickly diſagrees to it. 19 Jac. 1. B. R: 2 Shep. Abr. 426: Contra, if ſhe is uſed to receive money for him, or if it can be proved the money paid came to his uſe.

If a feme covert levies a fine of her own inheritance without her husband, this ſhall bind her and her heirs, becauſe they are eſtopped to claim any thing in the land, and cannot be admitted to ſay ſhe was covert againſt the record; but the husband may enter and defeat it, either during the coverture, to reſtore him to the freehold he held jure uxoris, or after her death to reſtore himſelf to his tenancy by the curteſy, becauſe no act of a feme covert can transfer that intereſt which the intermarriage has veſted in the husband; and if the husband avoids it during the coverture, the wife or her heirs ſhall never after be bound by it. Bro. tit. Fines, 33: 10 Co. 43: Hob. 225: 7 Co. 8: Co. Lit. 46.

Leaſe made by baron and feme, ſhall be ſaid to be the leaſe of them both, till the feme diſagrees, which ſhe cannot do in the life of the baron. Br. Agreement, pl. 6.

The examination of a feme covert is not always neceſſary in levying of fines, becauſe that being provided that ſhe may not at the inſtance of her husband make any unwary diſpoſition of her property, it follows, that when the husband and wife do take an eſtate by the fine, and part with nothing, the feme need not be examined; but where ſhe is to convey or paſs any eſtate or intereſt, either by herſelf or jointly with her husband, there ſhe ought to be examined; therefore if A. levies a fine come ceo to baron and feme, and they render to the conuzor, the feme ſhall be examined; ſo it is where ſhe takes an eſtate by the fine rendering rent. 2 Inſt., 515: 2 Rol. Abr. 17.

If baron and feme by fine ſur conceſſit grant land to J. S. for ninety-nine years, and warrant the ſaid land to J. S. during the ſaid term, and the baron dies, and J. S. is evicted by one that hath a prior title, he may thereupon bring covenant againſt the feme, notwithſtanding ſhe was covert at the time when the fine was levied. 2 Saund. 177: 1 Sid. 466. S. If

If a husband disseise another to the use of his wife, this does not make her a disseiseress, she having no will of her own, nor will any agreement of hers to the disseisin during the coverture, make her guilty of the disseisin, for the same reason: but her agreement after her husband's death will make her a disseiseress, because then she is capable of giving her consent, and that makes her tenant of the freehold, and so subject to the remedy of the disseisee. 1 Rol. Abr. 660: Bro. Disseisin 67.

But if a feme covert actually enters and commits a disseisin, either sole or together with her husband, then she is a disseiseress, because she thereby gains a wrongful possession; but such actual entry cannot be to the use of her husband or a stranger, so as to make them disseisors, because though by such entry she gains an estate, yet she has no power of transferring it to another. Co. Lit. 357: 1 Rol. Abr. 660: Bro. Disseisin 15, 67: See 8 Hen. 6. 14. cont.

If the husband, seised of lands in right of his wife, makes a lease thereof for years by indenture or deed poll, reserving rent; all the books agree this to be a good lease for the whole term, unless the wife, by some act after the husband's death, shews her dissent thereto; for if she accepts rent which becomes due after his death, the lease is thereby become absolute and unavoidable; the reason whereof is, that the wife, after her intermarriage, being by law disabled to contract for, or make any disposition of, her own possessions, as having subjected herself and her whole will to the will and power of her husband; the law therefore transfers the power of dealing and contracting for her possessions, to the husband, because no other can then intermeddle therewith, and without such power in the husband, they would be obliged to keep them in their own manurance or occupation, which might be greatly to the prejudice of both; but to prevent the husband's abusing such power, and lest he should make leases to the prejudice of his wife's inheritance, the law has left her at liberty after his death, either to affirm and make good such lease, or defeat and avoid it, as she finds it subservient to her own interest; and this she may do, though she joined in such lease, unless made pursuant to statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 28: See ante IV.: Bro. Acceptance 10: Bro. Leases 24: Cro. Jac. 332: 2 And. 42: Co. Lit. 45: Plow. 137: Cro. Jac. 563: Yelv. 1: Cro. Eliz. 769.

Husband and wife make a lease for years, by indenture, of the wife's lands, reserving rent; the lessee enters, the husband before any day of payment dies; the wife takes a second husband, and he at the day accepts the rents, and dies; and it was held, that the wife could not now avoid the lease, for by her second marriage she transferred her power of avoiding it to her husband, and his acceptance of the rent binds her, as her own act before such marriage would have done; for he by the marriage succeeded into the power and place of the wife, and what she might have done either as to affirming or avoiding such lease before marriage, the same may the husband do after the marriage. Dyer 159: 1 Rol. Abr. 475: 1 Rol. Rep. 132.

A re-delivery by the wife after the death of her husband, of a deed delivered by her during the coverture is a sufficient confirmation of such deed so as to bind her, without its being re-executed or re-attested—and circumstances alone may be equivalent to such re-delivery, though the deed be a joint deed by baron and feme affecting the wife's land; and no fine levied. Cowp. 201.

The husband being seised of copyhold lands in right of his wife in fee, makes thereof a lease for years not warranted by the custom, which is a forfeiture of her estate, yet this shall not bind the wife or her heirs after the husband's death, but that they may enter and avoid the lease, and thereby purge the forfeiture; and the diversity seems between this act, which is at an end when the lease is expired or defeated by the entry of the lord, or the wife after the husband's death, and such acts as are a continuing detriment to the inheritance, as wilful waste by the husband, which tends to the destruction of the manor; so of non-payment of rent, denial of suit or service; for such forfeitures as these bind the inheritance of the wife after the husband's death; but in the other case the husband cannot forfeit by this lease more than he can grant, which is but for his own life. 2 Rol. Rep. 344, 361, 372: Cro. Car. 7: Cro. Eliz. 149: 4 Co. 27.

A feme covert is capable of purchasing, for such an act does not make the property of the husband liable to any disadvantage, and the husband is supposed to assent to this, as being to his advantage, but the husband may disagree; and that shall avoid the purchase; but if he neither agrees nor disagrees, the purchase is good, for his conduct shall be esteemed a tacit consent, since it is to turn to his advantage; but in this case, though the husband should agree to the purchase, yet after his death she may waive it, for having no will of her own at the time of the purchase, she is not indispensibly bound by the contract; therefore if she does not, when under her own management and will, by some act express her agreement to such purchase, her heirs shall have the privilege of departing from it. Co. Lit. 3 a.

The husband gave a voluntary bond after marriage to make a jointure of a certain value on his wife; the husband accordingly makes a jointure; the wife gives up the bond; the jointure is evicted; the jointure shall be made good out of the husband's personal estate, there being no creditors in the case; and the delivery up of the bond by a feme covert could no ways bind her interest. Vern. 427. pl. 402.

A feme covert agrees to sell her inheritance, so as she might have 200 l. of the money secured to her; the land is sold, and the money put out in a trustee's name accordingly; this money shall not be liable to the husband's debts, nor shall any promise by the wife, to that purpose, subsequent to the first original agreement, be binding in that behalf. 2 Vern. 64, 65. pl. 58; Trin. 1688.

It is a general rule that a feme covert acting with respect to her separate property, is competent to act in all respects as if she were a feme sole. 2 Vez. 190: 1 Bro. C. R. 20; and see 1 Vez. 163.—Where the wife, being authorised by settlement to dispose of her separate estate, contracted to sell it, the court of Chancery will bind her to a specific performance. 1 Vez. 517: 1 Bro. C. R. 20. —So the bond of a feme covert jointly with her husband shall bind her separate estate. 1 Bro. C. R. 16: 2 Vez. 190.

IX. In thoſe caſes where the debt or cauſe of action will ſurvive to the wife, the husband and wife are regularly to join in action; as in recovering debts due to the wife before marriage; in actions relating to her freehold or inheritance, or injuries done to the perſon of the wife. 1 Rol. Abr. 347: 2 Mod. 269.

But if a feme ſole hath a rent-charge, and rent is in arrear and ſhe marries, and the baron diſtrains for this rent, and thereupon a reſcous is made, this is a tort to the baron himſelf, and he may have an action alone. Cro. Eliz. 439: Owen 82. S. P: Moor 584. S. C.

So if a feme ſole hath right to have common for life, and ſhe takes husband, and ſhe is hindered in taking the common, he may have an action alone without his wife. it being only to recover damages. 2 Bulſt. 14.

But if baron and feme are diſſeiſed of the lands of the feme, they muſt join in action for the recovery of this land. 1 Bulſt. 21.

The baron may have an action alone upon the Stat. 5 R. 2. ſt. 1. c. 8, for entering into the land of the feme; treſpaſs and taking charters of the inheritance of the feme; quare impedit, &c. But for perſonal torts, they muſt join, though the baron is to have the damages. 1 Danv. 709: 1 Rol. Rep. 360. The husband is to join in actions for battery to the wife; and a wife may not bring any action for wrong to her without her husband. Co. Lit. 132, 326. An action for a battery on the wife, brought by husband and wife, muſt be laid to the damage of both. 2 Lord Raym. 1209. For an injury done to the wife alone, action cannot be maintained by the husband alone, without her; but for aſſault and debauching or lying with the wife, or for a loſs and injury done to the husband, in depriving him of the converſation and ſervice of his wife, he alone may bring an action; and theſe laſt actions are laid for aſſault, and detaining, &c. the wife, per quod conſortium amiſit, &c. Cro. Jac. 538: See Yelv. 89.

For taking any thing from the wife, the husband only is to bring the action, who has the property; for the wife hath not the property. In all caſes where the feme ſhall not have the thing recovered, but the huſband only, he alone is to bring the action. 1 Rol. Rep. 360, except as above, &c. For a perſonal duty to the wife, the baron only may bring the action: and the husband is intitled to the fruits of his wife's labour, for which he may bring quantum meruit. 1 Lill. Abr. 227: 1 Salk. 114. In caſe, before marriage, a feme enters into articles concerning her eſtate, ſhe is as a ſeparate perſon; and the husband may be plaintiff in equity, againſt the wife. Prec. in Chan. 24.

Where the feme is adminiſtratrix, the ſuit muſt be in both their names, for by the intermarriage the husband hath authority to intermeddle with the goods as well as the wife; but in the declaration the granting adminiſtration to the feme muſt be ſet forth. Vid. the Books of Entries, and Godb. 40. pl. 44.

In action for goods which the feme hath as executrix, they muſt join, to the end that the damages thereby recovered may accrue to her as executrix in lieu of the goods. Went. Off. Ex. 207.

In an action upon a trover before marriage, and a converſion after, the baron and feme ought to join; for this action, as a treſpaſs, diſaffirms the property; but the baron alone ought to bring a replevin, detinue, &c. for the allegations admit and affirm a property in the feme at the time of the marriage, which by conſequence muſt have veſted in the baron. 1 Sid. 172: 1 Keb. 641. S. C.: 1 Vent. 261: 2 Lev. 107. S. P; and that he may join the wife at his election.

If A. declares, that the defendant being indebted to him and his wife, as executrix to one J. S. in conſideration that A. would forbear to ſue him for three months, aſſumed, &c. and avers that he forbore, and that his wife is ſtill alive, the action is well maintainable by the huſband alone, for this is on a new contract, to which the wife is a ſtranger. Carth. 462: 1 Salk. 117: Yelv. 84: Cro. Jac. 110. S. P.

Where a right of action doth accrue to a woman before marriage, as where a bond is made to her and forfeited, there, if ſhe marry, ſhe muſt be joined with the husband in an action of debt againſt the obligor. Owen 82.

In all actions real for the land of the wife, the husband and wife ought to join. R. 1 Bulſt. 21. So in actions perſonal for a choſe in action, due to the wife before coverture. 1 Rol. 347. l. 53: Cro. El. 537: Vide Com. Dig.

In the civil law the husband and the wife are conſidered as two diſtinct perſons; and may have ſeparate eſtates, contracts, debts and injuries: and therefore in our eccleſiaſtical courts a woman may ſue and be ſued without her husband. 2 Ro. Ab. 298. See tit. Action.

X. The husband is by law anſwerable for all actions for which his wife ſtood attached at the time of the coverture, and alſo for all torts and treſpaſſes during coverture, in which caſes the action muſt be joint againſt them both; for if ſhe alone were ſued, it might be a means of making the husband's property liable; without giving him an opportunity of defending himſelf. Co. Lit. 133: Doctr. Placit. 3: 2 Hen. 6. 4.

If goods come to a feme covert by trover, the action may be brought againſt husband and wife, but the converſion may be laid only in the husband, becauſe the wife cannot convert goods to her own uſe; and the action is brought againſt both, becauſe both were concerned in the treſpaſs of taking them. See Co. Lit. 351: 1 Rol. Abr. 6. pl. 7: Yelv. 166: Noy 79: 1 Leon 312: Cro. Car. 254, 494: 1 Rol. Abr. 348. But in debt upon a devaſtavit againſt baron and feme executrix, it ſhall not be laid quod devaſtaverunt, for a feme covert cannot waſte. 2 Lev. 145.

An action on the caſe was brought againſt baron and feme, for retaining and keeping the ſervant of the plaintiff, and judgment accordingly. 2 Lev. 63.

If a leaſe for life or years be made to baron and feme, reſerving rent, an action of debt for rent arrear may be brought againſt both; for this is for the advantage of the wife. 1 Rol. Abr. 348.

If an action be brought againſt an husband and wife for the debt of the wife, when ſole, and the plaintiff recovers judgment, the ca. ſa. ſhall iſſue to take both the husband and wife in execution. Moor 704.—But if the action was originally brought againſt herſelf when ſole, and pending the ſuit ſhe marries, the ca ſa. ſhall be awarded againſt her only, and not againſt the husband. Cro. Jac. 323.—Yet if judgment be recovered againſt an husband and wife, for the contract, nay even for the perſonal miſbehaviour (Cro. Car. 513,) of the wife, during her coverture, the ca. ſa. ſhall iſſue againſt the husband only: which is (ſays Mr. J. Blackſtone) one of the many great privileges of Engliſh wives. 3 Comm. 414: See 3 Wilſ.

124.—See tits. Arreſt, Bail, Execution, Action, &c.—But in an action againſt husband and wife, for an aſſault by the wife, it was held that both may be taken in execution. 1 Wilſ. 149: See Eſpinaſſe's N. P. 327.

Where a woman before marriage becomes bound for the payment of a ſum of money, and on her marriage ſeparate property is ſettled on her, if the obligee can have no remedy againſt the husband, the wife's ſeparate property is bound. But the obligee muſt firſt endeavour to recover againſt the husband by ſuing him. 1 Bro. C. R. 17. in note.

XI. If baron and feme are divorced cauſâ adulterii, which is a divorce à menſâ & thoro, they continue baron and feme: it is otherwiſe in a divorce à vinculo matrimonii, which diſſolves the marriage.

The feme, after divorce, ſhall re-have the goods which ſhe had before marriage. Br. Coverture, pl. 82. D. 13. pl. 63. per Fitzherbert: Keilw. 122 b. pl. 75.

But if the husband had given or ſold them without colluſion before the divorce, there is no remedy; but if by colluſion, ſhe may aver the colluſion, and have detinue for the whole, whereof the property may be known; and as for the reſt, which conſiſts of money, &c. ſhe ſhall ſue in the ſpiritual court. Br. Deraignment and Divorce, pl. 1. cites 26 H. 8. 7.

If a man is bound to a feme ſole, and after marries her, and after they are divorced, the obligation is revived. Br. Coverture, pl. 82. Becauſe the divorce being à vinculo matrimonii, by reaſon of ſome prior impediment, as precontract, &c. makes them never husband and wife ab initio; but if the husband had made a feoffment in fee of the lands of his wife, and then the divorce had been, that would have been a diſcontinuance as well as if the huſband had died, becauſe there the intereſt of a third perſon had been concerned, but between the parties themſelves it will have relation to deſtroy the husband's title to the goods, and it proves no more than the common rule, viz. that relations will make a nullity between the parties themſelves, but not amongſt ſtrangers. Lord Raym. 521: Hil. 11 W. 3.

If a man gives lands in tail to baron and feme, and they have iſſue, and after, divorce is ſued, now they have only frank-tenement, and the iſſue ſhall not inherit. Br. Tail et Dones, &c. pl. 9.

If the baron and feme purchaſe jointly and are diſſeiſed, and the baron releaſes, and after they are divorced, the feme ſhall have the moiety, though before the divorce there were no moieties; for the divorce converts it into moieties. Br. Deraignment, pl. 18. cites 32 Hen. 8.

If baron alien the wife's land, and then there is a divorce cauſa præcontractûs, or any other divorce which diſſolves the marriage à vinculo matrimonii, the wife during the life of the baron may enter by ſtatute 32 Hen. 8. c. 28: Dyer 13. pl. 61: But vide Ld. Raym. 521.

But if after ſuch alienation and divorce the baron dies, ſhe is put to her cui in vita ante divortium; and yet the words of the ſtatute are, that ſuch alienation ſhall be void, but this ſhall be intended to toll the cui in vita. Mo. 58. pl. 164: Paſch. 8 Eliz. Broughton v. Conway.

Divorce cauſâ adulterii of the husband; afterwards the wife ſues in the ſpiritual court for a legacy; the executor pleads the releaſe of the baron; the releaſe binds the wife, for the vinculum matrimonii continues. Cro. Eliz. 908: Vide 1 Salk. 115.

Holt held, that if feme covert after divorce à menſâ & thoro, ſues for a legacy, which, if recovered, comes to her husband, there the husband may releaſe it, becauſe there is no alimony: and if he may releaſe the duty, he may releaſe the coſts. 1 Salk. 115. pl. 4, S. C. & S. P. and ſee 1 Vern. 261.

A divorce was à menſâ & thoro, and then the husband dies inteſtate. The wife by bill prayed aſſiſtance as to dower and adminiſtration (it being granted to another) and diſtribution. The Maſter of the Rolls bid her go to law to try if ſhe was entitled to her dower, there being no impediment, and as to that diſmiſſed the bill; and as to the adminiſtration, the granting that is in the eccleſiaſtical court; but the diſtribution more properly belongs to this court; but ſince in that court ſhe is ſuch a wife as is not intitled to adminiſtration, he diſmiſſed the bill as to diſtribution too, and ſaid, if they could repeal that ſentence, ſhe then would be intitled to diſtribution. Ch. Prec. 111.

In caſe of a divorce à menſâ & thoro the law allows alimony to the wife: which is that allowance which is made to a woman for her ſupport out of the husband's eſtate, being ſettled at the diſcretion of the eccleſiaſtical judge, on conſideration of all the circumſtances of the caſe.—And the eccleſiaſtical court is the proper court in which to ſue for alimony. Het. 69.—This is ſometimes called her eſtovers, for which, if the husband refuſes payment there is (beſides the ordinary proceſs of excommunication in the eccleſiaſtical court) a writ at common law de eſtoveriis habendis, in order to recover it. 1 Lev. 6. It is generally proportioned to the rank and quality of the parties; but in caſe of an elopement and living with an adulterer, the law allows her no alimony. Cowel. 1 Inſt. 235 a: 12 Rep. 30.

A bill may be brought in Chancery for a ſpecifick performance of an agreement by the husband with a third perſon, for a ſeparate maintenance of the wife; notwithſtanding that alimony belongs to the ſpiritual court. Treat. Eq. 39.

The court of chancery has decreed the wife a ſeparate maintenance out of a truſt fund on account of the cruelty and ill-behaviour of the husband, though there was no evidence of a divorce or agreement that the fund in diſpute ſhould be ſo applied. 2 Vern. 752.—And in another caſe the husband having quitted the kingdom, Lord Hardwicke decreed the wife the intereſt of a truſt fund till he ſhould return and maintain her as he ought. 2 Atk. 96.—Yet in a ſubſequent caſe Lord Hardwicke obſerves, that he could find no decree to compel a huſband to pay a ſeparate maintenance to his wife, except upon an agreement between them, and even then unwillingly. 3 Atk. 547.—And this latter opinion ſeems moſt reconcileable with principle; for the caſe of a divorce propter ſævitiam (See 2 Vern. 493,) may be conſidered as an implied agreement; and if there be an expreſs or implied agreement, there ſeems no doubt, but that courts of equity may, concurrently with the ſpiritual court, in proceeding upon it, decree a ſeparate maintenance. Wood's Inſt. 62: 2 Vern. 386: Guth v. Guth, MSS. —The ſpiritual court however would be the more proper juriſdiction if it acted in rem. Lit. Rep. 78: 2 Atk. 511.—But if after an agreement between husband and wife to live ſeparate, they appear to have cohabited, equity will consider the agreement as waived thereby. Fletcher v. Fletcher, Mich. 1788.—See Fonblanque's Treat. Eq. 96, 7.

Where, on a separation, lands are conveyed by the baron in trust for the feme, chancery will not bar the feme from suing the baron in the trustee's name, and a surrender or release by the baron shall not be made use of against the feme. 2 Chan. Ca. 102.

A woman living separate from her husband, and having a separate maintenance, contracts debts. The creditors, by a bill in this court, may follow the separate maintenance whilst it continues; but when that is determined, and the husband dead, they cannot by a bill charge the jointure with the debts: by Lord Keeper North; and the rather, because the executor of the husband, who may have paid the debt, is no party. Vern. 326.

Where the husband, during his cohabitation with the wife, makes her an allowance of so much a-year for her expences, if she out of her own good housewifery saves any thing out of it, this will be the husband's estate, and he shall reap the benefit of his wife's frugality; because when he agrees to allow her a certain sum yearly, the end of the agreement is, that she may be provided with clothes and other necessaries, and whatsoever is saved out of this, redounds to the husband; per Lord Keeper Finch. Freem. Rep. 304.

A term was created on the marriage of A. with B. for raising 200*l.* a-year for pin-money, and in the settlement A. covenanted for payment of it. There was an arrear of one year at A.'s death, which was decreed, because of the covenant to be charged on a trust-estate settled for payment of debts, it being in arrear for one year only; secus had it been in arrear for several years. Chan. Prec. 26.

The plaintiff's relation (to whom he was heir) allowed the wife pin-money; which being in arrear, he gave her a note to this purpose; I am indebted to my wife 100*l. which became due to her such a day*; after by his will he makes provision out of his lands for payment of all his debts, and all monies which he owed to any person in trust for his wife; and the question was, whether the 100*l.* was to be paid within this trust; and my Lord Keeper decreed not; for in point of law it was no debt, because a man cannot be indebted to his wife; and it was not money due to any in trust for her. Hil. 1701. between Cornwall and the earl of Montague. But quære; for the testator looked on this as a debt, and seems to intend to provide for it by his will. Abr. Eq. Ca. 66.

Where the wife hath a separate allowance made before marriage, and buys jewels with the money arising thereout, they will not be assets liable to the husband's debts. Chan. Prec. 295.

Where there is a provision for the wife's separate use for clothes, if the husband finds her clothes, this will bar the wife's claim; nor is it material whether the allowance be provided out of the estate which was originally the husband's, or out of what was her own estate; for in both cases her not having demanded it for several years together, shall be construed a consent from her that he should receive it; per Lord C. Macclesfield. 2 P. Wms. 82, 83.

So where 50*l. a year was reserved for clothes and private expences*, secured by a term for years, and ten years after the husband died, and soon after the wife died; the executors in equity demanded 500*l.* for ten years arrear of this pin-money; but it appearing that the husband maintained her, and no proof that she ever demanded it, the claim was disallowed. 2 P. Wms. 341.

BAR, or BARR, Lat. barra. Fr. barre.] In a legal sense, is a Plea or peremptory exception of a defendant, sufficient to destroy the plaintiff's action. And it is divided into bar to common intendment, and bar special; bar temporary, and perpetual: bar to a common intendment is an ordinary or general bar, which usually is a bar to the declaration of the plaintiff: bar special is that which is more than ordinary, and falls out upon some special circumstance of the fact, as to the case in hand. Terms de Ley.

Bar temporary is such a bar that is good for the present, but may afterwards fail: and bar perpetual is that which overthrows the action of the plaintiff for ever. Plowd. 26. But a plea in bar, not giving a full answer to all the matter contained in the plaintiff's declaration is not good. 1 Lil. Abr. 211. If one be barred by plea to the writ, or to the action of the writ, he may have the same writ again, or his right action: but if the plea in bar, be to the action itself, and the plaintiff is barred by judgment, &c. it is a bar for ever in personal actions. 6 Rep. 7. And a recovery in debt is a good bar to action on the case for the same thing: also a recovery on assumpsit in case, is a good bar in debt, &c. Cro. Jac. 110: 4 Rep. 94.

In all actions personal, as debt, account, &c. a bar is perpetual, and in such case the party hath no remedy, but by writ of error or attaint; but if a man is barred in a real action or judgment, yet he may have an action of as high a nature, because it concerns his inheritance; as for instance, if he is barred in a formedon in descender, yet he may have a formedon in the remainder, &c. 6 Rep. 7. It has been resolved, that a bar in any action real or personal by judgment upon demurrer, verdict, or confession, is a bar to that action, or any action of the like nature for ever: but, according to Pemberton Chief Justice, this is to be understood, when it doth appear that the evidence in one action would maintain the other; for otherwise the court shall intend that the party hath mistaken his action. Skin. 57, 58.

Bar to a common intent is good: and if an executor be sued for his testator's debt, and he pleadeth that he had no goods left in his hands at the day the writ was taken out against him, this is a good bar to a common intendment, till it is shewn that there are goods: but if the plaintiff can shew by way of replication, that more goods have fallen into his hands since that time, then, except the defendant alledge a better bar, he shall be condemned in the action. Plowd. 26: Kitch. 215: Bro. tit. Barre.

There is a bar material, and a bar at large: bar material may be also called special bar; as when one, in stay of the plaintiff's action, pleadeth some particular matter, viz. a descent from him that was owner of the land, &c. a feoffment made by the ancestor of the plaintiff, or the like: a bar at large is, when the defendant, by way of exception, doth not traverse the plaintiff's title, by pleading, nor confess, nor avoid it, but only makes to himself a title in his bar. Kitch. 68: 5 H. 7. 29.

See titles Abatement, Action, Judgment; and especially Pleading.

This word Bar is likewise used for the place where serjeants and counsellors at law stand to plead the causes in in court; and where prisoners are brought to answer their indictments, &c. whence our lawyers, that are called to the bar, are termed barristers. 24 H. 8. c. 24.

BARRASTER, BARRISTER, barrasterius.] A counsellor learned in the law, admitted to plead at the bar, and there to take upon him the protection and defence of clients. They are termed jurisconsulti; and in other countries called licentiati in jure: and antiently barristers at law were called apprentices of the law, (from the French apprendre to learn,) in Lat. apprenticii juris nobiliores. Forteſc. The time before they ought to be called to the bar, by the ancient orders, was eight years, now reduced to five; and the exercises done by them, (if they were not called ex gratiâ,) were twelve grand moots performed in the inns of Chancery, in the time of the grand readings, and twenty-four petty moots in the term times, before the readers of the respective inns: and a barrister newly called was to attend the six (or four) next long vacations the exercise of the house, viz. in Lent and Summer, and was thereupon for those three (or two) years stiled a vacation barrister. Also they are called utter barristers, i. e. pleaders outer the bar, to distinguish them from benchers, or those that have been readers, who are sometimes admitted to plead within the bar, as the king, queen, or prince's counsel are.

From the degrees of barristers and serjeants at law, (see title Serjeant) some are usually selected to be his Majesty's counsel; the two principal of whom are called his Attorney and Solicitor-General.—The first king's counsel under the degree of serjeant, was Sir Francis Bacon, who was made so honoris causâ, without either patent or fee; so that the first of the modern order, who are now the sworn servants of the crown with a standing salary, seems to have been Sir Francis North, afterwards Lord Keeper to Charles II. These king's counsel must not be employed in any cause against the crown without special licence. A custom now prevails of granting letters patent of precedence to such barristers as the crown thinks proper to honour with that mark of distinction, whereby they are entitled to such rank and pre-audience as are assigned in their respective patents, sometimes next after the king's Attorney-General, but usually next after his Majesty's counsel then being.—These, as well as the queen's Attorney and Solicitor-General, rank promiscuously with the king's counsel, and together with them sit within the bar of the respective courts; but receive no salaries and are not sworn, and therefore are at liberty to be retained in causes against the crown. And all other serjeants and barristers indiscriminately, (except in the court of Common Pleas, where serjeants only are admitted in term time) may take upon them the protection and defence of any suitors whether plaintiff or defendant. 3 Comm. 27, 28.

A counsel can maintain no action for his fees; (Davis Pref. 22: 1 C. R. 38;) which are given not as a salary or hire, but as a mere gratuity, which a barrister cannot demand without doing wrong to his reputation. Davis 23.

In order to encourage due freedom of speech in the lawful defence of their clients, and at the same time to give a check to unseemly licentiousness, it hath been holden, that a counsel is not answerable for any matter by him spoken, relative to the cause in hand, and suggested in his client's instructions; although it should reflect upon the reputation of another, and even prove absolutely groundless: but if he mentions an untruth of his own invention, or even upon instructions, if it be impertinent to the cause in hand, he is then liable to an action from the party injured. Cro. Jac. 90. And counsel guilty of deceit or collusion, are punishable by Stat. Weſtm. 1. 3 E. 1. c. 28, with imprisonment for a year and a day, and perpetual silence in the courts; and the latter punishment is still sometimes inflicted for gross misdemeanours in practice. Raym. 376: 3 Comm. 29.

Barristers, who constantly attend the King's Bench, &c. are to have the privilege of being sued in transitory actions in the county of Middlesex. But the court will not change the venue because some of the defendants are barristers. Str. 610. See title Privilege.—Pleas, before they are filed, must be signed by a barrister or serjeant. See title Abatement, Pleading.

BARRATOR, or BARRETOR, Lat. barractator, Fr. barrateur.] A common mover of suits and quarrels, either in courts, or elsewhere in the country, that is himself never quiet, but at variance with one or other. Lambard derives the word barretor from the Lat. balatro, a vile knave: but the proper derivation is from the Fr. barrateur, i. e. a deceiver, and this agrees with the description of a common barretor in Lord Coke's Reports, viz. that he is a common mover and maintainer of suits in disturbance of the peace, and in taking and detaining the possession of houses and lands, or goods by false inventions, &c. 8 Rep. 37.

However it seems clear that no general indictment, charging the defendant with being a common oppressor, and disturber of the peace, and stirrer up of strife among neighbours is good, without adding the words common barretor, which is a term of art appropriated by law to this purpose. 1 Mod. 288: 1 Sid. 282: Cro. Jac. 526: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 81. § 9.

A common barretor is said to be the most dangerous oppressor in the law; for he oppresseth the innocent by colour of law, which was made to protect them from oppression. 8 Rep. 37. No one can be a barretor in respect of one act only; for every indictment for such crime must charge the defendant with being communis barractator, and conclude contra pacem, &c. And it hath been holden, that a man shall not be adjudged a barretor for bringing any number of suits in his own right, though they are vexatious, especially if there be any colour for them; for if they prove false, he shall pay the defendant costs. 1 Rol. Abr. 355: 3 Mod. 98.

A barrister at law entertaining a person in his house, and bringing several actions in his name, where nothing was due, was found guilty of barretry. 3 Mod. 97. An attorney is in no danger of being convicted of barretry, in respect of his maintaining another in a groundless action, to the commencing whereof he was no way privy. Ibid. A common solicitor, who solicits suits, is a common barretor, and may be indicted thereof, because it is no profession in law. 1 Danv. Abr. 725.

The punishment for this offence in a common person is by fine and imprisonment; but if the offender (as is too frequently the case) belongs to the profession of the law, a barretor who is thus able as well as willing to do mischief, ought also to be disabled from practising for the future. See the Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 29, under title Attornies at Law: 4 Comm. 134: and see Stat. 34 E. 3. c. 1: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 81.

It ſeems to be the ſettled practice not to ſuffer the proſecutor to go on in the trial of an indictment of this kind, without giving the defendant a note of the particular matters which he intends to prove againſt him; for otherwiſe it would be impoſſible to prepare a defence againſt ſo general and uncertain a charge, which may be proved by ſuch a multiplicity of different inſtances. 5 Mod. 18: 1 Ld. Raym. 490: 12 Mod. 516: 2 Atk. 340: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 81. § 13.

To this head may alſo be referred another offence of equal malignity and audaciouſneſs, that of ſuing another in the name of a fictitious plaintiff; either one not in being at all, or one who is ignorant of the ſuit. This offence, if committed in any of the king's ſuperiour courts, is left, as a high contempt, to be puniſhed at their diſcretion. But in courts of a lower degree, where the crime is equally pernicious, but the authority of the judges not equally extenſive, it is directed by Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 2, to be puniſhed by ſix months' impriſonment, and treble damages to the party injured. 4 Comm. 134.

BARREL, barillum.] A meaſure of wine, ale, oil, &c. Of wine it contains the eighth part of a tun, the fourth part of a pipe, and the moiety of a hogſhead; that is, thirty-one gallons and a half. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 13.—Of beer it contains thirty-ſix gallons; and of ale, thirty-two gallons. Stats. 23 H. 8. c. 4: 12 Car. 2. c. 23.—The aſſiſe of herring-barrels is thirty-two gallons wine meaſure, containing in every barrel uſually a thouſand full herrings. Stat. 13 El. c. 11.—The eel barrel contains thirty gallons. 2 H. 6. c. 11.

BARRIERS, Fr. barrieres; jeu de barres, i. e. palæſtra.] A martial exerciſe of men armed and fighting together with ſhort ſwords, within certain bars or rails which ſeparated them from the ſpectators; it is now diſuſed here in England. Cowel. There are likewiſe barrier towns, or places of defence on the frontiers of kingdoms.

BARROW, from the Sax. boerg, a heap of earth.] A large hillock or mount, raiſed or caſt up in many parts of England, which ſeem to have been a mark of the Roman tumuli, or ſepulchres of the dead. The Sax. beora was commonly taken for a grove of trees on the top of a hill. Kennet's Gloſſ.

To BARTER, from the Fr. barater, or Span. baxatar, circumvenire.] To exchange one commodity for another, or truck wares for wares. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 9. Becauſe probably they that exchange in this manner do endeavour, for the moſt part, one to over-reach and circumvent the other.—So Bartery the ſubſtantive in Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 7, of Bankrupts.

BARTON, or BERTON, A word uſed in Devonſhire, for the demeſne lands of a manor; ſometimes the manor-houſe itſelf; and in ſome places for out-houſes and fold-yards. In the Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 12, barton lands, and demeſne lands, are uſed as ſynonima. Blount ſays it always ſignifies a farm diſtinct from a manſion—and bertonarii were farmers, huſbandmen that held bartons at the will of the lord.—In the Weſt, they called a great farm a berton or barton; and a ſmall farm, a living. Blountin v. Barton and Berton.

BAS CHEVALIERS, Low or inferior knights by tenure of a baſe military fee, as diſtinguiſhed from bannerets, the chief or ſuperior knights: hence we call our ſimple knights, viz. knights batchelors, bas chevaliers. Kennet's Gloſſ. to Paroch. Antiq.

BASE COURT, Fr. cour baſſe.] Is any inferior court, that is not of record, as the court baron, &c. Kitch. fol. 95, 96.

BASE ESTATE, Fr. bas eſtat.] Or Baſe Tenure. That eſtate which baſe tenants have in their lands. And baſe tenants, according to Lambard, are thoſe who perform villainous ſervices to their lords; but there is a difference between a baſe eſtate and villenage; for to hold in pure villenage is to do all that the lord will command him: and if a copy-holder have but a baſe eſtate, he not holding by the performance of every commandment of his lord, cannot be ſaid to hold in villenage. See Kitch. 41.—This Dict. title Tenures.

BASE FEE, Is a tenure in fee at the will of the lord, diſtinguiſhed from ſocage free tenure: but Lord Coke ſays, that a baſe fee, or qualified fee, is what may be defeated by limitation, or on entry, &c. Co. Lit. 1, 18. Baſſa tenura, or baſe tenure, was a holding by villenage, or other cuſtomary ſervice, oppoſed to alta tenura, the higher tenure in capite or by military ſervice, &c.—See tit. Tenure; Tail.

BAS VILLE, The ſuburbs or inferior town, as uſed in France.

I. 1. A baſtard by our Engliſh laws, is one that is not only begotten, but born out of lawful matrimony. The civil and canon laws do not allow a child to remain a baſtard, if the parents afterwards intermarry; and herein they differ moſt materially from our law; which though not ſo ſtrict as to require that the child ſhall be begotten, yet makes it an indiſpenſible condition to make it legitimate, that it ſhall be born after lawful wedlock. 1 Comm. 454: 2 Inſt. 96, 7.

Blackſtone

Blackſtone obſerves, that the reaſon of our Engliſh law is ſurely much ſuperiour to that of the Roman, if we conſider the principal end and deſign of the marriage contract taken in a civil light. He then recapitulates ſeveral motives, which he concludes we may ſuppoſe actuated the Peers at the parliament of Merton, when they refuſed to enact that children born before marriage ſhould be eſteemed legitimate. 1 Comm. 456.—and ſee 1 Inſt. 244 b: and 245 a. in the notes.

If a man marries a woman groſly big with child by another, and within three days after, ſhe is delivered, the iſſue is no baſtard. 1 Danv. Abr. 729. If a child is born within a day after marriage between parties of full age, if there be no apparent impoſſibility that the huſband ſhould be the father of it, the child is no baſtard, but ſuppoſed to be the child of the huſband. 1 Rol. Abr. 358.

As all children born before matrimony are baſtards; ſo are all children born ſo long after the death of the huſband, that by the uſual courſe of geſtation they could not be begotten by him. But this being a matter of ſome uncertainty, the law is not exact as to a few days. Cro. Jac. 451.—See 1 Inſt. 123 b. in note 1 and 2; where the time of geſtation as connected with this queſtion is enquired into at great length, and with exquiſite nicety and accuracy. On the whole it appears that what is commonly conſidered as the uſual period is forty weeks, or 280 days.—But though the child is born ſome time after, it only affords preſumption, not proof of illegitimacy. The information of the late celebrated anatomiſt Dr. Hunter, is alſo given, from which we learn, 1. That the uſual period is nine calendar months; (from 270 to 280 days;) but there is very commonly a difference of one, two, or three weeks.—2. A child may be born alive at any time, from three months, but we ſee none born with powers of coming to manhood, or of being reared before ſeven calendar months, or near that time; at ſix months it cannot be.—3. The Doctor ſaid he had known a woman bear a living child, in a perfectly natural way, fourteen days later than nine calendar months; and he believed two women to have been delivered of a child alive, in a natural way, above ten calendar months from the hour of conception.

This caſe of birth of children after the death of the huſband, gives occaſion to the writ de ventre inſpiciendo. See title Ventre in piciendo.

But if a man dies, and his widow ſoon after marries again, and a child is born within ſuch a time, as that by the courſe of nature it might have been the child of either huſband, in this caſe he is ſaid to be more than ordinarily legitimate, for he may when he arrives to years of diſcretion, chooſe which of the fathers he pleaſes. 1 Inſt. 8. For this reaſon by the ancient Saxon laws, in imitation of the civil law, a widow was forbidden to marry for twelve months. Ll. Ethel. A D. 1008: Ll. Canut. c. 71: 1 Comm. 456, 7.—See 1 Inſt. 8 a. in note 7. where it is ſaid, "Brook queſtions this doctrine, from which it ſeems as if he thought it reaſonable that the circumſtances of the caſe, inſtead of the choice of the iſſue, ſhould determine who is the father." See Bro. Ab. Baſtardy, p. 18: Palm. 10.—See further, 1 Inſt. 123 b. in note 1, where additional authorities are cited, to ſhew that in this caſe a jury ought to decide on the queſtion, according to proof of the woman's condition.

Children born during wedlock, may alſo in ſome circumſtances be baſtards. As if the huſband be out of the kingdom of England, (or as the law ſomewhat looſely phraſes it, extra quatuor maria,) for above nine months, ſo that no acceſs to his wife can be preſumed, her iſſue during that period ſhall be baſtards. 1 Inſt. 244. But generally, during the coverture, acceſs of the huſband ſhall be preſumed, unleſs the contrary can be ſhewn. Salk. 123: 3 P. Wms. 276: Stra. 925; which is ſuch a negative as can only be proved by ſhewing him to be elſewhere; for the general rule is præſumitur pro legitimatione. 5 Rep. 98.—See alſo 1 Inſt. 126 a. in note 2; and as to theſe phraſes infrà (or more claſſically intrà) & extrà, quatuor maria, ſee ſome incomplete notes in 1 Inſt. 108 a. note 6; and 261 a. note 1.—Although a feme covert may on a queſtion of baſtardy give evidence of the fact of criminal converſation, yet ſhe ſhall not be admitted to prove the non-acceſs of her huſband. Annal. 79.

There are determinations by which it appears that the child of a married woman may be proved a baſtard by other circumſtantial evidence than that of the huſband's non-acceſs. 4 Term Rep. 251: 356.

In a divorce à menſâ & thoro, if the wife has children, they are baſtards; for the law will preſume the huſband and wife conformable to the ſentence of ſeparation, unleſs acceſs be proved; but in a voluntary ſeparation by agreement, the law will ſuppoſe acceſs unleſs the negative be ſhewn; and the children, primâ facie ſhall not be eſteemed baſtards. Salk. 123.—In caſe of divorce in the ſpiritual court à vinculo matrimonii, all the iſſue born during the coverture are baſtards; becauſe ſuch divorce is always upon ſome cauſe, that rendered the marriage unlawful and null from the beginning. 1 Inſt. 235.

If a man or woman marry a ſecond wife or huſband, the firſt being living, and have iſſue by ſuch ſecond wife or huſband, the iſſue is a baſtard. See Bott, (Ed. 1793 by Conſt.,) 397. pl. 521. Before the ſtatute 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 21, one was adjudged a baſtard, Quia filius ſacerdotis.

A man hath iſſue a ſon by a woman before marriage, and afterwards marries the ſame woman, and hath iſſue a ſecond ſon born after the marriage; the firſt of theſe is termed in law a baſtard eigné, and the ſecond a mulier, or mulier puiſné; by the common law, as hath been ſaid, ſuch baſtard eigné is as incapable of inheriting, as if the father and mother had never married; but yet there is one caſe in which his iſſue was let into the ſucceſſion, and that was by the conſent of the lord and perſon legitimate; as if upon the death of the father the baſtard eigné enters, and the mulier during his whole life never diſturbs him, he cannot upon the death of the baſtard eigné enter upon his iſſue. Lit. ſect. 399: Co. Lit. 245.

To exclude the mulier from the inheritance, there muſt not only be an uninterrupted poſſeſſion of the baſtard eigné during his life, but a deſcent to his iſſue. Co. Lit. 244: 1 Rol. Abr. 624.

No man can baſtardize another after his death, that was a mulier by the laws of holy church, and who carried the reputation of legitimate during his life; for a man muſt be baſtardized by the rules of the civil or common law: by the rules of the civil law, this perſon is by ſuppoſition legitimate; and if the common law be made the judge, he cannot be baſtardized; for it is a rule of common law, that a perſonal defect dies with the perſon, and cannot after his death be objected to his ſucceſſor that re-preſents him; and this rule of law was taken from the humanity of the antients, which would not allow the calumny of the dead; as alſo from an important reaſon of convenience, for pedigrees are often derived through ſeveral perſons, concerning whom there remains little knowledge or remembrance of any thing, but only of their being; and therefore it were an eaſy matter to throw on them the aſperſion of baſtardy by any forged evidence, which cannot be confronted by oppoſite proof; and ſo it is fit to limit a time in which all proofs of baſtardy are to be diſallowed. 7 Co. 44: Jenk. Rep. 268: 2 Brownl. 42: Co. Lit. 33 a: Lit. ſect. 399: Co. Lit. 245.

In the caſe of Pride v. The Earls of Bath and Montague, it was held that the rule that a perſon ſhall not be baſtardized after his death, is only good in the caſe of baſtard eigné and mulier puiſné 1 Salk. 120: 3 Lev. 410.

If there be an apparent impoſſibility of procreation on the part of the huſband, natural or accidental, as in caſe of the huſband being only eight years old, or diſabled by diſeaſe, there the iſſue of the wife ſhall be a baſtard. 1 Inſt. 244.

The rights of a baſtard are very few, being only ſuch as he can acquire; for he can inherit nothing, being looked upon as the ſon of nobody, and ſometimes called filius nullius, ſometimes filius populi. Forteſc. de Ll. c. 40. Yet he may gain a ſurname by reputation, though he has none by inheritance. 1 Inſt. 3, 123: 6 Co. 65.

Where a remainder is limited to the eldeſt ſon of Jane S. whether legitimate or illegitimate, and ſhe hath iſſue, a baſtard ſhall take this remainder, becauſe he acquires the denomination of her iſſue by being born of her body; and ſo it was never uncertain, who was deſigned by this remainder. Noy 35.

If parents are married, and afterwards divorced, this gives the iſſue the reputation of children; and ſo doth a ſubſequent marriage of the parents. 6 Co. 65: Hugh's Abr. 363.

If a man, in conſideration of natural affection and love, covenants to ſtand ſeiſed to the uſe of a baſtard, this is not good; for he is not de ſanguine patris; but it is ſaid that a woman may give lands in frank-marriage with her baſtard, becauſe he is of the blood of the mother; but he hath no father, but from reputation only. Dyer 374: And. 79: 6 Co. 77: Noy 35.

A court of equity will not ſupply the want of a ſurrender of a copyhold eſtate, in favour of a baſtard, as it will for a legitimate child. Preced. Chan. 475.

The incapacity of a baſtard conſiſts principally in this, that he cannot be heir to any one, neither can he have heirs but of his own body; for being as was before ſaid nullius filius, he is therefore of kin to nobody, and has no anceſtor from whom any inheritable blood can be derived. But though baſtards are not looked upon as children to any civil purpoſes, yet the ties of nature hold as to maintenance, and many other purpoſes; as particularly that a man ſhall not marry his baſtard ſiſter or daughter. 3 Salk. 66, 7: Ld. Raym. 68: Comb. 356. And ſee poſt. II.

A baſtard was, in ſtrictneſs of law, incapable of holy orders, and though that were diſpenſed with, yet he was utterly diſqualified from holding any dignity in the church. Forteſc. c. 40: 5 Rep. 58. But this doctrine ſeems now obſolete; and there is a very ancient deciſion that a felon ſhould have the benefit of clergy, though he were a baſtard. Bro. Clergy 20. In all other reſpects therefore, except thoſe mentioned, there is no diſtinction between a baſtard and another man. 1 Comm. 459.

A baſtard may be made legitimate, and capable of inheriting by the tranſcendent power of an act of parliament, and not otherwiſe. 4 Inſt. 36; as was done in the caſe of John of Gaunt's baſtard children, by a Stat. of R. 2. 1 Comm. 459.

2. Baſtardy, in relation to the ſeveral manners of its trial, is diſtinguiſhed into general and ſpecial baſtardy.

Till the Stat. of Merton, 20 H. 3, the queſtion, whether born before or after marriage, was examined before the eccleſiaſtical judge, and his judgment was certified to the king or his juſtices, and the king's court either abided by it or rejected it at pleaſure. But after the ſolemn proteſt made by the Barons at Merton, againſt the introduction of the doctrine of the civil and canon law in this reſpect, ſpecial baſtardy has been always triable at common law; and general baſtardy alone has been left to the judgment of the eccleſiaſtical judge, who in this caſe agrees with the temporal. 2 Inſt. 99: Reeves' Hiſt. Eng. Law, 85, 201: and ſee 1 Inſt. 126 a. note 2; and 245 a. note 1.

General baſtardy, tried by the biſhop, in it's notion contains two things. 1ſt. It ſhould not be a baſtard made legitimate by a ſubſequent marriage. 2dly. That it ſhould be a point collateral to the original cauſe of action. 1 Rol. Abr. 361.

Formerly baſtards had a way in ſuch iſſues to trick themſelves into legitimation; for they uſed to bring feigned actions, and get ſuborned witneſſes before the biſhop to prove their legitimation, and then got the certificate returned of record, and after that their legitimation could never be conteſted; for being returned of record as a point adjudged by its proper judges, and remaining among the memorials of the court, all perſons were concluded by it; but this created great inconveniencies, as is taken notice of in the preamble of Stat. 9 Hen. 6. c. 11, in the caſe of ſeveral perſons of quality; for the evidence of the contrary parties concerned were never heard at the trial, and yet their intereſt was concluded: to remedy this inconvenience without altering the rules of law, it was enacted, that, before any writ to the biſhop, there ſhould be a proclamation made in the court, where the plea depends, and, after that, the iſſue ſhould be certified into Chancery, where proclamation ſhould be made once in every month for three months, and then the Chancellor ſhould certify to the court where the plea depends, and afterwards it ſhall be again proclaimed in the ſame court, that all that are concerned may go to the Ordinary to make their allegations; and without theſe circumſtances, any writ granted to the ordinary, and all proceedings thereupon, ſhall be utterly void. 1 Rol. Abr. 361.

If the ordinary certify or try baſtardy without a writ from the king's temporal courts, it is void; for the ſpiritual juriſdiction within theſe kingdoms is derived from the King, and therefore it muſt be exerciſed in the manner the King hath appointed; for it would be injurious if they ſhould declare legitimation where the rights of inheritance are ſo nearly concerned, without any apparent neceſſity. 1 Rol. Abr. 361.

The

The certificate must be under the seal of the ordinary, and not under the seal of the commissary only; for the command is to the bishop himself to certify, and therefore the execution of the command must appear to be by the bishop in proper person. 1 Rol. Abr. 362.

If a man be certified bastard, this binds perpetually, though the person so adjudged a bastard is not party to the action, for all persons are estopped to speak against the memorial of any judicatory; because the act of the public judicatory under which any person lives, is his own act; and were he not thus bound, there might be contradiction in certificates. 1 Rol. Abr. 362.

If a man be certified bastard, that doth not bind a stranger till returned of record, because it is no judicial act till recorded in the place appointed to record such transactions; nor doth it bind the party to the action till judgment thereon, because if he avoid the action he avoids all consequences of the action; and therefore if the defendant be certified bastard by the ordinary, yet if the plaintiff be non-suit they cannot go on to trial, and so the bishop's certificate never appears of record, and therefore is not binding. 1 Rol. Abr. 362.

If a man be certified mulier, no man is estopped to bastardize him, for though he may be a mulier by the spiritual law, yet he may be a bastard by our law; and therefore any man, notwithstanding the certificate, may plead the issue of special bastardy. 1 Rol. Abr. 362.

Special bastardy, is two fold: 1st. Where the bastardy is the gist of the action, and the material part of the issue. 2dly. Where those are bastards by the common law that are muliers by the spiritual law. 1 New Abr. 314: Co. Lit. 134: 1 Rol. 367: Hob. 117.

If a man receives any temporal damage by being called a bastard, and brings his action in the temporal courts, and the defendant justifies that the plaintiff is a bastard, this must be tried at common law, and not by writ to the bishop; for otherwise you suppose an action brought in a court which hath not a capacity to try the cause of action. 1 Brownl. 1: Hob. 179: Godol. 479: Co. Ent. 29.

If it be found by an assise taken at large that a man is a bastard, the temporal courts are judges of it; for the jury cannot be estopped to speak truth which may fall within their own knowledge, and what they find becomes the record of the temporal courts, and so within their conuzance. Bro. Bastardy 97.

II. 1. By Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 3, (and see Stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 4,) two justices of peace may make an order on the mother or reputed father of a bastard to maintain the infant by weekly payments or otherwise: and if the party disobey such order, he or she may be committed to gaol, until they give security to perform it; or to appear at the sessions.—By Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 4. § 7, the justices may commit the mother of a bastard, likely to become chargeable, to the house of correction for a year; or for a second offence till she give security for her good behaviour. By Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. § 19, if the putative father or lewd mother run away from the parish, the overseers may by authority of two justices, seize, and by order of the sessions, sell the effects of the father or mother to maintain the child.—By Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 31, the mother of a bastard may, before or after it is born, swear it to any person; and the putative father shall then on application by the overseer of the parish be apprehended and committed; unless he give security to indemnify the parish; or to appear at the next sessions: but if the woman die or marry before delivery, or miscarry, or prove not to be with child, the reputed father shall be discharged. Any justice near the parish, on application of the reputed father in custody, shall summon the overseer to shew cause against his being discharged; and if no order be made in pursuance of Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, (for the maintenance of the child) within six weeks after the woman's delivery, he shall be discharged.—By the said Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 31. § 4, it is expressly provided that, "It shall not be lawful for the justice to send for any woman before she shall be delivered, or for a month after, in order to be examined concerning her pregnancy; or to compel any woman before her delivery to answer any question relating to her pregnancy."—By Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 82. § 5, bastards born in any licensed hospital for pregnant women, are settled in the parishes to which their mothers belong. And the like provision is made by Stat. 20 Geo. 3. c. 36. § 2, as to bastards born in houses of industry.

The putative father of a bastard, although no legal relationship subsists between them, is so far considered as its natural guardian, as to be intitled to the custody of it, for its maintenance and education. 2 Stra. 1162; and therefore while under his care and protection, and not likely to become chargeable to the parish, the parish officers have no concern with it. 1 Mod. 43: 1 Sid. 444. Bastards are within the meaning of the marriage act. Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33, which requires the consent of the father, &c. 1 Term Rep. 96. And the rule that a bastard is filius nullius applies only to the case of inheritances. Ib. 101.

As however, without the protection of its natural parents, a bastard is settled in the parish in which it is born; (Salk. 427: 3 Burn. J.: Paul's P. O. 81;) [unless such birth be procured by fraud, Sel. Ca. 66; or happen under an order of removal, 1 Seff. Ca. 33: Salk. 121, 474, 532; or in a state of vagrancy, Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5; or in the house of correction, 2 Bulst. 358; or under a certificate, Stra. 186;] and the parish of consequence becomes charged with its maintenance, then and not before, the authority of the churchwardens and overseers begins. Say. 93; and they may act without an order from the justices. 3 Term Rep. C. P. 253.—It seems however, that until a bastard attain the age of seven years, it cannot be separated from its mother, Cald. 6; but may be removed to the place of her settlement, while the age of nurture continues. Carth. 279; and must under these circumstances be maintained by the parish where it was born. Doug. 7.

An order of bastardy must be made by two justices, 2 Salk. 478: 1 Stra. 475; on complaint, 1 *Barn. K. In an ancient MSS. temp. E. 3, it is ſaid that he who gets a baſtard in the hundred of Middleton in Kent, ſhall forfeit all his goods and chattels to the king.

2. By Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 27. it is enacted, "That if any woman be delivered of any iſſue of her body, which being born alive, ſhould by the laws of this realm be a baſtard, and ſhe endeavour privately, either by drowning, or ſecret burying thereof, or any other way, either by herſelf, or the procuring of others, ſo to conceal the death thereof, as it may not come to light, whether it were born alive or not, but be concealed; in every ſuch caſe the ſaid mother ſo offending ſhall ſuffer death, as in caſe of murder; except ſuch mother can make proof by one witneſs at the leaſt, that the child, whoſe death was by her ſo intended to be concealed, was born dead."

It hath been adjudged, that in order to convict a woman by force of this laſt ſtatute, there is no need that the indictment be drawn ſpecially, or conclude againſt the form of the ſtatute; for the ſtatute doth not make a new offence, but only makes ſuch concealment an undeniable evidence of murder. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. § 43.

Alſo, it hath been agreed, that where a woman appears to have endeavoured to conceal the death of ſuch child within the ſtatute, there is no need of any proof that the child was born alive, or that there were any ſigns of hurt upon the body, but it ſhall be undeniably taken that the child was born alive, and murdered by the mother. 2 Hawk. P. C. ub. ſup.

But it hath been adjudged, that where a woman lay in a chamber by herſelf, and went to bed without pain, and waked in the night, and knocked for help but could get none, and was delivered of a child, and put it in a trunk, and did not diſcover it till the following night, yet ſhe was not within the ſtatute, becauſe ſhe knocked for help. 2 Hawk. P. C. ub. ſup.

Alſo, it hath been agreed, that if a woman confeſs herſelf with child beforehand, and afterwards be ſurprized and delivered, no body being with her, ſhe is not within the ſtatute, becauſe there was no intent of concealment, and therefore in ſuch caſes it muſt appear by ſigns of hurt upon the body, or ſome other way, that the child was born alive. 2 Hawk. P. C. ub ſup.

If a woman be with child, and any gives her a potion to deſtroy the child within her, and ſhe takes it, and it works ſo ſtrongly that it kills the woman, this is murder; for it was not given to cure her of a diſeaſe, but unlawfully to deſtroy the child within her; and therefore he that gives her a potion to this end, muſt take the hazard, and if it kills the mother, it is murder. 1 Hal. H. P. C. 429, 430.

If a woman be quick or great with child, if ſhe take, or any other give her any potion to cauſe an abortion, or if a man ſtrike her, whereby the child within her is killed; though it be a great crime, yet it is not murder nor manſlaughter by the law of England, becauſe the child is not yet in rerum naturâ, nor can it legally be known, whether it were killed or not: ſo it is, if ſuch child were born alive, and after die of the ſtroke given to the mother, this is not homicide. 1 Hal. H. P. C. 433. The offender however may be indicted for a miſdemeanor, at common law.

If a man procure a woman with child to deſtroy her infant when born, and the child is born, and the woman, in purſuance of that procurement, kill the infant; this is murder in the mother, and the procurer is acceſſary. 1 Hal. H. P. C. 433.

BATIFORIA, A fulling mill. Monaſticon, tom. 2. p. 32.

BATTEL, Fr. bataille.] A trial by combat, anciently allowed of in our laws, (among other caſes,) where the the defendant in appeal of murder or felony might fight with the appellant, and make proof thereby whether he be culpable or innocent of the crime. When an apellee of felony wages battel, he pleads that he is Not guilty, and that he is ready to defend the ſame by his body, and then flings down his glove; and if the appellant will join battel he replies, That he is ready to make good his appeal by his body upon the body of the appellee, and takes up the glove: and then the appellee lays his right hand on the book, and with his left hand takes the appellant by the right, and ſwears thus: Hear this thou who calleſt thyſelf John by the name of baptiſm, that I who call myſelf Thomas by the name of baptiſm, did not feloniouſly murder thy father W. by name, on the day and year of, &c. at B. as you ſurmiſe, nor am any way guilty of the ſaid felony; ſo help me God. And then he ſhall kiſs the book and ſay; And this I will defend againſt thee by my body, as this court ſhall award. Then the appellant lays his right hand on the book, and with his left hand takes the appellee by the right, and ſwears to this effect: Hear this thou who calleſt thyſelf Thomas by the name of baptiſm, that thou didſt feloniouſly on the day, and in the year, &c. at B. murder my father W. by name; ſo help me God. And then he ſhall kiſs the book, and ſay; And this I will prove againſt thee by my body, as this court ſhall award. This being done, the court ſhall appoint a day and place for the battle; and in the mean while the appellee ſhall be kept in cuſtody of the marſhal, and the appellant ſhall find ſureties to be ready to fight at the time and place, unleſs he be an approver, in which caſe he ſhall alſo be kept by the marſhal: and the night before the day of battle, both parties ſhall be arraigned by the marſhal, and ſhall be brought into the field before the juſtices of the court where the appeal is depending, at the riſing of the ſun, bare-headed and bare-legged from the knee downwards, and bare in the arms to the elbows, armed only with baſtons an ell long, and four-cornered targets: and before they engage, they ſhall both make oath, That they have neither eat nor drank, nor done any thing elſe by which the law of God may be depreſſed, and the law of the devil exalted: and then, after proclamation for ſilence under pain of impriſonment, they ſhall begin the combat, wherein if the appellee be ſo far vanquiſhed that he cannot or will not fight any longer, he may be adjudged to be hanged immediately; but if he can maintain the fight till the ſtars appear, he ſhall have judgment to be quit of the appeal: and if the appellant becomes a crying coward, the appellee ſhall recover his damages, and may plead his acquittal in bar of a ſubſequent indictment or appeal; and the appellant ſhall for his perjury loſe his liberam legem. If an appellant becomes blind by the act of God after he has waged battel, the court will diſcharge him of the battel; and in ſuch caſe it is ſaid that the appellee ſhall go free.

This trial by battel is at the defendant's choice; but if the plaintiff be under an apparent diſability of fighting, as under age, maimed, &c. he may counterplead the wager of battel, and compel the defendant to put himſelf upon his country, no champions being allowed in criminal appeals; alſo any plaintiff may counterplead a wager of battel, by alledging ſuch matters againſt the defendant, as induce a violent preſumption of guilt; as in appeal of death, that he was found lying upon the deceaſed with a bloody knife in his hand, &c. for here the law will not oblige the plaintiff to make good his accuſation in ſo extraordinary a manner, when in all appearance he may prove it in the ordinary way. It is a good counterplea of battel that the defendant hath been indicted for the ſame fact; when if appeal be brought, the defendant ſhall not wage battel. And if a peer of the realm bring an appeal, the defendant ſhall not be admitted to wage battel, by reaſon of the dignity of the appellant.

The citizens of London are privileged by charter, that in appeals by any of them, there ſhall be no wager of battel; and by Stat. 6 R. 2. c. 6, defendant ſhall not be received to wage battel in an appeal of rape 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 45. This trial by battel is before the conſtable and marſhal; but is now diſuſed. See Glanv. lib. 14: Bracton, lib. 3: Britton, c. 22: Smith de Rep. Angl. lib. 2: Co. Litt. 294, &c.

For the manner of waging battel in an appeal of treaſon, Hawkins cites Ruſhw. Col. part 2. vol. 1. 112—128: and 3 Comm. 338. cites vol. 2.

This ſpecies of trial by wager of battel, (ſays Blackſtone) was introduced into England, among other Norman cuſtoms, by William the Conqueror; but was only uſed in three caſes, one military, one criminal, and the third civil.—The firſt in the court martial or court of chivalry and honour; (Co. Lit. 261;) the ſecond in appeals of felony; [of which above;] and the third, upon iſſue joined in a writ of right, the laſt and moſt ſolemn deciſion of real property. For in writs of right the jus proprietatis which is frequently a matter of difficulty is in queſtion; but other real actions being merely queſtions of the jus poſſeſſionis, which are uſually more plain and obvious, our anceſtors did not in them appeal to the deciſion of Providence. Another [and as it ſeems the juſter] pretext for allowing it upon theſe final writs of right, was for the ſake of ſuch claimants as might have the true right, but yet by the death of witneſſes or other defect of evidence, be unable to prove it to a jury.

Although the writ of right itſelf, and of courſe this trial thereof is at preſent much diſuſed, yet it is law at this day; and on that account as matter of curioſity the forms of proceeding therein are collected and preſerved in 3 Comm. 338, &c. and the appendix thereto; and are ſimilar to thoſe above recited in criminal caſes.

The laſt trial by battel that was waged in the court of Common Pleas at Weſtminſter; [though there was afterwards one in the court of Chivalry in 1631, 6 Car. 1, between Donald Lord Rey appellant, and David Ramſey, eſquire, defendant, which was compromiſed; See Orig. Jurid. 65: 19 Raym. 322; and another in the county palatine of Durham in 1638; Cro. Car. 512;] was in 13 Eliz. A. D. 1571, as reported by Dyer, and held in Tothill-fields, Weſtminſter. See Dy. 301. and Spelm. in v. Campus; the latter of whom was preſent at the ceremony.

In this trial by battel, on a writ of right, the battel is waged by champions, and not by the parties themſelves; becauſe in civil actions, if any party to the ſuit dies, the ſuit muſt abate and be at an end for the preſent; and therefore no judgment could be given for lands in queſtion, if either of the parties were ſlain; and alſo that no perſon might claim an exemption from this trial, as was allowed in criminal caſes. Co. Litt. 2 b.

This form of trial by battel, the tenant or defendant in a writ of right, has it in his election at this day to demand.

demand. 3 Comm. 341. And it was the only deciſion of ſuch writ of right from the Conqueſt, till Hen. II, by conſent of parliament introduced the grand aſſiſe; a particular ſpecies of trial by jury, in concurrence therewith, giving the tenant his choice of either the one or the other. —See Glanv. lib. 2. c. 7.

BATUS, Lat. from the Sax. bat.] A boat, and batellus a little boat. Chart. Ed. 1: 20 Julii 18 regni. Hence we have an old word batſwain, for ſuch as we now call boatſwain of a ſhip.

BAUBELLA, baubles.] A word mentioned in Hoveden in R. 1. and ſignifies jewels or precious ſtones.

BAUDEKIN, baldicum, and baldekinum.] Cloth of baudekin, or gold; it is ſaid to be the richeſt cloth, now called brocade, made with gold and ſilk, or tiſſue, upon which figures in ſilk, &c. were embroidered.

BAWDY-HOUSE, Lupanar, fornix.] A houſe of ill fame, kept for the reſort and commerce of lewd people of both ſexes. The keeping of a bawdy-houſe comes under the cognizance of the temporal law, as a common nuſance, not only in reſpect of its endangering the public peace by drawing together diſſolute and debauched perſons, and promoting quarrels, but alſo in reſpect of its tendency to corrupt the manners of the people, by an open profeſſion of lewdneſs. 3 Inſt. 205: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 74. Thoſe who keep bawdy houſes are puniſhed with fine and impriſonment; and all ſuch infamous puniſhment, as pillory, &c. as the court in diſcretion ſhall inflict: and a lodger who keeps only a ſingle room for the uſe of bawdry, is indictable for keeping a bawdy-houſe. 1 Salk. 382. Perſons reſorting to a bawdy-houſe, are puniſhable, and they may be bound to their good behaviour, &c. But if one be indicted for keeping or frequenting a bawdy-houſe, it muſt be expreſsly alledged to be ſuch a houſe, and that the party knew it; and not by ſuſpicion only. Poph. 208. A man may be indicted for keeping bad women in his own houſe. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 61. § 2. A conſtable upon information, that a man and woman are gone to a lewd houſe, or about to commit fornication or adultery, may, if he finds them together, carry them before a juſtice of peace without any warrant, and the juſtice may bind them over to the ſeſſions. Dalt. 214.

Conſtables in theſe caſes may call others to their aſſiſtance, enter bawdy-houſes, and arreſt the offenders for a breach of the peace: in London they may carry them to priſon; and by the cuſtom of the city, whores and bawds may be carted. 3 Inſt. 206.

As to a married woman's being indicted for keeping a houſe of ill fame. See tit. Baron and Feme VII.

But it is ſaid, a woman cannot be indicted for being a bawd generally; for that the bare ſolicitation of chaſtity is not indictable. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 74. § 1: 1 Salk. 382.

It was always held infamous to keep a bawdy-houſe; yet ſome of our hiſtorians mention bawdy-houſes, brothel houſes or ſtews publickly allowed here in former times, till the reign of Hen. 8, by whom they were ſuppreſſed about A. D. 1546: and writers aſſign the number to be eighteen thus allowed on the bank-ſide in Southwark. See Brothel-houſes.

By Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36, made perpetual by Stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 19. If two inhabitants, paying ſcot and lot, ſhall give notice to a conſtable of any perſon keeping a bawdy-houſe, the conſtable ſhall go with them before a juſtice of peace, and ſhall, (upon ſuch inhabitants making oath, that they believe the contents of ſuch notice to be true, and entering into a recognizance of 20 l. each, to give material evidence of the offence,) enter into a recognizance of 30 l. to proſecute with effect ſuch perſon for ſuch offence at the next ſeſſions; the conſtable ſhall be paid his reaſonable expences by the overſeers of the poor, to be aſcertained by two juſtices; and if the offender be convicted, the overſeers ſhall pay to the two inhabitants 10 l. each. On the conſtable's entering into ſuch recognizance as aforeſaid, the juſtice ſhall bind over the perſon accuſed to the next ſeſſions, and if he ſhall think proper, demand ſecurity for ſuch perſon's good behaviour in the mean time. A conſtable neglecting his duty forfeits 20 l. Any perſon appearing as maſter or miſtreſs, or as having the care or management of any bawdy-houſe, ſhall be deemed the keeper thereof, and liable to be puniſhed as ſuch.—The ſame act alſo directs the licenſing by magiſtrates of all public places within 20 miles of the metropolis.

BAY, or pen, Is a pond-head made up of a great height, to keep in water for the ſupply of a mill, &c. ſo that the wheel of the mill may be driven by the water coming thence, through a paſſage or flood-gate. Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 19. BEACON, from the Sax. beacn, ſignum, whence the Engliſh, beckon to nod or make a ſign.] A ſignal well known; being a fire maintained on ſome eminence near the coaſts of the ſea. 4 Inſt. 148. Hence beaconage (beaconagium) money paid towards the maintenance of beacons: See Stat. 5 Hen. 4. c. 3, as to keeping watch on the ſea coaſt.

The erection of beacons, light-houſes and ſea marks, is a branch of the royal prerogative; whereof the firſt was antiently uſed in order to alarm the country, in caſe of the approach of an enemy; and all of them are ſignally uſeful in guiding and preſerving veſſels at ſea by night as well as by day. For this purpoſe the king hath the excluſive power, by commiſſion under his great ſeal; (3 Inſt. 204: 4 Inſt. 148;) to cauſe them to be erected in fit and convenient places, (4 Inſt. 136), as well upon the lands of the ſubject as upon the demeſnes of the crown: which power is uſually veſted by letters patent in the office of Lord High Admiral, (Sid. 158: 4 Inſt. 149;) or the Admiralty board. And by Stat. 8 Eliz. c. 13, the corporation of the Trinity Houſe are empowered to ſet up any beacons or ſea-marks wherever they ſhall think them neceſſary; and if the owner of the land or any other perſon ſhall deſtroy them, or ſhall take down any ſteeple, tree or other known ſea-mark, he ſhall forfeit 100 l. or in caſe of inability to pay it, ſhall be ipſo facto outlawed. 1 Comm. 265.—See the Stats. 4 An. c. 20, and 8 Ann. c. 17, for building the Eddyſtone lighthouſe near Plymouth, and raiſing the duties payable by ſhips for its ſupport; and Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 36, as to the lighthouſe on the rock Skerries near Holyhead in the county of Angleſea.

BEAD, or bede, Sax. bead, oratio.] A prayer; ſo that to ſay over beads, is to ſay over one's prayers. They were moſt in uſe before printing, when poor perſons could not go to the charge of a manuſcript book: though they are ſtill uſed in many parts of the world, where the Roman-Catholic religion prevails. They are not allowed to be brought into England, or any ſuperſtitious things, to be uſed here, under the penalty of a præmunire, by Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2.

BENEFICE, beneficium.] Is generally taken for any eccleſiaſtical living or promotion; and benefices are by Stat. 13 R. 2. ſt. 2. c. 2, divided into elective and donative: ſo alſo it is uſed in the Canon law. 3 Inſt. 155: Duarenus de Beneficiis, lib. 2. c. 3. All church preferments and dignities are benefices; but they muſt be given for life, not for years, or at will. Deaneries, prebendaries, &c. are benefices with cure of ſouls, though not comprehended as ſuch within the Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13, of reſidence: but, according to a more ſtrict and proper acceptation, benefices are only rectories, and vicarages. —The word Benefice was formerly applied to portions of land, &c. given by lords to their followers for their maintenance; but afterwards, as theſe tenures became perpetual and hereditary, they left their name of beneficia to the livings of the clergy, and retained to themſelves the name of feuds.—And beneficium was an eſtate in land at firſt granted for life only, ſo called, becauſe it was held ex mero beneficio of the donor; and the tenants were bound to ſwear fealty to the lord, and to ſerve him in the wars, thoſe eſtates being commonly given to military men: but at length, by the conſent of the donor, or his heirs, they were continued for the lives of the ſons of the poſſeſſors, and by degrees paſt into an inheritance: and ſometimes ſuch benefices were given to biſhops, and abbots, ſubject to the like ſervices, viz. to provide men to ſerve in the wars; and when they as well as the laity had obtained a property in thoſe lands, they were called regalia when given by the king; and on the death of a biſhop, &c. returned to the king till another was choſen. Spelm. of Feuds, c. 21: Blount, verb. Beneficium. BENEVOLENCE, benevolentia.] Is uſed in the chronicles and ſtatutes of this realm for a voluntary gratuity given by the ſubjects to the king. Stow's Annals, p. 701. And Stow ſaith, that it grew from Edward the Fourth's days: you may find it alſo anno 11 H. 7. c. 10, yielded to that prince in regard of his great expences in wars, and otherwiſe. 12 Rep. 19. And by act of parliament, 13 Car. 2. c. 4, it was given to his majeſty King Charles II, but with a proviſo that it ſhould not be drawn into future example: as thoſe benevolences were frequently extorted without a real and voluntary conſent, ſo that all ſupplies of this nature are now by way of taxes, by grant of parliament; any other way of raiſing money for the crown is illegal. Stat. 1 W. & M. ſt. 2. c. 2. BERGHMASTER, from the Sax. berg, a hill, quaſi, maſter of the mountains.] Is a bailiff or chief officer among the Derbyſhire miners, who alſo executes the office of a coroner. Eſc. de An. 16 Ed. 1. num. 34, in Turri London. The Germans call a mountaineer, or miner, a bergman. Blount.

BERGMOTH, or BERGHMOTE, Comes from the Sax. berg a hill, and gemote, an aſſembly; and is as much as to ſay an aſſembly or court upon a hill, which is held in Derbyſhire, for deciding pleas and controverſies among the miners. BERIA, berie, berry, A large open field.] Thoſe cities and towns in England which end with that word, are built in plain and open places, and do not derive their names from boroughs, as Sir Henry Spelman imagines. Moſt of our gloſſographers in the names of places have confounded the word beri with that of bury and borough, as the appellatives of ancient towns; whereas the true ſenſe of the word berie is a flat wide campaign, as is proved from ſufficient authorities by the learned Du Freſne, who obſerves that Beria Sancti Edmundi, mentioned by Mat. Pariſ. ſub ann. 1174, is not to be taken for the town, but for the adjoining plain. To this may be added, that many flat and wide meads and other open grounds, are called by the name of beries, and berryfields: the ſpacious meadow between Oxford and Iſley was in the reign of king Athelſtan called Bery. As is now the largeſt paſture ground in Quarendon in the county of Buckingham, known by the name of Beryfield. And though theſe meads have been interpreted demeſne or manor meadows, yet they were truly any flat or open meadows, that lay adjoining to any vill or farm. Cowel.

BEREWICHA, or BERWICA, Villages or hamlets belonging to ſome town or manor. This word often occurs in Domeſday: iſtæ ſunt berewichæ ejusdem manerii.

BERWICK, The town of Berwick upon Tweed was originally part of the kingdom of Scotland; and as ſuch was for a time reduced by king Edward I. into the poſſeſſion of the crown of England: and during ſuch its ſubjection it received from that prince a charter, which (after its ſubſequent ceſſion by Edward Balliol, to be for ever united to the crown and realm of England) was confirmed by king Edward III. with ſome additions; particularly that it ſhould be governed by the laws and uſages which it enjoyed during the time of king Alexander, that is, before its reduction by Edward I. Its conſtitution was new modelled and put upon an Engliſh footing by a charter of king James I: and all its liberties, franchiſes, and cuſtoms were confirmed in parliament by ſtats. 22 E. 4. c. 8; and 2 Jac. 1. c. 28. Though therefore it hath ſome local peculiarities, derived from the ancient laws of Scotland; (See Hale Hiſt. C. L. 183: 1 Sid. 382, 462: 2 Show. 365;) yet it is clearly part of the realm of England, being repreſented by burgeſſes in the houſe of commons, and bound by all acts of the Britiſh parliament, whether ſpecially named or otherwiſe. And therefore it was perhaps ſuperfluouſly declared by Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 42, that where England only is mentioned in any act of parliament, the ſame notwithſtanding hath been and ſhall be deemed to comprehend the dominion of Wales and town of Berwick upon Tweed. And though certain of the king's writs or proceſſes of the courts of Weſtminſter, do not uſually run into Berwick, any more than the principality of Wales, yet it hath been ſolemnly adjudged, that all prerogative writs (as thoſe of mandamus, prohibition, habeas corpus, certiorari, &c.) may iſſue to Berwick as well as to every other of the dominions of the crown of England; and that indictments and other local matters ariſing in the town of Berwick, may be tried by a jury of the county of *Northumberland. BERY, or BURY, The vill or ſeat of habitation of a nobleman, a dwelling or manſion houſe, being the chief of a manor; from the Sax. beorg, which ſignifies a hill or caſtle; for heretofore noblemens' ſeats were caſtles, ſituate on hills, of which we have ſtill ſome remains. As in Herefordſhire, there are the beries of Stockton, Hope, &c. It was anciently taken for a ſanctuary. See Beria.

BESAILE, or BESAYLE, Fr. béſayeul, proavus.] The father of the grandfather: and in the Common law it ſignifies a writ that lies where the great grandfather was ſeiſed the day that he died, of any lands or tenements in fee-ſimple; and after his death a ſtranger entereth the ſame day upon him, and keeps out the heir. F. N. B. 222. See tits Mort d' Anceſtor.

BESCHA, from the Fr. bercher, fodere, to dig.] A ſpade or ſhovel. Hence perhaps, una Beſcata terra incluſa—Mon. Ang. tom. 2. fol. 642, may ſignify a piece of land uſually turned up with a ſpade, as gardeners fit and prepare their grounds; or may be taken for as much land as one man can dig with a ſpade in a day.

BESTIALS, beſtiales.] Beaſts or cattle of any ſort; Stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 3, it is written beſtayle; and is generally uſed for all kinds of cattle, though it has been reſtrained to thoſe anciently purveyed for the king's proviſion.

BETACHES, Laymen uſing glebe lands. Parl. 14 E. 2.

BEWARED, An old Saxon word ſignifying expended; for before the Britons and Saxons had plenty of money, they traded wholly in exchange of wares. Blount.

BIDALE, or BIDALL, precaria potaria, from the Sax. biddan, to pray or ſupplicate.] Is the invitation of friends to drink ale at the houſe of ſome poor man, who thereby hopes a charitable contribution for his relief: it is ſtill in uſe in the Weſt of England: and is mentioned Stat. 26 Hen. 8. c. 6. And ſomething like this ſeems to be what we commonly call houſe warming, when perſons are invited and viſited in this manner on their firſt beginning houſe-keeping.

BIDDING OF THE BEADE, bidding from the Sax. biddan.] Was anciently a charge or warning given by the pariſh prieſt to his pariſhioners at ſome ſpecial times to come to prayers, either for the ſoul of ſome friend departed, or upon ſome other particular occaſion. And at this day our miniſters, on the Sunday preceding any feſtival or holiday in the following week, give notice of them, and deſire and exhort their pariſhioners to obſerve them as they ought; which is required by our canons.

BIDENTES, Two yearlings or ſheep of the ſecond year. Paroch. Antiq. p. 216.

BIDUANA, A faſting for the ſpace of two days. Mat. Weſt. p. 135.

BIGA, bigata, A cart or chariot drawn with two horſes coupled ſide to ſide; but it is ſaid to be properly a cart with two wheels, ſometimes drawn by one horſe; and in our ancient records it is uſed for any cart, wain or waggon. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. fol. 256.

BIGAMUS, One guilty of bigamy.

BIGAMY, bigamia.] A double marriage; this word properly ſignifies the being twice married; but is now uſed by an almoſt univerſal corruption, to ſignify the offence of poligamy, or the having a plurality of wives at once. 3 Inſt. 88.

Bigamy according to the Canoniſts, conſiſted in marrying two virgins ſucceſſively, one after the death of the other, or in once marrying a widow. Such were eſteemed incapable of holy orders; probably on the ground of St. Paul's words. 1 Tim. c. 5. v. 2. "That a biſhop ſhould be the huſband of one wife," and they were by a canon of the council of Lyons, A. D. 1274, denied all clerical privileges. This canon was adopted and explained in England by the Stat. 4 E. 1. ſt. 3. (commonly called the Stat. de bigamis) c. 5; and bigamy thereupon became no uncommon counterplea to the claim of the benefit of clergy. The cognizance of the plea of bigamy was declared by Stat. 18 E. 3. ſt. 3. c. 2, to belong to the Court Chriſtian, like that of baſtardy. But by Stat. 1 E. 6. c. 12. § 16, bigamy was declared to be no longer an impediment to the claim of clergy. See Dal. 21: Dyer 201. and 1 Inſt. 80 b; note 1.

A ſecond marriage, living the former huſband or wife is, by the eccleſiaſtical law of England, ſimply void, and a mere nullity; but the Legiſlature has thought it juſt to make it felony, by reaſon of its being ſo great a violation of the public œconomy and decency of a well-ordered ſtate. By Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 11, it is enacted "that if any perſon, being married, do afterwards marry again, the former huſband or wife being alive, it is felony;" but within the benefit of clergy.

The act however makes exception to five caſes, in which ſuch ſecond marriage, (though in the three firſt it is void) is yet no felony: (See 3 Inſt. 89: Kel. 27: 1 Hal. P. C. 694) :—1. Where either party has been continually abroad for ſeven years, whether the party in England hath notice of the others being living or no. 2. Where either of the parties hath been abſent from the other ſeven years within this kingdom; and the remaining party hath had no knowledge of the other's being alive within that time. 3. Where there is a divorce; (or ſeparation à menſâ & thoro, 1 Hawk. P. C. 174;) by ſentence in the eccleſiaſtical court. 4. Where the firſt marriage is declared abſolutely void by any ſuch ſentence; and the parties looſed à vinculo matrimonii, or, 5. Where either of the parties was under the age of conſent at the time of the firſt marriage. 1 Hawk. P. C. 174: 1 Inſt. 79.

In the laſt caſe the firſt marriage was voidable by the diſagreement of either party; which the ſecond marriage very clearly amounts to. But if at the age of conſent the parties had agreed to the marriage, which completes the contract, and is indeed the real marriage, and afterwards one of them ſhould marry again, it ſeems undoubted that ſuch ſecond marriage would be within the reaſon and penalties of the act. 4 Comm. 164.

If the firſt marriage were beyond ſea, and the latter in England, the party may be indicted for it here; becauſe the latter marriage is the offence; but not vice verſâ, though quære why not? 1 Hawk. P. C. 174, 5: 1 Hale's P. C. 692: 1 Sid. 171: Kel. 80.

A ſentence in the eccleſiaſtical court againſt a marriage, in a ſuit for jactitation does not preclude the proof of a marriage on an indictment on the ſtatute.—And admitting ſuch ſentence were concluſive as to the fact of marriage, the effect may be avoided by evidence of fraud and colluſion in obtaining the ſentence. 11 St. Tr. 262. Dutcheſs of Kingſton's caſe.

As to huſband and wife being evidence againſt each other on trial for this offence. See tit. Baron and Feme. I. 2.

BIGOT, A compound of ſeveral old Engliſh words.] An obſtinate perſon; or one that is wedded to an opinion, in matters of religion, &c. It is recorded that when Rollo the firſt duke of Normandy, refuſed to kiſs the King's foot, unleſs he held it out to him, it being a ceremony required in token of ſubjection for that dukedom, with which the King inveſted him; thoſe who were preſent taking notice of the duke's refuſal, adviſed him to comply with the king's deſire, who anſwered them ne ſe bigot; whereupon he was in deriſion called bigot, and the Normans are ſo called to this day. Blount.

BILAGINES, Lat.] By-laws of corporations, &c. See By-laws.

BILANCIIS DEFERENDIS, A writ directed to a corporation, for the carrying of weights to ſuch a haven, there to weigh the wool that perſons by our ancient laws were licenſed to tranſport. Reg. Orig. 270.

BILINGUIS, Generally a double tongued man; or one that can ſpeak two languages: but it is uſed in our law for a jury that paſſeth between an Engliſhman and a foreigner, whereof part ought to be Engliſh, and part ſtrangers: properly a jury de medietate linguæ, under Stat. 28 Ed. 3. c. 13. See title Jury.

BILL, billa.] Is diverſly uſed: in law proceedings, it is a declaration in writing, expreſſing either the wrong the complainant hath ſuffered by the party complained of, or elſe ſome fault committed againſt ſome law or ſtatute of the realm: and this bill is ſometimes addreſſed to the Lord Chancellor of England, eſpecially for unconſcionable wrongs done to the complainant; and ſometimes to others having juriſdiction, according as the law directs. It contains the fact complained of, the damage thereby ſuſtained, and petition of proceſs againſt the defendant for redreſs; and it is made uſe of as well in criminal as civil matters. In criminal caſes, when a grand jury upon a preſentment or indictment find the ſame to be true, they indorſe on it billa vera; and thereupon the offender is ſaid to ſtand indicted of the crime, and is bound to make anſwer unto it: and if the crime touch the life of the perſon indicted, it is then referred to the jury of life and death, viz. the petty jury, by whom if he be found guilty, then he ſhall ſtand convicted of the crime, and is by the judge condemned to death. Term. de Ley 86: 3 Inſt. 30. See Ignoramus and Indictment.

Many of the proceedings in the King's Bench are by bill: it is the ancient form of proceeding, and was, and yet ſhould be filed in parchment, in all ſuits, not by original. The declaration is a tranſcript of it, or ſuppoſed ſo to be. See tit. Amendment.

Bill is alſo a common engagement for money given by one man to another; being ſometimes with a penalty, called penal bill, and ſometimes without a penalty, then called a ſingle bill, though the latter is moſt frequently uſed. By a bill we ordinarily underſtand a ſingle bond, without a condition; and it was formerly all one with an obligation, ſave only its being called a bill when in Engliſh, and an obligation when in Latin. Weſt. Symbol. lib. 2. ſect. 146. Where there is a bill of 100 l. to be paid on demand, it is a duty preſently, and there needs no actual demand. Cro. Eliz. 548. And a ſingle obligation or bill, upon the ſealing and delivery, is debitum in præſenti, though ſolvendum in futuro. On a collateral promiſe to pay money on demand, there muſt be a ſpecial demand; but between the parties it is a debt, and ſaid to be ſufficiently demanded by the action: it is otherwiſe where the money is to be paid to a third perſon; or where there is a penalty. 3 Keb. 176. If a perſon acknowledge himſelf by bill obligatory to be indebted to another in the ſum of 50 l. and by the ſame bill binds him and his heirs in 100 l. and ſays not to whom he is bound, it ſhall be intended he is bound to the perſon to whom the bill is made. Rol. Abr. 148. A bill obligatory written in a book, with the party's hand and ſeal to it, is good Cro. Eliz. 613.—See 2 Ro. Ab. 146.

Theſe kinds of bills are now ſuperſeded in uſe, the ſingle bills by the more modern traffick of Bills of Exchange, and the penal bills by Bonds or Oligations. —See thoſe titles.

BILL OF EXCEPTIONS TO EVIDENCE, At Common law a writ of error lay, for an error in law, apparent in the record, or for error in fact, where either party died before judgment; yet it lay not for an error in law not appearing in the record; and therefore, where the plaintiff or demandant, tenant or defendant, alledged any thing ore tenus, which was over-ruled by the judge, this could not be aſſigned for error, not appearing within the record, not being an error in fact, but in law; and ſo the party grieved was without remedy. 2 Inſt. 426. And therefore by the ſtat. of Weſtm. 2, 13 E. 1. c. 31, "When one impleaded before any of the juſtices, alledges an exception, praying they will allow it, and if they will not, if he that alledges the exception writes the ſame, and requires that the juſtices will put to their ſeals, the juſtices ſhall ſo do; and if one will not, another ſhall; and if, upon complaint made of the juſtice, the King cauſe the record to come before him, and the exception be not found in the roll, and the plaintiff ſhew the written exception, with the ſeal of the juſtice thereto put, the juſtice ſhall be commanded to appear at a certain day, either to confeſs or deny his ſeal, and if he cannot deny his ſeal, they ſhall proceed to judgment according to the exception, as it ought to be allowed or diſallowed."

This ſtatute extends to the plaintiff as well as defendant, alſo to him who comes in loco tenentis, as one that prays to be received, or the vouchee; and in all actions whether real, perſonal, or mixt. 2 Inſt. 427.

The ſtatute extends not only to all pleas dilatory and peremptory, but to prayers to be received, oyer of records and deeds, &c. alſo to challenges of jurors, and any material evidence offered and over-ruled. 2 Inſt. 427: Dyer 231. pl. 3: Raym. 486.

The exceptions ought to be put in writing ſedente curiâ, in the preſence of the judge who tried the cauſe, and ſigned by the counſel on each ſide; and then the bill muſt be drawn up and tendered to the judge that tried the cauſe to be ſealed by him; and when ſigned, there goes out a ſcire facias to the ſame judge ad cognoſcendum ſcriptum, and that is made part of the record, and the return of the judge with the bill itſelf, muſt be entered on the iſſue-roll; and if a writ of error be brought, it is to be returned as part of the record. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 373. If a bill of exceptions is drawn up, and tendered to the judge for ſealing, and he refuſes to do it, the party may have a compulſory writ againſt him, commanding him to ſeal it, if the fact alledged be truly ſtated: and if he returns that the fact is untruly ſtated, when the caſe is otherwiſe, an action will lie againſt him for making a falſe return. 3 Comm. 372: Reg. Br. 182: 2 Inſt. 427.

If one of the juſtices ſets his ſeal to the bill, it is ſufficient; but if they all refuſe, it is a contempt in them all. 2 Inſt. 427: Raym. 182. S. P: 2 Lev. 327. S. P.

When a bill of exceptions is allowed, the court will not ſuffer the party to move any thing in arreſt of judgment on the point on which the bill of exceptions was allowed. 1 Vent. 366, 367: 2 Lev. 237: 2 Jones 117.

A bill of exceptions is in the nature of an appeal; examinable, not in the court out of which the record iſſues for the trial at Niſi Prius, but in the next immediate ſuperior court, upon a writ of error after judgment given in the court below. 3 Comm. 372.

Theſe bills of exceptions, are to be tendered before a verdict given; 2 Inſt. 427; and extend only to civil actions, actions, not to criminal. Sid. 85: 1 Salk. 288: 1 Lev. 68.

But in 1 Leon. 5, it was allowed in an indictment for treſpaſs; and in 1 Vent. 366, in an information in nature of a Quo warranto.

For a precedent of a bill of exceptions, See Bull. N. P. 317.

Bills of exceptions are now ſeldom uſed, ſince the liberality practiſed by the courts in granting new trials.

BILL OF EXCHANGE, A negotiable ſecurity for money, well known among merchants. The laws relating to this ſubject, and that of PROMISSORY (and negotiable) NOTES, being implicated together, are here conſidered under one head, and thus arranged.

VI. Of bills loſt, ſtolen, or forged: and ſee III.

I. 1. A BILL OF EXCHANGE is an open letter of requeſt, addreſſed by one perſon to a ſecond, deſiring him to pay a ſum of money to a third, or to any other to whom that third perſon ſhall order it to be paid: or it may be made payable to bearer.

The perſon who makes the bill is called the drawer; he to whom it is addreſt the drawee; and when he undertakes to pay the amount, he is then called the acceptor. The perſon to whom it is ordered to be paid is called the payee; and if he appoint another to receive the money, that other is called the indorſee, as the payee is, with reſpect to him, the indorſer; any one who happens for the time to be in poſſeſſion of the bill is called the holder of it.

The time at which the payment is limited to be made is various, according to the circumſtances of the parties and the diſtance of their reſpective reſidences. Sometimes the amount is made payable at ſight; ſometimes at ſo many days after ſight; at other times at a certain diſtance from the date. Uſance is the time of one, two or three months after the date of the bill according to the cuſtom of the places between which the exchanges run; and the nature of which muſt therefore be ſhewn and averred in a declaration on ſuch a bill.—Double or treble uſance is double or treble the uſual time; and half uſance is half the time.—Where the time of payment is limited by months, it muſt be computed by calendar, not lunar, months: and where one month is longer than the ſucceeding one, it is a rule not to go in the computation into a third. Thus on a bill dated the 28, 29, 30 or 31ſt of January, and payable one month after date, the time expires on the 28th of February in common years, and in the three latter caſes in leap-year on the 29th. [To which are to be added the days of grace. See poſt.]—Where a bill is payable at ſo many days after ſight, or from the date, the day of preſentment, or of the date is excluded. Thus where a bill payable 10 days after ſight is preſented on the 1ſt day of a month, the 10 days expire on the 11th; where it is dated the 1ſt, and payable 20 days after date, theſe expire on the 21ſt. Ld Raym. 281: Stra. 829.

A cuſtom has obtained among merchants, that a perſon to whom a bill is addreſt, ſhall be allowed a few days for payment beyond the term mentioned in the bill, called days of grace.—In Great Britain and Ireland three days are given; in other places more. If the laſt of theſe three days happen to be Sunday, the bill is to be paid on Saturday, but theſe days of grace are not allowed to bills payable at ſight.

2. Bills of exchange are diſtinguiſhed by the appellation of Foreign and Inland bills; the firſt being thoſe which paſs from one country to another, and the latter ſuch as paſs between parties reſiding in the ſame country; and the univerſal conſent of merchants had long ſince eſtabliſhed a ſyſtem of cuſtoms relative to Foreign bills, which was adopted as part of the law in every commercial ſtate.

It does not appear that inland bills of exchange were very frequent in England before the reign of Charles II: (ſee 6 Mod. 29): And when they were introduced, they were not regarded with the ſame favour as foreign bills. At length the Legiſlature by two different ſtatutes; 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 17: and 3 & 4 An. c. 9; ſet both on nearly the ſame footing: ſo that what was the law and cuſtom of merchants with reſpect to the one, is now in moſt reſpects the eſtabliſhed law of the country with reſpect to the other.

The following are the moſt general forms of inland and foreign bills of exchange; but which are varied according to circumſtances.

To Mr. C. D. &c. V. S.

London, Jan. 1, 1793.

Exchange for 10,000 liv. Tournoiſes.

At fifteen days after date [Or, at one, two, &c. uſances] pay this my firſt bill of exchange, (ſecond and third of the ſame tenor and date not paid) to Meſſrs. A. B. and Co. or order, Ten thouſand livres Tournoiſes, value received of them, and place the ſame to account, as per advice from

To Mr. E. F. C. D.
Banker in Paris.

The two other bills of the foreign ſet, are varied thus "firſt and third," and "firſt and ſecond not paid."

3. A Promiſſory Note, is a leſs complicated kind of ſecurity, and may be defined to be, an engagement in writing to pay a certain ſum of money, mentioned in it, to a perſon named, or to his order, or to the bearer at large. At firſt theſe notes were conſidered only as written evidence of a debt; for it was held that a promiſſory note was not aſſignable or indorſible over, within the cuſtom of merchants; and that if in fact ſuch a note had been indorſed or aſſigned over, the perſon to whom it was ſo indorſed or aſſigned, could not maintain an action within the cuſtom againſt the drawer of the note; nor could even the perſon to whom it was in the firſt inſtance made payable, bring ſuch action. 1 Salk. 129: 2 Ld. Raym. 757, 9. But at length they were recognized by the Legiſlature and put on the ſame footing with inland bills of exchange; by Stat. 3 & 4 An. c. 9; (made perpetual by Stat. 7 An. c. 25. § 3); which enacts that promiſſory notes payable to order or bearer, may be aſſigned and indorſed, and action maintained thereon, as on inland bills of exchange.

FORM OF PROMISSORY NOTES.

£20 London, Jan. 1, 1793.
I promiſe to pay A. B. or bearer on demand Twenty pounds for value received.

4. By the Stats. 15 Geo. 3. c. 51: and 17 Geo. 3. c. 30, made perpetual by Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 16, all negotiable notes and bills for leſs than 20*s.* are declared void; and notes or bills between that ſum and 5*l.* muſt be made payable within 21 days after date; muſt particularize the name and deſcriptions of the payees; muſt bear date at the time and place they are made; muſt be atteſted by a ſubſcribing witneſs, and the indorſement of them muſt be attended with the ſame ſtrictneſs in all reſpects, and made before the notes or bills become due.

Bills of exchange and promiſſory notes muſt now be drawn on ſtampt paper. The ſtamp is proportioned, under Stat. 31 Geo. 3. c. 25, to the amount of the bill, from 3*d.* to 2*s.*—if foreign bills are drawn here the whole ſet muſt be ſtampt—But bills drawn abroad of neceſſity are not liable to any ſtamp duty.

Bills of exchange having been firſt introduced for the convenience of commerce, it was formerly thought that no perſon could draw one, or be concerned in the negotiation of it, who was not an actual merchant; but it ſoon being found neceſſary for others, not at all engaged in trade, to adopt the ſame mode of remittance and ſecurity, it has been ſince decided that any perſon capable of binding himſelf by a contract, may draw or accept a bill of exchange, or be in any way engaged in the negotiation of it, (and, ſince the Stat. 3 & 4 An. c. 9, be a party to a promiſſory note,) and ſhall be conſidered as a merchant for that purpoſe. Carth. 82: 2 Vent. 292; Comb. 152: 1 Show. 125: 2 Show. 501: Lutw. 891, 1585: 12 Mod. 36, 380: Salk. 126.

But an infant cannot be ſued on a bill of exchange. Carth. 160.—Nor a feme covert; except in ſuch caſes as ſhe is allowed to act as a feme ſole. 1 Ld. Raym. 147: Salk. 116. See title Baron and Feme.

Where there are two joint-traders, and a bill is drawn on both of them, the acceptance of one binds the other, if it concern the joint trade; but it is otherwiſe, if it concern the acceptor only, in a diſtinct intereſt and reſpect. 1 Salk. 126: 1 Ld. Raym. 175.

Sometimes exchange is made in the name and for the account of a third perſon, by virtue of full power and authority given by him, and this is commonly termed procuration; and ſuch bills may be drawn, ſubſcribed, indorſed, accepted and negotiated, not in the name or for the account of the manager or tranſactor of any or all of theſe branches of remittances, but in the name and for the account of the perſon who authoriſed him. Lex. Merc.

5. A promiſſory note in its original form of a promiſe from one man to pay a ſum of money to another bears no reſemblance to a bill of exchange. When it is indorſed, the reſemblance begins, for then it is an order by the indorſer to the maker of the note, who by his promiſe is his debtor, to pay the money to the indorſee. —The indorſer of the note correſponds to the drawer of the bill; the maker to the drawee or acceptor; and the indorſee to the payee—When this point of reſemblance is once fixt, the law is fully ſettled to be exactly the ſame in bills of exchange and promiſſory notes: and whenever the law is reported to have been ſettled with reſpect to the acceptor of a bill, it is to be conſidered as applicable to the (drawer, or) maker of a note; when with reſpect to the drawer of a bill, then to the firſt indorſer of a note; the ſubſequent indorſers and indorſees bear an exact reſemblance to one another. 2 Burr. 676.

Both bills and notes are in two different forms, being ſometimes made payable to ſuch a man or his order, or to the order of ſuch a man; ſometimes to ſuch a man or bearer, or ſimply to bearer.

The firſt kind have always been held to be negotiable; but where they were made payable to the order of ſuch a man, exception has been taken to an action brought by that man himſelf, on the ground that he had only an authority to indorſe; but the exception was not allowed. 10 Mod. 286: 2 Show. 8: Comb. 401: Carth. 403:—And it is now decided law, that bills and notes payable to bearer, are equally transferable as thoſe payable to order; and the transfer in both caſes equally confers the right of action on the bonâ fide holder. 1 Black. Rep. 485; 3 Burr. 1516; Stat. 3 & 4 An. c. 9. § 5: 1 Burr. 452, 9. The mode of transfer however is different; bills and notes payable to bearer are transferred by mere delivery, the others by indorſement.

6. The bills and notes mentioned above are conſidered merely as ſecurities for money; but there is a ſpecies of each which is conſidered as money itſelf. Theſe are Bank-notes, bankers' caſh-notes, and drafts on bankers payable on demand.

Bank-notes are treated as money or caſh in the ordinary courſe or tranſactions of buſineſs by common conſent, which gives them the credit and currency of money ney to every effectual purpoſe; they are as much conſidered to be money as guineas themſelves; 1 Burr. 457, and it ſeems are as lawful a tender. See Stat. 5 W. & M. c. 20. § 28: 3 Term Rep. 554.

Bankers' caſh notes and drafts on bankers, are ſo far conſidered as money among merchants, that they receive them in payment as ready caſh; and if the party receiving them do not within a reaſonable time demand the money he muſt bear the loſs in caſe of the bankers' failure. What ſhall be conſtrued to be a reaſonable time has been ſubject to much doubt; it was formerly conſidered as a queſtion of fact depending on the circumſtances of the caſe, to be determined by a jury; but it is now eſtabliſhed to be a queſtion of law to be decided by the court, though the preciſe time is neceſſarily undetermined. 1 Black. Rep. 1. See 1 Ld. Raym. 744: 1 Stra. 415, 6, 550: 2 Stra. 910, 1175, 1248. And on the whole the beſt rule in theſe caſes ſeems to be, that drafts on bankers, payable on demand, ought to be carried for payment on the very day on which they are received; if from the diſtance and ſituation of the parties that may conveniently be done.

Bills of exchange and promiſſory notes, though according to the general principles of law, they are to be conſidered only as evidences of a ſimple contract, are yet in one reſpect regarded as ſpecialties; and on the ſame footing with bonds; for unleſs the contrary be ſhewn by the defendant, they are always preſumed to have been made on a good conſideration; nor is it incumbent on the plaintiff either to ſhew a conſideration in his declaration, or to prove it at the trial. 1 Black. Rep. 445: Peckham v. Wood, K. B. Eaſt. 18 Geo. 3.—However though foreign bills were always entitled to this privilege it was not without ſome difficulty that it was extended to inland bills; and notes are indebted for it to the ſtatute. 2 Ld. Raym. 758: 1 Black. Rep. 487.

7. Bills of exchange, contrary to the general nature of choſes in action, are by the cuſtom of merchants, aſſignable or negotiable without any fiction, and every perſon to whom they are transferred may maintain an action in his own name againſt any one, who has before him in the courſe of their negotiation rendered himſelf reſponſible for their payment. The ſame privilege is conferred on notes by the Statute. But the inſtrument or writing which conſtitutes a good bill of exchange according to the cuſtom, or a good note under the Statute muſt have certain eſſential qualities. 3 Wilſ. 213.

One of theſe qualities is, that the bill or note ſhould be for the payment of money only; and not for the payment of money and the doing ſome other act; (2 Stra. 1271;) for theſe inſtruments being originally adopted for the convenience of remittance, and now conſidered only as ſecurities for the future payment of money muſt undertake only for that; and it muſt be money in ſpecie, not in good Eaſt India bonds, or any thing elſe which can itſelf be only conſidered as a ſecurity. Bull. N. P. 273.

Another requiſite quality is, that the inſtrument muſt carry with it a perſonal and certain credit, given to the drawer or maker, not confined to credit on any particular fund. 3 Wilſ. 213. But in the application of this principle there ſeems to be a material diſtinction between bills and notes. As to the former, where the fund is ſuppoſed to be in the hands of the drawee, the objection holds in its full force; not only becauſe it may be uncertain whether the fund will be productive, but becauſe the credit is not given to the perſon of the drawer; but where the fund on account of which the money is payable, either is in the hands of the drawer, or he is accountable for it, the objection will not hold, becauſe the credit is perſonal to him, and the fund is only the conſideration of his giving the bill.—With reſpect to a note, if the drawer promiſe to pay out of a particular fund, then within his power, the note will be good under the ſtatute: the payment does not depend on the circumſtance of the fund's proving unproductive or not, but there is an obligation on his perſonal credit; the bare making of the note being an acknowledgement that he has money in his hands. See Joſcelyne v. Laſſere, Fort. 281: 10 Mod. 294, 316—Jenny v. Herle, 1 Stra. 591: 2 Ld. Raym. 1361: 8 Mod. 265: Dawkes & ux. v. Deloraine, 3 Wilſ. 207: 2 Black. Rep. 782.—On the principle which governed theſe caſes an order from an owner of a ſhip to the freighter to pay money on account of freight, was held to be no bill of exchange. 2 Stra. 1211.—But ſuch a bill from the freighters of a ſhip, to any other perſon, if good in other reſpects would certainly not be bad, though made payable on account of freight; becauſe indiſputably there is a perſonal credit given to the drawer, the words "on account of freight," only expreſſing the conſideration for which the bill was given. See Pierſon v. Dunlop, Doug. 571.—And there may be caſes where the inſtrument may appear at firſt ſight to be payable out of a particular fund, but in reality be only a diſtinction how the drawee is to reimburſe himſelf, or a recital of the particular ſpecies of value received by the maker of a note; in which caſes their validity reſts on the perſonal credit given to the acceptor of the bill, or drawer of the note. 2 Ld. Raym. 1481, 1545: 2 Stra. 762: Barn. K. B. 12.

Another eſſential quality to make a good bill or note is, that it muſt be abſolutely payable at all events; and not depend on any particular circumſtances which may or may not happen in the common courſe of things. 3 Wilſ. 213: 1 Burr. 325: See 2 Ld. Raym. 1362, 1396, 1563: 8 Mod. 363: 4 Vin. 240. pl. 16: 2 Stra. 1151: 4 Mod. 242: 1 Burr. 323. In the caſe of notes however it is not neceſſary, that the time of payment ſhould be abſolutely fixed; it is ſufficient if, from the nature of the thing the time muſt certainly arrive, on which their payment is to depend; (2 Stra. 1217: 1 Burr. 227;) for here the words of engagement make the debt; and it is no direction to another perſon; the former part of the note is a promiſe to pay the money, and the reſt is only fixing the particular time when it is to be paid. It is ſufficient if it be certainly, and at all events payable at that time, whether the maker live till then, or die in the interim.—And it has been decided that a promiſe to pay "within two months after ſuch a ſhip ſhall be paid off" will make a good note; for the paying off the ſhip is a thing of a publick nature and morally certain. See 1 Stra. 24: 1 Wilſ. 262, 3.—But this indulgence ſeems to have been carried almoſt too far; and ſuch a latitude ſeems incompatible with the nature and original intention of a bill of exchange; its allowance in favour of promiſſory notes ariſing entirely from a liberal conſtruction of the ſtatute on which the negotiability of thoſe notes depends.

In

In moſt of the caſes where the ſeveral inſtruments have been denied the privilege of bills and notes, it is not for that reaſon to be concluded that they are of no force: when the fund from which they are to be paid, can be proved to have been productive, or the contingency on which they depend has happened, they may be uſed as evidence of a contract, according to the circumſtances of the caſe, or according to the relation in which the parties ſtand to one another. See 2 Black. Rep. 1072.

No preciſe form of words is neceſſary to make a bill of exchange or a note under the ſtatute; any order which cannot be complied with, or promiſe which cannot be performed, without the payment of money, will make a good bill or note. Thus an order to deliver money, or a promiſe that ſuch a one ſhall receive it. 10 Mod. 287: 2 Ld. Raym. 1396: 1 Stra. 629, 706: 1 Wilſ. 263: 3 Wilſ. 213; 8 Mod. 364: All. 1.

The words value received being in general inſerted in bills and notes, there ſeems to have been ſome doubt, whether they were eſſential; in one caſe, (Banbury v. Liſſet, 2 Stra. 1212,) where the want of theſe words was objected, a verdict was given on that account againſt the inſtrument, but that caſe ſeems a very doubtful authority—On ſeveral occaſions it appears to have been ſaid incidentally by the court, and at the bar, that theſe words are unneceſſary. Fort. 282: Barn. K. B. 88: 8 Mod. 267: 1 Show. 5, 497: 3 Lord Raym. 1556, 1481: Lutw. 889: 1 Mod. Ent. 310.—And the point is now fully ſettled that theſe words are not neceſſary; for as theſe inſtruments are always preſumed to have been made on a valuable conſideration, words which import no more, cannot be eſſential. White v. Ledwick, K. B. Hil. 25 Geo. 3.

Whether it be eſſential to the conſtitution of a bill of exchange, that it ſhould contain words which render it negotiable, as to order or to bearer, ſeems not hitherto to have received a direct judicial deciſion. There are two caſes in which the want of ſuch words was taken as an exception; but as there were other exceptions, the point was not decided. 2 Stra. 1212: 3 Wilſ. 212.—In another caſe, the ſame exeception was taken and overruled, but under ſuch circumſtances that the point was not generally determined. 2 Wilſ. 353.—If in a doubtful point however it may be allowed to reaſon on general principles, it ſhould ſeem, that it being the original intention and the actual uſe of bills of exchange that they ſhould be negotiable, ſuch drafts as want theſe operative words are not entitled to be declared on as ſpecialties, however they may be ſufficient as evidence to maintain an action of another kind. Kyd, 42.—But it has been ruled that ſuch words are not neceſſary in notes, and that the perſon to whom they are made payable may maintain an action on them, within the ſtatute againſt the maker. Moor v. Paine, Hardw. 288.

II. An Acceptance is an engagement to pay a bill of exchange according to the tenor of the acceptance.—The circumſtances which generally concur in an acceptance are that the party to whom it is addreſſed binds himſelf to the payment, after the bill has iſſued, before it has become due, and according to its tenor; by either ſubſcribing his name or writing the word accepts, or accepted, or accepted A. B. But a man may be bound as acceptor without any of theſe circumſtances.

An acceptance may be either written or verbal; if the former, it may be either on the bill itſelf, or in ſome collateral writing, as a letter, &c. 1 Stra. 648.—In foreign bills it has always been underſtood that a collateral or parol acceptance was ſufficient: 1 Stra. 648: 3 Burr. 1674: Hardw. 75. And it is now ſettled that ſuch acceptance is alſo good in caſes of inland bills; as by word, Lumley v. Palmer, 2 Stra. 1000; or by letter, 1 Atk. 717 (613).

The acceptance is uſually made between the time of iſſuing the bill and the time of payment; but it may alſo be made before the bill has iſſued, or after it has become due; when it is made before the bill is iſſued, it is rather an agreement to accept, than an actual acceptance; but ſuch agreement is equally binding as an acceptance itſelf. 3 Burr. 1663: Doug. 284: 1 Atk. 715, (611)—When the acceptance is made after the time of payment is elapſed, it is conſidered as a general promiſe to pay the money: and if it be to pay according to the tenor of the bill, this ſhall not invalidate the acceptance, though the time being paſt, it be impoſſible to pay according to the tenor; but theſe words ſhall be rejected as ſurpluſage. 1 Salk. 127, 9: 1 Ld. Raym. 364, 574: 12 Mod. 214, 410: Carth. 4, 9.

Acceptance is uſually made by the drawee, and when before the iſſuing of the bill, is hardly ever made by any other perſon; but after the iſſuing the bill it often happens, either that the drawee cannot be found, or refuſes to accept, or that his credit is ſuſpected, or that he cannot by reaſon of ſome diſability render himſelf reſponſible: in any of theſe caſes an acceptance by another perſon, in order either to prevent the return of the bill, to promote the negotiation of it, or to ſave the reputation of, and prevent an action againſt, the drawer, or ſome of the other parties, is not uncommon: ſuch an acceptance is called an acceptance for the honour of the perſon on whoſe account it is made.

That engagement which conſtitutes an acceptance, is uſually made to the holder of the bill, or to ſome perſon who has it in contemplation to receive it; and then the acceptor muſt anſwer to him, and to every one who either has had the bill before, or ſhall afterwards have it by indorſement: but it is frequently made to the drawer himſelf; and then it may be binding on the party making the engagement or not, according to the circumſtances of the caſe.

The mere anſwer of a merchant to the drawer "that he will duly honour his bill" is not of itſelf an acceptance, unleſs accompanied with circumſtances which may induce a third perſon to take the bill by indorſement: but if there be any ſuch circumſtances, it may amount to an acceptance, though the anſwer be contained in a letter to the drawer. Cowp. 572, 4: 1 Atk. 715, (611). And an agreement to accept may be expreſſed in ſuch terms as to put a third perſon in a better condition than the drawer. If one, meaning to give credit to another, make an abſolute promiſe to accept his bill, the drawer or any other perſon may ſhew ſuch promiſe on the exchange to procure credit, and a third perſon advancing his money on it has nothing to do with the equitable circumſtances which may ſubſiſt between the drawer and acceptor. Dougl. 286, (299).

An

An acceptance is generally according to the tenor of the bill; and then it is called a general and abſolute acceptance: but it may differ from the tenor in ſome material circumſtances, and yet, as far as it goes, be binding on the acceptor.—Thus it may be for a leſs ſum than that mentioned in the bill; or it may be for an enlarged period. 1 Stra. 214: Marius 21.—So the drawee may accept a bill which has no time mentioned for payment, and which is held to be payable at ſight, to pay, at a diſtant period; which acceptance will bind him. 11 Mod. 190.

A bill was payable the 1ſt of January; the drawee accepted to pay the 1ſt of March: the holder ſtruck out the 1ſt of March, and inſerted the 1ſt of January, and when it was payable according to that date, preſented it for payment, which the acceptor refuſed; on which the holder reſtored the acceptance to the original form; and the court held that it continued binding. Price v. Shute, Eaſt. 33 Car. 2.—So the acceptance may direct the payment to be made at a different place from that mentioned in the bill, as at the houſe of a banker. See 2 Stra. 1195.—So alſo the acceptance may differ from the tenor of the bill in its mode of payment, as to pay half in money, half in bills. Bull. N. P. 270.—An acceptance may alſo be conditional, as 'to pay when certain goods conſigned to the acceptor, and for which the bill is drawn, ſhall be ſold.' 2 Stra. 1152.

What ſhall be conſidered as an abſolute or conditional acceptance is a queſtion of law to be determined by the court, and is not to be left to the jury. 1 Term Rep. 182: See 1 Stra. 648: 1 Atk. 717, (612).—If the acceptance be in writing, and the drawee intend that it ſhould be only conditional, he muſt be careful to expreſs the condition in writing as well as the acceptance; for if the acceptance ſhould, on the face of it appear to be abſolute, he cannot take advantage of any verbal condition annexed to it, if the bill ſhould be negociated and come to the hands of a perſon unacquainted with the condition; and even againſt the perſon to whom the verbal condition was expreſſed, the burthen of proof will be on the acceptor. Doug. 286.—A conditional acceptance, when the conditions on which it depends are performed, becomes abſolute. Cowp. 571.—But if the conditions on which the agreement to accept a bill is made, be not complied with, that agreement will be diſcharged. Doug. 297.

An acceptance by the cuſtom of merchants as effectually binds the acceptor, as if he had been the original drawer; and, having once accepted it, he cannot afterwards revoke it. Cro. Jac. 308: Hard. 487.

A very ſmall matter will amount to an acceptance; and any words will be ſufficient for that purpoſe, which ſhew the party's aſſent or agreement to pay the bill; as if upon the tender thereof to him, he ſubſcribes, accepted, or accepted by me A. B. or, I accept the bill, &c. theſe clearly amount to an acceptance. Molloy, book 2. cap. 10. ſect. 15.

If the party under-writes the bill, preſented ſuch a day, or only the day of the month; this is ſuch an acknowledgement of the bill as amounts to an acceptance. 3 New Abr. 610: Comb. 401. So if he order a direction to another perſon to pay it. Bull. N. P. 270.

If the party ſays, Leave your bill with me and I will accept it, or, call for it to-morrow and it ſhall be accepted; theſe words, according to the cuſtom of merchants, as effectually bind, as if he had actually ſigned or ſubſcribed his name according to the uſual manner.

But if a man ſays, Leave your bill with me; I will look over my accounts and books between the drawer and me, and call to-morrow, and accordingly the bill ſhall be accepted; this does not amount to a compleat acceptance; for the mention of his books and accounts ſhews plainly that he intended only to accept the bill, in caſe he had effects of the drawer's in his hands. And ſo it was ruled by the Lord Chief Juſtice Hale, at Guildhall. Molloy, book 2. cap. 10. ſect. 20.

A foreign bill was drawn on the defendant, and being returned for want of acceptance, the defendant ſaid, that if the bill came back again he would pay it; this was ruled a good acceptance. 3 New Abr. 610, cites Mich. 6 Geo. 1. B. R. Carr v. Coleman.

If a merchant be deſired to accept a bill, on the account of another, and to draw on a third, in order to reimburſe himſelf, and in conſequence he draw a bill on that third perſon; the bare act of drawing this bill, will not amount to an acceptance of the other. 1 Term Rep. 269.

An agreement to accept or honour a bill, will in many caſes be equivalent to an acceptance, and whether that agreement be merely verbal, or in writing, is immaterial: If A. having given or intending to give credit to B. write to C. to know whether he will accept ſuch bills as ſhall be drawn on him on B.'s account; and C. return for anſwer, that he will accept them; this is equivalent to an acceptance; and a ſubſequent prohibition to draw on him on B.'s account, will be of no avail, if in fact, previous to that prohibition the credit has been given. 3 Burr. 1663.

If a book-keeper or ſervant, or other perſon having authority, or who uſually tranſacts buſineſs of this nature for the maſter, accept a bill of exchange, this ſhall bind ſuch maſter. 3 New Abr. 611.

If a bill be drawn on a ſervant (as a clerk of a corporation, &c.) with a direction to place the money to the account of his employer, and the ſervant accept it generally, this renders him liable to anſwer perſonally to an indorſee. 2 Stra. 955: Hardw. 1.

If a bill be accepted, and the perſon who accepted the ſame happens to die before the time of payment, there muſt be a demand made of his executors or adminiſtrators; and on non-payment, a proteſt is to be made, although the money becomes due before there can be adminiſtration, &c.

Forging the acceptance of any bill of exchange, or the number or principal ſum of any accountable receipt, is made felony, by Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 22.

III. According to the difference in the ſtile of negotiability of bills and notes, the modes of their tranſfer alſo differ. Bills and notes payable to bearer are tranſferred by delivery: if payable to A. B. or bearer they are payable to bearer, as if A. B. were not mentioned. 1 Burr. 452: 3 Burr. 1516: 1 Black. Rep. 485. But to the tranſfer of thoſe payable to order, it is neceſſary in addition to delivery that there ſhould be ſomething, by which the payee may appear to expreſs his order. This additional circumſtance is an indorſement; ſo called from being uſually (though not neceſſarily) written on the back of the note or bill.

Where no regulation is made by act of parliament (see ante I. 4,) relative to the negotiation of bills or notes, no particular form of words is neceſſary to make an indorſement; only the name of the indorſor muſt appear upon it, and it muſt be written or ſigned by him, or by ſome perſon authorized by him for that purpoſe.

Indorſements are either in full or in blank; a full indorſement is that by which the indorſor orders the money to be paid to ſome particular perſon, by name: a blank indorſement conſiſts only of the name of the indorſor—Blank indorſements are moſt frequent, indeed almoſt univerſal in buſineſs.—A blank indorſement renders the bill or note afterwards transferable by delivery only, as if it were payable to bearer; for by only writing his name the indorſor ſhews his intention that the inſtrument ſhould have a general currency, and be transferred by every poſſeſſor. Doug. 617, (639), 611, (633).

Except where reſtrained by ſtatute (See ante I. 4,) The transfer of a bill or note may be made at any time after it has iſſued, even after the day of payment; and, in caſe of bills, where the acceptor reſides at a diſtance from the drawer, is frequently made before acceptance. 1 Ld. Raym. 575: See 3 Term Rep. 80: 3 Burr. 1516: 1 Black. Rep. 485: Doug. 611, (633).

An indorſement may be made on a blank note, before the inſertion of any date or ſum of money, in which caſe the indorſor is liable for any ſum, at any time of payment that may be afterwards inſerted; and it is immaterial whether the perſon taking the note on the credit of the indorſement knew whether it was made before the drawing of the note or not; for in ſuch a caſe the indorſement is equivalent to a letter of credit for any indefinite ſum. Doug. 496, (514).

On a transfer by delivery, it is ſaid that the perſon making it ceaſes to be a party to, or ſecurity for, the payment of a bill or note; (1 Ld. Raym. 442: 12 Mod. 241: 1 Salk. 128:) yet it ſeems there can be little doubt that he is liable in another ſort of action; as for money had and received, &c. See 3 Term Rep. 757: 4 Term Rep. 177.

Though a blank indorſement be a ſufficient transfer, and may enable the perſon, in whoſe favour it is made, to negotiate the inſtrument, yet it is in his option, to take it either as indorſee, or as ſervant or agent to the indorſor; and the latter may, notwithſtanding his indorſement, declare as holder in an action againſt the drawer or acceptor. Nothing is more uſual than for the holder of a bill or note to indorſe it in blank, and ſend it to ſome friend for the purpoſe of procuring the acceptance or the payment; in this caſe it is in the power of the friend, either to fill up the blank ſpace over the indorſer's name, with an order to pay the money to himſelf, which ſhews his election to take as indorſee; or to write a receipt which ſhews he is only the agent of the indorſer. 1 Salk. 125, 128, 130: 1 Show. 163: 2 Ld. Raym. 871. And, on this principle one, to whom a bill was delivered with a blank indorſement, and who carried it for acceptance, was admitted, in an action of trover for the bill againſt the drawee, to prove the delivery of it to the latter. 1 Salk. 130: 2 Ld. Raym. 871.

The original contract on negotiable bills and notes is to pay to ſuch perſon or perſons, as the payee, or his indorſees, or their indorſees ſhall direct; and there is as much privity between the laſt indorſor and the laſt indorſee, as between the drawer and the original payee. When the payee aſſigns it over, he does it by the law of merchants, for as a thing in action, it is not aſſignable by the general law. The indorſement is part of the original contract, is incidental to it in the nature of the thing, and muſt be underſtood to be made in the ſame manner as the inſtrument was drawn; the indorſee holds it in the ſame manner and with the ſame privileges, qualities, and advantages as the original payee, as a transferable negotiable inſtrument, which he may indorſe over to another, and that other to a third, and ſo on at pleaſure; for theſe reaſons an indorſor for a valuable conſideration cannot limit his indorſement by any reſtriction on the indorſee, ſo as to preclude him from transferring it to another as a thing negotiable. 2 Burr. 1222, 3, 6, 7—See alſo Com. 311: 1 Stra. 457: 2 Burr. 1216: 1 Black. Rep. 295: and as to the effect of Reſtrictive Indorſements, ſee Doug. 615, (637): 617, (639, 640).

Where the transfer may be by delivery only, that tranſfer may be made by any perſon who by any means, whether accident or theft has obtained the poſſeſſion; and any holder may recover againſt the drawer, acceptor or indorſor in blank, if ſuch holder gave a valuable conſideration without knowledge of the accident. 1 Burr. 452: 3 Burr. 1516: 1 Black. Rep. 485. The ſame principle applies alſo to the caſe of a bill negotiated with a blank indorſement. Peacock v. Rhodes & al. Doug. 611, (613); where the court held, that there was no difference between a bill or note indorſed blank, and one payable to bearer. They both paſs by delivery, and poſſeſſion proves property in both caſes. The holder of either cannot with propriety be conſidered as aſſignee of the payee: an aſſignee muſt take the thing aſſigned, ſubject to all the equity to which the original party was ſubject: if this rule were applied to bills and notes, it would ſtop their currency, and would render it neceſſary for every indorſee to enquire into all the circumſtances, and the manner in which the bill came to the indorſor; but the law is now clearly ſettled, that a holder coming fairly by a bill or note, is not to be affected with the tranſaction between the original parties.

But a transfer by indorſement where that is neceſſary, can only be made by him who has a right to make it, and that is ſtrictly only the payee, or the perſon to whom he or his indorſees have transferred it, or ſome one claiming in the right of ſome of theſe parties.—Bills and notes in favour of partners muſt be indorſed by them all, or at leaſt by one in the firm of the houſe; and a bill drawn by two perſons payable to them or order, muſt be indorſed by both. Doug. 630, (653) in note.

If a bill or note be made or indorſed to a woman while ſingle, and ſhe afterwards marry, the right to indorſe it over belongs to her huſband, for by the marriage he is entitled to all her perſonal property. 1 Stra. 516: Ca. L. E. 246.

If a man become bankrupt, the property of bills and notes of which he is the payee or indorſee, veſts in his aſſignees, and the right to transfer is in them only.—If the holder of a bill or note die, it devolves to his executors or adminiſtrators, and they may indorſe it, and their indorſee maintain an action, in the ſame manner as if the indorſement had been made by the teſtator or intestate.

inteſtate. But on their indorſement they are liable perſonally to the ſubſequent parties, for they cannot charge the effects of the teſtator.—They may alſo be the indorſees of a bill or note in their quality of executors or adminiſtrators; as where they receive one from their teſtator or inteſtate; and in that character they may bring an action on it againſt the acceptor, or any of the other parties. 3 Wilſ. 1: 2 Stra. 1260: 2 Barnes 137: 2 Burr. 1225: 1 Term Rep. 487: 10 Mod. 315.

When a bill payable to order is expreſſed to be for the uſe of another perſon than the payee, yet the right of transfer is in the payee, and his indorſee may recover againſt the drawer or acceptor. Carth. 5: 2 Vent. 309: 2 Show. 509.

It has been adjudged, that a bill of exchange cannot be indorſed for part, ſo as to ſubject the party to ſeveral actions. 3 New Abr. 610: Carth. 466: 1 Salk. 65.

IV. By the very act of drawing a bill, the drawer comes under an implied engagement to the payee, and to every ſubſequent holder, fairly entitled to the poſſeſſion, that the perſon on whom he draws is capable of binding himſelf by his acceptance, that he is to be found at the place at which he is deſcribed to be, if that deſcription be mentioned in the bill; that if the bill be duly preſented to him, he will accept it in writing on the bill itſelf, according to its tenor; and that he will pay it when it becomes due, if preſented in proper time for that purpoſe.

In default of any of theſe particulars, the drawer is liable to an action at the ſuit of any of the parties before mentioned, on due diligence being exerciſed on their parts, not only for the payment of the original ſum mentioned in the bill, but alſo in ſome caſes for damages, intereſt and coſts; and he is equally anſwerable whether the bill was drawn on his own account, or on that of a third perſon; for the holder of the bill is not to be affected by the circumſtances that may exiſt between the drawer and another; the perſonal credit of the drawer being pledged for the due honour of the bill. Beawes. See ante I. 7.

If a man write his name on a blank piece of paper, and deliver it to another, with authority to draw on it a bill of exchange to any amount, at any diſtance of time, he renders himſelf liable to be called on as the drawer of any bill ſo formed by the perſon to whom he has given the authority. 1 H. Black. Rep. 313.

If acceptance be refuſed and the bill returned, this is notice to the drawer of the refuſal of the drawee; and then the period when the debt of the former is to be conſidered as contracted, is the moment he draws the bill; and an action may be immediately commenced againſt him; though the regular time of payment, according to the tenor of the bill, be not arrived. For the drawee not having given credit, which was the ground of the contract, what the drawer had undertaken has not been performed. Doug. 55, Mitford v. Mayor; See alſo 2 Stra. 949; cited 3 Wilſ. 16, 17.

When a bill of exchange is indorſed by the perſon to whom it was made payable, as between the indorſor and indorſee, it is a new bill of exchange; as it is alſo between every ſubſequent indorſor and indorſee: the indorſor therefore, with reſpect to all the parties ſubſequent to him, ſtands in the place of the drawer, being a collateral ſecurity for the acceptance and payment of the bill by the drawee: his indorſement impoſes on him the ſame engagement that the drawing of the bill does on the drawer; and the period when that engagement attaches is the time of the indorſement. 1 Salk. 133: 2 Show. 441, 494: 2 Burr. 674.

Nothing will diſcharge the indorſor from his engagement but the abſolute payment of the money, not even a judgment recovered againſt the drawer or any previous indorſor. 3 Mod. 86: 2 Show. 441, 494.—Neither is the engagement of an indorſor diſcharged by an ineffectual execution againſt the drawer or any prior or ſubſequent indorſor. 2 Black. Rep. 1235. and ſee 4 Term Rep. 825.

The engagement of the drawer and indorſors is however ſtill but conditional—The holder in order to intitle himſelf to call upon them in conſequence of it, undertakes to perform certain requiſites on his part, a failure in which precludes him from his remedy againſt them.—Where the payment of a bill is limited at a certain time after ſight, it is evident the holder muſt preſent it for acceptance, otherwiſe the time of payment would never come: it does not appear that any preciſe time, within which this preſentment muſt be made has in any caſe been aſcertained: but it muſt be done as ſoon as, under all the circumſtances of the caſe, that can conveniently be done; and what has been ſaid on the preſentment of bills and notes payable on demand, ſeems exactly to apply here. See ante I. 6.

Whether the holder of a bill, payable at a certain time after the date be bound to preſent for acceptance immediately on the receipt of it, or whether he may wait till it become due, and then preſent it for payment, is a queſtion which ſeems never to have been directly determined: in practice however it frequently happens that a bill is negotiated and transferred through many hands, without acceptance; and not preſented to the drawee till the time of payment, and no objection is ever made on that account. See 5 Burr. 2671: 1 Term Rep. 7[illegible]

If however, the holder in fact preſent the bill for acceptance and that be refuſed, he is bound to give regular notice to all the preceding parties to whom he intends to reſort for non-payment; to the drawer, that he may know how to regulate his conduct with reſpect to the drawee, and make other proviſion for the payment of the bill; and to the indorſors, that they may ſeverally have their remedy in time againſt the parties on whom they have a right to call; and if on account of the holder's delay, any loſs accrue by the failure of any of the preceding parties, he muſt bear the loſs. 5 Burr. 2670: 1 Term Rep. 712.

It is alſo the duty of the holder of a bill, whether accepted or not, to preſent it for payment within a limited time; for otherwiſe the law will imply, that payment has been made; and it would be prejudicial to commerce if a bill might riſe up to charge the drawer at any diſtance of time, when all accounts might be adjuſted between him and the drawee.—For the old caſes on this ſubject, ſee 1 Salk. 127, 132, 3. 1 Show. 155: 1 Ld. Raym. 743: 2 Stra. 829.—This time for demand of payment ſeems at preſent to be regulated by the caſes as to notice to preceding indorſors immediately following.

A preſentment either for payment or acceptance muſt be made at ſeaſonable hours; which are the common hours of buſineſs in the place where the party lives to whom the preſentment is to be made.

If acceptance or payment be refuſed, or the drawee of the bill or maker of the note has become inſolvent, or has abſconded, notice from the holder himſelf muſt be given to the preceding parties; and in that notice it is not enough to ſay that the drawee or maker refuſes, is inſolvent, or has abſconded, but it muſt be added, that the holder does not intend to give him credit. The purpoſe of giving notice is not merely that the indorſor ſhould know default has been made, for he is chargeable only in a ſecondary degree; but to render him liable, it muſt be ſhewn, that the holder looked to him for payment, and gave him notice that he did ſo. See 1 Stra. 441, 515: 2 Black. Rep. 747; as to bills—and 1 Stra. 649: 2 Stra. 1087: 1 Term Rep. 170, as to notes.

What ſhould be conſidered as a reaſonable time within which notice ſhould be given, either of non-acceptance or non-payment has been ſubject to much doubt and uncertainty; it was once held, that a fortnight was a reaſonable time, but that is now much narrowed. 1 Mod. 27.

With reſpect to acceptance, it is uſual to leave a bill for that purpoſe with the drawee 'till the next day, and that is not conſidered as giving him time; it being underſtood to be the uſual practice; but if on being called on the next day, he delay or refuſe to accept according to the tenor of the bill, the rule now eſtabliſhed, where the parties, to whom notice is to be given, reſide at a different place from the holder and drawee, is, that notice muſt be ſent by the next poſt—Under the ſame circumſtances, the ſame rule obtains in the caſe of non-payment. 1 Term Rep. 169.—So alſo in caſe the drawee or maker has abſconded, or cannot be found, notice of theſe circumſtances, either in caſe of non-acceptance or non-payment, muſt be ſent by the firſt poſt.

The great difficulty has been to eſtabliſh anv general rule, where the party entitled to notice reſides in the ſame place, or at a place at a ſmall diſtance from that in which the holder lives. On this point as well as on the queſtion of what ſhall be conſidered as a reaſonable time for making the demand of payment, it has been an object of no little controverſy, whether it was the province of the jury, or of the judge to decide; (See ante I. 6;) till lately it ſeems the jury had been permitted to determine on the particular circumſtances of each individual caſe what time was reaſonably to be allowed, either for making demand or giving notice. Doug. 515, (681.)

But it having been found that this was productive of endleſs uncertainty and inconvenience, the court on ſeveral occaſions have laid it down as a principle, that what ſhall be conſidered as a reaſonable time in either caſe is a queſtion of law: juries have however ſtruggled ſo hard to maintain their privilege in this reſpect, that in two caſes they narrowed the time for demand, contrary to the opinion of the court; and on a ſecond trial being granted, they in both caſes adhered to their opinion, contrary to the direction of the judge. In one of them however, application being made for a third trial, the court would have granted it, had not the plaintiff precluded himſelf by proving his debt under a commiſſion of bankrupt which had iſſued againſt the drawees of the bill between the time of the verdict and the application. See Doug. 515: 1 Term Rep. 171, and the caſes there cited.—In a third caſe, where the ſtruggle by the jury was to give a longer time for notice than was neceſſary, the court adhered to their principle and granted no leſs than three trials. 1 Term Rep. 167, 9; Tindal v. Brown. It ſeems therefore fully eſtabliſhed that what ſhall be reaſonable time is a queſtion of law: and generally that a demand muſt be made, and notice given as ſoon as, under all the circumſtances, it is poſſible ſo to do.

The reaſon why the law requires notice is, that it is preſumed that the bill is drawn on account of the drawee's having effects of the drawer in his hands; and that if the latter has notice that the bill is not accepted, or not paid, he may withdraw them immediately. But if he have no effects in the other's hands, then he cannot be injured for want of notice; and if it be proved on the part of the plaintiff, that from the time the bill was drawn, till the time it became due, the drawee never had any effects of the drawer in his hands, notice to the latter is not neceſſary in order to charge him, for he muſt know this fact; and if he had no effects in the drawee's hands, he had no right to draw upon him, and to expect payment from him; nor can he be injured by the non-payment of the bill, or the want of notice that it has been diſhonoured. 1 Term Rep. 410; and ſee 1 Term Rep. 405.

Yet though it appear that the drawer had no effects in the hands of the drawee, no action can be maintained againſt the indorſor, if no notice was given him of the bill being diſhonoured; for though the drawer may have received no injury, the indorſor, who muſt be preſumed to have paid a valuable conſideration for the bill, probably has. 2 Term Rep. 714.

Though in the caſe where the drawer has effects in the hands of the drawee, the want of notice cannot be waived by a ſubſequent promiſe by the drawer, to diſcharge the bill; yet where he had no effects it may; though it appear that in fact he ſuſtained an injury for want of ſuch notice: ſuch a ſubſequent promiſe is an acknowledgment that he had no right to draw on the drawee, and if he has in fact ſuſtained damage it is his own fault.—But where damage in ſuch a caſe has been ſuſtained, and no ſubſequent promiſe appears, it may be very doubtful whether want of notice can be waived. See 2 Term Rep. 713, 714.

In the manner in which notice, either of non-acceptance or non-payment is given, there is a remarkable difference between inland and foreign bills; in the former no particular form of words is neceſſary, to entitle the holder to recover, againſt the drawer or indorſors, the amount of the bill on failure of the drawee or acceptor; it is ſufficient if it appear that the holder means to give no credit to the latter, but to hold the former to their reſponſibility. 1 Term Rep. 170.—But in foreign bills other formalities are required; if the perſon to whom the bill is addreſſed, on preſentment, will not accept it, the holder is to carry it to a perſon veſted with a public character, who is to go to the drawee and demand acceptance, and if he then refuſe, the officer is there to make a minute on the bill itſelf, conſiſting of his initials, the month, the day and the year, with his charges for minuting. He muſt afterwards draw up a ſolemn declaration, that the bill has been preſented for acceptance, which was refuſed, and that the holder intends intends to recover all damages which he or the deliverer of the money to the drawer, or any other may ſuſtain on account of the non-acceptance: the minute is in common language termed the noting of the bill; the ſolemn declaration, the proteſt, and the perſon whoſe office it is to do theſe acts a public notary: and to his proteſtation all foreign courts give credit. Mal. 264: Mar. 16.

This proteſt muſt be made within the regular hours of buſineſs, and in ſufficient time to have it ſent to the holder's correſpondent by the very next poſt after acceptance refuſed; for if it be not ſent by that time, with a letter of advice, the holder will be conſtrued to have diſcharged the drawer and the other parties intitled to notice: and noting alone is not ſufficient, there muſt abſolutely be a proteſt to render the preceding parties liable. Bull. N. P. 271: 2 Term Rep. 713.

But in this caſe the holder is not to ſend the bill itſelf to his correſpondent; he muſt retain it, in order to demand payment of the drawee when it becomes due.

When the bill becomes due, whether it was accepted or not, it is again to be preſented for payment within the days of grace, and if payment be refuſed, the bill muſt be proteſted for non-payment, and the bill itſelf, together with the proteſt, ſent to the holder's correſpondent, unleſs he ſhall be ordered by him to retain the bill, with a proſpect of obtaining its diſcharge from the acceptor. Beawes.

As this proteſt on foreign bills muſt be made on the laſt day of grace, and immediate notice ſent to the parties concerned, it ſeems eſtabliſhed that ſuch a bill is payable, on demand made, at any time that day within reaſonable hours; and that the acceptor has not the whole day to pay the bill. 4 Term Rep. 170.

Beſides the proteſt for non-acceptance, and non-payment, there may alſo be a proteſt for better ſecurity; this is uſual when a merchant who has accepted a bill happens to become inſolvent, or is publicly reported to have failed in his credit, or abſents himſelf from 'Change, before the bill he has accepted has become due; or when the holder has any reaſon to ſuppoſe it will not be paid; in ſuch caſes he may cauſe a notary to demand better ſecurity, and on that being refuſed, make proteſt for want of it; which proteſt muſt alſo be ſent to the parties concerned, by the next poſt. Mar. 27: 1 Ld. Raym. 743.

Where the original bill is loſt, and another cannot be had of the drawer, a proteſt may be made on a copy, eſpecially where the refuſal of payment is not for want of the original bill, but merely for another cauſe. 1 Show. 164.

The effect of proteſt for non-acceptance or non-payment, is to charge the drawer or indorſors, not only with the payment of the principal ſum, but with intereſt, damages, and expences; which latter conſiſt uſually of the exchange, re-exchange, proviſion and poſtage, together with the expences of the proteſt. See Stra. 649.

Whenever intereſt is allowed, and a new action cannot be brought for it, which is the caſe on bills and notes, the intereſt is to be calculated up to the time of ſigning final judgment. 2 Burr. 1086, 7: and ſee 2 Term Rep. 52.

The principal difference between foreign and inland bills of exchange at common law, ſeems to have been this. A proteſt for non-acceptance or non-payment of a foreign bill was, and ſtill is, eſſentially neceſſary to charge the drawer on the default of the drawee; nothing, not even the principal ſum, could or can at this time be recovered againſt him without a proteſt: no other form of notice having been admitted by the cuſtom of merchants as ſufficient: but on inland bills, ſimple notice, within a reaſonable time, of the default of the drawee, was held ſufficient to charge the drawer, without the ſolemnity of a proteſt; the diſadvantage ariſing from thence was this, that notice entitled the holder to recover only the ſum in the original bill, which in many caſes might be a very ſerious diſadvantage: to remedy this inconvenience in ſome degree, the Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 17, and afterwards the Stat. 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, were paſſed; the profeſſed intention of which acts was to put inland bills on the ſame footing as foreign ones; ſo far as relates to the recovery of damages, intereſt and coſts, (i. e. expences) by means of the proteſt they have done it; but there are ſeveral minute particulars, in which, from an attentive peruſal of the acts, it will appear they ſtill differ.

To the conſtitution of a bill of exchange, as has been ſaid before, it is not neceſſary that the words, value received, ſhould be inſerted; and the want of theſe in a foreign bill, cannot deprive the holder of the benefit of a proteſt; but that benefit in caſe of non-payment is not given by the ſtatutes to inland bills which want theſe words, and therefore they cannot be proteſted for non-payment; and the ſecond act provides, that "where theſe words are wanting, or the value is leſs than 20*l.* no proteſt is neceſſary either for non-acceptance or non-payment," the ſafeſt conſtruction of which ſeems to be, that inland bills, without the words value received, or under 20*l.* ſhall continue as at common law, and ſhall not be intitled to the privilege of a proteſt, either for non-acceptance or non-payment.

An inland bill, payable at ſo many days after ſight, cannot be proteſted at all; and no inland bill can be proteſted, till after the expiration of the three days of grace; notice of which proteſt is by the ſtatute to be ſent within fourteen days after the proteſt. 4 Term Rep. 170.

There appears alſo to be another difference ſubſiſting between foreign and inland bills of exchange; for where acceptance and payment both are refuſed on foreign bills, it ſeems neceſſary that there ſhould be a proteſt for each; but under the Stat. 3 & 4 Ann. c. 9, it ſeems that one proteſt for either, on an inland bill is ſufficient.

On inland bills where damages, intereſt and coſts, [expences] are to be recovered, there is more indulgence in the time allowed for notice of non-payment than where only the principal ſum is to be recovered; for when there is no proteſt for non-payment, preſentation for payment muſt be made ſo early on the laſt day of grace, that the holder may give notice of non-payment by the next poſt. See before.

That part of the Stat. 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9, which puts notes on the ſame footing with inland bills, makes no expreſs proviſion for proteſting them for non-payment; but there can be no doubt that the practice under which ſuch a proteſt is frequently made is founded in juſtice.

As to ſeveral niceties relative to qualified acceptances, and proteſts under peculiar circumſtances. See Beawes Lex Merc. See alſo 1 Wilſ. 185: Doug. 249.

When a bill is once accepted abſolutely, it cannot in any caſe be revoked, and the acceptor is at all events bound, though he hear of the drawer's having failed the next

next moment, even if the failure was before the acceptance.—The acceptor may however be discharged by an express declaration of the holder, or by something equivalent to such declaration. Doug. 237, (249).—But no circumstances of indulgence shewn to the acceptor by the holder, nor an attempt by him to recover of the drawer, will amount to an express declaration of discharge. Doug. 235, (247).—Neither will any length of time short of the statute of limitations, nor the receipt of part of the money from the drawer or indorsor, nor a promise by indorsement on the bill by the drawer to pay the residue, discharge the holder's remedy against the acceptor. Doug. 238, (250) in note; but see Stra. 733.—See ante II.

Though the receipt of part from the drawer or indorsor be no discharge to the acceptor, yet the receipt of part from the acceptor of a bill, or the maker of a note, is a discharge to the drawer and indorsors in the one case, and to the indorsors in the other, unless due notice be given of the non-payment of the residue; for the receipt of part from the maker or acceptor without notice, is construed to be a giving of credit for the remainder, and the undertaking of the preceding parties is only conditional, to pay in default of the original debtor on due notice given: but where due notice is given that the bill is not duly paid, the receipt of part of the money from an acceptor or maker, will not discharge the drawer or indorsors; for it is for their advantage, that as much should be received from others as may be. 1 Ld. Raym. 744: 2 Stra. 745: 1 Wilf. 48: Bull. N. P. 271.—So the receipt of part from an indorsor, is no discharge of the drawer or preceding indorsor.

If the drawer of a note, or the acceptor of a bill, be sued by the indorsee, and the bail pay the debt and costs, this absolutely discharges the indorsor as much as if the principal had paid the note or bill; and the bail cannot afterwards recover against the indorsor in the name of the indorsee. 1 Wilf. 46.

Though in order to intitle himself to call on any of the preceding parties, in default of the acceptor of a bill, or maker of a note, it be necessary that the holder should give due notice of such default, to the party to whom he means to resort, yet notice to that party alone is sufficient as against him: it is not necessary that any attempt should be made to recover the money of any of the other collateral undertakers; or in case of such attempt being made, to give notice of its being without effect. Thus in order to intitle himself to recover against an indorsor, it is not necessary for the indorsee to shew an attempt to recover against the drawer of a bill of exchange, or the payee-indorsor of a promissory note. See 1 Salk. 131, 3: 1 Str. 441: 1 Ld. Raym. 443; and finally, Heylin v. Adamson, 2 Burr. 669; on the principles of all which cases it is now finally settled, that to intitle the indorsee to recover against the indorsor of an inland bill of exchange, it is not necessary to demand the money of the first drawer.

By the said Stat. 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9. § 7, it is enacted, "that if any person accept a bill of exchange for and in satisfaction of any former debt or sum of money formerly due to him, this shall be accounted and esteemed a full and complete payment of such debt; if such person accepting of any such bill for his debt, do not take his due course to obtain payment of it, by endeavouring to get the same accepted and paid, and make his protest according to the directions of the act, either for non-acceptance or non-payment."

V. 1. Before the doctrine of Bills of Exchange was well understood, and the nature and extent of the customs relative to them fully recognized by the courts, the remedy on them was sought in different forms of action, according to the opinions which were entertained of the applicability of the several forms to the respective situations of the parties. See Hardr. 485, 7: 1 Mod. 285: 1 Vent. 152: 1 Freem. 14: 1 Lev. 298: 11 Mod. 190: Comb. 204: 1 Salk. 125: 12 Mod. 37, 345: Skinn. 346: Str. 680: 8 Mod. 373: 1 Mod. Ent. 312. pl. 13: Morg. Prec. 548: Kesseboower v. Tims, B. R. E. 22 Geo. 3: Bailey 47. The conclusion, resulting from all which cases seems to be, that where a privity exists between the parties, there an action of debt, or of indebitatus assumpsit may be maintained; but that where it does not exist, neither of these actions will lie.

A privity exists, between the payee and the drawer of a bill of exchange; the payee and drawer of a promissory note; the indorsee and his immediate indorsor of either the one or the other; and perhaps between the drawer and acceptor of a bill; provided that in all these cases, a consideration past respectively between the parties.

But it seems to be considered, that no privity exists between the indorsee and acceptor of a bill, or the maker of a note, or between an indorsee and a remote indorsor of either.

The action which is now usually brought on a bill of exchange, is a special action on the case, founded on the custom of merchants.

That custom was not at first recognized by the court, unless it was specially set forth, and therefore it was deemed necessary to set forth by way of inducement, so much of it as applied to the particular case, and imposed on the defendant a liability to pay. See 1 Wilf. 189; 1 Ld. Raym. 21, 175: 3 Mod. 86: 4 Mod. 242.

But when the custom of merchants was recognized by the judges as part of the law of the land, and they declared they would take notice of it, as such, ex officio, it became unnecessary to recite the custom at full length; a simple allegation, that "the drawer, mentioning him by his name, according to the custom of merchants, drew his bill of exchange, &c." was sufficient. And if the plaintiff, still adhering to former precedents, thought proper to recite the custom in general terms, and did not bring his case within the custom so set forth; yet if by the law of merchants, as recognized by the court, the case as stated, intitled him to his action, he might recover; and the setting forth of the custom was reckoned surplusage, and rejected. See 1 Show. 317: 2 Ld. Raym. 1542.

Whether the drawer of a bill, or the indorsor of a bill, or of a note, receiving the bill or the note in the regular course of negotiation before it has become due, can maintain an action on it against the acceptor or maker, in the character of indorsee, seems undecided; but there is a case which clearly shews that a drawer or indorsor cannot maintain an action against the acceptor in the character of indorsee, where the indorsement is after the refusal of payment; because when a bill is returned unpaid, either on the drawer or indorsor, its negotiability is at an end. Beck v. Robley, Tr. 14 Geo. 3. 1 H. Black. Rep. 89, in the notes.

The

The action therefore in which the drawer or indorſor, after payment of the money in default of the acceptor, may recover, the firſt againſt the acceptor, and the latter againſt any of the preceding parties, muſt be brought in their original capacity as drawer or indorſor, and not as indorſee. Vid. Simonds v. Parminter, 1 Wilſ. 185: Vid. Morg. Prec. 43, 44, 50: 4 Term Rep. 82, 5.

If the drawee, without having effects of the drawer, accept and duly pay the bill without having it proteſted, he may recover back the money in an action for money paid, laid out and expended to the uſe of the drawer. Vid. Smith v. Niſſen, 1 Term Rep. 269.

Inſtead of bringing an action on the cuſtom or on the ſtatute, the plaintiff may in many caſes uſe a bill or note, only as evidence in another action; and where the inſtrument wants ſome of the requiſites to form a good bill or note, the only uſe he can make of it is to give it in evidence; or if the count on the inſtrument be defective he may give it in evidence, in ſupport of ſome of the other counts for money had and received, or money lent and advanced, according to the circumſtances of the tranſaction. Tatlock v. Harris, 3 Term Rep. 174.

The holder of the bill or note may ſue all the parties who are liable to pay the money; either at the ſame time, or in ſucceſſion; and he may recover judgment againſt all, if ſatisfaction be not made by the payment of the money before judgment obtained againſt all; and proceedings will not be ſtaid in any one action but on payment of the debt and coſts in that action, and the coſts in all the others in which he has not obtained judgment. Vid. Golding v. Grace, 2 Bl. Rep. 749.

But though he may have judgment againſt all, yet he can recover but one ſatisfaction; yet though he be paid by one, he may ſue out execution for the coſts in the ſeveral actions againſt the others. 2 Veſey 115: and ſee 1 Stra. 515: ſee ante IV. and title Bankrupt IV. 5. &c.

To this action the defendant may plead the ſtatute of limitations; and by the expreſs proviſion of the ſtatute of Queen Anne, all actions on promiſſory notes muſt be brought within the ſame time as is limited by the ſtatute of James, with reſpect to actions on the caſe. And it is no good replication to this plea, that it was on account between merchants, where it appears to be for value received. Comb. 190, 392.

2. As the action on a bill of exchange is founded on the cuſtom of merchants, ſo that on a promiſſory note is founded on the ſtatute 3 & 4 Anne, c. 9; and uſually, though perhaps not neceſſarily, refers to it. In both caſes however it is neceſſary, that all thoſe circumſtances ſhould either be expreſsly ſtated, or clearly and inevitably implied, which, according to the characters of the parties to the action, muſt neceſſarily concur in order to intitle the plaintiff to recover.

In ſtating the bill or the note, regard muſt be had to the legal operation of each reſpectively. 1 Burr. 324, 5. It has been decided that the legal operation of a bill, or of a note, payable to a fictitious payee, is, that it is payable to the bearer, and therefore it is proper in the ſtatement of ſuch a bill, to alledge that the drawer thereby requeſted the drawee to pay ſo much money to the bearer; in the ſtatement of ſuch a note, that the maker thereby promiſed to pay ſuch a ſum to the bearer. Vere v. Lewis, 3 Term Rep. 183: Minet & al. v. Gibſon & al. Id. 485: Confirmed in Dom. Proc. See H. Black. Rep. 569: Collis v. Emett, H. Black. Rep. 313. and more fully as to this ſubject poſt. 3. of this diviſion.

Or in ſuch a caſe, the plaintiff may ſtate all the ſpecial circumſtances, and if the verdict correſpond with them, he will be intitled to recover. See 1 H. Black. Rep. 569.

A bill or note payable to the order of a man, may, in an action by him, be ſtated as payable to himſelf, for that is its legal import: or it may be ſtated in the very words of it, with an averment that he made no order.

If a note purport to be given by two, and be ſigned only by one, a declaration generally, as on a note by that one who ſigned it will be good; for the legal operation of ſuch a note is, that he who ſigned, promiſed to pay. Semb. 1 Burr. 323.

On a note to pay jointly and ſeverally, a declaration againſt one in the terms of the note will be good. Burchell v. Slocock, 2 Ld. Raym. 1545. So on a note to pay jointly or ſeverally, Cowp. 832; contrary to former determinations.

Inland bills and notes may be ſtated to have been made at any place where the plaintiff chuſes to lay his action, becauſe the action on them is tranſitory, and may be ſtated to have ariſen any where. In an action againſt the acceptor, it muſt be alledged that he accepted the bill, for the acceptance is the foundation of the action, but the manner of acceptance needs not to be alledged. 2 Ld. Raym. 1542: 1 Ld. Raym. 364, 5: 374, 5: 1 Salk. 127, 9: Carth. 459.

If the bill or note was payable to order, and the action by an indorſee, ſuch indorſements muſt be ſtated as to ſhew his title; an indorſement by the payee muſt at all events be ſtated, becauſe without that, it cannot appear that he made any order, on the exiſtence of which depends the title of the indorſee. If the firſt indorſement was ſpecial, to any perſon by name, in an action by an indorſee after him, his indorſement muſt, for the ſame reaſon, be ſtated: ſo alſo muſt all ſpecial indorſements.

But if the indorſement was in blank, and the action be againſt the drawer, acceptor, or payee, no other indorſement is neceſſary to be ſtated than that of the payee; in an action againſt a ſubſequent indorſor, his indorſement at leaſt muſt be added: in an action on a bill or note payable to bearer, no indorſement need be ſtated, becauſe it is transferable without indorſement. See ante III.

In an action againſt the drawer or indorſor of a bill, or againſt the indorſor of a note, it is abſolutely neceſſary, on account of non-payment of the bill or note, to ſtate a demand of payment from the acceptor of the bill, or the maker of the note, and due notice of refuſal given to the party againſt whom the action is brought; for theſe circumſtances are abſolutely neceſſary to intitle the plaintiff to maintain his action; and a verdict will not help him on a writ of error. The general rule of pleading in this caſe is, that where the plaintiff omits altogether to ſtate his title or cauſe of action, it is not neceſſary to prove it at the trial; and therefore there is no room for preſumption that there was actual proof. Ruſhton v. Aſpinall, Doug. 679, (684): but if the title be only imperfectly ſtated, with the omiſſion only of ſome circumſtances neceſſary to complete the title, they ſhall, after a verdict, be preſumed to have been proved; and in ſome caſes no advantage can be taken of the want of them on a general demurrer. Doug. 684, in the notes.

3. Moſt

3. Moſt part of what might be ſaid as to the proof and defence in actions on bills or notes, neceſſarily ariſes out of the general doctrine already explained.

The plaintiff muſt in all caſes prove ſo much of what is neceſſary to intitle him to his action, and of what muſt be ſtated in his declaration, as is not, from the nature of the thing and the ſituation of the parties, neceſſarily admitted.

In an action againſt the acceptor, it is a general rule that the drawer's hand is admitted; becauſe the acceptor is ſuppoſed to be acquainted with the writing of his correſpondent; and by his acceptance he holds out to every one who ſhall afterwards be the holder, that the bill is truly drawn. 1 Ld. Raym. 444: Str. 946: 3 Burr. 1354: See 1 Bl. 390.—In an action againſt the acceptor therefore, where the acceptance was on view of the bill, whether in writing on the bill, or by parol, it is not neceſſary to prove the hand-writing of the drawer.—That of the acceptor himſelf muſt of courſe be proved; and that of every perſon through whom the plaintiff, from the nature of the tranſaction, muſt neceſſarily derive his title.

On a bill payable to bearer, there is no perſon through whom the holder derives his title; in an action againſt the acceptor therefore, on ſuch a bill, he has only to prove the hand-writing of the acceptor himſelf.—But in an action againſt the acceptor of a bill payable to order, the plaintiff muſt prove the hand-writing of the very payee who muſt be the firſt indorſor. See 4 Term Rep. 28.—If the indorſement of the payee be general, the proof of his hand-writing is ſufficient; if ſpecial, that of his indorſee muſt be proved; but otherwiſe that of any other of the indorſors is not requiſite, though all the ſubſequent indorſements be ſtated in the declaration.—Any ſubſequent holder may declare as the indorſee of the firſt indorſor; but in this caſe, in order to render the evidence correſpondent to the declaration, all the ſubſequent names muſt be ſtruck out, either at or before the trial. See ante III.

But the plaintiff in the caſe of a transfer by delivery (See ante III,) may be called upon to prove that he gave a good conſideration for the bill or note, without the knowledge of its having been ſtolen, or of any of the names of the blank indorſors having been forged. 1 Burr. 542: Dougl. 633, Peacock v. Rhodes.—And though the acceptance be ſubſequent to the indorſements, yet the neceſſity of proving the payee's hand-writing is not, by this means, ſuperſeded. Say. 233: 1 Term Rep. 654.

In an action by an indorſee againſt the drawer, the ſame rules obtain with reſpect to proof of the hand-writing of the indorſors as in an action againſt the acceptors. See Collis v. Emett, 1 H. Black. Rep. 313.—That of the drawer himſelf muſt of courſe be proved.—It muſt alſo be proved that the plaintiff has uſed due diligence. See ante IV.

From the rule, that in an action againſt the drawer or acceptor of a bill payable to order, there muſt be proof of the ſignature of the payee, firſt indorſor, and of all thoſe to whom an indorſement has been ſpecially made, aroſe the queſtion which long, and greatly, agitated the commercial world, on the ſubject of indorſements in the name of fictitious payees. A bill payable to the order of a fictitious perſon, and indorſed in a fictitious name, is not a novelty among merchants and traders. See Stone v. Freeland, B. R. Sittings after Eaſter 1769, alluded to in 3 Term Rep. 176.—But in the years 1786, 7 and 8, two or three houſes connected together in trade, entering into engagements far beyond their capital, and apprehending that the credit of their own names would not be ſufficient to procure currency to their bills, adopted, in a very extenſive degree, a practice which before had been found convenient on a ſmaller ſcale.—So long as the acceptors or drawers could either procure money to pay theſe bills, or had credit enough with the holder to have them renewed, the ſubject of theſe fictitious indorſements never came in queſtion. But, when the parties could no longer ſupport their credit, and a commiſſion of bankrupt became neceſſary, the other creditors felt it their intereſt to reſiſt the claims of the holders of theſe bills; and inſiſted that they ſhould not be admitted to prove their debts, becauſe they could not comply with the general rule of law requiring proof of the hand-writing of the firſt indorſor. The queſtion came before the Chancellor by petition.—He directed trials at law, and ſeveral were had; three againſt the acceptor in the King's Bench, and one againſt the drawer in the Common Pleas, though not all expreſsly by that direction. See Tatlock v. Harris, 3 Term Rep. 174: Vere v. Lewis, 3 Term Rep. 183: Minet & al. v. Gibſon & al. 3 Term Rep. 483: Collis v. Emett, 1 H. Black. Rep. 313. From the deciſions on theſe caſes, the principal of which was affirmed in the Houſe of Lords, and which have ſettled that ſuch bills are to be conſidered as payable to bearer, (ſee ante 2, of this diviſion V.) it follows, that proof of the acceptor's hand only, is ſufficient to entitle the holder to recover on the bill; and in the caſe of Tatlock v. Harris, where a bill was drawn by the defendant and others on the defendant, it was determined that a bonâ fide holder for a valuable conſideration might recover the amount againſt the acceptor in an action for money paid, or money had and received.

[The principal caſe above alluded to, as affirmed in the Houſe of Lords, is that of Minet & al. v. Gibſon & al. already ſo often mentioned. It is better known by the name of Gibſon and Johnſon v. Minet and Fector; and the opinions of the Judges in the Houſe of Lords, are very fully and accurately reported in 1 H. Black. Rep. 569. The effect of the determination, as there ſtated, is as follows.

If a bill of exchange be drawn in favour of a fictitious payee, with the knowledge, as well of the acceptor as the drawer; and the name of ſuch payee be indorſed on it by the drawer, with the knowledge of the acceptor, which fictitious indorſement purports to be to the drawer himſelf or his order; and then the drawer indorſes the bill to an innocent indorſee for a valuable conſideration, and afterwards the bill is accepted; but it does not appear that there was an intent to defraud any particular perſon; ſuch innocent indorſee for a valuable conſideration may recover againſt the acceptor, as on a bill payable to bearer. Perhaps alſo, in ſuch caſe, the innocent indorſee might recover againſt the acceptor, as on a bill payable to the order of the drawee; or on a count ſtating the ſpecial circumſtances.

Other caſes, Maſter & al. v. Gibſon & al. and Hunter v. Gibſon & al. were afterwards brought before the Houſe of Lords, (June 1793) on demurrers to evidence; on which the Judges gave their opinion, that it was not competent competent to the defendants to demur: and that on the record, as ſtated, no judgment could be given.—The whole diſcloſed a ſyſtem of bill-negociation to the amount of a million a year, on fictitious credit, which ended in the bankruptcy of many; but which had at leaſt the good effect of ſhewing that the obligations of law, are not ſo eaſily eluded, as thoſe of honour and conſcience.]

In an action by an indorſee againſt an indorſor, it is not neceſſary to prove either the hand of the drawer or of the acceptor, or of any indorſor, before him againſt whom the action is brought; every indorſor being, with reſpect to ſubſequent indorſees or holders, a new drawer. 1 Ld. Raym. 174: Str. 444: 2 Burr. 675.—Where an action is by one indorſor who has paid the money, proof muſt be given of the payment. 1 Ld. Raym. 743.

In an action by the drawer againſt the acceptor, where the bill has been paid away and returned, it is neceſſary to prove the hand-writing of the latter, demand of payment from him, and refuſal, the return of the bill and payment by the plaintiff. 10 Mod. 36, 7: 1 Wilſ. 185. See ante 1, of this Div. V.

In an action on the caſe by the acceptor againſt the drawer, the plaintiff muſt prove the hand-writing of the defendant, and payment of the money by himſelf; or ſomething equivalent, as his being in priſon on execution. 3 Wilſ. 18.

Where a bill is accepted, or a bill or note is drawn or indorſed by one of two or more partners, on the partnerſhip account, proof of the ſignature of the partner accepting, drawing, or indorſing, is ſufficient to bind all the reſt. 1 Salk. 126: 1 Ld. Raym. 175: ſee Carvick v. Vickery, Doug. 653.

Where a ſervant has a general authority to draw, accept, or indorſe bills or notes, proof of his ſignature is ſufficient againſt the maſter; but his authority muſt be proved, as that it was a general cuſtom for him to do ſo, &c. See Comb. 450: 12 Mod. 346.

An action on a bill of exchange being by an executor, and upon a debt laid to be due to teſtator, it was held neceſſary to prove that the acceptance was in the teſtator's life-time. 12 Mod. 447.

Where the defendant ſuffers judgment by default, and the plaintiff executes a writ of enquiry, it is ſufficient for the latter to produce the note or bill without any proof of the defendant's hand. See 2 Str. 1149: Barnes 233, 4: 2 Black. Rep. 748: 3 Wilſ. 155; and finally, 3 Term Rep. 301, Green v. Hearne; in which the Court ſaid, that by ſuffering judgment to go by default, the defendant had admitted the cauſe of action to the amount of the bill, becauſe that was ſet out on the record; and the only reaſon for producing it to the jury on executing the writ of inquiry, was to ſee whether any part of it had been paid.—And now it ſeems on ſuch judgment, a writ of inquiry is not neceſſary; for the Court on application by the plaintiff, will, if no good reaſon be ſhewn to the contrary, refer it to the proper officer, to aſcertain the damages and coſts, and calculate the intereſt.—Ruled Anon. B. R. Hil. 26 Geo. 3. Bailey 67: Raſhleigh v. Salmon, H. Black. Rep. C. P. 252.

4. Beſides the different ſubjects of defence, which may be collected from the whole of the general principles here ſo fully entered into, the moſt uſual are thoſe which ariſe either, from the total want of conſideration, or from the illegality of the conſideration for which the bill or note was given. See this Dict. title Conſideration.

In general no advantage can be taken of the illegality of the conſideration, but as between the perſons immediately concerned in the tranſaction; any ſubſequent holder of the bill or note, for a fair conſideration, cannot be affected by it.—But there are caſes, in which it has been determined, that by the conſtruction of certain ſtatutes, even the innocent indorſee ſhall not recover againſt the acceptor of the bill or drawer of the note.—As on Stat. 9 Anne c. 14. § 1, which abſolutely invalidates notes, bills, &c. given for money won at play. 2 Stra. 1155.—So on Stat. 12 Anne ſt. 2. c. 16. § 1, as to ſecurities on uſurious contracts; Lowe v. Waller, Doug. 736. And reaſoning by analogy, on Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30. § 11, againſt notes given by a bankrupt to procure his certificate. See this Dict. title Bankrupt.

It has however been repeatedly ruled at Niſi-prius, that wherever it appears that a bill or note has been indorſed over, after it is due, which is out of the uſual courſe of trade, that circumſtance alone throws ſuch a ſuſpicion on it, that the indorſee muſt take it on the credit of the indorſor, and muſt ſtand in the ſituation of the perſon to whom it was payable. See 3 Term Rep. 80, 83.

VI. See ante III. and the general principles, already exemplified.

If a bank bill payable to A. B. or bearer, be loſt, and it is found by a ſtranger, payment to him would indemnify the Bank; yet A. B. may have trover againſt the finder, though not againſt his aſſignee for valuable conſideration, which creates a property. 3 Salk. 71.

If the poſſeſſor of a bill by any accident loſes it, he muſt cauſe intimation to be made by a notary public before witneſſes, that the bill is loſt or miſlaid, requiring that payment be not made of the ſame to any perſon without his privity. And by Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 17, if any inland bill of exchange for five pounds or upwards, ſhall be loſt, the drawer of the bill ſhall give another bill of the ſame tenor, ſecurity being given to indemnify him, in caſe the bill ſo loſt be found again.

If a bill loſt by the poſſeſſor ſhould afterwards come into the poſſeſſion of any perſon paying a full and valuable conſideration for it, without knowledge of its having been loſt, the drawer (and acceptor, if the bill was accepted) muſt pay it when due to ſuch fair poſſeſſor, ſo that the proviſion of the ſtatute may in many caſes be uſeleſs to the loſer of the bill.—But againſt the perſon who finds the bill, the real owner may maintain an action of trover. 1 Salk. 126: 1 Ld. Raym. 738.

Stealing of bills of exchange, notes, &c. is felony in the ſame degree, as if the offender had robbed the owner of ſo much money, &c. And the forging bills of exchange, or notes for money, indorſements, &c. is felony, by Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25: 9 Geo. 2. c. 18. And vide Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 22. ſ. 78.

BILL OF LADING, A memorandum signed by masters of ships, acknowledging the receipt of the merchants' goods, of which there usually are three parts, one kept by the consignor, one sent to the consignee, and one kept by the captain. See titles Factor, Merchant.

BILL OF RIGHTS, The statute 1 Wm. and Mary, stat. 2. cap. 2, is so called; as declaring the true rights of British subjects. See title Liberty, where this important act is stated at large.

BILL OF SALE, Is a solemn contract under seal, whereby a man passes the right or interest that he hath in goods and chattels; for if a man promises or gives any chattels without valuable consideration, or without delivering possession, this doth not alter the property, because it is nudum pactum, unde non oritur actio; but if a man sells goods by deed under seal duly executed, this alters the property between the parties, though there be no consideration, or no delivery of possession; because a man is estopped to deny his own deed, or affirm any thing contrary to the manifest solemnity of contracting. Yelv. 196: Cro. Jac. 270: 1 Brown. 111: 6 Co. 18.

But what is chiefly to be considered under this head, is the statute of 13 Eliz. cap. 5; by which it is enacted, "That all fraudulent conveyances of lands, &c. goods and chattels, to avoid the debt or duty of another, shall (as against the party only, whose debt or duty is so endeavoured to be avoided) be utterly void, except grants made bonâ fide, and on a good (which is construed a valuable) consideration."

A. being indebted to B. in 400*l.* and to C. in 20*l.* C. brings debt against him, and, pending the writ, A. being possessed of goods and chattels to the value of 300*l.* makes a secret conveyance of them all without exception, to B. in satisfaction of his debt; but, notwithstanding, continues in possession of them, and sells some of them, and others of them, being sheep, he sets his mark on: and resolved that it was a fraudulent gift and sale within the aforesaid statute, and shall not prevent C. of his execution for his just debt; for though such sale hath one of the qualifications required by the statute, being made to a creditor for his just debt, and consequently on a valuable consideration; yet it wants the other; for the owner's continuing in possession, is a fixed and undoubted character of a fraudulent conveyance, because the possession is the only indicium of the property of a chattel, and therefore this sale is not made bonâ fide. 3 Co. 80: Mo. 638: 2 Bulst. 226.

As the owner's continuing in possession of goods after his bill of sale of them, is an undoubted badge of a fraudulent conveyance, because the possession is the only indicium of the property of a chattel, which is a thing unfixed and transitory; so there are other marks and characters of fraud; as a general conveyance of them all without any exception; for it is hardly to be presumed, that a man will strip himself entirely of all his personal property, not excepting his bedding and wearing apparel, unless there was some secret correspondence and good understanding settled between him and the vendee, for a private occupancy of all, or some part of the goods for his support; also a secret manner of transacting such bill of sale, and unusual clauses in it: as that it is made honestly, truly, and bonâ fide, are marks of fraud and collusion; for such an artful and forced dress and appearance give a suspicion and jealousy of some defect varnished over with it. 3 Co. 81: Mo. 638.

If goods continue in the possession of the vendor after a bill of sale of them, though there is a clause in the bill that he shall account annually with the vendee for them, yet it is a fraud: since, if such colouring were admitted, it would be the easiest thing in the world to avoid the provisions and cautions of the aforesaid act. Mo. 638.

If A. makes a bill of sale of all his goods, in consideration of blood and natural affection, to his son, or one of his relations, it is a void conveyance in respect of creditors; for the considerations of blood, &c. which are made the motives of this gift, are esteemed in their nature inferior to valuable considerations, which are necessarily required in such sales, by 13 Eliz. cap. 5.

If A. makes a bill of sale to B. a creditor, and afterwards to C. another creditor, and delivers possession at the time of sale to neither; afterwards C. gets possession of them, and B. takes them out of his possession, C. cannot maintain trespass, because though the first bill of sale is fraudulent against creditors, and so is the second, yet they both bind A. As therefore B.'s is the elder title, the naked possession of C. ought not to prevail against it.

See further on this subject title Fraud.—See also title Bankrupt II.

BILL OF STORE, A kind of licence granted at the Custom-house to merchants to carry such stores and provisions as are necessary for their voyage, custom-free. A bill of sufferance is a licence granted to a merchant, to suffer him to trade from one English port to another, without paying custom. See title Navigation Acts.

BILLETS OF GOLD, Fr. billot.] Are wedges or ingots of gold, mentioned in the statute 27 E. 3. c. 27.

BILLET WOOD, Is small wood for fuel, which must be three foot and four inches long, and seven inches and a half in compass, &c. Justices of peace shall inquire by the oaths of six men of the assise of billet, and being under size, it is to be forfeited to the poor. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 14: vide 9 An. c. 15: 10 An. c. 6. See Fuel.

BILLINGSGATE market to be kept every day, and toll is appointed by statute: all persons buying fish in this market may sell the same in any other market by retail; but none but fishmongers shall sell them in shops: if any person shall buy any quantity of fish at Billinsgate for others, or any fishmonger shall ingross the market, they incur a penalty of 20*l.* And fish imported by foreigners shall be forfeited, and the vessel, &c. See 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 24: 1 Geo. 1. Stat. 2. c. 18. f. 1. &c. Vide Fish and Fishermen.

BILLUS, A bill, stick or staff, which in former times was the only weapon for servants.—It was long in use for watchmen, and we are told is still carried by those at Litchfield. See Steevens's Shakspeare.

BIOTHANETUS,

BIOTHANETUS, One who deſerves to come to an untimely end. Ordericus Vitalis, writing of the death of William Rufus, who was ſhot by Walter Tyrrel, tells us, that the biſhops, conſidering his wicked life and bad exit, adjudged him eccleſiaſticâ veluti biothanetum abſolutione indignum. Lib. 10. p. 782.

BIRRETTUM, A thin cap fitted cloſe to the ſhape of the head: and is alſo uſed for the cap or coif of a judge, or ſerjeant at law. Spelm.

BIRTHS, BURIALS, and MARRIAGES, &c. By ſtatute, a duty was granted on births and burials of perſons, from 50*l.* a duke, &c. down to 10*s.* and 2*s.* And the like on marriages; alſo bachelors, above twenty-five years of age, were to pay 1*s.* yearly. Stat. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 6. Exp. as to the duties. See tit. Stamps, Taxes.

BISACUTUS, An iron weapon double edged, ſo as to cut on both ſides. Fleta. lib. 1. c. 33.

BISANTIUM, beſantine, or beſant, An antient coin firſt coined by the Weſtern emperors at Bizantium or Conſtantinople. It was of two ſorts, gold and ſilver; both which were current in England. Chaucer repreſents the gold beſantine to have been equivalent to a ducat; and the ſilver beſantine was computed generally at two ſhillings. In ſome old leaſes of land there have been reſerved, by way of rent, unum biſantium, vel duos ſolidos.

BI-SCOT, At a ſeſſion of ſewers held at Wigenhale in Norfolk, 9 Ed. 3, it was decreed, That if any ſhould not repair his proportion of the banks, ditches and cauſeys by a day aſſigned, xii*d.* for every perch unrepaired ſhould be levied upon him, which is called a bilaw: and if he ſhould not, by a ſecond day given him, accompliſh the ſame, then he ſhould pay for every perch 2*s.* which is called *bi-ſcot. BISHOPS and ARCHBISHOPS.—A Bishop (Epiſcopus) is the chief of the Clergy in his dioceſe, and is the archbiſhop's ſuffragan or aſſiſtant.

An Archbishop (Archiepiſcopus) is the chief of the clergy in his province, and is that ſpiritual ſecular perſon who hath ſupreme power under the king in all eccleſiaſtical cauſes: and the manner of his creation and conſecration, by an archbiſhop and two other biſhops, &c. is regulated by Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 20. (See poſt Biſhop.) An archbiſhop is ſaid to be inthroned, when a biſhop is ſaid to be inſtalled; and there are four things to compleat a biſhop or archbiſhop, as well as a parſon: firſt, election, which reſembles preſentation; the next is confirmation, and this reſembles admiſſion; next, conſecration, which reſembles inſtitution; and the laſt is inſtallation, reſembled to induction. 3 Salk. 72. In ancient times the archbiſhop was biſhop over all England, as Auſtin was, who is ſaid to be the firſt archbiſhop here; but before the Saxon conqueſt the Britons had only one biſhop, and not any archbiſhop. 1 Roll. Rep. 328: 2 Roll. 440.

But at this day, the eccleſiaſtical ſtate of England and Wales is divided into two provinces or archbiſhopricks, to wit, Canterbury and York. Each archbiſhop hath within his province biſhops of ſeveral dioceſes. The archbiſhop of Canterbury hath under him within his province, of ancient foundations, Rocheſter, London, Wincheſter, Norwich, Lincoln, Ely, Chicheſter, Saliſbury, Exeter, Bath & Wells, Worceſter, Coventry and Litchfield, Hereford, Llandaff, St. David's, Bangor, and St. Aſaph; and four founded by King Henry 8. erected out of the ruins of diſſolved monaſteries, viz. Glouceſter, Briſtol, Peterborough, and Oxford. The archbiſhop of York hath under him four, viz. the biſhop of the county palatine of Cheſter, newly erected by King Henry 8. and annexed by him to the archbiſhoprick of York; the county palatine of Durham; Carliſle; and the Iſle of Man, annexed to the province of York by King Hen. 8; but a greater number this archbiſhop anciently had, which time hath taken from him. Co. Lit. 94.

Weſtminſter was one of the new biſhopricks created by Hen. 8, out of the revenues of the diſſolved monaſteries. 2 Burn. E. L. 78.—Thomas Thirlby was the only biſhop that ever filled that ſee. He ſurrendered the biſhoprick to Ed. 6. A. D. 1550, 30th March; and on the ſame day, it was diſſolved and added again to the biſhoprick of London. Rym. Fœd. 15. p. 222. Queen Mary afterwards filled the church with Benedictine monks, and Eliz. by authority of parliament, turned it into a collegiate church, ſubject to a dean.

The archbiſhop of Canterbury is now ſtiled metropolitanus & primus totius Angliæ; and the archbiſhop of York ſtiled primus & metropolitanus Angliæ. They are called archbiſhops in reſpect of the biſhops under them; and metropolitans, becauſe they were conſecrated at firſt in the metropolis of the province. 4 Inſt. 94. Both the archbiſhops have diſtinct provinces, wherein they have ſuffragan biſhops of ſeveral dioceſes, with juriſdiction under them. The archbiſhop hath alſo his own dioceſe, wherein he exerciſes epiſcopal juriſdiction, as in his province he exerciſes archiepiſcopal; thus having two concurrent juriſdictions, one as Ordinary, or the biſhop himſelf within his dioceſe; the other as ſuperintendant, throughout his whole province, of all eccleſiaſtical matters, to correct and ſupply the defects of other biſhops.

The archbiſhop is entitled to preſent by lapſe to all the eccleſiaſtical livings in the diſpoſal of his dioceſan biſhops, if not filled within ſix months. (See title Advowſon). And the archbiſhop has a cuſtomary prerogative, when a biſhop is conſecrated by him, to name a clerk or chaplain of his own, to be provided for by ſuch ſuffragan biſhop; in lieu of which it is now uſual for the biſhop to make over by deed to the archbiſhop, his executors and aſſigns, the next preſentation of ſuch dignity or benefice in the biſhop's diſpoſal within that ſee, as the archbiſhop himſelf ſhall chooſe; which is therefore called his Option, which options are only binding on the biſhop himſelf who grants them, and not on his ſucceſſors. The prerogative itſelf, ſeems to be derived from the legatine power formerly annexed, by the Popes, to the Metropolitan of Canterbury.

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury hath the priviiege to crown all the Kings of England; and to have prelates to be his officers; as for inſtance; the biſhop of London is his provincial dean; the biſhop of Wincheſter, his chancellor; the biſhop of Lincoln, his vice-chancellor; the biſhop of Saliſbury, his precentor; the biſhop of Worceſter, his chaplain, &c. It is the right of the archbiſhop to call the biſhops and clergy of his province to convocation, upon the king's writ: he hath a juriſdiction in caſes of appeal, where there is a ſuppoſed default of juſtice in the ordinary; and hath a ſtanding juriſdiction over his ſuffragans: he confirms the election of biſhops, and afterwards conſecrates them, &c. And he may appoint coadjutors to a biſhop that is grown infirm. He may confer degrees of all kinds; and cenſure and excommuni-cate, ſuſpend or depoſe, for any juſt cauſe, &c. 2 Roll. Abr. 223. And he hath power to grant diſpenſations in any caſe, formerly granted by the ſee of Rome, not contrary to the law of God: but if the caſe is new and extraordinary, the king and his council are to be conſulted. Stats. 25 H. 8. c. 21: 28 H. 8. c. 16. § 6. This diſpenſing power is the foundation of the archbiſhop's granting ſpecial licenſes, to marry at any place or time; to hold two livings and the like; and in this alſo is founded the right he exerciſes of conferring degrees in prejudice of the two Univerſities. He may retain eight chaplains: and, during the vacancy of any ſee, he is guardian of the ſpiritualties. Stats. 21 H. 8. c. 13: 25 H. 8. c. 21: 28 H. 8. c. 16.

The archbiſhop of Canterbury hath the precedency of all the clergy; next to him the archbiſhop of York; next to him the biſhop of London; next to him the biſhop of Durham; next to him the biſhop of Wincheſter; and then all the other biſhops of both provinces after the ſeniority of their conſecration; but if any of them be a privy councillor, he ſhall take place next after the biſhop of Durham. Co. Lit. 94: 1 Ought. Ord. Jud. 486.

The firſt archbiſhop of York, that we read of, was Paulinus, who, by Pope Gregory's appointment, was made archbiſhop there, about the year of our Lord 622. Godol. 14.

The Archbiſhop of York hath the privilege to crown the Queen-conſort, and to be her perpetual chaplain.

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury is the firſt peer of the realm, and hath precedence, not only before all the other clergy, but alſo (next and immediately after the blood royal) before all the nobility of the realm: and as he hath the precedence of all the nobility, ſo alſo of all the great officers of ſtate. God. 13.

The Archbiſhop of York hath the precedence over all dukes, not being of the blood royal; as alſo before all the great officers of ſtate, except the Lord Chancellor. God. 14.

A BISHOP is elected by the king's congé d'eſlire, or licence to elect the perſon named by the king, directed to the dean and chapter; and if they fail to make election in twelve days, they incur the penalty of a præmunire, and the king may nominate whom he pleaſes by letters-patent. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 20. This was to avoid the power of the ſee of Rome. This election or nomination, if it be of a biſhop, muſt be ſignified by the king's letters-patent to the archbiſhop of the province; if it be of an archbiſhop, to the other archbiſhop and two biſhops, or to four biſhops; requiring them to confirm, inveſt and conſecrate the perſon ſo elected, which they are bound to perform immediately. After which the biſhop elect ſhall ſue to the king for his temporalties, ſhall make oath to the king and none other, and ſhall take reſtitution of his ſecular poſſeſſions out of the king's hands only. Archbiſhops and biſhops refuſing to confirm ſuch election, incur the penalties of a præmunire. On confirmation, a biſhop hath juriſdiction in his dioceſe; but he hath not a right to his temporalties till conſecration. The conſecration of biſhops, &c. is confirmed by act of parliament.

It is directed in the form of conſecrating biſhops, that a biſhop when conſecrated muſt be full thirty years of age.

It is held a biſhop hath three powers; 1ſt. His power of ordination, which is gained on his conſecration, and not before; and thereby he may confer orders, &c. in any place throughout the world. 2. His power of juriſdiction, which is limited and confined to his ſee. 3. His power of adminiſtration and government of the revenues; both which laſt powers he gains by his confirmation: and ſome are of opinion, that the biſhop's juriſdiction, as to miniſterial acts, commences on his election. Palm. 473, 4, 5.

The king may not ſeize into his hands the temporalties of biſhops but upon juſt cauſe, and not for a contempt, which is only finable. See title Temporalties. Biſhops are allowed four years for payment of their firſt fruits, by ſt. 6 An. c. 27. Every biſhop may retain four chaplains. Vide Stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 13. ſ. 16: 8 Eliz. c. 1.

A Biſhop hath his conſiſtory court, to hear eccleſiaſtical cauſes; and is to viſit the clergy, &c. He conſecrates churches, ordains, admits, and inſtitutes prieſts; confirms, ſuſpends, excommunicates, grants licences for marriage, makes probate of wills, &c. Co. Lit. 96: 2 Rol. Abr. 230. He hath his archdeacon, dean and chapter, chancellor, and vicar-general, to aſſiſt him: may grant leaſes for three lives, or twenty-one years, of land uſually letten, reſerving the accuſtomed yearly rents. Stats. 32 H. 8. c. 28: 1 El. c. 19. ſ. 5. See this Dict. title Leaſes.

The chancellor to the biſhop is appointed to hold his courts for him, and to aſſiſt him in matters of eccleſiaſtical law; who as well as all other eccleſiaſtical officers, if lay or married, muſt be a doctor of the civil law ſo created in ſome Univerſity. St. 37 H. 8. c. 17.

By Stat. 24 Geo. 3. ſeſſ. 2. c. 35, The Biſhop of London, or any biſhop by him appointed, may admit to the order of deacon or prieſt, ſubjects of countries out of his majeſty's dominions, without requiring the oath of obedience.—But no perſon ſhall be thereby enabled to exerciſe ſuch offices within his majeſty's dominions.

By Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 84, The Archbiſhops of Canterbury or York, with ſuch other biſhops as they ſhall call to their aſſiſtance, may conſecrate ſubjects of countries out of his majeſty's dominions to be biſhops, without requiring the uſual oaths; purſuing the forms preſcribed by the act. But no ſuch biſhops or their ſucceſſors, or perſons ordained by them, ſhall exerciſe their functions within his majeſty's dominions.

The right of trial by the Lords of Parliament, as their Peers, it is ſaid, does not extend to biſhops; who though they are Lords of Parliament, and ſit there by virtue of their baronies, which they hold jure eccleſiæ, yet are not ennobled in blood, and conſequently not peers with the nobility. 3 Inſt. 30, 1: ſee 1 Comm. 401: 4 Comm. 264: and this Dict. title Parliament.

Archbiſhopricks and Biſhopricks may become void by death, deprivation for any very groſs and notorious crime, and alſo by reſignation. All reſignations muſt be made to ſome ſuperior. Therefore a biſhop muſt reſign to his metropolitan, but the archbiſhop can reſign to none but the king himſelf. 1 Comm. 382.

The following are ſome of the popular diſtinctions between archbiſhops and biſhops. The archbiſhops have the ſtile and title of Grace, and Moſt Reverend Father in God by Divine Providence. The biſhops, thoſe of Lord, and Right Reverend Father in God by Divine permiſſion. Archbiſhops are inthroned; biſhops inſtalled.

Mr. Chriſtian in his notes on 1 Comm. 380, ſays, that the ſuppoſed anſwer of a biſhop on his conſecration, "Nolo epiſcopari," is a vulgar error.

BISSEXTILE, biſſextilis.] Leap year, ſo called becauſe the ſixth day before the calends of March is twice reckoned, making an additional day in the month of February; ſo that the biſſextile year hath one day more than the others, and happens every fourth year. This intercalation of a day was firſt invented by Julius Cæſar, to make the year agree with the courſe of the ſun. And, to prevent all doubt and ambiguity that might ariſe thereupon, it is enacted by the ſtatute de anno biſſextili, 21 H. 3, that the day increaſing in the leap-year, and the day next before, ſhall be accounted but one day. Brit. 209: Dyer 17. See title Year.

BISUS, biſus, mica biſa, panis biſius, Fr. pain bis.] Brown bread, a brown loaf. Cowel.

BLACK ACT, or WALTHAM BLACK ACT. The Stat. 9 Geo. 1. cap. 22. is ſo called, having been occaſioned by ſome devaſtations committed near Waltham, in Hampſhire, by perſons in diſguiſe, or with their faces blacked.—By this act, perſons hunting armed and diſguiſed, and killing or ſtealing deer, or robbing warrens, or ſtealing fiſh out of any river, &c. or any perſons unlawfully hunting in his majeſty's foreſts, &c. or breaking down the head of any fiſh-pond, or killing, &c. of cattle, or cutting down trees, or ſetting fire to houſe, barn, or wood, or ſhooting at any perſon, or ſending anonymous letters, or letters ſigned with fictitious name, demanding money, &c. or reſcuing ſuch offenders, are guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. This act is made perpetual by 31 Geo. 2. c. 42. And ſee further, Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 37: 27 Geo. 2. c. 15.

See alſo Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 30, againſt deer-ſtealers; the milder puniſhment inflicted by which act has been thought a virtual repeal of the puniſhment inflicted by the Black Act above recited. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 49. § 7, and this Dict. titles Foreſt, Game, Deer-ſtealing.

BLACK-BOOK, Is a book lying in the Exchequer. See State Annals 154.

BLACK LEAD. By Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 10, Entering mines of black lead, with intent to ſteal, is made felony; and by the ſame act offenders committed or tranſported for entering mines of black lead with intent to ſteal, eſcaping, or breaking priſon, or returning from tranſportation, are excluded from clergy.

BLACK-MAIL, Fr. maille, a link of mail, or ſmall piece of metal or money.] Signifies in the North of England, in the counties of Cumberland, Northumberland, &c. a certain rent of money, corn, or other thing, anciently paid to perſons inhabiting upon or near the borders, being men of name and power, allied with certain robbers within the ſaid counties; to be freed and protected from the devaſtations of thoſe robbers. But by Stat. 43 Eliz. cap. 13, to take any ſuch money or contribution, called black-mail to ſecure goods from rapine, is made a capital felony, as well as the offences ſuch contribution was meant to guard againſt.

It is alſo uſed for rents reſerved in work, grain, or baſer money; which were called reditus nigri in contradiſtinction to the blanch farms, reditus albi. See tits. Alba Firma and Blanch Firmes.

BLACK-ROD, The gentleman uſher of the black rod is chief gentleman uſher to the king; he belongs to the garter and hath his name from the black rod, on the top whereof ſits a lion in gold, which he carrieth in his hand. He is called in the Black Book, fol. 255, Lator virgæ nigræ, & hoſtiarius; and in other places virgæ bajulus. His duty is ad portandum virgam coram domino rege ad feſtum ſancti Georgii infra caſtrum de Windſore: and he hath the keeping of the chapter-houſe door, when a chapter of the order of the garter is ſitting; and in the time of parliament, he attends on the houſe of peers. His habit is like to that of the regiſter of the order, and garter king at arms; but this he wears only at the ſolemn times of the feſtival of St. George, and on the holding of chapters. The black rod he bears, is inſtead of a mace, and hath the ſame authority; and this officer hath anciently been made by letters patent under the great ſeal, he having great power; for to his cuſtody all peers, called in queſtion for any crime, are firſt committed.

BLACKS OF WALTHAM. See tit. Black Act.

BLACKWELL-HALL. The public market of Blackwell-hall, London, is to be kept every Thurſday, Friday and Saturday, at certain hours; and the hall-keepers not to admit any buying or ſelling of woollen cloth at the ſaid hall upon any other days or hours, on penalty of 100 l. Factors ſelling cloth out of the market, ſhall forfeit 5 l. &c. Regiſters of all the cloths bought and ſold are to be weekly kept: and buyers of cloth otherwiſe than for ready money, ſhall give notes to the ſellers for the money payable; and factors are to tranſmit ſuch notes to the owners in twelve days, or be liable to forfeit double value, &c. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 9.—See alſo Stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 5. § 26: 39 Eliz. c. 20. § 12: 1 Geo. 1. c. 15.

BLADARIUS, A corn-monger, meal-man, or corn-chandler. It is uſed in our records for ſuch a retailer of corn. Pat. 1 Ed. 3. par. 3. m. 13. See tit. Clothiers.

BLADE, bladum.] In the Saxon ſignifies generally fruit, corn, hemp, flax, herbs, &c. Will. de Mohun releaſed to his brother all the manor of T——. Salvo inſtauro ſuo & blado, &c. excepting his ſtock and corn on the ground. Hence bladier is taken for an ingroſſer of corn or grain.

BLANCH FIRMES, In ancient times the crown-rents were many times reſerved in libris albis, or blanch firmes: In which caſe the buyer was holden de-albare firmam, viz. his baſe money or coin, worſe than ſtandard, was molten down in the Exchequer, and reduced to the fineneſs of ſtandard ſilver; or inſtead thereof, he paid to the King 12 d. in the pound by way of addition. Lowndes's Eſſay upon Coins, p. 5.

BLANHORNUM, A little bell. Leg. Adelſtan. c. 8.

BLANK-BAR, Is uſed for the ſame with what we call a common bar, and is the name of a plea in bar, which in an action of treſpaſs is put in to oblige the plaintiff to aſſign the certain place where the treſpaſs was committed: 2 Cro. 594.

BLANKS, Were a kind of white money coined by Hen. 5, in thoſe parts of France which were then ſubject to England, the value whereof was 8 d. Stow's Annals, p. 586. Theſe were forbidden to be current in this realm. 2 Hen. 6. c. 9. See tit. Alba Firma.

BLANKS,

BLANKS, In judicial proceedings, certain void ſpaces ſometimes left by miſtake. A blank (ſuppoſing ſome-thing material wanting) in a declaration, abates the ſame. 4 Ed. 4, 14: 20 H. 6, 18. And ſuch a blank, is a good cauſe of demurrer. Blanks in the imparlance-roll aided after verdict for the plaintiff. Hob. 76; Parker v. Parker.

BLASARIUS, Is a word uſed to ſignify an incendiary. Blount.

BLASPHEMY, blaſphemia.] Is an injury offered to God, by denying that which is due and belonging to him, or attributing to him what is not agreeable to his nature. Lindw. cap. 1. And blaſphemies of God, as denying his being, or providence, and all contumelious reproaches of Jeſus Chriſt, &c. are offences by the Common Law, puniſhed by fine, impriſonment, pillory, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. And by ſtatute 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 32, if any one ſhall by writing, ſpeaking, &c. deny any of the Perſons in the Trinity, to be God; aſſert there are more Gods than one, &c. he ſhall be incapable of any office; and for the ſecond offence, be diſabled to ſue any action, to be executor, &c. and ſuffer three years, impriſonment. Likewiſe by Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 21, perſons jeſtingly or prophanely uſing the name of God, or of Jeſus Chriſt, or of the Holy Ghoſt, or of the Trinity, in any ſtage play, &c. incurs a penalty of 10*l.*

BLE, Signifies ſight, colour, &c. And blee is taken for corn: As Boughton under the Blee, &c.

BLENCH, BLENCH-HOLDING. See tit. Alba Firma.

BLISSOM, Corruptly called bloſſom, is when a ram goes to the ewe, from the Teutonick, Blets, the bowels.

BLOATED FISH OR HERRING, Are thoſe which are half dried. See tit. Fiſhery.

BLODEUS, Sax. blod.] Deep red colour; from whence comes bloat and bloated, viz. ſanguine and high coloured, which in Kent is called a blouſing colour; and a blouſe is there a red-faced wench. The prior of Burceſter, A. D. 1425, gave his liveries of this colour. Paroch. Antiq. 376.

BLOOD, ſanguis.] Is regarded in deſcents of lands; for a perſon is to be the next and moſt worthy of blood to inherit his anceſtor's eſtate. Co. Lit. 13: See Jenk. Cent. 203: See tit. Deſcent, Heir.

BLOODWIT, or bloudwit, compounded of the Sax. blod, i. e. ſanguis; and wyte, old Engliſh, miſericordia.] Is often uſed in ancient charters of liberties for an amercement for bloodſhed. Skene wites it bloudveit; and ſays veit in Engliſh is injuria; and that bloudveit is an amerciament or unlaw (as the Scotch call it) for wrong or injury, as bloodſhed is: for he that hath bloudveit granted him, hath free liberty to take all amerciaments of courts for effuſion of blood. Fleta ſaith, Quod ſignificat quietantiam miſericordiæ pro effuſione ſanguinis. Lib. 1. cap. 47. And according to ſome writers, bloudwite was a cuſtomary fine paid as a compoſition and atonement for ſhedding or drawing of blood; for which the place was anſwerable, if the party was not diſcovered: and therefore a privilege or exemption from this fine or penalty, was granted by the King, or ſupreme Lord, as a ſpecial favour. So king Henry II. granted to all tenants within the honour of Willingford, Ut quieti ſint de Hidagio, & blodewite, &c.—Paroch. Antiq. 114.

BLOODY-HAND, Is one of the four kinds of circumſtances by which an offender is ſuppoſed to have killed deer in the king's foreſt: and it is where a treſpaſſer is apprehended in the foreſt, with his hands or other parts bloody, though he be not found chaſing or hunting of the deer. Manwood. In Scotland, in ſuch like crimes, they ſay taken in the fact, or with the red hand. See Backberind.

BLUBBER. Whale oil, before it is thoroughly boiled and brought to perfection. It is mentioned Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 18.

BOCK-HORD, or book-hoard, librorum horreum.] A place where books, evidences, or writings are kept.

BOCKLAND, Sax. quaſi bookland.] A poſſeſſion or inheritance held by evidence in writing. See LL. Alfredi, cap. 36. Bockland ſignifies deed land or charter-land; and it commonly carried with it the abſolute property of the land; wherefore it was preſerved in writing, and poſſeſſed by the Thanes or nobler ſort, as Prædium nobile, liberum & immune à ſervitiis vulgaribus & ſervilibus, and was the ſame as allodium, deſcendible unto all the ſons, according to the common courſe of Nations and of Nature, and therefore called gavelkind; deviſable only by will, and thereupon termed Terræ Teſtamentales. Spelm. of Feuds. This was one of the titles which the Engliſh Saxons had to their lands, and was always in writing: there was but one more, and that was Folkland, i. e. Terra Popularis, which paſſed from one to another without any writing. See Squire on the Anglo-Saxon Government, and this Dict. tit. Tenure.

BOIA, Chains or fetters, properly what we call bernicles. Hiſt. Elien. apud Whartoni Angl. Sax. part. 1. p. 618.

BOIS, Fr.] Wood, and ſub-bois, underwood. See Boſcus.

BOLHAGIUM, or boldagium, a little houſe or cottage. Blount.

BOLT, A bolt of ſilk or ſtuff, ſeems to have been a long narrow piece: in the accounts of the priory of Burceſter. It is mentioned, Paroch. Antiq. p. 574.

BOLTING, A term of art uſed in our Inns of Court, whereby is intended a private arguing of caſes. The manner of it at Gray's Inn is thus: An ancient and two barriſters ſit as judges, three ſtudents bring each a caſe, out of which the judges chuſe one to be argued, which done, the ſtudents firſt argue it, and after them the barriſters. It is inferior to mooting, and may be derived from the Sax. bolt, a houſe, becauſe done privately in the houſe for inſtruction. In Lincoln's Inn, Mondays and Wedneſdays are the bolting days, in vacation time; and Tueſdays and Thurſdays the moot days.

BONA FIDE. That we ſay is done bonâ fide, which is done really, with a good faith, without any fraud or deceipt.

BONA GESTURA, Good abearing, or good behaviour. See Good Behaviour.

BONAGHT, or bonaghty, Was an exaction in Ireland, impoſed on the people at the will of the lord, for relief of the knights called bonaghti, who ſerved in the wars. Antiq. Hibern. p. 60.

BONA NOTABILIA. See title Executor. V. 3.

BOND I.

BONA PATRIA, An aſſiſe of country-men or good neighbours: It is ſometimes called aſſiſa bonæ patriæ, when twelve or more men are choſen out of any part of the county to paſs upon an aſſiſe; otherwiſe called juratores, becauſe they are to ſwear judicially in the preſence of the party, &c. according to the practice of Scotland. Skene. See Aſſiſors.

BONA PERITURA, Goods that are periſhable. The Stat. Weſtm. 1, 3 E. 1. cap. 4, as to wrecks of the ſea, ordains, that if the goods within the ſhip be bona peritura, ſuch things as will not endure for a year and a day, the ſheriff ſhall ſell them, and deliver the money received to anſwer it. See this Dict. tit. Wreck.

BONCHA, A bunch, from the old Lat. bonna or bunna, a riſing bank, for the bounds of fields: and hence bown is uſed in Norfolk, for ſwelling or riſing up in a bunch or tumour, &c.

BOND, A Bond or Obligation, is a deed whereby the obligor, or perſon, bound obliges himſelf, his heirs, executors, and adminiſtrators, to pay a certain ſum of money to another (the obligee) at a day appointed.

I. General Rules as to the Nature, and Form of this Security.
II. Who may be obligors, and Obligees.
III. The Ceremonies neceſſary to conſtitute a Bond or Obligation.
IV. Of the Condition; and what ſhall be a Performance or Breach thereof.
V. Of the Diſcharge and Satisfaction of Bonds; 1, by the Act of the Party; or 2, by the Act of Law.
VI. Of Actions and Pleadings, on Bonds.

I. If the bond be without a condition, it is called a ſingle one, ſimplex obligatio; but there is generally a condition added, that if the obligor does ſome particular act, the obligation ſhall be void, or elſe ſhall remain in full force; as payment of rent, performance of covenants in a deed, or repayment of a principal ſum of money borrowed of the obligee, with intereſt; which principal ſum is uſually one half of the penal ſum ſpecified on the bond. In caſe this condition is not performed, the bond becomes forfeited, or abſolute at law, and charges the obligor while living, and after his death the obligation deſcends on his heir, who (on defect of perſonal aſſets) is bound to diſcharge it, provided he has real aſſets by deſcent as a recompence. So that it may be called, though not a direct, yet a collateral charge upon the lands.

The condition may be either in the ſame deed, or in another, and ſometimes it is included within, and ſometimes indorſed upon the obligation: but it is commonly at the foot of the obligation. Bro. Obl. 67. A memorandum on the back of a bond may reſtrain the ſame by way of exception. Moor 67.

This ſecurity is alſo called a ſpecialty; the debt being therein particularly ſpecified in writing, and the party's ſeal; acknowledging the debt or duty, and confirming the contract; rendering it a ſecurity of a higher nature than thoſe entered into without the ſolemnity of a ſeal.

As to the aſſignment of bonds, See tit. Aſſignment.

If the condition of a bond be impoſſible at the time of making it, or be to do a thing contrary to ſome rule of law that is merely poſitive; or if it be uncertain or inſenſible, the condition alone is void, and the bond ſhall ſtand ſingle, and unconditional; for it is the folly of the obligor to enter into ſuch an obligation, from which he can never be releaſed. If it be to do a thing that is malum in ſe, the obligation itſelf is void; for the whole is an unlawful contract, and the obligee ſhall take no advantage from ſuch a tranſaction. And if the condition be poſſible at the time of making it, and afterwards becomes impoſſible by the act of God, the act of law, or the act of the obligee himſelf, there the penalty of the obligation is ſaved; for no prudence or foreſight of the obligor could guard againſt ſuch a contingency. Co. Lit. 206. See poſt, IV; and tit. Condition.

On the forfeiture of a bond, or its becoming ſingle, the whole penalty was formerly recoverable at law, but here the courts of equity interpoſed, and would not permit a man to take more than in conſcience he ought, viz. his principal, intereſt, and expences, in caſe the forfeiture accrued by non-payment of money borrowed, the damages ſuſtained, upon non-performance of covenants; and the like. And this practice having gained ſome footing in the courts of law, (See 2 Keb. 553: Salk. 596, 7: 6 Mod. 11, 60, 101:) the Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, at length enacted, in the ſame ſpirit of equity, that in caſe of a bond conditioned for the payment of money, the payment or tender of the principal ſum due, with intereſt and coſts, even though the bond be forfeited, and ſuit commenced thereon, ſhall be a full ſatisfaction and diſcharge.

And this rule of compelling the party to do equity who ſeeks equity, ſeems to be the reaſon why an obligee ſhall have intereſt after he has entered up judgment; for tho' in ſtrictneſs it may be accounted his own fault why he did not take out execution, and therefore not intitled to intereſt; yet, as by the judgment he is intitled to the penalty, it does not ſeem reaſonable that he ſhould be deprived of it, but upon paying him the principal and intereſt, which incurred as well before as after the entering up of the judgment. Abr. Eq. 92, 288.

The Court of Chancery will not generally carry the debt beyond the penalty of a bond. Yet where a plaintiff came to be relieved againſt ſuch penalty, though it was decreed, it was on the payment of the principal money, intereſt and coſts; and notwithſtanding they exceeded the penalty, this was affirmed. 1 Vern. 350: 1 Eq. Ab. 92: 16 Vin. tit. Penalty: 3 Comm. 435.—And where the condition of a bond is to perform a collateral act, damages may be recovered beyond the penalty, and the court of K. B. will not ſtay the proceedings on payment of the money into court. 2 Term Rep. 388. See White v. Sealy, Doug. 49, Semb. contra; but the authority of which is much ſhaken by the caſe in 2 Term Rep. 388, where Buller, J. remarked, that there were ſeveral caſes where the judgment had been carried beyond the penalty. In Elliot v. Davis (Bunb. 23,) intereſt on a bond was decreed (in Scac.) to be paid, though it exceeded the penalty. See alſo Collins v. Collins, the caſe of an annuity. Burr. 820: Holdip v. Otway, 2 Saund. 106: Dewall v. Price, Show. P. C. 15.

FORM of a BOND or OBLIGATION, with Condition for the Payment of Money.

KNOW all men by these presents, That I David Edwards, of Lincoln's Inn, in the county of Middlesex, esquire, are held and firmly bound to Abraham Barker, of Dale Hall, in the county of Norfolk, esquire, in the penal sum of ten thousand pounds, of lawful money of Great Britain, to be paid to the said Abraham Barker, or his certain attorney, executors, administrators or assigns; for which payment well and truly to be made, I bind myself, my heirs, executors, and administrators, firmly by these presents, sealed with my seal. Dated the fourth day of September, in the twenty-first year of the reign of our sovereign Lord George the Third, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, king defender of the Faith and so forth, and in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and ——.

The Condition of this obligation is such, that if the above bounden David Edwards, his heirs, executors or administrators, do and shall well and truly pay, or cause to be paid unto the above-named Abraham Barker, his executors, administrators or assigns, the full sum of five thousand pounds of lawful money of Great Britain, with lawful interest for the same, on the fourth day of March next ensuing the date of the above written obligation, then this obligation shall be void, and of none effect, or else shall be and remain in full force and virtue.

Sealed and delivered being first duly stamped in the presence of } David Edwards (L.S.)

For irregular forms of bonds or obligations, See 1 Leon. 25: 3 Leon. 299: Cro. Jac. 208, 607: Bro. tit. Obligation, &c. from whence, and other authorities, which the regularity of modern practice has rendered uninteresting, it appears that the courts always inclined to support the justice of the plaintiff's case, without much regard to mere errors in form, or arising from accident.

II. All persons who are enabled to contract, and whom the law supposes to have sufficient freedom and understanding for that purpose, may bind themselves in bonds and obligations. 5 Co. 119: 4 Co. 124: 1 Rol. Abr. 340.

But if a person is illegally restrained of his liberty, by being confined in a common gaol or elsewhere, and, during such restraint, enters into a bond to the person who causes the restraint, the same may be avoided for dureſs of imprisonment Co. Lit. 253: 2 Inst. 482. vid. tit. Dureſs.

So in respect of that power and authority which a husband has over his wife, the bond of a feme covert is ipso facto void, and shall neither bind her nor her husband. See tit. Baron and Feme.

So though an infant shall be liable for his necessaries, such as meat, drink, cloaths, physic, schooling, &c. yet if he bind himself in an obligation, with a penalty for payment of any of those, the obligation is void. Doct. and Stud. 113: Co. Lit. 172: Cro. Jac. 494, 560: 1 Sid. 112: 1 Salk. 279: Cro. Eliz. 920. See tit. Infants.

Also though a person non compos mentis shall not be allowed to avoid his bond, by reason of insanity and distraction, yet may a privy in blood, as the heir, and privies in representation, as the executor and administrator, avoid such bonds; also if a lunatick after office found, enters into a bond, it is merely void. 4 Co. 124, Beverley's case. But see 2 Stra. 1104, that lunacy may be given in evidence on the general issue. See tit. Lunaticks.

But if an infant, feme covert, &c. who are disabled by law to contract, and to bind themselves in bonds, enter, together with a stranger, who is under none of these disabilities, into an obligation, it shall bind the stranger, though it be void as to the infant, &c. 1 Rol. Rep. 41.

If a servant makes a bill in form, "Memorandum, that I have received of A. B. to the use of my master C. D. the sum of 40 l. to be paid at Michaelmas following," and thereto set his seal, this is a good obligation to bind himself; for though, in the beginning of the deed, the receipt is said to be to the use of his master, yet the repayment is general, and must necessarily bind him who sealed; and the rather, because otherwise the obligee would lose his debt, he having no remedy against the master. Yelv. 137, Talbot v. Godbolt.

Infants, ideots, as also feme coverts may be obligees; and here the husband is supposed to assent, being for his advantage; but if he disagrees, the obligation hath lost its force; so that after the obligor may plead non est factum; but if he neither agrees nor disagrees, the bond is good, for his conduct shall be esteemed a tacit consent, since it is to his advantage. 5 Co. 119 b: Co. Lit. 3 a.— See tit. Baron and Feme.

An alien may be an obligee, for since he is allowed to trade and traffick with us, it is but reasonable to give him all that security which is necessary in his contracts, and which will the better enable him to carry on his commerce and dealings amongst us. Co. Lit. 129 b: Moor 431: Cro. Eliz. 142, 683: Cro. Car. 9: 1 Salk. 46: 7 Mod. 15: See tit. Alien.

Sole Corporations, such as bishops, prebends, parsons, vicars, &c. cannot be obligees, and therefore a bond made to any of these, shall enure to them in their natural capacities; for no sole body politick can take a chattel in succession, unless it be by custom; but a corporation aggregate may take any chattel, as bonds, leases, &c. in its political capacity, which shall go in succession, because it is always in being. Cro. Eliz. 464: Dyer 48 a: Co. Lit. 9 a. 46 a: Hob. 64: 1 Rol. Abr. 515.

If a drunken man gives his bond it binds him; and a bond without consideration is obligatory, and no relief shall be had against it, for it is voluntary, and as a gift. Jenk. Cent. 109. But see Cole v. Robins, Hil. 2 Ann. per Holt, referred to in Bull. N. P. 172, that on the general issue, defendant may give in evidence that they made him sign the bond when he was so drunk he knew not what he did. A person enters voluntarily into a bond, though there was not any consideration for it, if there be no fraud used in obtaining the same, the bond shall not be relieved against in equity: but a voluntary bond may not be paid in a course of administration, so as to take place of real debts, even by simple contract; yet it shall be paid before legacies. 1 Ch. Ca. 157. An heir is not bound, unless he be named expressly in the bond; though the executors and administrators are. Dy. 13.

It

It is clearly agreed that two or more may bind themſelves jointly in an obligation, or they may bind themſelves jointly and ſeverally; in which laſt caſe, the obligee may ſue them jointly, or he may ſue any one of them at his election; but if they are jointly and not ſeverally bound, the obligee muſt ſue them jointly; alſo, in ſuch caſe, if one of them dies, his executor is totally diſcharged, and the ſurvivor and ſurvivors only chargeable. 2 Rol. Abr. 148: Dyer 19, 310: 5 Co. 19: Dal. 85. pl. 42: 1 Salk. 393: Carth. 61: 1 Lutw. 696.

If three enter into an obligation, and bind themſelves in the words following, Obligamus nos & utrumque noſtrum per ſe pro toto & in ſolido, theſe make the obligation joint and ſeveral. Dyer 19 b. pl. 114.

III. It is ſaid, that there are only three things eſſentially neceſſary to the making a good obligation, viz. writing in paper or parchment, ſealing and delivery; but it hath been adjudged not to be neceſſary, that the obligor ſhould ſign or ſubſcribe his name; and that therefore if in the obligation the obligor be named Erlin, and he ſigns his name Erlwin, that this variation is not material; becauſe ſubſcribing is no eſſential part of the deed, ſealing being ſufficient. 2 Co. 5 a: Godard's caſe. Noy 21, 85: Moor 28: Stile 97: 2 Salk. 462: 5 Mod. 281.

And though the ſeal be neceſſary, and the uſual way of declaring on a bond is, that the defendant by his bond or writing obligatory ſealed with his ſeal, acknowledged, &c. yet if the word ſealed be wanting, it is cured by verdict and pleading over, for all neceſſary circumſtances ſhall be intended; and if it were not ſealed, it could not be his deed or obligation. Dyer 19 a: Cro. Eliz. 571, 737: Cro. Jac. 420: 2 Co. 5: 1 Vent. 70: 3 Lev. 348: 1 Salk. 141: 6 Mod. 306.

Alſo though ſealing and delivery be eſſential in an obligation, yet there is no occaſion in the bond to mention that it was ſealed and delivered; becauſe as Lord Coke ſays, theſe are things which are done afterwards. 2 Co. 5 a.

The name of the obligor ſubſcribed, 'tis ſaid, is ſufficient, though there is a blank for his chriſtian name in the bond. Cro. Jac. 261: Vide Cro. Jac. 558: 1 Mod. 107. In theſe caſes, though there be a verdict, there ſhall not be judgment. Where an obligor's name is omitted to be inſerted in the bond, and yet he ſigns and ſeals it; the court of Chancery may make good ſuch an accident; and in caſe a perſon takes away a bond fraudulently, and cancels it, the obligee ſhall have as much benefit thereby, as if not cancelled. 3 Chan. Rep. 99, 184.

An obligation is good though it wants a date, or hath a falſe or impoſſible date; for the date, as hath been obſerved, is not of the ſubſtance of the deed; but herein we muſt take notice, that the day of the delivery of a deed or obligation is the day of the date, though there is no day ſet forth. 2 Co. 5, Godard's caſe: Noy 21, 85, 86: Hob. 249: Stile 97: Cro. Jac. 136, 264: Yelv. 193: 1 Salk. 76.

If a man declare on a bond, bearing date ſuch a day, but does not ſay when delivered, this is good: for every deed is ſuppoſed to be delivered and made on the day it bears date; and if the plaintiff declare on a date, he cannot afterwards reply, that it was firſt delivered, at another day, for this would be a departure. Cro. Eliz. 773: 2 Lev. 348: 1 Salk. 141: Vide 1 Brownl. 104: 1 Lev. 196.

A plaintiff may ſuggeſt a date in a bond, where there is none, or it is impoſſible, &c. where the parties and ſum are ſufficiently expreſſed. 5 Mod. 282. A bond dated on the ſame day on which a releaſe is made of all things up to the day of the date, is not thereby diſcharged. 2 Rol. Rep. 255.

If the bond was delivered before the date, on iſſue, non eſt factum, joined on ſuch a deed, the jury are not eſtopped to find the truth, viz. that it was delivered before the date, and it is a good deed from the delivery. 2 Co. 4, 6: 3 Keb. 332.

A perſon ſhall not be charged by a bond, though ſigned and ſealed, without delivery, or words, or other thing, amounting to a delivery. 1 Leon. 140: But a bond or deed may be delivered by words, without any act of delivery; as where the obligor ſays to the obligee, go and take the ſaid writing, or take it as my deed, &c. So an actual delivery, without ſpeaking any word, is ſufficient: otherwiſe, a man that is mute could not deliver a deed. Co. Lit. 36 a: Cro. Eliz. 835: Leon. 193: Cro. Eliz. 122.

Interlineation in a bond in a place not material, will not make the bond void; but if it be altered in a part material, it ſhall be void. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 391. And a bond may be void by raſure, &c. As where the date, &c. is raſed after delivery; which goes through the whole. 5 Rep. 23. If the words in a bond at the end of the condition, That then this obligation to be void, are omitted, the condition will be void; but not the obligation.

IV. The condition of a bond was, that A. L. ſhould pay ſuch a ſum upon the 25th of December, or appear in Hilary term after, in the court of B. R. He died after the 25th of December, and before Hilary term, and had not paid any thing: in this caſe the condition was not broken for non-payment, and the other part is become impoſſible by the act of God. 1 Mod. Rep. 265. And when a condition is doubtful, it is always taken moſt favourably for the obligor, and againſt the obligee; but ſo as a reaſonable conſtruction be made as near as can be according to the intention of the parties. Dyer 51.

If no time is limited in a bond for payment of the money, it is due preſently and payable on demand. 1 Brownl. 53. But the judges have ſometimes appointed a convenient time for payment, having regard to the diſtance of place, and the time wherein the thing may be performed. And if a condition be made impoſſible in reſpect to time, as to make payment of money on the 30th of February, &c. it ſhall be paid preſently; Jones 140. See 1 Leon 101.

A bond made to enfeoff two perſons; if one dies before the time is paſt, wherein it ſhould be done, the obligor muſt enfeoff the ſurvivor of them, or the condition will be broken; and if it be that B. and others ſhall enjoy land, and the obligor and B. the obligee do diſturb the reſt; by this the condition is broken. 4 Hen. 7. 1: Co. Lit. 384. Where one is bound to do an act to the obligee himſelf, the doing it to a ſtranger by appointment of the obligee, will not be a performance of the condition. 2 Bulſt. 149. But in ſuch caſe equity would relieve, and probably a judge, on ſuch action coming before him, would order plaintiff to be non-suited. If the act be to be done at a certain place, where the obligor is to go, to Rome, &c. and he is to do the sole act without limitation of time, he hath term during life to perform the same: if the concurrence of the obligor and obligee is requisite, it may be hastened by the request of the obligee. 6 Rep. 30: 1 Rol. Abr. 437. Where no place is mentioned for performance of a condition, the obligor is obliged to find out the person of the obligee, if he be in England, and tender the money, otherwise the bond will be forfeited: but when a place is appointed, he need seek no further. Co. Lit. 210: Lit. 340. And if, where no place is limited for payment of money due on a bond, the obligor, at or after the day of payment, meets with the obligee, and tenders him the money, but he goes away to prevent it, the obligor shall be excused. 8 E. 4.

The obligor, or his servant, &c. may tender the money to save the forfeiture of the bond, and it shall be a good performance of the condition, if made to the obligee, though refused by him; yet if the obligor be afterwards sued, he must plead that he is still ready to pay it, and tender the money in court. Co. Lit. 208.

In the performance of the condition of an obligation, the intention of the parties is chiefly to be regarded; and therefore a performance in substance is sufficient, though it differ in words or some material circumstance; as if one be bound to deliver the testament of the testator, if he plead that he had delivered letters testamentary, it is sufficient. Bro. Condition, 158: 17 E. 4, 3: 1 Rol. Abr. 426.

If the condition of an obligation be to procure a lawful discharge, this must be by a release, or some discharge that is pleadable, and not by acquittance, which is but evidence. 1 Keb. 739.

If the party, who is bound to perform the condition disables himself, this is a breach; as where the condition is, that the feoffee shall reinfeoff, or make a gift in tail, &c. to the feoffor, and the feoffee, before he performs it, make a feoffment or gift in tail, or lease for life or years in præsenti or future to another person, or marry or grant a rent-charge, or be bound in a statute, or recognisance, or become professed; in all those cases the condition is broken; for the feoffee has either disabled himself to make any estate, or to make it in the same plight or freedom in which he received it; and being once disabled, he is ever disabled, though his wife should die, or the rent, &c. should be discharged, or he should be deraigned, &c. before the time of the reconveyance. Co. Lit. 221, 222: Poph. 110: 1 Co. 25 a: 1 Rol. Abr. 447: 5 Co. 21 a.

Where the condition is in the conjunctive, regularly both parts must be performed; yet, to supply the intention of the parties, it is held, that if a condition in the conjunctive be not possible to be performed, it shall be taken in the disjunctive; as if the condition be, that he and his executors shall do such a thing, this shall be taken in the disjunctive, because he cannot have an executor in his life-time; so if the condition be, that he and his assigns shall sell certain goods, this shall be taken in the disjunctive, because both cannot do it. 1 Rol. Abr. 444: Owen 52: 1 Leon. 74: Gouldy. 71.

See further this Dict. tits. Condition, Consideration, Gaming, Marriage; as to Resignation Bonds, tit. Parson.

A bond made with condition not to give evidence against a felon, &c. is void; but the defendant must plead the special matter. 2 Wilson 341, &c. Condition of a bond to indemnify a person from any legal prosecution is against law, and void. 1 Lutw. 667. And if a sheriff takes a bond as a reward for doing of a thing, it is void. 3 Salk. 75.

V. 1. Where a lesser sum is paid before it is due, and the payment is accepted, it shall be good in satisfaction of a greater sum; but after the money is due, then a lesser sum, though accepted, shall not be a satisfaction for a greater sum. Thus in debt upon bond conditioned to pay 8 l. defendant pleaded payment of 5 l. before the day mentioned in the condition, which the obligee accepted in satisfaction of the bond, and upon demurrer this was adjudged a good plea. Moor 677: Vide 3 Bulst. 301.—Payment after the day, of a less sum, is not good, as the bond is forfeited, at common law; and there is not any statute to relieve.

Debt upon bond of 16 l. conditioned to pay 8 l. 10 s. on a certain day; the defendant pleaded, that, before that day, he, at the request of the plaintiff, paid to him 5 l. which he accepted in satisfaction of the debt; and upon demurrer, the plaintiff had judgment, because the defendant had pleaded the payment of the 5 l. generally, without alledging, that it was in satisfaction of the debt. It is true, he sets forth, that it was accepted in satisfaction of the debt, but it ought likewise to be paid in satisfaction. 5 Rep. 117. Debt upon bond, conditioned, that in consideration the plaintiff had paid 12 l. to the defendant; he became bound to pay the plaintiff 12 l. if he lived one month after the date of that bond; and if not paid at that time, then to pay him 14 l. if he lived six months after the date of the bond; the defendant pleaded, that after the six months he paid the plaintiff 8 l. and then gave him another bond in the penalty of 20 l. conditioned to pay him 10 l. on a certain day, in full satisfaction of the other bond, and that the plaintiff did accordingly accept the said bond; upon a demurrer to this plea it was held ill; for admitting that one bond might be given in satisfaction of another, yet it cannot be after the other is forfeited, as it was in this case; because after the forfeiture, the penalty is vested in the obligee, and a less sum cannot be a satisfaction for a greater. 1 Lut. 464.

It hath been adjudged, that the aceptance of one bond cannot be pleaded in satisfaction of another bond. Cro. Car. 85: Moore 872: Cro. Eliz. 716, 727: 2 Cro. 579. Thus in debt on a bond of 100 l. conditioned for the payment of 52 l. 10 s. on a certain day, the defendant pleaded that at the day, &c. he and his son gave a new bond of 100 l. conditioned for the payment of 52 l. 10 s. at another day then to come, which the plaintiff accepted in satisfaction of the old bond; and upon demurrer it was adjudged for the plaintiff, because the acceptance of a new bond to pay money at another day, could not be a present satisfaction for the money due on the day when it was to be paid on the old bond. Hob. 68. But it is otherwise where the second bond is not given by the obligor; as in debt upon bond against the defendant as heir, &c. he pleaded that his ancestor, the obligor, died intestate and that W. R. administered, who gave the plaintiff another bond in satisfaction of the former: there was a verdict for the defendant: and it being moved in arrest of judgment, this distinction was made; made; that if the obligor, who gave the firſt bond, had likewiſe given the ſecond, it would not have diſcharged the firſt; but in this caſe the ſecond bond was not given by him who gave the firſt, but by his adminiſtrator, which had mended the ſecurity, becauſe he may be chargeable de bonis propriis; and for that reaſon the ſecond bond was held to be a diſcharge of the firſt. 1 Mod. 225.

V. 2. A bond on which neither principal nor intereſt has been demanded for 20 years, will be preſumed in equity to be ſatisfied, and be decreed to be cancelled; and a perpetual injunction granted to ſtay proceedings thereon. 1 Ch. Rep. 79: Finch. Rep. 78: See Mod. Ca. 22.—But ſatisfaction may be preſumed within a leſs period, if any evidence be given in aid of the preſumption; as if an account between the parties has been ſettled in the intermediate time, without any notice having been taken of ſuch a demand.—Yet length of time is no legal bar, it is only a ground for the jury to preſume ſatisfaction. 1 Term Rep. 270.

If ſeveral obligors are bound jointly and ſeverally, and the obligee make one of them his executor, it is a releaſe of the debt, and the executor cannot ſue the other obligor. 8 Co. 136: 1 Salk. 300. And vide 1 Jon. 345. But though it be a releaſe in law, in regard it is the proper act of the obligee, yet the debt by this is not abſolutely diſcharged, but it remains aſſets in his hands, to pay both debts and legacies. Cro. Car. 373: Yelv. 160. See tit. Executor. IV. 8.

If a feme ſole obligee take one of the obligors to huſband, this is ſaid to be a releaſe in law of the debt, being her own act. 8 Co. 136 a: March 128.

If one obligor makes the executor of the obligee his executor, and leaves aſſets, the debt is deemed ſatisfied, for he has power, by way of retainer, to ſatisfy the debt; and neither he nor the adminiſtrator de bonis non, &c. of the obligee can ever ſue the ſurviving obligor. Hob. 10.

But if two are bound jointly and ſeverally to A. and the executor of one of them makes the obligee his executor, yet the obligee may ſue the other obligor. 2 Lev. 73. See tit. Executor, IV. 8.

If two are jointly and ſeverally bound in an obligation, and the obligee releaſe to one of them, both are diſcharged. Co. Lit. 232 a.

Three were bound jointly and ſeverally in an obligation, and an action was brought againſt one of them, who pleaded, that the ſeal of one of the others was torn off, and the obligation cancelled, and therefore void againſt all. Upon demurrer it was adjudged, that the obligation, by the tearing off the ſeal of one of the obligors, became void againſt all, notwithſtanding the obligors were ſeverally bound. 2 Lev. 220: 2 Show. 289. Sed qu.

If the condition of a bond be, that a clerk ſhall faithfully ſerve, and account for all money, &c. to the obligee and his executors; this does not make the obligor liable for money received by the clerk in the ſervice of the executors of the obligee, who continue the buſineſs, and retain the clerk in the ſame employment, with the addition of other buſineſs, and an increaſe of ſalary. 1 Term Rep. 287.—But ſuch a bond is not diſcharged by the obligees' taking another partner into their houſe, it is only a ſecurity to the houſe of the obligees. Ib. 291. n.

VI. In a bond where ſeveral are bound ſeverally, the obligee is at his election to ſue all the obligors together, or all of them apart, and have ſeveral judgments and executions; but he ſhall have ſatisfaction but once, for if it be of one only, that ſhall diſcharge the reſt. Dyer 19, 310. Where two or more are bound in a joint bond, and only one is ſued, he muſt plead in abatement, that two more ſealed the bond, &c. and aver that they are living, and ſo pray judgment de billa, &c. And not demur to the declaration. Sid. 420.

If action be brought upon a bond againſt two joint and ſeveral obligors jointly, and both are taken by capias, here the death or eſcape of one, ſhall not releaſe the other; but the ſame kind of execution muſt be taken forth againſt them: it is otherwiſe when they are ſued ſeverally. Heb. 59.

Alſo, if two or more be jointly bound, though regularly one of them alone cannot be ſued, yet if proceſs be taken out againſt all, and one of them only appears, but the others ſtand out to an outlawry, he who appeared ſhall be charged with the whole debt. 9 Co. 119.

If a bond is made to three, to pay money to one of them, they muſt all join in the action, becauſe they are but as one obligee. Yelv. 177.

So if an obligation be made to three, and two bring their action, they ought to ſhew the third is dead. 1 Sid. 238, 420: 1 Vent. 34.

Though there be ſeveral obligees, yet a perſon cannot be bound to ſeveral perſons ſeverally; and therefore an obligation of 200 l. to two, to pay the one 100 l. to the one, and the other to the other, is a void condition. Dyer 350 a. pl. 20: Heb. 172: 2 Brownl. 207: Yelv. 177.

If A. bind himſelf in a ſum to B. to pay to C. who is a ſtranger, a payment to C. is a payment to B. and in an action upon it, the count muſt be upon a bond payable to B. 1 Sid. 295: 2 Keb. 81.

In debt the declaration was, that the defendant became bound in a bound of ——, for the payment of —— to him, his attorney or aſſigns, and on oyer of the bond it appeared, that it was to pay to the plaintiff's attorney or aſſigns, without mention of himſelf; and on demurrer for this variance 'twas ſaid that the declaration muſt not be according to the letter of the obligation, but according to the operation of the law thereupon. 6 Mod. 228, Rebert v. Harnage.

So if A. makes a bond to B. to pay to ſuch perſon as he ſhall appoint; if B. does appoint one, payment to him is a payment to B. and if B. appoint none, it ſhall be paid to B. himſelf. 6 Mod. 228.

If A. by his bill obligatory, acknowledges himſelf to be indebted to B. in the ſum of 10 l. to be paid at a day to come, and binds himſelf and his heirs in the ſame bill in 20 l. but does not mention to whom he is bound, yet the obligation is good, and he ſhall be intended to be bound to B. to whom he acknowledged before the 10 l. to be due. 2 Rol. Abr. 148. Franklin v. Turner.

If an infant ſeal a bond, and be ſued thereon, he is not to plead non eſt factum, but muſt avoid the bond by ſpecial pleading; for this bond is only voidable, and not in itſelf void. 5 Rep. 119. But if a bond be made by a feme covert, ſhe may plead her coverture, and conclude non eſt factum, &c. her bond being void. 10 Rep. 119.

Or plead non eſt factum, and give coverture in evidence. If a bond depends upon ſome other deed, and the deed becomes void, the bond is alſo void.

As to the pleading of performance, the defendant muſt ſet forth in what manner he hath performed it. Thus, In debt on a bond, with condition for performance of ſeveral things, the defendant pleads that the condition of the ſaid deed was never broken by him, and held an ill plea: becauſe, for ſaving the bond, it is neceſſary for the defendant to ſhew how he hath performed the condition; and this ſort of pleading was never admitted. 2 Vent. 156.

So if he had pleaded that he performed every thing, it had been ill; for the particulars being expreſſed in the condition, he ought to plead to each particularly; but if the condition were for performance of covenants in an indenture, performance were generally a good plea. 1 Lev. 302. This muſt be underſtood where the covenants are ſet forth and appear to be all in the affirmative. For if ſome are in the affirmative, ſome in the negative, or any in the disjunctive, the defendant ſhould plead ſpecially.

In debt on an obligation for payment of money, &c. the defendant pleads, that at the time and place, he was ready to pay the money, but that no-body was there to receive it; and held ill on a general demurrer, for want of ſtating a tender, for the tender only is traverſable. 3 Lev. 104.

In debt on a bond with condition, the defendant pleads a collateral plea, which is inſufficient; the plaintiff demurs, and hath judgment, without aſſigning a breach; for the defendant, by pleading a defective plea, by which he would excuſe his non-performance of the condition, ſaves the plaintiff the trouble of aſſigning a breach, and gives him advantage of putting himſelf on the judgment of the court whether the plea be good or not; but if the plaintiff had admitted the plea, and made a replication which ſhewed no cauſe of action, it had been otherwiſe; but if the replication were idle, and the defendant demurred, yet the plaintiff ſhould have judgment, without aſſigning a breach. 1 Lev. 55, 84: 3 Lev. 17, 24. This muſt mean, if the plea was bad in ſubſtance.

And in all caſes of debt on an obligation with condition, (that of a bond to perform an award only excepted,) if the defendants plead a ſpecial matter, that admits and excuſes a non-performance, the plaintiff need only anſwer, and falſify the ſpecial matter alledged; for he that excuſes a non-performance admits it, and the plaintiff need not ſhew that which the defendant hath ſuppoſed and admitted. Salk. 138.

But if the defendant pleads a performance of the condition, though it be not well pleaded, the plaintiff in his replication muſt ſhew a breach; for then he has no cauſe of action, unleſs he ſhew it; and this difference will give the true reaſon, and reconcile the following caſes. 1 Salk. 138: 1 Lev. 55, 84, 226: 1 Saund. 102, 159, 317: 3 Lev. 17, 24: 1 Vent. 114: Cro. Eliz. 320: Yelv. 78.

But by Stat. 4 An. c. 16, If an action of debt be brought on ſingle bill, or judgment, after money paid, ſuch payment may be pleaded in bar. So of a bond with a condition, upon payment of principal and intereſt due by the condition, though ſuch payment was not ſtrictly made according to the condition, yet it may be pleaded in bar.

By Stat. 8 & 9 Wm. 3. c. 11. § 8, In actions on bonds for performance of covenants, the plaintiff may aſſign as many breaches as he pleaſes, and the jury may aſſeſs damages. The defendant paying the damages, execution may be ſtaid; but the judgment to remain to anſwer any future breach, and plaintiff may then have ſci. fa. againſt the defendant; and ſo toties quoties.

In debt on a bond, the defendant may have ſeveral pleas in bar; as if the plaintiff ſue as executor, the defendant may plead the releaſe of the teſtator for part, and for the reſidue the releaſe of the plaintiff, ſo he may plead payment as to part, and as to the reſt an acquittance. 1 Salk. 180.

But a defendant in an action on a bond cannot plead non eſt factum, and a tender as to part. 5 Term Rep. 97.

In debt on an obligation the defendant cannot plead nil debet, but muſt deny the deed by pleading non eſt factum; for the ſeal of the party continuing, it muſt be diſſolved eo ligamine quo ligatur. Hard. 332: Hob. 218.

In bonds to ſave harmleſs, the defendant being proſecuted, is to plead non damnificatus, &c.

The ſtealing of any bond or bill, &c. for money, being the property of any one, made felony, as if offenders had taken other goods of like value. Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. See title Felony.

BOOKS, By Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 15, No perſon ſhall buy any printed books brought from beyond ſea to ſell the ſame again, and no one ſhall buy books by retail brought from beyond ſea by any ſtranger. Likewiſe the prices of books, exceſſively increaſed, ſhall be qualified by the king's great officers.

By Stat. 7 An. c. 14. ſect. 10, If any book ſhall be taken, or otherwiſe loſt out of any parochial library, any juſtice may grant his warrant to ſearch for it; and if it ſhall be found, it ſhall, by order of ſuch juſtice, be reſtored to the library.

By Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 36, No perſon ſhall import or ſell books firſt written and printed in this kingdom, and reprinted abroad, under the penalty of 5*l.* and double the value of every book ſo imported or ſold. 54 Geo. c. 20. See tit. Rel. prop.

The ſole right of printing books, bequeathed to the two Univerſities of England, the four Univerſities of Scotland, and the Colleges of Eton, Weſtminſter, and Wincheſter is ſecured to them, by Stat. 15 Geo. 3. c. 53.

From the ſeventh to the eleventh century, books were very ſcarce. To that was chiefly owing the univerſal ignorance which prevailed, during that period. After the Saracens conquered Egypt in the ſeventh century, the communication with that country (as to Europe, &c.) was almoſt entirely broken off, and the papyrus no longer in uſe. So that paper was uſed, and as the price of that was high, books became extremely rare, and of great value. Vide Robertſon's Hiſtory of Charles the Fifth, 1 Vol. 233, 234.

In the eleventh century the art of making paper was invented, the number of manuſcripts was thereby increaſed, and the ſtudy of the Sciences greatly facilitated. See further as to Books, title Literary Property.

BOOTING, or BOTING-CORN, Rent-corn, anciently ſo called. The tenants of the manor of Haddenham in com. Bucks, formerly paid booting-corn to the prior of Rocheſter. Antiq. of Purveyance, fol. 418. It is thought to be ſo called, as being paid by the tenants by way of bote, or boot, viz. as a compenſation to the lord for his making them leaſes, &c.

BORDAGIUM, See Bordlode.

BORDARIA, A cottage, from the Sax. bord, domus.

BORDARII, or BORDIMANNI, Theſe words often occur in Domeſday, and ſome think they mean boors, huſbandmen, or cottagers. In the Domeſday inquiſition they were diſtinct from the villani; and ſeemed to be thoſe of a leſs ſervile condition, who had a bord or cottage, with a ſmall parcel of land allowed to them, on condition they ſhould ſupply the lord with poultry and eggs, and other ſmall proviſions for his board or entertainment. Some derive the word bordarii from the old Gall. bords, the limits or extreme parts of any extent; as the borders of a country, and the borderers inhabitants in thoſe parts. Spelm.

BORD-HALFPENY, Sax. bord, a table and halpeny, or half-penny. Spelm.] A ſmall toll, by cuſtom paid to the lord of the town for ſetting up boards, tables, booths, &c. in fairs and markets.

BORDLANDS, The demeſnes which lords keep in their hands for the maintenance of their board or table. Bract. lib. 4. tract. 3. c. 9: Spelm.

BORDLODE, or BORDAGE. A ſervice required of tenants to carry timber out of the woods of the lord to his houſe: or it is ſaid to be the quantity of food or proviſion, which the bordarii, or bordmen, paid for their bord-lands. The old Scots had the term of burd, and meet-burd for victuals and proviſions; and burden ſack, for a ſack full of provender: from whence it is probable came our word burden. Spelm.

BORD-SERVICE, A tenure of bord-lands; by which ſome lands in the manor of Fulham in com. Mid. and elſewhere, are held of the biſhop of London, and the tenants do now pay ſix-pence per acre in lieu of finding proviſion, anciently for their lord's board or table. Blount.

BORD-BRIGCH, borg-bryce, or burg-brych, Sax.] A breach or violation of ſurety-ſhip, pledge-breach, or breach of mutual fidelity.

BOREL-FOLK, i. e. Country people, from the Fr. boure, floccus, becauſe they covered their heads with ſuch ſtuffs. Blount.

BOROUGH, Fr. burg. Lat. burgus, Sax. borhoe.] Signifies a corporate town, which is not a city; and alſo ſuch a town or place as ſends burgeſſes to parliament. Verſtegan ſaith, that burg, or burgh whereof we make our borough, metaphorically ſignifies a town having a wall, or ſome kind of incloſure about it: and all places that in old time had among our anceſtors the name of borough, were one way or other fenced or fortified. Lit. ſect. 164. But ſometimes it is uſed for villa inſignior, or a country town of more than ordinary note, not walled. A borough is a place of ſafety, protection and privilege, according to Somner; and in the reign of King Hen. 2, burghs had ſo great privileges, that if a bond-man or ſervant remained in a borough a year and a day, he was by that reſidence made a freeman. Glanville. And why theſe were called free burghs, and the tradeſmen in them free burgeſſes, was from a freedom to buy and ſell, without diſturbance, exempt from toll, &c. granted by charter. It is conjectured that borhoe, or borough, was alſo formerly taken for thoſe companies conſiſting of ten families, which were to be pledges for one another: and we are told by ſome writers that it is a ſtreet or row of houſes cloſe to one another. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 10: Lamb. Duty of Conſt. p. 8. Vide Squire's Anglo Saxon Government, 236, 247, 251, 254, 258, 262, 264. Trading boroughs were firſt formed in the time of Alfred. Squire 247, 251.

A borough is now underſtood to be a town, either corporate or not, that ſends burgeſſes to parliament. 1 Comm. 114. See title Burgage-Tenure, Parliament.

BOROUGH-HOLDERS, BORSHOLDERS, or BURSHOLDERS, quaſi borh-ealders, See title Headborough.

BOROUGH-ENGLISH, A cuſtom relative to the deſcent of lands, in ſome ancient boroughs, and copyhold manors, that eſtates ſhall deſcend to the youngeſt ſon; or, if the owner hath no iſſue, to his younger brother; Litt. § 165. as in Edmunton, &c. Kitch. 102.

This is ſo named in contradiſtinction as it were to the Norman cuſtoms, and is noticed by Glanville, lib. 7. c. 3.

Littleton gives the following reaſon for this cuſtom. Becauſe the younger ſon by reaſon of his tender age, is not ſo capable as the reſt of his brethren to help himſelf. Other authors have indeed given a much ſtranger reaſon for this cuſtom, as if the lord of the fee had anciently a right of concubinage with his tenant's wife on her wedding night; and that therefore the youngeſt ſon was moſt certainly the tenant's offspring. But it does not appear that this cuſtom ever prevailed in England, though it certainly did in Scotland. (under the name of Mercheta, or Marcheta) till aboliſhed by Malcolm III.—Poſſibly this cuſtom of Borough Engliſh may be the remnant of the paſtoral ſtate of our Britiſh and German anceſtors, in which the youngeſt child was neceſſarily moſt helpleſs. See 2 Comm. 83.

This cuſtom goes with the land, and guides the deſcent to the youngeſt ſon, although there be a deviſe to the contrary. 2 Lev. 138. If a man ſeiſed in fee of lands in borough-engliſh, makes a feoffment to the uſe of himſelf and the heirs male of his body, according to the courſe of the common law; and afterwards dies ſeiſed, having iſſue two ſons, the youngeſt ſon ſhall have the lands by virtue of the cuſtom, notwithſtanding the feoffment. Dyer 179.

If a copyhold in borough-engliſh be ſurrendered to the uſe of a perſon and his heirs, the right will deſcend to the youngeſt ſon according to the cuſtom. 1 Mod. 102. And a youngeſt ſon ſhall inherit an eſtate in tail in borough-engliſh. Noy 106. But an heir at common law ſhall take advantage of a condition annexed to boroughengliſh land; though the youngeſt ſon ſhall be intitled to all actions in right of the land, &c. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 396. And the eldeſt ſon ſhall have tithes ariſing out of land borough-engliſh; for tithes of common right are not inheritances deſcendible to an heir, but come in ſucceſſion from one clergyman to another. Ibid. 347.

Borough-engliſh land being deſcendible to the youngeſt ſon, if a younger ſon dies without iſſue male, leaving a daughter, ſuch daughter ſhall inherit jure repræſentationis. 1 Salk. 243. It hath been adjudged where a man hath ſeveral brothers, the youngeſt may inherit lands in borough-engliſh: yet it is ſaid where a cuſtom is, that land ſhall go to the youngeſt ſon, it doth not give it to the youngeſt uncle, for cuſtoms ſhall be taken ſtrictly; and thoſe which fix and order the deſcents of inheritance, can be altered only by parliament. Dyer 179: 4 Leon. 384: Jenk. Cent. 220.

By the cuſtom of Borough-Engliſh, the widow ſhall have the whole of her huſband's lands in dower, which is called her free-bench; and this is given to her the better to provide for the younger children, with the care of whom ſhe is intruſted. Co. Lit. 33, 111: F. N. B. 150: Mo. pl. 565.

Borough-Engliſh is one of thoſe cuſtoms of which the law takes particular notice; there is no occaſion to prove that ſuch cuſtom actually exiſts, but only that the lands in queſtion are ſubject thereto. 1 Comm. 76.—But the extenſion of the cuſtom to the collateral line muſt be ſpecially pleaded. Robinſ. on Gavelk. 38, 43, 93.—And as borough engliſh may be extended by ſpecial cuſtom, ſo may it be reſtrained; and therefore the cuſtomary deſcent may be confined to fee ſimple. Mar. 54. cited *Robinſ. BOSCUS, An ancient word, ſignifying all manner of wood: Boſco Italian, bois French. Boſcus is divided into high wood or timber, hautboys, and coppice or underwoods, ſub boſcus, ſub-bois: but the high-wood is properly called ſaltus, and in Fleta we read it maeremium. Cum una Carecta de mortuo boſco. Pat. 10 H. 6.

BOSINNUS, A certain ruſtical pipe, mentioned in ancient tenures.

BOSTAR, An ox ſtall. Mat. Pariſ. anno 1234.

BOTE, Sax.] A recompence, ſatisfaction or amends. The Saxon bote is ſynonimous to the word eſtovers. See title Common of Eſtovers.—Houſe-bote is a ſufficient allowance of wood to repair, or burn in the houſe; which latter is ſometimes called fire-bote. Plough-bote, and cart-bote, are wood to be employed in making and repairing all inſtruments of huſbandry: and hay-bote or hedge-bote, is wood for repairing of hays, hedges, or fences. 2 Comm. 25. Hence alſo comes man-bote, compenſation, or amends for a man ſlain, &c. In King Ina's laws it is declared what rate was ordained for expiation of this offence, according to the quality of the perſon ſlain. Lamb. cap. 99. From hence likewiſe we have our common phraſe, to-boot, i. e. compenſationis gratiâ.

BOTELESS, In the charter of H. 1, to Tho. archbiſhop of York, it is ſaid, that no judgment or ſum of money ſhall acquit him that commits ſacrilege; but he is in Engliſh called boteleſs, viz. without emendation. Lib. Albus penes Cap. de Suthnet. int. Plac. Trin. 12 Ed. 2. Ebor 48. We retain the word ſtill in common ſpeech; as it is bootleſs to attempt ſuch a thing; that is, it is in vain to attempt it.

BOTELLARIA, A buttery or cellar, in which the buts and bottles of wine, and other liquors are depoſited.

BOTHA, A booth, ſtall, or ſtanding in a fair or market. Mon. Angl. 2 par. fol. 132.

BOTHAGIUM, Boothage, or cuſtomary dues paid to the lord of the manor or ſoil, for the pitching and ſtanding of booths in fairs or markets. Paroch. Antiq. p. 680.

BOTHNA, or buthna, ſeems to be a park where cattle are incloſed and fed. Hector Boethius, lib. 7. cap. 123. Bothena, alſo ſignifies a barony, lordſhip, &c. Skene.

BOTILER OF THE KING, (pincerna regis). Is an officer that provides the king's wines, who (according to Fleta) may by virtue of his office chooſe out of every ſhip laden with ſale wines, one caſk before the maſt, and one behind. Fleta lib. 2. cap. 21. This officer ſhall not take more wine than he is commanded, of which notice ſhall be given by the ſteward of the king's houſe, &c. on pain of forfeiting double damages to the party grieved; and alſo to be impriſoned and ranſomed at the pleaſure of the king. Stat. 25 Ed. 3. ſt. 5. cap. 21. See title Cuſtoms.

BOTTOMRY, or bottomree, fœnus nauticum.] Is generally where a perſon lends money to a merchant, who wants it to traffick, and is to be paid a greater ſum at the return of a certain ſhip, ſtanding to the hazard of the voyage; and in this caſe, though the intereſt be greater than that allowed by law, it is not uſury. See this ſubject more fully treated under title Inſurance.

BOVATA TERRÆ, As much land as one ox can plough. Mon. Angl. par. 3. fol. 91. See Oxgang.

BOUCHE OF COURT, Commonly called budge of court, was a certain allowance of proviſion from the king, to his knights and ſervants, that attended him in any military expedition. The French avoir bouche à court, is to have an allowance at court, of meat and drink: from bouche, a mouth. But ſometimes it extended only to bread, beer, and wine. And this was anciently in uſe as well in the houſes of noblemen, as in the king's court.

BOVERIUM, or boveria, An ox-houſe. Mon. Angl. par. 2. fol. 210.

BOVETTUS, A young ſteer or caſtrated bullock. Paroch. Antiq. p. 287.

BOVICULA, An heifer, or young cow; which in the Eaſt-riding of Yorkſhire is called a whee, or whey.

See Burn's Juſtice tit. Exciſe I.—By a By-law of the common council, brewers' drays ſhall not be in the ſtreets of London after 11 in the forenoon in Summer, and 1, in Winter. 2 Stra. 1085: Hardw. 405: Andr. 91.

BRIBERY, From the Fr. briber, to devour or eat greedily.] Is a high offence, where a perſon in a judicial place takes any fee, gift, reward or brocage, for doing his office, or by colour of his office, but of the king only. 3 Inſt. 145: Hawk. P. C. i. c. 67.

Taken more largely, it ſignifies the receiving, or offering, any undue reward, to or by any perſon concerned in the adminiſtration of public juſtice, whether judge, officer, &c. to influence his behaviour in his office; and ſometimes it ſignifies the taking or giving a reward for appointing another to a public office. 3 Inſt. 9: 4 Comm. 139. To take a bribe of money, though ſmall, is a great fault; and judges' ſervants may be puniſhed for receiving bribes. If a judge refuſe a bribe offered him, the offerer is puniſhable. Forteſcue, cap. 51.

Bribery in inferior judicial or miniſterial officers is puniſhed by fine and impriſonment, which may alſo be inflicted on thoſe who offer a bribe though not taken. 4 Comm. 140. 3 Inſt. 147. Bribery in a judge was anciently looked upon as ſo heinous an offence, that it was ſometimes puniſhed as high treaſon; and it is at this day puniſhable with forfeiture of office, fine and impriſonment; and chief juſtice Thorpe was hanged for this offence in the reign of Edw. III.—And by a Stat. 11 H. 4, all judges and officers of the king, convicted of bribery, ſhall forfeit treble the bribe, be puniſhed at the king's will, and be diſcharged from the king's ſervice for ever. 4 Comm. 140; cites 3 Inſt. 146.—In the reign of King James I. the earl of Middleſex, lord treaſurer of England, being impeached by the commons for refuſing to hear petitions referred to him by the king, till he had received great bribes, &c. was, by ſentence of the lords, deprived of all his offices, and diſabled to hold any for the future, or to ſit in parliament; alſo he was fined fifty thouſand pounds, and impriſoned during the king's pleaſure. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 67. § 7. but the fine was remitted on the acceſſion of C. I. and the proceeding appears to have been inſtigated rather by revenge than juſtice. In 11th King George I. the lord chancellor was impeached by the commons with great zeal, for bribery, in ſelling the places of maſters in chancery, for exorbitant ſums, and other corrupt practices, tending to the great loſs and ruin of the ſuitors of that court; and the charge being made good againſt him, being before diveſted of his office, he was ſentenced by the lords to pay a fine of thirty thouſand pounds, and impriſoned 'till it was paid. See 6 S. T. 112.

By Stat. 12 R. 2. c. 2, the chancellor, treaſurer, juſtices of both benches, barons of the exchequer, &c. ſhall be ſworn not to ordain or nominate any perſon in any office for any gift, brocage, &c. And the ſale of offices concerning the adminiſtration of public juſtice, &c. is prohibited on pain of forfeiture and diſability, &c. by 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 16.—In the conſtruction of the laſt mentioned ſtatute, it has been reſolved that the offices of the eccleſiaſtical courts are within the meaning of that act, as well as the offices in the courts of Common law; but no office in fee is within the ſtatute, and it hath been adjudged, that one who contracts for an office, contrary to the purport of the ſaid ſtatute 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 16, is ſo diſabled to hold the ſame, that he cannot be reſtored to a capacity of holding it by any grant or diſpenſation what-whatsoever. Cro. Jac. 269, 386: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 67.—It is said the Stat. does not extend to the plantations. Salk. 411: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 67. § 5.

To bribe persons either by giving money or promises, to vote at elections of members of corporations, which are erected for the sake of publick government, is an offence for which an information will lie. 12 Mod. 314: 2 Ld. Raym. 1377: 1 Blackst. 383.—But the Court will grant such information very cautiously, since the additional penalties by Statute. 1 Black. 380. See title Parliament.

An attempt to induce a man to advise the king, under the influence of a bribe, is criminal, though never carried into execution. 4 Burr. 2499.—Offering money to a privy councillor, to procure the reversion of an office in the gift of the crown, has been adjudged a misdemeanor and punishable by information. Rex v. Vaughan, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 67. § 7. in note.

As to officers of the Customs, &c. taking bribes, See tit. Customs.

Taking money to excuse persons from serving on juries, subjects the offender to a fine, not exceeding ten pounds, at the discretion of the judge. Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25. sect. 6.

As to bribery in elections to parliament. See title Parliament.

BRIBOUR, Fr. bribeur.] Seems to signify in some of our old statutes, one that pilfers other men's goods. 28 Ed. 2. cap. 1.

BRICOLLS, An engine mentioned in Blount by which walls were beat down,

BRICKS AND TILES.—By Statute 17 E. 4. c. 4, The earth for tiles is to be digged and cast up before the 1st of November yearly, stoned and turned before the 1st of February, and wrought before the 1st of March following.—Every common tile must be 10 ½ inches long 6 ¼ broad and ½ an inch thick.—Roof tiles 13 inches long, &c. And persons selling tiles contrary hereto, forfeit double the value, and are liable to fine.

By Stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 42, Bricks when burnt are to be 8 ½ inches long 2 ½ thick and 4 wide.—Contracts for ingrossing and inhancing the price of bricks made void, and a penalty of 20 l. imposed on the parties.

The last excise duty imposed on bricks and tiles, made in Great Britain, by 27 Geo. 3. c. 13.—And the regulations to enforce the excise on bricks or tiles, are settled by Stats. 24 Geo. 3. sess. 2. c. 24. and 25 Geo. 3. c. 66.

BRIDGE, pons.] A building of stone or wood erected a-cross a river, for the common ease and benefit of travellers. Public bridges, which are of general convenience, are of common right to be repaired by the whole inhabitants of that county in which they lie. Hale's P. C. 143: 13 Co. 33: Cro. Car. 365.

Where a particular district re-built a foot-bridge over a more convenient part of the stream, and converted it into a bridge for horses, carts and carriages; as the district was not bound by custom to build or repair such a bridge, but a foot-bridge only, and as they built quite a different bridge in a different place, which proved of common publick utility to the county, the County, and not the district, are bound to repair it. Burr. 2594: Blackst. 685.

But a corporation aggregate, either in respect of a special tenure of certain lands, or in respect of a special prescription; also any other person, by reason of such a special tenure, may be compelled to repair them. Hale's P. C. 143: Dalt. c. 14: 6 Mod. 307.

A tenant at will of a house which adjoins to a common bridge, although he is not bound as between landlord and tenant to repair the house, yet if it become dangerously ruinous to the necessary intercourse of the bridge, the tenant is bound by reason of his possession, to repair it so far as to prevent the Public being prejudiced. Ld. Raym. 856.

At Common law those who are bound to repair public bridges, must make them of such heighth and strength, as shall be answerable to the course of the water; and they are not trespassers if they enter on any land adjoining to repair them, or lay the materials necessary for the repairs thereon. Dalt. cap. 16. If a man erects a bridge for his own use, and the people travel over it as a common bridge, he shall notwithstanding repair it: though a person shall not be bound to repair a bridge, built by himself for the common good and public convenience, but the county must repair it. 2 Inst. 701: 1 Salk. 359. Where inhabitants of a county are indicted for not repairing a bridge, they must set forth who ought to repair the same, and traverse that they ought. 1 Vent. 256. Unless perhaps, where the real question is, whether it be a public or a common bridge.

A vill may be indicted for a neglect in not repairing a bridge; and the justices of peace in their sessions may impose a fine for defaults. And any particular inhabitant of a county, or tenant of land charged to repairs of a bridge, may be made defendants to an indictment for not repairing it, and be liable to pay the fine assessed by the court for the default of the repairs, who are to have their remedy at law for a contribution from those who are bound to bear a proportionable share of the charge. 6 Mod. 307.

If a manor is held by tenure of repairing a bridge, or highway, which manor afterwards comes into several hands, in such case every tenant of any parcel of the demesnes and services, is liable to the whole charge, but shall have contribution of the rest: and this though the lord may agree with the purchasers to discharge them of such repairs, which only binds the lord, and doth not alter the remedy which the Public hath. 1 Danv. Abr. 744: 1 Salk. 358.

So if a manor, subject to such charge, comes into the hands of the crown, yet the duty upon it continues; and any person claiming afterwards under the crown, the whole manor, or any part thereof, shall be liable to an indictment or information, for want of due repairs, 1 Salk. 358.

If part of a bridge lie within a franchise, those of the franchise may be charged with the repairs for so much: also, by a special tenure, a man may be charged with the repairs of one part of a bridge, and the inhabitants of a county are to repair the rest. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 77. § 2: Raym. 384, 385.

Indictments for not repairing of bridges, will not lie but in case of common bridges on highways; though it hath been adjudged they will lie for a bridge on a common footway. Mod. Cas. 256. Not keeping up a ferry, being a common passage for all the King's people, is indictable, as well as not keeping up bridges. 1 Salk. 12.

By Stat. 22 H. 8. c. 5, All housholders dwelling in any county or town, whether they occupy lands or not; and all persons who have land in their own possession, whether they dwell in the ſame county or not, are liable to be taxed as inhabitants, towards the repairs of a publick bridge. Where it cannot be diſcovered who ought to repair a bridge, it muſt be preſented by the grand jury in quarter-ſeſſions; and after their inquiry, and the order of ſeſſions upon it, the juſtices may ſend for the conſtables of every pariſh, to appear at a fixed time and place, to make a tax upon every inhabitant, &c. but it has been uſual, in the levying of money for repairs of bridges, to charge every hundred with a ſum in groſs, and to ſend ſuch charge to the high conſtables of each hundred, who ſend their warrants to the petty conſtables, to gather it, by virtue whereof they aſſeſs the inhabitants of pariſhes in particular ſums, according to a fixed rate, and collect it; and then they pay the ſame to the high conſtables, who bring it to the ſeſſions.

This method of raiſing money was long obſerved; but by ſtatute 1 Ann. cap. 18, juſtices in ſeſſions, upon preſentment made of want of reparations, are to aſſeſs every town, pariſh, &c. in proportion, towards the repairs of a bridge; and the money aſſeſſed is to be levied by the conſtables of ſuch pariſhes, &c. and being demanded, and not paid in ten days, the inhabitants ſhall be diſtrained; and when the tax is levied, the conſtables are to pay it to the high conſtable of the hundred; who is to pay the ſame to ſuch perſons as the juſtices ſhall appoint, to be employed according to the order of the juſtices, towards repairing of the bridge: and the juſtices may allow any perſon concerned in the execution of the act, 3 d. per pound out of the money collected. All matters relating to the repairing and amending of bridges, are to be determined in the county where they lie, and no preſentment or indictment ſhall be removed by certiorari. And by this ſtatute, the evidence of the inhabitants of thoſe places where the bridges are in decay, ſhall be admitted at any trial upon an information or indictment, &c.

By 14 Geo. 2. c. 33, The juſtices at their general ſeſſions, may purchaſe or agree with perſons for any piece of land, not above one acre, near to any county-bridge, in order to enlarge or more conveniently rebuild it; and the ground ſhall be paid for out of the money raiſed by ſtatute of 12 Geo. 2. c. 29, for better aſſeſſing, collecting and levying of county rates, &c. See tit. County-Rates.

By the ſaid Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29. § 14, When any publick bridges, &c. are to be repaired at the expence of the county, the juſtices at their general or quarter ſeſſions, after preſentment made by the grand jury, of their want of reparation, may contract with any perſon for rebuilding or repairing the ſame, for any term not exceeding 7 years, at a certain annual ſum.—They are to give publick notice of their intention to make ſuch contracts, which are to be made at the moſt reaſonable prices, and ſecurity given by the contractors for performance; which contracts are to be entered with the clerk of the peace.

No perſons are compellable to make a new bridge but by act of parliament: and the inhabitants of the whole county cannot, of their own authority, change a bridge from one place to another.

If a man has toll for men and cattle paſſing over a bridge, he is to repair it; and toll may be paid in theſe caſes, by preſcription, or ſtatute.

BRIDGE-MASTERS. There are bridgemaſters of London-bridge, choſen by the citizens, who have certain fees and profits belonging to their office, and the care of the ſaid bridge, &c. Lex Londin. 283.

BRIEF, brevis.] An abridgment of the client's caſe, made out for the inſtruction of counſel, on a trial at law; wherein the caſe of the party is to be briefly but fully ſtated, the proofs muſt be placed in due order, and proper anſwers made to whatever may be objected againſt the client's cauſe, by the oppoſite ſide; and herein great care is requiſite, that nothing be omitted to endanger the cauſe.

An attachment has been granted againſt a party and his attorney for ſurreptitiouſly getting poſſeſſion of the brief of a counſel on the other ſide, and applying the ſame to an improper purpoſe in his defence. See Bateman v. Conway, 1 Bro. P. C. 519. 8vo. ed.

Though a brief is not of itſelf evidence againſt the party for whom it is prepared, yet, as a diſcovery of the ſecrets and merits of his caſe, may be productive of perjury or ſubornation of perjury, and thereby obſtruct the juſtice of the court in which the ſuit is depending; the obtaining of it in a ſurreptitious manner is an offence highly deſerving cenſure and puniſhment. Id.

BRIEF AL 'EVESQUE, A writ to the biſhop, which in Quare Impedit, ſhall go to remove an incumbent, unleſs he recover, or be preſented pendente lite. 1 Keb. 386.

BRIEFS, or licences to make collection for repairing churches, reſtoring loſs by fire, &c. See tit. Churchwardens, III. 1.

BRIGA, Fr. brigue.] Debate or contention.

BRIGANDINE. Fr. Lat. lorica.] A coat of mail or ancient armour, conſiſting of many jointed and ſcale-like plates, very pliant and eaſy for the body. This word is mentioned in Stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. cap. 2, and ſome confound it with haubergeon; and others with brigantine, a long but low-built veſſel, ſwift in ſailing.

BRIGANTES. The antient name for the inhabitants of Yorkſhire, Lancaſhire, biſhoprick of Durham, Weſtmorland and Cumberland. Blount.

BRIGBOTE, or BRUG-BOTE, Sax. brig, pontus, and bote, compenſatio.] The contribution to the repair of bridges, [walls and caſtles] which by the old laws of the Anglo-Saxons might not be remitted; but by degrees immunities were granted by our kings, even againſt this duty; and then to be quit of brig-bote ſignified to be exempt from tribute or contribution towards the mending or re-edifying of bridges. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 47; Selden's Titles of Honour, fol. 622.—Spelm. v. Brigbote and Burgbote.

BRISTOL, A great city, famous for trade: the mayor, burgeſſes and commonalty of the city of Briſtol, are conſervators of the river Avon from above the bridge there to King-road, and ſo down the Severn to the two iſlands called Holmes; and the mayor and juſtices of the ſaid city, may make rules and orders for preſerving the river, and regulating pilots, maſters of ſhips, &c. Alſo for the government of their markets: and the ſtreets are to be kept clean and paved; and lamps or lights hung out at night. Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 23.—No perſon ſhall act as a broker in the city of Briſtol, till admitted and licenſed by the mayor and aldermen, &c. on pain of forfeiting 500 l. and thoſe who employ any ſuch, to forfeit 50 l. &c. by Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 31.—By the Stat. 22 G. 2. c. 20, the Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3, is rendered more effectual ſo far as it relates to the paving and enlightening the ſtreets; and divers regulations are made in relation to the hackney-coachmen, halliers, draymen, and carters, and the markets and ſellers of hay and ſtraw, within the ſaid city and liberties thereof.

BROCAGE, brocagium.] The wages or hire of a broker: which is alſo termed brokerage. 12 R. 2. c. 2.

BROCELLA, This word, as interpreted by Dr. Thoroton, ſignifieth a wood; and it is ſaid to be a thicket or covert of buſhes and bruſh wood, from the obſolete Lat. bruſca, terra bruſcoſa & brocia, Fr. broce, brocelle: and hence is our brouce of wood, and brouſing of cattle.

BROCHA, Fr. broche.] An awl, or large packing needle. A ſpit in ſome parts of England is called a broche; and from this word comes to pierce or broach a barrel.

BROCHIA, A great can or pitcher. Bract. lib. 2. tract. 1. cap. 6. Where it ſeems that he intends faccus to carry dry, and brochia liquid things.

BRODEHALFPENY, or BROADHALFPENY. See Bordhalfpeny.

BROKERS, broccatores, broccarii & auxionarii.] Are thoſe that contrive, make and conclude bargains and contracts between merchants and tradeſmen, in matters of money and merchandize, for which they have a fee or reward. Theſe are Exchange brokers; and by the Stat. 10 R. 2. cap. 1. they are called broggers; alſo broggers of corn is uſed in a proclamation of Queen Elizabeth, for badgers, Baker's Chron. fol. 411. The original of the word is from a trader broken, and that from the Sax. broc, misfortune, which is often the true reaſon of a man's breaking; ſo that the name of broker came from one who was a broken trader by misfortune, and none but ſuch were formerly admitted to that employment; and they were to be freemen of the city of London, and allowed and approved by the lord mayor and aldermen, for their ability and honeſty.

By the ſtat. 6 Ann. c. 16, they are to be annually licenſed in London by the lord mayor and aldermen who adminiſter an oath, and take bond for the faithful execution of their offices: if any perſons ſhall act as brokers, without being thus licenſed and admitted, they ſhall forfeit the ſum of 500*l.* And perſons employing them 50*l.* and brokers are to regiſter contracts, &c. under the like penalty: alſo brokers ſhall not deal for themſelves, on pain of forfeiting 200*l.* they are to carry about them a ſilver medal, having the king's arms and the arms of the city, &c. and pay 40*s.* a year to the chamber of the city.

As to brokers in Briſtol, See tit. Briſtol.—And as to Pawnbrokers, ſee that title. As to Brokers illegally dealing in the funds or ſtocks, who are uſually known by the appellation of ſtock-jobbers, See title Funds.

BROK, An old ſword or dagger.

BROSSUS, Bruiſed or injured with blows, wounds, or other caſualty. Cowel.

BROTHEL-HOUSES, Lewd places, being the common habitations of proſtitutes. A brothelman was a looſe idle fellow; and a feme bordelier or brothelier, a common whore. And borelman is a contraction of brothelman. Chaucer. See Bawdy-Houſe.

BRUDBOTE. See Brigbote.

BRUERE, Lat. erica.] Signifies heath ground; and brueria, briars, thorns, or heath, from the Sax. brær, briar. Paroch. Antiq. 620.

BRUILLUS, a wood or grove; Fr. breil, breuil, a thicket or clump of trees in a park or foreſt. Hence the abby of Bruer, in the foreſt of Wichwood in com. Oxon. and Bruel, Brehul, or Brill, a hunting ſeat of our ancient kings in the foreſt of Burnwood in com. Bucks.

BRUILLETUS, a ſmall coppice or wood.

BRUNETA, properly Burneta which ſee.

BRUSCIA, Seems to ſignify a wood. Monaſt. tom. 1. pag. 773.

BRUSUA and BRUSULA, Brouſe or bruſhwood. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. fol. 773.

BUBBLES. The South-ſea project, and various other ſchemes, ſimilar in the end intended, that of defrauding the ſubject, though different as to the means, were called by the name of bubbles. The Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 18, makes all unwarrantable undertakings by unlawful ſubſcriptions ſubject to the penalties of a præmunire.—See title Funds.

BUCKLARIUM, A buckler. Clauſ. 26 Ed. 1. m. 8. intus.

BUCKSTALL, A toil to take deer, which by the Stat. 19 Hen. 7. c. 11, is not to be kept by any perſon that hath not a park of his own, under penalties. See alſo 3 Jac. 1. c. 13. There is a privilege of being quit of amerciaments for buckſtalls. Privileg. de Semplingham. See 4 Inſt. 306.

BUCKWHEAT, French wheat, uſed in many counties of this kingdom: in Eſſex it is called brank; and in Worceſterſhire, crap. It is mentioned in the Stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 5.

BUCINUS, A military weapon for a footman. Tenures, pag. 74.

BUGGERY, or Sodomy, Comes from the Italian bugarone or buggerare, and it is defined to be a carnal copulation againſt nature, and this is either by the confuſion of ſpecies; that is to ſay, a man or a woman with a brute beaſt; or of ſexes, as a man with a man, or man unnaturally with a woman. 3 Inſt. 58: 12 Co. Rep. 36. This ſin againſt God, nature, and the law, it is ſaid was brought into England by the Lombards. Rot. Parl. 50 Ed. 3. numb. 58. In ancient times, according to ſome authors, it was puniſhable with burning, though, others ſay with burying alive: but at this day it is felony excluded clergy and puniſhed as other felonies by ſtat. 25 H. 8. cap. 6, inforced by 5 Eliz. 17.

By the articles of the navy, (Art. 29. ſtat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 33,) If any perſon in the fleet ſhall commit the unnatural and deteſtable ſin of buggery or ſodomy, with man or beaſt; he ſhall be puniſhed with death by the ſentence of a court martial.

It is felony both in the agent and patient conſenting, except the perſon on whom it is committed be a boy under the age of diſcretion; (which is generally reckoned at fourteen;) when it is felony only in the agent; all perſons preſent, aiding and abetting to this crime, are all principals, and the ſtatutes make it felony generally: there may be acceſſaries before and after the fact; but though none of the principal offenders ſhall be admitted to clergy, the acceſſaries are not excluded it. 1 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 670.

In every indictment for this offence, there muſt be the words, rem habuit veneream & carnaliter cognovit, &c. and of conſequence ſome kind of penetration and emiſſion muſt be proved; but any the leaſt degree is ſufficient. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 4. The general words of theſe indictments are, that A. B. on ſuch a day, at, &c. with force and arms, made an aſſault upon C. D. and then and there wickedly, deviliſhly, felonioufly, and againſt the order of nature, commited the venereal act with the said C. D. and carnally knew him, and then and there wickedly, &c. did with him that sodomitical and detestable sin called buggery, (not to be named among Christians) to the great displeasure of God, and disgrace of all mankind, &c. This crime is excepted out of our acts of general pardon.—This says Blackstone is a crime which ought to be strictly and impartially proved, and then as strictly and impartially punished. But it is an offence of so dark a nature, so easily charged, and the negative so difficult to be proved, that the accusation should be clearly made out: for if false, it deserves a punishment inferior only to that of the crime itself.

BUILDINGS. If a house new built exceeds the ancient foundation, whereby that is the cause of hindering the lights or air of another house, action lies against the builder. Hob. 131. In London a man may place ladders or poles upon the ground, or against houses adjoining for building his own; but he may not break ground: and builders of houses ought to have licence from the mayor and aldermen, &c. for a board in the streets, which are not to be incumbered. Cit. Lib. 30, 146. In new building of London, it was ordained, that the outsides of the buildings be of brick or stone, and the houses for the principal streets to be four stories high, having in the front, balconies; &c. by Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 3.

The laws for regulating of all buildings in the cities of London and Westminster, and other parishes and places in the weekly bills of mortality, the parishes of St. Mary-le-bone, and Paddington, St. Pancras and St. Luke at Chelsea, for preventing mischiefs by fire, are reduced into one act by Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 78. The regulations of this law being very minute and technical, we must refer the reader to the statute itself.—See title Fire.

BULL, bulla.] A brief or mandate of the pope or bishop of Rome, from the lead or sometimes gold seal affixed thereto, which Mat. Paris, anno 1237, thus describes: In bulla domini papæ stat imago Pauli a dextris crucis in medio bullæ figurata, & Petri a sinistris. These decrees of the pope are often mentioned in our statutes, as 25 Ed. 3: 28 H. 8. cap. 16: 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 8. and 13 Eliz. cap. 2: They were heretofore used, and of force, in this land: but by the statute 28 Hen. 8. c. 16, it was enacted, That all bulls, briefs and dispensations had or obtained from the bishop of Rome, should be void. And by Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2, (See Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 1,) If any person shall obtain from Rome any bull or writing to absolve or reconcile such as forsake their due allegiance, or shall give or receive absolution by colour of such bull, or use or publish such bull, &c. it is high treason. See Rome, Papist.

BULL AND BOAR. By the custom of some places, a parson may be obliged to keep a bull and a boar for the use of the parishioners, in consideration of his having tithes of calves and pigs, &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 559: 4 Mod. 241.

BULLIO SALIS, As much salt as is made at one wealing or boiling: a measure of salt, supposed to be twelve gallons. Mon. Ang. tom. 2.

BULLION, Fr. billon.] The ore or metal whereof gold is made; and signifies with us gold or silver in billet, in the mass before it is coined. Anno 9 Ed. 3. st. 2. c. 2. See titles Coin, Money.

BULTEL, The bran or refuse of meal after dressed: also the bag wherein it is dressed is called a Bulter, or rather boulter. The word is mentioned in the statute de assisâ panis & cervisiæ, anno 51 Hen. 3. Hence comes bulted or boulted bread, being the coarsest bread.

BUNDLES. A sort of records of the Chancery, lying in the office of the Rolls; in which are contained, the files of bills and answers; of hab. cor. cum causâ; certiorari's; attachments; &c. scire facias's; certificates of statute-staple; extents and liberates; supersedeas's; bails on special pardons; bills from the Exchequer of the names of sheriffs; letters patent surrendered; and deeds cancelled; inquisitions; privy seals for grants; bills signed by the king; warrants of escheators; customers, &c.

BURCHETA, from the Fr. berche.] A kind of gun used in forests.

BURCIFER REGIS, Purse-bearer, or keeper of the king's privy purse. Pat. 17 Hen. 8.

BURDARE, To jest or trifle. Mat. Paris, Addit. p. 149.

BURGAGE TENURE. See title Tenures. III. 11.

TENURE IN BURGAGE, is described by Glanvil, (lib. 7. c. 3,) and is expressly said by Littleton, § 162, to be but tenure in socage: And it is where the king or other person is lord of an ancient borough, in which the tenements are held by a rent certain. Litt. § 162, 3.

It is indeed only a kind of town-socage; as common socage by which other lands are holden, is usually of a rural nature. A borough is usually distinguished from other towns by the right of sending members to parliament; (See title Borough;) and where the right of election is by burgage-tenure, that alone is a proof of the antiquity of the borough. Tenure in Burgage or Burgage-Tenure therefore is, where houses, or lands which were formerly the scite of houses, in an ancient borough, are held of some lord in common socage by a certain established rent. 2 Comm. 82.

The free socage in which these tenements are held seems to be plainly a remnant of Saxon liberty: which may also account for the great variety of customs, affecting many of these tenements so held in ancient burgage, the principal and most remarkable of which is, that called Borough-English.—See that title.

Other special customs there are, in different burgage tenures; as in some, that the wife shall be endowed of all her husband's tenements, and not of the third part only, as at common law. Litt. § 166.—In others that a man might (previous to Stat. H. 8,) dispose of his tenements by will. Litt. § 167—though this power of disposal was allowable in the Saxon times—a pregnant proof that these liberties of socage tenure were fragments of Saxon liberty. 2 Comm. 84.

BURG, A small walled town, or place of privilege, &c. See Borough.

BURG-BOTE, from burg, castellum, and bote, compensatio.] Is a tribute or contribution towards the building or repairing of castles, or walls of a borough or city: from which divers had exemption by the ancient charters of the Saxon kings. Rastal. burg-bote significat quietantiam reparationis murorum civitatis vel burgi. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 47: Spelm. v. Burgh-bote.

BURGESSES, burgarii & burgenses.] Properly men of trade, or the inhabitants of a borough or walled town; but this name is usually given to the magistrates of corporate towns.

In Germany, and other countries, they confound burgess and citizen; but we distinguish them, as appears by the the Stat. 5 R. 2. c. 4, where the claſſes of the commonwealth are thus enumerated, count, baron, banneret, chivaleer de countée; citizein de citée; burgeſs de burgh. See Co. Lit. 80. Thoſe are alſo called burgeſſes, who ſerve in parliament, for any borough or corporation: See title Parliament. Burgeſſes of our towns are called, in Domeſday, the homines of the king, or of ſome other great man; but this only ſhews whoſe protection they were under, and is not any infringement of their *civil liberty. BURGH BRECHE, Fidejuſſionis violatio. A breach of pledge, Spelm.] It is uſed for a fine impoſed on the community of a town, for a breach of the peace, &c. Leg. Canuti, cap. 55.

BURGHERISTHE, or burgberiche, Uſed in Domeſday-book, for a breach of the peace in a city. Blount.

BURGHBOTE. See Burgbote.

BURGMOTE, A court of a borough. LL. Canuti, MS. cap. 44.—Berghmote is different; which ſee.

BURGHWARE, quaſi burgiver.] A citizen or burgeſs.

BURGLARY, Burgi latrocinium; by our ancient law called hameſecken, as it is in Scotland to this day. 4 Comm. 223.] A Felony at common law, in (1) breaking and entering (2) the manſion houſe of another, or the walls or gates of a walled town, or a church, (3) in the night, (4) to the intent to commit ſome felony within the ſame; whether the felonious intent be executed or not. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 1, 10: 4 Comm. 224.

It ſeems the plaineſt method to conſider the ſubject according to the four parts of the above definition; and 5. to add ſomething on the puniſhment of this offence.

1. There muſt be both a breaking and an entry to compleat this offence. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 3.

Every entrance into the houſe by a treſpaſſer is not a breaking in this caſe, but there muſt be an actual breaking. As if the door of a manſion houſe ſtand open, and the thief enters, this is no breaking. So it is if the window of the houſe be open, and a thief with a hook or other engine draweth out ſome of the goods of the owner, this is no burglary, becauſe there is no actual breaking of the houſe. But if the thief breaketh the glaſs of the window, and with a hook or other engine draweth out ſome of the goods of the owner, this is burglary, for there was an actual breaking of the houſe. 3 Inſt. 64. But the following acts amount to an actual breaking, viz. opening the caſement, or breaking the glaſs window, picking open the lock of a door, or putting back the lock, or the leaf of a window, or unlatching the door that is only latched. 1 Hal. H. P. C. 552.

Having entered by a door which he found open, or having lain in the houſe by the owner's conſent, unlatching a chamber door; or coming down the chimney. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 4.

If thieves pretend buſineſs to get into a houſe by night, and thereupon the owner of the houſe opens his door, and they enter and rob the houſe, this is burglary. Kel. 42.

So if perſons deſigning to rob a houſe, take lodgings in it, and then fall on the landlord and rob him; or where perſons intending to rob a houſe, raiſe a hue and cry, and prevail with the conſtable to make a ſearch in the houſe, and having got in by that means, with the owner's conſent, bind the conſtable, and rob the inhabitants; in both theſe inſtances they are guilty of burglary, for theſe evaſions rather increaſe the crime. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 5.

If a perſon be within the houſe and ſteal goods, and then open the houſe on the inſide, and go out with the goods, this is burglary, though the thief did not break the houſe. 3 Inſt. 64. But this was not admitted to be law with any certainty; and therefore by Stat. 12 An. c. 7, it is enacted, "that if any perſon ſhall enter into the manſion-houſe of another, by day or by night, without breaking the ſame, with an intent to commit felony, or being in ſuch houſe ſhall commit any felony, and ſhall in the night-time break the ſaid houſe to get out, he ſhall be guilty of burglary, and ouſted of the benefit of clergy, in the ſame manner as if he had broken and entered the houſe in the night-time, with intent to commit felony."

Any the leaſt entry, either with the whole, or with but part of the body, or with any inſtrument or weapon, will ſatisfy the word entered in an indictment for burglary: as if one do put his foot over the threſhold, or his hand, or a hook, or piſtol, within a window, or turn the key of a door which is locked on the inſide, or diſcharge a loaded gun into a houſe, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 7, and the authorities there cited.—But where thieves had bored a hole through the door, with a centerbit, and part of the chips were found in the inſide of the houſe, yet as they had neither got in themſelves, nor introduced a hand or inſtrument for the purpoſe of taking the property, the entry was ruled incomplete. Id. ib. in note.

When ſeveral come with a deſign to commit burglary, and one does it, while the reſt watch near the houſe, here his act is, by interpretation, the act of all of them. And upon a like ground, if a ſervant confederating with a rogue, let him in to rob a houſe, it has been determined by all the judges, upon a ſpecial verdict, that it is burglary both in the ſervant and the thief. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 38. § 9. and n.

2. It is certainly a dangerous, if not an incurable fault to omit the word dwelling houſe in an indictment, for burglary in a houſe. But it ſeems not neceſſary or proper in an indictment for burglary in a church, which by all the antient authorities is taken as a diſtinct burglary. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 10. and the authorities there cited.

If a man hath two houſes, and reſides, ſometimes in one of the houſes, and ſometimes in the other, if the houſe he doth not inhabit is broken by any perſon in the night, it is burglary. Poph. 52.

A chamber in an inn of court, &c. where one uſually lodges, is a manſion-houſe; for every one hath a ſeveral property there. But a chamber where any perſon doth lodge as an inmate, cannot be called his manſion; though if a burglary be committed in his lodgings, the indictment may lay the offence to be in the manſion-houſe of him that let them. 3 Inſt. 65: Kel. 83. If the owner of the houſe breaks into the rooms of his lodgers, and ſteals their goods, it cannot be burglary to break into his own houſe, but it is felony to ſteal their goods. Wood's Inſt. 378. But ſee contra, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 13, 14, 15.

If the owner live under the ſame roof with the inmates, there muſt be a ſeparate outer door, or the whole is the manſion of the owner; but if the owner inhabit no part of the houſe; or even if he occupy a ſhop, or a cellar in it, it, but do not ſleep therein, it is the manſion of each lodger, although there be but one outer door. Leach's Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 15. in n.—There being only one door in common to all the inhabitants, makes no difference, where the owner does not ſleep in any part of the houſe, for in that caſe, each apartment is a ſeparate manſion. Id. ib. § 14. n.

Chambers, in inns of court, &c. have ſeparate outward doors, which are the extremity of obſtruction, and are enjoyed as ſeparate property, as eſtates of inheritance, for life, or during reſidence.—So a houſe divided into ſeparate tenements, with a diſtinct outward door to each, will be ſeparate houſes. Id. ib. § 13. n.

Part of a houſe divided from the reſt, having a door of its own to the ſtreet, is a manſion-houſe of him who hires it. Kel. 84.

To break and enter a ſhop, not parcel of the manſion-houſe, in which the ſhop-keeper never lodges, but only works or trades there in the day-time, is not burglary, but only larceny; but if he, or his ſervant, uſually or often lodge in the ſhop at night, it is then a manſion-houſe, in which a burglary may be committed. 1 H. H. P. C. 557, 558.—But ſee Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 38, reſpecting burglary in the work ſhops of the plate glaſs manufactory, which is made ſingle felony, and puniſhable with tranſportation for ſeven years.—If the ſhop-keeper ſleep in any part of the building, however diſtinct that part is from the ſhop, it may be alledged to be his manſion houſe; provided the owner does not ſleep under the ſame roof alſo. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 38. § 16. in n.

A lodger in an inn hath a ſpecial intereſt in his chamber, ſo that if he opens his chamber door, and takes goods in the houſe, and goes away, it ſeems not to be burglary. And where A. enters into the houſe of B. in the night, by the doors open, and breaks open a cheſt, and ſteals goods without breaking an inner door; it is no burglary by the common law, becauſe the cheſt is no part of the houſe: though it is felony ouſted of clergy by ſtatute 3 W. & M. c. 9; and if one break open a counter or cupboard, fixed to a houſe, it is burglary. 1 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 554.

All out-buildings, as barns, ſtables, ware-houſes, &c. adjoining to a houſe, are looked upon as part thereof, and conſequently burglary may be committed in them. And if the ware-houſe, &c. be parcel of the manſion-houſe, and within the ſame, though not under the ſame roof, or contiguous, a burglary may be committed therein.—But an out-houſe occupied with, but ſeparated from the dwelling-houſe by an open paſſage eight feet wide, and not within or connected by any fence, incloſing both, is not within the curtilage or homeſtall. Leach's Hawk. P. C i. c. 38. § 12. n: 4 Comm. 225.

No burglary can be committed by breaking into any ground incloſed, or booth, or tent, &c. but by Stat. 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 9, clergy is taken from this offence.

3. In the day-time there is no burglary.—As to what is reckoned night, and what day for this purpoſe, antiently the day was accounted to begin only at ſun riſing, and to end immediately upon ſun ſet; but the better opinion ſeems to be, that if there be day light, or crepuſculum enough begun or left to diſcern a man's face withal, it is no burglary. But this does not extend to moon-light; the malignity of the offence, not ſo properly ariſing from its being done in the dark, as at the dead of night, when ſleep has diſarmed the owner, and rendered his caſtle defenceleſs. 4 Comm. 224: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 1.

4. The breaking and entry muſt be with a felonious intent, otherwiſe it is only a treſpaſs; and it is the ſame whether ſuch intent be actually carried into execution, or only demonſtrated by ſome attempt, of which the jury is to judge. And therefore ſuch breaking and entry, with intent to commit a robbery, a murder, a rape, or any other felony, is burglary. Nor does it make any difference, whether the offence were felony at common law, or only created ſo by ſtatute. 4 Comm. 227: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 38. § 18, 19.

One of the ſervants of the houſe opened his lady's chamber door, which was faſtened with a braſs bolt, with deſign to commit a rape; and it was ruled to be burglary, and the defendant was convicted and tranſported. Stran. 481: Kel. 67.

A ſervant embezzled money intruſted to his care; left ten guineas in his trunk: quitted his maſter's ſervice; returned; broke and entered the houſe in the night, and took away the ten guineas, and adjudged no burglary. Leach's Hawk. P. C. i. c. 38. § 18 n. Sed vide 1 Show. 53.

5. Every man's houſe is conſidered as his caſtle, as well for defence againſt injury and violence, as for repoſe. 5 Co. 92.—To violate this ſecurity is conſidered of ſo atrocious a nature, that the alarmed inhabitant, whether he be an owner or a mere inmate, (Cro. Car. 544,) is by Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 5, expreſsly permitted to repel the violence by the death of the aſſailants, without incurring the penalties even of excuſeable homicide—For a courſe of time however, the life of a burglar was ſaved by the plea of clergy; but as the increaſe of national opulence furniſhed further temptations, additional terrors became neceſſary; therefore by Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 7, clergy is taken away from the offence; and by Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9, from acceſſaries before the fact.

Still further to encourage the proſecution of offenders, it is enacted by Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23, that whoever ſhall convict a burglar, ſhall be exempted from pariſh and ward offices, where the offence was committed. To this, Stats. 5 An. c. 31, and 6 Geo. 1. c. 23, have ſuperadded a reward of 40*l.* And if an accomplice, being out of priſon, ſhall convict two or more offenders, he is entitled alſo to a pardon of the felonies as enumerated in the act. See title Acceſſary.

See likewiſe Stats. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36: 27 Geo. 2. c. 3, and 18 Geo. 3. c. 19, which provide, That the charges of proſecuting and convicting a burglar ſhall be paid by the treaſurer of the county where the burglary was committed, to the proſecutor, and poor witneſſes.

To remove one inducement to the frequent commiſſion of burglaries, Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 48, provides that buyers or receivers of ſtolen jewels, gold, or ſilver plate, where the ſtealing ſhall have been accompanied by burglary, (or robbery) may be tried and tranſported for fourteen years, before the conviction of the principal.

And to check this offence in its progreſs, Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 88, enacts, That any perſon apprehended, having upon him any pick-lock key, &c. or other implement, with intent to commit a burglary, ſhall be deemed a rogue and vagabond, within Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5.

BURIALS,

BURIALS, Perſons dying are to be buried in woollen, on pain of forfeiting 5*l.* And affidavit is to be made of ſuch burying before a juſtice, &c. under the like penalty. Stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 3.

BURNETA, Cloth made of dyed wool. A burnet colour muſt be dyed; but brunus color may be made with wool without dying, which are called medleys or ruſſets. Lyndewood. Thus much is mentioned becauſe this word is ſometimes wrote bruneta.

BURNING IN THE HAND, Vide Branding.

BURNING of houſes, out-houſes, malicious burnings, &c. See title Arſon.—To the malicious burnings mentioned under title Arſon, may be added, that by Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23, aſſaulting with intention to burn the garments of another in the public ſtreet, (by aqua-fortis, &c.) is puniſhable with tranſportation.—By Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 11; and 1 An. ſt. 2. c. 9, to burn any ſhip to the prejudice of the owners or freighters; and by Stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 12, to the prejudice of the underwriters, is made felony without clergy.—By Stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 24, to burn the king's ſhips of war, or any of the arſenals or ſtores, &c. therein, is alſo made felony without clergy.—By Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 15, threatning by anonymous or fictitious letters, to burn houſes, barns, &c. is felony without clergy.—As to penalty on ſervants ſetting fire to houſes by negligence. BUTT, butticum.] A meaſure of wine, &c. well known among merchants, and containing 126 gallons of Malmſey wine, by Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 13.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.—By Stat. 9 H. 6. c. 8, A weigh of cheeſe ſhall contain thirty-two cloues, each cloue 7*lb.* = 2*cwt.* Every kilderkin of butter ſhall contain 112 pounds, the firkin 56, and pot 14 pounds of good butter, (every pound 16*oz.*) beſides the caſks and pots; and old bad butter ſhall not be mixed with good, nor ſhall butter be repacked for ſale, which incurs forfeiture of double value, &c. And ſellers and packers of butter ſhall pack it in good caſks, and ſet their names thereon, with the weight of the caſk and butter, on pain of 10*s. per cwt. Stat.* 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 26.—Buyers of butter are to put marks on caſks; and perſons opening them afterwards, or putting in other butter, &c. ſhall forfeit 20*s.* 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 7. The ſaid Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 7, alſo contains regulations to compel warehouſe-keepers, weighers, ſearchers, and ſhippers, to receive all butter and cheeſe for the London market, without undue preference.—The Stats. 8 Geo. 1. c. 27: and 17 Geo. 2. c. 8, regulate the ſale of butter; the former in the city of York, the latter at New Malton.—See titles Weights and Meaſures.

BUTTONS, Foreign buttons are not to be imported on penalty of 100*l.* on the importer, and 50*l.* on the ſeller, by Stats. 13 & 14 C. 2. c. 13: and 4 W. & M. c. 10.—And by the ſame ſtatutes, a juſtice may iſſue his warrant to ſearch for and ſeize the ſame.

By Stat. 10 W. 3. c. 2, No perſon ſhall make, ſell, or ſet on, any buttons made of wood only, and turned in imitation of other buttons, under penalty of 40*s.* a dozen. A ſhank of wire being added to the button makes no difference. Ld. Raym. 712.

By the ſaid Stat. W. 3. no perſon ſhall make, ſell, or ſet on, buttons made of cloth, or other ſtuffs of which clothes are uſually made, on penalty of 40*s.*

By Stat. 8 An. c. 6. no taylor, or other perſon, ſhall make, ſell, ſet on, uſe, or bind, on any clothes, any buttons or button holes of cloth, &c. on pain of 5*l.* a dozen.—By this act no power is given to make diſtreſs.

Stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 7, is ſaid in Burn's Juſtice, (title Buttons) to be a looſe, injudicious, ungrammatical act, and which by its garb may ſeem to have been drawn up by taylors, or button makers. This act impoſes, (indiſtinctly enough,) 40*s.* a dozen, on all ſuch buttons and button button holes, with an exception of velvet; it seems levelled against the taylors only, but clothes with such buttons and button holes exposed to sale, are to be forfeited and seized.

By Stat. 7 Geo. 1. st. 1. c. 12, No person shall use, or wear, on any clothes, (velvet excepted) any such buttons or button holes, on pain of 40*s.* a dozen, half to the witness on whose oath they are convicted; an application of the penalty deservedly reprobated as nearly singular, and on a principle not reconcileable to the usual rules of evidence.—This statute is also incorrect, particularly in making no disposal of a moiety of the penalty, in case of conviction or confession by the party.

These acts are seldom enforced, and do not seem very consistent with general policy. See title Taylors.

BUTTS, The place where archers meet with their bows and arrows to shoot at a mark, which we call shooting at the butts. Also butts are the ends or short pieces of land in arable ridges and furrows: buttum terræ, a butt of land. See title Abbuttals.

BYE, Words ending in by or bee, signify a dwelling place or habitation, from the Sax. by, habitatio.

BY-LAWS, bilagines, from Sax. by, pagus, civitas, and lagen, lex. i. e. the laws of cities, Spelm. v. bellagines. Or perhaps laws made obiter, or by the by.] Certain orders and constitutions of corporations, for the governing of their members; of courts-leet and court-baron; commoners or inhabitants in vills, &c. made by common assent, for the good of those that made them, in particular cases, whereunto the public law doth not extend; so that they lay restrictions on the parties, not imposed by the common or statute law: guilds and fraternities of trades, by letters-patent of incorporation, may likewise make by-laws, for the better regulation of trade among themselves, or with others. Kitch. 45, 72: 6 Rep. 63.

In Scotland those laws are called laws of birlaw, or burlaw; which are made by neighbours elected by common consent in the birlaw courts, wherein knowledge is taken of complaints betwixt neighbour and neighbour; which men so chosen are judges and arbitrators, and stiled birlaw-men. And birlaws, according to Skene, are leges rusticorum, laws made by husbandmen, or townships, concerning neighbourhood amongst them. Skene, pag. 33.

The power of making By-laws, being included in the very act of incorporating a corporation; and most by-laws being made by corporations, it seems more regular to consider the nature and effect of them under that head. See title Corporations.

In this place therefore we shall chiefly consider, 1, who may make by-laws, and 2, the general requisites of them.

1. The inhabitants of a town, without any custom, may make ordinances or by-laws, for repairing of a church, or highway, or any such thing, which is for the general good of the Public: and in such cases, the greater part shall bind all: though if it be for their own private profit, as for the well ordering of their common, or the like, they cannot make by-laws without a custom to warrant it; and if there be a custom, the greatest part shall not bind the rest in these cases, unless it be warranted by the custom. 5 Rep. 63.—A custom to make a by-law, may be alledged in an ancient city or borough.—So in an upland town, which is neither city nor borough. 1 Inst. 110 b: Cro. Car. 498: Hob. 212.

The freeholders in a court-leet may make By-laws relating to the public good, which shall bind every one within the leet. 2 Danv. 457: Mo. 579, 584. And a court-baron may make By-laws, by custom, and add a penalty for the non-performance of them.—So by custom the tenants of a manor may make by-laws for the good order of the tenants. 1 Ro. Ab. 366. l. 35: Mo. 75: Hob. 212.—So may the homage. 1 Ro. Ab: Dy. 322 (a). But not without a custom. Sav. 74.—And a custom that the steward with the consent of the homage may make them, is not good. 3 Lev. 49.

2. All By-laws are to be reasonable; and ought to be for the common benefit, and not private advantage of any particular persons; and must be consonant to the public laws and statutes, as subordinate to them. And by Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 7, By-laws made by corporations are to be approved by the Lord Chancellor, or Chief Justices, &c. on pain of 40*l.*

A By-law may be reasonable, though the penalty be to be paid to those who make the By-law. 1 Salk. 397. And generally it shall be reasonable, if it be for the public good of the corporation. Carth. 482.

By-laws made in restraint of trade are not favoured, but the distinction between such as are made to restrain, and those made to regulate trade seems very nice. See tit. Corporation.—Under a general power to make by-laws, a by-law cannot be made to restrain trade. 1 Burr. 12.—A custom that no foreign tradesman shall use or exercise a trade in a town, &c. will warrant that which a grant cannot do; and where custom has restrained, a by-law may be made that upon composition foreigners may exercise a trade. Carter 120. See 4 Burr. 1951.

So By-laws may regulate, but not totally restrain a private right, as in cases of common, &c. See Com. Dig. title By-Law, (B. 2.) and (C. 4.)

If a By-law impose a charge without any apparent benefit to the party, it will be void. R. Raym. 328.—And a By-law being entire, if it be unreasonable for any particular, shall be void for the whole, 2 Vent. 183.

A By-law cannot impose an oath, nor impower any person to administer it. Stra. 536.

Where By-laws are good, notice of them is not necessary, because they are presumed for the better government and benefit of all persons living in those particular limits where made; and therefore all persons therein are bound to take notice of them. 1 Lutw. 404: Cro. Car. 498: 5 Mod. 442: 1 Salk. 142: Carth. 484.

If a By-law does not mention how the penalty shall be recovered, debt lies for it. 1 Ro. Ab. 366. l. 48. See 5 Co. 64: Hob. 279.—Or action on the case on assumpsit. 2 Lev. 252.—It seems that a By-law to levy the penalty by distress, sale, or imprisonment, is void, unless by custom. See Com. Dig. title By-Law, (D. 2:) (E. 1, 2.)

The court of K. B. will not enter into a question on the validity of a By-law, on the return of a hab. cor. cum causâ, from any Corporation except the city of London, where it always doth; but the plaintiff must declare there, and defendant may demur if he has objections to the By-law. 2 Burr. 775.

CALENDAR OF PRISONERS, A liſt of all the priſoners' names, in the cuſtody of each reſpective ſheriff. Where priſoners are capitally convicted at the aſſizes, the judge may command execution to be done, without any writ. And the uſage now is, for the judge to ſign the calendar, which contains all the priſoners' names, with their ſeveral judgments in the margin, and this calendar is left with the ſheriff. As, for a capital felony, it is written oppoſite to the priſoner's name, "hanged by the neck." Formerly in the days of Latin and abbreviation, "ſuſ. per coll." for "ſuſpendatur per collum." Staundeford, P. C. 182. See 4 Comm. 403. and tit. Trial, Felon, Pardon.

CALENDS, calendæ.] Among the Romans was the firſt day of every month, being ſpoken of it by itſelf, or the very day of the new moon, which uſually happen together: and if pridie, the day before, be added to it, then it is the laſt day of the foregoing month; as pridie calend. Septemb. is the laſt day of Auguſt. If any number be placed with it, it ſignifies that day in the former month, which comes ſo much before the month named; as the tenth calends of October is the 20th day of September; for if one reckons backwards, beginning at October, the 20th day of September makes the 10th day before October. In March, May, July, and October, the calends begin at the ſixteenth day, but in other months at the fourteenth; which calends muſt ever bear the name of the month following, and be numbered backwards from the firſt day of the ſaid following months. Hopton's Concord, p. 69. This feſtival is no day in court, for the judges ſit not; and it is the grand day in that term of all the inns of court, whereon the judges anciently obſerved many ceremonies, and the ſocieties ſeemed to vie with each other, in ſumptuous entertainments, accompanied with muſick, and almoſt all kinds of diverſions.

CANON, A law or ordinance of the church; from the Greek word canon, a rule.

THE CANON LAW conſiſts partly of certain rules taken out of the ſcripture; partly of the writings of the ancient fathers of the church; partly of the ordinances of general and provincial councils; and partly of the decrees of the Popes in former ages. And it is contained in two principal parts, the decrees and the decretals: the decrees are eccleſiaſtical conſtitutions made by the Pope and Cardinals, and were firſt gathered by Ivo biſhop of Carnat, who lived about the year 1114, but afterwards perfected by Gratian, a Benedictine monk, in the year 1149, and allowed by Pope Eugenius, to be read in ſchools, and alledged for law. They are the moſt ancient, as having their beginning from the time of Conſtantine the Great, the firſt Chriſtian Emperor of Rome.

The decretals are canonical epiſtles written by the Pope, or by the pope and cardinals, at the ſuit of one or more perſons for the ordering and determining of ſome matter of controverſy, and have the authority of a law; and of theſe there are three volumes, the firſt whereof was compiled by Raymundus Barcinius, chaplain to Gregory the Ninth, and at his command about the year 1231. The ſecond volume is the work of Boniface the Eighth, collected in the year 1298. And the third volume, called the Clementines, was made by Pope Clement the Fifth, and publiſhed by him in the council of Vienna, about the year 1308. And to theſe may be added ſome novel conſtitutions of John the 22d, and ſome other biſhops of Rome.

As the decrees ſet out the origin of the canon law, and the rights, dignities and decrees of eccleſiaſtical perſons with their manner of election, ordination, &c. ſo the decretals contain the law to be uſed in the eccleſiaſtical courts; and the firſt title in every of them, is the title of the Bleſſed Trinity, and of the catholick faith, which is followed with conſtitutions and cuſtoms, judgments and determinations in ſuch matters and cauſes as are liable to eccleſiaſtical cognizance, the lives and converſation of the clergy, of matrimony and divorces, inquiſition of criminal matters, purgation, penance, excommunication, &c. But ſome of the titles of the canon law are now out of uſe, and belong to the common law: and others are introduced, ſuch as trials of wills, baſtardy, defamation, &c.

Trial of tithes were anciently in all caſes had by the eccleſiaſtical law; though at this time this law only takes place in ſome particular caſes.

Thus much for the canon law in general; and as to the canon laws of this kingdom, by the Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19,

c. 19, revived and confirmed by Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 1, it is declared that all canons not repugnant to the king's prerogative, nor to the laws, ſtatutes and cuſtoms of the realm, ſhall be uſed and executed.

As for the canons enacted by the clergy under Jac. 1. A. D. 1603, and never confirmed in parliament, it has been ſolemnly adjudged upon the principles of law and the conſtitution, that where they are not merely declaratory of the ancient canon law, but are introductory of new regulations, they do not bind the laity; whatever regard the clergy may think proper to pay them. Stra. 1057.

Lord Hardwicke cites the opinion of Lord Holt, and declares it is not denied by any one, that it is very plain all the clergy are bound by the canons, confirmed by the king only; but they muſt be confirmed by the parliament to bind the laity. 2 Atk. 605.—Hence if the Archbiſhop of Canterbury grants a diſpenſation to hold two livings diſtinct from each other, more than thirty miles, no advantage can be taken of it by lapſe, or otherwiſe in the temporal courts; for the reſtriction to thirty miles was introduced by a canon made ſince the Stat. 25 H. 8. See 2 Black. Rep. 968.

There are four ſpecies of courts in which the canon laws, (and the civil laws alſo, See title Civil Laws,) are permitted under different reſtrictions to be uſed. 1. The courts of the archbiſhops and biſhops, and their derivative officers; uſually called in our law Courts Chriſtian, or the Eccleſiaſtical Courts.—2. The military courts, or Courts of Chivalry.—3. The Courts of Admiralty.—4. The Courts of the two Univerſities. In all, the reception of thoſe laws in general, and the different degrees of that reception, are grounded entirely upon cuſtom; corroborated as to the Univerſities by act of parliament, ratifying thoſe charters which confirm their cuſtomary laws. 1 Comm. 83.

For the peculiar juriſdiction, &c. of theſe courts. See this Dict. title Courts.—The following particulars relate to them all, and to this ſubject, in general.

1. The courts of common law, have the ſuperintendancy over theſe courts; to keep them within their juriſdictions, to determine wherein they exceed them, to reſtrain and prohibit ſuch exceſs; and in caſe of contumacy, to puniſh the officer who executes, and in ſome caſes the judge who enforces, the ſentence ſo declared to be illegal. See titles Juriſdiction; Prohibition.

2. The common law has reſerved to itſelf the expoſition of all ſuch ſtatutes, as concern either the extent of theſe courts, or the matters depending before them. And therefore if theſe courts either refuſe to allow thoſe acts of parliament, or will expound them in any other ſenſe than what the law puts on them, the courts at Weſtminſter will grant prohibitions to reſtrain and controul them. See title Statutes.

3. An appeal lies from all theſe courts to the king in the laſt reſort; which proves that the juriſdiction exerciſed in them, is derived from the crown of England, and not from any foreign potentate, or intrinſic authority of their own. See Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 21.

From theſe three ſtrong marks and enſigns of ſuperiority, it appears beyond a doubt that the canon (and civil) laws, though admitted in ſome caſes by cuſtom in ſome courts, are only ſubordinate, & leges ſub graviore lege; and that thus admitted, reſtrained, altered, new-modelled and amended, they are by no means a diſtinct independent ſpecies of laws, but inferior branches of the cuſtomary or unwritten laws of England, properly called the King's eccleſiaſtical, military, maritime, or academical laws. 1 Comm. 84.

CANON RELIGIOSORUM, A book wherein the Religious of convents had a fair tranſcript of the rules of their order, which were frequently read among them as their local ſtatutes; and this book was therefore called Regula and Canon. The public books of the religious were the four following. 1. Miſſale, which contained all their offices of devotion. 2. Martyrologium, a regiſter of their peculiar ſaints and martyrs, with the place and time of paſſion. 3. Canon or Regula, the inſtitution and rules of their order. 4. Necrologium or Obituarium, in which they entered the deaths of their founders and benefactors, to obſerve the days of commemoration of them. Kennet's Gloſſ.

CANTEL, cantellum.] Seems to ſignify the ſame with what we now call lump, as to buy by meaſure, or by the lump: but according to Blount it is that which is added above meaſure. Stat. de Piſtor. cap. 9. Alſo a piece of any thing, as a cantel of bread, and the like.

CANTRED, cantredus, a Britiſh word from cant, or cantre, Brit. centum, and tret, a town or village.] In Wales an hundred villages: for the Welſh divide their counties into cantreds, as the Engliſh do into hundreds. This word is uſed Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 3.—See Mon. Angl. part. 1. fol. 319, where it is written Kantrep.

CAPACITY, capacitas.] An ability, or fitneſs to receive: and in law it is where a man, or body politick, is able to give or take lands, or other things, or to ſue actions. Our law allows the king two capacities, a natural and a politick: in the firſt, he may purchaſe lands to him and his heirs; in the latter, to him and his ſucceſſors. An alien born hath ſufficient capacity to ſue in any perſonal action, and is capable of perſonal eſtate; but he is not capable of lands of inheritance. See title Alien. Perſons attainted of treaſon or felony, ideots, lunaticks, infants, feme coverts without their huſbands, &c. are not capable to make any deed of gift, grant or conveyance, unleſs it be in ſome ſpecial caſes. Co. Lit. 171, 172.—See titles Age, Infant, and other ſuitable titles.

CAPE, Lat.] A writ judicial, touching plea of lands or tenements; ſo termed, as moſt writs are, of that word in it, which carries the chief intention or end thereof: and this writ is divided into cape magnum and cape parvum, both of which concern things immoveable. Termes de la ley.

CAPE MAGNUM, or the grand cape, Is a writ that lies before appearance to ſummon the tenant to anſwer the default, and alſo over to the demandant: and in the Old Nat. Brev. it is defined to be, where a man hath brought a præcipe quod reddat of a thing touching plea of land, and the tenant makes default at the day to him given in the original writ, then this writ ſhall go for the king to take the land into his hands; and if the tenant come not at the day given him thereby, he loſeth his land, &c. See Reg. Jud. fol. 1: Bract. lib. 3. tract. 3. c. 1.

CAPE PARVUM, or petit cape, Is where the tenant is ſummoned in plea of land, and comes on the ſummons, and his appearance is recorded; if at the day given him he prays the view, and having it granted makes default; then this writ ſhall iſſue for the king, &c. Old Nat. Brev. 162. The difference between the grand cape and petit cape is, that the grand cape is awarded upon the tenant's not appearing or demanding the view in ſuch real actions, where the original writ does not mention the particulars demanded; and the petit cape is after appearance or view granted: and whereas the grand cape ſummons the tenant to anſwer for the default, and likewiſe over to the demandant: petit cape ſummons the tenant to anſwer the default only: and therefore it is called petit cape; though ſome ſay it hath its name, not becauſe it is of ſmall force, but by reaſon it conſiſts of few words. Reg. Jud. fol. 2: Fleta, lib. 2. c. 44: Termes de la ley.

CAPE AD VALENTIAM, This is a ſpecies of cape magnum, and is where I am impleaded of lands, and vouch to warrant another, againſt whom the ſummons ad warrantizandum hath been awarded, and he comes not at the day given; then if the demandant recover againſt me, I ſhall have this writ againſt the vouchee, and recover ſo much in value of the lands of the vouchee, if he hath ſo much; if not, I ſhall have execution of ſuch lands and tenements as ſhall after deſcend to him in fee; or if he purchaſes afterwards, I ſhall have againſt him a reſummons, &c. And this writ lies before appearance. Old Nat. Brev. 161.—See title Fine and Recovery.

CAPELLA, Before the word chapel was reſtrained to an oratory or depending place of divine worſhip: it was uſed alſo for any ſort of cheſt, cabinet, or other repoſitory of precious things, eſpecially of religious reliques. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. p. 580.

CAPELLUS, A cap, bonnet, or other covering for the head. Tenures, p. 32. Capellus ferreus, an helmet or iron head-piece. Hoveden, p. 61. Capellus militis is likewiſe an helmet or military head-piece. Conſuetud. Domûs de Farendon, MS. fol. 21.

CAPIAS, A writ or proceſs of two ſorts; one whereof in the court of C. P. is called capias ad reſpondendum, before judgment, where an original is ſued out, &c. to take the defendant and make him anſwer the plaintiff: and the other a writ of execution, after judgment, being of divers kinds, as capias ad ſatisfaciendum, capias utlagatum, &c.

The CAPIAS AD RESPONDENDUM in C. B. is drawn from the præcipe, which ſerves both for the original and capias, and the return of the original is the teſte of the capias. If a capias be ſpecial, in caſe, covenant, &c. the cauſe of action muſt be recited at large, and the ſubſtance of the intended declaration ſet forth, as alſo in the original.

This Capias is a writ commanding the ſheriff to take the body of the defendant, if he may be found in his bailiwick or county, and him ſafely to keep, ſo that he may have him in court, on the day of the return to anſwer to the plaintiff of a plea of debt, treſpaſs, &c. as the caſe may be.

In caſes of injury accompanied with force, the law, to puniſh the breach of the peace, and prevent its diſturbance, provided a proceſs againſt the defendant's perſon, in caſe he neglected to appear on the proceſs of attachment againſt his goods, or had no ſubſtance whereby to be attached; (See titles Attachiamenta bonorum and Proceſs;) ſubjecting his body to impriſonment by this writ of Capias ad reſpondendum. 3 Rep. 12. But the immunity of the defendant's perſon, in caſe of peaceable, though fraudulent injuries, producing a great contempt of the law in indigent wrong-doers, a capias was alſo allowed to arreſt the perſon in actions of account, though no breach of the peace be ſuggeſted by Stats. Marlb. 52 H. 3. c. 23; Weſtm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 11.—In actions of debt and detinue by Stat. 25 E. 3. c. 17.—And in all actions on the caſe by Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 9.

Before this laſt ſtatute, a practice had been introduced of commencing the ſuit, by bringing an original writ of treſpaſs quare clauſum fregit, for breaking the plaintiff's cloſe vi et armis; which by the old common law, ſubjected the defendant's perſon to be arreſted by writ of capias: and then afterwards by connivance of the court, the plaintiff might proceed to proſecute for any other leſs forcible injury. This practice (through cuſtom rather than neceſſity, and for ſaving ſome trouble and expence, in ſuing out a ſpecial original adapted to the particular injury,) ſtill continues in almoſt all caſes, except in actions of debt; though now by virtue of the above and other ſtatutes, a capias might be had upon almoſt every ſpecies of complaint. See titles Common Pleas, Actions, Proceſs.

It is now alſo uſual in practice to ſue out the capias in the firſt inſtance, on a ſuppoſed return of the ſheriff, (that the defendant being ſummoned or attached, made default, or that he had no ſubſtance whereby to be attached); and afterwards a fictitious original is drawn up, if the party is called upon ſo to do, with a proper return thereupon, in order to give the proceedings a colour of regularity. When this capias is delivered to the ſheriff, he, by his under-ſheriff, grants a warrant to his bailiffs to execute it.

If the ſheriff of the county in which the injury is ſuppoſed to be committed, and the action is laid, cannot find the defendant in his juriſdiction, he returns non eſt inventus; whereupon another writ iſſues, called a teſtatum capias, directed to the ſheriff of the county where the defendant is ſuppoſed to reſide, reciting the former writ, and that it is teſtified, teſtatum eſt, that the defendant lurks or wanders in his bailiwick, wherefore he is commanded to take him, as in the former capias. Here alſo when the action is brought in one county, and the defendant lives in another, it is uſual for ſaving trouble, time and expence, to make out a teſtatum capias at the firſt; ſuppoſing not only an original, but alſo a former capias to have been granted. And this fiction being beneficial to all parties, is readily acquieſced in, and is now become the ſettled practice.

But where the defendant abſconds, and the plaintiff would proceed to an outlawry againſt him, an original writ muſt then be ſued out regularly, and after that a capias. And if the ſheriff cannot find the defendant upon the firſt writ of capias, and returns a non eſt inventus, there iſſues out an aliàs writ, and after that a pluries, to the ſame effect as the former; only after theſe words, We command you, this clauſe is inſerted, as we have formerly, [or often] commanded you, ſicut aliàs, or pluries præcipimus. See further title Outlawry.—On the ſubject alſo of proceſs in C. P. See this Dict. title Common Pleas.—and 3 Comm. 282, &c.

A CAPIAS is alſo in uſe in criminal caſes.—The proper proceſs on an indictment for any petty miſdemeanor, or on a penal ſtatute, is a writ of venire facias, which is in the nature of a ſummons to cauſe the party to appear. And

And if by the return to ſuch venire, it appears that the party hath lands in the county whereby he may be diſtrained, then a diſtreſs infinite ſhall be iſſued from time to time till he appears. But if the ſheriff returns that he hath no lands in his bailiwick, then upon his non-appearance, a writ of capias ſhall iſſue, which commands the ſheriff to take his body, and have him at the next aſſiſes; and if he cannot be taken upon the firſt capias, an alias and a pluries ſhall iſſue. But on indictments for treaſon or felony, a capias is the firſt proceſs; and for treaſon or homicide, only one ſhall be allowed to iſſue, or two in the caſe of other felonies, by Stat. 25 E. 3. c. 14; though the uſage is to iſſue only one in any felony; the proviſions of this ſtatute being in moſt caſes found impracticable. 2 H. P. C. 195.—And ſo in the caſe of miſdemeanors, it is now the uſual practice for any judge of the court of K. B. upon certificate of an indictment found, to award a writ of capias immediately, in order to bring in the defendant. But in this, as in civil caſes, if he abſconds, and it is thought proper to purſue him to an outlawry, a greater exactneſs is neceſſary. 4 Comm. 318. See title Outlawry.

Capias ad Satisfaciendum, (Shortly termed a Ca. Sa.) A judicial writ which iſſues out on the record of a judgment, where there is a recovery in the courts at Weſtminſter, of debt, damages, &c. And by this writ the ſheriff is commanded to take the body of the defendant in execution, and him ſafely to keep, ſo that he have his body in court at the return of the writ, to ſatisfy the plaintiff his debt and damages. Vide 1 Lill. Abr. 249. And if he does not then make ſatisfaction he muſt remain in cuſtody till he does. When the body is taken upon a ca. ſa. and the writ is returned and filed, it is an abſolute and perfect execution of the higheſt nature againſt the defendant, and no other execution can be afterwards had againſt his lands or goods: except where a perſon dies in execution, then his lands and goods are liable to ſatisfy the judgment, by Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 24. See Rol. Abr. 904.

Properly ſpeaking this writ cannot be ſued out againſt any but ſuch as were liable to be taken upon the capias mentioned in the preceding article. 3 Rep. 12: Mo. 767. The intent of it is to impriſon the body of the debtor, till ſatisfaction be made for the debt, coſts and damages: this writ therefore doth not lie againſt any privileged perſons, peers, or members of parliament; nor againſt executors or adminiſtrators; (except on a devaſtavit returned by the ſheriff. 1 Lill. 250.) nor againſt ſuch other perſons as could not be originally held to bail.

This writ may be ſued out, (as may all other executory proceſs) for coſts, againſt a plaintiff as well as a defendant, where judgment is had againſt him.

In caſe two perſons are bound jointly and ſeverally, and proſecuted in two courts, whereupon the plaintiff hath judgment, and execution by ca. ſa. againſt one of them; if he after have an elegit againſt the other, and his lands and goods are delivered upon it, then he that is in priſon ſhall have audita querela. Hob. 2, 57. Where one taken on a ca. ſa. eſcapes from the ſheriff, and no return is made of the writ, nor any record of the award of the capias; the plaintiff may bring a ſcire fac. againſt him, and on that what execution he will. Rol. 904. And if the defendant reſcue himſelf, the plaintiff ſhall haye a new capias, the firſt writ not being returned. Ibid. 901.

If a defendant cannot be taken upon a ca. ſa. in the county where the action is laid, there may iſſue a teſtatum ca. ſa. into another county; and ſo of the other writs. See ante title Capias.

For further matter, ſee titles Execution, Fieri facias.

Capias Utlagatum, Is a writ that lies againſt a perſon who is outlawed in any action, by which the ſheriff is commanded to apprehend the body of the party outlawed, for not appearing upon the exigent, and keep him in ſafe cuſtody till the day of return, and then preſent him to the Court, there to be dealt with for his contempt; who, in the Common Pleas, was in former times to be committed to the Fleet, there to remain till he had ſued out the king's pardon, and appeared to the action. And by a ſpecial capias utlagatum (againſt the body, lands, and goods in the ſame writ,) the ſheriff is commanded, to ſeize all the defendant's lands, goods and chattels, for the contempt to the king; and the plaintiff, (after an inquiſition taken thereupon, and returned into the Exchequer) may have the lands extended, and a grant of the goods, &c. whereby to compel the defendant to appear; which when he doth, if he reverſe the outlawry, the ſame ſhall be reſtored to him. Old. Nat. Br. 154. When a perſon is taken upon a capias utlagatum, the ſheriff is to take an attorney's engagement to appear for him, where ſpecial bail is not required; and his bond with ſureties to appear, where it is required. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. See Outlawry.

Capias pro Fine. Anciently, when judgment was given in favour of the plaintiff, in any action in the king's courts, it was conſidered that the plaintiff be arreſted for his wilful delay of juſtice, or capiatur, be taken, till he paid a fine to the king, conſidering it as a public miſdemeanor coupled with the private injury—But now in caſes of treſpaſs, ejectment, aſſault and falſe impriſonment it is provided by Stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 12, that no writ of capias ſhall iſſue for the fine, nor any fine be paid: but the plaintiff ſhall pay 6*s.* 8*d.* to the proper officer, and be allowed it againſt the defendant among his other coſts. See title Judgment. See alſo title Fines for Offences.

Capias in Withernam, A writ lying (where a diſtreſs taken is driven out of the county, ſo that the ſheriff cannot make deliverance in replevin,) commanding the ſheriff to take as many beaſts of the diſtrainer, &c. Reg. Orig. 82, 83. See titles Diſtreſs; Withernam.

CAPIATUR. See title Capias pro fine.

CAPITA, diſtribution per.] i. e. To every man an equal ſhare of perſonal eſtate, when all the claimants claim in their own rights, as in equal degree of kindred, and not jure repreſentationis. See title Executor, V. 8.

CAPITA, ſucceſſion per.] Where the claimants are next in degree to the anceſtor, in their own right, and not by right of repreſentation. See title Deſcent.

CAPITALE, A thing which is ſtolen, or the value of it. Leg. H. 1. cap. 59.

CAPITALE VIVENS, Live cattle. Leg. Athelſtan.

CAPITE, from caput, i. e. Rex, unde tenere in capite, eſt tenere de rege, omnium terrarum capite.] Tenure in Capite, was an ancient tenure, whereby a man held lands of the king immediately as of the crown, whether by knight's ſervice, or in ſocage. This tenure was likewiſe called, tenure holding of the perſon of the king: and a perſon might hold of the king, and not in capite; that is, not immediately of the crown, but by means means of ſome honour, caſtle, or manor belonging to it. According to Kitchen, one might hold land of the king by knight's ſervice, and not in capite; becauſe it might be held of ſome honour in the king's hands, deſcended to him from his anceſtors, and not immediately of the king, as of his crown. Kitch. 129: Dyer 44: F. N. B. 5.

The very ancient tenure in capite, was of two ſorts; the one principal and general, and the other ſpecial or ſubaltern; the principal and general was of the king as caput regni, et caput generaliſſimum omnium feodorum, the fountain whence all feuds and tenures have their main original: the ſpecial was of a particular ſubject, as caput feudi, ſeu terræ illius, ſo called from his being the firſt that granted the land in ſuch manner of tenure; from whence he was ſtiled capitalis dominus, &c. But tenure in capite is now aboliſhed; and by Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, All tenures are turned into free and common ſocage: ſo that tenures hereafter to be created by the king are to be in common ſocage only; and not by capite, knight's ſervice, &c. Blount. See title Tenures.

CAPITILITIUM, Poll-money. Dict.

CAPITITIUM, A covering for the head. It is mentioned in the Stat. 1 Hen. 4, and other old ſtatutes, which preſcribe what dreſſes ſhall be worn by all degrees of perſons.

CAPITULI AGRI, The head-lands, lands that lie at the head or upper end of the lands or furrows. Kennet's Paroch. Antiq. p. 137.

CAPITULA RURALIA, Aſſemblies or chapters held by rural deans and parochial clergy within the precinct of every diſtinct deanery; which at firſt were every three weeks, afterwards once a month, and more ſolemnly once a quarter. Cowel.

CAPTAIN, capitaneus.] One that leadeth or hath the command of a company of ſoldiers: and is either general, as he that hath the governance of the whole army: or ſpecial, as he that leads but one band.—There is alſo another ſort of captains. Qui urbium præfecti ſunt, &c. Blount.

CAPTION, captio.] That part of a legal inſtrument, as a commiſſion, indictment, &c. which ſhews where, when, and by what authority it is taken, found or executed. Thus when a commiſſion is executed, the commiſſioners ſubſcribe their names to a certificate, declaring when and where the commiſſion was executed.—Theſe kind of captions relate chiefly to buſineſs of three kinds, i. e. to commiſſions to take fines of lands, to take anſwers in chancery, and depoſitions of witneſſes: on the taking of a fine it is thus:—Taken and acknowledged the —— day of, &c. at, &c.—The word caption is alſo uſed (rather vulgarly) for an arreſt.—See title Indictment.

CAPTIVES. An act was made for relief of captives, taken by Turkiſh, Mooriſh, and other pirates, and to prevent taking of others in time to come. Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 24. See title Negro; Slavery.

CAPTURE, captura.] The taking of a prey, an arreſt, or ſeizure: and it particularly relates to prizes taken by privateers, in time of war. See title Admiral, Inſurance, Navy, Privateer.

CAPUTAGIUM. Some think this word ſignifies head or poll money, or the payment of it: but it ſeems rather what we otherwiſe call chevagium.

CAPUT ANNI, New year's day, upon which of old was obſerved the feſtum ſtultorum.

CAPUT BARONIÆ, Is the caſtle or chief ſeat of a nobleman; which deſcends to the eldeſt daughter, if there be no ſon, and muſt not be divided amongſt the daughters, like unto lands, &c. See title Coparceners, Dower.

CAPUT JEJUNII, In our records is uſed for Aſh Wedneſday, being the head, or firſt day of the beginning of the Lent-Faſt. Paroch. Antiq. p. 132.

CAPUT LOCI, The head or upper end of any place; ad caput villæ, at the end of the town.

CAPUT LUPINUM. Anciently an outlawed felon was ſaid to have caput lupinum, and might be knocked on the head like a wolf.—Now the wilful killing of ſuch a one would be murder. 1 Hal. P. C. 497: Vide Bracton. fo. 125.—See title Outlawry.

CAR AND CHAR, The names of places beginning with car and char ſignify a city, from the Brit. caer, Civitas; as Carliſle, &c.

CARAVANNA, A caravan, or joint company of travellers in the Eaſtern countries, for mutual conduct and defence. Gaufrid. Vineſau Richardi Regis, Iter Hieroſol. lib. 5. cap. 52.

CARCAN, Is ſometimes expounded for a pillory: as is carcannum for a priſon. LL. Canuti Regis.

CARCATUS, Loading; a ſhip freighted. Pat. 10 R. 2.

CARDS AND DICE. A duty of two ſhillings (four ſix-pences) is impoſed on all playing cards; and a duty of fifteen ſhillings (two 5 s. and two 2 s. 6 d.) by Stat. 9 Anne c. 23: 29 Geo. 2. c. 13: 16 Geo. 3. c. 34: and 29 Geo. 3. c. 30.—Theſe duties are under the control of the Stamp Commiſſioners.

By Stat. 10 Ann. c. 19, No playing cards or dice ſhall be imported.—Selling ſecond-hand cards incurs a penalty of 20 l. Stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 13. § 10; and of 5 l. per pack by Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 34.—Several other regulations are made by ſtatute to prevent frauds in manufacturing the above articles.—If cards or dice unſtamped are uſed in any publick gaming houſe, a penalty of 5 l. attaches on the ſeller. 10 Ann. c. 19. § 162.—See alſo Stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 46. § 9—17.

CARECTA AND CARECTATA. A cart and cart-load. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. f. 340.

CARETARIUS, OR CARECTARIUS, A carter. Blount. See Carreta.

CARISTIA, Dearth, ſcarcity, dearneſs. Pat. 8 Ed. 1.

CARITAS, Ad caritatem, poculum caritatis.] A grace-cup; or an extraordinary allowance of the beſt wine, or other liquor, wherein the religious at feſtivals drank in commemoration of their founders and benefactors. Cartular. Abat. Glaſton. A. S. f. 29: See Cowell.—It is ſometimes written Karite.

CARK, A quantity of wool, whereof thirty make a ſarpler. Stat. 27 H. 6. c. 2.

CARLE See Karle.

CARNARIUM, A charnel houſe, or repoſitory for the bones of the dead.

CARNO. This word hath been uſed for an immunity or privilege, as appears in Cromp. Juriſd. fol. 191.

CARPEMEALS, Cloth made in the Northern parts of England, of a coarſe kind; mentioned in 7 Jac. 1. cap. 16.

CARR,

CARR, Is a kind of cart with wheels. Vide Carruca.

CARRAT, A weight of four grains in diamonds, &c. And this word it is ſaid was formerly uſed for any weight or burden.

CARRETA, A carriage, cart or wain load; as Carreta fœni is uſed in an old charter for a load of hay. Kennet's Gloſſ.

CARRELS, Cloſets, or apartments for privacy and retirement.—Three pews or carrels, where every one of the old monks, after they had dined, did reſort, and there ſtudy. Davies Mon. of Durham, p. 31.

CARRICK, or CARRACK, carrucha.] A ſhip of great burden, ſo called of the Italian word carico or carco, which ſignifies a burden or charge: it is mentioned in the ſtatute 2 R. 2. c. 4. They were not only uſed in trade, but alſo in war. See Walſingh. in Hen. 5. fol. 394.

CARRIER. A perſon that carries goods for others for his hire.

I. Who are to be conſidered as Carriers; and generally how chargeable.

II. For what Defaults anſwerable; and the Exceptions in their favour.

III. What Circumſtances muſt concur to charge them.

I. All perſons carrying goods for hire, as maſters and owners of ſhips, lightermen, ſtage-coachmen, (but not hackney-coachmen in London,) and the like, come under the denomination of common carriers; and are chargeable on the general cuſtom of the realm for their faults or miſcarriages. See 1 Com. Rep. 25: Bull. N. P. 70.—And as to the duty and engagement of a carrier. See title Bailment 5. and V.

In an action on the caſe upon the cuſtom of the realm againſt the defendant, maſter of a ſtage-coach, the plaintiff ſet forth, that he took a place in the coach for ſuch a town, and that in the journey the defendant, by negligence, loſt the plaintiff's trunk; upon Not-guilty pleaded, the evidence was, that the plaintiff gave the trunk to the man who drove the coach, who promiſed to take care of it, but loſt it; and the queſtion was, whether the maſter was chargeable; and adjudged that he was not, unleſs the maſter takes a price for the carriage of the goods as well as for the carriage of the perſon, and then he is within the cuſtom as a carrier; that a maſter is not chargeable for the acts of his ſervant, but when they are done in execution of the authority given by the maſter, then the act of the ſervant is the act of the maſter, 1 Salk. 282.—But by the cuſtom and uſage of ſtages, every paſſenger pays for the carriage of goods above a certain weight; and there the coachman ſhall be charged for the loſs of goods beyond ſuch weight. 1 Com. Rep. 25.

If a common carrier loſes goods he is intruſted to carry, a ſpecial action on the caſe lies againſt him, on the cuſtom of the realm; and ſo of a common carrier by boat. 1 Rol. abr. 6. An action will lie againſt a porter, carrier or bargeman, upon his bare receipt of the goods, if they are loſt by negligence. 1 Sid. 36. Alſo a lighterman ſpoiling goods he is to carry, by letting water come to them, action on the caſe lies againſt him on the common cuſtom. Palm. 526.

If one be not a common carrier, and takes hire, he may be charged on a ſpecial aſſumpſit; for where hire is taken, a promiſe is implied. Cro. Jac. 262. So if a man who is not a common carrier, and who is not to receive a premium, undertakes to carry goods ſafely, he is anſwerable for any damages they may ſuſtain through his neglect or default.—This was the expreſs point determined in Coggs v. Bernard, 1 Com. Rep. 133, &c. See title Bailment.

Where a carrier entruſted with goods, opens the pack, and takes away and diſpoſes of part of the goods, this, ſhewing an intent of ſtealing them, will make him guilty of felony. H. P. C. 61. And it is the ſame if the carrier receives goods to carry them to a certain place, and carrieth them to ſome other place, and not to the place agreed. 3 Inſt. 367. That is, if he do it, with intent to defraud the owner of them. If a carrier, after he hath brought goods to the place appointed, take them away privately, he is guilty of felony; for the poſſeſſion which he received from the owner being determined, his ſecond taking is in all reſpects the ſame as if he were a mere ſtranger. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 5. See Larceny, &c.

If a common carrier, who is offered his hire, and who has convenience, refuſes to carry goods, he is liable to an action in the ſame manner as an inn-keeper who refuſes to entertain a gueſt, or a ſmith who refuſes to ſhoe a horſe. 2 Show. Rep. 327.—But a carrier may refuſe to admit goods into his warehouſe at an unſeaſonable time, or before he is ready to take his journey. Ld. Raym. 652.

A common carrier may have action of trover or treſpaſs for goods taken out of his poſſeſſion by a ſtranger; he having a ſpecial property in the goods, and being liable to make ſatisfaction for them to the owner: and where goods are ſtolen from a carrier, he may bring an indictment againſt the felon as for his own goods, though he has only the poſſeſſory, and not the abſolute property; and the owner may likewiſe prefer an indictment againſt the felon. Kel. 39.

By Stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 1, Carriers are not to travel on the Lord's Day.

By the Stat. 3 W. & M. c. 12, The juſtices are annually to aſſeſs the price of land-carriage of goods to be brought into any place within their juriſdiction, by any common carrier, who is not to take more, under the penalty of 5 l. And by the Stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 3, A carrier is not to take more, for carrying goods from any place to London, than is ſettled by the juſtices for the carrying goods from London to ſuch a place, under the ſame penalty.

By Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 8. ſect. 9, Commiſſioners for regulating the navigation of the river Thames are to rate the price of water carriage.

By Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 22. ſect. 3, Juſtices of the city of London are to aſſeſs the rates of carrying goods between London and Weſtminſter.

Carriers and waggoners are to write or paint on their waggons or carts their names and places of abode. See titles Carts, Highways.

II. At common law a carrier is liable by the cuſtom of the realm to make good all loſſes of goods entruſted to him to carry, except ſuch loſſes as ariſe (1) from the act of God, or inevitable accident; or (2) from the act of the king's enemies—to which may be added (3) the default of the party ſending them. 1 Inſt. 89: Coggs v. Bernard. 2 Ld. Raym. 909: Eſp. N. P. 619.

1. Where

1. Where the defendant's hoy in coming through London bridge, was by a ſudden guſt of wind driven againſt the arch and ſunk, the owner of the hoy was held not to be liable, the damage having been occaſioned by the act of God, which no care of the defendant could provide againſt or foreſee.—But in this caſe it was held that if the hoy-man had gone out voluntarily in bad weather, ſo that there was a probability of his being loſt, he would have been liable.—Amies v. Stephens, 1 Stra. 128.

Upon this ground of its being the act of God, if a bargeman in a tempeſt, for the ſafety of the lives of his paſſengers, throws over-board any trunks or packages of value, he is not liable for the loſs. 1 Rol. Rep. 79, and ſee Bulſt. 280, and 1 Vent. 190: 1 Wilſ. 281.

The defendant having lodged his waggon in an inn, an accidental fire broke out, which conſumed it—he was adjudged liable; and it was held that negligence does not enter into the grounds of this action, for though the carrier uſes all proper care, yet in caſe of a loſs he is liable. Forward v. Pittard, 1 Term Rep. 27.

But where a common carrier, between two places, (Stourport and Mancheſter), employed to carry goods from one place to the other, to be forwarded from thence to a third place (Stockport); carried them to Stourport, there put them in his warehouſe, in which they were deſtroyed by an accidental fire, before he had an opportunity of forwarding them; in this caſe the carrier was held not to be liable, the keeping them in the warehouſe in this caſe being not for the convenience of the carrier, but of the owner.

2. If a carrier is robbed, he ſhall be liable for the loſs; not on the ground that he may charge the hundred under the ſtatute of Winchester, but becauſe if it were otherwiſe he might by colluſion with robbers, defraud the owner of the goods; and ſo in other caſes, where the grounds are the ſame. 1 Ro. Ab. 338: 1 Salk. 143.

But if a carrier be robbed of goods, either he or the owner may bring an action againſt the hundred, to make it good. 2 Saund. 380.

Where in the caſe of a maſter of a ſhip it appeared there was a ſufficient crew for the ſhip, but that at night eleven perſons boarded the ſhip as pirates, under pretence of preſſing, and plundered her of the goods, it was adjudged the maſter (the ſhip being infra corpus comitatûs) was liable, for ſuperior force ſhall not excuſe him. Morſe v. Slue, 1 Vent. 109: 2 Lev. 69: 1 Mod. 85: Barclay v. Higgins, E. 24 Geo. 3; cited 1 Term Rep. 33.

3. In an action againſt a carrier, for negligently carrying a pipe of wine, which by that means burſt, and the wine was ſpilt, it was good evidence for the defendant that the loſs happened while he was driving gently, and aroſe from the wine being in a ferment; ſo that the loſs was occaſioned by its being ſent in that ſtate. Bull. N. P. 74.—So if a carrier's waggon is full, and yet a perſon forces goods on him, and they are loſt, the carrier is not liable. Lovett v. Hobbs, 2 Show. 127.

4. But the following exemptions by ſtatute have been found neceſſary for the ſecurity of owners of ſhips.

By Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 15. No owners of any ſhip ſhall be liable to anſwer any loſs, by reaſon of embezzlement by the maſter or mariners, of any [gold, ſilver, &c. ſee now poſt Stat. 26 Geo. 3. or other] goods ſhiped on board, or for any act done by the maſter or mariners, without the owner's privity; beyond the value of the ſhip and freight.

By Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 86, No owners of any ſhip ſhall be ſubject to make good any loſs by reaſon of any robbery, embezzlement, ſecreting or making away with any gold, ſilver, jewels, diamonds, precious ſtones or other goods from on board; or for any act or forfeiture done or occaſioned without the knowledge of ſuch owner, beyond the value of the ſhip and freight, although the maſter or mariners ſhall not be concerned in, or privy to, ſuch robbery, &c.

Theſe acts do not impeach any remedy for fraudulent embezzlement, and if ſeveral proprietors or freighters ſuſtain ſuch loſs, and the value of the ſhip and freight is not ſufficient to make full compenſation, the loſs ſhall be averaged amongſt them.

No owner ſhall be ſubject to anſwer for loſs happening by fire on board ſhip. ſt. 26 Geo. 3. c. 86. § 2.

No maſter or owners ſhall be ſubject to anſwer for any loſs of gold, ſilver, diamonds &c. by reaſon of any robbery, &c. unleſs the ſhipper of ſuch goods inſert the true nature, quality and value of the gold, &c. in his bills of lading. ſt. 26 Geo. 3. c. 86.

Previous to this laſt ſtatute it was determined, that the owner of a ſhip was not liable beyond the value of the ſhip and freight, under Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 15, in the caſe of a robbery (of dollars) in which one of the mariners was concerned, by giving intelligence, and afterwards ſharing the ſpoil; Sutton v. Mitchell, 1 Term Rep. 18; where it was ſaid, the ſtatute was made to protect the owners againſt all treachery in the maſter or mariners.

III. In order to charge the carrier, theſe circumſtances are to be obſerved.

1. The goods muſt be loſt while in the poſſeſſion of the carrier himſelf, or in his ſole care.—Therefore where the plaintiffs, the Eaſt India Company, ſent their ſervants with the goods in queſtion on board the veſſel, who took charge of them, and they were loſt, defendant was held not to be liable. 1 Stra. 690.

2. The carrier is liable only ſo far as he is paid, for he is chargeable by reaſon of his reward.

One brought a box to a carrier, in which there was a large ſum of money, and the carrier demanded of the owner what was in it; he anſwered it was filled with ſilks, and ſuch like goods; upon which the carrier took it, and was robbed: and adjudged, that the carrier was liable to make it good: but a ſpecial acceptance, as provided there is no charge of money, would have excuſed the carrier. 1 Vent. 238: 4 Rep. 83.

A perſon delivered to a carrier's book-keeper two bags of money ſealed up, to be carried from London to Exeter, and told him that it was 200 l. and took his receipt for the ſame, with promiſe of delivery for 10 s. per cent. carriage and riſque: though it be proved that there was 400 l. in the bags, if the carrier be robbed he ſhall anſwer only for 200 l. becauſe there was a particular undertaking for the carriage of that ſum and no more, and his reward, which makes him anſwerable, extends no farther. Carth. 486.

3. Under a ſpecial or qualified acceptance the carrier is bound no further than he undertakes.

For where the owner of a ſtage-coach puts out an advertiſement "That he would not be anſwerable for money, plate or jewels above the value of 5 l. unleſs he had notice, and was paid accordingly;" all goods received ceived by that coach are under that special acceptance; and if money or plate be sent by it, without notice and being paid for, if lost, the coach-owner is not liable: Gibbon v. Paynton, 4 Burr. 2298: not even to the extent of the 5 l. or the sum paid for booking, Clay v. Willan, H. Black. Rep. 298.—In these cases a personal communication is not necessary to constitute a special acceptance—Advertisements, notices in the warehouse, and hand-bills, which it is probable the plaintiff saw, or which he might have seen, are sufficient.

From these cases and the opinion of Lord Mansfield, it seems safest, that in all instances of sending things of value by a carrier, the carrier should have notice and be paid accordingly. See ante II. 4.

4. A delivery to the carrier's servant is a delivery to himself, and shall charge him; but they must be goods, such as it is his custom to carry, not out of his line of business. Salk. 282.

5. Where goods are lost which have been put on board a ship, the action may be brought, either against the master or against the owners. 2 Salk. 440.—If one owner only is sued, he must plead it in abatement, that there are other partners; for he shall not be allowed to give it in evidence, and nonsuit the plaintiff. 5 Burr. 2611. See ante II. 4.

6. It is not necessary in order to charge the carrier that the goods are lost in transitu, while immediately under his care; for he is bound to deliver them to the consignee, or send notice to him according to the direction, and though they are carried safely to the inn, yet if left there till they are spoiled, and no notice given to the consignee, the carrier is liable. 3 Wilf. 429: 2 Bl. Rep. 916.

As to the proof necessary in an action against a carrier, See title Bailment 5.—That a carrier may retain goods for his hire, See 1 Ld. Raym. 166, 752.

CART-BOTE. See title Bote.

CARTS, By the Stat. 2 W. & M. Stat. 2. c. 8. sect. 19, 20; & 18 Geo. 2. c. 33, the wheels of every cart or dray for the carriage of any thing from and to any place where the streets are paved, within the bills of mortality, &c. shall contain six inches in the felly, not to be shod with iron, nor be drawn with above two horses, under the penalty of 40*s.*—By the Stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 33, they may be drawn with three horses and not more, and the wheels being of six inches breadth, when worn, may be shod with iron, if the iron be of the full breadth of six inches, made flat, and not set on with rose-headed nails: and no person shall drive any cart, &c. within the limits aforesaid, unless the name of the owner, and number of such cart, &c. be placed in some conspicuous place of the cart, &c. and his name be entered with the commissioners of hackney-coaches, under the penalty of 40*s.* and every person may seize and detain such cart till the penalty be paid.—By the Stats. 1 G. 1. st. 2. c. 57: 24 G. 2. c. 43, The driver of any such cart, &c. riding upon such cart, &c. not having a person on foot to guide the same, shall forfeit 10*s*: And by Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 43, the owner so guilty shall forfeit 20*s.* and any person may apprehend the offender.

On changing property new owners' names to be affixed, 30 Geo. 2. c. 22. sect. 2, and to be entered with the commissioners of hackney-coaches. And see Stat. 24 Geo. 3. st. 2. c. 27, to compel the entry of all carts driven, within five miles of Temple Bar.

CARVAGE, See post Carucate.

CARUCA, Fr. charrue.] A plough; from the old Gallic carr, which is the present Irish word for any sort of wheeled carriage: hence charl and car, a plowman or rustick. Vide Karle.

CARUCAGE, carucagium.] A tribute imposed on every plough, for the public [illegible] was a taxation [illegible] [illegible]es, so carucage was by carucates of land. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. f. 294.

CARUCATE, or CARVE OF LAND, carucata terræ.] A plough-land; which in a deed of Thomas de Arden, 19 Edw. 2, is declared to be one hundred acres, by which the subjects have sometimes been taxed; whereupon the tribute so levied was called carvagium, or carucagium. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 26. But Skene says, it is as great a portion of land as may be tilled in a year and a day by one plough; which also is called hilda, or hida terræ, a word used in the old British laws. And now by statute 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 29, a plough-land, which may contain houses, mills, pasture, meadow, wood, &c. is 50*l. per annum*.

Littleton, in his chapter of tenure in socage, saith, that soca idem est quod carucata, a soke or plough-land are all one. Stow says, King Hen. III. took carvage, that is, two marks of silver of every knight's fee, towards the marriage of his sister Isabella to the Emperor. Stow's Annals, page 271.

Rastal, in his exposition of words, says carvage is to be quit, if the king shall tax all the lands by carves; that is, a privilege whereby a man is exempted from carvage. The word carve is mentioned in the Stat. 28 Ed. 1, of wards and reliefs, and in Magna Charta, c. 5. And A. D. 1200, on peace made between England and France, King John, lent the King of France thirty thousand marks, for which carvage was collected in England, viz. iii*s.* for each plow. Spelm. v. Carua. Kennet's Gloss: 1 Inst. 69. and n.

CARUCATARIUS, He that held lands in carvage, or plough-tenure. Paroch. Antiq. p. 354.

CASE Action on; See title Action, and also Com. Dig. 1 V. tit. Action.

CASSATUM AND CASSATA, By the Saxons called hide; by Bede, familia, is a house with land sufficient to maintain one family; Rex Ang. Ethelred, de 310 Cassatis, unum trierem, &c. Hoveden anno 1008. And Hen. Huntingdon, mentioning the same thing, instead of cassata writes hilda.

CASHLITE, Saxon. A mulct or fine, Blount.

CASSIDILE, A little sack, purse, or pocket. Mat. Westm.

CASK, An uncertain quantity of goods; and of sugar contains from eight to eleven hundred weight. There are also casks for liquors, of divers contents; and by Stat. 25 Eliz. c. 11, none were to transport any wine casks, &c. except for victualling ships, under a certain penalty.

CASSOCK, or CASSULA, A garment belonging to the priest, quasi minor cassa. See Tassale.

CASTEL, or CASTLE, castellum.] A fortress in a town; a principal mansion of a nobleman. In the time of H. 2. there were in England 1115 castles; and every castle contained a manor: but during the civil wars in this kingdom these castles were demolished, so that generally there are only the ruins or remains of them at this day. 2 Inst. 31.

CASTELLAIN, caſtellanus.] The lord, owner, or captain of a caſtle, and ſometimes the conſtable of a fortified houſe. Bract. lib. 5. tract. 2. cap. 16: 3 Ed. 1. cap. 7. It hath likewiſe been taken for him that hath the cuſtody of one of the king's manſion-houſes, called by the Lombards curtes, in Engliſh courts; though they are not caſtles or places of defence. 2 Inſt. 31. And Manwood, in his Foreſt Laws, ſays, there is an officer of the foreſt called caſtellanus.

CASTELLARIUM, CASTELLARII, The precinct or juriſdiction of a caſtle.—Et unum toftum juxta caſtellarium. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. f. 402.

CASTELLORUM OPERATIO, Caſtle-work, or ſervice and labour done by inferior tenants, for the building and upholding of caſtles of defence; towards which ſome gave their perſonal aſſiſtance, and others paid their contribution. This was one of the three neceſſary charges, to which all lands among our Saxon anceſtors were expreſsly ſubject. And after the conqueſt an immunity from this burden was ſometimes granted. As king Hen. II. granted to the tenants within the honour of Wallingford.—Ut ſint quieti de operationibus caſtellorum. Paroch. Antiq. page 114. It was unlawful to build any caſtle without leave of the king, which was called caſtellatio. Du Freſne.

CASTIGATORY for ſcolds. A woman indicted for being a common ſcold, if convicted, ſhall be ſentenced to be placed on a certain engine of correction, called the tre bucket, tumbrel, tymborella, caſtigatory, or cucking-ſtool, which in the Saxon language ſignifies the ſcolding ſtool; though now it is frequently corrupted into ducking ſtool, becauſe the reſidue of the judgment is, that, when ſhe is ſo placed therein, ſhe ſhall be plunged in the water for her puniſhment. 3 Inſt. 219: 4 Comm. 169.—It is alſo termed goginſtole and cokeſtole and by ſome is thought corrupted from choaking ſtool. Though this puniſhment is now diſuſed, a former Editor of Jacob's Dict. (Mr. Morgan,) mentions that he remembers to have ſeen the remains of one, on the eſtate of a relation of his in Warwickſhire, conſiſting of a long beam, or rafter moving on a fulcrum, and extending to the centre of a large pond, on which end the ſtool uſed to be placed.

At Banbury in Oxfordſhire, this puniſhment has been uſed towards common whores, within the memory of perſons now (1793) living—and the pool for the purpoſe yet retains the name of the cucking pool, but the engine was not long ſince removed. See Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. c. 12.

In Domeſday-book it is called Cathedra Stercoralis, and was uſed by the Saxons for the ſame purpoſe, and by them called ſcealſing ſtole. It was anciently alſo a puniſhment inflicted on brewers and bakers tranſgreſſing the laws, who were ducked in ſtercore, in ſtinking water.

CASTLE-WARD, Caſtlegardum, vel wardum caſtri.] An impoſition laid upon ſuch perſons as dwelled within a certain compaſs of any caſtle, towards the maintenance of ſuch as watch and ward the caſtle. Magna Charta, cap. 15, 20: 32 Hen. 8. cap. 48. It is ſometimes uſed for the circuit itſelf, which is inhabited by thoſe that are ſubject to this ſervice. Caſtle guard rents were paid by perſons dwelling within the liberty of any caſtle, for the maintaining of watch and ward within the ſame. By Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 24. ſect. 2, theſe and other rents in the Dutchy of Lancaſter, payable to the king, were veſted in truſtees to be ſold.

CASTER, and CHESTER: The names of places ending in theſe words are derived from the Lat. caſtrum; for this termination at the end was given by the Romans to thoſe places where they built caſtles.

CASTRATION, See title Maihem.

CASUAL EJECTOR, In ejectment, a nominal defendant, and who continues ſuch until appearance by or for the tenant in poſſeſſion. See title Ejectment.

CASU CONSIMILI, is a writ of entry granted where tenant by the curteſy, or tenant for life, aliens in fee or in tail, or for another's life; and is brought by him in reverſion againſt the party to whom ſuch tenant ſo aliens to his prejudice, and in the tenant's life-time. It takes its name from this, that the clerks of the Chancery did, by their common aſſent, frame it to the likeneſs of the writ called in caſu proviſo, according to the authority given them by the Stat. Weſtm. 2. (13 E. 1.) cap. 24, which ſtatute, as often as there happens a new caſe in Chancery ſomething like a former, yet not ſpecially fitted by any writ, authoriſes them to frame a new form anſwerable to the new caſe, and as like the former as they may. 7 Rep. 4: See Fitz. Nat. Br. fo. 206: Termes de la ley. See 3 Comm. 51.

CASU PROVISO, A writ of entry, given by the ſtatute of Glouceſter cap. 7, where a tenant in dower aliens in fee, or for life, &c. and it lies for him in reverſion againſt the alienee. Fitz. N. B. 205. This writ, and the writ of caſu conſimili, ſuppoſes the tenant to have aliened in fee, though it be for life only: and a caſu proviſo may be without making any title in it, where a leaſe is made by the demandant himſelf to the tenant that doth alien; but if an anceſtor leaſe for life, and the tenant alien in fee, &c. the heir in reverſion muſt have this with the title included therein. F. N. B. 206, 207.

CASUS OMISSUS, Is where any particular thing is omitted out of, and not provided againſt by a ſtatute, &c.

CATALS, Catalla, Goods and chattels. See Chattels.

CATALLIS CAPTIS NOMINE DISTRICTIONIS, Anciently a writ that lay where a houſe was within a borough, for rent going out of the ſame; and which warranted the taking of doors, windows, &c. by way of diſtreſs for rent, Old Nat. Br. 66. This writ is now obſolete.

CATALLIS REDDENDIS, An ancient writ which lay where goods being delivered to any man to keep till a certain day, are not, upon demand, delivered at the day. It may be otherwiſe called a writ of detinue: and is anſwerable to actio depoſiti in the Civil law. See Reg. Orig. 139, and Old Nat. Br. 63.

CATAPULTA, A warlike engine to ſhoot darts: or rather a croſs bow.

CATASCOPUS. An archdeacon. Du Cange.

CATCHLAND. In Norfolk there are ſome grounds which it is not known to what pariſh they certainly belong, ſo that the miniſter who firſt ſeizes the tithes, does by that right of pre-occupation enjoy them for that year: and the land of this dubious nature is there called catchland, from this cuſtom of ſeizing the tithes. Cowel.

CATCHPOLE, See Cachepollus. Sheriff's officers are commonly ſo called.

CATHEDRAL, eccleſia cathedralis.] The church of the biſhop, and head of the dioceſe: wherein the ſervice of the church is performed with great ceremony. See title Church.

CATHEDRATICK,

CATHEDRATICK, cathedraticum.] A ſum of 2 s. paid to the biſhop by the inferior clergy, in argumentum ſubjectionis & ob honorem cathedræ. Hiſt. procurat. & Synodals, p. 82.

CATTLE. Several ancient laws were made to regulate the number of ſheep to be kept by any farmer. See title Sheep.

As to the importation of cattle.—By Stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 43, Beſtials may be freely imported from the Iſle of Man.—By the 6th article of the Union, 5 Ann. c. 8, No Scotch cattle carried into England ſhall be liable to any other duties than the cattle of England are.—By Stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 10, which was of temporary continuance, but made perpetual by Stat. 16 G. 3. c. 8, all ſorts of cattle may be imported from Ireland duty free.—And this notwithſtanding Stat. 18 C. 2. c. 2: 20 C. 2. c. 7: and 32 C. 2. c. 2.

As to buying and ſelling cattle, &c.—No perſon ſhall buy any ox, cow, calf, &c. and ſell the ſame again alive in the ſame market or fair, on pain of forfeiting double the value. Stats. 3 & 4 E. 6. c. 19: 3 C. 1. c. 49. 7, 8.—And the ſaid act 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 19, is not repealed by Stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 71, which repeals the general foreſtalling act of 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 14, and other ſubſequent acts enforcing the ſame, but hath no reference to any preceding act.—By Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 40, No ſaleſman, broker, or factor employed in buying cattle for others, ſhall buy and ſell for himſelf, in London, or within the bills of mortality, on penalty of double the value of the cattle bought or ſold.

By ſeveral ſtatutes made from time to time, the king has been empowered to make regulations to prevent the ſpreading of diſtempers among horned cattle: And by Stat. 9 Geo. 3. c. 39, he may prohibit the importation of hides, ſkins, horns, &c.

By Stat. 3 Car. 1. cap. 1, No drovers are to travel with cattle on Sundays, on penalty of 20 s.

By Stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 67, Several wholeſome regulations are made, to prevent the cruelties of drovers and others, in driving cattle in London, Weſtminſter, and the bills of mortality, by which a fine from 20 s. to 5 s. is impoſed on them for miſbehaviour; or one month's impriſonment; and power is given to the lord mayor and aldermen of London, to make regulations to further the purpoſes of the act, and which was accordingly done.

As to killing, maiming and ſtealing cattle.—By Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 6, Whoever ſhall cut out the tongue of any tame beaſt, the property of another perſon, the beaſt being alive, ſhall pay treble damages and forfeit 10 l.

By Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 7, Maliciouſly, unlawfully, and willingly to kill any horſes, ſheep, or other cattle in the night-time, is felony; but the felon may make his election to be tranſported for ſeven years.

And if any ſhall maliciouſly maim, wound or hurt ſuch cattle in the night-time, he ſhall forfeit treble damages, by action of treſpaſs, or on the caſe, to be tried before three juſtices of peace and a jury.

By Stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 6, and 15 Geo. 2. c. 34, felonioufly driving away or ſtealing any oxen, bulls, cows, ſheep, &c. or killing them with intent to ſteal the carcaſe, or any part of it, is made felony without benefit of clergy; and any perſon proſecuting an offender to conviction ſhall have a reward of 10 l.

By the Black Act (ſee that title) 9 Geo. 3. c. 22, Unlawfully and maliciouſly to maim or wound any cattle, is felony without clergy, and the hundred ſhall be anſwerable as far as 200 l. and perſons convicting offenders ſhall receive 50 l. reward.

To prevent the ſtealing of horſes and other cattle for the purpoſe of ſelling them, merely for their ſkin, the Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 71, provides that every perſon keeping a ſlaughter-houſe for cattle, not killed for butchers' meat, ſhall take out licences and be ſubject to an inſpector—and ſhall not ſlaughter, but at certain times, &c. &c.

CAUDA TERRÆ, A land's end, or the bottom of a ridge in arable land. Cartul. Abbat. Glaſton. fol. 117.

CAVEAT, Is a kind of proceſs in the ſpiritual court to ſtop the inſtitution of a clerk to a benefice, or probate of a will, &c. When a caveat is entered againſt an inſtitution, if the biſhop afterwards inſtitutes a clerk, it is void; the caveat being a ſuperſedeas: but a caveat has been adjudged void when entered in the life-time of the incumbent. A caveat entered againſt a will ſtands in force for three months; and this is for the caution of the ordinary, that he do no wrong: though it is ſaid the temporal courts do not regard theſe ſorts of caveats. 1 Rol. Rep. 191: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 416, 417.

CAVERS, Offenders relating to the mines in Derbyſhire, who are puniſhable in the berghmote, or miners' court.

CAULCEIS, See Stat. 6 H. 6. cap. 5, reſpecting ſewers. Ways pitched with flint, or other ſtones.—See Calcetum.

CAURCINES, Caurſini.] Italians that came into England about the year 1235, terming themſelves the Pope's merchants, but driving no other trade than letting out money; and having great banks in England, they differed little from Jews, ſave (as hiſtory ſays) that they were rather more mercileſs to their debtors; Cowel ſays, they have their name from Caorſium, Caorſi, a town in Lombardy, where they firſt practiſed their arts of uſury and extortion; from whence ſpreading themſelves, they carried their curſed trade through moſt parts of Europe, and were a common plague to every nation where they came. The then biſhop of London excommunicated them: and King Hen. 3, baniſhed them from this kingdom in the year 1240. But being the pope's ſolicitors and money-changers, they were permitted to return in the year 1250; though in a very ſhort time after, they were driven out of the kingdom again for their intolerable exactions. Mat. Pariſ. 403.

CAUSA MATRIMONII PRÆLOCUTI, Is a writ which lies where a woman gives land to a man in fee-ſimple, &c. to the intent he ſhould marry her, and he refuſeth to do it in any reaſonable time, being thereunto required. Reg. Orig. 66. If a woman makes a feoffment to a ſtranger of land in fee, to the intent to infeoff her, and one who ſhall be her huſband; if the marriage ſhall not take effect, ſhe ſhall have the writ of cauſa matrimonii prælocuti, againſt the ſtranger, notwithſtanding the deed of feoffment be abſolute. New Nat. Br. 456. A woman infeoffed a man upon condition that he ſhould take her to wife, and he had a wife at the time of the feoffment; and afterwards the woman, for not performing the condition, entered again into the land, and her entry was adjudged lawful, though upon a ſecond feoffee. Lib. Aſſ.

anno 40 Ed. 3. The husband and wife may sue the writ causa matrimonii prælocuti against another who ought to have married her: but if a man give lands to a woman to the intent to marry him, although the woman will not marry him, &c. he shall not have his remedy by writ causa matrimonii prælocuti. New Nat. Br. 455.

CAUSAM NOBIS SIGNIFICES, A writ directed to a mayor of a town, &c. who was by the king's writ commanded to give seisin of lands to the king's grantee, on his delaying to do it, requiring him to shew cause why he so delays the performance of his duty.

CAUSES and EFFECTS. In most cases the law hath respect to the cause, or beginning of a thing, as the principal part on which all other things are founded: and herein the next, and not the remote cause is most looked upon, except it be in covinous and criminal things; and therefore that which is not good at first will not be so afterwards; for such as is the cause, such is the effect. Plowd. 208, 268. If an infant or feme-covert make a will, and publish it, and after die of full age, or sole, the will is of no force, by reason of the original cause of infancy and coverture. Finch 12. Where the cause ceaseth, the effect or thing will cease. Co. Lit. 13.

CAUTIONE ADMITTENDA. A writ that lies against a bishop, who holds an excommunicated person in prison for contempt, notwithstanding he offers sufficient caution or security to obey the orders and commandment of the church for the future. Reg. Orig. 66. And if a man be excommunicated, and taken by a writ of significavit, and after offers caution to the bishop to obey the church, and the bishop refuseth it; the party may sue out this writ to the sheriff to go against the bishop, and to warn him to take caution, &c. But if he stands in doubt whether the sheriff will deliver him by that writ, the bishop may purchase another writ, directed to the sheriff reciting the case, and the end thereof; Tibi præcipimus, quod ipsum A. B. à prisona prædict. nisi in præsentia tua cautionem pignorat. ad minus eidem episc. de satisfaciend. obtulerit, nullatenus deliberas absque mandato nostro seu ipsius episcopi in hac parte speciali, &c. When the bishop hath taken caution, he is to certify the same in the Chancery, and thereupon the party shall have a writ unto the sheriff to deliver him. New Nat. Br. 142.

CEAPGILDE, From Sax. ceap, pecus, cattle; and gild, i. e. solutio;] Hence it is solutio pecudis: from this Saxon word gild, it is very probable we have our English word yield; as yield, or pay. Cowel.

CELER LECTI, The top, head, or tester of a bed. Hist. Elien. apud Whartoni, Angl. Sax. par. 1. p. 673.

CELLERARIUS, The butler in a monastery: in the Universities they are sometimes called manciple, and sometimes caterer, and steward.

CENDULÆ, Small pieces of wood laid in form of tiles, to cover the roof of a house. Pat. 4 Hen. 3. p. 1. m. 10.

CENEGILD, An expiatory mulct, paid by one who killed another, to the kindred of the deceased. Spelm.

CENELLÆ, Acorns, from the oak. In our old writings, pessona cenellarum, is put for the pannage of hogs, or running of swine, to feed on acorns.

CENNINGA, Notice given by the buyer to the seller, that the thing sold was claimed by another, that he might appear and justify the sale: it is mentioned in the laws of Athelstan, apud Brompton, cap. 4.

CENSARIA, A farm, or house and land, let ad censum at a standing rent: it comes from the Fr. cense, which signifies a farm.

CENSUALES, A species or class of the oblati, or voluntary slaves of churches or monasteries, i. e. those who, to procure the protection of the church, bound themselves to pay an annual tax or quit-rent out of their estates to a church or monastery. Besides this, they sometimes engaged to perform certain services. Robert. Hist. Emp. C. V. 1 V. 271, 2: Potgiesserus de Statu Servorum, lib. 1. cap. 1. sect. 6, 7.

CENSURE, from Lat. census.] A custom called by this name, observed in divers manors in Cornwall and Devon; where all persons residing therein above the age of sixteen are cited to swear fealty to the lord, and to pay 11 d. per poll, and 1 d. per ann. ever after: and these thus sworn are called censers. Survey of the Dutchy of Cornwall.

CENTENARII, Petty judges, under-sheriffs of counties, that had rule of an hundred, and judged smaller matters among them. 1 Vent. 211.

There were anciently inferior judges so called in France: who were set over every hundred freemen, and were themselves subject to the count or comes. 1 Comm. 115.

CEOLA, A large ship. Malmsbury, lib. 1. c. 1.

CEPI CORPUS, A return made by the sheriff, upon a capias, or other process to the like purpose, that he hath taken the body of the party. F. N. B. 26.

CEPPAGIUM, The stumps or roots of trees which remain in the ground after the trees are felled. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 41.

CERAGIUM, Cerage, a payment to find candles in the church. Mat. Paris. See Waxscot.

CERTAINTY, Is a plain, clear, and distinct setting down of things, so that they may be understood. 5 Rep. 121. A convenient certainty is required in writs, declarations, pleadings, &c. But if a writ abate for want of it, the plaintiff may have another writ: 'tis otherwise if a deed become void by incertainty, the party may not have a new deed at his pleasure. 11 Rep. 25, 121: Dyer 84. That has certainty enough, that may be made certain: but not like what is certain of itself. 4 Rep. 97. See generally title Pleading—and particularly titles Deed; Fine; Will.

CERTIFICANDO DE RECOGNITIONE STAPULÆ. A writ commanding the mayor of the staple to certify to the Lord Chancellor a statute staple taken before him, where the party himself detains it, and refuseth to bring in the same. Reg. Orig. 152. There is the like writ to certify a statute-merchant; and in divers other cases. Ibid. 148, 151, &c.

CERTIFICATE, A writing made in any court to give notice to another court of any thing done therein; which is usually by way of transcript, &c. And sometimes it is made by an officer of the same court, where matters are referred to him, or a rule of court is obtained for it; containing the tenor and effect of what is done. The clerks of the crown, assize and peace, are to make certificates into B. R. of the tenor of indictments, convictions, &c. under penalties, by the Stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 14: 3 W. & M. c. 9. See tit. Clergy, benefit of.

If

If a queſtion of mere law ariſes in the courſe of a cauſe in Chancery, (as whether by the words of a will, an eſtate for life or in tail is created, or whether a future intereſt deviſed by a teſtator, ſhall operate as a remainder, or an executory deviſe,) it is the practice of that court, to refer it to the opinion of the judges of the court of K. B. or C. P. upon a caſe ſtated for the purpoſe; wherein all the material facts are admitted, and the point of law is ſubmitted to their deciſion, who thereupon hear it ſolemnly argued by counſel on both ſides, and certify their opinion to the chancellor. And upon ſuch certificate, the decree is uſually founded. 3 Comm. 453.

THE TRIAL BY CERTIFICATE, is allowed in ſuch caſes, where the evidence of the perſon certifying, is the only proper criterion of the point in diſpute. Thus, 1. The queſtion whether one were abſent with the king in his army out of the realm, in time of war, might be tried by the certificate of the marſhal of the king's hoſt under ſeal. Litt. § 102.—2. If in order to avoid an outlawry, it be alledged the defendant was in priſon, &c. at Bourdeaux or Calais, this when thoſe places belonged to the crown of England, was allowed to be tried by the certificate of the mayor. 9 Rep. 31: 2 Ro. Ab. 583. And therefore by parity of reaſon, it ſhould now hold that in ſimilar caſes ariſing at Jamaica, &c. the trial ſhould be by certificate from the governor. 3 Comm. 334.

3. For matters within the realm; the cuſtoms of the city of London ſhall be tried by the certificate of the mayor and aldermen, certified by the mouth of the recorder, upon a ſurmiſe from the party alledging it, that it ſhould be ſo tried; elſe it muſt be tried by the country, as it muſt alſo if the corporation of London be a party, or intereſted in the ſuit. 1 Inſt. 74: 4 Burr. 248: Bro. Ab. 1. Trial, pl. 96: Hob. 85: But ſee 1 Term Rep. 423. If the recorder has once certified a cuſtom, the court are in future bound to take notice of it. Doug. 380.

4. In ſome caſes the Sheriff of London's certificate ſhall be the final trial; as if the iſſue be whether the defendant be a citizen of London, or a foreigner, in caſe of privilege pleaded to be ſued only in the city courts. 1 Inſt. 74. Of a nature ſomewhat ſimilar to which is the trial of the privilege of either Univerſity when the Chancellor claims cognizance of the cauſe; in which caſe the charters confirmed by parliament, allow the queſtion to be determined by the certificate of the chancellor under ſeal.—But in caſe of an iſſue between two parties themſelves, the trial ſhall be by jury. 2 Ro. Ab. 583: 3 Comm. 335.

5. In matters of eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction, as marriage, general baſtardy, excommunication, and orders, theſe and other like matters ſhall be tried by the biſhop's certificate. See titles Baſtardy, &c. Ability of a clerk preſented, admiſſion, inſtitution and deprivation of a clerk, ſhall alſo be tried by certificate from the ordinary or metropolitan. 2 Inſt. 632: Show. P. C. 88: 2 Ro. Ab. 563, &c. But induction ſhall be tried by a jury; being the corporal inveſtiture of the temporal profits. Dy. 229. Reſignation of a benefice may be tried either way, but ſeems moſt properly to fall within the biſhop's cognizance. 2 Ro. Ab 583: 3 Comm. 336.

6. The trial of all cuſtoms and practice of the courts ſhall be by certificate from the proper officer of thoſe courts reſpectively: and what return was made on a writ by a ſheriff or under-ſheriff, ſhall be only tried by his own certificate. 9 Rep. 31: 3 Comm. 336.

As to certificates in caſes of Coſts, of Bankrupts, or relative to the ſettlement of the Poor, See thoſe titles in this Dict.

CERTIFICATE OR CERTIFICATION OF ASSISE, certificatio aſſiſæ novæ diſſeiſinæ, &c.] A writ anciently granted for the re-examining or re-trial of a matter paſſed by aſſiſe before juſtices: uſed where a man appearing by his bailiff to an aſſiſe, brought by another, loſt the day; and having ſomething more to plead for himſelf, which the bailiff did not, or might not plead for him, deſired a farther examination of the cauſe, either before the ſame juſtices, or others, and obtained letters-patent to them to that effect; whereupon he brought a writ to the ſheriff to call both the party for whom the aſſiſe paſſed, and the jury that was impanelled on the ſame, before the ſaid juſtices at a certain day and place, to be re-examined. It was called a certificate, becauſe therein mention is made to the ſheriff, that upon the party's complaint of the defective examination, as to the aſſiſe paſſed, the king hath directed his letters-patent to the juſtices for the better certifying of themſelves, whether all points of the ſaid aſſiſe were duly examined. Reg. Orig. 200: F. N. B. 181: Bracton, lib. 4. c. 13: Horn's Mirr. lib. 3.—This writ is now entirely ſuperſeded by the remedy afforded by means of new trials. See 3 Comm. 389.

CERTIORARI.

This is an Original Writ, iſſuing out of the court of Chancery or K. B. directed in the king's name to the judges or officers of inferior courts, commanding them to certify, or to return the records of a cauſe depending before them; to the end the party may have the more ſure and ſpeedy juſtice before the king, or ſuch juſtices as he ſhall aſſign to determine the cauſe. See F. N. B. 145, 242.

This writ is either returnable in the king's bench, and then hath theſe words, "ſend to us;" or in the Common Bench, and then has "to our juſtices of the bench;" or in the Chancery, and then hath "in cur Chancery, &c."

On this ſubject we may briefly conſider, 1. In what caſes this writ is grantable; or not.—2. In what manner —3. The effect of it when granted, and 4. Of the return, with the form of that and the writ.

1. A writ of certiorari may be had at any time before trial, to certify and remove indictments, with all the proceedings thereon from any inferior court of criminal juriſdiction, into the court of K. B. the ſovereign ordinary court of juſtice in cauſes criminal. And this is frequently done for one of four purpoſes, 1. To conſider and determine the validity of appeals and indictments, and the proceedings thereon; and to quaſh or confirm them accordingly —2. To have the priſoner or defendant tried at the bar of the courts, or before juſtices of Niſi Prius where it is ſurmiſed that a partial or inſufficient trial will probably be had in the inferior court.—3. To plead the king's pardon in the court of K. B.—4. To iſſue proceſs of outlawry againſt the offender, in thoſe counties or places where the proceſs of inferior judges will not reach him 2 H. P. C. 210: 4 Comm. 320

A certiorari lies in all judicial proceedings, in which a writ of error does not lie; and it is a conſequence of all inferior juriſdictions, erected by act of parliament, to have have their proceedings returnable in K. B. Ld. Raym. 469, 580.

But without laying a ſpecial ground before the court, it cannot be ſued out to remove proceedings in an action from the courts of the counties palatine. Doug. 749.—It does not lie to judges of oyer and terminer to remove a recognizance of appearance. Lucas 278.—Nor to remove a poor's rate. Stra. 932, 975. See Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 27. § 23. in n.

A certiorari lies to juſtices of the peace and others, even in ſuch caſes, which they are empowered by ſtatute finally to hear and determine; and the ſuperintendency of the court of K. B. is not taken away without expreſs words. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 22, 23.

That a certiorari does not lie to remove any other than judicial acts, See Cald. 309: Say. 6.

Where a certiorari is by law grantable for an indictment, at the ſuit of the king, the Court is bound to award it, for it is the king's prerogative to ſue in what court he pleaſes: but it is at the diſcretion of the court to grant or not, in caſe of private proſecutions, and at the prayer of the defendant: and the court will not grant it for the removal of an indictment before juſtices of gaol-delivery, without ſome ſpecial cauſe; or where there is ſo much difficulty in the caſe, that the judge deſires it may be determined in B. R. &c. Burr. 2456. Alſo on indictments of perjury, forgery, or for heinous miſdemeanors, the court will not generally grant a certiorari to remove at the inſtance of the defendant. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 27, 28. But ſee 2 Ld. Raym. 1452.

But in particular caſes, the court will uſe their diſcretion to grant a certiorari; as if the defendant be of good character, or if the proſecution be malicious or attended with oppreſſive circumſtances. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 27. § 28. n.

Where iſſue is joined in the court below, it is a good objection againſt granting a certiorari: and if a perſon doth not make uſe of this writ till the jury are ſworn, he loſes the benefit of it. Mod. Ca. 16: Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 5. After conviction, a certiorari may not be had to remove an indictment, &c. unleſs there be ſpecial cauſe; as if the judge below is doubtful what judgment is proper to be given, when it may. See Stra. 1227: Burr. 749. And after conviction, &c. it lies in ſuch caſes where writ of error will not lie. 1 Salk. 149. The court on motion in an extraordinary caſe will grant a certiorari to remove a judgment given in an inferior court; but this is done where the ordinary way of taking out execution is hindered in the inferior court. 1 Lill. Abr. 253.

In common caſes a certiorari will not lie to remove a cauſe out of an inferior court, after verdict. It is never ſued out after a writ of error, but where diminution is alledged: and when the thing in demand does not exceed 5*l.* a certiorari ſhall not be had, but a writ of error or attaint. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 23: See Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 29. A certiorari is to be granted on matter of law only: and in many caſes there muſt be a judge's hand for it. 1 Lill. 252. Certiorari's to remove indictments, &c. are to be ſigned by a judge: and to remove orders, the fiat for making out the writm uſt be ſigned by ſome judge 1 Salk. 150.

Certiorari lies to the courts of Wales; and the cinque ports, counties palatine, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 24, 25.

Things may not be removed from before juſtices of peace, which cannot be proceeded in by the court where removed; as in caſe of refuſing to take the oaths, &c. which is to be certified and inquired into, according to the ſtatute. 1 Salk. 145. And where the court which awards the certiorari cannot hold plea on the record, there but a tenor of the record ſhall be certified; for otherwiſe if the record was removed into B. R. as it cannot be ſent back, there would be a failure of right afterwards. 1 Danv. Abr. 792. But a record ſent by certiorari into B. R. may be ſent after by mittimus into C. B. Ibid. 789. And a record into B. R. may be certified into Chancery, and from thence be ſent by mittimus into an inferior court, where an action of debt is brought in an inferior court, and the defendant pleads that the plaintiff hath recovered in B. R. and the plaintiff replies Nul tiel record, &c. 1 Saund. 97, 99.

The court of B. R. will grant a new certiorari to affirm a judgment, &c. though generally one perſon can have but one certiorari. Cro. Jac. 369.

A certiorari may not be had to a court ſuperior, or that has equal juriſdiction, in which caſe day is given to bring in the record, &c.

Beſides the ſtatutes hereafter mentioned, there are ſeveral which reſtrain, and many which abſolutely prohibit a certiorari; in order to avoid frivolous and unfounded delays in juſtice. For a compleat liſt of theſe, if needed, the ſtudent ſhould conſult the index to the ſtatutes.—The following ſeem to have deſerved a ſhort mention in this place.

By Stats. 12 Car. 2. cc. 23, 24. no certiorari ſhall be allowed in certain caſes of tranſgreſſion of the Exciſe-Laws.

By Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78, (which ſee at large title Highways) no preſentment, &c. of any highway ſhall be removed from the ſeſſions, until it be traverſed, except the right to repair be the queſtion.—Or by Stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 11, may come in queſtion.—But this means on the part of the defendant only, for on the part of the proſecution it lies before.—No other proceedings under the highway-act may be removed by certiorari.—But if the ſeſſions manifeſtly exceed their authority in making orders, they may be removed into K. B. by certiorari and quaſhed. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 27. § 37. and n.

By Stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 30, againſt deer-ſtealers, no certiorari ſhall iſſue, unleſs the party convicted ſhall become bound to the proſecutor in 100*l.* to pay full coſts and damages within thirty days, and to the Juſtice in 60*l.* to proſecute the certiorari with effect.—But in appeal to the ſeſſions, he may ſue out a certiorari on ſix days' notice, to proſecute. And the like in effect is enacted by Stats. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. and 5 An. ſeſſ. 2. c. 14, concerning game. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 60, 61.

Alſo by Stat. 1 An. c. 18. concerning the repair of bridges, no certiorari ſhall be allowed.—Nor by Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 20. for puniſhing deſtroyers of turnpikes.—Nor by ſt. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29, for aſſeſſing county rates.—Nor on ſt. 19 Geo. 2. c. 21, againſt curſing and ſwearing.—Nor on ſt. 23 Geo. 2. c. 13, againſt ſeducing artificers.—Nor on ſt. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36, againſt bawdy-houſes.—Nor on 29 Geo. 2. c. 40, againſt ſtealing lead, iron, &c.—Nor on 30 Geo. 2. c. 21, for preſerving fiſh in the Thames.—Nor on 30 Geo. 2. c. 24, for reſtraining gaming in public houſes.—Nor on 31 Geo. 2. c. 29, for regulating bread.—Nor on 2 Geo. 3. c. 30, for preventing thefts in bumb-boats.—Nor on 10 Geo. 3. c. 18, againſt dog-ſtealers.

For a long detail of further matter on the ſubject of certiorari. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27.

2. By Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13, no [Habeas Corpus or] Certiorari ſhall be granted to remove any recognizance, unleſs ſigned by the Chief Juſtice, or in his abſence by one of the other judges.

By Stats. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 11. and 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 33, A certiorari may be granted in vacation time by any of the judges of B. R. and ſecurity is to be found before it is allowed. No certiorari is to be granted out of B. R. to remove an indictment, or preſentment, before juſtices of peace at the ſeſſions before trial, unleſs motion be made in open court, and the party indicted find ſecurity by two perſons in 20*l.* each to plead to the indictment in B. R. &c. And if the defendant proſecuting the certiorari be convicted, the court of B. R. ſhall order coſts to the proſecutor of the indictment. In caſe of certiorari granted in vacation, the name of the judge and party applying to be indorſed on the writ. See title Habeas Corpus.

If on a certiorari to remove an indictment the party do not find manucaptors in the ſum of 20*l.* to plead to the indictment and try it, according to the ſtatute, it is no ſuperſedeas. Mod. Ca. 33. And a procedendo may be granted where bail is not put in before a judge, on a certiorari. As to coſts, See 1 Wilſ. 139: 1 Burr. 54: 2 Term Rep. 47.

No judgment or order to be removed by certiorari, without ſureties found to the amount of 50*l.* Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 19.

Certiorari, to remove convictions, orders or proceedings of juſtices, to be applied for within ſix calendar months, and upon ſix days' notice to the juſtices. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 18. See Stra. 991.

It is ſaid a certiorari to remove an indictment is good, although it bear date before the taking thereof: but on a certiorari the very record muſt be returned, and not a tranſcript of it; for if ſo, then the record will ſtill remain in the inferior court. 2 Lil. 253. In B. R. the very record itſelf of indictments is removed by certiorari; but uſually in Chancery, if a certiorari be returnable there, it removes only the tenor of the record; and therefore, if it be ſent from thence into the King's Bench, they cannot proceed either to judgment or execution, becauſe they have but ſuch tenor of the record before them. 2 Hale's Hiſt. P. C. 215. In London a return of the tenor only is warranted by the city charters. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 26, 76.

On a certiorari to remove a record out of an inferior court, the ſtile of their court, and power to hold plea, and before whom, ought to be ſhewn on their certificate. Jenk. Cent. 114, 232.

A certiorari to remove an order of baſtardy ſhould be applied for in ſix months, Rex v. Howlett, 1 Wilſ. 35.

If a certiorari be prayed to remove an indictment out of London or Middleſex, three days' notice muſt be given the other ſide, or the certiorari ſhall not be granted. Raym. 74.

3. After a certiorari is allowed by the inferior court, it makes all the ſubſequent proceedings, on the record that is removed by it, erroneous. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 62, 64. But if a certiorari for the removal of an indictment before juſtices of peace, be not delivered before the jury be ſworn for the trial of it, the juſtices may proceed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 64.—And the juſtices may ſet a fine to complete their judgment after a certiorari delivered. Ld. Raym. 1515. See ante 1.

A certiorari removes all things done between the teſte and return. Ld. Raym. 835, 1305.—And as it removes the record itſelf out of the inferior court, therefore if it remove the record againſt the principal, the acceſſary cannot be tried there. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 29. § 54.—And if the defendant be convicted of a capital crime, the perſon of the defendant muſt be removed by Habeas Corpus, in order to be preſent in court, if he will move in arreſt of judgment.—And herein the caſe of a conviction differs from that of a ſpecial verdict. Burr. 930.

Although on a habeas corpus to remove a perſon, the court may bail or diſcharge the priſoner: they can give no judgment upon the record of the indictment againſt him, without a certiorari to remove it, but the ſame ſtands in force as it did, and new proceſs may iſſue upon it: 2 H. H. P. C. 211. If an indictment be one, but the offences ſeveral, where four perſons are indicted together; a certiorari to remove this indictment againſt two of them, removes it not as to the others, but as to them the record remains below. 2 Hale's Hiſt. 214.

If a cauſe be removed from an inferior court by certiorari, the pledges in the court below are not diſcharged; becauſe a defendant may bring a certiorari, and thereby the plaintiff may loſe his pledges. Skin. Rep. 244, 246. A certiorari from K. B. is a ſuperſedeas to reſtitution in a forcible entry. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 64. § 62.

4. The return of a certiorari is to be under ſeal: and the perſon to whom a certiorari is directed may make what return he pleaſes, and the court will not ſtop the filing of it, on affidavit of its falſity, except where the public good requires it: the remedy for a falſe return is action on the caſe, at the ſuit of the party injured; and information, &c. at the ſuit of the king. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 70.

If the perſon to whom the certiorari is directed, do not make a return, then an alias, then a pluries, vel cauſam nobis ſignifices quare, ſhall be awarded, and then an attachment. Cromp. 116.

Form of a Certiorari To certify the Record of a Judgment.

GEORGE the Third, &c. To the Mayor and Sheriffs of our city of E. and to every of them, in our court at the Guildhall there greeting: Whereas A. B. hath lately in our ſaid court in the ſaid city, according to the cuſtom of the ſame court, impleaded C. D. late of, &c. in an action of debt upon demand of thirty pounds; and thereupon, in our ſaid court before you, obtained judgment againſt the ſaid C. for the recovery of the ſaid debt: and we, being deſirous for certain reaſons, that the ſaid record ſhould by you be certified to us, Do command you, that you ſend under your ſeals the record of the ſaid recovery, with all things touching the ſame, into our court before us at Weſtminſter, on the day, &c. plainly and diſtinctly, and in as full and ample manner as it now remains before you, together with this writ; ſo that we on the part of the ſaid A. may be able to proceed to the execution of the ſaid judgment, and do what ſhall appear to us of right ought to be done. Witneſs, &c.

The return of a certiorari may be thus.—Firſt, on the back of the writ indorſe theſe or ſimilar words, "The execution of this writ appears in a ſchedule to the ſame writ annexed." Which ſchedule may be in the following form, on a piece of parchment, (not paper, 1 Barn. K. B. 113,) by itſelf, and filed to the writ.

"Middleſex.—I A. B. one of the keepers of the peace and juſtices of our lord the king, aſſigned to keep the peace within the ſaid county, and alſo to hear and determine divers felonies, treſpaſſes, and other miſdemeanors in the ſame county committed by virtue of this writ to me delivered, do under my ſeal certify unto his Majeſty in his court of King's Bench, the indictment, of which mention is made in the ſame writ, together with all matters touching the ſaid indictment. In witneſs whereof I the ſaid A. B. have to theſe preſents ſet my ſeal. Given at —— in the ſaid county, the —— day of ——, in the —— year of the reign of ——.

Then take the record of the indictment, and cloſe it within the above ſchedule, and ſeal up, and ſend them both together with the certiorari.

CERT-MONEY, quaſi certain money.] Head-money, paid yearly by the reſiants of ſeveral manors to the lords thereof, for the certain keeping of the leet; and ſometimes to the hundred: as the manor of Hook, in Dorſetſhire, pays cert-money to the hundred of Egerdon. In ancient records this is called certum letæ. See Common Fine.

CERVISARII, The Saxons had a duty called drinclean, that is retributio potûs, payable by their tenants; and ſuch tenants were in Domeſday called cerviſarii, from cerviſia, ale, their chief drink: though cerviſarius vulgarly ſignifies a beer or ale brewer.

CERURA, A mound, fence, or incloſure. Cart. priorat. de Thelesford MS.

CESSAT EXECUTIO, In treſpaſs againſt two perſons, if it be tried and found againſt one, and the plaintiff takes his execution againſt him, the writ will abate as to the other; for there ought to be a ceſſat executio till it is tried againſt the other defendant. 10 Ed. 4. 11. See title Execution, &c.

CESSAVIT, A writ which lies (by the Stats. of Glouceſter, 6 E. 1. c. 4: and Weſtm. 2. 13 E. 1. cc. 21, 41.) when a man who holds lands by rent or other ſervices, neglects or ceaſes to perform his ſervices for two years together; or where a religious houſe hath lands given it, on condition of performing ſome certain ſpiritual ſervice, as reading prayers, or giving alms, and neglects it; in either of which caſes if the ceſſer or neglect ſhall have continued for two years, the lord or donor and his heirs ſhall have a writ of ceſſavit to recover the land itſelf. F. N. B. 208.—In ſome inſtances relating to religious houſes, called Ceſſavit de Cantariâ.

By the Stat. of Glouceſter, the ceſſavit does not lie for lands let upon fee-farm rents, unleſs they have lain freſh and uncultivated for two years, and there be not ſufficient diſtreſs upon the premiſſes, or unleſs the tenant hath ſo encloſed the land, that the lord cannot come upon it to diſtrain. F. N. B. 209: 2 Inſt. 298. For the law preſers the ſimple and ordinary remedies, by diſtreſs, &c. to this extraordinary one of forfeiture; and therefore the ſame ſtatute has provided farther, that on tender of arrears, and damages before judgment, and giving ſecurity for the future performance of the ſervices, (that he will no more ceaſe) the proceſs ſhall be at an end, and the tenant ſhall retain his land, to which the Stat. of Weſtm. 2, conforms ſo far as may ſtand with convenience and reaſon of law. 2 Inſt. 401, 460.

The Stats. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28, and 11 Geo. 2. c. 19, ſeem evidently borrowed from the above ancient writ of ceſſavit.—The former of theſe ſtatutes permits landlords who have a right of re-entry for non-payment of rent, to ſerve an ejectment on their tenants when half a year's rent is due, and no ſufficient diſtreſs on the premiſſes. See title Ejectment. And the ſame remedy is in ſubſtance adopted by the Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 16, which enacts, that where any tenant at rack-rent ſhall be one year's rent in arrear, and ſhall deſert the demiſed premiſſes, leaving the ſame uncultivated or unoccupied, ſo that no ſufficient diſtreſs can be had, two juſtices of the peace, (after notice affixed on the premiſſes for fourteen days) may give the landlord poſſeſſion thereof; and the leaſe ſhall be void. See title Diſtreſs, Leaſe, Rent.

By Stat. Weſtm. 2. § 2, the heir of the demandant may maintain a ceſſavit againſt the heir or aſſignee of the tenant. But in other caſes, the heir may not bring this writ for ceſſure in the time of his anceſtor: and it lies not but for annual ſervice, rent, and ſuch like; not for homage or fealty. Termes de la ley: New Nat. Br. 463, 464.

The lord ſhall have a writ of ceſſavit againſt tenant for life, where the remainder is over in fee to another: but the donor of an eſtate-tail ſhall not have a ceſſavit againſt the tenant in tail: though if a man make a gift in tail, the remainder over in fee to another, or to the heirs of the tenant in tail, there the lord of whom the lands are holden immediate, ſhall have a ceſſavit againſt the tenant in tail, becauſe that he is tenant to him, &c. Ibid. If the lord diſtrains pending the writ of ceſſavit againſt his tenant, the writ ſhall abate. The writ ceſſavit is directed to the ſheriff, To command A. B. that, &c. he render to C. D. one meſſuage, which he holds by certain ſervices, and which ought to come to the ſaid C. by force of the ſtatute, &c. becauſe the ſaid A. in doing thoſe ſervices had ceaſed two years, &c. Dict.

CESSE, Signifies an aſſeſſment or tax, and is mentioned in the Stat. 22 Hen. 8. cap. 3. Ceſſe or ceaſſe, in Ireland, is an exaction of victuals, at a certain rate, for ſoldiers in garriſon. Antiq. Hiberniæ.

CESSIO BONORUM. A proceſs in the law of Scotland, ſimilar in effect to that under the ſtatutes relating to Bankruptcy in England.

CESSION, Ceſſio.] A ceaſing, yielding up, or giving over. When an eccleſiaſtical perſon is created biſhop, or a parſon of a parſonage takes another benefice, without diſpenſation or being otherwiſe not qualified, &c. in both caſes their firſt benefices are become void, and are in the law ſaid to be void by ceſſion: and to thoſe benefices that the perſon had who was created biſhop, the king ſhall preſent for that time, whoever is patron of them; and in the other caſe, the patron may preſent. Cowel.

But ceſſion in the caſe of biſhops does not take place till conſecration. Dyer 223. See title Commendam, Advowſon II.

No perſon is entitled to diſpenſation, but chaplains of the king and others mentioned in the Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13; the the brethren, and the ſons of lords and knights, (not of baronets) and doctors and bachelors of divinity and law in the Univerſities of this realm. 1 Comm. 392. See title Chaplain.

Both the livings muſt have cure of ſouls; and the ſtatute expreſsly excepts deaneries, archdeaconries, chancellorſhips, treaſurerſhips, chanterſhips, prebends and ſinecure rectories. See tit. Chaplain, Parſon.

In caſe of a ceſſion under the ſtatute, the church is ſo far void upon inſtitution to the ſecond living, that the patron may take notice of it, and preſent if he pleaſes; but it ſeems that a lapſe will not incur from the time of inſtitution againſt the patron, unleſs notice be given him; but it will from the time of induction. 2 Wilſ. 200: 3 Burr. 1504. See title Advowſon II.

CESSOR, Lat.] He who ceaſeth, or neglects ſo long to perform a duty, that he thereby incurs the danger of the law. Old Nat. Br. 136.—See title Ceſſavit.

CESSURE, or ceſſer; ceaſing, giving over; or departing from. Stat. Weſtm. 2. c. 1. See title Ceſſavit.

CESTUI QUE TRUST, Is he in truſt for whom, or to whoſe uſe or benefit, another man is enfeoffed or ſeiſed of lands or tenements. By Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, lands of ceſtui que truſt may be delivered in execution. See title Truſts, Uſes.

CESTUI QUE USE, Fr. ceſtui à l'uſe de qui.] He to whoſe uſe any other man is enfeoffed of lands or tenements. 1 Rep. 133. Feoffees to uſes were formerly deemed owners of the lands; but now the poſſeſſion is adjudged in ceſtui que uſe, and without any entry he may bring aſſiſe, &c. Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 10: Cro. Eliz. 46. See tit. Uſe.

CESTUI QUE VIE, He for whoſe life any lands or tenements are granted. Perk. 97. See title Occupant.

CHACEA, A ſtation of game more extended than a park, and leſs than a foreſt: and is ſometimes taken for the liberty of chaſing or hunting within ſuch a diſtrict. And according to Blount it hath another ſignification, i. e. the way through which cattle are drove to paſture, commonly called in ſome places a drove way. Bracton, lib. 4. c. 44. Vide Chaſe.

CHACEARE ad lepores, vel vulpes: To hunt hare or fox. Cartular. Abbat. Glaſton. MS. 87.

CHACURUS, from the Fr. chaſſeur.] A horſe for the chaſe; or rather a hound or dog, a courſer. Rot. 7 Johan.

CHAFE, from the Fr. chaufer to heat, whence our chafing diſh.

CHAFEWAX, An officer in Chancery, that fitteth the wax for ſealing of the writs, commiſſions and ſuch other inſtruments as are there made to be iſſued out.

CHAFFERS, Seem to ſignify wares or merchandiſe; and chaffering is yet uſed for buying and ſelling, or rather a kind of bartering of one thing for another. The word is mentioned in the Stat. 3 Ed. 4. c. 4.

CHAINS, Hanging in. See title Murder.

CHAIRS, See Coaches.

CHALDRON or CHALDER of coals. See title Coals.

CHALKING, The merchants of the ſtaple require to be eaſed of divers new impoſitions, as chalking, ironage, wharfage, &c. Rot. Parl. 50 Ed. 3.

CHALLENGE, Calumnia, from the Fr. chalenger.] An exception taken either againſt perſons or things. Perſons as to jurors, or any one or more of them: or in caſe of felony, by the priſoner at the bar againſt things, as a declaration, &c. Terms de la ley, 109.—The former is the moſt frequent ſignification in which this term is uſed, and which ſhall here be ſhortly mentioned; referring for further matter to titles Jury, Trial, in this Dictionary.

There are two kinds of challenge; either to the array, by which is meant the whole jury as it ſtands arrayed in the panel, or little ſquare pane of parchment, on which the jurors' names are written; or to the polls; by which are meant the ſeveral particular perſons or heads in the array. 1 Inſt. 156, 8.

Challenge to jurors is alſo divided into challenge principal or peremptory; and challenge pur cauſe, i. e. upon cauſe or reaſon alledged: challenge principal or peremptory, is that which the law allows without cauſe alledged, or further examination; as a priſoner at the bar, arraigned for felony, may challenge peremptorily the number allowed him by law, one after another, alledging no cauſe, but his own diſlike, and they ſhall be put off, and new taken in their places: but yet there is a difference between challenge principal, and challenge peremptory; the latter being uſed only in matters criminal, and barely without cauſe alledged; whereas the former is in civil actions for the moſt part, and by aſſigning ſome ſuch cauſe of exception, as being found true the law allows. Staundf. P. C. 124, 157: Lamb. Eiren. lib. 4. cap. 14.

Challenge to the favour, which is a ſpecies of challenge for cauſe, is where the plaintiff or defendant is tenant to the ſheriff, or if the ſheriff's ſon hath married the daughter of the party, &c. and is alſo when either party cannot take any principal challenge, but ſheweth cauſe of favour; and cauſes of favour are infinite. If one of the parties is of affinity to a juror, the juror hath married the plaintiff's daughter, &c. If a juror hath given a verdict before in the cauſe, matter or title; if one labours a juror to give his verdict; if after he is returned, a juror eats and drinks at the charge of either party; if the plaintiff, &c. be his maſter, or the juror hath any intereſt in the thing demanded, &c. theſe are challenges to the favour. 2 Rol. Abr. 636: Hob. 294.

CHALLENGE TO FIGHT.—It is a very high offence to challenge another, either by word or letter, to fight a duel, or to be the meſſenger of ſuch a challenge, or even barely to endeavour to provoke another to ſend a challenge, or to fight; as by diſperſing letters to that purpoſe, full of reflections, and inſinuating a deſire to fight, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 63. § 3.

By Stat. 9 An. c. 14. § 8; (See title Gaming;) "Whoever ſhall [aſſault and beat,] or challenge, or provoke to fight, any other perſon or perſons whatſoever, upon account of any money won by gaming, playing, or betting at any of the games mentioned in that act, ſhall on conviction by indictment or information, forfeit all their goods, chattels and perſonal eſtate, and ſuffer impriſonment without bail, in the county priſon for two years."

It is now every day's practice for the court of K. B. to grant informations againſt perſons ſending challenges to juſtices of the peace, and in other heinous caſes.

For further matter, See title Murder.

CHAMBERDEKINS, or Chamber-deacons, were certain poor Iriſh ſcholars, cloathed in mean habit, and living under no rule; or rather beggars baniſhed England by Stat. 1 Hen. 5. cap. 7, 8.

CHAMBERLAIN, Camerarius.] Is variouſly uſed in our laws, ſtatutes and chronicles: as firſt there is Lord Great Chamberlain of England, to whoſe office belongs the government of the palace at Weſtminſter; and upon all ſolemn occaſions the keys of Weſtminſter-Hall, and the court of Requeſts are delivered to him; he diſpoſes of the ſword of ſtate to be carried before the king when he comes to the parliament, and goes on the right hand of the ſword next to the king's perſon: he has the care of providing all things in the Houſe of Lords in the time of parliament; to him belongs livery and lodgings in the king's court, &c. And the gentleman uſher of the black rod, yeoman uſher, &c. are under his authority.

The office of Lord Great Chamberlain of England is hereditary; and where a perſon dies ſeiſed in fee of this office, leaving two ſiſters, the office belongs to both ſiſters, and they may execute it by deputy: but ſuch deputy muſt be approved of by the king, and muſt not be of a degree inferior to a knight. 2 Bro. P. C. 146, 8vo. ed.

The Lord Chamberlain of the Houſehold has the overſight and government of all officers belonging to the king's chamber, (except the bed chamber, which is under the groom of the ſtole), and alſo of the wardrobe; of artificers retained in the king's ſervice, meſſengers, comedians, revels, muſick, &c. The ſerjeants at arms are likewiſe under his inſpection; and the king's chaplains, phyſicians, apothecaries, ſurgeons, barbers, &c. And he hath under him a vice-chamberlain, both being always privy councillors.

There were formerly chamberlains of the king's courts. 7 Ed. 6. cap. 1. And there are chamberlains of the Exchequer, who keep a controlment of the pells, of receipts and exitus, and have in their cuſtody the leagues and treaties with foreign princes, many ancient records, the two famous books of antiquity called Domeſday, and the Black book of the Exchequer; and the ſtandards of money, and weights, and meaſures are kept by them. There are alſo under-chamberlains of the Exchequer, who make ſearches for all records in the treaſury; and are concerned in making out the tallies, &c. The office of chamberlain of the Exchequer is mentioned in the Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. cap. 16. Beſides theſe, we read of a chamberlain of North Wales. Stowe, p. 641.

A chamberlain of Cheſter, to whom it belongs to receive the rents and revenues of that city; and when there is no Prince of Wales, and Earl of Cheſter, he hath the receiving and returning of all writs coming thither out of any of the king's courts. See title Counties-Palatine.

The chamberlain of London, who is commonly the receiver of the city rents payable into the chamber; and hath great authority in making, and determining the rights of freemen; as alſo concerning apprentices, orphans, &c. See title London.

CHAMBERS OF THE KING, Regiæ cameræ.] The havens or ports of the kingdom are ſo called in our ancient records. Mare Clauſ. fol. 242.

CHAMBRE DEPINCT, Anciently St. Edward's chamber, now called the painted chamber.

CHAMPARTY, or CHAMPERTY, campi partitio, becauſe the parties in champerty, agree to divide the land, &c. in queſtion.] A bargain with the plaintiff or defendant in any ſuit, to have part of the land, debt, or other thing ſued for, if the party that undertakes it prevails therein. Whereupon the Champertor is to carry on the party's ſuit at his own expence. See 4 Comm. 135: 1 Inſt. 368. It is a ſpecies of maintenance, and puniſhed in the ſame manner. This ſeems to have been an ancient grievance in our nation; for notwithſtanding the ſeveral ſtatutes of Weſtm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 25: Weſtm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 49: 28 Ed. 1. St. 3. c. 11. and 33 Ed. 1. Stat. 3, &c. and a form of a writ framed to them; yet Stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 11. and 32 Hen. 8. cap. 9, enacted, That whereas former ſtatutes provided redreſs for this evil in the King's Bench only, from henceforth it ſhould be lawful for juſtices of the Common Pleas, juſtices of aſſiſe, and juſtices of peace in their quarter ſeſſions, to inquire, hear and determine this and ſuch like caſes, as well at the ſuit of the king, as of the party: and this offence is puniſhable by common law and ſtatute; the Stat. 33 Ed. 1. Stat. 3, makes the offenders liable to three years' impriſonment, and a fine at the king's pleaſure. By the Stat. 28 Ed. 1. c. 11, it is ordained, that no officer, nor any other, ſhall take upon him any buſineſs in ſuit, to have part of the thing in plea; nor none upon any covenant, ſhall give up his right to another; and if any do, and be convicted thereof, the taker ſhall forfeit to the king ſo much of his lands and goods as amounts to the value of the part purchaſed.

In the conſtruction of theſe ſtatutes, it hath been adjudged, that under the word covenant, all kinds of promiſes and contracts are included, whether by writing, or parol: that rent granted out of land in variance, is within the ſtatute of champerty: and grants of part of the thing in ſuit made merely in conſideration of the maintenance, or champerty, are within the meaning of this ſtatute; but not ſuch as are made in conſideration of a precedent honeſt debt, which is agreed to be ſatisfied with the thing in demand when recovered. F. N. B. 172: 2 Inſt. 209: 2 Rol. Abr. 113.

It is ſaid not to be material, whether he who brings a writ of champerty, did in truth ſuffer any damage by it; or whether the plea wherein it is alledged be determined or not. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 84. A conveyance executed pending a plea, in purſuance of a bargain made before, is not within the ſtatutes againſt champerty: and if a man purchaſe land of a party, pending the writ, if it be bonâ fide, and not to maintain, it is not champerty. F. N. B. 272: 2 Rol. Abr. 113. But it hath been held, that the purchaſe of land while a ſuit of equity concerning it is depending, is within the purview of the ſtatute 28 E. 1. Stat. 3. c. 11: Moor 665. A leaſe for life, or years, or a voluntary gift of land, is within the ſtatutes of champerty; but not a ſurrender made by a leſſee to his leſſor: or a conveyance relating to lands in ſuit, made by a father to his ſon, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 84.

The giving part of the lands in ſuit, after the end of it, to a counſellor for his reward, is not champerty, if there be no precedent bargain relating to ſuch gift; but if it had been agreed between the counſellor and his client before the action brought, that he ſhould have part for his reward, then it would be champerty. Bro. Champert. 3. And it is dangerous to meddle with any ſuch gift, ſince it carries with it a ſtrong preſumption of champerty. 2 Inſt. 564. If any attorney follow a cauſe to be paid in groſs, when the thing in ſuit is recovered, it hath been adjudged, adjudged, that this is champerty, Hob. 117. Every champerty implies maintenance; but every maintenance is not champerty. Crom. Jur. 39: 2 Inſt. 208.

To this head may be referred the proviſion of the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 9, that no one ſhall ſell or purchaſe any pretended right or title to land, unleſs the vendor hath received the profits thereof for one whole year before ſuch grant; or hath been in actual poſſeſſion of the land, or of the reverſion or remainder; on pain that both purchaſer and vendor, ſhall each forfeit the value of ſuch land to the king and the proſecutor. See title Maintenance.

CHAMPERTORS, By ſtatute, are thoſe who move pleas or ſuits, or cauſe them to be moved, either by their own procurement, or by others, and ſue them at their proper coſts, to have part of the land in variance, or part of the gain. 33 Ed. 1. Stat. 2. See the preceding article.

CHAMPION, campio.] Is taken in the law not only for him that fights a combat in his own cauſe, but alſo for him that doth it in the place or quarrel of another. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 21. And in Sir Edward Biſhe's notes on Upton, fol. 36, it appears that Henry de Ferneberg, for thirty marks fee, did by charter covenant to be champion to Roger abbot of Glaſtenbury. An. 42 Hen. 3. Theſe champions, mentioned in our law books and hiſtories, were uſually hired; and any one might hire them, except parricides, and thoſe who were accuſed of the higheſt offences: before they came into the field, they ſhaved their heads, and made oath that they believed the perſons who hired them, were in the right, and that they would defend their cauſe to the utmoſt of their power; which was always done on foot, and with no other weapon than a ſtick or club, and a ſhield: and before they engaged, they always made an offering to the church, that God might aſſiſt them in the battle. When the battle was over, the puniſhment of a champion overcome, and likewiſe of the perſon for whom he fought, was various: if it was the champion of a woman for a capital offence, ſhe was burnt, and the champion hanged: if it was of a man, and not for a capital crime, he not only made ſatisfaction, but had his right hand cut off; and the man was to be cloſe confined in priſon, till the battle was over. Bract. lib. 2. c. 35. See title Battel.

Victory in the trial by battel is obtained, if either champion proves recreant; that is, yields and pronounces the horrible word of craven; a word of diſgrace and obloquy, rather than of any determinate meaning. But a horrible word it indeed is to the vanquiſhed champion: ſince as a puniſhment to him for forfeiting the land of his principal, by pronouncing that ſhameful word, he is condemned as a recreant to become infamous, and not to be accounted liber & legalis homo; being ſuppoſed by the event to be proved forſworn, and therefore never to be put upon a jury, or admitted as a witneſs in any cauſe. 3 Comm. 340.

CHAMPION OF THE KING, campio regis.] An ancient officer, whoſe office it is at the coronation of our kings, when the king is at dinner, to ride armed cap à pié into Weſtminſter-Hall, and by the proclamation of a herald make a challenge, That if any man ſhall deny the king's title to the crown, he is there ready to defend it in ſingle combat, &c. Which being done, the king drinks to him, and ſends him a gilt cup with a cover full of wine, which the champion drinks, and hath the cup for his fee. This office, ever ſince the coronation of King Richard II. when Baldwin Freville exhibited his petition for it, was adjudged from him to Sir John Dymocke his competitor, (both claiming from Marmion), and hath continued ever ſince in the family of the Dymockes; who hold the manor of Scrivelſby in Lincolnſhire, hereditary from the Marmions, by grand ſerjeanty, viz. That the lord thereof ſhall be the king's champion, as aboveſaid. Accordingly Sir Edward Dymocke performed this office at the coronation of King Charles II. And a perſon of the name of Dymocke performed it, at the coronation of his preſent Majeſty George the Third.

CHANCE, Where a man commits an unlawful act, by misfortune, or chance, and not by deſign, it is a deficiency of the will; as here it obſerves a total neutrality, and doth not co-operate with the deed; which therefore wants one main ingredient of a crime. Of this as it affects the life of another, See title Murder.—It is to be obſerved however generally, that if any accidental miſchief happens to follow from the performance of a lawful act, the party ſtands excuſed from all guilt: but if a man be doing any thing unlawful, and a conſequence enſues which he did not foreſee or intend, as the death of a man or the like, his want of foreſight ſhall be no excuſe; for being guilty of one offence, in doing antecedently what is in itſelf unlawful, he is criminally guilty of whatever conſequence may follow the firſt miſbehaviour. 1 Hal. P. C. 39. See title Chance medley.

CHANCELLOR, Cancellarius.] Was at firſt only a chief notary or ſcribe under the emperor, and was called cancellarius, becauſe he ſate intra cancellos, to avoid the crowd of the people. This word is by ſome derived from cancello, and by others from cancellis, an incloſed or ſeparated place, or chancel, encompaſſed with bars, to defend the judges, and other officers from the preſs of the public. And cancellarius originally, as Lupanus thinks, ſignified only the regiſter in court; Grapharios, ſcil. qui conſcribendis & excipiendis judicum actis dant operam: but this name and officer is of late times greatly advanced, not only in this, but in other kingdoms; for he is the chief adminiſtrator of juſtice, next to the Sovereign, who anciently heard equitable cauſes himſelf.

All other Juſtices in this kingdom are tied to the ſtrict rules of the law, in their judgments; but the Chancellor hath power to moderate the written law, governing his judgment by the law of nature and conſcience, and ordering all things juxtà æquum & bonum: and having the king's power in theſe matters, he hath been called the keeper of the king's conſcience. It has been ſuggeſted, that the Chancellor originally preſided over a political college of ſecretaries, for the writing of treaties, grants, and other public buſineſs; and that the court of equity under the old conſtitution was held before the king and his council in the palace, where one ſupreme court for buſineſs of every kind was kept: and at firſt the Chancellor became a judge to hear and determine petitions to the king, which were referred to him; and in the end, as buſineſs increaſed, the people intitled their ſuits to the chancellor, and not the king: and thus the chancellor's equitable power had by degrees commencement by preſcription. Hiſt. Chan. p. 3. 10, 44, &c.

Staundford ſays, the Chancellor hath two powers; one abſolute, the other ordinary; meaning, that although by his ordinary power, in ſome caſes, he muſt obſerve the form of proceeding as other inferior judges; in his abſolute power he is not limited by the law, but by conſcience and equity, according to the circumſtances of things. See poſt title Chancery.

And though Polydore Virgil, in his hiſtory of England, makes William the Firſt, called the Conqueror, the founder of our chancellors; yet Dugdale has ſhewn that there were many chancellors of England long before that time, which are mentioned in his Origines Juridicales, and catalogues of chancellors; and Sir Edward Coke in his fourth Inſtitute ſaith, it is certain, That both the Britiſh and Saxon kings had their chancellors, whoſe great authority under their kings were in all probability drawn from the reaſonable cuſtom of neighbouring nations and the civil law.

He that bears this chief magiſtracy, is ſtiled the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, which is the higheſt honour of the long robe. A chancellor may be made ſo at will, by patent, but it is ſaid not for life, for being an ancient office, it ought to be granted as hath been accuſtomed. 2 Inſt. 87. But Sir Edward Hide, afterwards Earl of Clarendon, had a patent to be lord chancellor for life, though he was diſmiſſed from that office, and the patent declared void. 1 Sid. 338.

By the Stat. 5 Eliz. cap. 18, The Lord Chancellor and Keeper have one and the ſame power; and therefore ſince that ſtatute, there cannot be a Lord Chancellor and Lord Keeper at the ſame time; before, there might, and had been. 4 Inſt. 78. King Hen. V, had a great ſeal of gold, which he delivered to the Biſhop of Durham, and made him Lord Chancellor, and alſo another of ſilver, which he delivered to the Biſhop of London to keep. But the Lord Bridgman was Lord Keeper, and Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, at the ſame time; which offices were held not to be inconſiſtent. Ibid. By Stat. 1 W. & M. cap. 21, Commiſſioners appointed to execute the office of Lord Chancellor, may exerciſe all the authority, juriſdiction, and execution of laws, which the Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper, of right ought to uſe and execute, &c. ſince which ſtatute this high office hath been ſeveral times in commiſſion.

The office of LORD CHANCELLOR or LORD KEEPER, is now created by the mere delivery of the King's great ſeal into his cuſtody: whereby he becomes, without writ or patent, an officer of the greateſt weight and power of any now ſubſiſting in the kingdom, and ſuperior in point of precedency to every temporal lord.—And the act of taking away this ſeal by the king, or of its being reſigned or given up by the Chancellor, determines his office. (See 1 Sid. 338.)—He is a privy councillor by his office; and, according to Lord Chancellor Elleſmere, prolocutor of the Houſe of Lords by preſcription.—To him belongs the appointment of all Juſtices of peace throughout the kingdom. Being formerly uſually an Eccleſiaſtic (for none elſe were then capable of an office ſo converſant in writings) and preſiding over the Royal Chapel, he became keeper of the King's conſcience; viſitor, in right of the king of all hoſpitals and colleges of the king's foundation, and patron of all the king's livings under the value of twenty marks a year in the king's books. (38 Ed. 3. 3: F. N. B. 35. though Hob. 214. extends this value to twenty pounds)—He is the general guardian of all infants, ideots and lunatics; and has the general ſuperintendance of all charitable uſes in the kingdom. And all this over and above the vaſt and extenſive juriſdiction, which he exerciſes in his judicial capacity in the Court of Chancery. 3 Comm. 47.

The Stat. 25 E. 3. c. 2, declares it to be treaſon to ſlay the Chancellor (and certain other judges) being in their places doing their offices; and it ſeems that the Lord Keeper and Commiſſioners of the great ſeal, are within this ſtatute by virtue of Stats. 5 Eliz. c. 18; and 1 W. & M. c. 21, already mentioned. See title Treaſon.

The Lord Chancellor, now there is no Lord High Steward, is accounted the firſt officer of the kingdom; and he not only keeps the king's great ſeal, but all patents, commiſſions, warrants, &c. from the king, are peruſed and examined by him before ſigned; and Lord Coke ſays the lord chancellor is ſo termed à cancellando, from cancelling the king's letters patent, when granted contrary to law; which is the higheſt point of his juriſdiction. 4 Inſt. 88. He by his oath ſwears well and truly to ſerve the king, and to do right to all manner of people, &c. In his judicial capacity, he hath divers aſſiſtants and officers, viz. The maſter of the rolls, the maſters in chancery, &c. And in matters of difficulty, he calls one or more of the chief juſtices, and judges to aſſiſt him in making his decrees; though in ſuch caſes they only give their advice and opinion, and have no ſhare whatever of the judicial authority.

The Maſter of the Rolls, however has judicial power, and is an aſſiſtant to the Lord Chancellor when preſent, and his deputy when abſent; but he has certain cauſes aſſigned him to hear and decree, which he uſually doth on certain days appointed at the chapel of the Rolls, being aſſiſted by one or more Maſters in chancery: he is, by virtue of his office, chief of the maſters of chancery, and chief clerk of the petty-bag office.

The Twelve Maſters in Chancery ſit ſome of them in court, and take notice of ſuch references as are made to them, to be reported to the court, relating to matters of practice, the ſtate of the proceedings, accounts, &c. and they alſo take affidavits, acknowledge deeds and recogniſances, &c.

The Six Clerks in chancery tranſact and file all proceedings by bill and anſwer; and alſo iſſue out ſome patents that paſs the great ſeal; which buſineſs is done by their under clerks, each of whom has a ſeat there, and whereof every ſix clerk has a certain number in his office, uſually about ten; the whole body being called the ſixty clerks.

The Curſitors of the court, four and twenty in number, make out all original writs in chancery, which are returnable in C. B. &c. and among theſe the buſineſs of the ſeveral counties is ſeverally diſtributed.

The Regiſter is a place of great importance in this court, and he hath ſeveral deputies under him, to take cogniſance of all orders and decrees, and enter and draw them up, &c.

The Maſter of the Subpœna Office iſſues out all writs of ſubpœna.

The Examiners are officers in this court, who take the depoſitions of witneſſes, and are to examine them, and make out copies of the depoſitions.

The Clerk of the Affidavits files all affidavits uſed in court, without which they will not be admitted.

The Clerk of the Rolls ſits conſtantly in the rolls to make ſearches for deeds, offices, &c. and to make out copies.

The

The Clerks of the Petty-Bag Office, in number three, have great variety of buſineſs that goes through their hands, in making out writs of ſummons to parliament, congé d'elires for biſhops, patents for cuſtomers; liberates upon extent of ſtatute-ſtaple, and recovery of recogniſances forfeited, &c. And alſo relating to ſuits for and againſt privileged perſons, &c. And the clerks of this office have ſeveral clerks under them.

The Uſher of the Chancery had formerly the receiving and cuſtody of all money ordered to be depoſited in court, and paid it back again by order: but this buſineſs was afterwards aſſumed by the Maſters in Chancery; till by Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 32, a new officer was appointed, called The Accountant General, to receive the money lodged in court, and convey the ſame to the Bank, to be there kept for the ſuitors of the court.

There is alſo a Serjeant at Arms, to whom perſons ſtanding in contempt are brought up by his ſubſtitute as priſoners.

A Warden of the Fleet, who receives ſuch priſoners as ſtand committed by the court, &c.

Beſides theſe offices, there is a clerk of the crown in Chancery; clerk and controller of the hanaper; clerk for inrolling letters patent, &c. not employed in proceedings of equity, but concerned in making out commiſſions, patents, pardons, &c. under the great ſeal, and collecting the fees thereof. A clerk of the faculties, for diſpenſations, licences, &c; clerk of the preſentations, for benefices of the crown in the chancellor's gift; clerk of appeals, on appeals from the courts of the archbiſhop to the court of chancery: and divers others officers, who are conſtituted by the chancellor's commiſſion.—See poſt title Chancery.

CHANCELLOR of a DIOCESE; or, of a BISHOP.—A perſon appointed to hold the Biſhop's courts, and to aſſiſt him in matters of eccleſiaſtical law. This officer, as well as all other eccleſiaſtical ones, if lay or married, muſt be a Doctor of the civil law ſo created in ſome univerſity. Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 17.

CHANCELLOR OF THE DUTCHY OF LANCASTER.—An officer before whom, or his deputy the court of the Dutchy Chamber of Lancaſter is held. This is a ſpecial juriſdiction concerning all matter of equity relating to lands holden of the king in right of the Dutchy of Lancaſter. Hob. 77: 2 Lev. 24.—This is a thing very diſtinct from the county palatine, which hath alſo its ſeparate Chancery for ſealing of writs and the like. 1 Ventr. 257.—This Dutchy comprizes much territory which lies at a vaſt diſtance from the county, as particularly a very large diſtrict ſurrounded by the city of Weſtminſter. The proceedings in this court are the ſame as on the Equity ſide in the courts of Exchequer and Chancery. 4 Inſt. 206. So that it ſeems not to be a court of record: and it has been holden that thoſe courts have a concurrent juriſdiction with the Dutchy Court, and may take cognizance of the ſame cauſes. 1 C. R. 55: Toth. 145: Hard. 171.

This court is held in Weſtminſter-Hall, and was formerly much uſed. Under the chancellor of the Dutchy are an attorney of the court, one chief clerk or regiſter, and ſeveral auditors, &c.—See further title Counties Palatine.

CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, Is likewiſe a great officer, who, it is thought by many, was originally appointed for the qualifying extremities in the Exchequer: he ſometimes ſits in court, and in the Exchequer Chamber; and with the judges of the court, orders things to the king's beſt benefit. He hath by the Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39, power, with others, to compound for the forfeitures upon penal ſtatutes, bonds and recognizances entered into to the king: he hath alſo great authority in the management of the royal revenue, &c. which ſeems of late to be his chief buſineſs, being commonly the firſt commiſſioner of the treaſury. And though the court of equity in the Exchequer-chamber, was intended to be holden before the treaſurer, chancellor, and barons, it is uſually before the barons only. When there is a lord treaſurer, the chancellor of the exchequer is under treaſurer.

As to the Chancellor of the Order of the Garter. See Stow's Annals, pag. 706.—Chancellor of the Univerſities. See title Courts of the Univerſities.—The office of Chancellor in Cathedral Churches, is thus deſcribed in the Monaſticon. Lectiones legendas in eccleſia per ſe vel per ſuum vicarium auſcultare, male legentes emendare, ſcholas conferre, ſigilla ad cauſas conferre, literas capituli facere & conſignare, libros ſervare, quotieſcunq; voluerit prædicare, prædicationes in eccleſia vel extra eccleſiam prædicare, & cui voluerit prædicationis officium aſſignare. See Mon. Angl. tom. 3. p. 24, 339.

CHANCE-MEDLEY, From the Fr. chance, lapſus and mêler, miſcere.] Such killing of a man as happens either [in ſelf-defence] on a ſudden quarrel; or in the commiſſion of an unlawful act, without any deliberate intention of doing any miſchief at all. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 1.

The ſelf-defence here meant, is that whereby a man may protect himſelf from an aſſault or the like in the courſe of a ſudden brawl or quarrel, by killing him who aſſaults him. And this is what the law expreſſes by this word chance-medley, or as ſome rather chooſe to write it, chaud-medley; the former of which, in its etymology ſignifies a caſual affray, the latter an affray in the heat of blood or paſſion; both of them of pretty much the ſame import: but the former is in common ſpeech too often erroneouſly applied to any manner of homicide, by miſadventure; whereas it appears by Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 5, and in ancient law-books, that it is properly applied to ſuch killing as happens to ſelf-defence, in a ſudden rencounter. 4 Comm. 183; cites Stamf. P. C. 16: 3 Inſt. 55, 7: Foſter 275, 6.—This being in fact a ſpecies of excuſable homicide, comes more properly under the diviſion of murder, and is therefore treated of in that place. See title Murder.—In chance-medley the offender forfeits his goods, but hath a pardon of courſe. See Stat. 6 Ed. 1. c. 9.

CHANCERY.

CANCELLARIA.] The higheſt court of judicature in this kingdom next to the parliament, and of very ancient inſtitution. The juriſdiction of this court is of two kinds; ordinary and extraordinary. The ordinary juriſdiction, is that wherein the Lord Chancellor, Lord Keeper, &c. in his proceedings and judgments, is bound to obſerve the order and method of the common law; and the extraordinary juriſdiction is that which this Court exerciſes in caſes of equity.

The Ordinary Court holds plea of recogniſances acknowledged in the Chancery, writs of ſcire facias for repeal of leters patent, writs of partition, &c. and alſo of all perſonal actions, by or againſt any officer of the court; and by acts of parliament of ſeveral offences and cauſes, cauſes. All original writs, commiſſions of bankrupt, of charitable uſes, and other commiſſions, as ideots, lunacy, &c. iſſue out of this court, for which it is always open; and ſometimes a ſuperſedeas, or writ of privilege, hath been here granted to diſcharge a perſon out of priſon. An habeas corpus, prohibition, &c. may be had from this in the vacation; and here a ſubpœna may be had to force witneſſes to appear in other courts, when they have no power to call them. 4 Inſt. 79: 1 Danv. Abr. 776.

The Extraordinary Court, or Court of Equity, proceeds by the rules of equity and conſcience, and moderates the rigour of the Common law, conſidering the intention rather than the words of the law. Equity being the correction of that wherein the law, by reaſon of its univerſality, is deficient.—On this ground therefore, to maintain a ſuit in Chancery, it is always alledged that the plaintiff is incapable of obtaining relief at common law; and this muſt be without any fault of his own, as by having loſt his bond, &c. Chancery never acting againſt, but in aſſiſtance of the common law, ſupplying its deficiencies, not contradicting its rules. A judgment at law not being reverſable by a decree in chancery. Cro. Eliz. 220. But a bill in chancery may be brought to compel the diſcovery of the contents of a letter which would diſcharge the plaintiff of an action at law, before verdict obtained. 3 C. Rep. 17.

A ſenſible modern writer remarks, that it is not a very eaſy taſk, accurately to deſcribe the juriſdiction of our courts of equity—They who have attempted it have generally failed.—The following extract from that writer on the ſubject may perhaps prove more acceptable than any thing which could fall from the Editor's own pen.

Early in the hiſtory of our juriſprudence, the adminiſtration of juſtice by the ordinary courts, appears to have been incomplete. To ſupply the defect, the courts of equity have gained an eſtabliſhment; aſſuming the power of enforcing the principles, upon which the ordinary courts alſo decide when the powers of thoſe courts or their modes of proceeding are inſufficient for the purpoſe;—of preventing thoſe principles, when enforced by the ordinary courts, from becoming, contrary to the purpoſe of their original eſtabliſhment, inſtruments of injuſtice;—and of deciding on principles of univerſal juſtice, where the interference of a court of judicature is neceſſary to prevent a wrong, and the poſitive law is ſilent. The courts of equity alſo adminiſter to the ends of juſtice, by removing impediments to the fair deciſion of a queſtion in other courts; by providing for the ſafety of property in diſpute, pending a litigation; by reſtraining the aſſertion of doubtful rights, in a manner productive of irreparable damage; by preventing injury to a third perſon from the doubtful title of others; and by putting a bound to vexatious and oppreſſive litigations, and preventing unneceſſary multiplicity of ſuits; and, without pronouncing any judgment on the ſubject, by compelling a diſcovery which may enable other courts to give their judgment; and by preſerving teſtimony, when in danger of being loſt, before the matter to which it relates can be made the ſubject of judicial inveſtigation. This eſtabliſhment has obtained throughout the whole ſyſtem of our judicial policy; moſt of the inferior branches of that ſyſtem having their peculiar courts of equity: [e. g. the court of exchequer, courts of Wales, the counties palatine, cinque ports, &c.] and the Court of Chancery aſſuming a general juriſdiction in caſes which are not within the bounds, or which are beyond the powers, of other juriſdictions. MITFORD'S Treatiſe on the Pleadings in Chancery, 8vo. 1787. 2d edition.

It is not therefore to be expected that all the caſes within the juriſdiction of this court can be enumerated with any degree of accuracy in ſuch a work as this—What confuſedly follows may ſerve to ſhew the leading principles of its deciſions—They who deſire further and more preciſe information, will conſult VINER'S and the other Abridgment and Digeſts, which enter ſo much more fully into the ſubject.

This Court gives relief for and againſt infants, notwithſtanding their minority: and for and againſt married women, notwithſtanding their coverture: in ſome caſes a woman may ſue her huſband for maintenance; ſhe may ſue him when he is beyond ſea, &c. and be compelled to anſwer without her huſband. All frauds and deceits, for which there is no remedy at Common Law may here be redreſſed; as alſo unreaſonable and deceitful engagements and agreements entered into, without conſideration. 1 Vern. 205. In this Court executors may be called upon to give ſecurity and pay intereſt for money that is to lie long in their hands. Here executors may ſue one another, or one executor alone be ſued by the legatees or others, without the reſt: order may be made for performance of a will: it may be decreed who ſhall have the tuition of a child, and other matters are regulated as to the diſpoſal of the goods of teſtators and inteſtates. The following is a general and comprehenſive view of the nature and reaſon of the pleadings in Chancery, extracted and abridged from Mr. Miſford's Treatiſe.

Previous to entering on the ſubject, it ſhould be remembered, that Chancery will not retain a ſuit for any thing under 10*l.* value, except in caſes of charity, nor for lands under 40*s. per annum.*

A ſuit to the extraordinary juriſdiction of the court of chancery, on behalf of a ſubject merely, is commenced by preferring a bill (ſigned by counſel) in the nature of a petition to the lord chancellor, lord keeper or lords commiſſioners of the great ſeal; or to the king himſelf, in his court of Chancery, in caſe the perſon holding the ſeal is a party, or the ſeal is in the king's hand. But if the ſuit is inſtituted on behalf of the crown, or of thoſe who partake of it's prerogative, or whoſe rights are under its particular protection, as the objects of a publick charity, the matter of complaint is offered by way of information, given by the proper officer [uſually the attorney general]. Except in ſome few inſtances, bills and informations have been always in the Engliſh language; and a ſuit thus preferred is therefore commonly termed a ſuit by Engliſh bill, by way of diſtinction from the proceedings in ſuits within the ordinary juriſdiction of the court, which 'till the ſtat. of 4 Geo. II. c. 26, were entered and enrolled more anciently in the French or Roman tongue, and afterwards in the Latin; in the ſame manner as the pleadings in the other courts of common law.

Every bill muſt have for its object one or more of the grounds upon which the juriſdiction of the court is founded; and as that juriſdiction ſometimes extends to decide on the ſubject, and in ſome caſes is only ancillary to the deciſion of another court, or a future ſuit, the bill may 1, either complain of ſome injury which the perſon exhibiting it ſuffers, and pray relief, according to the injury; or, 2, without praying relief, may ſeek a diſcovery of matter neceſſary to ſupport or defend another ſuit; or, 3, although no actual injury is ſuffered, it may complain of a threatened wrong; and, ſtating a probable ground of poſſible injury, may pray the aſſiſtance of the court to enable the plaintiff, or perſon exhibiting the bill to defend himſelf againſt the injury whenever it ſhall be attempted to be committed.

As the court of Chancery has general juriſdiction in matters of equity which are not within the bounds, or which are beyond the powers, of inferior juriſdictions, it aſſumes a controul over thoſe juriſdictions, by removing from them ſuits which they are incompetent to determine. To effect this it requires the party injured to inſtitute a ſuit in the court of Chancery, the ſole object of which is, the removal of the former ſuit, by means of the writ of certiorari; and the prayer of the bill uſed for this purpoſe is confined to that object.

The bill, except it merely prays the writ of certiorari, [in which caſe it does not require any defence, nor can there be any pleading beyond the bill,] requires the anſwer of the defendant or party complained of, upon oath; unleſs the party is entitled to privilege of peerage, or as a lord of parliament, or unleſs a corporation aggregate is made a party. In the firſt caſe the anſwer is required upon the honour of the defendant, and in the latter under the corporation ſeal.

[In the caſe of exhibiting a bill againſt a peer, the Lord Chancellor writes a letter to him, called a letter miſſive.

miſſive, and if he does not put in his anſwer, a ſubpœna iſſues, and then an order to ſhew cauſe why a ſequeſtration ſhould not iſſue, and if he ſtill ſtands out, then a ſequeſtration is granted; for there can be no proceſs of contempt againſt the perſon of a peer: The proceſs is the ſame againſt a member of the houſe of commons, except the letter miſſive.]

An anſwer is thus required in the caſe of a bill, ſeeking the decree of the court on the ſubject of the complaint, with a view—1, To obtain an admiſſion of the caſe made by the bill either in aid of proof; or—2, to ſupply the want of it—3, To obtain a diſcovery of the points in the plaintiff's caſe, controverted by the defendant, and—4, of the grounds on which they are controverted—5, To gain a diſcovery of the caſe on which the defendant relies; and—6, of the manner in which he means to ſupport it.

If the bill ſeeks only the aſſiſtance of the court to protect the plaintiff againſt a future injury, the anſwer of the defendant, upon oath, may be required to obtain an admiſſion of the plaintiff's title, and a diſcovery of the claims of the defendant, and the grounds on which thoſe claims are intended to be ſupported.

When the ſole object of the bill is a diſcovery of matter neceſſary to ſupport or defend another ſuit, the oath of the defendant is required to compel that diſcovery; which oath however the plaintiff may, if he thinks proper diſpenſe with, by conſenting to or obtaining an order of court for the purpoſe; and this is frequently done for the convenience of parties.

To the bill thus preferred (unleſs it is merely for a certiorari) it is neceſſary for the perſon or perſons complained of to make defence, or to diſclaim all rights to the matters in queſtion.

As the bill calls upon the defendant to anſwer the ſeveral charges it contains, he muſt do ſo, unleſs he can diſpute the right of the plaintiff to compel ſuch anſwer; either, 1, From ſome impropriety in requiring the diſcovery ſought; or 2, From ſome objection to the proceeding to which the diſcovery is propoſed to be aſſiſtant; or 3, Unleſs by diſclaiming all right to the matters in queſtion, he ſhews a further anſwer from him to be unneceſſary.

The grounds on which defence may be made to a bill either by anſwer, or by diſputing the right of the plaintiff to compel ſuch anſwer, are various. 1. The ſubject of the ſuit may not be within the juriſdiction of a court of Equity; 2. Some other court of Equity may have the proper juriſdiction. 3. The plaintiff may not be entitled to ſue, by reaſon of ſome perſonal diſability. 4. The plaintiff may not be the perſon he pretends to be.—5. He may have no intereſt in the ſubject, or 6, Though he has ſuch intereſt he may have no right to call upon the defendant concerning it. 7. The defendant may not be the perſon he is alledged to be by the bill; or 8, He may not have that intereſt in the ſubject to make him liable to the claims of the plaintiff.—And notwithſtanding all theſe requiſites concur. 9. Still the plaintiff may not be entitled in the whole, or in part to the relief or aſſiſtance he prays; or 10. Even if he is ſo entitled, the defendant may alſo have rights in the ſubject which may require the attention of the court, and call for its interference to adjuſt the rights of all parties.—The effecting complete juſtice, and finally determining as far as poſſible, all queſtions concerning the ſubject being the conſtant aim of courts of Equity.

Some of theſe grounds may extend only to entitle the defendant to diſpute the plaintiff's claim to the relief prayed by the bill; and may not be ſufficient to protect him from making the diſcovery ſought by it: and where there is no ground for diſputing the plaintiff's right to relief, or if no relief is prayed, the impropriety or immateriality of the diſcovery may protect the defendant from making it.

The form of making defence varies according to the foundation on which it is made, and the extent in which it ſubmits to the judgment of the court.—If it reſts on the bill, and, on the foundation of the matter there apparent, demand the judgment of the court, whether the ſuit ſhall proceed at all, it is termed A Demurrer. If on the foundation of new matter offered, it demands judgment whether the defendant ſhall be compelled to anſwer further, it aſſumes a different form, and is termed A Plea. If it ſubmits to anſwer generally the charges in the bill, demanding the judgment of the court on the whole caſe made on both ſides, it is offered in a ſhape ſtill different, and is ſimply called An Anſwer.—If the defendant diſclaims all intereſt in the matters in queſtion, his anſwer to the complaint made is different from all the others, and is termed A Diſclaimer.—And theſe ſeveral forms, or any of them may be uſed together, if applied to ſeparate and diſtinct parts of the bill.

A Demurrer being founded on the bill itſelf, neceſſarily admits the truth of the facts contained in the bill, or in that part of it to which the demurrer extends; and therefore as no fact can be in queſtion between the parties, the court may immediately proceed to pronounce its definitive judgment on the demurrer; which, if favourable to the defendant, puts an end to ſo much of the ſuit as the demurrer extends to. A demurrer thus allowed conſequently prevents any further proceeding.

A Plea is alſo intended to prevent further proceeding at large, by reſting on ſome point founded on matter ſtated in the plea; and it therefore admits, for the purpoſes of the plea, the truth of the facts contained in the bill, ſo far as they are not controverted by facts ſtated in the plea.—Upon the ſufficiency of this defence the court will alſo give immediate judgment, ſuppoſing the facts ſtated in it to be true: but the judgment if favourable to the defendant, is not definitive; for the truth of the plea may be denied by A Replication, and the parties may then proceed to examine witneſſes, the one to prove and the other to diſprove the facts ſtated in the plea. The replication in this caſe concludes the pleadings, though if the truth of the plea is not ſupported, further proceedings may be had, which will be noticed preſently.

An Anſwer generally controverts the facts ſtated in the bill, or ſome of them; and ſtates other facts to ſhew the rights of the defendant, in the ſubject of the ſuit; but ſometimes it admits the truth of the caſe made by the bill, and either with or without ſtating additional facts, ſubmits the queſtions ariſing upon the caſe, thus made, to the judgment of the court. If an anſwer admits the facts ſtated in the bill, or ſuch of them as are material to the plaintiff's caſe; and ſtates no new facts, or ſuch only as the plaintiff is willing to admit, no further pleading is neceſſary; the court will decide on the anſwer, conſidering conſidering it as true. So if the ſole object of the ſuit is to obtain a diſcovery, there can be no proceeding beyond an anſwer by which the diſcovery is obtained. But if neceſſary to maintain the plaintiff's caſe, the truth of the anſwer, or of any part of it, may be denied, and the ſufficiency of the bill may be aſſerted by a replication, which in this caſe alſo concludes the pleadings according to the preſent practice of the court.

If a Demurrer or Plea is over-ruled upon argument, the defendant muſt make a new defence. This he cannot do by a ſecond demurrer of the ſame extent with that over-ruled; for although, by a ſtanding order of the court, a cauſe of demurrer muſt be ſet forth in the pleading, yet if that is over-ruled, any other cauſe appearing on the bill may be offered on argument of the demurrer, and if valid, will be allowed, the rule of court affecting only the coſts. But after a demurrer has been over-ruled, new defence may be made by a demurrer leſs extended, or by plea or anſwer.—And after a plea has been over-ruled, defence may be made by demurrer, by a new plea, or by an anſwer, and the proceedings upon the new defence will be the ſame as if it had been originally made.

A Diſclaimer neither aſſerting any fact, nor denying any right ſought by the bill, admits of no further pleading.

Suits thus inſtituted are ſometimes imperfect in their frame, or become ſo by accident before their end has been obtained; and the intereſts in the property in litigation may be changed, pending the ſuit, in various ways.—To ſupply the defects ariſing from any ſuch circumſtances, new ſuits may become neceſſary, to add to, or continue, or obtain the benefit of, the original ſuit. A litigation commenced by one party, ſometimes renders neceſſary a litigation by another party, to operate as a defence, or to obtain a full deciſion on the rights of all parties. [And bills filed for this purpoſe are termed croſs-bills]—Where the court has given judgment on a ſuit, it will in ſome caſes permit that judgment to be controverted, ſuſpended or avoided by a ſecond ſuit; and ſometimes a ſecond ſuit becomes neceſſary to carry into execution a judgment of the court.—Suits inſtituted for any of theſe purpoſes are alſo commenced by bill; and hence ariſes a variety of diſtinctions of the kinds of bills neceſſary to anſwer the ſeveral purpoſes; [as bills of review, (which among other cauſes may be brought, where new matter is diſcovered, in time, after the decree made) bills of revivor, &c. See 3 Com. 448, &c.] and on all the different kinds of bills there may be the ſame pleadings as on a bill uſed for inſtituting an original ſuit.

It frequently happens, that pending a ſuit, the parties diſcover ſome error or defect in ſome of the pleadings; and if this can be rectified by amendment of the pleadings, the court will in many caſes permit it.—This indulgence is moſt extenſive in the caſe of bills: which being often framed upon an inaccurate ſtate of the caſe, it was formerly the practice to ſupply their deficiencies, and avoid the conſequences of errors by ſpecial replications: but this tending to long and intricate pleading, the ſpecial replication, requiring a rejoinder in which the defendant might in like manner ſupply defects in his anſwer, and to which the plaintiff might ſur-rejoin, the ſpecial replication is now diſuſed, for this purpoſe: and the court will in general permit a plaintiff to rectify any error, or ſupply any defect in his bill, either by amendment or by a ſupplemental bill, and will alſo permit, in ſome caſes, a defendant in like manner to complete his anſwer, either by amendment or by a further anſwer.

If the plaintiff conceives a defendant's anſwer to be inſufficient to the charges contained in the bill, he may take exceptions againſt it, on which it is referred to a Maſter to report, whether it be ſufficient or not; to which report exceptions may be alſo made. The anſwer, replication, and rejoinder, &c. being ſettled, and the parties come to iſſue, witneſſes are examined upon interrogatories, either in court, or by commiſſion in the country, wherein the parties uſually join; and when the plaintiff and defendant have examined their witneſſes, publication is made of the depoſitions, and the cauſe is ſet down for hearing, after which follows the decree.

If however in the proceſs of the cauſe the parties come to an iſſue of fact, which by the common law is triable by a jury, the Lord Chancellor in this caſe, delivers the record into the King's Bench to be tried there; and after trial had, the record is remanded into Chancery, and judgment given there. Trials and iſſues at law are frequently directed by the Court, which in that caſe makes an interlocutory decree or order, that after trial the parties ſhall reſort to the court on the equity reſerved.

Interlocutory orders and decrees are alſo made on other occaſions; as for injunctions till a hearing, where the injury ſuſtained by the plaintiff requires ſuch immediate interference. See title Injunction.

If the plaintiff diſmiſſes his own bill, or the defendant obtains the diſmiſſal of it for want of proſecution, or if the decree is in behalf of the defendant, the bill is diſmiſſed with coſts to be taxed by a Maſter. Stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16. If the defendant does not appear, on being ſerved with the proceſs of ſubpœna, in order to anſwer, upon affidavit of the ſervice of the writ, an attachment iſſues out againſt him: and if a non eſt inventus is returned, an attachment with proclamation goes forth againſt him; and if he ſtands further out in contempt, then a commiſſion of rebellion may be iſſued, for apprehending him, and bringing him to the Fleet priſon; in the execution whereof the perſons to whom directed may juſtify breaking open doors. If the defendant ſtands further in contempt, a ſerjeant at arms is to be ſent out to take him; and if he cannot be taken, a ſequeſtration of his land may be obtained till he appears. And if a decree, when made, is not obeyed, being ſerved upon the party under the ſeal of the court, all the aforementioned proceſſes of contempt may iſſue out againſt him, for his impriſonment till he yields obedience to it.—The court of Chancery, notwithſtanding its very extenſive power binding the perſon only, and not the eſtate or effects of the defendant. And in this ſenſe, we preſume, it is ſaid that it is no court of record. 1 Danv. Ab. 749, and Chan. Rep. 193, Howard v. Suffolk.

Where there is any error in a decree in matter of law, there may be a bill of review, which is in nature of a writ of error; or an appeal to the Houſe of Lords. Old authorities have been quoted, that a writ of error lies returnable in B. R.—And that a judgment of Chancery may be referred to the twelve judges. 4 Inſt. 80: 3 Bulſt. 116. But it is now uſual to appeal to the Houſe of Lords; which appeals are to be ſigned by two counſel of eminence, and exhibited by way of petition; the petition or appeal is lodged with the clerk of the Houſe of Lords, and read in the houſe, whereon the appellee is ordered to put in his anſwer, and a day fixed for hearing the cauſe; and after counſel heard, and evidence given on both ſides, the Lords affirm or reverſe the decree of the Chancery, and finally determine the cauſe by a majority of votes, &c. Though it is to be obſerved on an appeal to the Lords from a decree in Chancery, no proofs will be permitted to be read as evidence, which were not made uſe of in the Chancery. Preced Canc. 212.

No ſubpœna, or other proceſs of appearance, ſhall iſſue out of Chancery, &c. till after a bill is filed, (except bills for injunctions to ſtay waſte, or to ſtay ſuits at law commenced), and a certificate thereof brought to the ſubpœna office. Stat. 4 & 5 An. c. 16. Perſons in remainder, or reverſion of any eſtate, after the death of another, on making affidavit in the court of Chancery, that they have cauſe to believe ſuch other perſon dead, and his death concealed by the guardian, truſtees or others, may move the lord chancellor to order ſuch guardian, truſtees, &c. to produce the perſon ſuſpected to be concealed; and if he be not produced, he ſhall be taken to be dead, and thoſe in reverſion, &c. may enter upon the eſtate: and if ſuch perſon be abroad, a commiſſion may be iſſued for his being viewed by commiſſioners. Stat. 6 An. c. 18.

Infants under the age of twenty-one years, ſeiſed of eſtates in truſt, or by way of mortgage, are enabled by ſtatute to make conveyances thereof; or they may be compelled thereto, by order of the court of Chancery, &c. upon petition and hearing of the parties concerned. 7 An. c. 9. And ſee the ſtatute of 4 Geo. 2. c. 10. whereby ideots and lunaticks ſeiſed of eſtates in truſt, &c. may make conveyances by order of the Chancery, &c. See titles Infant, Lunatic.

By 12 Geo. 1. c. 32 and 33, the power of the Maſters was abridged, with reſpect to the ſuitors' money, which is now to be paid into the Bank of England: and an additional ſtamp-duty, on writs, proceſſes, &c. is granted for relief of the ſuitors, and as a common ſtock of the Court of Chancery.

All orders and decrees made and ſigned by the Maſter of the Rolls, ſhall be deemed and taken to be good and valid orders and decrees of the court of Chancery; but not to be inrolled till ſigned by the lord chancellor, and ſubject to reverſal, &c. by him. Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 30.

Where a defendant does not appear after ſubpœna iſſued, but keeps out of the way to avoid being ſerved with the proceſs; on affidavit that he is not to be found, and ſuſpected to be gone beyond ſea, or to abſcond, &c. the court of Chancery will make an order for his appearance at a certain day; a copy of which order is to be publiſhed in the London Gazette, &c. and then, if he do not appear, the plaintiff's bill ſhall be taken pro confeſſo, and the defendant's eſtate ſequeſtered, &c. But perſons out of the kingdom, returning in ſeven years, may have a rehearing in ſix months, and be admitted to anſwer; otherwiſe to be barred, by final decree. 5 Geo. 2. c. 25.

By 12 Geo. 2. c. 24, Part of the ſuitors' caſh is to be placed out at intereſt, for defraying the charge of the Accountant General's office. And ſee 23 Geo. 2. c. 25, for making good deficiencies to the clerk of the Hanaper, and for augmenting the income of the Maſter of the Rolls.

By 1 Geo. 3. c. 1, The king is empowered to grant a ſum not exceeding 5000*l. per annum* to the chancellor.

By 4 Geo. 3. c. 32, Part of the ſuitors' caſh unclaimed to be placed at intereſt, to be applied to the Accountant-General's third clerk, and other purpoſes.

By 5 Geo. 3. c. 28, 80,000*l.* of the ſuitors' caſh was placed at intereſt; and 200*l. per annum* paid thereout half-yearly, to each of the eleven maſters of the court.

By 9 Geo. 3. c. 19, 20,000*l.* more of the ſuitors' money was placed at intereſt: out of which 460*l. per annum* is paid in ſalaries, viz. 250*l.* to the accountant-general; 50*l.* to his firſt clerk; 40*l.* to his ſecond clerk; and 120*l.* to his 4th clerk, in lieu of all fees. The reſidue being brought to account.

By 14 Geo. 3. c. 43, 50,000*l.* more was in like manner placed out; and out of the intereſt thereof, and the ſurplus intereſt under 12 Geo. 2. c. 24; 5 Geo. 3. c. 28; and 9 Geo. 3. c. 19, the Chancellor is by his order to direct the re-building of the Six Clerks' office, and apply 10,000*l.* (and by 20 Geo. 3. c. 33, 3000*l.* more) for building the Regiſter's and Accountant-General's offices; to be veſted in the Accountant-General and his ſucceſſors.

By 15 Geo. 3. c. 22, Part of Lincoln's-Inn garden was veſted in the Accountant General, in truſt, for the purpoſes in the laſt act, as to the Regiſter's and Accountant-General's office.

By 15 Geo. 3. c. 56, the Lord Chancellor may apply certain ſums to be raiſed, as mentioned in 14 Geo. 3, for the purpoſes of this and that act; the Six Clerks' Office to be built on part of Lincoln's-Inn garden, and the ſame veſted in the Six Clerks.

The Stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 59, regulates the leaſes to be made from time to time, by the Maſter of the Rolls for the time being.

By Stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 42, 300,000*l.* further is to be employed in building offices for the Maſters in Chancery, &c.

For other parts of this ſubject. See titles Injunction, Interrogatories, &c.

CHANGER, An officer belonging to the king's mint, whoſe office conſiſts chiefly in exchanging coin for bullion, brought in by merchants or others: it is written after the old way, chaunger. Stat. 2 Hen. 6. cap. 12.

CHANTER, cantator.] A Singer in the choir of a cathedral church; and is uſually applied to the chief of the ſingers. This word is mentioned in 13 Eliz. c. 10. At St. David's cathedral in Wales, the chanter is next to the biſhop; for there is no dean. Camb. Britan.

CHANTRY, or CHAUNTRY, cantaria.] A little church, chapel, or particular altar, in ſome cathedral church, &c. endowed with lands, or other revenues, for the maintenance of one or more prieſts, daily to ſing maſs, and officiate divine ſervice for the ſouls of the donors, nors, and such others as they appointed. See Stat. 1 E. 6. c. 14, which in effect put an end to these chantries, by declaring it not to be lawful for any person to enter for non-performance of the conditions on which they were founded.

Of these chantries, mention is made of forty-seven belonging to St. Paul's church in London, by Dugdale, in his history of that church.

CHAPEL, capella, Fr. chapelle.] Is either adjoining to a church, for performing divine service; or separate from the mother-church, where the parish is wide, which is commonly called a Chapel of ease. And chapels of ease are built for the ease of those parishioners who dwell far from the parochial church, in prayer and preaching only; for the sacraments, [marriages,] and burials ought to be performed in the parochial church. 2 Rol. Abr. 340.

These chapels are served by inferior curates, provided at the charge of the rector, &c. And the curates are therefore removable at the pleasure of the rector or vicar: but chapels of ease may be parochial, and have a right to sacraments and burials, and to a distinct minister, by custom; (though subject in some respects to the mother-church:) and parochial chapels differ only in name from parish churches, but they are small, and the inhabitants within the district are few. In some places chapels of ease are endowed with lands or tithes, and in other places by voluntary contributions; and in some few districts there are chapels which baptize and administer the sacraments, and have chapel-wardens; but these chapels are not exempted from the visitation of the Ordinary, nor the parishioners who resort thither from contributing to the repairs of the mother-church; especially if they bury there; for the chapel generally belongs to, and is as it were a part of the mother-church; and the parishioners are obliged to go to the mother-church, but not to the chapel. 2 Rol. Abr. 289. And hence it is said, that the offerings made to any chapel, are to be rendered to the mother-church; unless there be a custom that the chaplain shall have them.

Public chapels, annexed to parish churches, shall be repaired by the parishioners, as the church is; if any other persons be not bound to do it. 2 Inst. 489. Besides the 'fore-mentioned chapels, there are free chapels, perpetually maintained and provided with a minister, without charge to the rector or parish; or that are free and exempt from all ordinary jurisdiction; and these are where some lands or rents are charitably bestowed on them. Stat. 37 Hen. 8. cap. 4: 1 Ed. 6. c. 14. There are also private chapels, built by noblemen, and others, for private worship, in or near their own houses, maintained at the charge of those noble persons to whom they belong, and provided with chaplains and stipends by them; which may be erected without leave of the bishop, and need not be consecrated, though they anciently were so, nor are they subject to the jurisdiction of the Ordinary.

There are likewise chapels in the Universities, belonging to particular colleges, which, though they are consecrated, and sacraments are administered there, yet they are not liable to the visitation of the bishop, but of the founder. 2 Inst. 363.—See title Marriage.

CHAPELRY, capellania.] Is the same thing to a chapel, as a parish to a church; being the precinct and limits thereof.

CHAPERON, Fr.] A hood or bonnet, anciently worn by the knights of the garter, as part of the habit of that noble order: but in heraldry it is a little escutcheon fixed in the forehead of the horses that draw a hearse at a funeral.

CHAPITERS, Lat. capitula, Fr. chapitres, i. e. chapters of a book.] Signify in our common law a summary of such matters as are to be enquired of, or presented before justices in eyre, justices of assise, or of peace, in their sessions. Britton, cap. 3, useth the word in this signification: and chapiters are now most commonly called articles, and delivered by the mouth of the justice in his charge to the inquest; whereas, in ancient times, (as appears by Bracton and Britton) they were, after an exhortation given by the justices for the good observation of the laws and the king's peace, first read in open court, and then delivered in writing to the grand inquest, for their better observance; and the grand jury were to answer upon their oaths to all the articles thus delivered them, and not put the judges to long and learned charges to little or no purpose, for want of remembering the same, as they do now, when they think their duty well enough performed, if they only present those few of many misdemeanors which are brought before them by way of indictment.

It is to be wished that this order of delivering written articles to grand juries were still observed, whereby crimes would be more effectually punished: in some inferior courts, as the court leet, &c. in several parts of England, it is usual at this day for stewards of those courts to deliver their charges in writing to the juries sworn to enquire of offences. Horne, in his Mirror of Justices, expresses what those articles were wont to contain. Lib. 3. cap. des Articles in Eyre. And an example of articles of this kind, may be found in the book of assises. F. 138.

CHAPLAIN, capellanus.] Is most commonly taken for one that is depending upon the king, or other noble person, to instruct him and his family, and say divine service in his house, where there is usually a private chapel for that purpose. The King, Queen, Prince, Princess, &c. may retain as many chaplains as they please; and the king's chaplains may hold any such number of benefices of the king's gift, as the king shall think fit to bestow upon them.

An Archbishop may retain eight chaplains; a Duke, or a Bishop, six; Marquis or Earl, five; Viscount, four; Baron, Knight of the Garter, or Lord Chancellor, three; a Dutchess, Marchioness, Countess, Baroness, (being widows) the Treasurer, and Controller of the king's house, the King's Secretary, Dean of the Chapel, Almoner, and Master of the Rolls, each of them two; the Chief Justice of the King's Bench; and Warden of the Cinque Ports, one; all which chaplains may purchase a licence or dispensation, and take two benefices with cure of souls. Stat. 21 Hen. 8. cap. 13.

But both the livings must have cure of souls; and the statute expressly excepts deaneries, archdeaconries, chancellorships, treasurerships, chanterships, prebends, and sinecure rectories. A dispensation in this case can only be granted to hold one benefice more, except to clerks who are of the privy council, who may hold three by dispensation. By the canon law, no person can hold a second incompatible benefice, without a dispensation: and in that case, if the first is under 8*l. per annum*, [in the king's book] it is ſo far void, that the patron may preſent another clerk, or the biſhop may deprive; but till deprivation, no advantage can be taken by lapſe. See title Advowſon.—But independent of the ſtatute, a clergyman by diſpenſations may hold any number of benefices, if they are all under 8*l. per annum*; except the laſt; and then by a diſpenſation under the ſtatute, he may hold one more. 1 Comm. 392 in n.

By the 41ſt. canon of 1603, the two benefices muſt not be further diſtant from each other than thirty miles; and the perſon obtaining the diſpenſation, muſt at leaſt be a Maſter of Arts in one of the Univerſities. But the proviſions of this canon are not enforced or regarded in the temporal courts. 2 Bl. Rep. 968. See ante title Canon Law.

Alſo every Judge of the King's Bench and Common Pleas; and Chancellor and Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and the King's Attorney and Solicitor General, may each of them have one chaplain, attendant on his perſon, having one benefice with cure, who may be non-reſident on the ſame, by Stat. 25 Hen. 8. cap. 16.

And the Groom of the ſtole, Treaſurer of the king's chamber, and Chancellor of the dutchy of Lancaſter, may retain each one chaplain. Stat. 33 Hen. 8. cap. 28. But the chaplains under theſe two laſt ſtatutes, are not entitled to diſpenſations under Stat. 21 Hen. 8. If a nobleman hath his full number of chaplains allowed by law, and retains one more, who has diſpenſation to hold plurality of livings, it is not good. Cro. Eliz. 723.

If one perſon has two or more of the titles or characters mentioned in Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13, united in himſelf, he can only retain the number of chaplains limited to his higheſt degree. 4 Co. 90. The king may preſent his own chaplains, i. e. waiting chaplains in ordinary, to any number of livings in the gift of the crown, and even in addition to what they hold upon the preſentation of a ſubject without diſpenſation; but a king's chaplain being beneficed by the king, cannot afterwards take a living from a ſubject, but by a diſpenſation according to the Stat. § 29: 1 Salk. 161.

A perſon retaining a chaplain, muſt not only be capable thereof at the time of granting the inſtrument of retainer, but he muſt continue capable of qualifying till his chaplain is advanced: and therefore if a duke, earl, &c. retain a chaplain, and die; or if ſuch a noble perſon be attainted of treaſon; or if an officer, qualified to retain a chaplain, is removed from his office, the retainer is determined: but where a chaplain hath taken a ſecond benefice before his lord dieth, or is attainted, &c. the retainer is in force to qualify him to enjoy the benefices.

And if a woman that is noble by marriage, afterwards marries one under the degree of nobility, her power to retain chaplains will be determined; though it is otherwiſe where a woman is noble by deſcent, if ſhe marry under degree of nobility, for in ſuch caſe her retainer before or after marriage is good. A Baroneſs, &c. during the coverture, may not retain chaplains; if ſhe doth, the lord, her huſband, may diſcharge them, as likewiſe her former chaplains, before their advancement. 4 Rep. 118.

A Chaplain muſt be retained by letters teſtimonial under hand and ſeal, or he is not a chaplain within the ſtatute; ſo that it is not enough for a ſpiritual perſon to be retained by word only to be a chaplain, by ſuch perſon as may qualify by the ſtatutes to hold livings, &c. al, though he abide and ſerve as chaplain in the family. And where a nobleman hath retained and thus qualified his number of chaplains, if he diſmiſſes them from their attendance upon any diſpleaſure, after they are preferred, yet they are his chaplains at large, and may hold their livings during their lives; and ſuch nobleman, though he may retain other chaplains in his family, merely as chaplains, he cannot qualify any others to hold pluralities while the firſt are living: for if a nobleman could diſcharge his chaplain when advanced, to qualify another in his place, and qualify other chaplains, during the lives of chaplains diſcharged, by theſe means he might advance as many chaplains as he would, whereby the ſtatutes would be evaded. 4 Rep. 90.—See further tit. Advowſon, Parſon.

CHAPTER, capitulum.] A congregation of clergymen under the Dean in a cathedral church: congregatio clericorum in eccleſia cathedrali, conventuali, regulari, vel collegiata. This collegiate company is metaphorically termed capitulum, ſignifying a little head, it being a kind of head, not only to govern the dioceſe in the vacation of the biſhoprick, but alſo in many things to adviſe and aſſiſt the biſhop when the ſee is full, for which, with the Dean, they form a council. Co. Lit. 103. The chapter conſiſts of prebendaries or canons, which are ſome of the chief men of the church, and therefore are called capita eccleſiæ: they are a ſpiritual corporation aggregate, which they cannot ſurrender without leave of the biſhop, becauſe he hath an intereſt in them; they with the dean, have power to confirm the biſhop's grants; during the vacancy of an archbiſhoprick, they are guardians of the ſpiritualties, and as ſuch have authority by the Stat. 25 Hen. 8. cap. 21, to grant diſpenſations; likewiſe as a corporation they have power to make leaſes, &c.

When the Dean and Chapter confirm grants of the biſhop, the Dean joins with the Chapter, and there muſt be the conſent of the major part; which conſent is to be expreſſed by their fixing of their ſeal to the deed, in one place, and at one time, either in the chapter-houſe, or ſome other place; and this conſent is the will of many joined together. Dyer 233. They had alſo a check on the biſhop at common law; for 'till Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28, his grant or leaſe would not have bound his ſucceſſors, unleſs confirmed by the Dean and Chapter. 1 Inſt. 103.

A chapter is not capable to take by purchaſe or gift, without the dean, who is the head of the body: but there may be a chapter without a dean, as the chapter of the collegiate church of Southwell; and grants by, or to them, are as effectual as other grants by dean and chapter. Yet where there are chapters without deans, they are not properly chapters: and the chapter in a collegiate church, where there is no epiſcopal ſee, as at Weſtminſter and Windſor, is more properly called a college.

Chapters are ſaid to have their beginning before Deans; and formerly the biſhop had the rule and ordering of things without a dean and chapter, which were conſtituted afterwards; and all the miniſters within his dioceſe were as his chapter, to aſſiſt him in ſpiritual matters. 2 Rol. Rep. 454: 3 Co. 75. The biſhop hath a power of viſiting the dean and chapter: but the dean and chapter have nothing to do with what the biſhop tranſacts as ordinary. 3 Rep. 75. Though the biſhop and chapter are but one body, yet their poſſeſſions are for the moſt part divided; vided; as the biſhop hath his part in right of his biſhoprick; the dean hath a part in right of his deanery; and each prebendary hath a certain part in right of his prebend; and each too is incorporated by himſelf.

Deans and Chapters have ſome of them eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction in ſeveral pariſhes, (beſides that authority they have within their own body), executed by their officials; alſo temporal juriſdiction in ſeveral manors belonging to them, in the ſame manner as biſhops, where their ſtewards keep courts, &c. 2 Rol. Abr. 229. It has been obſerved, that though the chapter have diſtinct parcels of the biſhop's eſtate aſſigned for their maintenance, the biſhop hath little more than a power over them in his viſitations, and is ſcarce allowed to nominate half of thoſe to their prebends, who were originally of his family: but of common right it is ſaid he is their patron. Rol. ibid.—They are now ſometimes appointed by the king, ſometimes by the biſhop, and ſometimes elected by each other. 1 Comm. 383. See further title Dean.

CHARGE of Juſtices in Seſſions, &c. See title Chapiters.

CHARGE and DISCHARGE, A charge is ſaid to be a thing done that bindeth him that doth it, or that which is his, to the performance thereof: and diſcharge is the removal, or taking away of that charge. Terms de Ley. Land may be charged divers ways; as by grant of rent out of it, by ſtatutes, judgments, conditions, warrants, &c. Lands in fee-ſimple may be charged in fee: and where a man may diſpoſe of the land itſelf, he may charge it by a rent, or ſtatute, one way or other. Lit. ſect. 648: Moor Ca. 129: Dyer 10. If one charge land in tail, and land in fee-ſimple, and die; the land in fee only ſhall be chargeable. Bro. Cha. 9.

Lands intailed may be charged in fee, if the eſtate-tail be cut off by recovery: if tenant in tail charge the land, and after levy a fine or ſuffer a recovery of the lands, to his own uſe; this confirms the charge, and it ſhall continue. 1 Rep. 61. A tenant for life charges the land, and then makes a feoffment to a ſtranger, or doth waſte, &c. whereby it is forfeited, he in reverſion ſhall hold it charged during his (the tenant's) life: and if one have a leaſe for life or years of land, and grant a rent out of it; if after he ſurrenders his eſtate, yet the charge ſhall continue ſo long as the eſtate had endured, in caſe it had not been ſurrendered. 1 Rep. 67, 145: Dyer 10.

If one jointenant charge land, and after releaſe to his companion and die, the ſurvivor ſhall hold it charged: but if it had come to him by ſurvivorſhip, it would be otherwiſe. 6 Rep. 76: 1 Shep. Abr. 325. He that hath a remainder or reverſion of land may charge it; becauſe of the poſſibility that the land will come into poſſeſſion, and then the poſſeſſion ſhall be charged. But where one leaſes land for life, and grants the reverſion or remainder over to A. B. who charges the land, and dies, and the tenant for life is heir to the fee; in this caſe he ſhall hold it diſcharged, for he had the poſſeſſion by purchaſe, though he had the fee by diſcent. Bro. 11, 16: 1 Rep. 62.

If a rent be iſſuing out of a houſe, &c. and it falls down, the charge ſhall remain upon the ſoil. 9 E. 4. 20. But when the eſtate is gone upon which the charge was grounded, there, generally, the charge is determined. Co. Lit. 349. And in all caſes where any executory thing is created by deed, there by conſent of all the parties it may be by deed defeated and diſcharged. 10 Rep. 49. See titles Eſtate, Limitations, Mortgage, &c.

CHARITABLE CORPORATION. A Society of perſons in the late reign obtained a ſtatute to lend money to induſtrious poor, at 5 l per cent. intereſt on pawns and pledges, to prevent their falling into the hands of the pawn-brokers, and therefore they were called the Charitable Corporation: but they likewiſe took 5 l. per cent. for the charge of officers, warehouſes, &c. And in the fifth year of King Geo. 2 the chief officers of this corporation, by connivance of the principal director, abſconded and broke, and defrauded the public proprietors of great ſums; for relief of the ſufferers wherein, as to part of their loſſes, ſeveral ſtatutes were made and enacted. See Stats. 5 Geo. 2. cc. 31, 32: 7 Geo. 2 c. 11.

CHARITABLE USES. The laws againſt deviſes in Mortmain (ſee that title) do not extend to any thing but ſuperſtitious uſes; it is therefore held, that a man may give lands for the maintenance of a ſchool, an hoſpital, or any other charitable uſes. But as it was apprehended, from recent experience, that perſons on their death beds might make large and improvident diſpoſitions, even for theſe good purpoſes, and defeat the political end of the ſtatutes of Mortmain, it is therefore enacted by Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 36, that no lands or tenements, or money to be laid out thereon, ſhall be given for, or charged with, any charitable uſes whatſoever, unleſs by deed indented, executed in the preſence of two witneſſes, twelve calendar months before the death of the donor; and enrolled in the court of Chancery within ſix months after its execution; (except Stock in the public funds, and which muſt be transferred at leaſt ſix calendar months previous to the donor's death;) and unleſs ſuch gift be made to take effect immediately and be without power of revocation; and that all other gifts ſhall be void. The two Univerſities, their colleges, and the ſcholars on the foundation of the colleges of Eaton, Wincheſter and Weſtminſter, are exempted out of this act; but with this proviſo, that no college ſhall be at liberty to purchaſe more advowſons than are equal in number to one moiety of the fellows or ſtudents on their foundations.

Corporations are excepted out of the ſtatutes of Wills (32 H. 8. c. 1: 34 H. 8. c. 5: See titles Deviſe, Wills,) to prevent the extenſion of gifts in mortmain; but now by conſtruction of Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4, (See the next paragraph) it is held that a deviſe to a corporation for a charitable uſe is valid, as operating in the nature of an appointment, rather than of a bequeſt. And indeed the piety of judges hath formerly carried them great lengths in ſupporting ſuch charitable uſes: (Pre. Ch. 272.) it being held that the Stat. of Eliz. which favours appointments to charities, ſuperſedes and repeals all former ſtatutes: (Gilb. Rep. 45: 1 P. Wms. 248:) and ſupplies all defects of aſſurances. (Duke 84.) And therefore not only a deviſe to a corporation, but a deviſe by a copyhold tenant, without ſurrender, to the uſe of his will, and a deviſe, nay even a ſettlement by tenant in tail, without either fine or recovery, if made to a charitable uſe, is good by way of appointment. Moor 890: 2 Vern. 453: Pre. Ch. 16: 2 Comm. 375.

The king as parens patriæ has the general ſuperintendance of all charities, which he exerciſes by the Lord Chancellor. And therefore whenever it is neceſſary, the Attorney-General, at the relation of ſome informant, who is usually called the relator, files ex officio, an information in the court of Chancery, to have the Charity properly established. Also by Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4, authority is given to the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, and to the Chancellor of the Dutchy of Lancaster, respectively, to grant commissions under their several seals, to enquire into any abuses of charitable donations, and rectify the same by decree; which may be reviewed in the respective courts of the several chancellors, upon exceptions taken thereto. But, though this is done in the Petty Bag Office in the court of Chancery, because the commission is there returned, it is not a proceeding at common law, but treated as an original cause in the court of Equity. The evidence below is not taken down in writing, and the respondent in his answer to the exceptions may allege what new matter he pleases; upon which they go to proof, and examine witnesses in writing upon all the matters in issue: and the court may decree the respondent to pay all the costs, though no such authority is given by the statute. An appeal lies from the Chancellor's decree to the House of Peers, notwithstanding any loose opinion to the contrary. 3 Comm. 427.

Lands given to alms and alienied, may be recovered by the donor. 13 Ed. 1. c. 41.

Lands, &c. may be given for the maintenance of houses of correction, or of the poor, Stat. 35 Eliz. c. 7. § 27. Commissioners to inquire of money given to poor prisoners, Stats. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 20. § 11: 32 Geo. 2. c. 28. § 9, 10. See tit. Prisoners.

Money given to put out apprentices, either by parishes or publick charities, to pay no duty, 8 Ann. c. 9. § 40. See title Apprentices.

See this subject treated at length under title Mortmain; and Highmore's Law of Charitable Uses.

CHARKS, Are pit-coal when charred or charked; so called in Worcestershire; as sea-coal thus prepared at Newcastle is called coke.

CHARRE OF LEAD. A quantity of lead consisting of thirty pigs, each pig containing six stone wanting two pounds, and every stone being twelve pounds. Assisa de ponderibus. Rob. 3. R. Scot. cap. 22.

CHARTA, A word made use of not only for a charter, for the holding an estate; but also a statute. See Magna Charta.

CHARTE, A cart, chart, or plan which mariners use at sea, mentioned in Stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 33.

CHARTEL, Fr. cartel.] A letter of defiance, or challenge to a single combat; in use heretofore to decide difficult controversies at law, which could not otherwise be determined. Blount.—A Cartel is now used for the instrument or writing for settling the exchange of prisoners of war: and a cartel-ship, for the ship used on such occasion, which is privileged from capture.

CHARTER, Lat. charta, Fr. chartres, i. e. instrumenta] Is taken in our law for written evidence of things done between man and man: whereof Bracton lib. 2. cap. 26, says thus, Fiunt aliquando donationes in scriptis, sicut in chartis, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, propter brevem hominum vitam, &c. And Britton, in his 39th chapter, divides charters into those of the king, and those of private persons. Charters of the king are those whereby the king passeth any grant to any person or body politick; as a charter of exemption, of privilege, &c.—See tit. King.

Charter of pardon, whereby a man is forgiven a felony, or other offence committed against the king's crown and dignity; and of these there are several sorts. See title Pardon.

Charter of the forest, wherein the laws of the forest are comprised, such as the charter of Canutus, &c. Kitch. 314: Fleta, lib. 3. c. 14.

Charters of private persons are deeds and instruments for the conveyance of lands, &c. And the purchaser of lands shall have all the charters, deeds and evidences as incident to the same, and for the maintenance of his title. Co. Lit. 6. Charters belong to a feoffee, although they be not sold to him, where the feoffor is not bound to a general warranty of the land; for there they shall belong to the feoffor, if they be sealed deeds or wills in writing: but other charters go to the tertenant. Moor. Ca. 687. The charters, belonging to the feoffor in case of warranty the heir shall have, though he hath no land by discent, for the possibility of discent after. 1 Rep. 1. See tit. Magna Charta.

CHARTERER. In Cheshire, a freeholder is called by this name. Sir P. Ley's Antiq. fol. 356.

CHARTER LAND, terra per chartam.] See title Bockland.

CHARTER-PARTY, Lat. charta partita, Fr. chartre parti, i. e. a deed or writing divided.] Is what among merchants and sea-faring men is commonly called a pair of indentures, containing the covenants and agreements made between them, touching their merchandize and maritime affairs. 2 Inst. 673. Charter-parties of affreightment settle agreements, as to the cargo of ships, and bind the master to deliver the goods in good condition at the place of discharge, according to agreement; and the master sometimes obliges himself, ship, tackle and furniture, for performance.

The Common law construes charter-parties, as near as may be, according to the intention of them, and not according to the literal sense of traders, or those that merchandise by sea; but they must be regularly pleaded. In covenant by charter-party, that the ship should return to the river of Thames, by a certain time, dangers of the sea excepted, and after, in the voyage, and within the time of the return, the ship was taken upon the sea by pirates, so that the master could not return at the time mentioned in the agreement; it was adjudged that this impediment was within the exception of the charter-party, which extends as well to any danger upon the sea by pirates and men of war, as dangers of the sea by ship-wreck, tempest, &c. Style 132: 2 Rol. Abr. 248.

A ship is freighted at so much per month that she shall be out, covenanted to be paid after her arrival at the port of London; the ship is cast away coming up from the Downs, but the lading is all preserved, the freight shall in this case be paid; for the money becomes due monthly by the contract, and the place mentioned is only to ascertain where the money is to be paid, and the ship is intitled to wages, like a mariner that serves by the month, who if he dies in the voyage, his executors are to be answered pro rata. Molloy de Jur. Maritim. 260. If a part-owner of a ship refuse to join with the other owners in setting out of the ship, he shall not be entitled to his share of the freight; but by the course of the Admiralty, the other owners ought to give security if the ship perish in the voyage, to make good to the owner standing out, his share of the ship, Sir L. Jenkins, in a case of this nature, nature, certified that by the Law Marine and courſe of the Admiralty, the plaintiff was to have no ſhare of the freight; and that it was ſo in all places, for otherwiſe there would be no navigation. Lex Mercat. See titles Admiralty, Freight, Inſurance.

CHARTIS REDDENDIS. An ancient writ which lay againſt one that had charters of feoffment entruſted to his keeping, and refuſed to deliver them. Reg. Orig. 159.

CHASE, Fr. chaſſe.] In its general ſignification is a great quantity of woody ground lying open, and privileged for wild beaſts and wild fowl: and the beaſts of chaſe properly extend to the buck, doe, fox, martin and roe; and in common and legal ſenſe to all the beaſts of the foreſt. Co. Lit. 233.

A chaſe differs from a park in that it is not incloſed; and alſo in that a man may have a chaſe in another man's ground, as well as in his own: being indeed the liberty of keeping beaſts of chaſe or royal game therein, protected even from the owner of the land, with a power of hunting them thereon. 2 Comm. 38.

But if one have a chaſe within a foreſt, and he kill or hunt any ſtag or red deer, or other beaſts of the foreſt, he is fineable. 1 Jones's Rep. 278.

A chaſe is of a middle nature between a foreſt and a park, being commonly leſs than a foreſt, and not endowed with ſo many liberties, as the courts of attachment, ſwainmote, and juſtice-ſeat; though of a larger compaſs, and ſtored with greater diverſity both of keepers, and wild beaſts or game, than a park.

A chaſe differs from a foreſt in this, becauſe it may be in the hands of a ſubject, which a foreſt in its proper and true nature cannot; and from a park, in that it is not encloſed, and hath a greater compaſs, and more variety of game, and officers likewiſe. Crompt. in his Juriſd. fol. 148, ſays a foreſt cannot be in the hands of a ſubject, but it forthwith loſeth its name, and becomes a chaſe: but fol. 197, he ſays, a ſubject may be lord and owner of a foreſt, which though it ſeems a contradiction, yet both ſayings are in ſome ſort true; for the king may give or alienate a foreſt to a ſubject, ſo as when it is once in the ſubject, it loſeth the true property of a foreſt, becauſe the courts called the juſtice-ſeat, ſwainmote, &c. do forthwith vaniſh, none being able to make a Lord Chief Juſtice in Eyre of the foreſt, but the King; yet it may be granted in ſo large a manner, as there may be attachment, ſwain-mote, and a court equivalent to a juſtice-ſeat. Manwood, part 2. c. 3, 4.

A foreſt and a chaſe may have different officers and laws: every foreſt is a chaſe, & quiddam amplius; but any chaſe is not a foreſt. A chaſe is ad communem legem, and not to be guided by the foreſt laws; and it is the ſame of parks. 4 Inſt. 314. A man may have a free chaſe as belonging to his manor in his own woods, as well as a warren and a park in his own grounds; for a chaſe, warren and park are collateral inheritances, and not iſſuing out of the ſoil; and therefore if a perſon hath a chaſe in other men's grounds, and after purchaſeth the grounds, the chaſe remaineth. Ibid. 318. If a man have freehold in a free chaſe, he may cut his timber and wood growing upon it, without view or licence of any; though it is not ſo of a foreſt: but if he cut ſo much that there is not ſufficient for covert, and to maintain the game, he ſhall be puniſhed at the ſuit of the king; and ſo if a common perſon hath a chaſe in another's ſoil, the owner of the ſoil cannot deſtroy all the covert, but ought to leave ſufficient thereof, and alſo browſewood, as hath been accuſtomed. 11 Rep. 22. And it has been adjudged, that within ſuch chaſe, the owner of the ſoil by preſcription may have common for his ſheep, and warren for his conies, but he cannot ſurcharge with more than has been uſual, nor make coney-burrows in other places than hath been uſed. Ibid. If a free chaſe be incloſed, it is ſaid to be a good cauſe of ſeizure into the king's hands.

It is not lawful to make a chaſe, park or warren, without licence from the king under the broad ſeal. See titles Foreſt, Game, Park.

CHASOR, An hunting horſe.—Dederunt mihi unum chaſorem, &c. Leg. Will. 1. cap. 22. And in another chapter it is written cacorem.

CHASTELLAINE, A noble woman: quaſi caſtelli domina.

CHASTITY: The Roman law (Ff. 48, 8, 1,) juſtifies homicide in defence of the chaſtity either of one's ſelf or relations; and ſo alſo, according to Selden (de Legib. Hebræor. l. 4. c. 3.) ſtood the law in the Jewiſh republick. The Engliſh law likewiſe juſtifies a woman, killing one who atempts to raviſh her. (Bac. Elem. 34: 1 Hawk. P. C. 71.) So the huſband or father may juſtify killing a man, who attempts a rape upon his wife or daughter; but not if he takes them in adultery by conſent, for the one is forcible and felonious, but not the other. 1 Hal. P. C. 485, 6.

And without doubt the forcibly attempting a crime, of a ſtill more deteſtable nature, may be equally reſiſted by the death of the unnatural aggreſſor. For the one uniform principle, that runs through our own and all other laws, ſeems to be this; that where a crime, in itſelf capital, is endeavoured to be committed by force, it is lawful to repel that force by the death of the party attempting. 4 Comm. 181.—See title Murder, Adultery.

CHATTELS, or CATALS, catalla.] All goods moveable and immoveable, except ſuch as are in nature of freehold, or parcel of it. The Normans call moveable goods only, chattels; but this word by the common law extends to all moveable and immoveable goods: and the Civilians denominate not only what we call chattels, but alſo land, bona. But no eſtate of inheritance or freehold, can be termed in our law goods and chattels; though a leaſe for years may paſs as goods.

Chattels are either perſonal or real: perſonal, as gold, ſilver, plate, jewels, houſhold-ſtuff, goods and wares in a ſhop, corn ſown on the ground, carts, ploughs, coaches, ſaddles, &c. Cattle, &c. as horſes, oxen, kine, bullocks, ſheep, pigs, and all tame fowls and birds, ſwans, turkeys, geeſe, poultry, &c. and theſe are called perſonal in two reſpects, one becauſe they belong immediately to the perſon of a man; and the other, for that being any way injuriouſly with-held from us, we have no means to recover them but by perſonal action.

Chattels-real, ſaith Coke, (1 Inſt. 118.) are ſuch as concern or favour of the realty; as terms for years of land, the next preſentation to a church, eſtates by ſtatute-merchant, ſtatute-ſtaple, elegit, or the like. And theſe are called real chattels, as being intereſts iſſuing out of, or annexed to real eſtates; of which they have one quality, viz. immobility, which denominates them real; but want the other, viz. a ſufficient, legal, indeterminate terminate duration; and this want it is that conſtitutes them chattels. The utmoſt period for which they can laſt, is fixed and determinate, either for ſuch a ſpace of time certain, or till ſuch a particular ſum of money be raiſed out of ſuch a particular income; ſo that they are not equal in the eye of the law to the loweſt eſtate of freehold, a leaſe for another's life. 2 Comm. 386.

But deeds relating to a freehold, obligations, &c. which are things in action, are not reckoned under goods and chattels; though if writings are pawned, they may be chattels: and money hath been accounted not to be goods or chattels; nor are hawks or hounds, ſuch being feræ naturæ. 8 Rep. 33: Terms de Ley 103: Kitch. 32.

A collar of SS. garter of gold, buttons, &c. belonging to the dreſs of a knight of the garter, are not jewels to paſs by that name in perſonal eſtate, but enſigns of honour. Dyer 59. As to deviſes of chattels with remainder over. See title Deviſe.

Chattels perſonal are, immediately upon the death of the teſtator, in the actual poſſeſſion of the executor, as the law will adjudge, though they are at never ſo great a diſtance from him; chattels real, as leaſes for years of houſes, lands, &c. are not in the poſſeſſion of the executor till he makes an entry, or hath recovered the ſame; except in caſe of a leaſe for years of tithes, where no entry can be made. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 437.

Leaſes for years, though for a thouſand years, leaſes at will, eſtates of tenants by elegit, &c. are chattels, and ſhall go to the executor: all obligations, bills, ſtatutes, recogniſances and judgments, ſhall be as a chattel in the executors, &c. Bro. Obl. 18: F. N. B. 120.

But if one be ſeiſed of land in fee on which trees and graſs grow, the heir ſhall have theſe, and not the executor; for they are not chattels till they are cut and ſevered, but parcel of the inheritance. 4 Rep. 63: Dyer 273. The game of a park with the park, fiſh in the pond, and doves in the houſe with the houſe, go to the heir, &c. and are not chattels: though if pigeons, or deer, are tame, or kept alive in a room; or if fiſh be in a trunk, &c. they go to the executors as chattels. Noy 124: 11 Rep. 50: Keilw. 88 —See titles Heir, Executor.

An owner of chattels is ſaid to be poſſeſſed of them; as of freehold the term is, that a perſon is ſeiſed of the ſame.

CHAUD-MEDLEY, See title Chance-Medley.

CHAUMPERT, A kind of tenure mentioned Pat. 35 Ed. 3. To the hoſpital of Bowes, in the iſle of Guernſey. Blount.

CHAUNTER, A ſinger in a cathedral. See Chanter.

CHAUNTRY RENTS, Are rents paid to the crown by the ſervants or purchaſers of chauntry-lands. See Stat. 22 Car. 2. c 6.

CHEATS, Are deceitful practices in defrauding or endeavouring to defraud another of his known right, by means of ſome artful device, contrary to the plain rules of common honeſty; as by playing with falſe dice; or by cauſing an illiterate perſon to execute a deed to his prejudice, by reading it over to him in words different from thoſe in which it was written; or by perſuading a woman to execute writings to another as her truſtee, upon an intended marriage, which in truth contained no ſuch thing, but only a warrant of attorney to confeſs a judgment: or by ſuppreſſing a will; and ſuch like. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 71.

Changing corn by a miller, and returning bad corn in the ſtead, is puniſhable by indictment, being an offence againſt the publick. 1 Seſſ Ca. 217.—So to run a foot race fraudulently, and by a previous underſtanding with the ſeeming competitor to win money. 6 Mod. 42.—So if an indented apprentice enters for a ſoldier, and having received the bounty, is diſcharged on his maſter's demanding him, he may be indicted. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 71. § 3. n.—But ſelling beer ſhort of the juſt and due meaſure, is not indictable as a cheat. 1 Wilſ. 301: Say. 146: 1 Black. Rep. 274.—Nor ſelling gum of one denomination for that of another. Sayer. 205.—Nor ſelling wrought gold, as and for gold of the true ſtandard; the offender not being a goldſmith. Comp. 323.

The diſtinction laid down as proper to be attended to in all caſes of the kind, is this.—That in ſuch impoſitions or deceits, where common prudence may guard perſons againſt their ſuffering from them, the offence is not indictable; but the party is left to his civil remedy for redreſs of the injury done him: but where falſe weights and meaſures are uſed, or falſe tokens produced, or ſuch methods taken to cheat and deceive, as people cannot by any ordinary care or prudence be guarded againſt, there it is an offence indictable. Burr. 1125.

By Stat. 33 H. 8 cap. 1. ſect. 2, If any perſon falſely and deceitfully get into his hands or poſſeſſion any money or other things of any other perſons by colour of any falſe token, &c. being convicted he ſhall have ſuch puniſhment by impriſonment, ſetting upon the pillory, or by any corporal pain (except pains of death) as ſhall be adjudged by the perſons before whom he ſhall be convict.

Lord Coke obſerves hereupon, that for this offence the offender cannot be fined, but corporal pain only inflicted. 3 Inſt. 133.—But in 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 71. § 6, it is ſaid that a perſon has been fined 500*l.* for this offence.

In indictments on this ſtat. the falſe token made uſe of muſt be ſet forth. Stra. 1127.—A counterfeit paſs has been held ſuch. Dalt. 91.—or a pretended power to diſcharge ſoldiers. 1 Latch. 202.

By Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 24, Perſons convicted of obtaining money or goods by falſe pretences, or of ſending threatening letters in order to extort money or goods, may be puniſhed by fine and impriſonment, or by pillory, whipping, or tranſportation.—In indictment on this ſtat. it muſt appear what the falſe pretences were. 2 Term Rep. 581.

As there are frauds which may be relieved civilly, and not puniſhed criminally, (with the complaints whereof the courts of equity do generally abound), ſo there are other frauds, which in a ſpecial caſe may not be helped civilly, and yet ſhall be puniſhed criminally. Thus, if a minor goes about the town, and pretending to be of age, defrauds many perſons, by taking credit for a conſiderable quantity of goods, and then inſiſting on his nonage; the perſons injured cannot recover the value of their goods, but they may indict and puniſh him for a common cheat. Barl. 100: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 71. § 6. n.

CHECK-ROLL, A roll or book containing the names of ſuch as are attendants on, and in pay to the king or other great perſonages, as their houſhold ſervants. Stat. 19 Car. 2. cap. 1. It is otherwiſe called the checquer roll, and ſeems to take its etymology from the Exchequer. Stat. 14 Hen. 8. c. 13.

CHESTER. See generally title County-Palatine.—Where felony, &c. is committed by any inhabitant of the Palatine of Cheſter, in another county, proceſs ſhall be made to the exigent where the offence was done, and if the offender then fly into the county of Cheſter, the outlawry ſhall be certified to the officers there. 1 H. 4. c. 18. The ſeſſions for the county palatine of Cheſter, is to be kept twice in the year, at Michaelmas and Eaſter: and juſtices of peace, &c. in Cheſter ſhall be nominated by the Lord Chancellor. Stats. 32 H. 8. c. 43: 33 H. 8. c. 13. Recogniſances of ſtatutes-merchant may be acknowledged, and fines levied before the mayor of Cheſter, &c. for lands lying there. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 31. But no writ of protection ſhall be granted in the county palatine.

CHEVAGE, chevagium, from the Fr. chef, caput.] A tribute or ſum of money formerly paid by ſuch as held lands in villenage to their lords in acknowledgment, and was a kind of head or poll money. Of which Bracton, lib. 1. cap. 10, ſays thus; Chevagium dicitur recognitio in ſignum ſubjectionis & dominii de capite ſuo. Lambard writes this word chivage; but it is more properly chiefage: and anciently the Jews, whilſt they were admitted to live in England, paid chevage or poll money to the king, as appears by Pat. 8 Ed. 1. par. 1. It ſeems alſo to be uſed for a ſum of money, yearly given to a man of power for his protection, as a chief head or leader: but Lord Coke ſays, that in this ſignification, it is a great miſpriſion for a ſubject to take ſums of money, or other gifts yearly of any, in name of chevage, becauſe they take upon them to be their chief heads or leaders, Co. Lit. 140. Spelman in v. Chevagium ſays, it is a duty paid in Wales, pro filiabus maritandis.

CHEVERIL, cheverillus.] A young cock, or cockling. Pat. 15 H. 3.

CHEVISANCE, from the Fr. chevir, i. e. Venir à chef de quelque choſe, to come to the head or end of a buſineſs.] An agreement or compoſition made; an end or order ſet down between a creditor or debtor; or ſometimes an indirect gain in point of uſury, &c. In ſome ancient ſtatutes it is often mentioned, and ſeems commonly uſed for an unlawful bargain or contract. In the Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 7, (See title Bankrupts,) it is uſed ſimply, in the ſenſe explained by Dufreſne, for making Contracts.

CHEVITIÆ, and CHEVISCÆ, Heads of ploughed lands. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. f. 116.

CHIEF-RENTS, The rents of freeholders of manors often ſo called, i. e. reditus capitales.—They are alſo denominated quit-rents, quieti reditus; becauſe thereby the tenant goes quit and free of all other ſervices. 2 Comm. 42. See tit. Rents.

CHIEF PLEDGE, See title Headborough.

CHIEF (TENANTS in). Tenants in capite, holding immediately under the king, in right of his crown and dignity. See titles Capite, Tenure.

CHILDREN, As to deviſes to, See title Deviſe: See alſo titles Deſcent, Heir, Limitation, Poor, Poſthumous Child, &c.

CHILDWIT, Sax.] A fine or penalty of a bond-woman unlawfully begotten with child. Cowel ſays, it ſignifieth a power to take a fine of your bond-woman gotten with child without your conſent: and within the manor of Writtle in Com. Eſſex, every reputed father of a baſe child pays to the lord for a fine 3 s. 4 d. where it ſeems to extend as well to free as bond-women; and the cuſtom is there called childwit to this day. See title Baſtard.

CHIMIN, Fr. chemin; via.] In law phraſe is a way; which is of two ſorts; the King's highway, and a private way.

The King's Highway, (chiminus regius) is that in which the King's ſubjects and all others under his protection, have free liberty to paſs; though the property of the ſoil where the way lies, belongs to ſome private perſon.

A private way is that in which one man or more have liberty to paſs, through the ground of another, by preſcription or charter; and this is divided into chimin in groſs and chimin appendant.

Chimin in groſs is where a perſon holds a way principally and ſolely in itſelf.

Chimin appendant is that way which a man hath as appurtenant to ſome other thing: as if he rent a cloſe or paſture, with covenant for ingreſs and egreſs through ſome other ground in which otherwiſe he might not paſs. Kitch. 117: Co. Lit. 56:—See titles Highway; Treſpaſs; Way.

CHIMINAGE, (chiminagium). Toll due by cuſtom for having a way through a foreſt; and in ancient records it is ſometimes called pedagium. Cromp. Juriſd. 189: Co. Lit. 56: See Chart. Foreſt. cap. 14.

CHIMNEY-MONEY, Otherwiſe called hearth-money. A duty to the crown impoſed by Stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 2, of 2 s. for every hearth in a houſe. Now long ſince repealed.

CHIMNEY-SWEEPERS. By ſtat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 48, churchwardens and overſeers with the conſent of two juſtices may bind boys of eight years old or upwards; and who, themſelves or their parents are chargeable to the pariſh, or who ſhall beg; or with the conſent of their parents; to be apprentices to chimney ſweepers until they are ſixteen years old. §. 1.

The form of the indenture is ſettled by a ſchedule annexed to the ſtatute.—In that the maſter covenants to find the boy with decent clothing—to permit him to attend public worſhip; and to obſerve the ſtatute in the ſeveral particulars mentioned.—All other indentures and agreements are declared void; and any chimney ſweeper keeping an apprentice under eight years old is to forfeit not more than 10 l. nor leſs than 5 l. for each. § 4.

One juſtice is authoriſed to ſettle all complaints of ill uſage by the maſters, or ill behaviour in the boys. § 6.

No Chimney-ſweeper ſhall keep more than ſix apprentices at once; the maſter's name and place of abode are to be inſcribed on a braſs plate in the front of a leathern cap to be provided by the maſter for each apprentice, to be worn by the boy when on duty. For every apprentice above ſix, and for neglecting to provide their caps the maſter is to forfeit not exceeding 10 l. nor leſs than 5 l. § 7.

If the maſter ſhall miſ-uſe or evil-treat his apprentice, or be guilty of the breach of any of the covenants in his indenture he ſhall forfeit, not more than 10 l. nor leſs than 5 l. § 8.

The ſtatute containing the foregoing and other humane regulations was obtained by the exertions of the benevolent Mr. Jonas Hanway; to whom the Publick and the Poor are indebted for many laudable charities.

CHIROGRAPH, chirographum, or ſcriptum chirographatum.] Any public inſtrument or gift of conveyance, atteſted by the ſubſcription and croſſes of witneſſes, was in the time of the Saxons called chirographum; which being ſomewhat changed in form and manner by the Normans, was by them ſtiled charta: in following times, to prevent frauds and concealments, they made their deeds of mutual covenant in a ſcript and reſcript, or in a part and counter-part, and in the middle, between the two copies, they drew the capital letters of the alphabet, and then tallied or cut aſunder in an indented manner, the ſheet or ſkin of parchment; which being delivered to the two parties concerned, were proved authentick by matching with and anſwering to one another: and when this prudent cuſtom had for ſome time prevailed, then the word chirographum was appropriated to ſuch bipartite writings or indentures.

Anciently when they made a chirograph or deed, which required a counter part, they ingroſſed it twice upon one piece of parchment contrariwiſe, leaving a ſpace between, in which they wrote in great letters the word CHIROGRAPH; and then cut the parchment in two, ſometimes even and ſometimes with indenture, through the midſt of the word: this was afterwards called dividenda, becauſe the parchment was ſo divided or cut; and it is ſaid the firſt uſe of theſe chirographs was in Henry the Third's time.

Chirograph was of old uſed for a fine; the manner of ingroſſing whereof, and cutting the parchment in two pieces, is ſtill obſerved in the Chirographer's office: but as to deeds, that was formerly called a Chirograph, which was ſubſcribed by the proper hand-writing of the vendor or debtor, and delivered to the vendee or creditor: and it differed from ſyngraphus, which was in this manner, viz. Both parties, as well the creditor as debtor, wrote their names and the ſum of money borrowed, on paper, &c. and the word SYNGRAPHUS in capital letters in the middle thereof, which letters were cut in the middle, and one part given to each party, that upon comparing them (if any diſpute ſhould ariſe) they might put an end to the difference. The chirographs of deeds have ſometimes concluded thus:——Et in hujus rei teſtimonium huic ſcripto, in modum chirographi confecto, viciſſim ſigilla noſtra appoſuimus. The chirographs were called chartæ diviſæ, ſcripta per chirographos diviſa, chartæ per alphabetum diviſæ; as the chirographs of all fines are at this time. Kennet's Antiq. 177: Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 94.

CHIROGRAPHER OF FINES, chirographus finium & concordiarum, of the Greek Χειρόγραφον, a compound of Χεὶρ, manus a hand, and γράφω ſcribo, I write; A writing of a man's hand.] That Officer in the Common Pleas who ingroſſeth fines, acknowledged in that court into a perpetual record, after they are examined and paſſed in the other offices, and that writes and delivers the indentures of them to the party: and this officer makes out two indentures, one for the buyer, another for the ſeller; and alſo makes one other indented piece, containing the effect of the fine, which he delivers to the cuſtos brevium, which is called the foot of the fine. The chirographer likewiſe, or his deputy, proclaims all the fines in the court every term, according to the ſtatute, and endorſes the proclamations upon the backſide of the foot thereof; and always keeps the writ of covenant, and note of the fine: the chirographer ſhall take but 4 s. fee for a fine, on pain to forfeit his office, &c. Stats. 2 H. 4. c. 8: 23 Eliz. c. 3. 2 Inſt. 468.

CHIVALRY, ſervitium militare, from the Fr. chevalier.] A tenure of lands by knights ſervice; whereby the tenant was bound to perform ſervice in war unto the king, or the meſne lord of whom he held by that tenure.—See title Tenures.

Chivalry was of two kinds, either regal, held only of the King, or common, held of a common perſon: that which might be held only of the King was called Servitium or ſerjeantia, and was again divided into grand and petit ſerjeanty; the grand ſerjeanty was where one held lands of the King by ſervice, which he ought to do in his own perſon, as to bear the King's banner or ſpear, to lead his hoſt, or to find a man at arms to fight, &c. Petit ſerjeanty was when a man held lands of the King to yield him annually ſome ſmall thing towards his wars, as a ſword, dagger, bow, &c.—See title Serjeanty.

CHOCOLATE, See Coffee.

CHOP-CHURCH, eccleſiarum permutatio.] Is a word mentioned in a ſtatute of King Hen. 6. by the ſenſe of which, it was in thoſe days a kind of trade, and by the judges declared to be lawful: but Brooke in his Abridgment ſays, it was only permiſſable by law: it was without a doubt a nick-name given to thoſe that uſed to change benefices; as to a chop and change is a common expreſſion. 9 Hen. 6. cap. 65. Vide Litera miſſa omnibus epiſcopis, &c. contra Choppe-Churches, anno 1391. Speim. de Con. vol. 2. p. 642.

CHORAL, choralis.] Signifies any perſon that by virtue of any of the orders of the clergy, was in ancient time admitted to ſit and ſerve God in the choire; Dugdale in his Hiſtory of St. Paul's Church ſays, that there were formerly ſix Vicars Choral belonging to that church.

CHOREPISCOPI, See Suffragan.

CHOSE, Fr. A thing.] Uſed in the common law with divers epithets; as choſe local, choſe tranſitory, and choſe in action. Choſe local is ſuch a thing as is annexed to a place, as a mill, and the like: and choſe tranſitory is that thing which is moveable, and may be taken away, or carried from place to place: choſe in action is a thing incorporeal, and only a right; as an annuity, obligation for debt, &c. And generally all cauſes of ſuit for any debt, duty, or wrong, are to be accounted choſes in action: and it ſeems choſe in action may be alſo called choſe in ſuſpence, becauſe it hath no real exiſtence or being, nor can properly be ſaid to be in our poſſeſſion. Bro. title Choſe in Action: 1 Lil. Abr. 264.

A perſon

A perſon diſſeiſes me of land, or takes away my goods; my right or title of entry into the lands, or action and ſuit for it, and ſo for the goods, is a choſe in action: ſo a debt on an obligation, and power and right of action to ſue for the ſame. 1 Brownl. 33. And a condition and power of re-entry into land upon a feoffment, gift or grant, before the performance of the condition, is of the nature of a choſe in action. Co. Lit. 214: 6 Rep. 50: Dyer 244. If one have an advowſon, when the church becomes void, the preſentation is but as a choſe in action, and not grantable, but it is otherwiſe before the church is void. Dyer 296. Where a man hath a judgment againſt another for money, or a ſtatute, theſe are choſes in action. An annuity in fee to a man and his heirs, is grantable over: but it has been held, that an annuity is a choſe in action, and not grantable: 5 Rep. 89: Fitz. Grant, 45. A choſe in action cannot be transferred over; nor is it deviſable: nor can a choſe in action be a ſatisfaction, as one bond cannot be pleaded to be given in ſatisfaction for another: but in equity choſes in action may be aſſignable; and the King's grant of a choſe in action is good. Cro. Jac. 170, 371: Chanc. Rep. 169.

Charters, where the owner of the land hath them in poſſeſſion, are grantable: a poſſibility of an intereſt or eſtate in a term for years, is near to a choſe in action, and therefore may not be granted; but a poſſibility, joined with an intereſt, may be a grantable chattel. Co. Lit. 265: 4 Rep. 66: Moor Ca. 1128. And this the law doth provide, to avoid multiplicity of ſuits, and the ſubverſion of juſtice, which would follow if theſe things were grantable from one man to another. Dyer 30: Plowd. 185.

But by releaſe choſes in action may be releaſed and diſcharged for ever; but then it muſt be to parties and privies in the eſtate, &c. for no ſtranger may take advantage of things in action; ſave only in ſome ſpecial caſes; Co. Lit. 214: Yelv. 9, 85.—See title Aſſignment.

CHRISM, A confection of oil and balſam conſecrated by the biſhop, and uſed in the Popiſh ceremonies of baptiſm, confirmation, and ſometimes ordination.

CHRISMALE, Chriſmal, chriſom, the face-cloth, or piece of linen laid over the child's head at baptiſm, which in ancient times was a perquiſite due to the pariſh prieſt. Statut. Ægid. Epiſ. Saliſbur. An. 1256.

CHRISMATIS DENARII, Chriſom pence, money paid to the dioceſan, or his ſuffragan, by the parochial clergy, for the chriſom conſecrated by them about Eaſter, for the holy uſes of the year enſuing. This cuſtomary payment being made in Lent near Eaſter, was in ſome places called Quadrageſimals, and in others Paſchals and Eaſter-pence. The biſhop's exaction of it was condemned by Pope Pius XI. for limony and extortion; and thereupon the cuſtom was releaſed by ſome of our Engliſh biſhops.——See Cartular. Mon. de Bernedy, *MS. CHURCH.

ECCLESIA.—A Temple or building conſecrated to the honour of God and religion, and anciently dedicated to ſome ſaint, whoſe name it aſſumed; or it is an aſſembly of perſons united by the profeſſion of the ſame Chriſtian faith, met together for religious worſhip. A Church to be adjudged ſuch in law muſt have adminiſtration of the ſacraments and ſepulture, annexed to it. If the king founds a church, he may exempt it from the ordinary's juriſdiction; but it is otherwiſe in caſe of a ſubject.

The manner of founding churches in ancient times was, after the founders had made their applications to the biſhop of the dioceſe, and had his licence, the biſhop or his commiſſioners ſet up a croſs, and ſet forth the church-yard where the church was to be built; and then the founders might proceed in the building of the church, and when the church was finiſhed, the biſhop was to conſecrate it; and then, and not before, the ſacraments were to be adminiſtered in it. Stillingfleet's Eccleſiaſt. Caſes. But by the common law and cuſtom of this realm, any perſon who is a good chriſtian, may build a church without licence from the biſhop, ſo as it be not prejudicial to any ancient churches; though the law takes no notice of it as a church, till conſecrated by the biſhop, which is the reaſon why church and no church, &c. is to be tried and certified by the biſhop. And in ſome caſes, though a church has been conſecrated, it muſt be conſecrated again; as in caſe any murder, adultery, or fornication be committed in it, whereby it is defiled; or if the church be deſtroyed by fire, &c.

The ancient ceremonies in conſecrating the ground on which the church was intended to be built, and of the church itſelf after it was built, were thus: when the materials were provided for building, the biſhop came in his robes to the place, &c. and having prayed, he then perfumed the ground with incenſe, and the people ſung a collect in praiſe of that ſaint to whom the church was dedicated; then the corner ſtone was brought to the biſhop, which he croſſed, and laid for the foundation: and a great feaſt was made on that day, or on the ſaint's day to which it was dedicated; but the form of conſecration was left to the diſcretion of the biſhop, as it is at this day.

A Church in general conſiſts of three principal parts, that is, the belfrey or ſteeple, the body of the church with the iſles, and the chancel: and not only the freehold of the whole church, but of the church yard, are in the parſon or rector; and the parſon may have an action of treſpaſs againſt any one that ſhall commit any treſpaſs in the church or church yard; as in the breaking of ſeats annexed to the church, or the windows, taking away the leads, or any of the materials of the church, cutting the trees in the church-yard, &c. But church wardens may by cuſtom have a fee for burying in the church; the church-yard is a common place of burial for all the pariſhioners. Vent. 274: Keb. 504, 523.—But ſee Cro. Jac. 367: Gilb. 453: and poſt Churchwardens, III. 2.

And it ſeems that actions for taking away the ſeats muſt be brought in the name of the church-wardens, the pariſhioners being at the expence of them. Raym. 246: 12 Co. 105: 3 Com Dig. title Epiſcopal (F. 3.)

If a man erect a pew in a church, or hang up a bell, &c therein, they thereby become church goods, though not expreſsly given to the church; and he may not afterwards remove them. Show. P. L. 79. The patron only is to give licence to bury in the church; but for defacing a monument in a church, &c. the builder or heir of the deceaſed may have an action. Cro. Jac. 367. And a man may be indicted for digging up the graves of perſons buried, and taking away ſuch burial dreſſes, &c.

The property whereof remains in the party who was the owner when uſed, and it is ſaid an offender was found guilty of felony in this caſe, but had his clergy. Co. Lit. 113.

Though the parſon hath the freehold of the church and church-yard, he hath not the fee-ſimple, which is always in abeyance; but in ſome reſpects the parſon hath a fee-ſimple qualified. Lit. 644, 645. The chancel of the church is to be repaired by the parſon, unleſs there be a cuſtom to the contrary; and for theſe repairs, the parſon may cut down trees in the church-yard, but not otherwiſe. See Stat. 35 Ed. 1. ſt. 2, Ne Rector proſternat, &c. The churchwardens are to ſee that the body of the church and ſteeple are in repair; but not any iſle, &c. which any perſon claims by preſcription, to him or his houſe: concerning which repairs the Canons require every perſon who hath authority to hold eccleſiaſtical viſitation to view their churches within their juriſdictions once in three years, either in perſon, or cauſe it to be done; and they are to certify the defects to the ordinary, and the names of thoſe who ought to repair them; and theſe repairs muſt be done by the church-wardens, at the charge of the pariſhioners. Can. 86: 1 Mod. 236. See poſt title Church-wardens, III. 2.

By the Common law, pariſhioners of every pariſh are bound to repair the church: but by the canon law, the parſon is obliged to do it; and ſo it is in foreign countries. 1 Salk. 164. In London the pariſhioners repair both the church and the chancel. The Spiritual Court may compel the pariſhioners to repair the church, and excommunicate every one of them till it be repaired; but thoſe that are willing to contribute ſhall be abſolved till the greater part agree to a tax, when the excommunication is to be taken off; but the Spiritual Court cannot aſſeſs them towards it. 1 Mod. 194: 1 Vent. 367. For though this Court hath power to oblige the pariſhioners to repair by eccleſiaſtical cenſures; yet they cannot appoint in what ſum, or ſet a rate, for that muſt be ſettled by the church-wardens, &c. 2 Mod. 8.

If a church be down, and the pariſh is increaſed, the greater part of the pariſh may raiſe a tax for the neceſſary inlarging it, as well as the repairing thereof, &c. 1 Mod. 237. But in ſome of our books it is ſaid, that if a church falls down, the pariſhioners are not obliged to rebuild it; though they ought to keep it in due repair. 1 Ventr. 35.— On re-building of churches, it is now uſual to apply for, and obtain briefs, on the petition of the pariſhioners, to collect the charitable contributions of well-diſpoſed chriſtians, to aſſiſt them in the expence. See poſt title Church-wardens, III. 2.

For church ornaments, utenſils, &c. the charge is upon the perſonal eſtates of the pariſhioners; and for this reaſon perſons muſt be charged for theſe, where they live: but though generally lands ought not to be taxed for ornaments, yet by ſpecial cuſtom, both lands and houſes may be liable to it. 2 Inſt. 489: Cro. Eliz. 843: Hetley 131. It has been reſolved that no man ſhall be charged for his land to contribute to the church reckonings, if he doth not reſide in the ſame pariſh. Moor 554.

By Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 21, churches not above ſix pounds a year, in the King's books, by aſſent of the ordinary, patron and incumbent, may be united: and by Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 3, in cities and corporations, &c. churches may be united by the biſhop, patrons, and chief magiſtrates, unleſs the income exceeds 100 l. per ann. and then the pariſhioners are to conſent, &c. See tit. Union.

For compleating of St. Paul's Church, and repairing Weſtminſter Abbey, a duty of 2 s. per chaldron on coals was granted; and the church-yard is to be incloſed, and no perſons build thereon, except for the uſe of the church. 1 Ann. ſt. 2. c. 12.

Fifty new churches are to be built in or near London and Weſtminſter, for the building whereof a like duty is granted upon coals, and commiſſioners appointed to purchaſe lands, aſcertain bounds, &c. The rectors of which churches were to be appointed by the crown, and the firſt church-wardens and veſtrymen, &c. to be elected by the commiſſioners. Stat. 9 Ann. cap. 22. and ſee Stat. 10 Ann. c. 11. A duty is alſo granted on coals imported into London, to be appropriated for maintaining of miniſters for the fifty new churches. Stat. 1 Geo. 1. cap. 23.

No man ſhall cover his head in the church in time of divine ſervice, except he have ſome infirmity, and then with a cap; and all perſons are to kneel and ſtand, &c. as directed by the Common Prayer during ſervice. Can. 18.

No ill language is to be uſed, or noiſe made in churches or church-yards; and perſons ſtriking, or laying violent hands on others there, are to be excommunicated; and ſtriking with a weapon, or drawing a weapon with intent to ſtrike, ſhall loſe one of their ears: and a man may not lawfully return blows in his own defence in theſe caſes. Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. cap. 4: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 63. § 24, &c.

No fairs or markets ſhall be kept in church-yards. Stat. 13 E. 1. ſt. 2. c. 6.

Any perſon may be indicted for indecent or irreverent behaviour in the church; and thoſe that offend againſt the acts of uniformity, are puniſhable either by indictment upon the ſtatute, or by the Ordinary, &c. See further titles Churchwardens; Parſons. And as to offences in not coming to church, See titles Diſſenters, Religion.

CHURCH-WARDENS.

Anciently ſtyled Church-Reeves or Eccleſiæ Guardiani.] Officers inſtituted to protect the edifice of the church; to ſuperintend the ceremonies of public worſhip; to promote the obſervance of religious duties; to form and execute parochial regulations; and to become, as occaſion may require, the legal repreſentatives of the body of the pariſh.

The office was originally confined to ſuch matters only as concerned the Church, conſidered materially as an edifice, building, or place of public worſhip; and the duty of ſuppreſſing profaneneſs and immorality was intruſted to two perſons annually choſen by the pariſhioners, as aſſiſtants to the church-wardens, who, from their power of inquiring into offences, detrimental to the intereſts of religion, and of preſenting the offenders to the next provincial council, or epiſcopal ſynod, were called queſt-men or ſynods-men, which laſt appellation has been converted into the name of ſides-men. But great part of the duty of theſe teſtes ſynodales, or ancillary officers, is now devolved upon the church-wardens; the ſphere of whole duty has, ſince the eſtabliſhment of the Overſeers of the poor, been conſiderably enlarged; and is alſo diverted into various channels by many modern acts of parliament. See Paroch. Antiq. 649, for a more particular account of the origin and progreſs of theſe Sides-men.

Under

CHURCH-WARDENS I. II.

Under this head it will be proper to conſider,

I. 1. Of the Election of Churchwardens, 2. Of Exemptions from being elected.
II. Of their Intereſt in the Things belonging to the Church.
III. 1. Of their Power; and 2. Duty.
IV. Of their Accounts.

I. They are generally choſen by the joint conſent of the pariſhioners and miniſter; but by cuſtom, (on which the right of chooſing theſe officers entirely depends, 2 Atk. 650: 2 Stra. 1246.) the miniſter may chooſe one, and the pariſhioners another; or the pariſhioners alone may elect both. 1 Vent. 267. But where the cuſtom of a pariſh does not take place, the election ſhall be according to the directions of the canons of the church: Can. 89, 90: which direct that all church-wardens or queſtmen in every pariſh, ſhall be choſen by the joint conſent of the miniſter and the pariſhioners, if it may be; but if they cannot agree upon ſuch a choice, then the miniſter ſhall chooſe one, and the pariſhioners another: and without ſuch a joint or ſeveral choice, none ſhall take upon them to be church-wardens. Gibſ. Cod. 241, 2: 1 Stra. 145.

If the Parſon or Vicar, who has, by cuſtom, a right to chuſe one church-warden, be under ſentence of deprivation, the right of chooſing both reſults to the pariſhioners. Carth. 118.

The parſon cannot intermeddle in the choice of that churchwarden which it is the right of the pariſhioners by cuſtom to elect. 2 Stra. 1045.—Under the word Parſon a Curate is included. 2 Stra. 1246.

In moſt of the pariſhes in London, the pariſhioners chooſe both church-wardens by cuſtom; but in all pariſhes erected under St. 9 An. c. 22, the canon ſhall take place; (unleſs the act, in virtue of which any church was erected, ſhall have ſpecially provided that the pariſhioners ſhall chooſe both;) inaſmuch as no cuſtom can be pleaded in ſuch new pariſhes. Gibſ. 215: Co. Lit. 113: 1 Ro. Abr. 339: Cro. Jac. 532: 1 Comm. 77.

In the election of church-wardens by the pariſhioners, the majority of thoſe who meet at the Veſtry, upon a written notice given for that purpoſe, ſhall bind the reſt of the pariſh. Lane 21.

By cuſtom alſo, the choice of church-wardens may be in a ſelect veſtry, or a particular number of the pariſhioners, and not in the body of the pariſhioners at large. Hard. 378: 1 Mod. 181. See this Dict. title Veſtry.

In ſome caſes the lord of the manor preſcribeth for the appointment of church-wardens: and this ſhall not be tried in the Eccleſiaſtical Court, although it be a preſcription of what appertains to a ſpiritual thing. God. 153: 2 Inſt. 653.

The validity of the cuſtom of chooſing church-wardens is to be decided, like all other cuſtoms of the realm, by the courts of common law, and not by the ſpiritual Court. Cro. Car. 552: 6 Mod. 89: 2 Ld. Raym. 1008: 3 Salk. 88: 1 Bac. Ab. 371.—So alſo the legality of the votes given on the election is to be determined by the Common law. Burr. 1420.—But the Spiritual Court may become the means of trying the validity of the election by a return of 'not elected'—'not duly elected, or any other return that anſwers the writ, and affords an opportunity of trying the right in an action for a falſe return. 1 Ld. Raym. 138: Stra. 610: 2 Ld. Raym. 1379, 1405: 2 Salk. 433: 5 Mod. 325: Cowp. 413.

The pariſhioners are alſo ſole judges of what deſcription of perſons they think proper to chooſe as church-wardens; the Spiritual Court therefore cannot in any caſe controul or examine into the propriety of the election. 1 Salk. 166: See alſo the authorities immediately preceding.—And the pariſhioners may, for miſbehaviour, remove them. 13 Co. 70: Com. Dig. 3. tit. Eſgliſe (F. 1.)—An indictment alſo lies againſt them for corruption and extortion in their office. 1 Sid. 307.

The court of King's Bench will not grant a mandamus to the church-wardens, to call a veſtry to elect their ſucceſſors. Stra. 686. Sed vid. Stra. 52.—Nor will the Court grant a quo warranto to try the validity of an election to the office. 4 Term Rep. 382.

They are ſworn into their offices by the Archdeacon or Ordinary of the dioceſe, and if he refuſe, a mandamus ſhall iſſue to compel him. Cro. Car. 551: 5 Com Dig. tit. Mandamus (A.) and the authorities there cited, and without fee. 1 Salk. 330. But the oath muſt be general, 'to execute their duty truly and faithfully'—Hard. 364: and under Stats. 4 Jac. 1. c. 5: 1 Jac. 1. c. 9; & 21 Jac. 1. c. 7, to execute the laws againſt drunkenneſs. See poſt III. 2.

If a church-warden properly appointed, refuſe to take the oath, he may be excommunicated. Gibſ. Cod. 961: 1 Mod. 194. and he muſt not execute the office till he is ſworn. Gibſ. 243: Shaw. P. L. 70.

2. All peers of the realm, by reaſon of their dignity, are exempted from the office. Gibſ. 215. So are all clergymen, by reaſon of their order. 6 Mod. 140: 2 Stra. 1107: 1 Ld. Raym. 265.—Members of Parliament by reaſon of their privilege. Gibſ. Cod. 215.—Practiſing Barriſters—and ſuch only, as it ſeems.—Attornies. Com. Dig. tit. Attorney (B. 16.) Clerks in Court. 1 Ro. Rep. 368, but ſee Mar. 30.—Phyſicians, Surgeons, Apothecaries, Aldermen, Diſſenters, Diſſenting Teachers, Proſecutors of Felons, Militia-men.—See tit. Conſtable, II. 2.

No perſon living out of the pariſh, although he occupies lands within the pariſh, may be choſen church-warden; becauſe he cannot take notice of abſences from church, nor diſorders in it, for the due preſenting of them. Gibſ. 215.

II. Church-Wardens are a corporation by cuſtom, to ſue and be ſued for the goods of the church; and they may purchaſe goods, but not lands, except it be in London, by cuſtom. Jones 439: Cro. Car. 532, 552: 4 Vin. 525. n: 1 Ld. Raym. 337: Co. Lit. 3.

In the city of London, by ſpecial cuſtom, the church-wardens, with the miniſter, make a corporation for lands as well as goods; and may as ſuch, hold, purchaſe and take lands for the uſe of the church, &c. And there is alſo a cuſtom in London, that the miniſter is there excuſed from repairing the chancel of the church. 2 Cro. 325: Co. Lit. 3: 1 Rol. Abr. 330. Churchwardens may have appeal of robbery for ſtealing the goods of the church. 1 Rol. Abr. 393: Cro. Eliz. 179.—And they may alſo purchaſe goods for the uſe of the pariſh. Mar. 22, 67: Cro. Car. 552: 3 Buſſ. 264: Yelv. 173.—They may alſo take money or things (by legacy, gift, &c.) for the benefit of the church. 2 P. Wms. 125. And they may diſpoſe of the goods of the church, with the conſent of the pariſhioners. 1 Ro. Ab. 393: 1 Vent. 89: Cro. Jac. 234: 4 Vin. 526.

But

But the churchwardens (except in London) have no right to, or intereſt in the freehold and inheritance of the church, which alone belongs to the parſon or incumbent. Comp. Incumb. 381: 1 Bac. Ab. 372: 1 Vent. 127: 4 Vin. 527.

They may bring an appeal of robbery for goods of the church felonioufly ſtolen—T. B. vol. 11. p. 27.—and ejectment for land leaſed to them for years. Runnington's Ejectments 59: 3 Com. Dig. Egliſe (F. 3.)

If they waſte the goods of the church, the new churchwardens may have actions againſt them, or call them to account; though the pariſhioners cannot have an action againſt them for waſting the church goods, for they muſt make new churchwardens, who muſt proſecute the former, &c. 1 Danv. Abr. 788: 2 Cro. 145: Bro Account 1.

They have a certain ſpecial property in the organ, bells, pariſh-books, bible, chalice, ſurplice, &c. belonging to the church; of which they have the cuſtody on behalf of the pariſh, whoſe property they really are; for the taking away, or for any damage done any of theſe, the churchwardens may bring an action at law, and therefore the parſon cannot ſue for them in the Spiritual Court. 1 Bac. Abr. 372: 1 Ro. Rep. 255.—See Cro. Eliz. 179: 1 Vent. 89: 7 Mod. 116.

But they have not, virtute officii, the cuſtody of the title deeds of the advowſon, though they are kept in a cheſt in the church. 4 Term Rep. 351.

III. 1. Church-wardens have power and authority throughout the pariſh, though it extends into different hundreds and counties; being, though temporal officers, employed in eccleſiaſtical affairs, and muſt therefore follow the eccleſiaſtical diviſion of the kingdom. Shaw. P. L. 86.

They have, with the conſent of the miniſter, the placing the pariſhioners in the ſeats of the body of the church, appointing gallery-keepers, &c. reſerving to the Ordinary a power to correct the ſame: and in London, the churchwardens have this authority in themſelves.

Particular perſons may preſcribe to have a ſeat, as belonging to them by reaſon of their eſtates, as being an ancient meſſuage, &c. and the ſeats having been conſtantly repaired by them: alſo one may preſcribe to any iſle in the church, to ſit, and to bury there, always repairing the ſame. 3 Inſt. 202: Cro. Jac. 366. If the Ordinary diſplaces a perſon claiming a ſeat in a church by preſcription, a prohibition ſhall be granted, &c. 12 Rep. 106. The parſon impropriate has a right to the chief ſeat in the chancel; but by preſcription another pariſhioner may have it. Noy's Rep.

Beſides their ordinary power, the church-wardens have the care of the benefice during its vacancy: and as ſoon as there is any avoidance, they are to apply to the Chancellor of the diocefe for a ſequeſtration; which being granted, they are to manage all the profits and expences of the benefice for him that ſucceeds, plough and ſow his glebes, gather in tithes, thraſh out and ſell corn, repair houſes, &c. and they muſt ſee that the church be duly ſerved by a curate approved by the biſhop, whom they are to pay out of the profits of the benefice. 2 Inſt. 489: Shaw. P. L. 99: Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12.

The churchwardens have not originally power to make any rate themſelves, excluſive of the pariſhioners, their duty being only to ſummon the pariſhioners, to a veſtry, who are to meet for that purpoſe; and, when they are aſſembled, a rate made by the majority preſent ſhall bind the whole pariſh, although the church-wardens voted againſt it. Comp. Incumb 389: 1 Vent. 367: 1 Bac. Abr. 373: 3 Term Rep. 592.

But if the church-wardens give the pariſhioners due notice, that they intend to meet for the purpoſe of making a rate to repair the church, and the pariſhioners refuſe to come, or being aſſembled, refuſe to make any rate, they may make one without their concurrence; for they are liable to be puniſhed in the eccleſiaſtical courts for not repairing the church, Degge 172: 1 Vent. 367: 1 Mod. 79, 194, 237:—See further on this ſubject, title Veſtry.

A taxation by a pound-rate is the moſt equitable way, which if refuſed to be paid, ſhould be proceeded for in the Eccleſiaſtical Court; and Quakers are ſubject to ſuch church rate, recoverable as their tithes, Wood's Inſt. b. 1. c. 7: Gibſ 219: Degge 171.

2. Their Duty is extenſive and various; the heads of it are therefore here ranged alphabetically.

Apprentices.—See this Dict. tit. Apprentices, Chimney-Sweepers.

Baſtards.—The church-wardens, are bound to provide for ſuch for whoſe ſuſtenance the pariſh have made no proviſion; and this without an order of juſtices. Hays v. Bryant, Trin. 29 Geo. 3. in C. P.

Belfry.—Church-wardens ought to keep the keys of, and take care the bells are not rung without proper cauſe. Can. 88.

Briefs.—Church-wardens are by Stat. 4 An. c. 14, to collect the charity-money upon briefs; which are letters-patent iſſuing out of Chancery, to re-build churches, reſtore loſs by fire, &c. which are to be read in churches; and the ſums collected, &c. to be indorſed on the briefs in words at length, and ſigned by the miniſter and church-wardens; after which they ſhall be delivered, with the money collected to the perſons undertaking them, in a certain time, under the penalty of 20*l.* A regiſter is to be kept of all money collected, &c. Alſo the undertakers in two months after the receipts of the money, and notice to ſufferers, are to account before a Maſter in Chancery, appointed by the Lord Chancellor.

Burial.—The conſent of the church-wardens muſt be had for burying a perſon in a different pariſh from that in which he dies.—It is their duty not to ſuffer ſuicides, or excommunicated perſons to be buried in the church or church-yard, without licence from the biſhop.—By Stat. 30 Car. 2. c. 3, they are to apply to the magiſtrates to convict offenders for not burying in woollen.—See alſo poſt, Regiſter.

Butter and Cheeſe.—The penalties under Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 20, for reforming abuſes in, are payable to the church-wardens of the pariſh where the offence committed.

Chimney-Sweepers. See that title in this Dict.

Church.—Church-wardens or queſt-men are to take care it be well aired, the windows glazed, the floors well paved, &c. If church wardens erect or add a new gallery, &c. they muſt have the conſent of the pariſhioners, and a licence of the Ordinary, but not for occaſional repairs. 2 Inſt 489: 1 Mod. 273. See ante III. 1. They muſt alſo take care to have in the church a large bible, a book of common prayer, a book of homilies, a font of ſtone, a decent communion table; with bread and wine for the communion, a table-cloth, carpet, and flagon, plate, plate, and bowl of silver, gold or pewter. Can. 20: Y. B. 8 H. 5. p. 4.: Doct. & Stud. 118: Deg. 151 —Church-wardens also are to sign certificates of persons taking the sacrament, to qualify for offices. They are to see that the ten commandments are set up at the East end of the church, and other chosen sentences upon the walls, with a reading-desk and a pulpit, and a chest for alms, all at the charge of the parish. It is also the duty of church-wardens to prevent any irreverence or indecency from being committed in the church; and therefore they may pull off a person's hat in the church, or even turn him out if he attempts to disturb the congregation. The church being under the care of the church-wardens, they may refuse to open it at the instance of any person, except the parson, or any one acting under him. 1 Sand. 13: 1 Lev. 196: 1 Sid. 301: 3 Salk. 37: 12 Mod. 433: Can. 85.—They are not to suffer any stranger to preach, unless he appears qualified, by producing a licence—and such preacher is to register his name, and the day when he preached, in a book. Can. 50, 52. The pulpit is exclusively the right of the parson of the parish, and the church-wardens are punishable if they shut the door against him; and his consent is necessary to a stranger's preaching. 3 Salk. 87: 12 Mod. 433. See further this Dictionary title Church.

Church-yards.—By the canons of the church it is ordained that the church-wardens, or quest-men, shall take care that the church-yards be well and sufficiently repaired, found, and maintained with walls, rails, or pales, as have been in each place accustomed, at their charges, unto whom the same, by law, appertaineth; they are also to see that the church be well kept and repaired: and by a constitution of Archbishop Winchelsea, this charge is to be at the expence of the parishioners. 2 Inst. 489. (But one who has land adjoining to the church-yard may by custom be bound to keep the fences in repair.)—Church-wardens shall suffer no plays, feasts, banquets, suppers, church-ales, drinkings, temporal courts or leets, lay-juries, musters, or any profane usage to be kept in the church or church-yard.—Nor shall they suffer any idle persons to abide either in the church-yard or the church-porch during the time of divine service or preaching, but shall cause them to come in or to depart.—So also, by the common law, church-wardens may justify the removal of tumultuous persons from the church-yard to prevent them from disturbing the congregation whilst the minister is performing the rites of burial. 1 Mod. 168; and by the canon law may prevent an excommunicated person from even entering into the church-yard at any time or on any pretence.

Conventicles.—Church-wardens are to levy the penalties by warrant of a justice, under Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 1.

Corn.—See Stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 8.

County Rate.—See Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29.

Drunkenness.—Church-wardens are to receive the penalties under Stat. 4 Geo. 1. c 5: 21 Geo. 2. c. 7. and 1 Jac. 1. c. 9. See this Dict. title Constable.

Fast-days.—See Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 5.

Fire.—See this Dict. title Fire.

Game.—Church-wardens are to receive the penalties under Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 27.

Greenwich Hospital.—Church-wardens are to sign certificates of out-pensioners under Stat. 3 Geo. 3. c. 16.

Hawkers and Pedlars;—Church-wardens are to apprehend; and receive the penalties under Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 27: and 9 Geo. 2. c. 23.

Militia.—See the Militia-Act 26 Geo. 3. c. 107.

Non-conformists.—Churchwardens to levy the penalty of 12 d. on persons not coming to church each Sunday, under Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2.

Parson.;—Church wardens are to observe whether he reads the thirty-nine articles twice a year, and the canons once in the year, preaches every Sunday good doctrine, reads the Common Prayer, celebrates the sacraments, preaches in his gown, visits the sick, catechises children, marries according to law, &c.

Parishioners; Church-wardens to see if they come to church, and duly attend the worship of God; if baptism be neglected; women not churched; persons marrying in prohibited degrees, or without banns or licence; alms-houses or schools abused; legacies given to pious uses; &c. Can. 117: Cro. Car. 291: 1 Vent. 114.

Poor.—Church-wardens are to act in conjunction with the overseers; every church-warden being an overseer, but not è contrà.—See this Dict. title Overseer, Poor.

Presentments.—Church-wardens, by their oath, are to present, or certify to the bishop or his officers, all things presentable by the ecclesiastical law, which relate to the church, to the minister, and to the parishioners. The articles which are delivered to church-wardens for their guidance in this respect, are, for the most part, founded on the book of canons, and on rubricks of the common prayer. They are also bound by the 4 Jac. 1. c. 5. to present tippling or drunkenness, and by 3 Jac. 1. c. 4. recusants. They need not take a fresh oath upon each presentment they make, nor are they obliged to make presentments oftener than once a year; but they may do it as often as they please, except there is a custom in the parish to the contrary; and, upon default or neglect in the church-wardens, the minister may present; but such presentment ought to be upon oath. Can. 117: Cro. Car. 285, 291: 1 Vent. 86, 114. and see 1 Vent. 127: 1 Saund. 13: 1 Sid. 463.

Rates.—See ante III. 1.

Recusants.—See Presentments, Non-conformists.

Registers.—Church-wardens shall provide a box wherein to keep the parish register, with three locks and three keys; two of the keys to be kept by them, and one by the minister: and every Sunday they shall see that the minister enter therein all the christenings, weddings, and burials that have happened the week before; and at the bottom of every page, they shall, with the minister, subscribe their names: and they shall, within a month after the twenty-fifth day of March, yearly, transmit to the bishop a copy thereof for the year before, subscribed as above. By Stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 67, upon the entry of any burial, marriage, birth, or christening in the register of any parish, precinct, or place, a stamp duty of 3 d. shall be paid; and therefore the church-wardens and overseers, or one of them, are directed to provide a book for this purpose, with proper stamps for each entry, and to pay for the same, and for the stamps contained therein, out of the rates under their management; and to receive back the monies which shall be so paid from the persons authorised to demand and receive the said duties.

Sunday.—Church-wardens to levy penalties for profaning; under Stats. 1 Car. 1. c. 1. and 29 Car. 2. c. 7.

IV. At the end of the year the Church-wardens are to yield just accounts to the minister and parishioners, and deliver deliver what remains in their hands to the parishioners, or to new church-wardens: in case they refuse, they may be presented at the next visitation, or the new officers may by process call them to account before the Ordinary, or sue them by writ of account at Common law. Shaw. P. L. 76: 12 Mod. 9: 1 Bac. Abr. 375: Bro. Account 71. But in laying out their money, they are punishable for fraud only, not indiscretion. Gibs. 196: 1 Burn's Just. 349: Shaw. P. L. 76. If their receipts fall short of their disbursements, the succeeding church-wardens may pay them the balance, and place it to their account. 1 Rol. Abr. 121: Can. 89, 109, &c. And the Court of Chancery on application will make an order for the purpose. 2 Eq. Ab. 203: Pre. Ch. 43, but see 4 Vin. (8vo) 529.

By the Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. cap. 11, In all actions to be brought in the courts of Westminster, or at the assises, for money mis-spent by church-wardens, the evidence of the parishioners, other than such as receive alms, shall be taken and admitted.

Church wardens are comprehended within the purview of the Stats. 7 Jac. 1. cap. 5, and 21 Jac. 1. cap. 12, as to pleading the general issue to actions brought against them, and as to double costs when they have judgment.

But in an action on the case against a church-warden for a false and malicious presentment, though there be judgment for him, yet he shall not have double costs; for the statute does not extend to spiritual affairs. Cro. Car. 285, 467: 1 Sid. 463: 1 Vent. 86: 2 Hawk. P. C. 61: Hardw. 125.

The Spiritual Court can only order the church-wardens' accounts to be audited, but cannot make a rate to reimburse them, because they are not obliged to lay out money before they receive it. Hardw. 381: 2 Stra. 974: Cro. Car. 285, 286.

But a custom that the church-wardens shall, before the end of their year, give notice to the parishioners to audit their accounts, and that a general rate shall be made, for the purpose of re-imbursing them all money advanced, is good. 2 Andr. 32.

If there be a select committee or vestry elected by custom, and the church-wardens exhibit their accounts to such committee, who allow the same, this shall discharge them from being proceeded against in the Spiritual Court. 2 Lutw. 1027. So of allowance at a vestry in general. Bunb. 247, 289: 1 Vent. 367: 1 Sid. 281: Raym. 418: 2 Barn. K. B. 421: Andr. 11. And if the Spiritual Court take any step whatever after the accounts are delivered in, it is an excess of jurisdiction for which a prohibition will be granted, even after sentence. 3 Term Rep. 3.

Justices of peace have no jurisdiction over church-wardens with respect to their accounts as church-wardens. 1 Keb. 574: 4 Vin. (8vo.) 532.

CHURCHESSET, or churchset, circsceat.] A Saxon word used in Domesday, which is interpreted quasi semen ecclesiæ, corn paid to the church. Fleta says, it signifies a certain measure of wheat, which in times past every man on St. Martin's day gave to holy church, as well in the times of the Britons as of the English; yet many great persons, after coming of the Romans, gave that contribution according to the ancient law of Moses, in the name of first fruits; as in the writ of King Canutus sent to the Pope is particularly contained, in which they call it churchsed. Selden's Hist. Tithes, p. 216.

CHURCH-SCOT, Customary oblations paid to the parish-priest; from which duties the religious sometimes purchased an exemption for themselves and their tenants.

CHURLE, ceorle, carl. Was in the Saxon times a tenant at will, of free condition, who held some land of the Thanes, on condition of rents and services: which ceorles were of two sorts; one that hired the lord's tenementary estate, like our farmers; the other that tilled and manured the demesnes, (yielding work and not rent,) and were thereupon called his sockmen or ploughmen. Spelm.

CINQUE PORTS, quinque portus.] Those Havens that lie towards France, and therefore have been thought by our kings to be such as ought to be vigilantly guarded and preserved against invasion: in which respect they have an especial governor, called Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, and divers privileges granted them, as a peculiar jurisdiction; their warden having not only the authority of an admiral amongst them, but sending out writs in his own name, &c. 4 Inst. 222.

Cambden says, that Kent is accounted the key of England; and that William, called The Conqueror, was the first that made a constable of Dover Castle, and warden of the cinque ports, which he did to bring that country under a stricter submission to his government; but King John was the first who granted the privileges to those ports, which they still enjoy: however, it was upon condition that they should provide a certain number of ships at their own charge for forty days, as often as the king should have occasion for them in the wars, he being then under a necessity of having a navy for passing into Normandy, to recover that dukedom which he had lost. And this service the Barons of the Cinque Ports acknowledged and performed, upon the king's summons, attended with their ships the time limited at their proper costs, and staying as long after as the king pleased at his own charge. Somner of Roman Ports in Kent. See this Dict. tit. Navy.

The Cinque Ports, as we now account them, are, Dover, Sandwich, Romney, Winchelsea, and Rye; and to these we may add Hythe and Hastings, which are reckoned as part or members of the Cinque Ports: though by the first institution it is said that Winchelsea and Rye were added as members, and that the others were the Cinque Ports: there are also several other towns adjoining that have the privileges of the ports. These Cinque Ports have certain franchises to hold pleas, &c. and the king's writs do not run there; but on a judgment in any of the king's courts, if the defendant hath no goods, &c. except in the ports, the plaintiff may get the records certified into Chancery, and from thence sent by mittimus to the Lord Warden to make execution. 4 Inst. 223: 3 Leon. 3.

The constable of Dover castle is Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. And there are several courts within the Cinque Ports; one before the constable, others within the ports themselves, before the mayors and jurats; another, which is called curia quinque portuum apud Shepway: there is likewise a court of Chancery, in the Cinque Ports, to decide matters of equity; but no original writs issue thence. 1 Danv. Abr. 793. the jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports is general, extending to personal, real, and mix'd actions: and if any erroneous judgment is given in the Cinque Ports before any of the mayors and jurats, error lies according to the cuſtom, by bill in nature of error, before the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports, in his court of Shepway. And in theſe caſes the mayor and jurats may be fined, and the mayor removed, &c. 4 Inſt. 334: Cromp. Juriſd. 138.—and error lies from the court of Shepway to the court of K. B. Jenk. 71: 1 Sid. 356.

It has been obſerved that the Cinque Ports are not jura regalia, like counties palatine, but are parcel of the county of Kent: ſo that if a writ be brought againſt one for land within the Cinque Ports, and he appears and pleads to it, and judgment is given againſt him in the Common Pleas, this judgment ſhall bind him; for the land is not exempted out of the county, and the tenant may waive the benefit of his privilege. Wood's Inſt 519.

The Cinque Ports cannot award proceſs of outlawry. Cro. Eliz. 910. And a quo-minus lies to the Cinque Ports. ibid. 911. If a man is impriſoned at Dover by the Lord Warden, an habeas corpus may be iſſued; for the privilege that the king's writ lies not there is intended between party and party, and there can be no ſuch privilege againſt the king; and an habeas corpus is a prerogative writ, by which the king demands an account of the liberty of the ſubject. Cro. Jac. 543; 1 Nelſ. Abr. 447.

Certiorari lies to the Cinque Ports, to remove indictments; and the juriſdiction that brev. dom. regis non currit is only in civil cauſes between party and party. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 27. § 24.

CIRCA, A watch; from which circuitor.

CIRCADA, A tribute anciently paid to the biſhop or archdeacon for viſiting the churches. Du Freſne.

CIRCGEMOT, Vide Chirchgemot.

CIRCUITY OF ACTION, circuitus actionis.] A longer courſe of proceeding to recover a thing ſued for than is needful: as if a perſon grant a rent-charge of 10 l. per annum out of his manor of B. and after, the grantee diſſeiſeth the grantor of the ſame manor, who brings an aſſiſe and recovers the land, and 20 l. damages, which being paid, the grantee brings his action for 10 l. of his rent due during the time of the diſſeiſin, which he muſt have had if no diſſeiſin had been: this is called circuity of action becauſe as the grantor was to receive 20 l. damages, and pay 10 l. rent, he might have received but 10 l. only for damages, and the grantee might have kept the other 10 l. in his hands by way of retainer for his rent, and ſo ſaved his action, which appears to be needleſs. Terms de Ley. See title Action.

CIRCUITS, Certain diviſions of the kingdom appointed for the Judges to go twice a year, for adminiſtering of juſtice, in the ſeveral counties. Theſe circuits are made in the reſpective vacations, after Hilary and Trinity terms. See titles Aſſiſe, Niſi Prius.

The ſeveral counties of England are divided into ſix circuits, viz. 1. MIDLAND; containing the counties of Northampton, Rutland, Lincoln, Nottingham, Derby, Leiceſter, Warwick—2. NORFOLK; Bucks, Bedford, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Norfolk, Suffolk—3. HOME; Hertford, Eſſex, Kent, Suſſex, Surrey—4. OXFORD; Berks, Oxford, Hereford, Salop, Glouceſter, Monmouth, Stafford, Worceſter.—5. WESTERN; Southampton, Wilts, Dorſet, Cornwall, Devon, Somerſet.—6. NORTHERN; York, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, Weſtmerland, Lancaſhire.

CIRCUMSPECTE AGATIS, Is the title of a ſtatute made anno 13 Ed. 1. ſtat. 4, relating to prohibitions, preſcribing certain caſes to the judges, wherein the king's prohibition lies not. 2 Inſt. 187. See title Prohibition.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE. See title Evidence.

CIRCUMSTANTIBUS, By-ſtanders; a word of art ſignifying the ſupplying or making up the number of jurors, if any impanelled appear not, or appearing are challenged by either party, by adding to them ſo many of thoſe that are preſent, or ſtanding-by (tales de circumſtantibus) that are qualified as will ſerve the turn. See Stat. 35 H. 8. cap. 6. and Stat. 5. Eliz. c. 25, for Wales. See alſo title Jury.

CITATION, citatio.] A ſummons to appear, applied particularly to proceſs in the ſpiritual court. The eccleſiaſtical courts proceed according to the courſe of the civil and canon laws, by citation, libel, &c. A perſon is not generally to be cited to appear out of the dioceſe, or peculiar juriſdiction where he lives; unleſs it be by the archbiſhop, in default of the Ordinary; where the Ordinary is party to the ſuit, in caſes of appeal, &c. and by law a defendant may be ſued where he lives, though it is for ſubtracting tithes in another dioceſe, &c. 1 Nelſ. 449. By the Stat. 23 Hen. 8. cap. 9, Every archbiſhop may cite any perſon dwelling in any biſhop's dioceſe within his province for hereſy, &c. if the biſhop or other Ordinary conſents; or if the biſhop or Ordinary, or judge, do not do his duty in puniſhing the offence. Where perſons are cited out of their dioceſe, and live out of the juriſdiction of the biſhop, a prohibition or conſultation may be granted: but where perſons live in the dioceſe, if when they are cited they do not appear, they are to be excommunicated, &c. The above ſtatute was made to maintain the juriſdiction of inferior dioceſes; and if any perſon is cited out of the dioceſe, &c. where the civil or canon law doth not allow it, the party grieved ſhall have double damages. If one defame another within the peculiar of the archbiſhop, he may be puniſhed there; although he dwell in any remote place out of the archbiſhop's peculiar. Godb. 190.—See title Courts Eccleſiaſtical.

CITY, civitas.] According to Cowel is a town corporate, which hath a biſhop and cathedral church, which is called civitas, oppidum, and urbs; civitas, in regard it is governed by juſtice and order of magiſtracy; oppidum, for that it contains a great number of inhabitants; and urbs, becauſe it is in due form begirt about with walls. But Crompton, in his Juriſdictions, where he reckons up the cities, leaveth out Ely, although it hath a biſhop and cathedral church: and puts in Weſtminſter, though it hath not at preſent a biſhop: and Sir Edward Coke makes Cambridge a city; yet there is no mention that it was ever an epiſcopal ſee. Indeed it appears by the Stat. 35 H. 8. cap. 10, that there was a biſhop of Weſtminſter; ſee tit. Biſhops; ſince which in Stat. 17 Eliz. cap. 5, it is termed a city or borough: and notwithſtanding what Coke obſerves of Cambridge, in the Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 4, Cambridge is called only a town.

Kingdoms have been ſaid to contain as many cities as they have ſees of archbiſhops and biſhops: but according to Blount, City is a word which hath obtained ſince the Conqueſt; for in the time of the Saxons there were no cities, but all great towns were called burghs, and even London was then ſtiled London-Burg; as the capital of Scotland is now called Edinburgh. And long after the conqueſt the word city is uſed promiſcuouſly with the word burgh, as in the charter of Leiceſter it is called both civitas and burgus; which ſhews that thoſe writers were miſtaken, that tell us every city was or is a biſhop's ſee. And tho' the word city ſignifies with us ſuch a town corporate as hath uſually a biſhop and cathedral church; yet it is not always ſo.

A City, ſays Blackſtone, is a town incorporated, which is or hath been the ſee of a biſhop; and though the biſhoprick be diſſolved, as at Weſtminſter, yet ſtill it remaineth a city. 1 Comm. 114.

It appears, however, that Weſtminſter retained the name of city, not becauſe it had been a biſhop's ſee, but becauſe it was expreſsly created ſuch, in the letters-patent by King H. VIII. erecting it into a biſhoprick—See Burnet's Reform Apdx. There was a ſimilar clauſe in favour of the other five new created cities, Cheſter, Peterborough, Oxford, Glouceſter and Briſtol, the charter for Cheſter is in Gib. Cod. 1449; and that for Oxford in 14 Rym. Fœd. 754. Lord Coke ſeems anxious to rank Cambridge among the cities. Mr. Wooddeſon late Vinerian profeſſor (ſee his lectures i. 302,) has produced a deciſive authority that cities and biſhops' ſees had not originally any neceſſary connection with each other. It is that of Ingulphus, who relates that at the great council aſſembled in 1072, to ſettle the claim of precedence between the two archbiſhops, it was decreed that biſhops' ſees ſhould be transferred from towns to cities.

The accidental coincidence of the ſame number of biſhops and cities would naturally produce the ſuppoſition that they were connected together as a neceſſary cauſe and effect; it is certainly a ſtrong confirmation of the above authority that the ſame diſtinction is not paid to biſhops' ſees in Ireland.

Mr. Hargrave in his notes to 1 Inſt. 110. proves that although Weſtminſter is a city and has ſent citizens to parliament from the time of Ed. VI. it never was incorporated; and this is a ſtriking inſtance in contradiction of the learned opinions there referred to, viz. that the King could not grant within time of memory to any place the right of ſending members to parliament without firſt creating that place a corporation—1 Comm. edit. 1793. in n.—See alſo title Parliament, Biſhops, Borough, &c.

CITIZENS of London, See title London.

CIVIL LAW, Is defined to be that law which every particular nation, commonwealth or city, has eſtabliſhed peculiarly for itſelf: jus civile eſt, quod quiſque populus ſibi conſtituit. Juſt. Inſt. Now more properly diſtinguiſhed by the name of municipal law: the term Civil Law being chiefly applied to that which the old Romans uſed, compiled from the Laws of Nature and of Nations. The Roman law was founded firſt, upon the regal conſtitutions of their ancient kings; next upon the twelve tables of the Decemviri; then upon the laws or ſtatutes enacted by the Senate or People; the edicts of the Prætor and the Reſponſa Prudentum, or opinions of learned lawyers; and laſtly, upon the imperial decrees or conſtitutions of ſucceſſive Emperors.—Theſe had by degrees grown to an enormous bulk; but the inconvenience ariſing therefrom was in part remedied, by the collections of three private lawyers, Gregorius, Hermogenes and Papinius; and afterwards by the Emperor Theodoſius the younger, by whoſe orders a Code was compiled A. D. 438, being a methodical collection of all the imperial conſtitutions then in force: which Theodoſian Code was the only book of civil law received as authentick in the Weſtern part of Europe, 'till many centuries after.—For Juſtinian commanded only in the Eaſtern remains of the Empire; and it was under his auſpices that the preſent body of Civil laws was compiled and finiſhed by Trebonian, about the year 533.

This conſiſts of,—1. The Inſtitutes; which contain the elements or firſt principles of the Roman Law in 4 books.—2. The Digeſts or Pandects in 50 books; containing the opinions and writings of eminent lawyers, digeſted in a ſyſtematical method.—3. A New code or collection of imperial conſtitutions in 12 books; the lapſe of a century having rendered the former code of Theodoſius imperfect.—4. The Novels or new conſtitutions poſterior in time to the other books, and amounting to a ſupplement to the code containing new decrees of ſucceſſive Emperors, as new queſtions happened to ariſe.—Theſe form the body of the Roman law or Corpus Juris Civilis, as publiſhed about the time of Juſtinian; which however ſoon fell into neglect and oblivion till about the year 1130, when a copy of the Digeſts was found at Amalfi in Italy; which accident, concurring with the policy of the Roman eccleſiaſtics, ſuddenly gave a new vogue and authority to the Civil law, and introduced it into ſeveral nations. 1 Comm. 80, 81.

The Digeſt or Pandects, was collected from the works and commentaries of the ancient lawyers, ſome whereof lived before the coming of our Saviour: The whole Digeſt is divided into ſeven parts: the firſt part contains the elements of the law, as what is juſtice, right, &c. The ſecond part treats of judges and judgments: The third part of perſonal action, &c. The fourth part of contracts, pawns and pledges: The fifth part of wills, teſtaments, &c. The ſixth part of the poſſeſſion of goods: The ſeventh part of obligations, crimes, puniſhments, &c. The Inſtitutes contain a ſyſtem of the whole body of law, and are an epitome of the Digeſt divided into four books; but ſometimes they correct the Digeſt: they are called Inſtitutes, becauſe they are for inſtruction, and ſhew an eaſy way to the obtaining a knowledge of the Civil law: but they are not ſo diſtinct and comprehenſive as they might be, nor ſo uſeful at this time as they were at firſt. The Novels or Authenticks were publiſhed at ſeveral times without any method: they are termed Novels as they are new laws, and Authenticks, being authentically tranſlated from the Greek into the Latin tongue; and the whole volume is divided into nine Collations, Conſtitutions or ſections; and they again into 168 Novels, which alſo are diſtributed into certain chapters: the firſt collation relates to heirs, executors, &c. The ſecond, the ſtate of the church: the third is againſt bawds: the fourth concerns marriages, &c. The fifth forbids the alienation of the poſſeſſions of the church: the ſixth ſhews the legitimacy of children, &c. The ſeventh determines who ſhall be witneſſes: the eighth ordains wills to be good, though imperfect, &c. And the ninth contains matter of ſucceſſion in goods, &c. Dict.

To thoſe tomes of the Civil law we may add the Book of Feuds, which contains the cuſtoms and ſervices that the ſubject or vaſſal oweth to his prince or lord, for ſuch lands or fees as he holdeth of him. The Conſtitutions of the Emperor, were either by a reſcript, which was the letter of the Emperor in anſwer to particular perſons who enquired the law of him; or by edict, which the Emperor eſtabliſhed of his own accord, that it might be generally obſerved by every ſubject; or by decree, which the Emperor pronounced between plaintiff and defendant, upon hearing hearing a particular cauſe. The power of iſſuing forth reſcripts, edicts and decrees, was given to the prince by the lex regia, wherein the people of Rome wholly ſubmitted themſelves to the government of one perſon, viz. Julius Cæſar, after the defeat of Pompey, &c. And by this ſubmiſſion the prince could not only make laws, but was eſteemed above all coercive power of them. Dict.

How far the Civil law is adopted and of force in this kingdom. See title Canon Law.

Before the Reformation, decrees were as frequent in the Canon law as in the Civil law.—Many were graduates in utroque jure or utriuſque juris. J. U. D. or juris utriuſque doctor, is ſtill common in Foreign Univerſities. But Henry VIII, in the 27th year of his reign when he had renounced the auhority of the Pope, iſſued a mandate to the Univerſity of Cambridge, to prohibit lectures and the granting degrees in Canon law in that Univerſity. Stat. Acad. p. 137.—It is probable that at the ſame time Oxford received a ſimilar prohibition, and that degrees in canon law have ever ſince been diſcontinued in England. 1 Comm. 392. in n.

CIVIL LIST. See title King.

TO CLACK WOOL, Is to cut off the ſheep's mark, which makes it weigh lighter; as to force wool, ſignifies to clip off the upper and hairy part thereof; and to bard it, is to cut the head and neck from the reſt of the fleece. Stat. 8 H. 6. cap. 22.

CLADES, Clida, cleta, cleia, from the Brit. clie, and the Iriſh clia.] A wattle or hurdle; and a hurdle for penning or folding of ſheep is ſtill in ſome counties of England called a cley. Paroch. Antiq. p. 575.

CLARENDON, Conſtitutions of: certain conſtitutions, made in the reign of Hen. II. A. D. 1164, in a great council held at Clarendon, whereby the King checked the power of the Pope, and his clergy, and greatly narrowed the total exemption they claimed from the ſecular juriſdiction. 4 Comm. 422.

CLARETUM, A liquor made of wine and honey, clarified or made clear by decoction, &c. which the Germans, French, and Engliſh, called hippocras: and it was from this, the red wines of France were called claret.—Girald. Camb. apud Wharton. Ang. Sax. Par. 2. p. 480.

CLAIM, clameum.] A challenge of intereſt in any thing that is in the poſſeſſion of another, or at leaſt out of a man's own poſſeſſion; as claim by charter, by deſcent, &c.

In Plow. Com. 359 (a), Dyer C. J. is ſaid to have defined claim to be, a challenge of the ownerſhip or property that one hath not in poſſeſſion, but which is detained from him by wrong.

CLAIM is either verbal, where one doth by words claim and challenge the thing that is ſo out of his poſſeſſion: or it is by an action brought, &c. and ſometimes it relates to lands, and ſometimes to goods and chattels. Lit. Sect. 420. Where any thing is wrongfully detained from a perſon, this claim is to be made; and the party making it, may thereby avoid deſcents of lands, diſſeiſins, &c. and preſerve his title, which otherwiſe would be in danger of being loſt. Co. Lit. 250. A man who hath preſent right or title to enter, muſt make a claim; and in caſe of reverſions, &c. one may make a claim where he hath right, but cannot enter on the lands: when a perſon dares not make an entry on land, for fear of being beaten or other injury, he may approach as near as he can to the land, and claim the ſame; and that ſhall be ſufficient to veſt the ſeiſin in him. 1 Inſt. 250. See title Entry.

If nothing doth hinder a man, having a right to land, from entering or making his claim; there he muſt do ſo, before he ſhall be ſaid to be in poſſeſſion of it, or can grant it over to another: but where the party who hath right, is in poſſeſſion already, and where an entry or claim cannot be made, it is otherwiſe. 1 Rep. 157. A claim will deveſt an eſtate out of another, when the party muſt enter into ſome part of the land; but if it be only to bring him into poſſeſſion, he may do it in view. By claim of lands in moſt caſes is intended a claim with an entry into part of the lands, or by a near approach to it. Co. Lit. 252, 254: Poph. 67. One in reverſion after an eſtate for years, or after a ſtatute-merchant, ſtaple, or elegit, may enter and make a claim to prevent a deſcent, or avoid a collateral warranty. And claim of a remainder by force of a condition muſt be upon the land, or it will not be ſufficient. Co. Lit. 202.

If a man ſeiſed of lands in right of his wife, make a feoffment in fee on condition, and the huſband dieth, and then the condition is broken, and the heir enters; in this caſe the wife need not claim to get poſſeſſion of her eſtate, for the law doth veſt it in her without any claim. Co. Lit. 202: 8 Rep. 43.

The claim of the particular tenant, ſhall be good for him in reverſion or remainder; and of him in reverſion, &c. for particular tenant: ſo claim of a copyholder, will be good for the lord, &c. But if tenant for years, in a court of record claim the fee of his land, it is a forfeiture of his eſtate. Plowd. 359: Co. Lit. 251. A claim may be made by the party himſelf; and ſometimes by his ſervants or deputy: and a guardian in ſocage, &c. may make a claim, or enter, in the name of the infant that hath right, without any commandment. Co. Lit. 245.

Claim or entry ſhould be made as ſoon as may be; and by the Common law it is to be within a year and a day after the diſſeiſin, &c. and if the party who hath unjuſtly gained the eſtate, do afterwards occupy the land, in ſome caſes an aſſiſe, treſpaſs or forcible entry may be had againſt him. Lit. Sect. 426, 430.

If a fine is levied of lands, ſtrangers to it are to enter and make a claim within five years, or be barred: infants after their age, feme coverts after the death of their huſbands, &c. have the like time, by Stat. 1 R. 3. cap. 7. See title Fines.

CONTINUAL CLAIM, is where a man hath right and title to enter into any lands or tenements, whereof another is ſeiſed in fee, or in fee tail; if he who hath title to enter makes continual claim to the lands or tenements before the dying ſeiſed of him, who holdeth the tenements, then though ſuch tenant die thereof ſeiſed, and the lands or tenements deſcend to his heir, yet may he who hath made ſuch continual claim, or his heir, enter into the lands or tenements ſo deſcended, by reaſon of the continual claim made, notwithſtanding the deſcent. So, (Si come) in caſe a man be diſſeiſed, and the diſſeiſee makes continual claim to the tenements in the life of the diſſeiſor, although the diſſeiſor dieth ſeiſed in fee, and the land deſcend to his heir, yet may the diſſeiſee enter upon the poſſeſſion of the heir, notwithſtanding the deſcent. Litt. § 414.

But ſuch claim muſt always be made within the year and the day before the death of the perſon holding the land; for if ſuch tenant do not die ſeiſed within a year and a day, after ſuch claim made, and yet he that hath right dares not enter, he muſt make another claim, within the year and the day after the firſt claim, and ſo toties quoties, that he may be ſure his claim ſhall always have been made within a year and a day before the death of the tenant; and hence it ſeems it is called Continual Claim.—See further title Entry; as alſo title Deſcent.

By Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 43, Five years muſt elapſe without entry or continual claim, in order that a deſcent on the diſſeiſor's death ſhould take away the entry of the diſſeiſee, or his heir; but after the five years, the diſſeiſee muſt make continual claim as before the ſtatute. And by Stat. 4 An. c. 16. § 16, no claim (or entry) ſhall be of effect to avoid a fine, unleſs an action ſhall be commenced thereon within a year, and proſecuted with effect. See titles Fine, Entry, Diſſeiſin, &c.—And for further particulars, See 1 Inſt. 150. and n.

CLAIM OF LIBERTY, A ſuit or petition to the king in the court of Exchequer, to have liberties and franchiſes confirmed there by the king's Attorney General. Co. Ent. 93.

CLAMEA ADMITTENDA IN ITINERE PER ATTORNATUM. An ancient writ by which the king commanded the juſtices in eyre to admit a perſon's claim by attorney who was employed in the king's ſervice, and could not come in his own perſon. Reg. Orig. 19.

CLAP-BOARD, Is a board cut in order to make caſks or veſſels; which ſhall contain three feet and two inches at leaſt in length: and for every ſix ton of beer exported, the ſame caſk, or as good, or 200 of clap-boards is to be imported. See title Navigation Acts.

CLERGY.

Clerus.] Signifies the aſſembly or body of clerks or eccleſiaſticks, being taken for the whole number of thoſe who are de clero Domini, of our Lord's lot or ſhare, as the tribe of Levi was in Judæa; and are ſeparate from the noiſe and buſtle of the world, that they may have leiſure to ſpend their time in the duties of the Chriſtian religion.

The Clergy in general, were heretofore divided into regular and ſecular: thoſe being regular which lived under certain rules, being of ſome religious order, and were called men of religion, or The Religious: ſuch as all Abbots, Priors, Monks, &c. The ſecular were thoſe that lived not under any certain rules of the religious orders; as Biſhops, Deans, Parſons, &c.—Now, the word Clergy comprehends all perſons in holy orders, and in eccleſiaſtical offices, viz. Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Deans and Chapters, Archdeacons, Rural Deans, Parſons, (who are either Rectors, or Vicars) and Curates,—to which may be added Pariſh Clerks, who formerly frequently were, and yet ſometimes are, in orders.—As to the law more peculiarly reſpecting each of theſe, See the ſeveral titles, particularly title Parſon.

This venerable body of men have ſeveral privileges allowed them by our municipal laws, and had formerly much greater, which were abridged at the time of the reformation, on account of the ill uſe which the Popiſh clergy had endeavoured to make of them: for the laws having exempted them from almoſt every perſonal duty, they attempted a total exemption from every ſecular tie. The perſonal exemptions however for the moſt part continue, a clergyman cannot be compelled to ſerve on a jury, nor to appear at a Court Leet, or view of frankpledge, which almoſt every other perſon is obliged to do. 2 Inſt. 4. (See title Court Leet). But if a layman is ſummoned on a jury, and before the trial takes orders, he ſhall, notwithſtanding, appear and be ſworn. 4 Leon. 190. A clergyman cannot be choſen to any temporal office, as bailiff, reeve, conſtable, or the like, in regard of his own continual attendance on the ſacred function. Finch. L. 88. During his attendance on divine ſervice he is privileged from arreſts in civil ſuits; for a reaſonable time, eundo, redeundo & morando, to perform ſervice. Stats. 50 E. 3. c. 5: 1 R. 2. c. 16: 12 Co. 100.—In caſes of felony he ſhall have benefit of his clergy, without being branded; and may likewiſe have it more than once. See poſt, Clergy, benefit of.—Clergymen alſo have certain diſabilities; it is doubted how far they are capable of ſitting as members of the Houſe of Commons. See poſt. title Parliament.—By Stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13, the Clergy are not (in general) allowed to take any lands or tenements to farm, on pain of 10*l. per* month, and total avoidance of the leaſe; unleſs where they have not ſufficient glebe, and the land is taken for the neceſſary expences of their houſehold. Stat. § 8.—Nor, on like penalty naſty to keep any tan-houſe, or brew-houſe.—Nor may they engage in any trade, or ſell merchandize, on forfeiture of treble value. But ſee title Bankrupt.

By the ſtatute called Articuli Cleri, 9 E. 2. ſt. 1. c. 3, If any perſon lay violent hands on a clerk, the amends for the peace broken (1) ſhall be before the king (that is by indictment,) and the aſſailant may (2) alſo be ſued before the biſhop, that excommunication or bodily penance may be impoſed; which if the offender will redeem by money, it may (3) be ſued for before the biſhop. See 4 Comm. 217.

Although the Clergy claimed an exemption from all ſecular juriſdiction, yet Mat. Paris tells us, that ſoon after William the Firſt had conquered Harold, he ſubjected the biſhopricks and abbeys who held per baroniam, that they ſhould be no longer free from military ſervice; and for that purpoſe he in an arbitrary manner regiſtered how many ſoldiers every biſhoprick and abbey ſhould provide, and ſend to him and his ſucceſſors in time of war; and having placed theſe regiſters of eccleſiaſtical ſervitude in his treaſury, thoſe who were aggrieved, departed out of the realm: but the clergy were not, till then, exempted from all ſecular ſervice; becauſe by the laws of King Edgar they were bound to obey the ſecular magiſtrate in three caſes, viz. Upon any expedition to the wars, and to contribute to the building and repairing of bridges, and of caſtles for the defence of the kingdom. It is probable that by expedition to the wars, it was not at that time intended they ſhould perſonally ſerve, but contribute towards the charge: one they muſt do; as appears by the petition to the king, anno 1267, viz. Ut omnes clerici tenentes per baroniam vel feudum laicum, perſonaliter armati procederent contra regis adverſarios, vel tantum ſervitium in expeditione regis invenirent, quantum pertineret ad tantam terram vel tenementum. But their anſwer was, that they ought not to fight with the military but with the ſpiritual ſword, that is with prayers and tears; that they were to maintain peace and not war, and that their baronies were founded on charity; for which reaſon they ought not to perform any military ſervice. Blount.

That the Clergy had greater privileges and exemptions at common law than the laity is certain; for they are confirmed to them by Magna Charta, and other ancient ſtatutes; but theſe privileges are in a great meaſure loſt, the clergy being included under general words in later ſtatutes; ſo that clergymen are liable to all public charges impoſed by act of parliament, where they are not particularly excepted as above ſtated. Their bodies are not to be taken upon ſtatutes-merchant or ſtaple, &c. for the writ to take the body of the conuſor is ſi laicus ſit; and if the ſheriff or any other officer arreſt a clergyman upon any ſuch proceſs, it is ſaid an action of falſe impriſonment lies againſt him that does it, or the clergyman arreſted may have a ſuperſedeas out of Chancery. 2 Inſt. 4.

In action of treſpaſs, account, &c. againſt a perſon in holy orders, wherein proceſs of capias lies, if the ſheriff return that the defendant is clericus beneficiatus nullam habens laicum feodum ubi ſummoneri poteſt; in this caſe the plaintiff cannot have a capias to arreſt his body; but the writ ought to iſſue to the biſhop, to compel him to appear, &c. But on execution had againſt ſuch clergyman, a ſequeſtration ſhall be had of the profits of his benefice. 2 Inſt. 4: Degge 157.

The foregoing are all the privileges remaining on civil accounts: though by the common law, they were to be free from the payment of tolls, in all fairs, and markets, as well for all the goods gotten upon their church livings, as for all goods and merchandiſes by them bought to be ſpent upon their rectories; and they had ſeveral other exemptions, &c.

CLERGY, BENEFIT OF.

This being, as Blackſtone obſerves, a title of no ſmall curioſity as well as uſe; the learned commentator's chapter on that ſubject, (4 Comm. 365,) is here abridged; with ſuch additions thereto as ſeemed requiſite; in which enquiry is made,

I. Into its Original; and various Changes.
II. To whom it is now to be allowed.
III. In what Caſes.
IV. The Conſequences of allowing it.

I. CLERGY, the privilegium clericale, or in common ſpeech The Benefit of Clergy, had its original from the pious regard paid by Chriſtian princes to the church in its infant ſtate; and the ill uſe which the Popiſh eccleſiaſtics ſoon made of that pious regard. The exemptions which they granted to the Church were principally of two kinds: 1. Exemption of places, conſecrated to religious duties, from criminal arreſts, which was the foundation of ſanctuaries: 2. Exemption of the perſons of clergymen from criminal proceſs before the ſecular judge, in a few particular caſes; which was the true original and meaning of the privilegium clericale.

In England however, a total exemption of the clergy from ſecular juriſdiction could never be thoroughly effected, though often endeavoured by the clergy: Keilw. 180: See Stat. Weſtm. 1. 3 E. 1. c. 2: and therefore, though the ancient privilegium clericale was in ſome capital caſes, yet it was not univerſally allowed. And in thoſe particular caſes, the uſe was for the biſhop or Ordinary to demand his clerks to be remitted out of the king's courts as ſoon as they were indicted: concerning the allowance of which demand there was for many years a great uncertainty; (2 Hal. P. C. 377;) till at length it was finally ſettled, in the reign of Henry VI. that the priſoner ſhould firſt be arraigned; and might either then claim his benefit of clergy, by way of declinatory plea; or, after conviction, by way of arreſting judgment. This latter way is moſt uſually practiſed, as it is more to the ſatisfaction of the court to have the crime previouſly aſcertained by confeſſion, or the verdict of a jury; and alſo it is more advantageous to the priſoner himſelf, who may poſſibly be acquitted, and ſo need not the benefit of his clergy at all.

Originally the law was held, that no man ſhould be admitted to the privilege of clergy, but ſuch as had the habitum et tonſuram clericalem. 2 Hal. P. C. 372: M. Paris, A. D. 1259. But in proceſs of time, a much wider and more comprehenſive criterion was eſtabliſhed: every one that could read, (a mark of great learning in thoſe days of ignorance and ſuperſtition,) being accounted a clerk, or clericus, and allowed the benefit of clerkſhip, though neither initiated in holy orders, nor trimmed with the clerical tonſure. But when learning, by means of the invention of printing, and other concurrent cauſes, began to be more generally diſſeminated than formerly; and reading was no longer a competent proof of clerkſhip, or being in holy orders; it was found that as many laymen as divines were admitted to the privilegium clericale: and therefore by Stat. 4 Hen. 7. c. 13, a diſtinction was once more drawn between mere lay ſcholars, and clerks that were really in orders. And, though it was thought reaſonable ſtill to mitigate the ſeverity of the law with regard to the former, yet they were not put upon the ſame footing with actual clergy; being ſubjected to a ſlight degree of puniſhment, and not allowed to claim the clerical privilege more than once. Accordingly the ſtat. directs, that no perſon, once admitted to the benefit of clergy, ſhall be admitted thereto a ſecond time, unleſs he produces his orders: and in order to diſtinguiſh their perſons, all laymen who are allowed this privilege ſhall be burnt with a hot iron in the brawn of the left thumb. This diſtinction between learned laymen, and real clerks in orders, was aboliſhed for a time by the Stats. 28 Hen. 8. c. 1, and 32 Hen. 8. c. 3; but it is held, (Hob. 294: 2 Hal. P. C. 375,) to have been virtually reſtored by ſt. 1 Edw. 6. c. 12: which ſtatute alſo enacts that Lords of Parliament, and peers of the realm, having place and voice in parliament, may have the benefit of their peerage, equivalent to that of clergy, for the firſt offence, (although they cannot read, and without being burnt in the hand) for all offences then clergyable to commoners; and alſo for the crimes of houſe-breaking, highway-robbery, horſe-ſtealing, and robbing of churches.

After this burning, the laity, and before it, the real clergy, were diſcharged from the ſentence of the law in the king's court, and delivered over to the Ordinary, to be dealt with, according to the eccleſiaſtical canons. Whereupon the Ordinary proceeded to make a purgation of the offender by a new canonical trial, by the oath of the offender and that of twelve compurgators, although he had been previouſly convicted by his country, or perhaps by his own confeſſion. Staunf. P. C. 138 b. See alſo 3 P. Wms. 447: Hob. 289, 291.

But this purgation opening a door to a ſcandalous proſtitution of oaths, and other abuſes, It was enacted by Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 7, that for the avoiding of ſuch perjuries and abuſes, after the offender has been allowed his clergy, he ſhall not be delivered to the Ordinary as formerly; but, upon ſuch allowance, and burning in the hand, he ſhall forthwith be enlarged and delivered out of priſon; with proviſo that the judge may, if he thinks fit, continue the offender in gaol for any time not exceeding a year. And thus the law continued for above a century, unaltered; except only that the Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 6, allowed, that women convicted of ſimple larcenies, under the value of 10*s.* ſhould (not properly have the benefit of clergy, for they were not called upon to read; but) be burned in the hand, whipped, put in the ſtocks, or impriſoned for any time not exceeding a year. And a ſimilar indulgence by Stats. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9: 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24, was extended to women guilty of any clergyable felony whatſoever; who were allowed to claim the benefit of the ſtatute once, in like manner as Men might claim the benefit of clergy, and to be diſcharged upon being burned in the hand, and impriſoned for any time not exceeding a year. The puniſhment of burning in the hand was changed by Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23, into burning in the left cheek, near the noſe; but this proviſion was repealed by Stat. 5 Ann. c. 6; and till that period, all women, all peers of parliament, and peereſſes, and all male commoners who could read were diſcharged in all clergyable felonies; the males abſolutely, if clerks in orders; and other commoners, both male and female upon branding; and peers and peereſſes without branding; for the firſt offence; yet all liable (except peers and peereſſes,) at the diſcretion of the judge, to impriſonment not exceeding a year. And thoſe men who could not read, if under the degree of peerage, were hanged.

But by the ſaid Stat. 5 An. c. 6, it was enacted, that the benefit of clergy ſhould be granted to all thoſe who were entitled to aſk it, without requiring them to read. And it was further enacted by the ſame ſtatute, that when any perſon is convicted of any theft or larceny, and burnt in the hand for the ſame, according to the ancient law, he ſhall alſo at the diſcretion of the judge, be committed to the houſe of correction, or public work-houſe, to be there kept to hard labour for any time not leſs than ſix months, and not exceeding two years; with a power of inflicting a double confinement in caſe of the party's eſcape from the firſt. And by Stats. 4 Geo. 1. c. 11: 6 Geo. 1. c. 23, when any perſons ſhall be convicted of any larceny either grand or petit, or any felonious ſtealing or taking of money or goods, either from the perſon, or the houſe of another, or in any other manner, and who by the law ſhall be entitled to the benefit of clergy, and liable only to burning in the hand, or whipping, the court may inſtead thereof, direct ſuch offenders to be tranſported; and by the Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 74, offenders liable to tranſportation, may in lieu thereof be employed, if males, (except in the caſe of petty larceny) in hard labour, for the benefit of ſome publick navigation, and in all caſes might be confined to hard labour in certain penitentiary houſes, then in contemplation to be erected; but this latter plan of the penitentiary houſes was never carried into execution. See further titles Felons, Tranſportation. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 58. § 10.

By the ſame Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 74, inſtead of burning in the hand, the Court in all clergyable felonies may impoſe a pecuniary fine, or (except in the caſe of manſlaughter) may order the offender to be once or oftener, but not more than thrice, either publickly or privately whipped; and in the latter caſe, certain proviſions are added to prevent colluſion or abuſe. The offender ſo fined or whipped, to be equally liable to ſubſequent detainer or impriſonment.

II. 1. ALL Clerks in orders, are without any branding, and of courſe without any tranſportation, fine, or whipping, (for thoſe are only ſubſtituted in lieu of the other,) to be admitted to this privilege, or benefit of clergy, and immediately diſcharged; and this as often as they offend. 2 Hal. P. C. 375.

2. All Lords of Parliament, and peers of the realm, having place and voice in parliament, by Stat. 1 E. 6. c. 12; (which is likewiſe held to extend to peereſſes; Dutcheſs of Kingſton's caſe, 11 State Tr. 198;) ſhall be diſcharged in all clergyable, and other felonies, provided for by the act, without any burning in the hand, or impriſonment, or other puniſhment ſubſtituted in its ſtead, in the ſame manner as real clerks convict; but this only for the firſt offence.

3. All the Commons of the realm, not in orders, whether male or female, ſhall for the firſt offence be diſcharged of the capital puniſhment of felonies, within the benefit of clergy, upon being burnt in the hand, whipped, or fined, or ſuffering the diſcretionary impriſonment before ſtated; or in caſe of larceny, upon being tranſported for ſeven years, if the court ſhall think proper.

It is a privilege peculiar only to the Clergy, that ſentence of death can never be paſſed upon them for any number of man ſlaughters, bigamies, ſimple larcenies, or other clergyable offences; but a layman, even a peer, may be ouſted of clergy, and will be ſubject to the judgment of death, upon a ſecond conviction of a clergyable offence. Thus if a layman has once been convicted of manſlaughter, upon production of the conviction, he may afterwards ſuffer death for bigamy, or any other clergyable felony; which would not therefore be a capital crime to another perſon not ſo circumſtanced. See poſt as to the Counter-plea.

It has been ſaid that Jews, and other infidels and heretics, were not capable of the benefit of clergy, till after the Stat. 5 An. c. 6; as being under a legal incapacity for orders. 2 Hal. P. C. 373: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 5: Foſt. 306. But it does not ſeem that this was ever ruled for law, ſince the re-introduction of the Jews into England, in the time of the uſurpation by Cromwell. For if that were the caſe, the Jews are ſtill in the ſame predicament; which every day's experience contradicts: the Stat. of An. having made no alteration in this reſpect, it only diſpenſing with the neceſſity of reading. 4 Comm. 373.

But a perſon having once had benefit of clergy, ſhall not be ouſted of his clergy, by the bare mark in his hand, or by a parol averment, without the record teſtifying it, or a tranſcript thereof, according to the following ſtatutes. 2 H. H. 373.

By Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. cap. 14. The Clerk of the crown, or of the peace, or of aſſiſe, ſhall certify a tranſcript briefly of the tenor of the indictment, outlawry, or conviction, and attainder, into the King's Bench in forty days: and the clerk of the crown, when the judges of aſſiſe, or Juſtices of the peace write to him for the names of ſuch perſons, ſhall certify the ſame, with the cauſes of the conviction or attainder.

Another method is given by the Stat. 3 W. & M. c. 9. ſect. 7; which enacts, that the clerk of the crown, clerk of the peace, or clerk of aſſiſe, where a perſon admitted to clergy under that act ſhall be convicted, ſhall at the requeſt of the proſecutor, or any other on the king's behalf, certify a tranſcript briefly and in few words, containing the effect and tenor of the indictment and conviction, of his having the benefit of clergy, and the addition of the party, and the certainty of the felony and conviction, to the judges where ſuch perſon ſhall be indicted for any ſubſequent offence.

Alſo it ſeems, that if the party deny that he is the ſame perſon, iſſue muſt be joined upon it, and it muſt be found upon trial that he is the ſame perſon, before he can be ouſted of clergy. 2 H. H. 373.

Againſt the defendant's prayer of clergy, the proſecutor may file a COUNTER-PLEA; alledging ſome fact, which in law deprives the defendant of the privilege he claims.

It is a good counter-plea to the prayer of clergy, that the offender is not entitled to the benefit of the ſtatute, becauſe he was before convicted of an offence, and thereupon prayed the benefit of the ſtatute, which was allowed to him; alledging the truth of the fact and praying the judgment of the court, that he may die according to law: which fact is to be tried by the record in purſuance of the Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 14, above ſtated. Staunf. 135 —Divers other counter-pleas alſo, by which an offender may be deprived of clergy, may be framed from a conſideration of the perſons to whom it is allowed or denied by the common law; and of the circumſtances under which that allowance or denial of it has been placed by divers ſtatutes. Ib. 138.

The uſe of this counter-plea however, had long become obſolete, and out of practice; no traces of it appearing in any of the books ſince Staundforde's time; who was Chief Juſtice of K. B. temp. Eliz. But the daring practices of ſome money-coiners occaſioned its revival; and in the caſe of R. v. Marſton Rothwell, and Mary Child, convicted for coining at the Old Bailey, in September ſeſſions 1783, before Aſhhurſt J. a counter-plea of record was filed on the part of the proſecution; alledging that the convicts had been before allowed the benefit of the ſtatute, &c. And they were thereby ouſted of their clergy. Leach's Hawk. P. C. ii. c. 33. § 19. n.

III. Privilege of Clergy was not indulged at common law, either in high treaſon, or in petit larceny, nor in any mere miſdemeanors; and therefore it may be laid down for a rule, that it was only allowable in petit treaſons, and capital felonies: which for the moſt part became legally entitled to this indulgence by the Stat. de Clero, 25 E. 3. ſt. 3. c. 4, which provides, "that clerks convict for treaſons or felonies, touching other perſons, than the king himſelf, ſhall have the privilege of Holy Church." But yet it was not allowable in all felonies whatſoever: for in ſome it was denied even by the common law, viz. inſidiatio viarum, or lying in wait for one on the highway; depopulatio agrorum, or deſtroying and ravaging a country; (2 Hal. P. C. 333; but in theſe two caſes it was expreſsly remedied by Stat. 4 H. 4. c. 2, as to clerks only;) and combuſtio domorum, or arſon, the burning of houſes. 1 Hal. P. C. 346: all which are a kind of hoſtile acts, and in ſome degree border on treaſon. And further, all theſe identical crimes, together with petit treaſon, and very many other acts of felony, are ouſted of clergy by particular acts of parliament.

All the ſtatutes for excluding clergy, are in fact nothing elſe but the reſtoring of the law to the ſame rigor of capital puniſhment in the firſt offence, that was exerted before the privilegium clericale was at all indulged; and ſo tender is the law of inflicting capital puniſhment, in the firſt inſtance, for any inferior felony, that notwithſtanding, by the marine law, as declared in Stat. 28 H. 8 c. 15, benefit of clergy is not allowed in any caſe whatever; yet when offences are committed within the Admiralty juriſdiction, which would be clergyable if committed by land, the conſtant courſe is to acquit and diſcharge the priſoner. Moor 756: Foſt. 288.

As there is no neceſſity that the Ordinary ſhould demand the benefit of the clergy for a clerk; ſo neither is there there any that the prisoner himself should demand it, where it sufficiently appears to the court that he hath a right to it, in respect of his being in orders, &c. In which case, if the prisoner does not demand it, it is left to the discretion of the judge, either to allow, or not allow it him. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 112.

Clergy may be demanded after judgment given against a person, whether of death, &c. and even under the gallows, if there be a proper judge there, who has power to allow it. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 33 § 111.

To conclude this head of inquiry, it may be observed.—1. That in all felonies, whether new created or by common law, clergy is now allowable, unless taken away by express words of an act of parliament. 2 Hal. P. C 330.—2. That where clergy is taken away from the principal, it is not of course taken away from the accessory; unless he be also particularly included in the words of the statute. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 26. And where clergy is taken away expressly by any statute, the offence must be laid in the indictment to be against that very statute, and the words of it, or the offender shall have his clergy. Kel. 104. H. P. C. 231.—3. That when the benefit of clergy is taken away from the offence (as in case of murder, robbery, rape, &c.) a principal in the second degree, being present aiding and abetting the crime, is excluded from his clergy equally with him that is principal in the first degree: but.—4. That where it is only taken away from the person committing the offence, (as in the case of stabbing, or larceny in a dwelling house, or privately stealing from the person,) his aiders and abettors are not excluded; as such statutes are to be taken literally. 1 Hal. P. C. 529: Foster 356, 7.

IV. The consequences are such as affect the present interest and future credit and capacity of the party, as having been once a felon, but now purged from that guilt by the privilege of clergy, which operates as a kind of statute pardon.

1. By this conviction, the offender forfeits all his goods to the king; which being once vested in the crown, shall not afterwards be restored to the offender. 2 Hal. P. C. 388.—2. After conviction, and till he receives the judgment of the law by branding, or some of its substitutes, or else is pardoned by the king, he is to all intents and purposes a felon, and subject to all the disabilities and other incidents of a felon. 3 P. Wms. 487.—3. After burning, or its substitute, or pardon, he is discharged for ever of that, and all other clergyable felonies before committed; but not of felonies, from which benefit of clergy is excluded; and this by Stats. 8 Eliz. c. 4. and 18 Eliz. c. 7.—4. By the burning, or its substitute, or the pardon of it, he is restored to all capacities and credits, and the possession of his lands, as if he had never been convicted. 2 Hal. P. C. 389: 5 Rep. 110.—5. What is said with regard to the advantages of commoners and laymen, subsequent to the burning in the hand, is equally applicable to all peers and clergymen, although never branded at all, or subjected to other punishment in its stead. 2 Hal. P. C. 389, 390.

It is holden, that after a man is admitted to his clergy, it is actionable to call him felon; because his offence being pardoned by the statute, all the infamy and other consequences of it are discharged. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 132.

As to what felonies are within, and what without clergy. See title Felons, and more particularly the Index to 1 Hawk. P. C.

Clerico Admittendo, See Admittendo Clerico.

Clerico infra sacros Ordines constituto, non Eligendo in Officium, A writ directed to those who have thrust a bailiwick, or other office upon one in holy orders, charging them to release him. Reg. Orig. 143.

Clerico capto per Statutum Mercatorum, &c. A writ for the delivery of a clerk out of prison, who is taken and imprisoned upon the breach of a statute merchant. Reg. Orig. 147. See ante title Clergy.

Clerico convicto commisso Gaolæ in defectu Ordinarii deliberando, An ancient writ that lay for the delivery of a clerk to his ordinary, that was formerly convicted of felony, by reason his ordinary did not challenge him according to the privileges of clerks. Reg. Orig. 69. See ante title Clergy.

CLERK, clericus.] The law term for a clergyman, and by which all of them who have not taken a degree are designated in deeds, &c. In the most general signification, is one that belongs to the holy ministry of the church; under which, where the Canon law hath full power, are not only comprehended sacerdotes and diaconi, but also subdiaconi, lectores, acolyti, exorcistæ and ostiarii: but the word has been anciently used for a secular priest; in opposition to a religious or regular. Paroch. Antiq. 171. And is said to be properly a minister or priest, one who is more peculiarly called in sortem Domini. Blount.

Clerk, In another sense denotes a person who practises his pen in any court, or otherwise; of which clerks there are various kinds, in several offices, &c.—The Clergy, in the early ages, as they engrossed almost every other branch of learning, so were they peculiarly remarkable for their proficiency in the study of the law. Nullus clericus nisi causidicus, is the character given of them soon after the Conquest by William of Malmsbury. The judges therefore were usually created out of the sacred order; and all the inferior offices were supplied by the lower clergy, which has occasioned their successors to be denominated clerks to this day. 1 Comm. 17.

Clerk of the Acts. An officer in the Navy Office, whose business it is to record all orders, contracts, bills, warrants, &c. transacted by the Lord High Admiral, or Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and Commissioners of the Navy. See Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 11.

Clerk of Affidavits, In the court of Chancery, is an officer that files all affidavits made use of in court.

Clerk of the Assise, Is he that writes all things judicially done by the justices of assises in their circuits. Cromp. Jurisd. 227. This officer is associated to the judge in commissions of assise, to take assises, &c.—Clerk of the assise shall not be counsel with any person on the circuit. Stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 24. § 5.—To certify the names of felons convict. See title Clergy, benefit of; II.—How punished for concealing, &c. any indictment, recognizance, fine or forfeiture. Stat. 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 22. § 9: 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. § 12.—See title Estreat, Sheriff.—To take but 2*s.* for drawing an indictment, and nothing if defective. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23. §§ 7, 8.—Fineable for falsely recording appearances of persons returned on a jury. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25. § 3. See title Jury.

CLERK OF THE BAILS, An officer belonging to the court of King's Bench. He files the bail-pieces taken in that court, and attends for that purpose.

CLERK OF THE CHEQUE, An officer in the King's court, so called because he hath the check and controlment of the yeomen of the guard, and all other ordinary yeomen belonging either to the King, Queen or Prince; giving leave, or allowing their absence in attendance, or diminishing their wages for the same: he also by himself or deputy takes the view of those that are to watch in the court, and hath the setting of the watch. See Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 12. Also there is an officer of the same name in the King's dock-yards at Plymouth, Deptford, Woolwich, Chatham, &c.

CLERK CONTROLLER OF THE KING'S HOUSE, Whereof there are two: An officer in the King's court, that hath authority to allow or dis-allow charges and demands of Pursuivants, Messengers of the Green Cloth, &c. He hath likewise the oversight of all defects and miscarriages of any of the inferior officers: and hath a right to sit in the counting-house, with the superior officers, viz. the Lord Steward, Treasurer, Controller, and Cofferer of the Household, for correcting any disorders. See Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 12.

CLERK OF THE CROWN, clericus coronæ.] An officer in the King's Bench, whose function is to frame, read and record all indictments against offenders there arraigned or indicted of any public crime. And when divers persons are jointly indicted, the Clerk of the crown shall take but one fee, viz. 2 s. for them all. Stat. 2 H. 4. c. 10. He is otherwise termed Clerk of the Crown-office, and exhibits informations, by order of the court, for divers offences. See title Information.

CLERK OF THE CROWN IN CHANCERY, An officer in that court who continually attends the Lord Chancellor in person or by deputy: he writes and prepares for the Great Seal, special matters of State by commission, or the like, either immediately from his majesty's orders, or by order of his council, as well ordinary as extraordinary, viz. commissions of lieutenancy, of justices of assise, oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, and of the peace, with their writs of association, &c. Also all general pardons, at the King's coronation; or in parliament, where he sits in the Lords' house in parliament time; and into his office the writs of parliament, with the names of knights and burgesses elected thereupon, are to be returned and filed. He hath likewise the making out of all special pardons: and writs of execution upon bonds of statute-staple forfeited; which was annexed to this office in the reign of Queen Mary, in consideration of his chargeable attendance.

CLERK OF THE DECLARATIONS, An officer of the court of King's Bench, that files all declarations in causes there depending, after they are ingrossed, &c.

CLERK OF THE DELIVERIES, An officer in the Tower of London, who exercises his office in taking of indentures for all stores, ammunition, &c. issued from thence.

CLERK OF THE ERRORS, clericus errorum.] In the court of Commons Pleas, transcribes and certifies into the King's Bench the tenor of the records of the cause or action upon which the writ of error, made by the cursitor, is brought there to be heard and determined. The Clerk of the Errors in the King's Bench, likewise transcribes and certifies the records of causes, in that court, into the Exchequer, if the cause of action were by bill: if by original, the Lord Chief Justice certifies the record into the House of Peers in Parliament, by taking the transcript from the Clerk of the Errors, and delivering it to the Lord Chancellor, there to be determined, according to the Stats. 27 Eliz. c. 8, and 31 Eliz. c. 1. The Clerk of the errors in the Exchequer also transcribes the records, certified thither out of the King's Bench, and prepares them for judgment in the court of Exchequer Chamber, to be given by the justices of C. B. and Barons there. Stats. 16 Car. 2. c. 2: 20 Car. 2. c. 4. See title Error.

CLERK OF THE ESSOINS, An officer belonging to the Court of Common Pleas, who keeps the essoin rolls; and the essoin roll is a record of that court: he has the providing of parchment, and cutting it out into rolls, marking the numbers thereon; and the delivery out of all the rolls to every officer of the court; the receiving of them again when they are written, and the binding and making up the whole bundles of every term; which he doth as servant of the Chief Justice. The Chief Justice of C. B. is at the charge of the parchment of all the rolls, for which he is allowed; as is also the Chief Justice of B. R. besides the penny for the seal of every writ of privilege and outlawry, the seventh penny taken for the seal of every writ in court under the green wax, or petit seal; the said Lord Chief Justices having annexed to their offices or places, the custody of the said seals belonging to each court.

CLERK OF THE ESTREATS, clericus extractorum.] A clerk or officer belonging to the Exchequer, who every Term receives the estreats out of the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer's Office, and writes them out to be levied for the King: and he makes schedules of such sums estreated as are to be discharged. See title Estreat.

CLERK OF THE HANAPER, or HAMPER, An officer in Chancery, whose office is to receive all the money due to the King, for the seals of charters, patents, commissions and writs; as also fees due to the officers for enrolling and examining the same. He is obliged to attendance on the Lord Chancellor daily in the term time, and at all times of sealing, having with him leather bags, wherein are put all charters, &c. After they are sealed, those bags, being sealed up with the Lord Chancellor's private seal, are delivered to the Controller of the Hanaper, who, upon receipt of them, enters the effect of them in a book, &c. This hanaper represents what the Romans termed fiscum, which contained the Emperor's treasure; and the Exchequer was anciently so called, because in eo reconderentur hanapi & scutræ cæteraque vasa quæ in censum & tributum persolvi solebant; or it may be for that the yearly tribute which princes received was in hampers or large vessels full of money. There being an arrear of 10,590*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* of several ancient fees and salaries, &c. payable out of this office; and there being a remainder of 13,698*l.* 1*s.* 11*d.* of the six-penny stamp duty on writs granted for relief of the suitors of the court of Chancery; it was enacted by the Stat. 23 G. 2. c. 25, that thereout the 10,590*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* should be paid to the creditors of this office. That the said duty should be made perpetual; and thereout 3000*l.* per annum should be paid to the Clerk of the Hanaper, that the residue of the 13,698*l.* 1*s.* 11*d.* should be laid out in government securities, and the intereſt paid to the Clerk of the Hanaper, who ſhould pay 1,200 l. to the Maſter of the Rolls. And that in caſe the revenue of this office ſo augmented, ſhould be more than ſufficient to pay all fees, ſalaries, &c. the clerk ſhould account for the ſurplus.

CLERK OF THE INROLLMENTS. An officer of the Common Pleas, that inrolls and exemplifies all fines and recoveries, and returns writs of entry, ſummons and ſeiſin, &c.

CLERK OF THE JURIES, clericus juratorum] An officer belonging to the court of Common Pleas, who makes out the writs of habeas corpora and diſtringas, for the appearance of juries; either in that court, or at the aſſiſes, after the jury or panel is returned upon the venire facias: he alſo enters into the rolls the awarding of theſe writs; and makes all the continuances, from the going out of the habeas corpora until the verdict is given.

CLERK OF THE MARKET, clericus mercati hoſpitii regis.] Is an officer of the King's houſe, to whom it belongs to take charge of the King's meaſures, and keep the ſtandards of them, which are examples of all meaſures throughout the land; as of ells, yards, quarts, gallons, &c. And of weights, buſhels, &c. And to ſee that all weights and meaſures in every place be anſwerable to the ſaid ſtandard: as to which office ſee Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 8. 9, 10, &c. Touching this officer's duty, there are alſo divers ſtatutes, as 13 R. 2. cap. 4; and 16 R. 2. c. 3; by which every clerk of the market is to have weights and meaſures with him when he makes eſſay of weights, &c. mark'd according to the ſtandard; and to ſeal weights and meaſures, under penalties.

The Stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 19, enacts, That clerks of the market of the King's or Prince's houſhould, ſhall only execute their offices within the verge; and head officers are to act in corporations, &c. The clerks of markets have generally power to hold a court, to which end they may iſſue out proceſs to ſheriffs and bailiffs to bring a jury before them; and give a charge, take preſentments of ſuch as keep or uſe falſe weights and meaſures; and may ſet a fine upon the offenders, &c. 4 Inſt. 274. But if they take any other fee or reward than what is allowed by ſtatute, &c. or impoſe any fines without legal trial; or otherwiſe miſdemean themſelves, they ſhall forfeit 5 l. for the firſt offence, 10 l. for the ſecond, and 20 l. for the third offence, on conviction before a juſtice of peace, &c. The court of the Clerk of the market is incident to every fair and market in the kingdom, to puniſh miſdemeanors therein; as a court of Pie powdre is to determine all diſputes relating to private or civil property. It is the moſt inferior court of criminal juriſdiction in the kingdom. 4 Comm. 275. See alſo Stats. 22 C. 2. c. 8: 23 C. 2. c. 12, and title Weights and Meaſures.

CLERK MARSHAL OF THE KING'S HOUSE, An officer that attends the Marſhal in his court, and records all his proceedings.

CLERK OF THE NICHILS, or NIHILS, clericus nihilorum.] An officer of the court of Exchequer, who makes a roll of all ſuch ſums as are nihiled by the ſheriffs upon their eſtreats of green wax; and delivers the ſame into the Remembrancer's Office, to have execution done upon it for the king. See Stat. 5 R. 2. c. 13.—Nihils are iſſues by way of fine or amercement.

CLERK OF THE ORDNANCE, An officer in the Tower, who regiſters all orders touching the King's ordnance.

CLERK OF THE OUTLAWRIES, clericus utlagariarum.] An officer belonging to the court of Common Pleas, being the ſervant or deputy to the King's Attorney General, for making out writs of capias utlagatum, after outlawry; the King's Attorney's name being to every one of thoſe writs.

CLERK OF THE PAPER OFFICE, An officer in the court of King's Bench, that makes up the paper-books of ſpecial pleadings and demurrers in that court.

CLERK OF THE PAPERS, An officer in the Common Pleas; who hath the cuſtody of the papers of the warden of the Fleet, enters commitments and diſcharges of priſoners, delivers out day-rules, &c.

CLERK OF A PARISH, See title Pariſh Clerk.

CLERK OF THE PARLIAMENT ROLLS, clericus rotulorum parliamenti.] An officer who records all things done in the high court of parliament, and ingroſſeth them in parchment rolls, for their better preſervation to poſterity: of theſe officers there are two, one in the Lords' Houſe, and another in the Houſe of Commons.

CLERK OF THE PATENTS, Or of the letters patent under the Great Seal of England; an office erected 18 Jac. 1.

CLERK OF THE PEACE, Clericus pacis.] An officer belonging to the ſeſſions of the peace: his duty is to read indictments, inrol the proceedings, and draw the proceſs; he keeps the counter-part of the indenture of armour; records the proclamation of rates for ſervants wages; has the cuſtody of the regiſter-book of licences given to badgers of corn; of perſons licenſed to kill game, &c. And he regiſters the eſtates of papiſts and others not taking the oaths. Alſo he certifies into the King's Bench tranſcripts of indictments, outlawries, attainders and convictions, had before the juſtices of peace, within the time limited. See title Clergy, benefit of—And as to his duty reſpecting Eſtreats, ſee title Eſtreats.

The Cuſtos Rotulorum of the county hath the appointment of the clerk of the peace, who may execute his office by deputy, to be approved of by the Cuſtos Rotulorum to hold the office during good behaviour, See Stats. 37 H. 8. c. 1: 1 W. & M. c. 21.

The following is the form of the oath preſcribed by Stat. 1 W. & M. c. 21, to be taken by the clerk of the peace in open Seſſions before he enters on his office.

> I C.P. do ſwear, that I have not [paid] nor will pay any ſum or ſums of money, or other reward whatſoever, nor given any bond or other aſſurance to pay any money, fee or profit, directly or indirectly, to any perſon or perſons whomſoever for [my] nomination and appointment.
> So help me God.

He is alſo to take the oaths of allegiance, ſupremacy and abjuration, and perform ſuch requiſites as other perſons who qualify for offices.

By Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 46. § 14, No Clerk of the peace, or his deputy, ſhall act as ſolicitor, attorney or agent at the ſeſſions where he acts as clerk or deputy, on penalty of 50 l. with treble coſts.

Burn in his Juſtice, title Clerk of the Peace, hints how neceſſary it is that all his fees ſhould be regulated.

If

If a Clerk-of-the-peace misdemeans himself, the justices of peace in quarter-sessions have power to discharge him; and the Custos Rotulorum is to chuse another, resident in the county, or on his default the sessions may appoint one: the place is not to be sold, on pain of forfeiting double the value of the sum given by each party, and disability to enjoy their respective offices, &c. Stat. 1 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 21.

CLERK OF THE PELL, clericus pellis.] A clerk belonging to the Exchequer, whose office is to enter every teller's bill into a parchment roll or skin, called pellis receptorum, and also to make another roll of payments, which is termed pellis exituum; wherein he sets down by what warrant the money was paid; mentioned in the Stat. 22 & 33 Car. 2. c. 22.

CLERK OF THE PETTY BAG, clericus parvæ bagæ.] An officer of the court of Chancery. There are three of these officers, of whom the Master of the Rolls is the chief. Their office is to record the return of all inquisitions out of every shire; to make out patents of customers, gaugers, controllers, &c. all congé d' elires for bishops, the summons of the nobility, and burgesses to parliament; commissions directed to knights and others of every shire, for assessing subsidies and taxes: all offices found post mortem are brought to the clerks of the petty bag to be filed; and by them are entered all pleadings of the Chancery concerning the validity of patents or other things which pass the Great Seal; they also make forth liberates upon extents of statutes-staple, and recovery of recognizances forfeited, and all elegits upon them; and all suits for or against any privileged person are prosecuted in their office, &c.

CLERK OF THE PIPE, clericus pipæ.] An officer in the Exchequer who having the accounts of debts due to the King, delivered and drawn out of the Remembrancer's Offices, charges them down in the great roll, and is called Clerk of the pipe from the shape of that roll, which is put together like a pipe: he also writes out warrants to the sheriffs to levy the said debts upon the goods and chattels of the debtors; and if they have no goods, then he draws them down to the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, to write estreats against their lands. The ancient revenue of the crown stands in charge to him, and he sees the same answered by the farmers and sheriffs: he makes a charge to all sheriffs of their summons of the pipe, and green wax, and takes care it be answered on their accounts. And he hath the drawing and ingrossing of all leases of the king's lands; having a secondary and several clerks under him. In the reign of King Hen. VI. this officer was called Ingrossator magni rotuli. See Stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 22.

CLERK OF THE PLEAS, clericus placitorum.] An officer in the court of Exchequer, in whose office all the officers of the court, upon special privilege belonging unto them, ought to sue or be sued in any action, &c. The clerk of the pleas has under him a great many clerks, who are attornies in all suits commenced or depending in the Court of Exchequer.

CLERKS OF THE PRIVY SEAL, clericus privati sigilli.] These are four of the officers which attend the Lord Privy Seal: or if there be no Lord Privy Seal, the Principal Secretary of State; writing and making out all things that are sent by warrant from the Signet to the Privy Seal, and which are to be passed to the Great Seal: also they make out privy seals, upon a special occasion of his Majesty's affairs, as for loan of money, and the like. He that is now called Lord Privy Seal, seems to have been in ancient times called Clerk of the privy seal; but notwithstanding to have been reckoned in the number of the great officers of the realm. Stats. 12 R. 2. c. 11: 27 H. 8. c. 11.

CLERK OF THE REMEMBRANCE. An officer in the Exchequer, who is to sit against the Clerk of the pipe, to see the discharges made in the pipe, &c. Stat. 37 Ed. 3. c. 4. The Clerk of the pipe and Remembrancer, shall be sworn to make a schedule of persons discharged in their offices. Stat. 5 Ric. 2. st. 1. c. 15.

CLERK OF THE ROLLS, An officer of the Chancery, that makes search for, and copies deeds, offices, &c.

CLERK OF THE RULES, In the court of King's Bench, is he who draws up and enters all the rules and orders made in court: and gives rules of course on divers writs: this officer is mentioned in Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 22.

CLERK OF THE SEWERS, An officer belonging to the commissioners of sewers, who writes and records their proceedings, which they transact by virtue of their commissions, and the authority given them by Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 9. See title Sewers.

CLERK OF THE SIGNET, clericus signeti.] An officer continually attendant on his Majesty's Principal Secretary, who hath the custody of the privy signet, as well for sealing his Majesty's private letters, as such grants as pass the King's hand by bill signed: and of these clerks or officers there are four that attend in their course, and have their diet at the Secretary's table. The fees of the clerk of the signet, and privy seal, are limited particularly by statute, with a penalty annexed for taking any thing more. See 27 H. 8. c. 11.

CLERK OF THE KING'S SILVER, clericus argenti regis.] An officer belonging to the court of Common Pleas, to whom every fine is brought after it hath passed the office of the custos brevium, and by whom the effect of the writ of covenant is entered into a paper-book; according to which all the fines of that term are recorded in the rolls of the court. After the King's silver is entered, it is accounted a fine in law, and not before. See title Fine.

CLERK OF THE SUPERSEDEASES, An officer belonging to the court of Common Pleas, who makes out writs of supersedeas, upon a defendant's appearing to the exigent on an outlawry, whereby the sheriff is forbidden to return the exigent. See title Outlawry.

CLERK OF THE TREASURY, clericus thesaurarii.] An officer of the Common Pleas, who hath the charge of keeping the records of the court, and makes out all the records of Nisi prius; also he makes all exemplifications of records being in the Treasury; and he hath the fees due for all searches. He is the servant of the Chief Justice, and removeable at pleasure; whereas all other officers of the court are for life: there is a Secondary, or Under clerk of the Treasury, for assistance, who hath some fees and allowances: and likewise an under-keeper, that always keeps one key of the Treasury door, and the chief clerk of the secondary, another; so that the one cannot come in without the other.

CLERK OF THE KING'S GREAT WARDROBE, An officer of the King's household, that keeps an account or inventory of all things belonging to the royal wardrobe. Stat. 1 E. 4. c. 1.

CLERK OF THE WARRANTS, clericus warrantorum.] An officer belonging to the common Pleas' Court, who enters all warrants of attorney for plaintiffs and defendants in ſuits; and inrolls deeds of indentures of bargain and ſale, which are acknowledged in the court or before any judges out of the court. And it is his office to eſtreat into the Exchequer all iſſues, fines and amerciaments, which grow due to the King in that court, for which he hath a ſtanding fee or allowance.

See title Manufacturers.

CLOERE, A priſon or dungeon; it is conjectured to be of Britiſh original: the dungeon or inner priſon of Walling ford caſtle, temp. H. 2. was called cloere brien, i. e. carcer brieni, &c. Hence ſeems to come the Lat. cloaca, which was anciently the cloſeſt ward or naſtieſt part of the priſon: the old cloacerius is interpreted carceris cuſtos: and the preſent cloacerius, or keeper of a jakes, is an office in ſome religious houſes abroad, impoſed on an offending brother, or by him choſen as an exerciſe of humility and mortification. Cowel.

CLOSE ROLLS AND CLOSE WRITS, Grants of lands, &c. from the Crown, are contained in charters or letters patent, that is open letters, literas patentes, ſo called becauſe they are not ſealed up, but expoſed to open view, with the Great Seal pendant at the bottom; and are uſually addreſſed by the King to all his ſubjects at large. And therein they differ from other letters of the King, ſealed alſo with his Great Seal, but directed to particular perſons, and for particular purpoſes: which therefore, not being fit for public inſpection, are cloſed up and ſealed on the outſide, and are thereupon called writs cloſe, literæ clauſæ; and are recorded in the cloſe-rolls, in the ſame manner as the others are in the patent-rolls. 2 Comm. 346.

CLOSH, Was an unlawful game forbidden by Stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 3, and 33 H. 8. c. 9. It is ſaid to have been the ſame with our nine-pins; and is called cloſhcayles by ſt. 33 H. 8. c. 9. At this time it is allowed, and called bailes, or ſkittles. See title Gaming.

COACH, currus.] A convenience well known. For the regulating of hackney coaches and chairs in London, there are ſeveral ſtatutes, viz. 9 An. c. 23, made perpetual by 3 Geo. 1. c. 7, and enlarged as to the number of coaches, by 11 Geo. 3. c. 24; ſo as to make the whole number, to be licenſed, 1000, and enlarged alſo as to chairs, by 10 An. c. 19. and 12 Geo. 1. c. 12, making the whole number of thoſe 400.

The other ſtatutes now in force are, 12 An. ſt. 1. c. 14: 1 Geo. 1. c. 57: 30 Geo. 2. c. 22: (See Carts) 4 Geo. 3. c. 36:

c. 36: 7 Geo. 3. c. 44: 10 Geo. 3. c. 44: 11 Geo. 3. cc. 24 and 28: 12 Geo. 3. c. 49: 24 Geo. 3. ſt. 2. c. 27: 26 Geo. 3. c. 72: 32 Geo. 3. c. 47.

The following is a general abſtract of the united effect of theſe ſeveral acts.

Five Commiſſioners are appointed to licenſe and regulate them. And the proprietor of each coach pays 10*s.* per week every month. Each coach is to be numbered on both ſides, not to be altered, on penalty of 5*l.* A like penalty on driving or letting to hire a coach without licence.—Mourning coaches and hearſes are within the acts.—The horſes muſt be 14 hands high —Coachmen compellable to go in the day ten miles, but after dark two miles and a half on turnpike roads.—To have check ſtrings, on penalty of 5*s.*—The rates are as follows, (December 1793.)

By way	For one mile and quarter, or leſs	1*s.* 0*d.*
	From that to two miles -	1 6

And then 6*d.* for each additional half-mile entered upon.

By time	Three quarters of an hour, or leſs	1*s.* 0*d.*
	Between that and an hour -	1 6
	One hour and twenty minutes	2 0

And then 6*d.* for each additional twenty minutes entered upon.

For a day of twelve hours 14*s.* 6*d.* and 6*d.* for each twenty minutes over.

A coachman refuſing to go, or exacting more than his fare, to forfeit from 10*s.* to 3*l*; and by miſbehaviour or impudence, incurs the ſame penalty, and his licence may be revoked, or he committed to the houſe of correction. Perſons refuſing to pay the fare, or defacing the coach, may be compelled by a juſtice to make ſatisfaction. There are ſeveral uſual ſtands, but a coach may ſtand in any ſtreet thirty feet wide, at the road, (except St. James's Street and Pall-mall.)—The penalties are recoverable before the aldermen of the city, and juſtices of peace, as well as before the Commiſſioners.

Stage Coaches, By Stats. 28 Geo. 3. c. 57, and 30 Geo. 3. c. 36, Drivers of ſtage coaches are not to admit more than one outſide paſſenger on the box, and four on the roof of the coach, on penalty of 5*s.* for each paſſenger, at every turnpike-gate.—Some other wholeſome regulations are alſo made by theſe acts, but which like other good laws are ſeldom enforced.

As to the liability of maſters, &c. of coaches as common carriers. See title Carrier.

Duties. By Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 47, there ſhall be paid for every four-wheeled coach, landau, &c. kept for private uſe, or to let to hire, (except hackney coaches) a tax of 7*l.* per an. (and by 29 Geo. 3. c. 49, 20*s.* more.) in the whole 8*l.* for the firſt carriage.—9*l.* for the ſecond, by 29 Geo. 3. c. 43.—And where three or more are kept, 8*l.* for the firſt, and 10*l.* for all others. And by ſaid Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 47, for every two or three-wheeled carriage 3*l.* 10*s.* per annum.

COACH-MAKERS, The wares of coachmakers ſhall be ſearched, by perſons appointed by the ſadlers' company. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22.—By Stats. 25 Geo. 3. c. 49: 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, Every maker of coaches, chariots, chaiſes, &c. muſt take out annual licenſes from the Exciſe office, and to pay a duty of 20*s.* for every four-wheeled carriage, and 10*s.* for every two-wheeled carriage, built by them for ſale.

ÇOADJUTOR, Lat.] A fellow-helper or aſſiſtant; particularly applied to one appointed to aſſiſt a Biſhop, being grown old and infirm, ſo as not to be able to perform his duty.

COAL-MINES, Maliciouſly ſetting fire to coal-mines, or to any delph of coal, is felony. 10 Geo. 2. c. 32. ſect. 6. See title Black-Act, Felony.

COALS, By Stats. 7 E. 6. c. 7: 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 2; [made perpetual by 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 36. § 2.] and 17 Geo. 2. c. 35, The ſack of coals is to contain four buſhels of clean coals: and ſea coals brought into the river Thames, and ſold, ſhall be after the rate of thirty-ſix buſhels to the chaldron: and one hundred and twelve pounds the hundred, &c. The Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen in London, and juſtices of the peace of the ſeveral counties, or three of them, are impowered to ſet the price of all coals to be ſold by retail; and if any perſon ſhall refuſe to ſell for ſuch prices, they may appoint officers to enter any wharfs or places where coals are kept, and cauſe the coals to be ſold at the prices appointed. The Stat. 12 An. ſt. 2. c. 17, regulates the contents of the coal buſhel, which is to hold one Wincheſter buſhel, and one quart of water. By Stats. 9 H. 5. ſt. 1. c. 10: 30 Car. 2. c. 8: 6 & 7 Will. 3. c. 10: 11 Geo. 2. c. 15: 15 Geo. 3. c. 27. and 31 Geo. 3. c. 36, Commiſſioners are ordained for the meaſuring and marking of keels, and boats, &c. for carrying coals; and veſſels carrying coals before meaſured and marked, ſhall be forfeited, &c. For the duties and draw-backs on coals and culm, ſee Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 13: 9 An. cc. 6, 22, 28: 8 Geo. 1. c. 14: 14 Geo. 2. c. 41: 22 Geo. 2. c. 37: 31 Geo. 2. c. 15: 33 Geo. 2. c. 15: and 27 Geo. 3. c. 32.

For the duty on coals in London, See Stats. 9 An. c. 22. and 5 Geo. 1. c. 9; the duties payable under which, of 3*s.* per chaldron, are made perpetual by Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 4. and 1 Geo. 2. ſt. 2. c. 8.—See alſo Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, as to the 1*s.* duty under Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 3. § 36.

By Stat. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 18, one mariner is allowed to each 50 ton of ſhipping employed in the coal trade in time of war, protected from being impreſſed.

By Stat. 9 An. c. 28. Contracts between coal-owners and maſters of ſhips, &c. for reſtraining the buying of coals are void; and the parties to forfeit 100*l.* And ſelling coals for other ſorts than they are, ſhall forfeit 50*l.* Not above fifty laden colliers are to continue in the port of Newcaſtle, &c. And work-people in the mines there ſhall not be employed who are hired by others, under the penalty of 5*l.*

By Stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 26, containing ſeveral regulations as to lightermen and coal buyers, and explained by ſt. 11 Geo. 2. c. 15. Coal-ſacks ſhall be ſealed and marked at Guildhall, &c. on pain of 20*s.* Alſo ſellers of coals are to keep a lawful buſhel, and put three buſhels to each ſack, which buſhel and other meaſures ſhall be edged with iron, and ſealed; and uſing others, or altering them, incurs a forfeiture of 50*l.* &c. The penalties above 5*l.* recoverable by action of debt, &c. and under that ſum before juſtices of peace.

By Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 30, Owners or maſters of ſhips ſhall not enhance the price of coals in the river of Thames, by keeping of turn in delivering of coals there, under the penalty of 100*l.* &c.

Stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 21, Inflicts penalty of treble damages on perſons damaging or deſtroying coal-works.

See the Stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 22, now in force, as to the loading coal ships, at Newcastle and Sunderland in turn, according to lists to be made there.

By the Stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 23, (in force by 17 Geo. 3. c. 13. till the 1st of June, 1798,) The Land Coal-Meter's Office for London, and between the Tower and Limehouse-hole, is established and regulated. And the duty of that officer, and the labouring coal-meters in measuring coals is ascertained. And by Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 83, Further regulations are made as to the Coal-meters sacks, which when sealed are to be four feet four inches long, and twenty-six inches broad. Penalties are imposed on the labouring meters and drivers for misbehaviour, and the mode of re-measurement settled, if required by the consumer.

By Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 14, A Land Coal Meter's Office is appointed for the parishes of Putney, Wandsworth, Battersea, Lambeth, Rotherhithe, and several parishes in Southwark, to continue for twenty-one years. And by c. 108, of the said session, a like office is appointed for the city and liberty of Westminster, till June 1795. The regulations of former acts are adopted and modified by these latter, according to their several districts.

Stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 53, was past to indemnify the London coal buyers against certain penalties, which they had literally incurred under Stats. 9 An. c. 28. and 3 Geo. 2. c. 26, and also for the purpose of putting an end to the Society at the Coal Exchange, formed to regulate (i. e. to monopolize) the trade; subjecting all persons, above five, in number entering into covenant or partnerships, to punishment by indictment or information in B. R.

COAT-ARMOUR, Coats of arms were not introduced into seals, nor indeed into any other use, till about the reign of Richard the First, who brought them from the Croisade in the Holy Land; where they were first invented and painted on the shields of the knights, to distinguish the variety of persons of every Christian nation who resorted thither, and who could not, when clad in complete steel, be otherwise known or ascertained. 2 Comm. 306.

It is the business of the Court military, or the Court of Chivalry, according to Sir Matthew Hale, to adjust the right of armorial ensigns, bearings, crests, supporters, pennons, &c. and also rights of place or precedence, where the king's patent or act of parliament, (which cannot be over-ruled by this court,) have not already determined it. 3 Comm. 105.

COCHERINGS, An exaction or tribute in Ireland, now reduced to chief rents. See Bonaght.

COCHINEAL, The importation of cochineal from ports in Spain declared lawful. Stat. 6 An. c. 33. Any persons may import cochineal into this kingdom, in ships belonging to Great Britain, or other country in amity, from any place whatsoever, by Stat. 7 Geo. 2. cap. 18. See title Navigation Acts.

COCKET, cockettum.] A seal belonging to the king's custom-house: or rather a scroll of parchment sealed, and delivered by the officers of the custom-house to merchants, as a warrant that their merchandises are customed: which parchment is otherwise called literæ de cocketto, or literæ testimoniales de coketto. Stat. 11 Hen. 6. c. 15: Reg. Orig. 179, 192.—See also Mad. Exch. vol. 1. c. 18. The word cockettum or cocket, is also taken for the custom-house or office where goods to be transported were first entered, and paid their custom, and had a cocket or certificate of discharge: and cocketta lana is wool duly entered and cocketted, or authorised to be transported. Mem. in Stat. 23 Ed. 1.

Cocket is likewise used for a sort of measure, Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 9. Panis vero integer quadrantalis frumenti ponderabit unum cocket & dimidium: and it is made use of for a distinction of bread, in the statute of bread and ale, 51 H. 3. stat. 1. ord. pro pistor: where mention is made of wastel bread, cocket bread, bread of treet, and bread of common wheat; the wastel bread being what we now call the finest bread, or French bread; the cocket bread the second sort of white bread; bread of treet, and of common wheat, brown, or household bread, &c. See Bread.

COCKSETUS, A boatman, cockswain or coxon. Cowel.

COCULA, A cogue, or little drinking-cup, in form of a small boat, used especially at sea, and still retained in a cogue [cag or kegue] of brandy. These drinking cups are also used in taverns to drink new sherry, and other white wines which look foul in a glass.

CODICIL, codicillus, from codex, a book, a writing.] A schedule or supplement to a will, where any thing is omitted which the testator would add, or where he would explain, alter or retract what he hath done. See titles Will, Devise.

COFFEE, TEA, CHOCOLATE, and COCOA NUTS. The duties on these articles form a branch of the public revenue, under the head of Customs and Excise; and like all other subjects of those jurisdictions, are liable to a variety of penal regulations by acts of parliament, necessary to prevent the numerous frauds and evasions daily endeavoured to be practised, to the impoverishment of Government, and the injury of the fair trader. See titles Excise, Customs, and also title Navigation-Acts.—The following general features are all which the compass of this Dictionary allows to be noticed.

By Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13, all former custom and excise duties are repealed; and new duties, (less than the former ones) imposed.—The sales of tea at the East-India house are regulated by Stats. 18 Geo. 2. c. 26: 13 Geo. 3. c. 44; by the latter of which re-exportation by the Company to America is allowed.—By Stat. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10, chocolate and cocoa paste are prohibited to be imported.—And cocoa-nut shells without the nuts, by Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 14. § 12.—The importation of coffee must be in bags, &c. containing 1 cwt. each at least.—The entry and warehousing, removing, and re-exportation of tea, coffee and cocoa-nuts, is regulated by Stats. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10: 11 Geo. 1. c. 30: 5 Geo. 3. c. 43: 21 Geo. 3. c. 55: 22 Geo. 3. c. 68: 23 Geo. 3. c. 70: 27 Geo. 3. c. 13.—By Stats. 15 Geo. 2. c. 11: 20 Geo. 3. c. 35, retail dealers must take out an annual licence.—And all houses for manufacturing and sale, must be entered at the Excise Office; See Stats. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10: 18 Geo. 2. c. 26: 12 Geo. 3. c. 46.—And the houses of all dealers to be marked, "Dealer in Coffee, Tea, &c." Stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 69.—Under the said Stat. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10: and Stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 30, officers may enter houses to search if goods are concealed; but in this case, if an officer by a false or mistaken suggestion obtains a search-warrant (as it is called) from the Commissioners, he is personally answerable in an action of trespass, if no goods are found. Bostock v. Saunders, Bl. Rep. 912.

To prevent frauds in manufacturing these articles, the Stats. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10: 11 Geo. 1. c. 30, make divers provisions as to coffee.—Stats. 11 Geo. 1. c. 30:

4 Geo. 2. c. 14: 17 Geo. 3. c. 29, as to tea.—Stats. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10: 32 Geo. 2. c. 10: 11 Geo. 1. c. 20, as to chocolate; the making of which latter for private families, is alſo regulated by Stat. 10 Geo. 1. c. 10. § 23, 24, 25.

The Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 35. § 20, prohibits the retailing tea without a permit; or by pedlars even with one. And by Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 28, dealers in cocoa nuts, muſt not ſell leſs than 28 lb at a time.

COFRA, A coffer, cheſt, or trunk. Munimenta Hoſpit. SS. Trinit. de Pontefracto, MS. fol. 50.

COFFERER OF THE KING'S HOUSEHOLD, Is a principal officer of the King's houſe, next under the Controller, who, in the counting-houſe, and elſewhere, hath a ſpecial charge and overſight of other officers of the houſehold, to all which he pays their wages: this officer paſſes his accounts in the Exchequer. See Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 7.

COGGLE, A ſmall fiſhing boat, upon the coaſts of Yorkſhire: and cogs, (cogones) are a kind of little ſhips, or veſſels, uſed in the rivers Ouſe and Humber. Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 18.—See Mat. Paris, anno 1066. And hence the cogmen, boatmen or ſeamen, who after ſhipwreck or loſſes by ſea, travelled and wandered about to defraud the people by begging and ſtealing, till they were reſtrained by divers good laws. Du Freſne.

COGNATI, Relations by the mother, as the agnati are relations by the father.

COGNATIONE, A writ of Couſenage. See Couſenage.

COGNISANCE, or cognizance, Fr. connuſance, Lat. cognitio.] Is uſed diverſely in our law: ſometimes for an acknowledgment of a fine. See title Fine. In replevin, cogniſance, or conuſance, is the anſwer given by a defendant, who hath acted as bailiff, &c. to another, in making a diſtreſs. See titles Diſtreſs, Replevin.

The moſt uſual ſenſe in which this term is now uſed, is relative to the claim of Cognizance of Pleas. This is a privilege granted by the King to a city or town, to hold plea of all contracts, &c. within the liberty of the franchiſe; and when any man is impleaded for ſuch matters in the courts of Weſtminſter, the mayor, &c. of ſuch franchiſe may aſk cogniſance of the plea, and demand that it ſhall be determined before them: but if the courts at Weſtminſter are poſſeſſed of the plea before cogniſance be demanded, it is then too late. Terms de Ley. See Stats. 9 H. 4. c. 5: 8 H. 6. c. 26: 3 Comm. 298: 4 Comm. 277.

Cogniſance of Pleas extends not to aſſiſes; and when granted, the original ſhall not be removed: it lies not in a quare impedit, for they cannot write to the biſhop, nor of a plea out of the county-court, which cannot award a reſummons, &c. Jenk. Cent. 31, 34. This cogniſance ſhall be demanded the firſt day: and if the demandant in a plea of land counterpleads the franchiſe, and the tenant joins with the claim of the franchiſe, and it is found againſt the franchiſe, the demandant ſhall recover the land; but if it be found againſt the demandant, the writ ſhall abate. Ibid. 18.

There are three ſorts of inferior juriſdictions, one whereof is tenere placita, and this is the loweſt ſort; for it is only a concurrent juriſdiction, and the party may ſue there, or in the King's courts, if he will. The ſecond is conuſance of pleas, and by this a right is veſted in the lord of the franchiſe to hold the plea, and he is the only perſon who can take advantage of it. The third ſort is an exempt juriſdiction, as where the king grants to a great city, that the inhabitants thereof ſhall be ſued within their city, and not elſewhere; this grant may be pleaded to the juriſdiction of the court of K. B. if there be a court within that city which can hold plea of the cauſe, and no-body can take advantage of this privilege but a defendant; for if he will bring certiorari, that will remove the cauſe, but he may wave it if he will, ſo that the privilege is only for his benefit. 3 Salk. 79, 80. pl. 4: Hil. 1 An. B. R. Croſſe v. Smith.

King Hen. VIII. by letters patent of the 14th of his reign, and confirmed by parliament, granted to the Univerſity of Oxford conuſance of pleas, in which a ſcholar or ſervant of a college ſhould be party, ita quod juſticiarii de utroque banco ſe non intromittant. An attorney of C. B. ſued a ſcholar, in C. B. for battery. By the court, this general grant does not extend to take away the ſpecial privilege of any court without ſpecial words. Lit. Rep. 304. Mich. 5 C: C. B. Oxford (Univerſity's) caſe.

If a ſcholar of Oxford or Cambridge be ſued in Chancery for a ſpecial performance of a contract to leaſe lands in Middleſex, the Univerſity ſhall not have conuſance, becauſe they cannot ſequeſter the lands. Gilb. Hiſt. of C. P. 194. cites 2 Vent. 363.

Conuſance muſt be demanded before an imparlance, and the ſame term the writ is returnable, after the defendant appears; becauſe, till he appears there is no cauſe in court, otherwiſe there would be a delay of juſtice; for if after imparlance, when the defendant has a day already allowed him, he would have two days, ſince when the conuſance is allowed, the franchiſe prefixes a day to both parties to appear before them: and it is the lord's laches if he does not come ſoon enough not to delay the parties. Gilb. Hiſt. of C. P. 196.

Conuſance was granted to the Univerſity of Oxford, (no cauſe being ſhewn to the contrary), in Eaſter Term, 9 Geo. 2. in the caſe of Woodcocke and Brooke. Hardw. 241.—See further under title Courts of the Univerſity.

Cogniſance alſo ſignifies the badge of a waterman or ſervant, which is uſually the giver's creſt, whereby he is known to belong to this or that nobleman or gentleman. Dict.

COGNISOR AND COGNISEE. Cogniſor, is he that paſſeth or acknowledgeth a fine of lands or tenements to another; and cogniſee is he to whom the fine of the ſaid lands, &c. is acknowledged. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 5.

COGNITIONES, Enſigns and arms, or a military coat painted with arms. Mat. Paris 1250.

COGNITIONIBUS MITTENDIS, A writ to one of the King's juſtices of the Common Pleas, or other that hath power to take a fine, who having taken the fine defers to certify it, commanding him to certify it. Reg. Orig. 68.

COGNOVIT ACTIONEM, Is where a defendant acknowledges or confeſſes the plaintiff's cauſe againſt him to be juſt and true; and, before or after iſſue, ſuffers judgment to be entered againſt him without trial. And here the confeſſion generally extends no further than to what is contained in the declaration; but if the defendant will confeſs more, he may. 1 Rol. 929: Hob. 178.

COGWARE, Is ſaid to be a ſort of coarſe cloths, made in divers parts of England, of which mention is made in the Stat. 13 R. 2. cap. 10.

COHUAGIUM,

COHUAGIUM, A tribute paid by thoſe who met promiſcuouſly in the market or fair; cohua ſignifying a promiſcuous multitude of men in a fair or market.—Quieti ab omni thelonio, paſſagio, pontagio, cohuagio, pallagio, &c. Du Cange.

COIF, coifa.] A title given to Serjeants at law; who are called Serjeants of the coif, from the lawn coif they wear on their heads under their caps, when they are created. The uſe of it was anciently to cover tonſuram clericalem, otherwiſe called corona clericalis; becauſe the crown of the head was cloſe ſhaved, and a border of hair left round the lower part, which made it look like a crown. Blount. See title Clerk.

COIN, cuna pecunia.] Seems to come from the Fr. coign, i. e. angulus, a corner, whence it has been held, that the ancienteſt ſort of coin was ſquare with corners, and not round as it now is: it is any ſort of money coined. Cromp. Juriſd. 220. Coin is a word collective, which contains in it all manner of the ſeveral ſtamps and ſpecies of money in any kingdom: and this is one of the royal prerogatives belonging to every ſovereign prince, that he alone in his own dominions may order and diſpoſe the quantity, value, and faſhion of his coin. But the coin of one king is not current in the kingdom of another, unleſs it be at great loſs; though our king by his prerogative may make any foreign coin lawful money of England at his pleaſure, by proclamation. Terms de Ley. If a man binds himſelf by bond to pay one hundred pounds of lawful money of Great Britain, and the perſon bound, the obligor, pays the obligee the money in French, Spaniſh, or other coin, made current either by act of parliament, or the king's proclamation, the obligation will be well performed. Co. Lit. 207. But it is ſaid a payment in farthings, is not a good payment. 2 Inſt. 517. See poſt.

When a perſon has accepted of money in payment from another, and put the ſame into his purſe, it is at his peril after his allowance; and he ſhall not then take exception to it as bad, notwithſtanding he preſently reviews it. Terms de Ley.

Of Offences relating to the Coin.

Two offences reſpecting the coin, are made treaſon by the ſtatute 25 E. III. c. 2: Theſe are the actual counterfeiting the gold and ſilver coin of this Kingdom; or the importing ſuch counterfeit money with an intent to utter it, knowing it to be falſe. But theſe not being found ſufficient to reſtrain the evil practices of coiners and falſe moneyers, other ſtatutes have been ſince made for that purpoſe.

By Stat. 1 Mar. ſt. 2. c. 6, if any perſon ſhall falſely forge or counterfeit any ſuch kind of coin of gold or ſilver, as is not the proper coin of this realm, but ſhall be current within this realm by conſent of the Crown; ſuch offence ſhall be deemed high-treaſon. And by Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 11, if any perſon do bring into this realm ſuch falſe or counterfeit foreign money, being current here, knowing the ſame to be falſe, with intent to utter the ſame in payment, they ſhall be deemed offenders in high treaſon. The money, referred to in theſe ſtatutes, muſt be ſuch as is abſolutely current here, in all payments, by the King's proclamation; of which there is none at preſent, Portugal money being only taken by conſent, as approaching the neareſt to our ſtandard, and falling in well enough with our diviſions of money into pounds and ſhillings: therefore to counterfeit that is not high treaſon, but another inferior offence.

Clipping or defacing the genuine coin was not hitherto included in theſe ſtatutes; but by Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 11, clipping, waſhing, rounding, or filing for wicked gains' ſake, any of the money of this realm, or other money ſuffered to be current here, ſhall be adjudged high treaſon; and by Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 1, the ſame ſpecies of offence is deſcribed in other more general words; viz. impairing, diminiſhing, falſifying, ſcaling, and lightening, are made liable to the ſame penalties.

By Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26, (made perpetual by 7 Ann. c. 25,) whoever, without proper authority, ſhall knowingly, make or mend, or aſſiſt in ſo doing, or ſhall buy, ſell, conceal, hide, or knowingly have in his poſſeſſion any implements of coinage ſpecified in the act, or other tools or inſtruments proper only for the coinage of money; or ſhall convey the ſame out of the King's mint; he, together with his counſellors, procurers, aiders, and abettors, ſhall be guilty of high treaſon; which is much the ſevereſt branch of the coinage law. The ſtatute farther enacts, that to mark any coin on the edges with letters, or otherwiſe, in imitation of thoſe uſed in the mint: or to colour, gild, or caſe over any coin reſembling the current coin, or even round blanks of baſe metal; ſhall be conſtrued high treaſon. But all proſecutions on this act are to be commenced within three months after the commiſſion of the offence: except thoſe for making or mending any coining tool or inſtrument, or for the making letters on money round the edges; which are directed to be commenced within ſix months after the offence committed. See Stat. 7 Ann. c. 25.

And, laſtly, by Stat. 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28, if any perſon colours or alters any ſhilling or ſix-pence, either lawful or counterfeit, to make them reſpectively reſemble a guinea or half-guinea: or any half-penny or farthing to make them reſpectively reſemble a ſhilling or ſix-pence; this is alſo high treaſon; but the offender ſhall be pardoned, in caſe (being out of priſon) he diſcovers and convicts two other offenders of the ſame kind.

Offences relating to the coin, not amounting to treaſon, and under which may be ranked ſome inferior miſdemeanors not amounting to felony, are thus declared by a ſeries of ſtatutes, here recited in the order of time.—By Stat. 27 E. 1. c. 3, none ſhall bring pollards, and crockards (which were foreign coins of baſe metal) into the realm, on pain of forfeiture of life and goods.—By Stat. 9 E. 3 ſt. 2, no ſterling money ſhall be melted down, upon pain of forfeiture thereof.—By Stat. 17 E. 3, none ſhall be ſo hardy to bring falſe and ill money into the realm, on pain of forfeiture of life and members of the perſons importing, and the ſearchers permitting ſuch importation.—By Stat. 3 H. 5. ſt. 1, to make, coin, buy, or bring into the realm any gally-halfpence, ſuſkins, or dotkins, in order to utter them, is felony: and knowingly to receive or pay them or blanks (Stat. 2 Hen. 6. c. 9,) incurs a forfeiture of an hundred ſhillings.—By Stat. 14 Eliz. c. 3, ſuch as forge any foreign coin, although it be not made current here by proclamation, ſhall (with their aiders and abettors) be guilty of miſpriſion of treaſon.—By Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 31, the offence of melting down any current ſilver money, ſhall be puniſhed with forfeiture of

of the ſame, and alſo the double value: and the offender if a freeman of any town, ſhall be diſfranchiſed; if not, ſhall ſuffer ſix months' impriſonment.—By Stat. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 17, if any perſon buys or ſells, or knowingly has in his cuſtody, any clippings or filings of the coin, he ſhall forfeit the ſame and 500*l.* one moiety to the king, and the other to the informer; and be branded in the cheek with the letter R. [But ſee title Clergy.]—By Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26, no perſon ſhall blanch, or whiten, copper for ſale (which makes it reſemble ſilver) nor buy or ſell or offer for ſale any malleable compoſition, which ſhall be heavier than ſilver, and look, touch, and wear like gold, but beneath the ſtandard: nor ſhall any perſon receive or pay at a leſs rate than it imports to be of (which demonſtrates a conſciouſneſs of its baſeneſs, and a fraudulent deſign) any counterfeit or diminiſhed milled money of this kingdom, not being cut in pieces; an operation which is expreſsly directed to be performed when any ſuch money ſhall be produced in evidence, and which any perſon, to whom any gold or ſilver money is tendered, is empowered (by Stats. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 21: 13 Geo. 3. c. 71: and 14 Geo. 3. c. 70.) to perform at his own hazard; and the officers of the Exchequer and the receivers-general of the taxes are particularly required to perform: and all ſuch perſons ſo blanching, ſelling, &c. ſhall be guilty of felony, and may be proſecuted for the ſame at any time within three months after the offence committed.

But theſe precautions not being found ſufficient to prevent the uttering of falſe or diminiſhed money, which was only a miſdemeanor at common law, it is enacted by Stats. 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28, that if any perſon ſhall utter or tender in payment any counterfeit coin, knowing it to be ſo, he ſhall for the firſt offence be impriſoned ſix months, and find ſureties for his good behaviour for ſix months more: for the ſecond offence ſhall be impriſoned two years, and find ſureties for two years longer: and, for the third offence, ſhall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. Alſo if a perſon knowingly tenders in payment any counterfeit money, and at the ſame time has more in his cuſtody: or ſhall, within ten days after, knowingly tender other falſe money; he ſhall be deemed a common utterer of counterfeit money; and ſhall for the firſt offence be impriſoned one year, and find ſureties for his good behaviour two years longer: and for the ſecond be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. By the ſame ſtatute it is alſo enacted that if any perſon counterfeits the copper coin, he ſhall ſuffer two years' impriſonment, and find ſureties for two years more. By Stat. 11 Geo. 3. c. 40, perſons counterfeiting copper halfpence or farthings, with their abetters; or buying, ſelling, receiving or putting off any counterfeit copper money (not being cut in pieces or melted down) at a leſs value than it imports to be of; ſhall be guilty of ſingle felony. And by a temporary Stat. (14 Geo. III. c. 42,) if any quantity of money exceeding the ſum of five pounds, being or purporting to be the ſilver coin of this realm, but below the ſtandard of the mint in weight or fineneſs, ſhall be imported into Great Britain or Ireland, the ſame ſhall be forfeited, in equal moieties, to the crown and proſecutor.

The Coining of money is in all States the act of the Sovereign Power: that it's value may be known on inſpection. And with regard to coinage in general, there are three things to be conſidered therein; the materials, the impreſſion, and the denomination. With regard to the materials, Sir Edward Coke lays it down (2 Inſt. 577.) that the money of England muſt either be of gold or ſilver: and none other was ever iſſued by the royal authority till 1672, when copper farthings and halfpence were coined by Charles II: and ordered by proclamation to be current in all payments, under the value of ſixpence, and not otherwiſe. But this copper coin is not upon the ſame footing with the other in many reſpects, particularly with regard to the offence of counterfeiting it, as has been already noticed. And as to the ſilver coin, it was enacted by Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 42, that no tender of payment in ſilver money, exceeding twenty-five pounds at one time, ſhall be a ſufficient tender in law for more than its value by weight, at the rate of 5*s.* 2*d.* an ounce. This was a clauſe in a temporary act, which was continued till 1783, ſince which time it does not appear to have been revived.

As to the Impreſſion, the ſtamping thereof is the unqueſtionable prerogative of the Crown: for, though divers biſhops and monaſteries had formerly the privilege of coining money, yet, as Sir Matthew Hale obſerves (1 Hiſt. P. C. 191,) this was uſually done by ſpecial grant from the king, or by preſcription which ſuppoſes one; and therefore was derived from, and not in derogation of, the royal prerogative. Beſides that they had only the profit of the coinage, and not the power of inſtituting either the impreſſion or denomination; but had uſually the ſtamp ſent them from the Exchequer.

The Denomination, or the value for which the coin is to paſs current, is likewiſe in the breaſt of the king; and, if any unuſual pieces are coined, that value muſt be aſcertained by proclamation. In order to fix the value, the weight and the fineneſs of the metal are to be taken into conſideration together. When a given weight of gold or ſilver is of a given fineneſs, it is then of the true ſtandard and called eſterling or ſterling metal; a name for which there are various reaſons given, but none of them entirely ſatisfactory. See Spelm. Gloſſ. 203. Dufreſne 3, 165. The moſt plauſible opinion ſeems to be that adopted by thoſe two etymologiſts, that the name was derived from the Eſterlings or Eaſterlings, as thoſe Saxons were anciently called, who inhabited that diſtrict of Germany, now occupied by the Hans-towns and their appendages: the earlieſt traders in modern Europe. Of this ſterling or eſterling metal all the coin of the kingdom muſt be made, by Stat. 25 E. 3. c. 13.—So that the King's prerogative ſeemeth not to extend to the debaſing or inhancing the value of the coin, below or above the ſterling value. 2 Inſt. 577: though Sir Matthew Hale, (1 Hal. P. C. 194,) appears to be of another opinion. The king may alſo by his proclamation, legitimate foreign coin, and make it current here; declaring at what value it ſhall be taken in payments. 1 H. P. C. 197. But this it ſeems ought to be by compariſon with the ſtandard of our own coin, otherwiſe the conſent of parliament will be neceſſary. The king may alſo at any time decry, or cry down any coin of the kingdom, and make it no longer current. 1 Hal. P. C. 197.

This Standard hath been frequently varied in former times; but hath for many years paſt been thus invariably ſettled. The pound troy of gold, conſiſting of twenty-two carats (or 24th parts) fine, and two of alloy, is divided into forty-four guineas and an half of the preſent value of 21 s. each. And the pound troy of ſilver, conſiſting of eleven ounces, and two penny weights fine, and eighteen penny-weights alloy, is divided into ſixty two ſhillings. See Folkes on Engliſh coins.

In the 7th year of King William III. an act was made for calling in all the old coin of the kingdom, and to melt it down and re-coin it; the deficiencies whereof were to be made good at the public charge: and in every hundred pound coined, 40 l. was to be ſhillings, and 10 l. ſix-pences, under certain penalties.

Perſons bringing plate to the Mint to be coined, were to have the ſame weight of money delivered out, as an encouragement: and receivers general of taxes, &c. were to receive money at a large rate per ounce. Our guineas have been raiſed and fallen, as money has been ſcarce or plenty, ſeveral times by ſtatute: and anno 3 Geo. 1. guineas were valued at 21 s. at which they now paſs.

A duty of 10 s. per ton was impoſed on wine, beer, and brandy imported, called the coinage duty, granted for the expence of the King's coinage, but not to exceed 3000 l. per ann. Stat. 18 Car. 2. cap. 5. This duty for coinage hath been continued and advanced, from time to time by divers ſtatutes; and by Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 11, (explained by Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. § 64,) the Treaſury is to apply 15,000 l. a-year to the expences of the mints in England and Scotland.—Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 92, regulates the ſtamping of money-weights, the fees for which are ſettled by Stat. 15 Geo. 3. c. 30, at 1 d. for every 12 weights.

COLIBERTS; coliberti.] Were tenants in ſocage; and particularly ſuch villeins as were manumitted or made freemen. Domeſday. But they had not an abſolute freedom; for though they were better than ſervants, yet they had ſuperior lords to whom they paid certain duties, and in that reſpect they might be called ſervants, though they were of middle condition, between freemen and ſervants, —Libertate carens colibertus dicitur eſſe. Du Cange.

COLLATERAL, collateralis.] From the Lat. lateralè, ſideways, or that which hangeth by the ſide, not direct: as collateral aſſurance is that which is made over and above the deed itſelf: collateral ſecurity, is where a deed is made of other land, beſides thoſe granted by the deed of mortgage: and if a man covenants with another, and enters into bond for performance of his covenant, the bond is a collateral aſſurance; becauſe it is external, and without the nature and eſſence of the covenant. If a man hath liberty to pitch booths or ſtandings, for a fair or market, in another perſon's ground, it is collateral to the ground. The private woods of a common perſon, within a foreſt, may not be cut down without the King's licence; it being a prerogative collateral to the ſoil. And to be ſubject to the feeding of the King's deer, is collateral to the ſoil of a foreſt. Cromp. Juriſd. 185: Manwood, p. 66.

Collateral Consanguinity, or Kindred. Collateral relations agree with the lineal in this, that they deſcend from the ſame ſtock or anceſtor; but differ in this, that they do not deſcend from each other. Collateral kinſmen, therefore, are ſuch as lineally ſpring from one and the ſame anceſtor, who is the ſtirps or root, the ſtipes, trunk, or common ſtock, from whence theſe relations are branched out. 2 Comm. 204, ſee title Deſcent.

Collateral Diſcent, and Collateral Warranty, See Diſcent and Warranty.

Collateral Issue, Is where a criminal convict pleads any matter, allowed by law, in bar of execution, as pregnancy, the King's pardon, an act of grace, or diverſity of perſon, viz. that he or ſhe is not the ſame that was attainted, &c. whereon iſſue is taken, which iſſue is to be tried, by a jury, inſtanter.

COLLATIO BONORUM. Is in law where a portion or money advanced by the father to a ſon or daughter, is brought into hotchpot, in order to have an equal diſtributory ſhare of his perſonal eſtate, at his death, according to the intent of the Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10: Abr. Caſ. Eq. p. 254. See titles Hutchpot, Executor.

COLLATION to a BENEFICE, collatio beneficii.] Signifies the beſtowing of a benefice by the biſhop, when he hath right of patronage. See title Advowſon.

Collatione facta uni post Mortem alterius, A writ directed to the Juſtices of the Common Pleas, commanding them to iſſue their writ to the biſhop, for the admiſſion of a clerk in the place of another preſented by the King; who died during the ſuit between the King and the biſhop's clerk: for judgment once paſſed for the King's clerk, and he dying before admitance, the King may beſtow his preſentation on another. Reg. Orig. 31.

Collatione Hermitagii, A writ whereby the King conferred the keeping of an hermitage upon a clerk. Reg. Orig. 303, 308.

COLLATION of SEALS. This was when upon the ſame label, one ſeal was ſet on the back or reverſe of the other.

COLLATIVE ADVOWSONS, See title Advowſon.

COLLECTORS of money due to the King. Stat. 20 Car. 2. See Receivers.

COLLEGE, collegium.] A particular corporation, company or ſociety of men, having certain privileges founded by the King's licence: and for Colleges in reputation, ſee 4 Rep. 106. 108.

The eſtabliſhment of Colleges or Univerſities, is a remarkable æra in literary hiſtory. The ſchools in Cathedrals and Monaſteries confined themſelves chiefly to the teaching of grammar. There were only one or two maſters employed in that office. But in colleges, profeſſors were appointed to teach all the different parts of ſcience. The firſt obſcure mention of academical degrees in the Univerſity of Paris, (from which the other Univerſities in Europe have borrowed moſt of their cuſtoms and inſtitutions), occurs. A. D. 1215. Vide Robertſ. Hiſt. Emp. C. V. 1 v. 323.

See the power of viſitors of Colleges well explained in Dr. Walker's caſe. Hardw. 212. See further titles Corporations, Leaſes, Univerſities.

COLLEGIATE CHURCH, Is that which conſiſts of a Dean and ſecular canons; or more largely, it is a church built and endowed for a ſociety, or body corporate, of a dean or other preſident, and ſecular prieſts, as canons or prebendaries in the ſaid church. There were many of theſe ſocieties diſtinguiſhed from the religious or regulars, before the reformation: and ſome are eſtabliſhed at this time; as Weſtminſter, Windſor, Wincheſter, Southwell, Mancheſter, &c.—See title Chapter; Dean.

COLLIGENDUM BONA DEFUNCTI, (Letters ad.) In defect of repreſentatives and creditors to adminiſter to an inteſtate, &c. the Ordinary may commit adminiſtration to ſuch diſcreet perſon as he approves of, or grant him theſe letters, to collect the goods of the deceaſed, which neither make him executor nor adminiſtrator; his only buſineſs being to keep the goods in his ſafe cuſtody, and to to do other acts for the benefit of such as are entitled to the property of the deceased. 2 Comm. 505. See title Executor.

COLLOQUIUM, à colloquendo.] A talking together, or affirming of a thing, laid in declarations for words in actions of slander, &c. Mod. Cas. 203: Carthew 90.

COLLUSION, collusio.] Is a deceitful agreement or contract between two or more persons, for the one to bring an action against the other, to some evil purpose, as to defraud a third person of his right, &c. This collusion is either apparent, when it shews itself on the face of the act; or, which is more common, it is secret, where done in the dark, or covered over with a show of honesty. And it is a thing the law abhors: wherefore, when found, it makes void all things dependant upon the same, though otherwise in themselves good. Co. Lit. 109, 360: Plowd. 54. Collusion may sometimes be tried in the same action wherein the covin is, and sometimes in another action, as for lands aliened in mortmain by a quale jus: and where it is apparent there needs no proof of it; but when it is secret, it must be proved by witnesses, and found by a jury like other matters of fact. 9 Rep. 33. The statute of Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 33, gives the writ quale jus, and inquiry in these cases: and there are several other statutes relating to deeds, made by collusion and fraud. The cases particularly mentioned by the statute of Westm. 2. are of quare impedit, assise, &c. which one corporation brings against another, with intent to recover the land or advowson, for which the writ is brought, held in mortmain, &c. See title Fraud.

COLONIES, See title Plantation.

COLONUS, An husbandman or villager, who was bound to pay yearly a certain tribute; or at certain times in the year to plough some part of the lord's land; and from hence comes the word clown.

COLOUR, color.] Signifies a probable plea, but which is in fact false; and hath this end, to draw the trial of the cause from the jury to the judges: and therefore colour ought to be matter in law, or doubtful to the jury.

It is a rule in pleading, that no man be allowed to plead, specially, such a plea as amounts only to the general issue; but in such case he shall be driven to plead the general issue in terms, whereby the whole question is referred to a jury. But if a defendant, in an assise or action of trespass, be desirous to refer the validity of his title to the court rather than the jury, he may state his title specially, and at the same time give colour to the plaintiff, or suppose him to have an appearance or colour of title, bad indeed in point of law, but of which the jury are not competent judges. As if his own true title be that he claims by feoffment with livery from A. by force of which he entered on the lands in question, he cannot plead this by itself, as this plea amounts to no more than the general issue. But he may allege this specially, provided he goes farther, and says, that the plaintiff claiming by colour of a prior deed of feoffment, without livery, entered, upon whom he entered: and may then refer himself to the judgment of the court, which of the two titles is the best in point of law. Doctor & Stud. 2. c. 53.

Every colour ought to have these qualities following: 1. It is to be doubtful to the ldy gens, as in case of a deed of feoffment pleaded, and it is a doubt whether the land passeth by the feoffment, without livery, or not. 2. Colour ought to have continuance, though it wants effect. 3. It should be such colour, that, if it were effectual, would maintain the nature of the action; as in assise, to give colour of freehold, &c. 10 Rep. 88, 90 a. 91. Colour must be such a thing, which is a good colour of title, and yet is not any title. Cro. Jac. 122. If a man justifies his entry for such a cause as binds the plaintiff or his heirs for ever, he shall not give any colour: but if he pleads a descent in bar, he must give colour, because this binds the possession, and not the right; so that when the matter of the plea bars the plaintiff of his right, no colour must be given. When the defendant entitles himself by the plaintiff; where a person pleads to the writ, or to the action of the writ; he who justifies for tithes, or where the defendant justifies as servant: in all these cases no colour ought to be given. 10 Rep. 91: Lutw. 1343. Where the defendant doth not make a special title to himself, or any other, he ought to give colour to the plaintiff. Cro. Eliz. 76. In trespass for taking and carrying away twenty loads of wood, &c. the defendant says, that A. B. was possessed of them, ut de bonis propriis, and that the plaintiff claiming them by colour of a deed after made, took them, and the defendant retook them; and adjudged, that the colour given to the plaintiff, makes a good title to him, and confesseth the interest in him. 1 Lil. Abr. 275.

COLOUR OF OFFICE, color officii.] Is when an act is evilly done by the countenance of an office; and always taken in the worst sense, being grounded upon corruption, to which the office is as a shadow and colour. Plowd. Comment. 64. See Bribery; Extortion.

COLPICES, colpicium, colpiciis.] Young poles, which being cut down, make leavers or lifters; and in Warwickshire they are called colpices to this day. Blount.

COLPO, A small wax candle, à copo de cere: Hoveden says, that when the King of Scots came to the English Court, as long as he staid there, he had every day, De liberatione triginta sol. & duodecim vassellos dominicos, & quadraginta grossos longos colpones de dominica candela regis. &c. anno 1194.

COMBARONES, The fellow barons, or commonalty of the Cinque Ports. Placit. temp. Ed. 1. & Ed. 2. But the title of barons of the Cinque Ports is now given to their representatives in parliament; and the word combaron is used for a fellow member, the baron and his combaron. See title Parliament.

COMBA TERRÆ, From Sax. cumbe, Brit. kum, Eng. comb.] A valley or low piece of ground or place between two hills; which is still so called in Devonshire and Cornwall: hence many villages in other parts of England have their names of comb, as Wickcomb, &c. from their situation. Kennet's Gloss.

COMBAT, TRIAL BY, See Battel.

COMBINATIONS to do unlawful acts, are punishable before the unlawful act is executed; this is to prevent the consequence of combinations, and conspiracies, &c. 9 Rep. 57. See titles Confederacy, Conspiracy.

COMBUSTIO PECUNIÆ, The ancient way of trying mixt and corrupt money, by melting it down upon payments into the Exchequer. In the time of King Henry II. a constitution was made, called the trial by combustion; the practice of which differed little or nothing from the present method of assaying silver. But whether this examination of money by combustion, was to reduce an equation of money only of sterling, viz. a due proportion of allay with copper; or to reduce it to a fine pure silver without allay, doth not appear. On making the conſtitution for trial, it was conſidered, that though the money did anſwer numero & pondere, it might be deficient in value; becauſe mixed with copper or braſs, &c. Vide Lowndes's Eſſay upon Coin, p. 5. See title Coin.

COMITATUS, A county. Ingulphus tells us, That England was firſt divided into counties by King Alfred; and counties into hundreds, and theſe again into tithings; and Fortescue writes, that regnum Angliæ per comitatus ut regnum Franciæ per talliatus diſtinguitur. It is alſo taken for a territory or juriſdiction of a particular place, as in Mat. Paris. anno 1234. and divers old charters. See titles County, Sheriff.

According to Lord Littleton, in his Hiſtory of Hen. II. lib. 2. fo. 217, each county was anciently an earldom, ſo that, previous to the reign of King Stephen, there were not any titular earls, nor more earls than counties, though there might be fewer. As to the diviſions of counties into hundreds and tythings, ſee Ld. Lit. l. 2. fo. 259: Alſo ſee Bract. l. 3. c. 10.

COMITATU COMMISSO, Is a writ or comiſſion whereby a ſheriff is authorized to take upon him the charge of the county. Reg. Orig. 295.

COMITATU ET CASTRO COMMISSO, A writ by which the charge of a county, together with the keeping of a caſtle, is committed to the ſheriff. Reg. Orig. 295.

COMITIVA, A companion or fellow traveller; it is mentioned in Brompton, Regn. H. 2. And ſometimes it ſignifies a troop or company of robbers: as in Walſingham, anno 1366.

COMMANDERY, præceptoria.] Was any manor or chief meſſuage, with lands and tenements thereto appertaining, which belonged to the priory of St. John of Jeruſalem in England; and he who had the government of ſuch a manor or houſe was ſtiled the commander; who could not diſpoſe of it but to the uſe of the priory, only taking thence his own ſuſtenance, according to his degree. New Eagle in Lincolnſhire was and ſtill is called the Commandery of Eagle, and did anciently belong to the ſaid priory of St. John: So Selbach in Pembrokeſhire, and Shingay in Cambridgeſhire, were commanderies in the time of the knights templars, ſays Camden: and theſe in many places of England are termed Temples, becauſe they formerly belonged to the ſaid templars. See Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 2. The manors and lands belonging to the priory of St. John of Jeruſalem, were given to King Hen. VIII. by Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 20; about the time of the diſſolution of abbies and monaſteries: ſo that the name only of commanderies remains, the power being long ſince extinct.

COMMANDMENT, præceptum.] Is diverſely taken; as the commandment of the King, when upon his own motion he had caſt any man into priſon. Commandment of the juſtices, abſolute or ordinary; abſolute, where upon their own authority they commit a perſon for contempt, &c. to priſon, as a puniſhment; ordinary is when they commit one rather for ſafe cuſtody, than for any puniſhment: and a man committed upon ſuch an ordinary commandment is repleviſable. Staundf. P. C. 72, 73. Perſons committed to priſon by the ſpecial command of the King, were not formerly bailable by the court of King's Bench; but at this day the law is otherwiſe. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 36. See title Bail.

In another ſenſe of this word, magiſtrates may command others to aſſiſt them in the execution of their offices, for the doing of juſtice; and ſo may a juſtice of peace to ſuppreſs riots, apprehend felons; an officer to keep the King's peace, &c. Bro. 3. A maſter may command his ſervant to drive another man's cattle out of his ground, to enter into lands, ſeize goods, diſtrain for rent, or do other things; if the thing be not a treſpaſs to others. Fitz. Abr. The commandment of a thing is good, where he that commands hath power to do it: and a verbal command in moſt caſes is ſufficient; unleſs it be where it is given by a corporation, or when a ſheriff's warrant is to a bailiff to arreſt, &c. Brv. 288: Dyer 202.

Commandment is alſo uſed for the offence of him that willeth another man to tranſgreſs the law, or do any thing contrary to it: and in the moſt common ſignification, it is taken where one willeth another to do an unlawful act; as murder, theft, or the like: which the civilians called mandatum. Bract. lib. 3. c. 19. See title Acceſſary.

In forcible entries, &c. an infant or feme covert may be guilty in reſpect of actual violence done by them in perſon; though not in regard to what ſhall be done by others at their command, becauſe all ſuch commands of theirs are void. Co. Lit. 357: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 64. § 35. See title Infant. In treſpaſs, &c. the maſter ſhall be charged criminally for the act of the ſervant, done by his command; but ſervants ſhall not be excuſed for committing any crime, when they act by command of their maſters, who have no authority over them to give ſuch command. Doct. & Stud. c. 42: H. P. C. 66: Kel. 13. And if a maſter commands his ſervant to diſtrain, and he abuſeth the diſtreſs, the ſervant ſhall anſwer it to the party injured, &c. Kitch. 372. See title Servant.

COMMARCHIO, The confines of the land; from whence probably comes the word marches.—Imprimis de noſtris landimeris, commarchionibus. Du Cange.

COMMENDAM, eccleſia commendata, vel cuſtodia eccleſiæ alicui commiſſa.] Is the holding of a benefice or church-living, which being void, is commended to the charge and care of ſome ſufficient clerk, to be ſupplied until it may be conveniently provided of a paſtor: and he to whom the church is commended, hath the profits thereof only for a certain time, and the nature of the church is not changed thereby, but is as a thing depoſited in his hands in truſt, who hath nothing but the cuſtody of it, which may be revoked. When a parſon is made biſhop, there is a ceſſion or voidance of his benefice, by the promotion; but if the King by ſpecial diſpenſation gives him power to retain his benefice, notwithſtanding his promotion; he ſhall continue parſon, and is ſaid to hold it in Commendam. Hob. 144: Latch. 236. As the King is the means of avoidances on promotions to dignities, and the preſentations thereon belong to him, he often on the creation of biſhops grants them licences to hold their benefices in commendam; but this is uſually where the biſhopricks are ſmall, for the better ſupport of the dignity of the biſhop promoted: and it muſt be always before conſecration; for afterwards it comes too late, becauſe the benefice is then abſolutely void.—A commendam, founded on the ſtatute 25 H. 8. c. 21, is a diſpenſation from the ſupreme power, to hold or take an eccleſiaſtical living contra jus poſitivum: and there are ſeveral ſorts of commendams; as a commendam ſemeſtris, which is for the benefit of the church without any regard to the commendatary, being only a provisional act of the Ordinary, for supplying the vacation of six months, in which time the patron is to present, his clerk, and is but a sequestration of the cure and fruits until such time as the clerk is presented: a commendam retinere, which is for a bishop to retain benefices, on his preferment; and these commendams are granted on the King's mandate to the archbishop, expressing his consent, which continues the incumbency, so that there is no occasion for institution. A commendam recipere is to take a benefice de novo in the bishop's own gift, or in the gift of some other patron, whose consent must be obtained. Dyer 228: 3 Lev. 381: Hob. 143: Danv. 79.

A commendam may be temporary for six or twelve months; two or three years, &c. or it may be perpetual, i. e. for life; when it is equal to a presentation, without institution or induction. But all dispensations beyond six months were only permissive at first, and granted to persons of merit: the commendam retinere is for one or two years, &c. and sometimes for three or six years, and doth not alter the estate which the incumbent had before: a commendam retinere, as long as the commendatary should live and continue bishop, hath been held good. Vaugh. 18.

The commendam recipere must be for life, as other parsons and vicars enjoy their benefices; and as a patron cannot present to a full church, so neither can a commendam recipere be made to a church that is then full. Show. 414. A benefice cannot be commended by parts, any more than it may be presented unto by parts; as that one shall have the glebe, another the tithes, &c. Nor can a commendatary have a juris utrum, or take to him and his successors, sue or be sued, in a writ of annuity, &c. But a commendatary in perpetuum may be admitted to do it. 11 H. 4.

These commendams are now in fact seldom or never granted to any but bishops; and in that case the bishop is made Commendatary of the benefice while he continues bishop of such diocese: as the object is to make an addition to a small bishoprick: and it would be unreasonable to grant it to a bishop for life, who might afterwards be translated to one of the richest sees.—See the case of Commendams, Hob. 140: and Collier's Eccl. Hist. 2, 710.

COMMENDATARY, commendatarius.] He that holdeth a church living or preferment in commendam.

COMMENDATORY LETTERS, Are such as are written by one bishop to another in behalf of any of the clergy, or others of his diocese, travelling thither, that they may be received among the faithful: or that the clerk may be promoted; or necessaries administered to others, &c. several forms of these letters may be seen in our historians, as in Bede, lib. 2. c. 18.

COMMENDATUS, One that lives under the protection of a great man. Spelm.—Commendati homines were persons who by voluntary homage put themselves under the protection of any superior lord: for ancient homage was either predial, due for some tenure; or personal, which was by compulsion, as a sign of necessary subjection; or voluntary, with a desire of protection: and those, who by voluntary homage put themselves under the protection of any men of power, were sometimes called homines ejus commendati: and sometimes only commendati, as often occurs in Domesday. Commendati dimidii were those who depended on two several lords, and paid one half of their homage to each: and sub-commendati were like undertenants, under the command of persons that were dependants themselves on a superior lord: also there were dimidii sub-commendati, who bore a double relation to such depending lords. Domesday. This phrase seems to be still in use, in the usual compliment, Commend me to such a friend, &c. which is to let him know, I am his humble servant. Spelm. of Feuds, cap. 20.

COMMERCE, commercium.] Traffick, trade or merchandise in buying and selling of goods.

There is a distinction between commerce and trade; the former relates to our dealings with foreign nations, or our colonies, &c. abroad; the other to our mutual traffick and dealings among ourselves at home.

No municipal laws can be sufficient to order and determine the very extensive and complicated affairs of traffick and merchandize: neither can they have a proper authority for this purpose: for as these are transactions carried on between subjects of independent states, the municipal laws of one will not be regarded by the other.—For this reason the affairs of commerce are regulated by a law of their own, called the Law-merchant or Lex mercatoria, which all nations agree in and take notice of. And in particular it is held to be part of the law of England, which decides the causes of merchants by the general rules which obtain in all commercial countries. See further title Merchant. See also title Bill of Exchange.

COMMISSARY, commissarius.] A title in the ecclesiastical law, belonging to one that exerciseth spiritual jurisdiction, in places of a diocese which are so far from the episcopal city, that the chancellor cannot call the people to the bishop's principal consistory court, without their too great inconvenience. This commissary was ordained to supply the bishop's jurisdiction and office in the out-places of the diocese; or in such places as are peculiar to the bishop, and exempted from the jurisdiction of the archdeacon: for where, either by prescription or composition, Archdeacons have jurisdiction within their archdeaconries, as in most places they have, this commissary is superfluous and oftentimes vexatious, and ought not to be; yet in such cases, a commissary is sometimes appointed by the bishop, he taking prestation money of the archdeacon yearly pro exteriori jurisdictione, as it is ordinarily called. But this is held to be a wrong to archdeacons and the poorer sort of people. Cowel's Interp. 4 Inst. 338.

There are also commissaries in time of war. Persons sent abroad to take care of the supply and distribution of provisions for the army.

COMMISSION, commissio.] The warrant or letters-patent, which all persons exercising jurisdiction either ordinary or extraordinary, have to authorise them to hear or determine any cause or action: as the commission of the Judges, &c. Commission is with us as much as delegatio with the civilians: and this word is sometimes extended farther than to matters of judgment; as the commission of purveyance, &c. Commissions of inquiry shall be made to the justices of one bench or the other, &c. and to do lawful things, are grantable in many cases: also most of the great officers, judicial and ministerial, of the realm, are made by commission. And by such commissions, treasons, felonies, and other offences, may be heard and determined; by this means likewise, oaths, cognisances of fines, fines, and answers, are taken, witnesses examined, offices found, &c. Bro. Ab. 12: Rep. 39.—See Stat. 42 E. 3. c. 4. And most of these commissions are appointed by the King under the Great Seal of England: but a commission granted under the Great Seal may be determined by a Privy Seal: and by granting another new commission to do the same thing, the former commission determines; and on the death or demise of the King, the commissions of Judges and officers generally cease. Bro. Commis. 2 Dyer 289. There was formerly a High-Commission Court founded on 1 Eliz. c. 1, but it was abolished by Stats. 16 Car. 1. c. 11: and 13 Car. 2. c. 2. Of commissions divers may be seen in the table of the Register of Writs. See also Stats. 4 Hen. 4. c. 9: 7 Hen. 4. c. 11: 6 An. c 7. By which last act, § 27, it is provided that no greater number of commissioners shall be made for the execution of any office than had been previously usual.

COMMISSION OF ANTICIPATION, Was a commission under the Great Seal to collect a tax or subsidy before the day. 15 H. 8.

COMMISSION OF ARRAY, See title Militia.

COMMISSION OF ASSOCIATION, A commission to associate two or more learned persons with the justices in the several circuits and counties of Wales, &c. See title Assise, Circuit.

COMMISSION OF BANKRUPT, See title Bankrupt.

COMMISSION OF CHARITABLE USES, Goes out of the Chancery to the bishop and others, where lands given to charitable uses are misemployed, or there is any fraud or disputes concerning them, to enquire of and redress the abuse, &c. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 4.—See titles Charitable Uses; Mortmain.

COMMISSION OF DELEGATES. Is a commission under the Great Seal to certain persons, usually two or three temporal lords, as many bishops, and two judges of the law, to sit upon an appeal to the King in the court of Chancery, where any sentence is given in any ecclesiastical cause by the archbishop. Stat. 25 H. 8. c. 19. Now generally three of the common law judges, and two Civilians, sit as delegates.

COMMISSION TO ENQUIRE OF FAULTS AGAINST THE LAW, Was an ancient commission set forth on extraordinary occasions and corruptions.

COMMISSIONS OF THE PEACE, See title Justices of Peace.

COMMISSION OF LUNACY, A commission out of Chancery to enquire whether a person represented to be a lunatick be so or not; that if lunatick, the King may have the care of his estate, &c. See title Lunatick.

COMMISSION OF REBELLION, Otherwise called a writ of rebellion, issues when a man after proclamation made by the sheriff, upon a process out of the Chancery, on pain of his allegiance, to present himself to the court by a day assigned, makes default in his appearance: and this commission is directed to certain persons, to the end they, three, two, or one of them apprehend the party, or cause him to be apprehended as a rebel and contemner of the kings laws, whersoever found within the kingdom, and bring or cause him to be brought to the court on a day therein assigned: this writ or commission goes forth after an attachment returned, non est inventus, &c. Terms de Ley.—See title Attachment, Chancery.

COMMISSION OF SEWERS, Is directed to certain persons to see drains and ditches well kept and maintained in the marshy and fenny parts of England, for the better conveyance of the water into the sea, and preserving the grass upon the land. Stats. 23 H. 8. c. 5: 13 Eliz. c. 9. See title Sewers.

COMMISSION OF TREATY WITH FOREIGN PRINCES, Is where leagues and treaties are made and transacted between states and kingdoms, by their ambassadors and ministers, for the mutual advantage of the kingdoms in alliance.

COMMISSION TO TAKE UP MEN FOR WAR, Was a commission to press or force men into the king's service. This power of impressing has been heretofore doubted, but the legality of it is now fully established. Vide Foss. Rep. 154: 1 Comm. 419: Broadfoot's case, Comb. 245: Tubbs's case. Cowp. 517.—See titles Mariner, Navy.

COMMISSIONER, commissionarius.] He that hath a commission, letters patent, or other lawful warrant to examine any matters, or to execute any public office, &c. And some commissioners are to hear and determine offences, without any return made of their proceedings; and others to inquire and examine, and certify what is found. Stat. 4 Hen. 4. c. 9. Commissioners, by the common law, must pursue the authority of the commission, and perform the effect thereof; and they are to observe the antient rules of the courts whence they come; and if they do any thing for which they have not authority, it will be void. 2 Co. Rep. 25: Co. Lit. 157. The office of commissioners is to do what they are commanded; and it is necessarily implied, that they may do that also, without which what is commanded cannot be done: their authority, when appointed by any statute law, must be used as the statutes prescribe. 12 Rep. 32. If a commission is given to commissioners to execute a thing against law, they are not bound to accept or obey it: commissioners not receiving a commission may be discharged, upon oath before the Barons of the Exchequer, &c. and the king by supersedeas out of Chancery, may discharge commissioners. Besides commissioners relating to judicial proceedings; there are Commissioners of the Treasury, of the Customs, wine-licences, alienations, &c. of which there are an infinite number.

COMMITTEE, Are those to whom the consideration or ordering of any matter is referred, by some court, or by consent of parties to whom it belongs: as in parliament, a bill either consented to and passed, or denied, or neither, but being referred to the consideration of certain persons appointed by the House farther to examine it, they are thereupon called a committee. And when a parliament is called, and the speaker and members have taken the oaths, and the standing orders of the House are read, committees are appointed to sit on certain days, viz. the committee of privileges, of religion, of grievances, of courts of justice, and of trade; which are the standing committees. But though they are appointed by every new parliament, they do not all of them act, only the committee of privileges; and this being not of the whole House, is first called in the Speaker's chamber, from whence it is adjourned into the House, every one of the House having a vote therein, though not named, which makes the same usually very numerous: and any member may be present at any select committee; but is not to vote unless he be named. The chairman of the grand committee, who is always some leading member, sits in the clerk's place at the table, and writes the votes for and against the matter referred to them; and if the number be equal, he has a caſting voice, otherwiſe he hath no vote in the committee; and after the chairman hath put the queſtion for reporting to the Houſe, if that be carried, he leaves the chair, and the Speaker being called to his chair, (who quits it in the beginning, and the mace is laid under the table) he is to go down to the bar, and ſo bring up his report to the table. After a bill is read a ſecond time in the Houſe of Commons, the queſtion is put, whether it ſhall be committed to a committee of the whole houſe, or a private committee; and the committees meet in the Speaker's chamber, and report their opinion of the bill with the amendments, &c. And if there be any exceptions againſt the amendments reported, the bill may be recommitted: eight perſons make a committee, which may be adjourned by five, &c. Lex Conſtitutionis 147, 150.—See title Parliament.

There is a Committee of the King, mentioned in Weſt's Symb. tit: Chancery, ſect. 144. And this hath been uſed, though improperly, for the widow of the king's tenant being dead, who is called the committee of the King, that is, one committed by the ancient law of the land to the king's care and protection. Kitch. fol. 160.

The Committée of a lunatick, ideot, &c. is the perſon to whom the care and cuſtody of ſuch lunatick is committed by the Court of Chaucery. See title Lunatick.

Moſt Corporations have their committees of ſelect members to perform the general routine of buſineſs. See title Corporation.

COMMITMENT.

The ſending of a perſon to priſon, by warrant or order, who hath been guilty of any crime.

Anciently more felons were committed to gaol without a mittimus in writing, than were with it; ſuch were commitments by watchmen, conſtables, &c. See 1 H. H. 610.—But now ſince the Habeas-corpus act, a commitment in writing ſeems more neceſſary than formerly; otherwiſe a priſoner may be admitted to bail under that act, whatſoever his offence may have been. Burn's Juſtice, title Commitment.

I. What kind of Offenders may be committed; and by whom; and in what manner.
II. To what Priſon they may be committed; and at whoſe Charge.
III. How they may be removed and diſcharged.

I. THERE is no doubt but that perſons apprehended for offences which are not bailable, and alſo all perſons who neglect to offer bail for offences which are bailable, muſt be committed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 1.—It is ſaid, that whereſoever a juſtice of peace is impowered by any ſtatute to bind a perſon over, or to cauſe him to do a certain thing, and ſuch perſon being in his preſence ſhall refuſe to be bound, or to do ſuch thing, the juſtice may commit him to the gaol to remain there till he ſhall comply. Id. ib. § 2.

It ſeems agreed by all the old books, that whereſoever a conſtable or private perſon may juſtify the arreſting another for a felony or treaſon, he may alſo juſtify the ſending or bringing him to the common gaol; and that every private perſon hath as much authority in caſes of this kind, as the ſheriff, or any other officer; and may juſtify ſuch impriſonment by his own authority, but not by the command of another. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 3.

But inaſmuch as it is certain, that a perſon lawfully making ſuch an arreſt, may juſtify bringing the party to the conſtable, in order to be carried by him before a juſtice of peace; and inaſmuch as the ſtatutes of 1 & 2 P. & M. cap. 13, and 2 & 3 P. & M. cap. 10. which direct in what manner perſons brought before a juſtice of the peace for felony, ſhall be examined by him, in order to their being committed or bailed, ſeem clearly to ſuppoſe, that all ſuch perſons are to be brought before ſuch juſtice for ſuch purpoſe; and inaſmuch as the ſtatute of 31 Car. 2. c. 2, commonly called the Habeas-corpus act, ſeems to ſuppoſe that all perſons, who are committed to priſon, are there detained by virtue of ſome warrant in writing, which ſeems to be intended of a commitment by ſome magiſtrate, and the conſtant tenor of the late books, practice and opinions, are agreeable hereto; it is certainly moſt adviſeable at this day, for any private perſon who arreſts another for felony, to cauſe him to be brought, as ſoon as conveniently he may, before ſome juſtice of peace, that he may be committed or bailed by him. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 3.

It is certain, that the Privy Council, or any one or two of them, or Secretary of State, may lawfully commit perſons for treaſon, and for other offences againſt the State, as in all ages they have done. 2 Hawk. P. C. 117.

As to commitments by the Privy Council, two caſes in Leonard, (1 Leon. 71: 2 Leon. 175.) pre-ſuppoſe ſome power for this purpoſe, without ſaying what; and the caſe in 1 Anderſ. 297, plainly recogniſes ſuch a power in High Treaſon. But as to the juriſdiction of Privy Councillors in other offences, it does not appear to have been either claimed or exerciſed. But ſee poſt. as to commitments by the Secretary of State for libel; the caſes of Derby, and Earbury; which Lord Camden ſaid are eſtabliſhed, and the Court has no right to overturn them. 11 S. T. 323.

As to commitments by the Secretary of State; In the caſe of Entick v. Carrington, C. B. Mich. 6 Geo. 3, upon a ſpecial verdict, reſpecting the validity of a Secretary of State's warrant to ſeize perſons and papers in the caſe of libels, a very critical enquiry was made into the ſource of this power in that officer, in caſes of libels and other State crimes. 2 Wilſ. 275: 11 S. T. 317, 9.—It appears that the king being the principal conſervator of the realm, the Secretary of State has ſo much of the royal authority transferred to him, as juſtifies commitment for theſe crimes, but not the ſeizure of papers.

The following inſtances of commitments by the Privy Council and Secretary of State, will further explain the nature of this power.—1. Howell, was committed in the 28 Eliz. and Hollyard in the 30th Eliz. by Secretary Walſingham, Privy Councillor; and it was determined that where the commitment is not by the whole council, the cauſe muſt be expreſſed in the warrant. 1 Leon. 71: 2 Leon. 175. ſed vide Stat. 31 Car. 2. c. 2: Lord Raym. 65.—2. Anno 34 Eliz. the Judges remonſtrated againſt the exerciſe of this power; and declared that all priſoners may be diſcharged, unleſs committed by the Queen's command, or by her whole council, or by one or two of them for High-treaſon. 1 And. 297.—3. Melvin was committed, an. 4 C. 1, by Secretary Conway, on ſuſpicion of high-treaſon: but the Court thought the cauſe of the ſuſ-

Picion ſhould have been expreſſed. Palm. 558.—4. Crofton was committed by the council, an. 14 C. 2, for high-treaſon generally. Vaugh. 142: 1 Sid. 78: 1 Keb. 305.—5. Fitzpatrick by the Privy Council, an. 7 W. 3, for high-treaſon, in aiding an eſcape: and bailed for neglect of proſecution. 1 Salk. 103.—6. Yaxley was committed, an. 5 W. & M. by the Secretary of State, Lord Nottingham, for refuſing to declare if he was a Jeſuit. Carth. 291: Skinn. 369.—7. Kendal and Roe were committed, an. 7 W. 3, by Secretary Trumbal for high-treaſon, in aſſiſting the eſcape of Montgomery; and by Holt, C. J. held good, but the priſoners were bailed. 4 S. T. 559: 5 Mod. 78: Skin. 596: Holt. 144: Lord Raym. 61, 5: Comb. 343: 12 Mod. 82: 1 Salk. 347.——8. Derby was committed, 10 An. for publiſhing a libel; (quære for felony, 11 S. T. 311;) called the Obſervator; and the court held the warrant good and legal. Forteſc. 140: 11 S. T. 309.—9. Sir W. Wyndham was committed, an. 4 Geo. 1. by Secretary Stanhope for high-treaſon; and by Parker, C. J. held good. Stra. 3: 3 Vin. 516.—10. Lord Scarſdale, and Duplin, and Harvey were committed, an. 2 Geo. 1, by Lord Townſhend, Secretary of State, for treaſonable practices, and admitted to bail. 3 Vin. 534.—11. Earbury was arreſted and committed by warrant from the Secretary of State, for being the author of a ſeditious libel, and his papers ſeized, and he continued on his recognizance, an. 7 Geo. 2. 8 Mod. 177: 11 S. T. 309.—12. Henſey was committed, an. 31 Geo. 2, by the Earl of Holderneſs, Secretary of State, for high-treaſon, in adhering to the king's enemies. 1 Burr. 642.— 13. Shebbear was committed, 31 Geo. 2, on two warrants from the Secretary of State, for a libel. 1 Burr. 460.—14. Wilkes was committed, an. 3 Geo. 3. by warrant from the Earl of Halifax, Secretary of State, for a libel; but diſcharged by his privilege of parliament. 2 Wilſ. 150: 11 S. T. 302.—15. Sayer was apprehended, 18 Geo. 3, by warrant from the Earl of Rochford, Secretary of State, for high treaſon, and bailed by Lord Mansfield. Black. Rep. 1165.—See further title Bail II. and alſo title Arreſt.

As to the manner of commitment, it is enacted by 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10, That juſtices of peace ſhall examine perſons brought before them for felony, &c. or ſuſpicion thereof, before they commit them to priſon, and ſhall bind their accuſers to give evidence againſt them. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 11.

A Juſtice of the peace may detain a priſoner a reaſonable time, in order to examine him; and it is ſaid, that three days is a reaſonable time for this purpoſe. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 12: Dalt. c. 125: 2 Inſt. 52, 591.

Every commitment muſt be in writing, and under the hand and ſeal, and ſhew the authority of him that made it, and the time and place, and muſt be directed to the keeper of the priſon. It may be either in the king's name, and only teſted by the juſtice, or in the juſtice's name. It may command the gaoler to keep the party in ſafe and cloſe cuſtody; for this being what he is obliged to do by law, it can be no fault to command him ſo to do. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16 § 13, 14, 15.

It ought to ſet forth the crime with convenient certainty, whether the commitment be by the Privy Council, or any other authority; otherwiſe the officer is not punishable by reaſon of ſuch mittimus, for ſuffering the party to eſcape; and the court, before whom he is removed by habeas, ought to diſcharge or bail him; and this doth not only hold where no cauſe at all is expreſſed in the commitment, but alſo where it is ſo looſely ſet forth, that the court cannot judge whether it were a reaſonable ground for impriſonment or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 17. See titles Arreſt; Bail.

A commitment for high treaſon or felony in general, without expreſſing the particular ſpecies, has been held good. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 16. But now, ſince the Habeas-corpus act, it ſeems that ſuch a general commitment is not good; and therefore where A. and B. were committed for aiding and abetting Sir James Montgomery to make his eſcape, who was committed by a warrant of a Secretary of State for high treaſon; on a Habeas-corpus, they were admitted to bail, becauſe it did not appear of what ſpecies of treaſon Sir James was guilty. Skin. 596: 1 Salk. 347. S. C.

It is ſafe to ſet forth that the party is charged upon oath; but this is not neceſſary, for it hath been reſolved, that a commitment for treaſon, or for ſuſpicion of it, without ſetting forth any particular accuſation or ground of the ſuſpicion, is good. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 17. This reſolution was in the caſe of Sir W. Wyndham, 2 Geo. 1, who was committed by the Secretary of State, for high-treaſon, generally. Stra. 2: 3 Vin. 515, at large. It was confirmed by Pratt. C. J. in Wilkes's caſe, committed by a ſimilar warrant for a libel. 2 Wilſ. 158: 11 S. T. 304. And Mr. J. Foſter ſays, in caſes wherein the juſtice of the peace hath juriſdiction, the legality of his warrant will never depend on the truth of the information whereon it is grounded. Curtis's Ca. 136.—See alſo Dalt. c. 125: Cromp. 233: 2 Inſt. 52: Palm. 558: 1 Salk. 347: 5 Mod. 78: 10 Mod. 334: 1 H. P. C. 582.

Every ſuch mittimus ought to have a lawful concluſion, viz. that the party be ſafely kept till he be delivered by law, or by order of law, or by due courſe of law; or that he be kept till further order, (which ſhall be intended of the order of law) or to the like effect; and if the party be committed only for want of bail, it ſeems to be a good concluſion of the commitment, that he be kept till he find bail; but a commitment till the perſon who makes it ſhall take further order, ſeems not to be good; and it ſeems that the party committed by ſuch or any other irregular mittimus may be bailed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 18.

Alſo a commitment grounded on an act of parliament ought to be conformable to the method preſcribed by ſuch ſtatute; as where the churchwardens of Northampton were committed on the 43 Eliz. cap. 2, and the warrant concluded in the common form, viz. Until they be duly diſcharged according to law; but the ſtatute appointing, that the party ſhould there remain until he ſhould account, for want of ſuch concluſion they were diſcharged. Carth. 152, 153. And where a man is committed as a criminal, the concluſion muſt be, until he be delivered by due courſe of law; if he be committed for contumacy, it ſhould be, until he comply.

II. All commitments muſt be to ſome priſon within the realm of England. For,

By the Stat. 31 Car. 2. cap. 2, the Habeas-corpus act, it is enacted, "That no ſubject of this realm, being an inhabitant or reſiant of this kingdom of England, dominion of Wales, or town of Berwick upon Tweed, ſhall or may be ſent priſoner into Scotland, Ireland, Jerſey, Guernſey, Tangier, Tangier, or into any parte, garriſons, iſlands, or places beyond the ſeas, which then were, or at any time after ſhould be, within or without the dominions of his Majeſty."

By Stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 10, Sheriffs ſhall have the cuſtody of the gaols as before that time they were wont to have, and they ſhall put in ſuch under-keepers for whom they will anſwer. And this is confirmed by Stat. 19 Hen. 7. cap. 10. Alſo by Stat. 5 Hen. 4. cap. 10, it is enacted, "That none be impriſoned by any juſtice of the peace, but only in the common gaol, ſaving to lords, and others who have gaols, their franchiſe in this caſe." It ſeems that the King's grant, ſince the ſtatute, 5 H. 4. c. 10, to private perſons to have the cuſtody of priſoners committed by juſtices of peace, is void. And it is ſaid, that none can claim a priſon as a franchiſe, unleſs he have alſo a gaol delivery. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 7. See Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 19. § 3, made perpetual by Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 19, to enable juſtices of peace to build and repair gaols in their reſpective counties, where a clauſe like that in Stat. 5 H. 4. c. 10, is inſerted.

Alſo it hath been held, that regularly no one can juſtify the detaining a priſoner in cuſtody out of the common gaol, unleſs there be ſome particular reaſon for ſo doing; as if the party be ſo dangerouſly ſick, that it would apparently hazard his life to ſend him to the gaol; or there be evident danger of a reſcous from rebels, &c. yet conſtant practice ſeems to authorize a commitment to a meſſenger; and it is ſaid that it ſhall be intended to have been made in order for the carrying of the party to gaol. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 8, 9.

And it is ſaid, that if a conſtable bring a felon to gaol, and the gaoler refuſe to receive him, the town where he is conſtable ought to keep him till the next gaol-delivery. H. P. C. 114: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 9.

A priſoner in the cuſtody of the King's meſſenger, on a warrant from the Secretary of State, who is brought into K. B. by Habeas-corpus to be bailed, but has not his bail ready, cannot be committed to the ſame cuſtody he came in; but muſt be committed to the cuſtody of the marſhal, which will prevent the neceſſity of ſuing out a new Habeas-corpus; as he may be brought up from the priſon of the court, by a rule of court, whenever he ſhall be prepared to give bail. 1 Burr. 460.

If a perſon arreſted in one county for a crime done in it, fly into another county, and be retaken there, he may be committed by a juſtice of the firſt county to the gaol of ſuch county. H. P. C. 93. But by the better opinion, if he had before any arreſt fled into ſuch county, he muſt be committed to the gaol thereof by a juſtice of ſuch county. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 8: Dalt. c. 118. Alſo it ſeems to be laid down as a rule by ſome books, that any offender may be committed to the gaol next to the place where he was taken, whether it lie in the ſame county or not. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 8.—See poſt. Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 55.

By Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 19, Vagrants and other criminals, offenders, and perſons charged with ſmall offences, may for ſuch offences, or for want of ſureties, be committed either to the common gaol, or houſe of correction, as the juſtices in their judgment ſhall think proper.

By Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 55, If a perſon is apprehended, upon a warrant indorſed, in another county, for an offence not bailable, or if he ſhall not there find bail, he ſhall be carried back into the firſt county, and be committed, or, if bailable, bailed by the juſtices in ſuch firſt county.

As to the charges of commitment, it is enacted by Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 10, that offenders committed are to bear their own charges, and the charges of thoſe who are appointed to guard them; and if they refuſe to pay, the charges may be levied by ſale of their goods. And by Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 3, If they have no goods, &c. within the county where they are apprehended, the juſtices are to grant a warrant on the treaſurer of the county for payment of the charges. But in Middleſex the ſame ſhall be paid by the overſeers of the poor of the pariſh where the perſon was apprehended.

By the Stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 3. The ſheriff ſhall certify the names of all priſoners in his cuſtody to the juſtices of gaol-delivery.

III. As priſoners ought to be committed at firſt to the proper priſon, ſo ought they not to be removed thence, except in ſome ſpecial caſes; and to this purpoſe it is enacted by 31 Car. 2. cap. 2; "That if any ſubject of this realm ſhall be committed to any priſon, or in cuſtody of any officer or officers whatſoever, for any criminal, or ſuppoſed criminal matter, that the ſaid perſon ſhall not be removed from the ſaid priſon and cuſtody, into the cuſtody of any other officer or officers; unleſs it be by Habeas-corpus, or ſome other legal writ; or where the priſoner is delivered to the conſtable or other inferior officer, to carry ſuch priſoner to ſome gaol; or where any perſon is ſent by order of any judge of aſſize, or juſtice of the peace, to any common work-houſe, or houſe of correction; or where the priſoner is removed from one priſon or place to another within the ſame county, in order to a trial or diſcharge by due courſe of law; or in caſe of ſudden fire or infection, or other neceſſity; upon pain that he who makes out, ſigns, or counterſigns, or obeys or executes ſuch warrant, ſhall forfeit to the party grieved 100*l.* for the firſt offence, 200*l.* for the ſecond, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 10.

A perſon legally committed for a crime, certainly appearing to have been done by ſome one or other, cannot be lawfully diſcharged by any other but by the King, till he be acquitted on his trial, or have an ignoramus found by the grand jury, or none to proſecute him on a proclamation for that purpoſe, by the juſtices of gaol-delivery. But if a perſon be committed on a bare ſuſpicion, without any appeal or indictment, for a ſuppoſed crime, where afterwards it appears that there was none; as for the murder of a perſon thought to be dead, who afterwards is found to be alive; it hath been holden that he may be ſafely diſmiſſed without any farther proceeding; for that he who ſuffers him to eſcape, is properly puniſhable only as an acceſſory, to his ſuppoſed offence; and it is impoſſible there ſhould be an acceſſory where there can be no principal; and it would be hard to puniſh one for a contempt founded on a ſuſpicion appearing in ſo unconteſted a manner to be groundleſs. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 22. But the ſafeſt way for the gaoler, is to have the authority of ſome court, or magiſtrate, for diſcharging the priſoner.

If the words of a ſtatute are not purſued in a commitment, the party ſhall be diſcharged by Habeas corpus. See titles Arreſt, Bail, Impriſonment, Priſoner, &c.

COMMONALTY, populus, plebs, communitas.] In Art. ſuper chartas, 28 Ed. 1. c. 1, the words Tout le Commune d'Engleterre ſignify all the people of England. 2 Inſt. 539. But this word is generally uſed for the middle ſort of the king's ſubjects, ſuch of the commons as are raiſed beyond the ordinary ſort, and coming to have the managing of offices, by that means are one degree under burgeſſes, which are ſuperior to them in order and authority; and companies incorporated are ſaid to conſiſt of maſters, wardens, and commonalty, the firſt two being the chief, and the others ſuch as are uſually called of the livery. The ordinary people, and freeholders, or at beſt knights and gentlemen, under the degree of baron, have been of late years called communitas regni, or tota terræ communitas; yet antiently, if we credit Brady, the barons and tenants in capite, or military men, were the community of the kingdom; and thoſe only were reputed as ſuch in our moſt ancient hiſtories and records. *Brady's Gloſſ. to his Introduct. to Engl. COMMON.

Communia.] A right or privilege, which one or more perſons claim to take or uſe, in ſome part or portion of that which another man's lands, waters, woods, &c. do naturally produce; without having an abſolute property in ſuch land, waters, wood, &c. It is called an incorporeal right, which lies in grant, as if originally commencing on ſome agreement between lords and tenants, for ſome valuable purpoſes; which by age being formed into a preſcription continues, although there be no deed or inſtrument in writing which proves the original contract or agreement. 4 Co. 37: 2 Inſt. 65: 1 Vent. 387.

I. Of the ſeveral Kinds of Commons.
II. The Intereſt of the Owner of the Soil; wherein, of Approvement and Incloſure.
III. The Commoners' Intereſt in the Soil; and herein, of Apportionment and Extinguiſhment.

I. There is not only common of paſture, but alſo common of piſcary or fiſhing; common of eſtovers; common of turbary, which ſee under their ſeveral heads. The word common however, in its moſt uſual acceptation, ſignifies common of paſture.—This is a right of feeding one's beaſts on another's land: for in thoſe waſte grounds uſually called commons, the property of the ſoil is generally in the lord of the manor; as in common fields, it is in the particular tenants. This kind of common is divided into common in groſs, common appendant, common appurtenant, and common pur cauſe de vicinage.

Common in groſs is a liberty to have common alone, without any lands or tenements, in another perſon's land, granted by deed to a man and his heirs, or for life, &c. F. N. B. 31, 37: 4 Rep. 30.

Common appendant is a right belonging to a man's arable land, of putting beaſts commonable into another's ground. And common appurtenant is belonging to an eſtate for all manner of beaſts commonable or not commonable. 4 Rep. 37: Plowd. 161.

Common appendant and appurtenant, are in a manner confounded, as appears by Fitzherbert; and are by him defined to be a liberty of common appertaining to, or depending on a freehold; which common muſt be taken with beaſts commonable, as horſes, oxen, kine, and ſheep; and not with goats, hogs, and geeſe. But ſome make this difference, that common appurtenant may be ſevered from the land whereto it pertains; but not common appendant; which, according to Sir Edward Coke, had this beginning: when a lord enfeoffed another of arable land, to hold of him in ſocage, the feoffee, to maintain the ſervice of his plough, had at firſt, by the curteſy or permiſſion of the lord, common in his waſtes for neceſſary beaſts to eat and compoſt his land, and that for two cauſes; one, for that it was tacitly implied in the feoffment, by reaſon the feoffee could not till or compoſt his land without cattle, and cattle could not be ſuſtained without paſture; ſo by conſequence the feoffee had, as a thing neceſſary and incident, common in the waſte and lands of the lord: and this may be collected from the ancient books and ſtatutes: and the ſecond reaſon of this common was, for the maintenance and advantage of tillage, which is much regarded and favoured by the law. F. N. B. 180: 4 Rep. 37.

Common pur cauſe de vicinage; common by reaſon of neighbourhood; is a liberty that the tenants of one lord in one town have to common with the tenants of another lord in another town: it is where the tenants of two lords have uſed, time out of mind, to have common promiſcuouſly in both lordſhips lying together and open to one another. 8 Rep. 78. And thoſe that challenge this kind of common, which is uſually called intercommoning, may not put their cattle in the common of the other lord, for then they are diſtrainable; but they may turn them into their own fields, and if they ſtray into the neighbouring common, they muſt be ſuffered. Terms de Ley. The inhabitants of one town or lordſhip may not put in as many beaſts as they will, but with regard to the freehold of the inhabitants of the other: for otherwiſe it were no good neighbourhood, upon which all this depends. Ibid.

If one lord encloſes the common, the other town cannot then common; but though the common of vicinage is gone, common appendant remains. 4 Rep. 38: 7 Rep. 5. Every common pur cauſe de vicinage is a common appendant. 1 Danv. Abr. 799.

This is indeed only a permiſſive right intended to excuſe what in ſtrictneſs is a treſpaſs in both, and to prevent a multiplicity of ſuits. And therefore either townſhip may encloſe and bar out the other, though they have intercommoned time out of mind. 2 Comm. 34.

Common appendant is only to ancient arable land; not to a houſe, meadow, paſture, &c. It is againſt the nature of common appendant to be appendant to meadow or paſture: but if in the beginning land be arable, and of late a houſe hath been built on ſome part of the land, and ſome acres are employed to meadow and paſture, in ſuch caſe it is appendant; though it muſt be pleaded as appendant to the land, and not to the houſe, paſture, &c. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 457. This may be common appendant, though it belongs to a manor, farm, or plough-land: and common appendant is of common right; but it is not common appendant, unleſs it has been appendant time out of mind. 1 Danv. 746. It may be upon condition; be for all the year, or for a certain time, or for a certain number of beaſts, &c. by uſage: though it ought to be for ſuch cattle as plough and compoſt the land, to which it is appendant. Ibid. 797. Common appendant may be to common in a field after the corn is ſevered, till the ground is re-ſown: ſo it may be to have common in a meadow after the hay is carried off the ſame, till Candlemas, &c. Yelv. 185.

This common, which is in its nature without number, by cuſtom may be limited as to the beaſts: common appurtenant ought always to be for thoſe levant and couchant, and may be ſans number. Plowd. 161. A man may preſcribe to have common appurtenant for all manner of cattle, at every ſeaſon in the year. 25 Aſſ. 8. Common by preſcription for all manner of commonable cattle as belonging to a tenement, &c. muſt be for cattle levant and couchant upon the land, (which is ſo many as the land will maintain,) or it will not be good: and if a perſon grants common ſans number, the grantee cannot put in ſo many cattle, but that the grantor may have ſufficient common in the ſame land. 1 Danv. Abr. 798, 799. He who hath common appendant or appurtenant, can keep but a number of cattle proportionable to his land; for he can common with no more than the lands to which his common belongs is able to maintain. 3 Salk. 93. Common appurtenant may be to a houſe, paſture, &c. though common appendant cannot; but it ought to be preſcribed for as againſt common right: and uncommonable cattle, as hogs, goats, &c. are appurtenant: this common may be created by grant at this day; ſo may not common appendant. 1 Inſt. 122: 1 Rol. Abr. 398.

Common appurtenant for a certain number of beaſts may be granted over. 1 Danv. 802.

By Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 81. § 21, Rams are not to remain on commons from the 25th of Auguſt to the 25th of November.

II. THE property of the ſoil in the common is entirely in the lord; and the uſe of it, jointly in him and the commoners.

Lords of manors may depaſture in commons where their tenants put in cattle; and a preſcription to exclude the lord is againſt law. 1 Inſt. 122.

The lord may agiſt the cattle of a ſtranger in the common by preſcription: and he may licenſe a ſtranger to put in his cattle, if he leaves ſufficient room for the commoners. 1 Danv. 795: 2 Mod. 6. Alſo the lord may ſurcharge, &c. an overplus of the common: and if, where there is not an overplus, the lord ſurcharges the common, the commoners are not to diſtrain his beaſts; but muſt commence an action againſt the lord. F. N. B. 125. But it is ſaid, if the lord of the ſoil put cattle into a cloſe, contrary to cuſtom, when it ought to lie freſh, a commoner may take the cattle damage-feaſant: otherwiſe it is a general rule that he cannot diſtrain the cattle of the lord. 1 Danv. 807.

The lord may diſtrain where the common is ſurcharged; and bring action of treſpaſs for any treſpaſs done in the common. 9 Rep. 113.

A lord may make a pond on the common: though the lord cannot dig pits for gravel or coal; the ſtatutes of approvement extending only to incloſure. 3 Inſt. 204: 9 Rep. 112: 1 Sid. 106. If the lord makes a warren on the common, the commoners may not kill the conies; but are to bring their action, for they may not be their own judges. 1 Rol. 90. 405.

By ſtatute, 20 H. 3. c. 4, (Stat. of Merton,) lords may approve againſt their tenants, viz. incloſe part of the waſte, &c. and thereby diſcharge it from being common, leaving common ſufficient; and neighbours as well as tenants claiming common of paſture, ſhall be bound by it.—If the lord encloſes on the common, and leaves not common ſufficient, the commoners may not only break down the incloſures; but may put in their cattle, although the lord ploughs and ſows the land. 2 Inſt. 88: 1 Rol. Abr. 406.

Where the tenants of the manor have a right to dig gravel on the waſtes, or to take eſtovers, there the lord has no right under the ſtatute of Merton, to encloſe and approve the waſtes of the manor.—Yet a cuſtom in a manor that any perſon being deſirous of incloſing, may apply to the court, &c. firſt obtaining the conſent of the lord, does not abridge the lord's common-law right of incloſing without any ſuch application, provided he leave common ſufficient for the tenants. 2 Term Rep. 391, 2.

By Stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 36, Owners of common, with the conſent of the majority, in number and value, of the commoners; the majority of the commoners, with conſent of the owners; or any perſons with the conſent of both, may incloſe any part of a common for the growth of wood. If the wood is deſtroyed, the offender may be puniſhed according to Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 48: if not convicted in ſix months, the owner ſhall have ſatisfaction from the adjoining pariſhes, &c. as for fences overthrown by Stat. Weſtm. 2.—Perſons cutting wood on commons ſhall incur the ſame penalty. And by Stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 41, The recompence is to be paid to perſons intereſted, in proportion to their intereſt. Tenants for life, or for years determinable on lives, may conſent for their term; but that binds not, after determination of their eſtate.

III. A commoner hath only a ſpecial and limited intereſt in the ſoil, but yet he ſhall have ſuch remedies as are commenſurate to his right, and therefore may diſtrain beaſts damage-feaſant, bring an action on the caſe, &c. but not being abſolute owner of the ſoil, he cannot bring a general action of treſpaſs for a treſpaſs done upon the common. See Bridg. 10, 11: Godb. 123, 124: 2 Leon. 201, 202.

A commoner cannot regularly do any thing on the ſoil which tends to the melioration or improvement of the common, as cutting down of buſhes, fern, &c. 1 Sid. 251: 12 Hen. 8. 2: 13 Hen. 8. 15. Therefore if a common every year in a flood is ſurrounded with water, the commoner cannot make a trench in the ſoil to avoid the water, becauſe he has nothing to do with the ſoil, but only to take the graſs with the mouth of the cattle. 1 Rol. Abr. 405: 2 Bulſt. 116.—But ſee ante II. and poſt.

Every commoner may break the common if it be incloſed; and although he does not put his cattle in at the time, yet his right of commonage ſhall excuſe him from being a treſpaſſer. Lit. Rep. 38: See 1 Rol. Abr. 406. That is, ſuppoſing the incloſure made by the lord, and that there is not ſufficient common; or that the incloſure is made by any other perſon than the lord.

If a tenant of the freehold ploughs it, and ſows it with corn, the commoner may put in his cattle, and therewith eat the corn growing upon the land; ſo if he lets his corn lie in the field beyond the uſual time, the other commoners may, notwithſtanding, put in their beaſts. 2 Leon. 202, 203.

The commoner cannot uſe common but with his own proper cattle: but if he hath not any cattle to manure the land, he may borrow other cattle to manure it, and uſe the common with them; for by the loan, they are in a manner made his own cattle. 1 Danv. 798. Grantee of common appurtenant, for a certain number of cattle, cannot common with the cattle of a ſtranger: he that hath common in groſs, may put in a ſtranger's cattle, and uſe the common with ſuch cattle. Ibid. 803. Common appendant or appurtenant, cannot be made common in groſs: and approvement extends not to common in groſs. 2 Inſt. 86.

A Commoner may diſtrain beaſts put into the common by a ſtranger, or every commoner may bring action of the caſe, where damage is received. 9 Rep. 11. But one commoner cannot diſtrain the cattle of another commoner, though he may thoſe of a ſtranger, who hath no right to the common. 2 Lutw. 1238.

Wherever there is colour of right for putting in cattle, a commoner cannot diſtrain; where there is no colour he may: ſo he may diſtrain a ſtranger's cattle, but not thoſe of a commoner, though he exceeds his number. Where writ of admeaſurement lies, he cannot diſtrain.—Quære, whether he may diſtrain cattle ſurcharged, where the right of common is for a number certain. 4 Burr. 2426: 1 Black. Rep. 673.

The uſual remedies for ſurcharging the common, are either by diſtraining ſo many of the beaſts as are above the number allowed, or elſe by an action of treſpaſs; both which may be had by the lord: or laſtly, by a ſpecial action on the caſe for damages, in which any commoner may be plaintiff. Freem. 273. But the ancient and moſt effectual method of proceeding, is by writ of admeaſurement of paſture. This lies, either where a common appurtenant or in groſs is certain as to number; or where a man has common appendant, or appurtenant to his land, the quantity of which common has never yet been aſcertained. In either of theſe caſes, as well the lord, as any of the commoners, is entitled to this writ of admeaſurement; which is one of thoſe writs, that are called vicontiel (2 Inſt. 369: Finch. L. 314,) being directed to the ſheriff, (vicecomiti,) and not to be returned to any ſuperior court, till finally executed by him.

It recites a complaint, that the defendant hath ſurcharged, (ſuperoneravit,) the common: and therefore commands the ſheriff to admeaſure and apportion it; that the defendant may not have more than belongs to him, and that the plaintiff may have his rightful ſhare. And upon this ſuit all the commoners ſhall be admeaſured, as well thoſe who have not, as thoſe who have, ſurcharged the common; as well the plaintiff as defendant. F. N. B. 125.—The execution of this writ muſt be by a jury of twelve men, who are upon their oaths to aſcertain, under the ſuperintendance of the ſheriff, what and how many cattle each commoner is entitled to feed. And the rule for this admeaſurement is generally underſtood to be, that the commoner ſhall not turn more cattle upon the common, than are ſufficient to manure and ſtock the land to which his right of common is annexed; or, as our ancient law expreſſed it, ſuch cattle as only are levant and couchant upon his tenement; (Bro. Abr. 1: Preſcription 28;) which being a thing uncertain before admeaſurement, has frequently, though erroneouſly occaſioned this unmeaſured right of common to be called a common without ſtint, or ſans nombre, (Hardr. 117,) a thing, which though poſſible in law, does in fact very rarely exiſt. Lord Raym. 407.

If, after the admeaſurement has thus aſcertained the right, the ſame defendant ſurcharges the common again the plaintiff may have a writ of ſecond ſurcharge, (de ſecundâ ſuperoneratione,) which is given by the Stat. Weſtm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 8; and thereby the ſheriff is directed to inquire by a jury, whether the defendant has in fact again ſurcharged the common, contrary to the tenor of the laſt admeaſurement; and if he has, he ſhall then forfeit to the king the ſupernumerary cattle put in, and alſo ſhall pay damages to the plaintiff. F. N. B. 126: 2 Inſt. 370.—This proceſs ſeems highly equitable, for the firſt offence is held to be committed through mere inadvertence, and therefore there are no damages or forfeiture on the firſt writ, which was only to aſcertain the right which was diſputed: but the ſecond offence is a wilful contempt and injuſtice; and therefore puniſhed, very properly, with not only damages, but alſo forfeiture. And herein, the right, being once ſettled, is never again diſputed; but only the fact is tried, whether there be any ſecond ſurcharge or no: which gives this neglected proceeding a great advantage over the modern method by action on the caſe, wherein the quantum of common belonging to the defendant muſt be proved upon every freſh trial, for every repeated offence.

This injury, by ſurcharging, can, properly ſpeaking, only happen where the common is appendant or appurtenant, and of courſe limited by law; or where, when in groſs, it is expreſsly limited and certain; for where a man hath common in groſs, ſans nombre, or without ſtint, he cannot be a ſurcharger. However, even where a man is ſaid to have common without ſtint, ſtill there muſt be left ſufficient for the lord's own beaſts. 1 Rol. Abr. 399. For the law will not ſuppoſe that, at the original grant of the common, the lord meant to exclude himſelf.

There is yet another diſturbance of common, when the owner of the land, or other perſon, ſo incloſes or otherwiſe obſtructs it, that the commoner is precluded from enjoying the benefit, to which he is by law entitled. This may be done either by erecting fences, or by driving the cattle off the land, or by ploughing up the ſoil of the common. Cro. Eliz. 198. Or it may be done by erecting a warren therein, and ſtocking it with rabbits in ſuch quantities, that they devour the whole herbage, and thereby deſtroy the common. For in ſuch caſe, though the commoner may not deſtroy the rabbits, yet the law looks upon this as an injurious diſturbance of his right, and has given him his remedy by action againſt the owner. Cro. Jac. 195. This kind of diſturbance does indeed amount to a diſſeiſin, and if the commoner chuſes to conſider it in that light, the law has given him an aſſiſe of novel diſſeiſin, againſt the lord, to recover the poſſeſſion of his common. F. N. B. 179.—Or it has given a writ of quod permittat, againſt any ſtranger, as well as the owner of the land, in caſe of ſuch a diſturbance to the plaintiff as amounts to a total deprivation of his common; whereby the defendant ſhall be compelled to permit the plaintiff to enjoy his common as he ought. Finch. L. 275: F. N. B. 123. But if the commoner does not chuſe to bring a real action to recover ſeiſin, or to try the right, he may (which is the eaſier and more uſual way) bring an action on the caſe for his damages, inſtead of an aſſiſe, or a quod permittat. Cro. Jac. 195: See 3 Comm. 238—240.

If

If any commoner incloſes, or builds on the common, every commoner may have an action for the damage. Where turf is taken away from the common, the lord only is to bring the action: but it is ſaid the commoners may have an action for the injury, by entering on the common, &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 89, 398: 2 Leon. 201.

If a commoner who hath a freehold in his common be ouſted of, or hindered therein, that he cannot have it ſo beneficially as he uſed to do; whether the interruption be by the lord or any ſtranger, he may have an aſſiſe againſt him: but if the commoner hath only an eſtate for years, then his remedy is by action on the caſe. And if it be only a ſmall treſpaſs, that is little or no loſs to the commoner, but he hath common enough beſides, the commoner may not bring any action. 4 Rep. 37: 8 Rep. 79: Dyer 316.

A commoner cannot dig clay on the common, which deſtroys the graſs, and carrying it away doth damage to the ground: ſo that the other commoners cannot enjoy the common, in tam amplo modo as they ought. Godb. 344. Alſo a commoner may not cut buſhes, dig trenches, &c. in the common, without a cuſtom to do it. 1 Nelſ. 462. If he makes any thing de novo, he is a treſpaſſer: he can do nothing to impair the common; but may reform a thing abuſed, fill up holes, &c. 1 Brownl. 208.

A commoner may abate hedges erected on a common; for though the lord hath an intereſt in the ſoil, by abating the hedges, the commoner doth not meddle with it. 2 Mod. 65. Any man may by preſcription have common and feeding for his cattle in the king's highway, although the ſoil doth belong to another. But the occupation of common by uſurpation, will not give title to him that doth occupy it, unleſs he hath had it time beyond memory.

Upon agreement between two commoners to encloſe a common, a party having intereſt not privy to the agreement, will not be bound; but one or two wilful perſons ſhall not hinder the public good. Chan. Rep. 48. Commons muſt be driven yearly at Michaelmas, or within fifteen days after: infected horſes, and ſtone-horſes under ſize, &c. are not to be put into commons, under forfeitures, by Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 13. New erected cottages, though they have four acres of ground laid to them, ought not to have common in the waſte. 2 Inſt. 740. In law proceedings, where there are two diſtinct commons, the two titles muſt be ſhewn: cattle are to be alledged commonable; and common ought to be in lands commonable: and the place is to be ſet forth where the meſſuage and lands lie, &c. to which the common belongs. 1 Nelſ. 462, 463.

Common appendant, becauſe it is of common right, ſhall be apportioned by the commoner's purchaſe of part of the land in which he hath ſuch common; but common appurtenant ſhall be extinct by the commoner's purchaſe of part of the land, in which, &c. Both common appendant and appurtenant ſhall be apportioned by alienation of part of the land to which the common is appendant or appurtenant. Co. Lit. 122: Hob. 235: 8 Co. 78: Owen 122: 4 Co. 37: Cro. Eliz. 594.

A releaſe of common in one acre, is an extinguiſhment of the whole common. See 4 Co. 37.

If A. hath common in the lands of B. as appurtenant to a meſſuage, and after B. enfeoffs A. of the ſaid lands, whereby the common is extinguiſhed; and then A. leaſes to B. the ſaid meſſuage and lands, with all commons, &c. uſed or occupied with the ſaid meſſuage; this is a good grant of a new common for the time. Cro. Eliz. 570. If ſeveral perſons are ſeiſed of ſeveral parts of a common, and a commoner purchaſes the inheritance of one part, his entire common is extinct. 1 And. 159. When a man hath common appendant for a certain number of cattle, and to a certain parcel of land, if he ſell part of it, the common is not extinguiſhed; for the purchaſer ſhall have common pro rata: but it is otherwiſe in common appurtenant. 8 Rep. 78: 1 Nelſ. 460: See Fitz. Abr. tit. Comm. per tot.

By Stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 81, In every pariſh where there are common-field lands, all the arable lands lying in ſuch fields, ſhall be cultivated by the occupiers, under ſuch rules as 3-4ths of them in number and value, (with the conſent of the land and tithe owners, [the latter not to receive any fines, only rents, § 23,]) ſhall appoint by writing under their hands: the expence to be bor'n proportionably, § 1, 2, 4, 7.—Under the management of a field-maſter, or field-reeve, to be appointed annually in May, § 3, 5, 6.

Perſons having right of common, but not having land in ſuch fields, and perſons having ſheep-walks, may compound for ſuch right, by written agreement, or may, with their conſent, have parts allotted them to common upon, § 8, 9, 10, And the balks, ſlades and meres may be ploughed up, § 11—14.

Lords of manors with the conſent of 3-4ths of the commoners, on the waſtes and commons within their manors, may demiſe (for not more than four years) any part of ſuch waſtes, &c. not exceeding 1-12th part; and the clear rents reſerved for the ſame, ſhall be applied in improving the reſidue of ſuch waſtes, § 14.

In every manor where there are ſtinted commons, in lieu of demiſing part thereof, aſſeſſments on the lords of ſuch manors, and the owners and occupiers of ſuch commons may be made, and the money employed in the improvement of the commons, under the direction of the majority; which (or in ſome inſtances 2-3ds) may regulate the depaſturing, opening, ſhutting-up, breaking and unſtocking the commons, and the kind of cattle to be allowed the commoners, § 16—21.

All rights relative to commons, previous to this act, are ſaved: except as againſt perſons who become ſubject to regulations made under the Statute, § 27.

As to Common in general, See further Com. Dig. title Common.

COMMON OF ESTOVERS, or eſtouviers, that is neceſſaries, from eſtoffer to furniſh.] A liberty of taking neceſſary wood for the uſe or furniture of a houſe, or farm, from off another's eſtate. 2 Comm. 35. Or in the language of the law, for houſe-bote, plough-bote, and hay-bote. See title Bote. What botes are neceſſary, tenants may take, notwithſtanding no mention be made thereof in their leaſes; but if a tenant take more houſe-bote than is needful, he may be puniſhed for waſte. Terms de Ley. Tenant for life may take upon the land demiſed reaſonable eſtovers, unleſs reſtrained by ſpecial covenant: and every tenant for years hath three kinds of eſtovers incident to his eſtate. 1 Inſt. 41. When a houſe, having eſtovers appendant or appurtenant, is blown down by wind, if the owner rebuilds it in the ſame place and manner as before, his eſtovers ſhall continue: ſo if he alters the rooms and chambers, without making new chimnies; but if he erect any new chimnies, he will not be allowed to ſpend any eſtovers in ſuch new chimnies. 4 Rep. 87: 4 Leon.

383. If one have a dwelling-house whereunto common of estovers doth belong, and the house by fire is burnt down, and a new one built near to the place, or in the place in another form, the estovers are gone: but if the old house be only some of it down, it is otherwise; and in all cases where the alterations to a house do no prejudice to the tertenant or owner of the land or wood, the estovers will remain. F. N. B. 180. Where a man hath estovers for life, if the owner cut down all the wood, that there is none left for him, he may bring an assise of estovers; and if the tenant have but an estate for years, or at will, he may have an action on the case. Moor Ca. 65: 9 Rep. 112. If the tenant who hath common of estovers, shall use them to any other purpose than he ought, he that owns the wood may bring trespass against him: as where one grants twenty loads of wood to be taken yearly in such a wood, ten loads to burn, and ten to repair pales; here he may cut and take the wood for the pales, though they need no amending, but then he must keep it for that use. 9 Rep. 113: F. N. B. 58, 159.

COMMON OF PISCARY, Is a liberty of fishing in another man's water. Common of piscary to exclude the owner of the soil, is contrary to law: though a person by prescription may have a separate right of fishing in such water, and the owner of the soil be excluded; for a man may grant the water, without passing the soil: and if one grant separaliam piscariam, neither the soil nor the water pass, but only a right of fishing. 1 Inst. 4, 122, 164: 5 Rep. 34. See Fish and Fishery.

COMMON OF TURBARY, Is a licence to dig turf upon the ground of another, or in the lord's waste. This common is appendant or appurtenant to an house, and not to lands; for turfs are to be burnt in the house: and it may be in gross; but it does not give any right to the land, trees, or mines. It cannot exclude the owner of the soil. 1 Inst. 4, 122: 4 Rep. 37.

There is also a Common of digging for coals, minerals, stones and the like. All these bear a resemblance to common of pasture in many respects; though in one point they go much farther; common of pasture being only a right of feeding on the herbage or vesture of the soil which renews annually; but common of turbary and those just mentioned, are a right of carrying away the very soil itself.—These several species of common do however all originally result from the same necessity as common of pasture: viz. for the maintenance and carrying on of husbandry: common of piscary being given for the sustenance of the tenant's family; common of turbary and fire-bote for his fuel: and house-bote, plough-bote, cart-bote and hedge-bote for repairing his house, his instruments of tillage, and the necessary fences of his grounds. 2 Comm. 34, 5.

COMMON BENCH, Bancus communis, from the Sax. banc, bank, and thence metaphorically a bench, high seat or tribunal.] The court of Common Pleas was anciently called Common Bench, because the pleas of controversies between common persons were there tried and determined. Camd. Britan. 113. In law books and references the court of Common Pleas is written C. B. from communi Banco, (or C. P.) And the justices of that court are stiled Justiciarii de Banco. See title Common Pleas.

COMMON DAY OF PLEA IN LAND, Signifies an ordinary day in court, as Octabis Hilarii, Quindena Paschæ, &c. It is mentioned in the Stat. 51 H. 3. Stat. 2. and Stat. 3. Concerning general days in bank, see title Days in Bank.

COMMON FIELD LAND, See title Common.

COMMON FINE, finis communis.] A small sum of money, which the resiants within the liberty of some leets pay to the lords, called in divers places head silver or head pence, in others cert money; and was first granted to the lord, towards the charge of his purchase of the court-leet, whereby the resiants have the ease to do their suit within their own manors, and are not compellable to go to the sheriff's turn: in the manor of Sheepshead in the county of Leicester, every resiant pays 1*d.* per poll to the lord at the court held after Michaelmas, which is there called common fine. For this common fine the lord may distrain: but he cannot do it without a prescription. 11 Rep. 44. There is also common fine of the county. See Fleta, lib. 7. c. 48. and Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 18.

COMMONS HOUSE OF PARLIAMENT, Is the lower House of Parliament, so called, because the Commons of the realm, that is the knights, citizens, and burgesses returned to parliament, representing the whole body of the Commons do sit there. Cromp. Jurisd. See title Parliament.

COMMON INTENDMENT. Is common meaning or understanding, according to the subject matter, not strained to any extraordinary or foreign sense: bar to common intendment is an ordinary or general bar, which is commonly an answer to the plaintiff's declaration. There are several cases in the law where common intendment, and intendment take place: and of common intendment a will shall not be supposed to be made by collusion. Co. Lit. 78; See Co. Lit. 303, a, b, &c.

COMMON LAW, Lex Communis.] Is taken for the law of this kingdom simply, without any other laws; as it was generally holden before any statute was enacted in parliament to alter the same: and the King's courts of justice are called the Common Law Courts. The Common Law is grounded upon the general customs of the realm; and includes in it the law of nature, the law of God, and the principles and maxims of the law: it is founded upon reason; and is said to be the perfection of reason, acquired by long study, observation and experience, and refined by learned men in all ages. And it is the common birth-right, that the subject hath for the safe-guard and defence, not only of his goods, lands, and revenues; but of his wife and children, body, fame, and life also. Co. Lit. 97, 142: Treatise of Laws, p. 2.

According to Hale, the Common law of England, is the common rule for administering justice, within this kingdom, and asserts the King's royal prerogatives, and likewise the rights and liberties of the subject: it is generally that law, by which the determinations in the King's ordinary courts are guided; and this directs the course of descents of lands; the nature, extent and qualification of estates; and therein the manner and ceremonies of conveying them from one to another; with the forms, solemnities and obligation of contracts; the rules and directions for the exposition of deeds, and acts of parliament: the process, proceedings, judgments and executions of our courts of justice; also the limits and bounds of courts, and jurisdictions; the several kinds of temporal offences and punishments, and their application, &c. Hale's Hist. of the Common Law, pag. 24, 44, 45.

As

As to the riſe of the Common law, this account is given by ſome ancient writers: After the decay of the Roman empire, three ſorts of the German people invaded the Britons, viz. the Saxons, the Angles, and the Jutes; from the laſt ſprung the Kentiſh men, and the inhabitants of the Iſle of Wight; from the Saxons came the people called Eaſt, South, and Weſt Saxons; and from the Angles, the Eaſt Angles, Mercians and Northumbrians. Theſe people having different cuſtoms, they inclined to the different laws by which their anceſtors were governed; but the cuſtoms of the Weſt Saxons and Mercians, who dwelt in the midland counties, being preferred before the reſt, were for that reaſon called jus Anglorum; and by theſe laws thoſe people were governed for many ages: but the Eaſt Saxons having afterwards been ſubdued by the Danes, their cuſtoms were introduced, and a third law was ſubſtituted, which was called Dane lage; as the other was then ſtiled Weſt-Saxon-lage, &c. At length the Danes being overcome by the Normans, William called the Conqueror, upon conſideration of all thoſe laws and cuſtoms, abrogated ſome, and eſtabliſhed others; to which he added ſome of his own country laws, which he judged moſt to conduce to the preſervation of the peace: and this is what we now call the Common law.

But though we uſually date our Common law from hence, this was not the original of the Common law; for Ethelbert, the Firſt Chriſtian King of this nation, made the firſt Saxon laws, which were publiſhed by the advice of ſome wiſe men of his council: and King Alfred who lived 300 years afterwards, collected all the Saxon laws into one book, and commanded them to be obſerved through the whole kingdom, which before only affected certain parts thereof; and it was therefore properly called the Common law, becauſe it was common to the whole nation: and ſoon after it was called, the folc-right, i. e. the people's right.

Alfred was ſtiled Anglicarum legum conditor: and when the Danes, on the conqueſt of the kingdom, had introduced their laws, they were afterwards deſtroyed; and Edward the Confeſſor out of the former laws compoſed a body of the Common law; wherefore he is called by our hiſtorians Anglicarum legum reſtitutor. Blount. In the reign of Edw. I. Britton wrote his learned book of the Common law of this realm; which was done by the King's command, and runs in his name, anſwerable to the Inſtitutions of the Civil law, which Juſtinian aſſumes to himſelf, though compoſed by others. Staundf. Prerog. 6, 21. But Juſtinian ought to be entitled to the honour, as the Inſtitutes were compoſed by his direction. This Britton is mentioned by Gwin to have been biſhop of Hereford.

Bracton, a great lawyer, in the time of Hen. 3. wrote a very learned treatiſe of the Common law of England, held in great eſtimation; and he was ſaid to be Lord Chief Juſtice of the kingdom. Alſo the famous and learned Glanvil, Lord Chief Juſtice in the reign of Hen. 2. wrote a book of the Common law, which is ſaid to be the moſt ancient compoſition extant on that ſubject. Beſides theſe, in the time of Ed. 4. the renowned lawyer Littleton wrote his excellent book of Engliſh Tenures. In the reign of King James the Firſt, the great oracle of the law, Sir Edward Coke, publiſhed his learned and laborious Inſtitutes of our law, and commentary on Littleton. About the ſame time likewiſe Dr. Cowel, a civilian, wrote a ſhort Inſtitute of our laws. In the reign of King George the Firſt, Dr. Tho. Wood, a civilian and common lawyer, and at laſt a divine, wrote an Inſtitute of the laws of England, which is ſomething after the manner of the Inſtitutes of the Civil law.

To conclude the whole of this head, the late learned Judge Blackſtone, in the reign of George the Third, publiſhed his Commentaries on the Laws of England, the beſt analytic and moſt methodic ſyſtem of our laws which ever was publiſhed. It is equally adapted for the uſe of ſtudents, and of thoſe gentlemen who chooſe to acquire that knowledge of our laws, which is, in fact, eſſentially neceſſary for every one. See particularly thoſe Commentaries, vol. 1. p. 637. and vol. 4. p. 411. on this ſubject.

COMMON PLEAS, communia placita.] Is one of the King's Courts now conſtantly held in Weſtminſter Hall; but in ancient time was moveable, as appears by Magna Charta, cap. 11. Before this charter, of King John & Hen. III, there were but two courts, called the King's courts, viz. the King's Bench and the Exchequer, which were then ſtiled Curia Domini Regis, and Aula Regis, becauſe they followed the court of the King; and upon the grant of the great charter, the court of Common Pleas was erected and ſettled in one certain place, i. e. Weſtminſter-hall; and after that, all the writs ran Quod ſit coram juſticiariis meis apud Weſtm. whereas before, the party was required by them to appear Coram me vel juſticiariis meis, without any addition of place, &c. But Sir Edward Coke is of opinion in his preface to the eighth report, and 1 Inſt. 71 b, that the court of Common Pleas exiſted as a diſtinct court before the Conqueſt; and was not created by Magna Charta, at which time there were Juſticiarii de Banco, &c. Though before this act, Common Pleas might have been held in Banco Regis; and all original writs were returnable there.

According to Madox the origin of the court of Common Pleas is of a much later date than that aſſigned by Lord Coke. He ſo far agrees with Lord Coke as to admit that the Magna Charta of Hen. III, rather confirmed than erected the Bank or Common Pleas; and that ſuch a court was in being ſeveral years before the Magna Charta of 17 of King John, though it was then firſt made ſtationary: But in other reſpects Lord Coke and Mr. Madox differ widely; for the latter thinks that ſome time after the Conqueſt there was one great and ſupreme judicature, called the Curia Regis, which he ſuppoſes to have been of Norman, and not Anglo-Saxon original, and to have exerciſed juriſdiction over common as well as other pleas: that the Common Pleas and Exchequer were gradually ſeparated from the Curia Regis, and became juriſdictions wholly diſtinct from it; and that the ſeparation of the Common Pleas began in the reign of Richard I, or early in the reign of King John, and was compleated by Hen. III. See Mad. Hiſt. Exc. 63, 539. fo. ed.: 3 Comm. 37: 4 Inſt. 99: 1 Inſt. 71 b; and the note there.

Writs returnable in this court, are now coram juſticiariis noſtris apud Weſtm. But original writs, &c. returnable in B. R. are, Coram nobis ubicunque fuerimus in Anglia. The juriſdiction of the court of C. P. is general, and extends itſelf throughout England: it holds plea of all civil cauſes at Common law, between ſubject and ſubject, in actions real, perſonal and mixed; and it ſeems to have been the only court for real cauſes. In perſonal and mixed actions it hath a concurrent juriſdiction with the the King's Bench: but it hath no cognisance of pleas of the crown; and Common Pleas are all pleas that are not such.

The court of Common Pleas does not possess any original jurisdiction; nor has it, like the court of King's Bench, any mode of proceeding in common cases peculiar to itself. It's authority is founded on original writs issuing out of the court of Chancery; which original writs are the King's mandates for the court to proceed in the determination of the causes mentioned therein. The reason of original writs issuing out of Chancery is, because when the courts were united, which was formerly the case, the Chancellor held the seal: therefore, when they were divided, he still keeping the seal, sealed all original writs. Gilb. H. C. P. 3 —In all personal actions therefore brought by and against common persons, the only way of proceeding in this court is by original.

There is indeed one other way of proceeding in this court, in common cases, which is sometimes used; and which is called proceeding by original quare clausum fregit. This method of proceeding is grounded, in point of law, upon the same kind of original writ as the usual proceeding by capias is, the only difference between them being in the mesne process after the original is sued out; or at least supposed so to be.—Instead of the process to compel the appearance of the defendant being by capias against his person, it is in this case by summons and distress against his goods. In a word, it is the same as the ancient mode of proceeding in this court was before the general introduction of the capias. (See this Dict. title Capias)—The advantage and use of this mode of proceeding by original q. c. f. is where a defendant has effects which can be distrained, but he himself cannot be met with to be personally served; the process by capias requiring personal service, which is not required in the process by summons.

All actions belonging to this court, come hither either by original, as arrests and outlawries; or by privilege or attachment, for or against privileged persons; or out of inferior courts, not of record, by pone, recordare, accedas ad curiam, writ of false judgment, &c. Actions popular, and actions penal, of debt, &c. upon any statute, are cognisable by this court: and besides having jurisdiction for punishment of its officers and ministers, the court of Common Pleas may grant prohibitions, to keep temporal and ecclesiastical courts within due bounds. 4 Inst. 99, 100, 118. In this Court are four Judges, created by letters patent; the seal of the court is committed to the custody of the Chief Justice.

The other officers of the Common Pleas are the Custos Brevium, three Prothonotaries and their Secondaries, the Clerk of the Warrants, Clerk of the Essoins, fourteen Filazers, four Exigenters, a Clerk of the Juries, the Chirographer, Clerk of the King's Silver, the clerk of the Treasury, Clerk of the Seal, of Outlawries, and the Clerk of the Inrollment of Fines and Recoveries, Clerk of the Errors, &c. The Custos Brevium is the chief clerk in this court, who receives and keeps all writs returnable therein; and all records of Nisi prius, which are delivered to him by the clerks of the assise of every circuit, &c. and he files the rolls together, and carries them into the treasury of records: he also makes out exemplifications, and copies of all writs and records, &c. The Prothonotaries enter and enrol all declarations, pleadings, judgments, &c. and they make out all judicial writs, writs of execution, writs of privilege, procedendo's, &c. The Secondaries are assistants to the Prothonotaries in the execution of their offices; and they take minutes, and draw up all orders and rules of court. The Filazers, who have the several counties of England divided among them, make out all mesne process, as capias, alias, pluries, &c. between the original writ and the declaration: and they make all writs of view, &c. The Exigenters, appointed for several counties, make out all exigents and proclamations in order to outlawry. The Clerk of the Warrants, enters all warrants of attorney; inrols deeds of bargain and sale, and estreats all issues. The Clerk of the Essoins, keeps the roll of the essoins, wherein he enters them, and non-suits, &c. The Clerk of the Juries, makes out all writs of habeas corpora jurator', for juries to appear; and he enters the continuances till the verdict given. The Clerk of the Treasury keeps the records of the court, and makes exemplifications of records, copies of issues, judgments, &c. The Clerk of the Seals, seals all writs and mesne process; also writs of outlawry and supersedeas, and all patents. The Clerk of the Outlawries, makes out the writs of capias utlagatum. The Clerk of the Errors is for the allowance of writs of error, &c. The Clerk of the Inrolments of fines and recoveries, returns all writs of covenant, writs of entry and seisin, and enrols and exemplifies fines, &c. The Clerk of the king's Silver enters the substance of the writ of covenant: and the Chirographer ingrosseth all fines, and delivers the indentures to the parties, &c.

To these officers may be added, a Proclamator; a Keeper of the court; Cryer; and Tipstaffs; besides the Warden of the Fleet. There are also Attornies of this court, whose number is unlimited; and none may plead at the bar of the court, in Term-time, or sign any special pleadings, but Serjeants at law.

COMMON PRAYER, Prees Publicæ.] The liturgy or prayers used in our church. It is the particular duty of Clergymen every Sunday, &c. to use the public form of prayer, prescribed by the Book of common prayer: and if any incumbent be resident upon his living, as he ought to be, and keep a curate, he is obliged by the act of uniformity, once every month at least, to read the common prayers of the church, according as they are directed by the book of common prayer, in his parish church, in his own person; or he shall forfeit 5 l. for every time he fails therein. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 4. Also by that statute the book of common prayer is to be provided in every parish, under the penalty of 3 l. a month: and the common prayer must be read before every lecture; the whole appointed for the day, with all the circumstances, and ceremonies, &c. Ministers, before all sermons, are to move the people to join in a short prayer for the catholick church; and the whole congregation of Christian people, &c. for the King and Royal Family; the ministers of God's word, nobility, magistrates, and whole commons of the realm, &c. and conclude with the Lord's Prayer, Can. 55. Refusing to use the Common Prayer, or using any other open prayers, &c. is punishable by Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2. See titles Church, Church-warden, Parson, Service, and Sacrament.

COMMON WEAL, Is understood in our law to be bonum publicum, and is a thing much favoured; and therefore the law doth tolerate many things to be done for common common good, which otherwiſe might not be done: and hence it is, that monopolies are void in law; and that bonds and covenants to reſtrain free trade, tillage, or the like, are adjudged void. 11 Co. Rep. 50: Plowd. 25: Shep. Epit. 270.

COMMORANCY, commorantia, from commoro.] An abiding, dwelling or continuing in any place; as an inhabitant of a houſe in a vill, &c. And commorancy for a certain time, may make a ſettlement in a pariſh. Dalt. See title Poor.—Commorancy conſiſts in uſually lying in a certain place. 4 Comm. 273.

COMMORTH, or COMORTH, comortha.] From the Brit. cymmorth, i. e. ſubſidium: a contribution which was gathered at marriages, and when young prieſts ſaid or ſung the firſt maſſes, &c. See Stat. 4 Hen. 4. c. 27. But Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 6, prohibits the levying any ſuch in Wales, or the Marches, &c. Cowel.

COMMOTE, In Wales, is half a cantred or hundred, containing fifty villages. Stat. Walliæ 12 Ed. 1. Wales was anciently divided into three provinces; and each of theſe were again ſubdivided into cantreds, and every cantred into commotes. Doderige's Hiſt. Wal. fol. 2.—Commote alſo ſignifies a great ſeigniory or lordſhip, and may include one, or divers manors. Co. Lit. 5.

COMMUNANCE. The commoners, or tenants and inhabitants, who had the right of common, or commoning in open field, &c. were formerly called the communance. Cowel.

COMMUNE CONCILIUM REGNI ANGLIÆ. The common council of the King and people aſſembled in parliament.

COMMUNIA PLACITA NON TENENDA IN SCACCARIO, An ancient writ directed to the Treaſurer and Barons of the Exchequer, forbidding them to hold plea between common perſons (i. e. not debtors, to the King, who alone originally ſued and were ſued there,) in that court, where neither of the parties belong to the ſame. Reg. Orig. 187. But little obedience would perhaps be now paid to ſuch a writ, was any officer to dare to iſſue it: for the court of Exchequer, ſeems by preſcription, to have attained a concurrent juriſdiction in civil ſuits, with the other courts in Weſtminſter-hall. See titles Courts, Exchequer.

COMMUNI CUSTODIA, A writ which anciently lay for the lord, whoſe tenant holding by knight's ſervice died, and left his eldeſt ſon under age, againſt a ſtranger that entered the land, and obtained the ward of the body. F. N. B. 89: Reg. Orig. 161. Since the ſtatute 12 Car. 2. c. 24, hath taken away wardſhips, this writ is become of no uſe.

COMMUNITY of the kingdom. Vide Commonalty.

COMPANAGE, Fr.] All kind of food, except bread and drink: and Spelman interprets it to be quicquid cibi cum pane ſumitur. In the manor of Feſkerton in the county of Nottingham, ſome tenants when they performed their boons or work-days to the lords, had three boon loaves with companage allowed them. Reg. de Thurgarton cited in Antiq. Nottingham.

COMPANION OF THE GARTER. Is one of the knights of that moſt noble order; at the head of which is the King, as Sovereign. See Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 13. and title Garter.

COMPASS. An inſtrument uſed in navigation, by the direction and aſſiſtance whereof veſſels are ſteered to the moſt diſtant parts of the world. It was invented ſoon after the cloſe of the holy war, and thereby navigation was rendered more ſecure as well as more adventrous, the communication between remote nations was facilitated, and they were brought nearer to each other. See Robertſ. Hiſt. Emp. C. V. 1 v. 78. See title Longitude.

COMPELLATIVUM, An adverſary or accuſer. Leg. Athelſtan.

COMPERTORIUM, A judicial inqueſt in the Civil law, made by delegates, or commiſſioners to find out and relate the truth of a cauſe. Paroch. Antiq. 575.

COMPOSITION, compoſitio.] An agreement or contract between a parſon, patron and Ordinary, &c. for money or other thing in lieu of tithes. Land may be exempted from the payment of tithes, where compoſitions have been made: and real compoſitions for tithes are to be made by the concurrent conſent of the parſon, patron and Ordinary. Real compoſitions are diſtinguiſhed from perſonal contracts; for a compoſition called a perſonal contract is only an agreement between the parſon and the pariſhioners, to pay ſo much inſtead of tithes; and though ſuch agreement is confirmed by the Ordinary, yet (if the parſon is not a party) that doth not make it a real compoſition, becauſe he ought to be a party to the deed of compoſition. March's Rep. 87. The compoſitions for tithes made by the conſent of the parſon, patron and Ordinary, by virtue of St. 13 Eliz. c. 10, ſhall not bind the ſucceſſor, unleſs made for twenty-one years or three lives, as in caſe of leaſes of eccleſiaſtical corporations, &c. Compoſitions were at firſt for a valuable conſideration, ſo that though, in proceſs of time, upon the increaſe of the value of the lands ſuch compoſitions do not amount to the value of the tithes, yet cuſtom prevails, and from hence ariſes what we call a modus decimandi. Hob. 29. See further title Tithes.

The word compoſition hath likewiſe another meaning, i. e. deciſio litis. Compoſitions were in ancient times allowed for crimes and offences, even for murder.—An expedient employed by the civil magiſtrate, in order to ſet ſome bounds to the violence of private revenge. This cuſtom may be traced back to the antient Germans. Tacit. de Morib. Ger. c. 21: Lord Kaim's Hiſt. Law Tr. 1 p. 41, 42, &c.

COMPOSITIO MENSURARUM, Is the title of an antient ordinance for meaſures, not printed.

COMPOSTUM. Dung, ſoil or compoſt laid on lands. Regiſter. Eccl. Cantuar. MS.

COMPOUNDING FELONY, or theft-bote. Is where the party robbed not only knows the felon, but alſo takes his goods again, or other amends upon agreement not to proſecute. It was formerly held to make a man an acceſſary; but is now puniſhed only with fine and impriſonment. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 59. § 6.—To take any reward for helping a perſon to ſtolen goods, is made felony by Stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 11.—And to advertiſe a reward for the return of things ſtolen, incurs a forfeiture of 50 l. by Stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 36. See titles Advertiſement; and alſo Felony; Miſpriſion.

COMPRINT, A ſurreptitious printing of another bookſeller's copy, to make gain thereby, which was contrary to Common law, and is now reſtrained by ſtatute. See title Literary Property.

COMPROMISE, compromiſſum.] A mutual promiſe of two or more parties at difference, to refer the ending of their controverſy to arbitrators: and Weſt ſays it is the faculty or power of pronouncing ſentence between perſons at variance, given to arbitrators by the parties' private conſent. Weſt. Symb. ſect. 1. Matters compromiſed, are alſo matters of law referred, or made an end of.—See title Award.

COMPURGATOR, One that by oath juſtifies another's innocence. Compurgators were introduced as evidence in the juriſprudence of the middle ages.—Their number varied according to the importance of the ſubject in diſpute, or the nature of the crime with which a perſon was charged. Du Cange voc. Juramentum, vol. 3. p. 1599. See Oath, and 3 Comm. 342: 4 Comm. 361, 407. —See alſo title Clergy.

COMPUTATION, computatio.] The true account and conſtruction of time; and to the end neither party to an agreement, &c. may do wrong to the other, nor the determination of time be left at large, it is to be taken according to the juſt judgment of the law. A deed dated the 20th day of Auguſt, to hold from the day of the date, ſhall be conſtrued to begin on the 21ſt day of Auguſt: but if in the habendum it be to hold from the making, or from thenceforth, it ſhall begin on the day delivered. 1 Inſt. 46: 5 Rep. 1. If an indenture of leaſe dated the 4th day of July, made for three years from thenceforth, be delivered at four of the clock in the afternoon of the ſaid 4th day of July, the leaſe ſhall end the 3d day of July in the third year: and the law in this computation rejects all fractions or diviſions of the day. See Day, Month, Year, Time, Age, &c. &c.

Computation of miles after the Engliſh manner, is allowing 5280 feet, or 1760 yards to each mile; and the ſame ſhall be reckoned not by ſtrait lines, as a bird or arrow may fly, but according to the neareſt and moſt uſual way. Cro. Eliz. 212. See Mile.

COMPUTO, Lat.] A writ to compel a bailiff, receiver or accountant, to yield up his accounts: it is founded on the ſtatute of Weſtm. 2. cap. 12. And alſo lies againſt guardians, &c. Reg. Orig. 135.

CONCEALERS, concelatores, ſo called à concelando, as mons à movendo, by an antiphraſis.] Such as were uſed to find out concealed lands, i. e. ſuch lands as are privily kept from the King by common perſons, having nothing to ſhew for their title or eſtate therein. See Stat. 39 Eliz. cap. 22. There are alſo concealers of crimes; and as to concealing treaſon, &c. ſee title Miſpriſion.

CONCESSI, I have granted; A word of frequent uſe in conveyances, creating a covenant in law; as dedi (I have given,) makes a warranty. Co. Lit. 384. This word is of a general extent, and ſaid to amount to a grant, feoffment, leaſe and releaſe, &c. 2 Saund. 96.

CONCIONATORES, Common-council-men, freemen, called to the hall or aſſembly, as moſt worthy.—Quodam tempore cum convenijſſent concionatores apud London, &c. Hiſtor. Elien. edit. Gale, c. 46.

CONCLUSION, concluſio.] Is when a man by his own act upon record hath charged himſelf with a duty or other thing, or confeſſed any matter whereby he ſhall be concluded: as if a ſheriff returns that he hath taken the body upon capias, and hath not the body in court at the day of the return of the writ; by this return, the ſheriff is concluded from plea of eſcape, &c. Terms de Ley. In another ſenſe, this word concluſion ſignifies the end of any plea, replication, &c. and a plea to the writ is to conclude to the writ; a plea in bar, to conclude to the action, &c, See title Pleading—And as to the concluſion of Deeds, ſee title Deeds.

CONCORD, concordia.] Is an agreement made between two or more, upon a treſpaſs committed; and is divided into Concord executory and Concord executed. Plowd. 5, 6, 8. Theſe concords and agreements are by way of ſatisfaction for the treſpaſs, &c. See titles Accord, Satisfaction.

Concord is alſo an agreement between parties, who intend the levying of a fine of lands one to the other, how and in what manner the lands ſhall paſs: it is the foundation and ſubſtance of the fine, taken and acknowledged by the party before one of the judges of C. B. or by commiſſioners in the country. See title Fine.

CONCUBARIA, A fold, pen, or place where cattle lie. Cowel.

CONCUBEANT, Lying together. Stat. 1 H. 7. cap. 6.

CONCUBINAGE, concubinatus.] In common acceptation the keeping of a harlot or concubine: but in a legal ſenſe, it is uſed as an exception againſt her that ſueth for dower, alleging thereby that ſhe was not a wife lawfully married to the party, in whoſe land ſhe ſeeks to be endowed, but his concubine. Brit. c. 107: Bract. lib. 4. tract. 6. cap. 8. There was a concubinage allowed in Scripture to the Patriarchs, ſecundum legem matrimonii, &c. Blount.

CONDERS, from the Fr. conduire, to conduct.] Such as ſtand upon high places near the ſea-coaſt, at the time of herring-fiſhing, to make ſigns with boughs, &c. to the fiſhermen at ſea, which way the ſhoals of herrings paſs; for this may be better diſcovered by ſuch as ſtand upon ſome high cliff on the ſhore, by reaſon of a kind of blue colour which the herrings cauſe in the water, than by thoſe that are in the ſhips or boats for fiſhing. Theſe are otherwiſe called huers and balkers, directors and guiders. See Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 23.

CONDITION.

Conditio.] A reſtraint annexed to a thing, ſo that by the non-performance, the party to it ſhall receive prejudice and loſs; and by the performance, commodity and advantage. Or it is a reſtriction of men's acts, qualifying or ſuſpending the ſame, and making them uncertain whether they ſhall take effect or not. Alſo it is defined to be what is referred to an uncertain chance, which may happen or not happen. Weſt's Symb. part. 1. lib. 2. ſect. 156.

A Condition is alſo defined to be a kind of law or bridle, annexed to one's act, ſtaying or ſuſpending the ſame, and making it uncertain whether it ſhall take effect or no: or it is a modus, a quality, annexed by him that hath eſtate, intereſt or right to the land, &c. whereby an eſtate, &c. may either be created, defeated, or enlarged, upon an uncertain event. This differs from a limitation, which is the bounds or compaſs of an eſtate, or the time how long an eſtate ſhall continue. Shep. Touchſt. 117. See title Limitation.

A condition may be alſo conſidered as one of the terms upon which a grant may be made; in this ſenſe a condition in a deed is a clauſe of contingency on the happening of which the eſtate granted may be defeated. 2 Comm. 299.

Of

Of Conditions there are divers kinds, viz. conditions in deed, or expreſs; and in law, or implied; conditions precedent, and ſubſequent; conditions inherent, and collateral, &c.

A Condition in a deed or expreſs, is that which is joined by expreſs words to a feoffment, leaſe, or other grant; as if a man makes a leaſe of lands to another, reſerving a rent to be paid at ſuch a feaſt, upon condition if the leſſee fail in payment, at the day, then it ſhall be lawful for the leſſor to enter. Condition in law or implied is when a perſon grants another an office, as that of keeper of a park, ſteward, bailiff, &c. for term of life; here, though there be no condition expreſſed in the grant, yet the law makes one; which is, if the grantee do not juſtly execute all things belonging to the office, it ſhall be lawful for the grantor to enter and diſcharge him of his office, Lit. lib. 3. c. 5.

Condition Precedent is when a leaſe or eſtate is granted to one for life, upon condition that if the leſſee pay to the leſſor a certain ſum at ſuch a day, then he ſhall have fee ſimple; in this caſe the condition precedes the eſtate in fee, and on performance thereof gains the fee-ſimple. Condition ſubſequent is when a man grants to another his manor of Dale, &c. in fee, upon condition that the grantee ſhall pay to him at ſuch a day ſuch a certain ſum, or that his eſtate ſhall ceaſe: here the condition is ſubſequent, and following the eſtate, and upon the performance thereof continues and preſerves the ſame: ſo that a condition precedent doth get and gain the thing or eſtate made upon condition by the performance of it; as a condition ſubſequent keeps and continues the eſtate by the performance of the condition. 1 Inſt. 201, 327: Terms de Ley. If one agree with another to do ſuch an act, and for the doing thereof the other ſhall pay ſo much money; here the doing the act is a condition precedent to the payment of the money, and the party ſhall not be compelled to pay till the act is done: but where a day is appointed for the payment of money, which day happens before the thing contracted for can be performed, there the money may be recovered before the thing is done; for here it appears that the party did not intend to make the performance of the thing a condition precedent. 3 Salk. 95. See poſt, I, IV.

Inherent Conditions are ſuch as deſcend to the heir with the land granted, &c.

A Collateral Condition is that which is annexed to any collateral act.

Conditions are likewiſe affirmative, which conſiſt of doing; negative, and conſiſt of not doing: ſome are further ſaid to be reſtrictive, for not doing a thing: and ſome compulſory, as that the leſſee ſhall pay the rent, &c.

Alſo ſome conditions are ſingle, to do one thing only; ſome copulative, to do divers things; and others diſjunctive, where one thing of ſeveral is required to be done. Co. Lit. 201.—See further Shep. Touch. 117, &c.

As to certain eſtates on condition expreſſed or implied, See more particularly titles Mortgage, Statute-Merchant, Elegit.

Among theſe ſeveral kinds of conditions, the caſes which moſt frequently occur fall under the diſtinctions of conditions precedent and ſubſequent. We ſhall therefore ſpeak of them more at large under the following diviſions; wherein ſhall be conſidered; in the firſt place, generally,

I. 1. Of Eſtates on Conditions implied; and 2. On Condition expreſſed.—Then more particularly,

II. To what Conditions may be annexed: what Conditions are good: and by what Words they may be created.

III. What ſhall be a good Performance of a Condition; and in what Manner the Breach of it muſt be taken Advantage of.

IV. Of Conditions precedent and ſubſequent.

I. 1. Eſtates upon condition implied in law, are where a grant of an eſtate has a condition annexed to it inſeparably, from it's eſſence and conſtitution; although no condition be expreſſed in words. As if a grant be made to a man of an office, generally, without adding other words; the law tacitly annexes hereto a ſecret condition, that the grantee ſhall duly execute his office; (Lit. § 378;) on breach of which condition it is lawful for the grantor, or his heirs, to ouſt him, and grant to another perſon. Lit. § 379. For, an office, either public or private, may be forfeited by mis-uſer or non-uſer, both of which are breaches of this implied condition.—By mis-uſe or abuſe: as if a judge takes a bribe, or a park-keeper kills deer without authority. By non-uſer, or neglect; which in public offices, that concern the adminiſtration of juſtice, or the Common-wealth, is of itſelf a direct and immediate cauſe of forfeiture; but non-uſer of a private office is no cauſe of forfeiture, unleſs ſome ſpecial damage is proved to be occaſioned thereby. Co. Lit. 233. For in the one caſe delay muſt neceſſarily be occaſioned in the affairs of the public, which require a conſtant attention: but, private offices not requiring ſo regular and unremitted a ſervice, the temporary neglect of them is not neceſſarily productive of miſchief, upon which account ſome ſpecial loſs muſt be proved, in order to vacate theſe. Franchiſes alſo, being regal privileges in the hands of a ſubject, are held to be granted on the ſame condition of making a proper uſe of them, and therefore they may be loſt and forfeited, like offices, either by abuſe or by neglect. 9 Rep. 50.

Upon the ſame principle proceed all the forfeitures which are given by law of life-eſtates and others; for any acts done by the tenant himſelf, that are incompatible with the eſtate which he holds. As if tenant for life or years enfeoff a ſtranger in fee-ſimple: this, is, by the Common law, a forfeiture of their ſeveral eſtates; being a breach of the condition which the law annexes thereto, viz. that they ſhall not attempt to create a greater eſtate than they themſelves are entitled to. Co. Lit. 215. So if any tenants for years, for life, or in fee, commit a felony; the King or other lord of the fee is entitled to have their tenements, becauſe their eſtate is determined by the breach of the condition, "that they ſhall not commit felony" which the law tacitly annexes to every feodal donation.

2. An eſtate on condition expreſſed in the grant itſelf, is, where an eſtate is granted either in fee-ſimple or otherwiſe, with an expreſs qualification annexed, whereby the eſtate granted ſhall either commence, be enlarged or be defeated, upon performance or breach of ſuch qualification or condition. Co. Lit. 201.

Theſe conditions are therefore either precedent or ſubſequent. Precedent are ſuch as muſt happen or be performed before the eſtate can veſt or be enlarged; ſubſequent are ſuch, by the failure or non-performance of which an eſtate already veſted, may be defeated. Thus, if an eſtate for life be limited to A. upon his marriage with B. the marriage is a precedent condition, and till that happens no eſtate is veſted in A. Show. P. C. 83. &c.—Or if a man grant to his leſſee for years, that upon payment of an hundred marks within the term he ſhall have the fee, this alſo is a condition precedent, and the fee ſimple paſſeth not till the hundred marks be paid, Co. Litt. 217.—But if a man grant an eſtate in fee-ſimple, reſerving to himſelf and his heirs a certain rent, and that, if ſuch rent be not paid at the times limited, it ſhall be lawful for him or his heirs to re-enter, and avoid the eſtate: in this caſe the grantee and his heirs have an eſtate upon condition ſubſequent, which is defeaſible, if the condition be not ſtrictly performed Litt. § 325. See poſt. IV.

To this claſs may alſo be referred all baſe fees and fee ſimples conditional at the common law. Thus an eſtate to a man and his heirs, tenants of the manor of Dale, is an eſtate on condition that he and his heirs continue tenants of that manor. And ſo, if a perſonal annuity be granted at this day to a man and the heirs of his body; as this is no tenement within the ſtatute of Weſt. 2. it remains as at common law, a fee-ſimple on condition that the grantee has heirs of his body. Upon the ſame principle depend all determinable eſtates of freehold, as durante viduitate, &c. Theſe are eſtates upon condition that the grantee do not marry and the like. And, on the breach of any of theſe ſubſequent conditions by the failure of the contingencies, by the grantee not continuing tenant of the manor of Dale, by not having heirs of his body: or by not continuing ſole, the eſtates which were reſpectively veſted in each grantee are wholly determined and void.

A diſtinction is however made between a condition in deed and a limitation, which Littleton § 380, 1 Inſt. 234, denominates alſo a condition in law. For when an eſtate is ſo expreſsly confined and limited by the words of it's creation, that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the eſtate is to fail, this is denominated a limitation: as when land is granted to a man ſo long as he is parſon of Dale, or while he continues unmarried, or until out of the rents and profits he have made 500 l. and the like; in ſuch caſe the eſtate determines as ſoon as the contingency happens; (when he ceaſes to be parſon, marries a wife, or has received the 500 l.;) and the next ſubſequent eſtate, which depends upon ſuch determination, becomes immediately veſted, without any act to be done by him who is next in expectancy. See 10 Rep. 41.—But when an eſtate is, ſtrictly ſpeaking, upon condition in deed (as if granted expreſsly upon condition to be void upon the payment of 40 l. by the grantor, or ſo that the grantee continues unmarried, or provided he goes to York, &c.) the law permits it to endure beyond the time when ſuch contingency happens, unleſs the grantor, or his heirs or aſſigns take advantage of the breach of the condition, and make either an entry or a claim, in order to avoid the eſtate. Litt. § 347: Stat. 3 Hen. VIII. c. 34: See 10 Rep. 42. Yet, though ſtrict words of condition be uſed in the creation of the eſtate, if on breach of the condition the eſtate be limited over to a third perſon, and does not immediately revert to the grantor or his repreſentatives; (as if an eſtate be granted by A. to B. on condition that within two years B. intermarry with C. and on failure thereof, then to D. and his heirs;) this the law conſtrues to be a limitation and not a condition: 1 Vent. 202; becauſe if it were a condition, then, upon the breach thereof, only A. or his repreſentatives could avoid the eſtate by entry, and ſo D's remainder might be defeated by their neglecting to enter; but, when it is a limitation, the eſtate of B. determines, and that of D. commences, and he may enter on the lands, the inſtant that the failure happens. So alſo, if a man by his will deviſes lands to his heir at law, on condition that he pays a ſum of money, and for non-payment, deviſes it over, this ſhall be conſidered as a limitation; otherwiſe no advantage could be taken of the non-payment, for none but the heir himſelf could have entered for a breach of condition. Cro. Eliz. 205: 1 Rol. Abr. 411.

In all theſe inſtances, of limitations or conditions ſubſequent, it is to be obſerved, that ſo long as the condition either expreſs or implied, either in deed or in law, remains unbroken, the grantee may have an eſtate of freehold; provided the eſtate upon which ſuch condition is annexed be in itſelf of a freehold nature; as if the original grant expreſs either an eſtate of inheritance, or for life, or no eſtate at all, which is conſtructively an eſtate for life. For the breach of theſe conditions being contingent and uncertain, this uncertainty preſerves the freehold. Co. Lit. 42; becauſe the eſtate is capable to laſt for ever, or at leaſt for the life of the tenant, ſuppoſing the condition to remain unbroken. But where the eſtate is at the utmoſt, a chattel-intereſt, which muſt determine at a time certain, and may determine ſooner (as a grant for ninety-nine years, provided A. B. and C. or the ſurvivor of them, ſhall ſo long live) this ſtill continues a mere chattel and is not, by ſuch its uncertainty, ranked among eſtates of freehold.

Theſe expreſs conditions, if they be impoſſible at the time of their creation, or afterwards become impoſſible by the act of God or the act of the feoffor himſelf, or if they be contrary to law, or repugnant to the nature of the eſtate, are void. In any of which caſes, if they be conditions ſubſequent, that is, to be performed after the eſtate is veſted, the eſtate ſhall become abſolute in the tenant. As if a feoffment be made to a man in fee-ſimple, on condition, that unleſs he goes to Rome in twenty-four hours; or unleſs he marries with A. B. by ſuch a day; (within which time the woman dies, or the feoffor marries her himſelf) or unleſs he kills another; or in caſe he aliens in fee; that then and in any of ſuch caſes the eſtate ſhall be vacated and determine: here the condition is void, and the eſtate made abſolute in the feoffee. For he hath by the grant the eſtate veſted in him, which ſhall not be defeated afterwards, by a condition either impoſſible, illegal, or repugnant. Co. Lit. 206. But if the condition be precedent, or to be performed before the eſtate veſts, as a grant to a man that, if he kills another or goes to Rome in a day, he ſhall have an eſtate in fee; here, the void condition being precedent, the eſtate which depends thereon is alſo void, and the grantee ſhall take nothing by the grant: for he hath no eſtate until the condition be performed. Ibid: 2 Comm. 152—7.

II. Conditions may be annexed to any eſtate, whether in fee-ſimple, fee-tail, for life or years: they run with the eſtate, and bind in the hands of whomſoever they come. Lit. Rep. 128. But a condition may not be made but but on the part of the leſſor, donor, &c. for no man may annex a condition to an eſtate, but he that doth create the eſtate itſelf. Conditions are good to enlarge or limit eſtates: There are four incidents, which conditions to create and increaſe an eſtate ought to have. 1. They ſhould have a particular eſtate, as a foundation whereupon the increaſe of the greater eſtate ſhall be built. 2. Such particular eſtate ſhall continue in the leſſee or grantee, until the increaſe happens. 3. It muſt veſt at the time the contingency happens, or it ſhall never veſt. 4. The particular eſtate and increaſe muſt take effect by the ſame deed, or by ſeveral deeds delivered at the ſame time. 8 Rep. 75.

Conditions to create eſtates ſhall be favourably conſtrued: but conditions which tend to deſtroy, or reſtrain an eſtate, are to be taken ſtrictly. A feoffment upon condition, that the feoffee ſhall not alien, is void: but a condition in a feoffment not to alien for a particular time, or to a particular perſon, may be good. Hob. 13. 261. And if a condition is, that tenant in tail ſhall not alien in fee, &c. or tenant for life or years not alien during the term, theſe conditions are good: where the reverſion of an eſtate is in the donor, he may reſtrain an alienation by condition. 10 Rep. 39: 1 Inſt. 222. If one make a gift in tail, on condition that the donee or his heirs ſhall not aliene, this is good to ſome intents, and void to others: for if he make a feoffment in fee, or any other eſtate by which the reverſion is diſcontinued tortiouſly, the donor may enter; but it is otherwiſe if he ſuffer a common recovery. 1 Inſt. 223.

A liberty inſeparable from an eſtate cannot be reſtrained; and therefore a condition that a tenant in tail ſhall not levy a fine, within the Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 24, or ſuffer a recovery; or not make a leaſe within the Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 36, is void and repugnant. But if the condition reſtrain levying a fine at common law, it may be good. 2 Danv. Abr. 22. A gift in tail, or in fee, upon condition that a feme ſhall not be endowed; or baron be tenant by the curteſy, is repugnant and void. So is a condition in a leaſe, &c. that the leſſee ſhall not take the profits: and where a man grants a rent-charge out of land, provided it ſhall not charge the lands. Co. Litt. 146.

Conditions repugnant to the eſtate, impoſſible, &c. are void: and if they go before the eſtate, the eſtate and condition are void; if to follow it, the eſtate is abſolute, and the condition void. 1 Inſt. 206: 9 Rep. 128. But if at the time of entring into a condition, a thing be poſſible to be done and become afterwards impoſſible by the act of God, the eſtate of a feoffee (created by livery) ſhall not be avoided. 2 Mod. 204: See ante I. 2.

Where a condition is of two parts, one poſſible, and the other not ſo, it is a good condition for performing that part which is poſſible. Cro. Eliz. 780. Though if a condition is of two parts diſjunctive, and one part becomes impoſſible, by the act of God, the perſon bound is not obliged to perform the other. 1 Rol. Abr. 446. l. 45: 2 Mod. 202, 203. If a condition be in the copulative, and is not poſſible to be performed, it is ſaid it may be taken in the diſjunctive. 1 Danv. Abr. 73.

Where an eſtate is to be wholly created upon a condition impoſſible to be performed, there the eſtate ſhall never come in eſſe. 1 Leon. c. 311. A woman makes a feoffment to a man that is married, upon condition that he ſhall marry her; this condition is not impoſſible, for the man's wife may die, and then he may marry her. 2 Danv. 25. A reverſion may be granted in tail upon condition, that if the grantee pays ſo much, he ſhall have the fee. 8 Rep. 73. But if a man grants lands, &c. for years, upon condition that if the leſſee pay 20*s.* within one year, that he ſhall have it for life: and that if he after the year pay 20*s.* he ſhall have the fee; though both ſums are paid, he ſhall have but an eſtate for life: the eſtate for life, at the time of the grant, being only in contingency, and a poſſibility cannot increaſe upon a poſſibility, nor can the fee increaſe upon the eſtate for years. 8 Rep. 75.

If a leaſe be made to two, with condition to raiſe a fee, and one dies, the ſurvivor may perform the condition, and have the fee; but if they make partition, the condition is deſtroyed. 8 Rep. 75, 76. If a feoffee grant the reverſion of part of the land, on a leaſe for years, on which a rent upon condition is reſerved, all the condition is confounded and gone; though if the leſſee aſſign part, the condition remains, for he cannot diſcharge the eſtate of the condition. 2 Danv. Abr. 119. A man makes a feoffment upon condition, and after levies a fine to a ſtranger, the condition is gone. Ibid. 120. If a feoffee upon condition to infeoff another, infeoff a ſtranger; or if it be to re-infeoff the feoffor, and he grant the land to another perſon, upon condition to perform the condition, the condition is broken, becauſe the feoffee hath diſabled himſelf to do it: ſo where ſuch feoffee, upon condition to re-infeoff, &c. takes a wife, that the land is ſubject to the dower of the wife; and ſo if the land is recovered, and execution ſued out by another, the condition is broken. Co. Lit. 221: 1 Danv. 79.

If one diſſeiſe the feoffee, or any other who hath land by juſt title, and thereof infeoff a ſtranger on condition, and the land is lawfully recovered from him that hath the title; by this the condition is deſtroyed: and if a diſſeiſor make a feoffment in fee upon condition, and after the diſſeiſee doth enter upon the feoffee, this doth extinguiſh the condition. Perk. ſect. 821. If the feoffee makes a feoffment of all or part of the land to the feoffor, before the condition is broken; the condition is gone for ever: and if he make a leaſe for life or years only, then the condition will be ſuſpended for that time. Co. Lit. 218. But it is otherwiſe where the feoffment or leaſe for life or years, are made to any other but the feoffor. Ibid. Where the condition of a feoffment is, that if the feoffor or his heir pay a certain ſum of money to the feoffee ſuch a day, and before that day the feoffor dieth without heir: or if the feoffment be made by a woman on condition to pay her 10*l.* or that the feoffee infeoff her by a certain day, and they intermarry before the day, and the marriage doth continue till after it; in theſe caſes the condition is gone. Perk. ſect. 763, 764.

A condition that would take away the whole effect of a grant is void; and ſo it is if it be contrary to the expreſs words of it. Conditions againſt law are void; but what may be prohibited by law, may be prohibited by deed. 1 Inſt. 206, 220. He that taketh an eſtate in remainder, is bound by condition in a deed, though he doth not ſeal it.

Conditions in reſtraint of marriage have not generally been favoured, as contrary to ſound policy; but where a legacy has been given over to another, there the condition has always been held good; and it ſeems that ſuch conditions, tions as only reasonably restrain children from imprudent marriages will be always supported.—That is to say, where they operate only as particular, not as universal restrictions. In the case of Scott v. Tyler, 2 Bro. C. R. 431, &c. it was determined after very long arguments, that a condition annexed to a legacy, that the legatee should not marry under twenty-one, without consent of her mother, (or rather that the legacy should vest previous to twenty-one, if the legatee married with such consent,) was a valid condition.—And upon marriage without such consent, it was determined to go to the mother under a gift of a general residue.—See the first paragraph of Div. III. of this title.—And the cases of Peyton v. Bury, 2 P. Wms. 626. and the following cases cited in Mr. Cox's note there, viz. Bellasis v. Ermine, 1 C. C. 22: Fry v. Porter, 1 C. C. R. 303.—That where a legacy is given on consideration that the legatee should not marry without consent, and there is no devise over, the condition is void, See 4 Burr. 2055; Com. Rep. 739, and the cases there cited.—The case of Scott v. Tyler above-mentioned, and Amos v. Horner, 1 Eq. Ab. 112. p. 9, have determined that a bequest of the residue, notwithstanding some contradictory authorities, is equivalent to a limitation over; where the condition is precedent and never performed.—As to the invalidity of a legacy in perfect restraint of marriage see Knapp v. Noyes, Ambl. 662: and Elton v. Elton, 1 Wilf. 159. And the rule of the ecclesiastical law is, that where a portion is given in consideration that a daughter should never marry, the condition is void. Swinb.—See also Rose's notes on Com. Rep. 728, and the cases there cited; and at large on this subject, Fonblanque's Treatise of Equity i. 245, &c. and this Dict. title Marriage.

The word "If" will not always make a condition; but sometimes it makes a limitation, as where a lease is made for years, if A. B. lives so long. And this is contrary to a condition; for a stranger may take advantage of an estate determined thereby, &c. Co. Lit. 236: Dyer 300. Sub conditione is the most proper word to make a condition: proviso is as good a word, when not dependant upon another sentence; but in some cases, the word proviso may make no condition, but be only a qualification or explanation of a covenant. 2 Danv. 1, 2. And neither the word proviso, nor any other, makes a condition, unless it is restrictive. Plowd. 34: 1 Nelf. 466.

Regularly the word "for" does not import a condition, though it has the force of a condition when the thing granted is executory, and the consideration of the grant is a service, or some such thing, for which there is no remedy; but the stopping the thing granted; as in the case of an annuity granted pro consilio, or for executing the office of a steward of a court, or the service of a captain or keeper of a fort, here the failure of giving counsel, or performing the service, is a kind of eviction of that which is to be done for the annuity, the grantor having no means either to exact the counsel, or recompence for it, but by stopping the annuity; and in these cases the condition is not precedent, and therefore the performance thereof need not be averred when the annuity is demanded. Per Hobart Ch. J. Hob. 41. Mich. 10 Jac. in the case of Cowper v. Andrews.

As the intent of the testator chiefly governs in wills, such construction is always made of the words, as will best support his intent, and therefore these words ad faciendum, faciendo, ea intentione, ad effectum, &c. in a will create a condition. Co. Lit. 204 a. See titles Devise, Will.

A grant to one to the intent he shall do so and so, is no condition, but a trust and confidence. Dyer 138. Some words in a lease do not make a condition but a covenant, upon which the lessor may bring his action. A lease being the deed of lessor and lessee, every word is spoken by both; and a condition may be therein, though it sounds in covenant. 1 Nelf. 464. A covenant not to grant, sell, &c. may be a condition; and covenant that, paying the rent, the lessee shall enjoy the land, is conditional. 2 Danv. 2. 6. Where words are indefinite, and proper to defeat an estate, they shall be taken to have the force of a condition. Palm. 503.

III. A condition may be well performed, when it is done as near to the intent as may be: for if the condition of a feoffment be that the feoffee shall make an estate back to the feoffor and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies, remainder to the right heirs of the feoffor; in this case, if the feoffor die before, the estate shall be made to the wife without impeachment of waste, the remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband begotten on the wife, &c. Co. Lit. 219: 8 Rep. 69. If a condition be performed in substance and effect, it is good although it differs in words; as where it is to deliver letters-patent, and the party bound having lost them, delivers an exemplification, &c. 2 Danv. 40. Though payment of the money before the day, is payment at the day, in performance of a condition; yet a feoffor, &c. cannot re-enter, and revest his old estate by force of the condition, till the day whereon the condition gives him power to re-enter. Ibid. 121. If a man seised of land in right of his wife, make a feoffment in fee on condition, and dies; if the heir of the feoffor enters for the condition broken, and defeats the feoffment, his estate vanishes, and presently it is vested in the wife. Co. Lit. 202. And if a person seised of land, as heir on the part of his mother, makes a feoffment on condition and dieth; though the heir on the part of the father, who is heir at Common law, may enter for the condition broken, the heir of the part of the mother shall enter upon him, and enjoy the land. Ibid. 12.

Where there is a condition in a feoffment or lease, that if no distress can be found, the feoffor, &c. shall re-enter; if the place is not open to the distress, as if there be only a cupboard in the house, which is locked, &c. it is all one as if there was no distress there, and the feoffor, &c. may enter. 2 Danv. 46. When a rent is to be paid upon condition at a certain day, the lessor cannot enter for the condition broken, before demand of the rent. Ibid. 98. And the lessor ought to demand the rent at the day, or the condition shall not be broken by the non-payment of the rent. A re-entry may be given on a feoffment, &c. though none be reſerved: if one make a leaſe for life or feoffment upon condition, that if the feoffee or leſſee does ſuch an act, the eſtate ſhall be void: now although the eſtate cannot be void before entry, this is a good condition, and ſhall give an entry to the leſſor, &c. by implication. 1 Rol. Abr. 408. A leaſe for life on condition, being a freehold, cannot ceaſe without entry; but if it be a leaſe for years, the leaſe is void ipſo facto, on breach of the condition without any entry. 1 Inſt. 214. If a leaſe for years is, that, on breach of the condition, the term ſhall ceaſe, the term is ended without entry; but where the words are, that the leaſe ſhall be void, it is otherwiſe. Cro. Car. 511: 3 Rep. 64. Regularly, where one will take advantage of a condition, if he may enter, he muſt do it; and if he cannot enter, he muſt make a claim. Co. Lit. 218. Where on condition broken, leſſor brings an ejectment, entry is not neceſſary; if tenant defends, he is bound by the rule, to confeſs entry.

No one can reſerve the power or benefit of re-entry, on breach of a condition to any other but himſelf, his heirs, executors, &c. parties and privies, in right and repreſentation: privies in law, grantees of reverſions, &c. are to have no advantage by it. But by the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28, Grantees of reverſions may take advantage againſt leſſees, &c. by action. 1 Inſt. 214, 215: Plowd. 175. Where one doth enter for a condition broken, it generally makes the eſtate void ab initio, and the party comes in of his firſt eſtate; and he ſhall have the land in the ſame manner it was when he parted with it; and his poſſeſſion at the time of making the condition; therefore he ſhall avoid all ſubſequent charges on the lands. 4 Rep. 120: Plowd. 186: Co. Lit. 233. If one enters on a condition performed, he ſhall avoid all incumbrances upon the land after the condition made: and a condition when broken, or performed, &c. will defeat the whole eſtate. So that if there be a leaſe for life, remainder in fee, on condition that the leſſee for life ſhall pay 20*l.* to the leſſor; if he pay not this money, the eſtate in remainder will be avoided alſo. Dyer 127: 8 Rep. 90. But this may be otherwiſe by ſpecial limitation to an uſe: and if tenant for life, and he in remainder join in a feoffment on condition, that if, &c. then the tenant for life ſhall re-enter, this may be good without defeating the whole eſtate; though regularly a condition may not avoid part of an eſtate, and leave another part entire, nor can the eſtate be void as to ſome perſons, and good as to others. 8 Rep. 190: 1 Inſt. 214.

Leſſee for life makes a feoffment on condition, and enters for the condition broken; by this he ſhall be reſtored to his eſtate for life, and reduce the reverſion to the leſſor; and the rent due to the leſſor ſhall be revived: but in this caſe the leſſee will not be in the ſame courſe as he was before, for his eſtate is ſubject to a forfeiture, though he be tenant for life ſtill. Roll. 474: Shep. Abr. 405.

Tenants by the curteſy, tenant in tail after poſſibility of iſſue extinct, tenant in dower, for life, or years, &c. hold their eſtates ſubject to a condition in law, not to grant a greater eſtate than they have, nor to commit waſte, &c. 1 Inſt. 233. And eſtates made by deed to infants, and feme coverts, upon condition, ſhall bind them, becauſe the charge is on the land. 2 Danv. 30. A releaſe of all a man's right may be upon condition; a leſſee may ſurrender upon condition; a contract may be upon condition, &c. But a parſon cannot reſign upon condition, any more than be admitted upon condition: and a condition cannot be releaſed on condition. 9 Rep. 85.

No perſon ſhall defeat any eſtate of freehold upon condition without ſhewing the deed wherein the condition is contained: but of chattels real or perſonal, &c. a man may plead that ſuch grants or leaſes were made upon condition without ſhewing the deeds; and in the caſe of a condition to avoid a freehold, though it may not be pleaded without the deed, it may be given in evidence to a jury, and they may find the matter at large. Lit. 374: 5 Rep. 40. A condition may be apportioned by act of law, or of the leſſee. 4 Rep. 120. But a man cannot by his own act divide, or apportion a condition, which goes to the deſtruction of an eſtate. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 474. A condition in a will is a thing odious in law, which ſhall not be created without ſufficient words. 2 Leon. 40. A deviſe to the heir at law, provided he pay to A, B. 20*l.* is a void condition, becauſe there is no perſon to take advantage of the non-performance. 1 Lutw. 797. Yet conditional deviſes, as well of lands as of goods, are allowed by our law, and not being performed, the heir or executors ſhall take advantage of them. 1 Nelſ. 467.

Where there are negative and affirmative conditions, the pleader muſt ſhew, not only that he has not broke the negative ones, but alſo that he has performed the affirmative ones. Fletcher v. Richardſon, Hardw. 322.

As to relief againſt the breach of conditions. Some ſay that in all caſes of penalty or forfeiture that lie in compenſation, Equity will relieve; for where they can make compenſation, no harm is done. So that although an expreſs time be appointed for the performance of a condition, the judge may, after that day is paſt, allow a reaſonable ſpace to the party, making reparation for the damage, if it be not very great, nor the ſubſtance of the covenant deſtroyed by it. See Fonblanque's Treat. Eq. i. 387, and the caſes there cited.

The ſubſtantial diſtinction which governs the interference of Courts of Equity in caſes of conditions broken, is not whether the condition be precedent or ſubſequent, but whether compenſation can or cannot be made: and therefore, where A. conveyed lands to B. &c. upon truſt, that if C. the ſon of A. within ſix months after the death of A. ſhould ſecure to truſtees 500*l.* for the younger children of C. then after ſuch ſecurity given to convey to C. and his heirs; and until the time for giving ſuch ſecurity in truſt for the eldeſt ſon of C. and in default of ſuch ſecurity, to convey to ſuch eldeſt ſon and his heirs; C. died before ſuch ſecurity given: yet this condition precedent being only in the nature of a penalty, the intent of the truſt ſhall be regarded, which was to ſecure 500*l.* to the younger children. Wallis v. Crimes, 1 C. C. 89: See Glaſcock v. Brownell, Finch. 178: Pitcairne v. Bruce, Finch. 403: Woodman v. Blake, 2 Vern. 222: Bertie v. Falkland, 2 Vern 339: Hayward v. Angell, 1 Vern. 222: Bland v. Middleton, 2 C. C. 1: Francis's Maxims, p. 49.

But though Equity will, under ſome circumſtances, relieve againſt the breach of a condition precedent, where damages are certain; yet it ſeems, that they will not where the damages accrued are contingent, and cannot be eſtimated. Sweet v. Anderſon, 5 Vin. 93. pl. 15. See Treatiſe of Equity, pp. 209, 367, 391.

IV. There

CONDITION IV.

IV. There are no preciſe technical words required in a deed, to make a ſtipulation a condition precedent or ſubſequent; neither does it depend on the circumſtance whether the clauſe is placed prior or poſterior in the deed, ſo that it operates as a proviſo or covenant; for the ſame words have been conſtrued to operate as either the one or the other according to the nature of the tranſaction, per Aſhhurſt Juſtice, 1 Term Rep. 645.—Further, as to the nature of conditions precedent and ſubſequent, See 3 Atk. 364: 2 P. Wms. 419, 626: 1 Vern. 83: 3 C. C. 130: 3 Lev. 132: Fearne on Cont. Rem: 2 Burr. 899: 4 Burr. 1930: 1 Wilſ. 105, 136: 2 Bro. C. R. 67: and Ib. 431, 489, as to a condition annexed to a legacy, that the legatee ſhould marry with conſent of her mother, which was held to be valid. In 1 Eq. Ab. 108, it is ſaid that conditions precedent are ſuch as are annexed to eſtates, and muſt be punctually performed before the eſtate can veſt. A condition ſubſequent, is when the eſtate is executed; but the continuance of ſuch eſtate depends on the breach or performance of the condition. The two moſt material points of diſcuſſion reſpecting the doctrine and different operations at law, and in equity, of conditions precedent and ſubſequent ariſe, 1. From caſes where conditions are annexed to deviſes, making them void on the marriage of the deviſee without conſent: See ante II. and title Marriage: And 2. From caſes ariſing on the veſting of portions and legacies made payable at a future time. See titles Deviſe, Legacy, Portions.

Conditions precedent are ſuch as muſt be punctually performed before the eſtate can veſt; but on a condition ſubſequent, the eſtate is immediately executed: yet the continuance of ſuch eſtate dependeth on the breach or performance of the condition. Co. Lit. 218: Eq. Abr. 108. As if I grant, that if A. will go to ſuch a place, about my buſineſs, that he ſhall have ſuch an eſtate, or that he ſhall have 10*l.* &c. this is a condition precedent. 1 Rol. Abr. 414. So if I retain a man for 40*s.* to go with me to Rome, this is a condition precedent, for the duty commences by going to Rome. 1 Rol. Abr. 914. So if a man, by will deviſes certain legacies, and then deviſes all the reſidue of his eſtate to his executor, after debts, legacies, &c. paid and diſcharged, this is a condition precedent; ſo that the executor cannot have the reſidue of the eſtate before the debts and legacies are diſcharged. 1 Rol. Abr. 415: 1 Jones 327: Cro. Car. 335.

But if a man deviſes a term to A. and that if his wife ſuffers the deviſee to enjoy it for three years, that ſhe ſhall have all his goods as executrix; but if ſhe diſturbs A. then he makes B. executor, and dies, his wife is executrix preſently; for though in grants the eſtate ſhall not veſt till the condition precedent is performed, yet it is otherwiſe in a will, which muſt be guided by the intent of the parties; and this ſhall not be conſtrued as a condition precedent, but only as a condition to abridge the power of being executrix, if ſhe perform it not. Cro. Eliz. 219.

Where the one promiſe is the conſideration of the other, and where the performance and not the promiſe is, muſt be gathered from the words and nature of the agreement, and depends intirely thereupon; for, if there was a poſitive promiſe that one ſhould releaſe his equity of redemption, and on the other ſide, that the other would pay 7*l.* then the one might bring his action without any averment of performance; but where the agreement is, that the plaintiff ſhould releaſe his equity of redemption, in conſideration whereof the defendant was to pay him 7*l.* ſo that the releaſe is the conſideration, and therefore, being executory, it is a condition precedent, which muſt be averred. 12 Mod. 455, 460. Thorp v. Thorp.

If there be a day ſet for the payment of money, or doing the thing which one promiſes, agrees or covenants to do for another thing, and that day happens to incur before the time, the thing for which the promiſe, agreement or covenant is made, is to be performed by the tenor of the agreement; there, though the words be, that the party ſhall pay the money, or do the thing for ſuch a thing, or in conſideration of ſuch a thing; after the day is paſt the other ſhall have action for the money, or other thing, though the thing for which the promiſe, agreement, or covenant was made, be not performed; for it would be repugnant there to make it a condition precedent; and therefore they are in that caſe left to mutual remedies, on which, by the expreſs words of the agreement, they have depended. Per Holt Ch. Juſtice. 12 Mod. 461: Paſch. 13 W. 3. Thorp v. Thorp.

M. agrees to give A. ſo much for the uſe of a coach and horſes for a year, and A. agreed further with M. to keep the coach in repair; it was averred the coach and horſes were delivered to M. but nothing of the repair; and Holt Ch. Juſtice held upon this evidence, that repairing was not a condition precedent, and therefore need not be averred. Per Holt Ch. Juſtice at Guildhall, and judgment pro querente. 12 Mod. 503: Paſch. 13 Will. 3. Atkinſon v. Morris.

But if the agreement had been that A. had agreed to give M. a coach and horſes for a year, and to repair the coach, and that for that M. promiſed ſo much money, then the repairing had been a condition precedent neceſſary to be averred. Per Holt Ch. Juſtice. 12 Mod. 503. Paſch. 13 W. 3. in S. C.

Condition that A. ſhall do, and for the doing B. ſhall pay, is a condition precedent, but time fixed for payment will verify the condition; per Holt Ch. Juſtice. 1 Salk. 171. Paſch. 13 Will. 3. B. R. Thorp v. Thorp.—See this Dict. title Award.

If A. makes a leaſe for five years to B. upon condition, that if B. pays him 10*l.* within two years, that then he ſhall have a fee-ſimple in the lands, and make livery and ſeiſin to B. this paſſes the freehold immediately, and B. has a fee conditional; becauſe if the freehold was not to veſt in B. till the condition performed, it would be difficult to determine in whom the freehold lay; for conditions may be inſerted in ſuch deeds as are perfected privately, which might prove greatly prejudicial to ſtrangers. Lit. ſect. 350: Co. Lit. 216, 217.

But in caſe of a leaſe for life, with ſuch a condition, the freehold paſſes not before the condition performed; becauſe the livery may preſently work upon the freehold. But if a man grants an advowſon, &c. (which lie in grant) for years, upon ſuch condition, the grantee ſhall have no fee till the condition performed. Co. Lit. 217.

If A. leaſes to B. for years, upon condition, that if B. pays money to A. or his heirs, at a day, that B. ſhall have the fee, and before the day A. is attainted of treaſon and executed; now though the condition became impoſſible by the act and offence of A. yet B. ſhall not have a fee, becauſe a precedent condition to increaſe an eſtate muſt be performed; and if it becomes impoſſible, no eſtate ſhall riſe. Co. Lit. 210. Alſo in equity, with reſpect reſpect to conditions precedent and ſubſequent, the prevailing diſtinction ſeems to be, to relieve againſt the breach or non-performance, not ſo much whether the condition be precedent or ſubſequent, as whether a compenſation can be made. 1 Vern. 79, 167. As if A. conveys lands to B. &c. and their heirs, upon truſt, that if C. the ſon of A. within ſix months after the death of A. ſhould ſecure to the truſtees 500*l.* for the younger children of C. then after ſuch ſecurity given, to convey to C. and his heirs, and until the time for giving ſuch ſecurity, in truſt for the eldeſt ſon of C. and in default of ſuch ſecurity, to convey to ſuch eldeſt ſon and his heirs, if C. dies before any ſuch ſecurity given, yet this condition, though precedent, being only in nature of a penalty, the intent of the truſt ſhall be regarded, which was to ſecure 500*l.* for the younger children. 1 Chan. Ca. 89.

If a feme covert, having power by will to deviſe lands, deviſes them to her executors, to pay 500*l.* out of them to her ſon; provided, that if the father gives not a ſufficient releaſe of certain goods to her executors, that then the deviſe of the 500*l.* ſhould be void, and go to the executors; and after her death a releaſe is tendered to the father, and he refuſes, yet upon making the releaſe after, the money ſhall be paid to the ſon; for it was ſaid to be the ſtanding rule of the court, that a forfeiture ſhould not bind, where a thing may be done after, or a compenſation made for it; as where the condition is to pay money, &c. and though it is generally binding, where there is a deviſe over, yet here, it being to go to the executors, it is no more than the law implies. 2 Vent. 252.

CONFEDERACY, confœderatio.] Is when two or more combine together to do any damage or injury to another, or to do any unlawful act. And falſe confederacy between divers perſons ſhall be puniſhed, though nothing be put in execution: but this confederacy, puniſhable by law before it is executed, ought to have theſe incidents; firſt, it muſt be declared by ſome matter of proſecution, as by making of bonds, or promiſes the one to the other; ſecondly, it ſhould be malicious, as for unjuſt revenge; thirdly, it ought to be falſe againſt an innocent perſon; and laſtly, it is to be out of court voluntarily. Terms de Ley. Where a writ of conſpiracy doth not lie, the confederacy is puniſhable: and inquiry ſhall be made of conſpirators and confederaters, who bind themſelves together, &c. See poſt, title Conſpiracy.

CONFESSION, confeſſio] Is where a priſoner is indicted of treaſon or felony, and brought to the bar to be arraigned; and his indictment being read to him, the court demands what he can ſay thereto; then he either confeſſes the offence, and the indictment to be true, or pleads Not guilty, &c.

Confeſſion may be made in two kinds, and to two ſeveral ends: the one is, that the criminal may confeſs the offence whereof he is indicted openly in the court, before the judge, and ſubmit himſelf to the cenſure and judgment of the law; which confeſſion is the moſt certain anſwer, and beſt ſatisfaction that may be given to the judge to condemn the offender; ſo that it proceeds freely of his own accord, without any threats or extremity uſed; for if the confeſſion ariſe from any of theſe cauſes, it ought not to be recorded: as a woman indicted for the felonious taking of a thing from another, being thereof arraigned, confeſſed the felony, and ſaid that ſhe did it by commandment of her huſband; the judges in pity would not record her confeſſion, but cauſed her to plead Not guilty to the felony; whereupon the jury found that ſhe did the fact by compulſion of her huſband, againſt her will, for which cauſe ſhe was diſcharged. 27 Aſſiſ. pl. 50.

The other kind of confeſſion is, when the priſoner confeſſes the indictment to be true, and that he hath committed the offence whereof he is indicted, and then becomes an approver, or accuſer of others, who are guilty of the ſame offence whereof he is indicted, or other offences with him; and then prays the judge to have a coroner aſſigned him, to whom he may make relation of thoſe offences and the full circumſtances thereof. See title Acceſſory.

There was alſo a third ſort of confeſſion, formerly made by an offender in felony, not in court before the judge, but before the coroner in a church, or other privileged place, upon which the offender, by the ancient law of the land, was to abjure the realm. 3 Inſt. 129.—See title Abjuration.

Confeſſion is likewiſe in civil caſes, where the defendant confeſſes the plaintiff's action to be good: by which confeſſion there may be a mitigation of a fine againſt the penalty of a ſtatute; though not after verdict. Finch. 387: 2 Keb. 408.

There is alſo a confeſſion indirectly implied, as well as directly expreſſed in criminal caſes; as if the defendant, in a caſe not capital, doth not directly own himſelf guilty of the crime, but by ſubmitting to a fine owns his guilt; whereupon the judge may accept of his ſubmiſſion to the King's mercy. Lamb. lib. 4. c. 9. By this indirect confeſſion, the defendant ſhall not be barred to plead Not guilty to an action, &c. for the ſame fact: the entry of it is, that the defendant puts himſelf on the King's mercy. And of the direct confeſſion, that he acknowledges the indictment. And this laſt confeſſion carries with it ſo ſtrong a preſumption of guilt, that being entered on record, on indictment of treſpaſs, it eſtops the defendant to plead Not guilty to an action brought afterwards againſt him for the ſame matter: but ſuch entry of a confeſſion of an indictment of a capital crime, it is ſaid, will not eſtop a defendant to plead Not guilty to an appeal, it being in caſe of life. And where a perſon upon his arraignment actually confeſſes himſelf guilty, or unadviſedly diſcloſes the ſpecial manner of the fact, ſuppoſing that it doth not amount to felony, where it doth; the judges, upon probable circumſtances, that ſuch confeſſion may proceed from fear, weakneſs, or ignorance, may refuſe ſuch a confeſſion, and ſuffer the party to plead Not guilty. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 31. § 2.

A confeſſion may be received, and the plea of Not guilty be withdrawn, though recorded. Kel. 11. The confeſſion of the defendant, whether taken upon an examination before juſtices of peace, in purſuance of the 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13. or 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 10, upon an offender's being bailed or committed for felony; or taken by the Common law, upon an examination before a Secretary of State, or other magiſtrate, for treaſon or other crimes, is allowed to be given in evidence againſt the party confeſſing; but not againſt others. Alſo two witneſſes of a confeſſion of high treaſon, upon an examination before a juſtice of peace, were ſufficient to convict the perſon ſo confeſſing, within the meaning of 1 Ed. 6. cap. 12, and 5 & 6. Ed. 6. cap. 11, which required two witneſſes in high treaſon; unleſs the offender ſhould willingly confeſs, &c. But the Stat. 7 W. 3. cap. 3, requires two witneſſes, except the party ſhall willingly without violence confeſs, &c. in open court, 2 Hawk. P.C. c. 46. § 3.—See title Evidence.

It has been held, that wherever a man's confeſſion is made uſe of againſt him, it muſt all be taken together, and not by parcels. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. § 5. And no confeſſion ſhall, before final judgment deprive the defendant, of the privilege of taking exceptions in arreſt of judgment, to faults apparent in the record. Ibid. c. 32. § 4. A demurrer amounts to a confeſſion of the indictment as laid, ſo far, that if the indictment be good, judgment and execution ſhall go againſt the priſoner. Bro. 86: S. P. C. 150: H. P. C. 246. And in criminal caſes, not capital, if the defendant demur to an indictment, &c. whether in abatement, or otherwiſe, the court will not give judgment againſt him to anſwer over, but final judgment. 2 Hawk. c. 32. § 7.—See title Abatement. Where a priſoner confeſſes the fact, the court has nothing more to do than to proceed to judgment againſt him. Confeſſus in judicio pro judicato habetur. 11 Rep. 30: 4 Inſt. 66.—See further, 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 32, and this Dict. title Evidence.

CONFESSOR, Lat. confeſſor, confeſſionarius.] Hath relation to private confeſſion of ſins, in order to abſolution: and the prieſt who received the auricular confeſſion, had the title of confeſſor, though improperly; for he is rather the confeſſee, being the perſon to whom the confeſſion is made. This receiving the confeſſion of a penitent, was in old Engliſh to ſhreve or ſhrive; whence comes the word beſhrieved, or looking like a confeſſed or ſhrieved perſon, on whom was impoſed ſome uneaſy penance. The moſt ſolemn time of confeſſing was the day before Lent, which from thence is ſtill called Shrove-Tueſday. Cowel.—See title Papiſt.

CONFIRMATION, confirmatio, from the verb confirmare, firmum facere.] A conveyance of an eſtate, or right in eſſe, that one hath in or to lands, &c. to another that hath the poſſeſſion thereof, or ſome eſtate therein; whereby a voidable eſtate is made ſure and unavoidable; or a particular eſtate is increaſed, or a poſſeſſion made perfect. 1 Inſt. 295: See Shep. Touch. 311. It is a ſtrengthening of an eſtate formerly made, which is voidable, though not preſently void: as for example; a biſhop granteth his chancellorſhip by patent, for term of the patentee's life; this is no void grant, but voidable by the biſhop's death, except it be ſtrengthened by the confirmation of the dean and chapter.

Confirmation, is alſo defined to be the approbation or aſſent to an eſtate already created; which as far as is in the confirmer's power, makes it good and valid: ſo that the confirmation doth not regularly create an eſtate, but yet ſuch words may be mingled in the confirmation as may create and enlarge an eſtate: but that is by force of ſuch words as are foreign to the buſineſs of confirmation, and by their own force and power, tend to create the eſtate. Gilb. Ten. 75.

A Confirmation is of a nature nearly allied to a releaſe; the words of making it are theſe, Have given, granted, ratified, approved, and confirmed. Litt. § 515, 531.

The words dedi & conceſſi, are as ſtrong as the word confirmavi, for they amount to a grant of the right of the perſon in poſſeſſion; and if he has any right, I can never after impeach his eſtate. Gilb. Ten. 79. See further what words ſhall enure as a confirmation in Vin. Abr. title Confirmation. (X.)

Madox in p. 19. of the Diſſert. annexed to the Formul. Angl. ſays, that moſt ancient Confirmations made after the conqueſt, often run like feoffments; and are diſtinguiſhable from them, chiefly by ſome words importing a former feoffment or grant.

In ancient times, when feoffees were frequently diſſeiſed of their lands upon ſome ſuggeſtion or other, charters of confirmation ſeem to have been in great requeſt. For in the early times after the conqueſt, ſo many confirmations may be met with, ſucceſſively made to the ſame perſons, or their heirs or ſucceſſors, of the ſame lands and poſſeſſions, that it looks as if they did not think themſelves ſecure in their poſſeſſions againſt the King, or the great lords who were their feoffors, or in whoſe fees their lands lay, unleſs they had repeated confirmations, from them, their heirs or ſucceſſors. And theſe Confirmations very anciently ſeem to have been ſome times made, either by precept or writ from the King, or other lords, to put the feoffees, or their heirs or ſucceſſors into ſeiſin, after they had been diſſeiſed, or to keep them in their ſeiſin undiſturbed, or elſe by charter of expreſs Confirmation. Shep. Touch. edit. 1791. p. 314. in n. And on this ſubject of confirmation in general, See Sheppard's whole chapter.

Confirmation, aut eſt perficiens, creſcens aut diminuens: Perficiens, as if feoffee upon condition make a feoffment, and the feoffor confirm the eſtate of the ſecond feoffee: Creſcens, that doth always enlarge the eſtate of a tenant; as tenant for years, to hold for life, &c. Diminuens, as when the lord of whom the land is holden, confirms the eſtate of his tenant, to hold by a leſs rent. 9 Rep. 142.

The lord may diminiſh the ſervices of his tenant by confirmation; but not reſerve new ſervices, ſo long as the former eſtate in the tenancy continues: and therefore if he confirm to the tenant, to yield him a hawk, &c. yearly, it is void. Lit. ſect. 539: 1 Co. Inſt. 296. Leaſes for years may be confirmed for part of the term, or part of the land, &c. But it is otherwiſe of an eſtate of freehold, which being entire, cannot be confirmed for part of the eſtate. 5 Rep. 81. There may be a confirmation implied by law, as well as expreſs by deed; where the law by conſtruction makes a confirmation of a grant made to another purpoſe: and a confirmation may enlarge large an eſtate, from an eſtate held at will to term of years, or a greater eſtate; from an eſtate for years to an eſtate for life; from an eſtate for life, to an eſtate in tail, or in fee; and from an eſtate in tail to an eſtate in fee-ſimple. 1 Inſt. 305: 9 Rep. 142: Dyer 263. But if the confirmation be made to leſſee for life or years, of his term or eſtate, and not of the land, this doth not increaſe the eſtate, though if the leſſor confirm the land, to have and to hold the land to the leſſee and his heirs, this will inlarge the eſtate, and ſo of the reſt. Co. Lit. 299: Plowd. 40.

In every good confirmation, there muſt be a precedent rightful or wrongful eſtate in him to whom made, or he muſt have the poſſeſſion of the thing as a foundation for the confirmation to work upon; the confirmor muſt have ſuch an eſtate and property in the land, that he may be thereby enabled to confirm the eſtate of the confirmee; the precedent eſtate muſt continue till the confirmation come, ſo that the eſtate to be increaſed comes into it; and it is required that both theſe eſtates be lawful. Co. Lit. 296: 1 Rep. 146: Dyer 109: 5 Rep. 15. If one have common of paſture in another's land, and he confirms the eſtate of the tenant of the land, nothing paſſes of the common, but it remains as it was before: ſo if a man have a rent out of the land, and he doth confirm the eſtate which the tenant hath in the land, the rent remaineth. Lit. ſect. 537.

Tenant for life makes a leaſe for years to a man, and after leaſes the land to another perſon for years; and he in reverſion confirms the laſt leaſe, and after that the firſt leaſe, this is not good: the ſecond leſſee hath an intereſt before by the confirmation of him in reverſion. But in a like caſe, confirmation of the firſt leaſe, after the ſecond was confirmed, was held good: for the leaſe takes no intereſt by the confirmation, but only to make it durable and effectual. Moor, c. 180: 1 Inſt. 296: Plowd. 10.

If a diſſeiſee confirm the land to the diſſeiſor but for one hour, one week, a year, or for life, &c. it is a good confirmation of the eſtate for ever: and if he confirms the eſtate of the diſſeiſor without any word of heirs, he hath a fee-ſimple; and if a diſſeiſor make a gift in tail, and the diſſeiſee doth confirm the eſtate of the donee, it ſhall enure to the whole eſtate: alſo if the diſſeiſor enfeoffs A. and B. and the heirs of B. and the diſſeiſee confirms the eſtate of B. for his life; this ſhall extend to his companion, and for the whole fee-ſimple. Co. Lit. 291, 297, 299.

But where the eſtate is divided, it is otherwiſe; as if there be an eſtate for life, the remainder over, there the confirmation may be of either of the eſtates: and if the leſſee of a diſſeiſor of a leaſe for twenty years, make a leaſe for ten years; the diſſeiſee may confirm to one of them, and not to the other. 1 Cro. 472: 5 Rep. 81. If a diſſeiſor or any other make a leaſe for years to begin at a day to come, a confirmation to the leſſee before the leaſe begins will not be good; for there is no eſtate in him. Co. Lit. 296.

The tenant in tail of land hath a reverſion in fee expectant; in this caſe, the confirmation of the eſtate-tail will not extend to the reverſion. And if my diſſeiſor make a leaſe for life, the remainder in fee, and I confirm the eſtate of the tenant for life; this ſhall not confirm the eſtate of him in remainder: but if I confirm the remainder eſtate, without any confirmation to tenant for life, it ſhall enure to him alſo. Co. Lit. 297, 298. If lands are given to two men, and the heirs of their two bodies begotten, and the donor confirms their eſtate in the lands, to have and to hold to them two and their heirs; this ſhall be conſtrued a joint eſtate for their lives, and after they ſhall have ſeveral inheritances. Co. Lit. 299. Tenant in tail, or for life, of land, lets it for years, if after he makes a confirmation of the land to the leſſee for years, to hold to him and his heirs for ever, the leſſee hath only an eſtate for the life of the tenant in tail, &c. and therein his leaſe for years is extinct. Lit. ſect. 606.

A freehold for life, and term for years, it is ſaid, cannot ſtand together of the ſame land, in the ſame perſon. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 480. If a feme leſſee for years marries, and the leſſor confirms the eſtate of huſband and wife, to hold for their lives, by ſuch a confirmation the term will be drowned; and the huſband and wife are jointenants for their lives. Co. Lit. 300. But if the feme were leſſee for life, then by the confirmation to huſband and wife for their lives, the huſband holdeth only in right of his wife for her life; but ſhall take a remainder for his life. Ibid. 299. Confirmation to leſſee for life, and a ſtranger to hold for their lives, is void, for there is no privity: but it is otherwiſe, if for years. 2 Danv. Abr. 141. If tenant for life grant a rent-charge, &c. to one and his heirs, he in reverſion is to confirm it, otherwiſe it is good only for the life of tenant for life. Lit. 529. A tenant for life, and remainder-man in fee, join in a leaſe, this ſhall be taken to be the leaſe of tenant for life, during his life, and confirmation of him in remainder: though after the death of tenant for life, it is the leaſe of him in remainder, and confirmation of tenant for life. 6 Rep. 15: 1 Nelſ. Abr. 481.

If leſſee for years, without impeachment for waſte, accepts a confirmation of his eſtate for life; by this he hath loſt the privilege annexed to his eſtate for years. 8 Rep. 76. Acceptance of rent in ſome caſes makes a confirmation of a leaſe: As if a man leaſes for life, reſerving rent upon a condition of re-entry; if after the condition is broken, by non-payment of the rent, the leſſor diſtrains for the ſaid rent, this act ſhall be a confirmation of the leaſe, ſo as he cannot enter. 2 Danv. 128, 129.

What a perſon may defeat by his entry, he may make good by his confirmation. Co. Lit. 300. But none can confirm, unleſs he hath a right at the time of the grant; he that hath but a right in reverſion cannot enlarge the eſtate of a leſſee. 2 Danv. 140, 141. And where a perſon hath but intereſſe termini, he hath no eſtate in him, upon which a confirmation may enure. Co. Lit. 290.

As confirmation is to bind the right of him who makes it, but not alter the nature of the eſtate of him to whom made, it ſhall not diſcharge a condition. Poph. 51. If A. enfeoffs B. upon condition, and after A. confirms the eſtate of B. yet the condition remains: though if B. had enfeoffed C. ſo that the eſtate of C. had been only ſubject to the condition in another deed, and after A. had confirmed the eſtate of C. this would have extinguiſhed the condition, which was annexed to the eſtate of B. 1 Rep. 147. A confirmation will take away a condition annexed by law: and by confirmation, a condition after broken in a deed of feoffment is extinguiſhed. 1 Co. Rep. 146. Confirmations may make a defeaſible eſtate good; but cannot work upon an eſtate that is void in law. Co. Lit. 295.

A confirmation of letters-patent, which are void as they are againſt law, is a void confirmation. 1 Lil. Abr. 295. If there be lord and tenant, and the tenant having iſſue, is attainted of felony, if the King pardons him, and the lord confirms his eſtate, and the tenant dies, his iſſue ſhall not inherit, but the lord ſhall have it againſt his own confirmation: for that could not enable him to take by deſcent, who by the attainder of his father was diſabled. 9 Rep. 141.

Grants and leaſes of biſhops not warranted by the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28, muſt be confirmed by dean and chapter: and grants and leaſes of parſons, &c. by patron and Ordinary. 1 Inſt. 297, 300, 301. Biſhops may grant leaſes of their church-lands for three lives, or twenty-one years, having the qualities required by 32 H. 8. c. 28, and concurrent leaſes for twenty-one years, with confirmation of dean and chapter. See 1 El. cc. 4, 19. If a prebend leaſes parcel of his prebendary, and the biſhop, who is patron, confirms it; this ſhall not bind the ſucceeding biſhop, without confirmation of dean and chapter, becauſe the patronage is parcel of the poſſeſſions of the biſhoprick; but it ſhall bind the preſent biſhop, &c. 2 Danv. 139. If a parſon grants a rent, the confirmation of the patron and biſhop is ſufficient without the dean and chapter, and ſhall be good againſt the ſucceeding biſhop. Ibid. 140. The dean of Wells may paſs his poſſeſſions, with the aſſent of the chapter, without any confirmation of the biſhop. Ibid. 135. Leaſes of biſhops are affirmed ex aſſenſu & conſenſu decani & totius capituli. See further title Leaſes.

To the grants of a Sole Corporation, as Parſon, Prebendary, Vicar, and the like, the Patron muſt give his conſent: becauſe ſuch ſole corporation has not the abſolute fee: but a corporation aggregate, as Dean and Chapter, Maſter, Fellows and Scholars of a College, &c. or any ſole corporation that has the abſolute fee, as a biſhop with conſent of the dean and chapter, may by the Common law make any grant of their poſſeſſions without their founder or patron. 1 Inſt. 300 b.—See further in what caſes the confirmation of the Patron and Ordinary is neceſſary; and as to confirmation by dean and chapter of the grant of the biſhop; Vin. Abr. title Confirmation. (G.) (H.): Bac. Abr. Leaſes. (G.)

A confirmation, as has been already ſaid, is in nature of a releaſe, and in ſome things is of greater force: and in this deed, it is good to recite the eſtate of the tenant, as alſo of him that is to confirm it; and to mention the conſideration; the words ratify and confirm, are commonly made uſe of; but the words give, grant, demiſe, &c. by implication of law, may enure as a confirmation. 1 Inſt. 295: Weſt. Symb. 1. p. 457.

CONFISCATE, or CONFISCATED. From the Lat. confiſcare, and that from fiſcus, which ſignifies metonymically the Emperor's treaſure: and as the Romans ſay, ſuch goods as are forfeited to the Emperor's treaſury for any offence are bona confiſcata, ſo we ſay of thoſe that are forfeited to our King's Exchequer. And the title to have theſe goods is given to the King by the law, when they are not claimed by ſome other: as if a man be indicted for ſtealing the goods of another perſon, when they are in truth his own proper goods, and when the goods are brought into court againſt him, and he is aſked what he ſays to the ſaid goods, if he diſclaims them, he ſhall loſe the goods, although that afterwards he be acquitted of the felony, and the King ſhall have them as confiſcated; but it is otherwiſe if he do not diſclaim them. It is the ſame where goods are found in the poſſeſſion of a felon, if he diſavows them, and afterwards is attainted for other goods, and not for them; for there the goods which he diſavows are confiſcate to the King; but had he been attainted for the ſame goods, they ſhould have been ſaid to be forfeited and not confiſcate. So if an appeal of robbery be brought, and the plaintiff leaves out ſome of his goods, he ſhall not be received to enlarge his appeal; and foraſmuch as there is none to have the goods ſo left out, the King ſhall have them as confiſcate, according to the rule, Quod non capit Chriſtus, capit fiſcus. Staund. P. C. lib. 3. cap. 24.

Goods confiſcated are generally ſuch as are arreſted and ſeized for the King's uſe: but confiſcare and foriſfacere are ſaid to be ſynonima; and bona confiſcata are bona foriſfacta. 3 Inſt. 227.—See title Forfeiture.

CONFORMITY to the church of England. See Stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2, &c. and titles Recuſant, Nonconformiſt, Religion.

CONFRAIRIE, confraternitas.] A fraternity, brotherhood, or ſociety; as the confrairie de St. George, or les chevaliers de la bleu gartier, the honourable ſociety of the Knights of the Garter.

CONFRERES, confratres.] Brethren in a religious houſe; fellows of one and the ſame ſociety. Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 24.

CONFUSION, property by—Where goods of two perſons are ſo intermixed, that the ſeveral portions can no longer be diſtinguiſhed, if the intermixture be by conſent, it is ſuppoſed the proprietors have an intereſt in common, in proportion to their reſpective ſhares: but, if one wilfully intermixes his money, corn, or hay, with that of another man, without his approbation or knowledge, or caſt gold in like manner into another's melting pot or crucible, our law does not allow any remedy in ſuch caſe; but gives the entire property, without any account, to him, whoſe original dominion (or property) is invaded, and endeavoured to be rendered uncertain, without his own conſent. 2 Comm. 405.

CONGEABLE, From the Fr. congé, leave or permiſſion.] Signifies in our law as much as lawful, or lawfully done, or done with permiſſion: as entry congeable, &c. Lit. ſect. 420.

CONGE D'ACCORDER, Fr.] Leave to accord or agree, mentioned in the ſtatute of fines, 18 Ed. 1. in theſe words.—When the original writ is delivered in the preſence of the parties before juſtices, a pleader ſhall ſay this, Sir juſtice, congé d'accorder; and the juſtice ſhall ſay to him, What ſaith Sir R. and name one of the parties, &c.

CONGE D'ESLIRE, Fr. i. e. leave to chooſe.] The King's licenſe or permiſſion ſent to a dean and chapter to proceed to the election of a biſhop, when any biſhoprick becomes vacant. See title Biſhop.

CONGIUS, An ancient meaſure, containing about a gallon and a pint. Charta Edmondi Regis, anno 946.

CONINGERIA, A coney-borough, or warren of conies. Inquiſ. anno 47 H. 3.

CONJUGAL RIGHTS, A ſuit for reſtitution of conjugal rights, is one of the ſpecies of matrimonial cauſes: and is brought when either the huſband or wife is guilty of the injury of ſubtraction, or lives ſeparate from the other other without any ſufficient reaſon; in which caſe the eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction will compel them to come together again, if either party be weak enough to deſire it, contrary to the inclination of the other. 3 Comm. 94.—See title Baron and Feme.

CONJURATIO, An oath; and conjuratus, the ſame with conjurator, viz. one who is bound by the ſame oath. Conjurare is where ſeveral affirm a thing by oath. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 207.

CONJURATION, conjuratio.] Signifies a plot or compact made by perſons combining by oath, to do any public harm: but was more eſpecially uſed for the having (as was ſuppoſed) perſonal conference with the devil, or ſome evil ſpirit, to know any ſecret, or effect any purpoſe. The difference between conjuration and witchcraft was ſaid to be, that a perſon uſing the one, endeavoured by prayers and invocations to compel the devil to ſay or do what he commanded him, the other dealt rather by friendly and voluntary conference, or agreement with the devil or familiar, to have his deſires ſerved, in lieu of blood or other gift offered. Both differed from enchantment or ſorcery; becauſe the latter were ſuppoſed to be perſonal conferences with the devil, and the former were but medicines and ceremonial forms of words uſually called charms, without apparition. Cowel.

Hawkins, in his Pleas of the Crown, lib. 1. c. 3, ſays, that conjurors are thoſe who, by force of certain magick words, endeavour to raiſe the devil, and oblige him to execute their commands. Witches are ſuch who by way of conference bargain with an evil ſpirit, to do what they deſire of him: and Sorcerers are thoſe, who by the uſe of certain ſuperſtitious words, or by the means of images, &c. are ſaid to produce ſtrange effects, above the ordinary courſe of nature. All which were anciently puniſhed in the ſame manner as hereticks, by the writ de hæretico comburendo, after a ſentence in the eccleſiaſtical court: and they might be condemned to the pillory, &c. upon an indictment at Common law. 3 Inſt. 44: H. P. C. 38.

The Stats. 33 H. 8. c. 8: and 1 Jac. 1. c. 12, againſt conjuration and witchcraft are repealed, by Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 5, which enacts, that no proſecution ſhall be commenced on the ſame: but where perſons pretend to exerciſe any kind of witchcraft or conjuration, &c. or undertake to tell fortunes, or from pretended ſkill in any crafty ſcience to diſcover where goods ſtolen or loſt may be found; upon conviction, they ſhall be impriſoned a year, and ſtand in the pillory once in every quarter, in ſome market-town, and may be ordered to give ſecurity for their good behaviour. See 4 Comm. 60.

CONQUEST Conquæſtus, the feodal term for purchaſe; As to countries granted by conqueſt, See title Plantations. And alſo title King.

CONSECRATION, See titles Biſhops, Church.

CONSENT. In all caſes when any thing executory is created by deed, it may, by conſent of all perſons that were parties to the creation of it by their deed, be defeated and annulled, and therefore it was ſaid, that warranties, recognizances, rents, charges, annuities, covenants, leaſes for years, uſes at common law, &c. may, by a defeaſance made with the mutual conſent of all that were parties to the creation of them by deed, be annulled, diſcharged, and defeated. 1 Rep. 113. Albany's Caſe.

A conſent ex poſt facto is not of any ſignification; for it cannot be had for things which cannot be otherwiſe; per Vaughan Ch. J. Mod. 312, Fry v. Porter.

The conſent of the heir makes good a void deviſe. Chanc. Caſes, Trin. 23 Car. 2. Lord Cornbury v. Middleton. 1 C. C. 208. Conſent of remainder-man for life, tho' but verbal, is binding, and decreed to confirm building leaſes accordingly. 2 Chan. Caſes 28: Paſch. 32 Car. 2: Sidney v. The Earl of Leiceſter. Conſent to a trial of a title to land in another county than where the land lies will not help, it being an error, though ſuch conſent be of record: agreed per cur.' 2 Show. 98, pl. 97: Paſch. 32 Car. 2. B. R. Lord Clare v. Reach.

A burgeſs of a corporation conſenting to be turned out from his burgeſs's place, and the common council of the corporation removing him accordingly, does not amount to a reſignation; and a peremptory mandamus was granted to reſtore him. Holt 450: Mayor of Glouceſter's caſe.

CONSEQUENTIAL LOSSES or DAMAGES. It is a fundamental principle in law and reaſon, that he who does the firſt wrong ſhall anſwer for all conſequential damages. 12 Mod. 639: Roſwell v. Prior: but this admits of limitation. Though a man does a lawful thing, yet if any damage do thereby befal another, he ſhall anſwer if he could have avoided it; and this holds in all civil caſes. As if a man lops a tree, and the boughs fall upon another ipſo invito, yet an action lies. So if a man ſhoots at butts, and hurts another unawares. So if I have land thro' which a river runs to your mill, and I lop the ſallows growing on the river ſide which accidentally ſtop the water ſo as your mill is hindred. So if I am building my own houſe, and a piece of timber falls on my neighbour's houſe and breaks part of it. So if a man aſſaults me, and I lift up my ſtaff to defend myſelf, and ſtrike another in lifting it up; but it is otherwiſe in criminal caſes, for there actus non facit reum niſi mens ſit rea. Raym. 422, 423. See title Chance-Medley.

If I have a pond, I cannot ſo let it out that it ſhall drown my neighbour's land. Arg. Het. 119. cites 6 Ed. 4. 6. If a ſtranger drive my cattle upon your land, whereby they are diſtrained by you, I ſhall recover againſt the ſtranger for this diſtreſs by you; Lane 67, cites 9 Ed. 4. 4. A ſmith pricks the horſe of a ſervant being on his journey to pay money for his maſter to ſave the penalty of a bond, both the maſter and ſervant may have their ſeveral action on the caſe, for the ſeveral wrongs they have thereby ſuſtained; per Coke Ch. J. 2 Bulſt. 344.

Where one is party to a fraud, all which follows by reaſon of that fraud, ſhall be ſaid as done by him. Arg. Cro. J. 469. Action lies for threatening workmen to maim and proſecute them, whereby the maſter loſes the ſelling of his goods, the men not daring to go on with their work. Cro. J. 567: Garret v. Taylor. A. breaks the fence of B. by which cattle get into C.'s ground, C. ſhall have caſe againſt A. but not treſpaſs. Per Roll: Sty. 131: Cowper v. St. John. If A. beats my horſe by which he runs on B. A. is the treſpaſſer, and not B. 2 Salk. 631.

He that makes a fire in his field muſt ſee that it does no harm, and anſwer the damage if it does; but if a ſudden ſtorm riſeth which he cannot ſtop, it is a matter of evidence, and he muſt ſhew it. 1 Salk. 13. pl. 4: Turbervil v. Stamp. If a man keeps a beaſt of a ſavage nature, as a lion, &c. it is at his peril to keep him up, and he is anſwerable for all the conſequences of his getting looſe; per Raymond Ch. J. Gilb. 187. The King v. Huggins. See title Action.

CONSERVATOR, Lat.] A protector, preſerver, or maintainer; or a ſtanding arbitrator, choſen and appointed as a guarantee to compoſe and adjuſt differences that ſhould ariſe between two parties, &c. Paroch. Antiq. p. 513.

CONSERVATOR OF THE PEACE, conſervator vel cuſtos pacis.] Is he that hath an eſpecial charge to ſee the king's peace kept: and of theſe conſervators Lambard ſaith, that before the reign of Ed. III. who firſt created Juſtices of the Peace, there were divers perſons that by the common law had intereſt in keeping the peace; ſome whereof had that charge by tenure, as holding lands of the king by this ſervice, &c. And others as incident to their offices which they bore, and ſo included in the ſame, that they were nevertheleſs called by the name of their office only: alſo ſome had it ſimply, as of itſelf, and were therefore named cuſtodes pacis, wardens or conſervators of the peace. The Chamberlain of Cheſter is a conſervator of the peace in that county, by virtue of his office. 4 Inſt. 212. Sheriffs of counties at common law are conſervators of the peace; and conſtables, by the common law were conſervators, but ſome ſay they were only ſubordinate to the conſervators of the peace, as they are now to the juſtice.

The King's Majeſty is, by his office and dignity royal, the principal conſervator of the peace within all his dominions; and may give authority to any other to ſee the peace kept, and to puniſh ſuch as break it: hence it is uſually called the King's peace. The Lord Chancellor or Keeper, the Lord Treaſurer, the Lord High Steward of England, the Lord Mareſchal, and Lord High Conſtable of England, (when any ſuch officers are in being) and all the Juſtices of the court of King's Bench, (by virtue of their offices,) and the Maſter of the Rolls, (by preſcription,) are general conſervators of the peace throughout the whole kingdom, and may commit all breakers of it, or bind them in recognizances to keep it: the other judges are only ſo in their own courts. The coroner is alſo a conſervator of the peace within his own county; as is alſo the ſheriff, and both of them may take a recognizance or ſecurity for the peace. Conſtables, tythingmen, and the like, are alſo conſervators of the peace within their own juriſdictions; and may apprehend all breakers of the peace, and commit them till they find ſureties for their keeping it. 1 Comm. 350. See title Juſtices of Peace, Commitment.

CONSERVATOR OF THE TRUCE AND SAFE-CONDUCTS, conſervator induciarum & ſalvorum regis conductuum.] Was an officer appointed by the king's letters patent, whoſe charge was to inquire of all offences done againſt the King's truce and ſafe-conducts upon the main ſea, out of the liberties of the cinque ports, as the admirals cuſtomably were wont to do, and ſuch other things as are declared in Stat. 2 Hen. 5. ſt. 1. c. 6. Two men learned in the law were joined to conſervators of the truce as aſſociates; and maſters of ſhips ſworn not to attempt any thing againſt the truce, &c. And letters of requeſt and of marque were to be granted when truce was broken at ſea to make reſtitution. Stat. 4. H. 5. c. 7: See title Truce.

There was anciently a Conſervator of the privileges of the Hoſpitallers and Templars. Weſt. 2. c. 43. And the Corporation of the great level of the fens conſiſts of a governor, ſix bailiffs, twenty conſervators, and commonalty. Stat. 15 Car. 2. c. 17.

CONSIDERATIO CURIÆ, Is often mentioned in law pleadings, and where matters are determined by the court. Ideo conſideratum eſt per curiam, i. e. Therefore it is conſidered and adjudged by the court; conſideratio curiæ is the judgment of the court.

CONSIDERATION, conſideratio.] The material cauſe, quid or pro quo, of any contract, without which it will not be effectual or binding. This conſideration is either expreſſed; as when a man bargains to give ſo much, for a thing bought; or to ſell his land for 100 l. or grants it in exchange for other lands; or where I promiſe that if one will marry my daughter or build me a houſe, &c. I will give him a certain ſum of money; or one agrees for a certain ſum to do a thing. Or it is implied, when the law itſelf enforces a conſideration; as where a perſon comes to an inn, and there ſtaying eats and drinks, and takes lodging for himſelf and horſe, the law preſumes he intends to pay for both, though there be no expreſs contract for it; and therefore if he diſcharge not the houſe, the hoſt may ſtay his horſe; and ſo if a taylor makes a garment for another, and there is no expreſs agreement what he ſhall have for it; he may keep the clothes till he is paid, or ſue the party for the ſame. 5 Rep. 19: Plowd. 308: Dyer 30, 337.

Conſiderations may be conſidered either as relating to contracts generally or to deeds in particular; and further relating thereto, See titles Aſſumpſit, Deed.

As to contracts, a conſideration may be defined to be the reaſon which moves the contracting party to enter into the contract.—This conſideration muſt be a thing lawful in itſelf, or elſe the contract is void. A good conſideration is that of blood or natural affection between near relations; the ſatisfaction accruing from which, the law eſteems an equivalent for whatever benefit may move from one relation to another. 3 Rep. 83: 1 Inſt. 271: 1 Rep. 176. This conſideration may ſometimes however be ſet aſide, and the contract become void, when it tends in its conſequences to defraud creditors or other third perſons of their juſt rights. But a contract for any valuable conſideration, as for marriage, for money, for work done, or for other reciprocal contracts can never be impeached at law: and if it be of a ſufficient adequate value is never ſet aſide in equity: for the perſon contracted with has then given an equivalent in recompence and is therefore as much an owner, or a creditor as any other perſon. 2 Com. 444: Noy's Max. 87: Hob. 230. See titles Fraud; Fraudulent Conveyance.

These valuable conſiderations are divided by the Civilians into four ſpecies—Do ut des—Facio ut facias—Facio ut des.—Do ut facias, the bare mention of which is here ſufficient.

A conſideration of ſome ſort or other is ſo abſolutely neceſſary to the forming of a contract that a nudum pactum or bare agreement to do or pay any thing on one ſide without any compenſation on the other, is totally void in law: and a man cannot be compelled to perform it. Dr. & St. d. 2. c. 24. As if one man promiſes to give another 100*l.* here there is nothing contracted for or given on one ſide, and therefore there is nothing binding on the other. And however a man may or may not be bound to perform it in honour or conſcience, which the municipal laws do not take upon them to decide, certainly thoſe laws will not compel the execution of what he had no viſible inducement to engage for, and therefore our law has adopted the maxim of the civil law ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. But any degree of reciprocity will prevent the pact from being nude: nay even if the promiſe be founded on a prior moral obligation (as a promiſe to pay a juſt debt, though barred by the ſtatute of limitations) it is no longer nudum pactum. And as this rule was principally eſtabliſhed to avoid the inconvenience that would ariſe from ſetting up mere verbal promiſes, for which no good reaſon could be aſſigned, it therefore does not hold in ſome caſes where ſuch promiſe is authentically proved by written documents. 2 Comm. 445, 6.—Blackſtone inſtances voluntary bonds and notes—as to which latter, ſee Fonblanque's obſervations in Treat. Eq. 334. n.

Deeds alſo muſt be founded upon good and ſufficient conſideration, not upon an uſurious contract. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 8.—Nor upon fraud or colluſion either to deceive purchaſors, bonâ fide, or juſt and lawful creditors. Stats. 13 Eliz. c. 5: 27 Eliz. c. 4 —Any of which bad conſiderations will vacate the deed and ſubject ſuch perſons as put the ſame in ure, to forfeitures, and often to impriſonments. A deed alſo, or other grant made without any conſideration is, as it were of no effect: for it is conſtrued to enure or to be effectual, only to the uſe of the grantor himſelf. Perk. §. 533. The conſideration of deeds alſo, like that of contracts, may be either a good or valuable one.—Deeds made upon good conſideration only, are conſidered as merely voluntary, and are frequently ſet aſide in favour of creditors, and bonâ fide purchaſors. 2 Comm. 296. See further title Deeds.

A conſideration ought to be matter of profit and benefit to him to whom it is done; by reaſon of the charge or trouble of him who doth it. Cro. Car. 8. If a perſon hath diſburſed ſeveral ſums for another, without his requeſt, and afterwards ſuch other ſays, that in conſideration he hath paid the ſaid ſums for him, he promiſes to pay them: this is no conſideration, becauſe it was executed before. But it will be otherwiſe, if the ſums were paid at the requeſt of the other. Moor 220: Cro. Eliz. 282. A mere voluntary curteſy will not be a good conſideration of a promiſe: but the value and proportion of the conſideration is not material, to maintain an action; for a ſhilling or a penny, is as much binding as 100*l.* Though in theſe caſes, the jury will give damages proportionably to the loſs. Hob. 5: 10 Rep. 76.

A conſideration that is void in part, is void in the whole: and if two conſiderations be alledged, and one of them is found falſe by the jury, the action fails. Hob. 126: Cro. Eliz. 848. But if there be a double conſideration, for the grounding of a promiſe, for the breach whereof an action is brought; though one of the conſiderations be not good, yet if the other be good, and the promiſe broken, the action will lie upon that breach: for one conſideration is enough to ſupport the promiſe. 1 Lill. 297. A conſideration muſt be lawful, to ground an aſſumpſit. 2 Lev. 161. Where conſiderations are valuable, and conſiſt of two or more parts, there the performance of every part ought to be ſhewn. Cro. Eliz. 579. In caſe a deed of feoffment be made of lands; or a fine and recovery be paſſed, and no conſideration is expreſſed in the deed, &c. for the doing thereof, it ſhall be intended by the law, that it was made in truſt, for the uſe of the feoffor or conuſor; for it ſhall be preſumed he would not part with his land without a conſideration; and yet the deed ſhall be conſtrued to operate ſomething, and that which is moſt reaſonable. 1 Lill. Abr. 299.

CONSIGN, Is a word uſed by merchants, where goods are aſſigned, delivered over, or tranſmitted from beyond ſea or elſewhere to a factor, &c. Lex Mercat. See titles Merchant, Factor.

CONSILIUM, dies conſilii.] A time allowed for one accuſed to make his defence, and anſwer the charge of the accuſer—It is now uſed for a ſpeedy day appointed to argue a demurrer; which the court grants after the demurrer joined, on reading the record of the cauſe, &c.

CONSIMILI CASU, writ of entry in. A writ of entry. This and the writ in caſu proviſo lay not at common law, but are given by ſtatute Gloc. 6 Ed. 1. c. 7. and Weſtm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 24. for the reverſioner after alienation; but during the life of the tenant in dower, or other tenant for life. See F. N. B. 205, 206: 3 Comm. 183. n.

CONSISTOR, A magiſtrate ſo called: teſtibus Rogero de Gant, Willielmo conſiſtore Ceſtriæ, &c. Blount.

CONSISTORY, conſiſtorium.] Signifies as much as prætorium, or tribunal: it is commonly uſed for a council-houſe of eccleſiaſtical perſons, or place of juſtice in the ſpiritual court; a ſeſſion or aſſembly of prelates. And every archbiſhop and biſhop of every dioceſe hath a conſiſtory court, held before his chancellor, or commiſſary in his cathedral church, or other convenient place of his dioceſe, for eccleſiaſtical cauſes. 4 Inſt. 338. The biſhop's chancellor is the judge of this court, ſuppoſed to be ſkilled in the civil and canon law: and in places of the dioceſe, far remote from the biſhop's conſiſtory, the biſhop appoints a commiſſary (commiſſarius foraneus) to judge in all cauſes within a certain diſtrict, and a regiſter to enter his decrees, &c. 2 Rol. Abr. 286: Seld. Hiſt. of Tithes, 413, 414. From the ſentence of this conſiſtory court an appeal lies by virtue of Stat. 24 H. 8. c. 12, to the archbiſhop of each province reſpectively.

CONSOLIDATION, conſolidatio.] Is uſed for the uniting of two benefices into one. Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 21. Which union is to be by the aſſent of the ordinary, patron and incumbent, &c. and to be of ſmall churches lying near together. Vide titles Church, Union. This word is taken from the civil law, where it ſignifies properly an uniting of the poſſeſſion, occupancy or profit of lands, &c. with the property. See alſo Extinguiſhment, Inſurance.

CONSPIRACY, conſpiratio.] This word was formerly uſed almoſt excluſively, for an agreement of two or more perſons falſely to indict one, or to procure him to be indicted of felony; who after acquittal, ſhall have writ of conſpiracy. See 33 Edw. 1. ſtat. 2: 7 Hen. 5: 18 Hen. 6. c. 12. See poſt title Conſpirator. Now, it is no leſs commonly uſed for the unlawful combination of journeymen to raiſe their wages, or to refuſe working, except on certain ſtipulated conditions; an offence particularly provided for by Stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 15; (reviſed, continued and confirmed by Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 19, now expired;) which enacts among other things, that "if any artificer do conſpire, that they ſhall not do their works but at a certain price, or ſhall not take upon them to finiſh that another hath begun, or ſhall do but a certain work in a day, or ſhall not work but at certain times, every perſon ſo conſpiring, ſhall forfeit for the firſt offence 10*l.* or be impriſoned 20 days, for the ſecond 20*l.* or be pilloried, and for the third 40*l.* or be pilloried, loſe an ear and become infamous."—This Stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 15, appears to be yet in force, though not frequently reſorted to for remedy in this caſe; the proceeding being uſually by indictment for conſpiracy.

By the Common law there can be no doubt but that all confederates whatſoever, wrongfully to prejudice a third perſon are highly criminal. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 72. § 2.—See further Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. particularly §§ 18, 19, 20. and this Dict. titles Labourers; Servants.

Journeymen confederating and refuſing to work unleſs for certain wages, may be indicted for a conſpiracy; notwithſtanding the ſtatutes which regulate their work and wages do not direct this mode of proſecution; for this offence conſiſts in the conſpiring and not in the refuſal, and all conſpiracies are illegal though the ſubject matter of them may be lawful. See the caſe of The Tub-women v. The London Brewers, 8 Mod. 11, 320.—So alſo a bare conſpiracy to do a lawful act to an unlawful end is a crime; though no act be done in conſequence thereof. 8 Mod. 321.—The fact of conſpiring need not be proved on the trial, but may be collected by the jury from collateral circumſtances. 1 Black. Rep. 392: Stra. 144. And if the parties concur in doing the act, although they were not previouſly acquainted with each other, it is conſpiracy. Lord Mansfield in the caſe of the priſoners in the King's Bench. Hil. T. 26 G. 3.—1 Hawk. P. C. c. 72. § 2. in n.

Writ of conſpiracy lies for him that is indicted of a treſpaſs, and acquitted, though it was not felony: alſo upon an indictment for a riot. 2 Mod. 306: 5 Mod. 405. Where a man is falſely indicted of any crime, which may prejudice his fame or reputation; and though it doth not import ſlander, if it endangers his liberty; or if the indictment be injurious to his property, &c. writ of conſpiracy lieth. 3 Salk 97. But though a conſpiracy to charge falſely be indictable, yet the party ought to ſhew himſelf to be innocent; and the writ of conſpiracy lies not without an acquittal. Mod. Caſ. 137, 185, 186. Not only writ of conſpiracy, which is a civil action at the ſuit of the party; but alſo action on the caſe in the nature of a writ of conſpiracy, doth lie for a falſe and malicious accuſation of any crime, whether capital or not capital, even of high treaſon; and this though the bill of indictment is found ignoramus, or it does not go ſo far as an indictment And the ſame damages may be recovered in ſuch action, as in a writ of conſpiracy, where the party is lawfully acquitted by verdict. 1 Rol. Abr. 111, 112: 9 Rep. 56: See Gilb. Ca. 185: 10 Mod. 148, 214: Salk. 15. An action on the caſe is preferable, as being more in uſe, and the proceedings eaſier, and not attended with ſuch niceties as the writ of conſpiracy. See titles Malicious Proſecution; Action.

If one falſely and maliciouſly procure another to be arreſted, and brought before a juſtice of peace to be examined concerning a felony, &c. on purpoſe to vex and diſgrace him, and put him to charges and trouble, although he is not indicted for the ſame, yet he may have an action on the caſe; in which he need not aver that he was lawfully acquitted, as he ought to do in a writ of conſpiracy: but he muſt aver that the accuſation was falſe & malitioſe, which words are neceſſary in the declaration; and it muſt appear that there was no ground for it. And as an action on the caſe may be proſecuted, againſt one perſon, where the writ of conſpiracy or indictment doth not lie but againſt two, this action is moſt commonly brought. 1 Danv. Abr. 208, 213: 2 Inſt. 562, 638.

Conſpirators may be indicted at the ſuit of the King; and at the Common law, one may prefer an indictment againſt conſpirators, who only conſpire together, and nothing is executed: though the conſpiracy ought to be declared by ſome act, or promiſe to ſtand by one another, &c. But a bare conſpiracy will not maintain a writ of conſpiracy, at the ſuit of the party, becauſe he is not damaged by it; though it is a ground for an indictment. 9 Rep. 56: 2 Rol. Abr. 77. If the defendants can ſhow any foundation or probable cauſe of ſuſpicion, they ſhall be diſcharged: and if a man hath good cauſe of ſuſpicion that a perſon is guilty of felony, and cauſes him to be indicted, in proſecution of juſtice, action of conſpiracy will not lie: but it is otherwiſe if the proſecutor impoſes the crime of felony, where no felony was committed. 1 Rol. Abr. 115: 4 Rep. 438.

An action lies not againſt a juſtice of peace, who ſends out his warrant upon a falſe accuſation: but it lies if he makes it out without any accuſation. 1 Leon. 187. Conſpiracies ought to be out of court; for if a proſecution be ordered in a courſe of juſtice, and witneſſes appear againſt a party, &c. there ſhall be no puniſhment: and if perſons acted only as jurors in a criminal matter, or judges in open court, there is no ground for proſecution. S. P. C. 173: 12 Rep. 24. If all the defendants but one are acquitted on indictment for conſpiracy, that one muſt be acquitted alſo; becauſe one perſon alone cannot be indicted for this crime: and huſband and wife, being but one perſon, may not be indicted alone for a conſpiracy. 2 Rol. Abr. 708. The acquittal of one perſon is the acquittal of another upon indictment of conſpiracy. 3 Mod. 220. (i. e. where only two are indicted, and it is not laid or proved that they conſpired with others, unknown.) Though where one is found guilty, according to the opinion of the Lord Chief Juſtice Hale, if the other doth not come in upon proceſs, or if he dies pending the ſuit, judgment ſhall be had againſt the other. 1 Vent. 234. Writ of conſpiracy was brought againſt two perſons, and one found Not-guilty; the other ſhall not have judgment; but in action on the caſe, it had been good. Cro. Eliz. 701. And action on the caſe in the nature of a conſpiracy may be brought againſt one only. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 72. § 8. If the parties are found guilty of the conſpiracy, upon an indictment of felony, at the King's ſuit; the judgment is, that they ſhall loſe their frank law (which diſables them to be put upon any jury, to be ſworn as witneſſes, or to appear in perſon in any of of the King's courts) and that their lands, goods and chattels be seized as forfeited, and their bodies committed to prison; which is called a villainous judgment. 2 Inst. 143, 222: Crompt. Just. 156: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 72. § 9. There has been no instance of the villainous judgment since the reign of Edw. III. The usual mode of punishment at present is, by pillory, fine, imprisonment, and surety for good behaviour. Burr. 996, 1027: Stra. 196.—The Quarter Sessions have jurisdiction over this offence. Finch 80: 8 Mod. 321. And on motion in arrest of judgment, the defendant must be personally present in court. Stra. 1227: Burr. 931.

The matter of the conspiracy ought to touch a man's life, where the villainous judgment is imposed. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 72. For conspiring to charge a person with poisoning another, &c. one of the parties was fined 1000 l. and some others had judgment of the pillory, and to be burnt in the cheek with the letters F. and C. to signify false conspirators. Moor 816. As fine and imprisonment is the usual punishment at this day on indictment for conspiracy, so on writ of conspiracy, &c. the party shall be fined, and render damages. See further 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 72. at large.

Conspirators, conspiratores.] By Stat. 33 E. 1. st. 2, are defined to be those that do bind themselves by oath, covenant, or other alliance, that every of them shall aid the other falsely and maliciously to indict persons: or falsely to move or maintain pleas, &c. And such as retain men in the country, with liveries, or fees, to maintain their malicious enterprises, which extends as well to the takers as the givers; and stewards and bailiffs of great lords, who, by their office or power undertake to bear and maintain quarrels, pleas or debates, that concern other parties than such as relate to the estate of their lords or themselves. 2 Inst. 384, 562. And against conspirators, false informers and imbracers of inquest, the King hath provided a writ in the Chancery; and the justices of either bench and justices of assise, shall, on every plaint, award inquest thereupon. Stat. 28 E. 1. st. 3. c. 10. From the description of conspirators, in several of our old law books, conspiracy is taken generally, and confounded with maintenance and champerty; see those titles. Besides these, there are conspirators in treason; by plotting against the Government, &c. See title Treason.

CONSTABLE.

On this subject, recourse has been had to a very useful, accurate and ingenious performance on "The Office of a Constable"; [8vo Pamphlet 1791;] which appears, tho' published without the author's name, to come from the pen of a gentleman intimately versed in English antiquities; and to whom the Publick are indebted for many, more amusing and other equally instructive, performances.—If it should be objected, that a little too much asperity is attached to some of his remarks on this subject, he may plead in his excuse, that as in the body natural, so also in the body politick, where lenitives have been applied in vain, it is sometimes painfully necessary to recur to corrosives. The effect of this kind of observations, is, it is hoped, preserved in the following abridgment; though the "hard words, jealousies, and fears" are conveyed in gentler language.

The Origin of the word Constable, erroneously sought for in the Saxon language, is undoubtedly to be found in the comes stabuli of the Eastern Empire; who was at first, as his title imports, no more than superintendant of the imperial stables; or, in other words, the Emperor's Master of the Horse; but having in process of time obtained the command of the army, his name, (corrupted into constabulus and constabularius; see Spelman.) began to signify a commander: and with this signification appears to have been introduced into England at the Norman Conquest; or perhaps sooner.

The Constable of England, or Lord-High-Constable; was anciently an officer of the highest dignity and importance in the realm. He was the leader of the King's armies; and had the cognizance of all contracts and other matters touching arms or war. 13 R. 2. st. 1. c. 2.—and see Maddox's History of the Exchequer, p. 27. He sate as Judge with the Earl-Marshal having precedence of him in the court of Chivalry—and he is by some of our books also called Marshal.—See title Marshal.

This office, which appears to have been granted by William the Conqueror, to Walter Earl of Gloucester, or according to others to William Fitzosborne or Roger de Mortimer, became hereditary in two different families, as annexed to the earldom of Hereford: and in that right after a lapse of near two centuries, was revived by judgment of law, in the person of Edward Stafford Duke of Buckingham; who, being attainted of high treason, an. 13 H. 8, this office became forfeited to the crown. Since this period there has been no Lord High Constable, except pro hac vice at a Coronation, or on other solemn occasions.

Constables of Castles, were keepers or governors of the castles of the King; or of Great Barons, and who were frequently hereditary or by feudal tenure; such were the Constable of the Tower, the Constable of London, or Baynard's Castle, the Constables of the castles of Dover, Windsor, Chester, Flint, &c. some of which offices though not now hereditary, are remaining to this day. These are the constables intended in Magna Charta, cc. 17, 20; and who, in the Stat. of Westm. 1. (3 E. 1.) c. 15, are called Constables of Fees, and there considered as keepers of prisons; a constituent part indeed of all ancient castles. See 2 Inst. 31. The statute of 5 H. 4. c. 10, reciting the oppressions of these constables, and enacting that none be imprisoned but in the common gaol, seems to have put an end to a race of tyrants, who by their mis-conduct had rendered themselves odious to the people.

A Constable of the Exchequer is mentioned in the Dialogus Scaccarii, l. 1. c. 5—in the Stat. de districtione Scaccarii, 51 H. 3. st. 5—in Fleta, l. 2. c. 31—and in Madox's History of that Court, p. 274.

The Constable of the Staple is also mentioned in some old statutes. See 27 E. 3. c. 8: 15 R. 2. c. 9: 23 H. 8. c. 6.

The Constable of the Hundred, or the High, Chief or Head Constable (as he is otherwise called) is next to be spoken of. By the Stat. of Winton or Winchester, 13 Ed. 1. (c. 6,) it is ordained that in every hundred or franchise there shall be chosen two constables to make the view of armour, and to present the defaults of armour, and of the suits of towns and of highways, &c.

Lambard (on Conſtables, p. 3) Coke (4 Inſt. 267) and Hale (2 P. C. 96) all agree in declaring that Conſtables of the hundred were firſt introduced by this ſtatute. (And ſee Cro. Eliz. 375). And though it has been aſſerted that they were officers and conſervators of the peace at Common law, and that the Stat. of Winton only enlarged their authority, yet no evidence has hitherto been produced to that purpoſe.—See Salk. 175, 381: 11 Mod. 215: 2 Ld. Raym. 1193, 5.—The firſt mention made of the High Conſtable in any ſtatute ſubſequent to that of Winton, is in Stat. 3 E. 4. c. 1.

Nothing, however, can be more certain than that the Conſtable of the hundred, or High Conſtable, whether he be allowed an officer at the Common law, or not, was inſtituted long before the Stat. of Winton. This curious fact is aſcertained by a writ or mandate of 36 H. 8, preſerved in the Adverſaria to Watts's edition of Matthew Paris, and from which cc. 4 & 6 of the Stat. of Winton are evidently taken; though it has hitherto eſcaped the notice of every writer or ſpeaker upon the ſubject. By this writ it is provided, "that in every hundred there ſhould be conſtituted a CHIEF CONSTABLE, at whoſe mandate all thoſe of his hundred ſworn to arms, ſhould aſſemble and be obſervant to him, for the doing of thoſe things which belong to the conſervation of the king's peace." No mention of this officer, it is believed, can be any where found prior to the date of this inſtrument; which perhaps may no more determine the queſtion as to his original creation than the Stat. of Winton. Be this as it will, the diſcovery ought at leaſt to teach thoſe who are deſirous of explaining the antiquities of our law, to look into matters of record, and to truſt very little to opinion.

The CONSTABLE OF THE VILL (or Petty Conſtable, as he is frequently called, to diſtinguiſh him from the officer laſt mentioned) is he who is generally underſtood by the term Conſtable, when mentioned without any peculiar addition.

THIS CONSTABLE has been repeatedly acknowledged by the law, to be "one of the moſt ancient officers in the realm for the conſervation of the peace," Poph. 13: 4 Inſt. 265. It muſt be confeſſed, however, that no mention of him by this identical name, is any where found to occur anterior to the writ or mandate of King Henry III, already mentioned; whereby it is alſo provided, that in every village or townſhip, there ſhould be conſtituted a conſtable or two, according to the number of the inhabitants. But it is pretty certain that Lord Coke's idea is right, and that This officer is actually owing to the inſtitution of the frank-pledge, uſually attributed to King ALFRED, and was in fact originally the ſenior or chief pledge of the tithing or decima. See the Stats. 2 E. 3. c. 3: 20 H. 6. c. 14: 28 H. 8. c. 10.

Thus it appears that the ordinance of Hen. III, far from inſtituting the office, merely enlarged the number of officers, placing them in towns and villages, inſtead of franchiſes; ſince it might frequently happen, that a manor of great extent, had only a ſingle conſtable for ſeveral townſhips; a caſe exactly ſimilar, indeed, ſometimes occurring at this day, where a townſhip, comprehending ſeveral hamlets, equally populous it may be with itſelf, has only one conſtable for the whole. [For a conſtablewick cannot be created at this day, unleſs by act of parliament. 1 Mod. 13.]

We find the Conſtable beginning to be familiarily known by that name, in the time of King Edward I; but not previouſly. In ſome articles of enquiry at the Eyre, perhaps, or Trailbaſton, certainly in the time of Edward I, are items in which this officer is mentioned. Coll. Madox. Muſ. Brit. iii, 285.—He ſeems alſo to be meant in the two chapters of the Eyre, as given in Fleta, lib. 1. c. 20. §§ 126, 133.

He is named in the Stat. of 2 E. 3. c. 3, for the firſt time; as alſo in thoſe of 4 E. 3. c. 10: 5 E. 3. c. 14: 25 E. 3. ſt. 1. c. 6: and 36 E. 3. ſt. 1. c. 2; and in ſeveral ſtatutes now repealed or obſolete, in the reigns of R. 2, H. 4, and H. 6: 1 H. 7. c. 7. &c.

Notwithſtanding any thing that has been ſaid or omitted in the courſe of this enquiry, it ſeems highly probable that, at the Common law, and before the mandate of Henry III, the Conſtable of the hundred, and the Conſtable of the manor were officers of the ſame nature and authority, originating at the ſame time, and differing only as to the extent of their ſeveral diſtricts; in ſhort, that they bore to each other the ſame analogy as ſubſiſted between the bailiff of the hundred and the bailiff of the manor. It follows that the conſtable of the hundred neither poſſeſſed nor could have exerciſed any more authority within the precinct of the latter, than the conſtable of one manor poſſeſſed or could have exerciſed in another; the manor being to all intents and purpoſes exempt from, and excluded out of the hundred.

Lord Bacon obſerves, that though the High Conſtable's authority hath the more ample circuit "yet I do not find, ſaye he, that the petty conſtable is ſubordinate to the high conſtable, or to be ordered or commanded by him." Thoſe caſes wherein it has been adjudged, that the being ſubject to a particular leet, ſhall not excuſe a man from ſerving the office of conſtable of the hundred, ſeem therefore to have been decided upon a wrong principle. See 3 Keb. 197, 230, 1: Freem. 348: 11 Mod. 215.

All this is ſpoken with an exception, not of acts of parliament only, but alſo of the powers and pretenſions exerciſed or aſſerted by the Quarter Seſſions, which latter has now uſurped ſo much and ſo long, with reſpect to the election and controul, both of the conſtable of the hundred and the conſtable of the vill, that it is become difficult, if not impoſſible, to determine, with any degree of preciſion, the actual rights of either.

In conſidering the powers and duties of this important officer, we may divide our reſearches, according to the treatiſe already quoted, under the following heads.

I. 1. His Quality, and 2. Qualifications.
II. 1. His Election; and 2. Who are exempted.
III. His Power and Authority.
IV. His Duty. [Theſe two are in many inſtances co-extenſive, and are therefore carefully to be compared together].
V. His Protection, Indemnity, and Allowances; and laſtly, VI. His Reſponſibility and Puniſhment.

But firſt it may be neceſſary to ſtate a few particulars as to the HIGH CONSTABLE, or Conſtable of the hundred or ſimilar diviſion; who is as much the officer of the juſtices of the peace as the Conſtable of the vill. Fort. 128. He is elected at the leet or turn of the hundred, or by juſtices of the peace. 1 Ro. Ab. 535: Bulſt. 174: 3 Keb.

197. And by Stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 25. § 8, 9, in Weſtminſter a High Conſtable is to be elected annually by the Dean or High Steward or his deputy at a court leet.—As to his power—he may hold petty or ſtatute ſeſſions (for hiring ſervants) according to ancient uſage. Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. But it is doubtful whether he can arreſt for breach, or take ſurety, of the peace. 1 Salk. 381: Cro. Eliz. 375, 6.—He is ſaid to be an officer within the annual mutiny-act, for billeting of ſoldiers; and liable to the penalties thereby inflicted for mal-practice in ſo doing; and he may occaſionally make a deputy, whoſe acts in his principal's abſence, will be good. 1 Blackſt. 350: 3 Burr. 1262: but ſee the act § 1.—Under Stats. 4 E. 4. c. 1, 39 Eliz. c. 20, and 13 Geo. 1. c. 23. He may determine complaints of clothiers, and ſee after abuſes mentioned in thoſe acts.—His Duty is.—To preſent thoſe who harbour ſtrangers for whom they will not anſwer. 13 Ed. 1. c. 6.—To deliver liſts of perſons qualified to ſerve on juries. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25: and ſee 3 & 4 Ann. c. 18.—On receiving notice of any robbery to make freſh ſuit and hue and cry after the felons, and to defend actions againſt the hundred by thoſe robbed. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. See title Hue and Cry, and Stat. 13 E. 1. c. 6.—To collect the county rate, and pay it to the treaſurer, or account, at the Seſſions, on pain of impriſonment. 12 Geo. 2. c. 29.—The Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5, as to his paying the allowance for vagrants is altered by Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 34.—To enforce the laws againſt profane ſwearing 19 Geo. 2. c. 21.—To give notice to the conſtables of the orders of the Lieutenant or Deputy Lieutenant as to the militia. 26 Geo. 3. c. 107.—This officer is removable by the juſtices of the peace, on good cauſe. Bulſt. 174: 1 Salk. 150.—He ſhall be diſcharged from ſerving the office of collector of the poor's rate during his office. 2 Jones 46.

I. 1. The Constable was ordained to repreſs felons and to keep the peace, of which he is a conſervator by the Common law. 10 E. 4. 18: Cromp. Juſt. 201: 4 Inſt. 265.

His office is therefore, Firſt, original or primitive as conſervator of the peace; and Secondly, miniſterial and relative to juſtices of the peace, coroners, ſheriffs, &c. whoſe precepts he is to execute. 1 Hale P. C. 88.

He is however an officer only for his own precinct, and cannot execute a warrant directed to the conſtable of the vill, or to all conſtables, generally, of that particular juriſdiction; for he is a conſtable no where elſe; nor is he compellable to do it, though the warrant be directed to him by name; but he may, if he will, and ſo indeed may any other perſon. 1 Hale P. C. 459: Comb. 446: Carth. 508: 1 Salk. 176: 3 Salk. 99: 2 Ld. Raym. 1300: 12 Mod. 316: Foſt. 312, n: 2 Black. Rep. 1135: 1 H. Black. 13.—See Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 55; under which a conſtable may execute a warrant in any other county, &c. if indorſed by a juſtice of ſuch other county, &c. and carry the offender before a juſtice of ſuch other county, &c. and if the offender ſhall give bail, the conſtable is to deliver the recognizance, examination or confeſſion of the offender, and all other proceedings relating thereto to the clerk of aſſiſes, or clerk of the peace of the county, &c. where the offence was committed, under the penalty of 10*l.* But if the offence ſhall not be bailable, or the offender ſhall not give bail, the conſtable ſhall carry the offender before a juſtice of the county where the offence was committed.

He is an officer of the court of Quarter-Seſſions, over whom they have power. Comb. 204.

2. The Common law requires, that every conſtable ſhould be idoneus homo, i. e. apt and fit to execute the ſaid office; and he is ſaid in law to be idoneus, who has theſe three things, honeſty, knowledge and ability: honeſty to execute his office truly, without malice, affection or partiality; knowledge to know what he ought duly to do; and ability as well in eſtate as body, that he may intend and execute his office when need is, diligently; and not for impotence or poverty neglect it. 8 Rep. 41 b. And if one be elected conſtable who is not idoneus, he by the law may be diſcharged of his office, and another who is idoneus appointed in his place.

He muſt be an inhabitant of the place for which he is choſen. 12 Mod. 256.

He ought not to be the keeper of a publick houſe. 6 Mod. 42.—And this is made an expreſs diſqualification in Weſtminſter, by Stat. 29 Geo. II. c. 25.

II. 1. The Constable is choſen by the Common law, at the leet; or, where there is no leet, at the tourn; ſometimes by the ſuitors and ſometimes by the Steward; and now in many towns and pariſhes by the pariſhioners; all according to ancient and particular uſage. If he be preſent when choſen, he is to take the oath in court; if abſent, he may be ſworn before a (ſingle) juſtice of the peace. But in the latter caſe he ought to have ſpecial notice of his election, and a time and place ſhould be appointed for his taking the oath, [well and truly to ſerve the office]. 4 Inſt. 265: 2 Salk. 502: Comb. 416: 2 Jones 212: Salk. 175: Ld. Raym. 70, 1: 2 Stra. 1119, 1149: 5 Mod. 130, 1: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 10. § 46.

Conſtables of London, (which city is divided into twenty-ſix wards, and every ward into precincts, in each whereof is a conſtable), are nominated by the inhabitants of each precinct on St. Thomas's day, and confirmed, or otherwiſe, at the court of wardmote; and after they are confirmed, they are ſworn into their offices at a court of Aldermen, on the next Monday after Twelfth day; their oath is long and particular, and goes to duties now ſeldom performed, but regulated by articles of the wardmote inqueſt, which directs the ſeveral matters to be obſerved by the conſtable; who is in the nature of a general ſuperintendant of the morals of the inhabitants; and he ought to notice all new-comers, who if of bad character, may be required to give ſecurity for their good behaviour, or be impriſoned; and ſee Carth. 129, 138.—Every Conſtable may execute warrants through the whole city.

In caſe a Conſtable die, or quit the precinct, two juſtices may make and ſwear a new one, till the lord of the manor ſhall hold a court leet, or till the next quarter ſeſſions, who may either approve of the conſtable ſo made, or appoint another. Alſo, if he continue above a year in office, the quarter ſeſſions may diſcharge him, and put another in his place until the lord ſhall hold a court. But juſtices of the peace, either in or out of the quarter ſeſſions, cannot in any other caſe diſcharge a conſtable choſen in the leet. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12: Comb. 328: Stra. 789, 1050, 1213: Bulſt. 174: Sty. 362: Barn. 51.

In the leet or tourn where one is elected conſtable, and refuſes to be ſworn, he may, if preſent, be fined for the contempt; if abſent, amerced or ſubjected to a penalty for non-acceptance of the office according to the order. 5 Mod. 130.

Though the juſtices of the peace have not originally the making of the conſtable, it is matter of the peace within their general juriſdiction, and they may examine it in their ſeſſions. 2 Jon. 212: ſee 1 Mod. 13. And on juſt cauſe remove them. 4 Inſt. 267. And by warrant compel them to appear and be ſworn. 5 Mod. 128: All. 78.

III. THE CONSTABLE hath as good authority in his place, as the Chief Juſtice of England hath in his. 1 Ro. Rep. 238.

It may ſave much trouble to the enquirer to claſs the objects of his power and authority, as well as thoſe of his duty, in alphabetical order; a method in ſome meaſure formerly purſued in Law Dictionaries, but not with ſufficient care and accuracy.

1. Affray.—If He ſee one making affray, or aſſaulting another, or breaking the peace, or hear or know one to menace, or threaten to kill, wound, maim, or beat another, the Conſtable may take and ſet him in the ſtocks, or commit him to priſon, (as he may perſons about to make an affray, and commanded to diſperſe,) till the offender find ſurety to keep the peace, or for his good behaviour. Cromp. C. c. 11. § 15 n.—Stat. 22 G. 3. c. 58. empowers constables and watchmen to arrest persons suspected of conveying away stolen goods by night.—Probable grounds are very many, e. g. common fame; hue and cry levied, goods found on a person, &c. Cromp. J. P. 87, 154: Ow. 121: 12 Rep. 92: 2 Hale P. C. 81: 3 Bulst. 287.—In case of a felony committed, or in danger to be committed, (as if one beat or wound another dangerously,) the constable, either upon complaint, or hue and cry, may break open the doors to take the offender, if upon demand and notice, he will not yield himself, or entrance be refused; or if the constable act under a justice's warrant for treason or felony. And he may imprison the offender till the injured party is out of danger. 2 Hale P. C. 82, 90, 4: Cromp. J. P. 141: Brownl, 211: 1 Bulst. 146.—The Constable may officially imprison for a time to prevent felony; as if he see two with weapons drawn ready to fight: or if a man in a fury be purposed to kill, maim, or beat another. He may also arrest and imprison one for a felonious intent, as if a man bring a helpless infant into a field or elsewhere, and leave it to perish for want; and the constable see this himself. Moore 284: Poph. 13. Though no felony has actually been committed, constable and his assistants are justified in arresting on a given charge of felony. Doug. 359, 360, and in this case constable may discharge the person suspected. Cro. El. 202, 752: Dalt. 272. He may arrest persons coming before the King's justices with force and arms, or who bring force in affray of the peace, or go or ride armed in a warlike and unnecessary manner. Stat. 2 E. 3. c. 3.—And see the Stat. 5 E. 3. c. 14, as to his arresting of Roberdesmen, Wastours, and Drawlatches.—He may take aid of his neighbours to arrest another, or in execution of any part of his duty at Common law, and under several statutes, and they are compelled to assist him; upon affray or such like he may raise the people of the realm to cause the peace to be observed. Cromp. J. P. 141: 201 b: Comb. 309.—He may carry one that he has arrested for felony to the common gaol, and the gaoler is bound to receive him. 1 Hale P. C. 595.

As to what Constable shall do with a prisoner when taken, if for an affray, see Affray above.—In other offences he may convey his prisoners to the sheriff, or his jailor of the county; or to the jailor of the franchise in which they are taken, who are bound to receive them, Stat. 4 E. 3. c. 10: See Stats. 5 H. 4. c. 10: 23 H. 8. c. 2. But the best way in all cases is, to take him to a justice of peace, to bail or discharge him; till when it is the duty of the constable to keep and imprison an offender. 2 H. P. C. 95, 120.—If a felon fly, constable ought to seize his goods, and keep them for the King's use, and send hue and cry after him. Stat. 27 El. c. 13: Dalt. 289, 340: Cromp. J. P. 201 b. and on notice of robbery, is to make hue and cry. Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 16.

Armed going. See ante 2.

Assault. See ante 1, 2.

3. Breaking open Doors. See this division passim.—Other occasions not yet mentioned which justify so doing, are—A capias utlagatum, or capias pro fine.—On forcible entry and detainer found by inquisition, or view of justices.—On escape from a lawful arrest.—On warrant to search for stolen goods if found. 2 Hale P. C. 151, 117.—It is best always, and generally requisite, first to signify the cause of the constable's coming, and to demand that the door should be opened. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 14: Fost. 136, 320.

4. Deserters; Constable may apprehend persons suspected to be such, and take them before a justice; under the annual mutiny acts; and he is allowed 20*s.* for each.

5. Disorderly Houses and Persons.—If there be disorderly drinking or noise at an unseasonable time of night, especially in inns, taverns, or ale-houses, the constable or his watch demanding entrance, and being refused, may break open the doors to see and suppress the disorder; as is constantly done in London and Middlesex. 2 Hale P. C. 95.—He or his watchmen, (or indeed any men,) may apprehend indecent night walkers, and commit them till morning. 2 Hale P. C. 98.—And he may arrest and commit lewed persons frequenting bawdy-houses, to make them find security for their good behaviour. Cromp. J. P. 153 b. See title Bawdy-houses, and Stat. 5 E. 3. c. 14.

Felons.—Arrest, imprisonment, and flight of. See ante 2.

Hue and Cry.—See ante 2 ad finem; and IV.

6. Husbandry.—He may grant testimonials under seal to servants in, licensing them to change their masters. Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. And by the same statute, he is to cause all persons mete for labour, to serve by the day, in mowing, reaping, &c. or on refusal, set them in the stocks. By Stats. 43 Eliz. c. 7, and 15 Car. 2. c. 2, persons unlawfully cutting corn growing, robbing orchards or gardens, breaking fences, pulling up fruit trees, spoiling woods, &c. (not being felony,) not satisfying the damages, shall be committed to the constable to be whipped.

Imprisonment.—See this division passim.

7. Inn-keepers.—The constable on complaint may compel them to receive guests. Br. Act. sur le Case, 76: Cromp. J. P. 201. See Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 9.

8. Insult, to himself; He may imprison any one insulting, assaulting, or making affray on him, or opposing him, though only verbally, in execution of his office. 1 Ro. Rep. 238: Crom. J. P. 131: Clayt. 10.

9. Lunatics or Madmen.—The constable may take and imprison; and he shall not be charged if they die there. Ow. 98. and see Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. § 20. and this Dict. title Lunatics.

10. Peace, Surety of. See ante 1, 2.—The constable may take surety by obligation in his own name, but not otherwise, and may certify it at the sessions. 10 E. 4. c. 18: Br. Peace, pl. 2: Sureties, pl. 23: Cromp. J. P. 131: 4 Inst. 265: Cro El. 375, 6.

11. Plague, in the time of—Constable may command infected persons to keep in the house. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 31. See title Plague.

12. Warrants.—Where constable has a warrant, he is tied up thereby, to act only as it directs. 11 Mod. 248.—If he arrests on a general warrant, (before some justice) he may carry his prisoner to what justice he will. 5 Rep. 59. See Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 55, as to indorsed warrants, by which offenders may be taken in any county; ante I. 1.

Though the constable is not named in 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 10, nor appointed to be the officer to execute the warrants, yet the justices may command him to execute them. 1 Salk. 381. And a constable need not return his warrant, rant, but ſhould keep it for his own juſtification.—See Stat. 24 Geo. 1. c. 44: 1 Salk. 381: 2 Ld. Raym. 1196.

The Conſtable is the proper officer to a juſtice of peace, and bound to execute his lawful warrants; and therefore where a ſtatute authoriſes a juſtice to convict a perſon of any crime, and to levy the penalty, &c. without ſaying to whom ſuch warrant ſhall be directed, the conſtable is the officer to execute the warrant, and muſt obey it. 5 Mod. 130: 1 Salk. 381. Conſtable muſt at his peril take notice that his warrant is by one in the commiſſion of the peace. 12 Mod. 347. and that the matter is within the juſtice's juriſdiction. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 13. § 11.—And if guilty of miſdemeanour in executing a lawful warrant, he becomes a treſpaſſer. 12 Mod. 344.—But a warrant properly penned, (even though the magiſtrate who iſſue it ſhould exceed his juriſdiction,) will by Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44, at all events indemnify the officer who executes it miniſterially. 4 Comm. 288.

13. Watch.—Conſtable hath power ex officio to keep a watch for the purpoſe to raiſe or purſue hue and cry upon robberies committed, by the ſtatute of Winton, c. 1; to ſearch for lodgers in ſuburbs of cities that are ſuſpicious perſons, which is to be done every week, or at leaſt once in fifteen days, by the ſame ſtatute c. 4; for ſuch as ride or go armed, by the ſtatute of 2 E. 3. c. 3; for night walkers and perſons ſuſpicious, either by night or day, by the ſtatute of 5 E. 3. c. 4. And it is in his power to hold ſuch watches as often as he pleaſes, and the watchmen are his miniſters and aſſiſtants, and are under the ſame protection with him, and may act as he doth, and regularly he ought to be in company with them in their walk and watch. 2 Hale P. C. 97.

A watchman hath a double protection of the law, viz. 1. As an aſſiſtant to the conſtable when he is preſent or in the watch. 2. Purely as a watchman ſet by order of law; and the law takes notice of his authority; and the killing of a watchman in the execution of his office is murder. 2 Hale P. C. ubi ſup.—If an inhabitant refuſe to watch in his turn, conſtable may ſet him in the ſtocks. 3 Lev. 208.—See Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 90, for regulating the nightly watch and duty of conſtables in Weſtminſter; 10 Geo. 2. c. 22. for London, and other acts only of very local importance, and which thoſe who are to act under ſhould diligently conſult. See this Dict. title Watchmen.

IV. The Constable's duty and office continue till his ſucceſſor be ſworn. 12 Mod. 256. Though he may for juſt cauſe be removed by the authority which elected him. Bulſt. 174: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 10. § 37, 38.

V. If a Constable doth not his duty, he may be indicted and fined by the juſtices of peace; on the other hand, he is protected by law, in the execution of his duty.

It has been already mentioned that he ſhall have aid of the county to pacify affrays.

By Stat. 7 Jac. 1. cap. 5, If any action is brought againſt a conſtable, for any thing done by virtue of his office, he, and alſo all others who in his aid, or by his command, ſhall do any thing concerning his office, may plead the general iſſue, and give the ſpecial matter in evidence, and if he recovers he ſhall have double coſts. But this muſt be certified on the record by the judge. 2 Vent. 45: Doug. 294.—And ſee Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 21, againſt profane ſwearing, which gives treble coſts.

By Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44, No action ſhall be brought againſt any conſtable, or other officer, or any perſon acting by his order, and in his aid, for any thing done in obedience to any warrant of a juſtice of peace, until demand of the peruſal and copy of ſuch warrant, and the ſame hath been refuſed or neglected by the ſpace of ſix days; and in caſe after ſuch demand, and compliance therewith, any action ſhall be brought againſt ſuch conſtable, &c. without making the juſtice a defendant; then on producing and proving ſuch warrant, the jury ſhall give a verdict for the defendant, notwithſtanding any defect of juriſdiction in ſuch juſtice; and if ſuch action be brought jointly againſt ſuch juſtice, and alſo againſt ſuch conſtable, &c. then on proof of ſuch warrant, the jury ſhall find for ſuch conſtable, &c. and if the verdict ſhall be given againſt the juſtice, the plaintiff ſhall recover his coſts againſt him, to be taxed ſo as to include coſts plaintiff ſhall be liable to pay to ſuch defendant, &c. No action ſhall be brought againſt any conſtable, &c. unleſs commenced within ſix calendar months after the act committed.—This ſtatute extends only to actions of tort. See Bullei's N. P. 24.

The charges of ſending malefactors to jail, were at Common law to be borne by the vill, in which they were apprehended. 1 Hale. P. C. 96. But now under Stats. 3 Jac. 1. c. 10, and 27 Geo. 2. c. 3, where a malefactor has not ſufficient property in the county where he is taken, on application by the conſtable or officer conveying him, a juſtice of peace may on oath examine into and aſcertain aſcertain the reaſonable expences to be allowed; and by warrant without fee, order the treaſurer of the county to pay the ſame; except in Middleſex, where ſuch expences are to be paid by the overſeers of the place where the offender was taken.

If in the execution of his office, and acting within his own diſtrict, after competent notice that he is conſtable, he, or any that come to his aſſiſtance, be killed, it is murder; although the party killing do not know his perſon. 1 Hale P. C. 9. 459. 460. 1: 2 Ld. Raym. 1300. But ſee Leach's caſes in Crown Law 211.

If two men are combating, and the conſtable come to part them and is hurt, he ſhall have action of treſpaſs; and if he hurt them, they ſhall not have action againſt him. And ſo of thoſe who aid him; every man who is aſſiſting to the conſtable in the execution of his office having the ſame protection that the law gives to the conſtable. Cromp. J. P. 130: 2 Hale P. C. 97.

If he be removed without juſt cauſe, the court of King's Bench will by rule of court order him to be reſtored to his place. Bulſt. 174.

A Juſtice of peace's warrant is a ſufficient juſtification of a conſtable in a matter within the juriſdiction of ſuch juſtice. Stra. 711. See ante III. 12.

By Stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 19, Every conſtable is every three months, and within fourteen days after he goes out of office, to deliver to the overſeers of the poor an account entered in a book, kept for the purpoſe, and ſigned by him, of all ſums by him expended and received on account of the pariſh, &c. which overſeers are within fourteen days to lay the ſame before the inhabitants, and, if approved, are to pay the money due out of the poor rates; but, if diſallowed, are to deliver the book back to the conſtable, who may produce it before a juſtice of peace, giving reaſonable notice to the overſeers; which juſtice is to examine the account, determine objections, ſettle the ſum due, and enter it in, and ſign the account; and the overſeers are to pay ſuch ſum out of the poor's rate; but may appeal (giving notice) to the quarter-ſeſſions.

VI. A CONSTABLE arreſting one poſſeſſed of money, who dies, is chargeable with the money. And ſo where he takes from a felon money of which he had robbed another, even though he ſhould be afterwards robbed of it himſelf. Ow. 121.

Neglecting a duty incumbent on him, either by Common law, or by ſtatute, he is for his default indictable. 1 Salk. 381: 2 Ro. Rep. 78.

If he will not return his warrant, or certify what he has done under it, he may be fined. 6 Mod. 83: 1 Salk. 381; but ſee 5 Mod. 96: Gib. 192.

If he wilfully lets a felon eſcape out of the ſtocks, and go at large, it is felony. 1 Hale P. C. 596. And it ſeems generally agreed, that all voluntary eſcapes in the officer, amount to the ſame crime as the offender was guilty of, whether treaſon or felony. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 19. § 22 & ſeq.

It is a miſdemeanour in him to diſcharge an offender brought to the watch-houſe by a watchman in the night. 2 Burr. 867. But ſee III. 2.

He is liable to various pecuniary and ſometimes perſonal puniſhments, on neglecting the duty impoſed on him by ſeveral ſtatutes.

APPOINTMENT of a DEPUTY.

I A. B. Conſtable of C. in the county of D. do hereby make, ſubſtitute and appoint E. F. of the ſame place, yeoman, my true and lawful Deputy in the office aforeſaid, as long as I ſhall hold the ſame; or thus, during the continuance of my will and pleaſure, [or for any particular purpoſe] dated, &c.

For a command or PROCLAMATION for RIOTERS to diſperſe, See title RIOT.

CONSTAT,

CONSTAT, Lat.] The name of a certificate, which the clerk of the pipe, and auditors of the Exchequer, make at the requeſt of any perſon who intends to plead or move in that court, for the diſcharge of any thing: and the effect of it, is the certifying what conſtat (appears) upon record, touching the matter in queſtion. See Stats. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 4: 13 Eliz. c. 6. A conſtat is held to be ſuperior to an ordinary certificate, becauſe it contains nothing but what is evident on record. And the exemplification under the great ſeal, of the inrolment of any letters-patent, is called a conſtat. Co. Lit. 225.

CONSTRUCTIVE TREASON. The Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 2, was made to define treaſon, and prevent the ſubject from being condemned for conſtructive treaſon. See title Treaſon.

CONSUETUDINARIUS, A ritual or book, containing the rites and forms of divine offices, or the cuſtoms of abbeys and monaſteries: it is mentioned in Brampton.

CONSUETUDINIBUS ET SERVICIIS, Is a writ of right cloſe, which lies againſt the tenant that deforceth his lord of the rent or ſervice due to him. Reg. Orig. 159: F. N. B. 151. When the writ is brought by the party in the right only, he ſhall count of the ſeiſin of his anceſtor, and the writ be in the debet; but when he counts of his own ſeiſin, then the writ is in the debet et ſolet, &c. And if the party ſay in the writ ut in redditibus et arreragiis, theſe words prove that the demandant himſelf was ſeiſed of the ſervices; and then if he count in ſuch writ of ſeiſin of his anceſtors, and not of his own ſeiſin, the writ ſhall abate: ſo that if he will bring a writ of cuſtoms and ſervices of the ſeiſin of his anceſtors, he ought to leave theſe words ut in redditibus, &c. out of the writ. Where a perſon brings a writ of cuſtoms and ſervices againſt any tenant, and by count demands homage, the writ ought to make ſpecial mention thereof; as ut in homagio, &c. or the writ ſhall abate. New Nat. Brev. 338: F. N. B. 151. If this writ be brought againſt tenant for life, where the remainder is over in fee, there the tenant may pray in aid of him in the remainder, &c.

CONSUL, Lat.] In our law books ſignifies an earl. Bract. l. 1. c. 8, tells us, that as comes is derived from comitatu, ſo conſul is derived from conſulendo: and in the laws of Edward the Confeſſor, mention is made of vicecomites and viceconſules. Blount.—Conſuls among the ancient Romans, were chief officers, of which two were yearly choſen, to govern the city of Rome. Thoſe who now paſs under the name of Conſuls reſiding in England ſent from foreign nations, and in foreign ports ſent from England, are merchants, or perſons of eminence and knowledge, appointed to take care of the affairs and intereſts of merchants. See Lex. Mercat.

CONSULTA ECCLESIA, A church full, or provided for. Cowel.

CONSULTATION, conſultatio.] A writ whereby a cauſe having been removed by Prohibition from the Eccleſiaſtical court, to the King's court, is returned thither again; for if the judges of the King's court, upon comparing the libel with the ſuggeſtion of the party, find the ſuggeſtion falſe, or not proved, and therefore the cauſe to be wrongfully called from the Eccleſiaſtical court, then upon this conſultation or deliberation they decree it to be returned; whereupon the writ in this caſe obtained, is called a Conſultation. Reg. Orig. 44, &c. Statute of Writ of Conſultations, 24 Ed. 1.

This writ is in nature of a procedendo; but properly a conſultation ought not to be granted, but in caſe where a man cannot recover at the Common law, in the King's courts. New Nat. Br. 119. Cauſes of which the Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual courts have juriſdiction, are of adminiſtrations, admiſſions of clerks, adultery, appeals in eccleſiaſtical cauſes, apoſtacy, general baſtardy, blaſphemy, ſolicitation of chaſtity, dilapidations and church repairs, celebration of divine ſervice, divorces, fornication, hereſy, inceſt, inſtitution of clerks, marriage rites, oblations, obventions, ordinations, commutation of penance, penſions, procurations, ſchiſm, ſimony, tithes, probate of wills, &c. and where a ſuit is in the Eccleſiaſtical court, for any of theſe cauſes, or the like, and not mixed with any temporal thing, if a ſuggeſtion is made for a prohibition, a conſultation ſhall be awarded. 5 Rep. 9.

To move for a prohibition in another court, after motion in the Chancery, &c. on the ſame libel which is granted, is merely vexatious, for which a conſultation ſhall be had. Cro. Eliz. 277. Where a conſultation is granted upon the right of the thing in queſtion, there a new prohibition ſhall never be granted on the ſame libel; but where granted upon any default of the prohibition, in form, &c. there a prohibition may be granted upon the ſame libel again. 1 Nelſ. Abr. 485. See title Prohibition.

CONTEMPT, contemptus.] A diſobedience to the rules, orders or proceſs of a Court, which hath power to puniſh ſuch offence; and one may be impriſoned for a contempt done in court; but not for a contempt out of court, or a private abuſe. Cro. Eliz. 689. But for contempt out of court, an attachment may be granted. Attachment alſo lies againſt one for contempt to the court, to bring in the offender to anſwer on interrogatories, &c. and if he cannot acquit himſelf, he ſhall be fined. 1 Lill. 305. If a ſheriff, being required to return a writ directed to him, doth not return the writ, it is a contempt: and this word is uſed for a kind of miſdemeanor, by doing what one is forbiden; or not doing what he is commanded. 12 Rep. 36. And as this is ſometimes a greater, and ſometimes a leſſer offence; ſo it is puniſhed with greater or leſs puniſhment, by fine, and ſometimes impriſonment. Dyer 128, 177: 1 Bulſt. 85.

If a defendant in Chancery on ſervice of a ſubpœna, does not appear within the time limited by the rules of the court, and plead, demur or anſwer to the bill againſt him, he is then ſaid to be in contempt; and the reſpective proceſſes of contempt are in ſucceſſive order awarded againſt him. Theſe are attachment; attachment with proclamations; a commiſſion of rebellion; and finally a ſequeſtration. 3 Comm. 443.

An attachment of contempt may iſſue againſt a biſhop, or other peer: but for not returning a fieri facias de bonis eccleſiaſticis, it is proper to move againſt the chancellor, commiſſary, or official. Rex v. Biſhop of St. Aſaph, 1 Wilſ. 332.

It is a contempt to inſtitute a ſuit fictitiouſly, though the demand is real, either to hurt any perſon, or to get the opinion of the court. Coxe v. Phillips, Hardw. 237, 239.—See further title Attachment; and 4 Comm. 283.

Contempts againſt the King's prerogative; are by refuſing to aſſiſt him for the good of the publick; either in his councils, by advice, if called upon; or in his wars, by perſonal ſervice, for defence of the realm, againſt a rebellion or invaſion. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 22.

Under this claſs may be ranked the neglecting to join the poſſe comitatus, or power of the county, being thereunto required by the ſheriff or juſtices according to the Stat. 2 Hen. 5. c. 8; (ſee title Riots;) which is a duty incumbent upon all that are 15 years of age, under the degree of nobility and able to travel. Lamb. Eliz. 315.
