LAW DICTIONARY

LABEL. A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, hanging at or out of the same. This name is also given to an appending seal.

The labor and skill of one man is frequently used in a partnership, and valued as equal to the capital of another.

When business has been done for another, and suit is brought to recover a just reward, there is generally contained in the declaration a count for work and labor.

Where penitentiaries exist, persons who have committed crimes are condemned to be imprisoned therein at labor.

LABOR A JURY. To tamper with a jury; to persuade jurymen not to appear. It seems to come from the meaning of labor, to prosecute with energy, to urge: as, to labor a point. Dy. 48; Hob. 294; Coke, Litt. 157 b; 14 & 20 Hen. VII. 30, 11. The first lawyer that came from England to practise in Boston was sent back for laboring a jury. Washburn, Jud. Hist.

LACHES (Fr. lacher). Negligence.

2. In general, when a party has been guilty of laches in enforcing his right by great delay and lapse of time, this circumstance will, at common law, prejudice and sometimes operate in bar of a remedy which it is discretionary and not compulsory in the court to afford. In courts of equity, also, delay will generally prejudice. 1 Chitty, Pract. 786, and the cases there cited; 8 Comyns, Dig. 684; 6 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 360.

3. But laches may be excused from ignorance of the party's rights, 2 Mer. Ch. 362; 2 Ball & B. Ch. Ir. 104; from the obscurity of the transaction, 2 Schoales & L. Ch. Ir. 487; by the pendency of a suit, 1 Schoales & L. Ch. Ir. 413; and where the party labors under a legal disability: as, insanity, coverture, infancy, and the like. And no laches can be imputed to the public. 4 Mass. 522; 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 291; 4 Hen. & M. Va. 57; 1 Penn. 476. See 1 Belt, Supp. to Ves. Ch. 436; 2 id. 170; Dane, Abr. Index; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3911.

LADY'S FRIEND. The name of a functionary in the British house of commons. When the husband sues for a divorce, or asks the passage of an act to divorce him from his wife, he is required to make a provision for her before the passage of the act: it is the duty of the lady's friend to see that such a provision is made. Macquand, Husb. & W. 213.

LÆSA MAJESTAS (Lat.). Læse-majesty, or injured majesty; high treason. It is a phrase taken from the civil law, and anciently meant any offence against the king's person or dignity, defined by 25 Edw. III. c. 6. See Glanville, lib. 5, c. 2; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 75; Bracton, 118; CRIMEN LÆSÆ MAJESTATIS.

LAGA. The law.

LAGAN (Sax. liggan, cubare). Goods found at such a distance from shore that it was uncertain what coast they would be carried to, and therefore belonging to the finder. Bracton, 120. See LIGAN.

LAHLSLIT (Sax.). A breach of law. Cowel. A mulct for an offence, viz.: twelve "ores." 1 Anc. Inst. & Laws of Eng. 169.

LAIRESITE. The name of a fine imposed upon those who committed adultery or fornication. Tech. Dict.

LAITY. Those persons who do not make a part of the clergy. In the United States the division of the people into clergy and laity is not authorized by law, but is merely conventional.

LAMB. A ram, sheep, or ewe under the age of one year. 4 Carr. & P. 216.

LAMBETH DEGREE. A degree given by archbishop of Canterbury. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 381, n. Although he can confer all degrees given by the two universities, the graduates have many privileges not shared by the recipients of his degrees.

LAND, LANDS. A term comprehending any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever: as, meadows, pastures, woods, waters, marshes, furzes, and heath. Arable land.

An estate of frank tenement at the least. Sheppard, Touchst. 92.

Land has an indefinite extent upward as well as downwards: therefore, land legally includes all houses or other buildings standing or built on it, and whatever is in a direct line between the surface and the centre of the earth. 3 Kent, Comm. 378, n. See Coke, Litt. 4 a; Wood, Inst. 120; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 18; 1 Cruise, Dig. 58. It is not so broad a term as tenements, or hereditaments, but has been defined in some states as including these. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 9.

In the technical sense, freeholds are not included within the word lands. 3 Madd. Ch. 535. The term terra in Latin was used to denote land, from terendo, quia vomere teritur (because it is broken by the plough), and, accordingly, in fines and recoveries, land, i.e. terra, has been held to mean arable land. Salk. 256; Cowp. 346; Coke, Litt. 4 a; 11 Coke, 55 a. But see Croke Eliz. 476; 4 Bingh. 90: Burton, Real Prop. 196. See, also, 2 P. Will. Ch. 458, n.; 5 Ves. Ch. 476; 20 Viner, Abr. 203.

2. Land includes, in general, all the buildings erected upon it, 9 Day, Conn. 374; but to this general rule there are some exceptions. It is true that if a stranger voluntarily erect buildings on another's land, they will belong to the owner of the land, and will become a part of it, 16 Mass. 449: yet cases are not wanting where it has been held that such an erection, under peculiar circumstances, would be considered as personal property. 4 Mass. 514; 5 Pick. Mass. 487; 8 id. 203, 402; 6 N. H. 555; 10 Me. 371; 1 Dan. Ky. 591; 1 Burr. 144. It includes mines, except mines of gold and silver; and in the United States a grant of public lands will include these also. 3 Kent, Comm. 378, n.; 1 N. Y. 572. See Mines.

3. If one be seised of some lands in fee, and possessed of other lands for years, all in one parish, and he grant all his lands in that parish (without naming them), in fee-simple, or for life, by this grant shall pass no more but the lands he hath in fee-simple. Sheppard, Touchst. 92. But if a man have no freehold estate, "lands," in a will, will pass his leasehold; and now, by statute, leasehold will pass if no contrary intent is shown, and the description is applicable even if he have freehold. 1 Vict. c. 26; 2 Bos. & P. 303; Croke Car. 292; 1 P. Will. Ch. 286; 11 Beav. Rolls, 237, 250.

Generally, in wills, "land" is used in its broadest sense. 1 Jarman, Wills, Perkins ed. 604, n.; Powell, Dev. Jarman ed. 186. But as the word has two senses, one general and one restricted, if it occurs accompanied with other words which either in whole or in part supply the difference between the two senses, that is a reason for taking it in its less general sense: e.g. in a grant of lands, meadows, and pastures, the former word is held to mean only arable land. Burton, Real Prop. 183; Croke Eliz. 476, 659; 2 And. 123.

4. Incorporeal hereditaments will not pass under "lands," if there is any other real estate to satisfy the devise; but if there is no other such real estate they will pass, by statute. Moore, 359, pl. 49; 3 & 4 Will. IV. cc. 74, 105, 106

LAND CEAP, LAND CHEAP (land, and Sax. ceapan, to buy). A fine payable in money or cattle, upon the alienation of land, within certain manors and liberties. Cowel, Gloss.

LAND COURT. In American Law. The name of a court in the city of St. Louis, state of Missouri, having sole jurisdiction in St. Louis county in suits respecting lands, and in actions of ejectment, dower, partition. See Missouri.

LAND-MARK. A monument set up in order to ascertain the boundaries between two contiguous estates. For removing a landmark an action lies. 1 Thomas, Coke, Litt. 787. See Monuments.

LAND TAX. A tax on beneficial proprietor of land: so far as a tenant is beneficial proprietor, and no farther, does it rest on him. It has superseded all other methods of taxation in Great Britain. Sugden, Vend. 268. It was first imposed in 1693, a new valuation of the lands in the kingdom having been made in 1692, which has not since been changed. In 1798 it was made perpetual, at a rate of four shillings in a pound of valued rent. See Encyc. Brit. Taxation; Wharton, Lex. 2d Lond. ed.

LAND TENANT (commonly called tene tenant). He who actually possesses the land.

LANDLORD. The lord or proprietor of land, who, under the feudal system, retained the dominion or ultimate property of the feud, or fee of the land; while his grantee, who had only the possession and use of the land, was styled the feudatory, or vassal, which was only another name for the tenant or holder of it. In the popular meaning of the word, however, it is applied to a person who owns lands or tenements which he rents out to others.

LANDLORD AND TENANT. A term used to denote the relation which subsists by virtue of a contract, express or implied, between two or more persons, for the possession or occupation of lands or tenements either for a definite period, for life, or at will.

2. When this relation is created by an express contract, the instrument made use of for the purpose is called a lease. See Lease. But it may also arise by necessary implication from the circumstances of the case and the relative position of the parties to each other; for the law will imply its existence whenever there is an ownership of land on the one hand and an occupation of it by permission on the other; and in all such cases it will be presumed that the occupant intends to compensate the owner for the use of the premises. 4 Conn. 473; 4 Pet. 84; 3 Wend. N. Y. 219; 7 La. 83; 6 Ad. & E. 854; Taylor, Landl. & Ten. § 19.

3. The intention to create. This relation may be inferred from a variety of circumstances; but the most obvious acknowledgment of its existence is the payment of rent; and this principle applies even after the expiration of an express term of years; for if a tenant continues to hold over, after his term has run out, the landlord may, if he chooses, consider him a tenant, and he is, in fact, understood to do so, unless he proceeds to eject him at once. If the landlord suffers him to remain, and receives rent from him, or by any other act acknowledges him as tenant, a new tenancy springs up, of so definite a character that it cannot be terminated by either party, except by a reasonable notice to quit. 15 Johns. N. Y. 505; 1 Den. N. Y. 113; 4 M'Cord, So. C. 59; 2 Esp. 528; 4 Campb. 275; 2 Carr. & P. 348.

The payment of money, however, is only a primâ facie acknowledgment of the existence of a tenancy; for if it does not appear to have been paid as rent, but stands upon some other consideration, it will not be evidence of a subsisting tenancy. 3 Barnew. & C. 413; 10 East, 261; 11 Ad. & E. 307; 4 Bingh. 91. Neither does a mere participation in the profits of land, where the owner is not excluded from possession, nor the letting of land upon shares, unless the occupant expressly agrees to pay a certain part of the crop as rent, in either case amount to a tenancy. 16 Mass. 443; 1 Speers, So. C. 408; 3 M'Cord, So. C. 211; 1 Gill & J. Md. 266; 3 Zabr. N. J. 390; 2 Rawle, Penn. 11; 3 Hill, N. Y. 90; 15 Wend. N. Y. 379.

4. But the relation of landlord and tenant will not be inferred from the mere occupation of land, if the relative position of the parties to each other can, under the circumstances of the case, be referred to any other distinct cause: as, for instance, between a vendor and vendee of land, where the purchaser remains in possession after the agreement to purchase falls through. For the possession in that case was evidently taken with the understanding of both parties that the occupant should be owner, and not tenant; and the other party cannot without his consent convert him into a tenant, so as to charge him with rent. 6 Johns. N. Y. 46; 16 Pet. 25; 21 Me. 525; 8 Mees. & W. Exch. 118; 10 Cush. Mass. 259. The same principle applies to a mortgagor and mortgagee, as well as to that of a mortgagor and an assignee of the mortgagee; for no privity of estate exists in either case; and, as a general rule, a tenancy by implication can never arise under a party who has not the legal estate of the premises in question. 2 Mann. & R. 303; 6 Ad. & E. 268; Taylor, Landl. & Ten. § 25.

5. Generally, the rights and obligations of the parties will be considered as having commenced from the date of the lease, if there be one, and no other time for its commencement has been agreed upon; or, if there be no date, then from the delivery of the papers. If, however, there be no writings, it will take effect from the day the tenant entered into possession, and not with reference to any particular quarter-day. 4 Johns. N. Y. 230; 15 Wend. N. Y. 656; Coke, Litt. 46 a. And these rights and duties attach to each of the parties, not only in respect to each other, but also with reference to other persons who are strangers to the contract. The landlord retains certain rights over the property, although he has parted with its possession, while the tenant assumes obligations with respect to it which continue so long as he is invested with that character.

6. After the making of a lease, the right of possession, in legal contemplation, remains in the landlord until the contract is consummated by the entry of the lessee. When the tenant enters, this right of possession changes, and he draws to himself all the rights incident to possession after this. The landlord's rights in the premises are suspended, or confined to the protection of his reversionary interest; that is, to the maintenance of actions for such injuries as would, in the ordinary course of things, continue to affect his interest after the determination of the lease. Of such are actions for breaking the windows of a house, cutting timber, or damming up a rivulet, whereby the timber on the estate becomes rotten. 11 Mass. 519; 1 Maule & S. 234; 9 Bingh. 3; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 72; 3 Me. 6; 5 Den. N. Y. 494. The injury must be of such a character as permanently affects the inheritance; but it may be so if any one interferes with his tenants, and disturbs their enjoyment so far as to cause him loss of rent, or other damage. 14 East, 489; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 72; 1 Hall, N. Y. 214.

7. The landlord may, however, go upon the premises peaceably, for the purpose of ascertaining whether any waste or injury has been committed by the tenant or other person, first giving notice of his intention. He may also use all ways appurtenant thereto, demand rent, make such repairs as are necessary to prevent waste, or remove an obstruction. But if the rent is payable in hay or other produce, to be delivered to him from the farm, he is not entitled to go upon the land and take it, until it is delivered to him by the tenant, or until after it has been severed and set apart for his use. 3 Johns. N. Y. 408; 1 Vern. Ch. 575; 7 Pick. Mass. 76; 1 Barnew. & C. 8; 7 Mees. & W. Exch. 601. But see 5 Dowl. & R. 442; 3 Barnew. & C. 533.

8. The landlord's responsibilities in respect to possession, also, are suspended as soon as the tenant commences his occupation. If, therefore, a stranger is injured by the ruinous state of the premises, or the tenant creates a nuisance upon them, or if the fences are suffered to fall into decay, whereby the cattle of a stranger stray and are injured or lost, the landlord is in neither case answerable. But it would be otherwise if he had undertaken to keep the premises in repair, and the injury was occasioned by his neglect to keep up the repairs, or if he should renew the lease with a nuisance upon it. 4 Term, 318; 2 H. Blackst. 350; 4 Taunt. 949; 1 Ad. & E. 827.

9. The principal obligation on the part of the landlord, which is, in fact, always to be implied as a necessary condition to his receiving any rent, is that the tenant shall enjoy the quiet possession of the premises,—which means, substantially, that he shall not be turned out of possession of the whole or any material part of the premises by one having a title paramount to that of landlord, or that the landlord shall not himself disturb or render his occupation uncomfortable by the erection of a nuisance on or near the premises, or otherwise oblige him to quit possession. 3 East, 491; 6 Dowl. & R. 349; 8 Cow. N. Y. 727; 7 Wend. N. Y. 281; 13 N. Y. 151; 2 Dev. 388; 4 Mass. 349; 5 Day, Conn. 282. But if he be ousted by a stranger, that is, by one having no title, or after the rent has fallen due, or if the molestation proceeds from the acts of a third person, the landlord is in neither case responsible for it. 1 Term, 671; 3 Johns. N. Y. 471; 7 Wend. N. Y. 281; 4 Dev. No. C. 46; 5 Hill, N. Y. 599; 6 Mass. 246; 13 East, 72; 12 Wend. N. Y. 529; 25 Barb. N. Y. 594.

10. Another obligation which the law imposes upon the landlord in the absence of any express stipulation in the lease, is the payment of all taxes and assessments chargeable upon the property, or any ground-rent, or interest upon mortgages to which it may be subject. Every landlord is bound to protect his immediate tenant against all paramount claims; and if a tenant is compelled, in order to protect himself in the enjoyment of the land in respect of which his rent is payable, to make payment which ought, as between himself and his landlord, to have been made by the latter, he may call upon the landlord to reimburse him, or he may deduct such payment from the rent due or to become due. 6 Taunt. 524; 12 East, 469; 5 Bingh. 409; 3 Barnew. & Ald. 647; 7 Barnew. & C. 285; 3 Ad. & E. 331; 3 Mees. & W. Exch. 607; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 521.

11. But the landlord is under no obligation to make any repairs, or to rebuild in case the premises should be burned; nor does he guarantee that they are reasonably fit for the purposes for which they were taken. And it is not in the power of a tenant to make repairs at the expense of his landlord, unless there be a special agreement between them authorizing him to do so; for the tenant takes the premises for better or for worse, and cannot involve the landlord in expense for repairs without his consent. 6 Cow. N. Y. 475; 3 Du. N. Y. 464; 1 Saund. 320; 7 East, 116; 1 Ry. & M. 357; 7 Mann. & G. 576. Even if the premises have become uninhabitable by fire, and the landlord having insured them has recovered the insurance-money, the tenant cannot compel him to expend the money so recovered in rebuilding, unless he has expressly engaged to do so; nor can he, in such an event, protect himself from the payment of rent during the unexpired balance of the term. 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 437; 1 Sim. Ch. 146; 1 Term, 314. A different rule is said to prevail in Louisiana. See 3 Rob. La. 52.

12. On the part of the tenant, we may observe that on taking possession he is at once invested with all the rights incident to possession, is entitled to the use of all the privileges and easements appurtenant to the tenement, and to take such reasonable estovers and emblements as are attached to the estate. He may maintain an action against any person who disturbs his possession or trespasses upon the premises, though it be the landlord himself. 1 Den. N. Y. 21; Croke Car. 325; 3 Wils. 461; 2 H. Blackst. 924; 2 Barnew. & Ad. 97; 3 Crompt. & R. Exch. 557. As occupant, he is also answerable for any neglect to repair highways, fences, or party-walls; it being generally sufficient, except where a statute has otherwise provided, to charge a man for such repairs by the name of occupant. He is also liable for all injuries produced by the mismanagement of his servants, or by a nuisance kept upon the premises, or by an obstruction of the highway adjacent to them, or the like; for, as a general rule, where a man is in possession of property, he must so manage it that other persons shall not be injured thereby. 3 Term, 766; 3 Q. B. 449; 1 Scott, N. R. 392; 4 Taunt. 649; 5 Barnew. & C. 552; 6 Mees. & W. Exch. 499.

13. One of the principal obligations which the law imposes upon every tenant, independent of any agreement, is to treat the premises in such a manner that no substantial injury shall be done to them, and so that they may revert to the landlord, at the end of the term, unimpaired by any wilful or negligent conduct on his part. In the language of the books, he must keep the buildings wind-and-water-tight, and is bound to make fair and tenantable repairs, such as the keeping of fences in order, or replacing doors and windows that are broken during his occupation. If it is a furnished house, he must preserve the furniture, and leave it, with the linen, etc., clean and in good order. 5 Carr. & P. 239; 7 id. 327; 4 Term, 318; 18 Ves. Ch. 331; 2 Esp. 590; 4 Mann. & G. 95; 12 Mees. & W. Exch. 827.

But he is not bound to rebuild premises which have accidentally become ruinous during his occupation; nor is he answerable for ordinary wear and tear, nor for an accidental fire, nor to put a new roof on the building, nor to make what are usually called general or substantial repairs. Neither is he bound to do painting, white-washing, or papering, except so far as they may be necessary to preserve exposed timber from decay. 6 Term, 650; 6 Carr. & P. 8; 12 Ad. & E. 476; 1 Marsh. 567; 10 Barnew. & C. 312.

14. With respect to farming leases, a tenant is under a similar obligation to repair; but it differs from the general obligation in this, that it is confined to the dwelling-house which he occupies,—the burden of supporting the out-buildings and other erections on the farm being sustained either by the landlord, or the tenant, in the absence of any express provision in the lease, by the particular custom of the country in which the farm is situated. He is always bound, however, to cultivate the farm in a good and husband-like manner, to keep the fences in repair, and to preserve the timber and ornamental trees in good condition; and for any violation of any of these duties he is liable to be proceeded against by the landlord for waste, whether the act of waste be committed by the tenant or by a stranger. Coke, Litt. 53; 6 Taunt. 300; 5 Johns. N. Y. 373; 13 East, 18; 3 Mood. 536; 2 Dougl. 745; 1 Taunt. 198; 1 Den. N. Y. 104. As to what constitutes waste, see WASTE.

15. The tenant's general obligation to repair also renders him responsible for any injury a stranger may sustain by his neglect to keep the premises in a safe condition: as, by not keeping the covers of his vaults sufficiently closed, so that a person walking in the street falls through, or is injured thereby. If he repairs or improves the building, he must guard against accident to the passers-by in the street, by erecting a suitable barricade, or stationing a person there to give notice of the danger. 4 Term, 318; 28 Barb. N. Y. 194; 6 N. Y. 48; 4 id. 222. For any unreasonable obstruction which he places in the highway adjoining his premises, he may be indicted for causing a public nuisance, as well as rendered liable to an action for damages, at the suit of any individual injured. The law will tolerate only such a partial and temporary obstruction of the street as may be necessary for business purposes: as in receiving and delivering goods from a warehouse, or coals, or fuel on the sidewalk, or the like; provided, always, that the public convenience does not suffer from it. 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 217; 6 East, 427; 6 Carr. & P. 636; 1 Den. N. Y. 524; Taylor, Landl. & Ten. § 192.

16. The tenant's chief duty, however, is the payment of rent, the amount of which is either fixed by the terms of the lease, or, in the absence of an express agreement, is such a reasonable compensation for the occupation of the premises as they are fairly worth. If there has been no particular agreement between the parties, the tenant pays rent only for the time he has had the beneficial enjoyment of the premises; but if he has entered into an express agreement to pay rent during the term, no casualty or injury to the premises by fire or otherwise, nothing, in fact, short of an eviction, will excuse him from such payment. 4 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 355; 18 Ves. Ch. 415; 1 Harr. & J. Md. 42; 16 Mass. 240; 3 Den. N. Y. 464; 3 Bos. & P. 420; 6 Term, 650; 24 Wend. N. Y. 454; Al. 26; 4 Harr. & J. Md. 564; 1 Bay, So. C. 499. But if he has been deprived of the possession of the premises, or any part thereof, by a third person under a title superior to that of the landlord, or if the latter annoys his tenant, erect or causes the erection of such a nuisance upon or near the premises as renders his occupation so uncomfortable as to justify his removal, he is in either case discharged from the payment of rent. 2 Wend. N. Y. 561; 12 id. 529; 4 Cow. N. Y. 58; 8 id. 727; 4 N. Y. 217; 2 Ired. No. C. 350; 3 Ohio, 364; 4 Rawle, Penn. 329; Coke, Litt. 148 b; 2 East, 576; 1 Cowp. 242; 6 Term, 458.

17. The obligation to pay rent may be apportioned; for, as rent is incident to the reversion, it will become payable to the assignees of the respective portions thereof whenever that reversion is severed by an act of the parties or of the law. But the tenant's consent is necessary for an apportionment when made by the landlord, unless the proportion of rent chargeable upon each portion of the land has been settled by the intervention of a jury. 22 Wend. N. Y. 121; 2 Barb. N. Y. 643; 3 Den. N. Y. 454; 1 Dowl. & R. 291; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 876. A tenant, however, cannot get rid of or apportion his rent by transferring the whole or a part of his lease; for if he assigns it, or underlets a portion of it, he still remains liable to his landlord for the whole. Croke Eliz. 633; 24 Barb. N. Y. 333. Instances of an apportionment by act of law occur where there is a descent of the reversion among a number of heirs, or upon a judicial sale of a portion of the premises; for in such cases the tenant will be bound to pay rent to each of the parties for the portion of the premises belonging to them respectively. So, if a man dies, leaving a widow, she will have a right to receive one-third of the rent, while the remaining two-thirds will be payable to his heirs. Croke Eliz. 742; 15 Wend. N. Y. 464; Croke Jac. 160; Coke, Litt. 148; 1 Mees. & W. Exch. 747.

18. These rights and liabilities are not confined to the immediate parties to the contract, but will be found to attach to all persons to whom the estate may be transferred, or who may succeed to the possession of the premises, either as landlords or tenants. This principle follows as a necessary consequence of that privity of estate which is incident to the relation of landlord and tenant. A landlord may not violate his tenant's rights by a sale of the property; neither can a tenant avoid his responsibilities by substituting another tenant in his stead without the landlord's consent. The purchaser of the property becomes in one case the landlord, and is entitled to all the rights and remedies against the tenant or his assignee which the seller had, while in the other case the assignee of the lessee assumes all the liabilities of the latter, and is entitled to the same protection which he might claim from the assignee of the reversion; but the original lessee is not thereby discharged from his obligations. 17 Johns. N. Y. 239; 3 Harr. & M'H. Md. 387; 24 Barb. N. Y. 365; 13 Wend. N. Y. 136; 19 N. Y. 68; 8 Ves. Ch. 95; 1 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 11; 4 Term, 99.

19. The relation of landlord and tenant may be terminated in several ways. If it is a tenancy for life, it will of course terminate upon the decease of him upon whose life the lease depends; but if it be for life, or for a certain number of years depending upon some particular event, the happening of that event will determine the tenancy. So if it be for a certain number of years, independent of any contingency, it will expire at the last moment of the anniversary of the day from which the tenant was to hold in the last year of the tenancy. And in all these cases depending upon the express conditions of the lease, no notice to quit will be necessary in order to dissolve the relation of the parties to each other. Coke, Litt. 216; Sheppard, Touchst. 187; 9 Ad. & E. 879; 5 Johns. N. Y. 128; 1 Pick. Mass. 43; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 49; 18 Me. 264; Taylor, Landl. & Ten. § 465.

20. But a tenancy from year to year, or at will, can only be terminated by a notice to quit. This notice must be in writing; it must be explicit, and require the tenant to remove from the premises; it must be served upon the tenant, and not upon an undertenant; it must run in the name of the person to whom possession is to be given, and not of his agent; and if given by one of several tenants in common, it is valid only to the extent of his share, but if made by one of several joint tenants, it will enure for the benefit of all. Burr. 1603; 5 Esp. 196; Dougl. 175; 5 Ad. & E. 350; 6 Barnew. & C. 41; 10 Johns. N. Y. 270; 8 Taunt. 241; 2 Mann. & R. 433; 7 Mees. & W. Exch. 139; 3 Bingh. N. C. 677. At common law, this notice was required to be one of six calendar months, ending with the period of the year at which the tenancy commenced, W. Blackst. 596; 3 Term, 13; and this rule prevails in New York, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, Vermont, and New Jersey, as to tenancies from year to year. 1 Vern. Ch. 311; 1 Johns. N. Y. 322; 1 Dan. Ky. 30; 5 Yerg. Tenn. 431; 22 Vt. 88; 4 Ired. No. C. 291; 3 Green, N. J. 181. See 17 Mass. 287. In Pennsylvania, South Carolina, New Hampshire, and Michigan, three months' notice is required, 24 N. H. 219; 8 Serg. & R. Penn. 458; 2 Rich. So. C. 346; while the New-York statutes provide for its termination by giving one month's notice wherever there is a tenancy at will, or by sufferance, created by the tenant's holding over his term, or otherwise.

21. This relation will also be dissolved when the tenant incurs a forfeiture of his lease by the breach of some covenant or condition therein contained. At common law, a forfeiture was incurred if the tenant did any act which was inconsistent with his first relation to his landlord: as, if he impugned the title of his lessor by affirming by matter of record the fee to be in a stranger, claimed a greater estate than he was entitled to, or undertook to alienate the estate in fee. Coke, Litt. 251 b; Croke Eliz. 321. But these causes of forfeiture, founded upon strict feudal principles, have been generally abolished in the United States, and a forfeiture of a term of years now only occurs in consequence of a breach of some express stipulation contained in the contract: as, for the commission of waste, non-payment of rent, or the like. 2 Wend. N. Y. 357; 2 Hill, N. Y. 554; 10 N. Y. 9; 7 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 350. A forfeiture may be waived by an acceptance of, or distraining for, rent which became due after a breach committed by the tenant, or by giving a notice to quit, or by any other act which acknowledges the continuance of the tenancy, 8 Watts. Penn. 55; 2 N. H. 160; 18 Johns. N. Y. 174; 3 Hen. & M. Va. 436; 1 Binn. Penn. 333; 1 Mees. & W. Exch. 408; 1 Taunt. 78, and will be relieved against by the courts in all cases where it happened accidentally and the injury is capable of compensation, or where the damages are a mere matter of computation. 10 Ves. Ch. 6; 12 id. 475; 16 id. 405; 2 Price, Exch. 206; 1 Dall. Penn. 210; 9 Mod. 22.

22. Another means of dissolving a tenancy is by an operation of law, termed a merger,—which happens where a tenant purchases the fee of the reversion, or the fee descends to him as heir at law, the lease becoming thereby merged in the inheritance, the lesser estate being absorbed in the greater. To produce this result, however, it is necessary that the two estates should meet in the same person and in the same right; for if he who has the reversion in fee marries the tenant for years, or if a tenant makes the landlord his executor, the term of years is in neither case merged, because in either case he holds the fee for his own benefit, while the term of years is taken in one case for his wife's use, and in the other for the benefit of the estate he represents as executor. 10 Johns. N. Y. 482; 15 Barb. N. Y. 7; 12 N. Y. 526; Coke, Litt. 388 b; Burton, Real Prop. § 898; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 354.

23. In addition to the several methods of putting an end to a tenancy already mentioned, we may add that it is, of course, competent for a tenant to surrender his lease to the landlord; or if the subject-matter of the lease wholly perishes, or is required to be taken for public uses, or if the premises are converted into a house of ill fame, or the tenant disclaims to hold under his landlord and therefore refuses to pay his rent, asserts the title to be in himself or unlawfully attorney to another, the tenancy is at an end, and the landlord may forthwith resume the possession. 7 Wend. N. Y. 210; 24 id. 454; 3 Maule & S. 270; 5 Ohio, 303; 11 Metc. Mass. 448; 1 Esp. 13; 13 Pet. 1; 3 A. K. Marsh, Ky. 247; 10 Ill. 41; 20 Penn. St. 398; 6 Yerg. Tenn. 280.

24. After the tenancy has ended, the right of possession reverts to the landlord, who may re-enter upon the premises if he can do so without violence. But if the tenant holds over and the landlord takes possession forcibly, so as to endanger a breach of the peace, he runs the risk of being punished criminally for a forcible entry (see FORCIBLE ENTRY and DETAINER) as well as of suffering the consequences of an action of trespass. The landlord should, therefore, in all such cases, call in the law to his assistance, and receive possession at the hands of the sheriff.

The tenant, on his part, is bound quietly to yield up the possession of the entire premises, although he still retains a reasonable right of egress and regress for the purpose of removing his goods and chattels. And for a refusal to perform this duty he will be subjected to all the statutory penalties of holding over. 1 Add. Penn. 14, 43; 10 Mass. 409; 8 Term, 357; 1 Dev. & B. No. C. 324; 5 Carr. & P. 201; 1 Mann. & G. 644; 1 Watts & S. Penn. 90; 13 Johns. N. Y. 235; 9 Vt. 352; 1 Strobh. So. C. 313. He may, also, in certain cases, take the emblements or annual profits of the land after his tenancy is ended (see EMBLEMENTS), and, unless restricted by some stipulation to the contrary, may remove such fixtures as he has erected during his occupation for his comfort, convenience, or profit. See FIXTURES.

25. The ordinary common-law remedy by which a landlord proceeds to recover the possession of his premises is by an action of ejectment, which is strictly a possessory action; and the party claiming possession must recover upon his right of entry, whether his title to the estate be in fee for life or for years. 7 Johns. N. Y. 227; 2 Yeates, Penn. 309; 3 Bingh. 203. The tenant is never permitted, for reasons of sound public policy, to controvert his landlord's title, or to set up against him a title acquired by himself during his tenancy which is hostile in its character to that which he acknowledged in accepting the demise. 10 East, 158; 3 Barnew. & C. 413; 7 Term, 488; 5 Wend. N. Y. 246; 5 Den. N. Y. 431; 3 Ad. & E. 188; 1 Harp. So. C. 70; 6 Harr. & J. Md. 533; 2 Binn. Penn. 472; 4 Serg. & R. Penn. 467.

26. But the slow and measured progress of this ancient proceeding in most cases affords a very inadequate remedy to the landlord; and in order, therefore, to obviate the evils arising from its delays, the statutes of the different states provide a summary proceeding, by which a landlord may be speedily reinstated, upon notice of a day or two, in cases where a tenant abandons the premises before the end of the term without surrendering the lease, leaving rent in arrear, continues to hold over after the expiration of his term, or has become unable or unwilling to pay for the use of the premises. 22 Wend. N. Y. 611; 4 Barnew. & C. 259; 10 N. Y. 35; 2 Ov. Tenn. 233; 2 Chitty, Bail. 179; 7 Term, 431.

LANGUAGE. The medium for the communication of perceptions and ideas.

Spoken language is that wherein articulate sounds are used.

Written language is that wherein written characters are used, and especially the system of characters called letters and figures.

2. By conventional usage, certain sounds and characters have a definite meaning in one country or in certain countries, and this is called the language of such country or countries: as, the Greek, the Latin, the French, or the English language. The law, too, has a peculiar language. See Eunom. Dial. 2.

3. On the subjugation of England by William the Conqueror, the French-Norman language was substituted in all law-proceedings for the ancient Saxon. This, according to Blackstone, 3 Comm. 317, was the language of the records, writs, and pleadings until the time of Edward III. Mr. Stephen thinks Blackstone has fallen into an error, and says the record was, from the earliest period to which that document can be traced, in the Latin language. Plead. Appx. note 14. By the statute 36 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 15, it was enacted that for the future all pleas should be pleaded, shown, defended, answered, debated, and judged in the English tongue, but be entered and enrolled in Latin. The Norman or law French, however, being more familiar as applied to the law than any other language, the lawyers continued to employ it in making their notes of the trial of cases, which they afterwards published in that barbarous dialect under the name of Reports.

4. After the enactment of this statute, on the introduction of paper pleadings, they followed in the language as well as in other respects the style of the records, which were drawn up in Latin. This technical language continued in use till the time of Cromwell, when by a statute the records were directed to be in English; but this act was repealed at the restoration by Charles II., the lawyers finding it difficult to express themselves as well and as concisely in the vernacular as in the Latin tongue; and the language of the law continued as before till about the year 1730, when the statute of 4 Geo. II. c. 26, was passed. It provided that both the pleadings and the records should thenceforward be framed in English. The ancient terms and expressions which had been so long known in French and Latin were now literally translated into English. The translations of such terms and phrases were found to be exceedingly ridiculous. Such terms as nisi prius, habeas corpus, fieri facias, mandamus, and the like, are not capable of an English dress with any degree of seriousness. They are equally absurd in the manner they are employed in Latin; but use and the fact that they are in a foreign language have made the absurdity less apparent.

5. By statute of 6 Geo. II. c. 14, passed two years after the last-mentioned statute, the use of technical words was allowed to continue in the usual language,—which defeated almost every beneficial purpose of the former statute. In changing from one language to another, many words and technical expressions were retained in the new which belonged to the more ancient language; and not seldom they partook of both. This, to the unlearned student, has given an air of confusion and disfigured the language of the law. It has rendered essential, also, the study of the Latin and French languages. This, perhaps, is not to be regretted, as they are the keys which open to the ardent student vast stores of knowledge. In the United States, the records, pleadings, and all law proceedings are in the English language, except certain technical terms which retain their ancient French and Latin dress.

6. Agreements, contracts, wills, and other instruments may be made in any language, and will be enforced. Bacon, Abr. Wills (D 1). And a slander spoken in a foreign language, if understood by those present, or a libel published in such language, will be punished as if spoken or written in the English language. Bacon, Abr. Slander, (D 3); 1

Rolle, Abr. 74; 6 Term, 163. For the construction of language, see articles CONSTRUCTION; INTERPRETATION; Jacob, Intr. to the Com. Law Max. 46.

7. Among diplomatists, the French language is the one commonly used. At an early period, the Latin was the diplomatic language in use in Europe. Towards the end of the fifteenth century that of Spain gained the ascendency, in consequence of the great influence which that country then exercised in Europe. The French, since the age of Louis XIV., has become the almost universal diplomatic idiom of the civilized world; though some states use their national language in treaties and diplomatic correspondence. It is usual in these cases to annex to the papers transmitted a translation in the language of the opposite party, wherever it is understood this comity will be reciprocated. This is the usage of the Germanic Confederation, of Spain, and of the Italian courts. When nations using a common language, as the United States and Great Britain, treat with each other, such language is used in their diplomatic intercourse.

See, generally, 3 Blackstone, Comm. 323; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 415; 2 Rey, Inst. jud. de l'Angleterre, 211, 212.

LANGUIDUS (Lat.). In Practice. The name of a return made by the sheriff when a defendant, whom he has taken by virtue of process, is so dangerously sick that to remove him would endanger his life or health.

In such a case, the officer may and ought unquestionably to abstain from removing him, and may permit him to remain even in his own house in the custody of a follower, though not named in the warrant, he keeping the key of the house in his possession. The officer ought to remove him as soon as sufficiently recovered. If there be a doubt as to the state of health of the defendant, the officer should require the attendance and advice of some respectable medical man, and require him, at the peril of the consequences of misrepresentation, to certify in writing whether it be fit to remove the party or take him to prison within the county. 3 Chitty, Pract. 358. For a form of the return of languidus, see 3 Chitty, Pract. 249; T. Chitty, Forms, 53.

LANZAS. In Spanish Law. A certain contribution in money paid by the grandees and other high officers in lieu of the soldiers they ought to furnish government in time of war.

LAPSE. In Ecclesiastical Law. The transfer, by forfeiture, of a right to present or collate to a vacant benefice from a person vested with such right to another, in consequence of some act of negligence by the former. Ayliffe, Parerg. 331.

Upon six months' neglect of the patron, the right lapses to the bishop; upon six months' neglect of bishop, to archbishop; upon his six months' neglect, to king. The day on which the vacancy occurs is not counted, and the six months are calculated as a half-year. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 355.

To glide; to pass slowly, silently, or by degrees. To slip; to deviate from the proper path. Webster, Dict. See LAPSED DEVISE; LAPSED LEGACY.

LAPSE PATENT. A patent issued to petitioner for land. A patent for which land to another party has lapsed through neglect of patentee. The lapse patent relates to date of original patent, and makes void all mesne conveyances. 1 Wash. Va. 39, 40.

LAPSED DEVISE. A devise which has lapsed, or does not take effect because of the death of devisee before testator.

The subject-matter of the lapsed devise will, if no contrary intention appears, be included in the residuary clause (if any) contained in the will. But, if the devise be to children or other issue of devisor, and issue of devisee be alive, the devise shall not lapse, if no such intention appear in the will. See 1 Vict. c. 26, §§ 25, 26, 32, 33. A devise always lapses at common law if the devisee dies before testator: in some of the states there are statutes on the subject. See 1 Jarman, Wills, Perkins ed. 301, n.; 4 Kent, Comm. 541.

LAPSED LEGACY. A legacy which, on account of the death of the legatee before the period arrives for the payment of the legacy, lapses or deviates from the course prescribed by the testator, and falls into the residuum. 1 Williams, Ex. 1036.

A distinction exists between a lapsed devise and a lapsed legacy. A legacy which lapses does not fall into the residue unless so provided by the will, but descends to the heir at law; on the contrary, personal property passes by the residuary clause where it is not otherwise disposed of. 2 Bouvier, Inst. 2154–2156. See LAPSED DEVISE.

LARCENY. In Criminal Law. The wrongful and fraudulent taking and carrying away by one person of the mere personal goods of another from any place, with a felonious intent to convert them to his the taker's use, and make them his property without the consent of the owner. 2 East, Pl. Cr. 553; 4 Wash. C. C. 700.

In a recent English case, Mr. Baron Parke said that this definition, which was the most complete of any, was defective, in not stating what is the meaning of the word "felonious," which, he said, "may be explained to mean that there is no color of right or excuse for the act; and the 'intent' must be to deprive the owner, not temporarily, but permanently, of his property." Regina vs. Holloway, 2 Carr. & K. 942; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 370; Templ. & M. Cr. Cas. 40. It is safer to be guided by the cases than by the definitions given by text-writers. Per Coltman, J. Several definitions are collected by Mr. Bishop, 2 Crim. Law, § 675, n., to which reference is made.

Larceny was formerly in England, and still is, perhaps, in some states, divided into grand and petit or petty larceny, according as the value of the property taken was great or small. 2 East, Pl. Cr. 736; 3 M'Cord, So. C. 187; 3 Hill, N. Y. 395; 6 id. 144; 1 Hawks, No. C. 463; 8 Blackf. Ind. 498. Yet in England this distinction is now abolished, by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, § 2; and the same is true of many of the United States, although in some a difference is made, similar in theory, between cases where the amount stolen is more and where it is less than one hundred dollars or some fixed sum.

Compound larceny is larceny under circumstances which, in view of the law, aggravate the crime. The law in relation to this branch of larceny is to a great extent statutory.

2. The property of the owner may be either general, 1 Carr. & K. 518; 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 449, or special. 10 Wend. N. Y. 165; 14 Mass. 217; 13 Ala. N. S. 153; 21 Me. 14; 8 Tex. 115; 4 Harr. Del. 570; 6 Hill, N. Y. 144; 9 Carr. & P. 44.

There must be a taking against the consent of the owner, 8 Carr. & P. 291; 9 id. 365; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 381; 2 Ov. Tenn. 68; 9 Yerg. Tenn. 198; 6 id. 154; 20 Ala. N. S. 428; 1 Rich. So. C. 30; 2 Nott & M'C. So. C. 174; Coxe, N. J. 439; and the taking will not be larceny if consent be given, though obtained by fraud. 15 Serg. & R. Penn. 93; 9 Carr. & P. 741; 4 Taunt. 258; 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 289. When the possession of an article is intrusted to a person, who carries it away and appropriates it, this is no larceny, 24 Eng. L. & Eq. 562; 4 Carr. & P. 545; 5 id. 533; 1 Pick. Mass. 375; 20 Ala. N. S. 428; 17 N. Y. 114; see 2 M'Mull. So. C. 382; 2 Carr. & K. 983; 4 Mo. 461; 33 Me. 127; 11 Cush. Mass. 483; 13 Gratt. Va. 803; 11 Tex. 769; but when the custody merely is parted with, such misappropriation is a larceny. 6 T. B. Monr. Ky. 130; 1 Den. N. Y. 120; 11 Q. B. 929; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 584.

3. The taking must be in the county where the criminal is to be tried. 9 Carr. & P. 29; Ry. & M. 349. But when the taking has been in the county or state, and the thief is caught with the stolen property in another county than that where the theft was committed, he may be tried in the county where arrested with the goods; as, by construction of law, there is a fresh taking in every county in which the thief carries the stolen property. 7 Metc. Mass. 175. Whether an indictment for larceny can be supported where the goods are proved to have been originally stolen in another state, and brought thence into the state where the indictment is found, is a point on which the decisions are contradictory. Property stolen in one of the British Provinces and brought by the thief into Massachusetts is not larceny there. 3 Gray Mass. 434. See, contra, 11 Vt. 650.

4. There must be an actual removal of the article, 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 4th ed. 236, n., 320; 3 Greenleaf, Ev. § 154; 7 Carr. & P. 552; 8 id. 291; 8 Ala. N. S. 328; 12 Ired. No. C. 157; 9 Yerg. Tenn. 198; but a very slight removal, if it amount to an actual taking into possession, is sufficient. 2 East, Pl. Cr. 556, 617; 1 Carr. & K. 245; Dearsl. Cr. Cas. 421.

The property must be personal; and there can be no larceny of things affixed to the soil, 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 510; 11 Ired. No. C. 477; 8 Carr. & P. 293; but if once severed by the owner, a third person, or the thief himself, as a separate transaction, it becomes a subject of larceny. 11 Ired. No. C. 70; 3 Hill, N. Y. 395; 1 Mod. 89; 2 Rolle, 89; 7 Taunt. 188. It must be of some value, though but slight. 4 Rich. So. C. 356; 3 Harr. Del. 563; 7 Metc. Mass. 475. See 8 Penn. St. 260; 6 Johns. N. Y. 103; 9 Carr. & P. 347.

See Hale, Hawkins, Pleas of the Crown; Bishop, Gabbett, Russell, Criminal Law; Roscoe, Criminal Evidence.

LAS PARTIDAS. The name of a code of Spanish law. It is sometimes called las siete partidas, or the seven parts, from the number of its principal divisions. It is a compilation from the civil law, the customary law of Spain, and the canon law. It was compiled by four Spanish jurisconsults, under the eye of Alphonso X., A.D. 1250, and published in Castille in 1263, but first promulgated as law by Alphonso XI., A.D. 1348. The maritime law contained in it is given in vol. 6 of Pardess. Col. of Mar. Law. He follows the edition of 1807, at Paris. It has been translated into English. Such of its provisions as are applicable are in force in Florida, Louisiana, and Texas. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 66; 1 White, New Recop. 354.

LASCIVIOUS CARRIAGE. In Connecticut. A term including those wanton acts between persons of different sexes, who are not married to each other, that flow from the exercise of lustful passions, and which are not otherwise punished as crimes against chastity and public decency. 2 Swift, Dig. 343; 2 Swift, Syst. 331.

Lascivious carriage may consist not only in mutual acts of wanton and indecent familiarity between persons of different sexes, but in wanton and indecent actions against the will and without the consent of one of them: as, if a man should forcibly attempt to pull up the clothes of a woman. 5 Day, Conn. 81.

LAST HEIR. He to whom the lands come if they escheat for want of lawful heirs: viz., sometimes the lord of whom the lands are held, sometimes the king. Bracton, lib. 5, c. 17.

LAST SICKNESS. That of which a person dies.

The expenses of this sickness are generally entitled to a preference in payment of debts of an insolvent estate. La. Civ. Code, art. 3166.

To prevent impositions, the statute of frauds requires that nuncupative wills shall be made during the testator's last sickness. Roberts, Frauds, 556; 20 Johns. N. Y. 502.

LAST WILL (Lat. ultima voluntas). A disposition of real estate to take effect after death.

It is strictly distinguishable from testament, which is applied to personal estate, 1 Williams, Exec. 6, n. b, Amer. notes; but the words are generally used together, "last will and testament," in a will, whether real or personal estate is to be disposed of. See WILL.

LATENT AMBIGUITY. One which does not appear on the face of the instrument. See AMBIGUITY; MAXIMS, Ambiguities.

LATHE, LATH (L. Lat. laestrum or leda. Law Fr. and Eng. Dict.). A division of certain counties in England, intermediate between a county or shire and a hundred, sometimes containing three or four hundreds, as in Kent and Sussex. Cowel. But in Sussex the word used for this division is rape. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 116. There was formerly a lathe-reeve or bailiff in each lathe. Id. This division into lathes continues to the present day. See 12 East, 244. In Ireland, the lathe was intermediate between the tything and the hundred. Spencer, Ireland. See Termes de la Ley.

LATIDEMEO. In Spanish Law. The tax paid by the possessor of land held by quit-rent or emphyteusis to the owner of the estate, when the tenant alienates his right in the property.

LATIFUNDIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. Great or large possessions; a great or large field; a common. Ainsworth. A great estate made up of smaller ones (fundus), which began to be common in the latter times of the empire. Schmidt, Civ. Law, Introd. p. 17.

LATIFUNDUS (Lat. latè possidens). A possessor of a large estate made up of smaller ones. DuCange.

LATITAT (Lat. he lies hid). In English Law. The name of a writ calling a defendant to answer to a personal action in the king's bench. It derives its name from a supposition that the defendant lurks and lies hid, and cannot be found in the county of Middlesex (in which the said court is holden) to be taken there, but is gone into some other county, and therefore requiring the sheriff to apprehend him in such other county. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 78.

LAUDIMIUM, LAUDATIOREM (Lat. a laudando domino). A fiftieth part of the purchase-money or (if no sale) of the value of the estate paid to the landlord (dominus) by a new emphyteuta on his succession to the estate, not as heir, but as singular successor. Voetius, Comm. ad Pand. lib. 6, tit. 3, §§ 26–35; Mackeldey, Civ. Law, 297.

In Old English Law. The tenant paid a laudemium or acknowledgment-money to new landlord on the death of the old. See Blount, Acknowledgment-Money.

LAUNCH. The movement by which a ship or boat descends from the shore into the water when she is first built, or afterwards.

A large, long, low, flat-bottomed boat. Mar. Dict. The long boat of a ship. R. H. Dana. A small vessel employed to carry the cargo of a large one to and from the shore.

The goods on board of a launch are at the risk of the insurers till landed. 5 Mart. La. N. S. 387. The duties and rights of the master of a launch are the same as those of the master of a lighter.

When the master of a vessel agreed to take cotton on board his vessel from the cotton-press, and employed a steam-lighter for that purpose, and the cotton was lost by an explosion of the steam-boiler of the lighter, it was held that his vessel was liable in rem for the loss. 23 Bost. Law Rep. 277.

LAW. That which is laid down; that which is established. A rule or method of action, or order of sequences.

The rules and methods by which society compels or restrains the action of its members.

The aggregate of those rules and principles of conduct which the governing power in a community recognizes as the rules and principles which it will enforce or sanction, and according to which it will regulate, limit, or protect the conduct of its members.

A rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state. 1 Stephen, Comm. 25.

A rule or enactment promulgated by the legislative authority of a state; a long-established local custom which has the force of such an enactment. 10 Pet. 18.

The doctrines and procedure of the common law of England and America, as distinguished from those of equity.

An oath. So used in the old English practice, by which wager of law was allowed. See WAGER OF LAW.

2. Perhaps few terms whose use requires equal precision serve in so many diverse meanings as the term law. In its root it signifies that which is laid down, that which is established. "In the largest sense," says Montesquieu (Esprit des Lois, b. 1, ch. 1), "laws are the necessary relations which arise from the nature of things; and, in this sense, all beings have their laws, God has his laws, the material universe has its laws, intelligences superior to man have their laws, animals have their laws, man has his laws. In this sense, the idea of a command proceeding from a superior to an inferior is not necessarily involved in the term law. It is frequently thus used to denote simply a statement of a constant relation of phenomena. The laws of science, thus, are but generalized statements of observed facts. "It is a perversion of language," says Paley, "to assign any law as the efficient operative cause of any thing. A law presupposes an agent: this is only the mode according to which an agent proceeds."

In its relation to human affairs there is a broad use of the term, in which it denotes any of those rules and methods by which a society compels or restrains the action of its members. Here the idea of a command is more generally obvious, and has usually been thought an essential element in the notion of human law.

A distinction is to be observed in the outset between the abstract and the concrete meaning of the word. That which is usually intended by the term "laws" is not coextensive with that which is intended by the term "law." In the broadest sense which it bears when used in the abstract, law is a science. It treats of the theory of government, the relation of states to each other and to individuals, and the rights and obligations of states, of individuals, and of artificial persons and local communities among themselves and to each other.

3. An analysis of the science of law presents a view, first, of the rights of persons, distinguishing them as natural persons and artificial persons, or bodies politic or corporations. These rights are deemed either absolute, as relating to the enjoyment of personal security, liberty, and of private property, or, on the other hand, as relative,—that is, arising out of the relation in which several persons stand. These relations are either, first, public or political, viz.: the relation of magistrates and people; or, second, are private, as the relations of master and servant, husband and wife, parent and child, guardian and ward, to which might be added relations arising out of private contracts, such as partnership, principal and agent, and the like. Under the head of the rights of persons as arising out of public relations may be discussed the constitution and polity of the state, the distribution of powers among the various departments of the government, the political status of individuals, as aliens, citizens, and the like.

In the second place, the analysis presents the rights of property, which is divided into personal property or chattels, viz., that which is movable, and real property, or that which is immovable, viz., lands, including nearly all degrees of interest therein, as well as such chattels as by a peculiar connection with land may be deemed to have lost their character as legally movable: these rights of property are viewed in respect to the origin of title, the transmission of title, and the protection of the enjoyment thereof.

In the third place, the analysis presents a view of private wrongs, or those injuries to persons for which the law provides a redress for the aggrieved party; and under this head may be considered the tribunals through which the protection of rights or the redress of wrongs may be obtained, and the various modes of procedure to those ends.

4. Lastly, the analysis presents a view of public wrongs, or crimes and misdemeanors, in which may be considered the theory of crime and punishment, the persons capable of committing crimes, the several degrees of guilt of principals and accessories, the various crimes of which the law takes cognizance,—as, those against religion, those against the state and its government, and those against persons and property,—with the punishment which the law affixes to each, and also the tribunals and procedure by which crimes threatened may be prevented and crimes committed may be punished. Blackstone, Comm.

5. In a stricter sense, but still in the abstract, law denotes the aggregate of those rules and principles of conduct which the governing power in a community recognizes as the rules and principles which it will enforce or sanction, and according to which it will regulate, limit, or protect the conduct of members of the community.

It is the aggregate of legal rules and principles, as distinguished from any particular rule or principle. No one statute, nor all statutes, constitute the law of the state; for the maxims of the courts and the regulations of municipal bodies, as well as, to some extent, the universal principles of ethics, go to make up the body of the law. It includes principles, which rest in the common sense of justice and right, as well as positive rules or regulations, which rest in ordinance. It is the aggregate of the rules or principles only which the governing power in the community recognizes, because that power, whether it be deemed as residing in a monarch, an aristocracy, or in the common people at large, is the source of the authority and the sanction of those rules and principles. It is the aggregate of those rules and principles which are recognized as the law by that power, rather than those which are actually enforced in all cases; for a statute is none the less a law because the community forbear to enforce it, so long as it is officially recognized by them as that which, in theory at least, should be enforced; nor does a departure from the law by the governing power in itself abrogate the law. It comprises not only those rules and principles which are to be enforced, but also those which are simply permissive; for a very large part even of modern statute-law—which is commonly defined as a rule commanding or prohibiting—in reality neither commands nor prohibits, except in the most distant and indirect sense, but simply authorizes, permits, or sanctions; and this is much more generally true of those principles of the law which rest in custom and the adjudications of the courts. It is only those which relate to the members of the community in question; for laws, as such, have no extra-territorial operation.

6. The idea of law has commonly been analyzed as composed of three elements: First, a command of the lawgiver, which command must prescribe not a single act merely, but a series or class of acts; second, an obligation imposed thereby on the citizen; third, a sanction threatened in the event of disobedience. Thus, municipal law is defined as "a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in the state, commanding what is right and prohibiting what is wrong." 1 Blackstone, Comm. 44. The latter clause of this definition has been much criticized. Mr. Chitty modifies it to "commanding what shall be done or what shall not be done" (id. note); and Mr. Stephen omits it, defining law as "a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state." 1 Stephen, Comm. 25. It is also defined as a rule of conduct contained in the command of a sovereign addressed to the subject. (Encyc. Brit.) These definitions, though more apt in reference to statutes and edicts than to the law in general, seem, even in reference to the former sort of law, to look rather at the usual form than the invariable essence of the thing. The principle of law, that a promise without a consideration is void, neither commands men to provide a consideration for every promise nor forbids them to promise without consideration, for this is lawful; nor does it forbid them to fulfil such promises. It simply amounts to this, that if men choose to break such promises, society will interfere to enforce them. And even many statutes have no form of a command or prohibition; and, moreover, some that are such in form are not in reality. An enactment that no action shall be brought on a simple contract after the lapse of six years from the time the cause of action accrued cannot aptly be said to command men to bring actions within six years, nor even, in fact, to forbid them to bring such actions after that time; for it is still lawful to sue on an outlawed demand, and, if the defendant do not object, the plaintiff may succeed. It may be deemed a command in so far as it is a direction to the courts to dismiss such actions; but as a rule of civil conduct it amounts simply to this, that when an obligation has become stale to a certain degree, society will sanction the debtor in repudiating it.

7. When used in the concrete, the term usually has reference to statutes or expressions of the legislative will. "The laws of a state," observes Mr. Justice Story, "are more usually understood to mean the rules and enactments promulgated by the legislative authority thereof, or long-established local customs having the force of laws." 16 Pet. 18. Hence, he argues, "in the ordinary use of language it will hardly be contended that the decisions of courts constitute laws." In the Civil Code of Louisiana they are defined to be "the solemn expression of the legislative will."

But, as has already been said, "law" in the abstract involves much more. Thus, a reference in a statute to "the cases provided by law" includes not only those cases provided by former statutes, but also those contemplated by the common or unwritten law. 18 N. Y. 115.

The law of the land, an expression used in Magna Charta and adopted in most of the earlier constitutions of the original states, means, however, something more than the legislative will: it requires the due and orderly proceeding of justice according to the established methods. See DUE PROCESS OF LAW; Jones vs. Robbins, 8 Gray, Mass. 329.

When the term law is used to denote enactments of the legislative power, it is frequently confined, especially by English writers, to permanent rules of civil conduct, as distinguished from other acts, such as a divorce act, an appropriation bill, an estates act. Report of Eng. Stat. L. Com. Mar., 1856.

In the United States, the organic law of a state is termed the constitution, and the term "laws" generally designates statutes or legislative enactments, in contradistinction to the constitution. See STATUTES.

8. Law, as distinguished from equity, denotes the doctrines and procedure of the common law of England and America, from which equity is a departure.

The distinction between law and equity has been abolished in New York, Ohio, Indiana, Missouri, Wisconsin, Kentucky, Alabama, California, Oregon, and Minnesota, at least so far as the methods of procedure and the organization of tribunals is concerned; but the distinction between legal and equitable relief still maintains its place in the doctrines of remedies.

Law is also used in contradistinction to fact. Questions of law are, in general, for the decision of the court; while it is for the jury to pass upon questions of fact.

In respect to the ground of the authority of law, it is divided as natural law, or the law of nature or of God, and positive law.

9. Arbitrary law. A law or provision of law so far removed from considerations of abstract justice that it is necessarily founded on the mere will of the law-making power, so that it is rather a rule established than a principle declared. The principle that an infant shall not be bound by his contract is not arbitrary; but the rule that the limit of infancy shall be twenty-one years, not twenty nor twenty-two, is arbitrary.

The term is also sometimes used to signify an unreasonable law,—one that is in violation of justice.

Irrevocable laws. All laws which have not in their nature or in their language some limit or termination provided are, in theory, perpetual; but the perpetuity is liable to be defeated by subsequent abrogation. It has sometimes been attempted to secure an absolute perpetuity by an express provision forbidding any abrogation. But it may well be questioned whether one generation has power to bind their posterity by an irrevocable law. See this subject discussed by Bentham, Works, vol. 2, pp. 402–407; and see Dwarris, Stat. 479.

Municipal law is a system of law proper to any single state, nation, or community. See MUNICIPAL LAW.

A penal law is one which inflicts a penalty for its violation.

Positive law is the system naturally established by a community, in distinction from natural law. See POSITIVE LAW.

A private law is one which relates to private matters which do not concern the public at large.

A prospective law or statute is one which applies only to cases arising after its enactment, and does not affect that which is already past.

10. A public law is one which affects the public, either generally or in some classes.

A retrospective law or statute is one that turns backward to alter that which is past or to affect men in relation to their conduct before its enactment. These are also called retroactive laws. In general, whenever a retroactive statute would take away vested rights or impair the obligation of contracts, it is in so far void. 3 Dall. Penn. 391. But laws which only vary the remedies, or merely cure a defect in proceedings otherwise fair, are valid. 10 Serg. & R. Penn. 102, 103; 15 id. 72; 2 Pet. 380, 627; 8 id. 88; 11 id. 420. See Ex Post Facto.

LAW BORGH. In Old Scotch Law. A pledge or surety for appearance.

LAW-BURROWS. In Scotch Law Security for the peaceful behavior of a party; security to keep the peace. This process was much resorted to by the government of Charles II. for political purposes.

LAW COURT OF APPEALS. In American Law. An appellate tribunal, in the state of South Carolina, for hearing appeals from the courts of law.

LAW DAY. The day fixed in a mortgage or defeasible deed for the payment of the debt secured. 24 Ala. N. S. 149; 10 Conn 280; 21 N. Y. 345.

In Old English Law. Law day or lage day denoted a day of open court; especially the more solemn courts of a county or hundred. The court-leet, or view of frankpledge.

LAW FRENCH. From the time of William the Norman down to that of Edward III., all public proceedings and documents in England, including the records of the courts, the arguments of counsel, and the decisions of the judges, were in the language of the Norman French. After Latin and English were substituted in the records and proceedings, however, the cases and decisions continued until the close of the seventeenth century to be reported in French; the first reports published in English being those of Style, in 1658. The statutes of the reign of Henry III. and some of the subsequent reigns are partly or wholly in this language; but English was substituted in the reign of Henry VII. Of the law-treatises in French, the Mirrour and Britton, and the works of Littleton, may be mentioned.

LAW OF THE LAND. Due process of law. 2 Yerg. Tenn. 50; 6 Penn. St. 86; 4 Hill, N. Y. 140. See DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

LAW LATIN. Edward III. substituted the Latin language for the Norman-French in the records, and the English in other proceedings. The Latin was used by virtue of its being the language of scholars of all European nations; but, in order to adapt it to the purposes of the profession, the English terms of legal art in most frequent use were Latinized by the simple addition of a Latin termination, and the diverse vocabulary thus collected was arranged in English idioms. But this barbarous dialect commended itself by a semblance of scholarly sound, and more by the precision which attaches to technical terms that are never used in popular language. During the time of Cromwell, English was used; but with the restoration Latin was reinstated, and held its place till 4 Geo. II. ch. 26, when it was enacted that, since the common people ought to know what was done for and against them, proceedings should be in English. It was found, however, that certain technical terms had become so fixed that by a subsequent act such words were allowed to continue in use. 6 Geo. II. ch. 14. Hence a large class of Latin terms are still in use, of which nisi prius, habeas corpus, lis pendens, are examples. Consult 3 Blackstone, Comm. 318–323, and as to particular words and phrases, Termes de la Ley; Taylor's Law Glossary; the Law-French and Law-Latin Dictionary; Kelham's Norman-French Dictionary; DuCange.

LAW MERCHANT. The general body of commercial usages in matters relative to commerce. Blackstone calls it the custom of merchants, and ranks it under the head of the particular customs of England, which go to make up the great body of the common law. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 75. Since, however, its character is not local, nor its obligation confined to a particular district, it cannot with propriety be considered as a custom in the technical sense. 1 Stephen, Comm. 54. It is a system of law which does not rest exclusively on the positive institutions and local customs of any particular country, but consists of certain principles of equity and usages of trade which general convenience and a common sense of justice have established, to regulate the dealings of merchants and mariners in all the commercial countries of the civilized world. 3 Kent, Comm. 2.

These usages, being general and extensive, partake of the character of rules and principles of law, not of matters of fact, as do usages which are local or special. They constitute a part of the general law of the land, and, being a part of that law, their existence cannot be proved by witnesses, but the judges are bound to take notice of them ex officio, Winch, 24; and this application is not confined to merchants, but extends to all persons concerned in any mercantile transaction. See Beawes, Lex Mercatoria Rediviva; Caines, Lex Mercatoria Americana; Comyns, Dig. Merchant (D); Chitty, Com. LAW OF NATIONS. See INTERNATIONAL LAW.

LAW OF NATURE. That law which God, the sovereign of the universe, has prescribed to all men, not by any formal promulgation, but by the internal dictate of reason alone. It is discovered by a just consideration of the agreeableness or disagreeableness of human actions to the nature of man; and it comprehends all the duties which we owe either to the Supreme Being, to ourselves, or to our neighbours: as, reverence to God, self-defence, temperance, honour to our parents, benevolence to all, a strict adherence to our engagements, gratitude, and the like. Erskine, Pract. Scotch Law, 1. 1. 1. See Ayliffe, Pand. tit. 2, p. 2; Cicero, de Leg. lib. 1.

2. The primitive laws of nature may be reduced to six, namely: comparative sagacity, or reason; self-love; the attraction of the sexes to each other; the tenderness of parents towards their children; the religious sentiment; sociability.

When man is properly organized, he is able to discover moral good from moral evil; and the study of man proves that man is not only an intelligent but a free being, and he is therefore responsible for his actions. The judgment we form of our good actions produces happiness; on the contrary, the judgment we form of our bad actions produces unhappiness.

3. Every animated being is impelled by nature to his own preservation, to defend his life and body from injuries, to shun what may be hurtful, and to provide all things requisite to his existence. Hence the duty to watch over his own preservation. Suicide and duelling are, therefore, contrary to this law; and a man cannot mutilate himself, nor renounce his liberty.

The attraction of the sexes has been provided for the preservation of the human race; and this law condemns celibacy. The end of marriage proves that polygamy and polyandry are contrary to the law of nature. Hence it follows that the husband and wife have a mutual and exclusive right over each other.

4. Man from his birth is wholly unable to provide for the least of his necessities; but the love of his parents supplies for this weakness. This is one of the most powerful laws of nature. The principal duties it imposes on the parents are to bestow on the child all the care its weakness requires, to provide for its necessary food and clothing, to instruct it, to provide for its wants, and to use coercive means for its good, when requisite.

5. The religious sentiment which leads us naturally towards the Supreme Being is one of the attributes which belong to humanity alone; and its importance gives it the rank of the moral law of nature. From this sentiment arise all the sects and different forms of worship among men.

The need which man feels to live in society is one of the primitive laws of nature whence flow our duties and rights; and the existence of society depends upon the condition that the rights of all shall be respected. On this law are based the assistance, succors, and good offices which men owe to each other, they being unable to provide each every thing for himself.

LAW OF THE STAPLE. See LAW MERCHANT.

LAWFUL. Legal. That which is not contrary to law. That which is sanctioned or permitted by law. That which is in accordance with law. The terms "lawful," "unlawful," and "illegal" are used with reference to that which is in its substance sanctioned or prohibited by the law. The term "legal" is occasionally used with reference to matters of form alone: thus, an oral agreement to convey land, though void by law, is not properly to be said to be unlawful, because there is no violation of law in making or in performing such an agreement; but it is said to be not legal, or not in lawful form, because the law will not enforce it, for want of that written evidence required in such cases.

LAWFUL MONEY. Money which is a legal tender in payment of debts: e.g. gold and silver coined at the mint. 2 Salk. 446; 5 Mod. 7; 3 Ind. 358; 2 How. 244; 3 id. 717; 16 Ark. 83. See 1 Hempst. C. C. 236.

LAWING OF DOGS. Mutilating the fore-feet of mastiffs, to prevent them from running after deer. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 71.

LAWLESS COURT. An ancient local English court, said to have been held in Essex once a year, at cock-crowing, without a light or pen and ink, and conducted in a whisper.

LAWLESS MAN. An outlaw.

LAWSUIT. An action at law, or litigation.

LAWYER. One skilled in the law.

LAY. In English Law. That which relates to persons or things not ecclesiastical. In the United States, the people are not by law divided, as in England, into ecclesiastical and lay. The law makes no distinction between them.

In Pleading. To state or to allege. The place from whence a jury are to be summoned is called the venue, and the allegation in the declaration of the place where the jury is to be summoned is, in technical language, said to lay the venue. 3 Stephen, Comm. 574; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2826.

LAY CORPORATION. A corporation composed of lay persons or for lay purposes. Angell & A. Corp. 28–30; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 470.

TO LAY DAMAGES. To state at the conclusion of the declaration the amount of damages which the plaintiff claims.

LAY DAYS. In Maritime Law. The time allowed to the master of a vessel for loading and unloading the same. In the absence of any custom to the contrary, Sundays are to be computed in the calculation of lay days at the port of discharge. 10 Mees. & W. Exch. 331. See 3 Esp. 121. They differ from DEMURRAGE, which see.

LAY FEE. A fee held by ordinary feudal tenure, as distinguished from the ecclesiastical tenure of frankalmoign, by which an ecclesiastical corporation held of donor. The tenure of frankalmoign is reserved by stat. 12 Car. II., which abolished military tenures. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 101.

LAY IMPROPRIATOR. Lay rector, to whom the greater tithes are reserved, the lesser going to the vicar. 1 Burn, Eccl. Law, 75, 76.

LAY PEOPLE. Jurymen. Finch, Law, 381.

LAYMAN. In Ecclesiastical Law. One who is not an ecclesiastic nor a clergyman.

LAZARET, LAZARETTO. A place, selected by public authority, where vessels coming from infected or unhealthy countries are required to perform quarantine. See HEALTH.

LE ROI S'AVISERA. The king will consider of it. This phrase is used by the English monarch when he gives his dissent to an act passed by the lords and commons. The same formula was used by the late king of the French for the same purpose. 1 Toul lier, n. 52. See VETO.

LE ROI LE VEUT. The king assents. This is the formula used in England, and formerly in France, when the king approved of a bill passed by the legislature. 1 Toullier, n. 52.

LE ROI VEUT EN DELIBERER. The king will deliberate on it. This is the formula which the late French king used when he intended to veto an act of the legislative assembly. 1 Toullier, n. 42.

LEADING A USE. A term applied to deeds declaring the use of a fine: i.e. specifying to whose use the fine shall enure before the fine is levied. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 363. See DEED.

LEADING CASE. A case decided by a court of last resort, which decides some particular point in question, and to which reference is constantly or frequently made, for the purpose of determining the law in similar questions.

Many elements go to the constitution of a case as a leading case: among which are, the priority of the case, the character of the court, the amount of consideration given to the question, the freedom from collateral matters or questions. The term is applied to cases as leading either in a particular state or at common law. A very convenient means of digesting the law upon any subject is found to be the selection of a leading case upon the subject, and an arrangement of authorities illustrating the questions decided. See Bennett & H. Lead. Crim. Cas.; Smith, Lead. Cas.; Hare & W. Sel. Dec.; Tudor, Lead. Cas.; and a variety of others.

LEADING COUNSEL. That one of two or more counsel employed on the same side in a cause who has the principal management of the cause. So called as distinguished from the other, who is called the junior counsel.

LEADING QUESTION. In Practice. A question which puts into the witness's mouth the words to be echoed back, or plainly suggests the answer which the party wishes to get from him. 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 171; 4 Wend. N. Y. 247. In that case the examiner is said to lead him to the answer. It is not always easy to determine what is or is not a leading question.

These questions cannot, in general, be put to a witness in his examination in chief. 3 Binn. Penn. 130; 6 id. 483; 1 Phillipps, Ev. 221; 1 Starkie, Ev. 123. But, in an examination in chief, questions may be put to lead the mind of the witness to the subject of inquiry; and they are allowed when it appears the witness wishes to conceal the truth or to favor the opposite party, or where, from the nature of the case, the mind of the witness cannot be directed to the subject of inquiry without a particular specification of such subject. 1 Campb. 43; 1 Stark. 100.

In cross-examinations, the examiner has generally the right to put leading questions. 1 Starkie, Ev. 132; 3 Chitty, Pract. 892; Roscoe, Civ. Ev. 94; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3203, 3204.

LEAGUE. A measure of length, which consists of three geographical miles. The jurisdiction of the United States extends into the sea a marine league. See Acts of Congress of June 5, 1794, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 352; and April 20, 1818, 3 Story, U. S. Laws, 1694; 1 Wait, State Papers, 195. See CANNON SHOT.

In Criminal Law. A conspiracy to do an unlawful act. The term is but little used.

In Contracts. An agreement between states. Leagues between states are of several kinds: First, leagues offensive and defensive, by which two or more nations agree not only to defend each other, but to carry on war against their common enemies. Second, defensive, but not offensive, obliging each to defend the other against any foreign invasion. Third, leagues of simple amity, by which one contracts not to invade, injure, or offend the other: this usually includes the liberty of mutual commerce and trade, and the safeguard of merchants and traders in each other's domain. Bacon, Abr. Prerogative (D 4). See CONFEDERACY; CONSPIRACY; PEACE; TRUCE; WAR.

LEAKAGE. The waste which has taken place in liquids, by their escaping out of the casks or vessels in which they were kept.

By the act of March 2, 1799, s. 59, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 625, it is provided that there be an allowance of two per cent. for leakage on the quantity which shall appear by the gauge to be contained in any cask of liquors subject to duty by the gallon, and ten per cent. on all beer, ale, and porter in bottles, and five per cent. on all other liquors in bottles, to be deducted from the invoice quantity, in lieu of breakage; or it shall be lawful to compute the duties on the actual quantity, to be ascertained by tale, at the option of the importer, to be made at the time of entry.

LEAL. Loyal; that which belongs to the law.

LEAP YEAR. See BISSEXTILE.

LEASE. A species of contract for the possession and profits of lands and tenements either for life or for a certain term of years, or during the pleasure of the parties.

2. One of its essential properties is, that its duration must be for a shorter period than the duration of the interest of the lessor in the land; for if he disposes of his entire interest it becomes an assignment, and is not a lease. In other words, the granting of a lease always supposes that the grantor reserves to himself a reversion in the leased premises.

And a distinction is to be noted between a lease and a mere agreement for a lease. The whole question, however, resolves itself into one of construction, and an instrument is to be considered either a lease or an agreement for a lease, according to what appears to be the intention of the parties; though, generally, if there are apt words of demise followed by possession, the instrument will be held a lease, 2 Johns. N. Y. 47; 5 id. 74; 9 N. Y. 44; 5 Barnew. & Ad. 1042; 3 Carr. & P. 441; 4 Mees. & W. Exch. 719; 8 Bingh. 178; 1 Q. B. 517; otherwise, if a fuller lease is to be prepared and executed before the demise is to take effect and possession to be given. 21 Vt. 172; 24 Wend. N. Y. 201; 3 Stor. C. C. 325; 4 Conn. 238; 9 Ad. & E. 644; 1 Pen. & D. 444.

3. The party who leases is called the lessor, he to whom the lease is made the lessee, and the compensation or consideration of the lease is the rent. The words lease and demise are frequently used to signify the estate or interest conveyed; but they properly apply to the instrument of conveyance

When a lessee parts with the estate granted to him, reserving any portion thereof, however small, he makes an underlease. Taylor, Landl. & Ten. § 14; 15 Wend. N. Y. 667; 2 Ohio, 221; 8 Pick. Mass. 339; 1 W. Blackst. 482; 13 Mees. & W. Exch. 209.

The estate created by a lease, when for years, is called a term (terminus), because its duration is limited and determined,—its commencement as well as its termination being ascertained by an express agreement of the parties. And this phrase signifies not only the limitation of time or period granted for the occupation of the premises, but includes also the estate or interest in the land that pass during such period. A term, however, is perfected only by the entry of the lessee; for previous to this the estate remains in the lessor, the lessee having a mere right to enter, which right is called an inter esse termini. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 292–297; 5 Barnew. & C. 111; 5 Coke, 23 b; Croke Jac. 60; 1 Barnew. & Ald. 606; 1 Brod. & B. 238.

4. Any thing corporeal or incorporeal lying in livery or in grant may be the subject-matter of a lease; and therefore not only lands and houses, but commons, ways, fisheries, franchises, estovers, annuities, rent charges, and all other incorporeal hereditaments, are included in the common-law rule. Sheppard, Touchst. 268; 23 Penn. St. 106; 3 N. Y. 151; 1 Root, Conn. 318. See 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 310. Goods, chattels, or live stock may also be demised; and, although rent cannot technically be said to issue out of these, the contract for its payment is good, and an action for rent in arrear may be maintained upon such leases. Coke, Litt. 57 a; 3 Hen. & M. Va. 470; 31 Penn. St. 20.

5. Leases are made either by parol or by deed. The former mode embraces all cases where the parties agree either orally or by a writing not under seal. The technical words generally made use of in the written instrument are, "demise, grant, and to farm, let;" but no particular form of expression is required in any case to create an immediate demise. 8 Bingh. 182; 9 Ad. & E. 650; 5 Term, 168; 2 Wend. N. Y. 438; 1 Den. N. Y. 602; 8 Penn. St. 272; 12 Me. 135; Williams, Real Prop. 327. Any permissive holding is, in fact, sufficient for the purpose, and it may be contained in any written memorandum by which it appears to have been the intention of one of the parties voluntarily to dispossess himself of the premises for any given period, and of the other to assume the possession for the same period. Taylor, Landl. & Ten. § 26; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 300. The English statute of frauds, of 29 Charles II., first required all leases exceeding three years to be in writing; and this statute has been generally adopted in the United States. But New York, Connecticut, Michigan, Indiana, and Illinois have reduced the period of an oral lease to one year. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 299, 391; 5 Ad. & E. 856; Browne, Stat. of Frauds, 501–532.

6. A written agreement is generally sufficient to create a term of years, 3 Greene, N. J. 116; 21 Wend. N. Y. 635; but at common law every conveyance of a freehold interest was required to be by deed. This rule is in force in New York and South Carolina, and, consequently, applies to leases for life in those states. Virginia and Kentucky require all estates exceeding a term of five years to be by deed; while Vermont and Rhode Island apply the rule to a term that exceeds one year. In Louisiana, it must, in addition, be registered in the office of a notary. In England, by a recent statute, all leases that are required to be in writing must also be under seal. 4 Kent, Comm. 443; Taylor, Landl. & Ten. § 34. See Browne, Stat. of Frauds, Appx. 503–531.

7. All persons seised of lands or tenements may grant leases of them, unless they happen to be under some legal disability: as, of unsound mind, immature age, or the like, 2 Exch. 487; 4 id. 17; 9 id. 309; 8 Carr. & P. 679; 10 Pet. 65; 5 Pick. Mass. 431; 11 id. 304; 17 Wend. N. Y. 133; 4 Dev. & B. No. C. 289; 1 N. H. 75; and in case of many of these disabilities the leases are voidable merely, and not void. See, as to infants, 10 Pet. 65; 5 Ohio, 251; 15 id. 192; 11 Humphr. Tenn. 468; 11 Johns. N. Y. 539; 14 id. 124; intoxicated persons, 13 Mees. & W. Exch. 623; married women, Smith, Landl. & Ten. 48; 1 Platt, Leases, 48; 19 N. H. 483. See PARTIES; CONTRACTS. But it is essential to the validity of a lease that the lessor has, at the time he undertakes to make the grant, possession of the premises; otherwise, whatever he does will amount to nothing more than the assignment of a chose in action. Croke Car. 109; Sheppard, Touchst. 269. For this reason, it was held in Pennsylvania that a purchaser at a sheriff's sale who had not received his deed could not make a valid lease. 1 Penn. St. 402.

8. But, unless there is an adverse holding, possession will be deemed to follow the ownership. And although a lease may not be sufficient to authorize a lessee to demand possession for the want of a possessory title in his lessor, it will still operate by way of estoppel, and enure to his benefit if the lessor afterwards comes into possession of the land before the expiration of the lease. Bacon, Abr. Leases (I 4); Croke Eliz. 109; 28 Barb. N. Y. 240; 2 Hill, N. Y. 554; 16 Johns. N. Y. 110, 201; 5 Ark. 693; 7 Mann. & G. 701.

9. The power to lease will, of course, depend upon the extent of the lessor's estate in the premises; and if he has but an estate for life, his lease can only be coextensive therewith; when for a term of years, its commencement as well as its termination must be ascertained, for certainty in these respects is of the essence of a term of years. But although this term may not at first appear to be certain, it may be rendered so by reference to some fact or event: as, if a lease be made to a man for so many years as he has in the manor of Dale, and he happens to have a term of two years in that manor, the lease will be good for that period. Coke, Litt. 45 b; 3 Term, 463; 4 East, 29; 1 Mees. & W. Exch. 533.

10. Lord Coke states that, originally, express terms could not endure beyond an ordinary generation of forty years, lest men might be disinherited; but the doctrine had become antiquated even in his day, and at the present time there is no limitation to a term of years except in the state of New York, where land cannot be leased for agricultural purposes for a longer period than twelve years. See Coke, Litt. 45 b, 46 a; 9 Mod. 101; 13 Ohio, 334; 1 Platt, Leas. 3; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 310.

In all cases of uncertain duration, or if no time has been agreed upon for the continuation of the term, or if after the expiration of a term the tenant continues to hold over, without any effort on the part of the landlord to remove him, the tenancy is at the will of either party. And it remains at will until after the payment and receipt of rent on account of a new tenancy, or until the parties concur in some other act which recognizes the existence of a tenancy, from which event it becomes a tenancy from year to year. After this, neither party has a right to terminate it before the expiration of the current year upon which they have entered, nor then without having first given reasonable notice to the other party of his intention to do so. The length of this notice is regulated by the statutes of the different states. 11 Wend. N. Y. 616; 13 Johns. N. Y. 109; 8 Term, 3; 4 Ired. No. C. 294; 3 Zabr. N. J. 111.

11. The formal parts of a lease by deed are: first, the date, which will fix the time for its commencement, unless some other period is specified in the instrument itself for that purpose; but if there is no date, or an impossible one, the time will be considered as having commenced from the delivery of the deed. 2 Johns. N. Y. 231; 15 Wend. N. Y. 656; 4 Barnew. & C. 272. Second, the names of the parties, with respect to which the law knows but one Christian name; and therefore the middle letter of the name of either party is immaterial, and a person may always show he is as well known by one name as another. 14 Pet. 322. Third, some consideration must appear, although it need not be what is technically called rent, or a periodical render of compensation for the use of the premises; but it may be a sum in gross, or the natural affection which one party has for the other. It may also consist in grain, animals, or the personal services of the lessee. 3 Hill, N. Y. 345; 1 Speers, So. C. 408. Fourth, the description of the premises need not specify all the particulars of the subject-matter of the demise, for the accessories will follow the principal thing named: thus, the garden is parcel of a dwelling-house, and the general description of a farm includes all the houses and lands appertaining to the farm. 9 Conn. 374; 4 Rawle, Penn. 330; 9 Cow. N. Y. 747. But whether certain premises are parcel of the demise or not is always matter of evidence. 14 Barb. N. Y. 434; 3 Barnew. & C. 870. Fifth, the rights and liabilities of the respective parties are regulated by law in the absence of any particular agreement in respect thereto; but express covenants are usually inserted in a lease, for the purpose of limiting or otherwise defining their rights and duties in relation to repairs, taxes, insurance renewals, residence on the premises, modes of cultivation, fixtures, and the like.

12. In every well-drawn lease, provision is made for a forfeiture of the term in case the tenant refuses to pay rent, commits waste, or is guilty of a breach of the covenant to repair, insure, reside upon the premises, or the like. This clause enables the lessor or his assigns to re-enter in any such event upon the demised premises and eject the tenant, leaving both parties in the same condition as if the lease were a nullity; but in the absence of a proviso for re-entry the lessor would possess no such power, the mere breach of a covenant enabling him to sue for damages only. 3 Wils. 127; 2 Cow. N. Y. 591; 2 Ov. Tenn. 233. The forfeiture will generally be enforced by the courts, except where the landlord's damages are a mere matter of computation and can be readily compensated by money. 7 Johns. N. Y. 235; 4 Munf. Va. 332; 2 Price, Exch. 200. But in case of a forfeiture for the non-payment of rent, the proviso is allowed to operate simply as a security for rent, and the tenant will be relieved from its effects at any time by paying the landlord or bringing into court the amount of all arrears of rent, with interest and costs.

13. A lease may also be terminated before the prescribed period if the premises are required to be taken for public uses or improvements, or the subject-matter of demise wholly perishes or is turned into a house of ill fame. 24 Wend. N. Y. 454; 29 Barb. N. Y. 116; 5 Ohio, 303. The same result will follow when the tenant purchases the fee, or the fee descends to him as heir at law; for in either case the lease is merged in the inheritance: since there would be a manifest inconsistency in allowing the same person to hold two distinct estates immediately expectant on each other, while one of them includes the time of both, thus uniting the two opposite characters of landlord and tenant. 10 Johns. N. Y. 482; 2 Carr. & P. 347; Taylor, Landl. & Ten. § 502. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

LEASE AND RELEASE. A species of conveyance much used in England, consisting theoretically of two instruments, but which are practically united in the same instrument.

It was invented by Sergeant Moore, soon after the enactment of the statute of uses. It is thus contrived: a lease, or rather bargain and sale upon some pecuniary consideration for one year, is made by the tenant of the freehold to the lessee or bargainee. This, without any enrolment, makes the bargainor stand seised to the use of the bargainee, and vests in the bargainee the use of the term for one year, and then the statute immediately annexes the possession. Being thus in possession, he is capable of receiving a release of the freehold and reversion, which must be made to the tenant in possession, and accordingly the next day a release is granted to him.

The lease and release, when used as a conveyance of the fee, have the joint operation of a single conveyance. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 339; 4 Kent, Comm. 482; Coke, Litt. 207; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 11.

LEASEHOLD. The estate held by virtue of a lease.

LEASING-MAKING. In Scotch Law. Verbal sedition, viz.: slanderous and untrue speeches to the disdain, reproach, and contempt of his majesty, his council and proceedings, etc. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. 4. 4. 29.

LEAVE OF COURT. Permission granted by the court to do something which, without such permission, would not be allowable.

2. The statute of 4 Ann. c. 16, s. 4, provides that it shall be lawful for any defendant or tenant in any action or suit, or for any plaintiff in replevin, in any court of record, with leave of the court, to plead as many several matters thereto as he shall think necessary for his defence. The principles of this statute have been adopted by most of the states of the Union.

3. When the defendant, in pursuance of this statute, pleads more than one plea in bar to one and the same demand or thing, all of the pleas except the first should purport to be pleaded with leave of the court. But the omission is not error nor cause of demurrer. Lawes, Plead. 132; 2 Chitty, Plead. 421; Story, Plead. 72, 76; Gould, Plead. c. 8, § 21; Andr. 109; 3 N. H. 523.

4. Asking leave of court to do any act is an implied admission of jurisdiction of the court, and in those cases in which the objection to the jurisdiction must be taken, if at all, by plea to the jurisdiction, and it can be taken in no other way, the court, by such asking leave, becomes fully vested with the jurisdiction. Bacon, Abr. Abatement (A); Bacon, Abr. Pleas, etc. (E 2); Lawes, Plead. 91; 6 Pick. Mass. 391. But such admission cannot aid the jurisdiction except in such cases.

LECTOR DE LETRA ANTIQUA. In Spanish Law. The person duly authorized by the government to read and decipher ancient documents and titles, in order to entitle them to legal effect in courts of justice.

The importance of the functions of this officer caused the queen of Spain to issue an ordinance on the 2d of July, 1838, ordering that no person should be permitted to exercise it unless he justified, first, that he was a man of good character; second, that he was twenty-five years of age, and submitted to a strict examination, justifying that he was acquainted with the Latin language, and especially with the idioms of it used in writings and documents of the middle ages, also with the Romance or ancient Castilian, the Limousin, used in the ancient provinces of Arragon, paleology, Spanish history and chronology; and, third, that he could decipher the ancient manuscripts preserved in the archives of Spain, the ancient modes of writing, and the changes introduced in it by time. This examination to be conducted under the superintendence of the Chefe Politico, and the process-verbal forwarded to the queen, together with the observations of the board of examiners. Escriche, Dict.

LEDGER. In Commercial Law. A book in which are inscribed the names of all persons dealing with the person who keeps it, and in which there is a separate account, composed generally of one or more pages for each. There are two parallel columns, on one of which the party named is the debtor, and on the other the creditor, and presents a ready means of ascertaining the state of the account. As this book is a transcript from the day-book or journal, it is not evidence per se.

LEDGER-BOOK. In Ecclesiastical Law. The name of a book kept in the prerogative courts in England. It is considered as a roll of the court, but, it seems, it cannot be read in evidence. Bacon, Abr.

LEGACY. A gift by last will. The term is more commonly applied to money or personal property, although sometimes used with reference to a charge upon real estate. 2 Williams, Exec. 947; 5 Term, 716; 1 Burr. 268; 7 Ves. Ch. 391, 522.

An absolute legacy is one given without condition, to vest immediately. 1 Vern. Ch. 254; 2 id. 181; 5 Ves. Ch. 461; 19 id. 86; Comyns, Dig. Chancery (I 4).

An additional legacy is one given to a legatee to whom a legacy has already been given. It may be either by an increase in a codicil of a prior legacy given in the will, or by another legacy added to that already given by the will. 6 Mod. 31; 2 Ves. Ch. 449; 3 Mer. Ch. 154.

An alternative legacy is one by which the testator gives one of two or more things without designating which.

A conditional legacy is a bequest whose existence depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, by which it is either to take place or be defeated. 1 Roper, Leg. 3d ed. 645.

A demonstrative legacy is a bequest of a certain sum of money with reference to a particular fund for payment. Williams, Exec. 995.

A general legacy is one so given as not to amount to a bequest of a particular thing or money of the testator, distinguished from all others of the same kind. 1 Roper, Leg. 3d ed. 170.

An indefinite legacy is a bequest of things which are not enumerated or ascertained as to numbers or quantities: as, a bequest by a testator of all his goods, all his stocks in the funds. Lowndes, Leg. 84; Swinburne, Wills, 485; Ambl. Ch. 641; 1 P. Will. Ch. 697.

A lapsed legacy is one which, in consequence of the death of the legatee before the testator or before the period for vesting, has never vested.

A legacy for life is one in which the legatee is to enjoy the use of the legacy for life.

A modal legacy is a bequest accompanied with directions as to the mode in which it should be applied for the legatee's benefit: for example, a legacy to Titius to put him an apprentice. 2 Vern. Ch. 431; Lowndes, Leg. 151.

A pecuniary legacy is one of money. Pecuniary legacies are most usually general legacies, but there may be a specific pecuniary legacy: for example, of the money in a certain bag. 1 Roper, Leg. 150, n.

A residuary legacy is a bequest of all the testator's personal estate not otherwise effectually disposed of by his will. Lowndes, Leg. 10; Bacon, Abr. Legacies (I).

A specific legacy is a bequest of a specified part of the testator's personal estate, distinguished from all others of the same kind. 3 Beav. Rolls, 349.

2. Most persons are capable of becoming legatees, unless prohibited by statute or alien enemies. Legacies to the subscribing witnesses to a will are by statute often declared void. See 2 Williams, Exec. 4th Am. ed. 906 et seq.; 19 Ves. Ch. 208; 10 Sim. Ch. 487; 3 Russ. Ch. 437; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 442. Bequests to superstitious uses are prohibited by many of the English statutes. No doubt a bequest to further and carry into effect any illegal purpose, which the law regards as subversive of sound policy or good morals, would be held void, and the executor not justified in paying it. 2 Beav. Rolls, 151; 2 Mylne & K. Ch. 697; 5 Mylne & C. Ch. 11; 1 Salk. 162; 2 Vern. Ch. 266. But bequests to charitable uses are favored both in England and the United States. The cases are extensively collated in 2 Williams, Exec. 951, n. 1; 4 Kent, Comm. 508; 2 How. U. S. R. 127; 4 Wheat. 1; 7 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 292; 20 Ohio, 483; 10 Penn. St. 23; 11 Vt. 296; 5 Cush. Mass. 336; 12 Conn. 113; Saxt. Ch. N. J. 577; 3 Leigh, Va. 450; 2 Ired. Eq. No. C. 9, 210; 5 Humphr. Tenn. 170; 11 Beav. Rolls, 481; 14 id. 357; 10 Hare, Ch. 446. It is questionable whether the English cases in regard to bequests to secure the offices of the Roman Church, being void, would or should be followed in this country. In those states where the principles of the statute of Elizabeth in regard to charitable uses are recognized in the equity courts, the decisions have been liberal in upholding bequests for the most diverse objects and expressed in the most general terms. 17 Serg. & R. Penn. 88; 2 Ired. Eq. No. C. 210; 1 Gilm. Va. 336; 7 Vt. 241; 2 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 46; 7 B. Monr. Ky. 617, 618–622; 2 How. 127; 9 Penn. St. 433; 7 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 292.

3. Construction of legacies. First, the technical import of words is not to prevail over the obvious intent of the testator. 3 Term, 86; 11 East, 246; 16 id. 221; 6 Ad & E. 167; 7 Mees. & W. Exch. 1, 481; 1 Mylne & K. 571; 2 id. 759; 2 Russ. & M. Ch. 546; 2 Mass. 56; 11 Pick. Mass. 257, 375; 13 id. 41, 44; 2 Metc. Mass. 191, 194; 1 Root, Conn. 332; 1 Nott & M'C. So. C. 69; 12 Johns. N. Y. 389. Second, where technical words are used by the testator, or words of art, they are to have their technical import, unless it is apparent they were not intended to be used in that sense. 6 Term, 352; 3 Brown, Ch. 68; 4 Russ. Ch. 386, 387; 2 Sim. Ch. 274; 1 Younge & J. Ch. 512; 4 Ves. Ch. 329; 8 id. 306; Dougl. 341; 5 Mass. 500; 8 id. 3; 2 M'Cord, So. C. 66; 5 Den. N. Y. 646. Third, the intent of the testator is to be determined from the whole will. 1 Swanst. Ch. 28; 1 Coll. Ch. 681; 8 Term, 122; 3 Pet. 377; 4 Rand. Va. 213; 8 Blackf. Ind. 387. Fourth, every word shall have effect, if it can be done without defeating the general purpose of the will, which is to be carried into effect in every reasonable mode. 6 Ves. 102; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 448; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 381; 3 Pick. Mass. 360; 7 Ired. Eq. No. C. 267; 10 Humphr. Tenn. 368; 2 Md. 82; 6 Pet. 68; 1 Jarman, Wills, 404–412. Fifth, a will of personalty made abroad, the lex domicilii must prevail, unless it appear the testator had a different intent. Story, Confl. of Laws, §§ 479 a, 479 m, 490, 491.

4. Whether cumulated or repeated. Where there is internal evidence of the intention of the testator, that intention is to be carried out, 2 Beav. Rolls, 215; 7 id. 107; 3 Hare, Ch. 620; 2 Drur. & Warr. Ch. 133; 3 Ves. Ch. 462; 5 id. 369; 17 id. 462; 2 Sim. & S. Ch. 145; 4 Hare, Ch. 219; and evidence will be received in support of the apparent intention, but not against it. 2 Brown, Ch. 528; 4 Hare, Ch. 216; 1 Drur. & Warr. Ch. 94, 113. Where there is no such internal evidence, the following positions of law appear established. First, if the same specific thing is bequeathed twice to the same legatee in the same will, or in the will and again in a codicil, in that case he can claim the benefit of only one legacy. Toller, Exec. 335; 2 Hare, Ch. 432. Second, where two legacies of quantity of equal amount are bequeathed to the same legatee in one and the same instrument, there also the second bequest is considered a mere repetition, and he shall be entitled to one legacy only. 1 Brown, Ch. 30; 4 Ves. Ch. 75; 3 Mylne & K. Ch. 29; 10 Johns. N. Y. 156. See 4 Gill, Md. 280; 1 Zabr. N. J. 573; 16 Penn. St. 127; 5 De Gex & S. Ch. 698; 16 Sim. Ch. 423. Third, where two legacies of quantity of unequal amount are given to the same person in the same instrument, the one is not merged in the other, but the latter shall be regarded as cumulative, and the legatee entitled to both. Finch, 267; 2 Brown, Ch. 225; 3 Hare, Ch. 620. Fourth, where two legacies are given simpliciter to the same legatee by different instruments, in that case also the latter shall be cumulative, whether its amount be equal,

1 Cox, Ch. 392; 17 Ves. Ch. 34; 1 Coll. Ch. 495; 4 Hare, Ch. 216, or unequal to the former. 1 Chanc. Cas. 301; 1 P. Will. Ch. 423; 5 Sim. Ch. 431; 7 id. 29; 1 Mylne & K. Ch. 589. And see 1 Cox, Ch. 392; 1 Brown, Ch. 272; 2 Beav. Rolls, 215; 2 Drur. & Warr. 133; 1 Bligh, N. S. 491; 1 Phill. Ch. 294.

5. Description of legatee.—Children. This may have reference to the time of the testator's death, or that of making the will. The former is the presumed intention, unless from the connection or circumstances the latter is the apparent intent, in which case it must prevail. 4 Brown, Ch. 55; Ambl. Ch. 397; 2 Cox, Ch. 191, 192; 11 Sim. Ch. 42; 2 Williams, Exec. 4th Am. ed. 934.

This term will include a child in ventre sa mère. 2 H. Blackst. 399; 1 Sim. & S. Ch. 181; 2 Cox, Ch. 425; 1 Meigs, Tenn. 149. But it will sometimes have a more restricted application, and thus be confined to children born before the death of the testator. And it will make no difference that the bequest is to children begotten, or to be begotten, or which "may be born." 2 Mylne & K. 46; 14 Beavan, 453; 1 Williams, Exec. 982, and note.

Heirs may be construed children, 3 Rich, Eq. So. C. 543; 4 Pick. Mass. 198; 2 Hayw. No. C. 356; and children, when used to designate one's heirs, may include grandchildren. 12 B. Monr. Ky. 115, 121; 5 Barb. N. Y. 190. But if the word children is used, and there are persons to answer it, then grandchildren cannot be comprehended under it. 5 Ired. Eq. No. C. 421. See 4 Watts, Penn. 82; 3 Pert. Ala. 452; 5 Harr. & J. Md. 135. The general rule is, that a devise to a man and his children, he having children living at the time the will takes effect, creates a joint estate in the father and children; but if he have no children, he takes an estate tail. 1 Turn. & R. Ch. 310; 12 Clark & F. Hou. L. 161. And a similar legacy of personal estate gives the father a life estate, if he have no children at the time the will takes effect, 12 Sim. Ch. 88; but if there are children living, they take jointly with the father. 5 Sim. Ch. 458.

6. The term children will not include illegitimate children, if there are legitimate to answer the term, 1 Younge, Ch. 354; 2 Russ. & M. Ch. 336; see 1 Williams, Exec. 992, and note (2); otherwise, it may or may not, according to circumstances. See 5 Harr. & J. Md. 10; 2 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 11; 1 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 422; 1 Bail. Eq. So. C. 251; 6 Ired. Eq. No. C. 130; 1 Roper, Leg. 80. A bequest to "my beloved wife," not mentioning her by name, applies exclusively to the wife at the date of the will, and is not to be extended to an after-taken wife. 2 P. Will. 992; 1 Russ. & M. Ch. 629; 8 Hare, Ch. 131. One not lawfully married may, nevertheless, take a legacy by the name or description of the wife of the one to whom she is reputed to be married, 1 Keen, Ch. 685; 9 Sim. Ch. 615; but not if the reputed relation is the motive for the bequest. 4 Ves. Ch. 802; 4 Brown, Ch. 90; 5 Mylne & C. Ch. 145. But see 1 Keen, Reg. Cas. 685.

Nephews and nieces are terms which, in the description of a legatee, will receive their strict import, unless there is something in the will to indicate a contrary intention. 14 Sim. Ch. 214; 1 Jac. Ch. 207; 4 Mylne & C. Ch. 60; 8 Beav. Rolls, 247; 2 Yeates, Penn. 196; 3 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 466; 3 Halst. Ch. N. J. 462. See 10 Hare, Ch. 63; 17 Beav. Rolls, 21.

The term cousins will be restricted to its primary signification, where it is before used in the same will in that sense. 9 Sim. Ch. 457. See 2 Brown, Ch. 125; 1 Sim. & S. Ch. 301; 3 De Gex, M. & G. 649; 4 Mylne & C. Ch. 56; 9 Sim. Ch. 356.

Terms which give an estate tail in lands will be construed to give the absolute title to personalty, 1 Madd. Ch. 475; 19 Ves. Ch. 545; but slight circumstances will often induce a different construction. 2 Brown, Ch. 570; 5 De Gex, M. & G. 188.

A legacy to one and his heirs, although generally conveying a fee-simple in real estate and the entire property in personalty, may, by the manner of its expression and connection, be held to be a designation of such persons as are the legal heirs of the person named, and thus they take as purchasers by name. 1 Jac. & W. Ch. 388.

7. Mistakes in the name or description of legatees may be corrected whenever it can be clearly shown by the will itself what was intended. 1 Phill. Ch. 279, 288; 2 Younge & C. Ch. 72; 10 Hare, Ch. 345; 12 Sim. Ch. 521; 8 Md. 496; 9 Eng. L. & Eq. 269; 15 N. H. 317; 32 id. 268; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 607; 23 Vt. 336; 7 Ired. Eq. No. C. 201.

The only instance in which parol evidence is admissible to show the intention of the testator as to a legatee imperfectly described, is that of a strict equivocation: that is, where it appears from extraneous evidence that two or more persons answer the description in the will. 8 Bingh. 244; 5 Mees. & W. Exch. 363; 2 Younge & C. Exch. 72; 12 Ad. & E. 451; Wigram, Wills, 2d ed. 78.

8. Interest of legatee. Property given specifically to one for life, and remainder over, must be enjoyed specifically during the life of the first donee, although that may exhaust it. 4 My. & Cr. 299; 2 My. & Keen, 703. But where the bequest is not specific, as where personal property is limited to one for life, remainder over, it is presumed that the testator intended the same property to go over, and if any portion of it be perishable, as long annuities, it shall be sold and converted into permanent property, for the benefit of all concerned. 2 My. & Keen, 699, 701, 702; 7 Ves. 137; 4 My. & Cr. 298.

In personal property there cannot be a remainder in the strict sense of the word, and therefore every future bequest of personal property, whether it be preceded or not by any particular bequest, or limited on a certain or uncertain event, is an executory bequest, and falls under the rules by which that mode of limitation is regulated. See Fearne, Cont. Rem. 401, n. An executory bequest cannot be prevented or destroyed by any alteration whatsoever in the estate, out of which or after which it is limited. 8 Coke, 96 a; 10 id. 476. And this privilege of executory bequests, which exempts them from being barred or destroyed, is the foundation of an invariable rule, that the event on which an interest of this sort is permitted to take effect is such as must happen within a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years and the fraction of another year, allowing for the period of gestation, afterwards. Fearne, Cont. Rem. 431.

9. Legacies may be made conditional. In such case, the condition may be either precedent or subsequent: in the former case, no interest vests in the legatee until the performance of the condition, and in the latter, it is liable to be defeated by the failure or non-performance of the condition. 2 Williams, Exec. 1131 et seq.

No particular form of words is requisite to constitute one a residuary legatee. It must appear to be the intention of the testator that he shall take the residue of the estate, after paying debts and meeting all other appointments of the will. 2 Williams, Exec. 1310 et seq. The right of the executor to the residue of the estate when there is no residuary legatee is well established, both at law and in equity, in England, except so far as it is controlled by statute, 2 P. Will. 340; 3 Atk. Ch. 228; 7 Ves. Ch. 228: but the rule has been controlled in equity by aid of slight presumptions in favor of the next of kin. 1 Brown, Ch. 201; 14 Sim. Ch. 8, 12; 2 Small & G. 241; 14 Ves. Ch. 197. The rule never obtained in this country, it is believed, to any great extent. 3 Binn. Penn. 557; 9 Serg. & R. Penn. 424; 6 Mass. 153; 2 Hayw. No. C. 298; 4 Leigh, Va. 163; 13 Ill. 117.

10. The assent of the executor to a specific legacy is requisite to vest the title in the legatee. 1 Wash. Va. 308; 1 Bail. So. C. 504; 1 Harr. & J. Md. 138; 2 Ired. Eq. No. C. 34; 12 Ala. N. S. 532; 4 Fla. 144; 11 Humphr. Tenn. 559; 2 Md. Ch. Dec. 162. This will often be presumed where the legatee was in possession of the thing at the decease of the testator, and the executor acquiesces in his right. See 4 Dev. No. C. 267; 3 Leigh, Va, 682; 6 Pick. Mass. 126; 6 Call. Va. 55.

Abatement. The general pecuniary legacies are subject to abatement whenever the assets are insufficient to answer the debts and specific legacies. The abatement must be upon all pro rata, 4 Brown, Ch. 349, 350; 13 Sim. Ch. 440; but a general pecuniary legatee is not bound to abate in favor of the residuary legatee. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 555–575; Brightly, Eq. Jur. 387, 388, 389. Specific legatees must abate, pro rata, when all the assets are exhausted except specific devises, and prove insufficient to pay debts. 2 Vern. Ch. 756. In New York, they must contribute to make up the share of a child born after the execution of the will, and not provided for in it. 5 Paige, Ch. N. Y 588.

11. Ademption of legacies. A specific legacy is revoked by the sale or change of form of the thing bequeathed: as, by converting a gold chain into a cup, or wool into cloth, or cloth into garments, 2 Brown, Ch. 108, 112; but the change of the form of a security is not an ademption. 23 N. H. 212. A demonstrative legacy is not adeemed by the sale or change of the fund. 5 Barb. N. Y. 312; 10 Beav. Rolls, 547; 15 Jur. 982; 16 id. 1130. A legacy to a child is regarded in courts of equity as a portion for such child: hence, when the testator, after giving such a legacy, settles the child and gives a portion, it is regarded as an ademption of the legacy. And it will make no difference that the portion given in settlement is less than the legacy: it will still adeem the legacy pro tanto. 2 Vern. Ch. 257; 15 Beav. Rolls, 565; 1 P. Will. 681; 5 Mylne & C. 29; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1111–1113.

Payment. A legacy given generally, if no time of payment be named, is due at the death of the testator, although not payable until the executor has time to settle the estate in due course of law. See Devise, 6. Legacies are not due by the civil law or the common law until one year after the decease of the testator. The same term is generally allowed the executor in the American states to dispose of the estate and pay debts, and sometimes, by special order of the probate court, this is extended, from time to time, according to circumstances. 5 Binn. Penn. 475; 5 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 573; 1 Des. So. C. 112; 16 Beav. Rolls, 298.

12. An annuity given by will shall commence at the death of the testator, and the first payment fall due one year thereafter. 3 Madd. Ch. 167. A distinction is taken between an annuity and a legacy to enjoy the interest during life. In the latter case, no interest begins to accumulate until the end of one year from the death of the testator. 7 Ves. Ch. 96; 2 Roper, Leg. 1253. But this point is left in some doubt in the American cases. The following hold that a child's portion, payable at a certain age, draws interest from the death of the testator, Tilghman, C. J., 5 Binney, 477, 479; 4 Rawle, Penn. 113, 119; but this rule does not apply when any other provision is made for the child. 6 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 299.

13. Where legatees are under disabilities, as infancy or coverture, the executor cannot discharge himself by payment, except to some party having a legal right to receive the same on the part of the legatee, which in the case of an infant is the legally-appointed guardian, and in the case of a married woman the husband; but in the latter case the executor may decline to pay the legacy until the husband make a suitable provision out of it for the wife, according to the order of the court of chancery. See, on the above points, 1 P. Will. 285; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 3; 9 Vt. 41; 1 Drewr. 71. The proper course in such cases is for the executor to deposit the money on interest, subject to the order of the court of chancery. 2 Williams, Exec. 4th Am. ed. 1206–1220. The executor is liable for interest upon legacies, whenever he has realized it, and in general he is liable for interest after the legacy is due. 2 Williams, Exec. 1283 et seq. But he may excuse himself by paying the money into the court of chancery. 2 P. Will. 67. So, too, if the testator is compelled to pay the money out of his own funds on account of the devastavit of a co-executor, and the matter has lain along for many years on account of the infancy of the legatees, no interest was allowed under the special circumstances until the filing of the bill. 9 Vt. 41.

The proper remedy for the recovery of a legacy is in equity. 5 Term, 690.

13. Satisfaction of debt by legacy. In courts of equity, if a legacy equal or exceed the debt, it is presumed to have been intended to go in satisfaction, Prec. in Chanc. 240; 3 P. Will. 353; 4 Madd. 325; but if the legacy be less than the debt, it shall not be deemed satisfaction pro tanto. 2 Salk. 508; 1 Ves. Sen. Ch. 263; 2 Hou. L. Cas. 153. But courts allow very slight circumstances to rebut this presumption of payment: as, where the debt was not contracted until after the making of the will, 2 P. Will. Ch. 343; where the debt is unliquidated, and the amount due not known, 1 P. Will. 299; where the debt was due upon a bill or note negotiable, 3 Ves. Ch. 561; where the legacy is made payable after the debt falls due, 3 Atk. Ch. 96; where the legacy appears from the will to have been given diverso intuitu, 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 635; where there is express direction in the will for the payment of all debts and legacies, or the legacy is expressed to be for some other reason, 1 P. Will. 410; see, also, 3 Atk. Ch. 65, 68; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1110–1113; Brightly, Eq. Jur. §§ 382, 391; 2 Dev. & B. Eq. No. C. 66; 3 Wash. C. C. 48; 6 Penn. St. 18. The American cases do not favor the rule that a legacy is primâ facie payment, 12 Wend. N. Y. 67; 2 Hill, N. Y. 576; 2 Gill & J. Md. 185; and its soundness was early questioned in England. 1 P. Will. 410.

Release of debt by a legacy. If one leave a legacy to his debtor, it is not to be regarded as a release of the debt unless that appears to have been the intention of the testator. 4 Brown, Ch. 227; 15 Sim. Ch. 554.

Where one appoints his debtor his executor, it is at law regarded as a release of the debt, Coke, Litt. 264; 8 Coke, 136 a; but this is now controlled by statute in England and in many of the United States. But in equity it is considered that the executor is still liable to account for the amount of his own debt. 11 Ves. Ch. 90, nn. 1, 2, 3; 13 id. 262, 264.

Where one appoints his creditor executor, and he has assets, it operates to discharge the debt, but not otherwise. 2 Williams, Exec. 4th Am. ed. 1118–1123. See, generally, Toller, Williams, on Executors, Roper on Legacies, Jarman on Wills.

LEGAL. That which is according to law. It is used in opposition to equitable: as, the legal estate is in the trustee, the equitable estate in the cestui que trust. But see Powell, Mortg. Index.

LEGAL ASSETS. Such property of a testator in the hands of his executor as is liable to debts in temporal courts and to legacies in the spiritual by course of law; equitable assets are such as are liable only by help of a court of equity. 2 Williams, Exec. 1408–1431, Amer. notes. No such distinction exists in Pennsylvania. 1 Ashm. Penn. 347. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 551; 2 Jarman, Wills, 543.

LEGAL ESTATE. One the right to which may be enforced in a court of law.

It is distinguished from an equitable estate, the right to which can be established only in a court of equity. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1688.

The party who has the legal title has alone the right to seek a remedy for a wrong to his estate, in a court of law, though he may have no beneficial interest in it. The equitable owner is he who has not the legal estate, but is entitled to the beneficial interest.

The person who holds the legal estate for the benefit of another is called a trustee; he who has the beneficiary interest and does not hold the legal title is called the beneficiary, or, more technically, the cestui que trust.

When the trustee has a claim, he must enforce his right in a court of equity, for he cannot sue any one at law in his own name, 1 East, 497; 8 Term, 332; 1 Saund. 158, n. 1; 2 Bingh. 20; still less can he in such court sue his own trustee. 1 East, 497.

LEGALIZATION. The act of making lawful.

By legalization is also understood the act by which a judge or competent officer authenticates a record, or other matter, in order that the same may be lawfully read in evidence.

LEGAL TENDER. That currency which has been made suitable by law for the purposes of a tender in the payment of debts.

The following descriptions of currency are legal tender in the United States:—

All the gold coins of the United States, according to their nominal value, for all sums whatever. The silver dollar of the United States is a legal tender for all sums whatever. The silver coins below the denomination of the dollar, coined prior to 1854, are a legal tender in payment of any sum whatever. The silver coins below the dollar, of the date of 1854 and of subsequent years, are a legal tender in sums not exceeding five dollars. The three-cent silver coins of the date of 1851, 1852, and 1853 are a tender in sums not exceeding thirty cents. Those of subsequent dates are a tender in sums not exceeding five dollars.

The cent is not a legal tender.

The laws at one time in force making certain foreign coins a legal tender was repealed by the act of Feb. 21, 1857, § 3 (Stat. at Large, vol. 11, p. 163). No foreign coins are now a legal tender.

By recent legislation, treasury notes have been issued, which are a legal tender for all debts, public and private, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt. (Act of Congress of May 23, 1862.)

A postage currency has also been authorized, which is receivable in payment of all dues to the United States less than five dollars. They are not, however, a legal tender in payment of private debts. (Act of Congress, approved July 17, 1862.)

LEGALIS HOMO (Lat.). A person who stands rectus in curia, who possesses all his civil rights. A lawful man. One who stands rectus in curia, not outlawed nor infamous. In this sense are the words probi et legales homines.

LEGANTINE CONSTITUTIONS. The name of a code of ecclesiastical laws, enacted in national synods, held under legates from Popes Gregory IX. and Clement IV., in the reign of Hen. III., about the years 1220 and 1268. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 83. Burn says, 1237 and 1268. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 30 d.

LEGATARY. One to whom any thing is bequeathed; a legatee. This word is sometimes, though seldom, used to designate a legate or nuncio.

LEGATEE. The person to whom a legacy is given. See LEGACY.

LEGATES. Legates are extraordinary ambassadors sent by the pope to catholic countries to represent him and to exercise his jurisdiction. They are distinguished from the ambassadors of the pope who are sent to other powers.

Legates à latere hold the first rank among those who are honored by a legation; they are always chosen from the college of cardinals, and are called à latere, in imitation of the magistrates of ancient Rome, who were taken from the court, or side of the emperor.

Legati missi are simple envoys.

Legati nati are those who are entitled to be legates by birth. See A LATERE.

LEGATION. An embassy; a mission. All persons attached to a foreign legation, lawfully acknowledged by the government of this country, whether they are ambassadors, envoys, ministers, or attachés, are protected by the act of April 30, 1790, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 83, from violence, arrest, or molestation. 1 Dall. Penn. 117; 1 Wash. C. C. 232; 2 id. 435; 4 id. 531; 11 Wheat. 467; 1 Miles, Penn. 366; 1 Nott & M'C. So. C. 217; 1 Baldw. 240; Wheaton, Int. Law, 167. See AMBASSADOR; ARREST; PRIVILEGE.

LEGATORY. The third part of a freeman's personal estate, which by the custom of London, in case he had a wife and children, the freeman might always have disposed of by will. Bacon, Abr. Customs of London (D 4).

LEGES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Laws proposed by a magistrate of the senate and adopted by the whole people in comitia centuriata. See POPULISCITUM; LEX.

In English Law. Laws. Scriptæ.

Leges scriptæ, written or statute laws.

Leges non scriptæ, unwritten or customary laws; the common law, including general customs, or the common law properly so called; and also particular customs of certain parts of the kingdom, and those particular laws that are, by custom, observed only in certain courts and jurisdictions. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 67. "These parts of law are therefore styled leges non scriptæ, because their original institution and authority are not set down in writing, as acts of parliament are, but they receive their binding power and the force of laws by long and immemorial usage." 1 Stephen, Comm. 40, 66. It is not to be understood, however, that they are merely oral; for they have come down to us in reports and treatises.

LEGISLATIVE POWER. The authority, under the constitution, to make laws, and to alter or repeal them.

LEGISLATOR. One who makes laws.

In order to make good laws, it is necessary to understand those which are in force; the legislator ought, therefore, to be thoroughly imbued with a knowledge of the laws of his country, their advantages and defects; to legislate without this previous knowledge is to attempt to make a beautiful piece of machinery with one's eye shut. There is unfortunately too strong a propensity to multiply our laws and to change them. Laws must be yearly made, for the legislatures meet yearly, but whether they are always for the better may be well questioned. A mutable legislation is always attended with evil. It renders the law uncertain, weakens its effects, hurts credit, lessens the value of property, and, as they are made frequently, in consequence of some extraordinary case, laws sometimes operate very unequally. See 1 Kent, Comm. 227; and Le Magasin Universel, tome ii. p. 227, for a good article against excessive legislation.

LEGISLATURE. That body of men in the state which has the power of making laws.

By the constitution of the United States, art. 1, § 1, all legislative powers granted by it are vested in a congress of the United States, which shall consist of a senate and house of representatives.

It requires the consent of a majority of each branch of the legislature in order to enact a law, and then it must be approved by the president of the United States, or, in case of his refusal, by two-thirds of each house. U. S. Const. art. 1, § 7, 2.

Most of the constitutions of the several states contain provisions nearly similar to this. In general, the legislature will not, and, by the constitutions of some of the states, cannot, exercise judicial functions: yet the use of such power upon particular occasions is not without example.

LEGITIM (called, otherwise, Bairn's Part of Gear). In Scotch Law. The legal share of father's free movable property, due on his death to his children: if widow and children are left, it is one-third; if children alone, one-half. Erskine, Inst. 3. 9. 20; 4 Bell, Hou. L. Cas. 286.

LEGITIMACY. The state of being born in wedlock; that is, in a lawful manner.

2. Marriage is considered by all civilized nations as the only source of legitimacy; the qualities of husband and wife must be possessed by the parents in order to make the offspring legitimate; and, furthermore, the marriage must be lawful, for if it is void ab initio, the children who may be the offspring of such marriage are not legitimate. 1 Phillipps, Ev.; La. Civ. Code, art. 203 to 216.

In Virginia, it is provided, by statute of 1787, "that the issue of marriages deemed null in law shall nevertheless be legitimate." 3 Hen. & M. Va. 228, n.

3. A strong presumption of legitimacy arises from marriage and cohabitation; and proof of the mother's irregularities will not destroy this presumption: pater est quem nuptiæ demonstrant. To rebut this presumption, circumstances must be shown which render it impossible that the husband should be the father, as impotency and the like. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3062. See BASTARD.

LEGITIMATE. That which is according to law: as, legitimate children are lawful children, born in wedlock, in contradistinction to bastards; legitimate authority, or lawful power, in opposition to usurpation LEGITIMATION. The act of giving the character of legitimate children to those who were not so born.

2. In Louisiana, the Civil Code, art. 217, enacts that "children born out of marriage, except those who are born of an incestuous or adulterous connection, may be legitimated by the subsequent marriage of their father and mother, whenever the latter have legally acknowledged them for their children, either before their marriage, or by the contract of marriage itself."

3. In most of the other states, the character of legitimate children is given to those who are not so, by special acts of assembly. In Georgia, real estate may descend from a mother to her illegitimate children and their representatives, and from such child, for want of descendants, to brothers and sisters, born of the same mother, and their representatives. Prince's Dig. 202. In Alabama, Kentucky, Mississippi, Vermont, and Virginia, subsequent marriages of parents, and recognition by the father, legitimatize an illegitimate child; and the law is the same in Massachusetts, for all purposes except inheriting from their kindred. Mass. Rev. Stat. 414.

4. The subsequent marriage of parents legitimatizes the child in Illinois; but he must be afterwards acknowledged. The same rule seems to have been adopted in Indiana and Missouri. An acknowledgment of illegitimate children, of itself, legitimatizes in Ohio; and in Michigan and Mississippi, marriage alone between the reputed parents has the same effect. In Maine, a bastard inherits to one who is legally adjudged, or in writing owns himself to be, the father. A bastard may be legitimated in North Carolina, on application of the putative father to court, either where he has married the mother, or she is dead, or married another, or lives out of the state. In a number of the states, namely, in Alabama, Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky, Maine, Massachusetts, Michigan, North Carolina, Ohio, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Vermont, and Virginia, a bastard takes by descent from his mother, with modifications regulated by the laws of these states. 2 Hill, Abr. §§ 24–35, and authorities cited. See DESCENT.

LEGITIME. In Civil Law. That portion of a parent's estate of which he cannot disinherit his children without a legal cause.

2. The civil code of Louisiana declares that donations inter vivos or mortis causâ cannot exceed two-thirds of the property of the disposer, if he leaves at his decease a legitimate child; one-half if he leaves two children; and one-third if he leaves three or a greater number. Under the name of children are included descendants of whatever degree they may be: it must be understood that they are only counted for the child they represent. La. Civ. Code. art. 1480.

In Holland, Germany, and Spain, the principles of the Falcidian law, more or less limited, have been generally adopted. Coop. Just. 516.

3. In the United States, other than Louisiana, and in England, there is no restriction on the right of bequeathing. But this power of bequeathing did not originally extend to all a man's personal estate: on the contrary, by the common law, as it stood in the reign of Henry II., a man's goods were to be divided into three equal parts, one of which went to his heirs or lineal descendants, another to his wife, and the third was at his own disposal; or, if he died without a wife, he might then dispose of one moiety, and the other went to his children; and so e converso if he had no children, the wife was entitled to one moiety, and he might bequeath the other; but if he died without either wife or issue, the whole was at his own disposal. Glanville, l. 2, c. 5; Bracton, l. 2, c. 26. The shares of the wife and children were called their reasonable part. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 491. See DEATH'S PART; FALCIDIAN LAW.

LENDER. He from whom a thing is borrowed. The bailor of an article loaned. See BAILMENT; LOAN.

LESION. In Civil Law. A term used to signify the injury suffered, in consequence of inequality of situation, by one who does not receive a full equivalent for what he gives in a commutative contract.

The remedy given for this injury is founded on its being the effect of implied error or imposition; for in every commutative contract equivalents are supposed to be given and received. La. Code, 1854. Persons of full age, however, are not allowed in point of law to object to their agreements as being injurious, unless the injury be excessive. Pothier, Obl. p. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 3, § 4. But minors are admitted to restitution, not only against any excessive inequality, but against any inequality whatever. Pothier, Obl. p. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 3, § 5; La. Code, art. 1858. See FRAUD; GUARDIAN; SALE.

LESSEE. He to whom a lease is made. He who holds an estate by virtue of a lease. See LEASE.

LESSOR. He who grants a lease. See LEASE; LANDLORD AND TENANT.

LESTAGE, LASTAGE (Sax. last, burden). A custom for carrying things in fairs and markets. Fleta, l. 1, c. 47; Termes de la Ley.

LET. Hindrance; obstacle; obstruction. To lease; to grant the use and possession of a thing for compensation. It is the correlative of hire. See HIRE.

LETTER. He who, being the owner of a thing, lets it out to another for hire or compensation. Story, Bailm. § 369. See HIRING.

LETTER. An epistle; a despatch; a written message, usually on paper, folded up and sealed, and sent by one person to another. 1 Caines, N. Y. 582.

2. The business of transporting and delivering letters between different towns, states, and countries, and from one part of a city to another, is undertaken by the government, and private persons are forbidden to enter into competition.

In the United States the various acts relating to the post-office were reduced to one act in 1825, 3 Story, U. S. Laws, 1991, Brightly, Dig. 759, by which severe penalties are inflicted upon all persons who interfere with the rapid transportation of the mails, upon all officers who tamper with the mails, as by opening letters, secreting the contents, etc., and competition of private individuals prevented.

3. Contracts may be made by letter; and when a proposition is made by letter, the mailing a letter containing an acceptance of the proposition completes the contract. 1 Barnew. & Ald. 681; 6 Hare, 1; 1 Hou. L. Cas. 381; 7 Mees. & W. Exch. 515; 21 N. H. 41; 4 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 17; 11 N. Y. 441; 4 Ga. 1; 12 Conn. 431; 7 Dan. Ky. 281; 9 Port. Ala. 605; 5 Penn. St. 339; 9 How. 390; 4 Wheat. 228. See 1 Pick. Mass. 281; Parsons, Mar. Law, 22, n.

Payments may be made by letter at the risk of the creditor, when the debtor is authorized, expressly or impliedly, from the usual course of business, and not otherwise. Peake, 67; 1 Exch. 477; Ry. & M. 149; 3 Mass. 249.

LETTER OF ADVICE. In Common Law. A letter containing information of any circumstances unknown to the person to whom it is written; generally informing him of some act done by the writer of the letter.

It is usual and perfectly proper for the drawer of a bill of exchange to write a letter of advice to the drawee, as well to prevent fraud or alteration of the bill, as to let the drawee know what provision has been made for the payment of the bill. Chitty, Bills, 185.

LETTER OF ADVOCATION. In Scotch Law. The decree or warrant of the supreme court or court of sessions, discharging the inferior tribunal from all further proceedings in the matter, and advocating the action to itself. This proceeding is similar to a certiorari issuing out of a superior court for the removal of a cause from an inferior.

LETTER OF ATTORNEY. In Practice. A written instrument, by which one or more persons, called the constituents, authorize one or more other persons, called the attorneys, to do some lawful act by the latter for or instead, and in the place, of the former. 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 52, 70. It may be parol or under seal. See POWER OF ATTORNEY.

LETTER BOOK. In Common Law. A book containing the copies of letters written by a merchant or trader to his correspondents.

After notice to the plaintiff to produce a letter which he admitted to have received from the defendant, it was held that an entry by a deceased clerk, in a letter book professing to be a copy of a letter from the defendant to the plaintiff of the same date, was admissible evidence of the contents, proof having been given that, according to the course of business, letters of business written by the plaintiff were copied by this clerk and then sent off by the post. 3 Campb. 305. See 1 Starkie, Ev. 356; Bouvier, Inst. n. 3139.

LETTER CARRIER. A person employed to carry letters from the post-office to the persons to whom they are addressed. Provisions are made by the act of March 3, 1851, 11 U. S. Stat. at Large, 591, for the appointment of letter carriers in cities and towns, and by c. 21, § 2 of the same act, for letter carriers in Oregon and California.

LETTER OF CREDENCE. In International Law. A written instrument addressed by the sovereign or chief magistrate of a state to the sovereign or state to whom a public minister is sent, certifying his appointment as such, and the general object of his mission, and requesting that full faith and credit may be given to what he shall do and say on the part of his court.

When it is given to an ambassador, envoy, or minister accredited to a sovereign, it is addressed to the sovereign or state to whom the minister is delegated; in the case of a chargé d'affaires, it is addressed by the secretary or minister of state charged with the department of foreign affairs to the minister of foreign affairs of the other government. Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 3, c. 1, § 7; Wicquefort, de l'Ambassadeur, l. 1, § 15.

LETTER OF CREDIT. An open or sealed letter, from a merchant in one place, directed to another, in another place or country, requiring him that if a person therein named, or the bearer of the letter, shall have occasion to buy commodities, or to want money to any particular or unlimited amount, either to procure the same, or to pass his promise, bill, or other engagement for it, the writer of the letter undertaking to provide him the money for the goods, or to repay him by exchange, or to give him such satisfaction as he shall require, either for himself or the bearer of the letter. 3 Chitty, Com. Law, 336. And see 4 id. 259, for a form of such letter.

2. These letters are either general or special: the former is directed to the writer's friends or correspondents generally, where the bearer of the letter may happen to go; the latter is directed to some particular person. When the letter is presented to the person to whom it is addressed, he either agrees to comply with the request, in which case he immediately becomes bound to fulfil all the engagements therein mentioned; or he refuses, in which case the bearer should return it to the giver without any other proceeding, unless, indeed, the merchant to whom the letter is directed is a debtor of the merchant who gave the letter, in which case he should procure the letter to be protested. 3 Chitty, Com. Law, 337; Malyn, 76; 1 Beaw. Lex Mer. 607; Hall, Adm. Pract. 14; 4 Ohio, 197.

3. The debt which arises on such letter, in its simplest form, when complied with, is between the mandatory and the mandant; though it may be so conceived as to raise a debt also against the person who is supplied by the mandatory. First, when the letter is purchased with money by the person wishing for the foreign credit, or is granted in consequence of a check on his cash account, or procured on the credit of securities lodged with the person who granted it, or in payment of money due by him to the payee, the letter is, in its effects, similar to a bill of exchange drawn on the foreign merchant. The payment of the money by the person on whom the letter is granted raises a debt, or goes into account between him and the writer of the letter, but raises no debt to the person who pays on the letter, against him to whom the money is paid. Second, when not so purchased, but truly an accommodation, and meant to raise a debt on the person accommodated, the engagement generally is, to see paid any advances made to him, or to guaranty any draft accepted or bill discounted; and the compliance with the mandate, in such case, raises a debt both against the writer of the letter and against the person accredited. 1 Bell, Comm. 371, 5th ed. The bearer of the letter of credit is not considered bound to receive the money; he may use the letter as he pleases, and he contracts an obligation only by receiving the money. Pothier, Contr. de Change, 237.

LETTER OF LICENSE. An instrument or writing made by creditors to their insolvent debtor, by which they bind themselves to allow him a longer time than he had a right to, for the payment of his debts, and that they will not arrest or molest him in his person or property till after the expiration of such additional time.

LETTER OF MARQUE AND REPRISAL. A commission granted by the government to a private individual, to take the property of a foreign state, or of the citizens or subjects of such state, as a reparation for an injury committed by such state, its citizens or subjects. A vessel loaded with merchandise, on a voyage to a friendly port, but armed for its own defence in case of attack by an enemy, is also called a letter of marque. 1 Boulay Paty, tit. 3, § 2, p. 300.

By the constitution, art. 1, § 8, cl. 11, congress have power to grant letters of marque and reprisal. See Chitty, Law of Nat. 73; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 251; Viner, Abr. Prerogative (B 4); Comyns, Dig. Prerogative (B 4); Molloy, b. 1, c. 2, § 10; 2 Wooddeson, 440; 2 C. Rob. Adm. 224; 5 id. 9, 260. And see REPRISAL.

LETTER MISSIVE. In English Law. A request addressed to a peer, peeress, or lord of parliament, against whom a bill has been filed, desiring the defendant to appear and answer to the bill. It is issued by the lord chancellor, on petition, after the filing of the bill; and a neglect to attend to this places the defendant, in relation to such suit, on the same ground as other defendants who are not peers, and a subpœna may then issue. Newland, Pr. 9; 2 Maddock, Chanc. Pract. 196; Cooper, Eq. Plead. 16.

LETTER OF RECALL. A written document addressed by the executive of one government to the executive of another, informing the latter that a minister sent by the former to him has been recalled.

LETTER OF RECOMMENDATION. In Commercial Law. An instrument given by one person to another, addressed to a third, in which the bearer is represented as worthy of credit. 1 Bell, Comm. 5th ed. 371; 3 Term, 51; 7 Cranch, 69; Fell, Guar. c. 8; 6 Johns. N.Y. 181; 13 id. 224; 1 Day, Conn. 22. See RECOMMENDATION.

LETTER OF RECREDENTIALS. A document delivered to a minister by the secretary of state of the government to which he was accredited. It is addressed to the executive of the minister's country. This is in reply to the letter of recall.

LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION. An instrument in writing, granted by the judge or officer having jurisdiction and power of granting such letters, thereby giving (the administrator, naming him) "full power to administer the goods, chattels, rights, and credits, which were of the said deceased, in the county or district in which the said judge or officer has jurisdiction; as also to ask, collect, levy, recover, and receive the credits whatsoever of the said deceased, which at the time of his death were owing, or did in any way belong, to him, and to pay the debts in which the said deceased stood obliged, so far forth as the said goods and chattels, rights and credits, will extend, according to the rate and order of law." See LETTERS TESTAMENTARY.

LETTERS CLOSE. In English Law. Close letters are grants of the king, and, being of private concern, they are thus distinguished from letters patent.

LETTERS AD COLLIGENDUM BONA DEFUNCTI. In Practice. In default of the representatives and creditors to administer to the estate of an intestate, the officer entitled to grant letters of administration may grant, to such person as he approves, letters to collect the goods of the deceased, which neither make him executor nor administrator; his only business being to collect the goods and keep them in his safe-custody. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 505.

LETTERS PATENT. The name of an instrument granted by the government to convey a right to the patentee: as, a patent for a tract of land; or to secure to him a right which he already possesses, as, a patent for a new invention or discovery. Letters patent are matter of record. They are so called because they are not sealed up, but are granted open. See PATENT.

LETTERS OF REQUEST. In English Ecclesiastical Law. An instrument by which a judge of an inferior court waives or remits his own jurisdiction in favor of a court of appeal immediately superior to it.

Letters of request, in general, lie only where an appeal would lie, and lie only to the next immediate court of appeal, waiving merely the primary jurisdiction to the proper appellate court, except letters of request from the most inferior ecclesiastical court, which may be direct to the court of arches, although one or two courts of appeal may by this be ousted of their jurisdiction as courts of appeal. 2 Add. Eccl. 406. The effect of letters of request is to give jurisdiction to the appellate court in the first instance. See a form of letters of request in 2 Chitty, Pract. 498, note h.

LETTERS ROGATORY. An instrument sent in the name and by the authority of a judge or court to another, requesting the latter to cause to be examined, upon interrogatories filed in a cause depending before the former, a witness who is within the jurisdiction of the judge or court to whom such letters are addressed.

2. They are sometimes denominated sub mutuæ vicissitudinis, from a clause which they generally contain. Where the government of a foreign country, in which witnesses proposed to be examined reside, refuse to allow commissioners to administer oaths to such witnesses, or to allow the commission to be executed unless it is done by some magistrate or judicial officer there, according to the laws of that country, letters rogatory must issue. Commissioners are forbidden to administer oaths in the island of St. Croix, 6 Wend. N. Y. 476; in Cuba, 1 Pet. C. C. 236; 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 446; and in Sweden. 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 236.

3. These letters are directed to any judge or tribunal having jurisdiction of civil causes in the foreign country, recite the pendency of the suit in court, and state that there are material witnesses residing there, without whose testimony justice cannot be done between the parties, and then request the said judge or tribunal to cause the witnesses to come before them and answer to the interrogatories annexed to the letters rogatory, to cause their depositions to be committed to writing and returned with the letters rogatory. In letters rogatory there is always an offer, on the part of the court whence they issued, to render a mutual service to the court to which they may be directed, whenever required. The practice of such letters is derived from the civil law, by which these letters are sometimes called letters requisitory. A special application must be made to court to obtain an order for letters rogatory.

4. Though formerly used in England in the courts of common law, 1 Rolle, Abr. 530, pl. 13, they have been superseded by commissions of dedimus potestatem, which are considered to be but a feeble substitute. Dunlap, Adm. Pract. 223, n.; Hall, Adm. Pract. 37. The courts of admiralty use these letters; and they are recognized by the law of nations. See Fœlix, Droit Intern. liv. 2, t. 4, p. 300; Denisart; Dunlap, Adm. Pract. 221; Benedict, Adm. § 533; 1 Hoffman, Ch. N. Y. 482.

In Nelson vs. United States, supra, will be found a copy of letters rogatory, issued to the courts of Havana, according to the form and practice of the civil law, on an occasion when the authorities there had prevented the execution of a commission, regarding any attempts to take testimony under it as an interference with the rights of the judicial tribunals of that place.

LETTERS TESTAMENTARY. An instrument in writing granted by the judge or officer having jurisdiction of the probate of wills, under his hand and official seal, making known that at a certain date the last will and testament of A B (naming the testator) was duly proved before him; that the probate and grant of administration was within his jurisdiction, and he accordingly certifies "that the administration of all and singular the goods, chattels, and credits of the said deceased, and any way concerning his will, was granted" to C D, "the executor named in the said will," "he having been already sworn well and faithfully to administer the same, and to make a true and perfect inventory, etc., and to exhibit the same, etc., and also to render a just and true account thereof."

2. In England, the original will is deposited in the registry of the ordinary or metropolitan, and a copy thereof made out under his seal; which copy and the letters testamentary are usually styled the probate. This practice has been followed in some of the United States; but where the will needs to be proved in more than one state, the impounding of it leads to much inconvenience. In other states, the original will is returned to the executor, with a certificate that it has been duly proved and recorded, and the letters testamentary are a separate instrument. The letters are usually general; but the court may grant a limited probate, where the testator has limited the executor, and then the administration cæterorum may be granted.

3. Letters testamentary are granted in case the decedent was testate; letters of administration, in case he was intestate, or failed to provide an executor; see ADMINISTRATION; EXECUTOR; but in regard to all matters coming properly under the heads of letters of administration or letters testamentary, there is little or no difference in the law relating to the two instruments. Letters testamentary and of administration are, according to their terms and extent, conclusive as to personal property while they remain unrevoked. They cannot be questioned in a court of law or of equity, and cannot be impeached, even by evidence of fraud or forgery. Proof that the testator was insane, or that the will was forged, is inadmissible. 16 Mass. 433; 1 Lev. 236. But if the nature of his plea raise the issue, the defendant may show that the seal of the supposed probate has been forged, or that the letters have been revoked, or that the testator is alive. 15 Serg. & R. Penn. 42; 3 Term, 130; Williams, Exec. 450.

4. They can be revoked only by the court whence they issued, or on appeal. At common law, the executor or administrator has no power over real estate; nor is the probate even admissible as evidence that the instrument is a will, or as an execution of a power to charge land. Williams, Exec. 460; 1 Mann. & G. 331. By statute, the probate may be made primâ facie or conclusive evidence as to realty. 2 Binn. Penn. 511; 3 id. 498; 6 id. 409; Gilbert, Ev. 66; Bacon, Abr. Evidence. Though the probate court has exclusive jurisdiction of the grant of letters, yet where a legacy has been obtained by fraud, or the probate has been procured by fraud on the next of kin, a court of equity would hold the legatee or wrong-doer as obligated by a trust for the party injured. Williams, Exec. 452.

Letters may be revoked by the court which made the grant, or an appeal to a higher tribunal, reversing the decision by which they were granted. Special or limited administration will be revoked on the occasion ceasing which called for the grant. An executor or administrator will be removed when the letters were obtained improperly. Williams, Exec. 480.

5. Of their effect in a state other than that in which legal proceedings were instituted.

In view of the rule of the civil law, that personalia sequitur personam, certain effect has been given by the comity of nations to a foreign probate granted at the place of the domicil of the deceased, in respect to the personal assets in other states. At common law, the lex loci rei sitæ governs as to real estate, and the foreign probate has no validity; but as to personalty the law of the domicil governs both as to testacy and intestacy. It is customary, therefore, on a due exemplification of the probate granted at the place of domicil, to admit the will to probate, and issue letters testamentary, without requiring original or further proof.

A foreign probate at the place of domicil has in itself no force or effect beyond the jurisdiction in which it was granted, but on its production fresh probate will be granted thereon in all other jurisdictions where assets are found. This is the general rule, but is liable to be varied by statute, and is so varied in some of the states of the United States.

6. Alabama. Administrators may sue upon letters of administration granted in another state, where the intestate had no known place of residence in Alabama at the time of his death, and no representative has been appointed in the state; but before rendition of the judgment he must produce to the court his letters of administration, authenticated according to the laws of the United States, and the certificate of the clerk of some county court in this state, that the letters have been recorded in his office. Before he is entitled to the money on the judgment, he must also give bond, payable to the judge of the court where the judgment is rendered, for the faithful administration of the money received. Aiken, Dig. 183; Toulmin, Dig. 342.

Arkansas. When the deceased had no residence in Arkansas, and he devised lands by will, or where the intestate died possessed of lands, letters testamentary or of administration shall be granted in the county where the lands lie, or of one of them, if they lie in several counties; and if the deceased had no such place of residence and no lands, such letters may be granted in the county in which the testator or intestate died, or where the greater part of his estate may be. Rev. Stat. c. 4, § 2.

7. California. When the estate of the deceased is in more than one county, he having died out of the state, and not having been a resident thereof at the time of his death, the probate court of that county in which application is first made for letters testamentary or of administration shall have exclusive jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate. Wood, Cal. Dig. art. 2223.

Connecticut. Letters testamentary issued in another state are not available in this, 3 Day, Conn. 303; nor are letters of administration. 3 Day, Conn. 74. And see 2 Root, Conn. 462.

8. Delaware. By the act of 1721, 1 State Laws, 82, it is declared, in substance, that when any person shall die leaving bona notabilia in several counties in the state and in Pennsylvania or elsewhere, and any person not residing in the state obtains letters of administration out of the state, the deceased being indebted to any of the inhabitants of the state for a debt contracted within the same, to the value of twenty pounds, then, and in such case, such administrator, before he can obtain any judgment in any court of record within the state against any inhabitant thereof, by virtue of such letters of administration, is obliged to file them with some of the registers in this state, and must enter into bonds with sufficient sureties, who have visible estates here, with condition to pay and satisfy all such debts as were owing by the intestate at the time of his death to any person residing in this state, so far as the effects of the deceased in this state will extend. By the act of June 16, 1769, 1 State Laws, 448, it is enacted, in substance, that any will in writing made by a person residing out of the state, whereby any lands within the state are devised, which shall be proved in the chancery in England, Scotland, Ireland, or any colony, plantation, or island in America, belonging to the king of Great Britain, or in the hustings, or mayor's court, in London, or in some manor court, or before such persons as have power or authority at the time of proving such wills, in the places aforesaid, to take probates of wills, shall be good and available in law for granting the lands devised, as well as of the goods and chattels bequeathed by such will. The copies of such will, and of the bill, answer, depositions, and decree, where proved in any court of chancery, or copies of such wills and the probate thereof, where proved in any other court, or in any office as aforesaid, being transmitted to this state, and produced under the public or common seal of the court or office where the probate is taken, or under the great seal of the kingdom, colony, plantation, or island, within which such will is proved (except copies of such wills and probates as shall appear to be revoked), are declared to be matter of record, and to be good evidence in any court of law or equity in this state, to prove the gift or devise made in such will; and such probates are declared to be sufficient to enable executors to bring their actions within any court within this state, as if the same probates or letters testamentary were granted here, and produced under the seal of any of the registers' offices within this state. By the third section of the act, it is declared that the copies of such wills and probates so produced and given in evidence shall not be returned by the court to the persons producing them, but shall be recorded in the office of the recorder of the county where the same are given in evidence, at the expense of the party producing the same.

9. Florida. Copies of all wills, and letters testamentary and of administration, heretofore recorded in any public office of record in the state, when duly certified by the keeper of said records, shall be received in evidence in all courts of record in this state; and the probate of wills granted in any of the United States or of the territories thereof, in any foreign country or state, duly authenticated and certified according to the laws of the state or territory, or of the foreign country or state, where such probate may have been granted, shall likewise be received in evidence in all courts of record in this state.

Georgia. To enable executors and administrators to sue, in Georgia, the former must take out letters testamentary in the county where the property or debt is; and administrators, letters of administration. Prince, Dig. 238; Act of 1805, 2 Laws of Ga. 268.

10. Illinois. Letters testamentary must be taken out in this state, and when the will is to be proved the original must be produced; administrators of other states must take out letters in Illinois, before they can maintain an action in the courts of the state. 3 Griffin, Law Reg. 419.

Indiana. Executors and administrators appointed in another state may maintain actions and suits, and do all other acts coming within their powers, as such, within this state, upon producing authenticated copies of such letters and filing them with the clerk of the court in which such suits are to be brought. Rev. Code, c. 24, Feb. 17, 1838, sec. 44.

Iowa. If administration of the estate of a deceased non-resident has been granted in accordance with the laws of the state or country where he resided at the time of his death, the person to whom it has been committed may, upon his application, and upon qualifying himself in the same manner as is required of other executors, be appointed an executor to administer upon the property of the deceased in this state, unless another executor has previously been appointed in this state.

The original letters testamentary or of administration, or other authority, conferring his power upon such executor, or an attested copy thereof, together with a copy of the will, if there be one, attested as hereinbefore directed, must be filed in the office of the judge of the proper county court before such appointment can be made. Iowa Rev. Laws, 1860, §§ 2341, 2342.

11. Kansas. Letters must be taken out in the state; and the balance, after payment of debts due citizens of the state, may be transmitted to the foreign executor or administrator. Comp. Stat. c. 91, §§ 214–218.

Kentucky. Executors and administrators appointed in other states may sue in Kentucky; "upon filing with the clerk of the court, where the suit is brought, an authenticated copy of the certificate of probate, or orders granting letters of administration of said estate, given in such non-resident's state." 1 Dig. Stat. 536; 2 Litt. Ky. 194; 3 id. 182.

Louisiana. Executors or administrators of other states must take out letters of curatorship in this state. Exemplifications of wills and testaments are evidence. 4 Griffith, Law Reg. 683; 8 Mart. La. N. S. 586.

12. Maine. Letters of administration must be taken from some court of probate in this state. Copies of wills which have been proved in a court of probate in any of the United States, or in a court of probate of any other state or kingdom, with a copy of the probate thereof, under the seal of the court where such wills have been proved, may be filed and recorded in any probate court in this state, which recording shall be of the same force as the recording and proving the original will. Rev. Stat. t. 9, c. 107, § 20; 3 Mass. 514; 9 id. 337; 11 id. 256; 1 Pick. Mass. 80; 3 id. 128.

Maryland. Letters testamentary or of administration granted out of Maryland have no effect in this state, except only such letters issued in the District of Columbia; and letters granted there authorize executors or administrators to claim and sue in this state. Act of April, 1813, chap. 165. By the act of 1839, chap. 41, when non-resident owners of any public or state of Maryland stocks, or stocks of the city of Baltimore, or any other corporation in this state, die, their executors or administrators constituted under the authority of the state, district, territory, or country where the deceased resided at his death, have the same power as to such stocks as if they were appointed by authority of the state of Maryland. But before they can transfer the stocks they must, during three months, give notice in two newspapers, published in Baltimore, of the death of the testator or intestate, and of the "amount and description of the stock designed to be transferred." Administration must be granted in this state, in order to recover a debt due here to a decedent, or any of his property, with the exceptions above noticed.

13. Massachusetts. When any person shall die intestate in any other state or country, leaving estate to be administered within this state, administration thereof shall be granted by the judge of probate of any county in which there is any estate to be administered; and the administration which shall be first lawfully granted shall extend to all the estate of the deceased within the state, and shall exclude the jurisdiction of the probate court in every other county. Rev. Stat. c. 64, § 5. See 3 Mass. 514; 5 id. 67; 11 id. 256, 314; 1 Pick. Mass. 81.

Michigan. Letters testamentary or letters of administration granted out of the state are not of any validity in it. In order to collect the debts or to obtain the property of a deceased person who was not a resident of the state, it is requisite to take out letters testamentary or letters of administration from a probate court of this state, within whose jurisdiction the property lies, which letters operate over all the state, and then sue in the name of the executor or administrator so appointed. Rev. Stat. 280. When the deceased leaves a will executed according to the laws of this state, and the same is admitted to proof and record where he dies, a certified transcript of the will and probate thereof may be proved and recorded in any county in this state where the deceased has property real or personal, and letters testamentary may issue thereon. Rev. Stat. 272, 273.

14. Mississippi. Executors or administrators in another state or territory cannot, as such, sue nor be sued in this state. In order to recover a debt due to a deceased person or his property, there must be taken out in the state letters of administration, or letters with the will annexed, as the case may be. These may be taken out from the probate court of the county where the property is situated, by a foreign as well as a local creditor, or any person interested in the estate of the deceased, if properly qualified in other respects. 1 Miss. 211.

Missouri. Letters testamentary or of administration granted in another state have no validity in this; to maintain a suit, the executors or administrators must be appointed under the laws of this state. Rev. Code, § 2, p. 41.

New Hampshire. One who has obtained letters of administration, Adams, Rep. 193, or letters testamentary under the authority of another state, cannot maintain an action in New Hampshire by virtue of such letters. 3 Griffith, Law Reg. 41.

15. New Jersey. Executors having letters testamentary, and administrators letters of administration. granted in another state, cannot sue thereon in New Jersey, but must obtain such letters in that state as the law prescribes. By the act of March 6, 1828, Harr. Comp. 195, when a will has been admitted to probate in any state or territory of the United States, or foreign nation, the surrogate of any county of this state is authorized, on application of the executor or any person interested, on filing a duly exemplified copy of the will, to appoint a time not less than thirty days and not more than six months distant, of which notice is to be given as he shall direct, and if, at such time, no sufficient reason be shown to the contrary, to admit such will to probate, and grant letters testamentary or of administration cum testamento annexo, which shall have the same effect as though the original will had been produced and proved under form. If the person to whom such letters testamentary or of administration be granted is not a resident of this state, he is required to give security for the faithful administration of the estate. By the statute passed February 28, 1838, Elmer, Dig. 602, no instrument of writing can be admitted to probate under the preceding act unless it be signed and published by the testator as his will. See Saxt. Ch. N. J. 332.

New York. An executor or administrator appointed in another state has no authority to sue in New York. 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 153; 6 id. 353; 7 id. 45. Whenever an intestate, not being an inhabitant of this state, shall die out of the state, leaving assets in several counties, or assets shall after his death come in several counties, the surrogate of any county in which assets shall be shall have power to grant letters of administration on the estate of such intestate; but the surrogate who shall first grant letters of administration on such estate shall be deemed thereby to have acquired sole and exclusive jurisdiction over such estate, and shall be vested with the powers incidental thereto. Rev. Stat. p. 2, c. 6, tit. 2, art. 2, § 24; 1 R. L. 455, § 3.

16. North Carolina. It was decided by the court of conference, then the highest tribunal in North Carolina, that letters granted in Georgia were insufficient, Conf. Rep. 68. But the supreme court have since held that letters testamentary granted in South Carolina were sufficient to enable an executor to sue in North Carolina. 1 Car. Law Rep. 471. See 1 Hayw. No. C. 354.

By the revised statutes, c. 46, § 6, it is provided that "when a testator or testatrix shall appoint any person, residing out of this state, executor or executrix of his or her last will and testament, it shall be the duty of the court of pleas and quarter sessions, before which the said will shall be offered for probate, to cause the executor or executrix named therein to enter into bond with good and sufficient security for his or her faithful administration of the estate of the said testator or testatrix, and for the distribution thereof in the manner prescribed by law; the penalty of said bond shall be double the supposed amount of the personal estate of the said testator or testatrix; and until the said executor or executrix shall enter into such bond, he or she shall have no power nor authority to intermeddle with the estate of the said testator or testatrix, and the court of the county, in which the testator or testatrix had his or her last usual place of residence, shall proceed to grant letters of administration with the will annexed, which shall continue in force until the said executor or executrix shall enter into bond as aforesaid. Provided, nevertheless, and it is hereby declared, that the said executor or executrix shall enter into bond, as by this act directed, within the space of one year after the death of the said testator or testatrix, and not afterwards."

17. Ohio. Executors and administrators appointed under the authority of another state may, by virtue of such appointment, sue in this. Ohio Stat. vol. 38, p. 146; Act of March 23, 1840, which went into effect the first day of November following; Swan's Coll. 184.

Oregon. Letters testamentary, or of administration, shall not be granted to a non-resident; and when an executor or administrator shall become non-resident, the probate court having jurisdiction of the estate of the testator or intestate of such executor or administrator shall revoke his letters. Oreg. Stat. 1855, 352.

18. Pennsylvania. Letters testamentary or of administration, or otherwise purporting to authorize any person to intermeddle with the estate of a decedent, granted out of the commonwealth, do not in general confer on any such person any of the powers and authorities possessed by an executor or administrator under letters granted within the state. Act of March 15, 1832, s. 6. But by the act of April 14, 1835, s. 3, this rule is declared not to apply to any public debt or loan of this commonwealth; but such public debt or loan shall pass and be transferable, and the dividends thereon accrued and to accrue be receivable, in like manner and in all respects and under the same and no other regulations, powers, and authorities as were used and practised before the passage of the above-mentioned act. And the act of June 16, 1836, s. 3, declares that the above act of March 15, 1832, s. 6, shall not apply to shares of stock in any bank or other incorporated company within this commonwealth, but such shares of stock shall pass and be transferable, and the dividends thereon accrued and to accrue be receivable, in like manner in all respects, and under the same regulations, powers, and authorities, as were used and practised with the loans or public debts of the United States, and were used and practised with the loans or public debt of this commonwealth, before the passage of the said act of March 15, 1832, s. 6, unless the by-laws, rules, and regulations of any such bank or corporation shall otherwise provide and declare. Executors and administrators who had been lawfully appointed in some other of the United States might, by virtue of their letters duly authenticated by the proper officer, have sued in this state. 4 Dall. Penn. 492; 1 Binn. Penn. 63. But letters of administration granted by the archbishop of York, in England, give no authority to the administrator in Pennsylvania. 1 Dall. Penn. 456.

19. Rhode Island. It does not appear to be settled whether executors and administrators appointed in another state may, by virtue of such appointment, sue in this. 3 Griffith, Law Reg. 107, 108.

South Carolina. Executors and administrators of other states cannot, as such, sue in South Carolina; they must take out letters in the state. 3 Griffith, Law Reg. 848.

Tennessee. Where any person or persons may obtain administration on the estate of any intestate, in any one of the United States, or territory thereof, such person or persons shall be enabled to prosecute suits in any court in this state, in the same manner as if administration had been granted to such person or persons by any court in the state of Tennessee. Provided, that such person or persons shall produce a copy of the letters of administration, authenticated in the manner which has been prescribed by the congress of the United States for authenticating the records or judicial acts of any one state in order to give them validity in any other state; and that such letters of administration had been granted in pursuance of and agreeable to the laws of the state or territory in which such letters of administration were granted.

When any executor or executors may prove the last will and testament of any deceased person, and take on him or themselves the execution of said will in any state in the United States, or in any territory thereof, such person or persons shall be enabled to prosecute suits in any court in this state, in the same manner as if letters testamentary had been granted to him or them by any court within the state of Tennessee. Provided, that such executor or executors shall produce a certified copy of the letters testamentary under the hand and seal of the clerk of the court where the same were obtained, and a certificate by the chief justice, presiding judge, or chairman of such court that the clerk's certificate is in due form, and that such letters testamentary had been granted in pursuance of and agreeable to the laws of the state or territory in which such letters testamentary were granted. Act of 1839, Carr. & Nich. Comp. 78.

20. Texas. When a will has been admitted to probate in any of the United States or the territories thereof or of any country out of the limits of the United States, and the executor or executors named in such will have qualified, and a copy of such will and of the probate thereof has been filed and recorded in any court of this state, under the provisions of the fifth section of this act, and letters of administration with such will annexed have been granted to any other person or persons than the executors therein named, upon the application of such executor or executors, or any one of them, such letters shall be revoked, and letters testamentary shall be issued to such applicant. Oldham & W. Dig. Texas Laws, art. 712.

Vermont. If the deceased person shall, at the time of his death, reside in any other state or country, leaving estate to be administered in this state, administration thereof shall be granted by the probate court of the district in which there shall be estate to administer; and the administration first legally granted shall extend to all the estate of the deceased in this state, and shall exclude the jurisdiction of the probate court of every other district. Rev. Stat. tit. 12, c. 47, s. 2.

21. Virginia. Authenticated copies of wills, proved according to the laws of any of the United States, or of any foreign country, relative to any estate in Virginia, may be offered for probate in the general court; or, if the estate lie altogether in any one county or corporation, in the circuit, county, or corporation court of such county or corporation. 3 Griffith, Law Reg. 345. It is understood to be the settled law of Virginia, though there is no statutory provision on the subject, that no probate of a will or grant of administration in another state of the Union, or in a foreign country, and no qualification of an executor or administrator elsewhere than in Virginia, give any such executor or administrator any right to demand the effects or debts of the decedent which may happen to be within the jurisdiction of the state. There must be a regular probate or grant of administration and qualification of the executor or administrator in Virginia, according to her laws. And the doctrine prevails in the federal courts held in Virginia, as well as in the state courts. 3 Griffith, Law Reg. 348.

Wisconsin. When an executor or administrator shall be appointed in any other state, or in any foreign country, on the estate of any person dying out of this state, and no executor or administrator shall be appointed in this state, the foreign executor may file an authenticated copy of his appointment in the county court of any county in which there may be real estate of the deceased.

Upon filing such authenticated copy of his appointment, such foreign executor or administrator may be licensed, by the same county court, to mortgage, lease, or sell real estate for the payment of debts or legacies and charges of administration, in the same manner and upon the same terms and conditions as are prescribed in the case of an executor or administrator appointed in this state, excepting in the particulars in which a different provision is made. Wisc. Rev. Stat. c. 94, §§ 43, 44.

LETTING OUT. In American Law. The act of awarding a contract.

This term is much used in the United States, and most frequently in relation to contracts to construct railroads, canals, or other mechanical works. When such an undertaking has reached the point of actual construction, a notice is generally given that proposals will be received until a certain period, and thereupon a letting out, or award of portions of the work to be performed according to the proposals, is made. See 35 Ala. N. S. 55.

LEVANDÆ NAVIS CAUSA (Lat.). In Civil Law. For the sake of lightening the ship. See Leg. Rhod. de jactu. Goods thrown overboard with this purpose of lightening the ship are subjects of a general average.

LEVARI FACIAS (Lat. that you cause to be levied). In Practice. A writ of execution directing the sheriff to cause to be made of the lands and chattels of the judgment debtor the sum recovered by the judgment.

Under this writ the sheriff was to sell the goods and collect the rents, issues, and profits of the land in question. It has been generally superseded by the remedy by elegit, which was given by statute Westm. 2d (13 Edw. I.), c. 18. In case, however, the judgment debtor is a clerk, upon the sheriff's return that he has no lay fee, a writ in the nature of a levari facias goes to the bishop of the diocese, who thereupon sends a sequestration of the profits of the clerk's benefice, directed to the churchwardens, to collect and pay them to the plaintiff till the full sum be raised. Yet the same course is pursued upon a fi. fa. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 329. See 2 Tidd, Pract. 1042; Comyns, Dig. Execution (c. 4); Finch, Law, 471; 3 Sharswood, Blacksf. Comm. 471.

In American Law. A writ used to sell lands mortgaged, after a judgment has been obtained by the mortgagee, or his assignee, against the mortgagor, under a peculiar proceeding authorized by statute. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3396.

LEVATO VELO (Lat.). An expression used in the Roman law, Code, 11. 4. 5, and applied to the trial of wreck and salvage. Commentators disagree about the origin of the expression; but all agree that its general meaning is that these causes shall be heard summarily. The most probable solution is that it refers to the place where causes were heard. A sail was spread before the door and officers employed to keep strangers from the tribunal. When these causes were heard, this sail was raised, and suitors came directly to the court, and their causes were heard immediately. As applied to maritime courts, its meaning is that causes should be heard without delay. These causes require despatch, and a delay amounts practically to a denial of justice. Emerigon, Des Assurances, c. 26, sect. 3.

LEVIR. A husband's brother. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

LEVITICAL DEGREES. Those degrees of kindred, set forth in the eighteenth chapter of Leviticus, within which persons are prohibited to marry.

LEVY. To raise. Webster, Dict. To levy a nuisance, i.e. to raise or do a nuisance, 9 Coke, 55; to levy a fine, i.e. to raise or acknowledge a fine, 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 357; 1 Stephen, Comm. 236; to levy a tax, i.e. to raise or collect a tax; to levy war, i.e. to raise or begin war, to take arms for attack, 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 81; to levy an execution, i.e. to raise or levy so much money on execution. Reg. Orig. 298.

In Practice. A seizure; the raising of the money for which an execution has been issued.

In order to make a valid levy on personal property, the sheriff must have it within his power and control, or at least within his view; and if, having it so, he makes a levy upon it, it will be good if followed up afterwards within a reasonable time by his taking possession in such manner as to apprize everybody of the fact of its having been taken into execution. 3 Rawle, Penn. 405, 406; 1 Whart. Penn. 377; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 142; 1 Wash. C. C. 29. The usual mode of making levy upon real estate is to describe the land which has been seized under the execution, by metes and bounds, as in a deed of conveyance. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3391.

It is a general rule that when a sufficient levy has been made the officer cannot make a second. 12 Johns. N. Y. 208; 8 Cow. N. Y. 192.

LEVYING WAR. In Criminal Law. The assembling of a body of men for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable object; and all who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are leagued in the general conspiracy, are considered as engaged in levying war, within the meaning of the constitution. 4 Cranch, 473, 474; Const. art. 3, s. 3. See TREASON; Fries, Trial, Pamphl. This is a technical term, borrowed from the English law, and its meaning is the same as it is when used in stat. 25 Ed. III. 4 Cranch, 471; U. S. vs. Fries, Pamphl. 167; Hall, Am. Law Jour. 351; Burr's Trial; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 62–77; Alison, Crim. Law of Scotl. 606; 9 Carr. & P. 129.

LEX (Lat.). The law. A law for the government of mankind in society. Among the ancient Romans this word was frequently used as synonymous with right, jus. When put absolutely, it means the Law of the Twelve Tables.

LEX FALCIDIA. See FALCIDIAN LAW.

LEX FORI (Lat. the law of the forum). The law of the country, to the tribunal of which appeal is made. 5 Clark & F. Hou. L. 1.

2. The forms of remedies, modes of proceeding, and execution of judgments are to be regulated solely and exclusively by the laws of the place where the action is instituted. 8 Clark & F. Hou. L. 121; 11 Mees. & W. Exch. 877; 10 Barnew. & C. 903; 5 La. 295; 2 Rand. Va. 303; 6 Humphr. Tenn. 45; 2 Ga. 158; 13 N. H. 321; 24 Barb. N. Y. 68; 4 Zabr. N. J. 333; 9 Gill, Md. 1; 17 Penn. St. 91; 18 Ala. N. S. 248; 4 McLean, C. C. 540; 5 How. 83; 11 Ind. 385; 33 Miss. 423.

The lex fori is to decide who are proper parties to a suit. 11 Ind. 485; 33 Miss. 423; Merlin, Rep. Etrang. § II.; Westlake, Priv. Int. Law, 121. Generally, all foreigners who sue in their own name, including sovereigns, unless specially disabled, may sue. 2 Bligh, N. S. 51; 2 Sim. Ch. 94; 4 Russ. Ch. 225; 1 Dowl. & C. 169. Foreign corporations may sue, 8 Barnew. & C. 427; 9 Ves. Ch. 347; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 370; 13 Pet. 519, and be sued, when they have property within the jurisdiction. 9 N. H. 394; 3 Metc. Mass. 420; 16 Beav. Rolls, 287.

3. The assignee of a debt or chose in action other than a negotiable instrument may not sue in his own name, 6 Maule & S. 99; 6 Binn. Penn. 374; 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 483; 9 Mass. 357; 13 id. 146; 2 Johns. N. Y. 342; 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 60; 4 Conn. 312; 9 Am. Jur. 42; 11 id. 101, whether a voluntary or an involuntary assignee, 6 Maule & S. 126; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 450; 33 Miss. 423; 1 Curt. C. C. 168; but see 6 N. Y. 320; 4 Zabr. N. J. 270; CONFLICT OF LAWS; nor a foreign executor or administrator, by virtue of his appointment by a foreign power. 24 Ga. 356; 15 Tex. 463; 1 Humphr. Tenn. 54; 10 Cush. Mass. 172; 2 Jones, Eq. No. C. 276; 10 Rich. So. C. 393; 3 Sneed, Tenn. 55; 7 Ind. 211. But see 16 Ark. 28; 4 McLean, C. C. 4.

The authority of a guardian to sue is local, and restricted to the jurisdiction where granted. 9 Rich. Eq. So. C. 311. See 30 Ala. N. S. 613; LETTERS TESTAMENTARY.

4. The lex fori governs as to the nature, extent, and character of the remedy, 17 Conn. 500; 37 N. H. 86; 2 Pat. & H. Va. 144, as in case of instruments considered sealed where made, but not in the country where sued upon. 4 Cow. N. Y. 508; 5 Johns. N. Y. 239; 2 Caines, N. Y. 362; 1 Bos. & P. 360; 8 Pet. 361; 3 Gill & J. Md. 234; 3 Conn. 523; 4 id. 47, 49; 8 How. 451; 9 Mo. 56, 157.

Arrest and imprisonment may be allowed by the lex fori, though they are not by the lex loci contractus. 2 East, 453; 2 Burr. 1089; 5 Clark & F. Hou. L. 1; 1 Barnew. & Ad. 284; 14 Johns. N. Y. 346; 3 Mas. C. C. 88; 5 id. 378; 1 Pet. 317; 1 Wash. C. C. 376; 10 Wheat. 1.

For the law of interest as effected by the lex fori, see CONFLICT OF LAWS. For the law in relation to damages, see DAMAGES.

The forms of judgment and execution are to be determined by the lex fori. 3 Mas. C. C. 88; 5 id. 378; 4 Conn. 47; 14 Pet. 67.

The lex fori decides as to deprivation of remedy.

5. Where a debt is discharged by the law of the place creating it, such discharge will amount to a discharge everywhere. 5 East, 124; 12 Wheat. 360; 1 W. Blackst. 258; 13 Mass. 1; 16 Mart. La. 297; 6 Rob. La. 15; 7 Cush. Mass. 15; 1 Buck, 57, 61; 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 115; 23 Wend. N. Y. 87; 5 Binn. Penn. 332; 16 Johns. N. Y. 233; 7 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 297; 16 Me. 206. It must be a discharge from the debt, and not an exemption from the effect of particular means of enforcing the remedy. 5 Binn. Penn. 381; 14 Johns. N. Y. 346; 10 id. 300; 8 Barnew. & C. 479; 1 Atk. Ch. 255; 2 H. Blackst. 553; 7 Me. 337; 11 Mart. La. 730; 15 Mass. 419; 5 Mas. C. C. 378.

Under the constitution of the United States, the insolvent laws of the various states which purport to discharge the debt are, at most, allowed that effect only as against their own citizens; as between their own citizens and strangers, where the claims of the latter have not been proved, they only work a destruction in the remedy, 5 Mas. C. C. 375; 4 Conn. 47; 14 Pet. 67; 12 Wheat. 213, 358, 369; 8 Pick. Mass. 194; 3 Iowa, 299; at least, if there be no provision requiring performance in the state where the discharge is obtained. 9 Conn. 314; 13 Mass. 18, 20; 7 Johns. Ch. 297; 1 Breese, Ill. 16; 1 South. N. J. 192; 4 Gill & J. Md. 509; 2 Blackf. Ind. 366. If claims are proved, they may work a discharge. 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 435; 26 Wend. N. Y. 43; 3 Pet. 411; 2 How. 202; 5 id. 295, 299; 8 Metc. Mass. 129; 7 Cush. Mass. 45. See INSOLVENCY.

6. Statutes of limitation affect the remedy only; and hence the lex fori will be the governing law. 6 Dow, Parl. Cas. 116; 5 Clark & F. Hou. L. 1–16; 8 id. 121, 140; 11 Pick. Mass. 36; 7 Ind. 91; 2 Paine, C. C. 437; 36 Me. 362. See 9 B. Monr. Ky. 518; 16 Ohio, 145. But these statutes restrict the remedy for citizens and strangers alike. 10 Barnew. & C. 903; 2 Bingh. N. C. 202, 216; 5 Clark & F. Hou. L. 1; 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 190; 6 Wend. N. Y. 475; 9 Mart. La. 526. For the effect of a discharge by statutes of limitation, where they are so drawn as to effect a discharge, in a foreign state, see Story, Confl. Laws, § 582; 11 Wheat. 361; 2 Bingh. N. C. 202; 6 Rob. La. 15. The restriction applies to a suit on a foreign judgment. 5 Clark & F. Hou. L. 1–21; 13 Pet. 312; 2 Barnew. & Ad. 413; 4 Cow. N. Y. 528, n. 10; 1 Gall. C. C. 371; 9 How. 407.

7. The right of set-off is to be determined by the lex fori. 2 N. H. 296; 3 Johns. N. Y. 263. Liens, implied hypothecations, and priorities of claim generally, are matters of remedy. 12 La. Ann. 289; Story, Confl. Laws, § 575. A prescriptive title to personal property acquired in a former domicil will be respected by the lex fori. 17 Ves. Ch. 88; 3 Hen. & M. Va. 57; 5 Cranch, 358; 11 Wheat. 361. But see Ambl. 113.

Questions of the admissibility and effect of evidence are to be determined by the lex fori. 12 La. Ann. 410; 2 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 339. See EVIDENCE.

The lex loci is presumed to be that of the forum till the contrary is shown, 4 Iowa, 464; 40 Me. 247; 6 N. Y. 447; 13 Md. 392; 12 La. Ann. 673; 9 Gill, Md. 1; 3 Bosw. N. Y. 333; and also the lex rei sitæ. 1 Harr. & J. Md. 687. See FOREIGN LAWS; AUTHENTICATION.

LEX LOCI (Lat.). The law of the place. This may be either lex loci contractus aut actus (the law of the place of making the contract or of the thing done); lex loci rei sitæ (the law of the place where the thing is situated); lex loci domicilii (the law of the place of domicil).

In general, however, lex loci is only used for lex loci contractus aut actus.

1. CONTRACTS. It is a general principle applying to contracts made, rights acquired, or acts done relative to personal property, that the law of the place of making the contract, or doing the act, is to govern it and determine its validity or invalidity, as well as the rights of parties under it in all matters touching the modes of execution and authentication of the form or instrument of contract; and also in relation to the use and meaning of the language in which it is expressed, the construction and interpretation of it, the legal duties and obligations imposed by it, and the legal rights and immunities acquired under it. 1 Bingh. N. C. 151, 159; 8 Clark & F. Hou. L. 121; 1 Pet. 317; 13 id. 378, 379; 2 N. H. 42; 5 id. 401; 13 id. 321; 6 Vt. 102; 2 Mass. 88, 89; 7 Cush. Mass. 30; 3 Conn. 253, 472; 14 id. 583; 22 Barb. N. Y. 118; 17 Penn. St. 91; 2 Harr. & J. Md. 193; 3 Gill & J. Md. 234; 9 Gill, Md. 1; 3 Dev. No. C. 161; 8 Mart. La. 95; 4 Ohio St. 241; 14 B. Monr. Ky. 556; 19 Mo. 84; 22 id. 550; 4 Fla. 404; 23 Miss. 42; 12 La. Ann. 607; 3 Stor. C. C. 465; Ware, Dist. Ct. 402; Story, Confl. Laws, § 242 et seq.; Bayley, Bills, 5th ed. 78; Parsons, Notes and Bills; 2 Kent, Comm. Lect. 39.

2. This principle, though general, does not, however, apply where the parties at the time of entering into the contract had the law of another kingdom in view, or where the lex loci is in itself unjust, contra bonos mores (against good morals), or contrary to the public law of the state, as regarding the interests of religion or morality, or the general well-being of society. Ferguson, Marr. & D. 385; 2 Burr. 1077; 9 N. H. 271; 6 Pet. 172; 1 How. 169; 5 id. 295; 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 261; 17 Johns. N. Y. 511; 13 Mass. 23; 5 Clark & F. Hou. L. 11, 13; 8 id. 121; 6 Whart. 331; 2 Metc. Mass. 8; 1 B. Monr. Ky. 32; 5 Ired. No. C. 590; 2 Kent, Comm. 458; Story, Confl. Laws, § 280. And where the place of performance is different from the locus contractus, it is presumed the parties had the law of the former in mind. See § 10.

3. The validity or invalidity of a contract as affected by the lex loci may depend upon the capacity of the parties or the legality of the act to be done.

The capacity of the parties as affected by questions of minority or majority, incapacities incident to coverture, guardianship, emancipation, and other personal qualities or disabilities, is to be decided by the law of the place of making the contract. Story, Confl. Laws, § 103; 1 Grant, Cas. Penn. 51.

The question of disability to make a contract on account of infancy is to be decided by the lex loci. 3 Esp. 163, 597; 17 Mart. La. 597; 8 Johns. N. Y. 189; 1 Grant, Cas. Penn. 51; 2 Kent, Comm. 233.

So, also, as to contracts made by married women. Al. 72; 8 Johns. N. Y. 189; 13 La. 177; 5 East, 31; 2 Parsons, Contr. 84, 111.

4. Personal disqualifications not arising from the law of nature, but from positive law, and especially such as are penal, are strictly territorial, and are not to be enforced in any country other than that where they originate. Story, Confl. Laws, §§ 91, 92, 104, 620–625; 2 Kent, Comm. 459.

Slavery works no incapacity in those countries or states where its existence is not recognized by positive law, and the lex loci contractus is to determine capacity in this respect. 20 Howell, St. Trials, 1–15; Dowl. & R. 679; Coke, Litt. 79 b; 17 Mart. La. 598; 9 Am. Jur. 490; 4 Wash. C. C. 396; 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 378; Story, Confl. Laws, § 96 a.

Natural disabilities, such as insanity, imbecility, etc., are everywhere recognized, so that the question whether they are controlled by the lex loci or lex domicilii seems to be theoretic rather than practical. On principle, there seems to be no good reason why they should come under a different rule from the positive disabilities.

5. The legality or illegality of the contract will be determined by the lex loci, unless it affects injuriously the public morals or rights, contravenes the policy or violates a public law of the country where it is sought to be enforced. 2 Kent, Comm. 458.

A contract illegal by the law of the place of its making and performance will generally be held so everywhere. 1 Gall. C. C. 375; 2 Mass. 88, 89; 2 N. H. 42; 5 id. 401; 2 Mas. C. C. 459; 13 Pet. 65, 78; 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 355; 1 Nott & M'C. So. C. 173; 2 Harr. & J. Md. 193, 221, 225; 17 Ill. 328; 16 Tex. 344; 2 Burr. 1077; 7 Term, 237; 2 Kent, Comm. 458; Henry, Foreign Law, 37, 50; Story, Confl. Laws, § 243.

An exception is said to exist in case of contracts made in violation of the revenue laws. Cas. temp. Hardw. 85; 2 C. Rob. Adm. 6; 1 Dougl. 251; 1 Cowp. 341; 2 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 311; 2 Kent, Comm. 458.

6. A contract legal by the lex loci will be so everywhere, 13 La. Ann. 117; unless—

It is injurious to public rights or morals, 3 Burr. 1568; Cowp. 37; 2 Carr. & P. 347; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 650; 1 Bos. & P. 340; 6 Mass. 379; 2 Harr. & J. Md. 193; or contravenes the policy. 2 Bingh. 314; 2 Sim. Ch. 194; 1 Turn. & R. 299; 1 Dowl. & C. 342; 16 Johns. N. Y. 438; 5 Harr. Del. 31; 1 Green, Ch. N. J. 326; 17 Ga. 253. In this connection, it is held generally that the claims of citizens are to be preferred to those of foreigners in case of a conflict of rights. Assignments, under the insolvent laws of a foreign state, are usually held inoperative as against claims in the state in regard to personal property in the jurisdiction of the lex fori. 1 Green, Ch. N. J. 326; 5 Harr. Del. 31; 32 Miss. 246; 13 La. Ann. 280; 21 Barb. N. Y. 198; but see 12 Md. 54; 13 id. 392. Or violates a positive law of the lex fori. The application of the lex loci is a matter of comity; and that law must, in all cases, yield to the positive law of the place of seeking the remedy. 13 Mass. 6; 18 Pick. Mass. 193; 1 Green, Ch. N. J. 326; 12 Barb. N. Y. 631; 17 Miss. 247. See 10 N. Y. 53.

7. The interpretation of contracts is to be governed by the law of the country where the contract was made. Dougl. 201, 207; 2 Barnew. & Ad. 746; 6 Term, 224; 1 Bingh. N. C. 151–159; 1 Barnew. & Ad. 284; 10 Barnew. & C. 903; 2 Hagg. Cons. 60, 61; 8 Pet. 361; 13 id. 378; 30 Ala. N. S. 253; 4 McLean, C. C. 540; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 141; Story, Confl. Laws, § 270; Chitty, Bills, 474.

The lex loci governs as to the formalities and authentication requisite to the valid execution of contracts. Story, Confl. Laws, §§ 123, 260; 11 La. 14; 2 Hill, N. Y. 227; 37 N. H. 86; 30 Vt. 42. But in proving the existence of, and seeking remedies for, the breach, as well as in all questions relating to the competency of witnesses, course of procedure, etc., the lex fori must govern. 11 Ind. 385; 9 Gill, Md. 1; 17 Penn. St. 91; 18 Ala. N. S. 248; 4 McLean, C. C. 540; 3 id. 545; 5 How. 83; 6 Humphr. Tenn. 75; 17 Conn. 500; 9 Mo. 56, 157; 4 Gilm. Va. 521; 26 Barb. N. Y. 177; Story, Confl. Laws, §§ 567, 634.

8. The lex loci governs as to the obligation and construction of contracts, 11 Pick. Mass. 32; 8 Vt. 325; 12 N. H. 520; 12 Wheat. 213; 2 Keen, 293; 1 Bos. & P. 138; 12 Wend. N. Y. 439; 22 Barb. N. Y. 118; 13 Mart. La. 202; 14 B. Monr. Ky. 556; 15

Miss. 798, unless, from their tenor, it must be presumed they were entered into with a view to the laws of some other state. 13 Mass. 1. This presumption arises where the place of performance is different from the place of making. 31 Eng. L. & Eq. 433; 17 Johns. N. Y. 511; 13 Pet. 65; 9 La. Ann. 185; 13 Mass. 23; 1 How. 169.

An obligation may be incurred under the lex loci which there is no means of enforcing in that country and which may be enforced in another country. 1 Barnew. & Ad. 284; 2 Cow. N. Y. 626; 2 Johns. N. Y. 345; 1 Pet. 317; 1 Wash. C. C. 376; 10 Wheat. 1; Henry, Foreign Law, 81–86; Story, Confl. Laws, § 571.

A lien or privilege created by the lex loci will generally be enforced wherever the property may be found, 8 Mart. 95; 5 La. 295; Story, Confl. Laws, §§ 322, 402; but not necessarily in preference to claims arising under the lex fori. 5 Cranch, 289, 298; 12 Wheat. 361.

9. A discharge from the performance of a contract under the lex loci is a discharge everywhere. 5 Mass. 509; 13 id. 1, 7; 7 Cush. Mass. 15; 4 Wheat. 122, 209; 12 id. 213; 2 Mas. C. C. 161; 2 Blackf. Ind. 394; 3 Caines, N. Y. 154; 24 Wend. N. Y. 43; 2 Kent, Comm. 394. A distinction is to be taken between discharging a contract and taking away the remedy for a breach. 3 Mas. C. C. 88; 5 id. 378; 4 Conn. 47; 14 Pet. 67; 12 Wheat. 347; 8 Pick. Mass. 194; 9 Conn. 314; 2 Blackf. Ind. 394; 9 N. H. 478.

A series of conflicting decisions has arisen in the United States courts, and the courts of the various states, upon the insolvent laws of the various states. The principle deducible from the majority of the cases would seem to be, that the insolvent laws of most states must be considered only as affecting the remedy in the courts of the state where obtained, as between citizens and foreigners, but both as a discharge and deprivation of remedy, as between citizens. 5 How. 295; 12 Metc. Mass. 470; 26 Me. 110; 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 115; 2 Kent, Comm. 393. See 3 Gray, Mass. 551.

Statutes of limitations apply to the remedy, but do not discharge the debt. 11 Wheat. 361; 9 How. 407; 20 Pick. Mass. 310; 11 id. 36; 17 Mass. 55; 2 Paine, C. C. 437; 2 Mas. C. C. 751; 6 N. H. 557; 6 Vt. 127; 8 Port. (Ala.) 84. But see 5 Clark & F. Hou. L. 1–17; 9 B. Monr. Ky. 513; 2 Tex. 414. See Limitations, Statute of.

10. A question of some difficulty often arises as to where the locus contractus is, in the case of contracts made partly in one country or state and partly in another, or made in one state or country to be performed in another, or where the contract in question is accessory to a principal contract.

Where a contract is made partly in one country and partly in another, it is a contract of the place where the assent of the parties first concurs and becomes complete. 2 Parsons, Contr. 94; 27 N. H. 217, 244; 11 Ired. No. C. 303; 3 Strobh. So. C. 27; 1 Gray, Mass. 336.

As between the place of making and the place of performance, where a place of performance is specified, the law of the place of performance governs as to obligation, interpretation, etc. 5 East, 124; 3 Caines, N. Y. 154; 1 Gall. C. C. 371; 12 Vt. 648; 12 Pet. 456; 13 id. 65; 1 How. 182; 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 261; 8 Johns. N. Y. 189; 17 id. 511; 5 McLean, C. C. 448; 27 Vt. 8; 14 Ark. 189; 7 B. Monr. Ky. 575; 8 id. 306; 9 Mo. 56, 157; 4 Gilm. Va. 521; 21 Ga. 135; 30 Miss. 59; 7 Ohio, 134; 4 Mich. 450; 2 Kent, Comm. 459; Story, Confl. Laws, § 233. But see 11 Tex. 54.

Where the contract is to be performed generally, the law of the place of making governs. 2 Barnew. & Ald. 301; 5 Clark & F. Hou. L. 1, 12; 1 Barnew. & C. 16; 1 Metc. Mass. 82; 6 Cranch, 221; 6 Ired. No. C. 107; 17 Miss. 220.

If the contract is to be performed partly in one state and partly in another, it will be affected by the law of both states. 14 B. Monr. Ky. 556.

In cases of indorsement of negotiable paper, every indorsement is a new contract, and the place of each indorsement is its locus contractus. 2 Kent, Comm. 460; Prec. in Chanc. 128; 17 Johns. N. Y. 511; 9 Barnew. & C. 208; 13 Mass. 1; 25 Ala. N. S. 139; 19 N. Y. 436; 17 Tex. 102.

The place of payment is the locus contractus, however, as between indorsee and drawer. See 19 N. Y. 436.

The place of acceptance of a draft is regarded as the locus contractus. 3 Gill, Md. 430; 1 Q. B. 43; 1 Cow. N. Y. 103; 4 Pet. 111; 12 Wend. N. Y. 439; 6 Du. N. Y. 34; 8 Metc. Mass. 107; 4 Dev. No. C. 124; 6 McLean, C. C. 622; 9 Cush. Mass. 46; 13 N. Y. 290; 18 Conn. 138; 17 Miss. 220. See Promissory Notes; Bills of Exchange.

11. The lex loci is presumed to be the same as that of the forum, unless shown to be otherwise. 46 Me. 247; 13 La. Ann. 673; 13 Md. 392; 9 Gill, Md. 1; 4 Iowa, 464. But see 1 Iowa, 388.

Torts. Damages for the commission of a tortious act are to be measured by the law of the place where the act is done. 1 P. Will. 395; 1 Pet. C. C. 225; Story, Confl. Laws, § 307.

Marriage, if valid where contracted, is valid everywhere, unless where it works some manifest injustice, is contra bonos mores, or repugnant to the settled principles and policy of the laws of the country where it is sought to be enforced.

This is understood to be the doctrine in England, Buller, Nisi P. 114; 2 Hagg. Cons. 444, and note; 1 Ves. Ch. 159; 3 Stark. 178; 9 Bligh, Hou. L. 129; 29 Am. Law Jour. 97; 23 Bost. Law Rep. 741; even though the parties may have left their domicil for the purpose of evading the statute.

The exceptions to the validity of a foreign marriage are understood to be, in the United States, such as are regarded by all Christian nations as contra bonos mores, as naturally incestuous, polygamous, and the like, 16 Mass. 157; 1 Pick. Mass. 596; 8 id. 433; 10 Metc. 451; 1 Yerg. Tenn. 110; 2 Ired. No. C. 346; 5 Humphr. Tenn. 13; 8 Ala. N. S. 48; 3 A. K. Marsh. Ky. 368; 10 Watts, Penn. 168; 2 Blatchf. C. C. 51; 2 Gilm. Va. 322; 5 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 460; 4 Johns. Ch. 343, 2 Parsons, Contr. 107; while marriages valid by the lex loci are sustained, even though incestuous in the lex fori, by statute provisions. 10 Metc. Mass. 451.

In New Hampshire, the exceptions are admitted as fully as in England. 21 N. H. 55.

The prevalent American doctrine is that a marriage valid in the state where contracted is good everywhere, even if prohibited by the lex fori or domicilii. But this is otherwise by statute in some states, and decisions in others. Mass. Gen. Stat. 529.

12. As laid down in a recent decision, the English law is that the lex loci, without regard to any question of fraudulent evasion, governs only as to formalities, but if in its essentials the marriage violates the lex domicilii, it is void. 23 Bost. Law Rep. 741. In this decision, the distinction taken in the Massachusetts cases is denied. See, also, Vaugh. 302; 11 Q. B. 205; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 343; 21 N. H. 55. This decision puts marriages on the same footing with other contracts, except in the matter of avoiding formalities by Scotch marriages. This law is certainly open to the objection of respecting the form more highly than the substance of marriage.

The formalities to be observed are those of the lex loci, if any mode available by the parties is provided by that law. 1 Ves. 157; 10 East, 282; 6 How. 550; Bishop, Marr. & D. § 138.

13. If no mode is provided, the formalities of the lex domicilii of both parties may be observed. Bishop, Marr. & D. § 134; 1 Sim. Ch. 361; Rogers, Eccl. Law, 652; Waddilove, Dig. 238; 11 Clark & F. Hou. L. 85, 152.

But the lex domicilii governs as to the rights, duties, and obligations arising under a marriage. 5 Barnew. & C. 438.

A marriage invalid where contracted is not necessarily so elsewhere. 2 Hagg. Cons. 389, 390, 423.

Obtaining divorces is governed by the law of the domicil. See DOMICIL.

The law of all acts relating to real property is governed by the lex rei sitæ. Taking a mortgage as security does not, however, divest the lex loci of its force. See LEX REI SITÆ.

For lex domicilii, see DOMICIL.

LEX LONGOBARDORUM (Lat.). The name of an ancient code in force among the Lombards. It contains many evident traces of feudal policy. It survived the destruction of the ancient government of Lombardy by Charlemagne, and is said to be still partially in force in some districts of Italy.

LEX MERCATORIA (Lat.). That system of laws which is adopted by all commercial nations, and which, therefore, constitutes a part of the law of the land. See LAW MERCHANT.

LEX REI SITÆ (Lat.). The law of the place of situation of the thing.

2. It is the universal rule of the common law that any title or interest in land, or in other real estate, can only be acquired or lost agreeably to the law of the place where the same is situate, 1 Pick. Mass. 81; 6 id. 286; 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 220; 2 Ohio, 124; 1 H. Blackst. 665; 2 Rose, Bank. 29; 2 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 130; 5 Barnew. & C. 438; 6 Madd. Ch. 16; 1 Younge & C. Exch. 114; 7 Cranch, 115; 10 Wheat. 192, 465; 6 id. 597; 4 Cow. N. Y. 510, 527; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 460; 1 Gill, Md. 280; 6 Binn. Penn. 559; Story, Confl. Laws, §§ 365, 428; and the law is the same in this respect in regard to all methods whatever of transfer, and every restraint upon alienation. 12 Eng. L. & Eq. 206.

3. The lex rei sitæ governs as to the capacity of the parties to any transfer, whether testamentary or inter vivos, as affected by questions of minority or majority, 17 Mart. 569; of rights arising from the relation of husband and wife, Story, Confl. Laws, § 454; 9 Bligh, Hou. L. 127; 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 261; 2 Md. 297; 1 Miss. 281; 4 Iowa, 381, 3 Strobh. So. C. 562; 9 Rich. Eq. So. C. 475; parent and child, or guardian and ward, 2 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 127; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 153; 4 Gill & J. Md. 332; 4 Cow. N. Y. 529, n.; 9 Rich. Eq. So. C. 311; 14 B. Monr. Ky. 544; 11 Ala. N. S. 343; 18 Miss. 529; but see 7 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 236; and of the rights and powers of executors and administrators, whether the property be real or personal, 2 Hamm. 124; 8 Clark & F. Hou. L. 112; 4 Mees. & W. Exch. 71, 192; 3 Q. B. 498, 507; 2 Sim. & S. Ch. 284; 3 Cranch, 319; 5 Pet. 518; 15 id. 1; 12 Wheat. 169; 2 N. H. 291; 4 Rand. Va. 158; 2 Gill & J. Md. 493; 5 Me. 261; 11 Mass. 256, 313; 5 Pick. Mass. 65; 10 Cush. Mass. 172; 7 Cow. N. Y. 4; 20 Johns. N. Y. 229; 3 Day, Conn. 74; 1 Humphr. Tenn. 54; 7 Ind. 211; 3 Sneed, Tenn. 55; 8 Md. 517; 10 Rich. So. C. 393; see EXECUTORS; of heirs, 5 Barnew. & C. 451, 452; 6 Bligh, 479, n.; 1 Rob. 627; 9 Cranch, 151; 9 Wheat. 565, 570; 10 id. 192; and of devisee or devisor. Story, Confl. Laws, § 474; 14 Ves. Ch. 337; 9 Cranch, 151; 10 Wheat. 192; 37 N. H. 114.

4. So as to the forms and solemnities of the transfer the lex rei sitæ must be complied with, whether it be a transfer by devise, 2 Dowl. & C. 349; 2 P. Will. 291, 293; 14 Ves. Ch. 537; 7 Cranch, 115; 10 Wheat. 192; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 260; 2 Ohio, 124; 37 N. H. 114; 5 R. I. 112, 415; 2 Jones, No. C. 368; see 4 McLean, C. C. 75, or by conveyance inter vivos, 9 Bligh, Hou. L. 127, 128; 2 Dowl. & C. 349; 1 Pick. Mass. 81; 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 220; 11 Wheat. 465; 11 Tex. 755; 18 Penn. St. 170; 12 Eng. L. & Eq. 206; 13 id. 465. So as to the amount of property or extent of interest which may be acquired, held, or transferred, 3 Russ. Ch. 328; 2 Dow. & C. 395, and the question of what is real property. 1 W. Blackst. 234; 2 Burr. 1079; 2 Dowl. 230, 250; 6 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 630; 3 Deac. & C. Bank. 704; 2 Salk. 666. And, generally, the lex rei sitæ governs as to the validity of any such transfer. 4 Sandf. N. Y. 252; 23 Miss. 42; 22 id. 130; 11 Mo. 314; 4 Den. N. Y. 305; 2 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 339. As to the disposition of the proceeds, see 12 Eng. L. & Eq. 206. As to the interpretation and construction of wills, see Domicil.

5. The rules here given do not apply to personal contracts indirectly affecting real estate. 1 Halst. Ch. N. J. 631; Story, Confl. Laws, § 351, d.

A contract for the conveyance of lands valid by the lex fori will be enforced in equity by a decree in personam for a conveyance valid under the lex rei sitæ. 1 Ves. Ch. 144; 2 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 606; Wythe, Va. 135; 1 Hopk. Ch. N. Y. 213; 6 Cranch, 148.

An executory foreign contract for the conveyance of lands not repugnant to the lex rei sitæ will be enforced in the courts of the latter country by personal process. 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 201; 23 Eng. L. & Eq. 288; 4 Bosw. N. Y. 266.

LEX TALIONIS (Lat.). The law of retaliation: an example of which is given in the law of Moses, an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, &c.

Amicable retaliation includes those acts of retaliation which correspond to the acts of the other nation under similar circumstances.

Jurists and writers on international law are divided as to the right of one nation punishing with death, by way of retaliation, the citizens or subjects of another nation. In the United States no example of such barbarity has ever been witnessed; but prisoners have been kept in close confinement in retaliation for the same conduct towards American prisoners. See Rutherforth, Inst. b. 2, c. 9; Marten, Law of Nat. b. 8, c. 1, s. 3, note; 1 Kent, Comm. 93; Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 4, c. 1, § 1.

Vindictive retaliation includes those acts which amount to a war.

LEX TERRÆ (Lat.). The law of the land. See Due Process of Law.

LEY (Old French; a corruption of loi). Law. For example, Termes de la Ley, Terms of the Law. In another, and an old technical, sense, ley signifies an oath, or the oath with compurgators: as, il tend sa ley aiu pleyntiffe. Britton, c. 27.

LEY GAGER. Wager of law. An offer to make an oath denying the cause of action of the plaintiff, confirmed by compurgators (q. v.), which oath used to be allowed in certain cases. When it was accomplished, it was called the "doing of the law," "fesans de ley." Termes de la Leye, Ley; 2 Barnew. & C. 538; 3 Bos. & P. 297; 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, § 16.

LEYES DE ESTILLO. In Spanish Law. Laws of the age. A book of explanations of the Fuero Real, to the number of two hundred and fifty-two, formed under the authority of Alonzo X. and his son Sancho, and of Fernando el Emplazado, and published at the end of the thirteenth century or beginning of the fourteenth, and some of them are inserted in the New Recopilacion. See 1 White, New Recop. p. 354.

LIABILITY. Responsibility; the state of one who is bound in law and justice to do something which may be enforced by action. This liability may arise from contracts either express or implied, or in consequence of torts committed.

LIBEL. In Practice. The plaintiff's petition or allegation, made and exhibited in a judicial process, with some solemnity of law.

A written statement by a plaintiff of his cause of action, and of the relief he seeks to obtain in a suit. Law, Eccl. Law, 17; Ayliffe, Par. 346; Shelford, Marr. & D. 506; Dunlap, Adm. Pract. 111. It performs substantially the same office in the ecclesiastical courts, and those courts which follow the practice of the ecclesiastical courts, as the bill in chancery and the declaration in common-law practice.

2. The libel should be a narrative, specific, clear, direct, certain, not general nor alternative. 3 Law, Eccl. Law, 147. It should contain, substantially, the following requisites: the name, description, and addition of the plaintiff, who makes his demand by bringing his action; the name, description, and addition of the defendant; the name of the judge, with a respectful designation of his office and court; the thing or relief, general or special, which is demanded in the suit; the grounds upon which the suit is founded.

3. The form of a libel is either simple or articulate. The simple form is when the cause of action is stated in a continuous narration, when the cause of action can be briefly set forth. The articulate form is when the cause of action is stated in distinct allegations or articles. 2 Law, Eccl. Law, 148; Hall, Adm. Pract. 123; 7 Cranch, 349. The material facts should be stated in distinct articles in the libel, with as much exactness and attention to times and circumstances as in a declaration at common law. 4 Mas. C. C. 541.

4. Although there is no fixed formula for libels, and the courts will receive such an instrument from the party in such form as his own skill or that of his counsel may enable him to give it, yet long usage has sanctioned forms, which it may be most prudent to adopt. The parts and arrangement of libels commonly employed are:

First, the address to the court: as, To the Honorable John K. Kane, Judge of the district court of the United States within and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

5. Second, the names and descriptions of the parties. Persons competent to sue at common law may be parties libellants; and similar regulations obtain in the admiralty courts and the common-law courts respecting those disqualified from suing in their own right or name. Married women prosecute by their husbands, or by prochein ami, when the husband has an adverse interest to hers; minors, by guardians, tutors, or prochein ami; lunatics and persons non compos mentis, by tutor, guardian ad litem, or committee; the rights of deceased persons are prosecuted by executors or administrators; and corporations are represented and proceeded against as at common law.

Third, the averments or allegations setting forth the cause of action. These should be conformable to the truth, and so framed as to correspond with the evidence. Every fact requisite to establish the libellant's right should be clearly stated, so that it may be directly met by the opposing party by admission, denial, or avoidance: this is the more necessary, because no proof can be given, or decree rendered, not covered by and conformable to the allegations. 1 Law, Eccl. Law, 150; Hall, Pract. 126; Dunlap, Adm. Pract. 113; 7 Cranch, 394; 21 How. Pract. 343.

6. Fourth, the conclusion, or prayer for relief and process: the prayer should be for the specific relief desired; for general relief, as is usual in bills in chancery; the conclusion should also pray for general or particular process. Law, Eccl. Law, 149. And see 3 Mas. C. C. 503.

Interrogatories are sometimes annexed to the libel: when this is the case, there is usually a special prayer, that the defendant may be required to answer the libel, and the interrogatories annexed and propounded. This, however, is a dangerous practice, because it renders the answers of the defendant evidence, which must be disproved by two witnesses, or by one witness corroborated by very strong circumstances.

7. The libel is the first proceeding in a suit in admiralty in the courts of the United States. 3 Mas. C. C. 504.

No mesne process can issue in the United States admiralty courts until a libel is filed, 1 Adm. 7, Rules of the U. S. Supreme Court. The twenty-second and twenty-third rules require certain statements to be contained in the libel; and to those, and the forms in 2 Conkling, Adm. Pract., the reader is referred. And see Parsons, Marit. Law; Dunlap, Adm. Pract.; Hall, Adm. Pract.

In Torts. That which is written or printed, and published, calculated to injure the character of another by bringing him into ridicule, hatred, or contempt. Parke, J., 15 Mees. & W. Exch. 344.

Every thing, written or printed, which reflects on the character of another and is published without lawful justification or excuse, is a libel, whatever the intention may have been. 15 Mees. & W. Exch. 437.

A malicious defamation, expressed either in printing or writing, and tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead or the reputation of one who is alive, and expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, § 1; 4 Mass. 168; 2 Pick. Mass. 115; 9 Johns. N. Y. 214; 1 Den. N. Y. 347; 24 Wend. N. Y. 434; 9 Barnew. & C. 172; 4 Mann. & R. 127; 2 Kent, Comm. 13.

It has been defined, perhaps with more precision, to be a censorious or ridiculous writing, picture, or sign made with a malicious or mischievous intent towards government, magistrates, or individuals. 3 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 354; 9 Johns. N. Y. 215; 5 Binn. Penn. 340.

8. There is a great and well-settled distinction between verbal and written slander; and this not only in reference to the consequences, as subjecting the party to an indictment, but also as to the character of the accusations or imputations essential to sustain a civil action to recover damages. To write and publish maliciously any thing of another which either makes him ridiculous or holds him out as a dishonest man, is held to be actionable, or punishable criminally, when the speaking of the same words would not be so. 1 Saund. 6th ed. 247 a; 4 Taunt. 355; 5 Binn. Penn. 219; Heard, Libel & S. § 74; 6 Cush. Mass. 75.

9. The reduction of the slanderous matter to writing or printing is the most usual mode of conveying it. The exhibition of a picture intimating that which in print would be libellous is equally criminal. 2 Campb. 512; 5 Coke, 125; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 91. Fixing a gallows at a man's door, burning him in effigy, or exhibiting him in any ignominious manner, is a libel. Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, s. 2; 11 East, 227.

There is, perhaps, no branch of the law which is so difficult to reduce to exact principles, or to compress within a small compass, as the requisites of a libel.

In the following cases the publications have been held to be actionable. It is a libel to write of a person soliciting relief from a charitable society, that she prefers unworthy claims, which it is hoped the members will reject forever, and that she has squandered away money, already obtained by her from the benevolent, in printing circulars abusive of the secretary of the society. 12 Q. B. 624. It is libellous to publish of the plaintiff that, although he was aware of the death of a person occasioned by his improperly driving a carriage, he had attended a public ball in the evening of the same day. 1 Chitt. Bail, 480. It is a libel to publish of a Protestant archbishop that he endeavors to convert Roman Catholic priests by promises of money and preferment. 5 Bingh. 17. It is a libel to publish a ludicrous story of an individual in a newspaper, if it tend to render him the subject of public ridicule, although he had previously told the same story of himself. 6 Bingh. 409.

A declaration which alleges that the defendant charged the plaintiff, an attorney, with being guilty of "sharp practice," which is averred to mean disreputable practice, charges a libellous imputation. 4 Mees. & W. Exch. 446.

10. Any publication which has a tendency to disturb the public peace, or good order of society, is indictable as a libel. "This crime is committed," says Professor Greenleaf, "by the publication of writings blaspheming the Supreme Being, or turning the doctrines of the Christian religion into contempt and ridicule; or tending, by their immodesty, to corrupt the mind, and to destroy the love of decency, morality, and good order; or wantonly to defame or indecorously to calumniate the economy, order, and constitution of things which make up the general system of the law and government of the country; to degrade the administration of government, or of justice; or to cause animosities between our own and any foreign government, by personal abuse of its sovereign, its ambassadors, or other public ministers; and by malicious defamations, expressed in printing or writing, or by signs or pictures, tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the reputation of one who is living, and thereby to expose him to public hatred, contempt, and ridicule. This descriptive catalogue embraces all the several species of this offence which are indictable at common law; all of which, it is believed, are indictable in the United States, either at common law, or by virtue of particular statutes." 3 Greenleaf, Ev. § 164. See 4 Mass. 163; 9 Johns. N.Y. 214; 4 M'Cord, So. C. 317; 9 N. H. 34.

Libels against the memory of the dead, which have a tendency to create a breach of the peace, by inciting the friends and relatives of the deceased to avenge the insult of the family, render their authors liable to indictment. The malicious intention of the defendant to injure the family and posterity of the deceased must be expressly averred and clearly proved. 5 Coke, 125; 4 Term, 126, 129, note; 3 Binn. Penn. 281; Heard, Libel & S. §§ 72, 348.

If the matter is understood as scandalous, and is calculated to excite ridicule or abhorrence against the party intended, it is libellous, however it may be expressed. 5 East, 463; 1 Price, Exch. 11, 17; Hob. 215; Chitty, Crim. Law, 868; 2 Campb. 512.

11. The malicious reading of a libel to one or more persons, it being on the shelves in a bookstore, as other books, for sale; and where the defendant directed the libel to be printed, took away some and left others: these several acts have been held to be publications. The sale of each copy, where several copies have been sold, is a distinct publication and a fresh offence. The publication must be malicious: evidence of the malice may be either express or implied. Express proof is not necessary; for where a man publishes a writing which on the face of it is libellous, the law presumes he does so from that malicious intention which constitutes the offence, and it is unnecessary, on the part of the prosecution, to prove any circumstance from which malice may be inferred. But no allegation, however false and malicious, contained in answers to interrogatories in affidavits duly made, or any other proceedings in courts of justice or petitions to the legislature, are indictable. 4 Coke, 14; 2 Burr. 807; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, s. 8; 1 Saund. 131, n. 1; 1 Lev. 240; 2 Chitty, Crim. Law, 869; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 23. It is no defence that the matter published is part of a document printed by order of the house of commons. 9 Ad. & E. 1. See JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

The publisher of a libel is liable to be punished criminally by indictment, 2 Chitty, Crim. Law, 875; or is subject to an action on the case by the party grieved. Both remedies may be pursued at the same time. See, generally, 2 Bishop, Crim. Law; Heard, Libel & S.

LIBEL OF ACCUSATION. In Scotch Law. The instrument which contains the charge against a person accused of a crime. Libels are of two kinds, namely, indictments and criminal letters.

Every libel assumes the form of what is termed, in logic, a syllogism. It is first stated that some particular kind of act is criminal: as, that "theft is a crime of a heinous nature, and severely punishable." This proposition is termed the major. It is next stated that the person accused is guilty of the crime so named, "actor, or art and part." This, with the narrative of the manner in which, and the time when, the offence was committed, is called the minor proposition of the libel. The conclusion is that, all or part of the facts being proved, or admitted by confession, the panel "ought to be punished with the pains of the law, to deter others from committing the like crime in all time coming." Burton, Man. Pub. L. 300, 301.

LIBELLANT. The party who files a libel in an ecclesiastical or admiralty case, corresponding to the plaintiff in actions in the common-law courts.

LIBELLEE. A party against whom a libel has been filed in proceedings in an ecclesiastical or in admiralty, corresponding to the defendant in a common-law suit.

LIBELLUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A little book. Libellus supplex, a petition, especially to emperor; all petitions to whom must be in writing. L. 15, D. in jus voc. Libellum rescribere, to mark on such petition the answer to it. L. 2, § 2, Dig. de jur. fisc. Libellum agere, to assist or counsel the emperor in regard to such petitions, L. 12, D. de distr. pign.; and one whose duty it is to do so is called magister libellorum. There were also promagistri. L. 1, D. de offic. præf. pract. Libellus accusatorius, an information and accusation of a crime. L. 17, § 1, & L. 29, § 8, D. ad leg. Jul. de adult. Libellus divortii, a writing of divorcement. L. 7, D. de divort. et repud. Libellus rerum, an inventory. Calv. Lex. Libellus or oratio consultoria, a message by which emperors laid matters before senate Calvinus, Lex.; Suet. Cæs. 56.

A writing in which is contained the names of the plaintiff (actor) and defendant (reus), the thing sought, the right relied upon, and name of the tribunal before which the action is brought. Calvinus, Lex.

In English Law (sometimes called libellus conventionalis). A bill. Bracton, fol. 112.

LIBELLUS FAMOSUS (Lat.). A libel; a defamatory writing. L. 15, D. de pœn.; Vocab. Jur. Utr. sub "famosus." It may be without writing: as, by signs, pictures, etc. 5 Rep. de famosis libellis.

LIBER (Lat.). In Civil Law. A book, whatever the material of which it is made; a principal subdivision of a literary work: thus, the Pandects, or Digest of the Civil Law, is divided into fifty books. L. 52, D. de legat.

In Civil and Old English Law. Free: e.g. a free (liber) bull. Jacobs. Exempt from service or jurisdiction of another, Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.: e.g. a free (liber) man. L. 3, D. de statu hominum.

LIBER ASSISARUM (Lat.). The book of assigns or pleas of the crown; being the fifth part of the Year-Books.

LIBER FEUDORUM (Lat.). A code of the feudal law, which was compiled by direction of the emperor Frederick Barbarossa, and published in Milan, in 1170. It was called the Liber Feudorum, and was divided into five books, of which the first, second, and some fragments of the others still exist, and are printed at the end of all the modern editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis. Giannone, b. 13, c. 3; Cruise, Dig. prel. diss. c. 1, § 31.

LIBER HOMO (Lat.). A free man; a freeman lawfully competent to act as juror. Ld. Raym. 417; Kebl. 563.

In London, a man can be a liber homo either—1, by service, as having served his apprenticeship; or, 2, by birthright, being a son of a liber homo; or, 3, by redemption, i.e. allowance of mayor and aldermen. 8 Rep., Case of City of London. There was no intermediate state between villein and liber homo. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 11, § 22. But a liber homo could be vassal of another. Bract. fol. 25.

In Old European Law. An allodial proprietor, as opposed to a feudatory. Calvinus, Lex, Alode.

LIBER JUDICIARUM (Lat.). The book of judgment, or doom-book. The Saxon Domboc. Conjectured to be a book of statutes of ancient Saxon kings. See Jacob, Domboc; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 64.

LIBER ET LEGALIS HOMO (Lat.). A free and lawful man. One worthy of being a juryman: he must neither be infamous nor a bondman. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 340, 362; Bracton, fol. 14 b; Fleta, l. 6, c. 25, § 4; l. 4, c. 5, § 4.

LIBERATE (Lat.). In English Practice. A writ which issues on lands, tenements, and chattels, being returned under an extent on a statute staple, commanding the sheriff to deliver them to the plaintiff, by the extent and appraisement mentioned in the writ of extent and in the sheriff's return thereto. See Comyns, Dig. Statute Staple (D 6).

LIBERATION. In Civil Law. The extinguishment of a contract, by which he who was bound becomes free or liberated. Wolff, Dr. de la Nat. § 749. Synonymous with payment. Dig. 50. 16. 47.

LIBERTI, LIBERTINI. In Roman Law. The condition of those who, having been slaves, had been made free. 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 99.

There is some distinction between these words. By libertus was understood the freedman when considered in relation to his patron, who had bestowed liberty upon him; and he was called libertinus when considered in relation to the state he occupied in society subsequent to his manumission. Leç. El. Dr. Rom. § 93.

LIBERTY (Lat. liber, free; libertas, freedom, liberty). Freedom from restraint. The faculty of willing, and the power of doing what has been willed, without influence from without.

A privilege held by grant or prescription, by which some men enjoy greater privileges than ordinary subjects.

A territory with some extraordinary privilege.

A part of a town or city: as, the Northern Liberties of Philadelphia. See FAUBOURG.

Civil liberty is the greatest amount of absolute liberty which can in the nature of things be equally possessed by every citizen in a state.

The term is frequently used to denote the amount of absolute liberty which is actually enjoyed by the various citizens under the government and laws of the state as administered. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 125.

The fullest political liberty furnishes the best possible guarantee for civil liberty.

Lieber defines civil liberty as guaranteed protection against interference with the interests and rights held dear and important by large classes of civilized men, or by all the members of a state, together with an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws, as the best apparatus to secure that protection, including Blackstone's divisions of civil and political under this head.

Natural liberty is the right which nature gives to all mankind of disposing of their persons and property after the manner they judge most consonant to their happiness, on condition of their acting within the limits of the law of nature and so as not to interfere with an equal exercise of the same rights by other men. Burlam. c. 3, § 15; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 125. It is called by Lieber social liberty, and is defined as the protection of unrestrained action in as high a degree as the same claim of protection of each individual admits of.

Personal liberty consists in the power of locomotion, of changing situation, or removing one's person to whatever place one's inclination may direct, without imprisonment or restraint unless by due course of law. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 134.

Political liberty is an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws. Lieber, Civ. Lib.

2. Liberty, in its widest sense, means the faculty of willing, and the power of doing what has been willed without influence from without. It means self-determination, unrestrainedness of action. Thus defined, one being only can be absolutely free,—namely, God. So soon as we apply the word liberty to spheres of human action, the term receives a relative meaning, because the power of man is limited; he is subject to constant influences from without. If the idea of unrestrainedness of action is applied to the social state of man, it receives a limitation still greater, since the equal claims of unrestrained action of all necessarily involves the idea of protection against interference by others. We thus come to the definition, that liberty of social man consists in the protection of unrestrained action in as high a degree as the same claim of protection of each individual admits of, or in the most efficient protection of his rights, claims, interests, as man or citizen, or of his humanity, manifested as a social being. (See RIGHT.) The word liberty, applied to men in their political state, may be viewed with reference to the state as a whole, and in this case means the independence of the state, of other states (see AUTONOMY); or it may have reference to the relation of the citizen to the government, in which case it is called political or civil liberty; or it may have reference to the status of a man as a political being, contradistinguished from him who is not considered master over his body, will, or labor,—the slave. This is called personal liberty, which, as a matter of course, includes freedom from prison.

3. Lieber, in his work on Civil Liberty, calls that system which was evolved in England, and forms the basis of liberty in the countries settled by English people, Anglican liberty. The principal guarantees, according to him, are:—

I. National independence. There must be no foreign interference. The country must have the right and power of establishing the government it thinks best.

II. Individual liberty, and, as belonging to it, personal liberty, or the great habeas-corpus principle, and the prohibition of general warrants of arrest. The right of bail belongs also to this head.

III. A well-secured penal trial, of which the most important is trial for high treason.

IV. The freedom of communion, locomotion, and emigration.

V. Liberty of conscience. The United States constitution and the constitutions of all the states have provisions prohibiting any interference with the church.

4. VI. Protection of individual property, which requires unrestrained action in producing and exchanging, the prohibition of unfair monopolies, commercial freedom, and the guarantee that no property shall be taken except in the course of law, the principle that taxation shall only be with the consent of the tax-payer, and for short periods only, and the exclusion of confiscation.

VII. Supremacy of the law. The law must not, however, violate any superior law or civil principle, nor must it be an ex post facto law. The executive must not possess the power of declaring martial law, which is merely a suspension of all law. In extreme cases, parliament in England and congress in the United States pass an act suspending the habeas corpus act.

VIII. Every officer must be responsible to the affected person for the legality of his act; and no act must be done for which some one is not responsible.

IX. It has been deemed necessary in the Bill of Rights and the American constitution specially to refer to the quartering of soldiers as a dangerous weapon in the hands of the executive.

5. X. The forces must be strictly submitted to the law, and the citizen should have the right to bear arms.

XI. The right of petitioning, and the right of meeting and considering public matters, and of organizing into associations for any lawful purposes, are important guarantees of civil liberty.

The following guarantees relate more especially to the government of a free country and the character of its polity:

XII. Publicity of public business in all its branches, whether legislative, judicial, written, or oral.

XIII. The supremacy of the law, or the protection against the absolutism of one, of several, or of the majority, requires other guarantees. It is necessary that the public funds be under close and efficient popular control; they should therefore be chiefly in the hands of the popular branch of the legislature, never of the executive. Appropriations should also be for distinct purposes and short times.

6. XIV. It is further necessary that the power of making war reside with the people, and not with the executive. A declaration of war in the United States is an act of congress.

XV. The supremacy of the law requires, also, not only the protection of the minority, but the protection of the majority against the rule of a factious minority or cabal.

XVI. The majority and, through it, the people are protected by the principle that the administration is founded on party principles.

XVII. A very important guarantee of liberty is the division of government into three distinct functions,—legislative, administrative, and judicial. The union of these is absolutism or despotism on the one hand, and slavery on the other.

XVIII. As a general rule, the principle prevails in Anglican liberty that the executive may do what is positively allowed by fundamental or other law, and not all that which is not prohibited.

7. XIX. The supremacy of the law requires that, where enacted constitutions form the fundamental law, there be some authority which can pronounce whether the legislature itself has or has not transgressed it. This power must be vested in courts of law.

XX. There is no guarantee of liberty more important and more peculiarly Anglican than the representative government. See Lieber, Civ. Lib. p. 168.

In connection with this, a very important question is, whether there should be direct elections by the people, or whether there should be double elections. The Anglican principle favors simple elections; and double elections have often been resorted to as the very means of avoiding the object of a representative government.

The management of the elections should also be in the hands of the voters, and government especially should not be allowed to interfere.

Representative bodies must be free. They must be freely chosen, and, when chosen, act under no threat or violence of the executive or any portion of the people. They must be protected as representative bodies; and a wise parliamentary law and usage should secure the rights of each member and the elaboration of the law.

A peculiar protection is afforded to members of the legislature in England and the United States, by their freedom from arrest, except for certain specified crimes.

8. Every member must possess the right to propose any measure or resolution.

Not only must the legislature be the judge of the right each member has to his seat, but the whole internal management belongs to itself. It is indispensable that it possess the power and privileges to protect its own dignity.

The principle of two houses, or the bicameral system, is an equally efficient guarantee of liberty, by excluding impassioned legislation and embodying in the law the collective mind of the legislature.

XXI. The independence of the law, of which the independence of the judiciary forms a part, is one of the main stays of civil liberty. It requires "a living common law, a clear division of the judiciary from other powers, the public accusatorial process, the independence of the judge, the trial by jury, and an independent position of the advocate." See Lieber, Civil Liberty and Self-Government, pp. 208–250.

9. XXII. Another constituent of our liberty is local and institutional self-government. It arises out of a willingness of the people to attend to their own affairs, and an unwillingness to permit of the interference of the executive and administration with them beyond what it necessarily must do, or which cannot or ought not to be done by self-action. A pervading self-government, in the Anglican sense, is organic: it consists in organs of combined self-action, in institutions, and in a systematic connection of these institutions. It is, therefore, equally opposed to a disintegration of society and to despotism.

American liberty belongs to the great division of Anglican liberty, and is founded upon the checks, guarantees, and self-government of the Anglican race. The following features are, however, peculiar to American liberty: republican federalism, strict separation of the state from the church, greater equality and acknowledgment of abstract rights in the citizen, and a more popular or democratic cast of the whole polity. With reference to the last two may be added these further characteristics:

10. We have everywhere established voting by ballot. The executive has never possessed the power of dissolving or proroguing the legislature. The list of states has not been closed. We admit foreigners to the rights of citizenship, and we do not believe in inalienable allegiance. There is no attainder of blood. We allow no ex post facto laws. American liberty possesses, also, as a characteristic, the enacted constitution,—distinguishing it from the English polity, with its accumulative constitution. Our legislatures are, therefore, not omnipotent, as the British Parliament theoretically is; but the laws enacted by them may be declared by the supreme courts to conflict with the constitution,—as unconstitutional.

The liberty sought for by the French, as a peculiar system, is founded chiefly, in theory, on the idea of equality and the abstract rights of man. (Rousseau's Social Contract.) Lieber calls this system—if indeed that which has never yet come to be established as an enduring reality, with true vitality, can be called a system—Gallican liberty, to contradistinguish it from Anglican liberty.

11. Very few works have been written that treat exclusively of civil liberty; but liberty has been more or less comprehensively treated in many works in which the great topics of government or the rights of individuals or nations have been discussed. Aristotle's Politics; W. Fortescue, De Laudibus Legum Angliæ; Hooker, The Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity; Locke on Government; Algernon Sidney, Discourses on Government (the great book which, together with Montesquieu's Spirit of Laws, may be said to have furnished the chief food on which the minds of our most distinguished revolutionary framers and legislators were reared). As to Montesquieu's Esprit des Lois, the student ought to combine with it the Critical Commentary, by Count Destutt de Tracy, first published in Philadelphia in 1811, and, if we are rightly informed, adopted by Mr. Jefferson as a political text-book for the University of Virginia. There is a German translation of Destutt de Tracy, with additional notes and criticisms, by C. F. Morstadt, Heidelberg, 1820; Locke, Two Treatises on Government; the best English edition of De Lolme on the British Constitution; the Works of Jeremy Bentham; Hallam, Constitutional History of England; Creasy, Rise and Progress of the English Constitution; Rousseau, Contrat Social (in connection with it, Lorimer's Political Progress not necessarily Democratic); Guizot, especially his Democracy; Jonathan Elliot; the Debates in the several State Conventions on the Adoption of the Federal Constitution, together with the Journal of the Federal Convention, as reported by James Madison; John Adams' Defence of the Constitution of the United States; The Federalist, by Hamilton and Madison; George T. Curtis, History of the Origin, Formation, and Adoption of the Constitution of the United States; Story's Commentaries; Sismondi, Histoire de la Renaissance de la Liberté en Italie, and his History of the Italian Republics in the Middle Ages; Lieber's Political Ethics; Whewell's Elements of Morality, including Polity; all those portions of the great writers on the Law of Nations where human rights are discussed. For criticism of political literature and a comprehensive enumeration of political writers, we must refer the student to Robert von Mohl, History and Literature of Political Sciences, 3 vols. Erlangen, 1858.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS. The right to print and publish the truth, from good motives and for justifiable ends. 3 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 394.

This right is secured by the constitution of the United States. Amendments, art. 1. The abuse of the right is punished criminally by indictment, civilly by action. See Judge Cooper, Libel; Libel.

LIBERTY OF SPEECH. The right to public support in speaking facts or opinions.

2. It is provided by the constitution of the United States that members of congress shall not be called to account for any thing said in debate; and similar provisions are contained in the constitutions of the several states in relation to the members of their respective legislatures. This right, however, does not extend beyond the mere speaking; for if a member of congress were to reduce his speech to writing and cause it to be printed, it would no longer bear a privileged character, and he might be held responsible for a libel, as any other individual. See Bacon, Abr. Libel (B); Debate.

3. The greatest latitude is allowed by the common law to counsel: in the discharge of his professional duty, he may use strong epithets, however derogatory to other persons they may be, if pertinent to the cause, and stated in his instructions, whether the thing were true or false. But if he were maliciously to travel out of his case for the purpose of slandering another, he would be liable to an action, and amenable to a just, and often more efficacious, punishment, inflicted by public opinion. 3 Chitty, Pract. 887. No respectable counsel will indulge himself with unjust severity; and it is doubtless the duty of the court to prevent any such abuse.

LIBERUM MARITAGIUM (Lat.). In Old English Law. Frank-marriage (q.v.). 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 115; Littleton, § 17; Bracton, fol. 21.

LIBERUM SERVITIUM. Free service. Service of a warlike sort by a feudatory tenant; sometimes called servitium liberum armorum. Somner, Gavelk. p. 56; Jacob, Law Dict.; 4 Coke, 9.

Service not unbecoming character of freemen and soldier to perform: as, to serve under the lord in his wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 60. The tenure of free service does not make a villein a free man, unless homage or manumission precede, any more than a tenure by villein services makes a freeman a villein. Bracton, fol. 24.

LIBERUM TENEMENTUM. In Real Law. Freehold. Frank-tenement. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1690; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 46.

In Pleading. A plea in justification by the defendant in an action of trespass, by which he claims that he is the owner of the close described in the declaration, or that it is the freehold of some third person by whose command he entered. 2 Salk. 453; 7 Term, 355; 1 Wms. Saund. 299 b, note.

It has the effect of compelling the plaintiff to a new assignment, setting out the abuttals where he has the locus in quo only generally in his declaration, 11 East, 51, 72; 16 id. 343; 1 Barnew. & C. 489; or to set forth tenancy in case he claims as tenant of the defendant, or the person ordering the trespass. 1 Saund. 299 b. It admits possession by the plaintiff, and the fact of the commission of a trespass as charged. 2 M'Cord, So. C. 226.

LICENCIADO. In Spanish Law. Lawyer or Advocate. By a decree of the Spanish government of 6th November, 1843, it was declared that all persons who have obtained diplomas of "Licentiates in Jurisprudence" from any of the literary universities of Spain are entitled to practise in all the courts of Spain without first obtaining permission by the tribunals of justice.

Their title is furnished them by the minister of the interior, to whom the universities forward a list of those whom they think qualified.

This law does not apply to those already licensed, who may, however, obtain the benefit of it, upon surrendering their license and complying with certain other formalities prescribed by the law.

LICENSE (Lat. licere, to permit).

In Contracts. A permission. A right given by some competent authority to do an act which without such authority would be illegal.

An authority to do a particular act or series of acts on another's land without possessing any estate therein. 11 Mass. 533; 4 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 72; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 148.

The written evidence of the grant of such right.

An executed license exists when the licensed act has been done.

An executory license exists where the licensed act has not been performed.

An express license is one which is granted in direct terms.

An implied license is one which is presumed to have been given from the acts of the party authorized to give it.

It is distinguished from an easement, which implies an interest in the land to be affected, and a lease, or right to take the profits of land. It may be, however, and often is, coupled with a grant of some interest in the land itself, or right to take the profits. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 148.

A license may be by specialty, 2 Parsons, Contr. 22; by parol, 13 Mees. & W. Exch. 838; 4 Maule & S. 562; 7 Barb. N. Y. 4; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 148; or by implication from circumstances, as opening a door in response to a knock. Hob. 62; 2 Greenleaf, Ev. § 427.

2. It may be granted by the owner, or, in many cases, by a servant. Croke Eliz. 246; 2 Greenleaf, Ev. § 427.

An executory license may be revoked at the pleasure of the grantor. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 148. In general, a mere license may be revoked at the grantor's pleasure, 11 Mass. 433; 15 Wend. N. Y. 380; although the licensee has incurred expense. 10 Conn. 378; 23 id. 223; 3 Du. N. Y. 355; 11 Metc. Mass. 251; 2 Gray, Mass. 302; 24 N. H. 364; 13 id. 264; 4 Johns. N. Y. 418; 3 Wisc. 117; 1 Dev. & B. No. C. 492; 13 Mees. & W. Exch. 838; 37 Eng. L. & Eq. 489; 5 Barnew. & Ad. 1. But see 14 Serg. & R. Penn. 267. Not so a license closely coupled with a transfer of title to personal property. 8 Metc. Mass. 34; 11 Conn. 525; 13 Mees. & W. Exch. 856; 11 Ad. & E. 34.

3. An executed license which destroys an easement enjoyed by the licenser in the licensee's land, cannot be revoked. 9 Metc. Mass. 395; 2 Gray, Mass. 302; 2 Gill, Md. 221; 3 Wisc. 124; 3 Du. N. Y. 255; 7 Bingh. 682; 3 Barnew. & C. 332; 5 id. 221.

The effect of an executed license, though revoked, is to relieve or excuse the licensee from liability for acts done properly in pursuance thereof, and their consequences. 6 Du. N. Y. 363; 22 Barb. N. Y. 336; 18 Pick. Mass. 569; 2 Gray, Mass. 302; 10 Conn. 378; 13 N. H. 264; 7 id. 237; 7 Taunt. 374; 5 Barnew. & C. 221.

The licensee's improvements on lands without compensation, in equity. 3 Wisc. 117; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1237; Angell, Wat. Cour. § 318.

In International Law. Permission granted by a belligerent state to its own subjects, or to the subjects of the enemy, to carry on a trade interdicted by war. Wheaton, Int. Law, 475.

4. Licenses operate as a dispensation of the rules of war, so far as its provisions extend. They are stricti juris, but are not to be construed with pedantic accuracy. Wheaton, Int. Law, 476; 1 Kent, Comm. 5th ed. 163 n.; 4 C. Rob. Adm. 8. They can be granted only by the sovereign authority, or by those delegated for the purpose by special commission. 1 Dods. Adm. 226; Stew. Adm. 367. They constitute a ground of capture and confiscation per se by the adverse belligerent party. Wheaton, Int. Law, 475.

In Patent Law. See PATENTS.

In Pleading. A plea of justification to an action of trespass, that the defendant was authorized by the owner of the freehold to commit the trespass complained of.

A license must be specially pleaded to an action of trespass, 2 Term, 166, but may be given in evidence in an action on the case. 2 Mod. 6; 8 East, 308.

LICENTIA CONCORDANDI (Lat. leave to agree). One of the formal steps in the levying a fine. When an action is brought for the purpose of levying a fine, the defendant, knowing himself to be in the wrong, is supposed to make overtures of accommodation to the plaintiff, who accepts them, but, having given pledges to prosecute his suit, applies to the court, upon the return of the writ of covenant, for leave to make the matter up: this, which is readily granted, is called the licentia concordandi. 5 Coke, 39; Cruise, Dig. tit. 35, c. 2, 22.

LICENTIA LOQUENDI. Imparlance.

LICENTIA SURGENDI. In Old English Law. Liberty of rising. A liberty or space of time given by the court to a tenant, who is essoined, de malo lecti, in a real action, to arise out of his bed. Also, the writ thereupon. If the demandant can show that the tenant was seen abroad before leave of court, and before being viewed by the knights appointed by the court for that purpose, such tenant shall be taken to be deceitfully essoined, and to have made default. Bracton, lib. 5; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 10.

LICENTIA TRANSFRETANDI. A writ or warrant directed to keeper of port of Dover, or other seaport, commanding him to let the person who has this license of the king pass over sea. Reg. Orig. 93.

LICENTIOUSNESS. The doing what one pleases, without regard to the rights of others. It differs from liberty in this, that the latter is restrained by natural or positive law, and consists in doing whatever we please not inconsistent with the rights of others, whereas the former does not respect those rights. Wolff. Inst. § 84.

LICET (Lat.). It is lawful; not forbidden by law.

Id omne licitum est, quod non est legibus prohibitum, quamobrem, quod, lege permittente, fit, pœnam non meretur. Licere dicimus quod legibus, moribus, institutisque conceditur. Cic. Philip. 13; L. 42, D. ff. de ritu nupt. Est aliquid quod non oporteat; tametsi licet; quicquod vero non licet certe non oportet. L. verbum oportere, ff. de verb. et rer. sign.

Although. Calvinus, Lex. An averment that "although such a thing is done or not done," is not implicative of the doing or not doing, but a direct averment of it. Plowd. 127.

LICET SÆPIUS REQUISITUS (although often requested). In Pleading. A formal allegation in a declaration that the defendant has been often requested to perform the acts the non-performance of which is complained of.

It is usually alleged in the declaration that the defendant, licet sæpius requisitus, etc., he did not perform the contract the violation of which is the foundation of the action. This allegation is generally sufficient when a request is not parcel of the contract. Indeed, in such cases it is unnecessary even to lay a general request; for the bringing of the suit is itself a sufficient request. 1 Saund. 33, n. 2; 2 id. 118, note 3; Plowd. 128; 1 Wils. 33; 2 H. Blackst. 131; 1 Johns. N. Y. Cas. 99, 319; 7 Johns. N. Y. 462; 18 id. 485; 3 Maule & S. 150. See DEMAND.

LICITACION. In Spanish Law. The sale made at public auction by co-proprietors, or co-heirs, of their joint property which is not susceptible of being advantageously divided in kind.

LIDFORD LAW. See LYNCH LAW.

LIEGE (from liga, a bond, or litis, a man wholly at command of his lord. Blount). In Feudal Law. Bound by a feudal tenure; bound in allegiance to the lord paramount, who owned no superior.

The term was applied to the lord, or liege lord, to whom allegiance was due, since he was bound to protection and a just government, and also to the feudatory, liegeman, or subject bound to allegiance, for he was bound to tribute and due subjection. 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. So lieges are the king's subjects. Stat. 8 Hen. VI. c. 10; 14 Hen. VIII. c. 2. So in Scotland. Bell, Dict. But in ancient times private persons, as lords of manors, had their lieges Jacob, Law Dict.; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 367.

Liege, or ligius, was used in old records for full, pure, or perfect: e.g. ligia potestas, full and free power of disposal. Paroch. Antiq. 280. (Probably in this sense derived from legitima.) So in Scotland. See LIEGE POUSTIE.

LIEGE POUSTIE (Legitima Potestas). In Scotch Law. That state of health which gives a person full power to dispose of, mortis causâ or otherwise, his heritable property. Bell, Dict.

2. A deed executed at time of such state of health, as opposed to a death-bed conveyance. Id. A person is said to be in such state of health (in liege poustie, or in legitima potestati) when he is in his ordinary health and capacity, and not a minor, nor cognosced as an idiot or madman, nor under interdiction. 1 Bell, Comm. 85, 5th ed.; 6 Clark & F. Hou. L. 540.

LIEN. A hold or claim which one person has upon the property of another as a security for some debt or charge.

In every case in which property, either real or personal, is charged with the payment of a debt or duty, every such charge may be denominated a lien on the property. Whit. Liens. It differs from an estate in or title to the property, as it may be discharged at any time by payment of the sum for which the lien attaches. It differs from a mortgage in the fact that a mortgage is made and the property delivered, or otherwise, for the express purpose of security; while the lien attaches as incidental to the main purpose of the bailment, or, as in case of a judgment, by mere act of the law, without any act of the party. In this general sense the word is commonly used by English and American law writers to include those preferred or privileged claims given by statute or by admiralty law, and which seem to have been adopted from the civil law, as well as the security existing at common law, to which the term more exactly applies. In its more limited as well as commoner sense, the word lien indicates a mere right to hold the property of another as security; or it is the right which one person possesses, in certain cases, of detaining property placed in his possession belonging to another, until some demand which the former has be satisfied. 2 East, 235. A qualified right which, in certain cases, may be exercised over the property of another. 6 East, 25, n. A lien is a right to hold. 2 Campb. 579. A lien in regard to personal property is a right to detain the property till some claim or charge is satisfied. Metc. Yelv. 67, n. c. The right of retaining or continuing possession till the price is paid. 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, 144.

The Common Law Lien. As distinguished from the other classes, it consists in a mere right to retain possession until the debt or charge is paid.

In the case of a factor an apparent exception exists, as he is allowed a lien on the proceeds of goods sold, as well as on the goods themselves. But this seems to result from the relation of the parties and the purposes of the bailment; to effectuate which, and at the same time give a security to the factor, the law considers the possession, or right to possession, of the proceeds, the same thing as the possession of the goods themselves.

A particular lien is a right to retain the property of another on account of labor employed or money expended on that specific property. Whitaker, Liens, 9.

A general lien is a right to retain the property of another on account of a general balance due from the owner. 3 Bos. & P. 494.

2. Of course, where a general lien exists, a particular lien is included.

Particular liens constitute the oldest class of liens, and the one most favored by the common law. 4 Burr. 2221; Dougl. 97; 3 Bos. & P. 126. But courts ceased to originate liens at an early period, 9 East, 426; while general liens have been looked upon with jealousy, being considered encroachments upon the common law and founded solely in the usage of and for the benefit of trade. 3 Bos. & P. 42, 26, 494. Liens either exist by law, arise from usage, or are created by express agreement.

Liens which exist by the common law, generally arise in cases of bailment. Thus, a particular lien exists whenever goods are delivered to a tradesman for the execution of the purposes of his trade upon them. 1 Atk. Ch. 228; 2 Rolle, Abr. 92; 3 Maule & S. 167; 14 Pick. Mass. 332; 7 Barb. N. Y. 113. And so, where a person is, from the nature of his occupation, under a legal obligation to receive and be at trouble or expense about the personal property of another, in every such case he is entitled to a particular lien on it. 1 Esp. 109; Ld. Raym. 867; 6 Term, 17; 3 Bos. & P. 42.

3. And sometimes a lien arises where there is strictly no bailment. Thus, where a ship or goods at sea come into possession of a party by finding, and he has been at some trouble or expense about them, he is entitled to retain the same until reimbursed his expenses. This applies only to the salvors of a ship and cargo preserved from peril at sea, 1 Ld. Raym. 393; 5 Burr. 2732; 8 East, 57; 16 Penn. St. 393, and, in the case of property on shore, where a specific reward is offered for the restoration, 8 Gill, Md. 218; 3 Metc. Mass. 352, and does not apply, generally, it is said, to the preservation of things found upon land. 2 H. Blackst. 254; 2 W. Blackst. 1117.

Liens which arise by usage are usually general liens, and the usage is said by Whitaker to be either the general usage of trade, or the particular usage of the parties. Whitaker, Liens, 31.

4. The usage must be so general that the party delivering the goods may be presumed to have known it, and to have made the right of lien a part of the contract. 3 Bos. & P. 50. And it is said the lien must be for a general balance arising from transactions of a similar character between the parties, and that the debt must have accrued in the business of the party claiming the lien, Whitaker, Liens, 33; and see 1 Atk. Ch. 223; 1 W. Blackst. 651; and it seems that more decisive proof of general usage is required in those occupations in which the workmen are required to receive their employment when offered them, such as carriers. 6 Term, 14; 6 East, 519; 7 id. 224. But where a general lien has been once established, the courts will not allow it to be disturbed. 1 Esp. 109; 3 id. 31.

In regard to a general lien arising from particular usage between the parties, proof of their having before dealt upon the basis of such a lien will be presumptive evidence that they continue to deal upon the same terms. 1 Atk. Ch. 235; 6 Term, 19. If a debtor, who has already pledged property to secure a loan, borrow a further sum, it will be understood that the creditor's lien is for the whole debt. 2 Vern. Ch. 691.

5. Liens which arise from express agreement. A general or particular lien may be acquired in any case by the express agreement of the parties. Croke Car. 271; 6 Term, 14. This generally happens when goods are placed in the hands of a person for the execution of some particular purpose upon them, with an express contract that they shall be considered as a pledge for the labor or expense which the execution of that purpose may occasion. Or it exists where property is merely pawned or delivered for bare custody to another, for the sole purpose of being a security for a loan made to the owner on the credit of it. Whitaker, Liens, 27. And if a number of tradesmen, not obliged by law to receive the goods of any one who offers, for the purposes of their trade, agree not to receive goods unless they may be held subject to a general lien for the balance due them, and the bailor knows this, and leaves the goods, the lien attaches. 6 Term, 14; 3 Bos. & P. 42. And the same is true, of course, of an individual under similar circumstances.

6. But where the tradesman is obliged to receive employment from any one who offers, a mere notice will not be enough to give this lien with implied assent, but express assent must be shown. 6 Term, 14. Among the different classes who have liens by the common law, in the absence of any special agreement, are—

Innkeepers. They may detain a horse for his keeping, 2 Ld. Raym. 366; 8 Mod. 173; 6 Term, 141, if he belong to a guest, 11 Barb. N. Y. 41; but not sell him, F. Moore, 876; Bacon, Abr. Inns (D); 8 Mod. 173; except by custom of London and Exeter, F. Moore, 876; and cannot retake the horse after giving him up. 8 Mod. 173; Hob. 42; Metc. Yelv. 67. They may detain the goods of a traveller, but not of a boarder. 8 Rich. So. C. 423. Their lien is a particular lien. 9 East, 433; Croke Car. 271; 2 E. D. Smith, N. Y. 195.

Warehousemen have a particular lien. 18 Ill. 286; 34 Eng. L. & Eq. 116; 31 Miss. 261; 13 Ark. 437.

Tailors have a particular lien. Croke Car. 271; 9 East, 433.

Common carriers, for transportation of goods, 1 Ld. Raym. 752; 6 East, 519; 7 id. 224; 1 Dougl. Mich. 1; Wright, Ohio, 216; 24 Me. 339; but not if the goods are taken tortiously from the owner's possession, where the carrier is innocent, 1 Dougl. Mich. 1; 2 Hall, N. Y. 561; 5 Cush. Mass. 137; contra, 6 East, 519; 6 Whart. Penn. 418; and on a passenger for his passage-money. 2 Campb. 631. Part of the goods may be detained for the whole freight of goods belonging to the same person. 6 East, 622.

7. Bailees for hire, generally, for work done by them. 6 Term, 14; 3 Selwyn, Nisi P. 1163; 4 Term, 260; 26 Miss. 182; 4 Wend. N. Y. 292. A wharfinger. Ware, Dist. Ct. 354.

An agister of cattle has no lien, Croke Car. 271; nor a livery-stable keeper, 2 Ld. Raym. 866; 6 East, 509; 35 Me. 153; otherwise in Pennsylvania. 23 Penn. St. 193.

Attorneys and solicitors have a lien upon papers of their clients, 12 Wend. N. Y. 261; 2 Aik. Vt. 162; 14 Vt. 485; 11 N. H. 163; 11 Miss. 225; and also upon judgments obtained by them, 20 Pick. Mass. 259; 2 Metc. Mass. 458; 10 Barb. N. Y. 67; 4 Sandf. N. Y. 661; Wright, Ohio, 485; 30 Me. 152; 15 Vt. 544; not in Pennsylvania. 7 Penn. St. 376. This lien is subject to some restrictions. Metc. Yelv. 67 f; 34 Me. 20; 21 N. H. 339; 22 Pick. Mass. 210.

Clerks of courts have a lien on papers for their fees. 3 Atk. Ch. 727; 2 P. Will. 460; 2 Ves. Ch. 111.

Bankers have a lien on all securities left with them by their employers. 5 Term, 488; 1 Esp. 66; 3 Gilm. Va. 233; 1 How. 234.

8. Factors and brokers have a lien on goods and papers, 3 Term, 119; 1 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 437, n.; 8 Wheat. 268; 28 Vt. 118; 34 Me. 582; on part of the goods for the whole claim, 6 East, 622; 34 Me. 582; but only for such goods as come to them as factors. 11 Eng. L. & Eq. 528.

The vendor of goods, for the price, so long as he retains possession. 7 East, 574; 1 H. Blackst. 363; Hob. 41; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 448; 2 Swan, Tenn. 661; 6 McLean, C. C. 472.

Pawnees, from the very nature of their contract, 15 Mass. 408; 2 Vt. 309; 9 Wend. N. Y. 345; 3 Mo. 219; but only where the pawner has authority to make such pledge. 3 Atk. Ch. 44; 2 Campb. 336, n. A pledge, even where the pawnee is innocent, does not bind the owner, unless the pawner has authority to make the pledge. Paley, Ag. 151; 1 Vern. Ch. 407; 2 Stark. 21; 1 Mas. C. C. 440; 2 Mass. 398; 4 Johns. N. Y. 103; 1 Maule & S. 180. The pawnee does not have a general lien. 15 Mass. 490.

9. Requisites as to Creation. In all these cases, to give rise to the lien, there must have been a delivery of the property; it must have come into the possession of the party claiming the lien, or his agent. 3 Term, 119; 6 East, 25, n.

A question may arise by whom the delivery is to be made. Where a person, in pursuance of the authority and directions of the owner of property, delivers it to a tradesman for the execution of the purposes of his trade upon it, the tradesman will not have a general lien against the owner for a balance due from the person delivering it, if he knew that the one delivering was not the real owner. 1 East, 335; 2 id. 523; 2 Campb. 218; Parke, Cas. 176; 2 Atk. Ch. 114. Thus, a carrier, who, by the usage of trade, is to be paid by the consignor, has no lien for a general balance against the consignee. 5 Bos. & P. 64. Nor can a claim against the consignee destroy the consignor's right of stoppage in transitu. 3 Bos. & P. 42. But a particular lien may undoubtedly be derived through the acts of agents acting within the scope of their employment. 9 East, 233; 3 Bos. & P. 119; 3 Esp. 182; 2 East, 237. And the same would be true of a general lien against the owner for a balance due from him. Whitaker, Liens, 39.

10. No lien exists where the party claiming it acquires possession by wrong, 2 Term, 485, or by misrepresentation; 1 Campb. 12, or by his unauthorized and voluntary act, 1 Strange, 651; 8 Term, 310, 610; 2 H. Blackst. 254; 3 W. Blackst. 1117. But see 4 Burr. 2218.

No lien exists where the act of the servant or agent delivering the property is totally unauthorized, and the pledge of it is tortious against the owner, whether delivered as a pledge or for the execution of the purposes of a trade thereupon. 5 Ves. Ch. 111; 6 East, 17; 4 Esp. 174; 5 Term, 604. A pledge, even when the pawner is innocent, does not bind the owner unless the pawner had authority. Paley, Ag. 151; 1 Vern. Ch. 407; 2 Stark. 21; 1 Mas. C. C. 440; 2 Mass. 398; 4 Johns. N. Y. 103; 1 Maule & S. 140.

A delivery by a debtor for the purpose of preferring a creditor will not be allowed to operate as a delivery sufficient for a lien to attach. 4 Burr. 2239; 3 Ves. Ch. 85; 2 Campb. 579; 11 East, 256.

11. Waiver of Liens. Possession is a necessary element of common-law liens; and if the creditor once knowingly parts with that possession after the lien attaches, the lien is gone. Strange, 556; 1 Atk. Ch. 254; Ambl. 252; Dougl. 97; 5 Ohio, 88; 6 East, 25, n.; 7 id. 5; 3 Term, 119; 2 Ed. Ch. 181; 5 Binn. Penn. 398; 3 Am. Law Jour. 128; 4 N. Y. 497; 4 Den. N. Y. 498; 42 Me. 50; 11 Cush. Mass. 231; 2 Swan, Tenn. 561; 23 Vt. 217. But there may be a special agreement extending the lien, though not to affect third persons. 36 Wend. N. Y. 467. The delivery may be constructive, Ambl. 252; and so may possession. 5 Ga. 153. A lien cannot be transferred, 8 Pick. Mass. 73; but property subject to a lien may be delivered to a third person, as to the creditor's servant, with notice of the lien, so as to preserve the lien of the original creditor. 2 East, 529; 7 id. 5. But it must not be delivered to the owner or his agent. Whitaker, Liens, 71, n.; 2 East, 529; 4 Johns. N. Y. 103. But if the property be of a perishable nature, possession may be given to the owner under proper agreements. 1 Atk. Ch. 235; 8 Term, 199.

Neglect to insist upon a lien in giving reasons for a refusal to deliver property on demand, has been held a waiver. 1 Campb. 410, n.; 7 Ind. 21; 13 Ark. 437; 2 Blackf. Ind. 465.

12. Where there is a special agreement made, or act done, inconsistent with the existence of the lien, such as an agreement to give credit, or where a distinct security is taken, or the possession of the property is acquired for another distinct purpose, and for that only, or where the property is attached by the creditor, no lien arises. 16 Ves. Ch. 275; 4 Campb. 146; 2 Marsh. 339; 3 Anstr. 881; 5 Maule & S. 180; Metc. Yelv. 67 c; 8 N. H. 441; 17 Pick. Mass. 140; 15 Mass. 389; 4 Vt. 549. But such agreement must be clearly inconsistent with the lien. 1 Dutch. N. J. 443; 32 Me. 319.

The only remedy or use of the lien at common law is to allow the creditor to retain possession of the goods. 33 Me. 438; 1 Mas. C. C. 319. And he may do this against assignees of the debtor. 1 Burr. 489.

13. The Civil Law Lien. The civil law embraces, under the head of mortgage and privilege, the peculiar securities which, in the common and maritime law, and equity, are termed liens.

In regard to privilege, Domat says, "We do not reckon in the number of privileges the preference which the creditor has on the movables that have been given him in a pawn, and which are in his custody. The privilege of a creditor is the distinguishing right which the nature of his credit gives him, and which makes him to be preferred before other creditors, even those who are prior in time, and who have mortgages." Domat, part 1, lib. iii. tit. i. sect. v.

These privileges were of two kinds: one gave a preference on all the goods, without any particular assignment on any one thing; the other secures to the creditors their security on certain things, and not on the other goods.

14. Among creditors who are privileged, there is no priority of time, but each one takes in the order of his privilege, and all creditors who have a privilege of the same kind take proportionately although their debts be of different dates. And all privileges have equally a preference over those of an inferior class, and over debts which do not have this favored character, whether subsequent or antecedent in point of time.

The vendor of immovable property, for which payment has not been made, is preferred before creditors of the purchaser, and all other persons, as to the thing sold. By the Roman law, this principle applies equally to movables and immovables; and the seller may seize upon the property in the hands of his vendee, or wherever he can find it.

So, too, a person who has lent money to repair a thing, or to make improvements, has this privilege. And this, though he lends to workmen or architects, etc., if it be done with the knowledge of the owner.

Carriers have a privilege not only for the price of carriage, but for money paid on account of the goods.

Landlords have a privilege for the rents due from their tenants even on the furniture of the under-tenants, if there be a sub-lease. But not if payment has been made to the tenant by an immediate lessor; although a payment made by the sub-tenant to the landlord would be good as against the tenant.

15. The privilege was lost by an ovation, or by any thing in the original contract which showed that the vendor had taken some other security inconsistent with the privilege. See Domat, part i. lib. iii. tit. i. sect. v.

Mortgages in the civil law are of two kinds, conventional and legal. A conventional mortgage results from the direct act or covenant of the parties. A legal mortgage arises by mere act of law.

A mortgage may be acquired in three ways.

First, with the consent of the debtor, by his agreement.

Second, without the owner's consent, by the quality and bare effect of the engagement, the nature of which is such that the law has annexed to it the security of a mortgage.

Third, where a mortgage is acquired by the authority of justice: as where a creditor who had no mortgage obtains a decree of condemnation in his favor.

16. When the creditor is put into possession of the thing, movable or immovable, he has a right to keep it until he is paid what is owing him; and the debtor cannot turn the creditor out of possession, nor make use of his own thing without the consent of the creditor.

Effect of a Mortgage. First, the creditor has a right to sell the thing pledged, whether the creditor has it in his possession or not. Under the French law, it was a right to have it sold. Cushing's Domat, p. 647.

Second, a right on the part of the creditor to follow the property, into whosoever hands it has come, whether movable or immovable.

Third, a preference of the first creditor to whom the property is mortgaged, and a right on his part to follow the property into the hands of the other creditors.

Fourth, the mortgage is a security for all the consequences of the original debt, as damages, interest, expenses in preserving, etc.

See, generally, Domat, part i. lib. iii. tit. i.; Guyot, Rep. Univ. tit. Privilegium; Cushing's Domat; Massi, Droit Commerciel.

17. Equitable Liens are such as exist in equity, and of which courts of equity alone take cognizance.

A lien is neither a jus in re nor a jus ad rem; it is not property in the thing, nor does it constitute a right of action for the thing. It more properly constitutes a charge upon the thing. In regard to these liens, it may be generally stated that they arise from constructive trusts. They are, therefore, wholly independent of the possession of the thing to which they are attached as an incumbrance; and they can be enforced only in courts of equity. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1217.

An equitable lien on a sale of realty is very different from a lien at law; for it operates after the possession has been changed, and is available by way of charge instead of detainer. Adams, Eq. Jur. 127.

18. The vendor of land has a lien for the unpaid purchase-money. The principle is stated, "where a conveyance is made prematurely before payment of the price, the money is a charge on the estate in the hands of the vendee," 4 Kent, Comm. 151; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1217; 1 W. Blackst. 950; 15 Ves. Ch. 329; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 308; 1 Schoales & L. 132; 6 Johns. N. Y. 402; 7 Wheat. 46; 17 Ves. Ch. 433; 10 Pet. 625; and in the hands of heirs or subsequent purchasers with notice, 15 Ves. Ch. 337; 3 Russ. 488; 1 Schoales & L. 135; against assignees in bankruptcy, under a general assignment, 1 Brown, Ch. 420; 9 Ves. Ch. 100; 2 Ves. & B. Ch. 306; 1 Vern. Ch. 267; 1 Madd. Ch. 356; and whether the estate is actually conveyed or only contracted to be conveyed. Sugden, Vend. c. 12, p. 541; 2 Dick. Ch. 730; 12 Ad. & E. 632.

So, too, where money has been paid prematurely before conveyance made, the purchaser and his representatives have a lien. 3 Younge & J. Exch. 264; 11 Price, Exch. 58; 1 P. Will. 278.

So where the purchase-money has been deposited in the hands of a third person, to cover incumbrances. 1 Turn. & R. 469; 1 Ves. Ch. 478. Yet a lien will not be created for a third party, who was to receive an annuity under a covenant as a part of the consideration for the conveyance. 3 Sim. Ch. 499; 1 Mylne & K. Ch. 297; 2 Keen, 81.

19. The deposit of the title-deeds of an estate gives an equitable lien on the estate. This lien is not favored, and is confined strictly to an actual, immediate, and bonâ fide deposit of the title-deeds with the creditor, as a security, in order to create the lien. 12 Ves. Ch. 197; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1020; 4 Kent, Comm. 150.

In regard to the effect of a conveyance to different alienees, subject to a lien, a difference exists between the rules in England and in the United States. In England, the alienees must divide the incumbrance. 1 Younge & C. 401; 2 Atk. Ch. 448; 8 Ves. Ch. 391; 1 Lloyd & G. 252.

One joint tenant has, in many cases, a lien on the common estate for repairs put on by himself above his share of the liability. 1 Ball & B. 199; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1236; Sugden, Vend. 611.

And equity applies this principle even to cases where tenant for life makes permanent improvements in good faith. 1 Sim. & S. 552. So where a party has made improvements under a defective title. 6 Madd. Ch. 2; 9 Mod. 11.

So, too, there is a lien where property is conveyed inter vivos, or is bequeathed or devised by last will and testament, subject to a charge for the payment of debts, or to other charges in favor of third persons. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1244. A distinction must be kept in mind between a devise in trust to pay certain sums, and a devise subject to charges.

A covenant to convey and settle lands does not give the covenantee a lien; but was held to do so in case of a covenant to settle lands in lieu of dower. 3 Brown, Ch. 489; 1 Ves. Ch. 451; 1 Maddox, Chanc. Pract. 471.

20. Waiver. The lien may be waived by agreement; but postponement of the day of payment is not a waiver, not being inconsistent with the nature of the lien; nor taking personal security. Adams, Eq. Jur. 128; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 308; 2 Rand. Va. 428; 2 Humphr. Tenn. 248; 1 Mas. C. C. 192; 2 Ohio, 383; 1 Blackf. Ind. 246; 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 502; 6 B. Monr. Ky. 174; 6 Yerg. Tenn. 50; 3 Ga. 333; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1226; 1 Ball & B. Ch. Ir. 514; 15 Ves. Ch. 348. A bill or note payable at a future day is generally held merely a means of payment, and not a security destroying the lien. 1 Schoales & L. Ch. 135; 2 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 306; 1 Madd. Ch. 349; 2 Rose, 79; 2 Ball & B. Ch. Ir. 514. But if it be the note of a third party, or an independent security on real estate, it would generally be a waiver. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1226, n.; 4 Kent, Comm. 151; 4 Wheat. 290; 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 20; 9 Cow. N. Y. 316; 1 Mas. C. C. 212. And, generally, the question of relinquishment will turn upon the facts of each case. 6 Ves. Ch. 752; 15 id. 329; 3 Russ. Ch. 488; 3 Sugden, Vend. c. 18; 8 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 553.

21. Maritime Liens. Maritime liens do not include or require possession. The word lien is used in maritime law, not in the strict legal sense in which we understand it in courts of common law, in which case there could be no lien where there was no possession, actual or constructive; but to express, as if by analogy, the nature of claims which neither presuppose nor originate in possession. 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 62. See 15 Bost. Law Rep. 555; 16 id. 1, 264; 17 id. 93, 421. A distinction is made in the United States between qualified maritime liens, which depend upon possession, and absolute maritime liens, which do not require nor depend upon possession. 7 How. 729.

22. The shipper of goods has a lien upon the ship, for the value of the goods sent, which can be enforced in admiralty, 1 Blatchf. & H. Adm. 300; Olcott, Adm. 43; 1 Blatchf. C. C. 173; Ware, Dist. Ct. 188; 1 Sumn. C. C. 551; 12 How. 272; and, generally, every act of the master binds the vessel, if it be done within the scope of his authority. 17 Me. 147; 1 W. Rob. Adm. 392; 2 Eng. L. & Eq. 536; 18 How. 182; 19 id. 22, where the possession of the master is not tortious, but under a color of right. 6 McLean, C. C. 484. This does not apply to contracts of material men with the master of a domestic ship, 1 Conkling, Adm.; and the act must have been within the scope of the master's employment. 18 How. 182. See Crabb, 23; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 391–406. This lien follows the ship even in the hands of a purchaser, without notice before the creditor has had a reasonable opportunity to enforce his lien. Ware, Dist. Ct. 188. If the master borrow money for the ship's necessity, the lender has a lien on the ship for the amount. 3 Yeates, Penn. 131; 4 Dall. Penn. 225; 8 Me. 298.

23. The owner of a ship has a lien on the cargo carried for the freight earned, whether reserved by a bill of lading or not. 12 Mod. 447; 6 East, 622; 4 Campb. 298; 7 Taunt. 14; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 630; 2 Brod. & B. 410; 4 Mass. 91; 6 Pick. Mass. 248; 18 Johns. N. Y. 157; 5 Wend. N. Y. 315; 5 Sandf. N. Y. 97; 5 Ohio, 88; 4 Wash. C. C. 110; 8 Wheat. 605; Ware, Dist. Ct. 149; 1 Sumn. C. C. 551; 2 id. 589; 2 Woodb. & M. C. C. 151.

This lien is, at most, only a qualified maritime lien. See 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, 143, n. The lien exists in case of a chartered ship, 4 Cow. N. Y. 470; 1 Paine, C. C. 358; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 630; 20 Bost. Law Rep. 669; 8 Wheat. 605, to the extent of the freight due under the bill of lading. 2 Atk. Ch. 621; 1 Barnew. & Ald. 712; 4 id. 630; 1 Sumn. C. C. 551. But if the charterer takes possession and management of the ship, he has the lien. 1 Cowp. 143; 8 Cranch, 39; 6 Pick. Mass. 248; 4 Cow. N. Y. 470; Ware, Dist. Ct. 149; 4 Mann. & G. 502; 26 Eng. L. & Eq. 136. No lien for freight attaches before the ship has broken ground. 1 Bos. & P. 634; 5 Binn. Penn. 392; 3 Gray, Mass. 92. But see, as to the damages for removing goods from the ship before she sails, 28 Eng. L. & Eq. 210; 1 C. B. 328; 2 Carr. & P. 334; 19 Bost. Law Rep. 579; 2 Gray, Mass. 92.

24. No lien exists for dead freight. 15 East, 547; 3 Maule & S. 205. The lien attaches only for freight earned. 3 Maule & S. 205; Ware, Dist. Ct. 149; 2 Brev. No. C. 233. The lien is lost by a delivery of the goods, 6 Hill, N. Y. 43; but not if the delivery be involuntary or procured by fraud. 6 Hill, N. Y. 43. So it is by stipulations inconsistent with its exercise, 17 How. 53; 10 Conn. 104; 6 Pick. Mass. 248; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 50; 4 Mann. & G. 502; 4 Bingh. 729; 3 Barnew. & Ald. 497; 32 Eng. L. & Eq. 210: as, by an agreement to receive the freight at a day subsequent to the entire delivery of the goods,—a distinction being, however, taken between the unloading or arrival of the ship, and the delivery of the goods. 1 Sumn. C. C. 551; 18 Johns. N. Y. 157; 14 Mees. & W. Exch. 794; 2 Sumn. C. C. 589; 5 Maule & S. 180; 10 Mass. 510.

A third person cannot take advantage of the existence of such lien. 3 East, 85. A vendor, before exercising right of stoppage in transitu, must discharge this lien by payment of freight. 1 Parsons, Mar. L. 350; 15 Me. 314; 3 Bos. & P. 42.

25. Master's Lien. In England, the master has no lien, at common law, on the ship for wages, nor disbursements. 9 East, 426; 33 Eng. L. & Eq. 600; 1 Barnew. & Ald. 575; 5 Dowl. & R. 552; 6 How. 112.

But now, by the one-hundred-and-ninety-first section of the English Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, it is provided that "Every master of a ship shall, so far as the case permits, have the same rights, liens, and remedies for the amount of his wages, which, by this act, or any law or custom, any seaman, not being a master, has for the money of his wages." And it has been properly held by Judge Sprague, of the United States district court, that this lien of the master on an English vessel may be reinforced in the admiralty courts of the United States. 22 Bost. Law Rep. 150.

26. In the United States, he has no lien for his wages. 2 Paine, C. C. 201; 8 Serg. & R. Penn. 18; 1 Pet. Adm. 223; 11 id. 175; 3 Mas. C. C. 91; 14 Penn. St. 34; 18 Pick. Mass. 530. This does not apply to one not master in fact. Bee, Adm. 198. As to lien for disbursements, see 2 Curt. C. C. 427; 14 Penn. St. 34; 11 Pet. 175. He may be substituted if he discharge a lien. 1 Pet. Adm. 223; Bee, Adm. 116; 3 Mas. C. C. 255. But he has a lien on the freight for disbursements, 4 Mass. 91; 11 id. 72; 5 Wend. N. Y. 315; 18 Pick. N. Y. 530; for wages in a peculiar case, Ware, 149; and on the cargo, where it belongs to the ship-owners. 14 Me. 180. He may, therefore, detain goods against the shipper or consignee, even after payment to owner, if the master give reasonable notice. 11 Mass. 72; 5 Wend. N. Y. 315; 4 Esp. 22. But see 5 Dowl. & R. 552. The master may retain goods till a contribution bond is signed. 11 Johns. N. Y. 23; 2 Sandf. N. Y. 55; 11 Me. 150; 13 id. 357.

27. The seamen's lien for wages attaches to the ship and freight, and the proceeds of both, and follows them into whosoever hands they come, 2 Sumn. C. C. 443; 2 Parsons, Mar. L. 579; and lies against a part, or the whole, of the fund, 3 Sumn. C. C. 50, 286; but not the cargo. 5 Pet. 675. It applies to proceeds of a vessel sold under attachment of a state court. 2 Wall. C. C. 592, overruling 1 Newb. Adm. 215.

This lien of a seaman is of the nature of the privilegium of the civil law, does not depend upon possession, and takes precedence of a bottomry bond or hypothecation. 2 Parson, Mar. Law, 581, and cases cited; 15 Bost. Law Rep. 555; 16 id. 264; Ware, Dist. Ct. 134. Taking the master's order does not destroy the lien. Ware, Dist. Ct. 185. And see 2 Hagg. Adm. 136. Fishermen on shares have it, by statute. Generally, all persons serving in a way directly and materially useful to the navigation of the vessel. Gilp. Adm. 505; 2 Ventr. 181; 3 Hagg. Adm. 376; 2 Pet. Adm. 268; Ware, Dist. Ct. 83; 1 Blatchf. & H. Adm. 423; 1 Sumn. C. C. 384; 1 Ld. Raym. 397; 2 Strange, 858. A woman has it if she performs seaman's service. 1 Hagg. Adm. 187; 18 Bost. Law Rep. 672; 1 Newb. Adm. 5. It lies against ships owned by private persons, but not against government ships employed in the public service. 9 Wheat. 409; 3 Sumn. C. C. 308.

28. A ship broker, who obtains a crew, has been held to have a lien for his services and advances for their wages. 1 Blatchf. & H. Adm. 189.

Stevedores have no lien. Olcott, Adm. 120; 1 Wall. Jr. 370.

Material men have a lien by admiralty law. They are those whose trade it is to build, repair, or equip ships, or to furnish them with tackle and provisions necessary in any kind. 3 Hagg. Adm. 129. In regard to foreign ships, it has been lately held that material men have a lien on the ship only when the supplies were necessary and could be obtained only on the credit of the ship. 19 How. 359. The lien for repairs continues only as long as they retain possession, on domestic ships, Wright, Ohio, 660; 4 Wheat. 438; 1 Stor. C. C. 68; and is gone if possession is left. 14 Conn. 404; 4 Wheat, 438; 4 Wash. C. C. 453; 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, 492, n. And see § 11.

The several states of the United States are foreign to each other in this respect.

29. As to the order of precedence of these liens, see Dav. Dist. Ct. 199; Ware, Dist. Ct. 2d ed. 565; 2 Curt. C. C. 421. Admiralty formerly took jurisdiction of such liens, though not strictly maritime liens, 7 Pet. 324; 1 Wall. Jr. 358; 12 Bost. Law Rep. 183; but this jurisdiction is now questioned, 20 How. 393, if not denied. 21 id. 4, 248.

Giving credit will not be a waiver of a lien on a foreign ship, unless so given as to be inconsistent with the exercise of the lien. 7 Pet. 324; 1 Sumn. C. C. 73; 5 Sandf. N. Y. 342.

Builders' lien may be placed on the common-law ground that a workman employing skill and labor on an article has a lien upon it, 2 Rose, 91; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 341; 1 W. Rob. Adm. 1; Wright, Ohio, 660; 4 Wheat. 438; 1 Stor. C. C. 68; and a lien for the purpose of finishing the ship, where payments are made by instalments. 1 Parsons, Mar. Law. 75; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 942.

30. Collision. In case of collision the injured vessel has a lien upon the one in fault for the damage done, 1 Notes of Cases, 508; 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 62; Crabb, 580; 10 Law Rep. 264; and the lien lasts a reasonable time. 18 Bost. Law Rep. 91.

A part-owner, merely as such, has no lien whatever, but acquires such a lien when any of the elements of partnership or agency, with bailment upon which his lien may rest, enter into his relation with the other part-owners. 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, 103.

A part-owner who has advanced more than his share towards building a vessel has no lien on her for such surplus, 6 Pick. Mass. 46, and none, it is said, for advances on account of a voyage. 4 Pick. Mass. 456; 7 Bingh. 709.

That the relation of partners must exist to give the lien. 20 Johns. N. Y. 61; 4 B. Monr. Ky. 458; 8 Barnew. & C. 612; Gilp. Dist. Ct. 467; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 522; 6 Pick. Mass. 120; 5 Mann. & R. 25.

And part-owners of a ship may become partners for a particular venture. 1 Ves. Sen. Ch. 497; 3 Woodb. & M. C. C. 193; 10 Mo. 701; 9 Pick. Mass. 334. But see 14 Penn. St. 34.

31. The ship's husband, if a partner, has a partner's lien; if not, he may have a lien in the proceeds of the voyage, 8 Barnew. & C. 612; 16 Conn. 12, 23; 3 Woodb. & M. C. C. 193; or of the ship herself, if sold, or on her documents, if any of these have come into his actual possession. And the lien applies to all disbursements and liabilities for the ship. But it is doubtful if his mere office gives him a lien. 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, 100; 2 Curt. C. C. 427; 2 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 242; Cowp. 469.

32. Deposit of a bill of lading gives a lien for the amount advanced on the strength of the security. 5 Taunt. 558; 2 Wash. C. C. 283.

These liens of part-owners and by deposit of a bill of lading are not maritime liens, however, and could not be enforced in admiralty. See COLLISION; SEAMEN'S WAGES; MARSHALLING OF ASSETS; MASTER; CAPTAIN; PRIVILEGE.

33. Statutory Lien. Under this head it is convenient to consider some of those liens which subsist at common law, but have been extensively modified by statutory regulations, as well as those which subsist entirely by force of statutory regulations.

The principal liens of this class are judgment liens, and liens of material men and builders.

Judgment Lien. At common law, a judgment is a lien upon real property from the time of its rendition. Metcalf's Yelv. 67 i; Sugden, Vend. 306, 446.

In Alabama, Georgia and Indiana, a judgment is a lien; in the latter state, for ten years. 28 Ala. N. S. 328; 9 Ind. 92; 4 McLean, C. C. 555; 19 Ga. 452.

34. In Arkansas, the lien commences on delivery of execution to the officer, 12 Ark. 421; 18 id. 414; and the lien extends to after-acquired lands. 13 Ark. 74.

In California, an appeal suspends the claim. 6 Cal. 130.

In Florida, the lien attaches from the rendition of the judgment. 6 Fla. 711.

In Kentucky, the lien commences by delivery of execution to the sheriff. 4 Pet. 336; 1 Dan. Ky. 360.

In Mississippi, the law is the same as in Kentucky. 27 Miss. 480. Liens attach in the order of enrolment of the judgments, 30 Miss. 580, and apply to property liable to execution and sale only. 23 Miss. 298.

35. In Maryland, a judgment rendered by a single magistrate does not give a lien, 11 Md. 332; 8 id. 405; nor if rendered in a different county, until transferred to the county where the land is situated. 3 Md. 357.

In Missouri, all judgments rendered at the same term and in the same court must divide pro rata the amount made on execution, in case it prove insufficient to satisfy all. 21 Mo. 144.

In the New England States, there is, strictly speaking, no judgment lien, but lands are attached on mesne process, and a lien thus instituted. 2 Hill, Abr. c. 46; 28 Vt. 546; 24 id. 228. This lien covers debt and costs. 33 Me. 214. And the lien is lost unless execution is taken out within a reasonable time, 29 Vt. 198, prescribed by statute in most of the states.

36. In New Jersey, judgments are marshalled in the order in which executions issue. 2 Dutch. N. J. 570.

In New York, a judgment lien continues ten years, and binds after-acquired lands, 14 N. Y. 16, and dates from the time it is given to the officer. 5 Du. N. Y. 242. But see 2 Paine, C. C. 251.

In North Carolina, it exists, probably, if an elegit has been sued out. 2 Murph. No. C. 43.

In Ohio, the lien relates to the first day of the term, 3 McLean, C. C. 140; is restricted to the county; lasts only one year; does not bind after-acquired lands; and covers land and incidents. 20 Ohio, 401.

37. In Pennsylvania, it continues five years from the rendition of judgment, but does not per se bind after-acquired lands. 23 Penn. St. 205; 27 id. 52; 28 id. 47.

A sale under decree of court releases this lien; but no other transfer of the property affects it. 22 Penn. St. 406; Sergeant, Mech. Lien.

In South Carolina and Tennessee, a judgment is a lien. 1 Sneed, Tenn. 297; 11 How. 348; 6 Rich. So. C. 513.

In Virginia, 9 Gratt. Va. 131, judgments obtained at the same time divide the proceeds pro rata, if there is not enough to satisfy all, 2 Patt. & H. 11; otherwise, they are to be satisfied in the order of their date. 12 Gratt. Va. 401.

A judgment is sometimes, but more rarely, a lien upon personal property.

38. In Georgia, it re-attaches if the property has been removed from the state and then brought back. 7 Ga. 356.

In Maryland, issuing a fi. fa. gives the creditor a lien from the time of putting the execution into the officer's hands. 3 Md. 99.

In North Carolina, 8 Ired. No. C. 63.

In South Carolina, 5 Strobh. So. C. 149.

In Tennessee, on property held between the teste and the execution. 2 Swan, Tenn. 292.

And see 2 Hill, Abr. c. 46.

39. Mechanics and Material Men have, in many of the states, a lien upon the buildings which they have repaired or constructed, which, being in the nature, generally, of the civil law privilegium, do not require possession, commence with the commencement of the work, and continue a limited time. They exist

In Arkansas; and are subordinate to a judgment lien. 8 Ark. 231.

In California; for builders and material men. 2 Cal. 60, 489.

In Connecticut, the contract must have been made with the owner, and only the contracting party can take advantage of the lien. 23 Conn. 544.

In Illinois, for the benefit of the builder and material men who furnish labor or goods under a contract with the land-owners, 12 Ill. 300; 15 id. 189, 556; 17 id. 423; the lien is subordinate to a mortgage title. 17 Ill. 423.

In Indiana, in favor of builders and material men; and a wife may join with her husband in the contract, and so subject her land to the lien. 7 Ind. 125. The builder must file notice of his intention. 8 Blackf. Ind. 252.

In Iowa. 2 Greene, Iowa, 435, 513.

40. In Kentucky, for work and labor. 13 B. Monr. Ky. 411; 16 id. 605.

In Maine, 34 Me. 198, if the contract is made with the land-owner. 35 Me. 291. As to precedence, 28 Me. 511.

In Maryland, a copy of the claim must have been filed. 6 Gill, Md. 17.

The materials must have been furnished under a contract with the land-owner. 5 Md. 419; 3 id. 234.

In Massachusetts, the contract must have been with the land-owner. 1 Gray, Mass. 576; 3 id. 233. Suit must be brought within six months. 4 Cush. Mass. 532. Wife cannot join in the contract and bind her land. 13 Metc. Mass. 149.

41. In Mississippi, the lien commences at the commencement of the work. 26 Miss. 650. The contract must have been with the land-owner. 26 Miss. 125; 27 id. 40. No lien for mere repairs. 16 Miss. 754.

In Michigan, affects only the rights of those for whom the work was done. 2 Dougl. Mich. 54.

In Missouri, the lien is preferred to previous or subsequent incumbrances. 21 Mo. 213.

In New Jersey, 2 Zabr. N. J. 387; 1 Halst. Ch. N. J. 485, specifications must be filed to exempt the building from the lien. 1 Dutch. N. J. 474.

In New York, contract must have been made with the land-owner, 13 N. Y. 70; and see 21 Barb. N. Y. 520; or notice must have been given. 2 E. D. Smith, N. Y. 689.

In Ohio, the contract need not have been with the owner of the fee. 2 Ohio, 114. Material may have been used elsewhere, if furnished in good faith. 6 Ohio, 247.

42. In Pennsylvania, the work must have been done under contract, and the claim filed within six months from the completion of the work. 19 Penn. St. 341; 20 id. 319, 519.

In Tennessee, must be taken advantage of in reasonable time. 6 Humphr. Tenn. 268. Citizens of other states may have the lien. 2 Swan, Tenn. 130, 313.

In Texas, work must have been done under express contract. 11 Tex. 20.

Remedy is by scire facias, in some states, 14 Ark. 370; 1 Dutch. N. J. 317; 14 Tex. 37; 22 Mo. 140; 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 186; 14 How. 434; 12 Penn. St. 45; by petition, in others. 11 Cush. Mass. 308; 4 Wisc. 451; 14 Ala. N. S. 33; 11 Ill. 519; 1 Iowa, 75. Judgment, when obtained, has the effect of a common-law judgment. 3 Wisc. 9.

Many of the states have made full provisions, by statute, for the liens of repairers of domestic ships and builders of ships and steamboats. These liens are generally held to be distinct from maritime liens, though in some respects partaking of the nature of such. For a full discussion of this subject, and a classification of the laws of the different states, see 1 Parsons, Marit. Law, 106, and note.

LIEUTENANT. This word has now a narrower meaning than it formerly had: its true meaning is a deputy, a substitute, from the French lieu (place or post) and tenant (holder). Among civil officers we have lieutenant-governors, who in certain cases perform the duties of governors (see the names of the several states), lieutenants of police, etc. Among military men, lieutenant-general was formerly the title of a commanding general, but now it signifies the degree above major-general. Lieutenant-colonel is the officer between the colonel and the major. Lieutenant, simply, signifies the officer next below a captain. In the navy, a lieutenant is the second officer next in command to the captain of a ship.

LIFE. "The sum of the forces by which death is resisted." Bichat.

A state in which energy of function is ever resisting decay and dissolution.

2. It commences, for many legal purposes, at the period of quickening, when the first motion of the fœtus in utero is perceived by the mother. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 129; Coke, 3d Inst. 50. It ceases at death. See DEATH.

But physiology pronounces life as existing from the period of conception, because fœtuses in utero do die prior to quickening, and then all the signs of death are found to be perfect. Dean, Med. Jur. 129, 130.

3. For many important purposes, however, the law concedes to physiology the fact that life commences at conception, in ventre sa mère. See FŒTUS. Thus, it may receive a legacy, have a guardian assigned to it, and an estate limited to its use. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 130. It is thus considered as alive for all beneficial purposes. 1 P. Will. 329.

But for the transfer of civil rights the child must be born alive. The ascertainment of this, as a fact, depends upon certain signs which are always attendant upon life: the most important of these is crying. As to conditions of live birth, see BIRTH; INFANTICIDE.

Life is presumed to continue for one hundred years. 9 Mart. La. 257.

The law considers life of the utmost importance, and its most anxious care is to guard and protect it. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 202.

LIFE-ANNUITY. An annual income to be paid during the continuance of a particular life. See ANNUITY.

LIFE-ASSURANCE. An insurance of a life upon the payment of a premium: this may be for the whole life, or for a limited time. On the death of the person whose life has been insured during the time for which it is insured, the insurer is bound to pay to the insured the money agreed upon. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1231; ASSURANCE; POLICY; Loss.

LIFE-RENT. In Scotch Law. A right to use and enjoy a thing during life, the substance of it being preserved.

A life-rent cannot, therefore, be constituted upon things which perish in the use; and though it may upon subjects which gradually wear out by time, as household furniture, etc., yet it is generally applied to heritable subjects. Life-rents are divided into conventional and legal.

The conventional are either simple or by reservation. A simple life-rent, or by a separate constitution, is that which is granted by the proprietor in favor of another. A life-rent by reservation is that which a proprietor reserves to himself in the same writing by which he conveys the fee to another. Life-rents by law are the terce and the courtesy. See TERCE; COURTESY.

LIFE-RENTER. In Scotch Law. A tenant for life without waste. Bell, Dict.

LIGAN, LAGAN. Goods cast into the sea tied to a buoy, so that they may be found again by the owners, are so denominated. When goods are cast into the sea in storms or shipwrecks, and remain there, without coming to land, they are distinguished by the barbarous names of jetsam, flotsam, and ligan. 5 Coke, 108; Hargrave, St. Tr. 48; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 292.

LIGEANCE. The true and faithful obedience of a subject to his sovereign, of a citizen to his government. It signifies, also, the territory of a sovereign. See ALLEGIANCE.

LIGHTERMAN. The owner or manager of a lighter. A lighterman is considered as a common carrier. See LIGHTERS.

LIGHTERS. Small vessels employed in loading and unloading larger vessels.

The owners of lighters are liable like other common carriers for hire. It is a term of the contract on the part of the carrier or lighterman, implied by law, that his vessel is tight and fit for the purpose or employments for which he offers and holds it forth to the public; it is the immediate foundation and substratum of the contract that it is so: the law presumes a promise to that effect on the part of the carrier, without actual proof; and every principle of sound policy and public convenience requires it should be so. 5 East, 428; Abbott. Shipp. 225; 1 Marshall, Ins. 254; Park, Ins. 23; Weskett, Ins. 328; Parsons, Marit. Law.

LIGHTS. Those openings in a wall which are made rather for the admission of light than to look out of. 6 J. B. Moore, 47; 9 Bingh. 305. See ANCIENT LIGHTS.

Lamps carried on board vessels, under statutory regulations or otherwise, for the purpose of preventing collisions at night. See NAVIGATION RULES.

Lamps or lights placed in lighthouses, or other conspicuous positions, as aids to navigation at night. See NAVIGATION RULES.

LIMITATIONS.—Of Civil Remedies. In general, by the theory and early practice of the common law, a party who had any legal ground of complaint against another might call the latter to answer in court at such time as suited his convenience. This privilege, however, it was soon found, might be productive of great inconvenience, and not unfrequently of great injustice. Parties might, and often did, wait till witnesses were dead or papers destroyed, and then proceeded to enforce claims to which at an earlier date a successful defence might have been made. Titles were thus rendered uncertain, the tenure of property insecure, and litigation fostered. To prevent these evils, statutes were passed limiting the time within which a party having a cause of action should appeal to the courts for redress,—hence called statutes of limitation. The doctrine of fines, of very great antiquity in the history of the common law, the purpose of which was to put an end to controversies, grew out of the efforts to obviate these evils, and frequent attempts, prior to the accession of James I., by statutes of restricted application, were made to the same end. But till the reign of that prince no general enactment applicable alike to personal and real actions had been passed.

2. In the year 1623, however, by stat. 21 Jac. I. c. 16, entitled "An Act for Limitation of Actions, and for avoiding of Suits at Law," known and celebrated ever since as the Statute of Limitations, the law upon this subject was comprehensively declared substantially as it exists at the present day in England, whence our ancestors brought it with them to this country; and it has passed, with some modifications, into the statute-books of every state in the Union except Louisiana, whose laws of limitation are essentially the Prescriptions of the civil law, drawn from the Partidas, or Spanish Code.

3. The similarity between the statutes of the several states and those of England is such that the decisions of the British courts and those of this country are for the most part illustrative of all, and will be cited indiscriminately in this brief summary of the law as it now stands. 5 Barnew. & Ald. 204; 4 Johns. N. Y. 317. One preliminary question, however, has arisen in this country, growing out of the provision of the national constitution prohibiting states from passing laws impairing the obligation of contracts, for which there is no English precedent. Upon this point the settled doctrine is that unless the law bars a right of action already accrued without giving a reasonable time within which to bring an action, it pertains to the remedy merely, and is valid. 4 Wheat.

122; 12 id. 349; 6 How. 550; 14 N. Y. 16; 5 Metc. Mass. 168; 2 All. Mass. 436. Subject to this qualification, a law may extend or reduce the time already limited. But a cause of action already barred by pre-existing statutes will not be revived by a statute extending the time, 5 Metc. Mass. 400; 7 Penn. St. 292; 25 Vt. 41; 8 Blackf. Ind. 506; though if it be not already barred a statute extending the time will apply. 1 T. L. Smith, Ind. 8.

4. Courts of equity, though not within the terms of the statute, have nevertheless been uniformly regarded as within its spirit, and have, as a general rule, been governed by its provisions, unless special circumstances, where there has been no laches, in the interests of justice, require that they should be disregarded. 2 Schoales & L. Ir. Ch. 329, 630; 12 Pet. 56; 7 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 90; 2 Den. N. Y. 577; 9 Pick. Mass. 1; 3 All. Mass. 42. And in some cases when claims are not barred by the statute of limitations, a court of equity will refuse to interfere, on grounds of public policy, and the difficulty of doing entire justice between the parties when the original transaction may have become obscure by the lapse of time and the evidence lost, 1 Dav. Dist. Ct. 252; 1 Jones, No. C. Eq. 18; though a lapse of time short of that of the statute of limitations will not be held a bar without strong reasons. 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 90.

5. But in a proper case, as where there is fraud undiscovered till the statute has become a bar, or it is the fault and wrong of the defendant that the plaintiff did not enforce his legal rights within the limited time, courts of equity will not hesitate to interfere in the interest of justice, and entertain suits long since barred at law. 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 522; 4 How. 503; 2 Schoales & L. Ir. Ch. 630; 8 Ves. Ch. 73; 2 Sim. Ch. 340. But here, again, courts of equity will proceed with great caution, 7 How. 819; and hold the complainant to allegation and proof of his ignorance of the fraud and when and how it was discovered. 1 Curt. C. C. 390. Subject to these conditions, a claim forty years old for services was sustained against a defendant who had obtained them by falsely representing to the person who rendered them that he was a slave. 12 Penn. St. 49.

6. And courts of admiralty are governed by substantially the same rules as courts of equity. 3 Mas. C. C. 95; 2 Sumn. C. C. 212. And although the statute does not apply in terms to probate courts, there seems to be no reason why the statute of limitations should not be applied according to the principles of equity. 1 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 1.

AS TO PERSONAL ACTIONS.

It is generally provided that personal actions shall be brought within a certain specified time—usually six years or less—from the time when the cause of action accrues, and not after; and hereupon, whether the limitation be one or twenty years (the latter being the limit applicable to personal actions not otherwise specially limited), the question at once arises when the cause of action in each particular case accrues.

7. Cause of action accrues when. The rule that the cause of action accrues when and so soon as there is a right to apply to the court for relief by no means solves the difficulty. When does the right itself so to apply accrue? Upon this point the decisions are so numerous and so conflicting, or perhaps, more accurately speaking, so controlled by particular circumstances, that no inflexible rule can be extracted therefrom. In general, it may be said that in actions of contract the cause of action accrues when there is a breach of the contract. 3 Barnew. & Ald. 288; 3 Johns. N. Y. 137.

8. When a note (except bank-notes, 2 Sneed, Tenn. 482) is payable on demand, the statute begins to run from its date, 2 Mees. & W. Exch. 467; 9 Pick. Mass. 488; and if there is no date, then from the delivery, 1 Harr. & G. Md. 439; and the rule is the same if the note is payable "at any time within six years," 39 Me. 492; or borrowed money is to be paid "when called on." 1 Harr. & G. Md. 439. If the note be payable in certain days after demand, sight, or notice, the statute begins to run from the demand, sight, or notice, 13 Wend. N. Y. 267; 2 Taunt. 323; 4 Mas. C. C. 336; but the demand itself should be made within the time limited for bringing the action on the note; else a note limited to six years might be kept open indefinitely by a failure to make a demand. 10 Pick. Mass. 120. And when the note is on interest, this does not become barred by the statutes till the principal, or some distinct portion of it, becomes barred. 2 Cush. Mass. 92; 1 Hall, N. Y. 314. If the note be entitled to grace, the statute runs from the last day of grace. 11 Me. 412.

9. Where money is paid by mistake, the statute begins to run from the time of payment, 9 Cow. N. Y. 674; also in case of usury, 6 Ga. 228, or where paid for another as surety. 6 Cow. N. Y. 225. If money is payable by instalments, the statute runs against each instalment as it becomes due. 20 Me. 400, unless it is agreed that upon default the whole shall become due. 3 Gale & D. Exch. 402.

Where a contract takes effect upon some condition or contingency, or the happening of some event, the statute runs from the performance of the condition, 5 Pick. Mass. 384, or the happening of the contingency or event, 3 Penn. St. 149, and not from the date of the contract. On an agreement to devise, the statute runs from the death of the promissor. 9 Penn. St. 260. When money is paid, and there is afterwards a failure of consideration, the statute runs from the failure. 14 Mass. 425.

10. Where continuous services are rendered, as by an attorney in the conduct of a suit, 1 Barnew. & Ad. 15, or by a mechanic in doing a job, 16 Ill. 341, the statute begins to run from the completion of the service. On a promise of indemnity, when the promissee pays money or is damnified, the statute begins to run. 12 Metc. Mass. 130. In cases of negligence, carelessness, unskilfulness, and the like, the statute runs from the time when these happen respectively, and not from the time when damages accrue therefrom, 4 Pet. 172; and so, generally, in cases of tort when the wrong is done or the right is invaded. 8 East, 4; 10 Wend. N. Y. 260; 24 Penn. St. 186. Thus, where an attorney negligently invests money in a poor security, the statute runs from the investment, 2 Brod. & B. 73; so, where a party neglected to remove goods from a warehouse, whereby the plaintiff was obliged to pay damages, the statute runs from the neglect, and not from the payment of damages, 3 Johns. N. Y. 137; so, where the defendant agreed to go into another state and collect some money, and on his return to pay off a certain judgment, the statute was held to run from the return. 3 Ired. No. C. 481.

11. The breach of the contract is the gist of the action, and not the damages resulting therefrom. 5 Barnew. & C. 259; 1 Sandf. N. Y. 98; 6 Ohio, 276. Thus, where the defendant had contracted to sell the plaintiff a quantity of salt, but was unable, by reason of the destruction of the salt, to deliver on demand, and prolonged negotiations for settlement till the statutory limitation had expired, and then refused, the statute was held to run from the demand, the non-delivery being a breach of the contract. 1 Eng. L. & Eq. 44. So, where a notary public neglects to give seasonable notice of non-payment of a note, and the bank employing him was held responsible for the failure, upon suit brought by the bank against the notary to recover the damages it had been obliged to pay, the action was held to be barred, it not being within six years of the notary's default, though within six years of the time when the bank was required to pay damages. 6 Cow. N. Y. 278.

12. So, where an attorney makes a mistake in a writ, whereupon, after prolonged litigation, nonsuit follows, but not till an action against the indorser on the note originally sued has become barred, the mistake was held to set the statute in motion. 4 Pet. 172; 4 Ala. 495. A captain who barratrously loses his vessel is freed from his liability to the underwriter in six years after the last act in the barratrous proceeding. 1 Campb. 539. Directors of a bank liable by statute for mismanagement are discharged in six years after the insolvency of the bank is made known. 16 Mass. 68.

13. If a sheriff make an insufficient return, and there is in consequence a reversal of judgment, the statute runs from the return, and not from the reversal of judgment. 16 Mass. 456. So where a sheriff collects money and makes due return but fails to pay over, the statute runs from the return, 11 Ala. 679, or from the demand by the creditor. 10 Metc. Mass. 244. If he suffers an escape, it runs from the escape, 2 Mod. 222; if he takes insufficient bail, from the return of non est inventus upon execution against the principal debtor, 17 Mass. 60; 20 Me. 93; if he receive money in scire facias, from its reception, 9 Ga. 413; if he neglects to attach sufficient property, on the return of the writ, and not from the time when the insufficiency of the property is ascertained. 27 Me. 443.

14. In cases of nuisance, the statute begins to run from the injury to the right, without reference to the question of the amount of the damage, the law holding the violation of a right as some damage. 8 East, 4. And so when a party having a right to use land for a specific purpose puts it to other uses, or wrongfully disposes of property rightfully in possession, the statute begins to run from the perversion. 24 Penn. St. 186; 15 Mass. 82. In trover, the statute runs from the conversion, 7 Mod. 99; 4 Harr. & J. Md. 393; in replevin, from the unlawful taking or detention. The limitation in the statute of James of actions for slander to two years next after the words spoken, applies only to cases where the words are actionable in themselves. 1 Salk. 206.

15. Adverse possession of personal property gives title in six years after the possession becomes adverse. 16 Vt. 124; 1 Brev. So. C. 111; 16 Ala. N. S. 696; 9 Tex. 123. But different adverse possessions cannot be linked together to give title. 3 Strobh. So. C. 31; 1 Swann, Tenn. 501. The statute acts upon the title, and, when the bar is perfect, transfers the property to the adverse possessor; while in contracts for the payment there is no such thing as adverse possession, but the statute simply affects the remedy, and not the debt. 18 Ala. N. S. 248.

16. Computation of time. In computing the time limited, much discussion has been had in the courts whether the day when the statute begins to run is to be included or excluded, but without any satisfactory result. It is most generally held that when the computation is from an act done, or the happening of an event, the day upon which the act is done, or event happens, is to be included, and when it is from the date, the day of the date is excluded. 9 Cranch, 120; 9 N. H. 304 This rule, however, of including the day upon which an act is done, is subject to so many exceptions and qualifications that it can hardly be said to be a rule, and the cases are wholly irreconcilable with it. It has been well said that whether the day upon which an act is done or an event happens is to be included or excluded, depends upon the circumstances and reason of the thing, so that the intention of the parties may be effected; and such a construction should be given as will operate most to the ease of the party entitled to favor, and by which rights will be secured and forfeitures avoided. 1 Tex. 107. Fractions of a day are not regarded, unless it becomes necessary in a question of priority, 8 Ves. Ch. 83; 9 Eng. L. & Eq. 457; 3 Den. N. Y. 12; 6 Gray, Mass. 316; and then only in questions concerning private acts and transactions. 20 Vt. 653.

17. Exceptions to general rule. If, when the right of action would otherwise accrue and the statute begin to run, there is no person who can exercise the right, the statute does not begin to run till there is such a person. Thus, if a note matures after the decease of the promissee, and prior to the issue of letters of administration, the statute runs from the date of the letters of administration, unless otherwise specified in the statute, 5 Barnew. & Ald. 204; 13 Wend. N. Y. 216; 9 Leigh, Va. 79; 11 Metc. Mass. 445; 15 Conn. 145; in Missouri, from the date of notice that letters of administration have issued, 9 Mo. 262. But if the statute begins to run before the death of the testator or intestate, it is not interrupted by his death, 4 Mees. & W. Exch. 42; 3 Mylne & C. Ch. 455; 4 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 733; 18 Miss. 100; nor by the death of the administrator, 17 Ala. N. S. 291; nor by his removal from the state. 15 Ala. N. S. 545.

18. And the courts will not recognize exemptions, where the statute has once begun to run, because they are within the equity and reason of the statute, if they are not within its letter. Thus, an insolvent's discharge as effectually removes him from pursuit by his creditor as absence from the state; but it is not an exception within the statute, and cannot avail. 1 Whart. Penn. 106; 1 Cow. N. Y. 356; 6 Gray, Mass. 517. A creditor's absence makes it inconvenient for him to return and sue; but he may so do, and he must, or be barred. 17 Ves. Ch. 38; 1 Wils. Ch. 134; 1 Johns. N. Y. 165. And it has ever been held that a statutory impediment to the assertion of title will not help the party so impeded, 2 Wheat. 25; nor even a state of war, which closes the courts. 2 Salk. 420.

19. There are many authorities, however, to show that if, by the interposition of courts, or the provisions of a statute, a person cannot be sued for a limited time, the currency of the statute is suspended during that period. In other words, if the law interposes to prevent suit, it will see to it that he who has a right of action shall not be prejudiced thereby. 10 Gill & J. Md. 246; 4 Md. Ch. Dec. 368; 5 Ga. 66; 3 McLean, C. C. 568; 12 Wheat. 129; 2 Den. N. Y. 577; 20 How. 128. Thus, an injunction suspends the statute. 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 182; 12 Gratt. Va. 579; 2 Stockt. N. J. 347; 10 Humphr. Tenn. And so does an assignment of an insolvent's effects, as between the estate and the creditors, 7 Metc. Mass. 435; 1 Cush. Mass. 461; 12 La. Ann. 216; though not, as has just been said, as between the debtor and his creditor. 6 Gray, Mass. 517.

20. But when the statute does not in terms exclude and limit a particular case, the court will not extend it, although the case comes within the reason of the statute. Thus, in Illinois, where the action of debt will lie wherever indebitatus assumpsit will, and justices of the peace have jurisdiction of both actions, the summons being the same in both forms of action, if the statute of limitations is pleaded the law will presume that to be the particular form which is best calculated to advance the plaintiff's remedy. 9 Ill. 193. So the Alabama act, which permits an action to be commenced within a year after the reversal of a previous judgment, was held, in favor of the plaintiff, to apply to a case when, by the action of an inferior court, the cause was discontinued as to two of the defendants, and thus caused a reversal of the judgment as to the other defendant, although not within the letter of the statute. 11 Ala. N. S. 356.

21. By the special provisions of the statute, infants, married women, persons non compos mentis, those imprisoned, and those beyond seas, out of the state, out of the realm, or out of the country, are regarded as affected by the incapacity to sue, or, in other words, as being under disability, and have, therefore, the right of action secured to them until the expiration of the time limited, after the removal of the disability. These personal exceptions have been strictly construed, and the party alleging the disability has been very uniformly held to bring himself exactly within the express words of the statute to entitle himself to the benefit of the exception. To bring himself within the spirit or supposed reason of the exception is not enough. 1 Cow. N. Y. 356; 3 Green, N. J. 171; 2 Curt. C. C. 480; 17 Ves. Ch. 87. And this privilege is accorded although the person laboring under the statute disability might in fact bring suit. Thus, an infant may sue before he arrives at his majority, but he is not obliged to, and his right is saved if he does not. 2 Saund. 117. The disability must, however, be continuous and identical. One disability cannot be superadded to another so as to prolong the time, and if the statute once begins to run, whether before a disability exists or after it has been removed, no intervention of another and subsequent disability can stop it. 1 Wils. Ch. 134; 2 M'Cord, So. C. 269; 1 Johns. N. Y. 165. When, however, there are two or more coexisting disabilities at the time the right of action accrues, suit need not be brought till all are removed. 1 Atk. Ch. 610; 12 Me. 397; 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 129.

22. Beyond seas means without the jurisdiction of the state or government in which the question arises. 1 Show. 91; 3 Cranch, 174; 3 Wheat. 341; 1 Harr. & M'H. Md.; 14 Pet. 41; 2 M'Cord, So. C. 331; 13 N. H. 79. In Pennsylvania and Missouri, however, and perhaps other states, contrary to the very uniform current of authorities, beyond seas is held to mean out of the limits of the United States. 2 Dall. Penn. 217; 13 Mo. 216. And the United States courts adopt and follow the decisions of the respective states upon the interpretation of their respective laws. 2 How. 76; 12 Pet. 32. What constitutes absence out of the state within the meaning of the statute, is wholly undeterminable by any rule to be drawn from the decisions. It seems to be agreed that temporary absence is not enough; but what is a temporary absence is by no means agreed.

23. The word return, as applied to an absent debtor, applies as well to foreigners, or residents out of the state coming to the state, as to citizens of the state who have gone abroad and have returned. 3 Johns. N. Y. 267; 11 Pick. Mass. 36. And in order to set the statute in motion the return must be open, public, and such and under such circumstances as will give a party, who exercises ordinary diligence, an opportunity to bring his action. 10 Johns. N. Y. 264; 1 Pick. Mass. 263; 3 Gill & J. Md. 158. Such a return, though temporary, will be sufficient. 8 Cranch, U. S. 179. But if the return is such and under such circumstances as to show that the party does not intend that his creditor shall take advantage of his presence, or such, in fact, that he cannot without extraordinary vigilance avail himself of it,—if it is secret, concealed, or clandestine,—it is insufficient. The absence of one of several joint-plaintiffs does not prevent the running of the statute, 4 Term, 516; but the absence of one of several joint-defendants does. 29 Eng. L. & Eq. 271. This at least seems to be the settled law of England; but the cases in the several states of the Union are conflicting upon these points.

25. If the writ or process seasonably issued fail of a sufficient service or return by any unavoidable accident, or by any default or neglect of the officer to whom it is committed, or is abated, or the action is otherwise avoided by the death of any party thereto, or for any matter of form, or judgment for plaintiff be arrested or reversed, the plaintiff may commence a new action within a reasonable time; and that reasonable time is usually fixed by the statute at one year, and by the courts in the absence of statutory provision, at the same period. 10 Wend. N. Y. 276. Irregularity of the mail is an inevitable accident within the meaning of the statute. 8 Me. 497. And so is a failure of service by reason of the removal of the defendant, without the knowledge of the plaintiff, from the county in which he had resided and to which the writ was seasonably sent. 12 Metc. Mass. 15. But a mistake of the attorney as to time of the sitting of the court, and consequent failure to enter, is not. 29 Me. 458. An abatement by the marriage of the female plaintiff is no abatement within the statute; it is rather a voluntary abandonment. 8 Cranch, 84. And so, generally, of any act of the party or his attorney whereby the suit is abated or the action fails. 3 M'Cord, So. C. 452; 29 Me. 458; 1 Mich. 252; 6 Cush. Mass. 417.

26. A nonsuit is in some states held to be within the equity of the statute, 13 Ired. No. C. 123; 4 Ohio St. 172; 12 La. Ann. 672; but generally otherwise. 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 236; 3 M'Cord, So. C. 452; 3 Harr. N. J. 269. If there are two defendants, and by reason of a failure of service upon one an alias writ is taken out, this is no continuance, but a new action, and the statute is a bar. 6 Watts, Penn. 528. So of amending bill introducing new parties. 6 Pet. 61. A dismissal of the action because of the clerk's omission to seasonably enter it on the docket is for matter of form, 7 Gray, Mass. 165; and so is a dismissal for want of jurisdiction, where the action is brought in the wrong county. 1 Gray, Mass. 580. In Maine, however, a wrong venue is not matter of form. 38 Me. 217. The statute is a bar to an action at law after a dismissal from chancery for want of jurisdiction. 16 Wend. N. Y. 572; 1 Atk. Ch. 1; 2 Munf. Va. 181; 18 Ala. N. S. 307.

27. Lex fori governs. Questions under the statute are to be decided by the law of the place where the action is brought, and not by the law of the place where the contract is made or the wrong done. If the statute has run against a claim in one state, the remedy is gone, but the right is not extinguished; and therefore the right may be enforced in another state where the remedy is still open, the time limited by the statute not having expired. 15 East, 439; 2 Mas. C. C. 159; 9 How. 407; 11 Pick. Mass. 36. So if the statute of the place of the contract is still unexpired, yet an action brought in another place is governed by the lex fori, and may be barred. 1 Caines, N. Y. 402. But statutes giving title by adverse possession are to be distinguished from statutes of limitation. Adverse possession gives title; lapse of time bars the remedy only. And a right acquired by adverse possession in the place where the adverse possession is had is good elsewhere. 11 Wheat. 361; 9 How. 407; 5 Ala. N. S. 108; 16 Ark. 384.

28. Public rights not affected. Statutes of limitation do not run against the state or the United States, unless it is expressly so provided in the statute itself. No laches is to be imputed to the government. 18 Johns. N. Y. 228; 4 Mass. 526. But this principle has no application when a party seeks his private rights in the name of the state. Counties, towns, and municipal bodies not possessed of the attributes of sovereignty have no exemption. 4 Dev. No. C. 568; 22 Me. 445; 12 Ill. 38. If, however, the sovereign becomes a party in a private enterprise, as, for instance, a stockholder in a bank, he subjects himself to the operation of the statute. 3 Pet. 30.

29. Particular classes of actions. Actions of trespass, trespass quare clausum, detinue, account, trover, replevin, and upon the case (except actions for slander), and action of debt for arrearages of rent, and of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty, or simple contract debt, are usually limited to six years. Actions for slander, libel, assault, and the like, are usually limited to a less time, generally two years. Judgment of courts not of record, as courts of justices of the peace, and county commissioners' courts, are in some states, either by statute or the decisions of the highest courts, included in the category of debts founded on contract without specialty. 13 Metc. Mass. 251; 2 Bail. So. C. 58; 37 Me. 29. In others, however, they are excluded upon the ground that the statute applies only to debts founded on contracts in fact, and not to debts founded on contracts implied by law. 14 Johns. N. Y. 480.

30. Action of assumpsit, though not specifically named in the original statute of James I. as included within the limitation of six years, were held in England, after much discussion, to be fairly embraced in actions of "trespass." 4 Ad. & E. 912. The same rule has been adopted in this country, 5 Ohio, 444; 3 Pet. 270; 1 Morr. Iowa, 59; and, in fact, assumpsit is expressly included in most of the statutes. And it has also been held in this country that statutes of limitation apply as well to motions made under a statute as to actions. 11 Humphr. Tenn. 423. Such statutes are in aid of the common law, and furnish a general rule for cases that are analogous in their subject-matter, but for which a remedy unknown to the common law has been provided by statutes; as where compensation is sought for land taken for a railroad. 23 Penn. St. 371.

31. A set-off cannot usually be pleaded in bar, 5 East, 16; 3 Johns. N. Y. 261; though when there are cross-demands accruing at nearly the same time, and the plaintiff has saved the statute by suing out process, the defendant will be allowed to set off his demand, 2 Esp. 569; and, generally, when there is any equitable matter of defence in the nature of set-off, or which might be the subject of a cross-action, growing out of the subject-matter for which the action is brought, courts will permit it to be set up although a cross-action or an action on the claim in set-off might be barred by the statute. 8 Rich. So. C. 113; 9 Ga. 398; 11 Eng. L. & Eq. 10; 2 Green, N. J. 545; 8 B. Monr. Ky. 580. A lien is not lost though an action to recover on the debt or obligation secured by the pledge may be barred. 3 Esp. 81; 2 Barnew. & Ad. 413; 19 Pick. Mass. 535.

32. Debts by specialty, as contracts under seal, judgments of courts of record (except foreign judgments, and judgments of courts out of the state, upon which the decisions are very discordant), liabilities imposed by statute, awards under seal, or where the submission is under seal, indentures reserving rent, and actions for legacies, are affected only by the general limitation of twenty years. A mortgage, though under seal, does not take the note, not witnessed, secured thereby, with it, out of the limitation of simple contracts. 7 Wend. N. Y. 94. And though liabilities imposed by statute are specialties, a liability under a by-law made by virtue of a charter is not, 6 Eng. L. & Eq. 309; on the ground that by becoming a member of the company enacting the by-laws the party consents and agrees to assume the liabilities imposed thereby.

33. An action brought by the payee of a witnessed promissory note, his executor or administrator, is in some states excepted from the limitation of simple contracts, and is only barred by the lapse of twenty years. But the indorsee of such a note must sue within six years from the time of the transfer to him, 4 Pick. Mass. 384; though he may sue after that time in the name of the payee, with his consent. 4 Cush. Mass. 176. If there are two promissees to the note, and the signature of only one is witnessed, the note as to the other is not a witnessed note. 4 Metc. Mass. 406; 18 Shep. Me. 49. And the attestation of the witness must be with the knowledge and consent of the maker of the note. 8 Pick. Mass. 246; 1 Mas. Vt. 26. An attested indorsement signed by the promissee, acknowledging the note to be due, is not a witnessed note, 23 Pick. Mass. 282; but the same acknowledgment for value received, with a promise to pay the note, is. 1 Metc. Mass. 21. If the note be payable to the maker's own order, witnessed and indorsed by the maker in blank, the indorsement being without attestation, an action by the first indorsee is barred in six years. 4 Metc. Mass. 219. And even if the indorsement be attested, a second indorsee or holder by delivery, not being the original payee, is barred. 13 Metc. Mass. 128.

34. Statute bar avoided, when. Trusts in general are not within the operation of the statute, where they are direct and exclusively within the jurisdiction of a court of equity, and the question arises between the trustees and the cestui que trust. 7 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 90; 1 Watts, Penn. 275. And of this character are the trusts of executors, administrators, guardians, assignees of insolvents, and the like. The claim or title of such trustees is that of the cestui que trust. 2 Schoales & L. Ir. Ch. 607. Special limitations to actions at law are made in some states in favor of executors and administrators, modifying or abrogating the rule in equity; and as these laws are made in the interest of the trust funds, it is the duty of the executor or administrator to plead the special statute which applies to him as such and protects the estate he represents, though he is not bound to plead the general statute. 13 Mass. 203; 3 N. H. 491; 15 id. 58.

35. If, however, the trustee deny the right of his cestui que trust, and claim adversely to him, and these facts come to the knowledge of the cestui que trust, the statute will begin to run from the time when the facts become known. 3 Sumn. C. C. 466. But trusts cognizable at law are subject to the operation of the statute, including implied trusts generally. 6 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 110; 9 Pick. Mass. 242; 17 Ves. Ch. 95; 1 Watts & S. Penn. 112; 7 Blackf. Ind. 86; 7 B. Monr. Ky. 556; 7 S. & M. Miss. 219; 4 Ired. No. C. 1; 3 Gratt. Va. 373.

36. Principal and agent. The relation of an agent to his principal is a fiduciary one, and the statute does not begin to run so long as there is no breach of the trust or duty. When, however, there is such a breach, and the principal has knowledge of it, the statute will begin to run. 2 Gill & J. Md. 389; 10 Johns. N. Y. 285; 6 Cow. N. Y. 376. In many cases, a lawful demand upon the agent to perform his duty, and neglect or refusal to comply, are necessary to constitute a breach. As when money is placed in the hands of an agent with which to purchase property, and the agent neglects to make the purchase, there must be a demand for the money before the statute will begin to run, 5 Ired. No. C. 507; so where property is placed in the hands of an agent to be sold, and he neglects to sell. 2 Gill & J. Md. 389. If, however, the agent's conduct is such as to amount to a declaration on his part that he will not perform his duty, or if he has disabled himself from performing it, it is tantamount to a repudiation of the trust, or an adverse claim against the cestui que trust, and the same consequences follow. No demand is necessary: the right of action accrues at once upon the declaration, and the statute then begins to run. 10 Gill & J. Md. 422; 1 Rand. Va. 284.

37. But where a demand is necessary, it should itself be made within the limited time; otherwise an agent might be subject all his lifetime to demands, however stale, 15 Wend. N. Y. 302; 17 Mass. 145; unless the agent, by his own act, prevents a demand. 6 Cush. Mass. 501. The rendering an untrue account by a collection or other agent would seem to be such a breach of duty as to warrant an action without demand, and would therefore set the statute in motion. 17 Mass. 145. If the custom of trade or the law makes it the clear duty of an agent to pay over money collected without a demand, then if the principal has notice the statute begins to run from the time of collection; and when there is no such custom or law, if the agent having funds collected gives notice to his principal, the statute will begin to run after the lapse of a reasonable time within which to make the demand, though no demand be made. 4 Sandf. N. Y. 355.

38. In equity, fraud practised upon the plaintiff so that the fact of his right to sue does not come to his knowledge till after the expiration of the statute of limitations, is held to open the case so that he may bring his action within the time limited, dating from the discovery of the fraud. But herein the courts proceed with great caution, and require not only a clear case of fraudulent concealment, but the absence of negligence on the part of the party seeking to obviate the statute limitation by the replication of fraud. 7 How. 819; 12 Penn. St. 49; 1 Curt. C. C. 390; 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 522. In some states, fraudulent concealment of the cause of action is made by statute a cause of exemption from its effect. And the courts construe the saving clause with great strictness, and hold that means of knowledge of the concealment are equivalent to knowledge in fact. 8 All. Mass. 130; 39 Me. 404. In the absence of statutory provision, the admissibility of the replication of fraud has been the subject of contradictory decisions in the different states, the weight of authority, perhaps, being in favor of its admissibility. 5 Mas. C. C. 143.

39. Running accounts. Such accounts as concern the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant were by the original statute of James I. exempted from its operation; and among these mutual and open accounts current were early held to be included, Peake, Cas. 164; 6 Term, 189, if they contained upon either side any item upon which the right of action accrued within six years, whether the accounts were between merchant and merchant or other persons. And this construction of the law, based, as is said in some cases, upon the ground that such accounts come within the equity of the exception in respect to merchants' accounts, and in others upon the ground that every new item and credit in an account given by one party to another is an admission of there being some unsettled account between them, and, as an acknowledgment, sufficient to take the case out of the statute, has taken the form of legislative enactment in many states in this country, and, in the absence of such enactment, has been generally followed by the courts. 20 Johns. N. Y. 576; 8 Pick. Mass. 187; 6 Me. 108; 6 Conn. 248; 2 Rawle, Penn. 287; 4 Rand. Va. 488; 12 Pet. U. S. 300; 1 Hayw. No. C. 216; 11 Gill & J. Md. 212; 4 M'Cord, So. C. 215; 3 Blackf. Ind. 300; 3 Harr. N. J. 266; 3 Miss. 786.

40. But there must be a reciprocity of dealing between the respective parties, and the accounts must be such that there may be a fair implication that it is understood that the items of one account are to be a set-off so far as they go against the items of the other account. 2 Sumn. C. C. 410. Where the items of account are all on one side, as between a shopkeeper and his customer, or where goods are charged and payments credited, there is no mutuality, and the statute bars the account. 4 M'Cord, So. C. 214; 2 Sandf. N. Y. 318; 17 Serg. & R. Penn. 347. And where, in the case of mutual account, after a statement, the balance has been struck and agreed upon, the statute at once applies to such balance as a distinct demand, 2 Saund. 125; 6 Me. 337; unless it is made the first item of a new mutual account. 3 Pick. Mass. 96; 1 Mod. 270.

41. A closed account is not a stated account. In order to constitute the latter, an account must have been rendered by one party, and expressly or impliedly assented to by the other. 8 Pick. Mass. 187; 6 Me. 308; 12 Pet. 300. Accounts between merchant and merchant are exempted from the operation of the statute, if current and mutual, although no item appears on either side within six years. 8 Bligh, 352; 6 Pick. Mass. 364; 5 Cranch, 15; 13 Penn. St. 300; 1 T. L. Smith, Ind. 217. A single transaction between two merchants is not within the exception, 17 Penn. St. 238; nor is an account between partners, 3 R. I. 87; nor an account between two joint-owners of a vessel, 10 B. Monr. Ky. 112; nor an account for freight under a charter-party, although both parties are merchants, 6 Pet. 151; nor any account between merchants, unless concerning the trade of merchandise, or, in other words, originating in articles of merchandise. 7 Miss. 328.

42. New promise to pay debt barred. There is another important class of exceptions, not made by the statute, but by the courts, wherein, although the statutory limitation may have expired, parties bringing themselves within the exception have always been allowed to recover. In actions of assumpsit, an acknowledgment of existing indebtedness made under such circumstances as to be equivalent to a new promise express or implied, and within six years before the time of action brought, will take the case out of the operation of the statute, although the original cause of action accrued more than six years before that time. And this proceeds upon the ground that as the statutory limitation merely bars the remedy and does not discharge the debt, there is something more than a merely moral obligation to support the promise,—to wit, a pre-existent debt, which is a sufficient consideration for the new promise. 2 Mas. C. C. 151. The new promise upon this sufficient consideration constitutes, in fact, a new course of action. 4 East, 399; 1 Pet. 351.

43. This was undoubtedly a liberal construction of the statute; but it was early adopted, and has maintained itself, in the face of much adverse criticism, to the present time. While, however, at an early period there was an inclination of the courts to accept the slightest and most ambiguous expressions as evidence of a new promise, the spirit and tendency of modern decisions is towards greater strictness, and seem to be fairly expressed in the learned judgment of the late Mr. Justice Story, in the case of Bell v. Morrison, 1 Pet. 351. "It has often been matter of regret, in modern times, that, in the construction of the statute of limitations, the decisions had not proceeded upon principles better adapted to carry into effect the real objects of the statute; that, instead of being viewed in an unfavorable light, as an unjust and discreditable defence, it had [not] received such support as would have made it, what it was intended to be, emphatically a statute of repose. It is a wise and beneficial law, not designed merely to raise a presumption of payment of a just debt from lapse of time, but to afford security against stale demands after the true state of the transactions may have been forgotten, or be incapable of explanation, by reason of the death or removal of witnesses. It has a manifest tendency to produce speedy settlement of accounts, and to suppress those prejudices which may rise up at a distance of time and baffle every honest effort to counteract or overcome them. Parol evidence may be offered of confessions (a species of evidence which, it has been often observed, it is hard to disprove and easy to fabricate) applicable to such remote times as may leave no means to trace the nature, extent, or origin of the claim, and thus open the way to the most oppressive charges. If we proceed one step further, and admit that loose and general expressions, from which a probable or possible inference may be deduced of the acknowledgment of a debt by a court or jury, that, as the language of some cases has been, any acknowledgment, however slight, or any statement not amounting to a denial of the debt, that any admission of the existence of an unsettled account, without any specification of amount or balance, and however indeterminate and casual, are yet sufficient to take the case out of the statute of limitations, and let in evidence, aliunde, to establish any debt, however large and at whatever distance of time; it is easy to perceive that the wholesome objects of the statute must be in a great measure defeated, and the statute virtually repealed." . . . "If the bar is sought to be removed by the proof of a new promise, that proving, as a new cause of action, ought to be proved in a clear and explicit manner, and be in its terms unequivocal and determinate; and, if any conditions are annexed, they ought to be shown to be performed."

44. And to the same general purport are the following cases, although it is undeniable that in the application of the rule there seems in some cases to be a looseness and liberality which hardly comport with the rule. 11 How. 493; 32 Me. 260; 14 N. H. 422; 22 Vt. 179; 3 Cush. Mass. 155; 7 Hill, N. Y. 45; 16 Penn. St. 210; 12 Ill. 146; 4 Fla. 481; 19 Miss. 419; 22 id. 52; 5 Ga. 486; 9 B. Monr. Ky. 614; 10 Ark. 134; 11 Ired. No. C. 447; 8 Gratt. Va. 110; 20 Ala. N. S. 687.

45. A new provision to pay the principal only, does not except the interest from the operation of the statute. 29 Penn. St. 189. Nor does an agreement to refer take the claim out of the statute, 1 Sneed, Tenn. 464; nor the insertion, by an insolvent debtor, of an outlawed claim in a schedule of his creditors required by law, 2 Miles, Penn. 424; 10 Penn. St. 129; 7 Gray, Mass. 274; 12 Metc. Mass. 470; nor an agreement not to take advantage of the statute. 29 Me. 47; 17 Penn. St. 232; 8 Md. 374; 9 Leigh, Va. 381. If such an agreement were valid, it might be made part of the contract, and thus the object of the law would be defeated. 32 Me. 169. Nor will a devise of property to pay debts exempt debts upon which the statute has run prior to the testator's death

4 Edw. N. Y. 527; 13 Ala. N. S. 611; 4 Whart. Penn. 445; 4 Penn. St. 56; 13 Gratt. Va. 329.

46. Nor, in general, will any statement of a debt, made officially, in pursuance of special legal requirement, or with another purpose than to recognize it as an existing debt. 5 Me. 140; 12 Eng. L. & Eq. 191; 9 Cush. Mass. 390; 30 Me. 425. Nor will a deed of assignment made by the debtor for the payment of certain debts, and of his debts generally, and a partial payment by the assignor to a creditor, 1 R. I. 81; 6 Eng. L. & Eq. 520; nor the entry of a debt in an unsigned schedule of the debtor's liabilities, made for his own use, 30 Me. 425; nor an undelivered mortgage to secure an outlawed debt, though duly executed, acknowledged, and recorded. 6 Cush. Mass. 151. But if the mortgage be delivered, it will be a sufficient acknowledgment to exempt the debt secured thereby from the operation of the statute. 4 Cush. Mass. 559; 18 Conn. 257; 14 Tex. 672. And so will the answer to a bill in chancery which expressly sets forth the existence of the debt. 28 Vt. 569; 3 Gill, Md. 166.

47. If there is any thing said to repel the inference of a promise, or inconsistent therewith, the statute will not be avoided. 3 Bingh. 329; 6 Watts, Penn. 44; 2 Wash. C. C. 514. "The account is due, and I supposed it had been paid, but did not know of its being ever paid," is no new promise. 8 Cranch, 72. If the debtor admits that the debt is due, but intimates his purpose to avail himself of the bar of the statute, the acknowledgment is insufficient. 9 Serg. & R. Penn. 128; 2 Dev. & B. No. C. 82; 2 Browne, Penn. 35. So if he says he will pay if he owes, but denies that he owes, 3 Me. 97; 2 Pick. Mass. 368, or if he is liable, but denies his liability. 2 Bail. So. C. 278. So if he states his inability to pay. 22 Pick. Mass. 291. So if he admits the claim to have been once due, but claims that it is paid by an account against the claimant, 3 Fairf. Me. 72; 5 Conn. 480; 4 M'Cord, So. C. 215; or otherwise. 11 Ill. 146. "I am too unwell to settle now; when I am better, I will settle your account:" held insufficient. 9 Leigh, Va. 45; 1 Yerg. Tenn. 270. So of an offer to pay a part in order to get the claim out of the hands of the creditor, 2 Bail. So. C. 283; and of an admission that the account is right. 4 Dan. Ky. 505.

48. If the new promise is subject to conditions or qualifications, is indefinite as to time or amount, or as to the debt referred to, or in any other way limited or contingent, the plaintiff will be held to bring himself strictly within the terms of the promise, and to show that the condition has been performed, or the contingency happened, and that he is not excluded by any limitation, qualification, or uncertainty. 11 Wheat. 309; 15 Johns. N. Y. 511; 1 Pet. 351; 3 Bingh. 638; 3 Hare, Ch. 299. If the promise be to pay when able, the ability must be proved by the plaintiff. 3 Barnew. & C. 603; 4 Esp. 36; 13 N. H. 486; 10 N. Y. 88; 7 Hill, N. Y. 45; 15 Ga. 395. So if it be to pay as soon as convenient, the convenience must be proved, 2 Crompt. & M. Exch. 459; or, "if E will say that I have had the timber," the condition must be complied with. 1 Pick. Mass. 370.

50. It must appear clearly that the promise is made with reference to the particular demand in suit, 6 Pet. 86; 15 Johns. N. Y. 511; though a general admission would seem to be sufficient, unless the defendant show that there were other demands between the parties. 21 Pick. Mass. 323. If there be uncertainty as to the amount admitted to be due, the plaintiff, on proving that something is due, may recover nominal damages, 4 Nev. & M. 337; 4 Younge & C. 238; 12 Carr. & P. 104; 6 N. H. 367; and whether evidence aliunde may be admitted to prove the actual amount is a point upon which the most respectable authorities differ. That it may, is held in Massachusetts, 22 Pick. Mass. 291, and perhaps in Maine. 27 Me. 433. Contra, 1 Pet. 351; 9 Leigh, Va. 381; 2 Dev. & B. No. C. 390; 10 Watts, Penn. 172; 23 Penn. St. 416; 24 Me. 145; 6 Mo. 27.

51. Part payment of a debt is evidence of a new promise to pay the remainder. 2 Dougl. 652. It is, however, but primâ facie evidence, and may be rebutted by other evidence. 28 Vt. 642; 27 Me. 370; 4 Mich. 580; 10 Ark. 638. Payment of the interest has the same effect as payment of part of the principal. 8 Bingh. 309; 14 Pick. Mass. 387. And the giving a note for part of a debt, 2 Metc. Mass. 168, or for accrued interest, is payment. 13 Wend. N. Y. 267; 6 Metc. Mass. 553; 24 Eng. L. & Eq. 92. And so is the credit of interest in an account stated, 6 Johns. N. Y. 267, and the delivery of goods on account. 4 Ad. & E. 71. But the payment of a dividend by the assignee of an insolvent debtor is no new promise to pay the remainder, 7 Gray, Mass. 387; 6 Eng. L. & Eq. 520; and it has recently been held by respectable authorities that new part payment is no new promise, but, in order to take the case out of the statute, the payment must be made on account of a sum admitted to be due, accompanied with a promise to pay the remainder. 1 Exch. 188; 6 Mees. & W.

52. Part payment by a surety in the presence of his principal, and without dissent, is payment by the principal, 22 N. H. 219; but part payment by the surety after the statute has barred the debt, is not a new promise to pay the other part. 18 B. Monr. Ky. 643. A general payment on account of a debt for which several notes were given, without direction as to the application of the payment, may be applied by the creditor to either of the notes, so as to take the note to which the payment is applied out of the statute; but the payment cannot be apportioned to the several notes with the same effect. 19 Vt. 26; 31 Eng. L. & Eq. 55; 1 Gray, Mass. 630.

53. The payment may be made to an agent, or even a stranger not authorized to receive it, but erroneously supposed to be authorized. It is as much an admission of the debt as if made to the principal himself. 1 Bingh. 480; 10 Barnew. & C. 122. And so with reference to acknowledgments or new promises. 4 Pick. Mass. 110; 9 id. 488; 9 Wend. N. Y. 293; 11 Me. 152. And the weight of authority is in favor of the rule that part payment of a witnessed note or bond will avoid the statute. 30 Me. 164; 9 B. Monr. Ky. 438; 12 Mo. 94; 18 Ark. 521: contra, 1 Ala. N. s. 482. Whether the new promise or payment, if made after the debt is barred by the statute, will remove the bar, is also a mooted point, the weight of authority perhaps being in favor of the negative. 14 Pick. Mass. 387; 10 Ala. N. s. 959; 13 Miss. 564; 2 N. Y. 523; 12 id. 635; 14 Ark. 199. In Ohio it is so, by statute. 17 Ohio, 9. For the affirmative, see 18 Vt. 440; 20 Me. 176; 5 Ired. No. C. 341; 2 Tex. 501; 8 Humphr. Tenn. 656.

54. It was long held that an acknowledgment or part payment by one of several joint-contractors would take the claim out of the statute as to the other joint-contractors, 2 Dougl. 652; 2 H. Blackst. 340; but this cannot now be considered to be the law either in England or this country. 6 Eng. L. & Eq. 520; 10 Barb. N. Y. 566; 2 N. Y. 523; 11 id. 176; 22 N. H. 219; 10 Ark. 108; 7 Gill, Md. 857; 19 Miss. 275; 1 N. J. 677; 6 Cush. Mass. 360; 9 Ga. 467; 8 Penn. St. 337; 24 Ala. N. s. 474; 9 Rich. So. C. 44. A fortiori the admission or part payment by an executor or administrator of one joint-debtor will not revive the claim as against the other.

55. Of course an acknowledgment or part payment made by an agent acting within the scope of his authority is, upon the familiar maxim, qui facit per alium facit per se, an acknowledgment or part payment by the principal; and hence if a partner has been appointed specially to settle the affairs of a dissolved partnership, his acknowledgment or part payment by virtue of his authority as such agent will take the claim out of the statute. 6 Johns. N. Y. 267; 1 Pet. 351; 20 Me. 347. And the wife may be such agent as to a claim for goods sold to her during the absence of her husband, 1 Campb. 394; but a wife during coverture, not made specially or by implication of law an agent, cannot make a new promise effectual to take a claim to which she was a party dum sola out of the statute. 1 Barnew. & C. 248; 24 Vt. 89; 12 Eng. L. & Eq. 398. Not even though the coverture be removed before the expiration of six years after the alleged promise. 2 Penn. St. 490.

56. Nor is the husband an agent for the wife for such a purpose, 15 Vt. 471; but he is an agent for the wife, payee of a note given to her dum sola, to whom a new promise or part payment may be made. 6 Q. B. 937. So a new promise to an executor or administrator is sufficient, 8 Mass. 134; and the weight of authority seems to be in favor of the binding force of a promise or part payment made by an executor or administrator, 12 Cush. Mass. 324; 12 B. Monr. Ky. 408; 9 Ala. N. s. 502; 17 Ga. 96; 9 Eng. L. & Eq. 80; particularly if the promise be express. 15 Johns. N. Y. 3; 15 Me. 360. But there are highly respectable authorities to the contrary. 1 Whart. Penn. 66; 23 Miss. 389; 7 Md. 442; 9 id. 317; 14 Tex. 312.

57. But to put an end to such litigation, it was enacted by stat. 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, commonly known as Lord Tenterden's Act, that the new promise or acknowledgment by words only, in order to be effectual to take a case out of the statute of limitations, should be in writing, signed by the party chargeable thereby; and this statute has been substantially adopted by most, if not all, of the states in this country. This statute affects merely the mode of proof. The same effect is to be given to the words reduced to writing as would before the passage of the statute have been given to them when proved by oral testimony. 7 Bingh. 163. If part payment is alleged, "words only," admitting the fact of payment, though not in writing, are admissible to strengthen the proof of the fact of payment. 2 Gale & D. 59.

58. The return, under citation, by an administrator of the maker of a note, showing the note as one of his intestate's debts, is, in writing, within the meaning of this statute. 12 Sim. 17; and so is the entry by an insolvent debtor of the debt in his schedule of liabilities. 12 Metc. Mass. 470. It was held in the last case that the mere entry was not in itself a sufficient acknowledgment, but being in writing, within the meaning of the statute, it might be used with other written evidence to prove a new promise. But the making one note and tendering it in payment of another is not a new promise in writing, 3 Cush. Mass. 355; not even if the note be delivered, if it be re-delivered to the maker for the purpose of restoring matters between the parties to the state they were in before the note was given. 1 Metc. Mass. 1.

59. A and B had an unsettled account. In 1845, A signed the following: "It is agreed that B, in his general account, shall give credit to A for £10, for books delivered in 1834." Held, no acknowledgment in writing, so as to give B a right to an account against A's estate more than six years before A's death. 35 Eng. L. & Eq. 195. The writing must be signed by the party himself. The signature of the husband's name by the wife, though at his request, is not a signing by the party to be charged. 2 Bingh. N. C. 776. Nor is the signature by a clerk sufficient. 17 C. B. 147. Nor is a promise in the handwriting of the defendant sufficient; it must be signed by him. 12 Ad. & E. 492. And a request by the defendant to the plaintiff to get certain moneys due the defendant from third parties, does not charge the party making the request, because it is not apparent that the defendant intended to render himself personally liable. 8 Ad. & E. 221; 5 Carr. & P. 209. Since this statute, mutual accounts will not be taken out of the operation of the statute by any item on either side, unless the item be the subject of a new promise in writing. 2 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 45. The effect of part payment is left by the statute as before. 10 Barnew. & C. 122. And the fact of part payment, it is now held, contrary to some earlier cases, may be proved by unsigned written evidence, 4 Eng. L. & Eq. 514; or by oral testimony. 9 Metc. Mass. 485; 30 Me. 353.

60. A new promise by an infant for necessaries revives the debt. 28 Eng. L. & Eq. 276. And where an infant had jointly with an adult made a note, and a part payment thereon, an oral promise, after arriving at his majority, to pay the balance, was held valid against him, but not against the adult. 5 Metc. Mass. 162. But this doctrine as to the effect of a new promise is chiefly applicable to cases of indebtedness, and has no application whatever in cases of contracts to do or not to do an act, nor in cases of tort, 2 Campb. 157; 11 Wheat. 309; 16 Ga. 144; 1 Barnew. & Ald. 92; nor to an action on a judgment. 11 Ired. No. C. 427.

AS TO REAL PROPERTY AND RIGHTS.

61. The general if not universal limitation of the right to bring action or to make entry, is to twenty years after the right to enter or to bring the action accrues, i.e. to twenty years after the cause of action accrues. As the rights and interests of different parties in real property are various, and attach at different periods, and successively, it follows that there may be a right of entry in a particular person, accruing many years after the expiration of the twenty years, and after the expiration of antecedent rights.

62. Thus, if an estate be limited to one in tail, and the tenant in tail be barred of his remedy by the statute, yet, as the statute only affects the remedy, and the right or estate still exists, the right of entry in the remainder-man does not accrue until the failure of the issue of the tenant in tail, which may not happen for many years. The estate still existing in the tenant in tail or his issues supports and keeps alive the remainder-man's right of action till the expiration of twenty years after his right of entry accrues. 1 Burr. 60.

The laches of the owner of a prior right in an estate cannot prejudice the owner of a subsequently accruing right in the same estate. 8 East, 551; 4 Johns. N. Y. 390; 15 Mass. 471. And where there exist two distinct rights of entry in the same person, he may claim under either. He is not obliged to enter under his earlier right. 1 Pick. Mass. 318; 9 Mass. 508; 5 Carr. & P. 563.

63. When an actual entry is necessary prior to the bringing an action, it must be upon the land in question, 13 East, 489; 3 Me. 316; unless prevented by force or fraud, when a bona fide attempt is equivalent. 4 Johns. N. Y. 389. If the land lie in two counties, there must be an entry in each county; though if all the land be in one county an entry upon part, with a declaration of claim to the whole, is sufficient. 3 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 115. The intention to claim the land is essential to the sufficiency of the entry. 3 Me. 316; 9 Watts, Penn. 28. An entry may be made by the guardian for his ward, by the remainder-man or reversioner for the tenant, and the tenant for the reversioner or remainder-man, being parties having privity of estate. 9 Coke, 106. So a cestui que trust may enter for his trustee, 1 T. Raym. 716; and an agent for his principal, 11 Penn. St. 212, even without original authority, if the act be adopted and ratified. 9 Penn. St. 40. And the entry of one joint-tenant, coparcener, or tenant in common will inure to the benefit of the other. 10 Watts, Penn. 296.

64. Adverse possession for twenty years gives title against the true owner; but it must be open, uninterrupted, and with intent to claim against the true owner. The possession must be an actual occupation, so open that the true owner ought to know it and must be presumed to know it, and in such manner and under such circumstances as amount to an invasion of his rights, thereby giving him cause of action. 11 Gill & J. Md. 371; 5 Cow. N. Y. 219.

65. It must be open, so that the owner may know it or might know of it. Many acts of occupation would be unequivocal, such as fencing the land or erecting a house on it, 7 Wheat. 59; actual improvement and cultivation of the soil, 1 Johns. N. Y. 156; digging stones and cutting timber from time to time, 14 East, 332; driving piles into the soil covered by a mill-pond, and thereon erecting a building, 6 Mass. 229; cutting roads into a swamp, and cutting trees and making shingles therefrom, 1 Ired. No. C. 56; and setting fish-traps in a non-navigable stream, building dams across it, and using it every year during the entire fishing-season for the purpose of catching fish. 1 Ired. No. C. 535. But entering upon unenclosed flats, when covered by the tide, and sailing over them with a boat or vessel for the ordinary purposes of navigation, is not an adverse possession, 1 Cush. Mass. 395; though the filling up the flats, and building a wharf there and using the same, would be if the use were exclusive. 1 Cush. Mass. 313. Nor is the entering upon a lot and marking its boundaries by splitting the trees, 14 N. H. 101; nor the getting rails and other timber for a few weeks each year from timber-land, 4 Jones, No. C. 295; nor cattle ranging, 1 Hayw. No. C. 311; nor the overflowing of land by the stoppage of a stream, 4 Dev. No. C. 158; nor the survey, allotment, and conveyance of a piece of land, and the recording of the deed; unless there is open occupation. 22 Me. 29.

66. It must be continuous for the whole period. If one trespasser enters and leaves, and then another trespasser, a stranger to the former and without purchase from or respect to him, enters, the possession is not continuous. 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 240; 9 B. Monr. Ky. 253. But a slight connection of the latter with the former trespasser, as by a purchase by parol contract, will be sufficient to give the possession continuity. 31 Me. 583; 6 Penn. St. 355. And so will a purchase at a sale or execution. 5 Penn. St. 126. To give continuity to the possession by successive occupants, there must be privity of estate, 5 Metc. Mass. 15; and such a privity that each possession may be referred to one and the same entry: as that of a tenant to his landlord, or of the heir of a disseisor to his ancestor. 1 Rice, So. C. 10.

67. So an administrator's possession may be connected with that of his intestate, 11 Humphr. Tenn. 457; and that of a tenant holding under the ancestor, with that of the heir. Cheeves, So. C. 200. In some states, however, it is held that whether the possession be held uniformly under one title, or at different times under different titles, can make no difference, provided the claim of title is always adverse: as in Connecticut, 3 Day, Conn. 269, and in Kentucky. 1 A. K. Marsh, Ky. 4.

68. The possession must be adverse. If it be permissive, 2 Jac. & W. Ch. 1, or by mistake, 3 Watts, Penn. 280, or unintentional, 11 Mass. 296, or confessedly in subordination to another's right, 5 Barnew. & Ald. 223, it does not avail to bar the statute. If the occupation is such and by such a person that it may be for the true owner, it will be presumed to be for him, unless it be shown that the adverse claimant gave notice that he held adversely and not in subordination. 1 Batt. Ch. Ir. 373; 1 Speers, So. C. 225. And this notice must be clear and unequivocal. If the act of the tenant or adverse claimant may be a trespass as well as a disseisin, the true owner may elect which he will consider it, regardless of the wishes of the trespasser, who cannot be allowed to qualify his own wrong. 4 Mas. C. C. 329.

69. So that if the adverse claimant sets up his trespasses as amounting to an adverse possession, the true owner may reply they are no disseisin, but trespasses only; while, on the other hand, the true owner may elect, if he please, for the sake of his remedy, to treat them as a disseisin. 19 Me. 383; 8 N. H. 67. This is called a disseisin by election, in distinction from a disseisin in fact,—a distinction which was taken for the benefit of the owner of the land. Whenever the act done of itself necessarily works an actual disseisin, it is a disseisin in fact: as, when a tenant for years or at will conveys in fee. On the other hand, those acts which are susceptible of being made a disseisin by election are no disseisin till the election of the owner makes them so: as, when a tenant at will, instead of conveying in fee, makes a lease for years. 1 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 36.

70. The claim by adverse possession must have some definite boundaries. 1 Metc. Mass. 528; 10 Johns. N. Y. 447. There ought to be something to indicate to what extent the adverse possessor claims. A sufficient inclosure will establish the limits. 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 129. But it must be an actual, visible, and substantial inclosure. 4 Bibb, Ky. 544; 2 Aik. Vt. 364; 7 Mo. 166. An inclosure on three sides, by a trespasser as against the real owner, is not enough, 8 Me. 239; 5 Md. 256; nor is an unsubstantial brush fence, 10 N. H. 397; nor one formed by the lapping of fallen trees. 3 Metc. Mass. 125; 2 Johns. N. Y. 230. And where the claim is by possession only, without any color or pretence of title, it cannot extend beyond the actual limits of the inclosure. 3 Harr. & M'H. Md. 621; 5 Conn. 305; 28 Vt. 142; 6 Ind. 273. And this must be fixed, not roving from part to part. 11 Pet. 53.

71. Extension of the inclosure within the time limited will not give title to the part included in the extension. 2 Harr. & J. Md. 391; 8 Ill. 238. Where, however, the claim rests upon color of title as well as possession, the possession will be regarded as coextensive with the powers described in the title-deed, 11 Pet. 41; 4 Mas. C. C. 330; 3 Ired. No. C. 578; 2 Ill. 181; 13 Johns. N. Y. 406; 5 Dan. Ky. 232; 4 Mass. 416, unless the acts or declarations of the occupant restrict it. 22 Vt. 357. But the constructive possession of land arising from color of title cannot be extended to that part of it whereof there is an actual adverse possession, whether with or without a proper title, 28 Penn. St. 124; 16 B. Monr. Ky. 72; 1 Ired. No. C. 56; 4 Sneed, Tenn. 584; 18 Vt. 294; nor will a subsequent conflicting possession, whether under color of title or not, be extended by construction beyond the limits of the actual adverse possession for the purpose of defeating a prior constructive possession. 6 Cow. N. Y. 677; 11 Vt. 521.

72. Nor can there be any constructive adverse possession against the owner when there has been no actual possession which he could treat as a trespass and bring suit for. 3 Rich. So. C. 101. A trespasser who afterwards obtains color of title can claim constructively only for the time when the title was obtained. 16 Johns. N. Y. 293. This doctrine of constructive possession, however, applies only to land taken possession of for the ordinary purposes of cultivation and use, and not to a case where a few acres are taken possession of in an uncultivated township for the mere purpose of thereby gaining title to the entire township. 22 Vt. 388; 1 Cow. N. Y. 286; 6 B. Monr. Ky. 463.

73. In fine, with a little relaxation of strictness in favor of the owner of wild, remote, and uncultivated lands, 4 Mass. 416, to gain title by possession it must be adverse, open, or public and notorious, and not clandestine and secret, exclusive, uninterrupted, definite as to boundaries, and fixed as to its locality. Color of title is any thing in writing, however defective, connected with the title, which serves to define the extent of the claim, 19 Ga. 8; 18 Johns. N. Y. 40; 8 Cow. N. Y. 589; and it may exist even without writing, if the facts and circumstances show clearly the character and extent of the claim. 17 Ill. 498; 6 Ind. 273.

74. A fraudulent deed, if accepted in good faith, gives color of title, 8 Pet. 244; so does a defective deed, 4 Harr. & M'H. Md. 222, unless defective in defining the limits of the land, 1 Cow. N. Y. 276; so does an improperly executed deed, if the grantor believe he has title thereby, 6 Metc. Mass. 337; so does a sheriff's deed, 7 B. Monr. Ky. 236; 22 Ga. 56; 7 Hill, N. Y. 476; and a sheriff's return on a fieri facias, 1 Dev. & B. No. C. 586; and a deed from a collector of taxes, 4 Ired. No. C. 164; and a deed from an attorney who has no authority to convey, 2 Murph. No. C. 14; and a deed founded on a voidable decree in chancery, 1 Meigs, Tenn. 207; and a deed, by one tenant in common, of the whole estate, to a third person, 4 Dev. & B. No. C. 54; and a deed by an infant, 4 Dev. & B. No. C. 289; and a bond for a deed. 5 Ga. 6.

75. So possession, in good faith, under a void grant from the state, gives color of title. 4 Ga. 115. And if A purchases under an execution against B, takes a deed, and on the same day conveys to B, though the purchase and conveyance be at the request of B, and no money is paid, B has a colorable title. A will gives color of title; but if it has but one subscribing witness, and has never been proved, it does not. 5 Ired. No. C. 711. Nor does the sale by an administrator of the land of his solvent intestate, under a license of the probate court, unless accompanied by a deed from the administrator. 34 N. H. 544. Nor does the sale of property by an intestate to his son, of which the possession is held by the wife, who is administratrix, while the son lives in the family, as against the intestate's creditors. 30 Miss. 472.

76. If there is no written title, then the possession must be under a bonâ fide claim to a title existing in another. 3 Watts, Penn. 72. Thus, if under an agreement for the sale of land the consideration be paid and the purchaser enter, he has color of title, 5 Metc. Mass. 173; though if the consideration be not paid, or be paid only in part, he has not, 2 Bail. So. C. 59; 11 Ohio, 455; 20 Ga. 311; because the fair inference in such case is that the purchaser is by consent of the grantor, and holds subordinately to him until the payment of the full consideration. There is, in fact, a mutual understanding, and a mutual confidence, amounting to an implied trust. 9 Wheat. 241; 12 Mass. 325.

77. In New York, a parol gift of land is said not to give color of title, 1 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 36; but it is at least doubtful if that is the law of New York, 6 Cow. N. Y. 677; and in Massachusetts and other states, a parol gift is held to give color of title if accompanied by actual entry and possession. It manifests, equally with a sale, the intent of the donee to enter, and not as tenant; and it equally proves an admission on the part of the donor that the possession is so taken. 6 Metc. Mass. 337; 13 Conn. 227; 2 B. Monr. Ky. 282. The element of good faith, and the actual belief on the part of the claimant that he has title, give the claimant by color of title his advantage over the mere trespasser, who, as we have seen, is restricted carefully to his actual occupation; and it may be said, generally, that whenever the facts and circumstances show that one in possession, in good faith and in the belief that he has title, holds for himself and to the exclusion of all others, his possession must be adverse, and according to his assumed title, whatever may be his relations in point of interest or priority, to others. 4 Hayw. Tenn. 182; 5 Pet. 440. When a man enters under such a claim of title, his entry on a part is an entry on the whole; but if he claims no such title he has no seisin by his entry but by the ouster of him who was seised, which can only be by the actual and exclusive occupation of the land. 4 Mass. 416.

78. In cases of mixed possession, or a possession at the same time by two or more persons, each under a separate colorable title, the seisin is in him who has the prior title, 4 Wheat. 213; 20 How. 235; for, though there may be a concurrent possession, there cannot be a concurrent seisin; and, one only being seised, the possession must be adjudged to be in him, because he has the better right. 3 Mass. 219; 3 Me. 216. Of course, in such a case, if one has color of title, and the other is a mere trespasser or intruder, the possession is in him who has color of title. 2 Harr. & J. Md. 112; 4 Serg. & R. Penn. 465; 5 Du. N. Y. 272; 2 Bail. So. C. 101.

79. But, with all the liberality shown by the courts in giving color of title, it has been denied that a grant from a foreign government confers it, on the ground that the possession under such a title was rather a question between governments than individuals. Thus, the courts of New York have refused to recognize claims under a grant of the French government in Canada, made prior to the treaty between Great Britain and France in 1763. 4 Johns. N. Y. 163; 12 id. 365. But the soundness of the exception has since been questioned in the same court, 8 Cow. N. Y. 589; and the grant of a foreign government has been expressly held to give color of title in Pennsylvania, even as against one claiming under her own grant. 2 Watts, Penn. 37. And, for political reasons, it has been held that a grant from the Indians gives no color of title. 8 Wheat. 571.

80. One joint-tenant, tenant in common, or coparcener cannot dismiss another but by actual ouster, as the seisin and possession of one are the seisin and possession of all, and inure to the benefit of all. 2 Salk. 422; 7 Wheat. 59; 12 Metc. Mass. 357; 11 Gratt. Va. 505. Actual ouster implies exclusion or expulsion. No force is necessary; but there must be a denial of the right of the co-tenant, Cowp. 217; 1 Mass. 323; 1 Me. 89; 12 Wend. N. Y. 404; and, like a grant, after long lapse of time it may be presumed, 1 East, 568; 3 Metc. Mass. 100; 10 Serg. & R. Penn. 182, and inferred from acts of an unequivocal character importing a denial. 3 Watts, Penn. 77; 1 Me. 89. But the possession of the grantee of one tenant in common is adverse to all. 13 B. Monr. Ky. 436; 3 Metc. Mass. 101; 4 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 178. The possession of the tenant is likewise the possession of his landlord, and cannot be adverse unless he distinctly renounce his landlord's title. 2 Campb. 11; 2 Binn. Penn. 468; 10 N. Y. 9.

81. Mere non-payment of rent during the time limited, there having been no demand, does not prejudice the landlord's right to enter and demand it, even though the lease contains a clause giving the right of re-entry in case of non-payment of rent, 7 East, 299; 3 Hill, N. Y. 344; and payment of rent is conclusive evidence that the occupation of the party paying was permissive and not adverse. 3 Barnew. & C. 135. The defendant in execution after a sale is a quasi tenant at will to the purchaser. 1 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 153; 3 Mass. 128. And a mere holding over after the expiration of a lease does not change the character of the possession. 2 Gill & J. Md. 173. Nor does the assignment of the lease, or a sub-letting. The assignee and sublessees are still tenants, so far as the title by adverse possession is concerned. 4 Serg. & R. Penn. 467; 6 Cow. N. Y. 751.

82. If the tenant convey the premises, as we have before seen, the landlord may treat him as a disseisor by election; but the tenant cannot set up the act as the basis of a title by adverse possession, 5 Cow. N. Y. 123, unless in the case where the relation of landlord and tenant subsists by operation of law; as where one makes a grant and by the omission of the word "heirs" an estate for life only passes. In such case, after the death of the tenant for life an adverse possession may commence. 7 Cow. N. Y. 323. So in case the tenant has attorned to a third person and the landlord has assented to the attornment. 6 Cow. N. Y. 133. But a mere parol disclaimer, by the lessor, of the existence of the relationship, and of all right in the premises, is not equivalent to an attornment. To admit such disclaimer would lead to fraud and perjury, and is in direct violation of the principles of the Statute of Frauds. 7 Johns. N. Y. 186; 16 id. 305; 5 Cow. N. Y. 74.

83. The possession of the mortgagor is not adverse to the mortgagee, the relation being in many respects analogous to that of landlord and tenant, 11 Mass. 125; 30 Miss. 49; 27 Penn. St. 504; 1 Dougl. 275; not even if the possession be under an absolute deed, if intended as a mortgage. 19 How. 289. The tenancy is sometimes like a tenancy for years, Croke Jac. 659; sometimes like a tenancy at will, 1 Dougl. 22; and sometimes like a tenancy at sufferance, 1 Salk. 245; but, whatever it may be like, it is always presumed to be by permission of the mortgagor until the contrary be shown. The assignee of the mortgagor, with notice, is in the same predicament with the mortgagor; but if he purchase without notice, his possession will be adverse. 2 Rand. Va. 93; 2 No. C. Law Rep. 93.

84. But, although the possession of the mortgagor be not adverse so as to give title under the statute against the mortgagee, the courts have nevertheless practically abrogated this rule, by holding that where the mortgagor has held during the statutory limit, and has meantime paid no interest nor otherwise recognized the rights of the mortgagee, this raises a presumption that the debt has been paid, and is a good defence in an action to foreclose. 12 Johns. N. Y. 242; 9 Wheat. 497; 8 Metc. Mass. 87; 19 Vt. 526; 3 Ga. 850; 6 B. Monr. Ky. 479. And the reasons for so holding seem to be equally cogent with those upon which rests the well-settled rule that, with certain exceptions, the mortgagee's possession for the time limited bars the mortgagor's right to redeem. 2 Jac. & W. Ch. 434; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 385; 9 Wheat. 489; 3 Harr. & M'H. Md. 328; 2 Sumn. C. C. 401; 13 Ala. N. S. 246; 20 Me. 269.

85. The exceptions are—first, where an account has been settled within the limited time, 2 Vern. Ch. 377; 5 Brown, Parl. Cas. 187; second, where within that time the mortgagee, by words spoken or written, or by deed, has clearly and unequivocally recognized the fact that he held as mortgagee, 2 Brown, Ch. 397; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 594; 10 Wheat. 152; 3 Sumn. C. C. 160, by which recognition a subsequent purchaser, with actual or constructive notice of the mortgage, is barred, 7 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 465; third, where no time is fixed for payment, as in the case of a mortgage where the mortgagee is by agreement to enter and hold till he is paid out of the rents and profits, 1 Vt. 418; fourth, where the mortgagor continues in possession of the whole or any part of the premises, 1 Sel. Ca. in Ch. 55; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 594; and, fifth, where there is fraud on the part of the mortgagee, or at the time of the inception of the mortgage he has taken advantage of the necessities of the mortgagor. 1 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 402, 595.

86. The trustee of real estate, under a direct trust, as well as of personal, as we have seen, holds for his cestui que trust, and the latter is not barred of his right unless it be denied and repudiated by the trustee; in which case the statute will begin to run from the denial or repudiation. 5 How. 233; 3 Gray, Mass. 1. In cases of implied construction and resulting trusts, the rule is also the same as with reference to personal property. The statute is a bar even in cases where the conduct of the trustee was originally fraudulent. 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 184.

87. Disabilities existing at the time the right descends or the cause of action accrues, prevent the running of the statute, till their removal; but only such as exist at that time. When the statute once begins to run, no subsequent disability can stop it. 1 How. 37; 4 Mass. 182. And there is no distinction in this respect between voluntary and involuntary disabilities. 4 Term, 301; 3 Brev. So. C. 286. The disability of one joint-tenant, tenant in common, or coparcener does not inure to the benefit of the other tenants. 8 Johns. N. Y. 262; 4 Day, Conn. 265; 2 Taunt. 441; 10 Ohio, 11; 10 Ga. 218; 5 Humphr. Tenn. 117; 4 Strobh. Eq. So. C. 167; 13 Serg. & R. Penn. 350.

88. It would be wholly impracticable here to give a compend, or even an analysis, of the different statutes of the several states. Nor, indeed, would such an analysis be of much service, as, from frequent revision, changes, and modifications, what is the law to-day might not be the law to-morrow, and it could not be referred to, therefore, as a reliable index of the actual state of the law in any particular state. As, however, the statutes of the several states are substantially and in principle the same, differing only in immaterial details, and as all are derived directly or indirectly from the same source, it will doubtless prove both convenient and useful to be able to refer to the text of the original statutes which have been the occasion of so much comment. These are, accordingly, appended, except stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27, of which there is room only for a synopsis.

89. For quieting of men's estates, and avoiding of suits, be it enacted by the king's most excellent majesty, the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, that all writs of formedon in descender, formedon in remainder, and formedon in reverter, at any time hereafter to be sued or brought, of or for any manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, whereunto any person or persons now hath or have any title, or cause to have or pursue any such writ, shall be sued or taken within twenty years next after the end of this present session of parliament: and after the said twenty years expired, no person or persons, or any of their heirs, shall have or maintain any such writ, of or for any of the said manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments; (2) and that all writs of formedon in descender, formedon in remainder, formedon in reverter, of any manors, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments whatsoever, at any time hereafter to be sued or brought by occasion or means of any title or cause hereafter happening, shall be sued or taken within twenty years next after the title and cause of action first descended or fallen, and at no time after the said twenty years; (3) and that no person or persons that now hath any right or title of entry into any manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments now held from him or them, shall thereinto enter but within twenty years next after the end of this present session of parliament, or within twenty years next after any other title of entry accrued; (4) and that no person or persons shall at any time hereafter make any entry into any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, but within twenty years next after his or their right or title, which shall hereafter first descend or accrue to the same; and in default thereof, such persons so not entering, and their heirs, shall be utterly excluded and disabled from such entry after to be made, any former law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding.

II. Provided, nevertheless, That if any person or persons that is or shall be entitled to such writ or writs, or that hath or shall have such right or title of entry, be, or shall be, at the time of the said right or title first descended, accrued, come or fallen within the age of one-and-twenty years, feme covert, non compos mentis, imprisoned, or beyond the seas, that then such person and persons, and his and their heir and heirs, shall or may, notwithstanding the said twenty years be expired, bring his action or make his entry as he might have done before this act: (2) so as such person and persons, or his or their heir and heirs, shall, within ten years next after his and their full age, discoverture, coming of sound mind, enlargement out of prison, or coming into this realm, or death, take benefit of and sue forth the same, and at no time after the said ten years.

III. And be it further enacted, That all actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, all actions of trespass, detinue, action, sur trover, and replevin for taking away of goods and cattle, all actions of account, and upon the case, other than such accounts as concern the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant, their factors or servants, all actions of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty, all actions of debt for arrearages of rent, and all actions of assault, menace, battery, wounding, and imprisonment, or any of them, which shall be sued or brought at any time after the end of this present session of parliament, shall be commenced and sued within the time and limitation hereafter expressed, and not after; (that is to say,) (2) the said actions upon the case (other than for slander), and the said actions for account, and the said actions for trespass, debt, detinue, and replevin for goods or cattle, and the said action of trespass quare clausum fregit, within three years next after the end of this present session of parliament, or within six years next after the cause of such actions or suit, and not after; (3) and the said actions of trespass, of assault, battery, wounding, imprisonment, or any of them, within one year next after the end of this present session of parliament, or within four years next after the cause of such actions or suit, and not after; (4) and the said action upon the case for words, within one year after the end of this present session of parliament, or within two years next after the words spoken, and not after.

IV. And, nevertheless, be it enacted, That if in any the said actions or suits, judgment be given for the plaintiff, and the same be reversed by error, or a verdict pass for the plaintiff, and upon matter alleged in arrest of judgment the judgment be given against the plaintiff, that he take nothing by his plaint, writ, or bill; or if any the said actions shall be brought by original, and the defendant therein be outlawed, and shall after reverse the outlawry, that in all such cases the party plaintiff, his heirs, executors, or administrators, as the case shall require, may commence a new action or suit, from time to time, within a year after such judgment reversed, or such judgment given against the plaintiff, or outlawry reversed, and not after.

V. And be it further enacted, That in all actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, hereafter to be brought, wherein the defendant or defendants shall disclaim in his or their plea to make any title or claim to the land in which the trespass is by the declaration supposed to be done, and the trespass be by negligence or involuntary, the defendant or defendants shall be permitted to plead a disclaimer, and that the trespass was by negligence or involuntary, and a tender or offer of sufficient amends for such trespass before the action brought, whereupon, or upon some of them, the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall be enforced to join issue; (2) and if the said issue be found for the defendant or defendants, or the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall be nonsuited, the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall be clearly barred from the said action or actions, and all other suits concerning the same.

VI. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That in all actions upon the case for slanderous words, to be sued or prosecuted by any person or persons in any of the courts of record at Westminster, or in any court whatsoever that hath power to hold plea of the same, after the end of this present session of parliament, if the jury upon the trial of the issue in such action, or the jury that shall inquire of the damages, do find or assess the damages under forty shillings, then the plaintiff or plaintiffs in such action shall have and recover only so much costs as the damages so given or assessed amount unto, without any farther increase of the same, any law, statute, custom, or usage to the contrary in any wise notwithstanding.

VII. Provided, nevertheless, and be it further enacted, That if any person or persons that is or shall be entitled to any such action of trespass, detinue, action sur trover, replevin, actions of account, actions of debt, actions of trespass for assault, menace, battery, wounding, or imprisonment, actions upon the case for words, be, or shall be, at the time of any such cause of action given or accrued, fallen or come within the age of twenty-one years, feme covert, non compos mentis, imprisoned or beyond the seas, that then such person or persons shall be at liberty to bring the same actions, so as they take the same within such times as are before limited, after their coming to or being of full age, discovert, of sane memory, at large, and returned from beyond the seas, as other persons having no such impediment should be done.

90. Statute 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, known as Lord Tenterden's Act. Sect. 1. Whereas by an act passed in England in the twenty-first year of the reign of King James the First, it was among other things enacted that all actions of account and upon the case, other than such accounts as concern the trade of merchandise between merchant and merchant, their factors or servants, all actions of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty, and all actions of debt for arrearages of rent, should be commenced within three years after the end of the then present session of parliament, or within six years next after the cause of such actions or suit, and not after; and whereas a similar enactment is contained in an act passed in Ireland in the tenth year of the reign of King Charles the First; and whereas various questions have arisen in actions founded on simple contract, as to the proof and effect of acknowledgments and promises offered in evidence for the purpose of taking cases out of the operation of the said enactments, and it is expedient to prevent such questions, and to make a provision for giving effect to the said enactments and to the intention thereof: Be it therefore enacted, by the king's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal and commons in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that in actions of debt, or upon the case, grounded upon any simple contract, no acknowledgment or promise by words only shall be deemed sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract, whereby to take any case out of the operation of the said enactments or either of them, or to deprive any party of the benefit thereof, unless such acknowledgment or promise shall be made or contained by or in some writing, to be signed by the party chargeable thereby; and that where there shall be two or more joint-contractors, or executors or administrators of any contractor, no such joint-contractor, executor, or administrator shall lose the benefit of the said enactments or either of them, so as to be chargeable in respect or by reason only of any written acknowledgment or promise made and signed by any other or others of them: Provided, always, that nothing herein contained shall alter or take away or lessen the effect of any payment of any principal or interest made by any person whatsoever: Provided also, that in actions to be commenced against two or more such joint-contractors, or executors or administrators, if it shall appear at the trial or otherwise that the plaintiff, though barred by either of the said recited acts, or this act, as to one or more of such joint-contractors or executors or administrators, shall, nevertheless, be entitled to recover against any other or others of the defendants, by virtue of a new acknowledgment, or promise or otherwise, judgment may be given and costs allowed for the plaintiff as to such defendant or defendants against whom he shall recover, and for the other defendant or defendants against the plaintiff.

Sect. 2. If any defendant or defendants, in any action on any simple contract, shall plead any matter in abatement to the effect that any other person or persons ought to be jointly sued and issue be joined on such plea; and it shall appear at the trial that the action could not by reason of the said recited acts, or of this act, or of either of them, be maintained against the other person or persons named in such plea, or any of them, the issue joined on such plea shall be found against the party pleading the same.

Sect. 3. No indorsement or memorandum of any payment written or made after the time appointed for this act to take effect upon any promissory note, bill of exchange, or other writing, by or on the behalf of the party to whom such payment shall be made, shall be deemed sufficient proof of such payment, so as to take the case out of the operation of either of the said statutes.

Sect. 4. That the said recited act, and this act, shall be deemed and taken to apply to the case of any debt on simple contract alleged by way of set-off on the part of any defendant, either by plea, notice, or otherwise.

91. Statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27. Section 1. The time within which actions to recover reality, etc. must be brought, is regulated by the statute 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 27. By the first section of the act the meaning of the words in the act is defined; it enacts, inter alia, that the word "land" shall extend to manors, messuages, and all other corporeal hereditaments whatsoever, and also to tithes (other than tithes belonging to a spiritual or eleemosynary corporation sole), and also to any share or interest in them, whether the same be a freehold or chattel interest, and whether they be of freehold, copyhold, or any other tenure; and that the word "rent" shall extend to all heriots, services, and suits for which a distress may be made, and to annuities charged upon land (except modusses or compositions belonging to a spiritual or eleemosynary corporation sole), and that the word "person" shall extend to a body politic, corporate, or collegiate, and to a class of creditors or other persons, as well as to an individual; and that the singular number shall embrace the plural, and the masculine gender the feminine.

Section 2 enacts that after the 31st day of December, 1833, no person shall make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover any land or rent, but within twenty years next after the time at which the right to make such entry or distress, or to bring such action, shall have first accrued.

Sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9, define the period from which the statute begins to run (where a party is not under disability), which may be thus briefly stated: viz., where the claimant was, in respect of the estate or interest claimed, himself once in possession or claims through a party who was once in possession of the property or in receipt of the rents or profits, the statute runs from the time when he was dispossessed, or discontinued such possession or receipts.

Where the claimant claims on the death of one who died in possession of the land or receipt of the rents or profits thereof, the statute runs from the time of the death, and this even in the case of an administrator, by section 6, which see, post.

Where the claimant derives his right under any instrument (other than a will), the statute runs from the time when under the instrument he was entitled to the possession.

In the case of remainders or reversions, the statute runs from the time when the remainder or reversion becomes an estate in possession.

Where the claimant claims by reason of a forfeiture or breach of condition, the statute runs from the time of the forfeiture incurred or breach of condition broken.

But section 4 provides that when any right to make any entry or distress, or to bring any action to recover any land or rent, by reason of any forfeiture or breach of condition, shall have first accrued in respect of any estate or interest in reversion or remainder, and the land or rent shall not have been recovered by virtue of such right, the right to make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover such land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued in respect of such estate or interest at the time when the same shall have become an estate or interest in possession, as if no such forfeiture or breach of condition had happened.

And by section 8 it is provided that a right to make an entry or distress, or to bring an action to recover any land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued in respect of an estate or interest in reversion at the time at which the same shall have become an estate or interest in possession by the determination of any estate or estates in respect of which such land shall have been held, or the profits thereof, or such rent shall have been received, notwithstanding the person claiming such land, or some person through whom he claims, shall, at any time previously to the creation of the estate or estates which shall have determined, have been in possession or receipt of the profits of such land, or in receipt of such rent.

this act, an administrator claiming the estate or interest of the deceased person of whose chattels he shall be appointed administrator, shall be deemed to claim as if there had been no interval of time between the death of such deceased person and the grant of letters of administration.

In case of a tenancy from year to year (without lease in writing), the statute runs from the end of the first year or the last payment of rent (which shall last happen).

In case of a lease in writing reserving more than 20*s.* rent, if the rent be received by a party wrongfully claiming the land, subject to the lease, and no payment of the rent be afterwards made to the party rightfully entitled, the statute runs from the time when the rent was first so received by the party wrongfully claiming; and the party rightfully entitled has no further right on the determination of the lease.

In the case of a tenancy at will, the statute runs from the determination of such tenancy, or at the expiration of one year next after the commencement of such tenancy, at which time the tenancy at will shall be deemed to have determined. But the clause provides that no mortgagor or cestui que trust shall be deemed a tenant at will, within the meaning of the act, to his mortgagee or trustee.

Section 10 enacts that no person shall be deemed to have been in possession of any land within the meaning of this act merely by reason of having made an entry thereon.

Section 11 enacts that no continual or other claim upon or near any land shall preserve any right of making an entry or distress, or of bringing an action.

Section 12 enacts that when any one or more of several persons entitled to any land or rent as coparceners, joint-tenants, or tenants in common, shall have been in possession or receipt of the entirety, or more than his or their undivided share or shares of such land, or of the profits thereof, or of such rent, for his or their own benefit, or for the benefit of any person or persons other than the person or persons entitled to the other share or shares of the same land or rent, such possession or receipt shall not be deemed to have been the possession or receipt of or by such last-mentioned person or persons, or any of them.

Section 13 enacts that when a younger brother, or other relation, of the person entitled as heir to the possession or receipt of the profits of any land or to the receipt of any rent, shall enter into the possession or receipt thereof, such possession or receipt shall not be deemed to be the possession or receipt of or by the person entitled as heir.

Section 14 provides and enacts that when any acknowledgment of the title of the person entitled to any land or rent shall have been given to him or his agent in writing signed by the person in possession or in receipt of the profits of such land, or in respect of such rent, then such possession or receipt of or by the person by whom such acknowledgment shall have been given, shall be deemed, according to the meaning of this act, to have been the possession or receipt of or by the person to whom or to whose agent such acknowledgment shall have been given at the time of giving the same, and the right of such last-mentioned person, or any person claiming through him, to make an entry or distress, or bring an action to recover such land or rent, shall be deemed to have first accrued at, and not before, the time at which such acknowledgment, or the last of such acknowledgments, if more than one, was given.

Section 15 gives a party claiming land or rent, of which he had been out of possession more than twenty years, five years from the time of passing the act within which to enforce his claim, where the possession was not adverse to his right or title at the time of passing the act.

By section 16, persons under disability of infancy, lunacy, coverture, or beyond seas, and their representatives, are to be allowed ten years from the termination of their disability or death to enforce their rights.

But by section 17, even though a person be under disability when his claim first accrues, he must enforce it within forty years, even though the disability continue during the whole of the forty years.

And by section 18 no further time is to be allowed for a succession of disabilities.

By section 19, no part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, nor the islands of Man, Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, and Sark, nor any adjacent island (being part of the dominions of his majesty), are to be deemed beyond seas.

By section 20, when the right of any person to recover any land or rent to which he may have been entitled, or an estate or interest in possession, shall have been barred by time, any right in reversion, or otherwise, which such person may during that time have had to the same land or rent, shall also be barred, unless in the mean time the land or rent shall have been recovered by some person entitled to an estate which shall have taken effect after or in defeasance of such estate or interest in possession.

Section 21 enacts that when the right of a tenant in tail of any land or rent shall have been barred, the right of any person claiming any estate or interest which such tenant in tail might have barred, shall also be barred.

Section 22 enacts that when any tenant in tail shall have died before the bar as against him is complete, no person claiming an estate or interest, etc., which such tenant in tail might have barred, shall enforce his claim but within the period within which the tenant in tail, had he lived, might have recovered.

Section 23 makes possession under an assurance by a tenant in tail, which shall not operate to bar the remainder, a bar to such remainders at the end of twenty years from the time when such assurance, if then exe cuted, would, without the consent of any other person, have barred them.

Section 24 enacts that no suit in equity shall be brought after the time when the plaintiff, if entitled at law, might have brought an action.

Section 25 enacts that in cases of express trust the right of the cestui que trust, or any person claiming through him, shall be deemed to have first accrued at the time when the land or rent may have been conveyed to a purchaser for a valuable consideration, and shall then be deemed to have accrued only against such purchaser, or any person claiming through him.

Section 26 enacts that in case of fraud the right shall be deemed to have first accrued at the time when such fraud shall be, or with reasonable diligence might have been, discovered, but that nothing in that clause shall affect a bonâ fide purchaser for value, not assisting in, and, at the time he purchased, not knowing, and having no reason to believe, such fraud had been committed.

Section 27 provides that the act shall not prevent the courts of equity refusing relief on the ground of acquiescence, or otherwise, to any person whose right to bring a suit may not be barred by the act.

Section 28 enacts that a mortgagor shall be barred by twenty years' possession of the mortgagee, unless there be an acknowledgment in writing.

Section 29 enacts that no land or rent shall be recovered by an ecclesiastical or eleemosynary corporation sole, but within the period during which two persons in succession shall have held the benefice, etc. in respect whereof such land or rent is claimed, and six years after a third person shall have been appointed thereto, if such two incumbencies and six years taken together shall amount to the full period of sixty years, but if they do not amount to sixty years, then during such further time in addition to the two incumbencies and six years as will make up the sixty years.

Section 30 enacts that no advowson or right of presentation shall be recovered but within the period during which three clerks in succession shall have held the same (all of whom shall have obtained possession thereof adversely to the right of the party claiming), if the three incumbencies shall together amount to sixty years, but if they do not amount to sixty years, then after such further time as with the incumbencies will together make up sixty years.

Section 31 provides that when on an avoidance after a clerk shall have obtained possession of a benefice adversely to the right of the patron, a clerk shall be presented or collated by reason of a lapse, such last-mentioned presentation shall be deemed adverse to the patron, but if such presentation be after promotion to a bishopric, it shall not be adverse to the patron.

Section 32 enacts that every person claiming a right in an advowson, which the tenant in tail thereof might have barred, shall be deemed a person claiming through such tenant in tail.

Section 33 enacts that an advowson shall not be recovered after one hundred years from the time at which a clerk shall have obtained possession thereof adversely to the right of the claimant, unless a clerk has subsequently had possession of the benefice on the presentation of some person having the same right.

Section 34 enacts that at the determination of the period limited by this act to any person for making any entry or distress, or bringing any writ of quare impedit, or other action or writ, the right and title of such person to the land, rent, or advowson, for the recovery whereof such entry, distress, action, or suit respectively, might have been made or brought within such period, shall be extinguished.

Section 35 enacts that the receipt of the rent payable by any tenant from year to year, or other lessee, shall, as against such lessee or any person claiming under him (but subject to the lease), be deemed to be the receipt of the profits of the land for the purposes of this act.

By section 36, all real and mixed actions are abolished after the 31st of December, 1834, except dower, right of dower, quare impedit, and ejectment.

But section 37 enables any person not having a right of entry on the 31st of December, 1834, to bring any real or mixed action, to which he was then entitled, at any time before the 1st of June, 1835.

And section 38 further provides that when on the 1st day of June, 1835, any person whose right of entry shall have been taken away by any descent cast, discontinuance, or warranty, might maintain any real action, he may maintain the same after the 1st day of June, 1835, but only within the period during which he might under the act have made an entry, if his right of entry had not been so taken away

And by section 39, no descent cast, discontinuance, or warranty shall, after the 31st of December, 1833, toll or defeat any right of entry or action for the recovery of land.

Section 40 enacts that money secured by mortgage, judgment, or lien, or otherwise, charged upon or payable out of any land or rent at law or in equity, or any legacy, shall not be recovered but within twenty years next after a present right shall have accrued to some person capable of giving a discharge for or releasing the same, unless there have been part payment in the mean time of principal or interest, or an acknowledgment in writing have been given, signed by the person by whom the same shall be payable, or his agent, to the person entitled thereto, or his agent, in which case the time runs from such payment or acknowledgment, or the last of them, if more than one.

Section 41 enacts that no arrears of dower, or any damages on account of such arrears shall be recovered but within six years before commencement of action or suit.

Section 42 enacts that no arrears of rent, or of interest in respect of any money charged upon any land or rent, or in respect of any legacy, or any damages in respect of such arrears of rent or interest, shall be recovered but within six years next after the same became due, or next after an acknowledgment of the same in writing shall have been given to the person entitled thereto, or his agent, signed by the person by whom the same was payable, or his agent, except where any prior mortgagee or incumbrancer shall have been in possession of the land mortgaged, or profits thereof, within one year next before any action or suit by a subsequent mortgagee or incumbrancer of the same land; in which case such subsequent mortgagee or incumbrancer may in such action or suit recover all arrears of interest which shall have become due during the time that the prior mortgagee or incumbrancer was in possession of the land or profits thereof.

Section 43 extends the act to the spiritual courts.

Section 44 enacts that the act shall not extend to Scotland, and that it shall not, so far as it relates to advowsons, extend to Ireland.

Of Criminal Proceedings. The time within which indictments may be found, or other proceedings commenced, for crimes and offences, varies considerably in the different jurisdictions. In general, in all jurisdictions, the length of time is extended in some proportion to the gravity of the offence. Indictments for murder, in most, if not all, of the states, may be found at any time during the life of the criminal after the death of the victim. Proceedings for less offences are to be commenced within periods varying from ten years to sixty days.

Of Estates. A circumscription of the quantity of time comprised in any estate. 1 Preston, Est. 25.

The definition or circumscription, in any conveyance, of the interest which the grantee is intended to take. The term is used by different writers in different senses. Thus, it is used by Lord Coke to denote the express definition of an estate by the words of its creation, so that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail. Coke, Litt. 23 b. In the work of Mr. Sanders on Uses, the term is used, however, in a broader and more general sense, as given in the second definition above. 1 Sanders, Uses, 4th ed. 121 et seq. And, indeed, the same writers do not always confine themselves to one use of the term; though the better usage is undoubtedly given by Mr. Stephen in his note above cited. And see Fearne, Cont. Rem. Butler's note n, 9th ed. 10; 1 Stephen, Comm. 5th ed. 304, note. For the distinctions between limitations and remainders, see CONDITIONAL LIMITATION; CONTINGENT REMAINDER.

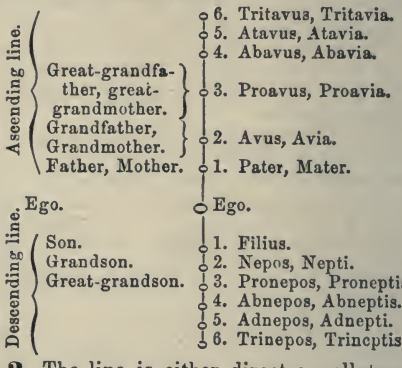
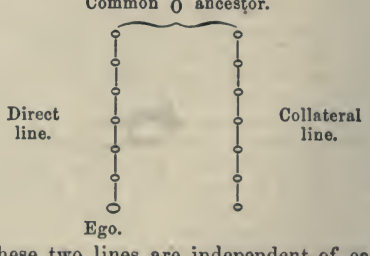
LINE. In Descents. The series of persons who have descended from a common ancestor, placed one under the other, in the order of their birth. It connects successively all the relations by blood to each other. See CONSANGUINITY; DEGREE.



2. The line is either direct or collateral. The direct line is composed of all the persons who are descended from each other. If, in the direct line, any one person is assumed as the propositus, in order to count from him upwards and downwards, the line will be divided into two parts, the ascending and descending lines. The ascending line is that which, counting from the propositus, ascends to his ancestors, to his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, etc. The descending line is that which, counting from the same person, descends to his children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, etc. The preceding table is an example.

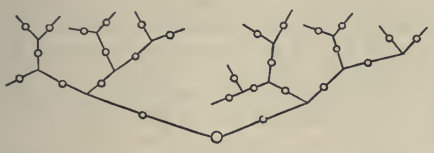
3. The collateral line, considered by itself and in relation to the common ancestor, is a direct line; it becomes collateral when placed alongside of another line below the common ancestor, in whom both lines unite. For example:



These two lines are independent of each other: they have no connection except by their union in the person of the common ancestor. This reunion is what forms the relation among the persons composing the two lines.

4. A line is also paternal or maternal. In the examination of a person's ascending line, the line ascends first to his father, next to his paternal grandfather, his paternal great-grandfather, etc., so on from father to father;

this is called the paternal line. Another line will be found to ascend from the same person to his mother, his maternal grandmother, and so from mother to mother: this is the maternal line. These lines, however, do not take in all the ascendants: there are many others who must be imagined. The number of ascendants is double at each degree, as is shown by the following diagram:



See 2 Blackstone, Comm. 200, b. 2, c. 14; Pothier, Des Successions, c. 1, art. 3, § 2; ASCENDANTS.

Estates. The division between two estates. Limit: border; boundary.

5. When a line is mentioned in a deed as ending at a particular monument (q. v.), it is to be extended in the direction called for, without regard to distance, until it reach the boundary. 1 Tayl. No. C. 110, 303; 2 id. 1; 2 Hawks, No. C. 219; 3 id. 21. And a marked line is to be adhered to although it depart from the course. 7 Wheat. 7; 2 Ov. Tenn. 304; 3 Call. Va. 239; 4 T. B. Monr. Ky. 29; 7 id. 333; 2 Bibb, Ky. 261; 4 id. 503. See, further, 2 Dan. Ky. 2; 6 Wend. N. Y. 467; 1 Bibb, Ky. 466; 3 Murph. No. C. 82; 13 Pick. Mass. 145; 13 Wend. N. Y. 300; 5 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 587.

6. Where a number of persons settle simultaneously or at short intervals in the same neighborhood, and their tracts, if extended in certain directions, would overlap each other, the settlers sometimes by agreement determine upon dividing lines, which are called consentible lines. These lines, when fairly agreed upon, have been sanctioned by the courts; and such agreements are conclusive upon all persons claiming under the parties to them, with notice, but not upon bonâ fide purchasers for a valuable consideration, without notice, actual or constructive. 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 323; 5 id. 273; 17 id. 57; 9 Watts & S. Penn. 66.

7. Lines fixed by compact between nations are binding on their citizens and subjects. 11 Pet. 209; 1 Ov. Tenn. 269; 1 Ves. Sen. Ch. 450; 1 Atk. Ch. 2; 2 id. 592; 1 Chanc. Cas. 85; 1 P. Will. 723–727; 1 Vern. Ch. 48; 1 Ves. Ch. 19; 2 id. 284; 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 331.

LINEA RECTA (Lat.). The perpendicular line; the direct line. The line of ascent, through father, grandfather, etc., and of descent, through son, grandson, etc. Coke, Litt. 10, 158; Bracton, fol. 67; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 11. This is represented in a diagram by a vertical line.

Where a person springs from another immediately, or mediately through a third person, they are said to be in the direct line (linea recta), and are called ascendants and descendants. Mackeldey, Civ. Law, § 129.

LINEA TRANSVERSALIS (Lat.). A line crossing the perpendicular lines. Where two persons are descended from a third, they are called collaterals, and are said to be related in the collateral line (linea transversa or obliqua).

LINEAL. In a direct line.

LINEAL WARRANTY. A warranty by ancestor from whom the title did or might have come to heir. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 301; Rawle, Cov. 30; 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 360. Thus, a warrant by an elder son during lifetime of father was lineal to a younger son, but a warranty by younger son was collateral to elder; for, though the younger might take the paternal estate through the elder, the elder could not take it through the younger. Litt. § 703. Abolished. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 74, § 14.

LINES AND CORNERS. In deeds and surveys. Boundary-lines and their angles with each other. 17 Miss. 459; 21 Ala. 66; 9 Fost. & H. N. H. 471; 10 Gratt. Va. 445; 16 Ga. 141.

LIQUIDATE. To pay; to settle. Webster, Dict.; 8 Wheat. 322. Liquidated damages are damages ascertained or agreed upon. Sedgwick, Meas. of Dam. 427 et seq.

LIQUIDATED DAMAGES. In Practice. Damages whose amount has been determined by anticipatory agreement between the parties.

Where there is an agreement between parties for the doing or not doing particular acts, the parties may, if they please, estimate beforehand the damages to result from a breach of the agreement, and prescribe in the agreement itself the sum to be paid by either by way of damages for such breach. See 1 H. Blackst. 232; 2 Bos. & P. 335, 350; 2 Brown, Parl. Cas. 431; 4 Burr. 2225; 2 Term. 32. The civil law appears to recognize such stipulations. Inst. 3. 16. 7; Toullier, l. 3, no. 809; La. Civ. Code, art. 1928, n. 5; Code Civile, 1152, 1153. Such a stipulation on the subject of damages differs from a penalty in this, that the parties are holden by it; whereas a penalty is regarded as a forfeiture, from which the defaulting party can be relieved.

2. The sum named in an agreement as damages to be paid in case of a breach will, in general, be considered as liquidated damages, or as a penalty, according to the intent of the parties; and the mere use of the words "penalty" or "liquidated damages" will not be decisive of the question, if on the whole the instrument discloses a different intent. Story, Eq. Jur. 1318; 6 Barnew. & C. 224; 6 Bingh. 141; 6 Ired. No. C. 186; 15 Me. 273; 2 Ala. N. S. 425; 8 Mo. 467.

Such a stipulation in an agreement will be considered as a penalty merely, and not as liquidated damages, in the following cases:

3. Where the parties in the agreement have expressly declared it or described it as a "penalty," and no other intent is clearly to be deduced from the instrument. 2 Bos.

& P. 340, 350, 630; 1 H. Blackst. 227; 1 Campb. 78; 7 Wheat. 14; 1 McMull. So. C. 106; 2 Ala. N. s. 425; 5 Metc. Mass. 61; 1 Pick. Mass. 451; 4 id. 179; 3 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 297; 17 Barb. N. Y. 260; 24 Vt. 97.

Where it is doubtful on the language of the instrument whether the stipulation was intended as a penalty or as liquidated damages. 3 Carr. & P. 240; 6 Humphr. Tenn. 186; 5 Sandf. N. Y. 192; 24 Vt. 97; 16 Ill. 475.

4. Where the agreement was evidently made for the attainment of another object or purpose, to which the stipulation is wholly collateral. 11 Mass. 488; 15 id. 488; 1 Brown, Ch. 418.

Where the agreement imposes several distinct duties, or obligations of different degrees of importance, and yet the same sum is named as damages for a breach of either indifferently. 6 Bingh. 141; 5 Bingh. N. c. 390; 7 Scott, 364; 5 Sandf. N. Y. 192. But see 7 Johns. N. Y. 72; 15 id. 200; 9 N. Y. 551.

Where the agreement is not under seal, and the damages are capable of being certainly known and estimated. 2 Barnew. & Ald. 704; 6 Barnew. & C. 216; 1 Mood. & M. 41; 4 Dall. Penn. 150; 5 Cow. N. Y. 144.

5. Where the instrument provides that a larger sum shall be paid upon default to pay a lesser sum in the manner prescribed. 5 Sandf. N. Y. 192, 640; 16 Ill. 400; 14 Ark. 329.

The stipulation will be sustained as liquidated damages in the following cases:

Where the agreement is of such a nature that the damages are uncertain, and are not capable of being ascertained by any satisfactory and known rule. 2 Term, 32; 1 Alc. & N. Ir. 389; 2 Burr. 2225; 10 Ves. Ch. 429; 3 Mees. & W. Exch. 535; 3 Carr. & P. 240; 8 Mass. 223; 7 Cow. N. Y. 307; 4 Wend. N. Y. 468; 5 Sandf. N. Y. 192; 12 Barb. N. Y. 137, 366; 18 id. 336; 14 Ark. 315; 2 Ohio St. 519.

Where, from the tenor of the agreement or from the nature of the case, it appears that the parties have ascertained the amount of damages by fair calculation and adjustment. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1318; 2 Greenleaf, Ev. 259; 1 Bingh. 302; 7 Conn. 291; 11 N. H. 234; 6 Blackf. Ind. 206; 13 Wend. N. Y. 507; 17 id. 447; 22 id. 201; 26 id. 630; 10 Mass. 459; 7 Metc. Mass. 583; 2 Ala. N. s. 425; 14 Me. 250.

See 2 W. Blackst. 1190; Cooper, Just. 606; 1 Chitty, Pract. 872; 2 Atk. 194; Finch. 117; Chanc. Prec. 102; 2 Brown, Parl. Cas. 436; Fonblanque, 151, 152, note; Chitty, Contr. 336; 11 N. H. 234; 11 Tex. 273; 14 Ark. 315; 37 Eng. L. & Eq. 122; 2 Abb. Pract. 449; Sedgwick, Dam. 3d ed. 417, 442, and cases cited.

LIQUIDATION. A fixed and determinate valuation of things which before were uncertain.

LIRA. The name of a foreign coin.

In all computations at the custom-house, the lira of Sardinia shall be estimated at eighteen cents and six mills, Act of March 22, 1846; the lira of the Lombardo-Venetian kingdom, and the lira of Tuscany, at sixteen cents. Act of March 22, 1846.

LIS MOTA (Lat.). A controversy begun, i.e. on the point at issue, and prior to commencement of judicial proceedings. Such controversy is taken to arise on the advent of the state of facts on which the claim rests; and after such controversy has arisen (post litem motam) no declarations of deceased members of family as to matters of pedigree are admissible. 6 Carr. & P. 560; 4 Campb. 417; 2 Russ. & M. Ch. 161; Greenleaf, Ev. §§ 131, 132; 4 Maule & S. 497; 1 Pet. 337; 26 Barb. N. Y. 177.

LIS PENDENS (Lat.). A pending suit. Suing out a writ and making attachment (on mesne process) constitutes a lis pendens at common law. 21 N. H. 570.

2. Filing the bill and serving a subpœna creates a lis pendens in equity, 1 Vern. Ch. 318; 7 Beav. Rolls, 444; 27 Mo. 560; 4 Sneed, Tenn. 672; 26 Miss. 397; 9 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 512; 22 Ala. N. s. 743; 7 Blackf. Ind. 242; Cross, Liens, 140, which the final decree terminates. 1 Vern. Ch. 318. In the civil law, an action is not said to be pending till it reaches the stage of contestatio lites. The phrase is sometimes used as a substitute for autre action pendant. See 1 La. Ann. 46; 21 N. H. 570; U. S. Dig. Lis Pendens; Autre Action Pendant.

The proceedings must relate directly to the specific property in question, 1 Strobh. Eq. So. C. 180; 7 Blackf. Ind. 242; 7 Md. 537; Story, Eq. Plead. § 351; 1 Hilliard, Vend. 411; and the rule applies to no other suits. 1 M'Cord, Ch. So. C. 252.

3. Filing a judgment creditor's bill constitutes a lis pendens. 4 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 29. A petition by heirs to sell real estate is not a lis pendens. 14 B. Monr. Ky. 164. The court must have jurisdiction over the thing. 1 McLean, C. C. 167.

Only unreasonable and unusual negligence in the prosecution of a suit will take away its character as a lis pendens, 18 B. Monr. Ky. 230; 11 id. 297; that there must be an active prosecution to keep it alive. 1 Vern. Ch. 286; 1 Russ. & M. 617.

Lis pendens is general notice of an equity to all the world. Ambl. 676; 2 P. Will. 282; 3 Atk. Ch. 343; 1 Vern. Ch. 286; 3 Hayw. No. C. 147; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 556.

4. A voluntary assignment during the pendency of a suit does not affect the rights of other parties, if not disclosed, except so far as the alien action may disable the party from performing the decree of the court, Story, Eq. Plead. § 351; 15 Tex. 495; 22 Barb. N. Y. 666: as in case of mortgage by tenant in common of his undivided interest, and subsequent partition. 2 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 98.

An involuntary assignment, as under the bankrupt or insolvent laws, renders the suit so defective that it cannot be prosecuted if the defendant objects. 7 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 287; 1 Atk. Ch. 88; 4 Ves. Ch. 387; 9 Wend. N. Y. 649; 1 Hare, 621; Story, Eq. Plead. § 349. Not if made under the bankrupt law of 1841. 27 Barb. N. Y. 252.

The same may be said of a voluntary assignment of all his interest by a sole complainant. 5 Hare, 223; Story, Eq. Plead. § 349.

5. An alienee, during the pendency of a suit, is bound by the proceedings therein subsequent to the alienation, though before he became a party. 4 Beav. Rolls, 40; 5 Mich. 456; 22 Barb. N. Y. 166; 27 Penn. St. 418; 5 Du. N. Y. 631; 7 Blackf. Ind. 242.

Purchasers during the pendency of a suit are bound by the decree in the suit without being made parties. 1 Swanst. 55; 4 Russ. 372; 1 Daniell, Ch. Pract. 375; Story, Eq. Plead. § 351 a; 32 Ala. N. s. 451; 11 Mo. 519; 30 Miss. 27; 12 La. Ann. 776; 6 Barb. N. Y. 133; 22 id. 166; 27 Penn. St. 418; 7 Eng. 421; 16 Ill. 225; 5 B. Monr. Ky. 323; 4 Dan. Ky. 99; 9 B. Monr. Ky. 220; 12 id. 600; 11 Ind. 443; 2 Hilliard, Vend. 311.

6. So also is a purchaser during a suit to avoid a conveyance as fraudulent. 5 T. B. Monr. Ky. 373; 6 B. Monr. Ky. 18.

Lis pendens by a mortgagor under a prior unrecorded mortgage is notice to a second mortgagee. 9 Ala. N. s. 921. But see 2 Rand. Va. 93.

The rule does not apply where a title imperfect before suit brought is perfected during its pendency. 4 Cow. N. Y. 667; 14 Ohio, 323.

A debtor need not pay to either party pendente lite. 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 490.

The doctrine of lis pendens is an equitable doctrine.

7. In law, the same effect is produced by the rule that each purchaser takes the title of his vendor only. 11 Md. 519; 27 Penn. St. 418; 6 Barb. N. Y. 133; 30 Miss. 27; 5 Mich. 456; 1 Hilliard, Vend. 411. The doctrine of lis pendens is modified in many of the states of the United States, and by statutes requiring records of the attachment to preliminary proceedings to be made, and constituting such records notice. See stat. 2 Vict. c. 11, § 7; and Rev. Statutes of the various states.

LIST. A table of cases arranged for trial or argument: as, the trial list, the argument list. See 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3031.

LISTERS. This word is used in some of the states to designate the persons appointed to make lists of taxables. See Vt. Rev. Stat. 538.

LITERÆ PROCURATORIÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. Letters procuratory. A written authority, or power of attorney (litera attornati), given to a procurator. Vicat, Voc. Jur. Utr.; Bracton, fol. 40–43.

LITERAL CONTRACT. In Civil Law. A contract the whole of the evidence of which is reduced to writing. This contract is perfected by the writing, and binds the party who subscribed it, although he has received no consideration. Leç. Elém. § 887.

LITERARY PROPERTY. The general term which describes the interest of an author in his works, or of those who claim under him, whether before or after publication, or before or after a copyright has been secured. See COPYRIGHT; MANUSCRIPT; Curtis on Copyright; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 405, 406; 4 Viner, Abr. 278; Bacon, Abr. Prorogation (F 5); 2 Kent, Comm. 306–315; 1 Belt, Suppl. Ves. Jr. 360, 376; 2 id. 469; Nicklin, Lit. Prop.; Dane, Abr. Index; 1 Chitty, Pract. 98; 2 Am. Jur. 248; 10 id. 62; 1 Phil. Law Int. 66; 1 Bell, Comm. b. 1, part 2, c. 4, s. 2, p. 115; 1 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 508 et seq.

LITIGANT. One engaged in a suit; one fond of litigation.

LITIGATION. A contest, authorized by law, in a court of justice, for the purpose of enforcing a right.

In order to prevent injustice, courts of equity will retain a party from further litigation, by a writ of injunction: for example, after two verdicts on trials at bar, in favor of the plaintiff, a perpetual injunction was decreed. Strange, 404. And not only between two individuals will a court of equity grant this relief, as in the above case of several ejectments, but also, when one general legal right, as a right of fishery, is claimed against several distinct persons, in which case there would be no end of bringing actions, since each action would only bind the particular right in question between the plaintiff and defendant in such action, without deciding the general right claimed. 2 Atk. Ch. 484; 2 Ves. Ch. 587. See CIRCUITY OF ACTIONS.

LITIGIOSITY. In Scotch Law. The pendency of a suit: it is an implied prohibition of alienation, to the disappointment of an action, or of diligence, the direct object of which is to obtain possession, or to acquire the property of a particular subject. The effect of it is analogous to that of inhibition. 2 Bell, Comm. 5th ed. 152.

LITIGIOUS. That which is the subject of a suit or action; that which is contested in a court of justice. In another sense, litigious signifies a disposition to sue; a fondness for litigation.

LITIGIOUS RIGHTS. In French Law. Those which are or may be contested either in whole or in part, whether an action has been commenced, or when there is reason to apprehend one. Pothier, Vente, n. 584; 9 Mart. La. 183; Troplong, De la Vente, n. 984 à 1003; Eva. Civ. Code, art. 2623; id. 3522, n. 22. See CONTENTIOUS JURISDICTION.

LITISPENDENCIA. In Spanish Law. The condition of a suit pending in a court of justice.

In order to render this condition valid, it is necessary that the judge be competent to take cognizance of the cause; that the defendant has been duly cited to appear, and fully informed, in due time and form, of the nature of the demand, or that, if he has not, it has been through his own fault or fraud.

The litispendencia produces two effects: the legal impossibility of alienating the property in dispute during the pendency of the suit; the accumulation of all the proceedings in the cause, in the tribunal where the suit is pending, whether the same be had before the same judge or other judges or notaries. This cumulation may be required in any stage of the cause, and forms a valid exception to the further proceeding, until the cumulation is effected. Escriche, Dict.

LITRE. A French measure of capacity. It is of the size of a décimètre, or one-tenth part of a cubic mètre. It is equal to 61.028 cubic inches. See MEASURE.

LITTORAL (littus). Belonging to shore: as, of sea and great lakes. Webst. Corresponding to riparian proprietors on a stream or small pond are littoral proprietors on a sea or lake. But riparian is also used coextensively with littoral. 7 Cush. Mass. 94. See 17 How. 426.

LITUS MARIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Shore; beach. Quá fluctus eluderet. Cic. Top. c. 7. Quá fluctus adludit. Quinct. lib. 5, c. ult. Quousque maximus fluctus a mari pervenit. Celsus; said to have been first so defined by Cicero, in an award as arbitrator. L. 92, D, de verb. signif. Quá maximus fluctus excæstuat. L. 112, D, eod. tit. Quatenus hibernus fluctus maximus excurrit. Inst. lib. 2, de rer. divis. et qual. § 3. That is to say, as far as the largest winter wave runs up. Vocab. Jur. Utr.

At Common Law. The shore between common high-water mark and low-water mark. Hale, de Jure Maris, cc. 4, 5, 6; 3 Kent, Comm. 427; 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 90.

Shore is also used of a river. 5 Wheat. 385; 20 Wend. N. Y. 149. See 13 How. 381; 28 Me. 180; 14 Penn. St. 171.

LIVERY. In English Law. The delivery of possession of lands to those tenants who hold of the king in capita or by knight's service.

The name of a writ which lay for the heir of age to obtain possession of the seisin of his lands at the king's hands. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 155; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 68.

The distinguishing dress worn by the servants of a gentleman or nobleman, or by the members of a particular guild. "Livery or clothing." Say. 274. By stat. 1 Rich. II. c. 7, and 16 Rich. II. c. 4, none but the servants of a lord, and continually dwelling in his house, or those above rank of yeomen, should wear the lord's livery.

Privilege of a particular company or guild. Wharton, Lex. 2d Lond. ed.

LIVERY OF SEISIN. In Estates. A delivery of possession of lands, tenements, and hereditaments unto one entitled to the same. This was a ceremony used in the common law for the conveyance of real estate; and livery was in deed, which was performed by the feoffor and the feoffee going upon the land and the latter receiving it from the former; or in law, where the same was not made on the land, but in sight of it. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 315, 316.

In most of the states, livery of seisin is unnecessary, it having been dispensed with either by express law or by usage. The recording of the deed has the same effect. Washburn, Real Prop. 14, 35. In Maryland, however, it seems that a deed cannot operate as a feoffment without livery of seisin. 5 Harr. & J. Md. 158. See 4 Kent, Comm. 381; 1 Mo. 553; 1 Pet. 508; 1 Bay, So. C. 107; 5 Harr. & J. 158; 11 Me. 318; Dane, Abr.; SEISIN.

LIVRE TOURNOIS. In Common Law. A coin used in France before the revolution. It is to be computed, in the ad valorem duty on goods, etc., at eighteen and a half cents. Act of March 2, 1798, § 61, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 629. See FOREIGN COINS.

LOADMANAGE. The pay to loadsmen; that is, persons who sail or row before ships, in barks or small vessels, with instruments for towing the ship and directing her course, in order that she may escape the dangers in her way. Pothier, Des Avaries, n. 137; Guidon de la Mer, c. 14; Bacon, Abr. Merchant and Merchandise (F). It is not in use in the United States.

LOAN. A bailment without reward. A bailment of an article for use or consumption without reward. The thing so bailed.

A loan, in general, implies that a thing is lent without reward; but, in some cases, a loan may be for a reward: as, the loan of money. 7 Pet. 109.

It would be an inquiry too purely speculative, whether this use of the term loan originated in the times when taking interest was considered usury and improper, the bailment of money which was to be returned in kind. The supposition would furnish a reasonable explanation of the exception to the general rule that loan includes properly only those bailments where no reward is given or received by the bailee.

In order to make a contract usurious, there must be a loan, Cowp. 112, 770; 1 Ves. Ch. 527; 2 Blackstone, 859; 3 Wils. 390; and the borrower must be bound to return the money at all events. 2 Schoales & L. Ch. Ir. 470. The purchase of a bond or note is not a loan, 3 Schoales & L. Ch. Ir. 469; 9 Pet. 103; but if such a purchase be merely colorable, it will be considered as a loan. 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 60, 66; 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 46; 15 Johns. N. Y. 44.

LOAN FOR CONSUMPTION. A contract by which the owner of a personal chattel, called the lender, delivers it to the bailee, called the borrower, to be returned in kind.

For example, if a person borrows a bushel of wheat, and at the end of a month returns to the lender a bushel of equal value. This class of loans is commonly considered under the head of bailments; but it lacks the one essential element of bailment, that of a return of the property: it is more strictly a barter or an exchange: the property passes to the borrower. 4 N. Y. 76; 8 id. 433; 1 Ohio St. 98; 3 Mas. C. C. 478; 1 Blackf. Ind. 353; Story, Bailm. § 439. Those cases sometimes called ventuum (the corresponding civil law term), such as where corn is delivered to a miller to be ground into wheat, are either cases of hiring of labor and service, as where the miller grinds and returns the identical wheat ground into flour, retaining a portion for his services, or constitute a mere exchange, as where he mixes the wheat with his own, undertaking to furnish an equivalent in corn. It amounts to a contract of sale, payment being stipulated for in a specified article instead of money.

LOAN FOR USE (called, also, commodatum). A bailment of an article to be used by the borrower without paying for the use. 2 Kent, Comm. 4th ed. 573.

Loan for use (called commodatum in the civil law) differs from a loan for consumption (called mutuum in the civil law) in this, that the commodatum must be specifically returned, the mutuum is to be returned in kind. In the case of a commodatum, the property in the thing remains in the lender; in a mutuum, the property passes to the borrower.

2. The loan, like other bailments, must be of some thing of a personal nature, Story, Bailm. § 223; it must be gratuitous, 2 Ld. Raym. 913, for the use of the borrower, and this as the principal object of the bailment, Story, Bailm. § 225; 13 Vt. 161; and must be lent to be specifically returned at the determination of the bailment. Story, Bailm. § 228.

The general law of contracts governs as to the capacity of the parties and the character of the use. Story, Bailm. §§ 50, 162, 302, 380. He who has a special property may loan the thing, and this even to the general owner, and the possession of the general owner still be that of a borrower. 1 Atk. Ch. 235; 8 Term, 199; 2 Taunt. 268.

3. The borrower may use the thing himself, but may not, in general, allow others to use it, 1 Mod. 210; 4 Sandf. N. Y. 8, during the time and for the purposes and to the extent contemplated by the parties. 5 Mass. 104; 1 Const. So. C. 121; 3 Bingh. N. C. 468; Bracton, 99, 100. He is bound to use extraordinary diligence, 3 Bingh. N. C. 468; 14 Ill. 84; 4 Sandf. N. Y. 8; is responsible for accidents, though inevitable, which injure the property during any excess of use, 5 Mass. 194; 16 Ga. 25; must bear the ordinary expenses of the thing, Jones, Bailm. 67, and restore it at the time and place and in the manner contemplated by the contract, 16 Ga. 25; 12 Tex. 373; Story, Bailm. § 99; including, also, all accessories. 16 Ga. 25; 2 Kent, Comm. 4th ed. 566. As to the place of delivery, see 9 Barb. N. Y. 189; 1 Me. 120; 1 N. H. 295; 1 Conn. 255; 5 id. 76; 16 Mass. 453; Chipman, Contr. 25. He must, as a general rule, return it to the lender. 7 Cow. N. Y. 278; 1 Barnew. & Ad. 450; 11 Mass. 211.

4. The lender may terminate the loan at his pleasure, 9 East, 49; 1 Term, 480; 9 Cow. N. Y. 687; 8 Johns. N. Y. 432; 16 Ga. 25; is perhaps liable for expenses adding a permanent benefit. Story, Bailm. § 274. The lender still retains his property as against third persons, and, for some purposes, his possession, 11 Johns. N. Y. 285; 6 id. 195; 13 id. 141, 561; 7 Cow. N. Y. 753; 9 id. 687; 1 Pick. Mass. 389; 5 Mass. 303; 1 Term, 480; 2 Campb. 464; 2 Bingh. 172; 1 Barnew. & Ald. 59; 2 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 659. As to whether the property is transferred by a recovery of judgment for its value, see 26 Eng. L. & Eq. 328; 2 Strange, 1078; Metc. Yelv. 67, n.; 5 Me. 147; 1 Pick. Mass. 62. See, generally, Edwards, Jones, Story, on Bailments; Kent, Comm. Lect. 46; Chipman, Contr.

LOAN SOCIETIES. In English Law. A kind of club formed for the purpose of advancing money on loan to the industrial classes. They are of comparatively recent origin in England, and are authorized and regulated by 3 & 4 Vict. ch. 110, & 21 Vict. ch. 19.

LOCAL ACTION. In Practice. An action the cause of which could have arisen in some particular county only.

All local actions must be brought in the county where the cause of action arose.

In general, all actions are local which seek the recovery of real property, 2 W. Blackst. 1070; 4 Term, 504; 7 id. 589; whether founded upon contract or not; or damages for injury to such property as waste, under the statute of Gloucester, trespass quare clausum fregit, trespass or case for injuries affecting things real, as for nuisances to houses or lands, disturbance of rights of way or of common, obstruction or diversion of ancient water-courses, 1 Chitty, Plead. 271; Gould, Plead. ch. 3, §§ 105, 106, 107; but not if there were a contract between the parties on which to ground an action. 15 Mass. 284; 1 Day, Conn. 263.

Many actions arising out of injuries to local rights are local: as, quare impedit. 1 Chitty, Plead. 241. The action of replevin is also local. 1 Wms. Saund. 247, n. 1; Gould, Plead. c. 3, § 111. See Gould and Chitty, Pleading; Comyns, Dig. Action; TRANSITORY ACTION.

LOCAL ALLEGIANCE. The allegiance due to a government from an alien while within its limits. Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 370; 2 Kent, Comm. 63, 64.

LOCAL STATUTES. Statutes whose operation is intended to be restricted within certain limits. Dwarris on Stat. p. 384. It may be either public or private. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 85, 86, n. Local statutes is used by Lord Mansfield as opposed to personal statutes, which relate to personal transitory contracts; whereas local statutes refer to things in a certain jurisdiction alone: e. g. the Statute of Frauds relates only to things in England. 1 W. Blackst. 246.

LOCALITY. In Scotch Law. This name is given to a life rent created in marriage contracts in favor of the wife, instead of leaving her to her legal life rent of terce. 1 Bell, Comm. 55. See JOINTURE.

LOCATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. Letting for hire. Calv. Lex.; Voc. Jur. Utr. The term is also used by text-writers upon the law of bailment at common law. 1 Parsons, Contr. 602. In Scotch law it is translated location. Bell, Dict.

LOCATIO MERCIUM VEHENDARUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The carriage of goods for hire.

In respect to contracts of this sort entered into by private persons not exercising the business of common carriers, there does not seem to be any material distinction varying the rights, obligations, and duties of the parties from those of other bailees for hire. Every such private person is bound to ordinary diligence and a reasonable exercise of skill; and of course he is not responsible for any losses not occasioned by ordinary negligence, unless he has expressly, by the terms of his contract, taken upon himself such risk. 2 Ld. Raym. 909, 917, 918; 4 Taunt. 787; 6 id. 577; 2 Marsh. 293; Jones, Bailm. 103, 106, 121; 2 Bos. & P. 417; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1020. See COMMON CARRIER.

LOCATIO OPERIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The hiring of labor and services.

It is a contract by which one of the parties gives a certain work to be performed by the other, who binds himself to do it for the price agreed between them, which he who gives the work to be done promises to pay to the other for doing it. Pothier, Louage, n. 392. This is divided into two branches: first, locatio operis faciendi; and, secondly, locatio mercium vehendarum. See these words.

LOCATIO OPERIS FACIENDI (Lat.). In Civil Law. Hire of services to be performed.

There are two kinds: first, the locatio operis faciendi strictly so called, or the hire of labor and services; such as the hire of tailors to make clothes, and of jewellers to set gems, and of watchmakers to repair watches. Jones, Bailm. 90, 96, 97. Secondly, locatio custodiæ, or the receiving of goods on deposit for a reward, which is properly the hire of care and attention about the goods. Story, Bailm. §§ 422, 442; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 994.

In contracts for work, it is of the essence of the contract, first, that there should be work to be done; secondly, for a price or reward; and, thirdly, a lawful contract between parties capable and intending to contract. Pothier, Louage, nn. 395–403.

LOCATIO REI (Lat.). In Civil Law. The hiring of a thing. It is a contract by which one of the parties obligates himself to give to the other the use and enjoyment of a certain thing for a period of time agreed upon between them, and in consideration of a price which the latter binds himself to pay in return. Poth. Contr. de Louage, n. 1. See BAILMENT; HIRE; HIRER; LETTER.

LOCATION. In Scotch Law. A contract by which the temporary use of a subject, or the work or service of a person, is given for an ascertained hire. 1 Bell, Comm. b. 2, pt. 3, c. 2, s. 4, art. 2, § 1, page 255. See BAILMENT; HIRE.

At Common Law. The act of selecting and designating lands which the person making the location is authorized by law to select.

It is applied among surveyors who are authorized by public authority to lay out lands by a particular warrant. The act of selecting the land designated in the warrant and surveying it is called its location. In Pennsylvania, it is an application made by any person for land, in the office of the secretary of the late land office of Pennsylvania, and entered in the books of said office, numbered and sent to the surveyor-general's office. Act June 25, 1781, § 2. It is often applied to denote the act of selecting and marking out the line upon which a railroad, canal, or highway is to be constructed.

LOCATIVE CALLS. Calls describing certain means by which the land to be located can be identified.

Reference to physical objects in entries and deeds, by which the land to be located is exactly described. 2 Bibb, Ky. 145; 3 id. 414.

Special, as distinguished from general, calls or descriptions. 3 Bibb, Ky. 414; 2 Wheat. 211; 10 id. 463; 7 Pet. 171; 18 Wend. N.Y. 157; 16 Johns. N.Y. 257; 17 id. 29; 10 Gratt. Va. 445; Jones, Law, No. C. 469; 16 Ga. 141; 5 Ind. 302; 15 Mo. 80; 2 Bibb, Ky. 118.

LOCATOR. In Civil Law. He who leases or lets a thing to hire to another. His duties are, first, to deliver to the hirer the thing hired, that he may use it; second, to guarantee to the hirer the free enjoyment of it; third, to keep the thing hired in good order in such manner that the hirer may enjoy it; fourth, to warrant that the thing hired has not such defects as to destroy its use. Pothier, Contr. de Louage, n. 53.

LOCK-UP HOUSE. A place used temporarily as a prison.

LOCO PARENTIS. See IN LOCO PARENTIS.

LOCUS CONTRACTUS. See LEX LOCI.

LOCUS DELICTI. The place where the tort, offence, or injury has been committed.

LOCUS PŒNITENTIÆ (Lat. a place of repentance). The opportunity of withdrawing from a projected contract, before the parties are finally bound; or of abandoning the intention of committing a crime, before it has been completed. 2 Brown, Ch. 569. See ATTEMPT.

LOCUS IN QUO (Lat. the place in which). In Pleading. The place where any thing is alleged to have been done. 1 Salk. 94.

LOCUS REI SITÆ. See LEX REI SITÆ.

LOCUS SIGILLI (Lat.). The place of the seal.

In many of the states, instead of sealing deeds, writs, and other papers or documents requiring it, a scroll is made, in which the letters L. S. are printed or written, which is an abbreviation of Locus sigilli. This, in some of the states, has all the efficacy of a seal, but in others it has no such effect. See SCROLL; SEAL.

LODGER. One who inhabits a portion of a house of which another has the general possession and custody.

It is difficult, in the present state of the law, to state exactly the distinctions between a lodger, a guest, and a boarder. A person may be a guest at an inn without being a lodger. 1 Salk. 388; 9 Pick. Mass. 280; 25 Wend. N. Y. 653; 5 Sandf. N. Y. 242; 16 Ala. N. S. 666; 8 Blackf. Ind. 535; 14 Barb. N. Y. 193; 6 C. B. 132. And boarder includes one who regularly takes his meals with, and forms in some degree a part of, the householder's family. See BOARDER; GUEST; 25 Eng. L. & Eq. 76. A lodger does not take meals in the house as lodger; but the duration of the inhabitancy is of no importance as determining his character. The difficulty in this respect is in deciding whether a person is an under-tenant, entitled to notice to quit, or merely a lodger, and not entitled to such notice. See Woodfall, Landl. & T. 177; 7 Mann. & G. 87.

LODS ET RENTES. A fine payable to the seigneur upon every sale of lands within his seigniory. 1 Low. C. 59.

Any transfer of lands for a consideration gives rise to the claim, 1 Low. C. 79: as, the creation of a rente viagire (life-rent), 1 Low. C. 84; a transfer under bail emphyteotique, 1 Low. C. 295; a promise to sell, accompanied by transfer of possession. 9 Low. C. 272. It does not arise on a transfer by a father to his son subject to a payment by the son of a life-rent to the father, and of the father's debts, 8 Low. C. 5, 34, 324; nor where property is required for public uses. 1 Low. C. 91.

LOG-BOOK. A ship's journal. It contains a minute account of the ship's course, with a short history of every occurrence during the voyage. 1 Marshall, Ins. 408.

When a log-book is required by law to be kept, it is an official register so far as regards the transactions required by law to be entered in it, but no further. Abbott, Shipp. 468, n. 1; 1 Sumn. C. C. 373; 2 id. 19, 78; 4 Mas. C. C. 544; 1 Esp. 427; 1 Dods. Adm. 9; 2 Hagg. Eccl. 159; Gilp. Dist. Ct. 147.

In suits for seamen's wages, the log-book is to be produced if required, or otherwise the complainant may state its contents. The neglect of a seaman to render himself on board, and his absence without leave, are also to be entered on the log-book in certain cases, or the sailor's fault will not forfeit his wages. Act 20 July, 1790, sects. 2, 5, & 6.

It is the duty of the mate to keep the log-book. Dana's Seamen's Friend, 145, 200. See Brightly's Dig. U. S. Laws, Log-Book.

LOQUELA (Lat.). In Practice. An imparlance, loquela sine die, a respite in law to an indefinite time. Formerly by loquela was meant the allegations of fact mutually made on either side, now denominated the pleadings. Stephen, Plead. 29.

LORD'S DAY. Sunday. Coke, Litt. 135. See MAXIMS, Dies Dominicus.

LORD MAYOR'S COURT. In English Law. One of the chief courts of special and local jurisdiction in London. It is a court of the queen, held before the lord mayor and aldermen. Its practice and procedure are amended and its powers enlarged by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 157. In this court, the recorder, or, in his absence, the common serjeant, presides as judge; and from its judgments error may be brought in the exchequer chamber. 3 Stephen, Comm. 449, note l.

LOSS. In Insurance. The destruction of or damage to the insured subject by the perils insured against, according to the express provisions and construction of the contract.

These accidents, or misfortunes, or perils, as they are usually denominated, are all distinctly enumerated in the policy. And no loss, however great or unforeseen, can be a loss within the policy unless it be the direct and immediate consequence of one or more of these perils. Marshall, Ins. 1, c. 12.

Loss under a life policy is simply the death of the subject by a cause the risk of which is not expressly excepted in the policy, and where the loss is not fraudulent, as where one assured, who assures the life of another for his own benefit, procures the death.

Loss in insurance against fire must, under the usual form of policy, be by the partial or total destruction or damage of the thing insured by fire.

In maritime insurance, in which loss by fire is one of the risks usually included, the loss insured against may be absolutely or constructively total, or a partial or general average loss, or a particular average.

A partial loss is any loss or damage short of, or not amounting to, a total loss; for if it be not the latter it must be the former. See 4 Mass. 374; 6 id. 102, 122, 317; 12 id. 170, 288; 8 Johns. N. Y. 237; 10 id. 487; 5 Binn. Penn. 595; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 553.

A total loss is such destruction of, or damage to, the thing insured that it is of little or no value to the owner.

Partial losses are sometimes denominated average losses, because they are often in the nature of those losses which are the subject of average contributions; and they are distinguished into general and particular averages. See AVERAGE.

Total losses, in maritime insurance, are absolutely such when the entire thing perishes or becomes of no value. Constructively, a loss may become total where the value remaining is of such a small amount that the whole may be surrendered. See ABANDONMENT.

Consult Phillips, Arnold, Insurance; Parsons, Marit. Law; TOTAL LOSS.

LOST PAPERS. Papers which have been so mislaid that they cannot be found after diligent search.

2. When deeds, wills, agreements, and the like, have been lost, and it is desired to prove their contents, the party must prove that he has made diligent search, and in good faith exhausted all sources of information accessible to him. For this purpose his own affidavit is sufficient. 1 Atk. Ch. 446; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 349. On being satisfied of this, the court will allow secondary evidence to be given of its contents. See EVIDENCE.

3. Even a will proved to be lost may be admitted to probate upon secondary evidence. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. 2d ed. §§ 84, 509, 575; 2 id. § 668 a. But the fact of the loss must be proved by the clearest evidence; because it may have been destroyed by the testator animo revocandi. 8 Metc. Mass. 487; 2 Add. Eccl. 223; 6 Wend. N. Y. 173; 1 Hagg. Eccl. 115; 3 Pick. Mass. 67; 5 B. Monr. Ky. 58; 2 Curt. Eccl. 913.

4. When a bond or other deed was lost, formerly the obligee or plaintiff was compelled to go into equity to seek relief, because there was no remedy at law, the plaintiff being required to make profert in his declaration. 1 Chanc. Cas. 77. But in process of time courts of law dispensed with profert in such cases, and thereby obtained concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of chancery: so that now the loss of any paper, other than a negotiable note, will not prevent the plaintiff from recovering at law, as well as in equity. 3 Atk. 214; 1 Ves. Ch. 341; 5 id. 235; 6 id. 812; 7 id. 19; 3 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 54.

5. When a negotiable note has been lost, equity alone will, in the absence of statutory provisions, grant relief. In such case the claimant must tender an indemnity to the debtor, and file a bill in chancery to compel payment. 7 Barnew. & C. 90; Ry. & M. 90; 4 Taunt. 602; 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 317; 16 Ves. Ch. 430.

LOST, OR NOT LOST. A phrase in policies of insurance, signifying the contract to be retrospective and applicable to any loss within the specified risk, provided the same is not already known to either of the parties, and that neither has any knowledge or information not equally obvious or known to the other. The clause has been adopted only in maritime insurance; though a fire or life policy is not unfrequently retrospect, or, under a different phrascology, by a provision that the risk is to commence at some time prior to its date. 1 Phillips, Ins. § 925.

LOT. That which fortuitously determines what we are to acquire.

When it can be certainly known what are our rights, we ought never to resort to a decision by lot; but when it is impossible to tell what actually belong to us, as if an estate is divided into three parts and one part given to each of three persons, the proper way to ascertain each one's part is to draw lots. Wolff, Dr. etc. de la Nat. § 669.

LOT OF GROUND. A small piece of land in a town or city, usually employed for building, a yard, a garden, or such other urban use. Lots are in-lots, or those within the boundary of the city or town, and out-lots, those which are out of such boundary and which are used by some of the inhabitants of such town or city.

LOTTERY. A scheme for the distribution of prizes by chance. The American Art Union is a lottery, 8 N. Y. 228, 240; and so is a gift-sale of books. 33 N. H. 329.

2. In most, if not all, of the United States, lotteries not specially authorized by the legislatures of the respective states are prohibited, and the persons concerned in establishing them are subjected to a heavy penalty. This is the case in Alabama, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, Massachusetts, Mississippi, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Vermont, and Virginia. In Louisiana, a license is granted to sell tickets in a lottery not authorized by the legislature of that state, on the payment of five thousand dollars, and the license extends only to one lottery. In many of the states, the lotteries authorized by other states are absolutely prohibited. Encyc. Amer.

LOUISIANA. The name of one of the new states of the United States of America.

2. It covers a part of the territory ceded by France to the United States by the treaty of the 13th April, 1803. It was admitted into the Union by an act of congress approved on the 8th April, 1812, with the following limits: beginning at the mouth of the river Sabine, thence by a line to be drawn along the middle of said river, including all islands, to the thirty-second degree of latitude; thence due north to the northernmost part of the thirty-third degree of north latitude; thence along the said parallel of latitude to the river Mississippi; thence down the said river to the river Iberville: and from thence along the middle of said river to lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain, to the Gulf of Mexico; thence, bounded by said gulf, to the place of beginning, including all islands within three leagues of the coast. These limits were enlarged by virtue of an act of congress, with the consent of the legislature of the state, approved on the 14th April, 1812, by adding all that tract of country comprehended within the following bounds, to wit: beginning with the junction of the Iberville with the river Mississippi, thence along the middle of the Iberville, the river Amite, and the lakes Maurepas and Pontchartrain, to the eastern mouth of the Pearl river; thence up the eastern branch of Pearl river to the thirty-first degree of north latitude; thence along the said degree of latitude to the river Mississippi; thence down the said river to the place of beginning. The territory thus added to the limits of the state had, up to that time, been subject to the dominion of Spain, and the parishes into which it has been divided are, for this reason, still called, in popular language, "the Florida parishes."

3. The first constitution of the state was adopted on the 22d January, 1812, and was substantially copied from the constitution of Kentucky. This constitution was superseded by that of 1845, which was in its turn replaced by that adopted on the 31st July, 1852, now in force.

Every free white male citizen of the United States, who is twenty-one years old or more, who has been a resident of the state for twelve months and of the district in which he offers to vote six months, is a voter, and is privileged from arrest, except for treason, felony, or breach of the peace, while going to or returning from the place of election.

The Legislative Power.

This is lodged in a Senate and House of Representatives, together constituting the General Assembly.

The Senate is composed of thirty-two members, elected one from each of the districts into which the state is divided, by the people of the district, for the term of two years. A senator must be an elector, and a member of the district for which he is chosen.

The House of Representatives is to be composed of not more than one hundred nor less than seventy members chosen by the people for the term of two years, with provision that they shall be apportioned according to population, and that a new apportionment shall be made in 1863.

The Executive Power.

4. The Governor is elected by the people, for four years. If two persons have an equal and the highest number of votes, the selection is to be made between these by a joint vote of the general assembly. He must be twenty-eight years old at least, and a citizen and resident within the state for four years next before the election. He is ineligible for the succeeding term. He is commander-in-chief of the army and navy and militia of the state, except when called into the service of the United States; is to take care that the laws be faithfully executed; must give to the general assembly information respecting the situation of the state, and recommend such measures as he may deem expedient; has power to grant reprieves for all offences against the state; with the consent of the senate, has power to grant pardons, and remit fines and forfeitures, after conviction, except in cases of impeachment; in cases of treason, may grant reprieves until the end of the next session of the general assembly, in which the pardoning power is vested; is to nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, appoint, all officers established by the constitution, whose mode of appointment is not otherwise prescribed by the constitution, nor by the legislature; has power to fill vacancies during the recess of the senate, provided he appoint no one whom the senate has rejected for the same office; may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the general assembly at the seat of government, or at a different place, if that should have become dangerous from an enemy or from an epidemic, and in case of disagreement between the two houses as to the time of adjournment, may adjourn them to such time as he may think proper, not exceeding four months. He has the veto power, but must return the bill vetoed with his objections, and it may still become a law by vote of two-thirds of the members of each house. Const. tit. iii.

5. The Lieutenant-Governor is elected by the people at the same time, for the same term, and must possess the same qualifications, as the governor. He is president of the senate by virtue of his office, and has the casting vote. In case of the incapacity of the governor, his death, removal from office, resignation, or absence from the state, refusal or inability to qualify, he is to act as governor.

The Secretary of State is elected by the people for the term of four years.

The Treasurer is elected by the people for the term of two years.

The Judicial Power.

The Supreme Court consists of a chief-justice, elected by the people of the state at large for the term of ten years, and four associate justices, elected, one in each of the four districts into which the state is divided, for the term of eight years. The associate justices are so classified that one goes out of office every two years. It has appellate jurisdiction of all civil cases where the amount in dispute is more than three hundred dollars, or where the constitutionality of any duty, tax, or impost, or any fine, penalty, or forfeiture imposed by a municipal court, is brought in question; and in criminal cases where the punishment is death, imprisonment at hard labor, or a fine exceeding three hundred dollars. Its civil remedial jurisdiction extends both to law and fact, and it may reverse the verdict of a jury, and render a final decree in opposition to the finding of the jury. In criminal cases it corrects errors of law only. It has only an appellate jurisdiction, but may issue the writ of habeas corpus. It holds one term annually in each district.

6. The District Court is composed of one judge elected in each of the eighteen districts (except the first) into which the state is divided for the purpose, by the people of the district, for the term of four years. The city and parish of New Orleans constitutes the first district, but has six district judges. It has jurisdiction of all civil cases whatever in which the amount involved is over fifty dollars, in all criminal cases, and in all matters of successions. Jury and probate terms are held separately. The districts are never to be less than twelve nor more than twenty in number, and subject to reorganization every sixth year.

Justices of the Peace are elected one or more from each police-jury ward, into which the several parishes of the state are divided, for the term of two years. They have civil jurisdiction where the amount in dispute does not exceed one hundred dollars, and where the defendent resides within their section. They may perform marriages; take cognizance of infractions of the levee laws, where the penalty is not over one hundred dollars; may disperse runaway slaves, search for stolen goods, and arrest slaves suspected of any crime whatever; take cognizance of proceedings under the landlord and tenant process.

Jurisprudence.

This state is the only one of the United States in which the civil law, in contradistinction to the common law of England, prevails. The code of Louisiana is founded on the Code Napoléon, with some modifications introduced from Spanish law, and, through these, upon the Roman law. See CODE.

LOW-WATER MARK. That part of the shore of the sea to which the waters recede when the tide is lowest. See HIGH-WATER MARK; RIVER; SEA-SHORE; Dane, Abr.; 1 Halst. Ch. N. J. 1.

LOYAL. Legal, or according to law: as, loyal matrimony, a lawful marriage.

"Uncore n'est loyal a homme de faire un tort" (it is never lawful for a man to do a wrong). Dyer, fol. 36, § 38. "Et per curiam n'est loyal" (and it was held by the court that it was not lawful). T. Jones, 24. Also spelled loayl. Dy. 36, § 38; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict. The Norman spelling is "loyse." Kelh. Norm. Dict.

Faithful to a prince or superior; true to plighted faith or duty. Webster, Dict.

LOYALTY. Adherence to law. Faithfulness to the existing government.

LUCID INTERVALS. In Medical Jurisprudence. Periods in which an insane person is so far free from his disease that the ordinary legal consequences of insanity do not apply to acts done therein.

2. Correct notions respecting the lucid interval are no less necessary than correct notions respecting the disease itself. By the earlier writers on insanity, lucid intervals were regarded as a far more common event than they have been found to be in recent times. They were also supposed to be characterized by a degree of mental clearness and vigor not often witnessed now. These views of medical writers were shared by distinguished legal authorities, by whom the lucid interval was described as a complete, though temporary, restoration. D'Aguesseau, in his pleading in the case of the Abbé d'Orléans, says, "It must not be a superficial tranquillity, a shadow of repose, but, on the contrary, a profound tranquillity, a real repose; it must not be a mere ray of reason, which makes its absence more apparent when it is gone,—not a flash of lightning, which pierces through the darkness only to render it more gloomy and dismal,—not a glimmering which joins the night to the day,—but a perfect light, a lively and continued lustre, a full and entire day interposed between the two separate nights of the fury which precedes and follows it; and, to use another image, it is not a deceitful and faithless stillness which follows or forebodes a storm, but a sure and steadfast tranquillity for a time, a real calm, a perfect serenity. In fine, without looking for so many metaphors to represent our idea, it must not be a mere diminution, a remission of the complaint, but a kind of temporary cure, an intermission so clearly marked as in every respect to resemble the restoration of health." Pothier, Obl. Evans ed. 579. So Lord Thurlow says, by a perfect interval, "I do not mean a cooler moment, an abatement of pain or violence or of a higher state of torture,—a mind relieved from excessive pressure; but an interval in which the mind, having thrown off the disease, had recovered its general habit." 3 Brown, Ch. 234. That there sometimes occurs an intermission in which the person appears to be perfectly rational, restored, in fact, to his proper self, is an unquestionable fact. It is equally true that they are of rare occurrence, that they continue but for a very brief period, and that with the apparent clearness there is a real loss of mental force and acuteness. In most cases of insanity there may be observed, from time to time, a remission of the symptoms, in which excitement and violence are replaced by quiet and calm, and, within a certain range, the patient converses correctly and properly. A superficial observer might be able to detect no trace of disease; but a little further examination would show a confusion of ideas and singularity of behavior, indicative of serious, though latent, disease. In this condition the patient may hold some correct notions, even on a matter of business, and yet be quite incompetent to embrace all the relations connected with a contract or a will, even though no delusion were present to warp his judgment. The revelations of patients after recovery furnish indubitable proof that during this remission of the symptoms the mind is in a state of confusion utterly unreliable for any business purpose. Georget, Des Mal. Men. 46; Reid, Essays on Hypochondriacal Affections, 21 Essay; Combe, Men. Derang. 241; Ray, Med. Jur. 376.

3. Of late years—whatever may have been the earlier practice—courts have not required that proof of a lucid interval which consists of complete restoration of reason, as described above. They have been satisfied with such proof as was furnished by the transaction in question. They cared less to consider the general state of mind than its special manifestations on a particular occasion. In 1 Phill. Lect. 90, the court said, "I think the strongest and best proof that can arise as to a lucid interval is that which arises from the act itself;" if that "is a rational act, rationally done, the whole case is proved;" "if she could converse rationally, that is a lucid interval." Proctor, 2 Carr. & P. 415. This is a mere begging of the question, which is whether the act so rational and so rationally done—and not for that reason necessarily incompatible with insanity—was or was not done in a lucid interval. Persons very insane, violent, and full of delusions frequently do and say things evincing no mark of disease, while no one supposes that there is any lucid interval in the case. Correcter views prevailed in 2 Hagg. 433, where the court pronounced against two wills which showed no trace of folly, because the testator had been confessedly so insane as to require an attendant from an asylum, until within a few months of the date of the last will, and had manifested delusions during the period that intervened between the two wills in question. "It is clear," said the court, "that persons essentially insane may be calm, may do acts, hold conversations, and even pass in general society, as perfectly sane. It often requires close examination by persons skilled in the disorder, to discover and ascertain whether or not the mental derangement is removed and the mind become again perfectly sound. Where there is calmness, where there is rationality on ordinary subjects, those who see the party usually conclude that his recovery is perfect. . . . When there is not actual recovery, and a return to the management of himself and his concerns by the unfortunate individual, the proof of a lucid interval is extremely difficult."

4. In criminal cases, the proof of a lucid interval must be still more difficult, in the very nature of the case. For although the mental manifestations may be perfectly right, it cannot be supposed that the brain has resumed its normal condition. In its outward expression, insanity, like many other nervous diseases, is characterized by a certain periodicity, whereby the prominent symptoms disappear for a time, only to return again within a very limited period. An epileptic, in the intervals between his fits, may evince to the closest observer not a single trace of mental or bodily disease; and yet, for all that, nobody supposes that he has recovered from his malady. No more does a lucid interval in a case of insanity imply that the disease has disappeared because its outward manifestations have ceased. There unquestionably remains an abnormal condition of the brain, by whatever name it may be called, whereby the power of the mind to sustain provocations, to resist temptations, or withstand any other causes of excitement, is greatly weakened.

Lucid intervals, properly so called, should not be confounded with those periods of apparent recovery which occur between two successive attacks of mental disease, nor with those transitions from one phasis of insanity to another, in which the individual seems to be in his natural condition. They may not be essentially different, but the suddenness and brevity of the former would be likely to impart to an act a moral complexion very different from that which it would bear if performed in the larger and more indefinite intermissions of the latter. Still, great forbearance should be exercised towards persons committing criminal acts while in any of these equivocal conditions. Those who have suffered repeated attacks of mental disease habitually labor under a degree of nervous irritability, which renders them peculiarly susceptible to many of those incidents and influences which lead to crime. The law may make no distinction, but executive and judicial tribunals are generally intrusted with discretionary powers, whereby they are enabled to apportion the punishment according to the moral guilt of the party. Ray, Med. Jur. chap. Luc. Int.

It is the duty of the party who contends for a lucid interval, to prove it; for a person once insane is presumed so, until it is shown that he had a lucid interval, or has recovered, Swinb. 77; Coke, Litt. 185, n.; 3 Brown, Ch. 443; 1 Const. So. C. 225; 1 Pet. 163; 1 Litt. Ky. 102; and yet, on the trial of Hadfield, whose insanity, both before and after the act, was admitted, the court, Lord Kenyon, said that "were they to run into nicety, proof might be demanded of his insanity at the precise moment when the act was committed." See INSANITY.

LUCRATIVE SUCCESSION. In Scotch Law. The passive title of præceptio hæreditatis, by which, if an heir apparent receive gratuitously a part, however small, of the heritage which would come to him as heir.

he is liable for all grantor's precontracted debts. Erskine, Inst. 3. 8. 87–89; Stair, Inst. 3. 7.

LUCRI CAUSA (Lat. for the sake of gain). In Criminal Law. A term descriptive of the intent with which property is taken in cases of larceny.

According to the tenor of the latest authorities, lucri causâ would appear to be immaterial; though, in recent cases, judges have sometimes thought it advisable not to deny, but rather to confess and avoid it, however sophistically. The prisoner, a servant of A, applied for, and received, at the post-office, all A's letters, and delivered them to A, with the exception of one, which the prisoner destroyed in the hope of suppressing inquiries respecting her character. This was held to be a larceny; "for, supposing that it was a necessary ingredient in that crime that it should be done lucri causâ (which was not admitted), there were sufficient advantages to be obtained by the prisoner in making away with the written character." 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 180. In a case where some servants in husbandry had the care of their master's team, they entered his granary by means of a false key, and took out of it two bushels of beans, which they gave to his horses. Of eleven judges, three were of opinion that there was no felony. Of the eight judges who were for a conviction, some (it is not stated how many) alleged that by the better feeding of the horses the men's labor was lessened, so that they took the beans to give themselves ease,—which was, constructively, at least, lucri causâ. Russ. & R. 307. When a similar case afterwards came to be decided by the judges, it was said to be no longer res integra. 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 193. The rule with regard to the lucri causâ is stated by the English criminal law commissioners in the following terms: "The ulterior motive by which the taker is influenced in depriving the owner of his property altogether, whether it is to benefit himself or another, or to injure any one by the taking, is immaterial." Coke, 17. In this country, these cases have not been considered as authority. 18 Ala. 461. See 16 Miss. 401; 10 Ala. N. S. 814; 3 Strobh. So. C. 508; 1 Carr. & K. 532; Carr. & M. 547; Inst. lib. 4, t. 1, § 1.

LUCRUM CESSANS. In Scotch Law. A cessation of gain. Opposed to damnum emergens, an actual loss.

LUGGAGE. Such articles of personal comfort and convenience as travellers usually find it desirable to carry with them. This term is synonymous with baggage: the latter being in more common use in this country, while the former seems to be almost exclusively used in England. See BAGGAGE.

LUNACY. See INSANITY.

LUNAR. Belonging to or measured by the moon.

LUNATIC. One who is insane. See INSANITY.

LYEF-GELD. In Saxon Law. Leave-money. A small sum paid by customary tenant for leave to plough, etc. Cowel; Somn. on Gavelk. p. 27.

LYING IN GRANT. Incorporeal rights and things which cannot be transferred by livery of possession, but which exist only in idea, in contemplation of law, are said to lie in grant, and pass by the mere delivery of the deed. See GRANT; LIVERY OF SEISIN; SEISIN.

LYING IN WAIT. Being in ambush for the purpose of murdering another.

Lying in wait is evidence of deliberation and intention. Where murder is divided into degrees, as in Pennsylvania, lying in wait is such evidence of malice that it makes the killing, when it takes place, murder in the first degree. See Dane, Abr. Index.

LYNCH-LAW. A common phrase used to express the vengeance of a mob inflicting an injury and committing an outrage upon a person suspected of some offence. In England this is called Lidford Law.

M.

M. The thirteenth letter of the alphabet.

Persons convicted of manslaughter, in England, were formerly marked with this letter on the brawn of the thumb.

This letter is sometimes put on the face of treasury notes of the United States, and signifies that the treasury note bears interest at the rate of one mill per centum, and not one per centum interest. 13 Pet. 176.

MACE-BEARER. In English Law. An officer attending the court of session.

MACEDONIAN DECREE. In Roman Law. A decree of the Roman senate, which derived its name from that of a certain usurer, who was the cause of its being made, in consequence of his exactions.

It was intended to protect sons who lived under the paternal jurisdiction from the unconscionable contracts which they sometimes made on the expectations after their fathers' deaths; another, and perhaps the principal, object, was to cast odium on the rapacious creditors. It declared such contracts void. Dig. 14. 6. 1; Domat, Lois Civ. liv. 1, tit. 6, § 4; Fonblanque, Eq. b. 1, c. 2, § 12, note. See CATCHING BARGAIN; POST OBIT.

MACHINATION. The act by which some plot or conspiracy is set on foot.

MACHINE. In Patent Law. Any contrivance which is used to regulate or modify the relations between force, motion, and weight.

In its broadest signification, this term is applied to any contrivance which is used to regulate or modify the relations between force, motion, and weight. "The term machine includes every mechanical device or combination of mechanical powers and devices to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result." 15 How. 267.

What are sometimes called the simple machines are six in number: the lever, the pulley, the wheel and axle, the wedge, the screw, and the inclined plane. These are sometimes known as the mechanical powers, though neither these nor any other machinery can ever constitute or create power. They can only economize, control, direct, and render it useful.

Machines, as generally seen and understood, are compounded of these simple machines in some of their shapes and modifications. Such a combination as, when in operation, will produce some specific final result, is regarded as an entire machine. It is so treated in the patent law; for, although a new machine, or a new improvement of a machine, is an invention, and although only one invention can be included in a single patent, still, several different contrivances each of which is in one sense a machine may all be separately claimed in a single patent, provided they all contribute to improve or to constitute one machine and are intended to produce a single ultimate result; and a new combination of machines is patentable whether the machines themselves be new or old. 3 Wash. C. C. 69; 1 Stor. C. C. 273, 568; 2 id. 609; 1 Mas. C. C. 474; 1 Sumn. C. C. 482; 3 Wheat. 454.

MADE KNOWN. Words used as a return to a scire facias when it has been served on the defendant.

MAGISTER (Lat.). A master; a ruler; one whose learning and position make him superior to others: thus, one who has attained to a high degree or eminence in science and literature is called a master: as, master of arts.

MAGISTER AD FACULTATES (Lat.). In English Ecclesiastical Law. The title of an officer who grants dispensations: as, to marry, to eat flesh on days prohibited, and the like. Bacon, Abr. Eccles. Courts (A 5).

MAGISTER NAVIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Master of a ship; he to whom the whole care of a ship is given up, whether appointed by the owner, or charterer, or master. L. 1, ff. de exercit.; Idem, § 3; Calvinus, Lex.; Story, Ag. § 36.

MAGISTER SOCIETATIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Managing partner. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex. Especially used of an officer employed in the business of collecting revenues, who had power to call together the tything-men (decumands), as it were a senate, and lay matters before them, and keep account of all receipts, etc. He had, generally, an agent in the province, who was also sometimes called magister societatis. Id.; Story, Partn. § 95.

MAGISTRACY. In its most enlarged signification, this term includes all officers, legislative, executive, and judicial. For example, in most of the state constitutions will be found this provision: "the powers of the government are divided into three distinct departments, and each of these is confided to a separate magistracy, to wit: those which are legislative, to one; those which are executive, to another; and those which are judiciary, to another." In a more confined sense, it signifies the body of officers whose duty it is to put the laws in force: as, judges, justices of the peace, and the like. In a still narrower sense, it is employed to designate the body of justices of the peace. It is also used for the office of a magistrate.

MAGISTRALIA BREVIA (Lat.). Writs adapted to special cases, and so called because drawn by the masters in chancery. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 239. For the difference between these and judicial writs, see Bracton, 413 b.

MAGISTRATE. A public civil officer, invested with some part of the legislative, executive, or judicial power given by the constitution. In a narrower sense this term includes only inferior judicial officers, as justices of the peace.

The president of the United States is the chief magistrate of this nation; the governors are the chief magistrates of their respective states.

It is the duty of all magistrates to exercise the power, vested in them for the good of the people, according to law, and with zeal and fidelity. A neglect on the part of a magistrate to exercise the functions of his office, when required by law, is a misdemeanor. See 15 Viner, Abr. 144; Ayliffe, Pand. tit. 22; Dig. 30. 16. 57; Merlin, Rep.; 13 Pick. Mass. 523.

MAGISTRATE'S COURT. In American Law. Courts in the state of South Carolina, having exclusive jurisdiction in matters of contract of and under twenty dollars.

MAGNA CHARTA. The Great Charter of English liberties, so called (but which was really a compact between the king and his barons, and almost exclusively for the benefit of the latter, though confirming the ancient liberties of Englishmen in some few particulars), was wrung from king John by his barons assembled in arms, on the 19th of June, 1215, and was given by the king's hand, as a confirmation of his own act, on the little island in the Thames, within the county of Buckinghamshire, which is still called "Magna Charta Island."

The preliminary interview was held in the meadow of Running Mede, or Runny Mede (fr. Sax. -mne, council), that is, council meadow, which had been used constantly for national assemblies, and which was situated on the southwest side of the Thames, between Staines and Windsor. Though such formalities were observed, the provisions of the charter were disregarded by John and succeeding kings, each of whom, when wishing to do a popular thing, confirmed this charter. There were thirty-two confirmations between 1215 and 1416, the most celebrated of which were those by Hen. III. (1225) and Edw. I., which last confirmation was sealed with the great seal of England at Ghent, on the 5th Nov. 1297. The Magna Charta printed in all the books as of 9 Hen. III. is really a transcript of the roll of parliament of 25 Edw. I. There were many originals of Magna Charta made, two of which are preserved in the British Museum.

2. Magna Charta consists of thirty-seven chapters, the subject-matter of which is very various. C. 1 provides that the Anglican church shall be free and possess its rights unimpaired, probably referring chiefly to immunity from papal jurisdiction. C. 2 fixes relief which shall be paid by king's tenant of full age. C. 3 relates to heirs and their being in ward. C. 4; guardians of wards within age are by this chapter restrained from waste of ward's estate, "vasto hominum et rerum," waste of men and of things, which shows that serfs were regarded as slaves even by this much-boasted charter; and as serfs and freemen were at this time the divisions of society, and as freemen included, almost without exception, the nobility alone, we can see somewhat how much this charter deserves its name. C. 5 relates to the land and other property of heirs, and the delivering them up when the heirs are of age. C. 6, the marriage of heirs. C. 7 provides that widow shall have quarantine of forty days in her husband's chief house, and shall have her dower set out to her at once, without paying any thing for it, and in mean while to have reasonable estovers; the dower to be one-third of lands of husband, unless wife was endowed of less at the church-door; widow not to be compelled to marry, but to find surety that she will not marry without consent of the lord of whom she holds.

3. Marriage settlements have now in England taken the place, in great measure, of dower.

C. 8, the goods and chattels of crown-debtor to be exhausted before his rents and lands are distrained; the surety not to be called upon if the principal can pay; if sureties pay the debt, they to have the rents and lands of debtor till the debt is satisfied. C. 9 secures to London and other cities and boroughs and town barons of the five ports, and all other ports, to have their ancient liberties. C. 10 prohibits excessive distress for more services or rent than was due. C. 11 provides that court of common pleas should not follow the court of the king, but should be held in a certain place. They have been, accordingly, located at Westminster. C. 12 declares the manner of taking assizes of novel disseisin and mort d'ancestor. These were actions to recover lost seisin (q. v.), now abolished. C. 13 relates to assizes darein presentment brought by ecclesiastics to try right to present to ecclesiastical benefice. Abolished. C. 14 provides that amercement of a freeman for a fault shall be proportionate to his crime, and not excessive, and that the villein of any other than the king shall be amerced in same manner, his farm, utensils, etc. being preserved to him (salvo wanagio suo). For otherwise he could not cultivate lord's land. C. 15 and c. 16 relate to making of bridges and keeping in repair of sewers and sea-walls. This is now regulated by local parochial law.

4. C. 17 forbids sheriffs and coroners to hold pleas of the crown. Pleas of the crown are criminal cases which it is desirable should not be tried by an inferior and perhaps ignorant magistrate. C. 18 provides that if any one holding a lay fee from crown die, the king's bailiff, on showing letters patent of summons for debt from the king, may attach all his goods and chattels, so that nothing be moved away till the debt to crown be paid off clearly, the residue to go to executors to perform the testament of the dead; and if there be no debt owing to crown, all the chattels of the deceased to go to executors, reserving, however, to the wife and children their reasonable parts. Debts to the government have precedence in United States as well as in England. A man can now in England will away his whole personal property from wife and children, but not in some of the United States. See Gen. Stat. Mass. 1560. C. 19 relates to purveyance of king's house; c. 20, to the castle-guard; c. 21, to taking horses, carts, and wood for use of royal castles. The three last chapters are now obsolete. C. 22 provides that the lands of felons shall go to king for a year and a day, afterwards to the lord of the fee. So in France. The day is added to prevent dispute as to whether the year is exclusive or inclusive of its last day. C. 23 provides that the wears shall be pulled down in the Thames and Medway, and throughout England, except on the sea-coast. These wears destroyed fish, and interrupted the floating of wood and the like down stream. C. 24 relates to the writ of præcipe in capite for lords against their tenants offering wrong, etc. Now abolished. C. 25 provides a uniform measure. See 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 63. C. 26 relates to inquisitions of life and member, which are to be granted freely. Now abolished. C. 27 relates to knight-service and other ancient tenures, now abolished.

5. C. 28 relates to accusations, which must be under oath. C. 29 provides that "no freeman shall be taken, or imprisoned, or disseised from his freehold, or liberties, or immunities, nor outlawed, nor exiled, nor in any manner destroyed, nor will we come upon him or send against him, except by legal judgment of his peers or the law of the land. We will sell or deny justice to none, nor put off right or justice." This clause is very much celebrated, as confirming the right to trial by jury. By common law, the twelve jurors must be unanimous. Lord Campbell, in England, recently introduced a bill changing this and, in certain cases, allowing the majority to decide. C. 30 relates to merchant-strangers, who are to be civilly treated, and, unless previously prohibited, are to have free passage through, and exit from, and dwelling in, England, without any manner of extortions, except in time of war. If they are of a country at war with England, and found in England at the beginning of the war, they are to be kept safely until it is found out how English merchants are treated in their country, and then are to be treated accordingly. C. 31 relates to escheats; c. 32, to the power of alienation in a freeman, which is limited. C. 33 relates to patrons of abbeys, etc. C. 34 provides that no appeal shall be brought by a woman except for death of her husband. This was because the defendant could not defend himself against a woman in single combat. The crime of murder or homicide is now inquired into by indictment. C. 35 relates to rights of holding county courts, etc. Obsolete. C. 36 provides that a gift of lands in mortmain shall be void, and lands so given go to lord of fee. C. 37 relates to escuage and subsidy. C. 38 confirms every article of the charter.

Magna Charta is said by some to have been so called because larger than the Charta de Foresta, which was given about the same time. Spelman, Gloss. But see Cowel. Magna Charta is mentioned casually by Bracton, Fleta, and Britton. Glanville is supposed to have written before Magna Charta. The Mirror of Justices, c. 315 et seq., has a chapter on its defects. See Coke, 2d Inst.; Barrington, Stat.; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 423. See a copy of Magna Charta in 1 Laws of South Carolina, edited by Judge Cooper, p. 78. In the Penny Magazine for the year 1833, p. 229, there is a copy of the original seal of King John affixed to this instrument; a specimen of a fac-simile of the writing of Magna Charta, beginning at the passage, Nullus liber homo capietur vel imprisonetur, etc. A copy of both may be found in the Magasin Pittoresque for the year 1834, pp. 52, 53. See 8 Encyc. Brit. 722; 6 id. 332; Wharton, Lex. 2d Lond. ed.

MÄHL BRIEF. A term confined to the German law of shipping. It is a contract for building a ship, specifying her description, quality of materials, the denomination, and size, with reservation generally that contractor or his agent (who is in most cases the master of a vessel) may reject such material as he deems uncontract-worthy, and oblige builder to supply other materials. Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 2, 3.

MAIDEN. An instrument formerly used in Scotland for beheading criminals.

MAIDEN RENTS. In Old English Law. A fine paid to lords of some manors, on the marriage of tenants, originally given in consideration of the lord's relinquishing his customary right of lying the first night with the bride of a tenant. Cowel.

MAIHEM. See MAYHEM; MAIM.

MAIL (Fr. malle, a trunk). The bag, valise, or other contrivance used in conveying through the post-office letters, packets, newspapers, pamphlets, and the like, from place to place, under the authority of the United States. The things thus carried are also called the mail.

The laws of the United States have provided for the punishment of robberies or wilful injuries to the mail; the act of March 3, 1825, 3 Story, U. S. Laws, 1985.

MAILS AND DUTIES. In Scotch Law. Rents of an estate. Stair, Inst. 2. 12. 32; 2 Ross, Lect. 235, 381, 431–439.

MAIM. In Criminal Law. To deprive a person of such part of his body as to render him less able in fighting or defending himself than he would have otherwise been.

In Pleading. The words "feloniously did maim" must of necessity be inserted, because no other word nor any circumlocution will answer the same purpose. 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 244.

MAINE. The name of one of the new states of the United States of America, formed out of that part of the territory of Massachusetts called the district of Maine.

2. The territory embraced in the new state was not contiguous to that remaining in the state from which it was taken, and was more than four times as large. The legislature of Massachusetts, by an act passed June 19, 1819, gave its consent for the people of the district to become a separate and independent state. They met in convention, by delegates elected for the purpose, and formed a separate state, by the style of the State of Maine, and adopted a constitution for the government thereof, October 19, 1819, and applied to congress, at its next session, for admission into the Union.

The petition was presented in the house of representatives of the United States, Dec. 8, 1819, and the state was admitted into the Union by the act of congress of March 3, 1820, from and after the fifteenth day of March, 1820.

3. Every male citizen of the United States, twenty-one years of age, excepting paupers, persons under guardianship, and Indians not taxed, who has resided in the state three months next before any election, has a right to vote, except United States troops in service at stations of the United States, who do not by such stay gain any residence.

The Legislative Power.

This is vested in two distinct branches: a house of representatives and a senate, each having a negative upon the other, and both together being styled the Legislature of Maine. Art. 4, part 1, § 1.

The House of Representatives is to consist of one hundred and fifty-one members. Amend. art. 4.

They are to be apportioned among the counties according to law; to be elected annually by the qualified electors for one year from the day preceding the meeting of the legislature. Art. 4, part

1, § 2. The legislature is to convene on the first Wednesday of January annually. Art. 4, part 3, § 1. A representative must be twenty-one years old at least, for five years a citizen of the United States, for one year a resident of the state, and for three months immediately preceding his election a resident of the town or district which he represents. He must continue a resident during his term of office.

4. The Senate is to consist of not less than twenty nor more than thirty-one members, elected, one from each district, at the same time, and for the same term, as the representatives, by the qualified electors of the districts into which the state shall from time to time be divided. Art. 4, part 2, § 1. A senator must be at least twenty-five years old, and otherwise possess the same qualifications as representatives.

Every bill or resolution having the force of law, to which the concurrence of both branches is necessary, except on a question of adjournment, must be approved by the governor, unless upon its return to the house in which it originated, with his objections, it shall there be passed over his veto by receiving in each house the votes of two-thirds thereof; or unless he shall retain it for more than five days. Art. 4, part 3, § 1.

The senate has power to try all impeachments. Art. 4, part 2, § 7.

The Executive Power.

The Governor is elected by the qualified electors, and holds his office for one year from the first Wednesday of January in each year. Art. 1, part 1, §§ 1 and 2.

He must, at the commencement of his term, be not less than thirty years of age, a natural-born citizen of the United States, five years a resident of the state, and at the time of his election, and during his term, be a resident of the state. Art. 5, part 1, § 4.

5. A Council consisting of seven persons, citizens of the United States, and resident within the state, to advise the governor in the executive part of government, is to be chosen annually by joint ballot of the senators and representatives in convention. Art. 5, part 2, §§ 1 and 2.

The governor, with the advice and consent of the council, is to nominate and appoint all judicial officers, the attorney-general, sheriffs, coroners, registers of probate, and notaries public; is to inform the legislature of the condition of the state, and recommend measures; may, after conviction, with the advice and consent of council, remit forfeitures, and grant reprieves and pardons, and in cases of impeachment; may convene the legislature at unusual times or places, if necessary, and adjourn them, in case of disagreement as to the time of adjournment.

The Judicial Power.

The Supreme Judicial Court is composed of one chief and seven assistant judges, appointed by the governor and council for the term of seven years. It is the highest court, and also the court of general original jurisdiction,—having the jurisdiction of the former district court. It has exclusive civil jurisdiction in law and equity, except over cases involving small amounts, of which jurisdiction is given to the justices of the peace. Five judges are necessary to constitute a quorum for the decision of questions of law. Annual law terms are held in each of the three districts into which the state is divided for the purpose. For purposes of jury trials, including civil and criminal cases, the court is held by a single judge. Two or more terms are held annually in each county in the state, as provided by statute from time to time. The justices receive a stated salary, and are to give their opinions upon important questions of law upon solemn occasions when required by the governor, senate, or house of representatives.

6. Probate Courts are held in each county by judges elected for three years by the people. They are to appoint guardians; take probate of wills; grant letters of administration; attend to the settlement of estates of persons in state prison, under sentence of death or imprisonment for life; and to have jurisdiction generally for these and similar purposes. The supreme court is the supreme court of probate, and an appeal lies to it from the decision of the judge of probate.

Justices of the Peace are appointed by the governor and council for the term of seven years. They have jurisdiction over all civil cases (except those involving the title to land) where the amount involved does not exceed twenty dollars. They have a limited criminal jurisdiction.

Police Courts are created by special enactment in the larger towns, with a jurisdiction substantially that of the justices, and exclusive thereof, except in specified cases.

County Commissioners are chosen by the people, three in each county, to attend to the internal police of the county. They have the care of roads, bridges, etc., the public buildings of the county, and the control of the county money. One is elected annually for the term of three years.

MAINOUR. In Criminal Law. The thing stolen found in the hands of the thief who has stolen it.

Hence, when a man is found with property which he has stolen, he is said to be taken with the mainour, that is, it is found in his hands.

Formerly there was a distinction made between a larceny, when the thing stolen was found in the hands of the criminal, and when the proof depended upon other circumstances not quite so irrefragable; the former properly was termed pris ove maynovere, or ove mainer, or mainour, as it is generally written. Barrington, Stat. 315, 316, note.

MAINPERNABLE. Capable of being bailed; one for whom bail may be taken; bailable.

MAINPERNORS. In English Law. Those persons to whom a man is delivered out of custody or prison, on their becoming bound for his appearance.

Mainpernors differ from bail: a man's bail may imprison or surrender him up before the stipulated day of appearance; mainpernors can do neither, but are merely sureties for his appearance at the day; bail are only sureties that the party be answerable for all the special matter for which they stipulate; mainpernors are bound to produce him to answer all charges whatsoever. 6 Mod. 231; 7 id. 77, 85, 98; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 128. See Dane, Abr.

MAINPRISE. In English Law. The taking a man into friendly custody, who might otherwise be committed to prison, upon security given for his appearance at a time and place assigned. Wood, Inst. b. 4, c. 4.

MAINSWORN. Forsworn, by making false oath with hand (main) on book. Used in the North of England. Brownl. 4; Hob. 125.

MAINTAINED. In Pleading. A technical word indispensable in an indictment for maintenance. 1 Wils. 325.

MAINTAINORS. In Criminal Law. Those who maintain or support a cause depending between others, not being retained as counsel or attorney. For this they may be fined and imprisoned. 2 Swift, Dig. 328; 4 Blackstone, Comm. 124; Bacon, Abr. Barrator.

MAINTENANCE. Aid, support, assistance; the support which one person, who is bound by law to do so, gives to another for his living: for example, a father is bound to find maintenance for his children; and a child is required by law to maintain his father or mother, when they cannot support themselves, and he has ability to maintain them. 1 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 284–286.

In Criminal Law. A malicious, or, at least, officious, interference in a suit in which the offender has no interest, to assist one of the parties to it against the other, with money or advice to prosecute or defend the action, without any authority of law. 1 Russell, Crimes, 176.

The intermeddling of a stranger in a suit for the purpose of stirring up strife and continuing the litigation. 2 Parsons, Contr. 266. See 4 Term, 340; 6 Bingh. 299; 4 Q. B. 883.

But there are many acts in the nature of maintenance which become justifiable from the circumstances under which they are done. They may be justified, first, because the party has an interest in the thing in variance; as when he has a bare contingency in the lands in question, which possibly may never come in esse, Bacon, Abr. Maintenance; and see 11 Mees. & W. Exch. 675; 9 Metc. Mass. 489; 13 id. 262; 1 Me. 292; 6 id. 361; 11 id. 111; second, because the party is of kindred or affinity, as father, son, or heir apparent, or husband or wife, 3 Cow. N. Y. 623; third, because the relation of landlord and tenant or master and servant subsists between the party to the suit and the person who assists him; fourth, because the money is given out of charity, 1 Bail. So. C. 401; fifth, because the person assisting the party to the suit is an attorney or counsellor; the assistance to be rendered must, however, be strictly professional, for a lawyer is not more justified in giving his client money than another man. 1 Russell, Crimes, 179; Bacon, Abr. Maintenance; Broke, Abr. Maintenance. This offence is punishable criminally by fine and imprisonment. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 124; 2 Swift, Dig. 328. Contracts growing out of maintenance are void. 11 Mass. 549; 5 Humphr. Tenn. 379; 20 Ala. N.S. 521; 53 B. Monr. Ky. 413; 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 44; 4 Q. B. 883. See 3 Hawks, No. C. 86; 1 Me. 292; 6 Mass. 421; 11 id. 553; 5 Pick. Mass. 359; 5 T. B. Monr. Ky. 413; 3 Cow. N. Y. 647; 6 id. 431; 4 Wend. N. Y. 306; 14 Johns. N. Y. 124; 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 508; 7 Dowl. & R. 846; 5 Barnew. & C. 188.

MAISON DE DIEU (Fr. house of God; a hospital). A hospital; an almshouse; a monastery. Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5.

MAJESTY. A term used of kings and emperors as a title of honor. It sometimes means power: as when we say, the majesty of the people. See Wolff. § 998.

MAJOR. One who has attained his full age and has acquired all his civil rights; one who is no longer a minor; an adult.

In Military Law. The officer next in rank above a captain.

MAJOR-GENERAL. In Military Law. An officer next in rank above a brigadier-general. He commands a division consisting of several brigades, or even an army.

MAJORES (Lat.). The male ascendants beyond the sixth degree. The term was used among the Romans; and the term is still retained in making genealogical tables.

MAJORITY. The state or condition of a person who has arrived at full age. He is then said to be a major, in opposition to minor, which is his condition during infancy.

The greater number. More than all the opponents.

Some question exists as to whether a majority of any body is more than one-half the whole number or more than the number acting in opposition. Thus, in a body of one hundred voters, in which twenty did not vote on any particular question, on the former supposition fifty-one would be a majority, on the latter forty-one. The intended signification is generally denoted by the context, and where it is not the second sense is generally intended; a majority on a given question being more than one-half the number of those voting.

In every well-regulated society, the majority has always claimed and exercised the right to govern the whole society, in the manner pointed out by the fundamental laws; and the minority are bound whether they have assented or not, for the obvious reason that opposite wills cannot prevail at the same time, in the same society, on the same subject. 1 Tucker, Blackstone, Comm. Appx. 168, 172; 9 Dane, Abr. 37–43; 1 Story, Const. § 330.

As to the rights of the majority of part-owners of vessels, see 3 Kent, Comm. 114 et seq.; Parsons, Marit. Law; PART-OWNERS. As to the majority of a church, see 16 Mass. 488.

In the absence of all stipulations, the general rule in partnerships is that each partner has an equal voice, and a majority acting bonâ fide have the right to manage the partnership concerns and dispose of the partnership property notwithstanding the dissent of the minority; but in every case when the minority have a right to give an opinion, they ought to be notified. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1954. See PARTNER.

As to the majorities of companies or corporations, see Angell, Corp. 48 et seq.; 3 Mart. La. 495. See, generally, Rutherford, Inst. 249; 9 Serg. & R. Penn. 99; Brooke, Abr. Corp. pl. 63; 15 Viner, Abr. 183, 184.

MAKE. To perform or execute: as, to make his law, is to perform that which a man had bound himself to do; that is, to clear himself of an action commenced against him, by his oath and the oath of his neighbors. Old Nat. Brev. 161. To make default, is to fail to appear in proper trial. To make oath, is to swear according to the form prescribed by law. It is also used intransitively of persons and things, to have effect; to tend: e.g.

"That case makes for me." Hardr. 133; Webster, Dict.

MAKER. A term applied to one who makes a promissory note and promises to pay it when due.

He who makes a bill of exchange is called the drawer; and frequently in common parlance and in books of reports we find the word drawer inaccurately applied to the maker of a promissory note. See PROMISSORY NOTE.

MAKING HIS LAW. A phrase used to denote the act of a person who wages his law. Bacon, Abr. Wager of Law.

MALA FIDES (Lat.). Bad faith. It is opposed to bonâ fides, good faith.

MALA PRAXIS (Lat.). Bad or unskilful practice in a physician or other professional person, whereby the health of the patient is injured.

Wilful mal-practice takes place when the physician purposely administers medicines or performs an operation which he knows and expects will result in damage or death to the individual under his care: as in the case of criminal abortion. Elwell, Mal-Pract. 243 et seq.; 2 Barb. N. Y. 216.

Negligent mal-practice comprehends those cases where there is no criminal or dishonest object, but gross negligence of that attention which the situation of the patient requires: as if a physician should administer medicines, while in a state of intoxication, from which injury would arise to his patient.

Ignorant mal-practice is the administration of medicines calculated to do injury, which do harm, and which a well-educated and scientific medical man would know were not proper in the case. Elwell, Mal-Pract. 198 et seq.; 7 Barnew. & C. 493, 497; 6 Bingh. 440; 6 Mass. 134; 5 Carr. & P. 333; 1 Mood. & R. 405; 5 Cox, Cr. Cas. 587.

2. This offence is a misdemeanor (whether it be occasioned by curiosity and experiment or neglect), because it breaks the trust which the patient has put in the physician, and tends directly to his destruction. 1 Ld. Raym. 213. See 3 Chitty, Crim. Law, 863; 4 Wentworth, Plead. 360; 2 Russell, Crimes, Greaves ed. 277; 1 Chitty, Pract. 43; 6 Mass. 134; 8 Mo. 561; 3 Carr. & P. 629; 4 id. 423.

Besides the public remedy for mal-practice, in many cases the party injured may bring a civil action. 5 Day, Conn. 260; 9 Conn. 209; 3 Watts, Penn. 355; 7 N. Y. 397.

3. Civil cases of mal-practice are of very frequent occurrence on those occasions where surgical operations are rendered necessary, or supposed to be so, by disease or injury, and are so performed as either to shorten a limb or render it stiff, or otherwise prevent the free, natural use of it, by which the party ever after suffers damages. This may embrace almost every kind of surgical operation; but nine-tenths of all such cases arise from amputations, fractures, or dislocations. Elwell, Mal-Pract. 55.

4. To the performance of all surgical operations the surgeon is bound to bring at least ordinary skill and knowledge. He must apply without mistake what is settled in his profession. He must possess and practically exercise that degree and amount of knowledge and science which the leading authorities have pronounced as the result of their researches and experience up to the time, or within a reasonable time before the issue or question to be determined is made. Elwell, Mal-Pract. 55. Many cases, both English and American, have occurred, illustrating the nature and extent of this liability. 8 East, 347; 2 Wils. 259; 1 H. Blackst. 61; Wright, Ohio, 466; 22 Penn. St. 261; 27 N. H. 460 13 B. Monr. Ky. 219.

MALA PROHIBITA (Lat.). Those things which are prohibited by law, and therefore unlawful.

A distinction was formerly made, in respect of contracts, between mala prohibita and mala in se; but that distinction has been exploded, and it is now established that when the provisions of an act of the legislature have for their object the protection of the public, it makes no difference with respect to contracts whether the thing be prohibited absolutely or under a penalty. 5 Barnew. & Ald. 335, 340; 10 Barnew. & C. 98; 3 Stark. 61; 13 Pick. Mass. 518; 2 Bingh. N. C. 636, 646. The distinction is, however, important in criminal law in some cases with reference to the question of intent. See INTENT; 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 2157.

MALE. Of the masculine sex; of the sex that begets young; the sex opposed to the female.

MALEDICTION (Lat.). In Ecclesiastical Law. A curse which was anciently annexed to donations of lands made to churches and religious houses, against those who should violate their rights.

MALEFACTOR (Lat.). He who has been guilty of some crime; in another sense, one who has been convicted of having committed a crime.

MALEFICIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. Waste; damage; torts; injury. Dig. 5. 18. 1.

MALFEASANCE. The unjust performance of some act which the party had no right, or which he had contracted not, to do. It differs from misfeasance and nonfeasance, which titles see. See 1 Chitty, Pract. 9; 1 Chitty, Plead. 134.

MALICE. In Criminal Law. The doing a wrongful act intentionally without just cause or excuse. 4 Barnew. & C. 255; 9 Metc. Mass. 104.

A conscious violation of the law, to the prejudice of another. 9 Clark & F. Hou. L. 321.

Malice is never understood to denote general malevolence or unkindness of heart, or enmity toward a particular individual, but it signifies rather the intent from which flows any unlawful and injurious act committed without legal justification. 15 Pick. Mass. 337; 9 Metc. 410; 4 Ga. 14; 33 Me. 331; 7 Ala. N. S. 728; 2 Dev. No. C. 425; 2 Rich. So. C. 179; 1 Dall. Penn. 335; 4 Mas. C. C. 115; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 63; Russ. & R. 26, 465; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 93. It is not confined to the intention of doing an injury to any particular person, but extends to an evil design, a corrupt and wicked notion against some one at the time of committing the crime: as, if A intending to poison B, conceals a quantity of poison in an apple and puts it in the way of B, and C, against whom he has no ill will, and who, on the contrary, is his friend, happens to eat it and dies, A will be guilty of murdering C with malice aforethought. Bacon, Max. Reg. 15; 2 Chitty, Crim. Law, 727; 3 id. 1104.

Express malice exists when the party evinces an intention to commit the crime. 3 Bulstr. 171.

Implied malice is that inferred by law from the facts proved. 11 Humphr. Tenn. 172; 6 Blackf. Ind. 299; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 371.

It is implied in every case of intentional homicide; and the fact of killing being first proved, all the circumstances of accident, necessity or informality are to be satisfactorily established by the party charged, unless they arise out of the evidence produced against him to prove the homicide, and the circumstances attending it. If there are, in fact, circumstances of justification, excuse, or palliation, such proof will naturally indicate them. But where the fact of killing is proved by satisfactory evidence, and there are no circumstances disclosed tending to show justification or excuse, there is nothing to rebut the natural presumption of malice. It is material to the just understanding of this rule that it applies only to cases where the killing is proved and nothing further is shown; for if the circumstances disclosed tend to extenuate the act, the prisoner has the full benefit of such facts. 9 Metc. Mass. 93; 5 Cush. Mass. 295; 3 Gray, Mass. 463.

3. It is a general rule that when a man commits an act, unaccompanied by any circumstances justifying its commission, the law presumes he has acted advisedly and with an intent to produce the consequences which have ensued. And therefore the intent to kill is conclusively inferred from the deliberate violent use of a deadly weapon. 9 Metc. Mass. 103; 5 Cush. Mass. 305. See 3 Maule & S. 15; 1 Russ. & R. Cr. Cas. 207; 1 Wood. Cr. Cas. 263; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 223, 232, 340; 15 Viner, Abr. 506.

In Torts. The doing any act injurious to another without a just cause.

4. This term, as applied to torts, does not necessarily mean that which must proceed from a spiteful, malignant, or revengeful disposition, but a conduct injurious to another, though proceeding from an ill-regulated mind not sufficiently cautious before it occasions an injury to another. 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 39, 40. Indeed, in some cases it seems not to require any intention in order to make an act malicious. When a slander has been published, therefore, the proper question for the jury is, not whether the intention of the publication was to injure the plaintiff, but whether the tendency of the matter published was so injurious. 10 Barnew. & C. 472. Again, take the common case of an offensive trade, the melting of tallow, for instance: such trade is not itself unlawful, but if carried on to the annoyance of the neighboring dwellings, it becomes unlawful with respect to them, and their inhabitants may maintain an action, and may charge the act of the defendant to be malicious. 3 Barnew. & C. 584.

MALICE AFORETHOUGHT. Wicked purpose. These words in the description of murder do not imply deliberation, or the lapse of considerable time between the malicious intent to take and the actual execution of that intent, but rather denote purpose and design in contradistinction to accident and mischance. 5 Cush. Mass. 306. And see 8 Carr. & P. 616; 2 Mas. C. C. 60; 1 Dev. & B. No. C. 121, 163; 6 Blackf. Ind. 299; 3 Ala. N. S. 497.

These words distinguish an indictment for murder from one for manslaughter, Yelv. 205; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 242, and must be used in charging the crime where malice aforethought is necessary to its commission. 1 East, Pl. Cr. 402; 2 Mas. C. C. 91.

MALICIOUS ABANDONMENT. The forsaking without a just cause a husband by the wife, or a wife by her husband. See ABANDONMENT; DIVORCE.

MALICIOUS ARREST. A wanton arrest made without probable cause by a regular process and proceeding. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

MALICIOUS INJURY. An injury committed wilfully and wantonly, or without cause. 1 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 136. See Wharton, Crim. Law, 226 et seq., as to malice. See 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 143, 198, 199, 200, 206; 2 Russell, Crimes, 544, 547.

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF. An expression applied to the wanton or reckless destruction of property, and the wilful perpetration of injury to the person.

The word malicious is not sufficiently defined as the wilfully doing of any act prohibited by law, and for which the defendant has no lawful excuse. In order to a conviction of the offence of malicious mischief, the jury must be satisfied that the injury was done either out of a spirit of wanton cruelty or of wicked revenge. Jacob, Law Dict. Mischief, Malicious; Alison, Scotch Law, 448; 3 Cush. Mass. 558; 2 Metc. Mass. 21; 3 Dev. & B. No. C. 130; 5 Ired. No. C. 364; 8 Leigh, Va. 719; 3 Me. 177.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION. A wanton prosecution made by a prosecutor in a criminal proceeding, or a plaintiff in a civil suit, without probable cause, by a regular process and proceeding, which the facts did not warrant, as appears by the result.

2. Where the defendant commenced a criminal prosecution wantonly, and in other respects against law, he will be responsible. Addis. Penn. 270; 12 Conn. 219. The prosecution of a civil suit, when malicious, is a good cause of action, even when there has been no arrest. 1 Pet. C. C. 210; 11 Conn. 582; 1 Wend. N. Y. 345. See 1 Penn. 235.

3. The action lies against the prosecutor, and even against a mere informer, when the proceedings are malicious. 9 Ala. 367. But grand jurors are not liable to an action for a malicious prosecution for information given by them to their fellow-jurors, on which a prosecution is founded. Hard. Ky. 556. Such action lies against a plaintiff in a civil action who maliciously sues out the writ and prosecutes it, 16 Pick. Mass. 453; but an action does not lie against an attorney at law for bringing the action, when regularly employed. 16 Pick. Mass. 478. See 6 Pick. Mass. 193.

4. There must be malice and want of probable cause. 1 Wend. N. Y. 140, 345; 7 Cow. N. Y. 281; 2 P. A. Browne, Penn. Appx. xlii.; Cooke, Tenn. 90; 4 Litt. Ky. 334; 3 Gill & J. Md. 377; 1 Nott & M'C. So. C. 36; 2 id. 54, 143; 12 Conn. 219; 3 Call. Va. 446; 3 Mas. C. C. 112. See MALICE.

The proceedings under which the original prosecution or action was held must have been regular, in the ordinary course of justice, and before a tribunal having power to ascertain the truth or falsity of the charge and to punish the supposed offender, the now plaintiff. 3 Pick. Mass. 379, 383. When the proceedings are irregular, the prosecutor is a trespasser. 3 Blackf. Ind. 210.

5. The malicious prosecution or action must be ended, and the plaintiff must show it was groundless, either by his acquittal or by obtaining a final judgment in his favor in a civil action. 1 Root, Conn. 553; 1 Nott & M'C. So. C. 36; 2 id. 54, 143; 7 Cow. N. Y. 715; 2 Dev. & B. No. C. 492.

The remedy for a malicious prosecution is an action on the case to recover damages for the injury sustained. 5 Stew. & P. Ala. 367; 2 Conn. 700; 11 Mass. 500; 6 Me. 421; 3 Gill & J. Md. 377. See CASE.

MALUM IN SE (Lat.). Evil in itself.

An offence malum in se is one which is naturally evil, as murder, theft, and the like; offences at common law are generally mala in se. An offence malum prohibitum, on the contrary, is not naturally an evil, but becomes so in consequence of its being forbidden: as playing at games which, being innocent before, have become unlawful in consequence of being forbidden. See Bacon, Abr. Assumpsit (a); MALA PROHIBITA.

MALVEILLES. Ill will. In some ancient records this word signifies malicious practices, or crimes and misdemeanors.

MALVERSATION. In French Law. This word is applied to all punishable faults committed in the exercise of an office, such as corruptions, exactions, extortions, and larceny. Merlin, Répert.

MAN. A human being. A person of the male sex. A male of the human species above the age of puberty.

In its most extended sense the term includes not only the adult male sex of the human species, but women and children: examples: "of offences against man, some are more immediately against the king, others more immediately against the subject." Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 2, s. 1. "Offences against the life of man come under the general name of homicide, which in our law signifies the killing of a man by a man." Id. book 1, c. 8, s. 2.

It was considered in the civil or Roman law that although man and person are synonymous in grammar, they had a different acceptation in law; all persons were men, but all men—for example, slaves—were not persons, but things. See Barrington, Stat. 216, note.

MANAGER. A person appointed or elected to manage the affairs of another. A term applied to those officers of a corporation who are authorized to manage its affairs. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 190.

One of the persons appointed on the part of the house of representatives to prosecute impeachments before the senate.

2. In banking corporations these officers are commonly called directors, and the power to conduct the affairs of the company is vested in a board of directors. In other private corporations, such as railroad companies, canal and coal companies, and the like, these officers are called managers. Being agents, when their authority is limited, they have no power to bind their principal beyond such authority. 17 Mass. 29; 1 Me. 81.

3. In England and Canada the chief executive officer of a branch bank is called a manager. His duties are those of our presidents and cashiers combined. His signature is necessary to every contract binding on the bank, except entries in the pass-books of customers. He indorses bills, signs bills of exchange and drafts, and conducts the correspondence of the bank. He is under the control of the board of directors of the bank, and there is usually a local or branch board of directors, at which he acts as presiding officer. Sewell, Bank.

MANBOTE. A compensation paid the relations of a murdered man by the murderer or his friends.

To form a clear conception of the true import of the word in the Roman jurisprudence, it is necessary to advert to the four distinct powers which were exercised by the pater familias, viz.: the manus, or martial power; the mancipium, resulting from the mancipatio, or alienatio per æs et libram, of a freeman; the dominica potestas, the power of the master over his slaves, and the patria potestas, the paternal power. When the pater familias sold his son, venum dare, mancipare, the paternal power was succeeded by the mancipium, or the power acquired by the purchaser over the person whom he held in mancipio, and whose condition was assimilated to that of a slave. What is most remarkable is, that on the emancipation from the mancipium he fell back into the paternal power, which was not entirely exhausted until he had been sold three times by the pater familias. Si pater filium ter venum duit, filius a patre liber esto. Gaius speaks of the mancipatio as imaginaria quædam venditio, because in his times it was only resorted to for the purpose of adoption or emancipation. See ADOPTION; PATER FAMILIAS; 1 Ortolan, 112 et seq.

MANDAMUS. In Practice. This is a high prerogative writ, usually issuing out of the highest court of general jurisdiction in a state, in the name of the sovereignty, directed to any natural person, corporation, or inferior court of judicature within its jurisdiction, requiring them to do some particular thing therein specified, and which appertains to their office or duty. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 110; 4 Bacon, Abr. 495; Opinion of Marshall, Ch. J., in Marbury vs. Madison; 1 Cranch, 137, 168.

2. Its use is well defined by Lord Mansfield, Ch. J., in Rex vs. Barker, 3 Burr. 1265: "It was introduced to prevent disorder from a failure of justice and defect of police. Therefore it ought to be used upon all occasions when the law has established no specific remedy, and where in justice and good government there ought to be one." "If there be a right, and no other specific remedy, this should not be denied." The same principles are declared by Lord Ellenborough, Ch. J., in Rex vs. Archbishop of Canterbury, 8 East, 219. See 6 Ad. & E. 321. The writ of mandamus is the supplementary remedy when the party has a clear right, and no other appropriate redress, in order to prevent a failure of justice. 12 Petersdorff, Abr. 438 (309). It is the absence of a specific legal remedy which gives the court jurisdiction, 2 Selwyn, Nisi P. Mandamus; 29 Penn. St. 131; 32 id. 219; 34 id. 496; 41 Me. 15; 2 Pat. & H. Va. 385; but the party must have a perfect legal right. 27 Mo. 225; 11 Ind. 205; 20 Ill. 525; 25 Barb. N. Y. 73; 2 Dutch. N. J. 135; 3 Cal. 167.

3. The remedy extends to the control of all inferior tribunals, corporations, public officers, and even private persons in some cases. But more generally the English court of king's bench, from which our practice on the subject is derived, declines to interfere by mandamus to require a specific performance of a contract when no public right is concerned. Angell & A. Corp. 761; 2 Term, 260; 6 East, 356; Bacon, Abr. Mandamus; 28 Vt. 587, 592.

It is a proper remedy to compel the performance of a specific act where the act is ministerial in its character, 12 Pet. 524; 34 Penn. St. 293; 26 Ga. 665; 7 Iowa, 186, 390; but where the act is of a discretionary, 6 How. 92; 11 id. 272; 17 id. 284; 12 Cush. Mass. 403; 20 Tex. 60; 10 Cal. 376; 5 Harr. Del. 108; 12 Md. 329; 4 Mich. 187; 5 Ohio St. 528, or judicial nature, 14 La. Ann. 60; 7 Cal. 130; 18 B. Monr. Ky. 423; 7 Ell. & B. 366, it will lie only to compel action generally, 11 Cal. 42; 30 Ala. N. s. 49; 28 Mo. 259; and where the necessity of acting is a matter of discretion, it will not lie even to compel action. 6 How. 92; 5 Iowa, 380.

4. This remedy will be applied to compel a corporation or public officer, 14 La. Ann. 265; 41 Me. 15; 3 Ind. 452; see 7 Gray, Mass. 280, to pay money awarded against them in pursuance of a statute duty, where no other specific remedy is provided, 6 Ad. & E. 335; 8 id. 438, 910; 34 Penn. St. 496; but if debt will lie, and the party is entitled to execution, mandamus will not be allowed. Redfield, Railw. § 196, and cases cited in notes. But mandamus will not be granted to enforce a matter of contract or right upon which an action lies in the common-law courts, as to enforce the duty of common carriers, 7 Dowl. Parl. Cas. 566, or where the proper remedy is in equity. 3 Term, 646; 16 Mees. & W. Exch. 451. But where compensation is claimed for damages done under a statute, mandamus is the proper remedy. 2 Railw. Cas. 1; Redfield, Railw. § 196, pt. 3, 4, and notes and cases cited.

5. Mandamus is the appropriate remedy to compel corporations to produce and allow an inspection of their books and records, at the suit of a corporator, where a controversy exists in which such inspection is material to his interest. 2 Strange, 1223; 3 Term, 141; 4 Maule & S. 162.

It lies to compel the performance by a corporation of a variety of specific acts within the scope of its duties. 34 Penn. St. 496; 26 Ga. 665; 2 Metc. Ky. 56.

It is the common remedy for restoring persons to corporate offices, of which they are unjustly deprived: the title to the office having been before determined by proceeding by quo warranto. 1 Burr. 402; 1 Ld. Raym. 426; 1 Salk. 314; 2 Head, Tenn. 650. And see the cases fully reviewed in Redfield, Railw. § 197, pl. 5, nn. 9–14.

6. This remedy must be sought at the earliest convenient time in those cases where important interests will be affected by the delay. 12 Q. B. 448. But it is often necessary to delay in order to determine definitely the rights and injuries of the several parties concerned. Parke's ex parte, 9 Dowl. Parl. Cas. 614; 4 Q. B. 877.

It is no sufficient answer to the application that the party is also liable to indictment for the act complained of. 2 Railw. Cas. 599; 3 Q. B. 528. And where a railway company attempted to take up their rails, they were required by mandamus to restore them, notwithstanding they were also liable to indictment, that being regarded a less efficacious remedy. Abbott, Ch. J., 2 Barnew. & Ald. 646. But mandamus will always be denied when there is other adequate remedy. 11 Ad. & E. 69; 1 Q. B. 288; Redfield, Railw. § 199, and cases cited in notes.

It is not a proper proceeding for the correction of errors of an inferior court. 13 Pet. 279, 404; 18 Wend. N. Y. 79; 13 La. Ann. 481; 7 Dowl. & R. 334. Indeed, by statute 6 & 7 Vict. ch. 67, § 2, the decisions of the English courts upon proceedings in mandamus may be revised on writ of error, and upon principle a writ of error will lie when the decision is made to turn upon a question of law, and not upon discretion merely. Redfield, Railw. § 200, and notes.

7. The writ is not demandable, as matter of right, but is to be awarded in the discretion of the court. 1 Term, 331, 396, 404, 425; 2 id. 336; Redfield, Railw. 441, § 190, and cases cited in notes.

The power of granting this writ in England seems originally to have been exercised by the court of chancery, as to all the inferior courts, but not as to the king's bench. 1 Vern. Ch. 175; Angell & A. Corp. § 697. But see 2 Barnew. & Ald. 646; 2 Maule & S.

80; 3 Ald. & E. 416. But for a great number of years the granting of the prerogative writ of mandamus has been confined in England to the court of king's bench.

8. In the United States the writ is generally issued by the highest court of judicature having jurisdiction at law. 34 Penn. St. 496; 20 Ill. 525.

The thirteenth section of the act of congress of Sept. 24, 1789, gives the supreme court power to issue writs of mandamus, in cases warranted by the principles and usages of law, to any courts appointed or persons holding office under the authority of the United States. The issuing of a mandamus to courts is the exercise of an appellate jurisdiction, and, therefore, constitutionally vested in the supreme court; but a mandamus directed to a public officer belongs to original jurisdiction, and, by the constitution, the exercise of original jurisdiction by the supreme court is restricted to certain specified cases, which do not comprehend a mandamus. The latter clause of the above section, authorizing this writ to be issued by the supreme court, to persons holding office under the authority of the United States, is, therefore, not warranted by the constitution, and void. 1 Cranch, 175. See 5 Pet. 190; 13 id. 279, 404; 5 How. 103.

The circuit courts of the United States may also issue writs of mandamus; but their power in this particular is confined exclusively to those cases in which it may be necessary to the exercise of their jurisdiction. 7 Cranch, 504; 8 Wheat. 598; 1 Paine, C. C. 453.

9. The mode of proceeding in obtaining the writ is: first, to demand of the party to perform the act. And it would seem that the party should be made aware of the purpose of the demand. 3 Ad. & E. 217, 477. The refusal must be of the thing demanded, and not of the right merely. 5 Barnew. & Ad. 978. The refusal should be absolute and unqualified; but it may be by silence only. But the party should understand that he is required to perform the duty upon pain of the legal redress being resorted to without further delay. 4 Railw. Cas. 112. But any exception to the demand should be taken as a preliminary question. 10 Ad. & E. 531; Redfield, Railw. § 190, and notes.

The application for a mandamus may be by motion in court, and the production of ex parte affidavits, in support of the facts alleged; in which case an alternative writ issues, as matter of course, generally, and the case is heard upon the excuse alleged in the return to the alternative writ. See 2 Metc. Ky. 56. Or the party may apply for the writ by formal petition, setting forth the grounds in detail, in which case the merits of the question are determined upon the traverse of the petition, instead of the traverse of the return to the alternative writ. 9 Ohio St. 599. And in either form, if the application prevails, a peremptory mandamus issues; the only proper or admissible return to which is a certificate of compliance with its requisitions, without further excuse or delay. Hodges on Railw. 640–644; 1 Q. B. 616; 1 Iowa, 179.

10. The English practice is, that if the first writ is denied, even on the ground of defects in the affidavits, not to permit a second application to be made. 8 Ald. & E. 413. So, also, if it fail for other defects of form. But a more liberal practice obtains in the American courts. Redfield, Railw. § 190, notes.

Costs rest in the discretion of the court. In the English courts they are allowed when the application fails, but not always when it prevails. Redfield, Railw. § 190, n. 8. The more just rule in such cases is to allow costs to the prevailing party, unless there is some special reason for denying them; and this rule now generally prevails. 8 Ad. & E. 901, 905; 5 id. 804; 1 Q. B. 636, 751; 6 Eng. L. & Eq. 267.

11. By the recent Common-Law Procedure Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, any party requiring any order in the nature of specific performance may commence his action in any of the superior courts of common law, in Westminster Hall, except in replevin and ejectment, and may indorse upon the writ and copy to be served that he will claim a writ of mandamus, and may renew the claim in his declaration, and if the writ is awarded in the final judgment in the case, it will issue peremptorily in the first instance. The form of this statutory mandamus is very brief, and its execution is enforced by attachment. The prerogative writ of mandamus is still retained in the English practice: but it is obvious that the foregoing statute must have very essentially abridged its use, as well as that of decrees in chancery, for specific performance. See 8 Ell. & B. 512; Redfield, Railw. § 190, pl. 8.

Controverted questions of fact, arising in the trial of applications for mandamus in the English practice, are referred to the determination of a jury. 1 Railw. Cas. 377; 2 id. 711; 8 Ell. & B. 512; 1 East, 114. By the American practice, questions of fact, in applications for mandamus, are more commonly tried by the court. 2 Metc. Ky. 56.

MANDANT. The bailor in a contract of mandate.

MANDATARY, MANDATARIUS. One who undertakes to perform a mandate. Jones, Bailm. 53.

MANDATE. A judicial command or precept issued by a court or magistrate, directing the proper officer to enforce a judgment, sentence, or decree. Jones, Bailm. 52.

A bailment of property in regard to which the bailee engages to do some act without reward. Story, Bailm. § 137.

The contract of mandate in the civil law is not limited to personal property, nor does it require a delivery of personal property when it relates to that. Pothier, de Mand. n. 1; La. Civ. Code, 2954–2964. It is, however, restricted to things of a personal nature at common law, and of these there must be a delivery, actual or constructive. Story, Bailm. § 142; 3 Strobh. So. C. 343.

Mandates and deposits closely resemble each other: the distinction being that in mandates the care and service are the principal, and the custody the accessory; while in deposits the custody is the principal thing, and the care and service are merely accessory. Story, Bailm. § 140.

2. For the creation of a mandate it is necessary, — first, that there should exist something, which should be the matter of the contract; secondly, that it should be done gratuitously; and, thirdly, that the parties should voluntarily intend to enter into the contract. Pothier, Pand. l. 17, t. 1, p. 1, § 1; Pothier, de Mandat, c. 1, § 2.

There is no particular form or manner of entering into the contract of mandate prescribed either by the common law or by the civil law, in order to give it validity. It may be verbal or in writing; it may be express or implied; it may be in solemn form or in any other manner. Story, Bailm. § 160. The contract may be varied at the pleasure of the parties. It may be absolute or conditional, general or special, temporary or permanent. Wood, Civ. Law, 242; 1 Domat, b. 1, t. 15, §§ 1, 6, 7, 8; Pothier, de Mandat, c. 1, § 3, nn. 34–36.

3. The mandatary, upon undertaking his trust and receiving his article, is bound to perform it as agreed upon, 2 Ld. Raym. 919; 1 Taunt. 523; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 117; 1 Sneed, Tenn. 248; 6 Binn. Penn. 308; 5 Fla. 38, and is responsible only for gross negligence, 2 Kent, Comm. 4th ed. 571–573; 1 H. Blackst. 158; 4 Barnew. & C. 345; 2 Ad. & E. 256; 16 How. 475; 3 Mas. C. C. 132; 14 Serg. & R. Penn. 275; 17 Mass. 459; 2 Hawks, No. C. 146; 8 Metc. Mass. 91; but in considering the question of negligence, regard is to be had to any implied undertaking to furnish superior skill arising from the known ability of the mandatary. Story, Bailm. §§ 177, 182; Jones, Bailm. 14–16; 20 Mart. La. 68. Whether a bank is liable for neglect of its agents in collecting notes, see 22 Wend. N. Y. 215; 3 Hill, N. Y. 560; 8 N. Y. 459; 3 Hill, So. C. 77; 4 Rawle, Penn. 384; 2 Gall. C. C. 565; 10 Cush. Mass. 583; 12 Conn. 303; 6 Harr. & J. Md. 146; 4 Whart. 105; 1 Pet. 25. He must render an account of his proceedings, and show a compliance with the conditions of the bailment. Story, Bailm. §§ 191 et seq.

4. The dissolution of the contract may be by renunciation by the mandatary before commencing the execution of the undertaking, 2 Mees. & W. Exch. 145; 1 Mood. & R. 38; 2 Ld. Raym. 909; 22 Eng. L. & Eq. 501; 8 B. Monr. Ky. 415; 3 Fla. 38; by revocation of authority by the mandator, 6 Pick. Mass. 198; 5 Binn. Penn. 316; 5 Term, 213; see 4 Taunt. 541; 16 East, 382; by the death of the mandator, 6 East, 356; 5 Esp. 118; 2 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 51; 2 Mas. C. C. 244; 8 Wheat. 174; by death of the mandatary, 2 Kent, Comm. 504; 8 Taunt. 403; and by a change of state of the parties, Story, Ag. § 481; and in some cases by operation of law. Story, Ag. § 500.

The question of gross negligence is one for the jury, 2 Ad. & E. 256; 3 Bingh. N. C. 468; 11 Wend. N. Y. 25, and the plaintiff must show it. 3 East, 192; 4 Esp. 165; 2 Ad. & E. 80; 10 Watts, Penn. 335. See 3 Johns. N. Y. 170; 2 Wheat. 100; 7 B. Monr. Ky. 661; 8 Humphr. Tenn. 430.

In Civil Law. The instructions which the emperor addressed to a public functionary, and which were to serve as rules for his conduct. These mandates resembled those of the proconsuls, the mandata jurisdictio, and were ordinarily binding on the legates or lieutenants of the emperor of the imperial provinces, and there they had the authority of the principal edicts. Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 3, § 24, n. 4.

MANDATOR. The person employing another to perform a mandate. Story, Bailm. § 138; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 382; Halif. Anal. Civ. Law, 70.

MANDAVI BALLIVO. In English Practice. The return made by a sheriff when he has committed the execution of a writ to a bailiff of a liberty, who has the right to execute the writ.

MANHOOD. In Feudal Law. A term denoting the ceremony of doing homage by the vassal to his lord. The formula used was devenio vester homo, I become your man. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 54. See HOMAGE.

MANIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. This is the most common of all the forms of recent insanity, and consists of one or both of the following conditions, viz.: intellectual aberration, and morbid or affective obliquity.

In other words, the maniac either misapprehends the true relations between persons and things, in consequence of which he adopts notions manifestly absurd, and believes in occurrences that never did and never could take place, or his sentiments, affections, and emotions are so perverted that whatever excites their activity is viewed through a distorting medium, or, which is the most common fact, both these conditions may exist together, in which case their relative share in the disease may differ in such a degree that one or the other may scarcely be perceived at all. According as the intellectual or moral element prevails, the disease is called intellectual or moral mania. Whether the former is ever entirely wanting has been stoutly questioned, less from any dearth of facts than from some fancied metaphysical incongruity. The logical consequence of the doubt is that in the absence of intellectual disturbance there is really no insanity,—the moral disorders proceeding rather from unbridled passions than any pathological condition. Against all such reasoning it will be sufficient here to oppose the very common fact that in every collection of the insane may be found many who exhibit no intellectual aberration, but in whom moral disorders of the most flagrant kind present a marked contrast to the previous character and habits of life.

Both forms of mania may be either general or partial. In the latter, the patient has adopted some notion having a very limited influence upon his mental movements, while outside of that no appearance of impairment or irregularity can be discerned. Pure monomania, as this form of insanity has been often called,—that is, a mania confined to a certain point, the understanding being perfectly sound in every other respect,—is, no doubt, a veritable fact, but one of very rare occurrence. The peculiar notions of the insane, constituting insane belief, are of two kinds: delu- sions and hallucinations. By the former is meant a firm belief in something impossible, either in the nature of things or in the circumstances of the case, or, if possible, highly improbable, and associated in the mind of the patient with consequences that have to it only a fanciful relation. By hallucination is meant an impression supposed by the patient, contrary to all proof or possibility, to have been received through one of the senses. For instance, the belief that one is Jesus Christ or the Pope of Rome is a delusion; the belief that one hears voices speaking from the walls of the room, or sees armies contending in the clouds, is a hallucination. The latter implies some morbid activity of the perceptive powers; the former is a mistake of the intellect exclusively.

2. The legal consequences of partial intellectual mania in criminal cases are not yet very definitely settled. In the trial of Hadfield, Mr. Erskine, his counsel, declared that delusion was the true test of the kind of mental disease which annuls criminal responsibility; and the correctness of the principle was unhesitatingly recognized by the court. In subsequent trials, however, it has been seldom mentioned, being discarded for other more favorite tests. In the authoritative statement of the law made by the English judges, in 1843, in reply to queries propounded by the house of lords, it is recognized as a sufficient plea in defence of crime, under certain qualifications. The effect of the delusion on the quality of the act will be precisely the same as if the facts in connection with it were real. "For example," they say, "if under the influence of delusion the person supposes another man to be in the act of attempting to take away life, and he kills that man, as he supposes, in self-defence, he would be exempt from punishment. If his delusion was that the deceased had inflicted a serious injury to his character and fortune, and he killed him in revenge for such supposed injury, he would be liable to punishment." 10 Clark & F. Hou. L. 200. "If a man had the delusion that his head was made of glass, that would be no excuse for his killing a man: he would know very well that, although his head was made of glass, that was no reason why he should kill another man, and that it was a wrong act; and he would be properly subjected to punishment for that act." Baron Alderson, in Reg. vs. Pate, Times, July 12, 1850. In Com. vs. Rogers, 7 Metc. Mass. 500, this view was adopted, and has become authority in this country. At first sight this doctrine seems to be very reasonable; but herein consists its fallacy, in expecting sound logical reasoning from the insane. To suppose that one may kill another for some little affront or injury is no less an indication of insanity than to suppose that one's head is made of glass, and he is no more responsible for one than for the other. It is a characteristic trait of the insane that they do not gauge the measure of their retaliation for the fancied injuries which they suffer by the standards of sane men. The doctrine of the courts, therefore, is in direct conflict with the facts of science. It also indicates the unwillingness common among all classes of minds to regard any person as irresponsible who, notwithstanding some delusions, conducts with shrewdness and discretion in most of the relations of life.

3. In civil cases the prevailing doctrine is that partial intellectual mania invalidates, as it certainly should, any act performed under its influence. The principle was enforced with remarkable clearness and ability by Sir John Nicholl, in the celebrated case of Dew vs. Clark, 3 Add. Eccl. 79. See Johnson vs. Moore's heirs, 1 Litt. Ky. 371. This is noticeable as being opposed to the principle of what was then the leading case on the subject, Greenwood vs. Greenwood, 13 Ves. Ch. 88, sed contra, 3 Curt. Eccl. 337, where a will was established which was made under the direct influence of a delusion. Recently, however, Lord Brougham has declared that, in regard to legal consequences, partial is not to be distinguished from general insanity, because it is impossible to assign limits to the action of the former in any given case. If the mind were an aggregate of various faculties, then it might be possible, perhaps, to indicate those which are diseased and trace the operation of the disease; but, the fact being that the mind is one and indivisible, insanity on one point renders it unreliable on any other, and, consequently, must invalidate any civil act, whether sensible and judicious or manifestly prompted by the delusion. If, for instance, a person believing himself to be Emperor of Germany should make his will, and that, while so doing, something should occur to lead him to utter his delusion, then certainly that will cannot be established, however correct and rational its dispositions may be. In this view of the matter, his lordship said he had the concurrence of Lord Langdale, Dr. Lushington, and Mr. T. Pemberton Leigh. Waring vs. Waring, 6 Thornt. It is not probable, however, that the common practice, founded as it is on our maturest knowledge of insanity, will be readily abandoned on the strength of a showy speculation. It may now be considered as the settled doctrine of English and American courts that partial insanity may or may not invalidate a will.

4. In general intellectual mania, excepting that form of it called raving, it is not to be understood that the mind is irrational on every topic, but rather that it is the sport of vague and shifting delusions, or, where these are not manifest, has lost all nicety of intellectual discernment, and the ability to perform any continuous process of thought with its customary steadiness and correctness. It is usually accompanied by feelings of estrangement or indifference towards those who at other times were objects of affection and interest. A common feature of the disease is either more or less nervous exaltation, manifested by loquacity, turbulence, and great muscular activity, or depression, indicated by silence, gloom, painful apprehensions, and thoughts of self-destruction.

tence of the disease, the instructions of the court, the opinions of experts, and the intelligence of the jury. In its higher grades, where all reason has disappeared, and the person knows nothing correctly, responsibility is unquestionably annulled. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 30. In cases where reason has not completely gone,—where the person converses rationally on some topics, and conducts with propriety in some relations of life,—the law does not regard him as necessarily irresponsible. It lays down certain criteria, or tests, and the manner in which he stands these decides the question of guilt or innocence. On these points the practice varied to such a degree that it was impossible to say with any confidence what the law actually was. Ray, Med. Jur. 42. In this dilemma, the house of lords propounded to the judges of England certain queries, for the purpose of obtaining an authoritative exposition of the law. 10 Clark & F. Hou. L. 200. These queries had reference chiefly to the effect of delusions; and the reply of the judges has been just considered. In regard to the effect of insanity generally, they reply that "to establish a defence on the ground of insanity it must be clearly proved that at the time of committing the act the party accused was laboring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong." In regard to this criterion, it is enough to say that had it been always used it would have produced the conviction of most of those who are universally regarded as having been properly acquitted. Hadfield, for instance, knew that in attempting the life of the king he was doing wrong, and that the act, if successful, would be murder; but he thought it would lead to the accomplishment of great ends, and he was ready to meet the punishment he deserved. So, too, in regard to the common case of a person killing his children to prevent their coming to want: he is perfectly aware of the nature and quality of the act, but considers himself justified by the end proposed. And yet such persons have been generally acquitted. The truth is, these criteria have no foundation in nature, and do not truly indicate the extent to which the disease has affected the operations of the mind. Insanity once admitted, in any degree, it is only sheer presumption, not wisdom, to say that it could not have perverted the action of the mind in regard to any particular criminal act. Ray, Med. Jur. Ins. 60, 64, 273–284.

6. Nothing can be more contrary to the spirit of the common law than to show any favor to the plea of this kind of insanity in defence of crime. Occasionally, however, this defence has prevailed in minor offences, owing more to favorable accessory circumstances than to its intrinsic merits. Juries have been loath to convict of theft a man who towards the close of an exemplary life has been detected in stealing things of insignificant value, or a lady who when pregnant, and only then, forgets entirely the distinctions of meum and tuum, though at all other times a model of moral propriety. In cases of homicide, the defence of moral mania has been too seldom made, either in this country or England, to settle the law on the subject. But there is no reason to suppose that the old criteria would be dispensed with unless some peculiar features of the case conveyed unquestionable evidence of insanity. In 1846, C. J. Gibson, of Pennsylvania, admitted that "there is a moral or homicidal insanity, consisting of an irresistible inclination to kill or to commit some other particular offence," which would be a competent defence. Wharton, Ment. Unsound. 43. Just previously, C. J. Shaw, in Com. vs. Rogers, 7 Metc. Mass. 500, had mentioned an "uncontrollable impulse" as among the conditions which would annul criminal responsibility. In practice, the objection would always be urged that such impulses as those under consideration are not uncontrollable.

7. In general moral mania, it is not to be supposed that the sentiments and propensities are all and equally disordered. On the contrary, the propensities may not be excessively active, though occasionally one may crave unusual indulgence. The essential feature of general moral mania is that the moral relations, whereby the conduct is governed, more than by the deductions of reason, are viewed through a distorting medium. This condition is usually accompanied by a perversion of some of the sentiments that inspire hope, fear, courage, self-reliance, self-respect, modesty, veracity, domestic affection. The patient is eager and sanguine in the pursuit of whatever strikes his fancy, ready with the most plausible reasons for the success of the wildest projects, viewing every prospect through a rose-colored medium, and regardless of the little proprieties and amenities of life. Love for others is replaced by aversion or indifference; the least contradiction or check is met by anger or impatience; he is restless, insensible to fatigue, and sleeps comparatively little. In some cases, and often at different periods in the same case, the very opposite moral condition occurs. Without cause, true or delusive, the person is completely wretched. The past affords him no pleasure, the future reveals not a single gleam of hope, and the ordinary sources of comfort and joy only serve to darken the cloud of doubt, apprehension, and despair in which he is enveloped.

8. There is no good reason why general moral mania should not be followed by the same legal consequences as those of intellectual mania. True, the intellect is supposed to be sound; but that is only one element of responsibility, which requires, besides a knowledge of the right and true, the power, supplied only by the moral faculties, to obey their dictates. If the latter are diseased, then is responsibility annulled just as effectually as if the knowing faculties were disordered by delusion. The conduct of most men is determined in a great degree as much by the state of their feelings as by the conclusions of their understandings; and when the former are affected by disease, nothing can be more unphilosophical, more contradictory to facts, than to ignore its existence altogether in settling the question of responsibility. Theoretically, this form of insanity is not recognized by courts. In Reg. vs. Barton, it was pronounced by Baron Parke to be "a dangerous innovation coming in with the present century." 3 Cox, Cr. Cas. 275. "A man might say he picked a pocket from some uncontrollable impulse; and in that case the law would have an uncontrollable impulse to punish him for it." Baron Alderson, in Reg. vs. Pate, Lond. Times, July 12, 1850. See, also, Chitty, Med. Jur. 352; 3 Carr. & Kir. 185. In Frere vs. Peacock, 1 Rob. 448, the court, Sir Herbert Jenner Fust, said "he was not aware of any case decided in a court of law, where moral perversion of the feelings, unaccompanied with delusion, has been held a sufficient ground to invalidate and nullify the acts of one so affected." In this country, C. J. Hornblower, in State vs. Spencer, 1 Zabr. 196, declared himself strongly against the doctrine of moral insanity. On the other hand, C. J. Lewis, of Pennsylvania, in a case he was trying, declared emphatically that, "where its existence is fully established, this species of insanity relieves from accountability to human laws." Wharton, Ment. Unsound. 44. In cases not capital, the verdict would probably be determined rather by the circumstances of the case than by any arbitrary rule of law. See INSANITY.

MANIA A POTU. See DELIRIUM TREMENS.

MANIFEST. In Commercial Law. A written instrument containing a true account of the cargo of a ship or a commercial vessel.

As to the requirements of the United States laws in respect to manifests, see 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 593, 594.

The want of a manifest, where one is required, and also the making a false manifest, are grave offences.

In Evidence. That which is clear and requires no proof; that which is notorious. See NOTORIETY.

MANIFESTO. A solemn declaration, by the constituted authorities of a nation, which contains the reasons for its public acts towards another.

On the declaration of war, a manifesto is usually issued, in which the nation declaring the war states the reasons for so doing. Vattel, l. 3, c. 4, § 64; Wolffius, § 1187.

MANKIND. Persons of the male sex; the human species. The statute of 25 Hen. VIII., c. 6, makes it felony to commit sodomy with mankind or beast. Females as well as males are included under the term mankind. Fortescue, 91; Bacon, Abr. Sodomy. See GENDER.

MANNER AND FORM. In Pleading. After traversing any allegation in pleading, it is usual to say, "in manner and form as he has in his declaration in that behalf alleged," which is as much as to include in the traverse not only the mere fact opposed to it, but that in the manner and form in which it is stated by the other party. These words, however, only put in issue the substantial statement of the manner of the fact traversed, and do not extend to the time, place, or other circumstances attending it, if they were not originally material and necessary to be proved as laid. 3 Bouvier, Inst. 297. See Modo et Forma.

MANNOPUS (Lat.). An ancient word, which signifies goods taken in the hands of an apprehended thief.

MANOR.

This word is derived from the French manoir, and signifies a house, residence, or habitation. At present its meaning is more enlarged, and includes not only a dwelling-house, but also lands. See Coke, Litt. 58, 108; 2 Rolle, Abr. 121; Merlin, Répert, Manoir. See Sergeant, Land Laws of Penn. 195.

In English Law. A tract of land originally granted by the king to a person of rank, part of which (terræ tenementales) were given by the grantee or lord of the manor to his followers, the rest he retained, under the name of his demesnes (terræ dominicales). That which remained uncultivated was called the lord's waste, and served for public roads, and commons of pasture for the lord and his tenants. The whole fee was called a lordship, or barony, and the court appendant to the manor the court-baron. The tenants, in respect to their relation to this court and to each other, were called pares curiæ; in relation to the tenure of their lands, copyholders (q.v.), as holding by a copy of the record in the lord's court.

The franchise of a manor; i.e. the right to jurisdiction and rents and services of copyholders. Cowel. No new manors were created in England after the prohibition of subinfeudation by stat. Quia Emptores, in 1290. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 30.

In American Law. A manor is a tract held of a proprietor by a fee-farm rent in money or in kind, and descending to oldest son of proprietor, who in New York is called a patroon.

Manor is derived originally either from Lat. manendo, remaining, or from Brit. maer, stones, being the place marked out or inclosed by stones. Webst.

MANSE. Habitation; farm and land. Spelman, Gloss. Parsonage or vicarage house. Paroch. Antiq. 431; Jacob, Law Dict. So in Scotland. Bell, Dict.

MANSION-HOUSE. Any house of dwelling, in the law of burglary, etc. Coke, 3d Inst. 64.

The term "mansion-house," in its common sense, not only includes the dwelling-house, but also all the buildings within the curtilage, as the dairy-house, the cow-house, the stable, etc.; though not under the same roof nor contiguous. Burn, Inst. Burglary; 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 215, 216; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 558; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 225. See 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 199; 4 Strobh. So. C. 372; 13 Bost. Law Rep. 157; 4 Call. Va. 109; 14 Mees. & W. Exch. 181; 4 C. B. 105.

MANSLAUGHTER. In Criminal Law. The unlawful killing of another without malice either express or implied. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 190; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 466.

The distinction between manslaughter and murder consists in the following. In the former, though the act which occasions the death be unlawful, or likely to be attended with bodily mischief, yet the malice, either express or implied, which is the very essence of murder, is presumed to be wanting in manslaughter. 1 East, Pl. Cr. 218; Foster, 290; 5 Cush. Mass. 304.

It also differs from murder in this, that there can be no accessaries before the fact, there having been no time for premeditation. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 437; 1 Russell, Crimes, 485.

Involuntary manslaughter is such as happens without the intention to inflict the injury.

Voluntary manslaughter is such as happens voluntarily or with an intention to produce the injury.

2. Homicide may become manslaughter in consequence of provocation; mutual combat; in case of resistance to public officers, etc.; killing in the prosecution of an unlawful or wanton act; or killing in the prosecution of a lawful act improperly performed, or performed without lawful authority.

3. The provocation which reduces the killing from murder to manslaughter is an answer to the presumption of malice, which the law raises in every case of homicide: it is, therefore, no answer when express malice is proved. 1 Russell, Crimes, 440; Foster, 132; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 239. And to be available the provocation must have been reasonable and recent; for no words or slight provocation will be sufficient, and if the party has had time to cool, malice will be inferred. 3 Wash. C. C. 515; 4 Penn. St. 264; 2 N. Y. 193; 25 Miss. 383; 3 Gratt. Va. 594; 6 Blackf. Ind. 299; 8 Ired. No. C. 344; 18 Ala. N. s. 720; 15 Ga. 223; 10 Humphr. Tenn. 141; 1 Carr. & K. 556; 5 Carr. & P. 324; 6 How. St. Tr. 769; 17 id. 57; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 4th ed. 151.

4. In cases of mutual combat, it is generally manslaughter only, when one of the parties is killed. J. Kel. 58, 119; 4 Dev. & B. No. C. 191; 1 Jones, No. C. 280; 2 Carr. & K. 814. When death ensues from duelling, the rule is different; and such killing is murder.

The killing of an officer by resistance to him while acting under lawful authority is murder; but if the officer be acting under a void or illegal authority, or out of his jurisdiction, the killing is manslaughter, or excusable homicide, according to the circumstances of the case. 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 80, 132; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 458; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 314; 2 Stark. Nisi P. Cas. 205.

5. Killing a person while doing an act of mere wantonness is manslaughter: as, if a person throws down stones in a coal-pit, by which a man is killed, although the offender was only a trespasser. Lew. Cr. Cas. 179.

When death ensues from the performance of a lawful act, it may, in consequence of the negligence of the offender, amount to manslaughter. For instance, if the death has been occasioned by negligent driving. 1 East, Pl. Cr. 263; 1 Carr. & P. 320; 6 id. 129. Again, when death ensues from the gross negligence of a medical or surgical practitioner, it is manslaughter. It is no crime for any to administer medicine; but it is a crime to administer it so rashly and carelessly, or with such criminal inattention, as to produce death; and in this respect there is no difference between the most regular practitioner and the greatest quack. 1 Fost. & F. 519, 521; 3 Carr. & K. 202; 4 Carr. & P. 440; 1 Bennett & H. Lead. Crim. Cas. 46–48. And see 6 Mass. 134; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 429; 3 Carr. & P. 632.

MANSTEALING. A word sometimes used synonymously with kidnapping. The latter is more technical. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 219.

MANU FORTI (Lat. with strong hand). A term used in pleading in cases of forcible entry. No other words are of equal import. 8 Term, 362; 4 Cush. Mass. 141; Dane, Abr. c. 132, a. 6, c. 203, a. 12.

MANU OPERA. See MANNOPUS.

MANUAL. That which is employed or used by the hand, of which a present profit may be made. Things in the manual occupation of the owner cannot be distrained for rent. See TOOLS.

MANUCAPTIO (Lat.). In Old English Practice. A writ which lay for a man taken on suspicion of felony, and the like, who could not be admitted to bail by the sheriff, or others having power to let to mainprise. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 249.

MANUCAPTORS. The same as mainpernors.

MANUFACTURE. In Patent Law. A term which is used to denote whatever is made directly by the hand of man, or indirectly through the instrumentality of any machinery which is controlled by human power. It is also applied to the process by which those results are produced. A commodity may be regarded as being in itself a manufacture, or as being produced by manufacture.

2. The term is used in its widest sense in the patent law of Great Britain. The statute of that kingdom prohibits the granting of letters patent except for the making, using, or selling of some new manufacture. The term, therefore, must embrace every thing which can there be the subject-matter of a patent. See 2 Barnew. & Ald. 349; 8 Term, 99; 2 H. Blackst. 492; 1 Webst. Pat. Cas. 512.

By our law, a patent can not only be granted for a new manufacture, but also for a new and useful art, machine, or composition of matter. There are, consequently, with us four classes of patentable inventions; and we therefore give the word "manufacture," when used as the subject-matter of a patent, a meaning so narrow that it shall cover none of the ground occupied by either of the other classes. Now, all these classes together only include what is embraced by the word "manufacture" in the English law, inasmuch as nothing is the subject-matter of a patent with us which is not so also in England. It follows that the term "manufacture" has a very different signification in the patent laws of the two countries.

3. With us, it has been defined to be "any new combination of old materials constituting a new result or production in the form of a vendible article, not being machinery." The contriver of a substantially new commodity, which is not properly a machine or a composition of matter, can obtain a patent therefor as for a new manufacture. And although it might properly be regarded as a machine or a composition of matter, yet if the claim to novelty rests on neither of those grounds, and if it really constitutes an essentially new merchantable commodity, it may be patented as a new manufacture. See PATENTS.

The vendible substance is the thing produced; and that which operates preserves no permanent form. In the first class the machine, and in the second the substance produced, is the subject of the patent. 2 H. Blackst. 492. See 8 Term, 99; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 349; Dav. Pat. Cas. 278; Webster, Pat. 8; Phillips, Pat. 77; Perpigny, Manuel des Inv. c. 2, s. 1; Renouard, c. 5, s. 1; Westm. Rev. No. 44, April, 1835, p. 247; 1 Bell, Comm. l. 1, part 2, c. 4, s. 1, p. 110, 5th ed.

MANUMISSION. The act of releasing from the power of another. The act of giving liberty to a slave.

The modern acceptation of the word is the act of giving liberty to slaves. But in the Roman law it was a generic expression, equally applicable to the enfranchisement from the manus, the mancipium, the dominica potestas, and the patria potestas. Manumittere signifies to escape from a power,—manus. Originally, the master could only validly manumit his slave when he had the dominium jure Quiritium over him: if he held him merely in bonis, the manumission was null, according to the civil law; but by the jus honorarium the slave was permitted to enjoy his liberty de facto, but whatever he acquired belonged to his master. By the law Junia Norbana, passed under Tiberius in the year of Rome 772, the position of this class of quasi slaves was fixed, by conceding to them the same rights which were formerly enjoyed by the people of the colonies established by Latium; and they were called Latini Juniani,—Latini because they enjoyed the jus latii,—jus latinitatis,—Juniani because they owed this status to the law Junia. They did not possess the rights of Roman citizens: they could neither vote nor perform any public functions; they were without the capacity of being instituted heirs or legatees, except indirectly by a fideicommissum; they could make no valid will or act as tutors; but they had the commercium, or right of buying and selling, and might witness a will made per æs et libram. But at their death their masters were entitled to all their property, as if they had never ceased to be slaves. In the language of the law, with their last breath they lost both their life and their liberty: in ipso ultimo spiritu simul animam atque libertatem amittebant. Inst. 3. 7. 4; Gaius, 3, § 56 et seq. At first there were only three modes of manumission, viz.: 1, vindicta; 2, census; and, 3, testamentum. The vindicta consisted in a fictitious suit, in which the assertor libertatis, as plaintiff, alleged that the slave was free; the master not denying the claim, the prætor rendered a decision declaring the slave free. In this proceeding figured a rod,—festuca, vindicta,—a sort of lance (the symbol of property), with which the assertor libertatis touched the slave when he claimed him as free: hence the expression vindicta manumissio. Census, the second mode, was when the slave was inscribed at the instance of his master, by the censor, in the census as a Roman citizen. Testamento was when the testator declared in express terms that the slave should be free,—servus meus Cratinus liber esto,—or by a fideicommissum,—heres meus rogo te ut Sanum vicini mei servum, manumittas ; fideicommitto heredis mei ut iste eum servum manumittat.

3. Afterwards, manumission might take place in various other ways: in sacrosanctis ecclesiis, of which we have a form: Ex beneficis S. ✠ per Joannem episcopum et per Albertum S. ✠ Casatum, factus est liber Lemtbertus, teste hac sancta ecclesia. Per epistolam. Justinian required the letter containing the manumission to be signed by five witnesses. Inter amicas, a declaration made by the master before his friends that he gave liberty to his slave: five witnesses were required, and an act was drawn up in which it was stated that they had heard the declaration. Per codicillum, by a codicil, which required to be signed by five witnesses. There were many other modes of manumission, which were enumerated in a Constitution of Justinian. C. 76, 3–12; 1 Ortolan, 35 et seq.; 1 Etienne, 78 et seq.; Lagrange, 101 et seq.

Direct manumission may be either by deed or will, or any other act of notoriety done with the intention to manumit. A variety of these modes are described as used by ancient nations.

Indirect manumission may be either by operation of law, as the removal of a slave to a non-slaveholding state animo morandi, or by implication of law, as where the master by his acts recognizes the freedom of his slave.

In the absence of statutory regulations, it is held in this country, in accordance with the principles of the common law, that no formal mode or prescribed words were necessary to effect the manumission; it may be by parol; and any words are sufficient which evince a renunciation of dominion on the part of the master. 8 Humphr. Tenn. 189; 3 Halst. N. J. 275. But mere declarations of intention are insufficient unless subsequently carried into effect. Coxe, N. J. 259; 8 Mart. La. 149; 14 Johns. N. Y. 324; 19 id. 53. Manumission may be made to take effect in future. Coxe, N. J. 4; 2 Root, Conn. 364. In the mean time the slaves are called statu liberi. See Cobb, Law of Slavery, passim; SERVUS; FREEDOM; BONDAGE.

MANURE. Dung. When collected in a heap it is considered as personal property, but when spread it becomes a part of the land and acquires the character of real estate. Al. 31; 2 Ired. No. C. 326; Washburn, Real Prop.

MANUS (Lat. hand), anciently, signified the person taking an oath as a compurgator. The use of this word probably came from the party laying his hand on the New Testament. Manus signifies, among the civilians, power, and is frequently used as synonymous with potestas. Leç. El. Dr. Rom. § 94.

MANUSCRIPT. An unpublished writing, or one that has been published without the consent of the person entitled to control it.

In every writing the author has a property at common law, which descends to his representative, but is not liable to seizure by creditors so that they can publish it. 1 Bell, Dict. 68. And an unauthorized publication will be restrained in equity. 4 Burr. 2320, 2408; 2 Brown, Parl. Cas. 138; 2 Atk. Ch. 342; 2 Ed. Ch. 329; 2 Mer. Ch. 434; Ambl. 694, 739; 1 Ball & B. Ch. Ir. 207; 2 Stor. C. C. 100; 5 McLean, C. C. 32. Letters are embraced within this principle; for, although the receiver has a qualified property in them, the right to object to their publication remains with the writer. It is held, however, that the receiver may publish them for the purposes of justice publicly administered, or to vindicate his character from an accusation publicly made. 2 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 19; 2 Swanst. Ch. 418; 2 Mer. Ch. 435; 2 Stor. C. C. 100; 1 Mart. La. 297; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 947; 4 Du. N. Y. 379. In the United States, the Copyright Act recognizes the right of property in "any manuscript whatever," which includes private letters, 5 McLean, C. C. 32, and gives a remedy for the unauthorized publication. These rights will be considered as abandoned if the author publishes his manuscripts without securing the copyright under the acts of congress. See Bouvier, Inst. Index; COPYRIGHT; Curtis, Copyright.

MARAUDER. One who, while employed in the army as a soldier, commits a larceny or robbery in the neighborhood of the camp, or while wandering away from the army. Merlin, Répert. See Halleck, Int. Laws; Lieber, Guerrilla Parties.

MARC-BANCO. The name of a coin. The marc-banco of Hamburg, as money of account, at the custom-house, is deemed and taken to be of the value of thirty-five cents. Act of March 3, 1843.

MARCH. In Scotch Law. A boundary-line. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. 2. 6. 4.

MARCHERS. In Old English Law. Nobles who lived on the Marches, and had their own laws, and power over life and death, as if they were petty princes. Camden; Jacob, Law Dict. Abolished by stat. 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26, 1 Edw. VI. c. 10, & 1 and 2 P. & M. c. 15. They were also called Lords Marchers.

MARCHES. Limits; confines; borders. Especially used of the limits between England and Wales and between England and Scotland.

MARESCALLUS (fr. Germ. march, horse, and schalch, master. DuCange). A groom of the stables, who also took care of the diseases of the horses. DuCange.

An officer of the imperial stable: magister equorum. DuCange.

A military officer, whose duty it was to keep watch on the enemy, to choose place of encampment, to arrange or marshal the army in order of battle, and, as master of the horse, to commence the battle. This office was second to that of comes stabuli, or constable. DuCange.

An officer of the court of exchequer. 51 Hen. III. 5.

An officer of a manor, who oversaw the hospitalities (mansionarius). DuCange; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 74.

Marescallus aulæ. An officer of the royal household, who had charge of the person of the monarch and peace of the palace. DuCange.

MARETUM (Lat.). Marshy ground overflowed by the sea or great rivers. Coke, Litt. 5.

MARINARIUS (L. Lat.). An ancient word which signified a mariner or seaman. In England, marinarius capitaneus was the admiral or warden of the ports.

MARINE. Belonging to the sea; relating to the sea; naval. A soldier employed, or liable to be employed, on vessels of war, under the command of an officer of marines, who acts under the direction of the commander of the ship. See MARINE CORPS. It is also used as a general term to denote the whole naval power of a state or country.

MARINE CONTRACT. One which relates to business done or transacted upon the sea and in sea-ports, and over which the courts of admiralty have jurisdiction concurrent with the courts of common law. See MARITIME CONTRACT; Parsons, Marit. Law; 2 Gall. C. C. 398.

MARINE CORPS. A body of officers and soldiers under an organization separate and distinct from that of the army, and intended for service, in detached portions, on board of ships of war.

MARINE COURT IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK. See NEW YORK.

MARINE INSURANCE. A contract of indemnity by which one party, for a stipulated premium, undertakes to indemnify the other, to the extent of the amount insured, against all perils of the sea, or certain enumerated perils, to which his ship, cargo, and freight, or some of them, may be exposed during a certain voyage or a fixed period of time.

The party who takes the risk is called the insurer or underwriter; and the party to be protected is called the insured or assured. The sum paid as a consideration for the insurance is called the premium; and the instrument containing the contract is called the policy. See Phillips, Arnould, Duer, Marshall, Insurance; Parsons, Marit. Law; Emerigon on Insurance, by Meredith; and title Insurance in the Index of Kent's Commentaries and Bouvier's Institutes, and in this work.

MARINE INTEREST. A compensation paid for the use of money loaned on bottomry or respondentia. Provided the money be loaned and put at risk, there is no fixed limit to the rate which may be lawfully charged by the lender; but courts of admiralty, in enforcing the contract, will mitigate the rate when it is extortionate and unconscionable. See BOTTOMRY; MARITIME LOAN; RESPONDENTIA.

MARINE LEAGUE. A measure equal to the twentieth part of a degree of latitude. Boucher, Inst. n. 1845. It is generally conceded that a nation has exclusive territorial jurisdiction upon the high seas for a marine league from its own shores. 1 Kent, Comm. 29.

MARINER. One whose occupation it is to navigate vessels upon the sea. See SEAMEN; SHIPPING ARTICLES. Surgeons, engineers, clerks, stewards, cooks, porters, and chambermaids, on passenger-steamers, when necessary for the service of the ship or crew, are also deemed mariners, and permitted as such to sue in the admiralty for their wages. 1 Conkling, Adm. 107. See SEAMEN; LIEN.

MARITAGIUM (Lat.). A portion given with a daughter in marriage.

During the existence of the feudal law, it was the right which the lord of the fee had, under certain tenures, to dispose of the daughters of his vassal in marriage. Beames, Glanv. 138, n.; Bracton, 21 a; Spelman, Gloss.; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 69; Coke, Litt. 21 b, 76 a.

MARITAL. That which belongs to marriage: as, marital rights, marital duties.

Contracts made by a feme sole with a view to deprive her intended husband of his marital rights with respect to her property are a fraud upon him, and may be set aside in equity. By the marriage the husband assumes the duty of paying her debts contracted previous to the coverture, and of supporting her during its existence; and he cannot, therefore, be fraudulently deprived, by the intended wife, of those rights which enable him to perform the duties which attach to him. Newland, Contr. 424; 1 Vern. Ch. 408; 2 id. 17; 2 P. Will. Ch. 357, 674; 2 Brown, Ch. 345; 1 Ves. Ch. 22; 2 Cox, Ch. 28; 2 Beav. Rolls, 528; White, Lead. Cas. in Eq. *277; 1 Hill, Ch. 1, 4; 13 Me. 124; 1 M'Mull. Eq. So. C. 237; 3 Ired. Eq. No. C. 487; 4 Wash. C. C. 224.

MARITAL PORTION. In Louisiana. The name given to that part of a deceased husband's estate to which the widow is entitled. La. Civ. Code, 334, art. 55; 3 Mart. La. N. S. 1.

MARITIME CAUSE. A cause arising from a maritime contract, whether made at sea or on land.

2. The term includes such causes as relate to the business, commerce, or navigation of the sea: as charter-parties, bills of lading, and other contracts of affreightment; bottomry and respondentia contracts; and contracts for maritime services in repairing, supplying, and navigating ships and vessels; contracts and quasi contracts respecting averages, contributions, and jettisons, when the party prosecuting has a maritime lien; and also those arising from torts and injuries committed on the high seas, or on other navigable waters within the admiralty jurisdiction.

3. Suits for the recovery of damages for the collision of ships and vessels constitute an important class of the causes founded upon marine torts; and in these cases the admiralty courts adopt a rule of decision entirely different from that acted upon in common-law courts. In the latter a plaintiff whose negligence has contributed to the injury of which he complains cannot recover damages, although the defendant has been equally, or even more, culpable; but in cases of collision the admiralty courts, when it is established that both vessels were in fault, or that the collision must be attributed to the fault of one or both of the vessels, and it cannot be determined which, if either alone, was in fault, aggregate the damage to both, and then divide it between them, decreeing that the owners of each shall bear half the whole loss. 2 Dods. Adm. 85; 3 W. Rob. Adm. 38; 17 How. 172; 1 Conkling, Adm. 374–380.

4. Cases of salvage are also within the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts; and they likewise exercise jurisdiction in favor of a part-owner who dissents from the determination of a majority of the owners to employ the ship in a particular manner, and seeks to obtain security for the safe return of the vessel. They also exercise a jurisdiction (founded upon a rule of national comity) for the purpose of enforcing the decrees of foreign courts of admiralty, when the ends of justice require it. 1 Conkling, Adm. 2d ed. 26; 2 Gall. C. C. 191, 197.

The admiralty courts of the United States also have jurisdiction of controversies between part-owners and others in relation to the title or possession of ships and vessels, Ware, Dist. Ct. 232; 2 Curt. C. C. 426; 18 How. 267; also of all seizures under laws of import, navigation, or trade of the United States, where such seizures are made on the high seas or on waters which are navigable from the sea by vessels of ten or more tons burden. See Judiciary Act, sec. 9, 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 77.

5. In all cases of contract the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts depends upon the nature or subject-matter of the contract; but in cases of maritime tort and salvage their jurisdiction depends upon the place in which the cause of action accrued. 1 Conkling, Adm. 19, 32. In general, the courts of common law have a concurrent jurisdiction with courts of admiralty in those cases which, in legal parlance, are said to be prosecuted or promoted on the instance side of the court. But the admiralty also has jurisdiction of prize cases, or cases arising upon captures jure belli; and that jurisdiction is exclusive.

6. In the United States, the jurisdiction of the admiralty courts is not limited to the cases of contracts relating to the navigation of the high seas or other waters within the ebb and flow of the tide, and to causes of action for torts committed on tide-waters, as was generally supposed prior to 1845, 10 Wheat. 428; 7 Pet. 324, 343; but it is now held to extend to the great lakes and to the other navigable waters of the United States, in respect to commerce with foreign nations and among the states. 12 How. 443, 468; 5 McLean, C. C. 269, 359; 20 How. 296.

The admiralty jurisdiction has been held not to extend to preliminary contracts, merely leading to the execution of maritime contracts, 3 Mas. C. C. 6; 4 id. 380; 3 Sumn. C. C. 144; nor to matters of account between part-owners, 11 Pet. 175; nor to trusts, although they may relate to maritime affairs, Dav. Dist. Ct. 71; nor to enforce a specific performance of a contract relating to maritime affairs; nor to a contract not maritime in its character, although the consideration for it may be maritime services, 4 Mas. C. C. 380; nor to questions of possession and property between owner and mortgagee, 17 How. 399; nor to contracts of affreightment from one port of the great lakes to another port in the same state, 21 How. 244; nor to contracts for supplies furnished a vessel engaged in such trade only; and, of course, such causes cannot be considered maritime causes. 21 How. 248.

MARITIME CONTRACT. One which relates to the business of navigation upon the sea, or to business appertaining to commerce or navigation to be transacted or done upon the sea, or in sea-ports, and over which courts of admiralty have jurisdiction concurrent with the courts of common law.

2. Such contracts, according to civilians and jurists, include, among others, charter-parties, bills of lading, and other contracts of affreightment, marine hypothecations, contracts for maritime service in building, repairing, supplying, and navigating ships or vessels, contracts and quasi contracts respecting averages, contributions, and jettisons. See 2 Gall. C. C. 398, etc., in which Judge Story gave a very elaborate and learned opinion on the subject. Parsons, Marit. Law.

It is, however, very doubtful whether his views in respect to the admiralty jurisdiction in cases of marine insurance would now be concurred in by the supreme court of the United States; and that learned tribunal, in the late case of The People's Ferry Co. vs. Beers, 20 How. 393, intimated that a contract for building a vessel was not a maritime contract. See, also, 7 How. 729; 19 id. 171.

3. The term "maritime contract," in its ordinary and proper signification, does not strictly apply to contracts relating to the navigation of our great inland lakes and our great navigable rivers; and yet contracts in respect to their navigation from state to state are now within the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States to the same extent as though they were arms of the sea and subject to tidal influences. 12 How. 443, 468. Such contracts are, therefore, frequently denominated maritime contracts, and may, perhaps, be properly denominated quasi maritime, as being within the jurisdiction of the admiralty or maritime courts.

MARITIME LAW. That system of law which particularly relates to the affairs and business of the sea, to ships, their crews and navigation, and to the marine conveyance of persons and property. See ADMIRALTY, and the various titles in regard to which information is sought.

MARITIME LOAN. A contract or agreement by which one, who is the lender, lends to another, who is the borrower, a certain sum of money, upon condition that if the thing upon which the loan has been made should be lost by any peril of the sea, or vis major, the lender shall not be repaid unless what remains shall be equal to the sum borrowed; and if the thing arrive in safety, or in case it shall not have been injured but by its own defects or the fault of the master or mariners, the borrower shall be bound to return the sum borrowed, together with a certain sum agreed upon as the price of the hazard incurred. Emerigon, Mar. Loans, c. 1, s. 2. See BOTTOMRY; GROSS ADVENTURE; INTEREST, MARITIME; RESPONDENTIA.

MARITIME PROFIT. A term used by French writers to signify any profit derived from a maritime loan.

MARK. A sign, traced on paper or parchment, which stands in the place of a signature; usually made by persons who cannot write. It is most often the sign of the cross, made in a little space left between the Christian name and surname. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 305; 2 Curt. 324; Mood. & M. 516; 12 Pet. 150; 7 Bingh. 457; 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 455; 1 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 362; 1 Ves. Ch. 11. A mark is now held to be a good signature though the party was able to write. 8 Ad. & E. 94; 3 Nev. & P. 228; 3 Curt. 752; 5 Johns. N. Y. 144; 2 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 385; 24 Penn. St. 502; 29 id. 221; 19 Mo. 609; 21 id. 17; 18 Ga. 396; 16 B. Monr. Ky. 102; 1 Jarman, Wills, Perkins ed. 69, 112, note; 1 Williams, Exec. 63. See Penn. Stat. 1848.

The sign, writing, or ticket put upon manufactured goods to distinguish them from others, Poph. 144; 3 Barnew. & C. 541; 2 Atk. Ch. 485; 2 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 218; 3 Mylne & C. Ch. 1; Eden, Inj. 314; also to indicate the price; and if one use the mark of another to do him damage, an action on the case will lie, or an injunction may be had from chancery. 2 Croke, 47. See TRADE-MARKS.

MARK (spelled, also, Marc). A weight used in several parts of Europe, and for several commodities, especially gold and silver. When gold and silver are sold by the mark, it is divided into twenty-four carats. A money of accounts in England, and in some other countries a coin. The English mark is two-thirds of a pound sterling, or 13*s.* 4*d.*; and the Scotch mark is of equal value in Scotch money of account. Encyc. Amer.

MARKET (Lat. merx, merchandise; anciently, mercat). A public place and appointed time for buying and selling. A public place, appointed by public authority, where all sorts of things necessary for the subsistence or for the convenience of life are sold. All fairs are markets, but not vice versâ. Bracton, l. 2, c. 24; Coke, Litt. 22; Coke, 2d Inst. 401; Coke, 4th Inst. 272. Markets are generally regulated by local laws.

The franchise by which a town holds a market, which can only be by royal grant or immemorial usage.

By the term market is also understood the demand there is for any particular article: as, the cotton market in Europe is dull. See 15 Viner, Abr. 42; Comyns, Dig. Market.

MARKET OVERT. An open or public market; that is, a place appointed by law or custom for the sale of goods and chattels at stated times in public. "An open, public, and legally constituted market." Jervis, C. J., 9 J. Scott, 601.

2. The market-place is the only market overt out of London; but in London every shop is a market overt. 5 Coke, 83; F. Moore, 300. In London, every day except Sunday is market-day. In the country, particular days are fixed for market-days. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 449.

3. All contracts for any thing vendible, made in market overt, shall be binding; and sales pass the property, though stolen, if it be an open and proper place for the kind of goods, there be an actual sale for valuable consideration, no notice of wrongful possession, no collusion, parties able to contract, a contract originally and wholly in the market overt, toll be paid, if requisite, by statute, and the contract be made between sun and sun. 5 Coke, 83. But sale in market overt does not bind the king, though it does infants, etc. Coke, 2d Inst. 713; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 449; 2 Chitty, Com. Law, 148–154; Comyns, Dig. Market (E); Bacon, Abr. Fairs and Markets (E); 5 Barnew. & Ald. 624; Dane, Abr. c. 45, a. 2; Crabb, Real Prop. § 679 et seq.

4. There is no law recognizing the effect of a sale in market overt in Pennsylvania, 3 Yeates, Penn. 347; 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 130; in New York, 1 Johns. N. Y. 480; in Massachusetts, 8 Mass. 521; 14 id. 500; in Ohio, 5 Ohio, 203; nor in Vermont, 1 Tyl. Vt. 341; nor, indeed, in any of the United States. 10 Pet. 161; 2 Kent, Comm. 324.

MARLBRIDGE, STATUTE OF. An important English statute, 52 Hen. III. (1267), relating to the tenures of real property, and to procedure. It derived its name from the town in Wiltshire in which parliament sat when it was enacted, now known as Marlborough. Compare 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 62; Crabb, Com. Law, 156; Barrington, Stat. 66.

MARQUE AND REPRISAL. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

MARRIAGE. A contract, made in due form of law, by which a man and woman reciprocally engage to live with each other during their joint lives, and to discharge towards each other the duties imposed by law on the relation of husband and wife.

2. All persons are able to contract marriage unless they are under the legal age, or unless there be other disability. The age of consent at common law is fourteen in males, and twelve in females. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 236; 2 Kent, Comm. 6th ed. 78; 1 N. Chipm. Vt. 254; 10 Humphr. Tenn. 61; 1 Gray, Mass. 119. See 20 Ohio, 1. When a person under this age marries, such person can, when he or she arrives at the age above specified, avoid the marriage, or such person or both may, if the other is of legal age, confirm it. If either of the parties is under seven, the marriage is void. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 436, and note 9; 5 Ired. Eq. No. C. 487.

If either party is non compos mentis, or insane, the marriage is void. 21 N. H. 52; 22 id. 553; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 343.

If either party has a husband or wife living, the marriage is void. 4 Johns. N. Y. 53; 22 Ala. N. S. 86; 1 Salk. 120; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 438. See NULLITY OF MARRIAGE.

Consanguinity and affinity within the rules prescribed by law in this country render a marriage void. The statutes of particular states will be referred to hereafter. In England they render the marriage liable to be annulled by the ecclesiastical courts. 10 Metc. Mass. 451; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 434. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

3. The parties must each be willing to marry the other.

If either party acts under compulsion, or is under duress, the marriage is voidable. 2 Hagg. Cons. 104, 246.

Where one of the parties is mistaken in the person of the other, this requisite is wanting. But a mistake in the qualities or character of the other party will not avoid the marriage. Poynter, Marr. & D. c. 9.

If the apparent willingness is produced by fraud, the marriage will be valid till set aside by a court of chancery or by a decree of divorce. 5 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 43. Fraud is sometimes said to render a marriage void; but this is incorrect, as it is competent for the party injured to waive the tort and affirm the marriage. Impotency in one of the parties is sometimes laid down as rendering the marriage void, as being a species of fraud on the other party; but it is only a ground for annulling the contract by a court, or for a divorce.

4. The parties must actually make a contract of marriage: the form and requisites of it will depend on the law of the place. See LEX LOCI.

At common law, no particular form of words or ceremony was necessary. Mutual assent to the relation of husband and wife was sufficient. Any words importing a present assent to being married to each other were sufficient evidence of the contract. If the words imported an assent to a future marriage, if followed by consummation, this established a valid marriage by the canon law, but not by the common law. 10 Clark & F. Hou. L. 534; 15 N. Y. 345; 2 Roper, Husb. & W. 445–475; 1 How. 219; 2 N. H. 268.

5. At common law, the consent might be given in the presence of a magistrate or of any other person as a witness, or it might be found by a court or jury from the subsequent acknowledgment of the parties, or from the proof of cohabitation, or of general reputation resulting from the conduct of the parties. In the original United States the common-law rule prevails, except where it has been changed by legislation. 6 Binn. Penn. 405; 4 Johns. N. Y. 52; 7 Wend. N. Y. 47. See 10 N. H. 388; 4 Burr. 2058; 1 How. 219, 234; 1 Gray, Mass. 119; 2 Me. 102.

In civil cases, a marriage can generally be proved by showing that the parties have held themselves out as husband and wife, and by general reputation founded on their conduct. There is an exception, however, in the case of such civil suits as are founded on the marriage relation, such as actions for the seduction of the wife, where general reputation and cohabitation will not be sufficient. 4 N. Y. 230; 3 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 369, 373; 6 Conn. 446; 29 Me. 323; 14 N. H. 450.

6. In most of the states, the degrees of relationship within which marriages may not be contracted are prescribed by statute. This limit in cases of consanguinity is generally, though not always, that of first cousins. In some of the states, a violation of the rule renders, by statute, the marriage absolutely void. In others, no provision of this kind is made. Various statutes have been passed to guard against abuse of the marriage ceremony. Such of them as require license, or the publication of banns, or the consent of parents or guardians, are regarded as directory, and, unless explicitly declaring the marriage to be void, if not complied with do not render it void. Mass. Gen. Stat. (1860) 529; Conn. Comp. Stat. (1854) 323; Swan, Rev. Stat. of Ohio (1854), 569; 4 Iowa, 449; 26 Mo. 260; Reeve. Dom. Rel. 196, 200; 1 Rev. Swift's Dig. 20; 2 Watts, Penn. 9; 1 How. 219; 2 Halst. N. J. 138; 2 N. H. 268. As to rights of married women, see HUSBAND AND WIFE; WIFE.

MARRIAGE ARTICLES. Articles of agreement between parties contemplating marriage, in accordance with which the marriage settlement is afterwards to be drawn up. They are to be binding in case of marriage. They must be in writing, by Statute of Frauds. Burton, Real Prop. 484; Crabb, Real Prop. § 1809; 4 Cruise, Dig. 274, 323. See 2 Washburn, Real Prop. App.

MARRIAGE BROKAGE. The act by which a person interferes, for a consideration to be received by him, between a man and a woman, for the purpose of promoting a marriage between them. The money paid for such service is also known by this name.

It is a doctrine of the courts of equity that all marriage-brokage contracts are utterly void, as against public policy, and are, therefore, incapable of confirmation. 1 Fonblanque.

Eq. b. 1, c. 4, s. 10, note s; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 263; Newland, Contr. 469.

MARRIAGE PORTION. That property which is given to a woman on her marriage. See DOWRY.

MARRIAGE, PROMISE OF. A promise of marriage is a contract entered into between a man and woman that they will marry each other.

When the promise is made between persons competent to contract matrimony, an action lies for a breach of it. See PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.

MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT. An agreement made by the parties in contemplation of marriage, by which the title to certain property is changed, and the property to some extent becomes inalienable. 1 Rice, Eq. So. C. 315. See 2 Hill, Ch. So. C. 3; 8 Leigh, Va. 29; 1 Dev. & B. Eq. No. C. 389; 2 id. 103; 1 Baldw. C. C. 344; 15 Mass. 106; 1 Yeates, Penn. 221; 7 Pet. 348; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3947. See 2 Washburn, Real Prop. Appx.

MARSHAL. An officer of the United States, whose duty it is to execute the process of the courts of the United States. His duties within the district for which he is appointed are very similar to those of a sheriff. See U. S. Stat. at Large, Index; Sergeant, Const. Law, ch. 25; 2 Dall. 402; Burr's Trial, 365; 1 Mas. C. C. 100; 2 Gall. C. C. 101; 4 Cranch, 96; 7 id. 276; 9 id. 86, 212; 6 Wheat, 194; 9 id. 645.

MARSHAL. To arrange; put in proper order: e. g. "the law will marshall words, ut res magis valeat." Hill, B., Hardr. 92. So to marshal assets. See ASSETS. So to marshal coat-armour: this now belongs to heralds. Wharton, Lex. 2d Lond. ed.

MARSHALLING ASSETS. See ASSETS.

MARSHALSEA. In English Law. A prison belonging to the king's bench. It has now been consolidated with others, under the name of the queen's prison.

MARSHALSEA, COURT OF. A court originally held before the steward and marshal of the royal household.

It was instituted to administer justice between the servants of the king's household, that they might not be drawn into other courts and their services lost. It was anciently ambulatory; but Charles I. erected a court of record, by the name of curia palatii, to be held before the steward of the household, etc., to hold pleas of all personal actions which should arise within twelve miles of the royal palace at Whitehall, not including the city of London. This court was held weekly, to determine causes involving less than twenty pounds, together with the ancient court of Marshalsea, in the borough of Southwark. A writ of error lay thence to the king's bench. Both courts were abolished by the stat. 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, § 13. See Jacob, Whishaw, Law Dict.

MARTIAL LAW. That military rule and authority which exists in time of war, and is conferred by the laws of war, in relation to persons and things under and within the scope of active military operations, in carrying on the war, and which extinguishes or suspends civil rights and the remedies founded upon them, for the time-being, so far as it may appear to be necessary in order to the full accomplishment of the purposes of the war. Prof. Joel Parker, in N. A. Rev., Oct. 1861.

The application of military government to persons and property within the scope of it, according to the laws and usages of war, to the exclusion of the municipal government, in all respects where the latter would impair the efficiency of military rule and military action. Id. ibid.

2. It supersedes all civil proceedings which conflict with it, Benèt, Mil. Law, but does not necessarily supersede all such proceedings.

It extends, at least, to the camp, environs, and near field of military operations, 7 How. 83; 3 Mart. La. 530; 6 American Archives, 186; and see, also, 2 H. Blackst. 165; 1 Term, 549; 1 Knapp, Priv. MARYLAND. One of the thirteen original states of the Union.

2. The territory of Maryland was included in the grants previously made to companies formed for the settlement of Virginia. These grants were annulled, and Maryland was granted by Charles the First, on the 20th of June, 1632, to Cecilius Calvert, Baron of Baltimore. The first settlement under the authority of Lord Baltimore was made on the 27th of March, 1634, in what is now St. Mary's county. Some settlements were previously made on Kent Island, under the authority of Virginia.

During its colonial period, Maryland was governed, with slight interruptions, by the lord proprietary, under its charter.

The government of Maryland was assumed by commissioners acting under the Commonwealth of England; but in a few years Lord Baltimore was restored to his full powers, and remained undisturbed until the revolution of 1688, when the government was seized by the crown, and not restored to the proprietary till 1715. From this period there was no interruption to the proprietary rule until the revolution.

3. The territorial limits of Maryland seem to have been plainly described in the charter; still, long disputes arose about the boundaries, in the adjustment of which this state was reduced to her present limits.

The lines dividing Maryland from Pennsylvania and Delaware were fixed under an agreement between Thomas and Richard Penn and Lord Baltimore, dated in 1760. These lines were surveyed by Mason and Dixon; and hence the line between Maryland and Pennsylvania is called Mason and Dixon's line.

By this agreement, the rights of grantees under the respective proprietaries were saved, and provision made for confirming the titles by the government in whose jurisdiction the lands granted were situated. The boundary between Maryland and Virginia has never been finally settled. Maryland claimed to the south branch of the Potomac; but Virginia has held to the north branch, and exercised jurisdiction up to that line. The rights of the citizens of the respective states to fish and navigate the waters which divide Maryland and Virginia were fixed by compact between the two states in 1785.

4. The first constitution of this state was adopted on the eighth day of November, 1776. The present constitution was adopted in 1851, and went into operation on the fourth day of July in that year. It declared that no person ought to be molested on account of his religious belief, or compelled to frequent or maintain any place of worship or any ministry. Any person who believes in a God, and that he will be punished or rewarded for his acts either in this world or the next, is competent as a witness or a juror. The jury are the judges of the law and the fact in criminal cases. In civil cases the trial by jury is preserved where the amount in controversy exceeds five dollars. Lotteries are prohibited after April 1, 1859. No divorce can be granted by the legislature. No holder of public money, while indebted to the state, no person who fights a duel or sends or accepts a challenge, no person holding any office under the United States, no minister or preacher of the gospel, is eligible to any office of trust or profit. No debt can be created for purposes of internal improvement. Imprisonment for debt is not allowed. The legislature may not pass any law abolishing the relation of master and slave as now existing. Civil officers are nearly all elected by the people. Every free male white citizen twenty-one years of age, except lunatics, who has resided a year in the state and six months in the county or city, is entitled to vote. Elections are to be held on the first Wednesday in November in every year, commencing with 1851.

The statute law of Maryland, from the earliest colonial times, has been codified in two volumes, which were adopted "in lieu of and as a substitute for all the public general laws and public local laws heretofore passed by the legislature." See Acts of 1860, ch. 1.

The Legislative Power.

5. This is lodged in "The General Assembly of Maryland," composed of two branches: a senate and a house of delegates.

The Senate is composed of members elected, one from each county (the city of Baltimore also electing one), for the term of four years. One-half of the senate is elected every two years. A senator must be twenty-five years old, a citizen of the United States, have resided three years next before election in the state, and the last year thereof in the county or city from which he is elected.

The House of Delegates consists of members elected from the various counties. They are apportioned according to population; but the smallest county is not to have less than two, the city of Baltimore is to have four more than the largest, and the whole number is never to exceed eighty. A delegate must be twenty-one years of age, and otherwise possess the same qualifications as a senator.

The general assembly meets the first Wednesday in January every even year, and the session closes the tenth of March. It can grant no act of incorporation which may not be repealed. It cannot authorize taking private property without first paying or tendering a just compensation to the owner.

The Executive Power.

6. The Governor is elected every fourth year from 1853, for the term of four years, commencing on the second Wednesday in January next after his election. The state is divided into three districts, from each of which the governor must be elected successively. He must be thirty years old, have been for five years a resident of the state and three years of the district from which he is elected. The governor is commander of the land and naval forces; appoints, with the consent of the senate, all military officers, and all civil officers whose appointment is not otherwise provided for; in case of the vacancy of any office during the recess of the senate, he is to appoint a person to said office, to hold until the end of the next session of the legislature; may suspend or arrest any military officer for any military offence, and may remove any civil officer appointed by the governor; may convene the legislature or the senate alone; has power to grant reprieves and pardons, but before granting a nolle prosequi, or pardon, must give notice of the application, and of the day on or after which his decision will be given. When required, he is to report to either branch of the legislature the reasons which influenced his decision. He may not appoint to an office a person who has been rejected by the senate. He must reside at Annapolis. If a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the legislature, if in session, appoints a substitute; and if not in session, the president of the senate shall act as governor; and if there is no such president, the speaker of the house is to act.

A Secretary of State is appointed by the governor, with the advice of the senate.

A Treasurer is elected by the house of delegates every second year.

The Judicial Power.

7. The Court of Appeals consists of one chief and four associate judges, elected, one from each of the four districts into which the state is divided, by the people of the district, for ten years. It has appellate jurisdiction only.

The Circuit Court consists of seven judges, elected one in each of the seven districts into which the counties of the state are arranged. Each judge holds the court in his own circuit, and has full civil and criminal jurisdiction.

An Orphans' Court exists in each county, and in the city of Baltimore, composed of three judges, elected for the term of four years by the people of the county.

The City of Baltimore constitutes a judicial circuit, and has four courts, the judges of which are elected for ten years.

The superior court has civil jurisdiction in all equity cases, and in common-law cases involving more than five hundred dollars.

The circuit court has an equity jurisdiction concurrent with the superior court.

The court of common pleas has civil jurisdiction in all cases where the debt or amount of damages claimed is over one hundred dollars and under five hundred dollars.

The criminal court has jurisdiction of all crimes and offences committed in the city.

Commissioners of Public Works are elected, one in each of four districts into which the state is divided for this purpose, by the voters of the district, for the term of four years. A commissioner of the land office is elected for six years. He is clerk and judge of the land office. The treasurer is elected by the house of delegates every second year. The comptroller, sheriffs, county commissioners, justices of the peace, constables, etc., are elected every second year.

MASSACHUSETTS. One of the original thirteen states of the United States of America.

2. In 1627, a company of Englishmen obtained from the council of the Plymouth colony a grant of "all that part of New England lying three miles south of Charles river and three miles north of Merrimac river, and extending from the Atlantic to the South sea." In 1628, Charles I. granted them a charter, under the name of "The Governor and Company of the Massachusetts Bay in New England." This charter continued till 1684, when it was adjudged forfeited. From this time till 1691, governors appointed by the king ruled the colony. In 1691, William and Mary granted a new charter, by which the colonies of Massachusetts Bay and New Plymouth, the province of Maine, and the territory called Nova Scotia, were incorporated into one government, by the name of The Province of Massachusetts Bay. 1 Story, Const. § 71. This charter continued as the form of government until the adoption of the state constitution in 1780.

3. The constitution, as originally adopted, was drafted by John Adams. 4 Adams, Life and Works, 213. It contained a provision for calling a convention for its revision or amendment in 1795, if two-thirds of the voters at an election held for this purpose should be in favor of it. Const. Mass. c. 6, art. x. But at that time a majority of the voters opposed any revision, Bradford's Hist. Mass. 294; and the constitution continued without amendment till 1820, when a convention was called for revising or amending it. Mass. Stat. 1820, c. 15. This convention proposed fourteen amendments, nine of which were accepted by the people. Since then, sixteen additional articles of amendment have been adopted at different times, making twenty-five in all. In 1853, a second convention for revising the constitution was held, which prepared an entirely new draft of a constitution. This draft, upon submission to the people, was rejected.

The constitution, as originally drafted, consists of two parts, one entitled A Declaration of the Rights of the Inhabitants of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and the other The Frame of Government. Const. Mass. Preamble.

The Declaration of Rights.

4. The declaration of rights asserts that all men are born free and equal, and have certain natural and unalienable rights, among them the rights of life, liberty, and property, and, in fine, the right of seeking safety and happiness. Art. i. It declares the duty of public worship, and the right of religious liberty, art. ii.; and that all sects shall receive equal protection from the law. Amendts. xi. That the commonwealth is a sovereign state, enjoying every power not expressly delegated to the United States. Art. iv. That all power is derived from the people, and all public officers are at all times accountable to them. Art. v. That no man has any title to exclusive privileges except from his public services; and this title is not heritable or transmissible. Art. vi. That government is for the protection of the people, and they alone have a right to change it when their safety requires. Art. vii. That, to prevent those in power from becoming oppressors, the people have a right to cause their public officers to return to private life, and to fill their places by election, art. viii.; and that all elections should be free, and every qualified voter have a right to vote and to be elected to office. Art. ix. Each individual has a right to be protected by law, and must, consequently, pay his share of the expense of this protection; but his property cannot be taken or applied to public uses without his consent, or that of the representative body; and wherever the property of any person is taken for public uses, he shall receive reasonable compensation therefor. Art. x. Every one should find in the laws a certain remedy for all wrongs to person, property, or character, and should obtain justice freely, promptly, and completely. Art. xi. Every person accused of an offence shall have a right to have it formally and clearly set forth; shall not be compelled to furnish evidence against himself; shall be allowed to produce proofs in his favor, and to be heard by himself or his counsel, and shall not be punished (unless in the army or navy) without trial by jury. Art. xii. The proof of facts in the vicinity where they happen is one of the greatest securities of life, liberty, and property. Art. xiii. All warrants should be supported by an oath, and, if for the search, arrest, or seizure of persons or property, should describe such persons or property. Art. xiv. In all civil suits (unless, in causes arising on the seas, or suits relating to mariners' wages, the laws provide otherwise) the trial by jury shall be held sacred. Art. xv. The liberty of the press ought not to be restrained. Art. xvi. The people have a right to keep and bear arms for the common defence; as, in peace, armies are dangerous to liberty, they ought not to be maintained without legislative consent; the military power shall be in exact subordination to the civil authority. Art. xvii. Frequent recurrence to the fundamental principles of the constitution, constant adherence to piety, justice, moderation, temperance, industry, and frugality, are necessary to preserve liberty and to maintain a free government; the people ought especially to refer to these in choosing officers, and have a right to require of their officers an observance of them in making and executing the laws. Art. xviii. The people have a right to assemble peaceably, to consult on the common good, to instruct their representatives, and to petition the legislative body. Art. xix. The power to suspend the laws should never be exercised but by the legislature, or by legislative authority in cases provided by law. Art. xx. Freedom of debate in the legislature is so essential to the rights of the people that it cannot be the foundation of any accusation, prosecution, action, or complaint in any court or place whatsoever. Art. xxi. The legislature ought to assemble frequently. Art. xxii. No tax ought to be laid without the consent of the people or their representatives. Art. xxiii. Laws to punish acts already done, and not declared crimes by preceding laws, are unjust, and inconsistent with the principles of a free government. Art. xxiv. No subject ought, in any case, to be declared guilty of treason by the legislature. Art. xxv. No magistrate shall take excessive bail, impose excessive fines, or inflict cruel or unusual punishments. Art. xxvi. In peace, no soldier should be quartered in any house without the owner's consent; and in war, such quarters should not be made but by the civil magistrate, in a manner provided by law. Art. xxvii. No person can be subjected to martial law, unless in the army or navy, or militia in actual service, except by legislative authority. Art. xxviii. An impartial interpretation of laws and administration of justice is essential to the preservation of every right. It is the citizen's right to be tried by judges as free, impartial, and independent as the lot of humanity will admit. It is not only the best policy, but for the security of the people, that the judges of the supreme court should hold office during good behavior, but that they should have honorable salaries established by standing laws. Art. xxix. Neither the legislative, judicial, nor executive department shall ever exercise any powers of government except its own, that it may be a government of laws, and not of men. Art. xxx.

The Frame of Government.

5. The name of the state is the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

No property qualification is required for voting or for eligibility to any office, except those of governor or lieutenant-governor. Const. Amend. iii., xiii. Every male citizen, twenty-one years or more of age, who has resided within the commonwealth twelve months, and in the town where he claims to vote six months, preceding an election, who has, unless exempt from taxation, paid a tax within two years (Amend. iii.), who can, unless physically disabled, read the constitution in the English language, and write his name (Amend. xx.), and who, if a naturalized foreigner, has resided in the United States two years subsequent to his naturalization (Amend. xxiii.), may vote at any election. The last two amendments, adopted respectively in 1857 and 1859, do not disqualify persons who had a legal right to vote at the time of their adoption.

Oaths of Office.

Every person chosen or appointed to any office is obliged to take an oath or affirmation faithfully to discharge the duties of his office (c. 6, a. 1), and to support the constitution of the commonwealth. Amend. vi. An oath to support the constitution of the United States is required by the laws of the United States of every member of a state legislature, and of all judicial and executive officers in the states. St. 1789, c. 1, § 3; 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 22.

Amendments.

Specific amendments may be proposed by the general court, and, if adopted in both houses, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, taken by yeas and nays, in two successive legislatures, and afterwards approved and ratified by a majority of the voters at a popular election, they become a part of the constitution. Amend. ix.

The Legislative Power.

6. The Senate is composed of forty members, elected from single senatorial districts, each containing as nearly as possible the same number of legal voters. A senator must be an inhabitant of the district for which he is chosen, and must have been an inhabitant of the state for five years next preceding his election, and ceases to be a senator on leaving the commonwealth. Amend. xxii. Any vacancy in the senate may be filled by vote of the people of the unrepresented district, upon the order of a majority of senators elected. Amend. xxiv.

The House of Representatives consists of two hundred and forty members, chosen in each of the representative districts into which the counties are divided for the purpose. The number of representatives sent by any district depends on the number of legal voters in it; but no district can send more than three representatives. A representative must have been an inhabitant of the district for which he is chosen for at least one year next preceding his election, and ceases to represent his district on leaving the commonwealth.

The two houses together constitute the "General Court of Massachusetts." The members of both houses are elected annually, at the state elections, on Tuesday after the first Monday in November. Amend. xv. If the people of any representative district fail to elect a representative on the day of the annual election, they may hold a second meeting for this purpose on the fourth Monday of November. Amend. xv. The general court meets on the first Wednesday in January, and is dissolved on the day before the session of the next general court. Amend. x. It may be prorogued by the governor at any time, at the request of both houses, or, without their request, by the advice of the council, for a period not exceeding ninety days (c. 2, § 1, art. 6); and he may call them together sooner than the time to which they were adjourned, if the interests of the commonwealth require. The legislature has power to create courts (c. 1, § 1, art. 3); to make all reasonable laws for the state; to provide for the election of officers, and to prescribe their duties; to impose taxes and duties (c. 1, § 1, a. 4); and, upon the application and with the consent of the inhabitants, to create cities, in towns of not less than twelve thousand inhabitants. Amend. v. That taxes may be equal, there shall be a new valuation of estates every ten years. C. 1, § 1, a. 4. The two houses are quite distinct, and have each the usual privileges in regard to judging of the qualifications, election, etc. of members, regulation of their conduct, etc. The members of the house are exempt from arrest on mesne process in going to, attending, or returning from the assembly. C. 1, § 3, a. 10, 11. Sixteen members of the senate and one hundred members of the house constitute a quorum for the transaction of business; but a less number may organize temporarily, adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members. Amends. xxi., xxii.

The Executive Power.

7. The Governor is the supreme executive magistrate. He is styled the "Governor of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts," and his title is "His Excellency." C. 2, § 1, a. 1. He is elected annually. C. 2, § 1, a. 2. Seven years' residence in the commonwealth, and the possession of a freehold of the value of a thousand pounds, are the necessary qualifications for the office of governor or lieutenant-governor. C. 2, § 1, a. 1; § 2, a. 1. The governor has authority to call together the councillors, and shall, with them, or five of them at least, from time to time hold a council for ordering and directing the affairs of the commonwealth. C. 2, § 1, a. 4. He is commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the commonwealth, has authority to train the militia for the defence of the commonwealth, and to assemble the inhabitants for this purpose, and is intrusted with all the powers incident to the office of commander-in-chief, except that no inhabitants are obliged to march out of the state without their own consent or that of the general court. C. 2, § 1, a. 7. The pardoning power is in the governor, with the advice of the council. C. 2, § 1, a. 8. No money can issue from the treasury without his warrant. C. 2, § 1, a. 11. He has the veto power, and, with the advice and consent of the council, the appointment of all judicial officers, coroners, and notaries public. C. 2, § 1, a. 9, amend. iv.

The Lieutenant-Governor is elected at the same time, for the same term, and must have the same qualifications, as the governor. His title is "His Honor." He is a member of the council, and, in the absence of the governor, its president. In case of a vacancy in the office of governor, the lieutenant-governor acts as governor. C. 2, § 2, a. 2, 3.

8. The Council consists of eight councillors, each chosen annually from a separate councillor district.

The state is re-districted every ten years. Amend. xvi. Five councillors constitute a quorum, and their duty is to advise the governor in the executive part of the government. C. 2, § 3, a. 1. In case of vacancies in both the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor, the council, or the major part of them, shall have and exercise the powers of the governor. C. 2, § 3, a. 6. Vacancies in the council are filled by concurrent vote of the two branches of the legislature; or, if the legislature is not in session, by the governor's appointment. Amend. xxv.

The Secretary of the Commonwealth, the Treasurer, Auditor, and Attorney-General, are chosen annually at the state election (Amend. xvii.); and, that the citizens of the commonwealth may be assured from time to time that the moneys remaining in the public treasury, upon the settlement and liquidation of the public accounts, are their property, no man shall be eligible as treasurer more than five successive years. C. 2, § 4, a. 1. Every councillor, the secretary, treasurer, auditor, and attorney-general, must have been an inhabitant of the state for the five years immediately preceding his election or appointment. Amends. xvi., xvii., xxii. Sheriffs, registers of probate, clerks of courts, and district attorneys are chosen by the people of the several counties. Amend. xix.

The Judicial Power.

9. The Supreme Judicial Court consists of one chief and five associate justices. Four justices constitute a quorum to decide all matters requisite to be heard at law. Gen. Stat. c. 112, § 1 et seq. A law term of the court for the commonwealth is held at Boston on the first Wednesday of January in each year, which may be adjourned from time to time, and to such places and times as may be convenient for determining questions of law arising in the nine eastern counties, and one term a year in each of the remaining five counties for cases in those counties respectively. These are regular terms of the court; but no jury is to be summoned except in certain special cases. Jury terms of the court are also held by a single justice, at times and places prescribed, once a year, in each county, except that one term only is held for Barnstable and Dukes county, and two terms annually for Suffolk. Questions of law arising at the jury terms are reported by the presiding judge to the full bench. It is provided that the court shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction of petitions for divorce and nullity of marriage, and original and concurrent jurisdiction with the superior court of petitions for partition and writs of entry, for foreclosure of mortgages, and of civil actions in which the damages demanded or the property claimed exceed in amount or value four thousand dollars if brought in the county of Suffolk, and one thousand dollars if brought in any other county, if the plaintiff, or some one in his behalf, before service of the writ, makes oath or affirmation before some justice of the peace that he verily believes the matter sought to be recovered equals in amount or value said sums respectively, a certificate of which oath or affirmation shall be indorsed on or annexed to the writ; and, also, that it shall have full equity jurisdiction, according to the usage and practice of courts of equity, in all cases where there is not a complete remedy at law. Trials of indictments for capital crimes, questions of law on exceptions, on appeals from the superior court, on cases stated by the parties, and on a special verdict, and all issues in law, are to be heard and determined by the full court.

10. The Superior Court is composed of one chief justice and nine associate justices. It is to be held at the times and places prescribed, being at least two terms annually in each county. The court has exclusive original jurisdiction of complaints for flowing land, and original jurisdiction of all civil actions except those of which the supreme judicial court, police courts, or justices of the peace have original and exclusive jurisdiction; jurisdiction of all civil actions and proceedings legally brought before it, by appeal or otherwise, from justices of the peace, police courts, or courts of insolvency, and from the decisions of commissioners on insolvent estates of deceased persons; original jurisdiction of all crimes, offences, and misdemeanors, and appellate jurisdiction of all offences tried and determined before a police court or justice of the peace; and in criminal cases legally brought before it its jurisdiction shall be final, except as otherwise provided. It has concurrent jurisdiction with the supreme court, as stated above.

All judicial officers are appointed by the governor, with the advice of the council. Every nomination for a judicial appointment must be made by the governor to the council at least seven days before the council can approve it. C. 2, § 1, a. 9. The judges hold office during good behavior, but may be removed by the governor, with the consent of the council, upon the address of both branches of the legislature. C. 3, a. 1. The governor and council, and either branch of the legislature, may require the opinion of the justices of the supreme judicial court upon important questions of law, and upon solemn occasions. C. 3, a. 2.

11. Judges of Probate and Insolvency are appointed to hold office according to the tenor of their commissions, so that there may be one judge for each county. They may interchange services or perform each other's duties when necessary or convenient. The courts of these judges are courts of record, and have original jurisdiction of all proceedings under the Insolvent Act, and of the probate of wills, granting administration of the estates of persons who at the time of their decease were inhabitants of or resident in the county, and of persons who die without the state, leaving estate to be administered within such county; of the appointment of guardians to minors and others, and of all matters relating to the estates of such deceased persons and wards; and of petitions for the adoption of children and the change of names. The courts are to be held at such times and places as the statutes prescribe. They are held at other places as well as at the shire towns; and sessions occur very frequently. At the time of the adoption of the constitution, original jurisdiction in probate matters was exercised by deputies or surrogates appointed by the governor in the several counties, from whom there was an appeal to the governor with the council. 21 Bost. Law Rep. 78. Under a constitutional provision, in 1784, an act was passed establishing courts of probate in the several counties, and making the supreme judicial court the supreme court of probate. Sh. 1783, c. 46; 21 Bost. Law Rep. 80.

12. Justices of the Peace are appointed by the governor. The commissions of justices of the peace shall continue only seven years, that the people may not suffer from the long continuance in place of any justice who shall fail of discharging the important duties of his office with ability or fidelity; but any such commission may be renewed. C. 3. They have conclusive original jurisdiction of replevin for impounded beasts, and original and concurrent jurisdiction with the superior court of all actions of contract, tort, or replevin, where the debt or damages demanded, or value of the property alleged to be detained, is more than twenty and does not exceed one hundred dollars. A certain number in each county are designated as trial justices, who have jurisdiction over petty criminal offences.

A Police Court, consisting of one justice and two associate justices, is established in many of the cities and large towns, but may not be hereafter in any town of less than ten thousand inhabitants. They have the same jurisdiction in civil, and substantially the same, with some additions, in criminal, matters, as justices of the peace, and their jurisdiction, when both plaintiff and defendant reside in the district, is exclusive of that of other police courts and justices. A speedy settlement of suits is obtained in these courts.

Commissions. All commissions are to be in the name of the commonwealth, and to be signed by the governor and attested by the secretary, and under the seal of the commonwealth. C. 6, a. 4.

Writs. All writs are in the name of the commonwealth, under the seal of the court, bearing teste of the first justice, not a party to the suit, and signed by the clerk. C. 6, a. 5.

Habeas Corpus. This writ shall be enjoyed in the most free, easy, cheap, expeditious, and ample manner; shall not be suspended, except by the legislature on the most urgent and pressing occasions, and for not more than twelve months. C. 6, a. 7.

MASTER. One who has control over an apprentice.

A master stands in relation to his apprentices in loco parentis, and is bound to fulfil that relation, which the law generally enforces. He is also entitled to be obeyed by his apprentices as if they were his children. Bouvier, Inst. Index. See APPRENTICESHIP.

One who is employed in teaching children: known, generally, as a schoolmaster. As to his powers, see CORRECTION.

One who has in his employment one or more persons hired by contract to serve him, either as domestic or common laborers.

2. Where the hiring is for a definite term of service, the master is entitled to their labor during the whole term, and may recover damages against any one who entices away or harbors them knowing them to be in his service, 6 Term, 221; 8 East, 39; Anth. Y. 412; and if before the expiration of the term the servant leaves without just cause, he forfeits his wages. 2 Carr. & P. 510; 1 Watts & S. Penn. 265; 34 Me. 102; 43 id. 463; 19 Pick. Mass. 529; 12 Metc. Mass. 286; 19 Mo. 60; 25 Conn. 188; 6 N. H. 481. The master may dismiss a servant so hired before the expiration of the term, either for immoral conduct, wilful disobedience, or habitual neglect, and the servant will not in such case be entitled to his wages, 4 Carr. & P. 518; 2 Stark. 256; 3 Esp. 235; but if the dismissal be without reasonable cause, the servant may recover damages from his master therefor, to such an amount as to indemnify for the loss of wages during the time necessarily spent in obtaining a fresh situation, and for the loss of the excess of any wages contracted for above the usual rate. 2 Hou. L. Cas. 607; 13 C. B. 508; 20 Eng. L. & Eq. 157.

3. A master may justify an assault in defence of his servant, and a servant in defence of his master: the master because he has an interest in his servant, not to be deprived of his service; the servant because it is a part of his duty, for which he receives his wages, to stand by and defend his master. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 429; Lofft, 215. The master is liable to be sued for the injuries occasioned by the neglect or unskilfulness or the tortious acts of his servants whilst in the course of his employment, 3 Mass. 364; 19 Wend. N. Y. 345; 40 Eng. L. & Eq. 329; 4 Du. N. Y. 473; 26 Vt. 178; 23 N. H. 157; although contrary to his express orders, if not done in wilful disregard of those orders, 14 How. 468; 7 Cush. Mass. 385; 10 Ill. 509; but he is not liable for acts committed out of the course of his employment, 20 Conn. 284; 17 Mass. 508; 8 Term, 533; 16 Eng. L. & Eq. 448; nor for the wilful trespasses of his servants. 1 East, 106; 24 Conn. 40; 1 Smith, Ind. 455; 2 Mich. 519. A master is not criminally liable for the acts of his servant unless committed by his command or with his assent. 8 Ind. 312; 2 Strange, 885.

4. Where a master uses due diligence in the selection of competent and trusty servants, and furnishes them with suitable means to perform the service in which he employs them, he is not amenable to one of them for an injury received by him in consequence of the carelessness of another while both are engaged in the same service, 3 Mees. & W. Exch. 1; 4 Metc. Mass. 49; 3 Cush. Mass. 270; 10 id. 228; 5 N. Y. 492; 3 Smith, Ind. 134, 153; 42 Me. 269; 40 Eng. L. & Eq. 376, 491; but where such injury results from the master's neglect to provide suitable means to perform the service or to use reasonable care in the selection of his servants, the master will be answerable. 20 Barb. N. Y. 449; 26 id. 39; 6 Du. N. Y. 225; 6 Cal. 209; 33 Eng. L. & Eq. 1; 36 id. 486; 37 id. 281. All contracts made by the servant within the scope of his authority, express or implied, bind the master. See PRINCIPAL; AGENT.

The master may give moderate corporal correction to his menial servant while under age; for then he is considered as standing in loco parentis. 2 Kent, Comm. 261. The master is bound to supply necessaries to an infant servant unable to provide for himself, 2 Campb. 650; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 137; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 427, n.; but not to provide even a menial servant with medical attendance and medicines during sickness. 4 Carr. & P. 80; 7 Vt. 76.

MASTER IN CHANCERY. An officer of a court of chancery, who acts as an assistant to the chancellor. 3 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 458; 19 Ill. 131.

The masters were originally clerks associated with the chancellor, to discharge some of the more mechanical duties of his office. They were called preceptores, and gradually increased in number until there were twelve of them. They obtained the title of masters in the reign of Edw. III. Their office is mainly judicial in its character, but sometimes includes ministerial offices. See 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 360-367; 1 Harr. Ch. Mich. 436; 1 Bail. Ch. So. C. 77; 1 Des. Ch. So. C. 587. The office was abolished in England by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80. In the United States, officers of this name exist in many of the states, with similar powers to those exercised by the English masters, but variously modified, restricted, and enlarged by statute, and in some of the states similar officers are called commissioners and by other titles.

The duties of the masters are, generally: first, to take accounts and make computations, 18 How. 295; 2 Munf. Va. 129; 14 Vt. 501; 27 id. 673; Walk. Ch. Miss. 532; second, to make inquiries and report facts, 3 Woodb. & M. C. C. 258; 3 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 305; 23 Conn. 529; 1 Stockt. Ch. N. J. 309; 2 Jones, Eq. No. C. 238; 5 Gray, Mass. 423; 5 Cal. 90; see 1 Freem. Ch. 502; 9 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 372; third, to perform some special ministerial acts directed by the court, such as the sale of property, 11 Humphr. Tenn. 278; 25 Barb. N. Y. 440, settlement of deeds, see 1 Cow. N. Y. 711, appointment of new trustees, and the like, 1 Barbour, Chanc. Pract. 468; fourth, to discharge such duties as are specially charged upon them by statute. See Poor Debtor; Insolvency.

MASTERS AT COMMON LAW. In English Law. Officers of the superior courts of common law, whose duty it is to tax costs, compute damages, take affidavits, and the like. They are five in number in each court. See stat. 7 Will. IV., & 1 Vict. c. 30.

MASTER OF THE CROWN OFFICE. The queen's coroner and attorney in the criminal department of the court of queen's bench, who prosecutes at the relation of some private person or common informer, the crown being the nominal prosecutor. Stat. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 20; Wharton, Dict. 2d Lond. ed.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS. In English Law. An officer of chancery, who has the keeping of the rolls and grants which pass the great seal and the records of the chancery, and exercises extensive judicial functions in a court which ranks next to that of the lord chancellor.

An officer with this title existed in the time of the Conqueror. He had from most ancient times an office in chancery, with distinct clerks. In early times no judicial authority was conferred by an appointment as master of the rolls. In the reigns of Hen. VI. and Edw. IV. they are found sitting in a judicial capacity, and from 1623 have had the regulation of some branches of the business of the court. He is the chief of the masters in chancery; and his judicial functions, except those specially conferred by commission, appear to have properly belonged to him in this character. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 100, 357.

All orders and decrees made by him, except those appropriate to the great seal alone, are valid, unless discharged or altered by the lord chancellor, but must be signed by him before enrolment; and he is especially directed to hear motions, pleas, demurrers, and the like. Stat. 3 Geo. II. c. 30; 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 94; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 442.

MASTER OF A SHIP. In Maritime Law. The commander or first officer of a merchant-ship; a captain.

The master of an American ship must be a citizen of the United States, 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 287; and a similar requirement exists in most maritime states. In some countries their qualifications in point of skill and experience must be attested by examination by proper authorities; but in the United States the civil responsibility of the owners for their acts is esteemed sufficient. A vessel sailing without a competent master is deemed unseaworthy, and the owners are liable for any loss of cargo which may occur, but cannot recover on a policy of insurance in case of disaster. 21 How. 7, 23; 6 Cow. N. Y. 270; 12 Johns. N. Y. 128, 136; 21 N. Y. 378.

2. The master is selected by the owners, and, in case of his death or disability during the voyage, the mate succeeds; if he also dies in a foreign country, the consignee of the vessel, or the consul of the nation, may, in a case of necessity and in the absence of other authority, appoint a master. The master himself may, in similar circumstances of necessity and distance from the owners, appoint a substitute. 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, 387; 2 Sumn. C. C. 206; 13 Pet. 387. During a temporary absence of the master, the mate succeeds. 2 Sumn. C. C. 588.

3. He must, at the commencement of the voyage, see that his ship is seaworthy and fully provided with the necessary ship's papers, and with all the necessary and customary requisites for navigation, as well as with a proper supply of provisions, stores, etc., Bee, Adm. 80; 2 Paine, C. C. 291; 1 Pet Adm. 219; Ware, 454, for the voyage. 1 Pet. Adm. 407; 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 338. He must also make a contract with the seamen, if the voyage be a foreign one from the United States. 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 131; 2 id. 203. He must store safely under deck all goods shipped on board, unless by well-established custom or by express contract they are to be carried on deck; and he must stow them in the accustomed manner in order to prevent liability in case of damage. In respect to the lading or carriage of goods shipped as freight, he is required to use the greatest diligence; and his responsibility attaches from the moment of their receipt, whether on board, in his boat, or at the quay or beach. 3 Kent, Comm. 206; Abbott, Shipp. 423.

4. He must proceed on the voyage in which his vessel may be engaged by direction of the owners, must obey faithfully his instructions, and by all legal means (see 3 Cranch, 242) promote the interests of the owner of the ship and cargo. He must govern his crew and prevent improper exercise of authority by his subordinates. 2 Sumn. C. C. 1, 584; 14 Johns. N. Y. 19. He must take all possible care of the cargo during the voyage, and, in case of stranding, shipwreck, or other disaster, must do all lawful acts which the safety of the ship and the interests of the owners of the ship and cargo require. Flanders, Shipp. 190; 15 How. 150; 13 Pet. 387. It is his duty, in case of disaster or interruption of the voyage by unexpected circumstances, to file a statement of circumstances, called a protest. As to his duty with respect to damaged goods, see 1 Blatchf. C. C. 357; 1 Stor. C. C. 342.

5. In time of war, he must avoid acts which will expose his vessel and cargo to seizure and confiscation, and must do all acts required for the safety of the vessel and cargo and the interests of their owners. He must bring home from foreign ports destitute seamen, Act of Congr. Feb. 28, 1803, § 4, Feb. 28, 1811, and must retain from the wages of his crew hospital-money. Act of Congr. July 16, 1798, March 1, 1843.

He is liable to the owners, and he and they to all others whose interests are affected by his acts, for want of reasonable skill, care, or prudence in the navigation or management of the vessel, 1 Wash. C. C. 142, including injuries done to the cargo by the crew, 1 Mas. C. C. 104; and this rule includes the improper discharge of a seaman. Ware, Dist. Ct. 65.

6. His authority on shipboard (Ware, Dist. Ct. 506) is very great, but is of a civil character. He has a right to control and direct the efforts of the crew, and to use such force as may be necessary to enforce obedience to his lawful demands. He may even take life, if necessary, to suppress a mutiny. He may degrade officers. 1 Blatchf. & H. Adm. 195, 366; 1 Pet. Adm. 244; 4 Wash. C. C. 338; 6 Bost. Law Rep. 304; 21 id. 148; 2 C. Rob. Adm. 261. He may punish acts of insolence, disobedience, and insubordination, and such other offences as may be required for the safety and discipline of the ship. Flogging is, however, prohibited, 9 U. S. Stat. at Large, 515; and for any unreasonable, arbitrary, or brutal exercise of authority towards a seaman or passenger he is liable, criminally and in a civil suit. 4 U. S. Stat. at Large, 776, 1235; 1 Conkling, Adm. 430–439; 14 Johns. N. Y. 119.

7. If the master has not funds for the necessary supplies, repairs, and uses (see 3 Wash. C. C. 484) of his ship when abroad, he may borrow money for that purpose on the credit of his owners; and if it cannot be procured on his and their personal credit, he may take up money on bottomry, or, in extreme cases, may pledge his cargo. 3 Mas. C. C. 255; Abbott, Shipp. 162; 3 Kent, Comm. Lect. 49. See BOTTOMRY; RESPONDENTIA.

In such cases, and, generally, when contracting within the ordinary scope of his powers and duties, he is personally responsible, as well as his owners, when they are personally liable. On bottomry loans, however, there is ordinarily no personal liability in this country, or in England, beyond the fund which comes to the hands of the master or owners from the subject of the pledge. Abbott, Shipp. 90; Story, Ag. §§ 116, 123, 294. In most cases, too, the ship is bound for the performance of the master's contract, Ware, Dist. Ct. 322; but all contracts of the master in chartering or freighting his vessel do not give such a lien. 19 How. 82.

8. He has a lien upon, and a consequent right to retain, the freight earned by his ship for the repayment of money advanced by him for necessary repairs and supplies, 9 Mass. 548; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 218, or for seamen's wages; and payment to the owner after notice of the master's lien does not discharge the consignee, 5 Wend. N. Y. 315; but not, it would seem, upon the ship itself, 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, 389; nor has he any lien on the freight for his wages. 11 Pet. 175; 5 Wend. N. Y. 315. Consult Abbott, Flanders, on Shipping; Parsons on Maritime Law; 3 Kent, Commentaries.

MATE. In Maritime Law. The officer next in rank to the master on board a merchant ship or vessel.

In such vessels there is always one mate, and sometimes a second, third, and fourth mate, according to the vessel's size and the trade in which she may be engaged. When the word mate is used without qualification, it always denotes the first mate; and the others are designated as above. On large ships the mate is frequently styled first officer, and the second and third mates, second and third officers. Parish, Sea Off. Man. 83–140.

The mate, as well as the inferior officers and seamen, is a mariner, and entitled to sue in the admiralty for his wages; and he has a lien on the vessel for his security. Even when he acts as master in consequence of the death of the appointed master, he can sue in the admiralty for his proper wages as mate, but not for the increased compensation to which he is entitled as acting master. And he is entitled, when sick, to be cured at the expense of the ship. The mate should possess a sufficient knowledge of navigation to take command of the ship and carry on the voyage in case of the death of the master; and it may well be doubted whether a vessel be seaworthy for a long voyage at sea when only the master is competent to navigate her. Blount, Comm. Dig. 32; Dana, Seaman's Friend, 146; Curtis, Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen, 96, note. It is the special duty of the mate to keep the log-book. The mate takes charge of the larboard watch at sea, and in port superintends the storage and breaking out of the cargo.

The mate succeeds, of course, to the station, rights, and authorities of the captain or master on the death of the latter, and he also has command, with the authority required by the exigencies of the case, during the temporary absence of the master. See MASTER OF A SHIP; Dana, Seaman's Friend; Parish, Sea-Officer's Manual; Curtis, Rights and Duties of Merchant Seamen; Parsons, Maritime Law.

MATER FAMILIAS. In Civil Law. The mother of a family; the mistress of a family.

A chaste woman, married or single. Calvinus, Lex.

MATERIAL MEN. Persons who furnish materials to be used in the construction or erection of ships, houses, or buildings.

By the general maritime law, material men have a lien on a foreign ship for supplies or materials furnished for such ship, which may be recovered in the admiralty, 9 Wheat. 409; 19 How. 359; but no such lien exists in the case of domestic ships. 4 Wheat. 438; 20 How. 393; 21 id. 248. See LIEN, §§

By statutory provisions, material men have a lien on ships and buildings, in some of the states. See LIEN, §§

MATERIALITY. The property of substantial importance or influence, especially as distinguished from formal requirement. Capability of properly influencing the result of the trial.

MATERIALS. Matter which is intended to be used in the creation of a mechanical structure. The physical part of that which has a physical existence.

The general property in materials furnished to a workman remains in the bailor where the contract is merely one for the employment of labor and services; otherwise where it is a sale. See BAILMENT; LOCATIO; MANDATE; TROVER; TRESPASS.

MATERNA MATERNIS (Lat. from the mother to the mother's).

In French Law. A term denoting the descent of property of a deceased person derived from his mother to the relations on the mother's side.

MATERNAL. That which belongs to, or comes from, the mother: as, maternal authority, maternal relation, maternal estate, maternal line. See LINE.

MATERNAL PROPERTY. That which comes from the mother of the party, and other ascendants of the maternal stock. Domat, Liv. Prél. t. 3, s. 2, n. 12.

MATERNITY. The state or condition of a mother.

It is either legitimate or natural. The former is the condition of the mother who has given birth to legitimate children; while the latter is the condition of her who has given birth to illegitimate children. Maternity is always certain; while the paternity is only presumed.

MATERTERA. A mother's sister.

MATERTERA MAGNA. A grandmother's sister.

MATERTERA MAJOR. A great-grandmother's sister.

MATERTERA MAXIMA. A great-great-grandmother's sister.

MATHEMATICAL EVIDENCE. That evidence which is established by a demonstration. It is used in contradistinction to moral evidence.

MATIMA. A godmother.

MATRICULA. In Civil Law. A register in which are inscribed the names of persons who become members of an association or society. Dig. 50. 3. 1. In the ancient church there was matricula clericorum, which was a catalogue of the officiating clergy, and matricula pauperum, a list of the poor to be relieved: hence, to be entered in the university is to be matriculated.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES. In the English ecclesiastical courts there are five kinds of causes which are classed under this head, viz.: causes for a malicious jactitation; suits for nullity of marriage, on account of fraud, incest, or other bar to the marriage, 2 Hagg. Cons. 423; suits for restitution of conjugal rights; suits for divorces on account of cruelty or adultery, or causes which have arisen since the marriage; suits for alimony.

MATRIMONIUM. In Civil Law. A legal marriage. A marriage celebrated in conformity with the rules of the civil law was called justum matrimonium: the husband vir, the wife uxor. It was exclusively confined to Roman citizens, and to those to whom the connubium had been conceded. It alone produced the paternal power over the children, and the marital power—manus—over the wife. The farreum, the coemptio, or the usus, was indispensable for the formation of this marriage. See PATERFAMILIAS.

MATRON. A woman who is a mother.

By the laws of England, when a widow feigns herself with child, in order to exclude the next heir, and a suppositious birth is expected, then, upon the writ de ventre inspiciendo, a jury of women is to be impanelled to try the question whether with child or not. Croke Eliz. 566. Interesting cases will be found at the last reference, and in 3 Moore, 523, and Croke Jac. 685. So when a woman was sentenced to death, and she pleaded in stay of execution that she was quick with child, a jury of matrons was impanelled to try whether she was or not with child. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 395. See PREGNANCY; QUICK.

In the state of New York, if a female convict sentenced to death be pregnant, the sheriff is to summon a jury of six physicians, who, with the sheriff, are to make an inquisition; and, if she be found quick with child, sentence is to be suspended. 2 Rev. Stat. 658, §§ 20, 21.

MATTER IN DEED. Such matter as may be proved or established by a deed or specialty. Matter of fact, in contradistinction to matter of law. Coke, Litt. 320; Stephen, Pl. 197.

MATTER OF FACT. In Pleading. Matter the existence or truth of which is determined by the senses or by reasoning based upon their evidence. The decision of such matters is referred to the jury. Hob. 127; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 49.

MATTER OF LAW. In Pleading. Matter the truth or falsity of which is determined by the established rules of law or by reasoning based upon them. The decision of such matters is referred to the court. Where special pleading prevails, it is a rule that matter of law must be pleaded specially. The phrase here means matter which, if established as true, goes to defeat the plaintiff's charges by the effect of some rule of law, as distinguished from that which operates a direct negative.

MATTER IN PAIS (literally, matter in the country). Matter of fact, as distinguished from matter of law or matter of record.

MATTER OF RECORD. Those facts which may be proved by the production of a record. It differs from matter in deed, which consists of facts which may be proved by specialty.

MATURITY. The time when a bill or note becomes due. In order to bind the indorsers, such note or bill must be protested, when not paid, on the last day of grace. See DAYS OF GRACE.

MAXIM. An established principle or proposition. A principle of law universally admitted, as being just and consonant with reason.

2. Maxims in law are somewhat like axioms in geometry. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 68. They are principles and authorities, and part of the general customs or common law of the land, and are of the same strength as acts of parliament, when the judges have determined what is a maxim; which belongs to the judges and not the jury. Termes de la Ley; Doct. & Stud. Dial. 1, c. 8. Maxims of the law are holden for law, and all other cases that may be applied to them shall be taken for granted. Coke, Litt. 11, 67; 4 Coke. See Plowd. 27 b.

3. The application of the maxim to the case before the court is generally the only difficulty. The true method of making the application is to ascertain how the maxim arose, and to consider whether the case to which it is applied is of the same character, or whether it is an exception to an apparently general rule.

4. The alterations of any of the maxims of the common law are dangerous. Coke, 2d Inst. 210.

The following are some of the more important maxims:

A communi observantiâ non est recedendum. There should be no departure from common observance (or usage). Coke, Litt. 186; Wingate, Max. 203; 2 Coke, 74.

A digniori fieri debet denominatio et resolutio. The denomination and explanation of a person or thing ought to be derived from the more worthy. Wingate, Max. 265; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, § 12.

A l'impossible nul n'est ténu. No one is bound to do what is impossible.

A non posse ad non esse sequitur argumentum necessariè negativè licet non affirmativè. From impossibility to non-existence the inference follows necessarily in the negative, though not in the affirmative. Hob. 336 b.

A piratis aut latronibus capti liberi permanent. Those captured by pirates or robbers remain free. Dig. 49. 15. 19. 2; Grotius, de Jure Belli, lib. 3, c. 3, s. 1.

A piratis et latronibus capta dominium non mutant. Things captured by pirates and robbers do not change ownership. 1 Kent, Comm. 108, 184; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 258, 259.

A rescriptis valet argumentum. An argument from rescripts (i.e. original writs in the register) is valid.

A summo remedio ad inferiorem actionem non habetur regressus neque auxilium. From the highest remedy to an inferior action there is no return or assistance. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1; Bracton, 104 a, 112 b; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 193, 194.

A verbis legis non est recedendum. From the words of the law there should be no departure. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 555; Wingate, Max. 25; 5 Coke, 119.

Ab assuetis non fit injuria. No injury is done by things long acquiesced in. Jenk. Cent. Cas. Introd. viii.

Abbreviationum ille numerus et sensus accipiendus est, ut concessio non sit inanis. Such a number and sense is to be given to abbreviations that the grant may not fail. 9 Coke, 48.

Absentem accipere debemus eum qui non est eo loci in quo petitur. We must call him absent who is not in that place in which he is sought. Dig. 50. 16. 199.

Absentia ejusqui reipublicæ causa abest, neque ei neque alii damnosa esse debet. The absence of him who is employed in the service of the state, ought not to be prejudicial to him nor to others. Dig. 50. 17. 140.

Absoluta sententia expositore non indiget. An absolute, unqualified sentence (or proposition) needs no expositor. Coke, 2d Inst. 533.

Abundans cautela non nocet. Abundant caution does no harm. 11 Coke, 6; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28, § 1.

Accessorium non ducit sed sequitur suum principale. The principal draws after it the accessory, not the accessory the principal. Coke, Litt. 152 a, 389 a; 5 Ell. & B. 772; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 433. Literally, The accessory does not draw, but follows, its principal.

Accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis. An accessory follows the nature of his principal. Coke, 3d Inst. 139; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 36; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 440.

Accusare nemo debet se, nisi coram Deo. No one is obliged to accuse himself, unless before God. Hardr. 139.

Accusator post rationabile tempus non est audiendus, nisi se bene de omissione excusaverit. An accuser is not to be heard after a reasonable time, unless he excuse himself satisfactorily for the omission. F. Moore, 817.

Acta exteriora indicant interiora secreta. Outward acts indicate the inward intent. Broom. Max. 3d Lond. ed. 270; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 4th Am. ed. 115; 8 Coke, 291; 13 Johns. N. Y. 414; 15 id. 401.

Actio non datur non damnifico. An action is not given to one who is not injured. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 69.

Actio personalis moritur cum personâ. A personal action dies with the person. Noy, Max. 14. See this phrase as a title, ACTIO PERSONALIS.

Actio quælibet it suâ viâ. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 77. Every action proceeds in its own course.

Actionum genera maxime sunt servanda. Lofft, 460. The kinds of actions are especially to be preserved.

Actor qui contra regulam quid adduxit, non est audiendus. A pleader ought not to be heard who advances a proposition contrary to the rules of law.

Actor sequitur forum rei. The plaintiff must follow the forum of the thing in dispute. Home, Law Tr. 232; Story, Confl. Laws, § 325, k; 2 Kent, Comm. 462.

Actore non probante reus absolvitur. If the plaintiff does not prove his case, the defendant is absolved. Hob. 103.

Actori incumbit onus probandi. The burden of proof lies on the plaintiff. Hob. 103.

Acta indicunt the intention. 8 Coke, 291; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 270; 13 Johns. N. Y. 414.

Actus curiæ neminem gravabit. An act of the court shall prejudice no man. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 118; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 115; 1 Strange, 126; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 245–255; 12 C. B. 415

Actus Dei nemini facit injuriam. The act of God does wrong to no one: that is, no one is responsible in damages for inevitable accidents. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 122; 1 Coke, 97 b; 5 id. 87; Coke, Litt. 206 a; 4 Taunt. 309; 1 Term, 33. See Act of God.

Actus inceptus cujus perfectio pendet ex voluntate partium, revocari potest; si autem pendet ex voluntate tertiæ personæ, vel ex contingenti, revocari non potest. An act already begun, whose completion depends upon the will of the parties, may be recalled; but if it depend on the consent of a third person, or on a contingency, it cannot be recalled. Bacon, Max. Reg. 20. See Story, Ag. § 424.

Actus judiciarius coram non judice irritus habetur; de ministeriali autem a quocunque provenit ratum esto. A judicial act before one not a judge is void; as to a ministerial act, from whomsoever it proceeds, let it be valid. Lofft, 458.

Actus legis nemini est damnosus. An act of the law shall prejudice no man. Coke, 2d Inst. 287; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 119; 11 Johns. N. Y. 380; 6 Coke, 68; 8 id. 290; Coke, Litt. 264 b; 5 Term, 381, 385; 1 Ld. Raym. 515; Hob. 216; 2 H. Blackst. 324, 334; 5 East, 147; 1 Preston, Abs. of Tit. 346; 6 Bacon, Abr. 559.

Actus legis nemini facit injuriam. The act of the law does no one wrong. 5 Coke, 116; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 123.

Actus legitimi non recipiunt modum. Acts required by law admit of no qualification. Hob. 153; Branch, Princip.

Actus me invito factus, non est meus actus. An act done by me against my will is not my act. Bracton, 101 b.

Actus non reum facit nisi mens rea. The act does not make a person guilty unless the intention be guilty also. This maxim applies only in criminal cases; in civil matters it is otherwise. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 270, 275, 329; 7 Term, 514; 3 Bingh. N. C. 34, 468; 5 Mann. & G. 639; 3 C. B. 229; 5 id. 380; 9 Clark & F. 531; 4 N. Y. 159, 163, 195; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2211.

Actus repugnum non potest in esse produci. A repugnant act cannot be brought into being, i.e. cannot be made effectual. Plowd. 355.

Ad ea quæ frequentim accidunt Jura adaptantur. The laws are adapted to those cases which occur more frequently. Coke, 2d Inst. 137; Wingate, Max. 216; Dig. 1. 3. 3; 19 Howell, St. Tr. 1061; 3 Barnew. & C. 178, 183; 2 Crompt. & J. Exch. 108; 7 Mees. & W. Exch. 599, 600; Vaugh. 373; 5 Coke, 38, 128; 6 id. 77; 11 Exch. 476; 12 How. 312; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 41.

Ad officium justiciariorum spectat, unicuique coram eis placitanti justitiam exhibere. It is the duty of justices to administer justice to every one pleading before them. Coke, 2d Inst. 451.

Ad proximum antecedens fiat relatio, nisi impediatur sententia. A relative is to be referred to the next antecedent, unless the sense would be thereby impaired. Noy, Max. 9th ed. 4; 2 Exch. 479; 17 Q. B. 833; 2 Hurlst. & N. 625; 3 Bingh. N. C. 217; 9 Coke, 13; 13 How. 142.

Ad quæstiones legis judices, et non juratores respondent. Judges, and not jurors, respond to questions of law. 7 Mass. 279.

Ad questiones facti non respondent judices; ad questiones legis non respondent juratores. The judges do not answer to questions of fact; the jury do not answer to questions of law. Coke, Litt. 295; 8 Coke, 308; Vaugh. 149; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 99.

Ad vim majorem vel ad casus fortuitos non tenetur quis, nisi sua culpa intervenerit. No one is held to answer for the effects of a superior force, or of an accident, unless his own fault has contributed. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 72, § 16.

Additio probat minoritatem. An addition proves inferiority. Coke, 4th Inst. 80; Wingate, Max. 211, max. 60; Littleton, § 293; Coke, Litt. 189 a.

Ædificare in tuo proprio solo non licet quod alteri noceat. It is not lawful to build upon one's own land what may be injurious to another. Coke, 3d Inst. 201; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 331.

Ædificatum solo, solo cedit. That which is built upon the land goes with the land. Coke, Litt. 4 a; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 349, 355; Inst. 2. 1. 29; Dig. 47. 3. 1.

Ædificia solo cedunt. Buildings pass by a grant of the land. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 12.

Æquitas agit in personam. Equity acts upon the person. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3733.

Æquitas sequitur legem. Equity follows the law. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 64; 3 Wooddeson, Lect. 479, 482; Branch, Max. 8; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 330; Gilb. 136; 2 Ed. 316; 10 Mod. 3; 15 How. 299.

Æquior est dispositio legis quam hominis. The disposition of the law is more impartial than that of man. 8 Coke, 152; Bracton, 3 a.

Æquum et bonum, est lex legum. What is just and right is the law of laws. Hob. 224.

Æstimatio præteriti delicti ex postremo facto nunquam crescit. The estimation of a crime committed never increases from a subsequent fact. Bacon, Max. Reg. 8; Dig. 50. 17. 139; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 17.

Affectio tua nomen imponit operi tuo. Your motive gives a name to your act. Bracton, 2 b, 101 b.

Affectus punitur licet non sequitur effectus. The intention is punished although the consequence do not follow. 9 Coke, 56.

Affinis mei affinis non est mihi affinis. A connection (i.e. by marriage) of my connection is not a connection of mine. Shelford, Marr. & D. 174.

Affirmanti, non neganti, incumbit probatio. The proof lies upon him who affirms, not on him who denies. See Phillipps, Ev. 493.

Affirmantis est probatio. He who affirms must prove. 9 Cush. Mass. 535.

Alienatio licet prohibeatur, consensu tamen omnium, in quorum favorem prohibita est, potest fieri, et quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto. Although alienation be prohibited, yet, by the consent of all in whose favor it is prohibited, it may take place, for it is in the power of any man to renounce a right introduced for his own benefit. Coke, Litt. 98; 9 N. Y. 291.

Alienatio rei præfertur juri accrescendi. Alienation is favored by the law rather than accumulation. Coke, Litt. 185 a, 381 a, note; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 393, 409; Wright, Tenures, 154 et seq.; 1 Cruise, Dig. 4th ed. 77, 78.

Alienation pending a suit is void. 2 P. Will. 482; 2 Atk. Ch. 174; 3 id. 392; 11 Ves. Ch. 194; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 566, 580.

Aliquid conceditur ne injuria remaneat impunita, quod alias non concederetur. Something is conceded lest a wrong should remain unpunished which otherwise would not be conceded. Coke, Litt. 197.

Aliquis non debet esse judex in propriâ causâ, quia non potest esse judex et pars. A person ought not to be judge in his own cause, because he cannot act both as judge and party. Coke, Litt. 141 a; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 112; Littleton, § 212; 13 Q. B. 327; 17 id. 1; 15 C. B. 769; 1 C. B. N. S. 329.

Aliud est celare, aliud tacere. To conceal is one thing, to be silent another. 3 Burr. 1910. See 2 Wheat. 176; 9 id. 631; 3 Bingh. 77; 4 Taunt. 851; 2 Carr. & P. 341; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 701.

Aliud est distinctio, aliud separatio. Distinction is one thing, separation another. Bacon's arg. Case of Postnati of Scotland, Works, iv. 351.

Aliud est possidere, aliud esse in possessione. It is one thing to possess, it is another to be in possession. Hob. 163; Bracton, 206.

Aliud est vendere, aliud vendenti consentire. To sell is one thing, to give consent to him who sells another. Dig. 50. 17. 160.

Allegans contraria non est audiendus. One making contradictory allegations is not to be heard. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 16; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 160, 268; 4 Term, 211; 3 Exch. 446, 527, 678; 4 id. 187; 11 id. 493; 3 Ell. & B. 363; 5 id. 502; 5 C. B. 195, 886; 10 Mass. 163; Coke, 4th Inst. 279.

Allegans suam turpitudinem non est audiendus. One alleging his own infamy is not to be heard. Coke, 4th Inst. 299; 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 339, 350.

Allegari non debuit quod probatum non relevat. That ought not to be alleged which, if proved, would not be relevant. 1 Chanc. Cas. 45.

Alterius circumventio alii non præbet actionem. Dig. 50. 17. 49. A deception practised upon one person does not give a cause of action to another.

Alternativa petitio non est audienda. An alternative petition is not to be heard. 5 Coke, 40.

Ambigua responsio contra proferentem est accipienda. An ambiguous answer is to be taken against the party who offers it. 10 Coke, 58.

Ambiguis casibus semper præsumitur pro rege. In doubtful cases the presumption is always in favor of the king. Lofft, 248.

Ambiguitas verborum latens verificatione suppletur; nam quod ex facto oritur ambiguum verificatione facti tollitur. A latent ambiguity may be supplied by evidence; for an ambiguity which arises out of a fact may be removed by proof of the fact. Bacon, Max. Reg. 23; 8 Bingh. 247. See 1 Powell, Dev. 477; 2 Kent, Comm. 557; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 541; 13 Pet. 97; 8 Johns. N. Y. 90; 3 Halst. N. J. 71.

Ambiguitas verborum patens nullâ verificatione excluditur. A patent ambiguity is never holpen by averment. Lofft, 249; Bacon, Max. 25; Cowen, J., 21 Wend. N. Y. 651, 659; 23 id. 71, 78; Story, J., 1 Mas. C. C. 11; Lipscomb, J., 1 Tex. 377, 383.

Ambiguum placitum interpretari debet contra proferentem. An ambiguous plea ought to be interpreted against the party pleading it. Coke, Litt. 303 b; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 535; Stephen, Plead. 5th ed. 415; Bacon, Max. Reg. 3; 2 H. Blackst. 531; 2 Mees. & W. Exch. 444.

Ambulatoria est voluntas defuncti usque ad vitæ supremum exitum. The will of a deceased person is ambulatory until the last moment of life. Dig. 34. 4. 4; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 445; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 502; Coke, Litt. 322 b; 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 24; 3 Ell. & B. 572; 1 Jarman, Wills, 2d ed. 11; 1 Mylne & K. Ch. 485; 2 id. 73.

Angliæ jura in omni casu libertati dant favorem. The laws of England are favorable in every case to liberty. Halkers, Max. 12.

Animus ad se omne jus ducit. It is to the intention that all law applies.

Animus hominis est anima scripti. The intention of the party is the soul of the instrument. 3 Bulstr. 67; Pitman, Princ. & Sur. 26.

Anniculus trecentesimo sexagesimo-quinto die dicitur, incipiente planè non exacto die, quia annum civiliter non ad momenta temporum sed ad dies numeramur. We call a child a year old on the three hundred and sixty-fifth day, when the day is fairly begun but not ended, because we calculate the civil year not by moments, but by days. Dig. 50. 16. 134; id. 132; Calvinus, Lex.

Annua nec debitum judex non separat ipse. Even the judge divides not annuities or debt. 8 Coke, 52. See Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 480, 517; 1 Salk. 36, 65.

Annus est mora motûs quo suum planeta pervolvat circulum. A year is the duration of the motion by which a planet revolves through its orbit. Dig. 40. 7. 4. 5; Calvinus, Lex.; Bracton, 359 b.

Apices juris non sunt jura. Legal niceties are not laws. Coke, Litt. 304; 3 Scott, 773; 10 Coke, 126; Broom, Max. 142. See Apex Juris.

Applicatio est vita regulæ. Application is the life of a rule. 2 Bulstr. 79.

Aqua cedit solo. The water yields or accompanies the soil. The grant of the soil or land carries the water. Hale, de Jur. Mar. pt. 1. c. 1.

Aqua currit et debet currere ut currere solebat. Water runs and ought to run as it has used to run. 3 Rawle, Penn. 84, 88; 26 Penn. St. 413; 3 Kent, Comm. 439; Angell, Wat. Cour. 413; Gale & W. Easem. 182.

Arbitrimentum æquum tribuit cuique suum. A just arbitration renders to every one his own. Noy, Max. 248.

Arbitrium est judicium. An award is a judgment. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 137; 3 Bulstr. 64.

Arbor dum crescit; lignum dum crescere nescit. A tree while it is growing; wood when it cannot grow. Croke Jac. 166; 12 Johns. N. Y. 239, 241.

Argumentum a divisione est fortissimum in jure. An argument arising from a division is most powerful in law. 6 Coke, 60; Coke, Litt. 213 b.

Argumentum a majori ad minus negative non valet; valet e converso. An argument from the greater to the less is of no force negatively; conversely it is. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 281.

Argumentum a simili valet in lege. An argument drawn from a similar case, or analogy, avails in law. Coke, Litt. 191.

Argumentum ab auctoritate est fortissimum in lege. An argument drawn from authority is the strongest in law. Coke, Litt. 254.

Argumentum ab impossibili plurimum valet in lege. An argument deduced from impossibility greatly avails in law. Coke, Litt. 92.

Argumentum ab inconvenienti est validum in lege; quia lex non permittit aliquod inconveniens. An argument drawn from what is inconvenient is good in law, because the law will not permit any inconvenience. Coke, Litt. 66 a, 258; 7 Taunt. 527; 3 Barnew. & C. 131; 6 Clark & F. 671.

Armorum appellatione, non solum scuta et gladii et galeæ, sed et fustes et lapides continentur. Under the name of arms are included not only shields and swords and helmets, but also clubs and stones. Coke, Litt. 162.

Assignatur utitur jure auctoris. An assignee is clothed with the rights of his principal. Halkers, Max. 14; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 415, 416, 423, 425; Wingate, Max. p. 56; 1 Exch. 32; 18 Q. B. 878; Perkins, § 100.

Auctoritates philosophorum, medicorum, et poetarum, sunt in causis allegandæ et tenendæ. The opinions of philosophers, physicians, and poets are to be alleged and received in causes. Coke, Litt. 264.

Aucupia verborum sunt judice indigna. Catching at words is unworthy of a judge. Hob. 343.

Authority to execute a deed must be given by deed. Comyn, Dig. Attorney (C 5); 4 Term, 313; 7 id. 207; 1 Holt, 141; 9 Wend. N. Y. 68, 75; 5 Mass. 11; 5 Binn. Penn. 613.

Baratriam committit qui propter pecuniam justitiam baractat. He is guilty of baratry who for money sells justice. Bell, Dict. Barratry at common law has a different signification. See Barratry.

Bello parta cedunt reipublicæ. Things acquired in war go to the state. Cited 2 Russ. & M. 56; 1 Kent, Comm. 101; 5 C. Rob. Adm. 155, 163; 1 Gall. C. C. 558.

Benedicta est expositio quando res redimitur a destructione. Blessed is the exposition when the thing is saved from destruction. 4 Coke, 26.

Benigne faciendæ sunt interpretationes chartarum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et quælibet concessio fortissime contra donatorem interpretanda est. Liberal interpretations are to be made of deeds, so that more may stand than fall; and every grant is to be taken most strongly against the grantor. 4 Mass. 134; 1 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 258, 268; compare 275, 277.

Benignè faciendæ sunt interpretationes propter simplicitatem laicorum, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; et verba intentione, non e contra, debent inservire. Constructions should be liberal, on account of the ignorance of the laity, or non-professional persons, so that the subject-matter may avail rather than perish; and words must be subject to the intention, not the intention to the words. Coke, Litt. 36 a; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 481, 504; 11 Q. B. 852, 856, 868, 870; 4 Hou. L. Cas. 556; 2 Blackst. Comm. 21st ed. 379; 1 Bulstr. 175; Hob. 304.

Benignior sententia, in verbis generalibus seu dubiis, est preferanda. The more favorable construction is to be placed on general or doubtful expressions. 4 Coke, 15; Dig. 50. 17. 192. 1; 2 Kent, Comm. 557.

Benignius leges interpretandæ sunt quo voluntas earum conservetur. Laws are to be more favorably interpreted, that their intent may be preserved. Dig. 1. 3. 16.

Bis idem exigi bona fides non patitur, et in satisfactionibus, non permittitur ampliùs fieri quam semel factum est. Good faith does not suffer the same thing to be exacted twice; and in making satisfaction, it is not permitted that more should be done after satisfaction is once made. 9 Coke, 53; Dig. 50. 17. 57.

Bona fides exigit ut quod convenit fiat. Good faith demands that what is agreed upon shall be done. Dig. 19. 20. 21; id. 19. 1. 50; id. 50. 8. 2. 13.

Bona fides non patitur, ut bis idem exigatur. Good faith does not allow us to demand twice the payment of the same thing. Dig. 50. 17. 57.

Bonæ fidei possessor in id tantum quod ad se pervenerit tenetur. A bonâ fide possessor is bound for that only which has come to him. Coke, 2d Inst. 285; Grotius, de Jure Bell. lib. 2, c. 10, § 3 et seq.

Boni judicis est ampliare jurisdictionem (justitiam in. 1 Burr. 304). It is the part of a good judge to enlarge his jurisdiction; that is, his remedial authority. Chanc. Prec. 329; 1 Wils. 284; 9 Mees. & W. 818; 1 C. B. N. S. 255; 4 Bingh. N. C. 233; 4 Scott, N. R. 229; 17 Mass. 310.

Boni judicis est causas litium dirimere. It is the duty of a good judge to remove causes of litigation. Coke, 2d Inst. 306.

Boni judicis est judicium sine dilatione mandare executioni. It is the duty of a good judge to cause execution to issue on a judgment without delay. Coke, Litt. 289.

Boni judicis est lites dirimere, ne lis ex lite oritur, et interest reipublicæ ut sint fines litium. It is the duty of a good judge to prevent litigations, that suit may not grow out of suit, and it concerns the welfare of a state that an end be put to litigation. 4 Coke, 15; 5 id. 31 a.

Bonum defendentis ex integrâ causâ, malum ex quolibet defectu. The good of a defendant arises from a perfect case, his harm from some defect. 11 Coke, 68.

Bonum necessarium extra terminos necessitatis non est bonum. A thing good from necessity is not good beyond the limits of the necessity. Hob. 144.

Bonus judex secundum æquum et bonum judicat, et æquitatem stricto juri præfert. A good judge decides according to justice and right, and prefers equity to strict law. Coke, Litt. 24; 4 Term, 344; 2 Q. B. 837; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 77.

Breve judiciale debet sequi suum originale, et accessorium suum principale. A judicial writ ought to follow its original, and an accessory its principal. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 292.

Breve judiciale non cadit pro defectu firmæ. A judicial writ fails not through defect of form. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 43.

Carcer ad homines custodiendos, non ad puniendos, dari debet. A prison ought to be given to the custody, not the punishment, of persons. Coke, Litt. 260. See Dig. 48. 19. 8. 9.

Casus fortuitus non est sperandus, et nemo tenetur divinare. A fortuitous event is not to be foreseen, and no person is held bound to divine it. 4 Coke, 66.

Casus fortuitus non est supponendus. A fortuitous event is not to be presumed. Hardr. 82, arg.

Casus omissus et oblivioni datus dispositioni communis juris relinquitur. A case omitted and forgotten is left to the disposal of the common law. 5 Coke, 37; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 45; 1 Exch. 476.

Catalla justè possessa amitti non possunt. Chattels justly possessed cannot be lost. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 28.

Catalla reputantur inter minima in lege. Chattels are considered in law among the minor things. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 52.

Causa causæ est causa causati. The cause of a cause is the cause of the effect. Freem. 329; 12 Mod. 639.

Causa ecclesiæ publicis æquiparatur; et summa est ratio quæ pro religione facit. The cause of the church is equal to public cause; and paramount is the reason which makes for religion. Coke, Litt. 341.

Causa et origo est materia negotii. Cause and origin is the material of business. 1 Coke, 99; Wingate, Max. 41, Max. 21.

Causa proxima, non remota spectatur. The immediate and not the remote cause is to be considered. Bacon, Max. Reg. 1; Story, Bailm. 515; 3 Kent, Comm. 8th ed. 374; 2 East, 348. See Causa Proxima.

Causa vaga et incerta non est causa rationabilis. A vague and uncertain cause is not a reasonable cause. 5 Coke, 57.

Causæ dotis, vitæ, libertatis, fisci sunt inter favorabilia in lege. Causes of dower, life, liberty, revenue, are among the things favored in law. Coke, Litt. 341.

Caveat emptor. Let the purchaser beware. See Caveat Emptor.

Caveat emptor; qui ignorare non debuit quod jus alienum emit. Let a purchaser beware; who ought not to be ignorant that he is purchasing the rights of another. Hob. 99; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 690; Coke, Litt. 102 a; 3 Taunt. 439; 1 Bouvier, Inst. 383; Sugden, Vend. & P. 13th ed. 272 et seq.; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 6th ed. ch. 6.

Caveat venditor. Let the seller beware. Lofft. 328; 18 Wend. N. Y. 449, 453; 23 id. 353; 2 Barb. N. Y. 323; 5 N. Y. 73, 82.

Cavendum est a fragmentis. Beware of fragments. Bacon, Aph. 26.

Certa debet esse intentio, et narratio et certum fundamentum, et certa res quæ deducitur in judicium. The intention, count, foundation, and thing, brought to judgment, ought to be certain. Coke, Litt. 303 a.

Certum est quod certum reddi potest. That is sufficiently certain which can be made certain. Noy, Max. 481; Coke, Litt. 45 b, 96 a, 142 a; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 143; 2 Maule & S. 50; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 555–558; 3 Term, 463; 4 Cruise, Dig. 4th ed. 269; 3 Mylne & K. Ch. 353; 11 Cush. Mass. 380.

Cessante causa, cessat effectus. The cause ceasing, the effect must cease. 1 Exch. 430; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 151.

Cessante ratione legis cessat, et ipsa lex. Reason is the soul of the law, and when the reason of any particular law ceases, so does the law itself. 4 Coke, 38; 7 id. 69; Coke, Litt. 70 b, 122 a; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 151, 152; 4 Rep. 38; 13 East, 348; 4 Bingh. N. C. 388.

Cessante statu primitivo, cessat derivativus. The primary state ceasing, the derivative ceases. 8 Rep. 34; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. p. 438; 4 Kent, Comm. 32.

C'est le crime qui fait la honte, et non pas l'échafaud. It is the crime which causes the shame, and not the scaffold.

Cestuy que doit inheriter al père doit inheriter al fils. He who would have been heir to the father of the deceased shall also be heir of the son. Fitzherbert, Abr. Descent, 2; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 239, 250.

Chacea est ad communem legem. A chace is by common law. Reg. Brev. 806.

Charta de non ente non valet. A charter or deed of a thing not in being is not valid. Coke, Litt. 36.

Chartarum super fidem, mortuis testibus, ad patriam de necessitudine, recurrendum est. The witnesses being dead, the truth of charters must, of necessity, be referred to the country. Coke, Litt. 36.

Chirographum apud debitorem repertum presumitur solutum. An evidence of debt found in possession of the debtor is presumed to be paid. Halk. Max. 30. See 14 Mees. & W. 379.

Circuitus est evitandus. Circuity is to be avoided. Coke, Litt. 384 a; Smith, Lead. Cas. 4th Am. ed. 20; Wingate, Max. 179; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 309; 5 Coke, 34; 15 Mees. & W. 208; 5 Exch. 829.

Citatio est de juri naturali. A summons is by natural right. Cases in Banco Regis Will. III. 453.

Citationes non concedantur priusquam exprimatur super qua re fieri debet citatio. Citations should not be granted before it is stated about what matter the citation is to be made. (A maxim of ecclesiastical law.) 12 Coke, 44.

Clausula generalis de residuo non ea complectitur quæ non ejusdem sint generis cum iis quæ speciatim dicta fuerant. A general clause of remainder does not embrace those things which are not of the same kind with those which had been specially mentioned. Lofft, 419.

Clausula generalis non refertur ad expressa. A general clause does not refer to things expressed. 8 Coke, 154.

Clausula quæ abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet. A clause in a law which precludes its abrogation is invalid from the beginning. Bacon, Max. Reg. 19, p. 89; 2 Dwarris, Stat. 673; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 27.

Clausula vel dispositio inutilis per præsumptionem remotam vel causam, ex post facto non fulcitur. A useless clause or disposition, i. e. one which the law would have implied, is not supported by a remote presumption, or by a cause arising afterwards. Bacon, Max. Reg. 21; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 599.

Clausulæ inconsuetæ semper inducunt suspicionem. Unusual clauses always excite a suspicion. 3 Coke, 81; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 264.

Cogitationis pœnam nemo patitur. No one is punished for his thoughts. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 279.

Cohæredes una persona censentur, propter unitatem juris quod habent. Coheirs are deemed as one person, on account of the unity of right which they possess. Coke, Litt. 163.

Commercium jure gentium commune esse debet, et non in monopolium et privatum paucorum quæstum convertendum. Commerce, by the law of nations, ought to be common, and not to be converted into a monopoly and the private gain of a few. Coke, 3d Inst. 181, in marg.

Commodum ex injuriâ suâ non habere debet. No man ought to derive any benefit of his own wrong. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 161; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 62.

Common opinion is good authority in law. Coke, Litt. 186 a; 3 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 528, 577.

Communis error facit jus. A common error makes law. What was at first illegal, being repeated many times, is presumed to have acquired the force of usage; and then it would be wrong to depart from it. Hilliard, Real Prop. 268; 1 Ld. Raym. 42; 6 Clark & F. 172; 3 Maule & S. 396; 4 N. H. 458; 2 Mass. 357. The converse of this maxim is communis error non facit jus. A common error does not make law. Coke, 4th Inst. 242; 3 Term, 725; 6 id. 564.

Compendia sunt dispendia. Abridgments are hindrances. Coke, Litt. 305.

Compromissarii sunt judices. Arbitrators are judges. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 128.

Compromissum ad similitudinem judiciorum redigitur. A compromise is brought into affinity with judgments. 9 Cush. Mass. 571.

Concessio per regem fieri debet de certitudine. A grant by the king ought to be a grant of a certainty. 9 Coke, 46.

Concessio versus concedentem latam interpretationem habere debet. A grant ought to have a liberal interpretation against the grantor. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 279.

Concordiâ parvæ res crescunt et opulentiâ lites. Small means increase by concord, and litigations by opulence. Coke, 4th Inst. 74.

Conditio beneficialis, quæ statum construit, benignè, secundum verborum intentionem est interpretanda; odiosa autem, quæ statum destruit, strictè, secundum verborum proprietatem, accipienda. A beneficial condition, which creates an estate, ought to be construed favorably, according to the intention of the words; but an odious condition, which destroys an estate, ought to be construed strictly, according to the letter of the words. 8 Coke, 90; Sheppard, Touchst. 134.

Conditio dicitur, cum quid in casum incertum qui potest tendere ad esse aut non esse, confertur. It is called a condition when something is given on an uncertain event, which may or may not come into existence. Coke, Litt. 201.

Conditio illicita habetur pro non adjicta. An unlawful condition is deemed as not annexed.

Conditio præcedens adimpleri debet priusquam sequatur effectus. A condition precedent must be fulfilled before the effect can follow. Coke, Litt. 201.

Conditiones quælibet odiosæ; maximè autem contrà matrimonium et commercium. Any conditions are odious, but especially those against matrimony and commerce. Lofft, 644.

Confessio facta in judicio omni probatione major est. A confession made in court is of greater effect than any proof. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 102.

Confessus in judicio pro judicato habetur et quodammodo suâ sententiâ damnatur. A person who has confessed in court is deemed as having had judgment passed upon him, and, in a manner, is condemned by his own sentence. 11 Coke, 30. See Dig. 42. 2. 1.

Confirmare est id quod prius infirmum fuit simul firmare. To confirm is to make firm what was before infirm. Coke, Litt. 295.

Confirmare nemo potest priusquam jus ei acciderit. No one can confirm before the right accrues to him. 10 Coke, 48.

Confirmatio est nulla, ubi donum præcedens est invalidum. A confirmation is null where the preceding gift is invalid. Coke, Litt. 295; F. Moore, 764.

Confirmatio omnes supplet defectus, licet id quod actum est ab initio non valuit. Confirmation supplies all defects, though that which has been done was not valid at the beginning. Coke, Litt. 295 b.

Confirmat usum qui tollit abusum. He confirms a use who removes an abuse. F. Moore, 764.

Conjunctio mariti et feminæ est de jure naturæ. The union of a man and a woman is of the law of nature.

Consensus facit legem. Consent makes the law. A contract is law between the parties having received their consent. Branch, Princ.

Consensus non concubitus facit matrimonium. Consent, not coition, constitutes marriage. Coke, Litt. 33 a; Dig. 50. 17. 30. See 10 Clark & F. 534; 1 Bouvier, Inst. 103; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 129.

Consensus tollit errorem. Consent removes or obviates a mistake. Coke, Litt. 126; Coke, 2d Inst. 123; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed, 129; 1 Bingh. N. C. 68; 6 Ell. & B. 338; 7 Johns. N. Y. 611.

Consensus voluntas multorum ad quos res pertinet, simul juncta. Consent is the united will of several interested in one subject-matter. Dav. 48; Branch, Princ.

Consentientes et agentes pari pœnâ plectentur. Those consenting and those perpetrating shall receive the same punishment. 5 Coke, 80.

Consentire matrimonio non possunt infra annos nubiles. Persons cannot consent to marriage before marriageable years. 5 Coke, 80; 6 id. 22.

Consequentiæ non est consequentia. A consequence ought not to be drawn from another consequence. Bacon, Aph. 16.

Consilia multorum requiruntur in magnis. The advice of many persons is requisite in great affairs. Coke, 4th Inst. 1.

Constitutum esse eam domum unicuique nostrum debere existimari, ubi quisque sedes et tabulas haberet, suarumque rerum constitutionem fecisset. It is settled that that is to be considered the home of each one of us where he may have his habitation and account-books, and where he may have made an establishment of his business. Dig. 50. 16. 203.

Constructio legis non facit injuriam. The construction of law does not work an injury. Coke, Litt. 183; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 537.

Consuetudo contra rationem introducta, potiùs usurpatio quam consuetudo appellari debet. A custom introduced against reason ought rather to be called an usurpation than a custom. Coke, Litt. 113.

Consuetudo debet esse certa. A custom ought to be certain. Dav. 33.

Consuetudo est altera lex. Custom is another law. 4 Coke, 21.

Consuetudo est optimus interpres legum. Custom is the best expounder of the law. Coke, 2d Inst. 18; Dig. 1. 3. 37; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 273.

Consuetudo et communis assuetudo vincit legem non scriptam, si sit specialis; et interpretatur legem scriptam, si lex sit generalis. Custom and common usage overcome the unwritten law, if it be special; and interpret the written law, if the law be general. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 273.

Consuetudo ex certâ causâ rationabili usitata privat communem legem. Custom observed by reason of a certain and reasonable cause supersedes the common laws. Littleton, § 169; Coke, Litt. 33 b. See Judgt. 5 Bingh. 293; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. p. 825.

Consuetudo, licet sit magnæ auctoritatis, nunquam tamen præjudicat manifestæ veritati. A custom, though it be of great authority, should never, however, be prejudicial to manifest truth. 4 Coke, 18.

Consuetudo loci observanda est. The custom of the place is to be observed. 4 Coke, 28 b; 6 id. 67; 10 id. 139; 4 C. B. 48.

Consuetudo neque injuriâ oriti, neque tolli potest. A custom can neither arise, nor be abolished, by a wrong. Lofft, 340.

Consuetudo non habitur in consequentiam. Custom is not to be drawn into a precedent. 3 Kebl. 499.

Consuetudo præscripta et legitima vincit legem. A prescriptive and legitimate custom overcomes the law. Coke, Litt. 113.

Consuetudo regni Angliæ est lex Angliæ. The custom of the kingdom of England is the law of England. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 119.

Consuetudo semel reprobata non potest ampliùs induci. Custom once disallowed cannot again be produced. Dav. 33; Grounds & Rud. of Law, 53.

Consuetudo vincit communem legem. Custom overrules common law. 1 Roper, Husb. & Wife, 351; Coke, Litt. 33 b.

Consuetudo volentes ducit, lex nolentes trahit. Custom leads the willing, law compels or draws the unwilling. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 274.

Contemporanea expositio est optima et fortissima in lege. A contemporaneous exposition is the best and most powerful in the law. Coke, 2d Inst. 11; 3 Coke, 7; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 608.

Contestatio litis eget terminos contradictarios. An issue requires terms of contradiction; that is, there can be no issue without an affirmative on one side and a negative on the other. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 117.

Contra legem facit qui id facit quod lex prohibet; in fraudem vero qui, salvis verbis legis, sententiam ejus circumvenit. He does contrary to the law who does what the law prohibits; he acts in fraud of the law who, the letter of the law being inviolate, uses the law contrary to its intention. Dig. 1. 3. 29.

Contrà negantem principia non est disputandum. There is no disputing against one who denies principles. Coke, Litt. 43; Grounds & Rud. of Law, 57.

Contrà non valentem agere nulla currit præscriptio. No prescription runs against a person unable to act. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 810; Evans, Pothier, 451.

Contrà veritatem lex nunquam aliquid permittit. The law never suffers any thing contrary to truth. Coke, 2d Inst. 252. But sometimes it allows a conclusive presumption in opposition to truth. See 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3061.

Contractus ex turpi causâ, vel contrà bonos mores nullus est. A contract founded on a base and unlawful consideration, or against good morals, is null. Hob. 167; Dig. 2. 14. 27. 4.

Contractus legem ex conventione accipiunt. The agreement of the parties makes the law of the contract. Dig. 16. 3. 1. 6.

Contrariorum contraria est ratio. The reason of contrary things is contrary. Hob. 344.

Contrectatio rei alienæ animo furandi, est furtum. The touching or removing of another's property, with an intention of stealing, is theft. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 132.

Conventio privatorum non potest publico juri derogare. An agreement of private persons cannot derogate from public right. Wing. 746, Max. 201; Coke, Litt. 166 a; Dig. 50. 17. 45. 1.

Conventio vincit legem. The agreement of the parties overcomes or prevails against the law. Story, Ag. § 368; 6 Taunt. 430. See Dig. 16. 3. 1. 6.

Copulatio verborum indicat acceptationem in eodem sensu. Coupling words together shows that they ought to be understood in the same sense. Bacon, Max. Reg. 3; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 523.

Corporalis injuria non recipit æstimationem de futuro. A personal injury does not receive satisfaction from a future course of proceeding. Bacon, Max. Reg. 6; 3 How. St. Tr. 71; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 254.

Corpus humanum non recipit æstimationem. A human body is not susceptible of appraisement. Hob. 59.

Creditorum appellatione non hi tantum accipiuntur qui pecuniam crediderunt, sed omnes quibus ex qualibet causâ debetur. Under the head of creditors are included not alone those who have lent money, but all to whom from any cause a debt is owing. Dig. 50. 16. 11.

Crescente malitiâ crescere debet et pœna. Vice increasing, punishment ought also to increase. Coke, 2d Inst. 479.

Crimen falsi dicitur, cum quis illicitur, cui non fuerit ad hæc data auctoritas, de sigillo regis rapto vel invento brevia, cartasve consignaverit. The crimen falsi (crime of falsifying) is when any one illicitly, to whom power has not been given for such purposes, has signed writs or charters with the king's seal, which he has either stolen or found. Fleta, l. 1, c. 23.

Crimen læsæ majestatis omnia alia crimina excedit quoad pœnam. The crime of treason exceeds all other crimes as far as its punishment is concerned. Coke, 3d Inst. 210.

Crimen omnia ex se nata vitiat. Crime vitiates every thing which springs from it. 5 Hill, N. Y. 523, 531.

Crimen trahit personam. The crime carries the person; i.e. the commission of a crime gives the courts of the place where it is committed jurisdiction over the person of the offender. 3 Den. N. Y. 190, 210.

Crimina morte extinguuntur. Crimes are extinguished by death.

Cui jurisdictio data est, ea quoque concessa esse videntur sine quibus jurisdictio explicari non potest. To whom jurisdiction is given, to him those things also are held to be granted without which the jurisdiction cannot be exercised. Dig. 2. 1. 2; 1 Wooddeson, Lect. Introd. lxxi.; 1 Kent, Comm. 339.

Cui jus est donandi, eidem et vendendi et concedendi jus est. He who has a right to give has also a right to sell and to grant. Dig. 50. 17. 163.

Cui licet quod majus non debet quod minus est non licere. He who has authority to do the more important act shall not be debarred from doing that of less importance. 4 Rep. 23; Coke, Litt. 355 b; 2 Inst. 307; Noy, Max. 26; Finch, Law, 22; 3 Mod. 382, 392; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 165; Dig. 50. 70. 21.

Cui pater est populus non habet ille patrem. He to whom the people is father has not a father. Coke, Litt. 123.

Cuicunque aliquis quid concedit concedere videtur et id, sine quo res ipsa esse non potuit. Whoever grants a thing is supposed also tacitly to grant that without which the grant itself would be of no effect. 11 Coke, 52; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 426; Hob. 234; Vaugh. 109; 11 Exch. 775; Sheppard, Touchst. 89; Coke, Litt. 56 a.

Cuilibet in arte suâ perito est credendum. Credence should be given to one skilled in his peculiar art. Coke, Litt. 125; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 75; Phillips, Ev. Cowen & H. notes, pt. 1, p. 759; 11 Clark & F. 85. See EXPERT; OPINION.

Cuique in suâ arte credendum est. Every one is to be believed in his own art. 9 Mass. 227.

Cujus est commodum ejus debet esse incommodum. He who receives the benefit should also bear the disadvantage. 1 Kaimes, Eq. 289; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 837.

Cujus est dare ejus est disponere. He who has a right to give has the right to dispose of the gift. Wingate, Max. 53; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 440; 2 Coke, 71.

Cujus est divisio alterius est electio. Whichever of two parties has the division, the other has the choice. Coke, Litt. 166.

Cujus est instituere ejus est abrogare. Whose it is to institute, his it is also to abrogate. Sydney, Gov. 15; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 785.

Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cœlum. He who owns the soil owns it up to the sky. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 309; Sheppard, Touchst. 90; 2 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 15, 70; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 18; 9 Coke, 54; 4 Campb. 219; 11 Exch. 822; 6 Ell. & B. 76.

Cujus juris (i.e. jurisdictionis) est principale, ejusdem juris erit accessorium. He who has jurisdiction of the principal has also of the accessory. Coke, 2d Inst. 493; Bracton, 481.

Cujus per errorem dati repetitio est, ejus consulto dati, donatio est. That which, when given through mistake, can be recovered back, when given with knowledge of the facts, is a gift. Dig. 50. 17. 53.

Cujusque rei potissima pars principium est. The principal part of every thing is the beginning. Dig. 1. 2. 1; 10 Coke, 49.

Culpâ caret, qui scit, sed prohibere non potest. He is clear of blame who knows but cannot prevent. Dig. 50. 17. 50.

Culpa est immiscere se rei ad se non pertinenti. It is a fault to meddle with what does not belong to or does not concern you. Dig. 50. 17. 36; Coke, 2d Inst. 208.

Culpa lata dolo æquiparatur. Gross neglect is equivalent to fraud. Dig. 11. 6. 1.

Culpa tenet suos auctores. A fault binds its own authors. Erskine, Inst. b. 4, tit. 1, § 14; 6 Bell, App. Cas. 539.

Culpæ pœna par esto. Let the punishment be proportioned to the crime. Branch, Princ.

Cum actio fuerit merè criminalis, institui poterit ab initio criminaliter vel civiliter. When an action is merely criminal, it can be instituted from the beginning either criminally or civilly. Bracton, 102.

Cum adsunt testimonia rerum, quid opus est verbis? When the proofs of facts are present, what need is there of words? 2 Bulstr. 53.

Cum confitente sponte mitius est agendum. One making a voluntary confession is to be dealt with more mercifully. Coke, 4th Inst. 66; Branch, Princ.

Cum de lucro duorum quæritur melior est causa possidentis. When the question of gain lies between two, the cause of the possessor is the better. Dig. 50. 17. 126.

Cum duo inter se pugnantia reperiuntur in testamento, ultimum ratum est. When two things repugnant to each other are found in a will, the last is to be confirmed. Coke, Litt. 112; Sheppard, Touchst. 451; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 518; 1 Jarman, Wills, 2d ed. 394; 16 Johns. N. Y. 146; 1 Phill. 536.

Cum in testamento ambiguè aut etiam perperam scriptum, est benigne interpretari, et secundum id quod credibile est cogitatum credendum est. When an ambiguous or even an erroneous expression occurs in a will, it should be construed liberally, and in accordance with the testator's probable meaning. Dig. 34. 5. 24; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 506; 3 Pothier, ad Pand. ed. 1819, 46.

Cum legitimæ nuptiæ factæ sunt, patrem liberi sequuntur. Children born under a legitimate marriage follow the condition of the father.

Cum par delictum est duorum, semper oneratur petitor, et melior habetur possessoris causa. Where two parties are equally in fault, the claimant always is at a disadvantage, and the party in possession has the better cause. Dig. 50. 17. 154; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 644.

Curia parliamenti suis propriis legibus subsistit. The court of parliament is governed by its own peculiar laws. Coke, 4th Inst. 50; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 82; 12 C. B. 413, 414.

Curiosa et captiosa interpretatio in lege reprobatur. A curious and captious interpretation in the law is to be reproved. 1 Bulstr. 6.

Currit tempus contra desides et sui juris contemptores. Time runs against the slothful and those who neglect their rights. Bracton, 100 b; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 5, § 12.

Cursus curiæ est lex curiæ. The practice of the court is the law of the court. 3 Bulstr. 53; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 126; 12 C. B. 414; 17 Q. B. 86; 8 Exch. 199; 2 Maule & S. 25; 15 East, 226; 12 Mees. & W. 7; 4 Mylne & C. 635; 3 Scott, N. R. 599.

Custom is the best interpreter of the law. Coke, 4th Inst. 75; 2 Ed. Ch. 74; 5 Cranch, 32; 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 106; 2 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 232, 269; 3 id. 528, 577.

Custome serra prise stricte. Custom must be taken strictly. Jenk. Cent. Cas 83.

Custos statum hæredis in custodiâ existentis melioratum non deteriorem, facere potest. A guardian can make the estate of an heir living under his guardianship better, not worse. 7 Coke, 7.

Da tua dum tua sunt, post mortem tunc tua non sunt. Give the things which are yours whilst they are yours; after death then they are not yours. 3 Bulstr. 18.

Datur digniori. It is given to the more worthy. 2 Ventr. 268.

De fide et officio judicis non recipitur quæstio, sed de scientia sive sit error juris sive facti. The bona fides and honesty of purpose of a judge cannot be questioned, but his decision may be impugned for error either of law or of fact. Bacon, Max. Reg. 17; 5 Johns. N. Y. 291; 9 id. 396; 1 N. Y. 45; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 82.

De jure judices, de facto juratores, respondent. The judges answer concerning the law, the jury concerning the facts. See Coke, Litt. 295; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 99.

De majori et minori non variant jura. Concerning major and minor laws do not vary. 2 Vern. Ch. 552.

De minimis non curat lex. The law does not notice (or care for) trifling matters. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 134; Hob. 88; 5 Hill, N. Y. 170.

De molendino de novo erecto non jacet prohibitio. A prohibition lies not against a new-erected mill. Croke Jac. 429.

De morte hominis nulla est cunctatio longa. When the death of a human being may be concerned, no delay is long. Coke, Litt. 134. When the question is concerning the life or death of a man, no delay is too long to admit of inquiring into facts.

De nomine proprio non est curandum cum in substantiâ non erretur; quia nomina mutabilia sunt, res autem immobiles. As to the proper name, it is not to be regarded when one errs not in substance; because names are changeable, but things are immutable. 6 Coke, 66.

De non apparentibus et non existentibus eadem est lex. The law is the same respecting things which do not appear and those which do not exist. 6 Ired. No. C. 61; 12 How. 253; 5 Coke, 6; 6 Bingh. N. C. 453; 7 Clark & F. Hou. L. 872; 5 C. B. 53; 8 id. 286; 1 Term, 404; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 150.

De nullo, quod est suâ naturâ indivisibile, et divisionem non patitur, nullam partem habebit vidua, sed satisfaciat ei ad valentiam. A widow shall have no part from that which in its own nature is indivisible, and is not susceptible of division; but let [the heir] satisfy her with an equivalent. Coke, Litt. 32.

De similibus ad similia eadem ratione procedendum est. From similars to similars we are to proceed by the same rule. Branch, Princ.

De similibus idem est judicium. Concerning similars the judgment is the same. 7 Coke, 18.

Debet esse finis litium. There ought to be an end of lawsuits. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 61.

Debet quis juri subjacere ubi delinquit. Every one ought to be subject to the law of the place where he offends. Coke, 3d Inst. 34; Finch, Law, 14, 36; Wingate, Max. 113, 114; 3 Coke, 231; 8 Scott, N. R. 567.

Debet sua cuique domus esse perfugium tutissimum. Every man's house should be a perfectly safe refuge. 12 Johns. N. Y. 31, 54.

Debile fundamentum, fallit opus. Where there is a weak foundation, the work falls. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2068; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 169, 171.

Debita sequuntur personam debitoris. Debts follow the person of the debtor. Story, Confl. Laws, § 362; 2 Kent, Comm. 429; Halkers. Max. 13.

Debitor non præsumitur donare. A debtor is not presumed to make a gift. See 1 Kames, Eq. 212; Dig. 50. 16. 108; 1 P. Will. 239.

Debitorum pactionibus, creditorum petitio nec tolli, nec minui potest. The right to sue of creditors cannot be taken away or lessened by the contracts of their debtors. Pothier, Obl. 87, 108; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 622.

Debitum in presenti, solvendum in futuro. A present debt to be discharged in the future. 2 Barb. N. Y. 457, 470; 16 id. 171, 176; 19 id. 442, 445.

Deficiente uno sanguine non potest esse hæres. One blood being wanted, he cannot be heir. 3 Coke, 41; Grounds & Rud. of Law, 77.

Delegata potestas non potest delegari. A delegated authority cannot be again delegated. Coke, 2d Inst. 597; 5 Bingh. N. C. 310; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1300; Story, Ag. § 13; 11 How. 233.

Delegatus debitor est odiosus in lege. A delegated debtor is hateful in law. 3 Bulstr. 148.

Delegatus non potest delegare. A delegate or deputy cannot appoint another. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1936; Story, Ag. § 13; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 756–758; 9 Coke, 77; 2 Scott, N. R. 509; 12 Mees. & W. 712; 6 Exch. 156; 8 C. B. 627.

Delinquens per iram provocatus puniri debet mitius. A delinquent provoked by anger ought to be punished more mildly. Coke, 3d Inst. 55.

Derivativa potestas non potest esse major primitiva. The power which is derived cannot be greater than that from which it is derived. Wingate, Max. 36; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, p. 11.

Derogatur legi, cum pars detrahitur; abrogatur legi, cum prorsùs tollitur. To derogate from a law is to take away part of it; to abrogate a law is to abolish it entirely. Dig. 50. 16. 102. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 91.

Designatio unius est exclusio alterius, et expressum facit cessare tacitum. The appointment or designation of one is the exclusion of another; and that expressed makes that which is implied to cease. Coke, Litt. 210.

Deus solus hæredem facere potest, non homo. God alone, and not man, can make an heir. Coke, Litt. 7 b; cited 5 Barnew. & C. 440, 454; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 457.

Dies dominicus non est juridicus. Sunday is not a day in law. Coke, Litt. 135 a; 2 Saund. 291; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 21; Finch, Law, 7; Noy, Max. 2; Plowd. 265; 3 Dowl. & L. 328; 13 Mass. 327. See SUNDAY.

Dies inceptus pro completo habetur. A day begun is held as complete.

Dies incertus pro conditione habetur. A day uncertain is held as a condition. Bell, Dict. Computation of Time.

Dilationes in lege sunt odiosæ. Delays in law are odious. Branch, Princ.

Discretio est discernere per legem quid sit justum. Discretion is to discern through law what is just. 5 Coke, 99, 100; 10 id. 140; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. p. 81; Coke, 4th Inst. 41; 1 W. Blackst. 152; 1 Burr. 570; 3 Bulstr. 128; 6 Q. B. 700.

Discretio est scire per legem quid sit justum. Discretion consists in knowing what is just in law. 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 352, 356.

Disparata non debent jungi. Dissimilar things ought not to be joined. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 24.

Dispensatio est vulnus, quod vulnerat jus commune. A dispensation is a wound, because it wounds a common right. Dav. 69; Branch, Princ.

Disseisinam satis facit, qui uti non permittit possessorem, vel minus commode, licet omnino non expellat. He makes disseisin enough who does not permit the possessor to enjoy, or makes his enjoyment less commodious, although he does not expel altogether. Coke, Litt. 331; Bracton, lib. 4. tr. 2.

Dissimilium dissimilis est ratio. Of dissimilars the rule is dissimilar. Coke, Litt. 191.

Dissimulatione tollitur injuria. Wrong is wiped out by reconciliation. Erskine, Inst. b. 4, tit. 4, § 108.

Distinguenda sunt tempora. The time is to be considered. 1 Coke, 16 a; 14 N. Y. 380, 393.

Distinguenda sunt tempora; aliud est facere, aliud perficere. Times must be distinguished; it is one thing to do a thing, another to complete it. 3 Leon. 243; Branch, Princ.

Distinguenda sunt tempora; distingue tempora, et concordabis leges. Times are to be distinguished; distinguish times, and you will attune laws. 1 Coke, 24.

Divinatio non interpretatio est, quæ omnino recedit a litera. It is a guess, not interpretation, which altogether departs from the letter. Bacon, Max. Reg. 3, p. 47.

Dolosus versatur in generalibus. A deceiver deals in generals. 2 Coke, 34; 2 Bulstr. 226; Lofft, 782; 1 Rolle, 157; Wingate, Max. 636; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 264.

Dolum ex indiciis perspicuis probari convenit. Fraud should be proved by clear tokens. Code, 2. 21. 6; 1 Story, Contr. 4th ed. p. 602.

Dolus auctoris non nocet successori. The fraud of a predecessor does not prejudice the successor.

Dolus circuitu non purgator. Fraud is not purged by circuity. Bacon, Max. Reg. 1; Noy, Max. 9, 12; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 210; 6 Ell. & B. 948.

Dolus et fraus nemini patrocinentur (patrocinari debent). Deceit and fraud shall excuse or benefit no man. (They themselves need to be excused.) Year B. 14 Hen. VIII. 8; Story, Eq. Jur. § 395; 3 Coke, 78; 2 Fonblanque, Eq. b. 2, ch. 6, § 3.

Dominium non potest esse in pendenti. The right of property cannot be in abeyance. Halkers, Max. 39.

Domus sua cuique est tutissimum refugium. Every man's house is his castle. 5 Coke, 91, 92; Dig. 2. 14. 18; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 384; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 481; Foster, Homicide, 320; 8 Q. B. 757; 16 id. 546, 556; 19 How. St. Tr. 1030. See ARREST.

Domus tutissimum cuique refugium atque receptaculum. The habitation of each one is an inviolable asylum for him. Dig. 2. 4. 18.

Dona clandestina sunt semper suspiciosa. Clandestine gifts are always suspicious. 3 Coke, 81; Noy, Max. 9th ed. 152; 4 Barnew. & C. 652; 1 Maule & S. 253; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 264.

Donari videtur quod, nulli jure cogente conceditur. That is considered to be given which is granted when no law compels. Dig. 50. 17. 82.

Donatio non præsumitur. A gift is not presumed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 109.

Donatio perficitur possessione accipientis. A gift is rendered complete by the possession of the receiver. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 712; 2 Johns. N. Y. 52; 2 Leigh, Va. 337; 2 Kent, Comm. 438.

Donationum alia perfecta, alia incepta, et non perfecta; ut si donatio lecta fuit et concessa, ac traditio nondum fuerit subsecuta. Some gifts are perfect, others incipient and not perfect; as if a gift were read and agreed to, but delivery had not then followed. Coke, Litt. 56.

Donator nunquam desinit possidere antequam donatarius incipiat possidere. He that gives never ceases to possess until he that receives begins to possess. Dyer, 281; Bracton, 41 b.

Dormiunt aliquando leges, nunquam moriuntur. The laws sometimes sleep, but never die. Coke, 2d Inst. 161.

Dos de dote peti non debet. Dower ought not to be sought from dower. 4 Coke, 122; Coke, Litt. 31; 4 Dane, Abr. 671; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 209.

Doti lex favet; præmium pudoris est, ideò parcatur. The law favors dower; it is the reward of chastity, therefore let it be preserved. Coke, Litt. 31; Branch, Princ.

Droit ne done pluis que soit demaunde. The law gives no more than is demanded. Coke, 2d Inst. 286.

Droit ne poet pas morier. Right cannot die. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 100.

Duas uxores eodem tempore habere non potest. It is not lawful to have two wives at one time. Inst. 1. 10. 6; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 436.

Duo non possunt in solido unam rem possidere. Two cannot possess onè thing each in entirety. Coke, Litt. 368; 1 Preston, Abstr. 318; 2 id. 86, 326; 2 Dods. Adm. 157; 2 Carth. 76; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 415.

Duo sunt instrumenta ad omnes res aut confirmandas aut impugnandas, ratio et auctoritas. There are two instruments for confirming or impugning every thing, reason and authority. 8 Coke, 16.

Duorum in solidum dominium vel possessio esse non potest. Ownership or possession in entirety cannot be in two of the same thing. Dig. 13. 6. 5. 15; 1 Mackeldey, Civ. Law, 245, § 236; Bracton, 28 b.

Duplicationem possibilitatis lex non patitur. The law does not allow a duplication of possibility. 1 Rolle, 321.

Ea est accipienda interpretatio, quæ vitio caret. That interpretation is to be received which is free from fault. Bacon, Max. Reg. 3, p. 47.

Ea quæ commendandi causâ in venditionibus dicuntur si palam appareant venditorem non obligant. Those things which, by way of commendation, are stated at sales, if they are openly apparent, do not bind the seller. Dig. 18. 43. m.

Ea quæ dari impossibilia sunt, vel quæ in rerum natura non sunt, pro non adjectis habentur. Those things which cannot be given, or which are not in existence, are held as not expressed. Dig. 50. 17. 135.

Ea quæ rarò accidunt, non temerè in agendis negotiis computantur. Those things which rarely happen are not to be taken into account in the transaction of business without sufficient reason. Dig. 50. 17. 64.

Eadem mens præsumitur regis quæ est juris et quæ esse debet, præsertim in dubiis. The mind of the sovereign is presumed to be coincident with that of the law, and with that which ought to be, especially in ambiguous matters. Hob. 154; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 53.

Ecclesia ecclesiæ decimas solvere non debet. It is not the duty of the church to pay tithes to the church. Croke Eliz. 479.

Ecclesiæ magis favendum est quam personæ. The church is more to be favored than an individual. Godb. 172.

Ecclesia non moritur. The church does not die. Coke, 2d Inst. 3.

Effectus sequitur causam. The effect follows the cause. Wingate, Max. 226.

Ei incumbit probatio qui dicit, non qui negat. The burden of the proof lies upon him who affirms, not he who denies. Dig. 22. 3. 2; Tait, Ev. 1; 1 Phillips, Ev. 194; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 74; 3 La. 83; 2 Daniell, Chanc. Pract. 408; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4411.

Ei nihil turpe, cui nihil satis. Nothing is base to whom nothing is sufficient. Coke, 4th Inst. 53.

Ejus est non nolle qui potest velle. He may consent tacitly who may consent expressly. Dig. 50. 17. 3.

Ejus est periculum cujus est dominium aut commodum. He has the risk who has the right of property or advantage.

Ejus nulla culpa est cui parere necesse sit. No guilt attaches to him who is compelled to obey. Dig. 50. 17. 169.

Electâ unâ viâ, non datur recursus ad alteram. When there is concurrence of means, he who has chosen one cannot have recourse to another. 10 Toull. n. 170.

Electio est intima [interna], libera, et spontanea separatio unius rei ab aliâ, sine compulsione, consistens in animo et voluntate. Election is an internal, free, and spontaneous separation of one thing from another, without compulsion, consisting in intention and will. Dy. 281.

Electio semel facta, et placitum testatum, non patitur regressum. Election once made, and plea witnessed, suffers not a recall. Coke, Litt. 146.

Electiones fiant rite et libere sine interruptione aliqua. Elections should be made in due form and freely, without any interruption. Coke, 2d Inst. 169.

Emptor emit quam minimo potest; venditor vendit quam maximo potest. The buyer buys for as little as possible; the vendor sells for as much as possible. 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 252, 256, 486.

En eschange il covient que les estates soient égales. In an exchange it is necessary that the estates be equal. Coke, Litt. 50; 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 298.

Enumeratio infirmat regulam in casibus non enumeratis. Enumeration disaffirms the rule in cases not enumerated. Bacon, Aph. 17.

Enumeratio unius est exclusio alterius. Specification of one thing is an exclusion of the rest. Matter of Washburn, 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 106, 113.

Eodem modo quo oritur, eodem modo dissolvitur. It is discharged in the same way in which it arises. Bacon, Abr. Release; Croke Eliz. 697; 2 Wms. Saund. 48, n. 1; 11 Wend. N. Y. 28, 30; 24 id. 294, 298.

Eodem modo quo quid constituitur, eodem modo destruitur. In the same way in which any thing is constituted, in that way is it destroyed. 6 Coke, 53.

Equality is equity. Francis, Max., Max. 3; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3725; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 64.

Equitas sequitur legem. Equity follows the law. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 4; 5 Barb. N. Y. 277, 282.

Equity delights to do justice, and that not by halves. 5 Barb. N. Y. 277, 280; Story, Eq. Plead. § 72.

Equity follows the law. Cas. temp. Talb. 52; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 64.

Equity looks upon that as done, which ought to be done. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3729; 1 Fonblanque, Eq. b. 1, ch. 6, s. 9, note; 3 Wheat. 563.

Equity suffers not a right without a remedy. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3726.

Error fucatus nudâ veritate in multis est probabilior; et sæpenumero rationibus vincit veritatem error. Error artfully colored is in many things more probable than naked truth; and frequently error conquers truth and argumentation. 2 Coke, 73.

Error juris nocet. Error of law is injurious. See 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3828; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 139, n.

Error nominis nunquam nocet, si de identitate rei constat. Mistake in the name never injures, if there is no doubt as to the identity of the thing. 1 Duer, Ins. 171.

Error qui non resistitur, approbatur. An error not resisted is approved. Doctor & Student, c. 70.

Error scribentis nocere non debet. An error made by a clerk ought not to injure; a clerical error may be corrected. 1 Jenk. Cent. Cas. 324.

Errores ad sua principia referre, est refellere. To refer errors to their origin is to refute them. Coke, 3d Inst. 15.

Erubescit lex filios castigare parentes. The law blushes when children correct their parents. 8 Coke, 116.

Est aliquid quod non opertet, etiam si licet; quicquid vero non licet certè non oportet. There are some things which are not proper though lawful; but certainly those things are not proper which are not lawful. Hob. 159.

Est autem jus publicum et privatum, quod ex naturalibus præceptis aut gentium, aut civilibus est collectum; et quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Angliæ rectum esse dicitur. Public and private law is that which is collected from natural precepts, on the one hand of nations, on the other of citizens; and that which in the civil law is called jus, that in the law of England is said to be right. Coke, Litt. 558.

Est autem vis legem simulans. Violence may also put on the mask of law.

Est boni judicis ampliare jurisdictionem. It is the part of a good judge to extend the jurisdiction. Gilb. 14.

Est ipsorum legislatorum tanquam viva vox; rebus et non verbis legem imponimus. The utterance of legislators themselves is like the living voice; we impose law upon things, not upon words. 10 Coke, 101.

Estoveria sunt ardendi, arundi, construendi, et claudendi. Estovers are for burning, ploughing, building, and inclosing. 13 Coke, 68.

Eum qui nocentem infamat, non est æquum et bonum ob eam rem condemnari; delicta enim nocentium nota esse oportet et expedit. It is not just and proper that he who speaks ill of a bad man should be condemned on that account; for it is fitting and expedient that the crimes of bad men should be known. Dig. 47. 10. 17; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 125.

Eventus varios res nova semper habet. A new matter always produces various events. Coke, Litt. 379.

Every man is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his own voluntary acts. 1 Green. Evid. § 18; 9 East, 277; 9 Barnew. & C. 643; 3 Maule & S. 11, 17.

Ex antecedentibus et consequentibus fit optima interpretatio. The best interpretation is made from antecedents and consequents. 2 Parsons, Contr. 12, n. (r); Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 513; Coke, 2d Inst. 317; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 379; 1 Bulstr. 101; 15 East, 541.

Ex diuturnitate temporis, omnia præsumuntur solemniter esse acta. From length of time, all things are presumed to have been done in due form. Coke, Litt. 6; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 20; Best, Ev. § 43.

Ex dolo malo non oritur actio. A right of action cannot arise out of fraud. Broom, Max. 349; Cowp. 343; 2 C. B. 501, 512, 515; 5 Scott, N. R. 558; 10 Mass. 276.

Ex facto jus oritur. The law arises out of the fact. Coke, 2d Inst. 479; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 329; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 99.

Ex frequenti delicto augetur pœna. Punishment increases with increasing crime. Coke, 2d Inst. 479.

Ex maleficio non oritur contractus. A contract cannot arise out of an act radically wrong and illegal. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 660; 1 Term, 734; 3 id. 422; 1 H. Blackst. 324; 5 Ell. & B. 999, 1015.

Ex malis moribus bonæ leges natæ sunt. Good laws arise from evil manners. Coke, 2d Inst. 161.

Ex multitudine signorum, colligitur identitas vera. From the great number of signs true identity is ascertained. Bacon, Max. Reg. 25; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 569.

Ex nihilo nihil fit. From nothing nothing comes. 13 Wend. N. Y. 178, 221; 18 id. 257, 301.

Ex nudo pacto non oritur actio. No action arises on a contract without a consideration. Noy, Max. 24; 3 Burr. 1670; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 445; Chitty, Contr. 10th Am. ed. 25; 1 Story, Contr. § 525. See Nudum Pactum.

Ex pacto illicito non oritur actio. From an illicit contract no action arises. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 666; 7 Clark & F. Hou. L. 729.

Ex procedentibus et consequentibus optima fit interpretatio. The best interpretation is made from things preceding and following; i.e. the context. 1 Rolle, 375.

Ex totâ materiâ emergat resolutio. The construction or explanation should arise out of the whole subject-matter. Wingate, Max. 238.

Ex turpi causâ non oritur actio. No action arises out of an immoral consideration. Selwyn, Nisi P. 63; 2 Pet. 539.

Ex turpi contractu non oritur actio. No action arises on an immoral contract. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 4; 2 Kent Comm. 466; 1 Story, Contr. § 592; 22 N. Y. 272.

Ex uno disces omnes. From one thing you can discern all.

Exceptio ejus rei cujus petitur dissolutio nulla est. A plea of that matter the dissolution of which is the object of the action is of no effect. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 37.

Exceptio falsi omnium ultima. A false plea is the basest of all things.

Exceptio firmat regulam in casibus non exceptis. The exception affirms the rule in cases not excepted. Bacon, Aph. 17.

Exceptio firmat regulam in contrarium. The exception affirms the rule to be the other way. Bacon, Aph. 17.

Exceptio nulla est versus actionem quæ exceptionem perimit. There can be no plea against an action which entirely destroys the plea. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 106.

Exceptio probat regulam de rebus non exceptis. An exception proves the rule concerning things not excepted. 11 Coke, 41.

Exceptio quæ firmat legem, exponit legem. An exception which confirms the law, expounds the law. 2 Bulstr. 189.

Exceptio quoque regulam declarat. The exception also declares the rule. Bacon, Aph. 17.

Exceptio semper ultima ponenda est. An exception is always to be put last. 9 Coke, 53.

Excessus in jure reprobatur. Excessus in re qualibet jure reprobatur communi. Excess in law is reprehended. Excess in any thing is reprehended by common law. 1 Coke, 44.

Excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus, quod non operatur idem in civilibus. That excuses or extenuates a wrong in capital causes which does not have effect in civil suits. Bacon, Max. Reg. 7; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 291.

Executio est executio juris secundum judicium. An execution is the execution of the law according to the judgment. Coke, 3d Inst. 212.

Executio est finis et fructus legis. An execution is the end and the fruit of the law. Coke, Litt. 289.

Exilium est patriæ privatio, natalis soli mutatio, legum nativarum amissio. Exile is a privation of country, a change of natal soil, a loss of native laws. 7 Coke, 20.

Expedit reipublicæ ne suâ re quis male utatur. It is for the interest of the state that a man should not use his own property improperly. Inst. 1. 8. 2; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 328.

Experientia per varios actus legem facit. Magistra rerum experientia. Experience by various acts makes laws. Experience is the mistress of things. Coke, Litt. 60; Branch, Princ.

Expositio, quæ ex visceribus causæ nascitur, est aptissima et fortissima in lege. That exposition which springs from the vitals of a cause is the fittest and most powerful in law. 10 Coke, 24.

Expressa nocent, non expressa non nocent. Things expressed may be prejudicial; things not expressed are not. Calvinus, Lex.; Dig. 50. 17. 19. 5.

Expressa non prosunt quæ non expressa proderunt. Things expressed may be prejudicial which not expressed will profit. 4 Coke, 73.

Expressio eorum quæ tacitè insunt nihil operatur. The expression of those things which are tacitly implied operates nothing. 2 Parsons, Contr. 28; 4 Coke, 73; 5 id. 11; Hob. 170; 3 Atk. 138; 11 Mees. & W. 569; 7 Exch. 28.

Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. The expression of one thing is the exclusion of another. Coke, Litt. 210; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 596; 2 Parsons, Contr. 28; 3 Bingh. N. C. 85; 8 Scott, N. R. 1013, 1017; 5 Term, 21; 6 id. 320; 12 Mees. & W. 761; 15 id. 110; 16 id. 244; 2 Curt. C. C. 365; 6 Mass. 84; 11 Cush. Mass. 328.

Expressum facit cessare tacitum. That which is expressed puts an end to (renders ineffective) that which is implied. Smith, Contr. 2d ed. 390; 5 Bingh. N. C. 185; 6 Barnew. & C. 609; 2 Crompt. & M. 459; 2 Ell. & B. 856; 7 Mass. 106; 24 Me. 374; 6 N. H. 481; 1 Dougl. Mich. 330; 4 Wash. C. C. 185.

Extincto subjecto, tollitur adjunctum. When the substance is gone, the adjuncts disappear. 16 Johns. N. Y. 438, 492.

Extra legem positus est civiliter mortuus. One out of the pale of the law (an outlaw) is civilly dead. Coke, Litt. 130.

Extra territorium jus dicenti non paretur impune. One who exercises jurisdiction out of his territory cannot be obeyed with impunity. 10 Coke, 77; Dig. 2. 1. 20; Story, Confl. Laws, § 539.

Facta sunt potentiora verbis. Facts are more powerful than words.

Factum a judice quod ad ejus officium non spectat, non ratum est. An act of a judge which does not pertain to his office is of no force. 10 Coke, 76; Dig. 50. 17. 170; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 89.

Factum cuique suum, non adversario, nocere debet. A man's actions should injure himself, not his adversary. Dig. 50. 17. 155.

Factum infectum fieri nequit. What is done cannot be undone. 1 Kames, Eq. 96, 259.

Factum negantis nulla probatio. No proof is incumbent on him who denies a fact.

Factum non dicitur quod non perseverat. That is not said to be done which does not last. 5 Coke, 96; Sheppard, Touchst. Preston ed. 391.

Factum unius alteri nocere non debet. The deed of one should not hurt another. Coke, Litt. 152.

Facultas probationum non est angustanda. The right of offering proof is not to be narrowed. Coke, 4th Inst. 279.

Falsa demonstratio non nocet. A false description does not vitiate. 6 Term, 676. See 2 Story, Rep. 291; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 301; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 562; 2 Parsons, Contr. 62, n., 69, n., 72, n., 76, n.; 4 C. B. 328; 11 id. 208; 14 id. 122.

Falsâ demonstratione legatum non perimi. A legacy is not destroyed by an incorrect description. 3 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 144, 149.

Falsa orthographia, sive falsa grammatica, non vitiat concessionem. False spelling or false grammar does not vitiate a grant. 9 Coke, 48; Sheppard, Touchst. 55.

Falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus. False in one thing, false in every thing. 1 Sumn. C. C. 356; 7 Wheat. 338; 3 Wisc. 615; 2 Jones, No. C. 257.

Fama, fides, et oculus non patiuntur ludum. Fame, plighted faith, and eyesight do not endure deceit. 3 Bulstr. 226.

Fatetur facinus qui judicium fugit. He who flees judgment confesses his guilt. Coke, 3d Inst. 14; 5 Coke, 109 b. But see Best, Pres. § 248.

Fatuus præsumitur qui in proprio nomine errat. A man is presumed to be simple who makes a mistake in his own name. Code, 6. 24. 14; 5 Johns. Ch. 148, 161.

Favorabilia in lege sunt fiscus, dos, vita, libertas. The treasury, dower, life, and liberty, are things favored in law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 94.

Favorabiliores rei potius quam actores habentur. Defendants are rather to be favored than plaintiffs.

Dig. 50. 17. 125. See 8 Wheat. 195, 196; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 639.

Favorabiliores sunt executiones aliis processibus quibuscunque. Executions are preferred to all other processes whatever. Coke, Litt. 287.

Favores ampliandi sunt; odia restringenda. Favorable inclinations are to be enlarged; animosities restrained. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 186.

Felix qui potuit rerum cognoscere causas. Happy is he who has been able to understand the causes of things. Coke, Litt. 231.

Felonia, ex vi termini, significat quodlibet capitale crimen felleo animo perpetratum. Felony, by force of the term, signifies some capital crime perpetrated with a malignant mind. Coke, Litt. 391.

Felonia implicatur in quolibet proditione. Felony is implied in every treason. Coke, 3d Inst. 15.

Feodum est quod quis tenet ex quâcunque causâ, sive sit tenementum sive reddittus. A fee is that which any one holds from whatever cause, whether tenement or rent. Coke, Litt. 1.

Festinatio justitiæ est noverca infortunii. The hurrying of justice is the stepmother of misfortune. Hob. 97.

Fiat justitia ruat cœlum. Let justice be done, though the heavens should fall. Branch, Princ. 161.

Fiat prout fieri consuerit, nil temere novandum. Let it be done as formerly, let no innovation be made rashly. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 116; Branch, Princ.

Fictio cedit veritati. Fictio juris non est, ubi veritas. Fiction yields to truth. Where truth is, fiction of law does not exist.

Fictio est contra veritatem, sed pro veritate habetur. Fiction is against the truth, but it is to be esteemed truth.

Fictio legis iniquè operatur alieni damnum vel injuriam. Fiction of law is wrongful if it works loss or injury to any one. 2 Coke, 35; 3 id. 36; Gill, Md. 223; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 122.

Fictio legis neminem lædit. A fiction of law injures no one. 2 Rolle, 502; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. 43; 17 Johns. N. Y. 348.

Fidelitas. De nullo tenemento, quod tenetur ad terminum fit homagii; fit tamen inde fidelitatis sacramentum. Fealty. For no tenement which is held for a term is there the oath of homage, but there is the oath of fealty. Coke, Litt. 67 b.

Fides servanda. Good faith must be observed. 1 Metc. Mass. 551; 3 Barb. N. Y. 323, 330; 23 id. 521, 524.

Fides servanda est; simplicitas juris gentium prævaleat. Good faith is to be preserved; the simplicity of the law of nations should prevail. Story, Bills, § 15.

Fieri non debet, sed factum valet. It ought not to be done, but done it is valid. 5 Coke, 39; 1 Strange, 526; 19 Johns. N. Y. 84, 92; 12 id. 11, 376.

Filiatio non potest probari. Filiation cannot be proved. Coke, Litt. 126 a. But see 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101.

Filius est nomen naturæ, sed hæres nomen juris. Son is a name of nature, but heir a name of law. 1 Sid. 193; 1 Powell, Dev. 311.

Filius in utero matris est pars viscerum matris. A son in the mother's womb is part of the mother's vitals. 7 Coke, 8.

Finis finem litibus imponit. A fine puts an end to litigation. Coke, 3d Inst. 78.

Finis rei attendendus est. The end of a thing is to be attended to. Coke, 3d Inst. 51.

Finis unius diei est principium alterius. The end of one day is the beginning of another. 2 Bulstr. 305.

Firmior et potentior est operatio legis quam dispositio hominis. The operation of law is firmer and more powerful than the will of man. Coke, Litt. 102.

Flumina et portus publica sunt, ideoque jus piscandi omnibus commune est. Rivers and ports are public; therefore the right of fishing there is common to all. Dav. 55; Branch, Princ.

Fœminæ ab omnibus officiis civilibus vel publicis remotæ sunt. Women are excluded from all civil and public charges or offices. Dig. 50. 17. 2; 1 Exch. 645; 6 Mees. & W. Exch. 216.

Fœminæ non sunt capaces de publicis officiis. Women are not admissible to public offices. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 237. But a woman may be elected to the office of sexton, Olive vs. Ingram, 7 Mod. 263; Str. 1114, s. c., or governor of a work-house, and act by deputy, Anon., 2 Ld. Raym. 1014, or an overseer. 2 Term, 395. See Women.

Forma legalis forma essentialis. Legal form is essential form. 10 Coke, 100; 9 C. B. 493; 2 Hopk. 319.

Forma non observata, infertur adnullatio actus. When form is not observed, a nullity of the act is inferred. 12 Coke, 7.

Forstellarius est pauperum depressor, et totius communitatis et patriæ publicus inimicus. A forestaller is an oppressor of the poor, and a public enemy to the whole community and the country. Coke, 3d Inst. 196.

Fortior est custodia legis quam hominis. The custody of the law is stronger than that of man. 2 Rolle, 325.

Fortior et potentior est dispositio legis quam hominis. The disposition of the law is stronger and more powerful than that of man. Coke, Litt. 234; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 622; 10 Q. B. 944; 18 id. 87; 10 C. B. 561; 3 Hou. L. Cas. 507; 13 Mees. & W. Exch. 285, 306; 8 Johns. N. Y. 401.

Fractionem diei non recipit lex. The law does not regard a fraction of a day. Lofft, 572. But see Day.

Frater fratri uterino non succedet in hæreditate paternâ. A brother shall not succeed an uterine brother in the paternal inheritance. Fort. de Laud. Leg. Ang. by Amos, p. 15; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. This maxim is now superseded in England by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, s. 9. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 471; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 232.

Fraus est celare fraudem. It is a fraud to conceal a fraud. 1 Vern. 270.

Fraus est odiosa et non præsumenda. Fraud is odious and not to be presumed. Croke Car. 550.

Fraus et dolus nemini patrocinari debent. Fraud and deceit should excuse no man. 3 Coke, 78.

Fraus et jus nunquam cohabitant. Fraud and justice never dwell together. Wingate, Max. 680.

Fraus latet in generalibus. Fraud lies hid in general expressions.

Fraus meretur fraudem. Fraud deserves fraud. Plowd. 100; Branch, Princ. This is very poor law.

Freight is the mother of wages. 2 Show. 283; 3 Kent, Comm. 196; 1 Hagg. 227; Smith, Merc. Law, 548; Cauders, Mar. Law, 339–343, 391, 398; Hilt. N. Y. 1, 17; 5 Johns. N. Y. 154; 11 id. 279; 12 id. 324.

Frequentia actûs multum operatur. The frequency of an act effects much. 4 Coke, 78; Wingate, Max. 192.

Fructus augeat hæreditatem. Fruits enhance an inheritance.

Fructus pendentes pars fundi videntur. Hanging fruits make part of the land. Dig. 6. 1. 44; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1578. See Larceny.

Fructus percepti villæ non esse constat. Gathered fruits do not make a part of the farm. Dig. 19. 1. 17. 1; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1578.

Frumenta quæ sata sunt solo cedere intelliguntur. Grain which is sown is understood to form a part of the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 32.

Frustra agit qui judicium prosequi nequit cum effectu. He in vain sues, who cannot prosecute his judgment with effect. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 37, § 9.

Frustrà est potentia quæ nunquam venit in actum. The power which never comes to be exercised is vain. 2 Coke, 51.

Frustrà expectatur eventus cujus effectus nullus sequitur. An event is vainly expected from which no effect follows.

Frustrà feruntur leges nisi subditis et obedientibus. Laws are made to no purpose unless for those who are subject and obedient. 7 Coke, 13.

Frustrà fit per plura, quod fieri potest per pauciora. That is done vainly by many things, which might be accomplished by fewer. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 68; Wingate, Max. 177.

Frustrà legis auxilium quærit qui in legem committit. Vainly does he who offends against the law seek the help of the law. 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 386; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 255.

Frustrà petis quod statim alteri reddere cogeris. Vainly you ask that which you will immediately be compelled to restore to another. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 256; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 310.

Frustrà probatur quod probatum non relevat. It is vain to prove that which if proved would not aid the matter in question. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 255.

Furiosi nulla voluntas est. A madman has no will. Dig. 50. 17. 5; id. 1. 18. 13. 1; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 282.

Furiosus absentis loco est. A madman is considered as absent. Dig. 50. 17. 24. 1.

Furiosus nullum negotium contrahere (gerere) potest (quia non intelligit quod agit). A lunatic cannot make a contract. Dig. 50. 17. 5; 1 Story, Contr. 4th ed. p. 76.

Furiosus solo furore punitur. A madman is punished by his madness alone. Coke, Litt. 247; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 14; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 24, 25.

Furiosus stipulari non potest nec aliquod negotium agere, qui non intelligit quid agit. An insane person who knows not what he does cannot make a bargain, nor transact any business. 4 Coke, 126.

Furor contrahi matrimonium non sinit, quia consensu opus est. Insanity prevents marriage from being contracted, because consent is needed. 1 Ves. & B. Ch. 140; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 439; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 343, 345.

Furtum non est ubi initium habet detentionis per dominum rei. It is not theft where the commencement of the detention arises through the owner of the thing. Coke, 3d Inst. 107.

Generale dictum generaliter est interpretandum. A general expression is to be construed generally. 8 Coke, 116; 1 Ed. Ch. 96.

Generale nihil certum implicat. A general expression implies nothing certain. 2 Coke, 34; Wingate, Max. 164.

Generale tantum valet in generalibus, quantum singulare in singulis. What is general prevails, or is worth as much, among things general, as what is particular among things particular. 11 Coke, 59.

Generalia præcedunt, specialia sequuntur. Things general precede, things special follow. Reg. Brev.; Branch, Princ.

Generalia specialibus non derogant. Things general do not derogate from things special. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 120.

Generalia sunt præponenda singularibus. General things are to be put before particular things.

Generalia verba sunt generaliter intelligenda. General words are understood in a general sense. Coke, 3d Inst. 76; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 577.

Generalibus specialia derogant. Things special take from things general. Halkers, Max. 51.

Generalis clausula non porrigitur ad ea quæ antea specialiter sunt comprehensa. A general clause does not extend to those things which are previously provided for specially. 8 Coke, 154.

Generalis regula generaliter est intelligenda. A general rule is to be understood generally. 6 Coke, 65.

Glossa viperina est quæ corrodit viscera textûs. That is a viperine gloss which eats out the vitals of the text. 10 Coke, 70; 2 Bulstr. 79.

Grammatica falsa non vitiat chartam. False grammar does not vitiate a deed. 9 Coke, 48.

Gravius est divinam quam temporalem lædere majestatem. It is more serious to hurt divine than temporal majesty. 11 Coke, 29.

Habemus optimum testem confitentem reum. We have the best witness, a confessing defendant. Foster, Crim. Law, 243. See 2 Hagg. 315; 1 Phillips, Ev. 397.

Hæredem Deus facit, non homo. God, and not man, makes the heir. Bracton, 62 b.

Hæredem est nomen collectivum. Heir is a collective name.

Hæredipetæ suo propinquo vel extraneo periculose sane custodi nullus committatur. To the next heir, whether a relation or a stranger, certainly a dangerous guardian, let no one be committed. Coke, Litt. 88 b.

Hæreditas est successio in universum jus quod defunctus habuerat. Inheritance is the succession to every right which was possessed by the late possessor. Coke, Litt. 237.

Hæreditas nihil aliud est, quàm successio in universum jus, quod defunctus habuerit. The right of inheritance is nothing else than the faculty of succeeding to all the rights of the deceased. Dig. 50. 17. 62.

Hæreditas nunquam ascendit. The inheritance never ascends. Glanville, l. 7, c. 1; Broom, Max. 2d Lond. ed. 469; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 212, n.; 3 Greenleaf, Cruise, Real Prop. 331; 1 Stephen, Comm. 378. Abrogated by stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 106, § 6.

Hæredum appellatione veniunt hæredes hæredum in infinitum. By the title of heirs, come the heirs of heirs to infinity. Coke, Litt. 9.

Hæres est alter ipse, et filius est pars patris. An heir is another self, and a son is a part of the father.

Hæres est aut jure proprietatis aut jure representationis. An heir is either by right of property or right of representation. 3 Coke, 40.

Hæres est eadem persona cum antecessore. The heir is the same person with the ancestor. Coke, Litt. 22.

Hæres est nomen juris, filius est nomen naturæ. Heir is a term of law; son, one of nature.

Hæres est pars antecessoris. The heir is a part of the ancestor. Coke, Litt. 22 b; 3 Hill, N. Y. 165, 167.

Hæres hæredis mei est meus hæres. The heir of my heir is my heir. Wharton, Law Dict.

Hæres legitimus est quem nuptiæ demonstrant. He is the lawful heir whom the marriage demonstrates. Mirror of Just. 70; Fleta, l. 6, c. 1; Dig. 2. 4. 5; Coke, Litt. 7 b; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 457. As to the application of the principle when the marriage is subsequent to the birth of the child, see 2 Clark & F. Hou. L. 571; 6 Bingh. N. C. 385; 5 Wheat. 226, 262, n.

Hæres minor uno et vigenti annis non respondebit, nisi in casu dotis. An heir minor, under twenty-one years of age, is not answerable, except in the matter of dower. F. Moore, 348.

He who has committed iniquity shall not have equity. Francis, 2d Max.

He who will have equity done to him must do equity to the same person. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3723.

Hoc servabitur quod initio convenit. This shall be preserved which is useful in the beginning. Dig 50. 17. 23; Bracton, 73 b.

Home ne sera puny pur suer des briefes en court le roy, soit il a droit ou a tort. A man shall not be punished for suing out writs in the king's court, whether he be right or wrong. Coke, 2d Inst. 228.

Hominum causâ jus constitutum est. Law is established for the benefit of man.

Homo potest esse habilis et inhabilis diversis temporibus. A man may be capable and incapable at divers times. 5 Coke, 98.

Homo vocabulum est naturæ; persona juris civilis. Man (homo) is a term of nature; person (persona), of the civil law. Calvinus, Lex.

Hora non est multum de substantiâ negotii, licet in appello de eâ aliquando fiat mentio. The hour is not of much consequence as to the substance of business, although in appeal it is sometimes mentioned. 1 Bulstr. 82.

Hostes sunt qui nobis vel quibus nos bellum decernimus; cæteri traditores vel prædones sunt. Enemies are those upon whom we declare war, or who declare it against us; all others are traitors or pirates. 7 Coke, 24; Dig. 50. 16. 118; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 257.

Id certum est quod certum reddi potest. That is certain which may be rendered certain. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 929; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 143; 4 Kent, Comm. 462; 4 Pick. Mass. 179; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 556.

Id perfectum est quod ex omnibus suis partibus constat. That is perfect which is complete in all its parts. 9 Coke, 9.

Id possumus quod de jure possumus. We are able to do that which we can do lawfully. Lane, 116.

Id quod est magis remotum, non trahit ad se quod est magis junctum, sed è contrario in omni casu. That which is more remote does not draw to itself that which is nearer, but the contrary in every case. Coke, Litt. 164.

Id quod nostrum est, sine facto nostro, ad alium transferri non potest. What belongs to us cannot be transferred to another without our consent. Dig. 50. 17. 11. But this must be understood with this qualification, that the government may take property for public use, paying the owner its value. The title to property may also be acquired, without the consent of the owner, by a judgment of a competent tribunal.

Idem agens et patiens esse non potest. To be at once the person acting and the person acted upon is impossible. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 40.

Idem est facere, et nolle prohibere cum possis. It is the same thing to do a thing as not to prohibit it when in your power. 3 Coke, Inst. 158.

Idem est nihil dicere et insufficienter dicere. It is the same thing to say nothing and not to say sufficiently. Coke, 2d Inst. 178.

Idem est non probari et non esse; non deficit jus, sed probatio. What does not appear, and what is not, are the same; it is not the defect of the law, but the want of proof.

Idem est scire aut scire debet aut potuisse. To be able to know is the same as to know. This maxim is applied to the duty of every one to know the law.

Idem non esse et non apparet. It is the same thing not to exist and not to appear. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 207.

Idem semper antecedenti proximo refertur. Idem always relates to the next antecedent. Coke, Litt. 385.

Identitas vera colligitur ex multitudine signorum. True identity is collected from a number of signs. Bacon, Reg. 29.

Ignorantia eorum quæ quis scire tenetur non excusat. Ignorance of those things which every one is bound to know excuses not. Hale, Pl. Cr. 42. See Tindal, C. J., 10 Clark & F. Hou. L. 210; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 245; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 27.

Ignorantia excusatur, non juris sed facti. Ignorance of fact may excuse, but not ignorance of law. See IGNORANCE.

Ignorantia facti excusat, ignorantia juris non excusat. Ignorance of facts excuses, ignorance of law does not excuse. 1 Coke, 177; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3828; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 231; 1 Fonblanque, Eq. 5th ed. 119, n. See IGNORANCE.

Ignorantia judicis est calamitas innocentis. The ignorance of the judge is the misfortune of the innocent. Coke, 2d Inst. 591.

Ignorantia juris non excusat. Ignorance of the law is no excuse. 8 Wend. N. Y. 267, 284; 18 id. 586, 588; 6 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 189, 195; 1 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 467, 472.

Ignorantia juris quod quisque scire tenetur, neminem excusat. Ignorance of law which every one is bound to know, excuses no one. 2 Coke, 3 b; 1 Plowd. 343; per Ld. Campbell, 9 Clark & F. 324; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 232; 7 Carr. & P. 456; 2 Kent, Comm. 491.

Ignorantia legis neminem excusat. Ignorance of law excuses no one. See IGNORANCE; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3828; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 111.

Ignoratis terminis, ignoratur et ars. Terms being unknown, the art also is unknown. Coke, Litt. 2.

Ignoscitur ei qui sanguinem suum qualiter redemptum voluit. The law holds him excused who chose that his blood should be redeemed on any terms. Dig. 48. 21. 1; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 131.

Illud quod alias licitum non est, necessitas facit licitum, et necessitas inducit privilegium quod jure privatur. That which is not otherwise lawful necessity makes lawful, and necessity makes a privilege which supersedes the law. 10 Coke, 61.

Illud quod alteri unitur extinguitur, neque amplius per se vacare licet. That which is united to another is extinguished, nor can it be any more independent. Godolph. 169.

Immobilia situm sequuntur. Immovables follow (the law of) their locality. 2 Kent, Comm. 67.

Imperitia culpæ ænumeratur. Ignorance, or want of skill, is considered a fault, i.e. a negligence, for which one who professes skill is responsible. Dig. 50. 17. 132; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1004; 2 Kent, Comm. 588; 4 Ark. 523.

Imperitia est maxima mechaneorum pœna. Lack of skill is the greatest punishment of artisans. 11 Coke, 54 a.

Impersonalitas non concludit nec ligat. Impersonality neither concludes nor binds. Coke, Litt. 352.

Impius et crudelis judicandus est qui libertati non favet. He is to be judged impious and cruel who does not favor liberty. Coke, Litt. 124.

Impossibilium nulla obligatio est. There is no obligation to perform impossible things. Dig. 50. 18. 185; 1 Pothier, Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, s. 4, § 3; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 6th ed. 763; Broom, Max. 3d Lond ed. 228.

Impotentia excusat legem. Impossibility is an excuse in the law. Coke, Litt. 29; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 223.

Impunitas continuum affectum tribuit delinquenti. Impunity offers a continual bait to a delinquent. 4 Coke, 45.

Impunitas semper ad deteriora invitat. Impunity always invites to greater crimes. 5 Coke, 109.

In ædificiis lapis male positus non est removendus. In buildings a stone badly placed is not to be removed. 11 Coke, 69.

In æquali jure melior est conditio possidentis. When the parties have equal rights, the condition of the possessor is the better. Mitford, Eq. Plead. 215; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 285; 1 Maddock, Chanc.

Pract. 170; Dig. 50. 17. 128; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 634; Plowd. 296.

In alternativis electio est debitoris. In alternatives, the debtor has the election.

In ambiguâ voce legis ea potiùs accipienda est significatio, quæ vitio caret; præsertim cùm etiam voluntas legis ex hoc colligi possit. When obscurities, ambiguities, or faults of expression render the meaning of an enactment doubtful, that interpretation shall be preferred which is most consonant to equity, especially where it is in conformity with the general design of the legislature. Dig. 1. 3. 19; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 513; Bacon, Max. Reg. 3; Coke, 2d Inst. 173.

In ambiguis orationibus maximè sententia spectanda est ejus qui eas protulisset. When there are ambiguous expressions, the intention of him who uses them is especially to be regarded. This maxim of Roman law was confined to wills. Dig. 50. 17. 96; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 506.

In atrocioribus delictis punitur affectus licet non sequatur effectus. In more atrocious crimes, the intent is punished though the effect does not follow. 2 Rolle, 89.

In casu extremæ necessitatis omnia sunt communia. In cases of extreme necessity, every thing is in common. Hale, Pl. Cr. 54; Broom, Max. 1.

In commodato hæc pactio, ne dolus præstetur, rata non est. If in a contract for a loan there is inserted a clause that fraud should not be accounted of, such clause is void. Dig. 13. 7. 17.

In conjunctivis oportet utramque partem esse veram. In conjunctives each part must be true. Wingate, Max. 13.

In consimili casu consimile debet esse remedium. In similar cases, the remedy should be similar. Hardr. 65.

In consuetudinibus non diuturnitas temporis sed soliditas rationis est consideranda. In customs, not the length of time but the strength of the reason should be considered. Coke, Litt. 141.

In contractibus, benigna; in testamentis, benignior; in restitutionibus, benignissima interpretatio facienda est. In contracts, the interpretation or construction should be liberal; in wills, more liberal; in restitutions, most liberal. Coke, Litt. 112 a.

In contractibus tacitè insunt quæ sunt moris et consuetudinis. In contracts, those things which are of custom and usage are tacitly implied. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 759; 3 Bingh. N. C. 814, 818; Story, Bills, § 143; 3 Kent, Comm. 260.

In contrahenda venditione, ambiguum pactum contra venditorem interpretandum est. In negotiating a sale, an ambiguous agreement is to be interpreted against the seller. Dig. 50. 17. 172; 18. 1. 21.

In conventionibus contrahentium voluntatem potius quam verba spectari placuit. In agreements, the rule is to regard the intention of the contracting parties rather than their words. Dig. 50. 16. 219; 2 Kent, Comm. 555; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 491; 17 Johns. N. Y. 150.

In criminalibus, probationes debent esse luce clariores. In criminal cases, the proofs ought to be clearer than the light. Coke, 3d. Inst. 210.

In criminalibus sufficit generalis malitia intentionis cum facto paris gradûs. In criminal cases, a general malice of intention is sufficient, with an act of equal or corresponding degree. Bacon, Max. Reg. 15; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 291.

In criminalibus voluntas reputabitur pro facto. In criminal acts, the will will be taken for the deed. Coke, 3d Inst. 106.

In disjunctivis sufficit alteram partem esse veram. In disjunctives, it is sufficient if either part be true. Wingate, Max. 13; Coke, Litt. 225 a; 10 Coke, 50; Dig. 50. 17. 110.

In dubiis benigniora præferenda sunt. In doubtful matters, the more favorable are to be preferred. Dig. 50. 17. 56: 2 Kent, Comm. 557.

In dubiis magis dignum est accipiendum. In doubtful cases, the more worthy is to be taken. Branch, Princ.

In dubiis non præsumitur pro testamento. In doubtful cases, there is no presumption in favor of the will. Croke Car. 51.

In dubio hæc legis constructio quam verba ostendunt. In a doubtful case, that is the construction of the law which the words indicate.

In dubio pars melior est sequenda. In doubt, the gentler course is to be followed.

In dubio sequendum quod tutius est. In doubt, the safer course is to be adopted.

In eo quod plus sit semper inest et minus. The less is always included in the greater. Dig. 50. 17. 110.

In expositione instrumentorum, mala grammatica, quod fieri potest, vitanda est. In the construction of instruments, bad grammar is to be avoided as much as possible. 6 Coke, 39; 2 Parsons, Contr. 26.

In facto quod se habet ad bonum et malum magis de bono quam de malo lex intendit. In a deed which may be considered good or bad, the law looks more to the good than to the bad. Coke, Litt. 78.

In favorabilibus magis attenditur quod prodest quam quod nocet. In things favored, what does good is more regarded than what does harm. Bacon, Max. Reg. 12.

In favorem vitæ, libertatis, et innocentiæ omnia præsumuntur. In favor of life, liberty, and innocence, all things are to be presumed. Lofft, 125.

In fictione juris semper æquitas existit. A legal fiction is always consistent with equity. 11 Coke, 51; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 120, 123; 17 Johns. N. Y. 348; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 43–283.

In generalibus versatur error. Error dwells in general expressions. 3 Sumn. C. C. 290.

In genere quicunque aliquid dicit, sive actor sive reus, necesse est ut probat. In general, whoever says any thing, whether plaintiff or defendant, must prove it. Best, Ev. 294, § 252.

In hæredes non solent transire actiones quæ pœnales ex maleficio sunt. Penal actions arising from any thing of a criminal nature do not pass to heirs. Coke, 2d Inst. 442.

In iis enim quæ sunt favorabilia animæ, quamvis sunt damnosa rebus, fiat aliquando extentio statuti. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to property, an extension of the statute should be sometimes made. 10 Coke, 101.

In his quæ de jure communi omnibus conceduntur, consuetudo alicujus patriæ vel loci non est alleganda. In those things which by common right are conceded to all, the custom of a particular country or place is not to be alleged. 11 Coke, 85.

In judiciis minori ætati succurritur. In judicial proceedings, infancy is aided or favored. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 46.

In judicio non creditur nisi juratis. In law, none is credited unless he is sworn. All the facts must, when established by witnesses, be under oath or affirmation. Croke Car. 64.

In jure non remota causâ, sed proxima, spectatur. In law, the proximate and not the remote cause is to be looked to. Bacon, Max. Reg. 1; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 202. See 2 Parsons, Contr. 455.

In majore summâ continetur minor. In the greater sum is contained the less. 5 Coke, 115.

In maleficiis voluntas spectatur non exitus. In offences, the intention is regarded, not the event. Dig. 48. 8. 14; Bacon, Max. Reg. 7; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 292.

In maleficio ratihabitio mandato comparetur. In a tort, ratification is equivalent to a command. Dig. 50. 17. 152. 2.

In maximâ potentiâ minima licentia. In the greatest power there is the least liberty. Hob. 159.

In mercibus illicitis non sit commercium. No commerce should be in illicit goods. 3 Kent, Comm. 262, n.

In obscura voluntate manumittentis favendum est libertati. Where the expression of the will of one who seeks to manumit a slave is ambiguous, liberty is to be favored. Dig. 50. 17. 179.

In obscuris inspici solere quod verisimilius est, aut quod plerumque fieri solet. Where there is obscurity, we usually regard what is probable and what is generally done. Dig. 50. 17. 114.

In obscuris quod minimum est sequimur. In obscure cases, we follow that which is least so. Dig. 50. 17. 9.

In odium spoliatoris omnia præsumuntur. All things are presumed against a wrong-doer. 1 Vern. Ch. 19; 1 P. Will. 731; 1 Chanc. Cas. 292.

In omni actione ubi duæ concurrunt districtiones, videlicit in rem et in personam, illa districtio tenenda est quæ magis timetur et magis ligat. In every action where two distresses concur, as those in rem and in personam, that is to be chosen which is most dreaded, and which binds most firmly. Bracton, 372; Fleta, l. 6, c. 14, § 28.

In omni re nascitur res quæ ipsam rem exterminat. In every thing, the thing is born which destroys the thing itself. Coke, 2d Inst. 15.

In omnibus contractibus, sive nominatis sive innominatis, permutatio continetur. In every contract, whether nominate or innominate, there is implied an exchange, i.e. a consideration.

In omnibus obligationibus, in quibus dies non ponitur, præsenti die debetur. In all obligations, when no time is fixed for the payment, the thing is due immediately. Dig. 50. 17. 14.

In omnibus pœnalibus judiciis, et ætati et imprudentiæ succurritur. In all trials for penal offences, allowance is made for youth and lack of discretion. Dig. 50. 17. 108; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 282.

In omnibus quidem maximè tamen in jure, æquitas spectanda sit. In all affairs indeed, but principally in those which concern the administration of justice, equity should be regarded. Dig. 50. 17. 90.

In pari causa possessor potior haberi debet. When two parties have equal rights, the advantage is always in favor of the possessor. Dig. 50. 17. 128.

In pari delicto melior est conditio possidentis. When the parties are equally in the wrong, the condition of the possessor is better. 11 Wheat. 258; 3 Cranch, 244; Cowp. 341; Broom, Max. 325; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3724.

In pari delicto potior est conditio defendentis (et possidentis). Where both parties are equally in fault, the condition of the defendant is preferable. 11 Mass. 376; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 265; 1 Story, Contr. 4th ed. 591, 592.

In personam actio est, qua cum eo agimus qui obligatus est nobis ad faciendum aliquid vel dandum. The action in personam is that by which we sue him who is under obligation to us to do something or give something. Dig. 44. 7. 25; Bracton, 101 b.

In pœnalibus causis benignius interpretandum est. In penal cases, the more favorable interpretation is to be made. Dig. 50. 17. 155. 2; Plowd. 86 b; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 365.

In præparatoriis ad judicium favetur actori. In things preparatory before trial, the plaintiff is favored. Coke, 2d Inst. 57.

In præsentia majoris potestatis, minor potestas cessat. In the presence of the superior power, the minor power ceases. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 214; Cas. temp. Hardw. 28; 13 How. 142; 13 Q. B. 740.

In pretio emptionis et venditionis naturaliter licet contrahentibus se circumvenire. In the price of buying and selling, it is naturally allowed to the contracting parties to overreach each other. 1 Story, Contr. 4th ed. 606.

In propria causâ nemo judex. No one can be judge in his own cause. 12 Coke, 13.

In quo quis delinquit, in eo de jure est puniendus. In whatever thing one offends, in that he is rightfully to be punished. Coke, Litt. 233 b.

In re communi neminem dominorum jure facere quicquam, invito altero, posse. One co-proprietor can exercise no authority over the common property against the will of the other. Dig. 10. 3. 28.

In re dubia benigniorem interpretationem sequi, non minus justius est, quam tutius. In a doubtful case, to follow the milder interpretation is not less the more just than it is the safer course. Dig. 50. 17. 192. 2; 28. 4. 3.

In re dubiâ magis inficiato quam affirmatio intelligenda. In a doubtful matter, the negative is to be understood rather than the affirmative. Godb. 37.

In re lupanari, testes lupanares admittentur. In a matter concerning a brothel, prostitutes are admitted as witnesses. 6 Barb. N. Y. 320, 324.

In re pari, potiorem causam esse prohibentis constat. Where a thing is owned in common, it is agreed that the cause of him prohibiting (its use) is the stronger. Dig. 10. 3. 28; 3 Kent, Comm. 45; Pothier, Traité du Con. de Soc. n. 90; 16 Johns. N. Y. 438, 491.

In re propria iniquum admodum est alicui licentiam tribuere sententiæ. It is extremely unjust that any one should be judge in his own cause.

In rebus manifestis errat qui auctoritates legum allegat; quia perspicua vera non sunt probanda. He errs who alleges the authorities of law in things manifest; because obvious truths need not be proved. 5 Coke, 67.

In rem actio est per quam rem nostram quæ ab alio possidetur petimus, et semper adversus eum est qui rem possidet. The action in rem is that by which we seek our property which is possessed by another, and is always against him who possesses the property. Dig. 44. 7. 25; Bracton, 102.

In republicâ maximè conservanda sunt jura belli. In the state, the laws of war are to be greatly preserved. Coke, 2d Inst. 58.

In restitutionem, non in pœnam, hæres succedit. The heir succeeds to the restitution, not the penalty. Coke, 2d Inst. 198.

In restitutionibus benignissima interpretatio facienda est. The most favorable construction is to be made in restitutions. Coke, Litt. 112.

In satisfactionibus non permittitur amplius fieri quam semel factum est. In payments, more must not be received than has been received once for all. 9 Coke, 53.

In stipulationibus cùm quæritur quid actum sit verba contra stipulatorem interpretanda sunt. In contracts, when the question is what was agreed upon, the terms are to be interpreted against the party offering them. Dig. 45. 1. 38. 18. Chancellor Kent remarks that the true principle appears to be "to give the contract the sense in which the person making the promise believes the other party to have accepted it, if he in fact did so understand and accept it." 2 Kent, Comm. 7th ed. 721; 2 Day, Conn. 281; 1 Duer, Ins. 159, 160; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 534; Dig. 45. 1. 38. § 18.

In stipulationibus id tempus spectatur quo contrahimus. In agreements, reference is had to the time at which they were made. Dig. 50. 17. 144. 1.

In suo quisque negotio habetior est quam in alieno. Every one is more dull in his own business than in that of another. Coke, Litt. 377.

In testamentis plenius testatoris intentionem scrutamur. In testaments, we should seek diligently the will of the testator. But, says Dodderidge, C. J., "this is to be observed with these two limitations: 1st, his intent ought to be agreeable to the rules of the law; 2d, his intent ought to be collected out of the words of the will." 3 Bulstr. 103; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 494.

In testamentis plenius voluntates testantium inter-pretantur. In testaments, the will of the testator should be liberally construed. That is to say, a will shall receive a more liberal construction than its strict meaning, if alone considered, would permit. Dig. 50. 17. 12; Cujac. ad loc. cited 3 Pothier, Pand. 46; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 507.

In toto et pars continetur. A part is included in the whole. Dig. 50. 17. 113.

In traditionibus scriptorum chartarum non quod dictum est, sed quod gestum factum est, inspicitur. In the delivery of writings (deeds), not what is said but what is done is to be considered. 9 Coke, 137.

In veram quantitatam fidejussor teneatur, nisi pro certâ quantitate accessit. Let the surety be holden for the true quantity unless he agreed for a certain quantity. 17 Mass. 597.

In verbis non verba sed res et ratio quærenda est. In words, not the words, but the thing and the meaning is to be inquired after. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 132.

In vocibus videndum non à quo sed ad quid sumatur. In discourses, it is to be seen not from what, but to what, it is advanced. Ellesmere, Postn. 62.

Incendium ære alieno non exuit debitorum. A fire does not release a debtor from his debt. Code, 4. 2. 11.

Incerta pro nullius habentur. Things uncertain are held for nothing. Dav. 33.

Incerta quantitas vitiat actum. An uncertain quantity vitiates the act. 1 Rolle, 465.

Incivile est, nisi tota lege prospecta, una aliqua particula ejus proposita, judicare, vel respondere. It is improper, unless the whole law has been examined, to give judgment or advice upon a view of a single clause of it. Dig. 1. 3. 24. See Hob. 171 a.

Incivile est nisi tota sententia inspectâ, de aliqua parte judicare. It is improper to pass an opinion on any part of a sentence without examining the whole. Hob. 171.

Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius. The inclusion of one is the exclusion of another. 11 Coke, 58.

Incolas domicilium facit. Residence creates domicile. Arnold, United Ins. Co., 1 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 363, 366. See DOMICILE.

Incommodum non solvit argumentum. An inconvenience does not solve an argument.

Incorporalia bello non adquiruntur. Things incorporeal are not acquired by war. 6 Maule & S. 104.

Inde datæ leges ne fortior omnia posset. Laws were made lest the stronger should have unlimited power. Dav. 36.

Indefinitum æquipollet universali. The undefined is equivalent to the whole. 1 Ventr. 368.

Indefinitum supplet locum universalis. The undefined supplies the place of the whole. 4 Coke, 77.

Independenter se habet assecuratio a viaggio navis. The voyage insured is an independent or distinct thing from the voyage of the ship. 3 Kent, Comm. 318, n.

Index animi sermo. Speech is the index of the mind.

Inesse potest donationi, modus, conditio sive causa: ut modus est; si conditio; quia causa. In a gift there may be manner, condition, and cause: as (ut), introduces a manner; if (si), a condition; because (quia), a cause. Dy. 138.

Infans non multum a furioso distat. An infant does not differ much from a lunatic. Bracton, l. 3, c. 2, § 8; Dig. 50. 17. 5. 40; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 223, 224, 242.

Infinitum in jure reprobatur. That which is infinite or endless is reprehensible in law. 9 Coke, 45.

Iniquissima pax est anteponenda justissimo bello. Tho most unjust peace is to be preferred to the justest war. 18 Wend. N. Y. 257, 305.

Iniquum est alios permittere, alios inhibere mercaturam. It is inequitable to permit some to trade and to prohibit others. Coke, 3d Inst. 181.

Iniquum est aliquem rei sui esse judicem. It is unjust for any one to be judge in his own cause. 12 Coke, 13.

Iniquum est ingenuis hominibus non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem. It is against equity for freemen not to have the free disposal of their own property. Coke, Litt. 223. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 455, 460.

Injuria fit ei cui convicium dictum est, vel de eo factum carmen famosum. An injury is done to him of whom a reproachful thing is said, or concerning whom an infamous song is made. 9 Coke, 60.

Injuria non excusat injuriam. A wrong does not excuse a wrong. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 247, 343, 349; 11 Exch. 822; 15 Q. B. 276; 6 Ell. & B. 76; Branch, Princ.

Injuria non præsumitur. A wrong is not presumed. Coke, Litt. 232.

Injuria propria non cadet in beneficium facientis. No one shall profit by his own wrong.

Injustum est, nisi tota lege inspectæ, de unâ aliquâ ejus particulâ propositâ judicare vel respondere. It is unjust to give judgment or advice concerning any particular clause of a law without having examined the whole law. 8 Coke, 117 b.

Insanus est qui, objectâ ratione, omnia cum impetu et furore facit. He is insane who, reason being thrown away, does every thing with violence and rage. 4 Coke, 128.

Instans est finis unius temporis et principium alterius. An instant is the end of one time and the beginning of another. Coke, Litt. 185.

Intentio cæca mala. A hidden intention is bad. 2 Bulstr. 179.

Intentio inservire debet legibus, non leges intentioni. Intentions ought to be subservient to the laws, not the laws to intentions. Coke, Litt. 314.

Intentio mea imponit nomen operi meo. My intent gives a name to my act. Hob. 123.

Inter alias causas acquisitiones magna, celebris, et famosa est causa donationis. Among other methods of acquiring property, a great, much-used, and celebrated method is that of gift. Bracton, 11.

Inter alios res gestas aliis non posse præjudicium facere sæpe constitutum est. It has been often settled that things which took place between other parties cannot prejudice. Code, 7. 60. 1. 2.

Interdum evenit ut exceptio quæ prima facie justa videtur, tamen iniquè noccat. It sometimes happens that a plea which seems primâ facie just, nevertheless is injurious and unequal. Inst. 4. 14; 4. 14. 1. 2.

Interest reipublicæ ne maleficia remaneant impunita. It concerns the commonwealth that crimes do not remain unpunished. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 30, 31.

Interest reipublicæ ne sua quis malè utatur. It concerns the republic that no one misuse his property. 6 Coke, 36.

Interest reipublicæ quod homines conserventur. It concerns the commonwealth that we be preserved. 12 Coke, 62.

Interest reipublicæ res judicatas non rescindi. It concerns the commonwealth that things adjudged be not rescinded. See RES JUDICATA.

Interest reipublicæ suprema hominum testamenta rata haberi. It concerns the commonwealth that men's last wills be sustained. Coke, Litt. 236.

Interest reipublicæ ut carceres sint in tuto. It concerns the commonwealth that prisons be secure. Coke, 2d Inst. 589.

Interest reipublicæ ut pax in regno conservetur, et quæcunque paci adversentur providè declinentur. It benefits the state to preserve peace in the kingdom, and to prudently decline whatever is adverse to it. Coke, 2d Inst. 158.

Interest reipublicæ ut qualibet re suâ bene utatur. It concerns the commonwealth that every one use his property properly. 6 Coke, 37.

Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium. It concerns the commonwealth that there be a limit to litigation. Coke, Litt. 303.

Interpretare et concordare leges legibus est optimus interpretandi modus. To interpret and reconcile laws so that they harmonize is the best mode of construction. 8 Coke, 169.

Interpretatio fienda est ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Such a construction is to be made that the subject may have an effect rather than none. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 198.

Interpretatio talis ambiguis semper fienda est, ut evitetur inconveniens et absurdum. In ambiguous things, such a construction should be made, that what is inconvenient and absurd may be avoided. Coke, 4th Inst. 328.

Interruptio multiplex non tollit præscriptionem semel obtentam. Repeated interruptions do not defeat a prescription once obtained. Coke, 2d Inst. 654.

Intestatus decedit, qui aut omnino testamentum non fecit aut non juri fecit, aut id quod fecerat ruptum irritumve factum est, aut nemo ex eo hæres extitit. He dies intestate who either has made no will at all or has not made it legally, or whose will which he had made has been annulled or become ineffectual, or from whom there is no living heir. Inst. 3. 1. pr.; Dig. 38. 16. 1; 50. 16. 64.

Inutilis labor, et sine fructu, non est effectus legis. Useless labor and without fruit is not the effect of law. Coke, Litt. 127; Wingate, Max. 38.

Inveniens libellum famosum et non corrumpens punitur. He who finds a libel and does not destroy it, is punished. F. Moore, 813.

Invito beneficium non datur. No one is obliged to accept a benefit against his consent. Dig. 50. 17. 69; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 625. But if he does not dissent, he will be considered as assenting. See ASSENT.

Ipsæ leges cupiunt ut jure regantur. The laws themselves desire that they should be governed by right. Coke, Litt. 174 b, quoted from Cato.

Ira furor brevis est. Anger is a short insanity. 4 Wend. N. Y. 336, 355.

Ita lex scripta est. The law is so written. 26 Barb. N. Y. 374, 380.

Ita semper fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio. Let the relation be so made that the disposition may stand. 6 Coke, 76.

Iter est jus eundi, ambulandi hominis; non etiam jumentum agendi vel vehiculum. Iter is the right of going or walking, and does not include the right of driving a beast of burden or a carriage. Coke, Litt. 56 a; Inst. 2. 3. pr.; 1 Mack. Civ. Law, 343, § 314.

Judex æquitatem semper spectare debet. A judge ought always to regard equity. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 45.

Judex ante oculos æquitatem semper habere debet. A judge ought always to have equity before his eyes. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 58.

Judex bonus nihil ex arbitrio suo faciat, nec propositione domesticæ voluntatis, sed juxta leges et jura pronunciet. A good judge should do nothing from his own arbitrary will, or from the dictates of his private wishes; but he should pronounce according to law and justice. 7 Coke, 27 a.

Judex damnatur cum nocens absolvitur. The judge is condemned when the guilty are acquitted.

Judex debet judicare secundum allegata et probata. The judge ought to decide according to the allegations and the proofs.

Judex est lex loquens. The judge is the speaking law. 7 Coke, 4 a.

Judex habere debet duos sales, salem sapientiæ, ne sit insipidus, et salem conscientiæ, ne sit diabolus. A judge should have two salts: the salt of wisdom, lest he be insipid; and the salt of conscience, lest he be devilish. Coke, 3d Inst. 147.

Judex non potest esse testis in propriâ causâ. A judge cannot be a witness in his own cause. Coke, 4th Inst. 279.

Judex non potest injuriam sibi datam punire. A judge cannot punish a wrong done to himself. 12 Coke, 114.

Judex non reddit plus quam quod petens ipse requirit. The judge does not give more than the plaintiff demands. 2 Inst. 286, case 84.

Judicandum est legibus non exemplis. We are to judge by the laws, not by examples. 4 Coke, 33 b; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 405; 19 Johns. N. Y. 513.

Judices non tenentur exprimere causam sententiæ suæ. Judges are not bound to explain the reason of their sentence. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 75.

Judici officium suum excedenti non paretur. To a judge who exceeds his office or jurisdiction no obedience is due. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 139.

Judici satis pœna est quod Deum habet ultorem. It is punishment enough for a judge that he is responsible to God. 1 Leon. 295.

Judicia in curiâ regis non adnihilentur, sed stent in robore suo quousque per errorem aut attinctum adnullentur. Judgments in the king's courts are not to be annihilated, but to remain in force until annulled by error or attaint. Coke, 2d Inst. 539.

Judicia in deliberationibus crebro maturescunt, in accelerato processu nunquam. Judgments frequently become matured by deliberation, never by hurried process. Coke, 3d Inst. 210.

Judicia posteriora sunt in lege fortiora. The latter decisions are stronger in law. 8 Coke, 97.

Judicia sunt tanquam juris dicta, et pro veritate accipiuntur. Judgments are, as it were, the dicta or sayings of the law, and are received as truth. Coke, 2d Inst. 537.

Judiciis posterioribus fides est adhibenda. Faith or credit is to be given to the later decisions. 13 Coke, 14.

Judicis est in pronuntiando sequi regulam, exceptione non probatâ. The judge in his decision ought to follow the rule, when the exception is not proved.

Judicis est judicare secundum allegata et probata. A judge ought to decide according to the allegations and proofs. Dyer, 12 a; Halkers, Max. 73.

Judicis est jus dicere non dare. It is the duty of a judge to declare the law, not to enact it. Lofft, 42.

Judicis officium est opus diei in die suo perficere. It is the duty of a judge to finish the work of each day within that day. Dy. 12.

Judicis officium est ut res ita tempora rerum quærere, quæsito tempore tutus eris. It is the duty of a judge to inquire the times of things, as well as into things; by inquiring into the time you will be safe. Coke, Litt. 171.

Judicium a non suo judice datum nullius est momenti. A judgment given by an improper judge is of no moment. 10 Coke, 76 b; 2 Q. B. 1014; 13 id. 143; 14 Mees. & W. Exch. 124; 11 Clark & F. Hou. L. 610.

Judicium est quasi juris dictum. Judgment is as it were a saying of the law. Coke, Litt. 168.

Judicium non debet esse illusorium, suum effectum habere debet. A judgment ought not to be illusory, it ought to have its proper effect. Coke, 2d Inst. 341.

Judicium redditur in invitum, in præsumptione legis. In presumption of law, a judgment is given against inclination. Coke, Litt. 248 b, 314 b.

Judicium semper pro veritate accipitur. A judgment is always taken for truth. Coke, 2d Inst. 380; 17 Mass. 237.

Juncta juvant. Things joined have effect. 11 East, 220.

Jura ecclesiastica limitata sunt infra limites separatos. Ecclesiastical laws are limited within separate bounds. 3 Bulstr. 53.

Jura eodem modo destituuntur quo constituuntur. Laws are abrogated or repealed by the same means by which they are made. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 785.

Jura naturæ sunt immutabilia. The laws of nature are unchangeable. Branch, Princ.; Oliver, Forms, 56.

Jura publica anteferenda privatis. Public rights are to be preferred to private. Coke, Litt. 130.

Jura publica ex privato promiscuè decidi non debent. Public rights ought not to be decided promiscuously with private. Coke, Litt. 181 b.

Jura regis specialia non conceduntur per generalia verba. The special rights of the king are not granted by general words. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 103.

Jura sanguinis nullo jure civili dirimi possunt. The right of blood and kindred cannot be destroyed by any civil law. Dig. 50. 17. 9; Bacon, Max. Reg. 11; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 474.

Juramentum est indivisibile, et non est admittendum in parte verum et in parte falsum. An oath is indivisible; it is not to be held partly true and partly false. Coke, 4th Inst. 274.

Jurare est Deum in testum vocare, et est actus divini cultus. To swear is to call God to witness, and is an act of religion. Coke, 3d Inst. 165. See 3 Bouvier, Inst. 3180, note; 1 Bentham, Ev. 376, 371, note.

Jurato creditur in judicio. He who makes oath is to be believed in judgment. Coke, 3d Inst. 79.

Juratores debent esse vicini, sufficientes et minus suspecti. Jurors ought to be neighbours, of sufficient estate, and free from suspicion. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 141.

Juratores sunt judices facti. Jurors are the judges of the facts. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 63.

Jure naturæ æquum est, neminem cum alterius detrimento, et injuriâ fieri locupletiorem. According to the laws of nature, it is just that no one should be enriched with detriment and injury to another, i.e. at another's expense. Dig. 50. 17. 200.

Juri non est consonum quod aliquis accessorius in curiâ regis convincatur antequam aliquis de facto fuerit attinctus. It is not consonant to justice that any accessory should be convicted in the king's court before any one has been attainted of the fact. Coke, 2d Inst. 183.

Juris effectus in executione consistit. The effect of a law consists in the execution. Coke, Litt. 289 b.

Jurisdictio est potestas de publico introducta, cum necessitate juris dicendi. Jurisdiction is a power introduced for the public good, on account of the necessity of dispensing justice. 10 Coke, 73 a.

Jurisprudentia est divinarum atque humanarum rerum notitia; justi atque injusti scientia. Jurisprudence is the knowledge of things divine and human; the science of the just and the unjust. Dig. 1. 1. 10. 2; Inst. 1. 1. 1; Bracton, 3; 8 Johns. N. Y. 290, 295.

Jurisprudentia legis communis Angliæ est scientia socialis et copiosa. The jurisprudence of the common law of England is a science sociable and copious. 7 Coke, 28 a.

Jus accrescendi inter mercatores locum non habet, pro beneficio commercii. The right of survivorship does not exist among merchants, for the benefit of commerce. Coke, Litt. 182; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 682.

Jus accrescendi præfertur oneribus. The right of survivorship is preferred to incumbrances. Coke, Litt. 185.

Jus accrescendi præfertur ultimæ voluntati. The right of survivorship is preferred to a last will. Coke, Litt. 185 b.

Jus civile est quod sibi populus constituit. The civil law is what a people establishes for itself. 1 Johns. N. Y. 424, 426.

Jus descendit, et non terra. A right descends, not the land. Coke, Litt. 345.

Jus dicere, et non jus dare. To declare the law, not to make it. 7 Term, 696; Arg. 10 Johns. N. Y. 566; 7 Exch. 543; 2 Ed. Ch. 29; 4 C. B. 560, 561; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 140.

Jus dicere, non jus dare. To declare the law, not to make it. 10 Johns. N. Y. 563, 566.

Jus est ars boni et æqui. Law is the science of what is good and just. Dig. 1. 1. 1. 1.

Jus est norma recti; et quicquid est contra normam recti est injuria. The law is the rule of right; and whatever is contrary to the rule of right is an injury. 3 Bulstr. 313.

Jus et fraus nunquam cohabitant. Right and fraud never live together.

Jus ex injuria non oritur. A right cannot arise from a wrong. 4 Bingh. 639.

Jus in re inhærit ossibus usufructuarii. A right in the thing cleaves to the person of the usufructuary.

Jus naturale est quod apud homines eandem habet potentiam. Natural right is that which has the same force among all men. 7 Coke, 12.

Jus nec inflecti gratiâ, nec frangi potentiâ, nec adulterari pecuniâ potest; quod si non modo oppressum, sed desertum aut negligentiâ asservatum fuerit, nihil est quod quisquam se habere certum, aut à patre accepturum, aut liberis esse relicturum, arbitretur. Favor ought not to be able to bend justice, power to break it, nor money to corrupt it; for not only if it be overborne, but if it be abandoned or negligently observed, no one can think that he holds any thing securely, or that he will inherit any thing from his father, or be able to leave any thing to his children. Cic.

Jus non habenti, tutè non paretur. It is safe not to obey him who has no right. Hob. 146.

Jus publicum privatorum pactis mutari non potest. A public right cannot be changed by agreement of private parties.

Jus quo universitates utuntur, est idem quod habent privati. The law which governs corporations is the same which governs individuals. 16 Mass. 44.

Jus respicit æquitatem. Law regards equity. Coke, Litt. 24 b; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 143; 17 Q. B. 292.

Jus superveniens auctori accressit successori. A right growing to a possessor accrues to a successor. Halkers, Max. 76.

Jus vendit quod usus approbavit. The law dispenses what use has approved. Ellesmere, Postn. 35.

Jusjurandi forma verbis differt, re convenit; hunc enim sensum habere debet, ut Deus invocetur. The form of taking an oath differs in language, agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense, that the Deity is invoked. Grotius, b. 2, c. 13, s. 10.

Jusjurandum inter alios factum nec nocere nec prodesse debet. An oath made in another cause ought neither to hurt nor profit. Coke, 4th Inst. 279.

Justicia est virtus excellens et Altissimo complacens. Justice is an excellent virtue and pleasing to the Most High. Coke, 4th Inst. 58.

Justitia debet esse LIBERA, quia nihil iniquius venali justitiâ; PLENA, quia justitia non debet claudicare; et CELERIS, quia dilatio est quædam negatio. Justice ought to be unbought, because nothing is more hateful than venal justice; full, for justice ought not to halt; and quick, for delay is a kind of denial. Coke, 2d Inst. 56.

Justitia est constans et perpetua voluntas jus suum cuique tribuendi. Inst. 11. pr.; Dig. 1. 1. 10.

Justitiâ firmatur solium. By justice the throne is established. Coke, 3d Inst. 140.

Justitia nemini neganda est. Justice is to be denied to none. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 178.

Justitia non est neganda, non differenda. Justice is not to be denied nor delayed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 76.

Justitia non novit patrem nec matrem, solum veritatem spectat justitia. Justice knows neither father nor mother, justice looks to truth alone. 1 Bulstr. 199.

Justum non est aliquem antenatum mortuum facere bastardum, qui pro totâ vitâ suâ pro legitimo habetur. It is not just to make a bastard after his death one elder born who all his life has been accounted legitimate. 8 Coke, 101.

L'obligation sans cause, ou sur une fausse cause, ou sur cause illicite, ne peut avoir aucun effet. An obligation without consideration, or upon a false consideration (which fails), or upon unlawful consideration, cannot have any effect. Cod. 3. 3. 4; Chitty, Contr. 10th Am. ed. 25, note.

L'ou le ley done chose, la ceo done remedie a vener a ceo. Where the law gives a right, it gives a remedy to recover. 2 Rolle, 17.

La conscience est la plus changeante des régles. Conscience is the most changeable of rules.

La ley favour' la vie d'un home. The law favors a man's life. Year B. Hen. VI. 51.

La ley favour l'inheritance d'un home. The law favors a man's inheritance. Year B. Hen. VI. 51.

La ley voit plus tost suffer un mischiefe que un inconvenience. The law would rather suffer a mischief than an inconvenience. Littleton, § 231.

Lata culpa dolo æquiparatur. Gross negligence is equal to fraud.

Law construeth every act to be lawful when it standeth indifferent whether it be lawful or not. Wingate, Max. 194; Finch, Law; Coke, b. 1, c. 3, n. 76.

Law construeth things according to common possibility or intendment. Wingate, Max. 189.

Law construeth things to the best. Wingate, Max. 193.

Law construeth things with equity and moderation. Wingate, Max. 183; Finch, Law; Coke, b. 1, c. 3, n. 74.

Law disfavoreth impossibilities. Wingate, Max. 165.

Law disfavoreth improbabilities. Wingate, Max. 161.

Law favoreth charity. Wingate, Max. 135.

Law favoreth common right. Wingate, Max. 144.

Law favoreth diligence, and therefore hateth folly and negligence. Wingate, Max. 172; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 70.

Law favoreth honor and order. Wingate, Max. 199.

Law favoreth justice and right. Wingate, Max. 141.

Law favoreth life, liberty, and dower. 4 Bacon, Works, 345.

Law favoreth mutual recompense. Wingate, Max. 100; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 42.

Law favoreth possession where the right is equal. Wingate, Max. 98; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 36.

Law favoreth public commerce. Wingate, Max. 198.

Law favoreth public quiet. Wingate, Max. 200; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 54.

Law favoreth speeding of men's causes. Wingate, Max. 175.

Law favoreth things for the commonwealth. Wingate, Max. 197; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 53.

Law favoreth truth, faith, and certainty. Wingate, Max. 154.

Law hateth delays. Wingate, Max. 176; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 71.

Law hateth new inventions and innovations. Wingate, Max. 204.

Law hateth wrong. Wingate, Max. 146; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 62.

Law of itself prejudiceth no man. Wingate, Max. 148; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 63.

Law respecteth matter of substance more than matter of circumstance. Wingate, Max. 101; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 39.

Law respecteth possibility of things. Wingate, Max. 104; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 40.

Law respecteth the bonds of nature. Wingate, Max. 78; Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 29.

Lawful things are well mixed, unless a form of law oppose. Bacon, Max. Reg. 23. "The law giveth that favour to lawful acts, that although they be executed by several authorities, yet the whole act is good." Id. ibid.

Le contrat fait la loi. The contract makes the law.

Le ley de Dieu et le ley de terre sont tout un, et l'un et l'autre preferre et favour le common et publique bien del terre. The law of God and the law of the land are all one; and both preserve and favor the common and public good of the land. Keilw. 191.

Le ley est le plus haut enheritance que le roy ad, car par le ley, il meeme et touts ses sujets sont rules, et si le ley ne fuit, nul roy ne nul enheritance serra. The law is the highest inheritance that the king possesses; for by the law both he and all his subjects are ruled; and if there were no law, there would be neither king nor inheritance.

Le salut du peuple est la suprême loi. Montes. Esprit des Lois, l. xxvii. ch. 23; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 1.

Legatos violare contra jus gentium est. It is contrary to the law of nations to do violence to ambassadors. Branch, Princ.

Legatum morte testatoris tantum confirmatur, sicut donatio inter vivos traditione solâ. A legacy is confirmed by the death of the testator, in the same manner as a gift from a living person is by delivery alone. Dy. 143.

Legatus, regis vice fungitur a quo destinatur, et honorandus est sicut ille cujus vicem gerit. An ambassador fills the place of the king by whom he is sent, and is to be honored as he is whose place he fills. 12 Coke, 17.

Legem enim contractus dat. The contract makes the law. 22 Wend. N. Y. 215, 233.

Legem terræ amittentes perpetuam infamiæ notam inde meritò incurrunt. Those who do not preserve the law of the land, thence justly incur the ineffaceable brand of infamy. Coke, 3d Inst. 221.

Leges Angliæ sunt tripartitæ: jus commune, consuetudines, ac decreta comitiorum. The laws of England are threefold: common law, customs, and decrees of parliament.

Leges figendi et refigendi consuetudo est periculosissima. The custom of making and unmaking laws is a most dangerous one. 4 Coke, pref.

Leges humanæ nascuntur, vivunt, et moriuntur. Human laws are born, live, and die. 7 Coke, 25; 2 Atk. 674; 11 C. B. 767; 1 Blackst. Comm. 89.

Leges naturæ perfectissimæ sunt et immutabiles; humani vero juris conditio semper in infinitum decurrit, et nihil est in eo quod perpetuo stare possit. Leges humanæ nascuntur, vivunt, moriuntur. The laws of nature are most perfect and immutable; but the condition of human law is an unending succession, and there is nothing in it which can continue perpetually. Human laws are born, live, and die. 7 Coke, 25.

Leges non verbis sed rebus sunt impositæ. Laws are imposed on things, not words. 10 Coke, 101.

Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant. Subsequent laws repeal prior conflicting ones. 2 Rolle, 410; 11 Coke, 626, 630.

Leges suum ligent latorem. Laws should bind the proposers of them. Fleta, b. 1, c. 17, § 11.

Leges vigilantibus, non dormientibus subveniunt. The laws aid the vigilant, not the negligent. Fanning; Dunham; 5 Johns. Ch. 122, 145; Toole; Cook; 16 How. Pr. 142, 144.

Legibus sumptis desinentibus, lege naturæ utendum est. When laws imposed by the state fail, we must act by the law of nature. 2 Rolle, 298.

Legis constructio non facit injuriam. The construction of law does no wrong. Coke, Litt. 183.

Legis figendi et refigendi consuetudo periculosissima est. The custom of fixing and refixing (making and annulling) laws is most dangerous.

Legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet. The construction of law obtains the force of law. Branch, Princ.

Legis minister non tenetur, in executione officii sui, fugere aut retrocedere. The minister of the law is not bound, in the execution of his office, either to fly or retreat. 6 Coke, 68.

Legislatorum est viva vox, rebus et non verbis, legem imponere. The voice of legislators is a living voice, to impose laws on things and not on words. 10 Coke, 101.

Legitime imperanti parere necesse est. One who commands lawfully must be obeyed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 120.

Les fictions naissent de la loi, et non la loi des fictions. Fictions arise from the law, and not law from fictions.

Les lois ne se chargent de punir que les actions extérieures. Laws do not undertake to punish other than outward actions. Montes. Es. de Lois, b. 12, c. 11; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 279.

Lex æquitate gaudet; appetit perfectum; est norma recti. The law delights in equity; it covets perfection; it is a rule of right. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 36.

Lex aliquando sequitur æquitatem. The law sometimes follows equity. 3 Wils. 119.

Lex Angliæ est lex misericordiæ. The law of England is a law of mercy. Coke, 2d Inst. 315.

Lex Angliæ non patitur absurdum. The law of England does not suffer an absurdity. 9 Coke, 22.

Lex Angliæ nunquam matris sed semper patris conditionem imitari partum judicat. The law of England rules that the offspring shall always follow the condition of the father, never that of the mother. Coke, Litt. 123.

Lex Angliæ nunquam sine parliamento mutari potest. The law of England cannot be changed but by parliament. Coke, 2d Inst. 218, 619.

Lex beneficialis rei consimili remedium præstat. A beneficial law affords a remedy in a similar case. Coke, 2d Inst. 689.

Lex citius tolerare vult privatum damnum quam publicum malum. The law would rather tolerate a private loss than a public evil. Coke, Litt. 152 b.

Lex de futuro, judex de præterito. The law provides for the future, the judge for the past.

Lex deficere non potest in justitiâ exhibendâ. The law ought not to fail in dispensing justice. Coke, Litt 197.

Lex dilationes semper exhorret. The law always abhors delay. Coke, 2d Inst. 240.

Lex est ab æterno. The law is from everlasting. Branch, Princ.

Lex est dictamen rationis. Law is the dictate of reason. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 117.

Lex est norma recti. Law is a rule of right.

Lex est ratio summa, quæ jubet quæ sunt utilia et necessaria, et contraria prohibet. Law is the perfection of reason, which commands what is useful and necessary, and forbids the contrary. Coke, Litt. 319 b.

Lex est sanctio sancta, jubens honesta, et prohibens contraria. Law is a sacred sanction, commanding what is right and prohibiting the contrary. Coke, 2d Inst. 587.

Lex est tutissima cassis; sub clypeo legis nemo decipitur. Law is the safest helmet; under the shield of the law no one is deceived. Coke, 2d Inst. 56.

Lex favet doti. The law favors dower 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 105.

Lex fingit ubi subsistit æquitas. Law feigns where equity subsists. 11 Coke, 90; Branch, Princ.

Lex intendit vicinum vicini facta scire. The law presumes that one neighbor knows the actions of another. Coke, Litt. 78 b.

Lex judicat de rebus necessario faciendis quasire ipsa factis. The law judges of things which must necessarily be done as if actually done. Branch, Princ.

Lex necessitatis est lex temporis, i.e. instantis. The law of necessity is the law of time, that is, time present. Hob. 159.

Lex neminem cogit ad vana seu inutilia peragenda. The law forces no one to do vain or useless things. Wingate, Max. 600; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 144; 2 Bingh. N. C. 121; 13 East, 420; 7 Penn. St. 206, 214; 3 Johns. N. Y. 598.

Lex neminem cogit ostendere quod nescire præsumitur. The law forces no one to make known what he is presumed not to know. Lofft, 569.

Lex nemini facit injuriam. The law does wrong to no one. Branch, Princ.

Lex nemini operatur iniquum, nemini facit injuriam. The law never works an injury, or does him a wrong. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 22.

Lex nil facit frustra, nil jubet frustra. The law does nothing and commands nothing in vain. 3 Bulstr. 279; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 17.

Lex non cogit ad impossibilia. The law requires nothing impossible. Coke, Litt. 231 b; Hob. 96; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 851.

Lex non curat de minimis. The law does not regard small matters. Hob. 88.

Lex non deficit in justitia exibenda. The law does not fail in showing justice. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 31.

Lex non favet votis delicatorum. The law favors not the wishes of the dainty. 9 Coke, 58 a.

Lex non intendit aliquid impossibile. The law intends not any thing impossible. 12 Coke, 89 a.

Lex non patitur fractiones et divisiones statuum. The law suffers no fractions and divisions of estates. 1 Coke, 87; Branch, Princ.

Lex non præcipit inutilia, quia inutilis labor stultus. The law commands not useless things, because useless labor is foolish. Coke, Litt. 197; 5 Coke, 89 a.

Lex non requirit verificare quod apparet curiæ. The law does not require that to be proved which is apparent to the court. 9 Coke, 54.

Lex plus laudatur quando ratione probatur. The law is the more praised when it is consonant to reason. 3 Term, 146; 7 id. 252; 7 Adolph. & E. 657; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 151.

Lex posterior derogat priori. A prior statute shall give place to a later. Mackeldey, Civ. Law, 5; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 27.

Lex prospicit, non respicit. The law looks forward, not backward. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 284. See RETROSPECTIVE.

Lex punit mendacium. The law punishes falsehood. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 15.

Lex rejicit superflua, pugnantia, incongrua. The law rejects superfluous, contradictory, and incongruous things. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 133, 140, 176.

Lex reprobat moram. The law disapproves of delay.

Lex respicit æquitatem. Law regards equity. See 14 Q. B. 504, 511, 512.

Lex semper dabit remedium. The law will always give a remedy. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2411; Bacon, Abr. Actions in General (B); Branch, Princ.; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 181; 12 Adolph. & E. 266; 7 Q. B. 451.

Lex semper intendit quod convenit rationi. The law always intends what is agreeable to reason. Coke, Litt. 78.

Lex spectat naturæ ordinem. The law regards the order of nature. Coke, Litt. 197; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 231.

Lex succurrit ignoranti. The laws succor the ignorant. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 15.

Lex succurrit minoribus. The law assists minors. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 57.

Lex uno ore omnes alloquitur. The law speaks to all with one mouth. Coke, 2d Inst. 184.

Lex vigilantibus non dormientibus subvenit. Law assists the wakeful, not the sleeping. 1 Story, Contr. 4th ed. 502.

Liberata pecunia non liberat offerentem. Money being restored does not set free the party offering. Coke, Litt. 207.

Libertas est naturalis facultas ejus quod cuique facere libet, nisi quod de jure aut vi prohibetur. Liberty is the natural power of doing whatever one pleases, except that which is restrained by law or force. Coke, Litt. 116.

Libertas inæstimabilis res est. Liberty is an inestimable good. Dig. 50. 17. 106; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 51, § 13.

Libertas non recipit æstimationem. Freedom does not admit of valuation. Bracton, 14.

Libertas omnibus rebus favorabilior est. Liberty is more favored than all things. Dig. 50. 17. 122.

Liberum corpus æstimationem non recipit. The body of a freeman does not admit of valuation. Dig. 9. 3. 7.

Liberum est cuique apud se explorare an expediat sibi consilium. Every one is free to ascertain for himself whether a recommendation is advantageous to his interests. 6 Johns. N. Y. 181, 184.

Librorum appellatione continentur omnia volumina, sive in chartâ, sive in membranâ sint, sive in quavis alia materia. Under the name of books are contained all volumes, whether upon paper, or parchment, or any other material. Dig. 32. 52. pr. et per tot.

Licet dispositio de interesse futuro sit inutilis tamen potest fieri declaratio præcedens quæ sortiatur effectum interveniente novo actu. Although the grant of a future interest be inoperative, yet a declaration precedent may be made which may take effect, provided a new act intervene. Bacon, Max. Reg. 14; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 600.

Licita bene miscentur, formula nisi juris obstet. Lawful acts may well be fused into one, unless some form of law forbid: e. g. two having a right to convey, each a moiety, may unite and convey the whole. Bacon, Max. 94; Crabb, Real Prop. 179.

Ligeantia est quasi legis essentia; est vinculum fidei. Allegiance is, as it were, the essence of the law; it is the bond of faith. Coke, Litt. 129.

Ligeantia naturalis, nullis claustris coercetur, nullis metis refrænatur, nullis finibus premitur. Natural allegiance is restrained by no barriers, curbed by no bounds, compressed by no limits. 7 Coke, 10.

Ligna et lapides sub armorum appellatione non continentur. Sticks and stones are not contained under the name of arms. Bracton, 144 b.

Linea recta est index sui et obliqui; lex est linea recti. A right line is an index of itself and of an oblique; law is a line of right. Coke, Litt. 158.

Linea recta semper præfertur transversali. The right line is always preferred to the collateral. Coke, Litt. 10; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1; 1 Stephen, Comm. 4th ed. 406.

Literæ patentes regis non erunt vacuæ. Letters-patent of the king shall not be void. 1 Bulstr. 6.

Litus est quousque maximus fluctus a mari pervenit. The shore is where the highest wave from the sea has reached. Dig. 50. 16. 96; Angell, Tide-Waters, 67.

Litis nomen actionem significat, sive in rem, sive in personam sit. The word "lex," i.e. a lawsuit, signifies every action, whether in rem or in personam. Coke, Litt. 292.

Locus contractus regit actum. The place of the contract governs the act. 2 Kent, Comm. 458.

Locus pro solutione reditûs aut pecuniæ secundum conditionem dimissionis aut obligationis est strictè observandus. The place for the payment of rent or money is to be strictly observed according to the condition of the lease or obligation. 4 Coke, 73.

Longa patientia trahitur ad consensum. Long sufferance is construed as consent. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 26, § 4.

Longa possessio est pacis jus. Long possession is the law of peace. Coke, Litt. 6.

Longa possessio parit jus possidendi, et tollit actionem vero domino. Long possession produces the right of possession, and takes away from the true owner his action. Coke, Litt. 110.

Longum tempus, et longus usus qui excedit memoria hominum, sufficit pro jure. Long time, and long use beyond the memory of man, suffices for right. Coke, Litt. 115.

Loquendum ut vulgus, sentiendum ut docti. We should speak as the common people, we should think as the learned. 7 Coke. 11.

Lubricum linguæ non facile trahendum est in pœnam. The slipperiness of the tongue i.e. its liability to err—ought not lightly to be subjected to punishment. Croke Car. 117.

Lucrum facere ex pupilli tutela tutor non debet. A guardian ought not to make money out of the guardianship of his ward. 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 527, 535.

Lunaticus, qui gaudet in lucidis intervallis. He is a lunatic who enjoys lucid intervals. 1 Story, Contr. 4th ed. 70.

Magis dignum trahit ad se minus dignum. The more worthy draws to itself the less worthy. Year B. 20 Hen. VI. 2 arg.

Magister rerum usus; magistra rerum experientia. Use is the master of things; experience is the mistress of things. Coke, Litt. 69, 229; Wingate, Max. 752.

Magna Charta and Charta de Forestâ are called les deux grand charters. Magna Charta and the Charter of the Forest are called the two great charters. Coke, 2d Inst. 570.

Magna culpa dolus est. Great neglect is equivalent to fraud. Dig. 50. 16. 226; 2 Spears, So. C. 256; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 646.

Magna negligentia culpa est, magna culpa dolus est. Gross negligence is a fault, gross fault is a fraud. Dig. 50. 16. 226. Culpa is an intermediate degree of negligence between negligentia, or lack of energetic care, and dolus, or fraud, seeming to approach nearly to our "negligence" in meaning.

Mahemium est homicidium inchoatum. Mayhem is incipient homicide. Coke, 3d Inst. 118.

Maihemium est inter crimina majora minimum, et inter minora maximum. Mayhem is the least of great crimes, and the greatest of small. Coke, Litt. 127.

Major hæreditas venit unicuique nostrum a jure et legibus quam a parentibus. A greater inheritance comes to every one of us from right and the laws than from parents. Coke, 2d Inst. 56.

Major numerus in se continet minorem. The greater number contains in itself the less. Bracton, 16.

Majore pœnâ affectus quam legibus statuta est, non est infamis. One affected with a greater punishment than is provided by law is not infamous. Coke, 4th Inst. 66.

Majori continet in se minus. The greater includes the less. 19 Viner, Abr. 379.

Majori summæ minor inest. The lesser is included in the greater sum. 2 Kent, Comm. 618; Story, Ag. § 172.

Majus dignum trahit ad se minus dignum. The more worthy or the greater draws to it the less worthy or the lesser. 5 Viner, Abr. 584, 586; Coke, Litt. 43, 355 b; Coke, 2d Inst. 307; Finch, Law, 22.

Majus est delictum seipsum occidere quam alium. It is a greater crime to kill one's self than another.

Mala grammatica non vitiat chartam; sed in expositione instrumentorum mala grammatica quoad fieri possit evitanda est. Bad grammar does not vitiate a deed; but in the construction of instruments, bad grammar, as far as it can be done, is to be avoided. 6 Coke, 39; 9 id. 48; Viner, Abr. Grammar (A); Lofft, 441; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 612.

Maledicta expositio quæ corrumpit textum. It is a cursed construction which corrupts the text. 2 Coke, 24; 4 id. 35; 11 id. 34; Wingate, Max. 26.

Maleficia non debent remanere impunita, et impunitas continuum affectum tribuit delinquenti. Evil deeds ought not to remain unpunished, and impunity affords continual incitement to the delinquent. 4 Coke, 45.

Maleficia propositis distinguuntur. Evil deeds are distinguished from evil purposes. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 290.

Malitia est acida, est mali animi affectus. Malice is sour, it is the quality of a bad mind. 2 Bulstr. 49.

Malitia supplet ætatem. Malice supplies age. Dy. 104; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 464; 4 id. 22, 23, 312, Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 284. See MALICE.

Malum hominum est obviandum. The malicious plans of men must be avoided. 4 Coke, 15.

Malum non habet efficientem, sed deficientem causam. Evil has not an efficient, but a deficient, cause. Coke, 3d Inst. Præme.

Malum non præsumitur. Evil is not presumed. 4 Coke, 72; Branch, Princ.

Malum quo communius eo pejus. The more common the evil, the worse. Branch, Princ.

Malus usus est abolendus. An evil custom is to be abolished. Coke, Litt. 141; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 827; Littleton, § 212; 5 Q. B. 701; 12 id. 845; 2 Mylne & K. 449.

Mandata licita strictam recipiunt interpretationem, sed illicita latam et extensam. Lawful commands receive a strict interpretation, but unlawful, a wide or broad construction. Bacon, Max. Reg. 16.

Mandatarius terminos sibi positos transgredi non potest. A mandatary cannot exceed the bounds of his authority. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 53.

Mandatum nisi gratuitum nullum est. Unless a mandate is gratuitous, it is not a mandate. Dig. 17. 1. 1. 4; Inst. 3. 27; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1070.

Manifesta probatione non indigent. Manifest things require no proof. 7 Coke, 40 b.

Maris et fœminæ conjunctio est de jure naturæ. The union of male and female is founded on the law of nature. 7 Coke, 13.

Matrimonia debent esse libera. Marriages ought to be free. Halkers, Max. 86; 2 Kent, Comm. 102.

Matrimonium subsequens tollit peccatum præcedens. A subsequent marriage cures preceding criminality.

Matter en ley ne serra mise en bouche del jurors. Matter of laws shall not be put into the mouth of jurors. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 180.

Maturiora sunt vota mulierum quam virorum. The wishes of women are of quicker growth than those of men; i.e. women arrive at maturity earlier than men. 6 Coke, 71 a; Bracton, 86 b.

Maxime ita dicta quia maxima est ejus dignitas et certissima auctoritas, atque quod maximè omnibus probetur. A maxim is so called because its dignity is chiefest, and its authority the most certain, and because universally approved by all. Coke, Litt. 11.

Maximè paci sunt contraria, vis et injuria. The greatest enemies to peace are force and wrong. Coke, Litt. 161.

Maximus erroris populus magister. The people is the greatest master of error. Bacon.

Melior est causa possidentis. The cause of the possessor is preferable. Dig. 50. 17. 126. 2.

Melior est conditio defendentis. The cause of the defendant is the better. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 639, 642; Dig. 50. 17. 126. 2; Hob. 199; 1 Mass. 66.

Melior est conditio possidentis et rei quam actoris. Better is the condition of the possessor and that of the defendant than that of the plaintiff. Coke, 4th Inst. 180; Vaugh. 58, 60; Hob. 103.

Melior est conditio possidentis, ubi neuter jus habet. Better is the condition of the possessor where neither of the two has a right. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 118.

Melior est justitia verè præveniens quam severè puniens. That justice which justly prevents a crime is better than that which severely punishes it.

Meliorem conditionem suum facere potest minor, deteriorem nequaquam. A minor can improve or make his condition better, but never worse. Coke, Litt. 337 b.

Melius est in tempore occurrere, quam post causam vulneratum remedium quærere. It is better to restrain or meet a thing in time, than to seek a remedy after a wrong has been inflicted. Coke, 2d Inst. 299.

Melius est omnia mala pati quam consentire. It is better to suffer every wrong or ill, than to consent to it. Coke, 3d Inst. 23.

Melius est recurrere quam malo currere. It is better to recede than to proceed wrongly. Coke, 4th Inst. 176.

Mens testatoris in testamentis spectanda est. In wills, the intention of the testator is to be regarded. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 277.

Mentiri est contra mentem ire. To lie is to go against the mind. 3 Bulstr. 260.

Mercis appellatio ad res mobiles tantum pertinet. The term merchandise belongs to movable things only. Dig. 50. 16. 66.

Mercis appellatione homines non contineri. Under the name of merchandise men are not included. Dig. 50. 16. 207.

Merx est quidquid vendi potest. Merchandise is whatever can be sold. 3 Metc. Mass. 365. See MERCHANDISE.

Messis sementem sequitur. The harvest follows the sowing. Erskine, Inst. 174. 26; Bell, Dict.

Meum est promittere, non dimittere. It is mine to promise, not to discharge. 2 Rolle, 39.

Minima pœna corporalis est major qualibet pecuniariâ. The smallest bodily punishment is greater than any pecuniary one. Coke, 2d Inst. 220.

Minimè mutanda sunt quæ certam habuerunt interpretationem. Things which have had a certain interpretation are to be altered as little as possible. Coke, Litt. 365.

Minimum est nihilo proximum. The least is next to nothing. Bacon, Arg. Low's Case of Tenures.

Minor ante tempus agere non potest in casu proprietatis, nec etiam convenire. A minor before majority cannot act in a case of property, nor even agree. Coke, 2d Inst. 291.

Minor jurare non potest. A minor cannot make oath. Coke, Litt. 172 b. An infant cannot be sworn on a jury. Littleton, 289.

Minor minorem custodire non debet; alios enim præsumitur male regere qui seipsum regere nescit. A minor ought not to be guardian of a minor, for he is presumed to govern others ill who does not know how to govern himself. Coke, Litt. 88.

Minor non tenetur respondere durante minori ætati; nisi in causâ dotis, propter favorem. A minor is not bound to answer during his minority, except as a matter of favor in a cause of dower. 3 Bulstr. 143.

Minor, qui infra ætatem 12 annorum fuerit, utlagari non potest, nec extra legem poni, quia ante talem ætatem, non est sub lege aliquâ, nec in decennâ. A minor who is under twelve years of age cannot be outlawed, nor placed without the laws, because before such age he is not under any laws, nor in a decennary. Coke, Litt. 128.

Minor 17 annis, non admittitur fore executorem. A minor under seventeen years of age is not admitted to be an executor. 6 Coke, 67.

Minus solvit, qui tardius solvit; nam et tempore minus solvitur. He does not pay who pays too late; for, from the delay, he is judged not to pay. Dig. 50. 16. 12. 1.

Misera est servitus, ubi jus est vagum aut incertum. It is a miserable slavery where the law is vague or uncertain. Coke, 4th Inst. 246; 9 Johns. N. Y. 427; 11 Pet. 286.

Mitius imperanti melius paretur. The more mildly one commands, the better is he obeyed. Coke, 3d Inst. 24.

Mobilia non habet situm. Movables have no situs. 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 472.

Mobilia personam sequuntur, immobilia situm. Movable things follow the person; immovable, their locality. Story, Confl. Laws, 3d ed. 638, 639.

Mobilia sequuntur personam. Movables follow the person. Story, Confl. Laws, 3d ed. 638, 639; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 462.

Modica circumstantia facti jus mutat. A small circumstance attending an act may change the law.

Modus de non decimando non valet. A modus (prescription) not to pay tithes is void. Lofft, 427; Croke Eliz. 511; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 31.

Modus et conventio vincunt legem. The form of agreement and the convention of the parties overrule the law. 2 Coke, 73.

Modus legem dat donationi. The manner gives law to a gift. Coke, Litt. 19 a; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 615.

Moneta est justum medium et mensura rerum commutabilium, nam per medium monetæ fit omnium rerum convenions, et justa æstimatio. Money is the just medium and measure of all commutable things, for by the medium of money a convenient and just estimation of all things is made. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 922.

Monetandi jus comprehenditur in regalibus quæ nunquam a regio sceptro abdicantur. The right of coining is comprehended amongst those rights of royalty which are never relinquished by the kingly sceptre. Dav. 18.

Mora reprobatur in lege. Delay is disapproved of in law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 51.

More dicitur ultimum supplicium. Death is denominated the extreme penalty. Coke, 3d Inst. 212.

Mors omnia solvit. Death dissolves all things.

Mortis momentum est ultimum vitæ momentum. The last moment of life is the moment of death. 4 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 245, 250.

Mortuus exitus non est exitus. To be dead-born is not to be born. Coke, Litt. 29. See 2 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 35; Domat, liv. prél. t. 2, s. 1, n. 4, 6; 2 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 1721, 1935.

Mos retinendus est fidelissimæ vetustatis. A custom of the truest antiquity is to be retained. 4 Coke, 78.

Mulcta damnum famæ non irrogat. A fine does not impose a loss of reputation. Code, 1. 54; Calvinus, Lex.

Multa conceduntur per obliquum quæ non conceduntur de directo. Many things are conceded indirectly which are not allowed directly. 6 Coke, 47.

Multa fidem promissa levant. Many promises lessen confidence. 11 Cush. Mass. 350.

Multa ignoramus quæ nobis non laterent si veterum lectio nobis fuit familiaris. We are ignorant of many things which would not be hidden from us if the reading of old authors were familiar to us. 10 Coke, 73.

Multa in jure communi contra rationem disputandi pro communi utilitate introducta sunt. Many things have been introduced into the common law, with a view to the public good, which are inconsistent with sound reason. Coke, Litt. 70; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 150; 2 Coke, 75. See 3 Term, 146; 7 id. 252.

Multa multo exercitatione facilius quam regulis percipies. You will perceive many things much more easily by practice than by rules. Coke, 4th Inst. 50.

Multa non vetat lex, quæ tamen tacitè damnavit. The law fails to forbid many things which yet it has silently condemned.

Multa transeunt cum universitate quæ non per se transeunt. Many things pass as a whole which would not pass separately. Coke, Litt. 12 a.

Multi multa, nemo omnia novit. Many men know many things, no one knows every thing. Coke, 4th Inst. 348.

Multi utilius est pauca idonea effundere, quam multis inutilibus homines gravari. It is much more useful to pour forth a few useful things than to oppress men with many useless things. 4 Coke, 20.

Multiplex et indistinctum parit confusionem; et questiones quo simpliciores, eo lucidiores. Multiplicity and indistinctness produce confusion: the more simple questions are, the more lucid they are. Hob. 335.

Multiplicatâ transgressione crescat pœnæ inflictio. The infliction of punishment should be in proportion to the increase of crime. Coke, 2d Inst. 479.

Multitudinem decem faciunt. Ten make a multitude. Coke, Litt. 247.

Multitudo errantium non parit errori patrocinium. The multitude of those who err is no protection for error. 11 Coke, 75.

Multitudo imperitorum perdit curiam. A multitude of ignorant practitioners destroys a court. Coke, 2d Inst. 219.

Natura appetit perfectum, ita et lex. Nature aspires to perfection, and so does the law. Hob. 144.

Natura fidejussionis sit strictissimi juris et non durat, vel extendatur de re ad rem, de personâ ad personam, de sempore ad tempus. The nature of the contract of suretyship is strictissimi juris, and cannot endure nor be extended from thing to thing, from person to person, or from time to time. Burge, Sur. 40.

Natura non facit saltum, ita nec lex. Nature makes no leap, nor does the law. Coke, Litt. 238.

Natura non facit vacuum, nec lex supervacuum. Nature makes no vacuum, the law nothing purposeless. Coke, Litt. 79.

Naturæ vis maxima; natura bis maxima. The force of nature is greatest; nature is doubly great. Coke, 2d Inst. 564.

Naturale est quidlibet dissolvi eo modo quo ligatur. It is natural for a thing to be unbound in the same way in which it was bound. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 66; 4 Dev. N. Y. 414, 417; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 785.

Nec curia deficeret in justitiâ exhibendâ. Nor should the court be deficient in showing justice. Coke, 4th Inst. 63.

Nec tempus nec locus occurrit regi. Neither time nor place bars the king. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 190.

Nec veniam effuso sanguine, casus habet. Where blood is spilled, the case is unpardonable. Coke, 3d Inst. 57.

Nec veniam, læso numine, casus habet. Where the Divinity is insulted the case is unpardonable. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 167.

Necessarium est quod non potest aliter se habere. That is necessary which cannot be otherwise.

Necessitas est lex temporis et loci. Necessity is the law of a particular time and place. 8 Coke, 69; Hale, Hist. Pl. Cr. 54.

Necessitas excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus, quod non operatur idem in civilibus. Necessity excuses or extenuates delinquency in capital cases, but not in civil. See NECESSITY.

Necessitas facit licitum quod alias non est licitum. Necessity makes that lawful which otherwise is unlawful. 10 Coke, 61.

Nemo videtur fraudare eos qui sciunt, et consentiunt. No one is considered as deceiving those who know and consent. Dig. 20. 17. 145.

Nihil aliud potest rex quàm quod de jure potest. The king can do nothing but what he can do justly. 11 Coke, 74.

Nihil consensui tam contrarium est quam vis atque metus. Nothing is so contrary to consent as force and fear. Dig. 50. 17. 116.

Nihil dat qui non habet. He gives nothing who has nothing.

Nihil de re accrescit ei qui nihil in re quando jus accresceret habet. Nothing accrues to him who, when the right accrues, has nothing in the subject-matter. Coke, Litt. 188.

Nihil est enim liberale quod non idem justum. For there is nothing generous which is not at the same time just. 2 Kent, Comm. 441, note a.

Nihil est magis rationi consentaneum quam eodem modo quodque dissolvere quo conflatum est. Nothing is more consonant to reason than that every thing should be dissolved in the same way in which it was made. Sheppard, Touchst. 323.

Nihil facit error nominis cum de corpore constat. An error in the name is nothing when there is certainty as to the thing. 11 Coke, 21; 2 Kent, Comm. 292.

Nihil habet forum ex scenâ. The court has nothing to do with what is not before it.

Nihil in lege intolerabilius est, eandem rem diverso jure censeri. Nothing in law is more intolerable than that the same case should be subject (in different courts) to different views of the law. 4 Coke, 93.

Nihil infra regnum subditos magis conservat in tranquilitate et concordiâ quam debita legum administratio. Nothing preserves in tranquillity and concord those who are subjected to the same government better than a due administration of the laws. Coke, 2d Inst. 158.

Nihil magis justum est quam quod necessarium est. Nothing is more just than what is necessary. Dav. 12.

Nihil nequam est præsumendum. Nothing wicked is to be presumed. 2 P. Will. 583.

Nihil perfectum est dum aliquid restat agendum. Nothing is perfect while something remains to be done. 9 Coke, 9.

Nihil peti potest ante id tempus, quo per rerum naturam persolvi possit. Nothing can be demanded before that time when, in the nature of things, it can be paid. Dig. 50. 17. 186.

Nihil possumus contra veritatem. We can do nothing against truth. St. Albans, Doct. & Stu. Dial. 2, c. 6.

Nihil præscribitur nisi quod possidetur. There is no prescription for that which is not possessed. 5 Barnew. & Ald. 277.

Nihil quod est contra rationem est licitum. Nothing against reason is lawful. Coke, Litt. 97.

Nihil quod est inconveniens est licitum. Nothing inconvenient is lawful. 4 Hou. L. Cas. 145, 195.

Nihil simul inventum est et perfectum. Nothing is invented and perfected at the same moment. Coke, Litt. 230; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 298, n.

Nihil tam conveniens est naturali æquitati quam unumquodque dissolvi eo ligamine quo ligatum est. Nothing is so consonant to natural equity as that each thing should be dissolved by the same means by which it was bound. Coke, 2d Inst. 360; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 785. See Sheppard, Touchst. 323.

Nihil tam conveniens est naturali æquitati, quàm voluntatem domini volentis rem suam in alium transferre, ratam haberi. Nothing is more conformable to natural equity than to confirm the will of an owner who desires to transfer his property to another. Inst. 2. 1. 40; 1 Coke, 100.

Nihil tam naturale est, quàm eo genere quidque dissolvere, quo colligatum est. Nothing is so natural as that an obligation should be dissolved by the same principles which were observed in contracting it. Dig. 50. 17. 35. See 1 Coke, 100; Coke, 2d Inst. 359.

Nihil tam proprium imperio quam legibus vivere. Nothing is so becoming to authority as to live according to the law. Fleta, l. 1, c. 17, § 11; Coke, 2d Inst. 63.

Nil agit exemplum litem quod lite resolvit. An example does no good which settles one question by another. Hatch vs. Mann, 15 Wend. 44, 49.

Nil facit error nominis si de corpore constat. An error in the name is immaterial if the body is certain. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 566; 11 C. B. 406.

Nil sine prudenti fecit ratione vetustas. Antiquity did nothing without a good reason. Coke, Litt. 65.

Nil temere novandum. Nothing should be rashly changed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 163.

Nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur, et talis certitudo certitudinem confundit. Too great subtlety is disapproved of in law; for such nice pretence of certainty confounds true and legal certainty. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 175; 4 Coke, 5.

Nimium altercando veritas amittitur. By too much altercation truth is lost. Hob. 344.

No man can hold the same land immediately of two several landlords. Coke, Litt. 152.

No man is presumed to do any thing against nature. 22 Viner, Abr. 154.

No man may be judge in his own cause.

No man shall set up his infamy as a defence. 2 W. Blackst. 364.

No man shall take by deed but parties, unless in remainder.

No one can grant or convey what he does not own. 25 Barb. N. Y. 284, 301. See 20 Wend. N. Y. 267; 23 N. Y. 252; 13 id. 121; 6 Du. N. Y. 232. And see Estoppel.

Nobiles magis plectuntur pecuniâ; plebes verò in corporo. The higher classes are more punished in money; but the lower in person. Coke, 3d Inst. 220.

Nobiles sunt qui arma gentilitia antecessorum suorum proferre possunt. The gentry are those who are able to produce armorial bearings derived by descent from their own ancestors. Coke, 2d Inst. 595.

Nobiliores et benigniores presumptiones in dubiis sunt præferendæ. When doubts arise, the most generous and benign presumptions are to be preferred. Reg. Jur. Civ.

Nomen est quasi rei notamen. A name is as it were the note of a thing. 11 Coke, 20.

Nomen non sufficit si res non sit de jure aut de facto. A name does not suffice if the thing do not exist by law or by fact. 4 Coke, 107.

Nomina si nescis perit cognitio rerum. If you know not the names of things, the knowledge of things themselves perishes. Coke, Litt. 86.

Nomina sunt mutabilia, res autem immobiles. Names are mutable, but things immutable. 6 Coke, 66.

Nomina sunt notæ rerum. Names are the notes of things. 11 Coke, 20.

Nomina sunt symbola rerum. Names are the symbols of things.

Non accipi debent verba in demonstrationem falsam, quæ competunt in limitationem veram. Words ought not to be accepted to import a false description, which may have effect by way of true limitation. Bacon, Max, Reg. 13; 2 Parsons, Contr. 62–65; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 573; 3 Barnew. & Ad. 459; 4 Exch. 604; 3 Taunt. 147.

Non alio modo puniatur aliquis, quam secundum quod se habet condemnatio. A person may not be punished differently than according to what the sentence enjoins. Coke, 3d Inst. 217.

Non aliter à significatione verborum recedi oportet quam cùm manifestum est, aliud sensisse testatorem. We must never depart from the signification of words, unless it is evident that they are not conformable to the will of the testator. Dig. 32. 69 pr.; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 500; 2 De Gex. M. & G. Ch. 313.

Non auditur perire volens. One who wishes to perish ought not to be heard. Best, Ev. § 385.

Non concedantur citationes priusquam exprimatur super qua re fieri decet citatio. Summonses or citations should not be granted before it is expressed upon what ground a citation ought to be issued. 12 Coke, 47.

Non consentit qui errat. He who errs does not consent. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 581; Bracton, 44.

Non dat qui non habet. He gives nothing who has nothing. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 417.

Non debeo melioris conditionis esse, quam auctor meus à quo jus in me transit. I ought not to be in better condition than he to whose rights I succeed. Dig. 50, 17. 175. 1.

Non deberet alii nocere, quod inter alios actum esset. No one ought to be injured by that which has taken place between other parties. Dig. 12. 2. 10.

Non debet adduci exceptio ejus rei cujus petitur dissolutio. A plea of the same matter the dissolution of which is sought ought not to be made. Bacon, Max. Reg. 2; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 157; 3 P. Will. 317; 1 Ld. Raym. 57; 2 id. 1433.

Non debet alteri per alterum iniqua conditio inferri. A burdensome condition ought not to be brought upon one man by the act of another. Dig. 50. 17. 74.

Non debet, cui plus licet, quod minus est, non licere. He who is permitted to do the greater may with greater reason do the less. Dig. 50. 17. 21; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 165.

Non debit actori licere, quod reo non permittitur. That which is not permitted to the defendant ought not to be to the plaintiff. Dig. 50. 17. 41.

Non decet homines dedere causa non cognita. It is unbecoming to surrender men when no cause is shown. 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 106, 114; 3 Wheel. Crim. N. Y. 473, 482.

Non decipitur qui scit se decipi. He is not deceived who knows himself to be deceived. 5 Coke, 60.

Non definitur in jure quid sit conatus. What an attempt is, is not defined in law. 6 Coke, 42.

Non differunt quæ concordant re, tametsi non in verbis iisdem. Those things which agree in substance, though not in the same words, do not differ. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 70.

Non dubitatur, etsi specialiter venditor evictionem non promiserit, re evictâ, ex empto competere actionem. It is certain that although the vendor has not given a special guarantee, an action ex empto lies against him, if the purchaser is evicted. C. 8. 45. 6. But see Doctor & Stud. b. 2, c. 47; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 690.

Non efficit affectus nisi sequatur effectus. The intention amounts to nothing unless some effect follows. 1 Rolle, 226.

Non est arctius vinculum inter homines quam jusjurandum. There is no stronger link among men than an oath. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 126.

Non est certandum de regulis juris. There is no disputing about rules of law.

Non est disputandum contra principia negantem. There is no disputing against a man denying principles. Coke, Litt. 343.

Non est justum aliquem antenatum post mortem facere bastardum, qui toto tempore vitæ suæ pro legitimo habebatur. It is not just to make an elder-born a bastard after his death, who during his lifetime was accounted legitimate. 12 Coke, 44.

Non est novum ut priores legis ad posteriores trahantur. It is not a new thing that prior statutes shall give place to later ones. Dig. 1. 3. 26; 1. 1. 4; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 27.

Non est recedendum à communi observantiâ. There should be no departure from a common observance. 2 Coke, 74.

Non est regula quin fallat. There is no rule but what may fail. Off. Ex. 212.

Non est singulis concedendum, quod per magistratum publicè possit fieri, ne occasio sit majoris tumultus faciendi. That is not to be conceded to private persons which can be publicly done by the magistrate, lest it be the occasion of greater tumults. Dig. 50. 17. 176.

Non ex opinionibus singulorum, sed ex communi usu, nomina exaudiri debent. Names of things ought to be understood according to common usage, not according to the opinions of individuals. Dig. 33. 10. 7. 2.

Non facias malum, ut inde veniat bonum. You are not to do evil that good may come of it. 11 Coke, 74 a.

Non impedit clausula derogatoria, quo minus ab eadem potestate res dissolvantur a quibus constituuntur. A derogatory clause does not prevent things or acts from being dissolved by the same power, by which they were originally made. Bacon, Max. Reg. 19.

Non in legendo sed in intelligendo leges consistunt. The laws consist not in being read, but in being understood. 8 Coke, 167.

Non jus, sed seisina facit stipitem. Not right, but seisin, makes a stock from which the inheritance must descend. Fleta, l. 6, cc. 14, 2, § 2; Noy, Max. 9th ed. 72, n. (h); Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 466; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 209; 1 Stephen, Comm. 365, 368, 394; 4 Kent, Comm. 388, 389; 4 Scott, N. R. 468.

Non licet quod dispendio licet. That which is permitted only at a loss is not permitted to be done. Coke, Litt. 127.

Non nasci, et natum mori, paria sunt. Not to be born, and to be dead-born, are the same.

Non obligat lex nisi promulgata. A law is not obligatory unless it be promulgated.

Non observatâ formâ, infertur adnullatio actûs. When the form is not observed, it is inferred that the act is annulled. 12 Coke, 7.

Non officit conatus nisi sequatur effectus. An attempt does not harm unless a consequence follow. 11 Coke, 98.

Non omne damnum inducit injuriam. Not every loss produces an injury, i.e. gives a right of action. See 3 Blackstone, Comm. 219; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 131; Broom, Max. 93; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2211.

Non omne quod licet honestum est. It is not every thing which is permitted that is honorable. Dig. 50. 17. 144.

Non omnium quæ a majoribus nostris constituta sunt ratio reddi potest. A reason cannot always be given for the institutions of our ancestors. 4 Coke, 78; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 149; Branch, Princ.

Non possessori incumbit necessitas probandi possessiones ad se pertinere. It is not incumbent on the possessor of property to prove his right to his possessions. Code, 4. 19. 2; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 639.

Non potest adduci exceptio ejusdem rei cujus petitur dissolutio. A plea of the same matter, the dissolution of which is sought by the action, cannot be brought forward. Bacon, Max. Reg. 2. When an action is brought to annul a proceeding, the defendant cannot plead such proceeding in bar. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 154; Wingate, Max. 647; 3 P. Will. 317.

Non potest probari quod probatum non relevat. That cannot be proved which proved is irrelevant. See 1 Exch. 91, 92, 102.

Non potest quis sine brevi agere. No one can sue without a writ. Fleta, l. 2, c. 13, § 4.

Non potest rex gratiam facere cum injuriâ et damno aliorum. The king cannot confer a favor which occasions injury and loss to others. Coke, 3d Inst. 236; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 60; Vaugh. 338; 2 Ell. & B. 874.

Non potest rex subditum renitentem onerare impositionibus. The king cannot load a subject with imposition against his consent. Coke, 2d Inst. 61.

Non potest videri desisse habere, qui nunquam habuit. He cannot be considered as having ceased to have a thing, who never had it. Dig. 50. 17. 208.

Non præstat impedimentum quod de jure non sortitur effectum. A thing which has no effect in law is not an impediment. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 162; Wingate, Max. 727.

Non quod dictum est, sed quod factum est, inspicitur. Not what is said, but what is done, is to be regarded. Coke, Litt. 36; 6 Bingh. 310; 1 Metc. Mass. 353; 11 Cush. Mass. 536.

Non refert an quis assensum suum præfert verbis, an rebus ipsis et factis. It is immaterial whether a man gives his assent by words or by acts and deeds. 10 Coke, 52.

Non refert quid ex æquipollentibus fiat. It matters not what becomes of equipollent expressions. 5 Coke, 122.

Non refert quid notum sit judici, si notum non sit in formâ judicii. It matters not what is known to the judge, if it is not known to him judicially. 3 Bulstr. 115.

Non refert verbis an factis fit revocatio. It matters not whether a revocation be by words or by acts. Croke Car. 49; Branch, Princ.

Non remota causa sed proxima spectatur. See Causa Proxima.

Non respondebit minor, nisi in causâ dotis, et hoc pro favore doti. A minor shall not answer unless in a case of dower, and this in favor of dower. 4 Coke, 71.

Non reus nisi mens sit rea. Not guilty unless the intent be guilty. 1 Story, Contr. 4th ed. 87.

Non solent quæ abundant vitiare scripturas. Surplusage does not usually vitiate writings. Dig. 50. 17. 94; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 559, n.

Non solum quid licet, sed quid est conveniens considerandum, quia nihil quod inconveniens est licitum. Not only what is permitted, but what is convenient, is to be considered, because what is inconvenient is illegal. Coke, Litt. 66 a.

Non sunt longa ubi nihil est quod demere possis. There is no prolixity where there is nothing that can be omitted. Vaugh. 138.

Non temere credere, est nervus sapientiæ. Not to believe rashly is the nerve of wisdom. 5 Coke, 114.

Non valet exceptio ejusdem rei cujus petitur dissolutio. A plea of that of which the dissolution is sought is not valid. 2 Ed. Ch. 134.

Non valet impedimentum quod de jure non sortitur effectum. An impediment is of no avail which by law has no effect. 4 Coke, 31 a.

Non verbis sed ipsis rebus, leges imponimus. Not upon words, but upon things themselves, do we impose law. Code, 6. 43. 2.

Non videntur qui errant consentire. He who errs is not considered as consenting. Dig. 50. 17. 116; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 240; 2 Kent, Comm. 477; 14 Ga. 207.

Non videntur rem amittere quibus propria non fuit. They are not considered as losing a thing whose own it was not. Dig. 50. 17. 85.

Non videtur consensum retinuisse si quis ex præscripto minantis aliquid immutavit. He does not appear to have retained his consent, who has changed any thing at the command of a party threatening. Bacon, Max. Reg. 22; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 254.

Non videtur perfectè cujusque id esse, quod ex casu auferri potest. That does not truly belong to any one which can be taken from him upon occasion. Dig. 50. 17. 159. 1.

Non videtur quisquam id capere, quod ei necesse est alii restituere. One is not considered as acquiring property in a thing which he is bound to restore. Dig. 50. 17. 51.

Non videtur vim facere, qui jure suo utitur, et ordinaria actione experitur. He is not judged to use force who exercises his own right and proceeds by ordinary action. Dig. 50. 17. 155. 1.

Non volet confirmatio, nisi ille, qui confirmat, sit in possessione rei vel juris unde fieri debet confirmatio; et eodem modo, nisi ille cui confirmatio fit, sit in possessione. Confirmation is not valid unless he who confirms is either in possession of the thing itself, or of the right of which confirmation is to be made, and, in like manner, unless he to whom confirmation is made is in possession. Coke, Litt. 295.

Noscitur à sociis. It is known from its associates. The meaning of a word may be ascertained by reference to the meaning of words associated with it. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 523; 9 East, 267; 13 id. 531; 6 Taunt. 294; 1 Ventr. 225; 1 Barnew. & C. 644; Arg. 10 id. 496, 519; 18 C. B. 102, 893; 5 Mann. & G. 639, 667; 3 C. Noscitur ex socio, qui non cognoscitur ex se. He who cannot be known from himself may be known from his associate. F. Moore, 817; 1 Ventr. 225; 3 Term, 87; 9 East, 267; 13 id. 531; 6 Taunt. 294; 1 Barnew. & C. 644.

Notitia dicitur à noscendo; et notitia non debet claudicare. Notice is called from a knowledge being had; and notice ought not to halt, i.e. be imperfect. 6 Coke, 29.

Nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet, non præteritis. A new enactment ought to impose form upon what is to come, not upon what is past. Coke, 2d Inst. 292; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 33, 36; T. Jones, 108; 2 Show. 16; 6 Mees. & W. Exch. 285; 7 id. 536; 2 Mass. 122; 2 Gall. C. C. 139; 2 N. Y. 245; 7 Johns. N. Y. 503 et seq., where this rule is fully considered and the authorities reviewed.

Novatio non præsumitur. A novation is not presumed. Halkers, Max. 104.

Novitas non tam utilitate prodest quam novitate perturbat. Novelty benefits not so much by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 167.

Novum judicium non dat novum jus, sed declarat antiquum. A new judgment does not make a new law, but declares the old. 10 Coke, 42.

Noxa sequitur caput. The injury (i.e. liability to make good an injury caused by a slave) follows the head or person, i.e. attaches to his master. Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. l. 4, t. 8, § 1231.

Nuda pactio obligationem non parit. A naked promise does not create an obligation. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 4; Code, 4. 65. 27; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 670; Brisson, Nudus.

Nuda ratio et nuda pactio non ligant aliquem debitorem. Naked reason and naked promise do not bind any debtor. Fleta, l. 2, c. 60, § 25.

Nudum pactum est ubi nulla subest causa propter conventionem; sed ubi subest causa, fit obligatio, et parit actionem. Nudum pactum is where there is no consideration for the undertaking or agreement; but when there is a consideration, an obligation is created and an action arises. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 4; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 445; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 669; Plowd. 309; 1 Powell, Contr. 330 et seq.; 3 Burr. 1670 et seq.; Viner, Abr. Nudum Pactum (A); 1 Fonblanque, Eq. 5th ed. 335 a.

Nudum pactum ex quo non oritur actio. Nudum pactum is that upon which no action arises. Code, 2. 3. 10; 5. 14. 1; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 676.

Nul ne doit s'enrichir aux dépens des autres. No one ought to enrich himself at the expense of others.

Nul prendra advantage de son tort demesne. No one shall take advantage of his own wrong. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 265.

Nulla curia quæ recordum non habet potest imponere finem, neque aliquem mandare carceri; quia ista spectant tantummodo ad curias de recordo. No court which has not a record can impose a fine, or commit any person to prison: because those powers belong only to courts of record. 8 Coke, 60.

Nulla impossibilia aut inhonesta sunt præsumenda; vera autem et honesta et possibilia. No impossible or dishonorable things are to be presumed; but things true, honorable, and possible. Coke, Litt. 78.

Nullâ pactione effici potest ne dolus præstetur. By no agreement can it be effected that there shall be no accountability for fraud. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 3; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 622, 118, n.; 5 Maule & S. 466.

Nulle régle sans faute. There is no rule without a fault.

Nulle terre sans seigneur. No land without a lord. Guyot, Inst. Feod. c. 28.

Nulli enim res sua servit jure servitutis. No one can have a servitude over his own property. Dig. 8. 2. 26; 17 Mass. 443; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1600.

Nullius hominis auctoritas apud nos valere debet, ut meliora non sequeremur si quis attulerit. The authority of no man ought to avail with us, that we should not follow better [opinions] should any one present them. Coke, Litt. 383 b.

Nullum crimen majus est inobedientiâ. No crime is greater than disobedience. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 77.

Nullum exemplum est idem omnibus. No example is the same for all purposes. Coke, Litt. 212 a.

Nullum iniquum est præsumendum in jure. Nothing unjust is to be presumed in law. 4 Coke, 72.

Nullum matrimonium, ibi nulla dos. No marriage, no dower. 4 Barb. N. Y. 192, 194.

Nullum simile est idem. Nothing which is like another is the same, i.e. no likeness is exact identity. 2 Stor. C. C. 512; Story, Partn. 90; Coke, Litt. 3 a; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 162.

Nullum simile quatuor pedibus currit. No simile runs upon four feet, or, as ordinarily expressed, "on all fours." Coke, Litt. 3 a; Eunomus, Dial. 2 p. 155; 1 Stor. C. C. 143.

Nullum tempus occurrit regi. Lapse of time does not bar the right of the crown. Coke, 2d Inst. 273;

1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 247; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. 62; Hob. 347; 2 Stephen, Comm. 504; 1 Mass. 355; 2 Brock. C. C. 393; 18 Johns. N. Y. 227; 10 Barb. N. Y. 139.

Nullum tempus occurrit reipublicæ. Lapse of time does not bar the commonwealth. 11 Grat. 572; Hilliard, Real Prop. 173; 8 Tex. 410; 16 id. 305; 5 McLean, C. C. 133; 19 Mo. 667.

Nullus commodum capere potest de injuriâ suâ propriâ. No one shall take advantage of his own wrong. Coke, Litt. 148 b; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 265; 4 Bingh. N. C. 395; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 409; 10 Mees. & W. Exch. 309; 11 id. 680.

Nullus debet agere de dolo, ubi alia actio subest. Where another form of action is given, no one ought to sue in the action de dolo. 7 Coke, 92.

Nullus dicitur accessorius post feloniam sed ille qui novit principalem feloniam fecisse, et illum receptavit et comfortavit. No one is called an accessory after the fact but he who knew the principal to have committed a felony, and received and comforted him. Coke, 3d Inst. 138.

Nullus dicitur felo principalis nisi actor, aut qui præsens est, abettans aut auxilians actorem ad feloniam faciendam. No one shall be called a principal felon except the party actually committing the felony, or the party present aiding and abetting in its commission. Coke, 3d Inst. 138.

Nullus idoneus testis in re suâ intelligitur. No one is understood to be a competent witness in his own cause. Dig. 22. 5. 10; 1 Sumn. C. C. 328, 344.

Nullus jus alienum foriafacere potest. No man can forfeit another's right. Fleta, l. 1, c. 28, § 11.

Nullus recedat e curiâ cancellariâ sine remedio. No one ought to depart out of the court of chancery without a remedy. Year B. 4 Hen. VII. 4.

Nullus videtur dolo facere qui suo jure utitur. No man is to be esteemed a wrong-doer who avails himself of his legal right. Dig. 50. 17. 55; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 124, 118, n. (q); 14 Wend. N. Y. 399, 492.

Nunquam crescit ex post facto præteriti delicti æstimatio. The quality of a past offence is never aggravated by that which happens subsequent. Dig. 50. 17. 138. 1; Bacon, Max. Reg. 8; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 41.

Nunquam decurritur ad extraordinarium sed ubi deficit ordinarium. We are never to recur to what is extraordinary, till what is ordinary fails. Coke, 4th Inst. 84.

Nunquam fictio sine lege. There is no fiction without law.

Nunquam nimis dicitur quod nunquam satis dicitur. What is never sufficiently said is never said too much. Coke, Litt. 375.

Nunquam præscribitur in falso. There is never prescription in case of falsehood (crimen falsi). Bell, Dict.

Nunquam res humanæ prosperè succedunt ubi negliguntur divinæ. Human things never prosper when divine things are neglected. Coke, Litt. 95; Wingate, Max. 2.

Nuptias non concubitus, sed consensus facit. Not co-habitation but consent makes the marriage. Dig. 50. 17. 30; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 239; Coke, Litt. 33.

Obedientia est legis essentia. Obedience is the essence of the law. 11 Coke, 100.

Obtemperandum est consuetudini rationabili tanquam legi. A reasonable custom is to be obeyed like law. 4 Coke, 38.

Occupantis fiunt derelicta. Things abandoned become the property of the (first) occupant. 1 Pet. Adm. 53.

Odiosa et inhonesta non sunt in lege præsumanda. Odious and dishonest acts are not presumed in law. Coke, Litt. 78; 6 Wend. N. Y. 228, 231; 18 N. Y. 295, 300.

Odiosa non præsumuntur. Odious things are not presumed. Burr. Sett. Cas. 190.

Officers may not examine the judicial acts of the court.

Officia judicialia non concedantur antequam vacent. Judicial offices ought not to be granted before they are vacant. 11 Coke, 4.

Officia magistratus non debent esse venalia. The offices of magistrates ought not to be sold. Coke, Litt. 234.

Officit conatus si effectus sequatur. The attempt becomes of consequence, if the effect follows.

Officium nemini debet esse damnosum. An office ought to be injurious to no one. Bell, Dict.

Omissio eorum quæ tacite insunt nihil operatur. The omission of those things which are silently expressed is of no consequence. 2 Bulstr. 131.

Omne actum ab intentione agentis est judicandum. Every act is to be estimated by the intention of the doer. Branch, Princ.

Omne crimen ebrietas et incendit et detegit. Drunkenness inflames and reveals every crime. Coke, Litt. 247.

Omne jus aut consensus fecit, aut necessitas constituit, aut firmavit consuetudo. All law has either been derived from the consent of the people, established by necessity, or confirmed by custom. Dig. 1. 3. 40; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 616, n.

Omne magis dignum trahit ad se minus dignum sit antiquius. Every worthier thing draws to it the less worthy, though the latter be more ancient. Coke, Litt. 355.

Omne magnum exemplum habet aliquid ex iniquo, quod publicâ utilitate compensatur. Every great example has some portion of evil, which is compensated by its public utility. Hob. 279.

Omne majus continet in se minus. The greater contains in itself the less. 5 Coke, 115 a; Wingate, Max. 206; Story, Ag. § 172; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 173.

Omne majus dignum continet in se minus dignum. The more worthy contains in itself the less worthy. Coke, Litt. 143.

Omne majus minus in se complectitur. Every greater embraces in itself the minor. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 208.

Omne principale trahit ad se accessorium. Every principal thing draws to itself the accessory. 17 Mass. 425; 1 Johns. N. Y. 580.

Omne quod inædificatur solo cedit. Every thing belongs to the soil which is built upon it. Dig. 41. 1. 7. 10; 47. 3. 1; Inst. 2. 1. 29; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 355; Fleta, l. 3, c. 2, § 12.

Omne sacramentum debet esse de certa scientiâ. Every oath ought to be founded on certain knowledge. Coke, 4th Inst. 279.

Omne testamentum morte consummatum est. Every will is consummated by death. 3 Coke, 29 b; 4 id. 61 b; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 500; Sheppard, Touchst. 401.

Omnes actiones in mundo infra certa tempora habent limitationem. All actions in the world are limited within certain periods. Bracton, 52.

Omnes homines aut liberi sunt aut servi. All men are freemen or slaves. Inst. 1. 3. pr.; Fleta, l. 1, c. 1, § 2.

Omnes licentiam habere his quæ pro se indulta sunt, renunciare. All shall have liberty to renounce those things which have been established in their favor. Code, 2. 3. 29; 1. 3. 51; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 625.

Omnia præsumuntur ritè et solenniter esse acta. All things are presumed to have been rightly and regularly done. Coke, Litt. 232 b; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 847; 12 C. B. 788; 3 Exch. 191; 6 id. 716. Omnia ritè esse acta præsumuntur. 11 Cush. Mass. 441; 2 Ohio St. 246, 247; 4 id. 148; 6 id. 293.

Omnia præsumuntur ritè et solenniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to have been done regularly and with due formality until the contrary is proved. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 157, 849; 3 Bingh. 381; 2 Campb. 44; 1 Crompt. & M. Exch. 461; 17 C. B. 183; 5 Barnew. & Ad. 550; 12 Mees. & W. Exch. 251; 12 Wheat. 69, 70.

Omnes prudentes, illa admittere solent quæ probantur iis qui in arte suâ bene versati sunt. All prudent men are accustomed to admit those things which are approved by those who are well versed in the art. 7 Coke, 19.

Omnia delicta in aperto leviora sunt. All crimes committed openly are considered lighter. 8 Coke, 127.

Omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorem. All things are presumed against a wrong-doer. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 843.

Omnia præsumuntur legitime facta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to be done legitimately until the contrary is proved. Coke, Litt. 232.

Omnia præsumuntur rite esse acta. All things are presumed to be done in due form. Coke, Litt. 6.

Omnia quæ jure contrahuntur, contrario jure pereunt. Obligations contracted under a law are destroyed by a law to the contrary. Dig. 50. 17. 100.

Omnia quæ sunt uxoris sunt ipsius viri. All things which are the wife's belong to the husband. Coke, Litt. 112; 2 Kent. Comm. 130, 143.

Omnis actio est loquela. Every action is a complaint. Coke, Litt. 292.

Omnis conclusio boni et veri judicii sequitur ex bonis et veris præmissis et dictis juratorum. Every conclusion of a good and true judgment arises from good and true premises, and the verdicts of jurors. Coke, Litt. 226.

Omnis consensus tollit errorem. Every consent removes error. Coke, 2d Inst. 123.

Omnis definitio in jure civili periculosa est, parum est enim ut non subverti possit. Every definition in the civil law is dangerous, for there is very little that cannot be overthrown. There is no rule in the civil law which is not liable to some exception; and the least difference in the facts of the case renders its application useless. Dig. 50. 17. 202; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 196.

Omnis definitio in jure periculosa est; parum est enim ut non subverti posset. Every definition in law is perilous, for it is within an ace of being subverted. Dig. 50. 17. 202; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 196.

Omnis exceptio est ipsa quoque regula. An exception is in itself also a rule.

Omnis innovatio plus novitate perturbat quam utilitate prodest. Every innovation disturbs more by its novelty than it benefits by its utility. 2 Bulstr. 338; 1 Salk. 20.

Omnis interpretatio si fieri potest ita fienda est in instrumentis, ut omnes contrarietates amoveantur. The interpretation of instruments is to be made, if they will admit of it, so that all contradictions may be removed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 96.

Omnis interpretatio vel declarat, vel extendit, vel restringit. Every interpretation either declares, extends, or restrains.

Omnis nova constitutio futuris temporibus formum imponere debet, non præteritis. Every new statute ought to set its stamp upon the future, not the past. Bracton, 228; Coke, 2d Inst. 95.

Omnis persona est homo, sed non vicissim. Every person is a man, but not every man a person. Calvinus, Lex.

Omnis privatio præsupponit habitum. Every privation presupposes former enjoyment. Coke, Litt. 339.

Omnis querela et omnis actio injuriarum limitata est infra certa tempora. Every plaint and every action for injuries is limited within certain times. Coke, Litt. 114.

Omnis ratihabitio retro trahitur et mandato æquiparatur. Every subsequent ratification has a retrospective effect, and is equivalent to a prior command. Coke, Litt. 207 a; Story, Ag. 4th ed. 102; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 715; 2 Bouvier, Inst. 25; 4 id. 26; 8 Wheat. 363; 7 Exch. 726; 10 id. 845; 9 C. B. 532, 607; 14 id. 53.

Omnis regula suas patitur exceptiones. Every rule of law is liable to its own exceptions.

Omnium contributione sarciatur quod pro omnibus datum est. What is given for all shall be compensated for by the contribution of all. 4 Bingh. 121; 2 Marsh. 309.

Omnium rerum quarum usus est, potest esse abusus, virtute solâ exceptâ. There may be an abuse of every thing of which there is an use, virtue only excepted. Dav. 79.

Once a fraud, always a fraud. 13 Viner. Abr. 539.

Once a mortgage, always a mortgage. 1 Hilliard, Real Prop. 378.

Once a recompense, always a recompense. 19 Viner, Abr. 277.

Once quit and cleared, ever quit and cleared. Skene. de verb. sign. iter ad fin.

One may not do an act to himself.

One should be just before he is generous.

Opinio quæ favet testamento est tenenda. That opinion is to be followed which favors the will.

Oportet quod certæ personæ, terræ, et certi status, comprehendantur in declaratione usuum. It is necessary that certain persons, lands, and estates be comprehended in a declaration of uses. 9 Coke, 9.

Oportet quod certa res deducatur in judicium. A thing, to be brought to judgment, must be certain or definite. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 84; Bracton, 15 b.

Oportet quod certa sit res quæ venditur. A thing, to be sold, must be certain or definite.

Opposita juxta se posita magis elucescunt. Opposites placed next each other appear in a clearer light. 4 Bacon, Works, 256, 258, 353.

Optima enim est legis interpres consuetudo. Usage is the best interpreter of law. Coke, 2d Inst. 18; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 823.

Optima est lex, quæ minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis. That is the best system of law which confides as little as possible to the discretion of the judge. Bacon, Aph. 46.

Optima statuti interpretatrix est (omnibus particulis ejusdem inspectis) ipsum statutum. The best interpretress of a statute is (all the separate parts being considered) the statute itself. 8 Coke, 117; Wingate, Max. 239, max. 68.

Optimam esse legem, quæ minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis; id quod certitudo ejus præstat. That law is the best which leaves the least discretion to the judge; and this is an advantage which results from its certainty. Bacon, Aph. 8.

Optimus interpres rerum usus. Usage is the best interpreter of things. Coke, 2d Inst. 282.

Optimus interpretandi modus est sic legis interpretare ut leges legibus accordant. The best mode of interpreting laws is to make them accord. 8 Coke, 169.

Optimus judex, qui minimum sibi. He is the best judge who relies as little as possible on his own discretion. Bacon, Aph. 46.

Optimus legum interpres consuetudo. Custom is the best interpreter of laws. Coke, 4th Inst. 75; 2 Parsons, Contr. 53.

Ordine placitandi servato, servatur et jus. The order of pleading being preserved, the law is preserved. Coke, Litt. 303.

Origine propriâ neminem posse voluntate suâ eximi manifestum est. It is manifest that no one by his own will can renounce his origin (put off or discharge his natural allegiance). Code, 10. 34.

4. See 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. c. 10; 20 Johns. N. Y. 313; 3 Pet. 122, 246; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 74.

Origo rei inspici debet. The origin of a thing ought to be inquired into. 1 Coke, 99.

Paci sunt maxime contraria, vis et injuria. Force and wrong are especially contrary to peace. Coke, Litt. 161.

Pacta conventa, quæ neque contra leges, neque dolo malo inita sunt, omni modo observanda sunt. Contracts which are not illegal, and do not originate in fraud, must in all respects be observed. Cod. 2. 3. 29; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 624.

Pacta dant legem contractui. Agreements give the law to the contract. Halkers, Max. 118.

Pacta privata juri publico derogare non possunt. Private contracts cannot derogate from the public law. 7 Coke, 23.

Pacta quæ contrà leges constitutionesque vel contrà bonos mores fiunt, nullam vim habere, indubitati juris est. It is indubitable law that contracts against the laws, or good morals, have no force. Cod. 2. 3. 6; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 620.

Pacta quæ turpem causam continent non sunt observanda. Contracts founded upon an immoral consideration are not to be observed. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 4; 2 Pet. 539; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 658.

Pactis privatorum juri publico non derogatur. Private contracts do not derogate from public law. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 621; per Dr. Lushington, Arg. 4 Clark & F. Hou. L. 241; Arg. 3 id. 621.

Pacto aliquod licitum est, quid sine pacto non admittitur. By a contract something is permitted, which, without it, could not be admitted. Coke, Litt. 166.

Par in parem imperium non habet. An equal has no power over an equal. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 174. Example: One of two judges of the same court cannot commit the other for contempt.

Parens est nomen generale ad omne genus cognationis. Parent is a general name for every kind of relationship. Coke, Litt. 80; Littleton, § 108; Mag. Cart. Joh. c. 50.

Paria copulantur paribus. Similar things unite with similar.

Paribus sententiis reus absolvitur. When opinions are equal, a defendant is acquitted. Coke, 4th Inst. 64.

Parols font plea. Words make the plea. 5 Mod. 458; Year B. 19 Hen. VI. 48.

Parte quacumque integrante sublata, tollitur totum. An integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away. 8 Coke, 41.

Partus ex legitimo thoro non certius noscit matrem quam genitorem suam. The offspring of a legitimate bed knows not his mother more certainly than his father. Fortescue, c. 42.

Partus sequitur ventrem. The offspring follow the condition of the mother. Inst. 2. 1. 19. This is the law in the case of slaves and animals, 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 167, 502; but with regard to freemen, children follow the condition of the father.

Parum cavet natura. Nature takes little heed. 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 127, 166.

Parum differunt quæ re concordant. Things differ but little which agree in substance. 2 Bulstr. 86.

Parum est latam esse sententiam, nisi mandetur executioni. It is not enough that sentence should be given unless it be committed to execution. Coke, Litt. 289.

Parum proficit scire quid fieri debet, si non cognoscas quomodo sit facturum. It avails little to know what ought to be done, if you do not know how it is to be done. Coke, 2d Inst. 503.

Pater is est quem nuptiæ demonstrant. The father is he whom the marriage points out. 1 Blackst. Comm. 446; 7 Mart. N. S. 548, 553; Dig. 2. 4. 5; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 273, 304, 322; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 458.

Patria laboribus et expensis non debet fatigari. A jury ought not to be harassed by labors and expenses. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 6.

Patria potestas in pietate debet, non in atrocitate consistere. Paternal power should consist in affection, not in atrocity.

Peccata contra naturam sunt gravissima. Offences against nature are the heaviest. Coke, 3d Inst. 20.

Peccatum peccato addit qui culpæ quam facit patrocinium defensionis adjungit. He adds one offence to another, who, when he commits a crime, joins to it the protection of a defence. 5 Coke, 49.

Pendente lite nihil innovetur. During a litigation nothing should be changed. Coke, Litt. 344. See 20 How. 106; Cross, Lien, 140; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 406; 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 441; 6 Barb. N. Y. 33.

Per alluvionem id videtur adjici, quod ita paulatim adjicitur, ut intelligere non possumus quantum quoquo momento temporis adjiciatur. That is said to be added by alluvion which is so added little by little that we cannot tell how much is added at any one moment of time. Dig. 41. 1. 7. 1; Hale, de Jur. Mar. pars 1, c. 4; Fleta, l. 3, c. 2, § 6.

Per rationes perveniter ad legitimam rationem. By reasoning we come to legal reason. Littleton, § 386.

Per rerum naturam, factum negantis nulla probatio est. It is in the nature of things that he who denies a fact is not bound to give proof.

Per varios actus, legem experientia facit. By various acts experience frames the law. Coke, 4th Inst. 50.

Perfectum est cui nihil deest secundum suæ perfectionis vel naturæ modum. That is perfect which wants nothing according to the measure of its perfection or nature. Hob. 151.

Periculosum est res novas et inusitatas inducere. It is dangerous to introduce new and unaccustomed things. Coke, Litt. 379.

Periculosum existimo quod bonorum virorum non comprobatur exemplo. I think that dangerous which is not warranted by the example of good men. 9 Coke, 97.

Periculum rei venditæ, nondum traditæ, est emptoris. The purchaser runs the risk of the loss of a thing sold, though not delivered. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 939; 2 Kent, Comm. 498, 499; 4 Barnew. & C. 481, 941.

Perjuri sunt qui servatis verbis juramenti decipiunt aures eorum qui accipiunt. They are perjured who, preserving the words of an oath, deceive the ears of those who receive it. Coke, 3d Inst. 166.

Perpetua lex est, nullam legem humanam ac positivam perpetuam esse; et clausula quæ abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet. It is a perpetual law that no human or positive law can be perpetual; and a clause in a law which precludes the power of abrogation is void ab initio. Bacon, Max. Reg. 19; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 27.

Perpetuities are odious in law and equity.

Persona conjuncta æquiparatur interesse proprio. The interest of a personal connection is sometimes regarded in law as that of the individual himself. Bacon, Max. Reg. 18; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 474.

Persona est homo, cum statu quodam consideratus. A person is a man considered with reference to a certain status. Heineccius, Elem. Jur. Civ. l. 1, tit. 3, § 75.

Personæ vice fungitur municipium et decuria. Towns and boroughs act as if persons. 23 Wend. N. Y. 103, 144.

Personal things cannot be done by another. Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 14.

Personal things cannot be granted over. Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 15.

Personal things die with the person. Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 16.

Perspicua vera non sunt probanda. Plain truths need not be proved. Coke, Litt. 16.

Piruta est hostis humani generis. A pirate is an enemy of the human race. Coke, 3d Inst. 113.

Plena et celeris justitia fiat partibus. Let full and speedy justice be done to the parties. Coke, 4th Inst. 67.

Pluralis numerus est duobus contentus. The plural number is contained in two. 1 Rolle, 476.

Pluralities are odious in law.

Plures cohæredes sunt quasi unum corpus, propter unitatem juris quod habent. Several co-heirs are as one body, by reason of the unity of right which they possess. Coke, Litt. 163.

Plures participes sunt quasi unum corpus, in eo quod unum jus habent. Several part-owners are as one body, by reason of the unity of their rights. Coke, Litt. 164.

Plus exempla quam peccata nocent. Examples hurt more than offences.

Plus peccat auctor quam actor. The instigator of a crime is worse than he who perpetrates it. 5 Coke, 99.

Plus valet unus oculatus testis, quam auriti decem. One eye-witness is better than ten ear-ones. Coke, 4th Inst. 279.

Plus vident oculi quam oculus. Eyes see more than one eye. Coke, 4th Inst. 160.

Pœna ad paucos, metus ad omnes. Punishment to few, dread or fear to all.

Pœna ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat. If punishment be inflicted on a few, a dread comes to all.

Pœna ex delicto defuncti, hæres teneri non debet. The heir ought not to be bound in a penalty inflicted for the crime of the ancestor. Coke, 2d Inst. 198.

Pœna non potest, culpa perennis erit. Punishment cannot be, crime will be, perpetual. 21 Viner, Abr. 271.

Pœnæ potius molliendæ quam exasperondæ sunt. Punishments should rather be softened than aggravated. Coke, 3d Inst. 220.

Pœnæ sint restringendæ. Punishments should be restrained. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 29.

Pœnæ suos tenere debet actores et non alios. Punishment ought to be inflicted upon the guilty, and not upon others. Bracton, 380 b; Fleta, l. 1, c. 38, § 12; l. 4, c. 17, § 17.

Politiæ legibus non leges politiis adaptandæ. Politics are to be adapted to the laws, and not the laws to politics. Hob. 154.

Ponderantur testes non numerantur. Witnesses are weighed, not counted. 1 Starkie, Ev. 554; Best, Ev. 426, § 389; 14 Wend. N. Y. 105, 109.

Posito uno oppositorum negatur alterum. One of two opposite positions being affirmed, the other is denied. 3 Rolle, 422.

Possessio est quasi pedis positio. Possession is, as it were, the position of the foot. 3 Coke, 42.

Possessio fratris de feodo simplici facit sororem esse hæredem. Possession of the brother in fee-simple makes the sister to be heir. 3 Coke, 42; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 227; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 473.

Possessio pacifica pour anns 60 facit jus. Peaceable possession for sixty years gives a right. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 26.

Possession is a good title, where no better title appears. 20 Viner, Abr. 278.

Possession of the termor, possession of the reversioner.

Possessor has right against all men but him who has the very right.

Possibility cannot be on a possibility.

Posteriora derogant prioribus. Posterior things derogate from things prior. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 90.

Postliminium fingit eum qui captus est in civitate semper fuisse. Postliminy feigns that he who has been captured has never left the state. Inst. 1. 12. 5; Dig. 49. 51.

Potentia debet sequi justitiam, non antecedere. Power ought to follow, not to precede justice. 3 Bulstr. 199.

Potentia inutilis frustra est. Useless power is vain.

Potentia non est nisi ad bonum. Power is not conferred but for the public good.

Potest quis renunciare pro se, et suis, jus quod pro se introductum est. A man may relinquish, for himself and those claiming under him, a right which was introduced for his own benefit. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 83.

Potestas strictè interpretatur. Power should be strictly interpreted. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 17.

Potestas suprema seipsum dissolvare potest, ligare non potest. Supreme power can dissolve, but cannot bind itself. Bacon, Max. Reg. 19.

Potior est conditio defendentis. Better is the condition of the defendant, than that of the plaintiff. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 664; 15 Pet. 471.

Potior est conditio possidentis. Better is the condition of the possessor. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 201, n.

Præpropera consilia, raro sunt prospera. Hasty counsels are seldom prosperous. Coke, 4th Inst. 57.

Præscriptio est titulus ex usu et tempore substantiam capiens ab auctoritate legis. Prescription is a title by authority of law, deriving its force from use and time. Coke, Litt. 113.

Præscriptio et executio non pertinent ad valorem contractus, sed ad tempus et modum actionis instituendæ. Prescription and the execution of a contract do not affect the validity of the contract, but the time and manner of bringing an action. 3 Mass. 84; Decouche vs. Savetier, 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 190, 219.

Præsentare nihil aliud est quam præsto dare seu offerre. To present is no more than to give or offer on the spot. Coke, Litt. 120.

Præsentia corporis tollit errorem nominis, et veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis. The presence of the body cures the error in the name; the truth of the name cures an error in the description. Bacon, Max. Reg. 25; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 568; 6 Coke, 66; 3 Barnew. & Ad. 640; 6 Term, 675; 11 C. B. 996; 1 Hou. L. Cas. 792; 3 De Gex, M. & G. Ch. 140.

Præstat cautela quam medela. Prevention is better than cure. Coke, Litt. 304.

Præsumatur pro justitia sententiæ. The justice of a sentence should be presumed. Best, Ev. Int. 42; Mascardus de prob. conc. 1237. n. 2.

Præsumitur pro legitimatione. Legitimacy is to be presumed. 5 Coke, 98 b; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 457.

Præsumitur pro legitimatione. There is a presumption in favor of legitimation. 5 Coke, 98 b; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 457.

Præsumptio, ex eo quod plerumque fit. Presumptions arise from what generally happens. 22 Wend. N. Y. 425, 475.

Præsumptio violenta, plena probatio. Violent presumption is full proof.

Præsumptio violenta valet in lege. Strong presumption avails in law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 58.

Præsumptiones sunt conjecturæ ex signo verisimili ad probandum assumptæ. Presumptions are conjectures from probable proof, assumed for purposes of evidence. J. Voet. ad Pand. l. 22, tit. 3, n. 14.

Prætextu liciti non debet admitti illicitum. Under pretext of legality, what is illegal ought not to be admitted. 10 Coke, 88.

Praxis judicum est interpres legum. The practice of the judges is the interpreter of the laws. Hob. 96; Branch, Princ.

Precedents have as much law as justice.

Precedents that pass sub-silentio are of little or no authority. 16 Viner, Abr. 499.

Pretium succedit in locum rei. The price stands in the place of the thing sold. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 939; 2 Bulstr. 312.

Previous intentions are judged by subsequent acts. 4 Den. N. Y. 319, 320.

Prima pars æquitatis æqualitas. The radical element of justice is equality.

Primo excutienda est verbi vis, ne sermonis vitio obstructur oratio, sive lex sine argumentis. The force of a word is to be first examined, lest by the fault of diction the sentence be destroyed or the law be without arguments. Coke, Litt. 68.

Princeps et respublica ex justâ causâ possunt rem meam auferre. The king and the commonwealth for a just cause can take away my property. 12 Coke, 13.

Princeps legibus solutus est. The emperor is free from laws. Dig. 1. 3. 31; Hallifax, Anal. pref. vi, vii, note.

Principalis debet semper excuti antequam perveniatur ad fidei jussores. The principal should always be exhausted before coming upon the sureties. Coke, 2d Inst. 19.

Principia data sequuntur concomitantia. Given principles are followed by their concomitants.

Principia probant, non probantur. Principles prove, they are not proved. 3 Coke, 40. See PRINCIPLES.

Principiis obsta. Oppose beginnings. Branch, Princ.

Principiorum non est ratio. There is no reasoning of principles. 2 Bulstr. 239. See PRINCIPLES.

Principium est potissima pars cujusque rei. The beginning is the most powerful part of a thing. 10 Coke, 49.

Quærere dat sopere quæ sunt legitima verè. To investigate is the way to know what things are really lawful. Littleton, § 443.

Qualitas quæ inesse debet, facile præsumitur. A quality which ought to form a part is easily presumed.

Quam longum debet esse rationabile tempus, non definitur in lege, sed pendet ex discretione justiciariorum. What is reasonable time the law does not define; it is left to the discretion of the judges. Coke, Litt. 56. See 11 Coke, 44.

Quam rationabilis debet esse finis, non definitur, sed omnibus circumstantiis inspectis pendet ex justiciariorum discretione. What a reasonable fine ought to be is not defined, but is left to the discretion of the judges, all the circumstances being considered. 11 Coke, 44.

Quamvis aliquid per se non sit malum, tamen si sit mali exempli, non est faciendum. Although in itself a thing may not be bad, yet if it holds out a bad example it is not to be done. Coke, 2d Inst. 564.

Quamvis lex generaliter loquitur, restringenda tamen est, ut cessante ratione et ipsa cessat. Although the law speaks generally, it is to be restrained, since when the reason on which it is founded fails, it fails. Coke, 4th Inst. 330.

Quando abest provisio partis, adest provisio legis. When a provision of the party is lacking, the provision of the law is at hand. 13 C. B. 960.

Quando aliquid conceditur, conceditur id sine quo illud fieri non possit. When any thing is granted, that also is granted without which it cannot be of effect. 9 Barb. N. Y. 516, 518; 10 id. 354, 359.

Quando aliquid mandatur, mandatur et omne per quod pervenitur ad illud. When any thing is commanded, every thing by which it can be accomplished is also commanded. 5 Coke, 116. See 7 C. B. 886; 14 id. 107; 6 Exch. 886, 889; 10 id. 449; 2 Ell. & B. 301; Story, Ag. 4th ed. 110, 179, 242, 299; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 431.

Quando aliquid per se non sit malum, tamen si sit mali exempli, non est faciendum. When any thing by itself is not evil, and yet may be an example for evil, it is not to be done. Coke, 2d Inst. 564.

Quando aliquid prohibetur ex directo, prohibetur et per obliquum. When any thing is prohibited directly, it is also prohibited indirectly. Coke, Litt. 223.

Quando aliquid prohibetur, prohibetur omne per quod devenitur ad illud. When any thing is prohibited, every thing by which it is reached is prohibited. Coke, 2d Inst. 48; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 432; Wingate, Max. 618. See 7 Clark & F. Hou. L. 509, 546; 4 Barnew. & C. 187, 193; 2 Term, 251, 252; 8 id. 301, 415; 15 Mees. & W. Exch. 7; 11 Wend. N. Y. 329.

Quando aliquis aliquid concedit, concedere videtur et id sine quo res uti non potest. When a person grants a thing, he is supposed to grant that also without which the thing cannot be used. 3 Kent, Comm. 421.

Quando charta continet generalem clausulam, posteaque descendit ad verba specialia quæ clausulæ generali sunt consentanea, interpretanda est charta secundum verba specialia. When a deed contains a general clause, and afterwards descends to special words, consistent with the general clause, the deed is to be construed according to the special words. 8 Coke, 154.

Quando de unâ et eâdem re, duo onerabiles existunt, unus, pro insufficientiâ alterius, de integro onerabitur. When two persons are liable concerning one and the same thing, if one makes default the other must bear the whole. Coke, 2d Inst. 277.

Quando dispositio referri potest ad duas res, ita quod secundum relationem unam vitiatur et secundum alteram utilis sit, tum facienda est relatio ad illam ut valeat dispositio. When a disposition may be made to refer to two things, so that according to one reference it would be vitiated and by the other it would be made effectual, such a reference must be made that the disposition shall have effect. 6 Coke, 76 b.

Quando diversi desiderantur actus ad aliquem statum perficiendum, plus respicit lex actum originalem. When different acts are required to the formation of an estate, the law chiefly regards the original act. 10 Coke, 49.

Quando duo jura concurrent in unâ personâ, æquum est ac si essent in diversis. When two rights concur in one person, it is the same as if they were in two separate persons. 4 Coke, 118.

Quando jus domini regis et subditi concurrunt jus regis præferri debet. When the right of the sovereign and of the subject concur, the right of the sovereign ought to be preferred. 1 Coke, 129; Coke, Litt 30 b; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 66.

Quando lex aliquid alicui concedit, concedere videtur id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest. When the law gives any thing, it gives the means of obtaining it. 5 Coke, 47; 3 Kent, Comm. 421.

Quando lex aliquid alicui concedit, omnia incidentia tacitè conceduntur. When the law gives any thing, it gives tacitly what is incident to it. Coke, 2d Inst. 326; Hob. 234.

Quando lex aliquid aliquo concedit, conceditur et id sine qua res ipsa esse non potest. When the law grants a thing to any one, it grants that also without which the thing itself cannot exist. 15 Barb. N. Y. 153, 160.

Quando lex est specialis, ratio autem generalis, generaliter lex est intelligenda. When the law is special, but its reason is general, the law is to be understood generally. Coke, 2d Inst. 83; 10 Coke, 101.

Quando licet id quod majus, videtur licere id quod minus. When the greater is allowed, the less seems to be allowed also. Sheppard, Touchst. 429.

Quando plus fit quam fieri debet, videtur etiam illud fieri quod faciendum est. When more is done than ought to be done, that too shall be considered as performed which should have been performed: as, if a man having a power to make a lease for ten years, make one for twenty years, it shall be void only for the surplus. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 166; 5 Coke, 115; 8 id. 85 a.

Quando quod ago non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest. When that which I do does not have effect as I do it, let it have as much effect as it can. 16 Johns. N. Y. 172, 178; 3 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 242, 261.

Quando res non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest. When a thing is of no force as I do it, it shall have as much as it can have. Cowp. 600; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 483; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 294; 6 East, 105; 1 Ventr. 216; 1 H. Blackst. 614, 620.

Quando verba et mens congruunt, non est interpretationi locus. When the words and the mind agree, there is no place for interpretation.

Quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis, generaliter statutum est intelligendum. When the words of a statute are special, but the reason or object of it general, the statute is to be construed generally. 10 Coke, 101 b.

Quemadmodum ad quæstionem facti non respondent judices, ita ad quæstionem juris non respondent juratores. In the same manner that judges do not answer to questions of fact, so jurors do not answer to questions of law. Coke, Litt. 295.

Qui accusat integræ famæ sit et non criminosus. Let him who accuses be of clear fame, and not criminal. Coke, 3d Inst. 26.

Qui adimit medium dirimit finem. He who takes away the means destroys the end. Coke, Litt. 161.

Qui aliquid statuerit parte inauditâ alterâ, æquum licet dixerit, haud æquum fecerit. He who decides any thing, a party being unheard, though he should decide right, does wrong. 6 Coke, 52; 4 Blackstone, Comm. 483.

Qui alterius jure utitur, eodem jure uti debet. He who uses the right of another ought to use the same right. Pothier, Tr. De Change, pt. 1, c. 4, § 114; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 421.

Qui bene distinguit, bene docet. He who distinguishes well, teaches well. Coke, 2d Inst. 470.

Qui bene interrogat, bene docet. He who questions well learns well. 3 Bulstr. 227.

Quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit. Whatever is affixed to the soil belongs to it. Went. Off. Ex. 145. See Ambl. 113; 3 East, 51; FIXTURES.

Quicquid recipitur, recipitur secundum modum recipientis. Whatever is received is received according to the intention of the recipient. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 727; Halkers, Max. 149; Law Mag. 1855, p. 21: 2 Bingh. N. c. 461; 2 Barnew. & C. 72; 14 Sim. Ch. 522; 2 Clark & F. Hou. L. 681; 2 Crompt. & J. Exch. 678; 14 East, 239, 243 c.

Quicquid solvitur, solvitur secundum modum solventis. Whatever is paid is to be applied according to the intention of the payor. 2 Vern. 606. See APPROPRIATION OF PAYMENTS.

Quid sit jus, et in quo consistit injuria, legis est definire. What constitutes right, and what injury, it is the business of the law to declare. Coke, Litt. 158 b.

Quieta non movere. Not to unsettle things which are established. 28 Barb. N. Y. 9, 22.

Quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se inducto. Any one may renounce a law introduced for his own benefit. To this rule there are some exceptions. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 83; 3 Curt. C. C. 393; 1 Exch. 657.

Quisquis est qui velit juris consultus haberi, continuet studium, velit a quocunque doceri. Whoever wishes to be held a jurisconsult, let him continually study, and desire to be taught by every body.

Quo ligatur, eo dissolvitur. As a thing is bound, so it is unbound. 2 Rolle, 21.

Quocumque modo velit, quocumque modo possit. In any way he wishes, in any way he can. 14 Johns. N. Y. 484, 492.

Quod à quoque pœnæ nomine exactum est id eidem restituere nemo cogitur. That which has been exacted as a penalty no one is obliged to restore. Dig. 50. 17. 46.

Quod ab initio non valet, in tractu temporis non convalescet. What is not good in the beginning cannot be rendered good by time. Merlin, Rép. verb. Regle de Droit. This, though true in general, is not universally so. 4 Coke, 26; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 166, 172, n.

Quod ad jus naturale attinet, omnes homines æquales sunt. All men are equal as far as the natural law is concerned. Dig. 50. 17. 32.

Quod ædificatur in areâ legatâ cedit legato. Whatever is built upon land given by will passes with the gift of the land. Amos & F. Fixtures, 2d ed. 246; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 377.

Quod alias bonum et justum est, si per vim vel fraudem petatur, malum et injustum efficitur. What is otherwise good and just, if sought by force or fraud, becomes bad and unjust. 3 Coke, 78.

Quod alias non fuit licitum necessitas licitum facit. Necessity makes that lawful which otherwise were unlawful. Fleta, l. 5, c. 23, § 14.

Quod approbo non reprobo. What I accept I do not reject. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 636.

Quod attinet ad jus civile, servi pro nullis habentur, non tamen et jure naturali, quia, quod ad jus naturale attinet, omnes homines æquali sunt. So far as the civil law is concerned, slaves are not reckoned as persons, but not so by natural law, for so far as regards natural law all men are equal. Dig. 50. 17. 32.

Quod constat clarè, non debet verificari. What is clearly apparent need not be proved. 10 Mod. 150.

Quod constat curiæ opere testium non indiget. What appears to the court needs not the help of witnesses. Coke, 2d Inst. 662.

Quod contra juris rationem receptum est, non est producendum ad consequentias. What has been admitted against the reason of the law, ought not to be drawn into precedents. Dig. 50. 17. 141; 12 Coke, 75.

Quod contra legem fit, pro infecto habetur. What is done contrary to the law, is considered as not done. 4 Coke, 31. No one can derive any advantage from such an act.

Quod datum est ecclesiæ, datum est Deo. What is given to the church is given to God. Coke, 2d Inst. 590.

Quod demonstrandi causâ additur rei satis demonstratæ, frustra fit. What is added to a thing sufficiently palpable, for the purpose of demonstration, is vain. 10 Coke, 113.

Quod dubitas, ne feceris. When you doubt about a thing, do not do it. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 310.

Quod enim semel aut bis existit, prætereunt legislatores. That which never happens but once or twice, legislators pass by. Dig. 1. 3. 17.

Quod est ex necessitate nunquam introducitur, nisi quando necessarium. What is introduced of necessity, is never introduced except when necessary. 2 Rolle, 512.

Quod est inconveniens, aut contra rationem non permissum est in lege. What is inconvenient or contrary to reason, is not allowed in law. Coke, Litt. 178.

Quod est necessarium est licitum. What is necessary is lawful. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 76.

Quod factum est, cum in obscuro sit, ex affectione cujusque capit interpretationem. When there is doubt about an act or expression, it receives interpretation from the (known) feelings or affections of the actor or writer. Dig. 50. 17. 168. 1.

Quod fieri debet facile præsumitur. That is easily presumed which ought to be done. Halkers, Max. 153.

Quod fieri non debet, factum valet. What ought not to be done, when done, is valid. 5 Coke, 38; 12 Mod. 438; 6 Mees. & W. Exch. 58; 9 id. 636.

Quod in jure scripto "jus" appellatur, id in lege Angliæ "rectum" esse dicitur. What in the civil law is called "jus," in the law of England is said to be "rectum" (right). Coke, Litt. 260; Fleta, l. 6, c. 1, § 1.

Quod in minori valet, valebit in majori; et quod in majori non valet, nec valebit in minori. What avails in the less, will avail in the greater; and what will not avail in the greater, will not avail in the less. Coke, Litt. 260.

Quod in uno similium valet, valebit in altere. What avails in one of two similar things, will avail in the other. Coke, Litt. 191.

Quod inconsulto fecimus, consultius revocemus. What is done without consideration or reflection, upon better consideration we should revoke or undo. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 116.

Quod initio vitiosum est, non potest tractu temporis convalescere. Time cannot render valid an act void in its origin. Dig. 50. 17. 29.

Quod ipsis, qui contraxerunt, obstat; et successoribus eorum obstabit. That which bars those who have contracted will bar their successors also. Dig. 50. 17. 103.

Quod jussu alterius solvitur pro eo est quasi ipsi solutum esset. That which is paid by the order of another is, so far as such person is concerned, as if it had been paid to himself. Dig. 50. 17. 180.

Quod meum est, sine facto sive defectu nostro, amitti seu in alium transferri non potest. That which is ours cannot be lost or transferred to another without our own act or default. 8 Coke, 92, Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 415; 1 Preston, Abstr. 147, 318.

Quod meum est sine me auferri non potest. What is mine cannot be taken away without my consent. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 251. But see EMINENT DOMAIN.

Quod minus est in obligationem videtur deductum. That which is the less is held to be imported into the contract: e. g. A offers to hire B's house at six hundred dollars at the same time B offers to let it for five hundred dollars; the contract is for five hundred dollars. 1 Story, Contr. 4th ed. 481.

Quod naturalis ratio inter omnes homines constituit, vocatur jus gentium. That which natural reason has established among all men, is called the law of nations. Dig. 1. 1. 9; Inst. 1. 2. 1; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 43.

Quod necessariè intelligitur id non deest. What is necessarily understood is not wanting. 1 Bulstr. 71.

Quod necessitas cogit, defendit. What necessity forces, it justifies. Hale, Pl. Cr. 54.

Quod non apparet non est, et non apparet judicialiter ante judicium. What appears not does not exist, and nothing appears judicially before judgment. Coke, 2d Inst. 479; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 207.

Quod non capit Christus, capit fiscus. What the church does not take, the treasury takes. Year B. 19 Hen. VI. 1.

Quod non habet principium non habet finum. What has no beginning has no end. Coke, Litt. 345; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 170, 171.

Quod non legitur, non creditur. What is not read is not believed. 4 Coke, 304.

Quod non valet in principalia, in accessoria seu consequentia non valebit; et quod non valet in magis propinquo, non valebit in magis remoto. What is not good as to things principal, will not be good as to accessories or consequences; and what is not of force as regards things near, will not be of force as to things remote. 8 Coke, 78.

Quod nullius esse potest, id ut alicujus fieret nulla obligatio valet efficere. No agreement can avail to make that the property of any one which cannot be acquired as property. Dig. 50. 17. 182.

Quod nullius est, est domini regis. That which belongs to nobody belongs to our lord the king. Fleta, l. 3; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 317; Bacon, Abr. Prerogative (B); 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 260.

Quod nullius est id ratione naturali occupanti conceditur. What belongs to no one, by natural reason belongs to the first occupant. Inst. 2. 1. 12; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 491; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 316.

Quod omnes tangit, ab omnibus debet supportari. That which concerns all ought to be supported by all. 3 How. St. Trials, 818, 1087.

Quod pendet, non est pro eo, quasi sit. What is in suspense is considered as not existing during such suspense. Dig. 50. 17. 169, 1.

Quod per me non possum, nec per alium. What I cannot do in person, I cannot do through the agency of another. 4 Coke, 24 b; 11 id. 87 a.

Quod per me non possum, nec per alium. What I cannot do for myself I cannot do through the agency of another. 4 Coke, 24 b; 11 id. 87 a.

Quod per recordum probatum, non debet esse negatum. What is proved by the record, ought not to be denied.

Quod populus postremum jussit, id jus ratum esto. What the people have last enacted, let that be the established law. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 89.

Quod principi placuit, legis habet rigorem; utpote cum lege regia, quæ de imperio ejus lata est, populus ei et in eum omne suum imperium et potestatem conferat. The will of the emperor has the force of law; for, by the royal law which has been made concerning his authority, the people has conferred upon him all its own sovereignty and power. Dig. 1. 4. 1; Inst. 1. 2. 1; Fleta, l. 1, c. 17, § 7; Bracton, 107; Selden, Diss. ad Flet. c. 3, §§ 2–5.

Quod prius est verius est; et quod prius est tempore potius est jure. What is first is truest; and what comes first in time is best in law. Coke, Litt. 347.

Quod pro minore licitum est, et pro majore licitum est. What is lawful in the less is lawful in the greater. 8 Coke, 43.

Quod quis ex culpa sua damnum sentit, non intelligitur damnum sentire. He who suffers a damage by his own fault is not held to suffer damage. Dig. 50. 17. 203.

Quod quis sciens indebitum dedit hâc mente, ut postea repeteret, repetere non potest. What one has paid knowing it not to be due, with the intention of recovering it back, he cannot recover back. Dig. 2. 6. 50.

Quod quisquis norit in hoc se exerceat. Let every one employ himself in what he knows. 11 Coke, 10.

Quod remedio destituitur ipsâ re valet si culpa absit. What is without a remedy is by that very fact valid if there be no fault. Bacon, Max. Reg. 9; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 20.

Quod semel aut bis existit prætereunt legislatores. Legislators pass over what happens (only) once or twice. Dig. 1. 3. 6; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 45.

Quod semel meum est amplius meum esse non potest. What is once mine cannot be mine more completely. Coke, Litt. 49 b; Sheppard, Touchst. 212; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 415, n.

Quod semel placuit in electione, amplius displicere non potest. That which in making his election a man has once been pleased to choose, he cannot afterwards quarrel with. Coke, Litt. 146.

Quod solo inædificatur solo cedit. Whatever is built on the soil is an accessory of the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 29; 16 Mass. 449; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1571.

Quod sub certâ formâ concessum vel reservatum est, non trahitur ad valorem vel compensationem. That which is granted or reserved under a certain form, is not to be drawn into valuation or compensation. Bacon, Max. Reg. 4.

Quod subintelligitur non deest. What is understood is not wanting. 2 Ld. Raym. 832.

Quod tacite intelligitur deesse non videtur. What is tacitly understood does not appear to be wanting. 4 Coke, 22.

Quod vanum et inutile est, lex non requirit. The law does not require what is vain and useless. Coke, Litt. 319.

Quod verò contra rationem juris receptum est, non est producendum ad consequentias. But that which has been admitted contrary to the reason of the law, ought not to be drawn into precedents. Dig. 1. 3, 14; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 150.

Quod voluit non dixit. He did not say what he intended to. 1 Kent, Comm. 468, n.; 4 Maule & S. 522, arg.; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 235.

Quodcunque aliquis ob tutelam corporis sui fecerit jure id fecisse videtur. Whatever one does in defence of his person, that he is considered to have done legally. Coke, 2d Inst. 590.

Quodque dissolvitur eodem modo quo ligatur. In the same manner that a thing is bound, it is unbound. 2 Rolle, 39; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 788; 2 Mann. & G. 729.

Quomodo quid constituitur eodem modo dissolvitur. In whatever mode a thing is constituted, in the same manner is it dissolved. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 74.

Quorum prætexta, nec auget nec minuit sententiam, sed tantum confirmat præ missa. "Quorum prætexta" neither increases nor diminishes the meaning, but only confirms that which went before. Plowd. 52.

Quotiens dubia interpretatio libertatis est, secundum libertatem respondendum erit. Whenever there is a doubt between liberty and slavery, the decision must be in favor of liberty. Dig. 50. 17. 20.

Quotiens idem sermo duas sententias exprimit, ea potissimum excipiatur, quæ rei gerendæ aptior est. Whenever the same words express two meanings, that is to be taken which is the better fitted for carrying out the proposed end. Dig. 50. 17. 67.

Quoties in stipulationibus ambigua oratio est, commodissimum est id accipi quo res de quo agitur, in tuto sit. Whenever in stipulations the expression is ambiguous, it is most proper to give it that interpretation by which the subject-matter may be in safety. Dig. 41. 1. 80; 50. 16. 219.

Quoties in verbis nulla est ambiguitas ibi nulla expositio contra verba fienda est. When there is no ambiguity in the words, then no exposition contrary to the words is to be made. Coke, Litt. 147; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 850.

Quum de lucro duorum quæratur, melior est conditio possidentis. When the gain of one of two is in question, the condition of the possessor is the better. Dig. 50. 17. 126. 2.

Quum in testamento ambigue aut etiam perperam scriptum est, benigne interpretari et secundum id quod credibile et cogitatum, credendum est. When in a will an ambiguous or even an erroneous expression occurs, it should be construed liberally and in accordance with what is thought the probable meaning of the testator. Dig. 34. 5. 24; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 437. See Brisson, Perperam.

Quum (cùm) principalis causa non consistit ne ea quidem quæ sequuntur locum habent. When the principal does not hold its ground, neither do the accessories find place. Dig. 50. 17. 129. 1; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 438; 1 Pothier, Obl. 413.

Ratihabitio mandato æquiparatur. Ratification is equal to a command. Dig. 46. 3. 12. 4; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 771; Story, Ag. 4th ed. 302.

Ratio est formalis causa consuetudinis. Reason is the source and mould of custom.

Ratio est legis anima, mutata legis ratione mutatur et lex. Reason is the soul of the law; the reason of the law being changed, the law is also changed. 7 Coke, 7.

Ratio est radius divini luminis. Reason is a ray of divine light. Coke, Litt. 232.

Ratio et auctoritas duo clarissima mundi lumina. Reason and authority are the two brightest lights in the world. Coke, 4th Inst. 320.

Ratio in jure æquitas integra. Reason in law is perfect equity.

Ratio legis est anima legis. The reason of the law is the soul of the law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 45.

Ratio non clauditur loco. Reason is not confined to any place.

Ratio possit allegari deficiente lege, sed vera et legalis et non apparens. Reason may be alleged when the law is defective, but it must be true and legal reason, and not merely apparent. Coke, Litt. 191.

Re, verbis, scripto, consensu, traditione, junctura vestes, sumere pacta solent. Compacts usually take their clothing from the thing itself, from words, from writing, from consent, from delivery. Plowd. 161.

Receditur a placitis juris, potius quam injuriæ et delicta maneant impunita. Positive rules of law will be receded from rather than crimes and wrongs should remain unpunished. Bacon, Max. Reg. 12; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 9. This applies only to such maxims as are called placita juris; these will be dispensed with rather than crimes should go unpunished, quia salus populi suprema lex, because the public safety is the supreme law.

Recorda sunt vestigia vetustatis et veritatis. Records are vestiges of antiquity and truth. 2 Rolle, 296.

Recurrendum est ad extraordinarium quando non valet ordinarium. We must have recourse to what is extraordinary when what is ordinary fails.

Regula est, juris quidem ignorantiam cuique nocere, facti vero ignorantiam non nocere. The rule is, that ignorance of the law does not excuse, but that ignorance of a fact may excuse a party from the legal consequences of his conduct. Dig. 22. 6. 9; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 232. See Irving, Civ. Law, 4th ed. 74.

Regula pro lege, si deficit lex. In default of the law, the maxim rules.

Regulariter non valet pactum de re mea non alienanda. Regularly a contract not to alienate my property is not binding. Coke, Litt. 223.

Rei turpis nullum mandatum est. A mandate of an illegal thing is void. Dig. 17. 1. 6. 3.

Reipublicæ interest voluntates defunctorum effectum sortiri. It concerns the state that the wills of the dead should have their effect.

Relatio est fictio juris et intenta ad unum. Relation is a fiction of law, and intended for one thing. 3 Coke, 28.

Relatio semper fiat ut valeat dispositio. Reference should always be had in such a manner that a disposition in a will may avail. 6 Coke, 76.

Relation never defeats collateral acts. 18 Viner, Abr. 292.

Relation shall never make good a void grant or devise of the party. 18 Viner, Abr. 292.

Relative words refer to the next antecedent, unless the sense be thereby impaired. Noy, Max. 4; Wingate, Max. 19; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 606; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 180.

Relativorum cognito uno, cognoscitur et alterum. Of things relating to each other, one being known, the other is known. Croke Jac. 539.

Remainder can depend upon no estate but what beginneth at the same time the remainder doth.

Remainder must vest at the same instant that the particular estate determines.

Remainder to a person not of a capacity to take at the time of appointing it, is void. Plowd. 27.

Remedies for rights are ever favorably extended. 18 Viner, Abr. 521.

Remedies ought to be reciprocal.

Remissius imperanti melius paretur. A man commanding not too strictly is better obeyed. Coke, 3d Inst. 233.

Remoto impedimento, emergit actio. The impediment being removed, the action arises. 5 Coke, 76; Wingate, Max. 20.

Rent must be reserved to him from whom the state of the land moveth. Coke, Litt. 143.

Repellitur a sacramento infamis. An infamous person is repelled or prevented from taking an oath. Coke, Litt. 158; Bracton, 185.

Repellitur exceptione cedendarum actionum. He is defeated by the plea that the actions have been assigned. 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 409, 414.

Reprobata pecunia liberat solventem. Money refused liberates the debtor. 9 Coke, 79. But this must be understood with a qualification. See TENDER.

Reputatio est vulgaris opinio ubi non est veritas. Reputation is a common opinion where there is no certain knowledge. 4 Coke, 107. But see CHARACTER.

Rerum ordo confunditur, si unicuique jurisdictio non servatur. The order of things is confounded if every one preserves not his jurisdiction. Coke, 4th Inst. Proem.

Rerum progressu ostendunt multa, quæ in initio præcaveri seu prævideri non possunt. In the course of events many mischiefs arise which at the beginning could not be guarded against or foreseen. 6 Coke, 40.

Rerum suarum quilibet est moderator et arbiter. Every one is the manager and disposer of his own matters. Coke, Litt. 223.

Res accessoria sequitur rem principalem. An accessory follows its principal. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 433. For a definition of res accessoria, see Mackeldey, Civ. Law, 155.

Res denominatur a principaliori parte. A thing is named from its principal part. 5 Coke, 47.

Res est misera ubi jus est vagum et incertum. It is a miserable state of things where the law is vague and uncertain. 2 Salk. 512.

Res, generalem habet significationem, quia tam corporea, quam incorporea, cujuscunque sunt generis, naturæ sive speciei, comprehendit. The word things has a general signification, because it comprehends as well corporeal as incorporeal objects, of whatever nature, sort, or species. Coke, 3d Inst. 482; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 415.

Res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet. Things done between strangers ought not to injure those who are not parties to them. Coke, Litt. 132; 3 Curt. C. C. 403; 11 Q. B. 1028.

Res inter alios judicatæ nullum aliis præjudicium faciant. Matters adjudged in a cause do not prejudice those who were not parties to it. Dig. 44. 2. 1.

Res judicata facit ex albo nigrum, ex nigro album, ex curvo rectum, ex recto curvum. A thing adjudged makes white, black; black, white; the crooked, straight; the straight, crooked. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 840.

Res judicata pro veritate accipitur. A thing adjudged must be taken for truth. Coke, Litt. 103; Dig. 50. 17. 207; 2 Kent, Comm. 120; 13 Mees. & W. Exch. 679. See RES JUDICATA.

Res per pecuniam æstimatur, et non pecunia per res. The value of a thing is estimated by its worth in money, and the value of money is not estimated by reference to the thing. 9 Coke, 76; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 922.

Res perit domino suo. The destruction of the thing is the loss of its owner. 2 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 1456, 1466; Story, Bailm. 426; 2 Kent, Comm. 591.

Res propria est quæ communis non est. A thing is private which is not common. 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 261, 270.

Res quæ intra præsidia perductæ nondum sunt, quanquam ab hostibus occupatæ, ideo postliminii non egent, quia dominum nondum mutarunt ex gentium jure. Things which have not yet been introduced within the enemy's lines, although held by the enemy, do not need the fiction of postliminy on this account, because their ownership by the law of nations has not yet changed. Grotius, de Jur. Bell. l. 3, c. 9, § 16; l. 3, c. 6, § 3.

Res sacra non recipit æstimationem. A sacred thing does not admit of valuation. Dig. l. 8. 9. 5.

Res transit cum suo onere. The thing passes with its burden. Fleta, l. 3, c. 10, § 3.

Reservatio non debet esse de proficuis ipsis quia ea conceduntur, sed de redditu novo extra proficua. A reservation ought not to be of the annual increase itself, because it is granted, but of new rent apart from the annual increase. Coke, Litt. 142.

Resignation est juris proprii spontanea refutatio. Resignation is the spontaneous relinquishment of own's own right. Godb. 284.

Resoluto jure concedentis resolvitur jus concessum. The right of the grantor being extinguished, the right granted is extinguished. Mackeldey, Civ. Law, 179; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 417.

Respiciendum est judicanti, nequid aut durius aut remissius construatur quam causa deposcit; nec enim aut severitatis aut clementiæ gloria affectanda est. It is a matter of import to one adjudicating that nothing should be either more leniently or more severely construed than the cause itself demands; for the glory neither of severity nor clemency should be affected. Coke, 3d Inst. 220.

Respondeat raptor, qui ignorare non potuit quod pupillum alienum abduxit. Let the ravisher answer, for he could not be ignorant that he has taken away another's ward. Hob. 99.

Respondeat superior. Let the principal answer. Coke, 4th Inst. 114; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1337; 4 id. n. 3586; 3 Lev. 352; 1 Salk. 408; 1 Bingh. N. C. 418; 4 Maule & S. 259; 10 Exch. 656; 2 Ell. & B. 216; 7 id. 426; 1 Bos. & P. 404; 1 C. B. 578; 6 Mees. & W. Exch. 302; 10 Exch. 656.

Respondera son soveraigne. His superior or master shall answer. Articuli sup. Chart. c. 18.

Responsio unius non omnino auditur. The answer of one witness shall not be heard at all. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 260. This is a maxim of the civil law, where every thing must be proved by two witnesses.

Reus excipiendo fit actor. The defendant by a plea becomes plaintiff. Bannier, Tr. des preuves, §§ 152, 320; Best, Evid. 294, § 252.

Reus læsæ majestatis punitur, ut pereat unus ne pereant omnes. A traitor is punished that one may die lest all perish. 4 Coke, 124.

Rex non debet esse sub homine sed sub Deo et lege. The king should not be under the authority of man, but of God and the law. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 46, 111; Bracton, 5.

Rex non potest fallere nec falli. The king cannot deceive or be deceived. Grounds & Rud. of Law, 438.

Rex non potest peccare. The king can do no wrong. 2 Rolle, 304; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 9, 308; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 51; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 246.

Rex nunquam moritur. The king never dies. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 49; Branch, Max. 5th ed. 197; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 249.

Riyhts never die.

Riparum usus publicus est jure gentium, sicut ipsius fluminis. The use of river-banks is by the law of nations public, like that of the stream itself. Dig. 1. 8. 5. pr.; Fleta, l. 3, c. 1, § 5; Loccenius de Jur. Mar. l. 1, c. 6, § 12.

Roy n'est lié per ascun statute, si il ne soit expressement nosmé. The king is not bound by any statute, if he is not expressly named. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 307; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 69.

Sacramentum habet in se tres comites, veritatem, justitiam et judicium: veritas habenda est in jurato; justitia et justicium in judice. An oath has in it three component parts—truth, justice, and judgment: truth in the party swearing; justice and judgment in the judge administering the oath. Coke, 3d Inst. 160.

Sacramentum si fatuum fuerit, licet falsum, tamen non committit perjurium. A foolish oath, though false, makes not perjury. Coke, 2d Inst. 167.

Sacrilegus omnium prædorum cupiditatem et scelerem superat. A sacrilegious person transcends the cupidity and wickedness of all other robbers. 4 Coke, 106.

Sæpe constitutum est, res inter alios judicatas aliis non præjudicare. It has often been settled that matters adjudged between others ought not to prejudice those who were not parties. Dig. 42. 1. 63.

Sæpe viatorem nova non vetus orbita fallit. Often it is the new track, not the old one, which deceives the traveller. Coke, 4th Inst. 34.

Sæpenumero ubi proprietas verborem attenditur, sensus veritatis amittitur. Frequently where the propriety of words is attended to, the meaning of truth is lost. 7 Coke, 27.

Salus populi est suprema lex. The safety of the people is the supreme law. Bacon, Max. Reg. 12; Broom, Max. 1; 13 Coke, 139.

Salus ubi multi consiliarii. In many counsellors there is safety. Coke, 4th Inst. 1.

Sanguinis conjunctio benevolentia devincit homines et caritate. A tie of blood overcomes men through benevolence and family affection. 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 1, 13.

Sapiens incipit a fine, et quod primum est in intentione, ultimum est in executione. A wise man begins with the last, and what is first in intention is last in execution. 10 Coke, 25.

Sapiens omnia agit cum consilio. A wise man does every thing advisedly. Coke, 4th Inst. 4.

Sapientia legis nummario pretio non est æstimanda. The wisdom of the law cannot be valued by money. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 168.

Sapientis judicis est cogitare tantum sibi esse permissum, quantum commissum et creditum. It is the duty of a wise judge to think so much only permitted to him as is committed and intrusted to him. Coke, 4th Inst. 163.

Satisfaction should be made to that fund which has sustained the loss. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3731.

Satius est petere fontes quam sectari rivulos. It is better to seek the fountain than to follow rivulets. 10 Coke, 118. It is better to drink at the fountain than to sip in the streams.

Scientia sciolorum est mixta ignorantia. The knowledge of smatterers is mixed ignorance. 8 Coke, 159.

Scientia utriusque par pares contrahentes facit. Equal knowledge on both sides makes the contracting parties equal. 3 Burr. 1910.

Scientii et volunti non fit injuria. A wrong is not done to one who knows and wills it.

Scire debes cum quo contrahis. You ought to know with whom you deal. 11 Mees. & W. Exch. 405, 632; 13 id. 171.

Scire leges, non hoc est verba earum tenere, sed vim et potestatem. To know the laws, is not to observe their mere words, but their force and power. Dig. 1. 3. 17.

Scire proprie est, rem ratione et per causam cognoscere. To know properly is to know a thing by its cause and in its reason. Coke, Litt. 183.

Scribere est agere. To write is to act. 2 Rolle, 89; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 80.

Scriptæ obligationes scriptis tolluntur, et nudi consensus obligatio, contrario consensu dissolvitur. Written obligations are dissolved by writing, and obligations of naked agreement by naked agreement to the contrary.

Secta est pugna civilis, sicut actores armantur actionibus, et quasi accinguntur gladiis, ita rei (è contra) muniuntur exceptionibus, et defenduntur quasi clypeis. A suit is a civil battle, as the plaintiffs are armed with actions and as it were girt with swords, so on the other hand the defendants are fortified with pleas, and defended as it were by helmets. Hob. 20; Bracton, 339 b.

Secta quæ scripto nititur a scripto variari non debet. A suit which relies upon a writing ought not to vary from the writing. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 65.

Secundum naturam est, commoda cujusque rei eum sequi, quem sequentur incommoda. It is natural that he who bears the charge of a thing should receive the profits. Dig. 50. 17. 10.

Securius expediuntur negotia commissa pluribus, et plus vident oculi quam oculus. Business intrusted to several speeds best, and several eyes see more than one eye. 4 Coke, 46.

Seisina facit stipitem. Seisin makes the stock. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 209; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 466; 1 Stephen, Comm. 367; 4 Kent, Comm. 388, 389; 13 Ga. 238.

Semel malus semper præsumitur esse malus in eodem genere. Whoever is once bad is presumed to be so always in the same degree. Croke Car. 317.

Semper in dubiis benigniora præferunda sunt. In dubious cases the more liberal constructions are always to be preferred. Dig. 50. 17. 56.

Semper in dubiis id agendum est, ut quam tutissimo loco res sit bona fide contracta, nisi quum aperte contra leges scriptum est. Always in doubtful cases that is to be done by which a bona fide contract may be in the greatest safety, except when its provisions are clearly contrary to law. Dig. 34. 5. 21.

Semper in obscuris quod minimum est sequimur (sequere). In obscure cases we always follow that which is least. Dig. 50. 17. 9; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 613, n; 3 C. B. 962.

Semper in stipulationibus et in cæteris contractibus id sequimur quod actum est. In stipulations and other contracts we always follow that which was done (i.e. agreed). Dig. 50. 17. 34.

Semper ita fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio. Let the reference always be so made that the disposition may avail. 6 Coke, 76.

Semper necessitas probandi incumbit ei qui agit. The claimant is always bound to prove: the burden of proof lies on him.

Semper præsumitur pro legitimatione puerorum, et filiatio non potest probari. The presumption is always in favor of legitimacy, for filiation cannot be proved. Coke, Litt. 126. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 303; 5 Coke, 98 b.

Semper præsumitur pro negante. The presumption is always in favor of the one who denies. See 10 Clark & F. Hou. L. 534; 3 Ell. & B. 723.

Semper præsumitur pro sententiâ. Presumption is always in favor of the sentence. 3 Bulstr. 42.

Semper qui non prohibet pro se intervenire, mandare creditur. He who does not prohibit the intervention of another in his behalf is supposed to authorize it. 2 Kent, Comm. 616; Dig. 14. 6. 16; 43 3. 12. 4.

Semper sexus masculinus etiam fœmininum continet. The male sex always includes the female. Dig. 32. 62.

Semper specialia generalibus insunt. Special clauses are always comprised in general ones. Dig. 50. 17. 147.

Senatores sunt partes corporis regis. Senators are part of the body of the king. Staundford, 72 E; Coke, 4th Inst. 53, in marg.

Sensus verborum est anima legis. The meaning of words is the spirit of the law. 5 Coke, 2.

Sensus verborum est duplex, mitis et asper, et verba semper accipienda sunt in mitiore sensu. The meaning of words is twofold, mild and harsh; and words are to be received in their milder sense. 4 Coke, 13.

Sensus verborum ex causâ dicendi accipiendus est, et sermones semper accipiendi sunt secundum subjectam materiam. The sense of words is to be taken from the occasion of speaking them, and discourses are always to be interpreted according to the subject-matter. 4 Coke, 14.

Sententia à non judice lata nemini debet nocere. A sentence pronounced by one who is not a judge should not harm any one. Fleta, l. 6, c. 6, § 7.

Sententia contra matrimonium nunquam transit in rem judicatam. A sentence against marriage never passes into a judgment (conclusive upon the parties). 7 Coke, 43.

Sententia facit jus, et legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet. The sentence makes the law, and the interpretation has the force of law.

Sententia facit jus, et res judicata pro veritate accipitur. Judgment creates the right, and what is adjudicated is taken for truth. Ellesmere, Postn. 55.

Sententia interlocutoria revocari potest, difinitiva non potest. An interlocutory sentence or order may be revoked, but not a final. Bacon, Max. Reg. 20.

Sententia non fertur de rebus non liquidis. Sentence is not given upon a thing which is not clear.

Sequi debet potentia justitiam, non præcedere. Power should follow justice, not precede it. Coke, 2d Inst. 454.

Sermo index animi. Speech is an index of the mind. 5 Coke, 118.

Sermo relata ad personam, intelligi debet de conditione personæ. A speech relating to the person is to be understood as relating to his condition. 4 Coke, 16.

Servanda est consuetudo loci ubi causa agitur. The custom of the place where the action is brought is to be observed. 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 190, 219.

Servitia personalia sequuntur personam. Personal services follow the person. Coke, 2d Inst. 374; Fleta, l. 3, c. 11, § 1.

Si a jure discedas vagus eris, et erunt omnia omnibus incerta. If you depart from the law, you will wander without a guide, and every thing will be in a state of uncertainty to every one. Coke, Litt. 227.

Si alicujus rei societas sit, et finis negotio impositus est, finitur societas. If there is a partnership in any matter, and the business is ended, the partnership ceases. 16 Johns. N. Y. 438, 489.

Si aliquid ex solemnibus deficiat, cum æquitas poscit subveniendum est. If any thing be wanting from required forms, when equity requires it will be aided. 1 Kent, Comm. 157.

Si assuetis mederi possis nova non sunt tentanda. If you can be relieved by accustomed remedies, new ones should not be tried. 10 Coke, 142.

Si judicas, cognosce. If you judge, understand.

Si meliores sunt quos ducit amor, plures sunt quos corrigit timor. If those are better who are led by love, those are the greater number corrected by fear. Coke, Litt. 392.

Si non appareat quid actum est erit consequens, ut id sequamur quod in regione in qua actum est, frequentatur. If it does not appear what was agreed upon, the consequence will be that we must follow that which is the usage of the place where the agreement was made. Dig. 50. 17. 34.

Si nulla sit conjectura quæ ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate, non grammatica sed populari ex usu. If there be no inference which leads to a different result, words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, not in a grammatical, but in a popular and ordinary, sense. 2 Kent, Comm. 555.

Si plures conditiones ascriptæ fuerunt donationi conjunctim, omnibus est parendum; et ad veritatem copulativè requiritur quod utràque pars sit vera, si divisim, cuilibet vel alteri eorum satis est obtemperare; et in disjunctivis, sufficit alteram partem esse veram. If some conditions are conjunctively written in a gift, the whole of them must be complied with; and with respect to their truth, it is necessary that every part be true, taken jointly; if the conditions are separate, it is sufficient to comply with either one or other of them; and being disjunctive, that one or the other be true. Coke, Litt. 225.

Si plures sint fidejussores, quodquit erunt numero, singuli in solidum tenentur. If there are more sureties than one, how many soever they shall be, they shall each be held for the whole. Inst. 3. 21. 4; 4. 116; 1 W. Blackst. 388.

Si quid universitati debetur singulis non debetur, nec quod debet, universitas singuli debent. If any thing is due to a corporation, it is not due to the individual members of it, nor do the members individually owe what the corporation owes. Dig. 3. 4. 7; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 484.

Si quidem in nomine, cognomine, prænomine, agnomine legatarii enaverit; cùm de personâ constat, nihilominùs valet legatum. If the testator has erred in the name, cognomen, prænomen, or title of the legatee, whenever the person is rendered certain, the legacy is nevertheless valid. Inst. 2. 20. 29; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 574; 2 Domat, b. 2, t. 1, s. 6, §§ 10, 19.

Si quis custos fraudem pupillo fecerit, a tutela removendus est. If a guardian behave fraudulently to his ward, he shall be removed from the guardianship. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 39.

Si quis prægnantem uxorem reliquit, non videtur sine liberis decessisse. If a man dies, leaving his wife pregnant, he shall not be considered as having died childless.

Si quis unum percusserit, cum alium percutere vellet, in felonià tenetur. If a man kill one, meaning to kill another, he is held guilty of felony. Coke, 3d Inst. 51.

Si suggestio non sit vera, literæ patentes vacuæ sunt. If the suggestion of a patent is false, the patent itself is void. 10 Coke, 113.

Sic enim debere quem meliorem agrum suum facere, ne vicini deteriorem faciat. Every one ought so to improve his land as not to injure his neighbor's. 3 Kent, Comm. 441.

Sic interpretandum est ut verba accipiantur cum effectu. Such an interpretation is to be made that the words may have an effect. Coke, 3d Inst. 80.

Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. So use your own as not to injure another's property. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 306; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 206, n., 246, 327, 332, 336, 340, 348, 353; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2379; 5 Exch. 797; 12 Q. B. 739; 4 Adolph. & E. 384; 15 Johns. N. Y. 218; 17 id. 99; 17 Mass. 334; 4 M'Cord, So. C. 472; 9 Coke, 59.

Sicut natura nil facit per saltum, ita nec lex. As nature does nothing by a bound or leap, so neither does the law. Coke, Litt. 238.

Sigillum est cera impressa, quia cera sine impressione non est sigillum. A seal is a piece of wax impressed, because wax without an impression is not a seal. Coke, 3d Inst. 169. But see SEAL.

Silence shows consent. 6 Barb. N. Y. 28, 35.

Silent leges inter arma. Laws are silent amidst arms. Coke, 4th Inst. 70.

Similitudo legalis est, casuum diversorum inter se collatorum similis ratio; quod in uno similium valet, valebit in altero. Dissimilium, dissimilis est ratio. Legal similarity is a similar reason which governs various cases when compared with each other, for what avails in one similar case will avail in the other. Of things dissimilar, the reason is dissimilar. Coke, Litt. 191.

Simplex commendatio non obligat. A simple recommendation does not bind. Dig. 4. 3. 37; 2 Kent, Comm. 485; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 700; 4 Taunt. 488; 16 Q. B. 282, 283; Croke Jac. 4; 5 Johns. N. Y. 354; 4 Barb. N. Y. 95.

Simplex et pura donatio dici poterit, ubi nulla est adjecta conditio nec modus. A gift is said to be pure and simple when no condition or qualification is annexed. Bracton, 1.

Simplicitas est legibus amica, et nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur. Simplicity is favorable to the law, and too much subtlety is blameworthy in law. 4 Coke, 8.

Sine possessione usucapio procedere non potest. There can be no prescription without possession.

Singuli in solidum tenentur. Each is bound for the whole. 6 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 242, 252.

Sive tota res evincatur, sive pars habet regressum emptor in venditorem. The purchaser who has been evicted in whole or in part has an action against the vendor. Dig. 21. 2. 1; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 690.

Socii mei socius, meus socius non est. The partner of my partner is not my partner. Dig. 50. 17. 47. 1.

Sola ac per se senectus donationem testamentum aut transactionem non vitiat. Old age does not alone and of itself vitiate a will or a gift. 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 148, 158.

Solemnitates juris sunt observandæ. The solemnities of law are to be observed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 13.

Solo cedit quod solo implantatur. What is planted in the soil belongs to the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 32; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1572.

Solo cedit quod solo inædificatur. Whatever is built on the soil belongs to the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 29. See 1 Mackeldey, Civ. Law, § 268; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1571.

Solus Deus hæredem facit. God alone makes the heir. Coke, Litt. 5.

Solutio pretii, emptionis loco habetur. The payment of the price stands in the place of a sale. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 56.

Solvendo esse nemo intelligitur nisi qui solidum potest solvere. No one is considered to be solvent unless he can pay all that he owes. Dig. 50. 16. 114.

Solvitur adhuc societas etiam morte socii. A partnership is moreover dissolved by the death of a partner. Inst. 3. 26. 5; Dig. 17. 2.

Spes est vigilantis somnium. Hope is the dream of the vigilant. Coke, 4th Inst. 203.

Spes impunitatis continuum affectum tribuit delinquendi. The hope of impunity holds out a continual temptation to crime. Coke, 3d Inst. 236.

Spoliatus debet ante omnia restitui. He who has been despoiled ought to be restored before any thing else. Coke, 2d Inst. 714; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 353.

Spondet peritiam artis. He promises to use the skill of his art. Pothier, Louage, n. 425; Jones, Bailm. 22, 53, 62, 97, 120; Domat, liv. 1, t. 4, s. 8, n. 1; 1 Story, Bailm. § 431; 1 Bell, Comm. 5th ed. 459; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1004.

Sponte virum fugiens mulier et adultera facta, doti sua careat, nisi sponte retracta. A woman leaving her husband of her own accord, and committing adultery, loses her dower, unless her husband takes her back of his own accord. Coke, Litt. 37.

Stabit præsumptio donec probetur in contrarium. A presumption will stand good until the contrary is proved. Hob. 297; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 371; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 852; 16 Mass. 87.

Stare decisis, et non quieta movere. To adhere to precedents, and not to unsettle things which are established. Yates vs. Lansing, 9 Johns. 395, 428; Driggs vs. Rockwell, 11 Wend. 504, 507; Bates vs. Relyea, 23 id. 336, 340; Moore vs. Lyons, 25 id. 119, 142; Hanford vs. Artcher, 4 Hill, 271, 323; Taylor vs. Heath, 4 id. 592, 595; Calkins vs. Long, 22 Barb. 97, 106.

Stat pro ratione voluntas. The will stands in place of a reason. 1 Barb. N. Y. 408, 411; 16 id. 514, 525.

Stat pro ratione voluntas populi. The will of the people stands in place of a reason. 25 Barb. N. Y. 344, 376.

Statuta pro publico commodo late interpretantur. Statutes made for the public good ought to be liberally construed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 21.

Statutum affirmativum non derogat communi legi. An affirmative statute does not take from the common law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 24.

Statutum generaliter est intelligendum quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis. When the words of a statute are special, but the reason of it general, it is to be understood generally. 10 Coke, 101.

Statutum speciale statuto speciali non derogat. One special statute does not take away from another special statute. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 199.

Sublatâ causâ tollitur effectus. Remove the cause and the effect will cease. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 203.

Sublatâ veneratione magistratuum, respublica ruit. The commonwealth perishes, if respect for magistrates be taken away. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 48.

Sublato fundamento cadit opus. Remove the foundation, the structure or work falls. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 106.

Sublato principali tollitur adjunctum. If the principal be taken away, the adjunct is also taken away. Coke, Litt. 389.

Subrogatio est transfusio unius creditoris in alium, eadem vel mitiori conditione. Subrogation is the substituting one creditor in the place of another in the same or a better condition. Merlin, Qu. de Droit. Subrogation.

Succurritur minori; facilis est lapsus juventutis. A minor is to be aided; youth is liable to err. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 47.

Summa caritas est facere justitiam singulis et omni tempore quando necesse fuerit. The greatest charity is to do justice to every one, and at any time whenever it may be necessary. 11 Coke, 70.

Summa est lex quæ pro religione facit. That is the highest law which favors religion. 10 Mod. 117, 119; 2 Chanc. Cas. 18.

Summa ratio est quæ pro religione facit. That consideration is strongest which determines in favor of religion. Coke, Litt. 341 a; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 18; 5 Coke, 14 b; 10 id. 55 a; 2 Chanc. Cas. 18.

Summam esse rationem quæ pro religione facit. That consideration is strongest which determines in favor of religion. Dig. 11. 7. 43, cited in Grotius de Jur. Bello, l. 3, c. 12, s. 7. See 10 Mod. 117, 119.

Summum jus, summa injuria. The rigor or height of law is the height of wrong. Hob. 125.

Sunday is dies non juridicus. 12 Johns. N. Y. 178, 180.

Superflua non nocent. Superfluities do no injury. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 184.

Suppressio veri, expressio falsi. Suppression of the truth is (equivalent to) the expression of what is false. 11 Wend. N. Y. 374, 417.

Suppressio veri, suggestio falsi. Suppression of the truth is (equivalent to) the suggestion of what is false. 23 Barb. N. Y. 521, 525.

Supremus est, quem nemo sequitur. He is last whom no one follows. Dig. 50. 16. 92.

Surplusagium non nocet. Surplusage does no harm. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2949; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 559.

Tacita quædam habentur pro expressis. Certain things though unexpressed are considered as expressed. 8 Coke, 40.

Talis interpretatio semper fienda est, ut evitetur absurdum, et inconveniens, et ne judicium sit illusorium. Interpretation is always to be made in such a manner that what is absurd and inconvenient is to be avoided, and so that the judgment be not nugatory. 1 Coke, 52.

Talis non est eadem, nam nullum simile est idem. What is like is not the same, for nothing similar is the same. 4 Coke, 18.

Tantum bona valent, quantum vendi possunt. Things are worth what they will sell for. Coke, 3d Inst. 305.

Tempus enim modus tollendi obligationes et actiones, quia tempus currit contra desides et sui juris contemptores. For time is a means of destroying obligations and actions, because time runs against the slothful and contemners of their own rights. Fleta, l. 4, c. 5, § 12.

Tenor est qui legem dat feudo. It is the tenor of the feudal grant which regulates its effect and extent. Craig, Jus Feud., 3d ed. 66. See Coke, Litt. 19 a; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 310; 2 Coke, 71; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 410; Wright, Ten. 21, 52, 152.

Terminus annorum certus debet esse et determinatus. A term of years ought to be certain and determinate. Coke, Litt. 45.

Terminus et (ac) feodum non possunt constare simul in unâ eâdemque persona. A term and the fee cannot both be in one and the same person at the same time. Plowd. 29; 3 Mass. 141.

Terra manens vacua occupanti conceditur. Land lying unoccupied is given to the occupant. 1 Sid. 347.

Terra transit cum onere. Land passes with the incumbrances. Coke, Litt. 231; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 437, 630.

Testamenta latissimam interpretationem habere debent. Wills ought to have the broadest interpretation. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 81.

Testamentum est voluntates nostra justa sententia, de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri velit. A testament is the just expression of our will concerning that which any one wishes done after his death: or, as Blackstone translates, "the legal declaration of a man's intentions which he wills to be performed after his death." 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 499; Dig. 28. 1. 1; 29. 3. 2. 1.

Testamentum omne morte consummatum. Every will is completed by death. Coke, Litt. 232.

Testatoris ultima voluntas est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his real intention. Coke, Litt. 322.

Testes ponderantur, non numerantur. See the maxim Ponderantia Testes.

Testibus deponentibus in pari numero dignioribus est credendum. When the number of witnesses is equal on both sides, the more worthy are to be believed. Coke, 4th Inst. 279.

Testis de visu præponderat aliis. An eye-witness outweighs others. Coke, 4th Inst. 470.

Testis nemo in suâ causâ esse potest. No one can be a witness in his own cause. Otherwise in England, by stat. 14 & 15 Vict. 99, and many of the states of the United States.

Testis oculatus unus plus valet quam auriti decem. One eye-witness is worth ten ear-witnesses. Coke, 4th Inst. 279. See 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3154.

Si non appareat quid actum est erit consequens, ut id sequamur quod in regione in qua actum est, frequentatur. If it does not appear what was agreed upon, the consequence will be that we must follow that which is the usage of the place where the agreement was made. Dig. 50. 17. 34.

Si nulla sit conjectura quæ ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate, non grammatica sed populari ex usu. If there be no inference which leads to a different result, words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, not in a grammatical, but in a popular and ordinary, sense. 2 Kent, Comm. 555.

Si plures conditiones ascriptæ fuerunt donationi conjunctim, omnibus est parendum; et ad veritatem copulativè requiritur quod utràque pars sit vera, si divisim, cuilibet vel alteri eorum satis est obtemperare; et in disjunctivis, sufficit alteram partem esse veram. Coke, Litt. 225.

Si plures sint fidejussores, quodquit erunt numero, singuli in solidum tenentur. If there are more sureties than one, how many soever they shall be, they shall each be held for the whole. Inst. 3. 21. 4; 4. 116; 1 W. Blackst. 388.

Si quid universitati debetur singulis non debetur, nec quod debet, universitas singuli debent. If any thing is due to a corporation, it is not due to the individual members of it, nor do the members individually owe what the corporation owes. Dig. 3. 4. 7; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 484.

Si quidem in nomine, cognomine, prænomine, agnomine legatarii enaverit; cùm de personâ constat, nihilominùs valet legatum. If the testator has erred in the name, cognomen, prænomen, or title of the legatee, whenever the person is rendered certain, the legacy is nevertheless valid. Inst. 2. 20. 29; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 574; 2 Domat, b. 2, t. 1, s. 6, §§ 10, 19.

Si quis custos fraudem pupillo fecerit, a tutela removendus est. If a guardian behave fraudulently to his ward, he shall be removed from the guardianship. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 39.

Si quis prægnantem uxorem reliquit, non videtur sine liberis decessisse. If a man dies, leaving his wife pregnant, he shall not be considered as having died childless.

Si quis unum percusserit, cum alium percutere vellet, in felonià tenetur. If a man kill one, meaning to kill another, he is held guilty of felony. Coke, 3d Inst. 51.

Si suggestio non sit vera, literæ patentes vacuæ sunt. If the suggestion of a patent is false, the patent itself is void. 10 Coke, 113.

Sic enim debere quem meliorem agrum suum facere, ne vicini deteriorem faciat. Every one ought so to improve his land as not to injure his neighbor's. 3 Kent, Comm. 441.

Sic interpretandum est ut verba accipiantur cum effectu. Such an interpretation is to be made that the words may have an effect. Coke, 3d Inst. 80.

Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. So use your own as not to injure another's property. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 306; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 206, n., 246, 327, 332, 336, 340, 348, 353; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2379; 5 Exch. 797; 12 Q. B. 739; 4 Adolph. & E. 384; 15 Johns. N. Y. 218; 17 id. 99; 17 Mass. 334; 4 M'Cord, So. C. 472; 9 Coke, 59.

Sicut natura nil facit per saltum, ita nec lex. As nature does nothing by a bound or leap, so neither does the law. Coke, Litt. 238.

Sigillum est cera impressa, quia cera sine impressione non est sigillum. A seal is a piece of wax impressed, because wax without an impression is not a seal. Coke, 3d Inst. 169. But see SEAL.

Silence shows consent. 6 Barb. N. Y. 28, 35.

Silent leges inter arma. Laws are silent amidst arms. Coke, 4th Inst. 70.

Similitudo legalis est, casuum diversorum inter se collatorum similis ratio; quod in uno similium valet, valebit in altero. Dissimilium, dissimilis est ratio. Legal similarity is a similar reason which governs various cases when compared with each other, for what avails in one similar case will avail in the other. Of things dissimilar, the reason is dissimilar. Coke, Litt. 191.

Simplex commendatio non obligat. A simple recommendation does not bind. Dig. 4. 3. 37; 2 Kent, Comm. 485; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 700; 4 Taunt. 488; 16 Q. B. 282, 283; Croke Jac. 4; 5 Johns. N. Y. 354; 4 Barb. N. Y. 95.

Simplex et pura donatio dici poterit, ubi nulla est adjecta conditio nec modus. A gift is said to be pure and simple when no condition or qualification is annexed. Bracton, 1.

Simplicitas est legibus amica, et nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur. Simplicity is favorable to the law, and too much subtlety is blameworthy in law. 4 Coke, 8.

Sine possessione usucapio procedere non potest. There can be no prescription without possession.

Singuli in solidum tenentur. Each is bound for the whole. 6 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 242, 252.

Sive tota res evincatur, sive pars habet regressum emptor in venditorem. The purchaser who has been evicted in whole or in part has an action against the vendor. Dig. 21. 2. 1; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 690.

Socii mei socius, meus socius non est. The partner of my partner is not my partner. Dig. 50. 17. 47. 1.

Sola ac per se senectus donationem testamentum aut transactionem non vitiat. Old age does not alone and of itself vitiate a will or a gift. 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 148, 158.

Solemnitates juris sunt observandæ. The solemnities of law are to be observed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 13.

Surplusagium non nocet. Surplusage does no harm. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2949; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 559.

Tacita quædam habentur pro expressis. Certain things though unexpressed are considered as expressed. 8 Coke, 40.

Talis interpretatio semper fienda est, ut evitetur absurdum, et inconveniens, et ne judicium sit illusorium. Interpretation is always to be made in such a manner that what is absurd and inconvenient is to be avoided, and so that the judgment be not nugatory. 1 Coke, 52.

Talis non est eadem, nam nullum simile est idem. What is like is not the same, for nothing similar is the same. 4 Coke, 18.

Tantum bona valent, quantum vendi possunt. Things are worth what they will sell for. Coke, 3d Inst. 305.

Tempus enim modus tollendi obligationes et actiones, quia tempus currit contra desides et sui juris contemptores. For time is a means of destroying obligations and actions, because time runs against the slothful and contemners of their own rights. Fleta, l. 4, c. 5, § 12.

Tenor est qui legem dat feudo. It is the tenor of the feudal grant which regulates its effect and extent. Craig, Jus Feud., 3d ed. 66. See Coke, Litt. 19 a; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 310; 2 Coke, 71; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 410; Wright, Ten. 21, 52, 152.

Terminus annorum certus debet esse et determinatus. A term of years ought to be certain and determinate. Coke, Litt. 45.

Terminus et (ac) feodum non possunt constare simul in unâ eâdemque persona. A term and the fee cannot both be in one and the same person at the same time. Plowd. 29; 3 Mass. 141.

Terra manens vacua occupanti conceditur. Land lying unoccupied is given to the occupant. 1 Sid. 347.

Terra transit cum onere. Land passes with the incumbrances. Coke, Litt. 231; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 437, 630.

Testamenta latissimam interpretationem habere debent. Wills ought to have the broadest interpretation. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 81.

Testamentum est voluntates nostra justa sententia, de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri velit. A testament is the just expression of our will concerning that which any one wishes done after his death: or, as Blackstone translates, "the legal declaration of a man's intentions which he wills to be performed after his death." 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 499; Dig. 28. 1. 1; 29. 3. 2. 1.

Testamentum omne morte consummatum. Every will is completed by death. Coke, Litt. 232.

Testatoris ultima voluntas est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his real intention. Coke, Litt. 322.

Testes ponderantur, non numerantur. See the maxim Ponderantia Testes.

Testibus deponentibus in pari numero dignioribus est credendum. When the number of witnesses is equal on both sides, the more worthy are to be believed. Coke, 4th Inst. 279.

Testis de visu præponderat aliis. An eye-witness outweighs others. Coke, 4th Inst. 470.

Testis nemo in suâ causâ esse potest. No one can be a witness in his own cause. Otherwise in England, by stat. 14 & 15 Vict. 99, and many of the states of the United States.

Testis oculatus unus plus valet quam auriti decem. One eye-witness is worth ten ear-witnesses. Coke, 4th Inst. 279. See 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3154.

Testmoignes ne poent testifié le negative, mes l'affirmative. Witnesses cannot witness to a negative; they must witness to an affirmative. Coke, 4th Inst. 279.

That which I may defeat by my entry I make good by my confirmation. Coke, Litt. 300.

The fund which has received the benefit should make the satisfaction. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3730.

Things accessary are of the nature of the principal. Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 25.

Things are construed according to that which was the cause thereof. Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 4.

Things are dissolved as they be contracted. Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 7.

Things grounded upon an ill and void beginning cannot have a good perfection. Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 3, n. 8.

Things in action, entry, or re-entry cannot be granted over. 19 N. Y. 100, 103.

Things incident cannot be severed. Finch, Law, b. 3, c. 1, n. 12.

Things incident pass by the grant of the principal. 25 Barb. N. Y. 284, 310.

Things incident shall pass by the grant of the principal, but not the principal by the grant of the incident. Coke, Litt. 152 a, 151 b; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 433.

Things shall not be void which may possibly be good.

Timores vani sunt æstimandi qui non cadunt in constantem virum. Fears which do not affect a brave man are vain. 7 Coke, 17.

Titulus est justa causa possidendi id quod nostrum est. Title is a just cause of possessing that which is ours. 8 Coke, 153 (305); Coke, Litt. 345 b.

Tolle voluntatem et erit omnis actus indifferens. Take away the will, and every action will be indifferent. Bracton, 2.

Totum præfertur unicuique parte. The whole is preferable to any single part. 3 Coke, 41 a.

Tout ce que la loi ne defend pas est permis. Every thing is permitted which is not forbidden by law.

Toute exception non surveillée tend à prendre la place du principe. Every exception not watched tends to assume the place of the principle.

Tractent fabrilia fabri. Let smiths perform the work of smiths. 3 Coke, Epist.

Traditio loqui facit chartam. Delivery makes the deed speak. 5 Coke, 1.

Traditio nihil amplius transferre debet vel potest, ad eum qui accipit, quàm est apud eum qui tradit. Delivery cannot and ought not to transfer to him who receives more than was in possession of him who made the delivery. Dig. 41. 1. 20.

Transgressione multiplicata, crescat pœna inflictio. When transgression is multiplied, let the infliction of punishment be increased. Coke, 2d Inst. 479.

Ubi eadem ratio, ibi idem lex. Where there is the same reason, there is the same law. 7 Coke, 18; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 145.

Ubi et dantis et accipientis turpitudo versatur, non posse repeti dicimus; quotiens autem accipientis turpitudo versatur, repeti posse. Where there is turpitude on the part of both giver and receiver, we say it cannot be recovered back, but as often as the turpitude is on the side of the receiver (alone) it can be recovered back. 17 Mass. 562.

Ubi factum nullum, ibi fortia nulla. Where there is no act, there can be no force. 4 Coke, 43.

Ubi jus, ibi remedium. Where there is a right, there is a remedy. 1 Term, 512; Coke, Litt. 197 b; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2411; 4 id. 3726.

Ubi jus incertum, ibi jus nullum. Where the law is uncertain, there is no law.

Ubi lex aliquem cogit ostendere causam, necesse est quod causa sit justa et legitima. Where the law compels a man to show cause, it is necessary that the cause be just and legal. Coke, 2d Inst. 269.

Ubi lex est specialis, et ratio ejus generalis, generaliter accipienda est. Where the law is special and the reason of it is general, it ought to be taken as being general. Coke, 2d Inst. 43.

Ubi lex non distinguit, nec nos distinguere debemus. Where the law does not distinguish, we ought not to distinguish. 7 Coke, 5.

Ubi major pars est, ibi totum. Where is the greater part, there is the whole. F. Moore, 57S.

Ubi matrimonium, ibi dos. Where there is marriage, there is dower. Bracton, 92.

Ubi non adest norma legis, omnia quasi pro suspectis habenda sunt. When the law fails to serve as a rule, almost every thing ought to be suspected. Bacon, Aph. 25.

Ubi non est condendi auctoritas, ibi non est parendi necessitas. Where there is no authority to establish, there is no necessity to obey. Dav. 69.

Ubi non est directa lex, standum est arbitrio judicis, vel procedendum ad similia. Where there is no direct law, the judgment of the judge must be depended upon, or reference made to similar cases.

Ubi non est lex, ibi non est transgressio quoad mundum. Where there is no law, there is no transgression, as it regards the world. 4 Coke, 1 b.

Ubi non est manifesta injustitia, judices habentur pro bonis viris, et judicatum pro veritate. Where there is no manifest injustice, the judges are to be regarded as honest men, and their judgment as truth. 1 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 341, 345.

Ubi non est principalis, non potest esse accessorius. Where there is no principal, there can be no accessory. 4 Coke, 43.

Ubi nulla est conjectura quæ ducat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate non grammatica sed populari ex usu. Where there is no inference which would lead in any other direction, words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, non grammatical, but according to popular usage. Grotius, de Jur. Belli, l. 2, c. 16, § 2.

Ubi nullum matrimonium, ibi nullum dos. Where there is no marriage there is no dower. Coke, Litt. 32 a.

Ubi periculum, ibi et lucrum collocatur. He at whose risk a thing is, should receive the profits arising from it.

Ubi pugnantia inter se in testamento juberentur, neutrum ratum est. When two directions conflicting with each other are given in a will, neither is held valid. Dig. 50. 17. 188 pr.

Ubi quid generaliter conceditur, in est hæc exceptio, si non aliquid sit contra jus fasque. Where a thing is conceded generally, this exception arises, that there shall be nothing contrary to law and right. 10 Coke, 78.

Ubi quis delinquit ibi punietur. Let a man be punished where he commits the offence. 6 Coke, 47.

Ubi verba conjuncta non sunt, sufficit alteratum esse factum. Where words are used disjunctively, it is sufficient that either one of the things enumerated be performed. Dig. 50. 17. 110. 3.

Ubicunque est injuria, ibi damnum sequitur. Wherever there is a wrong, there damage follows. 10 Coke, 116.

Ultima voluntas testatoris est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention. Coke, Litt. 322; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 505.

Ultimum supplicium esse mortem solam interpretamur. The extremest punishment we consider to be death alone. Dig. 48. 19. 21.

Ultra posse non potest esse, et vice versa. What is beyond possibility cannot exist, and the reverse, what cannot exist is not possible. Wingate, Max. 100.

Un ne doit prise advantage de son tort demesne. One ought not to take advantage of his own wrong. 2 And. 38, 40.

Una persona vix potest supplere vices duarum. One person can scarcely supply the place of two. 4 Coke, 118.

Unius omnino testis responsio non audiatur. Let not the evidence of one witness be heard at all. Code, 4. 20. 9; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 370.

Uniuscujusque contractus initium spectandum est, et causa. The beginning and cause of every contract must be considered. Dig. 17. 1. 8; Story, Bailm. § 56.

Universalia sunt notiora singularibus. Things universal are better known than things particular. 2 Rolle, 294; 2 C. Rob. Adm. 294.

Universitas vel corporatio non dicitur aliquid facere nisi id sit collegialiter deliberatum, etiamsi major pars id faciat. An university or corporation is not said to do any thing unless it be deliberated upon collegiately, although the majority should do it. Dav. 48.

Uno absurdo dato, infinita sequuntur. One absurdity being allowed, an infinity follow. 1 Coke, 102.

Unumquodque dissolvatur eodem ligamine quo ligatur. Every thing is dissolved by the same mode in which it is bound together. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 792.

Unumquodque eodem modo quo colligatum est dissolvitur. In the same manner in which any thing is bound it is loosened. 2 Rolle, 39.

Unumquodque est id quod est principalius in ipso. That which is the principal part of a thing is the thing itself. Hob. 123.

Unumquodque ligamen dissolvitur eodem ligamine quod ligatur. Every obligation is dissolved in the same manner in which it is contracted. 12 Barb. N. Y. 366, 375.

Unumquodque principorum est sibimetipsi fides; et perspicua vera non sunt probanda. Every principle is its own evidence, and plain truths are not to be proved. Coke, Litt. 11; Branch, Princ.

Usucapio constituta est ut aliquis litium finis esset. Prescription was instituted that there might be an end to litigation. Dig. 41. 10. 5; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 801, n.; Wood, Civ. Law, 3d ed. 123.

Usury is odious in law.

Usus est dominium fiduciarium. A use is a fiduciary ownership. Bacon, Uses.

Ut pœna ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat. That punishment may happen to a few, the fear of it affects all. Coke, 4th Inst. 63.

Ut res magis valeat quam pereat. That the thing may rather have effect than be destroyed.

Utile per inutile non vitiatur. What is useful is not vitiated by the useless. 3 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 2949, 3293; 2 Wheat. 221; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 298; 17 id. 297; 6 Mass. 303; 12 id. 438; 9 Ired. No. C. 254. See 18 Johns. N. Y. 93, 94.

Uxor et filius sunt nomina naturæ. Wife and son are names of nature. 4 Bacon, Works, 350.

Uxor non est sui juris, sed sub potestate viri. A wife is not her own mistress, but is under the power of her husband. Coke, 3d Inst. 108.

Vagabundum nuncupamus eum qui nullibi domicilium contraxit habitationis. We call him a vagabond who has acquired nowhere a domicile of residence. Phillimore, Dom. 23, note.

Valeat quantum valere potest. It shall have effect as far as it can have effect. Cowp. 600; 4 Kent, Comm. 493; Sheppard, Touchst. 87.

Vana est illa potentia quæ nunquam venit in actum. Vain is that power which is never brought into action. 2 Coke, 51.

Vani timores sunt æstimandi, qui non cadunt in constantem virum. Vain are those fears which affect not a firm man. 7 Coke, 27.

Vani timoris justa excusatio non est. A frivolous fear is not a legal excuse. Dig. 50. 17. 184; Coke, 2d Inst. 483; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 256, n.

Velle non creditur qui obsequitur imperio patris vel domini. He is not presumed to consent who obeys the orders of his father or his master. Dig. 50. 17. 4.

Vendens eandem rem duobus falsarius est. He is fraudulent who sells the same thing twice. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 107.

Veniæ facilitas incentivum est delinquendi. Facility of pardon is an incentive to crime. Coke, 3d Inst. 236.

Verba accipienda sunt secundum subjectum materiam. Words are to be interpreted according to the subject-matter. 6 Coke, 6, n.

Verba accipienda ut sortientur effectum. Words are to be taken so that they may have some effect. 4 Bacon, Works, 258.

Verba æquivoca ac in dubio sensu posita, intelliguntur digniori et potentiori sensu. Equivocal words and those in a doubtful sense are to be taken in their best and most effective sense. 6 Coke, 20.

Verba aliquid operari debent—debent intelligi ut aliquid operentur. Words ought to have some effect—words ought to be interpreted so as to give them some effect. 8 Coke, 94.

Verba aliquid operari debent, verba cum effectu sunt accipienda. Words are to be taken so as to have effect. Bacon, Max. Reg. 3, p. 47. See 1 Duer, Ins 210, 211, 216.

Verba artis ex arte. Terms of art should be explained from the art. 2 Kent, Comm. 556, n.

Verba chartarum fortius accipiuntur contra proferentem. The words of deeds are to be taken most strongly against the person offering them. Coke, Litt. 36 a; Bacon, Max. Reg. 3; Noy, Max. 9th ed. p. 48; 3 Bos. & P. 399, 403; 1 Crompt. & M. Exch. 657; 8 Term, 605; 15 East, 546; 1 Ball & B. 335; 2 Parsons, Contr. 22; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 72 (n.), 529.

Verba cum effectu accipienda sunt. Words are to be interpreted so as to give them effect. Bacon, Max. Reg. 3.

Verba currentis monetæ, tempus solutionis designant. The words "current money" refer to the time of payment. Dav. 20.

Verba debent intelligi cum effectu. Words should be understood effectively. 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 97, 101.

Verba debent intelligi ut aliquid operentur. Words ought to be so understood that they may have some effect. 8 Coke, 94 a.

Verba dicta de persona, intelligi debent de conditione personæ. Words spoken of the person are to be understood of the condition of the person. 2 Rolle, 72.

Verba generalia generaliter sunt intelligenda. General words are to be generally understood. Coke, 3d Inst. 76.

Verba generalia restringuntur ad habilitatem rei vel aptitudinem personæ. General words must be restricted to the nature of the subject-matter or the aptitude of the person. Bacon, Max. Reg. 10; 11 C. B. 254, 356.

Verba generalia restringuntur ad habilitatem rei vel personæ. General words must be confined or restrained to the nature of the subject or the aptitude of the person. Bacon, Max. Reg. 10; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 575.

Verba illata (relata) inesse videntur. Words referred to are to be considered as if incorporated. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 600, 603; 11 Mees. & W. Exch. 183, 188; 10 C. B. 261, 263, 266.

Verba in differenti materia per prius, non per posterius, intelligenda sunt. Words referring to a different subject are to be interpreted by what goes before, not by what follows. Calvinus, Lex.

Verba intelligenda sunt in casu possibili. Words are to be understood in reference to a possible case. Calvinus, Lex.

Verba intentioni, et non è contra, debent inservire. Words ought to wait upon the intention, not the reverse. 8 Coke, 94; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 379.

Verba intentioni, non è contra, debent inservire. Words ought to be made subservient to the intent, not contrary to it. 8 Coke, 94; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 527.

Verba ita sunt intelligenda, ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Words are to be so understood that the subject-matter may be preserved rather than destroyed. Bacon, Max. Reg. 3; Plowd. 156; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 380; 2 Kent, Comm. 555.

Verba merè æquivoca, si per communem usum loquendi in intellectu certo sumuntur, talis intellectus præferendus est. When words are merely equivocal, if by common usage of speech they acquire a certain meaning, such meaning is to be preferred. Calvinus, Lex.

Verba nihil operari melius est quam absurde. It is better that words should have no operation, than to operate absurdly. Calvinus, Lex.

Verba non tam intuenda, quam causa et natura rei, ut mens contrahentium ex eis potius quam ex verbis appareat. Words are not to be looked at so much as the cause and nature of the thing, since the intention of the contracting parties may appear from those rather than from the words. Calvinus, Lex.

Verba offendi possunt, imò ab eis recedere licet, ut verba ad sanum intellectum reducantur. You may disagree with words, nay, you may recede from them, in order that they may be reduced to a sensible meaning. Calvinus, Lex.

Verba ordinationis quando verificari possunt in sua vera significatione, trahi ad extraneum intellectum non debent. When the words of an ordinance can be made true in their true signification, they ought not to be warped to a foreign meaning. Calvinus, Lex.

Verba posteriora propter certitudinem addita, ad priora quæ certitudine indigent, sunt referenda. Subsequent words added for the purpose of certainty are to be referred to preceding words in which certainty is wanting. Wingate, Max. 167; 6 Coke, 236.

Verba pro re et subjecta materia accipi debent. Words should be received most favorably to the thing and the subject-matter. Calvinus, Lex.

Verba quæ aliquid operari possunt non debent esse superflua. Words which can have any effect ought not to be treated as surplusage. Calvinus, Lex.

Verba quantumvis generalia, ad aptitudinem restringuntur, etiamsi nullam aliam paterentur restrictionem. Words, howsoever general, are restrained to fitness (i.e. to harmonize with the subject-matter) though they would bear no other restriction. Spiegelius.

Verba relata hoc maxime operantur per referentiam ut in eis inesse videntur. Words to which reference is made in an instrument have the same effect and operation as if they were inserted in the clause referring to them. Coke, Litt. 359; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 599; 14 East, 568.

Verba secundum materiam subjectam intelligi nemo est qui nescit. There is no one who is ignorant that words should be understood according to the subject-matter. Calvinus, Lex.

Verba semper accipienda sunt in mitiori sensu. Words are always to be taken in their milder sense. 4 Coke, 17.

Verba stricta significationis ad latam extendi possunt, si subsit ratio. Words of a strict signification can be given a wide signification if reason require. Calvinus, Lex; Spiegelius.

Verba sunt indices animi. Words are indications of the intention. Latch, 106.

Verbum imperfecti temporis rem adhuc imperfectam significat. The imperfect tense of the verb indicates an incomplete matter. 6 Wend. N. Y. 103, 120.

Veredictum, quasi dictum veritatis; ut judicium, quasi juris dictum. A verdict is as it were the saying of the truth, in the same manner that a judgment is the saying of the law. Coke, Litt. 226.

Veritas demonstrationis tollit errorem nominis. The truth of the description removes the error of the name. 1 Ld. Raym. 303. See LEGATEE.

Veritas habenda est in juratore; justitia et judicium in judice. Truth is the desideratum in a juror; justice and judgment, in a judge. Bracton, 185 b.

Veritas nihil veretur nisi abscondi. Truth fears nothing but concealment. 9 Coke, 20.

Veritas nimium altercando amittitur. By too much altercation truth is lost. Hob. 344.

Veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis. The truth of the name takes away the error of description. Bacon, Max. Reg. 25; Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 571; 8 Taunt. 313; 2 Jones, Eq. No. C. 72.

Veritatem qui non liberè pronunciat, proditor est veritatis. He who does not speak the truth freely is a traitor to the truth. Coke, 4th Inst. Epil.

Via antiqua via est tuta. The old way is the safe way. 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 527, 530.

Voluit sed non dixit. He willed but did not say. 4 Kent, Comm. 538.

Voluntas donatoris, in chartâ doni sui manifestè expressa observetur. The will of the donor, clearly expressed in the deed, should be observed. Coke, Litt. 21 a.

Voluntas et propositum distinguunt maleficia. The will and the proposed end distinguish crimes. Bracton, 2 b, 136 b.

Voluntas facit quod in testamento scriptum valeat. The will of the testator gives validity to what is written in the will. Dig. 30. 1. 12. 3.

Voluntas in delictis non exitus spectatur. In offences, the will and not the consequences are to be looked to. Coke, 2d Inst. 57.

Voluntas reputabatur pro facto. The will is to be taken for the deed. Coke, 3d Inst. 69.

Voluntas testatoris ambulatoria est usque ad mortem. The will of a testator is ambulatory until his death: that is, he may change it at any time. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 83; 4 Coke, 61.

Voluntas testatoris habet interpretationem latam et benignam. The will of a testator has a broad and liberal interpretation. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 260; Dig. 50. 17. 12.

Voluntas ultima testatoris est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention. Coke, Litt. 322.

Vox emissa volat,—litera scripta manet. Words spoken vanish, words written remain. A written contract cannot be varied by parol proof. Broom, Max. 3d Lond. ed. 594; 1 Johns. N. Y. 571, 572.

What a man cannot transfer, he cannot bind by articles.

When many join in one act, the law says it is the act of him who could best do it; and things should be done by him who has the best skill. Noy, Max.

When no time is limited, the law appoints the most convenient.

When the common law and statute law concur, the common law is to be preferred. 4 Coke, 71.

When the foundation fails, all fails.

When the law gives any thing, it gives a remedy for the same.

When the law presumes the affirmative, the negative is to be proved. 1 Rolle, 83; 3 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 3063, 3090.

When two titles concur, the best is preferred. Finch, Law, b. 1, c. 4, n. 82.

Where there is equal equity, the law must prevail. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3727.

Where two rights concur, the more ancient shall be preferred.

MAY. Is permitted to; has liberty to.

2. Whenever a statute directs the doing of a thing for the sake of justice or the public good, the word may is the same as shall. For example, the 23 H. VI. says the sheriff may take bail; that is construed he shall, for he is compellable to do so. Carth. 293; Salk. 609; Skinn. 370.

3. The words shall and may, in general acts of the legislature or in private constitutions, are to be construed imperatively, 3 Atk. Ch. 166; but the construction of those words in a deed depends on circumstances. 3 Atk. Ch. 282. See 1 Vern. Ch. 152, case 142; 18 Ala. 390.

MAYHEM. In Criminal Law. The act of unlawfully and violently depriving another of the use of such of his members as may render him less able, in fighting, either to defend himself or annoy his adversary. 8 Carr. & P. 167. The cutting or disabling, or weakening, a man's hand or finger, or striking out his eye or foretooth, or depriving him of those parts the loss of which abates his courage, are held to be mayhems. 7 Humphr. Tenn. But cutting off the ear or nose, or the like, are not held to be mayhems at common law. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 205.

2. These and other severe personal injuries are punished by the Coventry Act, which has been re-enacted in several of the states, Ryan, Med. Jur. 191, Phil. ed. 1832; and by congress. See Act of April 30, 1790, s. 13, 1

Mayhem is not an offence at common law, but only an aggravated trespass. 7 Mass. 248; 3 Binn. Penn. 595. See 11 Rich. So. C. 165.

MAYHEMAVIT. Maimed. This is a term of art which cannot be supplied in pleadings by any other word, as mutilavit, truncavit, etc. 3 Thomas, Co. Litt. 548; 7 Mass. 247.

MAYOR (Lat. major; Spelman, Gloss. Meyr, miret, maer, one that keeps guard. Cowel; Blount; Webster). The chief governor or executive magistrate of a city. The old word was portgreve. The word mayor first occurs in 1189, when Rich. I. substituted a mayor for the two bailiffs of London. The word is common in Bracton. Bracton, 57. In London, York, and Dublin, he is called lord mayor. Wharton, Lex. 2d Lond. ed.

He is usually elected annually; and it is generally his duty to cause the laws of the city to be enforced, and to superintend inferior officers, such as constables, watchmen, and the like. But the power and authority which mayors possess, being given to them by local regulations, vary in different places.

MAYOR'S COURT. The name of a court usually established in cities, composed of a mayor, recorder, and aldermen, generally having jurisdiction of offences committed within the city, and of other matters specially given them by the statute.

MAYORAZGO. In Spanish Law. A species of entail known to Spanish law. 1 White, New Rec. 119.

MEANDER. To wind as a river or stream. Webster.

The winding or bend of a stream.

To survey a stream according to its meanders or windings. Wisc. Rev. Stat. c. 34, § 1; 2 Wisc. 317.

MEASURE. A means or standard for computing amount. A certain quantity of something, taken for a unit, and which expresses a relation with other quantities of the same thing.

2. The constitution of the United States gives power to congress to "fix the standard of weights and measures." Art. 1, s. 8. Hitherto this has remained as a dormant power, though frequently brought before the attention of congress.

The states, it seems, possess the power to legislate on this subject, or, at least, the existing standards at the adoption of the constitution remain in full force. 3 Story, Const. 21; Rawle, Const. 102.

3. By a resolution of congress, of the 14th of June, 1836, the secretary of the treasury is directed to cause a complete set of all weights and measures adopted as standards, and now either made or in the progress of manufacture, for the use of the several custom-houses and for other purposes, to be delivered to the governor of each state in the Union, or to such person as he may appoint, for the use of the states respectively, to the end that a uniform standard of weights and measures may be established throughout the United States.

4. Measures of Length.

3 feet = 1 yard.
5½ yards = 1 rod or pole.
40 poles = 1 furlong.
8 furlongs = 1 mile.
69 1/7 miles = 1 degree of a great circle of the earth.

An inch is the smallest lineal measure to which a name is given, but subdivisions are used for many purposes. Among mechanics, the inch is commonly divided into eighths. By the officers of the revenue, and by scientific persons, it is divided into tenths, hundredths, etc. Formerly it was made to consist of twelve parts, called lines; but these have fallen into disuse.

Particular Measures of Length.

First. Used for measuring cloth of all kinds.

1 nail = 2¼ inches.
1 quarter = 4 inches.
1 yard = 4 quarters.
1 ell = 5 quarters.

Second. Used for the height of horses.

1 hand = 4 inches.

Third. Used in measuring depths.

1 fathom = 6 feet.

Fourth. Used in land measure, to facilitate computation of the contents, 10 square chains being equal to an acre.

1 link = 7 92/100 inches.
1 chain = 100 links.

5. Measures of Surface.

144 square inches = 1 square foot.
9 square feet = 1 square yard.
30¼ square yards = 1 perch or rod.
40 perches = 1 rood.
4 roods or 160 perches = 1 acre.
640 acres = 1 square mile.

Measures of Solidity and Capacity.

First. Measures of solidity.

1728 cubic inches = 1 cubic foot.
27 cubic feet = 1 cubic yard.

Second. Measures of capacity for all liquids and for all goods not liquid, except such as are comprised in the next division.

4 gills = 1 pint = 34⅔ cubic inches nearly.
2 pints = 1 quart = 69½ " "
4 quarts = 1 gallon = 277¼ " "
2 gallons = 1 peck = 554½ " "
8 gallons = 1 bushel = 2218¼ " "
8 bushels = 1 quarter = 10¼ cubic feet "
5 quarters = 1 load = 51¼ " "

The last four denominations are used only for goods, not liquids. For liquids, several denominations have heretofore been adopted, namely, for beer the firkin of 9 gallons, the kilderkin of 18, the barrel of 36, the hogshead of 54, and the butt of 108 gallons. For wine or spirits there are the anker, runlet, tierce, hogshead, puncheon, pipe, butt, and tun: these are, however, rather the names of the casks in which the commodities are imported, than as expressing any definite number of gallons. It is the practice to gauge all such vessels, and to charge them according to their actual contents.

Third. Measures of capacity for coal, lime, potatoes, fruit, and other commodities sold by heaped measure.

2 gallons = 1 peck = 704 cubic in. nearly.
8 gallons = 1 bushel = 2815½ " "
3 bushels = 1 sack = 4⅘ cubic feet, "
12 sacks = 1 chaldron = 58⅔ " "

6. Measures of Weights.

See Weights.

Angular Measure; or, Division of the Circle.

60 seconds = 1 minute.
60 minutes = 1 degree.
30 degrees = 1 sign.
90 degrees = 1 quadrant.
360 degrees, or 12 signs = 1 circumference.

Formerly the subdivisions were carried on by sixties; thus, the second was divided into sixty thirds, the third into sixty fourths, etc. At present, the second is more generally divided decimally into tens, hundreds, etc. The degree is frequently so divided.

Measure of Time.

60 minutes = 1 hour.
24 hours = 1 day.
7 days = 1 week.
28 days, or 4 weeks = 1 lunar month.
28, 29, 30, or 31 days = 1 calendar month.
12 calendar months = 1 year.
365 days = 1 common year.
366 days = a leap year.

The second of time is subdivided like that of angular measure.

FRENCH MEASURES.

7. The fundamental, invariable, and standard measure, by which all weights and measures are formed, is called the mètre, a word derived from the Greek, which signifies measure. It is a lineal measure, and is equal to 3 feet, 0 inches, $11\frac{44}{100}$ lines, Paris measure, or 3 feet, 3 inches, $\frac{370}{1000}$, English. This unit is divided into ten parts; each tenth, into ten hundredths; each hundredth, into ten thousandths, etc. These divisions, as well as those of all other measures, are infinite. As the standard is to be invariable, something has been sought from which to make it, which is not variable or subject to any change. The fundamental base of the mètre is the quarter of the terrestrial meridian, or the distance from the pole to the equator, which has been divided into ten millions of equal parts, one of which is the length of the mètre. All the other measures are formed from the mètre, as follows:

Measure of Capacity.

8. The litre. This is the décimètre, or one-tenth part of the cubic mètre; that is, if a vase be made of a cubic form, of a décimètre every way, it would be of the capacity of a litre. This is divided by tenths, as the mètre. The measures which amount to more than a single litre are counted by tens, hundreds, thousands, etc. of litres.

Measures of Weights.

The gramme. This is the weight of a cubic centimètre of distilled water at the temperature of zero: that is, if a vase be made of a cubic form, of a hundredth part of a mètre every way, and it be filled with distilled water, the weight of that water will be that of the gramme.

Measures of Surfaces.

The arc, used in surveying. This is a square, the sides of which are of the length of ten mètres, or what is equal to one hundred square mètres. Its divisions are the same as in the preceding measures.

Measures of Solidity.

9. The stère, used in measuring fire-wood. It is a cubic mètre. Its subdivisions are similar to the preceding. The term is used only for measuring fire-wood. For the measure of other things, the term cube mètre, or cubic mètre, is used, or the tenth, hundredth, etc. of such a cube.

Money.

The franc. It weighs five grammes. It is made of nine-tenths of silver, and one-tenth of copper. Its tenth part is called a decime, and its hundredth part a centime.

One measure being thus made the standard of all the rest, they must be all equally invariable; but, in order to make this certainty perfectly sure, the following precautions have been adopted. As the temperature was found to have an influence on bodies, the term zero, or melting ice, has been selected in making the models or standard of the mètre. Distilled water has been chosen to make the standard of the gramme, as being purer and less encumbered with foreign matter than common water. The temperature having also an influence on a determinate volume of water, that with which the experiments were made was of the temperature of zero, or melting ice. The air, more or less charged with humidity, causes the weight of bodies to vary: the models which represent the weight of the gramme have, therefore, been taken in a vacuum.

10. It has already been stated that the divisions of these measures are all uniform, namely, by tens, or decimal fractions; they may, therefore, be written as such. Instead of writing,

1 mètre and 1-tenth of a mètre, we may write, 1 m. 1.
2 mètre and 8-tenths,—2 m. 8.
10 mètre and 4-hundredths,—10 m. 04.
7 litres, 1-tenth, and 2-hundredths,—7 lit. 12, etc.

Names have been given to each of these divisions of the principal unit; but these names always indicate the value of the fraction, and the unit from which it is derived. To the name of the unit have been prefixed the particles déci, for tenth, centi, for hundredth, and milli, for thousandth. They are thus expressed: a décimètre, a décilitre, a décigramme, a décistère, a déciare, a centimètre, a centilitre, a centigramme, etc. The facility with which the divisions of the unit are reduced to the same expression is very apparent; this cannot be done with any other kind of measures.

11. As it may sometimes be necessary to express great quantities of units, collections have been made of them in tens, hundreds, thousands, tens of thousands, etc., to which names derived from the Greek have been given: namely, déca, for tens; hecto, for hundreds; kilo, for thousands; and myria, for tens of thousands; they are thus expressed: a décamètre, a décalitre, etc.; a hectomètre, a hectogramme, etc.; a kilomètre, a kilogramme, etc.

The following table will facilitate the reduction of these weights and measures into our own:

The Mètre is 3.28 feet, or 39.371 in.
Are is 1076.441 square feet.
Litre is 61.028 cubic inches.
Stère is 35.317 cubic feet.
Gramme is 15.4441 grains troy, or 5.6481 drams avoirdupois.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES. In Practice. A rule or method by which the damage sustained is to be estimated or measured.

The defendant is to make compensation for all the natural and proximate consequences of his wrong, but not for secondary or remote consequences. There are cases in which this principle of compensation is departed from: as, where exemplary damages are awarded, or double or treble damages are allowed by statute. But, in general, the law seeks to give compensation. The measure of this compensation has been somewhat definitely fixed, as to many classes of cases, by rules, of which the following are important and well established:

2. Bills of Exchange. The rate of damages to be paid to the holder of a bill of exchange which is dishonored has been the subject of distinct statute regulation in nearly all the states of the Union. The following is an abstract of these regulations, and is believed to contain all in force at the present time:

Alabama. Damages on inland bills of exchange protested for non-payment are ten per cent., and on foreign bills fifteen per cent., on the sum drawn for. Code of Ala. 1852, c. 3, pt. 2, § 1537.

These damages are in lieu of all charges except costs of protests incurred previous to and at the time of giving notice of non-payment; but the holder may recover legal interest on the amount of the bill and damages, from the time at which payment was demanded, and costs of protest. Id. § 1538.

The same damages are allowed on protest for non-acceptance; but interest is recoverable on the amount of the bill only. Id. § 1541.

3. Arkansas. It is provided by an act passed Feb. 28, 1838, that every bill of exchange, expressed to be for value received, drawn or negotiated within the state, payable after date, to order or bearer, which shall be duly presented for acceptance or payment, and protested for non-acceptance or non-payment, shall be subject to damages in the following cases. First, if the bill have been drawn on any person at any place within the state, at the rate of two per cent. on the principal sum specified in the bill; second, if the bill shall be drawn on any person, and payable in Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, or Missouri, or at any point on the Ohio river, at the rate of four per cent. on the principal sum; third, if the bill shall have been drawn on any person, and payable at any other place within the United States, at the rate of five per cent. on the principal sum; fourth, if the bill shall have been drawn on any person, and payable at any port or place beyond the United States, at the rate of ten per cent. on the sum specified in the bill. Digest of Statutes, 1858, 209, c. 25, § 8.

If any bill of exchange, expressed to be for value received, and made payable to order or bearer, shall be drawn on any person at any place within the state, and accepted and protested for non-payment, there shall be allowed and paid to the holder, by the acceptor, damages in the following cases. First, if the bill be drawn by any person at any place within the state, at the rate of two per cent. on the principal sum; second, if the bill be drawn at any place without the state, but within the United States, at the rate of six per cent. on the sum therein specified; third, if the bill be drawn on any person at any place without the United States, at the rate of ten per cent. on the sum therein specified. Id. § 9.

In addition to the damages allowed in the two preceding sections to the holder of any bill of exchange protested for non-payment or non-acceptance, he shall be entitled to costs of protest, and interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum on the amount specified in the bill, from the date of the protest until the amount of the bill shall be paid. Id. § 10.

4. California. The damages allowed on protest for non-payment of bills drawn or negotiated within the state are,—if the bill were drawn on any person in any of the United States east of the Rocky Mountains, fifteen per cent.; if drawn on a person in any foreign country, twenty per cent. Laws of Cal. 1850–53, 148, § 12.

These damages are in lieu of interest, protest fees, and all other charges up to the time of notice of non-payment. But the holder is entitled to recover interest on the amount of the principal sum, and the damages from the time at which notice of protest for non-payment was given, and payment of the principal sum demanded. Id. § 13.

5. Connecticut. When drawn on another place in the United States. When drawn upon persons in the city of New York, two per cent. When in other parts of the state of New York, or the New England states (other than this), New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, or the District of Columbia, three per cent. When on persons in North or South Carolina, Georgia, or Ohio, five per cent. On other states, territories, or districts in the United States, eight per cent. on the principal sum in each case, with interest on the amount of such sum, with the damage after notice and demand. Stat. tit. 71, Notes and Bills, 413, 414. When drawn on persons residing in Connecticut, no damages are allowed.

When the bill is drawn on persons out of the United States, twenty per cent. is said to be the amount which ought reasonably to be allowed. Swift, Ev. 336. There is no statutory provision on the subject.

6. Delaware. The damages on bills drawn on any person beyond seas and returned unpaid with legal protest, are, as to all concerned, twenty per cent. on the contents of the bill. Rev. Code of Del. 1852, 183, c. 63, § 4.

Florida. Damages on foreign protested bills of exchange shall be at the rate of five per cent. Thompson, Digest of Laws of Florida, 1847, 349, § 6.

8. Georgia. No damages are allowed on protested bills drawn in the state on a person in the state; except that on bank bills ten per cent. damages are allowed for refusal to pay in specie. On bills drawn or negotiated within the state on persons out of the state but within the United States, five per cent. and interest is allowed. On bills drawn on a person out of the United States, ten per cent. damages, and postage, protest, and necessary expenses; also the premium, if any, on the bill; but if a discount, the discount must be deducted. Cobb, Dig. of Laws of Georgia, 1851, 521.

9. Illinois. On foreign bills protested for non-acceptance or non-payment, legal interest on the bill from the time it ought to have been paid, with ten per cent. damages in addition, and charges of protest. On bills drawn payable within the United States or their territories, but out of the state, the same rule applies, except that the damages are only five per cent. Laws of Ill. 1858, 291.

10. Indiana. No damages are allowed on a bill drawn within the state on a person within the state. On a bill drawn for value on a person in another state, territory, or district, five per cent. damages are recoverable; and if on a person out of the United States, ten per cent. No interest or charges prior to protest are allowed; but interest from date of protest may be recovered. And no damages are recoverable of drawer or indorser beyond costs of protest, if the principal sum is paid on notice of protest and demand. 1 Rev. Stat. of Ind. cc. 77, 379, §§ 7, 8, 9, 10.

11. Iowa. On bills drawn on a person out of the United States, or in California, Oregon, Utah, or New Mexico, ten per cent. damages, with interest from date of protest, are allowed. If drawn on a person in Iowa, Missouri, Illinois, Wisconsin, or Minnesota, three per cent. with interest. If drawn on a person in Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio, Virginia, the District of Columbia, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, or Connecticut, five per cent. and interest; if on any other place in the United States, eight per cent. and interest. Rev. Code of Iowa, 1851, 151, § 965.

12. Kentucky. On bills drawn on a person at any place within the United States, no damages are allowed. Bills drawn on a person out of the United States, and protested for non-acceptance or non-payment, bear interest at the rate of ten per cent. per year from the date of protest for not longer than eighteen months, unless payment be sooner demanded from the party to be charged. Such interest is then recoverable up to the time of judgment; and the judgment bears legal interest. No other damages are allowed. Rev. Stat. of Ky. 1852, 193, c. 22, § 10.

13. Louisiana. On protest for non-acceptance or for non-payment of bills drawn on foreign countries, ten per cent. is allowed; on bills drawn in other states of the United States, five per cent. Rev. Stat. of La. 1856, 44, § 2.

These damages are in lieu of interest and all other charges incurred previous to time of giving notice of non-acceptance or non-payment; but the principal and damages bear interest thereafter. Id. § 3.

If the bill is drawn in United States moneys, the damages are to be ascertained without any reference to the rate of exchange existing between the state and the place on which the bill was drawn. Id. § 4.

14. Maine. Damages are allowed as follows, in addition to interest: On bills for $100 or more, drawn, accepted, or indorsed in the state, at a place seventy-five miles distant from the place where drawn, one per cent.; on bills for any sum drawn, accepted, or indorsed in the state, if payable in New York or in any state north of it, except Maine, three per cent.; if payable in any Atlantic state south of New York and north of Florida, state and payable beyond the limits of it, may recover ten per cent. as damages, with interest and costs of suit. But this provision shall not be construed to embrace drafts drawn by persons other than merchants upon their agents or factors. Oldham & White, Dig. of Laws of Texas, 1859, 53, art. 100.

28. Virginia. When a bill of exchange drawn or indorsed within this state is protested for non-acceptance or non-payment, there shall be paid by the party liable for the principal of such bill, in addition to what else he is liable for, damages upon the principal at the rate of three per cent. if the bill be payable out of Virginia and within the United States; at the rate of ten per cent. if the bill be payable without the United States. Code of Virginia, 1849, 582, § 9.

29. Wisconsin. On bills drawn payable without the United States, damages are allowed at the rate of five per cent., with interest on the contents of the bill from the date of protest. These damages and interest are in full of all damages, charges, and expenses. On bills drawn payable out of the state and in any state or territory of the United States adjoining the state, damages at the rate of five per cent. are allowed, with interest on the bill according to its tenor, and costs and charges of protest. On bills drawn payable out of the state, but within some state or territory of the United States not adjoining the state, the damages are ten per cent., with interest and charges as last mentioned. Rev. Stat. of Wisc. 1848, 409, §§ 8–10.

30. Carriers. Upon a total failure to deliver goods, the carrier is liable for the value of the goods at their place of destination, with interest, deducting the freight. 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 186; 8 Johns. N. Y. 213; 10 id. 1; 14 id. 170; 15 id. 24; 14 Ill. 146; 24 N. H. 297; 1 Cal. 108; 10 La. Ann. 412; 5 Rich. So. C. 462; 9 id. 465; 17 Mass. 62. Upon a failure to take the goods at all for transportation, he is liable for the difference between the value at the place of shipment and at the place of destination, less his freight; or, if another conveyance can be found, the difference between the freight agreed on with defendant, and the sum (if greater) which the shipper would be compelled to pay another carrier. 10 Watts, Penn. 418; 4 N. Y. 340; 1 Abb. Adm. 119. Upon a delay to deliver the goods, the plaintiff is entitled to an indemnity for his loss incurred by the delay, taking into account any fall in the market occurring between the time when the property should have been delivered by the carrier and the time when it actually was. 12 N. Y. 509; 22 Barb. 278. But see 19 Barb. N. Y. 36.

31. Collision. The general principle followed by the courts of admiralty in cases of collision between vessels is that the damages awarded against the offending vessel must be sufficient to restore the other to the condition she was in at the time of the collision, if restoration is practicable. Both damages to vessel and cargo are to be made good. But hypothetical and consequential damages are excluded. The loss of the use of the injured vessel while undergoing repairs is proper to be included. If the injured vessel is a total loss, her market-value at the time is the measure of damages. Consult Abbott, Adm. 100; Ole. Adm. 188, 246, 388, 444, 505; 13 How. 106; 17 id. 170; 2 Wall. Jr. C. C. 52; 6 McLean, C. C. 238.

32. Contracts. Where a contract prescribes a price to be paid, the compensation recoverable for a part-performance will be measured by the contract price if practicable, and not by the actual value of the services or goods, etc. furnished.

Contracts for Land. Where a vendor of real property fails to convey according to his contract, a distinction is taken, in many of the cases, growing out of the motive of the party in default. If he acted in good faith and supposed he had good title and could convey, the purchaser's damages have been limited to the amount of his advance, if any, interest, and expenses of examining the title. 2 W. Blackst. 1078; 10 Barnew. & C. 416; 8 C. B. 133; 2 Wend. N. Y. 399; 4 Den. N. Y. 546; 6 Barb. N. Y. 646; 20 N. Y. 140; 2 Bibb, Ky. 415; 1 Litt. Ky. 358; 9 Md. 250; 11 Penn. St. 127. But in case of a wilful or fraudulent refusal to convey, the purchaser has been held entitled to the value of the land, with interest. 6 Barnew. & C. 31; 1 Exch. 850; 6 Wheat. 109; Hard. Ky. 41; 2 Bibb, Ky. 40, 434; 9 Leigh, Va. 111. See 21 Me. 484; 21 Vt. 77; 1 Iowa, 26; 9 Ala. N. S. 252; 12 id. 820; 19 id. 184; 1 Gill & J. Md. 440; 11 Ired. No. C. 99; 14 B. Monr. Ky. 364.

When the purchaser refuses to perform, the measure has been held, in England, to be the difference between the price fixed in the contract and the value of the land at the time fixed for the delivery of the deed. 7 Mees. & W. Exch. 474; 17 Barb. N. Y. 260. But the rule does not appear to be well settled in this country. See 4 Me. 258; 21 Wend. N. Y. 457; 24 id. 304; 2 Den. N. Y. 610; 18 Vt. 27.

33. Eviction. The damages recoverable for an eviction, in an action for breach of covenants of seisin and warranty in a deed, are the consideration-money, interest thereon, and the costs, if any, of defending the eviction, 6 Watts & S.; in Arkansas, 1 Ark. 323; Georgia, 17 Ga. 602; Illinois, 2 Ill. 310; Indiana, 2 Blackf. Ind. 147; Kentucky, 4 Dan. Ky. 253; Mississippi, 31 Miss. 433; Missouri, 1 Mo. 552; 3 id. 391; 19 id. 435; North Carolina, 2 Dev. No. C. 30; New Hampshire, 25 N. H. 229; 30 id. 531; New Jersey, 4 Halst. N. J. 139; New York, 4 Johns. N. Y. 1; 13 id. 50; 13 Barb. N. Y. 267; Ohio, 3 Ohio, 211; see 8 id. 49; 10 id. 317; Pennsylvania, 4 Dall. 441; 12 Penn. St. 372; 27 id. 288; South Carolina, 1 McCord, 585; 2 id. 413; Tennessee, 2 Wheat. 64; 8 Humphr. Tenn. 647; Virginia, 2 Rand. Va. 132; 2 Leigh, Va. 451; 11 id. 261; while in Connecticut, 14 Conn. 245; Louisiana, 13

La. 143; Maine, 12 Me. 1; 27 id. 525; Massachusetts, 3 Mass. 523; 4 id. 108; 2 Metc. Mass. 518; 9 id. 63; and Vermont, 12 Vt. 481, it is the value of the land at the time of eviction, together with the expenses of the suit, etc. See 2 Greenleaf, Ev. § 264; Sedgwick, Dam. 165; 4 Kent, Comm. 474.

34. Incumbrances. On a breach of a covenant in a deed against incumbrances, the purchaser is entitled to recover his expenses incurred in extinguishing the incumbrance. 22 Pick. Mass. 490; 1 Du. N. Y. 331; 7 Johns. N. Y. 358; 13 id. 105; 16 id. 122; 34 Me. 422; 4 Ind. 130.

Insurance. In cases of loss of goods which have been insured from maritime dangers, when an adjustment is made, the damages are settled by valuing the property, not according to prime cost, but at the price at which it may be sold at the time of settling the average. Marshall, Ins. b. 1, c. 14, s. 2, p. 621. See ADJUSTMENT.

35. Sales. Where the seller of chattels fails to perform his agreement, the measure of damages is the difference between the contract-price and the market-value of the article at the time and place fixed for delivery. 5 N. Y. 537; 12 id. 41; 3 Mich. 55; 6 McLean, C. C. 102, 497; 4 Tex. 289; 12 Ill. 184. The same rule applies as to the deficiency where there is a part-delivery only. 16 Q. B. 941. Where, however, the purchaser has paid the price in advance, some of the cases, particularly in England and New York, allow the highest market-price up to the time of the trial. Where the purchaser refuses to take and pay for the goods, the seller may sell them fairly, and charge the buyer with the difference between the contract-price and the best market-price obtainable within a reasonable time after the refusal. Where the goods are delivered and received, but do not correspond in quality with a warranty given, the vendee may recover the difference between the value of the goods delivered and the value they would have had if they had corresponded with the contract.

MEASON-DUE. A corruption of Maison de Dieu.

MEDIATE POWERS. Those incident to primary powers, given by a principal to his agent. For example: the general authority given to collect, receive, and pay debts due by or to the principal is a primary power. In order to accomplish this, it is frequently required to settle accounts, adjust disputed claims, resist those which are unjust, and answer and defend suits: these subordinate powers are sometimes called mediate powers. Story, Ag. § 58. See 1 Campb. 43, note; 4 id. 163; 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 149.

MEDIATION. The act of some mutual friend of two contending parties, who brings them to agree, compromise, or settle their disputes. Vattel, Droit des Gens, liv. 2, c. 18, § 328.

MEDIATOR. One who interposes between two contending parties, with their consent, for the purpose of assisting them in settling their differences. Sometimes this term is applied to an officer who is appointed by a sovereign nation to promote the settlement of disputes between two other nations. See MINISTER.

MEDICAL EVIDENCE. Testimony given by physicians or surgeons in their professional capacity as experts, or derived from the statements of writers of medical or surgical works.

This kind of evidence was first recognized by Charles V. of Germany, and incorporated in the "Caroline Code," framed at Ratisbon in 1532, wherein it was ordained that the opinion of medical men—at first surgeons only—should be received in cases of death by violent or unnatural means, when suspicion existed of a criminal agency. The publication of this code encouraged the members of the medical profession to renewed activity, tending greatly to advance their sciences and the cause of justice generally. Many books soon appeared on the subject of medical jurisprudence, and the importance of medical evidence was more fully understood. Elwell, Malp. & Med. Ev. 285.

2. The evidence of the medical witness is strictly that of an expert. Elwell, Malp. & Med. Ev. 275; 10 How. Pract. N. Y. 289; 2 Conn. 514; 1 Chandl. Wisc. 178; 2 Ohio, 452; 27 N. H. 157; 17 Wend. N. Y. 136; 4 Den. N. Y. 311; 7 Cush. Mass. 219; 1 Phillipps, Ev. 780; Smith, Lead. Cases.

The professional witness should not be permitted to make up an opinion to be given in evidence from what other witnesses say of the facts in the case; because under such circumstances he takes the place of the jury as to the credibility of the witness, and in that case he also determines what part of the testimony of other witnesses properly applies to the case,—a duty that belongs to the court. In the case of Rogers, 7 Metc. Mass. 505, C. J. Shaw presiding, the court held: "If the symptoms and indications testified to by other witnesses are proved, and if the jury are satisfied of the truth of them, whether in his [the witness's] opinion the party was insane, and what the nature and character of that insanity; and what state did they indicate, and what he would expect would be the conduct of such a person in any supposed circumstance." Under this ruling the medical witness passes upon the condition of the person whose condition is at issue. To do it correctly, he must hear all the evidence that the jury hears; he must judge as to the relevance of the evidence of others, and make an application of the facts that legally and properly bear upon the case to it, and reject all others: in short, he is judge and jury in the case. Since the trial of Rogers, a different rule has been adopted by the courts in Massachusetts. In the case of the United States vs. McGlue, reported in 1 Curt. C. C., Mr. Justice Curtis instructed the jury that medical experts "were not allowed to give opinions in the case. It is not the province of the expert to draw inferences of fact from the evidence, but simply to disclose his opinion on a known or hypothetical state of facts; and, therefore, the counsel on each side have put to the physicians such states of fact as they deem warranted by the evidence, and have taken their opinions thereon. If you consider any of these states of fact put to the medical witness are proved, then the opinions thereon are admissible to be weighed by you; otherwise their opinions are not applicable to the case." In the McNaughten Case, 10 Clark & F. Hou. L. 210, the twelve judges held in the same way. The attention of the witness being called to a definite state of facts constituting a hypothetical case, his opinion is then unembarrassed by any collateral questions or considerations, and the jury, under the instructions of the court, determines how far the facts sustain the hypothetical case, and, consequently, how far the opinion of the witness applies to the case under investigation. See Elwell, Malp. & Med. Ev. 311.

3. The medical witness is not a privileged witness. A difference of opinion has existed among medico-legal writers, and perhaps still exists. Fonblanque, a distinguished English barrister, holds that when the ends of justice absolutely require the disclosure, a medical witness is not only bound but compellable to give evidence on all matters that will enlighten the case; and in the important case of the Duchess of Kingston, Lord Mansfield said, "In a court of justice medical men are bound to divulge secrets when required to do so. If a medical man was voluntarily to reveal these secrets, to be sure he would be guilty of a breach of honor and of great indiscretion; but to give that information, which, by the law of the land, he is bound to do, will never be imputed to him as any indiscretion whatever." In this case Sir C. Hawkins, who had attended the duchess as medical man, was compelled to disclose what had been committed to him in confidence. While this is the common-law rule, the states of New York, Missouri, Wisconsin, Iowa, Indiana, Michigan, and perhaps some others, have enacted statutory provisions relieving the physician from the obligation of the common-law rule to reveal professional secrets. The language used in the statutes generally is, "No person duly authorized to practise physic or surgery shall be allowed to disclose any information which he may have acquired in attending a patient in a professional character, and which information was necessary to enable him to prescribe for such patient as a physician, or to do any act for him as a surgeon." Under this statute, in New York it has been held that when a physician was consulted by the defendant in an action on the case for seduction, as to the means of producing abortion, he cannot claim the protection of the statute, not being privileged. 21 Wend. N. Y. 79; Elwell, Malp. & Med. Ev. 320.

4. Medical books are not received in evidence. They are subject to the same rule that applies to scientific and other professional books. Even the elementary works on law are not admissible in evidence as to what the law is. 5 Carr. & P. 73; 2 Carr. & K. 270. In the case of Commonwealth vs. Wilson, 1 Gray, 338, Shaw, J. C., said, "Facts or opinions on the subject of insanity, as on any other subject, cannot be laid before the jury except by the testimony under oath of persons skilled in such matter. Whether stated in the language of the court or of the counsel in a former case, or cited from works of legal or medical writers, they are still statements of facts, and must be proved on oath. The opinion of a lawyer on such a question of fact is entitled to no more weight than that of any other person not an expert. The principles governing the admissibility of such evidence have been fully considered by this court since the trial of Rogers; and the more recent English authorities are against the admission of such evidence." 6 Carr. & P. 586; Elwell, Malp. & Med. Ev. 332.

MEDICAL JURISPRUDENCE. That science which applies the principles and practice of medicine to the elucidation and settlement of doubtful questions which arise in courts of laws.

2. These questions are properly embraced in five different classes:

The first includes questions arising out of the relations of sex: as, impotence and sterility, hermaphroditism, rape, pregnancy, legitimacy, delivery.

The second, injuries inflicted upon the living organization: as, infanticide, wounds, poisons, persons found dead.

The third, those arising out of disqualifying diseases: as, the different forms of mental alienation.

The fourth, those arising out of deceptive practices: as, feigned diseases.

The fifth is made up of miscellaneous questions: as, age, identity, presumption of seniorship, life assurance, and medical evidence.

The French writers are numerous: Briand, Biessy, Esquirol, Georget, Falret, Trebuchet, Marc, and others, have written treatises or published papers on this subject; the learned Foderé published a work entitled "Les Lois eclairées par les Sciences physiques, ou Traité de Médecine légale et d'Hygiène publique;" the "Annale d'Hygiène et de Médecine légale" is one of the most valued works on this subject. Among the Germans may be found Rose's Manual on Medico-Legal Dissection, Metzger's Principles of Legal Medicine, and others. The reader is referred for a list of authors and their works on Medical Jurisprudence to Dupin, Profession d'Avocat, tom. ii. p. 343, art. 1617 to 1636 bis. For a history of the rise and progress of Medical Jurisprudence, see Traill, Med. Jur. 13.

MEDICINE-CHEST. A box containing an assortment of medicines.

Statutory provisions in the United States require all vessels above a certain size to keep a medicine-chest. 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 106; 2 id. 971.

MEDIETATIS LINGUÆ (Lat. half-tongue). A term denoting that a jury is to be composed of persons one-half of whom speak the English and one-half a foreign language. See JURY.

MELANCHOLIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. A name given by the ancients to a species of partial intellectual mania, now more generally known by the name of monomania. It bore this name because it was supposed to be always attended by dejection of mind and gloomy ideas. See MANIA.

MELIORATIONS. In Scotch Law. Improvements of an estate, other than mere repairs; betterments. 1 Bell, Comm. 73.

MELIUS INQUIRENDUM VEL INQUIRENDO. In Old English Practice. A writ which in certain cases issued after an imperfect inquisition returned on a capias utlagatum in outlawry. This melius inquirendum commanded the sheriff to summon another inquest in order that the value, etc. of lands, etc. might be better or more correctly ascertained.

MEMBER. A limb of the body useful in self-defence. Membrum est pars corporis habens destinatum operationem in corpore. Coke, Litt. 126 a.

An individual who belongs to a firm, partnership, company, or corporation. See CORPORATION; PARTNERSHIP.

One who belongs to a legislative body, or other branch of the government: as, a member of the house of representatives; a member of the court.

MEMBER OF CONGRESS. A member of the senate or house of representatives of the United States.

MEMBERS. In English Law. Places where a custom-house has been kept of old time, with officers or deputies in attendance; and they are lawful places of exportation or importation. 1 Chitty, Comm. Law, 726.

MEMBRANA (Lat.). In Civil and Old English Law. Parchment; a skin of parchment. Vocab. Jur. Utr.; DuCange. The English rolls were composed of several skins, sometimes as many as forty-seven. Hale, Hist. Comm. Law, 17.

MEMORANDUM (Lat. from memorare, to remember). An informal instrument recording some fact or agreement: so called from its beginning, when it was made in Latin. It is sometimes commenced with this word though written in English: as, "Memorandum, that it is agreed;" or it is headed with the words, Be it remembered that, etc. The term memorandum is also applied to the cause of an instrument.

In English Practice. The commencement of a record in king's bench, now written in English, "Be it remembered," and which gives name to the whole clause.

It is only used in proceedings by bill, and not in proceedings by original, and was introduced to call attention to what was considered the bye-business of the court. 2 Tidd, Pract. 775. Memorandum is applied, also, to other forms and documents in English practice: e.g. memorandum in error, a document alleging error in fact and accompanied by an affidavit of such matter of fact. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, § 158. Also, a memorandum of appearance, etc., in the general sense of an informal instrument, recording some fact or agreement.

A writing required by the Statute of Frauds. Vide "Note or memorandum."

In Insurance. A clause in a policy limiting the liability of the insurer.

2. Policies of insurance on risks of transportation by water generally contain exceptions of all liability from loss on certain articles other than total, or for contributions for general average; and for liability for particular average on certain other articles supposed to be perishable or specially liable to damage, under specified rates on each, varying from three per cent. to twenty, and for any loss whatever under three or five per cent. Some seventy or eighty articles are subject to these exceptions of particular average in the divers forms of policy in use in different places. 1 Phillips, Ins. § 54, n. These exceptions were formerly introduced under a "memorandum," or "N. B.," and hence have been called "memorandum articles," and the body of exceptions the "memorandum." The list of articles and rates of exceptions vary much in different places, and from time to time at the same place. 19 N. Y. 272.

3. The construction of these exceptions has been a pregnant subject in jurisprudence. 2 Phillips, Ins. c. xviii.; Marshall, Ins. 240; 1 Stark. 436; 3 Campb. 429; Park, Ins. 177; 4 Maule & S. 503; 5 id. 47; 1 Ball & B. MEMORANDUM CHECK. It is not unusual among merchants, when one makes a temporary loan to another, to give the lender a check on a bank, with the express or implied agreement that it shall be redeemed by the maker himself, and that it shall not be presented at the bank for payment: such understanding being denoted by the word memorandum upon it. If passed to a third person, it will be valid in his hands like any other check. 4 Du. N. Y. 122; 11 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 612.

MEMORIAL. A petition or representation made by one or more individuals to a legislative or other body. When such instrument is addressed to a court, it is called a petition.

MEMORY. Understanding; a capacity to make contracts, a will, or to commit a crime, so far as intention is necessary.

Memory is sometimes employed to express the capacity of the understanding, and sometimes its power: when we speak of a retentive memory, we use it in the former sense; when of a ready memory, in the latter. Shelford, Lun. Intr. 29, 30.

The reputation, good or bad, which a man leaves at his death.

This memory, when good, is highly prized by the relations of the deceased; and it is therefore libellous to throw a shade over the memory of the dead, when the writing has a tendency to create a breach of the peace, by inciting the friends and relations of the deceased to avenge the insult offered to the family. 4 Term, 126; 5 Coke, 125; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 73, s. 1.

MEMORY, TIME OF. According to the English common law, which has been altered by 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 71, the time of memory commenced from the reign of Richard the First, A. D. 1189. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 31.

But proof of a regular usage for twenty years, not explained or contradicted, is evidence upon which many public and private rights are held, and sufficient for a jury in finding the existence of an immemorial custom or prescription. 2 Saund. 175 a, d; Peake, Ev. 336; 2 Price, Exch. 450; 4 id. 198.

MENACE. A threat; a declaration of an intention to cause evil to happen to another.

When menaces to do an injury to another have been made, the party making them may, in general, be held to bail to keep the peace; and when followed by any inconvenience or loss, the injured party has a civil action against the wrong-doer. Comyns, Dig. Battery (D); Viner, Abr.; Bacon, Abr. Assault; Coke, Litt. 161 a, 162 b, 253 b; 2 Lutw. 1428.

MENIAL. This term is applied to servants who live under their master's roof. See stat. 2 Hen. IV. c. 21.

MENSA (Lat.). An obsolete term, comprehending all goods and necessaries for livelihoods.

MENSA ET THORO. See SEPARATION A MENSA ET THORO.

MERCANTILE LAW. That branch of law which defines and enforces the rights, duties, and liabilities arising out of mercantile transactions and relations. As to the origin of this branch of law, see LAW MERCHANT; and for its various principles, consult the articles upon the various classes of commercial property, relations, and transactions.

MERCATUM (Lat.). A market. Du-Cange. A contract of sale. Id. Supplies for an army (commeatus). Id. See Bracton, 56; Fleta, l. 4, c. 28, §§ 13, 14.

MERCEN-LAGE. The law of the Mercians. One of the three principal systems of laws which prevailed in England about the beginning of the eleventh century. It was observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the principality of Wales. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 65.

MERCES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Reward of labor in money or other things. As distinguished from pensis, it means the rent of farms (prædia rustici). Calvinus, Lex.

MERCHANDISE (Lat. merx). A term including all those things which merchants sell, either wholesale or retail: as, dry goods, hardware, groceries, drugs, etc. It is usually applied to personal chattels only, and to those which are not required for food or immediate support, but such as remain after having been used, or which are used only by a slow consumption. See Pardessus, n. 8; Dig. 13. 3. 1; 19. 4. 1; 50. 16. 66; 8 Pet. 277; 6 Wend. N. Y. 335.

Mere evidences of value, as bank-bills, are not merchandise. "The fact that a thing is sometimes bought and sold does not make it merchandise." Story, J., 2 Stor. C. C. 10, 53, 54. See 2 Mass. 467; 20 Pick. Mass. 9; 3 Metc. Mass. 367; 2 Parsons, Contr. 331, note w.

MERCHANT (Lat. mercator, merx). A man who traffics or carries on trade with foreign countries, or who exports and imports goods and sells them by wholesale. Webster, Dict.; Lex Mercatoria, 23. These are known by the name of shipping-merchants. See Comyns, Dig. Merchant (A); Dy. 279 b; Bacon, Abr. Merchant.

One whose business it is to buy and sell merchandise: this applies to all persons who habitually trade in merchandise. 1 Watts & S. Penn. 469; 2 Salk. 445.

Merchants, in the Statute of Limitations, means not merely those trading beyond sea, as formerly held, 1 Chanc. Cas. 152; 1 Watts & S. Penn. 469; but whether it includes common retail tradesmen, quære. 1 Mod. 238; 4 Scott, N. R. 819; 2 Parsons, Contr. 369, 370.

See, also, 5 Cranch, 15; 6 Pet. 151; 12 id. 300; 5 Mas. C. C. 505.

According to an old authority, there are four species of merchants: namely, merchant adventurers, merchants dormant, merchant travellers, and merchant residents. 2 Brownl. 99. See, generally, 9 Salk. 445; Bacon, Abr.; Comyns, Dig.; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 75, 260; 1 Pardessus, Droit Comm. n. 78; 2 Show. 326; Bracton, 334.

MERCHANTMAN. A ship or vessel employed in the merchant-service.

MERCY (Law Fr. merci; Lat. misericordia).

In Practice. The arbitrament of the king or judge in punishing offences not directly censured by law. 2 Hen. VI. c. 2; Jacob, Law Dict. So, to be in mercy, signifies to be liable to punishment at the discretion of the judge.

In Criminal Law. The total or partial remission of a punishment to which a convict is subject. When the whole punishment is remitted, it is called a pardon; when only a part of the punishment is remitted, it is frequently a conditional pardon; or, before sentence, it is called clemency or mercy. See Rutherforth, Inst. 224; 1 Kent, Comm. 265; 3 Story, Const. § 1488.

As to the construction of "mercy" in the exception to the Sunday laws in favor of deeds of necessity and mercy, see 2 Parsons, Contr. 262, notes.

MERE (Fr.). Mother. This word is frequently used, as, in ventre sa mère, which signifies a child unborn, or in the womb.

MERGER. The absorption of a thing of lesser importance by a greater, whereby the lesser ceases to exist but the greater is not increased.

In Estates. When a greater estate and less coincide and meet in one and the same person, without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately merged, that is, sunk or drowned, in the latter. For example, if there be a tenant for years, and the reversion in fee-simple descends to or is purchased by him, the term of years is merged in the inheritance, and no longer exists; but they must be to one and the same person, at one and the same time, in one and the same right. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 177; Latch, 153; Poph. 166; 6 Madd. Ch. 119; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 417; 3 id. 53; 3 Mass. 172.

2. The estate in which the merger takes place is not enlarged by the accession of the preceding estate; and the greater or only subsisting estate continues, after the merger, precisely of the same quantity and extent of ownership as it was before the accession of the estate which is merged, and the lesser estate is extinguished. Preston, Conv. 7; Washburn, Real Prop. As a general rule, equal estates will not merge in each other.

The merger is produced either from the meeting of an estate of higher degree with an estate of inferior degree, or from the meeting of the particular estate and the immediate reversion in the same person. 4 Kent, Comm. 98. See Washburn, Real Prop. Index; 3 Preston, Conv.; 15 Viner, Abr. 361; 10 Vt. 293; 8 Watts, Penn. 146.

In Criminal Law. When a man commits a great crime which includes a lesser, the latter is merged in the former.

3. Murder, when committed by blows, necessarily includes an assault and battery; a battery, an assault; a burglary, when accompanied with a felonious taking of personal property, a larceny: in all these and similar cases, the lesser crime is merged in the greater.

But when one offence is of the same character with the other, there is no merger: as, in the case of a conspiracy to commit a misdemeanor, and the subsequent commission of the misdemeanor in pursuance of the conspiracy; the two crimes being of equal degree, there can be no legal merger. 4 Wend. N. Y. 265.

Of Rights. Rights are said to be merged when the same person who is bound to pay is also entitled to receive. This is more properly called a confusion of rights, or extinguishment.

4. When there is a confusion of rights, and the debtor and creditor become the same person, there can be no right to put in execution; but there is an immediate merger. 2 Ves. Ch. 264. Example: a man becomes indebted to a woman in a sum of money, and afterwards marries her; there is immediately a confusion of rights, and the debt is merged or extinguished.

In Torts. Where a person in committing a felony also commits a tort against a private person, in this case the wrong is sunk in the felony, at least until after the felon's conviction.

5. The old rule, that a trespass is merged in a felony, has sometimes been supposed to mean that there is no redress by civil action for an injury which amounts to a felony. But it is now established that the defendant is liable to the party injured either after his conviction, Latch, 144; Noy, 82; W. Jones, 147; Styles, 346; 1 Mod. 282; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 546, or acquittal. 12 East, 409; 1 Tayl. No. C. 58; 2 Hayw. No. C. 108. If the civil action be commenced before, the plaintiff will be nonsuited. Yelv. 90 a, n. See Hammond, Nisi P. 63; Kel. 48; Cas. temp. Hardw. 350; Lofft, 88; 2 Term, 750; 3 Me. 458. Butler, J., says this doctrine is not extended beyond actions of trespass or tort. 4 Term, 333. See, also, 1 H. Blackst. 583, 588, 594; 15 Mass. 78, 336; 1 Gray, Mass. 83, 100.

6. The Revised Statutes of New York, pt. 3, c. 4, t. 1, s. 2, direct that the right of action of any person injured by any felony shall not, in any case, be merged in such felony, or be in any manner affected thereby. In Kentucky, Pr. Dec. 203, New Hampshire, 6 N. H. 454, and Massachusetts, 1 Gray, Mass. 83, 100, the owner of stolen goods may immediately pursue his civil remedy. See, generally, 1 Ala. 8; 2 id. 70; 15 Mass. 336; 1 Gray, Mass. 83, 100; 1 Coxe, N. J. 115; 4 Ohio, 376; 4 N. H. 239; 1 Miles, Penn. 312; 6 Rand. Va. 223; 1 Const. So. C. 231; 2 Root, Conn. 90.

MERITS. A word used principally in matters of defence.

A defence upon the merits is one that rests upon the justice of the cause, and not upon technical grounds only: there is, therefore, a difference between a good defence, which may be technical or not, and a defence on the merits. 5 Barnew. & Ald. 703; 1 Ashm. Penn. 4; 3 Johns. N. Y. 245, 449; 4 id. 486; 5 id. 360, 536; 6 id. 131; 2 Cow. N. Y. 281; 7 id. 514; 6 Wend. N. Y. 511.

MERTON, STATUTE OF. An ancient English ordnance or statute, 20 Hen. III. (1253), which took its name from the place in the county of Surrey where parliament sat when it was enacted. 2 Inst. 79; Barrington, Stat. 41, 46; Hale, Hist. Comm. Law, 9, 10, 18.

MESCROYANT. Used in our ancient books. An unbeliever.

MESE. An ancient word used to signify house, probably from the French maison. It is said that by this word the buildings, curtilage, orchards, and gardens will pass. Coke, Litt. 56.

MESNE. Intermediate; the middle between two extremes; that part between the commencement and the end, as it relates to time.

Hence the profits which a man receives between disseisin and recovery of lands are called mesne profits. Process which is issued in a suit between the original and final process is called mesne process.

In England, the word mesne also applies to a dignity: those persons who hold lordships or manors of some superior who is called lord paramount, and grant the same to inferior persons, are called mesne lords.

MESNE LORD. A middle or intermediate lord. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 59; 1 Stephen, Comm. 168, 174. See MESNE.

MESNE PROCESS. In Practice. All writs necessary to a suit between its beginning and end, that is, between primary process or summons and final process, or execution, whether for the plaintiff, against the defendant, or for either against any party whose presence is necessary to the suit. For example, the capias on mesne process or ad respondendum is issued after a writ of summons, and before execution. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 279; 3 Stephen, Comm. 564; 1 Tidd, Pract. 243; Finch, Law, b. 4, c. 43. Proceedings are now usually begun with a capias, so that what was formerly mesne is now primary.

MESNE PROFITS. The value of the premises, recovered in ejectment, during the time that the lessor of the plaintiff has been illegally kept out of the possession of his estate by the defendant: such are properly recovered by an action of trespass, quare clausum fregit, after a recovery in ejectment. 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 55; Bacon, Abr. Ejectment (H); 3 Blackstone, Comm. 205.

2. As a general rule, the plaintiff is entitled to recover for such time as he can prove the defendant to have been in possession, provided he does not go back beyond six years; for in that case the defendant may plead the statute of limitations. 3 Yeates, Penn. 13; Bouvier, Nisi P. 88.

The value of improvements made by the defendant may be set off against a claim for mesne profits; but profits before the demise laid should be first deducted from the value of the improvements. 2 Wash. C. C. 165. See, generally, Washburn, Real Prop.; Bacon, Abr. Ejectment (H); Woodfall, Landl. & T. ch. 14, s. 3; 2 Sellon, Pract. 140; Fonblanque, Eq. Index; 2 Phillipps, Ev. 208; Adams, Ej. 13; Dane, Abr. Index; Powell, Mortg. Index; Bouvier, Inst. Index.

MESNE, WRIT OF. The name of an ancient writ, which lies when the lord paramount distrains on the tenant paravail: the latter shall have a writ of mesne against the lord who is mesne. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 316.

MESS BRIEF. In Danish Law. A certificate of admeasurement granted by competent authority at home-port of vessel. Jacobsen, Sea-Laws, 50.

MESSENGER. A person appointed to perform certain duties, generally of a ministerial character.

The officer who takes possession of an insolvent or bankrupt estate for the judge, commissioner, or other such officer.

MESSUAGE. A term used in conveyancing, and nearly synonymous with dwelling-house. A grant of a messuage with the appurtenances will not only pass a house, but all the buildings attached or belonging to it, as also its curtilage, garden, and orchard, together with the close on which the house is built. Coke, Litt. 5 b; 2 Saund. 400; Hammond, Nisi P. 189; 4 Cruise, Dig. 321; 2 Term, 502; 4 Blackf. Ind. 331. But see the cases cited in 9 Barnew. & C. 681. This term, it is said, includes a church. 11 Coke, 26; 2 Esp. Cas. 528; 1 Salk. 256; 8 Barnew. & C. 25. And see 3 Wils. 141; 2 W. Blackst. 726; 4 Mees. & W. Exch. 567; 2 Bingh. N. C. 617; 1 Saund. 6; 2 Washburn, Real Prop.

METES AND BOUNDS. The boundary-lines of land, with their terminal points and angles. Courses and distances control, unless there is matter of more certain description, e.g. natural monuments. 42 Me. 209. A joint tenant cannot convey by metes and bounds. 1 Hilliard, Real Prop. 582. See BOUNDARY.

METHOD. The mode of operating, or the means of attaining an object.

It has been questioned whether the method of making a thing can be patented. But it has been considered that a method or mode may be the subject of a patent, because when the object of two patents or effects to be produced is essentially the same, they may both be valid, if the modes of attaining the desired effect are essentially different. Dav. Pat. Cas. 290; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 350; 2 H. Blackst. 492; 8 Term, 106; 4 Burr. 2397; Perpigna, Manuel des Inventeurs, etc., c. 1. sect. 5, § 1, p. 22.

METRE (Greek). A measure. See MEASURE.

METUS (Lat.). A reasonable fear of an intolerable evil, as of loss of life or limb, such as may fall upon a brave man (virum constantem). 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 131; Calvinus, Lex. And this kind of fear alone will invalidate a contract as entered into through duress. Calvinus, Lex.

In a more general sense, fear.

MICHAELMAS TERM. In English Law. One of the four terms of the courts: it begins on the 2d day of November, and ends on the 25th of November. It was formerly a movable term. Stat. 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Will. IV. c. 70.

MICHEL-GEMOT (spelled, also, micel-gemote. Sax. great meeting or assembly). One of the names of the general council immemorially held in England. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 147.

One of the great councils of king and noblemen in Saxon times.

These great councils were severally called wittena-gemotes, afterwards micel synods and micel-gemotes. Cowel, edit. 1727; Cunningham, Law Dict. Micel-Gemotes. See MICHEL-SYNOTH.

MICHEL-SYNOTH (Sax. great council). One of the names of the general council immemorially held in England. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 147.

The Saxon kings usually called a synod, or mixed council, consisting both of ecclesiastics and the nobility, three times a year, which was not properly called a parliament till Henry III.'s time. Cowel, ed. 1727; Cunningham, Law Dict., Synod, Micel-Gemotes.

MICHIGAN. The name of one of the new states of the United States of America.

It was admitted into the Union by act of congress of January 26, 1837. 5 U. S. Stat. at Large, 44. See Act of Congr. June 15, 1836, 5 U. S. Stat. at Large, 49.

2. The first constitution of the state was adopted by a convention held at Detroit, in May, 1835. This was superseded by the one at present in force, which was adopted in 1850.

Every person above the age of twenty-one years, who has resided in this state three months, and in the township or ward in which he offers to vote ten days, next preceding election, and who is either a white male citizen, or a white male inhabitant who resided in the state June 24, 1835, or a white male inhabitant who resided in the state January 1, 1850, who had declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States pursuant to the laws thereof six months preceding an election, or who has resided in this state two years and six months and declared his intention as aforesaid, or who is a civilized male inhabitant of Indian descent, a native of the United States, and not a member of any tribe, is an elector and entitled to vote.

The Legislative Power.

3. The Senate consists of thirty-two members, elected by the people in each district for the term of two years. Senators must be citizens of the United States, and qualified voters of the district they represent.

The House of Representatives is to consist of not less than sixty-five nor more than one hundred members, elected in their respective districts for the term of two years. The elections take place on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November, in the even years. Each county entitled to more than one representative is to be divided by the supervisors into districts, each of which is to elect one representative. A representative must be a citizen of the United States, and a qualified voter of the county he represents.

The members of both houses are privileged from arrest on civil process during the session and for fifteen days before and afterwards. The constitution contains the usual provisions making each house judge of the qualifications, election, and returns of each of its members; providing for organization of the houses and continuance of the session; for regulating the conduct of its members; for keeping and publishing a journal of proceedings; for open sessions.

The Executive Power.

4. The Governor is elected by the people of the state for the term of two years. He must be thirty years old at least; for five years a citizen of the United States, and for two years next preceding the election a citizen of the state; and no member of congress, nor any person holding office under the United States, may be governor. He is commander-in-chief of the military and naval forces, and may call out such forces to execute the laws, to suppress insurrections, and to repel invasions; is to transact all necessary business with the officers of government, and may require information in writing, from the officers of the executive department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices; must take care that the laws be faithfully executed; may convene the legislature on extraordinary occasions, and at an unusual place when the seat of government becomes dangerous from disease or a common enemy; may grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons after convictions, for all offences except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions and with such restrictions and limitations as he may think proper, subject to regulations provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons. Upon conviction for treason, he may suspend the execution of the sentence until the case shall be reported to the legislature at its next session, when the legislature shall either pardon, or commute the sentence, direct the execution of the sentence, or grant a further reprieve. He must communicate to the legislature at each session information of each case of reprieve, commutation, or pardon granted, and the reasons therefor.

5. The Lieutenant-Governor is elected at the same time, for the same term, and must possess the same qualifications, as the governor. He is, by virtue of his office, president of the senate.

In case of the impeachment of the governor, his removal from office, death, inability, resignation, or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term, or until the disability ceases.

During a vacancy in the office of governor, if the lieutenant-governor die, resign, be impeached, displaced, be incapable of performing the duties of his office, or absent from the state, the president pro tempore of the senate is to act as governor until the vacancy be filled or the disability cease.

The Judicial Power.

6. The Supreme Court consists of one chief and three associate justices, chosen by the electors of the state for the term of eight years. One of the judges goes out of office every two years. Four terms are to be held annually, two at Lansing and two at Detroit, and three of the judges constitute a quorum. It has a general supervisory power over inferior courts, and general appellate jurisdiction of cases brought up by appeal, by certificate of judges of lower courts, or by consent of parties on agreed statements of facts. The statute provides that the supreme court shall by rules of practice simplify the practice of the state. The changes to be secured are specified as the following: to wit, abolition of the distinction between law and equity; of fictions and unnecessary proceedings; shortening and simplification of pleadings; expediting decisions; regulation of decisions; remedying abuses and imperfections of practice; abolition of unnecessary forms and technicalities; non-abatement of suits through misjoinder or non-joinder of parties, so far as justice will allow; providing for omitting parties improperly joined, and joining those improperly omitted. Comp. Laws, 1857, 988.

7. The Circuit Court consists of eight judges, elected, one from each of the districts into which the state is divided, for the term of six years, and until a successor is chosen. This is the court of general original jurisdiction, having jurisdiction in all matters civil and criminal not expressly excepted, and appellate jurisdiction from all inferior courts and tribunals, and a supervisory control of the same. It has also power to issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, injunction, quo warranto, certiorari, and other writs necessary to carry into effect its orders, judgments, and decrees, and give it a general control over inferior courts and tribunals within the respective districts. It sits also as a court of chancery, having powers coextensive with the powers of the court of chancery in England, with various modifications, however, both constitutional and statutory. Two terms at least are held annually in each county organized for judicial purposes, and four terms in counties containing ten thousand inhabitants. The stated terms are also terms of the court of chancery.

The District Court of the Upper Peninsula. The counties of Mackinac, Chippewa, Delta, Marquette, Schoolcraft, Houghton, Ontonagon and the islands attached, the islands of Lake Superior, Huron, and Michigan, and those in Green Bay, the Straits of Mackinac, and the river Ste. Marie, form a separate judicial district and elect a district judge. This court has the same jurisdiction as the circuit court; and in case of the disability of the judge, a circuit judge may hold the term.

8. A Probate Court is held in each county by a judge elected by the people of the county for the term of four years and till a successor is chosen. It may take probate of wills, and has cognizance of all matters appertaining to the settlement of the estates of decedents and the care of minors, including the appointment and superintendence of guardians of minors, etc.

Justices of the Peace are elected by the people of each township for four years. Not more than four are to be elected in each township, and they are to be classified. They have exclusive civil jurisdiction in all cases where the amounts involved are less than one hundred dollars, and concurrent jurisdiction over all sums less than three hundred dollars. They have a criminal jurisdiction over all cases of larceny where the amount taken does not exceed twenty-five dollars; of assault and battery, not committed riotously nor upon a public officer in the discharge of his duty; of killing, maiming, or disfiguring cattle, where the damage done does not exceed twenty-five dollars; and of other minor offences.

9. A Circuit Court Commissioner is elected in each county for two years, who has the judicial power of a judge of the circuit court at chambers. He is to perform the duties of a master in chancery, has power to grant injunctions, etc. He must be an attorney and counsellor-at-law.

Municipal or Police Courts exist in the larger town and the cities, with a limited jurisdiction.

Jurisprudence.

The truth may be given in evidence to the jury in libel cases. The persons and houses of citizens are to be free from unreasonable searches and seizure. Right of jury trial must be demanded by parties; otherwise it is deemed to be waived, in civil cases. No person shall be imprisoned for debt arising out of, or founded on, a contract, express or implied, except in cases of fraud or breach of trust, or of moneys collected by public officers or in any professional employment. No person is incompetent as a witness on account of his opinions in religious matters.

MIDDLE THREAD. See AD MEDIUM FILUM.

MIDDLEMAN. One who has been employed as an agent by a principal, and who has employed a sub-agent under him by authority of the principal, either express or implied. He is not, in general, liable for the wrongful acts of the sub-agent, the principal being alone responsible. 3 Campb. 4; 6 Term, 411; 14 East, 605.

A person who is employed both by the seller and purchaser of goods, or by the purchaser alone, to receive them into his possession, for the purpose of doing something in or about them: as, if goods be delivered from a ship by the seller to a wharfinger, to be by him forwarded to the purchaser, who has been appointed by the latter to receive them; or if goods be sent to a packer, for and by orders of the vendee, the packer is to be considered as a middleman.

The goods in both these cases will be considered in transitu, provided the purchaser has not used the wharfinger's or the packer's warehouse as his own, and have an ulterior place of delivery in view. 4 Esp. 82; 2 Bos. & P. 457; 3 id. 127, 469; 1 Campb. 282; 1 Atk. Ch. 245; 1 H. Blackst. 364; 3 East, 93.

MIDWIFE. In Medical Jurisprudence. A woman who practises midwifery; a woman who pursues the business of an accoucheuse.

A midwife is required to perform the business she undertakes with proper skill; and if she be guilty of any mala praxis she is liable to an action or an indictment for the misdemeanor. See Viner, Abr. Physician; Comyns, Dig. Physician; 8 East, 348; 2 Wils. 359; 4 Carr. & P. 398, 407 a; 2 Russell, Crimes, 288.

MIESES. In Spanish Law. Grain crops.

MILE. A length of a thousand paces, or seventeen hundred and sixty yards, or five thousand two hundred and eighty feet. It contains eight furlongs, every furlong being forty poles, and each pole sixteen feet six inches. 2 Stark. 89.

MILEAGE. A compensation allowed by law to officers for their trouble and expenses in travelling on public business.

In computing mileage, the distance by the road usually travelled is that which must be allowed, whether in fact the officer travels a more or less distant way to suit his own convenience. 16 Me. 431.

MILES. In Civil Law. A soldier. (Vel a "militia" aut a "multitudine," aut a numero, "mille hominum." L. 1, § 1, D., de testam. milit.) Vocab. Jur. Utr.

In Old English Law. A knight, because military service was part of the feudal tenure. Also, a tenant by military service, not a knight. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 404; Selden, Tit. Hon. 334.

MILITARY LAW. A system of regulations for the government of an army. 1 Kent, Comm. 377, n.

That branch of the laws which respects military discipline and the government of persons employed in the military service. De Hart, Courts-Mart. 16.

Military law is to be distinguished from martial law. Martial law extends to all persons; military law to all military persons only, and not to those in a civil capacity. Martial law supersedes and suspends the civil law, but military law is superadded and subordinate to the civil law. See 2 Kent, Comm. 10; 34 Me. 126; MARTIAL LAW.

2. The body of the military law of the United States is contained in the "act establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States," approved April 30, 1806, and various subsequent acts, some of the more important of which are those of May 29, 1830; August 6, 1846; July 29, 1861; August 3, 1861; August 5, 1861; December 24, 1861; February 13, 1862; March 13, 1862. See, also, Act of February 28, 1795; 5 Wheat. 1; 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 156, 790, the general regulations, and the orders of the president.

The act of 1806 consists of three sections, the first section containing one hundred and one articles, which describe very minutely the various military offences, the punishments which may be inflicted, the manner of summoning and the organization of courts-martial. These articles are called the articles of war. Their provisions extend to the militia mustered into the United States service, and to marines when serving with the army.

The military law of England is contained in the Mutiny Act, which has been passed annually since April 12, 1689, and the additional articles of war made and established by the sovereign.

3. In addition, there are in both countries various usages which constitute an unwritten military law, which applies to those cases where there are no express provisions. 12 Wheat. 19; Benèt, Mil. Law, 3.

The sovereign, in England, has authority to ordain, by articles of war, with regard to crimes not specified by military law, every punishment not reaching to death or mutilation; the president of the United States cannot ordain any penalty for any military crime not expressly declared by act of Congress.

Consult Benèt, De Hart, Cross, Samuels, Tytler, on Military Law.

MILITIA. The military force of the nation, consisting of citizens called forth to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion.

2. The constitution of the United States provides on this subject that congress shall have power to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions; to provide for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the states respectively the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia, according to the discipline prescribed by congress.

In accordance with these provisions, congress, in 1792, act of May 8, passed an act relating to the militia, which has remained, with slight modifications, till the present time. In 1814 an act was passed prescribing the manner of holding courts. The term of service was lengthened from three months to nine in 1862, and in 1863 a law was passed which has changed in many particulars the old law.

The acts of the national legislature which regulate the militia are the following, namely: Act of May 8, 1792, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 252; Act of Feb. 28, 1795, 1 id. 390; Act of March 2, 1803, 2 id. 888; Act of April 10, 1806, 2 id. 1005; Act of April 20, 1816, 3 id. 1573; Act of May 12, 1820, 3 id. 1786; Act of March 2, 1821, 3 id. 1811.

The militia, until mustered into the United States service, is considered as a state force. 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 169; 5 Wheat. 1. The president of the United States is to judge when the exigency has arisen which requires the militia to be called out. 12 Wheat. 19. See 8 Mass. 548. See 1 Kent, Comm. 262; Story, Const. §§ 1194–1210. See MILITARY LAW; MARTIAL LAW.

MILL. A complicated engine or machine for grinding and reducing to fine particles grain, fruit, or other substance, or for performing other operations by means of wheels and a circular motion.

The house or building that contains the machinery for grinding, etc. Webster, Dict.

Mills are so very different and various, that it is not easy to give a definition of the term. They are used for the purpose of grinding and pulverizing grain and other matters, to extract the juices of vegetables, to make various articles of manufacture. They take their names from the uses to which they are employed; hence we have paper-mills, fulling-mills, iron-mills, oil-mills, saw-mills, etc. In another respect their kinds are various; they are either fixed to the freehold or not. Those which are a part of the freehold are either water-mills, wind-mills, steam-mills, etc.; those which are not so fixed are hand-mills, and are merely personal property. Those which are fixed, and make a part of the freehold, are buildings with machinery calculated to attain the object proposed in their erection.

2. It has been held that the grant of a mill and its appurtenances, even without the land, carries the whole right of water enjoyed by the grantor, as necessary to its use, and as a necessary incident. Croke Jac. 121. And a devise of a mill carries the land used with it, and the right to use the water. 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 169. And see 5 Serg. & R. Penn, 107; 10 id. 63; 2 Caines, Cas. N. Y. 87; 3 N. H. 190; 7 Mass. 6; 6 Me. 154, 436; 16 id. 281.

3. A mill means not merely the building in which the business is carried on, but includes the site, the dam, and other things annexed to the freehold, necessary for its beneficial enjoyment. 3 Mass. 280. See 6 Me. 436.

4. Whether manufacturing machinery will pass under the grant of a mill must depend mainly on the circumstances of each case. 1 Brod. & B. 506. In England, the law appears not to be settled. 1 Bell, Comm. 754, n. 4, 5th ed. In this note are given the opinions of Sir Samuel Romilly and Mr. Leech on a question whether a mortgage of a piece of land on which a mill was erected would operate as a mortgage of the machinery. Sir Samuel was clearly of opinion that such a mortgage would bind the machinery; and Mr. Leech was of a directly opposite opinion.

5. The American law on this subject appears not to be entirely fixed. 1 Hill, Abr. 16; 1 Bail. So. C. 540; 3 Kent, Comm. 440. See Amos & F. Fixt. 188 et seq.; 1 Atk. Ch. 165; 1 Ves. Ch. 348; Sugden, Vend. 30; 10 Serg. & R. Penn. 63; 17 id. 415; 2 Watts & S. Penn. 116, 390; 6 Me. 157; 6 Johns. N. Y. 5; 20 Wend. N. Y. 636; 1 H. Blackst. 259, note; 10 Am. Jur. 58; 1 Mo. 620; 3 Mas. C. C. 464.

MILL. The tenth part of a cent in value.

MILLED MONEY. This term means merely coined money; and it is not necessary that it should be marked or rolled on the edges. Running's case, Leach, Cr. Cas. 708.

MIL-REIS. The name of a coin. The mil-reis of Portugal is taken as money of account, at the custom-house, to be of the value of one hundred and twelve cents. The mil-reis of Azores is deemed of the value of eighty-three and one-third cents. The mil-reis of Madeira is deemed of the value of one hundred cents. Act of March 3, 1843, 5 U. S. Stat. at Large, 625.

MIND AND MEMORY. A testator must have a sound and disposing mind and memory. In other words, he "ought to be capable of making his will with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the property he means to dispose of, of the persons who are the object of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them." Washington, J., 3 Wash. C. C. 585, 586; 4 id. 262; 1 Green, Ch. N. J. 82, 85; 2 id. 563, 604; 26 Wend. N. Y. 255, 306, 311, 312; 8 Conn. 265; 9 id. 105.

MINE. An excavation in the earth for the purpose of obtaining minerals.

2. Mines may be either by excavating a portion of the surface, as is common in some classes of gold-mines, or almost entirely beneath the surface.

Mines of gold, silver, and the precious metals belong to the sovereign, 1 Plowd. 310; 3 Kent, Comm. 378, n.; but are held by him concurrently with the ownership of the soil, and pass by a grant of the land without exception or reservation. 14 Cal. 375; 17 id. 199; 2 Washburn, Real Prop. 626. In New York and Pennsylvania the state's right as sovereign is asserted. See 1 Kent, Comm. 378, n.

Mines of other minerals belong to the owner of the soil, and pass by a grant thereof, unless separated, 1 N. Y. 564; 19 Pick. Mass. 314; but the owner may convey his mines by a separate and distinct grant so as to create one freehold in the soil and another in the mines. 1 Penn. 726; 7 Cush. Mass. 361; 8 id. 21; 5 Mees. & W. Exch. 50.

3. In case of a separate ownership, the owner of the mine must support the superincumbent soil, 12 Q. B. 739; 5 Mees. & W. Exch. 60; 12 Exch. 259; and ancient buildings or other erections. 2 Hurlst. & N. Exch. 828.

Opening new mines by a tenant is waste, unless the demise includes them, Coke, Litt. 53 b; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 282; 1 Taunt. 410; Hob. 234; but if the mines be already open it is not waste to work them even to exhaustion. 1 Taunt. 410; 19 Penn. St. 324; 6 Munf. Va. 134; 1 Rand. Va. 258; 10 Pick. Mass. 460; 1 Cow. N. Y. 460. See Smith, Landl. & Ten. Morris ed. 192, 193, n. A mortgagee has been allowed for large sums expended in working a mine which he had a right to work, 39 Eng. L. & Eq. 130; but in another case, expenses incurred in opening a mine were disallowed. 16 Sim. Ch. 445.

4. In California, the occupant of public lands, who holds them for agricultural purposes merely, holds them subject to the right of any person to dig for gold, 5 Cal. 36, 97; but the miner must take them as he finds them, subject to prior rights of the same character. 5 Cal. 140, 308; 6 id. 148.

An injunction lies for interference with mines. 6 Ves. Ch. 147. See 17 Ves. Ch. 281; 18 id. 515; 19 id. 159; 1 Swanst. Ch. 208.

See Bainbridge, Collier, on Mines; 1 Kent, Comm.; Washburn, Real Prop.; Washburn, Easements; Tudor, Lead. Cas.

MINERALS (L. Lat. minera, a vein of metal). All fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines or quarries, whence any thing may be dug; such as beds of stone which may be quarried, 14 Mees. & W. Exch. 859, in construing 55 Geo. III. c. 18; Broom, Leg. Max. 175*, 176*.

Any natural production, formed by the action of chemical affinities, and organized when becoming solid by the powers of crystallization. Webster, Dict. But see 5 Watts, Penn. 34; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 95.

MINISTER. In Governmental Law. An officer who is placed near the sovereign, and is invested with the administration of some one of the principal branches of the government.

Ministers are responsible to the king or other supreme magistrate who has appointed them. 4 Conn. 134.

In Ecclesiastical Law. One ordained by some church to preach the gospel.

Ministers are authorized in the United States, generally, to solemnize marriage, and are liable to fines and penalties for marrying minors contrary to the local regulations. As to the right of ministers or parsons, see 3 Am. Jur. 268; Sheppard, Touchst. Anthon ed. 564; 2 Mass. 500; 10 id. 97; 14 id. 333; 11 Me. 487.

In International Law. An officer appointed by the government of one nation, with the consent of two other nations who have a matter in dispute, with a view by his interference and good office to have such matter settled.

A name given to public functionaries who represent their country with foreign governments, including ambassadors, envoys, and residents.

A custom of recent origin has introduced a new kind of ministers, without any particular determination of character: these are simply called ministers, to indicate that they are invested with the general character of a sovereign's mandatories, without any particular assignment of rank or character.

The minister represents his government in a vague and indeterminate manner, which cannot be equal to the first degree; and he possesses all the rights essential to a public minister.

There are also ministers plenipotentiary, who, as they possess full powers, are of much greater distinction than simple ministers. These, also, are without any particular attribution of rank and character, but by custom are now placed immediately below the ambassador, or on a level with the envoy extraordinary. Vattel, liv. 4, c. 6, § 74; 1 Kent, Comm. 10th ed. 48; Merlin, Répert.

Formerly no distinction was made in the different classes of public ministers, but the modern usage of Europe introduced some distinctions in this respect, which, on account of a want of precision, became the source of controversy. To obviate these, the congress of Vienna, and that of Aix-la-Chapelle, put an end to these disputes by classing ministers as follows:—1. Ambassadors, and papal legates or nuncios. 2. Envoys, ministers, or others accredited to sovereigns (auprès des souverains). 3. Ministers resident, accredited to sovereigns. 4 Chargés d'Affaires, accredited to the minister of foreign affairs. Récez du Congrès de Vienne, du 19 Mars, 1815; Protocol du Congrès d'Aix-la-Chapelle, du 21 Novembre, 1818; Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 3, c. 1, § 6.

The United States sends no envoys of the rank of ambassadors.

MINISTERIAL. That which is done under the authority of a superior; opposed to judicial: as, the sheriff is a ministerial officer bound to obey the judicial commands of the court.

When an officer acts in both a judicial and ministerial capacity, he may be compelled to perform ministerial acts in a particular way; but when he acts in a judicial capacity, he can only be required to proceed; the manner of doing so is left entirely to his judgment. See 10 Me. 377; Bacon, Abr. Justices of the Peace (E); 1 Conn. 295; 3 id. 107; 9 id. 275; 12 id. 464; MANDAMUS.

MINISTERIAL TRUSTS (also called instrumental trusts). Those which demand no further exercise of reason or understanding than every intelligent agent must necessarily employ: as, to convey an estate. They are a species of special trusts, distinguished from discretionary trusts, which necessarily require much exercise of the understanding. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1396.

MINNESOTA. One of the new states of the United States of America.

2. It was created a territory by act of congress, March 3, 1849, and admitted into the Union as a state, May 11, 1858, under a constitution framed and adopted by a convention at St. Paul, on the 29th day of August, 1857, pursuant to an act of congress of February 26, 1857, and submitted to and ratified by the people on the 13th of October, 1857.

The Bill of Rights provides that there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, otherwise than for the punishment of crime; that there shall be no imprisonment for debt; that a reasonable amount of property shall be exempt from execution; that all future leases of agricultural lands for a longer period than twenty-one years, reserving any rent, shall be void; and that no person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness in consequence of his religious opinions.

3. The Right of Suffrage is vested in all male persons over twenty-one years of age, who have resided in the United States one year and in the state four months next preceding any election, and who are either white citizens of the United States, white persons of foreign birth who have declared their intention to become citizens, or persons of Indian blood who have adopted the language and habits of civilization and have been pronounced by any district court of the state capable of enjoying the rights of citizenship. But all persons convicted of any felony, not restored to civil rights, and all persons insane, or under guardianship, are excluded. All elections are by ballot. No arrest by civil process is allowed on any day of election. All legal voters are eligible by the people to any office, except as hereinafter specified.

4. Amendments to the Constitution. A majority of both branches of the legislature may submit amendments to the constitution to the people, which, if ratified by the voters present, shall be part of the constitution. A convention may also be called for the purpose of amending it.

The Legislative Department.

The Senate is composed of a number of senators not exceeding one for every five thousand inhabitants, elected for the term of two years by the people. A senator must have resided one year in the state and six months next preceding the election in the district from which he is elected, and must be a qualified elector. One-half the senate is elected each year, the districts numbered with odd and even numbers electing alternate years.

5. The House of Representatives is composed of a number of representatives not exceeding one for every two thousand inhabitants, elected annually by the people for the term of one year. The qualifications necessary are the same as those of the senators.

The constitution contains the usual provisions for the organization and continuance of the two houses, regulating the conduct and judging of the qualifications of members, recording and publishing proceedings, securing freedom of debate, exempting members from arrest on civil process, etc.

All elections by the legislature are to be made viva voce. The legislature cannot authorize a lottery or the sale of lottery-tickets. The legislature is to provide a uniform system of public schools. The proceeds of certain lands are secured as a permanent fund, the income of which the legislature is to distribute among the townships. The legislature cannot create a corporation by special act for any but municipal purposes. It may pass a general banking law; may not suspend specie payments; must provide that all banks shall hold state or United States stocks as security for their notes. It may, by vote of two-thirds in both houses, contract a debt for extraordinary expenses, not exceeding two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. A tax must be levied each year large enough to pay the expenses of that year and cover the deficiency of the preceding year if any exists. Provision must be made at the time of creating any debt for the payment of interest and its extinction in ten years.

The Executive Power.

6. The Governor is elected by the people, for the term of two years. He must have attained the age of twenty-five, be a citizen of the United States, and have resided in the state for one year next preceding his election. He is commander-in-chief of the army and navy; informs the legislature at each session of the condition of the country; may require the written opinion of the heads of the departments on subjects relating to their respective offices; may grant reprieves and pardons, except in cases of impeachment; may, with the consent of the senate, appoint a state librarian and notaries public; and may appoint commissioners to take acknowledgments of deeds. He is invested with the veto power, may call extra sessions of the legislature, shall see that the laws are executed, and may fill vacancies that may occur in the office of secretary of state, treasurer, auditor, attorney-general, and other state and district offices hereafter to be created by law, until the next annual election, and order elections to fill vacancies in the legislature.

7. The Lieutenant-Governor is elected at the same time, for the same term, and must possess the same qualifications, as the governor. He presides over the senate, and acts as governor during any vacancy occurring in that office. A president pro tempore of the senate is elected at the close of each session by the senate, who becomes lieutenant-governor in case of vacancy in that office.

The Judicial Power.

This is vested in a supreme court, district court, courts of probate, and justices of the peace; but the legislature may, by a two-thirds vote, establish other inferior courts, of which the judges must be elected, for a term not longer than seven years, by the electors of the district for which the courts are created.

The Supreme Court consists of one chief and two associate justices, elected by the people of the state at large for the term of seven years. The number of associate justices may be increased to four by a vote of two-thirds of both houses of the legislature. Its original jurisdiction is prescribed by law, and it has appellate jurisdiction in all cases both in law and equity, but holds no jury terms.

The District Court consists of one judge elected from each of the six judicial districts into which the state is divided, by the electors thereof, for the term of seven years. Each judge holds the court in his own district, except where convenience or the public interest require, when the judges may exchange services. One or more terms of the court are held in each county per annum. It has original jurisdiction in all civil cases where the amount involved exceeds one hundred dollars, the distinction between suits at law and in equity being abolished, and in all criminal cases where the penalty is three months' imprisonment or more, or where a fine of more than one hundred dollars is imposed. It has power, also, to change the names of people, towns, or counties.

A Probate Court is held in each organized county in the state, by a judge elected by the people of the county for the term of two years. The judge must be a resident of the county at the time of his election, and continue to be during his term. The court has jurisdiction over the estates of decedents, and over persons under guardianship.

Justices of the Peace are elected, two for each town (subject to variation by laws), by the people, for the term of two years. They have jurisdiction in civil cases where the amount involved is one hundred dollars or less, and in criminal cases where the criminal is imprisoned for three months or less, or a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars. They have no jurisdiction in any case involving the title to real estate.

MINOR (Lat. less; younger). A minor; one not a major, i.e. not twenty-one. Coke, 2d Inst. 291; Coke, Litt. 88, 128, 172 b; 6 Coke, 67; 3 Bulstr. 143; Bracton, 340 b; Fleta, l. 2, c. 60, § 26.

Of less consideration; lower. Calvinus, Lex. Major and minor belong rather to civil law. The common-law terms are adult and infant.

MINORITY. The state or condition of a minor; infancy.

The lesser number of votes of a deliberative assembly: opposed to majority, which see.

MINT. The place designated by law where money is coined by authority of the government of the United States.

The mint was established by the act of April 2, 1792, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 227, and located at Philadelphia, where, by virtue of sundry acts of congress, it still remains. Act of April 24, 1800, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 770; Act of March 3, 1801, 1 id. 816; Act of May 19, 1828, 4 Sharswood, cont. of Story, U. S. Laws, 2120.

See, also, the following acts of congress relating to the mint:—Act of January 18, 1837, 4 Sharswood, cont. of Story, U. S. Laws, 2120; Act of May 19, 1828, 4 id. 2120; Act of May 3, 1835; Act of February 13, 1837; Act of March 3, 1849; Act of March 3, 1851, § 11. See, also, COIN; FOREIGN COIN; MONEY.

MINUTE. Measures. In divisions of the circle or angular measures, a minute is equal to sixty seconds, or one-sixtieth part of a degree.

In the computation of time, a minute is equal to sixty seconds, or the sixtieth part of an hour. See MEASURE.

In Practice. A memorandum of what takes place in court, made by authority of the court. From these minutes the record is afterwards made up.

Toullier says they are so called because the writing in which they were originally was small; that the word is derived from the Latin minuta (scriptura), in opposition to copies which were delivered to the parties, and which were always written in a larger hand. 8 Toullier, n. 413.

Minutes are not considered as any part of the record. 1 Ohio, 268. See 23 Pick. Mass. 184.

MINUTE-BOOK. A book kept by the clerk or prothonotary of a court, in which minutes of its proceedings are entered.

MINUTE TITHES. Small tithes, usually belonging to the vicar: e.g. eggs, honey, wax, etc. 3 Burn, Eccl. Law. 680; 6 & 7 Will. IV. c. 71, §§ 17, 18, 27.

MIRROR DES JUSTICES. The Mirror of Justices, a treatise written during the reign of Edward II. Andrew Horne is its reputed author. It was first published in 1642, and in 1768 it was translated into English by William Hughes. Some diversity of opinion seems to exist as to its merits. Pref. to 9 & 10 Coke, Rep. As to the history of this celebrated book, see St. Armand's Hist. Essays on the Legislative Power of England, 58, 59.

MISADVENTURE. An accident by which an injury occurs to another.

When applied to homicide, misadventure is the act of a man who, in the performance of a lawful act, without any intention to do harm, and after using proper precaution to prevent danger, unfortunately kills another person. The act upon which the death ensues must be neither malum in se nor malum prohibitum. The usual examples under this head are: 1, when the death ensues from innocent recreations; 2, from moderate and lawful correction in foro domestico; 3, from acts lawful and indifferent in themselves, done with proper and ordinary caution. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 182; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 221. See HOMICIDE; MANSLAUGHTER; CORRECTION.

MISBEHAVIOR. Improper or unlawful conduct. See 2 Mart. La. N. S. 683.

2. A party guilty of misbehavior, as, for example, to threaten to do injury to another, may be bound to his good behavior, and thus restrained.

Verdicts are not unfrequently set aside on the ground of misbehavior of jurors: as, when the jury take out with them papers which were not given in evidence, to the prejudice of one of the parties, Ld. Raym, 148; when they separate before they have agreed upon their verdict, 3 Day, Conn. 237, 310; see JURY; NEW TRIAL; when they cast lots for a verdict, 2 Lev. 205; or give their verdict, because they have agreed to give it for the amount ascertained, by each juror putting down a sum, adding the whole together, and then dividing by twelve, the number of jurors, and giving their verdict for the quotient. 15 Johns. N. Y. 87. See Bacon, Abr. Verdict (H).

3. A verdict will be set aside if the successful party has been guilty of any misbehavior towards the jury: as, if he say to a juror, "I hope you will find a verdict for me," or, "The matter is clearly of my side." 1 Ventr. 125; 2 Rolle, Abr. 716, pl. 17. See Code, 166, 401; Bacon, Abr. Verdict (I).

MISCARRIAGE. In Medical Jurisprudence. The expulsion of the ovum or embryo from the uterus within the first six weeks after conception. Between that time, and before the expiration of the sixth month, when the child may possibly live, it is termed abortion. When the delivery takes place soon after the sixth month, it is denominated premature labor. But the criminal act of destroying the fœtus at any time before birth is termed, in law, procuring miscarriage. Chitty, Med. Jur. 410; 2 Dunglison, Hum. Phys. 364. See ABORTION; FŒTUS.

In Practice. A term used in the Statute of Frauds to denote that species of wrongful act for the consequences of which the wrongdoer would be responsible at law in a civil action.

By the English Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 4, it is enacted that "no action shall be brought to charge the defendant upon any special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another person, unless the agreement," etc. "shall be in writing," etc.

The wrongful riding the horse of another, without his leave or license, and thereby causing his death, is clearly an act for which the party is responsible in damages, and, therefore, falls within the meaning of the word miscarriage. 2 Barnew. & Ald. 516; Burge, Sur. 21.

MISCASTING. An error in auditing and numbering. It does not include any pretended miscasting or misvaluing. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4128.

MISCOGNIZANT. Ignorant, or not knowing. Stat. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9. Little used.

MISCONDUCT. Unlawful behavior by a person intrusted in any degree with the administration of justice, by which the rights of the parties and the justice of the case may have been affected.

A verdict will be set aside when any of the jury have been guilty of such misconduct; and a court will set aside an award if it have been obtained by the misconduct of an arbitrator. 2 Atk. Ch. 501, 504; 2 Chitt. Bail, 44; 1 Salk. 71; 3 P. Will. Ch. 362; 1 Dick. Ch. 66.

MISCONTINUANCE. In Practice. A continuance of a suit by undue process. Its effect is the same as a discontinuance. 2

Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 299; Kitch. 231; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 57.

MISDEMEANOR. In Criminal Law. A term used to express every offence inferior to felony, punishable by indictment, or by particular prescribed proceedings. In its usual acceptation, it is applied to all those crimes and offences for which the law has not provided a particular name.

The word is generally used in contradistinction to felony; misdemeanors comprehending all indictable offences which do not amount to felony, as perjury, battery, libels, conspiracies, and public nuisances, but not including a multitude of offences over which magistrates have an exclusive summary jurisdiction, for a brief designation of which our legal nomenclature is at fault. Misdemeanors have sometimes been called misprisions.

MISDIRECTION. In Practice. An error made by a judge in charging the jury in a special case.

2. It is a rule, subject to the qualifications hereafter stated, that when the judge at the trial misdirects the jury on matters of law material to the issue, whatever may be the nature of the case, the verdict will be set aside, and a new trial granted, 6 Mod. 242; 2 Salk. 649; 2 Wils. 269; 4 Conn. 356; or, if such misdirection appear in the bill of exceptions, or otherwise upon the record, a judgment founded on a verdict thus obtained will be reversed. And although the charge of the court be not positively erroneous, yet, if it have a tendency to mislead the jury, and it be uncertain whether they would have found as they did if the instructions had been entirely correct, a new trial will be granted. 11 Wend. N. Y. 83; 6 Cow. N. Y. 682; 9 Humphr. Tenn. 411; 9 Conn. 107. When the issue consists of a mixed question of law and fact, and there is a conceded state of facts, the rest is a question for the court, 2 Wend. N. Y. 596; and a misdirection in this respect will avoid the verdict.

3. Misdirection as to matters of fact will, in some cases, be sufficient to vitiate the proceedings. For example: misapprehension of the judge as to a material circumstance, and a direction to the jury accordingly, 1 Const. So. C. 200; or instructing them upon facts which are purely hypothetical, whereby they are misled, 8 Ga. 114; submitting as a contested point what has been admitted, 9 Conn. 216; giving to the jury a peremptory direction to find in a given way, when there are facts in the case conducing to a conclusion. 7 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 410; 3 Wend. N. Y. 102; 19 id. 402; 12 Mass. 22; 5 Humphr. Tenn. 476. There are, however, many cases in which the court may instruct the jury, upon the whole evidence, to find for one or the other party; and when a verdict formed under such instruction is conformable to the law, the evidence, and the justice of the case, it is rarely disturbed. 3 Dan. Ky. 566. But to warrant an unqualified direction to the jury in favor of a party, the evidence must either be undisputed or the preponderance so decided that a verdict against it would be set aside. 16 Wend. N. Y. 663. When the court delivers its opinion to the jury on a matter of fact, it should be as opinion, and not as direction. 12 Johns. N. Y. 513. But it is, in general, allowed a very liberal discretion in this regard. 1 M'Clel. & Y. Exch. 286. Where the question is one of mere fact, no expressions of the judge, however strong or erroneous, will amount to a misdirection, provided the question is fairly presented to the jury and left with them for their decision. 5 Scott, 28; 4 Moore & S. 295; 19 Wend. N. Y. 186; 10 Pick. Mass. 252.

4. Unless the misdirection be excepted to, the party by his silence will be deemed to have waived it. 10 Mo. 515; 2 Pick. Mass. 145. But see 4 Wend. N. Y. 514; 2 Barb. N. Y. 420.

As to its effects, the misdirection must be calculated to do injustice; for if it be entirely certain that justice has been done, and that a re-hearing would produce the same result, or if the amount in dispute be very trifling, so that the injury is scarcely appreciable, a new trial will not be granted. 2 Caines, N. Y. 85; 7 Me. 442; 10 Ga. 429; 3 Graham & W. New Tr. 705–873; New Trial; Charge.

MISE (Lat. mittere, through the French mettre, to place). In Pleading. The issue in a writ of right. The tenant in a writ of right is said to join the mise on the mere right when he pleads that his title is better than the demandant's. 2 Wms. Saund. 45, h, i. It was equivalent to the general issue; and every thing except collateral warranty might be given in evidence under it by the tenant. Booth, Real Act. 98, 114; 3 Wils. 420; 7 Wheat. 31; 3 Pet. 133; 7 Cow. N. Y. 52; 10 Gratt. Va. 350. The prayee in aid, on coming into court, joined in the mise together with the tenant. 2 Wms. Saund. 45, d, note. It was the more common practice, however, for the demandant to traverse the tenant's plea when the cause could be tried by a common jury instead of the grand assize.

In Practice. Expenses. It is so commonly used in the entries of judgments, in personal actions: as, when the plaintiff recovers, the judgment is quod recuperet damna sua (that he recover his damages), and pro mises et custagiis (for costs and charges) so much, etc.

MISERABILE DEPOSITUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of an involuntary deposit, made under pressing necessity: as, for instance, shipwreck, fire, or other inevitable calamity. Pothier, Proc. Civ. pt. 5, ch. 1, § 1; La. Code, 2935.

MISERICORDIA (Lat.). An arbitrary or discretionary amercement.

To be in mercy is to be liable to such punishment as the judge may in his discretion inflict. According to Spelman, misericordia is so called because the party is in mercy, and to distinguish this fine from redemptions, or heavy fines. Spelman, Gloss. See Coke, Litt. 126 b; Madox, Exch. c. 14.

MISFEASANCE. The performance of an act which might lawfully be done, in an improper manner, by which another person receives an injury.

It differs from malfeasance or nonfeasance. See, generally, 2 Viner, Abr. 35; 2 Kent, Comm. 443; Doctrina Plac. 62; Story, Bailm. § 9.

It seems to be settled that there is a distinction between misfeasance and nonfeasance in the case of mandates. In cases of nonfeasance the mandatary is not generally liable, because, his undertaking being gratuitous, there is no consideration to support it; but in cases of misfeasance the common law gives a remedy for the injury done, and to the extent of that injury. 5 Term, 143; 4 Johns. N. Y. 81; 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 92; 1 Esp. 74; 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Story, Bailm. § 165; Bouvier, Inst. Index.

MISJOINDER. In Pleading. The improper union of parties or causes of action in one suit at law or in equity.

Of Actions. The joining several demands which the law does not permit to be joined, to enforce by one proceeding several distinct, substantive rights of recovery. Gould, Plead. c. 4, § 98; Archbold, Civ. Plead. 61; Dane, Abr.

In equity, it is the joinder of different and distinct claims against one defendant, 1 Mylne & C. Ch. 608; 7 Sim. Ch. 241; 3 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 432, and is distinguished from multifariousness, which may exist only where there are several defendants disconnected with each other. Story, Eq. Plead. § 297, n. The grounds of suit must be wholly distinct, and each ground must be sufficient, as stated, to sustain a bill. 5 Ired. Eq. No. C. 313. See 21 Ala. N. s. 252; 9 Ga. 278; 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 46; 22 Conn. 171.

2. It may arise from the joinder of plaintiffs who possess distinct claims, 2 Sim. Ch. 331; 6 Madd. Ch. 94; 8 Pet. 123; but see 3 Harr. 412; 6 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 150; 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 605, or the joinder of distinct claims of the plaintiff in one bill. 2 Sim. & S. Ch. 79. But it seems that where there is a common liability of the defendants and a common interest in the plaintiffs, different claims may be united in the same suit. 1 Mylne & C. 623; 3 id. 85; 5 How. 127; 12 Metc. Mass. 323. And see 7 Sim. Ch. 241; 3 Price, Exch. 164; 2 Younge & C. Ch. 389; Story, Eq. Plead. § 536, n.; MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

At law, misjoinder vitiates the entire declaration, whether taken advantage of by general demurrer, 1 Maule & S. 355, motion in arrest of judgment, writ of error. 2 Bos. & P. 424; 4 Term, 347. It may be aided by verdict in some cases. 2 Lev. 110; 11 Mod. 196; 2 Maule & S. 533; 1 Chitty, Plead. 188.

3. Of Parties. The joining, as plaintiffs or defendants, parties who have not a joint interest.

In equity, the joinder of improper plaintiffs is a fatal defect. 2 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 186; 3 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 48; 2 Ala. N. s. 406. But the court may exercise a discretion whether to dismiss the bill. 1 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 59; 3 Ohio St. 129. See 5 Fla. 110. It may be dismissed wholly, or only as to a portion of the plaintiffs. 18 Ohio, 72. The improper joinder of defendants is no cause of objection by a co-defendant. 2 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 618; 6 Ired. Eq. No. C. 62; 7 Ala. N. s. 362; 12 Ark. 720; 23 Me. 269. See 7 Conn. 387.

The objection must be taken before the hearing, 15 How. 546; 2 Hill, Ch. So. C. 567; 4 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 510; not, however, if it be vital, 30 N. H. 433; by demurrer, if apparent on the face of the bill, 9 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 410; 7 Ala. N. s. 362; but see 5 Ill. 424; by plea and answer; or otherwise. 13 Pet. 359; 1 T. B. Monr. Ky. 105. A defendant who is improperly joined must plead or demur. 1 Mo. 410. At law, see ABATEMENT; PLEADING.

MISKENNING (Fr. mis, wrong, and Sax. cennan, summon). A wrongful citation. A variance in a plea. 1 Mon. Angl. 237; Chart. Hen. II.; Jacob, Law Dict.; DuCange.

MISNOMER. The use of a wrong name.

In contracts, a mistake in the name will not avoid the contract, in general, if the party can be ascertained. 11 Coke, 20; Ld. Raym. 304; Hob. 125.

A misnomer of a legatee will not, in general, avoid a legacy, when the context furnishes the means of correction. See 19 Ves. Ch. 381; 1 Roper, Leg. 131; LEGACY.

Misnomer of one of the parties to a suit must be pleaded in abatement. See ABATEMENT.

The names of third persons must be correctly laid; for the error will not be helped by pleading the general issue; but, if a sufficient description be given, it has been held, in a civil case, that the misnomer was immaterial. Example: in an action for medicines alleged to have been furnished to defendant's wife, Mary, and his wife was named Elizabeth, the misnomer was held to be immaterial, the word wife being the material word. 2 Marsh. 159. In indictments, the names of third persons must be correctly given. Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 78. See Archbold, Chitty, Plead.; ABATEMENT; CONTRACT; PARTIES; LEGACY.

MISPLEADING. Pleading incorrectly, or omitting any thing in pleading which is essential to the support or defence of an action, is so called.

Pleading not guilty to an action of debt is an example of the first; setting out a defective title is an example of the second. See 3 Salk. 365.

MISPRISION. In Criminal Law. A term used to signify every considerable misdemeanor which has not a certain name given to it by law. Coke, 3d Inst. 36.

The concealment of a crime.

Negative misprision consists in the concealment of something which ought to be revealed.

Misprision of felony is the like concealment of felony, without giving any degree of maintenance to the felon, Act of Congress of April 30, 1790, s. 6, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 84; for if any aid be given him, the party becomes an accessory after the fact.

Misprision of treason is the concealment of treason by being merely passive. Act of Congress of April 30, 1790, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 83; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 139. If any assistance be given to the traitor, it makes the party a principal, as there are no accessories in treason.

Positive misprision consists in the commission of something which ought not to be done. 4 Blackstone, Comm. c. 9.

It is the duty of every good citizen, knowing of a treason or felony having been committed, to inform a magistrate. Silently to observe the commission of a felony, without using any endeavors to apprehend the offender, is a misprision. 1 Russell, Crimes, 43; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 59, s. 6; 4 Blackstone, Comm. 119.

Misprisions which are merely positive are denominated contempts or high misdemeanors: as, for example, dissuading a witness from giving evidence. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 126.

MISREADING. When a deed is read falsely to an illiterate or blind man who is a party to it, such false reading amounts to a fraud, because the contract never had the assent of both parties. 5 Coke, 19; 6 East, 309; Dane, Abr. c. 86, a. 3, § 7; 2 Johns. N. Y. 404; 12 id. 469; 3 Cow. N. Y. 537.

MISRECITAL. The incorrect recital of a matter of fact, either in an agreement or a plea: under the latter term is here understood the declaration and all the subsequent pleadings. See RECITAL.

MISREPRESENTATION. The statement made by a party to a contract that a thing relating to it is in fact in a particular way, when he knows it is not so.

2. The misrepresentation must be both false and fraudulent in order to make the party making it responsible to the other for damages. 3 Conn. 413; 10 Mass. 197; 1 Const. So. C. 328, 475; Metc. Yelv. 21 a, n. 1; Peake, Cas. 115; 3 Campb. 154; Marshall, Ins. b. 1, c. 10, s. 1. And see 5 Maule & S. 380; 12 East, 638; 3 Bos. & P. 370. Misrepresentation as to a material part of the consideration will avoid an executory contract. 1 Phillips, Ins. §§ 630, 675.

A misrepresentation, to constitute fraud, must be contrary to fact; the party making it must know it to be so, 2 Kent, Comm. 471; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 142; 4 Price, 135; 3 Conn. 597; 22 Me. 511; 7 Gratt. Va. 64, 239; 6 Ga. 458; 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 182; 6 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 197; 1 Stor. C. C. 172; 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 342; excluding cases of mere mistake, 5 Q. B. 804; 9 id. 197; 10 Mees. & W. 147; 11 id. 401; 14 id. 651; 7 Cranch, 69; 13 How. 211; 8 Johns. N. Y. 25; 7 Wend. N. Y. 10; 11 id. 375; 1 Metc. Mass. 1; 27 Me. 309; 7 Vt. 67, 79; 6 N. H. 99; and including cases where he falsely asserts a personal knowledge, 18 Pick. Mass. 96; 1 Metc. Mass. 193; 3 id. 469; 6 id. 245; 27 Me. 309; 16 Wend. N. Y. 646; 16 Ala. 785; 1 Bibb, Ky. 244; 4 B. Monr. Ky. 601; 3 Cranch, 281, and one which gave rise to the contracting of the other party. Rawle, Cas. 3d ed. 622; 14 N. H. 331; 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 90, 342; 2 id. 298; 2 Strobh. Eq. So. C. 14; 2 Bibb, Ky. 474; 8 B. Monr. Ky. 23; 4 How. Miss. 435; 6 id. 311; 25 Miss. 167; 3 Cranch, 282; 3 Yerg. Tenn. 178; 19 Ga. 448; 5 Blackf. Ind. 18. See 12 Me. 262; 13 Pet. 26; 23 Wend. N. Y. 260; 7 Barb. N. Y. 65.

MISSING SHIP. A ship which has been at sea and unheard from for so long a time as to give rise to the presumption that she has perished with all on board.

There is no precise time fixed as to when the presumption is to arise; and this must depend upon the circumstances of each case. 2 Strange, 1199; Park, Ins. 63; Marshall, Ins. 488; 2 Johns. N. Y. 150; 1 Caines, N. Y. 525; Holt, 242.

MISSISSIPPI. The name of one of the new states of the United States.

2. This state was admitted into the Union by a resolution of congress passed Dec. 10, 1817. 3 Story, U. S. Laws, 1716.

The constitution of this state was adopted at the town of Washington, the 15th day of August, 1817. It was revised by a convention, and adopted on the 26th of October, 1832, when it went into operation.

Every free white male person of the age of twenty-one years or upwards, who is a citizen of the United States and has resided in the state one year next preceding an election and the last four months within the county, city, or town in which he offers to vote, is a qualified elector.

The Legislative Power.

This is lodged in the Senate and the House of Representatives, the two houses together constituting "the Legislature of the State of Mississippi."

3. The Senate is composed of members elected, by the people of the district for which they are chosen, for the term of four years, and is never to be less than one-fourth nor more than one-third the whole number of representatives. One half the senate is changed every second year. A senator must be a citizen of the United States, thirty years of age at least, must have been an inhabitant of the state for four years next preceding his election, and for the last year thereof a resident of the district for which he is chosen. They are chosen the odd years.

4. The House of Representatives is composed of members elected by the people biennially, for the term of two years.

The number is limited between thirty-six and one hundred. A representative must be a citizen of the United States, twenty-one years old at least, must have been an inhabitant of the state two years next preceding his election, and for the last year thereof a resident of the county, city, or town for which he is chosen. There are the usual provisions for organization of the houses, giving authority to judge of the qualifications and regulate the conduct of members, providing for keeping a record of proceedings and publication thereof, for open sessions except in special cases; that neither house shall adjourn, without consent of the other, for more than three days; that members shall be exempt from arrest in civil process during the session of the legislature and in going to and returning from the same, allowing one day for every twenty miles such member may reside from the place at which the legislature is convened; that no senator or representative shall, during his term of service, or for a year afterwards, take an office which has been created or the pay of which has been increased during said term,—except those of which there is an election by the people; that no judge of any court of law or equity, secretary of state, attorney-general, clerk of any court of record, sheriff, or collector, or any person holding a lucrative office under the United States or this state, shall be eligible to the legislature: provided that offices in the militia to which there is attached no annual salary, and the office of justice of the peace, shall not be deemed lucrative.

The Executive Power.

5. The Governor is elected by the people, for the term of two years. He must be at least thirty years old, have been a citizen of the United States for twenty years, have resided in the state at least five years next preceding the day of his election; cannot hold the office more than four in any six years. He is commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the state, and of the militia except when they are called into the service of the United States; may convene the legislature at an unusual time, and in an unusual place, if necessary, in case of emergency; may adjourn them not beyond the day of the next stated meeting of the legislature, in case of disagreement as to time of adjournment.

6. In all criminal and penal cases, except in those of treason and impeachment, he has power to grant reprieves and pardons and remit fines, and, in cases of forfeiture, to stay the collection until the end of the next session of the legislature, and to remit forfeitures, by and with the advice and consent of the senate. In cases of treason, he has power to grant reprieves by and with the advice and consent of the senate, and may alone respite the sentence until the end of the next session of the legislature. Art. 5, sec. 10.

7. It is provided by the constitution that "whenever the office of governor shall become vacant by death, resignation, removal from office, or otherwise, the president of the senate shall exercise the office of governor until another governor shall be duly qualified; and in case of the death, resignation, removal from office, or other disqualifications of the president of the senate so exercising the office of governor, the speaker of the house of representatives shall exercise the office until a president of the senate shall have been chosen; and when the offices of governor, president of the senate, and speaker of the house shall become vacant in the recess of the senate, the person acting as secretary of state for the time-being shall by proclamation convene the senate, that a president may be chosen to exercise the office of governor." Art. 5, sect. 17.

The Judicial Power.

8. The High Court of Errors and Appeals consists of three judges, elected by the people for the term of six years. Rev. Code, 91. The terms of office are so arranged that one judge is elected every second year. The state is divided into three districts, and one judge must come from each district. A judge must be thirty years old at the time of his election. Two of the judges constitute a quorum, and must concur in a decision. Terms of the court are held twice each year for all the districts, at Jackson, the seat of government. It has no original jurisdiction, but sits only as a court of errors and appeals.

The Circuit Court consists of ten judges, elected one in each of the districts into which the state is divided, by the people thereof, for the term of four years. A judge must be at least twenty-six years old at the time of his election, and must be and continue a resident of the district for which he is elected. This is the court of general original jurisdiction in law and equity. It has original jurisdiction in all civil cases where the amounts involved exceed fifty dollars, and appellate jurisdiction from inferior courts, and a full and exclusive criminal jurisdiction, except that of the justices of the peace and of the United States courts. It may authorize the alteration of names, may legitimate offspring, and authorize the adoption of children. The judges may, even in vacation, issue writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, certiorari, error, supersedeas, and attachment, returnable to any circuit or other court, grant injunctions and writs of ne exeat, as well as other writs. Two terms of the court are held annually in each county.

9. Courts of Chancery are held by the judges of the circuit court at the times of holding the county court. One week at least of each term is to be given to chancery business. The court sitting in chancery has a full equity jurisdiction of all cases involving amounts over fifty dollars.

Probate Courts are held in each county by a single judge, elected by the people of the county. This court takes the control generally of all property of decedents, takes probate of wills, may order partition of lands, takes charge of the property of minors, lunatics, etc., appointing guardians, and may take acknowledgment of deeds.

It sits also as a court of inquiry in criminal matters, and may bind over persons suspected, to the circuit court, for trial.

10. A Board of Police exists in each county, composed of five members, elected one from each of the five districts into which the county is divided. They have the general control of the internal police of the county, including the jurisdiction over patrols and paupers, the care of roads and bridges and county buildings, with power to levy county taxes.

A Justice of the Peace is elected in each of the five police districts of each county, by the people of the district, for the term of two years. He has a civil jurisdiction, coextensive with the county, over all cases involving not more than fifty dollars in amount.

In cases where the parties require, he may summon a jury, which shall be composed of six persons selected from the twelve summoned. He has also a limited criminal jurisdiction of minor offences. He must hold not less than one nor more than two terms each month, and may hear and decide cases between the regular terms, where justice requires it.

Jurisprudence.

11. A full revision of the laws of the state was ordered in 1854, by act of the legislature, which was completed and went into effect Nov. 1857. It is known as "The Revised Code of 1857."

By its provisions the disqualification of interest has been removed, so that parties to the suit, or persons in any way interested, may testify in open court, but not so as to establish a claim against a decedent's estate beyond the amount of fifty dollars; husband and wife may testify for each other in criminal cases; changes have been made in the law of dower. See DOWER; CURTESY.

A full and minute criminal code has been enacted, which contains full provisions for the prevention of crime, by requiring bonds of offenders to preserve the peace, and especially not to repeat the same offence for the space of two years.

MISSOURI. The name of one of the new states of the United States of America.

2. It was formed out of part of the territory ceded to the United States by the French Republic by treaty of April 30, 1808. L. U. S.

This state was admitted into the Union by a resolution of congress approved March 2, 1821. L. U. S.

To this resolution there was a condition, which, having been performed, the admission of Missouri as a state was completed by the president's proclamation, dated August 10, 1821. 3 Little & Brown's edit. L. U. S. App. 2.

The convention which formed the constitution of this state met at St. Louis, on Monday, June 12, 1820, and continued by adjournment till July 19, 1820, when the constitution was adopted, establishing "an independent republic, by the name of the 'State of Missouri.'"

All free white male citizens of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who have resided in the state one year before an election, the last three months whereof must have been in the county or district in which they offer to vote, are qualified electors. But no soldier, seaman, or marine in the regular army or navy of the United States is entitled to vote at any election.

The Legislative Power.

3. This is lodged in a General Assembly, consisting of a Senate and House of Representatives.

The Senate is to consist of not less than fourteen nor more than thirty-three members, chosen by the qualified electors for the term of four years; but one-half of the senators are to be chosen every second year. A senator must be thirty years old at least, a free white citizen of the United States for four years, an inhabitant of the state and of the district from which he is elected for one year.

The House of Representatives consists of one hundred and forty members, chosen every second year, by the qualified electors of the several districts into which the state is divided for the purpose. Amend. 1818–9. A representative must be twenty-four years of age at least, and otherwise possess the same qualifications as a senator.

The Executive Power.

4. The Governor is elected by the people, and holds his office for four years and until a successor is duly appointed and qualified. He is commander-in-chief of the militia of the state, except when called into the service of the United States; has power to remit fines and grant reprieves and pardons, except in cases of impeachment; is to communicate information to general assembly, and recommend measures, take care that the laws are executed, fill vacancies in offices, and may veto bills, which, however, may be passed over his objections by a majority of both houses.

The Lieutenant-Governor is elected at the same time, in the same manner, and for the same term, and is to possess the same qualifications, as the governor. He is, by virtue of his office, president of the senate, may debate and give the casting vote. When the office of the governor becomes vacant by death, resignation, absence from the state, refusal to qualify, impeachment, or otherwise, the lieutenant-governor possesses all the powers and discharges all the duties of governor until such vacancy be filled or the governor so absent or impeached returns or is acquitted.

5. Whenever a vacancy occurs in the office of governor, the lieutenant-governor, or other person exercising the powers of governor for the time-being, is to cause an election to fill such vacancy, giving three months' notice thereof. But if such vacancy happens within eighteen months of the end of the late governor's term, it is not to be filled.

A Secretary of State, an Attorney-General, an Auditor of Public Accounts, a State Treasurer, and a Register of Lands, are elected by the qualified electors of the state; and each holds his office for the term of four years.

The Judicial Power.

6. The Supreme Court consists of three judges, elected by the people for six years and until a successor is qualified, who may be removed on the address of two-thirds of each house of the assembly, such address stating the cause of removal. This process does not, however, take the place of impeachment. A judge of this court must not be less than thirty years old, nor can he sit after he is sixty-five. Two of the judges constitute a quorum. This court has an appellate jurisdiction from inferior courts, coextensive with the state, may issue, hear, and determine writs of habeas corpus, mandamus, quo warranto, certiorari, and other original remedial writs, and has a general superintending control of inferior courts.

7. The Circuit Court consists of sixteen judges, chosen by the people of the respective districts for the term of six years. Their necessary qualifications are the same as those of the supreme judges. Each judge must reside in the circuit for which he is chosen. This is the court of general original jurisdiction, exercising also a superintending control over such inferior courts as are now established, or may be from time to time, and justices of peace. It has exclusive original jurisdiction over all civil cases not cognizable before justices of the peace. As a court of chancery, it has original and appellate jurisdiction in all matters of equity, and a general control over executors, administrators, guardians, and minors, subject to appeal in all cases to the supreme court, under such limitations as the general assembly may by law provide. It is also the court of original criminal jurisdiction, having jurisdiction in all cases not otherwise provided for. It has also full original jurisdiction in chancery; and no other court of chancery exists, the power of that court having been transferred to the circuit and supreme courts. No person is eligible as judge, either of the supreme or circuit court, who is less than thirty years of age; nor can any person continue to exercise the office after he is sixty-five. Any judge of the supreme court or the circuit court may be removed from office on the address of two-thirds of each house of the general assembly to the governor for that purpose; but each house shall state, in its respective journal, the cause for which it shall wish the removal of such judge, and give him notice thereof; and he shall have the right to be heard in his defence in such manner as the general assembly shall by law direct; but no judge shall be removed in this manner for any cause for which he might have been impeached.

8. The County Court in each county is composed of three judges, chosen by the people of the county for six years. Four terms are held annually. It takes probate of wills, controls the settlement of estates of decedents, appoints and controls guardians of minors, lunatics, etc., and, in addition, has the control of the county property.

Justices of the Peace are elected by the people, four in each township, and two in each ward in St. Louis. They have civil jurisdiction over all matters arising from contracts, and to recover statutory penalties where the amount involved, in case of injuries to persons, or where the damages claimed, are not over twenty dollars, and jurisdiction concurrent with the circuit court in each case where the damages are over twenty dollars and under fifty dollars, with an appeal to the circuit court for their county. They have also a criminal jurisdiction over all breaches of the peace where the fine is less than one hundred dollars.

9. In St. Louis, there are the criminal court, the court of common pleas, the land court, the probate court, and the law commissioners' court.

The criminal court has the criminal jurisdiction of the circuit court in other counties. The court of common pleas has the civil jurisdiction of the same court.

The land court takes acknowledgments of deeds, and tries all questions of titles to land in St. Louis.

The law commissioners' court has a limited jurisdiction in civil matters, including actions arising from contracts where the sum claimed is not over one hundred and fifty dollars, actions under the Landlord and Tenant Act, the forcible entry and detainer process, and contracts relative to boats for sums under one hundred dollars.

MISTAKE. Some unintentional act, omission, or error arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition, or misplaced confidence. Story, Eq. Jur. § 110.

That result of ignorance of law or fact which has misled a person to commit that which, if he had not been in error, he would not have done. Jeremy, Eq. Jur. b. 2, pt. 2, p. 358.

2. As a general rule, both at law and in equity, mistakes of law do not furnish an excuse for wrongful acts or a ground of relief from the consequences of acts done in consequence of such a mistake. 6 Clark & F. Hou. L. 964–971; 9 Mees. & W. Exch. 54; 5 Hare, Ch. 91; 8 Wheat, 214; 1 Pet. 15; 9 How. 55; 7 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 99*, 137; 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 60; Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 125–138. See 2 M'Cord, Ch. 455; 6 Harr. & J. Md. 500; 25 Vt. 603; De Gex, M. & G. 76; 21 Ala. N. s. 252; 13 Ark. 129; 6 Ohio, 169; 11 id. 480; 21 Ga. 118; Beasl. Ch. N. J. 165.

An act done or a contract made under a mistake or ignorance of a material fact is voidable and relievable in equity. Story, Eq. Jur. § 140. The rule applies to cases where there has been a studied suppression of facts by one side, and to cases of mutual ignorance or mistake. 3 Burr. 21; 26 Beav. Rolls, 454; 12 Sim. Ch. 465; 9 Ves. Ch. 275; 3 Chanc. Cas. 56; 2 Barb. N. Y. 475; 1 Hill, N. Y. 287; 11 Pet. 71; 8 B. Monr. Ky. 580; 4 Mas. C. C. 414; 5 R. I. 130. But the fact must be material to the contract, i.e. essential to its character, and an efficient cause of its concoction. 1 Ves. Ch. 126, 210; De Gex & S. 83; 6 Binn. Penn. 102; 11 Gratt. Va. 468; 2 Barb. N. Y. 37; 2 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 298; 13 Penn. St. 371.

3. An award may be set aside for a mistake of law or fact by the arbitrators apparent on the face of the award. 2 Bos. & P. 371; 1 Dall. Penn. 487; 1 Sneed, Tenn. 321. See 6 Metc. Mass. 136; 17 How. 344; 6 Pick. Mass. 148; 2 Gall. C. C. 61; 4 N. The word which the parties intended to use in an instrument may be substituted for one which was actually used by a clerical error, in equity. Adams, Eq. 169 et seq.; 13 Gray, Mass. 373; 6 Ired. Eq. No. C. 462; 17 Ala. N. s. 562.

As to the rule for the correction of mistakes in wills, see Story, Eq. Jur. § 179; 2 Ves. Ch. 216; 3 id. 321; 1 Brown, Ch. 85; 3 id. 446; 1 Keen, 692; 2 Kay & J. Ch. 740; 1 Jones, Eq. No. C. 110; 22 Mo. 518; 2 Stockt. Ch. N. J. 582.

A mistake sometimes prevents a forfeiture in cases of violation of revenue laws, Paine, C. C. 129; Gilp. Dist. Ct. 235; 4 Call, Va. 158; breach of embargo acts, 3 Day, Conn. 296; Paine, C. C. 16; 7 Cranch, 22; 3 Wheat. 59; 11 How. 47; and some other cases. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 697; 4 Cranch, 347; 11 Wheat. 1; 12 id. 1; 1 Mass. 347.

MISTRIAL. A trial which is erroneous on account of some defect in the persons trying, as if the jury come from the wrong county, or because there was no issue formed as if no plea be entered, or some other defect of jurisdiction. 3 Croke, 284; 2 Maule & S. 270.

2. Consent of parties cannot help such a trial, when past. Hob. 5.

It is error to go to trial without a plea or an issue, in the absence of counsel and without his consent, although an affidavit of defence be filed in the case, containing the substance of a plea, and the court has ordered the case on the list for trial. 3 Penn. St. 501.

On an indictment for paying, an infant under the age of twenty-one years, and not otherwise qualified, not having, in fact, been summoned, personated his father as a juror. Here was a mistrial, because the verdict in the case was the verdict of but eleven jurors. "To support a judgment," observed Judge Holroyd, "it must be founded on a verdict delivered by twelve competent jurors. This man was incompetent, and therefore there has been a mistrial." 7 Dowl. & R. 684. And see 4 Barnew. & Ald. 430; 18 N. Y. 128.

MISUSER. An unlawful use of a right.

In cases of public offices and franchises, a misuser is sufficient to cause the right to be forfeited. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 153; 5 Pick. Mass. 163.

MITIGATION. Reduction; diminution; lessening of the amount of a penalty or punishment.

Circumstances which do not amount to a justification or excuse of the act committed may yet be properly considered in mitigation of the punishment: as, for example, the fact that one who stole a loaf of bread was starving.

In actions for the recovery of damages, matters may often be given in evidence in mitigation of damages which are no answer to the action itself. See DAMAGES; CHARACTER.

MITIOR SENSUS. See IN MITIORI SENSU.

MITTER (L. Fr.). To put, to send, or to pass: as, mitter l'estate, to pass the estate; mitter le droit, to pass a right. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 324; Bacon, Abr. Release (C); Coke, Litt. 193, 273 b. Mitter a large, to put or set at large.

MITTIMUS. In Old English Law. A writ enclosing a record sent to be tried in a county palatine: it derives its name from the Latin word mittimus, "we send." It is the jury process of these counties, and commands the proper officer of the county palatine to command the sheriff to summon the jury for the trial of the cause, and to return the record, etc. 1 Mart. La. 278; 2 id. 88.

In Criminal Practice. A precept in writing, under the hand and seal of a justice of the peace, or other competent officer, directed to the jailer or keeper of a prison, commanding him to receive and safely keep a person charged with an offence therein named, until he shall be delivered by due course of law. Coke, Litt. 590.

MIXED ACTION. In Practice. An action partaking of the nature both of a real and of a personal action, by which real property is demanded, and also damages for a wrong sustained. An ejectment is of this nature. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3650. See ACTION.

MIXED GOVERNMENT. A government established with some of the powers of a monarchical, aristocratical, and democratical government. See GOVERNMENT; MONARCHY.

MIXED LARCENY. Compound larceny, which see.

MIXED PROPERTY. That kind of property which is not altogether real nor personal, but a compound of both. Heir-looms, tombstones, monuments in a church, and title-deeds to an estate, are of this nature. Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 428; 3 Barnew. & Ad. 174; 4 Bingh. 106.

MIXED TITHES. In Ecclesiastical Law. "Those which arise not immediately from the ground, but from those things which are nourished by the ground:" e.g. colts, chickens, calves, milk, eggs, etc. 3 Burn, Eccl. Law, 380; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 24.

MIXT CONTRACT. In Civil Law. A contract in which one of the parties confers a benefit on the other, and requires of the latter something of less value than what he has given: as, a legacy charged with something of less value than the legacy itself. Pothier, Obl. n. 12.

MIXTION. The putting of different goods or chattels together in such a manner that they can no longer be separated: as, putting the wines of two different persons into the same barrel, the grain of several persons into the same bag, and the like.

The intermixture may be occasioned by the wilful act of the party, or owner of one of the articles, by the wilful act of a stranger, by the negligence of the owner or a stranger, or by accident. See CONFUSION OF GOODS.

MOBBING AND RIOTING. In Scotch Law. A general term, including all those convocations of the lieges for violent and unlawful purposes, which are attended with injury to the persons or property of the lieges, or terror and alarm to the neighborhood in which it takes place. The two phrases are usually placed together; but, nevertheless, they have distinct meanings, and are sometimes used separately in legal language,—the word mobbing being peculiarly applicable to the unlawful assemblage and violence of a number of persons, and that of rioting to the outrageous behavior of a single individual. Alison, Crim. Law, c. 23, p. 509.

MOBILIA. See MOVABLES.

MODEL. A machine made on a small scale to show the manner in which it is to be worked or employed.

The act of congress of July 4, 1836, section 6, requires an inventor who is desirous to take out a patent for his invention to furnish a model of his invention, in all cases which admit of representation by model, of a convenient size to exhibit advantageously its several parts. Such model must not exceed one foot in any of its dimensions, under the present rules of the patent-office.

MODERATE CASTIGAVIT. In Pleading. The name of a plea in trespass by which the defendant justifies an assault and battery, because he moderately corrected the plaintiff, whom he had a right to correct. 2 Chitty, Plead. 576; 2 Bos. & P. 224. See CORRECTION; 15 Mass. 347; 2 Phillipps, Ev. 147; Bacon, Abr. Assault (C).

This plea ought to disclose, in general terms, the cause which rendered the correction expedient. 3 Salk. 47.

MODERATOR. A person appointed to preside at a popular meeting: sometimes he is called a chairman. The presiding officer of town meetings in New England is so called.

MODIFICATION. A change: as, the modification of a contract. This may take place at the time of making the contract, by a condition which shall have that effect: for example, if I sell you one thousand bushels of corn upon condition that my crop shall produce that much, and it produces only eight hundred bushels, the contract is modified; it is for eight hundred bushels, and no more.

It may be modified, by the consent of both parties, after it has been made. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 733.

MODO ET FORMA (Lat. in manner and form). In Pleading. Technical words used to put in issue such concomitants of the principal matters as time, place, etc., where these circumstances were material. Their use when these circumstances were immaterial was purely formal. The words were translated literally, when pleadings began to be made in English, by "in manner and form." See Lawes, Plead. 120; Gould, Plead. c. 6, § 22; Stephen, Plead. 213; Dane, Abr. Index; Viner, Abr. Modo et Forma.

MODUS. In Civil Law. Manner:

means; way. Ainsworth, Lat. Dict. A rhythmic song. DuCange.

In Old Conveyancing. Manner: e.g. the manner in which an estate should be held, etc. A qualification, whether in restriction or enlargement of the terms of the instrument; especially with relation to the kind of grant called "donatio,"—the making those quasi heirs who were not in fact heirs according to the ordinary form of such conveyances. And this modus or qualification of the ordinary form became so common as to give rise to the maxim "modus et conventio vincunt legem." Coke, Litt. 19 a; Bracton, 17 b; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 293. A consideration. Bracton, 17, 18.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A peculiar manner of tithing, growing out of custom. See MODUS DECIMANDI.

MODUS DECIMANDI. In Ecclesiastical Law. A peculiar manner of tithing, arising from immemorial usage, and differing from the payment of one-tenth of the annual increase.

To be a good modus, the custom must be—first, certain and invariable; second, beneficial to the parson; third, a custom to pay something different from the thing compounded for; fourth, of the same species; fifth, the thing substituted must be in its nature as durable as the tithes themselves; sixth, it must not be too large: that would be a rank modus. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 30. See 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 100; 13 Mees. & W. Exch. 822.

MODUS DE NON DECIMANDO. In Ecclesiastical Law. A custom or prescription not to pay tithes, which is not good, except in case of abbey-lands. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 31, note.

MOHAMMEDAN LAW. A system of native law prevailing among the Mohammedans in India, and administered there by the British government. See HINDU LAW.

MOHATRA. In French Law. The name of a fraudulent contract made to cover a usurious loan of money.

It takes place when an individual buys merchandise from another on a credit at a high price, to sell it immediately to the first seller, or to a third person who acts as his agent, at a much less price for cash. 16 Toullier, n. 44; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1118.

MOIETY. The half of any thing: as, if a testator bequeath one moiety of his estate to A, and the other to B, each shall take an equal part. Joint tenants are said to hold by moieties. Littleton, 125; 3 C. B. 274, 283.

MOLESTATION. In Scotch Law. The name of an action competent to the proprietor of a landed estate against those who disturb his possession. It is chiefly used in questions of commonty, or of controverted marches. Erskine, Inst. 4. 1. 48.

MOLITURA. Toll paid for grinding at a mill; multure. Not used.

MOLLITER MANUS IMPOSUIT (Lat.). He laid his hands on gently.

In Pleading. A plea in justification of a trespass to the person. It is a good plea when supported by the evidence, 12 Viner, Abr. 182; Hammond, Nisi P. 149; where an amount of violence proportioned to the circumstances, 20 Johns. N. Y. 427; 4 Den. N. Y. 448; 2 Strobh. So. C. 232; 17 Ohio, 454; has been done to the person of another in defence of property, 3 Cush. Mass. 154; 3 Ohio St. 159; 9 Barb. N. Y. 652; 23 Penn. St. 424; see 19 N. H. 562; 25 Ala. N. S. 41; 4 Cush. Mass. 597, or the prevention of crime. 2 Chitty, Plead. 574; Bacon, Abr. Assault and Battery (C 8).

MONARCHY. That government which is ruled, really or theoretically, by one man, who is wholly set apart from all other members of the state.

2. A wording to the etymology of the word monarchy is, that government in which one person rules supreme,—alone. In modern times the terms autocracy, autocrat, have come into use to indicate that monarchy of which the ruler desires to be exclusively considered the source of all power and authority. The Russian emperor styles himself Autocrat of all the Russias. Autocrat is the same with despot; but the latter term has fallen somewhat into disrepute. Monarchy is contradistinguished from republic. Although the etymology of the term monarchy is simple and clear, it is by no means easy to give a definition either of monarchy or of republic. The constitution of the United States guarantees a republican government to every state. What is a republic? In this case the meaning of the term must be gathered from the republics which existed at the time of the formation of our government, and which were habitually called republics. Lieber, in a paper on the question, "Shall Utah be admitted into the Union?" (in Putnam's Magazine,) declared that the Mormons did not form a republic.

3. The fact that one man stands at the head of a government does not make it a monarchy. We have a president at the head. Nor is it necessary that the one person have an unlimited amount of power, to make a government a monarchy. The power of the king of England is limited by law and theory, and reduced to a small amount in reality: yet England is called a monarchy. Nor does hereditariness furnish us with a distinction. The pope is elected by the cardinals, yet the States of the Church are a monarchy; and the stadtholder of several states of the Netherlands was hereditary, yet the states were republics. We cannot find any better definition of monarchy than this: a monarchy is that government which is ruled (really or theoretically) by one man, who is wholly set apart from all other members of the state (called his subjects); while we call republic that government in which not only there exists an organism by which the opinion of the people, or of a portion of the people (as in aristocracies), passes over into public will, that is, law, but in which also the supreme power, or the executive power, returns, either periodically or at stated times (where the chief-magistracy is for life), to the people, or a portion of the people, to be given anew to another person; or else, that government in which the hereditary portion (if there be any) is not the chief and leading portion of the government, as was the case in the Netherlands.

4. Monarchy is the prevailing type of government. Whether it will remain so with our cis-Caucasian race is a question not to be discussed in a law dictionary. The two types of monarchy as it exists in Europe are the limited or constitutional monarchy, developed in England, and centralized monarchy—to which has been added the modern French type, which consists in the adoption of Rousseau's idea of sovereignty, and applying it to a transfer of all the sovereign power of the people to one Cæsar, who thus becomes an unqualified and unmitigated autocrat or despot. It is a relapse into coarse absolutism.

Paley has endeavored to point out the advantages and disadvantages of the different classes of government,—not successfully, we think. The great advantages of the monarchical element in a free government are: first, that there remains a stable and firm point in the unavoidable party struggle; and secondly, that, supreme power, and it may be said the whole government, being represented by or symbolized in one living person, authority, respect, and, with regard to public money, even public morality, stand a better chance to be preserved.

5. The great disadvantages of a monarchy are that the personal interests or inclinations of the monarch or his house (of the dynasty) are substituted for the public interest; that to the chance of birth is left what with rational beings certainly ought to be the result of reason and wisdom; and that loyalty to the ruler comes easily to be substituted for real patriotism, and frequently passes over into undignified and pernicious man-worship. Monarchy is, assuredly the best government for many nations, at the present period, and the only government under which in this period they can obtain security and liberty: yet, unless we believe in a pre-existing divine right of the monarch, monarchy can never be any thing but a substitute—acceptable, wise, even desirable, as the case may be—for something more dignified, which, unfortunately, the passions or derelictions of men prevent. The advantages and disadvantages of republics may be said to be the reverse of what has been stated regarding monarchy. A frequent mistake in modern times is this: that a state simply for the time without a king—a kingless government—is called a republic. But a monarchy does not change into a republic simply by expelling the king or the dynasty; as we have seen in France in 1848. Few governments are less acceptable than an elective monarchy; for it has the disadvantages of the monarchy without its advantages, and the disadvantages of a republic without its advantages. See GOVERNMENT; ABSOLUTISM.

MONEY. Gold and silver coins. The common medium of exchange in a civilized nation.

There is some difference of opinion as to the etymology of the word money; and writers do not agree as to its precise meaning. Some writers define it to be the common medium of exchange among civilized nations; but in the United States constitution there is a provision which has been supposed to make it synonymous with coins: "The congress shall have power to coin money." Art. 1, sect. 8. Again: "No state shall coin money, or make any thing but gold and silver a legal tender in payment of debt." Art. 1, sect. 10. Hence the money of the United States consists of gold and silver coins. And so well has the congress of the United States maintained this point, that the copper coins heretofore struck, and the nickel cent of recent issues, although authorized to "pass current," are not money in an exact sense, because they are not made a legal tender in the payment of debts. The question has been made whether a paper currency can be constitutionally authorized by congress and constituted a legal tender in the payment of private debts. Such a power has been exercised and adjudged valid by the highest tribunal of several of the states, but has not been passed upon by the supreme court of the United States.

For many purposes, bank-notes, 1 Younge & J. Exch. 380; 3 Mass. 405; 14 id. 122; 17 id. 560; 4 Pick. Mass. 74; 2 N. H. 333; 7 Cow. N. Y. 662; Brayt. Vt. 24; a check, 4 Bingh. 179, and negotiable notes, 3 Mass. 405, will be considered as money. To support a count for money had and received, the receipt by the defendant of bank-notes, promissory notes, 3 Mass. 405; 9 Pick. Mass. 93; 14 Me. 285; 7 Johns. 132, credit in account in the books of a third person, 3 Campb. 199, or any chattel, is sufficient, 4 Pick. Mass. 71; 17 Mass. 560, and will be treated as money. See 7 Wend. N. Y. 311; 8 id. 641; 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 246; 8 Term, 687; 3 Bos. & P. 559; 1 Younge & J. Exch. 380.

MONEY OF ADIEU. In French Law. Earnest-money: so called because given at parting in completion of the bargain. Pothier, Sale, 507. Arrhes is the usual French word for earnest-money; money of adieu is a provincialism found in the province of Orléans.

MONEY BILLS. Bills or projects of laws providing for raising revenue, and for making grants or appropriations of the public treasure.

2. The first clause of the seventh section of the constitution of the United States declares, "all bills for raising revenue shall originate in the house of representatives; but the senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills." See Story, Const. §§ 871–877.

3. What bills are properly "bills for raising revenue," in the sense of the constitution, has been matter of some discussion. Tucker, Blackst. Comm. App. 261, and note; Story, Const. § 877. In practice, the power has been confined to bills to levy taxes in the strict sense of the words, and has not been understood to extend to bills for other purposes which may incidentally create revenue. Story, id.; 2 Elliott, Deb. 283, 284.

MONEY COUNTS. In Pleading. The common counts in an action of assumpsit.

They are so called because they are founded on express or implied promises to pay money in consideration of a precedent debt. They are of four descriptions: the indebitatus assumpsit; the quantum meruit; the quantum valebant; and the account stated. See these titles.

2. Although the plaintiff cannot resort to an implied promise when there is a general contract, yet he may, in many cases, recover on the common counts notwithstanding there was a special agreement, provided it has been executed. 1 Campb. 471; 12 East, 1; 7 Cranch, 299; 5 Mass. 391; 10 id. 287; 7 Johns. N. Y. 132; 10 id. 136. It is, therefore, advisable to insert the money counts in an action of assumpsit, when suing on a special contract. 1 Chitty, Plead. 333, 334.

MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED. In Pleading. The technical designation of a form of declaration in assumpsit, wherein the plaintiff declares that the defendant had and received certain money, etc.

2. An action of assumpsit will lie to recover money to which the plaintiff is entitled, and which in justice and equity, when no rule of policy or strict law prevents it, the defendant ought to refund to the plaintiff, and which he cannot with a good conscience retain, on a count for money had and received. 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 369; 10 id. 219; 1 Dall. Penn. 148; 2 id. 154; 3 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 175; 1 Harr. N. J. 447; 1 Harr. & G. Md. 258; 7 Mass. 288; 6 Wend. N. Y. 290; 13 id. 488; Addison, Contr. 230.

3. When the money has been received by the defendant in consequence of some tortious act to the plaintiff's property, as when he cut down the plaintiff's timber and sold it, the plaintiff may waive the tort and sue in assumpsit for money had and received. 1 Dall. Penn. 122; 1 Blackf. Ind. 181; 4 Pick. Mass. 452; 5 id. 285; 12 id. 120; 1 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 543; 4 Binn. Penn. 374; 3 Watts, Penn. 277; 4 Call, Va. 451.

4. In general, the action for money had and received lies only where money has been received by the defendant. 14 Serg. & R. Penn. 179; 1 Pick. Mass. 204; 1 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 544; 3 id. 6; 7 id. 100; 11 Johns. N. Y. 464. But bank-notes or any other property received as money will be considered for this purpose as money. 3 Mass. 405; 14 id. 122; 17 id. 560; Brayt. Vt. 24; 7 Cow. N. Y. 622; 4 Pick. Mass. 74. See 9 Serg. & R. Penn. 11.

5. No privity of contract between the parties is required in order to support this action, except that which results from the fact of one man's having the money of another which he cannot conscientiously retain. 17 Mass. 563, 579. See 2 Dall. Penn. 54; 5 Conn. 71.

MONEY LENT. In Pleading. The technical name of a declaration in an action of assumpsit for that the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff for money lent.

To recover, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant received his money, but it is not indispensable that it should be originally lent. If, for example, money has been advanced upon a special contract, which has been abandoned and rescinded, and which cannot be enforced, the law raises an implied promise from the person who holds the money to pay it back as money lent. 7 Bingh. 266; 3 Mees. & W. Exch. 434; 9 id. 729. See 1 N. Chipm. Vt. 214; 3 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 37.

MONEY PAID. In Pleading. The technical name of a declaration in assumpsit, in which the plaintiff declares for money paid for the use of the defendant.

2. When one advances money for the benefit of another with his consent, or at his express request, although he be not benefited by the transaction, the creditor may recover the money in an action of assumpsit declaring for money paid for the defendant. 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 9. But one cannot by a voluntary payment of another's debt make himself creditor of that other. 1 Const. So. C. 472; 1 Gill & J. Md. 497; 5 Cow. N. Y. 603; 3 Johns. N. Y. 434; 8 id. 436; 10 id. 361; 14 id. 87; 2 Root, Conn. 84; 2 Stew. Ala. 500; 4 N. H. 138; 1 South. N. J. 150.

3. Assumpsit for money paid will not lie where property, not money, has been paid or received. 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 246; 10 id. 75; 14 id. 179; 7 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 18. But see 7 Cow. N. Y. 662.

But where money has been paid to the defendant either for a just, legal, or equitable claim, although it could not have been enforced at law, it cannot be recovered as money paid. See MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED.

The form of declaring is for "money paid by the plaintiff for the use of the defendant and at his request." 1 Mees. & W. Exch. 511.

MONEYED CORPORATION. A corporation having the power to make loans upon pledges or deposits, or authorized by law to make insurance. 1 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 3d ed. 731; 3 N. Y. 479.

MONITION. In Practice. A process in the nature of a summons, which is used in the civil law, and in those courts which derive their practice from the civil law. See Benedict, Adm.

A general monition is a citation or summons to all persons interested, or, as is commonly said, to the whole world, to appear and show cause why the libel filed in the case should not be sustained, and the prayer of relief granted. This is adopted in prize cases, admiralty suits for forfeitures, and other suits in rem, when no particular individuals are summoned to answer. In such cases the taking possession of the property libelled, and this general citation or monition, served according to law, are considered constructive notice to the world of the pendency of the suit; and the judgment rendered thereupon is conclusive upon the title of the property which may be affected. In form, the monition is substantially a warrant of the court, in an admiralty cause, directed to the marshal or his deputy, commanding him, in the name of the president of the United States, to give public notice, by advertisements in such newspapers as the court may select, and by notifications to be posted in public places, that a libel has been filed in a certain admiralty cause pending, and of the time and place appointed for the trial. A brief statement of the allegations in the libel is usually contained in the monition. The monition is served in the manner directed in the warrant.

A mixed monition is one which contains directions for a general monition to all persons interested, and a special summons to particular persons named in the warrant. This is served by newspaper advertisements, by notifications posted in public places, and by delivery of a copy attested by the officer to each person specially named, or by leaving it at his usual place of residence.

A special monition is a similar warrant, directed to the marshal or his deputy, requiring him to give special notice to certain persons, named in the warrant, of the pendency of the suit, the grounds of it, and the time and place of trial. It is served by delivery of a copy of the warrant, attested by the officer, to each one of the adverse parties, or by leaving the same at his usual place of residence; but the service should be personal, if possible. Clerke, Prax. tit. 21; Dunlap, Adm. Pract. 135. See Conkling, Adm.; Parsons, Marit. Law.

MONITORY LETTER. In Ecclesiastical Law. The process of an official, a bishop, or other prelate having jurisdiction, issued to compel, by ecclesiastical censures, those who know of a crime, or other matter which requires to be explained, to come and reveal it. Merlin, Répert.

MONOCRACY. A government by one person only.

MONOCRAT. A monarch who governs alone; an absolute governor.

MONOGAMY. The state of having only one husband or one wife at a time.

A marriage contracted between one man and one woman, in exclusion of all the rest of mankind. The term is used in opposition to bigamy and polygamy. Wolff, Dr. de la Nat. § 857.

MONOGRAM. A character or cipher composed of one or more letters interwoven, being an abbreviation of a name.

A signature made by a monogram would perhaps be binding provided it could be proved to have been made and intended as a signature. 1 Den. N. Y. 471.

There seems to be no reason why such a signature should not be as binding as one which is altogether illegible.

MONOMANIA. In Medical Jurisprudence. Insanity only upon a particular subject, and with a single delusion of the mind.

The most simple form of this disorder is that in which the patient has imbibed some single notion, contrary to common sense and to his own experience, and which seems, and no doubt really is, dependent on errors of sensation. It is supposed the mind in other respects retains its intellectual powers. In order to avoid any civil act done or criminal responsibility incurred, it must manifestly appear that the act in question was the effect of monomania. Cyclop. Pract. Med. Soundness and Unsoundness of Mind; Ray, Ins. § 203; 13 Ves. Ch. 89; 3 Brown, Ch. 444; 1 Add. Eccl. 283; 2 id. 92; Hagg. 18; 2 Add. 79, 94, 209; 5 Carr. & P. 168; Burrows, Ins. 484, 485. See DELUSION; MANIA; Trebuchet, Jur. de la Méd. 55–58.

MONOPOLY. In Commercial Law. The abuse of free commerce by which one or more individuals have procured the advantage of selling alone all of a particular kind of merchandise, to the detriment of the public.

Any combination among merchants to raise the price of merchandise to the injury of the public.

An institution or allowance by a grant from the sovereign power of a state, by commission, letters-patent, or otherwise, to any person or corporation, by which the exclusive right of buying, selling, making, working, or using any thing is given. Bacon, Abr.; Coke, 3d Inst. 181.

The constitutions of Maryland, North Carolina, and Tennessee declare that "monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free government, and ought not to be allowed." See COPYRIGHT; PATENT.

MONSTER. An animal which has a conformation contrary to the order of nature. 2 Dunglison, Hum. Phys. 422.

A monster, although born of a woman in lawful wedlock, cannot inherit. Those who have, however, the essential parts of the human form, and have merely some defect of conformation, are capable of inheriting, if otherwise qualified. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 246; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 366; Coke, Litt. 7, 8; Dig. 1. 5. 14; 1 Swift, Syst. 331; Fred. Code, pt. 1, b. 1, t. 4, § 4.

No living human birth, however much it may differ from human shape, can be lawfully destroyed. Traill, Med. Jur. 47. See Briand, Méd. Lég. pt. 1, c. 6, art. 2, § 3; 1 Foderé, Méd. Lég. §§ 402–405.

MONSTRANS DE DROIT (Fr. showing of right). A common-law process by which restitution of personal or real property is obtained from the crown by a subject. Chitty, Prerog. of Cr. 345; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 256. By this process, when the facts of the title of the crown are already on record, the facts on which the plaintiff relies, not inconsistent with such record, are shown, and judgment of the court prayed thereon. The judgment, if against the crown, is that of ouster le main, which vests possession in the subject without execution. Bacon, Abr. Prerogative (E); 1 And. 181; 5 Leigh, Va. 512; 12 Gratt. Va. 564.

MONSTRANS DE FAIT (Fr. showing of a deed). A profert. Bacon, Abr. Pleas (I 12, n. 1).

MONSTRAVERUNT, WRIT OF. In English Law. A writ which lies for the tenants of ancient demesne who hold by free charter, and not for those tenants who hold by copy of court-roll, or by the rod, according to the custom of the manor. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 31.

MONTES PIETATIS, MONTS DE PIETE. Institutions established by public authority for lending money upon pledge of goods.

In these establishments a fund is provided, with suitable warehouses and all necessary accommodations. They are managed by directors. When the money for which the goods pledged is not returned in proper time, the goods are sold to reimburse the institutions. They are found principally on the continent of Europe. With us, private persons, called pawnbrokers, perform this office,—sometimes with doubtful fidelity. See Bell, Inst. 5. 2. 2.

MONTH. A space of time variously computed, as it is applied to astronomical, civil or solar, or lunar months.

The astronomical month contains one-twelfth part of the time employed by the sun in going through the zodiac. In law, when a month simply is mentioned, it is never understood to mean an astronomical month.

The civil or solar month is that which agrees with the Gregorian calendar; and these months are known by the names of January, February, March, etc. They are composed of unequal portions of time. There are seven of thirty-one days each, four of thirty, and one which is sometimes composed of twenty-eight days, and in leap-years of twenty-nine.

The lunar month consists of twenty-eight days.

2. By the law of England, a month means ordinarily, in common contracts, as in leases, a lunar month. A contract, therefore, made for a lease of land for twelve months would mean a lease for forty-eight weeks only. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 141; 6 Coke, 62; 6 Term, 224; 1 Maule & S. 111; 1 Bingh. 307. A distinction has been made between "twelve months" and "a twelve-months:" the latter has been held to mean a year. 6 Coke, 61.

But in mercantile contracts a month simply signifies a calendar month: a promissory note to pay money in twelve months would, therefore, mean a promise to pay in one year, or twelve calendar months. Chitty, Bills, 406; 3 Brod. & B. 187; 1 Maule & S. 111; Story, Bills, § 143; Story, Partn. § 213; 2 Mass. 170; 4 id. 460; 6 Watts & S. Penn. 179; 1 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 99.

3. In general, when a statute speaks of a month, without adding "calendar," or other words showing a clear intention, it shall be intended a lunar month. Comyns, Dig. Anno (B); 4 Wend. N. Y. 512; 15 Johns. N. Y. 358. See 2 Cow. N. Y. 518, 605. In all legal proceedings, as in commitments, pleadings, etc., a month means four weeks. 3 Burr. 1455; 1 W. Blackst. 450; Dougl. 446, 463.

In Pennsylvania and Massachusetts, and perhaps some other states, 1 Hill, Abr. 118, n., a month mentioned generally in a statute has been construed to mean a calendar month. 2 Dall. Penn. 302; 4 id. 143; 4 Mass. 461; 4 Bibb, Ky. 105. In England, in the ecclesiastical law, months are computed by the calendar. 3 Burr. 1455; 1 Maule & S. 111.

4. In New York, it is enacted that whenever the term "month" or "months" is or shall be used in any statute, act, deed, verbal or written contract, or any public or private instrument whatever, it shall be construed to mean a calendar, and not a lunar, month, unless otherwise expressed. Rev. Stat. pt. 1, c. 19, tit. 1, § 4.

See, generally, 2 Sim. & S. Ch. 476; 2 Campb. 294; 1 Esp. 146; 6 Term, 224; 1 Maule & S. 111; 6 id. 227; 3 East, 407; 3 Brod. & B. 187; 2 A. K. Marsh. Ky. 245; 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 74; 4 Dall. Penn. 143; 4 Mass. 461.

MONUMENT. A thing intended to transmit to posterity the memory of some one A tomb where a dead body has been deposited.

In this sense it differs from a cenotaph, which is an empty tomb. Dig. 11. 7. 2. 6; 11. 7. 2. 42.

Coke says that the erecting of monuments in church, chancel, common chapel, or churchyard in convenient manner is lawful; for it is the last work of charity that can be done for the deceased, who whilst he lived was a lively temple of the Holy Ghost, with a reverend regard and Christian hope of a joyful resurrection.

2. The defacing of monuments is punishable by the common law, Year B. 9 Edw. IV. c. 14; and trespass may be maintained. 10 F. Moore, 494; 1 Cons. So. C. 172. An heir may bring an action against one that injures the monument of his ancestor. Coke, 3d Inst. 202; Gibs. 453. Although the fee of church or churchyard be in another, yet he cannot deface monuments. Coke, 3d Inst. 202. The fabric of a church, however, is not to be injured or deformed by the caprice of individuals, 1 Cons. So. C. 145; and a monument may be taken down if placed inconveniently. 1 Lee, Eccl. 640. A monument containing an improper inscription can be removed. 1 Curt. Eccl. 880.

3. Inscriptions on funeral monuments, especially in questions of pedigree, are admissible as original evidence. Those which are proved to have been made by or under the direction of a deceased relative are admitted as his declarations. But if they have been publicly exhibited, and are well known to the family, the publicity of them supplies the defect of proof in not showing that they were declarations of deceased members of the family; and they are admitted on the ground of tacit and common consent. It is presumed the relatives of the family would not permit an inscription without foundation to remain. Mural and other funereal inscriptions are, from necessity, provable by copies. Their value as evidence depends much on the authority under which they were set up, and the distance of time between their erection and the events they commemorate. See some remarkable mistakes of fact in such inscriptions mentioned in 1 Phillipps, Ev. 234, and note 4. See DECLARATIONS; HEARSAY.

MONUMENTS. Permanent landmarks established for the purpose of indicating boundaries.

2. Monuments may be either natural or artificial objects: as, rivers, known streams, springs, or marked trees. 6 Wheat. 582; 7 id. 10; 9 Cranch, 173; 6 Pet. 498; 1 Pet. C. C. 64; 3 Ohio, 284; 5 id. 534; 5 N. H. 524; 3 Dev. No. C. 75. Even posts set up at the corners, 5 Ohio, 534, and a clearing, 7 Cow. N. Y. 723, are considered as monuments. But see 3 Dev. No. C. 75.

3. When monuments are established, they must govern although neither courses nor distances nor computed contents correspond. 1 Cow. N. Y. 605; 5 id. 346; 6 id. 706; 7 id. 723; 2 Mass. 380; 6 id. 131; 3 Pick. Mass. 401; 5 id. 135; 3 Gill & J. Md. 142; 2 Harr. & J. Md. 260; 5 id. 163, 255; 1 Harr. & M'H. Md. 355; 2 id. 416; Wright, Ohio, 176; 5 Ohio, 534; Cooke, Tenn. 146; 4 Hen. & M. Va. 125; 1 Call, Va. 429; 3 id. 239; 11 Me. 325; 1 Hayw. No. C. 22; 3 Hawks, No. C. 91; 3 Murph. No. C. 88; 4 T. B. Monr. Ky. 32; 5 id. 175; 5 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 578; 6 Wheat. 582; 4 Wash. C. C. 15. See BOUNDARY.

MOORING. In Maritime Law. The securing of a vessel by a hawser or chain, or otherwise, to the shore, or to the bottom by a cable and anchor. The being "moored in safety," under a policy of insurance, is being moored in port, or at the usual place for landing and taking in cargo, free from any immediate impending peril insured against. 1 Phillipps, Ins. 968; 3 Johns. N. Y. 88; 11 id. 358; 2 Strange, 1243; 5 Mart. La. 637; 6 Mass. 313; Code de Comm. 152.

MOOT (from Sax. gemot, meeting together. Anc. Laws and Inst. of England).

In English Law. A term used in the inns of court, signifying the exercise of arguing imaginary cases, which young barristers and students used to perform at certain times, the better to be enabled by this practice to defend their clients' cases. Orig. Jur. 212.

To plead a mock cause. (Also spelled meet, from Sax. motain, to meet; the sense of debate being from meeting, encountering. Webster, Dict.) A moot question is one which has not been decided.

MOOT COURT. A court where moot questions are argued. Webster, Dict.

In law schools this is one of the methods of instruction; an undecided point of law is argued by students appointed as counsel on either side of the cause, one or more of the professors sitting as judge in presence of the school. The argument is conducted as in cases reserved for hearing before the full bench.

MOOT HILL. Hill of meeting (gemot), on which the Britons used to hold their courts, the judge sitting on the eminence, the parties, etc. on an elevated platform below. Encyc. Lond.

MORA. A moor, barren or unprofitable ground; marsh; a heath; a watery bog or moor. Coke, Litt. 5; Fleta, l. 2, c. 71. See IN MORA.

MORAL CERTAINTY. That degree of certainty which will justify a jury in grounding on it their verdict. It is only probability; but it is called certainty, because every sane man assents to it necessarily, from a habit produced by the necessity of acting. Bessaria, dei Delitti e delle Pena, c. 14. Nothing else but a strong presumption grounded on probable reasons, and which very seldom fails and deceives us. Puffendorff, Law of Nature, b. 1, c. 2, § 11. A reasonable and moral certainty; a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding and satisfies the reason and judgment of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. A certainty beyond a reasonable doubt. Shaw, C. J., Commonwealth vs. Webster, Bemis' rep. of the trial, 469, 470. Such a certainty "as convinces beyond all reasonable doubt." Parke, B., Best, Presumpt. 257, note; 6 Rich. Eq. So. C. 217.

MORAL INSANITY. In Medical Jurisprudence. A morbid perversion of the moral feelings, affections, inclinations, temper, habits, and moral dispositions, without any notable lesion of the intellect or knowing and reasoning faculties, and particularly without any maniacal hallucination. Prichard, art. Insanity, in Cyclopædia of Practical Medicine.

2. It is contended that some human beings exist who, in consequence of a deficiency in the moral organs, are as blind to the dictates of justice as others are deaf to melody. Combe, Moral Philosophy, Lect. 12.

3. In some, this species of malady is said to display itself in an irresistible propensity to commit murder; in others, to commit theft, or arson. Though most persons afflicted with this malady commit such crimes, there are others whose disease is manifest in nothing but irascibility. Annals de Hygiène, tom. i. p. 284. Many are subjected to melancholy and dejection, without any delusion or illusion. This, perhaps without full consideration, has been judicially declared to be a "groundless theory." The courts, and lawwriters, have not given it their full assent. 1 Chitty, Med. Jur. 352; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 553; Ray, Med. Jur. Prel. Views, § 23, p. 49.

MORAL OBLIGATION. A duty which one owes, and which he ought to perform, but which he is not legally bound to fulfil.

These obligations are of two kinds: 1st, those founded on a natural right: as, the obligation to be charitable, which can never be enforced by law. 2d, those which are supported by a good or valuable antecedent consideration: as, where a man owes a debt barred by the act of limitations, this cannot be recovered by law, though it subsists in morality and conscience; but if the debtor promise to pay it, the moral obligation is a sufficient consideration for the promise, and the creditor may maintain an action of assumpsit to recover the money. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 623. See CONSIDERATION.

MORATUR IN LEGE. He demurs in law. He rests on the pleadings of the case, and abides the judgment of the court.

MORE OR LESS. Words, in a conveyance of lands or contract to convey lands, importing that the quantity is uncertain and not warranted, and that no right of either party under the contract shall be affected by a deficiency or excess in the quantity. 17 Ves. Ch. 394; Powell, Pow. 397. So in contracts of sale generally. 2 Barnew. & Ad. 106.

2. In case of an executory contract, equity will enforce specific performance without changing the price, if the excess or deficiency is very small, 17 Ves. Ch. 394; Powell, Pow. 397; 24 Miss. 597; 13 Tex. 223; but not if the excess or deficiency is great, even though the price reserved be per acre. In 2 Barnew. & Ad. 106, it was held that an excess of fifty quarters over three hundred quarters of grain was not covered by the words "three hundred more or less," if it was not shown that so large an excess was in contemplation. 1 Esp. 229. But a deed adding words more or less to description of the property is not a sufficient fulfilment of a contract to convey the described property, when more or less was not in such original contract, if there is an actual deficiency. But after such a conveyance is made and a note given for the purchase-money, the note cannot be defended against on ground of deficiency. 2 Penn. St. 533; 9 Serg. & R. Penn. 80; 13 id. 143; 10 Johns. N. Y. 297; 4 Mass. 414.

3. In case of an executed contract, equity will not disturb it, unless there be a great deficiency, 2 Russ. Ch. 570; 1 Pet. C. C. 49, or excess, 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 312; 2 Johns. N. Y. 37; Ow. 133; 1 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 375, or actual misrepresentation without fraud, and there be a material excess or deficiency. 14 N. Y. 143.

Eighty-five feet, more or less, means eighty-five feet, unless the deed or situation of the land in some way controls it. 20 Pick. Mass. 62.

The words more or less will not cover a distinct lot. 24 Mo. 574. See CONSTRUCTION.

MORGANATIC MARRIAGE. A lawful and inseparable conjunction of a single man of noble and illustrious birth with a single woman of an inferior or plebeian station, upon this condition, that neither the wife nor children should partake of the title, arms, or dignity of the husband, nor succeed to his inheritance, but should have a certain allowance assigned to them by the morganatic contract.

This relation was frequently contracted during the middle ages; the marriage ceremony was regularly performed, the union was for life and indissoluble, and the children were considered legitimate, though they could not inherit. Fred. Code, b. 2, art. 3; Pothier, Du Mar. 1, c. 2, § 2; Shelford, Marr. & D. 10; Pruss. Code, art. 835.

MORT D'ANCESTOR. An ancient and now almost obsolete remedy in the English law. An assize of mort d'ancestor was a writ which was sued out where, after the decease of a man's ancestor, a stranger abated, and entered into the estate. Coke, Litt. 159. The remedy in such case is now to bring ejectment.

MORTGAGE. The conveyance of an estate or property by way of pledge for the security of debt, and to become void on payment of it. 4 Kent, Comm. 136.

An estate created by a conveyance absolute in its form, but intended to secure the performance of some act, such as the payment of money, and the like, by the grantor or some other person, and to become void if the act is performed agreeably to the terms prescribed at the time of making such conveyance. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 475.

Both real and personal property may be mortgaged, and in substantially the same manner, except that a mortgage being in its nature a transfer of title, the laws respecting the necessity of possession of personal property and the nature of instruments of transfer being different, require the transfer to be made differently in the two cases.

The nature of the estate is indicated by the etymology of its name, mort-gage,—the French translation of the vadium mortuum, that is, dormant or dead pledge, in contrast with vadium vivum, an active or living one. They were both, ordinarily, securities for the payment of money. In the one there was no life or active effect in the way of creating the means of its redemption by producing rents, because, ordinarily, the mortgagor continued to hold possession and receive these. In the other, the mortgagee took possession and received the rents towards his debt, whereby the estate worked out as it were its own redemption. Besides, in the one case, if the pledge is not redeemed, it is lost or dead as to the mortgagor; whereas in the other the pledge always survives to the mortgagor when it shall have accomplished its purposes. Coote, Mortg. 4; Coke, Litt. 205. In the case of Welsh mortgages, however, which are now disused, the mortgagee entered, taking the rents and profits by way of interest on the debt, and held the estate till the mortgagor paid the principal.

Mortgages are to be distinguished from sales with a contract for re-purchase. The distinction is important, 2 Call, Va. 428; 7 Watts, Penn. 401; but turns rather upon the evidence in each case than upon any general rule of distinction. 6 Blackf. Ind. 113; 15 Johns. N. Y. 205; 4 Pick. Mass. 349. And see 7 Cranch, 218; 12 How. 139; 3 Watts & S. Penn. 384; 6 Metc. Mass. 479; 3 Gray, Mass. 594; 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 243; 4 Den. N. Y. 493; 27 Mo. 113; 5 Ala. N. S. 698; 28 id. 226; 3 Tex. 119; 2 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 113; 3 id. 353; 2 Yerg. Tenn. 6; 4 Ind. 101; 3 Tex. 119; 10 Cal. 197; 37 Me. 543; 28 Miss. 328; 7 Ired. Eq. No. C. 13, 167; 2 Schoales & L. Ir. Ch. 393.

A mortgage differs from a pledge: the general property passes by a mortgage, whilst by a pledge only the possession or, at most, a special property passes. Possession is inseparable from the nature of a pledge, but is not necessary to a mortgage. 3 Mo. 516; 5 Johns. N. Y. 258; 10 id. 741; 12 id. 146; 2 Pick. Mass. 610; 2 N. H. 13; 5 Vt. 532; 26 Me. 499.

Mortgages were at common law held conveyances upon condition, and unless the condition was performed at the appointed time the estate became absolute; in equity, however, the debt was considered as the principal matter, and the failure to perform at the appointed time a matter merely requiring compensation by interest in the way of damages for the delay. This right to redeem became known as the equity of redemption, and has been limited by statute, a common period being three years. Courts of law have now adopted the doctrines of equity with respect to redemption, and in other respects to a considerable extent. See 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 477.

An equitable mortgage is one in which the mortgagor does not actually convey the property, but does some act by which he manifests his determination to bind the same as a security. See EQUITABLE MORTGAGE.

A legal mortgage is a conveyance of property intended by the parties at the time of making it to be a security for the performance of some prescribed act. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 479.

2. All kinds of property, real or personal, which are capable of an absolute sale, may be the subject of a mortgage: rights in remainder and reversion, franchises, and choses in action, may, therefore, be mortgaged. But a mere possibility or expectancy, as that of an heir, cannot. 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1012; 4 Kent, Comm. 144; 1 Powell, Mortg. 17, 23; 3 Mer. Ch. 667.

As to the form, such a mortgage must be in writing, when it is intended to convey the legal title. 1 Penn. 240. It is either in one single deed which contains the whole contract,—and which is the usual form,—or it is two separate instruments, the one containing an absolute conveyance and the other a defeasance, 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 189; 15 Johns. N. Y. 555; 3 Wend. N. Y. 208; 7 id. 248; 2 Me. 152; 11 id. 346; 12 Mass. 456; 7 Pick. Mass. 157; 3 Watts, Penn. 188; 6 id. 405; and generally, whenever it is proved that a conveyance was made for purposes of security, equity regards and treats it as a mortgage, and attaches thereto its incidents. 9 Wheat. 489; 1 How. 118; 12 id. 139; 2 Des. Eq. So. C. 564; 1 Hard. Ky. 6; 2 Cow. N. Y. 246; 9 N. Y. 416; 25 Vt. 273; 1 Md. Ch. Dec. 536; 3 id. 508; 1 Murph. No. C. 116; 10 Yerg. Tenn. 376; 3 J. J. Marsh. In law, the defeasance must be of as high a nature as the conveyance to be defeated. 1 N. H. 39; 13 Pick. Mass. 411; 22 id. 526; 43 Me. 206; 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 191; 7 Watts, Penn. 361. The rule as to the admission of parol evidence to establish the character of a conveyance as a mortgage varies in the different states. See 26 Ala. N. S. 312; 29 id. 254; 7 Ark. 505; 18 id. 34; 8 Cal. 424; 9 id. 538; 8 Conn. 186; 15 Ill. 519, 528; 4 Blackf. Ind. 67; 2 B. Monr. Ky. 72; 9 Dan. Ky. 109; 36 Me. 562; 43 id. 206; 6 Harr. & J. 3. The mortgagor has, technically speaking, in law a mere tenancy, subject to the right of the mortgagee to enter immediately unless restrained by his agreement to the contrary. See 34 Me. 187; 9 Serg. & R. Penn. 302; 1 Pick. Mass. 87; 19 Johns. N. Y. 325; 2 Conn. 1; 4 Ired. No. C. 122; 5 Bingh. 421; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 518. In equity, however, the mortgage is held a mere security for the debt, and only a chattel interest; and until a decree of foreclosure the mortgagor is regarded as the real owner. 2 Jac. & W. Ch. 190; 4 Johns. N. Y. 41; 11 id. 534; 4 Conn. 235; 9 Serg. & R. Penn. 302; 5 Harr. & J. Md. 312; 3 Pick. Mass. 484.

The mortgagee, at law, is the owner of the land, subject, however, to a defeat of title by performance of the condition, with a right to enter at any time. See 21 N. H. 460; 9 Conn. 216; 19 Me. 53; 2 Den. N. Y. 170. He is, however, accountable for the profits before foreclosure. 31 Me. 104; 32 id. 97; 5 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 1; 11 id. 436; 24 Conn. 1; 1 Halst. Ch. N. J. 346; 2 id. 548; 2 Cal. 387; 6 Fla. 1; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 577. The different states fluctuate somewhat between the rules of equity and those of law, or, rather, have engrafted the equitable rules upon the legal to an unequal extent. 31 Penn. St. 295; 10 Ga. 65; 27 Barb. N. Y. 503; 3 Mich. 581; 3 Greene, Iowa, 87; 4 Iowa, 571; 4 M'Cord, So. C. 336; 9 Cal. 123, 365; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 517 et seq.

4. Assignment of mortgages must be made in accordance with the requirements of the Statute of Frauds. 15 Mass. 233; 17 id. 419; 6 Gray, Mass. 152; 32 Me. 197; 33 id. 196; 18 Penn. St. 394; 7 Blackf. Ind. 210; 5 Den. N. Y. 187; 3 Ohio St. 471; 27 N. H. 300; 5 Halst. Ch. N. J. 156; 21 Ala. N. S. 497; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 520.

Foreclosure may result from occupation by the mortgagee for twenty years, or a period equal to the length of time necessary to bar a writ of entry, 2 Metc. Mass. 26; by bill for strict foreclosure to obtain possession, which is the common practice in England and in some of the United States, a time being generally allowed for redemption before the decree is made absolute, see Williams, Real Prop. 356; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 600, for a full abstract of the laws of the various states; by bill to obtain a decree for sale; by entry and holding possession for a term of years fixed by law; and by a sale under a power of attorney for the purpose, inserted in the original conveyance.

MORTGAGEE. He to whom a mortgage is made. See MORTGAGE.

MORTGAGOR. He who makes a mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

MORTIFICATION. In Scotch Law. A term nearly synonymous with mortmain.

MORTMAIN. A term applied to denote the possession of lands or tenements by any corporation, sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal. These purchases having been chiefly made by religious houses, in consequence of which lands became perpetually inherent in one dead hand, this has occasioned the general appellation of mortmain to be applied to such alienations. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 268; Coke, Litt. 2 b; Erskine, Inst. 2. 4. 10; Barrington, Stat. 27, 97. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 1137; Shelford, Mortm.

MORTUARY. In Ecclesiastical Law. A burial-place. A kind of ecclesiastical heriot, being a customary gift of the second best living animal belonging to the deceased, claimed by and due to the minister in many parishes, on the death of his parishioners, whether buried in the church-yard or not. These mortuaries, like lay heriots, were originally voluntary bequests to the church in lieu of tithes or ecclesiastical dues neglected in lifetime. See SOULSCOT. They were reduced to a certain amount by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 6. They were sometimes payable to the lord. Paroch. Antiq. 470. The mortuary seems to have been carried to church with the corpse, and was therefore sometimes called corpse-present. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 563. Anciently, a parishioner could not make a valid will without an assignment of a sufficient mortuary or gift to the church. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 427.

MORTUUM VADIUM. A mortgage.

MORTUUS (Lat.). Dead. Ainsworth, Lex. So in sheriff's return mortuus est, he is dead. O. Bridgm. 469; Brooke, Abr. Retorne de Briefe, pl. 125; 19 Viner, Abr. Return, lib. 2, pl. 12.

MOTHER. A woman who has borne a child.

2. It is generally the duty of a mother to support her child, when she is left a widow, until he becomes of age or is able to maintain himself, 8 Watts, Penn. 366; 16 Mass. 135; 3 N. H. 29; 4 id. 95; and even after he becomes of age, if he be chargeable to the public, she may, perhaps in all the states, be compelled, when she has sufficient means, to support him. But when the child has property sufficient for his support, she is not, even during his minority, obliged to maintain him, 1 Brown, Ch. 387; 2 Mass. 415; 4 id. 97; but will be entitled to an allowance out of the income of his estate, and, if need be, out of the principal, for his maintenance. 2 Fla. 36; 2 Atk. Ch. 447; 5 Ves. Ch. 194; 7 id. 403; 3 Dutch. N. J. 388. During the life of the father she is not bound to support her child, though she have property settled to her separate use and the father be destitute. 4 Clark & F. Hou. L. 323; 11 Bligh. N. S. 62.

3. When the father dies without leaving a testamentary guardian at common law, the mother is entitled to be the guardian of the person and estate of the infant until he arrives at fourteen years, when he is able to choose a guardian. Littleton, § 123; 3 Coke, 38; Coke, Litt. 84 b; 2 Atk. Ch. 14; Comyns, Dig. Feme (B, D, E); 7 Ves. Ch. 348. See 10 Mass. 135, 140; 2 id. 415; Harp. So. C. 9; 1 Root, Conn. 487; 22 Barb. N. Y. 178; 2 Dutch. N. J. 388; 2 Green, Ch. N. J. 221; 3 Dev. & B. No. C. 325; 9 Ala. 197. The right of the widowed mother to the earnings and services of her minor child does not appear to have been precisely determined; but it is by no means so absolute as that of the father. 31 Me. 240; 15 N. H. 486; 4 Binn. Penn. 487; 3 Hill, N. Y. 400; 14 Ala. 123; 15 Mass. 272; 16 id. 28; Harp. So. C. 9.

4. In Pennsylvania, when the father dies without leaving a testamentary guardian, the orphans' court will appoint a guardian until the infant shall attain his fourteenth year. During the joint lives of the parents, the father has the only control and custody of the children, except when in special cases, as when they are of tender years, or when the habits of the father render him an unsuitable guardian, the mother is allowed to have possession of them. 6 Rich. Eq. So. C. 344; 1 P. Browne, Penn. 143; 3 Binn. Penn. 320; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 174; 13 Johns. N. Y. 418; 2 Phill. 786; 2 Coll. 661.

5. The mother of a bastard child, as natural guardian, has a right to the custody and control of such child, even as against the putative father, and is bound to maintain it, 2 Mass. 109; 12 id. 387, 433; 2 Johns. N. Y. 375; 15 id. 208; 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 255; but after her death the court will, in its discretion, deliver such child to the father in opposition to the claims of the maternal grandfather. 1 Ashm. Penn. 55; Strange, 1162. See BASTARD.

MOTHER-IN-LAW. The mother of one's wife or of one's husband.

MOTION. In Practice. An application to a court by one of the parties in a cause, or his counsel, in order to obtain some rule or order of court which he thinks becomes necessary in the progress of the cause, or to get relieved in a summary manner from some matter which would work injustice.

When the motion is made on some matter of fact, it must be supported by an affidavit that such facts are true; and for this purpose the party's affidavit will be received, though it cannot be read on the hearing. 1 Binn. Penn. 145; 2 Yeates, Penn. 546. See 3 Blackstone, Comm. 305; 2 Sellon, Pract. 356; 15 Viner, Abr. 495; Graham, Pract. 542; Smith, Chanc. Pract. Index.

MOTIVE. The inducement, cause, or reason why a thing is done.

See CAUSE; CONSIDERATION; MISTAKE; WITNESS.

MOURNING. The apparel worn at funerals, and for a time afterwards, in order to manifest grief for the death of some one, and to honor his memory.

The expenses paid for such apparel.

It has been held, in England, that a demand for mourning furnished to the widow and family of the testator is not a funeral expense. 2 Carr. & P. 207. See 14 Ves. Ch. 346; 1 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 364. See 2 Bell, Comm. 156.

MOVABLES. Such subjects of property as attend a man's person wherever he goes, in contradistinction to things immovable.

2. Things movable by their nature are such as may be carried from one place to another, whether they move themselves, as cattle, or cannot be removed without an extraneous power, as inanimate things. So in the civil law mobilia; but this term did not properly include living movables, which were termed moventia. Calvinus, Lex. But these words, mobilia and moventia, are also used synonymously, and in the general sense of "movables." Ibid. Movables are further distinguished into such as are in possession, or which are in the power of the owner, as a horse in actual use, a piece of furniture in a man's own house, or such as are in the possession of another, and can only be recovered by action, which are therefore said to be in action, as a debt. See PERSONAL PROPERTY; Fonblanque, Eq. Index; Powell, Mortg. Index; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 384; La. Civ. Code, art. 464–472; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 462; 2 Stephen, Comm. 67; Sheppard, Touchst. 447; 1 P. Will. Ch. 267.

3. In a will, "movables" is used in its largest sense, but will not pass growing crop, nor building-materials on ground. 2 Williams, Exec. 1014; 3 A. K. Marsh. Ky. 123; 1 Yeates, Penn. 101; 2 Dall. Penn. 142.

In Scotch Law. Every right which a man can hold which is not heritable: opposed to heritage. Bell, Dict.

MULATTO. A person born of one white and one black parent. 7 Mass. 88; 2 Bail. So. C. 558.

MULCT. A fine imposed on the conviction of an offence.

An imposition laid on ships or goods by a company of trade for the maintenance of consuls and the like. It is obsolete in the latter sense, and but seldom used in the former.

MULIER. Of ancient time, mulier was taken for a wife, as it is commonly used for a woman, and sometimes for a widow; but it has been held that a virgin is included under the name mulier. Coke, Litt. 170, 243; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 248.

The term is used always in contradistinction to a bastard, mulier being always legitimate, Coke, Litt. 243, and seems to be a word corrupted from melior, or the French meilleur, signifying lawful issue born in wedlock. But by Glanville, lawful issue are said to be mulier, not from melior, but because begotten à muliere, and not ex concubinâ, for he calls such issue filios mulieratos, opposing them to bastards. Glanville, lib. 7, c. 1. If the said lands "should, according to the queen's lawes, descend to the right heire, then in right it ought to descend to him, as next heire being mulierlie borne, and the other not so borne." Holinshed, Chron. of Ireland, an. 1558.

MULTIFARIOUSNESS. In Equity Pleading. The demand in one bill of several matters of a distinct and independent nature against several defendants. Cooper, Eq. Plead. 182; 18 Ves. Ch. 80; 2 Mas. C. C. 201; 4 Cow. N. Y. 682; 2 Gray, Mass. 467.

The uniting in one bill against a single defendant several matters perfectly distinct and unconnected. This latter is more properly called misjoinder, which title see.

The subject admits of no general rules, but the courts seem to consider the circumstances of each case with reference to avoiding on one hand a multiplicity of suits, and on the other inconvenience and hardship to the defendants from being obliged to answer matters with which they have, in great part, no connection, and the complication and confusion of evidence. 1 Mylne & C. Ch. 618; 5 Sim. Ch. 288; 3 Stor. C. C. 25; 2 Gray, Mass. 471; Story, Eq. Plead. §§ 274, 530. It is to be taken advantage of by demurrer, 2 Anstr. 469, or by plea and answer previous to a hearing, Story, Eq. Plead. 530, n., or by the court of its own accord at any time. 1 Mylne & K. 546; 3 How. 412; 5 id. 127. See, generally, Story, Eq. Plead. §§ 274–290, 530–540; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4243.

MULTIPLE POINDING. In Scotch Law. Double distress: a name given to an action which may be brought by a person in possession of goods claimed by different persons pretending a right thereto, calling the claimants and all others to settle their claims, so that the party who sues may be liable only "in once and single payment." Bell, Dict.; 2 Bell, Comm. 299; Stair, Inst. 3. 1. 39.

MULTITUDE. The meaning of this word is not very certain. By some it is said that to make a multitude there must be ten persons at least, while others contend that the law has not fixed any number. Coke, Litt. 257.

MULTURE. In Scotch Law. The quantity of grain or meal payable to the proprietor of the mill, or to the multurer, his tacksman, for manufacturing the corns. Erskine, Inst. 2. 9. 19.

MUNERA. The name given to grants made in the early feudal ages, which were merely tenancies at will or during the pleasure of the grantor. Dalrymple, Feud. 198, 199; Wright, Ten. 19.

MUNICEPS (Lat. from munus, office, and capere, to take). In Roman Law. Eligible to office.

A freeman born in a municipality or town other than Rome, who had come to Rome, and though a Roman citizen, yet was looked down upon as a provincial, and not allowed to hold the higher offices (dignitates.)

The inhabitants of a municipality entitled to hold municipal offices. Voc. Jur. Utr.; Calvinus, Lex.

MUNICIPAL. Strictly, this word applies only to what belongs to a city.

Among the Romans, cities were called municipia: these cities voluntarily joined the Roman republic in relation to their sovereignty only, retaining their laws, their liberties, and their magistrates, who were thence called municipal magistrates. With us this word has a more extensive meaning: for example, we call municipal law not the law of a city only, but the law of the state. 1 Blackstone, Comm. Municipal is used in contradistinction to international: thus, we say, an offence against the law of nations is an international offence, but one committed against a particular state or separate community is a municipal offence.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. A public corporation, created by government for political purposes, and having subordinate and local powers of legislation: e.g. a county, town, city, etc. 2 Kent, Comm. 275; Angell & A. Corp. 9, 29; 1 Baldw. C. C. 222. An incorporation of persons, inhabitants of a particular place, or connected with a particular district, enabling them to conduct its local civil government. Glover, Mun. Corp. 1.

MUNICIPAL LAW. In contradistinction to international law, is the system of law proper to any single nation or state. It is the rule or law by which a particular district, community, or nation is governed. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 44.

Municipal law contrasts with international law, in that it is a system of law proper to a single nation, state, or community. See MUNICIPAL LAW. In any one state the municipal law of another state is foreign law. See FOREIGN LAW. A conflict of laws arises where a case arising in one state involves foreign persons or interests, and the foreign and the domestic law do not agree as to the proper rule to be applied. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

The various provinces of municipal law are characterized according to the subjects with which they respectively treat: as, criminal or penal law, civil law, military law, and the like. Constitutional law, commercial law, parliamentary law, and the like, are departments of the general province of civil law, as distinguished from criminal and military law.

MUNICIPALITY. The body of officers, taken collectively, belonging to a city, who are appointed to manage its affairs and defend its interests.

MUNIMENTS. The instruments of writing and written evidences which the owner of lands, possessions, or inheritances has, by which he is enabled to defend the title of his estate. Termes de la Ley; Coke, 3d Inst. 170.

MUNUS. A gift; an office; a benefice, or feud. A gladiatorial show or spectacle. Calvinus, Lex.; DuCange.

MURAGE. A toll formerly levied in England for repairing or building public walls.

MURAL MONUMENTS. Monuments made in walls.

Owing to the difficulty or impossibility of removing them, secondary evidence may be given of inscriptions on walls, fixed tables, gravestones, and the like. 2 Stark. 274.

MURDER. In Criminal Law. The wilful killing of any subject whatever, with malice aforethought, whether the person slain shall be an Englishman or a foreigner. Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 13, s. 3. Russell says, the killing of any person under the king's peace, with malice prepense or aforethought, either express or implied by law. 1 Russell, Crimes, 421; 5 Cush. Mass. 304. When a person of sound mind and discretion unlawfully killeth any reasonable creature in being, and under the king's peace, with malice aforethought, either express or implied. Coke, 3d Inst. 47.

This latter definition, which has been adopted by Blackstone, 4 Comm. 195; Chitty, 2 Crim. Law, 724, and others, has been severely criticized. What, it has been asked, are sound memory and understanding? What has soundness of memory to do with the act? be it ever so imperfect, how does it affect the guilt? If discretion is necessary, can the crime ever be committed? for is it not the highest indiscretion in a man to take the life of another, and thereby expose his own? If the person killed be an idiot or a new-born infant, is he a reasonable creature? Who is in the king's peace? What is malice afterthought? Can there be any malice aforethought? Livingston, Pen. Law, 186. It is, however, apparent that some of the criticisms are merely verbal, and others are answered by the construction given in the various cases to the requirements of the definition. See, especially, 5 Cush. Mass. 304.

2. According to Coke's definition, there must be, first, sound mind and memory in the agent. By this is understood there must be a will and legal discretion. Second, an actual killing; but it is not necessary that it should be caused by direct violence: it is sufficient if the acts done apparently endanger life, and eventually prove fatal. Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 31, s. 4; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 431; 1 Ashm. Penn. 289; 9 Carr. & P. 356; 2 Palm. 545. Third, the party killed must have been a reasonable being, alive and in the king's peace. To constitute a birth, so as to make the killing of a child murder, the whole body must be detached from that of the mother; but if it has come wholly forth, but is still connected by the umbilical cord, such killing will be murder. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1722, note. Fœticide would not be such a killing: he must have been in rerum naturâ. Fourth, malice, either express or implied. It is this circumstance which distinguishes murder from every description of homicide. See MALICE.

3. In some of the states, by legislative enactments, murder has been divided into degrees. In Pennsylvania, the act of April 22, 1794, 3 Smith, Laws, 186, makes "all murder which shall be perpetrated by means of poison, or by lying in wait, or by any other kind of wilful, deliberate, and premeditated killing, or which shall be committed in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate any arson, rape, robbery, or burglary, shall be deemed murder of the first degree; and all other kinds of murder shall be deemed murder of the second degree; and the jury before whom any person indicted for murder shall be tried shall, if they find the person guilty thereof, ascertain in their verdict whether it be murder of the first or second degree; but if such person shall be convicted by confession, the court shall proceed, by examination of witnesses, to determine the degree of the crime, and give sentence accordingly." Many decisions have been made under this act, to which the reader is referred. See Wharton, Crim. Law.

Similar enactments have been made in Massachusetts, Tennessee, and Virginia. 3 Yerg. Tenn. 283; 5 id. 340; 6 Rand. Va. 721. See, generally, Bishop, Gabbett, Russell, Wharton, Crim. Law; Roscoe, Crim. Ev.; Archbold, Crim. Pract.; Hawkins, Hale, Pleas of the Crown.

In Pleading. In an indictment for murder, it must be charged that the prisoner "did kill and murder" the deceased; and unless the word murder be introduced into the charge, the indictment will be taken to charge manslaughter only. Foster, Crim. Law, 424; Yelv. 205; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, *243, and the authorities and cases there cited.

MURDRUM. In Old English Law. During the times of the Danes, and afterwards till the reign of Edward III., murdrum was the killing of a man in a secret manner; and in that it differed from simple homicide.

When a man was thus killed, and he was unknown, by the laws of Canute he was presumed to be a Dane, and the vill was compelled to pay forty marks for his death. After the conquest, a similar law was made in favor of Frenchmen, which was abolished by 3 Edw. III.

The fine formerly imposed in England upon a person who had committed homicide per infortunium or se defendendo. Prin. Pen. Law, 219, note r.

MUSICAL COMPOSITION. The act of congress of February 3, 1831, authorizes the granting of a copyright for a musical composition. A question was formerly agitated whether a composition published on a single sheet of paper was to be considered a book; and it was decided in the affirmative. 2 Campb. 28, n.; 11 East, 244. See COPYRIGHT.

TO MUSTER. To collect together and exhibit soldiers and their arms. To employ recruits, and put their names down in a book to enrol them.

MUSTER-ROLL. A written document containing the names, ages, quality, place of residence, and, above all, place of birth, of every person of the ship's company. It is of great use in ascertaining the ship's neutrality. Marshall, Ins. b. 1, c. 9, s. 6, p. 407; Jacobson, Sea Laws, 161; 2 Wash. C. C. 201.

MUSTIRO. A name given to the issue of an Indian and a negro. Dudl. So. C. 174.

MUTATION. In French Law. This term is synonymous with change, and is particularly applied to designate the change which takes place in the property of a thing in its transmission from one person to another. Permutation therefore happens when the owner of the thing sells, exchanges, or gives it. It is nearly synonymous with transfer. Merlin, Répert.

MUTATION OF LIBEL. In Practice. An amendment allowed to a libel, by which there is an alteration of the substance of the libel, as by propounding a new cause of action, or asking one thing instead of another. Dunlap, Adm. Pr. 213; Law, Eccl. Law, 165–167; 1 Paine, C. C. 435; 1 Gall. C. C. 123; 1 Wheat. 261.

MUTATIS MUTANDIS (Lat.). The necessary changes. This is a phrase of frequent practical occurrence, meaning that matters or things are generally the same, but to be altered when necessary, as to names, offices, and the like.

MUTE (mutus). When a prisoner upon his arraignment totally refuses to answer, insists upon mere frivolous pretences, or refuses to put himself upon the country, after pleading not guilty, he is said to stand mute.

In the case of the United States vs. Hare et al., Circuit Court, Maryland Dist. May sess. 1818, the prisoner standing mute was considered as if he had pleaded not guilty. The act of congress of March 3, 1825, 3 Story, U. S. Laws, 2002, has since provided as follows: § 14, That if any person, upon his or her arraignment upon any indictment before any court of the United States for any offence not capital, shall stand mute, or will not answer or plead to such indictment, the court shall, notwithstanding, proceed to the trial of the person so standing mute, or refusing to answer or plead, as if he or she had pleaded not guilty, and, upon a verdict being returned by the jury, may proceed to render judgment accordingly. A similar provision is to be found in the laws of Pennsylvania and New York. 2 Rev. Stat. 730.

In former times, in England, the terrible punishment or sentence of penance or peine (probably a corrupted abbreviation of prisone) fort et dure was inflicted where a prisoner would not plead, and stood obstinately mute. This judgment of penance for standing mute was as follows: that the prisoner be remanded to the prison from whence he came, and put into a low, dark chamber, and there be laid on his back, on the bare floor, naked,—unless where decency forbids; that there be placed upon his body as great a weight of iron as he could bear; and, more, that he have no sustenance, save only on the first day three morsels of the worst bread, and on the second day three draughts of standing water that should be nearest to the prison-door; and in this situation this should be alternately his daily diet till he died or (as anciently the judgment ran) till he answered. Britton,

c. 4, 22; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 34, § 33. See PEINE FORTE ET DURE.

MUTILATION. In Criminal Law. The depriving a man of the use of any of those limbs which may be useful to him in fight, the loss of which amounts to mayhem. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 130.

MUTINY. In Criminal Law. The unlawful resistance of a superior officer, or the raising of commotions and disturbances on board of a ship against the authority of its commander, or in the army in opposition to the authority of the officers; a sedition; a revolt.

2. By the act for establishing rules and articles for the government of the armies of the United States, it is enacted as follows: Article 7. Any officer or soldier, who shall begin, excite, or cause, or join in, any mutiny or sedition in any troop or company in the service of the United States, or in any party, post, detachment, or guard, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as by a court-martial shall be inflicted. Article 8. Any officer, non-commissioned officer, or soldier who, being present at any mutiny or sedition, does not use his utmost endeavors to suppress the same, or, coming to the knowledge of any intended mutiny, does not without delay give information thereof to his commanding officer, shall be punished by the sentence of a court-martial, with death, or otherwise, according to the nature of his offence.

3. And by the act for the better government of the navy of the United States, it is enacted as follows: Article 13. If any person in the navy shall make or attempt to make any mutinous assembly, he shall, on conviction thereof by a court-martial, suffer death; and if any person as aforesaid shall utter any seditious or mutinous words, or shall conceal or connive at any mutinous or seditious practices, or shall treat with contempt his superior, being in the execution of his office, or, being witness to any mutiny or sedition, shall not do his utmost to suppress it, he shall be punished at the discretion of a court-martial. See 2 Strange, 1264; 2 U. S. Stat. at Large, 359.

4. Mutiny, revolt, and the endeavor to make a revolt or mutiny, on board merchant-vessels, are made criminal, and the punishment provided for, by sec. 8, Act of 30 April, 1790, 1 U. S. Stat. at Large, 113, and the 1st & 2d sections of the Act of 3d March, 1835. 4 id. 775; 2 Curt. C. C. Rep. 225; 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 306; 2 Sumn. C. C. 582.

MUTINY ACT. In English Law. A statute, annually passed, to punish mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters. It was first passed 12th of April, 1689. See 22 Vict. cc. 4, 5. The passage of this bill is the only provision for the payment of the army, and, like our appropriation bills, it must be passed or the wheels of government will be stopped. There is a similar act with regard to the navy. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 416, 417, n.

MUTUAL CREDITS. Credits given by two persons mutually, i.e. each giving credit to the other. It is a more extensive phrase than mutual debts. Thus, the sum credited by one may be due at once, that by the other payable in futuro: yet the credits are mutual, though the transaction would not come within the meaning of mutual debts. 1 Atk. Ch. 230; 7 Term, 378. And it is not necessary that there should be intent to trust each other: thus, where an acceptance of A came into hands of B, who bought goods of A, not knowing the acceptance to be in B's hands, it was held a mutual credit. 3 Term, 507, n.; 4 id. 211; 3 Ves. Ch. 65; 8 Taunt. 156, 499; 1 Holt, 408; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 179; 26 Barb. N. Y. 310; 4 Gray, Mass. 284.

MUTUAL PROMISES. Promises simultaneously made by two parties to each other, each promise being the consideration of the other. Hob. 88; 14 Mees. & W. Exch. 855; Addison, Contr. 22. If one of the promises be voidable, it will yet be good consideration, but not if void. Story, Contr. § 81; 2 Stephen, Comm. 114.

MUTUALITY. Reciprocity; an acting in return. Webster, Dict.; Addison, Contr. 622.

MUTUARY. A person who borrows personal chattels to be consumed by him and returned to the lender in kind; the person who receives the benefit arising from the contract of mutuum. Story, Bailm. § 47.

MUTUUM. A loan of personal chattels to be consumed by the borrower and to be returned to the lender in kind and quantity: as, a loan of corn, wine, or money which are to be used or consumed, and are to be replaced by other corn, wine, or money. Story, Bailm. § 228. See LOAN FOR USE.

MYSTERY (said to be derived from the French mestier, now written métier, a trade). A trade, art, or occupation. Coke, 2d Inst. 668.

Masters frequently bind themselves in the indentures with their apprentices to teach them their art, trade, and mystery. See Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 23, s. 11.

MYSTIC TESTAMENT. A will under seal. La. Civ. Code, art. 1567; 5 Mart. La 182; 5 La. 396; 10 id. 328; 15 id. 88.

N.

NAIL. A measure of length, equal to two inches and a quarter. See MEASURE.

NAKED. This word is used in a metaphorical sense to denote that a thing is not complete, and for want of some quality it is either without power or it possesses a limited power. A naked contract is one made without consideration, and for that reason it is void; a naked authority is one given without any right in the agent, and wholly for the benefit of the principal. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1302. See NUDUM PACTUM.

NAME. One or more words used to distinguish a particular individual: as, Socrates, Benjamin Franklin.

2. Names are Christian, as Benjamin, or surnames, as Franklin. One Christian name only is recognized in law, 1 Ld. Raym. 562; Bacon, Abr. Misnomer (A); though two or more names usually kept separate, as John and Peter, may undoubtedly be compounded, so as to form in contemplation of law but one. 5 Term, 195. A letter put between the Christian and surname as an abbreviation of a part of the Christian name, as John B. Peterson, is no part of either. 4 Watts, Penn. 329; 5 Johns. N. Y. 84; 14 Pet. 322; 3 id. 7; 2 Cow. N. Y. 463; 17 Ala. N. S. 179; 10 Miss. 391; Coke, Litt. 3 a; 1 Ld. Raym. 562; Viner, Abr. Misnomer (C 6, pl. 5, 6); Comyns, Dig. Indictment (G 1, note u); Willes, 654; Bacon, Abr. Misnomer and Addition; 3 Chitty, Pract. 164, 173. But see 7 Watts & S. Penn. 406; 19 Ohio, 423; 1 Swan, Tenn. 162. As to the use of junior and senior, see 1 Pick. Mass. 388; 2 Caines, N. Y. 165; 9 N. H. 519; 22 Me. 171; 8 Conn. 280.

3. In general, a corporation must contract and sue, and be sued, by its corporate name. 8 Johns. N. Y. 295; 14 id. 238; 19 id. 300; 4 Rand. Va. 359. Yet a slight alteration in stating the name is unimportant if there be no possibility of mistaking the identity of the corporation suing. 12 La. 444. See 20 Me. 41; 2 Va. Cas. 362; 16 Mass. 141; 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 389.

The real name of a party to be arrested must be inserted in the warrant, if known, 8 East, 328; 6 Cow. N. Y. 456; 9 Wend. N. Y. 220; if unknown, some description must be given, 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 39, 40, with the reason for the omission. 1 Mood. & M. 281.

4. As to mistakes in devises, see LEGACY. As to the use of names having the same sound, see IDEM SONANS. As to the effect of using a name having the same derivation, see 2 Rolle, Abr. 135; 1 Wash. C. C. 285. As to the effect of a change of name, see 1 Roper, Leg. 102; 3 Maule & S. 453; 10 Mass. 78.

When a person uses a name in making a contract under seal, he will not be permitted to say that it is not his name: as, if he sign and seal a bond "A and B" (being his own and his partner's name), and he had no authority from his partner to make such a deed, he cannot deny that his name is A and B. 1 T. Raym. 2; 1 Salk. 214. And if a man describes himself in the body of a deed by the name of James, and signs it John, he cannot, on being sued by the latter name, plead that his name is James. 3 Taunt. 505; Croke Eliz. 897, n. a. See 3 Perr. & D. 271; 11 Ad. & E. 594.

NAMIUM. An old word which signifies the taking or distraining another person's movable goods. Coke, 2d Inst. 140; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 149. A distress. Dalrymple, Feud. Pr. 113.

NARR (an abbreviation of the word narratio). A declaration in a cause.

NARRATOR. A pleader who draws narrs. Serviens narrator, a serjeant-at-law. Fleta, l. 2, c. 37. Obsolete.

NARROW SEAS. In English Law Those seas which adjoin the coast of England. Bacon, Abr. Prerogative (B 3).

NATALE. The state or condition of a man acquired by birth.

NATION. An independent body politic. A society of men united together for the purpose of promoting their mutual safety and advantage by the joint efforts of their combined strength.

But every combination of men who govern themselves independently of all others will not be considered a nation: a body of pirates, for example, who govern themselves, are not a nation. To constitute a nation, another ingredient is required. The body thus formed must respect other nations in general, and each of their members in particular. Such a society has her affairs and her interests; she deliberates and takes resolutions in common,—thus becoming a moral person, who possesses an understanding and will peculiar to herself, and is susceptible of obligations and rights. Vattel, Prelim. §§ 1, 2; 5 Pet. 52.

It belongs to the government to declare whether they will consider a colony which has thrown off the yoke of the mother-country as an independent state; and until the government have decided on the question, courts of justice are bound to consider the ancient state of things as remaining unchanged. 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 543; 13 Johns. N. Y. 141, 561. See 5 Pet. 1; 1 Kent, Comm. 21.

NATIONAL DOMAIN. See PUBLIC DOMAIN.

NATIONALITY. Character, status, or condition with reference to the rights and duties of a person as a member of some one state or nation rather than another.

The term is in frequent use with regard to ships. See, generally, CITIZEN; DENIZEN; DOMICIL; NATURALIZATION.

NATIVE, NATIVE CITIZEN. A natural-born subject. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 366. A person born within the jurisdiction of the United States, whether after declaration of independence or before, if he did not withdraw before the adoption of the constitution; or the child of a citizen born abroad, if his parents have ever resided here; or the child of an alien born abroad, if he be in the country at the time his father is naturalized. 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 433; Act of Congr. of Feb. 10, 1855; 2 Kent, Comm. 9th ed. 38 et seq.

NATURAL AFFECTION. The affection which a husband, a father, a brother, or other near relative naturally feels towards those who are so nearly allied to him, sometimes supplies the place of a valuable consideration in contracts; and natural affection is a good consideration in a deed. See BARGAIN AND SALE; COVENANT TO STAND SEIZED.

NATURAL CHILDREN. Bastards; children born out of lawful wedlock.

In Civil Law. Children by procreation, as distinguished from children by adoption.

In Louisiana. Illegitimate children who have been adopted by the father. La. Civ. Code, art. 220.

NATURAL DAY. That space of time included between the rising and the setting of the sun. See DAY.

NATURAL EQUITY. That which is founded in natural justice, in honesty and right, and which arises ex æquo et bono.

It corresponds precisely with the definition of justice or natural law, which is a constant and perpetual will to give to every man what is his. This kind of equity embraces so wide a range that human tribunals have never attempted to enforce it. Every code of laws has left many matters of natural justice or equity wholly unprovided for, from the difficulty of framing general rules to meet them, from the almost impossibility of enforcing them, and from the doubtful nature of the policy of attempting to give a legal sanction to duties of imperfect obligation, such as charity, gratitude, or kindness. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3720.

NATURAL FOOL. An idiot; one born without the reasoning powers or a capacity to acquire them.

NATURAL FRUITS. The natural production of trees, bushes, and other plants, for the use of men and animals, and for the reproduction of such trees, bushes, or plants.

This expression is used in contradistinction to artificial or figurative fruits: for example, apples, peaches, and pears are natural fruits; interest is the fruit of money, and this is artificial.

NATURAL LAW. The law of nature. The divine will, or the dictate of right reason, showing the moral deformity or moral necessity there is in any act, according to its suitableness or unsuitableness to a reasonable nature. Sometimes used of the law of human reason, in contradistinction to the revealed law, and sometimes of both, in contradistinction to positive law.

They are independent of any artificial connections, and differ from mere presumptions of law in this essential respect, that the latter depend on and are a branch of the particular system of jurisprudence to which they belong; but mere natural presumptions are derived wholly by means of the common experience of mankind, without the aid or control of any particular rule of law, but simply from the course of nature and the habits of society. These presumptions fall within the exclusive province of the jury, who are to pass upon the facts. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3064; Greenleaf, Ev. § 44.

NATURAL OBLIGATION. One which in honor and conscience binds the person who has contracted it, but which cannot be enforced in a court of justice. Pothier, nn. 173, 191. See OBLIGATION.

NATURAL PRESUMPTIONS. In Evidence. Presumptions of fact; those which depend upon their own form and efficacy in generating belief or conviction in the mind, as derived from those connections which are pointed out by experience.

NATURALIZATION. The act by which an alien is made a citizen of the United States of America.

The constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 8, vests in congress the power to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and various laws have been passed in pursuance of this authority. See Acts of Congr. Apr. 14, 1802; Mar. 26, 1804; July 30, 1813; Mar. 22, 1816; May 26, 1824; May 24, 1828, June 26, 1848. See 2 U. S. Stat. at Large, 153, 292, 811; 3 id. 259; 4 id. 69, 310; 9 id. 240; 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 323; 4 McLean, C. C. 75; 1 Cranch, C. C. 219; 2 Gall. C. C. 11; 7 Cranch, 420; 4 Pet. 393, 406; 16 Wend. N. Y. 607; 6 N. Y. 263; 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 433; 10 Ark. 625; 5 Cal. 300; 8 Blackf. Ind. 395; 2 Nott. & M'C. So. C. 351.

NATURALIZED CITIZEN. One who, being born an alien, has lawfully become a citizen of the United States under the constitution and laws.

He has all the rights of a natural-born citizen, except that of being eligible as president or vice-president of the United States. In foreign countries he has a right to be treated as such, and will be so considered even in the country of his birth, at least for most purposes. 1 Bos. & P. 430. See CITIZEN; DOMICIL; INHABITANT.

NAUCLERUS (Lat.). Master or owner of a vessel. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

NAUFRAGE. In French Maritime Law. When, by the violent agitation of the waves, the impetuosity of the winds, the storm, or the lightning, a vessel is swallowed up, or so shattered that there remain only the pieces, the accident is called naufrage.

It differs from échouement, which is when the vessel remains whole, but is grounded; or from bris, which is when it strikes against a rock or a coast; or from sombrer, which is the sinking of the vessel in the sea when it is swallowed up, and which may be caused by any accident whatever. Pardessus, n. 643. See WRECK.

NAULUM (Lat.). Freight or passage money. 1 Parsons, Mar. Law, 124, n.; Dig. l. 6, § 1, qui potiores in pignore.

NAUTA (Lat.). One who charters (exercet) a ship. L. 1, § 1, ff. nautæ, caupo; Calvinus, Lex. Any one who is on board a vessel for the purpose of navigating her. 3 Sumn. C. C. 213; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; 2 Emerigon, 448; Pothier. Pand. lib. 4, tit. 9, n. 2; lib. 47, tit. 5, nn. 1, 2, 3, 8, 10. A carrier by water. 2 Ld. Raym. 917.

NAVAL LAW. A system of regulations for the government of the navy. 1 Kent, Comm. 377, n. Consult Act of Apr. 3, 1800; Act of Dec. 21, 1861; Act of July 16, 1862; Homans, Nav. Laws; DeHart, Courts-Martial.

NAVAL OFFICER. An officer of the customs of the United States.

His office relates to the estimating duties, countersigning permits, clearances, etc., certifying the collectors' returns, and similar duties.

NAVARCHUS, NAVICULARIUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The master of an armed ship. Navicularius also denotes the master of a ship (patronus) generally; also, a carrier by water (exercitor navis). Calvinus, Lex.

NAVIGABLE. Capable of being navigated.

2. In its technical sense, the term navigable, at common law, is only applied to the sea, to arms of the sea, and to rivers which flow and reflow with the tide,—in other words, to tide-waters, the bed or soil of which is the property of the crown. All other waters are, in this sense of the word, unnavigable, and are, primâ facie, strictly private property; but in England even such waters, if navigable in the popular sense of the term, are, either of common right or by dedication, subject to the use of the public as navigable highways, the fee or soil remaining in the riparian proprietors. Dav. Dist. Ct. 149; 5 Taunt. 705; 1 Pick. Mass. 180; 5 id. 199; Woolrych, Waterc. 40; Angell, Tide Wat. 2d ed. 75–79.

3. In the United States, this technical use of the term has been adopted in many of the states, in so far as it is employed to designate and define the waters the bed or soil of which belongs to the state. 4 N. Y. 472; 26 Wend. N. Y. 404; 4 Pick. Mass. 268; 2 Conn. 481; 3 Me. 269; 31 id. 9; 16 Ohio, 540; 1 Halst. N. J. 31; 4 Wisc. 486; 2 Swan, Tenn. 9. But in Pennsylvania, 2 Binn. Penn. 475; 14 Serg. & R. Penn. 71; in North Carolina, 1 M'Cord, So. C. 580; 3 Ired. No. C. 277; 2 Dev. No. C. 30; 3 id. 59; in Iowa, 3 Iowa, 1; 4 id. 199; and in Alabama, 11 Ala. 436, the technical use of the term has been entirely discarded, and the large fresh-water rivers of those states have been decided to be navigable, not only as being subject to public use as navigable highways, but also as having their bed or soil vested in the state.

4. The rule of the common law, by which the ebb and flow of the tide has been made the criterion of navigability, has never been adopted in any of the United States, or, if adopted, it has been in a form modified and improved to fit the condition of the country and the wants of its inhabitants. According to the rule administered in the courts of this country, all rivers which are found "of sufficient capacity to float the products of the mines, the forests, or the tillage of the country through which they flow, to market," 8 Barb. N. Y. 239, or which are capable of use "for the floating of vessels, boats, rafts, or logs," 31 Me. 9, are subject to the free and unobstructed navigation of the public, independent of usage or of legislation. 20 Johns. N. Y. 90; 5 Wend. N. Y. 358; 42 Me. 552; 18 Barb. N. Y. 277; 5 Ind. 8; 2 Swan, Tenn. 9; 29 Miss. 21; 6 Cal. 180; 2 Stockt. N. J. 211.

In New York, it seems that courts are bound to take judicial notice of what streams are, and what are not, highways, at common law. 8 Barb. N. Y. 239. See ARM OF THE SEA; RELICTION; RIVER; TIDE-WATER.

NAVIGATION ACT. The stat. 12 Car. II. c. 78. It was repealed by 6 Geo. IV. cc. 109, 110, 114. See 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 120.

NAVIGATION, RULES OF. Rules and regulations which govern the motions of ships or vessels when approaching each other under such circumstances that a collision may possibly ensue.

These rules are firmly maintained in the United States courts.

2. The rules of navigation which prevailed under the general maritime law, in the absence of statutory enactments, will first be considered, although, as hereinafter stated, they have lately been superseded by express enactment in most of the commercial countries of the world.

These rules were derived mainly from the decisions of the high court of admiralty in England, and of the superior court of the United States, and they are based upon the rules promulgated by the corporation of the Trinity House on the 30th of October, 1840, and which may be found in full in 1 W. Rob. Adm. 488. These rules are substantially as follows:

For Sailing-Vessels about to meet.

3. First, those having the wind fair shall give way to those on a wind [or close-hauled].

Second, when both are going by the wind, the vessel on the starboard tack shall keep her wind, and the one on the larboard tack bear up, thereby passing each other on the larboard hand.

Third, when both vessels have the wind large or abeam, and meet, they shall pass each other in the same way, on the larboard hand; to effect which two last-mentioned objects the helm must be put to port.

For a Sailing and a Steam Vessel about to meet.

4. First, steam-vessels are to be considered in the light of vessels navigating with a fair wind, and should give way to sailing-vessels on a wind on either tack.

Second, a steam-vessel and a sailing-vessel going large, when about to meet, should each port her helm and pass on the larboard side of the other. 1 W. Rob. Adm. 478; 2 id. 515; 4 Thornt. Adm. Cas. 40.

But in the United States courts it has been almost uniformly held, and the rule is now firmly established, that when a sailing-vessel and a steamer are about to meet, the sailing-vessel must, under ordinary circumstances, and whether going large, or before the wind, or close-hauled by the wind, keep her course, and the steamer must take all the measures necessary to avoid a collision. 17 Bost. Law Rep. 384; 18 id. 181; 10 How. 557; 17 id. 152, 178; 18 id. 581; 2 West. Law Month. 425; 3 Blatchf. C. C. 92.

For Steam-Vessels about to meet.

5. First, when steam-vessels on different courses are about to meet under such circumstances as to involve the risk of collision, each vessel must put her helm to port, so as always to pass on the larboard side of the other.

Second, a steam-vessel passing another in a narrow channel must always leave the vessel she is passing on the larboard hand.

The following abstract of authorities may also be referred to as furnishing rules of decision (in addition to the general rules of navigation) in the particular cases alluded to; and they will generally be found applicable in cases of collision arising under the new regulations, as well as in cases arising under the general maritime law.

When a steamer or other vessel is about to pass another vessel proceeding in the same general direction, she must allow the foremost boat to keep her way and course, and must take the necessary measures to avoid a collision. 6 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 12; 23 How. 448; Abb. Adm. Pract. 108, 110; Olc. Adm. 505; 1 Blatchf. C. C. 363.

A vessel under sail or steam is bound to keep clear of a vessel stationary or at anchor, provided the latter is in a proper place, and exhibits a proper light,—the presumption in such cases being that the vessel in motion is at fault. 1 How. 89; 19 id. 103; 3 Kent, Comm. 231; Conkling, Adm. 394, 395; Dav. Dist. Ct. 359; 1 Am. Law Journ. 387; 1 Swab. Adm. 88; 3 W. Rob. Adm. 49.

A vessel entering a harbor is bound to keep the most vigilant watch to avoid a collision, 18 How. 584; Dav. Dist. Ct. 359; and in the night-time she ought generally to have her whole crew on deck. Id. And see 3 Kent, Comm. 231; 1 Dods. Adm. 467.

6. By the general maritime law, vessels upon the high seas are not ordinarily required constantly to exhibit a light, 2 W. Rob. Adm. 4; 3 id. 49; 2 Wall. Jr. C. C. 268; but by statute law in England, the United States, Canada, and most of the continental maritime states, steam and sailing vessels were heretofore required in the night-time, and under the circumstances and in the situation pointed out, to carry lights. See 5 U. S. Stat. at Large, 306, § 10; 9 id. 382, § 4; 10 id. 72, § 29, and the regulations of the supervising inspectors under the latter act; the English Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, § 295; and the regulations made under the same, which will be found in Pratt on Sea Lights, and Appendix; the statutes of Canada, and also the ordinances or regulations of France, Russia, Prussia, Holland, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, and Mecklenburg-Schwerin, in regard to lights and the rules of navigation, given in the Appendix to Pratt on Sea Lights.

7. The general rules above given may be, and have been, abrogated by regulations made by various governments, and which are binding upon all vessels within the jurisdiction of that government, The Aurora before V. C. Adm. Judge Black, at Quebec, Oct. 1860; Story, Confl. Laws, ch. 14; 1 Swab. Adm. 38, 63, 96; 1 How. 28; 19 Bost. Law Rep. 220; 14 Pet. 99; but it is beyond the power of the legislature to make rules applicable to foreign vessels when beyond their jurisdiction; that is, more than a marine league from their shores. 1 Swab. Adm. 96. And see 18 How. 223; 21 id. 184. It has, accordingly, been held that the new English rule is not applicable in a case of collision on the high seas between a British and a foreign vessel, and that the latter could not set up in its defence a violation of the English statute by the British vessel, 1 Swab. Adm. 63, 96; and it was declared that in such a case the general maritime law must be the rule of the court.

8. The rules of navigation under the general maritime law, particular statutes, and also the rules of the maritime law, and of prior enactments, in regard to vessels carrying lights, have, in most commercial countries, been entirely superseded by general rules of navigation, and general regulations in respect to vessels' lights, which were agreed upon by the governments of Great Britain and France in 1863 (1 Lush. Adm. Appendix lxxii.), and which have since been adopted by most of the commercial countries of Europe, and by Brazil and most of the South American republics, as well as by the United States and Canada. Id. lxxvii. and lxxviii.; 13 U. S. Stat. at Large, 58; Acts of Canadian Parl. 1864. These rules and regulations will be found in the act of congress above referred to, and which took effect September 1, 1864.

9. This act is in the following words:

Be it enacted, by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That from and after September one, eighteen hundred and sixty-four, the following rules and regulations for preventing collisions on the water be adopted in the navy and the mercantile marine of the United States: Provided, That the exhibition of any light on board of a vessel of war of the United States may be suspended whenever, in the opinion of the secretary of the navy, the commander-in-chief of a squadron, or the commander of a vessel acting singly, the special character of the service may require it.

Article I. In the following rules, every steamship which is under sail and not under steam is to be considered a sailing-ship; and every steamship which is under steam, whether under sail or not, is to be considered a ship under steam.

Art. II. The lights mentioned in the following articles, and no others, shall be carried in all weathers between sunset and sunrise.

Art. III. All steam-vessels, when under way, shall carry.—

(a.) At the foremast head a bright white light, so fixed as to show a uniform and unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of twenty points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light ten points on each side of the ship, viz.: from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on either side, and of such a character as to be visible on a dark night, with a clear atmosphere, at a distance of at least five miles.

(b.) On the starboard side a green light, so constructed as to throw a uniform and unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of ten points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on the starboard side, and of such a character as to be visible on a dark night, with a clear atmosphere, at a distance of at least two miles.

(c.) On the port side a red light, so constructed as to show a uniform unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of ten points of the compass, so fixed as to throw the light from right ahead to two points abaft the beam on the port side, and of such a character as to be visible on a dark night, with a clear atmosphere, at a distance of at least two miles.

(d.) The said green and red side-lights shall be fitted with inboard screens, projecting at least three feet forward from the light, so as to prevent these lights from being seen across the bow.

10. Art. IV. Steamships, when towing other ships, shall carry two bright white masthead lights, vertically, in addition to their side-lights, so as to distinguish them from other steamships. Each of these masthead lights shall be of the same construction and character as the masthead lights which other steamships are required to carry.

Art. V. Sailing-ships under way or being towed shall carry the same lights as steamships under way, with the exception of the white masthead lights, which they shall never carry.

Art. VI. Whenever, as in the case of small vessels during bad weather, the green and red lights cannot be fixed, these lights shall be kept on deck, on their respective sides of the vessel, ready for instant exhibition, and shall, on the approach of or to other vessels, be exhibited on their respective sides in sufficient time to prevent collision, in such manner as to make them most visible, and so that the green light shall not be seen on the port side, nor the red light on the starboard side.

To make the use of these portable lights more certain and easy, they shall each be painted outside with the color of the light they respectively contain, and be provided with suitable screens.

Art. VII. Ships, whether steamships or sailing-ships, when at anchor in roadsteads or fairways, shall, between sunset and sunrise, exhibit where it can best be seen, but at a height not exceeding twenty feet above the hull, a white light in a globular lantern of eight inches in diameter, and so constructed as to show a clear, uniform, and unbroken light visible all around the horizon, at a distance of at least one mile.

11. Art. VIII. Sailing pilot-vessels shall not carry the lights required for other sailing-vessels, but shall carry a white light at the masthead, visible all around the horizon, and shall also exhibit a flare-up light every fifteen minutes.

Art. IX. Open fishing-boats, and other open boats, shall not be required to carry side-lights required for other vessels, but shall, if they do not carry such lights, carry a lantern having a green slide on the one side and a red slide on the other side, and on the approach of or to other vessels such lantern shall be exhibited in sufficient time to prevent collision, so that the green light shall not be seen on the port side, nor the red light on the starboard side. Fishing-vessels and open boats, when at anchor or attached to their nets and stationary, shall exhibit a bright white light. Fishing-vessels and open boats shall, however, not be prevented from using a flare-up in addition, if considered expedient.

12. Art. X. Whenever there is a fog, whether by day or night, the fog-signals described below shall be carried and used, and shall be sounded at least every five minutes, viz.:

(a.) Steamships under way shall use a steam whistle placed before the funnel, not less than eight feet from the deck.

(b.) Sailing-ships under way shall use a fog-horn.

(c.) Steamships and sailing-ships when not under way shall use a bell.

Art. XI. If two sailing-ships are meeting end on, or nearly end on, so as to involve risk of collision, the helms of both shall be put to port, so that each may pass on the port side of the other.

Art. XII. When two sailing-ships are crossing so as to involve risk of collision, then, if they have the wind on different sides, the ship with the wind on the port side shall keep out of the way of the ship with the wind on the starboard side, except in the case in which the ship with the wind on the port side is close-hauled and the other ship free, in which case the latter ship shall keep out of the way. But if they have the wind on the same side, or if one of them has the wind aft, the ship which is to windward shall keep out of the way of the ship which is to leeward.

13. Art. XIII. If two ships under steam are meeting end on, or nearly end on, so as to involve risk of collision, the helms of both shall be put to port, so that each may pass on the port side of the other.

Art. XIV. If two ships under steam are crossing so as to involve risk of collision, the ship which has the other on her own starboard side shall keep out of the way of the other.

Art. XV. If two ships, one of which is a sailing-ship and the other a steamship, are proceeding in such direction as to involve risk of collision, the steamship shall keep out of the way of the sailing-ship.

Art. XVI. Every steamship, when approaching another ship so as to involve risk of collision, shall slacken her speed, or, if necessary, stop and reverse; and every steamship shall, when in a fog, go at moderate speed.

Art. XVII. Every vessel overtaking any other vessel shall keep out of the way of the said last-mentioned vessel.

Art. XVIII. Where, by the above rules, one of two ships is to keep out of the way, the other shall keep her course, subject to the qualifications contained in the following article.

14. Art. XIX. In obeying and construing these rules, due regard must be had to all dangers of navigation; and due regard must also be had to any special circumstances which may exist in any particular case, rendering a departure from the above rules necessary in order to avoid immediate danger.

Art. XX. Nothing in these rules shall exonerate any ship, or the owner or master or crew thereof, from the consequences of any neglect to carry lights or signals, or of any neglect to keep a proper look-out, or of the neglect of any precaution which may be required by the ordinary practice of seamen, or by the special circumstances of the case.

15. It is evident that these rules and regulations were intended to supersede all other rules of navigation, and every other system of vessels' lights, wherever they may be adopted. They establish a well-devised and complete system of vessels' lights, and furnish plain and simple rules of navigation applicable to all the ordinary cases of vessels approaching each other under such circumstances as to involve the risk of collision,—leaving extraordinary cases, such as the meeting of vessels in extremely narrow or other very difficult channels (in respect to which no safe general rule can be devised), to the practical good sense and professional skill of those in charge of such vessels. To such cases, and to cases in which one vessel has been suddenly and unexpectedly brought into circumstances of immediate danger entirely through the fault or mismanagement of another, or by inevitable accident, the exceptions contained in article 19 will apply. But a departure from these rules, to be justifiable even in such cases, must be necessary in order to avoid immediate danger. But that necessity must not have been caused by the negligence or fault of the party disobeying the rule; and courts of admiralty lean against these exceptions. 11 N. Y. Leg. Obs. 353, 355; 18 How. 581, 583; 1 W. Rob. Adm. 157, 478. And see 2 Curt. C. C. 141, 363; 18 How. 581.

16. The maritime law, however, requires that in collision cases every violation of a rule of navigation, and every other act or omission alleged to be a fault, shall be considered in connection with all the attending circumstances; and when by inevitable accident, or the fault of one of two colliding vessels, a vessel free from fault is suddenly brought into such circumstances of imminent danger as probably to render the deliberate or proper exercise of the judgment and skill of an experienced seaman impossible, an error of judgment, or other mistake, is not regarded as a legal fault. 3 Blatchf. C. C. 92; 12 How. 461.

The proper and continual exhibition of the bright and coloured lights which these rules and regulations prescribe, and their careful observance by the officer of the deck and the look-out of every vessel, constitute the very foundation of the system of navigation established by such rules and regulations. The exhibition of such lights, and the strict compliance with the rules in respect to stationing and keeping a competent and careful person in the proper place and exclusively devoted to the discharge of the duties of a look-out, are of the utmost importance.

The stringent requirements of our maritime courts in respect to look-outs may be learned by consulting the following authorities. 10 How. 585; 12 id. 443; 18 id. 108, 223; 21 id. 548, 570; 23 id. 448; 3 Blatchf. C. C. 92.

17. The neglect to carry or display the lights prescribed by these rules and regulations will always be held, primâ facie, a fault, in a collision case. 5 How. 441, 465; 21 id. 548, 556; 3 W. Rob. Adm. 191; Swab. Adm. 120, 245, 253, 519; 1 Lush. Adm. 382. And, upon the same principles, the neglect, in a fog, to use the prescribed fog-signals will also be considered, primâ facie, a fault.

It will be observed that the duty of slackening speed, in all cases when risk of collision is involved, is absolutely and imperatively imposed upon every steam-vessel, by these regulations, and that they require that every steam-vessel shall stop and reverse her engine when necessary to avoid a collision.

The duty of slackening speed in order to avoid a collision had been frequently declared by the maritime courts before the adoption of these regulations, 3 Hagg. Adm. 414; 3 Blatchf. C. C. 92; Swab. Adm. 138; 2 W. Rob. Adm. 1; 3 id. 95, 270, 377; 10 How. 557; 12 id. 443; 18 id. 108; but there was no inflexible rule requiring a steamer to slacken speed in all cases when there was risk of collision; and the neglect to do it was held to be a fault only in those cases where its necessity was shown by the proofs. This left the question open to be determined by the courts in each particular case, and perhaps upon vague and unreliable estimates of time and distance and bearings, or upon conflicting and unsatisfactory testimony; but the legislature, in view of the great power and speed of the steamers now in general use, and the very disastrous consequences of a collision of such vessels when running at their ordinary speed, has wisely made the duty imperative.

18. Some of the rules of navigation which these rules and regulations prescribe are quite different from those applied to similar cases by the general maritime law. They will be most apparent upon an examination of the new rules for the crossing of two steam-vessels, or of two sailing-vessels, in connection with the rules formerly applied to similar cases. And until the construction of the new rules has been settled by judicial decisions, it is quite likely that the changes they have introduced will increase, rather than diminish, the number of collisions. But the construction of these rules will soon be determined; and, as they are now applicable to the vessels of most commercial countries, the new system is likely, ere long, to become nearly universal; and for that reason, if for no other, its adoption will doubtless reduce the number of collisions.

NAVY. The whole shipping, taken collectively, belonging to the government of an independent nation, and appropriated for the purposes of naval warfare. It does not include ships belonging to private individuals nor (in the United States, at least) revenue vessels or transports in the service of the war department. See Brightly, Dig. U. S. Laws, Navy.

NE ADMITTAS (Lat.). The name of a writ, so called from the first words of the Latin form, by which the bishop is forbidden to admit to a benefice the other party's clerk during the pendency of a quare impedit. It ought to be issued within six months after avoidance of the benefice, before title to present has devolved upon the bishop by lapse, or it will be useless. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 37; Reg. Orig. 31; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 248; 1 Burn, Eccl. Law, 31.

NE BAILA PAS (he did not deliver). In Pleading. A plea in detinue, by which the defendant denies the delivery to him of the thing sued for.

NE DISTURBA PAS. In Pleading. The general issue in quare impedit. Hob. 162. See Rastell, Entr. 517; Winch, Entr. 703.

NE DONA PAS, NON DEDIT. In Pleading. The general issue in formedon. It is in the following formula: "And the said C D, by J K, his attorney, comes and defends the right, when, etc., and says that the said E F did not give the said manor, with the appurtenances, or any part thereof, to the said G B, and the heirs of his body issuing, in manner and form as the said A B hath in his count above alleged. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country." 10 Wentworth, Plead. 182.

NE EXEAT REPUBLICA (Lat.). In Practice. The name of a writ issued by a court of chancery, directed to the sheriff, reciting that the defendant in the case is indebted to the complainant, and that he designs going quickly into parts without the state, to the damage of the complainant, and then commanding him to cause the defendant to give bail in a certain sum that he will not leave the state without leave of the court, and for want of such bail that he, the sheriff, do commit the defendant to prison.

2. This writ is issued to prevent debtors from escaping from their creditors. It amounts, in ordinary civil cases, to nothing more than process to hold to bail, or to compel a party to give security to abide the decree to be made in his case. 2 Kent, Comm. 32; 1 Clark, 551; Beames, Ne Exeat; 13 Viner, Abr. 537; 1 Suppl. to Ves. Jr. 33, 352, 467; 4 Ves. Ch. 577; 5 id. 91; Bacon, Abr. Prerogative (C); 8 Comyns, Dig. 232; 1 Blackstone, Comm. 138; Blake, Chanc. Pract. Index; Maddox, Chanc. Pract. Index; 1 Smith, Chanc. Pract. 576; Story, Eq. Index.

3. The writ may be issued against foreigners subject to the jurisdiction of the court, citizens of the same state, or of another state, when it appears by a positive affidavit that the defendant is about to leave the state, or has threatened to do so, and that the debt would be lost or endangered by his departure. 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 75, 412; 7 id. 192; 1 Hopk. Ch. N. Y. 499. On the same principle which has been adopted in the courts of law that a defendant could not be held to bail twice for the same cause of action, it has been decided that a writ of ne exeat was not properly issued against a defendant who had been held to bail in an action at law. 8 Ves. Ch. 594.

4. This writ can be issued only for equitable demands. 4 Des. Eq. So. C. 108; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 2; 6 id. 138; 1 Hopk. Ch. N. Y. 499. It may be allowed in a case to prevent the failure of justice. 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 191. When the demand is strictly legal, it cannot be issued, because the court has no jurisdiction. When the court has concurrent jurisdiction with the courts of common law, the writ may, in such case, issue, unless the party has been already arrested at law. 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 170. In all cases when a writ of ne exeat is claimed, the plaintiff's equity must appear on the face of the bill. 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 414.

The amount of bail is assessed by the court itself; and a sum is usually directed sufficient to cover the existing debt, and a reasonable amount of future interest, having regard to the probable duration of the suit. 1 Hopk. Ch. N. Y. 501.

NE LUMINIBUS OFFICIATUR (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude which restrains the owner of a house from making such erections as obstruct the light of the adjoining house. Dig. 8. 4. 15. 17.

NE RECIPIATUR (Lat.). That it be not received. A caveat or words of caution given to a law officer, by a party in a cause, not to receive the next proceedings of his opponent. 1 Sellon, Pract. 8.

NE RELESSA PAS (Law Fr.). The name of a replication to a plea of release, by which the plaintiff insists he did not release. 2 Bulstr. 55.

NE UNJUSTE VEXES (Lat.). In Old English Law. The name of a writ which issued to relieve a tenant upon whom his lord had distrained for more services than he was bound to perform.

It was a prohibition to the lord, not unjustly to distrain or vex his tenant. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev.

NE UNQUES ACCOUPLE (Law Fr.). In Pleading. A plea by which the party denies that he ever was lawfully married to the person to whom it refers. See the form, 2 Wils. 118; 10 Wentworth, Plead. 158; 2 H. Blackst. 145; 3 Chitty, Plead. 599.

NE UNQUES EXECUTOR. In Pleading. A plea by which the party who uses it denies that the plaintiff is an executor, as he claims to be; or that the defendant is executor, as the plaintiff in his declaration charges him to be. 1 Chitty, Plead. 484;

1 Saund. 274, n. 3; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (2 D 2); 2 Chitty, Plead. 498.

NE UNQUES SEISIE QUE DOWER. In Pleading. A plea by which a defendant denies the right of a widow who sues for and demands her dower in lands, etc., late of her husband, because the husband was not on the day of her marriage with him, or at any time afterwards, seised of such estate, so that she could be endowed of the same. See 2 Saund. 329; 10 Wentworth, Plead. 159; 3 Chitty, Plead. 598, and the authorities there cited.

NE UNQUES SON RECEIVER. In Pleading. The name of a plea in an action of account-render, by which the defendant affirms that he never was receiver of the plaintiff. 12 Viner, Abr. 183.

NE VARIETUR (Lat. that it be not changed). A form sometimes written by notaries public upon bills or notes, for the purpose of identifying them. This does not destroy their negotiability. 8 Wheat. 338.

NEAT, NET. The exact weight of an article, without the bag, box, keg, or other thing in which it may be enveloped.

NEATNESS. In Pleading. The statement in apt and appropriate words of all the necessary facts, and no more. Lawes, Plead. 62.

NEBRASKA. One of the territories of the United States.

The territory was erected by act of congress, approved May 30, 1854. It includes all that portion of the territory of the United States included in the following boundaries: beginning at a point in the Missouri river where the fortieth parallel of north latitude crosses the same; thence west on said parallel to the east boundary of the territory of Utah, on the summit of the Rocky Mountains; thence on said summit northwardly to the forty-ninth parallel of north latitude; thence east on said parallel to the west boundary of the territory of Minnesota; thence southwardly on said boundary to the Missouri river; thence down the main channel of said river to the place of beginning, with an exception of the Indian reservations included from the territorial jurisdiction, unless with their consent. There is also a proviso that when admitted as a state the said territory or any part of the same shall be received into the Union with or without slavery, as their constitution may prescribe at the time of their admission. In addition to the above, that part of Utah and Washington territories between the forty-first and forty-third degrees of north latitude and east of the thirty-third meridian of longitude west of Washington is added to the territory of Nebraska by act of congress approved March 2, 1861. U. S. Stat. at Large, 1860–61 (Little & Brown's ed.), 244. The provisions of the organic act, with the exceptions here given, are the same as those of the act establishing the territory of New Mexico, which see. The secretary holds his office for the term of five years, subject to renewal by the president. The house of representatives is to be composed of twenty-six members; but the number may be increased to thirty-nine.

NECESSARIES. Such things as are proper and necessary for the sustenance of man.

2. The term necessaries is not confined merely to what is requisite barely to support life, but includes many of the conveniences of refined society. It is a relative term, which must be applied to the circumstances and conditions of the parties. 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 247. Ornaments and superfluities of dress, such as are usually worn by the party's rank and situation in life, 1 Campb. 120; 3 id. 326; 7 Carr. & P. 52; 1 Hodg. 31; 8 Term, 578; 1 Leigh, Nisi P. 135; some degree of education, 4 Mees. & W. Exch. 727; 6 id. 48; 16 Vt. 683; see 10 Barb. N. Y. 489; Chitty, Contr. 140; 1 Parsons, Contr. 246; lodging, and house-rent, 2 Bulstr. 69; 1 Bos. & P. 340; see 12 Metc. Mass. 559; 13 id. 306; 1 Mees. & W. Exch. 67; 5 Q. B. 606; horses, saddles, bridles, liquors, pistols, powder, whips, and fiddles, have been held not to be necessaries. 1 Bibb, Ky. 519; 1 M'Cord, So. C. 572; 2 Nott & M'C. So. C. 524; 2 Humphr. Tenn. 27; 2 Strange, 1101; 1 Mann. & G. 550. And see 7 Carr. & P. 52; 4 id. 104; Holt, 77; Cart. 216; 11 N. H. 51; 8 Exch. 680.

3. The rule for determining what are necessaries is that whether articles of a certain kind or certain subjects of expenditure are or are not such necessaries as an infant may contract for, is a matter of law, and for instruction by the court; but the question whether any particular things come under these classes, and the question, also, as to quantity, are generally matters for the jury to determine. 1 Parsons, Contr. 241; 10 Vt. 225; 12 Metc. Mass. 559; 11 N. H. 51; 1 Bibb, Ky. 519; 2 Humphr. Tenn. 27; 3 Day, Conn. 37; 1 Mann. & G. 550; 6 Mees. & W. Exch. 42; 6 Carr. & P. 690.

4. Infants may contract for necessaries, 4 Mees. & W. Exch. 727; 13 id. 252; but are not liable for borrowed money, though expended for necessaries. 1 Salk. 279; 2 Esp. 472, n.; 10 Mod. 67; 1 Bibb, Ky. 519; 7 Watts & S. Penn. 83, 88; 10 Vt. 225. See 1 P. Will. 558; 5 Esp. 28; 7 N. H. 368; 2 Hill, So. C. 400; 32 N. H. 345. Necessaries for the infant's wife and children are necessaries for himself. Strange, 168; Comyns, Dig. Enfant (B 5); 1 Sid. 112; 2 Starkie, Ev. 725; 3 Day, Conn. 37; 1 Bibb, Ky. 519; 2 Nott & M'C. So. C. 524; 9 Johns. N. Y. 141; 16 Mass. 31; 14 B. Monr. Ky. 232; Bacon, Abr. Infancy (I). See 13 Mees. & W. Exch. 252.

5. A wife is allowed to make contracts for necessaries, and her husband is generally responsible upon them, because his assent is presumed; and even if notice be given not to trust her, still he would be liable for all such necessaries as she stood in need of; but in this case the creditor would be required to show she did stand in need of the articles furnished. 1 Salk. 118; 2 Ld. Raym. 1006 But if the wife elopes, though it be not with an adulterer, he is not chargeable even for necessaries; the very fact of the elopement and separation is sufficient to put persons on inquiry, and whoever gives credit to the wife afterwards gives it at his peril. 1 Salk. 119; Strange, 647; 1 Sid. 109; 1 Lev. 4; 11 Johns. N. Y. 281; 12 id. 293; 3 Pick. Mass. 289; 2 Halst. 146; 2 Kent, Comm. 123; 2 Starkie, Ev. 696; Bacon, Abr. Baron and Feme (H); Chitty, Contr. Index; 1 Hare & W. Sel. Dec. 104, 106; Hammond, Part. 217.

NECESSITY. That which makes the contrary of a thing impossible.

Whatever is done through necessity is done without any intention; and as the act is done without will (q. v.) and is compulsory, the agent is not legally responsible. Bacon, Max. Reg. 5. Hence the maxim, Necessity has no law: indeed, necessity is itself a law which cannot be avoided nor infringed. Clef des Lois Rom.; Dig. 10. 3. 10. 1; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (3 M 20, 3 M 30). As to the circumstances which constitute necessity, see 1 Russell, Crimes, 16, 20; 2 Starkie, Ev. 713.

NEGATIVE AVERMENT. In Pleading. An averment in some of the pleadings in a case in which a negative is asserted.

NEGATIVE CONDITION. One where the thing which is the subject of it must not happen. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 751.

NEGATIVE PREGNANT. In Pleading. Such a form of negative expression as may imply or carry within it an affirmative.

Thus, where a defendant pleaded a license from the plaintiff's daughter, and the plaintiff rejoined that he did not enter by her license, the rejoinder was objected to successfully as a negative pregnant. Croke Jac. 87. The fault here lies in the ambiguity of the rejoinder, since it does not appear whether the plaintiff denies that the license was given or that the defendant entered by the license. Stephen, Plead. 381.

This ambiguity constitutes the fault, Hob. 295; which, however, does not appear to be of much account in modern pleading. 1 Lev. 88; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (R 6); Gould, Plead. c. 6, § 36.

NEGATIVE STATUTE. One which is enacted in negative terms, and which so controls the common law that it has no force in opposition to the statute. Bacon, Abr. Statutes (G); Brooke, Abr. Parliament, pl. 72.

NEGLIGENCE. Want of due diligence.

2. As to the amount of diligence required in case of bailments, and for the general principles of the division of negligence into degrees, see BAILMENT; FRAUD.

In general, a party who has caused an injury or loss to another by his negligence is responsible for all the consequences. Hob. 134; 3 Wils. 126; 1 Chitty, Plead, 129, 130; 2 Hen. & M. Va. 423; 1 Strange, 596; 3 East, 596. An example of this kind may be found in the case of a person who drives his carriage during a dark night on the wrong side of the road, by which he commits an injury to another. 3 East, 593; 1 Campb. 497; 2 id. 466; 5 Bos. & P. 119 See Gale & W. Easem. Index; 6 Term, 659; 1 East, 106; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 590; 1 Taunt. 568; 2 Stark. 272; 2 Bingh. 170; 5 Esp. 35, 263; 5 Barnew. & C. 550. Whether the incautious conduct of the plaintiff will excuse the negligence of the defendant, see 1 Q. B. 29; 4 Perr. & D. 642; 3 C. B. 9.

3. When the law imposes a duty on an officer, whether it be by common law or statute, and he neglects to perform it, he may be indicted for such neglect, 1 Salk. 380; 6 Mod. 96; and in some cases such neglect will amount to a forfeiture of the office. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 140. See Bouvier, Inst. Index.

Wherever there is a legal duty, and death comes by means of omission to discharge it, the party omitting is guilty of a felonious homicide. 1 Burnett & H. Lead. Cas. 49; 2 Carr. & K. 368; 3 id. 123; 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 301; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 356; 8 Carr. & P. 325; 7 id. 438; 1 Russell, Crimes, Greaves ed. 19. See 6 Mass. 134; 8 Mo. 561; 2 Strange, 882; 1 Carr. & P. 320; 5 id. 333; 6 id. 396, 629; 7 id. 499; 9 id. 672; 4 McLean, C. C. 463. But it must appear that the death was the direct and immediate result of the personal neglect or default of the defendant. For instance, where trustees appointed under a local act for the purpose of repairing roads within a particular district, with a power to contract for executing such repairs, neglected so to contract, and by reason of such neglect one of such roads became out of repair, and a person using it was accidentally killed in consequence of its so being out of repair, it was held that the trustees were not chargeable with manslaughter. 17 Q. B. 34. See 2 Carr. & K. 343, 368; 7 id. 425.

NEGLIGENT ESCAPE. The omission on the part of a gaoler to take such care of a prisoner as he is bound to take, when in consequence thereof the prisoner departs from his confinement without the knowledge or consent of the gaoler, and eludes pursuit.

For a negligent escape, the sheriff or keeper of the prison is liable to punishment, in a criminal case; and in a civil case he is liable to an action for damages at the suit of the plaintiff. In both cases the prisoner may be retaken. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 415. See ESCAPE.

NEGOTIABLE. In Mercantile Law. A term applied to a contract the right of action on which is capable of being transferred by indorsement (of which delivery is an essential part), in case the undertaking is to A or his order, A or his agent, and the like, or by delivery alone, in case the undertaking is to A or bearer,—the assignee in either case having a right to sue in his own name.

At common law, choses in action were not assignable; but exceptions to this rule have grown up by mercantile usage as to some classes of simple contracts, and others have been introduced by legislative acts, so that now bills of exchange, promissory notes, and bank-notes, to order or bearer, are universally negotiable; and bills of lading, 14 Mees. & W. Exch. 403; 12 Pick. Mass. 314; 16 id. 474, and notes not to order or bearer, have become quasi negotiable; that is, an indorsement will give a right of action in the name of the assignor; and in some states, by statute, bonds and other specialties are assignable by indorsement.

And, in general, any chose in action can be assigned so that the assignee can bring action in name of assignor, and with same rights. See Hare & W. Sel. Dec. 158–194; 1 Parsons, Contr. 202.

NEGOTIATION. The deliberation which takes place between the parties touching a proposed agreement.

That which transpires in the negotiation makes no part of the agreement, unless introduced into it. It is a general rule that no evidence can be given to add, diminish, contradict, or alter a written instrument. 1 Dall. Penn. 426; 4 id. 340; 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 609.

In Mercantile Law. The act by which a bill of exchange or promissory note is put into circulation by being passed by one of the original parties to another person.

Until an accommodation bill or note has been negotiated, there is no contract which can be enforced on the note: the contract, either express or implied, that the party accommodated will indemnify the other, is, till then, conditional 2 Mann. & G. 911.

NEGOTIORUM GESTOR (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who spontaneously, and without authority, undertakes to act for another, during his absence, in his affairs.

In cases of this sort, as he acts wholly without authority, there can, strictly speaking, be no contract; but the civil law raises a quasi mandate by implication for the benefit of the owner, in many such cases. Mackeldey, Civ. Law, § 460; 2 Kent, Comm, 616, n.; Story, Bailm. §§ 82, 189.

NEIF. In Old English Law. A woman who was born a villein, or a bond-woman.

NEMINE CONTRADICENTE (usually abbreviated nem. con.). Words used to signify the unanimous consent of the house to which they are applied. In England, they are used in the house of commons; in the house of lords, the words used to convey the same idea are nemine dissentiente.

NEPHEW. The son of a brother or sister. Ambl. 514; 1 Jac. Ch. 207.

The Latin nepos, from which nephew is derived, was used in the civil law for nephew, but more properly for grandson; and we accordingly find neveu, the original form of nephew, in the sense of grandson. Britton, c. 119.

According to the civil law, a nephew is in the third degree of consanguinity; according to the common law, in the second: the latter is the rule of common law. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 206. But in this country the rule of the civil law is adopted. 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 194. In the United States generally, there is no distinction between whole and half blood. 1 Dev. No. C. 106; 2 Yerg. Tenn. 115; 2 Jones, Eq. No. C. 202; 1 M'Cord, So. C. 456.

NEPOS (Lat.). A grandson.

NEPTIS (Lat.). Granddaughter; sometimes great-granddaughter. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Code, 33.

NEUTRAL PROPERTY. Property which belongs to neutral owners, and is used, treated, and accompanied by proper insignia as such.

2. Where the insured party has property and commercial establishments and depositories in different countries, if the property and concerns of any one is in, or belongs to, a belligerent country, it will have the national character of such country though the national character of the owner may be that of a neutral. 1 Phillips, Ins. § 164; 5 W. Rob. Adm. 302; 1 Wheat. 159; 16 Johns. N. Y. 128. The declaration of war by a nation subsequently to the time in reference to which the policy takes effect will, however, only affect ownership thereafter acquired or acts thereafter done. 1 Phillips, Ins. ch. ii. § iii. ch. ix. §§ v.–viii.; 1 Wash. C. C. 219; 6 Cranch, 274; 7 id. 506; 4 Mas. C. C. 256; 1 Johns. N. Y. 192; 2 id. 168; 9 id. 388; 14 id. 308; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 107, 336; 2 id. 134; 5 id. 2; 6 id. 364; 1 Binn. Penn. 203, 293; 5 id. 464; 3 Wheat. 245; 3 Gall. C. C. 274; 5 East, 398; 12 Mass. 246; 8 Term, 230; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 363; 2 id. 191.

3. The description of the subject in the policy of insurance, as neutral or belonging to neutrals, is, as in other cases, a warranty that it is, what it is described to be, the insured interest, and must, accordingly, in order to comply with the warranty, not only belong to neutral owners at the time of making the insurance, but must continue to be owned during the period for which it is insured, and must, so far as it depends upon the assured, be accompanied by the usual insignia, as such, and in all respects represented, managed, and used as such. 1 Phillips, Ins. ch. ix. § v.; Dougl. 732; 3 Term, 477; 1 Johns. N. Y. 1192; 2 id. 168; Skinn. 327; 1 Wash. C. C. 219; 2 Caines, N. Y. 73; 6 Cranch, 274; 4 Mas. C. C. 256; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 26, 336; 2 id. 133, 218; 1 Edw. Adm. 340.

NEUTRALITY. The state of a nation which takes no part between two or more other nations at war with each other.

2. Neutrality consists in the observance of a strict and honest impartiality, so as not to afford advantage in the war to either party, and particularly in so far restraining its trade to the accustomed course which is held in time of peace as not to render assistance to one of the belligerents in escaping the effects of the other's hostilities. Even a loan of money to one of the belligerent parties is considered a violation of neutrality. 9 J. B. Moore, p. 586. A fraudulent neutrality is considered as no neutrality.

3. The violation of neutrality by citizens of the United States, contrary to the provisions of the act of congress of April 20, 1818, renders the individual liable to an indictment. One fitting out and arming a vessel in the United States to commit hostilities against a foreign power at peace with them is, therefore, indictable. And by the 8th section of the act, the president, or such other person as he shall have empowered for that purpose, may employ the land and naval forces and the militia of the United States for the purpose of taking possession of and detaining any ship or vessel, with her prize or prizes, etc., and for the purpose of preventing the carrying on of any expedition or enterprise contrary to the provisions of that act. Wharton, Crim. Law, §§ 2778–2807, and cases there cited; Brightly & Dig. U. S. Law, 688–690, giving act of 1820, at length there cited; 6 Pet. 445; 1 Pet. C. C. 487. See United States, Curtis & Pritchard, and other Digests; Aldin's Index, Wheaton, Law of Nations; Phillimore, Int. Law; Marshall, Ins. 384 a; 1 Kent, Comm. 116; Burlamaqui, pt. 4, c. 5, ss. 16, 17; Bynkershoeck, lib. 1, c. 9; Cobbett, Parl. NEVADA. One of the territories of the United States.

Congress, by an act approved March 2, 1861, erected so much of the territory of the United States as is included in the following boundaries—viz.: beginning at the point of intersection of the forty-second degree of north latitude with the thirty-ninth degree of longitude west from Washington, thence running south on the line of said thirty-ninth degree of west longitude until it intersects the northern boundary-line of the territory of New Mexico, thence due west to the dividing ridge separating the waters of Carson Valley from those that flow into the Pacific, thence on said dividing ridge to the forty-first degree of north latitude, thence due north to the southerly boundary of the state of Oregon, thence due east to the point of beginning—into a separate territory, by the name of the territory of Nevada, with a temporary territorial government, with the exception that the act is not to apply to so much of the present state of California as is included within these boundaries, unless that state consents; and with the exception of all that part subject to Indian rights which have not been extinguished by treaty. U. S. Stat. at Large, 1861, ch. 83, Little & Brown's ed. 209. See, also, Act of Congress July 14, 1862, extending the boundaries.

The provisions of the organic act are substantially the same as those of the act erecting the territory of New Mexico. See NEW MEXICO.

NEVER INDEBTED. A plea to an action of indebitatus assumpsit, by which the defendant asserts that he is not indebted to the plaintiff. 6 Carr. & P. 545; 1 Mees. & W. Exch. 542; 1 Q. B. 77. The plea of never indebted has, in England, been substituted for nil debet, in certain actions specified in schedule B (36) of the Common Law Procedure Act of 1852; and the effect of the plea never indebted is to deny those facts from which the liability of the defendant arises. In actions on negotiable bills or notes, never indebted is inadmissible. Reg. Gen. Hil. T. 1853, §§ 6, 7; 3 Chitty, Stat. 560.

NEW AND USEFUL INVENTION A phrase used in the act of congress relating to granting patents for inventions.

The invention to be patented must not only be new, but useful,—that is, useful in contradistinction to frivolous or mischievous inventions. It is not meant that the invention should in all cases be superior to the modes now in use for the same purposes. 1 Mas. C. C. 182, 302; 4 Wash. C. C. 9; 1 Pet. C. C. 480, 481; 1 Paine, C. C. 203; 3 C. B. 425. The law as to the usefulness of the invention is the same in France. Renouard, c. 5, s. 16, n. 1, p. 177. See PATENT.

NEW ASSIGNMENT. A re-statement of the cause of action by the plaintiff, with more particularity and certainty, but consistently with the general statement in the declaration. Stephen, Plead. 241; 20 Johns. N. Y. 43.

2. Its purpose is to avoid the effect of an evasive plea which apparently answers the declaration, though it does not really apply to the matter which the plaintiff had in view. 1 Wms. Saund. 299 b, note 6. Thus, if a defendant has committed two assaults on the plaintiff, one of which is justifiable and the other not, as the declaration may not distinguish one from the other, the defendant may justify, and the plaintiff, not being able either to traverse, demur, or confess and avoid, must make a new assignment.

3. There may be several new assignments in the course of the same action. 1 Chitty, Plead. 614. A plaintiff may reply to a part of the plea and also make a new assignment. A new assignment is said to be in the nature of a new declaration, Bacon, Abr. Trespass (I 4, 2); 1 Saund. 299 c, but is more properly considered as a repetition of the declaration, 1 Chitty, Plead. 602; differing only in this, that it distinguishes the true ground of complaint, as being different from that which is covered by the plea. Being in the nature of a new or repeated declaration, it is, consequently, to be framed with as much certainty or specification of circumstances as the declaration itself. In some cases, indeed, it should be even more particular. Bacon, Abr. Trespass (I 4, 2); 1 Chitty, Plead. 610; Stephen, Plead. 245. See 3 Blackstone, Comm. 311; Archbold, Civ. Plead. 286; Doctrina Plac. 318; Lawes, Civ. Plead. 163.

NEW BRUNSWICK. A province of British North America.

2. It is bounded north by the river Restigouch6 and the bay of Chaleur, east by the gulf of St. Lawrence, south by Nova Scotia and the bay of Fundy, and west by the state of Maine. Its length from north to south is one hundred and eighty miles, breadth one hundred and fifty miles, giving an area of twenty-five thousand square miles.

The capital of New Brunswick is Fredericton, a small place sixty miles back from the southern shore, or eighty miles up the river St. John, at whose mouth is the city St. John, with a population of forty thousand.

New Brunswick was originally part of the French province of Acadie (see NOVA SCOTIA), but was made a distinct province in 1784, having been first settled by the French A.D. 1639, ceded to the English in 1713 by the treaty of Utrecht, and settled by the British government in 1764.

The government in its three branches resembles, as closely as circumstances permit, that of England.

The Executive Department.

This consists of the Governor and the Executive Council.

3. The Governor or Lieutenant-Governor represents the sovereign, and is captain-general and commander-in-chief of the militia of the province, and, together with his council, has, in general, the same powers as governors of other colonies,—such as the appointment and commissioning of sheriffs, coroners, magistrates, and other officers. He does not preside in chancery or vice-admiralty, but is one of the court of piracy.

By provincial act 21 Vict. c. 9, the lieutenant-governor and executive council, together with a chief superintendent (who virtually has the sole control), form the provincial board of education.

The Executive Council consists of nine members: six officeholders,—viz.: provincial secretary, attorney-general, solicitor-general, chief commissioner of the board of works, surveyor-general, and postmaster-general,—and three non-officeholding members.

Those members of the council who take office must be elected by the people; and if they are members of the house at the time of their appointment they thereby vacate their seats in the legislature and go back to their constituents for re-election: and members so holding office are at once a part of the legislature and of the executive. The governor and council, as the government, have the appointment, practically, at least, of all public officers; but the council commonly consult the wishes of the representatives of the counties where the appointments are made.

4. The expenditure of the public moneys is vested in the executive department; but the budget of the provincial secretary (who corresponds to the prime minister) must be laid before the house of assembly and passed by them.

The house can investigate the affairs of any department by calling on the governor to order the papers connected therewith to be brought before them.

The Legislative Department.

5. This consists of the Legislative Council, or Upper House, and the Lower House, or House of Assembly.

The Legislative Council consists of twenty-three members, appointed by the crown on the recommendation of the governor and council,—practically appointed by the governor and council.

They are usually men of wealth and political influence, and hold their seats for life or during good behavior.

Prior to 1834 the legislative and executive councils were united, but since that time they have been distinct bodies; but a seat in the legislature does not prevent one's being a member of the executive. In 1862 the executive council was composed of two members of the legislative council and seven members of the house of assembly.

The apportionment of representatives to counties is based upon the population,—eight counties sending two each, one sending three, and five sending four each, while the city of St. John sends two.

6. The House of Assembly consists of forty-one members, elected by the people.

The provincial act 18 Vict. 1855, c. 37, § 20, provides that the candidate shall be a male British subject, of age, and for six months previous to the teste of the writ of election legally seised as of freehold, for his own use, of land in the province of the value of three hundred pounds over and above all incumbrances whatever charged upon or affecting the same.

The qualification for a vote for representative is established by the provincial act 18 Vict. 1855, c. 37, § 1, which provides that voters for representatives shall be male British subjects, of age, not legally incapable, and who shall have been assessed, for the year in which the registry is made up, for real estate one hundred dollars, or personal property four hundred dollars, or real and personal four hundred dollars, or annual income four hundred dollars. In case no assessment is made in his parish, the possession of the qualification shall be sufficient.

7. The government is what is called "responsible government,"—a term which has given rise to much dispute, sticklers for the rights of the crown and lovers of monarchy proclaiming it an absurd self-contradiction, while the so-called liberals cling to it as a fit name for a government whose executive council are, directly or indirectly, dependent on the people for their places.

To give an idea of the working of this system, let us suppose the present government ousted. The lieutenant-governor would then summon the leaders of the stronger political party in the legislature, and call upon them to name a council. They would suggest nine men from their own party, or such as would act with them, and he would thereupon issue his proclamation making such men his executive council. Six of these taking office (supposing them appointed from the house of assembly) vacate their seats in the legislature and go back to their constituents for the re-election necessary to confirm them as councillors and to allow them to retain their seats in the lower house. If not re-elected, new appointments are made and the council filled.

Suppose them re-elected. The question now comes, Have the government, so constituted, the confidence of the people? If they are strong enough in the legislature, all goes smoothly; but as soon as the opposition can control a majority of votes in the house, they pass a vote of "want of confidence," and thereupon the executive council resign, and the appointing process is gone through with anew.

8. The House of Assembly is elected by the people every four years, by ballot. The government, i.e. executive council, is commonly, but not necessarily, chosen from the house of assembly, and is in accordance with the political strength of that body.

When an executive council cannot co-operate with the lieutenant-governor, they are dismissed or resign; and if then re-elected by the people, the governor asks her majesty to appoint his successor; or, if he still holds his office and continues to act improperly, the people appeal through the house to the crown, and all such appeals are fairly and promptly decided.

The Judicial Department.

9. This comprises the Supreme Court of Judicature, Circuit Courts, Probate Courts, Court of Marriage and Divorce, Court of Vice-Admiralty, Court for Trial and Punishment of Piracy and Other Offences upon the High Seas, Court of Common Pleas or Quarter Sessions of the County Magistrates, and the Petty Court or Inferior Court of Common Pleas, besides Police Courts and minor tribunals.

The Supreme Court consists of a chief justice and four puisne judges, appointed by the crown on recommendation of the governor and council. By act of assembly 17 Vict. c. 67, the court of chancery was abolished, and the master of the rolls appointed a judge of the supreme court: hence all causes heretofore cognizable by the court of chancery are to be determined in the "equity side of the supreme court."

10. The terms of court are, as in England, four in number,—Hilary, first Tuesday in February; Easter, second Tuesday in April; Trinity, second Tuesday in June; Michaelmas, second Tuesday in October; and nisi prius sittings in county of York, second Tuesday in January and fourth Tuesday in June. Suits for twenty dollars or less can be heard before a justice or magistrate's court, or (in St. John city only, for forty dollars or less) before the petty court. Suits for from twenty to eighty dollars go before the court of common pleas or quarter sessions; and in the city of St. John the mayor and recorder are judges of the quarter sessions. Suits for over eighty dollars must go before the supreme court. Imprisonment for debt is still permitted; but the debtor is discharged on taking his oath that he has no property of any kind. Possession of a leasehold estate would prevent his taking the oath. Any imprisoned debtor who can get bail may go on the limits, the limits extending to a distance of three miles from the jail. In seizing under execution, tools of trade and fifty dollars' worth of household furniture are exempt, except for rent, in which case the landlord may take every thing on the premises. There is no proceeding of attachment on mesne process, as in some of the New England states. The laws in force are the common law of England, the statute laws of Great Britain so far as they are made to extend to the colonies, and provincial statutes not repugnant to the laws of England.

NEW FOR OLD. A term used in the law of insurance in cases of adjustment of a loss when it has been but partial. In making such adjustment, the rule is to apply the old materials towards the payment of the new, by deducting the value of them from the gross amount of the expenses for repairs, and to allow the deduction of one-third new for old upon the balance. See 1 Cow. N. Y. 265; 4 id. 245; 4 Ohio, 284; 7 Pick. Mass. 259; 14 id. 141.

NEW HAMPSHIRE. The name of one of the original thirteen United States of America.

2. It was subject to Massachusetts from 1641 to 1680. Many of its institutions and laws are to be traced to that connection. It was governed as a province, under royal commissions, by a governor and council appointed by the king, and a house of assembly elected by the people, until the revolution.

In January, 1776, a temporary constitution was adopted, which continued till 1784. The constitution adopted in 1784 was amended by a convention of delegates held at Concord, approved by the people in their town-meetings, and established by the convention in February, 1792. This constitution was amended in 1850, by abolishing the property qualification for certain offices, but is otherwise still in force.

Every male inhabitant of every town and place, of twenty-one years of age and upwards, except paupers and persons excused from paying taxes at their own request, is entitled to vote in the town-meetings for the officers elected by the people. By statute, the names of all voters are required to be placed by the selectmen on a check-list; and no vote will be received unless the name of the voter is so registered Three months' residence in the town, six months' in the state, and the presentment to the selectmen of the record of naturalization of persons who have been aliens, thirty days before the day of meeting, are required to entitle a party to be registered on the check-list.

The Legislative Power.

3. This is lodged in the Senate and House of Representatives, each of which has a negative upon the other, and which together are styled the General Court of New Hampshire.

The Senate is composed of twelve members, elected for the term of —— years, one from each district, by the people of the district. If no person is elected by the people for any district, or if a vacancy occur, one is elected, by joint ballot of the two houses, from the two persons having the highest number of votes. A senator must be a Protestant, thirty years old, an inhabitant of the district, and, for seven years next before his election, of the state.

Representatives are elected annually, for the term of one year, by the voters of the several towns and districts, and in case of failure to elect, or vacancy, as senators are in like case. Each town having one hundred and fifty ratable male polls of twenty-one years of age and upwards may elect one representative, and one more for each three hundred additional polls. Towns and places having less than one hundred and fifty ratable polls may be classed by law for the chance of a representative; and towns which cannot be classed without great inconvenience may be authorized by law to elect. A representative must be a Protestant, an inhabitant of the town for which he is elected, and, for two years next preceding his election, of the state. The constitution contains the usual provisions for securing the organization of each house, giving control of the conduct of members, providing for keeping and publishing a record of proceedings, for open sessions, limiting the power of adjournment of houses separately, securing members from arrest on civil process while going to, remaining at, and returning from the session, and for securing freedom of debate. The general assembly has full legislative powers, may constitute courts, regulate taxes, secure equal representation, etc., under restrictions similar to those contained in the constitutions of the other states.

The Executive Power.

4. This is lodged in a Governor and Council.

The Governor is elected annually, and holds his office for one year from the first Wednesday in June. If no person has a majority of votes, the senate and house of representatives, by joint ballot, elect one of the two persons having the highest number of votes. In case of a vacancy, the president of the senate exercises the powers of the office, but cannot then act as senator. The governor must be a Protestant, of the age of thirty years, and an inhabitant of the state for seven years next preceding his election.

The governor is commander-in-chief of all the military forces of the state. He has a limited veto upon the acts and resolves of the general court, which are invalid unless they are approved and signed by him; but if he does not return any bill to the house in which it originated, with his objections, within five days after it is presented to him, provided the general court continue in session, or if the two houses, after considering his objections, shall again pass the same by a vote of two-thirds of each house, the bill will become a law as if he had signed it. In case any cause of danger to the health of the members exists at their place of meeting, he may direct the session to be held at another place.

5. Councillors are elected annually, must have the qualifications of senators, and hold office for the same term as the governor. The state is divided by law into five districts, in each of which a councillor is elected, and vacancies are filled by a like election. If no person has a majority of votes, the two houses, by joint ballot, elect a councillor from the two persons having the highest number of votes.

The governor and council may adjourn or prorogue the general court, in case of disagreement of the two houses, for any period not exceeding ninety days. They nominate and appoint all judicial officers, the attorney-general and solicitors, sheriffs and coroners, registers of probate, and all general and field officers of the militia,—each having a negative upon the other. Nominations must be made three days before an appointment can be made, unless a majority of the council assent. All commissions must be in the name and under the seal of the state, signed by the governor and attested by the secretary, and the tenure of the office stated therein.

The power of pardoning offences—after conviction only, however—is vested in the governor and council, except in cases of impeachment. No money can be drawn from the treasury of the state but by warrant of the governor, with the advice and consent of the council.

The Judicial Power.

6. The Supreme Judicial Court consists of a chief justice and five assistant justices, appointed by the governor and council, to hold during good behavior, until seventy years of age. It has original jurisdiction of all cases and proceedings at common law, civil and criminal, except those in which justices of the peace have jurisdiction; of all cases in equity; in all cases of divorce and alimony; and appellate jurisdiction in all appeals from courts of probate, and in all appeals from police courts and from justices of the peace.

Trial terms of the supreme court are held by a single judge in every county twice, and in the larger counties three times, a year; but two judges must attend in any capital trial. At these terms are entered and tried most cases at common law and appeals from police courts and justices of the peace; and all trials by jury are had there; but cases may be tried without a jury, by consent of parties. Any question of law arising at these terms may be transferred to the law terms for decision by the whole court.

Two law terms are held annually in each of the four judicial districts into which the state is divided. At these terms are entered and heard all cases in equity, cases of divorce, appeals from courts of probate, writs of error and certiorari, cases of mandamus, quo warranto, and the like, and all questions of law transferred from the trial terms. No trials by jury are held at law terms; but issues of fact are transferred to the trial terms. Four justices are a quorum at the law terms, and the concurrence of three is necessary to a decision of any law question.

7. Judges of probate are appointed by the governor and council in each county, who hold their office during good behavior, unless sooner removed by address of both houses or by impeachment. They have jurisdiction of all matters relating to the estates of persons deceased and the guardianship of minors, insane persons, and spendthrifts, subject to appeal to the supreme court.

Justices of the Peace are appointed in sufficient number by the governor and council, who hold their office during the term of five years, unless sooner removed by address of both houses of the legislature. They have jurisdiction of all civil causes at common law in which the damages demanded do not exceed thirteen dollars and thirty-three cents and where the title to real estate is not involved, and in many minor criminal cases, subject to appeal to the supreme court. They have authority to arrest, examine, and bind over for trial at the supreme court persons charged with higher offences.

Police Courts have exclusive jurisdiction, in the cities and places where they are established, in all cases where justices of the peace have jurisdiction elsewhere.

No judge, clerk, or register of any court, or justice of the peace, can act as attorney, be of counsel, or receive fees as advocate or counsel, in any case which may come before the court of which he is an officer.

County Commissioners are elected, three in each county, by the voters of the county, for the term of three years, one being elected each year. They have general control and management of the financial affairs of the county, of the public buildings, of the roads, of paupers, and of levying the county tax.

NEW JERSEY. The name of one of the original thirteen states of the United States of America.

2. The territory of which the state is composed was included within the patent granted by Charles II. to his brother James, duke of York, bearing date on the 12th of March 166¾. This grant comprised all the lands lying between the western side of Connecticut river and the east side of Delaware bay, and conferred powers of government over the granted territory. At this time the province was in the possession and under the government of Holland. Before the close of the year the inhabitants of the province submitted to the government of England, on the 23d and 24th of June, 1664. The duke of York, by deeds of lease and release, conveyed to John Lord Berkely and Sir George Carteret, their heirs and assigns forever, "all that tract of land adjacent to New England and lying and being to the westward of Long Island and Manhitas Island, and bounded on the east part by the main sea, and part by Hudson river, and hath upon the west Delaware bay or river, and extendeth southward to the main ocean as far as Cape May at the mouth of Delaware bay, and to the northward as far as the northernmost branch of the said bay or river of Delaware, which is in 41 degrees and 40 minutes of latitude, and crosseth over thence in a straight line to Hudson's river in forty-one degrees of latitude; which said tract of land is hereafter to be called Nova Cæsaria or New Jersey."

3. This grant first defined the boundaries and gave the name of the province. It conferred upon the grantees, with the territory, powers of government in as full and ample manner as they were conferred by the crown upon the duke of York. Lord Berkely and Sir George Carteret, being by virtue of this conveyance the sole proprietors of New Jersey, on the 10th of February, 166¾, signed a constitution which they published under the title of "The consessions and agreement of the lords proprietors of the province of Nova Cæsaria or New Jersey to and with all and every of the adventures, and all such as shall settle or plant there." This document, under the title of "The Consessions," was regarded as the first constitution of New Jersey, and continued in force until the division of the province in 1676. The instrument was considered as irrevocable, and therefore of higher authority than the acts of assembly, which were subject to alteration and repeal. War having been declared by England against Holland in 1673, the Dutch were again in possession of the country, and the inhabitants submitted to their authority.

4. By the treaty of peace between England and Holland on the 9th of February, 1674, the country was restored to the possession of the English. On the conclusion of peace, in order to remove all grounds of objection to his title on account of the recapture of the country by the Dutch, the duke of York obtained from the crown a new patent, similar to the first, and dated on the 29th of June, 1674. On the 20th of July in the same year, the duke of York made a second grant of a portion of the province to Sir George Carteret individually. The partition which this patent was intended to secure, in addition to the confirmation of Carteret's grant, was accomplished by deeds of partition executed July 1, 1676, between Carteret and the trustees of Byllinge. In 1702, the proprietors of the two provinces, called respectively East New Jersey and West New Jersey, surrendered their powers of government to Queen Anne, still retaining their title to the land. The two divisions constituted thenceforth but one colony. The colony was governed by a governor and council appointed by the crown, and an assembly of the representatives of the people chosen by the freeholders. This form of government continued till the American revolution.

5. The first constitution of the state of New Jersey was adopted by the provisional congress on the second day of July, 1776. This body was composed of representatives from all the counties of the state, who were elected on the fourth Monday of May, and convened at Burlington on the tenth day of June, 1776. It was finally adopted on the second day of July, but was never submitted to a popular vote. This constitution continued in force until the first day of September, 1844, when it was superseded by the existing constitution. A new constitution was adopted May 14, 1844, by a convention composed of delegates elected by the people in pursuance of an act passed by the legislature. The constitution thus framed, having been submitted to and adopted by the people at an election held on the thirteenth day of August, took effect and went into operation, pursuant to one of its provisions, on the twenty-second of September, 1844.

6. The right of suffrage is by the constitution vested in every white male citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who has been a resident of the state one year, and of the county in which he claims his vote five months, next before the election: provided that no person in the military, naval, or marine service of the United States shall be considered a resident of the state by being stationed in any garrison, barrack, or military or naval place or station within the state; and no pauper, idiot, insane person, or person convicted of a crime which now excludes him from being a witness, unless pardoned or restored by law to the right of suffrage, shall enjoy the right of an elector.

The Legislative Power.

This is lodged in a Senate and General Assembly, which meet separately the second Tuesday in January each year.

The Senate is composed of one senator from each county, elected by the people for three years. They are divided into classes, so that one-third of the senate is changed each year. A senator must be entitled to vote, at least thirty years old, have been a citizen and inhabitant of the state for four years, and of the county for which he is chosen one year, next before election.

7. The General Assembly is composed of members elected annually by the voters of the several counties. They are apportioned on the basis of population; and each county is to have one member at least, and the whole number is not to exceed sixty. Each member must be entitled to vote, at least twenty-one years old, must have been a citizen and inhabitant of the state for two years, and of the county for which he is chosen one year, next before his election.

The Executive Power.

The Governor is elected by the legal voters of the state for the term of three years, commencing on the third Tuesday of January next ensuing his election. He is incapable of holding the office for three years next after his term of service. He must be not less than thirty years of age, and have been for twenty years at least a citizen of the United States, and a resident of this state seven years next before his election, unless he has been absent during that time on the public business of the United States or of this state.

8. He is the commander-in-chief of all the military and naval forces of the state; has power, except in cases of impeachment, to suspend the collection of fines and forfeitures, and to grant reprieves, to extend until the expiration of a time not exceeding ninety days after conviction; in connection with the chancellor and the six judges of the court of errors and appeals, or the major part of them, can remit fines and forfeitures, and grant pardons in all cases after conviction, except impeachment; and is liable to impeachment for misdemeanor in office during his continuance in office and for two years thereafter. In case of the death, resignation, or removal from office of the governor, the powers, duties, and emoluments of the office devolve upon the president of the senate; and in case of his death, resignation, or removal, then upon the speaker of the house of assembly, until another governor shall be elected and qualified; but in such case another governor shall be chosen at the next election for members of the legislature, unless such vacancy occur within thirty days preceding such election, in which case a governor shall be chosen at the next succeeding election for members of the legislature.

The Judicial Power.

9. The Court of Errors and Appeals consists of a chancellor, the justices of the supreme court, and six judges, or a major part of them, which judges are appointed for six years by the governor, with the consent of the senate.

The seat of one of the judges is vacated each year: so that one judge is annually appointed. No member of the court who has given a judicial opinion in the cause in favor of or against any error complained of, may sit as a member or have a voice on the hearing; but the reasons for such opinion shall be assigned to the court in writing. Four sessions are held annually, at Trenton. It is the highest court of appeals from decisions of the supreme court, court of chancery, and circuit court. After decision pronounced, the cause is remitted to the inferior courts for judgment and execution according to the decision.

The Court of Chancery consists of a chancellor, appointed by the governor for a term of seven years, who is also the ordinary or surrogate general and judge of the prerogative court. Appeals lie from the order or decree of the orphans' court to the prerogative court.

10. The Supreme Court consists of one chief and six assistant judges, appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, for the term of seven years. This number may be increased or decreased by law, but may never be less than two. The judges are ex officio justices of the inferior court of common pleas, orphans' court, and court of general quarter sessions. Four stated terms are to be held annually, at Trenton, and special terms as court may appoint, not exceeding two a year. This is the court of general inquiry, common-law jurisdiction. When issues of fact arise, they are sent to the circuit court to be found by a jury and single judge.

Circuit Courts are held in every county in the state, by one or more justices of the supreme court, or a judge appointed for the purpose For this purpose the state is divided into seven districts, and one judge assigned to each district. In all cases within the county, except in those of a criminal nature, these courts have common-law jurisdiction concurrent with the supreme courts; and any final judgment of a circuit court may be docketed in the supreme court, and operates as a judgment obtained in the supreme court from the time of such docketing. Final judgments in any circuit court may be removed by writ of error into the supreme court, or directly into the court of errors and appeals; and questions of law which arise are to be certified by the presiding judge to the supreme court for decision.

11. Common Pleas Court. This in each county is composed of five judges, appointed for five years by senate and general assembly by joint ballot. One goes out of office each year.

Oyer and Terminer and General Jail Delivery. This court is held by one or more justices of the supreme court, and one or more of the court of common pleas, in each county, at the times of holding the circuit court, and such other times as the judge of the supreme court may appoint. It has cognizance of all crimes whatever of an indictable or presentable nature committed in the county where the court is held.

Court of Quarter Sessions. This court is composed of three or more justices of the court of common pleas in each county. It has cognizance of all crimes for purposes of indictment; but all capital crimes and those of the graver character must be tried by the court of oyer and terminer or supreme court.

The Orphans' Court is held in each county, by three or more judges of the common pleas court. It has the original jurisdiction of the probate of wills, settlement of the estates of decedents, appointment and control of administrators and executors, and the care of minors, including the appointment and control of guardians. Four terms of this court are held annually. An appeal lies to the prerogative court, held by the chancellor. The duties of clerk or register of this court are discharged by a surrogate, elected by the people of the county for five years.

Justices of the Peace are elected by the people of each township, or ward of city, not less than two nor more than five for each such division, for five years. They have cognizance within their counties of civil matters to an amount not exceeding one hundred dollars, except those cases involving land-titles, and actions of replevin, slander, or trespass for assault and battery or imprisonment. A jury of six must be impanelled on demand of either party.

NEW MATTER. In Pleading. Matter not previously alleged. Statements of fact not previously alleged by either party to the pleadings. Where special pleading prevails, such matter must be pleaded in avoidance, and it must, in general, be followed by a verification. Gould, Plead. c. 3, § 195; 1 Chitty, Plead. 538; Stephen, Plead. 251; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (E 32); 1 Wms. Saund. 103, n. 1; 2 Lev. 5; Ventr. 121; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2983. See PLEA.

In equity, new matter, discovered by either plaintiff or defendant, may be introduced by cross or supplemental bill before a decree has been pronounced, but not by amendment after an answer has been filed. 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 200; Harr. Ch. Mich. 438; 4 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 4385–4387.

NEW MEXICO. One of the territories of the United States.

2. By act of congress, approved September 9, 1850, the territory of New Mexico is constituted and described as "all that territory of the United States beginning at the point in the Colorado river where the boundary with the republic of Mexico crosses the same; thence eastwardly with said boundary-line to the Rio Grande; thence, following the main channel of said river, to the parallel of the 32° of north latitude; thence east with said parallel to its intersection with the 103° of longitude W. of Greenwich; thence north with said degree of longitude to the parallel of 38° of north latitude; thence west with said parallel to the summit of Sierra Madre; thence south with the crest of said mountains to the 37th parallel of north latitude; thence west with said parallel to the boundary-line of the state of California; thence with said boundary-line to the place of beginning." A proviso is annexed that the United States may divide the territory into two or more, and that when admitted as a state the said territory, or any portion of the same, shall be received into the Union with or without slavery, as their constitution may prescribe at the time of admission. 9 U. S. Stat. at Large, 446. By the organic act, the powers of the territory are lodged in three branches,—the legislative, executive, and judicial. The operation of this act was suspended until the Texan boundary was agreed upon, when it went into force by proclamation of the president, December 13, 1850. 9 U. S. Stat. at Large, App.

3. The regulations as to the qualifications of voters, subject to change by the territorial legislature, are that all white male inhabitants who have lived three months in the territory and are citizens of the United States, or who have declared their intention to become such, and fifteen days next before election in the county in which they offer to vote, are qualified. In addition to these classes, also, all persons who are recognized as citizens under the treaties with Mexico are so entitled. But no person under guardianship, non compos mentis, or convicted of treason, felony, or bribery, may vote, unless restored to civil rights.

The Legislative Power.

The Council is composed of thirteen members, elected by the people of the districts into which the territory is divided, for the term of two years.

The House of Representatives consists of twenty-six members, elected by the people of the districts into which the territory is divided, for the term of one year. The two houses have power to legislate on all subjects of legislation not inconsistent with the laws and constitution of the United States. No laws may interfere with the primitive disposition of the soil. No tax may be levied of United States property. Property of non-residents may not be taxed higher than that of residents. No bank may be incorporated and no debt incurred by the territory.

The Executive Power.

4. The Governor is appointed by the president of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, for the term of four years, unless sooner removed. He must reside in the territory. He is commander-in-chief of the military of the territory; is superintendent of Indian affairs; is to approve all acts passed by the legislature before they can become laws; may grant pardons and remit fines for offences against the laws of the territory, and reprieves for offences against the laws of the United States till the will of the president can be known; must take care that the laws be executed.

A Secretary of the Territory is also appointed in the same manner and for the same time. He is to record and preserve laws passed by the legislature, and acts done by the governor, in his executive capacity, and to transmit copies, etc.

The Judicial Power.

5. The Supreme Court consists of a chief and two assistant justices, appointed by the president of the United States, with the advice and consent of the senate, for the term of four years. Two of the three judges constitute a quorum. The jurisdiction is appellate solely, and extends to all matters of appeal and writs of error that may be taken from the judgments or decrees of the district courts, in cases of errors apparent from the face of the record.

Special terms may be called by the chief justice for the hearing of causes in both civil and criminal matters, when the parties or the accused, and the district attorney, agree. No jury trials are held by this court. An appeal lies to the supreme court of the United States as from a decision of the United States circuit court, where the amount involved exceeds a specified sum.

6. The District Court is held in each of the three districts into which the territory is divided for the purpose, by one of the judges of the supreme court.

It has exclusive original jurisdiction of all matters at law or in equity, except those of which justices of the peace have concurrent jurisdiction, and of all crimes and misdemeanors, except those of which justices of the peace have exclusive cognizance.

Probate Courts are also to be provided for by law. They have, in general, the control of the settlement of the estates of decedents, and the appointment and control of guardians.

Justices of the Peace have a jurisdiction coextensive with the county of all civil cases where the amount involved does not exceed one hundred dollars, except chancery cases, cases involving title or boundary to real estate, and cases of libel, slander, malicious prosecution and false imprisonment, seduction and crim. con.

An Attorney and a Marshal are also appointed, for four years, by the president and senate, and are subject to removal by them.

Justices of the Peace may be provided for by law, with a limited criminal and civil jurisdiction, not to exceed one hundred dollars.

NEW PROMISE. A contract made after the original promise has, for some cause, been rendered invalid, by which the promiser agrees to fulfil such original promise.

NEW TRIAL. In Practice. A re-hearing of the legal rights of the parties, upon disputed facts, before another jury, granted by the court on motion of the party dissatisfied with the result of the previous trial, upon a proper case being presented for the purpose. 4 Chitty, Gen. Pract. 30; 2 Graham & W. New Tr. 32. It is either upon the same, or different, or additional evidence, before a new jury, and probably, but not necessarily, before a different judge.

2. The origin of the practice of granting new trials is of extremely ancient date, and, consequently, involved in some obscurity. Blackstone gives the most connected and satisfactory account of it of any writer. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 387, 388.

Courts have, in general, a discretionary power to grant or refuse new trials, according to the exigency of each particular case, upon principles of substantial justice and equity. The reasons which will induce them to exercise this power will be enumerated in what follows.

The not giving the defendant sufficient notice of the time and place of trial, unless waived by an appearance and making defence, will be a ground for setting aside the verdict. 3 Price, Exch. 72; 1 Wend. N. Y. 22. But to have this effect the defendant's ignorance of the trial must not have been owing to his own negligence, and the insufficiency of the notice must have been reasonably calculated to mislead him. 7 Term, 59; 2 Bibb, Ky. 177.

3. Mistakes or omissions of officers in summoning and drawing jurors, when the irregularity deprives the party complaining of a substantial right, will entitle him to a new trial. 2 Halst. N. J. 244. Likewise, where the officer summoning the jury is nearly related to one of the parties, 10 Serg. & R. Penn. 334; 1 South. N. J. 364; or is interested in the event, 5 Johns. N. Y. 133, unless the objection to the officer was waived by the party, 3 Me. 215; 21 Pick. Mass. 457, or the authority of the officer be so circumscribed as to put it out of his power to select an improper jury. 7 Ala. 253; 7 Cow. N. Y. 720. And the verdict will be set aside for the following causes: the unauthorized interference of a party, or his attorney, or the court, in selecting or returning jurors,—unless the interference can be satisfactorily explained, 2 Graham & W. New Tr. 173–179; 8 Humphr. Tenn. 412; that a juror not regularly summoned and returned personated another, Barnes, 455; 7 Dowl. & R. 684; but not if the juror personated another through mistake, was qualified in other respects, and no injustice has been done, 12 East, 229; that a juror sat on the trial after being challenged and set aside,—unless the party complaining knew of it, and did not object, 3 Yeates, Penn. 318; that a juror was discharged without any sufficient reason, after being sworn, 1 Ohio St. 66; but not if the juror was discharged by mistake and with the knowledge and acquiescence of the party, 9 Metc. Mass. 572; 5 Ired. No. C. 58; that the jury were not sworn, or that the oath was not administered in the form prescribed by law. 1 How. 497; 2 Me. 270.

4. The disqualification of jurors, if it has not been waived, will be ground for a new trial: as, the want of a property qualification, 4 Term, 473; 15 Vt. 61; relationship to one of the parties, 32 Me. 310, unless the relationship be so remote as to render it highly improbable that it could have had any influence, 12 Vt. 661; interest in the event, 2 Johns. N. Y. 194; 21 N. H. 438; conscientious scruples against finding a verdict of guilty, 13 N. H. 536; 16 Ohio, 364; 13 Wend. N. Y. 351; mental or bodily disease unfitting jurors for the intelligent performance of their duties, 6 Humphr. Tenn. 59; 8 Ill. 368; alienage. 6 Johns. N. Y. 332; 2 Ill. 476. But see 8 Ill. 202; 4 Dall. Penn 353.

5. When indirect measures have been resorted to to prejudice the jury, or tricks practised or disingenuous attempts made to suppress or stifle evidence or thwart the proceedings, or to obtain an unconscionable advantage, they will be defeated by granting a new trial. For example: where papers material on the point in issue, not previously submitted, are surreptitiously handed to the jury, Cas. temp. Hardw. 116; 2 Yeates, Penn. 273; or where the party, or some one in his behalf, directly approaches the jury on the subject of the trial. 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 458; 13 Mass. 218. But if the other party is aware of such attempts, and neglects to correct them when in his power, he will be deemed to have waived all objection. 11 Mod. 118. If the interference with the jury comes from a stranger, be without fault in the jury, and without the knowledge of the parties, and no injury has thereby ensued, the verdict will not be disturbed. 5 Mo. 525; 3 Bibb, Ky. 8; 11 Humphr. Tenn. 169, 491. But see 9 Miss. 187; 16 id. 465; 20 id. 398. Where the jury, after retiring to deliberate, examine witnesses in the case, a new trial will be granted, Croke Eliz. 189; 2 Bay, So. C. 94; 1 Brev. No. C. 16; so, also, when one of their number communicates to his fellows private information possessed by him, which influences the finding, 1 Sid. 235; 1 Swan, Tenn. 61; 2 Yeates, Penn. 166; 4 Dall. Va. 112; 4 Yerg. Tenn. 111; or the judge addresses a note to them, or privately visits them, after they have retired to deliberate. 1 Pick. Mass. 337; 10 Johns. N. Y. 238; 13 id. 487.

6. Misconduct of the jury will sometimes avoid the verdict: as, for example, jurors betting as to the result, 4 Yerg. Tenn. 111; sleeping during the trial, 8 Ill. 368; unauthorized separation, 1 Va. Cas. 271; 11 Humphr. Tenn. 502; 3 Harr. N. J. 468; taking refreshment at the charge of the prevailing party, 1 Ventr. 124; 4 Wash. C. C. 32; drinking spirituous liquor, 4 Cow. N. Y. 17, 26; 7 id. 562; 4 Harr. N. J. 367; 1 Hill, N. Y. 207; talking to strangers on the subject of the trial, 3 Day, Conn. 223; 9 Humphr. Tenn. 646; determining the verdict by a resort to chance. 15 Johns. N. Y. 87; 8 Blackf. Ind. 32. But every irregularity which would subject jurors to censure will not overturn the verdict, unless there be some reason to suspect that it may have had an influence on the final result. In general, if it does not appear that the misconduct was occasioned by the prevailing party or any one in his behalf, does not indicate any improper bias, and the court cannot see that it either had or might have had an effect unfavorable to the party moving for a new trial, the verdict will not be disturbed. Where, however, the misconduct of the jury amounts to a gross deviation from duty, decency, and order, a new trial will sometimes be granted, on grounds of public policy, without inquiring whether or not any injury has been sustained in that particular case. 2 Graham & W. New Tr. 478–594.

7. Error of the judge will be ground for a new trial: such as, admitting illegal evidence which has been objected to,—unless the illegal evidence was wholly immaterial, or it is certain that no injustice has been done; and where the illegal testimony was admitted in gross violation of the well-settled principles which govern proof, it has been deemed per se ground for a new trial, notwithstanding the jury were directed to disregard it, 13 Johns. N. Y. 350; 15 id. 239; but see 6 N. H. 333; improperly rejecting evidence tending in any degree to aid the jury in determining a material fact, 3 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 229; withdrawing testimony once legally before the jury,—unless the excluded testimony could not be used on a second trial, 4 Humphr. N. Y. 402; 5 Humphr. Mass. 106; 2 Graham & W. New Tr. 595–703; 3 id. 705–873.

8. Surprise, as a ground for setting aside the verdict, is cautiously allowed. When it is occasioned by the act of the adverse party, or by circumstances out of the knowledge and beyond the control of the party injured by it, he has sometimes been relieved; but not when he might have been fully informed by the exercise of ordinary diligence, 6 Halst.

N. J. 242; although, even when the complainant is not entirely free from fault, the court, in cases where great wrong would otherwise be done, will, for the sake of promoting justice, grant a new trial. Among the cases of surprise which will justify the interposition of the court may be enumerated the following: the unexpectedly being summoned and detained as a witness or juror in another court, or sudden and serious illness, which prevents the party from attending at the trial, 3 T. B. Monr. Ky. 113; 7 id. 59; 4 Litt. Ky. 1; 1 Halst. N. J. 344; that the cause was brought on prematurely, in the absence of the party, 6 Dan. Ky. 89; erroneous ruling of the court as to the right to begin, which has worked manifest injustice, 4 Pick. Mass. 156; but see 8 Conn. 254, 296; perturbation of counsel, arising from sudden and dangerous sickness occurring in his family and coming to his knowledge during the trial, 14 Pick. Mass. 494; where some unforeseen accident has prevented the attendance of a material witness, 6 Mod. 22; 11 id. 1; 2 Salk. 645; 1 Harp. So. C. 267; that testimony beyond the reach of the party injured, and completely under the control of the opposite party, was not produced at the trial, 7 Yerg. Tenn. 502; 7 Wend. N. Y. 62; that competent testimony was unexpectedly ruled out on the trial, 9 Dan. Ky. 26; 2 Vt. 573; 2 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 515; where a party's own witnesses, through forgetfulness, mistake, contumacy, or perjury, testify differently than anticipated, or where evidence is unexpectedly sprung upon a party by his opponent, 8 Ga. 136; 18 Miss. 326; the withdrawal of a material witness before testifying, attended with suspicions of collusion, 25 Wend. N. Y. 663; that a material witness was suddenly deprived of the power of testifying by a paralytic stroke, or other affection, or that the testimony of the witness was incoherent on account of his being disconcerted at the trial, 1 Root, Conn. 175; where it is discovered after the trial that a material witness who testified is interested in the event, or where it is probable that the verdict was obtained by false testimony, which the party injured could not until after the trial contradict or expose. 2 C. B. 342; 3 Burr. 1771; 1 Bingh. 339; 1 Me. 322.

9. New trials on account of after-discovered testimony are granted but rarely, and with great caution. The court, in order to set aside the verdict on this ground, must be satisfied that the evidence has come to the applicant's knowledge since the trial, 3 Stor. C. C. 1; 21 N. H. 166; that it is not owing to the want of diligence that it did not come sooner, 6 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 479; 1 Blackf. Ind. 367; that it is so material that it will probably produce a different result, 1 Dudl. Ga. 85; and that it is not cumulative. 3 Woodb. & M. C. C. 348. Nor must the sole object of the newly-discovered evidence be to impeach witnesses examined on the former trial. 7 Barb. N. Y. 271; 11 id. 216; 8 Gratt. Va. 637. The moving party must state what the evidence is, and what diligence he has used in the preparation of his case; and his application must be accompanied by the affidavits of the newly-discovered witnesses, unless some cause be shown why they cannot be produced. 5 Halst. N. J. 250; 1 Tyl. Vt. 441; 22 Me. 246.

Excessive damages may be good cause for granting a new trial: first, where the measure of damages is governed by fixed rules and principles, as in actions on contracts, or for torts to property the value of which may be ascertained by evidence; second, in suits for personal injuries where, although there is no fixed criterion for assessing the damages, yet it is clear that the jury acted from passion, partiality, or corruption. 10 Ga. 37. In actions for personal torts, a new trial will not, in general, be granted on account of the smallness of the damages, unless the verdict is the result of contrivance by the defendant, or surprise on the plaintiff, or of partiality or misconduct of the jury, or unless the finding is entirely disproportioned to the injury. Where the verdict is for an amount exceeding the damages laid in the writ, it will be set aside unless the plaintiff will release the excess. 7 Wend. N. Y. 330.

10. When the verdict is clearly against law, it will be set aside notwithstanding the jury had power to decide both the law and the fact, or the issue was one exclusively of fact and there have been concurrent verdicts by two successive juries. Dudl. Ga. 213; 4 Ga. 193. If, however, substantial justice has been done, a new trial will not be granted though the law arising on the evidence would have justified a different result. 1 Burr. 54; 4 Term, 468; 3 Graham & W. New Tr. 1176–1202.

Courts are at all times reluctant to grant a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against evidence; and where the jury have passed upon a mere question of fact, they will only do so when the verdict is palpably against the evidence: injustice must have been done by the verdict, and there must be a probability that justice will be done on retrial. 21 Conn. 245; 5 Ohio, 509; 3 Strobh. So. C. 358. Where the verdict is founded on circumstantial evidence, the court will rarely, if ever, interfere with it. 16 Mass. 345; 11 Ill. 36. On the other hand, when the issue approximates to a purely legal question, courts are somewhat more liberal in granting new trials. 2 M'Mull. So. C. 44. The verdict will be set aside where the witnesses upon whose testimony it was obtained have since the trial been convicted of perjury, 3 Dougl. 24; so where the testimony on which the verdict is founded derives its credit from circumstances, and those circumstances are afterwards clearly falsified by affidavit. 1 Bos. & P. 427; 3 Graham & W. New Tr. 1203–1374.

The verdict may be void for obscurity or uncertainty. 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 367. It will be set aside where it is not responsive to the issue, or does not comprehend all of the issues unless the finding of one or more of the issues will be decisive of the cause. 2 Ala. N. s. 359; 11 Pick. Mass. 45. That it was not recorded in open court, or was received in the absence of the plaintiff, or was altered after it was recorded and the jury dismissed, will be ground for a new trial. 1 Ill. 109; 1 Wend. N. Y. 36; 16 Serg. & R. Penn. 414. If rendered on Sunday, it will, in general, be void; but there are many instances in which verdicts have been sustained though rendered on that day. 1 South. N. J. 156; 15 Johns. N. Y. 119; 3 Watts, Penn. 56; 13 Ohio, 490.

11. Courts of equity have always proceeded with great caution in awarding new trials at law. At the present day they are but seldom applied to for this purpose, as courts of law are liberal in exercising the same jurisdiction, and it has been held to be unconscionable and vexatious to bring into courts of equity a discussion which might have been had at law. 1 Schoales & L. Ch. Ir. 201. But, in general, when it would have been proper for a court of law to have granted a new trial if the application had been made while that court had the power, it is equally proper for a court of equity to do so if the application be made on grounds arising after the court of law can no longer act. 1 A. K. Marsh. Ky. 237. A court of equity will not grant a new trial at law to enable a party to impeach a witness, or because the verdict is against evidence. 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 432. It will only interpose in cases of newly-discovered evidence, surprise, fraud, or the like, where the party is deprived of the means of defence by circumstances beyond his control. 1 Litt. Ky. 140; 2 Bibb, Ky. 241; 2 Hawks, No. C. 605; Willard, Eq. Jur. 357; 3 Graham & W. New Tr. 1455–1580.

12. A court of equity will often grant a second, and sometimes a third, fourth, and even fifth trial of a feigned issue, in cases where a court of law would not disturb a first verdict. 1 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 96. This arises from the consideration that the responsibility of the decision rests upon the judge in equity. 3 Graham & W. New Tr. 1570, 1571.

New trials may be granted in criminal as well as in civil cases, at the solicitation of the defendant, when he is convicted even of the highest offences. But a person once lawfully convicted on a sufficient indictment can never after, against his consent, be a second time put in peril for the same offence, unless the former conviction was instituted by the fraudulent procurement of the defendant with a view to shield himself from adequate punishment. 2 Graham & W. New Tr. 61–84. Where the accused has been acquitted, and his acquittal has not been procured by his own fraud or evil practice, the law, mingling justice with mercy in favorem vitæ et libertatis, does not permit a new trial. 16 Conn. 54. In civil actions for the recovery of penalties, and in some cases where the form of proceeding is criminal, if the object be only to establish a civil right, as in cases of quo warranto and the like, new trials may be granted even after acquittal. But, in such cases, when the verdict is for the defendant it will not, in general, be disturbed unless some rule of law be violated in the admission or rejection of evidence or in the charge of the court to the jury. 4 Term, 753; 2 Cow. N. Y. 811; 2 Graham & W. New Tr. 61.

NEW YORK. The name of one of the original states of the United States of America.

2. In its colonial condition this state was governed from the period of the revolution of 1688 by governors appointed by the crown, assisted by a council, which received its appointments also from the parental government, and by the representatives of the people. 1 Story, Const. b. 1, ch. 10.

There have been three constitutions adopted by the state since its colonial period: one in 1777, which remained in force until January 1, 1823, when the second went into operation. This second constitution remained until January 1, 1847, when the present constitution, which was adopted by a convention of the people at Albany, went into force.

The qualifications of the electors are thus described, namely: "Every male citizen of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a citizen for ten days and an inhabitant of this state one year next preceding any election, and for the last four months a resident of the county where he may offer his vote, shall be entitled to vote at such election in the election district of which he shall at the time be a resident, and not elsewhere, for all officers that now are or hereafter may be elective by the people; but such citizen shall have been for thirty days next preceding the election a resident of the district from which the officer is to be chosen for whom he offers his vote. But no man of color, unless he shall have been for three years a citizen of this state, and for one year next preceding any election shall have been seised and possessed of a freehold estate of the value of two hundred and fifty dollars over and above all debts and incumbrances charged thereon, and shall have been actually rated and paid a tax thereon, shall be entitled to vote at such election. And no person of color shall be subject to direct taxation unless he shall be seised and possessed of such real estate as aforesaid." Const. art. 2, § 1.

The Legislative Power.

3. This is lodged in a Senate and Assembly.

The Senate consists of thirty-two members, chosen, one for each senatorial district, for the term of two years, by the electors of the district.

The Assembly consists of one hundred and twenty-eight members, elected, one from each of the assembly districts, for the term of one year, by the people. A certain number of members is elected from each county, according to an apportionment by the legislature, and each county, except Hamilton, is to be always entitled to one member. The counties entitled to more than one member are divided into districts, each of which elects one member of the assembly. The allotment and division are to be revised after each census. No town is to be divided in forming assembly districts. The districts must contain, as nearly as possible, an equal number of inhabitants, excluding aliens and people of color not taxed. No member of the legislature can receive any civil appointment within the state, or to the senate of the United States, from the governor, or the governor and senate, or governor and legislature, during the term for which he was elected, and any person who after his election as a member of the legislature is elected to congress, or appointed to any office, civil or military, under the govern ment of the United States, by acceptance thereof vacates his seat.

4. The constitution contains the usual provisions for organization of the legislature; making each house judge of the qualifications of members; giving it power to regulate their conduct; for the keeping and publication of a record of proceedings; for open sessions; freedom of debate; preventing one house from adjourning without the consent of the other. No private or local bill may be passed which embraces more than one subject, and which does not express that subject in its title. Corporations may be formed by the legislature, but only under general laws, except in cases wherein, in the judgment of the legislature, the objects of the corporation cannot be attained under general laws. Special charters may not be granted to banks, but they may be formed under general laws. Const. art. 8, §§ 1–8.

The Executive Power.

5. The Governor is elected biennially, for the term of two years, by the people, or by the legislature in consequence of a failure to elect by the people. The governor must be a citizen of the United States, thirty years old at least, and have been for five years next preceding his election a resident within the state. He is commander-in-chief of the military and naval forces of the state; has power to convene the legislature (or the senate only) on extraordinary occasions; communicates by message to the legislature, at every session, the condition of the state, and recommends such matters to them as he judges expedient; transacts all necessary business with the officers of the government, civil and military; is to take care that the laws are faithfully executed; has the power to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons after conviction, for all offences except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions and with such restrictions and limitations as he may think proper, subject to such regulation as may be provided by law relative to the manner of applying for pardons. Upon conviction for treason, he has power to suspend the execution of the sentence until the case is reported to the legislature at its next meeting, when the legislature either pardons or commutes the sentence, directs the execution of the sentence, or grants a further reprieve. He must annually communicate to the legislature each case of reprieve, commutation, or pardon granted, stating the name of the convict, the crime of which he was convicted, the sentence and its date, and the date of the commutation, pardon, or reprieve. He has the veto power, but a bill may be passed over his veto by a vote of two-thirds of both houses.

6. The Lieutenant-Governor is elected at the same time, for the same term, and must possess the same qualifications, as the governor. He is president of the senate,—with only a casting vote, however. In case of the impeachment of the governor, or of his removal from office, death, inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, resignation, or absence from the state, the powers and duties of the office devolve upon the lieutenant-governor for the residue of the term or until the disability ceases. But when the governor, with the consent of the legislature, is out of the state in time of war, at the head of a military force thereof, he continues commander-in-chief of all the military force of the state. If during a vacancy of the office of governor the lieutenant-governor is impeached, displaced, resigns, dies, or becomes incapable of performing the duties of his office, or is absent from the state, the president of the senate acts as governor until the vacancy is filled or the disability ceases.

A Secretary of State, a Comptroller, a Treasurer, an Attorney-General, and a State Engineer and Surveyor are elected by the people biennially, for the term of two years each.

The Judicial Power.

7. The Court of Appeals consists of eight judges, four of whom are elected by the people of the state for eight years, and four selected from the justices of the supreme court having the shortest time to serve. Const. art. 6, § 2. The four judges taken from the supreme court serve only one year; and every second year one of those elected by the people at large goes out of office. Four terms of this court must be held each year, and five judges must concur in each decision. Code, §§ 11–15. It exercises an appellate jurisdiction for the correction of errors at law and in equity. It has exclusive jurisdiction to review upon appeal every act or determination (7 Barb. N. Y. 581; 1 N. Y. 428) made at a general term by the supreme court, or by the supreme court of the city of New York, or by the court of common pleas of the city and county of New York, in a judgment in an action of contract tried therein or brought there from another court, and, upon the appeal from such judgment, to review any intermediate order involving the merits and necessarily affecting the judgment (2 N. Y. 566–416) in an order affecting a substantial right made in such action, when such order in effect determines the action and prevents a judgment from which an appeal might be taken, 1 N. Y. 188, 228, 423, 534; in a final order affecting a substantial right made in a special proceeding or upon a summary application in an action after judgment. But such appeal is not allowed in an action originally commenced in a court of a justice of the peace, or in the marine court of the city of New York, or in a justices' court in the state. Code of Proc. tit. ii.; 2 Rev. Stat. 4th ed. 480.

8. The Supreme Court is composed of thirty-three judges, elected, four in each of the eight districts into which the state is divided, except the district composed of New York city, where five are at present elected and more may be authorized to be chosen, but not to exceed in the whole such number in proportion to its population, and shall be in conformity with the number of such judges in the residue of the state in proportion to its population. The justices in each district are classified so that one goes out of office every second year. The justice having the shortest time to serve, who is not a member of the court of appeals, is presiding judge in each district. Of those having the shortest time to serve, four taken from alternate districts are members of the court of appeals. The districts are further arranged in two classes, those numbered with the odd numbers constituting one class, those numbered with the even numbers the other, which elect their supreme judges alternate years. By this arrangement the vacancies in the court of appeals happen in the last year of service of four of the supreme judges every year. It is the court of general original jurisdiction. See Code of Proc. §§ 11–15.

The Circuit Court is held by one of the judges of the supreme court twice a year at least in each county.

9. The Court of Oyer and Terminer is composed in each county of a justice of the supreme court, the county judge, and two justices of the peace, elected for the purpose for the term of two years by the people of the county. The supreme judge and any two of the others constitute a quorum. In the city and county of New York the court is composed of a judge of the superior court and any two of the following: the judges of the court of common pleas, the mayor, recorder, or alderman. It is to inquire into all crimes and misdemeanors committed or triable in the county, to hear and determine all such, and to deliver the jails of all prisoners according to law.

Act of Sessions, more fully described as the court of general sessions of the peace, is held in each county by the county judge, who must designate the terms at which a jury is to be drawn. This court is to inquire into all the crimes and misdemeanors committed or triable in the county, and to hear, determine, and punish according to law all crimes and misdemeanors not punishable with death or imprisonment in state prison for life.

County Courts are held in each county, by a single judge, elected by the people for the term of four years. They have original civil jurisdiction only in cases where money or personal property not exceeding one hundred dollars in amount is demanded, for the foreclosure of mortgages on real estate, and the collection of the balance due after sale of the property, partition of real estate in the county, admeasurement of dower, management of the property of infants, mortgage and sale of the property of religious corporations, etc. They have also supervision of, and an appellate jurisdiction from, the decisions of justices of the peace. The county judge acts also as surrogate in counties which have a population of less than forty thousand.

10. Mayors' Courts are held in the various cities, with a civil and criminal jurisdiction varying somewhat in the different cities.

Recorders' Courts are held in some cities of the state, with powers substantially those of the mayors' courts in other cities of the state.

Justices of the Peace are elected in the various towns and cities for the term of four years, in number and classes as directed by law. They have jurisdiction of actions on contracts, for personal damages, for penalty on a bond, for fraud in sale, purchase, or exchange of personal property to an amount not exceeding one hundred dollars.

The Justices' Courts of the various cities have jurisdiction in cases under the charters and by-laws where the penalty does not exceed one hundred dollars. It also extends to one hundred dollars, and, on confession of judgment, to two hundred and fifty dollars, with the exception of certain actions where the people are concerned, and where the title to land comes in question, and actions for an assault and battery, false imprisonment, libel, slander, malicious prosecution, criminal conversation, and seduction, and matters of account where the sum total of the accounts exceeds four hundred dollars, and actions against an executor or administrator.

11. A Surrogate is elected in each county having a population of more than forty thousand inhabitants: having less than that population, the county judge discharges the duties of the surrogate. The Code of Procedure does not apply to matters testamentary and intestacy; and hence the rules of evidence and practice in the surrogates' courts are the same as formerly. Willard's Law of Executors, 174 et seq.; Wilcox vs. Smith, 26 Barb. N. Y. 316. The appeal from the decision of the surrogate is to the supreme court, and from that court to the court of appeals. The former jurisdiction of the court of probate is vested in the surrogates, subject to appeal as aforesaid.

The Superior Court of New York City is composed of six judges, elected by the people, of whom one is selected by his associates as chief justice. It has jurisdiction of actions for the recovery of real property or an interest or estate therein; for the foreclosure of personal-property mortgages; for recovery of personal property distrained; for recovery of forfeitures imposed by statute; against an officer or person appointed by him for acts done in virtue of said office or appointment, where the cause has arisen or the property is situated in said city; and of all other actions where all the defendants reside or are personally served with summons within the city, and of actions against corporations having their place of business in the city.

The Court of Common Pleas for the City and County of New York is composed of three judges, elected by the people. It has the same jurisdiction as the superior court within its limits, and, in addition, has power to review the judgments of the marine court of New York city, and of justices in that city.

12. The Marine Court of the City of New York has the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, and also of actions arising under the charter or by-laws of New York city where the penalty is more than twenty-five and less than one hundred dollars; action of contract for services rendered on board a vessel on the high seas, where the state courts have jurisdiction, though the damage exceeds one hundred dollars. But no admiralty powers are given. Code of Procedure, part 1, tit. vii.; 2 Rev. Stat. 4th ed. 492. There are other local courts, as superior court of the city of Buffalo, city court of Brooklyn, with limited jurisdiction given by act creating them.

The distinctive features of the present constitution, compared with the two former, are, 1st: that the present constitution imposes more stringent limitations on the legislative power than either of the former. 2d. It has applied the elective principle to the judiciary, and to various other officers not before elective by the people. 3d. It has shortened the term of office of the judges of the various courts, and, by means of frequent elections, has brought the judges more under the influence of popular feeling than formerly. 4th. It has consolidated law and equity in the same tribunal.

All the changes produced by the Code of Procedure cannot be noticed in so brief an article. The prominent ones are—1, the abolition of the distinction between law and equity, according to the constitution, and the adoption of a new system of pleading applicable to all remedies. Code, § 140. 2. The abolition of the rule with respect to interest as a ground of exclusion of witnesses. Code, § 398. 3. The abolition of all bills of discovery, and allowing the parties to the action to be examined as witnesses for and against each other. Code, § 389, as amended in 1859, stat. of 1859, p. 970. 4. Requiring the real parties in interest to be the parties to the action. Code, § 111. 5. Preventing an action from abating by the death, marriage, or other disability of a party, or by any transfer of interest if the cause of action survive, and allowing the action to be continued in the name of the party in interest. Code, 121. 6. Providing as a substitute for voluntary and compulsory references either of all or any of the issues of law or fact, or both, to one, or not exceeding three, referees. Code, 270–273.

13. The constitution provides for tribunals of conciliation; but none such has been established.

The finances and funds of the state are regulated by article VIII. Amongst other things, it forbids the legislature to sell or lease the canals, or the salt-springs, or to loan the credit of the state to or in and of any individual, association, or corporation. It limits the power of the legislature in the creation of debts, and provides for submitting the question to the people with respect to the same. It also contains the two following general provisions: Section 13. Every law which imposes, continues, or revives a tax shall distinctly state the tax and the object to which it is to be applied; and it shall not be sufficient to refer to any other law to fix such tax or object. Section 14. On the final passage in either house of the legislature of every act which imposes, continues, or revives a tax, or creates a debt or charge, or makes, continues, or revives any appropriation of public or trust money or property, or releases, discharges, or commutes any claim or demand of the state, the question shall be taken by ayes and noes, which shall be duly entered on the journals; and three-fifths of all the members elected to either house shall in all such cases, if necessary, constitute a quorum thereof.

14. Corporations may be formed under general laws, and the legislature is expressly forbidden to create them by special acts, except in cases where, in the judgment of the legislature, the objects of the corporation cannot be attained under general laws. Dues from corporations must be secured by the individual liability of the corporators. The term corporation is defined so as to include all associations and joint-stock companies having any of the powers and privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals and partnerships. The legislature is forbidden to grant bank-charters, but allowed to pass general laws for their creation. The individual stockholders are individually responsible to the amount of their stock for all the debts of the bank. Bill-holders have a preference in case of a failure of the bank. Const. art. viii. sec. 1–8.

NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE. In Practice. Proof of some new and material fact in the case, which has been ascertained since the verdict.

The discovery of such evidence will afford a ground for a new trial; but courts only interfere with verdicts for this cause under very special circumstances.

To entitle the party to relief, certain well-defined conditions are indispensable. It is a rule subject to rare exceptions, and applied perhaps with more stringency in criminal than in civil cases, that the sole object of the new evidence must not be to impeach or contradict witnesses sworn on the former trial, 7 Barb. N. Y. 271; 8 Gratt. Va. 637; it must not merely multiply testimony to any one or more of the facts already investigated, but must bring to light some new and independent truth of a different character, 3 Woodb. & M. C. NEWSPAPERS. Papers for conveying news, printed and distributed periodically.

NEXI. In Roman Law. Persons bound (nexi); that is, insolvents, who might be held in bondage by their creditors until their debts were discharged. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Heineccius, Antiq. Rom ad Inst. lib. 3, tit. 330; Calvinus, Lex.; Mackeldey, Civ. Law, § 486 a.

NEXT FRIEND. One who, without being regularly appointed guardian, acts for the benefit of an infant, married woman, or other person not sui juris.

NEXT OF KIN. This term is used to signify the relations of a party who has died intestate.

In general, no one comes within this term who is not included in the provisions of the statutes of distribution. 3 Atk. Ch. 422, 761; 1 Ves. Sen. Ch. 84. A wife cannot, in general, claim as next of kin of her husband, nor a husband as next of kin of his wife. But when there are circumstances in a will which induce a belief of an intention to include them under this term, they will be so considered, though in the ordinary sense of the word they are not. Hovenden, Fr. 288, 289; 1 Mylne & K. Ch. 82. See LEGACY; DISTRIBUTION; DESCENT.

NEXUM (Lat.). In Roman Law. The transfer of the ownership of a thing, or the transfer of a thing to a creditor as a security.

2. In one sense nexum includes mancipium; in another sense, mancipium and nexum are opposed, in the same way as sale and mortgage or pledge are opposed. The formal part of both transactions consisted in a transfer per æs et libram. The person who became nexus by the effect of a nexum placed himself in a servile condition, not becoming a slave, his ingenuitas being only in suspense, and was said nexum inire. The phrases nexi datio, nexi liberatio, respectively express the contracting and the release from the obligation.

3. The Roman law as to the payment of borrowed money was very strict. A curious passage of Gellius (xx. 1) gives us the ancient mode of legal procedure in the case of debt, as fixed by the Twelve Tables. If the debtor admitted the debt, or had been condemned in the amount of the debt by a judex, he had thirty days allowed him for payment. At the expiration of this time he was liable to the manus injectio, and ultimately to be assigned over to the creditor (addictus) by the sentence of the prætor. The creditor was required to keep him for sixty days in chains, during which time he publicly exposed the debtor, on three nundinæ, and proclaimed the amount of his debt. If no person released the prisoner by paying the debt, the creditor might sell him as a slave or put him to death. If there were several creditors, the letter of the law allowed them to cut the debtor in pieces and take their share of his body in proportion to their debt. Gellius says that there was no instance of a creditor ever having adopted this extreme mode of satisfying his debt. But the creditor might treat the debtor, who was addictus, as a slave, and compel him to work out his debt; and the treatment was often very severe. In this passage Gellius does not speak of nexi, but only of addicti, which is sometimes alleged as evidence of the identity of nexus and addictus, but it proves no such identity. If a nexus is what he is here supposed to be, the laws of the Twelve Tables could not apply; for when a man became nexus with respect to one creditor, he could not become nexus to another; and if he became nexus to several at once, in this case the creditors must abide by their contract in taking a joint security. This law of the Twelve Tables only applied to the case of a debtor being assigned over by a judicial sentence to several debtors, and it provided for a settlement of their conflicting claims. The precise condition of a nexus has, however, been a subject of much discussion among scholars. Smith, Dict. Rom. & Gr. Antiq.; MANCIPIUM.

NIECE. The daughter of a brother or sister. Ambl. Ch. 514; 1 Jac. Ch. 207.

NIEFE. In Old English Law. A woman born in vassalage.

NIENT COMPRISE (Law Fr. not included). An exception taken to a petition because the thing desired is not contained in that deed or proceeding whereon the petition is founded. Tomlyn, Law Dict.

NIENT CULPABLE (Law Fr. not guilty). The name of a plea used to deny any charge of a criminal nature, or of a tort.

NIENT DEDIRE (Law Fr. to say nothing).

Words used to signify that judgment be rendered against a party because he does not deny the cause of action: i.e. by default.

When a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county where the venue is laid, the practice in the English courts is, on an affidavit of the circumstances, to change it in transitory actions; or, in local actions, they will give leave to enter a suggestion on the roll, with a nient dedire, in order to have the trial in another county. 1 Tidd, Pract. 8th ed. 655.

NIENT LE FAIT (Law Fr.). In Pleading. The same as non est factum, a plea by which the defendant asserts that the deed declared upon is not his deed.

NIGHT. That space of time during which the sun is below the horizon of the earth, except that short space which precedes its rising and follows its setting, during which by its light the countenance of a man may be discerned. It is night when there is daylight, crepusculum or diluculum, enough left or begun to discern a man's face withal. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 550; 4 Blackstone, Comm. 224; Bacon, Abr. Burglary (D); 2 Russell, Crimes, 32; Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 278.

NIGHT WALKERS. Persons who sleep by day and walk by night, 5 Edw. III. c. 14; that is, persons of suspicious appearance and demeanor, who walk by night.

Watchmen may undoubtedly arrest them; and it is said that private persons may also do so. 2 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 120. But see 3 Taunt. 14; Hammond, Nisi P. 135. See 15 Viner, Abr. 555; Dane, Abr. Index.

NIHIL CAPIAT PER BREVE (Lat. that he take nothing by his writ). In Practice. The form of judgment against the plaintiff in an action, either in bar or in abatement. When the plaintiff has commenced his proceedings by bill, the judgment is nihil capiat per billam. Coke, Litt. 363.

NIHIL DICIT (Lat. he says nothing). The name of the judgment rendered against a defendant who fails to put in a plea or answer to the plaintiff's declaration by the day assigned. In such a case, judgment is given against the defendant of course, as he says nothing why it should not. See 15 Viner, Abr. 556; Dane, Abr. Index.

NIHIL HABET (Lat. he has nothing). The name of a return made by a sheriff, marshal, or other proper officer, to a scire facias or other writ, when he has not been able to serve it on the defendant. 5 Whart. Penn. 367.

Two returns of nihil are, in general, equivalent to a service. Yelv. 112; 1 Cowen, 70 1 Law Rep. No. C. 491; 4 Blackf. Ind. 188; 2 Binn. Penn. 40.

NIL DEBET (Lat. he owes nothing). In Pleading. The general issue in debt on simple contract. It is in the following form: "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he does not owe the said sum of money above demanded, or any part thereof, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country." When, in debt on specialty, the deed is the only inducement to the action, the general issue is nil debet. Stephen, Plead. 174, n.; 8 Johns. N. Y. 83; Dane, Abr. Index.

NIL HABUIT IN TENEMENTIS (Lat.). In Pleading. A plea by which the defendant, who is sued by his landlord in debt for rent upon a lease, but by deed indented, denies his landlord's title to the premises alleging that he has no interest in the tenements. 2 Lilly, Abr. 214; 12 Viner, Abr. 184; 15 id. 556.

NISI PRIUS (Lat. unless before). In Practice. For the purpose of holding trials by jury. Important words in the writ (venire) directing the sheriff to summon jurors for the trial of causes depending in the superior courts of law in England, which have come to be adopted, both in England and the United States, to denote those courts or terms of court held for the trial of civil causes with the presence and aid of a jury.

The origin of the use of the term is to be traced to a period anterior to the institution of the commission of nisi prius in its more modern form. By Magna Charta it was provided that the common pleas should be held in one place, and should not follow the person of the king; and by another clause, that assizes of novel disseisin and of mort d'ancestor, which were the two commonest forms of actions to recover land, should be held in the various counties before the justices in eyre. A practice obtained very early, therefore, in the trial of trifling causes, to continue the cause in the superior court from term to term, provided the justices in eyre did not sooner (nisi justiciarii diu) come into the county where the cause of action arose, in which case they had jurisdiction when they so came. Bracton, l. 3, c. 1, § 11. By the statute of nisi prius, 13 Edw. I. c. 30, enforced by 14 Edw. III. c. 16, justices of assize were empowered to try common issues in trespass and other suits, and return them, when tried, to the superior court, where judgment was given. The clause was then left out of the continuance and inserted in the venire, thus: "Præcipimus tibi quod venire facias coram justiciariis nostris apud Westm. in Octabis Scti Michælis, nisi talis et talis, tali die et loco, ad partes illas venerint, duodecim," etc. (we command you that you cause to come before our justices at Westminster, on the octave of Saint Michael, unless such and such a one, on such a day and place, shall come to those parts, twelve, etc.). Under the provisions of 42 Edw. III. c. 11, the clause is omitted from the venire, and the jury is respited in the court above, while the sheriff summons them to appear before the justices, upon a habeas corpora juratorum, or, in the king's bench, a distringas. See Sellon, Pract. Introd. lxv.; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 116; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 352–354; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 245, 382.

See, also, ASSIZE; COURTS OF ASSIZE AND NISI PRIUS; JURY.

NISI PRIUS ROLL. In Practice. The transcript of a case made from the record of the superior court in which the action is commenced, for use in the nisi prius court.

It includes a history of all the proceedings in the case, including the declaration, plea, replication, rejoinder, issue, etc. It must be presented in proper manner to the nisi prius court. When a verdict has been obtained and entered on this record, it becomes the postea, and is returned to the superior court.

NO AWARD. The name of a plea to an action or award. 2 Ala. 520; 1 N. Chipm. Vt. 131; 3 Johns. N. Y. 367.

NO BILL. Words frequently indorsed on a bill of indictment by the grand jury when they have not sufficient cause for finding a true bill. They are equivalent to Not found, or Ignoramus. 2 Nott & M'C. So. C. 558.

NOBILE OFFICIUM. In Scotch Law. An equitable power of the court of sessions, by which it is able, to a certain extent, to give relief when none is possible at law. Stair, Inst. b. iv. tit. 3, § 1; Erskine, Inst. 1. 3. 22; Bell, Dict.

NOBILITY. An order of men, in several countries, to whom privileges are granted at the expense of the rest of the people.

2. The constitution of the United States provides that no state shall "grant any title of nobility; and no person can become a citizen of the United States until he has renounced all titles of nobility." The Federalist, No. 84; 2 Story, U. S, Laws, 851.

3. There is not in the constitution any general prohibition against any citizen whomsoever, whether in public or private life, accepting any foreign title of nobility. An amendment of the constitution in this respect has been recommended by congress; but it has not been ratified by a sufficient number of states to make it a part of the constitution. Rawle, Const. 120; Story, Const. § 1346.

NOCUMENTUM (Lat. harm, nuisance). In Old English Law. A thing done whereby another man is annoyed in his free lands or tenements. Also, the assize or writ lying for the same. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 183; Old Nat. Brev. 108, 109. Manwood, For. Laws, c. 17, divides nocumentum into generale, commune, speciale. Reg. Orig. 197, 199; Coke, Will Case. Nocumentum was also divided into damnosum, for which no action lay, it being done by an irresponsible agent, and injuriosum et damnosum, for which there were several remedies. Bracton, 221; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 26, § 2.

NOLLE PROSEQUI. In Practice. An entry made on the record, by which the prosecutor or plaintiff declares that he will proceed no further.

2. A nolle prosequi may be entered either in a criminal or a civil case. In criminal cases, before a jury is impanelled to try an indictment, and also after conviction, the attorney-general has power to enter a nolle prosequi without the consent of the defendant; but after a jury is impanelled a nolle prosequi cannot be entered without the consent of the defendant. 17 Pick. Mass. 395; 20 id. 356; 1 Gray, Mass. 490; 7 id. 328; 12 Metc. Mass. 444; 12 Vt. 93; 3 Hawks, 613; 7 Humphr. Tenn. 152; 1 Bail. So. C. 151; 9 Ga. 306. It is for the prosecuting officer to enter a nol. pros. in his discretion, 3 Hawks, No. C. 613; but in some states leave must be obtained of the court. 1 Hill, N. Y. 377; 1 Va. Cas. 139; 12 Vt. 93; 7 Smith, Pen. Laws, 227.

3. It may be entered as to one of several defendants. 11 East, 307.

The effect of a nolle prosequi, when obtained, is to put the defendant without day; but it does not operate as an acquittal; for he may be afterwards reindicted, and, it is said, even upon the same indictment fresh process may be awarded. 6 Mod. 261; 1 Salk. 59; Comyns, Dig. Indictment (K); 2 Mass. 172; 4 Cush. Mass. 235; 13 Ired. No. C. 256. See 3 Cox, Cr. Cas. 93; 7 Humphr. Tenn. 159.

4. In civil cases, a nolle prosequi is considered not to be of the nature of a retraxit or release, as was formerly supposed, but an agreement only not to proceed either against some of the defendants, or as to part of the suit. See 1 Wms. Saund. 207, note 2, and the authorities there cited; 1 Chitty, Plead. 546. A nolle prosequi is now held to be no bar to a future action for the same cause, except in those cases where, from the nature of the action, judgment and execution against one is a satisfaction of all the damages sustained by the plaintiff. 3 Term, 511; 1 Wils. 98.

5. In civil cases, a nolle prosequi may be entered as to one of several counts, 7 Wend. N.Y. 301, or to one of several defendants, 1 Pet. 80; as in the case of a joint contract, where one of two defendants pleads infancy, the plaintiff may enter a nolle prosequi as to him, and proceed against the other. 1 Pick. Mass. 500. See, generally, 1 Pet. 74; 2 Rawle, Penn. 334; 1 Bibb, Ky. 337; 4 id. 387, 454; 3 Cow. N. Y. 335, 374; 5 Gill & J. Md. 489; 5 Wend. N. Y. 224; 12 id. 110; 20 Johns. N. Y. 126; 3 Watts, Penn. 460.

NOMEN (Lat.). In Civil Law. A name of a person or thing. In a stricter sense, the name which declared the gens or family: as, Porcius, Cornelius; the cognomen being the name which marked the individual: as, Cato, Marcus; agnomen, a name added to the cognomen for the purpose of description. The name of the person himself: e.g. nomen curiis addere. The name denoting the condition of a person or class: e.g. nomen liberorum, condition of children. Cause or reason (pro causa aut ratione): e.g. nomine culpæ, by reason of fault. A mark or sign of any thing, corporeal or incorporeal. Nomen supremum, i.e. God. Debt, or obligation of debt. A debtor. See Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

In Old English Law. A name. The Christian name, e.g. John, as distinguished from the family name: it is also called prænomen. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, §§ 7, 9; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.

In Scotch Law. Nomen debiti. Right to payment of a debt.

NOMEN COLLECTIVUM (Lat.). A word in the singular number which is to be understood in the plural in certain cases.

Misdemeanor, for example, is a word of this kind, and when in the singular may be taken as nomen collectivum and including several offences. 2 Barnew. & Ad. 75. Heir, in the singular, sometimes includes all the heirs. Felony is not such a term.

NOMEN GENERALISSIMUM (Lat.). A most universal or comprehensive term: e.g. land. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 19; 3 id. 172; Taylor, Law Gloss. So goods. 2 Williams, Ex. 1014.

NOMINAL DAMAGES. In Practice. A trifling sum awarded where a breach of duty or an infraction of the plaintiff's right is shown, but no serious loss is proved to have been sustained.

Wherever any act injures another's right, and would be evidence in future in favor of a wrong-doer, an action may be obtained for an invasion of the right without proof of any specific injury, 1 Wms. Saund. 346 a; 28 N. H 438; 13 Conn. 269; and wherever the breach of an agreement or the invasion of a right is established, the law infers some damage, and if none is shown will award a trifling sum: as, a penny, one cent, six and a quarter cents, etc. 14 Ill. 301; 4 Den. N. Y. 554; Sedgwick, Dam. 47.

2. Thus, such damages may be awarded in actions for flowing lands, 2 Stor. C. C. 661; 1 Rawle, Penn. 27; 12 Me. 183; 28 N. H. 438; injuries to commons, 2 East, 154; violation of trade-marks, 4 Barnew. & Ad. 410; and see 7 Cush. Mass. 322; 2 R. I. 566; infringement of patents, 1 Gall. C. C. 429, 483; diversion of water-courses, 5 Barnew. & Ad. 1; 1 Bingh. N. C. 549; 17 Conn. 288; 2 Ill. 544; 6 Ind. 39; 32 N. H. 90; but see 21 Ala. N. S. 309; 6 Ohio St. 187; trespass to lands, 24 Wend. N. Y. 188; 2 Tex. 206; see 4 Jones, No. C. 139; neglect of official duties, in some cases, 5 Metc. Mass. 517; 12 id. 535; 1 Den. N. Y. 548; 27 Vt. 563; 23 id. 306; 12 N. H. 341; breach of contracts, 1 Du. N. Y. 363; 2 Hill, N. Y. 644; 5 id. 290, 505; 6 Md. 274; and many other cases where the effect of the suit will be to determine a right. 2 Wils. 414; 12 Ad. & E. 488; 3 Scott, N. R. 390; 13 Conn. 361; 20 Mo. 603; 28 Me. 505; 19 Miss. 98; 2 La. Ann. 907. And see, in explanation and limitation, 10 Barnew. & C. 145; 14 C. B. 595; 1 Q. B. 636; 18 id. 252; 22 Vt. 231; 1 Dutch. N. J. 255; 14 B. Monr. Ky. 330; 5 Ind. 250; 6 Rich. So. C. 75.

The title or right is as firmly established as though the damages were substantial. Sedgwick, Dam. 47. As to its effect upon costs, see Sedgwick, Dam. 55; 2 Metc. Mass. 96; 1 Dow, Parl. Cas. 201; 1 Curt. C. C. 434; 22 Vt. 231.

NOMINAL PLAINTIFF. One who is named as the plaintiff in an action, but who has no interest in it, having assigned the cause or right of action to another, for whose use it is brought.

In general, he cannot interfere with the rights of his assignee, nor will he be permitted to discontinue the action, or to meddle with it. 1 Wheat. 233; 7 Cranch, 152; 1 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 411; 3 id. 242; 1 Johns. N. Y. 532, n.; 3 id. 426; 11 id. 47; 12 id. 237; 1 Phillipps, Ev. 90, Cowen's note 172; Greenleaf, Ev. § 173.

NOMINATE CONTRACT. A contract distinguished by a particular name, the use of which name determines the rights of all the parties to the contract: as, purchase and sale, hiring, partnership, loan for use, deposit, and the like. The law thus supersedes the necessity for special stipulations, and creates an obligation in the one party to perform, and a right in the other to demand, whatever is necessary to the explication of that contract. In Roman law there were twelve nominate contracts, with a particular action for each. Bell, Dict. Nominate and Innominate; Mackeldey, Civ. Law, §§ 395, 408; Dig. 2. 14. 7. 1.

NOMINATION (from Lat. nominare, to name). An appointment: as, I nominate A B executor of this my last will.

A proposition. The word nominate is used in this sense in the constitution of the United States, art. 2, s. 2: the president "shall nominate, and by and with the consent of the senate shall appoint, ambassadors," etc.

NOMINE PŒNÆ (Lat. in the nature of a penalty). In Civil Law. A condition annexed to heirship by the will of the deceased person. Domat, Civ. Law; Hallifax, Anal.

At Common Law. A penalty fixed by covenant in a lease for non-performance of its conditions. 2 Lilly, Abr. 221.

It is usually a gross sum of money, though it may be any thing else, appointed to be paid by the tenant to the reversioner, if the duties are in arrear, in addition to the duties themselves. Hammond, Nisi P. 411, 412.

To entitle himself to the nomine pœnæ, the landlord must make a demand of the rent on the very day, as in the case of a re-entry. 1 Saund. 287 b, note; 7 Coke, 28 b; Coke, Litt. 202 a; 7 Term, 117. A distress cannot be taken for a nomine pœnæ unless a special power to distrain be annexed to it by deed.

3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2451. See Bacon, Abr. Rent (K 4); Woodfall, Landl. & T. 253; Dane, Abr. Index.

NOMINEE. One who has been named or proposed for an office.

NON ACCEPTAVIT (Lat. he did not accept). In Pleading. The name of a plea to an action of assumpsit brought against the drawee of a bill of exchange upon a supposed acceptance by him. See 4 Mann. & G. 561.

NON-ACCESS. The non-existence of sexual intercourse between husband and wife is generally expressed by the words non-access of the husband to the wife; which expressions, in a case of bastardy, are understood to mean the same thing. 2 Starkie, Ev. 218, n.

In Pennsylvania, when the husband has access to the wife, no evidence short of absolute impotence of the husband is sufficient to convict a third person of bastardy with the wife. 6 Binn. Penn. 283.

In the civil law the maxim is, Pater is est quem nuptiæ demonstrant. Toullier, tom. 2, n. 787. The Code Napoléon, art. 312, enacts "que l'enfant conçu pendant le mariage a pour père le mari." See, also, 1 Browne, Penn. Appx. xlvii.

A married woman cannot prove the non-access of her husband. See 8 East, 193, 202; 11 id. 132; 12 id. 550; 13 Ves. Ch. 58; 4 Term, 251, 336; 6 id. 330.

NON-AGE. By this term is understood that period of life from the birth till the arrival of twenty-one years. In another sense it means under the proper age to be of ability to do a particular thing: as, when non-age is applied to one under the age of fourteen, who is unable to marry.

NON ASSUMPSIT (Lat. he did not undertake). In Pleading. The general issue in an action of assumpsit.

Its form is, "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he did not undertake or promise, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this he puts himself upon the country."

Under this plea almost every matter may be given in evidence, on the ground, it is said, that as the action is founded on the contract, and the injury is the non-performance of it, evidence which disaffirms the obligation of the contract, at the time when the action was commenced, goes to the gist of the action. Gilbert, C. P. 65; Salk. 279; 2 Strange, 738; 1 Bos. & P. 481. See 12 Viner, Abr. 189; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (2 G 1).

NON ASSUMPSIT INFRA SEX ANNOS (Lat. he has not undertaken within six years). In Pleading. The plea by which, when pleadings were in Latin, the defendant alleged that the obligation was not undertaken and the right of action had not accrued within six years, the period of limitation of the right to bring suit.

NON BIS IN IDEM. In Civil Law A phrase which signifies that no one shall be twice tried for the same offence: that is, that when a party accused has been once tried by a tribunal in the last resort, and either convicted or acquitted, he shall not again be tried. Code, 9. 2. 9. 11; Merlin, Répert. See JEOPARDY.

NON CEPIT MODO ET FORMA (Lat. he did not take in manner and form). In Pleading. The plea which raises the general issue in an action of replevin.

Its form is, "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he did not take the said cattle (or, goods and chattels, according to the subject of the action) in the said declaration mentioned, or any of them, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country."

It denies the taking the things and having them in the place specified in the declaration, both of which are material in this action. Stephen, Plead. 183, 184; 1 Chitty, Plead. 490.

NON-CLAIM. An omission or neglect by one entitled to make a demand within the time limited by law: as, when a continual claim ought to be made, a neglect to make such claim within a year and a day.

NON COMPOS MENTIS (Lat. not of sound mind, memory, or understanding). A generic term, including all the species of madness, whether it arise from idiocy, sickness, lunacy, or drunkenness. Coke, Litt. 247; 4 Coke, 124; 1 Phill. 100; 4 Comyns, Dig. 613; 5 id. 186; Shelford, Lun. 1; IDIOCY; LUNACY.

NON CONCESSIT (Lat. he did not grant). In English Law. The name of a plea by which the defendant denies that crown granted to the plaintiff by letters the patent the rights which he claims as a concession from the king: as, for example, when a plaintiff sues another for the infringement of his patent right, the defendant may deny that the crown has granted him such a right.

It does not deny the grant of a patent, but of the patent as described in the plaintiff's declaration. 3 Burr. 1544; 6 Coke, 15 b.

NON-CONFORMISTS. In English Law. A name given to certain dissenters from the rites and ceremonies of the church of England.

NON CONSTAT (Lat. it does not appear). Words frequently used, particularly in argument, to express dissatisfaction with the conclusions of the other party: as, it was moved in arrest of judgment that the declaration was not good, because non constat whether A B was seventeen years of age when the action was commenced. Swinburn, pt 4, § 22, p. 331.

NON CULPABILIS (Lat.). In Pleading. Not guilty. It is usually abbreviated non cul. 16 Viner, Abr. 1; 2 Gabbett, Crim. Law, 317.

NON DAMNIFICATUS (Lat. not injured). In Pleading. A plea to an action of debt on a bond of indemnity, by which the defendant asserts that the plaintiff has received no damage. 1 Bos. & P. 640, n. a; 1 Taunt. 428; 1 Saund. 116, n. 1; 2 id. 81; 7 Wentworth, Plead. 615, 616; 1 H. Blackst. 253; 2 Lilly, Abr. 224; 14 Johns. N. Y. 177; 5 id. 42; 20 id. 153; 3 Cow. N. Y. 313; 10 Wheat. 396, 405; 3 Halst. N. J. 1.

NON DEDIT. In Pleading. The general issue in formedon. See NE DONA PAS.

NON DEMISIT (Lat. he did not demise). In Pleading. A plea proper to be pleaded to an action of debt for rent, when the plaintiff declares on a parol lease. Gilbert, Debt, 436, 438; Buller, Nisi P. 177; 1 Chitty, Plead. 477.

It cannot be pleaded when the demise is stated to have been by indenture. 12 Viner, Abr. 178; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (2 W 48).

NON DETINET (Lat. he does not detain). In Pleading. The general issue in an action of detinue. Its form is as follows: "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he does not detain the said goods and chattels (or "deeds and writings," according to the subject of the action) in the said declaration specified, or any part thereof, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country."

It puts in issue the detainer only: a justification must be pleaded specially. 8 Dowl. Pract. Cas. 347. It is a proper plea to an action of debt on a simple contract in the case of executors and administrators. 6 East, 549; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (I); 1 Chitty, Plead. 476.

NON EST FACTUM (Lat. is not his deed). In Pleading. A plea to an action of debt on a bond or other specialty.

Its form is, "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that the said supposed writing obligatory (or "indenture," or "articles of agreement," according to the subject of the action) is not his deed. And of this he puts himself upon the country." 6 Rand. Va. 86; 1 Litt. Ky. 158.

It is a proper plea when the deed is the foundation of the action, 1 Wms. Saund. 38, note 3; 2 id. 187 a. note 2; 2 Ld. Raym. 1500; 11 Johns. N. Y. 476, and cannot be proved as declared on, 4 East, 585, on account of non-execution, 6 Term, 317, or variance in the body of the instrument. 1 Campb. 70; 11 East, 633; 6 Taunt. 394; 4 Maule & S. 470; 2 Dowl. & R. 662. Under this plea the plaintiff may show that the deed was void ab initio, 2 Wils. 341; 2 Campb. 272; 3 id. 33; 12 Mod. 101; 1 Ld. Raym. 315; 12 Johns. N. Y. 337; 13 id. 430; 10 Serg. & R. Penn. 25; 14 id. 208; see 2 Salk. 275; 6 Cranch, 219, or became so after making and before suit. 5 Coke, 119 b; 11 id. 27; 4 Cruise, Dig. 368. See 1 Chitty, Plead. 417, n.

In covenant, the defendant may, under this plea, avail himself of a mis-statement or omission of a qualifying covenant, Strange, 1146; 9 East, 188; 11 id. 639; 1 Campb. 70; 4 id. 20, or omission of a condition precedent. 11 East, 639; 7 Dowl. & R. 249.

NON EST INVENTUS (Lat. I have not found him). In Practice. The sheriff's return to a writ requiring him to arrest the person of the defendant, which signifies that he is not to be found within his jurisdiction. The return is usually abbreviated N. E. I. Chitty, Pract.

NON-FEASANCE. The non-performance of some act which ought to be performed.

When a legislative act requires a person to do a thing, its non-feasance will subject the party to punishment: as, if a statute require the supervisors of the highways to repair such highways, the neglect to repair them may be punished. See 1 Russell, Crimes, 48. See, also, MANDATUM.

NON FECIT (Lat. he did not make it). The name of a plea, for example, in an action of assumpsit on a promissory note. 3 Mann. & G. 446.

NON FECIT VASTUM CONTRA PROHIBITIONEM (Lat. he did not commit waste against the prohibition). In Pleading. The name of a plea to an action founded on a writ of estrepement, that the defendant did not commit waste contrary to the prohibition. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 226, 227.

NON IMPEDIVIT (Lat. he did not impede). In Pleading. The plea of the general issue in quare impedit. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 305; 3 Wooddeson, Lect. 36. In law French, ne disturba pas.

NON INFREGIT CONVENTIONEM (Lat. he has not broken the covenant). In Pleading. A plea in an action of covenant. This plea is not a general issue: it merely denies that the defendant has broken the covenants on which he is sued. It being in the negative, it cannot be used where the breach is also in the negative. Bacon, Abr. Covenant (L); 3 Lev. 19; 2 Taunt. 278; 1 Aik. Vt. 150; 4 Dall. Penn. 436; 7 Cow. N. Y. 71.

NON-JOINDER. In Pleading. The omission of one or more persons who should have been made parties to a suit at law or in equity, as plaintiffs or defendants.

IN EQUITY. Parties may be omitted when the number is great. 1 Smedes & M. 404. The relief granted in such cases will be so modified as not to affect the interests of others. 1 Pet. 299; 2 Paine, C. C. 536; 11 Ill. 254; 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 242. See PARTIES, §§ 9, 16, 17, 19. It must be taken ad vantage of before the final hearing, Ril. Ch. So. C. 138; 1 Ala. N. S. 580; 18 id. 576; 21 Conn. 586; 1 Des. So. C. 315; 1 Stockt. Ch. N. J. 401; 10 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 445; 2 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 17; 2 Iowa, 55; 2 McLean, C. C. 376, except in very strong cases, 1 Pet. 299, as, where a party indispensable to rendering a decree appears to the court to be omitted. 14 Vt. 178; 19 Ala. N. S. 213; 5 Ill. 424; 24 Me. 119. The objection may be taken by demurree, if the defect appear on the face of the bill, 5 Ill. 424; 1 Des. So. C. 315; 8 Ga. 506; 19 Ala. N. S. 121; 4 Rand. Va. 451; or by plea, if it do not appear. 9 Mo. 605. See 3 Cranch, 220. The objection may be avoided by waiver of rights as to the party omitted, 4 Wisc. 54, or a supplemental bill filed, in some cases. 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 605. It will not cause dismissal of the bill in the first instance, 3 Cranch, 189; 6 Conn. 421; 17 Ala. 270; 1 T. B. Monr. Ky. 189; 1 Dev. Eq. No. C. 354; 1 Hill, So. C. 53; but will, if it continues after objection made, 17 Ala. 270; 5 Mas. C. C. 561, without prejudice, 5 Mas. C. C. 561; 1 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 76; 3 id. 103; 6 id. 622; 4 B. Monr. Ky. 594; 6 id. 330; 7 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 451; 1 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 46. The cause is ordered to stand over in the first instance. 20 Me. 59; 9 Cow. N. Y. 320; 2 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 242.

In Law. See Abatement, 21, 22.

NON-JURORS. In English Law. Persons who refuse to take the oaths, required by law, to support the government. See 1 Dall. Penn. 170.

NON LIQUET (Lat. it is not clear). In Civil Law. Words by which the judges (judices), in a Roman trial, were accustomed to free themselves from the necessity of deciding a cause when the rights of the parties were doubtful. On the tablets which were given to the judges wherewith to indicate their judgment, was written N. L. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

NON-OBSTANTE. In English Law. These words, which literally signify notwithstanding, are used to express the act of the English king by which he dispenses with the law, that is, authorizes its violation.

He cannot by his license or dispensation make an offence dispunishable which is malum in se; but in certain matters which are mala prohibita he may, to certain persons and on special occasions, grant a non-obstante. Vaugh. 330–359; Lev. 217; Sid. 6, 7; 12 Coke, 18; Bacon, Abr. Prerogative (D 7). See Judgment non-obstante Veredicto.

NON-OBSTANTE VEREDICTO. Notwithstanding the verdict. See Judgment non-obstante Veredicto.

NON OMITTAS (Lat. more fully, non omittas propter libertatem, do not omit on account of the liberty or franchise). In Practice. A writ which lies when the sheriff returns on writ to him directed, that he hath sent to the bailiff of such a franchise, which hath return of writs, and he hath not served the writ; then the plaintiff shall have this writ directed to the sheriff, that he omit not on account of any franchise, but himself enter into the franchise and execute the king's writ. Termes de la Ley.

This clause is now usually inserted in all processes addressed to sheriffs. Wharton, Lex. 2d Lond. ed.; 2 Will. IV. c. 39; 3 Chitty, Stat. 494; 3 Chitty, Pract. 190, 310.

NON-PLEVIN. In Old English Law. A neglect to replevin land taken into the hands of the king upon default, within fifteen days, by which seisin was lost, as by default. Heugh. de Magn. Ch. c. 8. By 9 Edw. III. c. 2, no man shall lose his land by non-plevin.

NON PROS. An abbreviation of non prosequitur, he does not pursue. Where the plaintiff, at any stage of the proceedings, fails to prosecute his action, or any part of it, in due time, the defendant enters non prosequitur, and signs final judgment, and obtains costs against the plaintiff, who is said to be non pros'd. 2 Archbold, Pract. Chitty ed. 1409; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 296; 1 Tidd, Pract. 458; Graham, Pract. 763; 3 Chitty, Pract. 10; 1 Penn. Pract. 84; Caines, Pract. 102. The name non pros. is applied to the judgment so rendered against the plaintiff. 1 Sellon, Pract., and authorities above cited.

NON-RESIDENCE. In Ecclesiastical Law. The absence of spiritual persons from their benefices.

NON SUBMISSIT (Lat.). The name of a plea to an action of debt, or a bond to perform an award, by which the defendant pleads that he did not submit. Bacon, Abr. Arbitration, etc. (G).

NON SUM INFORMATUS (Lat.). In Pleading. I am not informed.

NON TENENT INSIMUL (Lat. they do not hold together). In Pleading. A plea to an action in partition, by which the defendant denies that he holds the property which is the subject of the suit, together with the complainant or plaintiff.

NON TENUIT (Lat. he did not hold). In Pleading. The name of a plea in bar in replevin, when the plaintiff has avowed for rent-arrear, by which the plaintiff avows that he did not hold in manner and form as the avowry alleges.

NON-TENURE. In Pleading. A plea in a real action, by which the defendant asserted that he did not hold the land, or at least some part of it, as mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration, 1 Mod. 250; in which case the writ abates as to the part with reference to which the plea is sustained. 8 Cranch, 242. It may be pleaded with or without a disclaimer. It was a dilatory plea, though not strictly in abatement, 2 Saund 44, n. 4; Dy. 210; Booth, Real Act. 179; 3 Mass. 312; 11 id. 216; but might be pleaded as to part along with a plea in bar as to the rest, 1 Lutw. 716; Rast. Ent. 231 a, b; and was subsequently considered as a plea in bar. 14 Mass. 239; 1 Me. 54; 2 N. H. 10; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (I 9).

NON-TERM. The vacation between two terms of a court.

NON-USER. The neglect to make use of a thing.

2. A right which may be acquired by use may be lost by non-user; and an absolute discontinuance of the use for twenty years affords presumption of the extinguishment of the right in favor of some other adverse right. 5 Whart. Penn. 584; 23 Pick. Mass. 141. See ABANDONMENT; EASEMENT.

3. Every public officer is required to use his office for the public good: a non-user of a public office is, therefore, a sufficient cause of forfeiture. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 153; 9 Coke, 50. Non-user for a great length of time will have the effect of repealing an old law. But it must be a very strong case which will have that effect. 13 Serg. & R. Penn. 452; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 94.

NONSENSE. That which in a written agreement or will is unintelligible.

2. It is a rule of law that an instrument shall be so construed that the whole, if possible, shall stand. When a matter is written grammatically right, but it is unintelligible and the whole makes nonsense, some words cannot be rejected to make sense of the rest, 1 Salk. 324; but when matter is nonsense by being contrary and repugnant to some precedent sensible matter, such repugnant matter is rejected. 14 Viner, Abr. 142; 15 id. 560. The maxim of the civil law on this subject agrees with this rule: Quæ in testamento ita sunt scripta, ut intelligi non possent: perinde sunt, ac si scripta non essent. Dig. 50. 17. 73. 3. See AMBIGUITY; CONSTRUCTION; INTERPRETATION.

3. In pleading, when matter is nonsense by being contradictory and repugnant to something precedent, the precedent matter, which is sense, shall not be defeated by the repugnancy which follows, but that which is contradictory shall be rejected: as in ejectment where the declaration is of a demise on the second day of January, and that the defendant postea scilicet, on the first of January, ejected him, here the scilicet may be rejected as being expressly contrary to the postea and the precedent matter. 5 East, 255; 1 Salk. 324.

NONSUIT. The name of a judgment given against the plaintiff when he is unable to prove his case, or when he refuses or neglects to proceed to the trial of a cause after it has been put at issue, without determining such issue.

A voluntary nonsuit is an abandonment of his cause by plaintiff, who allows a judgment for costs to be entered against him by absenting himself or failing to answer when called upon to hear the verdict. 1 Dutch. N. J. 556.

An involuntary non-suit takes place when the plaintiff, on being called, when his case is before the court for trial, neglects to appear, or when he has given no evidence on which a jury could find a verdict. 13 Johns. N. Y. 334.

2. In English practice, when issue has been joined, and the plaintiff neglects to bring on the issue to be tried during or before the following term and vacation, etc., the defendant may give twenty days' notice to the plaintiff to bring on the issue, to be tried at the sittings or assizes next after the expiration of the notice; and if plaintiff afterwards neglects to give notice of trial for such sittings or assizes, or to proceed to trial in pursuance of such notice of defendant, the defendant may suggest on record that the plaintiff has failed to proceed to trial, etc., and may sign judgment for his costs: provided that the judge may have power to extend time for proceeding to trial with or without terms. Comm. Law Proc. Act, 1852, §§ 100, 101; 3 Chitty, Stat. 519, 550.

3. A nonsuit is no bar to another action for same cause. The courts of the United States, 1 Pet. 469, 476; 9 Ind. 551; 14 Ark. 706; those of Pennsylvania, 1 Serg. & R. Penn. 360; 2 Binn. Penn. 234, 248; 4 id. 84; but see 26 Penn. St. 192; Massachusetts, 6 Pick. Mass. 117; Tennessee, 2 Ov. Tenn. 57; 4 Yerg. Tenn. 528; and Virginia, 1 Wash. Va. 87, 219, cannot order a nonsuit against a plaintiff who has given evidence of his claim. In Alabama, unless authorized by statute, the courts cannot enter a nonsuit. 1 Ala. 75; 4 id. 42. See 22 Ala. N. S. 613.

4. In New York, 12 Johns. N. Y. 299; 13 id. 334; 1 Wend. N. Y. 376; South Carolina, 2 Bay, So. C. 126, 445; 2 Bail. So. C. 321; 2 M'Cord, So. C. 26; Maine, 2 Me. 5; 3 id. 97; 41 id. 65; 42 id. 259; New Hampshire, 26 N. H. 351; 31 id. 92; Ohio, 4 Ohio, 628; Illinois, 17 Ill. 494; Florida, 5 Fla. 476; Indiana, 9 Ind. 179; Georgia, 16 Ga. 154; California, 1 Cal. 108, 125, 221; Missouri, 19 Mo. 101, a nonsuit may, in general, be ordered where the evidence is insufficient to support the action, but not till final submission of cause. 21 Mo. 93. See 3 Chitty, Pract. 910; 1 Sellon, Pract. 463; 1 Archbold, Pract. 787; Bacon, Abr.; 15 Viner, Abr. 560; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 376; 2 Tidd, Pract. 916 et seq.

NORTH CAROLINA. The name of one of the original states of the United States of America.

2. The territory which now forms this state was included in the grant made in 1663 by Charles II., to Lord Clarendon and others, of a much more extensive country. The boundaries were enlarged by a new charter granted by the same prince to the same proprietaries in the year 1665. By this charter the proprietaries were authorized to make laws, with the assent of the freemen of the province or their delegates, and they were invested with various other powers. Being dissatisfied with the form of government, the proprietaries procured the celebrated John Locke to draw up a plan of government for the colony, which was adopted, and proved to be impracticable: it was highly exceptionable on account of its disregard of the principles of religious toleration and national liberty, which are now universally admitted. After a few years of unsuccessful operation, it was abandoned. The colony had been settled at two points, one called the Northern and the other the Southern settlement, which were governed by separate legislatures. In 1729 the proprietaries surrendered their charter, when it became a royal province, and was governed by a commission and a form of government in substance similar to that established in other royal provinces. In 1732 the territory was divided, and the divisions assumed the names of North Carolina and South Carolina.

3. The constitution of North Carolina was adopted December 18, 1776. To this constitution amendments were made in convention June 4, 1835, which were ratified by the people on the 9th day of November of the same year, and took effect on the 1st day of January, 1836.

Every free white man of the age of twenty-one years, being a native or naturalized citizen of the United States, and who has been an inhabitant of the state for twelve months immediately preceding the day of any election, and has paid public taxes, is entitled to vote. See Acts 1856, c. 12, 13.

The Legislative Power.

The Senate consists of fifty members, chosen biennially, for the term of two years, by the qualified voters of the district. A senator must possess the qualifications of a voter, and, in addition, it is provided that no person who denies the being of God, the truth of the Christian religion, or the divine authority of the Old or New Testament, or who holds religious principles incompatible with the freedom or safety of the state, can hold any office of trust or profit in the civil department within the state.

The House of Commons is composed of one hundred and twenty representatives, apportioned among the counties in the ratio of the population as enumerated for the purposes of federal representation. They are elected biennially, for the term of two years. The qualifications required are the same as those of senators.

The Executive Power.

4. The Governor is elected biennially, by the qualified voters of the state, for the term of two years from the first day of January next following his election. He is not eligible more than four years in any term of six years. He must be thirty years of age, have resided five years in the state, and own in the state a freehold in lands and tenements to the value of one thousand pounds. The candidate having the largest number of votes is elected; and in case of no election or a contested election, the matter is to be decided by the joint action of the two houses.

The Council of the state consists of seven members, elected biennially by a joint vote of the senate and house of commons. Four of these form a quorum, and their duty is to advise the governor in the execution of his office, particularly in filling vacancies occurring during the recess of the general assembly in offices in which the right of appointment is by the constitution vested in that body. The appointees in such cases are to have a temporary commission, which expires with the end of the next session of the general assembly.

The Judicial Power.

5. The Supreme Court is composed of three judges, elected by joint ballot in the two houses of assembly, to hold their office during good behavior. Of these, one is selected by his associates to preside, and is styled the chief justice. It is almost entirely an appellate tribunal, having original jurisdiction only in proceedings by a bill in equity, or an information in the nature of a bill in equity, filed on behalf of the state, in the name of the attorney-general, to repeal grants and other letters patent obtained by fraud or false suggestions. It has appellate jurisdiction over all cases in law or equity brought before it by appeal or otherwise from a superior court of law or a court of equity. It has also power to issue writs of certiorari, scire facias, habeas corpus, and other writs which may be necessary for the exercise of its jurisdiction, and agreeable to the principles and usages of law. Criminal cases are to be certified to the superior court from which the appeal was taken, which court proceeds to judgment in accordance with the decision of the supreme court.

6. A Superior Court is held by one judge, at the court-house in each county of the state, twice in each year. For this purpose the state is divided into seven circuits, each composed of ten or more counties; and the seven judges who are appointed to hold these courts ride the circuits alternately, with the power to interchange; but no judge rides the same circuit twice in succession. The judges are appointed in the same manner and for the same term as the supreme judges. The superior courts "have cognizance and legal jurisdiction, unless otherwise provided, of all pleas, real, personal, and mixed, and also all suits and demands relative to dower, partition, legacies, filial portions, and estates of intestates; and, unless it be otherwise provided, of all pleas of the state, and criminal matters of what nature, degree, or denomination soever, whether brought before them by original or by mesne process, or by certiorari, writ of error, appeal from any inferior court, or by any other way or manner whatsoever; and they are hereby declared to have full power and authority to give judgment and to award execution and all necessary process thereon," etc. See Revised Code, c. 31, § 17.

The same judges who hold the superior courts of law are required and authorized to hold, at the same times and places, courts of equity, and in doing so shall "possess all the powers and authorities within the same that the court of chancery, which was formerly held in this state under the colonial government, used and exercised, and that are properly and rightfully incident to such a court, agreeable to the laws and usages now in force and practice." See Revised Code, c. 32, §§ 1–3.

7. The Courts of Pleas and Quarter Sessions are held four times in each year, in the several counties of the state, by three or more justices of the peace, who "shall take cognizance of, and have full power and authority and original jurisdiction to hear, try, and determine, all causes of a civil nature whatever at the common law within their respective counties, where the original jurisdiction is not by statute confined to one or more magistrates out of court, or to the supreme or superior courts; of all penalties to the amount of one hundred dollars and upwards incurred by violation of the penal statutes of the state or of laws passed by the congress of the United States, where by such law jurisdiction is given to the courts of the several states; of suits for dower, partition, filial portions, legacies, and distributive shares of intestates' estates, and all other matters relating thereto; to try, hear, and determine all matters relating to orphans, idiots, and lunatics, and the management of their estates, in like manner as courts of equity exercise jurisdiction in such cases; to inquire of, try, hear, and determine all petit larcenies, assaults and batteries, all trespasses and breaches of the peace, and all other crimes and misdemeanors the judgment upon conviction whereof shall not extend to life, limb, or member: excepting those only whereof the original jurisdiction is given exclusively to a single justice or to two justices of the peace, to the superior or to the supreme court."

In some of the counties jury trials are abolished by special acts of the legislature, and in others such trials are had twice only in the year.

8. Justices of the Peace are recommended to the governor by the general assembly, who hold office during good behavior. They have jurisdiction, singly, of all debts and demands due on bonds, notes, or liquidated accounts, stated in writing and signed by the party owing the same, and all balances due on such debts and demands where the principal of such debt or demand, or balance due thereon, does not exceed one hundred dollars, though the principal and interest thereof may exceed that sum; and all judgments rendered on such debts and demands where the principal of the judgment may not exceed one hundred dollars, though the principal, interest, and cost may exceed that sum; and all debts and demands of sixty dollars and under due on any parol agreement, or for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered, or for work or labor done, or for specific articles, and all balances of sixty dollars and under due on such last-mentioned debts or demands, and all judgments rendered thereon where the principal of the judgment may not exceed sixty dollars, though the principal, interest, and cost may exceed that sum, and all forfeitures or penalties not exceeding one hundred dollars," etc. See Revised Code, c. 31, § 6.

NOSOCOMI. In Civil Law. Persons who have the management and care of hospitals for paupers. Clef Lois Rom. mot Administrateurs.

NOT FOUND. Words indorsed on a bill of indictment by a grand jury, when they have not sufficient evidence to find a true bill. See IGNORAMUS.

NOT GUILTY. In Pleading. The general issue in several sorts of actions.

2. In trespass, its form is as follows: "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the force and injury, when, etc., and says that he is not guilty of the said trespasses above laid to his charge, or any part thereof, in the manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country."

3. Under this issue the defendant may give in evidence any matter which directly controverts the truth of any allegation, which the plaintiff on such general issue will be bound to prove, 1 Bos. & P. 213; and no person is bound to justify who is not primâ facie a trespasser. 2 Bos. & P. 359; 2 Saund. 284 d. For example, the plea of not guilty is proper in trespass to persons, if the defendant have committed no assault, battery, or imprisonment, etc.; and in trespass to personal property, if the plaintiff had no property in the goods, or the defendant were not guilty of taking them, etc.; and in trespass to real property, this plea not only puts in issue the fact of trespass, etc., but also the title, which, whether freehold or possessory in the defendant or a person under whom he claims, may be given in evidence under it, which matters show primâ facie that the right of possession, which is necessary in trespass, is not in the plaintiff, but in the defendant or the person under whom he justifies. 7 Term, 354; 8 id. 403; Willes, 222; Stephen, Plead. 178; 1 Chitty, Plead. 491, 492.

4. In trespass on the case in general, the formula is as follows: "And the said C D, by E F, his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he is not guilty of the premises above laid to his charge, in manner and form as the said A B hath above complained. And of this the said C D puts himself upon the country."

5. This, it will be observed, is a mere traverse, or denial, of the facts alleged in the declaration, and therefore, on principle, should be applied only to cases in which the defence rests on such denial. But here a relaxation has taken place; for, under this plea, a defendant is permitted not only to contest the truth of the declaration, but, with some exceptions, to prove any matter of defence that tends to show that the plaintiff has no cause of action, though such matters be in confession and avoidance of the declaration: as, for example, a release given, or satisfaction made. Stephen, Plead. 182, 183; 1 Chitty, Plead. 486.

6. In trover. It is not usual in this action to plead any other plea, except the statute of limitations; and a release, and the bankruptcy of the plaintiff, may be given in evidence under the general issue. 7 Term, 391.

In debt on a judgment suggesting a devastavit, an executor may plead not guilty. 1 Term, 462.

In criminal cases, when the defendant wishes to put himself on his trial, he pleads not guilty. This plea makes it incumbent upon the prosecutor to prove every fact and circumstance constituting the offence, as stated in the indictment, information, or complaint. On the other hand, the defendant may give in evidence under this plea not only every thing which negatives the allegations in the indictment, but also all matter of excuse and justification.

NOT POSSESSED. In Pleading. A plea sometimes used in actions of trover, when the defendant was not possessed of the goods at the commencement of the action. 3 Mann. & G. 101, 103.

NOT PROVEN. In Scotch Criminal Law. It is a peculiarity of the Scotch jury system in criminal trials that it admits a verdict of not proven, corresponding to the non liquet of the Roman law. The legal effect of this is equivalent to not guilty; for a prisoner in whose case it is pronounced cannot be tried again. According to the homely but expressive maxim of the law, no man can be made to thole an assize twice. But, although the verdict of not proven is so far tantamount to an acquittal that the party cannot be tried a second time, it falls very far short of it with regard to the effect upon his reputation and character. He goes away from the bar of the court with an indelible stigma upon his fame. There stands recorded against him the opinion of a jury that the evidence respecting his guilt was so strong that they did not dare to pronounce a verdict of acquittal. So that many of the evil consequences of a conviction follow, although the jury refuse to convict. When Sir Nicholas Throckmorton was tried and acquitted by an English jury in 1554, he said, "It is better to be tried than to live suspected." But in Scotland a man may be not only tried, but acquitted, and yet live suspected, owing to the sinister influence of a verdict of not proven. Forsyth, Hist. Trial by Jury, 334–339.

NOTARIUS. In Civil Law. One who took notes or draughts in short-hand of what was said by another, or of proceedings in the senate or in a court. One who draughted written instruments, wills, conveyances, etc. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

In English Law. A notary. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.; Cowel.

NOTARY, NOTARY PUBLIC. An officer appointed by the executive or other appointing power, under the laws of different states.

2. Notaries are of ancient origin: they existed in Rome during the republic, and were called tabelliones forenses, or personæ publicæ. Their employment consisted in the drawing up of legal documents. They exist in all the countries of Europe, and as early as A.D. 803 were appointed by the Frankish kings and the popes. Notaries in England are appointed by the archbishop of Canterbury. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21, § 4. They are officers of the civil and canon law.

3. Their duties differ somewhat in the different states, and are prescribed by statutes. They are generally as follows: to protest bills of exchange and draw up acts of honor; to authenticate and certify copies of documents; to receive the affidavits of mariners and draw up protests relating to the same; to attest deeds and other instruments, and to administer oaths.

By act of congress, Sept. 16, 1850, notaries are authorized to administer oaths and take acknowledgments in all cases where under the laws of the United States justices of the peace were formerly authorized to act.

4. The acts of notaries are respected by the custom of merchants and the law of nations. Their protest of a bill is received as evidence in the courts of all civilized countries. Except in cases of protest of bills, the signature of a notary to an instrument going to a foreign country ought to be authenticated by the consul or representative of that country.

5. The notaries of England have always considered themselves authorized to administer oaths; and the act 5 & 6 Will. IV. has placed it beyond dispute. In this country they do not exercise the power unless authorized by statute, except in cases where the oath is to be used out of the state or in the courts of the United States.

A notary is liable for any damage that may arise from the imperfect discharge of his duty. See, generally, 6 Toullier, 211; Burn, Eccl. Law; 2 Harr. & J. Md. 396; 7 Vt. 22; 8 Wheat. 326; 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 484; 1 Mo. 434; Manual for Notaries; Sewell, Bank.

NOTE OF A FINE. The fourth step of the proceedings in acknowledging a fine, which is only an abstract of the writ of covenant and the concord, naming the parties, the parcel of land, and the agreement, and enrolled of record in the proper office. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 351, App. n. iv. § 3; 1 Stephen, Comm. 518.

NOTE OF HAND. A popular name for a promissory note.

NOTE OR MEMORANDUM. An informal note or abstract of a transaction made on the spot, and required by the Statute of Frauds.

The form of it is immaterial; but it must contain the essential terms of the contract expressed with such a degree of certainty that it may be understood without reference to parol evidence to show intent of parties. Browne, Stat. of Frauds, 353, 386, and cases cited; 43 Me. 158; 4 R. I. 14; 14 N. Y. 584; 1 E. D. Smith, N. Y. 144; 2 id. 93; 31 Miss. 17; 11 Cush. Mass. 127; 9 Rich. So. C. 215; 10 id. 60; 23 Mo. 423; 17 Ill. 354; 3 Iowa, 430. In some states, and in England, the consideration need not be stated in the note or memorandum. 5 East, 10; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 595; 5 Cranch, 142; 17 Mass. 122; 6 Conn. 81. See Browne, Stat. of Frauds.

NOTE OF PROTEST. A note or minute of the protest, made by the notary, at time of protest, on the bill, to be completed or filled out at his leisure. Byles, Bills, 5th ed. 9.

NOTES. See JUDGE'S NOTES; MINUTES.

NOTICE. The information given of some act done, or the interpellation by which some act is required to be done. Knowledge: as, A had notice that B was a slave. 5 How. 216; 7 Penn. Law Journ. 119.

Actual notice exists when knowledge is actually brought home to the party to be affected by it.

Constructive notice exists when the party, by any circumstance whatever, is put upon inquiry, or when certain acts have been done which the party interested is presumed to have knowledge of on grounds of public policy. 2 Mas. C. C. 531; 14 Pick. Mass. 224; 4 N. H. 397; 14 Serg. & R. Penn. 333. The recording a deed, 23 Mo. 237; 25 Barb. N. Y. 635; 28 Miss. 354; 4 Kent, Comm. 182, n., an advertisement in a newspaper, when authorized by statute as a part of the process, public acts of government, and lis pendens, furnish constructive notice. Notice to an agent is, in general, notice to the principal. 25 Conn. 444; 10 Rich. So. C. 293.

2. The giving notice in certain cases, obviously, is in the nature of a condition precedent to the right to call on the other party for the performance of his engagement, whether his contract were express or implied. Thus, in the familiar instance of bills of exchange and promissory notes, the implied contract of an indorser is that he will pay the bill or note provided it be not paid, on presentment at maturity, by the acceptor or maker (being the party primarily liable), and provided that he (the indorser) has due notice of the dishonor, and without which he is discharged from all liability: consequently, it is essential for the holder to be prepared to prove affirmatively that such notice was given, or some facts dispensing with such notice. 1 Chitty, Pract. 496.

3. Whenever the defendant's liability to perform an act depends on another occurrence which is best known to the plaintiff, and of which the defendant is not legally bound to take notice, the plaintiff must prove that due notice was in fact given. So, in cases of insurances on ships, a notice of abandonment is frequently necessary to enable the assured plaintiff to proceed as for a total loss when something remains to be saved, in relation to which, upon notice, the insurers might themselves take their own measures.

Notice may be written or oral, in many cases, at the option of the party required to give it; but written notice is generally preferable, both as avoiding doubt and ambiguity in its terms, and as admitting more easy and exact proof of delivery.

NOTICE, AVERMENT OF. In Pleading. The statement in a pleading that notice has been given.

2. When the matter alleged in the pleading is to be considered as lying more properly in the knowledge of the plaintiff than of the defendant, then the declaration ought to state that the defendant had notice thereof: as, when the defendant promised to give the plaintiff as much for a commodity as another person had given or should give for the like.

3. But where the matter does not lie more properly in the knowledge of the plaintiff than of the defendant, notice need not be averred. 1 Saund. 117, n. 2; 2 id. 62 a, n. 4; Freem. 285. Therefore, if the defendant contracted to do a thing on the performance of an act by a stranger, notice need not be averred; for it lies in the defendant's knowledge as much as the plaintiff's, and he ought to take notice of it at his peril. Comyns, Dig. Pleader (C 75). See Comyns, Dig. Pleader (C 73, 74, 75); Viner, Abr. Notice; Hardr. 42; 5 Term, 621.

4. The omission of an averment of notice, when necessary, will be fatal on demurrer or judgment by default, Croke Jac. 432; but may be aided by verdict, 1 Strange, 214; 1 Saund. 228 a; unless in an action against the drawer of a bill, when the omission of the averment of notice of non-payment by the acceptor is fatal, even after verdict. Dougl. 679.

NOTICE OF DISHONOR. A notice given to a drawer or indorser of a bill, or an indorser of a negotiable note, by a subsequent party, that it has been dishonored either by non-acceptance in the case of a bill, or by non-payment in the case of an accepted bill or a note.

2. The notice must contain a description of the bill or note, 5 Cush. Mass. 546; 14 Conn. 362; 1 Fla. 301; 1 Wisc. 264, sufficient to leave no doubt in the mind of the indorser, as a reasonable man, what note was intended. 3 Metc. Mass. 495; 5 Cush. Mass. 546; 7 Ala. N. s. 205; 12 N. Y. 551; 19 id. 518; 26 Me. 45; 11 Wheat. 431. See 10 N. Y. 279; 11 Mees. & W. Exch. 809; 5 Humphr. Tenn. 335. As to what is a mis-description, see 7 Exch. 578; 1 Mann. & G. 76; 11 Mees. & W. Exch. 809; 15 id. 231; 9 Q. B. 609; 9 Pet. 33; 11 Wheat. 431; 17 How. 606; 1 N. Every person who, by and immediately upon the dishonor of the note or bill, and only upon such dishonor, becomes liable to an action either on the paper or on the consideration for which the paper was given, is entitled to immediate notice. 1 Parsons, Notes & B. 499. The holder need give notice only to the parties and to the indorser whom he intends to hold liable. 25 Barb. N. Y. 138; 2 Johns. N. Y. 204; 19 Me. 62; 16 Mart. La. 220; 11 La. Consult Bayley, Byles, Chitty, Story, on Bills of Exchange; Story, Promissory Notes, Parsons, Notes & Bills.

NOTICE TO PLEAD. Written notice to defendant, requiring him to plead within a certain time. It must always be given before plaintiff can sign judgment for want of a plea. 1 Chitty, Archb. Pract. Prent. ed. 221. Notice to plead, indorsed on the declaration or delivered separately, is sufficient without demanding plea or rule to plead, in England, by statute. See 3 Chitty, Stat. 515.

NOTICE OF PROTEST. A notice given to a drawer or indorser of a bill, or to an indorser of a note, by a prior party, that the bill has been protested for refusal of payment or acceptance. See NOTICE OF DISHONOR.

NOTICE TO PRODUCE PAPERS

In Practice. When it is intended to give secondary evidence of a written instrument or paper which is in the possession of the opposite party, it is, in general, requisite to give him notice to produce the same on the trial of the cause, before such secondary evidence can be admitted.

2. To this general rule there are some exceptions: first, in cases where, from the nature of the proceedings, the party in possession of the instrument has notice that he is charged with the possession of it, as in the case of trover for a bond, 14 East, 274; 4 Taunt. 865; 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 154; 4 Wend. N. Y. 626; 1 Campb. 143; second, where the party in possession has obtained the instrument by fraud. 4 Esp. 256. See 1 Phillipps, Ev. 425; 1 Starkie, Ev. 362; Roscoe, Civ. Ev. 4.

3. In general, a notice to produce papers ought to be given in writing, and state the title of the cause in which it is proposed to use the papers or instruments required. 2 Stark. 19. It seems, however, that the notice may be by parol. 1 Campb. 440. It must describe with sufficient certainty the papers or instruments called for, and must not be too general and by that means be uncertain. Ry. & M. 341; M'Clel. & Y. Exch. 139.

4. The notice may be given to the party himself, or to his attorney. 2 Term, 203, n.; 3 id. 306; Ry. & M. 327; 1 Mood. & M. 96.

The notice must be served a reasonable time before trial, so as to afford an opportunity to the party to search for and produce the instrument or paper in question. 1 Stark. 283; Ry. & M. 47, 327; 1 Mood. & M. 96, 335, n.

5. When a notice to produce an instrument or paper in the cause has been proved, and it is also proved that such paper or instrument was, at the time of the notice, in the hands of the party or his privy, and upon request in court he refuses or neglects to produce it, the party having given such notice and made such proof will be entitled to give secondary evidence of such paper or instrument thus withheld.

NOTICE TO QUIT. A request from a landlord to his tenant to quit the premises leased, and to give possession of the same to him, the landlord, at a time therein mentioned. 3 Wend. N. Y. 337, 357; 7 Halst. N. J. 99.

2. The form of the notice. The notice or demand of possession should contain a request from the landlord to the tenant or person in possession to quit the premises which he holds from the landlord (which premises ought to be particularly described, as being situate in the street and city or place, or township and county), and to deliver them to him on or before a day certain,—generally, when the lease is for a year, the same day of the year on which the lease commences. But where there is some doubt as to the time when the lease is to expire, it is proper to add, "or at the expiration of the current year of your tenancy." 2 Esp. 589. It should be dated, signed by the landlord himself, or by some person in his name, who has been authorized by him, and directed to the tenant. The notice must include all the premises under the same demise; for the landlord cannot determine the tenancy as to part of the premises demised and continue it as to the residue. For the purpose of bringing an ejectment, it is not necessary that the notice should be in writing, except when required to be so under an express agreement between the parties. Comyns, Dig. Estate by Grant (G 11, n. p.); 2 Campb. 96; 2 Mann. & R. 439. But it is the general and safest practice to give written notices; and it is a precaution which should always, when possible, be observed, as it prevents mistakes and renders the evidence certain and correct. Care should be taken that the words of a notice be clear and decisive, without ambiguity or giving an alternative to the tenant; for if it be really ambiguous or optional it will be invalid. Adams, Ej. 122.

3. As to the person by whom the notice is to be given. It must be given by the person interested in the premises, or his agent properly appointed. Adams, Ej. 120. See 3 C. B. 215. As the tenant is to act upon the notice at the time it is given to him, it is necessary that it should be such as he may act upon with security, and should, therefore, be binding upon all the parties concerned at the time it is given. Where, therefore, several persons are jointly interested in the premises, they need not all join in the notice; but, if any of them be not a party at the time, no subsequent ratification by him will be sufficient by relation to render the notice valid. But see 5 East, 461; 2 Phillipps, Ev. 184; 2 Esp. 677; 1 Barnew. & Ad. 135; 7 Mees. & W. Exch. 139. But if the notice be given by an agent, it is sufficient if his authority is afterwards recognized. 3 Barnew. & Ald. 689. But see 10 Barnew. & C. 621.

4. As to the person to whom the notice should be given. When the relation of landlord and tenant subsists, difficulties can seldom occur as to the party upon whom the notice should be served. It should invariably be given to the tenant of the party serving the notice notwithstanding a part may have been underlet or the whole of the premises may have been assigned, Adams, Ej. 119; 5 Bos. & P. 330; 14 East, 234; 6 Barnew. & C. 41; unless, perhaps, the lessor has recognized the sub-tenant as his tenant. 10 Johns. N. Y. 270. When the premises are in possession of two or more as joint tenants or tenants in common, the notice should be to all. A notice addressed to all and served upon one only will, however, be a good notice. Adams, Ej. 123.

5. As to the mode of serving the notice. The person about serving the notice should make two copies of it, both signed by the proper person, then procure one or more respectable persons for witnesses, to whom he should show the copies, who, upon comparing them and finding them alike, are to go with the person who is to serve the notice. The person serving the notice then, in their presence, should deliver one of these copies to the tenant personally, or to one of his family, at his usual place of abode, although the same be not upon the demised premises, 2 Phillipps, Ev. 185, or serve it upon the person in possession; and where the tenant is not in possession, a copy may be served on him, if he can be found, and another on the person in possession. The witnesses should then, for the sake of security, sign their names on the back of the copy of the notice retained, or otherwise mark it so as to identify it; and they should also state the manner in which the notice was served. In the case of a joint demise to two defendants, of whom one alone resided upon the premises, proof of the service of the notice upon him has been held to be sufficient ground for the jury to presume that the notice so served upon the premises has reached the other who resided in another place. 7 East, 553; 5 Esp. 196.

6. At what time it must be served. It must be given six months before the expiration of the lease at common law. 1 Term, 159; 3 id. 13; 8 Cow. N. Y. 13; 1 Vt. 311; 1 Dan. Ky. 30; 5 Yerg. Tenn. 431; 4 Ired. No. C. 291; 17 Mass. 287; see 2 Pick. Mass. 70, 71; 8 Serg. & R. Penn. 458; 2 Rich. So. C. 346; and three months is the common time under statutory regulations; and where the letting is for a shorter period the length of notice is regulated by the time of letting. 6 Bingh. 362; 5 Cush. Mass. 563; 23 Wend. N. Y. 616. Difficulties sometimes arise as to the period of the commencement of the tenancy; and when a regular notice to quit on any particular day is given, and the time when the term began is unknown, the effect of such notice, as to its being evidence or not of the commencement of the tenancy, will depend upon the particular circumstances of its delivery: if the tenant, having been applied to by his landlord respecting the time of the commencement of the tenancy, has informed him it began on a certain day, and in consequence of such information a notice to quit on that day is given at a subsequent period, the tenant is concluded by his act, and will not be permitted to prove that in point of fact the tenancy has a different commencement; nor is it material whether the information be the result of design or ignorance, as the landlord is in both instances equally led into error. Adams, Ej. 130; 2 Esp. 635; 2 Phillipps, Ev. 186. In like manner, if the tenant at the time of delivery of the notice assent to the terms of it, it will waive any irregularity as to the period of its expiration; but such assent must be strictly proved. 4 Term, 361; 2 Phillipps, Ev. 183. When the landlord is ignorant of the time when the term commenced, a notice to quit may be given not specifying any particular day, but ordering the tenant in general terms to quit and deliver up the possession of the premises at the end of the current year of his tenancy thereof, which shall expire next after the end of three months from the date of the notice. See 2 Esp. C. 589.

7. What will amount to a waiver of the notice. The acceptance of rent accruing subsequently to the expiration of the notice is the most usual means by which a waiver of it may be produced; but the acceptance of such rent is open to explanation; and it is the province of the jury to decide with what views and under what circumstances the rent is paid and received. Adams, Ej. 139; 2 Campb. 387. If the money be taken with an express declaration that the notice is not thereby intended to be waived, or accompanied by other circumstances which may induce an opinion that the landlord did not intend to continue the tenancy, no waiver will be produced by the acceptance: the rent must be paid and received as rent, or the notice will remain in force. Cowp. 243. The notice may also be waived by other acts of the landlord; but they are generally open to explanation, and the particular act will or will not be a waiver of the notice, according to the circumstances which attend it. 2 East, 236; 10 id. 13; 1 Term, 53. It has been held that a notice to quit at the end of a certain year is not waived by the landlord's permitting the tenant to remain in possession an entire year after the expiration of the notice, notwithstanding the tenant held by an improving lease,—that is, to clear and fence the land and pay the taxes. 1 Binn. Penn. 333. In cases, however, where the act of the landlord cannot be qualified, but must of necessity be taken as a confirmation of the tenancy, as if he distrain for rent accruing after the expiration of the notice, or recover in an action for use and occupation, the notice of course will be waived. Adams, Ej. 144; 1 H. Blackst. 311; 6 Term, 219; 19 Wend. N. Y. 391. See 13 C. B. 178.

NOTING. A term denoting the act of a notary in minuting on a bill of exchange, after it has been presented for acceptance or payment, the initials of his name, the date of the day, month, and year when such presentment was made, and the reason, if any has been assigned, for non-acceptance or non-payment, together with his charge. The noting is not indispensable, it being only a part of the protest: it will not supply the protest. 4 Term, 175.

NOTOUR. In Scotch Law. Open; notorious. A notour bankrupt is a debtor who, being under diligence by horning and caption of his creditor, retires to sanctuary, or absconds, or defends by force, and is afterwards found insolvent by court of sessions. Bell, Dict. Act of 1696, c. 5; Burton, Law of Scotl. 601.

NOVA CUSTOMA. An imposition or duty. See ANTIQUA CUSTOMA.

NOVA SCOTIA. A province of British North America.

It includes Nova Scotia proper, a peninsula two hundred and eighty miles long and from fifty to one hundred miles wide, trending E.N.E., and connected with the province of New Brunswick by an isthmus only eight miles wide in its widest part, and the island of Cape Breton, separated from the eastern extremity of Nova Scotia proper by the Gut of Canso. Nova Scotia proper lies between latitude 43° 25′ and 46° north, and long. 61° and 66° 30′ west.

England founds her claim to the original discovery of this province upon the patent granted by queen Elizabeth to Sir Humphrey Gilbert, A.D. 1578.

This was followed by De la Roche's unfortunate attempt to colonize the Isle of Sable.

De Monts, having in 1603 received an appointment from Henri IV. of France, sailed the following year, with Champlain, De Poutrincourt, and others.

After exploring the outer shore of the peninsula, having entered the bay of Fundy, De Poutrincourt settled Port Royal, A.D. 1605,—the first permanent settlement in British North America. From this time the English began to assert their claims, and colonists from Virginia expelled the colony of De Monts.

The French regained possession, but only to be again expelled by the strong force sent against them by Cromwell, A.D. 1654.

Thirteen years later, England ceded the province to France by the treaty of Breda, A.D. 1667; but in the new wars it was again ravaged by the English, who reacquired it A.D. 1713; and in 1749 it was formally colonized by the British government.

The French colonists, having resisted and joined the Indians, were defeated by the British, and their stronghold, Louisburgh on Cape Breton, was taken by Massachusetts colonists acting under a plan suggested by a Massachusetts lawyer.

In 1758 the province received its constitution, and in 1763 France, by the treaty of Paris, ceded all rights whatsoever.

In 1784 New Brunswick and Cape Breton were separated from Nova Scotia; but Cape Breton was reattached in 1819.

The Executive Department.

This is vested in the Governor and his Executive Council, together known as "The Government."

The Governor, technically called "Lieutenant-Governor," represents the sovereign, and is appointed by the crown.

He is captain-general and commander-in-chief within and for the province of Nova Scotia, commissions all officers of militia, and, together with his council, appoints all public officers. He pardons offences, except murder and high treason, presides solely in the court of chancery, and, within his jurisdiction, exercises the powers of the lord high-chancellor of England. He is ordinary, and has the power of granting probate of bills and administration, and, with his council, sits as the court of error.

The Executive Council consists of nine members, chosen by and from the party in power, and appointed by the governor, subject to a vote of "want of confidence."

The Legislative Department consists of a legislative council, or upper house, and a house of assembly, or lower house. The members of the upper house are appointed by the crown, on the recommendation of the "governor and council," or "government."

They hold their seats during life or good behavior, and are usually men of wealth and influence. The legislative assembly consists, by law, of fifty-five members, and continues for four years, unless sooner dissolved, and does not determine merely by the demise of the reigning sovereign.

The qualification for a representative is a freehold estate of the yearly value of at least eight dollars, situate in any part of the province.

Persons holding offices of emolument are disabled to sit. Judges of the supreme or vice-admiralty courts, officers and clerks of customs and of colonial and light duties, and the postmaster-general, are disabled to sit in either branch.

The privilege of voting recently extended to natural-born and naturalized subjects over twenty-one years of age who had resided five years in the province has this year (1863) been restricted, and a property qualification required (the possession of three hundred dollars real estate, or six hundred dollars personal property).

The apportionment of representatives to each county is based upon the population. The house of assembly holds the purse and controls the civil expenditures; and the whole sum derived from customs goes into the provincial treasury.

The legislature make the local laws not repugnant to the laws of England, the crown reserving the right to annul any law within three years after its publication.

An instance of this, in the case of New Brunswick, is the disallowance of the act of assembly providing for commissioners of New Brunswick to reside abroad, take affidavits, depositions, etc. This act passed the house, and was approved by the colonial government, and was part of the statute law of the province of New Brunswick for some months, but ceased to be law immediately upon being disallowed by the crown.

Laws vetoed by the governor may be passed by the queen's sanction. Any difficulty between the head of the executive and the executive council would result in the dismissal or resignation of the council. If the council were approved by the people, and could control the house, no new government could be formed without them, or, rather, it could be formed, but would be immediately overthrown by a vote of want of confidence.

If the governor could not frame a "government" which would control the house, he would resign; or, if he persisted in opposing the will of the people, they would appeal by petition to the home government,—the final resort in such a case,—who would fairly and promptly decide the matter.

The Judicial Department.

This consists of a chief justice and five judges of the supreme court, appointed by the governor, by commission under the great seal of the province, subject to the royal pleasure.

The appointee must be a barrister of the province for ten years, practising as such at least five years next before such appointment, and can hold no other office under the government, except that of judge of the admiralty or vice-president of the court of marriage and divorce.

The judge's tenure of office is during good behavior; or he may be removed by the governor upon the address of the legislative council and the house of assembly, subject to his right of appeal to the sovereign in privy council.

A Custos Rotulorum is appointed by commission from the lieutenant-governor, wherein he is styled "The Keeper of the Rolls of the Peace."

Besides his duties derived from the common law, he has others by provincial statutes. He presides at the general sessions of the peace for his county, and gives the casting vote when required on divisions.

The court of king's bench and the district courts are the same as in Canada (q. v.).

The laws in force are the whole of the common law of England (except such parts as are obviously inconsistent with the circumstances of the colony), such parts of the statute law as are obviously necessary and applicable, and all acts of assembly of the province not disallowed by the home government nor repugnant to the laws of England.

NOVA STATUTA. New statutes. A term including all statutes passed in the reign of Edw. III. and subsequently.

NOVÆ NARRATIONES. "New counts or tallys." A book of such pleadings as were then in use, published in the reign of Edw. III. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 297; 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 151.

NOVATION (from Lat. novare, novus, new). The substitution of a new obligation for an old one, which is thereby extinguished.

In Civil Law. There are three kinds of novation.

2. First, where the debtor and creditor remain the same, but a new debt takes the place of the old one. Here, either the subject-matter of the debt may be changed, or the conditions of time, place, etc. of payment.

Second, where the debt remains the same, but a new debtor is substituted for the old. This novation may be made without the intervention or privity of the old debtor (in this case the new agreement is called expromissio, and the new debtor expromissor), or by the debtor's transmission of his debt to another, who accepts the obligation and is himself accepted by the creditor. This transaction is called delegatio. Domat lays down the essential distinction between a delegation and any other novation, thus: that the former demands the consent of all three parties, but the latter that only of the two parties to the new debt.

Third, where the debt remains the same, but a new creditor is substituted for the old. This also is called delegatio, for the reason adduced above, to wit: that all three parties must assent to the new bargain. It differs from the cessio nominis of the civil law by completely cancelling the old debt, while the cessio nominis leaves the creditor a claim for any balance due after assignment.

3. In every novation the old debt is wholly extinguished by the new. To effect such a transformation, several things are requisite.

First, there must be an anterior obligation of some sort, to serve as a basis for the new contract. If the old debt be void, as being, e.g., contra bonos mores, then the new debt is likewise void; because the consideration for the pretended novation is null. But if the old contract is only voidable, in some cases the new one may be good, operating as a ratification of the old. Moreover, if the old debt be conditional, the new is also conditional, unless made otherwise by special agreement,—which agreement is rarely omitted.

Second, the parties innovating must consent thereto. In the modern civil law, every novation is voluntary. Anciently, a novation not having this voluntary element was in use. And not only consent is exacted, but a capacity to consent. But capacity to make or receive an absolute payment does not of itself authorize an agreement to innovate.

Third, there must be an express intention to innovate,—the animus novandi. A novation is never presumed. If an intent to destroy the old debt be not proved, two obligations now bind the debtor,—the old and the new. Conversely, if the new contract be invalid, without fraud in the transaction, the creditor has now lost all remedy. The anterior obligation is destroyed without being replaced by a new one.

4. An important rule of novation is that the extinction of the debt destroys also all rights and liens appertaining thereto. Hence, if any hypothecations be attached to the ancient agreement, they are cancelled by the new one, unless express words retain them. The second contract is simple and independent, and upon its terms is the action ex stipulatu to be brought. Hence, too, the new parties cannot avail themselves of defences, claims, and set-offs which would have prevailed between the old parties.

Obviously, a single creditor may make a novation with two or more debtors who are each liable in solido. In this case any one debtor may make the contract to innovate; and if such a contract be completed, all his fellow-debtors are discharged with him from the prior obligation. Therefore Pothier says that, under the rule that novation cancels all obligations subsidiary to the main one, sureties are freed by a novation contracted by their principal. The creditor must specially stipulate that co-debtors and guarantors shall consent to be bound by the novation, if he wish to hold them liable. If they do not consent to such novation, the parties all remain, as before, bound under the old debt. So in Louisiana the debt due a community creditor is not necessarily novated by his taking the individual note of the surviving spouse, with mortgages to secure its payment. 11 La. Ann. 687.

5. It follows that the new debtor, in a delegation, can claim nothing under the old contract, since he has consented to the destruction of that contract. For the same reason, a creditor cannot proceed against the discharged debtor. And this is true though the new debtor should become insolvent while the old remains solvent. And even though at the time of the novation the new debtor was insolvent, still the creditor has lost his remedy against the old debtor. But the rule, no doubt, applies only to a bonâ fide delegation. And a suit brought by the creditor against a delegated debtor is not evidence of intention to discharge the original debtor. 11 La. Ann. 93.

6. In a case of mistake, the rule is this: if the new debtor agree to be substituted for the old, under the belief that he himself owes so much to the discharged debtor, although he do not in fact owe the amount, yet he is bound to the creditor on the novation; because the latter has been induced to discharge the old debtor by the contract of the new, and will receive only his due in holding the new debtor bound. But where the supposed creditor had really no claim upon the original debtor, the substitute contracts no obligation with him; and even though he intended to be bound, yet he may plead the fact of no former debt against any demand of the creditor, as soon as this fact is made known to him.

A novation may be made dependent on a condition. In that case the parties remain bound, as before, until the condition is fulfilled. The new debtor is not freed from a conditional novation as to the creditor until the condition happens; and he is not liable in an action to the old debtor until it is performed.

7. Any obligation which can be destroyed at all may be destroyed by novation. Thus, legacies, judgment debts, etc., with mortgages, guarantees, and similar accessories, are as much the subjects of novation as simple contract debts. But a covenant by the obligee of a bond not to sue the obligor within a certain time is not an example of the civil-law novation. The agreement was not a release, not a substituted contract, but a covenant merely, for the breach of which the obligee has his action. 19 Johns. N. Y. 129.

The preceding summary is founded on Massi, Droit Commercial, liv. v. tit. 1, ch. 5, § 2; Mackeldey, Römischen Rechts, and Pothier, Traité des Obligations, pt. 3, ch. 2. See, also, Domat's Civil Law, trans. by Dr. Strahan (Cushing's ed.), part i. b. iv. tit. 3, 4; and Burge on Suretyship, b. 2, c. 5, Am ed. pp. 168–190.

At Common Law. The common-law doctrine of novation mainly agrees with that of the civil law, but in some parts differs from it.

8. The term novation is rarely employed. The usual common-law equivalent is assignment, and sometimes merger. Still, this form of contract found its way into common-law treatises as early as Fleta's day, by whom it was called innoratio. Item, per innovationem, ut si transfusa sit obligatio de una persona in aliam, quæ in se susceperit obligationem. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 12. The same words here quoted are also in Bracton, lib. 3, c. 2, § 13, but we have novationem for innovationem. In England, recently, the term novation has been revived in some cases.

A case of novation is put in Tatlock vs. Harris, 3 Term, 180. "Suppose A owes B £100, and B owes C £100, and the three meet, and it is agreed between them that A shall pay C the £100: B's debt is extinguished, and C may recover that sum against A."

There must always be a debt once existing and now cancelled, to serve as a consideration for the new liability. The action in all cases is brought on the new agreement. But in order to give a right of action there must be an extinguishment of the original debt. 4 Barnew. & C. 163; 1 Mees. & W. Exch. 124; 14 Ill. 34; 4 La. Ann. 281; 15 N. H. 129.

9. No mere agreement for the transformation of one contract into another is of effect until actually carried into execution and the consent of the parties thereto obtained. A good novation is an accord executed, 5 Barnew. & Ad. 925; 3 Nott & M'C. So. C. 171; 1 Strange, 426; 15 Mees. & W. Exch. 23; see 1 Ad. & E. 106; 2 Campb. 383; 1 La. 410; 1 Exch. 601; 24 Conn. 621; otherwise, if there be no satisfaction. 2 Scott, N. R. 938.

But where an agreement is entered into by deed, that deed gives in itself a substantial cause of action; and the giving such deed may be a sufficient accord and satisfaction for a simple contract debt. Coke, Litt. 212 b; 1 Burr. 9; 2 Rich. So. C. 608; 3 Watts & S. Penn. 276; 1 Hill, N. Y. 567. See 1 Mas. C. C. 503; 11 Wend. N. Y. 321.

In the civil law delegatio, no new creditor could be substituted without the debtor's consent. This rule is observed in the common law. Hence, without this consent and promise to pay, a new creditor can have no action against the debtor, because there is no privity of contract between them. To establish such privity there must be a new promise founded on sufficient consideration. 14 East, 582; 3 Mer. Ch. 652; 5 Wheat. 277; 12 Ga. 406; 15 id. 486; 5 Ad. & E. 115; 7 Harr. & J. Md. 213, 219; 21 Me. 484.

10. But in equity a creditor may assign his claim fully to another without any intervention of the debtor; and the assignee is not even compelled to sue in his assignor's name. 14 Conn. 141; 3 Swanst. 392; 4 Rand. Va. 392; Mart. & Y. Tenn. 378.

The extinction of the prior debt is consideration enough to support a novation. If A holds B's note, payable to A, and assigns this for value to C, B is by such transfer released from his promise to A, and this is sufficient consideration to sustain his promise to C. 1 Parsons, Contr. ch. 13; 2 Barb. N. Y. 349. And a consideration need not be expressed in the contract of novation; though one must be proved in order to defend in a suit brought by creditors of the assignor.

When assent or consideration is wanting, the novation operates only as a species of collateral security. The transferee cannot sue in his own name, and will be subject to all the equitable defences which the debtor had against the original creditor. This assent on the debtor's part is said to be essential, for the reason that he may have an account with his assignor, and he shall not be barred of his right to a set-off. Still, if any thing like an assent on the part of a holder of money can be inferred, he will be considered as the debtor. 4 Esp. 203; 6 Tex. 163. If the debtor's assent be not secured, the order of transfer may be revoked before it is acted on.

11. In a delegation, if the old debtor agree to provide a substitute, he must put his creditor into such a position that the latter can claim full satisfaction from the delegated debtor, or otherwise the original liability remains, and there is no novation. 19 Mo. 322, 637. See 3 Barnew. & Ald. 64; 5 id. 925; 5 Barnew. & C. 196; 4 Esp. 89; 4 Price, Exch. 200; 2 Mees. & W. Exch. 484; 6 Cranch, 253; 12 Johns. N. Y. 409; 7 id. 311; 21 Wend. N. Y. 450.

The existing Louisiana law is based upon the doctrines of the Civil Code considered above. It is held in numerous cases that "novation is not to be presumed:" hence the receipt of a bill or note is not necessarily a novation, or extinguishment of the debt for which it is given. An express declaration to that effect is required in most of our states, or else acts tantamount to a declaration. An intention to discharge the old debt must be shown in all cases; and this intention is sufficient to work a novation. 4 La. Ann. 329, 543; 6 id. 669; 9 id. 228, 497; 12 id. 299. "The delegation by which the debtor gives to the creditor another debtor, who obliges himself towards such creditor, does not operate a novation unless the creditor has expressly declared his intention to discharge the debtor who made the delegation." 13 La. Ann. 238.

12. One of the most common of modern novations is the surrender and destruction of an old promissory note or bill of exchange, and the receipt of a new one in payment thereof. The rules of novation apply as completely to debts evidenced by mercantile paper as to all other obligations. Story, Bills, § 441; Pothier, de Change, n. 189; Thomson, Bills, ch. 1, § 3. Hence, everywhere, if the parties intend that a promissory note or bill shall be absolute payment, it will be so considered. 10 Ad. & E. 593; 4 Mas. C. C. 336; 1 Rich. So. C. 37, 112; 9 Johns. N. Y. 310; 13 Vt. 452. In some states, the receipt of a negotiable promissory note is primâ facie payment of the debt upon which it is given, and has an action upon the account unless the presumption is controverted. 12 Mass. 237; 12 Pick. Mass. 268; 2 Metc. Mass. 76; 5 Cush. Mass. 158; 8 Me. 298; 29 Vt. 32. "If a creditor gives a receipt for a draft in payment of his account, the debt is novated." 2 La. 109. But see the cases cited supra for the full Louisiana law. In most states, however, the rule is, as in England, that, whether the debt be pre-existing or arise at the time of giving the note, the receipt of a promissory note is primâ facie a conditional payment only, and works no novation.

13. It is payment only on fulfilment of the condition, i.e. when the note is paid. 5 Beav. Rolls, 415; 40 Eng. L. & Eq. 625; 6 Cranch, 264; 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 438; 15 Johns. N. Y. 224, 247; 1 Cow. N. Y. 290; 27 N. H. 253; 11 Gill & J. Md. 416; 4 R. I. 383; 8 Cal. 501; 2 Speers, So. C. 438; 2 Rich. So. C. 244; 15 Serg. & R. Penn. 162.

If a vendor transfer his vendee's note, he can only sue on the original contract when he gets back the note, and has it in his power to return it to his vendee. 1 Pet. C. C. 262; 4 Rich. So. C. 59. See DISCHARGE; PAYMENT; 10 Pet. 532; 8 Cow. N. Y. 390; 6 Watts & S. Penn. 165; 1 Hill, N. Y. 516; 3 Wash. C. C. 396; 5 Day, Conn. 511; Add. NOVEL ASSIGNMENT. See NEW ASSIGNMENT.

NOVEL DISSEISIN. The name of an old remedy which was given for a new or recent disseisin.

When tenant in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term of life, was put out and disseised of his lands or tenements, rents, and the like, he might sue out a writ of assize or novel disseisin; and if, upon trial, he could prove his title and his actual seisin, and the disseisin by the present tenant, he was entitled to have judgment to recover his seisin and damages for the injury sustained. 3 Blackst. Comm. 187. This remedy is obsolete.

NOVELLÆ LEONIS. The ordinances of the emperor Leo, which were made from the year 887 till the year 893, are so called. These Novels changed many rules of the Justinian law. This collection contains one hundred and thirteen Novels, written originally in Greek, and afterwards, in 1560, translated into Latin by Agilæus.

NOVELS, NOVELLÆ CONSTITUTIONES. In Civil Law. The name given to the constitutions or laws of Justinian and his immediate successors, which were promulgated soon after the Code of Justinian.

2. It appears to have been the intention of Justinian, after the completion of the second and revised edition of the Code, to supply what had not been foreseen in the preceding laws, together with any necessary amendments or alterations, not by revising the Code, but by supplementary laws. Such laws he promulgated from time to time; but no official compilation of them is known to have been made until after his death, when his laws, 159 in number, with those of the reigns of Justin II. and Tiberias, nine in number, were collected, together with some local edicts, under this name. They belong to various times between 535 and 565 A.D.

3. Although the Novels of Justinian are the best known, and when the word Novels only is mentioned those of Justinian are always intended, he was not the first who used that name. Some of the acts of Theodosius, Valentinian, Leo, Severus, Authennius, and others, were also called Novels. But the Novels of the emperors who preceded Justinian had not the force of law after the legislation of that emperor. Those Novels are not, however, entirely useless; because, the Code of Justinian having been compiled to a considerable extent from the Theodosian Code and the earlier Novels, the latter frequently remove doubts which arise on the construction of the Code.

4. The original language of the Novels was for the most part Greek; but they are represented in the Corpus Juris Civilis by a Latin translation of 134 of them. These form the fourth part of the Corpus Juris Civilis. They are directed either to some officer, or an archbishop or bishop, or to some private individual of Constantinople; but they all had the force and authority of law.

The 118th Novel is the foundation and groundwork of the English Statute of Distribution of Intestates' Effects, which has been copied in many states of the Union. See 1 P. Will. 27; Prec. in Chanc. 593.

NOVUS HOMO (Lat. a new man). This term is applied to a man who has been pardoned of a crime, by which he is restored to society and is rehabilitated.

NOXA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Damage resulting from an offence committed by an irresponsible agent. The offence itself. The punishment for the offence. The slave or animal who did the offence, and who is delivered up to the person aggrieved (datur noxæ) unless the owner choose to pay the damage. The right of action is against whoever becomes the possessor of the slave or animal (noxa caput sequitur). D. de furt. L. 41; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

NOXAL ACTION. See NOXA.

NUBILIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who is of a proper age to be married. Dig. 32. 51.

NUDE. Naked. Figuratively, this word is applied to various subjects.

A nude contract, nudum pactum, is one without a consideration. Nude matter is a bare allegation of a thing done, without any evidence of it.

NUDUM PACTUM. A contract made without consideration.

It is a mere agreement, without the requisites necessary to confer upon it a legal obligation to perform. 3 McLean, C. C. 330; 2 Den. N. Y. 403; 6 Ired. No. C. 480; 1 Strobh. So. C. 329; 1 Ga. 294; 1 Dougl. Mich. 188. The term, and the rule which decides upon the nullity of its effects, are borrowed from the civil law: yet the common law has not in any degree been influenced by the notions of the civil law in defining what constitutes a nudum pactum. Dig. 19. 5. 5. See, on this subject, a learned note in Fonblanque, Eq. 335, and 2 Kent, Comm. 364. Toullier defines nudum pactum to be an agreement not executed by one of the parties. Tom. 6, n. 13, page 10.

It is of no consequence whether the agreement be oral or written, 7 Term, 350; 7 Brown, Parl. Cas. 550; 4 Johns. N. Y. 235; 5 Mass. 301, 392; 2 Day, Conn. 22; but a contract under seal cannot be held a nudum pactum for lack of consideration, since the seal imports consideration. 2 Barnew & Ald. 551. See CONSIDERATION; MAXIMS, Ex nudo pacto; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 445; 16 Viner, Abr. 16.

NUISANCE. Any thing that unlawfully worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 5, 216.

The element of illegality should be added to the definition as given above; for many acts which work hurt, inconvenience, or damage, when legalized cease to be nuisances. For example, if a corporation obstruct a highway by putting down iron rails to the inconvenience of passers, it is a nuisance if they are not properly authorized; otherwise if they are. See 14 Gray, Mass. 93; 18 Q. B. 761; Washburn, Easements.

A private nuisance is any thing done to the hurt or annoyance of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments of another. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 215.

A public or common nuisance is such an inconvenience or troublesome offence as annoys the whole community in general, and not merely some particular person. 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. 197; 4 Blackstone, Comm. 166.

2. It is difficult to say what degree of annoyance constitutes a nuisance. If a thing is calculated to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of a man's house, it is a nuisance. 3 Jur. N. S. 571. In relation to offensive trades, it seems that when such a trade renders the enjoyment of life and property uncomfortable it is a nuisance, 1 Burr. 333; 5 Esp. 217; for the neighborhood have a right to pure and fresh air. 2 Carr. & P. 485; 6 Rog. N. Y. 61.

A thing may be a nuisance in one place which is not so in another: therefore the situation or locality of the nuisance must be considered. A tallow-chandler setting up his business among other tallow-chandlers, and increasing the noxious smells of the neighborhood, is not guilty of setting up a nuisance unless the annoyance is much increased by the new manufactory. Peake, 91. Such an establishment might be a nuisance in a thickly-populated town of merchants and mechanics where no such business was carried on. Carrying on an offensive trade for twenty years in a place remote from buildings and public roads does not entitle the owner to continue it in the same place after houses have been built and roads laid out in the neighborhood, to the occupants of and travellers upon which it is a nuisance. 6 Gray, Mass. 473. See 7 Blackf. Ind. 534; 2 Carr. & P. 483. The trade may be offensive for noise, 2 Show. 327; 22 Vt. 321; 6 Cush. Mass. 80; or smell, 2 Carr. & P. 485; 13 Metc. Mass. 365; 1 Den. N. Y. 524; or for other reasons. 1 Johns. N. Y. 78; 1 Swan, Tenn. 213; Thach. Crim. Cas. Mass. 14; 3 East, 192; 3 Jur. N. S. 570.

3. To constitute a public nuisance, there must be such a number of persons annoyed that the offence can no longer be considered a private nuisance: this is a fact, generally, to be judged of by the jury. 1 Burr. 337; 4 Esp. 200; 1 Strange, 686, 704; 2 Chitty, Crim. Law, 607, n.

Public nuisances arise in consequence of following particular trades, by which the air is rendered offensive and noxious, Croke Car. 510; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 75, § 10; 2 Ld. Raym. 1163; 1 Burr. 333; 1 Strange, 686; from acts of public indecency, as bathing in a public river in sight of the neighboring houses, 1 Russell, Crimes, 302; 2 Campb. 89; Sid. 168; or for acts tending to a breach of the public peace, as for drawing a number of persons into a field for the purpose of pigeon-shooting, to the disturbance of the neighborhood, 3 Barnew. & Ald. 184; or keeping a disorderly house, 1 Russell, Crimes, 298; or a gaming-house, 1 Russell, Crimes, 299; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 75, § 6; or a bawdy-house, Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 74, § 1; Bacon, Abr. Nuisance (A); 9 Conn. 350; or a dangerous animal, known to be such, and suffering him to go at large, as a large bulldog accustomed to bite people, 4 Burn, Just. 578; or exposing a person having a contagious disease, as the small-pox, in public, 4 Maule & S. 73, 272; and the like. The bringing a horse infected with the glanders into a public place, to the danger of infecting the citizens, is a misdemeanor at common law. Dearsl. Cr. Cas. 24; 2 Hurlst. & N. Exch. 299. The leaving unburied the corpse of a person for whom the defendant was bound to provide Christian burial, as a wife or child, is an indictable nuisance, if he is shown to have been of ability to provide such burial. 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 325. See 3 Jur. N. S. 570.

4. Private nuisances may be to corporeal inheritances: as, for example, if a man should build his house so as to throw the rain-water which fell on it on my land, Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 184, or erect his building, without right, so as to obstruct my ancient lights, 9 Coke, 58; but see Washburn, Easements, keep hogs or other animals so as to incommode his neighbor and render the air unwholesome, 9 Coke, 58; or to incorporeal hereditaments: as, for example, obstructing a right of way by ploughing it up or laying logs across it, and the like, Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 183; 2 Rolle, Abr. 140; or obstructing a spring, 1 Campb. 463; 6 East, 208; interfering with a franchise, as a ferry or railroad, by a similar erection unlawfully made. See Washburn, Easements.

5. The remedies are by an action for the damage done, by the owner, in the case of a private nuisance, 3 Blackstone, Comm. 220; or by any party suffering special damage, in the case of a public nuisance, 4 Wend. N. Y. 9; 3 Vt. 529; 1 Penn. St. 309; Carth. 194; Vaugh. 341; 3 Maule & S. 472; 2 Bingh. 283; 1 Esp. 148; by abatement by the owner, when the nuisance is private, 2 Rolle, Abr. 565; Rolle, 394; 3 Bulstr. 198; see 3 Dowl. & R. 556; and in some cases when it is public, if no riot is committed, 9 Coke, 55; 2 Salk. 458; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 5; by in- junction, see INJUNCTION; or by indictment for a public nuisance. 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 856.

NUL AGARD (L. Fr. no award). In Pleading. A plea to an action on an arbitration bond, when the defendant avers that there was no legal award made. 3 Burr. 1730; 2 Strange, 923.

NUL DISSEISIN. In Pleading. No disseisin. A plea in a real action, by which the defendant denies that there was any disseisin. It is a species of the general issue.

NUL TIEL RECORD (Fr. no such record). In Pleading. A plea which is proper when it is proposed to rely upon facts which disprove the existence of the record on which the plaintiff founds his action.

Any matters may be introduced under it which tend to destroy the validity of the record as a record, provided they do not contradict the recitals of the record itself. 10 Ohio, 100. It is frequently used to enable the defendant to deny the jurisdiction of the court from which the alleged record emanates. 2 McLean, C. C. 129; 22 Wend. N. Y. 293.

It is said to be the proper plea to an action on a foreign judgment, especially if of a sister state, in the United States, 2 Leigh. Va. 72; 6 id. 570; 17 Vt. 302; 6 Pick. Mass. 232; 11 Miss. 210; 1 Penn. 499; 2 South. So. C. 778; 2 Breese, Ill. 2; though it is held that nil debet is sufficient, 33 Me. 268; 3 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 600, especially if the judgment be that of a justice of the peace. 3 Harr. N. J. 408. See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

NUL TORT (L. Fr. no wrong). In Pleading. A plea to a real action, by which the defendant denies that he committed any wrong. It is a species of general issue.

NUL WASTE. In Pleading. The general issue in an action of waste. Coke, 3d Inst. 700 a, 708 a. The plea of nul waste admits nothing, but puts the whole declaration in issue; and in support of this plea the defendant may give in evidence any thing which proves that the act charged is no waste, as that it happened by tempest, lightning, and the like. Coke, Litt. 283 a; 3 Wms. Saund. 238, n. 5.

NULL. Properly, that which does not exist; that which is not in the nature of things. In a figurative sense it signifies that which has no more effect than if it did not exist. 8 Toullier, n. 320.

NULLA BONA (L. Lat. no goods). The return made to a writ of fieri facias by the sheriff, when he has not found any goods of the defendant on which he could levy. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3393.

NULLITY. An act or proceeding which has absolutely no legal effect whatever. See Chitty, Contr. 228.

NULLITY OF MARRIAGE. The requisites of a valid and binding marriage have been considered in the article on that subject. If any of these requisites are wanting in a given case, the marriage is either absolutely void, or voidable at the election of one or both of the parties. The more usual imperfections which thus render a marriage void or voidable are: 1. Unsoundness of mind in either of the parties. 2. Want of age; i.e. fourteen in males and twelve in females. 3. Fraud or error; but these must relate to the essentials of the relation, as personal identity, and not merely to the accidentals, as character, condition, or fortune. 4. Duress. 5. Physical impotence, which must exist at the time of the marriage and be incurable. 6. Consanguinity or affinity within the prohibited degrees. 7. A prior subsisting marriage of either of the parties. The fifth and sixth are termed canonical, the remainder, civil, impediments.

2. The distinction between the two is important,—the latter rendering the marriage absolutely void, while the former only renders it voidable. In the one case, it is not necessary (though it is certainly advisable) to bring a suit to have the nullity of the marriage ascertained and declared: it may be treated by the parties as no marriage, and will be so regarded in all judicial proceedings. In the other case, the marriage will be treated as valid and binding until its nullity is ascertained and declared by a competent court in a suit instituted for that purpose; and this must be done during the lifetime of both parties: if it is deferred until the death of either, the marriage will always remain good. But the effect of such sentence of nullity, when obtained, is to render the marriage null and void from the beginning, as in the case of civil impediments.

For the origin and history of this distinction between void and voidable marriages, see Bishop, Marr. & Div. c. 4.

3. A suit for nullity is usually prosecuted in the same court, and is governed by substantially the same principles, as a suit for divorce. Bishop, Marr. & Div. c. 15.

In its consequences, a sentence of nullity differs materially from a divorce. The latter assumes the original validity of the marriage, and its operation is entirely prospective. The former renders the marriage void from the beginning, and nullifies all its legal results. The parties are to be regarded legally as if no marriage had ever taken place: they are single persons, if before they were single; their issue are illegitimate; and their rights of property as between themselves are to be viewed as having never been operated upon by the marriage. Thus, the man loses all right to the property, whether real or personal, which belongs to the woman; and the woman loses her right to dower. Bishop, Marr. & Div. §§ 647, 659.

Neither is the woman, upon a sentence of nullity, entitled to permanent alimony; though the better opinion is that she is entitled to alimony pendente lite. Bishop, Marr. & Div. §§ 563, 579–580. See ALIMONY.

NULLIUS FILIUS (Lat.). The son of no one; a bastard.

2. A bastard is considered nullius filius as far as regards his right to inherit. But the rule of nullius filius does not apply in other respects, and has been changed by statute in most states so as to make him the child of his mother.

The mother of a bastard, during its age of nurture, is entitled to the custody of her child, and is bound to maintain it. 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 255; 2 Johns. N. Y. 375; 15 id. 208; 2 Mass. 109; 12 id. 387, 433; 4 Bos. & P. 148. But see 5 East, 224, n.

3. The putative father, too, is entitled to the custody of the child as against all but the mother. 1 Ashm. Penn. 55. And it seems that the putative father may maintain an action, as if his child were legitimate, for marrying him without his consent, contrary to law. Add. Penn. 212. See BASTARD; CHILD; FATHER; MOTHER; PUTATIVE FATHER.

NULLUM ARBITRIUM (Lat.). In Pleading. The name of a plea to an action on an arbitration bond for not fulfilling the award, by which the defendant asserts that there is no award.

NULLUM FECERUNT ARBITRIUM (Lat.). In Pleading. The name of a plea to an action of debt upon an obligation for the performance of an award, by which the defendant denies that he submitted to arbitration, etc. Bacon, Abr. Arbitr. etc. (G).

NULLUM TEMPUS ACT. The statute 3 Geo. III. c. 16. See 32 Geo. III. c. 58, and 7 Will. III. c. 3. It was so called because the right of the crown to sue, etc. was limited by it to sixty years, in contradiction to the maxim, Nullum tempus occurrit regi. 3 Chitty, Stat. 63.

NUMBER. A collection of units.

2. In pleading, numbers must be stated truly when alleged in the recital of a record, written instrument, or express contract. Lawes, Plead. 48; 4 Term, 314; Croke Car. 262; Dougl. 669; 2 W. Blackst. 1104. But in other cases it is not, in general, requisite that they should be truly stated; because they are not required to be strictly proved. If, for example, in an action of trespass the plaintiff proves the wrongful taking away of any part of the goods duly described in his declaration, he is entitled to recover pro tanto. Bacon, Abr. Trespass (I 2); Lawes, Plead. 48.

3. And sometimes, when the subject to be described is supposed to comprehend a multiplicity of particulars, a general description is sufficient. A declaration in trover alleging the conversion of "a library of books," without stating their number, titles, or quality, was held to be sufficiently certain, 3 Bulstr. 31; Carth. 110; Bacon, Abr. Trover (F 1); and in an action for the loss of goods by burning the plaintiff's house, the articles may be described by the simple denomination of "goods" or "divers goods." 1 Kebl. 825; Plowd. 85, 118, 123; Croke Eliz. 837; 1 H. Blackst. 284.

NUMERATA PECUNIA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Money counted or paid; money given in payment by count. See PECUNIA NUMERATA and PECUNIA NON-NUMERATA. L. 3, 10, C. de non numerat. pecun.; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

NUNC PRO TUNC (Lat. now for then). A phrase used to express that a thing is done at one time which ought to have been performed at another.

Leave of court must be obtained to do things nunc pro tunc; and this is granted to answer the purposes of justice, but never to do injustice. A judgment nunc pro tunc can be entered only when the delay has arisen from the act of the court. 3 C. B. 970. See 1 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 312; 1 Moll. 462; 13 Price, Exch. 604; 1 Hog. 110.

A plea puis darrein continuance may be entered nunc pro tunc after an intervening continuation, in some cases, 11 N. H. 299; and lost pleadings may be replaced by new pleadings made nunc pro tunc. 1 Mo. 327.

NUNCIATIO. In Civil Law. A formal proclamation or protest. It may be by acts (realis) or by words. Mackeldey, Civ. Law, § 237. Thus, nunciatio novi operis was an injunction which one man could place on the erection of a new building, etc. near him, until the case was tried by the prætor. Id.; Calvinus, Lex. An information against a criminal. Calvinus, Lex.

NUNCIO. The name given to the pope's ambassador. Nuncios are ordinary or extraordinary: the former are sent upon usual missions, the latter upon special occasions.

NUNCIUS. In International Law. A messenger; a minister; the pope's legate, commonly called a nuncio.

NUNCUPATIVE WILL. An oral will, declared by testator, in extremis, before witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing. 4 Kent, Comm. 576; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 500; 1 Jarman, Wills, Perkins ed. 130–136. See 1 Will. IV. c. 20; 1 Vict. c. 26, §§ 9, 11; 11 Eng. L. & Eq. 596, by which the privilege of making a nuncupative will is only allowed to soldiers and seamen in actual service. So in almost all the states. See, in general, 27 Ala. N. S. 296, 596; 26 N. H. 372; 9 N. Y. 196; 10 Gratt. Va. 548; 27 Miss. 119, 725; 2 R. I. 133; 4 Bradf. Surr. N. Y. 154; 22 Ga. 293, 603; 12 La. Ann. 114, 603; 1 Sneed, Tenn. 616; 1 Williams, Exec. 59; Swinburn, Wills; Ayliffe, Pand. 359; Roberts, Wills; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 436; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 288.

NUNDINÆ (Law Lat.). In Civil and Old English Law. Fair or fairs. Dion. Halicarnass. lib. 2, p. 98; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.

NUNQUAM INDEBITATUS (Lat. never indebted). In Pleading. A plea to an action of indebitatus assumpsit, by which the defendant asserts that he is not indebted to the plaintiff. 6 Carr. & P. 545; 1 Mees & W. Exch. 542; 1 Q. B. 77.

NUNTIUS, NUNCIUS. In Old English Practice. One who made excuse for absence of one summoned. An apparitor, beadle, or sergeant. Cowel. A messenger or legate: e.g. pope's nuncio. Jacob, Law Dict. Essoniator was sometimes wrongly used for nuntius in the first sense. Bracton, fol. 345, § 2.

NUPER OBIIT (Lat. he or she lately died). In Practice. The name of a writ which in the English law lies for a sister coheiress dispossessed by her coparcener of lands and tenements whereof their father, brother, or any common ancestor died seised of an estate in fee-simple. Termes de la Ley; Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 197.

NURTURE. The act of taking care of children and educating them. The right to the nurture of children generally belongs to the father till the child shall arrive at the age of fourteen years, and not longer. Till then he is guardian by nurture. Coke, Litt. 38 b. But in special cases the mother will be preferred to the father, 5 Binn. Penn. 520; 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 174; and after the death of the father the mother is guardian by nurture. Fleta, l. 1, c. 6; Comyns, Dig. Guardian (D). See GUARDIAN; HABEAS CORPUS.

NURUS (Lat.). A daughter-in-law. Dig. 50. 16. 50.

O.

OATH. An outward pledge given by the person taking it that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of his responsibility to God. Tyler, Oaths, 15.

The term has been variously defined: as, "a solemn invocation of the vengeance of the Deity upon the witness if he do not declare the whole truth, so far as he knows it," 1 Starkie, Ev. 22; or, "a religious asseveration by which a person renounces the mercy and imprecates the vengeance of Heaven if he do not speak the truth," 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. 482; or, as "a religious act by which the party invokes God not only to witness the truth and sincerity of his promise, but also to avenge his imposture or violated faith, or, in other words, to punish his perjury if he shall be guilty of it." 10 Toullier, nn. 343–348; Puffendorff, b. 4, c. 2, § 4. The essential idea of an oath would seem to be, however, that of a recognition of God's authority by the party taking it, and an undertaking to accomplish the transaction to which it refers as required by His laws.

In its broadest sense, the term is used to include all forms of attestation by which a party signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform the act faithfully and truly. In a more restricted sense, it excludes all those forms of attestation or promise which are not accompanied by an imprecation.

Assertory oaths are those required by law other than in judicial proceedings and upon induction to office: such, for example, as custom-house oaths.

Extra-judicial oaths are those taken without authority of law. Though binding in foro conscientiæ, they do not, when false, render the party liable to punishment for perjury.

Judicial oaths are those administered in judicial proceedings.

Promissory oaths are oaths taken, by authority of law, by which the party declares that he will fulfil certain duties therein mentioned: as, the oath which an alien takes, on becoming naturalized, that he will support the constitution of the United States; the oath which a judge takes that he will perform the duties of his office. The breach of this does not involve the party in the legal crime or punishment of perjury. 3 Zabr. N. J. 49

The form of administering the oath may be varied to conform to the religious belief of the individual, so as to make it binding upon his conscience. 6 Mass. 262; 16 Pick. Mass. 154; 2 Gall. C. C. 346; 3 Park. Crim. N. Y. 590; 2 Hawks, No. C. 458; 7 Ill. 540; Ry. & M. 77. The most common form is upon the gospel, by taking the book in the hand: the words commonly used are, "You do swear that," etc., "so help you God," and then kissing the book. 9 Carr. & P. 137. The origin of this oath may be traced to the Roman law, Nov. 8, tit. 3; Nov. 74, cap. 5; Nov. 124, cap. 1; and the kissing the book is said to be an imitation of the priest's kissing the ritual, as a sign of reverence, before he reads it to the people. Rees, Cycl. In New England and in Scotland the gospels are not generally used, but the party taking the oath holds up his right hand and repeats the words here given. 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 412, 498; Cowp. 390.

Another form is by the witness or party promising holding up his right hand while the officer repeats to him, "You do swear by Almighty God, the searcher of hearts, that," etc., "and this as you shall answer to God at the great day."

In another form of attestation, commonly called an affirmation (q. v.), the officer repeats, "You do solemnly, sincerely, and truly declare and affirm that," etc.

A Jew is sworn on the Pentateuch, or Old Testament, with his head covered, Strange, 821, 1113; a Mohammedan, on the Koran, 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 54; a Gentoo, by touching with his hand the foot of a Brahmin or priest of his religion; a Brahmin, by touching the hand of another such priest, Wils. 549; a Chinaman, by breaking a china saucer. 1 Carr. & M. 248.

The form and time of administering oaths, as well as the person authorized to administer, are usually fixed by statute. See Gilp. Dist. Ct. 439; 1 Tyl. Vt. 347; 1 South. So. C. 297; 4 Wash. C. C. 555; 2 Blackf. Ind. 35; 2 McLean, C. C. 135; 9 Pet. 238; 1 Va. Cas. 181; 8 Rich. So. C. 456; 1 Swan, Tenn. 157; 5 Mo. 21.

OATH OF CALUMNY. In Civil Law. An oath which a plaintiff was obliged to take that he was not actuated by a spirit of chicanery in commencing his action, but that he had bonâ fide a good cause of action. Pothier, Pand. lib. 5, tt. 16, 17, s. 124. This oath is somewhat similar to our affidavit of a cause of action. See Dunlap, Adm. Pract. 289, 290; JURAMENTUM CALUMNIÆ.

OATH DECISORY. In Civil Law. An oath which one of the parties defers or refers back to the other for the decision of the cause.

2. It may be deferred in any kind of civil contest whatever, in questions of possession or of claim, in personal actions, and in real. The plaintiff may defer the oath to the defendant whenever he conceives he has not sufficient proof of the fact which is the foundation of his claim; and in like manner the defendant may defer it to the plaintiff when he has not sufficient proof of his defence. The person to whom the oath is deferred ought either to take it or refer it back; and if he will not do either, the cause should be decided against him. Pothier, Obl. pt. 4, c. 3, s. 4.

3. The decisory oath has been practically adopted in the district court of the United States for the district of Massachusetts; and admiralty causes have been determined in that court by the oath decisory. But the cases in which this oath has been adopted have been where the tender has been accepted; and no case is known to have occurred there in which the oath has been refused and tendered back to the adversary. Dunlop, Adm. Pract. 290, 291.

OATH IN LITEM. An oath which in the civil law was deferred to the complainant as to the value of the thing in dispute, on failure of other proof, particularly when there was a fraud on the part of the defendant and he suppressed proof in his possession. See Greenleaf, Ev. § 348; Tait, Ev. 280; 1 Vern. Ch. 207; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 229; 1 Me. 27; 1 Yeates, Penn. 34; 12 Viner, Abr. 24.

2. In general, the oath of the party cannot, by the common law, be received to establish his claim, but is admitted in two classes of cases: first, where it has been already proved that the party against whom it is offered has been guilty of some fraud or other tortious or unwarrantable act of intermeddling with the complainant's goods, and no other evidence can be had of the amount of damages. See 1 Pet. 591; 5 id. 240; 9 Wheat. 486; 5 Pick. Mass. 436; 8 id. 278; 15 id. 368; 16 Johns. N. Y. 193; 20 id. 144; 17 Ohio, 156; 3 N. H. 135. As, for example, where a trunk of goods was delivered to a shipmaster at one port to be carried to another, and on the passage he broke the trunk open and rifled it of its contents, in an action by the owners of the goods against the shipmaster, the facts above mentioned having been proved aliunde, the plaintiff was held a competent witness to testify as to the contents of the trunk. 1 Me. 27; 11 id. 412. And see 10 Watts, 335; 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 348; 12 Metc. Mass. 44; 1 Yeates, Penn. 34; 2 Watts, Penn. 220; 10 id. 335; 3 Penn. St. 451; 12 Mass. 360; 16 id. 118; 1 Gilb. Ev. by Lofft, 244. Second, the oath in litem is also admitted on the ground of public policy where it is deemed essential to the purposes of justice. Tait, Ev. 280; 1 Pet. 596; 6 Mood. 137; 2 Strange, 1186. But this oath is admitted only on the ground of necessity. An example may be mentioned of a case where a statute can receive no execution unless the party interested be admitted as a witness. 16 Pet. 203.

OATH PURGATORY. An oath by which one destroys the presumptions which were against him, for he is then said to purge himself, when he removes the suspicions which were against him: as, when a man is in contempt for not attending court as a witness, he may purge himself of the contempt, by swearing to a fact which is an ample excuse. See PURGATION.

OATH SUPPLETORY. In Civil and Ecclesiastical Law. An oath required by the judge from either party in a cause, upon half-proof already made, which being joined to half-proof, supplies the evidence required to enable the judge to pass upon the subject. See Strange, 80; 3 Blackstone, Comm. 270.

OBEDIENCE. The performance of a command.

2. Officers who obey the command of their superiors, having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, are not responsible for their acts. A sheriff may, therefore, justify a trespass under an execution, when the court has jurisdiction, although irregularly issued. 3 Chitty, Pract. 75; Hammond, Nisi P. 48.

3. A child, an apprentice, a pupil, a mariner, and a soldier owe respectively obedience to the lawful commands of the parent, the master, the teacher, the captain of the ship, and the military officer having command; and in case of disobedience submission may be enforced by correction.

OBIT. That particular solemnity or office for the dead which the Roman Catholic church appoints to be read or performed over the body of a deceased member of that communion before interment; also, the office which upon the anniversary of his death was frequently used as a commemoration or observance of the day. 2 Croke, 51; Dy. 313.

OBITER DICTUM. See DICTUM.

OBLATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. A tender of money in payment of debt made by debtor to creditor. L. 9, C. de solut. Whatever is offered to the church by the pious. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

OBLIGATIO. In Roman Law. A legal bond which obliges us to the performance of something in accordance with the law of the land. Ortolan, Inst. 2, § 1179.

It corresponded nearly to our word contract. Justinian says, "Obligatio est juris vinculum, quo necessitate adstringimur alicujus solvendæ rei, secundum nostræ civitatis jura." Pr. J. 3. 13.

The Romans considered that obligations derived their validity solely from positive law. At first the only ones recognized were those established in special cases in accordance with the forms prescribed by the strict jus civile. In the course of time, however, the prætorian jurisdiction, in mitigation of the primitive rigor of the law, introduced new modes of contracting obligations and provided the means of enforcing them: hence the twofold division made by Justinian of obligationes civiles, and obligationes prætoriæ. Inst. 1. 3. 13. But there was a third class, the obligationes naturales, which derived their validity from the law of nature and nations, or the natural reason of mankind. These had not the binding force of the other classes, not being capable of enforcement by action, and are, therefore, not noticed by Justinian in his classification; but they had, nevertheless, a certain efficacy even in the civil law: for instance, though a debt founded upon a natural obligation could not be recovered by an action, yet if it was voluntarily paid by the debtor he could not recover it back, as he might do in the case of money paid by mistake, etc. where no natural obligation existed. L. 38, pr. D. 12. 6. And see Ortolan, 2, § 1180.

The second classification of obligations made by Justinian has regard to the way in which they arise. They were, in this aspect, either ex contractu or quasi ex contractu, or ex maleficio or quasi ex maleficio. Inst. 2. 3. 13. These will be discussed separately.

2. Obligationes ex contractu, those founded upon an express contract, are again subdivided into four classes, with reference to the mode in which they are contracted. The contract might be entered into re, verbis, literis, or consensu.

A contract was entered into re by the actual transfer of a thing from one party to the other. Though in such cases the understanding of the parties as to the object of the transfer, and the conditions accompanying it, formed an essential part of the contract, yet it was only by the actual delivery of the thing that the contract was generated. The only contracts which could be entered into in this way were those known to our law as bailments,—a term derived from the French word bailler, to deliver, and evidently pointing to the same characteristic feature in the translation which the Romans indicated by the word re. These were the mutuum, or loan of a thing to be consumed in the using and to be returned in kind, the commodatum, or gratuitous loan of a thing to be used and returned, the depositum, or delivery of a thing to be kept in safety for the benefit of the depositor, and the pignus, or delivery of a thing in pledge to a creditor, as security for his debt. See MUTUUM; COMMODATUM; DEPOSITUM; PIGNUS; Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1208 et seq.; Mackeldey, Röm. Recht, §§ 396–408. Besides the above-named contractus reales, a large class of contracts which had no special names, and were thence called contractus innominati, were included under this head, from the fact that they, like the former, gave rise the actio præscriptis verbis. Some of these were the contracts of exchange, of mutual compromise, of doubtful or contested claims (somewhat resembling our accord and satisfaction), of factorship, etc. See Mackeldey, §§ 409–414.

3. Contracts were entered into verbis, by a formal interrogation by one party and response by the other. The interrogation was called stipulatio, and the party making it, reus stipulandi. The response was called promissio, and the respondent, reus promittendi. The contract itself, consisting of the interrogation and response, was often called stipulatio. In the time of the earlier jurists, the stipulation could only be entered into by the use of certain formulary words by the parties: as, for instance, Spondes? do you promise? Spondeo, I promise; Dabis? will you give? Dabo, I will give; Facies? will you do this? Faciam, I will do it, etc. etc. But by a constitution of the emperor Leo, A.D. 469, the obligation to use these particular words was done away, and any words which expressed the meaning of the parties were allowed to create a valid stipulation, and any language understood by the parties might be used with as much effect as Latin. Such contracts were called verbis, because their validity depended entirely upon the use of the words. The mere agreement of the parties without using the question and response could not beget a stipulation; and, on the other hand, if the question and response had been used, the obligation was created although there might be an absence of consent. In this latter case, however, equitable relief would be granted by the prætor. Ortolan, Inst. § 1240. Stipulations, and, indeed, all other forms of contracts, might be made either pure, i.e. absolutely, or in diem, i.e. to take effect at a future day, or sub conditione, i.e. conditionally. But some kinds of conditions, such as those physically impossible, were inadmissible, and invalidated the contract; while others, such as those which were absurd, were themselves invalidated, and the contract was considered as having been made absolutely. Mackeldey, §§ 415–421; Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1235–1413; Inst. 3. 13–20.

4. Contracts entered into literis were obsolete in the reign of Justinian. In the earlier days of Roman jurisprudence, every citizen kept a private account-book. If a creditor, at the request of his debtor, entered in such book his charge against his debtor, such entry, in pursuance of the request, constituted not merely evidence of a contract, but the contract itself. This was the contract formed literis, in writing. The debtor, on his part, might also make a corresponding entry of the transaction in his own book This was, in fact, expected of him, and was generally done; but it seems not to have been necessary to the validity of the contract. The entry was made in the form of a fictitious payment; it was allowable only in pecuniary transactions; it must be simple and unconditional, and could not be made to take effect at a future day. The charge might be made against the original debtor, a re in personam, or against a third person who agreed to take his place, a persona in personam. This species of literal contract was called nomina, nomina transcriptitia, or acceptilatio et expensilatio. Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1414–1428.

5. There were two other literal contracts known to the early jurisprudence, called syngraphia and chirographia; but these even in the time of Gaius had become so nearly obsolete that very little is known about them. All these, it must be borne in mind, were contracts themselves, not merely evidences of a contract; and this distinguishes them from the instruments of writing in use during the latter ages of the civil law. Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1414–1441; Mackeldey, § 422.

Contracts were made consensu, by the mere agreement of the contracting parties. Although such agreement might be proved by a written instrument, as well as in other ways, yet the writing was only evidence of the contract, not the contract itself. This species of consensual contracts are emptio et venditio, or sale, locatio et conductio, or hiring, emphyteusis, or conveyance of land reserving a rent, societas, or partnership, and mandatum, or agency. See these words.

6. Obligationes quasi ex contractu. In the Roman law, persons who had not in fact entered into a contract were sometimes treated as if they had done so. Their legal position in such cases had considerable resemblance to that of the parties to a contract, and is called an obligatio quasi ex contractu. Such an obligation was engendered in the cases of negotiorum gestio, or unauthorized agency, of communio incidens, a sort of tenancy in common not originating in a contract, of solutio indebiti, or the payment of money to one not entitled to it, of the tutela and cura, resembling the relation of guardian and ward, of the additio hereditatis and agnitio bonorum possessionis, or the acceptance of an heirship, and many others. Some include in this class the constitutio dotis, settlement of a dower. Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1522–1632; Mackeldey, §§ 457–468.

7. Obligationes ex maleficio or ex delicto. The terms maleficium, delictum, embraced most of the injuries which the common law denominates torts, as well as others which are now considered crimes. This class includes furtum, theft, rapina, robbery, damnum, or injury to property, whether direct or consequential, and injuria, or injury to the person or reputation. The definitions here given of damnum and injuria are not strictly accurate, but will serve to convey an idea of the distinction between them. All such acts, from the instant of their commission, rendered the perpetrator liable for damages to the party injured, and were, therefore, considered to originate an obligatio. Inst. 4. 1–4; Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1715–1780.

Obligationes quasi ex delicto. This class embraces all torts not coming under the denomination of delicta and not having a special form of action provided for them by law. They differed widely in character, and at common law would in some cases give rise to an action on the case, in others to an action on an implied contract. Ortolan, Inst. §§ 1781–1792.

Obligationes ex variis causarum figuris. Although Justinian confined the divisions of obligations to the four classes which have been enumerated, there are many species of obligations which cannot properly be reduced within any of these classes. Some authorities have, consequently, established a fifth class, to receive the odds and ends which belonged nowhere else, and have given to this class the above designation, borrowed from Gaius, l. 1, pr. § 1 D. 44, 7. See Mackeldey, §§ 474–482.

OBLIGATION (from Lat. obligo, ligo, to bind). A duty.

A tie which binds us to pay or do something agreeably to the laws and customs of the country in which the obligation is made. Inst. 3. 14.

A bond containing a penalty, with a condition annexed, for the payment of money, performance of covenants, or the like, and which differs from a bill, which is generally without a penalty or condition, though it may be obligatory. Coke, Litt. 172.

A deed whereby a man binds himself under a penalty to do a thing. Comyns, Dig. Obligation (A); 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 502; 6 Vt. 40; 1 Blackf. Ind. 241; Harp. So. C. 434; 1 Baldw. C. C. 129; Bouvier, Inst. Index.

An absolute obligation is one which gives no alternative to the obligor, but requires fulfilment according to the engagement.

An accessory obligation is one which is dependent on the principal obligation: for example, if I sell you a house and lot of ground, the principal obligation on my part is to make you a title for it; the accessory obligation is to deliver you all the title-papers which I have relating to it, to take care of the estate till it is delivered to you, and the like.

An alternative obligation is where a person engages to do or to give several things in such a manner that the payment of one will acquit him of all.

Thus, if A agrees to give B, upon a sufficient consideration, a horse, or one hundred dollars, it is an alternative obligation. Pothier, Obl. pt. 2, c. 3, art. 6, no. 245.

In order to constitute an alternative obligation, it is necessary that two or more things should be promised disjunctively: where they are promised conjunctively, there are as many obligations as the things which are enumerated; but where they are in the alternative, though they are all due, there is but one obligation, which may be discharged by the payment of any of them.

The choice of performing one of the obligations belongs to the obligor, unless it is expressly agreed that it shall belong to the creditor. Dougl. 14

1 Ld. Raym. 279; 4 Mart. La. N. S. 167. If one of the acts is prevented by the obligee or the act of God, the obligor is discharged from both. See 2 Evans, Pothier, Obl. 52–54; Viner, Abr. Condition (S b); CONJUNCTIVE; DISJUNCTIVE; ELECTION.

A civil obligation is one which has a binding operation in law, and which gives to the obligee the right of enforcing it in a court of justice; in other words, it is an engagement binding on the obligor. 4 Wheat. 197; 12 id. 318, 337.

Civil obligations are divided into express and implied, pure and conditional, primitive and secondary, principal and accessory, absolute and alternative, determinate and indeterminate, divisible and indivisible, single and penal, and joint and several. They are also purely personal, purely real, or mixed.

A conditional obligation is one the execution of which is suspended by a condition which has not been accomplished, and subject to which it has been contracted.

A determinate obligation is one which has for its object a certain thing: as, an obligation to deliver a certain horse named Bucephalus. In this case the obligation can only be discharged by delivering the identical horse.

A divisible obligation is one which, being a unit, may nevertheless be lawfully divided with or without the consent of the parties.

It is clear that it may be divided by consent, as those who made it may modify or change it as they please. But some obligations may be divided without the consent of the obligor: as, where a tenant is bound to pay two hundred dollars a year rent to his landlord, the obligation is entire; yet, if his landlord dies and leaves two sons, each will be entitled to one hundred dollars; or if the landlord sells one undivided half of the estate yielding the rent, the purchaser will be entitled to receive one hundred dollars and the seller the other hundred. See APPORTIONMENT.

Express or conventional obligations are those by which the obligor binds himself in express terms to perform his obligation.

Imperfect obligations are those which are not binding on us as between man and man, and for the non-performance of which we are accountable to God only: such as charity or gratitude. In this sense an obligation is a mere duty. Pothier, Obl. art. prél. n. 1.

An implied obligation is one which arises by operation of law: as, for example, if I send you daily a loaf of bread, without any express authority, and you make use of it in your family, the law raises an obligation on your part to pay me the value of the bread.

An indeterminate obligation is one where the obligor binds himself to deliver one of a certain species: as, to deliver a horse, where the delivery of any horse will discharge the obligation.

An indivisible obligation is one which is not susceptible of division: as, for example, if I promise to pay you one hundred dollars, you cannot assign one-half of this to another, so as to give him a right of action against me for his share. See DIVISIBLE.

A joint obligation is one by which several obligors promise to the obligee to perform the obligation. When the obligation is only joint, and the obligors do not promise separately to fulfil their engagement, they must be all sued, if living, to compel the performance; or, if any be dead, the survivors must all be sued. See PARTIES TO ACTIONS.

A natural or moral obligation is one which cannot be enforced by action, but which is binding on the party who makes it in conscience and according to natural justice.

As, for instance, when the action is barred by the act of limitation, a natural obligation still subsists, although the civil obligation is extinguished. 5 Binn. Penn. 573. Although natural obligations cannot be enforced by action, they have the following effect: first, no suit will lie to recover back what has been paid or given in compliance with a natural obligation, 1 Term, 285; 1 Dall. Penn. 184: second, a natural obligation is a sufficient consideration for a new contract. 2 Binn. Penn. 591; 5 id. 33; Yelv. 41 a, n. 1; Cowp. 290; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 445; 3 Bos. & P. 249, n.; 2 East, 506; 3 Taunt. 311; 5 id. 36; 3 Pick. Mass. 207; Chitty, Contr. 10; CONSIDERATION.

A penal obligation is one to which is attached a penal clause, which is to be enforced if the principal obligation be not performed. See LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

A perfect obligation is one which gives a right to another to require us to give him something or not to do something. These obligations are either natural or moral, or they are civil.

A personal obligation is one by which the obligor binds himself to perform an act, without directly binding his property for its performance.

It also denotes an obligation in which the obligor binds himself only, not including his heirs or representatives.

A primitive obligation, which in one sense may also be called a principal obligation, is one which is contracted with a design that it should itself be the first fulfilled.

A principal obligation is one which is the most important object of the engagement of the contracting parties.

A pure or simple obligation is one which is not suspended by any condition, either because it has been contracted without condition, or, having been contracted with one, it has been fulfilled.

A real obligation is one by which real estate, and not the person, is liable to the obligee for the performance.

A familiar example will explain this. When an estate owes an easement as a right of way, it is the thing, and not the owner, who owes the easement. Another instance occurs when a person buys an estate which has been mortgaged, subject to the mortgage: he is not liable for the debt, though his estate is. In these cases the owner has an interest only because he is seised of the servient estate or the mortgaged premises, and he may discharge himself by abandoning or parting with the property. The obligation is both personal and real when the obligor has bound himself and pledged his estate for the fulfilment of his obligations.

A secondary obligation is one which is contracted and is to be performed in case the primitive cannot be. For example, if I sell you my house, I bind myself to give a title; but I find I cannot, as the title is in another: then my secondary obligation is to pay you damages for my non-performance of my obligation.

A several obligation is one by which one individual, or, if there be more, several individuals, bind themselves separately to perform the engagement. In this case each obligor may be sued separately; and if one or more be dead, their respective executors may be sued. See PARTIES TO ACTIONS.

A single obligation is one without any penalty: as, where I simply promise to pay you one hundred dollars. This is called a single bill, when it is under seal.

OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS. See IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

OBLIGEE. The person in favor of whom some obligation is contracted, whether such obligation be to pay money or to do or not to do something. La. Code, art. 3522, no. 11.

Obligees are either several or joint. An obligee is several when the obligation is made to him alone; obligees are joint when the obligation is made to two or more; and in that event each is not a creditor for his separate share, unless the nature of the subject or the particularity of the expression in the instrument lead to a different conclusion. 2 Pothier, Obl. Evans ed. 56; Dy. 350 a, pl. 20; Hob. 172; 2 Brownl. 207; Yelv. 177; Croke Jac. 251.

OBLIGOR. The person who has engaged to perform some obligation. La. Code, art. 3522, no. 12. One who makes a bond.

2. Obligors are joint and several. They are joint when they agree to pay the obligation jointly; and then the survivors only are liable upon it at law, but in equity the assets of a deceased joint obligor may be reached. 1 Brown, Ch. 29; 2 Ves. Ch. 101, 371. They are several when one or more bind themselves each of them separately to perform the obligation. In order to become an obligor, the party must actually, either himself or by his attorney, enter into the obligation and execute it as his own. If a man sign and seal a bond as his own, and deliver it, he will be bound by it although his name be not mentioned in the bond. 4 Ala. 479; 4 Hayw. No. C. 239; 4 M'Cord, So. C. 203; 7 Cow. N. Y. 484; 2 Bail. So. C. 190; Brayt. Vt. 38; 2 Hen. & M. Va. 398; 5 Mass. 538; 2 Dan. Ky. 463; 4 Munf. Va. 380; 4 Dev. No. C. 272. When the obligor signs between the penal part and the condition, still the latter will be a part of the instrument. 7 Wend. N. Y. 345; 3 Hen. & M. Va. 144.

3. The execution of a bond by the obligor, in blank, with verbal authority to fill it up, does not bind the obligor, though it is afterwards filled up, unless the bond is redelivered or acknowledged or adopted. 1 Yerg. Tenn. 69, 149; 1 Hill, N. Y. 267; 2 Nott & M'C. So. C. 125; 2 Brock. 64; 1 Ohio, 368; 2 Dev. No. C. 369; 6 Gill & J. Md. 250. But see, contra, 17 Serg. & R. Penn. 438; and see 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 308; Wright, Ohio, 742.

OBREPTION. Acquisition of escheats, etc. from sovereign, by making false representations. Bell, Dict. Subreption; Calvinus, Lex.

OBROGATION. The annulling a law, in whole or in part, by passing a law contrary to it. The alteration of a law. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

OBSCENITY. In Criminal Law. Such indecency as is calculated to promote the violation of the law and the general corruption of morals.

The exhibition of an obscene picture is an indictable offence at common law, although not charged to have been exhibited in public, if it be averred that the picture was exhibited to sundry persons for money. 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 91. See Duane, Cr. Cas. 64.

OBSERVE. In Civil Law. To perform that which has been prescribed by some law or usage. Dig. 1. 3. 32.

OBSOLETE. A term applied to laws which have lost their efficacy without being repealed.

A positive statute, unrepealed, can never be repealed by non-user alone. 4 Yeates, Penn. 181, 215; 1 P. A. Browne, Penn. App. 28; 13 Serg. & R. Penn. 447. The disuse of a law is at most only presumptive evidence that society has consented to such a repeal: however this presumption may operate on an unwritten law, it cannot, in general, act upon one which remains as a legislative act on the statute-book; because no presumption can set aside a certainty. A written law may indeed become obsolete when the object to which it was intended to apply, or the occasion for which it was enacted, no longer exists. 1 P. A. Browne, Penn. App. 28. "It must be a very strong case," says Chief-Justice Tilghman, "to justify the court in deciding that an act standing on the statute-book, unrepealed, is obsolete and invalid. I will not say that such case may not exist,—where there has been a non-user for a great number of years,—where, from a change of times and manners, an ancient sleeping statute would do great mischief if suddenly brought into action,—where a long practice inconsistent with it has prevailed, and specially where from other and latter statutes it might be inferred that in the apprehension of the legislature the old one was not in force." 13 Serg. & R. Penn. 452; Rutherforth, Inst. b. 2, c. 6, s. 19; Merlin, Répert. Desuetude.

OBSTRUCTING PROCESS. In Criminal Law. The act by which one or more persons attempt to prevent, or do prevent, the execution of lawful process.

2. The officer must be prevented by actual violence, or by threatened violence accompanied by the exercise of force, or by those having capacity to employ it, by which the officer is prevented from executing his writ. The officer is not required to expose his person by a personal conflict with the offender. 2 Wash. C. C. 169. See 3 Wash. C. C. 335; 12 Ala. N. S. 199.

3. This is an offence against public justice of a very high and presumptuous nature; and more particularly so where the obstruction is of an arrest upon criminal process. A person opposing an arrest upon criminal process becomes thereby particeps criminis; that is, an accessory in felony, and a principal in high treason. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 128; 2 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. c. 17, s. 1; 1 Russell, Crimes, 360. See 2 Gall. C. C. 15; 2 Chitty, Crim. Law, 145, note a; 3 Vt. 110; 25 id. 415; 2 Strobh. So. C. 73; 15 Mo. 486.

OBVENTIO (Lat. obvenire, to fall in). In Civil Law. Rent or profit accruing from a thing, or from industry. It is generally used in the plural.

In Old English Law. The revenue of spiritual living, so called. Cowel. Also, in the plural, offerings. Coke, 2d Inst. 661.

OCCUPANCY. The taking possession of those things corporeal which are without an owner, with an intention of appropriating them to one's own use.

Pothier defines it to be the title by which one acquires property in a thing which belongs to nobody, by taking possession of it with design of acquiring it. Tr. du Dr. de Propriété, n. 20. The Civil Code of Louisiana, art. 3375, nearly following Pothier, defines occupancy to be "A mode of acquiring property by which a thing which belongs to nobody becomes the property of the person who took possession of it with an intention of acquiring a right of ownership in it." Occupancy is sometimes used in the sense of occupation or holding possession; but this does not appear to be a common legal use of the term.

To constitute occupancy, there must be a taking of a thing corporeal, belonging to nobody, with an intention of becoming the owner of it. Coke, Litt. 416.

A right by occupancy attaches in the finder of lost goods unreclaimed by the owner; in the captor of beasts ferœ naturœ, so long as he retains possession, 2 Blackstone, Comm. 403; the owner of lands by accession, and the owner of goods acquired by confusion.

It was formerly considered, also, that the captor of goods contraband of war acquired a right by occupancy; but this is now held otherwise, such goods being now held to be primarily vested in the sovereign, and as belonging to individual captors only, to the extent and under such regulations as positive laws may prescribe. 2 Kent, Comm. 290.

OCCUPANT, OCCUPIER. One who has the actual use or possession of a thing.

When the occupiers of a house are entitled to a privilege in consequence of such occupation, as to pass along a way, to enjoy a pew, and the like, a person who occupies a part of such house, however small, is entitled to some right, and cannot be deprived of it. 2 Barnew. & Ald., 164; 1 Chitty, Pract. 209, 210; 4 Comyns, Dig. 64; 5 id. 199.

OCCUPATION. Use or tenure: as, the house is in the occupation of A B. A trade, business, or mystery: as, the occupation of a printer.

A putting out of a man's freehold in time of war. Coke, Litt. s. 412.

OCCUPAVIT (Lat.). In Old Practice. The name of a writ which lies to recover the possession of lands when they have been taken from the possession of the owner by occupation (q. v.).

OCCUPIER. One who is in the enjoyment of a thing.

He may be the occupier by virtue of a lawful contract, either express or implied, or without any contract. The occupier is, in general, bound to make the necessary repairs to the premises he occupies: the cleansing and repairing of drains and sewers, therefore, is primâ facie the duty of him who occupies the premises. 3 Q. B. 449.

OCHLOCRACY. A government where the authority is in the hands of the multitude; the abuse of a democracy. Vaumène, Dict. du Langage Politique.

OCTAVE (Law Lat. utas). In Old English Practice. The eighth day inclusive after a feast. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 277.

OCTO TALES (Lat. eight such). If, when a trial at bar is called on, the number of jurors in attendance is too small, the trial must be adjourned, and a decem or octo tales awarded, according to the number deficient: as, at common law, namely, a writ to the sheriff to summon eight more such men as were originally summoned. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 364.

ODHALL RIGHT. The same as allodial.

OF COURSE. That which may be done in the course of legal proceedings without making any application to the court; that which is granted by the court, without further inquiry, upon its being asked: as, a rule to plead is a matter of course.

OFFENCE. In Criminal Law. The doing that which a penal law forbids to be done, or omitting to do what it commands. In this sense, it is nearly synonymous with crime. In a more confined sense, it may be considered as having the same meaning with misdemeanor; but it differs from it in this, that it is not indictable, but punishable summarily by the forfeiture of a penalty. 1 Chitty, Pract. 14.

OFFER. A proposition to do a thing.

2. An offer ought to contain a right, if accepted, of compelling the fulfilment of the contract; and this right, when not expressed, is always implied.

By virtue of his natural liberty, a man may change his will at any time, if it is not to the injury of another: he may, therefore, revoke or recall his offers at any time before they have been accepted; and, in order to deprive him of this right, the offer must have been accepted on the terms in which it was made. 10 Ves. Ch. 438; 2 Carr. & P. 553.

3. Any qualification of, or departure from, those terms, invalidates the offer, unless the same be agreed to by the party who made it. 4 Wheat. 225; 3 Johns. N. Y. 534; 7 id. 470; 6 Wend. N. Y. 103.

When the offer has been made, the party is presumed to be willing to enter into the contract for the time limited, and, if the time be not fixed by the offer, then until it be expressly revoked or rendered nugatory by a contrary presumption. 6 Wend. N. Y. 103

See 8 Serg. & R. Penn. 243; 1 Pick. Mass. 278; 10 id. 326; 12 Johns. N. Y. 190; 9 Port. Ala. 605; 1 Bell, Comm. 326, 5th ed.; Pothier, Vente, n. 32; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 577 et seq. And see ACCEPTANCE OF CONTRACTS; ASSENT; BID.

OFFICE. A right to exercise a public function or employment, and to take the fees and emoluments belonging to it. Shelford, Mortm. 797; Cruise, Dig. Index; 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 149.

Judicial offices are those which relate to the administration of justice, and which must be exercised by persons of sufficient skill and experience in the duties which appertain to them.

Military offices are such as are held by soldiers and sailors for military purposes.

Ministerial offices are those which give the officer no power to judge of the matter to be done, and require him to obey the mandates of a superior. 7 Mass. 280. See 5 Wend. N. Y. 170; 10 id. 514; 8 Vt. 512; 1 Ill. 280. It is a general rule that a judicial office cannot be exercised by deputy, while a ministerial may.

Political offices are such as are not connected immediately with the administration of justice or the execution of the mandates of a superior officer: the offices of the president of the United States, of the heads of departments, of the members of the legislature, are of this number.

In the United States, the tenure of office never extends beyond good behavior. In England, offices are public or private. The former affect the people generally; the latter are such as concern particular districts belonging to private individuals. In the United States, all offices, according to the above definition, are public; but in another sense employments of a private nature are also called offices: for example, the office of president of a bank, the office of director of a corporation. For the incompatibility of office, see INCOMPATIBILITY; 4 Serg. & R. Penn. 277; 4 Coke, Inst. 100; Comyns, Dig. b. 7. And see, generally, 3 Kent, Comm. 362; Cruise, Dig. tit. 25; 16 Viner, Abr. 101; Ayliffe, Parerg. 395; Pothier, Traité des Choses, § 2; 17 Serg. & R. Penn. 219; MANDAMUS; QUO WARRANTO.

OFFICE-BOOK. A book kept in a public office, not appertaining to a court, authorized by the law of any state.

An exemplification of any such office-book, when authenticated under the act of congress of 27th March, 1804, is to have such faith and credit given to it in every court and office within the United States as such exemplification has by law or usage in the courts or offices of the state from whence the same has been taken. See FOREIGN LAWS; FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

OFFICE-COPY. A transcript of a record or proceeding filed in an office established by law, certified under the seal of the proper officer.

OFFICE FOUND. In English Law. When an inquisition is made to the king's use of any thing, by virtue of office of him who inquires, and the inquisition is found, it is said to be office found. See INQUEST OF OFFICE.

OFFICER. He who is lawfully invested with an office.

Executive officers are those whose duties are mainly to cause the laws to be executed.

For example, the president of the United States of America, and the several governors of the different states, are executive officers. Their duties are pointed out in the national constitution and in the constitutions of the several states.

Legislative officers are those whose duties relate mainly to the enactment of laws, such as members of congress and of the several state legislatures.

These officers are confined in their duties, by the constitution, generally to make laws; though sometimes, in cases of impeachment, one of the houses of the legislature exercises judicial functions somewhat similar to those of a grand jury, by presenting to the other articles of impeachment, and the other house acts as a court in trying such impeachments. The legislatures have, besides, the power to inquire into the conduct of their members, judge of their elections, and the like.

Judicial officers are those whose duties are to decide controversies between individuals, and accusations made in the name of the public against persons charged with a violation of the law.

Ministerial officers are those whose duty it is to execute the mandates, lawfully issued, of their superiors.

Military officers are those who have command in the army; and Naval officers are those who are in command in the navy.

Officers are also divided into public officers and those who are not public. Some officers may bear both characters: for example, a clergyman is a public officer when he acts in the performance of such a public duty as the marriage of two individuals, 4 Conn. 209; and he is merely a private person when he acts in his more ordinary calling of teaching his congregation. See 4 Conn. 134; 18 Me. 155.

Officers are required to exercise the functions which belong to their respective offices. The neglect to do so may, in some cases, subject the offender to an indictment, 1 Yeates, Penn. 519; and in others he will be liable to the party injured. 1 Yeates, Penn. 506.

OFFICIAL. In Old Civil Law. The person who was the minister of, or attendant upon, a magistrate.

In Canon Law. The person to whom the bishop generally commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction bears this name. Wood, Inst. 30, 505; Merlin, Répert.

OFFICINA JUSTITIÆ. The workshop or office of justice. In English Law. The chancery is so called, because all writs issue from it, under the great seal, returnable into the courts of common law. See CHANCERY.

OHIO. One of the new states of the American Union.

2. Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Virginia claimed, under their respective charters, the territory lying northwest of the river Ohio. At the solicitation of the continental congress, these claims were, soon after the close of the war of independence, ceded to the United States. Virginia, however, reserved the ownership of the soil of three million seven hundred thousand acres between the Scioto and the Little Miami rivers, for military bounties to the soldiers of her line who had served in the revolutionary war; and Connecticut reserved three million six hundred and sixty-six thousand acres in northern Ohio, now usually called "the Western Reserve." The history of these reservations, and of the several "purchases" under which land-titles have been acquired in various parts of the state, will be found in Albachi's Annals of the West; in the Preliminary Sketch of the History of Ohio, in the first volume of Chase's Statutes of Ohio; and in Swan's Land Laws of Ohio. The conflicting titles of the states having been extinguished, congress, on July 13, 1787, passed the celebrated ordinance for the government of the territory northwest of the river Ohio. 1 Curwen's Revised Statutes of Ohio, 86. It provided for the equal distribution of the estates of intestates among their children, gave the widow dower as at common law, regulated the execution of wills and deeds, secured perfect religious toleration, the right of trial by jury, judicial proceedings according to the course of the common law, the benefits of the writ of habeas corpus, security against cruel and unusual punishments, the right of reasonable bail, the inviolability of contracts and of private property, and declared that "there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude in the said territory, otherwise than in the punishment of crimes whereof the party shall have been duly convicted."

3. These provisions have been, in substance, incorporated into the constitution and laws of Ohio, as well as of the other states which have since been formed within "the territory." The legal effect of the ordinance has been much discussed, and the supreme court of Ohio and the circuit court of the United States for the seventh circuit, on the one hand, and the supreme court of the United States, on the other, have arrived at directly opposite conclusions in respect to it. By the former it was considered a compact not incompatible with state sovereignty, and as binding on the state of Ohio as her own constitution; while the latter treated it as a mere temporary statute, which was abrogated by the adoption of the constitution of the United States. 5 Ohio, 410; 7 id. 416; 17 id. 425; 1 McLean, 336; 3 id. 226; 3 How. 212, 589; 10 id. 82: s. c., 8 Western Law Jour. 232.

On the 30th of October, 1802, congress passed an act making provision for the formation of a state constitution, under which, in 1803, Ohio was admitted into the Union, under the name of "the State of Ohio." This constitution was never submitted to a vote of the people. It continued to be the organic law of Ohio until September 1, 1851, when it was abrogated by the adoption of the present constitution.

4. The bill of rights which forms a part of this constitution contains the provisions common to such instruments in the constitutions of the different states. Such are the prohibitions against any laws impairing the right of peaceably assembling to consult for the common good, to bear arms, to have a trial by jury, to worship according to the dictates of one's own conscience, to have the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus, to be allowed reasonable bail, to be exempt from excessive fines and cruel and unusual punishments, not to be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury, to have a copy of the indictment, the aid of counsel, compulsory process for witnesses, a speedy and public trial, to be privileged from testifying against one's self or to be twice put in jeopardy for the same offence. Provision is also made against the existence of slavery, against transporting offenders out of the state, against imprisonment for debt unless in cases of fraud, against granting hereditary honors, against quartering soldiers in private houses, for the security of persons from unreasonable arrest or searches, and for the freedom of speech and the press.

Every white male citizen of the United States, twenty-one years of age, who has resided in the state one year, and in the county, township, or ward such period as may be fixed by law, next preceding election, is entitled to vote.

The Legislative Power.

This is lodged in a General Assembly, consisting of a Senate and House of Representatives.

5. The Senate is composed of thirty-five members, elected biennially, one in each of the senatorial districts into which the state is divided, for the term of two years. Senators must have resided in their respective districts one year next before election, unless absent on business of the state or the United States.

The House of Representatives is composed of one hundred members, elected biennially, one in each of the representative districts of the state, for the term of two years, by the voters of the district. A representative must have resided one year next preceding the election in the county or district for which he is elected. No person can be elected to either house who holds office under the United States or an office of profit under the state. Provision is made for re-districting the state every ten years from 1851, by dividing and combining the existing districts, and affording additional representatives during a part of the decennial period to those districts which have a surplus population over the ratio. The assembly cannot grant special charters to corporations, but may provide for their creation by general laws. No association with banking powers can be authorized until the act creating it has been submitted to the people and approved by a majority voting at that election. A debt cannot be contracted for purposes of internal improvement. Cities and incorporated villages are corporations under general laws. The general assembly may not pass retroactive laws, but may authorize courts to carry into effect, upon such terms as may be just and equitable, the manifest intention of parties and officers, by curing omissions, defects, and errors in instruments and proceedings arising out of their want of conformity with the laws of the state.

The Executive Department.

6. The Governor is elected biennially, for the term of two years from the second Monday of January next following his election, and until his successor is qualified. He may require information, in writing, from the officers in the executive department, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices, and shall see that the laws are faithfully executed; may, on extraordinary occasions, convene the general assembly by proclamation; in case of disagreement between the two houses in respect to the time of adjournment, has power to adjourn the general assembly to such time as he may think proper, but not beyond the regular meetings thereof; is commander-in-chief of the military and naval forces of the state, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States; and has power, after conviction, to grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons for all crimes and offences, except treason and cases of impeachment, upon such conditions as he may think proper, subject, however, to such regulations, as to the manner of applying for pardons, as may be prescribed by law. Upon conviction for treason, he may suspend the execution of the sentence, and report the case to the general assembly at its next meeting, when the general assembly shall either pardon, commute the sentence, direct its execution, or grant a further reprieve. He must communicate to the general assembly, at every regular session, each case of reprieve, commutation, or pardon granted, stating the name and crime of the convict, the sentence, its date, and the date of the commutation, pardon, or reprieve, with his reasons therefor.

He has no veto power upon the acts of the legislature, and his power of appointment is extremely limited.

The Lieutenant-Governor is elected at the same time, and for the same term of office, as the governor.

In case of the death, impeachment, resignation, removal, or other disability of the governor, the powers and duties of the office, for the residue of the term, or until he is acquitted or the disability be removed, devolve upon the lieutenant-governor.

He is president of the senate ex officio, but possesses only a casting vote.

A Secretary of State, a Treasurer, and an Attorney-General are also elected at the same time, for the same term.

An Auditor is elected once in four years. If any of these offices become vacant, the governor appoints incumbents to serve till the next general election, after thirty days occurs, when a successor is elected for a full term.

The Judicial Power.

7. The Supreme Court consists of five judges, elected by the people for five years. The judges are so classified that one goes out of office each year. It has original jurisdiction over writs of quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, and procedendo, and a large appellate jurisdiction by writs of error from inferior courts. It may issue writs of error and certiorari in any criminal case, and supersedeas in any case, and all writs, not provided for, which are necessary to enforce the administration of justice. Writs of error, certiorari, habeas corpus, and supersedeas may be issued by the judge in vacation.

The District Court is composed of one judge of the supreme court and the judges of the common-pleas court for the district in which the court is held. One session at least of this court is to be held annually in each county, or at least three sessions annually in three places in the district. It has like original and appellate jurisdiction with the supreme court upon writ of error granted by the supreme court, or some judge thereof in vacation.

The Court of Common Pleas is composed of three judges, elected by the people in each of the nine districts into which the state is divided, for the term of five years. Each of these nine districts is divided into three parts, following county-lines, and as nearly equal as possible; and in each of these sub-districts one judge is elected. Courts of common pleas are to be held by one or more of these judges; and more than one common-pleas court may be held in the district at the same time. This court has original jurisdiction of all civil causes where the matter in controversy exceeds one hundred dollars, and a service, personal or by attachment of property, can be made in the county or where the property in question is situated in the county. This court has also almost exclusively the criminal jurisdiction, with the exception of a petty jurisdiction exercised in some instances by local police courts. It has a supervisory jurisdiction in cases of distribution of decedents' property by the probate courts. Acts 1857, p. 202. It may effectuate the intentions of parties, by curing defective instruments. Acts 1859, p. 40. It exercises appellate jurisdiction also of cases brought from justices of the peace and all other inferior judicial tribunals. A writ of error lies from this court to the district court.

8. A Probate Court is held in each county by a probate judge, elected for three years by the people of the county. This court has jurisdiction in probate and testamentary matters, the appointment of administrators and guardians, the settlement of the accounts of executors, administrators, and guardians, and such jurisdiction in habeas corpus, the issuing of marriage licenses, and for the sale of land by executors, administrators, and guardians, and such other jurisdiction, in any county or counties, as may be provided by law.

A very extensive jurisdiction is now exercised over the administration of trusts upon assignments made by failing debtors for the benefit of their creditors, and over judgment debtors who are accused of secreting their effects.

Superior courts have been established, under authority of the constitution, in Cincinnati, Columbus, Dayton, and Cleveland, whose jurisdiction in civil causes is concurrent with the courts of common pleas within their respective territorial limits. Their decisions are supervised by the supreme court, by writ of error allowed by that court, or by one of its judges in vacation.

Jurisprudence.

The common law of England is the basis of the civil law of this state, modified by the judicial rejection of that part which is "inapplicable to the condition of the people of Ohio." The body of the general laws is contained in Chase's Statutes of Ohio from 1787 to 1833, three volumes, and in Curwen's Revised Statutes from 1833 to 1861, four volumes. No attempt has ever been made to arrange or classify the great mass of local legislation, including the charters of banks, turnpikes, railroads, and manufacturing companies, the boundaries of counties, sales of school lands, acts for the relief of private persons, and others of a kindred nature; and complete editions of these latter laws have now become very rare. A compendium of the laws in force has been published (1860) by Messrs. Swan & Critchfield, which, with Curwen's Revised Statutes, now constitute the ordinary works of reference in Ohio upon questions involving the present state of legislation.

The criminal law of the state is wholly statutory, and there are no offences recognized as common-law offences. The formal distinction between actions at law and in equity is abolished. Actions are brought by a petition stating the facts of the case.

OLD NATURA BREVIUM. The title of an old English book, so called to distinguish it from Fitzherbert's work entitled Natura Brevium. It contains the writs most in use in the reign of Edward III., together with a short comment on the application and properties of each of them.

OLD TENURES. The title of a small tract, which, as its title denotes, contains an account of the various tenures by which land was holden in the reign of Edward III. This tract was published in 1719, with notes and additions, with the eleventh edition of the First Institutes, and reprinted in 8vo, in 1764, by Serjeant Hawkins, in a Selection of Coke's Law Tracts.

OLERON, LAWS OF. A maritime code promulgated by Eleanor, duchess of Guienne, mother of Richard I., at the isle of Oleron,—whence their name. They were modified and enacted in England under Richard I., and again promulgated under Henry III. and Edward III., and are constantly quoted in proceedings before the admiralty courts, as are also the Rhodian Laws. Coke, Litt. 2. See CODE, § 25.

OLIGARCHY (Gr. ὀλιγος and ἀρχη. The government of a few). A name given to designate the power which a few citizens of a state have usurped, which ought by the constitution to reside in the people. Among the Romans, the government degenerated several times into an oligarchy,—for example, under the decemvirs, when they became the only magistrates in the commonwealth.

OLOGRAPH. A term which signifies that an instrument is wholly written by the party. See La. Civ. Code, art. 1581; Code Civ. 970; 5 Toullier, n. 357; 1 Stu. Low. C. 327; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2139. And see TESTAMENT; WILL.

OMISSION. The neglect to perform what the law requires.

When a public law enjoins on certain officers duties to be performed by them for the public, and they omit to perform them, they may be indicted: for example, supervisors of the highways are required to repair the public roads: the neglect to do so will render them liable to be indicted.

When a nuisance arises in consequence of an omission, it cannot be abated, if it be a private nuisance, without giving notice, when such notice can be given. See COMMISSION; NUISANCE.

OMNIA PERFORMAVIT (Lat. he has done all). In Pleading. A good plea in bar where all the covenants are in the affirmative. 1 Me. 189.

OMNIUM (Lat.). In Mercantile Law. A term used to express the aggregate value of the different stocks in which a loan is usually funded. 2 Esp. 361; 7 Term, 630.

ON ACCOUNT OF WHOM IT MAY CONCERN, FOR WHOM IT MAY CONCERN. A clause in policies of insurance, under which all are insured who have an insurable interest at the time of effecting the insurance and who were then contemplated by the party effecting the insurance. 2 Parsons, Marit. Law, 30.

ONCE IN JEOPARDY. Once in danger, i.e. of the penalties of the law, in life or limb. It is a principle of the common law that no man shall be put twice in jeopardy of life or limb. This is made a part of the constitution of the United States. But whether, under this clause, the unnecessary discharge of jury without the consent of the prisoner or his counsel can be pleaded in bar is doubtful. That it may be, see 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 577; 1 Hayw. No. C. 241; 10 Yerg. Tenn. 532; 16 Ala. 188; that it is not, see 2 Sumn. C. C. 42; 9 Mass. 194; 2 Pick. Mass. 521; 18 Johns. N. Y. 187; 1 Miss. 134; 2 Gall. C. C. 364; 2 McLean, C. C. 114. See, in general, 17 Penn. St. 126; 1 Swan, Tenn. 14, 34; 35 Me. 225; 5 Rich. So. C. 219; 14 Ga. 8; 23 Miss. 62; 24 id. 54; 27 Me. 266; 32 id. 530; 7 Gratt. Va. 593; 9 Humphr. Tenn. 677; 11 id. 599; 1 Iowa, 392; 12 Metc. Mass. 387; 6 Ark. 187; AUTREFOIS ACQUIT; JEOPARDY.

ONERARI NON (Lat. ought not to be burdened). In Pleading. The name of a plea by which the defendant says that he ought not to be charged. It is used in an action of debt. 1 Saund. 290, n. a.

ONERIS FERENDI (Lat. of bearing a burden). In Civil Law. The name of a servitude by which the wall or pillar of one house is bound to sustain the weight of the buildings of the neighbor.

The owner of the servient building is bound to repair and keep it sufficiently strong for the weight it has to bear. Dig. 8. 2. 23; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1627.

ONEROUS CAUSE. In Civil Law. A valuable consideration.

ONEROUS CONTRACT. In Civil Law. One made for a consideration given or promised, however small. La. Civ. Code, art. 1767.

ONEROUS DEED. In Scotch Law. A deed given for valuable consideration. Bell, Dict.; CONSIDERATION.

ONEROUS GIFT. The gift of a thing subject to certain charges imposed by the giver on the donee. Pothier, Obl.

ONOMASTIC. A term applied to a signature which is in a different handwriting from the body of the instrument. 2 Bentham, Jud. Ev. 460, 461.

ONUS PROBANDI (Lat.). In Evidence. The burden of proof.

2. It is a general rule that the party who alleges the affirmative of any proposition shall prove it. It is also a general rule that the onus probandi lies upon the party who seeks to support his case by a particular fact of which he is supposed to be cognizant: for example, when to a plea of infancy the plaintiff replies a promise after the defendant had attained his age, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to prove the promise, and it lies on the defendant to show that he was not of age at the time. 1 Term, 648. But where the negative involves a criminal omission by the party, and, consequently, where the law, by virtue of the general principle, presumes his innocence, the affirmative of the fact is also presumed. See 11 Johns. N. Y. 513; 19 id. 345; 9 Mart. La. 48; 3 Mart. La. N. S. 576.

3. In general, wherever the law presumes the affirmative, it lies on the party who denies the fact to prove the negative: as when the law raises a presumption as to the continuance of life, the legitimacy of children born in wedlock, or the satisfaction of a debt. See, generally, 1 Phillipps, Ev. 156; 1 Starkie, Ev. 376; Roscoe, Civ. Ev. 51; Roscoe, Crim. Ev. 55; Buller, Nisi P. 298; 2 Gall. C. C

485; 1 M'Cord, So. C. 573; 12 Viner, Abr. 201; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4411.

The party on whom the onus probandi lies is entitled to begin, notwithstanding the technical form of the proceedings. 1 Starkie, Ev. 584; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3043. See BURDEN OF PROOF.

OPEN. To begin. He begins or opens who has the affirmative of an issue. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 74.

To open a case is to make a statement of the pleadings in a case, which is called the opening. This should be concise, very distinct, and perspicuous. Its use is to enable the judge and jury to direct their attention to the real merits of the case and the points in issue. 1 Stark. 439; 2 id. 317.

To vacate; to relieve a party who has an equitable right to such relief against a proceeding which is to him a formal or legal bar; to allow a re-discussion on the merits.

For example, to open a rule of court. 2 Chitty, Bail, 265; 5 Taunt. 628; 1 Mann. & G. 555; 7 Ad. & E. 519. To open a judgment or default. 4 R. I. 324; 1 Wisc. 631. See OPENING A JUDGMENT. To open a marriage settlement or an estate-tail; i.e. to allow a new settlement of the estate. To open biddings; i.e. to allow a re-sale. See OPENING BIDDINGS. To open contract. 44 Me. 206.

OPEN ACCOUNT. A running or unsettled account.

OPEN A CREDIT. To accept or pay the draft of a correspondent who has not furnished funds. Pardessus, n. 296.

OPEN COURT. A court formally opened and engaged in the transaction of all judicial functions.

A court to which all persons have free access as spectators while they conduct themselves in an orderly manner.

The term is used in the first sense as distinguishing a court from a judge sitting in chambers or informally for the transaction of such matters as may be thus transacted. See CHAMBERS; COURT.

In the second sense, all courts in the United States are open; but in England, formerly, while the parties and probably their witnesses were admitted freely in the courts, all other persons were required to pay in order to obtain admittance. Stat. 13 Edw. I. cc. 42, 44; Barr. on the Stat. 126, 127. See Prin. of Pen. Law, 165.

OPEN POLICY. An open policy is one in which the amount of the interest of the insured is not fixed by the policy, and is to be ascertained in case of loss. See POLICY.

OPENING. In American Practice. The beginning. The commencement. The first address of the counsel.

The opening is made immediately upon the impanelling of the jury: it embraces the reading of such of the pleadings as may be necessary, and a brief outline of the case as the party expects to prove it, where there is a trial, or of the argument, where it is addressed to the court.

In English Practice. The address made immediately after the evidence is closed. Such address usually states—first, the full extent of the plaintiff's claims, and the circumstances under which they are made, to show that they are just and reasonable; second, at least an outline of the evidence by which those claims are to be established; third, the legal grounds and authorities in favor of the claim or of the proposed evidence; fourth, an anticipation of the expected defence, and statement of the grounds on which it is futile, either in law or justice, and the reasons why it ought to fail. But the court will sometimes restrict counsel from an anticipation of the defence. 3 Chitty, Pract. 881; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3044 et seq.

OPENING BIDDINGS. Ordering a re-sale. When estates are sold under decree of equity to the highest bidder, the court will, on notice of an offer of a sufficient advance on the price obtained, open the biddings, i.e. order a re-sale. But this will not generally be done after the confirmation of the certificate of the highest bidder. So, by analogy, a re-sale has been ordered of an estate sold under bankruptcy. Sugden, Vend. 90; 22 Barb. N. Y. 167; 8 Md. 322; 9 id. 228; 13 Gratt. Va. 639; 4 Wisc. 242; 31 Miss. 514.

OPENING A JUDGMENT. In Practice. An act of the court by which a judgment is so far annulled that it cannot be executed, although it still retains some qualities of a judgment: as, for example, its binding operation or lien upon the real estate of the defendant.

The opening of the judgment takes place when some person having an interest makes affidavit to facts which, if true, would render the execution of such judgment inequitable. The judgment is opened so as to be in effect an award of a collateral issue to try the facts alleged in the affidavit. 6 Watts & S. Penn. 493, 494.

OPENING OF A POLICY OF INSURANCE. The question has been made whether, and in what cases, if any, the valuation in a valued policy shall be opened. The valuation, being a part of the agreement of the parties, is not to be set aside as between them in any case. The question is, how shall it be treated where only a part of the subject insured and valued is put at a risk, and also in the settlement of a particular average? and the answer is the same in both cases: viz., when the proportion or rate per centum put at risk or lost is ascertained, the agreed valuation of the whole is to be applied to the part put at risk or the proportion lost, pro rata. 2 Phillips, Ins. 1203.

OPERATION OF LAW. A term applied to indicate the manner in which a party acquires rights without any act of his own: as, the right to an estate of one who dies intestate is cast upon the heir at law, by operation of law; when a lessee for life enfeoffs him in reversion, or when the lessee and lessor join in a feoffment, or when a lessee for life or years accepts a new lease or demise from the lessor, there is a surrender of the first lease by operation of law. 5 Barnew. & C. 269; 9 id. 298; 2 Barnew. & Ad. 119; 5 Taunt. 518. See DESCENT; PURCHASE.

OPERATIVE. A workman; one employed to perform labor for another.

2. This word is used in the bankrupt law of 19th August, 1841, s. 5, which directs that any person who shall have performed any labor as an operative in the service of any bankrupt shall be entitled to receive the full amount of wages due to him for such labor, not exceeding twenty-five dollars: provided that such labor shall have been performed within six months next before the bankruptcy of his employer.

3. Under this act, it has been decided that an apprentice who had done work beyond a task allotted to him by his master, commonly called overwork, under an agreement on the part of the master to pay for such work, was entitled as an operative. 1 Penn. Law Journ. 368. See 3 C. Rob. Adm. 237; 2 Cranch, 240, 270.

OPINION. In Evidence. An inference or conclusion drawn by a witness, as distinguished from facts known to him as facts.

2. It is the province of the jury to draw inferences and conclusions; and if witnesses were in general allowed to testify what they judge as well as what they know, the verdict would sometimes prove not the decision of the jury, but that of the witnesses. Hence the rule that, in general, the witness cannot be asked his opinion upon a particular question. 29 N. H. 94; 16 Ill. 513; 18 Ga. 194, 573; 7 Wend. N. Y. 560; 24 id. 668; 2 N. Y. 514; 9 id. 371; 17 id. 340.

Some confusion in the application of this rule arises from the delicacy of the line which divides that which is to be regarded as matter of observation from that which is matter of judgment founded upon observation. Thus, it is held that an unprofessional witness may testify to the fact that a person whom he saw was intoxicated, whether he is able to state all the constituent facts which amount to drunkenness or not. 14 N. Y. 562; 26 Ala. N. s. 26. But, on the other hand, insanity or mental incapacity cannot, in general, be proved by the mere assertion of an unprofessional witness. 17 N. Y. 340; 7 Barb. N. Y. 314; 13 Tex. 568. And see 25 Ala. N. s. 21.

3. So handwriting may be proved by being recognized by a witness who has seen other writings of the party in the usual course of business, or who has seen him write. Peake, Nisi P. 21; 1 Esp. 15, 351; 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 211; 19 Johns. N. Y. 134. But, on the other hand, the authorship of an anonymous article in a newspaper cannot be proved by one professing to have a knowledge of the author's style. How, App. Cas. N. Y. 187, 202.

From necessity, an exception to this rule of excluding opinions is made in questions involving matters of science, art, or trade, where skill and knowledge possessed by a witness, peculiar to the subject, give a value to his opinion above that of any inference which the jury could draw from facts which he might state. 4 Hill, N. Y. 129; 1 Den. N. Y. 281; 3 Ill. 297; 2 N. H. 480; 2 Stor. C. C. 421. Such a witness is termed an expert; and he may give his opinion in evidence.

4. The following reference to some of the matters in which the opinions of expert witnesses have been held admissible will illustrate this principle. The unwritten or common law of foreign countries may be proved by the opinion of witnesses possessing professional knowledge, Story, Confl. of L. 530; 1 Cranch, 12, 38; 2 id. 236; 6 Pet. 763; Pet. C. C. 225; 2 Wash. C. C. 1, 175; 2 Wend. N. Y. 411; 5 id. 375; 3 Pick. Mass. 293; 4 Conn. 517; 6 id. 486; 4 Bibb, Ky. 73; 2 Marsh. Ky. 609; 5 Harr. & J. Md. 186; 1 Johns. N. Ky. 258; mechanical operations, the proper way of conducting a particular manufacture, and the effect of a certain method, 4 Barb. N. Y. 614; 19 id. 338; 3 N. Y. 322; negligence of a navigator, and its effect in producing a collision, 24 Ala. N. s. 21: sanity, 1 Add. 244; 12 N. Y. 358; 17 id. 340; impotency, 3 Phill. Eccl. 14; value of chattels, 22 Ala. N. s. 370; 11 Cush. Mass. 257; 22 Barb. N. Y. 652, 656; 23 Wend. N. Y. 354; value of land, 11 Cush. Mass. 201; 4 Gray, Mass. 607; 9 N. Y. 183; compare 4 Ohio St. 583; value of services, 15 Barb. N. N. s. 390; seaworthiness, Peake, Cas. 25; 10 Bingh. 57 And see 9 Cush. Mass. 226. So an engineer may be called to say what, in his opinion, is the cause that a harbor has been blocked up. 3 Dougl. 158; 1 Phillipps, Ev. 276; 4 Term, 498.

5. It is to be observed, however, that the principle of admitting such opinions is taken with the qualifications necessary to make, as far as possible, the judgment of the jury, and not that of the witness, the final means of determining the issue. Thus, opinions of experts are not admissible upon the question of damages, 4 Den. 311; 3 Hill, N. Y. 609; 21 Barb. N. Y. 331; 23 Wend. N. Y. 425; 2 N. Y. 514; 1 E. D. Smith, N. Y. 536; and experts are always confined to opinions within the scope of their professions, and are not allowed to give opinions on things of which the jury can as well judge. 5 Rog. Rec. N. Y. 26; 4 Wend. N. Y. 320; 14 Me. 398; 3 Dan. Ky. 382; 1 Penn. 161; 2 Halst. N. J. 244; 7 Vt. 161; 6 Rand. Va. 704; 4 Yeates, Penn. 262; 9 Conn. 102; 3 N. H. 349; 5 Harr. & J. Md. 438; 1 Den. N. Y. 281. A distinction is also to be observed between a feeble impression and a mere opinion or belief. 3 Ohio St. 406; 19 Wend. N. Y. 477.

In Practice. The statement of reasons delivered by a judge or court for giving the judgment which is pronounced upon a case. The judgment itself is sometimes called an opinion; and sometimes the opinion is spoken of as the judgment of the court.

A declaration, usually in writing, made by a counsel to his client of what the law is, according to his judgment, on a statement of facts submitted to him.

An opinion is in both the above cases a decision of what principles of law are to be applied in the particular case, with the difference that judicial opinions pronounced by the court are law and of authority, while the opinions of counsel, however eminent, are merely advice to his client or argument to the court.

6. Where there are several judges, and they do not all agree in the disposition of the cause, the opinion of the majority is termed the prevailing opinion, or the opinion of the court. The opinion of the minority is termed the dissenting opinion. The opinions of the courts, collected and provided with such preliminary statements of facts and of the arguments of counsel as may be necessary in each case to an understanding of the decision, make up the books of reports.

Opinions are said to be judicial or extra-judicial. A judicial opinion is one which is given on a question which is actually involved in the matter brought before the judge for his decision; an extra-judicial opinion is one which, although given by a judge in deciding a case, is not necessary to the judgment, Vaugh. 382; 1 Hale, Hist. 141; and, whether given in or out of court, is no more than the prolatum of him who gives it, and has no legal efficacy. 4 Penn. St. 28. Where a point is essential to the decision rendered, it will be presumed that it was duly considered, and that all that could be urged for or against it was presented to the court. But if it appears from the report of the case that such point was not taken or inquired into at all, there is no ground for this presumption, and the authority of the case is proportionably weakened. 8 Abb. Pract. N. Y. 316.

7. Where two or more points are discussed in the opinions delivered on the decision of a cause, and the determination of either point in the manner indicated in such opinions would authorize the judgment pronounced by the court, the judges concurring in the judgment must be presumed to have concurred in such opinions upon all the points so discussed, unless some dissent is expressed or the circumstances necessarily lead to a different conclusion. 6 N. Y. 9. Where a judgment is reversed upon a part only of the grounds on which it went, it is still deemed an authority as to the other grounds not questioned. See 5 Johns. N. Y. 125.

8. Counsel should, in giving an opinion, as far as practicable, give, first, a direct and positive opinion, meeting the point and effect of the question, and, if the question proposed is properly divisible into several, treating it accordingly. Second, his reasons, succinctly stated, in support of such opinion. Third, a reference to the statutes or decisions on the subject. Fourth, when the facts are susceptible of a material difference in statement, a suggestion of the probability of such variation. When an opinion is sought as a guide in respect to maintaining an action or defence, some other matters should be noticed:—as, Fifth, any necessary precautionary suggestions in reference to the possibility of a fatal defect in the evidence, arising from the nature of the case. Thus, where some important fact is stated as resting principally on the statement of the party interested, if by the law of the place such party is incompetent to testify respecting it, a suggestion ought to be made to inquire how that fact is to be proved. Sixth, a suggestion of the proper mode of proceeding, or the process or pleadings to be adopted.

9. In English and American law, the opinions of counsel, however eminent, are not entitled to any weight with the court as evidence of the law. While the court will deem it their duty to receive such opinions as arguments and entitled to whatever weight they may have as such, they will not yield to them any authority. 4 Penn. 1, 28. In many cases, however, where a client acts in good faith under the advice of counsel, he may on that ground be protected from a liability which the court in its discretion might otherwise have imposed upon him.

OPPOSITION. In Practice. The act of a creditor who declares his dissent to a debtor's being discharged under the insolvent laws.

OPPRESSOR. One who having public authority uses it unlawfully to tyrannize over another: as, if he keep him in prison until he shall do something which he is not lawfully bound to do.

To charge a magistrate with being an oppressor is, therefore, actionable. 1 Starkie, Sland. 185.

OPPROBRIUM. In Civil Law. Ignominy; shame; infamy.

OPTION. Choice; election. See those titles.

OPTIONAL WRIT. An original writ in the alternative, commanding either to do a thing or show cause why it has not been done. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 274; Finch, Law, 257.

OPUS LOCATUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A work (i.e. the result of work) let to another to be used. A work (i.e. something to be completed by work) hired to be done by another. Vicat, Voc. Jur. Opus, Locare; L. 51, § 1, D. Locat.; L. 1, § 1, D. ad leg. Rhod.

OPUS MAGNIFICIUM or MANIFICIUM (from Lat. opus, work, manus, hand). In Old English Law. Manual labor. Fleta, l. 2, c. 48, § 3.

OR. A disjunctive particle.

2. As a particle, or is often construed and,

and and construed or, to further the intent of the parties, in legacies, devises, deeds, bonds, and writings. 3 Gill, Md. 492; 7 id. 197; 1 Call, Va. 212; 2 Roper, Leg. text and notes of American editor 1400, 1405; 3 Greenleaf, Ev. tit. 38, c. 9, § 18, note, and text, § 25; 1 Jarman, Wills, c. 17, p. 427, 2d ed., and cases cited in Perk. note.; 1 Williams, Ex. 932, notes k, l; 5 Coke, 112 a; Croke Jac. 322; 4 Zabr. N. J. 686; 3 Term, 470.

3. Where an indictment is in the alternative, as forged or caused to be forged, it is bad for uncertainty. 2 Strange, 900; Hardw. 370; 1 Younge & J. Exch. 22. But a description of a horse as of a brown or bay color, in an indictment for larceny of such horse, is good, 13 Vt. 687; and so an indictment describing a nuisance as in the highway or road. 1 Dall. Penn. 150. See 28 Vt. 583; 24 Conn. 286; 13 Ark. 397.

When the word or in a statute is used in the sense of to wit, that is, in explanation of what precedes, and making it signify the same thing, a complaint or indictment which adopts the words of the statute is well framed. Thus, it was held that an indictment was sufficient which alleged that the defendant had in his custody and possession ten counterfeit bank-bills or promissory notes, payable to the bearer thereof, and purporting to be signed in behalf of the president and directors of the Union Bank, knowing them to be counterfeit, and with intent to utter and pass them, and thereby to injure and defraud the said president and directors; it being manifest from the statute on which the indictment was framed, that promissory note was used merely as explanatory of bank-bill, and meant the same thing. 8 Mass. 59; 2 Gray, Mass. 502.

In general, see Croke Eliz. 832; 27 Hen. VIII. 18 b; Hardw. 91, 94; 1 Ventr. 148; 2 Sandf. N. Y. 369; 1 Jones, No. C. 309; 3 Atk. Ch. 291; 3 Term, 470; 6 id. 34; 12 East, 288; 1 Bingh. 500; 2 Drur. & Warr. 471; 7 Jur. 570.

ORACULUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of a kind of decision given by the Roman emperors.

ORAL. Spoken, in contradistinction to written: as, oral evidence, which is evidence delivered verbally by a witness.

ORATOR. In Chancery Practice. The party who files a bill.

In Roman Law. An advocate. Code, 1. 3. 33. 1.

ORDAIN. To ordain is to make an ordinance, to enact a law.

The preamble to the constitution of the United States declares that the people "do ordain and establish this constitution for the United States of America." The third article of the same constitution declares that "the judicial power shall be vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as the congress may from time to time ordain and establish." See 1 Wheat. 304, 324; 4 id. 316, 402.

ORDEAL. An ancient superstitious mode of trial.

When in a criminal case the accused was arraigned, he might select the mode of trial either by God and his country, that is, by jury, or by God only, that is, by ordeal.

The trial by ordeal was either by fire or by water. Those who were tried by the former passed barefooted and blindfolded over nine hot glowing ploughshares, or were to carry burning irons in their hands, and accordingly as they escaped or not they were acquitted or condemned. The water ordeal was performed either in hot or cold water. In cold water, the parties suspected were adjudged innocent if their bodies were not borne up by the water contrary to the course of nature; and if after putting their bare arms or legs into scalding water they came out unhurt, they were taken to be innocent of the crime.

It was supposed that God would, by the mere contrivance of man, exercise his power in favor of the innocent. 4 Blackstone, Comm. 342; 2 Am. Jur. 280. For a detailed account of the trial by ordeal, see Herbert, Antiq. of the Inns of Court, 146.

ORDER. Command; direction.

An informal bill of exchange or letter of request requiring the party to whom it is addressed to deliver property of the person making the order to some one therein edscribed.

A designation of the person to whom a bill of exchange or negotiable promissory note is to be paid.

This order, in the case of negotiable paper, is usually by indorsement, and may be either express, as, "Pay to C D," or implied merely, as by writing A B [the payee's name]. See INDORSEMENT.

In French Law. The act by which the rank of preferences of claims, among creditors who have liens over the price which arises out of the sale of an immovable subject, is ascertained. Dalloz, Dict.

In Governmental Law. By this expression is understood the several bodies which compose the state. In ancient Rome, for example, there were three distinct orders: namely, that of the senators, that of the patricians, and that of the plebeians.

In the United States there are no orders of men; all men are equal in the eye of the law. See RANK.

ORDER OF FILIATION. The name of a judgment rendered by two justices, having jurisdiction in such case, in which a man therein named is adjudged to be the putative father of a bastard child, and it is further adjudged that he pay a certain sum for its support.

The order must bear upon its face—first, that it was made upon the complaint of the township, parish, or other place where the child was born and is chargeable; second, that it was made by justices of the peace having jurisdiction, 1 Salk. 122, pl. 6; 2 Ld. Raym. 1197; third, the birthplace of the child; fourth, the examination of the putative father and of the mother, but it is said the presence of the putative father is not requisite if he has been summoned, Cald

308; fifth, the judgment that the defendant is the putative father of the child, Sid. 363; Style, 154; Dalt. 52; Dougl. 662; sixth, that he shall maintain the child as long as he shall be chargeable to the township, parish, or other place, which must be named, 1 Salk. 121, pl. 2; Comb. 232; but the order may be that the father shall pay a certain sum weekly as long as the child is chargeable to the public, Style, 134; Ventr. 210; seventh, it must be dated, signed, and sealed by the justices. Such order cannot be vacated by two other justices. 15 Johns. N. Y. 208. See 4 Cow. N. Y. 253; 8 id. 623; 12 Johns. N. Y. 195; 2 Blackf. Ind. 42.

ORDER NISI. A conditional order, which is to be confirmed unless something be done, which has been required, by a time specified. Eden, Inj. 122.

ORDERS. Rules made by a court or other competent jurisdiction. The formula is generally in these words: It is ordered, etc.

The instructions given by the owner to the captain or commander of a ship, which he is to follow in the course of the voyage.

ORDINANCE. A law; a statute; a decree.

This word is more usually applied to the laws of a corporation than to the acts of the legislature: as, the ordinances of the city of Philadelphia. The following account of the difference between a statute and an ordinance is extracted from Bacon's Abridgment, Statute (A). "Where the proceeding consisted only of a petition from parliament and an answer from the king, these were entered on the parliament roll; and if the matter was of a public nature, the whole was then styled an ordinance: if, however, the petition and answer were not only of a public but a novel nature, they were then formed into an act by the king, with the aid of his council and judges, and entered on the statute roll." See Coke, Litt. 159 b, Butler's note; 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 146.

According to Lord Coke, the difference between a statute and an ordinance is that the latter has not had the assent of the king, lords, and commons, but is made merely by two of these powers. Coke, 4th Inst. 25. See Barrington, Stat. 41, note (x).

ORDINARY. In Ecclesiastical Law. An officer who has original jurisdiction in his own right, and not by deputation.

In England, the ordinary is an officer who has immediate jurisdiction in ecclesiastical causes. Coke, Litt. 344.

In the United States, the ordinary possesses, in those states where such officer exists, powers vested in him by the constitution and acts of the legislature. In South Carolina, the ordinary is a judicial officer. 1 Const. So. C. 267; 2 id. 384.

ORDINARY CARE. That degree of care which men of ordinary prudence exercise in taking care of their own property. It can only be determined by the circumstances of each particular case whether ordinary care was used. This degree of care is that required of bailees for the mutual benefit of bailor and bailee. 3 Mass. 132; 8 Metc. Mass. 91; 2 Wisc. 316; 16 Ark. 308; 23 Conn. 443; 40 Me. 64; 19 Ga. 427; 28 Vt. 150, 458; 9 N. ORDINARY SKILL. Such skill as a person conversant with the matter undertaken might be reasonably supposed to have. 11 Mees. & W. Exch. 113; 20 Mart. La. 68, 75; 1 H. Blackst. 158, 161; 6 Ga. 213, 219; 8 B. Monr. Ky. 515; 3 Barb. N. Y. 380; 13 Johns. N. Y. 211; 4 Burr. 2060; 3 Campb. 17, 19; 7 Carr. & P. 289; 6 Bingh. 460; 2 Bingh. N. C. 625; 16 Serg. & R. Penn. 368; 15 Mass. 316; 15 Pick. Mass. 440; 2 Cush. Mass. 316; 8 Carr. & P. 479; 3 Campb. 451; 4 Barnew. & C. 345.

One who undertakes to act in a professional or other clearly defined capacity is bound to exercise the skill appropriate to such capacity, though the undertaking be gratuitous. 20 Penn. St. 136; 31 N. H. 119.

ORDINATION. The act of conferring the orders of the church upon an individual.

ORDINIS BENEFICIUM. See BENEFICIUM ORDINIS.

ORDONNANCE DE LA MARINE. See CODE, § 24.

ORE TENUS (Lat.). Verbally; orally.

Formerly the pleadings of the parties were ore tenus; and the practice is said to have been retained till the reign of Edward III. 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 95; Stephen, Plead. 29. And see Bracton, 372 b.

In chancery practice, a defendant may demur at the bar ore tenus, 3 P. Will. 370, if he has not sustained the demurrer on the record. 1 Swanst. Ch. 288; Mitford, Plead. 176; 6 Ves. Ch. 779; 8 id. 405; 17 id. 215, 216.

OREGON. One of the new states of the United States.

2. In July, 1845, a territorial government was established by the people of Oregon territory, to last till such time as the United States should extend its jurisdiction over the territory. This was done in 1848 by act of congress approved Aug. 14. A convention assembled at Salem, Sept. 18, 1857, and framed a constitution, which was submitted to the people and by them adopted, as announced by the proclamation of the governor, dated Dec. 14, 1857. By act of congress, approved Feb. 14, 1859, Oregon was admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the other states, with the following boundaries: beginning one marine league at sea due west from the point where the forty-second parallel of north latitude intersects the same; thence northerly, at the same distance from the line of the coast lying west and opposite the state, including all islands within the jurisdiction of the United States, to a point due west and opposite the middle of the north ship-channel of the Columbia river; thence easterly to and up the middle channel of said river, and, where it is divided by islands, up the middle of the widest channel thereof, to a point near fort Walla-Walla, where the forty-sixth parallel of north latitude crosses said river; thence east on said parallel to the middle of the main channel of the Shoshones or Snake river; thence up the middle of the main channel of said river to the mouth of the Owyhee river; thence due south to the parallel of latitude forty-two degrees north; thence west along said parallel to the place of beginning; including jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases upon the Columbia river and Snake river, concurrently with states and territories of which those rivers form a boundary in common with this state. The residue of the territory which had before constituted the territory of Oregon was incorporated into and made part of the territory of Washington. See WASHINGTON.

The Legislative Department.

3. The legislative authority is vested in a legislative assembly, consisting of a Senate and House of Representatives.

The Senate is to consist of sixteen members, which number may be increased to thirty, elected for the term of four years by the electors of the districts into which the state is divided for the purpose. The senate is divided into two classes: so that one-half the number may be changed every two years.

The House of Representatives is to consist of thirty-four members, which number may be increased to sixty, chosen by the electors from the respective districts into which the state is divided for the purpose, for the term of two years.

Senators and representatives must be twenty-one years old, citizens of the United States, and for a year at least preceding the election inhabitants of the county or district from which they were chosen. Sessions of the assembly are holden every second year.

The Executive Department.

4. The Governor is elected for the term of four years, by the qualified electors, at the time and places of choosing members of the assembly. He is commander-in-chief of the military and naval forces of the state; must take care that the laws are faithfully executed; may convene the legislative assembly on extraordinary occasions; may grant reprieves, commutations, and pardons, after conviction, for all offences but treason, subject to regulations prescribed by the assembly. He has the veto power. He must be thirty years old, a citizen of the United States, and must have been for three years preceding his election a resident in the state. In case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of the governor, the duties of his office devolve upon the secretary of state, and in case of his removal, death, resignation, or disability, upon the president of the senate, till a governor is elected.

A Secretary of State is elected, by the qualified electors, for the term of four years.

A Treasurer of State is elected, by the qualified electors, for the term of four years.

In each county, a county clerk, treasurer, sheriff, coroner, and surveyor are elected, for the term of two years.

The Judicial Department.

5. The Supreme Court consists of four justices (which number may be increased to seven), chosen in districts by the electors, for the term of six years; and the terms are so arranged that one, at least, is to be elected every second year. They must be citizens of the United States, and must have resided three years in the state, and after their election must reside in their respective districts. It has jurisdiction only to revise final decisions of the circuit courts; and the judge, when any case was tried in the circuit court, does not sit in that case. One term at least must be held annually at the seat of government, and concise statements of the decisions are filed with the secretary of state.

Circuit Courts are held twice, at least, in each county, by a judge of the supreme court. These courts are the courts of general original jurisdiction, having jurisdiction in all cases not specifically given to other courts. A distinct provision is made for reorganization when the population of the state shall amount to two hundred thousand.

County Courts are held in each county, by a judge elected for the term of four years. It has the jurisdiction pertaining to courts of probate and county commissioners, and may have, by act of assembly, civil jurisdiction to the extent of five hundred dollars, and "criminal jurisdiction not extending to death or imprisonment in the penitentiary."

A county clerk and sheriff are elected in each county, for the term of two years, and in each district composed of one or more counties a prosecuting attorney, who is a law officer of the state, and of the counties within his district.

A judge of the supreme court, or prosecuting officer, may be removed from office by the governor, upon the joint resolution of the legislative assembly in which two-thirds of the members present concur, for incompetency, corruption, malfeasance, or delinquency in office, or other sufficient cause stated in such resolution.

ORFGILD (Sax. orf, cattle, gild, payment. Also called cheapgild). A payment for cattle, or the restoring them. Cowel.

A restitution made by the hundred or county of any wrong done by one that was in pledge. Lambard, Archaion. 125, 126.

A penalty for taking away cattle. Blount.

ORIGINAL. An authentic instrument of something, and which is to serve as a model or example to be copied or imitated. It also means first, or not deriving any authority from any other source: as, original jurisdiction, original writ, original bill, and the like.

2. Originals are single or duplicate: single, when there is but one; duplicate, when there are two. In the case of printed documents, all the impressions are originals, or in the nature of duplicate originals, and any copy will be primary evidence. 2 Stark. 130. But see 14 Serg. & R. Penn. 200; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2001.

3. When an original document is not evidence at common law, and a copy of such original is made evidence by an act of the legislature, the original is not therefore made admissible evidence by implication. 2 Campb. 121, n.

ORIGINAL BILL. In Chancery Practice. A bill relating to a matter not before brought before the court by the same parties, standing in the same interests. Mitford, Eq. Plead. 33; Willis, Plead. 13 et seq.

Proceedings in a court of chancery are either commenced by way of information, when the matter concerns the state or those under its protection, or by original petition or bill, when the matter does not concern the state or those under its protection. The original bill states simply the cause of complaint, and asks for relief. It is composed of nine parts, Story, Eq. Plead. 7, 8, and is the foundation of all subsequent proceedings before the court. See 1 Daniell, Chanc. Pract. 351. See BILL.

ORIGINAL CONVEYANCES (called, also, primary conveyances) are those conveyances by means whereof the benefit or estate is created or first arises: viz. feoffment, gift, grant, lease, exchange, partition. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 309, 310*; 1 Stephen, Comm. 466.

ORIGINAL ENTRY. The first entry made by a merchant, tradesman, or other person in his account-books, charging another with merchandise, materials, work or labor, or cash, on a contract made between them.

2. Such an entry, to be admissible as evidence, must be made in a proper book. In general, the books in which the first entries are made, belonging to a merchant, tradesman, or mechanic, in which are charged goods sold and delivered or work and labor done, are received in evidence. There are many books which are not evidence, a few of which will be here enumerated. A book made up by transcribing entries made on a slate by a journeyman, the transcript being made on the same evening, or sometimes not until nearly two weeks after the work was done, was considered as not being a book of original entries. 1 Rawle, Penn. 435; 4 id. 408; 2 Watts, Penn. 451; 4 id. 258; 5 id. 432; 6 Whart. Penn. 189; 2 Miles, Penn. 268. A book purporting to be a book of original entries, containing an entry of the sale of goods when they were ordered, but before they were delivered, is not a book of original entries. 4 Rawle, Penn. 404. And unconnected scraps of paper, containing, as alleged, original entries of sales by an agent, on account of his principal, and appearing on their face to be irregularly kept, are not to be considered as a book of original entries. 13 Serg. & R. Penn. 126. See 2 Whart. Penn. 33; 4 M'Cord, So. C. 76; 20 Wend. N. Y. 72; 1 Yeates, Penn. 198; 4 id. 341.

3. The entry must be made in the course of business, and with the intention of making a charge for goods sold or work done: they ought not to be made after the lapse of one day. 1 Nott & McC. So. C. 130; 4 id. 77; 4 Serg. & R. Penn. 5; 9 id. 285; 8 Watts, Penn. 545. A book in which the charges are made when the goods are ordered is not admissible. 4 Rawle, Penn. 404; 3 Dev. No. C. 449.

The entry must be made in an intelligible manner, and not in figures or hieroglyphics which are understood by the seller only. 4 Rawle, Penn. 404. A charge made in the gross as "190 days' work," 1 Nott & M'C. So. C. 130, or "for medicine and attendance," or "thirteen dollars for medicine and attendance on one of the general's daughters in curing the hooping-cough," 2 Cons. So. C. 476, were rejected. An entry of goods without carrying out any prices proves, at most, only a sale; and the jury cannot, without other evidence, fix any price. 1 South. So. C. 370. The charges should be specific, and denote the particular work or service charged as it arises daily, and the quantity, number, weight, or other distinct designation of the materials or articles sold or furnished, and attach the price and value to each item. 2 Const. So. C. 745; 2 Bail. So. C. 449; 1 Nott & M'C. So. C. 130.

4. The entry must, of course, have been made by a person having authority to make it, 4 Rawle, Penn. 404, and with a view to charge the party. 8 Watts, Penn. 545.

The proof of the entry must be made by the person who made it. If made by the seller, he is competent to prove it from the necessity of the case, although he has an interest in the matter in dispute. 5 Conn. 496; 12 Johns. N. Y. 461; 1 Dall. Penn. 239. When made by a clerk, it must be proved by him. But in either case, when the person who made the entry is out of the reach of the process of the court, as in the case of death, or absence out of the state, the handwriting may be proved by a person acquainted with the handwriting of the person who made the entry. 2 Watts & S. Penn. 137. But the plaintiff is not competent to prove the hand writing of a deceased clerk who made the entries. 1 Browne, Penn. App. liii.

The books and original entries, when proved by the supplementary oath of the party, is primâ facie evidence of the sale and delivery of goods, or of work and labor done. 1 Yeates, Penn. 347; Swift, Ev. 84; 3 Vt. 463; 1 M'Cord, So. C. 481; 2 Root, Conn. 59; 1 Cooke, Tenn. 38. But they are not evidence of money lent or cash paid, 1 Day, Conn. 104; 1 Aik. Vt. 73, 74; Kirb. Conn. 289; nor of the time a vessel lay at the plaintiff's wharf, 1 Browne, Penn. 257; nor of the delivery of goods to be sold on commission. 2 Whart. Penn. 33.

These entries are evidence in suits between third parties, 8 Wheat. 326; 3 Campb. 305, 377; 2 Perr. & D. 573; 15 Mass. 380; 20 Johns. N. Y. 168; 7 Wend. N. Y. 160; 15 Conn. 206; 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 116; 16 id. 89; 2 Harr. & J. Md. 77; 2 Rand. Va. 87; 1 Younge & C. Exch. 53; and also in favor of the party himself. 2 Mart. La. N. S. 508; 4 id. 383; 2 Mass. 217; 1 Dall. Penn. 239; 2 Bay, So. C. 173, 362; 5 Vt. 313; 1 Phillipps, Ev. 266, Cowen & H. note.

ORIGINAL JURISDICTION. See JURISDICTION.

ORIGINAL WRIT. In English Practice. A mandatory letter issued in the king's name, sealed with his great seal, and directed to the sheriff of the county wherein the injury was committed or supposed to have been done, requiring him to command the wrong-doer, or party accused, either to do justice to the complainant, or else to appear in court and answer the accusation against him. This writ is deemed necessary to give the courts of law jurisdiction.

In modern practice, however, it is often dispensed with, by recourse, as usual, to fiction, and a proceeding by bill is substituted. In this country, our courts derive their jurisdiction from the constitution, and require no original writ to confer it. Improperly speaking, the first writ which is issued in a case is sometimes called an original writ; but it is not so in the English sense of the word. See 3 Blackstone, Comm. 273; Walker, Am. Law, 514.

ORIGINALIA (Lat.). In English Law. The transcripts and other documents sent to the office of the treasurer-remembrancer in exchequer are called by this name to distinguish them from recorda, which contain the judgments of the barons.

ORNAMENT. An embellishment. In questions arising as to which of two things is to be considered as principal or accessory, it is the rule that an ornament shall be considered as accessory.

ORPHAN. A minor or infant who has lost both of his or her parents. Sometimes the term is applied to such a person who has lost only one of his or her parents. 3 Mer. Ch. 48; 2 Sim. & S. Ch. 93; Aso & M. Inst. b. 1, t. 2, c. 1. See 14 Hazzard, Penn. Reg. 188, 189, for a correspondence between the Hon. Joseph Hopkinson and ex-president J. Q. Adams as to the meaning of the word orphan. See, also, Hob. 247.

ORPHANAGE. In English Law. The share reserved to an orphan by the custom of London.

By the custom of London, when a freeman of that city dies, his estate is divided into three parts, as follows: one-third part to the widow; another to the children advanced by him in his lifetime, which is called the orphanage; and the other third part may be by him disposed of by will. Now, however, a freeman may dispose of his estate as he pleases; but in cases of intestacy the Statute of Distribution expressly excepts and reserves the custom of London. Lovelace, Wills, 102, 104; Bacon, Abr. Custom of London (C).

ORPHANS' COURT. In American Law. Courts of more or less extended probate jurisdiction. See the accounts of the respective states.

ORPHANCTROPHI. In Civil Law. Persons who have the charge of administering the affairs of houses destined for the use of orphans. Clef des Lois Rom. Administrateurs.

OSTENSIBLE PARTNER. One whose name appears in a firm as a partner, and who is really such.

OTHER WRONGS. See ALIA ENORMIA.

OTHESWORTHE (Sax. eoth, oath). Worthy to make oath. Bracton, 185, 192.

OUNCE. The name of a weight. See WEIGHTS.

OUSTER (L. Fr. outre, oultre; Lat. ultra, beyond). Out; beyond; besides; farther; also; over and more. Le ouster, the uppermost. Over: respondeat ouster, let him answer over. Britton, c. 29. Ouster le mer, over the sea. Jacob. Law Dict. Ouster eit, he went away. 6 Coke, 41 b; 9 id. 120.

To put out; to oust. Il oust, he put out or ousted. Oustes, ousted. 6 Coke, 41 b.

In Torts. The actual turning out or keeping excluded the party entitled to possession of any real property corporeal.

An ouster can properly be only from real property corporeal, and cannot be committed of any thing movable, 1 Carr. & P. 123; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2348; 1 Chitty, Pract. 148, n. r; nor is a mere temporary trespass considered as an ouster. Any continuing act of exclusion from the enjoyment constitutes an ouster, even by one tenant in common of his co-tenant. Coke, Litt. 199 b, 200 a. See 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 167; Archbold, Civ. Plead. 6, 14; 1 Chitty, Pract. 374, where the remedies for an ouster are pointed out. See JUDGMENT OF RESPONDEAT OUSTER; Roscoe, Real Actions, 502. 552, 574, 582; 2 Crabb, Real Prop. § 2454 a; 1 Wooddeson, Lect. 501; Washburn, Real Prop.

OUSTER LE MAIN (L. Fr. to take out of the hand). In Old English Law. A livery of lands out of the hands of the lord after the tenant came of age. If the lord refused to deliver such lands, the tenant was entitled to a writ to recover the same from the lord: this recovery out of the hands of the lord was called ouster le main.

OUT OF THE STATE. Beyond sea, which title see.

OUT OF TIME. In Marine Insurance. Missing. Generally speaking, a ship may be said to be missing or out of time when she has not been heard of after the longest ordinary time in which the voyage is safely performed. 1 Arnoult, Ins. 540; 2 Duer, Ins. 469, n.

OUTFIT. An allowance made by the government of the United States to a minister plenipotentiary, or chargé des affaires, on going from the United States to any foreign country.

The outfit can in no case exceed one year's full salary of such minister or chargé des affaires. No outfit is allowed to a consul. Act of Congr. May 1, 1810, s. 1. See MINISTER.

OUTHOUSES. Buildings adjoining or belonging to dwelling-houses.

Buildings subservient to, yet distinct from, the principal mansion-house, located either within or without the curtilage. 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 175; 4 Conn. 46; 4 Gill & J. Md. 402; 2 Crawf. & D. Cr. Cas. 479.

It is not easy to say what comes within and what is excluded from the meaning of outhouse. It has been decided that a school-room, separated from the dwelling-house by a narrow passage about a yard wide, the roof of which was partly upheld by that of the dwelling-house, the two buildings, together with some other, and the court which inclosed them, being rented by the same person, was properly described as an outhouse. Russ. & R. Cr. Cas. 295. See, for other cases, Coke, 3d Inst. 67; Burn, Just. Burning, II; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 49; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 1020, 1021; 5 Carr. & P. 555; 6 id. 402; 8 Barnew. & C. 461; 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 323, 336; 4 Conn. 446; 11 Ala. N. S. 594; 20 id. 30.

OUTLAW. In English Law. One who is put out of the protection or aid of the law, 22 Viner, Abr. 316; 1 Phillipps, Ev. Index; Bacon, Abr. Outlawry; 2 Sellon, Pract. 277, Doctrina Plac. 331; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 283, 284.

OUTLAWRY. In English Law. The act of being put out of the protection of the law, by process regularly sued out against a person who is in contempt in refusing to become amenable to the court having jurisdiction. The proceedings themselves are also called the outlawry.

Outlawry may take place in criminal or in civil cases. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 283; Coke, Litt. 128; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4196.

In the United States, outlawry in civil cases is unknown, and if there are any cases of outlawry in criminal cases they are very rare. Dane, Abr. ch. 193 a, 34. See Bacon, Abr. Abatement (B), Outlawry; Gilbert, Hist. 196, 197; 2 Va. Cas. 244; 2 Dall. Penn. 92.

OUTRAGE. A grave injury; a serious wrong. This is a generic word which is applied to every thing which is injurious in a great degree to the honor or rights of another.

OUTRIDERS. In English Practice. Bailiffs employed by the sheriffs and their deputies to ride to the farthest places of their counties or hundreds, to summon such as they thought good to attend their county or hundred court.

OVERDRAW. To draw bills or checks upon an individual, bank, or other corporation, for a greater amount of funds than the party who draws is entitled to.

2. When a person has overdrawn his account without any intention to do so, and afterwards gives a check on a bank, the holder is required to present it, and on refusal of payment to give notice to the maker, in order to hold him bound for it; but when the maker has overdrawn the bank knowingly, having no funds there between the time the check is given and its presentment, the notice is not requisite. 2 Nott & M'C. So. C. 433.

OVERDUE. A bill, note, bond, or other contract for the payment of money at a particular day, when not paid upon the day, is overdue.

The indorsement of a note or bill overdue is equivalent to drawing a new bill payable at sight. 2 Conn. 419; 18 Pick. Mass. 260; 9 Ala. N. S. 153.

A note, when passed or assigned, when overdue is subject to all the equities between the original contracting parties. 6 Conn. 5; 10 id. 30, 55; 3 Harr. N. J. 222.

OVER-INSURANCE. See DOUBLE INSURANCE.

OVERPLUS. What is left beyond a certain amount; the residue; the remainder of a thing. The same as surplus.

The overplus may be certain or uncertain. It is certain, for example, when an estate is worth three thousand dollars, and the owner asserts it to be so in his will, and devises of the proceeds one thousand dollars to A, one thousand dollars to B, and the overplus to C, and in consequence of the deterioration of the estate, or from some other cause, it sells for less than three thousand dollars, each of the legatees, A, B, and C, shall take one-third. The overplus is uncertain where, for example, a testator does not know the value of his estate, and gives various legacies, and the overplus to another legatee: the latter will be entitled only to what may be left. 18 Ves. Ch. 466. See RESIDUE; SURPLUS.

OVERRULE. To annul; to make void.

This word is frequently used to signify that a case has been decided directly opposite to a former case: when this takes place, the first-decided case is said to be overruled as a precedent, and cannot any longer be considered as of binding authority.

Mr. Greenleaf has made a very valuable collection of overruled cases, of great service to the practitioner.

It also signifies that a majority of the judges have decided against the opinion of the minority, in which case the latter are said to be overruled.

OVERSEERS OF THE POOR. Persons appointed or elected to take care of the poor with moneys furnished to them by the public authority.

The duties of these officers are regulated by local statutes. In general, the overseers are bound to perform those duties, and the neglect of them will subject them to an indictment. See 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 360; 16 Viner, Abr. 150; 1 Mass. 459; 3 id. 436; 1 Penn. N. J. 6, 136; Comyns, Dig. Justices of the Peace (B 63–65).

OVERSMAN. In Scotch Law. A person commonly named in a submission, to whom power is given to determine in case the arbiters cannot agree in the sentence. Sometimes the nomination of the oversman is left to the arbiters. In either case the oversman has no power to decide unless the arbiters differ in opinion. Erskine, Inst. 4. 3. 16. The office of an oversman very much resembles that of an umpire.

OVERT. Open.

An overt act in treason is proof of the intention of the traitor, because it opens his designs: without an overt act, treason cannot be committed. 2 Chitty, Crim. Law, 40. An overt act, then, is one which manifests the intention of the traitor to commit treason. Archbold, Crim. Plead. 379; 4 Sharswood, Blackst, Comm. 79; Coke, 3d Inst. 12; 1 Dall. Penn. 33; 2 id. 346; 4 Cranch, 75; 3 Wash. C. C. 234; 2 Gabbett, Crim. Law, 890, 891.

The mere contemplation or intention to commit a crime, although a sin in the sight of Heaven, is not an act amenable to human laws. The mere speculative wantonness of a licentious imagination, however dangerous or even sanguinary in its object, can in no case amount to a crime. But the moment that any overt act is manifest, the offender becomes amenable to the laws. See ATTEMPT; CONSPIRACY; Croke Car. 577.

OWELTY. The difference which is paid or secured by one coparcener to another for the purpose of equalizing a partition. Littleton, § 251; Coke, Litt. 169 a; 1 Watts, Penn. 265; 1 Whart. Penn. 292; Cruise, Dig. tit. 19, § 32; 1 Vern. Ch. 133; Plowd. 134; 16 Viner, Abr. 223, pl. 3; Brooke, Abr. Partition, § 5.

OWING. Something unpaid. A debt, for example, is owing while it is unpaid, and whether it be due or not.

In affidavits to hold to bail it is usual to state that the debt on which the action is founded is due, owing and unpaid. 1 Penn. Law Journ. 210.

OWLER. In English Law. One guilty of the offence of owling.

OWLING. In English Law. The offence of transporting wool or sheep out of the kingdom.

The name is said to owe its origin to the fact that this offence was carried on in the night, when the owl was abroad.

OWNER. He who has dominion of a thing, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal, which he has a right to enjoy and do with as he pleases,—even to spoil or destroy it, as far as the law permits, unless he be prevented by some agreement or covenant which restrains his right.

2. Although there can be but one absolute owner of a thing, there may be a qualified ownership of the same thing by many. Thus, a bailor has the general ownership of the thing bailed, the bailee the special ownership. The right of the absolute owner is more extended than that of him who has only a qualified ownership: as, for example, the use of the thing. Thus, the absolute owner of an estate, that is, an owner in fee, may cut the wood, demolish the buildings, build new ones, and dig wherever he may deem proper for minerals, stone, plaster, and similar things, which would be considered waste and would not be allowed in a qualified owner of the estate, as a lessee or a tenant for life. The word owner, when used alone, imports an absolute owner; but it has been held in Ohio that the word owner, in the Mechanic Lien Law of that state, included the owner of the leasehold as well as of the reversion, on the ground that any other construction would be subversive of the policy and intent of the statute. 2 Ohio, 123.

3. The owner continues to have the same right although he perform no acts of ownership or be disabled from performing them, and although another perform such acts without the knowledge or against the will of the owner. But the owner may lose his right in a thing if he permit it to remain in the possession of a third person for a sufficient time to enable the latter to acquire a title to it by prescription or under the Statute of Limitation. See La. Civ. Code, b. 2, tit. 2, c. 1; Encyclopédie de M. d'Alembert, Propriétaire.

4. When there are several joint-owners of a thing,—as, for example, of a ship,—the majority of them have the right to make contracts in respect of such thing in the usual course of business or repair, and the like, and the minority will be bound by such contracts. Holt, 586; 1 Bell, Comm. 5th ed. 519; 5 Whart. Penn. 366.

OWNERSHIP. The right by which a thing belongs to some one in particular, to the exclusion of all others. La. Civ. Code art. 480.

OXGANG (fr. Sax. gang, going, and ox; Law Lat. bovata). In Old English Law. So much land as an ox could till. According to some, fifteen acres. Coke, Litt. 69 a; Crompton, Jurisd. 220. According to Balfour, the Scotch oxengang, or oxgate, contained twelve acres; but this does not correspond with ancient charters. See Bell, Dict. Ploughgate. Skene says thirteen acres. Cowel.

OYER (Lat. audire; through L. Fr. oyer, to hear.).

In Pleading. A prayer or petition to the court that the party may hear read to him the deed, etc. stated in the pleadings of the opposite party, and which deed is by intendment of law in court when it is pleaded with a profert. The same end is now generally attained by giving a copy of the deed of which oyer is asked, or, in other instances, by setting forth the instrument in full in the plaintiff's statement of his case. Oyer as it existed at common law seems to be abolished in England. 1 Bos. & P. 646, n. b; 3 id. 398; 25 Eng. L. & Eq. 304. Oyer may be demanded of any specialty or other written instrument, as, bonds of all sorts, deeds-poll, indentures, letters testamentary and of administration, and the like, which the adverse party is obliged to plead with a profert in curia. But pleading with a profert unnecessarily does not give a right to demand oyer, 1 Salk. 497; and it may not be had except when profert is made. 1 Hempst. Ark. 265. Denial of oyer when it should be granted is ground for error. 1 Blackf. Ind. 126. In such cases the party making the claim should move the court to have it entered on record, which is in the nature of a plea, and the plaintiff may counterplead the right of oyer, or strike out the rest of the pleading following the oyer, and demur, 1 Saund. 9 b, n. 1; Bac. Abr. Pleas, 1; upon which the judgment of the court is either that the defendant have oyer, or that he answer without it. Id.; 2 Lev. 142; 6 Mod. 28. See PROFERT IN CURIA.

After craving oyer, the defendant may set forth the deed or a part thereof, or not, at his election, 1 Chitty, Pl. 372, and may afterwards plead non est factum, or any other plea, without stating the oyer, 2 Strange, 1241; 1 Wils. 97, and may demur if a material variance appear between the oyer and declaration. 2 Saund. 366, n.

See, generally, Comyns, Dig. Pleader (P), Abatement (I 22); 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2890.

OYER AND TERMINER. See ASSIZE; COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER.

OYEZ (Fr. hear ye). The introduction to any proclamation or advertisement by public crier. It is wrongly and usually pronounced oh yes. 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 340, n.

P.

PACE. A measure of length, containing two feet and a half. The geometrical pace is five feet long. The common pace is the length of a step; the geometrical is the length of two steps, or the whole space passed over by the same foot from one step to another.

PACIFICATION (Lat. pax, peace, facere, to make). The act of making peace between two countries which have been at war; the restoration of public tranquillity.

PACK. To deceive by false appearances; to counterfeit; to delude: as, packing a jury. See JURY; Bacon, Abr. Juries (M); 12 Conn. 262.

PACT. In Civil Law. An agreement made by two or more persons on the same subject, in order to form some engagement, or to dissolve or modify one already made: Conventio est duorum in idem placitum consensus de re solvendâ, id est faciendâ vel præstandâ. Dig. 2. 14; Clef des Lois Rom.; Ayliffe, Pand. 558; Merlin, Rép. Pacte.

PACTIONS. In International Law. Contracts between nations which are to be performed by a single act, and of which execution is at an end at once. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 100.

PACTUM CONSTITUTÆ PECUNIÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. An agreement by which a person appointed to his creditor a certain day, or a certain time, at which he promised to pay; or it may be defined simply an agreement by which a person promises a creditor to pay him.

When a person by this pact promises his own creditor to pay him, there arises a new obligation, which does not destroy the former by which he was already bound, but which is accessory to it; and by this multiplicity of obligations the right of the creditor is strengthened. Pothier, Obl. pt. 2, c. 6, s. 9.

There is a striking conformity between the pactum constitutæ pecuniæ, as above defined, and our indebitatus assumpsit. The pactum constitutæ pecuniæ was a promise to pay a subsisting debt, whether natural or civil, made in such a manner as not to extinguish the preceding debt, and introduced by the prætor to obviate some formal difficulties. The action of indebitatus assumpsit was brought upon a promise for the payment of a debt: it was not subject to the wager of law and other technical difficulties of the regular action of debt; but by such promise the right to the action of debt was not extinguished nor varied. 4 Coke, 91, 95. See 1 H. Blackst. 550–555, 850; Dougl. 6, 7; 3 Wood, Inst. 168, 169, n. c; 1 Viner. Abr. 270; Brooke, Abr. Action sur le Case (pl. 7, 69, 72); Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 94 A, n. a, 145 G; 4 Bos. & P. 295; 1 Chitty, Plead. 89; Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. liv. 3, t. 3, c. 4, nn. 388, 396.

PACTUM DE NON PETANDO (Lat.). In Civil Law. An agreement made between a creditor and his debtor that the former will not demand from the latter the debt due. By this agreement the debtor is freed from his obligation. This is not unlike the covenant not to sue, of the common law. Wolff, Dr. de la Nat. § 755.

PACTUM DE QUOTA LITIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. An agreement by which a creditor of a sum difficult to recover promises a portion—for example, one-third—to the person who will undertake to recover it. In general, attorneys will abstain from making such a contract: yet it is not unlawful at common law.

PAGODA. In Commercial Law. A denomination of money in Bengal. In the computation of ad valorem duties it is valued at one dollar and ninety-four cents. Act of March 2, 1799, s. 61, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 626. See FOREIGN COINS.

PAINE FORTE ET DURE. See PEINE FORTE ET DURE.

PAIS, PAYS. A French word, signifying country. In law, matter in pais is matter of fact, in opposition to matter of record: a trial per pais is a trial by the country,—that is, by a jury.

PALACE COURT. In English Law A court which had jurisdiction of all personal actions arising between any parties within twelve miles of Whitehall, not including the city of London.

It was erected in the time of Charles I., and was held by the steward of the household, the knight-marshal and steward of the court, or his deputy. It had its sessions once a week, in the borough of Southwark. It was abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, § 13.

PALFRIDUS (L. Lat.). A palfrey; a horse to travel on. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 93.

PANDECTS. In Civil Law. The name of an abridgment or compilation of the civil law, made by Tribonian and others, by order of the emperor Justinian, and to which he gave the force of law A.D. 533.

2. It is also known by the name of the Digest because in his compilation the writings of the jurists were reduced to order and condensed quasi digestiæ. The emperor, in 530, published an ordinance entitled De Conceptione Digestorum, which was addressed to Tribonian, and by which he was required to select some of the most distinguished lawyers to assist him in composing a collection of the best decisions of the ancient lawyers, and compile them in fifty books, without confusion or contradiction. The instructions of the emperor were to select what was useful, to omit what was antiquated or superfluous, to avoid contradictions, and, by the necessary changes, to produce a complete body of law. This work was a companion to the Code of Justinian, and was to be governed in its arrangement of topics by the method of the Code. Justinian allowed the commissioners, who were sixteen in number, ten years to compile it; but the work was completed in three years, and promulgated in 533. A list of the writers from whose works the collection was made, and an account of the method pursued by the commissioners, will be found in Smith's Dict. of Gr. & R. Antiq. The Digest, although compiled in Constantinople, was originally written in Latin, and afterwards translated into Greek.

The Digest is divided in two different ways: the first into fifty books, each book into several titles, and each title into several extracts or leges, and at the head of each series of extracts is the name of the lawyer from whose work they were taken.

3. The first book contains twenty-two titles. The subject of the first is De Justicia et Jure, of the division of person and things, of magistrates, etc. The second, divided into fifteen titles, treats of the power of magistrates and their jurisdiction, the manner of commencing suits, of agreements and compromises. The third, composed of six titles, treats of those who can and those who cannot sue, of advocates and attorneys and syndics, and of calumny. The fourth, divided into nine titles, treats of causes of restitution, of submissions and arbitrations, of minors, carriers by water, innkeepers, and those who have the care of the property of others. In the fifth there are six titles, which treat of jurisdiction and inofficious testaments. The subject of the sixth, in which there are three titles, is actions. The seventh, in nine titles, embraces whatever concerns usufructs, personal servitudes, habitations, the uses of real estate and its appurtenances, and of the sureties required of the usufructuary. The eighth book, in six titles, regulates urban and rural servitudes. The ninth book, in four titles, explains certain personal actions. The tenth, in four titles, treats of mixed actions. The object of the eleventh book, containing eight titles, is to regulate interrogatories, the cases of which the judge was to take cognizance, fugitive slaves, of gamblers, of surveyors who made false reports, and of funerals and funeral expenses. The twelfth book, in seven titles, regulates personal actions in which the plaintiff claims the title of a thing. The thirteenth, in seven titles, and the fourteenth, in six titles, regulate certain actions. The fifteenth, in four titles, treats of actions to which a father or master is liable in consequence of the acts of his children or slaves, and those to which he is entitled, of the peculium of children and slaves, and of the actions on this right.

4. The sixteenth, in three titles, contains the law relating to the senatus-consultum Velleianum, of compensation or set-off, and of the action of deposit. The seventeenth, in two titles, expounds the law of mandates and partnership. The eighteenth book, in seven titles, explains the contract of sale. The nineteenth, in five titles, treats of the actions which arise on a contract of sale. The law relating to pawns, hypothecation, the preference among creditors, and subrogation, occupy the twentieth book, which contains six titles. The twenty-first book explains, under three titles, the edict of the ediles relating to the sale of slaves and animals, then what relates to evictions and warranties. The twenty-second book, in six titles, treats of interest, profits, and accessories of things, proofs, presumptions, and of ignorance of law and fact. The twenty-third, in five titles, contains the law of marriage, and its accompanying agreements. The twenty-fourth, in three titles, and the twenty-fifth, in seven titles, regulates donations between husband and wife, divorces and their consequence. The twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh, each in two titles, contain the law relating to tutorship and curatorship. The twenty-eighth, in eight titles, and the twenty-ninth, in seven, contain the law on last will and testaments.

The thirtieth, thirty-first and thirty-second, each divided into two titles, contain the law of trusts and specific legacies.

The thirty-third, thirty-fourth, and thirty-fifth—the first divided into ten titles, the second into nine titles, and the last into three titles—treat of various kinds of legacies. The thirty-sixth, containing four titles, explains the senatus-consultum Trebellianum, and the time when trusts become due.

5. The thirty-seventh book, containing fifteen titles, has two objects,—to regulate successions and to declare the respect which children owe their parents and freedmen their patrons. The thirty-eighth book, in seventeen titles, treats of a variety of subjects: of successions, and of the degree of kindred in successions; of possession; and of heirs The thirty-ninth explains the means which the law and the prætor take to prevent a threatened injury, and donations inter vivos and mortis causâ. The fortieth, in sixteen titles, treats of the state and condition of persons, and of what relates to freedmen and liberty. The different means of acquiring and losing title to property are explained in the forty-first book, in ten titles. The forty-second, in eight titles, treats of the res judicata, and of the seizure and sale of the property of a debtor. Interdicts, or possessory actions, are the object of the forty-third book, in three titles. The forty-fourth contains an enumeration of defences which arise in consequence of the res judicata, from the lapse of time, prescription, and the like. This occupies six titles; the seventh treats of obligations and actions. The forty-fifth speaks of stipulations, by freedmen or by slaves. It contains only three titles. The forty-sixth, in eight titles, treats of securities, novations and delegations, payments, releases, and acceptilations. In the forty-seventh book are explained the punishments inflicted for private crimes, de privatis delictis, among which are included larcenies, slander, libels, offences against religion and public manners, removing boundaries, and similar offences.

6. The forty-eighth book treats of public crimes, among which are enumerated those of læsæ-majestatis, adultery, murder, poisoning, parricide, extortion, and the like, with rules for procedure in such cases. The forty-ninth, in eighteen titles, treats of appeals, of the rights of the public treasury, of those who are in captivity, and of their repurchase. The fiftieth and last book, in seventeen titles, explains the rights of municipalities, and then treats of a variety of public officers.

These fifty books are allotted in seven parts: the first contains the first four books; the second, from the fifth to the eleventh book inclusive; the third, from the twelfth to the nineteenth inclusive; the fourth, from the twentieth to the twenty-seventh inclusive; the fifth, from the twenty-eighth to the thirty-sixth inclusive; the sixth commences with the thirty-seventh and ended with the forty-seventh book; and the seventh, or last, is composed of the last six books.

The division into digestum vetus (book first to and including title second of book twenty-fourth), digestum infortiatum (title third of book twenty-fourth, to and including book thirty-eighth), and digestum novum (from book thirty-ninth to the end), has reference to the order in which these three parts appeared.

The Pandects are more usually cited by English and American jurists by numbers, thus: Dig. 23. 3. 5. 6, meaning book 23, title 3, law or fragment 5, section 6; sometimes, also, otherwise, as, D. 23. 3. fr. 5. § 6; or fr. 5. § 6. D. 23. 3. The old mode of citing was by titles and initial words, thus: D. de jure dotium, L. profectitia, § si pater; or the same references in reverse order. From this afterwards originated the following: L. profectitia 5. § si pater 6, D. de jure dotium, and, lastly, L. 5. § 6. D. de jure dotium,—which is the form commonly used by the continental jurists of Europe. 1 Mackeldy, Civ. Law, 54, 55, § 65. And see Taylor, Civ. Law, 24, 25. The abbreviation ff. was commonly used instead of Dig. or Pandects.

7. The Pandects—as well indeed as all Justinian's laws, except some fragments of the Code and Novels—were lost to all Europe for a considerable period. During the pillage of Amalfi, in the war between the two soi-disant popes Innocent II. and Anaclet II., a soldier discovered an old manuscript, which attracted his attention by its envelope of many colors. It was carried to the Emperor Clothaire, and proved to be the Pandects of Justinian. The work was arranged in its present order by Warner, a German, whose Latin name is Irnerius, who was appointed by that emperor Professor of Roman Law at Bologna. 1 Fournel, Hist. des Avocats, 44, 46, 51. The style of the work is very grave and pure, and contrasts in this respect with that of the Code, which is very far from classical. On the other hand, the learning of the Digest stands rather in the discussing of subtle questions of law, and enumerations of the variety of opinions of ancient lawyers thereupon, than in practical matters of daily use, of which the Code so simply and directly treats. See Ridley, View, pt. i. ch. 1, 2.

PANEL (diminutive from either pane, apart, or page, pagella. Cowel). In Practice. A schedule or roll, containing the names of jurors summoned by virtue of a writ of venire facias, and annexed to the writ. It is returned into the court whence the venire issued. Coke, Litt. 158 b; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 353.

In Scotch Law. The prisoner at the bar, or person who takes his trial before the court of justiciary for some crime. So called from the time of his appearance. Bell, Dict. Spelled, also, pannel.

PAPER-BOOK. In Practice. A book or paper containing an abstract of all the facts and pleadings necessary to the full understanding of a case.

Courts of error, and other courts, on arguments, require that the judges shall each be furnished with such a paper-book. In the court of king's bench, in England, the transcript containing the whole of the proceedings filed or delivered between the parties, when the issue joined, in an issue in fact, is called the paper-book. Stephen, Plead. 95; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 317; 3 Chitt. Pract. 521; 2 Strange, 1131, 1266; 1 Chitt. Bail, 277; 2 Wils. 243; Tidd, Pract. 727.

PAPER-DAYS. In English Law. Days on which special arguments are to take place. Tuesdays and Fridays in term-time are paper-days appointed by the court. Lee, Dict. of Pract.; Archbold, Pract. 101.

PAPER MONEY. The engagements to pay money which are issued by governments and banks, and which pass as money. Pardessus, Droit Com. n. 9. Bank-notes are generally considered as cash, and will answer all the purposes of currency; but paper money is not a legal tender if objected to. See LEGAL TENDER.

PAR. In Common Law. Equal. It is used to denote a state of equality or equal value. Bills of exchange, stocks, and the like, are at par when they sell for their nominal value; above par, or below par, when they sell for more or less.

PAR OF EXCHANGE. The par of the currencies of any two countries means the equivalence of a certain amount of the currency of the one in the currency of the other, supposing the currency of both to be of the precise weight and purity fixed by their respective mints. The exchange between the two countries is said to be at par when bills are negotiated on this footing,—i.e. when a bill for £100 drawn on London sells in Paris for 2520 frs., and vice versâ. Bowen, Pol. Econ. 321. See 11 East, 267.

PARAGE. Equality of blood, name, or dignity, but more especially of land in the partition of an inheritance between co-heirs. Coke, Litt. 166 b. Hence disparage, and disparagement. Blount.

In Feudal Law. Where heirs took of the same stock and by same title, but from right of primogeniture, or some other cause, the shares were unequal, the younger was said to hold of the elder, jure et titulo paragii, by right and title of parage, being equal in every thing but the quantity, and owing no homage or fealty. Calvinus, Lex.

PARAGIUM (from the Latin adjective par, equal; made a substantive by the addition of agium. 1 Thomas, Coke, Litt. 681). Equality

In Ecclesiastical Law. The portion which a woman gets on her marriage. Ayliffe, Parerg. 336.

PARAMOUNT (par, by, mounter, to ascend). Above; upwards. Kelham, Norm. Dict. Paramount especifié, above specified. Plowd. 209 a.

That which is superior: usually applied to the highest lord of the fee of lands, tenements, or hereditaments. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 135. Where A lets lands to B, and he underlets them to C, in this case A is the paramount and B is the mesne landlord. See MESNE; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 91; 1 Thomas, Coke, Litt. 484, n. 79, 485, n. 81.

PARAPHERNA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Goods brought by wife to husband over and above her dower (dos). Voc. Jur. Utr.; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 23, § 6; Mackeldy, Civ. Law, § 529.

PARAPHERNALIA. Apparel and ornaments of a wife, suitable to her rank and degree. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 435.

These are subject to the control of the husband during his lifetime, 3 Atk. Ch. 394, but go to the wife upon his death, in preference to all other representatives, Croke Car. 343, and cannot be devised away by the husband. Noy, Max. They are liable to be sold to pay debts on a failure of assets. 1 P. Will. Ch. 730. See, also, 2 Atk. Ch. 642; 11 Viner, Abr 176. The judge of probate is, in the practice of most states, entitled to make an allowance to the widow of a deceased person which more than takes the place of the paraphernalia. See 4 Bouvier, Inst. 3996, 3997.

PARATITLA (Lat.). In Civil Law An abbreviated explanation of some titles or books of the Code or Digest.

PARATUM HABEO (Lat. I have ready). In Practice. A return made by the sheriff to a capias ad respondendum, which signified that he had the defendant ready to bring into court. This was a fiction, where the defendant was at large. Afterwards he was required, by statute, to take bail from the defendant, and he returned cepi corpus and bail-bond. But still he might be ruled to bring in the body. 7 Penn. St. 535.

PARAVAIL. Tenant paravail is the lowest tenant of the fee, or he who is the immediate tenant to one who holds of another. He is called tenant paravail because it is presumed he has the avails or profits of the land. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 135; Coke, 2d Inst. 296.

PARCEL. A part of the estate. 1 Comyns, Dig. Abatement (H 51), Grant (E 10). To parcel is to divide an estate. Bacon, Abr. Conditions (O).

A small bundle or package.

The word "parcel" is not a sufficient description of the property alleged in an indictment to have been stolen. The prisoner was indicted for stealing "one parcel, of the value of one shilling, of the goods," etc. The parcel in question was taken from the hold of a vessel, out of a box broken open by the prisoner. Held an insufficient description. 7 Cox, Cr. Cas. 13.

PARCENARY. The state or condition of holding title to lands jointly by parceners, before the common inheritance has been divided. See COPARCENARY.

PARCENERS. The daughters of a man or woman seised of lands and tenements in fee-simple or fee-tail, on whom, after the death of such ancestor, such lands and tenements descend, and they enter. See COPARCENERS.

PARCO FRACTO (Lat.). In English Law. The name of a writ against one who violently breaks a pound and takes from thence beasts which, for some trespass done, or some other just cause, were lawfully impounded.

PARCUS (Lat.). A park.

PARDON. An act of grace, proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed. 7 Pet. 160.

Every pardon granted to the guilty is in derogation of the law: if the pardon be equitable, the law is bad; for where legislation and the administration of the law are perfect, pardons must be a violation of the law. But, as human actions are necessarily imperfect, the pardoning power must be vested somewhere, in order to prevent injustice when it is ascertained that an error has been committed.

An absolute pardon is one which frees the criminal without any condition whatever.

A conditional pardon is one to which a condition is annexed, performance of which is necessary to the validity of the pardon. 1 Bail. So. C. 283; 10 Ark. 284; 1 M'Cord, So. C. 176; 1 Park. Crim. Cas. N. Y. 47.

A general pardon is one which extends to all offenders of the same kind. It may be express, as when a general declaration is made that all offenders of a certain class shall be pardoned, or implied, as in case of the repeal of a penal statute. 2 Ov. Tenn. 423.

2. The pardoning power is lodged in the executive of the United States and of the various states, and extends to all offences except those which are punished by impeachment after conviction. In some states a concurrence of one of the legislative bodies is required. See U. S. Const. art. 3, § 2; N. Y. Rev. Stat. pt. 1, tit. 1, c. 8, § 3; Ill. Const. art. 4, § 8; Wisc. Const. art. 5, § 6; Tex. Const. art. 5, § 11; 12 Miss. 751; Penn. Const. art. 2, § 9; Mich. Const. art. 5, subs. 11; Iowa Const. art. 4, subs. 11; Ohio Const. art. 2, § 5; 1 M'Cord, So. C. 178; Mass. Const. art. 8, § 1; Me. Const. art. 5, § 11; Vt. Const. pt. 2, § 11; Va. Const. art. 4, subs. 4; 15 Ark. 427; 1 Jones, No. C. 1.

It is to be exercised in the discretion of the power with whom it is lodged. As to promises of pardon to accomplices, see 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 83; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 115.

In order to render a pardon valid, it must express with accuracy the crime intended to be forgiven. 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 400; 3 Wash. C. C. 335; 7 Ind. 359; 1 Jones, No. C. 1. In case of a conditional pardon, if there be a breach of condition the pardon is avoided. 1 M'Cord, So. C. 176; 1 Bail. So. C. 283; 2 id. 516; 2 Caines, N. Y. 57; 1 Park. Crim. Cas. N. Y. 47. See 3 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 333; 9 Port. Ind. 20; 1 Bay, So. C. 334.

3. The effect of a pardon is to protect from punishment the criminal for the offence pardoned, but for no other. 10 Ala. 475; 1 Bay, So. C. 34. It seems that the pardon of an assault and battery which afterwards becomes murder by the death of the person beaten would not operate as a pardon of the murder. 12 Pick. Mass. 496. See Plowd. 401; 1 Hall, N. Y. 426. In general, the effect of a full pardon is to restore the convict to all his rights. But to this there are some exceptions. First, it does not restore civic capacity. 2 Leigh, Va. 724. And see 1 Strobh. So. C. 150; 2 Wheel. Cr. Cas. N. Y. 451; 33 N. H. 388. Second, it does not affect a status of other persons which has been altered or a right which has accrued in consequence of the commission of the crime or its punishment. 10 Johns. N. Y. 232; 4 Wash. C. C. 64; 2 Bay, So. C. 565; 5 Gilm. Ill. 214.

4. When the pardon is general, either by an act of amnesty, or by the repeal of a penal law, it is not necessary to plead it; because the court is bound, ex officio, to take notice of it, 1 Baldw. C. C. 91; and the criminal cannot even waive such pardon, because by his admittance no one can give the court power to punish him when it judicially appears there is no law to do it. But when the pardon is special, to avail the criminal it must judicially appear that it has been accepted: and for this reason it must be specially pleaded, 7 Pet. 150, 162; and if he has obtained a pardon before arraignment, and instead of pleading it in bar he pleads the general issue, he shall be deemed to have waived the benefit of it, and cannot afterwards avail himself of it in arrest of judgment. 1 Rolle, 297. See 1 Dy. 34 a; Keilw. 58; T. Raym. 13; 3 Metc. Mass. 453.

All contracts made for the buying or procuring a pardon for a convict are void; and such contracts will be declared null by a court of equity, on the ground that they are opposed to public policy. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3857.

See, generally, Bacon, Abr. Pardon; Comyns, Dig. Pardon; Viner, Abr. Pardon; 13 Petersdorf, Abr.; Dane, Abr.; Coke, 3d Inst. 233–240; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 37; 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 762–778; 2 Russell, Crimes, 595; Starkie, Crim. Plead. 368, 380.

PARENS PATRIÆ (Lat.). Father of his country. In England, the king; in America, the people. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 427; 2 Stephen, Comm. 528; 4 Kent, Comm. 508, n.; 17 How. 393; Shelford, Ins. 12.

PARENTAGE. Kindred in the direct ascending line. See 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1955.

PARENTS. The lawful father and mother of the party spoken of. 1 Murph. No. C. 336; 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 93.

The term parent differs from that of ancestor, the latter embracing not only the father and mother, but every person in an ascending line. It differs also from predecessor, which is applied to corporators. Wood, Inst. 68; 7 Ves. Ch. 522; 1 Murph. No. C. 336; 6 Binn. Penn. 255. See FATHER; MOTHER.

By the civil law, grandfathers and grandmothers, and other ascendants, were, in certain cases, considered parents. Dict. de Jur. Parente. See 1 Ashm. Penn. 55; 2 Kent, Comm. 159; 5 East, 223; Bouvier, Inst. Index.

PARES (Lat.). A man's equals; his peers. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 349.

PARES CURIÆ (Lat.). In Feudal Law. Those vassals who were bound to attend the lord's court. Erskine, Inst. b. 2, tit. 3, s. 17; 1 Washburn, Real Prop.

PARI DELICTO (Lat.). In Criminal Law. In a similar offence or crime; equal in guilt.

A person who is in pari delicto with another differs from a particeps criminis in this, that the former term always includes the latter, but the latter does not always include the former. 8 East, 381, 382.

PARI MATERIA (Lat.). Of the same matter; on the same subject: as, laws pari materia must be construed with reference to each other. Bacon, Abr. Statute (I 3).

PARI PASSU (Lat.). By the same gradation. Used especially of creditors who, in marshalling assets, are entitled to receive out of the same fund without any precedence over each other.

PARISH. A district of country, of different extents.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The territory committed to the charge of a parson, or vicar, or other minister. Ayliffe, Parerg. 404; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 112.

In Louisiana. Divisions corresponding to counties. The state is divided into parishes.

In New England. Divisions of a town, originally territorial, but which now constitute quasi-corporations, consisting of those connected with a certain church. See 2 Mass. 501; 7 id. 447; 16 id. 457, 488, 492 et seq.; 1 Pick. Mass. 91.

PARIUM JUDICIUM (Lat. the decision of equals). The right of trial by one's peers: i.e. by jury in the case of a commoner, by the house of peers in the case of a peer.

PARK (L. Lat. parcus). An inclosure. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 38. A pound. Reg. Orig. 166; Cowel. An enclosed chase extending only over a man's own grounds. 13 Car. II. c. 10; Manwood, For. Laws; Crompton, Jur. fol. 148; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 38.

Pairk is still retained in Ireland for "pound."

PARLE HILL (also called Parling Hill). A hill where courts were held in old times. Cowel.

PARLIAMENT (said to be derived from parler la ment, to speak the mind, or parum lamentum).

In English Law. The legislative branch of the government of Great Britain, consisting of the house of lords and the house of commons.

2. The parliament is usually considered to consist of the king, lords, and commons. See 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 147*, 157*, Chitty's note; 2 Stephen, Comm. 537. In 1 Wooddeson, Lect. 30, the lords temporal, the lords spiritual, and the commons are called the three estates of the realm: yet the king is called a part of the parliament, in right of his prerogative of veto and the necessity of his approval to the passage of a bill. That the connection between the king and the lords temporal, the lords spiritual, and the commons, who when assembled in parliament form the three estates of the realm, is the same as that which subsists between the king and those estates—the people at large—out of parliament, the king not being in either case a member, branch, or co-estate, but standing solely in the relation of sovereign or head, see Colton, Records, 710; Rot. Parl. vol. iii. 623 a; 2 Mann. & G. 457, n.

3. Records of writs summoning knights, burgesses, and citizens to parliament are first found towards the end of the reign of Henry III., such writs having issued in the thirty-eighth and forty-ninth years of his reign. 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 425; Prynne, 4th Inst. 2. In the reign of Edward III. it assumed its present form. Id. Since the reign of Edward III. the history of England shows an almost constant increase in the power of parliament. Anne was the last sovereign who exercised the royal prerogative of veto; and, as this prerogative no longer practically exists, the authority of parliament is absolutely unrestrained. The parliament can only meet when convened by the sovereign, except on the demise of the sovereign with no parliament in being, in which case the last parliament is to assemble. 6 Anne, c. 7. The sovereign has also power to prorogue and dissolve the parliament. May, Imperial Parliament. The origin of the English parliament seems traceable to the witena gemote of the Saxon kings. Encyc. Brit. See HIGH COURT OF PARLIAMENT.

PARLIAMENTUM INDOCTUM

(Lat. unlearned parliament). A name applied to a parliament assembled, under a law that no lawyer should be a member of it, at Coventry. 6 Hen. IV.; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 177; Walsingham, 412, n. 30; Rot. Parl. 6 Hen. IV.

PAROL (more properly, parole. A French word, which means, literally, word, or speech). A term used to distinguish contracts which are made verbally, or in writing not under seal, which are called parol contracts, from those which are under seal, which bear the name of deeds or specialties. 1 Chitty, Contr. 1; 7 Term, 350, 351, n.; 3 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 60; 1 Chitty, Plead. 88. It is proper to remark that when a contract is made under seal, and afterwards it is modified verbally, it becomes wholly a parol contract. 2 Watts, Penn. 451; 9 Pick. Mass. 298; 13 Wend. N. Y. 71.

Pleadings are frequently denominated the parol. In some instances the term parol is used to denote the entire pleadings in a cause: as, when in an action brought against an infant heir, on an obligation of his ancestors, he prays that the parol may demur, i.e. that the pleadings may be stayed till he shall attain full age. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 300; 4 East, 485; 1 Hoffm. N. Y. 178. See a form of a plea in abatement, praying that the parol may demur, in 1 Wentworth, Plead. 43, and 2 Chitty, Plead. 520. But a devisee cannot pray the parol to demur. 4 East, 485.

PAROL EVIDENCE. Evidence verbally delivered by a witness. As to the cases when such evidence will be received or rejected, see Starkie, Ev. pt. 4, pl. 995–1055; 1 Phillipps, Ev. 466, c. 10, s. 1; Sugden, Vend. 97.

PAROL LEASE. An agreement made orally between parties, by which one of them leases to the other a certain estate.

By the English Statute of Frauds of 29 Car. II. c. 3, ss. 1, 2, 3, it is declared that "all leases, estates, or terms of years, or any uncertain interest in lands, created by livery only, or by parol, and not put in writing and signed by the party, should have the force and effect of leases or estates at will only, except leases not exceeding the term of three years, whereupon the rent reserved during the term shall amount to two third parts of the full improved value of the thing demised." "And that no lease or estate, either of freehold or term of years, should be assigned, granted, or surrendered unless in writing." The principles of this statute have been adopted, with some modifications, in nearly all the states of the Union. 4 Kent, Comm. 95; 1 Hill, Abr. 130.

PAROLE. In International Law. The agreement of persons who have been taken by an enemy that they will not again take up arms against those who captured them, either for a limited time or during the continuance of the war. Vattel, liv. 3, c. 8, § 151.

PARRICIDE (from Lat. pater, father, and cedere, to slay). In Civil Law. One who murders his father. One who murders his mother, his brother, his sister, or his children. Merlin, Rép. Parricide; Dig. 48. 9. 1. 3, 4.

2. This offence is defined almost in the same words in the penal code of China. Penal Laws of China, b. 1, s. 2, § 4.

The criminal was punished by being scourged, and afterwards sewed in a sort of sack, with a dog, a cock, a viper, and an ape, and then thrown into the sea or into a river; or, if there were no water, he was thrown in this manner to wild beasts. Dig. 48. 9. 9; Code, 9, 17. 1. 1. 4, 18, 6; Brown, Civ. Law, 423; Wood, Civ. Law, b. 3, c. 10, s. 9.

3. By the laws of France, parricide is the crime of him who murders his father or mother, whether they be the legitimate, natural, or adopted parents of the individual, or the murder of any other legitimate ascendant. Code Pénal, art. 297. This crime is there punished by the criminal's being taken to the place of execution without any other garment than his shirt, barefooted, and with his head covered with a black veil. He is then exposed on the scaffold, while an officer of the court reads his sentence to the spectators; his right hand is then cut off, and he is immediately put to death. Id. art. 13.

The common law does not define this crime, and makes no difference between its punishment and the punishment of murder. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 380; Prin. Penal Law, c. 18, § 8, p. 243; Dalloz, Dict. Homicide, § 3.

PARS ENITIA (Lat.). In Old English Law. The share of the eldest daughter where lands were parted between daughters by lot, she having her first choice after the division of the inheritance. Coke, Litt. 166 b; Glanville, lib. 7, c. 3; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 10, § in divisionem.

PARS RATIONABILIS (Lat. reasonable part). That part of a man's goods which the law gave to his wife and children. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 492; Magn. Chart.; 9 Hen. III. c. 18; 2 Stephen, Comm. 228, 254.

PARSON. In Ecclesiastical Law. One that hath full possession of all the rights of a parochial church.

So called because the church, which is an invisible body, is represented by his person. In England he is himself a body corporate, in order to protect and defend the church (which he personates) by a perpetual succession. Coke, Litt. 300.

The parson has, during life, the freehold in himself of the parsonage-house, the glebe, the tithes, and other dues, unless these are appropriated, i.e. given away, to some spiritual corporation, sole or aggregate, which the law esteems as capable of providing for the service of the church as any single private clergyman. 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 384; 1 Hagg. Cons. 162; Plowd. 493; 3 Stephen, Comm. 70.

The ecclesiastical or spiritual rector of a rectory. 1 Wooddeson, Lect. 311; Fleta, lib. 7, c. 18; Coke, Litt. 300. Also, any clergyman having a spiritual preferment. Coke, Litt. 17, 18. Holy orders, presentation, institution, and induction are necessary for a parson; and a parson may cease to be such by death, resignation, cession, or deprivation, which last may be for simony, non-conformity to canons, adultery, etc. Coke, Litt. 120; 4 Coke. 75, 76.

PARSON IMPARSONA (Lat.). A persona, or parson, may be termed impersonata, or impersonee, only in regard to the possession he hath of the rectory by the act of another. Coke, Litt. 300. One that is inducted and in possession of a benefice: e.g. a dean and chapter. Dy. 40, 221. He that is in possession of a church, be it presentative or appropriate, and with whom the church is full,—persona in this case meaning the patron who gives the title, and persona impersonata the parson to whom the benefice is given in the patron's right. Reg. Jud. 24.

PART. A share; a purpart. This word is also used in contradistinction to counterpart: covenants were formerly made in a script and rescript, or part and counterpart.

PART AND PERTINENT. In Scotch Law. A term in a conveyance including lands or servitudes held for forty years as part of, or pertinent to, lands conveyed, natural fruits before they are separated, woods and parks, etc.; but not steelbow stock, unless the lands have been sold on a rental. Bell, Dict.; Erskine, Inst. 2. 5. 3 et seq.

PART-OWNERS. Those who own a thing together, or in common.

In Maritime Law. A term applied to two or more persons who own a vessel together, and not as partners.

In general, when a majority of the part-owners are desirous of employing such a ship upon a particular voyage or adventure, they have a right to do so upon giving security in the admiralty by stipulation to the minority, if required, to bring her back and restore the ship, or, in case of her loss, to pay them the value of their respective shares. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3780; Abbott, Shipp. 70; 3 Kent, Comm. 151, 4th ed.; Story, Partn. § 489; 11 Pet. 175. When the majority do not choose to employ the ship, the minority have the same right, upon giving similar security. 11 Pet. 175; 1 Hagg. Adm. 306; Jacobsen, Sea-Laws, 442.

When part-owners are equally divided as to the employment upon any particular voyage, the courts of admiralty have manifested a disposition to support the right of the court to order a sale of the ship. Story, Partn. § 439; Bee, Adm. 2; Gilp. Dist. Ct. 10; 18 Am. Jur. 486. See Parsons, Marit. Law.

PARTES FINIS NIL HABUERUNT (Lat. the parties to the fine had nothing; i.e. nothing which they could convey). In Old English Pleading. The plea to a fine levied by a stranger, and which only bound parties and privies. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 356*; Hob. 334; 1 P. Will. Ch. 520; 1 Wooddeson, Lect. 315.

PARTIAL LOSS. A loss of a part of a thing or of its value, as contrasted with a total loss.

Where this happens by damage to an article, it is also called a particular average, which is to be borne by the owner, as distinguished from a general average loss, which is to be contributed for by the other interests exposed to the same perils. 1 Phillips, Ins. §§ 1269, 1422. See AVERAGE.

PARTICULAR AVERAGE. Every kind of expense or damage, short of total loss, which regards a particular concern, and which is to be wholly borne by the proprietor of that concern or interest alone. See 2 Phillips, Ins. § 354; 1 Parsons, Marit. Law, 284; AVERAGE.

PARTICULAR AVERMENT. See AVERMENT.

PARTICULAR CUSTOM. A custom which only affects the inhabitants of some particular district.

To be good, a particular custom must have been used so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary; must have been continued; must have been peaceable; must be reasonable; must be certain; must be consistent with itself; must be consistent with other customs. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 74, 79.

PARTICULAR ESTATE. An estate which is carved out of a larger, and which precedes a remainder: as, an estate for years to A, remainder to B for life; or, an estate for life to A, remainder to B in tail: this precedent estate is called the particular estate. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 165; 4 Kent, Comm. 226; 16 Viner, Abr. 216; 4 Comyns, Dig. 32; 5 id. 346. See REMAINDER.

PARTICULAR LIEN. A right which a person has to retain property in respect of money or labor expended on such particular property. See LIEN.

PARTICULAR STATEMENT. In Pennsylvania Pleading and Practice. A statement particularly specifying the date of a promise, book-account, note, bond (penal or single), bill, or all of them, on which an action is founded and the amount believed by the plaintiff to be due from the defendant. 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 21. It is founded on the provisions of a statute passed March 21, 1806. See 4 Smith, Penn. Laws, 328. It is an unmethodical declaration, not restricted to any particular form. 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 537; 3 id. 405; 8 id. 316, 567; 2 Browne, Penn. 40.

PARTICULARS. See BILL OF PARTICULARS.

PARTIES (Lat. pars, a part). Those who take part in the performance of an act, as, making a contract, carrying on an action. A party in law may be said to be those united in interest in the performance of an act: it may then be composed of one or more persons. Parties includes every party to an act. It is also used to denote all the individual separate persons engaged in the act,—in which sense, however, a corporation may be a party.

2. To Contracts. Those persons who engage themselves to do or not to do the matters and things contained in an agreement.

In general, all persons may be parties to contracts. But no person can contract with himself in a different capacity, as there must be an agreement of minds. 1 Vern. Ch. 465;

2 Atk. Ch. 59; 9 Ves. Ch. 234; 12 id. 372; 13 id. 156; 2 Brown, Ch. 400; 1 Pet. C. C. 373; 3 Binn. Penn. 54; 7 Watts, Penn. 387; 13 Serg. & R. Penn. 210; 9 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 238, 650; 3 Sandf. N. Y. 61; 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 252; 4 How. 503. And no want, immaturity, or incapacity of mind, in the consideration of the law, disables a person from becoming a party. Such disability may be entire or partial, and must be proved. 2 Stark. 326; 1 Esp. 353; 1 Term, 648; 11 Ad. & E. 634; 17 Law Journ. Exch. 233.

Aliens were under greater disabilities at common law with reference to real than to personal property. 7 Coke, 25 a; 1 Ventr. 417; 6 Pet. 102; 11 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 292; 1 Cush. Mass. 531; 1 Parsons, Contr. 323. The disability is now removed, in a greater or less degree, by statutes in the various states, 2 Kent, Comm. Lect. 25; and alien friends stand on a very different footing from alien enemies. 2 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 586; 11 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 292; 2 Woodb. & M. C. C. 1; 3 Stor. C. C. 458; 2 How. 65; 5 id. 103; 8 Cranch, 110; 3 Dall. Penn. 199.

3. Bankrupts and insolvents are disabled to contract, by various statutes, in England, as well as by insolvent laws in the states of the United States.

Duress renders a contract voidable at the option of him on whom it was practised. See DURESS.

Excommunication can have no effect in the United States, as there is no national church recognized by the law.

Infants are generally incapable of contracting before the age of twenty-one years. This provision is intended for their benefit; and therefore most of their contracts are voidable, and not void. It is the infant's privilege at maturity to elect whether to avoid or ratify the contract he has made during minority. Though the infant is not bound, the adult with whom it may contract is so. The infant may always sue, but cannot be sued, Strange, 937,—which seems to be an exception to the mutuality of contracts. The infant cannot avoid his contract for necessaries. 10 Vt. 225; 11 N. H. 51; 12 Metc. Mass. 559; 6 Mees. & W. Exch. 42; 1 Parsons, Contr. 245.

4. Married women, at common law, were almost entirely disabled to contract, their personal existence, by feudal principles, being almost entirely merged in that of their husbands, 2 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 82; 23 Me. 305; 2 Chitty, Bail, 117; 5 Exch. 388: so that contracts made by them before marriage may be taken advantage of and enforced by their husbands, but not by themselves. 13 Mass. 384; 17 Me. 29; 2 Dev. No. C. 360; 9 Cow. 230; 14 Conn. 99; 6 T. B. Monr. Ky. 257. The contract of a feme covert is, then, generally void, unless she be the agent of her husband, in which case it is the husband's contract, and not hers. 15 East, 607; 6 Mod. 171; 6 N. H. 124; 16 Vt. 390; 5 Binn. Penn. 285; 15 Conn. 347. See WIFE.

Non-compotes mentis. At common law, formerly, in this class were included lunatics, insane persons, and idiots. It is understood now to include drunkards, 3 Day, Conn. 90; 4 Conn. 203; 2 N. H. 435; 15 Johns. N. Y. 503; 2 Harr. & J. Md. 421; 11 Pick. Mass. 304; 1 Rice, So. C. 56; 5 Munf. Va. 466; 3 Blackf. Ind. 51; 1 Green, N. J. 233; 1 Bibb, Ky. 168; 17 Miss. 94; 13 Mees. & W. Exch. 623; spendthrifts, 13 Pick. Mass. 206; 1 Parsons, Contracts, 315; and seamen. Act of 1813 of U. S. ch. 2; 2 Sumn. C. C. 444; 2 Mas. C. C. 541; 2 Dods. Adm. 504; 3 Kent, Comm. 193. See these titles.

Outlawry does not exist in the United States.

5. Slaves can make no binding contracts with their masters, 11 B. Monr. Ky. 239; 9 Gill & J. Md. 19; see 3 Bos. & P. 69; 8 Mart. La. 161; nor can he appear as a suitor in court of law or equity to enforce any contract against any person; and the better opinion is that contracts made by a slave with one not his master, and without his master's consent, are void. 2 Const. So. C. 330; 9 Gill & J. Md. 27; 5 Harr. & J. Md. 190. See 8 Martin, 161; La. Civ. Code, art. 1785. This disability of the slave seems to extend even to marriage. 2 Kent, Comm. 88; 5 Harr. & J. Md. 193; 2 Dev. & B. No. C. 177; 5 Cow. N. Y. 397; 6 Mart. La. 559.

6. As to the character in which parties contract. They may act independently or severally, jointly, or jointly and severally. The decision of the question of the kind of liability incurred depends on the terms of the contract, if they are express, or, if not express, upon the intention of the parties as gathered from the circumstances of the case. Whenever, however, the obligation is undertaken by two or more, or a right given to two or more, it is a general presumption of law that it is a joint obligation or right; words of joinder are not necessary for this purpose; but, on the other hand, there should be words of severance in order to produce a several responsibility or a several right. 1 Taunt. 7; 4 Tyrwh. 487; 13 Mees. & W. Exch. 499; 8 Carr. & P. 332; Sheppard, Touchst. 375; 6 Wend. N. Y. 629; 7 Mass. 58; 10 Barb. 385, 638; 14 id. 644; 1 Lutw. 695; Peake, Nisi P. 130; Holt, Nisi P. 474; 1 Barnew. & C. 407; 12 Gill & J. Md. 265. It may be doubted, however, whether any thing less than express words can raise at once a joint and several liability. Parties may act as the representatives of others, as agents, factors or brokers, servants, attorneys, executors or administrators, and guardians. See these titles.

They may act in a collective capacity, as corporations, joint-stock companies, or as partnerships. See these titles.

New parties may be made to contracts already in existence, by novation, assignment, and indorsement, which see.

7. To Suits in Equity. The person who seeks a remedy in chancery by suit, commonly called the plaintiff, or complainant, and the person against whom the remedy is sought, usually denominated the defendant, are the parties to a suit in equity

Active parties are those who are so involved in the subject-matter in controversy that no decree can be made without their being in court. Passive parties are those whose interests are involved in granting complete relief to those who ask it. 1 Wash. C. C. 517. See 2 Ala. 361.

Plaintiffs.

8. In general, all persons, whether natural or artificial, may sue in equity; and an equitable title only is sufficient. 10 Ill. 332. Incapacities which prevent suit are absolute which disable during their continuance, or partial which disable the party to sue alone. Alien enemies are under an absolute incapacity to sue.

Alien friends may sue, Mitford, Eq. Pl. 129; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 27, if the subject-matter be not such as to disable them, Coke, Litt. 129 b, although a sovereign. 2 Bligh, N. S. 1; 1 Dowl. N. S. 179; 1 Sim. Ch. 94; 2 Gall. C. C. 105; 8 Wheat. 464; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 370; Adams, Eq. 314. In such case he has been recognized by the executive of the forum. Story, Eq. Pl. § 55; 3 Wheat. 324.

In such case the sovereign submits to the jurisdiction, as to the subject-matter, and must answer on oath. Mitford, Eq. Pl. 30; Adams, Eq. 313; 6 Beav. Rolls, 1.

9. Attorney-general. Government (in England, the crown) may sue both in its own behalf, for its own political rights and interests, and in behalf of the rights and interests of those partaking of its prerogatives or claiming its peculiar protection, Mitford, Eq. Pl. 421–424; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 21, 101; usually by the agency of the attorney-general or solicitor-general. Mitford, Eq. Pl. 7; Adams, Eq. 312. See INJUNCTION; QUO WARRANTO; TRUSTS.

Corporations, like natural persons, may sue, Grant, Corp. 198, although foreign, id. 200; but in such case the corporate act must be set forth, 1 Strange, 612; 1 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 296; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 327, as it must if they are domestic and created by a private act, 3 Conn. 199; 15 Viner, Abr. 198. All the members of a voluntary association must be joined, 15 Ill. 251, unless too numerous. 2 Pet. 566; 3 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 362.

Idiots and lunatics may sue by their committees. Mitford, Eq. Pl. 29; Adams, Eq. 301; Goldsb. Eq. 93. As to when a mere petition is sufficient, see 7 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 24; 2 Ired. Eq. No. C. 294.

Infants may sue, Mitford, Eq. Pl. 25, and, if they be on the wrong side of the suit, may be transferred at any time, on suggestion. 3 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 32. The bill must be filed by the next friend, Cooper, Eq. Pl. 27; 1 Smith, Chanc. Pract. 54; 2 Ala. 406, who must not have an adverse interest, 2 Ired. Eq. No. C. 478, and who may be compelled to give bail. 1 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 178. If the infant have a guardian, the court may decide in whose name the suit shall continue. 12 Ill. 424.

A married woman is under partial incapacity to sue. 7 Vt. 369. Otherwise, when in such condition as to be considered in law a feme sole. 2 Hayw. No. C. 406. She may sue on a separate claim by aid of a next friend of her own choice, Story, Eq. Pl. § 61; Fonblanque, Eq. b. 1, c. 2, § 6, note p; 1 Freem. Ch. 215; but see 2 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 454; and the defendant may insist that she shall sue in this manner. 2 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 255; 4 Rand. Va. 397.

Defendants.

10. Generally, all who are able to sue may be sued in equity. To constitute a person defendant, process must be prayed against him. 2 Bland, Ch. Md. 106; 4 Ired. Eq. No. C. 175; 5 Ga. 251; 1 A. K. Marsh. Ky. 594. Those who are under incapacity may be made defendants, but must appear in a peculiar manner. One, or more, interested with the plaintiff, who refuse to join, may be made defendants. 2 Bland, Ch. Md. 264; 3 Des. So. C. 31; 10 Ill. 534; 15 id. 251.

Corporations must be sued by their corporate names, unless authorized to come into court in the name of some other person, as president, etc. Story, Eq. Pl. § 70; 4 Ired. Eq. No. C. 195. Governments cannot, generally, be sued in their own courts, Story, Eq. Pl. § 69: yet the attorney-general may be made a party to protect its rights when involved, 1 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 157; and the rule does not prevent suits against officers in their official capacity. 1 Dougl. Mich. 225.

Idiots and lunatics may be defendants and defend by committees, usually appointed guardians ad litem as of course. Mitford, Eq. Pl. 103; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 30; Story, Eq. Pl. § 70; Shelford, Lun. 425; 6 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 237.

A guardian de facto may not have a bill against a lunatic for a balance due him, but must proceed by petition. 2 Dev. & B. Eq. No. C. 385; 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 242; 2 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 422; 8 id. 609.

Infants defend by guardians appointed by the court. Mitford, Eq. Pl. 103; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 20; 9 Ves. Ch. 357; 10 id. 159; 11 id. 563; 1 Madd. Ch. 290; 8 Pet. 128; 12 Mass. 16; 2 Tayl. No. C. 125.

On becoming of age, an infant is allowed, as of course, to put in a new plea, or to demur on showing that it is necessary to protect his rights. 6 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 353.

11. Married women may be made defendants, and may answer as if femes sole, if the husband is plaintiff, an exile, or an alien enemy, has abjured the realm or been transported under criminal sentence. Adams, Eq. 313; Mitford, Eq. Pl. 104.

She should be made defendant where her husband seeks to recover an estate held in trust for her separate use, 9 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 225, and, generally, where the interests of her husband conflict with hers in the suit, and he is plaintiff. 3 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 397. See, also, 11 Me. 145; Mitford, Eq. Pl. 104. See, generally, as to who may be defendants, JOINDER OF PARTIES.

At Law. In actions ex contractu.

Plaintiffs. In general, all persons who have a just cause of action may sue, unless some disability be shown. An action on a contract, of whatever description, must be brought in the name of the party in whom the legal interest is vested. 1 East, 497; Yelv. 25, n. 1; 1 Lev. 235, 3 Bos. & P. 147; 1 H. Blackst. 84; 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 27; 10 Mass. 230, 287; 13 id. 105; 15 id. 286; 1 Pet. C. C. 109; 2 Root, Conn, 119; 2 Wend. N. Y. 158; 21 id. 110; 1 Hempst. Ark. 541; 4 Dan. Ky. 474.

On simple contracts by the party from whom (in part, at least) the consideration moved, Browne, Act. 99; Broom. Part. 12; 1 Strange, 592; 2 Watts & S. Penn. 237; although the promise was made to another, if for his benefit, Browne, Act. 103; 10 Mass. 287; 3 Pick. Mass. 83; 2 Wend. N. Y. 158; 10 id. 87, 156; 5 Du. N. Y. 168; 5 Dan. Ky. 45, and not by a stranger to the consideration, even though the contract be for his sole benefit, Browne, Act. 101; Broom, Part. 13. On contracts under seal by parties to the instrument only. 10 Wend. N. Y. 87; Coke, Litt. 231.

12. Agents contracting in their own name, without disclosing their principals, may, in general, sue in their own names, 3 Barnew. & Ald. 280; 5 id. 393; 1 Campb. 337; 4 Barnew. & C. 656; 10 id. 672; 1 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 413; 5 Mees. & W. Exch. 650; 2 Carr. & K. 152; 5 Penn. St. 41; or the principals may sue. 6 Cow. N. Y. 181; 3 Hill, N. Y. 72; 2 Ashm. Penn. 485; Broom, Part. 44.

So they may sue on contracts made for an unknown principal, 3 Eng. L. & Eq. 391, and also when acting under a del credere commission, 4 Maule & S. 566; 6 id. 172; 4 Campb. 195; 10 Barb. N. Y. 202; but not an ordinary merchandise broker. An auctioneer may sue for the price of goods sold, 1 H. Blackst. 81; 16 Johns. N. Y. 1; but a mere attorney having no beneficial interest may not sue in his own name. 10 Johns. N. Y. 383.

Alien enemies, unless resident under a license or contracting under specific license, cannot sue, nor can suit be brought for their benefit. Broom, Part. 84; 6 Term, 23; 1 Campb. 482; 1 Salk. 46; 15 East, 418; 1 Kent, Comm. 67; 11 Johns. N. Y. 418; 2 Paine, C. C. 639. License is presumed if they are not ordered away. 10 Johns. N. Y. 69; 6 Binn. Penn. 241. See, also, Coke, Litt. 129 b; 15 East, 260; 1 Kent, Comm. 68.

Alien friends may bring actions concerning personal property, Browne, Act. 304; Bacon, Abr. Aliens, for libel published here, 8 Scott, 182; and now, in regard to real estate generally, by statute, 3 Bouvier, Inst. 107; 12 Wend. N. Y. 342; see 15 Tex. 495; and, by common law, till office found, against an intruder. 13 Wend. N. Y. 546; 1 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 399; 3 id. 109; 3 Hill, N. Y. 79. But see 5 Cal. 373.

13. Assignees of choses in action cannot, at common law, maintain actions in their own names. Broom, Part. 10; 42 Me. 221. Promissory notes, bills of exchange, bail-bonds, and replevin-bonds, etc., are exceptions to this rule. Hammond, Part. 108.

An assignee of real estate may have an action in his own name for breaches of a covenant running with the land, occurring after assignment, 3 Bouvier, Inst. 150; Broom, Part. 9; 14 Johns. N. Y. 89; and he need not be named in an express covenant of this character. Broom, Part. 8.

An assignee in insolvency or bankruptcy should sue in his own name on a contract made before the act of bankruptcy or the assignment in insolvency. 1 Chitty, Pl. 14; Hammond, Part. 167; Comyns, Dig. Abatement (E 17); 3 Yeates, Penn. 520; 3 Dall. Penn. 276; 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 394; 7 id. 182; 9 id. 434. See 3 Salk. 61; 3 Term, 779. Otherwise of a suit by a foreign assignee. 11 Johns. N. Y. 488. The discharge of the insolvent pending suit does not abate it. 2 Johns. N. Y. 342; 11 id. 488. But see 1 Johns. N. Y. 118.

An assignee who is to execute trusts may sue in his own name. 4 Abbott, 106. Cestuis que trust cannot sue at law. 3 Bouvier, Inst. 135.

14. Civil death occurring in case of an outlaw, an attainted felon, or one sentenced to imprisonment for life, incapacitates the person for suing as plaintiff during the continuance of the condition. Broom, Part. 85. Sentence as above, during suit, abates it, 1 Du. N. Y. 664; but the right to sue is suspended only. Broom, Part. 85.

Corporations may sue in their true corporate name, on contracts made in their behalf by officers or agents, 2 Blatchf. C. C. 343; 6 Cal. 258; 3 Bouvier, Inst. 151 (M); 5 Vt. 500; 20 Me. 45; 3 N. J. 321; 9 Ind. 359: as, a bank, on a note given to a cashier. 5 Mo. 26; 4 How. Pract. 63; 21 Pick. Mass. 486. See, also, 15 Me. 443.

The name must be that at the time of suit, 3 Ind. 285; 4 Rand. Va. 359, with an averment of the change, if any, since the making of the contract, 6 Ala. 327, 494; even though a wrong name were used in making the contract. 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 16; 10 Mass. 360; 5 Ark. 234; 10 N. H. 123; 5 Halst. N. J. 323.

If the corporation be a foreign one, proof of its existence must be given. 1 Carr. & P. 569; 13 Pet. 519; 2 Gall. C. C. 105; 5 Wend. N. Y. 478; 7 id. 539; 6 Cow. 46; 1 Hill, 44; 10 Mass. 91; 2 Tex. 531; 1 T. B. Monr. Ky. 170; 7 id. 584; 2 Rand. Va. 465; 2 Green, N. J. 439; 1 Mo. 184.

As to their ability to sue in the United States courts, see 5 Cranch, 57.

15. Executors and administrators in whom is vested the legal interest are to sue in all personal contracts, 3 Term, 393; Williams, Exec. Index; see 15 Serg. & R. Penn. 183, or covenants affecting the realty but not running with the land, 2 H. Blackst. 310; and on such covenants running with the land, for breach during the decedent's lifetime occasioning special damage. 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 17; 4 Johns. N. Y. 72. They must sue as such, on causes accruing prior to the death of the decedent, 1 Saund. 112; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (2 D 1); 3 Dougl. 36; 2 Swan, Tenn. 170, and as such, or in their own names, at their election, for those accruing subsequent, 16 Ark. 36; 3 Dougl. 36; Williams, Exec. 1590; and upon contracts made by them in their official capacity, 30 Ala. 482; 32 Miss. 319; 15 Tex. 44; in their own names only, in some states. 4 Jones, No. C. 159.

On death of an executor, his executor, or administrator de bonis non if he die intestate, is the legal representative of the original decedent. 7 Mees. & W. Exch. 306; 2 Swan, Tenn. 127; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 503.

Foreign governments, whether monarchical or republican, 5 Du. N. Y. 634, if recognized by the executive of the forum, 3 Wheat. 324; Story, Eq. Pl. § 55; see 4 Cranch, 272; 9 Ves. Ch. 347; 10 id. 354; 11 id. 283, may sue. 26 Wend. N. Y. 212; 6 Hill, N. Y. 33.

16. Husband must sue alone for wages accruing to the wife, for the profits of business carried on by her, or money lent by her during coverture, Broom, Part. 71; 2 W. Blackst. 1239; 4 E. D. Smith, N. Y. 384; and see 1 Salk. 114; 2 Wils. 424; 9 East, 472; 1 Maule & S. 180; 4 Term, 516; for slanderous words spoken of the wife which are actionable only by reason of special damage, 2 Du. N. Y. 633; on a fresh promise, for which the consideration was in part some matter moving from him, renewing a contract made with the wife dum sola, 1 Maule & S. 180; and see 2 Penn. St. 827; for a legacy accruing to the wife during coverture, 22 Pick. Mass. 480; and as administrator of the wife to recover chattels real and personal not previously reduced into possession. Broom, Part. 74.

He may sue alone for property that belonged to the wife before coverture, 1 Murph. No. C. 41; 5 T. B. Monr. Ky. 264; on a joint bond given for a debt due to the wife dum sola, 1 Maule & S. 180; 4 Term, 616; 1 Chitty, Plead. 20; on a covenant running to both, Croke Jac. 399; 2 Mod. 217; 1 Barnew. & C. 443; 1 Bulstr. 31; to reduce choses in action into possession, 2 Maule & S. 396, n. (b); 2 Mod. 217; 2 Ad. & E. 30; and, after her death, for any thing he became entitled to during coverture. Coke, Litt. 351 a, n. 1. And see 4 Barnew. & C. 529.

Infants may sue only by guardian or prochein ami. 3 Bouvier, Inst. 138; 13 Mees. & W. Exch. 640; Broom, Part. 84; 11 How. Pract. 188; 13 id. 413; 13 B. Monr. Ky. 193.

Joint tenants. See JOINDER; PARTIES.

Lunatic, or non-compos mentis, may maintain an action, which should be in his own name. Broom, Part. 84; Browne, Act. 301; Hob. 215; 8 Barb. N. Y. 552. His wife may appear, if he have no committee. 7 Dowl. 22. An idiot may by a next friend who petitions for that purpose. Browne, Act. 301; 2 Chitty, Archbold, Pract. 7th ed. 909.

17. Married women cannot, in general, sue alone at common law, Broom, Part. 74; but a married woman may sue alone where her husband is civilly dead, see 4 Term, 361; Croke Eliz. 519; 9 East, 472; 4 Esp. 27; 2 Bos. & P. 165; 1 Selwyn, Nisi P. 286; or, in England, where he is an alien out of the country, on her separate contracts, 2 Esp. 544; 1 Bos. & P. 357; 2 id. 226; 11 East, 301; 3 Campb. 123, while he is in such condition. Broom, Part. § 114.

So she may sue alone after a sentence of nullity or divorce a vinculo, 1 Gow. 10; 9 Barnew. & C. 698; 8 Term, 548; but not after a divorce a mensa et thoro, or voluntary separation merely. 3 Barnew. & C. 297.

She may, where he is legally presumed to be dead, 2 Campb. 113; 5 Barnew. & Ad. 94; 2 Mees. & W. Exch. 894, or where he has been absent from the country for a very long time. 12 Mo. 30; 23 Eng. L. & Eq. 127. See 11 East, 301; 2 Bos. & P. 226.

When the wife survives the husband, she may sue on all contracts entered into by others with her before coverture, and she may recover all arrears of rent of her real estate which became due during the coverture, on their joint demise. 8 Taunt. 181; 1 Rolle, Abr. 350 d. She is also entitled to all her real property, and her chattels real and choses in action not reduced into possession by the husband. Broom, Part. 76.

18. Partners. One cannot, in general, sue another for goods sold, 9 Barnew. & C. 356; for work done, 1 Barnew. & C. 74; 7 id. 419; for money had and received in connection with a partnership transaction, 6 Barnew. & C. 194; or for contribution towards a payment made under compulsion of law. 5 Barnew. & Ad. 936; 1 Mees. & W. Exch. 504. See 1 Mees. & W. Exch. 168; 2 Term, 476. But one may sue the other for a final balance struck, Broom, Part. 57; 2 Term, 479; 5 Mees. & W. Exch. 21; 2 Crompt. & M. Exch. 361; see JOINDER; and they may sue the administrator of a deceased partner. 4 Wisc. 102.

Survivors. The survivor or survivors of two or more jointly interested in a contract not running with the land must sue as such. Addison, Contr. 285; Broom, Part. 21; Archbold, Plead. 54; 1 East, 497; Yelv. 177; 1 Dall. Penn. 65, 248; 4 id. 354; 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 374; 7 Ala. 89.

The survivor of a partnership must sue alone as such. 2 Salk. 444; 9 Barnew. & C. 538; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 374; 2 Maule & S. 225.

The survivor of several, parties to a simple contract, should describe himself as such. 3 Conn. 203.

Tenants in common may sue each other singly for actual ouster. Woodfall, Landl. & Ten. 789. See JOINDER.

Trustees must sue, and not the cestuis que trust. 1 Lev. 235; 15 Mass. 286; 12 Pick. Mass. 554; 4 Dan. Ky. 474. See JOINDER.

Defendants.

19. All persons having a direct and immediate legal interest in the subject-matter of the suit are to be made parties. The proper defendants to a suit on a specialty are pointed out by the instrument.

In case of simple contracts, the person made liable expressly by its terms, 3 Bingh. N. C. 732; 8 East, 12, or by implication of law, is to be made defendant. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 443; 3 Campb. 356; 1 H. Blackst. 93; 2 id. 563. See 6 Mass. 253; 8 id. 198; 11 id. 335; 1 Chitty, Pl. 24. Where there are several persons parties, if the liability be joint, all must be joined as defendants, either on specialties, 1 Williams, Saund. 154, or simple contracts. Chitty, Contr. 99. If it be joint and several, all may be joined, 1 Williams, Saund. 154, n. 4, or each sued separately, 1 Williams, Saund. 191, c; Comyns, Dig. Obligations (G); 3 Term, 782; 1 Ad. & E. 207; if it be several, each must be sued separately. 1 East, 226. The presumption is, in such case, that a written agreement is joint, 2 Campb. 640; 3 id. 49, 51, n.; otherwise of verbal contracts. 1 Ad. & E. 691; 3 Barnew. & Ald. 89; 1 Bingh. 201; Broom, Part. 121.

Alien enemies may be sued, Broom, Part. 18–21; 1 W. Blackst. 30; Croke Eliz. 516; 4 Bingh. 421; Comyns, Dig. Abatement (E 3); and, of course, alien friends.

20. Assignees of a mere personal contract cannot, in general, be sued; of covenants running with the realty may be, for breach after assignment, 2 Saund. 304, n. 12; Woodfall, Landl. & Ten. 113; 1 Fonblanque, Eq. 359, n. y; 3 Salk. 4; 7 Term, 312; 1 Dall. Penn. 210, but not after an assignment by him. Bacon, Abr. Covenant (E 4). See, on this subject, Bouvier, Inst. 162.

Assignees of bankrupts cannot be sued as such at law. Cowp. 134; Chitty, Plead. 11, n. (f).

Bankrupts after discharge cannot be sued. An insolvent after discharge may be sued on his contracts, but his person is not liable to arrest in a suit on a debt which was due at the date of his discharge. Dougl. 93; 8 East, 311; 1 Saund. 241, n. 5; Ingalls, Insolv. 377.

See Conflict of Laws; Bankruptcy; Insolvency.

Corporations must be sued by their true names. 7 Mass. 441; 2 Cow. 778; 15 Ill. 185; 4 Rand. Va. 359; 2 Blatchf. C. C. 343. The suit may be brought in the United States courts by a citizen of a foreign state. 2 How. 497. Assumpsit lies against a corporation aggregate on an express or implied promise, in the same manner as against an individual. 3 Halst. N. J. 182; 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 117; 4 id. 16; 12 Johns. N. Y. 231; 14 id. 118; 7 Cranch, 297; 2 Bay, So. C. 109; 10 Mass. 397; 1 Aik. Vt. 180; 9 Pet. 541; 3 Dall. Penn. 496; 1 Pick. Mass. 215; 2 Conn. 260; 5 Q. B. 547.

21. Executors and administrators of a deceased contractor or the survivor of several joint contractors may be sued, Hammond, Part. 156; but not if any of the original contractors survive. P. A. Browne, Penn. 31; 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 272; 2 Wheat. 344.

The liability does not commence till probate of the will. 2 Sneed, Tenn. 58. The executor or administrator de bonis non of a deceased person is the proper defendant. Broom, Part. 197.

The liability is limited by the amount of assets, and does not arise on subsequent breach of a covenant which could be performed only by the covenantor. Broom, Part. 118. They, or real representatives, may be parties, at election of the plaintiff, where both are equally liable. 1 Lev. 189, 303.

Foreign governments cannot be sued to enforce a remedy, but may be made defendants to give an opportunity to appear. 14 How. Pract. Rep. 517.

Heirs may be liable to suit under the ancestor's covenant, if expressly named, to the extent of the assets received. Broom, Part. 118; Platt, Cov. 449.

Husband may be sued alone for breach of joint covenant of himself and wife, 15 Johns. N. Y. 483; 17 How. 609, and must be on a mere personal contract of the wife made during coverture, Comyns, Dig. Pleader (2 A 2); 3 W. Raym. 6; 1 Lev. 25; 8 Term, 545; 2 Bos. & P. 105; Palm. 312; 1 Taunt. 217; 4 Price, Exch. 48; 16 Johns. N. Y. 281, even if made to procure necessaries when living apart, 6 Watts & S. Penn. 346; may be on a new promise for which the consideration is a debt due by the wife before marriage, Al. 72; 7 Term, 348; but such promise must be express, Broom, Part. 174, and have some additional considerations, as forbearance, etc., 1 Show. 183; 11 Ad. & E. 438, 451; on lease to both made during coverture, Comyns, Dig. Baron & F. (2 B); on lease to wife dum sola, for rent accruing during coverture, or to wife as executrix, Broom, Part. 178; Comyns, Dig. Baron & F. (T); 1 Rolle, Abr. 149; not on wife's contracts dum sola after her death, 3 Mod. 186; Rep. temp. Talb. 173; 3 P. Will. Ch. 410, except as administrator. 7 Term, 350; Croke Jac. 257; 1 Campb. 189, n.

He is liable, after death of the wife, in cases where he might have been sued alone during her lifetime.

22. Idiots, lunatics, and non-compotes mentis, generally, may be sued on contracts for necessaries. 2 Mees. & W. Exch. 2. See Appearance.

Infants may be sued on their contracts for necessaries. 10 Mees. & W. Exch. 195; Macpherson, Inf. 447. Ratification in due form, 11 Ad. & E. 934, after arriving at full age, renders them liable to suit on contracts made before.

Partner is not liable to suit by his copartners. A sole ostensible partner, the others being dormant, may be sued alone by one contracting with him. Broom, Part. 172.

Survivor of two or more joint contractors must be sued alone. 1 Saund. 291, n. 2; Carth. 105; 2 Burr. 1196. A sole surviving partner may be sued alone. Chitty, Pl. 152, note d; 1 Barnew. & Ald. 29.

In actions ex delicto.

Plaintiffs.

The plaintiff must have a legal right in the property affected, whether real, 2 Term, 684; 7 id. 50; Broom, Part. 202; Coke, Litt. 240 b; 2 Blackstone, Comm. 185, or personal, 11 Cush. Mass. 55; though a mere possession is sufficient for trespass, and trespass quare clausum, Croke Jac. 122; 11 East, 65; 4 Barnew. & C. 591; 2 Bingh. N. C. 98; 1 Ad. & E. 44; and the possession may be constructive in case of trespass for injury to personal property. 1 Term, 450; 6 Q. B. 606; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 603; 1 Hill, N. Y. 311. The property of the plaintiff may be absolute, 3 Campb. 187; 5 Bingh. 305; 1 Taunt. 190; 1 C. B. 672, or special. See 7 Term, 9; 4 Barnew. & C. 941; 3 Scott, N. S. 358.

23. Agents who have a qualified property in goods may maintain an action of tort in their own names for injury to the goods.

A principal may sue in the name of his agent for a false representation to the agent. 12 Wend. N. Y. 176.

Assignees of property may sue in their own names for tortious injuries committed after the assignment, 4 Bingh. 106; 3 Maule & S. 7; 5 id. 105; 1 Ad. & E. 580, although it has never been in their possession. 9 Wend. N. Y. 80; 2 N. Y. 293; 1 E. D. Smith, N. Y. 522; 8 Barnew. & C. 270; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 604; Williams, Saund. 252 a, n. (7).

Otherwise of the assignee of a mere right of action. 12 N. Y. 322; 18 Barb. N. Y. 500; 7 How. Pract. N. Y. 492. See 15 N. Y. 432. Assignees in insolvency may sue for torts to the property, 6 Binn. Penn. 186; 8 Serg. & R. Penn. 124, but not to the person of the assignee. W. Jones, 215.

Executors and administrators cannot, in general, sue in actions ex delicto, as such actions are said to die with the plaintiff. Broom, Part. 212; 13 N. Y. 322. See Personal Action. They may sue in their own names for torts subsequent to the death of the deceased. 11 Rich. So. C. 363.

Heirs and devisors have no claim for torts committed during the lifetime of the ancestor or devisor. 2 Inst. 305.

24. Husband must sue alone for all injuries to his own property and person, 3 Blackstone, Comm. 143; 2 Ld. Raym. 1208; Croke Jac. 473; 1 Lev. 3; 2 id. 20, including personalty of the wife which becomes his upon marriage, 1 Salk. 141; 6 Call, Va. 55; 13 N. H. 283; Croke Eliz. 133; 6 Ad. & E. 259; 27 Vt. 17; 1 Hempst. Ark. 64, and including the continuance of injuries to such property commenced before marriage, 1 Salk. 141; 6 Call, Va. 55; 1 Selwyn, Nisi P. 10th ed. 656; in replevin for timber cut on land belonging to both, 8 Watts, Penn. 412; for personal injuries to the wife for the damages which he sustains, 3 Blackst. Comm. 140; Chitty, Plead. 718, n.; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 523; 4 Iowa, 420: as in battery, 2 Ld. Raym. 1208; 8 Mod. 342; 2 Brev. No. C. 170; slander, where words are not actionable per se, 1 Lev. 140; 1 Salk. 119; 3 Mod. 120; 4 Barnew. & Ad. 514; 22 Barb. N. Y. 396; 2 Hill, N. Y. 309; or for special damages. 4 Barnew. & Ad. 514.

He may sue alone, also, for injuries to personalty commenced before marriage and consummated afterwards, 2 Lev. 107; Ventr. 260; 2 Bos. & P. 407; and the right survives to him after death of the wife in all cases where he can sue alone, 1 Chitty, Plead. 75; Viner, Abr. Baron & F. (G); for cutting trees on land held by both in right of the wife, 16 Pick. Mass. 235; 1 Roper, Husb. & W. 2d ed. 215; and, generally, for injury to real estate of the wife during coverture, 18 Pick. Mass. 110; 20 Conn. 296; 2 Wils. 414, although her interests be reversionary only. 5 Mees. & W. Exch. 142.

Infants may sue by guardian for torts. Broom, Part. 238.

Lessors and reversioners, generally, may have an action for injury to their reversions. Broom, Part. 214. Damage necessarily to the reversion must be alleged and shown. 1 Maule & S. 234; 11 Ad. & E. 40; 5 Bingh. 153; 10 Barnew. & C. 145.

25. Lessees and tenants, generally, may sue for injuries to their possession. 4 Burr. 2141; 3 Lev. 209; Selwyn, Nisi P. 1417; Woodfall, Landl. & Ten. 661.

Married woman must sue alone for injury to her separate property, 29 Barb. N. Y. 512; especially after her husband's death. 37 N. H. 355.

The restrictions on her power to sue are the same as in actions ex contractu. Broom, Part. 233. Actions in which she might or must have joined her husband survive to her. Rolle, Abr. 349 (A).

Master has an action in tort for enticing away an apprentice, 3 Blackstone, Comm. 342; 3 Burr. 1345; 3 Maule & S. 191; and, upon the same principle, a parent for a child, 1 Halst. N. J. 322; 4 Barnew. & C. 660; 4 Litt. Ky. 25, and for personal injury to his servant, for loss of time, expenses, etc. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 342.

For seduction or debauchery, a master, Broom, Part. 227; 4 Cow. N. Y. 422, and, if any service be shown, a parent, 2 Mees. & W. Exch. 542; 6 id. 56; 2 Term, 166, has his action.

Survivor, whether sole or several, must sue for a tortious injury, the rule being that the remedy, and not the right, survives. Broom, Part. 212; 1 Show. 188; Carth. 170; 2 Maule & S. 225.

26. Tenants in common must sue strangers separately to recover land. 15 Johns. N. Y. 479; 1 Wend. N. Y. 380; 2 Caines, N. Y. 169; 5 Hill, N. Y. 36, 234.

A tenant in common may sue his co-tenant, where there has been actual ouster, in ejectment, Littleton, § 322; 1 Campb. 173; 11 East, 49; Cowp. 217, or trespass quare clausum, 7 Penn. St. 397, and trespass for mesne profits after recovery. 3 Wils. Ch. 118. Where there is a total destruction or conversion of the property, one tenant in common may sue his co-tenant in trespass, Coke, Litt. 200 a, b; Croke Eliz. 157; 8 Barnew. & C. 257, or in trover. Selwyn, Nisi P. 1366; 1 Term, 658; 2 Ga. 73; 2 Johns. N. Y. 468; 3 id. 175; 9 Wend. N. Y. 338; 21 id. 72; 6 Ired. No. C. 388. For a misfeasance, waste, or case in the nature of waste, may be brought.

Defendants.

The party committing the tortious act or asserting the adverse title is to be made defendant: as, the wrongful occupant of land, in ejectment, 7 Term, 327; 1 Bos. & P. 573, the party converting, in trover, Broom, Part. 246, making fraudulent representations. 3 Term, 56; 5 Bingh. N. C. 97; 3 Mees. & W. Exch. 532; 4 id. 337. The act may, however, have been done by the defendant's agent, 2 Mees. & W. Exch. 650, his mischievous animal, 12 Q. B. 29, or by the plaintiff himself, if acting with due care and suffering from the defendant's negligence. 1 Q. B. 29; 3 Lev. 352; 1 Ld. Raym. 738; 10 Ill. 425.

Agents and principals, Story, Ag. § 425; Paley, Ag. 294, are both liable for tortious act or negligence of the agent under the direction, 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 431, n., or in the regular course of employment, of the principal. 10 Ill. 425; 1 Metc. Mass. 550. See 2 Den. N. Y. 115; 5 id. 639. As to the agent of a corporation acting erroneously without malice, see 1 East, 555.

Subsequent ratification is equivalent to prior authority. Broom, Part. 259.

Agents are liable to their principals for conversion. 14 Johns. N. Y. 128; 8 Penn. St. 442.

27. Assignees are liable only for torts committed by them: as, where one takes property from another who has possession unlawfully, Bacon, Abr. Actions (B), or continues a nuisance. 2 Salk. 460; 1 Bos. & P. 409.

Bankrupts, 3 Barnew. & Ald. 408; 2 Den. N. Y. 73, and insolvents, Broom, Part. 284; 2 Chitty, Bail, 222; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 407; 9 Johns. N. Y. 161; 10 id. 289; 14 id. 128, are liable even after a discharge, for torts committed previously.

Corporations are liable for torts committed by their agents, 7 Cow. N. Y. 485; 2 Wend. N. Y. 452; 17 Mass. 503; 4 Serg. & R. Penn. 16; 9 id. 94; 2 Ark. 255; 4 Ohio, 500; 4 Wash. C. C. 106; 5 Ind. 252; but not, it seems, at common law, in replevin, Kyd, Corp. 205, or trespass quare clausum. 9 Ohio, 31.

Death of a tort-feasor, at common law, takes away all cause of action for torts disconnected with contract. 5 Term, 651; 1 Saund. 291 c. But actions against the personal representatives are provided for by statute in most of the states, and in England by stat. 3 & 4 Will. IV. c. 42, § 2.

Executors and administrators, at common law, are liable for the continuance of torts first committed by the deceased, W. Jones, 173; 5 Dan. Ky. 34; see 28 Ala. N. S. 360; but such continuance must be laid to be, as it really is, the act of the executor. 1 Cowp. 373; Williams, Exec. 1358; 13 Penn. St. 54; 1 Harr. Mich. 7.

28. Husband must be sued alone for his torts, and in detinue for goods delivered to himself and wife. 2 Bulstr. 308; 1 Leon. 312.

He may be sued alone for a conversion by the wife during coverture. 2 Roper, Husb. & W. 127.

Idiots and lunatics are liable, civilly, for torts committed, Hob. 134; Bacon, Abr. Trespass (G), though they may be capable of design. Broom, Part. 281. But if the lunatic is under control of chancery, proceedings must be in that court, or it will constitute a contempt. 3 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 199.

Infants may be sued in actions ex delicto, whether founded on positive wrongs or constructive torts, 21 Kent, Comm. 241; Broom, Part. 280; Coke, Litt. 180 b, n. 4: as, in detinue for goods delivered for a specific purpose, 4 Bos. & P. 140; for tortiously converting or fraudulently obtaining goods, 3 Pick. Mass. 492; 5 Hill, N. Y. 391; 4 M'Cord, So. C. 387; for uttering slander, 8 Term, 337; but only if the act be wholly tortious and disconnected from contract. 8 Term, 35; 6 Watts, Penn. 1; 6 Cranch, 226.

Lessor and lessee are respectively liable for their part of the tort in case of a wrong commenced by one and continued by the other: as, for example, a nuisance. 2 Salk. 460; Broom, Part. 253; Woodfall, Landl. & Ten. 671.

29. Master is liable for a negligent tortious act or default of his servant while acting within the scope of his employment, 6 Cow. N. Y. 189; 1 Pick. Mass. 465; 2 Gray, Mass. 181; 23 N. H. 157; 16 Me. 241; 5 Rich. So. C. 44; 18 Mo. 362, although not in his immediate employ, 5 Barnew. & C. 554; 8 Ad. & E. 109; see 3 Gray, Mass. 349; for the direct effect of such negligence, 17 Mass. 132; but not to one servant for the neglect of another engaged in the same general business, 36 Eng. L. & Eq. 486; 4 Metc. Mass. 49; 3 Cush. Mass. 270; 23 Penn. St. 384; 15 Barb. N. Y. 574; 6 Ind. 205; 22 Ala. N. S. 294; 23 Me. 269; 4 Sneed, Tenn. 36; see 5 Du. N. Y. 39; 37 Eng. L. & Eq. 281, if the servant injured be not unnecessarily exposed. 28 Vt. 59; 6 Cal. 209; 4 Sneed, Tenn. 36.

And the servant is also liable: 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 431, n. For wilful acts. 9 Carr. & P. 607; 3 Barb. 42, for those not committed while in the master's service, 26 Penn. St. 482, or not within the scope of his employment, he alone is liable.

Partners may be sued separately for acts of the firm, its agents or servants. 4 Gill, Md. 406; 1 Carr. & M. 93; 17 Mass. 182; 1 Metc. Mass. 560; 11 Wend. N. Y. 571; 18 id. 175.

PARTITION. The division which is made between several persons of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or of goods and chattels, which belong to them as co-heirs or co-proprietors. The term is more technically applied to the division of real estate made between coparceners, tenants in common, or joint tenants.

Compulsory is that which takes place without regard to the wishes of one or more of the owners.

Voluntary partition is that made by the owners by mutual consent.

2. Voluntary partition is effected by mutual conveyances or releases, to each person, of the share which he is to hold, executed by the other owners.

Compulsory partition is made by virtue of special laws providing that remedy. "It is presumed," says Chancellor Kent, 4 Comm. 360, "that the English statutes of 31 & 32 Henry VIII. have been generally re-enacted and adopted in this country, and, probably, with increased facilities for partition." In some states the courts of law have jurisdiction. The courts of equity have for a long time exercised jurisdiction in awarding partition. 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 113, 302; 4 Rand. Va. 493. In Massachusetts, the statute authorizes a partition to be effected by petition without writ. 2 Mass. 462; 15 id. 155. In Pennsylvania, intestates' estates may be divided upon petition to the orphans' court. By the Civil Code of Louisiana, art. 1214 et seq., partition of a succession may be made. See, generally, Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 6, s. 15; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (3 F), Parcener (C); 16 Viner, Abr. 217; 1 Suppl. Ves. Jr. 168, 171; La. Civ. Code, b. 3, t. 1, c. 8.

3. Courts of equity exercise jurisdiction in cases of partition on various grounds, in cases of such complication of titles that no adequate remedy can be had at law, 17 Ves. Ch. 551; 2 Freem. Ch. 26; but even in such cases the remedy in equity is more complete, for equity directs conveyances to be made, by which the title is more secure. "Partition at law and in equity," says Lord Redesdale, "are very different things. The first operates by the judgment of a court of law, and delivering up possession in pursuance of it, which concludes all the parties to it. Partition in equity proceeds upon conveyances to be executed by the parties; and if the parties be not competent to execute the conveyance, the partition cannot be effectually had." 2 Schoales & L. Ch. Ir. 371. See 1 Hilliard, Abr. c. 55, where may be found an abstract of the laws of the several states on this subject. See Washburn, Real Prop.

PARTNERS. In Contracts. Members of a partnership.

Dormant partners are those whose names and transactions as partners are professedly concealed from the world.

Nominal partners are ostensible partners who have no interest in the firm or business.

Ostensible partners are those whose names appear to the world as partners, and who in reality are such.

2. Who may be. Persons who have the legal capacity to make other contracts may enter into that of partnership. Collyer, Partn. §§ 11, 12. A lunatic seems not to be absolutely incapable of being a partner. 2 Mylne & K. 125; 6 Beav. Rolls, 324; 1 Lindley, Partn. 76, 77. A minor may contract the relation of partner, as he may make any other trading contract which may possibly turn out to be for his benefit. 1 Stark. 25; 8 Taunt. 35; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 147. This contract is subject to the right of avoidance by the minor; but, as in the case of continuing contracts, he is presumed to ratify it, and will be liable on subsequent contracts made on the credit of the partnership, if he do not, within a reasonable time after he has attained his full age, give notice of his disaffirmance of, or otherwise repudiate, the partnership. 5 Barnew. & Ald. 147; 9 Vt. 368; 2 Hill, So. C. 479; 3 Cush. Mass. 372; Collyer, Partn. § 528; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 170, 171; Story, Partn. § 37; 3 Kent, Comm. 68; 1 Lindley, Partn. 74–76. It has been held that if a party who was a member of a firm during his minority does in any manner concur in carrying on the partnership, or receive profits from it, after he comes of age, it amounts to a confirmation, and will render him liable on the contracts of the firm made during his minority. 2 Hill, So. C. 497. The person with whom the minor contracts will be bound by all the consequences. Strange, 939; 2 Maule & S. 205.

Persons domiciled and trading in different countries at war with each other cannot be partners. Collyer, Partn. § 14; 15 Johns. N. Y. 57; 16 id. 438; 3 Kent, Comm. 62, 67; 1 Lindley, Partn. 79.

3. A married woman cannot by the common law sustain the character of partner. Collyer, Partn. § 15; Story, Partn. § 10; 3 De Gex, M. & G. 18; 1 Lindley, Partn. 77; 9 Exch. 422. Where a married woman is authorized by custom to carry on a trade as a feme sole, it has been supposed that she may be a partner, Bohun, Priv. Lond. 187; 2 Bos. & P. 93; see 3 All. Mass. 127; 41 Me. 405; 46 id. 239; but the consent of the husband that his wife may carry on trade for her sole and separate use does not necessarily import that she may involve herself in the complex transactions, responsibilities, and duties of a partnership. Story, Partn. § 12. In cases where the law treats the marriage as suspended, and allows the wife to act as a feme sole (as in cases of the civil death of the husband by exile, banishment, abjuration, or transportation), there may be ground to presume that, as she is thereby generally restored to her rights as a feme sole, she may enter into a partnership in trade. Collyer, Partn. § 12. See 2 Serg. & R. Penn. 189; 2 Nott & M'C. So. C. 242; 1 Bay, So. C. 162, 333. There is no general principle of law which prevents a corporation from being a partner with another corporation, or with ordinary individuals, except the principle that a corporation cannot lawfully employ its funds for purposes not authorized by its constitution. 1 Lindley, Partn. 78.

Generally speaking, the common law imposes no restriction as to the number of persons who may carry on trade as partners. Collyer, Partn. § 11; 1 Lindley, Partn. 71.

4. Who are partners. If persons suffer their names to be used in a business, or otherwise hold themselves out as partners, they are to be so considered, whatever may be the engagements between them and the other partners. 14 Vt. 540; 3 Kent, Comm. 32, 33; Collyer, Partn. § 86; 27 N. H. 252. In such cases they will be equally responsible with the other partners although they receive no profits; for the contract of one is the contract of all. 2 Campb. 802; 2 McLean, C. C. 347; 5 Mill. La. 406, 409; 5 Bingh. 776; 10 Barnew. & C. 140; 1 Mood. & R. 9; 19 Ves. Ch. 459; 17 Vt. 449. This rule of law arises not upon the ground of the real transaction between the partners, but upon principles of general policy, to prevent the frauds to which creditors would be liable if they were to suppose that they lent their money upon the apparent credit of three or four persons, when in fact they lent it only to two of them, to whom, without others, they would have lent nothing. 2 H. Blackst. 235; Dougl. Penn. 371; 2 W. Blackst. 998; 3 Kent, Comm. 32, 33; 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 259, 333; 16 Johns. N. Y. 40; 2 Des. So. C. 148; 2 Nott & M'C. So. C. 427; Collyer, Partn. § 86; Watson, Partn. 26. It has been held that it is not necessary for a person charging a nominal partner to have been aware of the partnership at the time of the contract, 2 H. Blackst. 242; 3 Watts, Penn. 39; and this doctrine has been vindicated on the ground that the object of the rule is to prevent the extension of unsound credit. Collyer, Partn. § 86. But the doctrine has been very much questioned. See 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. Engl. ed. 507; 10 Barnew. & C. 140; 2 McLean, C. C. 347; Mood. & R. 9; 1 Barnew. & Ald. 11; 8 Ala. N. s. 560; 7 B. Monr. Ky. 456. The term "holding one's self out as partner" imports, at least, the voluntary act of the party holding himself out, Collyer, Partn. § 97; 3 Conn. 324; 2 Campb. 617; but no particular mode of holding himself out is requisite to charge a party. The usual evidence to charge a party in such cases is that he has suffered the use of his name over the shop-door, in printed notices, bills of parcels, and advertisements, or that he has done other acts, or suffered his agents to do acts, 37 N. H. 9, no matter of what kind, sufficient to induce others to believe him to be a partner. Collyer, Partn. § 97; 3 McLean, C. C. 364, 549; 3 Campb. 310; 1 Ball & B. 9; 6 Bingh. 776; 4 Moore & P. 713; 20 N. H. 453, 454; 39 Me. 157. If there be a stipulation that a person appearing to be a partner shall be liable to no loss, he of course will not be liable as a partner to those who have absolute knowledge of such stipulation. 1 Campb. 404; 5 Brown, Parl. Cas. 489; Collyer, Partn. § 98. But see 2 Chitt. Bail, 120. How knowledge of the terms of the agreement under which parties are associated will affect third persons, see 6 Metc. Mass. 93, 94; 6 Pick. Mass. 372; 15 Mass. 339; 4 Johns. N. Y. 251; 5 Cow. N. Y. 489; 28 Vt. 108.

5. Dormant partners are, when discovered, equally liable with those who are held out to the world as partners, upon contracts made during the time they participate in the profits of the business. 5 Scott, 619, 635; 4 Esp. 89; 1 Crompt. & J. Exch. 316; 5 Mas. C. C. 176; 9 Pick. Mass. 272; 5 Pet. 529; 2 Harr. & G. Md. 159; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 262; 5 Watts, Penn. 454; 1 Dougl. 371; 1 H. Blackst. 37; 3 Price, Exch. 538. The principle upon which dormant partners are liable is that, as they have the benefit of a share in the profits which are a part of the fund to which a creditor looks for payment, they shall be bound by the burdens. 1 Stor. C. C. 371, 376; 5 Mas. C. C. 187, 188; 5 Pet. 574; 10 Vt. 170; 16 Johns. N. Y. 40; 16 East, 174; 1 H. Blackst. 31; 2 id. 247; Collyer, Partn. § 18. Another reason given for holding them liable is that they might otherwise receive usurious interest without any risk. Lord Mansfield, 1 Dougl. 371; 4 East, 143; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 663; 3 C. B. 641, 650; 10 Johns. N. Y. 226.

6. The general result of the authorities seems to be that persons who share the profits of the concern are primâ facie liable as partners to third persons: if they have not held themselves out, or allowed themselves to be held out, as partners, they may repel the presumption of partnership by showing that the legal relation of partnership inter se does not exist. Collyer, Partn. § 85. This presumption may be repelled by showing that the persons who receive a share of the profits are mere servants, agents, factors, brokers, or other persons receiving such share of the profits in lieu of wages or commission for their labor, trouble, or services. Collyer, Partn. §§ 25, 39; Story, Partn. §§ 33, 34, 49, 55; 4 Sandf. N. Y. 311; 14 Pick. Mass. 195; 6 Metc. Mass. 91; 12 Conn. 69; 2 M'Cord, So. C. 421; 3 Wils. 40. But see 38 N. H. 287. The officers and crews of whaling and other fishing vessels, who are to receive certain proportions of the produce of the voyage in lieu of wages, 4 Esp. 182; 17 Mass. 206; 3 Pick. Mass. 435; 4 id. 234; 14 id. 195; 23 id. 495; 3 Stor. C. C. 112; 2 Younge & C. Exch. 61; captains of merchant-ships who, instead of wages, receive shares in the profits of the adventures on which they sail, 4 Maule & S. 240, or who take vessels under an agreement with the owners to pay certain charges and receive a share of the earnings, 6 Pick. Mass. 335; 16 Mass. 336; 7 Me. 261, persons making shipments on half-profits, and the like, 17 Mass. 206; 14 Pick. Mass. 195, have gene rally been held not to be partners with the owners.

7. A distinction has sometimes been made between sharing the gross profits or earnings and the net profits; but it is far from being treated as decisive on the question of partnership. See 1 Campb. 330; 6 Vt. 119; 10 id. 170; 6 Pick. Mass. 335; 14 id. 193; 6 Metc. Mass. 91; 4 Me. 264; 12 Conn. 69; 38 N. H. 287, 304; Collyer, Partn. § 35, and note; Abbott, C. J., 4 Barnew & Ald. 663.

The law merchant in reference to dormant partners has been held to be confined to trade and commerce, and not to extend to speculations in the purchase and sale of lands. 4 Mass. 424, 426; 3 Kent, Comm. 31, note; 3 Sumn. C. C. 435, 470; 11 Me. 337. It has, however, been frequently held that there may be a partnership in the business of purchasing and selling real estate. 21 Me. 418; Story, Partn. §§ 82, 83; Dav. Dist. Ct. 320; 7 Penn. St. 165; 10 Cush. Mass. 468, 469; 4 Ohio St. 1.

The contract must be voluntary among the members: therefore no stranger can be introduced into the firm without a concurrence of the whole firm. 7 Pick. Mass. 235, 238; 11 Me. 488; 1 Hill, N. Y. 234; 8 Watts & S. Penn. 63; 16 Ohio, 166; Collyer, Partn. §§ 8, 192; Pothier, Partn. ch. 5, § ii. art. 91; 2 Rose, Bank. 254. The delectus personæ, as it is called, is so essentially necessary to the constitution of a partnership that even the executors or other representatives of partners themselves do not, in their capacity of executors or representatives, succeed to the state and condition of partners. Collyer, Partn. § 9; 7 Pick. Mass. 237, 238; 3 Kent, Comm. 55, 56. The civilians carried this doctrine so far as not to permit it to be stipulated that the heirs or executors of partners should themselves be partners. Domat, lib. 1, tit. 8, s. 2; Pothier, Partn. n. 145. But in this respect the common law is otherwise. 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 34; Collyer, Partn. §§ 9, 228 et seq.; 3 Kent, Comm. 56, 57; 1 Swanst. Ch. 510, n.; 9 Ves. Ch. 500; 7 Conn. 307. And Pothier thinks such a stipulation is binding. Pothier, Partn. n. 145. Clauses providing for the admission into the firm of a deceased partner's representatives will, in general, be construed as giving them an option to become partners, and not as constituting them partners absolutely. 7 Jarman, Conv. 120; 1 M'Clel. & Y. Exch. 569; 2 Russ. Ch. 62; Bisset, Partn. 169, 170; Collyer, Partn. § 230.

8. Although the delectus personæ, which is inherent in the nature of partnership, precludes the introduction of a stranger into the concern against the will of any of the partners, yet no partner is precluded from entering into a sub-partnership with a stranger: nam socii mei socius, meus socius non est. Dig. lib. 17, tit. 2, s. 20; Pothier, Partn. ch. 5, § ii. n. 91. In such case the stranger may share the profits of the particular partner with whom he contracts; and although it has been decided that it is not true as a general proposition that such stranger will not be liable for the debts of the general partnership, 13 Gray, Mass. 468, still, it is quite evident that a mere participation in profits renders one responsible only for the debts and liabilities of those with whom he participates; and, inasmuch as such stranger shares the profits only of and with one of the partners, he can be held only as the partner of that partner; he cannot be held as a partner in the general partnership, because he does not share or participate with the other persons who compose it. See Rose, Bank. 255; 1 Jac. Ch. 284; 3 Kent, Comm. 52; 2 Sim. & S. Ch. 124; 1 Bos. & P. 546; Collyer, Partn. § 194; Mont. & M'A. 445; 2 Bell, Comm. 636; 1 Lindley, Partn. 52, 53; 3 Ross, Comm. Law, 697. Besides, a sub-partner does not receive a certain share of the whole profits of the firm, but only a part of a share thereof; and he does not receive this part of a share, nor is he entitled to interfere with it at all, to say whether it shall be more or less in amount, until it has actually been set out and the time has come for a division between himself and the partner with whom he contracted. He does not draw out of the general concern any of its profits: he only draws from the profits of one who has previously drawn them from the general partnership. See 6 Madd. Ch. 5; 4 Russ. Ch. 285; Pothier, Partn. c. 5, § 11, n. 91; Starkie, Partn. 155; 3 Ross, Comm. Law, 697. If this stranger has caused damage to the partnership by his default, the party who has taken him into the partnership will be liable to the other partners the same as if he had done the damage himself. Pothier, Partn. n. 93.

9. Power of partners. It may be stated as a general principle, which governs all partnerships in trade, that each individual partner constitutes the others his agents for the purpose of entering into all contracts for him within the scope of the partnership concern, and, consequently, that he is liable to the performance of all such contracts in the same manner as if entered into personally by himself. 6 Bingh. 792; Story, Partn. 1; 20 Miss. 122; 10 N. H. 16; Collyer, Partn. § 195; Pothier, Partn. c. 5, n. 90; 4 Exch. 623, 630. In truth, the law of partnership is a branch of the law of principal and agent. If two agree that they should carry on a trade and share the profits of it, each is a principal and each is an agent for the other, and each is bound by the other's contracts in carrying on the trade as much as a single principal would be by the act of an agent who was to give the whole of the profits to his employer. Hence it becomes a test of liability of one for the contract of another, that he is to receive the whole or a part of the profits arising from that contract by virtue of the agreement made at the time of the employment. 23 Bost. Law Rep. 498. If an act is done by one partner on behalf of the firm, and it can be said to have been necessary for the carrying on of the partnership business in the ordinary way, the firm will primâ facie be liable although in point of fact the act was not authorized by the other partners; but if the act cannot be said to have been necessary for the carrying on of the partnership business in the ordinary way, the firm will primâ facie not be liable. 10 Barnew. & C. 128; 14 Mees. & W. Exch. 11; 4 Exch. 630; 1 Lindley, Partn. 192–195.

10. Each partner has the power to manage the ordinary business of the firm, whatever it may be, and, consequently, to bind his partners, whether they be ostensible, dormant, actual, or nominal, 7 East, 210; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 673; 1 Crompt. & J. Exch. 316, by whatever he may do, in the course of such management, as entirely as himself. A partner may, for instance, borrow money, 1 Esp. 406; Collyer, Partn. §§ 390, 391; 4 Metc. Mass. 577, purchase goods, Comb. 383; 2 Carr. & K. 828; 5 Watts & S. Penn. 564, and sell, Godb. 244; Cowp. 445; 3 Kent, Comm. 44, the whole of the partnership effects at a single sale. 24 Pick. Mass. 89; Collyer, Partn. § 394; 1 Brock, Va. 456; 5 Watts, Penn. 22; 4 Wash. C. C. 234; 1 Harr. Ch. Mich. 2. So he may pledge the partnership goods, Barn. 343; 3 Kent, Comm. 46; Collyer, Partn. § 396; 10 Hare, Ch. 453; 5 Exch. 489; 7 Mann. & G. 607, even in the case of a particular adventure. Gow. 132, 135, note; 1 Rose, Bank. 297; 4 Barnew. & C. 867. This principle does not extend to the case of a joint-purchase or sub-purchase. 5 Barnew. & Ald. 395. The right of a partner to dispose of the property of the firm extends to assignments of it as security for antecedent debts, as well as for debts thereafter to be contracted on account of the firm. Story, Partn. § 101; 5 Cranch, 298; 1 Brock, Va. 456; 17 Vt. 394. The assignment may be for the benefit of one creditor or of several, or of all the joint creditors, where all are admitted to an equal participation. Story, Partn. § 101; 4 Day, Conn. 428; 6 Pick. Mass. 360; 4 M'Cord, So. C. 519; 4 Mas. C. C. 206; 5 Watts, Penn. 22; 1 Hoff. Ch. N. Y. 511. Whether one partner may, without the express consent of his copartner, assign all the property of the firm to pay the debts of the firm, is a question on which the authorities differ. Collyer, Partn. § 395 and notes; Chitty, Contr. (ed. 1860) 278; 4 Wash. C. C. 282; 17 Vt. 390; 1 Brock, Va. 456; 5 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 30, 31; 1 Metc. Mass. 515; 2 Pick. Mass. 89; 5 Watts, Penn. 22; 8 Leigh, Va. 416; 1 Des. So. C. 537, 540; 3 Sandf. N. Y. 292, 296.

11. It has been held that one partner may, without the consent or knowledge of his copartners, mortgage all the goods of the firm to secure a particular creditor of the firm. 1 Metc. Mass. 518, 519; 7 id. 248. The right of one partner to dispose of the partnership property is, however, confined strictly to personal effects, and does not extend to real estate held by the partnership. 1 Metc. Mass. 518, 519; Story, Partn. § 101; 1 Brock, Va. 456, 463.

A partner may draw, accept, and indorse bills, notes, and checks in the name and for the use of the firm, Salk. 126; 7 Term, 210; 2 Peake, 150; 3 Dow. 219; Buller, Nisi P. 279; 20 Miss. 226; 4 Johns. N. Y. 265; Story, Partn. 102; 5 Blackf. Ind. 210; 4 Md. 288; and a note or bill executed by one partner in the name of the firm is primâ facie evidence that it was executed for partnership purposes. Collyer, Partn. § 401, note; 6 Wend. N. Y. 615; 16 Me. 419; 5 Mas. C. C. 176; 7 Ala. N. S. 19. But if a partnership be carried on under a single name, it has been held that the legal presumption in regard to a note signed by that name is that it was a personal and not a partnership note. See 26 Barb. N. Y. 610; 38 Me. 506; 5 Pick. Mass. 11. One partner may effect insurance, 4 Campb. 66; Collyer, Partn. § 438; Story Partn. § 102, and receive money for the firm, Holt, 434; Cowp. 814; may compromise with its debtors or creditors, Story, Partn. § 115; 7 Gill, Md. 49; Rice, So. C. 291, and release debts due to it, 3 Kent, Comm. 48; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 274; Collyer, Partn. § 468 and note; Bacon, Abr. Release (D); 3 Bingh. 103; 17 Johns. N. Y. 58; 7 N. H. 567; 4 Mas. C. C. 232; 4 Gill & J. Md. 310; 3 Wash. C. C. 511; 3 C. B. 742, 745; Story, Partn. § 115; and such acts and dealings, if they fall within the ordinary business of the firm, 6 Beav. Rolls, 324; 2 Phill. 354, will bind all the other partners. A warranty of a horse, upon sale thereof by one of several horse-dealers, partners, would bind the others. 2 Barnew. & Ald. 679.

12. Upon the principle that the act and assurance of one partner, made with reference to business transacted by the firm, will bind all the partners, the acknowledgment, promise, or undertaking of one partner with reference to the contracts of the partnership is held to be the acknowledgment, promise, or undertaking of all. 1 Taunt. 104; Story, Partn. § 107; 1 Esp. 135; 1 Russ. & M. 199; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 663; 4 Dowl. & R. 7; 1 Salk. 291; Collyer, Partn. § 422. How far an acknowledgment or admission made by one partner after the dissolution of the firm binds the other partners in regard to partnership transactions, see Collyer, Partn. § 423 et seq. and notes, 430 and notes.

One partner will be bound by the fraud of his copartner in contracts relating to the affairs of the partnership, made with innocent third persons. Collyer, Partn. § 445; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 795; Cowp. 114; 1 Metc. Mass. 563; 6 Cow. N. Y. 497; 1 Ry. & M. 364; 6 Barnew. & C. 561; 2 Clark & F. Hou. L. 250; 7 T. B. Monr. Ky. 617; 1 Campb. 185; 7 Ired. No. C. 4; 15 Mass. 75, 81, 331; 17 id. 182; Bisset, Partn. 76. This doctrine proceeds upon the ground that where one of two innocent persons must suffer by the act of a third person, he shall suffer who has been the cause or the occasion of the confidence and credit reposed in such third person. Story, Partn. § 108; 1 Metc. Mass. 562, 563. The liability, therefore, does not arise when there is collusion between the fraudulent partners and the party with whom he deals, Bisset, Partn. 80, 81; 1 East, 48, 53, or the latter have reason to suppose that the partner is acting on his own account. Peake, 80, 81; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 280, 284; 2 C. B. 821; 10 Barnew. & C. 298.

13. A partner may be made liable for other wrongs committed in reference to the partnership business by his copartners: as, where a partner injures a third person by negligence in driving a coach, the property of the firm and employed on their business. Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 280, note; Collyer, Partn. § 458; 12 N. H. 276. A joint conversion may be raised in point of law by the assent of the partner to the acts of his copartner. Collyer, Partn. § 458; 1 Maule & S. 588, Story, Partn. § 166. Demand of, and a refusal by, one partner to deliver up property is evidence of a conversion by both. 4 Hill, N. Y. 13; 24 Wend. N. Y. 169; 4 Rawle, Penn. 120. But the wilful tort of one partner seems not, in general, to be imputable to the firm. 3 Dowl. 160; 10 Exch. 352.

As a general rule, the act or admission of one partner in legal proceedings, as also notice to or by one partner, is held to be binding on the firm. Collyer, Partn. §§ 441, 442, 443; 15 Mass. 44; 2 Wash. C. C. 388; 4 Conn. 326; 3 Litt. Ky. 250; Story, Partn. § 107, 1 Maule & S. 259; 5 id. 49; 1 Carr. & P. 550; 1 Campb. 82; 2 Crompt. & M. 318. In an action against partners, one may enter an appearance for the rest, 7 Term, 207; 17 Vt. 531; see 2 M'Cord, So. C. 310; but not to bind them personally and individually when not within the jurisdiction and not served with process. 9 Cush. Mass. 360; 11 How. 165. Where one partner released an action after the firm had instructed their attorney to proceed to trial, the court refused to interfere, 7 J. B. Moore, 356; and it seems that one partner has also the power of suspending proceedings in an action. Bisset, Partn. 75; Gow, Partn. 65, note.

14. One partner may give notice of abandonment, under a policy of insurance, for all. 5 Maule & S. 47. Notice of dishonor to one of several partners, joint indorsers of a bill or note, is notice to all. Chitty, Bills, 339; 6 La. 684; 20 Johns. N. Y. 176. One partner may act for the others in proceedings under bankrupt laws, Collyer, Partn. § 444; 4 Ves. Ch. 597; 19 id. 291; 1 Rose, Bank. 2; 2 id. 174; Bisset, Partn. Eng. ed. 76; except in the case of a petition for a fiat. Bisset, Partn. 76.

A partner derives no authority from the mere relation of partnership to bind the firm as the guarantor of the debt of another, 5 Q. B. 833; 4 Exch. 623; Collyer, Partn. § 421; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 276, 277, and notes; Story, Partn. § 127; 3 Kent, Comm. 46, 47; 3 Ired. No. C. 241; 2 Harr. N. J. 24; 2 Ala. N. S. 502; 2 Cush. Mass. 309; or as a party to a bill or note for the accommodation of, or as a mere and avowed surety for, another. 2 Cush. Mass. 309; Collyer, Partn. § 421; 19 Johns. N. Y. 154; 1 Wend. N. Y. 531; 5 Conn. 574; 21 Miss. 122; 31 Me. 452; 3 Humphr. Tenn. 597; 14 Wend. N. Y. 133, 138; 4 Hill, N. Y. 161. In neither of these cases can the act of one partner bind the firm, unless there be a special authority for the purpose, or one to be implied from the common course of business or the previous course and habit of dealing, with the knowledge and consent of the firm, or unless the transaction is subsequently adopted by the firm. Collyer, Partn. § 421 and note; 3 Kent, Comm. 46, 47; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 276, 277; 3 Humphr. Tenn. 597; 4 Hill, N. Y. 261. Whether it appears upon the instrument or in some other way that the contract is one of guaranty, suretyship, or accommodation, the burden of proof is upon the party holding it, if he took it knowing such to be the character of the contract, to show the facts necessary to render it available against the firm. 19 Johns. N. Y. 154; 7 Wend. N. Y. 309; 2 Cush. Mass. 314, 315; 2 Penn. St. 177; 21 Miss. 122; 22 Me. 188, 189; 31 id. 454. Direct or positive proof is not necessary: the authority or ratification may be inferred from circumstances. 2 Cush. Mass. 309; 22 Me. 188, 189; 14 Wend. N. Y. 133; 2 Litt. Ky. 41; 10 Vt. 268.

15. One partner, without authority, express or implied from circumstances, cannot bind the firm by a contract to convey real estate of the partnership unless there be a subsequent ratification or adoption of the contract. 5 Hill, N. Y. 107. One partner has no implied authority to bind his copartners by deed, 3 Kent, Comm. 47, 48; Story, Partn. § 117 et seq.; Collyer, Partn. 463; but a deed made by one partner in the name and for the use of the members of the firm will bind the other partners, if they assent to it or subsequently adopt it; and this consent or adoption may be by parol. 11 Pick. Mass. 400; 4 Metc. Mass. 548; 11 Ohio, 223; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 278, note; Collyer, Partn. § 462 et seq., § 469 et seq. So one partner may bind the firm to a conveyance by deed of the effects of the firm which he might have conveyed without deed. The mere circumstance of annexing a seal to the instrument in such a case does not annul a transfer so consummated. 1 Brock, Va. 456; 1 Metc. Mass. 515; 7 id. 244; 5 Hill, N. Y. 107; 8 Leigh, Va. 415. A deed of assignment of the partnership property, executed by one partner as his deed only, passes his interest in the property. 11 Mees. & W. Exch. 128. But see 17 Ves. Ch. 193, 200; 5 Mo. 466.

One partner cannot bind the firm by submitting any of the affairs of the firm to arbitration, whether by deed or parol. 3 Kent, Comm. 49; Story, Partn. §§ 114, 115; 3 Bingh. 101; 3 Hurlst. & N. Exch. 500; 1 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 681; 3 C. B. 742, 745; 19 Johns. N. Y. 137; 1 Pet. 221; Collyer, Partn. §§ 439, 470. The principle is that there is no implied authority, excepting so far as it is necessary to carry on the business of the firm. 1 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 581; 3 Bingh. 101. It might also affect the rights of the other partners to resort to the ordinary course of justice. Collyer, Partn. § 439. In some states, however, one partner may submit partnership matters to arbitration. Wright, Ohio, 420; 12 Serg. & R. Penn. 243; 3 T. B. Monr. Ky. 433.

16. The rule that one partner cannot bind his copartners by deed does not extend to releases. Collyer, Partn. § 468; 2 Coke, 68; 4 Term, 519; 3 Bingh. 101; 3 Johns. N. Y. 68; 4 Gill & J. Md. 310; 3 Kent, Comm. 48. As a release by one partner is a release by all, so a release to one partner is a release to all.

March. 202; 8 Coke, 136; 23 Pick. Mass. 444; 3 Penn. 57; 5 Gill & J. Md. 314; 22 Pick. Mass. 305; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 275, note.

The power of a partner to dispose of the property of the firm does not extend to real estate held by the partnership: one partner cannot convey away the real estate of the firm without special authority. 1 Metc. Mass. 518, 519; Story, Partn. § 101; 1 Brock, Va. 456, 468; 3 McLean, C. C. 27; Collyer, Partn. § 394.

One partner cannot by confessing a voluntary judgment bind his copartners, unless actually brought into court by regular service of process against him and his partner. A judgment so confessed will bind the partners who did it only. 1 Wend. N. Y. 311; 1 Blackf. Ind. 252; 1 Watts & S. Penn. 340, 519; 7 id. 172; 3 C. B. 742; Collyer, Partn. § 464, note; 4 Moore & P. 57. Nor can one partner, by entering an appearance for another, bind him personally and individually where the latter is not within the jurisdiction and has not been served with process. 9 Cush. Mass. 360; 1 How. 165.

17. The act of a partner wholly unconnected with the business of the partnership does not bind the firm. 4 Exch. 623; Collyer, Partn. §§ 437, 484; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 678; 4 Johns. N. Y. 265; 8 Me. 820; 15 Pick. Mass. 290; 3 Conn. 198; 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 23; Story, Partn. §§ 112, 113; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 275; 3 Q. B. 316; 4 Dan. Ky. 378; 2 Ell. & B. 61. Still, a partner may bind the firm in matters out of the usual course of the business of the firm, if those matters arise out of, and are connected with, the regular transactions of the firm. Collyer, Partn. § 484; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 673. If one partner is a trustee, and he improperly employs the trust funds in the partnership business, his knowledge that he is doing so is not imputable to the firm. 1 Lindley, Partn. 231; 1 Brock, Va. 386.

No arrangement between the partners themselves can limit or prevent their ordinary responsibilities to third persons, unless the latter assent to such arrangement. Collyer, Partn. § 386; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 679; 3 Kent, Comm. 41; 5 Mas. C. C. 187, 188; 5 Pet. 129; 3 Barnew. & C. 427. But where the creditor nas express notice of a private arrangement between the partners, by which either the power of one to bind the firm or his liability on partnership contracts is qualified or defeated, such creditor will be bound by the arrangement. Collyer, Partn. § 387; 12 N. H. 275; 4 Ired. No. C. 129; 38 N. H. 287; 6 Pick. Mass. 372; 4 Johns. N. Y. 251; 5 Conn. 597, 598; 1 Campb. 404; 5 Brown, Parl. Cas. 489; 1 Lindl. Partn. 260 et seq., 267–269. The act or contract of one partner, even in a transaction purely of a partnership nature, does not bind the firm if the creditor has express notice from the other partners that they will not consider themselves responsible, 1 Salk. 202; 10 East, 264; 1 Stark. 164; 1 Younge & J. Exch. 227; for the authority of one partner to bind the firm is only implied; and no one can become the creditor of another against his express and declared will. Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 284; Collyer, Partn. § 387.

18. One partner may interfere, and, by his dissent from future contracts by his copartner or from the closing of contracts with him which have not become binding upon the firm, he may, upon express notice thereof, avoid any liability subsequently arising upon such contracts if entered into, unless the dissenting partner afterwards assents to and ratifies the transaction. 1 Stark. 164; 3 Kent, Comm. 45; 3 Conn. 124; 1 Campb. 403; 16 Viner, Abr. 244; 15 Me. 198; Collyer, Partn. §§ 388, 389; Pothier, Partn. n. 90. But it seems that the dissenting partner would not be liable merely on the ground that the goods purchased, or the fruits of the contract, came to the use of the firm, 15 Me. 178, 181; 3 Conn. 124; 10 East, 204; 1 Younge & J. 227, 230, unless they were of some benefit to the firm. 1 Stark. 104; 15 Me. 181. It has, however, been questioned whether the dissent of one partner, where the partnership consists of more than two, will affect the validity of partnership contracts made by the majority of the firm in the usual course of business and within the scope of the concern. 3 Kent, Comm. 45; Collyer, Partn. §§ 147, 389 and note; Story, Partn. § 123; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 400; 4 id. 573, 597; 1 Turn. & R. Ch. 496, 517, 525. It is said by a learned writer that, in the absence of an express stipulation, a majority must decide as to the disposal of the partnership property, 3 Chitty, Comm. Law, 234; but the power of the majority must be confined to the ordinary business of the partnership, Collyer, Partn. § 197; 9 Hare, Ch. 326; 3 DeGex & J. 123; 4 Kay & J. 733; 2 Phill. 740; 14 Beav. Rolls, 367; 2 DeGex, M. & G. 49; 3 Smale & G. 176: it does not extend to the right to change any of the articles thereof, Collyer, Partn. § 198; Story, Partn. § 125; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 573; 32 N. H. 9, nor to engage the partnership in transactions for which it was never intended. Gow, Partn. 3d ed. 398, App.; 3 Maule & S. 488; 1 Taunt. 241; 1 Sim. & S. Ch. 31. Where a majority is authorized to act, it must be fairly constituted and must proceed with the most entire good faith. Turn. & R. Ch. 525; 10 Hare, Ch. 493; 5 DeGex & S. 310.

19. Each partner is liable to pay the whole partnership debts. In what proportion the partners shall contribute is a matter merely among themselves. Lord Mansfield, 5 Burr. 2613. Universally, whatever agreement may exist among the partners themselves, stipulating for a restricted responsibility, and however limited may be the extent of his own separate beneficial interest in, and however numerous the members of, the partnership, each individual member is liable for the joint debt to the whole extent of his property. Bisset, Partn. 9; 5 Burr. 2611; 2 W. Blackst. 947; 9 East, 516; 5 Term, 601; 1 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 157; 2 Deas. So. C. 148; 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 333; 1 Lindley, Partn. 300. In Louisiana, ordinary partners are bound in solido for the debts of the partnership, La. Civ. Code, art. 2843; each partner is bound for his share of the partnership debts, calculating such share in proportion to the number of partners, without attention to the proportion of the stock or profits each is entitled to. Id. art. 2844.

Partners are said to be joint tenants of the partnership property without benefit of survivorship inter se. Bisset, Partn. 44, 45; 7 Jarman, Conv. 67; Comyns, Dig. Merchants (D); Collyer, Partn. § 123; Story, Partn. §§ 89, 90. But, in addition to the ordinary right of joint tenants, each partner has also a power, singly, to dispose of the entire right of all the partners in the partnership effects, for the purposes of partnership and in the name of the firm. Bisset, Partn. 45; Story, Partn. § 90; Cowp. 445.

20. Partnership also differs from a tenancy in common in reference to the power of disposal, and because, inter se, each partner has a claim, not to any specific share or interest in the property in specie, as a tenant in common has, but to the proportion of the residue which shall be found to be due to him upon the final balance of their accounts, after the conversion of the assets and the liquidation thereout of all claims upon the partnership; and therefore each partner has a right to have the same applied to the discharge and payment of all such claims before any one of the partners, or his personal representatives, or his individual creditors, can claim any right or title thereto. Story, Partn. § 97; 7 Jarman, Conv. 68; Cowp. 469; 1 Ves. Sen. Ch. 239; 4 Ves. Ch. 396; 6 id. 119; 17 id. 193.

Each partner has also a specific lien on the present and future property of the partnership, the stock brought in, and every thing coming in lien, during the continuance and after the determination of the partnership, not only for the payment of debts due to third persons, but also for the amount of his own share of the partnership stock, and for all moneys advanced by him beyond that amount for the use of the partnership, as also for moneys abstracted by his copartners beyond the amount of his share. Story, Partn. §§ 97, 326, 441; Collyer, Partn. § 125; 3 Kent, Comm. 65, 66; 8 Dana, 278; 10 Gill & J. Md. 253; 20 Vt. 479; 9 Cush. Mass. 558; 1 Lindley, Partn. 576; 1 Ves. Sen. 239; 9 Beav. Rolls, 239; 20 id. 20; 25 id. 280; 3 Mont. D. & D. 198. This lien attaches on real estate held by the partnership for partnership purposes, as well as upon the personal estate, 5 Metc. Mass. 562, 577–579, 585, and is coextensive with the transactions on joint account. 1 Dan. Ky. 58; 11 Ala. N. S. 412.

21. If a partner has taken the whole or any part of his share out of the partnership stock, the stock so taken, if identified, is applicable to the payment of what, upon an account taken, shall be found to be due from him to the partnership, before it can be applied to the payment of his separate creditors. 3 P. Will. 180; Collyer, Partn. § 126; Story, Partn. § 97. The same rule will apply to any other property into which the partnership property may have been converted, so far and so long as its original character and identity can be distinctly traced, 4 Harr. & M'H. Md. 167; Story, Partn. § 97; and hence no separate creditor of any partner can, merely as such creditor, take any portion of the partnership effects, by process or otherwise, except for so much as belongs to that partner, as his share or balance, after all prior claims thereon are deducted and satisfied. Story, Partn. § 97; 9 Me. 28; Collyer, Partn. § 822 and notes; 5 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 417.

Upon the decease of one of several partners, his personal representatives become, both at law and in equity, tenants in common with the surviving partners. Collyer, Partn. § 346; 3 Kent, Comm. 37; Story, Partn. § 346; 35 N. H. 403. Still, as the surviving partner stands chargeable with the whole of the partnership debts, he takes the partnership property by survivorship, for all purposes of holding and administering the estate, until the effects are reduced to money and the debts paid. 3 Kent, Comm. 37; Story, Partn. § 346; Collyer, Partn. § 129; 5 Metc. Mass. 576, 585; 10 Gill & J. Md. 404; 30 Me. 386; 6 Cow. N. Y. 441; 3 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 527; 13 Miss. 44; 18 Conn. 294. See 1 Exch. 164; Year B. 38 Edw. III. f. 7, t. Accompt. The debts of the partnership must be collected in the name of the surviving partner. 6 Cow. N. Y. 441; Story, Partn. § 346; 3 Kent, Comm. 37; 4 Metc. Mass. 540. In Louisiana the surviving partner does not possess the right until he is authorized by the court of probate to sue alone for or receive partnership debts. 6 La. 194; 16 id. 30.

22. The partnership property consists of the original stock and the additions made to it in the course of trade. All real estate purchased for the partnership, paid for out of the funds thereof, and devoted to partnership uses and trusts, whether the legal title is in one or all of the partners, is treated in equity in the same manner as other partnership property until the partnership account is settled and the partnership debts are paid. Bisset, Partn. 47–56, 60; Story, Partn. § 98; 5 Ves. Ch. 189; 3 Swanst. Ch. 489; Collyer, Partn. § 135; 10 Cush. Mass. 458; 4 Metc. Mass. 527; 5 id. 562; 3 Kent, Comm. 37; 27 N. H. 37. Leases of real estate taken by one partner for partnership purposes, mines, and trade-marks are held to be partnership property. 17 Ves. Ch. 298; Bisset, Partn. 60, 61; 1 Taunt. 250; 10 Jur. 106; 5 Ves. Ch. 308; Story, Partn. § 98.

A peculiar species of interest, called the good will of the trade or business, is often treated as in some sort a part of the partnership property. But Chancellor Kent says "the good will of a trade is not partnership stock." 3 Kent, Comm. 64. Still, the goodwill of a business is often recognized as a valuable interest. 3 Mer. Ch. 452, 455; 1 Hoff. Ch. N. Y. 68; 5 Ves. Ch. 539. It is considered to enhance the value of the effects on which it is attendant, and will, therefore, be included in a decree for the sale of those effects. Collyer, Partn. §§ 161, 322; Story, Partn. §§ 99, 100; Bisset, Partn. 62. The good will of a professional partnership belongs, in the absence of express stipulations, exclusively to the survivors. Bisset, Partn. 64; 3 Madd. Ch. 64; Collyer, Partn. § 163.

23. Distribution of interest. As between the partners, they may by agreement stipulate for equal or unequal shares in the profit and loss of the partnership, Story, Partn. § 23; but in the absence of any express agreement or stipulation between them, and of all controlling evidence and circumstances, the presumption has been held to be that they are interested in equal shares. Story, Partn. § 24; Bisset, Partn. 56, 57; Collyer, Partn. § 167; 1 Mood. & R. 527; 6 Wend. N. Y. 263; 9 Ala. N. S. 372; 13 id. 752; 2 Murph. No. C. 70; 5 Dan. Ky. 211; 8 id. 214; 1 Ired. Eq. No. C. 332; 1 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 506; 1 Lindley, Partn. 573; 20 Beav. Rolls, 98; 7 De Gex, M. & G. 239; 17 Ves. Ch. 49; 7 Hare, 159; 1 Mood. & R. 527. And the circumstance that each partner has brought an unequal amount of capital into the common stock, or that one or more have brought in the whole capital and the others have only brought industry, skill, and experience, would not seem to furnish any substantial ground of difference as to the distribution. Story, Partn. § 24; 3 Kent, Comm. 28, 29; 21 Me. 117.

24. It has sometimes been asserted, however, that it is a matter of fact, to be settled by a jury or by a court, according to all the circumstances, what would be a reasonable apportionment, uncontrolled by any natural presumption of equality in the distribution. Story, Partn. § 24; 2 Campb. 45; 7 Bligh, 432; 5 Mills & S. 16. The opinion in England seems divided; but in America the authorities seem decidedly to favor the doctrine of a presumed equality of interest. See American cases cited above; Story, Partn. §§ 24–26.

Whether a partnership includes the capital stock, or is limited to the profit and loss, must be determined from the agreement and intention of the parties. 21 Me. 120; Collyer, Partn. §§ 169–171. See 5 Taunt. 74; 4 Barnew. & C. 867; Story, Partn. § 26.

A bonâ fide sale, for a valuable consideration, by one partner to another, of all the partnership effects, is valid, and the property so conveyed becomes the separate estate of the purchaser although the firm and both partners are at the time insolvent. 9 Cush. Mass. 553; Collyer, Partn. §§ 174, 894, 903; 21 Conn. 130, 137; 21 N. H. 462, 469.

25. Mutual rights and personal obligations of partners. Good faith, reasonable diligence and skill, and the exercise of a sound judgment and discretion, lie at the very foundation of the relation of partnership. The same rules and tests are to be applied to the conduct of partners as are ordinarily applied to that of trustees. Indeed, the functions, rights, and duties of partners in a great measure comprehend those both of trustees and agents. Collyer, Partn. §§ 178, 182; Story, Partn. § 169; 3 Stor. C. C. 93, 101; 3 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 36; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 470; 10 Hare, Ch. 522, 536; 14 Beav. Rolls, 250; 1 Macn. & G. 294; 3 Smale & G. 419; 1 Lindley, Partn. 492, 493. If the partnership suffers loss from the gross negligence, unskilfulness, fraud, or other wanton misconduct of a partner in the partnership business, or from a known deviation from the partnership articles, he is ordinarily responsible over to the other partners for all losses and damages sustained thereby. 1 Sim. Ch. 89; Pothier, Partn. n. 133; 3 Kent, Comm. 52, note; Story, Partn. § 173 and note. A partner withdrawing the funds of the concern, thereby diminishing the stock, and applying it to his own use, shall account to the others for the injury. 1 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 507; 3 Stor. C. C. 101. But if one partner, acting fairly and for the best according to his judgment, causes a loss, he is not answerable to the others. 3 Wash. C. C. 224. Not only gross frauds, but intrigues for private benefit, are clearly offences against the partnership at large, and, as such, are relievable in a court of equity. Collyer, Partn. § 179; 15 Ves. Ch. 227; 3 Kent, Comm. 51, 52; 1 Sim. Ch. 52, 89; 17 Ves. Ch. 298.

26. As it is the duty of the partners to devote themselves to the interests of the concern, to exercise due diligence and skill for the promotion of the common benefit of the partnership, it follows that they must do it without any reward or compensation, although the services performed by the partners are very unequal in amount and value, unless there is an express stipulation for remuneration. 7 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 483; 1 Anstr. 94; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 157, 165; 8 Dan. Ky. 219; 4 Gill, Md. 338; 2 Dev. & B. Eq. No. C. 123; 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 431; Story, Partn. § 182; Collyer, Partn. § 183. So no partner has a right to engage in any business or speculation which must necessarily deprive the partnership of a portion of his skill, industry, or capital, 3 Kent, Comm. 51, 52; Collyer, Partn. § 184; Story, Partn. § 177; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 305; 1 Sim. & S. Ch. 133, nor to place himself in a position which gives him a bias against the discharge of his duty, Collyer, Partn. § 186; 1 Madd. & G. Ch. 367; Story, Partn. § 175; 1 Sim. & S. Ch. 124; 9 Sim. Ch. 607; 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 41, 48; 3 Kent, Comm. 61, nor to make use of the partnership stock for his own private benefit, Mosely, 3; Collyer, Partn. § 196; 6 Madd. Ch. 367; 4 Beav. Rolls, 534; 16 id. 485; 17 Ves. Ch. 298; 1 Macn. & G. 294; 1 Sim. Ch. 52, nor to introduce a stranger into the concern. Collyer, Partn. §§ 8, 192; 7 Pick. Mass. 238; 8 Watts & S. Penn. 63; 16 Ohio, 166. Each partner should keep precise accounts, and have them always ready for inspection. Collyer, Partn. § 189; 2 Jac. & W. Ch. 558; Story, Partn. § 181; 16 Ves. Ch. 51; 1 Lindley, Partn. 665, 666; 3 Beav. Rolls, 388, note; 1 DeGex & S. 692; 12 Sim. Ch. 460; 2 Phill. 222; 3 Younge & C. 655; 20 Beav. Rolls, 219.

27. In all ordinary matters relating to the partnership, the powers of the partners are coextensive, and neither has a right to exclude another from an equal share in the management of the concern or from the possession of the partnership effects. Collyer, Partn. § 190; 2 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 310; 16 Ves. Ch. 61; 2 Jac. & W. Ch. 558; 1 Lindley, Partn. 464. A partner ought not to transcend the ordinary privileges of a partner by incurring extravagant and unnecessary expense in the management of the concern, though for partnership purposes. Collyer, Partn. § 191.

The weight of authority, it is said by Mr. Chancellor Kent, is in favor of the power of a majority of the firm, acting in good faith, to bind the minority in the ordinary transactions of the partnership and when all have been consulted. 3 Kent, Comm. 45 and note. See, also, Story, Partn. § 123 and notes; 3 Chitty, Comm. Law, 234; 6 Ves. Ch. 777; 5 Brown, Parl. Cas. 476, 489; Turn. & R. Ch. 516, 525; 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 400, 405, 406; 4 id. 473; 1 Vern. Ch. 465.

It is the duty of those upon whom, by appointment or otherwise, it devolves, after the dissolution of a firm, to wind up the affairs of the partnership, to act for the best advantage of the concern, to make no inconsistent use of the property, and to seek no private advantage in the composition of debts or in any other transaction in the performance of this business. 1 Taunt. 104; 1 Swanst. Ch. 507; 2 id. 627. Nor, in this case, can any partner claim any commission for getting in the debts, or, in any other particular, reward or compensation for his trouble. 1 Knapp, Priv. Counc. 312; 3 Kent. Comm, 64, note; Story, Partn. § 331 and note; 17 Pick. Mass. 519; 4 Gratt. Va. 138; Collyer, Partn. § 199 and note. But in 16 Vt. 613, a partner who performed services in settling up the affairs of a firm after dissolution was allowed compensation for them. See, also, 15 Mass. 120.

PARTNERSHIP. In Contracts. A voluntary contract between two or more persons for joining together their money, goods, labor, and skill, or any or all of them, in some lawful commerce or business, under an understanding, express, or implied from the nature of the enterprise, that there shall be a communion of profit and loss between them, will constitute a partnership. Collyer, Partn. § 2; 10 Me. 489; 3 Harr. N. J. 485; 5 Ark. 278.

2. The law of partnership, as administered in England and in the United States, rests on a foundation composed of three materials,—the common law, the law of merchants, and the Roman law. Collyer, Partn. § 1.

An agreement that something shall be attempted with a view to gain, and that the gain shall be shared by the parties to the agreement, is the grand characteristic of every partnership, and is the leading feature in every definition of the term. See 1 Lindley, Partn. 1, 6, where many definitions are collected.

But every association of persons engaged in trade with a view to share the profits arising therefrom is not necessarily a partnership: it may be a corporation. There are, however, important differences between a corporation and an ordinary partnership. A corporation is a fictitious person, created by special authority, and endowed by that authority with a capacity to acquire rights and to incur obligations as a single individual. It consists of a number of persons; but they transact business only collectively, as one fictitious whole, and that whole is treated as different from the persons composing it; whereas the rights and liabilities of a partnership are the rights and liabilities of the partners, and are enforceable by and against them individually. 6 Ves. Ch. 773; 3 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 180.

3. In order, then, to constitute a partnership, properly so called, it is requisite—first, that there shall be two or more persons who have agreed that some business shall be carried on for their common profit; and, secondly, that the profits shall be shared amongst them, not as members of a body corporate, but merely as individuals who have entered into an agreement to that effect. Although the usual characteristics of an ordinary partnership are a community of interest in profits and losses, a community of interest in the capital to be employed, and a community of power in the management of the business engaged in, still, perhaps, nothing can be said to be absolutely essential to the existence of a partnership except a community of interest in profits.

It is not essential to the existence of a partnership that there should be any joint capital or stock. 2 Bingh. 170. Sometimes a partnership exists between parties merely as the managers and disposers of the goods of others. Collyer, Partn. § 17; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 663; 15 Johns. N. Y. 409, 422. So, it seems, two persons may be owners in common of property, and also partners in the working and management of it for their common benefit. Cockburn, C. J., 2 C. B. N. S. 357, 363; 8 Carr. & P. 345; 3 Kay & J. Ch. 271; 16 Mees. & W. Exch. 503; 2 Stark. 107; 3 Ross, Lead. Cas. 529.

A partnership may exist in a single transaction as well as in a series. Dav. Dist. Ct. 323; 3 Kent, Comm. 30; Story, Partn. § 81; 2 Ga. 18; 3 C. B. 641, 651; 9 id. 458.

4. Partnerships are sometimes divided into partnerships between the parties, which only are properly so called, and partnerships as to third persons, which are not, in fact, partnerships at all. What is called a partnership as to third persons (quasi-partnership) is nothing more than the relation existing between a number of persons, who, in consequence of certain acts done by them, are held liable for each other's conduct, as if they had actually entered into a contract of partnership amongst themselves.

There can be no doubt whatever that persons engaged in any trade, business, or adventure, upon the terms of sharing the profits and losses arising therefrom, are partners in that trade, business, or adventure. This is a true partnership, both between the parties and quoad third persons. 2 Bingh. N. C. 108; 3 Jur. N. S. 31, in the Rolls; Bisset, Partn. Eng. ed. 7.

An agreement to share profits, nothing being said about the losses, amounts primâ facie to an agreement to share losses also: so that an agreement to share profits is primâ facie an agreement for a partnership; and, accordingly, it is held that, unless an agreement to the contrary is shown, persons engaged in any business or adventure, and sharing the profits derived from it, are partners as regards that business or adventure. Still, it cannot be said that persons who share profits are necessarily and inevitably partners in the proper sense of the word. 1 Campb. 330; 9 C. B. 440. But see 38 N. H. 287.

The doctrine that where there is a community of profit there is a partnership is, however, so strong that, even if community of loss be expressly stipulated against, partnership may nevertheless subsist. 1 H. Blackst. 49; 3 Mees. & W. Exch. 357; 6 id. 119; 2 Bligh, 270; 3 C. B. 32, 39; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 260, 261.

Whether persons are partners or not inter se is a question of intention, to be decided by a consideration of the whole agreement into which they have entered, and ought not to be made to turn upon a consideration of only a part of its provisions. 1 Huds. & B. Ch. Ir. 83; 15 Mees. & W. Exch. 292; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 257; 2 Barnew. & C. 401; 1 Stor. C. C. 371; 3 Kent, Comm. 27; 3 C. B. 250; 2 Bligh, 270.

5. A quasi-partnership, or, as it is usually called, a partnership as to third persons, arises by operation of law acting upon the conduct of the parties, under which persons who are not partners incur liabilities as if they were, without any intention to do so. 1 Stor. C. C. 371; Collyer, Partn. §§ 74, 83; Bisset, Partn. Eng. ed. 9. This may result from sharing profits, or from persons holding themselves out as partners. The doctrines by which a quasi-partnership results from merely sharing profits seem to find their root in decisions of a comparatively modern date. They are certainly not very clearly defined, and sometimes lead to great apparent injustice. 1 Lindl. Partn. 34 et seq.; 2 W. Blackst. 998; 2 H. Blackst. 235; 18 C. B. 617; 3 N. H. 287, 307. See PARTNERS.

It has been held that a quasi-partnership subsists between merchants who divide the commissions received by each other on the sale of goods recommended or "influenced" by the one to the other. 4 Barnew. & Ald. 663. So between persons who agree to share the profits of a single isolated adventure, 9 C. B. 431; 1 Rose, Bank. 297; 4 East, 144; and between persons one of whom is in the position of a servant to the others, but is paid a share of the profits instead of a salary, 1 Deac. Bank. 341; 1 Rose, Bank. 92; and between persons one of whom is paid an annuity out of the profits made by the others, 17 Ves. Ch. 412; 8 Bingh. 469, or an annuity in lieu of any share in those profits. 2 W. Blackst. 999. So between the vendor and purchaser of a business, if the former guarantees a clear profit of so much a year, and is to have all profits beyond the amount guaranteed. 3 C. B. 641. The character in which a portion of the profits is received does not affect the result. See 1 Maule & S. 412; 10 Ves. Ch. 119; 21 Beav. Rolls, 164; 5 Ad. & E. 28; 11 C. B. 406. Persons who share profits are quasi-partners although their community of interest may be confined to the profits. 2 Barnew. & C. 401; 5 Jur. 650.

6. The other mode in which persons not partners become liable as if they were is by so conducting themselves as to lead other people to suppose that they are willing to be regarded by them as if they were partners in point of fact. This is nothing more than an application of the general principle of estoppel by conduct acted on. 6 Ad. & E. 469; 2 Exch. 654; 19 Ves. Ch. 461; 2 H. Blackst. 235; 2 Chitty, Bail, 120. A person is not relieved from liability though he was induced by the fraud of others to hold himself out as a partner with them. See 5 Bingh. 521; 1 Rose, Bank. 69. The holding out must have been before the contract with the third person was entered into, and must have been the inducement to it. 7 Barnew. & C. 409; 10 id. 140; 1 Fost. & F. 344; 6 Bingh. 776; 3 C. B. 32; 2 Campb. 617.

A person does not become liable as partner because he represents that he is willing or intends to become one. 9 Barnew. & C. 632; 15 Mees. & W. Exch. 517. The question whether one has so held himself out as to become liable as partner is one of fact, to be determined by a jury. 6 Mann. & G. 928; 6 Q. B. 477.

A sub-partnership is as it were a partnership within a partnership. If several persons are partners, and one of them agrees to share the profits derived by him with a stranger, this will constitute what is called a sub-partnership: that is to say, it makes the parties to it partners inter se; but it in no way affects the other members of the principal firm, nor is there any authority for saying that because the stranger shares the profits of that one partner he can be made liable to persons dealing with the firm as if he were a partner therein. 1 Lindl. Partn. 52, 53; Collyer, Partn. § 194. See PARTNERS.

7. The proposition being admitted that a participation in profits will render the participator liable as a partner to third persons, the most difficult question, and one that requires further consideration, remains, viz.: what kind or degree of participation will produce that effect? Bisset, Partn. 10.

It seems to be no longer true, as a general proposition, that receiving a certain proportion of the profits, whether gross or net, Collyer, Partn. § 35 and note, arising from a union in business of the capital of one man and the labor, services, or skill of another, necessarily creates a partnership. 5 Gray, Mass. 59, 60; 6 Metc. Mass. 92; 10 id. 303; 12 Conn. 69; 13 N. H. 185; Collyer, Partn. § 44, note; 15 Me. 294; 30 id. 386; 3 C. B. N. S. 562, 563. See 18 Johns. N. Y. 34; 18 Wend. N. Y. 175; 6 Conn. 347; Collyer, Partn. § 38. Although a presumption of partnership would seem to arise in such a case, Collyer, Partn. § 85, still, the particular circumstances of the case may be such as to repel this presumption. It may appear that the share of the profits taken was merely a compensation to one party for labor and service, or for furnishing the raw materials, or a mill-privilege, or a factory, or the like, from which the other is to earn profits. Story, Partn. § 36; 5 Gray, Mass. 60; Collyer, Partn. § 85; 8 Cush. Mass. 556, 562; 3 Kent, Comm. 33; 6 Halst. N. J. 181.

Subtle distinctions have been taken between a payment out of profits and a payment varying with them, and between an agreement to share profits as such and an agreement to share profits not as profits but as something else. It has been held that in order to render a man liable because he participates in the profits he must have a specific interest in the profits themselves, as profits. 17 Ves. Ch. 404, 419; 1 Rose, Bank. 89; 18 Ves. Ch. 300; Bisset, Partn. 13; Collyer, Partn. §§ 40, 41; 4 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 148; 12 Conn. 69; 6 Metc. Mass. 82; 5 Den. N. Y. 180; 3 Kent, Comm. 34. The distinction is between payments out of profits as such and payments not out of them as such. This distinction must be considered as settled in point of law. See 1 Lindl. Partn. 39; 3 C. B. 32.

In other cases, it is held that in order to render a man liable as partner he must have a specific interest in the profits as a principal trader. Collyer, Partn. § 25; 12 Conn. 77, 78; 1 Den. N. Y. 337; 15 Conn. 73; 10 Metc. Mass. 303. But in reference to these positions the questions arise, When may a party be said to have a specific interest in the profits, as profits? when, as a principal trader?—questions in themselves very nice, and difficult to determine. See 6 Metc. Mass. 82; 12 Conn. 77. These subtleties are attributable, on the one hand, to the establishment of the rule that persons who share profits shall be answerable for the losses, and, on the other, to a disinclination to apply that principle to cases in which it is clear that those who share the profits never intended to become partners inter se.

8. There are other cases in which considerable stress is laid on the right to an account of profits, as furnishing a rule of liability. Bisset, Partn. 14, 15; 3 Kent, Comm. 25, note; 1 Rose, Bank. 91; Casey, Partn. 11, note (1); 18 Wend. N. Y. 184, 185; 3 C. B. N. S. 544, 561; Story, Partn. § 49. But, although it is true that every partner must have a right to an account, it seems not to be equally true that every party who has a right to an account is a partner. 5 Gray, Mass. 58; Bisset, Partn. 14; 7 Jarman, Conv. Sweet ed. 11, n. (a).

There are still other cases, which rely upon a distinction between receiving a share of the gross profits or returns and a share of the net profits, in which it is held that sharing the net profits makes one liable as a partner, but sharing the gross profits or returns does not. But the decisions are neither clear nor uniform upon this distinction. Collyer, Partn. § 35, note; 1 Campb. 329; Story, Partn. § 34; 3 Kent, Comm. 25, note; 3 Mees. & W. Exch. 357, 360, 361; 3 C. B. N. S. 544, 562; 9 C. B. 432; 2 H. Blackst. 590; 4 Maule & S. 240.

It has frequently been held that a partnership does not result from an agreement to share gross returns. If several persons make advances for a common object, and agree to share the gross returns in proportion to their advances, this does not create such a community of interest in profits or losses as to make such persons partners. 9 Bingh. 297; Sel. Cas. in Ch. 9; 2 C. B. N. S. 357; 4 Maule & S. 240.

9. The truth is, the doctrines upon which men are held liable as partners often tend so strongly to work injustice that many refinements have been ingrafted upon them, and the decisions have frequently been made to turn upon their own peculiar circumstances: so that no clear and intelligible principle running through and governing all the cases can easily be extracted from them. Without a careful examination of the disturbing causes, it would certainly be difficult to see why receiving a certain share of the profits for labor and services, or for furnishing raw materials, etc., should not be, while receiving a certain share of the profits for a loan of money should be, held to render a man liable as a partner.

A loan of money to be repaid with interest, however exorbitant, and however much it may drain the resources of the borrower, does not constitute a quasi-partnership between him and the lender; but it is otherwise if profits are pointed at as a form for payment. 2 W. Blackst. 999; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 954; 1 Jac. Ch. 144; Bisset, Partn. 24, 25; 1 Lindl. Partn. 40; 6 Pick. Mass. 372.

The principal distinction between a partnership and a mere agency is that a partner has a community of interest with the other partners in the business and responsibilities of the partnership,—sometimes both in the stock and profits, and sometimes only in the profits,—whereas an agent, as such, has no interest in either. Story, Partn. § 1; Bisset, Partn. 35; 16 Ves. Ch. 49; 17 id. 404; 4 Barnew. & C. 67; 1 Deac. Bank. 341. "The authority of a partner is much more extensive than that of a mere agent." 10 N. H. 16.

10. The formation of a contract of partnership does not require any particular formality. It is, in general, sufficient that it is formed by the voluntary consent of the parties, whether that be express or implied, whether it be by written articles, tacit approbation, or by parol contract, or even by mere acts. Story, Partn. § 86; 3 Kent, Comm. 27; Dav. Dist. Ct. 320; 4 Conn. 568. There are but few cases in which a writing is necessary. Under the Statute of Frauds, where there is an agreement that a partnership shall commence at some time more than a year from the making of the agreement, a writing is necessary. 5 Barnew. & C. 108. With respect to that part of the Statute of Frauds relating to lands, it has been held that a partnership may be constituted without writing, 20 Beav. Rolls, 449, and that if a partnership is proved to exist it may be shown that its property consists of land, although there is no signed agreement between the parties. 5 Ves. Ch. 309; 10 Cush. Mass. 458. So it has been held that an agreement to form a partnership for the purpose of buying and selling land may be proved by parol. 5 Hare, Ch. 369; 2 Phill. 266; 2 Hall & T. 224. But this latter proposition is not generally conceded. The contrary doctrine has the weight of learned opinions. See Dav. Dist. Ct. 320; Story, Partn. § 83; 3 Sumn. C. C. 458–471; 2 DeGex & J. 52.

11. Whether a partnership exists or not in a particular case is not a mere question of fact, but one mixed of law and fact. It is, nevertheless, generally to be decided by a jury. See 3 Harr. N. J. 358; 4 id. 190; 6 Conn. 347; 1 Nott & M'C. So. C. 20; 1 Caines, N. Y. 184; 2 Fla. 541; 9 C. B. 457; 3 C. B. N. S. 562, 563; 9 Bingh. 117.

The existence of a partnership may be proved by showing—first, a distinct agreement for a partnership: or, second, an agreement to share profit and loss; either of these will be conclusive: or, third, an agreement to share profits,—which will be strong evidence of a partnership: or, fourth, circumstances sufficient to establish a quasi-partnership, which, being proved, is held to be primâ facie evidence of a real partnership.

Where there is no written agreement, the evidence generally relied upon to prove a partnership is the conduct of the parties, the mode in which they have dealt with each other, and the mode in which each has, with the knowledge of the others, dealt with other persons. This can be shown by the books of account, by the testimony of clerks, agents, and other persons, by letters and admissions, and, in short, by any of the modes in which facts can be established. As to the presumption arising from the joint retainer of solicitors, see 20 Beav. Rolls, 98; 7 DeGex, M. & G. 239; 7 Hare, Ch. 159, 164. For cases in which partnership has been inferred from various circumstances, see 4 Russ. Ch. 247; 2 Bligh, N. S. 215; 3 Brown, Parl. Cas. 548; 5 id. 482; 1 Stark. 81; 2 Campb. 45.

12. It is said by Mr. Collyer that "perhaps it may be laid down generally that a partnership may exist in any business or transaction which is not a mere personal office, and for the performance of which payment may be enforced." Collyer, Partn. § 56.

There may be a partnership to trade in land. 21 Me. 421, 422; Dav. Dist. Ct. 320; 7 Penn. St. 165; 10 Cush. Mass. 458; 4 Conn. 568; Story, Partn. §§ 82, 83. A ship, as well as any other chattel, may be held in strict partnership. 3 Kent, Comm. 154; Collyer, Partn. § 1185; 12 Mass. 54; 6 Me. 77; 15 id. 427. But ships are generally owned by parties as tenants in common; and they are not in consequence of such ownership to be considered as partners. Collyer, Partn. § 1185; 6 Me. 77; 6 Pick. Mass. 120; 24 id. 19; Abbott, Shipp. 97; 14 Conn. 404; 14 Penn. St. 34, 38; T. Raym. 15; 8 Gill, Md. 92. The same is true of any other species of property in which the parties have only a community of interest. Pothier, Partn. n. 2; Story, Partn. § 3; 1 Lindley, Partn. 30 et seq.; 8 Exch. 825; 21 Beav. Rolls, 536; 24 id. 283, 2 C. B. N. S. 357.

13. Partnerships, in regard to their extent, are divided by writers on partnership law into universal, general, and particular, special or limited. There were two kinds of universal partnerships under the Roman law: one, by which the parties agreed to put in common all their property, both present and future; the other, by which they put in common all they might acquire, during its continuance, from every kind of commerce. The former they were not presumed to have entered into except by express contract; the latter they were considered to enter into when they contracted together a partnership without any further explanation. Pothier, Partn. nn. 29, 43. Such contracts are said to be within the scope of the common law; but they are of very rare existence. Story, Partn. § 72; 5 Mas. C. C. 183. General partnerships are properly such where parties carry on all their trade and business, whatever it may be, for their joint benefit or profit, whether the capital stock be limited or not, or the contributions of the partners be equal or unequal. Cowp. 814, 816. But where the parties are engaged in one branch of trade or business only, they would be usually spoken of as engaged in a general partnership. Story, Partn. § 74.

14. Special partnerships, in the sense of the common law, are those which are formed for a special or particular branch of business, as contradistinguished from the general business or employment of the parties, or of one of them. Cowp. 814, 816; Story, Partn. § 75. These seem to embrace what are called by Pothier, Partn. c. 2, s. 2, particular partnerships, under which head he includes partnerships in particular things or in one thing alone, partnerships for the exercise of a profession, and partnerships for commerce or trade, Pothier, Partn. nn. 54, 55, 56; these latter he again divides into partnerships en nom collectif, into which two or more traders enter to carry on in common a certain commerce in the name of all the partners; partnerships en commandite, into which a trader enters with a private person (a person not in trade) for a trade to be carried on in the name of the trader only, and to which the other contracting party contributes only a certain sum of money, which he brings into the capital of the partnership, under an agreement that he is to have a certain share of the profits, if there are any, and to bear, in the contrary event, the same share of the losses, in which, nevertheless, he will only be bound to the extent of the capital he has brought into the partnership, Pothier, Partn. n. 60; the anonymous or unknown partnership, which is also called compte en participation; this is that by which two or more persons agree to take a share in a certain business, which shall be carried on by one or the other of them in his own name alone. Pothier, Partn. n. 61.

15. The above classification is of very little practical importance, except for the purpose of distinguishing cases in which persons are partners in some trade or business generally, from those in which they are partners in some particular transaction or adventure only. If persons who are not partners at all agree to share the profits and losses, or the profits, of one particular transaction or adventure, they become partners as to that transaction or adventure, but not as to any thing else. See 1 Esp. 29; 9 C. B. 431; 2 Barnew. & C. 401; 20 Beav. Rolls, 98; 7 DeGex, M. & G. Exch. 239; 7 Hare, 164; 2 Younge & C. Exch. 481.

There is another class of partnerships, allowed by charter in England, and by statute in most of the American states, generally called "limited partnerships," in which it is provided that there shall be one or more partners, called general partners, with unrestricted liability, and one or more, called special partners, who shall be liable only to the extent of the capital furnished by them. Collyer, Partn. b. 1, c. 1, s. 3, § 99 et seq.; 3 Kent, Comm. 34. These have the general characteristics of partnerships en commandite.

16. There is still another class of partnerships, called "joint-stock companies." These generally embrace a large number of persons, but, except under express statute provisions, the members are liable to the same extent as in ordinary partnerships. Collyer, Partn. § 1078; Story, Partn. § 164; 4 Metc. Mass. 535; 2 Carr. & P. 408, n.; 1 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 157.

Partnerships, in regard to their duration, may be distinguished by the terms of partnerships at will, or unlimited, and partnerships for a term, or limited.

A partnership at will is presumed to continue so long as the parties are in life and of capacity to continue it. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 42; Story, Partn. § 271; 9 Humphr. Tenn. 750. A partnership for a term is presumed to continue during the term, provided the parties are in life and of legal capacity to continue it. See 7 Mo. 29; Collyer, Partn. § 105. But in no case will the law presume a partnership to exist beyond the life of the parties. 1 Swanst. Ch. 521; 1 Wils. Ch. 181; Story, Partn. § 84.

17. Dissolution of. A partnership may be dissolved—first, by the act of the parties; as, by their mutual consent, Story, Partn. § 268; 3 Kent, Comm. 54; Pothier, Partn. n. 149; and where no specified period is limited for the continuance of the partnership, either party may dissolve it at any time. 4 Russ. Ch. 260; 1 Swanst. Ch. 508; 3 Kent, Comm. 53, 54; Gow. Partn. 3d ed. 109; Story, Partn. §§ 84, 272, 273. See 5 Ark. 280. Whether a partnership for a certain time can be dissolved by one partner at his mere will and pleasure before the term has expired, seems not to be absolutely and definitively settled. Story, Partn. § 275. In favor of the right of one partner in such cases, see 3 Kent, Comm. 55; 17 Johns. N. Y. 525; 19 id. 538; 1 Hoffm. Ch. N. Y. 534; 3 Bland, Ch. Md. 674. Against it, see Story, Partn. §§ 275, 276; 5 Ark. 281; 4 Wash. C. C. 234; Pothier, Partn. 152. See, also, 15 Me. 180; Gow, Partn. 3d ed. 218, 219, 225, 226; 1 Swanst. Ch. 495; 16

Ves. Ch. 56; Bisset, Partn. 84. As against third persons, a partner may certainly withdraw from a partnership at his pleasure. 3 C. B. N. S. 561.

Second, by the act of God: as, by the death of one of the partners; and this operates from the time of the death, 3 Mer. Ch. 610; 6 Cow. N. Y. 441; Pothier, Partn. n. 144; 6 Conn. 184; 2 How. 560; 7 Ala. N. S. 19; Collyer, Partn. § 113; 3 Kent, Comm. 55, 56; Story, Partn. §§ 317, 319; 7 Pet. 594; 5 Metc. Mass. 575; 17 Pick. Mass. 519; 5 Gill, Md. 1; unless there be an express stipulation to the contrary. 3 Madd. Ch. 251; 2 How. 560.

Third, by the act of the law: as, by the bankruptcy of one of the partners. 4 Burr. 2174; Cowp. 448; 6 Ves. Ch. 126; 5 Maule & S. 340.

Fourth, by a valid assignment of all the partnership effects for the benefit of creditors, either under insolvent acts, Collyer, Partn. § 112, or otherwise, 41 Me. 373, and by a sale of the partnership effects under a separate execution against one partner. Collyer, Partn. § 112; Cowp. 445; 2 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 300; 3 Kent, Comm. 59. But the mere insolvency of one or all of the members of a partnership does not of itself operate a dissolution. 24 Pick. Mass. 89. See 1 Bland, Ch. Md. 408; 2 Ashm. Penn. 305; Pothier, Partn. n. 148.

18. It may be dissolved—fifth, by the civil death of one of the partners. Collyer, Partn. § 114; Pothier, Partn. n. 147. But the absconding of a party from the state does not of itself operate a dissolution. 24 Pick. Mass. 89. See Story, Partn. § 298.

Sixth, by the breaking out of a war between two states in which the partners are domiciled and carrying on trade. 16 Johns. N. Y. 438; 3 Kent, Comm. 62; Story, Partn. §§ 315, 316; 3 Bland, Ch. Md. 674.

Seventh, by the marriage of a feme sole partner. 4 Russ. Ch. 260; 3 Kent, Comm. 55; Story, Partn. § 306; Collyer, Partn. § 115.

Eighth, by the extinction of the subject-matter of the joint business or undertaking, 16 Johns. N. Y. 401, 402; Pothier, Partn. nn. 5, 140–143; Collyer, Partn. § 115, and by the completion of the business or adventure for which the partnership was formed. Pothier, Partn. n. 143; Story, Partn. § 280.

Ninth, by the termination of the period for which a partnership for a certain time was formed. Collyer, Partn. § 119; Pothier, Partn. n. 139. If the partnership be continued, by express or tacit consent, after that period, it will be presumed to continue on the old terms, 17 Serg. & R. Penn. 165; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 285, note, but as a partnership at will.

Tenth, by the assignment of the whole of one partner's interest either to his copartner or to a stranger, Collyer, Partn. § 110, note; 3 Kent, Comm. 59; Story, Partn. §§ 307, 308; 4 Barnew. & Ad. 175; 17 Johns. N. Y. 525; 1 Freem. Ch. Miss. 231; 8 Watts & S. Penn. 262; where it does not appear that the assignee acts in the concern after the assignment. 17 Johns. N. Y. 525; 8 Wend. N. Y. 442; 5 Dan. Ky. 213; 1 Whart. Penn. 381; 2 Dev. No. C. Eq. 481. But see 14 Pick. Mass. 322, where it was held that this would not ipso facto work a dissolution.

Eleventh, by the award of arbitrators appointed under a clause in the partnership articles to that effect. See Bisset, Partn. 87; 1 W. Blackst. 475; 4 Barnew. & Ad. 172.

19. A partnership for a term may be dissolved before the expiration of the term, by the decree of a court of equity founded on the wilful fraud or other gross misconduct of one of the partners, Collyer, Partn. § 296; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 285; 4 Beav. Rolls, 502; 21 id. 482; 2 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 299; so on his gross carelessness and waste in the administration of the partnership, and his exclusion of the other partners from their just share of the management, Collyer, Partn. § 227; 1 Jac. & W. Ch. 592; 2 id. 206; 5 Ark. 278; 2 Ashm. Penn. 309, 310; 3 Ves. Ch. 74; so on the existence of violent and lasting dissensions between the partners, 1 Jarman, Conv. 26; Gow, Partn. 3d ed. 227; 1 Iowa, 537; Collyer, Partn. § 297; see 4 Sim. Ch. 11; Story, Partn. § 288; 4 Beav. Rolls, 503; 14 Ohio, 315, where these are of such a character as to prevent the business from being conducted upon the stipulated terms, 3 Kent, Comm. 60, 61; Collyer, Partn. § 297, and to destroy the mutual confidence of the partners in each other. 4 Beav. Rolls, 502; 21 id. 482; 1 Lindley, Partn. 184, 185. But a partner cannot, by misconducting himself and rendering it impossible for his copartners to act in harmony with him, obtain a dissolution on the ground of the impossibility so created by himself. 21 Beav. Rolls, 493, 494; 3 Hare, Ch. 387. A partnership may be dissolved by decree when its business is in a hopeless state, its continuance impracticable, and its property liable to be wasted and lost. Collyer, Partn. § 291; 3 Kent, Comm. 60; 1 Cox, 212; 2 Ves. & B. Ch. Ir. 290; 16 Johns. N. Y. 491; Gow, Partn. 3d ed. 226, 227; 1 Lindley, Partn. 180, 181; 3 Kay & J. 78; 13 Sim. Ch. 495.

20. The confirmed lunacy of an active partner is sufficient to induce a court of equity to decree a dissolution, not only for the purpose of protecting the lunatic, but also to relieve his copartners from the difficult position in which the lunacy places them. See 1 Cox, Ch. 107; 1 Swanst. Ch. 514, note; 2 Mylne & K. 125; 6 Beav. Rolls, 324; 1 De Gex, M. & G. Exch. 171; 2 Kay & J. Ch. 441; Collyer, Partn. § 292; 3 Kent, Comm. 58; Watson, Partn. 382; 3 Younge & C. 184; Bisset, Partn. 83. The same may be said of every other inveterate infirmity, such as palsy, or the like, which has seized upon one of the partners and rendered him incompetent to act where his personal labor and skill were contracted for. Pothier, Partn. n. 152; 3 Kent, Comm. 62; Collyer, Partn. § 295.

But lunacy does not itself dissolve the firm, nor do other infirmities. 3 Kent, Comm. 58; Story, Partn. § 295; 3 Jur. 358; Bisset, Partn. 85. It is, however, contended by Mr.

Justice Story and by Parker, C. J., that a clear case of insanity ought to effect that result. Story, Partn. § 295; 10 N. H. 101. The court does not decree a dissolution on the ground of lunacy except upon clear evidence that the malady exists and is incurable. 3 Younge & C. 184; 2 Kay & J. 441. A temporary illness is not sufficient. 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 34; 1 Cox, 107; 1 Lindley, Partn. 182, 183. A dissolution by the court on the ground of insanity dates from the decree and not from a prior day. 1 Phill. 172; 2 Coll. 276; 1 Kay & J. 765; 1 Lindley, Partn. 183.

21. A partnership dissolved by the death of one of the partners is dissolved as to the whole firm, 7 Peters, 586, 594; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 285, note; and the reason given for this rule is applicable not only to dissolution by death, but to every species of dissolution. Collyer, Partn. §§ 113, 116, 117, 118; Pothier, Partn. n. 146; Story, Partn. §§ 317, 318.

The partnership quoad third persons—in other words, the liability of partners quoad third persons—cannot be dissolved without notice to them that the partnership no longer exists. Actual notice must be brought home to persons who have been in the habit of dealing with the firm; but as to all persons who have had no previous dealings with the firm, notice fairly given in the public newspapers is deemed sufficient. Collyer, Partn. §§ 532–534. This notice is necessary to terminate the agency of each partner, and, consequently, his power to bind the firm. 1 Lindley, Partn. 261, 324; 1 Younge & J. 227; 1 Stark. 164; 7 Price, Exch. 193; 1 Campb. 402; 10 East, 264.

It is not necessary to give notice of the retirement of a dormant partner from the firm, it the fact of his being a partner be unknown to all the creditors of the firm: if it be known to some, notice to those must be given, but that will be sufficient. Collyer, Partn. §§ 120, 536; 4 Esp. 89; 1 Carr. & K. 580; 1 Metc. Mass. 19; 1 Barnew. & Ad. 11; 4 id. 179; 5 B. Monr. Ky. 170; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 287 and note; 5 Cow. N. Y. 534; 1 Lindley, Partn. 326.

22. Notice of the dissolution is not necessary, in case of the death of one of the partners, to free the estate of the deceased partner from further liability, Collyer, Partn. § 120; Story, Partn. §§ 162, 336, 343; 3 Kent, Comm. 63; 3 Mer. Ch. 614; 17 Pick. Mass. 519; Bisset, Partn. 103, 104; nor is notice, in fact, necessary in any case where the dissolution takes place by operation of law. Collyer, Partn. § 538; 3 Kent, Comm. 63, 67; 15 Johns. N. Y. 57; 16 id. 494.

Effect of dissolution. The effect of dissolution, as between the partners, is to terminate all transactions between them as partners, except for the purpose of taking a general account and winding up the concern. 1 Penn. St. 274; 3 Kent, Comm. 62 et seq. As to third persons, the effect of a dissolution is to absolve the partners from all liability for future transactions, but not for past transactions of the firm. Collyer, Partn. § 121; Story, Partn. ch. 15; 3 Kent, Comm. 62 et seq.; 2 Cush. Mass. 175; Pothier, Partn. n. 155; 3 M'Cord, So. C. 378; 4 Munf. Va. 215; 5 Mas. C. C. 56; Harp. So. C. 470; 4 Johns. N. Y. 224; 6 Cow. N. Y. 701; 41 Me. 376.

23. It is said that a firm, notwithstanding its dissolution, continues to exist so far as may be necessary for the winding up of its business. 11 Ves. Ch. 5; 15 id. 227; 16 id. 57; 2 Russ. Ch. 242. The power of the partners subsists for many purposes after dissolution: among these are—first, the completion of all the unfinished engagements of the partnership; second, the conversion of all the property, means, and assets of the partnership existing at the time of the dissolution, for the benefit of those who were partners, according to their respective shares; third, the application of the partnership funds to the payment of the partnership debts. Story, Partn. § 326; Chitty, Contr. 1860 ed. 288; 3 Kent, Comm. 57; 17 Pick. Mass. 519. But although, for the purposes of winding up the concern and fulfilling engagements that could not be fulfilled during its existence, the power of the partners certainly subsists even after dissolution, yet, legally and strictly speaking, it subsists for those purposes only. Collyer, Partn. § 119; 15 Ves. Ch. 227; 5 Mann. & G. 504; 1 H. Blackst. 156; 3 Esp. 108; 4 Mees. & W. Exch. 461, 462; 10 Hare, Ch. 453; 4 DeGex, M. & G. Exch. 542.

Whether a dissolution of a partnership is per se a breach of a contract by the firm to employ a person in their service is questionable. 3 Hurlst. & N. Exch. 931. See FIRM; PARTNERS; PROFIT.

PARTURITION. The act of giving birth to a child. See BIRTH.

PARTUS (Lat.). The child just before it is born, or immediately after its birth.

Offspring. See MAXIMS, Partus sequitur, etc.

PARTY. See PARTIES.

PARTY-JURY. A jury de medietate linguæ, which title see.

PARTY-WALL. A wall erected on the line between two adjoining estates, belonging to different persons, for the use of both estates. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1615.

2. Party-walls are generally regulated by acts of the local legislatures. The principles of these acts generally are that the wall shall be built equally on the lands of the adjoining owners, at their joint expense, but when only one owner wishes to use such wall it is built at his expense, and when the other wishes to make use of it he pays one-half of its value. Each owner has a right to place his joists in it and use it for the support of his roof. See 4 Sandf. N. Y. 480; 24 Mo. 69; 12 La. Ann. 785. When the party-wall has been built, and the adjoining owner is desirous of having a deeper foundation, he has a right to undermine such wall, using due care and diligence to prevent any injury to his neighbour; and, having done so, he is not answerable for any consequential damages which may ensue. 17 Johns. N. Y. 92; 12 Mass. 220; 2 N. H. 534. See 1 Dall. Penn. 346; 5 Serg. & R. Penn. 1.

3. When such a wall exists between two buildings, belonging to different persons, and one of them takes it down with his buildings, he is required to erect another in its place in a reasonable time and with the least inconvenience; the other owner must contribute to the expense, if the wall required repairs, but such expense will be limited to the costs of the old wall. 3 Kent, Comm. 436; 6 Den. N. Y. 717. When the wall is taken down, it must be done with care; but it is not the duty of the person taking it down to shore up or prop the house of his neighbor to prevent it from falling. If, however, the work be done with negligence, by which injury accrues to the neighboring house, an action will lie. 1 Mood. & M. 362; 15 N. Y. 601. PARVUM CAPE. See PETIT CAPE.

PASS. A certificate given to a slave, by his master or mistress, in which it is stated that he is permitted to leave his home with their authority. The paper on which such certificate is written.

In Practice. To be given or entered: as, let the judgment pass for the plaintiff.

To become transferred: thus, the title to goods passes by the sale whenever the parties have agreed upon the sale and the price, and nothing remains to be done to complete the agreement. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 939.

To decide upon. When a jury decide upon the rights of the parties, which are in issue, they are said to pass upon them.

PASS-BOOK. In Mercantile Law. A book used by merchants with their customers, in which an entry of goods sold and delivered to a customer is made.

It is kept by the buyer, and sent to the merchant whenever he wishes to purchase any article. It ought to be a counterpart of the merchant's books, as far as regards the customer's account.

Among English bankers, the term pass-book is given to a small book made up from time to time from the banker's ledger and forwarded to the customer: this is not considered as a statement of account between the parties: yet when the customer neglects for a long time to make any objection to the correctness of the entries, he will be bound by them. 2 Atk. Ch. 252; 2 Deac. & C. Bank. 534; 2 Mees. & W. Exch. 2.

PASSAGE. A way over water. A voyage made over the sea or a great river: as, the Sea-Gull had a quick passage. The money paid for the transportation of a person over the sea: as, my passage to Europe was one hundred and fifty dollars.

PASSAGE-MONEY. The sum claimable for the conveyance of a person, with or without luggage, on the water.

The difference between freight and passage-money is this, that the former is claimable for the carriage of goods, and the latter for the carriage of the person. The same rules which govern the claim for freight affect that for passage-money. 3 Chitty, Comm. Law, 424; 1 Pet. Adm. 126; 3 Johns. N. Y. 335. See COMMON CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS.

PASSENGER. One who has taken a place in a public conveyance for the purpose of being transported from one place to another. One who is so conveyed from one place to another.

Such persons are entitled to be carried in safety to the place of destination. See COMMON CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS. Full provisions for the health and safety of passengers by sea have been made by the United States laws. See Act of Congr. May 17, 1848, 11 U. S. Stat. at Large, 127; March 2, 1847, 11 id. 149; January 31, 1848, 11 id. 210. See Gilp. Dist. Ct. 334.

PASSIVE. All the sums of which one is a debtor.

It is used in contradistinction to active. By active debts are understood those which may be employed in furnishing assets to a merchant to pay those which he owes, which are called passive debts.

PASSPORT (Fr. passer, to pass, port, harbor or gate). In Maritime Law. A paper containing a permission from the neutral state to the captain or master of a ship or vessel to proceed on the voyage proposed. It usually contains his name and residence, the name, property, description, tonnage, and destination of the ship, the nature and quantity of the cargo, the place from whence it comes, and its destination, with such other matters as the practice of the place requires.

It is also called a sea-brief, or sea-letter. But Marshall distinguishes sea-letter from passport, which latter, he says, is intended to protect the ship, while the former relates to the cargo, destination, etc. See Jacobs. Sea-Laws, 66, note.

This document is indispensably necessary in time of war for the safety of every neutral vessel. Marshall, Ins. b. 1, c. 9, s. 6, 317, 406 b.

A Mediterranean pass, or protection against the Barbary powers. Jacobs. Sea-Laws, 66, note; Act of Congr. 1796.

A document granted in time of war to protect persons or property from the general operation of hostilities. Wheaton, Int. Law, 475; 1 Kent, Comm. 161; 6 Wheat. 3.

In most countries of continental Europe, passports are given to travellers. These are intended to protect them on their journey from all molestation while they are obedient to the laws. Passports are also granted by the secretary of state to persons travelling abroad, certifying that they are citizens of the United States. 9 Pet. 692. See 1 Kent, Comm. 162, 182; Merlin, Répert. Sweden has recently set the example of abolishing the vexatious system of passports.

PASTURES. Lands upon which beasts feed themselves. By a grant of pastures the land itself passes. 1 Thomas, Coke, Litt. 202.

PATENT. A grant of some privilege, property, or authority, made by the government or sovereign of a country to one or more individuals. Phillips, Pat. 1.

As the term was originally used in England, it signified certain written instruments emanating from the king and sealed with the great seal. These instruments conferred grants of lands, honors, or franchises; they were called letters patent, from being delivered open, and by way of contradistinction from instruments like the French lettres de cachet, which went out sealed.

In the United States, the word patent is sometimes understood to mean the title-deed by which a government, either state or federal, conveys its lands. But in its more usual acceptation it is understood as referring to those instruments by which the United States secures to inventors for a limited time the exclusive use of their own inventions.

2. The granting of exclusive privileges by means of letters patent was a power which for a long time was greatly abused by the sovereigns of England. The sole right of dealing in certain commodities was in that manner conferred upon particular individuals, either as a matter of royal favor or as a means of replenishing the royal treasury. These exclusive privileges, which were termed monopolies, became extremely odious, and, at an early day, met with the most determined resistance. One of the provisions of Magna Charta was intended to prevent the granting of monopolies of this character; and subsequent prohibitions and restrictions were enacted by parliament even under the most energetic and absolute of their monarchs. See Hallam, Const. Hist., Harp. ed. 153, 205; 7 Lingard, Hist. Eng. Dolman's ed. 247, 380; 9 id. 182.

Still, the unregulated and despotic power of the crown proved, in many instances, superior to the law, until the reign of James I., when an act was passed, in the twenty-first year of his reign, known as the Statute of Monopolies, which entirely prohibited all grants of that nature, so far as the traffic in commodities already known was concerned. But the king was permitted to secure by letters patent, to the inventor of any new manufacture, the sole right to make and vend the same for a term not exceeding fourteen years. Since that time the power of the monarch has been so far controlled by the law that the prohibition contained in the Statute of Monopolies has been fully observed, and under that statute has grown up the present system of British patent law, from which ours has to a great extent been derived.

3. The constitution of the United States confers upon congress the power to pass laws "to promote the progress of science and the useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right of their respective writings or discoveries." U. S. Const. art. i. s. 6, cl. 8. This right can, accordingly, be conferred only upon the authors and inventors themselves; but it rests in the sound discretion of congress to determine the length of time during which it shall continue. Congress at an early day availed itself of the power.

The first act passed was that which established the patent office, on the 10th of April, 1790. There were several supplements and modifications to this law, namely, the acts passed February 7, 1793, June 7, 1794, April 17, 1800, July 3, 1832, July 13, 1832. These were all repealed, by an act passed July 4, 1836, and a new system was established, which, with some modifications of a secondary character, has ever since remained in force. The existing laws on the subject are the act of July 4, 1836, already mentioned, the acts of March 3, 1837, March 3, 1839, August 29, 1842, May 27, 1848, February 18, 1861, March 2, 1861, and March 3, 1863.

4. This new system differs from the old, in part, by being more full and complete in all its details; but the distinguishing difference consists in the provision it contains, by which all applications for patents are subjected to a thorough and rigid examination, with a view of preventing, as far as possible, the granting of any patent which will not afterwards be sustained by the courts as valid. In this respect it is believed to differ from all laws of this kind that have ever existed; for, although in other countries patents are sometimes refused, it is for other reasons than the mere fact that the title of the patentee would be invalid: that is a matter which is left entirely at the risk of the applicant.

The present law does not, indeed, furnish any guarantee of the validity of the title conferred upon the patentee. The patent is, nevertheless, primâ facie evidence of its own validity, 1 Stor. C. C. 336; 3 id. 172; 1 Mas. C. C. 153; 14 Pet. 458; 2 Blatchf. C. C. 229; 1 McAll. C. C. 171, as well for a defendant in an action as for a plaintiff. 15 How. 252. No provision is made by law for setting it aside directly, however invalid it may prove, except in the special case of interference between two patents or an application and a patent. But, throughout its whole term of existence, whenever an action is brought against any one for having infringed it he is permitted to show its original invalidity in his defence. The exclusive right of the patentee did not exist at common law; it is created by acts of congress; and no rights can be acquired unless authorized by the statute and in the manner it prescribes. 10 How. 494; 19 id. 195; 3 N. Y. 9; 8 Pet. 658. The power granted by the patent is domestic in its character, and confined within the limits of the United States: consequently it does not extend to a foreign vessel lawfully entering one of our ports, where the patented improvement was placed upon her in a foreign port and authorized by the laws of the country to which she belongs. 19 How. 183.

We will now proceed to treat of some of the details of our present law on this subject.

5. Of the subject-matter of a patent. The act of July 4, 1836, provides for the granting of a patent to the first inventor or discoverer of any new and useful art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or of any new and useful improvement thereon. The distinction between a process and a machine is discussed in 15 How. 252. There are with us, according to the phraseology of the statute, four classes of inventions which may be the subjects of patents: first, an art; second, a machine; third, a manufacture; and, fourth, a composition of matter. In Great Britain, as we have seen, letters patent granting exclusive privileges can be issued only to the inventors of a "new manufacture." But the courts, in defining the meaning of the term, have construed the word "manufacture" to be coextensive in signification with the whole of the four classes of inventions thus recognized by our law. An art or process, a machine, and a composition of matter are all regarded there as manufactures. The field of invention in Great Britain is, therefore, coincident with that provided by our law, and the legal subject-matter of patents is the same in each country. 2 Barnew. & Ald. 349; 8 Term, 99; 2 H. Blackst. 492 2 Mees. & W. Exch. 544; Webster, Pat. Cas. 237, 393, 459.

6. But, inasmuch as we have three other classes of inventions, the term "manufacture" has a more limited signification here than it receives in Great Britain. In this country it is understood to mean a new article of merchandise which has required the exercise of something more than ordinary mechanical skill and ingenuity in its contrivance: no new principle or combination of parts is necessary to render a patent of this kind valid. All that is requisite is that a substantially new commodity shall have been produced for the public use and convenience. A mere change in the form of a well-known article may sometimes justify the granting of a patent for the same, where such change adapts it to an essentially new use, and where something beyond the range of ordinary skill and ingenuity must have been called into exercise in its contrivance. See 11 How. 248.

The general rule, then, is that wherever invention has been exercised there will be found the subject-matter of a patent. 1 McAll. C. C. 48. And as the law looks to the fact, and not to the result by which it was accomplished, it is immaterial what amount of thought was involved in making the invention. 4 Mas. C. C. 6.

7. Although the word "discovery" is used in our statute as entitling the discoverer to a patent, still, every discovery is not a patentable invention. The discovery of a mere philosophical principle, or abstract theory, or elementary truth of science, cannot obtain a patent for the same, unless he applies it to some directly useful purpose. The patent can only be for such a principle, theory, or truth reduced to practice and embodied in a particular structure or combination of parts. 1 Stor. C. C. 285; 1 Mas. C. C. 187; 4 id. 1; 1 Pet. C. C. 342. Nor can there be a patent for a function or for an effect only, but for an effect produced in a given manner or by a peculiar operation. 1 Gall. C. C. 480; 1 Mas. C. C. 476; 1 Stor. C. C. 270; 2 id. 164; 1 Pet. C. C. 394; 5 McLean, C. C. 76; 15 How. 62.

An invention, to be patentable, must not only be new, but must also be useful. But by this it is not meant that it must be more useful than any thing of the kind previously known, but that it is capable of use for a beneficial purpose. The word "useful" is also to be understood in contradistinction to "pernicious," or "frivolous." A contrivance directly and mainly calculated to aid the counterfeiter, the pickpocket, or the assassin, or which would in any way be directly calculated to be injurious to the morals, the health, or the good order of society, would not be patentable. Neither would a new contrivance which was of too trivial a character to be worthy of serious consideration. 1 Mas. C. C. 186, 303; 4 Wash. C. C. 9; 1 Paine, C. C. 203; 1 Blatchf. C. C. 372, 488; 2 id. 132; 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 290; 2 McLean, C. C. 35; 5 Ill. 44; 1 Baldw. C. C. 303; 13 N. H. 311; 14 Pick. Mass. 217; 16 Vt. 226. But it has been said that a court cannot pronounce a patent worthless, merely from the specification, without evidence of any experiments. 1 N. H. 347. In the trial of an action for infringement, evidence of the comparative utility of the plaintiff's machine and the defendant's is inadmissible, except for the purpose of showing a substantial difference between the two machines. 1 Stor. C. C. 336.

8. A mere application of an old device or process to the manufacture of an article is held to constitute only a double use, and not to be patentable. There must be some new process or machinery used to produce the effect. 2 Stor. C. C. 190, 408; Gilp. Dist. Ct. 489; 3 Wash. C. C. 443; 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 290; 2 McLean, C. C. 35; 4 id. 456; 2 Curt. C. C. 340. But where the new use is not analogous to the old and would not be suggested by it,—where invention is necessary in order to conceive of the new application, and experiment is required to test its success, and the result is a new or superior result,—there a patent may be obtained.

No patent can be granted in the United States for the mere importation of an invention brought from abroad; although it is otherwise in England. The constitution, as we have seen, only authorizes congress to grant these exclusive privileges to the inventors themselves. The mere fact of having obtained a patent for the same thing in a foreign country will not prevent the obtaining of a patent here at any time within seventeen years after the date of the foreign patent. But if an invention has been introduced into public and common use in the United States, and if it has also been patented abroad more than six months prior to the date of the application here, the patent will be denied. See Act of 1839, § 6.

9. Of caveats. The twelfth section of the act of 1836 authorizes the inventor of any thing patentable—provided he be a citizen, or an alien who has resided within the United States for one year next preceding his application and has made oath of his intention to become a citizen—to file a caveat in the patent office for his own security. This caveat consists in a simple statement of his invention, in any language which will render it intelligible. It is always well to attach a drawing to the description, in order that it may be more easily and thoroughly understood; but this is not indispensable. A fee of ten dollars must be paid to the office at the same time.

The right acquired by the caveator in this manner is that of preventing the grant of any interfering patent, on any application filed within one year from the day when the caveat was lodged in the patent office, without his being notified of the same and having an opportunity of contesting the priority of invention of the applicant, by means of an "interference," which will be treated of hereafter. In this way an inventor can obtain a year to perfect his invention, without the risk of having the patent to which he is entitled granted to another in the mean time. He can also, at any time before the expiration of the year, renew the caveat for another year, by paying another fee of ten dollars, and so on from year to year, as long as he feels disposed so to do. The caveat is filed in the confidential archives of the office, and preserved in secrecy.

10. Of the application for a patent. When the invention is complete, and the inventor desires to apply for a patent, he causes a specification to be prepared, setting forth in clear and intelligible terms the exact nature of his invention, describing its different parts and the principle and mode in which they operate, and stating precisely what he claims as new, in contradistinction from those parts and combinations which were previously in use. This should be accompanied by a petition to the commissioner of patents, stating the general nature of his invention and the object of his application. Duplicate drawings should be attached to the specification, where the nature of the case admits of drawings; and, where the invention is for a composition of matter, specimens of the ingredients and of the composition of matter should be furnished. The specification, as well as the drawings, must be signed by the applicant and attested by two witnesses; and appended to the specification must be an affidavit of the applicant, stating that he verily believes himself to be the original and first inventor of that for which he asks a patent, and, also, of what country he is a citizen. The whole is then filed in the patent office. A model must also be furnished to the office, in all cases which admit of a representation by model. This, by the rules of the office, should not exceed one foot in any of its dimensions, where it can practically be brought within that limit.

11. By the old law, a citizen of a foreign country was required to pay a higher patent fee than an American citizen, or an alien who had resided a year in the United States and had made oath of his intention of becoming such citizen. But the act of March 2, 1861, has done away with this difference, except as against the citizens of those countries which discriminate against our own citizens who apply for patents there. This discrimination is believed to be limited to the inhabitants of some of the British North American provinces which still refuse patents to the people of the United States on the same terms on which they are granted to their own citizens. The patent fee required of the inhabitants of such British province is five hundred dollars, instead of thirty-five dollars, which is all that is required of any other applicant.

12. Of the examination. As has been already observed, our law provides for an examination whenever an application is completed in the prescribed manner. And if on such examination it appears that the claim of the applicant is invalid and would not be sustained by the courts, the application is rejected. In cases of doubt, however, the approved practice of the patent office is to grant the patent, and thus give the party an opportunity to sustain it in the courts if he can. Formerly, about two-thirds of all the applications for patents were rejected; but within the last few years a more liberal practice prevails, and the number of patents now issued is more than one-half of that of all the applications.

As a general rule, an invention is patentable whenever the applicant is shown to be the original and first inventor; and his own affidavit appended to the application is sufficient to raise a presumption that he is the first inventor, until the contrary is shown. But if it is ascertained by the office that the same thing had been invented by any other person in this country, or that it had been patented or described in any printed publication in this or any foreign country, prior to its invention by the applicant, a patent will be denied him. But a mere prior invention of the same thing in a foreign country, if not patented or described in some printed publication, will not affect his right to a patent here.

13. The rule that the applicant is entitled to a patent whenever he is shown to be the original and first inventor is subject to one important exception. If he has, either actually or constructively, abandoned his invention to the public, he can never afterwards recall it and resume his right of ownership. 4 Mas. C. C. 111; 4 Wash. C. C. 544; 2 Pet. 16; 6 id. 248; 7 id. 313; 1 How. 202.

By the seventh section of the act of 1836, the commissioner is directed to reject the application whenever it shall appear that the invention had been in public use or on sale, with the consent and allowance of the applicant, prior to the date of the application. But by the seventh section of the act of 1839, such sale or public use will not of itself prejudice the rights of the inventor, provided the application is made within two years from the time when such sale or public use first occurred.

If the application for a patent is rejected, the specification may be amended and a second examination requested. If again rejected, an appeal may be taken to the examiners-in-chief. If rejected by them, an appeal lies to the commissioner in person, on payment of a fee of twenty dollars; and if rejected by him, an appeal may be taken to one of the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, on payment of a fee of twenty-five dollars. If all this proves ineffectual, the applicant may still file a bill in equity to compel the allowance of his patent. See § 16 of the Act of July 4, 1836, and § 10 of the Act of March 3, 1839.

All the proceedings before the patent office connected with the application for a patent are ex parte, and are kept secret, except in cases of conflicting claims, which will next be referred to.

14. Of the date of the patent. The patent usually takes date on the day it issues; but the applicant may, at his option, cause it to be dated as of the day on which his specification and drawings were filed,—not, however, exceeding six months prior to the actual issuing of the patent. See § 8 of the Act of July 4, 1836. This is a privilege of which inventors rarely avail themselves. Or the patent may be dated as of a day not later than six months after its allowance. See § 3 of the Act of March 3, 1863.

The obtaining of foreign letters patent does not prevent the granting of a patent here. But in that case the American patent will expire at the end of fourteen years from the date of the foreign patent. See § 6 of the Act of March 3, 1839. This limit was thus fixed when the American patent was of only fourteen years' duration: its extension to seventeen years does not seem to enlarge this limitation. If the American patent purports to continue more than fourteen years from the date of the foreign patent, it will be void. 5 McLean, C. C. 76.

15. Of interferences. The eighth section of the act of 1836 provides that when an application is made which interferes with another pending application or with an unexpired patent, a trial shall be allowed for the purpose of determining who was the prior inventor, and a patent is directed to be issued accordingly. An appeal to one of the judges of the supreme court of the District of Columbia is allowed from the decision of the patent office in these cases, in the same manner as in those of rejected applications.

16. Of the specification. The specification is required, by the Act of 1836, § 6, to describe the invention in such full, clear, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art or science to which it relates to make, construct, or use it. In the trial of an action for infringement, it is a question of fact for the jury whether this requirement has been complied with. 2 Brock, Va. 298; 1 Mas. C. C. 182; 2 Stor. C. C. 432; 3 id. 122; 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 53. At the same time, the interpretation of the specification, and the ascertainment of the subject-matter of the invention from the language of the specification and from the drawings, is, as appears from the authorities just referred to, as well as from others, a matter of law exclusively for the court. 5 How. 1; 3 McLean, C. C. 250, 432. The specification will be liberally construed by the court, in order to sustain the invention, 1 Sumn. C. C. 482; 3 id. 514, 535; 1 Stor. C. C. 270; 5 McLean, C. C. 44; but it must, nevertheless, identify with reasonable clearness and accuracy the invention claimed, and describe the manner of its construction and use so that the public from the specification alone may be enabled to practise it; and if the court cannot satisfactorily ascertain the meaning of the patent from its face, it will be void for ambiguity. 2 Blatchf. C. C. 1; 2 Brock, Va. 303; 1 Sumn. C. C. 482; 1 Mas. C. C. 182, 447.

It is required to distinguish between what is new and what is old, and not mix them up together without disclosing distinctly that for which the patent is granted. 4 Wash. C. C. 68; 2 Brock, Va. 298; 1 Stor. C. C. 273; 1 Mas. C. C. 188, 475; 1 Gall. C. C. 438, 478; 2 id. 51; 1 Sumn. C. C. 482; 3 Wheat. 534; 7 id. 356. If the invention consists of an improvement, the patent should be confined thereto, and should clearly distinguish the improvement from the prior machine, so as to show that the former only is claimed. 1 Gall. C. C. 438, 478; 2 id. 51; 1 Mas. C. C. 447; 3 McLean, C. C. 250. Ambiguous terms should be avoided; nothing material to the use of the invention should be omitted; and the necessity of trials and experiments should not be thrown upon the public.

17. Of re-issues. It often happens that errors, defects, and mistakes occur in the specification of a patent, by which it is rendered wholly or partially inoperative and perhaps invalid. To provide a remedy in such cases, the thirteenth section of the act of 1836 declares that when such errors or defects are the result of inadvertency, accident, or mistake, without any fraudulent or deceptive intention, the patent may be surrendered by the patentee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, and a new patent issued in proper shape to secure the real invention intended to be patented originally. The identity between the invention described in the re-issued and that in the original patent is a question of fact for the jury. 4 How. 380. But see Burr vs. Duryea, 1 Wallace, 531.

A re-issued patent is to have the same effect and operation in law, on the trial of all actions for causes subsequently accruing, as though the patent had been originally issued in such corrected form. See Act of 1836, § 13. From this it appears that after a re-issue no action can be brought for a past infringement of the patent, unless the act would have been an infringement of the patent as it stood previous to the re-issue. But, as the bare use of a patented machine is (if unauthorized) an infringement of the rights of the patentee, a machine constructed and lawfully used prior to the re-issue may be an infringement of the patent if used afterwards. The re-issued patent will expire when the original patent would have expired. The patent fee in cases of re-issue is thirty dollars.

For the principles applicable to a surrender and re-issue, and the extent to which the action of the commissioner of patents is conclusive, see 2 McLean, C. C. 35; 2 Stor. C. C. 432; 3 id. 749; 4 How. 380, 646; 15 id. 112; 17 id. 74; 6 Pet. 218; 7 id. 202; 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 248; 2 id. 121. The re-issued patent is not a new patent; and an existing contract concerning the patent before its surrender applies equally to it after the surrender and re-issue. 11 Cush. Mass. 569.

18. Of patents for designs. The act of 1861 permits any citizen, or any alien who has resided one year in the United States and has taken his oath of intention to become a citizen, to obtain a patent for a design, which shall continue in force for three and a half, seven, or fourteen years, at the option of the applicant, upon the payment of a fee of ten, fifteen, or thirty dollars, according to the length of the patent obtained. These patents are granted wherever the applicant, by his own industry, genius, efforts, and expense, may have invented or produced any new and original design for a manufacture, whether of metal or other material or materials, any original design for a bust, statue, or bas-relief, or composition in alto or basso relievo, or any new and original impression or ornament, or to be placed on any article of manufacture, the same being formed in marble or other material, or any new and useful pattern, or print, or picture, to be either worked into or worked on, or printed, or painted, or cast, or otherwise fixed, on any article of manufacture, or any new and original shape or configuration of any article of manufacture, not known or used by others before his, her, or their invention or production thereof, and prior to the time of his, her, or their application for a patent therefor.

The general method of making the application is the same as has been hereinbefore described, and the patent issues in a similar form.

19. Of disclaimers. The seventh section of the act of 1837 provides "that whenever any patentee shall have, through inadvertence, accident, or mistake, made his specification of claim too broad, claiming more than that of which he was the original or first inventor,—some material and substantial part of the thing patented being truly and justly his own,—any such patentee, his administrators, executors, and assigns, whether of the whole or of a sectional interest therein, may make disclaimer of such parts of the thing patented as the disclaimant shall not claim to hold by virtue of the patent or assignment, stating therein the extent of his interest in such patent; which disclaimer shall be in writing, attested by one or more witnesses, and recorded in the patent office, on payment by the person disclaiming, in manner as other patent duties are required by law to be paid, of the sum of ten dollars. And such disclaimer shall thereafter be taken and considered as part of the original specification, to the extent of the interest which shall be possessed in the patent or right secured thereby by the disclaimant and by those claiming by or under him subsequent to the record thereof. But no such disclaimer shall affect any action pending at the time of its being filed, except so far as may relate to the question of unreasonable neglect or delay in filing the same."

20. To understand the object and purpose of some of these provisions, it must be known that by the fifteenth section of the act of 1836 it was provided that it should be a good defence to an action for infringement that the specification was too broad; and although this was modified by the ninth section of the act of 1837 so as to permit a patentee who, by mistake, accident, or inadvertence, and without any wilful intent, had claimed some things of which he was not the first inventor, to recover damages for the infringement of what was really his invention, where the parts invented could be clearly separated from the parts improperly claimed, yet in such cases the plaintiff was not entitled to recover costs unless previous to the commencement of the suit he had entered a disclaimer for that which was not his invention. But no person can avail himself of the benefits of this provision who has unreasonably neglected or delayed to enter his disclaimer. The provisions authorizing disclaimers, and their effect upon the question of costs, are discussed in 1 Stor. C. C. 590; 1 Blatchf. C. C. 244, 445; 2 id. 194; 15 How. 121; 19 id. 96; 20 id. 378; 3 N. Y. 9; 5 Den. N. Y. 314.

Not only the patentee, but his executors, administrators, and assigns, whether of a whole or sectional interest, may enter a disclaimer; but a disclaimer by one owner will not affect the interest of any other owner.

21. Of the extension of a patent. Patents were formerly granted for fourteen years, the commissioner of patents being authorized in special cases to extend the same for seven years longer. But by the act of 1861 the length of time for the patent to run was extended to seventeen years, and the right to an extension on such patents was denied. The only extensions hereafter granted will, therefore, be of patents issued before March 2, 1861.

The extension cannot be made after the patent expires; but it may be granted to an administrator as well as to the patentee. 3 Stor. C. C. 171; 4 How. 646; 3 McLean, C. C. 250.

Sixty days' notice of the application must be given through newspapers. The applicant must apply to the commissioner in proper time, which is about three months prior to the expiration of the patent. After paying a fee of fifty dollars, he must, in accordance with the act of congress and the rules of the office, file a sworn statement of his receipts and expenditures, sufficiently in detail to exhibit a true and faithful account of loss and profit in any manner accruing to him from and by reason of said invention. See Act of 1836, § 18; Act of 1848, § 1; and Act of 1861, § 10.

22. Any person may appear and show cause against the extension of the patent. But if, after all is done, the commissioner is fully satisfied that, having due regard to the public interest, it is just and proper that the term of the patent should be extended, by reason of the patentee, without neglect or fault on his part, having failed to obtain from the use and sale of his invention a reasonable remuneration for the time, ingenuity, and expense bestowed upon the same and the introduction thereof into use, it is rendered his duty to grant the extension as prayed for. And thereupon the patent has the same effect in law as though it had been originally granted for the term of twenty-one years. The extension enures only to the benefit of the patentee, and not of his assignees, unless he has contracted to convey to them an interest or right therein. But the assignee has a right to continue the use by himself of the patented machine which he is using at the time of the renewal, 4 How. 646, 709, 712; 19 id. 211; 3 McLean, C. C. 250; 4 id. 526; 1 Blatchf. C. C. 167, 258; 2 id. 471; 3 Stor. C. C. 122, 171; and a purchaser may repair his own machine, when necessary, though the repair consist in the replacement of an essential part of the combination patented. 9 How. 109. Upon the granting of an extension, an additional fee of fifty dollars is required. Act of 1861, § 10.

The act of the commissioner in granting the extension is conclusive, in the absence of fraud or excess of jurisdiction. 2 Curt. C. C. 506.

23. Of the assignment of patents. The eleventh section of the act of 1836 authorizes the assignment of a patent, either in whole or in part, by any instrument in writing,—which assignment must be recorded in the patent office within three months from the execution thereof But it has been held that this provision for recording is directory merely, for the protection of bonâ fide purchasers without notice, and not an absolute prerequisite to the validity of the assignment. 2 Stor. C. C. 526; 2 Blatchf. C. C. 144; 3 McLean, C. C. 427; 4 id. 527; 6 Ind. 428; 28 Mo. 539; 2 N. H. 61; 18 Conn. 377. It has been accordingly, determined that the recording might take place not only after the expiration of three months, but even after suit brought. 2 Stor. C. C. 609.

24. Strictly speaking, the word "assignment" applies to the transfer of the entire interest of the inventor, or to a fraction of that entire interest running throughout the whole United States. A conveyance of an exclusive interest within and throughout any specified part or portion of the United States is more properly denominated a grant A mere authority or permission to use, sell, or manufacture the thing patented, either in the whole United States or in any specific portion thereof, is known as a license. But all three are sometimes included under the general term of an assignment. Where the assignment, however, is not of the patent itself, or of any undivided part thereof, or of any right therein limited to a particular locality, but constitutes merely a license or authority from the patentee, not exclusive and not transferring any interest in the patent itself, it has been held that it need not be recorded. 2 Stor. C. C. 541. Acts in pais will sometimes justify the presumption of a license. 1 How. 202; 17 Pet. 228; 3 Stor. C. C. 402. As to the distinction between a license and assignment, see 10 How. 477.

An assignment may be made prior to the granting of a patent. And when duly made and recorded, the patent may be issued to the assignees. See Act of 1836, § 6. This, however, only applies to cases of assignments proper, as contradistinguished from grants or licenses. The application must, however, in such cases be made and the specification sworn to by the inventor. See 5 McLean, C. C. 131; 4 Wash. C. C. 71; 4 Mas. C. C. 15; 1 Blatchf. C. C. 506. The assignment transfers the right to the assignee although the patent should be afterwards issued to the assignor. 10 How. 477. See 1 Wash. C. C. 168; 4 Mas. C. C. 15; 7 Ham. 249.

It has also been held by the attorney-general of the United States that, if the inventor desires the patent to issue to himself and another person jointly, it is not enough for him to convey an interest to the other party, retaining the remainder himself; but he must make a joint conveyance to himself and the other party.

The fee for recording an assignment, if it does not contain more than three hundred words, is one dollar; if more than three hundred and not more than one thousand, it is two dollars; and if more than one thousand, it is three dollars.

25. Of joint inventors. The patent must in all cases issue to the inventor, if alive and if he has not assigned his interest. And if the invention is made jointly by two inventors, the patent must issue to them both. This is equally the case where one makes a portion of the invention at one time and another at another time. A failure to observe this rule may prove fatal to the validity of the patent. See 1 Mas. C. C. 447.

Of executors and administrators. The tenth section of the act of 1836 provides that, where an inventor dies before obtaining a patent, his executor or administrator may apply for and obtain such patent, holding it in trust for the heirs at law or devisees, accordingly as the inventor died intestate or testate. Nothing is said as to its being appropriated to the payment of debts; but, having once gone into the hands of the executors or administrators, it would perhaps become assets, and be used like other personal property. In England, a patent will pass as assets to assignees in bankruptcy. 3 Bos. & P. 565.

The right to make a surrender and receive a re-issue of a patent also vests by law in the executor or administrator. See Act of 1836, § 13. The law further provides that the executor or administrator may make the oath necessary to obtain the patent,—differing in this respect from the case of an assignment, where, although the patent issues to the assignee, the inventor must make the oath.

26. The liability of a patent to be levied upon for debt. The better opinion is that letters patent cannot be levied upon and sold by a common-law execution. The grant of privilege to the patentee would, from its incorporeal nature, seem to be incapable of manual seizure and of sale. Even if such a sale were made, there does not appear to be any provision in the acts of congress which contemplates the recording of a sheriff's deed; and without a valid record the patentee might nevertheless make a subsequent transfer to a bonâ fide purchaser without notice, which would be valid.

But this peculiar species of property may, perhaps, be subjected to the payment of debts through the instrumentality of a bill in equity. The chancellor can act upon the person. He can direct the patent to be sold, and by attachment can compel the patentee to execute a conveyance to the purchaser. The assignment thus executed will be recovered, and the transfer will thus become complete.

These seem to be the views deducible from the decisions in 1 Gall. C. C. 458; 14 How. 528; 17 id. 448.

27. How far a patent is retroactive. By the earlier law on this subject in the United States, a patent, when granted, operated retroactively: so that a machine covered by the terms of the patent, though constructed previously to the date of that instrument, could not be used after the issuing of the patent without subjecting the party so using it to an action for infringement. Of course the use of the machine previous to the date of the patent was not unlawful.

The seventh section of the act of 1839 provides "that every person or corporation who has or shall have purchased or constructed any newly-invented machine, manufacture, or composition of matter prior to the application by the inventor or discoverer for a patent shall be held to possess the right to use, and vend to others to be used, the specific machine, manufacture, or composition of matter so made or purchased, without liability therefor to the inventor or any other person interested in such invention."

At present, therefore, property rightfully acquired in a specific machine cannot be affected by a patent subsequently applied for by the patentee. It has been held, however, that, under the general grant contained in the constitution, congress has power to pass a special act which shall operate retrospectively so as to give a patent for an invention already in public use. 3 Wheat. 454; 2 Stor. C. C. 164; 3 Sumn. C. C. 535. The infringement must be subsequent to the date of the patent; but on the question of novelty the patent will be considered as relating back to the original discovery. 4 Wash. C. C. 68, 703.

28. Of foreign inventors. An alien who has resided one year in the United States, and who has taken an oath of his intention to become a citizen, stands, so far as the patent laws are concerned, in the same position as a native-born citizen; but other foreigners have not in all respects the same rights and advantages.

There is still a discrimination in the rate of fees to be paid by the inhabitants of those countries which discriminate against our citizens. See Act of 1861, § 10. Nor are aliens permitted to file a caveat or to apply for a patent for a design. In these latter respects the disability may have been unintentional, but it is nevertheless real. There is also another marked difference made by law between a domestic and a foreign patentee. The former is under no legal obligation to bring his invention into use. He may not only fail to use it himself, but may utterly refuse to allow it to be used by any one else upon any terms whatever. In this way he may prevent the public from enjoying any benefit from the invention for the whole term of fourteen years, without in any respect affecting the rights conferred by his patent.

But if the foreign patentee fails and neglects for the space of eighteen months from the date of his patent to put and continue his invention on sale to the public on reasonable terms, his patent is rendered wholly invalid. Act of 1836, § 15. An American assignee of an alien inventor is not, however, within the provisions of the act; and even the alien patentee is not bound to prove that he hawked the invention to obtain a market for it; but it rests on those who seek to defeat the patent to prove that the patentee neglected or refused to sell the patented invention for reasonable prices when application was made to him to purchase. 2 Blatchf. C. C. 49.

29. Penalties provided in certain cases. The fifth section of the act of 1842 provides "that if any person or persons shall paint, or print, or mould, cast, carve, or engrave, or stamp, upon any thing made, used, or sold by him, for the sole making or selling of which he hath not or shall not have obtained letters patent, the name or any imitation of the name of any other person who hath or shall have obtained letters patent for the sole making and vending of such thing, without consent of such patentee or his assigns or legal representatives; or if any person upon any such thing, not having been purchased from the patentee or some person who purchased it from or under such patentee, or not having the license or consent of such patentee or his assigns or legal representatives, shall write, paint, print, mould, cast, carve, engrave, stamp, or otherwise make or affix, the word 'patent,' or the words 'letters patent,' or the word 'patentee,' or any word or words of like kind, meaning or import, with the view or intent of imitating or counterfeiting the stamp, mark, or other device of the patentee; or shall affix the same, or any word, stamp, or device of like import, on any unpatented article, for the purpose of deceiving the public, he, she, or they so offending shall be liable for such offence to a penalty of not less than one hundred dollars, with costs, to be recovered by action in any of the circuit courts of the United States, or in any of the district courts of the United States having the powers and jurisdiction of a circuit court. One-half of such penalty so recovered shall be paid to the patent fund, and the other half to any person who shall sue for the same."

30. The thirteenth section of the act of 1861 declares that in all cases where an article is made or vended by any person under the protection of letters patent, it shall be the duty of such person to give sufficient notice to the public that said article is so patented, either by fixing thereon the word "patented," together with the day and year the patent was granted, or when, from the character of the article patented, that may be impracticable, by enveloping one or more of the said articles, and affixing a label to the package, or otherwise attaching thereto a label, on which the notice, with the date, is printed; on failure of which, in any suit for the infringement of letters patent by the party failing so to mark the article the right to which is infringed upon, no damage shall be recovered by the plaintiff, except on proof that the defendant was duly notified of the infringement, and continued after such notice to make or vend the article patented.

The act of congress of Feb. 28, 1839, 5 U. S. Stat. at Large, 322, establishes a five-years limitation of suits or prosecutions for a penalty under the laws of the United States. The penalty of not less than one hundred dollars, imposed by the act, is a penalty of one hundred dollars and no more. 2 Curt. C. C. 502.

A similar statute—that of 5 & 6 Will. IV. c. 83—exists in England, for observations upon which see Hindmarch, Patents, 366. It has been decided under that statute that where there has been an unauthorized use of the word "patent" it must be proved that the word was used with a view of imitating or counterfeiting the stamp of the patentee, and that it is no defence that the patented article imitated was not a new manufacture, the grant of the patent being conclusive on the defendant. 3 Hurlst. & N. Exch. 802.

31. Of infringements. The criterion of infringement is substantial identity of construction or operation. Mere changes of form, proportion, or position, or substitution of mechanical equivalents, will be infringements, unless they involve a substantial difference of construction, operation, or effect. 3 McLean, C. C. 250, 432; 1 Wash. C. C. 108; 15 How. 62; 1 Curt. C. C. 279; 1 McAll. C. C. 48. As a general rule, whenever the defendant has incorporated in his structure the substance of what the plaintiff has invented and properly claimed, he is responsible to the latter. Burr vs. Duryea, 1 Wallace, 531.

Where the patent is for a new combination of machines to produce certain effects, it is no infringement to use any of the machines separately, if the whole combination is not used. 1 Mas. C. C. 447; 2 id. 112; 1 Pet. C. C. 322; 1 Stor. C. C. 568; 2 id. 190; 16 Pet. 336; 3 McLean, C. C. 427; 4 id. 70; 6 id. 539; 14 How. 219; 24 Vt. 66; 1 Black, 427; 1 Wallace, 78. But it is an infringement to use one of several improvements claimed, or to use a substantial part of the invention, although with some modification or even improvement of form or apparatus. 2 Mas. C. C. 112; 1 Stor. C. C. 273. Where the patent describes and claims a machine, it cannot be construed to be for a process or function, so as to make all other machines infringements which perform the same function; and no infringement will in such case take place where the practical manner of giving effect to the principle is by a different mechanical structure and mechanical action. 15 How. 252. If the patentee is the inventor of a device, he may treat as infringers all who make a similar device operating on the same principle and performing the same functions by analogous means or equivalent combinations, although the infringing machine may be an improvement of the original and patentable as such. But if the invention claimed is itself but an improvement on a known machine, by a mere change of form or combination of parts, it will not be an infringement to improve the original machine by the use of a different form or combination of parts performing the same functions The doctrine of equivalents does not in such case apply, unless the subsequent improvements are mere colorable invasions of the first. 20 How. 405.

A sale of the thing patented to an agent of the patentee, employed by him to make the purchase on account of the patentee, is not per se an infringement, although, accompanied by other circumstances, it may be evidence of infringement. 1 Curt. C. C. 260.

The making of a patented machine for philosophical experiment only, and not for use or sale, has been held to be no infringement, 1 Gall. C. C. 429, 485; but a use with a view to an experiment to test its value is an infringement. 4 Wash. C. C. 580. The sale of the articles produced by a patented machine or process is not an infringement, 3 McLean, C. C. 295; 4 How. 709; nor is the bonâ fide purchase of patented articles from an infringing manufacturer. 10 Wheat. 359. As to infringement by a railroad corporation, where its road was worked and its stock owned by a connecting road, see 17 How. 30. Ignorance by the infringer of the existence of the patent infringed is no defence, but may mitigate damages. 11 How. 587.

32. Of damages for infringements. The act of 1836, § 14, provides "that whenever, in any action for damages for making, using, or selling the thing whereof the exclusive right is secured by any patent heretofore granted, or by any patent which may hereafter be granted, a verdict shall be rendered for the plaintiff in such action, it shall be in the power of the court to render judgment of any sum above the amount found by such verdict as the actual damages sustained by the plaintiff, not exceeding three times the amount thereof, according to the circumstances of the case, with costs. And such damages may be recovered by action on the case in any court of competent jurisdiction, to be brought in the name or names of the person or persons interested, whether as patentee, assignees, or as grantees of the exclusive right within and throughout a specified part of the United States."

The actual damage is all that can be allowed by a jury, as contradistinguished from exemplary, vindictive, and punitive damages. The amount of defendant's profits from the unlawful user is, in general, the measure of the plaintiff's damages; and this may be determined by the plaintiff's price for a license. 11 How. 607; 15 id. 546; 16 id. 480; 20 id. 198; 1 Gall. C. C. 476; 1 Blatchf. C. C. 244, 405; 2 id. 132, 194, 229, 476. The rule of damages is different where a patent is only for an improvement on a machine and where it is for an entire machine. 16 How. 480. If there be a mere making and no user proved, the damages should be nominal. 1 Gall. C. C. 476.

33. Jurisdiction of cases under the patent laws. The act of 1836, § 17, gives original jurisdiction to the circuit courts of the United States in all cases arising under the laws of the United States granting exclusive privileges to inventors. This jurisdiction extends both to law and equity, and is irrespective of the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy. The prevailing opinion is that the jurisdiction of the federal courts is exclusive of that of the state courts. 3 N. Y. 9; 8 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 132; 40 Me. 430. But this is to be understood of cases arising directly under the acts of congress, and not of those where the patent comes collaterally in question: as, for instance, where it is the subject-matter of a contract or the consideration of a promissory note. 3 McLean, C. C. 525; 1 Woodb. & M. C. C. 34; 16 Conn. 409. Hence, a bill to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the sale of a patent-right is not such a case arising under the patent laws as gives jurisdiction to the federal courts. 10 How. 477. By the act of February 18, 1861, a writ of error or appeal lies to the supreme court of the United States from all judgments or decrees of any circuit court in any suit under the patent law, without respect to the sum or value in controversy in the action.

PATENT OFFICE. The office through which applications for patents are made, and from which those patents emanate.

Some provision for the purpose of issuing patents is, of course, found in every country where the system of granting patents for inventions prevails; but nowhere else is there an establishment which is organized in all respects on the same scale as the United States Patent Office.

By the act of 1790, the duty of transacting this business was devolved upon the secretary of state, the secretary of war, and the attorney-general. In the provision for a board for this purpose found in the act of 1793, the secretary of war is omitted. From that time during a period of more than forty years all the business connected with the granting of patents was transacted by a clerk in the office of the secretary of state,—the duties of the secretary in this respect being little more than nominal, and the attorney-general acting only as a legal adviser.

The act of July 4, 1836, reorganized the office and gave it a new and higher position. A commissioner of patents was constituted. Provision was made for a library, which has since become one of the finest of the kind in the country. The law authorized the appointment of four clerks, together with a draughtsman, machinist, and messenger. One of these clerks was to be an examiner; but so rapidly has the business of the office increased since that date that there are now nearly thirty examiners and assistants constantly employed, and nearly one hundred persons in all who are attached to the patent office.

The patent office, from being a mere clerkship in the state department, became almost a department of itself. It was, after its reorganization in 1836, attached as a bureau to the state department, and afterwards to that of the interior; but still it occupied a station of little more than nominal dependence upon either. The commissioner had the sole appointment of many of his subordinates, and the remainder were appointed by him subject to the approval of the secretary. All the funds of the office were placed under his exclusive control. His decisions in relation to the granting, re-issue, or extension of patents were not subject to the review of the secretary. He made his report not through the head of the department, but directly to congress. The agricultural division of the office was constituted a species of subordinate bureau, and the appropriations and management were placed by law under his entire control.

The patent office is an office of record, in which assignments of patents are recordable, and the record is notice to all the world of the facts to be found on record. Under section four of the act of 1793, an assignment was not valid unless recorded in the office of the secretary of state, 4 Blackf. Ind. 183; and this was held in the case of a suit upon a note given to an assignee whose assignment was not recorded, where the note was ruled void as being without consideration. In other cases, however, it was held that the assignee's rights were capable of being completed by recording, though until that took place the assignee was not substituted to the rights of the assignor 1 Stor. C. C. 296. The better opinion seems to be that, under section eleven of the act of 1836, recording is not necessary for completing the assignment as between the parties to the conveyance, that the provisions of the act are directory merely, and that the effect of the record is merely to give notice to bind subsequent purchasers. Thus, it was said by Judge Story that "the provision of the statute is merely directory, and, except as to intermediate bonâ fide purchasers without notice, any subsequent recording of the assignment will be sufficient to pass the title to the assignee." 2 Stor. C. C. 542, 615, 618. And it has also been held that the record may be made even after suit brought; and it is said to be like the case of a deed required to be registered. 2 Stor. 618. Other cases hold more strongly that recording is not necessary, but that the title passes as between the parties by the assignment, though subsequent bonâ fide purchasers without notice are not bound without record. 2 N. H. 63; 3 McLean, C. C. 429; 4 id. 527; 18 Conn. 388; 2 Am. Law Jour. 319. Three cases only are said to be provided for by statute: first, an assignment of the whole patent; second, an assignment of an undivided part thereof; and, third, a grant or conveyance of an exclusive right under the patent within a specified part or portion of the United States. 2 Stor. C. C. 542; 2 Blatchf. C. C. 148; 9 Vt. 177. A question may arise whether the act of 1860, in prescribing a tariff of fees for recording other papers, as agreements, etc., has not recognized the usage of the office in recording them as within the meaning of the acts of congress, and rendered them recordable.

PATENT OFFICE, EXAMINERS IN. Upon the reorganization of the patent office, in 1836, under the act of July 4 of that year, a new and important principle was introduced. Prior to that date, any one was at liberty to take out his patent for almost any contrivance, if he was willing to pay the fees. At least, this was the practical operation of the system; for although a patent was not granted until it was allowed by certain heads of departments, still, as the examination in such cases went no further than merely to ascertain whether the contrivance was of sufficient importance to be worthy of a patent, without any inquiry as to who was the first inventor thereof, the allowance of the patent was rather a matter of course in almost every case. The applicant, at his own peril, decided for himself whether the subject-matter of the patent was new. If it was not so, the patent would be of no value, as it could never be enforced. The question of novelty could be raised whenever an action for infringement was brought; or a proceeding might be directly instituted to test the validity of the patent, and to annul it if the patentee was found not to be the original and first inventor. The law in these respects was like that of England and most other European countries.

But the act of 1836 provided for a thorough examination of every application, with a view of ascertaining whether the contrivance thus shown was novel as well as useful: so that no patent should issue which would not be sustained by the courts. In theory, this was to be done by the commissioner of patents; but the amount of business on his hands was such, even then, as to render it impossible for him to perform all that labor in person; and provision was accordingly made by law for an examining clerk to assist him in these examinations. At present, so greatly has the amount of this labor become augmented that nearly thirty of these assistants are kept constantly and industriously employed, all of whom are known as examiners in the patent office.

The duty of these examiners is to determine whether the subject-matter of the respective patents which are applied for had been invented or discovered by any other person in this country, or had been patented or described in any printed publication in this or any foreign country, prior to the alleged invention thereof by the applicant. If not, and the invention is deemed useful within the meaning of the patent law, a patent is allowed, unless it clearly appears that the invention has been abandoned to the public. If the invention has been in public use more than two years with the consent and allowance of the inventor, that single circumstance amounts to a statutory abandonment of the invention; although it may be abandoned in various other methods. But, unless the fact of abandonment is very clear, the office does not assume to decide against the applicant, but leaves the matter to a court and jury. See PATENTS, and PATENT OFFICE.

PATENT ROLLS. Registers in which are recorded all letters patent granted since 1516. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 346; App. to First Rep. of Select Commit. on Pub. Rec. pp. 53, 84.

PATENT WRIT. A writ not closed or sealed up. Jacob, Law Dict.; Coke, Litt. 289; 2 id. 39; 7 Coke, 20.

PATENTEE. He to whom a patent has been granted. The term is usually applied to one who has obtained letters patent for a new invention.

PATER (Lat.). Father. The Latin term is considerably used in genealogical tables.

PATER-FAMILIAS (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who was sui juris, and not subject to the paternal power.

2. In order to give a correct idea of what was understood in the Roman law by this term, it is proper to refer briefly to the artificial organization of the Roman family,—the greatest moral phenomenon in the history of the human race. The comprehensive term familia embraced both persons and property: money, lands, houses, slaves, children, all constituted part of this artificial family, this juridical entity, this legal patrimony, the title to which was exclusively vested in the chief or pater-familias, who alone was capax dominii, and who belonged to himself, sui juris.

The word pater-familias is by no means equivalent to the modern expression father of a family, but means proprietor in the strongest sense of that term; it is he qui in domo dominium habet, in whom were centred all property, all power, all authority: he was, in a word, the lord and master, whose authority was unlimited. No one but he who was sui juris, who was pater-familias, was capable of exercising any right of property, or wielding any superiority or power over any thing; for nothing could belong to him who was himself alieni juris. Hence the children of the filii-familias, as well as those of slaves, belonged to the pater-familias. In the same manner, every thing that was acquired by the sons or slaves formed a part of the familia, and, consequently, belonged to its chief. This absolute property and power of the pater-familias only ceased with his life, unless he voluntarily parted with them by a sale; for the alienation by sale is invariably the symbol resorted to for the purpose of dissolving the stern dominion of the pater-familias over those belonging to the familia. Thus, both emancipation and adoption are the results of imaginary sales,—per imaginarias venditiones. As the daughter remained in the family of her father, grandfather, or great-grandfather, as the case might be, notwithstanding her marriage, it followed as a necessary consequence that the child never belonged to the same family as its mother: there is no civil relationship between them; they are natural relations,—cognati,—but they are not legally related to each other,—agnati; and therefore the child never inherits from its mother, nor the mother from her child. There was, however, a means by which the wife might enter into the family and subject herself to the power of her husband, in manu mariti, and thereby establish a legal relationship between herself and her husband. This marital power of the husband over the wife was generally acquired either coemptione, by the purchase of the wife by the husband from the pater-familias, or usu, by the prescription based on the possession of one year,—the same by which the title to movable property was acquired according to the principles governing the usucapio (usu capere, to obtain by use). Another mode of obtaining the same end was the confarreatio, a sacred ceremony performed by the breaking and eating of a small cake, farreum, by the married couple. It was supposed that by an observance of this ceremony the marital power was produced by the intervention of the gods. This solemn mode of celebrating marriages was peculiar to the patrician families. By means of these fictions and ceremonies the wife became in the eye of the law the daughter of her husband, and the sister of the children to whom she gave birth, who would otherwise have been strangers to her. Well might Gaius say, Fere nulli alii sunt homines qui talem in liberos habeant potestatem, qualem nos habemus.

3. There is some similarity between the agnatio, or civil relationship, of the Romans, and the transmission of the name of the father, under the modern law, to all his descendants in the male line. The Roman law says of the children, patris, non matris, familiam sequuntur; we say, patris, non matris, nomen sequuntur. All the members of the family who, with us, bear the same name, were under that law agnates, or constituted the agnatio, or civil family. Those children only belonged to the family, and were subject to the paternal power, who had been conceived in justis nuptiis, or been adopted. Nuptiæ, or matrimonium, was a marriage celebrated in conformity with the peculiar rules of the civil law. There existed a second kind of marriage, called concubinatus,—a valid union and a real marriage,—which has been often improperly confounded, even by high authority, with concubinage. This confusion of ideas is attributable to a superficial examination of the subject; for the illicit intercourse between a man and a woman which we call concubinage was stigmatized by the opprobrious term stuprum by the Romans, and is spoken of in the strongest terms of reprobation. The concubinatus was the natural marriage, and the only one which those who did not enjoy the jus connubii were permitted to contract. The Roman law recognized two species of marriage, the one civil, and the other natural, in the same manner as there were two kinds of relationship, the agnatio and cognatio. The justæ nuptiæ or justum matrimonium, or civil marriage, could only be contracted by Roman citizens and by those to whom the jus connubii had been conceded: this kind of marriage alone produced the paternal power, the right of inheritance, etc.

4. But the rapid rise and extraordinary greatness of the city attracted immense crowds of strangers, who, not possessing the jus connubii, could form no other union than that of the concubinatus, which, though authorized by law, did not give rise to those legal effects which flowed from the justæ nuptiæ. By adoption, the person adopted was transferred from one family to another; he passed from the paternal power of one pater-familias to that of another: consequently, no one who was sui juris could be adopted in the strict sense of that word. But there was another species of adoption, called adrogatio, by which a person sui juris entered into another family, and subjected himself to the paternal power of its chief. The effect of the adrogation was not confined to the person adrogated alone, but extended over his family and property. 1 Marcadé, 75 et seq.

This extraordinary organization of the Roman family, and the unlimited powers and authority vested in the pater-familias, continued until the reign of Justinian, who, by his 118th Novel, enacted on the 9th of August, 544, abolished the distinction between the agnatio and cognatio, and established the order of inheritance which, with some modifications, continues to exist at the present day in all countries whose jurisprudence is based on the civil law. See PATRIA POTESTAS.

PATERNA PATERNIS (Lat. the father's to the father's). In French Law. An expression used to signify that, in a succession, the property coming from the father of the deceased descends to his paternal relations.

PATERNAL. That which belongs to the father or comes from him: as, paternal power, paternal relation, paternal estate, paternal line. See LINE.

PATERNAL POWER. The authority lawfully exercised by parents over their children. See FATHER.

PATERNAL PROPERTY. That which descends or comes from the father and other ascendants or collaterals of the paternal stock. Domat, Liv. Prél. tit. 3, s. 2, n. 11.

PATERNITY. The state or condition of a father.

2. The husband is primâ facie presumed to be the father of his wife's children born during coverture or within a competent time afterwards: pater is est quem nuptiæ demonstrant. 7 Mart. La. N. S. 553. So if the child is en ventre sa mère at time of marriage, Coke, Litt. 123; 8 East, 192. In civil law the presumption holds in case of a child born before marriage as well as after. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 446, 454; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 6. In cases of marriage of a widow within ten months after decease of husband, the paternity is to be decided by circumstances. Hargrave, note to Coke, Litt. § 188, n. 190. Marriage within ten months after decease of husband was forbidden by Roman, Danish, and Saxon law, and English law before the Conquest. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 481; Brooke, Abr. Bastardy, pl. 18; Palm. 10; 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 456.

3. The presumption of paternity may always be rebutted by showing circumstances which render it impossible that the husband can be the father. 6 Binn. Penn. 283; 1 P. A. Browne, Penn. Appx. xlvii.; Hard. Ky. 479; 8 East, 193; Strange, 51, 940; 4 Term, 356; 2 Mylne & K. 349; 3 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 139; 1 Sim. & S. Ch. 150; Turn. & R. Ch. 138; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 302 et seq.

The declarations of one or both of the spouses, however, cannot affect the condition of a child born during the marriage. 7 Mart. La. N. S. 553; 3 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 139. See BASTARD; BASTARDY; LEGITIMACY; MATERNITY; PREGNANCY.

PATHOLOGY. In Medical Jurisprudence. The science or doctrine of diseases. In cases of homicides, abortions, and the like, it is of great consequence to the legal practitioner to be acquainted in some degree with pathology. 2 Chitty, Pract. 42, n.

PATRIA (Lat.). The country; the men of the neighborhood competent to serve on a jury; a jury. This word is nearly synonymous with pais, which see.

PATRIA POTESTAS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The paternal power; the authority which the law vests in the father over the persons and property of his legitimate children.

2. One of the effects of marriage is the paternal authority over the children born in wedlock. In the early period of the Roman history, the paternal authority was unlimited: the father had the absolute control over his children, and might even, as the domestic magistrate of his family, condemn them to death. They could acquire nothing except for the benefit of the pater-familias (which see); and they were even liable to be sold and reduced to slavery by the author of their existence. But in the progress of civilization this stern rule was gradually relaxed; the voice of nature and humanity was listened to on behalf of the oppressed children of a cruel and heartless father. A passage in the 37th book, t. 12, § 5, of the Pandects informs us that, in the year 870 of Rome, the emperor Trajan compelled a father to release his son from the paternal authority, on account of cruel treatment. The same emperor sentenced a father to transportation because he had killed his son in a hunting-party, although the son had been guilty of adultery with his stepmother; for, says Marcianus, who reports the case, patria potestas in pietate debet, non in atrocitate, consistere. Ulpianus says that a father is not permitted to kill his son without a judgment from the prefect or the president of the province. In the year 981 of Rome, the emperor Alexander Severus addressed a constitution to a father, which is found in the 8th book, t. 47, § 3, of the Justinian Code, in which he says, "Your paternal authority authorizes you to chastise your son; and, if he persists in his misconduct, you may bring him before the president of the province, who will sentence him to such punishment as you may desire." In the same book and title of the Code we find a constitution of the emperor Constantine, dated in the year of Rome 1065, which inflicts the punishment denounced against parricide on the father who shall be convicted of having killed his son. The power of selling the child, which at first was unlimited, was also much restricted, and finally altogether abolished, by subsequent legislation, especially during the empire. Paulus, who wrote about the middle of the tenth century of Rome, informs us that the father could only sell his child in case of extreme poverty: contemplatione extremæ necessitatis aut alimentarum gratia. In 1039 of Rome, Diocletian and Maximian declare in a rescript that it is beyond doubt (manifestissimi juris) that a father can neither sell nor pledge nor donate his children. Constantine, in 1059, permitted the sale by the father of his child, at its birth and when forced to do so by abject poverty: propter nimiam paupertatem egestatemque victus; and the same law is re-enacted in the Code of Justinian. C. 4. 43, t. 2, 3.

3. The father, being bound to indemnify the party who had been injured by the offences of his child, could release himself from this responsibility by an abandonment of the offender, in the same manner as the master could abandon his slave for a similar purpose,—noxali causa mancipare. This power of abandonment continued to exist, with regard to male children, up to the time of Gaius, in the year 925 of Rome. But by the Institutes of Justinian it is forbidden. Inst. 4. 8. 7.

With regard to the rights of the father to the property the child might acquire, it was originally as extensive and absolute as if it had been acquired by a slave: the child could possess nothing nor acquire any thing that did not belong to the father. It is true, the child might possess a peculium; but of this he had only a precarious enjoyment, subject to the will and pleasure of the father. Under the first emperors a distinction was made in favor of the son as to such property as had been acquired by him in the army, which was called castrense peculium, to which the son acquired a title in himself. Constantine extended this rule by applying it to such property as the child had acquired by services in offices held in the state or by following a liberal profession: this was denominated quasi-castrense peculium. He also created the peculium adventitium, which was composed of all property inherited by the son from his mother, whether by will or ab intestat; but the father had the usufruct of this peculium. Arcadius and Honorius extended it to every thing the son acquired by succession or donations from his grandfather or mother or other ascendants in the maternal line. Theodosius and Valentinian embraced in it whatever was given by one of the spouses to the other; and Justinian included in it every thing acquired by the son, except such as was produced by property belonging to the father himself. It is thus seen that, by the legislation of Justinian and his predecessors, the paternal power with regard to property was almost entirely destroyed.

The pater-familias had not only under his paternal power his own children, but also the children of his sons and grandsons,—in fact, all his descendants in the male line; and this authority continued in full force and vigor no matter what might be the age of those subject to it. The highest offices in the government did not release the incumbent from the paternal authority. The victorious general or consul to whom the honors of a triumph were decreed by the senate was subject to the paternal power in the same manner and to the same extent as the humblest citizen. It is to be observed, however, that the domestic subjection did not interfere with the capacity of exercising the highest public functions in the state. The children of the daughter were not subject to the paternal authority of her father: they entered into the family of her husband. Women could never exercise the paternal power. And even when a woman was herself sui juris, she could not exercise the paternal power. It is for this reason, Ulpian observes, that the family of which a woman, sui juris, was the head, mater-familias, commenced and ended with her: mulier autem familiæ suæ et caput et finis est. 1 Ortolan, 191 et seq.

4. The modern civil law has hardly preserved any features of the old Roman jurisprudence concerning the paternal power. Article 233 of the Louisiana Code provides, it is true, that a child, whatever be its age, owes honor and respect to its father and mother; and the next article adds that the child remains under the authority of the father and mother until his majority or emancipation, and that in case of a difference of opinion between the parents the authority of the father shall prevail. In the succeeding article obedience is enjoined on the child to the orders of the parents as long as he remains subject to the paternal authority. But article 236 renders the foregoing rules in a great measure nugatory, by declaring that "a child under the age of puberty cannot quit the paternal house without the permission of his father and mother, who have a right to correct him, provided it be done in a reasonable manner." So that the power of correction ceases with the age of fourteen for boys and twelve for girls: nay, at these ages the children may leave the paternal roof in opposition to the will of their parents. It is seen that, by the modern law, the paternal authority is vested in both parents, but practically it is generally exercised by the father alone; for wherever there is a difference of opinion his will prevails. The great object to be attained by the exercise of the paternal power is the education of the children to prepare them for the battle of life, to make them useful citizens and respectable members of society. During the marriage, the parents are entitled to the enjoyment of the property of their minor children, subject to the obligation of supporting and educating them, and of paying the taxes, making the necessary repairs, etc. Donations made to minors are accepted by their parents or other ascendants. The father has under his control all actions which it may be necessary to bring for his minor children during the marriage. When the marriage is dissolved by the death of one of the spouses, the paternal power ceases, and the tutorship is opened; but the surviving parent is the natural tutor, and can at his death appoint a testamentary tutor to his minor children. See PATER-FAMILIAS.

PATRICIDE. One guilty of killing his father. See PARRICIDE.

PATRIMONIAL. A thing which comes from the father, and, by extension, from the mother or other ancestor.

PATRIMONIUM. In Civil Law. That which is capable of being inherited.

Things capable of being possessed by a single person exclusively of all others are, in the Roman or civil law, said to be in patrimonio; when incapable of being so possessed, they are extra patrimonium.

Most things may be inherited; but there are some which are said to be extra patrimonium, or which are not in commerce. These are such as are common, as the light of heaven, the air, the sea, and the like; things public, as rivers, harbors, roads, creeks, ports, arms of the sea, the sea-shore, highways, bridges, and the like; things which belong to cities and municipal corporations, as public squares, streets, market-houses, and the like. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. nn. 421–446.

PATRIMONY. Any kind of property. Such estate as has descended in the same family; estates which have descended or been devised in a direct line from the father, and, by extension, from the mother or other ancestor.

The father's duty to take care of his children. Swinburne, Wills, pt. 3, § 18, n. 31, p. 235.

PATRINUS (Lat.). A godfather.

PATRON. In Ecclesiastical Law. He who has the disposition and gift of an ecclesiastical benefice.

In Roman Law. The former master of a freedman. Dig. 2. 4. 8. 1.

PATRONAGE. The right of appointing to office: as, the patronage of the president of the United States, if abused, may endanger the liberties of the people.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The right of presentation to a church or ecclesiastical benefice. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 21.

PATRONUS (Lat.). In Roman Law A modification of the Latin word pater, father. A denomination applied by Romulus to the first senators of Rome, and which they always afterwards bore.

Romulus at first appointed a hundred of them. Seven years afterwards, in consequence of the association of Tatius to the Romans, a hundred more were appointed, chosen from the Sabines. Tarquinius Priscus increased the number to three hundred. Those appointed by Romulus and Tatius were called patres majorum gentium, and the others were called patres minorum gentium. These and their descendants constituted the nobility of Rome. The rest of the people were called plebeians, every one of whom was obliged to choose one of these fathers as his patron. The relation thus constituted involved important consequences. The plebeian, who was called cliens (a client), was obliged to furnish the means of maintenance to his chosen patron, to furnish a portion for his patron's daughters, to ransom him and his sons if captured by an enemy, and pay all sums recovered against him by judgment of the courts. The patron, on the other hand, was obliged to watch over the interests of his client, whether present or absent, to protect his person and property, and especially to defend him in all actions brought against him for any cause. Neither could accuse or bear testimony against the other, or give contrary votes, etc. The contract was of a sacred nature: the violation of it was a sort of treason, and punishable as such. According to Cicero (De Repub. ii. 9), this relation formed an integral part of the governmental system, Et habuit plebem in clientelas principum descriptum, which he affirms was eminently useful. Blackstone traces the system of vassalage to this ancient relation of patron and client. It was, in fact, of the same nature as the feudal institutions of the middle ages, designed to maintain order in a rising state by a combination of the opposing interests of the aristocracy and of the common people, upon the principle of reciprocal bonds for mutual interests. Dumazeau, Barreau Romain, § iii. Ultimately, by force of radical changes in the institution, the word patronus came to signify nothing more than an advocate. Id. iv.

PATROON. In New York. The lord of a manor.

PATRUELIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A cousin-german by the father's side; the son or daughter of a father's brother. Dig. 38. 10. 1.

PATRUUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. An uncle by the father's side; a father's brother. Dig. 38. 10. 10. Patruus magnus is a grandfather's brother, grand-uncle. Patruus major is a great-grandfather's brother. Patruus maximus is a great-grandfather's father's brother.

PAUPER (Lat. poor). One so poor that he must be supported at the public expense.

The statutes of the several states make ample provisions for the support of the poor. It is not within the plan of this work even to give an abstract of such extensive legislation. See 16 Viner, Abr. 259; Botts, Poor-Laws; Woodfall, Landl. & T. 201.

PAUPERIES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Poverty. In a technical sense, damnum absque injuriâ: i.e. a damage done without wrong on the part of the doer: e.g. damage done by an irrational being, as an animal. L. 1, § 3, D. si quod paup. fec.; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

PAVIAGE. A contribution or tax for paving streets or highways.

PAWN. A pledge. A pledge includes, in Louisiana, a pawn and an antichresis; but sometimes pawn is used as the general word, including pledge and antichresis. La. Civ. Code, art. 3101; Hennen, Dig. Pledge.

PAWNBROKER. One whose business it is to lend money, usually in small sums, upon pawn or pledge.

PAWNEE. He who receives a pawn or pledge.

PAWNOR. One who, being liable to an engagement, gives to the person to whom he is liable a thing to be held as a security for the payment of his debt or the fulfilment of his liability.

PAX REGIS (Lat.). The peace of the king. That peace or security for life and goods which the king promises to all persons under his protection. Bracton, lib. 3, c. 11; 6 Ric. II. stat. 1, c. 13.

In ancient times there were certain limits which were known by this name. The pax regis, or verge of the court, as it was afterwards called, extended from the palace-gate to the distance of three miles, three furlongs, three acres, nine feet, nine palms, and nine barleycorns, Crabb, C. L. 41; or from the four sides of the king's residence, four miles, three furlongs, nine acres in breadth, nine feet, nine barleycorns, etc. LL. Edw. Conf. c. 12, et LL. Hen. I.

PAYEE. The person in whose favor a bill of exchange is made payable. See BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

PAYMENT. The fulfilment of a promise, or the performance of an agreement.

The discharge in money of a sum due.

2. The word payment is not a technical term: it has been imported into law proceedings from the exchange, and not from law treatises. When payment is pleaded as a defence, the defendant must prove the payment of money, or something accepted in its stead, made to the plaintiff or to some person authorized in his behalf to receive it. 2 Greenleaf, Ev. 509.

Payment, in its most general acceptation, is the accomplishment of every obligation, whether it consists in giving or in doing: Solutio est præstatio ejus quod in obligatione est.

It follows, therefore, that every act which, while it extinguishes the obligation, has also for its object the release of the debtor and his exemption from liability, is not payment. Payment is doing precisely what the payer has agreed to do. Solvere dicitur cum qui fecit quod facere promisit.

However, practically, the name of payment is often given to methods of release which are not accompanied by the performance of the thing promised. Restrinximus solutiones ad compensationem, ad novationem, ad delegationem, et ad numerationem.

3. In a more restricted sense, payment is the discharge in money of a sum due. Numeratio est nummariæ solutio. 5 Massè, Droit commerciel, 229. That a payment may extinguish a debt, it must be made by a person who has a right to make it, to a person who is entitled to receive it, in something proper to be received both as to kind and quality, and at the appointed place and time.

In the civil law, it is said, where payment is something to be done, it must be done by the debtor himself. If I hire a skilful mechanic to build a steam-engine for me, he cannot against my will substitute in his stead another workman. Where it is something to be given, the general rule is that it can be paid by any one, whether a co-obliger, or surety, or even a third person who has no interest; except that in this last case subrogation will prevent the extinction of the debt as to the debtor, unless the payer at the time of payment act in the name of the debtor, or in his own name to release the debtor. See SUBROGATION.

What constitutes payment.

4. According to Comyns, payment by merchants must be made in money or by bill. Comyns, Dig. Merchant (F).

It is now the law for all classes of citizens that payment must be made by money, unless the obligation is, by the terms of the instrument creating it, to be discharged by other means. In the United States, congress has, by the constitution, power to decide what shall be a legal tender; that is, in what form the creditor may demand his payment or must receive it if offered; and congress has determined this by statutes. The same power is exercised by the governments of all civilized countries. Payment in the United States must be made in coined money (or treasury notes made legal tender), if the creditor insists upon having it, 3 Halst. N. J. 172; 4 N. H. 296; 4 Dev. & B. No. C. 435; and copper cents are not legal tender under the United States constitution. 2 Nott & M'C. So. C. 519.

In England, Bank-of-England notes are legal tender. See LEGAL TENDER. But the creditor may waive this right, and any thing which he has accepted as satisfaction for the debt will be considered as payment.

5. Upon a plea of payment, the defendant may prove a discharge in bank-notes, negotiable notes of individuals, or a debt already due from the payee, delivered and accepted or discounted as payment. Phillipps, Ev. Cowen & H. ed. n. 387. Bank-notes, in conformity to usage and common understanding, are regarded as cash, 1 Burr. 452; 3 id. 1516; 9 Johns. N. Y. 120; 6 Md. 37; unless objected to. 1 Metc. Mass. 356; 8 Ohio, 169; 10 Me. 475; 2 Crompt. & J. Exch. 16, n.; 5 Yerg. Tenn. 199; 4 Esp. 267; 3 Humphr. Tenn. 162; 6 Ala. N. s. 226. Treasury notes are not cash. 3 Conn. 534. Giving a check is not considered as payment; but the holder may treat it as a nullity if he derives no benefit from it, provided he has not been guilty of negligence so as to cause injury to the drawer. 2 Parsons, Contr. 136; 2 Campb 515; 8 Term, 451; 2 Bos. & P. 518; 4 Ad.

& E. 952; 4 Johns. N. Y. 296; 1 Hall, N. Y. 56; 30 N. H. 256. But see 14 How. 240.

6. Payment in forged bills is generally a nullity, both in England and this country. 10 Wheat. 333; 2 Johns. N. Y. 455; 6 Hill, N. Y. 340; 7 Leigh. Va. 617; 3 Hawks, No. C. 568; 2 Harr. & J. Md. 368; 4 Gill & J. Md. 463; 4 Ill. 392; 11 id. 137; 3 Penn. St. 330; 5 Conn. 71. So also of counterfeit coin; but an agreement to sell goods and accept specific money is good, and payment in these coins is valid even though they be counterfeit. 1 Term, 225; 14 Serg. & R. Penn. 51. And the forged notes must be returned in a reasonable time, to throw the loss upon the debtor. 7 Leigh. Va. 617; 11 Ill. 137. Payment to a bank in its own notes which are received and afterwards discovered to be forged is a good payment. 1 Parsons, Contr. 220. A forged check received as cash and passed to the credit of the customer is good payment. 4 Dall. Penn. 234: s. c., 1 Binn. Penn. 27; 10 Vt. 141. Payment in bills of an insolvent bank, where both parties were innocent, has been held no payment. 7 Term, 64; 13 Wend. N. Y. 101; 11 Vt. 576; 9 N. H. 365; 22 Me. 85. On the other hand, it has been held good payment, in 1 Watts & S. Penn. 92; 6 Mass. 185; 12 Ala. 280; 8 Yerg. Tenn. 175. The point is still unsettled, and it is said to be a question of intention rather than of law. Story, Prom. Notes, 125*, 477*, 641.

7. If a bill of exchange or promissory note be given to a creditor and accepted as payment, it shall be a good payment. Comyns, Dig. Merchant (F); 30 N. H. 540; 27 Ala. N. S. 254; 16 Ill. 161; 2 Du. N. Y. 133; 14 Ark. 267; 4 Rich. So. C. 600; 34 Me. 324. But regularly a bill of exchange or note given to a creditor shall not be a discharge of the debt till payment of the bill, unless so accepted. Skinn. 410; 1 Salk. 124.

If the debtor gives his own promissory note, it is held in England and the United States generally not to be payment, unless it be shown that it was so intended. 10 Pet. 567; 4 Mas. C. C. 336; 27 N. H. 244; 15 Johns. N. Y. 247; 3 Wend. N. Y. 66; 9 Conn. 23; 2 N. H. 525; 26 Eng. L. & Eq. 56.

And if payment be made in the note of a factor or agent employed to purchase goods, or intrusted with the money to be paid for them, if the note be received as payment it will be good in favor of the principal, 1 Barnew. & Ald. 14; 7 Barnew. & C. 17; but not if received conditionally; and this is a question of fact for the jury. 6 Cow. N. Y. 181; 9 Johns. N. Y. 310; 10 Wend. N. Y. 271.

8. It is said that an agreement to receive the debtor's own note in payment must be expressed, 1 Cow. N. Y. 359; 1 Wash. C. C. 328; and when so expressed it extinguishes the debt. 5 Wend. N. Y. 85. Whether there was such an agreement is a question for the jury. 9 Johns. N. Y. 310.

A bill of exchange drawn on a third person and accepted discharges the debt as to the drawer, 10 Mod. 37; and in an action to recover the price of goods, in England, payment by a bill not dishonored has been held a good defence. 4 Esp. Cas. 46; 3 Campb. 411; 1 Mood. & M. 28; 4 Bingh. 454; 5 Maule & S. 62.

Retaining a draft on a third party an unreasonable length of time will operate as payment if loss be occasioned thereby. 3 Wils. 553; 2 Dall. Penn. 100; 13 Serg. & R. Penn. 318; 2 Wash. C. C. 191.

In the sale of a chattel, if the note of a third person be accepted for the price, it is good payment. 3 Cow. N. Y. 272; 1 Dev. & B. No. C. 291. Not so, however, if the note be the promise of one of the partners in payment of a partnership debt. 4 Dev. No. C. 91, 460.

9. In Maine and Massachusetts, the presumption where a negotiable note is taken, whether it be the debtor's promise or that of a third person, is that it is intended as payment. 6 Mass. 143; 12 Pick. Mass. 268; 2 Metc. Mass. 168; 8 Me. 298; 18 id. 249; 34 id. 324; 37 id. 419. The fact that a note was usurious and void was allowed to overcome this presumption. 11 Mass. 361.

Generally, the question will depend upon the fact whether the payment was to have been made in notes or the receiving them was a mere accommodation to the purchaser. 17 Mass. 1.

And the presumption never attaches where non-negotiable notes are given. 11 Me. 381; 15 id. 340.

10. Payment may be made through the intervention of a third party who acts as the agent of both parties: as, for example, a stake-holder. If the money be deposited with him to abide the event of a legal wager, neither party can claim it until the wager is determined, and then he is bound to pay it to the winner. 4 Campb. 37. If the wager is illegal, the depositor may reclaim the money at any time before it is paid over. 4 Taunt. 474; 5 Term, 405; 8 Barnew. & C. 221; 29 Eng. L. & Eq. 424; 31 id. 452. And at any time after notice given in such case he may hold the stake-holder responsible, even though he may have paid it over. See 2 Parsons, Contr. 138.

An auctioneer is often a stake-holder, as in case of money deposited to be made over to the vendor if a good title is made out. In such case the purchaser cannot reclaim except on default in giving a clear title. But if the contract has been rescinded by the parties there need be no notice to the stake-holder in case of a failure to perform the condition. 2 Mees. & W. Exch. 244; 1 Mann. & R. 614.

11. A transfer of funds, called by the civil-law phrase a payment by delegation, is payment only when completely effected, 2 Parsons, Contr. 137; and an actual transfer of claim or credit assented to by all the parties is a good payment. 4 Bingh. 112; 2 Barnew. & Ald. 39; 5 id. 228; 7 N. H. 345, 397; 17 Mass. 400. This seems to be very similar to payment by drawing and acceptance of a bill of exchange.

Foreclosure of a mortgage given to secure a debt operates as payment made when the foreclosure is complete; but if the property mortgaged is not equal in value to the amount of the debt then due, it is payment pro tanto only. 2 Greenleaf, Ev. § 324; 3 Mass. 562; 2 Gall. C. C. 152; 3 Mas. C. C. 474; 10 Pick. Mass. 396; 11 Wend. N. Y. 106. A legacy also is payment, if the intention of the testator that it should be so considered can be shown, and if the debt was liquidated at the death of the testator. 1 Esp. 187; 12 Mass. 391; 5 Cow. N. Y. 368. See LEGACY.

12. When money is sent by letter, even though the money is lost, it is good payment, and the debtor is discharged, if he was expressly authorized or directed by the creditor so to send it, or if such authority can be presumed from the course of trade. Peake, 67; 11 Mees. & W. Exch. 233. But, even if the authority be given or inferred, at least ordinary diligence must be used by the debtor to have the money safely conveyed. See 3 Mass. 249; Ry. & M. 149; 1 Exch. 477; Peake, 186. Payment must be of the whole sum; and even where a receipt in full has been given for a payment of part of an ascertained sum, it has been held not to be an extinction of the debt. 5 Coke, 117; 2 Barnew. & C. 477; 5 East, 230; 3 N. H. 518; 11 Vt. 60; 26 Me. 88; 37 id. 361; 10 Ad. & E. 121; 4 Gill & J. Md. 305; 9 Johns. N. Y. 333; 17 id. 169; 11 How. 100.

13. But payment of part may be left to the jury as evidence that the whole has been paid, 5 Cranch, 11; 3 N. H. 518; and payment of a part at a different time, 2 Metc. Mass. 283, or place, 3 Hawks, No. C. 580, or in any way more beneficial to the creditor than that prescribed by the contract, is good. 15 Mees. & W. Exch. 23. Giving a chattel, though of less value than the debt, is a discharge, Dy. 75 a; 2 Litt. Ky. 49; 3 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 621, or rendering certain services, with the consent of the creditor, 5 Day, Conn, 359, or assigning certain property. 5 Johns. N. Y. 386; 13 Mass. 424. So if a stranger pay a part, or give his note for a part, and this is accepted, it is a good payment of the debt. 11 East, 390; 4 Barnew. & C. 500; 13 Ala. N. S. 353; 14 Wend. N. Y. 116; 2 Metc. Mass. 283. And where a creditor by process of law compels the payment of a part of his claim, this is generally a discharge of the whole. 11 Serg. & R. Penn. 78; 16 Johns. N. Y. 121; 2 Seld. N. Y. 179; 6 Cush. Mass. 28; 2 Parsons, Contr. 232.

14. The payment must have been accepted knowingly. Many instances are given in the old writers to illustrate acceptance: thus, if the money is counted out, and the payee takes a part and puts it in a bag, this is a good payment, and if any be lost it is the payee's loss. 5 Mod. 398. Where A paid B £100 in redemption of a mortgage, and B bade C put it in his closet, and C did so, and A demanded his papers, which B refused to deliver, and A demanded back his money, and B directed C to give it to him, and C did, it was held to be a payment of the mortgage. Viner, Abr. Payment (E).

Generally, there can be but little doubt as to acceptance or non-acceptance, and the question is one of fact for the jury to determine under the circumstances of each particular case.

Of course, where notes or bank-bills are given in payment of a debt, the evidence that they were so given is to be the same as evidence of any other fact relating to payment.

15. Evidence of payment. Evidence that any thing has been done and accepted as payment is evidence of payment.

A receipt is primâ facie evidence of payment; but a receipt acknowledging the reception of ten dollars and acquitting and releasing from all obligations would be a receipt for ten dollars only. 2 Ves. Ch. 310; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 606; 18 Pick. Mass. 325; 1 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 341. And a receipt is only primâ facie evidence of payment. 2 Taunt. 241; 7 Cow. N. Y. 334; 4 Ohio, 346. For cases explaining this rule, see, also, 2 Mas. C. C. 141; 11 Mass. 27; 9 Johns. N. Y. 310; 4 Harr. & M'H. Md. 219; 3 Caines, N. Y. 14. And it may be shown that the particular sum stated in the receipt was not paid, and, also, that no payment has been made. 2 Term, 366; 26 N. H. 12; 9 Conn. 401; 2 N. J. 59; 10 Humphr. Tenn. 188; 13 Penn. St. 46.

Payment may be presumed by the jury in the absence of direct evidence: thus, possession by the debtor of a security after the day of payment, which security is usually given up on payment of the debt, is primâ facie evidence of payment by the debtor. 1 Stark. 374; 9 Serg. & R. Penn. 385.

16. If an acceptor produce a bill of exchange, this is said to afford in England no presumption of payment unless it is shown to have been in circulation after he accepted it. 2 Campb. 439. See, also, 14 Mees. & W. Exch. 379. But in the United States such possession is primâ facie evidence of payment. 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 116; 4 Johns. N. Y. 296; 2 Pick. Mass. 204. Payment is also conclusively presumed from lapse of time. After twenty years' non-demand, unexplained, the court will presume a payment without the aid of a jury. 1 Campb. 27; 14 Serg. & R. Penn. 15; 6 Cow. N. Y. 401; 2 Cranch, 180. Facts which destroy the reason of this rule may rebut the presumption. 1 Pick. Mass. 60; 2 La. 481. And a jury may infer payment from a shorter lapse of time, especially if there be attendant circumstances favoring the presumption. 7 Serg. & R. Penn. 410. As to presumptions against the existence of the debt, see 5 Barb. N. Y. 63.

17. A presumption may arise from the course of dealing between the parties, or the regular course of trade: thus, after two years it was presumed that a workman had been paid, as it was shown that the employer paid his workmen every Saturday night, and this man had been seen waiting among others. 1 Esp. 296. See, also, 3 Campb. 10.

A receipt for the last year's or quarter's rent is primâ facie evidence of the payment of all the rents previously due. 2 Pick. Mass. 204. If the last instalment on a bond is paid in due form, it is evidence that the others have been paid; if paid in a different form, that the parties are acting under a new agreement.

Where receipts had been regularly given for the same amount, but for a sum smaller than was due by the agreement, it was held evidence of full payment. 4 Mart. La. 698.

18. Who may make payment. Payment may be made by the primary debtor, and by other persons from whom the creditor has a right to demand it.

An agent may make payment for his principal.

An attorney may discharge the debt against his client. 5 Bingh. 506. One of any number of joint and several obligors, or one of several joint obligors, may discharge the debt. Viner, Abr. Payment (B). Payment may be made by a third person, a stranger to the contract.

It may be stated, generally, that any act done by any person in discharge of the debt, if accepted by the creditor, will operate as payment. In the civil law there are many exceptions to this rule, introduced by the operation of the principle of subrogation. Most of these have no application in the common law, but have been adopted, in some instances, as a part of the law merchant. See SUBROGATION; CONTRIBUTION.

19. To whom payment may be made. Payment is to be made to the creditor. But it may be made to an authorized agent. And if made in the ordinary course of business, without notice requiring the payment to be made to himself, it is binding upon the principal. 11 East, 36; 6 Mann. & G. 166; Cowp. 257; 4 Barnew. & Ald. 395; 3 Stark. Cas. 16; 1 Campb. 477. Payment to a third person by appointment of the principal will be substantially payment to the principal. 1 Phillipps, Ev. 200. Payment to an agent who made the contract with the payee (without prohibition) is payment to the principal. 1 Campb. 339; 16 Johns. N. Y. 86; 2 Gall. C. C. 565; 10 Barnew. & C. 755. But payment may be made to the principal after authority given to an agent to receive. 6 Maule & S. 156. Payment to a broker or factor who sells for a principal not named is good. 11 East, 36. Payment to an agent when he is known to be such will be good if made upon the terms authorized, 11 East, 36, if there be no notice not to pay to him, 3 Bos. & P. 485; 15 East, 65; and even after notice, if the factor had a lien on the money when paid. 5 Barnew. & Ald. 27. If the broker sell goods as his own, payment is good though the mode varies from that agreed on. 11 East, 36; 1 Maule & S. 147; 2 Carr. & P. 49.

20. Payment to an attorney is as effectual as payment to the principal himself. 1 W. Blackst. 8; 1 Wash. C. C. 9; 1 Call, Va. 147. So, also, to a solicitor in chancery after a decree. 2 Chanc. Cas. 38. The attorney of record may give a receipt and discharge the judgment, 1 Call, Va. 147; 1 Coxe, N. J. 214; 1 Pick. Mass. 347; 10 Johns. N. Y. 220; 2 Bibb, Ky. 382, if made within one year. 1 Me. 257. Not so of an agent appointed by the attorney to collect the debt. 2 Dougl. 623. Payment by an officer to an attorney whose power had been revoked before he received the execution did not discharge the officer. 13 Mass. 465; 3 Yeates, Penn. 7. See, also, 1 Des. Ch. So. C. 461. Payment to one of two copartners discharges the debt, 8 Wend. N. Y. 542; 15 Ves. Ch. 198; 2 Blackf. Ind. 371; 1 Ill. 107; 6 Maule & S. 156; 1 Wash. C. C. 77, even after dissolution. 4 Carr. & P. 108. And see 7 N. H. 568. So payment to one of two joint creditors is good, though they are not partners. 4 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 367. But payment by a banker to one of several joint depositors without the assent of the others was held a void payment. 1 Mood. & R. 145; Ry. & M. 364; 4 Eng. L. & Eq. 342.

21. Payment to the wife of the creditor is not a discharge of the debt, unless she is expressly or impliedly his agent. 2 Scott, N. R. 372; 1 Add. Penn. 316; 2 Freem. 178; 22 Me. 335. An auctioneer employed to sell real estate has no authority to receive the purchase-money by virtue of that appointment merely. 1 Mood. & R. 326. Usually, the terms of sale authorize him to receive the purchase-money. 5 Mees. & W. Exch. 645. Payment was made to a person sitting in the creditor's counting-room and apparently doing his business, and it was held good, 1 Mood. & M. 200; 5 Taunt. 307; but payment to an apprentice so situated was held not to be good. 2 Crompt. & M. Exch. 304. Generally, payment to the agent must be made in money, to bind the principal. 11 Mod. 71; 10 Barnew. & C. 760. Power to receive money does not authorize an agent to commute, 1 Wash. C. C. 454; 1 Pick. Mass. 347, nor to submit to arbitration. 5 How. 891. See, also, Story, Ag. § 99.

22. An agent authorized to receive money cannot bind his principal by receiving goods, 4 Carr. & P. 501, or a note, 1 Salk. 442; 2 Ld. Raym. 928; 5 Mees. & W. Exch. 645; but a subsequent ratification would remedy any such departure from authority; and it is said that slight acts of acquiescence will be deemed ratification. Payment to one of several joint creditors of his part will not alter the nature of the debt so as to enable the others to sue separately. 4 Tyrwh. Exch. 488. Payment to one of several executors has been held sufficient. 3 Atk. Ch. 695. Payment to a trustee generally concludes the cestui que trust in law. 5 Barnew. & Ad. 96. Payment of a debt to a marshal or sheriff having custody of the person of the debtor does not satisfy the plaintiff. 2 Show. 129; 14 East, 418; 4 Barnew. & C. 32. Interest may be paid to a scrivener holding the mortgage-deed or bond, and also the principal, if he deliver up the bond; otherwise of a mortgage-deed as to the principal, for there must be a re-conveyance. 1 Salk. 157. It would seem, then, that in those states where no re-conveyance is needed, a payment of the principal to a person holding the security would be good, at least primâ facie.

Subsequent ratification of the agent's acts is equivalent to precedent authority to receive money. Pothier, Obl. n. 528.

23. When to be made. Payment must be made at the exact time agreed upon. This rule is held very strictly in law; but in equity payment will be allowed at a time subsequent, generally when damages can be estimated and allowed by way of interest. 8 East, 208; 3 Pick. Mass. 414; 5 id. 106, 187. Where payment is to be made at a future day, of course nothing can be demanded till the time of payment, and, if there be a condition precedent to the liability, not until the condition has been performed. And where goods had been sold "at six or nine months' credit," the debtor was allowed the option. 5 Taunt. 338.

Where no time of payment is specified, the money is to be paid immediately on demand. Viner, Abr. Payment (H); 1 Pet. 455; 4 Rand. Va. 346. When payment is to be made at a certain time, it may be made at a different time if the plaintiff will accept, Viner, Abr. Payment (H); and it seems that the debtor cannot compel the creditor to receive payment before the debt is due.

24. Where to be made. Payment must be made at the place agreed upon, unless both the parties consent to a change. If no place of payment is mentioned, the payer must seek out the payee. J. B. Moore, Priv. Counc. 274; Sheppard, Touchst. 378; 2 Brod. & B. 165; 2 Maule & S. 120; 2 Mees. & W. Exch. 223; 20 Eng. L. & Eq. 498.

So, too, the creditor is entitled to call for payment of the whole of his claim at one time, unless the parties have stipulated for payment in parcels.

Questions often arise in regard to the payment of debts and legacies by executors and administrators. These questions are generally settled by statute regulations. See Distributions; Executor; Administrator.

As a general rule, debts are to be paid first, then specific legacies. The personal property is made liable for the testator's debts, and, after that is exhausted, the real estate, under restrictions varying in the different states.

In the payment of mortgages, if the mortgage was made by the deceased, the personal estate is liable to discharge the mortgage debts. 2 Cruise, Dig. 147. But where the deceased acquired the land subject to the mortgage, his real estate must pay the debt. 2 Cruise, Dig. 164–168; 3 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 252; 2 P. Will. Ch. 664, n. 1; 2 Brown, Ch. 57; 5 Ves. Ch. 534; 14 id. 417. See Mortgage.

25. Effect of payment. The effect of payment is—first, to discharge the obligation; and it may happen that one payment will discharge several obligations by means of a transfer of the evidences of obligation. Pothier, Obl. 554, n. Second, payment does not prevent a recovery when made under a mistake of fact. The general rule is that mistake or ignorance of law furnishes no ground to reclaim money paid voluntarily under a claim of right. 2 Kent, Comm. 491; 2 Greenleaf, Ev. § 123. But acts done under a mistake or ignorance of an essential fact are voidable and relievable both in law and equity. Laws of a foreign country are matters of fact, Story, Const. §§ 407, 411; 9 Pick. Mass. 112; and the several United States are foreign to each other in this respect. See Conflict of Laws; Foreign Laws. In Kentucky and Connecticut there is a power of recovery equally in cases of mistake of law and of fact. 19 Conn. 548; 3 B. Monr. Ky. 510; 4 id. 190 In Ohio it may be remedied in equity. 11 Ohio, 223. In New York a distinction is taken between ignorance of law and mistake of law, giving relief in the latter case. 18 Wend. N. Y. 422; 2 Barb. Ch. N. Y. 508. In England, money paid under a mistake of law cannot be recovered back. 4 Ad. & E. 858.

26. Third, part payment of a note will have the effect of waiver of notice as to the whole sum. Fourth, payment of part of the debt will bar the application of the Statute of Limitations as to the residue, 22 N. H. 219; 6 Md. 201; 8 Mass. 134; 28 Eng. L. &. Eq. 454, even though made in goods and chattels. 2 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 337; 4 Ad. & E. 71; 4 Scott, N. R. 119. But it must be shown conclusively that the payment was made as part of a larger debt. 1 Crompt. M. & R. Exch. 252; 2 Bingh. N. C. 241; 6 Mees. & W. Exch. 824; 20 Miss. 663; 24 id. 92; 9 Ark. 455; 11 Barb. N. Y. 554; 24 Vt. 216. See, also, 2 Parsons, Contr. 353–359.

In Pleading. The name of a plea by which the defendant alleges that he has paid the debt claimed in the declaration: this plea must conclude to the country. See Chitty, Plead.

See, also, generally, Parsons, Story, and Chitty, on Contracts; Greenleaf, Phillipps, and Starkie, on Evidence; Story, Parsons, and Byles, on Bills and Notes; Greenleaf's Cruise, on Real Property; Kent, vol. iii.; Massé, Droit commerciel, vol. v. p. 229 et seq.; Domat, Civil Law; Pothier, on Obligation; Guyot, Répertoire Universelle, Payment; Comyns; Viner, Burn, and Dane, Abridgement, Payment.

PAYMENT INTO COURT. In Practice. Depositing a sum of money with the proper officer of the court by the defendant in a suit, for the benefit of the plaintiff and in answer to his claim.

It may be made in some states under statutory provisions, 18 Ala. 293; 7 Ill. 671; 1 Barb. N. Y. 21; 5 Harr. Del. 17; 24 Ga. 211; 16 Tex. 461; 11 Ind. 532; and see 3 Eng. L. & Eq. 185; 7 id. 152; and in most by a rule of court granted for the purpose, 2 Bail. So. C. 28; 7 Ired. No. C. 201; 1 Swan, Tenn. 92, in which case notice of an intention to apply must, in general, have been previously given.

The effect is to divest the plaintiff of all right to withdraw the money, 1 Wend. N. Y. 191; 1 E. D. Smith, N. Y. 398; 3 Watts, Penn. 248, except by leave of court, 1 Coxe, N. J. 298, and to admit conclusively every fact which the plaintiff would be obliged to prove in order to recover the money, 1 Barnew. & C. 3; 6 Mees. & W. Exch. 9; 2 Scott, N. S. 56; 9 Dowl. 21; 1 Dougl. Mich. 330; 24 Vt. 140; and see 7 Cush. Mass. 556; as, that the amount tendered is due, 1 Campb. 558; 2 id. 341; 5 Mass. 365; 2 Wend. N. Y. 431; 7 Johns. N. Y. 315, for the cause laid in the declaration, 5 Bingh. 28, 32; 2 Bos. & P. 550; 5 Pick. Mass. 285; 6 id. 340, to the plaintiff in the character in which he sues, 2 Campb. 441; the jurisdiction of the court, 5 Esp. 19; that the contract was made, 3 Campb. 52; 3 Taunt. 95, and broken as alleged, 1 Barnew. & C. 3, but only in reference to the amount paid in, 7 Johns. N. Y. 315; 3 Eng. L. & Eq. 548; and nothing beyond such facts. 1 Greenleaf, Ev. § 206. And see 2 Mann. & G. 208, 233; 5 Carr. & P. 247.

Generally, it relieves the defendant from the payment of costs until judgment is recovered for a sum larger than that paid in. 1 Wash. Va. 10; 3 Cow. N. Y. 36; 3 Wend. N. Y. 326; 2 Miles, Penn. 65; 2 Rich. So. C. 64; 24 Vt. 140. As to the capacity in which the officer receiving the money acts, see 1 Coxe, N. J. 298; 2 Bail. So. C. 28; 17 Ala. 293.

PAYS. Country. Trial per pays, trial by jury (the country). See PAIS.

PEACE. The concord or final agreement in a fine of lands. 18 Edw. I. modus levandi finis.

The tranquillity enjoyed by a political society, internally by the good order which reigns among its members, and externally by the good understanding it has with all other nations. Applied to the internal regulations of a nation, peace imports, in a technical sense, not merely a state of repose and security as opposed to one of violence or warfare, but likewise a state of public order and decorum. Hammond, Nisi P. 139; 12 Mod. 566. See, generally, Bacon, Abr. Prerogative (D 4); Hale, Hist. Comm. Pleas, 160; 3 Taunt. 14; 1 Barnew. & Ald. 227; Peake, 89; 1 Esp. 294; Harrison, Dig. Officer (V 4); 2 Bentham, Ev. 319, note; GOOD BEHAVIOR; SURETY OF THE PEACE.

PEACE OF GOD AND THE CHURCH. The freedom from suits at law between the terms. Spelman, Gloss.; Jacob, Law Dict.

PECK. A measure of capacity, equal to two gallons. See MEASURE.

PECULATION. In Civil Law. The unlawful appropriation by a depositary of public funds, of the property of the government intrusted to his care, to his own use or that of others. Domat, Suppl. au Droit Public, l. 3, tit. 5.

PECULIAR. In Ecclesiastical Law. A parish or church in England which has jurisdiction of ecclesiastical matters within itself and independent of the ordinary.

They may be either—

Royal, which include the sovereign's free chapels;

Of the archbishops, excluding the jurisdiction of the bishops and archdeacons;

Of the bishops, excluding the jurisdiction of the bishop of the diocese in which they are situated;

Of the bishops in their own diocese, excluding archdiaconal jurisdiction;

Of deans, deans and chapters, prebendaries, and the like, excluding the bishop's jurisdiction in consequence of ancient compositions.

The court of peculiars has jurisdiction of causes arising in such of these peculiars as are subject to the metropolitan of Canterbury. In other peculiars the jurisdiction is exercised by commissaries. 1 Phill. Eccl. 202, n., 245; Skinn. 589; 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 65.

PECULIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. The most ancient kind of peculium was the peculium profectitium of the Roman law, which signified that portion of the property acquired by a son or slave which the father or master allowed him, to be managed as he saw fit. In modern civil law there are other kinds of peculium, viz.: peculium castrense, which includes all movables given to a son by relatives and friends on his going on a campaign, all the presents of comrades, and his military pay and the things bought with it; peculium quasi-castrense, which includes all acquired by a son by performing the duties of a public or spiritual office or of an advocate, and also gifts from the reigning prince; peculium adventitium, which includes the property of son's mother and relatives on that side of the house, and all which comes to him on a second marriage of his parents, and, in general, all his acquisitions which do not come from his father's property and do not come under castrense or quasi-castrense peculium.

The peculium profectitium remains the property of the father. The peculium castrense and quasi-castrense are entirely the property of the son. The peculium adventitium belongs to the son; but he cannot alien it nor dispose of it by will; nor can the father, unless under peculiar circumstances, alien it without consent of son. Mackeldy, Civ. Law. §§ 557–559; Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Inst. 2. 9. 1; Dig. 15. 1. 5. 3; Pothier, ad Pand. lib. 50, tit. 17, c. 2, art. 3.

A master is not entitled to the extraordinary earnings of his apprentices which do not interfere with his services so as to affect the master's profits. An apprentice was therefore decreed to be entitled to salvage, in opposition to his master's claim for it. 2 Cranch, 270.

PECUNIA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Property, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal. Things in general (omnes res). So the law of the Twelve Tables said, uti quisque pater familias legasset super pecuniâ tutelare rei suæ, ita jus esto: in whatever manner a father of a family may have disposed of his property or of the tutorship of his things, let this disposition be law. 1 Leçons Elém. du Dr. Civ. Rom. 288. But Paulus, in l. 5, D. de verb. signif., gives it a narrower sense than res, which he says means what is not included within patrimony, pecunia what is. Vicat, Voc. Jur. In a still narrower sense, it means those things only which have measure, weight, and number, and most usually strictly money. Id. The general sense of property occurs, also, in the old English law. Leg. Edw. Confess. c. 10.

Flocks were the first riches of the ancients; and it is from pecus that the words pecunia, peculium, peculatus, are derived. In old English law pecunia often retains the force of pecus. So often in Domesday: pastura ibidem pecuniæ villæ, i.e. pasture for cattle of the village. So vivæ pecuniæ, live stock. Leg. Edw. Confess. c. 10; Emendat. Willielmi Primi ad Leges Edw. Confess.; Cowel.

PECUNIA NUMERATA (Lat.). Money given in payment of a debt. Properly used of the creditor, who is properly said to number, i.e. count out, the money to the debtor which he must pay, and improperly of the debtor, who is said to number or count out the money to the creditor, i.e. to pay it. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

PECUNIA NON-NUMERATA (Lat.). Money not paid or numbered. The exceptio non-numeratæ pecuniæ (plea of money not paid) is allowed to the principal or surety by the creditor. Calvinus, Lex.

PECUNIA TRAJECTITIA (Lat.). A loan of money which, either itself or in the shape of goods bought with it, is to be carried over the sea, the lender to take the risk from the commencement of voyage till arrival at port of destination, and on that account to have higher interest; which interest is not essential to the contract, but, if reserved, is called fœnus nauticum. Mackeldy, Civ. Law, § 398 b. The term fœnus nauticum is sometimes applied to the transaction as well as the interest, making it coextensive with pecunia trajectitia.

PECUNIARY. That which relates to money.

PECUNIARY CAUSES. Causes in ecclesiastical courts where satisfaction is sought for withholding ecclesiastical dues or the doing or neglecting some act connected with the church. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 88. For what causes are ecclesiastical, see 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 39.

PEDAGIUM (Lat. pes, foot). Money paid for passing by foot or horse through any forest or country. Pupilla oculi, p. 9, c. 7; Cassan de Coutum. Burgund. p. 118; Rot. Vasc. 22 Edw. III. m. 34.

PEDAULUS (Lat. pes, foot). In Civil Law. A judge who sat at the foot of the tribunal, i.e. on the lowest seats, ready to try matters of little moment at command of prætor. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

PEDIGREE. A succession of degrees from the origin: it is the state of the family as far as regards the relationship of the different members, their births, marriages, and deaths. This term is applied to persons or families who trace their origin or descent.

On account of the difficulty of proving in the ordinary manner, by living witnesses, facts which occurred in remote times, hearsay evidence has been admitted to prove a pedigree. See DECLARATION; HEARSAY.

PEDIS POSITIO (Lat. a planting or placing of the foot). A term used to denote an actual corporal possession. Possessio est quasi pedis positio: possession is as it were a planting of the foot. 3 Coke, 42; 8 Johns. N. Y., per Kent, C. J.; 5 Penn. St. 303; 2 Nev. & M. 343. See PEDIS POSSESSIO.

PEDIS POSSESSIO (Lat.). A foothold; an actual possession. To constitute adverse possession, there must be pedis possessio, or a substantial inclosure. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2193; 2 Nott. & M'C. So. C. 343.

PEDLARS. Persons who travel about the country with merchandise for the purpose of selling it.

Persons, except those peddling newspapers, Bibles, or religious tracts, who sell, or offer to sell, at retail, goods, wares, or other commodities, travelling from place to place, in the street, or through different parts of the country. Act of Congr. July 1, 1862.

They are obliged, under the laws of perhaps all the states, and of the United States, to take out licenses, and to conform to the regulations which those laws establish.

PEERS (Lat. pares). The vassals of a lord; the freeholders of a neighborhood, before whom livery of seisin was to be made, and before whom, as the jury of the county, trials were had. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 316. Trial by a man's peers or equals is one of the rights reserved by Magna Charta. 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 349. These vassals were called pares curiæ, which title see. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 23.

The nobility of England, who, though of different ranks, viz. dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons, yet are equal in their privilege of sitting and voting in the house of lords: hence they are called peers of the realm.

They are created by writ summoning them to attend the house of lords by the title intended to be given, or by letters patent directly conferring the dignity. The former is the more ancient way; but the grant by patent is more certain. See Sullivan, Lect. 19 a; 1 Wooddeson, Lect. 37.

Peers are tried by their peers in cases of treason, felony, and misprision of the same. In cases of treason, felony, and breach of the peace, they have no privilege from arrest. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 401*, n. 11.

Bishops who sit in parliament are peers; but the word spiritual is generally added· e.g. "lords temporal and spiritual." 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 401*, n. 12.

Peerage may be for life, which does not make the peer a lord of parliament, i.e. entitle him to a seat in the house of lords. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 401*, n. 10. A peerage is not transferable, except with consent of parliament. Id. A peerage is lost by attainder. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 412*.

PEINE FORTE ET DURE (L. Fr.). In English Law. A punishment formerly inflicted in England on a person who, being arraigned of felony, refused to plead and put himself on his trial, and stubbornly stood mute. He was to be laid down, naked, on his back, on the ground, his feet and head and loins covered, his arms and legs drawn apart by cords, and as much weight of iron or stone as he could bear placed on his chest. He was to have the next day three morsels of barley bread, without drink; the next, three draughts, as much each time as he could drink, of the nearest stagnant water to the prison, without bread; and such was to be his diet on alternate days, till he died. This punishment was vulgarly called pressing to death. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 134; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 324; Cowel; Britton, c. 4. fol. 11*. This punishment was introduced between 31 Edw. III. and 8 Hen. IV. 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 324; Year B. 8 Hen. IV. 1. Standing mute is now, by statute, in England, equivalent to a confession or verdict of guilty. 12 Geo. III. c. 20. See MUTE.

The only instance in which this punishment has ever been inflicted in this country is that of Giles Cory, of Salem, who refused to plead when arraigned as a witch. Washburn, Jud. Hist. 142; 1 Chandler, Crim. Trials, 122.

PELT WOOL. The wool pulled off the skin or pelt of a dead ram.

PENAL ACTION. An action for recovery of statute penalty. 3 Stephen, Comm. 535. See Hawkins, Pl. Cr. Informatio. It is distinguished from a popular or qui tam action, in which the action is brought by the informer, to whom part of the penalty goes. A penal action or information is brought by an officer, and the penalty goes to the king. 1 Chitty, Gen. Pract. 25, note; 2 Archbold, Pract. 188.

PENAL BILL. The old name for a bond with condition, by which a person is bound to pay a certain sum of money or do a certain act, or, in default thereof, pay a certain sum of money by way of penalty. Jacob, Law Dict. Bill.

PENAL STATUTES. Those which inflict a penalty for the violation of some of their provisions.

It is a rule of law that such statutes must be construed strictly. 1 Blackstone, Comm. 88; Espinasse, Pen. Actions, 1; Boscawen, Conv.; Croke Jac. 415; 1 Comyns, Dig. 444; 5 id. 360; 1 Kent, Comm. 467. They cannot, therefore, be extended by their spirit or equity to other offences than those clearly described and provided for. 1 Paine, C. C. 32; 6 Cranch, 171.

PENALTY. A clause in an agreement, by which the obligor agrees to pay a certain sum of money if he shall fail to fulfil the contract contained in another clause of the same agreement.

A penal obligation differs from an alternative obligation, for this is but one in its essence; while a penalty always includes two distinct engagements, and when the first is fulfilled the second is void. When a breach has taken place, the obligor has his option to require the fulfilment of the first obligation, or the payment of the penalty, in those cases which cannot be relieved in equity, when the penalty is considered as liquidated damages. Dalloz, Dict. Obligation avec Clause pénale.

A distinction is made in courts of equity between penalties and forfeitures. In cases of forfeiture for the breach of any covenant other than a covenant to pay rent, relief will not be granted in equity, unless upon the ground of accident, fraud, mistake, or surprise, when the breach is capable of compensation. Eden, Inj. 22; 3 Ves. Ch. 692; 16 id. 403; 18 id. 58; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3915.

For the distinction between a penalty and liquidated damages, see LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

The penalty remains unaffected although the condition may have been partially performed: as, in a case where the penalty was one thousand dollars, and the condition was to pay an annuity of one hundred dollars, which had been paid for ten years, the penalty was still valid. 5 Vt. 355.

The punishment inflicted by law for its violation. The term is mostly applied to a pecuniary punishment. See 6 Pet. 404; 7 Wheat. 13; 10 id. 246; 1 Wash. C. C. 1; 2 id. 323; 1 Paine, C. C. 661; 1 Gall. C. C. 26; 2 id. 515; 1 Mas. C. C. 243; 3 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 297; 7 Johns. N. Y. 72; 1 Pick. Mass. 451; 4 Mass. 433; 8 id. 232; 15 id. 488; 8 Comyns, Dig. 846; 16 Viner, Abr. 301; 1 Vern. Ch. 83, n.; 1 Saund. 58, n.; 1 Swanst. Ch. 318. See, generally, Bouvier, Inst. Index.

PENANCE. In Ecclesiastical Law. An ecclesiastical punishment inflicted by an ecclesiastical court for some spiritual offence. Ayliffe, Parerg. 420.

PENCIL. An instrument made of plumbago, red chalk, or other suitable substance, for writing without ink.

It has been holden that a will written with a pencil could not on this account be annulled. 1 Phill. Eccl. 1; 2 id. 173.

PENDENTE LITE (Lat.). Pending the continuance of an action while litigation continues.

An administrator is appointed pendente lite, when a will is contested. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1557. See ADMINISTRATOR; LIS PENDENS.

PENDENTES (Lat.). In Civil Law The fruits of the earth not yet separated from the ground; the fruits hanging by the roots. Erskine, Inst. b. 2, lit. 2, s. 4.

PENETRATION. The act of inserting the penis into the female organs of generation. 9 Carr. & P. 118. See 5 Carr. & P. 321; 8 id. 614; 9 id. 31. It was once held that in order to commit the crime of rape it is requisite that the penetration should be such as to rupture the hymen. 5 Carr. & P. 321. But this case has since been expressly overruled. 2 Mood. Cr. Cas. 90; 9 Carr. & P. 752.

This has been denied to be sufficient to constitute a rape without emission. The statute 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, § 18, enacts that the carnal knowledge shall be deemed complete upon proof of penetration only. Statutes to the same effect have been passed in some of the United States; but these statutes have been thought to be merely declaratory of the common law. 3 Greenleaf, Ev. § 210. See, on this subject, 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 628; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 437; 1 Chitty, Med. Jur. 386–395; 1 Russell, Crim. Law, 860; RAPE.

PENITENTIARY. A prison for the punishment of convicts.

There are two systems of penitentiaries in the United States, each of which is claimed to be the best by its partisans,—the Pennsylvania system and the New York system. By the former, convicts are lodged in separate, well-lighted, and well-ventilated cells, where they are required to work during stated hours. During the whole time of their confinement they are never permitted to see or speak with each other. Their usual employments are shoemaking, weaving, winding yarn, picking wool, and such like business. The only punishments to which convicts are subject are the privation of food for short periods, and confinement without labor in dark but well-aired cells: this discipline has been found sufficient to keep perfect order; the whip and all other corporeal punishments are prohibited. The advantages of the plan are numerous. Men cannot long remain in solitude without labor; convicts, when deprived of it, ask it as a favor, and, in order to retain it, use, generally, their best exertions to do their work well; being entirely secluded, they are of course unknown to their fellow-prisoners, and can form no combination to escape while in prison, or associations to prey upon society when they are out; being treated with kindness, and afforded books for their instruction and amusement, they become satisfied that society does not make war upon them, and more disposed to return to it, which they are not prevented from doing by the exposure of their fellow-prisoners when in a strange place; the labor of the convicts tends greatly to defray the expenses of the prison. The disadvantages which were anticipated have been found to be groundless. Among these were that the prisoners would be unhealthy; experience has proved the contrary: that they would become insane; this has also been found to be otherwise: that solitude is incompatible with the performance of business: that obedience to the discipline of the prison could not be enforced. These, and all other objections to this system, are by its friends believed to be without force.

The New York system, adopted at Auburn, which was probably copied from the penitentiary at Ghent, in the Netherlands, called La Maison de Force, is founded on the system of isolation and separation, as well as that of Pennsylvania, but with this difference, that in the former the prisoners are confined to their separate cells during the night only; during the working-hours in the daytime they labor together in workshops appropriated to their use. They eat their meals together, but in such a manner as not to be able to speak with each other. Silence is also imposed upon them at their labor. They perform the labor of carpenters, blacksmiths, weavers, shoemakers, tailors, coopers, gardeners, wood-sawyers, etc. The discipline of the prison is enforced by stripes, inflicted by the assistant keepers, on the backs of the prisoners; though this punishment is rarely exercised. The advantages of this plan are that the convicts are in solitary confinement during the night; that their labor, by being joint, is more productive; that, inasmuch as a clergyman is employed to preach to the prisoners, the system affords an opportunity for mental and moral improvements. Among the objections made to it are that the prisoners have opportunities of communicating with each other and of forming plans of escape, and, when they are out of prison, of associating together in consequence of their previous acquaintance, to the detriment of those who wish to return to virtue, and to the danger of the public; that the discipline is degrading, and that it engenders bitter resentment in the mind of the convict.

PENNSYLVANIA. One of the thirteen original states of the United States of America.

It received its name from a royal charter, granted by Charles II. to William Penn on the 4th of March, 1681. By that charter William Penn was constituted the proprietary and governor of the territory. The first frame of government was adopted on the 20th of April, 1682. This was amended in 1683, again in 1696, and again in 1701. The organic law, as adopted in 1701, continued the supreme law of the province during the residue of the proprietary government. In 1776, after the declaration of American independence, a constitution was formed adapted to the altered circumstances of the country, which continued in force until 1790, when a new one was substituted. This was amended in 1838 by the introduction of some very radical changes. Other amendments were made in 1850, in 1857, and in 1864.

The form of government established by the constitution is republican. Legislative, executive, and judicial powers are committed to three distinct departments, neither of which can exercise the powers of any other department.

The legislative power is vested in a general assembly, consisting of a senate and house of representatives.

The supreme executive power is vested in a governor.

All judicial power is vested in a supreme court, in courts of oyer and terminer and general jail delivery, in a court of common pleas, orphans' court, register's court, and court of quarter sessions of the peace, for each county, in justices of the peace, and in such other courts as the legislature may from time to time establish.

The members of the senate and house of representatives, the governor, and all judicial officers, are elected by the people, and they hold their offices during limited periods. All elections are by ballot, except those made by persons acting in a representative character. Every white freeman, a citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, having resided in the state one year and in the election district where he offers to vote ten days immediately preceding the election, and having within two years paid a state or county tax assessed at least ten days before the election, is entitled to the rights of an elector; and a citizen of the United States, who had previously been a qualified voter of the state, and removed therefrom and returned, is entitled to vote after a new residence within the state for six months, if he has resided in the election district and paid taxes as aforesaid. White freemen, citizens of the United States, between the ages of twenty-one and twenty-two, are entitled to vote without the payment of taxes, subject to the restrictions respecting residence already mentioned. Qualified electors in actual military service of the United States or of the state, under a requisition from the president of the United States or under authority of the commonwealth, are also entitled to vote, under regulations prescribed by law, without being present at their usual place of election.

The general election is held on the second Tuesday of October in each year.

The house of representatives consists of one hundred members, chosen annually. They are apportioned and distributed every seventh year throughout the state, by districts, in proportion to the number of taxable inhabitants therein. No person is eligible to the house of representatives who has not attained to the age of twenty-one years, and been a citizen and inhabitant of the state three years next preceding the election, and the last of the three years an inhabitant of the district in and for which he shall be chosen a representative, unless he shall have been absent on the public business of the United States or of the state.

The number of the senators is fixed by the legislature at the several periods of making the septennial enumeration of taxables. It can never be less than one-fourth nor greater than one-third of the number of the members of the house of representatives. It is at present thirty-three. The senators are chosen in districts formed by the legislature. No county can be divided in forming a district; and no district can be entitled to more than two senators, unless the number of taxables in any city or county is such as to entitle it to elect more than two. No city or county, however, is entitled to elect more than four. The city of Philadelphia is divided into single senatorial districts. Senators hold their offices three years, and one-third of the members of the senate are elected each year. No person is eligible as a senator who has not attained the age of twenty-five years, and been a citizen and inhabitant of the state four years next before his election, and the last year thereof an inhabitant of the district for which he shall be chosen, unless he shall have been absent on the public business of the United States or of the state. No person can hold the office of senator after his removal from the district for which he was chosen.

The powers and privileges of the legislature do not differ materially from those which belong to the legislatures of the other states of the United States. There are numerous restrictions imposed by the constitution upon general power to legislate, and most of the essential provisions of Magna Charta have been incorporated into it.

The supreme executive power of the state is vested in a governor, who is chosen by the electors qualified to elect members of the legislature. His term of office is three years from the third Tuesday of January next ensuing his election, and he is incapable of holding it more than six years in any term of nine years. He must be at least thirty years of age; and he must have been a citizen and an inhabitant of the state seven years next before his election, unless he shall have been absent on the public business of the United States or of the state. No member of congress or person holding any office under the United States or of the state can exercise the office of governor.

The governor is ex officio commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the commonwealth, and of the militia, except when they are called into the actual service of the United States. It is his duty to see that the laws of the commonwealth are executed. He appoints a secretary of the commonwealth during pleasure. He appoints also an attorney-general. He has power to fill all vacancies in judicial offices in courts of record, and his appointees continue in office until the first Monday of December succeeding the next general election. All commissions must be in the name and by authority of the commonwealth, and be sealed with the state seal and signed by the governor. He has also power to remit fines and forfeitures, and grant reprieves and pardons, except in cases of impeachment. He may convene the legislature on extraordinary occasions, and, in case of disagreement between the two houses with respect to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he may think proper, not more remote than four months. It is made his duty to communicate to the legislature from time to time information of the state of the commonwealth, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he may deem expedient. He has a veto power over every bill passed by the legislature; but if, notwithstanding his objection, two-thirds of both houses agree to the bill after reconsideration, it becomes a law.

In case of the death or resignation of the governor, or his removal from office, the office devolves upon the speaker of the senate until another governor is duly qualified; but in such a case, another governor is to be chosen at the next annual election occurring more than three months after such death, resignation, or removal. In case of a contested election, if the trial continue longer than until the third Tuesday of January next ensuing the day of the general election, the governor of the last year or the speaker of the senate who may then be in the exercise of the executive authority, continues therein until the determination of such contested election, and until a governor shall be qualified.

The supreme court is the highest judicial tribunal of the state. It is composed of five judges, who hold their offices for the term of fifteen years, if they so long behave themselves well. The judge whose commission will first expire is the chief justice; but if two or more commissions expire on the same day, the judges holding such commissions decide by lot which shall be chief justice. The jurisdiction of the court extends over the state, and the judges are, ex officio, justices of oyer and terminer and general jail delivery in the several counties. The court is principally a court of errors and appeals, and its writs run to all other courts in the state. It has also a limited original jurisdiction within the city and county of Philadelphia, and original jurisdiction in equity extending over the commonwealth. It holds its sessions once in each year at least, in Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Harrisburg, and Sunbury, for the adjudication of writs of error and appeals.

For the courts of common pleas, the state is divided into twenty-six districts; these districts are subject to change by the legislature, but no more than five counties can at any time be included in one judicial district. The president judges of these courts, and all other judges thereof that are required to be learned in the law, as well as such judges of other courts of record as may from time to time be established by the legislature, hold their offices for the term of ten years if they so long behave themselves well. In each county they are, ex officio, justices of oyer and terminer and general jail delivery for the trial of capital and other offenders therein; but they have no power to hold a court of oyer and terminer out of their proper districts, nor can they hold such a court in any county when the judges of the supreme court, or any of them, are sitting in the same county.

The orphans' court and the court of quarter sessions of the peace for each county are composed of the judges of the court of common pleas for the county, or any two of them; and the register of wills, together with the said judges, or two of them, compose the register's court.

Associate judges of the court of common pleas are elected in each county. They are not generally required to be learned in the law: when not so required, they hold their offices for the term of five years, if they so long behave themselves well.

The legislature has also established two district courts, one for the city and county of Philadelphia and one for the county of Alleghany.

Most civil issues are tried by the courts of common pleas and by the district courts, and the decisions of those courts are reviewable in the supreme court. A register's office for the probate of wills and granting letters of administration, and, also, an office for recording deeds, are maintained in each county. Appeals may be taken from decrees of the register to the register's court. The orphans' courts have general jurisdiction over the settlement of decedents' estates and the accounts of executors, administrators, and guardians, subject, however, to an appellate jurisdiction in the supreme court.

Civil writs issue, generally, from the offices of the clerks of the courts in each county; and the style of all process is required to be "The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania."

PENNY. The name of an English coin, of the value of one-twelfth part of a shilling.

While the United States were colonies, each adopted a monetary system composed of pounds, shillings, and pence. The penny varied in value in the different colonies.

PENNYWEIGHT. A troy weight which weighs twenty-four grains, or one-twentieth part of an ounce. See WEIGHTS.

PENSION. A stated and certain allowance granted by the government to an individual, or those who represent him, for valuable services performed by him for the country. The government of the United States has, by general laws, granted pensions to revolutionary soldiers, see 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 68, 101, 224, 304, 363, 371, 451; 2 id. 903, 915, 983, 1008, 1240; 3 id. 1662, 1747, 1778, 1794, 1825, 1927; 4 id. 2112, 2270, 2329, 2336, 2366; to naval officers and sailors, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 474, 677, 769; 2 id. 1284; 3 id. 1565; to the army generally, 1 id. 360, 412, 448; 2 id. 833; 3 id. 1573; to the militia generally, 1 id. 255, 360, 412, 488; 2 id. 1382; 3 id. 1873; in the Seminole war. 3 id. 1706. See Act of Congr. July 14, 1862, 12 U. S. Stat. at Large, 566; July 4, 1864, 13 U. S. Stat. at Large, 387.

PENSIONER. One who is supported by an allowance at the will of another. It is more usually applied to him who receives an annuity or pension from the government.

PEONIA. In Spanish Law. A portion of land which was formerly given to a simple soldier on the conquest of a country. It is now a quantity of land of different size in different provinces. In the Spanish possessions in America it measured fifty feet front and one hundred feet deep. 2 White, Coll. 49; 12 Pet. 444, notes.

PEOPLE. A state: as, the people of the state of New York. A nation in its collective and political capacity. 4 Term, 783. See 6 Pet. 467.

The word people occurs in a policy of insurance. The insurer insures against "detainments of all kings, princes, and people." He is not by this understood to insure against any promiscuous or lawless rabble which may be guilty of attacking or detaining a ship. 2 Marshall, Ins. 508. See BODY POLITIC; NATION.

PER. By. When a writ of entry is sued out against the alienee, or descendant of the original disseisor, it is then said to be brought in the per, because the writ states that the tenant had not the entry but by the original wrong-doer. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 181. See ENTRY, WRIT OF.

PER ÆS ET LIBRAM (Lat. æs, brass, libram, scale). In Civil Law. A sale was said to be made per æs et libram when one called libripens held a scale (libra), which the one buying struck with a brazen coin (æs), and said, "I say, by the right of a Roman, this thing is mine," and gave the coin to the vendor, in presence of at least three witnesses. This kind of sale was used in the emancipation of a son or slave, and in making a will. Calvinus, Lex. Mancipatio; Vicat, Voc. Jur. Mancipatio.

PER ALLUVIONEM (Lat.). In Civil Law. By alluvion, or the gradual and imperceptible increase arising from deposit by water. Vocab. Jur. Utr. Alluvio; Angell & A. Waterc. 53–57.

PER ANNULUM ET BACULUM (Lat.). In Ecclesiastical Law. The symbolical investiture of an ecclesiastical dignity was per annulum et baculum, i.e. by staff and crosier. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 378, 379; 1 Burn, Eccl. Law, 209.

PER AVERSIONEM (Lat.). In Civil Law. By turning away. Applied to a sale not by measure or weight, but for a single price for the whole in gross: e.g. a sale of all the wine of a vineyard for a certain price. Vocab. Jur. Utr. Aversio. Some derive the meaning of the phrase from a turning away of the risk of a deficiency in the quantity from the seller to the buyer; others, from turning away the head, i.e. negligence in the sale; others think aversio is for adversio. Calvinus, Lex.; 2 Kent, Comm. 640; 4 id. 517.

PER CAPITA (Lat. by the head or polls). When descendants take as individuals, and not by right of representation (per stirpes), they are said to take per capita. For example, if a legacy be given to the issue of A B, and A B at the time of his death shall have two children and two grandchildren, his estate shall be divided into four parts, and the children and grandchildren shall each have one of them. 3 Ves. Ch. 257; 13 id. 344; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 218; 6 Cush. Mass. 158, 162; 2 Jarman, Wills, Perkins' Notes, 47; 3 Beav. Rolls, 451; 4 id. 239; 2 Stephen, Comm. 253; 3 id. 197; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 114.

PER AND CUI. When a writ of entry is brought against a second alienee or descendant from the disseisor, it is said to be in the per and cui, because the form of the writ is that the tenant had not entry but by and under a prior alienee, to whom the intruder himself demised it. 2 Blackstone, Comm. 181. See ENTRY, WRIT OF.

PER CURIAM (Lat. by the court). A phrase which occurs in all the reports. It is sometimes translated. See 3 Barb. N. Y. 353.

PER FORMAM DONI (Lat. by the form of the gift). According to the line of descent prescribed in the conveyance of the ancestor or donor of estate-tail. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 113*; 3 Harr. & J. Md. 323; 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 74, 81.

PER FRAUDEM (Lat.). A replication to a plea where something has been pleaded which would be a discharge if it had been honestly pleaded that such a thing has been obtained by fraud: for example, where, on debt on a statute, the defendant pleads a prior action depending, if such action has been commenced by fraud the plaintiff may reply per fraudem. 2 Chitty, Plead. *675.

PER INFORTUNIUM (Lat. by misadventure). In Criminal Law. Homicide per infortunium, or by misadventure, is said to take place when a man in doing a lawful act, without any intent to hurt, unfortunately kills another. Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 11; Foster, Crim. Law, 258, 259; Coke, 3d Inst. 56.

PER MINAS (Lat. by threats). When a man is compelled to enter into a contract by threats or menaces, either for fear of loss of life or mayhem, he may avoid it afterwards. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 131; Bacon, Abr. Duress, Murder (A). See DURESS.

PER MY ET PER TOUT (Law Fr. by the moiety, or half, and by the whole). The mode in which joint tenants hold the joint estate, the effect of which, technically considered, is that for purposes of tenure and survivorship each is the holder of the whole, but for purposes of alienation each has only his own share, which is presumed in law to be equal. 1 Washburn, Real Prop. 406; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 182.

PER QUOD CONSORTIUM AMISIT (Lat. by which he lost her company). If a man's wife is so badly beaten or ill used that thereby he loses her company and assistance for any time, he has a separate remedy by an action of trespass (in the nature of an action on the case) per quod consortium amisit, in which he shall recover satisfaction in damages. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 140; Croke Jac. 501, 538; 1 Chitty, Gen. Pract. 59.

PER QUOD SERVITIUM AMISIT (Lat. by which he lost her or his service). Where a servant has been so beaten or injured that his or her services are lost to the master, the master has an action of trespass vi et armis, per quod servitium amisit, in which he must allege and prove the special damage he has sustained. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 142. This action is commonly brought by the father for the seduction of his daughter, in which case very slight evidence of the relation of master and servant is necessary; but still some loss of service, or some expense, must be shown. 5 East, 45; 6 id. 391; 11 id. 23; T. Raym. 459; 3 Wils. 18; 2 Term, 4; 5 Bos. & P. 466; Peake, 253; 1 Stark. 287; 2 id. 493; 3 Esp. 119; 5 Price, Exch. 641; 11 Ga. 603; 15 Barb. N. Y. 279; 18 id. 212; 8 N. Y. 191; 11 id. 343; 14 id. 413; 20 Penn. St. 354; 5 Md. 211; 1 Wisc. 209; 3 Sneed, Tenn. 29.

PER STIRPES (Lat. stirps, trunk or root of a tree or race). By or according to stocks or roots; by right of representation. Mass. Gen. Stat. 1860, c. 9, § 12; 6 Cush. Mass. 158, 162; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 217, 218; 2 Stephen, Comm. 253; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 114, 115; 2 Kent, Comm. 425.

PER UNIVERSITATEM (Lat. by the whole). Used of the acquisition of any property as a whole, in opposition to an acquisition by parts: e.g. the acquisition of an inheritance, or of the separate property of the son (peculium), etc. Calvinus, Lex. Universitas.

PERAMBULATIONE FACIENDA, WRIT DE. In English Law. The name of a writ which is sued by consent of both parties when they are in doubt as to the bounds of their respective estates: it is directed to the sheriff to make perambulation, and to set the bounds and limits between them in certainty. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 309.

"The writ de perambulatione faciendâ is not known to have been adopted in practice in the United States," says Professor Greenleaf, Ev. § 146, n.; "but in several of the states remedies somewhat similar in principle have been provided by statutes."

PERCEPTION (From per and capere). The taking possession of. For example, a lessee or tenant before perception of the crops, i.e. before harvesting them, has a right to offset any loss which may happen to them, against the rent; but after the perception they are entirely at his risk. Mackeldy, Civil Law, § 378. Used of money, it means the counting out and payment of a debt. Also used for food due to soldiers. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

PERCH. The length of sixteen feet and a half; a pole or rod of that length. Forty perches in length and four in breadth make an acre of land.

PERDONATIO UTLAGARIÆ (Lat.). In English Law. A pardon for a man who, for contempt in not yielding obedience to the process of the king's courts, is outlawed, and afterwards, of his own accord, surrenders.

PERDUELLIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. At first, an honorable enmity to the republic; afterwards, a traitorous enmity of a citizen; consisting in being of a hostile disposition towards the republic, e.g. treason aiming at the supreme power, violating the privileges of a Roman citizen by beating him, etc., attempting any thing against the person of the emperor, and, in general, any open hostility to the republic. Sometimes used for the enemy or traitor himself. Perduellio was distinguished from crimen imminutæ majestatis, as being an attempt against the whole republic, punishable in comitia centuriata, by crucifixion and by infamy after death. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

PEREGRINI (Lat.). In Civil Law. Under the denomination of peregrini were comprehended all who did not enjoy any capacity of the law, namely, slaves, alien enemies, and such foreigners as belonged to nations with which the Romans had not established relations. Savigny, Dr. Rom. § 66.

PEREMPTORIUS (Lat. from perimere, to destroy). In Civil Law. That which takes away or destroys forever: hence, exceptio peremptoria, a plea which is a perpetual bar. See PEREMPTORY. Bracton, lib. 4, c. 20; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 36, § 3; Calvinus, Lex.

PEREMPTORY. Absolute; positive. A final determination to act, without hope of renewing or altering. Joined to a substantive, this word is frequently used in law: as, peremptory action, Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 35, 38, 104, 108; peremptory nonsuit, id. 5, 11; peremptory exception, Bracton, lib. 4, c. 20; peremptory undertaking, 3 Chitty. Pract. 112, 793; peremptory challenge of jurors. Inst. 4. 13. 9; Code, 7. 50. 2; 8. 36. 8; Dig. 5. 1. 70. 73.

PEREMPTORY CHALLENGE. A challenge without cause given, allowed to prisoner's counsel in criminal cases, up to a certain number of jurors. 11 Chitty, Stat. 59, 689; 2 Hargrave, St. Tr. 808; 4 id. 1; Foster, Crim. Law, 42; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 353*.

PEREMPTORY DEFENCE. A defence which insists that the plaintiff never had the right to institute the suit, or that, if he had, the original right is extinguished or determined. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4206.

PEREMPTORY EXCEPTION. Any defence which denies entirely the ground of action. 1 White, New Recop. 283. So of a demurrer. 1 Tex. 364.

PEREMPTORY MANDAMUS. A mandamus requiring a thing to be done absolutely. It is usually granted after failure to show satisfactory cause on an alternative mandamus. No other return will be permitted but absolute obedience. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 110*; Tapping, Mand. 400 et seq. See MANDAMUS.

PEREMPTORY PLEA. A plea which goes to destroy the right of action itself; a plea in bar or to the action. 3 Stephen, Comm. 576; 3 Wooddeson, Lect. 57; 2 Saunders, Plead. & Ev 645; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2891.

PERFECT. Complete.

This term is applied to obligations in order to distinguish those which may be enforced by law, which are called perfect, from those which cannot be so enforced, which are said to be imperfect.

PERFIDY. The act of one who has engaged his faith to do a thing, and does not do it, but does the contrary. Wolff, § 390.

PERFORMANCE. The act of doing something. The thing done is also called a performance: as, Paul is exonerated from the obligation of his contract by its performance.

When a contract has been made by parol, which under the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries could not be enforced, because it was not in writing, and the party seeking to avoid it has received the whole or a part performance of such agreement, he cannot afterwards avoid it, 14 Johns. N. Y. 15; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 273; and such part performance will enable the other party to prove it aliunde. 1 Pet. C. C. 380; 1 Rand. Va. 165; 1 Blackf. Ind. 58; 2 Day, Conn. 255; 5 id. 67; 1 Des. So. C. 350; 1 Binn. Penn. 218; 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 131, 146; 3 Paige, Ch. N. Y. 545.

PERIL. The accident by which a thing is lost. Leçons Elém. Dr. Rom. § 911.

In Insurance. The risk, contingency, or cause of loss insured against, in a policy of insurance. See RISK; INSURANCE.

PERILS OF THE SEA. A phrase contained in bills of lading, and a class of dangers to goods carried, the effects of which the carriers do not undertake to insure against in virtue of their general undertaking.

2. Bills of lading generally contain an exception that the carrier shall not be liable for "perils of the sea." What is the precise import of this phrase is not, perhaps, very exactly settled. In a strict sense, the words perils of the sea denote the natural accidents peculiar to the sea; but in more than one instance they have been held to extend to events not attributable to natural causes. For instance, they have been held to include a capture by pirates on the high sea, and a case of loss by collision of two ships, where no blame is imputable to the injured ship. Abbott, Shipp. pt. 3, c. 4, §§ 1–6; Park, Ins. c. 3; Marshall, Ins. b. 1, c. 7, p. 214; 1 Bell, Comm. 579; 3 Kent, Comm. 299–307; 3 Esp. 67.

It has indeed been said that by perils of the sea are properly meant no other than inevitable perils or accidents upon the sea, and that by such perils or accidents common carriers are primâ facie excused, whether there be a bill of lading containing the expression of "peril of the sea" or not. 1 Conn. 487.

3. It seems that the phrase perils of the sea, on the western waters of the United States, signifies and includes perils of the river. 8 Ala. 176.

If the law be so, then the decisions upon the meaning of these words become important in a practical view in all cases of maritime or water carriage.

4. It seems that a loss occasioned by leakage which is caused by rats gnawing a hole in the bottom of the vessel is not, in the English law, deemed a loss by peril of the sea or by inevitable casualty. 1 Wils. 281; 4 Campb. 203. But if the master had used all reasonable precautions to prevent such loss, as by having a cat on board, it seems agreed it would be a peril of the sea or inevitable accident. Abbott, Shipp. pt. 3, c. 3, § 9. But see 3 Kent, Comm. 299–301. In conformity to this rule, the destruction of goods at sea by rats has, in Pennsylvania, been held a peril of the sea, where there has been no default in the carrier. 1 Binn. Penn. 592. But see 6 Cow. N. Y. 266; 3 Kent. Comm. 248, n. c. On the other hand, the destruction of a ship's bottom by worms in the course of a voyage has, both in America and England, been deemed not to be a peril of the sea, upon the ground, it would seem, that it is a loss by ordinary wear and decay. Park, Ins. c. 3; 1 Esp. 444; 2 Mass. 429. But see 2 Caines, N. Y. 85. See, generally, Act of God; Fortuitous Event; Marshall, Ins. ch. 7, ch. 12, § 1; Phillips, Ins.; Parsons, Marit. Law.

PERIPHRASIS. Circumlocution; the use of other words to express the sense of one.

Some words are so technical in their meaning that in charging offences in indictments they must be used or the indictment will not be sustained: for example, an indictment for treason must contain the word traitorously; an indictment for burglary, burglariously; and feloniously must be introduced into every indictment for felony. 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 242; Coke, 3d Inst. 15; Carth. 319; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 172, 184; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 307; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 25, s. 55; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 115; Bacon, Abr. Indictment (G 1); Comyns, Dig. Indictment (G 6); Croke Car. c. 37.

PERISH. To come to an end; to cease to be; to die.

What has never existed cannot be said to have perished.

When two or more persons die by the same accident, as a shipwreck, no presumption arises that one perished before the other.

PERISHABLE GOODS. Goods which are lessened in value and become worse by being kept.

PERJURY. In Criminal Law. A wilful false oath by one who, being lawfully required to depose the truth in any judicial proceeding, swears absolutely in a matter material to the point in question, whether he be believed or not.

The wilful giving, under oath in a judicial proceeding or course of justice, of false testimony material to the issue or point of inquiry. 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 860.

2. The intention must be wilful. The oath must be taken and the falsehood asserted with deliberation and a consciousness of the nature of the statement made; for if it has arisen in consequence of inadvertency, surprise, or mistake of the import of the question, there was no corrupt motive. Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 69, s. 2; Croke Eliz. 492; 2 Show. 165; 4 McLean, C. C. 113; 3 Dev. No. C. 114; 7 Dowl. & R. 665; 5 Barnew. & C. 346; 7 Carr. & P. 17; 11 Q. B. 1028; 1 Rob. Va. 729; 3 Ala. N. S. 602. But one who swears wilfully and deliberately to a matter which he rashly believes, which is false, and which he had no probable cause for believing, is guilty of perjury. 6 Binn. Penn. 249. See 1 Baldw. C. C. 370; 1 Bail. So. C. 50; 4 McLean, C. C. 113.

3. The oath must be false. The party must believe that what he is swearing is fictitious; and if, intending to deceive, he asserts that which may happen to be true, without any knowledge of the fact, he is equally criminal, and the accidental truth of his evidence will not excuse him. Coke, 3d Inst. 166; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 69, s. 6. See 4 Mo. 47; 4 Zabr. N. J. 455; 9 Barb. N. Y. 467; 1 Carr. & K. 519. As, if a man swears that C D revoked his will in his presence, if he really had revoked it, but it was unknown to the witness that he had done so, it is perjury. Hetl. 97.

4. The party must be lawfully sworn. The person by whom the oath is administered must have competent authority to receive it: an oath, therefore, taken before a private person, or before an officer having no jurisdiction, will not amount to perjury. "For where the court hath no authority to hold plea of the cause, but it is coram non judice, there perjury cannot be committed." 1 Ind. 232; 1 Johns. N. Y. 498; 9 Cow. N. Y. 30; 3 M'Cord, So. C. 308; 4 id. 165; 3 Carr. & P. 419; 4 Hawks, No. C. 182; 1 Nott & M'C. So. C. 546; 3 M'Cord, So. C. 308; 2 Hayw. No. C. 56; 8 Pick. Mass. 453; 12 Q. B. 1026; Dearsl. Cr. Cas. 251; 2 Russell, Crimes, 520; Coke, 3d Inst. 166.

5. The proceedings must be judicial. 5 Mo. 21; 1 Bail. So. C. 595; 11 Metc. Mass. 406; 5 Humphr. Tenn. 83; 1 Johns. N. Y. 49; Wright, Ohio, 173; Russ. & R. 459. Proceedings before those who are in any way intrusted with the administration of justice, in respect of any matter regularly before them, are considered as judicial for this purpose. 2 Russell, Crimes, 518; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 69, s. 3. See 3 Yeates, Penn. 414; 9 Pet. 238; 2 Conn. 40; 11 id. 408; 4 M'Cord, So. C. 165. Perjury cannot be committed where the matter is not regularly before the court. 4 Hawks, No. C. 182; 2 Hayw. No. C. 56; 3 M'Cord, So. C. 308; 8 Pick. Mass. 453; 1 Nott & M'C. So. C. 546; 9 Mo. 824; 18 Barb. N. Y. 407; 10 Johns. N. Y. 167; 26 Me. 33; 7 Blackf. Ind. 25; 5 Barnew. & Ald. 634; 1 Carr. & P. 258; 9 id. 513.

6. The assertion must be absolute. If a man, however, swears that he believes that to be true which he knows to be false, it will be perjury. 10 Q. B. 670; 3 Wils. 427; 2 W. Blackst. 881; 1 Leach, 242; 6 Binn. Penn. 249; Gilbert, Ev. Lofft ed. 662. It is immaterial whether the testimony is given in answer to a question or voluntarily. 3 Zabr. N. J. 49; 12 Metc. Mass. 225. Perjury cannot be assigned upon the valuation, under oath, of a jewel or other thing the value of which consists in estimation. Sid. 146; 1 Kebl. 510. But in some cases a false statement of opinion may become perjury. 10 Q. B. 670; 15 Ill

357; 3 Ala. N. s. 602; 3 Strobh. So. C. 147; 5 Blackf. Ind. 62; 1 Leach, Cr. Cas. 4th ed. 325.

7. The oath must be material to the question depending. 1 Term, 63; 12 Mass. 274; 3 Murph. No. C. 123; 4 Mo. 47; 2 Ill. 80; 9 Miss. 149; 6 Penn. St. 170; 2 Cush. Mass. 212. Where the facts sworn to are wholly foreign from the purpose and altogether immaterial to the matter in question, the oath does not amount to a legal perjury. 2 Russell, Crimes, 521; Coke, 3d Inst. 167; 8 Ves. Ch. 35; 2 Rolle, 41, 42, 369; 1 Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 69, s. 8; Bacon, Abr. Perjury (A); 2 Nott & M'C. So. C. 18; 2 Mo. 158. But every question in cross-examination which goes to the credit of a witness, as, whether he has been before convicted of felony, is material. 3 Carr. & K. 26; 2 Mood. Cr. Cas. 263; 1 Carr. & M. 655. And see 1 Ld. Raym. 257; 10 Mod. 195; 8 Rich. So. C. 456; 9 Mo. 824; 12 Metc. Mass. 225. False evidence, whereby, on the trial of a cause, the judge is induced to admit other material evidence, even though the latter evidence is afterwards withdrawn by counsel, or though it was not legally receivable, is indictable as perjury. 2 Den. Cr. Cas. 302; 3 Carr. & K. 302.

8. It is not within the plan of this work to cite all the statutes passed by the general government or the several states on the subject of perjury. It is proper, however, here to transcribe a part of the thirteenth section of the act of congress of March 3, 1825, which provides as follows: "If any person in any case, matter, hearing, or other proceeding, when an oath or affirmation shall be required to be taken or administered under or by any law or laws of the United States, shall, upon the taking of such oath or affirmation, knowingly and willingly swear or affirm falsely, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine, not exceeding two thousand dollars, and by imprisonment and confinement to hard labor, not exceeding five years, according to the aggravation of the offence. And if any person or persons shall knowingly or willingly procure any such perjury to be committed, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of subornation of perjury, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished by fine, not exceeding two thousand dollars, and by imprisonment and confinement to hard labor, not exceeding five years, according to the aggravation of the offence." See 4 Blackf. Ind. 146; 15 N. H. 83; 9 Pet. 238; 2 McLean, C. C. 135; 1 Wash. C. C. 84; 2 Mas. C. C. 69.

In general, it may be observed that a perjury is committed as well by making a false affirmation as a false oath. See, generally, 16 Viner, Abr. 307; Bacon, Abr.; Comyns, Dig. Justices of the Peace (B 102–106); 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 137–139; Coke, 3d Inst. 163–168; Hawkins, Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 69; Russell, Crimes, b. 5, c. 1; 2 Chitty, Crim. Law, c. 9; Roscoe, Crim. Ev.; Burn Just.; Williams, Just.

PERMANENT TRESPASS. A trespass consisting of trespasses of one and the same kind, committed on several days, which are in their nature capable of renewal or continuation, and are actually renewed or continued from day to day, so that the particular injury done on each particular day cannot be distinguished from what was done on another day. In declaring for such trespasses, they may be laid with a continuando. 3 Blackstone, Comm. 212; Bacon, Abr. Trespass (B 2, I 2); 1 Saund. 24, n. 1. See CONTINUANDO; TRESPASS.

PERMISSION. A license to do a thing; an authority to do an act which without such authority would have been unlawful. A permission differs from a law: it is a check upon the operations of the law.

Express permissions derogate from something which before was forbidden, and may operate in favor of one or more persons, or for the performance of one or more acts, or for a longer or shorter time.

Implied permissions are those which arise from the fact that the law has not forbidden the act to be done.

PERMISSIVE. Allowed; that which may be done: as, permissive waste, which is the permitting real estate to go to waste. When a tenant is bound to repair, he is punishable for permissive waste. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2400. See WASTE.

PERMIT. A license or warrant to do something not forbidden by law: as, to land goods imported into the United States, after the duties have been paid or secured to be paid. Act of Congr. March 2, 1799, s. 49, cl. 2. See form of such a permit, Gordon, Dig. App. II. 46.

PERMUTATION. In Civil Law. Exchange; barter.

This contract is formed by the consent of the parties; but delivery is indispensable, for without it it is a mere agreement. Dig. 31. 77. 4; Code, 4. 64. 3.

Permutation differs from sale in this, that in the former a delivery of the articles sold must be made, while in the latter it is unnecessary. It agrees with the contract of sale, however, in the following particulars: that he to whom the delivery is made acquires the right or faculty of prescribing, Dig. 41. 3. 4. 17; that the contracting parties are bound to guarantee to each other the title of the things delivered, Code, 4. 64. 1; and that they are bound to take back the things delivered when they have latent defects which they have concealed. Dig. 21. 1. 63. See Aso & M. Inst. b. 2, t. 16, c. 1; MUTATION; TRANSFER.

PERNANCY (from Fr. prendre, to take). A taking or receiving.

PERNOR OF PROFITS. He who receives the profits of lands, etc. A cestui que use, who is legally entitled and actually does receive the profits, is the pernor of profits.

PERPETUAL. That which is to last without limitation as to time: as, a perpetual statute, which is one without limit as to time, although not expressed to be so.

PERPETUAL CURACY. The office of a curate, in a parish where there is no spiritual rector or vicar, but where the curate is appointed to officiate for the time by the impropriator. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 55.

The church of which the curate is perpetual. 2 Ves. Sen. Ch. 425, 429. See 2 Stephen, Comm. 76; 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 55; 9 Ad. & E. 556. As to whether such curate may be removed, see 2 Burn, Eccl. Law, 55.

PERPETUATING TESTIMONY. The act by which testimony is reduced to writing as prescribed by law, so that the same shall be read in evidence in some suit or legal proceedings to be thereafter instituted.

The origin of this practice may be traced to the canon law, cap. 5, X ut lite non contestata, etc. Bockmer, n. 4; 8 Toullier, n. 22. Statutes exist in most of the states for this purpose. Equity also furnishes means, to a limited extent, for the same purpose.

PERPETUITY. Any limitation tending to take the subject of it out of commerce for a longer period than a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years beyond, and, in case of a posthumous child, a few months more, allowing for the term of gestation. Randell, Perp. 48. Such a limitation of property as renders it unalienable beyond the period allowed by law. Gilbert, Uses, Sugd. ed. 260, n.

Mr. Justice Powell, in Scattergood vs. Edge, 12 Mod. 278, distinguished perpetuities into two sorts, absolute and qualified; meaning thereby, as it is apprehended, a distinction between a plain, direct, and palpable perpetuity, and the case where an estate is limited on a contingency, which might happen within a reasonable compass of time, but where the estate nevertheless, from the nature of the limitation, might be kept out of commerce longer than was thought agrecable to the policy of the common law. But this distinction would not now lead to a better understanding or explanation of the subject; for whether an estate be so limited that it cannot take effect until a period too much protracted, or whether on a contingency which may happen within a moderate compass of time, it equally falls within the line of perpetuity, and the limitation is therefore void; for it is not sufficient that an estate may vest within the time allowed, but the rule requires that it must. Randell, Perp. 49. See Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 23; 1 Belt, Suppl. to Ves. Jr. 406; 2 Ves. Ch. 357; 3 Saund. 388; Comyns, Dig. Chancery (4 G 1); 3 Chanc. Cas. 1; 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1890.

PERQUISITES. In its most extensive sense, perquisites signifies any thing gotten by industry or purchased with money, different from that which descends from a father or ancestor. Bracton, l. 2, c. 30, n. 3; l. 4, c. 22. In a more limited sense, it means something gained by a place or office beyond the regular salary or fee.

PERSON. A man considered according to the rank he holds in society, with all the rights to which the place he holds entitles him, and the duties which it imposes. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 137.

A corporation, which is an artificial person. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 123; 4 Bingh. 669; Wooddeson, Lect. 116; 1 Mod. 164.

2. The term, as is seen, is more extensive than man,—including artificial beings, as corporations, as well as natural beings. But when the word "persons" is spoken of in legislative acts, natural persons will be intended, unless something appear in the context to show that it applies to artificial persons. 2 Ill. 178.

Natural persons are divided into males, or men, and females, or women. Men are capable of all kinds of engagements and functions, unless by reasons applying to particular individuals. Women cannot be appointed to any public office, nor perform any civil functions, except those which the law specially declares them capable of exercising. La. Civ. Code, art. 25.

3. They are also sometimes divided into free persons and slaves. Freemen are those who have preserved their natural liberty, that is to say, who have the right of doing what is not forbidden by the law. A slave is one who is in the power of a master to whom he belongs. Slaves are sometimes ranked not with persons, but things. But sometimes they are considered as persons: for example, a negro is in contemplation of law a person, so as to be capable of committing a riot in conjunction with white men. 1 Bay, So. C. 358. See MAN.

Persons are also divided into citizens and aliens, when viewed with regard to their political rights. When they are considered in relation to their civil rights, they are living or civilly dead, see CIVIL DEATH; outlaws; and infamous persons.

Persons are divided into legitimates and bastards, when examined as to their rights by birth.

When viewed in their domestic relations, they are divided into parents and children; husbands and wives; guardians and wards; and masters and servants.

For the derivation of the word person, as it is understood in law, see 1 Toullier, n. 168; 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1890, note.

PERSONA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Character, in virtue of which certain rights belong to a man and certain duties are imposed upon him. Thus, one man may unite many characters (personæ): as, for example, the characters of father and son, of master and servant. Mackeldy, Civ. Law, § 117.

In its original signification, a mask; afterwards, a man in reference to his condition or character (status). Vicat, Voc. Jur. It is used metaphorically of things, among which are counted slaves. It is often opposed to res: as, actio in personam and actio in rem.

Power and right belonging to a person in a certain character (pro jure et potestate personæ competente). Vicat, Voc. Jur. Its use is not confined to the living, but is extended to the dead and to angels. Id. A statue in a fountain whence water gushes.

PERSONAL. Belonging to the person.

This adjective is frequently employed in connection with substantives, things, goods, chattels, actions, right, duties, and the like: as, personal estate, put in opposition to real estate; personal actions, in contradistinction to real actions. Personal rights are those which belong to the person; personal duties are those which are to be performed in person.

PERSONAL ACTION. In Practice.

IN THE CIVIL LAW.

An action in which one person (the actor) sues another (the reus) in respect of some obligation which he is under to the actor either ex contractu or ex delicto. It will be seen that this includes all actions against a person, without reference to the nature of the property involved. In a limited sense of the word action in the civil law, it includes only personal actions, all others being called petitions. See REAL ACTION.

AT THE COMMON LAW.

An action brought for the recovery of personal property, for the enforcement of some contract or to recover damages for its breach, or for the recovery of damages for the commission of an injury to the person or property. Such arise either upon contracts, as account, assumpsit, covenant, debt, and detinue (see these words), or for wrongs, injuries, or torts, as trespass, trespass on the case, replevin, trover. (See these words.) Other divisions of personal actions are made in the various states; and in Vermont and Connecticut an action is in use called the action of book debt. See BOOK DEBT.

PERSONAL CHATTELS. Strictly and properly speaking, things movable, which may be annexed to or attendant on the person of the owner, and carried about with him from one part of the world to another. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 388*.

PERSONAL CONTRACT. A contract as to personal property. A covenant (or contract) personal relates only to matters personal as distinguished from real, and is binding on the covenantor (contractor) during his life, and on his personal representatives after his decease, in respect of assets. Angell & A. Waterc. 305; Coke, Litt. 22.

PERSONAL COVENANT. A covenant which binds only the covenantor and his personal representatives in respect to assets, and can be taken advantage of only by the covenantee.

A covenant which must be performed by the covenantor in person. Fitzherbert, Nat. Brev. 340.

All covenants are either personal or real; but some confusion exists in regard to the division between them. Thus, a covenant may be personal as regards the covenantor, and real as regards the covenantee; and different definitions have been given, according to whether the rights and liabilities of the covenant r or the covenantee have been in consideration. It is apprehended, however, that the prevalent modern usage is to hold a covenant real, if it is real,—that is, runs with the land so as to apply to an assignee, either as regards the covenantor or the covenantee. See Platt, Cov. 61; 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 304, n., 305, n.; 3 N. J. 260; 7 Gray, Mass. 83.

All covenants which relate to personalty merely are of this class. 30 Miss. 145.

PERSONAL LIBERTY. See LIBERTY.

PERSONAL PROPERTY. The right or interest which a man has in things personal.

The right or interest less than a freehold which a man has in realty, or any right or interest which he has in things movable.

Personal property is to be distinguished from things personal. There may be, for example, a personal estate in realty, as chattels real; but the only property which a man can have in things personal must be a personal property. The essential idea of personal property is that of property in a thing movable or separable from the realty, or of perishability or possibility of brief duration of interest as compared with the owner's life in a thing real, without any action on the part of the owner. See 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 14 and notes, 384 and notes.

2. A crop growing in the ground is personal property so far as not to be considered an interest in land, under the Statute of Frauds. 11 East, 362; 12 Me. 337; 5 Barnew. & C. 829; 9 id. 561; 10 Ad. & E. 753.

It is a general principle of American law that stock held in corporations is to be considered as personal property, Walker, Am. Law, 211; 4 Dane, Abr. 670; Sullivan, Land Tit. 71; 1 Hilliard, Real Prop. 18; though it was held that such stock was real estate, 2 Conn. 567; but, this being found inconvenient, the law was changed by the legislature.

3. Title to personal property is acquired—first, by original acquisition by occupancy: as, by capture in war, by finding a lost thing; second, by original acquisition by accession; third, by original acquisition by intellectual labor: as, copyrights and patents for inventions; fourth, by transfer, which is by act of law, by forfeiture, by judgment, by insolvency, by intestacy; fifth, by transfer by act of the party, by gift, by sale. See, generally, 16 Viner, Abr. 335; 8 Comyns, Dig. 474, 562; 1 Belt, Suppl. Ves. Ch. 49, 121, 160, 198, 255, 368, 369, 399, 412, 478; 2 id. 10, 40, 129, 290, 291, 341; 1 Vern. Ch. 3, 170, 412; 2 Salk. 449; 2 Ves. Ch. 59, 176, 261, 271, 336, 683; 7 id. 453. See PEW; PROPERTY; REAL PROPERTY.

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES. The executors or administrators of the person deceased. 6 Mod. 155; 5 Ves. Ch. 402; 1 Madd. Ch. 108.

In wills, these words are sometimes construed to mean next of kin. 2 Jarman, Wills, 28; 1 Beav. Rolls, 46; 1 Russ. & M. Ch. 587.

PERSONAL SECURITY. The legal and uninterrupted enjoyment by a man of his life, his body, his health, and his reputation. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 202.

PERSONAL STATUTE. A law whose principal, direct, and immediate object is to regulate the condition of persons.

The term is not properly in use in the common law, although Lord Mansfield, in 2 W. Blackst. 234, applied it to those legislative acts which respect personal transitory contracts, but is occasionally used in the sense given to it in civil law and which is adopted as its definition. It is a law, ordinance, regulation, or custom, the disposition of which affects the person and clothes him with a capacity or incapacity which he does not change with his abode. See 2 Kent, Comm. 10th ed. 613.

PERSONALTY. That which is movable; that which is the subject of personal property and not of a real property.

PERSONATE. In Criminal Law. To assume the character of another without lawful authority, and, in such character, do something to his prejudice, or to the prejudice of another, without his will or consent.

The bare fact of personating another for the purpose of fraud is no more than a cheat or misdemeanor at common law, and punishable as such. 2 East, Pl. Cr. 1010; 2 Russell, Crimes, 479.

By the act of congress of the 30th April 1790, s. 15, 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 86, it is enacted that "if any person shall acknowledge, or procure to be acknowledged, in any court of the United States, any recognizance, bail, or judgment, in the name or names of any other person or persons not privy or consenting to the same, every such person or persons, on conviction thereof, shall be fined not exceeding five thousand dollars, or be imprisoned not exceeding seven years, and whipped not exceeding thirty-nine stripes. Provided, nevertheless, that this act shall not extend to the acknowledgment of any judgment or judgments by any attorney or attorneys, duly admitted, for any person or persons against whom any such judgment or judgments shall be had or given." See, generally, 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 293; 16 Viner, Abr. 336; Comyns, Dig. Action on the Case for a Deceit (A 3).

PERSUADE, PERSUADING. To persuade is to induce to act. Persuading is inducing others to act. Inst. 4. 6. 23; Dig. 11. 3. 1. 5.

In the act of the legislature which declared that "if any person or persons knowingly and willingly shall aid or assist any enemies at open war with this state, etc., by persuading others to enlist for that purpose, etc., he shall be adjudged guilty of high treason," the word persuading thus used means to succeed; and there must be an actual enlistment of the person persuaded in order to bring the defendant within the intention of the clause. 1 Dall. Penn. 39; 4 Carr. & P. 369; 9 id. 79; ADMINISTERING. See 2 Ld. Raym. 889. It may be fairly argued, however, that the attempt to persuade without success would be a misdemeanor. 1 Russell, Crimes, 44.

In England it has been decided that to incite and procure a person to commit suicide is not a crime for which the party could be tried. 9 Carr. & P. 79. See ATTEMPT; SOLICITATION.

PERSUASION. The act of influencing by expostulation or request. While the persuasion is confined within those limits which leave the mind free, it may be used to induce another to make his will, or even to make it in his own favor. But if such persuasion should so far operate on the mind of the testator that he would be deprived of a perfectly free will, it would vitiate the instrument. 3 Serg. & R. Penn. 269; 5 id. 207; 13 id. 323.

PERTINENT (from Lat. pertineo, belonging to). Which tends to prove or disprove the allegations of the parties. Willes, 319. Matters which have no such tendency are called impertinent. 8 Toullier, n. 22.

PERTURBATION. This is a technical word which signifiesdisturbance or infringement of a right. It is usually applied to the disturbance of pews or seats in a church. in the ecclesiastical courts, actions for these disturbances are technically called "suits for perturbation of seat." 1 Phill. Eccl. 323. See PEW.

PERVISE, PARVISE. The palace yard at Westminster.

A place where counsel used to advise with their clients.

An afternoon exercise or moot for the instruction of students. Cowel; Blount.

PESAGE. In England, a toll charged for weighing avoirdupois goods other than wool. 2 Chitty, Com. Law, 16.

PETIT (sometimes corrupted into petty). A French word signifying little, small. It is frequently used: as, petit larceny, petit jury, petit treason.

PETIT CAPE. When the tenant is summoned on a plea of land, and comes on the summons and his appearance is recorded, if at the day given him he prays the view, and, having it given him, makes default, then shall this writ issue from the king. Old Nat. Brev. 162; Reg. Jud. fol. 2; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 44. See GRAND CAPE.

PETIT, PETTY JURY. The ordinary jury of twelve, as opposed to the grand jury, which was of a larger number and whose duty it was to find bills for the petit jury to try. 3 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 351*.

PETIT, PETTY LARCENY. Larceny to the amount of twelve pence or less. 4 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 229*. See 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, §§ 378, 379. See LARCENY

PETIT SERJEANTY. A tenure by which lands are held of the crown by the service of rendering yearly some small implement of war, as a lance, an arrow, etc. 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 82. Though the stat. 12 Car. II. took away the incidents of livery and primer seisin, this tenure still remains a dignified branch of socage tenure, from which it only differs in name on account of its reference to war. Such is the tenure of the grants to the dukes of Marlborough and Wellington.

PETIT TREASON. In English Law. The killing of a master by his servant, a husband by his wife, a superior by a secular or religious man. In the United States this is like any other murder. See HIGH TREASON; TREASON.

PETITE ASSIZE. Used in contradistinction from the grand assize, which was a jury to decide on questions of property. Petite assize, a jury to decide on questions of possession. Britton, c. 42; Glanville, lib. 2, c. 6, 7; Horne, Mirror, lib. 2, c. de Novel Disseisin.

PETITION. An instrument of writing or printing, containing a prayer from the person presenting it, called the petitioner, to the body or person to whom it is presented for the redress of some wrong or the grant of some favor which the latter has the right to give.

By the constitution of the United States, the right "to petition the government for a redress of grievances" is secured to the people Amend. art. 1.

Petitions are frequently presented to the courts in order to bring some matters before them. It is a general rule in such cases that an affidavit should be made that the facts therein contained are true as far as known to the petitioner, and that those facts which he states as knowing from others he believes to be true.

PETITION OF RIGHT. In English Law. A proceeding in chancery by which a subject may recover property in the possession of the king.

This is in the nature of an action against a subject, in which the petitioner sets out his right to that which is demanded by him, and prays the king to do him right and justice; and, upon a due and lawful trial of the right, to make him restitution. It is called a petition of right because the king is bound of right to answer it and let the matter therein contained be determined in a legal way, in like manner as causes between subject and subject. The petition is presented to the king, who subscribes it with these words, soit droit fait al partie, and thereupon it is delivered to the chancellor to be executed according to law. Coke, 4th Inst. 419, 422 b; Mitford, Eq. Plead. 30, 31; Cooper, Eq. Plead. 22, 23.

PETITORY. That which demands or petitions; that which has the quality of a prayer or petition; a right to demand.

A petitory suit or action is understood to be one in which the mere title to property is to be enforced by means of a demand, petition, or other legal proceeding, as distinguished from a suit where only the right of possession and not the mere right of property is in controversy. 1 Kent, Comm. 371; 7 How. 846; 10 id. 257. Admiralty suits touching property in ships are either petitory, in which the mere title to the property is litigated, or possessory, to restore the possession to the party entitled thereto.

The American courts of admiralty exercised unquestioned jurisdiction in petitory as well as possessory actions; but in England the courts of law, some time after the restoration in 1660, claimed exclusive cognizance of mere questions of title, until the statute of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65. By that statute the court of admiralty was authorized to decide all questions as to the title to or ownership of any ship or vessel, or the proceeds thereof remaining in the registry in any cause of possession, salvage, damage, wages, or bottomry, instituted in such court after the passing of that act. Ware, Dist. Ct. 232; 18 How. 267; 2 Curt. C. C. 426.

In Scotch Law. Actions in which damages are sought.

This class embraces such actions as assumpsit, debt, covenant, and detinue, at common law. See Patterson, Comp. 1058, n.

PETTY AVERAGE (called, also, customary average). Several petty charges which are borne partly by the ship and partly by the cargo, such as the expense of tonnage, beaconage, etc. Abbott, Shipp. 7th ed. 404; 2 Parsons, Mar. Law, 312; 1 Bell, Comm. 567; 2 Magens, 277

PETTY BAG OFFICE. In English Law. An office in the court of chancery, appropriated for suits against attorneys and officers of the court, and for process and proceedings by extent on statutes, recognizances ad quod damnum, and the like. Termes de la Ley.

PETTY CONSTABLE. The ordinary constable, as distinguished from the high constable of the hundred. 1 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 355; Bacon, Law Tr. 181, Office of Constable; Willcock, Cons. c. 1, § 1. For duties of constable in America, see New England Sheriff.

PETTIFOGGER. One who pretends to be a lawyer, but possesses neither knowledge of the law nor conscience.

An unprincipled practitioner of law, whose business is confined to petty cases.

PEW. A seat in a church, separated from all others, with a convenient place to stand therein.

2. It is an incorporeal interest in the real property. And although a man has the exclusive right to it, yet it seems he cannot maintain trespass against a person entering it, 1 Term, 430; but case is the proper remedy. 3 Barnew. & Ald. 361; 8 Barnew. & C. 294.

The right to pews is limited and usufructuary, and does not interfere with the right of the parish or congregation to pull down and rebuild the church. 4 Ohio, 541; 5 Cow. N. Y. 496; 17 Mass. 435; 1 Pick. Mass. 102; 3 id. 344; 6 Serg. & R. Penn. 508; 9 Wheat. 445; 9 Cranch, 52; 6 Johns. N. Y. 41; 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 596; 6 Term, 396. See Powell, Mortgages, Index; 2 Sharswood, Blackst. Comm. 429; 1 Chitty, Pract. 208, 210; 1 Powell, Mortg. 17, n.

3. In Connecticut and Maine, pews are considered real estate. In Massachusetts and New Hampshire, they are personal property. Mass. Gen. Stat. c. 30, § 38; 1 Smith, St. 145. The precise nature of such property does not appear to be well settled in New York. 15 Wend. N. Y. 218; 16 id. 28; 5 Cow. N. Y. 494. See Conn. L. 432; 10 Mass. 323; 17 id. 438; 7 Pick. Mass. 138; 4 N. H. 180; 4 Ohio, 515; 4 Harr. & M'H. Md. 279; Best, Pres. 111; Crabb, Real Prop. §§ 481–497; Washburn, Easements.

PHAROS. A light-house or beacon. It is derived from Pharos, the name of a small island at the mouth of the Nile, on which was built a watch-tower.

PHYSICIAN. A person who has received the degree of doctor of medicine from an incorporated institution.

One lawfully engaged in the practice of medicine.

2. Although the physician is civilly and criminally responsible for his conduct while discharging the duties of his profession, he is in no sense a warrantor or insurer of a favorable result, without an express contract to that effect. Elwell, Malp. 20; 7 Carr. & P. 81.

Every person who offers his services to the public generally impliedly contracts with the employer that he is in possession of the necessary ordinary skill and experience which are possessed by those who practise or profess to understand the art or science, and which are generally regarded by those most conversant with the profession as necessary to qualify one to engage in such business successfully. This ordinary skill may differ according to locality and the means of information. Elwell, Malp. 22–24, 201; Story, Bailm. 433; 3 Carr. & P. 629; 8 id. 475.

3. The physician's responsibility is the same when he is negligent as when he lacks ordinary skill, although the measure of indemnity and punishment may be different. Elwell, Malp. 27; Archbold, Crim. Pl. 2d ed. 411; 2 Ld. Raym. 1583; 3 Maule & S. 14, 15; 5 id. 198; 1 Lew. Cr. Cas. 169; 2 Starkie, Ev. 526; Broom, Leg. Max, 1st ed. 168, 169; 4 Den. N Y. 464; 19 Wend. N. Y. 345, 346.

In England, a physician cannot maintain an action for his fees for any thing done as physician either while attending to or prescribing for a patient; but a distinction is taken when he acts as a surgeon or in any other capacity than that of physician, and in such cases an action for fees will be sustained. All acts of a physician as such are considered strictly honorary, and therefore without compensation except when there exists an express contract. Without this express agreement the physician cannot even recover his travelling expenses while going to attend his patient and returning,—such expense being incidental to the attendance, and regarded as money paid to the physician's own use in the ordinary exercise of his profession, and not money paid to the use of the patient. 1 Carr. & M. 227, 370; 3 Gale & D. 198.

4. In this country, the various states have statutory enactments regulating the collection of fees and the practice of medicine. In Georgia, a physician cannot recover for his services unless he shows that he is licensed as required by the act of 1839, or unless he is within the proviso in favor of physicians who were in practice before its passage. 8 Ga. 74. In New York, prior to the act repealing all former acts prohibiting unlicensed physicians from recovering a compensation for their services (Stat. of 1844, p. 406), an unlicensed physician could not maintain an action for medical attendance and medicines. 4 Den. N. Y. 60. Under the Maine statute of 1838, c. 53, a person who is not allowed by law to collect his dues for medical or surgical services as a regular practitioner cannot recover compensation for such services unless previous to their performance he obtained a certificate of good moral character in manner prescribed by that statute, nor can he recover payment for such services under the provision of the Revised Statute, c. 22, by having obtained a medical degree, in manner prescribed by that statute, after the performance of the service, though prior to the suit. 25 Me. 104.

5. In Alabama and Missouri, a non-licensed physician cannot recover for professional services. Hallowell vs. Adams, 21 Ala. N. s. 680; 15 Mo. 407. When A, the plantation physician of a planter, found a surgical operation necessary on one of the negroes, and requested the overseer to send for B, another physician, who came and performed the operation without any assistance from A, it was held that B could not maintain an action against A to recover for his services 1 Strobh. So. C. 171. In Vermont, the employment of a physician, and a promise to pay him for his services, made on the Sabbath-day, is not prohibited by statute. 14 Vt. 332. In Massachusetts, an unlicensed physician or surgeon may maintain an action for professional service. 1 Metc. Mass. 154.

6. Where the wife of the defendant, being afflicted with a dangerous disease, was carried by him to a distance from his residence and left under the care of the plaintiff as a surgeon, and after the lapse of some weeks the plaintiff performed an operation on her for the cure of the disease, soon after which she died, it was held, in an action by the plaintiff against the defendant to recover compensation for his services, that the performance of the operation was within the scope of the plaintiff's authority, if, in his judgment, it was necessary or expedient, and that it was not incumbent on him to prove that it was necessary or proper under the circumstances, or that before he performed it he gave notice to the defendant, or that it would have been dangerous to the wife to wait until notice could be given to the defendant. 19 Pick. Mass. 333. In assumpsit by a physician for his services, the defendant cannot prove the professional character of the plaintiff. 3 Hawks, No. C. 105. Physicians can recover for the services of their students in attendance upon their patients. 4 Wend. N. Y. 200. Partners in the practice of physic are within the law merchant, which excludes the jus accrescendi between traders. 9 Cow. N. Y. 631. If a physician carries contagious disease into a family, on a suit for services this may be shown to reduce such claim. 12 B. Monr. Ky. 465.

PICKERY. In Scotch Law. Stealing of trifles, punishable arbitrarily. Bell, Dict.; Tait, Inst. Theft.

PICKPOCKET. A thief; one who in a crowd or in other places steals from the pockets or person of another without putting him in fear. This is generally punished as simple larceny.

PIGNORATIO (Lat. from pignorare, to pledge). In Civil Law. The obligation of a pledge. L. 9. D. de pignor. Sealing up (obsignatio). A shutting up of an animal caught in one's field and keeping it till the expenses and damage have been paid by its master. New Decis. 1. 34. 13.

PIGNORATIVE CONTRACT. In Civil Law. A contract by which the owner of an estate engages it to another for a sum of money and grants to him and his successors the right to enjoy it until he shall be reimbursed, voluntarily, that sum of money. Pothier, Obl.

PIGNORIS CAPTIO (Lat.). In Roman Law. The name given to one of the legis actiones of the Roman law. It consisted chiefly in the taking of a pledge, and was, in fact, a mode of execution. It was confined to special cases determined by positive law or by custom, such as taxes, duties, rents, etc., and is comparable in some respects to distresses at common law. The proceeding took place in the presence of a prætor.

PIGNUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Pledge, or pawn. The contract of pledge. The right in the thing pledged.

"It is derived," says Gaius, "from pugnum, the fist, because what is delivered in pledge is delivered in hand." Dig. 50. 16. 238. 2. This is one of several instances of the failure of the Roman jurists when they attempted etymological explanations of words. The elements of pignus (pig) are contained in the word pan(g)-o and its cognate forms. See Smith, Dict. Gr. & Rom. Antiq.

Though pledge is distinguished from mortgage (hypotheca), as being something delivered in hand, while mortgage is good without possession, yet a pledge (pignus) may also be good without possession. Domat, Civ. Law, b. iii. tit. 1, § 5; Calvinus, Lex. Pignus is properly applied to movables, hypotheca to immovables; but the distinction is not always preserved. Id.

PILLAGE. The taking by violence of private property by a victorious army from the citizens or subjects of the enemy. This in modern times is seldom allowed, and then only when authorized by the commanding or chief officer at the place where the pillage is committed. The property thus violently taken belongs, in general, to the common soldiers. See Dalloz, Dict. Propriété, art. 3, § 5; Wolff, § 1201; Booty; Prize.

PILLORY. A wooden machine, in which the neck of the culprit is inserted.

2. This punishment has in most of the states been superseded by the adoption of the penitentiary system. See 1 Chitty, Crim. Law, 797. The punishment of standing in the pillory, so far as the same was provided by the laws of the United States, was abolished by the act of congress of February 27, 1839, s. 5. See Barrington, Stat. 48, note.
