——Fuero de Correos y Caminos. In Spanish law. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters relating to the post-office and roads.

——Fuero de Guerra. In Spanish law. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters in relation to persons serving in the army.

——Fuero de Marina. In Spanish law. A special tribunal taking cognizance of all matters relating to the navy, and to the persons employed therein. Spelled, also, Jurisdiccion de Marina.

——Fuero Juzgo. In Spanish law. The code of laws established by the Visigoths for the government of Spain, many of whose provisions are still in force. See the analysis of this work in Schmidt's Civ. Law, 30.

——Fuero Municipal. In Spanish law. The body of laws granted to a city or town for its government and the administration of justice.

——Fuero Real. In Spanish law. A code of laws promulgated by Alonzo el Sabio in 1255, and intended as an introduction to the larger and more comprehensive code called Las Siete Partidas, published eight years afterwards. For an analysis of this code, see Schmidt, Civ. Law, 67.

——Fuero Viejo. The title of a compilation of Spanish law, published about A. D. 992. Schmidt, Civ. Law, Introd. 65.

FUGA CATALLORUM. In old English law. A drove of cattle. Blount.

FUGACIA. In old English law. A chase. Spelman; Blount.

FUGAM FECIT (Lat. he fled). In old English law. A phrase in an inquisition, signifying that a person fled for treason or felony. The effect of this is to make the party forfeit his goods absolutely, and the profits of his lands, until he has been pardoned or acquitted.

FUGATOR. A driver. Fugatores carrucarum, drivers of wagons. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 78.

FUGITATE. In Scotch practice. To outlaw, by the sentence of a court; to outlaw for nonappearance in a criminal case. 2 Alls. Crim. Pr. 350.

FUGITATION. In Scotch law. Outlawry.

FUGITIVE FROM JUSTICE. One who, having committed a crime, flees from the jurisdiction within which it was committed, without waiting to abide the consequences of such crime.

All that is necessary is that the person shall be found in a state other than that in which he committed the crime; it being immaterial whether he left the latter state with intent to escape punishment. 106 Mass. 227; 116 U. S. 80.

FUGITIVE OFFENDER. In English law. One who, being accused of having committed a crime in one part of the British empire, has left there, and gone to another part thereof. See "Fugitive from Justice."

FUGITIVE SLAVE. One who, held in bondage, flees from his master's power.

FUGITIVUS. In the civil law. A fugitive; a runaway slave. Dig. 11. 4; Code, 6. 1. See the various definitions of this word in Dig. 21. 1. 17.

FULL. Complete; exhaustive; detailed.

FULL AGE. The age of twenty-one, by common law, of both males and females, and of twenty-five by the civil law. Litt. § 259; 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 463; Vicat. Full age is completed on the day preceding the anniversary of birth. Salk. 44, 625; 1 Ld. Raym. 480; 2 Ld. Raym. 1096; 2 Kent, Comm. 263; 3 Har. (Del.) 557; 4 Dana (Ky.) 597. See "Age."

FULL BLOOD. A term of relation, denoting descent from the same couple. Brothers and sisters of full blood are those who are born of the same father and mother, or, as Justinian calls them, "ex utroque parente conjuncti." Nov. 118, cc. 2, 3; Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 145. The more usual term in modern law is "whole blood" (q. v.)

FULL COURT. In practice. A term applied to a court sitting in banc, and implying, strictly, the presence of all the judges. 3 Chit. Gen. Prac. 2. The term "full bench" is frequently used.

FULL LIFE. Life in fact and in law. See "In Full Life."

FULL PROOF. See "Plena Probatio."

FULLUM AQUAE. A stream of water, such as comes from a mill. Blount.

FUMAGE. In old English law. The same as fuage, or smoke farthings. 1 Bl. Comm. 324. See "Fuage."

FUNCTION. The occupation of an office. By the performance of its duties, the officer is said to fill his function. Dig. 32. 65. 1.

FUNCTIONARY. One who is in office or in some public employment.

FUNCTUS OFFICIO (Lat.) A term applied to something which once has had life and power, but which has become of no virtue whatsoever.

FUNDAMENTAL. This word is applied to those laws which are the foundation of society. Those laws by which the exercise of power is restrained and regulated are fundamental. The constitution of the United States is the fundamental law of the land. See Wolff. Inst. § 984.

FUNDAMUS. We found. One of the words by which a corporation may be created in England. 1 Bl. Comm. 473; 3 Steph. Comm. 173.

FUNDATIO (Lat.) A founding.

FUNDED DEBT. A public debt for the payment of which money has been specifically appropriated.

FUNDI PATRIMONIALES. Lands of inheritance.

FUNDING A DEBT. The pledging of a specific fund to keep down the interest, and ultimately discharge the principal. When the extinguishment of the debt is contemplated, it is called a "sinking fund."

FUNDITORES. Pioneers. Jacob.

FUNDS. In its most restricted sense, cash on hand. In a wider sense it includes commercial paper (3 B. Mon. [Ky.] 8); in a still more extended sense, property of every kind, when such property is contemplated as something to be used or applied in the payment of debts (69 Iowa, 278).

FUNDUS (Lat. land). A portion of territory belonging to a person; a farm; lands, including houses. 4 Coke, 87; Co. Litt. 5a; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 209.

FUNERAL EXPENSES. Money expended in procuring the interment of a corpse.

The nature and extent of the allowance for funeral expense varies with the solvency of the estate, and the discretion of the surrogate, so that it is impossible to define the scope of the terms. 3 Redf. Wills, 243.

"Funeral expenses have been held to include carriage hire to convey the family and friends to the place of interment (44 Miss. 124), suitable gravestones (30 Conn. 209), monuments (77 Pa. St. 49), burial plots (5 Redf. Sur. [N. Y.] 484), and vaults (14 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 64); also mourning apparel to enable the widow and children to attend decently at the funeral." 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 316; 2 Woerner, Admn. 761.

FUNGIBLE. A term applicable to things that are consumed by the use, as wine, oil, etc., the loan of which is subject to certain rules, and governed by the contract called mutuum. See Schmidt, Civ. Law, 145; Story, Bailm.; 1 Bouv. Inst. notes 987, 1098.

FUR (Lat. a thief). One who stole without using force, as distinguished from a robber. See "Furtum."

FUR MANIFESTUS (Lat.) In the civil law. A manifest thief; a thief who is taken in the very act of stealing, or in the place where the theft was committed. Inst. 4. 1. 3; Dig. 47. 2. 3.

FURANDI ANIMUS. See "Animus."

FURCA. A fork; a gallows or gibbet. Bracton, fol. 56.

FURCA ET FLAGELLUM (Lat. gallows and whip). The meanest of servile tenures, where the bondman was at the disposal of the lord for life and limb. Cowell.

FURCA ET FOSSA (Lat. gallows and pit). A jurisdiction of punishing felons,—the men by hanging, the women by drowning. Skene de Verb. Sign.; Spelman; Cowell.

FURIGELDUM. Mulct paid for theft. Jacob.

FURIOSI NULLA VOLUNTAS EST. A madman has no will. Dig. 50. 17. 5; Id. 1. 18. 13. 1; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 282.

FURIOSITY. In Scotch law. Madness, as distinguished from fatuity or idiocy.

FURIOSUS (Lat.) An insane man; a madman; a lunatic.

In general, such a man can make no contract, because he has no capacity or will: Furiosus nullum negotium genere potest, quia non intelligit quod agit. Inst. 3. 20. 8. Indeed, he is considered so incapable of exercising a will that the law treats him as if he were absent: Furiosi nulla voluntas est. Furiosus absentis loco est. Dig. 1. ult. 40. 124. 1. See "Insanity;" "Non Compos Mentis."

FURIOSUS ABSENTIS LOCO EST. A madman is considered as absent. Dig. 50. 17. 24. 1.

FURIOSUS NULLUM NEGOTIUM CONtrahere (gerere) potest (quia non intelligit quod agit). A lunatic cannot make a contract. Dig. 50. 17. 5; 1 Story, Cont. (4th Ed.) p. 76.

FURIOSUS SOLO FURORE PUNITUR. A madman is punished by his madness alone. Co. Litt. 247; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 14; 4 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 24, 25.

FURIOSUS STIPULARI NON POTEST nec aliquod negotium agere, qui non intelligit quid agit. An insane person who knows not what he does cannot make a bargain, nor transact any business. 4 Coke, 126.

FURLINGUS (Lat.) A furlong, or a furrow one-eighth part of a mile long. Co. Litt. 5b.

FURLONG. A measure of length, being forty poles, or one-eighth of a mile.

FURLOUGH. A permission given in the army and navy to an officer or private to absent himself for a limited time.

FURNAGE (from furnus, an oven). A sum of money paid to the lord by the tenants, who were bound by their tenure to bake at the lord's oven, for the privilege of baking elsewhere. The word is also used to signify the gain or profit taken and received for baking.

FURNITURE. Personal chattels in the use of a family. By the term "household furniture" in a will, all personal chattels will pass which may contribute to the use or convenience of the householder, or the ornament of the house; as, plate, linen, china (both useful and ornamental), and pictures. Ambl. 610; 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 329, 388; 1 Sim. & S. 189; 3 Russ. 301; 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 752; 1 Rop. Leg. 203, 204; 3 Ves. 312, 313.

"It [the word "furniture"] is very general both in meaning and application, and its meaning changes so as to take the color of, or to be in accord with, the subject to which it is applied." The articles spoken of as furniture of different places, as of a house, a ship, or a store, "differ in kind according to the purposes which they are intended to subserve; yet, being put and employed in the several places as the equipment thereof for ornament, or to promote comfort or to facilitate the business therein done, and being kept or intended to be kept for those or some of those purposes, they pertain to such places, and constitute the furniture thereof." 63 Ala. 401.

FURNITURE OF A SHIP. This term includes everything with which a ship requires to be furnished or equipped to make her seaworthy. It comprehends all articles furnished by ship chandlers, which are almost innumerable. 1 Wall. Jr. (U. S.) 369.

FUROR CONTRAHI MATRIMONIUM non sinit, quia consensu opus est. Insanity prevents marriage from being contracted, because consent is needed. 1 Ves. & B. 140; 1 Bl. Comm. 439; 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 343, 345.

FURST AND FONDUNG (Saxon). Time to advise or take counsel. Laws Hen. I. c. 46; Whishaw.

FURTHER ADVANCE. A second or subsequent loan of money to a mortgagor by a mortgagee, either upon the same security as the original loan was advanced upon, or an additional security. Equity considers the arrears of interest on a mortgage security converted into principal, by agreement between the parties, as a further advance. Wharton.

FURTHER ASSURANCE. This phrase is frequently used in covenants when a covenantor has granted an estate, and it is supposed some further conveyance may be required. He then enters into a covenant for further assurance, that is, to make any other conveyance which may be lawfully required.

FURTHER DIRECTIONS. When a master ordinary in chancery made a report in pursuance of a decree or decretal order, the cause was again set down before the judge who made the decree or order, to be proceeded with. Where a master made a separate report, or one not in pursuance of a decree or decretal order, a petition for consequential directions had to be presented, since the cause could not be set down for further directions under such circumstances. See 2 Daniell, Ch. Pr. (5th Ed.) 1233, note; Rapalje & L.

FURTHER HEARING. In practice. Hearing at another time.

FURTHER MAINTENANCE OF ACTION, plea to. A plea of matter arising since the commencement of the suit.

FURTUM (Lat. theft). The fraudulent appropriation to one's self of the property of another, with an intention to commit theft, without the consent of the owner. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 36; Bracton, 150; 3 Inst. 107.

The thing which has been stolen. Bracton, 151.

FURTUM CONCEPTUM (Lat.) The theft which was disclosed where, upon searching any one in the presence of witnesses in due form, the thing stolen is found. "Detected theft" is, perhaps, the nearest concise translation of the phrase, though not quite exact. Vicat.

FURTUM EST CONTRECTATIO REI alienae fraudulenta, cum animo furandi, invito illo domino cujus res illa fuerat. Theft is the fraudulent handling of another's property, with an intention of stealing, against the will of the proprietor, whose property it was. 3 Inst. 107.

FURTUM GRAVE (Lat. aggravated theft). Formerly, there were three classes of this theft: First, by landed men; second, by a trustee or one holding property under a trust; third, theft of the majora animalia, larger animals, including children. 1 Bouv. Civ. Law, 352, note; Bell, Dict.

FURTUM MANIFESTUM (Lat. open theft). Theft where a thief is caught with the property in his possession. Bracton, 150b.

FURTUM NON EST UBI INITIUM HAbet detentionis per dominum rei. It is not theft where the commencement of the detention arises through the owner of the thing. 3 Inst. 107.

FURTUM OBLATUM (Lat.) The theft committed when stolen property is offered any one and found upon him; the crime of receiving stolen property. Calv. Lex.; Vicat.

FUSTIGATIO. In old English law. A beating with sticks or clubs; one of the ancient kinds of punishment of malefactors. Bracton, fol. 104b, lib. 3, tr. 1, c. 6.

FUSTIS. In old English law. A staff, used in making livery of seisin. Bracton, fol. 40.

A baton, club, or cudgel. Spelman.

FUTURE DEBT. In Scotch law. A debt which is created, but which will not become due till a future day. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 315.

FUTURE ESTATE. An estate which is to commence in possession in the future (in futuro). It includes remainders, reversions, and estates limited to commence in futuro without a particular estate to support them, which last are not good at common law, except in the case of terms for years. See 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 165. In New York law it has been defined as "an estate limited to commence in possession at a future day, either without the intervention of a precedent estate, or on the determination by lapse of time, or otherwise, of a precedent estate created at the same time," thus excluding reversions, which cannot be said to be created at the same time, because they are a remnant of the original estate remaining in the grantor. 11 Rev. St. N. Y. (3d Ed.) 9, § 10.

FUTURES. See "Gambling Contract."

FUTURI (Lat. those who are to be). Part of the commencement of old deeds. "Sciant praesentes et futuri, quod ego, talis, dedi et concessi," etc., let all men now living and to come know that I, A. B., have, etc. Bracton, 34b.

FUZ, or FUST. A wood or forest.

FYHTWITE. One of the fines incurred for homicide.

FYLE, or FFYLE (Scotch). In old Scotch practice. To declare or find guilty; literally, to defile; to make or declare foul; as clenge was to acquit, literally to clean or cleanse. "Swa that he quha, of his conscience, can nocht clenge, he of neccessitie mon fyle." 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 314. "The assyise in ane voce ffylis the said R. W." 2 Pitc. Crim. Tr. 73.

FYLIT. In old Scotch practice. Fyled; found guilty. See "Fyle."

FYNDERINGA (Saxon). An offense or trespass for which the fine or compensation was reserved to the king's pleasure. Leg. Hen. I. c. 10. Its nature is not known. Spelman reads fynderinga, and interprets it "treasure trove;" but Cowell reads fyrderinga, and interprets it a joining of the king's fird or host, a neglect to do which was punished by a fine called "firdnite." See Cowell; Spelman. Du Cange agrees with Cowell.

FYRD. The military array or land force of the whole country. Contribution to the fyrd was one of the imposts forming the trinoda necessitas. Wharton.

FYRDWITE. The fine incurred by neglecting to join the fyrd; one of the rights of the crown. Anc. Inst. Eng.

G

G. In Law French. Frequently used at the beginning of words to express the English "W.;" as "gage" for "wage," "gainage" for "wainage," and the like.

GABEL, GAFOL, or GAVEL. A tax, imposition, or duty. This word is said to have the same signification that gabelle formerly had in France. Cunningham. But this seems to be an error; for gabelle signified in that country, previous to its revolution, a duty upon salt. Merlin, Repert. Lord Coke says that gabel or gavel, gablum, gabellum, gabelletum, galbelletum, and gavillettum signify a rent, duty, or service yielded or done to the king or any other lord. Co. Litt. 142a.

GABELLA. In old European law. A tax or duty on merchandise or personalty. Spelman; Cowell.
A tax on salt in France. Spelman; Brande.

GABLUM, GABULUM, or GABULA. The gable end of a building. Kennett, Par. Ant. p. 201; Cowell.

GAFOLGILD, or GAFFOLDGILD. The payment of rent or income.
Gafolgild, payment of such rent, etc. Gafolland was land liable to tribute or tax (Cowell); or land rented (Saxon Dict.) See Tayl. Hist. Gavelkind, pp. 26, 27, 1021; Anc. Inst. Eng.

GAGE, or GAGER (Law Lat. vadium). Personal property placed by a debtor in possession of his creditor as a security for the payment of his debt; a pledge or pawn (q. v.) Glanv. lib. 10, c. 6; Britt. c. 27.
To pledge; to wage. Webster.
Gager is used both as noun and verb; e. g., gager del ley, wager of law. Jacob. Gager ley, to wage law. Britt. c. 27. Gager deliverance, to put in sureties to deliver cattle distrained. Termes de la Ley; Kitch. Cts. fol. 145; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. fols. 67, 74.
A mortgage is a dead gage or pledge; for, whatsoever profit it yields, it redeems not itself, unless the whole amount secured is paid at the appointed time. Cowell.

GAGE, ESTATES IN. Estates held in security, of which mortgages are the most common example.

GAGER DE DELIVERANCE. When he who has distrained, being sued, has not delivered the cattle distrained, then he shall not only avow the distress, but gager deliverance, i. e., put in surety or pledge that he will deliver them. Fitzh. Nat. Brev.

GAGER DEL LEY. Wager of law.

GAIN. Profits.
A mutual insurance company is an association for the purpose of "gain;" the reduction of a loss being a gain. 51 L. J. Ch. Div. 344.

GAINAGE. Wainage, or the draught oxen, horses, wain, plough, and furniture for carrying on the work of tillage. Also, the land tilled itself, or the profit arising from it. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 117.
Gainor, the sokeman that hath such land in occupation. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 12.

GAINERY. Tillage, or the profit of tillage. Blount.

GAJUM (from gagium). In old European law. A thick wood. Spelman.

GALE. In English law. The right to open and work a mine within the hundred of St. Briavels, or a stone quarry within the open lands of the forest of Dean, in Gloucestershire. The peculiar laws and customs of this district are regulated by St. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 43.

GALEA. A galley. Spelman.

GALENES. In old Scotch law. A kind of compensation for slaughter. Bell, Dict.

GALLI HALPENS, or GALLI HALFpence. A kind of coin which, with suskins and doitkins, was forbidden by St. 3 Hen. V. c. 1; 4 Bl. Comm. 99; 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 261.

GALLOWS. An erection on which to hang criminals condemned to death.

GAMACTA (Law Lat.) In old European law. A stroke or blow. L. Boior, tit. 2, c. 4; Spelman.

GAMALIS (Law Lat.) In old European law. A child born in lawful wedlock; also one born to betrothed, but unmarried, parents. Spelman.

GAMBLING. See "Gaming."

GAMBLING CONTRACT. One in which the parties in effect stipulate that they shall gain or lose upon the happening of an uncertain event in which they have no interest except that arising from the possibility of such gain or loss. 153 Pa. St. 247.
Gambling contracts may be by bet or wager (q. v.), which is their simplest form; by lottery (q. v.); or they may be disguised in the form of a legitimate transaction, the ordinary form being by dealing in futures (q. v., infra). The validity of such contracts depends on whether the intention of the parties at the inception is to deliver the goods bargained for, or to settle on the basis of difference in price (155 Ill. 617; 53 N. Y.

318; 59 Wis. 197). The course of speculative dealing has given rise to a number of technical terms, some of which are here defined.

"Bulls and Bears." See infra, this title, "Long;" "Short."

"Corner." An artificial scarcity created by holding property off the market for the extortion of abnormally high prices. Where the purchases of any party or parties exceed the amount of contract grain in regular warehouses on the last delivery day of the month for which such purchases have been made, the grain so bought is said to be cornered.

"Cover." The buying in of grain or stocks to fill short contracts is called "covering."

"Covering shorts." Buying in property to fill contracts (usually for future delivery) previously made.

"Delivery." When stock is brought to the buyer in exact accordance with the rules of the stock exchange it is called a "good delivery." When there are irregularities, the shares being of unacceptable issues, or the rules of the exchange being contravened in some particular, the delivery is pronounced "bad," and the buyer can appeal to the board. Also when warehouse receipts for grain are delivered in fulfillment of contracts.

"For a turn." Said of a speculative investment for a small profit or loss. A quick play. A "flyer." See infra, this title, "Scalping."

"Futures." Buyers of cash products protect themselves against possible loss by selling an agreed amount for future delivery in some general market. Such contracts are called "futures" because they do not terminate until some designated month in the future. These transactions pass from hand to hand, and may be turned over hundreds and thousands of times in an active market before maturity, and this is called "dealing in futures." Nearly all speculative operations are in futures.

"Hedge." The operation called "hedging" by speculators is practically the same as "straddling," though the terms are not synonymous. Traders hedge to avert a loss, and straddle for a profit. See infra, this title, "Straddle."

"Holding the market." Buying sufficient stock or commodities to keep the price from declining.

"In sight." Said of stocks of grain, cotton, coffee, or other merchandise available for immediate use. Grain stored in private warehouses, or held by producers, is not usually included in the supply "in sight."

"Insiders." Those who own a controlling interest or an important interest in the stocks of a concern, and who are therefore influential in directing its affairs.

"Investment buying." This phrase is generally used in contradistinction to buying for speculation, or for a quick turn in the market. It is understood to mean buying to hold for a considerable time.

"Long." One who has property bought in anticipation of a rise in price. Hence, for a trader to be "long" of stocks or grain presupposes him to be a "bull." Also used adjectively.

"Long interest." The aggregate amount of investment holdings in any speculative market.

"Long market." A market that is overbought, the volume of open contracts to buy property for future delivery being in dangerous excess of the probable demand.

"Margin." Money or collaterals deposited with a broker to protect contracts, usually for future delivery.

"Option." Property bought or sold at the call or demand of the buyer or seller, as may be specified; a conditional contract.

"Outsiders." The general trading public. The investors in stock or grain who base their judgment largely on the general situation.

"Pegged." Said of a market that refuses either to advance or to decline, because brokers have been supplied with selling or buying orders in excess of the demand.

"Privileges." "Puts" and "calls." A "put" is the privilege or option, which a person purchases, of "putting," i. e., delivering property or contracts for property to the seller of such privilege, at a named price, within a stipulated time,—one or more days, weeks, or months. "Puts" are good (from the buyer's standpoint) when the market declines below the "put" price within the time covered by the privilege contract. The buyer can then buy the property at the cheaper figure, and "put" it to the person who sold him the risk, his profit being the difference between the "put" price and the quotation at which the property is bought with which to make the delivery. A "call" is the reverse of a "put," the purchaser of a "call" acquiring the right to "call" upon the seller of the privilege for property, or contracts for property, at a named price, within a stipulated time. "Calls" are good when the market advances above the call price, and the buyer of such privilege is enabled to sell at a profit the property "called" from the seller of the privilege. Trading in privileges is illegal in some states, notably in Illinois.

"Pyramiding." Enlarging one's operations by the use of profits which one has made.

"Scalper." One who trades in options continually, and, by reading the temper of the market at the moment, tries to get a profit out of the minor fluctuations.

"Scalping." Buying and selling on small fluctuations of the market. Taking a small profit or a small loss.

"Short," or "Short interest." The seller of a property which he does not possess and will not deliver until he has afterwards bought the same is called a "short." He is, by necessity, a "bear." The aggregate amount of such shortage by these sellers is called the "short interest."

"Short market." A market that is oversold; the volume of open contracts to deliver property being in dangerous excess of available supply.

"Short selling." The process of selling property for future delivery, in the expectation of being able to obtain the property cheaper before the maturity of contract, or of being able to close out the contract at a profit without the actual delivery of the property.

"Split." A transaction, one-half at one quotation and one-half at another. For instance, the quotation 53-⅝-¾ means that one-half of the quantity traded in was at 53⅝ and the other half at 53¾. This quotation is just half-way between 53⅝ and 53¾. Only an even number of thousand bushels can be traded in on a split, as, for instance, 2,000, 6,000, 10,000, etc.

"Spread." A "spread" is a double privilege entitling the holder to deliver to, or to demand from, the signer a certain amount of stock on the terms specified. Differences in prices, as between May and July wheat, or between the put and call price, or between the price of the same option in different cities.

"Squeezed." Said of "short sellers," who, by reason of having oversold the market, are forced to pay an artificially high price for property with which to fill contracts.

"Stop order." An operator may give his broker orders to close out his deals when the market goes against him, and when quotations reach a certain point, and in that case he is said to have given a "stop order." When a declining market is filled with "stop orders" to sell, the bears may make extraordinary efforts to force quotations down to a point which reaches the "stop orders," and which will thus throw on the market more securities or commodities. In the same way, on an advancing market, the bulls may endeavor to raise quotations to a point that will reach stop orders of short sellers, and force their brokers to become buyers.

"Straddle." A trader who is "long" of one option and "short" of another option has "straddled" the market. Example: A. buys corn for May delivery, and sells an equal amount for December delivery, in the expectation that the former will advance and the latter decline. It is also called a "straddle" when a trader buys property for future delivery in one market, and sells in another.

"Wash trades." Pretended trading. Trades made on an open market by parties between whom there is a tacit or private understanding that they shall be void. Done with a view to influence prices, and considered a reprehensible practice.

GAMBLING DEVICE, or GAMING DEVICE. Any appliance or contrivance used for the purpose of gambling.

The game played, the intangible result of the device, is to be distinguished from the device. Thus, the game of poker is not a "gambling device." 2 Orig. 238.

GAMBLING POLICY. A policy of life insurance issued to one as beneficiary who has no interest in the life of the insured.

GAME. Birds and beasts of a wild nature, obtained by fowling and hunting. Bac. Abr. See 11 Metc. (Mass.). 79.

All sorts of birds and beasts that are objects of the chase. Wharton.

GAME LAWS. Laws regulating the killing or taking of birds and beasts, as game.

The English game laws are founded on the idea of restricting the right of taking game to certain privileged classes, generally landholders. In 1831, the law was so modified as to enable any one to obtain a certificate or license to kill game, on payment of a fee. The laws relating to game in the United States are generally, if not universally, framed with reference to protecting the animals from indiscriminate and unreasonable havoc, leaving all persons free to take game, under certain restrictions as to the season of the year and the means of capture. The details of these regulations must be sought in the statutes of the several states. 60 N. Y. 10; 97 Ill. 320.

GAMING. A contract between two or more persons, by which they agree to play by certain rules at cards, dice, or other contrivance, and that one may be the loser, and another the winner.

To stake money on a chance. Whart. Crim. Law, § 1465.

Any sport or play carried on between two persons, depending on skill, chance, or the transpiring of an unknown future event, on the result of which some valuable thing is to be, without consideration, transferred from one to the other. Bish. St. Crimes, § 861.

The statutes against gaming are generally confined to games into which an element of chance enters. Thus, tenpins (8 Ired. [N. C.] 271), foot ball (1 Mod. 136), and wrestling (2 Car. & P. 376) have been held not to be gaming.

"Gaming" is synonymous with "gambling." Bish. St. Crimes, § 858.

It is to be distinguished from "bet" or "wager," which may be laid upon games, or things not games. 9 Ind. 14.

GAMING HOUSES. Houses kept for the purpose of permitting persons to gamble for money or other valuable thing. They are nuisances in the eye of the law, being detrimental to the public, as they promote cheating and other corrupt practices. 1 Russ. Crimes, 299; Rosc. Crim. Ev. 663; 3 Denio (N. Y.) 101.

A house, office, room, or other place kept for the purpose of betting between persons resorting thereto. Steph. Crim. Law, art. 182.

GANANCIAL. In Spanish law. Property held in community.

The property of which it is formed belcngs in common to the two consorts, and, on the dissolution of the marriage, is divisible between them in equal shares. It is confined to their future acquisitions durante el matrimonio, and the frutos or rents and profits of the other property. 1 Burge, Confl. Laws, 418, 419; Aso & M. Inst. bk. 1, tit. 7, c. 5, § 1.

GANANCIAS (Spanish). In Spanish law. Gains or profits resulting from the employment of property held by husband and wife in common. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 7, c. 5.

GANG WEEK. The time when the bounds of the parish are lustrated or gone over by the parish officers,—rogation week. Enc. Lond.; Rapalje & L.

GANGIATORI. Officers in ancient times, whose business it was to examine weights and measures. Skene de Verb. Sign.

GANTELOPE. A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man. Enc. Lond. This was called "running the gauntlett," the word itself being pronounced "gauntlett."

GAOL. This word, sometimes written "jail," is said to be derived from the Spanish jaula, a cage (derived from caula); in French, geole, gaol. 1 Man. & G. 222, note (a). A prison or building designated by law or used by the sheriff for the confinement or detention of those whose persons are judicially ordered to be kept in custody. See 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 22; 14 Viner, Abr. 9; Bac. Abr.; Dane, Abr. Index; 4 Comyn, Dig. 619. See "Jail."

GAOL DELIVERY. In English law. To insure the trial, within a certain time, of all prisoners, a patent, in the nature of a letter, is issued from the king to certain persons, appointing them his justices, and authorizing them to deliver his gaols. See "General Gaol Delivery."

GAOL LIBERTIES, or GAOL LIMITS. A space marked out by limits, which is considered as a part of the prison, and within which prisoners are allowed to go at large on giving security to return. Owing to the rigor of the law which allowed capias, or attachment of the person, as the first process against a debtor, statutes were from time to time passed enlarging the gaol liberties, in order to mitigate the hardships of imprisonment. Thus, the whole city of Boston was held the "gaol liberties" of its county gaol. And so with a large part of New York City. Act March 13, 1830 (3 Rev. St. N. Y. 1829, App. 116). The prisoner, while within the limits, is considered as within the walls of the prison. 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 121.

GAOLER. The keeper of a gaol or prison; one who has the legal custody of the place where prisoners are kept. It is his duty to keep the prisoners in safe custody, and for this purpose he may use all necessary force. 1 Hale, P. C. 601. But any oppression of a prisoner under a pretended necessity will be punished; for the prisoner, whether he be a debtor or a criminal, is entitled to the protection of the laws from oppression.

GARANDIA, or GARANTIA (Law Lat.) A warranty. Spelman.

GARATHINX (Lomb.) In old Lombardic law. A gift; a free or absolute gift; a gift of the whole of a thing. Spelman.

GARAUNTOR. A warrantor or vouchee, who is obliged by his warranty (garauntie) to warrant (garaunter) the title of the warrantee (garaunte), that is, to defend him in his seisin, and if he do not defend, and the tenant be ousted, to give him land of equal value. Britt. c. 75.

GARBA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A bundle or sheaf. Applied to bundles of grain (Bracton, fol. 209), sheaves of arrows (Skene de Verb. Sign.), etc.

GARBALLO DECIMAE (Law Lat. from garba, a sheaf). In Scotch law. Tithes of corn; such as wheat, barley, oats, pease, etc. Also called parsonage tithes (decimae rectoriae). Ersk. Inst. bk. 11, tit. 10, § 13.

GARBLE. In old English statutes. To sort or cull out the good from the bad in spices, drugs, etc. Cowell; Blount.

GARBLER OF SPICES. An ancient officer in the city of London, who might enter into any shop, warehouse, etc., to view and search drugs and spices, and garble and make clean the same, or see that it be done. St. 6 Anne, c. 16.

GARD. A ward of a city.

GARDE. Custody; ward; care or keeping.

GARDEIN. A guardian. Britt. c. 35, 81. Used as an English word in Co. Litt. 38b.

GARDEN. A piece of ground appropriated to raising plants and flowers.

A garden is a parcel of a house, and passes with it. 2 Coke, 32; Plowd. 171; Co. Litt. 5b, 56a, 56b. But see F. Moore, 24; Bac. Abr. "Grants" (I).

GARDIANUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. A guardian, defender, or protector. In feudal law, gardio. Spelman.

A warden. Gardianus ecclesiae, a churchwarden. Gardianus Quinque Portuum, warden of the Cinque Ports. Spelman.

GARDINUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. A garden. Reg. Orig. 1b, 2; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 19, § 8.

GARENE (Law Fr.) A warren; a privileged place for keeping animals. Britt. c. 19.

GARNISH.

——In English Law. Money paid by a prisoner to his fellow prisoners on his entrance into prison.

To warn. To garnish the heir is to warn the heir. Obsolete.

——In Practice. To attach by process of garnishment.

GARNISHEE. In practice. A person who has money or property in his possession belonging to a defendant, which money or property has been attached in his hands, and who has had notice of such attachment. He is so called because he has had warning or notice of the attachment.

Sometimes incorrectly used as a verb in place of "garnish."

GARNISHMENT.

——In Old Practice. A warning to any one for his appearance, in a cause in which he is not a party, for the information of the court and explaining a cause. For example, in the practice of Pennsylvania, when an attachment issues against a debtor, in order to secure to the plaintiff a claim due by a third person to such debtor, notice is given to such third person, which notice is a garnishment, and he is called the "garnishee."

——In Modern Practice. A writ or process by which money owing to a defendant is attached in the hands of the creditor, and the creditor is required to appear at a designated time, and disclose the nature and extent of the indebtedness.

In some states this process is called "trustee process," in Connecticut "factorizing process," and in New York the term "garnishment" is not used, it being classed as an attachment.

GARNISTURA. In old English law. Garniture; whatever is necessary for the fortification of a city or camp, or for the ornament of a thing. 8 Rymer, 328; Du Cange; Cowell; Blount.

GARSUMNE. In old English law. An amerciament or fine. Cowell. See "Gressume;" "Grossome;" "Gersume."

GARTER. See "Knights of the Garter."

GARTH. In English law. A yard; a little close or homestead in the north of England. Cowell; Blount.

A dam or wear in a river, for the catching of fish. Id.

GARYTOUR. In old Scotch law. Warder. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 8.

GASTALDUS. A steward or bailiff. Spelman. Also applied to higher officers, as a governor of a city.

In the book of feuds it seems to have been used in the sense of "warden."

GASTINE (Law Fr.) Waste or uncultivated ground. Britt. c. 57.

GATE (Saxon, geat). At the end of names of places, signifies way or path. Cunningham.

In the words "beast gate" and "cattle gate," it means a right of pasture. These rights are local to Suffolk and Yorkshire, respectively. They are considered as corporeal hereditaments, for which ejectment will lie (2 Strange, 1084; 1 Term R. 137), and are entirely distinct from right of common. The right is sometimes connected with the duty of repairing the gates of the pasture, and perhaps the name comes from this.

GAUDIES. Double commons.

A term used in the English universities. Wharton.

GAUGEATOR (Law Lat.) In old English law. A gauger or gager. Cowell.

GAUGER. An officer appointed to examine all tuns, pipes, hogsheads, barrels, and tierces of wine, oil, and other liquids, and to give them a mark of allowance, as containing lawful measure.

GAUGETUM (Law Lat.) A gauge or gauging. Blount.

GAVEL. In old English law. Tribute; toll; custom; yearly revenue, of which there were formerly various kinds. Jacob; Tayl. Hist. Gavelkind, 26, 102. See "Gabel."

GAVELBRED. In English law. Rent reserved in bread, corn, or provision; rent payable in kind. Cowell.

GAVELCESTER. A certain measure of rent ale. Cowell.

GAVELET. A customary process, whereby the lord of lands in gavelkind might seize the land in the nature of a distress, to be returned to the tenant in case he paid the rent. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 203.

GAVELGELD (Saxon, gavel, rent, geld, payment). That which yields annual profit or toll; the tribute or toll itself. 3 Mon. Angl. 155; Cowell; Du Cange, "Gavelgida."

GAVELHERTE. A customary service of ploughing. Du Cange.

GAVELING MEN. Tenants who paid a reserved rent, besides some customary duties to be done by them. Cowell.

GAVELKIND. The tenure by which almost all lands in England were held prior to the Conquest, and which is still preserved in Kent.

All the sons of a tenant of gavelkind lands take equally, or their heirs male and female by representation. The wife of such tenant is dowable of one-half the lands. The husband of such tenant has curtesy, whether issue be born or not, but only of one-half while without issue. Such lands do not escheat, except for treason or want of heirs. The heir of such lands may sell at fifteen years old, but must himself give livery. The rule as to division among brothers in default of sons is the same as among the sons.

Lord Coke derives gavelkind from "gave all kinde;" for this custom gave to all the sons alike (1 Co. Litt. 140a); Lambard, from gavel, rent,—that is, land of the kind that pays rent or customary husbandry work, in distinction from lands held by knight service (Perambulations of Kent, 1656, p. 585).

GAVELLER. An officer of the English crown having the general management of the mines, pits, and quarries in the forest of Dean and hundred of St. Briavels, subject, in some respects, to the control of the commissioners of woods and forests. He grants gales to free miners in their proper order, accepts surrenders of gales, and keeps the registers required by the acts. There is a deputy gaveller, who appears to exercise most of the gaveller's functions. See "Gale." Rapalje & L.

GAVELMAN. A tenant who is liable to tribute. Somn. Gavelkind, p. 33; Blount. Gavelingmen were tenants who paid a reserved rent, besides customary service. Cowell.

GAVELMED. A customary service of mowing meadow land or cutting grass (consuetudo falcandi). Somn. Gavelkind, Append.; Blount.

GAVELREP. In old English law. Bedreap or bidreap; the duty of reaping at the bid or command of the lord. Somn. Gavelkind, 19, 21: Cowell.

GAVELWERK, or GAVELWEEK. A customary service, either manuopera, by the person of the tenant, or carropera, by his carts or carriages. Phill. Purv.; Blount; Somn. Gavelkind, 24; Du Cange.

GAZETTE. The official newspaper of the English government. It is published twice each week, and contains all the acts of state and proclamations, and also dissolutions of partnership and notices of proceedings in bankruptcy. Rapalje & L.

GEBOCCED (Saxon). From "boc," a writing conveyed.

GEBOCIAN (from Saxon boc). To convey boc land; the grantor being said to gebocian the grantee of the land. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 10. But the better opinion would seem to be that boc land was not transferable except by descent. See Du Cange.

GEBURSCIP, or GEBURSCRIPT. Neighborhood or adjoining district. Cowell.

GEBURUS. In old English law. A country neighbor; an inhabitant of the same geburscip or village. Cowell.

GELD (from Saxon gildan; Law Lat. geldum). A payment; tax; tribute. Laws Hen. I. c. 2; Charta Edredi Regis apud Ingulfum, c. 81; Mon. Angl. tit. 1, pp. 52, 211, 379; Id. tit. 2, pp. 161-163; Du Cange; Blount.

The compensation for a crime.

We find geld added to the word denoting the offense, or the thing injured or destroyed, and the compound taking the meaning of compensation for that offense, or the value of that thing. Capitulare 3, Anno 813, cc. 23, 25; Carl. Magn. So, wergeld, the compensation for killing a man, or his value; orfgeld, the value of cattle; angeld, the value of a single thing; octogeld, the value eight times over, etc. Du Cange, "Geldum."

GELDABILIS (Law Lat.) In old English law. Taxable; geldable.

GELDABLE (Law Fr.) Liable to pay geld; liable to be taxed. Kelham.

GEMMA (Lat.) In the civil law. A gem; a precious stone. Gems were distinguished by their transparency; such as emeralds, chrysolites, amethysts. Dig. 34. 2. 19. 17.

GEMOT, or GEMOTE (Saxon, from gemetland, to meet or assemble; Law Lat. gemotum). An assembly; a mote or moot, meeting, or public assembly.

There were various kinds; as, the witenagemot, or meeting of the wise men; the folcgemot, or general assembly of the people; the shiregemot, or county court; the burggemot, or borough court; the hundredgemot, or hundred court; the haligemot, or court baron; the halmote, a convention of citizens in their public hall; the holymote, or holy court; the sweingemote, or forest court; the wardmote, or ward court. Cunningham.

GENEALOGY. The summary history or table of a house or family, showing how the persons there named are connected together.

GENEARCH. The head of a family. Rapalje & L.

GENEATH (Saxon). In Saxon law. A villein, or agricultural tenant (villanus villicus); a hind or farmer (firmarius rusticus). Spelman.

GENER (Lat.) A son-in-law.

GENERAL. Principal; universal; common to all, or to the greatest number.

——General Acceptance. Of a bill of exchange. An absolute acceptance precisely in conformity to the tenor of the bill. 3 Bush (Ky.) 626.

——General Agent. One authorized to transact all his principal's business, or all his business of a particular class. 94 Ala. 346; 41 Ind. 438.

A "general agent" is so called in distinction from a "special agent," whose authority is for a particular purpose, and confined to a particular act (49 N. Y. 555), and "universal agent," who is authorized to do any and every act which the principal might do. Story, Ag. § 21.

——General Appearance. See "Appearance."

——General Assembly. A name given in some of the states to the senate and house of representatives, which compose the legislative body.

——General Assignment. An assignment of all the assignor's property; or one for the benefit of all his creditors.

——General Average. See "Average."

——General Charge. The instructions given by the court of its own motion, usually on the general aspects of the case, as distinguished from those given on the request of a party.

——General Covenant. One which relates to lands generally, and places the covenantee in the position of a specialty creditor. Brown.

——General Custom. One which obtains through a whole country, as distinguished from those peculiar to localities.

——General Damages. See "Damages."

——General Demurrer. A demurrer not indicating the precise ground of objection. One going to substance. See "Demurrer."

——General Deposit. See "Deposit."

——General Election.

(1) An election of officers throughout a state. 17 Mo. 511.

(2) An election of officers for the full term, as distinguished from an election to fill a vacancy. 52 Cal. 154.

(3) An election at a time appointed by law, as distinguished from one called specially.

——General Executor. One having general charge of the estate of his testator, as distinguished from a special executor appointed for a particular purpose or a limited time.

——General Gaol Delivery. In English law. One of the four commissions issued to judges holding the assizes, which empowers them to try and deliverance make of every prisoner who shall be in the gaol when the judges arrive at the circuit town, whether an indictment has been preferred at any previous assize or not.

It was anciently the course to issue special writs of gaol delivery for each prisoner, which were called writs de bono et malo; but, these being found inconvenient and oppressive, a general commission for all the prisoners has long been established in their stead. 4 Steph. Comm. 333, 334; 2 Hawk. P. C. 14, 28.

Under this authority, the gaol must be cleared and delivered of all prisoners in it, whenever or before whomever indicted, or for whatever crime. Such deliverance takes place when the person is either acquitted, convicted, or sentenced to punishment. Bracton, 110.

——General Guardian. One who has full general charge of the subject of guardianship.

——General Imparlance. In pleading. One granted upon a prayer in which the defendant reserves to himself no exceptions. See "Imparlance."

——General Issue. In pleading. A plea which denies or traverses at once the whole indictment or declaration, without offering any special matter to evade it.

It is called the general issue because, by importing an absolute and general denial of what is alleged in the indictment or declaration, it amounts at once to an issue. 2 Bl. Comm. 305. In the early manner of pleading, the general issue was seldom used except where the party meant wholly to deny the charges alleged against him. When he intended to excuse or palliate the charge, a special plea was used to set forth the particular facts.

But now, since special pleading is generally abolished, the same result is secured by requiring the defendant to file notice of special matters of defense which he intends to set up on the trial, or obliging him to use a form of answer adapted to the plaintiff's declaration, the method varying in different systems of pleading.

In criminal cases, the general issue is, not guilty. In civil cases, the general issues are almost as various as the forms of action: In assumpsit, the general issue is non assumpsit; in debt, nil debet; in detinue, non detinet; in trespass, non cul. (not guilty); in replevin, non cepit, etc.

Where the forms of action are abolished, the term is, in strictness, incorrect, but it is commonly applied to the general denial.

——General Jurisdiction. Jurisdiction applying to all subjects within the object of its general organization, and to all parties who can be reached by its process. 37 Miss. 48.

A jurisdiction which is not, within the limits of the judicial power of the sovereignty creating it, limited as to nature of subject matter, amount in controversy, or character of parties.

It is the nature of the jurisdiction, not its territorial extent, which determines whether a court is of limited or general jurisdiction. 11 Wis. 50.

——General Land Office. A bureau in the United States government which has the charge of matters relating to the public lands.

It was established by the act of April 25, 1812 (2 Story, U. S. Laws, 1238). Another act was passed March 24, 1824 (3 Story, U. S. Laws, 1938), which authorized the employment of additional officers. And it was reorganized by an act entitled, "An act to reorganize the general land office," approved July 4, 1836. It was originally a bureau of the treasury department, but was transferred in 1859 to the department of the interior.

——General Legacy. A pecuniary legacy, payable generally out of the assets of the testator. 2 Bl. Comm. 512.

——General Lien. A right to detain a chattel, etc., until payment be made, not only of any debt due in respect of the particular chattel, but of any balance that may be due on general account in the same line of business. 2 Steph. Comm. 132.

——General Meeting. A meeting of the largest class of persons concerned in a matter. Applied to meetings of stockholders, members, etc.

——General Occupant. The man who could first enter upon lands held pur autre vie, after the death of the tenant for life, living the cestui que vie. At common law he held the lands by right for the remainder of the term; but this is now altered by statute, in England, the term going to the executors if not devised. 29 Car. II. c. 3; 14 Geo. II. c. 20; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 258. This has been followed by some states (1 Code Md. 666, § 220, art. 93); in some states the term goes to heirs, if undevised (Gen. St. Mass. c. 91, § 1).

——General Owner. The person having the permanent or residuary title, as distinguished from a mere special or possessory right.

——General Partnership. One whose business includes all transactions of a particular class, as distinguished from special partnerships formed for a particular transaction. See 1 Cliff. (U. S.) 32.

——General Retainer. A fee paid to retain the services of an attorney generally, and not in a particular case. "It binds the person retained not to take a fee from another against his retainer, but to do nothing except what he is asked to do, and for this he is to be distinctly paid." 6 R. I. 206.

——General Sessions. In England, a court of record, held by two or more justices of the peace, for the execution of the authority given them by the commission of the peace and certain statutes. General sessions held at certain times in the four quarters of the year pursuant to St. 2 Hen. V. are properly called "quarter sessions" (q. v.), but intermediate general sessions may also be held. Pritch. Quar. Sess.; Rapalje & L.

In the United States, a court of general criminal jurisdiction in some states.

——General Ship. One which is employed by the charterer or owner on a particular voyage, and is hired by a number of persons, unconnected with each other, to convey their respective goods to the place of destination. A ship advertised for general receipt of goods to be carried on a particular voyage. The advertisement should state the name of the ship and master, the general character of the ship, the time of sailing, and the proposed voyage. See 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 130; Abb. Shipp. (7th London Ed.) 123.

The shippers in a general ship generally contract with the master; but in law the owners and the master are separately bound to the performance of the contract, it being considered as made with the owners, as well as with the master. Abb. Shipp. (7th London Ed.) 319.

——General Special Imparlance. In pleading. One in which the defendant reserves to himself "all advantages and exceptions whatsoever." 2 Chit. Pl. 408. See "Imparlance."

——General Statute, or General Law. As opposed to "private," one relating to matters of public concern.

As opposed to "local," one operative throughout the jurisdiction of the legislative body.

As opposed to "special," one which affects equally all persons or things of the same class.

——General Tail. An estate tail where one parent only is specified, whence the issue must be derived, as to A. and the heirs of his body. Rapalje & L.

——General Tenancy. "Such tenancies only as are not fixed and made certain in point of duration by the agreement of the parties." 22 Ind. 122.

——General Term.

(1) A term held pursuant to law, as distinguished from one specially called.

(2) A term for the trial of cases, as distinguished from one for the hearing of motions.

(3) A sitting of the trial judges in banc, for appellate purposes.

——General Traverse. See "Traverse."

——General Usage. One which prevails generally throughout the country. See "General Custom," supra, this title.

——General Verdict. One finding generally for one of the parties, as distinguished from a special verdict finding the facts.

"A finding by the jury in the terms of the issue referred to them." 2 Tidd, Pr. 869.

——General Warrant. A process which used to issue from the state secretary's office, to take up (without naming any person in particular) the author, printer, and publisher of such obscene and seditious libels as were particularly specified in it. It was declared illegal and void for uncertainty by a vote of the house of commons. Com. Jour. 22d April, 1766; Wharton.

A writ of assistance. The issuing of these was one of the causes of the American Republic. They were a species of general warrant, being directed to "all and singular justices, sheriffs, constables, and all other officers and subjects," empowering them to enter and search any house for uncustomed goods, and to command all to assist them. These writs were perpetual, there being no return to them. They were not executed, owing to the eloquent argument of Otis before the supreme court of Massachusetts against their legality. See Tudor, Life of Otis, 66.

——General Warranty. A covenant whereby the grantor warrants and agrees to defend the title to the premises conveyed against all persons whatsoever, as distinguished from a "special warranty" against persons "by or from" the grantor.

GENERALE DICTUM GENERALITER est interpretandum. A general expression is to be construed generally. 8 Coke, 116; 1 Eden, 96.

GENERALE NIHIL CERTUM IMPLICAT. A general expression implies nothing certain. 2 Coke, 34; Wingate, Max. 164.

GENERALE TANTUM VALET IN GENeralibus, quantum singulare in singulis. What is general prevails, or is worth as much, among things general, as what is particular among things particular. 11 Coke, 59.

GENERALIA PRAECEDUNT; SPECIALIA sequuntur. Things general precede; things special follow. Reg. Brev.; Branch, Princ.

GENERALIA SPECIALIBUS NON DEROgant. Things general do not derogate from things special. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 120.

GENERALIA VERBA SUNT GENERALIter intelligenda. General words are understood in a general sense. 3 Inst. 76; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 577.

GENERALIBUS SPECIALIA DEROGANT. Things special take from things general. Halk. Max. 51.

GENERALIS CLAUSULA NON PORRIGItur ad ea quae antea specialiter sunt comprehensa. A general clause does not extend to those things which are previously provided for specially. 8 Coke, 154.

GENERALIS REGULA GENERALITER est intelligenda. A general rule is to be understood generally. 6 Coke, 65.

GENEROSA (Law Lat.) Gentlewoman. Cowell; 2 Inst. 668.

GENEROSI FILIUS. The son of a gentleman. Generally abbreviated "gen. fil."

GENEROSUS. Gentleman; a gentleman. Spelman.

GENICULUM. A degree of consanguinity. Spelman.

GENS (Lat.) In Roman law. A union of families, who bore the same name, who were of an ingenuous birth (ingenui), none of whose ancestors had been a slave, and who had suffered no capitis diminutio.

Gentiles sunt, qui inter se eodem nomine sunt; qui ab ingenuis oriundi sunt; quorum majorum nemo servitutem servivit; qui capite non sunt deminuti. This definition is given by Cicero (Topic 6), after Scaevola, the pontifex. But, notwithstanding this high authority, the question as to the organization of the gens is involved in great obscurity and doubt. The definition of Festus is still more vague and unsatisfactory. He says: "Gentilis dicitur et ex eodem genere ortus, et is, qui simili nomine appellatur, ut ait Cincius: Gentiles mihi sunt, qui meo nomine appellantur." Gens and genus are convertible terms; and Cicero defines the latter word: "Genus autem est quod sui similes communione quadam, specie autem differentes, duas aut plures complectitur partes." De Oratore, 1, 42. The genus is that which comprehends two or more particulars, similar to one another by having something in common, but differing in species. From this it may fairly be concluded that the gens or race comprises several families, always of ingenuous birth, resembling each other by their origin, general name,—nomen,—and common sacrifices or sacred rites,—sacra gentilitia (sui similes communione quadam),—but differing from each other by a particular name,—cognomen and agnatio (specie autem differentes).

GENTES (Law Lat.) People. Contra omnes gentes, against all people. Bracton, fol. 37b. Words used in the clause of warranty in old deeds.

GENTILES. In Roman law. The members of a gens or common tribe.

GENTLEMAN. In English law. A person of superior birth.

According to Sir Edward Coke, he is one who bears coat armor, the grant of which adds gentility to a man's family. The eldest son had no exclusive claim to the degree; for, according to Littleton, "every son is as great a gentleman as the eldest." 2 Inst. 667. Sir Thomas Smith, quoted by Blackstone (1 Comm. 406), says: "As for gentlemen, they are made good cheap in this kingdom; for whosoever studies the laws of the realm, who studies in the universities, who professeth liberal sciences, and, to be short, who can live idly and without manual labor, and will bear the port, charge, and countenance of a gentleman, shall be called master, and be taken for a gentleman." In the United States, this word is unknown to the law; but in many places it is applied by courtesy to all men. See Poth. Proc. Cr. § 1, Append. § 3.

"It originally signified a man of gentle birth, but the use of the term has become changed, and it is often applied to denote persons of all ranks, from the upper down to the lowest verge of the middle class." 1 C. P. Div. 61. Thus, a coal agent out of employment (3 Hurl. & N. 798), or a medical student who had been in no business for several months (3 Hurl. & N. 382), is properly described as a "gent."

GENTLEWOMAN. An addition formerly appropriate in England to the state or degree of a woman. 2 Inst. 667.

GENUINE. Not spurious or counterfeit. Used in relation to a written instrument, it does not cover either the authority (149 N. Y. 182) or the capacity (37 N. Y. 487) of the maker.

GERECHTSBODE (Belg.) In old New York law. A court messenger or constable. O'Callaghan, New Neth. 322.

GERENS. Bearing. Gerens datum, bearing date. 1 Ld. Raym. 336; Hob. 19.

GERMAN. Whole or entire, as respects genealogy or descent; thus, "brother german" denotes one who is brother both by the father's and mother's side; "cousins german," those in the first and nearest degree, i. e., children of brothers or sisters. Tech. Dict.; 4 Man. & G. 56.

GERMANUS (Lat.) Descended of the same stock, or from the same couple of ancestors; of the whole or full blood. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 145.

GERONTOCOMI. In civil law. Officers appointed to manage hospitals for poor old persons. Clef des Lois Rom. "Administrateurs."

GERONTOCOMIUM. In the civil law. An institution or hospital for taking care of the old. Calv. Lex. Their managers are called "gerontocomi."

GERSUMARIUS. In old English. Fineable, or liable to be mulcted, fined, or amerced at the discretion of the lord. Cowell.

GERSUME (Saxon). In old English law. Expense; reward; compensation; wealth; especially, the consideration or fine of a contract; e. g., et pro hac concessione dedit nobis praedictus Jordanus 100 sol. sterling de gersume. Old charter, cited Somn. Gavelkind, 177; Tabul. Reg. Ch. 377; 3 Mon. Angl. 126, 920. It is also used for a fine or compensation for an offense. 2 Mon. Angl. 973.

GEST, GUST, or GESTE. In Saxon law. A guest.

GESTATION. See "Period of Gestation."

GESTIO (Lat.) In civil law. The doing or management of a thing. Negotiorum gestio, the doing voluntarily without authority business of another. De neg. gest. Gester negotiorum, one who so interferes with business of another without authority. Gestio pro haerede, behavior as heir; such conduct on the part of the heir as indicates acceptance of the inheritance, and makes him liable for ancestor's debts universally, e. g., an entry upon, or assigning, or letting any of the heritable property, releasing any of the debtors of the estate, or meddling with the title deeds or heirship movables, etc. Ersk. Inst. 3. 8. 82 et seq.; Stair, Inst. 3. 6. 1.

GESTIO PRO HAEREDE. Behavior as heir. That conduct by which an heir renders himself liable for his ancestor's debts, as by taking possession of title deeds, receiving rents, etc. Bell, Dict.

GESTOR. In civil law. One who acts for another, or transacts another's business. Calv. Lex.

GESTUM (Lat.) In Roman law. A thing done; a transaction. Strictly, a thing done without words, and so distinguished from actum. A distinction was sometimes made between "gestum" and "factum." Gaius, however, in the Digest (50. 16. 58) pronounces this to be subtile.

GEVILLOURIS. In old Scotch law. Gaolers. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 2, p. 234.

GEWINEDA. In Saxon law. The ancient convention of the people to decide a cause. Laws Aethel. c. 1.

GEWITNESSA (Saxon). In Saxon and old English law. The giving of evidence. Laws Aethel. c. 2.

GEWRITE. In Saxon law. Deeds or charters; writings. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 10.

GIFT. A voluntary conveyance; that is, a conveyance not founded on the consideration of money or blood.

The word denotes rather the motive of the conveyance, so that a feoffment or grant may be called a gift when gratuitous. A gift is of the same nature as a settlement,—neither denotes a form of assurance, but the nature of the transaction. Watk. Conv. (Preston Ed.) 199. The operative words of this conveyance are do, or dedi,—I give, or I have given. The maker of this instrument is called the donor, and he to whom it is made, the donee. 2 Bl. Comm. 316; Litt. 59; Shep. Touch. c. 11.

Gifts inter vivos are gifts made from one or more persons, without any prospect of immediate death, to one or more others. Gifts causa mortis are gifts made in prospect of death, and on the implied condition that it shall be of no effect if the donor shall recover. 49 N. Y. 17. See "Donatio."

GIFT ENTERPRISE. A scheme whereby gifts or premiums are distributed among the patrons of a business establishment, either the value of the premium, or the persons who shall receive the same, being determined by chance. See 165 Mass. 146; 73 Md. 529; 56 N. Y. 424; 48 Minn. 555.

GIFTA AQUAE. A stream of water. Blount.

GIFTOMAN. In Swedish law. He who has a right to dispose of a woman in marriage.

This right is vested in the father, if living; if dead, in the mother. They may nominate a person in their place; but for want of such nomination the brothers german, and for want of them the consanguine brothers, and in default of the latter the uterine brothers, have the right; but they are bound to consult the paternal or maternal grandfather. Swed. Code, "Marriage," c. 1.

GILD. See "Guild."

GILD HALL. See "Guildhall."

GILDA MERCATORIA (Law Lat.) A mercantile meeting.

If the king once grants to a set of men to have gildam mercatoriam, a mercantile meeting or assembly, this is alone sufficient to incorporate and establish them forever. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 473, 474. A company of merchants incorporated. St. Wm. Reg. Scot. c. 35; Leg. Burg. Scot. c. 99; Du Cange; Spelman; 8 Coke, 125a; 2 Ld. Raym. 1134.

GILDABLE. See "Geldable."

GILDO. In Saxon law. Member of a gild or decennary. Oftener spelled "congildo." Du Cange; Spelman, "Geldum."

GILL. A measure of capacity, equal to one-fourth of a pint.

GILOUR (Law Fr.) A cheat or deceiver. Applied in Britton to those who sold false or spurious things for good, as pewter for silver, or laten for gold. Britt. c. 15.

GIRANTEM, or GIRANTE. In common law. An Italian word, which signifies the drawer. It is derived from girare, to draw, in the same manner as the English verb to murder is transformed into murdrare in our old indictments. Hall, Mar. Loans, 183, note.

GIRTH. A girth, or yard, is a measure of length. The word is of Saxon origin, taken from the circumference of the human body. Girth is contracted from girdeth, and signifies as much as girdle.

GIRTH AND SANCTUARY. In Scotch law. A refuge or place of safety given to those who had slain a man in heat of passion (chaude melle), and unpremeditatedly. Abolished at the Reformation. 1 Hume, Hist. Eng. 235; 1 Ross, Lect. 331.

GISEMENT. Agistment; cattle taken in to graze at a certain price; also the money received for grazing cattle. Rapalje & L.

GISER (Law Fr.) In old English law. To lie.

Giser et mason, to lie or lodge at a house. St. Westminster I. c. 1.

GISETAKER. An agister. See "Gisement."

GISIL, or GISLE. A pledge or hostage.

GIST (sometimes, also, spelled git).

——In Pleading. The essential ground or object of the action in point of law, without which there would be no cause of action. Gould, Pl. c. 4, § 12; 19 Vt. 102. In stating the substance or gist of the action, everything must be averred which is necessary to be proved at the trial. The moving cause of the plaintiff's bringing the action, and the matter for which he recovers the principal satisfaction, is frequently entirely collateral to the gist of the action. Thus, where a father sues the defendant for a trespass for the seduction of his daughter, the gist of the action is the trespass and the loss of his daughter's services; but the collateral cause is the injury done to his feelings, for which the principal damages are given. 1 Viner, Abr. 598; 2 Phil. Ev. 1, note; Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (B); Doct. Plac. 85. See "Damages."

GIVE. A term used in deeds of conveyance. At common law, it implied a covenant. 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 366. So in Kentucky. 1 Pirtle, Dig. 211. In Maryland and Alabama it is doubtful. 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 311; 2 Ala. (N. S.) 555. In Ohio, in conveyance of freehold, it implies warranty for the grantor's life. 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 366. In Maine it implies a covenant. 5 Me. 227; 23 Me. 219. In New York it does not, by statute. See 14 Wend. 38. It does not imply covenant in North Carolina. 1 Murph. 343. Nor in England, by St. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 4.

GIVER. He who makes a gift. By his gift, the giver always impliedly agrees with the donee that he will not revoke the gift.

GIVING IN PAYMENT. In Louisiana. A term which signifies that a debtor, instead of paying a debt he owes in money, satisfies his creditor by giving in payment a movable or immovable. See "Dation en Paiement."

GIVING RINGS. A ceremony by gift of finger rings by a barrister on being made a serjeant-at-law.

GIVING TIME. An agreement by which a creditor gives his debtor a delay or time in paying his debt beyond that contained in the original agreement. When other persons are responsible to him, either as drawer, indorser, or surety, if such time be given without the consent of the latter, it discharges them from responsibility to him.

GLADIUS (Lat.) In old Latin authors, and in the Norman laws, this word was used to signify supreme jurisdiction,—jus gladii.

GLANS (Lat.) In the civil law. Acorns or nuts of the oak or other trees. Brissonius. In a larger sense, all fruits of trees. Dig. 43. 28.

GLAVEA. A hand dart. Cowell.

GLEANING. The act of gathering such grain in a field where it grew as may have been left by the reapers after the sheaves were gathered.

There is a custom in England, it is said, by which the poor are allowed to enter and glean upon another's land after harvest, without being guilty of a trespass. 3 Bl. Comm. 212. But it has been decided that the community are not entitled to claim this privilege as a right. 1 H. Bl. 51. In the United States, it is believed, no such right exists. It seems to have existed in some parts of France. Merlin, Repert. "Glanage." As to whether gleaning would or would not amount to larceny, see Woodf. Landl. & Ten. 242; 2 Russ. Crimes, 99. The Jewish law may be found in the 19th chapter of Leviticus, verses 9 and 10. See Ruth ii. 2, 3; Isaiah xvii. 6.

GLEBA.

——In the Civil Law. A turf, sod, or clod of earth; the soil or ground; cultivated land in general.

——In Old English Law. Church land (solum et dos ecclesiae). Spelman. See "Glebe."

GLEBAE ASCRIPTITII. See "Adscriptiti."

GLEBARIAE. Turf or peat. Cowell.

GLEBE.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. The land which belongs to a church. It is the dowry of the church. Gleba est terra qua consistit dos ecclesiae. 9 Cranch (U. S.) 329.

——In Civil Law. The soil of an inheritance. There were serfs of the glebe, called glebae addicti. Code, 11. 47. 7. 21; Nov. 54, c. 1.

GLOMERELLS. Commissioners appointed to determine differences between scholars in a school or university and the townsmen of the place. Jacob.

GLOS (Lat.) In civil law. A husband's sister. Dig. 38. 10. 4. 6.

GLOSS (Lat. glossa). Interpretation; comment; explanation; remark intended to illustrate a subject,—especially the text of an author. See Webster.

——In Civil Law. Glossae, or glossemata, were words which needed explanation. Calv. Lex. The explanations of such words. Id. Especially used of the short comments or explanations of the text of the Roman law, made during the twelfth century by the teachers at the schools of Bologna, etc., who were hence called glossators, of which glosses Accursius made a compilation which possesses great authority, called Glossa Ordi- naria. These glosses were at first written between the lines of the text (glossae interlineares), afterwards, on the margin, close by and partly under the text (glossae marginales). Cush. Introd. Rom. Law, 130-132.

GLOSSA VIPERINA EST QUAE CORRODit viscera textus. That is a viperine gloss which eats out the vitals of the text. 10 Coke, 70; 2 Bulst. 79.

GLOSSATOR. A commentator or annotator of the Roman law. One of the authors of the Gloss.

GLOUCESTER, STATUTE OF. An English statute, passed 6 Edw. I., A. D. 1278. So called because it was passed at Gloucester. There were other statutes made at Gloucester which do not bear this name. See St. 2 Rich. II.

GLOVE SILVER. Extraordinary rewards formerly given to officers of courts, etc.; money formerly given by the sheriff of a county in which no offenders are left for execution to the clerk of assize and judges' officers. Jacob.

GLOVES. It was an ancient custom on a maiden assize, when there was no offender to be tried, for the sheriff to present the judge with a pair of white gloves. It is an immemorial custom to remove the glove from the right hand on taking oath. Wharton.

GLYN. A hollow between two mountains; a valley or glen. Co. Litt. 5b.

GO TO PROTEST. A term of the commercial law, indicating the dishonor of commercial paper by nonpayment or nonacceptance, whereby it becomes subject to protest (q. v.)

GO WITHOUT DAY. Words used to denote that a party is dismissed the court. He is said to go without day, because there is no day appointed for him to appear again.

GOAT, or GOTE (Law Lat. gota; German, gote). A canal or sluice for the passage of water. Charter of Roger, Duke de Basingham, anno 1220, in Tabularis S. Bertini; Du Cange.

A ditch, sluice, or gutter. Cowell; St. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5. An engine for draining waters out of the land into the sea, erected and built with doors and percullesses of timber, stone, or brick,—invented first in Lower Germany. Callis, Sew. 66.

GOD AND MY COUNTRY. When a prisoner is arraigned, he is asked, "How will you be tried?" He answers, "By God and my country." This practice arose when the prisoner had the right to choose the mode of trial, namely, by ordeal or by jury, and then he elected by God or by his country, that is, by jury. It is probable that originally it was "By God or my country;" for the question asked supposes an option in the prisoner, and the answer is meant to assert his innocence by declining neither sort of trial. 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 416; Barr. Obs. St. 73, note.

GOD BOTE. In ecclesiastical law. An ecclesiastical or church fine imposed upon an offender for crimes and offenses committed against God.

GOD'S PENNY. In old English law. Money given to bind a bargain; earnest-money. So called because such money was anciently given to God,—that is, to the church and the poor. See "Denarius Dei."

GOGING STOLE. An old form of "cucking stool" (q. v.) Cowell.

GOING CONCERN. A business establishment which continues to transact its ordinary business, though it may be embarrassed, or even insolvent. 30 Fed. 865.

GOING THROUGH THE BAR. The act of the chief of an English common-law court in demanding of every member of the bar, in order of seniority, if he has anything to move. This was done at the sitting of the court each day in term, except special paper days, crown paper days in the queen's bench, and revenue paper days in the exchequer. On the last day of term this order is reversed, the first and second time round. In the exchequer the postman and tubman are first called on. Wharton.

GOING TO THE COUNTRY. When a party, under the common-law system of pleading, finished his pleading by the words, "and of this he puts himself upon the country," this was called "going to the country." It was the essential termination to a pleading which took issue upon a material fact in the preceding pleading. Rapalje & L.

GOING WITNESS. One who is going out of the jurisdiction of the court, although only into a state or country under the general sovereignty; as, for example, if he is going from one to another of the United States, or, in Great Britain, from England to Scotland. 2 Dickens, 454.

GOLDA. A mine. Blount. A sink or passage for water. Cowell.

GOLDSMITH'S NOTES. In English law. Banker's notes. So called because the trades of banker and goldsmith were originally joined. Chit. Bills, 423.

GOOD. Reasonable; suitable; sufficient; valid; meeting all legal requirements. See 10 Gray (Mass.) 302; 36 Mo. App. 192.

——As Applied to Commercial Paper. Genuine; collectible. 4 Metc. (Mass.) 48; 1 N. J. Law, 99.

——As Applied to Persons. Of a debtor, solvent (21 Mo. App. 372); of a person in a representative or official capacity (1 Blackf. [Ind.] 396).

——As Applied to Property Sold. Reasonably sound and suitable. See 1 Idaho, 41.

GOOD ABEARING. See "Abearance."

GOOD AND LAWFUL MEN. Those qualified to serve on juries; that is, those of full age, citizens, not infamous or non compos mentis; and they must be resident in the county where the venue is laid. Bac. Abr. "Juries" (A); Cro. Eliz. 654; 3 Inst. 30; 2 Rolle, 82; Cam. & N. (N. C.) 38.

GOOD BEHAVIOR. Conduct authorized by law. Surety of good behavior might at common law be demanded from any person justly suspected, upon sufficient grounds, of intending to commit a crime or misdemeanor. Surety for good behavior is somewhat similar to surety of the peace, but the recognizance is more easily forfeited, and it ought to be demanded with greater caution. 1 Bin. (Pa.) 98, note; 2 Yeates (Pa.) 437; 14 Viner, Abr. 21; Dane, Abr. Index. As to what is a breach of good behavior, see 2 Mart (La.; N. S.) 683; Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 61, § 6; 1 Chit. Prac. 676.

GOOD CONSIDERATION. See "Consideration."

GOOD COUNTRY. In Scotch law. Good men of the country. A name given to a jury.

GOOD FAITH. Honesty; absence of fraud, collusion, or deceit. 91 Wis. 464. See "Bona Fide Purchaser."

GOOD TITLE. A perfect title, free and clear from any legal exception or charge thereon. 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 370.

GOOD WILL. The benefit which arises from the establishment of particular trades or occupations. The advantage or benefit which is acquired by an establishment, beyond the mere value of the capital, stocks, funds, or property employed therein, in consequence of the general public patronage and encouragement which it receives from constant or habitual customers, on account of its local position, or common celebrity, or reputation for skill or affluence or punctuality, or from other accidental circumstances or necessities, or even from ancient partialities or prejudices. Story, Partn. § 99. See 17 Ves. 336; 1 Hoff. Ch. (N. Y.) 68; 16 Am. Jur. 87.

It includes only that estimation and repute which is peculiar to the particular establishment. It is that species of connection in trade which induces customers to deal with a particular firm.

GOODS.

——In Contracts. The term "goods" is not so wide as "chattels," for it applies to inanimate objects, and does not include animals or chattels real, as a lease for years of house or land, which "chattels" does include. Co. Litt. 118; 1 Russ. 376.

Goods will not include fixtures. 2 Mass. 495; 4 J. B. Moore, 73. In a more limited sense, "goods" is used for articles of merchandise. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 389. It has been held in Massachusetts that promissory notes were within the term "goods" in the statute of frauds (3 Metc. [Mass.] 365; but see 24 N. H. 484; 4 Dud. [S. C.] 28); so stock or shares of an incorporated company (20 Pick. [Mass.] 9; 3 Har. & J. [Md.] 38; 15 Conn. 400); so, in some cases, bank notes and coin (2 Story [U. S.] 52; 5 Mason [U. S.] 537). See "Chattel."

——In Wills. In wills, goods is nomen generalissimum, and, if there is nothing to limit it, will comprehend all the personal estate of the testator, as stocks, bonds, notes, money, plate, furniture, etc. 1 Atk. 180-182; 2 Atk. 62; 1 P. Wms. 267; 1 Brown, Ch. 128; 4 Russ. 370; Williams, Ex'rs, 1014; 1 Rop. Leg. 250. But in general it will be limited by the context of the will. See 2 Belt, Supp. Ves. 287; 1 Chit Prac. 89, 90; 1 Ves. Jr. 63; 3 Ves. 212; Hammond, Parties, 182; 1 Yeates (Pa.) 101; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 142; Ayliffe, Pand. 296; Weskett, Ins. 260; Sugd. Vend. 493, 497; and the articles "Biens;" "Chattel;" "Furniture."

GOODS AND CHATTELS.

——In Contracts. A term which includes not only personal property in possession, but choses in action and chattels real, as a lease for years of house or land, or emblements. 12 Coke, 1; 1 Atk. 182; Co. Litt. 118; 1 Russ. 376.

——In Criminal Law. Choses in action, as bank notes, mortgage deeds, and money, do not fall within the technical definition of "goods and chattels." And if described in an indictment as "goods and chattels," these words may be rejected as surplusage. 4 Gray (Mass.) 416; 3 Cox, C. C. 460; 1 Den. C. C. 450; 1 Dears. & B. C. C. 426; 2 Zab. (N. J.) 207; 1 Leach, C. C. 241 (4th Ed. 468). See 5 Mason (U. S.) 537.

——In Wills. If unrestrained, these words will pass all personal property. Williams, Ex'rs, 1014 et seq., Am. notes. See Add. Cont. 31, 201, 912, 914.

GOODS BARGAINED AND SOLD. A phrase used to designate the action of assumpsit brought on a contract of sale, where the purchaser has not accepted delivery of the goods.

GOODS SOLD AND DELIVERED. A phrase used to indicate the action of assumpsit brought when the sale and delivery of goods furnish the cause.

GOODS, WARES, AND MERCHANDISE. A phrase used in the statute of frauds, covering, generally, all classes of personal property. Fixtures do not come within it. 1 Cromp., M. & R. 275; 3 Tyrwh. 959; 1 Tyrwh. & G. 4. Growing crops of potatoes, corn, turnips, and other annual crops, are within it. 8 Dowl. & R. 314; 10 Barn. & C. 446; 4 Mees. & W. 347. Per contra, 2 Taunt. 38. See Add. Cont. 31, 32; 2 Dana (Ky.) 206; 2 Rawle (Pa.) 161; 5 Barn. & C. 829; 10 Adol. & E. 753. See, generally, 118 Mass. 285; 20 Mich. 357. Promissory notes and shares in an incorporated company, and, in some cases, money and bank notes, have been held within it. See 2 Pars. Cont. 330-332.

GOODTITLE. Sometimes used as the name of the fictitious tenant in ejectment, as "Doe" or "Jackson" is more usually employed.

GOVERNMENT (Lat. gubernaculum, a rudder. The Romans compared the state to a vessel, and applied the term gubernator, helmsman, to the leader or actual ruler of a state. From the Latin, this word has passed into most of the modern European languages). That institution or aggregate of institutions by which a state makes and carries out those rules of action which are necessary to enable men to live in a social state, or which are imposed upon the people forming a state.

We understand, in modern political science, by "state," in its widest sense, an independent society, acknowledging no superior, and by the term "government," that institution or aggregate of institutions by which that society makes and carries out those rules of action which are necessary to enable men to live in a social state, or which are imposed upon the people forming that society by those who possess the power or authority of prescribing them. Government is the aggregate of authorities which rule a society. By "administration," again, we understand in modern times, and especially in more or less free countries, the aggregate of those persons in whose hands the reins of government are for the time being,—the chief ministers or heads of departments. But the terms "state," "government," and "administration" are not always used in their strictness. The government of a state being its most prominent feature, which is most readily perceived, "government" has frequently been used for "state;" and the publicists of the last century almost always used the term "government," or "form of government," when they discussed the different political societies or states. On the other hand, "government" is often used, to this day, for "administration," in the sense in which it has been explained.

They are never actually created by agreement or compact. Even where portions of government are formed by agreement, as, for instance, when a certain family is called to rule over a country, the contracting parties must previously be conscious of having authority to do so. As society originates with the family, so does authority or government. Nowhere do men exist without authority among them, even though it were but in its mere incipiency. Men are forced into this state of things by the fundamental law that with them, and with them alone of all mammals, the period of dependence of the young upon its parents outlasts by many years the period of lactation, so that, during this period of post-lactational dependence, time and opportunity are given for the development of affection and the habit of obedience on the one hand, and of affection and authority on the other, as well as of mutual dependence. The family is a society, and expands into clusters of families, into tribes and larger societies, collecting into communities, always carrying the habit and necessity of authority and mutual support along with them. As men advance, the great and pervading law of mutual dependence shows itself more and more clearly, and acts more and more intensely. Man is eminently a social being, not only as to an instinctive love of aggregation, not only as to material necessity and security, but also as to mental and affectional development, and not only as to a given number of existing beings, or what we will call as to "extent," but also as to "descent" of generation after generation, or, as we may call it, "transmission." Society, and its government along with it, are continuous. Government exists and continues among men, and laws have authority for generations which neither made them, nor had any direct representation in making them, because the necessity of government—necessary according to the nature of social man and to his wants—is a continuous necessity. But the family is not only the institution from which once, at a distant period, society, authority, and government arose. The family increases in importance, distinctness, and intensity of action as man advances, and continues to develop authority, obedience, affection, and social adhesiveness, and thus acts with reference to the state as the feeder acts with reference to the canal. The state originates daily anew in the family.

Although man is an eminently social being, he is also individual, morally, intellectually, and physically; and, while his individuality will endure even beyond this life, he is necessitated, by his physical condition, to appropriate and to produce, and thus to imprint his individuality upon the material world around, to create property. But man is not only an appropriating and producing, he is also an exchanging, being. He always exchanges and always intercommunicates. This constant intertwining of man's individualism and socialism creates mutual claims of protection, rights, the necessity of rules, of laws,—in one word, as individuals and as natural members of society, men produce and require government. No society, no cluster of men, no individuals banded together even for a temporary purpose, can exist without some sort of government instantly springing up. Government is natural to man, and characteristic. No animals have a government; no authority exists among them; instinct and physical submission alone exist among them. Man alone has laws which ought to be obeyed, but may be disobeyed. Expansion, accumulation, development, progress, relapses, disintegration, violence, error, superstition, the necessity of intercommunication, wealth and poverty, peculiar disposition, temperament, configuration of the country, traditional types, pride and avarice, knowledge and ignorance, sagacity of individuals, taste, activity and sluggishness, noble or criminal bias, position, both geographical and chronological,—all that affects numbers of men affects their governments, and an endless variety of governments and political societies has been the consequence; but, whatever form of government may present itself to us, the fundamental idea, however rudely conceived, is always the protection of society and its members, security of property and person, the administration of justice therefor, and the united efforts of society to furnish the means to authority to carry out its objects,—contribution, which, viewed as imposed by authority, is taxation. Those bands of robbers which occasionally have risen in disintegrating societies, as in India, and who merely robbed and devastated, avowing that they did not mean to administer justice or protect the people, form no exception, although the extent of their soldiery, and the periodicity of their raids, caused them to be called governments. What little of government continued to exist was still the remnant of the communal government of the oppressed hamlets; while the robbers themselves could not exist without a government among themselves.

Aristotle classified governments according to the seat of supreme power, and he has been generally followed down to very recent times. Accordingly, we had monarchy, that government in which the supreme power is vested in one man, to which was added, at a later period, the idea of hereditariness. Aristocracy, the government, in which the supreme power is vested in the aristoi, which does not mean, in this case, the best, but the excelling ones, the prominent, i. e., by property and influence. Privilege is its characteristic. Its corresponding degenerate government is the oligarchy (from oligos, little, few), that government in which supreme power is exercised by a few privileged ones, who generally have arrogated the power. Democracy, that government in which supreme power is vested in the people at large. Equality is one of its characteristics. Its degenerate correspondent is the ochlocracy (from ochlos, the rabble), for which at present the barbarous term "mobocracy" is frequently used.

But this classification was insufficient, even at the time of Aristotle, when, for instance, theocracies existed; nor is the seat of supreme power the only characteristic, nor, in all respects, by any means the chief characteristic. A royal government, for instance, may be less absolute than a republican government. In order to group together the governments and political societies which have existed, and are still existing, with philosophical discrimination, we must pay attention to the chief power holder (whether he be one or whether there are many), to the pervading spirit of the administration or wielding of the power, to the characteristics of the society, or the influencing interests of the same, to the limitation or entirety of public power, to the peculiar relations of the citizen to the state. Indeed, every principle, relation, or condition characteristically influencing or shaping society or government in particular may furnish us with a proper division. We propose, then, the following:

Grouping of Political Societies and Governments.

I. According to the supreme power holder, or the placing of supreme power, whether really or nominally so.

The power holder may be one, a few, many, or all; and we have, accordingly:

A. Principalities, that is, states the rulers of which are set apart from the ruled, or inherently differ from the ruled, as in the case of the theocracy.
  (1) Monarchy.
    (a) Patriarchy.
    (b) Chieftain government (as our Indians).
    (c) Sacerdotal monarchy (as the states of the church; former sovereign bishoprics).
    (d) Kingdom, or principality proper.
    (e) Theocracy (Jehovah was the chief magistrate of the Israelitic state).
  (2) Dyarchy. It exists in Siam, and existed occasionally in the Roman empire; not in Sparta, because Sparta was a republic, although her two hereditary generals were called kings.

B. Republic.
  (1) Aristocracy.
    (a) Aristocracy proper.
      (aa) Aristocracies which are democracies within the body of aristocrats (as the former Polish government).
      (bb) Organic internal government (as Venice formerly).
    (b) Oligarchy.
    (c) Sacerdotal republic, or hierarchy.
    (d) Plutocracy; if, indeed, we adopt this term from antiquity for a government in which it is the principle that the possessors of great wealth constitute the body of aristocrats.
  (2) Democracy.
    (a) Democracy proper.
    (b) Ochlocracy (mob rule), "mob" meaning unorganized multitude.

II. According to the unity of public power, or its division and limitation.

A. Unrestricted power, or absolutism.
  (1) According to the form of government.
    (a) Absolute monarchy, or despotism.
    (b) Absolute aristocracy (Venice); absolute sacerdotal aristocracy, etc.
    (c) Absolute democracy (the government of the Agora, or market democracy).
  (2) According to the organization of the administration.
    (a) Centralized absolutism. Centralism, called "bureaucracy" when carried on by writing; at least, bureaucracy has very rarely existed, if ever, without centralism.
    (b) Provincial (satraps, pashas, proconsuls).

B. According to division of public power.
(1) Governments in which the three great functions of public power are separate, viz., the legislative, executive, judiciary. If a distinct term contradistinguished to centralism be wanted, we might call these "co-operative governments."
(2) Governments in which these branches are not strictly separate, as, for instance, in our government, but which are nevertheless not centralized governments; as Republican Rome, Athens, and several modern kingdoms.

C. Institutional government.
(1) Institutional government comprehending the whole, or constitutional government.
(a) Deputative government.
(b) Representative government.
(aa) Bicameral.
(2) Local self-government. See V. We do not believe that any substantial self-government can exist without an institutional character and subordinate self-governments. It can exist only under an institutional government (see Lieber's Civil Liberty and Self-Government, under "Institution").

D. Whether the state is the substantive or the means, or whether the principle of socialism or individualism preponderates.
(1) Socialism, that state of society in which the socialist principle prevails, or in which government considers itself the substantive; the ancient states absorbing the individual or making citizenship the highest phase of humanity; absolutism of Louis XIV. Indeed, all modern absolutism is socialistic.
(2) Individualism, that system in which the state remains acknowledged a means, and the individual the substantive; where primary claims, that is, rights, are felt to exist, for the obtaining and protection of which the government is established,—the government, or even society, which must not attempt to absorb the individual. The individual is immortal, and will be of another world; the state is neither.

III. According to the descent or transfer of supreme power.

A. Hereditary governments.
Monarchies.
Aristocracies.
Hierarchies, etc.

B. Elective.
Monarchies.
Aristocracies.
Hierarchies.

C. Hereditary—elective—governments, the rulers of which are chosen from a certain family or tribe.

D. Governments in which the chief magistrate or monarch has the right to appoint the successor; as occasionally the Roman emperors, the Chinese, the Russian, in theory, Bonaparte when consul for life.

IV. According to the origin of supreme power, real or theoretical.

A. According to the primordial character of power.
(1) Based on jus divinum.
(a) Monarchies.
(b) Communism, which rests its claims on a jus divinum or extrapolitical claim of society,
(c) Democracies, when proclaiming that the people, because the people, can do what they list, even against the law; as the Athenians once declared it, and Napoleon III., when he desired to be elected president a second time against the constitution.
(2) Based on the sovereignty of the people.
(a) Establishing an institutional government, as with us.
(b) Establishing absolutism (the Bonaparte sovereignty).

B. Delegated power.
(1) Chartered governments.
(a) Chartered city governments.
(b) Chartered companies, as the former great East India Company.
(c) Proprietary governments.
(2) Vice royalties; as Egypt, and, formerly, Algiers.
(3) Colonial government with constitution and high amount of self-government,—a government of great importance in modern history.

V. Constitutions. (To avoid too many subdivisions, this subject has been treated here separately. See II*).*

Constitutions, the fundamental laws on which governments rest, and which determine the relation in which the citizen stands to the government, as well as each portion of the government to the whole, and which, therefore, give feature to the political society, may be:

A. As to their origin.
(1) Accumulative; as the constitutions of England or Republican Rome.

(2) Enacted constitutions (generally, but not philosophically, called "written constitutions").
(a) Octroyed constitutions (as the French, by Louis XVIII.)
(b) Enacted by the people, as our constitutions. ("We, the people, charter governments; formerly governments chartered the liberties of the people.")
(3) Pacts between two parties, contracts, as Magna Charta, and most charters in the Middle Ages. The medieval rule was that as much freedom was enjoyed as it was possible to conquer,—expugnare in the true sense.

B. As to extent or uniformity.
(1) Broadcast over the land. We may call them national constitutions, popular constitutions, constitutions for the whole state.
(2) Special charters. Chartered, accumulated and varying franchises, medieval character. (See article "Constitution" in the Encyclopaedia Americana.)

VI. As to the extent and comprehension of the chief government.
A. Military governments.
(1) Commercial government; one of the first in Asia, and that into which Asiatic society relapses, as the only remaining element, when barbarous conquerors destroy all bonds which can be torn by them.
(2) Tribal government.
(a) Stationary.
(b) Nomadic. We mention the nomadic government under the tribal government, because no other government has been nomadic, except the patriarchal government, which indeed is the incipiency of the tribal government.
(3) City government; that is, city states; as all free states of antiquity, and as the Hanseatic governments in modern times.
(4) Government of the Medieval Orders extending over portions of societies far apart; as the Templars, Teutonic Knights, Knights of St. John. Political societies without necessary territory, although they had always landed property.
(5) National states; that is, populous political societies spreading over an extensive and cohesive territory beyond the limits of a city.

B. Confederacies.
(1) As to admission of members, or extension.
(a) Closed, as the Amphictyonic council, Germany.
(b) Open, as ours.
(2) As to the federal character, or the character of the members, as states.
(a) Leagues.
(aa) Tribal confederacies; frequently observed in Asia; generally of a loose character.
(bb) City leagues, as the Hanseatic League, the Lombard League.
(cc) Congress of deputies, voting by states and according to instruction; as the Netherlands republic and our Articles of Confederation, Germanic Confederation.
(dd) Present "state system of Europe" (with constant congresses, if we may call this "system," a federative government in its incipiency).
(b) Confederacies proper, with national congress.
(aa) With ecclesiae or democratic congress (Achaean League).
(bb) With representative national congress, as ours.

C. Mere agglomerations of one ruler.
(1) As the early Asiatic monarchies, or Turkey.
(2) Several crowns in one head; as Austria, Sweden, Denmark.

VII. As to the construction of society, the title of property and allegiance.
A. As to the classes of society.
(1) Castes, hereditarily dividing the whole population, according to occupations and privileges. India, ancient Egypt.
(2) Special castes.
(a) Government with privileged classes or caste; nobility.
(b) Government with degraded or oppressed caste; slavery.
(c) Governments founded on equality of citizens (the uniform tendency of modern civilization).

B. As to property and production.
(1) Communism.
(2) Individualism.

C. As to allegiance.

(1) Plain, direct; as in unitary governments.
(2) Varied; as in national confederacies.
(3) Graduated or encapsulated; as in the feudal system, or as is the case with the serf.

D. Governments are occasionally called according to the prevailing interests or classes; as Military states; for instance, Prussia under Frederick II.
Maritime state.
Commercial.
Agricultural.
Manufacturing.
Ecclesiastical, etc.

VIII. According to simplicity or complexity, as in all other spheres, we have—

A. Simple governments (formerly called "pure;" as "pure democracy").

B. Complex governments, formerly called "mixed."

GRACE. Favor or indulgence, as distinguished from right.

GRACE, DAYS OF. See "Days of Grace."

GRADATIM (Lat.) In old English law. By degrees or steps; step by step; from one degree to another. Bracton, fol. 64.

GRADUS (Lat. a step). A measure of space. Vicat. A degree of relationship (distantia cognatorum). Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 153; Bracton, fols. 134, 374; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 2, § 1; Id. lib. 4, c. 17, § 4.

A step or degree generally; e. g., gradus honorum, degrees of honor. Vicat. A pulpit; a year; a generation. Du Cange.

A port; any place where a vessel can be brought to land. Du Cange.

GRADUS PARENTELAE. A pedigree; a table of relationship.

GRAFFER, or GRAFFARIUS. In old English law. A graffer, notary, or scrivener. St. 5 Hen. VIII. c. 1.

GRAFFIUM. A register; a leger book or cartulary of deeds and evidences.

GRAFIO. A baron, inferior to a count. 1 Mart. Anec. Collect. 13. A fiscal judge; an advocate. Du Cange; Spelman; Cowell. For various derivations, see Du Cange.

GRAFT. In equity. A term used to designate the right of a mortgagee in premises to which the mortgagor at the time of making the mortgage had an imperfect title, but who afterwards obtained a good title. In this case the new mortgage is considered a graft into the old stock, and as arising in consideration of the former title. 1 Ball & B. 40, 46, 57; 1 Powell, Mortg. 190. See 9 Mass. 34. The same principle has obtained by legislative enactment in Louisiana. If a person contracting an obligation towards another, says the Civil Code (article 2371), grants a mortgage on property of which he is not then the owner, this mortgage shall be valid if the debtor should ever acquire the ownership of the property, by whatever right.

For scientific purposes the grain only is used, and sets of weights are constructed in decimal progression, from ten thousand grains to one-hundredth of a grain.

Wheat, rye, barley, or other corn sown in the ground. In Pennsylvania, a tenant for a certain term is entitled to the away-going crop. 2 Bin. (Pa.) 487; 5 Bin. (Pa.) 258, 289; 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 14. See "Away-Going Crop."

GRAINAGE. In English law. The name of an ancient duty collected in London, consisting of one-twentieth part of the salt imported into that city.

GRAMMATICA FALSA NON VITIAT chartam. False grammar does not vitiate a deed. 9 Coke, 48.

GRAMMATOPHYLACIUM (Graeco-Lat.) In the civil law. A place for keeping writings or records. Dig. 48. 19. 9. 6.

GRAMME. A French weight. The gramme is the weight of a cubic centimetre of distilled water at the temperature of zero. It is equal to 15.4441 grains troy, or 5.6481 drachms avoirdupois.

GRANATARIUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. An officer having charge of a granary. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 1; Id. c. 84.

GRAND ASSIZE. An extraordinary trial by jury, instituted by Henry II., by way of alternative offered to the choice of the tenant or defendant in a writ of right, instead of the barbarous custom of trial by battel. For this purpose, a writ de magna assiza eligenda was directed to the sheriff to return four knights, who were to choose twelve other knights to be joined with themselves; and these sixteen formed the grand assize, or great jury, to try the right between the parties. 3 Bl. Comm. 351.

GRAND BILL OF SALE. In English law. The name of an instrument used for the transfer of a ship while she is at sea. See "Bill of Sale;" 7 Mart. (La.) 318.

GRAND CAPE. In English law. A writ judicial which lieth when a man has brought a praecipe quod reddat, of a thing that toucheth plea of lands, and the tenant makes default on the day given him in the writ original, then this writ shall go for the king, to take the land into the king's hands, and, if he comes not at the day given him by the grand cape, he has lost his lands. Old Nat. Brev. fols. 161, 162; Reg. Jud. fol. 2b; Bracton, lib. 5, tr. 3, c. 1, Nos. 4, 5, 6. So called because its Latin form began with the word cape, "take thou," and because it had more words than the petit cape, or because petit cape summons to answer for default only. Petit cape issues after appearance to the original writ, grand cape before.

GRAND COUTUMIER. Two collections of laws bore this title. One, also called the "Coutumier of France," is a collection of the customs, usages, and forms of practice which had been used from time immemorial in France; the other, called the "Coutumier de Normandie" (which, indeed, with some alterations, made a part of the former), was composed about the fourteenth of Henry III., A. D. 1229, and is a collection of the Norman laws, not as they stood at the conquest of England by William the Conqueror, but some time afterwards, and contains many provisions probably borrowed from the old English or Saxon laws. Hale, Hist. Com. Law, c. 6.

GRAND DAYS. In English practice. Those days in the term which are solemnly kept in the inns of court and chancery, viz., Candlemas Day in Hilary term, Ascension Day in Easter term, St. John the Baptist's Day in Trinity term, and All Saints' Day in Michaelmas term, which are dies nonjuridici, or no days in court, and are set apart for festivity. Jacob.

GRAND DISTRESS. In English practice. A process which formerly issued where the defendant, after being attached, neglected to appear; its object being to compel an appearance by distraining his goods (3 Bl. Comm. 280). It is called "grand" from its extent and stringency. Blount.

GRAND JURY. In practice. A body of men, consisting of not less than twelve nor more than twenty-four, respectively returned by the sheriff of every county to every session of the peace, oyer and terminer, and general gaol delivery, to whom indictments are preferred. 4 Bl. Comm. 302; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 310, 311.

There is reason to believe that this institution existed among the Saxons. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 35. By the constitutions of Clarendon, enacted 10 Hen. II. (A. D. 1164), it is provided that, "if such men were suspected whom none wished or dared to accuse, the sheriff, being thereto required by the bishop, should swear twelve men of the neighborhood, or village, to declare the truth" respecting such supposed crime, the jurors being summoned as witnesses or accusers, rather than judges. It seems to be pretty certain that this statute either established grand juries, if this institution did not exist before, or recognized them if they already existed. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 63.

GRAND LARCENY.

——At Common Law. Simple larceny was divided into grand and petit. The former was committed by the stealing of property exceeding twelve pence in value; the latter, when the property was of the value of twelve pence or under. This distinction was not abolished till the reign of George IV. Grand larceny was a capital offense, but clergyable unless attended with certain aggravations. Petit larceny was punishable with whipping, "or some such corporal punishment less than death;" and, being a felony, it was subject to forfeiture, whether upon conviction or flight.

——In the United States. The distinction between grand and petit larceny is generally preserved; the amount necessary to be stolen to constitute grand larceny being ordinarily about twenty dollars. Grand larceny is a felony, and petit larceny a misdemeanor.

GRAND SERJEANTY. In English law. A species of tenure in capite, by certain personal and honorable services to the king, called "grand" in respect of the honor of so serving the king. Instances of such services are, the carrying of the king's banner, performing some service at his coronation, etc. The honorable parts of this tenure were retained, and its oppressive incidents swept away, by St. 12 Car. II. c. 24. Termes de la Ley; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 73; 1 Steph. Comm. 198.

GRANDCHILDREN. The children of one's children. Sometimes these may claim bequests given in a will to children, though, in general, they can make no such claim. 6 Coke, 16. See "Child;" "Construction."

GRANGE. A barn or granary; other outbuildings used in husbandry.

GRANGIARIUS, or GRANGEARIUS. A grange keeper.

GRANT.

——At Common Law. A transfer by deed of that which cannot pass by livery. Williams, Real Prop. 149.

A grant was proper to transfer an incorporeal hereditament or a reversion or vested remainder in land, but in England, before 1845, a grant was not effectual to transfer an estate in fee in land in possession. 7 W. Va. 235.

A grant is now sufficient to convey any estate. 12 Minn. 468.

——In Modern Law. A general term, including all sorts of conveyances. 4 Mason (U. S.) 69.

The term is properly applicable only to realty (1 Mont. 410), but it has been applied to personalty. 12 Minn. 468.

It is particularly applied to conveyances by the government, whether of lands or of incorporeal hereditaments, as franchises.

By the word "grant," in a treaty, is meant not only a formal grant, but any concession, warrant, order, or permission to survey, possess, or settle, whether written or parol, express, or presumed from possession. Such a grant may be made by law, as well as by a patent pursuant to a law. 12 Pet. (U. S.) 410. See 9 Adol. & E. 532; 5 Mass. 472; 9 Pick. (Mass.) 80.

"Office grant" applies to conveyances made by some officer of the law to effect certain purposes, where the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute the requisite deeds to pass the title.

"Private grant" is a grant by the deed of a private person.

"Public grant" is the mode and act of creating a title in an individual to lands which had previously belonged to the government.

The public lands of the United States, and of the various states, have been to a great extent conveyed by deeds or patents issued in virtue of general laws; but many specific grants have also been made, and are the usual method of transfer during the colonial period. See 2 Washb. Real Prop. 517-536; 4 Kent, Comm. 450, 494; 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 543; 6 Pet. (U. S.) 548; 16 Pet. (U. S.) 367; Brightly, Dig. U. S. Laws, "Lands;" "Patent."

Among the modes of conveyance included under office grant are levies and sales to satisfy execution creditors, sales by order or decree of a court of chancery, sales by order or license of court, sales for nonpayment of taxes, and the like. See Blackw. Tax Titles, passim; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 536-549.

With regard to private grants, see "Deed."

GRANT, BARGAIN, AND SELL. Words used in instruments of conveyance of real estate. See "Construction;" 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 463; 32 Me. 329; 1 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 30; 1 Conn. 79; 5 Tenn. 124; 2 Bin. (Pa.) 95; 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 109; 1 Mo. 576; 1 Murph. (N. C.) 343.

GRANT OF PERSONAL PROPERTY. A method of transferring personal property, distinguished from a gift by being always founded on some consideration or equivalent. 2 Bl. Comm. 440, 441. Its proper legal designation is an "assignment," or "bargain and sale." 2 Steph. Comm. 102.

GRANT TO USES. This is common grant, with uses superadded, and has become the favorite mode of transferring realty. Wharton.

GRANTÉE. He to whom a grant is made.

GRANTOR. He by whom a grant is made.

GRANTZ. In old English law. Noblemen.

GRASSHEARTH. In old English law. The name of an ancient customary service of tenants' doing one day's work for their landlord.

GRASSON. In feudal law. A fine paid on transfer of a copyhold.

GRATIFICATION. A reward given voluntarily for some service or benefit rendered, without being requested so to do, either expressly or by implication.

GRATIS (Lat.) Without reward or consideration.

GRATIS DICTUM (Lat.) A saying not required; a statement voluntarily made without necessity.

GRATUITOUS. Without valuable or legal consideration. A term applied to deeds of conveyance.

——In Old English Law. Voluntary; without force, fear, or favor. Bracton, fols. 11, 17.

GRATUITOUS CONTRACT. In civil law. One the object of which is for the benefit of the person with whom it is made, without any profit, received or promised, as a consideration for it; as, for example, a gift. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 709.

GRAVAMEN (Lat.) The grievance complained of; the substantial cause of the action. See Greenl. Ev. § 66.

GRAVATIO (Lat.) An accusation.

GRAVIS (Lat.) Grievous; great. Ad grave damnum, to the grievous damage. 11 Coke, 40.

GRAVIUS (Law Lat.) In old European law. A grave; a chief magistrate or officer. A term derived from the more ancient "grafio," and used in combination with various other words, as an official title in Germany; as Margravius, Rheingravius, Landgravius, etc. Spelman, voc. "Grafio."

GRAVIUS EST DIVINAM QUAM TEMporalem laedere majestatem. It is more serious to hurt divine than temporal majesty. 11 Coke, 29.

GRAY'S INN. An inn of court. See "Inns of Court."

GREAT CATTLE. In English law. All manner of beasts, except sheep and yearlings. 2 Rolle, 173.

GREAT CHARTER. See "Magna Charta."

GREAT LAW. The name of an act of the legislature of Pennsylvania, passed at Chester immediately after the arrival of William Penn, December 7, 1682. Sergeant, Land Laws Pa. 24, 230.

GREAT SEAL. By act of union (article 24) it was provided that there should be one great seal for the United Kingdom, to be used in sealing writs, to summon parliament, foreign treaties, etc., in all public acts which concern the United Kingdom, and all acts which concern England, and that a seal should be kept in Scotland, to be used in all things relating to private rights or grants which had theretofore passed the Great Seal of Scotland. Wharton.

GREAT TITHES. In ecclesiastical law. The more valuable tithes; as, corn, hay, and wood. 3 Burn, Ecc. Law, 680, 681; 3 Steph. Comm. 127.

GREE. Satisfaction for an offense committed, or injury done. Cowell.

GREEN CLOTH. An English board or court of justice, composed of the lord steward and inferior officers, and held in the royal household. So named from the cloth upon the board at which it is held.

GREEN GOODS. A slang term for counterfeit money. Usually used in connection with a swindle whereby, under a pretense of selling counterfeit money, some worthless substance is palmed off on the buyer. See 79 Hun (N. Y.) 310; 51 Hun (N. Y.) 624.

GREEN SILVER. A feudal custom in the manor of Writtel, in Essex, where every tenant whose front door opens to Greenbury shall pay a half-penny yearly to the lord, by the name of "green silver" or "rent." Cowell.

GREEN WAX. In English law. The name of the estreats of fines, issues and amercements in the exchequer, delivered to the sheriff under the seal of that court, which is made with green wax.

GREGORIAN EPOCH. The time from which the Gregorian calendar or computation dates, i. e., from the year 1582.

GREMIO. In Spanish law. The union of merchants, artisans, laborers, or other persons who follow the same pursuits, and are governed by the same regulations. The word "guild," in English, has nearly the same signification.

GREMIUM (Lat.) Bosom. Ainsworth. De gremio mittere, to send from their bosom; used of one sent by an ecclesiastical corporation or body. A latere mittere, to send from his side, or one sent by an individual; as, a legate sent by the pope. Du Cange. In English law, an inheritance is said to be in gremio legis, in the bosom or under the protection of the law, when it is in abeyance. See "In Nubibus."

GRESSUME, GRESSAME, GRESSUM, or grossome (Scotch, grassum). In old English law. A fine due from a copyholder on the death of his lord. Plowd. fols. 271, 285; 1 Strange, 654. Cowell derives it from gersum.

GRETNA GREEN MARRIAGE. A marriage celebrated at Gretna, in Dumfries (bordering on the county of Cumberland), in Scotland. By the law of Scotland, a valid marriage may be contracted by consent alone, without any other formality. When the marriage act (26 Geo. II. c. 33) rendered the publication of banns, or a license, necessary in England, it became usual for persons who wished to marry clandestinely to go to Gretna Green, the nearest part of Scotland, and marry according to the Scotch law; so a sort of chapel was built at Gretna Green, in which the English marriage service was performed by the village blacksmith. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 96, § 1, now requires twenty-one days previous residence in Scotland, unless one of the parties has a usual place of residence therein. Wharton.

GRIEVED. Aggrieved. 3 East, 22.

GRITH (Saxon). Peace.

GRITHBRECH (Saxon, grith, peace, and brych, breaking). Breach of the king's peace, as opposed to frithbrech, a breach of the nation's peace with other nations. Leg. Hen. I. c. 36; Chart. Willielm. Conq. Eccl. St. Pauli in Hist. ejusd. fol. 90.

GRITHSTOLE (Saxon). In Saxon law. A seat, chair, or place of peace; a sanctuary; a stone within a church gate, to which an offender might flee. Skene writes the word "girtholl."

GROCER. In old English law. A merchant or trader who engrossed all vendible merchandise; an engrosser. St. 37 Edw. III. c. 5. See "Engrosser."

GROSS. Great or large; whole or entire; general.

GROSS ADVENTURE. In maritime law. A maritime or bottomry loan. It is so called because the lender exposes his money to the perils of the sea, and contributes to the gross or general average. Poth.; Pardessus.

GROSS AVERAGE. In maritime law. That kind of average which falls on the ship, cargo, and freight, and is distinguished from "particular average." See "Average."

GROSS NEGLIGENCE. The omission of that care which even inattentive and thoughtless men never fail to take of their own property. Jones, Bailm.

Lata culpa, or, as the Roman lawyers most accurately called it, dolo proxima, is, in practice, considered as equivalent to dolus, or fraud itself. It must not be confounded, however, with fraud; for it may exist consistently with good faith and honesty of intention, according to common-law authorities.

GROSS WEIGHT. The total weight of goods or merchandise, with the chests, bags, and the like, from which are to be deducted tare and tret.

GROSSE BOIS. Great or large wood; timber. Cowell.

GROSSEMENT (Law Fr.) Largely; greatly. Grossement enseint, big with child. Plowd. 76.

GROSSOME. See "Gressume."

GROUND ANNUAL. In Scotch law. An annual rent of two kinds: First, the feuduties payable to the lords of erection and their successors; second, the rents reserved for building lots in a city, where sub-feus are prohibited. This rent is in the nature of a perpetual annuity. Bell, Dict.; Ersk. Inst. 11. 3. 52.

GROUND LANDLORD. The person to whom ground rent is reserved.

GROUND RENT. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's land. Johnson; Webster. A rent reserved by the owner of unimproved land upon a lease of the land to be built upon, as contradistinguished from the rent paid to the lessee by his tenant of the premises where the buildings are erected, and from the ordinary rent paid by the tenant to his landlord upon a demise of lands and tenements.

A rent reserved to himself and his heirs, by the grantor of land in fee simple, out of the land conveyed. See 9 Watts (Pa.) 262; 8 Watts & S. (Pa.) 185; 2 Am. Law Reg. 577.

GROUND WRIT. By the English common-law procedure act of 1852 (chapter 121), "it shall not be necessary to issue any writ directed to the sheriff of the county in which the venue is laid, but writs of execution may issue at once into any county, and be directed to and executed by the sheriff of any county, whether a county palatine or not, without reference to the county in which the venue is laid, and without any suggestion of the issuing of a prior writ into such county." Before this enactment, a ca. sa. or fi. fa. could not be issued into a county different from that in which the venue in the action was laid, without first issuing a writ, called a "ground writ," into the latter county, and then another writ, which was called a "testatum writ," into the former. The above enactment abolished this useless process. Wharton.

GROUNDAGE. In maritime law. The consideration paid for standing a ship in a port. Jacob.

GROWTH HALF-PENNY. A rate paid in some places for the tithe of every fat beast, ox, or other unfruitful cattle. Rapalje & L.

GRUARII. The principal officers of a forest. Rapalje & L.

GUADIA, or WADIA. In old European law. A pledge. Spelman; Calv. Lex. A custom. Spelman.

GUARANTEE. He to whom a guaranty is made.

GUARANTOR. He who makes a guaranty.

GUARANTY. An undertaking to answer for another's liability, and collateral thereto. A collateral undertaking to pay the debt of another in case he does not pay it. Shaw, C. J., 24 Pick. (Mass.) 252.

It is distinguished from suretyship in being a secondary, while that is a primary, obligation; or, as sometimes defined, guaranty is an undertaking that the debtor shall pay; suretyship, that the debt shall be paid.

The undertaking is essentially in the alternative. A guarantor cannot be sued as a promisor, as the surety may; his contract must be specially set forth. A guarantor warrants the solvency of the promisor, which an indorser does not. 8 Pick. (Mass.) 423.

Guaranty, as distinguished from "suretyship," is an independent contract, while the surety is bound jointly with his principal. "A contract of suretyship is a direct liability for the act to be performed by the debtor, and a guaranty is a liability only for his ability to perform the act." 52 Pa. St. 440.

As distinguished from "indemnity," in that a principal obligation is essential to guaranty, while indemnity may be a primary contract.

Guaranties are either:

(1) General, running to any person dealing with the principal.

(2) Special, to a particular person.

(3) Limited, i. e., covering only a particular transaction.

(4) Continuing, applicable to a class of future transactions.

(5) Absolute, conditioned only on the default of the principal.

(6) Conditional, dependent on some extraneous condition.

GUARANTY INSURANCE. A guaranty or insurance against loss in case a person named shall make a designated default, or be guilty of specified conduct. 9 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 65, quoted in 174 Ill. 310.

GUARDIAN. One who legally has the care and management of the person, or the estate, or both, of a child during its minority. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 311.

A person having the control of the property of a minor without that of his person is known in the civil law, as well as in some of the states of the United States, by the name of "curator." 1 Lec. Elm. 241; Rev. St. Mo. 1855, p. 823.

Guardians are also sometimes appointed of idiots, spendthrifts, etc.

The general classes of guardians are:

(1) Guardian by chancery. This guardianship, although unknown at the common law, is well established in practice now. It grew up in the time of William III., and had its foundation in the royal prerogative of the king as parens patriae. 2 Fonbl. Eq. (5th Ed.) 246.

This power the sovereign is presumed to have delegated to the chancellor. 10 Ves. 63; 2 P. Wms. 118; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 317. By virtue of it, the chancellor appoints a guardian where there is none, and exercises a superintending control over all guardians, however appointed, removing them for misconduct, and appointing others in their stead. Co. Litt. 89; 2 Bulst. 679; 1 P. Wms. 703; 8 Mod. 214; 1 Ves. Jr. 160; 2 Kent, Comm. 227.

This power, in the United States, resides in courts of equity (1 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 99; 2 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 439), and in probate or surrogate courts (2 Kent, Comm. 226; 30 Miss. 458; 3 Bradf. Sur. [N. Y.] 133).

(2) Guardian by nature. The father, and, on his death, the mother. 2 Kent, Comm. 220; 2 Root (Conn.) 320; 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 36; 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 158; 4 Mass. 675.

(3) Guardian by nurture. This guardianship belonged to the father, then to the mother. The subject of it extended to the younger children, not the heirs apparent. In this country it does not exist, or, rather, it is merged in the higher and more durable guardianship by nature, because all the children are heirs, and, therefore, the subject of that guardianship. 2 Kent, Comm. 221; Reeve, Dom. Rel. 315; 6 Ga. 401. It extended to the person only (6 Conn. 494; 40 Eng. Law & Eq. 109), and terminated at the age of fourteen (1 Bl. Comm. 461).

(4) Guardian in socage. This guardianship arose when socage lands descended to an infant under fourteen years of age; at which period it ceased if another guardian was appointed, otherwise it continued. And. 313; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 66.

The person entitled to it by common law was the next of kin, who could not by any possibility inherit the estate. 1 Bl. Comm. 461. Although formerly recognized in New York, it was never common in the United States (5 Johns. [N. Y.] 66; 7 Johns. [N. Y.] 157), because, by the statute of descents generally in force in this country, those who are next of kin may eventually inherit. Wherever it has been recognized, it has been in a form differing materially from its character at common law. 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 631.

(5) Guardians by statute. These are of two kinds: First, testamentary; second, those appointed by court in pursuance of some statute.

(6) Testamentary guardians. These are appointed by the deed or last will of the father, and they supersede the claims of all other guardians, and have control of the person and the real and personal estate of the child till he arrives at full age.

(7) Guardians appointed by court. The greater number of guardians among us, by far, are those appointed by court, in conformity with statutes which regulate their powers and duties. In the absence of special provisions, their rights and duties are governed by the general law on the subject of guardian and ward.

GUARDIAN AD LITEM. A guardian appointed for the purposes of a suit.

The appointment of such is incident to the power of every court to try a case (2 Cow. [N. Y.] 430), and the power is then confined to the particular case at bar (Co. Litt. 89, note 16). His duty is to manage the interest of the infant when sued, or to bring suit for him. In criminal cases, no guardian is appointed; the court acts as guardian. Reeve, Dom. Rel. 318.

GUARDIAN OF THE CINQUE PORTS. See "Warden of the Cinque Ports."

GUARDIAN OF THE PEACE. A warden or conservator of the peace. Rapalje & L.

GUARDIAN OF THE POOR. In English law. A person acting as overseer of a parish in matters relating to the management and relief of the poor.

GUARDIAN OF THE SPIRITUALITIES. In English ecclesiastical law. The person to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of a diocese is committed during the vacancy of the see. Cowell; Blount.

GUARDIAN OF THE TEMPORALITIES. The person to whose custody a vacant see or abbey was committed by the king, who, as steward of the goods and profits thereof, was to give an account to the escheator, and he into the exchequer. Tomlins.

GUARDIANSHIP. The power or protective authority given by law, and imposed on an individual who is free and in the enjoyment of his rights, over one whose weakness on account of his age or infirmity renders him unable to protect himself.

GUARDIANUS, or GARDIANUS. A guardian, warden, or keeper. Spelman; 3 Salk. 176.

GUARENTIGIO. In Spanish law. A term applicable to the contract or writing by which courts of justice are empowered to execute and carry into effect a contract in the same manner as if it were decreed by the court after the usual legal formalities. This clause, though formerly inserted in contracts of sale, etc., stipulating the payment of a sum of money, is at present usually omitted, as courts of justice ordinarly compel the parties to execute all contracts made by authentic acts, that is, acts passed before a notary, in the presence of two witnesses.

GUARNIMENTUM (Law Lat. from Fr. garnement). In old European law. A provision of necessary things. Spelman. A furnishing or garnishment.

GUASTALD. One who had the custody of the royal mansions. Rapalje & L.

GUBERNATOR (Lat.) A pilot of a ship.

GUERPI, or GUERPY (Law Fr.) Abandoned; left; deserted. Britt. c. 33.

GUERRA, GUARRA, or GUERRE. War, either public or private. Spelman.

GUERRILLA PARTY (Span. guerra, war; guerrilla, a little war). In military law. Self-constituted sets of armed men, in times of war, who form no integrant part of the organized army, do not stand on the regular payroll of the army, or are not paid at all, take up arms and lay them down at intervals, and carry on petty war, chiefly by raids, extortion, destruction, and massacre. Lieber, Guerr. Part. 18. See Halleck, Int. Law, 386; Woolsey, Int. Law, 299.

Partisan, free-corps, and guerrilla are terms resembling each other considerably in signification; and, indeed, partisan and guerrilla are frequently used in the same sense. See Halleck, Int. Law, 386.

GUEST. A traveler who stays at an inn from day to day, for pay, and without a special contract to board for any definite time.

If he is invited as a friend by the inn keeper, he is not a "guest" in the technical sense (Bac. Abr. "Inns," c. 5), and, if he stays under a contract for a definite time, he is not a guest, but a boarder (5 Barb. [N. Y.] 560; 26 Ala. [N. S.] 377; 26 Vt. 332).

GUEST TAKER, or GEST TAKER. An agister.

GUET. In old French law. Watch. Ord. Mar. liv. 4, tit. 6.

GUIA. In Spanish law. A right of way for narrow carts. White, New Recop. lib. 2, c. 6, § 1.

GUIDAGE. In old law. That which was given for safe conduct through a strange territory, or another's territory. Cowell.

The office of guiding of travelers through dangerous and unknown ways. 2 Inst. 526.

GUIDON DE LA MER. The name of a treatise on maritime law, written in Rouen —then Normandy—in 1671, as is supposed. It was received on the continent of Europe almost as equal in authority to one of the ancient codes of maritime law. The author of this work is unknown. This tract or treatise is contained in the "Collection de Lois Maritimes," by J. M. Pardessus, vol. 2, p. 371 et seq.

GUILD, or GILD. A brotherhood or company governed by certain rules and orders made among themselves by king's license; a corporation, especially for purposes of commerce; so called because, on entering the guild, the members pay an assessment or tax (gild) towards defraying its charges. Termes de la Ley; Du Cange. A guild held generally more or less property in common, —often a hall, called a "guild hall," for the purposes of the association. The name of "guild" was not, however, confined to mercantile companies, but was applied also to religious, municipal, and other corporations. A friborg, that is, among the Saxons, ten families' mutual pledges for each other to the king. Spelman.

GUILD HALL (Law Lat. gildhalla, variously spelled ghildhalla, guihalla, guihaula; from Saxon gild, payment, company, and halla, hall). A place in which are exposed goods for sale. Charter of Count of Flanders; Hist. Guinensi, 202, 203; Du Cange. The hall of a guild or corporation; Du Cange; Spelman. The hall of the merchants of the Hanseatic League in London, otherwise called the "Stilyard." Id.

GUILT. In criminal law. That which renders criminal and liable to punishment.

That disposition to violate the law which has manifested itself by some act already done. The opposite of innocence. See Rutherforth. Inst. bk. 1, c. 18, § 10.

GUILTY. The state or condition of a person who has committed a crime, misdemeanor, or offense.

This word implies a malicious intent, and must be applied to something universally allowed to be a crime. Cowp. 275.

——In Pleading. A plea by which a defendant who is charged with a crime, misdemeanor, or tort admits or confesses it. In criminal proceedings, when the accused is arraigned, the clerk asks him, "How say you, A. B., are you guilty or not guilty?" His answer, which is given ore tenus, is called his "plea;" and when he admits the charge in the indictment, he answers or pleads "guilty."

GULE OF AUGUST. The first of August, the same as St. Peter's Day ad Vincula. Cowell.

GUTI. Jutes; one of the three nations who migrated from Germany to Britain at an early period. According to Spelman, they established themselves chiefly in Kent and the Isle of Wight.

GWABR MERCHED. Maid's fee. A British word signifying a customary fine payable to lords of some manors on marriage of tenant's daughter, or otherwise on her incontinence. Cowell, "Marchet."

GWALSTOW (Saxon). A place of execution. Spelman.

GWAYF. Waif. Par. Ant. p. 196; Cowell.

GYLPUT. In old law. The name of a local court of the hundred of Pathbew, in Warwickshire.

GYLTWITE (Saxon). Compensation for fraud or trespass. Grant of King Edgar, A. D. 964; Cowell.

GYNARCY. A government in which a woman holds, or is capable of holding, the position of chief executive.

GYVES. Fetters or shackles for the legs.

H

HABE, or HAVE (Lat.) A form of the salutatory expression Ave (hail) in the titles of the constitutions of the Theodosian and Justinian Codes. Prateus; Calv. Lex.; Spelman.

HABEAS CORPORA (Lat. that you have the bodies). In English practice. A writ issued out of the common pleas, commanding the sheriff to compel the appearance of a jury in a cause between the parties. It answered the same purpose as a distringas juratores in the king's bench. It is abolished by the common-law procedure act.

HABEAS CORPUS (Lat. that you have the body). A writ directed to the person detaining another, and commanding him to produce the body of the prisoner at a certain time and place, with the day and cause of his caption and detention, to do, submit to, and receive whatsoever the court or judge awarding the writ shall consider in that behalf.

This is the most famous writ in the law; and, having for many centuries been employed to remove illegal restraint upon personal liberty, no matter by what power imposed, it is often called the great "writ of liberty." It takes its name from the characteristic words it contained when the process and records of the English courts were written in Latin:

Praecipimus tibi quod corpus A B in custodia vestra detentum, ut dicitur, una cum causa captionis et detentionis suae, quocunque nomine idem A B censeatur in eadem habeas coram nobis apud Westm. etc., ad subjiciendum et recipiendum ea, quae curia nostra de eo ad tunc et ibidem ordinari contigerit in hac parte, etc.

There were several other writs which contained the words habeas corpus; but they were distinguished from this and from one another by the specific terms declaring the object of the writ, which terms are still retained in the nomenclature of writs, as, habeas corpus ad respondendum, ad testificandum, ad satisfaciendum, ad prosequendum, and ad faciendum et recipiendum, ad deliberandum et recipiendum.

This writ was in like manner designated as habeas corpus ad subjiciendum et recipiendum; but, having acquired in public esteem a marked importance by reason of the nobler uses to which it has been devoted, it has so far appropriated the generic term to itself that it is now, by way of eminence, commonly called the "Writ of Habeas Corpus."

The date of its origin cannot now be ascertained. Traces of its existence are found in Y. B. 48 Edw. III. 22; and it appears to have been familiar to, and well understood by, the judges in the reign of Henry VI. In its early history it appears to have been used as a means of relief from private restraint. The earliest precedents where it was used against the crown are in the reign of Henry VII. Afterwards the use of it became more frequent, and in the time of Charles I. it was held an admitted constitutional remedy. Hurd, Habeas Corpus, 145.

In process of time, abuses crept into the practice, which in some measure impaired the usefulness of the writ. The party imprisoning was at liberty to delay his obedience to the first writ, and might wait till a second and third were issued before he produced the party; and many other vexatious shifts were practised to detain state prisoners in custody. 3 Bl. Comm. 135.

Greater promptitude in its execution was required to render the writ efficacious. The subject was accordingly brought forward in parliament in 1668, and renewed from time to time until 1679, when the celebrated habeas corpus act of 31 Car. II. was passed. The passage of this act has been made the theme of the highest praise and congratulation by British authors, and is even said to have "extinguished all the resources of oppression." Hurd, Habeas Corpus, 93.

This act being limited to cases of commitments for "criminal or supposed criminal matters," every other species of restraint of personal liberty was left to the ordinary remedy at common law; but, doubts being entertained as to the extent of the jurisdiction of the judge to inquire into the truth of the return to the writ in such cases, an attempt was made, in 1757, in the house of lords, to render the jurisdiction more remedial. It was opposed by Lord Mansfield as unnecessary, and failed, for the time, of success. It was subsequently renewed, however; and the act of 56 Geo. III. c. 100, supplies, in England, all the needed legislation in cases not embraced by the act of 31 Car. II. Hurd, Habeas Corpus.

The English colonists in America regarded the privilege of the writ as one of the "dearest birthrights of Britons," and sufficient indications exist that it was frequently resorted to. The denial of it in Massachusetts by Judge Dudley in 1689 to Rev. John Wise, imprisoned for resisting the collection of an oppressive and illegal tax, was made the subject of a civil action against the judge, and was, moreover, denounced, as one of the grievances of the people, in a pamphlet published in 1689 on the authority of "the gentlemen, merchants, and inhabitants of Boston and the country adjacent." In New York, in 1707, it served to effect the release of the Presbyterian ministers Makemie and Hampton from an illegal warrant of arrest issued by the governor, Cornbury, for preaching the gospel without license. In New Jersey, in 1710, the assembly denounced one of the judges for refusing the writ to Thomas Gordon, which, they said, was the "undoubted right and great privilege of the subject." In South Carolina, in 1692, the assembly adopted the act of 31 Car. II. This act was extended to Virginia by Queen Anne early in her reign, while in the assembly of Maryland in 1725 the benefit of its provisions was claimed, independent of royal favor, as the "birthright of the inhabitants." The refusal of parliament in 1774 to extend the law of habeas corpus to Canada was denounced by the continental congress in September of that year as oppressive, and was subsequently recounted in the Declaration of Independence as one of the manifestations on the part of the British government of tyranny over the colonies. Hurd, Habeas Corpus, 109-120.

It is provided in article 1, § 9, subd. 2, of the constitution of the United States that "the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when, in cases of rebellion or invasion, the public safety may require it."

Similar provisions are found in the constitutions of most of the states. In Virginia and Vermont, however, it is forbidden to supend the privilege of the writ in any case; but in the constitutions of Maryland, North Carolina, and South Carolina the writ is not mentioned.

Congress, by act of March 3, 1863, authorized the president to suspend the privilege of the writ throughout the whole or any part of the United States, whenever in his judgment the public safety might require it, during the Rebellion. A partial suspension took place.

Nor has the power ever been exercised by the legislature of any of the states, except that of Massachusetts, which, on the occasion of "Shay's Rebellion," suspended the privilege of the writ from November, 1786, to July, 1787.

HABEAS CORPUS ACT. The statute of 31 Chas. II. c. 2. 3 Bl. Comm. 135; 3 Steph. Comm. 699. This statute has been adopted in substance in the United States. 2 Kent, Comm. 27.

HABEAS CORPUS AD DELIBERANDUM et recipiendum (Lat.) A writ which is issued to remove, for trial, a person confined in one county to the county or place where the offense of which he is accused was committed. Bac. Abr. "Habeas Corpus" (A); 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 132; Grady & S. Cr. Prac. 201. Thus, it has been granted to remove a person in custody for contempt to take his trial for perjury in another county. 1 Tyrwh. 185.

HABEAS CORPUS AD FACIENDUM ET recipiendum (Lat.) A writ usually issued in civil cases to remove an action from an inferior court, where the defendant is sued and imprisoned, to some superior court which has jurisdiction over the matter, in order that the cause may be determined there. This writ is commonly called habeas corpus cum causa, because it commands the judges of the inferior court to return the day and cause of the caption and detainer of the prisoner. Bac. Abr. "Habeas Corpus" (A); Bagl. Cham. Prac. 297; 3 Bl. Comm. 130; Tidd, Prac. 296.

This writ may also be issued at the instance of the bail of the defendant, to bring him up to be surrendered in their discharge, whether he is in custody in a civil suit or on a criminal accusation. Tidd, Prac. 298; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 132.

HABEAS CORPUS AD PROSEQUENDUM (Lat.) A writ which issues when it is necessary to remove a prisoner in order to prosecute in the proper jurisdiction wherein the fact was committed. 3 Bl. Comm. 130.

HABEAS CORPUS AD RESPONDENDUM (Lat.) A writ which is usually employed in civil cases to remove a person out of the custody of one court into that of another, in order that he may be sued and answer the action in the latter. 2 Sellon, Prac. 259; 2 Mod. 198; 3 Bl. Comm. 129; Tidd, Prac. 300.

This writ lies also to bring up a person in confinement to answer a criminal charge. Thus, the court issued it to the warden of the fleet, to take the body of the prisoner confined there before a magistrate, to be examined respecting a charge of felony or misdemeanor. 5 Barn. & Ald. 730. But it was refused to bring up the body of a prisoner under sentence for a felony, for the purpose of having him tried for a previous felony.

HABEAS CORPUS AD SATISFACIENdum (Lat.) A writ which is issued to bring a prisoner from the prison of one court into that of another, in order to charge him in execution upon a judgment of the last court. 2 Sellon, Prac. 261; 3 Bl. Comm. 130; Tidd, Prac. 301.

HABEAS CORPUS AD SUBJICIENDUM. See "Habeas Corpus."

HABEAS CORPUS AD TESTIFICANDUM (Lat.) A writ which lies to bring up a prisoner detained in any jail or prison, to give evidence before any court of competent jurisdiction. Tidd, Prac. 739; 3 Bl. Comm. 130; 2 Sellon, Prac. 261.

The allowance of this writ resting in the discretion of the court, it will be refused if the application appear to be in bad faith, or a mere contrivance. 3 Burrows, 1440.

It was refused to bring up a prisoner of war (2 Doug. 419), or a prisoner in custody for high treason (Peake, Add. Cas. 21).

It would of course be refused where it appeared from the application that the prisoner was under sentence for crime which rendered him incompetent as a witness.

The application for the writ is made upon affidavit, stating the nature of the suit and the materiality of the testimony, together with the general circumstances of restraint which render the writ necessary. Cowp. 672; Fost. Crim. Law, 396; 2 Cow. & H. notes to Phil. Ev. 658.

HABEAS CORPUS CUM CAUSA. See "Habeas Corpus ad Faciendum et Recipiendum."

HABEMUS OPTIMUM TESTEM, CONFItentem rèum. We have the best witness, a confessing defendant. Fost. Crim. Law, 243. See 2 Hagg. 315; 1 Phil. Ev. 397.

HABENDUM (Lat. for having). In conveyancing. The clause usually following the granting part of the premises of a deed, which defines the extent of the ownership in the thing granted to be held and enjoyed by the grantee. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 642.

It commences with the words "to have and to hold." In Law French, these words are rendered "aver et tener," or "a aver et tener," and in Latin, "habendum et tenendum."

HABENDUM ET TENENDUM. In old conveyancing. To have and to hold. Formal words in deeds of land from a very early period. Bracton, fol. 17b.

HABENTES HOMINES (Lat.) Rich men. Du Cange.

HABERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To have. Sometimes distinguished from tenere (to hold), and possidere (to possess); habere referring to the right, tenere to the fact, and possidere to both.

Habere was likewise distinguished as referring to incorporeal things, tenere to corporeal, and possidere to both. Calv. Lex.

HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM (Lat.) In practice. A writ of execution in the action of ejectment.

The sheriff is commanded by this writ that, without delay, he cause the plaintiff to have possession of the land in dispute which is therein described. A fi. fa. or ca. sa. for costs may be included in the writ. The duty of the sheriff in the execution and return of that part of the writ is the same as on a common fi. fa or ca. sa. The sheriff is to execute this writ by delivering a full and actual possession of the premises to the plaintiff. For this purpose, he may break an outer or inner door of the house, and, should he be violently opposed, he may raise the posse comitatus. Watson, Sheriffs, 60, 215; 5 Coke, 91b; 1 Leon. 145; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3375.

The name of this writ is abbreviated hab. fa. poss. See 10 Viner, Abr. 14; Tidd, Prac. (8th Eng. Ed.) 1081; 2 Archb. Prac. 58; 3 Bl. Comm. 412; Bing. Ex'ns, 115, 252; Bac. Abr.

HABERE FACIAS SEISINAM (Lat.) In practice. The name of a writ of execution, used in most real actions, by which the sheriff is directed that he cause the demandant to have seisin of the lands which he has recovered. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3374.

This writ may be taken out at any time within a year and a day after judgment. It is to be executed nearly in the same manner as the writ of habere facias possessionem, and for this purpose the officer may break open the outer door of a house to deliver seisin to the demandant. 5 Coke, 91b; Comyn, Dig. "Execution" (E); Watson, Sheriffs, 238. The name of this writ is abbreviated hab. fac. seis. See Bing. Ex'ns, 115, 252; Bac. Abr.

HABERE FACIAS VISCUM (Lat.) In practice. The name of a writ which lies when a view is to be taken of lands and tenements. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. Index, "View."

HABERE LICERE (Lat. to allow to have). In Roman law. A phrase denoting the duty of a seller to give possession.

HABERJECTS. A cloth of a mixed color, mentioned in Magna Charta, c. 26.

HABETO TIBI RES TUAS. Have or take your effects to yourself. One of the old Roman forms of divorcing a wife. Calv. Lex.

HABILIS (Lat.) Fit; suitable. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 436. Active; useful (of a servant). Du Cange. Proved; authentic (of Book of Saints). Du Cange. Fixed; stable (of authority of the king). Du Cange.

HABIT. A disposition or condition of the body or mind acquired by custom or a frequent repetition of the same act. See 2 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 622; 18 Pa. St. 172; 5 Gray (Mass.) 851.

The habit of dealing has always an important bearing upon the construction of commercial contracts. A ratification will be inferred from the mere habit of dealing between the parties; as, if a broker has been accustomed to settle losses on policies in a particular manner, without any objection being made, or with the silent approbation of his principal, and he should afterwards settle other policies in the same manner, to which no objection should be made within a reasonable time, a just presumption would arise of an implied ratification; for, if the principal did not agree to such settlement, he should have declared his dissent. 2 Bouv. Inst. 1313, 1314.

HABIT AND REPUTE. Applied in Scotch law to a general understanding and belief of something's having happened; e. g., marriage may be constituted by habit and repute. Bell, Dict.

HABITATIO. A habitation or dwelling. Towns. Pl. 116.

——In Civil Law. The right of dwelling; the right of free residence in another's house. Inst. 2. 5; Dig. 7. 8.

HABITATION.

——In Civil Law. The right of a person to live in the house of another without prejudice to the property.

It differed from a usufruct in this, that the usufructuary might apply the house to any purpose,—as of a store or manufactory; whereas the party having the right of habitation could only use it for the residence of himself and family. 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 184; Domat, Civ. Law, lib. 1, tit. 11, § 2, note 7.

——In Estates. A dwelling house; a home stall. 2 Bl. Comm. 4; 4 Bl. Comm. 220. See 10 Grat. (Va.) 64.

HABITUAL CRIMINALS' ACT. A name given to various statutes for the more severe punishment of repeated offenses. In England it was applied to St. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 99, giving power to apprehend, on suspicion, convicted persons holding a license under the penal servitude act. This statute is now repealed. 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112.

Also applied to statutes declaring professional criminals to be disorderly persons, and punishing them as such. Code Crim. Prac. N. Y. §§ 510-514, 899, subd. 9; Pen. Code N. Y. §§ 690-692.

HABITUAL DRUNKARD. A person given to ebriety or the excessive use of intoxicating drink, who has lost the power or the will, by frequent indulgence, to control his appetite for it. 5 Gray (Mass.) 85.

Occasional drunkenness is not enough (18 Pa. St. 172), yet daily intoxication is not required (112 Mass. 285).

HACIENDA. In Spanish law. A generic term, applicable to the mass of the property belonging to a state, and the administration of the same.

As a science, it is defined by Dr. Jose Canga Arguelis, in his "Diccionario de Hacienda," to be that part of civil economy which teaches how to aggrandize a nation by the useful employment of its wealth.

A royal estate. Newman & B.

HADBOTE. In French law. A recompense or amends made for violence offered to a person in holy orders.

HADERUNGA. Hatred; ill will; prejudice, or partiality. Spelman; Cowell.

HADGONEL. A tax or mulct. Jacob.

HAEC EST CONVENTIO (Law Lat. this is an agreement). Words with which agreements anciently commenced. Y. B. H. 6 Edw. II. 191.

HAEC EST FINALIS CONCORDIA (Law Lat. this is the final agreement). The words with which the foot of a fine commenced. 2 Bl. Comm. 351.

HAEREDA. In Gothic law. A tribunal answering to the English court leet. 4 Bl. Comm. 274.

HAEREDE ABDUCTO. An ancient writ that lay for the lord, who, having by right the wardship of his tenant under age, could not obtain his person, the same being carried away by another person. Old Nat. Brev. 93.

HAEREDEM DEUS FACIT, NON HOMO. God, and not man, makes the heir. Bracton, 62b.

HAEREDEM EST NOMEN COLLECTIvum. Heir is a collective name.

HAEREDES (Lat. plural of haeres). In civil law. Heirs.

HAEREDES EXTRANEI (Lat.) In civil law. Extraneous or foreign heirs; that is, those who were not children or slaves of the testator. Those only could be extraneous heirs who had a capacity of accepting the inheritance both at the time of making the will and at the death of the testator. Halifax, Anal. bk. 11, c. 6, § 38 et seq.

HAEREDES NECESSARII (Lat.) In civil law. Necessary heirs. If slaves were made heirs, they had no choice, but on the death of the testator were necessarily free and his heirs. Calv. Lex.; Halifax, Anal. bk. 11, c. 6, § 38 et seq.; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 587.

HAEREDES PROXIMI (Lat.) The children or descendants of the deceased. Dalr. Feud. Prop. 110.

HAEREDES REMOTIORES (Lat.) The kinsmen other than children or descendants. Dalr. Feud. Prop. 110.

HAEREDES SUI ET NECESSARII (Lat.) In civil law. Proper and necessary heirs; heirs by relationship and necessity. The descendants of an ancestor in direct line were so called, sui denoting the relationship, and necessarii the necessity of law which made them heirs without their election, and whether the ancestor died testate or intestate. Halifax, Anal. bk. 11, c. 6, § 38 et seq.; Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 681, 682; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 588.

HAEREDIPETA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Next heir. Laws Hen. I.; Du Cange. One who seeks to be made heir (qui cupit haereditatem).

HAEREDIPETAE SUO PROPINQUO VEL extraneo periculoso sane custodi nullus committatur. To the next heir, whether a relation or a stranger, certainly a dangerous guardian, let no one be committed. Co. Litt. 88b.

HAEREDITAS (Lat. from haeres).

——In Civil Law. "Nihil aliud est haereditas, quam successio in universum jus, quod defunctus habuit." Inheritance is nothing else than succession to every right which the deceased possessed. Dig. 50. 17; Id. 50. 16; Id. 5. 2; Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 605; Bracton, 62b.

——In Old English Law. An estate transmissible by descent; an inheritance. Mart. Anec. Collect. tit. 3, p. 269; Co. Litt. 9; Glanv. lib. 7, c. 1.

HAEREDITAS, ALIA CORPORALIS, ALIA incorporalis; corporalis est, quae tangi potest et videri; incorporalis quae tangi non potest nec videri. An inheritance is either corporeal or incorporeal. Corporeal is that which can be touched and seen; incorporeal, that which can neither be touched nor seen. Co. Litt. 9.

HAEREDITAS DAMNOSA. See "Damnosa Haereditas."

HAEREDITAS EST SUCCESSIO IN UNIversum jus quod defunctus habuerat. Inheritance is the succession to every right which was possessed by the late possessor. Co. Litt. 237.

HAEREDITAS JACENS (Lat.)

——In Civil Law. A prostrate inheritance. The inheritance left to a voluntary heir was so called as long as he had not manifested, either expressly or by silence, his acceptance or refusal of the inheritance, which, by a fiction of law, was said to sustain the person (sustinere personam) of the deceased, and not of the heir. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 685a. An estate with no heir or legatee to take. Code, 10. 10. 1; Bell, Dict.

——In English Law. An estate in abeyance; that is, after the ancestor's death, and before assumption of heir. Co. Litt. 342b. An inheritance without legal owner, and therefore open to the first occupant. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 259.

HAEREDITAS LUCTUOSA. In the civil law. A sad or mournful inheritance or succession; as that of a parent to the estate of a child, which was regarded as disturbing the natural order of mortality (turbato ordine mortalitatis). Code, 6. 25. 9; 4 Kent, Comm. 397.

HAEREDITAS NIHIL ALIUD EST, QUAM successio in universum jus, quod defunctus habuerit. The right of inheritance is nothing else than the faculty of succeeding to all the rights of the deceased. Dig. 50. 17. 62.

HAEREDITAS NUNQUAM ASCENDIT. The inheritance never ascends. Glanv. lib. 7, c. 1; Broom, Leg. Max. (2d London Ed.) 469; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 212, note; 3 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 331; 1 Steph. Comm. 378. Abrogated by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, § 6.

HAEREDUM APPELLATIONE VENIUNT haeredes haeredum in infinitum. By the title of heirs, come the heirs of heirs to infinity. Co. Litt. 9.

HAERES. In Roman law. One who succeeds to the rights and occupies the place of a deceased person, being appointed by the will of the decedent. It is to be observed that the Roman haeres had not the slightest resemblance to the English "heir." He corresponded in character and duties almost exactly with the "executor" under the English law. The institution of the haeres was the essential characteristic of a testament. If this was not done, the instrument was called a codicillus. Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 632, 650.

HAERES ASTRARIUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. An heir in actual possession.

HAERES DE FACTO (Law Lat.) In old English law. Heir from fact; that is, from the deed or act of his ancestor, without or against right. Applied to an heir whose title originated in the wrongful act of his ancestor. An heir in fact, as distinguished from an heir de jure, or by law. Bracton, fol. 172.

HAERES EST ALTER IPSE, ET FILIUS est pars patris. An heir is another self, and a son is a part of the father.

HAERES EST AUT JURE PROPRIETATIS aut jure representationis. An heir is either by right of property or right of representation. 3 Coke. 40.

HAERES EST EADEM PERSONA CUM antecessore. The heir is the same person with the ancestor. Co. Litt. 22.

HAERES EST NOMEN COLLECTIVUM. "Heir" is a collective name or noun. 1 Vent. 215.

HAERES EST NOMEN JURIS; FILIUS est nomen naturae. "Heir" is a term of law; "son," one of nature.

HAERES EST PARS ANTECESSORIS. The heir is a part of the ancestor. Co. Litt. 22b; 3 Hill (N. Y.) 165, 167.

HAERES EX ASSE (Lat.) In civil law. An heir to the whole estate; a sole heir. Inst. 2. 23. 9.

HAERES EXTRANEUS (Lat.) In civil law. A strange or foreign heir; one who was not subject to the power of the testator, or person who made him heir. Qui testatoris juri subjecti non sunt, extranei haeredes appellantur. Inst. 2. 19. 3.

HAERES FACTUS (Lat.) In civil law. An heir made by will; a testamentary heir; the person created universal successor by will. Story, Confl. Laws, § 507; 3 Bl. Comm. 224. Otherwise called "haeres ex testamento," and "haeres institutus." Inst. 2. 9. 7; Id. 2. 14.

HAERES FIDEICOMMISSARIUS (Lat.) In the civil law. The person for whose benefit an estate was given to another, termed "haeres fiduciarius" (q. v.) by will. Inst. 2. 23. 6. 7. 9. Answering nearly to the cestui que trust of the English law.

HAERES FIDUCIARIUS. A fiduciary heir, or heir in trust; a person constituted heir by will, in trust for the benefit of another, called the "fideicommissarius." Inst. 2. 23. 1. 2. Corresponding nearly to the "trustee" of the English law. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 397.

HAERES HAEREDIS MEI EST MEUS haeres. The heir of my heir is my heir. Wharton.

HAERES LEGITIMUS (Lat.) A lawful heir. Code, 6. 58.

HAERES LEGITIMUS EST QUEM NUPtiae demonstrant. He is the lawful heir whom the marriage demonstrates. Mirr. Just. 70; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1; Dig. 2. 4. 5; Co. Litt. 7b; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 457. As to the application of the principle when the marriage is subsequent to the birth of the child, see 2 Clark & F. 571; 6 Bing. (N. C.) 385; 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 226, 262, note.

HAERES MINOR UNO ET VIGENTI ANnis non respondebit, nisi in casu dotis. An heir minor, under twenty-one years of age, is not answerable, except in the matter of dower. F. Moore, 348.

HAERES NATUS (Lat.) In civil law. An heir born; one born heir, as distinguished from one made heir (haeres factus, q. v.); an heir at law, or by intestacy (ab intesta- to); the next of kin by blood, in cases of intestacy. Story, Confl. Laws, § 507; 3 Bl. Comm. 224.

HAERES NECESSARIUS (Lat.) In civil law. A necessary or compulsory heir. This name was given to the heir when, being a slave, he was named "heir" in the testament, because on the death of the testator, whether he would or not, he at once became free, and was compelled to assume the heirship. Inst. 2. 19. 1.

HAERES NON TENETUR IN ANGLIA ad debita antecessoris reddenda, nisi per antecessorem ad hoc fuerit obligatus, praeterquam debita regis tantum. In England, the heir is not bound to pay his ancestor's debts, unless he be bound to it by the ancestor, except debts due to the king. But now, by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 104, he is liable. Co. Litt. 386.

HAERES RECTUS (Lat.) In old English law. A right heir. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 11.

HAERES SUUS (Lat.) In civil law. A man's own heir; a decedent's proper or natural heir. This name was given to the lineal descendants of the deceased. Inst. 3. 1. 4-5.

HAERETARE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To give a right of inheritance, or make the donation hereditary to the grantee and his heirs. Cowell.

HAERETICO COMBURENDO. See "De Haeretico Comburendo."

HAFNE COURTS (hafne, Danish, a haven, or port). Haven courts; courts anciently held in certain ports in England. Spelman.

HAGA. A house. Blount.
A military inclosure. Spelman.

HAGIA, or HAIA. A hedge or inclosure. Mon. Angl. tom. 2, p. 273.

HAIEBOTE. In old English law. A permission or liberty to take thorns, etc., to make or repair hedges. Blount.

HAILL. In Scotch law. Whole; the whole. "All and haill" are common words in conveyances. 1 Bell, App. Cas. 499.

HAILWORKFOLK. Holywork. Those who formerly held lands by the service of defending or repairing a church or monument. Rapalje & L.

HAIMHALDARE. In old Scotch law. To seek restitution of one's own goods and gear, and bring the same home again. Skene de Verb. Sign.

HAIMSUCKEN. In Scotch law. The crime of beating or assaulting a person in his own house. Bell, Dict.

HALF-BLOOD. A term denoting the degree of relationship which exists between those who have one parent only in common.
By the English common law, one related to an intestate of the half-blood only could never inherit, upon the presumption that he is not of the blood of the original purchaser; but this rule has been greatly modified by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106.
In this country, the common-law principle on this subject may be considered as not in force, though in many states some distinction is still preserved between the whole and the half-blood. 4 Kent, Comm. 403, note; 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 115; 1 McCord (S. C.) 456; 31 Pa. St. 289; Dane, Abr. Index; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 411. See "Descent."

HALF-BROTHER, or HALF-SISTER. Persons who have the same father, but different mothers; or the same mother, but different fathers.

HALF-DEFENSE. In common-law pleading. A name applied to the abbreviated form of words with which a plea is introduced.

HALF-ENDEAL. A moiety, or half of a thing. Rapalje & L.

HALF-KINEG. In Saxon law. Half-king (semi-rex). A title given to the aldermen of all England. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 28; Spelman.

HALF-PROOF. In civil law. That which is insufficient as the foundation of a sentence or decree, although in itself entitled to some credit. Vicat, "Probatio."

HALF-SEAL. A seal used in the English chancery for the sealing of commissions to delegates appointed upon any appeal, either in ecclesiastical or marine causes.

HALF-TIMER. A child who, by the operation of the English factory and education acts, is employed for less than the full time in a factory or workshop, in order that he may attend some "recognized efficient school." See Factory and Workshop Act 1878, § 23; Elementary Education Act 1876, § 11. Wharton.

HALF-TONGUE. A jury, half of one tongue or nationality, and half of another. Vide "De Medietate Linguae," Jacob.

HALF-YEAR. In the computation of time, a half-year consists of one hundred and eighty-two days. Co. Litt. 135b; Rev. St. N. Y. pt. 1, c. 19, tit. 1, § 3.

HALI GEMOTE. Halle gemote.

HALIMASS. In English law. The feast of All Saints, on the 1st of November; one of the cross-quarters of the year was computed from Halimass to Candlemass. Wharton.

HALL. A public building used either for the meetings of corporations, courts, or employed to some public uses; as, the city hall, the town hall. Formerly this word denoted the chief mansion or habitation.

HALLAGE. In old English law. A fee or toll due for goods or merchandise vended in a hall. Jacob.
A toll due to the lord of a fair or market, for such commodities as were vended in the common hall of the place. Cowell; Blount.

HALLAZCO. In Spanish law. The finding and taking possession of something which previously had no owner, and which thus becomes the property of the first occupant. Las Partidas, 3. 5. 28; Id. 5. 48. 49; Id. 5. 20. 50.

HALLE GEMOTE. Hall assembly. A species of court baron.

HALLUCINATION. In medical jurisprudence. A species of mania by which an idea reproduced by the memory is associated and embodied by the imagination. This state of mind is sometimes called "delusion," or "waking dreams."

An attempt has been made to distinguish "hallucinations" from "illusions." The former are said to be dependent on the state of the intellectual organs, and the latter on that of those of sense. Ray, Med. Jur. § 99; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 538, note. An instance is given of a temporary hallucination in the celebrated Ben Jonson, the poet. He told a friend of his that he had spent many a night in looking at his great toe, about which he had seen Turks and Tartars, Romans and Carthaginians, fight, in his imagination. 1 Colly. Lun. 34. If, instead of being temporary, this affection of his mind had been permanent, he would doubtless have been considered insane. See, on the subject of spectral illusions, Hibbert, Alderson, and Farrar's Essays; Scott on Demonology, etc.; 3 Bostock, Physiology, 91, 161; 1 Esquirol, Maladies Mentales, 159.

HALMOTE. See "Halle Gemote."

HALYMOTE, HOLIMOT, or HALEGEMOT (from Saxon, halg, holy, and gemot or mot, a meeting). A holy or ecclesiastical court.

A court held in London before the lord mayor and sheriffs, for regulating the bakers.

It was anciently held on Sunday next before St. Thomas' day, and therefore called the holymote, or holy court. Cowell (Ed. 1727); Cunningham. See Spelman; 4 Inst. 321.

HALYWERCFOLK. Those who held by the service of guarding and repairing a church or sepulchre, and were excused from feudal services. Especially in the county of Durham, those who held by service of defending the corpse of St. Cuthbert. Jacob.

HAMBLING. In the forest law. The hoxing or hock sinewing of dogs; an old mode of laming or disabling dogs. Termes de la Ley.

HAMESUCKEN. In Scotch law. The crime of hamesucken consists in "the felonious seeking and invasion of a person in his dwelling house." 1 Hume, Hist. Eng. 312; Alis. Crim. Law, 199.

The mere breaking into a house, without personal violence, does not constitute the offense, nor does the violence without an entry with intent to commit an assault. It is the combination of both which completes the crime. It is necessary (1) that the invasion of the house should have proceeded from forethought malice; but it is sufficient if, from any illegal motive, the violence has been meditated, although it may not have proceeded from the desire of wreaking personal revenge, properly so called. (2) The place where the assault was committed must have been the proper dwelling house of the party injured, and not a place of business, visit, or occasional residence. (3) The offense may be committed equally in the day as in the night, and not only by effraction of the building by actual force, but by an entry obtained by fraud, with the intention of inflicting personal violence, followed by its perpetration. (4) But, unless the injury to the person be of a grievous and material character, it is not hamesucken, though the other requisites to the crime have occurred. When this is the case, it is immaterial whether the violence be done lucri causa, or from personal spite.

The punishment of hamesucken in aggravated cases of injury is death; in cases of inferior atrocity, an arbitrary punishment. Alis. Crim. Law, c. 6; Ersk. Inst. 4. 9. 23.

This term was formerly used in England instead of the now modern term "burglary." 4 Bl. Comm. 223.

But in Hale's Pleas of the Crown it is said: "The common genus of offenses that comes under the name of 'hamsecken' is that which is usually called 'house breaking;' which sometimes comes under the common appellation of 'burglary,' whether committed in the day or night to the intent to commit felony; so that house breaking of this kind is of two natures." 1 Hale, P. C. 547; 22 Pick. (Mass.) 4.

HAMFARE (Saxon, from ham, a house). In Saxon law. An assault made in a house; a breach of the peace in a private house. Spelman; Blount.

HAMLET. A small village; a part or member of a vill.

HAMMA. A close joining to a house; a croft; a little meadow. Cowell.

——In Old English Law. The right of security and privacy in a man's house. Du Cange. The breach of this privilege by a forcible entry of a house is breach of the peace. Anc. Inst. Eng.; Du Cange; Bracton. lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 2, § 3. The right to entertain jurisdiction of the offense. Will. Thorn. p. 2030; Spelman; Du Cange. Immunity from punishment for such offense. Id.; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 18. An insult offered in one's own house (insultus factus in domo). Brompton, p. 957; Du Cange. Variously spelled hamsoca, hamsocua, hamsoken, haimsuken, hamesaken.

HANAPER. A hamper or basket in which were kept the writs of the court of chancery relating to the business of a subject, and their returns. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 113; 10 Rich. II. c. 1. Equivalent to the Roman fiscus. Id. According to Spelman, the fees accruing on writs, etc., were there kept. Mon. Angl. tom. 1, p. 943; Du Cange.

HANAPER OFFICE. An office on the common-law side of the English court of chancery, in which the writs relating to the business of the subject, and the returns to them, were anciently kept. 3 Bl. Comm. 48.

So called, according to Blackstone, because the writs were kept in a basket or hamper, but Spelman says that the basket was for keeping the fees of the office, and not the writs.

This and the petty bag office (q. v.) were offices in which writs relating to the interests of the subject and the crown, respectively, were kept. For a discussion of the historic origin of the names, see 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 337, 363.

HAND. A measure of length, four inches long; used in ascertaining the height of horses.

HAND BOROW (from hand, and Saxon borow, a pledge). Nine of a decennary or friborg were so called, being inferior to the tenth or head borow,—a decenna or friborga being ten freemen or frank-pledges, who were mutually sureties for each other to the king for any damage. Du Cange, "Friborg," "Head Borow."

HAND GRITH (Saxon). Peace or protection given by the king with his own hand. Cowell.

HANDBILL. A written or printed notice displayed to inform those concerned of something to be done.

HANDHABEND. In Saxon law. One having a thing in his hand; that is, a thief found having the stolen goods in his possession,—latro manifestus of the civil law. See Laws Hen. I. c. 59; Laws Athelstane, § 6; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 1; Britt. p. 72; Du Cange.

Jurisdiction to try such thief. Id.

HANDSALE, or HANDSEL. Anciently, among all the northern nations, shaking of hands was held necessary to bind a bargain,—a custom still retained in verbal contracts. A sale thus made was called handsale, venditio per mutuam manum complexionem. In process of time, the same word was used to signify the price or earnest which was given immediately after the shaking of hands, or instead thereof. In some parts of the country it is usual to speak of hand money, as the part of the consideration paid or to be paid at the execution of a contract of sale. 2 Bl. Comm. 448; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, § 335; Toullier, Dr. Civ. liv. 3, tit. 3, c. 2, note 33.

HANDWRITING. Anything written by a person. The manner in which a person writes, including the formation of the characters, the separation of the words, and other features distinguishing the written matter, as a mechanical result, from the writing of other persons.

HANGING IN CHAINS. In atrocious cases it was at one time usual, in England, for the court to direct a murderer, after execution, to be hanged upon a gibbet in chains near the place where the murder was committed, a practice quite contrary to the Mosaic law. Deut. xxi. 23. Abolished by 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 26. Wharton.

HANGMAN. An executioner. The name usually given to a man employed by the sheriff to put a man to death, according to law, in pursuance of a judgment of a competent court and lawful warrant.

HANGWITE (from Saxon hangian, to hang, and wite, fine). Fine, in Saxon law, for illegal hanging of a thief, or for allowing him to escape. Immunity from such fine. Du Cange.

HANIG. Customary labor.

HANSE. A commercial confederacy for the good ordering and protection of the commerce of its members; an imposition upon merchandise. Du Cange, "Hansa."

HANSE TOWNS. A number of towns in Europe which joined in a league for mutual protection of commerce as early as the twelfth century.

Amsterdam and Bremen were the first two that formed it, and they were joined by others in Germany, Holland, England, France, Italy, and Spain, till in 1200 they numbered seventy-two. They made war and peace to protect their commerce, and held countries in sovereignty, as a united commonwealth. They had a common treasury at Lubeck, and power to call an assembly as often as they chose. For purposes of jurisdiction, they were divided into four colleges or provinces. Great privileges were granted them by Louis VI. of France, and succeeding monarchs. One of their principal magazines was at London. Their power became so great as to excite the jealousy of surrounding nations, who forced the towns within their jurisdiction which belonged to the league to renounce it. Their number and power became thus gradually reduced, beginning from the middle of the fifteenth century; and at the present day only Bremen, Hamburg, Lubeck, and Frankfort-on-the-Main remain,—these being recognized by the act establishing the German Confederacy, in 1815, as free Hanseatic cities. Enc. Brit.

HANSE TOWNS, LAWS OF THE. The maritime ordinances of the Hanseatic towns, first published in German at Lubeck in 1597, and in May, 1614, revised and enlarged. The text of this digest, and a Latin translation, are published with a commentary by Kuricke; and a French translation has been given by Cleirac. See "Code."

HANSEATIC. Pertaining to the hanse towns.

HANSGRAVE. The chief of a company; the head man of a corporation.

HANTELOD. An arrest. Jacob.

HAP. To catch. Thus, "hap the rent," "hap the deed-poll," were formerly used. Tech. Dict.; Cowell.

HARBOR (Saxon, here berga, station for an army). A place where ships may ride with safety; any navigable water protected by the surrounding country; a haven. It is public property. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 435.

Harbor is to be distinguished from "port," which has a reference to the delivery of cargo. See 7 Man. & G. 870; 9 Metc. (Mass.) 371-377; 2 Barn. & Ald. 460. Thus, we have the "said harbor basin and docks of the port of Hull." 2 Barn. & Ald. 60. But they are generally used as synonymous. Webster.

——In Torts. To receive clandestinely or without lawful authority a person for the purpose of so concealing him that another having a right to the lawful custody of such person shall be deprived of the same; for example, the harboring of a wife or an apprentice in order to deprive the husband or the master of them; or, in a less technical sense, it is the reception of persons improperly. 10 N. H. 247; 5 Ill. 498.

The harboring of such persons will subject the harborer to an action for the injury; but, in order to put him completely in the wrong, a demand should be made for their restoration, for in cases where the harborer has not committed any other wrong than merely receiving the plaintiff's wife, child, or apprentice, he may be under no obligation to return them without a demand. 1 Chit. Prac. 564; Dane, Abr. Index; 2 N. C. Law Rep. 249; 5 How. (U. S.) 215, 227.

HARBOR AUTHORITY. In England, a harbor authority is a body of persons, corporate or unincorporate, being proprietors of, or intrusted with the duty of constructing, improving, managing, or lighting, any harbor. St. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 47.

HARD LABOR. A phrase used in sentencing to confinement in institutions where labor is required of convicts. The word "hard" is surplusage. 29 Pa. St. 448.

HARDHEIDIS, or HARDIES (Scotch). In old Scotch law. Lions; coins formerly of the value of three half-pence. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 64, note.

HARNASCA (Law Lat.) In old European law. The defensive armor of a man; harness. Spelman.

HARO, or HARROU (Fr.) In Norman and early English law. An outcry, or hue and cry after felons and malefactors. Cowell.

HASP AND STAPLE. In old Scotch law. The form of entering an heir in a subject situated within a royal borough. It consisted of the heir's taking hold of the hasp and staple of the door (which was the symbol of possession), with other formalities. Bell, Dict.

HASPA.

——In Old English Law. The hasp of a door; by which the livery of seisin might anciently be made, where there was a house on the premises.

——In Old Records. The hasp or clasp of a book.

HASTA (Lat.)

——In the Civil Law. A spear; the badge of a sale by auction. Hastal subjicere, to put under the spear; to put up at auction. Calv. Lex.

——In Feudal Law. A spear; the symbol used in making investiture of a fief.

HAT MONEY. In maritime law. Primage; a small duty paid to the captain and mariners of a ship.

HAUR. In old English law. Hatred. LL. Gul. Conq. c. 16.

HAUSTUS (Lat. from haurire, to draw). In civil law. The right of drawing water, and the right of way to the place of drawing. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 9.

HAUT CHEMIN (Law Fr.) Highway. Y. B. M. 4 Hen. VI. 4.

HAUT ESTRET (Law Fr.) High street; highway. Y. B. P. 11 Hen. VI. 2.

HAVE (Lat.) A form of the salutatory expression Ave, used in the titles of some of the constitutions of the Theodosian and Justinian Codes. See Code, 7. 62. 9; Id. 9. 2. 11.

To possess corporally. "No one, at common law, was said to have or to be in possession of land, unless it were conveyed to him by the livery of seisin, which gave him the corporal investiture and bodily occupation thereof." Bl. Law Tr. 113.

HAVE AND HOLD. A common phrase in conveyancing, derived from the habendum et tenendum of the old common law. See "Habendum."

HAVEN. A place calculated for the reception of ships, and so situated, in regard to the surrounding land, that the vessel may ride at anchor in it in safety. Hale de Port. Mar. c. 2; 2 Chit. Com. Law, 2; 15 East, 304, 305. See "Port."

HAWKER. An itinerant or traveling trader, who carries goods about in order to sell them, and who actually sells them to purchasers, in contradistinction to a trader who has goods for sale, and sells them in a fixed place of business.

Superadded to this, though perhaps not essential, is generally understood one who not only carries goods for sale, but seeks for purchasers, either by outcry, which some lexicographers conceive as intimated by the derivation of the word, or by attracting notice and attention to them, as goods for sale, by an actual exhibition or exposure of them by placards or labels, or by a conventional signal, like the sound of a horn for the sale of fish. 12 Cush. (Mass.) 495.

HAYBOTE (from haye, hedge, and bote, compensation). Hedgebote; one of the estovers allowed tenant for life or for years; namely, material to repair hedges or fences.

2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 35; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 99.

HAYWARD (from haye, hedge, and ward, keeping). In old English law. An officer appointed in the lord's court to keep a common herd of cattle of a town. So called because he was to see that they did not break or injure the hedges of inclosed grounds. His duty was also to impound trespassing cattle, and to guard against pound breaches. Kitch. Cts. 46; Cowell.

HAZARDOUS CONTRACT. A contract in which the performance of that which is one of its objects depends on an uncertain event. Civ. Code La. art. 1769; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 707; 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 596; 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 84. See "Maritime Loan."

HE, or HIS. The use of the masculine pronoun is not, as a rule of construction, conclusive that only males are embraced thereby. 71 Cal. 38.

HEAD COURTS. Certain tribunals in Scotland, abolished by 20 Geo. II. c. 50. Ersk. 1. 4. 5.

HEAD NOTE. The syllabus of a reported decision.

HEAD OF A FAMILY. Householder; one who provides for a family. 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 476. There must be the relation of father and child, or husband and wife. 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 216; 17 Ala. (N. S.) 486. Per contra, 20 Mo. 75. See "Family."

HEADBOROW, or HEADBOROUGH. In Saxon law. The head or principal man of a frank pledge decennary or tithing.

HEADLAND. In old English law. A narrow piece of unploughed land left at the end of a ploughed field for the turning of the plough. Called, also, "butt." Kennett, Par. Ant. 587; 2 Leon. 70, case 93; 1 Litt. 13.

HEAFODWEARD. A feudal service rendered by a thane, the nature of which is now unknown.

HEALGEMOTE. A court baron.

HEALSFANG (from German hals, neck, and fangen, to catch). A sort of pillory, by which the head of the culprit was caught between two boards, as feet are caught in a pair of stocks.

"The fine which every man would have to pay in commutation of this punishment, had it been in use," for it was very early disused, no mention of it occurring in the laws of the Saxon kings. Anc. Inst. Eng.; Spelman.

HEALTH LAWS. Laws designed to preserve the public health.

HEALTH OFFICER. An officer, usually municipal, charged with the enforcement of health laws.

HEARING.

——In Chancery Practice. The trial of a chancery suit.

The hearing is conducted as follows: When the cause is called on in court, the pleadings on each side are opened in a brief manner to the court by the junior counsel for the plaintiff; after which the plaintiff's leading counsel states the plaintiff's case and the points in issue, and submits to the court his arguments upon them. Then the depositions (if any) of the plaintiff's witnesses, and such parts of the defendant's answer as support the plaintiff's case, are read by the plaintiff's solicitor; after which the rest of the plaintiff's counsel address the court. Then the same course of proceedings is observed on the other side, excepting that no part of the defendant's answer can be read in his favor if it be replied to. The leading counsel for the plaintiff is then heard in reply; after which the court pronounces the decree. Newland, Prac. 153, 154; 14 Viner, Abr. 233; Comyn, Dig. "Chancery" (T 1, 2, 3); Daniell, Ch. Prac.

——In Criminal Law. The examination of a prisoner charged with a crime or misdemeanor, and of the witnesses for the accused. See "Examination."

HEARSAY EVIDENCE. That kind of evidence which does not derive its value solely from the credit to be given to the witness himself, but rests also, in part, on the veracity and competency of some other person. 1 Phil. Ev. 185; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 99.

The term applies to written, as well as oral, matter. See "Evidence."

HEARTH MONEY. A tax, granted by 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 10, abolished 1 Wm. & Mary, st. 1, c. 10, of two shillings on every hearth or stove in England and Wales, except such as pay not to the church and poor. Jacob. Commonly called "chimney money." Id.

HEARTH SILVER. A sort of modus for tithes, viz., a prescription for cutting down and using for fuel the tithe of wood. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 304.

HEAT OF PASSION. In criminal law. Furor brevis, sudden passion caused by reasonable provocation. It is a characteristic of the crime of voluntary manslaughter, a killing without malice in heat of passion being manslaughter, not murder. 5 Mass. 295; 86 Va. 466.

It need not be so overpowering as for the time to shut out knowledge and destroy volition, but only sufficient to exclude deliberation and malice. 4 Dev. & B. (N. C.) 491; 10 Mich. 212.

HEBBERMAN. An unlawful fisher in the Thames below London bridge. So called because they generally fished at ebbing tide or water. 4 Hen. VII. c. 15; Jacob.

HEBBERTHEF. The privilege of having goods of thief and trial of him within such a liberty. Cart. S. Edmundi MS. 163; Cowell.

HEDAGIUM (Saxon, heda, hitha, port). A toll or custom paid at the hith, or wharf, for landing goods, etc., from which an exemption was granted by the king to some particular persons and societies. Cart. Abbatiae de Redinges; Cowell.

HEDGE. See "Gambling Contract."

HEDGE BOTE. Wood used for repairing hedges or fences. 2 Bl. Comm. 35; 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 15.

HEGIRA. The account of time used by the Turks and Arabians, who begin their computation of time from the day that Mahomet was compelled to escape from Mecca,—Friday, July 16, A. D. 622. Wharton.

HEIFER. A young cow which has not had a calf; a beast of this kind two years and a half old was held to be improperly described in the indictment as a cow. 2 East, P. C. 616; 1 Leach, C. C. 105.

HEIR.

——At Common Law. He who is born or begotten in lawful wedlock, and upon whom the law casts the estate in lands, tenements, or hereditaments immediately upon the death of his ancestor.

The term "heir" has a very different signification at common law from what it has in those states and countries which have adopted the civil law. In the latter, the term applies to all persons who are called to the succession, whether by the act of the party, or by operation of law. The person who is created universal successor by a will is called the "testamentary heir;" and the next of kin by blood is, in cases of intestacy, called the "heir at law," or "heir by intestacy." The executor of the common law is in many respects not unlike the testamentary heir of the civil law. Again, the administrator in many respects corresponds with the heir by intestacy. By the common law, executors—unless expressly authorized by the will—and administrators have no right except to the personal estate of the deceased; whereas the heir by the civil law is authorized to administer both the personal and real estate. 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 344; Story, Confl. Laws, § 508.

No person is heir of a living person. A person occupying a relation which may be that of heirship is, however, called "heir apparent" or "heir presumptive." 2 Bl. Comm. 208. A monster cannot be heir. Co. Litt. 7b. A bastard cannot be heir. 2 Kent, Comm. 208.

In the word "heirs" is comprehended heirs of heirs in infinitum. Co. Litt. 7b, 9a; Wood. Inst. 69.

According to many authorities, heir may be nomen collectivum, as well in a deed as in a will, and operate in both in the same manner as the word "heirs." 1 Rolle, Abr. 253; Ambl. 453; Godb. 155; T. Jones, 111; Cro. Eliz. 313; 1 Burrows, 38; 10 Viner, Abr. 233. But see 2 Prest. Est. 9, 10. In wills, in order to effectuate the intention of the testator, the word "heirs" is sometimes construed to mean the "next of kin" (1 Jac. & W. 388) and children (Ambl. 273). See, further, as to the force and import of this word, 2 Vent. 311; 1 P. Wms. 229; 2 P. Wms. 1, 369; 3 Brown, Parl. Cas. 60, 454; 2 W. Bl. 1010; 4 Ves. 26, 766, 794; 2 Atk. 89, 580; 5 East, 533; 5 Burrows, 2615; 11 Mod. 189.

——In Civil Law. He who succeeds to the rights and occupies the place of a deceased person. See "Haeres."

HEIR APPARENT. One who has an indefeasible right to the inheritance, provided he outlive the ancestor. 2 Bl. Comm. 208.

HEIR AT LAW. He who, after his ancestor's death intestate, has a right to all lands, tenements, and hereditaments which belonged to him or of which he was seised. The same as "heir general."

HEIR BENEFICIARY. One who accepts the succession under benefit of inventory (q. v.)

HEIR BY CUSTOM. In English law. One whose right of inheritance depends upon a particular and local custom, such as gavelkind, or borough English. Co. Litt. 140.

HEIR BY DEVISE. One to whom lands are devised by will; a devisee of lands. Answering to the haeres factus (q. v.) of the civil law.

HEIR, COLLATERAL. One who is not of the direct line of the deceased, but comes from a collateral line; as, a brother, sister, an uncle and aunt, a nephew, niece, or cousin, of the deceased.

HEIR, CONVENTIONAL. In civil law. One who takes a succession by virtue of a contract—for example, a marriage contract—which entitles the heir to the succession.

HEIR, GENERAL. Heir at common law.

HEIR INSTITUTE. One to whom the right of succession is ascertained by disposition or express deed of the deceased. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, p. 75.

HEIR, LEGAL. In civil law. A legal heir is one who is of the same blood as the deceased, and who takes the succession by force of law. This is different from a testamentary or conventional heir, who takes the succession in virtue of the disposition of man. See Civ. Code La. arts. 873, 875; Dict. de Jur. "Heritier Legitime." There are three classes of legal heirs, to wit, the children and other lawful descendants, the fathers and mothers and other lawful ascendants, and the collateral kindred. Civ. Code La. art. 883.

HEIR MALE. In Scotch law. An heir institute, who, though not next in blood to the deceased, is his nearest male relation that can succeed to him. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, p. 76.

HEIR OF CONQUEST. In Scotch law. One who succeeds to the deceased in conquest, i. e., lands or other heritable rights to which the deceased neither did nor could succeed as heir to his predecessor. Forbes, Inst. pt. 377.

One who succeeds to lands acquired by purchase. Bell, Dict.

HEIR OF LINE. In Scotch law. One who succeeds lineally by right of blood; one who succeeds to the deceased in his heritage; i. e., lands and other heritable rights derived to him by succession as heir to his predecessor. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, p. 77.

An heir at law is so called because he succeeds according to certain lines of propinquity. Bell, Dict.

HEIR OF PROVISION. In Scotch law. One who succeeds as heir by virtue of a particular provision in a deed or instrument. Wharton.

HEIR OF TAILZIE. In Scotch law. He on whom an estate is settled that would not have fallen to him by legal succession. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, p. 75.

HEIR PRESUMPTIVE. One who, in the present circumstances, would be entitled to the inheritance, but whose rights may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born. 2 Bl. Comm. 208. In Louisiana, the presumptive heir is he who is the nearest relation of the deceased capable of inheriting. This quality is given to him before the decease of the person from whom he is to inherit, as well as after the opening of the succession, until he has accepted or renounced it. Civ. Code La. art. 876.

HEIR SPECIAL. In English law. The issue in tail, who claims per formam doni, by the form of the gift.

HEIR SUBSTITUTE, IN A BOND. In Scotch law. He to whom a bond is payable expressly in case of the creditor's decease, or after his death. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, p. 76.

HEIR, TESTAMENTARY. In civil law. One who is constituted heir by testament executed in the form prescribed by law. He is so called to distinguish him from the "legal heirs," who are called to the succession by the law; and from "conventional heirs," who are so constituted by a contract inter vivos. See "Haeres Factus;" "Devisee."

HEIRS, BENEFICIARY. In civil law. Those who have accepted the succession under the benefit of an inventory regularly made. Civ. Code La. art. 879. If the heir apprehend that the succession will be burdened with debts beyond its value, he accepts with benefit of inventory, and in that case he is responsible only for the value of the succession.

HEIRS, FORCED. Those who cannot be disinherited. See "Forced Heirs."

HEIRS, IRREGULAR. In Louisiana. Those who are neither testamentary nor legal, and who have been established by law to take the succession. See Civ. Code La. art. 874. When the deceased has left neither lawful descendants nor ascendants, nor collateral relations, the law calls to his inheritance either the surviving husband or wife, or his or her natural children, or the state. Id. art. 911. This is called an "irregular succession."

HEIRS OF THE BODY. Lineal descendants. 37 Ala. 178.

"The term 'heir of the body' is a well-established technical term, with which the words 'children' or 'issue' or 'lawful issue' are not synonymous." 115 Mass. 276.

Like all similar expressions, its technical sense is frequently subordinated to the evident intent.

Thus it has been construed as synonymous with "children." 147 Ind. 95; 8 Ga. 387.

HEIRS, UNCONDITIONAL. In Louisiana. Those who inherit without any reservation, or without making an inventory, whether their acceptance be express or tacit. Civ. Code La. art. 878.

HEIRESS. A female heir to a person having an estate of inheritance. When there are more than one, they are called "coheiresses," or "coheirs."

HEIRLOOM. Chattels which, contrary to the nature of chattels, descend to the heir along with the inheritance, and do not pass to the executor of the last proprietor.

This word seems to be compounded of "heir" and "loom," that is, a frame, viz., to weave in. Some derive the word "loom" from the Saxon loma, or geloma, which signifies utensils or vessels generally. However this may be, the word "loom," by time, is drawn to a more general signification than it at the first did bear, comprehending all implements of household, as tables, presses, cupboards, bedsteads, wainscots, and which, by the custom of some countries, having belonged to a house, are never inventoried after the decease of the owner as chattels, but accrue to the heir with the house itself. Minshew. The term "heirlooms" is applied to those chattels which are considered as annexed and necessary to the enjoyment of an inheritance.

Charters, deeds, and other evidences of the title of the land, together with the box or chest in which they are contained, the keys of a house, and fish in a fish pond, are heirlooms. Co. Litt. 3a, 185b; 7 Coke, 17b; Cro. Eliz. 372; Brooke, Abr. "Charters," pl. 13; 2 Bl. Comm. 28; 14 Viner, Abr. 291.

HEIRSHIP MOVABLES. In Scotch law. The movables which go to the heir, and not to the executor, that the land may not go to the heir completely dismantled, such as the best of furniture, horses, cows, etc., but not fungibles. Hope, Minor Prac. p. 538; Ersk. Inst. 3. 8. 13-17 et seq.; Bell, Dict.

HELL. The name given to a place under the exchequer chamber, where the king's debtors were confined. Rich. Dict.

HEMOLDBORH, or HELMELBORCH. A title to possession. The admission of this old Norse term into the laws of the Conqueror is difficult to be accounted for; it is not found in any Anglo Saxon law extant. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HENFARE. A fine for flight on account of murder. Domesday Book.

HENGHEN. In Saxon law. A prison, or house of correction. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HENGWYTE (Saxon). In old English law. An acquittance from a fine for hanging a thief. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 17.

HENRICUS VETUS. Henry the Old, or Elder. King Henry I. is so called in ancient English chronicles and charters, to distinguish him from the subsequent kings of that name. Spelman.

HERALD (from French, herault). An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust ensigns armorial, regulate funerals and coronations, and, anciently, to carry messages between princes and proclaim war and peace.

HERALDS' COLLEGE. In 1450, the heralds in England were collected into a college by Richard II. The earl marshal of England was chief of the college, and under him were three kings-at-arms (styled Garter, Clarencieux, Norroy), six heralds-at-arms (styled of York, Lancaster, Chester, Windsor, Richmond, and Somerset), and four pursuivants-at-arms (styled Blue Mantle, Rouge Croix, Rouge Dragon, and Portcullis). This organization still continues. Enc. Brit.

HERBAGE. In English law. An easement which consists in the right to pasture cattle on another's ground.

HERBERY. An inn. Herbergare, to entertain at an inn. Herbergatus, entertained.

HERD WERCK, or HEORDWERCH. Customary uncertain services as herdsmen, shepherds, etc. A. D. 1166, Reg. Ecc. Christi Cant. MS.; Cowell.

HEREBANNUM. Calling out the army by proclamation; a fine paid by freemen for not attending the army; a tax for the support of the army. Du Cange.

HEREDAD. In Spanish law. A portion of land that is cultivated. Formerly it meant a farm, hacienda de campo, real estate.

HEREDAD YACENTE (Spanish, from Lat. "haereditas jacens," q. v.) In Spanish law. An inheritance not yet entered upon or appropriated. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 19, c. 2, § 8.

HEREDERO. In Spanish law. Heir; he who, by legal or testamentary disposition, succeeds to the property of a deceased person. "Haeres censeatur cum defuncto una eademque persona." Las Partidas, 7. 9. 13.

HEREDITAMENTS. Things capable of being inherited. Co. Litt. 5b; 2 Bl. Comm. 17. By this term, such things are denoted as may be the subject matter of inheritance, but not the inheritance itself. It cannot, therefore, by its own intrinsic force, enlarge an estate prima facie a life estate into a fee. 2 Bos. & P. 251; 8 Term R. 503. See 4 Washb. Real Prop. Index.

Hereditaments are either (1) corporeal, such as are substantial and permanent, being comprehended under the general denomination "land;" (2) incorporeal, being heritable rights issuing out of things corporeal.

They include advowsons, tithes, dignities, pensions, franchises, offices, commons, ways, annuities, and rents. 2 Bl. Comm. 19 et seq.

Hereditaments are also divided into real, personal, and mixed. Challis, Real Prop. 39, 40.

HEREDITARY. That which is the subject of inheritance.

HEREGEAT. A heriot (q. v.) Spelman.

HEREGELD (Saxon). In old English law. A tribute or tax levied for the maintenance of an army. Spelman.

HERES. See "Haeres."

HERESCHIP (Scotch). In old Scotch law. Theft or robbery. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 2, pp. 26, 89.

HERESY. In English law. An offense against religion, consisting not in a total denial of Christianity, but of some of its essential doctrines, publicly and obstinately avowed. 4 Bl. Comm. 44, 45. An opinion on divine subjects devised by human reason, openly taught, and obstinately maintained. 1 Hale, P. C. 384. This offense is now subject only to ecclesiastical correction, and is no longer punishable by the secular law. 4 Steph. Comm. 233.

HERETOFORE. In the time before the present; down to this time; before this time. 167 Ill. 447; 117 N. Y. 150.

HERGE. In Saxon law. Persons who joined in a body of more than thirty-five to commit crimes.

HERIOT. In English law. A customary tribute of goods and chattels, payable to the lord of the fee on the decease of the owner of the land.

Heriot service is such as is due upon a special reservation in the grant or lease of lands, and therefore amounts to little more than a mere rent. Heriot custom arises upon no special reservation whatsoever, but depends merely upon immemorial usage and custom. See 2 Bl. Comm. 97, 422; Comyn, Dig. "Copyhold" (K 18); Bac. Abr.; 2 Saund.; 1 Vern. 441.

HERISCHILD. A species of English military service.

HERISCHULDAE. A fine for disobedience to proclamation of warfare. Skene de Verb. Sign.

HERITABLE BOND. In Scotch law. A bond for a sum of money, to which is added, for further security of the creditor, a conveyance of land or heritage to be held by the creditor as pledge. 1 Ross, Lect. 76; 2 Ross, Lect. 324.

HERITABLE JURISDICTION. In Scotch law. Grants of criminal jurisdiction made to great families for the better execution of justice. Abolished by 20 Geo. II. c. 43. Bell, Dict.

HERITABLE RIGHTS. In Scotch law. Rights which go to the heir; generally, all rights in or connected with lands. Bell, Dict. "Heritable."

HERITAGE. In civil law. Every species of immovables which can be the subject of property, such as lands, houses, orchards, woods, marshes, ponds, etc., in whatever mode they may have been acquired, either by descent or purchase. 3 Toullier, Dr. Civ. 472. See Co. Litt. § 731.

HERITOR. In Scotch law. A land owner.

HERMANDAD. In Spanish law. A fraternity formed among different towns and villages to prevent the commission of crimes, and to prevent the abuses and vexations to which they were subjected by men in power. To carry into effect the object of this association, each village and town elected two alcaldes,—one by the nobility, and the other by the community at large. These had under their order inferior officers, formed into companies, called cuad villeros. Their duty was to arrest delinquents and bring them before the alcaldes, when they were tried substantially in the ordinary form. This tribunal, established during the anarchy prevailing in feudal times, continued to maintain its organization in Spain for centuries; and various laws determining its jurisdiction and mode of proceeding were enacted by Ferdinand and Isabella and subsequent monarchs. Nov. Recop. tit. 35, bk. 12, § 7. The abuses introduced in the exercise of the functions of these tribunals caused their abolition, and the santas hermandades of Ciudad Rodrigo, Talavera, and Toledo, the last remnants of these anomalous jurisdictions, were abolished by the law of the 7th of May, 1835. Called, also, "Santa Hermandad."

HERMAPHRODITUS TAM MASCULO quam foeminae comparatur, secundum praevalentiam sexus incalescentis. An hermaphrodite is to be considered male or female according to the predominance of the exciting sex. Co. Litt. 8; Bracton, fol. 5.

HERMER. A great lord. Jacob.

HERRING SILVER. This was a composition in money for the custom of supplying herrings for the provision of a religious house. Rapalje & L.

HERUS. A master. Servus facit ut herus det, the servant does [the work] in order that the master may give [him the wages agreed on]. Herus dat ut servus facit, the master gives [or agrees to give, the wages] in consideration of, or with a view to, the servant's doing [the work]. 2 Bl. Comm. 445.

HESIA. An easement. Du Cange.

HETERIA. In Roman law. A society or company.

HEUVELBORH. In Saxon law. A surety.

HEYLODE. In feudal law. A duty of certain tenants to repair hedges (hays).

HIDAGE. In old English law. A tax levied, in emergencies, on every hide of land; the exemption from such tax. Bracton, lib. 2, c. 56. It was payable sometimes in money, sometimes in ships or military equipments; e. g., in the year 994, when the Danes landed in England, every three hundred hides furnished a ship to king Ethelred, and every eight hides one pack and one saddle. Jacob.

HIDALGO, or HIJODALGO. In Spanish law. He who, by blood and lineage, belongs to a distinguished family, or is noble by descent. Las Partidas, 2. 12. 3. The origin of this word has given rise to much controversy; for which, see Escriche.

HIDALGUIA. In Spanish law. Nobility by descent or lineage. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 5, c. 3, § 4. See "Hidalgo."

HIDE (from Saxon hyden, to cover; so, Lat. tectum, from tegere). In old English law. A building with a roof; a house.

As much land as might be ploughed with one plough. The amount was probably determined by usage of the locality. Some make it sixty, others eighty, others ninety-six, others one hundred or one hundred and twenty, acres. Co. Litt. 5; 1 Plowd. 167; Shep. Touch. 93; Du Cange.

As much land as was necessary to support a hide, or mansion house. Co. Litt. 69a; Spelman; Du Cange, "Hida;" 1 Introd. to Domesday Book, 145. At present, the quantity is one hundred acres. Anc. Inst. Eng.

HIDE AND GAIN. In English law. A term anciently applied to arable land. Co. Litt. 85b.

HIDE LANDS. In old English law. Lands appertaining to a hide, or mansion. See "Hide."

HIDEL. In old English law. A place of protection; a sanctuary. St. 1 Hen. VII. cc. 5, 6; Cowell.

HIDGILD. A sum of money paid by a villein or servant to save himself from a whipping. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 20.

HIGH BAILIFF. An officer attached to an English county court. His duties are to attend the court when sitting, to serve summonses, and to execute orders, warrants, writs, etc. St. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, § 33; Poll. Cir. Ct. Prac. 16. He also has similar duties under the bankruptcy jurisdiction of the county courts. Rapalje & L.

HIGH COMMISSION COURT. In English law. An ecclesiastical court of very extensive jurisdiction, for the vindication of the peace and dignity of the church, by reforming, ordering, and correcting the ecclesiastical state and persons, and all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offenses, contempts, and enormities.

It was erected by St. 1 Eliz. c. 1, and abolished by 16 Car. II. c. 11.

HIGH CONSTABLE. An officer appointed in some cities with powers generally limited to matters of police, and not more extensive, in these respects, than those of constables. See "Constable."

HIGH CONSTABLE OF ENGLAND, LORD. His office has been disused (except only upon great and solemn occasions, as the coronation, or the like) since the attainder of Stafford, Duke of Buckingham, in the reign of Henry VII. Rapalje & L.

HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY. See "Admiralty."

HIGH COURT OF DELEGATES. In English law. A tribunal which formerly exercised appellate jurisdiction over cases brought from the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts.

It was a court of great dignity, erected by St. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 19. It was abolished, and its jurisdiction transferred to the judicial committee of the privy council. See 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 92; 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 41; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 38; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 66.

HIGH COURT OF ERRORS AND APPEALS. In American law. An appellate tribunal, and the court of last resort, in the state of Mississippi.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE. That branch of the English supreme court of judicature (q. v.) which exercises (1) the original jurisdiction formerly exercised by the court of chancery, the courts of queen's bench, common pleas, and exchequer, the courts of probate, divorce, and admiralty, the court of common pleas at Lancaster, the court of pleas at Durham, and the courts of the judges or commissioners of assize; and (2) the appellate jurisdiction of such of those courts as heard appeals from inferior courts. Judicature Act 1873, § 16; Rapalje & L.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY. See "Court of Justiciary."

HIGH COURT OF PARLIAMENT. In English law. The English parliament, as composed of the house of peers and house of commons.

The house of lords sitting in its judicial capacity.

This term is applied to parliament by most of the law writers. Thus, parliament is said by Blackstone to be the supreme court of the kingdom, not only for the making, but also for the execution of the laws. 4 Bl. Comm. 259. Lord Coke and Lord Hale also apply the term "court" to the whole parliament. And see Finch, Law, 233; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2. But, from the fact that in judicial proceedings, generally, the house of commons takes no part, but only in the trial of impeachments, and then only as prosecutor, and from the fact that the house of commons disclaimed possession of judicial powers at the deposition of Richard II., and the twelve judges made a similar decision in 1 Hen. VII., the propriety of this use of the term has been questioned. Bl. Comm. (Warren, Abr.) 215. The propriety of its application would seem to be derived from the claim of parliament to be considered as the successor of the aula regis, which was a judicial as well as a legislative body, and, if the succession is established, would be applicable, although the judicial power may have been granted to the various courts. See "Court."

The house of lords only acts in a judicial capacity in civil cases and in most criminal cases. See "House of Lords;" "Impeachment."

HIGH CRIMES AND MISDEMEANORS. A term used in Const. U. S. art. 2, § 4, and elsewhere, as a ground of impeachment. Its technical sense is parliamentary, and it includes many acts not constituting crimes. Cooley, Const. Lim. 159.

"High crimes and misdemeanors are such immoral and unlawful acts as are nearly allied and equal in guilt to felony, yet, owing to some technical circumstance, do not fall within the definition of 'felony.'" 1 Russ. Crimes, 61. And see 39 La. Ann. 186.

HIGH JUSTICE. In feudal law. The jurisdiction or right of trying crimes of every kind, even the highest. This was a privilege claimed and exercised by the great lords or barons of the middle ages. 1 Robertson, Hist. Charles V., Append. note 23.

HIGH JUSTICIER. In old French and Canadian law. A feudal lord who exercised the right called "high justice." Guyot, Inst. Feud. c. 26.

HIGH SEAS. The uninclosed waters of the ocean, and also those waters on the seacoast which are without the boundaries of low-water mark. 1 Gall. (U. S.) 624; 1 Mason (U. S.) 360; 5 Mason (U. S.) 290; 1 Bl. Comm. 110; 2 Hagg. Adm. 398; Dunl. Adm. Prac. 32, 33.

Waters within the ebb and flow of the sea (Gilp. 524), though in a harbor (Fed. Cas. No. 14,509), but not in a landlocked haven (4 Mason [U. S.] 307; 5 Mason [U. S.] 290; 3 Blatchf. [U. S.] 435).

The open waters of the great lakes are "high seas" (150 U. S. 249), but the waters of an inland river flowing into the great lakes are not (7 Mich. 161).

HIGH STEWARD, COURT OF THE LORD. In English law. A tribunal instituted for the trial of peers indicted for treason or felony, or for misprision of either, but not for any other offense. The office is very ancient, and was formerly hereditary, or held for life, or dum bene se gesserit; but it has been for many centuries granted pro hac vice only, and always to a lord of parliament. Wharton.

HIGH TREASON. In English law. The compassing of the king's death; the aiding and comforting of his enemies; the forging or counterfeiting of his coin; or the killing of the chancellor or either of the king's justices. 4 Bl. Comm. 73. See "Treason."

HIGH-WATER MARK. That part of the shore of the sea to which the waves ordinarily reach when the tide is at its highest. 6 Mass. 435; 1 Pick. (Mass.) 180; 1 Halst. (N. J.) 1; 1 Russ. Crimes, 107; 2 East, P. C. 803. See "Seashore;" "Tide."

——Of Tidal Waters. The ordinary high-water point. 60 Pa. St. 339. The point reached by the medium high tide between the spring and neap tides. 44 N. J. Eq. 398.

——Of Nontidal Waters. The highest point reached by the waters in the normal state, unaffected by freshets. 88 Me. 155. And see 56 Minn. 513.

HIGHER AND LOWER SCALE. In the practice of the English supreme court of judicature, there are two scales regulating the fees of the court and the fees which solicitors are entitled to charge. The lower scale applies (unless the court otherwise orders) to the following cases: All causes and matters assigned by the judicature acts to the queen's bench, or the probate, divorce, and admiralty divisions; all actions of debt, contract, or tort; and in almost all causes and matters assigned by the acts to the chancery division in which the amount in litigation is under £1,000. The higher scale applies in all other causes and matters, and also in actions falling under one of the above classes, but in which the principal relief sought to be obtained is an injunction. 5 Q. B. Div. 167, 431; 6 Q. B. Div. 190; Daniell. Ch. Prac. 1320.

HIGHNESS. A title of honor given to princes. The kings of England, before the time of James I., were not usually saluted with the title of "Majesty," but with that of "Highness." The children of crowned heads generally receive the style of "Highness." Wharton.

HIGHWAY. A passage, road, or street which every citizen has a right to use. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 442; 3 Kent, Comm. 432; 3 Yeates (Pa.) 421; Angell & D. Highways, § 2; 16 Mass. 33.

In a more abstract sense, a public easement or right of way.

The term "highway" is the generic name for all kinds of public ways, whether they be carriage ways, bridle ways, foot ways, bridges, turnpike roads, railroads, canals, ferries or navigable rivers. 6 Mod. 255; Angell & D. Highways, c. 1; 3 Kent, Comm. 432.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY. Robbery committed on a public highway was, under St. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 1, more severely punished than robbery committed elsewhere. This distinction was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. & Mary, c. 9.

HIGHWAYMAN. A robber on the highway.

HIGLER. In English law. A person who carries from door to door, and sells by retail, small articles of provisions, and the like.

HIGUELA. In Spanish law. The written acknowledgment given by each of the heirs of a deceased person, showing the effects he has received from the succession.

HIKENILD STREET. A name sometimes given to Ikenild street (q. v.)

HILARY TERM. In English law. A term of court, beginning on the 11th and ending on the 31st day of January in each year.

HINDER AND DELAY. To hinder and delay is to do something which is an attempt to defraud, rather than a successful fraud; to put some obstacle in the path, or interpose some time, unjustifiably, before the creditor can realize what is owed out of his debtor's property. 10 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 63.

HINDU LAW. The system of native law prevailing among the Gentoos, and administered by the government of British India.

In all the arrangements for the administration of justice in India, made by the British government and the East India Company, the principle of reserving to the native inhabitants the continuance of their own laws and usages within certain limits has been uniformly recognized. The laws of the Hindus and Mohammedans have thus been brought into notice in England, and are occasionally referred to by writers on English and American law. The native works upon these subjects are very numerous. The chief English republications of the Hindu law are, Colebrooke's Digest of Hindu Law, London, 1801; Sir Wm. Jones' Institutes of Hindu Law, London, 1797. For a fuller account of the Hindu law, and of the original Digests and Commentaries, see Morley's Law of India, London, 1858, and Macnaghten's Principles of Hindu and Mohammedan Law, London, 1860. The principal English republications of the Mohammedan law are Hamilton's Hedaya, London, 1791; Baillie's Digest, Calcutta, 1805; Precis de Jurisprudence Mussulmane Selon le Rite Malikite, Paris, 1848; and the treatises on succession and inheritance translated by Sir William Jones. An approved outline of both systems is Macnaghten's Principles of Hindu and Mohammedan Law; also contained in the "Principles and Precedents" of the same law previously published by the same author.

HINEFARE. The departure of a husbandry servant (hine) from his master.

HIPOTECA. In Spanish law. A mortgage of real property. Johnson, Civ. Law Spain, 156 [149]; White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 7.

HIRE. A bailment in which compensation is to be given for the use of a thing, or for labor and services about it. 2 Kent, Comm. 456; Story, Bailm. § 359. The divisions of this species of contract are denoted by Latin names.

Locatio operis faciendi is the hire of labor and work to be done, or care and attention to be bestowed, on the goods let by the hirer, for a compensation.

Locatio operis mercium vehendarum is the hire of the carriage of goods from one place to another, for a compensation. Jones, Bailm. 85, 86, 90, 103, 118; 2 Kent, Comm. 456; Civ. Code La. art. 1709-1711.

Locatio rei or locatio conductio rei is the bailment of a thing to be used by the hirer for a compensation to be paid by him.

This contract arises from the principles of natural law. It is voluntary, and founded in consent; it involves mutual and reciprocal obligations; and it is for mutual benefit. In some respects it bears a strong resemblance to the contract of sale; the principal difference between them being that in cases of sale the owner parts with the whole proprietary interest in the thing, and in cases of hire the owner parts with it only for a temporary use and purpose. In a sale, the thing itself is the object of the contract; in hiring, the use of the thing is its object. Vinnius. lib. 3, tit. 25, in pr.; Poth. de Contr. du Louage, notes 2-4; Jones, Bailm. 86; Story, Bailm. § 371; 2 Kent, Comm. 456.

HIRER. He who hires. See "Bailment."

HLAFORD (Saxon). A lord. Hlaford-socna, a lord's protection. Hlafordswice, the crime of betraying one's lord.

HLAFORDSWICE (Saxon, hlaford, lord, literally bread given, and wice). In old English law. Betraying one's lord; treason. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 59, 301.

HLOTHBOTE (Saxon, hloth, company, and bote, compensation). In old English law. Fine for presence at an illegal assembly. Du Cange.

HLOTHE. An unlawful assembly of from eight to thirty-five persons. Cowell. See "Herge."

HOC (Lat.) This.

HOC PARATUS EST VERIFICARE. See "Et hoc, etc."

HOC SERVABITUR QUOD INITIO CONvenit. This shall be preserved which is useful in the beginning. Dig. 50. 17. 23; Bracton, 73b.

HOCCUS SALTIS. A hoke, hole, or lesser pit of salt. Cowell.

HOCK-TUESDAY MONEY. This was a duty given to the landlord that his tenants and bondmen might solemnize the day on which the English conquered the Danes, being the second Tuesday after Easter week. Cowell.

HODGE-PODGE ACT. A name given to a legislative act which embraces many subjects. Such acts, besides being evident proofs of the ignorance of the makers of them, or of their want of good faith, are calculated to create a confusion which is highly prejudicial to the interests of justice. Instances of this wretched legislation are everywhere to be found. See Barr. Obs. St. 449.

HOG HOWARDS. Township officers at one time elected in New York, whose duty was to catch hogs running at large, and put rings in their noses. 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 522.

HOGHENHYNE (from Saxon hogh, house, and hine, servant). A domestic servant. Among the Saxons, a stranger guest was, the first night of his stay, called uncuth, or unknown; the second, gust, guest; the third, hoghenhyne; and the entertainer was responsible for his acts as for those of his own servant. Bracton, 124b; Du Cange, "Agenhine;" Spelman, "Homehine."

HOGSHEAD. A liquid measure, containing half a pipe; the fourth part of a tun, or sixty-three gallons.

HOLD PLEAS. To hear or try causes. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 35, 298.

HOLDER. The holder of a bill of exchange is the person who is legally in the possession of it, either by indorsement or delivery, or both, and entitled to receive payment either from the drawee or acceptor, and is considered as an assignee. 4 Dall. (Pa.) 53.

HOLDING.

——In English Law. A piece of land held under a lease or similar tenancy for agricultural, pastoral, or similar purposes.

——In Scotch Law. The tenure or nature of the right given by the superior to the vassal. Bell, Dict.

HOLDING THE MARKET. See "Gambling Contract."

HOLIDAY. A day of cessation from labor; a day when public business is suspended; a nonjudicial day.

Primarily the term meant a "holy day," or religious festival. In modern usage it indicates a secular day on which, by statute, public business is suspended. It does not appropriately include Sunday. 51 N. J. Law, 255.

HOLOGRAFO. In Spanish law. Olographi; a term applicable to the paper, document, disposition, and more particularly to the last will of a person, which, in order to be valid, must be wholly written, signed, and dated by the testator. "Holographum, apud testum, appellatur testamentum, quod totum manu testatoris scriptum est et subsignatum."

HOLOGRAPH. What is written with one's own hand. See "Olograph."

HOLY ORDERS. In ecclesiastical law. The orders or dignities of the church. Those within holy orders are archbishops, bishops, priests, and deacons. The form of ordination must be according to the form in the book of Common Prayer. Besides these orders, the church of Rome had five others, viz., subdeacons, acolyths, exorcists, readers, and ostiaries. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 39, 40.

HOMAGE (anciently hominium, from homo). A mere acknowledgment of tenure made by a tenant by knight service upon investiture, in the following form:

The tenant in fee or fee tail that holds by homage shall kneel upon both his knees, ungirded, and the lord shall sit and hold both the hands of his tenant between his hands, and the tenant shall say, "I become your man (homo) from this day forward of life and member, of earthly honor, and to you shall be faithful and true, and shall bear to you faith for the lands that I claim to hold of you, saving that faith that I owe to our lord the king;" and then the lord so sitting shall kiss him. The kiss is indispensable, except sometimes in the case of a woman. Du Cange. After this the oath of fealty is taken; but this may be taken by the steward, homage only by the lord. Termes de la Ley. This species of homage was called homagium planum or simplex (1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 367), to distinguish it from homagium ligium, or liege homage, which included fealty and the services incident. Du Cange; Spelman.

Liege homage was that homage in which allegiance was sworn without any reservation, and was therefore due only to the sovereign; and, as it came in time to be exacted without any actual holding from him, it sunk into the oath of allegiance. Termes de la Ley.

The obligation of homage is mutual, binding the lord to protection of the vassal, as well as the vassal to fidelity. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 16.

HOMAGE ANCESTRAL. Homage was so called where time out of mind a man and his ancestors had held by homage; and in this case the lord who had received the homage was bound to acquit the tenant of all services to superior lords, and, if vouched, to warrant his title. If the tenant by homage ancestral aliened in fee, his alienee held by homage, but not by homage ancestral. Termes de la Ley; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 300.

HOMAGE JURY. The jury of a lord's court, or court baron. So called because generally composed of those who owed homage to the lord, or the pares curiae. Kitch. Cts.; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 54, 366.

HOMAGER. One that is bound to do homage to another. Jacob.

HOMAGIUM. Homage (q. v.)

HOMAGIUM LIGIUM. Liege homage; that kind of homage which was due to the sovereign alone as supreme lord, and which was done without any saving or exception of the rights of other lords. Spelman. So called from ligando (binding) because it could not be renounced like other kinds of homage.

HOMAGIUM, NON PER PROCURATORES nec per literas fieri potuit, sed in propria persona tam domini quam tenentis capi debet et fieri. Homage cannot be done by proxy, nor by letters, but must be paid and received in the proper person, as well of the lord as the tenant. Co. Litt. 68.

HOMAGIUM PLANUM. In feudal law. Plain homage; a species of homage which bound him who did it to nothing more than fidelity, without any obligation either of military service or attendance in the courts of his superior. 1 Robertson, Hist. Charles V., Append. note 8.

HOMAGIUM REDDERE. To renounce homage; to give it up or dissolve it. Bracton, fol. 81b.

HOMAGIUM SIMPLEX. In feudal law. Simple homage; that kind of homage which was merely an acknowledgment of tenure, with a saving of the rights of other lords. Harg. Co. Litt. note 18, lib. 2.

HOMBRE BUENO. In Spanish law. The ordinary judge of a district.

Hence, when the law declares that a contract, or some other act, is to be conformable to the will of the hombre bueno, it means that it is to be decided by the ordinary judge. Las Partidas, 7. 34. 31.

In matters of conciliation, it applies to the two persons, one chosen by each party, to assist the constitutional alcalde in forming his judgment of reconciliation. Article 1, c. 3, Decree of October 9, 1812.

Arbitrators chosen by litigants to determine their differences.

Persons competent to give testimony in a cause.

HOME. A place of abode from which one has no present intention of removing. 43 Me. 418; 124 Mass. 147.

HOME NE SERA PUNY PUR SUER DES briefes en court le roy, soit il a droit ou a tort. A man shall not be punished for suing out writs in the king's court, whether he be right or wrong. 2 Inst. 228.

HOME OFFICE. The department of state through which the English sovereign administers most of the internal affairs of the kingdom, especially the police, and communicates with the judicial functionaries.

HOME PORT. The port where the owner of a ship resides.

HOMESOKEN, or HOMSOKEN. See "Hamesucken."

HOMESTALL. The mansion house.

HOMESTEAD. The house and land constituting a family residence. 6 N. D. 482.

" 'Stethe or sted,' says Lord Coke, 'betokeneth properly a bank of a river, and many times a place.' Co. Litt. 4, 6. The homestead, according to that definition, means the home place, the place where the house is, and such is its legal acceptation at the present day. It is the home, the house, and the adjoining land, where the head of the family dwells; the home farm." 36 N. H. 158.

The principal importance of the term is in respect to the exemption of the homestead from execution, and the nature and extent of such exemption is regulated in each state by the statutes allowing the same.

As a general rule, to constitute a homestead within the exemption laws the property must be actually occupied (11 Allen [Mass.] 37; 51 Mich. 541; 23 Minn. 435) as a residence (27 Ill. 393) by the head of a family (10 Allen [Mass.] 425; 159 Ill. 148) who has a present possessory interest in the property (170 Ill. 115; 74 Iowa, 683), with the intention of making such property a homestead (6 Cal. 234; 53 Vt. 554).

HOMICIDE. Homicide is any killing of a human being. To constitute homicide, (1) the killing must be of a living human being; (2) the death must have been caused by the act or omission of the accused; (3) death must happen within a year and a day after the injury.

Homicide is either (1) justifiable; (2) excusable; or (3) felonious. Felonious homicide is either murder or manslaughter. 1 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 466. See "Murder;" "Manslaughter."

HOMICIDIUM (Lat.) Homicide.

HOMINE CAPTO IN WITHERNAM. See "De Homine Capto in Withernam."

HOMINE ELIGENDO (Lat.) In English law. A writ directed to a corporation, requiring the members to make choice of a new man, to keep the one part of a seal appointed for statutes merchant. Tech. Dict.

HOMINE REPLEGIANDO. See "De Homine Replegiando."

HOMINES (Lat.) In feudal law. Men; feudatory tenants who claimed a privilege of having their causes, etc., tried only in their lord's court. Par. Ant. 15.

HOMINES LIGII. In feudal law. Liege men; feudal tenants or vassals, especially those who held immediately of the sovereign. 1 Bl. Comm. 367.

HOMINUM CAUSA JUS CONSTITUTUM est. Law is established for the benefit of man.

HOMIPLAGIUM. In old English law. The maiming of a man. Blount..

HOMMES DE FIEF (Fr.) In feudal law. Men of the fief; feudal tenants; the peers in the lords' courts. Montesq. Esp. des Lois, liv. 28, c. 27.

HOMMES FEODAUX (Fr.) In feudal law. Feudal tenants; the same with hommes de fief (q. v.) Montesq. Esp. des Lois, liv. 28, c. 36.

HOMO (Lat.) A human being, whether male or female. 2 Inst. 45.

——In Feudal Law. A vassal; one who, having received a feud, is bound to do homage and military service for his land. Variously called vassalus, vassus, miles, cliens feudalis, tenens per servitium militare, sometimes baro, and most frequently leudes. Spelman. Homo is sometimes also used for a tenant by socage, and sometimes for any dependent. A homo claimed the privilege of having his cause and person tried only in the court of his lord. Kennett, Par. Ant. p. 152.

HOMO CHARTULARIUS. One manumitted from slavery by charter.

HOMO COMMENDATÚS. In feudal law. One who surrendered himself into the power of another for the sake of protection or support. L. Ripuar, tit. 72, § 5.

HOMO ECCLESIASTICUS. A church vassal; one who was bound to serve a church, especially to do service of an agricultural character. Spelman.

HOMO EXERCITALIS. A man of the army (exercitus); a soldier.

HOMO FEODALIS. A vassal or tenant; one who held a fee (feodum), or part of a fee. Spelman.

HOMO FISCALIS (or FISCALINUS). A servant or vassal belonging to the treasury or fiscus.

HOMO FRANCUS, HOMO INGENUUS, or homo liber. In old English law. A free man.

HOMO LIGIUS. A liege man; a subject; a king's vassal; the vassal of a subject. Spelman.

HOMO NOVUS. In feudal law. A new tenant or vassal; one who was invested with a new fee. Spelman.

HOMO PERTINENS. In feudal law. A feudal bondman or vassal; one who belonged to the soil (qui glebae adscribitur).

HOMO POTEST ESSE HABILIS ET INhabilis diversis temporibus. A man may be capable and incapable at divers times. 5 Coke, 98.

HOMO REGIUS. A king's vassal. L. Ripuar, tit. 11, § 3.

HOMO ROMANUS. A Roman. An appellation given to the old inhabitants of Gaul and other Roman provinces, and retained in the laws of the barbarous nations. L. Salis. tit. 34, § 3; Spelman.

HOMO TRIUM LITTERARUM. A man of three letters; i. e., "f," "u," "r,"—a thief. Wharton.

HOMO VOCABULUM EST NATURAE; persona juris civilis. "Man" (homo) is a term of nature; "person" (persona) of the civil law. Calv. Lex.

HOMOLOGACION. In Spanish law. The tacit consent and approval, inferred by law from the omission of the parties, for the space of ten days, to complain of the sentences of arbitrators, appointment of syndics, or assignees, of insolvents, settlements of successions, etc. Also, the approval given by the judge of certain acts and agreements for the purpose of rendering them more binding and executory. Escriche, Dic. Raz.

HOMOLOGARE. In civil law. To confirm or approve; to consent or assent; to confess. Calv. Lex. Sometimes corruptly written "emologare."

HOMOLOGATE. In modern civil law. To approve; to confirm; as, a court homologates a proceeding. See "Homologation." Literally, to use the same words with another; to say the like. 9 Mart. (La.) 324. To assent to what another says or writes.

HOMOLOGATION.

——In Civil Law. Approbation; confirmation by a court of justice; a judgment which orders the execution of some act; as, the approbation of an award, and ordering execution on the same. Merlin, Repert.; Civ. Code La.; Dig. 4. 8; 7 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 224. To homologate is to say the like, similiter dicere. 9 Mart. (La.) 324.

——In Scotch Law. An act by which a person approves a deed, so as to make it binding on him, though in itself defective. Ersk. Inst. 3. 3. 47 et seq.; 2 Bligh, 197; 1 Bell, Comm. 144.

HOMONYMIAE (Graeco-Lat.) A term applied in the civil law to cases where a law was repeated, or laid down in the same terms, or to the same effect, more than once. Cases of iteration and repetition. Bac. Works, IV. 371. See 2 Kent, Comm. 489, note.

HONESTE VIVERE (Lat.) To live honorably, creditably, or virtuously. One of the three general precepts to which Justinian reduced the whole doctrine of the law (Inst. 1. 1. 3; Bracton, fols. 3, 3b), the others being alterum non laedere, not to injure others, and suum cuique tribuere, to render to every man his due.

This phrase is rendered by Blackstone, as well as Harris & Cooper, in their translations of the Institutes, "to live honestly," but this is not the proper meaning of honeste. Burrill.

HONOR.

——In English Law. The seigniory of a lord paramount. 2 Bl. Comm. 91.

——In Common Law. To accept a bill of exchange; to pay a bill accepted, or a promissory note, on the day it becomes due. 7 Taunt. 164; 1 Term R. 172.

HONOR COURTS. Tribunals held within honors. Cowell.

HONORABLE. A title of courtesy given in England to the younger children of earls, and the children of viscounts and barons, and, collectively, to the house of commons. In America, the word is used as a title of courtesy for judges, members of congress, and other high officials, but without any distinct rule for its application.

HONORARIUM. Something given in gratitude for services rendered.

It is so far of the nature of a gift that it cannot be sued for. 5 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 412; 1 Chit. Bailm. 38; 2 Atk. 332; 3 Bl. Comm. 28. Of this character were formerly in England, though never in the United States, the fees of counsellors at law and of physicians. See 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 28.

HONORARY. Without fee, profit, or reward, either to or by the holder of the honorary position. 81 N. Y. 255.

HONORARY FEUDS. Titles of nobility, descendible to the eldest son, in exclusion of all the rest.

HONORARY SERVICES. Services by which lands in grand serjeantry were held; such as to hold king's banner, or to hold his head in the ship which carried him from Dover to Whitsand, etc. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 73, and note.

HONORARY TRUSTEES. Trustees to preserve contingent remainders. So called because they are bound, in honor only, to decide on the most proper and prudential course. Lewin, Trusts, 408.

HONTFONGENTHEF (Saxon). A thief taken with the stolen thing in his hand. See "Handhabend."

HORA AURORAE. In old English law. The morning bell. Cowell.

HORA NON EST MULTUM DE SUBTANtia negotii, licet in appello de ea aliquando fiat mentio. The hour is not of much consequence as to the substance of business, although in appeal it is sometimes mentioned. 1 Bulst. 82.

HORAE JUDICIAE (Lat.) Hours judicial, or those in which judges sit in court. In Fortesque's time, these were from 8 to 11 a. m., and the courts of law were not open in the afternoon. Co. Litt. 135a; 2 Inst. 246; Fortesque, 51, p. 120, note.

HORCA. In Spanish law. A gallows; the punishment of hanging. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 19, c. 4, § 1.

HORN. In old Scotch practice. A kind of trumpet used in denouncing contumacious persons rebels and outlaws, which was done with three blasts of the horn by the king's sergeant. This was called "putting to the horn," and the party so denounced was said to be "at the horn." Bell, Dict.; Skene de Verb. Sign.; 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 2, pp. 77, 80.

HORN TENURE. Tenure by winding a horn on approach of enemy, called "tenure by cornage." If lands were held by this tenure of the king, it was grand sergeantry; if of a private person, knight service. Many anciently so held their lands towards the Picts' Wall. Co. Litt. § 156; Camden, Brit. 609.

HORN WITH HORN. A phrase used to describe the commoning together of horned beasts of different species.

HORNING. In Scotch law. A process issuing on a decree of court of sessions, or of an inferior court, by which the debtor is charged to perform, in terms of his obligation, or on failure made liable to caption, that is, imprisonment. Bell, Dict. "Horning, Letters of;" "Diligence." The name comes from the ancient custom of proclaiming letters of horning not obeyed, and declaring the recusant a rebel, with three blasts of a horn, called "putting him to the horn." 1 Ross, Lect. 258, 308.

HORS (Law Fr.) Out; out of; without.

Hors son sen, out of his mind. Britt. c. 85.

HORS DE SON FEE (Fr. out of his fee). In old English law. A plea to an action brought by one who claimed to be lord for rent services as issuing out of his land, by which the defendant asserted that the land in question was out of the fee of the demandant. 9 Coke, 30; 2 Mod. 104.

HORS PRIS (Law Fr.) Except.

HORSE. Until a horse has attained the age of four years, he is called a "colt." 1 Russ. & R. 416. This word is sometimes used as a generic name for all animals of the horse kind. 3 Brev. (N. C.) 9. See Yelv. 67a.

HOSPITATOR (Lat.) A host or entertainer.

Hospitator communis, an innkeeper. 8 Coke, 32.

Hospitator magnus, the marshal of a camp.

HOSPITIA. Inns. Hospitia communia, common inns. Reg. Orig. 105. Hospitia curiae, inns of court. Hospitia cancellariae, inns of chancery. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 428, 429, 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 120.

HOSTAGE. A person delivered into the possession of a public enemy in the time of war, as a security for the performance of a contract entered into between the belligerents.

Hostages are frequently given as a security for the payment of a ransom bill, and if they should die, their death would not discharge the contract. 3 Burrows, 1734; 1 Kent, Comm. 106; Dane, Abr. Index.

HOSTELLAGIUM. In English law. A right reserved to the lords to be lodged and entertained in the houses of their tenants.

HOSTES. Enemies.

"Enemies are those who declare war against us, or against whom we declare war publicly; all others are pirates or robbers." Dig. 50. 16. 118. See "Enemy."

HOSTES SUNT QUI NOBIS VEL QUIbus nos bellum decernimus; caeteri traditores vel praedones sunt. Enemies are those upon whom we declare war, or who declare it against us; all others are traitors or pirates. 7 Coke, 24; Dig. 50. 16. 118; 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 257.

HOSTICIDE. One who kills an enemy.

HOSTILE. Having the character of an enemy; standing in the relation of an enemy. See 1 Kent, Comm. c. 4.

HOSTILE EMBARGO. See "Embargo."

HOSTILE WITNESS. A witness who manifests so much hostility or prejudice under examination in chief that the party who has called him, or his representative, is allowed to cross-examine him, i. e., to treat him as though he had been called by the opposite party. Rapalje & L.

HOSTILITY. A state of open enmity; open war. Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 1191.

Permanent hostility exists when the individual is a citizen or subject of the government at war.

Temporary hostility exists when the individual happens to be domiciliated or resident in the country of one of the belligerents. In this latter case, the individual may throw off the national character he has thus acquired by residence, when he puts himself in motion, bona fide, to quit the country sine animo revertendi. 3 C. Rob. Adm. 12; 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 14. See "Enemy;" "Domicile."

HOT-WATER ORDEAL. See "Ordeal."

HOTCHPOT, HODGE-PODGE, or HOTCHpotch. The blending and mixing property belonging to different persons, in order to divide it equally. 2 Bl. Comm. 190.

The bringing together all the personal estate of the deceased, with the advancements he has made to his children, in order that the same may be divided agreeably to the provisions of the statute for the distribution of intestates' estates.

In bringing an advancement into hotchpot, the donee is not required to account for the profits of the thing given. For example, he is not required to bring into hotchpot the produce of negroes, nor the interest of money. The property must be accounted for at its value when given. 1 Wash. (Va.) 224; 17 Mass. 358; 3 Pick. (Mass.) 450; 2 Desaus. (S. C.) 127; 3 Rand. (Va.) 117, 559. See "Advancement."

HOTEL. A public house for the entertainment of travellers and casual guests. 44 N. J. Law, 492.

The term is synonymous with "inn" or "tavern." 2 Daly (N. Y.) 17; 84 Ala. 452; 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 311.

HOUR OF CAUSE. In Scotch practice. The hour when a court is met. 3 How. St. Tr. 603.

HOUSE. "In a general sense, a building or shed intended or used as a shelter or habitation for animals of any kind; but appropriately a building or edifice for the habitation of man; a dwelling place." Webster, quoted in 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 292.

Several buildings, so constructed that they may be used as an entirety, may constitute a "house." 9 Ch. Div. 425.

"House" has been variously held to mean "dwelling house" (11 Abb. Pr. [N. Y.] 292), or to include buildings used for other purposes (37 Tex. 412; 9 Ch. Div. 425), according to the context.

HOUSE BOTE. An allowance of necessary timber out of the landlord's woods for the repairing and support of a house or tenement. This belongs of common right to any lessee for years or for life. House bote is said to be of two kinds, estoveriam aedificandi et ardendi. Co. Litt. 41.

HOUSE OF COMMONS. One of the constituent houses of the English parliament.

It is composed of the representatives of the people, as distinguished from the house of lords, which is composed of the nobility. It consists of six hundred and fifty-four members, elected as follows: Four hundred and ninety-six from England and Wales, fifty-three from Scotland, and one hundred and five from Ireland. See "Parliament;" "High Court of Parliament."

HOUSE OF CORRECTION. A place for the imprisonment of those who have committed crimes of lesser magnitude.

HOUSE OF ILL FAME. A bawdy house (q. v.); a house resorted to for the purpose of prostitution and lewdness. 5 Ired. (N. C.) 603. See 3 Pick. (Mass.) 26; 21 N. H. 345; 33 Conn. 91.

HOUSE OF LORDS. One of the constituent houses of the English parliament.

This body is the supreme court of judicature in the kingdom. It has no original jurisdiction, but is the court of appeal in the last resort, with a few exceptions, and under some limitations as to the right, from the inferior courts upon appeal or writ of error for mistake of law. Appeals lie to this tribunal from Scotch and Irish courts, in some cases. See St. 4 Geo. IV. c. 85, as to Scotch, and St. 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 67, art. 8, as to Irish, appeals.

This body, when sitting as a court of law, is presided over by the lord chancellor, whose attendance alone is in any respect compulsory, and is composed of as many of its members who have filled judicial stations as choose to attend. Three laymen also attend in rotation, but do not vote upon judicial matters. 11 Clark & F. 421. In the absence of the chancellor, deputy speakers, who were members of the profession, but not of the house, have been appointed. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 56.

It sits also to try impeachments. See "Impeachment;" "High Court of Parliament;" "Parliament."

HOUSE OF REFUGE. A prison for juvenile delinquents.

HOUSEBREAKING. In criminal law. The breaking and entering the dwelling house of another, by night or by day, with intent to commit some felony within the same, whether such felonious intent is executed or not. Housebreaking by night is burglary.

This crime is of a local character, and the evidence respecting the place must correspond with the allegation in the indictment.

HOUSEHOLD. Those who dwell under the same roof, and constitute a family. Webster. But it is not necessary that they should be under a roof, or that the father of the family be with it, if the mother and children keep together so as to constitute a family. 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 402.

Belonging to the house and family; domestic. Webster.

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE. By this expression, in wills, all personal chattels will pass that may contribute to the use or convenience of the household, or the ornament of the house; as, plate, linen, china, both useful and ornamental, and pictures. But goods or plate in the hands of testator in the way of his trade will not pass, nor books, nor wines. 1 Jarm. Wills (Perkins Ed.) 591, 596, notes; 1 Ves. Sr. 97; 2 Williams, Ex'rs (Am. Ed.) 1017; 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 329. See "Furniture."

HOUSEHOLD GOODS. In wills. This expression will pass everything of a permanent nature (that is, articles of household which are not consumed in their enjoyment) that were used or purchased, or otherwise acquired by the testator, for his house, but not goods in the way of his trade. Plate will pass by this term, but not articles of consumption found in the house, as malt, hops, or victuals, nor guns and pistols, if used in hunting or sport, and not for defense of house. A clock in the house, if not fixed to it, will pass. 1 Jarm. Wills (Perkins Ed.) 589; 1 Rop. Leg. 253. See "Goods."

HOUSEHOLD STUFF. Words sometimes used in a will. Plate will pass under the term (2 Freem. Ch. 64), but not apparel, books, cattle, victuals, and choses in action, which do not fall within the natural meaning of the word, unless there be an intention manifest that they should pass. 15 Ves. 319. Goods, as seven hundred beds in possession of testator for purposes of trade, do not pass under utensils of "household stuff." 2 P. Wms. 302. In general, "household stuff" will pass all articles which may be used for the convenience of the house. Swinb. Wills, pt. 7, § 10, p. 484.

HOUSEHOLDER. Master or chief of a family; one who keeps house with his family. Webster. It "means more than the mere occupant of a room or house. It implies the idea of a domestic establishment." 37 Ala. 145. But a man who has absconded from the state, and left his wife and children remaining together as a family, was for their benefit held to be a householder. 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 402. And a single man renting a house in which he lodged with a younger brother has been held a householder. 2 Tex. App. 432.

A keeper of a tavern or boarding house, or a master or mistress of a dwelling house. 1 Supp. Rev. St. Mass. 1836-1853, Index, p. 170. A person having and providing for a household. The character is not lost by a temporary cessation from housekeeping. 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 456; 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 475.

HOUSEKEEPER. One who occupies a house.

A person who occupies every room in the house, under a lease, except one, which is reserved for his landlord, who pays all the taxes, is not a housekeeper. 1 Chit. Bailm. 502. Nor is a person a housekeeper who takes a house which he afterwards underlets to another, whom the landlord refuses to accept as his tenant. In this case, the under tenant paid the taxes, and let to the tenant the first floor of the house, and the rent was paid for the whole house to the tenant, who paid it to the landlord. Id. note.

In order to make the party a housekeeper, he must be in actual possession of the house (1 Chit. Bailm. 288), and must occupy a whole house. See 1 Barn. & C. 178; 2 Term R. 406; 3 Petersd. Abr. 103, note; 2 Mart. (La.) 313.

The term is rarely, if ever, used in American law.

HOVEL. A place used by husbandmen to set their ploughs, carts, and other farming utensils out of the rain and sun. Law Lat. Dict. A shed; a cottage; a mean house.

HOYMAN. The master or captain of a hoy, or small coasting vessel.

Hoymen are liable as common carriers. Story, Bailm. § 496.

HUDE-GELD. In old English law. A compensation for an assault (transgressio illata) upon a trespassing servant (servus). Supposed to be a mistake or misprint in Fleta for hinegeld. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 20. Also, the price of one's skin, or the money paid by a servant to save himself from a whipping. Du Cange.

HUE AND CRY. In old English law. A pursuit of one who had committed felony, by the highway.

The meaning of "hue" is said to be "shout," from the Saxon huer; but this word also means "to foot," and it may be reasonably questioned whether the term may not be "up foot and cry;" in other words, run and cry after the felon. We have a mention of hue and cry as early as Edward I.; and by the Statute of Winchester (13 Edw. I.), "immediately upon robberies and felonies committed, fresh suit shall be made from town to town, and county to county, by horsemen and footmen, to the seaside. The constable (the person being described, etc.) is to call upon the parishioners to assist him in the pursuit in his precinct, and to give notice to the next constable, who is to do the same as the first, etc. If the county will not answer the bodies of the offenders, the whole hundred shall be answerable for the robberies there committed, etc." A person engaged in the hue and cry apprehending a felon was, on the felon's conviction, entitled to forty pounds, on a certificate of the judge or justice before whom there was conviction, as well as to the felon's horse, furniture, arms, money, and other goods taken with him, subject to the rights of other persons therein. Wood, Inst. 370-373. See 2 Hale, P. C. 100.

HUEBRA. In Spanish law. An acre of land, or as much as can be ploughed in a day by two oxen. 2 White, New Coll. 49.

HUISSIER. An usher of the court; an officer who serves process.

In France, an officer of this name performs many of the duties of an English sheriff or constable. In Canada, there may be many huissiers in each county, whose acts are independent of each other; while there can be but one sheriff, who is presumed cognizant of the acts of his subordinates. The French huissier certifies his process; the Canadian merely serves what is put into his hands.

HUNDRED. In English law. A division of a county, which some make to have originally consisted of one hundred hides of land; others of ten tithings, or one hundred free families.

It differed in size in different parts of England. 1 Steph. Comm. 122. In many cases, when an offense is committed within a hundred, the inhabitants are liable to make good the damage if they do not produce the offender. See 12 East, 244.

This system was probably introduced by Alfred (though mentioned in the Poenitentiae of Egbert, where it seems to be the addition of a later age), being borrowed from the continent, where it was known to the Franks, under the name centena, in the sixth century. See Charlemagne, Cap. lib. 3, c. 10.

It had a court attached to it, called the "hundred court," or "hundred lagh," like a court baron, except in its larger territorial jurisdiction. It was governed by the hundredary (hundredarius). 9 Coke, 25. The jurisdiction of this court has devolved upon the county courts. Jacob; Du Cange. Hundred penny was a tax collected from the hundred by its lord or by the sheriff. Hundred setena signified the dwellers in the hundred. Charta Edg. Reg. Mon. Angl. tom. 1, p. 16.

HUNDRED COURT. An inferior court, whose jurisdiction extended to the whole territory embraced in a hundred. They were courts not of record; the freeholders were the judges; they were held before the steward of the manor as register; and they resembled courts baron in all respects except in their territorial jurisdiction. 3 Bl. Comm. 34, 35.

HUNDRED GEMOTE. An assembly among the Saxons of the freeholders of a hundred.

It met twelve times in the year, originally; though subsequently its meetings became less frequent.

It had an extensive jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, and was the predecessor of the county court and sheriff's tourn, and possessed very similar powers. Spelman, "Hundredum;" 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 7.

HUNDRED LAGH (Saxon). Liability to attend the hundred court. Spelman. See Cowell; Blount.

HUNDRED PENNY. In old English law. A tax collected from the hundred, by the sheriff or lord of the hundred. Spelman, voc. "Hundredus."

HUNDRED SETENA. In Saxon law. The dwellers or inhabitants of a hundred. Cowell; Blount. Spelman suggests the reading of sceatena from Saxon sceat, a tax.

HUNDREDARIUS. In old English law. A hundredary or hundredor. A name given to the chief officer of a hundred, as well as to the freeholders who composed it. Spelman, voc. "Hundredus."

HUNDREDARY (Lat. hundredarius). The chief magistrate of a hundred. Du Cange.

HUNDREDORS. The inhabitants of a hundred, who, by several statutes, are held to be liable, in the cases therein specified, to make good the loss sustained by persons within the hundred by robbery or other violence, therein also specified. The principal of these statutes are 13 Edw. I. st. 2, c. 1, § 4; 28 Edw. III. c. 11; 27 Eliz. c. 13; 29 Car. II. c. 7; 8 Geo. II. c. 16; 22 Geo. II. c. 24.

Persons serving on juries, or fit to be impanelled thereon, dwelling within the hundred where the land in question lies. 35 Hen. VIII. c. 6. And some such were necessarily on every panel till 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16. 4 Steph. Comm. 370. Him that had the jurisdiction of the hundred; the bailiff of the hundred. Horne, Mirr. Just. lib. 1; Jacob.

HUNTING. The act of pursuing and taking wild animals; the chase.

HURDLE. In English law. A species of sledge, used to draw traitors to execution.

HURTO. In Spanish law. Theft. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 20.

HUSBAND. A man who has a wife.

HUSBAND OF A SHIP. See "Ship's Husband."

HUSBRECE. Housebreaking; burglary.

HUSCARLE. In old English law. A house servant or domestic; a man of the household. Spelman.

A king's vassal, thane, or baron; an earl's man or vassal. A term of frequent occurrence in Domesday Book.

HUSGABLUM. In old records. House rent; or a tax or tribute laid upon a house. 3 Mon. Angl. 254; Cowell; Blount.

HUSTINGS. In English law. The name of a court held before the lord mayor and aldermen of London. It is the principal and supreme court of the city. See 2 Inst. 327; St. Armand, Hist. Essay, Leg. Power Eng. 75.

The place of meeting to choose a member of parliament.

The term is used in Canadian as well as English law. The manner of conducting an election in Canada and England for a member of the legislative body is substantially as follows: Upon warrant from the proper officer, a writ issues from the clerk of the crown in chancery, directed to the sheriff, registrar, or other returning officer of the electoral division. He thereupon issues and posts in public places a proclamation appointing a day, place, and hour for his holding an election, and also fixing a day when a poll will be opened, if one be demanded and granted. The first day is called "nomination day." On this day he proceeds to the hustings, which must be in the open air, and accessible to all the voters, proclaims the purpose of the election, and calls upon the electors present to name the person they require to represent them. The electors then make a show of hands, which may result in an election, or a poll may be demanded by a candidate or by any elector. On such demand, a poll is opened in each township, ward, or parish of the election district, at the places prescribed by statute.

HUTESIUM ET CLAMOR. Hue and cry (q. v.)

HYPOBOLUM (Lat.) In civil law. The name of the bequest or legacy given by the husband to his wife, at his death, above her dowry. Tech. Dict.

HYPOTHEC. In Scotch law. A right over a subject which is acquired by a creditor while the subject remains in the possession of the debtor.

HYPOTHECA. In civil law. That kind of pledge in which the possession of the thing pledged remains with the debtor; the obligation resting in mere contract. Dig. 1. 3. 7. 9. 2.

HYPOTHECARIA ACTIO. In civil law. An hypothecary action; an action for the enforcement of an hypotheca, or right of mortgage; or to obtain the surrender of the thing mortgaged. Inst. 4. 6. 7; Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 356. Adopted in the Civil Code of Louisiana, under the name of "l'action hypothecarie" (translated, "action of mortgage"). Article 3361.

HYPOTHECARII CREDITORES. In civil law. Hypothecary creditors; those who loaned money on the security of an hypotheca (q. v.) Calv. Lex.

HYPOTHECATE. To pledge a thing without delivering the possession of it to the pledgee. "The master, when abroad, and in the absence of the owner, may hypothecate the ship, freight, and cargo, to raise money requisite for the completion of the voyage." 3 Kent, Comm. 171.

HYPOTHECATION. A right which a creditor has over a thing belonging to another, and which consists in a power to cause it to be sold, in order to be paid his claim out of the proceeds.

There are two species of hypothecation, one called "pledge" (pignus), and the other properly denominated "hypothecation." Pledge is that species of hypothecation which is contracted by the delivery by the debtor to the creditor of the thing hypothecated. Hypothecation, properly so called, is that which is contracted without delivery of the thing hypothecated. 2 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 25.

In the common law, cases of hypothecation, in the strict sense of the civil law,—that is, of a pledge of a chattel without possession by the pledgee,—are scarcely to be found; cases of bottomry bonds and claims for seamen's wages against ships are the nearest approach to it; but these are liens and privileges, rather than hypothecations. Story, Bailm. § 288. It seems that chattels not in existence, though they cannot be pledged, can be hypothecated, so that the lien will attach as soon as the chattel has been produced. 14 Pick. (Mass.) 497.

(1) Conventional hypothecations are those which arise by agreement of the parties. Dig. 20. 1. 5.

(2) General hypothecations are those by which the debtor hypothecates to his creditor all his estate which he has or may have.

(3) Legal hypothecations are those which arise without any contract therefor between the parties, express or implied.

(4) Special hypothecations are hypothecations of a particular estate.

(5) Tacit hypothecations are such as the law gives in certain cases, without the consent of the parties, to secure the creditor. They are a species of legal hypothecation.

Thus, the public treasury has a lien over the property of public debtors. Code, 8. 15. 1. The landlord has a lien on the goods in the house leased, for the payment of his rent. Dig. 20. 2. 2; Code, 8. 15. 7. The builder has a lien, for his bill, on the house he has built. Dig. 20. 1. The pupil has a lien on the property of the guardian for the balance of his account. Dig. 46. 6. 22; Code, 5. 37. 20. There is hypothecation of the goods of a testator for the security of the legacy. Code, 6. 43. 1.

See, generally, Poth. de l'Hyp.; Poth. Cont. (Cushing Ed.) 145, note 26; Merlin, Repert.; 2 Brown, Civ. Law, 195; Abb. Shipp.; Pars. Mar. Law.

HYPOTHECATION BOND. A bond given in the contract of bottomry or respondentia.

HYPOTHEQUE. In French law. Hypothecation; the right acquired by the creditor over the immovable property which has been assigned to him by his debtor as security for his debt, although he be not placed in possession of it.

HYPOTHETICAL. Based upon an assumption or hypothesis, as a hypothetical question is one which calls for the opinion of the witness upon facts assumed by the question.

HYSTEROPOTMOI. In Roman law. Those who, having been thought dead, unexpectedly returned. They were not permitted to enter their own houses by the door, but through a hole in the roof.

I

I. E. An abbreviation for "id est," that is; that is to say.

I. O. U. In common law. A memorandum of debt in use among merchants. It is not a promissory note, as it contains no direct promise to pay. See 4 Car. & P. 324; 1 Man. & G. 46; 1 C. B. 543; 1 Esp. 426; Pars. Bills & Notes.

IBI SEMPER DEBET FIERI TRIATIO UBI juratores meliorem possunt habere notitiam. A trial should always be had where the jurors can be the best informed. 7 Coke, 1b.

IBIDEM (Lat.) The same; the same book or place; the same subject. Abbreviated ib. or id.

ICTUS (Lat.) In old English law. A stroke or blow from a club or stone; a bruise, contusion, or swelling produced by a blow from a club or stone, as distinguished from "plaga," a wound. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 41, § 3.

ICTUS ORBIS (Lat.) In medical jurisprudence. A maim, a bruise, or swelling; any hurt without cutting the skin.

When the skin is cut, the injury is called a "wound." Bracton, lib. 2, tr. 2, cc. 5, 24.

Ictus is often used by medical authors in the sense of percussus. It is applied to the pulsation of the arteries, to any external lesion of the body produced by violence; also to the wound inflicted by a scorpion or venomous reptile. Orbis is used in the sense of circle, circuit, rotundity. It is applied, also, to the eyeballs, oculi dicuntur orbes. Cast. Lex. Med.

ID CERTUM EST QUOD CERTUM REDdi potest. That is certain which may be rendered certain. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 929; 2 Bl. Comm. 143; 4 Kent, Comm. 462; 4 Pick. (Mass.) 179; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 556.

ID CERTUM EST QUOD CERTUM REDdi potest, sed id magis certum est quod de semetipso est certum. That is certain which can be made certain, but that is more certain which is certain of itself. 9 Coke, 47a.

ID EST (Lat.) That is. Commonly abbreviated "i. e."

ID PERFECTUM EST QUOD EX OMNIbus suis partibus constat. That is perfect which is complete in all its parts. 9 Coke, 9.

ID POSSUMUS QUOD DE JURE POSSUmus. We are able to do that which we can do lawfully. Lane, 116.

ID QUOD EST MAGIS REMOTUM, NON trahit ad se quod est magis junctum, sed e contrario in omni casu. That which is more remote does not draw to itself that which is nearer, but the contrary in every case. Co. Litt. 164.

ID QUOD NOSTRUM EST, SINE FACTO nostro, ad alium transferri non potest. What belongs to us cannot be transferred to another without our consent. Dig. 50. 17. 11. But this must be understood with this qualification, that the government may take property for public use, paying the owner its value. The title to property may also be acquired, without the consent of the owner, by a judgment of a competent tribunal.

ID SOLUM NOSTRUM QUOD DEBITIS deductis nostrum est. That only is ours which remains to us after deduction of debts. Tray. Lat. Max. 227.

IDEM (Lat. the same). According to Lord Coke, idem has two significations: Idem syllabis seu verbis, the same in syllables or words, and idem re et sensu, the same in substance and in sense. 10 Coke, 124a.

——In Old Practice. The said or aforesaid. Towns. Pl. 15, 16.

IDEM AGENS ET PATIENS ESSE NON potest. To be at once the person acting and the person acted upon is impossible. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 40.

IDEM EST FACERE, ET NOLLE PROhibere cum possis. It is the same thing to do a thing as not to prohibit it when in your power. 3 Co. Inst. 158.

IDEM EST NIHIL DICERE ET INSUFFIcienter dicere. It is the same thing to say nothing, and not to say sufficiently. 2 Inst. 178.

IDEM EST NON ESSE, ET NON APPArere. It is the same thing not to be as not to appear. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 207. Not to appear is the same thing as not to be. Broom, Leg. Max. 165.

IDEM EST NON PROBARI ET NON ESse; non deficit jus, sed probatio. What does not appear, and what is not, are the same; it is not the defect of the law, but the want of proof.

IDEM EST SCIRE AUT SCIRE DEBET aut potuisse. To be able to know is the same as to know. This maxim is applied to the duty of every one to know the law.

IDEM NON ESSE ET NON APPARET. It is the same thing not to exist and not to appear. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 207.

IDEM SEMPER ANTECEDENTI PROXImo refertur. Idem always relates to the next antecedent. Co. Litt. 385.

IDEM SONANS. Sounding the same. A term applied to names which are spelled differently, but have substantially the same sound; the difference in spelling being held in such case not to constitute a variance. Thus, "Hutson" for "Hudson" (7 Miss. 142), "Keen" for "Keene" (Thach. C. C. [Mass.] 67), and "Deadema" for "Diadema" (2 Ired. [N. C.] 346).

IDENTIFICATION. The establishment of identity (q. v.)

IDENTITAS VERA COLLIGITUR EX multitudine signorum. True identity is collected from a number of signs. Bac. Reg. 29.

IDENTITATE NOMINIS (Lat.) In English law. The name of a writ which lies for a person taken upon a capias or exigent, and committed to prison, for another man of the same name. This writ directs the sheriff to inquire whether he be the person against whom the action was brought, and if not, then to discharge him. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 267. In practice, a party in this condition would be relieved by habeas corpus.

IDENTITY. Sameness; the state of being the same as something described; the fact that a person or thing is the same as it is represented or charged to be.

IDEO (Lat.) Therefore. Calv. Lex.

IDEO CONSIDERATUM EST (Law Lat.) Therefore it is considered. The initial words of the ancient entry of judgment in an action at law, and by which that part of the record is sometimes called in modern practice.

IDES (Lat.) In civil law. A day in the month from which the computation of days was made.

The divisions of months adopted among the Romans were as follows: The calends occurred on the first day of every month, and were distinguished by adding the name of the month; as, calendis Januarii, the first of January. The nones occurred on the fifth of each month, with the exception of March, July, October, and May, in which months they occurred on the seventh. The ides occurred always on the ninth day after the nones, thus dividing the month equally. In fact, the ides would seem to have been the primal division, occurring in the middle of the month, nearly. Other days than the three designated were indicated by the number of days which would elapse before the next succeeding point of division. Thus, the second of April is the quarto nonas Aprilis; the second of March, the sexto nonas Martii; the eighth of March, octavius idus Martii; the eighth of April, sextus idus Aprilis; the sixteenth of March, decimus septimus calendis Aprilis.

This system is still used in some chanceries in Europe, and we therefore give the following:

Table of the Calends, Nones, and Ides.

	Jan., Aug., Dec., 31 days.	March, May, July, Oct., 31 days.	April, June, Sept., Nov., 30 days.	February 28, bissextile, 29 days.

IDIOCHIRA (Gr.) In civil law. An instrument privately executed, as distinguished from one publicly executed. Vicat.

IDIOCY. In medical jurisprudence. A form of insanity, resulting either from congenital defect, or some obstacle to the development of the faculties in infancy.

It is an imbecility or sterility of mind, and not a perversion of the understanding. Chit. Med. Jur. 327, note (s) 345; 1 Russ. Crimes, 6; Bac. Abr. "Idiot" (A); Brooke, Abr.; Co. Litt. 246, 247; 3 Mod. 44; 1 Vern. 16; 4 Coke, 126; 1 Bl. Comm. 302.

IDIOT. A person who has been without understanding from his nativity, and whom the law, therefore, presumes never likely to attain any. Shelf. Lun. 2.

IDIOTA INQUIRENDO, WRIT DE. This is the name of an old writ which directs the sheriff to inquire whether a man be an idiot or not. The inquisition is to be made by a jury of twelve men. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 232.

IDONEARE (Law Lat.) To make or prove one's self innocent. Spelman.

IDONEUS (Lat.) Sufficient; fit; adequate. He is said to be idoneus homo who hath these three things, honesty, knowledge, and civility; and if an officer, etc., be not idoneus, he may be discharged. 8 Coke, 41. If a clerk presented to a living is not persona idonea, which includes ability in learning, honesty of conversation, etc., the bishop may refuse him. And to a quare impedit brought thereon, "in literatura minus sufficiens is a good plea, without setting forth the particular kind of learning." 5 Coke, 58; 6 Coke, 49b; 2 Inst. 631; 3 Lev. 311; 1 Show. 88; Wood. Inst. 32, 33.

So of things: Idonea quantitas. Calv.

Lex. Idonea paries, a wall sufficient or able to bear the weight.

——In Civil Law. Rich; solvent; e. g., idoneus tutor, idoneus debitur. Calv. Lex.

IDONIETAS (Law Lat.) In old English law. Ability or fitness (of a parson). Artic. Cleri, c. 13.

IGNIS JUDICIUM (Lat.) In old English law. The judicial trial by fire.

IGNITEGIUM (from ignis, fire, and tegere, to cover). In old English law. The curfew, or evening bell. Cowell. See "Curfew."

IGNOMINY. Public disgrace; infamy; reproach; dishonor. Ignominy is the opposite of esteem.

IGNORAMUS (Lat. we are ignorant or uninformed). In practice. The word which is written on a bill by a grand jury when they find that there is not sufficient evidence to authorize their finding it a true bill. Sometimes, instead of using this word, the grand jury indorse on the bill, "Not found." 4 Bl. Comm. 305.

IGNORANCE. The lack of knowledge.

Ignorance is distinguishable from "error" or "mistake." Ignorance is want of knowledge; error is the nonconformity or opposition of ideas to the truth. Considered as a motive of actions, ignorance differs but little from error. They are generally found together, and what is said of one is said of both. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 108 et seq. See 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 567.

(1) Ignorance of fact is the want of knowledge as to the fact in question. It would be an error resulting from ignorance of fact, if a man believed a certain woman to be unmarried and free, when, in fact, she was a married woman, and were he to marry her under that belief, he would not be criminally responsible. 6 Allen (Mass.) 591. Ignorance of the laws of a foreign government, or of another state, is ignorance of fact. 9 Pick. (Mass.) 112. See, for the difference between ignorance of law and ignorance of fact, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 112.

(2) Ignorance of law consists in the want of knowledge of those laws which it is our duty to understand, and which every man is presumed to know. The law forbids any one to marry a woman whose husband is living. If any man, then, imagined he could marry such a woman, he would be ignorant of the law, and if he married her he would commit an error as to a matter of law. How far a party is bound to fulfill a promise to pay, upon a supposed liability, and in ignorance of the law, see 12 East, 38; 2 Jac. & W. 263; 5 Taunt. 143; 3 Barn. & C. 280; 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 512, 516; 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 166; 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 674; 4 Mass. 342; 7 Mass. 452, 488; 9 Pick. (Mass.) 112; 1 Bin. (Pa.) 27. Ignorance of law is a passive state, and is distinguished from actual mistake of law. 7 Ga. 70.

(3) Essential ignorance is ignorance in relation to some essential circumstance, so intimately connected with the matter in question, and which so influences the parties, that it induces them to act in the business. 2 Kent, Comm. 367.

(4) Nonessential or accidental ignorance is that which has not of itself any necessary connection with the business in question, and which is not the true consideration for entering into the contract; as, if a man should marry a woman whom he believed to be rich, and she proved to be poor, this fact would not be essential, and the marriage would therefore be good.

(5) Voluntary ignorance exists when a party might, by taking reasonable pains, have acquired the necessary knowledge. For example, every man might acquire a knowledge of the laws which have been promulgated. A neglect to become acquainted with them is therefore voluntary ignorance. Doctor & Stud. 1, 46; Plowd. 343.

(6) Involuntary ignorance is that which does not proceed from choice, and which could not have been avoided by any means at the party's command, as of a law not yet promulgated.

IGNORANCE OF LAW. See "Ignorance."

IGNORANTIA. Ignorance; want of knowledge. Distinguished from mistake, error, or wrong conception. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 165. Divided in the civil law into ignorantia facti, ignorance of fact, and ignorantia juris, ignorance of law. Dig. 22. 6. Lord Coke adopts this division, adding that the former is twofold,—lectionis et linguae, ignorance of reading, and ignorance of language. 2 Coke, 3b.

IGNORANTIA EORUM QUAE QUIS SCIRE tenetur non excusat. Ignorance of those things which every one is bound to know excuses not. Hale, P. C. 42. See Tindal, C. J., 10 Clark & F. 210; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 245; 4 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 27.

IGNORANTIA EXCUSATUR, NON JURIS sed facti. Ignorance of fact may excuse, but not ignorance of law. See "Ignorance."

IGNORANTIA FACTI EXCUSAT; IGNORantia juris non excusat. Ignorance of facts excuses; ignorance of law does not excuse. 1 Coke, 177; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3828; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 231; 1 Fonbl. Eq. (5th Ed.) 119, note. See "Ignorance."

IGNORANTIA JUDICIS EST CALAMITAS innocentis. The ignorance of the judge is the misfortune of the innocent. 2 Inst. 591.

IGNORANTIA JURIS NON EXCUSAT. Ignorance of the law is no excuse. 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 267, 284; 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 586, 588; 6 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 189, 195; 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 467, 472.

IGNORANTIA JURIS QUOD QUISQUE scire tenetur, neminem excusat. Ignorance of law which every one is bound to know excuses no one. 2 Coke, 3b; 1 Plowd. 343; per Ld. Campbell, 9 Clark & F. 324; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 232; 7 Car. & P. 456; 2 Kent, Comm. 491.

IGNORANTIA LEGIS NEMINEM EXCUsat. Ignorance of law excuses no one. See "Ignorance;" 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3828; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 111.

IGNORATIS TERMINIS, IGNORATUR ET ars. Terms being unknown, the art also is unknown. Co. Litt. 2.

IGNORE. To be ignorant of. Webster. To pass over as if not in existence. A grand jury are said to ignore a bill when they do not find the evidence such as to induce them to make a presentment. Brande.

IGNOSCITUR EI QUI SANGUINEM SUum qualiter redemptum voluit. The law holds him excused who chose that his blood should be redeemed on any terms. Dig. 48. 21. 1; 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 131.

IKENILD STREET. One of the four Roman roads in England.

ILL FAME. A technical expression, which not only means bad character as generally understood, but applies to every person, whatever may be his conduct and character in life, who visits bawdy houses, gaming houses, and other places which are of ill fame. 1 Rogers, City Hall Rec. (N. Y.) 67; 2 Hill (N. Y.) 558; 17 Pick. (Mass.) 80; Ayliffe, Par. 276; 1 Hagg. Ecc. 720, 767; 1 Hagg. Consist. 302; 2 Hagg. Consist. 24; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 44. See "House of Ill Fame."

ILLATA ET INVECTA. In Roman law. Things brought into the house by the tenant for his use, and which were liable to distress (jus hypothecae) by the landlord.

ILLEGAL. Contrary to law; unlawful.

ILLEGALITY. Signifies that which is contrary to the principles of law, and denotes a complete defect in the proceedings. 1 Abb. Pr. (N. S.; N. Y.) 432.

ILLEGITIMATE. That which is contrary to law. It is usually applied to children born out of lawful wedlock.

ILLEVIABLE. A debt or duty that cannot or ought not to be levied. Nihil set upon a debt is a mark for illeviable.

ILLICENCIATUS (Lat.) Without license.

ILLICIT. What is unlawful; what is forbidden by the law.

This word is frequently used in policies of insurance, where the assured warrants against illicit trade. By "illicit trade" is understood that "which is made unlawful by the laws of the country to which the object is bound." The assured, having entered into this warranty, is required to do no act which will expose the vessel to be legally condemned. 2 La. 337, 338. See "Insurance;" "Warranty."

ILLICITE. Unlawfully.

This word has a technical meaning, and is requisite in an indictment where the act charged is unlawful; as, in the case of a riot. 2 Hawk. P. C. 25, § 96.

ILLICITUM COLLEGIUM. An illegal corporation.

ILLITERATE. Unacquainted with letters.

ILLOCABLE. Incapable of being hired out.

ILLUD (Lat.) That.

ILLUD QUOD ALIAS LICITUM NON EST, necessitas facit licitum, et necessitas inducit privilegium quod jure privatur. That which is not otherwise lawful necessity makes lawful, and necessity makes a privilege which supersedes the law. 10 Coke, 61.

ILLUD QUOD ALTERI UNITUR EXTINguitur, neque amplius per se vacare licet. That which is united to another is extinguished, nor can it be any more independent.

ILLUSION. A species of mania, in which the sensibility of the nervous system is altered, excited, weakened, or perverted.

The patient is deceived by the false appearance of things, and his reason is not sufficiently active and powerful to correct the error; and this last particular is what distinguishes the sane from the insane. Illusions are not unfrequent in a state of health, but reason corrects the errors, and dissipates them. A square tower, seen from a distance, may appear round, but, on approaching it, the error is corrected. A distant mountain may be taken for a cloud, but as we approach we discover the truth. To a person in the cabin of a vessel under sail, the shore appears to move; but reflection and a closer examination soon destroy this illusion. An insane individual is mistaken on the qualities, connections, and causes of the impressions he actually receives, and he forms wrong judgments as to his internal and external sensations; and his reason does not correct the error. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 538; Esquirol, tom. 1, p. 202; Dict. des Sciences Medicales, "Hallucination." See "Hallucination."

ILLUSORY APPOINTMENT. Such an appointment or disposition of property under a power as is merely nominal, and not substantial.

ILLUSORY APPOINTMENT ACT. St. Wm. IV. c. 46, providing that no appointment shall be impeached in equity on the ground that it is unsubstantial, illusory, or nominal.

IMAGINE. In English law. In cases of treason, the law makes it a crime to imagine the death of the king. In order to complete the offense, there must, however, be an overt act,—the terms "compassing" and "imagining" being synonymous. It has been justly remarked that the words "to compass" and "imagine" are too vague for a statute whose penalty affects the life of a subject. Barr. Obs. St. 243. See "Fiction."

IMBASING. The act of reducing coin below the standard alloy. See 1 Hale, P. C. 102.

IMBECILITY. In medical jurisprudence. A form of insanity consisting in mental deficiency, either congenital, or resulting from an obstacle to the development of the faculties, supervening in infancy.

IMBEZZLE. Occasionally used for "embezzle."

IMBRACERY. See "Embracery."

IMMATERIAL. Not material; not essential or important.

IMMATERIAL AVERMENT. In pleading. A statement of unnecessary particulars in connection with, and as descriptive of, what is material. Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 186. Such averments must, however, be proved as laid, it is said (Doug. 665), though not if they may be struck out without striking out at the same time the cause of action, and when there is no variance. Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 188. See 1 Chit. Pl. 282.

IMMATERIAL ISSUE. In pleading. An issue taken upon some collateral matter, the decision of which will not settle the question in dispute between the parties in action. For example, if in an action of debt on bond, conditioned for the payment of ten dollars and fifty cents at a certain day, the defendant pleads the payment of ten dollars according to the form of the condition, and the plaintiff, instead of demurring, tenders issue upon the payment, it is manifest that, whether this issue be found for the plaintiff or the defendant, it will remain equally uncertain whether the plaintiff is entitled to maintain his action, or not; for in an action for the penalty of a bond, conditioned to pay a certain sum, the only material question is whether the exact sum were paid or not, and the question of payment of a part is a question quite beside the legal merits. Hob. 113; 5 Taunt. 386; Cro. Jac. 585; 2 Wm. Saund. 319b. A repleader will be ordered when an immaterial issue is reached, either before or after verdict. 2 Wm. Saund. 319b, note; 1 Rolle, Abr. 86; Cro. Jac. 585. See "Repleader."

IMMEDIATE. At once. "Though in strictness it excludes all mean times, it shall be construed such convenient time as is reasonably requisite for doing the thing." 2 Lev. 77.

It is stronger than the phrase "within a reasonable time," and implies prompt, vigorous action, without any delay. L. R. 4 Q. B. 469.

Not separated; without anything intervening.

IMMEDIATE DESCENT. "A descent may be said to be mediate or immediate in regard to the mediate or immediate descent of the estate or right; or it may be said to be mediate or immediate in regard to the mediateness or immediateness of the pedigree or degrees of consanguinity." 6 Pet. (U. S.) 112.

IMMEMORIAL. Time out of mind.

IMMEMORIAL POSSESSION. In Louisiana. Possession of which no man living has seen the beginning, and the existence of which he has learned from his elders. Civ. Code La. art. 762; 2 Mart. (La.) 214; 7 La. 46; 3 Toullier, Dr. Civ. p. 410; Poth. Cont. note 244; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3069, note.

IMMEMORIAL USAGE. A usage which has existed from time immemorial.

IMMEUBLES. In French law. Immovables.

IMMIGRATION. The removing into one place from another. It differs from "emigration," which is the moving from one place into another.

IMMOBILIA SITUM SEQUUNTUR. Immovables follow the law of their locality. 2 Kent, Comm. 67.

IMMOBILIS (Lat.) Immovable. Immobilia, or res immobiles, immovable things, such as lands and buildings. Mackeld. Civ. Law, p. 152, § 147; 2 Kent, Comm. 347.

IMMORAL. That which tends to subvert morality or decency. Contracts, etc., tending to sexual immorality furnish the most common examples, but a contract in derogation of religion was held "immoral" in England (L. R. 2 Exch. 230), as was a contract involving the removal of several thousand bodies from a burying ground (1 Cab. & El. 577).

IMMORAL CONSIDERATION. One contrary to good morals, and therefore invalid. For example, an agreement in consideration of future illicit cohabitation between the parties (3 Burrows, 1568; 1 Esp. 13; 1 Bos. & P. 340, 341), an agreement for the value of libellous and immoral pictures (4 Esp. 97), or for printing a libel (2 Starkie, 107), or for an immoral wager (Chit. Cont. 156), cannot, therefore, be enforced. For whatever arises from an immoral or illegal consideration is void, quid turpi ex causa promissum est non valet. Inst. 3. 20. 24.

IMMORALITY. That which is contra bonos mores.

In England, it is not punishable, in some cases, at the common law, on account of the ecclesiastical jurisdictions, e. g., adultery. But except in cases belonging to the ecclesiastical courts, the court of king's bench is the custos morum, and may punish delicto contra bonos mores. 3 Burrows, 1438; 1 W. Bl. 94; 2 Strange, 788.

IMMOVABLES. In civil law. Property which, from its nature, destination, or the object to which it is applied, cannot move itself or be removed. Poth. des Choses, § 1.

IMMUNITY. An exemption from serving in an office, or performing duties which the law generally requires other citizens to perform. See Dig. lib. 50, tit. 6; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 821; 4 Har. & McH. (Md.) 341.

IMPANEL.

——In Old English Practice. To write the names of jurors on a panel, which is an oblong piece of parchment attached to the venire. This is done by the sheriff, or other officer lawfully authorized.

——In American Practice. The word is used of a jury drawn for trial of a particular cause by the clerk, as well as of the general list of jurors returned by the sheriff. Graham, Prac. 275. See 1 Archb. Prac. 365; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 354.

IMPANELLING. Has nothing to do with drawing, selecting, or swearing jurors, but means simply making the list of those who have been selected. 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 441.

IMPARCARE (Law Lat. from in and parcus, a pound or inclosed place). In old English law. To impound. Reg. Orig. 92b.

To shut up, or confine in prison. Inducti sunt in carcerem et imparcati, they were carried to prison and shut up. Bracton, fol. 124.

IMPARGAMENTUM. The right to impound cattle.

IMPARL. To have delay. Literally, to "speak with" (the plaintiff). The original object of an imparlance was to obtain time for an amicable adjustment. 3 Bl. Comm. 299. But the actual object has long been merely to obtain time to plead. 3 Chit. Prac. 700.

IMPARLANCE (from Fr. parler, to speak). In pleading and practice. Time given by the court to either party to answer the pleading of his opponent; as, either to plead, reply, rejoin, etc.

It is said to be nothing else but the continuance of the cause till a further day. Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (C). In this sense, imparlances are no longer allowed in English practice. 3 Chit. Prac. 700.

Time to plead. This is the common signification of the word. 2 Wm. Saund. 1, note 2; 2 Show. 310; Barnes, 346; Lawes, Civ. Pl. 93. In this sense, imparlances are not recognized in American law, the common practice being for the defendant to enter an appearance, when the cause stands continued, until a fixed time has elapsed within which he may file his plea. See "Continuance."

——General Imparlance. The entry of a general prayer and allowance of time to plead till the next term, without reserving to the defendant the benefit of any exception, so that after such an imparlance the defendant cannot object to the jurisdiction of the court, or plead any matter in abatement. This kind of imparlance is always from one term to another.

——General Special Imparlance. Contains a saving of all exceptions whatsoever, so that the defendant after this may plead not only in abatement, but he may also plead a plea which affects the jurisdiction of the court, as privilege. He cannot, however, plead a tender, and that he was always ready to pay, because by craving time he admits that he is not ready, and so falsifies his plea. Tidd, Prac. 418, 419.

——Special Imparlance. Reserves to the defendant all exception to the writ, bill, or count; and therefore after it the defendant may plead in abatement, though not to the jurisdiction of the court.

See Comyn, Dig. "Abatement" (I 19, 20, 21), "Pleader" (D); 1 Chit. Pl. 420; 1 Sellon, Prac. 265; Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (C).

IMPARSONEE. One in possession of a benefice.

IMPATRONIZATION. The act of a patron in putting one into possession of a benefice.

IMPEACH. To accuse; to question the sufficiency or genuineness of.

To proceed by impeachment (q. v.)

——In the Law of Evidence. To call in question the veracity of a witness, by means of evidence adduced for that purpose.

IMPEACHMENT.

——In English Law. The prosecution of a peer or commoner by the house of commons at the bar of the house of lords for treason, high crimes, or misdemeanors. 6 Enc. Laws Eng. 318.

——In American Law. A proceeding against a public civil officer, ordinarily prosecuted by the more numerous body of the legislature at the bar of the other, for the removal of such officer from office.

——In Practice. An attack on the testimony of a witness by showing his lack of veracity. It is to be distinguished from contradiction, which is an attack on testimony by showing that the facts at issue are other than as testified to.

IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE. A restraint from committing waste upon lands or tenements; or a demand of compensation for waste done by a tenant who has but a particular estate in the land granted, and therefore no right to commit waste.

All tenants for life or any less estate are liable to be impeached for waste, unless they hold without impeachment of waste; in the latter case they may commit waste without being questioned, or any demand for compensation for the waste done. 11 Coke, 82.

IMPECHIARE, or IMPESCARE (Law Lat.) To impeach or accuse. Cowell.

IMPEDIENS (Law Lat.) In old practice. One who hinders; an impedient. The defendant or deforciant in a fine was sometimes so called. Cowell; Blount.

IMPEDIMENTO. In Spanish law. A prohibition to contract marriage, established by law between certain persons.

The disabilities arising from this cause are twofold, viz.:

(1) Impedimento dirimente,—such disabilities as render the marriage null, although contracted with the usual legal solemnities.

Among these impediments, some are absolute, others relative. The former cannot be cured, and render the marriage radically null; others may be removed by previous dispensation.

(2) Impedimento, impediente, or prohibitivo,—such disabilities as impede the contracting of a marriage, but do not annul it when contracted.

For the effects of these impediments, see Escriche, Dict. Raz. "Impedimente Prohibitivo."

IMPEDIMENTS. Legal hindrances to making contracts. Some of these impediments are minority, want of reason, coverture, and the like. See "Contract;" "Incapacity."

——In Civil Law. Bars to marriage.

(1) Absolute impediments are those which prevent the person subject to them from marrying at all, without either the nullity of marriage or its being punishable.

(2) Dirimant impediments are those which render a marriage void; as, where one of the contracting parties is already married to another person.

(3) Prohibitive impediments are those which do not render the marriage null, but subject the parties to a punishment.

(4) Relative impediments are those which regard only certain persons with regard to each other; as, the marriage of a brother to a sister.

IMPEDITOR (Law Lat.) In old English law. A disturber in the action of quare impedit. St. Marlb. c. 12.

IMPENSAE (Lat.) In civil law. Expense; outlay. Divided into necessariae, for necessity, utiles, for use, and voluptuariae, for luxury. Dig. 79. 6. 14; Vocat.

IMPERATIVE. See "Mandatory."

IMPERATOR. Emperor. This was the title of the Roman emperor and of the English kings before the Conquest. 1 Bl. Comm. 242.

IMPERFECT OBLIGATIONS. Those which are not, in view of the law, of binding force.

IMPERFECT TRUST. A trust which has not been executed. See "Trust."

IMPERII MAJESTAS EST TUTELAE SAlus. The majesty of the empire is the safety of its protection. Co. Litt. 64.

IMPERIUM. The right to command, which includes the right to employ the force of the state to enforce the laws. This is one of the principal attributes of the power of the executive. 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 58.

IMPERITIA. Unskillfulness.

IMPERITIA CULPAE AENUMERATUR. Ignorance or want of skill is considered a fault, i. e., a negligence, for which one who professes skill is responsible. Dig. 50. 17. 132; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1004; 2 Kent, Comm. 588; 4 Ark. 523.

IMPERITIA EST MAXIMA MECHANEorum poena. Lack of skill is the greatest punishment of artisans. 11 Coke, 54a.

IMPERSONALITAS NON CONCLUDIT nec ligat. Impersonality neither concludes nor binds. Co. Litt. 352.

IMPERTINENT (Lat. in, not, pertinens, pertaining or relating to).

——In Equity Pleading. A term applied to matters introduced into a bill, answer, or other proceeding in a suit which are not properly before the court for decision at that particular stage of the suit. 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 506; 3 Story (U. S.) 13; 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 555; 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 439. Impertinent matter is not necessarily scandalous; but all scandalous matter is impertinent.

——In Pleading at Law. A term applied to matters not necessary to constitute the cause of action or ground of defense. Cowp. 683; 5 East, 275; 2 Mass. 283. It constitutes surplusage (q. v.) ——In Practice. A term applied to evidence of facts which do not belong to the matter in question. That which is immaterial is, in general, impertinent, and that which is material is not, in general, impertinent. 1 McClel. & Y. 337. Impertinent matter in the interrogatories to witnesses or their answers, in equity, will be expunged after reference to a master at the cost of the offending party. 2 Younge & C. 445.

IMPESCARE. See "Impechiare."

IMPETITIO VASTI. Impeachment of waste (q. v.)

IMPETRARE (Lat.) In old English practice. To obtain by request, as a writ or privilege. Bracton, fols. 57, 172b. This application of the word seems to be derived from the civil law. Calv. Lex.

IMPETRATION. The obtaining anything by prayer or petition. In the ancient English statutes, it signifies a preobtaining of church benefices in England from the church of Rome, which belonged to the gift of the king or other lay patrons.

IMPIER. Umpire.

IMPIERMENT (Law Fr.) Impairing or prejudicing. St. 23 Hen. VIII. c. 9. Blount; Kelham.

IMPIGNORATA (Law Lat.) Pledged; given in pledge (pignori data); mortgaged. A term applied in Bracton to land. Bracton, fol. 20.

IMPIUS ET CRUDELIS JUDICANDUS est qui libertati non favet. He is to be judged impious and cruel who does not favor liberty. Co. Litt. 124.

IMPLACITARE (Law Lat. from in, into, and placitum, a plea or suit). In old English law and practice. To subject to an action, or placitum; to implead or sue.

IMPLACITATUS (Law Lat.) Impleaded; sued.

IMPLEAD. In practice. To sue or prosecute by due course of law. 9 Watts (Pa.) 47.

IMPLEADED (Lat. implacitatus). Sued or prosecuted. Still used in practice, particularly in the titles of causes where there are several defendants.

IMPLEMENTS (Lat. impleo, to fill). Such things as are used or employed for a trade, or furniture of a house. 11 Metc. (Mass.) 82.

Whatever may supply wants. Particularly applied to tools, utensils, vessels, instruments of labor; as, the implements of trade or of husbandry. Webster. Things of necessary use in any trade or mystery, without which the work cannot be performed. Also, the furniture of a house, as all household goods and implements, such as tables, presses, cupboards, etc. Termes de la Ley; Jacob; Tomlins; Williams.

The term does not apply to animals. 5 Ark. 41; 11 Metc. (Mass.) 79.

IMPLICATA (Lat.) Small adventures for which the freight contracted for is to be received, although the cargo may be lost. Targa, c. 34; Emerig. Mar. Loans, § 5.

IMPLICATION. An inference of something not directly declared, but arising from what is admitted or expressed. See terms defined under "Implied."

IMPLIED. Arising by intendment or inference, rather than by actual expression in words.

IMPLIED ABROGATION. See "Abrogation."

IMPLIED ASSUMPSIT. See "Assumpsit."

IMPLIED CONDITION. See "Condition."

IMPLIED CONSIDERATION. See "Consideration."

IMPLIED CONTRACT. See "Contract."

IMPLIED COVENANT. See "Covenant."

IMPLIED MALICE. Malice presumed or implied by law from the acts of a party and the circumstances of a case; malice inferred from any deliberate, cruel act committed by one person against another, however sudden. Whart. Hom. 38.

IMPLIED TRUST. See "Trust."

IMPLIED USE. See "Resulting Use."

IMPLIED WARRANTY. See "Warranty."

IMPORTATION. In common law. The act of bringing goods and merchandise into a country from a foreign country. 5 Cranch (U. S.) 368; 9 Cranch (U. S.) 104, 120; 2 Man. & G. 155, note (a).

IMPORTS. Goods or other property imported or brought into a country from foreign territory. Story, Const. § 949. See Const. U. S. art. 1, § 10; 7 How. (U. S.) 477.

IMPORTUNITY. Urgent solicitation, with troublesome frequency and pertinacity. Generally applied to solicitation of a testator. Dane, Abr. c. 127, a. 14, s. 5, 6, 7; 2 Phillim. Ecc. 551, 552.

IMPOSITIONS. Imposts, taxes, or contributions.

IMPOSSIBILITY. That which, in the constitution and course of nature or the law, no man can do or perform.

Impossibility is of the following several sorts:

An act is physically impossible when it is contrary to the course of nature. Such an impossibility may be either absolute, i. e., impossible in any case (e. g., for A. to reach the moon), or relative (sometimes called "impossibility in fact"), i. e., arising from the circumstances of the case (e. g., for A. to make a payment to B., he being a deceased person). To the latter class belongs what is sometimes called "practical impossibility," which exists when the act can be done, but only at an excessive or unreasonable cost. An act is legally or juridically impossible when a rule of law makes it impossible to do it; e. g., for A. to make a valid will before his majority. This class of acts must not be confounded with those which are possible, although forbidden by law, as to commit a theft. An act is logically impossible when it is contrary to the nature of the transaction, as where A. gives property to B. expressly for his own benefit, on condition that he transfers it to C. Rapalje & L.

IMPOSSIBILIUM NULLA OBLIGATIO est. There is no obligation to perform impossible things. Dig. 50. 18. 185; 1 Poth. Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, sec. 4, § 3; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. (6th Ed.) 763; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 228.

IMPOSSIBLE CONTRACTS. Such contracts as cannot be performed, either because of the nature of the obligation undertaken, or because of some supervening event which renders the performance of the obligation either physically or legally impossible. 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 176.

IMPOSTS. Taxes, duties, or impositions. A duty on imported goods or merchandise. Federalist, No. 30; Elliott, Deb. 289; Story, Const. § 949.

IMPOTENCE. In medical jurisprudence. The incapacity for copulation or propagating the species. It has also been used as synonymous with "sterility."

The principal use of the term is as a ground of divorce, and as so used it signifies "the irremediable physical incapacity of one of the parties to a marriage for any reasonable sexual connection with the other." 1 Bish. Mar. & Div. § 766.

To avoid impotence, there must be capacity for "copula vera," copulation in its natural and ordinary meaning, and not merely of incipient and imperfect coition. 33 Md. 405.

IMPOTENS (Lat.) Unable; impotent; without power or ability. Impotens sui, having no power of himself, unable to help himself. Bracton, fol. 15; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 7, § 1.

IMPOTENTIA (Lat.) Inability; impossibility.

IMPOTENTIA EXCUSAT LEGEM. Impossibility is an excuse in the law. Co. Litt. 29; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 223.

IMPOTENTIAM. Impotence; impossibility.

IMPOTENTIAM, PROPERTY PROPTER. See "Property Propter Impotentiam."

IMPOUND. To place in a pound goods or cattle distrained or estray. 3 Bl. Comm. 12.

IMPRESCRIPTIBILITY. The state of being incapable of prescription.

A property which is held in trust is imprescriptible, that is, the trustee cannot acquire a title to it by prescription; nor can the borrower of a thing get a right to it by any lapse of time, unless he claims an adverse right to it during the time required by law.

IMPRESCRIPTIBLE RIGHTS. Rights to which no claim can be acquired by prescription.

IMPRESSMENT. A power possessed by the English crown of taking persons or property to aid in the defense of the country, with or without the consent of the persons concerned. It is usually exercised to obtain hands for the queen's ships in time of war, by taking seamen engaged in merchant vessels (1 Bl. Comm. 420; Maude & P. Shipp. 123), but in former times impressment of merchant ships was also practiced. The admiralty issues protections against impressment in certain cases, either under statutes passed in favor of certain callings (e. g., persons employed in the Greenland fisheries), or voluntarily. Rapalje & L.

IMPRIMATUR (Lat.) A license or allowance to one to print.

At one time, before a book could be printed in England, it was requisite that a permission should be obtained. That permission was called an imprimatur. In some countries where the press is liable to censure, an imprimatur is required.

IMPRIMERY. In some of the ancient English statutes, this word is used to signify a printing office, the art of printing, a print or impression.

IMPRIMIS (Lat. in the first place). It is commonly used to denote the first clause in an instrument, especially in wills, item being used to denote the subsequent clauses. This is also its classical and literal meaning. Ainsworth. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54. Imprimitus and imprimum also occur. Du Cange, Prec. Ch. 430; Cas. temp. Talb. 110; 6 Madd. 31; Magna Cart. 9 Hen. III.; 2 Anc. Inst. Eng. 506.

IMPRISONMENT. The restraint of a man's liberty. 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 669.

The restraint of a person contrary to his will. 2 Inst. 589; 1 Baldw. (U. S.) 239, 600.

Actual confinement is not essential, a forcible detention on the street being essential. 3 Bl. Comm. 127. Nor is actual manual violence. 100 Mass. 79.

IMPRISTI. Followers or adherents.

IMPROBATION. In Scotch law. An act by which falsehood and forgery are proved. Ersk. Inst. 4. 119; Stair, Inst. 4. 20; Bell, Dict.

IMPROPER FEUDS. Derivative feuds, such, for instance, as those that were originally bartered and sold to the feudatory for a price, or were held upon base or less honorable services, or upon a rent in lieu of military service, or were themselves alienable, without mutual license, or descended indifferently to males or females, or otherwise varied from the rules ordinarily pertaining to feudal tenure. Wharton.

IMPROPRIATE RECTOR. A lay rector.

IMPROPRIATE TITHES. Tithes in the hands of a lay owner.

IMPROPRIATION. In ecclesiastical law. The act of employing the revenues of a church living to one's own use. It is also a parsonage or ecclesiastical living in the hands of a layman, or which descends by inheritance. Tech. Dict.

IMPROVE. To impeach as false or forged; to cultivate. 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 190.

——In Scotch Law. To improve a lease means to grant a lease of unusual duration to encourage a tenant, when the soil is exhausted, etc. Bell, Dict.; Stair, Inst. p. 676, § 23.

IMPROVEMENT. An amelioration in the condition of real or personal property effected by the expenditure of labor or money for the purpose of rendering it useful for other purposes than those for which it was originally used, or more useful for the same purposes.

——In Patent Law. An addition of some useful thing to a machine, manufacture, or composition of matter.

The patent law of July 4, 1836, authorizes the granting of a patent for any new and useful improvement on any art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter. Section 6. It is often very difficult to say what is a new and useful improvement, the cases often approaching very near to each other. In the present improved state of machinery it is almost impracticable not to employ the same elements of motion, and, in some particulars, the same manner of operation, to produce any new effect. 1 Gall. (U. S.) 478; 2 Gall. (U. S.) 51. See 4 Barn. & Ald. 540; 2 Kent, Comm. 370.

IMPRUIARE (Law Lat.) In old records. To improve land. Impruiamentum, the improvement so made of it. Chart. Abbat. MS. fol. 50a; Cowell.

IMPUBER (Lat.) In civil law. One who is more than seven years old, or out of infancy, and who has not attained the age of puberty; that is, if a boy, till he has attained his full age of fourteen years, and, if a girl, her full age of twelve years. Domat, Liv. Prel. tit. 2, § 2, note 8.

IMPUNITAS CONTINUUM AFFECTUM tribuit delinquenti. Impunity offers a continual bait to a delinquent. 4 Coke, 45.

IMPUNITAS SEMPER AD DETERIORA invitat. Impunity always invites to greater crimes. 5 Coke, 109.

IMPUTATIO (Lat.) In civil law. Legal liability.

IMPUTATION OF PAYMENT. In civil law. The application of a payment made by a debtor to his creditor.

The debtor may apply his payment as he pleases, with the exception that in case of a debt carrying interest it must be first applied to discharging the interest.

The creditor may apply the funds by informing the debtor at the time of payment.

The law imputes in the neglect of the parties to do so, and in favor of the debtor. It directs that imputation which would have been best for the debtor at the time of payment. Hence it applies the funds to obligations most burdensome to the debtor; e. g., to a mortgage rather than to a book account, and to a debt which would render the debtor insolvent if unpaid, rather than to any less important one. If nothing else appears to control it, the rule of priority prevails.

In Louisiana the preceding civil law rules are in force. The statutory enactment (Civ. Code, art. 2159 et seq.) is a translation of the Code Napoleon (articles 1253-1256), slightly altered. See Poth. Obl. note 528, Translation by Evans, and the notes. Payment is imputed first to the discharge of interest. 1 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 571; 10 Rob. (La.) 51; 5 La. Ann. 738. But if the interest was not binding, being usurious, the payment must go to the principal.

IMPUTED NEGLIGENCE. Negligence of another than the injured person contributing to the injury, and imputed to him by law. As a general rule, contributory negligence will be imputed to another than the negligent person, so as to bar an action by such other for injuries received by him (1) if the negligent person was under the direction and control of the injured person (38 Me. 443), or (2) where the injured person is not sui juris, and the negligent person is responsible for him as parent or guardian. 75 Pa. St. 257.

IN (Law Fr. eins). A term used, from a very early period, to express the nature of a title, or the mode of acquiring an estate, or the ground upon which a seisin is founded. Thus, in Littleton, a tenant is said to be "in by lease of his lessor" (eins per lease son lessor), that is, his title or estate is derived from the lease. Litt. § 82. So, parceners are said to be "in by divers descents." Id. § 313. So, the issue of a husband is said to be "in by descent" (eins per discent). Id. § 403. So, two sisters are said to be "in by divers titles." Id. § 662. So, in modern law, parties are constantly said in the books to be "in by descent," "in by purchase." A dowress is said to be "in, of the seisin of her husband." 4 Kent, Comm. 69. A devisor is said to be "in, of his old estate." 1 Powell, Devises (by Jarman) 621, note. So, a lessor. Shaw, C. J., 1 Metc. (Mass.) 120. "If he has a freehold, he is in as freeholder. If he has a chattel interest, he is in as a termor. If he has no title, he is in as a trespasser." Lord Mansfield, 1 Burrows, 114.

IN ACTION. A thing is said to be in action when it is not in possession, and for its recovery, the possessor unwilling, an action is necessary. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 396. See "Chose."

IN ADVERSUM (Law Lat.) Against an adverse, unwilling, or resisting party. "A decree not by consent, but in adversum." 3 Story (U. S.) 318.

IN AEDIFICIIS LAPIS MALE POSITUS non est removendus. In buildings, a stone badly placed is not to be removed. 11 Coke, 69.

IN AEQUA (or AEQUALI) MANU (Law Lat.; Law Fr. en owele mayn). In equal hand; held equally or indifferently between two parties. Where an instrument was deposited by the parties to it in the hands of a third person, to keep on certain conditions, it was said to be held in aequali manu. Reg. Orig. 28.

IN AEQUALI JURE (Lat.) In equal right.

IN AEQUALI JURE MELIOR EST CONditio possidentis. When the parties have equal rights, the condition of the possessor is the better. Mitf. Eq. Pl. 215; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 285; 1 Madd. Ch. Prac. 170; Dig. 50. 17. 128; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 634; Plowd. 296.

IN ALIENO SOLO (Lat.) In another's land. 2 Steph. Comm. 20.

IN ALIO LOCO. See "Cepit in Alio Loco."

IN ALTA PRODITIONE NULLUS POtest esse accessorius sed principalis solummodo. In high treason, no one can be an accessary, but only principal. 3 Inst. 138.

IN ALTERNATIVIS ELECTIO EST DEbitoris. In alternatives, the debtor has the election.

IN AMBIGUA VOCE LEGIS EA POTIUS accipienda est significatio, quae vitio caret; praesertim cum etiam voluntas legis ex hoc colligi possit. When obscurities, ambiguities, or faults of expression render the meaning of an enactment doubtful, that interpretation shall be preferred which is most consonant to equity, especially where it is in conformity with the general design of the legislature. Dig. 1. 3. 19; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 513; Bac. Max. reg. 3; 2 Inst. 173.

IN AMBIGUIS CASIBUS SEMPER PRAESUMITUR PRO REGE. In doubtful cases, the presumption is always in favor of the king.

IN AMBIGUIS ORATIONIBUS MAXIME SENTENTIA SPECTANDA EST EJUS QUI EAS PROTULISSET. When there are ambiguous expressions, the intention of him who uses them is especially to be regarded. This maxim of Roman law was confined to wills. Dig. 50. 17. 96; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 506.

IN ANGLIA NON EST INTERREGNUM. In England there is no interregnum. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 205; Broom, Leg. Max. 50.

IN APERTA LUCE (Law Lat.) In open daylight; in the daytime. 9 Coke, 65b.

IN APICIBUS JURIS. Among the subtleties or extreme doctrines of the law. 1 Kames, Eq. 190. See "Apex Juris."

IN ARBITRIUM JUDICIS. In the discretion of the court.

IN ARCTA ET SALVA CUSTODIA (Law Lat.) In close and safe custody. 3 Bl. Comm. 415.

IN ARTICULO MORTIS. In the article of death; at the point of death. 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 159.

IN ATROCIORIBUS DELICTIS PUNITUR AFFECTUS LICET NON SEQUATUR EFFECTUS. In more atrocious crimes, the intent is punished, though the effect does not follow. 2 Rolle, 89.

IN AUTRE DROIT (Law Fr.) In another's right; as representing another. An executor, administrator, or trustee sues in autre droit.

IN BANCO (Law Lat.) In bank; in the bench. See "Banc."

IN BLANK. Without restriction. Applied to indorsements on promissory notes where no indorsee is named.

IN BONIS (Lat.) Among the goods or property; in actual possession. Inst. 4. 2. 2; Tayl. Civ. Law, 479.

IN CAMERA. In private; in chambers.

IN CAPITA (Lat.) To or by the heads or polls. Thus, where persons succeed to estates in capita, they take each an equal share. So, where a challenge to a jury is in capita, it is to the polls, or to the jurors individually, as opposed to a challenge to the array. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 361. Per capita is also used.

IN CAPITE (Lat.) In chief. A tenant in capite was one who held directly of the crown (2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 60), whether by knight's service or socage. But tenure in capite was of two kinds,—general and special; the first from the king (caput regni), the second from a lord (caput feudi). A holding of an honor in king's lands, but not immediately of him, was yet a holding in capite. Kitch. Cts. 127; Dyer, 44; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 5. Abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

IN CASU EXTREMAE NECESSITATIS OMNIA SUNT COMMUNIA. In cases of extreme necessity, everything is in common. Hale, P. C. 54; Broom, Leg. Max. 1.

IN CASU PROVISO (Law Lat.) In a (or the) case provided. In tali casu editum et provisum, in such case made and provided. Towns. Pl. 164, 165.

IN CAUSA. In the cause, as distinguished from in initialibus (q. v.) A term in Scotch practice. 1 Brown, Ch. 252.

IN CHIEF. Principal; primary; directly obtained. A term applied to the evidence obtained from a witness upon his examination in court by the party producing him, in relation to the matter in issue at the trial. The examination so conducted for this purpose.

Evidence or examination in chief is to be distinguished from evidence given on cross-examination, and from evidence given upon the voir dire.

Evidence in chief should be confined to such matters as the pleadings and the opening warrant, and a departure from this rule will be sometimes highly inconvenient, if not fatal. Suppose, for example, that two assaults have been committed, one in January and the other in February, and the plaintiff prove his cause of action to have been the assault in January; he cannot abandon that, and afterwards prove another committed in February, unless the pleadings and openings extend to both. 1 Campb. 473. See, also, 6 Car. & P. 73; 1 Moody & R. 282.

This matter, however, is one of practice; and a great variety of rules exist in the different states of the United States, the leading object, however, being in all cases the same,—to prevent the plaintiff from introducing in evidence a different case from the one which he had prepared the defendant to expect from the pleadings.

IN CIVILIBUS MINISTERIUM EXCUSAT, IN CRIMINALIBUS NON ITEM. In civil matters, agency or service excuses, but not so in criminal matters. Lofft, 228; Tray. Lat. Max. 243.

IN CLARIS NON EST LOCUS CONJECTURIS. In things obvious there is no room for conjecture.

IN COMMENDAM (Lat.) The state or condition of a church living which is void or vacant, and which is commended to the care of some one. In Louisiana there is a species of partnership called "partnership in commendam." See "Commendam."

IN COMMODATO HAEC PACTIO, NE DOLUS PRAESTETUR, RATA NON EST. If in a contract for a loan there is inserted a clause that fraud should not be accounted of, such clause is void. Dig. 13. 7. 17.

IN COMMUNI (Law Lat.) In common. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 4, § 2.

IN CONJUNCTIVIS, OPORTET UTRAMque partem esse veram. In conjunctives, each part must be true. Wingate, Max. 13.

IN CONSIDERATIONE INDE (Law Lat.) In consideration thereof. 3 Salk. 64, pl. 5.

IN CONSIDERATIONE LEGIS (Law Lat.) In consideration or contemplation of law; in abeyance. Dyer, 102b.

IN CONSIDERATIONE PRAEMISSORUM (Law Lat.) In consideration of the premises. 1 Strange, 535.

IN CONSIMILI CASU CONSIMILE DEbet esse remedium. In similar cases, the remedy should be similar. Hardr. 65.

IN CONSUETUDINIBUS NON DIUTURnitas temporis sed soliditas rationis est consideranda. In customs, not the length of time, but the strength of the reason, should be considered. Co. Litt. 141.

IN CONTINENTI (Lat.) Immediately; without any interval or intermission. Calv. Lex. Sometimes written as one word, incontinenti.

IN CONTRACTIBUS, BENIGNA; IN TESTamentis, benignior; in restitutionibus, benignissima interpretatio facienda est. In contracts, the interpretation or construction should be liberal; in wills, more liberal; in restitutions, most liberal. Co. Litt. 112a.

IN CONTRACTIBUS, REI VERITAS POtius quam scriptura perspici debet. In contracts, the truth of the matter ought to be regarded, rather than the writing. Code, 4. 22. 1.

IN CONTRACTIBUS TACITE INSUNT quae sunt moris et consuetudinis. In contracts, those things which are of custom and usage are tacitly implied. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 759; 3 Bing. N. C. 814, 818; Story, Bills, § 143; 3 Kent, Comm. 260.

IN CONTRAHENDA VENDITIONE, AMbiguum pactum contra venditorem interpretandum est. In negotiating a sale, an ambiguous agreement is to be interpreted against the seller. Dig. 50. 17. 172; Id. 18. 1. 21.

IN CONVENTIONIBUS CONTRAHENTIum voluntatem potius quam verba spectari placuit. In agreements, the rule is to regard the intention of the contracting parties, rather than their words. Dig. 50. 16. 219; 2 Kent, Comm. 555; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 491; 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 150.

IN CORPORE (Lat.) In body or substance; in a material thing or object. Sive consistant in corpore, sive in jure, whether they consist in or belong to a material object, or a mere right. Bracton, fol. 37b.

IN CRASTINO (Law Lat.) On the morrow. In crastino Animarum, on the morrow of All Souls. 1 Bl. Comm. 342.

IN CRIMINALIBUS, PROBATIONES DEbent esse luce clariores. In criminal cases, the proofs ought to be clearer than the light. 3 Inst. 210.

IN CRIMINALIBUS SUFFICIT GENERAlis malitia intentionis cum facto paris gradus. In criminal cases, a general malice of intention is sufficient, with an act of equal or corresponding degree. Bac. Max. reg. 15; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 291.

IN CRIMINALIBUS VOLUNTAS REPUtabitur pro facto. In criminal acts, the will will be taken for the deed. 3 Inst. 106.

IN CUJUS REI TESTIMONIUM. In testimony whereof.

IN CUSTODIA LEGIS. In the custody of the law. A term applied to property which has been lawfully seized by or committed to the care of an officer of a court for some purpose incident to an action. 10 Pet. (U. S.) 400. The property must be legally held by the officer. Thus, where the clerk of court received money paid in to keep a tender good, without an order to that effect, it was held that the money was not in custodia legis. 49 Minn. 133.

IN DELICTO. In fault: culpable; guilty. See "In Pari Delicto."

IN DISJUNCTIVIS SUFFICIT ALTERAM partem esse veram. In disjunctives, it is sufficient if either part be true. Wingate, Max. 13; Co. Litt. 225a; 10 Coke, 50; Dig. 50. 17. 110.

IN DOMINICO (Law Lat.) In demesne. In dominico suo, ut de feodo, in his demesne as of fee. Bracton, fols. 253b, 261b; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 18; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 428; Co. Litt. 17a; 2 Bl. Comm. 105, 106.

IN DORSO. On the back. 2 Bl. Comm. 468; 2 Steph. Comm. 164. In dorso recordi, on the back of the record. 5 Coke, 45. Hence the English "indorse," "indorsement," etc.

IN DUBIIS (Lat.) In doubtful cases; in matters or cases of doubt.

IN DUBIIS BENIGNIORA PRAEFERENda sunt. In doubtful matters, the more favorable are to be preferred. Dig. 50. 17. 56; 2 Kent, Comm. 557.

IN DUBIIS MAGIS DIGNUM EST ACCIPiendum. In doubtful cases, the more worthy is to be taken. Branch, Princ.

IN DUBIIS NON PRAESUMITUR PRO testamento. In doubtful cases, there is no presumption in favor of the will. Cro. Car. 51.

IN DUBIO (Lat.) In doubt; in a state of uncertainty; in a doubtful case.

IN DUBIO HAEC LEGIS CONSTRUCTIO quam verba ostendunt. In a doubtful case, that is the construction of the law which the words indicate.

IN DUBIO PARS MELIOR EST SEQUENda. In doubt, the gentler course is to be followed.

IN DUBIO SEQUENDUM QUOD TUTIUS est. In doubt, the safer course is to be adopted.

IN DUPLO. In double. Damna in duplo, double damages. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, § 1.

IN EADEM CAUSA (Lat.) In the same state or condition. Calv. Lex.

IN EMULATIONEM VICINI (Lat.) In envy or hatred of a neighbor. Where an act is done, or action brought, solely to hurt or distress another, it is said to be in emulationem vicini. 1 Kames, Eq. 56.

IN EO QUOD PLUS SIT SEMPER INEST et minus. The less is always included in the greater. Dig. 50. 17. 110.

IN EQUITY. According to equitable doctrines.

IN ESSE (Lat.) In being; in existence. An event which may happen is in posse; when it has happened, it is in esse. The term is often used of liens or estates. A child in its mother's womb is, for some purposes, regarded as in esse.

IN EXCAMBIO (Law Lat.) In exchange. Formal words in old deeds of exchange.

IN EXITU (Lat.) In issue. De materia in exitu, of the matter in issue. 12 Mod. 372.

IN EXPOSITIONE INSTRUMENTORUM, mala grammatica, quod fieri potest, vitanda est. In the construction of instruments, bad grammar is to be avoided as much as possible. 6 Coke, 39; 2 Pars. Cont. 26.

IN EXTENSO. At length; in full.

IN EXTREMIS (Lat.) At the very end; in the last moments.

IN FACIE CURIAE (Law Lat.) In the face of the court. Dyer, 28.

IN FACIE ECCLESIAE (Lat.) In the face or presence of the church. A marriage is said to be made in facie ecclesiae when made in a consecrated church or chapel, or by a clerk in orders elsewhere; and one of these two things is necessary to a marriage in England in order to the wife's having dower, unless there be a dispensation or license. Bright, Husb. & Wife, pp. 370, 371, 391. But see 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 85; 1 Vict. c. 22; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 72. It was anciently the practice to marry at the church door, and there make a verbal assignment of dower. These verbal assignments, to prevent fraud, were necessarily held valid only when made in facie et ad ostium ecclesiae. See 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 103; Taylor.

IN FACIENDO (Lat.) In doing. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1308.

IN FACT. Actual; not based on legal fiction or intendment of law.

IN FACTO. In fact; in deed. In facto dicit, in fact says. 1 Salk. 22, pl. 1.
Depending on fact. Calv. Lex.

IN FACTO QUOD SE HABET AD BOnum et malum magis de bono quam de malo lex intendit. In a deed which may be considered good or bad, the law looks more to the good than to the bad. Co. Litt. 78.

IN (or EN) FAIT (Law Fr.) In fact; in deed. Lord Coke distinguishes "matters of record" from "matters in fait." Co. Litt. 380b.

IN FAVORABILIBUS MAGIS ATTENDItur quod prodest quam quod nocet. In things favored, what does good is more regarded than what does harm. Bac. Max. reg. 12.

IN FAVOREM LIBERTATIS (Lat.) In favor of liberty.

IN FAVOREM VITAE (Lat.) In favor of life.

IN FAVOREM VITAE, LIBERTATIS, ET innocentiae omnia praesumuntur. In favor of life, liberty, and innocence, all things are to be presumed. Lofft, 125.

IN FEODO (Law Lat.) In fee. Bracton, fol. 207; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 15. Seisitus in feodo, seised in fee. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 7, § 1.

IN FICTIONE JURIS SEMPER AEQUItas existit. A legal fiction is always consistent with equity. 11 Coke, 51; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 120, 123; 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 348; 3 Bl. Comm. 43, 283.

IN FIERI (Lat.) In being done; in process of completion. A thing is said to rest in fieri when it is not yet complete; e. g., the records of a court were anciently held to be in fieri, or incomplete, till they were recorded on parchment, but now till the giving of judgment, after which they can be amended only during the same term. 2 Barn. & Adol. 791; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 407. It is also used of contracts.

IN FINE. At the end.

IN FORMA PAUPERIS (Lat.) In the character or form of a poor man.
When a person is so poor that he cannot bear the charges of suing at law or in equity, upon making oath that he is not worth five pounds, and bringing a certificate from a counsellor at law that he believes him to have a just cause, he is permitted to sue in forma pauperis, in the manner of a pauper; that is, he is allowed to have original writs and subpoenas gratis, and counsel assigned him without fee. 3 Bl. Comm. 400. And in most if not all the states, provision is made by statute for suing in forma pauperis, the manner of obtaining such privilege varying with the statutes. See 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.)

65; 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 588; 3 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 273; 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 58; 2 Molloy, 475.

IN FORMA PRAEDICTA (Law Lat.) In form aforesaid. Perk. c. 3, § 242.

IN FORO (Lat.) In a (or the) forum, court, or tribunal.

IN FORO CONSCIENTIAE (Lat.) Before the tribunal of conscience; conscientiously. The term is applied to moral obligations, as distinct from the obligations which the law enforces. In the sale of property, for example, the concealment of facts by the vendee which may enhance the price is wrong in foro conscientiae, but there is no legal obligation on the part of the vendee to disclose them, and the contract will be good if not vitiated by fraud. Poth. Vente, pt. 2, c. 2, note 233; 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 185, note (c).

IN FORO CONTENTIOSO. In the forum of contention or litigation.

IN FORO ECCLESIASTICO (Law Lat.) In an ecclesiastical forum; in the ecclesiastical court. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57, § 13.

IN FORO SAECULARI (Law Lat.) In a secular forum or court. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57, § 14; 1 Bl. Comm. 20.

IN FRAUDEM CREDITORUM (Lat.) In fraud of creditors; with intent to defraud creditors. Inst. 1. 6. pr. 3.

IN FRAUDEM LEGIS (Lat.) In fraud of the law; contrary to law. Taylor. Using process of law for a fraudulent purpose; and if a person gets an affidavit of service of declaration in ejectment, and thereupon gets judgment, and turns the tenant out, when he has no manner of title in a house, he is liable as a felon, for he used the process of law in fraudem legis. 1 Ld. Raym. 276; Sid. 254.

An act done in fraudem legis cannot give right of action in the courts of the country whose laws are evaded. 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 433.

IN FULL LIFE. Neither physically nor civilly dead. The term "life" alone has also been taken in the same sense, as including natural and civil life; e. g., a lease made to a person "during life" is determined by a civil death, but if "during natural life," it would be otherwise. 2 Coke, 48. It is a translation of the French phrase en plein vie. Law Fr. Dict.

IN FUTURO (Lat.) In future; at a future time; the opposite of in praesenti. 2 Bl. Comm. 166, 175.

IN GENERALI PASSAGIO (Law Lat.) In the general passage; passagium being a journey, or, more properly, a voyage, and especially when used alone or with the adjectives magnum, generale, etc.,—the journey to Jerusalem of a crusader, especially of a king. 36 Hen. III.; 3 Prynne, Collect. 767; Du Cange.

In generali passagio was an excuse for nonappearance in a suit, which put off the hearing sine die; but in simplici peregrinatione or passagio—i. e., being absent on a private pilgrimage to the Holy Land—put off the hearing for a shorter time. Bracton, 338.

IN GENERALIBUS VERSATUR ERROR. Error dwells in general expressions. 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 290.

IN GENERE (Lat.) In kind; of the same kind. Things which, when bailed, may be restored in genere, as distinguished from those which must be returned in specie, or specifically, are called fungibles. Kaufm. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 148, note.

Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 619, defines genus as what the philosophers call "species," viz., a kind. See Dig. 12. 1. 2. 1.

IN GENERE QUICUNQUE ALIQUID DIcit, sive actor sive reus, necesse est ut probat. In general, whoever says anything, whether plaintiff or defendant, must prove it. Best, Ev. 294, § 252.

IN GREMIO LEGIS (Lat. in the bosom of the law). This is a figurative expression, by which is meant that the subject is under the protection of the law; as, where land is in abeyance.

IN GROSS. At large; not appurtenant or appendant, but annexed to a man's person, e. g., common granted to a man and his heirs by deed is common in gross; or common in gross may be claimed by prescriptive right. 2 Bl. Comm. 34.

IN HAC PARTE (Law Lat.) In this behalf. Reg. Orig. 25.

IN HAEC VERBA. In these words; in the same words. Dig. 34. 4. 30.

IN HAEREDES NON SOLENT TRANSIre actiones quae poenales ex maleficio sunt. Penal actions arising from anything of a criminal nature do not pass to heirs. 2 Inst. 442.

IN HIIS ENIM QUAE SUNT FAVORAbilia animae, quamvis sunt damnosa rebus, fiat aliquando extentio statuti. In things that are favorable to the spirit, though injurious to property, an extension of the statute should be sometimes made. 10 Coke, 101.

IN HIS QUAE DE JURE COMMUNI OMnibus conceduntur, consuetudo alicujus patriae vel loci non est alleganda. In those things which, by common right, are conceded to all, the custom of a particular country or place is not to be alleged. 11 Coke, 85.

IN HOC. In this.

IN IISDEM TERMINIS (Lat.) In the same terms. 9 East, 487.

IN INDIVIDUO (Law Lat.) In the distinct, identical, or individual form; in specie. Story, Bailm. § 97.

In special; particular.

IN INFINITUM. Infinitely, or indefinitely.

IN INITIALIBUS (Lat.) In Scotch law. In the preliminaries. Before a witness is examined as to the cause in which he is to testify, he must deny bearing malice or ill will, being instructed what to say, or having been bribed, and these matters are called initialia testimonii, and the examination on them is said to be in initialibus. It is similar to our voir dire. Bell, Dict. "Initialia Testimonii;" Ersk. Inst. p. 451; Halk. Tech. Terms.

IN INITIO (Lat.) In or at the beginning. In initio litis, at the beginning, or in the first stage of the suit. Bracton, fol. 400.

IN INTEGRUM (Lat.) The original condition. See "Restitutio in Integram." Vicat, "Integer."

IN INVITUM (Lat.) Unwillingly. Taylor. Against an unwilling party, or one who has not given his consent, by operation of law. Wharton.

IN IPSIS FAUCIBUS (Lat.) In the very throat or entrance. In ipsis faucibus of a port, actually entering a port. 1 C. Rob. Adm. 233. 234.

IN ITINERE (Lat.) On a journey; on the way. Justices in itinere were justices in eyre, who went on circuit through the kingdom for the purpose of hearing causes. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 351; Spelman. In itinere is used in the law of lien, and is there equivalent to in transitu; that is, not yet delivered to vendee.

IN JUDICIIS MINORI AETATI SUCCURritur. In judicial proceedings, infancy is aided or favored. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 46.

IN JUDICIO (Lat.) In or by a judicial proceeding; in court. In judicio non creditur nisi juratis, in judicial proceedings no one is believed unless on oath. Cro. Car. 64. See Bracton, fols. 98b, 106, 287b, et passim.

——In Civil Law. The proceedings before a praetor, from the bringing the action till issue joined, were said to be in jure; but after issue joined, when the cause came before the judex, the proceedings were said to be in judicio. See "Judex."

IN JUDICIO NON CREDITUR NISI JURAtia. In law, none is credited unless he is sworn. All the facts must, when established by witnesses, be under oath or affirmation. Cro. Car. 64.

IN JURE (Lat.) In law.

——In Civil Law. A phrase which denotes the proceedings in a cause before the praetor, up to the time when it is laid before a judex; that is, till issue joined (litis contestatio); also the proceedings in causes tried throughout by the praetor (cognitiones extraordinariae). Vicat, "Jus."

——In English Law. In law; rightfully; in right. In jure, non remota causa, sed proxima, spectatur. Broom, Leg. Max. 104. Incorporeal hereditaments, as right of jurisdiction, are said to exist only in jure, in right, or contemplation of law, and to admit of only a symbolical delivery. See Halk. Tech. Terms.

IN JURE ALTERIUS (Lat.) In another's right. Hale, Anal. § 26.

IN JURE NON REMOTA CAUSA, SED proxima, spectatur. In law, the proximate and not the remote cause is to be looked to. Bac. Max. reg. 1; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 202. See 2 Pars. Cont. 455.

IN JURE PROPRIO (Lat.) In one's own right. Hale, Anal. § 26.

IN JUS VOCARE (Lat.) To call, cite, or summon to court. Inst. 4. 16. 3; Calv. Lex. In jus vocando, summoning to court. Dig. 2. 4; 3 Bl. Comm. 279.

IN KIND. Of the same sort. Return of property is "in kind," as distinguished from in specie, where an article of the same kind, but not the identical one obtained, is returned.

IN LAW. Implied by law; depending on legal fiction or intendment.

IN LECTO MORTALI (Lat.) On the death bed. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 28, § 12.

IN LIMINE (Lat.) In or at the beginning. This phrase is frequently used; as, the courts are anxious to check crimes in limine.

IN LITEM (Lat. ad litem). For a suit; to the suit. Greenl. Ev. § 348.

IN LOCO (Lat.) In place; in lieu; instead; in the place or stead. Towns. Pl. 38.

IN LOCO PARENTIS (Lat.) In the place of a parent; as, the master stands towards his apprentice in loco parentis.

IN MAJORE SUMMA CONTINETUR MInor. In the greater sum is contained the less. 5 Coke, 115.

IN MAJOREM CAUTELAM (Lat.) For greater security. 1 Strange, 105, arg.

IN MALEFICIIS VOLUNTAS SPECTAtur non exitus. In offenses, the intention is regarded, not the event. Dig. 48. 8. 14; Bac. Max. reg. 7; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 292.

IN MALEFICIO RATIHABITIO MANDAto comparetur. In a tort, ratification is equivalent to a command. Dig. 50. 17. 152. 2.

IN MAXIMA POTENTIA MINIMA LICENtia. In the greatest power there is the least liberty. Hob. 159.

IN MEDIO (Law Lat.) Intermediate. A term applied, in Scotch practice, to a fund held between parties litigant.

IN MERCIBUS ILLICITIS NON SIT COMmercium. No commerce should be in illicit goods. 3 Kent, Comm. 262, note.

IN MERCY. To be in mercy is to be at the discretion of the king, lord, or judge in punishing any offense not directly censured by the law. Thus, to be in the grievous mercy of the king is to be in hazard of a great penalty. 11 Hen. VI. c. 6. So, where the plaintiff failed in his suit, he and his pledges were in the mercy of the lord, pro falso clamore suo. This is retained nominally on the record. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 376. So the defendant is in mercy if he fail in his defense. Id. 398.

IN MISERICORDIA (Lat. in mercy). The entry on the record where a party was in mercy was, Ideo in misericordia, etc. The phrase was used because the punishment in such cases ought to be moderate. See Magna Cart. c. 14; Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 5, c. 6. Sometimes misericordia means the being quit of all amercements.

IN MITIORI SENSU (Lat. in a milder acceptation). A phrase denoting a rule of construction formerly adopted in slander suits, the object of which was to construe phrases, if possible, so that they would not support an action.

IN MODUM ASSISAE (Law Lat.) In the manner or form of an assize. Bracton, fol. 183b. In modum juratae, in manner of a jury. Id. fol. 181b.

IN MORA (Lat.) In delay.

IN MORTUA MANU (Lat. in a dead hand). Property owned by religious societies was said to be held in mortua manu, or in mortmain, since religious men were civiliter mortui. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 479; Taylor.

IN NOMINE DEI, AMEN (Lat.) In the name of God, Amen. A solemn form of introduction, anciently used in wills and many other instruments, public and private. The Proemia to the Institutes and Digests of Justinian commence, In nomine Domini nostri Jesu Christi, "In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." The confirmation of the Code and several of the Novels are introduced with the same form. Some old wills began, In nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus Sancti, Amen. Blount, voc. "Will." Mercantile instruments, such as protests, policies, procurations, etc., frequently began, In Dei nomine, Amen.

IN NOVO CASU, NOVUM REMEDIUM apponendum est. A new remedy is to be applied to a new case. 2 Inst. 3.

IN NUBIBUS (Lat.) In the clouds; in abeyance; in custody of law. In nubibus, in mare, in terrâ vel in custodia legis, in the air, earth, or sea, or in the custody of the law. Taylor. In case of abeyance, the inheritance is figuratively said to rest in nubibus, or in gremio legis; e. g., in case of a grant of life estate to A., and afterwards to heirs of Richard, Richard in this case, being alive, has no heirs until his death, and, consequently, the inheritance is considered as resting in nubibus, or in the clouds, till the death of A., when the contingent remainder either vests or is lost, and the inheritance goes over. See 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 107, note; 1 Coke, 137.

IN NULLIUS BONIS (Lat.) Among the goods or property of no person; belonging to no person, as treasure trove and wreck were anciently considered. Bracton, fol. 120.

IN NULLO EST ERRATUM (Lat.) In pleading. A plea to errors assigned on proceedings in error, by which the defendant in error affirms there is no error in the record. As to the effect of such plea, see 1 Vent. 252; 1 Strange, 684; 9 Mass. 532; 1 Burrows, 410; T. Raym. 231. It is a general rule that the plea in nullo est erratum confesses the fact assigned for error (Yelv. 57; Dane, Abr. Index), but not a matter assigned contrary to the record (7 Wend. [N. Y.] 55; Bac. Abr. "Error" [G]).

IN OBSCURA VOLUNTATE MANUMITtentis favendum est libertati. Where the expression of the will of one who seeks to manumit a slave is ambiguous, liberty is to be favored. Dig. 50. 17. 179.

IN OBSCURIS INSPICI SOLERE QUOD verisimilius est, aut quod plerumque fieri solet. Where there is obscurity, we usually regard what is probable and what is generally done. Dig. 50. 17. 114.

IN OBSCURIS QUOD MINIMUM EST SEquimur. In obscure cases, we follow that which is least so. Dig. 50. 17. 9.

IN ODIUM SPOLIATORIS (Lat.) In hatred of a despoiler. All things are presumed against a despoiler or wrongdoer, in odium spoliatoris omnia praesumuntur.

IN OMNI ACTIONE UBI DUAE CONCURrunt districtiones, videlicit in rem et in personam, illa districtio tenenda est quae magis timetur et magis ligat. In every action where two distresses concur, as those in rem and in personam, that is to be chosen which is most dreaded, and which binds most firmly. Bracton, 372; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 14, § 28.

IN OMNI RE NASCITUR RES QUAE IPsam rem exterminat. In everything, the thing is born which destroys the thing itself. 2 Inst. 15.

IN OMNIBUS CONTRACTIBUS, SIVE nominatis, sive innominatis, permutatio continetur. In every contract, whether nominate or innominate, there is implied an exchange, i. e., a consideration.

IN OMNIBUS OBLIGATIONIBUS, IN QUIbus dies non ponitur, praesenti die debetur. In all obligations, when no time is fixed for the payment, the thing is due immediately. Dig. 50. 17. 14.

IN OMNIBUS POENALIBUS JUDICIIS, ET aetati et imprudentiae succurritur. In all trials for penal offenses, allowance is made for youth and lack of discretion. Dig. 50. 17. 108; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 282.

IN OMNIBUS QUIDEM MAXIME TAMEN in jure, aequitas spectanda sit. In all affairs indeed, but principally in those which concern the administration of justice, equity should be regarded. Dig. 50. 17. 90.

IN PACE DEI ET REGIS (Law Lat.) In the peace of God and the king. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, § 6. Formal words in old appeals of murder.

IN PAIS. Out of court, or without judicial process. Matter in pais is distinguished from matter of record. 2 Bl. Comm. 294. Conveyances were either by matter in pais or deed which was an assurance transacted between two or more private persons out of court, or by matter of record which was an assurance transacted in a court of record. 1 Steph. Comm. 466. Notice in pais is notice given without the intervention of the court. Story, Bailm. § 348.

Without writing, by act or conduct, as distinguished from "by deed." Thus, estoppels are said to be by record, by deed, or by matter in pais. See "Estoppel."

IN PAPER. In English practice. A term used of a record until its final enrollment on the parchment record. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 406; 10 Mod. 88; 2 Lilly, Abr. 322; 4 Geo. II.

IN PARI CAUSA (Lat.) In an equal cause. It is a rule that when two persons have equal rights in relation to a particular thing, the party in possession is considered as having the better right, in pari causa possessor potior est. Dig. 50. 17. 128; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 952.

IN PARI CAUSA POSSESSOR POTIOR haberi debet. When two parties have equal rights, the advantage is always in favor of the possessor. Dig. 50. 17. 128.

IN PARI DELICTO. Equally in fault. A term applied to parties who have participated equally in a transaction which is illegal, fraudulent, or contrary to public policy, neither of whom can for that reason obtain relief in equity from any injury suffered from the other in respect to such transaction. Thus, one making a conveyance of his property to defraud creditors cannot set aside the conveyance if his accomplice subsequently refuse to reconvey. 64 Fed. 195; 36 Mich. 229. But to put parties in pari delicto there must be equality of turpitude. See 124 N. Y. 160.

Though both parties assent to the illegal transaction, if there is great disparity of intelligence or condition, they are not in pari delicto. 59 Ill. 470; 82 Ky. 564; 9 Md. 348; 69 Mo. 115.

IN PARI DELICTO MELIOR EST CONDITIO possidentis. When the parties are equally in the wrong, the condition of the possessor is better. 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 258; 3 Cranch (U. S.) 244; Cowp. 341; Broom, Leg. Max. 325; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3724.

IN PARI DELICTO POTIOR EST CONDITIO defendentis (et possidentis). Where both parties are equally in fault, the condition of the defendant is preferable. 11 Mass. 376; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 265; 1 Story, Cont. (4th Ed.) 591, 592.

IN PATRIMONIO (Lat.) As a subject of property. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 1, § 2.

IN PECTORE JUDICIS (Lat.) In the breast of the judge. Latch, 180. A phrase applied to a judgment.

IN PEJOREM PARTEM (Law Lat.) In the worst part; on the worst side. Latch, 159, 160.

IN PENDENTI (Lat.) In suspension or abeyance. Bracton, fols. 12, 19b. Written in Fleta as one word, inpendenti and impendenti. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 9, § 7.

IN PERPETUAM REI MEMORIAM (Lat.) For the perpetual memory or remembrance of a thing. Gilb. For. Rom. 118.

IN PERSONAM (Lat.) A remedy where the proceedings are against the person, in contradistinction to those which are against specific things, or in rem. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 2646.

IN PERSONAM ACTIO EST, QUA CUM eo agimus qui obligatus est nobis ad faciendum aliquid vel dandum. The action in personam is that by which we sue him who is under obligation to us to do something or give something. Dig. 44. 7. 25; Bracton, 101b.

IN PIOS USUS (Law Lat.) For pious uses; for religious purposes. 2 Bl. Comm. 505.

IN PLENA VITA (Law Lat.) In full life. Y. B. P. 18 Hen. VI. 2.

IN PLENO COMITATU (Law Lat.) In full county court. 2 Bl. Comm. 36.

IN POENALIBUS CAUSIS BENIGNIUS interpretandum est. In penal cases, the more favorable interpretation is to be made. Dig. 50. 17. 155. 2; Plowd. 86b; 2 Hale, P. C. 365.

IN POSSE (Lat.) In possibility; not in actual existence; used in contradistinction to in esse.

IN POTESTATE PARENTIS (Lat.) In the power of a parent. Inst. 1. 8, pr.; Id. 1. 9; 2 Bl. Comm. 498.

IN PRAEMISSORUM FIDEM (Law Lat.) In confirmation or attestation of the premises. A notarial phrase.

IN PRAEPARATORIIS AD JUDICIUM favetur actori. In things preparatory before trial, the plaintiff is favored. 2 Inst. 57.

IN PRAESENTI (Lat.) At the present time; used in opposition to in futuro. A marriage contracted in words de praesenti is good; as, "I take Paul to be my husband" is a good marriage; but words de futuro would not be sufficient, unless the ceremony was followed by consummation. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 258.

IN PRAESENTIA MAJORIS POTESTATIS, minor potestas cessat. In the presence of the superior power, the minor power ceases. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 214; Cas. temp. Hardw. 28; 13 How. (U. S.) 142; 13 Q. B. 740.

IN PRENDER (Law Fr. in taking). A term applied to such incorporeal hereditaments as a party entitled to them was to take for himself; such as common. 2 Steph. Comm. 23; 3 Bl. Comm. 15.

IN PRETIO EMPTIONIS ET VENDITIONIS naturaliter licet contrahentibus se circumvenire. In the price of buying and selling, it is naturally allowed to the contracting parties to overreach each other. 1 Story, Cont. (4th Ed.) 606.

IN PRINCIPIO (Lat. at the beginning). This is frequently used in citations; as, Bac. Abr. "Legacies in pr."

IN PROPRIA CAUSA NEMO JUDEX. No one can be judge in his own cause. 12 Coke, 13.

IN PROPRIA PERSONA (Lat.) In his own person; himself; as, the defendant appeared in propria persona; the plaintiff argued the cause in propria persona.

IN QUO QUIS DELINQUIT, IN EO DE jure est puniendus. In whatever thing one offends, in that he is rightfully to be punished. Co. Litt. 233b.

IN RE (Lat.) In the matter; as, in re A. B., in the matter of A. B.

IN RE COMMUNI NEMINEM DOMINOrum jure facere quicquam, invito altero, posse. One co-proprietor can exercise no authority over the common property against the will of the other. Dig. 10. 3. 28.

IN RE COMMUNI POTIOR EST CONDITIO prohibentis. In a partnership, the condition of one who forbids is the more favorable.

IN RE DUBIA BENIGNIOREM INTERpretationem sequi, non minus justius est, quam tutius. In a doubtful case, to follow the milder interpretation is not less the more just than it is the safer course. Dig. 50. 17. 192. 2; Id. 28. 4. 3.

IN RE DUBIA MAGIS INFICIATO QUAM affirmatio intelligenda. In a doubtful matter, the negative is to be understood, rather than the affirmative. Godb. 37.

IN RE LUPANARI, TESTES LUPANAres admittentur. In a matter concerning a brothel, prostitutes are admitted as witnesses. 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 320, 324.

IN RE PARI, POTIOREM CAUSAM ESSE prohibentis constat. Where a thing is owned in common, it is agreed that the cause of him prohibiting its use is the stronger. Dig. 10. 3. 28; 3 Kent, Comm. 45; Poth. Con. de Soc. note 90; 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 438, 491.

IN RE PROPRIA INIQUUM ADMODUM est alicui licentiam tribuere contentiae. It is extremely unjust that any one should be judge in his own cause.

IN REBUS (Lat.) In things, cases, or matters.

IN REBUS MANIFESTIS ERRAT QUI auctoritates legum allegat, quia perspicua vera non sunt probanda. He errs who alleges the authorities of law in things manifest, because obvious truths need not be proved. 5 Coke, 67.

IN REM (Lat.) A technical term used to designate proceedings or actions instituted against the thing, in contradistinction to personal actions, which are said to be in personam.

Proceedings in rem include not only those instituted to obtain decrees or judgments against property as forfeited in the admiralty or the English exchequer, or as prize, but also suits against property to enforce a lien or privilege in the admiralty courts, and suits to obtain the sentence, judgment, or decree of other courts upon the personal status or relations of the party, such as marriage, divorce, bastardy, settlement, or the like. 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 525, 541.

Courts of admiralty enforce the performance of a contract, when its performance is secured by a maritime lien or privilege, by seizing into their custody the very subject of hypothecation. In these suits, generally, the parties are not personally bound, and the proceedings are confined to the thing in specie. Brown, Civ. & Adm. Law, 98. And see 2 Gall. C. C. (U. S.) 200; 3 Term R. 269, 270.

There are cases, however, where the remedy is either in personam or in rem. Seamen, for example, may proceed against the ship or freight for their wages, and this is the most expeditious mode; or they may proceed against the master or owners. 4 Burrows, 1944; 2 Brown, Civ. & Adm. Law, 396. See, generally, 1 Phil. Ev. 254; 1 Starkie, Ev. 228; Dane, Abr.; Serg. Const. Law, 202, 203, 212; Pars. Mar. Law.

"Various definitions have been given of a judgment in rem, but all are criticised as either incomplete or comprehending too much. It is generally said to be a judgment declaratory of the status of some subject matter, whether this be a person or a thing. Thus, the probate of a will fixes the status of the document as a will. The personal rights and interests which follow are mere incidental results of the status or character of the paper, and do not appear on the face of the judgment. So, a decree establishing or dissolving a marriage is a judgment in rem, because it fixes the status of the person. A judgment of forfeiture, by the proper tribunal, against specific articles or goods, for a violation of the revenue laws, is a judgment in rem. But it is objected that the customary definition does not fit such a case, because there is no fixing of the status of anything, the whole effect being a seizure, whatever the thing may be. In the foregoing instances, and many others, the judgment is conclusive against all the world, without reference to actual presence or participation in the proceedings. If the expression 'strictly in rem' may be applied to any class of cases, it should be confined to such as these. A very able writer says: 'The distinguishing characteristic of judgments in rem is that, wherever their obligation is recognized and enforced as against any person, it is equally recognized and enforced as against all persons. It seems to us that the true definition of a judgment in rem is "an adjudication" against some person or thing, or "upon the status of some subject matter," which, wherever and whenever binding upon any person, is equally binding upon all persons.'" 10 Mo. App. 78.

IN REM ACTIO EST PER QUAM REM nostram quae ab alio possidetur potimus, et semper adversus eum est qui rem possidet. The action in rem is that by which we seek our property which is possessed by another, and is always against him who possesses the property. Dig. 44. 7. 25; Bracton, 102.

IN RENDER. A thing in a manor is said to lie in render when it must be rendered or given by the tenant, e. g., rent; to lie in prender, when it may be taken by the lord or his officer when it chance. West, Symb. pt. 2, "Fines," § 126.

IN REPUBLICA MAXIME CONSERVANDA sunt jura belli. In the state, the laws of war are to be greatly preserved. 2 Inst. 58.

IN RERUM NATURA (Lat.) In the nature or order of things; in existence. Not in rerum natura is a dilatory plea, importing that the plaintiff is a fictitious person.

——In Civil Law. A broader term than in rebus humanis; e. g., before quickening, an infant is in rerum natura, but not in rebus humanis; after quickening, he is in rebus humanis, as well as in rerum natura. Calv. Lex.

IN RESTITUTIONEM, NON IN POENAM, haeres succedit. The heir succeeds to the restitution, not the penalty. 2 Inst. 198.

IN RESTITUTIONIBUS BENIGNISSIMA interpretatio facienda est. The most favorable construction is to be made in restitutions. Co. Litt. 112.

IN SATISFACTIONIBUS NON PERMITTITUR amplius fieri quam semel factum est. In payments, more must not be received than has been received once for all. 9 Coke, 53.

IN SCRINIO JUDICIS (Law Lat.) In the writing case of the judge; among the judge's papers. "That is a thing that rests in scrinio judicis, and does not appear in the body of the decree." Hardr. 51.

IN SEPARALI (Law Lat.) In several; in severalty. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 20.

IN SIGHT. See "Gambling Contract."

IN SIMILI MATERIA. Dealing with the subject matter of the same kind.

IN SIMPLICI PEREGRINATIONE (Lat.) In simple pilgrimage. Bracton, fol. 338. A phrase in the old law of essoins. See "In Generali Passagio."

IN SOLIDUM, or IN SOLIDO (Lat.) In civil law. For the whole; as a whole. An obligation or contract is said to be in solido or in solidum when each is liable for the whole, but so that a payment by one is payment for all; i. e., it is a joint and several contract.

Possession is said to be in solidum when it is exclusive. "Duo in solidum precario habere non magis possunt, quam duo in solidum vi possidere aut clam; nam neque justae neque injustae possessiones duae concurrere possunt." Savigny, lib. 3, § 11.

IN SOLO (Lat.) In the soil or ground. In solo alieno, in another's ground. In solo proprio, in one's own ground. 2 Steph. Comm. 20.

IN SPECIE (Lat.) In the same form; e. g., a ship is said to no longer exist in specie when she no longer exists as a ship, but as a mere congeries of planks. 8 Barn. & C. 561; Arnould, Ins. 1012. To decree a thing in specie is to decree the performance of that thing specifically.

IN STATU QUO (Lat.) In the same situation as; in the same condition as.

IN STIPULATIONIBUS CUM QUAERITUR quid actum sit verba contra stipulatorem interpretanda sunt. In contracts, when the question is what was agreed upon, the terms are to be interpreted against the party offering them. Dig. 45. 1. 38. 18. Chancellor Kent remarks that the true principle appears to be "to give the contract the sense in which the person making the promise believes the other party to have accepted it, if he in fact did so understand and accept it." 2 Kent, Comm. (7th Ed.) 721; 2 Day (Conn.) 281; 1 Duer, Ins. 159, 160; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 534; Dig. 45. 1. 38. § 18.

IN STIPULATIONIBUS ID TEMPUS spectatur quo contrahimus. In agreements, reference is had to the time at which they were made. Dig. 50. 17. 144. 1.

IN STIRPES. According to roots or stocks; by representation. See "Per Stirpes."

IN SUBSIDIUM. In aid.

IN SUO QUISQUE NEGOTIO HABETIOR est quam in alieno. Every one is more dull in his own business than in that of another. Co. Litt. 377.

IN TANTUM (Law Lat.) In so much; so much; so far; so greatly. Reg. Orig. 97, 106.

IN TERMINIS TERMINANTIBUS (Law Lat.) In terms of determination; exactly in point. 11 Coke, 40b. In express or determinate terms. 1 Leon. 93.

IN TERROREM (Lat.) By way of threat, terror, or warning. For example, when a legacy is given to a person upon condition not to dispute the validity or the dispositions in wills and testaments, the conditions are not, in general, obligatory, but only in terrorem. If, therefore, there exist probabilis causa litigandi, the nonobservance of the conditions will not be a forfeiture. 2 Vern. 90; 1 Hill, Abr. 253; 3 P. Wms. 344; 1 Atk. 404.

IN TERROREM POPULI (Lat. to the terror of the people). A technical phrase necessary in indictments for riots. 4 Car. & P. 373.

Lord Holt has given a distinction between those indictments in which the words in terrorem populi are essential, and those wherein they may be omitted. He says that, in indictments for that species of riots which consist in going about armed, etc., without committing any act, the words are necessary, because the offense consists in terrifying the public; but in those riots in which an unlawful act is committed, the words are useless. 11 Mod. 116; 10 Mass. 518.

IN TESTAMENTIS PLENIUS TESTATORIS INTENTIONEM SCRUTAMUR. In testaments, we should seek diligently the will of the testator. "But," says Dodderidge, C. J., "this is to be observed with these two limitations: (1) His intent ought to be agreeable to the rules of the law; (2) his intent ought to be collected out of the words of the will." 3 Bulst. 103; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 494.

IN TESTAMENTIS PLENIUS VOLUNTATES TESTANTIUM INTERPRETANTUR. In testaments, the will of the testator should be liberally construed. That is to say, a will shall receive a more liberal construction than its strict meaning, if alone considered, would permit. Dig. 50. 17. 12; Cujac. ad loc., cited 3 Poth. Pand. 46; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 507.

IN TESTAMENTIS RATIO TACITA NON DEBET CONSIDERARI, SED VERBA SOLUM SPECTARI DEBENT; ADEO PER DIVINATIONEM MENTIS A VERBIS RECEDERE DURUM EST. In wills, an unexpressed meaning ought not to be considered, but the words alone ought to be looked to, so hard is it to recede from the words by guessing at the intention.

IN TESTIMONIUM (Lat.) In witness whereof.

IN TOTIDEM VERBIS (Lat.) In just so many words; as, the legislature has declared this to be a crime in totidem verbis.

IN TOTO (Lat.) In the whole; wholly; completely; as, the award is void in toto. In the whole, the part is contained, in toto et pars continetur. Dig. 50. 17. 123.

IN TOTO ET PARS CONTINETUR. A part is included in the whole. Dig. 50. 17. 113.

IN TRADITIONIBUS SCRIPTORUM CHARTARUM NON QUOD DICTUM EST, SED QUOD GESTUM FACTUM EST, INSPICITUR. In the delivery of writings (deeds), not what is said, but what is done, is to be considered. 9 Coke, 137.

IN TRAJECTU (Lat.) In the passage over; on the voyage over. See Sir William Scott, 3 Rob. Adm. 141.

IN TRANSITU (Lat.) During the transit or removal from one place to another. See "Stoppage in Transitu."

IN VADIO (Lat.) In pledge; in gage.

IN VENTRE SA MERE (Law Fr.) In his mother's womb.

IN VERAM QUANTITATAM FIDEJUSSER TENEATUR, NISI PRO CERTA QUANTITATE ACCESSIT. Let the surety be holden for the true quantity, unless he agreed for a certain quantity. 17 Mass. 597.

IN VERBIS NON VERBA SED RES ET RATIO QUAERENDA EST. In words, not the words, but the thing and the meaning is to be inquired after. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 132.

IN VINCULIS (Lat.) In chains; in actual custody. Gilb. For. Rom. 97.

Applied also, figuratively, to the condition of a person who is compelled to submit to terms which oppression and his necessities impose on him. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 302.

IN VOCIBUS VIDENDUUM NON A QUO SED AD QUID SUMATUR. In discourses, it is to be seen not from what, but to what, it is advanced. Ellesmere, Postn. 62.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF. These words, which, when conveyancing was in the Latin language, were in cujus rei testimonium, are the initial words of the concluding clause in deeds: "In witness whereof the said parties have hereunto set their hands," etc.

INADEQUATE PRICE. A term applied to indicate the want of a sufficient consideration for a thing sold, or such a price as, under ordinary circumstances, would be considered insufficient.

INADMISSIBLE. What cannot be received in evidence.

INAEDIFICATIO (Lat.) In civil law. Building on another's land with own materials, or on own land with another's materials. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 363. The word is especially used of a private person's building so as to encroach upon the public land. Calv. Lex. The right of possession of the materials yields to the right to what is on the soil. Id.

INALIENABLE. A word denoting the condition of those things the property in which cannot be lawfully transferred from one person to another. Public highways and rivers are inalienable. There are also many rights which are inalienable, as the rights of liberty or of speech.

INAUGURATION. A word applied by the Romans to the ceremony of dedicating a temple, or raising a man to the priesthood, after the augurs had been consulted.

It was afterwards applied to the installation of emperors, kings, and prelates, in imitation of the ceremonies of the Romans when they entered the temple of the augurs. It is applied in the United States to the installation of the chief magistrate of the republic, and of the governors of the several states.

INBOARD. In marine policy. Not projecting over the rail of the vessel. 46 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 175, 181, 85 N. Y. 473.

INBORH (Saxon). In old English law. A security, pledge, or hypotheca, consisting of the chattels of a person unable to obtain a personal "borg," or surety.

INCAPACITY. The want of a quality legally to do, give, transmit, or receive something. See "Capacity."

INCAUSTUM, or ENCAUSTUM (Lat.) Ink; a fluid anciently used for writing, of which, as appears from the following passage of Bracton, there were two kinds,—the black (incaustum nigrum), and the red (incaustum rubrum), the former being also termed atramentum (from ater, black), which is the Latin word generally used for "ink." Item diversitas incausti et atramenti, ut si una pars scribatur incausto nigro, et altera pars incausto rubro, non atramento. Bracton, fol. 398b.

INCAUTE FACTUM PRO NON FACTO habetur. A thing done unwarily or unadvisedly will be taken as not done. Dig. 28. 4. 1.

INCENDIARY (Lat. incendium, a kindling). One who maliciously and willfully sets another person's building on fire; one guilty of the crime of arson.

INCENDIUM AERE ALIENO NON EXUIT debitorum. A fire does not release a debtor from his debt. Code, 4. 2. 11.

INCEPTION. The commencement; the beginning. In making a will, for example, the writing is its inception. 3 Coke, 31b; Plowd. 343.

INCERTA PRO NULLIUS HABENTUR. Things uncertain are held for nothing. Dav. 33.

INCERTA QUANTITAS VITIAT ACTUM. An uncertain quantity vitiates the act. 1 Rolle, 465.

INCEST. The carnal copulation of a man and a woman related to each other in any of the degrees within which marriage is prohibited by law. Bish. Mar. & Div. 214-221.

INCH (Lat. uncia). A measure of length, containing one-twelfth part of a foot.

INCH OF CANDLE. A mode of sale at one time in use among merchants. A notice is first given upon the exchange, or other public place, as to the time of sale. The goods to be sold are divided into lots, printed papers of which, and the conditions of sale, are published. When the sale takes place, a small piece of candle, about an inch long, is kept burning, and the last bidder, when the candle goes out, is entitled to the lot or parcel for which he bids. Wharton.

INCHARTARE. To grant by a writing.

INCIDENT. This term is used both substantively and adjectively of a thing which, either usually or naturally and inseparably, depends upon, appertains to, or follows another that is more worthy. For example, rent is usually incident to a reversion (1 Hilliard, Real Prop. 243), while the right of alienation is necessarily incident to a fee-simple at common law, and cannot be separated by a grant (1 Washb. Real Prop. 54). So a court baron is inseparably incident to a manor, in England. Kitch. Cts. 36; Co. Litt. 151. All nominate contracts and all estates known to common law have certain incidents which they draw with them, and which it is not necessary to reserve in words. See Jacob.

INCIDERE (Lat. from in, into or upon, and cadere, to fall). In the civil and old English law. To fall into. Calv. Lex.; Brissonius.

To fall out; to happen; to come to pass. Calv. Lex.

To fall upon or under; to become subject or liable to. Incidere in legem, to incur the penalty of a law. Brissonius. Quibus modis quis incidat in assisam, in what ways a person may become liable to an assize. Bracton, fols. 170b, 171. Incidere in misericordiam, to fall into mercy; to become liable to amercement. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 44, § 2.

INCIPITUR (Lat.) In practice. This word, which means "it is begun," signifies the commencement of the entry on the roll on signing judgment, etc.

INCIVILE EST, NISI TOTA LEGE PROSpecta, una aliqua particula ejus proposita, judicare, vel respondere. It is improper, unless the whole law has been examined, to give judgment or advice upon a view of a single clause of it. Dig. 1. 3. 24. See Hob. 171a.

INCIVILE EST NISI TOTA SENTENTIA inspecta, de aliqua parte judicare. It is improper to pass an opinion on any part of a sentence without examining the whole. Hob. 171.

INCLAMARE (Law Lat. from in, to or upon, and clamare, to cry). In old European law. To cry out for a person, as a crier does in court; to summon to court. Inclamatus, proclaimed; called or summoned by proclamation (in jus exactus). Edict. Theod. c. 145; Spelman.

INCLOSURE. In English law. Inclosure is the act of freeing land from rights of common, commonable rights, and generally all rights which obstruct cultivation and the productive employment of labor on the soil.

Also, an artificial fence around one's estate. 39 Vt. 34, 326; 36 Wis. 42. See "Close."

INCLUSIO UNIUS EST EXCLUSIO ALTERIUS. The inclusion of one is the exclusion of another. 11 Coke, 58.

INCLUSIVE. Comprehended in computation. In computing time, as ten days from a particular time, one day is generally to be included, and one excluded. See "Exclusive."

INCOLA (Lat. from incolere, to inhabit, to dwell in). In the civil law. An inhabitant; a dweller or resident. Properly, one who has transferred his domicile to any country. One who comes from abroad, and takes up his abode in a place, with the view of residing there. The peculiar sense of the word seems to be derived from the component particle "in," having the sense of "into," or "entry." Domicile made a person an incola, as birth made him civis (a citizen). Code, 10. 40. 7; Phillim. Dom. 25, 26.

——In Old English Law. A subject. St. Marlb. pr.; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 13.

INCOLAS DOMICILIUM FACIT. Residence creates domicile. 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 363, 366. See "Domicile."

INCOME. The gain which proceeds from labor, business, or property of any kind. 44 Pa. St. 347. It is as large a word as can be used to denote a person's receipts (21 Ch. Div. 85), and means "gross income," not "profits" (18 Wend. [N. Y.] 605), though the contrary has been held (5 Metc. [Mass.] 596).

INCOMMODUM NON SOLVIT ARGUMENtum. An inconvenience does not solve an argument.

INCOMMUNICACION. In Spanish law. The condition of a prisoner who is not permitted to see or to speak with any person visiting him during his confinement. A person accused cannot be subjected to this treatment unless it be expressly ordered by the judge, for some grave offense, and it cannot be continued for a longer period than is absolutely necessary. Art. 7, Reglamento de 26 Setiembre, 1835. This precaution is resorted to for the purpose of preventing the accused from knowing beforehand the testimony of the witnesses, or from attempting to corrupt them, and concert such measures as will efface the traces of his guilt. As soon, therefore, as the danger of his doing so has ceased, the interdiction ceases likewise. Escriche, Dic. Raz.

INCOMPATIBILITY. Incapability of existing or being exercised together.

Thus, the relations of landlord and of tenant cannot exist in one man at the same time in reference to the same land. Two offices may be incompatible, either from their nature or by statutory provisions. Const. U. S. art. 6, § 3, note 5; Id. art. 1, § 6, note 2; 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 277; 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 219. See "Office."

INCOMPETENCY.

——Of Officers. Lack of ability or fitness to discharge the required duty.

Judges and jurors are said to be incompetent from having an interest in the subject matter. A judge is also incompetent to give judgment in a matter not within his jurisdiction. See "Jurisdiction.'

——Of Witness. Want of legal capacity to testify.

——Of Evidence. Not proper to be received. Incompetency relates to the evidence itself, not to the fact to be proved thereby.

——In French Law. Inability or insufficiency of a judge to try a cause brought before him, proceeding from lack of jurisdiction.

INCONCLUSIVE. Not finally decisive. Inconclusive presumptions are capable of being overcome by opposing proof. 3 Bouv. Inst. 3063.

INCONTINENCE. Impudicity; indulgence in unlawful carnal connection.

INCORPORALIA BELLO NON ADQUIruntur. Things incorporeal are not acquired by war. 6 Maule & S. 104.

INCORPORATE.

(1) To form into a corporation; to procure or to grant a corporate franchise.

(2) To include in any writing the contents of any other writing, whether by actual insertion, or by mere reference to the document to be incorporated.

INCORPORATION. The act of creating a corporation.

——In Civil Law. The union of one domain to another.

INCORPOREAL. Having no body or corpus; not material or tangible; not an object of sense, but existing solely in contemplation of law.

INCORPOREAL CHATTELS. A class of incorporeal rights growing out of or incident to things personal; such as patent rights and copyrights. 2 Steph. Comm. 72.

INCORPOREAL HEREDITAMENTS. Anything, the subject of property, which is inheritable, and not tangible or visible. 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 4. A right issuing out of a thing corporate, whether real or personal, or concerning or annexed to or exercisable within the same. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 20; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 10. See "Hereditaments."

INCORPOREAL PROPERTY. In civil law. That which consists in legal right merely. The same as choses in action at common law.

INCORRIGIBLE ROGUE. A species of rogue or offender, described in St. 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, and St. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 38. 4 Steph. Comm. 309.

INCREASE, COSTS OF. In English law. It was formerly a practice with the jury to award to the successful party in an action the nominal sum of 40s. only for his costs; and the court assessed by their own officer the actual amount of the successful party's costs; and the amount so assessed, over and above the nominal sum awarded by the jury, was thence called "costs of increase." Lush, Com. Law Prac. 775. The practice has now wholly ceased. Rapalje & L.

INCREMENTUM. In old English law. Increase; addition; accretion. Cowell.

INCROACHMENT. See "Encroachment."

INCULPATE. To impute blame or guilt; to accuse.

INCULPATORY. In the law of evidence. Going or tending to establish guilt; intended to establish guilt; criminative. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 251, 252.

INCUMBENT. In ecclesiastical law. A clerk resident on his benefice with cure. He is so called because he does, or ought to, bend the whole of his studies to his duties. In common parlance, it signifies one who is in possession of an office; as, the present incumbent.

INCUMBRANCE. Any right to, or interest in, land which may subsist in third persons, to the diminution of the value of the estate of the tenant, but consistently with the passing of the fee. 5 Conn. 527; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 242.

INCUMBRANCER. One who holds an incumbrance upon another's estate.

INCUR. To become subject to; to bring on. 4 Denio (N. Y.) 103. "Men contract debts; they incur liabilities." 15 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 48.

INCURRERE, or INCURRAMENTUM. To become liable to or subject to. Cowell.

INDE. Thereof; therefrom; therefore or therewith.

INDE DATAE LEGES NE FORTIOR OMnia posset. Laws were made lest the stronger should have unlimited power. Dav. 36.

INDEBITATUS (Law Lat.) Indebted. Nunquam indebitatus, never indebted. The title of the plea substituted in England for nil debet.

INDEBITATUS ASSUMPSIT (Lat.) In pleading. That species of action of assumpsit in which the plaintiff alleges, in his declaration, first a debt, and then a promise in consideration of the debt to pay the amount to the plaintiff.

It is so called from the words in which the promise is laid in the Latin form, translated in the modern form, "being indebted he promised." The promise so laid is generally an implied one only. See 1 Chit. Pl. 334; Steph. Pl. 318; 4 Robinson, Prac. 490 et seq.; Yelv. 21; 4 Coke, 92b. This form of action is brought to recover in damages the amount of the debt or demand. Upon the trial the jury will, according to evidence, give verdict for whole or part of that sum. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 155; Selw. N. P. 68, 69 et seq.

Indebitatus assumpsit is in this distinguished from "debt" and "covenant," which proceed directly for the debt, damages being given only for the detention of the debt. Debt lies on contracts by specialty as well as by parol, while indebitatus assumpsit lies only on parol contracts, whether express or implied. Browne, Actions at Law, 317.

For the history of this form of action, see 3 Reeve, Hist. Com. Law; 2 Comyn, Cont. 549-556; 1 H. Bl. 550, 551; 3 Bl. Comm. 154; Yelv. 70. See "Assumpsit."

INDEBITI SOLUTIO (Lat.) In civil law. The payment to one of what is not due to him. If the payment was made by mistake, the civilians recovered it back by an action called condictio indebiti. With us, such money may be recovered by an action of assumpsit.

INDEBITUM (Lat.) In civil law. Not due or owing. Dig. 12. 6; Calv. Lex.

INDEBTEDNESS. The state of being in debt, without regard to the ability or inability of the party to pay the same. See 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 343; 2 Hill, Abr. 421.

But in order to create an indebtedness, there must be an actual liability at the time, either to pay then or at a future time. If, for example, a person were to enter and become surety for another, who enters into a rule of reference, he does not thereby become a debtor to the opposite party until the rendition of the judgment on the award. 1 Mass. 134. See "Debt."

INDECENCY. An act tending to obscenity. "The term [indecent] is said to signify more than 'indelicate,' and less than 'immodest,'—to mean something unfit for the eye or ear." 12 Fed. 671.

INDECENT EXPOSURE. Willful or negligent exposure of the person, or the private parts thereof, in a public place. 2 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 1130; 2 Gray (Mass.) 72; 32 Mo. 560; 56 Ind. 328.

To constitute an offense at common law, the offense must be in such a place that a number of persons may be offended thereby. 11 Cox, C. C. 659; 18 Vt. 574.

INDECIMABLE. Not tithable.

INDEFEASIBLE. That which cannot be defeated or undone. This epithet is usually applied to an estate or right which cannot be defeated.

INDEFENSUS (Lat.) One sued or impleaded who refuses or has nothing to answer.

INDEFINITE FAILURE OF ISSUE. See "Failure of Issue."

INDEFINITE NUMBER. A number which may be increased or diminished at pleasure.

When a corporation is composed of an indefinite number of persons, any number of them consisting of a majority of those present may do any act, unless it be otherwise regulated by the charter or by-laws.

INDEFINITE PAYMENT. That which a debtor who owes several debts to a creditor makes without making an appropriation. In that case the creditor has a right to make such appropriation.

INDEFINITUM AEQUIPOLLET UNIVERsali. The undefined is equivalent to the whole. 1 Vent. 368.

INDEFINITUM SUPPLET LOCUM UNIversalis. The undefined supplies the place of the whole. 4 Coke, 77.

INDEMNIFY. To save harmless; to secure against loss or damage; to make good; to put one in the situation he was in before sustaining a loss.

INDEMNIS (Lat.) Without loss, damage, or harm.

INDEMNITEE. The person who is protected by a contract of indemnity.

INDEMNITOR. The person who, by a contract of indemnity, agrees to protect another.

INDEMNITY. That which is given to a person to prevent his suffering damage. 2 McCord (S. C.) 279.

Security to save harmless. A contract whereby one party agrees to secure another against an anticipated loss or damage.

For distinction between "indemnity" and "guaranty," see "Guaranty."

INDEMPNIS (Law Lat.) The old form of writing indemnis. Towns. Pl. 19. So, indempnificatus for indemnificatus.

INDENIZATION. The act of making a denizen.

INDENT (Lat. in, and dens, tooth). To cut in the shape of teeth.

Deeds of indenture were anciently written on the same parchment or paper as many times as there were parties to the instrument, the word chirographum being written between, and then the several copies cut apart in a zigzag or notched line (whence the name), part of the word chirographum being on either side of it, and each party kept a copy. The practice now is to cut the top or side of the deed in a waving or notched line. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 295.

To bind by indentures; to apprentice; as, to indent a young man to a shoemaker. Webster.

——In American Law. An indented certificate issued by the government of the United States at the close of the Revolution, for the principal or interest of the public debt. Ramsay; Hamilton; Webster; Elliot, Funding System, 35; 5 McLean (U. S.) 178; Act April 30, 1790, Sess. 2, c. 9, § 14; Act March 3, 1825, Sess. 2, c. 65, § 17. The word is no longer in use in this sense.

INDENTURE. A formal written instrument made between two or more persons in different interests, as opposed to a deed poll, which is one made by a single person, or by several having similar interests.

Its name comes from a practice of indenting or scolloping such an instrument on the top or side in a waving line. This is not necessary in England at the present day, by St. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, § 5, but was in Lord Coke's time, when no words of indenture would supply its place. 5 Coke, 20. In this country it is a mere formal act, not necessary to the deed's being an indenture. See Bac. Abr. "Leases" (E 2); Comyn, Dig. "Fait" (C, and note d); Litt. § 370; Co. Litt. 143b, 229a; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 1, § 24; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 294; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 587 et seq.; 1 Steph. Comm. 447. The ancient practice was to deliver as many copies of an instrument as there were parties to it. And as early as King John it became customary to write the copies on the same parchment, with the word chirographum, or some other word, written between them, and then to cut them apart through such word, leaving part of each letter on either side the line, which was at first straight, afterwards indented or notched. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 89; Du Cange; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 587 et seq. See "Indent."

INDENTURE OF APPRENTICESHIP. A contract in two parts, by which a person is bound to serve another in his trade, art, or occupation, on condition of being instructed in it. See "Apprentice."

INDEPENDENT CONTRACT. One in which the mutual acts or promises have no relation to each other, either as equivalents or considerations. Civ. Code La. art. 1762; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 699.

INDEPENDENT COVENANTS. Covenants in an instrument which are independent of each other, or where the performance of one does not depend on the performance of the other. 1 Seld. 247.

INDEPENDENTER SE HABET ASSECUratio a viaggio navis. The voyage insured is an independent or distinct thing from the voyage of the ship. 3 Kent, Comm. 318, note.

INDETERMINATE. That which is uncertain, or not particularly designated; as, if I sell you one hundred bushels of wheat, without stating what wheat. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 950.

INDEX ANIMI SERMO. Speech is the index of the mind.

INDIAN TRIBE. A separate and distinct community or body of the aboriginal Indian race of men found in the United States. See 5 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 16, 17; 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 193; 3 Kent, Comm. 308-318; Story, Const. § 1096; 4 How. (U. S.) 567; 1 McLean (U. S.) 254; 6 Hill (S. C.) 546; 8 Ala. (N. S.) 48.

INDICARE (Law Lat. from index, a shower or pointer). In the civil law. To show or discover.

To fix or tell the price of a thing. Calv. Lex.

To inform against; to accuse. Dig. 50. 16. 197.

INDICATIF. An abolished writ by which a prosecution was in some cases removed from a court christian to the queen's bench. Enc. Lond.

INDICATION. In the law of evidence. A sign or token; a fact pointing to some inference or conclusion. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 251, 252, 263, 275.

INDICAVIT (Lat. from indicare, to show). In English practice. A writ of prohibition that lies for a patron of a church, whose clerk is sued in the spiritual court by the clerk of another patron, for tithes amounting to a fourth part of the value of the living. 3 Bl. Comm. 91; 3 Steph. Comm. 711. So termed from the emphatic word of the Latin form. Reg. Orig. 35b, 36.

INDICIA (Lat.) Signs; marks. Conjectures which result from circumstances not absolutely certain and necessary, but merely probable, and which may turn out not to be true, though they have the appearance of truth.

The term is much used in the civil law in a sense nearly or entirely synonymous with "circumstantial evidence." It denotes facts which give rise to inferences, rather than the inferences themselves. However numerous indicia may be, they only show that a thing may be, not that it has been. An indicium can have effect only when a connection is essentially necessary with the principal. Effects are known by their causes, but only when the effects can arise only from the causes to which they are attributed. When several causes may have produced one and the same effect, it is therefore unreasonable to attribute it to any particular one of such causes.

The term is much used in common law of signs or marks of identity. For example, in replevin it is said that property must have indicia, or ear marks, by which to distinguish it from other property of the same kind. So it is much used in the phrase "indicia of crime," in a sense similar to that of the civil law.

INDICIUM (Lat.) In civil law. A sign or mark; a species of proof, answering very nearly to the "circumstantial evidence" of the common law. Best, Pres. p. 13, § 11, note; Wills, Circ. Ev. 34.

INDICTED. Having had an indictment found against him.

INDICTEE. A person indicted.

INDICTIO (Lat.) In old public law. A declaration; a proclamation. Indictio belli, a declaration or indiction of war. Molloy de Jur. Mar. 17.

INDICTION. The space of fifteen years. It was used in dating at Rome and in England. It began at the dismission of the Nicene council, A. D. 312. The first year was reckoned the first of the first indiction, and so on till fifteen years afterwards. The sixteenth year was the first year of the second indiction; the thirty-first year was the first year of the third indiction, etc.

INDICTMENT. In criminal practice. A written accusation against one or more persons of a crime or misdemeanor, presented to, and preferred upon oath or affirmation by, a grand jury legally convoked. 4 Bl. Comm. 299; Co. Litt. 126; 2 Hale, P. C. 152; Bac. Abr.; Comyn, Dig.; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 168.

An accusation at the suit of the crown, found to be true by the oaths of a grand jury.

A written accusation of a crime presented upon oath by a grand jury.

The word is said to be derived from the old French word inditer, which signifies to indicate, to show, or point out. Its object is to indicate the offense charged against the accused. Rey des Inst. l'Angl. tom. 2, p. 347.

A distinction has been taken between "indictment" and "presentment," the former being a bill of indictment presented to the grand jury by the prosecuting officer, and by it found to be "a true bill;" while the latter is a return made by the grand jury of its own motion, upon which a bill of indictment was subsequently framed. 4 Bl. Comm. 301; 7 Grat. (Va.) 631. This distinction is no longer of much practical importance; an indictment in modern practice being both a finding and a presentment. See 9 Gray (Mass.) 290.

INDICTOR. He who causes another to be indicted. The latter is sometimes called the "indictee."

INDIFFERENT. To have no bias or partiality. 7 Conn. 229. A juror, an arbitrator, and a witness ought to be indifferent; and when they are not so they may be challenged. See 9 Conn. 42.

INDIGENA (Lat. from inde, in, and geno, gigno, to beget). A native; born or bred in the same country or town. Ainsworth. A subject born, or naturalized by act of parliament. Opposed to alienigena. Rymer, tom. 15, p. 37; Co. Litt. 8a.

INDIRECT EVIDENCE. Evidence which does not prove the fact in question, but one from which it may be presumed. See "Evidence."

INDISTANTER. Instanter.

INDITEE (Law Fr.) In old English law. An indictee. 9 Coke, pref.

INDIVIDUUM (Lat.) In civil law. That cannot be divided. Calv. Lex.

INDIVISIBLE. Which cannot be separated; entire.

INDIVISUM (Lat.) That which two or more persons hold in common without partition; undivided.

INDORSAT. In old Scotch law. Indorsed. 2 Pitc. Crim. Tr. 41.

INDORSE. To write on the back. Bills of exchange and promissory notes are indorsed by a party's writing his name on the back. Writs in Massachusetts are indorsed in some cases by a person's writing his name on the back, in which case he becomes liable to pay the costs of the suit.

INDORSEE. The person to whom a negotiable instrument is transferred by indorsement.

INDORSEMENT.

——In Commercial Law. That which is written on the back of an instrument in writing, and which has relation to it.

Writing one's name on the back of a promissory note or other negotiable instrument. 20 Vt. 499.

An indorsement is generally made primarily for the purpose of transferring the rights of the holder of the instrument to some other person. It has, however, various results, such as rendering the indorser liable in certain events; and hence an indorsement is sometimes made merely for the purpose of additional security. This is called an "accommodation indorsement" when done without consideration other than an exchange of indorsements. See "Accommodation."

(1) A blank indorsement is one in which the name of the indorser only is written upon the instrument. It is commonly made by writing the name of the indorser on the back (13 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 315), but a writing across the face may answer the same purpose (18 Pick. [Mass.] 63; 16 East, 12).

(2) An indorsement in full is one in which mention is made of the name of the indorsee. Chit. Bills, 170.

(3) A conditional indorsement is one made subject to some condition without the performance of which the instrument will not be or remain valid. 4 Taunt. 30.

(4) A qualified indorsement is one which restrains, or limits, or qualifies, or enlarges the liability of the indorser, in any manner different from what the law generally imports as his true liability, deducible from the nature of the instrument. Chit. Bills (8th Ed.) 261; 7 Taunt. 160. The words commonly used are sans recours, without recourse. 3 Mass. 225; 12 Mass. 14.

(5) A restrictive indorsement is one which restrains the negotiability of the instrument to a particular person, or for a particular purpose. 1 Rob. (La.) 222.

——In Criminal Law. An entry made upon the back of a writ or warrant.

When a warrant for the arrest of a person charged with a crime has been issued by a justice of the peace of one county, which is to be executed in another county, it is necessary, in some states, that it should be indorsed by a justice of the county where it is to be executed. This indorsement is called "backing."

INDORSER. The person who makes an indorsement.

INDUCEMENT.

——In Contracts. The benefit which the obligor is to receive from a contract is the inducement for making it.

——In Criminal Law. The motive. Confessions are sometimes made by criminals under the influence of promises or threats. When these promises or threats are made by persons in authority, the confessions cannot be received in evidence. See "Confession."

——In Pleading. The statement of matter which is introductory to the principal subject of the declaration or plea, and which is necessary to explain or elucidate it. See "Colloquium."

INDUCIAE (Lat.)

——In Civil Law. A truce; cessation from hostilities for a time agreed upon. Also, such agreement itself. Calv. Lex. So in international law. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 3, c. 2, § 11; Huber, Jur. Civ. p. 743, § 22.

——In Old Practice. A delay or indulgence allowed by law. Calv. Lex.; Du Cange; Bracton, fol. 352b; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 5, § 8. See Bell, Dict.; Burton, Law Scot. 561. So used in old maritime law; e. g., an induciae of twenty days after safe arrival of vessel was allowed in case of a bottomry bond, to raise principal and interest. Locc. de Jure Mar. lib. 2, c. 6, § 11.

INDUCIAE LEGALES (Lat.) In Scotch law. The days between the citation of the defendant and the day of appearance; the days between the teste day and day of return of the writ.

INDUCTION. In ecclesiastical law. The giving a clerk, instituted to a benefice, the actual possession of its temporalities, in the nature of livery of seisin. Ayliffe, Par. 299.

INDULGENCE. A favor granted.

It is a general rule that where a creditor gives indulgence, by entering into a binding contract with a principal debtor, by which the surety is or may be damnified, such surety is discharged, because the creditor has put it out of his power to enforce immediate payment, when the surety would have a right to require him to do so. 6 Dow, Parl. Cas. 238; 3 Mer. 272; Bac. Abr. "Oblig." (D).

INDULTO. In Spanish law. The condonation or remission of the punishment imposed on a criminal for his offense. L. 1, tit. 32, pt. 7. This power is exclusively vested in the king.

INDUMENT. Endowment (q. v.)

INDUSTRIAM. See "Per Industriam."

INEBRIATE. An habitual drunkard. A person rendered unfit, by habitual intoxication, to transact business.

INELIGIBILITY. The incapacity to be lawfully elected to an office.

INESSE POTEST DONATIONI, MODUS, conditio sive causa; ut modus est; si conditio; quia causa. In a gift there may be manner, condition, and cause; as (ut), introduces a manner; if (si), a condition; because (quia), a cause. Dyer, 138.

INEVITABLE ACCIDENT. A term used in the civil law, nearly synonymous with fortuitous event. 10 Miss. 572.

Any accident which cannot be foreseen and prevented. Though used as synonymous with "act of God," it would seem to have a wider meaning, including not only accidents resulting from natural forces, but those originating from human agencies. 4 Doug. 287, 290, per Lord Mansfield; 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 198, per Cowen, J.; 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 222; 2 Ga. 349; 10 Miss. 572; 1 Pars. Cont. 635; Whart. Neg. 553.

——In the Law of Maritime Collisions. Inevitable accident, "an occurrence which the party charged with the collision could not possibly prevent by the exercise of ordinary care, caution, and maritime skill." 2 Wall. (U. S.) 550.

INEST DE JURE. It is implied by law.

INFALISTATUS (Law Lat. from in, and Fr. falaise, the seashore). In old English law. Exposed upon the sands or seashore. A species of punishment mentioned in Hengham. Summa Parva, c. 3; Cowell.

INFAMIS (Lat.) In Roman law. One who, in consequence of the application of a general rule, and not by virtue of an arbitrary decision of the censors, lost his political rights, but preserved his civil rights. Savigny, Dr. Rom. § 79.

INFAMOUS CRIME. A crime which works infamy in one who has committed it.

——In the United States. It has been held that only those crimes are infamous that were so at common law (1 Dak. 289), but the general rule is that any offense is infamous that may be punished by death, or by imprisonment in the penitentiary, with or without hard labor. 128 U. S. 393; 8 Gray (Mass.) 349; 75 Mich. 611.

The test is the possible punishment, and not that awarded in a particular case. 114 U. S. 417.

——At Common Law. Treason and all felonies, and certain misdemeanors affecting the public interest most closely, were infamous crimes, the nature of the crime being the test. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 373; 114 U. S. 417.

INFAMY. That state which is produced by the conviction of an infamous crime, and the loss of honor, which renders the infamous person incompetent as a witness.

INFANGTHEFE (from in, within, fang, taken, and thef, or theof, a thief). In old English law A thief taken in, or within; i. e., within the manor or liberty of any man having jurisdiction to try him. Spelman; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 37, § 2. A thief taken on any one's lands, being one of his own men or tenants, found in possession of the thing stolen. Bracton, fol. 154b; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 40.

The privilege or liberty, anciently granted to lords of certain manors, to try such offenders. Id.; Cowell; LL. Gul. Conq. lib. 3. note.

INFANS NON MULTUM A FURIOSO distat. An infant does not differ much from a lunatic. Bracton, lib. 3, c. 2, § 8; Dig. 50. 17. 5. 40; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 223, 224, 242.

INFANT. At common law, one of either sex under the age of twenty-one years. Co. Litt. 171. By statute, the age at which females reach their majority has been lowered in some states. See "Age."

INFANTIA (Lat. from infans). In the civil law. The age from birth till the completion of seven years. 4 Bl. Comm. 22; Calv. Lex.; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, tit. 21, § 247.

INFANTICIDE. The murder of a new-born infant. It is thus distinguishable from "abortion" and "foeticide," which are limited to the destruction of the life of the foetus in utero.

INFANZON. In Spanish law. A person of noble birth, who exercises within his domains and inheritance no other rights and privileges than those conceded to him.

INFEFT. In Scotch law. To give seisin or possession of lands; to invest or enfeoff. 1 Kames, Eq. 215.

INFEFTMENT.

——In Old Scotch Law. Investiture or infeudation, including both charter and seisin. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 2, p. 110.

——In Later Law. Sasine, or the instrument of possession. Bell, Dict.

INFENSARE CURIAM (Law Lat.) An expression applied to a court when it suggested to an advocate something which he had omitted through mistake or ignorance. Spelman.

INFEOFFMENT. The act or instrument of feoffment. In Scotland it is synonymous with sasine, meaning the instrument of possession. Formerly it was synonymous with "investiture." Bell, Dict. See "Enfeoffment."

INFERENCE. A conclusion drawn by reason from premises established by proof.

INFERIOR. One who, in relation to another, has less power and is below him; one who is bound to obey another. He who makes the law is the superior; he who is bound to obey it, the inferior. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 8.

INFERIOR COURTS. By this term are understood all courts except the supreme courts. An inferior court is a court of limited jurisdiction, and it must appear on the face of its proceedings that it has jurisdiction, or its proceedings will be void. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2529.

INFICIARI, or INFITIARI (Lat.) In the civil law. To deny; to deny one's liability; to refuse to pay a debt or restore a pledge; to deny the allegation of a plaintiff; to deny the charge of an accuser. Calv. Lex.

INFICIATIO (Lat.) In civil law. Denial; denial of fact alleged by plaintiff,—especially, a denial of debt or deposit. Vocat; Calv. Lex.

INFIDEL. One who does not believe in the existence of a God who will reward or punish in this world, or that which is to come. Willes, 550. One who professes no religion that can bind his conscience to speak the truth. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 368.

This term has been very indefinitely applied. Under the name of "infidel," Lord Coke comprises Jews and heathens (2 Inst. 506; 3 Inst. 165), and Hawkins includes among infidels such as do not believe either in the Old or New Testament (Hawk. P. C. bk. 2, c. 46, § 148).

INFIDELITAS (Lat.) In feudal law. Infidelity; faithlessness to one's feudal oath. Spelman.

INFIDUCIARE (Law Lat.) In old European law. To pledge property. Spelman.

INFIHT (Saxon). An assault upon an inhabitant of same dwelling. Anc. Inst. Eng.

INFINITUM IN JURE REPROBATUR. That which is infinite or endless is reprehensible in law. 9 Coke, 45.

INFIRMATIVE. Weakening. Webster. Tending to weaken or render infirm; disprobabilizing. 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 13, 14. Exculpatory is used by some authors as synonymous. See Wills, Circ. Ev. 120 et seq.; Best, Pres. § 217 et seq.

INFIRMATIVE CONSIDERATION. In the law of evidence. A consideration, supposition, or hypothesis of which the criminative facts of a case admit, and which tends to weaken the inference or presumption of guilt deducible from them. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 153-155.

INFIRMATIVE FACT. In the law of evidence. A fact set up, proved, or even supposed, in opposition to the criminative facts of a case, the tendency of which is to weaken the force of the inference of guilt deducible from them. 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 14; Best, Pres. § 217 et seq.; Burrill, Circ. Ev. 154.

Otherwise called an "exculpatory fact."

INFIRMATIVE HYPOTHESIS. In the law of evidence. An hypothesis upon which the criminative circumstances may be explained consistently with the innocence of the accused.

INFORMAL. Deficient in matters of form.

INFORMALITY. Want of legal form.

INFORMATION.

——In French Law. The act or instrument which contains the depositions of witnesses against the accused. Poth. Proc. Civ. § 2, art. 5.

——In Practice. A complaint or accusation exhibited against a person for some criminal offense. 4 Bl. Comm. 308.

It differs in no respect from an indictment in its form and substance, except that it is filed at the mere discretion of the proper law officer of the government, ex officio, without the intervention of a grand jury. 4 Bl. Comm. 308. The process has not been formally put in motion by congress for misdemeanors, but is common in civil prosecutions for penalties and forfeitures. 3 Story, Const. 659. The information is usually made upon knowledge given by some other person than the officer, called the "relator."

The term is also applied to the pleading by which proceedings by the government, particularly those of a quasi criminal character, are begun.

INFORMATION IN THE NATURE OF A quo warranto. A proceeding against the usurper of a franchise or office. See "Quo Warranto."

INFORMATION OF INTRUSION. A proceeding instituted by the state prosecuting officer against intruders upon the public domain. See Gen. St. Mass. c. 141; 3 Pick. (Mass.) 224; 6 Leigh (Va.) 588.

INFORMATUS NON SUM (Lat.) In practice. I am not informed. A formal answer made in court or put upon record by an attorney when he has nothing to say in defense of his client. Styles, Reg. 372.

INFORMER. A person who informs or prefers an accusation against another, whom he suspects of the violation of some penal statute.

INFORTIATUM (Lat.) In civil law. The second part of the Digest or Pandects of Justinian. See "Digest."

This part, which commences with the third title of the twenty-fourth book, and ends with the thirty-eighth book, was thus called because it was the middle part, which, it was said, was supported and fortified by the two others. Some have supposed that this name was given to it because it treats of successions, substitutions, and other important matters, and, being more used than the others, produced greater fees to the lawyers.

INFRA (Lat.) Below; under; beneath; underneath. The opposite of supra, above. Thus, we say, primo gradu est,—supra, pater, mater, infra, filius, filia; in the first degree of kindred in the ascending line, above is the father and the mother, below, in the descending line, son and daughter. Inst. 3. 6. 1.

In another sense, this word signifies "within;" as, infra corpus civitatis, within the body of the county; infra praesidia, within the guards. So of time, "during;" infra furorem, during the madness. This use is not classical. The sole instance of the word in this sense in the Code, infra anni spatium (Code, bk. 5, tit. 9, § 2), is corrected to intra anni spatium, in the edition of the Corpus Jur. Civ. of 1833, at Leipsic. The use of infra for intra seems to have sprung up among the barbarians after the fall of the Roman empire. In Italian, the preposition fra, which is a corruption of infra, is used in the sense of intra. Bonetti, Ital. Dict.

INFRA AETATEM (Lat.) Within or under age.

INFRA ANNOS NUBILES (Law Lat.) Under marriageable years; not yet of marriageable age. 6 Coke, 22.

INFRA ANNUM LUCTUS (Lat.) Within the year of grief or mourning. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 457; Code, 5. 9. 2. But intra anni spatium, is the phrase used in the passage in the Code referred to. See Corp. Jur. Civ. 1843, Leipsic. Intra tempus luctus occurs in Novella 22, c. 40. This year was at first ten months, afterwards twelve. 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 612.

INFRA BRACHIA (Lat.) Within her arms. Used of a husband de jure as well as de facto. 2 Inst. 317. Also, inter brachia. Bracton, fol. 148b. It was in this sense that a woman could only have an appeal for murder of her husband inter brachia sua. Woman's Lawy. pp. 332, 335.

INFRA CIVITATEM. Within the state.

INFRA CORPUS COMITATUS (Lat.) Within the body of the county.

The common-law courts have jurisdiction infra corpus comitatus. The admiralty, on the contrary, has no such jurisdiction, unless, indeed, the tide water may extend within such county. 5 How. (U. S.) 441, 451. See "Admiralty;" "Fauces Terrae."

INFRA DIGNITATEM CURIAE (Lat.) Below the dignity of the court. Example: In equity a demurrer will lie to a bill on the ground of the triviality of the matter in dispute, as being below the dignity of the court. See 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 183; 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 364; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4237.

INFRA FUROREM (Law Lat.) During madness; while in a state of insanity. Bracton, fol. 19b; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 9, § 17.

INFRA HOSPITIUM (Lat.) Within the inn. When once a traveler's baggage comes infra hospitium, that is, in the care and under the charge of the innkeeper, it is at his risk. See 1 Coke, 32; 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 175; 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 282; 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 642; 8 N. H. 408; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 47; 9 Pick. (Mass.) 280; 7 Cush. (Mass.) 417; 1 Adol. & E. 522; 3 Nev. & M. 576; 2 Kent, Comm. 593 (9th Ed.); Story, Bailm. § 478; 1 Pars. Cont. 631, notes. See "Guest;" "Innkeeper."

INFRA JURISDICTIONEM (Law Lat.) Within the jurisdiction. 2 Strange, 827; Latch, 214.

INFRA LIGEANTIAM REGIS (Law Lat.) Within the king's ligeance. Comb. 212.

INFRA METAS (Law Lat.) Within the bounds or limits. Infra metas forestae, within the bounds of the forest. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 12. Infra metas hospitii, within the limits of the household; within the verge. Id. lib. 2, c. 2, § 2.

INFRA PRAESIDIA (Lat. within the walls). A term used in relation to prizes, to signify that they had been brought completely in the power of the captors; that is, within the towns, camps, ports, or fleet of the captors. Formerly the rule was, and perhaps still in some countries is, that the act of bringing a prize infra praesidia changed the property; but the rule now established is that there must be a sentence of condemnation to effect this purpose. 1 C. Rob. Adm. 134; 1 Kent, Comm. 104; Chit. Law Nat. 98; Abb. Shipp. 14; Hugo, Dr. Rom. § 90.

INFRA QUATUOR MARIA (Lat.) Within the four seas. Litt. § 157.

According to classical style, the phrase ought to be "intra," etc. Harg. Co. Litt. lib. 2, note 115.

INFRA REGNUM (Law Lat.) Within the realm. Reg. Orig. 25.

INFRA TEMPUS SEMESTRE (Law Lat.) Within six months (infra sex menses). St. Westminster II. c. 5; 2 Inst. 361; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 195; 3 Bl. Comm. 249.

INFRA TRIDUUM (Law Lat.) Within three days. Formal words in old appeals. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, § 6; Id. c. 35, § 3.

INFRACTION (Lat. infrango, to break in upon). The breach of a law or agreement; the violation of a compact. In the French law this is the generic expression to designate all actions which are punishable by the Code of France.

INFRINGEMENT. In patent law. A word used to denote the act of trespassing upon the incorporeal right secured by a patent. Any person who, without legal permission, shall make, use, or sell to another to be used, the thing which is the subject matter of any existing patent, is guilty of an infringement.

To constitute an infringement, there need not be a precise duplication, but only an adoption of the "operative principle" (1 Fish. Pat. Cas. [U. S.] 319); a mere change in the mechanical incidents, while retaining the principle, being an infringement. By the "principle" of a machine is not meant the original elementary principles of motion, but the modus operandi,—the peculiar device or manner of producing the effect. 1 Gall. (U. S.) 478.

INFUGARE. To cause to flee.

INFUSION. In medical jurisprudence. A pharmaceutical operation, which consists in pouring a hot or cold fluid upon a substance whose medical properties it is desired to extract. The product of this operation.

Although "infusion" differs from "decoction," they are said to be ejusdem generis; and in the case of an indictment which charged the prisoner with giving a decoction, and the evidence was that he had given an infusion, the difference was held to be immaterial. 3 Campb. 74.

INGENIUM (Lat. of middle ages). A net or hook (Du Cange); hence, probably, the meaning given by Spelman of artifice, fraud (ingin). A machine (Spelman), especially for warlike purposes; also, for navigation of a ship (Du Cange).

INGENUI (Lat.) In civil law. Those freemen who were born free. Vicat.

They were a class of freemen, distinguished from those who, born slaves, had afterwards legally obtained their freedom. The latter were called, at various periods, sometimes liberti, sometimes libertini. An unjust or illegal servitude did not prevent a man from being ingenuus.

INGENUITAS (Law Lat.) Manumission; liberty.

INGENUITAS REGNI (Law Lat.) In old English law. The freemen, yeomanry, or commonalty of the kingdom. Cowell. Applied sometimes also to the barons. Id.

INGRESS, EGRESS, AND REGRESS. These words are frequently used in leases to express the right of the lessee to enter, go upon, and return from the lands in question.

INGRESSU (Lat.) An ancient writ of entry, by which the plaintiff or complainant sought an entry into his lands. Tech. Dict.

INGRESSUS (Lat.) In old English law. Ingress; entry. The relief paid by an heir to the lord was sometimes so called. Cowell.

INGROSSATOR (Law Lat.) An engrosser. Ingrossator magni rotuli, engrosser of the great roll; afterwards called "clerk of the pipe." Spelman; Cowell.

INGROSSING. In practice. The act of copying, from a rough draft, a writing, in order that it may be executed; as, ingrossing a deed.

INHABITANT (Lat. in, in, habeo, to dwell). One who has a habitation at a given place. See "Habitation."

The term is one whose meaning varies with the context. 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 771.

Used in the tax laws as convertible with "resident." In making residence a test of taxability, the statute looks only to an actual inhabitancy for some permanent period and purpose, at a prescribed time. 48 Barb. (N. Y.) 51.

INHABITED HOUSE DUTY. A tax assessed in England on inhabited dwelling-houses, according to their annual value (St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 36; 32 & 33 Vict. c. 14, § 11), which is payable by the occupier, the landlord being deemed the occupier where the house is let to several persons (St. 48 Geo. III. c. 55, Schedule B). Houses occupied solely for business purposes are exempt from duty, although a care taker may dwell therein, and houses partially occupied for business purposes are to that extent exempt. Rapalje & L.

INHERENT POWER. An authority possessed without its being derived from another; a right, ability, or faculty of doing a thing, without receiving that right, ability, or faculty from another.

INHERETRIX. The old term for "heiress." Co. Litt. 13a.

INHERIT. To take by inheritance; to take as heir on the death of the ancestor. "To inherit to" a person is a common expression in the books. 3 Coke, 41; 2 Bl. Comm. 254, 255.

INHERITABLE BLOOD. Blood of an ancestor which, while it makes the person in whose veins it flows a relative, will also give him the legal rights of inheritance incident to that relationship. See 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 254, 255. Descendants can derive no title through a person whose blood is not inheritable. Such, in England, are persons attainted and aliens. But attainder is not known in this country. Id. See 4 Kent, Comm. 413, 424; 1 Hilliard, Real Prop. 148; 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 190.

INHERITANCE. A perpetuity in lands to a man and his heirs; the right to succeed to the estate of a person who dies intestate. Dig. 50. 16. 24. The term is applied to lands.

The property which is inherited is called an inheritance.

The term "inheritance" includes not only lands and tenements which have been acquired by descent, but every fee simple or fee tail which a person has acquired by purchase may be said to be an inheritance, because the purchaser's heirs may inherit it. Litt. § 9. See "Estate."

——In Civil Law. The succession to all the rights of the deceased. It is of two kinds: That which arises by testament, when the testator gives his succession to a particular person; and that which arises by operation of law, which is called "succession ab intestat." Heinec. Lec. Elem. §§ 484, 485.

INHERITANCE ACT. The English statute of 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, regulating the law of inheritance. 2 Chit. St. 575; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 37; 1 Steph. Comm. 500.

INHIBITION.

——In Civil Law. A prohibition which the law makes or a judge ordains to an individual. Halifax, Anal. p. 126.

——In English Law. The name of a writ which forbids a judge from further proceeding in a cause depending before him. It is in the nature of a prohibition. Termes de la Ley; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 39.

——In Scotch Law. A personal prohibition which passes by letters under the signet, prohibiting the party inhibited to contract any debt or do any act by which any part of the heritable property may be aliened or carried off, in prejudice of the creditor inhibiting. Ersk. Prac. bk. 2, tit. 2, § 2. See "Diligence."

INHIBITION AGAINST A WIFE. In Scotch law. A writ in the sovereign's name, passing the signet, which prohibits all and sundry from having transactions with a wife, or giving her credit. Bell, Dict.; Ersk. Inst. 1. 6. 26.

INHOC, or INHOKE (Saxon; Law Lat. inhokium). In old records. A nook or corner of a common or fallow field, inclosed and cultivated. Kennett, Par. Ant. 297, 298; Cowell.

INHONESTUS (Lat.) In old English law. Unseemly; not in due order. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 31, § 8.

INIQUISSIMA PAX EST ANTEPONENDA justissimo bello. The most unjust peace is to be preferred to the justest war. 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 257, 305.

INIQUITY. In Scotch practice. A technical expression applied to the decision of an inferior judge who has decided contrary to law. He is said to have committed iniquity. Bell, Dict.

INIQUUM EST ALIOS PERMITTERE, alios inhibere mercaturam. It is inequitable to permit some to trade, and to prohibit others. 3 Inst. 181.

INIQUUM EST ALIQUEM REI SUI ESSE judicem. It is unjust for any one to be judge in his own cause. 12 Coke, 13.

INIQUUM EST INGENUIS HOMINIBUS non esse liberam rerum suarum alienationem. It is against equity for freemen not to have the free disposal of their own property. Co. Litt. 223. See 1 Bouv. Inst. notes 455, 460.

INITIAL (from Lat. initium, beginning). Beginning; placed at the beginning. Webster. Thus, the initials of a man's name are the first letters of his name.

INITIALIA TESTIMONII (Lat.) In Scotch law. A preliminary examination of a witness to ascertain what disposition he bears towards the parties,—whether he has been prompted what to say, whether he has received a bribe, and the like. It resembles in some respects an examination on voir dire in English practice.

INITIATE. Commenced.

A husband was, in feudal law, said to be tenant by the curtesy initiate when a child who might inherit was born to his wife, because he then first had an inchoate right as tenant by the curtesy, and did homage to the lord as one of the pares curtis, peers of the court; whence "curtesy." This right became consummated on the death of the wife before the husband. See 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 127; 1 Steph. Comm. 247.

INITIATIVE. In French law. The name given to the important prerogative conferred by the Charte Constitutionnelle (article 16) on the late king to propose through his ministers projects of laws. 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 39. See "Veto."

INJUNCTION. A prohibitory writ, issued by the authority of, and generally under the seal of, a court of equity, to restrain one or more of the defendants or parties, or quasi parties, to a suit or proceeding in equity, from doing, or from permitting his servants or others who are under his control to do, an act which is deemed to be unjust or inequitable so far as regards the rights of some other party or parties to such suit or proceedings in equity. Eden, Inj. c. 1; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. bk. 3, c. 2, § 1; Story, Eq. Jur. § 861; Willard, Eq. Jur. 341; 4 Bouv. Inst. 120; 2 Green, Ch. (N. J.) 136; 1 Madd. 126.

(1) Preliminary injunctions are used to restrain the party enjoined from doing or continuing to do the wrong complained of, either temporarily or during the continuance of the suit or proceeding in equity in which such injunction is granted, and before the rights of the parties have been definitely settled by the decision and decree of the court in such suit or proceeding.

(2) Final or perpetual injunctions are awarded, or directed to be issued, or the preliminary injunction already issued is made final or perpetual, by the final decree of the court, or when the rights of the parties so far as relates to the subject of the injunction are finally adjudicated and disposed of by the decision and the order or decree of the court. 2 Freem. Ch. 106; 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 69; 3 Yerg. (Tenn.) 366; 1 Bibb (Ky.) 184; 4 Bouv. Inst. 123.

In England, injunctions were divided into "common injunctions" and "special injunctions." Eden, Inj. (3d Am. Ed.) 178, note; Willard, Eq. Jur. 342; Saxt. (N. J.) 504. The common injunction was obtained of course when the defendant in the suit in equity was in default for not entering his appearance, or for not putting in his answer to the complainant's bill within the times prescribed by the practice of the court. Eden, Inj. (3d Am. Ed.) 59-61, 68-72, 93, note; Story, Eq. Jur. § 892; 18 Ves. 523; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. bk. 3, c. 2, § 1, p. 339; Gilb. For. Rom. 194; Newby, Chanc. Prac. c. 4, § 7. Special injunctions were founded upon the oath of the complainant, or other evidence of the truth of the charges contained in his bill of complaint. They were obtained upon a special application to the court, or to the officer of the court who was authorized to allow the issuing of such injunctions, and usually upon notice of such application given to the party whose proceedings were sought to be enjoined. Story, Eq. Jur. § 892; 4 Eden, Inj. 78, 290; Jeremy, Eq. Jur. 339, 341, 342; 3 Mer. 475; 18 Ves. 522, 523. In the United States courts, and in the equity courts of most of the states of the Union, the English practice of granting the common injunction has been discontinued or superseded, either by statute or by the rules of the courts. And the preliminary injunctions are therefore all special injunctions in the courts of this country, where such English practice has been superseded.

INJURIA ABSQUE (or SINE) DAMNO. Wrong without damage; an actionable wrong not resulting in any legal damage.

The doctrine of injuria absque damno applies only in those cases where, though there was a wrongful act, it did not amount to an invasion of a substantial right, the tendency of modern law being to presume nominal damages from every infraction of a legal right, though no actual damage result. Whether nominal damages will be presumed, or the rule of injuria absque damno applied, depends on the disposition of the court to invoke the maxim "de minimis," etc. See 75 Cal. 182; 30 Vt. 443. And this will be done generally only where the right infringed was in itself trivial, as where an officer, on attaching hay, used for a few moments, without leave, a fork belonging to the attachment debtor, and then returned it uninjured. 22 Vt. 231. See Sedgw. Dam. § 96; Suth. Dam. § 3; "Nominal Damages."

INJURIA FIT EI CUI CONVICIUM DICtum est, vel de eo factum carmen famosum. An injury is done to him of whom a reproachful thing is said, or concerning whom an infamous song is made. 9 Coke, 60.

INJURIA NON EXCUSAT INJURIAM. A wrong does not excuse a wrong. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 247, 343, 349; 11 Exch. 822; 15 Q. B. 276; 6 El. & Bl. 76; Branch, Princ.

INJURIA NON PRAESUMITUR. A wrong is not presumed. Co. Litt. 232.

INJURIA PROPRIA NON CADET IN beneficium facientis. No one shall profit by his own wrong.

INJURIA SERVI DOMINUM PERTINGIT. The master is liable for injury done by his servant. Lofft, 229.

INJURIOUS WORDS. In Louisiana. Slander, or libellous words. Civ. Code La. art. 3501.

INJURY (Lat. in, negative, jus, a right). A wrong or tort.

Relative injuries are injuries to those rights which a person possesses in relation to the person who is immediately affected by the wrongful act done.

Absolute injuries are injuries to those rights which a person possesses as being a member of society.

Private injuries are infringements of the private or civil rights belonging to individuals, considered as individuals.

Public injuries are breaches and violations of rights and duties which affect the whole community as a community.

Injuries to personal property are the unlawful taking and detention thereof from the owner; and other injuries are some damage affecting the same while in the claimant's possession, or that of a third person, or injuries to his reversionary interests.

Injuries to real property are ousters, trespasses, nuisances, waste, subtraction of rent, disturbance of right of way, and the like.

It is obvious that the divisions overlap each other, and that the same act may be, for example, a relative, a private, and a public injury at once. For many injuries of this character, the offender may be obliged to suffer punishment for the public wrong, and to recompense the sufferer for the particular loss which he has sustained. The distinction is more commonly marked by the use of the terms civil injuries to denote private injuries, and of crimes, misdemeanors, etc., to denote the public injury done, though not always; as, for example, in case of a public nuisance which may be also a private nuisance.

——In Civil Law. A delict committed in contempt or outrage of any one, whereby his body, his dignity, or his reputation is maliciously injured. Voet, Com. ad Pand. 47. tit. 10, note 1.

A real injury is inflicted by any act by which a person's honor or dignity is affected; as, striking one with a cane, or even aiming a blow without striking; spitting in one's face; assuming a coat of arms, or any other mark or distinction, proper to another, etc. The composing and publishing defamatory libels may be reckoned of this kind. Ersk. Prac. 4. 4. 45.

A verbal injury, when directed against a private person, consists in the uttering contumelious words, which tend to injure his character by making him little or ridiculous. Where the offensive words are uttered in the heat of a dispute, and spoken to the person's face, the law does not presume any malicious intention in the utterer, whose resentment generally subsides with his passion: and yet, even in that case, the truth of the injurious words seldom absolves entirely from punishment. Where the injurious expressions have a tendency to blacken one's moral character, or fix some particular guilt upon him, and are deliberately repeated in different companies, or handed about in whispers to confidants, the crime then becomes slander, agreeably to the distinction of the Roman law. Dig. 15, § 12, "De Injur."

INJUSTUM EST, NISI TOTA LEGE INspectae, de una aliqua ejus particula proposita judicare vel respondere. It is unjust to give judgment or advice concerning any particular clause of a law without having examined the whole law. 8 Coke, 117b.

INLAGARE, or INLEGIARE. To restore to protection of law. Opposed to utlagare. Bracton, lib. 3, tr. 2, c. 14, § 1; Du Cange.

INLAGATION. Restoration to the protection of law.

INLAGHE. A person subject to the law; under the protection of the law.

INLAND. Within the same country. As to what are inland bills of exchange, see "Bill of Exchange."

INLAND BILL OF EXCHANGE. One drawn upon a person living in the same state or country with the drawer.

INLAND NAVIGATION. Includes navigation upon rivers (6 Biss. [U. S.] 364), but not on the Great Lakes (24 How. [U. S.] 1).

INLANDTAL, or INLANTAL (Saxon). The same with inland (q. v.) Cowell.

INLAUGHE. See "Inlaghe."

INLAW. To place under the protection of the law. "Swearing obedience to the king in a leet, which doth inlaw the subject." Bac. Works, IV. 328.

INLIGARE (Law Lat.) In old European law. To confederate; to join in a league (in ligam coire). Spelman.

INMATE. One who dwells in a part of another's house, the latter dwelling, at the same time, in the said house. Kitch. Cts. 45b; Comyn, Dig. "Justices of the Peace" (B 85); 1 Barn. & C. 578; 8 Barn. & C. 71; 9 Barn. & C. 335; 2 Dowl. & R. 743; 2 Man. & R. 227; 4 Man. & R. 151; 2 Russ. Crimes, 937; 1 Deac. Crim. Law, 185; 2 East, P. C. 499, 505; 1 Leach, Crim. Law, 90, 237, 427; Alc. Reg. Cas. 21; 1 Man. & G. 83. See "Lodger."

INN. A house where a traveller is furnished with everything he has occasion for while on his way. Bac. Abr. "Inns" (B); 12 Mod. 255; 3 Barn. & Ald. 283; 4 Camp. 77; 2 Chit. Bailm. 484; 9 B. Mon. (Ky.) 72; 3 Chit. Com. Law, 365, note 6. A public house of entertainment for all who choose to visit it. 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 247.

INNAMIUM. A pledge.

INNAVIGABLE. A term applied in foreign insurance law to a vessel not navigable, through irremediable misfortune by a peril of the sea. The ship is relatively innavigable when it will require almost as much time and expense to repair her as to build a new one. Targa, c. 54, p. 238, c. 60, p. 256; Emerig. tom. 1, pp. 577, 591; 3 Kent, Comm. 323, note.

INNER BARRISTER. One admitted to plead within the bar.

INNINGS. Lands gained from the sea by draining. Cunningham.

INNKEEPER. The keeper of a common inn for the lodging and entertainment of travellers and passengers, their horses and attendants, for a reasonable compensation. Bac. Abr. "Inns," etc.; Story, Bailm. § 475. But one who entertains strangers occasionally, although he may receive compensation for it, is not an innkeeper. 2 Dev. & B. (N. C.) 424; 7 Ga. 296.

INNOCENCE. The absence of guilt (q. v.)

INNOCENT CONVEYANCES. In English law. A technical term used to signify those conveyances made by a tenant of his leasehold which do not occasion a forfeiture. These are conveyances by lease and release, bargain and sale, and a covenant to stand seised by a tenant for life. 1 Chit. Prac. 243, 244.

INNOMINATE (Lat.) In civil law. Not named or classed; belonging to no specific class; ranking under a general head. A term applied to those contracts for which no certain or precise remedy was appointed, but a general action on the case only. Dig. 2. 1. 4. 7. 2; Id. 19. 4. 5.

INNOMINATE CONTRACTS. In civil law. Contracts which have no particular names, as permutation and transaction. Inst. 2. 10. 13. There are many innominate contracts; but the Roman lawyers reduced them to four classes, namely, do ut des, do ut facias, facio ut des, and facio ut facias. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 2.

INNONIA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A close or inclosure (clausum, inclausura). Spelman.

INNOTESCIMUS (Lat.) In English law. An epithet used for letters patent, which are always of a charter of feoffment, or some other instrument not of record, concluding with the words, Innotescimus per praesentes, etc. Tech. Dict.

INNOVATION. In Scotch law. The exchange of one obligation for another, so that the second shall come in the place of the first. Bell, Dict. The same as "novation."

INNS OF CHANCERY. So called because anciently inhabited by such clerks as chiefly studied the framing of writs, which regularly belonged to the cursitors, who were officers of the court of chancery. There are nine of them,—Clement's, Clifford's, and Lyon's Inn; Furnival's, Thavies', and Symond's Inn; New Inn; and Barnard's and Staples' Inn. These were formerly preparatory colleges for students, and many entered them before they were admitted into the inns of court. They consist chiefly of solicitors, and possess corporate property, hall, chambers, etc., but perform no public functions like the inns of court. Wharton.

INNS OF COURT. The name given to the colleges of the English professors and students of the common law.

The four principal inns of court are the Inner Temple and Middle Temple (formerly belonging to the Knights Templar), Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn (anciently belonging to the earls of Lincoln and Gray). The other inns are the two Sergeants' Inns. See "Inns of Chancery."

INNUENDO (Lat. innuere, to nod at, to hint at; meaning). The word was used when pleadings were in Latin, and has been translated by "meaning."

——In Pleading. A clause in a declaration, indictment, or other pleading containing an averment which is explanatory of some preceding word or statement.

It derives its name from the leading word by which it was always introduced when pleadings were in Latin. It is mostly used in actions of slander, and is then said to be a subordinate averment, connecting particular parts of the publication with what has gone before, in order to elucidate the defendant's meaning more fully. 1 Starkie, Sland. & L. 431.

Its object is to explain the defendant's meaning by reference to previous matter. See "Colloquium." It may be used to point to the plaintiff as the person intended in the defendant's statement. It may show that a general imputation of crime is intended to apply to the plaintiff (Heard, Lib. & Sland. § 226; 1 H. L. Cas. 637; 2 Hill [N. Y.] 282), but it cannot be allowed to give a new sense to words where there is no such charge (8 Q. B. 825; 7 C. B. 280).

It may point to the injurious and actionable meaning, where the words complained of are susceptible of two meanings (8 Q. B. 841; Moore & S. 727), and generally explain the preceding matter (1 Dowl. [N. S.] 602; 7 C. B. 251; 15 C. B. 360; 1 Mees. & W. 245; 5 Bing. 17; 10 Bing. 250; 12 Adol. & E. 317), but cannot enlarge and point the effect of language beyond its natural and common meaning in its usual acceptation (Heard, Lib. & Sland. § 219; Metc. Yelv. 22; 2 Salk. 513; 1 Ld. Raym. 256; 2 Cowp. 688; 4 Per. & D. 161; 6 Barn. & C. 154; 4 Nev. & M. 841; 4 Dowl. 703; 9 Adol. & E. 282; 12 Adol. & E. 719; 15 Pick. [Mass.] 335), unless connected with the proper introductory averments (1 Cromp. & J. 143; 1 Adol. & E. 554; 9 Adol. & E. 282, 286, note; 1 C. B. 728; 6 C. B. 239; 1 Saund. 242; 2 Pick. [Mass.] 320; 13 Pick. [Mass.] 198; 15 Pick. [Mass.] 321; 16 Pick. [Mass.] 1; 11 Metc. [Mass.] 473; 8 N. H. 246; 12 Vt. 51; 1 Bin. [Pa.] 537; 5 Bin. [Pa.] 218; 11 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 343; 5 Johns. [N. Y.] 211).

INOFFICIOSUM (Lat.) In civil law. Inofficious; contrary to natural duty or affection. Used of a will of a parent which disinherited a child without just cause, or of that of a child which disinherited a parent, and which could be contested by querela inofficiosi testamenti. Dig. 2. 5. 3, 13; Paulus, lib. 4, tit. 5, § 1.

INOFFICIOUS TESTAMENT. A will not in accordance with the natural affections and ties of relationship of the testator.

INOFICIOCIDAD. In Spanish law. Everything done contrary to a duty or obligation assumed, as well as in opposition to the piety and affection dictated by nature, inofficiosum dicitur id omne quod contra pietatis officium factum est. The term applies especially to testaments, donations, dower, etc., which may be either revoked or reduced when they affect injuriously the rights of creditors or heirs.

INOPS CONSILII (Lat.) Destitute or without counsel. In the construction of wills, a greater latitude is given, because the testator is supposed to have been inops consilii.

INPENY AND OUTPENY. In old English law. A customary payment of a penny on entering into and going out of a tenancy (pro exitu de tenura, et pro ingressu). Spelman; Cowell.

INQUEST OF OFFICE. An inquiry made by the king's officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, either virtute officii, or by writ sent to him for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the king to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels. It is done by a jury of no determinate number,—either twelve, or more, or less. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 258; Finch, Law, 323-325. An inquest of office was bound to find for the king upon the direction of the court. The reason given is that an inquest concluded no man of his right, but only gave the king an opportunity to enter, so that he could have his right tried. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 260; 4 Steph. Comm. 61; F. Moore. 730; Vaughan, 135; 3 Hen. VII. 10; 2 Hen. IV. 5; 3 Leon. 196. An inquest of office was also called, simply, "office." As to "office" in the United States, see 1 Caines (N. Y.) 426; 7 Cranch (U. S.) 603; 2 Kent, Comm. 16, 23.

INQUILINUS. In civil law. The hirer of a house in the city; a city tenant, as colonus was a country tenant. Bracton, fol. 42b.

INQUIRY, WRIT OF. A writ sued out by a plaintiff in a case where the defendant has let the proceedings go by default, and an interlocutory judgment has been given for damages generally, where the damages do not admit of calculation. It issues to the sheriff of the county in which the venue is laid, and commands him to inquire, by a jury of twelve men, concerning the amount of damages. The sheriff thereupon tries the cause in his sheriff's court, and some amount must always be returned to the court. But the return of the inquest merely informs the court, which may, if it choose, in all cases assess damages, and thereupon give final judgment. 2 Archb. Prac. (Waterman Ed.) 952; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 398; 3 Chit. St. 495, 497.

INQUISITIO (Lat.) In old English law. An inquisition or inquest. Inquisitio post mortem, an inquisition after death. An inquest of office held, during the continuance of the military tenures, upon the death of every one of the king's tenants, to inquire of what lands he died seised, who was his heir, and of what age, in order to entitle the king to his marriage, wardship, relief, primer seisin, or other advantages, as the circumstances of the case might turn out. 3 Bl. Comm. 258. Inquisitio patriae, the inquisition of the country; the ordinary jury, as distinguished from the grand assize. Bracton, fol. 15b.

INQUISITION. In practice. An examination of certain facts by a jury impanelled by the sheriff for the purpose. The instrument of writing on which their decision is made is also called an inquisition. The sheriff or coroner, and the jury who make the inquisition, are called the "inquest." The term "inquest" is now generally used instead of "inquisition."

INQUISITOR. A designation of sheriffs, coroners super visum corporis, and the like, who have power to inquire into certain matters.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. The name of an officer who is authorized to inquire into heresies, and the like, and to punish them; a judge.

INROLMENT, or ENROLLMENT (Law Lat. irrotulatio). The act of putting upon a roll.

Formerly, the record of a suit was kept on skins of parchment, which, best to preserve them, were kept upon a roll, or in the form of a roll. What was written upon them was called the "inrolment." After, when such records came to be kept in books, the making up of the record retained the old name of "inrolment." Thus, in equity, the inrolment of a decree is the recording of it, and will prevent the rehearing of the cause, except on appeal to the house of lords, or by bill of review. The decree may be inrolled immediately after it has been passed and entered, unless a caveat has been entered. 2 Freem. 179; 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 199; 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 501. And before signing and inrolment, a decree cannot be pleaded in bar of a suit, though it can be insisted on by way of answer. 3 Atk. 809; 2 Ves. Jr. 577; 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 199. See Saund. Ord. Chanc.

Transcribing upon the records of a court deeds, etc., according to the statutes on the subject. See 1 Chit. St. 425, 426; 2 Chit. St. 69, 76-78; 3 Chit. St. 1497. Placing on file or record generally, as annuities, attorneys, etc.

INSANITY. Unsoundness or derangement of mind.

Insanity is the general term, and includes all mental unsoundness, whether complete or partial, and whether congenital or induced.

It may be divided into (1) idiocy or imbecility, being the state of one who has been from birth without reason, and (2) lunacy, the state of one who once possessed reason, but has lost it in whole or in part.

"Lunacy" may be either (1) impulsive, consisting in an unnatural and sometimes irresistible impulse to certain acts, apart from or against all reason, and (2) delusive, consisting in persistent and incorrigible hallucinations as to matters of fact.

Further subdivisions have been sometimes made, as into the various manias,—homicidal, suicidal, etc.

Moral or emotional insanity is a perverted condition of the emotional or moral nature, inducing criminal acts, and not accompanied by intellectual delusion. It is the negative aspect of "irresistible impulse."

"Insanity" is frequently used in the sense of "lunacy," and as excluding "idiocy," and "imbecility."

The forms of insanity have been tabulated by a distinguished alienist as follows:

I. Defective development of the faculties.
  (1) Idiocy.
    (a) Resulting from congenital defect.
    (b) Resulting from an obstacle to the development of the faculties, supervening in infancy.
  (2) Imbecility.
    (a) Resulting from congenital defect.
    (b) Resulting from an obstacle to the development of the faculties, supervening in infancy.

II. Lesion of the faculties subsequent to their development.
  (1) Mania.
    (a) Intellectual.
      (aa) General.
    (b) Affective.
      (aa) General.
  (2) Dementia.
    (a) Consecutive to mania, or injuries of the brain.
    (b) Senile, peculiar to old age.

1 Ray, Med. Jur. "Insanity" (3d Ed.) p. 71.

INSANUS EST QUI, ABJECTA RATIONE, omnia cum impetu et furore facit. He is insane who, reason being thrown away, does everything with violence and rage. 4 Coke, 128.

INSCRIBERE. In the Roman law. To subscribe an accusation. The subscriber was bound to substantiate his charge, or suffer the penalty appropriate to such charge. Calv. Lex.

INSCRIPTIO (Lat.) In civil law. A written accusation; an undertaking to suffer the punishment of the accused in case of a failure to prove him guilty. Calv. Lex.

INSCRIPTION.

——In Civil Law. An engagement which a person who makes a solemn accusation of a crime against another enters into that he will suffer the same punishment, if he has accused the other falsely, which would have been inflicted upon him had he been guilty. Code, 9. 1. 10; Id. 9. 2. 16. 17.

——In Evidence. Something written or engraved.

Inscriptions upon tombstones and other proper places, as rings, and the like, are held to be evidence of pedigree. Buller, N. P. 233; Cowp. 591; 10 East, 120; 13 Ves. 145. See "Declaration;" "Hearsay Evidence."

INSCRIPTIONES (Lat.) The name given by the old English law to any written instrument by which anything is granted. Blount.

INSENSIBLE. In pleading. That which is unintelligible is said to be insensible. Steph. Pl. 378.

INSIDERS. See "Gambling Contract."

INSIDIATORES VIARUM (Lat.) Persons who lie in wait in order to commit some felony or other misdemeanor.

INSIMUL (Lat.) Together; jointly. Towns. Pl. 44.

INSIMUL COMPUTASSENT (Lat.) They had accounted together. See "Account."

INSIMUL TENUIT. In old English practice. The name of a species of the writ of formedon in the descender, which lay for a cotenant against a stranger.

INSINUACION. In Spanish law. The presentation of a public document to a competent judge, in order to obtain his approbation and sanction of the same, and thereby giving it judicial authenticity.

"Insinuatio est ejus quod traditur, sive agitur, coram quocumque judice in scripturam redactio."

This formality is requisite to the validity of certain donations inter vivos. Escriche, Dic. Raz.

INSINUARE. In civil law. To put into; to deposit a writing in court, answering nearly to the modern expression "to file." To transcribe an act in the public registers; to record. Si non mandatum actis insinuatum est, if the power or authority be not deposited among the records of the court. Inst. 4. 11. 3.

To declare or acknowledge before a judicial officer; to give an act an official form. Calv. Lex.

To make known; to give information. Id.

INSINUATIO (Law Lat.) In old English law. Information or suggestion. Ex insinuatione, on the information. Reg. Jud. 25, 50.

INSINUATION. In civil law. The transcription of an act on the public registers, like our recording of deeds. It was not necessary in any other alienation but that appropriated to the purpose of donation. Inst. 2. 7. 2; Poth. Tr. des Donations, Entre Vifs, sec. 2, art. 3, § 3; Encyclopedie; 8 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 198.

INSINUATION OF A WILL. In civil law. The first production of it; or, leaving it in the hands of the register in order to its probate. 21 Hen. VIII. c. 5; Jacob.

INSOLVENCY. The state of a person who is unable, from any cause, to pay his debts. Two tests of insolvency prevail, their application generally being governed by the purpose for which the fact of insolvency is ascertained, though there is some confusion in the cases in this respect.

Generally, for the purpose of enabling the debtor or his creditors to take advantage of insolvent acts, one is insolvent who is unable to meet his obligations as they accrue in due course of trade, and is unable to proceed in business without making some arrangement with his creditors, without regard to the ultimate sufficiency of his assets in liquidation. 112 Pa. St. 294; 98 Iowa, 321; 86 Me. 246; 3 Gray (Mass.) 600; 116 Mo. 226.

Within the rule relating to conveyances by insolvent persons, it is generally held that one is insolvent whose obligation could not be collected by legal means out of his property. 43 N. Y. 75; 31 Mo. 73. If one has means from which payment could be enforced, he is not insolvent, even though he is in embarrassed circumstances, and unable to make present payment (136 N. Y. 104; 52 Mo. App. 282), or has even been compelled to suspend business (63 Hun [N. Y.] 632). Property so situated that it cannot be reached by creditors is not to be considered in determining the issue of solvency. 53 Ga. 339.

Distinction between "insolvency" and "bankruptcy," see "Bankruptcy."

INSOLVENT. One who is in a state of insolvency (q. v.)

INSPECTATOR. An adverse party.

INSPECTION (Lat. inspicere, to look into). The examination of certain articles made by law subject to such examination, so that they may be declared fit for commerce. The decision of the inspectors is not final. The object of the law is to protect the community from fraud, and to preserve the character of the merchandise abroad. 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 45. See 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 205; 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 331; 2 Caines (N. Y.) 312; 3 Caines (N. Y.) 207.

——In Practice. Examination.

The inspection of all public records is free to all persons who have an interest in them, upon payment of the usual fees. 7 Mod. 129; 1 Strange, 304; 2 Strange, 260, 954, 1005. But it seems a mere stranger, who has no such interest, has no right at common law. 8 Term R. 390.

INSPECTION, TRIAL BY. A mode of trial formerly in use in England, by which the judges of a court decided a point in dispute, upon the testimony of their own senses, without the intervention of a jury. This took place in cases where the fact upon which issue was taken must, from its nature, be evident to the court from ocular demonstration, or other irrefragable proof, and was adopted for the greater expedition of a cause. 3 Bl. Comm. 331. In this way questions whether a party were an infant or not, whether an injury was mayhem or not, etc., were determined; but this has been long out of use. 3 Steph. Comm. 582.

INSPECTOR. The name given to certain officers whose duties are to examine and inspect things over which they have jurisdiction; as, inspector of bark, one who is by law authorized to examine bark for exportation, and to approve or disapprove of its quality. Inspectors of customs are officers appointed by the general government. As to their duties, see 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 590, 605, 609, 610, 612, 619, 621, 623, 650; 2 Story, U. S. Laws, 1490, 1516; 3 Story, U. S. Laws, 1650, 1790.

INSPECTORSHIP, DEED OF. In English law. An agreement between an insolvent and his creditors, by which a certain person is appointed to supervise the winding up of the estate.

INSPEXIMUS (Lat. we have seen). A word sometimes used in letters patent, reciting a grant, inspeximus such former grant, and so reciting it verbatim. It then grants such further privileges as are thought convenient. 5 Coke, 54.

INSTALLATION, or INSTALMENT. The act by which an officer is put in public possession of the place he is to fill. The president of the United States, or a governor, is installed into office. by being sworn agreeably to the requisition of the constitution and laws.

INSTANCE. Literally, standing on; hence, urging, solicitation. Webster.

——In Civil and French Law. In general, all sorts of actions and judicial demands. Dig. 44. 7. 58.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. Causes of instance are those proceeded in at solicitation of some party, as opposed to causes of office, which run in the name of the judge. Halifax, Anal. p. 122.

——In Scotch Law. That which may be insisted on at one diet or course of probation. Wharton.

INSTANCE COURT. In English law. That branch of the admiralty court which has the jurisdiction of all matters except those relating to prizes.

An "instance court" takes cognizance of contracts made and injuries committed on the high seas; a "prize court" has jurisdiction of prizes, etc. 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 257.

The term is sometimes used in American law for purposes of explanation, but has no proper application to admiralty courts in the United States, where the powers of both instance and prize courts are conferred without any distinction. 3 Dall. (U. S.) 6; 1 Gall. (U. S.) 563; 3 Kent, Comm. 355, 378. See "Admiralty."

INSTANCIA. In Spanish law. The institution and prosecution of a suit from its inception until definitive judgment. The first instance, primera instancia, is the prosecution of a suit before the judge competent to take cognizance of it at its inception; the second instance, secunda instancia, is the exercise of the same action before the court of appellate jurisdiction; and the third instance, tercera instancia, is the prosecution of the same suit, either by an application of revision before the appellate tribunal, that has already decided the cause, or before some higher tribunal, having jurisdiction of the same.

All civil suits must be tried and decided, in the first instance, within three years; and all criminal, within two years.

As a general rule, three instances are admitted in all civil and criminal cases. Const. 1812, art. 285.

INSTANS EST FINIS UNIUS TEMPORIS et principium alterius. An instant is the end of one time, and the beginning of another. Co. Litt. 185.

INSTANTER (Lat.) Immediately; presently. This term, it is said, means that the act to which it applies shall be done within twenty-four hours; but a doubt has been suggested by whom is the account of the hours to be kept, and whether the term "instanter," as applied to the subject matter, may not be more properly taken to mean "before the rising of the court," when the act is to be done in court, or "before the shutting of the office the same night," when the act is to be done there. 1 Taunt. 343; 6 East, 587, note (e); Tidd, Prac. (3d Ed.) 508, note; 3 Chit. Prac. 112. See 3 Burrows, 1809; Co. Litt. 157; Styles, Reg. 452.

INSTAR (Lat.) Like; resembling; equivalent; as, instar dentium, like teeth; instar omnium, equivalent to all.

INSTAURUM (Law Lat.) In old English deeds. A stock or store of cattle, and other things; the whole stock upon a farm, including cattle, wagons, ploughs, and all other implements of husbandry. 1 Mon. Angl. 548; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 68, § 1; Id. c. 72, § 7. Terra instaurata, land already stocked, or furnished with all things necessary to carry on the use or occupation of a farm.

INSTIGATION. The act by which one incites another to do something; as, to injure a third person, or to commit some crime or misdemeanor, to commence a suit, or to prosecute a criminal. See "Accomplice."

INSTIRPARE. To establish.

INSTITOR (Lat.) In civil law. A clerk in a store; an agent.

He was so called because he watched over the business with which he was charged; and it is immaterial whether he was employed in making a sale in the store, or whether charged with any other business. Institor appellatus est ex eo, quod negotio gerendo instet; nec multum facit tabernae sit praepositus, an cuilibet alii negotiationi. Dig. 14. 3. 1. 3. Mr. Bell says that the charge given to a clerk to manage a store or shop is called "institorial power." 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 479; Ersk. Inst. 3. 3. 46; 1 Stair, Inst. (by Brodie) bk. 1, tit. 11, §§ 12, 18, 19; Story, Ag. § 8.

INSTITORIA ACTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. The name of an action given to those who had contracted with an institor (q. v.) to compel the principal to performance. Inst. 4. 7. 2; Dig. 14. 3. 1; Story, Ag. § 426.

INSTITUTE.

——In Scotch Law. The person first called in the "tailzie;" the rest, or the heirs of tailzie, are called "substitutes.'" Ersk. Prac. 3. 8. 8. See "Substitutes."

——In Civil Law. One who is appointed heir by testament, and is required to give the estate devised to another person, who is called the "substitute."

To name or to make an heir by testament. Dig. 28. 5. 65. To make an accusation; to commence an action.

INSTITUTES. Elements of jurisprudence; text books containing the principles of law made the foundation of legal studies.

The word was first used by the civilians to designate those books prepared for the student, and supposed to embrace the fundamental legal principles arranged in an orderly manner. Two books of Institutes were known to the civil lawyers of antiquity,—Gaius and Justinian.

(1) Coke's Institutes. Four volumes of commentaries upon various parts of the English law.

Sir Edward Coke hath written four volumes of "Institutes," as he is pleased to call them, though they have little of the institutional method to warrant such a title. The first volume is a very extensive commentary upon a little excellent treatise of tenures, compiled by Judge Littleton in the reign of Edw. IV. This comment is a rich mine of valuable common-law learning, collected and heaped together from the ancient reports and Year Books, but greatly defective in method. The second volume is a comment on many old acts of parliament, without any systematical order; the third, a more methodical treatise on the pleas of the crown; and the fourth, an account of the several species of courts. These Institutes are usually cited thus: The first volume as Co. Litt., or 1 Inst.; the second, third, and fourth as 2, 3, or 4 Inst., without any author's name. 1 Bl. Comm. 72.

(2) Gaius' Institutes. A tractate upon the Roman law, ascribed to Caius or Gaius.

Of the personal history of this jurist nothing is known. Even the spelling of his name is matter of controversy, and he is known by no other title than Gaius, or Caius. He is believed to have lived in the reign of Marcus Aurelius. The history of Gaius' Institutes is remarkable. In 1816, Niebuhr was sent to Rome by the king of Prussia. On his way thither, he spent two days in the cathedral library of Verona, and at this time discovered these Institutes, which had been lost to the jurists of the middle ages. In 1817, the Royal Academy of Berlin charged Goeschen, Bekker, and Hollweg with the duty of transcribing the discovered manuscript. In 1819, Goeschen gave the first completed edition, as far as the manuscript could be deciphered, to his fellow jurists. It created an unusual sensation, and became a fruitful source of comment. It formed a new era in the study of Roman law. It gave the modern jurist the signal advantage of studying the source of the Institutes of Justinian. It is believed by the best modern scholars that Gaius' was the first original tractate of the kind, not being compiled from former publications. The language of Gaius is clear, terse, and technical,—evidently written by a master of law, and a master of the Latin tongue. The Institutes were unquestionably practical. There is no attempt at criticism or philosophical discussion. The disciple of Sabinus is content to teach law as he finds it. Its arrangement is solid and logical, and Justinian follows it with an almost servile imitation.

The best editions of Gaius are Goeschen's second edition, Berlin, 1824, in which the text was again collated by Bluhme, and the third edition of Goeschen, Berlin, 1842, edited by Lachman from a critical revision by Goeschen, which had been interrupted by his death. In France, Gaius attracted equal attention, and we have three editions and translations: Boulet, Paris, 1824; Domenget, 1843; and Pellat, 1844.

In 1859, Francesco Lisi, a learned Italian scholar, published, at Bologna, a new edition of the first book of Gaius, with an Italian translation, en regard. The edition is accompanied and enriched by many valuable notes, printed in both Latin and Italian. Perhaps this must be considered, so far as printed, the most complete edition of the old civilian that modern scholars have yet produced.

The reader who may wish to pursue his Gaiian studies should consult the list of some thirty-odd treatises and commentaries mentioned in Mackeldey's Lehrbuch des Rom. Rechts, p. 47, note (b), (13th Ed.) Wien, 1851; Huschke, Essay Zur Kritik und Interp. von Gaius Inst., Breslau, 1830; Haubold's Inst. Jur. Rom. Prev. Line pp. 151, 152, 505, 506, Lipsiae, 1826; Boecking's Gaius, Preface, pp. 11-18, Leps. 1845; Lisi's Gaius, Preface, pp. x. xi., Bologna, 1859.

(3) Justinian's Institutes. An abridgment of the Code and Digest, composed by order of that emperor, and under his guidance, with an intention to give a summary knowledge of the law to those persons not versed in it, and particularly to students. Inst. Proem. § 3.

The lawyers employed to compile it were Tribonian, Theophilus, and Dorotheus. The work was first published on the 21st of November in the year 533, and received the sanction of statute law by order of the emperor. They are divided into four books; each book is divided into titles, and each title into separate paragraphs or sections, preceded by an introductory part. The first part is called principium, because it is the commencement of the title; those which follow are numbered, and called "paragraphs." The work treats of the rights of persons, of things, and of actions. The first book treats of persons; the second, third, and the first five titles of the fourth book, of things; and the remainder of the fourth book, of actions. The method of citing the Institutes should be understood, and is now commonly by giving the number of the book, title, and section, thus: Inst. I. 2. 5,—thereby indicating book I. title 2, section 5. Where it is intended to indicate the first paragraph, or principium, thus: Inst. B. I. 2. pr. Frequently the citation is simply I. or J. I. 2. 5. A second mode of citation is thus: § 5, Inst. or I. I. 2,—meaning book I title 2, paragraph 5. A third method of citation, and one in universal use with the older jurists, was by giving the name of the title and the first words of the paragraph referred to, thus: § senatusconsultum est I de jure nat. gen. et civil,—which means, as before, Inst. B. I. tit. 2, § 5. See 1 Colquhoun, § 61.

The first printed edition of the Institutes is that of Schoyffer, fol. 1468. The last critical German edition is that of Schrader, Berlin, 1832. This work of Schrader is the most learned and most elaborate commentary on the text of Justinian in any language, and was intended to form a part of the Berlin Corpus Juris, but nothing further has been yet published. It is impossible in this brief article to name all the commentaries on these Institutes, which in all ages have commanded the study and admiration of jurists. More than one hundred and fifty years ago, one Homberg printed a tract De Multitudine nimia Commentatorum in Institutiones Juris. But we must refer the reader to the best recent French and English editions. Ortolan's Institutes de l'Empereur Justinien avec le texte, la traduction en regard, et les explications sous chaque paragraphe, Paris, 1857, 3 vols. 8vo, sixth edition. This is, by common consent of scholars, regarded as the best historical edition of the Institutes ever published. Du Caurroy's Institutes de Justinean traduites et expliquees par A. M. Du Caurroy, Paris, 1851, 8th ed. 2 vols. 8vo. The Institutes of Justinian, with English Introduction, Translation, and Notes, by Thomas Collet Sandars, M. A., London, 1853, 8vo; 2d Ed., 1860. This work has been prepared expressly for beginners, and is founded mainly upon Ortolan, with a liberal use of La Grange. Du Caurroy, Warnkoenig, and Puchta, as well as Harris and Cooper. A careful study of this edition will result in the student's abandoning its pages, and betaking himself to Schrader and Ortolan. The English edition of Harris, and the American one of Cooper, have ceased to attract attention.

(4) Theophilus' Institutes. A paraphrase of Justinian, made, it is believed, soon after A. D. 533.

It is generally supposed that in A. D. 534, 535, and 536, Theophilus read his commentary in Greek to his pupils in the law school of Constantinople. He is conjectured to have died some time in A. D. 536. This paraphrase maintained itself as a manual of law until the eighth or tenth century. This text was used in the time of Hexabiblos of Harmenipulus, the last of the Greek jurists. It is also conjectured that Theophilus was not the editor of his own paraphrase, but that it was drawn up by some of his pupils after his explanations and lectures, inasmuch as it contains certain barbarous phrases, and the texts of the manuscripts vary greatly from each other.

It has, however, always been somewhat in use, and jurists consider that its study aids the text of the Institutes; and Cujas and Hugo have both praised it. The first edition was that of Zuichem, fol. Basle, 1531; the best edition is that of Reitz, 2 vols. 4to, 1751, Haag. There is a German translation by Wusterman, 1823, 2 vols. 8vo; and a French translation by Mons. Ilregier, Paris, 1847, 8vo, whose edition is prefaced by a learned and valuable introduction and dissertation. Consult Mortreuil, Hist. du Droit Byzan., Paris, 1843; Smith, Dict. Biog. London, 1849, 3 vols. 8vo; 1 Kent, Comm. 533; Profession d'Avocat, tom. ii. note 536, p. 95; Introd. a l'Etude du Droit Romain, p. 124; Dict. de Jurisp.; Merlin, Repert.; Enc. d'Alembert.

INSTITUTIO HAEREDIS (Lat.) In Roman law. The appointment of the haeres in the will. See "Haeres."

INSTITUTION (Lat. instituere, to form, to establish).

——In Civil Law. The appointment of an heir; the act by which a testator nominates one or more persons to succeed him in all his rights, active and passive. Halifax, Anal. 39; Poth. Tr. des Donations Testamentaires. c. 2. sec. 1, § 1; Civ. Code La. art. 1598; Dig. 28. 5. 1; Id. 1. 28. 6. 1. 2. 4.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. To become a parson or vicar, four things are necessary, viz., holy orders, presentation, institution, induction. Institution is a kind of investiture of the spiritual part of the benefice; for by institution the care of the souls of the parish is committed to the charge of the clerk, previous to which the oath against simony and of allegiance and supremacy are to be taken. By institution the benefice is full, so that there can be no fresh presentation (except the patron be the king), and the clerk may enter on parsonage house and glebe, and take the tithes; but he cannot grant or let them, or bring an action for them, till induction. See 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 389-391; 1 Burn, Ecc. Law, 169-172.

——In Political Law. A law, rite, or ceremony enjoined by authority as a permanent rule of conduct or of government; as, the Institutions of Lycurgus. Webster. An organized society, established either by law or the authority of individuals, for promoting any object, public or social. Webster.

——In Practice. The commencement of an action; as, A. B. has instituted a suit against C. D. to recover damages for trespass.

INSTITUTIONES (Lat. from instituere, to instruct, or educate). Works containing the elements of any science; institutions, or institutes. One of Justinian's principal law collections, and a similar work of the Roman jurist Gaius, are so entitled. See "Institutes."

INSTRUCTIONS.

——In the Law of Agency. Orders given by a principal to his agent in relation to the business of his agency.

The agent is bound to obey the instructions he has received, and when he neglects so to do he is responsible for the consequences, unless he is justified by matter of necessity. 4 Bin. (Pa.) 361; 1 Livermore, Ag. 368. See "Agent."

——In English Practice. The statements of a cause of action, given by a client to his attorney, and which, where such is the practice, are sent to his pleader to put into legal form of a declaration. Warren, Law Stud. 284.

Instructions to counsel are their indemnity for any aspersions they may make on the opposite party; but attorneys who have a just regard to their own reputation will be cautious, even under instructions, not to make any unnecessary attack upon a party or witness. For such unjustifiable conduct the counsel will be held responsible. Eunom. Dial. 2, § 43, p. 132. For a form of instructions, see 3 Chit. Prac. 117, 120, note.

——In American Practice. The charge or directions as to the law, given by the court to the jury.

——In French Law. The means used and formality employed to prepare a case for trial. It is generally applied to criminal cases, and is then called "criminal instruction." It is then defined as the acts and proceedings which tend to prove positively a crime or delict, in order to inflict on the guilty person the punishment which he deserves.

INSTRUMENT. The writing which contains some agreement, and is so called because it has been prepared as a memorial of what has taken place or been agreed upon.

Something reduced to writing as a means of evidence. Abbott. A will has been held to be an "instrument." 14 Eq. Cas. 402.

The agreement and the instrument in which it is contained are very different things,—the latter being only evidence of the existence of the former.

INSTRUMENT OF APPEAL. The document by which an appeal is brought in an English matrimonial cause from the president of the probate, divorce, and admiralty division to the full court. It is analogous to a petition. Browne, Div. 322.

INSTRUMENT OF EVIDENCE. Instruments of evidence are the media through which the evidence of facts, either disputed or required to be proved, is conveyed to the mind of a judicial tribunal; and they comprise persons, as well as writings. Best, Ev. § 123.

INSTRUMENTA (Lat.) That kind of evidence which consists of writings not under seal; as, court rolls, accounts, and the like. 3 Co. Litt. (Thomas Ed.) 487.

INSUFFICIENCY. In chancery practice. After filing of defendant's answer, the plaintiff has six weeks in which to file exceptions to it for insufficiency, which is the fault of not replying specifically to specific charges in the bill. Smith, Ch. Prac. 344; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 376, note; Saunders, Ord. Chanc. Index.

INSULA (Lat. island). A house not connected with other houses, but separated by a surrounding space of ground. Calv. Lex.

INSUPER (Lat.) Moreover; over and above.

An old exchequer term, applied to a charge made upon a person in his account. Blount.

INSURABLE INTEREST. Such an interest in a subject of insurance as will entitle the person possessing it to obtain insurance.

In the law of fire insurance, an insurable interest may be defined as such an interest as would entail a pecuniary loss were the property destroyed. 62 N. Y. 47.

In the law of life insurance, an insurable interest in the life of another is such a relation that the death of such person would entail pecuniary loss. Any relationship resulting in dependence, or giving a right to service or support, gives an insurable interest to the person benefited. 12 Mass. 115; 57 Vt. 496; 66 Mo. 63. A creditor has an insurable interest in the life of his debtor. 23 Conn. 244.

INSURANCE. A contract whereby, for an agreed premium, one party undertakes to indemnify the other against loss on a specified subject by specified perils. The party agreeing to make the indemnity is usually called the "insurer" or "underwriter;" the other, the "insured" or "assured;" the agreed consideration, the "premium;" the written contract, a "policy;" the events insured against, "risks" or "perils;" and the subject, right, or interest to be protected, the "insurable interest." 1 Phil. Ins. §§ 1-5. Called, also, "assurance."

Insurance is classified according to the nature of the risk insured against, or the nature of the property insured, the principal sorts being (1) fire insurance, being against injury to property by fire; (2) life insurance, being against injury by the death of one in whose interest the assured has a pecuniary interest; (3) marine insurance, being against injury to vessels or their cargo by any peril of navigation; and (4) accident insurance, being against loss from accidental personal injury.

Many other varieties, however, have become common in recent years, as against injury to crops by hail; against loss by defalcation; against defects of title to land, etc.

INSURANCE AGENT. An agent for effecting insurance may be such by appointment, or the recognition of his acts done as such. 2 Phil. Ins. § 1848; 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 645. He may be agent for either of the parties to the policy, or for distinct purposes for both. 16 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 252; 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 68.

INSURED. The person who procures an insurance.

INSURER. The underwriter in a policy of insurance; the party agreeing to make indemnity to the other. Sometimes applied improperly to denote the party insured.

INSURGENT. One who is concerned in an insurrection. He differs from a rebel in this, that "rebel" is always understood in a bad sense, or one who unjustly opposes the constituted authorities; insurgent may be one who justly opposes the tyranny of constituted authorities. The colonists who opposed the tyranny of the English government were insurgents, not rebels.

INSURRECTION. A rebellion of citizens or subjects of a country against its government.

An insurrection may constitute treason (2 Dall. [U. S.] 348), and, if extensive, may amount to civil war. 67 U. S. 635.

INTAKERS. In English law. The name given to receivers of goods stolen in Scotland, who take them to England. 9 Hen. V. c. 27.

INTEGER (Lat.) Whole; untouched. Res integra means a question which is new and undecided. 2 Kent. Comm. 177.

INTEMPERANCE. Habitual immoderate use of intoxicants does not necessarily imply drunkenness. 76 Ill. 213.

INTEND (from Lat. intendere, from in, to or towards, and tendere, to stretch or strain). To fix the mind upon a thing; to mean; to determine; to act with a full knowledge of consequences, and with a determination or willingness to produce such consequences. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 18; 3 Maule & S. 11, 15; Burrill, Circ. Ev. 38, 47.

INTENDANT. One who has the charge, management, or direction of some office, department, or public business.

INTENDED TO BE RECORDED. This phrase is frequently used in conveyancing, in deeds which recite other deeds which have not been recorded. In Pennsylvania, it has been construed to be a covenant, on the part of the grantor, to procure the deed to be recorded in a reasonable time. 2 Rawle (Pa.) 14.

INTENDENTE. In Spanish law. The immediate agent of the minister of finance, or the chief and principal director of the different branches of the revenue, appointed in the various departments in each of the provinces of the Spanish monarchy. See Escriche, Dic. Raz.

INTENDMENT OF LAW. The true meaning, the correct understanding, or intention, of the law; a presumption or inference made by the courts. Co. Litt. 78.

INTENT. Intention (q. v.)

That the terms are synonymous, see 2 Jones (N. C.) 414.

INTENTIO (Lat.)

——In Civil Law. The formal complaint or claim of a plaintiff before the praetor. "Reus exceptionem velut intentionem implet;" id est, reus in exceptione actor est, the defendant makes up his plea as if it were a declaration; i. e., the defendant is plaintiff in the plea.

——In Old English Law. A count or declaration in a real action (narratio). Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 2, c. 2; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 7; Du Cange.

INTENTIO CAECA MALA. A hidden intention is bad. 2 Bulst. 179.

INTENTIO INSERVIRE DEBET LEGIbus, non leges intentioni. Intentions ought to be subservient to the laws, not the laws to intentions. Co. Litt. 314.

INTENTIO MEA IMPONIT NOMEN OPeri meo. My intent gives a name to my act. Hob. 123.

INTENTION. A design, resolve, or determination of the mind.

The exercise of an intelligent will, the mind being fully aware of the nature and consequences of the act which is about to be done, and with such knowledge, and with full liberty of action, willing and electing to do it. 2 Lea (Tenn.) 619.

It implies contractual obligation to carry out the intention, and is to be distinguished from "promise." 24 N. J. Law, 430.

It is not synonymous with "motive" (131 Mo. 397), nor with "attempt" (3 Dev. [N. C.] 330).

INTER. In Latin phrases. A preposition, meaning among; between.

INTER ALIA (Lat.) Among other things; as, "the said premises, which, inter alia, Titius granted to Caius."

INTER ALIAS CAUSAS ACQUISITIONES magna, celebris, et famosa est causa donationis. Among other methods of acquiring property, a great, much-used, and celebrated method is that of gift. Bracton. 11.

INTER ALIOS (Lat.) Between other parties, who are strangers to the proceeding in question.

INTER ALIOS RES GESTAS ALIIS NON posse praejudicium facere saepe constitutum est. It has been often settled that things which took place between other parties cannot prejudice. Code. 7. 60. 1. 2.

INTER APICES JURIS. See "Apex Juris."

INTER CAETEROS (Lat.) Among others; in a general clause; not by name (nominatim). A term applied, in the civil law, to clauses of disinheritance in a will. Inst. 2. 13. 1; Id. 2. 13. 3.

INTER CANEM ET LUPUM (Lat. between the dog and the wolf). The twilight; because then the dog seeks his rest, and the wolf his prey. 3 Inst. 63.

INTER CONJUGES. Between husband and wife.

INTER PARTES (Lat. between the parties). A phrase signifying an agreement professing in the outset, and before any stipulations are introduced, to be made between such and such persons; as, for example, "This indenture, made the ——— day of ———, 1848, between A. B., of the one part, and C. D., of the other." It is true that every contract is in one sense inter partes, because to be valid there must be two parties at least, but the technical sense of this expression is as above mentioned. Add. Cont. 9.

INTER REGALIA. Among the regalia (q. v.)

INTER SE, INTER SESE (Lat.) Among themselves. Story, Partn. § 405.

INTER VIVOS (Lat.) Between living persons; as, a gift inter vivos, which is a gift made by one living person to another. See "Gifts." It is a rule that a fee cannot pass by grant or transfer inter vivos, without appropriate words of inheritance. 2 Prest. Est. 64. See "Donatio Mortis Causa."

INTERCALARE (Lat.) In civil law. To introduce or insert among or between others; to introduce a day or month into the calendar; to intercalate. Dig. 50. 16. 98. pr.

INTERCHANGEABLY (Law Lat. alternatim). In the way, mode, or form of exchange or interchange. A term constantly used in the concluding clause of indentures, —in witness whereof, the said parties have hereunto interchangeably set their hands and seals,—and properly importing not only an execution by all the parties, but an actual interchange of signatures and seals, such as takes place in the case of instruments executed in duplicate, or in part and counterpart, where the signature and seal of each party are affixed to the part given to the other. It is used, however, every day in deeds signed by the grantor only, but will not be held to import a signature by the grantee. 7 Pa. St. 329.

INTERCOMMON. To enjoy a right of common mutually with the inhabitants of a contiguous town, vill, or manor. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 33; Termes de la Ley.

INTERCOMMONING. A mutual privilege, between the tenants of adjoining manors, of pasturing their cattle on the commons of each other.

INTERCOURSE (Lat. intercursus, from inter, between, and currere, to run). Communication; literally, a running, or passing between persons or places; commerce. 7 How. (U. S.) 283-573.

INTERDICT.

——In Civil Law. The formula according to which the praetor ordered or forbade anything to be done in a cause concerning true or quasi possession until it should be decided definitely who had a right to it. But in modern civil law it is an extraordinary action, by which a summary decision is had in questions of possession or quasi possession. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 1287. Interdicts are either prohibitory, restorative, or exhibitory; the first being a prohibition, the second a decree for restoring possession lost by force, the third a decree for the exhibiting of accounts, etc. Id. 1290. Interdicts were decided by the praetor without the intervention of a judex, differing in this from actions (actiones).

The etymology of the word, according to Justinian, is quod inter duos dicitur; according to Isidorus, quod interim dicitur. Vocat; Sand. Just. 589; Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 195, 230, 235. Like an injunction, the interdict was merely personal in its effects; and it had also another similarity to it, by being temporary or perpetual. Dig. 43. 1. 1. 3. 4. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 865; Halifax, Anal. c. 6. See "Injunction."

——In Ecclesiastical Law. An ecclesiastical censure, by which divine services are prohibited either to particular persons or particular places. These tyrannical edicts, issued by ecclesiastical powers, have been abolished in England since the reformation, and were never known in the United States. See 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 340, 341. Baptism was allowed during an interdict; but the holy eucharist was denied, except in the article of death, and burial in consecrated ground was denied, unless without divine offices.

INTERDICTION. In civil law. A judicial decree, by which a person is deprived of the exercise of his civil rights.

The condition of the party who labors under this incapacity.

INTERDICTUM SALVIANUM (Lat.) In civil law. The Salvian interdict. A process which lay for the owner of a farm to obtain possession of the goods of his tenant who had pledged them to him for the rent of the land. Inst. 4. 15. 3.

INTERDUM EVENIT UT EXCEPTIO quae prima facie justa videtur, tamen inique noceat. It sometimes happens that a plea which seems prima facie just, nevertheless is injurious and unequal. Inst. 4. 14; Id. 4. 14. 1. 2.

INTERESSE (Lat.) The interest of money, as distinguished from the principal.

An interest in land.

INTERESSE TERMINI (Lat.) An interest in the term. The demise of a term in land does not vest any estate in the lessee, but gives him a mere right of entry on the land, which right is called his interest in the term, or interesse termini. See Co. Litt. 46; 2 Bl. Comm. 144; 10 Viner, Abr. 348; Dane, Abr. Index; Watk. Conv. 15; 1 Washb. Real Prop. Index.

INTEREST (Lat.) It concerns; it is of advantage.

——In Contracts. The right of property which a man has in a thing. See "Insurable Interest."

——On Debts. The compensation which is paid by the borrower of money to the lender for its use, and, generally, by a debtor to his creditor in recompense for his detention of the debt.

INTEREST, MARITIME. See "Marine Interest."

INTEREST OR NO INTEREST. A provision in a policy of insurance, which imports that the policy is to be good though the insured have no insurable interest in the subject matter. This constitutes a "wager policy," which is bad in England, by St. 19 Geo. II. c. 37, and, generally, from the policy of the law. 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 89, note.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE NE MALEFICIA remaneant impunita. It concerns the commonwealth that crimes do not remain unpunished. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 30, 31.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE NE SUA QUIS male utatur. It concerns the republic that no one misuse his property. 6 Coke, 36.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE QUOD HOMInes conserventur. It concerns the commonwealth that we be preserved. 12 Coke, 62.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE RES JUDICAtas non rescindi. It concerns the commonwealth that things adjudged be not rescinded. See "Res Judicata."

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE SUPREMA hominum testamenta rata haberi. It concerns the commonwealth that men's last wills be sustained. Co. Litt. 236.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE UT CARCEres sint in tuto. It concerns the commonwealth that prisons be secure. 2 Inst. 589.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE UT PAX IN regno conservetur, et quaecunque paci adversentur provide declinentur. It benefits the state to preserve peace in the kingdom, and to prudently decline whatever is adverse to it 2 Inst. 158.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE UT QUALIbet re sua bene utatur. It concerns the commonwealth that every one use his property properly. 6 Coke, 37.

INTEREST REIPUBLICAE UT SIT FInis litium. It concerns the commonwealth that there be a limit to litigation. Co. Litt. 303.

INTEREST SUIT. In English probate law. A suit to determine which of several persons is by interest entitled to administer an estate.

INTERFERENCE. The state of things which exists when a person applies for a patent which, if granted, would cover any of the patentable ground occupied by any existing patent, or by any patent for which an application is then pending. An investigation is ordered by the commissioner of patents, for the purpose of determining which of the parties was the first to make the invention, or that portion of it from which the interference results. When the controversy is between two applications, a patent will be finally granted to him who is shown to be the first inventor, and will be denied to the other applicant so far as the point thus controverted is concerned. But if the interference is between an application on the one hand and an actual patent on the other, as there is no power in the patent office to cancel the existing patent, all that can be done is to grant or withhold from the applicant the patent he asks. If the patent is granted to him, there will be two patents for the same thing. The two parties will stand upon a footing of equality, and must settle their rights by a resort to the courts, in the manner provided by the act of congress. In interference cases, each party is allowed to take the testimony of witnesses in accordance with rules established by the patent office. See Act July 4, 1836, §§ 8, 16.

INTERIM (Lat.) In the meantime; meanwhile. An assignee ad interim is one appointed between the time of bankruptcy and appointment of the regular assignee. 2 Bell, Comm. 355.

INTERIM COMMITTITUR. In the meantime let him be committed.

INTERIM CURATOR. An officer appointed to have the temporary management of the property of a convict, since the abolition of escheats. 4 Steph. Comm. 462.

INTERIM FACTOR. In Scotch law. A judicial officer elected or appointed under the bankruptcy law to take charge of and preserve the estate until a fit person shall be elected trustee. 2 Bell, Comm. 357.

INTERIM OFFICER. One appointed to fill a temporary vacancy.

INTERLAQUEARE. In old practice. To link together, or interchangeably. Writs were called "interlaqueata" where several were issued against several parties residing in different counties, each party being summoned by a separate writ to warrant the tenant, together with the other warrantors. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 4, § 2. They were, in other words, simul cum writs.

INTERLINEATION. Writing between two lines.

INTERLOCUTOR. In Scotch practice. An order or decree of court; an order made in open court. 2 Swint. 362; Arkley, 32.

INTERLOCUTOR OF RELEVANCY. In Scotch practice. A decree as to the relevancy of a libel or indictment in a criminal case. 2 Alis. Crim. Pr. 373.

INTERLOCUTORY. Something which is done between the commencement and the end of a suit or action which decides some point or matter, which, however, is not a final decision of the matter in issue; as, interlocutory judgments, or decrees, or orders.

——Interlocutory Costs. Costs accruing upon proceedings in the intermediate stages of a cause, as distinguished from final costs; such as the costs of motions. 3 Chit. Gen. Prac. 597.

——Interlocutory Decree. A provisional or preliminary decree, which is not final, and does not determine the suit, but directs some further proceedings preparatory to the final decree. A decree pronounced for the purpose of ascertaining matter of law or fact preparatory to a final decree. 1 Barb. Ch. Prac. 326, 327.

——Interlocutory Judgment. A preliminary or intermediate judgment. A judgment given in the course of an action upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate, and does not determine or complete the suit, as upon a demurrer or plea in abatement, or where the right of the plaintiff is established, but the quantum of damages is not ascertained. 1 Tidd, Prac. 568. See "Final."

——Interlocutory Order. An order made during the progress of a cause upon some incidental matter which arises out of the proceedings.

——Interlocutory Sentence. In civil law. A sentence on some indirect question arising from the principal cause. Halifax, Civ. Law, bk. 3, c. 9, No. 40.

INTERLOPERS. Persons who interrupt the trade of a company of merchants, by pursuing the same business with them in the same place, without lawful authority.

INTERNATIONAL LAW. The system of rules which Christian states acknowledge to be obligatory upon them in their relations to each other and to each other's subjects. It is the jus inter gentes, as distinguished from the jus gentium.

The rules of conduct regulating the intercourse of states. Halleck, Int. Law, 41; Davis, Int. Law, § 2. It consists of those rules of conduct which reason deduces as consonant to justice from the nature of the society existing among independent nations, with such definitions and modifications as may be established by mutual consent. Wheaton, Int. Law, § 14.

International law has been divided into (1) public, and (2) private, under which division public international law is the law of nations as above defined, while private international law consists of the rules by which courts determine within what national jurisdiction an action or proceeding falls, or by what national law it should be decided. Glenn, Int. Law, § 2.

Various divisions of international law have been proposed, but none are of any great importance. One has been into natural and voluntary law, in which latter conventional or treaty law and customary are embraced. Another, somewhat similar, separates international rules into those which are deducible from general natural jus, those which are derived from the idea of estate, and those which grow out of simple compact. Whatever division be made, it is to be observed that nations are voluntary, first, in deciding the question what intercourse they will hold with each other; second, that they are voluntary in defining their rights and obligations, moral claims and duties, although these have an objective existence beyond the control of the will of nations; and third, that, when international law has arisen by the free assent of those who enter into certain arrangements, obedience to its provisions is as truly in accordance with natural law, which requires the observance of contracts, as if natural law had been intuitively discerned or revealed from heaven, and no consent had been necessary at the outset.

INTERNUNCIO. A minister of a second order, charged with the affairs of the court of Rome, where that court has no nuncio under that title.

INTERNUNCIUS (Lat. from inter, between, and nuncius, a messenger). A messenger between two parties; a go-between. Applied to a broker, as the agent of both parties. 4 Rob. Adm. 204.

INTERPELATION. In civil law. The act by which, in consequence of an agreement, the party bound declares that he will not be bound beyond a certain time. Wolff. Inst. § 752.

In the case of a lease from year to year, or to continue as long as both parties please, a notice given by one of them to the other of a determination to put an end to the contract would bear the name of "interpelation."

INTERPLEADER.

——At Common Law. A proceeding in the action of detinue, by which the defendant states the fact that the thing sued for is in his hands, and that it is claimed by a third person, and that whether such person or the plaintiff is entitled to it is unknown to the defendant, and thereupon the defendant prays that a process of garnishment may be issued to compel such third person so claiming to become defendant in his stead. 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, c. 23; Mitf. Eq. Pl. (Jeremy Ed.) 141; Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 800, 801, 802.

——In Equity. A bill whereby one from whom two or more persons claim the same duty or thing can compel them to interplead, and have their several claims adjudged, lest he be twice compelled to render the same debt, duty, or property. 77 Ill. 139.

——In Modern Law. Several statutory remedies have been substituted in various states. In some, a complaint in the nature of a bill of interpleader (see 17 Mo. 499), and in others a formal collateral proceeding to try title to property (130 Ill. 87).

INTERPRETARE ET CONCORDARE LEges legibus est optimus interpretandi modus. To interpret and reconcile laws so that they harmonize is the best mode of construction. 8 Coke, 169.

INTERPRETATIO CHARTARUM BENIGne facienda est, ut res magis valeat quam pereat. The interpretation of deeds is to be liberal, that the thing may rather have effect than fail. Broom, Leg. Max. 543.

INTERPRETATIO FIENDA EST UT RES magis valeat quam pereat. Such a construction is to be made that the subject may have an effect, rather than none. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 198.

INTERPRETATIO TALIS AMBIGUIS semper fienda est, ut evitetur inconveniens et absurdum. In ambiguous things, such a construction should be made that what is inconvenient and absurd may be avoided. 4 Inst. 328.

INTERPRETATION. The discovery and representation of the true meaning of any signs used to convey ideas. Lieber, Leg. & Pol. Herm.

"Construction" is sometimes used as a synonym (Jones, Const. p. 3), though it has been said that "construction" is the broader term, and includes also the legal effect (2 Pars. Cont. 491, note a).

The "true meaning" of any signs is that meaning which those who used them were desirous of expressing. A person adopting or sanctioning them "uses" them as well as their immediate author. Both parties to an agreement equally make use of the signs declaratory of that agreement, though one only is the originator, and the other may be entirely passive. The most common signs used to convey ideas are words. When there is a contradiction in signs intended to agree, resort must be had to construction,—that is, the drawing of conclusions from the given signs, respecting ideas which they do not express.

(1) Close interpretation (interpretatio restricta) is adopted if just reasons, connected with the formation and character of the text, induce us to take the words in their narrowest meaning. This species of interpretation has generally been called "literal," but the term is inadmissible. Lieber, Leg. & Pol. Herm. 66.

(2) Extensive interpretation (interpretatio extensiva, called, also, "liberal interpretation") adopts a more comprehensive signification of the word.

(3) Extravagant interpretation (interpretatio excedens) is that which substitutes a meaning evidently beyond the true one. It is therefore not genuine interpretation.

(4) Free or unrestricted interpretation (interpretatio soluta) proceeds simply on the general principles of interpretation in good faith, not bound by any specific or superior principle.

(5) Limited or restricted interpretation (interpretatio limitata) is when we are influenced by other principles than the strictly hermeneutic ones. Ernesti, Inst. Interp.

(6) Predestined interpretation (interpretatio predestinata) takes place if the interpreter, laboring under a strong bias of mind, makes the text subservient to his preconceived views or desires. This includes artful interpretation (interpretatio rafer), by which the interpreter seeks to give a meaning to the text other than the one he knows to have been intended.

The civilians divide interpretation into:

(1) Authentic (interpretatio authentica), which proceeds from the author himself.

(2) Usual (interpretatio usualis), when the interpretation is on the ground of usage.

INTERPRETATION CLAUSE. A clause in a statute defining words used therein, or prescribing rules for its interpretation.

INTERPRETER. One employed to make a translation.

An interpreter should be sworn before he translates the testimony of a witness. 4 Mass. 81; 5 Mass. 219; 2 Caines (N. Y.) 155.

A person employed between an attorney and client to act as interpreter is considered merely as the organ between them, and is not bound to testify as to what he has acquired in those confidential communications. 1 Pet. C. C. (U. S.) 356; 4 Munf. (Va.) 273; 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 337.

INTERREGNUM (Lat.) The period, in case of an established government, which elapses between the death of a sovereign and the election of another, is called "interregnum." The vacancy which occurs when there is no government.

INTERN. To restrict a person to a limited territory; to forbid departure from the realm.

INTERROGATOIRE. In French law. An act or instrument which contains the interrogatories made by the judge to the person accused, on the facts which are the object of the accusation, and the answers of the accused. Poth. Proc. Crim. sec. 4, art. 2, § 1.

INTERROGATORIES. Material and pertinent questions, in writing, to necessary points, not confessed, exhibited for the examination of witnesses or persons who are to give testimony in the cause.

Interrogatories are exhibited in various proceedings, as in a bill of equity by way of discovery, on a statutory discovery, on the taking of a deposition.

Interrogatories to a witness are either original and direct on the part of him who produces the witnesses, or cross and counter, on behalf of the adverse party, to examine witnesses produced on the other side. Either party, plaintiff or defendant, may exhibit original or cross interrogatories.

INTERRUPTIO (Lat. from interrumpere, to break through or apart). Interruption. A term used both in the civil and common law of prescription. Calv. Lex.

INTERRUPTIO MULTIPLEX NON TOLlit praescriptionem semel obtentam. Repeated interruptions do not defeat a prescription once obtained. 2 Inst. 654.

INTERRUPTION. The effect of some act or circumstance which stops the course of a prescription or act of limitations. 3 Bligh (N. S.) 444; 4 Mees. & W. 497.

Civil interruption is that which takes place by some judicial act.

Natural interruption is an interruption in fact. 4 Mason (U. S.) 404; 2 Younge & J. 285. See "Easement;" "Limitations;" "Prescription."

——In Scotch Law. The true proprietor's claiming his right during the course of prescription. Bell, Dict.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE. Commerce between persons or places in different states. See "Commerce." A shipment from one state to another under a contract for continuous carriage is interstate commerce, even as to so much of the journey as is within the limits of a single state (102 U. S. 541), or though the journey is temporarily interrupted before leaving the state (116 U. S. 517); but a shipment between points in the same state is not interstate commerce, though the goods are carried out of the state en route (145 U. S. 192).

INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT. Act Cong. Feb. 4, 1888, regulating interstate commerce, designs to secure reasonable and uniform charges for carriage of freight and passengers, and prevent rebates, preferences, and pooling.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISsion. A commission of five persons created by the interstate commerce act to enforce its provisions.

INTERVENER. A party who seeks to interpose in a suit. See "Intervention."

INTERVENTION (Lat. intervenio, to come between or among).

——In Civil Law. The act by which a third party becomes a party in a suit pending between other persons.

The intervention is made either to be joined to the plaintiff, and to claim the same thing he does, or some other thing connected with it; or to join the defendant, and with him to oppose the claim of the plaintiff, which it is his interest to defeat. Poth. Proc. Civ. c. 2, sec. 6, § 3.

——In Modern Practice. The term is sometimes used in the same sense as in the civil law.

——In English Ecclesiastical Law. The proceeding of a third person, who, not being originally a party to the suit or proceeding, but claiming an interest in the subject matter in dispute, in order the better to protect such interest, interposes his claim. 2 Chit. Prac. 492; 3 Chit. Com. Law, 633; 2 Hagg. Const. 137; 3 Phillim. Ecc. Law, 586; 1 Add. Ecc. Law, 5; 4 Hagg. Ecc. Law, 67; Dunl. Adm. Prac. 74. The intervener may come in at any stage of the cause, and even after judgment, if an appeal can be allowed on such judgment. 2 Hagg. Const. 137; 1 Eng. Ecc. Law, 480; 2 Eng. Ecc. Law, 13.

INTESTABILIS. An incompetent or disqualified witness.

INTESTABLE. One who cannot lawfully make a testament.

An infant, an insane person, or one civilly dead cannot make a will, for want of capacity or understanding. A married woman cannot make such a will without some special authority, because she is under the power of her husband. They are all intestable.

INTESTACY. The state or condition of dying without a will.

INTESTATE. One who, having lawful power to make a will, has made none, or one which is defective in form. In that case, he is said to die intestate, and his estate descends to his heir at law.

This term comes from the Latin intestatus. Formerly, it was used in France indiscriminately with de confess; that is, without confession. It was regarded as a crime, on account of the omission of the deceased person to give something to the church, and was punished by privation of burial in consecrated ground. This omission, according to Flournel, Hist. de Avocats, vol. 1, p. 116, could be repaired by making an ampliative testament in the name of the deceased. Vely, tom. 6, p. 145; Henrion de Pansey, Authorite Judiciaire, 129, and note. See "Descent;" "Distribution;" "Will."

INTESTATE SUCCESSION. The succession or devolution of interest of the property of one dying intestate. In Louisiana, the term "succession" is applied to the estate as a whole.

INTESTATO. In the civil law. Intestate; without a will. Calv. Lex.

INTESTATUS. In the civil and old English law. An intestate; one who dies without a will. Dig. 50. 17. 7.

INTESTATUS DECEDIT, QUI AUT OMnino testamentum non fecit aut non juri fecit, aut id quod fecerat ruptum irritumve factum est, aut nemo ex eo haeres exstitit. He dies intestate who either has made no will at all, or has not made it legally, or whose will which he had made has been annulled or become ineffectual, or from whom there is no living heir. Inst. 3. 1. pr.; Dig. 38. 16. 1; Id. 50. 16. 64.

INTIMATION.

——In Civil Law. The name of any judicial act by which a notice of a legal proceeding is given to some one; but it is more usually understood to mean the notice or summons which an appellant causes to be given to the opposite party, that the sentence will be reviewed by the superior judge.

——In Scotch Law. An instrument of writing, made under the hand of a notary, and notified to a party, to inform him of a right which a third person had acquired; for example, when a creditor assigns a claim against his debtor, the assignee or cedent must give an intimation of this to the debtor, who, till then, is justified in making payment to the original creditor. Kames, Eq. bk. 1, p. 1, § 1.

INTITLE. An old form of entitle. 6 Mod. 304.

INTOL AND UTTOL. In old records. Toll or custom paid for things imported and exported, or bought in and sold out. Cowell.

INTOXICATED. Drunk from the use of intoxicating liquors. See 47 Vt. 294.

INTOXICATING LIQUORS. Such liquors as will, if used as a beverage, produce drunkenness. 25 Kan. 767.

It includes all liquors, whether spirituous, vinous, or malt (70 Mass. 20), of which the human stomach can contain enough to produce intoxication. 21 N. Y. 173.

INTRA. In Latin phrases. A preposition, meaning in; near; within. Infra or inter has taken the place of intra in many of the more modern Latin phrases.

INTRA ANNI SPATIUM. Within the space of a year. Code, 5. 9. 2. Intra annale tempus. Id. 6. 30. 19.

INTRA FIDEM. Within belief; credible. Calv. Lex.

INTRA LUCTUS TEMPUS (Lat.) Within the time of mourning. Code, 9. 1.

INTRA MAENIA (Lat. within the walls of a house). A term applied to domestic or menial servants. 1 Bl. Comm. 425.

INTRA QUATUOR MARIA (Lat.) Within the four seas. Shep. Touch. 378.

INTRA PARIETES (Lat.) Between walls; among friends; out of court; without litigation. Calv. Lex.

INTRA PRAESIDIA (Lat.) Within the defenses. Dig. 49. 15. 5. 1. See "Infra Praesidia."

INTRA VIRES. Within the power. The opposite of ultra vires (q. v.)

INTRINSIC VALUE. "Its true, inherent, and essential value, not depending upon accident, place, or person, but the same everywhere, and to every one." 5 Ired. (N. C.) 698.

INTROMISSION. In Scotch law. The assuming possession of property belonging to another, either on legal grounds, or without any authority. In the latter case it is called "vicious" intromission. Bell, Dict.

INTRONISATION. In French ecclesiastical law. The installation of a bishop in his Episcopal see. Clef des Lois Rom.

INTRUDER. One who, on the death of the ancestor, enters on the land, unlawfully, before the heir can enter.

INTRUSION. The entry of a stranger after the determination of a particular estate of freehold, before the entry of him in reversion or remainder.

This entry and interposition of the stranger differs from an abatement in this, that an abatement is always to the prejudice of an heir or immediate devisee; an intrusion is always to the prejudice of him in remainder or reversion. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 169; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 203; Archb. Civ. Pl. 12; Dane, Abr. Index; 3 Steph. Comm. 443.

The name of a writ brought by the owner of a fee simple, etc., against an intruder. New Nat. Brev. 453. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 57.

INTUITUS (Lat. from intueri, to look upon or view). A view; regard; contemplation. Diverso intuitu (q. v.), with a different view.

View or sight. Intuitu Dei, in the sight of God. Magna Charta, pr.

INURE. To take effect; to result.

INUTILIS LABOR, ET SINE FRUCTU, non est effectus legis. Useless labor and without fruit is not the effect of law. Co. Litt. 127; Wingate, Max. 38.

INVADIARE (Law Lat.) In feudal and old European law. To pledge; to engage or pledge lands; to mortgage.

INVADIATIO (Law Lat.) A pledge or mortgage.

INVADIATUS (Law Lat.) One who is under pledge; one who has had sureties or pledges given for him. Spelman.

A person acquitted.

INVALID. Not valid; of no binding force.

INVASION. The entry of a country by a public enemy, making war.

INVECTA ET ILLATA (Lat.) In civil law. Things carried and brought in; things brought into a building hired (aedes), or into a hired estate in the city (praedium urbanum), which are held by a tacit mortgage for the rent. Vocat; Domat, Civ. Law.

INVENIENS LIBELLUM FAMOSUM ET non corrumpens punitur. He who finds a libel, and does not destroy it, is punished. F. Moore, 813.

INVENTIO.

——In Civil Law. Finding; one of the modes of acquiring title to property by occupancy. Heinec. lib. 2, tit. 1, § 350. Sometimes Englished "invention."

——In Old English Law. A thing found; as goods, or treasure trove. Cowell. The plural, inventiones, is also used.

INVENTION. In patent law. The act or operation of finding out something new; the contrivance of that which did not before exist. The word is also used to denote the thing itself which has been so contrived, and which is the subject matter of a patent.

The test of novelty to determine whether a given contrivance is an "invention" is whether an ordinary mechanic would, without other suggestion than his knowledge of the art, make such a contrivance. If so, it is not an invention. 3 Fish. Pat. Cas. (U. S.) 98; 27 Fed. 219.

An invention differs from a "discovery," inasmuch as this latter term is used to signify the finding out of something which existed before. Thus, we speak of the discovery of the properties of steam, or of electricity; but the first contrivance of any machinery by which those discoveries were applied to practical use was an invention; the former always existed, though not before known; the latter did not previously exist.

INVENTIONES. A word used in some ancient English charters to signify treasure trove.

INVENTOR. One who finds out something new, or who contrives or produces a thing which did not before exist; one who makes an invention. The word is generally used to denote the author of such contrivances as are by law patentable. See "Invention."

INVENTORY. A list, schedule, or enumeration in writing, containing, article by article, the goods and chattels, rights and credits, and, in some cases, the lands and tenements, of a person or persons. A conservatory act, which is made to ascertain the situation of an intestate's estate, the estate of an insolvent, and the like, for the purpose of securing it to those entitled to it.

INVENTUS (Lat.) Found. Thesaurus inventus, treasure trove. Non est inventus, he is not found.

INVERITARE. To verify or prove.

INVEST (Lat. investire, to clothe). To put in possession of a fief upon taking the oath of fealty or fidelity to the prince or superior lord.

INVESTITIVE FACT. One by means of which a right comes into existence. Holland, Jur. 132.

They are divided by Bentham into collative, conferring rights, and impositive, imposing duties.

INVESTITURE. The act of giving possession of lands by actual seisin.

When livery of seisin was made to a person by the common law, he was invested with the whole fee. This the foreign feudists, and sometimes our own law writers, call "investiture;" but, generally speaking, it is termed by the common-law writers the "seisin of the fee." 2 Bl. Comm. 209, 313; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 223, note (z).

By the canon law, investiture was made per baculum et annulum, by the ring and crosier, which were regarded as symbols of the Episcopal jurisdiction. Ecclesiastical and secular fiefs were governed by the same rule in this respect,—that previously to investiture neither a bishop, abbot, or lay lord could take possession of a fief conferred upon them by the prince.

Pope Gregory VI. first disputed the right of sovereigns to give investiture of ecclesiastical fiefs, A. D. 1045; but Pope Gregory VII. carried on the dispute with much more vigor, A. D. 1073. He excommunicated the emperor Henry IV. The popes Victor III., Urban II., and Paul II. continued the contest. This dispute, it is said, cost Christendom sixty-three battles, and the lives of many millions of men.

INVESTMENT BUYING. See "Gambling Contract."

INVIOLABILITY. That which is not to be violated. The persons of ambassadors are inviolable. See "Ambassador."

INVITO (Lat.) Being unwilling.

INVITO BENEFICIUM NON DATUR. No one is obliged to accept a benefit against his consent. Dig. 50. 17. 69; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 625. But if he does not dissent, he will be considered as assenting. See "Assent."

INVITO DEBITORE (Lat.) Against the will of the debtor.

INVITO DOMINO (Lat.) In criminal law. Without the consent of the owner.

In order to constitute larceny, the property stolen must be taken invito domino; this is the very essence of the crime. Cases of considerable difficulty arise when the owner has, for the purpose of detecting thieves, by himself or his agents, delivered the property taken, as to whether they are larcenies or not. The distinction seems to be this, that when the owner procures the property to be taken, it is not larceny; and when he merely leaves it in the power of the defendant to execute his original purpose of taking it, in the latter case it will be considered as taken invito domino. 2 Bailey (S. C.) 569; 2 Russ. Crimes, 66, 105; 2 Leach, C. C. 913; 2 East, P. C. 666; Bac. Abr. "Felony" (C); Alis. Crim. Prac. 273; 2 Bos. & P. 508; 1 Car. & M. 217. See "Larceny."

INVOICE. In commercial law. An account of goods or merchandise sent by merchants to their correspondents at home or abroad, in which the marks of each package, with other particulars, are set forth. Marsh. Ins. 408; Dane, Abr. Index. An invoice ought to contain a detailed statement, which should indicate the nature, quantity, quality, and price of the things sold, deposited, etc. 1 Pardessus, Dr. Com. note 248. See "Bill of Lading;" 2 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 113, 155.

INVOICE BOOK. A book in which invoices are copied.

INVOLUNTARY. An involuntary act is that which is performed with constraint (q. v.), or with repugnance, or without the will to do it. An action is involuntary, then, which is performed under duress. Wolff. Inst. § 5.

The term is frequently used in connection with various proceedings to denote an adverse proceeding. Thus, involuntary bankruptcy proceedings are those instituted by a creditor, and not by the bankrupt.

INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER. Homicide committed unintentionally, but without excuse, and not under such circumstances as to raise the implication of malice. 1 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 562.

IOTA. The ninth and smallest letter of the Greek alphabet; hence any minute or insignificant thing.

IPSAE LEGES CUPIUNT UT JURE REgantur. The laws themselves desire that they should be governed by right. Co. Litt. 174b, quoted from Cato.

IPSE (Lat.) I (before verbs of first person); thou (before verbs of second person); he himself, she herself, he alone, etc.; the very one; e. g., ipsum corpus, the very thing itself. Halk. Tech. Terms. Ipsae [etenim] leges cupiunt ut jures regantur, for the very laws themselves wish that they should be ruled by right,—a line, quoted from Cato, which occurs in the decision of Chief Justice Wray and the whole court in the Case of Bankrupts, 2 Coke, 25b.

IPSE DIXIT. He himself said it. Applied as a substantive to the unsupported assertion of one person.

IPSISSIMIS VERBIS (Lat.) In the identical words; opposed to "substantially." 7 How. (U. S.) 719; 5 Ohio St. 346.

IPSO FACTO (Lat.) By the fact itself; by the mere fact.

IPSO JURE (Lat.) By the operation of law; by mere law.

IRA FUROR BREVIS EST. Anger is a short insanity. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 336, 355.

IRA MOTUS (Lat.) Moved or excited by anger or passion. A term sometimes formerly used in the plea of son assault demesne. 1 Tidd, Prac. 645.

IRE AD LARGUM (Lat.) To go at large.

IRENARCHA. In Roman law. An officer whose duties are described in Dig. 5. 4. 18. 7. See Id. 48. 3. 6; Code, 10. 75. Literally, a peace officer or magistrate.

IRREGULAR. Not according to rule. See "Irregularity."

IRREGULAR DEPOSIT. See "Deposit."

IRREGULAR PROCESS. Such as a court has general jurisdiction to issue, but which is unauthorized in the particular case by reason of the existence or nonexistence of some fact or circumstance rendering it improper in such a case. 103 N. Y. 84, 90.

IRREGULARITY. In practice. The doing or not doing that, in the conduct of a suit at law, which, conformably with the practice of the court, ought or ought not to be done.

It is the technical term for every defect in proceedings or the mode of conducting an action or defense. It is a comprehensive term, including all formal objections to matters of practice.

IRRELEVANT. Matter in a pleading which has no substantial relation to the controversy in suit. 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 743; 6 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 312.

Equivalent to "impertinent." Includes "scandalous" matter in a pleading. 5 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 53.

IRRELEVANT EVIDENCE. That which does not support the issue, and which, of course, must be excluded.

IRREPARABLE INJURY. An injury is "irreparable," within the rule that injunction will issue to prevent only such injuries, not only where the injury, from its nature, cannot be compensated by damages, or the damages cannot be ascertained by any certain measure (4 N. J. Eq. 449), but when the wrongdoer is insolvent (51 Iowa, 385; 42 Neb. 238).

IRREPLEVIABLE. That cannot be replevied or delivered on sureties. Spelled, also, "irreplevisable." Co. Litt. 145; 13 Edw. I. c. 2.

IRRESISTIBLE FORCE. A term applied to such an interposition of human agency as is, from its nature and power, absolutely uncontrollable; as, the inroads of a hostile army. Story, Bailm. § 25; Lois des Batim. pt. 2, c. 2, § 1. It differs from "inevitable accident" (q. v.)

IRREVOCABLE. Which cannot be revoked or recalled. A power of attorney in which the attorney has an interest granted for consideration is irrevocable. See "Will."

IRRIGATION. The act of wetting or moistening the ground by artificial means; the application of water to land by artificial means for the raising of crops and other products of the soil. Long, Irrigation, § 1.

IRRITANCY. In Scotch law. The happening of a condition or event by which a charter, contract, or other deed, to which a clause irritant is annexed, becomes void. Ersk. Inst. bk. 2, tit. 5, note 25. Irritancy is a kind of forfeiture. It is legal or conventional. Burton, Real Prop. 298.

IRRITANT. In Scotch law. Avoiding or making void; as an irritant clause. See "Irritancy."

IRRITANT CLAUSE. In Scotch law. A provision by which certain prohibited acts specified in a deed are, if committed, declared to be null and void.

IRROGARE. In civil law. To impose or set upon, as a fine. Calv. Lex. To inflict, as a punishment. To make or ordain, as a law.

IRROTULATIO (Law Lat.) An inrolling; a record. 2 Rymer, Foed. 673; Du Cange; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.; Bracton, fol. 293; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 11.

ISH. In Scotch law. The period of the termination of a tack or lease. 1 Bligh, 522.

ISLAND. A body of land surrounded by water. The title to islands in navigable waters is in the state (53 Am. Rep. 215); but an island in private waters belongs to the owners of the nearest mainland, unless otherwise appropriated (9 Cush. [Mass.] 548).

ISSINT (Norman Fr. thus, so). In pleading. A term formerly used to introduce a statement that special matter already pleaded amounts to a denial.

In actions founded on deeds, the defendant may, instead of pleading non est factum in the common form, allege any special matter which admits the execution of the writing in question, but which, nevertheless, shows that it is not in law his deed, and may conclude with, "and so it is not his deed;" as, that the writing was delivered to A. B. as an escrow, to be delivered over on certain conditions, which have not been complied with, "and so it is not his act;" or that, at the time of making the writing the defendant was a feme covert, "and so it is not her act." Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (H 3), (I 2); Gould, Pl. c. 6, pt. 1, § 64.

An example of this form of plea, which is sometimes called the "special general issue," occurs in 4 Rawle (Pa.) 83, 84.

ISSUABLE. In practice. Leading or tending to an issue. An issuable plea is one upon which the plaintiff can take issue and proceed to trial.

ISSUABLE PLEA. A plea in chief to the merits, upon which the plaintiff may take issue and go to trial.

ISSUABLE TERMS. Hilary and Trinity terms are so called from the making up of the issues, during those terms, for the assizes, that they may be tried by the judges, who generally go on circuit to try such issues after these two terms. But for town causes all four terms are issuable. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 350; 1 Tidd, Prac. 121.

ISSUE.

——In Real Property Law. Lineal descendants; all persons who have descended from a common ancestor. 3 Ves. 257; 17 Ves. 481; 19 Ves. 547; 1 Rop. Leg. 90.

In a will it may be held to have a more restricted meaning, to carry out the testator's intention. 7 Ves. 522; 19 Ves. 73; 1 Rop. Leg. 90. See "Heirs of the Body."

——In Pleading. A single, certain, and material point, deduced by the pleadings of the parties, which is affirmed on the one side, and denied on the other.

The entry of the pleadings. 1 Chit. Pl. 630.

Several connected matters of fact may go to make up the point in issue.

A collateral issue is one framed upon some matter not directly in the line of the pleadings; as, for example, upon the identity of one who pleads diversity in bar of execution. 4 Bl. Comm. 396.

A common issue is that which is formed upon the plea of non est factum to an action of covenant broken.

An actual issue is one formed in an action brought in the regular manner, for the purpose of trying a question of right between the parties.

A feigned issue is one formed in a fictitious action, under direction of the court, for the purpose of trying before a jury some question of fact.

Such issues are generally ordered by a court of equity, for which no jury is summoned, to ascertain the truth of some disputed fact. They are also frequently used in courts of law, by the consent of the parties, to determine some disputed rights without the formality of pleading; and by this practice much time and expense are saved in the decision of a cause. 3 Bl. Comm. 452. Suppose, for example, it is desirable to settle a question of the validity of a will in a court of equity. For this purpose an action is brought, in which the plaintiff, by a fiction, declares that he laid a wager for a sum of money with the defendant, for example, that a certain paper is the last will and testament of A., then avers it is his will, and therefore demands the money; the defendant admits the wager, but avers that it is not the will of A.; and thereupon that issue is joined, which is directed out of chancery to be tried; and thus the verdict of the jurors at law determines the fact in the court of equity.

The name is a misnomer, inasmuch as the issue itself is upon a real, material point in question between the parties, and the circumstances only are fictitious. It is a contempt of the court in which the action is brought to bring such an action, except under the direction of some court. 4 Term R. 402.

(1) A formal issue is one which is framed according to the rules required by law, in an artificial and proper manner.

(2) An informal issue is one which arises when a material averment is traversed in an improper or inartificial manner. Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (G 2, N 5); 2 Wm. Saund. 319a, note 6.

(3) An issue in fact is one in which the truth of some fact is affirmed and denied.

In general, it consists of a direct affirmative allegation on one side, and a direct negative on the other. Co. Litt. 126a; Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (G 1); 2 W. Bl. 1312; 8 Term R. 278; 5 Pet. (U. S.) 149. But an affirmative allegation which completely excludes the truth of the preceding may be sufficient. 1 Wils. 6; 2 Strange, 1177. Thus, the general issue in a writ of right, called the "mise," is formed by two affirmatives, the demandant claiming a greater right than the tenant, and the tenant a greater than the demandant. 3 Bl. Comm. 195, 305. And in an action of dower, the count merely demands that the third part of [ ] acres of land, etc., as the dower of the demandant of the endowment of A. B., heretofore the husband, etc., and the general issue is that A. B. was not seised of such estate, etc., and that he could not endow the demandant thereof, etc.; which mode of denial, being argumentative, would not, in general, be allowed. 2 Saund. 329.

(4) A general issue is one which denies in direct terms the whole declaration; as, for example, where the defendant pleads nil debet, that he owes the plaintiff nothing, or nul disseisin, no disseisin committed. 3 Greenl. Ev. § 9; 3 Bl. Comm. 305. See "General Issue."

(5) A special issue is one formed by the defendant's selecting any one substantial point, and resting the weight of his cause upon that. It is contrasted with the general issue. Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (R 1, 2).

(6) A material issue is one properly formed on some material point which will, when decided, decide the question between the parties.

(7) An immaterial issue is one formed on some immaterial matter, which, though found by the verdict, will not determine the merits of the cause, and will leave the court at a loss how to give judgment. 2 Wm. Saund. 319, note 6. See "Immaterial Issue."

(8) An issue in fact is an issue taken upon or consisting of matter of fact, the fact only, and not the law being disputed, and which is to be tried by a jury. 3 Bl. Comm. 314, 315; Co. Litt. 126a; 3 Steph. Comm. 572.

(9) An issue in law is an issue upon matter of law, or consisting of matter of law, being produced by a demurrer on the one side, and a joinder in demurrer on the other. 3 Bl. Comm. 314; 3 Steph. Comm. 572, 580.

ISSUE ROLL. In English law. The name of a record which contains an entry of the term of which the demurrer book, issue, or paper book is entitled, and the warrants of attorney supposed to have been given by the parties at the commencement of the cause, and then proceeds with the transcript of the declaration and subsequent proceedings, continuances, and award of the mode of the decision as contained in the demurrer, issue, or paper book. Steph. Pl. 98, 99. After final judgment, the issue roll is no longer called by that name, but assumes that of judgment roll. 2 Archb. Prac. 206.

ISSUES. In English law. The goods and profits of the lands of a defendant against whom a writ of distringas or distress infinite has been issued, taken by virtue of such writ, are called "issues." 3 Bl. Comm. 280; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 351.

ITA EST (Lat. so it is). Among the civilians, when a notary dies, leaving his register, an officer who is authorized to make official copies of his notarial acts writes, instead of the deceased notary's name, which is required when he is living, ita est.

ITA LEX SCRIPTA EST. The law is so written. 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 374, 380.

The law must be obeyed, notwithstanding the apparent rigor of its application. 3 Bl. Comm. 430. We must be content with the law as it stands, without inquiring into its reasons. 1 Bl. Comm. 32.

ITA QUOD (Lat.) The name or condition in a submission, which is usually introduced by these words, "so as the award be made of and upon the premises," which, from the first words, is called the ita quod.

When the submission is with an ita quod, the arbitrator must make an award of all matters submitted to him of which he had notice,, or the award will be entirely void. 7 East, 81; Cro. Jac. 200; 2 Vern. 109; Rolle, Abr. "Arbitrament" (L 9).

ITA SEMPER FIAT RELATIO UT VALEAT DISPOSITIO. Let the relation be so made that the disposition may stand. 6 Coke, 76.

ITA TE DEUS ADJUVET (Lat. so help you God). The old form of administering an oath in England, generally in connection with other words, thus: Ita te Deus adjuvet, et sacrosancta Dei Evangelia, So help you God, and God's holy Evangelists. Ita te Deus adjuvet et omnes sancti, So help you God and all the saints. Willes, 338.

ITA UTERE TUO UT ALIENUM NON LAEDAS. Use your own property and your own rights in such a way that you will not hurt your neighbor, or prevent him from enjoying his. Frequently written, "Sic utere tuo," etc. (q. v.)

ITEM (Lat.) Also; likewise; in like manner; again; a second time. These are the various meanings of this Latin adverb.

It is used to introduce a new paragraph, or chapter, or division; also to denote a particular in an account. It is used when any article or clause is added to a former, as if there were here a new beginning. Du Cange. Hence the rule that a clause in a will introduced by item shall not influence or be influenced by what precedes or follows, if it be sensible, taken independently (1 Salk. 239), or there is no plain intent that it should be taken in connection, in which cases it may be construed conjunctively, in the sense of "and," or "also," in such a manner as to connect sentences. If, therefore, a testator bequeath a legacy to Peter, payable out of a particular fund, or charged upon a particular estate, item, a legacy to James, James' legacy as well as Peter's will be a charge upon the same property. 1 Atk. 436; 3 Atk. 256; 1 Brown, Ch. 482; 1 Rolle, Abr. 844; 1 Mod. 100; Cro. Car. 368; Vaughan, 262; 2 Rop. Leg. 349; 1 Salk. 234.

ITER (Lat.)

——In Civil Law. A way; a right of way

belonging as a servitude to an estate in the country (praedium rusticum). The right of way was of three kinds: (1) Iter, a right to walk, or ride on horseback or in a litter; (2) actus, a right to drive a beast or vehicle; (3) via, a full right of way, comprising right to walk or ride, or dive beast or carriage. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 408. Or, as some think, they were distinguished by the width of the objects which could be rightfully carried over the way; e. g., via, eight feet; actus, four feet, etc. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 290; Bracton, 232; 4 Bell, H. L. Sc. 390.

Iter est jus eundi, ambulandi hominis; non etiam jumentum agendi vel vehiculum. Iter is the right of going or walking, and does not include the right of driving a beast of burden or a carriage. Co. Litt. 56a; Inst. 2. 3. pr.; 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, p. 343, § 314.

——In Old English Law. A journey, especially a circuit made by a justice in eyre, or itinerant justice, to try causes according to his own mission. Du Cange; Bracton, Hb. 3, cc. 11, 12, 13; Britt. c. 2; Cowell. See "Justices in Eyre."

ITERUM (Lat.) In the civil law. A second time. Dig. 2. 13. 7. 1.

ITERATIO. Again; a second time.

ITINERA (Lat. pl. of iter). Eyres, or circuits. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 52.

ITINERANT. Wandering; travelling; who makes circuits. See "Justices in Eyre."

ITINERANTES (Law Lat.) Itinerant; travelling; in eyre. A term applied to justices instituted by Hen. II.

ITINERATIO (Law Lat.) In old English law. An eyre, or circuit; the same with iter. Spelman. Si infra diem illum incipiat itineratio, if the eyre begins within that day. Bracton, fol. 110.

J

JA (Law Fr.) Yet; never; nevertheless. Kelham; Britt. c. 49, 93.

JACENS (Lat.) Lying; fallen; prostrate; in abeyance. Bracton, fol. 84.

JACENS HAEREDITAS. An inheritance which is in abeyance.

JACTITATION. Throwing out; a false boasting.

JACTITATION OF MARRIAGE. In English ecclesiastical law. The boasting by an individual that he or she has married another, from which it may happen that they will acquire the reputation of being married to each other.

The ecclesiastical courts may in such cases entertain a libel by the party injured, and, on proof of the facts, enjoin the wrongdoer to perpetual silence, and, as a punishment, make him pay the costs. 3 Bl. Comm. 93; 2 Hagg. Consist. 285, 423; 2 Chit. Prac. 459.

JACTITATION OF TITHES. The boasting by a man that he is entitled to certain tithes, to which he has legally no title.

JACTIVUS. One who is in default, or loses by default. Spelman.

JACTURA (Lat. jaceo, to throw). A jettison.

JACTUS (Lat.) A throwing goods overboard to lighten or save the vessel, in which case the goods so sacrificed are a proper subject for general average. Dig. 14. 2, de lege Rhodia de jactu; 1 Pardessus, 104 et seq.; Kuricke, Inst. Mar. Hanseat. tit. 8; 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 288, note.

JACTUS LIBELLI. In the civil law. The throwing down of a stone (of a structure being erected on land). One of the means whereby the true owner might assert his title, and interrupt the running of an adverse possession.

JAIL. A term generally substituted in modern usage for "gaol" (q. v.)

JAIL DELIVERY. See "Gaol Delivery."

JAIL LIBERTIES. See "Gaol Liberties."

JAMUNLINGI, or JAMUNDILINGI. Freemen who delivered themselves and property to the protection of a more powerful person, in order to avoid military service and other burdens. Spelman. Also a species of serfs among the Germans. Du Cange. The same as commendati.

JANITOR (Lat.) In old English law. A doorkeeper. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 24.

JAVELOUR. In Scotch law. Jailer or gaoler. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 33.

JEDBURGH JUSTICE. Lynch law. Rapalje & L.

JEOFAILE (Law Fr.) I have failed; I am in error.

Certain statutes are called statutes of amendments and jeofailes, because, where a pleader perceives any slip in the form of his proceedings, and acknowledges the error (jeofaile), he is at liberty, by those statutes, to amend it. The amendment, however, is seldom made; but the benefit is attained by the court's overlooking the exception. 3 Bl. Comm. 407; 1 Saund. 228, note 1; Doct. Plac. 297; Dane, Abr. These statutes do not apply to indictments.

JEOPARDY. Peril; danger. See Baldw. (U. S.) 93.

The usual technical use of the term is in connection with the rule of criminal law, that no person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense. Const. U. S. art. 5, Amend.

A person is "in jeopardy," within this rule, when a trial jury is impanelled and sworn to try his case (83 Ind. 331; 18 N. Y. 128; 105 Pa. St. 1) upon issue joined (111 Ind. 47) by plea to a valid indictment (105 Mass. 53; 5 Md. 82) in a court of competent jurisdiction (7 Mich. 162; 48 N. J. Law, 371), and the jury has been charged with his deliverance (23 Pa. St. 12; 2 Kelly [Ga.] 60). Where the practice of charging the jury with the deliverance of the prisoner at the outset does not obtain, jeopardy attaches when the jury is sworn.

There are some holdings that jeopardy does not attach till after verdict. 5 Litt. (Ky.) 137; 1 Walk. (Miss.) 134.

JERGUER. In English law. An officer of the custom house, who oversees the waiters. Tech. Dict.

JET (Fr.) In French law. Jettison. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 8; Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 12, § 40.

JETSAM. Goods cast out from a ship by way of jettison, and which sink, being thus distinguished from flotsam, jettisoned goods which float, and ligan, jettisoned goods, bound to some buoyant substance. 1 Bl. Comm. 292.

JETTISON. The throwing overboard of part of the cargo, or any article on board a ship, or the cutting and casting away of masts, spars, rigging, sails, or other furniture, for the purpose of lightening or relieving the ship in case of necessity or emergency. Gourlie, Gen. Av. 74.

JEUX DE BOURSE. In French law. A kind of gambling or speculation, which consists of sales and purchases which bind neither of the parties to deliver the things which are the object of the sale, and which are settled by paying the difference in the value of the things sold between the day of the sale and that appointed for delivery of such things. 1 Pardessus, Dr. Com. note 162.

JOB. The whole of a thing which is to be done. In this sense it is employed in the Civil Code of Louisiana (article 2727): "To build by plot, or to work by the job," says that article, "is to undertake a building for a certain stipulated price." See Duranton, Cont. liv. 3, tit. 8, notes 248, 263; Poth. Cont. notes 392, 394. See "Deviation."

JOBBER. In commercial law. One who buys and sells articles for others.

One who buys from importers, and sells to retailers. 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 587.

JOCALIA (Lat.) Jewels. This term was formerly more properly applied to those ornaments which women, although married, call their own. When these jocalia are not suitable to her degree, they are assets for the payment of debts. 1 Rolle, Abr. 911.

JOCLET. In old English law. A little farm or manor. Cowell; Blount.

JOCUS (Lat.) In old English law. A game of hazard. Reg. Orig. 290.

JOCUS PARTITUS. In old English practice. A divided game, risk, or hazard. An arrangement which the parties to a suit were anciently sometimes allowed to make by mutual agreement upon a certain hazard (sub periculo); as that one should lose if the case turned out in a certain way, and, if it did not, that the other should gain (quod unus amittat si ita sit, et si non sit, quod alius lucretur). Bracton, fols. 211b, 379b, 432, 434, 200b.

This arrangement, however, was altogether a voluntary and extrajudicial one.

JOHN DOE. A name given in legal proceedings to a party whose true name is unknown. It was the name which was usually given to the fictitious lessee of the plaintiff in the mixed action of ejectment. He was sometimes called "Goodtitle," or "Jackson." So the Romans had their fictitious personages in law proceedings, as Titius, Seius.

JOINDER. A joining or uniting together; a comprehending or including of several persons or things together; as of several persons as plaintiffs or defendants in one suit, or of several causes of action, or counts, in one declaration. 1 Chit. Pl. 8, 41, 64, 84, 199.

JOINDER IN DEMURRER. The formal answer made to a demurrer at common law.

JOINDER OF ACTIONS. Joinder of two or more causes of action in the same complaint or declaration.

JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION. See "Joinder of Actions."

JOINDER OF ISSUE. The acceptance by one party of an issue of fact tendered by the other.

JOINDER OF OFFENSES. The uniting of several distinct offenses in one indictment or information.

JOINDER OF PARTIES. The uniting of two or more persons as coparties, either plaintiff or defendant.

JOINT ACTION. An action brought by two or more as plaintiffs, or against two or more as defendants.

JOINT ADVENTURE. An enterprise undertaken by several persons jointly. See "Adventure."

JOINT AND SEVERAL BOND. A bond of two or more obligors, who bind themselves jointly and severally to the obligees, who can sue all the obligors jointly, or any one of them separately, for the whole amount, but cannot bring a joint action against part, that is, treat it as joint as to some, and several as to others. Upon the payment of the whole by one of such obligors, a right to contribution arises in his favor against the other obligors.

JOINT BOND. The bond of two or more obligors, the action to enforce which must be joint against them all.

JOINT CONTRACT. One in which the contractors are jointly bound to perform the promise or obligation therein contained, or entitled to receive the benefit of such promise or obligation.

JOINT CREDITORS. Persons jointly holding the same debt or demand.

JOINT DEBTORS. Persons united in a joint liability or indebtedness.

JOINT EXECUTORS. Those who are joined in the execution of a will.

JOINT FIAT. A fiat in bankruptcy, issued against two or more trading partners. Wharton.

JOINT FINE. In old English law. "If a whole vill is to be fined, a joint fine may be laid, and it will be good for the necessity of it; but, in other cases, fines for offenses are to be severally imposed on each particular offender, and not jointly upon all of them." Jacob.

JOINT HEIR. A coheir.

JOINT INDICTMENT. One indictment brought against two or more offenders, charging the defendants jointly. It may be where there is a joint criminal act, without any regard to any particular personal default or defect of either of the defendants. Thus, there may be a joint indictment against the joint keepers of a gaming house. 1 Vent. 302; 2 Hawk. P. C. 240.

JOINT LIVES. This expression, which is met with more frequently in English books, applies when a right is granted to two or more persons, to be enjoyed while both or all of them shall live. Abbott.

JOINT-STOCK BANKS. In English law. A species of quasi corporations, or companies regulated by deeds of settlement.

In some respects they stand in the same situation as other unincorporated bodies; but they differ from the latter in this, that they are invested by certain statutes with powers and privileges usually incident to corporations. These enactments provide for the continuance of the partnership notwithstanding a change of partners. The death, bankruptcy, or the sale by a partner of his share does not affect the identity of the partnership. It continues the same body, under the same name, by virtue of the act of parliament, notwithstanding these changes. 7 Geo. IV. c. 46, § 9.

JOINT-STOCK COMPANY. A partnership having a capital stock divided into transferable shares. Shumaker, Partnership, 447.

JOINT-STOCK CORPORATION. A term used sometimes instead of "stock corporation" to indicate those corporations (including substantially all corporations for pecuniary profit) which have a capital stock divided into shares.

JOINT TENANTS. Two or more persons who acquire together lands or tenements to be held jointly between them in equal shares, the interests of all uniting and forming one ownership.

Joint tenants differ from tenants in common, in that the title of the former must have been acquired at the same time, by the same conveyance or act, while the latter hold by several titles; and also in that the shares of the former are equal, while those of the latter need not be so.

JOINT TRESPASSERS. Two or more who unite in committing a trespass.

JOINT TRUSTEES. Two or more persons charged jointly with the execution of a trust.

JOINTRESS, or JOINTURESS. A woman who has an estate settled on her by her husband, to hold during her life, if she survive him. Co. Litt. 46.

JOINTURE. A joint estate limited to both husband and wife. A competent livelihood of freehold for the wife, of lands and tenements, to take effect, in profit or possession, presently after the death of the husband, for the life of the wife at least.

Jointures are regulated by the statute of 27 Hen. VIII. c. 10, commonly called the "Statute of Uses."

To make a good jointure, the following circumstances must concur, namely: It must take effect, in possession or profit, immediately from the death of the husband. It must be for the wife's life, or for some greater estate. It must be limited to the wife herself, and not to any other person in trust for her. It must be made in satisfaction for the wife's whole dower, and not of part of it only. The estate limited to the wife must be expressed or averred to be in satisfaction of her whole dower. It must be made before marriage. A jointure attended with all these circumstances is binding on the widow, and is a complete bar to the claim of dower, or, rather, it prevents its ever arising. But there are other modes of limiting an estate to a wife, which, Lord Coke says, are good jointures within the statute, provided the wife accepts of them after the death of the husband. She may, however, reject them, and claim her dower. Cruise, Dig. tit. 7; 2 Bl. Comm. 137. In its more enlarged sense, a jointure signifies a joint estate limited to both husband and wife. 2 Bl. Comm. 137. See 14 Viner, Abr. 540; Bac. Abr.; 2 Bouv. Inst, note 1761 et seq.; Washb. Real Prop.

JORNALE (Law Lat.) In old European law. As much ground as might be ploughed in one day. Spelman.

JOUR. A French word, signifying day. It is used in our old law books; as, tout jours, forever. It is also frequently employed in the composition of words; as, journal, a day book; journeyman, a man who works by the day; journeys account.

JOUR EN BANC. In old practice. A day in banc. Distinguished from "jour en pays," a day in the country, otherwise called "jour en nisi prius." Y. B. H. 11 Hen. VI. 1.

JOURNAL.

——In Maritime Law. The book kept on board of a ship or other vessel, which contains an account of the ship's course, with a short history of every occurrence during the voyage. Another name for log book. Chit. Law Nat. 199.

——In Commercial Law. A book used among merchants, in which the contents of the waste book or day book are separated every month, and entered on the debtor and creditor side, for more convenient posting in the ledger.

——In Legislation. An account of the proceedings of a legislative body.

JOURNEY. The term originally signified a day's travel (see "Jour"), but now means travel, without regard to duration.

JOURNEYS ACCOUNT. In English practice. A new writ which the plaintiff was permitted to sue out within a reasonable time after the abatement, without his fault, of the first writ. This time was computed with reference to the number of days which the plaintiff must spend in journeying to reach the court; hence the name of "journeys account,"—that is, journeys accomptes or counted. This writ was quasi a continuance of the first writ, and so related back to it as to oust the defendant or tenant of his voucher, plea of non-tenure, joint tenancy fully administered, or any other plea arising upon matter happening after date of the first writ. Co. Litt. fol. 9b.

JUBERE (Lat.) In civil law. To order, direct, or command. Calv. Lex. The word jubeo, I order, in a will, was called a "word of direction," as distinguished from "precatory words." Code, 6. 43. 2.

To assure or promise. Calv. Lex.

To decree or pass a law. Adam, Rom. Ant.

JUBILACION. In Spanish law. The right of a public officer to retire from office, retaining his title and his salary, either in whole or in part, after he has attained the age of fifty years, and been in public service at least twenty years, whenever his infirmities prevent him from discharging the duties of his office.

JUDAISMUS (Lat.) The religion and rites of the Jews. Du Cange. A quarter set apart for residence of Jews. Du Cange. A usurious rate of interest. 1 Mon. Angl. 839; 2 Mon. Angl. 10, 665. Sex marcus sterlingorum ad acquietandam terram praedictum de Judaismo, inquo fuit impignorata. Du Cange. An income anciently accruing to the king from the Jews. Blount.

JUDENS. A Jew.

JUDEX (Lat.)

——In Roman Law. One who, either in own right, or by appointment of the magistrate for the special case, judged causes.

Thus, the praetor was formerly called judex. But, generally, praetors and magistrates who judge of their own right are distinguished from judices, who are private persons, appointed by the praetor, on application of the plaintiff, to try the cause, as soon as issue is joined, and furnished by him with instructions as to the legal principles involved. They were variously called judices delegati, or pedanei, or speciales. They resemble in many respects jurors. Thus, both are private persons, brought in at a certain stage of the proceedings, viz., issue joined, to try the cause, under instructions from the judge as to the law of the case. But civilians are not clear whether the judices had to decide the fact alone, or the law and fact. The judex resembles in many respects the arbitrator, or arbiter, the chief differences being, first, that the latter is appointed in cases of trust and confidence, the former in cases where the relations of the parties are governed by strict law (in practionibus strictis); second, the latter has the whole control of case, and decides according to equity and good conscience, the former by strict formulae; third, that the latter may be a magistrate, the former must be a private person; fourth, that the award of the arbiter derives its force from the agreement of submission, while the decree of the judex has its sanction in the command of the praetor to try the cause. Calv. Lex.; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 210, note; Kaufm. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 193, note.

There was generally one judex, sometimes three,—in which case the decision of two, in the absence of the third, had no effect. Calv. Lex. Down to the time of handing over the cause to the judex, that is, till issue joined, the proceedings were before the praetor, and were said to be in jure; after that, before the judex, and were said to be in judicio. In all this we see the germ of the Anglo-Saxon system of judicature. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 67.

——In Civil Law. A judge who conducts the trial from beginning to end; magistratus. The practice of calling in judices was disused before Justinian's time; therefore, in the Code, Institutes, and Novels, judex means judge in its modern sense. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 1327.

——In Old English Law. A juror. Spelman. A judge, in modern sense, especially—as opposed to justiciarius, i. e., a common-law judge—to denote an ecclesiastical judge. Bracton, fols. 401, 402.

JUDEX A QUO. The judge from whom an appeal is taken. See "A Quo."

JUDEX AD QUEM. A judge to whom an appeal is taken. See "A Quo."

JUDEX AEQUITATEM SEMPER SPECtare debet. A judge ought always to regard equity. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 45.

JUDEX ANTE OCULOS AEQUITATEM semper habere debet. A judge ought always to have equity before his eyes. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 58.

JUDEX BONUS NIHIL EX ARBITRIO suo faciat, nec propositione domesticae voluntatis, sed juxta leges et jura pronunciet. A good judge should do nothing from his own arbitrary will, or from the dictates of his private wishes; but he should pronounce according to law and justice. 7 Coke, 27a.

JUDEX DAMNATUR CUM NOCENS ABsolvitur. The judge is condemned when the guilty are acquitted.

JUDEX DATUS. In Roman law. A judge given, that is, assigned or appointed, by the praetor to try a cause.

JUDEX DEBET JUDICARE SECUNDUM allegata et probata. The judge ought to decide according to the allegations and the proofs.

JUDEX DELEGATUS (Lat.) In civil law. A delegated judge; a special judge.

JUDEX EST LEX LOQUENS. The judge is the speaking law. 7 Coke, 4a.

JUDEX FISCALIS. In old European law. A fiscal judge; a judge having cognizance of matters pertaining to the fiscus, or public treasury.

JUDEX HABERE DEBET DUOS SALES, —salem sapientiae, ne sit insipidus, et salem conscientiae, ne sit diabolus. A judge should have two salts,—the salt of wisdom, lest he be insipid; and the salt of conscience, lest he be devilish. 3 Inst. 147.

JUDEX NON POTEST ESSE TESTIS IN propria causa. A judge cannot be a witness in his own cause. 4 Inst. 279.

JUDEX NON POTEST INJURIAM SIBI datam punire. A judge cannot punish a wrong done to himself. 12 Coke, 114.

JUDEX NON REDDIT PLUS QUAM QUOD petens ipse requirit. The judge does not give more than the plaintiff demands. 2 Inst. 286, case 84.

JUDEX ORDINARIUS (Lat.) In civil law. A judge who had jurisdiction by his own right, not by another's appointment. Calv. Lex.; Vicat. Blackstone says that judices ordinarii decided only questions of fact, while questions of law were referred to the centumviri; but this would seem to be rather the definition of judices selecti; and not all questions of law were referred to the centumviri, but particular actions, e. g., querela inofficiosi testamenti. See 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 315; Vicat, "Centumviri."

JUDEX PEDANEUS. In Roman law. A name given to the judge appointed by the praetor to try a cause from the law seat which he occupied at the foot of the tribunal or praetor's bench.

JUDGE. A public officer lawfully appointed to decide litigated questions according to law.

An officer so named in his commission, and who presides in some court.

In its most extensive sense, the term includes all officers appointed to decide litigated questions while acting in that capacity, including justices of the peace, and even jurors, it is said, who are judges of the facts. 4 Dall. (Pa.) 229; 3 Yeates (Pa.) 300. In ordinary legal use, however, the term is limited to the sense of the second of the definitions here given (15 Ill. 388), unless it may be that the case of a justice or commissioner acting judicially is to be considered an extension of this meaning. See 3 Cush. (Mass.) 584.

JUDGE ADVOCATE. An officer of a court martial who is to discharge some duties at the trial of offenders. His duties are to prosecute in the name of the United States; but he shall so far consider himself as counsel for the prisoner, after the prisoner shall have made his plea, as to object to leading questions to any of the witnesses, or any question to the prisoner the answer to which might tend to criminate himself. He is, further, to swear the members of the court before they proceed upon any trial. Rules & Articles of War, art. 69; 2 Story, U. S. Laws, 1001; Holt, Dig. passim.

JUDGE ORDINARY. By St. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, § 9, the judge of the court of probate was made judge of the court for divorce and matrimonial causes created by that act, under the name of the "judge ordinary."

JUDGE'S CERTIFICATE. In English practice. The written statement of the judge who tried the cause, that one of the parties is entitled to costs in the action. It is very important in some cases that these certificates should be obtained at the trial. See Tidd, Prac. 879; 3 Chit. Prac. 458, 486; 3 Camp. 316; 5 Barn. & Ald. 796. A statement of the opinion of the court, signed by the judges, upon a question of law submitted to them by the chancellor for their decision. See 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 453. See "Case Stated."

JUDGE'S NOTES. Short statements, noted by a judge on the trial of a cause, of what transpires in the course of such trial.

JUDGMENT. In practice. The conclusion of law upon facts found, or admitted by the parties, or upon their default in the course of the suit. Tidd, Prac. 930.

The decision or sentence of the law, given by a court of justice or other competent tribunal, as the result of proceedings instituted therein for the redress of an injury.

A final decision entered in a book of judgments under the signature of the judge (3 Green [N. J.] 383), or, as is the practice in many jurisdictions, under the signature of the clerk.

A final or definitive sentence or decision, by which a cause is determined, though not capable of being enrolled, so as to constitute what is technically called a "record," is a judgment. 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 44.

Judgments are either in rem, or in personam. See "In Rem;" "In Personam."

They are either final, or interlocutory. See "Final Judgment;" "Interlocutory Judgment."

Accordingly, as they are rendered for various causes, and at various stages of the proceedings without trial, or on a partial trial of the issues, judgments are:

(1) Judgment by default. A judgment rendered in consequence of the nonappearance of the defendant.

(2) Judgment by nil dicit. One rendered against a defendant for want of a plea.

(3) Judgment by confession. A judgment entered for the plaintiff in case the defendant, instead of entering a plea, confesses the action, or, at any time before trial, confesses the action and withdraws his plea.

(4) Judgment of retraxit. One given against the plaintiff, where, after appearance, he withdraws his suit. It differs from nonsuit in being a voluntary renunciation of the claim, and will bar a subsequent action. 3 Bl. Comm. 396.

(5) Judgment of nonsuit. A judgment rendered against a plaintiff when he, on trial by jury, fails to be present. See "Nonsuit."

(6) Judgment of nolle prosequi. A judgment entered against the plaintiff where, after appearance, he refuses to further prosecute his suit.

(7) Judgment by non sum informatus. One which is rendered when defendant's attorney, instead of entering a plea, says that he is not informed of any answer to be given to the action.

(8) Judgment of non prosequitur. One given against a plaintiff for neglect to take any of the steps which it is incumbent upon him to take in due time.

Among the different judgments rendered in particular actions, or on particular pleas, are:

(9) Judgment quod recuperet. A judgment in favor of the plaintiff that he do recover, which is rendered when plaintiff has prevailed upon an issue in fact or an issue in law other than one arising on a dilatory pleading.

(10) Judgment quod partitio fiat. The interlocutory judgment in a writ of partition, that partition be made.

(11) Judgment partitio facto, firma et stabilis in perpetuum. The final judgment in partition.

(12) Judgment quod computet. A judgment in an action of account render that the defendant account.

(13) Judgment pro retorno habendo. A judgment in an action for the possession of goods, that plaintiff have a return thereof.

(14) Judgment of nil capita per breve, or per billam. A judgment in favor of a defendant upon an issue raised upon a declaration or peremptory plea.

(15) Judgment of cassetur breve (that the writ be quashed). A judgment rendered in favor of a party pleading in abatement to a writ.

(16) Judgment of error. A judgment rendered by an appellate court on a record sent up from an inferior court.

(17) Judgment of respondeat ouster. One rendered against a defendant that he do answer over after he has failed to establish a dilatory plea.

(18) Judgment quod partes replacitant. A judgment for repleader.

(19) Judgment nul tiel record. One rendered upon a plea denying the existence of a record.

(20) Judgment capiatur. One formerly rendered against a defendant in a civil action for a wrong vi et armis, rendering him liable to arrest and imprisonment until a fine was paid to the king for the breach of the peace.

(21) Judgment non obstante veredicto. A judgment rendered without regard to a verdict rendered in the action. See "Non Obstante Veredicto."

JUDGMENT CREDITOR. One who is entitled to enforce a judgment by execution (q. v.) The owner of an unsatisfied judgment.

JUDGMENT DEBTOR. One against whom a judgment stands unsatisfied.

JUDGMENT DEBTOR SUMMONS. Under the English bankruptcy act of 1861 (sections 76-85), these summonses might be issued against both traders and nontraders, and, in default of payment of, or security or agreed composition for, the debt, the debtors might be adjudicated bankrupt. This act was repealed by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 83, § 20. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, however (bankruptcy act 1869), provides (section 7) for the granting of a "debtor's summons," at the instance of creditors, and, in the event of failure to pay or compound, a petition for adjudication may be presented, unless in the events provided for by that section. Rapalje & L.

JUDGMENT DEBTS. Debts, whether on simple contract or by specialty, for the recovery of which judgment has been entered up, either upon a cognovit, or upon a warrant of attorney, or as the result of a successful action.

JUDGMENT NISI. A judgment entered on the return of the nisi prius record with the postea indorsed, which will become absolute according to the terms of the "postea" unless the court out of which the nisi prius record proceeded shall, within the first four days of the following term, otherwise order.

Under the compulsory arbitration law of Pennsylvania, on filing the award of the arbitrators, judgment nisi is to be entered, which judgment is to be valid as if it had been rendered on a verdict of a jury, unless an appeal is entered within the time required by law.

JUDGMENT NOTE. A promissory note given in the usual form, and containing, in addition, a power of attorney to appear and confess judgment for the sum therein named.

JUDGMENT PAPER. In English practice. An incipitur of the pleadings, written on plain paper, upon which the master will sign judgment. 1 Archb. Prac. 229, 306, 343.

JUDGMENT RECORD.

——In English Practice. A parchment roll, on which are transcribed the whole proceedings in the cause, deposited and filed of record in the treasury of the court, after signing of judgment. 3 Steph. Comm. 632.

——In American Practice. A record signed, filed, and docketed by the clerk, all of which is necessary to suing out execution. Graham, Prac. 341.

JUDGMENT ROLL. In English law. A record made of the issue roll (q. v.), which, after final judgment has been given in the cause, assumes this name. Steph. Pl. 133; 3 Chit. St. 514.

JUDICANDUM EST LEGIBUS NON EXemplis. We are to judge by the laws, not by examples. 4 Coke, 33b; 4 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 405; 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 513.

JUDICATIO (Lat.) In civil law. Judging; the pronouncing of sentence, after hearing a cause. Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 8, No. 7.

JUDICATORES TERRARUM. Persons in the county palatine of Chester, who, on a writ of error, were to consider of the judgment given there, and reform it; otherwise they forfeited £100 to the crown by custom. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 71.

JUDICATURE. The state of those employed in the administration of justice; and in this sense it is nearly synonymous with "judiciary." This term is also used to signify a tribunal; and sometimes it is employed to show the extent of jurisdiction: as, the judicature is upon writs of error, etc. Comyn, Dig. "Parliament" (L 1). And see Comyn, Dig. "Courts" (A).

JUDICATURE ACTS. A series of acts of parliament reforming and consolidating the English courts, and simplifying the procedure therein. St. 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, and St. 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, and amendments.

JUDICES NON TENENTUR EXPRIMERE causam sententiae suae. Judges are not bound to explain the reason of their sentence. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 75.

JUDICES ORDINARII (Lat.) In civil law. Ordinary judices; the common judices appointed to try causes, and who, according to Blackstone, determined only questions of fact. 3 Bl. Comm. 315.

JUDICES PEDANEOS (Lat.) In Roman law. Judges chosen by the parties.

Among the Romans, the praetors and other great magistrates did not themselves decide the actions which arose between private individuals. These were submitted to judges chosen by the parties, and these judges were called judices pedaneos. In choosing them, the plaintiff had the right to nominate, and the defendant to accept or reject those nominated. Heinec. Ant. Rom. lib. 4, tit. b. note 40; 7 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 353.

JUDICES SELECTI (Lat.) In civil law. Select or selected judices or judges; those who were used in criminal causes, and between whom and modern jurors many points of resemblance have been noticed. 3 Bl. Comm. 366.

JUDICI OFFICIUM SUUM EXCEDENTI non paretur. To a judge who exceeds his office or jurisdiction no obedience is due. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 139.

JUDICI SATIS POENA EST QUOD DEUM habet ultorem. It is punishment enough for a judge that he is responsible to God. 1 Leon. 295.

JUDICIA (Lat.) In Roman law. Judicial proceedings; trials. Judicia publica, criminal trials. Dig. 48. 1.

JUDICIA IN CURIA REGIS NON ADNIhilentur, sed stent in robore suo quousque per errorem aut attinctum adnullentur. Judgments in the king's courts are not to be annihilated, but to remain in force until annulled by error or attaint. 2 Inst. 539.

JUDICIA IN DELIBERATIONIBUS CREbro maturescunt, in accelerato processu nunquam. Judgments frequently become matured by deliberation, never by hurried process. 3 Inst. 210.

JUDICIA POSTERIORA SUNT IN LEGE fortiora. The latter decisions are stronger in law. 8 Coke, 97.

JUDICIA SUNT TANQUAM JURIS DICTA, et pro veritate accipiuntur. Judgments are, as it were, the dicta or sayings of the law, and are received as truth. 2 Inst. 537.

JUDICIAL. Belonging to the office of a judge; as judicial authority.

Relating to or connected with the administration of justice; as a judicial officer.

Having the character of judgment or formal legal procedure; as a judicial act.

Proceeding from a court of justice; as a judicial writ, a judicial determination.

Constituting the basis of a judgment; as a judicial opinion.

Whatever emanates from a judge as such, or proceeds from a court of justice, is judicial. A power which, when exercised by officers not connected with the judiciary, would be regarded as purely administrative, becomes at once judicial when exercised by a court of justice.

Where any power is conferred upon a court of justice, to be exercised by it as a court, in the manner and with the formalities used in its ordinary proceedings, the action of such court is to be regarded as judicial, irrespective of the original nature of the power. 22 N. Y. 67, 82, 84; 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 301, 315.

JUDICIAL ACTS. Acts requiring the exercise of some judicial discretion, as distinguished from ministerial acts, which require none. Rapalje & L.

JUDICIAL ADMISSIONS. Admissions of the party which appear of record as the admissions of the party.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY council. In English law. A tribunal, composed of members of the privy council, which exercises the entire appellate jurisdiction of the sovereign in council, and also advises him upon any matters which he may refer to it.

Its jurisdiction extends to cases in civil, ecclesiastical, and maritime law, in equity, and to many of the colonial cases, including cases arising under the Hindoo and Mohammedan law. It consists of eminent lawyers, chiefly of judicial station. When questions arise which belong to any peculiar jurisdiction, as the ecclesiastical or civil, the attendance and aid of judges in that branch are required; and in case of questions under the Hindoo or other peculiar systems of law, assistance is, in like manner, derived from those skilled in such proceedings.

Allegations and proofs are made before this committee, which thereupon reports to the sovereign in council, by whom judgment is finally rendered. Bl. Comm. (Warren, Abr.) 220.

JUDICIAL CONFESSIONS. In criminal law. Those voluntarily made before a magistrate, or in a court, in the due course of legal proceedings. A preliminary examination, taken in writing, by a magistrate lawfully authorized, pursuant to a statute, or the plea of guilty made in open court to an indictment, are sufficient to found a conviction upon them.

JUDICIAL CONVENTIONS. Agreements entered into in consequence of an order of court; as, for example, entering into a bond on taking out a writ of sequestration. 6 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 494.

JUDICIAL DECISIONS. The opinions or determinations of the judges in causes before them. Hale, Hist. Crim. Law, 68; Willes, 666; 3 Barn. & Ald. 122; 1 H. Bl. 63; 5 Maule & S. 185. See "Dictum."

JUDICIAL DISCRETION. See "Discretion."

JUDICIAL DOCUMENTS. Proceedings relating to litigation. They are divided into (1) judgments, decrees, and verdicts; (2) depositions, examinations, and inquisitions taken in the course of a legal process; (3) writs, warrants, pleadings, etc., which are incident to any judicial proceedings.

JUDICIAL MORTGAGE. In Louisiana. The lien resulting from judgments, whether these be rendered on contested cases, or by default, whether they be final or provisional, in favor of the person obtaining them. Civ. Code La. art. 3289.

JUDICIAL NOTICE. The cognizance taken by a court of matters of fact, without the production of evidence thereof. The matters of fact of which judicial notice will be taken are, in general, those of general notoriety, immemorial usage, or uniform national occurrence.

JUDICIAL POWER. The authority vested in the judges or courts, as distinguished from that vested in other departments of government. That power by which judicial tribunals construe the constitution, and laws of the United States, or of the states, and determine the rights of parties. 14 Abb. Pr. (N. S.; N. Y.) 165; 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 444.

JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS. Proceedings relating to, practised in, or proceeding from, a court of justice.

JUDICIAL SALE. A sale, by authority of some competent tribunal, by an officer authorized by law for the purpose. In a strict sense, an execution sale is not a judicial sale (18 Vt. 394), but it is generally so regarded (66 Ind. 505).

JUDICIAL WRITS. In English practice. The capias and all other writs subsequent to the original writ not issuing out of chancery, but from the court to which the original was returnable.

Being grounded on what had passed in that court in consequence of the sheriff's return, they are called "judicial" writs, in contradistinction to the writs issued out of chancery, which were called "original" writs. 3 Bl. Comm. 282.

JUDICIARY. That which is done while administering justice; the judges taken collectively; as, the liberties of the people are secured by a wise and independent judiciary. See "Court;" 3 Story, Const. bk. 3, c. 38.

JUDICIARY ACT. The name ordinarily given to Act Cong. Sept. 24, 1789, establishing the system of federal courts.

JUDICIIS POSTERIORIBUS FIDES EST adhibenda. Faith or credit is to be given to the later decisions. 13 Coke, 14.

JUDICIS EST IN PRONUNTIANDO SEqui regulam, exceptione non probata. The judge in his decision ought to follow the rule, when the exception is not proved.

JUDICIS EST JUDICARE SECUNDUM allegata et probata. A judge ought to decide according to the allegations and proofs. Dyer, 12a; Halk. Max. 73.

JUDICIS EST JUS DICERE NON DARE. It is the duty of a judge to declare the law, not to enact it. Lofft, 42.

JUDICIS OFFICIUM EST OPUS DIEI IN die suo perficere. It is the duty of a judge to finish the work of each day within that day. Dyer, 12.

JUDICIS OFFICIUM EST UT RES ITA tempora rerum quaerere, quaesito tempore tutus eris. It is the duty of a judge to inquire the times of things, as well as into things; by inquiring into the time you will be safe. Co. Litt. 171.

JUDICIUM. A court; judicial power; a judicial proceeding; sometimes applied in this sense to an action generally, and sometimes to a determination therein, as a verdict or judgment.

JUDICIUM A NON SUO JUDICE DATUM nullius est momenti. A judgment given by an improper judge is of no moment. 10 Coke, 76b; 2 Q. B. 1014; 13 Q. B. 143; 14 Mees. & W. 124; 11 Clark & F. 610.

JUDICIUM CAPITALE. In old English law. Judgment of death; capital judgment. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 39, § 2. Called, also, "judicium vitae amissionis," judgment of loss of life. Id. lib. 2, c. 1, § 5.

JUDICIUM DEI (Lat. the judgment or decision of God). In old English law. A term applied to trials by ordeal; for, in all trials of this sort, God was thought to interfere in favor of the innocent, and so decide the cause. These trials are now all abolished.

JUDICIUM EST QUASI JURIS DICTUM. Judgment is, as it were, a saying of the law. Co. Litt. 168.

JUDICIUM NON DEBET ESSE ILLUSOrium; suum effectum habere debet. A judgment ought not to be illusory; it ought to have its proper effect. 2 Inst. 341.

JUDICIUM PARIUM. In old English law. Judgment of the peers; judgment of one's peers; trial by jury. Magna Charta, c. 29.

JUDICIUM REDDITUR IN INVITUM. Judgment is given against one, whether he will or not. Co. Litt. 248b.

JUDICIUM REDDITUR IN INVITUM, IN praesumptione legis. In presumption of law, a judgment is given against inclination. Co. Litt. 248b, 314b.

JUDICIUM SEMPER PRO VERITATE ACcipitur. A judgment is always taken for truth. 2 Inst. 380; 17 Mass. 237.

JUGERUM (Lat.) An acre. Co. Litt. 5b. As much as a yoke (jugum) of oxen could plough in one day.

JUGES D'INSTRUCTION. In French law. Officers subject to the procureur imperial or general, who receive in cases of criminal offenses the complaints of the parties injured, and who summon and examine witnesses upon oath, and, after communication with the procureur imperial, draw up the forms of accusation. They have also the right, subject to the approval of the same superior officer, to admit the accused to bail. They are appointed for three years, but are re-eligible for a further period of office. They are usually chosen from among the regular judges. Brown.

JUGULATOR. In old records. A cutthroat or murderer. Cowell.

JUGUM (Lat.) In the civil law. A yoke; a measure of land; as much land as a yoke of oxen could plough in a day. Nov. 17, c. 8. Called, also, jugalium and zygocephalum. Id. See Brissonius.

JUGUM TERRAE (Law Lat.) In old English law. A yoke of land; half a plough land. Domesday Book; Co. Litt. 5a; Cowell.

JUICIO. In Spanish law. A trial or suit. White, New Recop. bk. 3, tit. 4, c. 1.

JUICIO DE APEO. In Spanish law. The decree of a competent tribunal directing the determining and marking the boundaries of lands or estates.

JUICIO DE CONCURSO DE ACREEDOres. In Spanish law. The decree obtained by a debtor against his creditors, or by the creditors against their debtor, for the payment of the amounts due, according to the respective rank of each creditor, when the property of the debtor is insufficient to pay the whole of his liabilities.

JUMENT. In old Scotch law. An ox used for tillage. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 2, p. 89.

JUMENTA. In civil law. Beasts of burden; animals used for carrying burdens. This word did not include "oxen." Dig. 32. 65. 5.

JUMP BAIL. A colloquial expression, meaning to abscond in violation of the obligation of a bail bond.

JUNCTA JUVANT. Things joined have effect. 11 East, 220.

JUNIOR. Younger; subsequent to in point of time. Thus, junior creditor, one whose claim accrued after that of another; junior judgment, one entered after another against the same person; junior writ, one issued after another against the same person.

JURA (Lat. pl. of jus, q. v.) Rights; laws. 1 Bl. Comm. 123. Freedoms or abilities. Bac. Works, iii. 265.

JURA ECCLESIASTICA LIMITATA SUNT infra limites separatos. Ecclesiastical laws are limited within separate bounds. 3 Bulst. 53.

JURA EODEM MODO DESTITUUNTUR quo constituuntur. Laws are abrogated or repealed by the same means by which they are made. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 785.

JURA FISCALIA (Lat.) In English law. Fiscal rights; rights of the exchequer. 3 Bl. Comm. 45.

JURA IN RE (Lat.) In civil law. Rights in a thing, as opposed to rights to a thing (jura ad rem). Rights in a thing which are not gone upon loss of possession, and which give a right to an action in rem against whoever has the possession. These rights are of four kinds: Dominium, hereditas, servitus, pignus. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 333. See "Jus in Re."

JURA MIXTI DOMINII. In old English law. Rights of mixed dominion. The king's right or power of jurisdiction was so termed. Hale, Anal. § 6.

JURA NATURAE SUNT IMMUTABILIA. The laws of nature are unchangeable. Branch, Princ.; Oliver, Forms, 56.

JURA PERSONARUM (Lat.) In civil law. Rights which belong to men in their different characters or relations, as father, apprentice, citizen, etc. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 122, note.

JURA PRAEDIORUM. In civil law. The rights of estates. Dig. 50. 16. 86.

JURA PUBLICA ANTEFERENDA PRIVAtis. Public rights are to be preferred to private. Co. Litt. 130.

JURA PUBLICA EX PRIVATO PROMIScue decidi non debent. Public rights ought not to be decided promiscuously with private. Co. Litt. 181b.

JURA REGALIA (or REGIA) (Lat.) Royal rights. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 117, 119, 240; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 45. See 21 & 22 Vict. c. 45.

JURA REGIS SPECIALIA NON CONCEduntur per generalia verba. The special rights of the king are not granted by general words. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 103.

JURA RERUM. Rights of things; the rights of things; rights which a man may acquire over external objects or things unconnected with his person. 1 Bl. Comm. 122; 2 Bl. Comm. 1.

JURA SANGUINIS NULLO JURE CIVILI dirimi possunt. The right of blood and kindred cannot be destroyed by any civil law. Dig. 50. 17. 9; Bac. Max. reg. 11; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 474.

JURA SUMMI IMPERII. Rights of supreme dominion; rights of sovereignty. 1 Bl. Comm. 49; 1 Kent, Comm. 211.

JURAMENTAE CORPORALES (Lat.) Corporal oaths. These oaths are so called because the party making oath must touch the Bible, or other thing, by which he swears.

JURAMENTUM (Lat.) In civil law. An oath.

JURAMENTUM CALUMNIAE (Lat. oath of calumny). In civil and canon law. An oath required of plaintiff and defendant, whether the parties themselves insist on it or not, that they are not influenced in seeking their right by malice, but believe their cause to be just. It was also required of the attorneys and procurators of the parties. Called also, jusjurandum or sacramentum calumniae. Calv. Lex.; Vicat; Clerke, Prax. tit. 42.

JURAMENTUM EST INDIVISIBILE; ET non est admittendum in parte verum et in parte falsam. An oath is indivisible; it is not to be held partly true and partly false. 4 Inst. 274.

JURAMENTUM JUDICIALE (Lat.) In civil law. An oath which the judge, of his own accord, defers to either of the parties.

It is of two kinds: First, that which the judge defers for the decision of the cause, and which is understood by the general name juramentum judiciale, and is sometimes called suppletory oath, juramentum suppletorium; second, that which the judge defers in order to fix and determine the amount of the condemnation which he ought to pronounce, and which is called juramentum in litem. Poth. Obl. p. 4, c. 3, § 3, art. 3.

JURAMENTUM NECESSARIUM. In Roman law. A necessary (compulsory) oath. A statement under oath which might be required of a party on his adversary agreeing to be bound thereby.

JURAMENTUM VOLUNTARIUM. In Roman law. A voluntary oath, which a party might make on the offer of his adversary to be bound thereby. He was not, however, compelled to accept the offer, as in case of the juramentum necessarium.

JURARE. To swear; to take an oath.

JURARE EST DEUM IN TESTUM VOcare, et est actus divini cultus. To swear is to call God to witness, and is an act of religion. 3 Inst. 165. See 3 Bouv. Inst. 3180, note; 1 Benth. Jud. Ev. 376, 371, note.

JURAT. In practice. That part of an affidavit where the officer certifies that the same was "sworn" before him, and when and where.

JURATS (Law Lat. jurati). Sworn men; officers of certain municipal corporations in England, in the nature of aldermen or assistants. Cowell; Blount. So called from their official oaths. See Dugdale, Imbanking, 18 et seq.

JURATA (Lat.) In old English law. A jury of twelve men sworn. Especially, a jury of the common law, as distinguished from the assiza, or jury established or re-established by St. Hen. II.

The jurata, or common-law jury, was a jury called in to try the cause, upon the prayer of the parties themselves, in cases where a jury was not given by St. Hen. II., and, as the jury was not given under the statute of Henry II., the writ of attaint provided in that statute would not be against a jurata for false verdict. It was common for the parties to a cause to request that the cause might be decided by the assiza, sitting as a jurata, in order to save trouble of summoning a new jury, in which case "cadit assiza et vertitur in juratam," and the cause is said to be decided non in modum assizae, but in modum juratae. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 335, 336; Glanv. lib. 13, c. 20; Bracton, lib. 3, c. 30. But this distinction has been long obsolete.

Juratae were divided into: First, jurata dilatoria, which inquires out offenses against the law, and presents their names, together with their offenses, to the judge, and which is of two kinds,—major and minor, according to the extent of its jurisdiction; second, jurata judicaria, which gives verdict as to the matter of fact in issue, and is of two kinds,—civilis, in civil causes, and criminalis, in criminal causes. Du Cange.

A clause in nisi prius record called the "jury clause," so named from the word jurata, with which its Latin form begins.

A jurat.

JURATION. The act of swearing; the administration of an oath.

JURATO CREDITUR IN JUDICIO. He who makes oath is to be believed in judgment. 3 Inst. 79.

JURATOR. A juror; a compurgator (q.v.)

JURATORES DEBENT ESSE VICINI, sufficientes et minus suspecti. Jurors ought to be neighbors, of sufficient estate, and free from suspicion. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 141.

JURATORES SUNT JUDICES FACTI. Jurors are the judges of the facts. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 68.

JURATORY CAUTION. A security sometimes taken in Scotch proceedings, when no better can be had, viz., an inventory of effects given up upon oath, and assigned in security of the sums which may be found due. Bell, Dict.

JURE (Lat.) By right; in right; by the law; according to the law.

JURE BELLI. By the right or law of war. 1 Kent, Comm. 126; 1 C. Rob. Adm. 289.

JURE CIVILI. By the civil law. Inst. 1. 3. 4; 1 Bl. Comm. 423.

JURE ECCLESIAE. In right of the church. 1 Bl. Comm. 401.

JURE EMPHYTEUTICO. By the right or law of emphyteosis. 3 Bl. Comm. 232. See "Emphyteosis."

JURE GENTIUM. By the law of nations. Inst. 1. 3. 4; 1 Bl. Comm. 423.

JURE NATURAE AEQUUM EST, NEMInem cum alterius detrimento, et injuria fieri locupletiorem. According to the laws of nature, it is just that no one should be enriched with detriment and injury to another, i. e., at another's expense. Dig. 50. 17. 200.

JURE PROPINQUITATIS (Lat.) By right of relationship. Co. Litt. 10b.

JURE REPRESENTATIONIS (Lat.) By right of representation. See "Per Stirpes." 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 219, note 14, 224.

JURE UXORIS (Lat.) By right of a wife.

JURI NON EST CONSONUM QUOD ALIquis accessorius in curia regis convincatur antequam aliquis de facto fuerit attinctus. It is not consonant to justice that any accessory should be convicted in the king's court before any one has been attainted of the fact. 2 Inst. 183.

JURIDICAL (Lat. juridicus, q. v.) Relating to the administration of justice. A juridical day is one on which courts sit for the administration of justice.

Belonging to the office of a judge. See "Judicial."

JURIDICUS (Lat. from jus, law, and dicere, to say, or pronounce). Belonging to law; relating to the administration of justice in or by a court. Dies juridicus, a day on which courts can lawfully sit; a juridical day; a law or court day.

JURIS EFFECTUS IN EXECUTIONE consistit. The effect of a law consists in the execution. Co. Litt. 289b.

JURIS ET DE JURE (Lat. of right and by law). A presumption is said to be juris et de jure when it is conclusive, i. e., when no evidence will be admitted to rebut it, in contradistinction to a presumption, which is simply juris, i. e., rebuttable by evidence. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 15, note; Wills, Circ. Ev. 29; Best, Pres. p. 20, § 17; Best, Ev. p. 43, § 48.

JURIS ET SEISINAE CONJUNCTIO (Lat.) The union of seisin, or possession, and the right of possession, forming a complete title. 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 199, 311.

JURIS POSITIVI. Positive, as distinguished from natural, law.

JURIS PUBLICI (Lat.) Of common right; of common or public use; such things as, at least in their own use, are common to all the king's subjects; as common highways, common bridges, common rivers, and common ports. Hale, Anal. § 23. The phrase publici juris is also used. Hale de Jur. Mar. par. 1, c. 3.

JURIS UTRUM (Law Lat.) In English law. A writ which lay for the incumbent of a benefice, to recover the lands or tenements belonging to the church, which were aliened by his predecessor. Termes de la Ley; 48 Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 49. Sometimes called "the parson's writ of right," being the highest writ he could have. 3 Bl. Comm. 252.

JURISCONSULTUS (Lat. skilled in the law). In civil law. A person who has such knowledge of the laws and customs which prevail in a state as to be able to advise, act, and to secure a person in his dealings.

The early jurisconsults gave their opinions gratuitously, and were also employed in drawing up written documents. From Augustus to Adrian, only those allowed by the emperor could be jurisconsults. Before and after those emperors, any could be jurisconsults who chose. If their opinion was unanimous, it had the force of law; if not, the praetor could follow which opinion he chose. Vicat.

There were two sects of jurisconsults at Rome,—the Proculeians and Labinians. The former were founded by Labeo, and were in favor of innovation; the latter by Capito, and held to the received doctrine. Cush. Rom. Law, §§ 5, 6.

JURISDICTIO EST POTESTAS DE PUBlico introducta, cum necessitate juris dicendi. Jurisdiction is a power introduced for the public good, on account of the necessity of dispensing justice. 10 Coke, 73a.

JURISDICTION (Lat. jus, law, dicere, to say). The authority by which judicial officers take cognizance of and decide causes; power to hear and determine a cause. 3 Ohio, 494; 6 Pet. (U. S.) 591. And it has been considered that it is essential to jurisdiction that the court should not only have power to hear and determine the case generally, but that, in the course of the hearing, and in the particular judgment rendered, it keep within its power. 93 U. S. 282.

Jurisdiction is either (1) general over all matters within the judicial power of the sovereignty creating it, or (2) limited to certain specified subject matters or persons. See "General Jurisdiction."

It is either (3) original, being that of the tribunal in which an action is commenced in the first instance, or (4) appellate, being that of the tribunal to which the action is removed by proceedings for review.

It is either (5) exclusive in some particular court, (6) concurrent in being possessed at the same time by two or more separate tribunals, or (7) assistant, being that possessed by a tribunal in aid of proceedings in another separate tribunal.

It is either (8) criminal, that which exists for the punishment of crimes, or (9) civil, over subject matters not of a criminal nature.

JURISDICTION CLAUSE. In equity practice. That part of a bill which is intended to give jurisdiction of the suit to the court, by a general averment that the acts complained of are contrary to equity, and tend to the injury of the plaintiff, and that he has no remedy, or not a complete remedy, without the assistance of a court of equity, is called the "jurisdiction clause." Mitf. Eq. Pl. (Jeremy Ed.) 43.

This clause is unnecessary; for if the court appear from the bill to have jurisdiction, the bill will be sustained without this clause; and if the court have not jurisdiction, the bill will be dismissed, though the clause may be inserted. Story, Eq. Pl. § 34.

JURISDICTIONAL. Pertaining to; essential to or conferring jurisdiction.

JURISPERITUS (Lat. from jus, law [juris, of law], and peritus, skilled). Skilled or learned in the law.

JURISPRUDENCE. The science of the law; the practical science of giving a wise interpretation to the laws, and making a just application of them to all cases as they arise.

By science, in the first definition, is understood that connection of truths which is founded on principles either evident in themselves, or capable of demonstration,—a collection of truths of the same kind, arranged in methodical order. In the latter sense, it is the habit of judging the same questions in the same manner, and by this course of judgments forming precedents. 1 Ayliffe, Pand. 3; Toullier, Dr. Civ. tit. prel. § 1, note 1, 12, 99; Merlin, Repert.; 19 Am. Jur. 3.

JURISPRUDENTIA (Lat. from jus, law [juris, of law], and prudentia, wisdom, knowledge). In the civil and common law. Jurisprudence, or legal science.

JURISPRUDENTIA EST DIVINARUM atque humanarum rerum notitia; justi atque injusti scientia. Jurisprudence is the knowledge of things divine and human; the science of the just and the unjust. Dig. 1. 1. 10. 2; Inst. 1. 1. 1; Bracton, 3; 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 290, 295.

JURISPRUDENTIA LEGIS COMMUNIS Angliae est scientia socialis et copiosa. The jurisprudence of the common law of England is a science sociable and copious. 7 Coke, 28a.

JURIST. One versed in the science of the law; one skilled in the civil law; one skilled in the law of nations.

JURISTIC ACT. One of legal efficacy.

JURO. In Spanish law. A certain pension granted by the king on the public revenues, and more especially on the salt works, by favor, either in consideration of meritorious services, or in return for money loaned the government, or obtained by it through forced loans. It is a portion of the yearly revenue of the state, assigned as a rightful indemnity, either in perpetuity or as an annuity.

JUROR (Lat. juro, to swear). A man who is sworn or affirmed to serve on a jury.

JURY (Lat. jurata, sworn). In practice. A body of men who are sworn to declare the facts of a case as they are delivered from the evidence placed before them.

It is applied loosely to a number of bodies, as coroners' juries, etc.

As applied to petit juries, its most common use, the full number of twelve men is essential to a common-law jury. 18 N. Y. 128.

The origin of this venerable institution of the common law is lost in the obscurity of the middle ages. Antiquarians trace it back to an early period of English history; but, if known to the Saxons, it must have existed in a very crude form, and may have been derived to them from the mode of administering justice by the peers of litigant parties, under the feudal institutions of France, Germany, and the other northern nations of Europe. The ancient ordeals of red-hot iron and boiling water, practiced by the Anglo-Saxons to test the innocence of a party accused of crime, gradually gave way to the wager of battle, in the days of the Normans: while this latter mode of trial disappeared in civil cases in the thirteenth century, when Henry II. introduced into the assizes a trial by jury. It is referred to in Magna Charta as an institution existing in England at that time, and its subsequent history is well known. See "Grand Assize;" 3 Bl. Comm. 349; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 23, 84; Glanv. c. 9; Bracton, 155.

A jury de medietate linguae is one composed half of aliens and half of denizens.

Such juries might formerly be claimed, both in civil and criminal cases, where the party claiming the privilege was an alien born, by virtue of 28 Edw. III. c. 13. And see 8 Hen. VI. c. 29; 3 Geo. III. c. 25, by which latter statute the right is thought to be taken away in civil cases. See 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 360; 4 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 352. A provision of a similar nature, providing for a jury one-half of the nationality of the party claiming the privilege, where he is a foreigner, exists in some of the states of the United States.

A grand jury is one organized for certain preliminary purposes. See "Grand Jury."

A petit jury is a jury who try the question in issue, and pass finally upon the truth of the facts in dispute. The term "jury" is ordinarily applied to this body distinctively.

A common jury is one drawn in the usual manner.

A special or struck jury is one selected by the assistance of the parties.

This is granted in some cases upon motion and cause shown, under various local provisions. See 33 Eng. Law & Eq. 406. The method at common law was for the officer to return the names of forty-eight principal freeholders to the prothonotary or proper officer. The attorneys of the respective parties, being present, strike off each twelve names, and from the remaining twenty-four the jury is selected. A similar course is pursued in those states where such juries are allowed. See 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 357.

JURY BOX. A place set apart for the jury to sit in during the trial of a cause.

JURY LIST. A paper containing the names of jurors impanelled to try a cause, or it contains the names of all the jurors summoned to attend court.

JURY OF MATRONS. See "Jury Women."

JURY PROCESS. In practice. The writs for summoning a jury, viz., in England, venire juratores facias, and distringas juratores, or habeas corpora juratorum. These writs are now abolished, and jurors are summoned by precept. 1 Chit. Archb. Prac. (by Prent.) 344; Com. Law Proc. Act 1852, §§ 104, 105; 3 Chit. St. 519.

JURY WHEEL. A revolving box, from which names are drawn by chance to form the jury list (q. v.)

JURY WOMEN. A jury of women is given in two cases, viz., on writ de ventre inspiciendo, in which case the jury is made up of men and women, but the search is made by the latter (1 Madd. 11; 2 P. Wms. 591); and where pregnancy is pleaded by condemned criminal in delay of execution, in which case a jury of twelve discreet women is formed, and on their returning a verdict of enseinte, the execution is delayed till birth, and sometimes the punishment commuted to perpetual exile. But if the criminal be privement enseinte, and not "quick," there is no respite. 2 Hale, P. C. 412. As to time of quickening, see 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 229.

JURYMAN. A juror; one who is impanelled on a jury. Webster.

JUS. Right in general or in the abstract; justice or equity.

Law in general; law as distinguished from equity.

A rule of law; a statute or regulation.

Power or authority.

An action; a court or judicial tribunal.

JUS ABUTENDI (Lat. the right to abuse). By this phrase is understood the right to abuse property, or having full dominion over property. 3 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 86. Used in contradistinction to the jus utendi (q. v.)

JUS ACCRESCENDI (Lat.) The right of survivorship.

At common law, when one of several joint tenants died, the entire tenancy or estate went to the survivors, and so on to the last survivor, who took an estate of inheritance. This right, except in estates held in trust, has been abolished by statute in most of the United States.

JUS ACCRESCENDI INTER MERCATORES locum non habet, pro beneficio commercii. The right of survivorship does not exist among merchants for the benefit of commerce. Co. Litt. 182; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 682.

JUS ACCRESCENDI PRAEFERTUR ONERIBUS. The right of survivorship is preferred to incumbrances. Co. Litt. 185.

JUS ACCRESCENDI PRAEFERTUR ULTIMAE VOLUNTATI. The right of survivorship is preferred to a last will. Co. Litt. 185b.

JUS AD REM (Lat.) A right which belongs to a person only mediately and relatively, and has for its foundation an obligation incurred by a particular person.

The jus in re, by the effect of its very nature, is independent and absolute, and is exercised per se ipsum, by applying it to its object; but the jus ad rem is the faculty of demanding and obtaining the performance of some obligation by which another is bound to me ad aliquid dandum, vel faciendum, vel praestandum. Thus, if I have the ownership of a horse, the usufruct of a flock of sheep, the right of habitation of a house, a right of way over your land, etc., my right in the horse, in the flock of sheep, in the house, or the land, belongs to me directly, and without any intermediary; it belongs to me absolutely, and independently of any particular relation with another person; I am in direct and immediate relation with the thing itself which forms the object of my right, without reference to any other relation. This constitutes a jus in re. If, on the other hand, the horse is lent to me by you, or if I have a claim against you for a thousand dollars, my right to the horse or to the sum of money exists only relatively, and can only be exercised through you; my relation to the object of the right is mediate, and is the result of the immediate relation of debtor and creditor existing between you and me. This is a jus ad rem. Every jus in re, or real right, may be vindicated by the actio in rem against him who is in possession of the thing, or against any one who contests the right. It has been said that the words jus in re of the civil law convey the same idea as "thing in possession" at common law. This is an error, arising from a confusion of ideas as to the distinctive characters of the two classes of rights. Nearly all the common-law writers seem to take it for granted that by the jus in re is understood the title or property in a thing in the possession of the owner; and that by the jus ad rem is meant the title or property in a thing not in the possession of the owner. But it is obvious that possession is not one of the elements constituting the jus in re, although possession is generally, but not always, one of the incidents of this right, yet the loss of possession does not exercise the slightest influence on the character of the right itself, unless it should continue for a sufficient length of time to destroy the right altogether by prescription. In many instances the jus in re is not accompanied by possession at all; the usuary is not entitled to the possession of the thing subject to his use; still, he has a jus in re. So with regard to the right of way, etc. See "Dominium."

A mortgage is considered by most writers as a jus in re; but it is clear that it is a jus ad rem. It is granted for the sole purpose of securing the payment of a debt, or the fulfillment of some other personal obligation. In other words, it is an accessory to a principal obligation and corresponding right. It can have no separate and independent existence. The immovable on which I have a mortgage is not the object of the right, as in the case of the horse of which I am the owner, or the house of which I have the right of habitation, etc. The true object of my right is the sum of money due to me, the payment of which I may enforce by obtaining a decree for the sale of the property mortgaged. 2 Marcade, 350 et seq.

JUS AESNECIAE. The right of primogeniture.

JUS ALBINATUS. The droit d'aubaine (q. v.) See "Albinatus Jus."

JUS ANGLORUM. The laws and customs of the West Saxons, in the time of the Heptarchy, by which the people were for a long time governed, and which were preferred before all others. Wharton.

JUS AQUAEDUCTUS (Lat.) In civil law. The name of a servitude which gives to the owner of land the right to bring down water through or from the land of another, either from its source, or from any other place.

JUS BANCI. In old English law. The right of bench; the right or privilege of having an elevated and separate seat of judgment, anciently allowed only to the king's judges, who hence were said to administer "high" justice, summam administrant justitiam. Blount.

JUS BELLI. The law of war; the law of nations as applied to a state of war, defining in particular the rights and duties of the belligerent powers themselves, and of neutral nations.

The right of war; that which may be done without injustice with regard to an enemy. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 1, c. 1, § 3.

JUS BELLUM DECENDI. The right to declare war.

JUS CANONICUM. The canon law.

JUS CIVILE (Lat.) In Roman law. The private law, in contradistinction to the public law, or jus gentium. 1 Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 1, § 1.

JUS CIVILE EST QUOD SIBI POPULUS constituit. The civil law is what a people establishes for itself. 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 424, 426.

JUS CIVITATIS (Lat.) In Roman law. The collection of laws which are to be observed among all the members of a nation. It is opposed to jus gentium, which is the law which regulates the affairs of nations among themselves. 2 Lepage, c. 5, p. 1.

JUS CLOACAE. (Lat.) In civil law. The name of a servitude which requires the party who is subject to it to permit his neighbor to conduct the waters which fall on his grounds over those of the servient estate.

JUS COMMUNE.

——In Civil Law. Common right; the common and natural rule of right, as opposed to jus singulare (q. v.) Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 196.

——In English Law. The common law, answering to the Saxon "folcright." 1 Bl. Comm. 67.

JUS CONSTITUI OPORTET IN HIS QUAE ut plurimum accidunt non quae ex inopinato. Laws ought to be made with a view to those cases which happen most frequently, and not to those which are of rare or accidental occurrence. Dig. 1. 3. 3; Broom, Leg. Max. 43.

JUS CORONAE. In English law. The right of the crown, or, rather, to the crown; the right of succession to the throne. 1 Bl. Comm. 191; 2 Steph. Comm. 434.

JUS CUDENDAE MONETAE. In old English law. The right of coining money. 2 How. St. Tr. 118.

JUS CURIALITATIS. In English law. The right of curtesy. Spelman.

JUS DARE (Lat.) To give or to make the law. Jus dare belongs to the legislature; jus dicere, to the judge.

JUS DELIBERANDI (Lat.) The right of deliberating given to the heir, in those countries where the heir may have "benefit of inventory" (q. v.), in which to consider whether he will accept or renounce the succession. In Louisiana, he is allowed ten days before he is required to make his election. Civ. Code La. art. 1028.

JUS DESCENDIT, ET NON TERRA. A right descends, not the land. Co. Litt. 345.

JUS DICERE (Lat.) To declare the law. It is the province of the court jus dicere, to declare what the law is.

JUS DICERE, NON JUS DARE. To declare the law, not to make it. 7 Term R. 696; Arg. 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 566; 7 Exch. 543; 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 29; 4 C. B. 560, 561; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 140.

JUS DISPONENDI (Lat.) The right to dispose of a thing.

JUS DIVIDENDI. The right of disposing of realty by will. Du Cange.

JUS DUPLICATUM (Lat. double right). When a man has the possession as well as the property of anything, he is said to have a double right, jus duplicatum. Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 4, c. 4; 2 Bl. Comm. 199.

JUS EST ARS BONI ET AEQUI. Law is the science of what is good and just. Dig. 1. 1. 1. 1.

JUS EST NORMA RECTI; ET QUICQUID est contra normam recti est injuria. The law is the rule of right; and whatever is contrary to the rule of right is an injury. 3 Bulst. 313.

JUS ET FRAUS NUNQUAM COHABITANT. Right and fraud never live together.

JUS EX INJURIA NON ORITUR. A right cannot arise from a wrong. 4 Bin. 639.

JUS FECIALE (Lat.) In Roman law. That species of international law which had its foundation in the religious belief of different nations, such as the international law which now exists among the Christian people of Europe. Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 2, § 11.

JUS FIDUCIARUM (Lat.) In civil law. A right to something held in trust; for this there was a remedy in conscience. 2 Bl. Comm. 328.

JUS FLAVIANUM. In old Roman law. A body of laws drawn up by Cnelus Flavius, a clerk of Appius Claudius, from the materials to which he had access. It was a popularization of the laws. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 39.

JUS FLUMINUM. In civil law. The right to the use of rivers. Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 6.

JUS FODIENDI (Lat.) In the civil and old English law. A right of digging on another's land. Inst. 2. 3. 2; Bracton, fol. 222; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 19, § 6.

JUS GENTIUM (Lat.) The law of nations. Although the Romans used these words in the sense we attach to "law of nations," yet among them the sense was much more extended. Falck, Enc. Jur. 102, note 42.

Modern writers have made a distinction between the laws of nations which have for their object the conflict between the laws of different nations, which is called jus gentium privatum, or private international law, and those laws of nations which regulate those matters which nations, as such, have with each other, which is denominated jus gentium publicum, or public international law. Foelix, Droit Int. Prive, note 14. See "International Law."

JUS GLADII (Lat. the right of the sword). Supreme jurisdiction; the right to absolve from or condemn a man to death.

JUS HABENDI (Lat.) The right to have a thing.

JUS HABENDI ET RETINENDI. A right to have and to retain the profits, tithes, and offerings, etc., of a rectory or parsonage. Rapalje & L.

JUS HAEREDITATIS. The right of inheritance. Rapalje & L.

JUS HONORARIUM. The body of Roman law, which was made up of edicts of the supreme magistrates, particularly the praetors.

JUS IMMUNITATIS. In civil law. The law of immunity or exemption from the burden of public office. Dig. 50. 6.

JUS IN PERSONAM. A right against a person; a right which gives its possessor a power to oblige another person to give or procure, to do or not to do, something. Rapalje & L.

JUS IN RE (Lat.) A right which belongs to a person, immediately and absolutely, in a thing, and which is the same against the whole world,—idem erga omnes. See "Jus ad Rem."

JUS IN RE INHAERIT OSSIBUS USUfructuarii. A right in the thing cleaves to the person of the usufructuary.

JUS IN RE PROPRIA. The right of enjoyment which is incident to full ownership or property, and is often used to denote the full ownership or property itself. It is distinguished from jus in re aliena, which is a mere easement or right in or over the property of another.

JUS INCOGNITUM (Lat.) An unknown law. This term is applied by the civilians to obsolete laws, which, as Bacon truly observes, are unjust; for the law, to be just, must give warning before it strikes. Bac. Aph. 8, § 1; Bowyer, Mod. Civ. Law, 33. But until it has become obsolete, no custom can preyail against it. See "Obsolete."

JUS INDIVIDUUM (Law Lat.) An individual or indivisible right; a right incapable of division. 36 Eng. Law & Eq. 25.

JUS JURANDI FORMA VERBIS DIFfert, re convenit; hunc enim sensum habere debet, ut Deus invocetur. The form of taking an oath differs in language, agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense,—that the Deity is invoked. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 2, c. 13, § 10.

JUSJURANDUM INTER ALIOS FACTUM nec nocere nec prodesse debet. An oath made between others ought neither to hurt nor profit. 4 Inst. 279.

JUS LATII. In Roman law. The right of Latium or of the Latins. The principal privilege of the Latins seems to have been the use of their own laws, and their not being subject to the edicts of the praetor, and that they had occasional access to the freedom of Rome, and a participation in her sacred rites. Butler, Hor. Jur. 41.

JUS LEGITIMUM (Lat.) In civil law. A legal right which might have been enforced by due course of law. 2 Bl. Comm. 328.

JUS MARITI (Lat.) In Scotch law. The right of the husband to administer, during the marriage, his wife's goods and the rents of her heritage.

In the common law, by jus mariti is understood the rights of the husband, as jus mariti cannot attach upon a bequest to the wife, although given during coverture, until the executor has assented to the legacy. 1 Balley, Eq. (S. C.) 214.

JUS MERUM (Lat.) A simple or bare right; a right to property in land, without possession, or the right of possession.

JUS NATURAE. The law of nature. See "Jus Naturale."

JUS NATURALE. Natural law; the rule and dictate of right reason, showing the moral deformity or moral necessity there is in any act according to its suitableness to a reasonable nature. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 1, c. 1, c. 3.

The term is used interchangeably with jus gentium. Tayl. Civ. Law, 128.

JUS NATURALE EST QUOD APUD HOmines eandem habet potentiam. Natural right is that which has the same force among all men. 7 Coke, 12.

JUS NAVIGANDI. The right of navigating or navigation; the right of commerce by ships or by sea. Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 3.

JUS NEC INFLECTI GRATIA, NEC frangi potentia, nec adulterari pecunia potest; quod si non modo oppressum, sed desertum aut negligentia asservatum fuerit, nihil est quod quisquam se habere certum, aut a patre accepturum, aut liberis esse relicturum, arbitretur. Favor ought not to be able to bend justice, power to break it, nor money to corrupt it; for not only if it be overborne, but if it be abandoned or negligently observed, no one can think that he holds anything securely, or that he will inherit anything from his father, or be able to leave anything to his children. Cicero.

JUS NECIS. In Roman law. The right of death, or of putting to death; a right which a father anciently had over his children. 3 Gibb. Rom. Emp. 169.

JUS NON HABENTI, TUTE NON PAREtur. It is safe not to obey him who has no right. Hob. 146.

JUS NON PATITUR UT IDEM BIS SOLvatur. Law does not suffer that the same thing be twice paid.

JUS NON SCRIPTUM. The unwritten law. 1 Bl. Comm. 64.

JUS PAPIRIANUM. The civil law of Papirius. The title of the earliest collection of Roman leges curiatae, said to have been made in the time of Tarquin, the last of the kings, by a pontifex maximus of the name of Sextus or Publius Papirius. Dig. 1. 2. 2. 2. Very few fragments of this collection now remain, and the authenticity of these has been doubted. 1 Kent, Comm. 517; Mackeld. Civ. Law, p. 14, § 21.

JUS PATRONATUS (Lat.) In ecclesiastical law. A commission from the bishop, directed usually to his chancellor and others of competent learning, who are required to summon a jury, composed of six clergymen and six laymen, to inquire into and examine who is the rightful patron. 3 Bl. Comm. 246.

JUS PERSONARUM (Lat.) The right of persons. See "Jura Personarum."

JUS POSSESSIONIS (Lat.) A (or the) right of possession, or seisin. Bracton, fol. 3; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 1, § 2; Co. Litt. 266a; 3 Bl. Comm. 177, 191.

JUS POSTLIMINII.

——In Civil Law. The right of postliminy; the right or claim of a person who had been restored to the possession of a thing, or to a former condition, to be considered as though he had never been deprived of it. Dig. 49. 15. 5; 3 Bl. Comm. 107, 210.

——In International Law. The right by which property taken by an enemy, and recaptured or rescued from him by the fellow subjects or allies of the original owner, is restored to the latter upon certain terms. 1 Kent, Comm. 108.

JUS PRAESENS. In civil law. A present or vested right; a right already completely acquired. Mackeld. Civ. Law, p. 174, § 183.

JUS PRAETORIUM. In civil law. The discretion of the praetor, as distinct from the leges, or standing laws. 3 Bl. Comm. 49. That kind of law which the praetors introduced for the purpose of aiding, supplying, or correcting the civil law for the public benefit. Dig. 1. 1. 7. Called, also, jus honorarium (q. v.)

JUS PRECARIUM (Lat.) In civil law. A right to a thing held for another, for which there was no remedy. 2 Bl. Comm. 328.

JUS PROJICIENDI (Lat.) In civil law. The name of a servitude by which the owner of a building has a right of projecting a part of his building towards the adjoining house, without resting on the latter. It is extended merely over the ground. Dig. 50. 16. 242; Id. 8. 2. 25; Id. 8. 5. 8. 5.

JUS PROPRIETATIS. The right of property, as distinguished from the jus possessionis, or right of possession. Bracton, fol. 3. Called by Bracton "jus merum," the mere right. Id.; 2 Bl. Comm. 197; 3 Bl. Comm. 19, 176.

JUS PROTEGENDI (Lat.) In civil law. The name of a servitude. It is a right by which a part of the roof or tiling of one house is made to extend over the adjoining house. Dig. 50. 16. 242. 1; Id. 8. 2. 35; Id. 8. 5. 8. 5.

JUS PUBLICUM (Lat.) In the Roman law. Public law; that which regards the condition of the Roman state (quod ad statum rei Romanae spectat). Inst. 1. 1. 4; Dig. 1. 1. 1. 2. This definition is borrowed by Bracton, who accommodates it to the English jurisprudence. Est jus publicum quod ad statum reipublicae pertinet. Bracton, fol. 3b.

JUS PUBLICUM ET PRIVATUM QUOD ex naturalibus praeceptis aut gentium aut civilibus est collectum; et quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Angliae rectum esse dicitur. Public and private law is that which is collected from natural principles, either of nations or in states; and that which in the civil law is called jus, in the law of England is said to be "right." Co. Litt. 185.

JUS PUBLICUM PRIVATORUM PACTIS mutari non potest. A public right cannot be changed by agreement of private parties.

JUS QUAESITUM (Lat.) A right to ask or recover; for example, in an obligation there is a binding of the obligor, and a jus quaesitum in the obligee. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 323.

JUS QUIRITIUM. The old law of Rome, that was applicable originally to patricians only, and, under the Twelve Tables, to the entire Roman people, was so called, in contradistinction to the jus praetorium (q. v.), or equity. Brown.

JUS QUO UNIVERSITATES UTUNTUR est idem quod habent privati. The law which governs corporations is the same which governs individuals. 16 Mass. 44.

JUS RELICTAE (Lat.) In Scotch law. The right of a wife, after her husband's death, to a third of movables if there be children, and to one-half if there be none.

JUS RERUM (Lat.) The right of things. Its principal object is to ascertain how far a person can have a permanent dominion over things, and how that dominion is acquired. See Bl. Comm.

JUS RESPICIT AEQUITATEM. Law regards equity. Co. Litt. 24b; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 143; 17 Q. B. 292.

JUS SCRIPTUM.

——In Roman Law. Written law. Inst. 1. 2. 3. All law that was actually committed to writing, whether it had originated by enactment or by custom, in contradistinction to such parts of the law of custom as were not committed to writing. Mackeld. Civ. Law, p. 125, § 113.

——In English Law. Written law, or statute law, otherwise called lex scripta, as distinguished from the common law, lex non scripta. 1 Bl. Comm. 62.

Jus scriptum is used in Fleta to denote the civil law, as distinguished from the common law of England. Liber 6, c. 1, § 1.

JUS SINGULARE. In civil law. A peculiar or individual rule, differing from the jus commune, or common rule of right, and established for some special reason. Mackeld. Civ. Law, p. 181, § 188.

JUS STAPULAE. In old European law. The law of staple; the right of staple; a right or privilege of certain towns of stopping imported merchandise, and compelling it to be offered for sale in their own markets. Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 10.

JUS STRICTUM (Lat.) A Latin phrase, which signifies law interpreted without any modification, and in its utmost rigor.

JUS SUPERVENIENS AUCTORI accessit successori. A right growing to a possessor accrues to a successor. Halk. Max. 76.

JUS TERTII. The right or interest of a third party.

JUS TESTAMENTORUM PERTINET ORdinario. Y. B. 4 Hen. VII., 13b. The right of testaments belongs to the ordinary.

JUS TRIPERTITUM. In the Roman law. The law of wills. Sir Henry Maine says that it is so called because of its three-fold derivation from the imperial constitutions, the civil law, and the praetorian edicts. Anc. Law, 207.

JUS TRIPLEX EST,—PROPRIETATIS, possessionis, et possibilitatis. Right is threefold,—of property, of possession, and of possibility.

JUS TRIUM LIBERORUM. In Roman law. A right or privilege allowed to the parent of three or more children. 2 Kent, Comm. 85; 2 Bl. Comm. 247. These privileges were an exemption from the trouble of guardianship, priority in bearing offices, and a treble proportion of corn. Adams, Rom. Ant. (Am. Ed.) 227.

JUS UTENDI (Lat.) The right to use property without destroying its substance. It is employed in contradistinction to the jus abutendi. 3 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 86.

JUS VENANDI ET PISCANDI. The right of hunting and fishing.

JUS VENDIT QUOD USUS APPROBAVIT. The law dispenses what use has approved. Ellesmere, Postn. 35.

JUSJURANDI FORMA VERBIS DIFFERT, re convenit; hunc enim sensum habere debet, ut Deus invocetur. The form of taking an oath differs in language, agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense, that the Deity is invoked. Grotius de Jure Belli, bk. 2, c. 13, § 10.

JUSJURANDUM (Lat.) In civil law. An oath.

Juramentum is the usual law Latin word.

JUSJURANDUM INTER ALIOS FACTUM nec nocere nec prodesse debet. An oath made in another cause ought neither to hurt nor profit. 4 Inst. 279.

JUST COMPENSATION. As used in the constitution, means a full and fair equivalent for the loss sustained by the taking for public use. It may be more, or it may be less, than the mere money value of the property actually taken. The exercise of the power being necessary for the public good, and all property being held subject to its exercise when and as the public good requires it, it would be unjust to the public that it should be required to pay the owner more than a fair indemnity for the loss he sustains by the appropriation of his property for the general good. On the other hand, it would be equally unjust to the owner if he should receive less than a fair indemnity for such loss. To arrive at this fair indemnity, the interests of the public and of the owner, and all the circumstances of the particular appropriation, should be taken into consideration. Lewis, Em. Dom. § 462.

Compensation for the actual loss in dollars and cents. 157 Ill. 56.

JUSTA CAUSA (Lat.) In the civil law. A just cause; a lawful ground; a legal transaction of some kind. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 287, § 274. See Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 2, c. 23, § 13.

JUSTICE. The constant and perpetual disposition to render every man his due. Inst. bk. 1, tit. 1; 2 Inst. 56. The conformity of our actions and our will to the law. Toullier, Dr. Civ. tit. prel. note 5.

In the most extensive sense of the word, it differs little from "virtue;" for it includes within itself the whole circle of virtues. Yet the common distinction between them is that that which considered positively and in itself is called "virtue," when considered relatively and with respect to others has the name of "justice." But justice, being in itself a part of virtue, is confined to things simply good or evil, and consists in a man's taking such a proportion of them as he ought.

Toullier exposes the want of utility and exactness in this division of distributive and commutative justice, adopted in the compendium or abridgments of the ancient doctors, and prefers the division of internal and external justice,—the first being a conformity of our will, and the latter a conformity of our actions, to the law, their union making perfect justice. Exterior justice is the object of jurisprudence; interior justice is the object of morality. Dr. Civ. tit. prel. notes 6, 7.

According to the Frederician Code (part 1, bk. 1, tit. 2, § 27), justice consists simply in letting every one enjoy the rights which he has acquired in virtue of the laws. And, as this definition includes all the other rules of right, there is properly but one single general rule of right, namely, give every one his own.

Commutative justice is that virtue whose object it is to render to every one what belongs to him, as nearly as may be, or that which governs contracts. To render commutative justice, the judge must make an equality between the parties, that no one may be a gainer by another's loss.

Distributive justice is that virtue whose object it is to distribute rewards and punishments to each one according to his merits, observing a just proportion by comparing one person or fact with another, so that neither equal persons have unequal rights, nor unequal persons things equal. Toullier's learned note, Droit Civ. tit. prel. n. 7, note.

——In Norman French. Amenable to justice. Kelham.

——In Feudal Law. Feudal jurisdiction, divided into high (alta justitia), and low (simplex, inferior justitia), the former being a jurisdiction over matters of life and limb; the latter over smaller causes. Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 26; Du Cange. Sometimes high, low, and middle justice or jurisdiction were distinguished.

An assessment. Du Cange. Also, a judicial fine. Du Cange.

——In Practice. A title given in England and America to judges of common-law courts, being a translation of justitia, which was anciently applied to common-law judges, while judex was applied to ecclesiastical judges and others; e. g., judex fiscalis. Leg. Hen. I. §§ 24, 63; Anc. Inst. Eng. Index; Co. Litt. 71b.

The judges of king's bench and common pleas, and the judges of almost all the supreme courts in the United States, are properly styled "justices."

The term "justice" is also applied to the lowest judicial officers; e. g., a trial justice; a justice of the peace.

JUSTICE AYRES. In Scotch law. The circuits through the kingdom made for the distribution of justice. Ersk. Inst. 1. 3. 25.

JUSTICES COURTS. In American law. Inferior tribunals, with limited jurisdiction, both civil and criminal. There are courts so called in the states of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, and probably other states.

JUSTICES IN EYRE. Certain judges established, if not first appointed, A. D. 1176, 22 Hen. II.

England was divided into certain circuits, and three justices in eyre—or "justices itinerant," as they were sometimes called—were appointed to each district, and made the circuit of the kingdom once in seven years, for the purpose of trying causes. They were afterwards directed, by Magna Charta, c. 12, to be sent into every county once a year. The itinerant justices were sometimes mere justices of assize or dower, or of general gaol delivery, and the like. 3 Bl. Comm. 58; Crabb. Hist. Eng. Law, 103, 104.

JUSTICES OF ASSIZE. These justices, or, as they are sometimes called, "justices of nisi prius," are judges of the superior English courts, who go on circuit into the various counties of England and Wales for the purpose of disposing of such causes as are ready for trial at the assizes. Rapalje & L.

JUSTICES OF GAOL DELIVERY. Those justices who are sent with a commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to persons, who, for any offense, have been cast into gaol. Part of their authority was to punish those who let to mainprise those prisoners who mere not bailable by law, and they seem formerly to have been sent into the country upon this exclusive occasion, but afterwards had the same authority given them as the justices of assize. Brown.

JUSTICES OF LABORERS. In old English law. Justices appointed to try the cases of laboring men who would not work for the wages prescribed by the statute of laborers. 23 Edw. III.

JUSTICES OF NISI PRIUS. In English law. This title is now usually coupled with that of "justices of assize;" the judges of the superior courts acting on their circuits in both these capacities. 3 Bl. Comm. 58, 59.

Formerly there was a distinction made, justices of assize having power to render judgments, but justices of nisi prius having power only to receive verdicts.

JUSTICES OF OYER AND TERMINER. Certain persons appointed by the king's commission, among whom were usually two judges of the courts at Westminster, and who went twice in every year to every county of the kingdom (except London and Middlesex), and, at what was usually called the "assizes," heard and determined all treasons, felonies, and misdemeanors.

JUSTICES OF THE BENCH. The justices of the court of common bench or common pleas.

JUSTICES OF THE FOREST. In old English law. Officers who had jurisdiction over all offenses committed within the forest against vert or venison. The court wherein these justices sat and determined such causes was called the "justice seat of the forest." They were also sometimes called the "justices in eyre of the forest."

JUSTICES OF THE HUNDRED. Hundredors; lords of the hundreds; they who had the jurisdiction of hundreds, and held the hundred courts.

JUSTICES OF THE JEWS. Justices appointed by Richard I. to carry into effect the laws and orders which he had made for regulating the money contracts of the Jews.

JUSTICES OF THE PAVILION (justiciarii pavilionis). Certain judges of court of piepoudre, of a most transcendent jurisdiction, authorized by the bishop of Winchester, at a fair held at St. Giles Hills near that city, by virtue of letters patent granted by Edw. IV. Prynne on 4 Inst. fol. 191.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE. Public officers invested with judicial powers for the purpose of preventing breaches of the peace, and bringing to punishment those who have violated the law.

JUSTICES OF TRAIL BASTION. A sort of justice in eyre, with large and summary powers, appointed by Edw. I. during his absence in war. Old. Nat. Brev. fol. 52; 12 Coke, 25. For derivation, see Cowell.

JUSTICIAR, or JUSTICIER. In old English law. A judge or justice. Baker, fol. 118; Cron. Angl. One of several persons learned in the law, who sat in the aula regis, and formed a kind of court of appeal in cases of difficulty.

The chief justiciar (capitalis justicarius totius Angliae) was a special magistrate, who presided over the whole aula regis, who was the principal minister of state, the second man in the kingdom, and, by virtue of his office, guardian of the realm in the king's absence. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 37; Spelman, 330, 331, 332; 2 Hawk. P. C. 6. The last who bore this title was Philip Basset, in the time of Hen. III.

JUSTICIARE, or JUSTITIARE (Law Lat. from justicia or justitia, justice). In old English law. To justice; to do justice or right; to compel a person to appear in court. Bracton, fol. 308b; 1 Reeves, Hist. Eng. Law, 125, 173, 174. Hence the writ of justicies (q.v.) Justiciari, to be justiced; to have justice. St. Marlb. c. 1.

JUSTICIARII ITINERANTES (Lat.) In English law. Justices who formerly went from county to county to administer justice. They were usually called justices in eyre, to distinguish them from justices residing at Westminster, who were called justicii residentes. Co. Litt. 293.

JUSTICIARII RESIDENTES (Lat.) In English law. Justices or judges who usually resided in Westminster. They were so called to distinguish them from justices in eyre. Co. Litt. 293.

JUSTICIARIUS, or JUSTITIARIUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. A justice. Magna Charta, 9 Hen. III. cc. 12, 13.

JUSTICIARY. Another name for a judge. In Latin, he was called justicarius, and in French justicier. Not used. Bac. Abr. "Courts" (A).

JUSTICIARY COURT. The chief criminal court of Scotland.

JUSTICIATUS (Law Lat from justiciare, q. v.) In old English law. Judicature, prerogative, or jurisdiction. Blount.

JUSTICIES (from justiciare). In English law. A special writ, in the nature of a commission, empowering a sheriff to hold plea in his county court of a cause which he could not take jurisdiction of without this writ; e. g., trespass vi et armis for any sum, and all personal actions above forty shillings. 1 Burn, Just. 449. So called from the Latin word justicies, used in the writ, which runs, "praecipimus tibi quod justicies A. B.," etc.; we command you to do A. B. right, etc. Bracton, lib. 4, tr. 6, c. 13; Kitch. Cts. 74; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 117; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 3, 6.

JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE. Justifiable homicide is the necessary killing of another in the performance of the legal duty, or the exercise of a legal right, the slayer not being at all in fault. Homicide is justifiable (1) in the execution of a capital sentence pronounced by a competent court; (2) to prevent the commission of a felony; (3) to suppress a riot; (4) to effect the arrest of a felon, or prevent his escape after arrest; (5) where one who is feloniously assaulted, and who is himself without fault, kills his assailant to save himself from death or great bodily harm then appearing reasonably imminent. 1 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 582.

JUSTIFICATION.

——In Torts. Facts making the act charged legally justifiable.

——In Pleading. The allegation of matter of fact by the defendant, establishing his legal right to do the act complained of by the plaintiff.

Justification admits the doing of the act charged as a wrong, but alleges a right to do it on the part of the defendant, thus denying that it is a wrong. Excuse merely shows reasons why the defendant should not make good the injury which the plaintiff has suffered from some wrong done. See "Avowry."

——In Practice. The proceeding by which sureties establish their ability to perform the undertaking of the bond or recognizance.

JUSTIFICATORS. A kind of compurgators, or those who, by oath, justified the innocence or oaths of others, as in the case of wagers of law.

JUSTIFYING BAIL. In practice. The production of bail in court, who there justify themselves against the exception of the plaintiff. See "Bail."

JUSTITIA (Lat.) Justice; a jurisdiction, or the office of a judge.

JUSTITIA DEBET ESSE LIBERA, QUIA nihil iniquius venali justitia; plena, quia justitia non debet claudicare; et celeris, quia dilatio est quaedam negatio. Justice ought to be unbought, because nothing is more hateful than venal justice; full, for justice ought not to halt; and quick, for delay is a kind of denial. 2 Inst. 56.

JUSTITIA EST CONSTANS ET PERPETUA voluntas jus suum cuique tribuendi. Justice is a steady and unceasing disposition to render to every man his due. Inst. 1. 1. pr.; Dig. 1. 1. 10.

JUSTITIA EST DUPLEX, VIZ., SEVERE puniens et vere praeveniens. Justice is double; punishing severely, and truly preventing.

JUSTITIA EST VIRTUS EXCELLENS, et Altissimo complacens. Justice is an excellent virtue and pleasing to the Most High. 4 Inst. 58.

JUSTITIA FIRMATUR SOLIUM. By justice the throne is established. 3 Inst. 140.

JUSTITIA NEMINI NEGANDA EST. Justice is to be denied to none. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 178.

JUSTITIA NON EST NEGANDA, NON differenda. Justice is not to be denied nor delayed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 76.

JUSTITIA NON NOVIT PATREM NEC matrem; solum veritatem spectat justitia. Justice knows neither father nor mother; justice looks to truth alone. 1 Bulst. 199.

JUSTITIA PIEPOUDROUS. Speedy justice. Bracton, 333b.

JUSTITIUM. In civil law. A suspension or intermission of the administration of justice in courts; vacation time. Calv. Lex.

JUSTIZA. In old Spanish law. A supreme judge; a judicial magistrate peculiar to the kingdom of Aragon.

JUSTUM NON EST ALIQUEM ANTENATUM mortuum facere bastardum, qui pro tota vita sua pro legitimo habetur. It is not just to make a bastard after his death one elder born, who all his life has been accounted legitimate. 8 Coke, 101.

JUXTA (Lat.) According to. 1 Ld. Raym. 415. The same as secundum, in the civil law. 12 Mod. 218.

Juxta formam statuti, according to the form of the statute. Reg. Orig. 16. The established phrase by which reference to a statute was expressed in old writs and records.

Juxta tenorem sequentem, according to the tenor following. 2 Salk. 417. A phrase used in the old books, when the very words themselves referred to were set forth. Id.; 1 Ld. Raym. 415.

Juxta conventionem, according to the covenant. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 16, § 6.

Juxta ratam, at or after the rate. Dyer, 82.

JUZGADO. In Spanish law. The collective number of judges that concur in a decree, and more particularly the tribunal having a single judge.

K

K. B. An abbreviation for "king's bench" (q. v.)

KAIA (Law Lat.) A key, kay, or quay. Spelman.

KAIAGIUM (Law Lat.) Kayage or wharfage. Spelman.

KAIN. In Scotch law. A payment of fowls, etc., reserved in a lease. It is derived from canum, a word used in ancient grants to signify fowls or animals deliverable by the vassal to his superior as part of the reddendum. Ersk. Inst. 11. 10. 32; 2 Ross, Lect. 236, 405.

KALENDAE. Rural chapters, or conventions of the rural deans and parochial clergy, which were formerly held on the calends of every month; hence the name. Par. Ant. 604.

KALENDAR. The original form of "calendar."

KALENDS. See "Calends."

KALENDARIUM (Lat.) In civil law. A calendar; a book of accounts, memorandum book, or debt book; a book in which accounts were kept of moneys loaned out on interest. Dig. 32. 64. So called because the Romans used to let out their money, and receive the interest on the calends of each month. Calv. Lex.

KARL (Saxon). In Saxon and old English law. A man; a serving man. Buskarl, a seaman. Huskarl, a house servant. Spelman.

KARRATA (Law Lat.) In old records. A cartload. Cowell; Blount.

KAST (Swed.) In Swedish law. Jettison; a literal translation of the Latin jactus (q. v.) Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 7, § 1.

KAST GELD (Swed.) Contribution for a jettison; average. Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 8, § 1.

KE (Law Fr. that). A corruption of que. E volums ke meismes celes chartres, and we will that these same charters. Conf. Cart. 25 Edw. I.

KEELAGE. The right of demanding money for the bottom of ships resting in a port or harbor. The money so paid is also called "keelage."

KEELHALE, KEELHAUL, or KEELRAKE. To drag a person under the keel of a ship by means of ropes from the yard-arms, a punishment formerly practiced in the navy. Enc. Lond.

KEELS. This word is applied, in England, to vessels employed in the carriage of coals. Jacob.

KEEP. A strong tower or hold in the middle of any castle or fortification, wherein the besieged make their last efforts of defense, was formerly, in England, called a "keep;" and the inner pile within the castle of Dover, erected by King Henry II. about the year 1153, was termed the "King's Keep;" so at Windsor, etc. It seems to be something of the same nature with what is called abroad a "citadel." Jacob.

KEEP OPEN. As applied to a place of business, implies "a readiness to carry on the usual business therein." 16 Mich. 477.

KEEP THE PEACE. To refrain from any breach of the peace (q. v.)

KEEPER OF THE FOREST (called, also, the "chief warden of the forest"). An officer who had the principal government over all officers within the forest, and warned them to appear at the court of justice seat on a summons from the lord chief justice in eyre. Manw. For. Law, pt. 1, p. 156; Jacob.

KEEPER OF THE GREAT SEAL. A judicial officer who is by virtue of his office a lord, and a member of the privy council. Through his hands pass all charters, commissions, and grants of the crown, to be sealed with the great seal, which is under his keeping. The office was consolidated with that of lord chancellor by 5 Eliz. c. 18, and the lord chancellor is appointed by delivery of the great seal, and taking oath. 4 Inst. 87; 1 Hale, P. C. 171, 174; 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 47.

KEEPER OF THE PRIVY SEAL. The officer through whose hands go all charters, pardons, etc., signed by the king before going to the great seal, and some which do not go there at all. He is of the privy council virtute officii. He was first called clerk of the privy seal, then guardian, then lord privy seal, which is his present designation. 12 Rich. II. c. 12; Rot. Parl. 11 Hen. IV.; St. 34 Hen. VIII. c. 4; 4 Inst. 55; 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 347.

KEEPER OF THE TOUCH. The master of the assay in the English mint. 12 Hen. VI. c. 14.

KEEPING HOUSE. In English bankruptcy law. The act of a trader in withdrawing to a secret part of the house, refraining from going to business, or confining himself to the house for the purpose of avoiding his creditors. It is an act of bankruptcy. Robs. Bankr. 107 et seq.

KEEPING TERM. It was necessary for students in the Inns of Court to keep twelve terms, comprising three years, for admission to the English bar. Each term was three or four weeks, including one grand week. "Keeping the term" was to dine in the hall once in each grand week, and once in each of two half weeks. The terms so kept need not have been consecutive. Robinson, "Bench and Bar."

KENILWORTH EDICT. An edict or award between Henry III. and those who had been in arms against him; so called because made at Kenilworth Castle, in Warwickshire, A. D. 1266. It contained a composition of those who had forfeited their estates in that rebellion, which composition was five years' rent of the estates forfeited. Hale, Com. Law, 10, note (d).

KENNING TO A TERCE. In Scotch law. The ascertainment by a sheriff of the just proportion of the husband's lands which belongs to the widow in virtue of her terce or third. An assignment of dower by sheriff. Ersk. Inst. 11. 9. 50; Bell, Dict.

KENTLAGE. In maritime law. A permanent ballast, consisting usually of pigs of iron, cast in a particular form, or other weighty material, which, on account of its superior cleanliness, and the small space occupied by it, is frequently preferred to ordinary ballast. Abb. Shipp. 5.

KENTREF. The division of a county; a hundred in Wales. See "Cantred."

KERNES. Idlers; vagabonds.

KEYAGE. A toll paid for loading and unloading merchandise at a key or wharf.

KEYS.

——Of Court. In old Scotch law. Certain officers of courts. See "Claves Curiae."

——Of the Isle of Man. The twenty-four chief commoners, who form the local legislature. 1 Steph. Comm. 99.

——In Old English Law. A guardian or warden.

KEYUS. A guardian, warden, or keeper. Mon. Angl. tom. 2, p. 71.

KIDDER. An engrosser of corn to enhance its price.

KIDNAPPING. The forcible abduction or stealing away of a man, woman, or child from their own country, and sending them into another. 4 Bl. Comm. 219. Statutory definitions are somewhat different.

Actual force is not necessary; fraud or intimidation may suffice. 88 N. Y. 182. But the taking must be against the will of the person, and consent is a defense unless the person was incapable of consenting (8 N. H. 550; 25 N. Y. 272), or the consent was obtained by fraud (20 Ill. 315).

KILDERKIN. A measure of capacity, equal to eighteen gallons.

KILKETH. An ancient servile payment made by tenants in husbandry. Cowell.

KILL.

(1) A Dutch word, meaning the channel or bed of a stream. Sometimes applied to the stream itself. 1 Comst. (N. Y.) 107.

(2) An Irish word, meaning church or cemetery. Enc. Lond.

KILLYTH STALLION. A custom by which lords of manors were bound to provide a stallion for the use of their tenants' mares. Spelman.

KIN. Relation or relationship by blood or consanguinity. "The nearness of kin is computed according to the civil law." 2 Kent, Comm. 413.

KINDRED. Relations by blood.

Nature has divided the kindred of every one into three principal classes: (1) His children, and their descendants. (2) His father, mother, and other ascendants. (3) His collateral relations; which include, in the first place, his brothers and sisters, and their descendants; and, secondly, his uncles, cousins, and other relations of either sex, who have not descended from a brother or sister of the deceased. All kindred, then, are descendants, ascendants, or collaterals. A husband or wife of the deceased, therefore, is not his or her kindred. 14 Ves. 372. See Wood. Inst. 50; Ayliffe, Par. 325; Dane, Abr.; 2 Bl. Comm. 516, note; Poth. des Success. c. 1, art. 3.

It has been held to include an adopted child (4 S. W. 683), but not an illegitimate child (38 Me. 153).

KING. The chief magistrate of a kingdom, vested usually with the executive power.

The following table of the reigns of English and British kings and queens, commencing with the Conquest, is added, to assist the student in many points of chronology:

	Accession.

KING GELD. A royal aid; an escuage (q. v.)

KING'S BENCH. See "Court of King's Bench."

KING'S CHAMBERS. Those portions of the seas, adjacent to the coasts of Great Britain, which are inclosed within headlands, so as to be cut off from the open sea by imaginary straight lines drawn from one promontory to another. Rapalje & L.

KING'S (or QUEEN'S) COUNSEL. Barristers or serjeants who have been called within the bar, and selected to be the king's counsel. They answer in some measure to the advocati fisci, or advocates of the revenue, among the Romans. They must not be employed against the crown without special leave, which is, however, always granted, at a cost of about nine pounds. 3 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 27, note.

KING'S (or QUEEN'S) EVIDENCE. In English law. An accomplice in a felony, who, on an implied promise of pardon if he fully and fairly discloses the truth, is admitted as evidence for crown against his accomplices. See "State's Evidence."

KING'S (or QUEEN'S) SILVER. A fine or payment due to the king for leave to agree in order to levying a fine (finalis concordia). 2 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 350; Dyer, 320, pl. 19; 1 Leon, 249, 250; 2 Leon. 56, 179, 233, 234; 5 Coke, 39.

KINGS WIDOW. In feudal law. A widow of the king's tenant. She was not allowed to remain without the king's consent, lest she thereby induct the king's enemy into the tenure.

KINGDOM. A country where an officer called a "king" exercises the powers of government, whether the same be absolute or limited. Wolff. Inst. § 994. In some kingdoms the executive officer may be a woman, who is called a "queen."

KINSBOTE (from kin, and bote, a composition). In Saxon law. A composition for killing a kinsman. Anc. Inst. Eng. Index, "Bote."

KINTLIDGE. A term used by merchants and seafaring men to signify a ship's ballast. Merc. Dict.

KIRBY'S QUEST. An ancient record remaining with the remembrancer of the English exchequer. So called from being the inquest of John de Kirby, treasurer to Edward I.

KISSING THE BOOK. A ceremony used in taking the corporal oath; the object being, as the canonists say, to denote the assent of the witness to the oath in the form it is imposed. The witness kisses either the whole Bible, or some portion of it; or a cross, in some countries. See the ceremony explained in Oughton's Ordo, tit. lxxx.; Consitt. Courts, pt. 3, sec. 1, § 3; Junkin, Oath, 173, 180; 2 Poth. Obl. (Evans Ed.) 234.

KLEPTOMANIA. A mania to steal.

KNAVE. A false, dishonest, or deceitful person. This signification of the word has arisen by a long perversion of its original meaning, which was merely "servant" or "attendant."

KNAVESHIP. In old English law. The portion of grain given to the servant in charge of a mill by tenants who were thirled to the mill.

KNIGHT. In English law. The next personal dignity after the nobility. Of knights there are several orders and degrees. The first in rank are knights of the garter, instituted by Edward III. in 1344; next follows, a knight banneret; then come knights of the Bath, instituted by Henry IV., and revived by George I.; and they were so called from a custom of bathing the night before their creation. The last order are knights bachelors, who, though the lowest, are yet the most ancient, order of knighthood; for we find that King Alfred conferred this order upon his son Athelstan. 1 Bl. Comm. 403. These are sometimes called "knights of the chamber," being such as are made in time of peace, and so called because knighted in the king's chamber, and not in the field. 2 Inst. 666. Of the more recently established orders are the knights of St. Michael and St. George, established in 1818, and the knights of St. Patrick, an Irish order instituted in 1763. These last have no rank in England. Knights were called equites, because they always served on horseback; aurati, from the gilt spurs they wore; and milites, because they formed the royal army, in virtue of their feudal tenures.

KNIGHTS BACHELORS. See "Knight."

KNIGHTS BANNERET. See "Knight."

KNIGHT'S FEE. Anciently so much of an inheritance in land as was sufficient to maintain a knight; and every man possessed of such an estate was obliged to be knighted, and attend the king in his wars, or pay a pecuniary sum in lieu thereof, called "escuage." In the time of Henry II. the estate was estimated at twenty pounds a year; but Lord Coke, in his time, states it to be an estate of six hundred and eighty acres. Co. Litt. 69a.

KNIGHTS HOSPITALLERS. An order of knights that had their name from a hospital erected at Jerusalem for the use of pilgrims coming to the Holy Land, and dedicated to St. John Baptist. They were afterwards called "Knights of St. John of Jerusalem," and their first business was to provide for and protect such pilgrims as came to that hospital. Afterwards, being driven out of the Holy Land, they settled at Rhodes, and then at Malta, and were then called "Knights of Malta." Many of them came to England in the year 1100, where, in process of time, they became of so much wealth and dignity that their superior was the first lay baron, and had a seat among the lords in parliament.

KNIGHTS OF ST. MICHAEL AND ST. George. See "Knight."

KNIGHTS OF ST. PATRICK. See "Knight."

KNIGHTS OF THE BATH. See "Knight."

KNIGHTS OF THE CHAMBER. See "Knight."

KNIGHTS OF THE GARTER. See "Knight."

KNIGHTS OF THE POST. Hireling witnesses.

KNIGHTS OF THE SHIRE. In English law. Members of parliament representing counties or shires, in contradistinction to citizens or burgesses, who represent boroughs or corporations. So called because, as the terms of the writ for election still require, it was formerly necessary that he should be a knight. 2 Steph. Comm. 362, 392.

KNIGHT'S SERVICE. Upon the Norman conquest, all the lands in England were divided into knight's fees, in number above sixty thousand; and for every knight's fee a knight was bound to attend the king in his wars forty days in a year, in which space of time, before war was reduced to a science, a campaign was generally finished. If a man only held half a knight's fee, he was only bound to attend twenty days; and so in proportion. But this personal service, in process of time, grew into pecuniary commutations, or aids, until at last, with the military part of the feudal system, it was abolisned at the restoration, by St. 12 Car. II. c. 24. 1 Bl. Comm. 410; 2 Bl. Comm. 62.

KNIGHTS TEMPLARS. An order of knights so called from having their first residence in some apartments adjoining the temple at Jerusalem; and their employment was to guard the roads for the security of pilgrims in the Holy Land. They came into England in the reign of Stephen, where they increased so much in wealth and power that they were considered dangerous to the state, and the order was suppressed in 1312.

KNIGHTENCOURT. A court which used to be held twice a year by the bishop of Hereford.

KNIGHTENGUILD, or KNIGHTENGYLD. An ancient guild or society formed by King Edgar.

KNIGHTHOOD. The character, dignity, or status of a knight.

KNOCK DOWN. To accept a bid at an auction. So called from the fact that the auctioneer's acceptance of the bid is commonly signified by a stroke of his hammer. "Knocked down" is synonymous with "struck off." 7 Hill (N. Y.) 439.

KNOWINGLY. In pleading. The word "knowingly," or "well knowing," will supply the place of a positive averment, in an indictment or declaration, that the defendant knew the facts subsequently stated. If notice or knowledge be unnecessarily stated, the allegation may be rejected as surplusage. See Comyn, Dig. "Indictment" (G 6); 2 Cush. (Mass.) 577; 2 Strange, 904; 2 East, 452; 1 Chit. Pl. 367.

It implies actual personal knowledge. 4 Lans. (N. Y.) 22.

In an indictment it signifies that defendant, at the time of committing the offense charged, well knew what he was doing. 14 Fed. 127.

KNOWLEDGE. Positive assurance of a fact.

It is not synonymous with "information" (21 Pac. 39), or "notice" (1 So. 777), and differs from "belief" in degree; knowledge being a firm belief (9 Gray [Mass.] 271).

KNOWN MEN. A title formerly given to the Lollards. Cowell.

KNUCKLES. See "Brass Knuckles."

KYTH. Kin or kindred.

L

L. S. An abbreviation for locus sigilli (q. v.)

LA. FR. The definite article feminine.

LA CONSCIENCE EST LA PLUS CHANgeante des regles. Conscience is the most changeable of rules.

LA LEY FAVOUR LA VIE D'UN HOME. The law favors a man's life. Y. B. Hen. VI. 51.

LA LEY FAVOUR L'INHERITANCE D'UN home. The law favors a man's inheritance. Y. B. Hen. VI. 51.

LA LEY VOIT PLUS TOST SUFFER UN mischiefe que un inconvenience. The law would rather suffer a mischief than an inconvenience. Litt. § 231.

LABEL. A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, hanging at or out of the same. This name is also given to an appending seal. See 2 Fed. 217.

LABOR A JURY. To tamper with a jury; to persuade jurymen not to appear. It seems to come from the meaning of "labor," to prosecute with energy, to urge; as, to labor a point. Dyer, 48; Hob. 294; Co. Litt. 157b; 14 & 20 Hen. VII. 30, 11. The first lawyer that came from England to practice in Boston was sent back for laboring a jury. Washb. Jud. Hist.

LABORARIIS. An ancient writ against persons who refused to serve and do labor, and who had no means of living; or against such as, having served in the winter, refused to serve in the summer. Reg. Orig. 189.

LABORER. One who performs manual labor. 10 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 642.

A contractor is not (6 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 619), nor is an architect who merely provides plans (90 Pa. St. 47); but one who directs the work is (35 Pa. St. 42).

Clerks, bookkeepers, traveling salesmen, etc., are not. 44 Ill. App. 338, 341.

LABORERS, STATUTES OF. St. 23 Edw. III., St. 12 Rich. II., 5 Eliz. c. 4, and St. 26 & 27 Vict. c. 125, making regulations as to laborers, servants, apprentices, etc.

LACHES (Fr. lacher, to slacken; to let slip). Negligent delay in enforcing a right.

"Inexcusable negligence and inattention to one's interests." 16 N. J. Eq. 242.

"Laches presupposes not only lapse of time, but also the existence of circumstances which render negligence imputable, and unless reasonable diligence is shown in the prosecution of a claim to equitable relief, the court, acting on the maxim vigilantibus non donnientibus subvenient leges, will decline to interfere." Lindl. Partn. 902.

LACTA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Defect in the weight of money; lack of weight. This word and the verb lactare are used in an assize or statute of the sixth year of King John. Spelman.

LACUS (Lat.)

——In the Civil Law. A lake; a receptacle of water which is never dry. Dig. 43. 14. 1. 3.

——In Old English Law. Allay or alloy of silver with base metal. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 22, § 6. This word is not found either in Spelman or Cowell.

LADA (from Saxon ladian, to purge).

——In Saxon Law. A purgation, or mode of trial by which one purged himself of an accusation; as by oath or ordeal. Spelman.

A watercourse; a trench or canal for draining marshy grounds. In old English, a lade or load. Spelman; Cowell.

——In Old English Law (from Saxon lathian, to assemble). A court of justice; a lade or lath. Cowell.

LADE, or LODE. The mouth of a river.

LADEN IN BULK. Freighted with a cargo which is neither in casks, boxes, bales, nor cases, but lies loose in the hold, being defended from wet or moisture by a number of mats and a quantity of dunnage. Cargoes of corn, salt, etc., are usually so shipped. Wharton.

LADY. The title pertaining to a peer's wife, and (by courtesy) to the wife of a baronet or knight, and the daughter of an earl. Webster.

LADY COURT. The court of a lady of the manor.

LADY DAY. The feast of the Annunciation, March twenty-fifth.

LADY'S FRIEND. The name of a functionary in the British house of commons. When the husband sues for a divorce, or asks the passage of an act to divorce him from his wife, he is required to make a provision for her before the passage of the act. It is the duty of the lady's friend to see that such a provision is made. Macq. Husb. & Wife, 213.

LAESA MAJESTAS (Lat.) Laese majesty, or injured majesty; high treason. It is a phrase taken from the civil law, and anciently meant any offense against the king's person or dignity, defined by 25 Edw. III. c. 6. Glanv. lib. 5, c. 2; 4 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 75; Bracton, 118. See "Crimen."

LAESIO ULTRA DIMIDIUM VEL ENORmis. In Roman law. The injury sustained by one of the parties to an onerous contract when he had been overreached by the other to the extent of more than one-half of the value of the subject matter; e. g., when a vendor had not received half the value of property sold, or the purchaser had paid more than double value. Colq. Civ. Law, § 2094.

LAESIONE FIDEI, SUITS PRO. Suits or actions for breach of faith in civil contracts which the clergy, in the reign of Stephen, introduced into the spiritual courts, by means of which they took cognizance of many matters of contract belonging to the temporal courts under a pretext that faith solemnly plighted was of a religious nature, the breach of which belonged to the spiritual tribunals. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 74.

LAESIWERP. In old English law. A thing surrendered into the hands or power of another; a thing given or delivered. Spelman.

LAGA. The law.

LAGAN (Saxon liggan, cubare). Goods found at such a distance from shore that it was uncertain what coast they would be carried to, and therefore belonging to the finder. Bracton, 120. See "Ligan."

LAGE DAY. In old English law. A law day; a day of open court.

LAGE MAN. A juror. Cowell.

LAGU. In old English law. Law; also used to express the territory or district in which a particular law was in force, as Dena lagu, the district under Danish law, etc.

LAHLSLIT (Saxon). A breach of law. Cowell. A mulct for an offense, viz., twelve "ores." 1 Anc. Inst. Eng. 169.

LAHMAN (Saxon). A lawyer. Domesday Book, I. 189.

LAICUS. A layman.

LAIRESITE. The name of a fine imposed upon those who committed adultery or fornication. Tech. Dict.

LAITY. Those persons who do not make a part of the clergy. In the United States the division of the people into clergy and laity is not authorized by law, but is merely conventional.

LAMBETH DEGREE. A degree given by archbishop of Canterbury. 1 Sharswood, Bl. Comm. 381, note. Although he can confer all degrees given by the two universities, the graduates have many privileges not shared by the recipients of his degrees.

LAMMAS LANDS. Lands over which there is a right of pasturage by persons other than the owner from about Lammas, or reaping time, until sowing time. Wharton.

LANCETI. In feudal law. Vassals who were obliged to work for their lord one day in the week, from Michaelmas to autumn, either with fork, spade, or flail, at the lord's option. Spelman.

LAND, or LANDS. A term comprehending any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever; as, meadows, pastures, woods, waters, marshes, furzes, and heath.

An estate of frank tenement at the least. Shep. Touch. 92.

In the technical sense, freeholds are not included within the word "lands." 3 Madd. 535. The term terra in Latin was used to denote land, from terendo, quia vomere teritur (because it is broken by the plough), and, accordingly, in fines and recoveries, land, i. e., terra, has been held to mean arable land. Salk. 256; Cowp. 346; Co. Litt. 4a; 11 Coke, 55a. But see Cro. Eliz. 476; 4 Bing. 90; Burton, Real Prop. 196. See, also, 2 P. Wms. 458, note; 5 Ves. 476; 20 Viner, Abr. 203.

"'Land' comprehendeth in its legal significance any ground, soil, or earth whatsoever. It includes, also, all castles, houses, or other buildings, for they consist of two things,—land, which is the foundation, and structures thereon. Land hath also, in its legal signification, an indefinite extent upwards as well as downwards." 1 Inst. 4a; 2 Bl. Comm. 18.

"Lands" is not as broad a term as "tenements" or "hereditaments," but has been sometimes used as including these. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 9. It does not include incorporeal hereditaments issuing out of lands. 5 Denio (N. Y.) 324.

LAND CEAP, or LAND CHEAP (land, and Saxon ceapan, to buy). A fine payable in money or cattle, upon the alienation of land within certain manors and liberties. Cowell.

LAND COURT. The name of a court in the city of St. Louis, state of Missouri, having sole jurisdiction in St. Louis county in suits respecting lands, and in actions of ejectment, dower, partition.

LAND GABEL (or GABLE). A tax or rent issuing out of land. Blount. A ground rent. Cowell.

LAND-REEVE. A person whose business it is to overlook certain parts of a farm or estate; to attend not only to the woods and hedge timber, but also to the state of the fences, gates, buildings, private roads, driftways, and watercourses; and likewise to the stocking of commons, and encroachments of every kind, as well as to prevent or detect waste and spoil in general, whether by the tenants or others, and to report the same to the manager or land steward. Enc. Lond.

LAND TAX. A tax on beneficial proprietor of land. So far as a tenant is beneficial proprietor, and no farther, does it rest on him. It has superseded all other methods of taxation in Great Britain. Sugd. Vend. 268. It was first imposed in 1693, a new valuation of the lands in the kingdom having been made in 1692, which has not since been changed. In 1798 it was made perpetual, at a rate of four shillings in a pound of valued rent. See Enc. Brit. "Taxation;" Wharton.

LAND TENANT (commonly called tene tenant). He who actually possesses the land.

LAND WAITER. In English law. An officer of the custom house, whose duty is, upon landing any merchandise, to examine, taste, weigh, or measure it, and to take an account thereof. In some ports they also execute the office of a coast waiter. They are likewise occasionally styled "searchers," and are to attend and join with the patent searchers in the execution of all cockets for the shipping of goods to be exported to foreign parts; and, in cases where drawbacks on bounties are to be paid to the merchant on the exportation of any goods, they, as well as the patent searchers, are to certify the shipping thereof on the debentures. Enc. Lond.

LANDS CLAUSES CONSOLIDATION acts. Certain English statutes (8 Vict. c. 8, amended by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 106, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 18), to provide legislative clauses in a convenient form for incorporation by reference in future special acts of parliament for taking lands, with or without the consent of their owners, for the promotion of railways, and other public undertakings. Mozley & W.

LANDS, TENEMENTS, AND HEREDITAments. The technical and most comprehensive description of real property, as "goods and chattels" is of personalty. Williams, Real Prop. 5.

LANDATOR. A witness to character.

LANDBOC (Saxon, from land, and boc, a writing). In Saxon law. A charter or deed by which lands or tenements were given or held. Spelman; Cowell; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 10; 1 Spence, Ch. 22.

LANDEFRICUS. A landlord.

LANDEGANDMAN (Saxon). In old English law. A kind of customary tenant or inferior tenant of a manor. Spelman.

LANDIMER (Scotch; Lat. agrimensor). In old Scotch law. A measurer of land. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. "Particata."

LANDIRECTA. In Saxon law. Services and duties laid upon all that held land, including the three obligations called "trinoda necessitas" (q. v.); quasi land rights. Cowell.

LANDLORD.

——In Old Law. The lord or proprietor of land, who, under the feudal system, retained the dominion or ultimate property of the feud, or fee of the land; while his grantee, who had only the possession and use of the land, was styled the "feudatory," or "vassal," which was only another name for the tenant or holder of it.

——In Modern Law. The lessor of lands or tenements.

LANDMARK. A monument set up in order to ascertain the boundaries between two contiguous estates. For removing a landmark an action lies. 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 787. See "Monument."

LANDSLAGH. In Swedish law. A body of common law, compiled about the thirteenth century, out of the particular customs of every province; being analogous to the common law of England. 1 Bl. Comm. 66.

LANDWARD (Scotch). Rural.

LANGUAGE. The medium for the communication of perceptions and ideas.

Spoken language is that wherein articulate sounds are used.

Written language is that wherein written characters are used, and especially the system of characters called "letters and figures."

LANGUIDUS (Lat.) In practice. The name of a return made by the sheriff when a defendant, whom he has taken by virtue of process, is so dangerously sick that to remove him would endanger his life or health.

LANIS DE CRESCENTIA WALLIAE TRAducendis absque custuma, etc. An ancient writ that lay to the customer of a port to permit one to pass wool without paying custom, he having paid it before in Wales. Reg. Orig. 279.

LANZAS. In Spanish law. A certain contribution in money paid by the grandees and other high officers in lieu of the soldiers they ought to furnish government in time of war.

LAPIS MARMORIUS. A marble stone about twelve feet long and three feet broad, placed at the upper end of Westminster Hall, where was likewise a marble chair erected on the middle thereof, in which the English sovereigns anciently sat at their coronation dinner, and at other times the lord chancellor. Rapalje & L.

LAPSE. To glide; to pass slowly, silently, or by degrees, to slip; to deviate from the proper path. Webster. See "Lapsed Devise;" "Lapsed Legacy."

——In Ecclesiastical Law. The transfer, by forfeiture, of a right to present or collate to a vacant benefice from a person vested with such right to another, in consequence of some act of negligence by the former. Ayliffe, Par. 331.

Upon six months' neglect of the patron, the right lapses to the bishop; upon six months' neglect of bishop, to archbishop; upon his six months' neglect, to king. The day on which the vacancy occurs is not counted, and the six months are calculated as a half-year. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 355.

LAPSE PATENT. A patent issued to petitioner for land; a patent for which land to another party has lapsed through neglect of patentee. The lapse patent relates to date of original patent, and makes void all mesne conveyances. 1 Wash. (Va.) 39, 40.

LAPSED DEVISE. A devise which has lapsed, or does not take effect because of the death of devisee before testator.

LAPSED LEGACY. A legacy which, on account of the death of the legatee before the period arrives for the payment of the legacy, lapses or deviates from the course prescribed by the testator, and falls into the residuum. 1 Williams, Ex'rs, 1036.

A distinction exists between a lapsed devise and a lapsed legacy. A legacy which lapses does not fall into the residue unless so provided by the will, but descends to the heir at law; on the contrary, personal property passes by the residuary clause where it is not otherwise disposed of. 2 Bouv. Inst. 2154-2156. See "Lapsed Devise."

LARCENY. In criminal law. The wrongful and fraudulent taking and carrying away by one person of the mere personal goods of another from any place, with a felonious intent to convert them to his, the taker's, use, and make them his property without the consent of the owner. 2 East, P. C. 553; 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 700.

In a recent English case, Mr. Baron Parke said that this definition, which was the most complete of any, was defective, in not stating what is the meaning of the word "felonious," which, he said, "may be explained to mean that there is no color of right or excuse for the act; and the 'intent' must be to deprive the owner, not temporarily, but permanently, of his property." 2 Car. & K. 942; 1 Den. C. C. 370; Templ. & M. C. C. 40. It is safer to be guided by the cases than by the definitions given by text writers.

Larceny is of two kinds, namely, simple larceny, and compound larceny.

(1) Simple larceny at common law is the taking and carrying away of the mere personal goods of another of any value, from any place, with a felonious intent to steal the same. This definition includes the following elements:

(a) The subject of the offense must be the mere personal goods of another, though, at common law, other things are made the subject of larceny by statute.

Therefore—

(i) It must be personal, as distinguished from real property.

(ii) It must be something which the law recognizes as property, and the subject of ownership.

(iii) It must be of some value; but the least value to the owner is sufficient.

(iv) It must be the property of another; but a special property in another is sufficient, even as against the general owner; and mere possession is enough as against others than the owner.

(b) The goods must be taken, and the taking must be under such circumstances as to amount technically to a trespass.

(c) There must be some asportation or carrying away of the goods.

(d) Both the taking and the carrying away must be with a felonious intent,—an intent to steal,—existing at the time.

Grand and petit larceny. By statute in some jurisdictions, larceny has been divided, according to the value of the property or other circumstances, into grand larceny and petit larceny.

(2) Compound larcenies are larcenies committed under certain aggravating circumstances. Thus:

(a) At common law, robbery, which is larceny from the person or in the presence of another by violence, or by putting him in fear, is a compound larceny.

(b) By statute in most jurisdictions, it is a compound larceny, punished more severely than simple larceny, to steal (1) from the person of another, or (2) from a dwelling house, or certain other places specified in the statute. 2 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 649.

LARCENY BY BAILEE. A statutory offense existing in one or two states, consisting of the fraudulent conversion of property by a bailee thereof. The offense is covered by the ordinary statutes against embezzlement.

LARGE (Law Fr.) Broad; the opposite of estreyte, strait or strict. Pures et larges. Britt. c. 34.

LARON, or LARUN. In old English law. A thief; thieves. Petits larons, petty thieves. Britt. c. 29.

LAS PARTIDAS. The name of a code of Spanish law. It is sometimes called las siete partidas, or the seven parts, from the number of its principal divisions. It is a compilation from the civil law, the customary law of Spain, and the canon law. It was compiled by four Spanish jurisconsults, under the eye of Alphonso X., A. D. 1250, and published in Castille in 1263, but first promulgated as law by Alphonso XI., A. D. 1348. The maritime law contained in it is given in volume 6, Pardessus, Col. Mar. Law. He follows the edition of 1807, at Paris. It has been translated into English. Such of its provisions as are applicable are in force in Florida, Louisiana, and Texas. 1 Bl. Comm. 66; 1 White, New Recop. 354.

LASCIVIOUS CARRIAGE. In Connecticut. A term including those wanton acts between persons of different sexes, who are not married to each other, that flow from the exercise of lustful passions, and which are not otherwise punished as crimes against chastity and public decency. 2 Swift, Dig. 343; 2 Swift, Syst. 331.

Lascivious carriage may consist not only in mutual acts of wanton and indecent familiarity between persons of different sexes, but in wanton and indecent actions against the will and without the consent of one of them; as, if a man should forcibly attempt to pull up the clothes of a woman. 5 Day (Conn.) 81.

LASHITE, or LASHLITE. A kind of forfeiture during the government of the Danes in England. Enc. Lond.

LAST (Law Lat. lastus, lestus). In English law. A burden; a weight or measure of various commodities, as of pitch, hides, fish, corn, wool, leather, etc. Cowell.

LAST COURT. A court held by the twenty-four jurats in the marshes of Kent, and summoned by the bailiffs, whereby orders were made to lay and levy taxes, impose penalties, etc., for the preservation of the said marshes. Enc. Lond.

LAST HEIR. He to whom the lands come if they escheat for want of lawful heirs, viz., sometimes the lord of whom the lands are held, sometimes the king. Bracton, lib. 5, c. 17.

LAST RESORT. A court from which there is no appeal is called the "court of last resort."

LAST SICKNESS. That of which a person dies. The last sickness includes the whole of the sickness of which the person dies, no matter of how long duration. 8 Me. 167.

The expenses of this sickness are generally entitled to a preference in payment of debts of an insolvent estate. Civ. Code La. art. 3166.

To prevent impositions, the statute of frauds requires that nuncupative wills shall be made during the testator's last sickness. Roberts, Frauds, 556; 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 502.

LAST WILL (Lat. ultima voluntas). A disposition of real estate, to take effect after death.

It is strictly distinguishable from "testament," which is applied to personal estate (1 Williams, Ex'rs, 6, note [b] Am. Notes); but the words are generally used together, "last will and testament," in a will, whether real or personal estate is to be disposed of. See "Will."

LASTAGE, or LESTAGE. A custom exacted in some fairs and markets to carry things bought whither one will. But it is more accurately taken for the ballast or lading of a ship. Also custom paid for wares sold by the last, as herrings, pitch, etc.

LATA CULPA DOLO AEQUIPARATUR. Gross negligence is equal to fraud.

LATE. Recently; last. 7 Cal. 226. Defunct. 17 Ala. 190.

LATELY. This word has been held to have "a very large retrospect, as we say 'lately deceased' of one dead ten or twenty years." 2 Show. 294.

LATENS (Lat. from latere, to lie hid). Latent; hidden; not apparent.

LATENT AMBIGUITY. One which does not appear from the words of an instrument, but only from the application of the words to the subject matter. See 117 U. S. 221.

A latent ambiguity may arise from the fact that there are two or more persons or objects to which a perfect description will apply. Thus, where lands were conveyed to one by name, and it appeared that there were two of that name, it was held a latent ambiguity. 131 Mass. 179. Or it may arise from a misdescription not apparent on the face of the instrument, whereby two persons or objects or none at all are described. 117 U. S. 221.

A mere mistake in a description, whereby it is made to apply to something other than was intended, is not an ambiguity. 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 201.

LATENT DEED. One kept for twenty years or more in a man's scrutoire or strong box, accompanied by no distinctive possession. 7 N. J. Law, 177.

LATENT DEFECT. One not discoverable by external examination. 13 N. Y. 9.

The term is used both in personal injury law, and in the law of sales.

——In Personal Injury Law. An employe (108 Ind. 286) and a fortiori a third person is not bound to take notice of latent defects, while the owner of the defective appliance is bound to use due care and diligence to discover the same, if it can be done by any appropriate test (Wood, Mast. & S. § 368); while a carrier is held to every test dictated by the utmost possible care (119 Mass. 412).

——In the Law of Sales. A seller is bound to disclose latent defects known to him, but does not impliedly warrant against latent defects except under peculiar circumstances, as where the goods are of his own manufacture. 21 N. Y. 552.

LATERAL SUPPORT. The support of land by the adjoining land; so called in contradistinction from "subjacent support," that of the soil beneath. The right to such lateral support exists as a natural incident of real property (25 N. J. Law, 356; 122 Mass. 199); and an adjoining landowner who, by excavation on his own land, removes such lateral support, is liable in damages (135 Mass. 150; 57 Minn. 493).

LATERARE (Law Lat. from latus, a side). In old English law. To lie sideways; literally, to side; the opposite of capitare, to head or abut. Cowell. See "Capitare."

LATHE, or LATH (Law Lat. laestrum or leda). A division of certain counties in England, intermediate between a county or shire and a hundred, sometimes containing three or four hundreds, as in Kent and Sussex. Cowell. But in Sussex the word used for this division is "rape." 1 Bl. Comm. 116. There was formerly a lathe reeve or bailiff in each lathe. Id. This division into lathes continues to the present day. See 12 East, 244. In Ireland, the lathe was intermediate between the tything and the hundred. Spencer, Ireland. See Termes de la Ley.

LATHE REEVE, LATHREVE, or LEIDgreve (Saxon). An officer under the Saxon government, who had authority over a lathe. Cowell; 1 Bl. Comm. 116.

LATIDEMEO. In Spanish law. The tax paid by the possessor of land held by quit rent or emphyteusis to the owner of the estate, when the tenant alienates his right in the property.

LATIFUNDIUM (Lat.) In civil law. Great or large possessions; a great or large field; a common. Ainsworth. A great estate made up of smaller ones (fundus), which began to be common in the latter times of the empire. Schmidt, Civ. Law, Introd. p. 17.

LATIFUNDUS (Lat. late possidens). A possessor of a large estate made up of smaller ones. Du Cange.

LATINI JUNIANI (Lat.) In Roman law. A class of freedmen (libertini) intermediate between the two other classes of freedmen called, respectively, "Cives Romani" and "Dediticii." Slaves under thirty years of age at the date of their manumission, or manumitted otherwise than by vindicta, census, or testamentum, or not the quiritary property of their manumissors at the time of manumission, were called "Latini." By reason of one or other of these three defects, they remained slaves by strict law even after their manumission, but were protected in their liberties first by equity, and eventually by the Lex Junia Norbana, A. D. 19, from which law they took the name of "Juniani" in addition to that of "Latini." Brown.

LATITAT (Lat. he lies hid). In English law. The name of a writ calling a defendant to answer to a personal action in the king's bench. It derives its name from a supposition that the defendant lurks and lies hid, and cannot be found in the county of Middlesex (in which the said court is holden) to be taken there, but is gone into some other county, and therefore requiring the sheriff to apprehend him in such other county. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 78.

LATITATIO. In the civil law and old English practice. A lying hid; lurking, or concealment of the person. Dig. 42. 4. 7. 5; Bracton, fol. 126.

LATRO. In the civil and old English law. A robber. Dig. 50. 16. 118; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 1. A thief.

LATROCINATION. The act of robbing; a depredation.

LATROCINIUM.
Larceny or theft. Reg. Orig. 268b.
A thing stolen. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 7.
The liberty of infangthef, or privilege of judging and executing thieves.

LATROCINY. Larceny.

LAUDARE.
——In Civil Law. To name; to cite or quote; to show one's title or authority. Calv. Lex.

——In Feudal Law. To determine or pass upon judicially. Feud. lib. 1, tit. 22. Laudamentum, the finding or award of a jury. 2 Bl. Comm. 285.

LAUDATIO. In Roman law. Testimony adduced in favor of the character of an accused person. Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 13.

LAUDATOR. A witness to the good character of an accused person.

LAUDEMIUM, or LAUDATIOREM (Lat. a laudando domino). A fiftieth part of the purchase money, or (if no sale) of the value of the estate paid to the landlord (dominus) by a new emphyteuta on his succession to the estate, not as heir, but as singular successor. Voet. Com. ad Pand. lib. 6, tit. 3, §§ 26-35; Mackeld. Civ. Law, 297.
——In Old English Law. The tenant paid a laudemium or acknowledgment money to new landlord on the death of the old. See Blount, "Acknowledgment Money."

LAUDUM. An arbitrament or award. Rapalje & L.
——In Old Scotch Law. Sentence or judgment; dome or doom. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 2, p. 8.

LAUGEMANNI (Law Lat.) Lords of manors, according to Coke's definition, who writes the word launcmanni. Domesday Book; Co. Litt. 5a.

LAUGHE. Frank pledge. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 17.

LAUGHLESMAN (Saxon). In old English law. An outlaw. Bracton, fol. 125.

LAUNCEGAY. A kind of offensive weapon, now disused, and prohibited by 7 Rich. II. c. 13.

LAUNCH. The movement by which a ship or boat descends from the shore into the water when she is first built, or afterwards.
A large, long, low, flat-bottomed boat. Mar. Dict. The long-boat of a ship; a small vessel employed to carry the cargo of a large one to and from the shore.

LAUS DEO (Lat.) Praise be to God. An old heading to bills of exchange. West, Symb. pt. 1, lib. 2, § 660.

LAVOR NUEVA (Spanish). In Spanish law. A new work. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 32, lib. 1.

LAW. That which is established; a rule or method of action.
A distinction is to be observed in the outset between the abstract and the concrete meaning of the word. In the broadest sense which it bears when used in the abstract law, it is the science which treats of the theory of government.
In a stricter sense, but still in the abstract, it is the aggregate of those rules and principles enforced and sanctioned by the governing power in a community, and according to which it regulates, limits, and protects the conduct of members of the community. In the abstract sense, it includes the decisions of courts.

Used in the concrete, law is a rule of action prescribed by a superior. 1 Bl. Comm. 38.

In a stricter concrete sense, it is a rule of civil conduct prescribed by the supreme power in a state. 1 Steph. Comm. 25.

In the strictest sense, it is a statute; a rule prescribed by the legislative power. 10 Pet. (U. S.) 18.

Used without an article prefixed, the abstract sense is generally intended; with an article, the sense is usually concrete.

Law is used to denote the system of the common law, as distinguished from equity. See "Equity."

It is also used in contradistinction to "fact." See "In Law."

Arbitrary law. A law or provision of law so far removed from considerations of abstract justice that it is necessarily founded on the mere will of the law-making power, so that it is rather a rule established than a principle declared. The principle that an infant shall not be bound by his contract is not arbitrary; but the rule that the limit of infancy shall be twenty-one years, not twenty nor twenty-two, is arbitrary.

The term is also sometimes used to signify an unreasonable law,—one that is in violation of justice.

Irrevocable laws. All laws which have not in their nature or in their language some limit or termination provided are, in theory, perpetual; but the perpetuity is liable to be defeated by subsequent abrogation. It has sometimes been attempted to secure an absolute perpetuity by an express provision forbidding any abrogation. But it may well be questioned whether one generation has power to bind their posterity by an irrevocable law. See this subject discussed by Benth. Works, vol. 2, pp. 402-407; and see Dwarr. St. 479.

Municipal law is a system of law proper to any single state, nation, or community. See "Municipal Law."

Penal law is one which inflicts a penalty for its violation.

Positive law is the system naturally established by a community, in distinction from "natural law."

A private law is one which relates to private matters which do not concern the public at large.

A prospective law or statute is one which applies only to cases arising after its enactment, and does not affect that which is already past.

A public law is one which affects the public, either generally or in some classes.

A retrospective law or statute is one that turns backward to alter that which is past, or to affect men in relation to their conduct before its enactment. These are also called "retroactive laws." In general, whenever a retroactive statute would take away vested rights, or impair the obligation of contracts, it is in so far void. 3 Dall. (Pa.) 391. But laws which only vary the remedies, or merely cure a defect in proceedings otherwise fair, are valid. 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 102, 103; 15 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 72; 2 Pet. (U. S.) 380, 627; 8 Pet. (U. S.) 88; 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420. See "Ex Post Facto."

For matters peculiar to the following classes of laws, see their several titles: "Adjective Law;" "Brehon Law;" "Bretts and Scotts, Laws of the;" "Canon Law;" "Civil Law;" "Code;" "Colonial Laws;" "Commercial Law;" "Consuetudinary Law;" "Corn Laws;" "Criminal Law;" "Crown Law;" "Ecclesiastical Law;" "Ex Post Facto Law;" "Fecial Law;" "Feudal Law;" "Foreign Law;" "Game Laws;" "Hindu Law;" "Insolvency;" "Laws of Oleron;" "Military Law;" "Retrospective Law;" "Rhodian Laws."

LAW ALWAYS CONSTRUETH THINGS to the best. Wingate, Max. p. 720, max. 193.

LAW BORGH. In old Scotch law. A pledge or surety for appearance.

LAW BURROWS. In Scotch law. Security for the peaceful behavior of a party; security to keep the peace. This process was much resorted to by the government of Charles II. for political purposes.

LAW CHARGES. In Louisiana. Costs.

LAW COURT OF APPEALS. In American law. An appellate tribunal, in the state of South Carolina, for hearing appeals from the courts of law.

LAW DAY. The day fixed in a mortgage or defeasible deed for the payment of the debt secured. 24 Ala. (N. S.) 149; 10 Conn. 280.

The phrase formerly marked the time when all legal rights were lost by the mortgagor's default. There is now no such time, until foreclosure; and the term serves only to engender confusion. 21 N. Y. 343, 345, 365, 367.

——In Old English Law. Law day or lage day denoted a day of open court; especially the more solemn courts of a county or hundred. The court leet, or view of frankpledge.

LAW FRENCH. From the time of William the Norman down to that of Edward III., all public proceedings and documents in England, including the records of the courts, the arguments of counsel, and the decisions of the judges, were in the language of the Norman French. After Latin and English were substituted in the records and proceedings, however, the cases and decisions continued until the close of the seventeenth century to be reported in French; the first reports published in England being those of Style, in 1658. The statutes of the reign of Henry III., and some of the subsequent reigns, are partly or wholly in this language; but English was substituted in the reign of Henry VII. Of the law treatises in French, the Mirrour and Britton, and the works of Littleton, may be mentioned.

LAW LATIN. Edward III. substituted the Latin language for the Norman French in the records, and the English in other proceedings. The Latin was used by virtue of its being the language of scholars of all European nations; but, in order to adapt it to the purposes of the profession, the English terms of legal art in most frequent use were Latinized by the simple addition of a Latin termination, and the diverse vocabulary thus collected was arranged in English idioms. But this barbarous dialect commended itself by a semblance of scholarly sound, and more by the precision which attaches to technical terms that are never used in popular language. During the time of Cromwell, English was used; but with the restoration Latin was reinstated, and held its place till 4 Geo. II. c. 26, when it was enacted that, since the common people ought to know what was done for and against them, proceedings should be in English. It was found, however, that certain technical terms had become so fixed that, by a subsequent act, such words were allowed to continue in use. 6 Geo. II. c. 14. Hence a large class of Latin terms are still in use, of which nisi prius, habeas corpus, lis pendens, are examples. Consult 3 Bl. Comm. 318-323, and as to particular words and phrases, Termes de la Ley; Taylor; Law French & Law Latin Dict.; Kelham; Du Cange.

LAW LIST. An annual English publication of a quasi official character, comprising various statistics of interest in connection with the legal profession. It includes (among other information) the following matters: A list of judges, queen's counsel, and serjeants at law; the judges of the county courts; benchers of the inns of court; barristers, in alphabetical order; the names of counsel practicing in the several circuits of England and Wales; London attorneys; county attorneys; officers of the courts of chancery and common law; the magistrates and law officers of the city of London; the metropolitan magistrates and police; recorders; county court officers and circuits; lord lieutenants and sheriffs; colonial judges and officers; public notaries. Mozley & W.

LAW LORDS. Peers in the British parliament who have held high judicial office, or have been distinguished in the legal profession. Mozley & W.

LAW MARTIAL. The military law or articles of war.

LAW MERCHANT.

——In England. The general body of commercial usages in matters relative to commerce. Blackstone calls it the "custom of merchants," and ranks it under the head of the particular customs of England, which go to make up the great body of the common law. 1 Bl. Comm. 75. Since, however, its character is not local, nor its obligation confined to a particular district, it cannot with propriety be considered as a "custom" in the technical sense. 1 Steph. Comm. 54. It is a system of law which does not rest exclusively on the positive institutions and local customs of any particular country, but consists of certain principles of equity and usages of trade which general convenience and a common sense of justice have established, to regulate the dealings of merchants and mariners in all the commercial countries of the civilized world. 3 Kent, Comm. 2.

——In the United States. The law merchant of England, consisting of the body of usages, the decisions of the English courts construing the same, and statutes confirming and modifying the same prior to the Declaration of Independence, are a part of the common law of the United States. 19 Ill. 598; 1 Morris (Iowa) 128.

LAW OF ARMS. That law which gives precepts and rules concerning war; how to make and observe leagues and truce, to punish offenders in the camp, and such like. Cowell; Blount. Now more commonly called the "law of war." R

LAW OF CITATIONS. In Roman law. An act of Valentinian, passed A. D. 426, providing that the writings of only five jurists, viz., Papinian, Paul, Gaius, Ulpian, and Modestinus, should be quoted as authorities. The majority was binding on the judge. If they were equally divided, the opinion of Papinian was to prevail, and in such a case, if Papinian was silent upon the matter, then the judge was free to follow his own view of the matter. Brown.

LAW OF MARQUE. Law authorizing reprisal against the goods of another, where justice cannot be had in ordinary course. See "Letter of Marque and Reprisal."

LAW OF NATIONS. See "International Law."

LAW OF NATURE. That law which God, the sovereign of the universe, has prescribed to all men, not by any formal promulgation, but by the internal dictate of reason alone. It is discovered by a just consideration of the agreeableness or disagreeableness of human actions to the nature of man, and it comprehends all the duties which we owe either to the Supreme Being, to ourselves, or to our neighbors; as, reverence to God, self-defense, temperance, honor to our parents, benevolence to all, a strict adherence to our engagements, gratitude, and the like. Ersk. Prac. Scotch Law, 1. 1. 1. See Ayliffe, Pand. tit. 2, p. 2; Cicero, de Leg. lib. 1.

The primitive laws of nature may be reduced to six, namely, comparative sagacity, or reason; self-love; the attraction of the sexes to each other; the tenderness of parents towards their children; the religious sentiment; sociability. See "Jus Naturale."

LAW OF THE LAND. Due process of law (q. v.) 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 50; 6 Pa. St. 86; 4 Hill (N. Y.) 140.

LAW OF THE ROAD. The rules of law regulating the conduct of persons on highways to avoid collision with or other injury to other persons thereon. It cannot be stated in rules, but is a general duty to observe in speed, vigilance, etc., what due and ordinary care may require under the circumstances of the particular case. A few general rules, however, may be stated; as that meeting vehicles should each turn to the right of the center of the road (28 Mich. 32; 195 Pa. St. 190), though nonobservance may be justified by circumstances (9 App. Div. [N. Y.] 68), and the rule does not apply as between vehicles and pedestrians (147 Mo. 679).

LAW OF THE STAPLE. See "Law Merchant."

LAW SPIRITUAL. The ecclesiastical law, or law Christian. Co. Litt. 344.

LAW WORTHY. Being entitled to, or having the benefit and protection of, the law.

LAWFUL. Legal; that which is not contrary to law; that which is sanctioned or permitted by law; that which is in accordance with law. The terms "lawful," "unlawful," and "illegal" are used with reference to that which is in its substance sanctioned or prohibited by the law. The term "legal" is occasionally used with reference to matters of form alone. Thus, an oral agreement to convey land, though void by law, is not properly to be said to be unlawful, because there is no violation of law in making or in performing such an agreement; but it is said to be not legal, or not in lawful form, because the law will not enforce it, for want of that written evidence required in such cases.

LAWFUL AGE. Majority; usually the age of twenty-one years.

LAWFUL MAN. A freeman, unattainted, and capable of bearing oath; a legalis homo.

LAWFUL MONEY. Money which is a legal tender in payment of debts; e. g., gold and silver coined at the mint. 2 Salk. 446; 5 Mod. 7; 3 Ind. 358; 2 How. (U. S.) 244; 3 How. (U. S.) 717; 16 Ark. 83. See 1 Hempst. (U. S.) 236.

LAWING OF DOGS. Mutilating the forefeet of mastiffs, to prevent them from running after deer. 3 Bl. Comm. 71.

LAWLESS COURT. An ancient local English court, said to have been held in Essex once a year, at cock crowing, without a light or pen and ink, and conducted in a whisper.

LAWLESS MAN. An outlaw.

LAWS OF OLERON. A maritime code said to have been drawn up by Richard I. at the Isle of Oleron, whence its name. See Fed. Cas. vol. 30, Appendix, for a copy.

LAWSUIT. An action at law, or litigation.

LAWYER. One skilled in the law.

A popular term for a person engaged in the practice of law. See "Attorney."

LAY.

——In English Law. That which relates to persons or things not ecclesiastical. In the United States, the people are not by law divided, as in England, into ecclesiastical and lay. The law makes no distinction between them.

——In Pleading. To state or to allege. The place from whence a jury are to be summoned is called the "venue," and the allegation in the declaration of the place where the jury is to be summoned is, in technical language, said to "lay the venue." 3 Steph. Comm. 574; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2826. To state at the conclusion of a declaration the amount of damages which the plaintiff claims is to "lay damages."

LAY CORPORATION. A corporation composed of lay persons, or for lay purposes. Angell & A. Corp. 28-30; 1 Bl. Comm. 470.

LAY DAMAGES. See "Lay."

LAY DAYS. In maritime law. The time allowed to the master of a vessel for loading and unloading the same. In the absence of any custom to the contrary, Sundays are to be computed in the calculation of lay days at the port of discharge. 10 Mees. & W. 331. See 3 Esp. 121. See "Demurrage."

LAY FEE. A fee held by ordinary feudal tenure, as distinguished from the ecclesiastical tenure of frankalmoign, by which an ecclesiastical corporation held of donor. The tenure of frankalmoign is reserved by St. 12 Car. II., which abolished military tenures. 1 Bl. Comm. 101.

LAY IMPROPRIATOR. Lay rector, to whom the greater tithes are reserved, the lesser going to the vicar. 1 Burn, Ecc. Law, 75, 76.

LAY OUT. This has always been regarded as an appropriate expression for the location and establishment of a highway. 133 Mass. 329.

LAY PEOPLE. Jurymen. Finch, Law, 381.

LAYING THE VENUE. See "Lay."

LAYMAN. In ecclesiastical law. One who is not an ecclesiastic nor a clergyman.

LAZARET, or LAZARETTO. A place, selected by public authority, where vessels coming from infected or unhealthy countries are required to perform quarantine.

LE CONGRES. A species of proof on charges of impotency in France, coitus coram testibus. Abolished A. D. 1677. Rapalje & L.

LE CONTRAT FAIT LA LOI. The contract makes the law.

LE GUIDON (or LE GUIDON DE LA MER). The title of a celebrated French treatise on the law of insurance, being the earliest work extant on that subject. It was prepared for the use of the merchants of Rouen at least as early as the sixteenth century, but its author's name has not been preserved. It was published by Cleirac in 1671, in his collection entitled Les Us et Coutumes de la Mer. 3 Kent, Comm. 346; 1 Duer, Ins. Introd. Disc. Lect. ii.

LE LEY DE DIEU ET LE LEY DE TERre sont tout un, et l'un et l'autre preferre et favour le common et publique bien del terre. The law of God and the law of the land are all one, and both preserve and favor the common and public good of the land. Kellw. 191.

LE LEY EST LE PLUS HAUT ENHERItance que le roy ad, car par le ley, il mesme et touts ses sujets sont rules, et si le ley ne fuit, nul roy ne nul enheritance serra. The law is the highest inheritance that the king possesses; for by the law both he and all his subjects are ruled; and, if there were no law, there would be neither king nor inheritance.

LE ROI LE VEUT. The king assents. This is the formula used in England, and formerly in France, when the king approved of a bill passed by the legislature. 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 52.

LE ROI S'AVISERA. The king will consider of it. This phrase is used by the English monarch when he gives his dissent to an act passed by the lords and commons. The same formula was used by the late king of the French for the same purpose. 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 52. See "Veto."

LE ROI VEUT EN DELIBERER. The king will deliberate on it. This is the formula which the late French king used when he intended to veto an act of the legislative assembly. 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 42.

LE ROY (or LA REINE) REMERCIE SES loyal sujets, accepte leur benevolence, et aussi le veut (Law Fr.) The king (or queen) thanks his (or her) loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and wills it to be so. The form of the royal assent to a bill of supply. 1 Bl. Comm. 184.

LEADING A USE. A term applied to deeds declaring the use of a fine; i. e., specifying to whose use the fine shall inure before the fine is levied. 2 Bl. Comm. 363. See "Deed."

LEADING CASE. A case decided by a court of last resort, which decides some particular point in question, and to which reference is constantly or frequently made, for the purpose of determining the law in similar questions.

Many elements go to the constitution of a case as a leading case, among which are the priority of the case, the character of the court, the amount of consideration given to the question, the freedom from collateral matters or questions. The term is applied to cases as leading either in a particular state, or at common law. A very convenient means of digesting the law upon any subject is found to be the selection of a leading case upon the subject, and an arrangement of authorities illustrating the questions decided. See Bennett & H. Lead. Cr. Cas.; Smith, Lead. Cas.; Hare & W. Sel. Dec.; White & T. Lead. Cas.; and a variety of others.

LEADING COUNSEL. That one of two or more counsel employed on the same side in a cause who has the principal management of the cause. So called as distinguished from the other, who is called the "junior counsel."

LEADING QUESTION. In practice. A question which puts into the witness' mouth the words to be echoed back, or plainly suggests the answer which the party wishes to get from him. 7 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 171; 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 247. In that case the examiner is said to lead him to the answer. It is not always easy to determine what is or is not a leading question.

These questions cannot, in general, be put to a witness in his examination in chief. 3 Bin. (Pa.) 130; 6 Bin. (Pa.) 483; 1 Phil. Ev. 221; 1 Starkie, Ev. 123. But, in an examination in chief, questions may be put to lead the mind of the witness to the subject of inquiry; and they are allowed when it appears the witness wishes to conceal the truth, or to favor the opposite party, or where, from the nature of the case, the mind of the witness cannot be directed to the subject of inquiry without a particular specification of such subject. 1 Campb. 43; 1 Starkie, 100.

In cross-examinations, the examiner has generally the right to put leading questions. 1 Starkie, Ev. 132; 3 Chit. Prac. 892; Rosc. Civ. Ev. 94; 3 Bouv. Inst. notes 3203, 3204.

LEAGUE. A measure of length, which consists of three geographical miles. The jurisdiction of the United States extends into the sea a marine league. See Acts Congress June 5, 1794 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 352), and April 20, 1818 (3 Story, U. S. Laws, 1694); 1 Wait, State Papers, 195.

——In Criminal Law. A conspiracy to do an unlawful act. The term is but little used.

——In International Law. An agreement between states. Leagues between states are of several kinds: First, leagues offensive and defensive, by which two or more nations agree not only to defend each other, but to carry on war against their common enemies. Second, defensive, but not offensive, obliging each to defend the other against any foreign invasion. Third, leagues of simple amity, by which one contracts not to invade, injure, or offend the other. This usually includes the liberty of mutual commerce and trade, and the safeguard of merchants and traders in each other's domain. Bac. Abr. "Prerogative" (D 4). See "Confederacy;" "Conspiracy;" "Truce;" "War."

LEAKAGE. The waste which has taken place in liquids, by their escaping out of the casks or vessels in which they were kept.

By Act March 2, 1799, § 59 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 625), it is provided that there be an allowance of two per cent. for leakage on the quantity which shall appear by the gauge to be contained in any cask of liquors subject to duty by the gallon, and ten per cent. on all beer, ale, and porter in bottles, and five per cent. on all other liquors in bottles, to be deducted from the invoice quantity, in lieu of breakage; or it shall be lawful to compute the duties on the actual quantity, to be ascertained by tale, at the option of the importer, to be made at the time of entry.

LEAL. Loyal; that which belongs to the law.

LEALTE (Law Fr.) Legality; the condition of a legalis homo, or lawful man. LL. Gul. Conq. lib. 16.

LEAP YEAR. See "Bissextile."

LEARNED IN THE LAW. A qualification usually prescribed by statute for judges and district attorneys. Admission to the bar is the only and conclusive test of legal learning within such a requirement. 12 S. D. 16.

LEASE. A contract by which a person owning or controlling lands or tenements permits another to occupy the same for a period less than that to which the right of the lessor extends. The person so permitting the occupation of premises is called the "lessor;" the person contracting for possession is called the "lessee." Regarded with respect not to the making of the lease, but of the relation created thereby, the parties are known respectively as "landlord" and "tenant."

LEASE AND RELEASE. A species of conveyance much used in England, consisting theoretically of two instruments, but which are practically united in the same instrument.

It was invented by Sergeant Moore, soon after the enactment of the statute of uses. It is thus contrived: A lease, or rather bargain and sale upon some pecuniary consideration for one year, is made by the tenant of the freehold to the lessee or bargainee. This, without any enrollment, makes the bargainor stand seised to the use of the bargainee, and vests in the bargainee the use of the term for one year, and then the statute immediately annexes the possession. Being thus in possession, he is capable of receiving a release of the freehold and reversion, which must be made to the tenant in possession, and accordingly the next day a release is granted to him.

The lease and release, when used as a conveyance of the fee, have the joint operation of a single conveyance. 2 Bl. Comm. 339; 4 Kent, Comm. 482; Co. Litt. 207; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 11.

LEASEHOLD. The estate held by virtue of a lease.

For the various kinds of leasehold estates, see "Tenancy."

LEASING MAKING. In Scotch law. Verbal sedition, viz., slanderous and untrue speeches to the disdain, reproach, and contempt of his majesty, his council and proceedings, etc. Bell, Dict.; Ersk. Inst. 4. 4. 29.

LEAUTE (Law Fr.) Legality; sufficiency in law. Britt. c. 109.

LEAVE. To give or dispose of by will. "The word 'leave,' as applied to the subject matter, prima facie means a disposition by will." 10 East, 438.

LEAVE AND LICENSE. A defense to an action in trespass setting up the consent of the plaintiff to the trespass complained of.

LEAVE OF COURT. Permission granted by the court to do something which, without such permission, would not be allowable.

LECHERWITE, LAIRWITE, or LEGERwite. A fine for adultery or fornication, anciently paid to the lords of certain manors. 4 Inst. 206.

LECTOR DE LETRA ANTIQUA. In Spanish law. The person duly authorized by the government to read and decipher ancient documents and titles, in order to entitle them to legal effect in courts of justice.

The importance of the functions of this officer caused the queen of Spain to issue an ordinance on the 2d of July, 1838, ordering that no person should be permited to exercise it unless he justified, first, that he was a man of good character; second, that he was twenty-five years of age, and submitted to a strict examination, justifying that he was acquainted with the Latin language, and especially with the idioms of it used in writings and documents of the middle ages, also with the Romance or ancient Castilian, the Limousin, used in the ancient provinces of Arragon, paleology, Spanish history and chronology; and, third, that he could decipher the ancient manuscripts preserved in the archives of Spain, the ancient modes of writing, and the changes introduced in it by time. This examination to be conducted under the superintendence of the Chefe Politico, and the proces verbal forwarded to the queen, together with the observations of the board of examiners. Escriche, Dic. Raz.

LEDGER BOOK. In ecclesiastical law. The name of a book kept in the prerogative courts in England. It is considered as a roll of the court, but, it seems, it cannot be read in evidence. Bac. Abr.

LEDGREVIUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. A lathe reeve, or chief officer of a lathe. Spelman.

LEET. In English law. The name of a court of criminal jurisdiction, formerly of much importance, but latterly fallen into disuse. See "Court Leet."

LEGA (Law Lat.) In old English law. The alloy of money. Cowell; Blount.

A termination of the names of places in old records, supposed by Spelman to signify "place."

LEGABILIS. In old English law. That which may be bequeathed. Cowell.

LEGACY. A gift by last will. The term is more commonly applied to money or personal property, although sometimes used with reference to a charge upon real estate. 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 947; 5 Term R. 716; 1 Burrows, 268; 7 Ves. 391, 522.

——Absolute Legacy. One given without condition, to vest immediately. 1 Vern. 254; 2 Vern. 181; 5 Ves. 461; 19 Ves. 86; Comyn, Dig. "Chancery" (I 4).

——Additional Legacy. One given to a legatee to whom a legacy has already been given. It may be either by an increase in a codicil of a prior legacy given in the will, or by another legacy added to that already given by the will. 6 Mod. 31; 2 Ves. Jr. 449; 3 Mer. 154.

——Alternative Legacy. One by which the testator gives one of two or more things, without designating which.

——Conditional Legacy. A bequest whose existence depends upon the happening or not happening of some uncertain event, by which it is either to take place or be defeated. 1 Rop. Leg. (3d Ed.) 645.

——Demonstrative Legacy. A bequest of a certain sum of money with reference to a particular fund for payment. Williams, Ex'rs, 995.

——General Legacy. One so given as not to amount to a bequest of a particular thing or money of the testator, distinguished from all others of the same kind. 1 Rop. Leg. (3d Ed.) 170.

——Indefinite Legacy. A bequest of things which are not enumerated or ascertained as to numbers or quantities; as, a bequest by a testator of all his goods, all his stocks in the funds. Lowndes, Leg. 84; Swinb. Wills, 485; Ambl. 641; 1 P. Wms. 697.

——Lapsed Legacy. One which, in consequence of the death of the legatee before the testator, or before the period for vesting, has never vested.

——Legacy for Life. One in which the legatee is to enjoy the use of the legacy for life.

——Model Legacy. A bequest accompanied with directions as to the mode in which it should be applied for the legatee's benefit; for example, a legacy to Titius to put him an apprentice. 2 Vern. 431; Lowndes, Leg. 151.

——Pecuniary Legacy. One of money. Pecuniary legacies are most usually general legacies, but there may be a specific pecuniary legacy; for example, of the money in a certain bag. 1 Rop. Leg. 150, note.

——Residuary Legacy. A bequest of all the testator's personal estate not otherwise effectually disposed of by his will. Lowndes, Leg. 10; Bac. Abr. "Legacies" (I).

——Specific Legacy. A bequest of a specified part of the testator's personal estate, distinguished from all others of the same kind. 3 Beav. Rolls, 349.

LEGAL. Opposed (1) to that which is unlawful; (2) to that which is equitable; (3) to that which is actual. See "In Law."

As a prefix, it ordinarily implies sufficient in point of law; thus, legal consideration, legal debts, legal defenses, etc.

LEGAL ASSETS. Such property of a testator in the hands of his executor as is liable to debts in temporal courts, and to legacies in the spiritual by course of law. Equitable assets are such as are liable only by help of a court of equity. 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1408-1431 (Am. Notes). No such distinction exists in Pennsylvania. 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 347. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 551; 2 Jarm. Wills, 543.

LEGAL ESTATE. One the right to which may be enforced in a court of law.

It is distinguished from an equitable estate, the right to which can be established only in a court of equity. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1688.

The party who has the legal title has alone the right to seek a remedy for a wrong to his estate, in a court of law, though he may have no beneficial interest in it. The equitable owner is he who has not the legal estate, but is entitled to the beneficial interest.

The person who holds the legal estate for the benefit of another is called a "trustee." He who has the beneficiary interest and does not hold the legal title is called the "beneficiary," or, more technically, the cestui que trust.

When the trustee has a claim, he must enforce his right in a court of equity, for he cannot sue any one at law in his own name (1 East, 497; 8 Term R. 332; 1 Saund. 158, note 1; 2 Bing. 20), still less can he in such court sue his own trustee (1 East, 497).

LEGAL INTEREST. That rate of interest which is allowed by law in the absence of an express contract.

LEGAL MALICE. Constructive or implied malice. See "Malice."

LEGAL MEMORY. See "Memory."

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE. Sometimes used for "personal representative" (q. v.)

LEGAL REVERSION. In Scotch law. The period within which a proprietor is at liberty to redeem land adjudged from him for debt. Bell, Dict.

LEGAL TENDER. Lawful money which may be tendered in payment of debt. Under the laws of the United States, gold coin is full legal tender, silver coin is legal tender in payments of not to exceed five dollars, the minor coins in payments not to exceed twenty-five cents. Treasury notes, etc., are full legal tender except in payment of duties on imports and interest on the public debt. Rev. St. U. S., § 3584 et seq.

LEGALIS HOMO (Lat.) A person who possesses all his civil rights; a lawful man; one who stands rectus in curia, not outlawed nor infamous. In this sense are the words probi et legales homines.

LEGALIS MONETA ANGLIAE. Lawful money of England. 1 Inst. 207.

LEGALITY, or LEGALNESS. Lawfulness.

LEGALIZATION. The act of making lawful.

By legalization is also understood the act by which a judge or competent officer authenticates a record, or other matter, in order that the same may be lawfully read in evidence. See 102 Mass. 127.

LEGALLY. See "Legal."

LEGANTINE CONSTITUTIONS. The name of a code of ecclesiastical laws, enacted in national synods, held under legates from Popes Gregory IX. and Clement IV., in the reign of Hen. III., about the years 1220 and 1268. 1 Bl. Comm. 83. Burn says, 1237 and 1268. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 30d.

LEGARE (Lat.) In the civil and old English law. To bequeath; to leave or give by will; to give in anticipation of death. In Scotch phrase, to legate. Bracton, fol. 18b. Applied to real, as well as personal, property.

LEGATARY. One to whom anything is bequeathed; a legatee. This word is sometimes, though seldom, used to designate a legate or nuncio.

LEGATEE. The person to whom a legacy is given. See "Legacy."

LEGATES. Legates are extraordinary ambassadors sent by the pope to Catholic countries to represent him, and to exercise his jurisdiction. They are distinguished from the ambassadors of the pope who are sent to other powers.

Legates a latere hold the first rank among those who are honored by a legation. They are always chosen from the college of cardinals, and are called a latere, in imitation of the magistrates of ancient Rome, who were taken from the court, or side of the emperor.

Legati missi are simple envoys.

Legati nati are those who are entitled to be legates by birth. See "A Latere."

LEGATION. An embassy; a mission. All persons attached to a foreign legation, lawfully acknowledged by the government of this country, whether they are ambassadors, envoys, ministers, or attaches, are protected by the act of April 30, 1790 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 83), from violence, arrest, or molestation. 1 Dall. (Pa.) 117; 1 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 232; 2 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 435; 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 531; 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 467; 1 Miles (Pa.) 366; 1 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 217; 1 Baldw. (U. S.) 240; Wheat. Int. Law, 167. See "Ambassador;" "Arrest;" "Privilege."

LEGATORY. The third part of a freeman's personal estate, which by the custom of London, in case he had a wife and children, the freeman might always have disposed of by will. Bac. Abr. "Customs of London" (D 4).

LEGATOS VIOLARE CONTRA JUS GENtium est. It is contrary to the law of nations to do violence to ambassadors. Branch. Princ.

LEGATUM.

——In Civil Law. A legacy; a gift left by will. Dig. 3136. A gift left by a deceased person to be executed by the heir. Inst. 2. 20. 1.

——In Common Law. A legacy.

——In Old Ecclesiastical Law. A soul scot or a gift to the church. Cowell.

LEGATUM MORTE TESTATORIS TANtum confirmatur, sicut donatio inter vivos traditione sola. A legacy is confirmed by the death of the testator, in the same manner as a gift from a living person is by delivery alone. Dyer, 143.

LEGATUS, REGIS VICE FUNGITUR A quo destinatur, et honorandus est sicut ille cujus vicem gerit. An ambassador fills the place of the king by whom he is sent, and is to be honored as he is whose place he fills. 12 Coke, 17.

LEGEM AMITTERE. To lose one's law; to become infamous or outlaw.

LEGEM ENIM CONTRACTUS DAT. The contract makes the law. 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 215, 233.

LEGEM FACERE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To make law, or oath. Legem vadiare, to wage law. Legem habere, to have law; to be capable of giving evidence upon oath. Legem amittere, to lose the law, or privilege of being admitted to oath. Legem terrae amittentes perpetuam infamiae notam inde merito incurrunt, they who lose the lex terrae (law of the land) justly incur therefor the perpetual brand of infamy. 3 Inst. 221. In Branch's Maxims, the peculiar meaning of lex terrae, in this passage, has been misapprehended.

LEGEM FERRE (Lat.) In the Roman law. To propose a law to the people for their adoption. Heinec. Ant. Rom. lib. 1, tit. 2; Tayl. Civ. Law, 9.

LEGEM HABERE. To have one's law; to be a legal person.

LEGEM JUBERE (or SCISCERE). In the Roman law. To give consent and authority to a proposed law; to make or pass it. Tayl. Civ. Law, 9.

LEGEM TERRAE AMITTENTES PERpetuam infamiae notam inde merito incurrunt. Those who do not preserve the law of the land, thence justly incur the ineffaceable brand of infamy. 3 Inst. 221.

LEGEM VADIRRE. To wage one's law.

LEGES (Lat.)

——In Civil Law. Laws proposed by a magistrate of the senate, and adopted by the whole people in comitia centuriata. See "Populiscitum;" "Lex."

——In English Law. Laws.

Leges scriptae, written or statute laws.

Leges non scriptae, unwritten or customary laws; the common law, including general customs, or the common law, properly so called; and also particular customs of certain parts of the kingdom, and those particular laws that are, by custom, observed only in certain courts and jurisdictions. 1 Bl. Comm. 67. "These parts of law are therefore styled leges non scriptae, because their original institution and authority are not set down in writing, as acts of parliament are, but they receive their binding power and the force of laws by long and immemorial usage." 1 Steph. Comm. 40, 66. It is not to be understood, however, that they are merely oral, for they have come down to us in reports and treatises.

LEGES ANGLIAE SUNT TRIPARTITAE: jus commune, consuetudines, ac decreta comitiorum. The laws of England are threefold: Common law, customs, and decrees of parliament.

LEGES FIGENDI ET REFIGENDI CONsuetudo est periculosissima. The custom of making and unmaking laws is a most dangerous one. 4 Coke, pref.

LEGES HUMANAE NASCUNTUR, VIvunt, et moriuntur. Human laws are born, live, and die. 7 Coke, 25; 2 Atk. 674; 11 C. B. 767; 1 Bl. Comm. 89.

LEGES NATURAE PERFECTISSIMAE sunt et immutabiles; humani vero juris conditio semper in infinitum decurrit, et nihil est in eo quod perpetuo stare possit. Leges humanae nascuntur, vivunt, mortiuntur. The laws of nature are most perfect and immutable; but the condition of human law is an unending succession, and there is nothing in it which can continue perpetually. Human laws are born, live, and die. 7 Coke, 25.

LEGES NON VERBIS SED REBUS SUNT impositae. Laws are imposed on things, not words. 10 Coke, 101.

LEGES POSTERIORES PRIORES CONtrarias abrogant. Subsequent laws repeal prior conflicting ones. 2 Rolle, 410; 11 Coke, 626, 630.

LEGES SUUM LIGENT LATOREM. Laws should bind the proposers of them. Fleta, bk. 1, c. 17, § 11.

LEGES TABELLARIAE (Lat.) Roman laws regulating the mode of voting by ballot (tabella). 1 Kent, Comm. 232, note.

LEGES VIGILANTIBUS, NON DORMIENtibus subveniunt. The laws aid the vigilant, not the negligent. Fanning; Dunham; 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 122, 145; Toole; Cook; 16 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 142, 144.

LEGIBUS SOLUTUS (Lat.) Released from the laws; not bound by the laws. An expression applied in the Roman civil law to the emperor. Calv. Lex.; 3 Gibb. Rom. Emp. 157.

LEGIBUS SUMPTIS DESINENTIBUS, lege naturae utendum est. When laws imposed by the state fail, we must act by the law of nature. 2 Rolle, 298.

LEGIS CONSTRUCTIO NON FACIT INjuriam. The construction of law does no wrong. Co. Litt. 183.

LEGIS INTERPRETATIO LEGIS VIM OBtinet. The construction of law obtains the force of law. Branch, Princ.

LEGIS MINISTER NON TENETUR, IN executione officii sui, fugere aut retrocedere. The minister of the law is not bound, in the execution of his office, either to fly or retreat. 6 Coke, 68.

LEGISLATIVE POWER. The authority, under the constitution, to make laws, and to alter or repeal them.

LEGISLATOR. One who makes laws; a member of the legislature (q. v.)

LEGISLATORUM EST VIVA VOX, REbus et non verbis, legem imponere. The voice of legislators is a living voice, to impose laws on things, and not on words. 10 Coke, 101.

LEGISLATURE. That body of men in the state which has the power of making laws.

LEGISPERITUS (Law Lat.) A person skilled or learned in the law; a lawyer or advocate. Feud. lib. 2, tit. 1.

LEGIT UT CLERICUS. He reads as a clerk. The answer made by the ordinary to the question legit vel non, importing that the prisoner could read, and was entitled to benefit of clergy. Dyer, 205.

LEGIT VEL NON? Does he read or not? The question asked of the ordinary on the trial, whether a prisoner claiming benefit of clergy could read. 1 Salk. 61.

LEGITIM (called, otherwise, "Bairn's Part of Gear"). In Scotch law. The legal share of father's free movable property, due on his death to his children. If widow and children are left, it is one-third; if children alone, one-half. Ersk. Inst. 3. 9. 20; 4 Bell, H. L. Sc. 286.

LEGITIMACY. The state of being born in wedlock; that is, in a lawful manner.

LEGITIMATE. That which is according to law; as, legitimate children are lawful children, born in wedlock, in contradistinction to bastards; legitimate authority, or lawful power, in opposition to usurpation.

LEGITIMATION. The act of giving the character of legitimate children to those who were not so born.

LEGITIMATION PER SUBSEQUENS matrimonium. The legitimation of a bastard by the subsequent marriage of his parents. Bell, Dict.

LEGITIME. In civil law. That portion of a parent's estate of which he cannot disinherit his children without a legal cause.

The Civil Code of Louisiana declares that donations inter vivos or mortis causa cannot exceed two-thirds of the property of the disposer, if he leaves at his decease a legitimate child; one-half if he leaves two children; and one-third if he leaves three, or a greater number. Under the name of "children" are included descendants of whatever degree they may be. It must be understood that they are only counted for the child they represent. Civ. Code La. art. 1480.

LEGITIME IMPERANTI PARERE NECESSE EST. One who commands lawfully must be obeyed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 120.

LEGITIMUS. Lawful; legitimate. Legitimus haeres et filius est quem nuptiae demonstrant, a lawful son and heir is he whom the marriage points out to be lawful. Bracton, fol. 63.

LEGO (Lat.) In Roman law. I bequeath. A common term in wills. Dig. 30. 36. 81, et seq.

LEGULEIUS (Lat.) A person skilled in law (in legibus versatus); one versed in the forms of law. Calv. Lex; Cicero de Orat. i. 55.

LEIDGREVE. In Saxon law. An officer who had jurisdiction over a lathe. Cowell.

LEIPA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A fugitive or runaway. LL. Hen. I. c. 43. Spelman. Possibly the root of "elope."

LENDER. He from whom a thing is borrowed; the bailor of an article loaned.

LEOD (Saxon). People; a people; a nation. Spelman, voc. "Leodes."

LEODES (Law Lat.; from Saxon leod). In old European law. A vassal, or liege man (vassallus; homo ligeus). Spelman.

Service (servitium). Id.; Marculf. lib. 1, form. 40.

A were or weregild (wera, wergildum). Spelman.

LEOHT GESCEOT. A tax for lighting the church.

LEONINA SOCIETAS (Lat.) An attempted partnership, in which one party was to bear all the losses, and have no share in the profits. This was a void partnership in Roman law; and, apparently, it would also be void as a partnership in English law, as being inherently inconsistent with the notion of partnership. Dig. 17. 2. 29. 2; Brown.

LEPROSO AMOVENDO. A writ which anciently lay to remove a leper who attended at church or public meetings, to the danger and annoyance of the inhabitants.

LES FICTIONS NAISSENT DE LA LOI, et non la loi des fictions. Fictions arise from the law, and not law from fictions.

LES LOIS NE SE CHARGENT DE PUNIR que les actions exterieures. Laws do not undertake to punish other than outward actions. Montesq. Esp. de Lois, bk. 12, c. 11; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 279.

LESION. In civil law. A term used to signify the injury suffered, in consequence of inequality of situation, by one who does not receive a full equivalent for what he gives in a commutative contract.

The remedy given for this injury is founded on its being the effect of implied error or imposition; for in every commutative contract equivalents are supposed to be given and received. Code La. art. 1854. Persons of full age, however, are not allowed, in point of law, to object to their agreements as being injurious, unless the injury be excessive. Poth. Obl. p. 1, c. 1, sec. 1, art. 3, § 4. But minors are admitted to restitution, not only against any excessive inequality, but against any inequality whatever. Id. § 5; Code La. art. 1858. See "Fraud;" "Guardian;" "Sale."

LESPEGEND (Saxon). A lesser thane or baron. Const. Canuti Regis de Foresta, art. 2. Spelman prefers to write it "lesthegen."

LESSEE. He to whom a lease is made; he who holds an estate by virtue of a lease. See "Lease."

LESSOR. He who grants a lease. See "Lease."

LESTAGE, or LASTAGE (Saxon last, burden). A custom for carrying things in fairs and markets. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47; Termes de la Ley.

LET. Hindrance; obstacle; obstruction. To lease; to grant the use and possession of a thing for compensation. It is the correlative of "hire." See "Hire."

LETRADO (Spanish). In Spanish law. An advocate. White's New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 1, c. 1, § 3, note.

LETTER. He who, being the owner of a thing, lets it out to another for hire or compensation. Story, Bailm. § 369. See "Hire."

LETTER CARRIER. A person employed to carry letters from the post office to the persons to whom they are addressed. Provisions are made by the act of March 3, 1851 (11 U. S. St. at Large, 591), for the appointment of letter carriers in cities and towns, and by chapter 21, § 2, of the same act, for letter carriers in Oregon and California.

LETTER MISSIVE. In English law. A request addressed to a peer, peeress, or lord of parliament, against whom a bill has been filed, desiring the defendant to appear and answer to the bill. It is issued by the lord chancellor, on petition, after the filing of the bill; and a neglect to attend to this places the defendant, in relation to such suit, on the same ground as other defendants who are not peers, and a subpoena may then issue. Newland, Prac. 9; 2 Madd. Ch. Prac. 196; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 16.

LETTER OF ADVICE. A letter containing information of any circumstances unknown to the person to whom it is written; generally informing him of some commercial transaction by the writer of the letter.

It is usual and perfectly proper for the drawer of a bill of exchange to write a letter of advice to the drawee, as well to prevent fraud or alteration of the bill, as to let the drawee know what provision has been made for the payment of the bill. Chit. Bills, 185.

LETTER OF ADVOCATION. In Scotch law. The decree or warrant of the supreme court or court of sessions, discharging the inferior tribunal from all further proceedings in the matter, and advocating the action to itself. This proceeding is similar to a certiorari issuing out of a superior court for the removal of a cause from an inferior.

LETTER OF ATTORNEY. A written instrument, by which one or more persons, called the "constituents," authorize one or more other persons, called the "attorneys," to do some lawful act by the latter for or instead, and in the place, of the former. 1 Moody, C. C. 52, 70. It may be parol or under seal. See "Power of Attorney."

LETTER OF CREDENCE. In international law. A written instrument addressed by the sovereign or chief magistrate of a state to the sovereign or state to whom a public minister is sent, certifying his appointment as such, and the general object of his mission, and requesting that full faith and credit may be given to what he shall do and say on the part of his court.

When it is given to an ambassador, envoy, or minister accredited to a sovereign, it is addressed to the sovereign or state to whom the minister is delegated. In the case of a charge d'affaires, it is addressed by the secretary or minister of state charged with the department of foreign affairs to the minister of foreign affairs of the other government. Wheat. Int. Law, pt. 3, c. 1, § 7; Wicq. de l'Ambassadeur. lib. 1, § 15.

LETTER OF CREDIT. A letter whereby one person requests another to advance money or give credit to a third, and agrees to reimburse or indemnify the person making the advance, or giving the credit.

At first it was practically confined to merchants, and was designed to enable a merchant to obtain goods or money to buy the same.

In modern times it is much used as a convenience by travelers in foreign parts to avoid carrying large sums of money; a sum being deposited with a bank, which issues a letter of credit to its correspondents in foreign parts.

Letters of credit are special if addressed to some particular person; general if addressed to any one giving credit to the bearer.

LETTER OF LICENSE. An instrument or writing made by creditors to their insolvent debtor, by which they bind themselves to allow him a longer time than he had a right to, for the payment of his debts, and that they will not arrest or molest him in his person or property till after the expiration of such additional time.

LETTER OF MARQUE AND REPRISAL. A commission granted by the government to a private individual, to take the property of a foreign state, or of the citizens or subjects of such state, as a reparation for an injury committed by such state, its citizens or subjects. A vessel loaded with merchandise, on a voyage to a friendly port, but armed for its own defense in case of attack by an enemy, is also called a "letter of marque." 1 Boul. P. Dr. Com. tit. 3, § 2, p. 300.

By the constitution (article 1, § 8, cl. 11), congress have power to grant letters of marque and reprisal. See Chit. Law Nat. 73; 1 Bl. Comm. 251; Viner, Abr. "Prerogative" (B 4); Comyn, Dig. "Prerogative" (B 4); Molloy, bk. 1, c. 2, § 10; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 440; 2 C. Rob. Adm. 224; 5 C. Rob. Adm. 9, 260. And see "Reprisal."

LETTER OF RECALL. A written document addressed by the executive of one government to the executive of another, informing the latter that a minister sent by the former to him has been recalled.

LETTER OF RECOMMENDATION. An instrument given by one person to another, addressed to a third, in which the bearer is represented as worthy of credit. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 371; 3 Term R. 51; 7 Cranch (U. S.) 69; Fell, Guar. c. 8; 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 181; 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 224; 1 Day (Conn.) 22. See "Recommendation."

LETTER OF RECREDENTIALS. A document delivered to a minister by the secretary of state of the government to which he was accredited. It is addressed to the executive of the minister's country. This is in reply to the "letter of recall."

LETTERS. Epistles; despatches; written messages, usually on paper, folded up and sealed, and sent by one person to another. 1 Caines (N. Y.) 582.

LETTERS AD COLLIGENDUM BONA DEfuncti. In practice. In default of the representatives and creditors to administer to the estate of an intestate, the officer entitled to grant letters of administration may grant, to such person as he approves, "letters to collect the goods of the deceased," which neither make him executor nor administrator; his only business being to collect the goods, and keep them in his safe-custody 2 Bl. Comm. 505.

LETTERS CLOSE. Close letters are grants of the king, and, being of private concern, they are thus distinguished from "letters patent."

LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION. An instrument in writing, granted by the judge or officer having jurisdiction and power of granting such letters, thereby giving the administrator (naming him) "full power to administer the goods, chattels, rights, and credits, which were of the said deceased, in the county or district in which the said judge or officer has jurisdiction; as also to ask, collect, levy, recover, and receive the credits whatsoever of the said deceased, which at the time of his death were owing, or did in any way belong, to him, and to pay the debts in which the said deceased stood obliged, so far forth as the said goods and chattels, rights and credits, will extend, according to the rate and order of law." See "Letters Testamentary."

LETTERS OF FIRE AND SWORD. See "Fire and Sword."

LETTERS OF HORNING. See "Horning."

LETTERS OF REQUEST. In English ecclesiastical law. An instrument by which a judge of an inferior court waives or remits his own jurisdiction in favor of a court of appeal immediately superior to it.

Letters of request, in general, lie only where an appeal would lie, and lie only to the next immediate court of appeal, waiving merely the primary jurisdiction to the proper appellate court, except letters of request from the most inferior ecclesiastical court, which may be direct to the court of arches, although one or two courts of appeal may by this be ousted of their jurisdiction as courts of appeal. 2 Add. Ecc. 406. The effect of letters of request is to give jurisdiction to the appellate court in the first instance. See a form of letters of request in 2 Chit. Prac. 498, note (h).

LETTERS OF SAFE-CONDUCT. No subject of a nation at war with England can, by the law of nations, come into the realm, nor can travel himself upon the high seas, or send his goods and merchandise from one place to another, without danger of being seized, unless he has "letters of safe-conduct," which, by divers old statutes, must be granted under the great seal, and enrolled in chancery, or else are of no effect; the sovereign being the best judge of such emergencies as may deserve exemption from the general law of arms. But passports or licenses from the ambassadors abroad are now more usually obtained, and are allowed to be of equal validity. Wharton.

LETTERS OF SLAINS (or SLANES). Letters subscribed by the relatives of a person who had been slain, declaring that they had received an assythment, and concurring in an application to the crown for a pardon to the offender. These or other evidences of their concurrence were necessary to found the application. Bell, Dict.

LETTERS PATENT. The name of an instrument granted by the government to convey a right to the patentee; as, a patent for a tract of land; or to secure to him a right which he already possesses, as, a patent for a new invention or discovery. Letters patent are matter of record. They are so called because they are not sealed up, but are granted open. See "Patent."

LETTERS ROGATORY. An instrument sent in the name and by the authority of a judge or court to another, requesting the latter to cause to be examined, upon interrogatories filed in a cause depending before the former, a witness who is within the jurisdiction of the judge or court to whom such letters are addressed.

LETTERS TESTAMENTARY. The formal instrument in writing granted to an executor by the judge or officer having jurisdiction of the probate of wills, stating his appointment as executor, and authorizing him to proceed.

LETTING OUT. In American law. The act of awarding a contract.

This term is much used in the United States, and most frequently in relation to contracts to construct railroads, canals, or other mechanical works. When such an undertaking has reached the point of actual construction, a notice is generally given that proposals will be received until a certain period, and thereupon a letting out, or award of portions of the work to be performed according to the proposals, is made. See 35 Ala. (N. S.) 55.

LETTRE (Law Fr.) In old English law. A letter; conveyance or grant, so called from its form. A toutz ceux que ceste lettre verrount ou orrount, A. de B. salut: Saches moy aver done a P. etc. To all those who shall see or hear this letter, A. of B. greeting: Know that I have given to P., etc. Britt. c. 41.

LEUCA, LEUGA, or LEGA (Law Lat.)

——In Old French Law. A league, consisting of fifteen hundred paces. Spelman.

——In Old English Law. A league or mile of a thousand paces. Domesday Book; Spelman; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2, § 2.

A privileged space around a monastery of a league or mile in circuit. Spelman.

LEVANDAE NAVIS CAUSA (Lat.) In civil law. For the sake of lightening the ship. Goods thrown overboard with this purpose are subjects of a general average.

LEVANT ET COUCHANT (Law Fr.) Rising up and lying down. A term applied to trespassing cattle which have remained long enough upon land to have lain down to rest and risen up to feed, which, in general, is held to be a night and a day. 3 Bl. Comm. 9.

LEVANTES ET CUBANTES. Same as levant et couchant.

Applied by Bracton to villeins who lived on their lord's estate. Bracton, fol. 6b.

LEVARI FACIAS (Lat. that you cause to be levied).

——In Practice. A writ of execution directing the sheriff to cause to be made of the lands and chattels of the judgment debtor the sum recovered by the judgment.

Under this writ, the sheriff was to sell the goods and collect the rents, issues, and profits of the land in question. It has been generally superseded by the remedy by elegit, which was given by St. Westminster II. (13 Edw. I.) c. 18. In case, however, the judgment debtor is a clerk, upon the sheriff's return that he has no lay fee, a writ in the nature of a levari facias goes to the bishop of the diocese, who thereupon sends a sequestration of the profits of the clerk's benefice, directed to the church wardens, to collect and pay them to the plaintiff till the full sum be raised. Yet the same course is pursued upon a fi. fa. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 329. See 2 Tidd, Prac. 1042; Comyn, Dig. "Execution" (C 4); Finch, Law, 471; 3 Bl. Comm. 471.

——In American Law. A writ used to sell lands mortgaged, after a judgment has been obtained by the mortgagee, or his assignee, against the mortgagor, under a peculiar proceeding authorized by statute. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3396.

LEVARI FACIAS DAMNA DE DISSEISItoribus. A writ formerly directed to the sheriff for the levying of damages, which a disseisor had been condemned to pay to the disseisee. Cowell.

LEVARI FACIAS QUANDO VICECOMES returnavit quod non habuit emptores. An old writ commanding the sheriff to sell the goods of a debtor which he had already taken, and had returned that he could not sell them; and as much more of the debtor's goods as would satisfy the whole debt. Cowell.

LEVARI FACIAS RESIDUUM DEBITI. An old writ directed to the sheriff for levying the remnant of a partly-satisfied debt upon the lands and tenements or chattels of the debtor. Cowell.

LEVATO VELO (Lat.) An expression used in the Roman law (Code, 11. 4. 5), and applied to the trial of wreck and salvage. Commentators disagree about the origin of the expression, but all agree that its general meaning is that these causes shall be heard summarily. The most probable solution is that it refers to the place where causes were heard. A sail was spread before the door, and officers employed to keep strangers from the tribunal. When these causes were heard, this sail was raised, and suitors came directly to the court, and their causes were heard immediately. As applied to maritime courts, its meaning is that causes should be heard without delay. These causes require despatch, and a delay amounts practically to a denial of justice. Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 26, § 3.

LEVIABLE. That which may be levied.

LEVIR. A husband's brother. Vicat.

LEVITICAL DEGREES. Those degrees of kindred, set forth in the eighteenth chapter of Leviticus, within which persons are prohibited to marry.

LEVY. To raise. Webster. To levy a nuisance, i. e., to raise or do a nuisance (9 Coke, 55); to levy a fine, i. e., to raise or acknowledge a fine (2 Bl. Comm. 357; 1 Steph. Comm. 236); to levy a tax, i. e., to raise or collect a tax; to levy war, i. e., to raise or begin war, to take arms for attack (4 Bl. Comm. 81); to levy an execution, i. e., to raise or levy so much money on execution (Reg. Orig. 298).

——In Practice. The raising of the money for which an execution has been issued. The seizing of property under an execution.

LEVYING WAR. In criminal law. The assembling of a body of men for the purpose of effecting by force a treasonable object; and all who perform any part, however minute, or however remote from the scene of action, and who are leagued in the general conspiracy, are considered as engaged in levying war, within the meaning of the constitution. 4 Cranch (U. S.) 473, 474; Const. art. 3, § 3. See "Treason;" Fed. Cas. No. 14,692. This is a technical term, borrowed from the English law, and its meaning is the same as it is when used in St. 25 Edw. III. 4 Cranch (U. S.) 471; Hall, Law J. 351; 1 East, P. C. 62-77; Alis. Crim. Law. 606; 9 Car. & P. 129.

LEWDNESS. Licentiousness; an offense against the public economy, when of an open and notorious character; as, by frequenting houses of ill fame, which is an indictable offense, or by some grossly scandalous and public indecency, for which the punishment at common law is fine and imprisonment. The various acts which constituted lewdness at common law are now generally covered by a variety of statutory offenses, as "indecent exposure," "lascivious cohabitation," etc.

LEX (Lat.) The law; a law for the government of mankind in society. Among the ancient Romans this word was frequently used as synonymous with right, jus. When put absolutely, it means the law of the Twelve Tables.

larly the fragment of it on the subject of jettison (de jactu), preserved in the Pandects. Dig. 14. 2. 1; 3 Kent, Comm. 232, 233.

LEX SACRAMENTALIS. Purgation by oath. Leg. H. 1.

LEX SALICA. The Salic law; the law of the Salian Franks, a people of Germany who settled in Gaul in the fifth century. It is the oldest of the barbarian codes, being said to have been framed about A. D. 422. The most celebrated provision of this code, one excluding females from inheritance, is often referred to alone as the Salic law.

According to Spelman, many provisions of the laws of Henry I. were taken from this source.

LEX SCRIPTA SI CESSET, ID CUSTODIri oportet quod morbus et consuetudine inductum est; et, si qua in re hoc defecerit, tunc id quod proximum et consequens ei est; et, si id non appareat, tunc jus quo urbs Romana utitur servari oportet. If the written law be silent, that which is drawn from manners and custom ought to be observed; and, if that is in any manner defective, then that which is next and analogous to it; and, if that does not appear, then the law which Rome uses should be followed. 7 Coke, 19. This maxim of Lord Coke is so far followed at the present day that, in cases where there is no precedent of the English courts, the civil law is always heard with respect, and often, though not necessarily, followed. Wharton.

LEX SEMPER DABIT REMEDIUM. The law will always give a remedy. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2411; Bac. Abr. "Actions in General" (B); Branch, Princ.; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 181; 12 Adol. & E. 266; 7 Q. B. 451.

LEX SUCCURRIT IGNORANTI. The laws succor the ignorant. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 15.

LEX SUCCURRIT MINORIBUS. The law assists minors. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 57.

LEX TALIONIS (Lat.) The law of retaliation, an example of which is given in the law of Moses,—an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, etc.

Amicable retaliation includes those acts of retaliation which correspond to the acts of the other nation under similar circumstances.

Jurists and writers on international law are divided as to the right of one nation punishing with death, by way of retaliation, the citizens or subjects of another nation. In the United States, no example of such barbarity has ever been witnessed; but prisoners have been kept in close confinement in retaliation for the same conduct towards American prisoners. See Rutherforth, Inst. bk. 2, c. 9; Mart. Law Nat. bk. 8, c. 1, § 3, note; 1 Kent, Comm. 93; Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 4, c. 1, § 1.

Vindictive retaliation includes those acts which amount to a war.

LEX WALLENSICA. The Welsh law; the law of Wales. Blount.

LEX WISIGOTHORUM. The law of the Visigoths, or Western Goths, who settled in Spain; first reduced to writing A. D. 466. They were made by Euric, amended by Chindaswindus and Recaswindus. A revision of these laws was made by Egigas. Spelman.

LEY (Old Fr.; a corruption of loi). Law. For example, Termes de la Ley,—Terms of the Law. In another, and an old technical, sense, ley signifies an oath, or the oath with compurgators; as, il tend sa ley aiu pleyntiffe. Britt. c. 27.

LEY CIVILE. In old English law. The civil or Roman law. Y. B. H. 8 Edw. III. 42. Otherwise termed ley escripte, the written law. Y. B. 10 Edw. III. 24.

LEY GAGER. Wager of law; an offer to make an oath denying the cause of action of the plaintiff, confirmed by compurgators (q. v.), which oath used to be allowed in certain cases. When it was accomplished, it was called the "doing of the law," fesans de ley. Termes de la Ley, "Ley;" 2 Barn. & C. 538; 3 Bos. & P. 297; 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, § 16.

LEYES DE ESTILLO. In Spanish law. Laws of the age; a book of explanations of the Fuero Real, to the number of two hundred and fifty-two, formed under the authority of Alonzo X. and his son Sancho, and of Fernando el Emplazado, and published at the end of the thirteenth century or beginning of the fourteenth, and some of them are inserted in the New Recopilacion. See 1 White, New Recop. p. 354.

LEZE MAJESTY. An offense against sovereign power; treason; rebellion.

LIABILITY. Responsibility; the state of one who is bound in law and justice to do something which may be enforced by action. This liability may arise from contracts either express or implied, or in consequence of torts committed.

LIBEL.

——In Practice. A written statement by a plaintiff, in ecclesiastical and admiralty courts, of his cause of action, and of the relief he seeks to obtain in a suit. Law, Ecc. Law, 17; Ayliffe, Par. 346; Shelf. Mar. & Div. 506; Dunl. Adm. Prac. 111. It performs substantially the same office in the ecclesiastical courts, and those courts which follow the practice of the ecclesiastical courts, as the bill in chancery and the declaration in common-law practice.

——In Torts. That which is written or printed, and published, calculated to injure the character of another by bringing him into ridicule, hatred, or contempt. Parke, J., 15 Mees. & W. 344.

Everything, written or printed, which reflects on the character of another, and is published without lawful justification or excuse, is a libel, whatever the intention may have been. 15 Mees. & W. 437.

A malicious defamation, expressed either in printing or writing, or by signs or pictures, and tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the reputation of one who is alive, and expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. 1 Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 73, § 1; 4 Mass. 168; 2 Pick. (Mass.) 115; 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 214; 1 Denio (N. Y.) 347; 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 434; 9 Barn. & C. 172; 4 Man. & R. 127; 2 Kent, Comm. 13.

It has been defined, perhaps with more precision, to be a censorious or ridiculous writing, picture, or sign made with a malicious or mischievous intent towards government, magistrates, or individuals. 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 354; 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 215; 5 Bin. (Pa.) 340.

Any publication not oral, which exposes a person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, or tends to injure him in his business or calling, impair his standing in society, or cause him to be shunned or avoided by his neighbors. Odgers, Libel & S. 22.

LIBEL OF ACCUSATION. In Scotch law. The instrument which contains the charge against a person accused of a crime. Libels are of two kinds, namely, indictments and criminal letters.

Every libel assumes the form of what is termed, in logic, a "syllogism." It is first stated that some particular kind of act is criminal; as, that "theft is a crime of a heinous nature, and severely punishable." This proposition is termed the "major." It is next stated that the person accused is guilty of the crime so named, "actor, or art and part." This, with the narrative of the manner in which, and the time when, the offense was committed, is called the "minor" proposition of the libel. The "conclusion" is that, all or part of the facts being proved, or admitted by confession, the panel "ought to be punished with the pains of the law, to deter others from committing the like crime in all time coming." Burton, Pub. Laws, 300, 301.

LIBELLANT. The party who files a libel in an ecclesiastical or admiralty case, corresponding to the plaintiff in actions in the common-law courts.

LIBELLEE. A party against whom a libel has been filed in procedings in an ecclesiastical court or in admiralty, corresponding to the defendant in a common-law suit.

LIBER ASSISARUM (Lat.) The book of assigns or pleas of the crown; being the fifth part of the Year Books.

LIBER BANCUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. Free bench. Bracton, fol. 97b.

LIBER ET LEGALIS HOMO (Lat.) A free and lawful man; one worthy of being a juryman. He must neither be infamous nor a bondman. 3 Bl. Comm. 340, 362; Bracton, fol. 14b; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 25, § 4; Id. lib. 4, c. 5, § 4.

LIBER FEUDORUM (Lat.) A code of the feudal law, which was compiled by direction of the emperor Frederick Barbarossa, and published in Milan, in 1170. It was divided into five books, of which the first, second, and some fragments of the others still exist, and are printed at the end of all the modern editions of the Corpus Juris Civilis. Giannone, bk. 13, c. 3; Cruise, Dig. prel. diss. c. 1, § 31.

LIBER HOMO (Lat.) A free man; a freeman lawfully competent to act as juror. Ld. Raym. 417; Keb. 563.

In London, a man can be a liber homo either (1) by service, as having served his apprenticeship; or (2) by birthright, being a son of a liber homo; or (3) by redemption, i. e., allowance of mayor and aldermen. There was no intermediate state between villein and liber homo. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 11, § 22. But a liber homo could be vassal of another. Bracton, fol. 25.

——In Old European Law. An allodial proprietor, as opposed to a feudatory. Calv. Lex. "Alode."

LIBER JUDICIARUM (Lat.) The book of judgment, or doom book. The Saxon Domboc. Conjectured to be a book of statutes of ancient Saxon kings. See Jacob, "Domboc;" 1 Bl. Comm. 64.

LIBER NIGER (Lat.) Black book. A name given to several ancient records. See "Black Book of the Exchequer."

LIBER NIGER SCACCARII (Law Lat.) The Black Book of the Exchequer, attributed to Gervase of Tillbury. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 220, note.

LIBER RUBER SCACCARII (Law Lat.) The Red Book of the Exchequer. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 220, note. See "Red Book of the Exchequer."

LIBERA BATELLA (Law Lat.) In old records. A free boat; the right of having a boat to fish in a certain water; a species of free fishery. Plac. Itin. apud Cestriam, 14 Hen. VII.

LIBERA ELEEMOSYNA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Free alms; frankalmoign. Bracton, fol. 27b.

LIBERA FALDA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Frank fold; free fold; free foldage. 1 Leon. 11.

LIBERA LEX (Law Lat.) In old English law. Frank law; free law; otherwise called lex terrae (q. v.) Called libera, according to Lord Coke, to distinguish men who enjoy it, and whose best and freest birthright it is, from them that by their offenses have lost it. Co. Litt. 94b. Amittere liberam legem, to lose one's frank law. 3 Bl. Comm. 340; 4 Bl. Comm. 136; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 318, 319; Co. Litt. 294b; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 8, § 2.

LIBERA PISCARIA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A free fishery (q. v.) Co. Litt. 122a.

LIBERA WARRENA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Free warren (q. v.)

LIBERAM LEGEM AMITTERE. To lose one's free law (called the villainous judgment) to become discredited or disabled as juror and witness, to forfeit goods and chattels and lands for life, to have those lands wasted, houses razed, trees rooted up, and one's body committed to prison. It was anciently pronounced against conspirators, but is now disused, the punishment substituted being fine and imprisonment. Hawk. P. C. 61, c. 72, § 9; 3 Inst. 221.

LIBERARE.

——In the Civil Law. To free or set free; to liberate; to give one his liberty. Calv. Lex.

——In Old English Law. To deliver, transfer, or hand over. Applied to writs, panels of jurors, etc. Bracton, fols. 116, 176b.

LIBERATA PECUNIA NON LIBERAT OFferentem. Money being restored does not set free the party offering. Co. Litt. 207.

LIBERATE (Lat.) In English practice. A writ which issues on lands, tenements, and chattels, being returned under an extent on a statute staple, commanding the sheriff to deliver them to the plaintiff, by the extent and appraisement mentioned in the writ of extent, and in the sheriff's return thereto. See Comyn, Dig. "Statute Staple" (D 6).

LIBERATIO.

——In Old English Law. Livery; money paid for the delivery or use of a thing.

——In Old Scotch Law. Livery; a fee given to a servant or officer. Skene de Verb. Sign.

Money, meat, drink, clothes, etc., yearly given and delivered by the lord to his domestic servants. Blount.

LIBERATION. In civil law. The extinguishment of a contract, by which he who was bound becomes free or liberated. Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 749. Synonymous with "payment." Dig. 50. 16. 47.

LIBERI.

——In Saxon Law. Freemen; the possessors of allodial lands. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 5.

——In the Civil Law. Children. The term included "grandchildren."

LIBERI CHASEA (or CHACIA) (Law Lat.) In old English law. A free chase Reg. Jud. 37; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 51.

LIBERTAS. Liberty; freedom; a privilege; a franchise.

LIBERTAS ECCLESIASTICA. Church liberty, or ecclesiastical immunity.

LIBERTAS EST NATURALIS FACULTAS ejus quod cuique facere libet, nisi quod de jure aut vi prohibetur. Liberty is the natural power of doing whatever one pleases, except that which is restrained by law or force. Co. Litt. 116.

LIBERTAS INAESTIMABILIS RES EST. Liberty is an inestimable good. Dig. 50. 17. 106; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 51, § 13.

LIBERTAS NON RECIPIT AESTIMATIONEM. Freedom does not admit of valuation. Bracton, 14.

LIBERTAS OMNIBUS REBUS FAVORABILIOR EST. Liberty is more favored than all things. Dig. 50. 17. 122.

LIBERTAS REGALES AD CORONAM spectantes ex concessione regum a corona exierunt. Royal franchises relating to the crown have emanated from the crown by grant of kings. 2 Inst. 496.

LIBERTATIBUS ALLOCANDIS. A writ lying for a citizen or burgess, impleaded contrary to his liberty, to have his privilege allowed. Reg. Orig. 262.

LIBERTATIBUS EXIGENDIS IN ITINERE. An ancient writ, whereby the king commanded the justices in eyre to admit of an attorney for the defense of another's liberty. Reg. Orig. 19.

LIBERTI, or LIBERTINI. In Roman law. The condition of those who, having been slaves, had been made free. 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 99.

There is some distinction between these words. By libertus was understood the freedman when considered in relation to his patron, who had bestowed liberty upon him; and he was called libertinus when considered in relation to the state he occupied in society subsequent to his manumission. Lec. Dr. Civ. § 93.

LIBERTICIDE. A destroyer of liberty.

LIBERTIES. Privileged districts exempt from the sheriff's jurisdiction.

LIBERTINUM INGRATUM LEGES CIVILES in pristinam servitutem redigunt; sed leges Angliae semel manumissum semper liberum judicant. The civil laws reduce an ungrateful freedman to his original slavery; but the laws of England regard a man once manumitted as ever after free. Co. Litt. 137.

LIBERTY (Lat. liber, free; libertas, freedom, liberty). Freedom from restraint; the faculty of willing, and the power of doing what has been willed, without influence from without.

A privilege held by grant or prescription, by which some men enjoy greater privileges than ordinary subjects.

A territory with some extraordinary privilege.

A part of a town or city; as, the Northern Liberties of Philadelphia. See "Faubourg."

Civil liberty is the greatest amount of absolute liberty which can, in the nature of things, be equally possessed by every citizen in a state.

The term is frequently used to denote the amount of absolute liberty which is actually enjoyed by the various citizens under the government and laws of the state as administered. 1 Bl. Comm. 125.

The fullest political liberty furnishes the best possible guaranty for civil liberty.

Lieber defines civil liberty as guarantied protection against interference with the interests and rights held dear and important by large classes of civilized men, or by all the members of a state, together with an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws, as the best apparatus to secure that protection, including Blackstone's divisions of civil and political under this head.

Natural liberty is the right which nature gives to all mankind of disposing of their persons and property after the manner they judge most consonant to their happiness, on condition of their acting within the limits of the law of nature, and so as not to interfere with an equal exercise of the same rights by other men. Burlam. Nat. Law, c. 3, § 15; 1 Bl. Comm. 125. It is called by Lieber "social" liberty, and is defined as the protection of unrestrained action in as high a degree as the same claim of protection of each individual admits of.

Personal liberty consists in the power of locomotion, of changing situation, or removing one's person to whatever place one's inclination may direct, without imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law. 1 Bl. Comm. 134.

Political liberty is an effectual share in the making and administration of the laws. Lieber, Civ. Lib.

Liberty, in its widest sense, means the faculty of willing, and the power of doing what has been willed, without influence from without. It means self-determination, unrestrainedness of action. Thus defined, one being only can be absolutely free, namely, God. So soon as we apply the word "liberty" to spheres of human action, the term receives a relative meaning, because the power of man is limited; he is subject to constant influences from without. If the idea of unrestrainedness of action is applied to the social state of man, it receives a limitation still greater, since the equal claims of unrestrained action of all necessarily involves the idea of protection against interference by others. We thus come to the definition, that liberty of social man consists in the protection of unrestrained action in as high a degree as the same claim of protection of each individual admits of, or in the most efficient protection of his rights, claims, interests, as man or citizen, or of his humanity, manifested as a social being. See "Right." The word "liberty," applied to men in their political state, may be viewed with reference to the state as a whole, and in this case means the independence of the state, of other states; or it may have reference to the relation of the citizen to the government, in which case it is called "political" or "civil" liberty; or it may have reference to the status of a man as a political being, contradistinguished from him who is not considered master over his body, will, or labor,—the slave. This is called "personal" liberty, which, as a matter of course, includes freedom from prison.

LIBERTY OF THE PRESS. The right to print and publish the truth, from good motives and for justifiable ends. 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 394. The right to print without previous license or restraint, subject to the consequences of law. 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 628; 13 W. Va. 182.

LIBERTY OF THE RULES. A privilege to go out of the Fleet and Marshalsea prisons within certain limits, and there reside. Abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22.

LIBERTY TO HOLD PLEAS. The liberty of having a court of one's own. Thus, certain lords had the privilege of holding pleas within their own manors.

LIBERUM CORPUS AESTIMATIONEM non recipit. The body of a freeman does not admit of valuation. Dig. 9. 3. 7.

LIBERUM EST CUIQUE APUD SE EXplorare an expediat sibi consilium. Every one is free to ascertain for himself whether a recommendation is advantageous to his interests. 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 181, 184.

LIBERUM MARITAGIUM (Lat.) In old English law. Frank marriage (q. v.) 2 Bl. Comm. 115; Litt. § 17; Bracton, fol. 21.

LIBERUM SERVITIUM. Free service; service of a warlike sort by a feudatory tenant; sometimes called servitium liberum armorum. Somn. Gavelkind, p. 56; Jacob; 4 Coke, 9.

Service not unbecoming character of freemen and soldiers to perform; as, to serve under the lord in his wars, to pay a sum of money, and the like. 2 Bl. Comm. 60. The tenure of free service does not make a villein a free man, unless homage or manumission precede, any more than a tenure by villein services makes a freeman a villein. Bracton, fol. 24.

LIBERUM SOCAGIUM. In old English law. Free socage. Bracton, fol. 207; 2 Bl. Comm. 61, 62.

LIBERUM TENEMENTUM.

——In Real Law. Freehold; frank tenement. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1690; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 46.

——In Pleading. A plea in justification by the defendant in an action of trespass, by which he claims that he is the owner of the close described in the declaration, or that it is the freehold of some third person, by whose command he entered. 2 Salk. 453; 7 Term R. 355; 1 Wm. Saund. 299b, note.

It has the effect of compelling the plaintiff to a new assignment, setting out the abuttals where he has the locus in quo only generally in his declaration (11 East, 51, 72; 16 East, 343; 1 Barn. & C. 489); or to set forth tenancy in case he claims as tenant of the defendant, or the person ordering the trespass (1 Saund. 299b). It admits possession by the plaintiff, and the fact of the commission of a trespass as charged. 2 McCord (S. C.) 226.

LIBLAC. In Saxon law. Witchcraft, particularly that kind which consisted in the compounding and administering of drugs and philters.

LIBLACUM. In Saxon law. Bewitching any person; also a barbarous sacrifice.

LIBORUM APPELLATIONE CONTINENtur omnia volumina, sive in charta, sive in membrana sint, sive in quavis alia materia. Under the name of books are contained all volumes, whether upon paper, or parchment, or any other material. Dig. 32. 52. pr. et per tot.

LIBRA ARSA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A pound burned; that is, melted, or assayed by melting, to test its purity. Librae arsae et pensatae, pounds burned and weighed. A frequent expression in Domesday Book, to denote the purer coin in which rents were paid. Spelman; Cowell.

LIBRA NUMERATA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A pound counted; that is, paid or reckoned by tale (ad numerum), instead of being weighed. Spelman.

LIBRA PENSA (or PENSATA) (Law Lat.) In old English law. A pound weighed, or tried by weight. Spelman. See "Libra Arsa."

LIBRARIUS (Lat.) In the Roman law. A writer or amanuensis; a copyist. Dig. 50. 17. 92. See Calv. Lex.

LIBRATA (Law Lat. from libra, a pound). In old English law. A quantity of land yielding a pound rent per annum; a pound land. Bracton, fol. 16; Reg. Orig. 1b, 94; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 5, 41; Cowell, voc. "Fardingdeal."

LIBRIPENS (Lat.) In the Roman law. A weigher, or balance holder; the person who held a brazen balance in the ceremony of emancipation per aes et libram. Inst. 2. 10. 1; Adam, Rom. Ant. 52.

LICENCIADO. In Spanish law. Lawyer or advocate. By a decree of the Spanish government of 6th November, 1843, it was declared that all persons who have obtained diplomas of "Licentiates in Jurisprudence" from any of the literary universities of Spain are entitled to practice in all the courts of Spain without first obtaining permission by the tribunals of justice.

Their title is furnished them by the minister of the interior, to whom the universities forward a list of those whom they think qualified.

This law does not apply to those already licensed, who may, however, obtain the benefit of it, upon surrendering their license and complying with certain other formalities prescribed by the law.

LICENSE (Lat. licere, to permit).

——By Government. An authorization by the government to an individual to do certain acts, or carry on a certain business. Thus, marriage licenses, saloon keepers' licenses, pilots' licenses, etc.

——In Contracts. A permission; a right given by some competent authority to do an act which, without such authority, would be illegal.

An authority to do a particular act or series of acts on another's land without possessing any estate therein. 11 Mass. 533; 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 72; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 148.

The written evidence of the grant of such right.

An executed license exists where the licensed act has been done.

An executory license exists where the licensed act has not been performed.

An express license is one which is granted in direct terms.

An implied license is one which is presumed to have been given from the acts of the party authorized to give it.

It is distinguished from an easement, which implies an interest in the land to be affected, and a lease, or right to take the profits of land. It may be, however, and often is, coupled with a grant of some interest in the land itself, or right to take the profits. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 148.

A license may be by specialty (2 Pars. Cont. 22); by parol (13 Mees. & W. 838; 4 Maule & S. 562; 7 Barb. [N. Y.] 4; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 148); or by implication from circumstances, as opening a door in response to a knock (Hob. 62; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 427).

——In International Law. Permission granted by a belligerent state to its own subjects, or to the subjects of the enemy, to carry on a trade interdicted by war. Wheaton, Int. Law, 475.

——In Patent Law. A right granted by a patentee to another to use or vend the patented article.

——In Pleading. A plea of justification to an action of trespass, that the defendant was authorized by the owner of the freehold to commit the trespass complained of.

A license must be specially pleaded to an action of trespass (2 Term R. 166), but may be given in evidence in an action on the case (2 Mod. 6; 8 East, 308).

LICENSEE. A person to whom a license has been granted.

LICENSOR. The grantor of a license.

LICENTIA CONCORDANDI (Lat. leave to agree). One of the formal steps in the levying a fine. When an action is brought for the purpose of levying a fine, the defendant, knowing himself to be in the wrong, is supposed to make overtures of accommodation to the plaintiff, who accepts them, but, having given pledges to prosecute his suit, applies to the court, upon the return of the writ of covenant, for leave to make the matter up. This, which is readily granted, is called the licentia concordandi. 5 Coke, 39; Cruise, Dig. tit. 35, c. 2, 22.

LICENTIA LOQUENDI. Imparlance.

LICENTIA SURGENDI. In old English law. Liberty of rising; a liberty or space of time given by the court to a tenant, who is essoined, de malo lecti, in a real action, to arise out of his bed. Also, the writ thereupon. If the demandant can show that the tenant was seen abroad before leave of court, and before being viewed by the knights appointed by the court for that purpose, such tenant shall be taken to be deceitfully essoined, and to have made default. Bracton, lib. 5; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 10.

LICENTIA TRANSFRETANDI. A writ or warrant directed to keeper of port of Dover, or other seaport, commanding him to let the person who has this license of the king pass over sea. Reg. Orig, 93.

LICENTIATE. One who has license to practice any art or faculty.

LICENTIOUSNESS. The doing what one pleases, without regard to the rights of others. It differs from liberty in this, that the latter is restrained by natural or positive law, and consists in doing whatever we please not inconsistent with the rights of others, whereas the former does not respect those rights. Wolff. Inst. § 84

In a narrower sense, lewdness or lasciviousness.

LICERE, or LICERI (Lat.) In Roman law. To offer a price for a thing; to bid for it.

LICET (Lat.) It is lawful; not forbidden by law.

Id omne licitum est, quod non est legibus prohibitum, quamobrem, quod, lege permittente, fit, poenam non meretur. Licere dicimus quod legibus, moribus, institutisque conceditur. Cic. Philip. 13; L. 42, D. ff. de ritu nupt. Est aliquid quod non oporteat; tametsi licet; quicquod vero non licet certe non oportet. L. verbum oportere, ff. de verb. et rer. sign.

Although. Calv. Lex. An averment that "although such a thing is done or not done" is not implicative of the doing or not doing, but a direct averment of it. Plowd. 127.

LICET DISPOSITIO DE INTERESSE FUturo sit inutilis tamen potest fieri declaratio praecedens quae sortiatur effectum interveniente novo actu. Although the grant of a future interest be inoperative, yet a declaration precedent may be made which may take effect, provided a new act intervene. Bac. Max. reg. 14; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 600.

LICET SAEPIUS REQUISITUS (Lat. although often requested). In pleading. A formal allegation in a declaration that the defendant has been often requested to perform the acts the nonperformance of which is complained of.

It is usually alleged in the declaration that the defendant, licet saepius requisitus, etc., he did not perform the contract the violation of which is the foundation of the action. This allegation is generally sufficient when a request is not parcel of the contract. Indeed, in such cases it is unnecessary even to lay a general request; for the bringing of the suit is itself a sufficient request. 1 Saund. 33, note 2; 2 Saund. 118, note 3; Plowd. 128; 1 Wils. 33; 2 H. Bl. 131; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 99, 319; 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 462; 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 485; 3 Maule & S. 150. See "Demand."

LICITA BENE MISCENTUR, FORMULA nisi juris obstet. Lawful acts may well be fused into one, unless some form of law forbid; e. g., two having a right to convey, each a moiety, may unite and convey the whole. Bac. Max. 94; Crabb, Real Prop. 179.

LICITACION. In Spanish law. The sale made at public auction by coproprietors, or coheirs, of their joint property which is not susceptible of being advantageously divided in kind.

LICITARE (Lat.) In Roman law. To offer a price at a sale; to bid; to bid often; to make several bids, one above another. Calv. Lex.

LICITATION. In civil law. An offering for sale to the highest bidder, or to him who will give most for a thing. An act by which coheirs or other coproprietors of a thing in common and undivided between them put it to bid between them, to be adjudged and to belong to the highest and last bidder, upon condition that he pay to each of his coproprietors a part in the price equal to the undivided part which each of the said coproprietors had in the estate licited, before the adjudication. Poth. Cont. Sale, notes 516, 638.

LICITATOR. In Roman law. A bidder at a sale.

LIDFORD LAW. See "Lynch Law."

LIEGE (from liga, a bond, or litis, a man wholly at command of his lord). In feudal law. Bound by a feudal tenure; bound in allegiance to the lord paramount, who owned no superior.

The term was applied to the lord, or liege lord, to whom allegiance was due, since he was bound to protection and a just government, and also to the feudatory, liegeman, or subject bound to allegiance, for he was bound to tribute and due subjection. 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. So lieges are the king's subjects. St. 8 Hen. VI. c. 10; 14 Hen. VIII. c. 2. So in Scotland. Bell, Dict. But in ancient times private persons, as lords of manors, had their lieges. Jacob; 1 Bl. Comm. 367.

Liege, or ligius, was used in old records for full, pure, or perfect; e. g., ligia potestas, full and free power of disposal. Par. Ant. 280. Probably in this sense derived from legitima. So in Scotland. See "Liege Poustie."

LIEGE HOMAGE. Homage based on allegiance, as opposed to that which implied merely an acknowledgment of tenure. The former was due to the sovereign alone, while the latter was rendered to any superior lord of whom lands were held. 1 Bl. Comm. 367.

LIEGE LORD. A sovereign; a superior lord.

LIEGE POUSTIE (legitima potestas). In Scotch law. That state of health which gives a person full power to dispose of, mortis causa, or otherwise, his heritable property. Bell, Dict.

LIEGEMAN. He that oweth allegiance. Cowell.

LIEGER, or LEGER. A resident ambassador.

LIEGES, or LIEGE PEOPLE. Subjects.

LIEN. A hold or claim which one person has upon the property of another as a security for some debt or charge.

In its original significance, it was the right of one in possession of the personalty of another to detain it until some claim was satisfied by the owner, actual possession by the lien claimant being essential. 62 Barb. (N. Y.) 323; 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 467.

In modern usage, the term has been enlarged, and may be defined as a charge imposed on specific property, real or personal, by which it is made security for the performance of an act. 4 Cliff. (U. S.) 225.

In every case in which property, either real or personal, is charged with the payment of a debt or duty, every such charge may be denominated a lien on the property. It differs from an estate in or title to the property, as it may be discharged at any time by payment of the sum for which the lien attaches. It differs from a mortgage in the fact that a mortgage is made and the property delivered, or otherwise, for the express purpose of security; while the lien attaches as incidental to the main purpose of the bailment, or, as in case of a judgment, by mere act of the law, without any act of the party. In this general sense, the word is commonly used by English and American law writers to include those preferred or privileged claims given by statute or by admiralty law, and which seem to have been adopted from the civil law, as well as the security existing at common law, to which the term more exactly applies.

Liens are divided, in respect to their origin and nature, into common law, civil law, equitable, maritime, and statutory.

(1) Common-law liens. As distinguished from the other classes, they consist in a mere right to retain possession until the debt or charge is paid.

In the case of a factor, an apparent exception exists, as he is allowed a lien on the proceeds of goods sold, as well as on the goods themselves. But this seems to result from the relation of the parties, and the purposes of the bailment; to effectuate which, and at the same time give a security to the factor, the law considers the possession, or right to possession, of the proceeds, the same thing as the possession of the goods themselves.

A particular lien is a right to retain the property of another on account of labor employed or money expended on that specific property. Whit. Liens, 9.

A general lien is a right to retain the property of another on account of a general balance due from the owner. 3 Bos. & P. 494.

(2) Civil-law liens. The civil law embraces, under the head of mortgages and privilege, the peculiar securities which, in the common and maritime law, and equity, are termed "liens."

In regard to privilege, Domat says: "We do not reckon in the number of privileges the preference which the creditor has on the movables that have been given him in a pawn, and which are in his custody. The privilege of a creditor is the distinguishing right which the nature of his credit gives him, and which makes him to be preferred before other creditors, even those who are prior in time, and who have mortgages." Domat, Civ. Law, pt. 1, lib. iii. tit. i. § v.

These privileges are of two kinds: One gives a preference on all the goods, without any particular assignment on any one thing; the other gives to the creditors their security on certain things, and not on the other goods.

(3) Equitable liens. Such as exist in equity, and of which courts of equity alone take cognizance.

A lien is neither a jus in re nor a jus ad rem. It is not property in the thing, nor does it constitute a right of action for the thing. It more properly constitutes a charge upon the thing. In regard to these liens, it may be generally stated that they arise from constructive trusts. They are, therefore, wholly independent of the possession of the thing to which they are attached as an incumbrance, and they can be enforced only in courts of equity. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1217.

An equitable lien on a sale of realty is very different from a lien at law, for it operates after the possession has been changed, and is available by way of charge instead of detainer. Adams, Eq. Jur. 127.

(4) Maritime liens. Maritime liens do not include or require possession. The word lien is used in maritime law, not in the strict legal sense in which we understand it in courts of common law, in which case there could be no lien where there was no possession, actual or constructive; but to express, as if by analogy, the nature of claims which neither presuppose nor originate in possession. 22 Eng. Law & Eq. 62. See 15 Bost. Law Rep. 555; 16 Bost. Law Rep. 1, 264; 17 Bost. Law Rep. 93, 421. A distinction is made in the United States between qualified maritime liens, which depend upon possession, and absolute maritime liens, which do not require nor depend upon possession. 7 How. (U. S.) 729.

(5) Statutory liens. Under this head it is convenient to consider some of those liens which subsist at common law, but have been extensively modified by statutory regulations, as well as those which subsist entirely by force of statutory regulations.

The principal liens of this class are judgment liens, and liens of materialmen and builders.

Liens, whether common law, equitable, or statutory, are either conventional, i. e., by express agreement of the parties, or by operation of law, by legal implication from the acts of parties.

LIEN OF A COVENANT. The commencement of a covenant stating the names of the covenantors and covenantees, and the character of the covenant, whether joint or several.

LIENOR. One who holds or owns a lien.

LIEU, LEU, LIU, or LYU (Law Fr.; from Lat. locus). A place. Britt. c. 27.

LIEU CONUS (Law Fr.) In old pleading. A known place; a place well known and generally taken notice of by those who dwell about it, as a castle, a manor, etc. Whishaw; 1 Ld. Raym. 259. "A liberty is in the nature of a lieu conus." North, C. J., 2 Mod. 48.

LIEUTENANT. This word has now a narrower meaning than it formerly had. Its true meaning is a deputy, a substitute, from the French lieu (place or post) and tenant (holder). Among civil officers we have lieutenant governors, who in certain cases perform the duties of governors, lieutenants of police, etc. Among military men, "lieutenant general" was formerly the title of a commanding general, but now it signifies the degree above major general. Lieutenant colonel is the officer between the colonel and the major. Lieutenant, simply, signifies the officer next below a captain. In the navy, a lieutenant is the second officer next in command to the captain of a ship.

LIFE ANNUITY. An annual income to be paid during the continuation of a particular life. See "Annuity."

LIFE ASSURANCE. An insurance of a life upon the payment of a premium. This may be for the whole life, or for a limited time. On the death of the person whose life has been insured during the time for which it is insured, the insurer is bound to pay to the insured the money agreed upon. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1231. See "Loss."

LIFE ESTATE. An estate whose duration is limited to the life of the party holding it, or of some other person; a freehold estate, not of inheritance. 4 Kent, Comm. 23, 25.

LIFE INSURANCE. A contract of insurance wherein the insurer agrees to pay a specified sum in the event of the death of a particular person, if it occur at a time and under circumstances within the terms of the contract.

LIFE INTEREST. An interest, limited by the term of the life, either of the person in whom the right is vested, or of another.

LIFE PEERAGE. Letters patent, conferring the dignity of baron for life only, do not enable the grantee to sit and vote in the house of lords, not even with the usual writ of summons to the house. Wharton.

LIFE POLICY. A policy of life insurance.

LIFE RENT. In Scotch law. A right to use and enjoy a thing during life, the substance of it being preserved.

A life rent cannot, therefore, be constituted upon things which perish in the use; and though it may upon subjects which gradually wear out by time, as household furniture, etc., yet it is generally applied to heritable subjects. Life rents are divided into conventional and legal.

The conventional are either simple or by reservation. A simple life rent, or by a separate constitution, is that which is granted by the proprietor in favor of another. A life rent by reservation is that which a proprietor reserves to himself in the same writing by which he conveys the fee to another. Life rents by law are the terce and the curtesy (q. v.)

LIFE RENTER. In Scotch law. A tenant for life without waste. Bell, Dict.

LIGA (Law Lat.) In old European law. A league or confederation (foedus, confoederatio). Spelman.

LIGAN, or LAGAN. Goods cast into the sea tied to a buoy, so that they may be found again by the owners, are so denominated. When goods are cast into the sea in storms or shipwrecks, and remain there, without coming to land, they are distinguished by the barbarous names of jetsam, flotsam, and ligan. 5 Coke, 108; Harg. St. Tr. 48; 1 Bl. Comm. 292.

LIGARE (Lat.) To tie, or bind. Bracton, fol. 369b.

To enter into a league or treaty (inire foedus). Spelman.

LIGEA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A liege woman; a female subject. Reg. Orig. 312b.

LIGEANCE. The true and faithful obedience of a subject to his sovereign, of a citizen to his government. It signifies, also, the territory of a sovereign. See "Allegiance."

LIGEANTIA EST QUASI LEGIS ESSENtia; est vinculum fidei. Allegiance is, as it were, the essence of the law; it is the bond of faith. Co. Litt. 129.

LIGEANTIA NATURALIS, NULLIS claustris coercetur, nullis metis refraentur, nullis finibus premitur. Natural allegiance is restrained by no barriers, curbed by no bounds, compressed by no limits. 7 Coke, 10.

LIGHTERMAN. The owner or manager of a lighter; a lighterman is considered as a common carrier. See "Lighters."

LIGHTERS. Small vessels employed in loading and unloading larger vessels.

The owners of lighters are liable like other common carriers for hire. It is a term of the contract on the part of the carrier or lighterman, implied by law, that his vessel is tight and fit for the purpose or employments for which he offers and holds it forth to the public. It is the immediate foundation and substratum of the contract that it is so; the law presumes a promise to that effect on the part of the carrier, without actual proof; and every principle of sound policy and public convenience requires it should be so. 5 East, 428; Abb. Shipp. 225; 1 Marsh. Ins. 254; Park, Ins. 23; Weskett, Ins. 328; Pars. Mar. Law.

LIGHTS. Those openings in a wall which are made rather for the admission of light than to look out of. 6 J. B. Moore, 47; 9 Bing. 305. See "Ancient Lights."

Lamps carried on board vessels, under statutory regulations or otherwise, for the purpose of preventing collisions at night.

Lamps or lights placed in lighthouses, or other conspicuous positions, as aids to navigation at night.

LIGIUS. A tie or bond allegiance.

LIGNA ET LAPIDES SUB "ARMORUM" appellatione non continentur. Sticks and stones are not contained under the name of arms. Bracton, 144b.

LIGULA. In old English law. A copy, exemplification, or transcript of a court roll or deed. Cowell.

LIMB. Ordinarily, only a member useful in fight, and the loss of which would amount to mayhem at common law. 1 Bl. Comm. 130.

Sometimes metaphorically used for general physical safety.

LIMENARCHA (Graeco-Lat.) In the Roman law. An officer who had charge of a harbor or port. Dig. 50. 4. 18. 10; Code, 7. 16. 38.

LIMITATION OF ASSIZE. In old practice. A certain time prescribed by statute, within which a man was required to allege himself or his ancestor to have been seised of lands sued for by a writ of assize. Cowell.

LIMITATION, WORDS OF. See "Words of Limitation."

LIMITATIONS.

——Of Actions. The statutory restriction of the time within which action may be brought.

——Of Criminal Prosecutions. The statutory restriction of the time within which indictment may be found for an offense.

——Of Estates. A circumscription of the quantity of time comprised in any estate. 1 Prest. Est. 25.

The definition or circumscription, in any conveyance, of the interest which the grantee is intended to take. The term is used by different writers in different senses. Thus, it is used by Lord Coke to denote the express definition of an estate by the words of its creation, so that it cannot endure for any longer time than till the contingency happens upon which the estate is to fail. Co. Litt. 23b. In the work of Mr. Sanders on Uses, the term is used, however, in a broader and more general sense, as given in the second definition above. 1 Sanders, Uses (4th Ed.) 121 et seq. And, indeed, the same writers do not always confine themselves to one use of the term, though the better usage is undoubtedly given by Mr. Stephen in his note above cited. And see Fearne, Cont. Rem. (Butler's note [n]; 9th Ed.) 10; 1 Steph. Comm. (5th Ed.) 304, note. For the distinctions between limitations and remainders, see "Conditional Limitation;" "Contingent Remainder."

Consult, generally, Angell, Ballantine, and Price, on Limitations; Flintoff and Washburn on Real Property; Barbour and Bishop on Criminal Law.

LIMITED. Restricted; bounded; prescribed; confined within positive bounds; restricted in duration, extent, or scope.

LIMITED ADMINISTRATION. Special administration. See "Administration."

LIMITED DIVORCE. A divorce a mensa et thoro. See "Divorce."

LIMITED FEE. A general term, opposed to fee simple, and covering all qualified or conditional estates of inheritance in lands. It includes base fees, conditional fees, and fees tail. 2 Bl. Comm. 109.

LIMITED JURISDICTION. See "Jurisdiction."

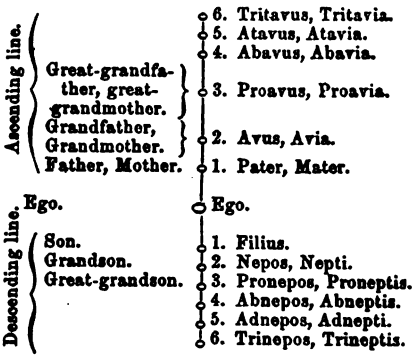
LIMITED OWNER. One whose title in lands is less than a fee simple.

LIMITED PARTNERSHIP. One wherein the liability of one or more of the members is, by compliance with certain statutory provisions, limited to the amount of their contribution to the capital stock. The term "special partnership" is sometimes used; but "limited partnership" seems better, for "particular partnerships," or partnerships for a single transaction, are sometimes called "special partnerships."

LINARIUM (Law Lat. from linum, flax). In old records. A place where flax is sown; a flax plat. Pat. 22 Hen. IV. par. 1, m. 33; Blount.

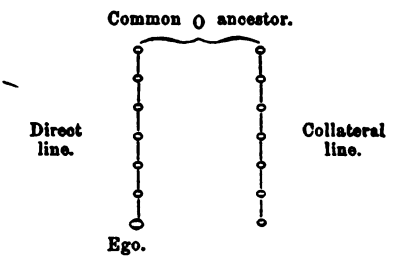
LINE.

——In Descents. The series of persons who have descended from a common ancestor, placed one under the other, in the order of their birth. It connects successively all the relations by blood to each other. See "Consanguinity;" "Degree."



The line is either direct or collateral. The direct line is composed of all the persons who are descended from each other. If, in the direct line, any one person is assumed as the propositus, in order to count from him upwards and downwards, the line will be divided into two parts, the ascending and descending lines. The ascending line is that which, counting from the propositus, ascends to his ancestors, to his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, etc. The descending line is that which, counting from the same person, descends to his children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren, etc. The preceding table is an example.

The collateral line, considered by itself, and in relation to the common ancestor, is a direct line. It becomes collateral when placed alongside of another line below the common ancestor, in whom both lines unite. For example:



These two lines are independent of each other; they have no connection except by their union in the person of the common ancestor. This reunion is what forms the relation among the persons composing the two lines.

A line is also paternal or maternal. In the examination of a person's ascending line, the line ascends first to his father, next to his paternal grandfather, his paternal great-grandfather, etc., so on from father to father. This is called the paternal line. Another line will be found to ascend from the same person to his mother, his maternal grandmother, and so from mother to mother. This is the maternal line. These lines, however, do not take in all the ascendants; there are many others who must be imagined.

See 2 Bl. Comm. 200, bk. 2, c. 14; Poth. des Success. c. 1, art. 3, § 2; "Ascendants."

——Boundary Lines. The division between two estates. Limit; border; boundary.

——Measures. A line is a lineal measure, containing the one-twelfth part of an inch.

LINEA (Lat.) In civil and old English law. A line; a series of persons descending from a common stock (series personarum a communi stipite descendentium). Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, tit. 10, § 153. It was ascendens as well as descendens. Hale, Anal. § 18; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1. § 11.

LINEA RECTA (Lat.) The perpendicular line; the direct line; the line of ascent, through father, grandfather, etc., and of descent, through son, grandson, etc. Co. Litt. 10, 158; Bracton, fol. 67; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1, § 11. This is represented in a diagram by a vertical line.

Persons springing from another immediately, or mediately through a third person, are said to be in the direct line (linea recta), and are called "ascendants" and "descendants." Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 129.

LINEA RECTA EST INDEX SUI ET OBliqui; lex est linea recti. A right line is an index of itself and of an oblique; law is a line of right. Co. Litt. 158.

LINEA RECTA SEMPER PRAEFERTUR transversali. The right line is always preferred to the collateral. Co. Litt. 10; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 1; 1 Steph. Comm. (4th Ed.) 406.

LINEA TRANSVERSALIS (Lat.) A line crossing the perpendicular lines. Where two persons are descended from a third, they are called "collaterals," and are said to be related in the collateral line (linea transversa or obliqua).

LINEAL. In a direct line.

LINEAL CONSANGUINITY. That kind of consanguinity which subsists between persons of whom one is descended in a direct line from the other; as between a particular person and his father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upward, in the direct ascending line; or between the same person and his son, grandson, great-grandson, and so downwards, in the direct descending line. 2 Bl. Comm. 203.

LINEAL DESCENT. Descent in a right line, as where an estate descends from ancestor to heir in one line of succession, as opposed to collateral descent, which is descent in a transverse or zigzag line, namely, up through the common ancestor, and then down from him.

LINEAL WARRANTY. A warranty by ancestor from whom the title did or might have come to heir. 2 Bl. Comm. 301; Rawle, Cov. 30; 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 360. Thus, a warrant by an elder son during lifetime of father was lineal to a younger son, but a warranty by younger son was collateral to elder; for, though the younger might take the paternal estate through the elder, the elder could not take it through the younger. Litt. § 703. Abolished. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, § 14.

LINES AND CORNERS. In deeds and surveys. Boundary lines and their angles with each other. 17 Miss. 459; 21 Ala. 66; 9 Fost. & H. (N. H.) 471; 10 Grat. (Va.) 445; 16 Ga. 141.

LIQUERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To be clear, evident, or satisfactory. When a judex was in doubt how to decide a case, he represented to the praetor, under oath, sibi non liquere, that it was not clear to him, and was thereupon discharged. Calv. Lex.

LIQUET. It is clear or apparent; it appears. Satis liquet, it sufficiently appears. 1 Strange, 412.

LIQUIDATE. To pay; to settle. Webster; 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 322.

To ascertain or make certain in amount. 20 Ga. 53.

LIQUIDATING PARTNER. The member of a dissolved partnership who winds up its business. Shumaker, Partn. 128.

LIQUIDATION. A fixed and determinate valuation of things which before were uncertain.

LIQUIDATOR. A person appointed to carry out the winding up of a company.

LIS (Lat.) A controversy or dispute. See "Lis Mota."

A suit at law; an action; a controversy carried on in form of law. In the civil law, this was a more general term than actio. Litis nomen omnem actionem significat, the term lis signifies every kind of action. Dig. 50. 16. 36; Co. Litt. 292.

LIS ALIBI PENDENS. A suit pending elsewhere. The fact that proceedings are pending between a plaintiff and defendant in one court in respect to a given matter is frequently a ground for preventing the plaintiff from taking proceedings in another court against the same defendant for the same object, and arising out of the same cause of action. Rapalje & L.

LIS MOTA (Lat.) A controversy begun, i. e., on the point at issue, and prior to commencement of judicial proceedings. Such controversy is taken to arise on the advent of the state of facts on which the claim rests; and after such controversy has arisen (post litem motam), no declarations of deceased members of family as to matters of pedigree are admissible. 6 Car. & P. 560; 4 Campb. 417; 2 Russ. & M. 161; Greenl. Ev. §§ 131, 132; 4 Maule & S. 497; 1 Pet. (U. S.) 337; 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 177.

LIS PENDENS (Lat.) A pending suit.

The control which a court has, during the pendency of an action, over property involved therein. Bennett, Lis Pendens, § 2.

The property involved is the res. Its character remains fixed during the litigation, and this litigated or contested quality is called res litigiosa. Lis pendens, notice of lis pedens, and rule lis pendens, when used without reference to a statute defining their meaning, are synonymous terms. Bennett, Lis Pendens, §§ 2, 59.

One who purchases property pending an action concerning it (pendente lite, q. v.) takes subject to the event of the action, the maxim of the law being pendente lite nihil innovetur.

All real property is subject to lis pendens (45 N. H. 517), and all personalty (37 Pa. St. 353; 23 Wis. 1) except negotiable paper (103 U. S. 806; 48 N. Y. 613).

To constitute lis pendens there must be an action actually commenced (27 Mo. 560) in a court of competent jurisdiction, involving the title to particular property (13 R. I. 102), to which the claimant of the property is a party (24 Iowa, 155), and the property must be sufficiently described in the pleadings so that it can be identified by reasonable inquiry (4 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 39).

LIST. A table of cases arranged for trial or argument; as, the trial list, the argument list. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3031. See "Calendar."

LISTERS. This word is used in some of the states to designate the persons appointed to make lists of taxables. See Rev. St. Vt. 538.

LITE PENDENTE (Lat.) Pending the suit. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 23.

LITEM SUAM FACERE (Lat.) To make a suit his own. Where a judex, from partiality or enmity, evidently favored either of the parties, he was said litem suam facere. Calv. Lex.

LITERA (Lat.) A letter; the letter of a law, as distinguished from its spirit. See "Letter."

LITERA PISANA. The Pisan letter. A term applied to the old character in which the copy of the Pandects formerly kept at Pisa, in Italy, was written. Spelman.

LITERAE. Letters. A term applied in old English law to various instruments in writing, public and private.

LITERAE DIMISSORIAE. Dimissory letters. See "Dimissoriae Litterae."

LITERAE HUMANIORES. A term including Greek, Latin, general philology, logic, moral philosophy, metaphysics; the name of the principal course of study in the University of Oxford. Wharton.

LITERAE MORTUAE. Dead letters; fulfilling words of a statute. Lord Bacon observee that "there are in every statute certain words which are as veins, where the life and blood of the statute cometh, and where all doubts do arise, and the rest are literae mortuae, fulfilling words." Bac. St. Uses, (Works, iv. 189).

LITERAE PATENTES. Letters patent; literally, open letters.

LITERAE PATENTES REGIS NON erunt vacuae. Letters patent of the king shall not be void. 1 Bulst. 6.

LITERAE PROCURATORIAE (Lat.) In civil law. Letters procuratory; a written authority, or power of attorney (litera attornati), given to a procurator. Vicat; Bracton, fols. 40-43.

LITERAE RECOGNITIONIS. In maritime law. A bill of lading. Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 172.

LITERAE SCRIPTAE MANENT. Written words last.

LITERAE SIGILLATAE. In old English law. Sealed letters. The return of a sheriff was so called. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 19.

LITERAL CONTRACT. In civil law. A contract the whole of the evidence of which is reduced to writing. This contract is perfected by the writing, and binds the party who subscribed it, although he has received no consideration. Lec. Elm. § 887.

LITERAL PROOF. In civil law. Written evidence.

LITERARY PROPERTY. The interest of an author, or those who claim under him, in his work before or after publication, and with or without copyright. Drone, Copyright, 97.

Literary property is the common-law ownership of the original work. Copyright is the statutory right to make all the copies of it that shall be made for a term of years. Abbott.

The scope of such property is, in the absence of copyright laws, that an author has the sole right of first printing and publishing his writings. 4 Burrows, 2408. The author's property right is lost as soon as he prints and publishes the manuscript (8 Pet. [U. S.] 591); though a private use or circulation of a manuscript, as for the purpose of instructing students, will not forfeit the author's literary property.

By statute, a penalty is denounced against the publication of a manuscript without the author's consent. Rev. St. U. S. § 4966.

LITERATURA (Lat. from litera, a letter). In old English law. Education; learning; knowledge of letters. Ad literaturam ponere, to put to learning; to put to school. Par. Ant. 401; Cowell. Minus sufficiens in literatura, deficient in education.

LITERIS OBLIGATIO. In Roman law. The contract of nomen, which was constituted by writing (scriptura). It was of two kinds, viz.: (1) A re in personam, when a transaction was transferred from the daybook (adversaria) into the ledger (codex) in the form of a debt under the name or heading of the purchaser or debtor (nomen); and (2) a persona in personam, where a debt already standing under one nomen or heading was transferred in the usual course of novatio from that nomen to another and substituted nomen. By reason of this transferring, these obligations were called nomina transcriptitia. No money was, in fact, paid to constitute the contract. If ever money was paid, then the nomen was arcarium, i. e., a real contract, re contractus, and not a nomen proprium. Brown.

LITIGANT. One engaged in a suit; one fond of litigation.

LITIGARE (Lat.) To litigate; to carry on a suit (litem agere), either as plaintiff or defendant; to claim or dispute by action; to test or try the validity of a claim by action.

LITIGATE. To contend in form of law.

LITIGATION. A contest, authorized by law, in a court of justice, for the purpose of enforcing a right.

LITIGIOSA RES. See "Lis Pendens."

LITIGIOSITY. In Scotch law. The pendency of a suit. It is an implied prohibition of alienation, to the disappointment of an action, or of diligence, the direct object of which is to obtain possession, or to acquire the property of a particular subject. The effect of it is analogous to that of inhibition. 2 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 152. See "Lis Pendens."

LITIGIOUS. That which is the subject of a suit or action; that which is contested in a court of justice. In another sense, litigious signifies a disposition to sue; a fondness for litigation.

LITIGIOUS RIGHTS. In French law. Those which are or may be contested either in whole or in part, whether an action has been commenced, or when there is reason to apprehend one. Poth. Vente, note 584; 9 Mart. (La.) 183; Tropl. de la Vente, note 984 a 1003; Eva. Civ. Code, art. 2623; Eva. Civ. Code, art. 3522, note 22. See "Contentious Jurisdiction."

LITIS AESTIMATIO. The measure of damages.

LITIS CONTESTATIO.

——In the Civil and Canon Law. Contestation of suit; the process of contesting a suit by the opposing statements of the respective parties; the process of coming to an issue; the attainment of an issue; the issue itself.

——In the Practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts. The general answer made by the defendant, in which he denies the matter charged against him in the libel. Halifax, Civ. Law, bk. 3, c. 11, No. 9.

LITIS DOMINIUM. In civil law. Ownership, control, or direction of a suit. A fiction of law by which the employment of an attorney or proctor (procurator) in a suit was authorized or justified, he being supposed to become, by the appointment of his principal (dominus) or client, the dominus litis. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 10, §§ 1246, 1247.

LITIS NOMEN ACTIONEM SIGNIFICAT, sive in rem, sive in personam sit. The word lex, i. e., a lawsuit, signifies every action, whether in rem or in personam. Co. Litt. 292.

LITISPENDENCE. An obsolete term for the time during which a lawsuit is going on.

LITISPENDENCIA. In Spanish law. The condition of a suit pending in a court of justice.

In order to render this condition valid, it is necessary that the judge be competent to take cognizance of the cause; that the defendant has been duly cited to appear, and fully informed, in due time and form, of the nature of the demand, or that, if he has not, it has been through his own fault or fraud.

The litispendencia produces two effects: The legal impossibility of alienating the property in dispute during the pendency of the suit; the accumulation of all the proceedings in the cause, in the tribunal where the suit is pending, whether the same be had before the same judge or other judges or notaries. This cumulation may be required in any stage of the cause, and forms a valid exception to the further proceeding, until the cumulation is effected. Escriche, Dic. Raz.

LITRE. A French measure of capacity. It is of the size of a decimetre, or one-tenth part of a cubic metre. It is equal to 61.028 cubic inches. See "Measure."

LITTORAL (littus). Belonging to shore: as, of sea and great lakes. Webster. Corresponding to riparian proprietors on a stream or small pond are littoral proprietors on a sea or lake. But "riparian" is also used coextensively with "littoral." 7 Cush. (Mass.) 94. See 17 How. (U. S.) 426.

LITURA. In civil law. An obliteration or blot in a will or other instrument. Dig. 28. 4. 1. 1.

LITUS EST QUOSQUE MAXIMUS FLUCTUS A MARI PERVENIT. The shore is where the highest wave from the sea has reached. Dig. 50. 16. 96; Angell, Tide Waters, 67.

LITUS MARIS (Lat.)

——In Civil Law. Shore; beach. Qua fluctus eluderet. Cic. Top. c. 7. Qua fluctus adludit. Quinct. lib. 5, c. ult. Quousque maximus fluctus a mari pervenit. Celsus. Said to have been first so defined by Cicero, in an award as arbitrator. L. 92, D, de verb. signif. Qua maximus fluctus exaestuat. L. 112, D., eod. tit. Quatenus hibernus fluctus maximus excurrit. Inst. lib. 2, de rer. divis. et qual. § 3. That is to say, as far as the largest winter wave runs up. Vocab.

——At Common Law. The shore between common high-water mark and low-water mark. Hale de Jur. Mar. cc. 4, 5, 6; 3 Kent, Comm. 427; 2 Hilliard, Real Prop. 90.

Shore is also used of a river. 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 385; 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 149. See 13 How. (U. S.) 381; 28 Me. 180; 14 Pa. St. 171.

LIVERY. In English law, The delivery of possession of lands to those tenants who hold of the king in capita or by knight's service.

The name of a writ which lay for the heir of age to obtain possession of the seisin of his lands at the king's hands. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 155; 2 Bl. Comm. 68.

The distinguishing dress worn by the servants of a gentleman or nobleman, or by the members of a particular guild. "Livery or clothing." Sayer, 274. By St. 1 Rich. II. c. 7, and St. 16 Rich. II. c. 4, none but the servants of a lord, and continually dwelling in his house, or those above rank of yeomen, should wear the lord's livery.

Privilege of a particular company or guild. Wharton.

LIVERY OF SEISIN. In estates. A delivery of possession of lands, tenements, and hereditaments unto one entitled to the same. This was a ceremony used in the common law for the conveyance of real estate; and livery was in deed, which was performed by the feoffor and the feoffee going upon the land, and the latter receiving it from the former; or in law, where the same was not made on the land, but in sight of it. 2 Bl. Comm. 315, 316.

In most of the states, livery of seisin is unnecessary, it having been dispensed with either by express law or by usage. The recording of the deed has the same effect. Washb. Real Prop. 14, 35. In Maryland, however, it seems that a deed cannot operate as a feoffment without livery of seisin. 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 158. See 4 Kent, Comm. 381; 1 Mo. 553; 1 Pet. (U. S.) 508; 1 Bay (S. C.) 107; 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 158; 11 Me. 318; Dane, Abr. See "Seisin."

LIVERY STABLE. A place where horses and vehicles are kept to be let to the public. See 30 La. Ann. 1095.

Though some other related business may be carried on, as the boarding of horses for hire, the keeper of the stable is, as to such, an agister, etc., as the case may be, not a livery stable keeper.

LIVRE TOURNOIS. In common law. A coin used in France before the revolution. It is to be computed, in the ad valorem duty on goods, etc., at eighteen and a half cents. Act March 2, 1798, § 61 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 629). See "Foreign Coins."

LLOYDS. A mutual fire and marine insurance association, the members underwriting each other's policies.

LOADMANAGE. The pay to loadsmen; that is, persons who sail or row before ships, in barks or small vessels, with instruments for towing the ship and directing her course, in order that she may escape the dangers in her way. Poth. des Avaries, note 137; Guidon de la Mer, c. 14; Bac. Abr. "Merchant and Merchandise" (F). It is not in use in the United States.

LOAN. A bailment without reward; a bailment of an article for use or consumption without reward; the thing so bailed.

A loan, in general, implies that a thing is lent without reward; but in some cases a loan may be for a reward; as, the loan of money. 7 Pet. (U. S.) 109.

It would be an inquiry too purely speculative whether this use of the term "loan" originated in the times when taking interest was considered usury, and improper, the bailment of money which was to be returned in kind. The supposition would furnish a reasonable explanation of the exception to the general rule that loan includes properly only those bailments where no reward is given or received by the bailee.

In order to make a contract usurious, there must be a loan (Cowp. 112, 770; 1 Ves. Jr. 527; 2 Bl. 859; 3 Wils. 390), and the borrower must be bound to return the money at all events (2 Schoales & L. 470). The purchase of a bond or note is not a loan (3 Schoales & L. 469; 9 Pet. [U. S.] 103); but if such a purchase be merely colorable, it will be considered as a loan (2 Johns. Cas. [N. Y.] 60, 66; 12 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 46; 15 Johns. [N. Y.] 44).

LOAN FOR CONSUMPTION. A contract by which the owner of a personal chattel, called the "lender," delivers it to the bailee, called the "borrower," to be returned in kind. For example, if a person borrows a bushel of wheat, and at the end of a month returns to the lender a bushel of equal value. This class of loans is commonly considered under the head of "bailments," but it lacks the one essential element of bailment,—that of a return of the property. It is more strictly a barter or an exchange; the property passes to the borrower. 4 N. Y. 76; 8 N. Y. 433; 1 Ohio St. 98; 3 Mason (U. S.) 478; 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 353; Story, Bailm. § 439. Those cases sometimes called ventuum (the corresponding civil-law term), such as where corn is delivered to a miller to be ground into wheat, are either cases of hiring of labor and service, as where the miller grinds and returns the identical wheat ground into flour, retaining a portion for his services, or constitute a mere exchange, as where he mixes the wheat with his own, undertaking to furnish an equivalent in corn. It amounts to a contract of sale; payment being stipulated for in a specified article instead of money.

LOAN FOR USE. A bailment of an article to be used by the borrower without paying for the use. 2 Kent, Comm. (4th Ed.) 573.

Loan for use (called commodatum in the civil law) differs from a loan for consumption (called mutuum in the civil law) in this, that the commodatum must be specifically returned; the mutuum is to be returned in kind. In the case of a commodatum, the property in the thing remains in the lender; in a mutuum, the property passes to the borrower.

LOAN SOCIETIES. In English law. A kind of club formed for the purpose of advancing money on loan to the industrial classes. They are of comparatively recent origin in England, and are authorized and regulated by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110, and 21 Vict. c. 19.

LOBBYING. Personal solicitation of a member of a legislative body during a session thereof, by one not a member, with reference to any matter pending in the legislature, so called from the fact that such solicitation is supposed to take place in the "lobby" of the legislative hall.

The term is generally used in a bad sense, as including only secret or wrongful solicitation, and not the submission of petitions, or the presentation of arguments, at a proper time and place.

As a general rule, all contracts for personal solicitation of legislators, or the use of personal influence with them, are void, though no bribery or other corrupt practice is contemplated. 36 N. Y. 241; 101 U. S. 108. But the professional services of a lawyer may be employed for legitimate purposes connected with pending legislation, such as the presentation of evidence or argument openly, and at proper times and places. 80 Va. 475; 21 Wall. (U. S.) 441.

L'OBLIGATION SANS CAUSE, OU SUR une fausse cause, ou sur cause illicite, ne peut avoir aucun effet. An obligation without consideration, or upon a false consideration (which fails), or upon unlawful consideration, cannot have any effect. Code, 3. 3. 4; Chit. Cont. (10th Am. Ed.) 25, note.

LOCAL ACTION. In practice. An action the cause of which could have arisen in some particular county only.

All local actions must be brought in the county where the cause of action arose.

In general, all actions are local which seek the recovery of real property (2 W. Bl. 1070; 4 Term R. 504; 7 Term R. 589), whether founded upon contract or not; or damages for injury to such property, as waste, under the statute of Gloucester, trespass quare clausum fregit, trespass or case for injuries affecting things real, as for nuisances to houses or lands, disturbance of rights of way or of common, obstruction or diversion of ancient watercourses (1 Chit. Pl. 271; Gould, Pl. c. 3, §§ 105, 106, 107); but not if there were a contract between the parties on which to ground an action (15 Mass. 284; 1 Day [Conn.] 263).

Many actions arising out of injuries to local rights are local; as, quare impedit. 1 Chit. Pl. 241. The action of replevin is also local. 1 Wm. Saund. 247, note 1; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 111; Comyn, Dig. "Action." See "Transitory Action."

LOCAL ALLEGIANCE. The allegiance due to a government from an alien while within its limits. 1 Bl. Comm. 370; 2 Kent, Comm. 63, 64.

LOCAL CHATTEL. A fixture.

LOCAL COURT. A court whose jurisdiction is limited to a particular locality. Sometimes applied to the courts of the home jurisdiction, as opposed to foreign courts.

LOCAL CUSTOM. One whose observance is confined to a particular locality.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT. Government confined to a certain locality. The autonomous government of a minor subdivision of a state or country, as opposed to the general government.

LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS. Improvements made in a particular locality, by which the real estate in that locality is specially benefitted. Cooley, Tax'n, 109, 177, 419.

The question whether an improvement is local depends not on whether it is of use to the general public, but on the special benefit which will result to the real property adjoining or near the locality in which it is made. 22 Minn. 507.

LOCAL OPTION. A privilege granted to a locality of determining by popular vote whether a general law shall be effective in that locality. Usually applied to the determination by popular vote whether or not the sale of intoxicating liquor shall be allowed in a particular locality.

LOCAL PREJUDICE. A prejudice against a litigant, or in favor of his adversary, prevailing in a particular locality, and tending to prevent a fair trial there. Such prejudice is ground for change of venue.

LOCAL STATUTES. Statutes whose operation is intended to be restricted within certain limits, much less than the limits of the legislative jurisdiction. A statute is not local because it excludes from its operation one or two counties in the state. See 86 N. Y. 7; Dwarr. St. p. 384. It may be either public or private. 1 Bl. Comm. 85, 86, note. "Local statutes" is used by Lord Mansfield as opposed to "personal statutes," which relate to personal transitory contracts; whereas local statutes refer to things in a certain jurisdiction alone; e. g., the statute of frauds relates only to things in England. 1 W. Bl. 246.

LOCAL TAXES. Taxes (more often called "assessment") limited to certain civil divisions of the state or city.

LOCAL VENUE. The venue of a local action (q. v.)

LOCALITY. In Scotch law. This name is given to a life rent created in marriage contracts in favor of the wife, instead of leaving her to her legal life rent of terce. 1 Bell, Comm. 55. See "Jointure."

LOCARE. To let for hire; to deliver or bail a thing for a certain reward or compensation. Bracton, fol. 62.

LOCARIUM. In old European law. The price of letting; money paid for the hire of a thing; rent. Spelman.

LOCATARIUS. In civil law. A depositary.

LOCATE. To fix or definitely determine.

LOCATIO (Lat.) In civil law. Letting for hire. Calv. Lex.; Vocat. The term is also used by text writers upon the law of bailment at common law. 1 Pars. Cont. 602. In Scotch law it is translated "location." Bell, Dict.

LOCATIO-CONDUCTIO. In civil law. A compound word used to denote the contract of bailment for hire, expressing the action of both parties, viz., a letting by the one, and a hiring by the other. 2 Kent, Comm. 586, note; Story, Bailm. § 368.

LOCATIO CUSTODIAE. A letting to keep; a bailment or deposit of goods for hire. Story, Bailm. § 442.

LOCATIO MERCIUM VEHENDARUM (Lat.) In civil law. The carriage of goods for hire.

In respect to contracts of this sort entered into by private persons not exercising the business of common carriers, there does not seem to be any material distinction varying the rights, obligations, and duties of the parties from those of other bailees for hire. Every such private person is bound to ordinary diligence and a reasonable exercise of skill; and of course he is not responsible for any losses not occasioned by ordinary negligence, unless he has expressly, by the terms of his contract, taken upon himself such risk. 2 Ld. Raym. 909, 917, 918; 4 Taunt. 787; 6 Taunt. 577; 2 Marsh. 293; Jones, Bailm. 103, 106, 121; 2 Bos. & P. 417; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1020. See "Common Carriers."

LOCATIO OPERIS (Lat.) In civil law. The hiring of labor and services.

It is a contract by which one of the parties gives a certain work to be performed by the other, who binds himself to do it for the price agreed between them, which he who gives the work to be done promises to pay to the other for doing it. Poth. du Contr. de Louage, note 392. This is divided into two branches: First, locatio operis faciendi; and, secondly, locatio mercium vehendarum (q. v.)

LOCATIO OPERIS FACIENDI (Lat.) In civil law. Hire of services to be performed.

There are two kinds: First, the locatio operis faciendi, strictly so called, or the hire of labor and services; such as the hire of tailors to make clothes, and of jewelers to set gems, and of watchmakers to repair watches. Jones, Bailm. 90, 96, 97. Secondly, locatio custodiae, or the receiving of goods on deposit for a reward, which is properly the hire of care and attention about the goods. Story, Bailm. §§ 422, 442; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 994.

In contracts for work, it is of the essence of the contract, first, that there should be work to be done; secondly, for a price or reward; and, thirdly, a lawful contract between parties capable and intending to contract. Poth. du Contr. de Louage, notes 395-403.

LOCATIO REI (Lat.) In civil law. The hiring of a thing. It is a contract by which one of the parties obligates himself to give to the other the use and enjoyment of a certain thing for a period of time agreed upon between them, and in consideration of a price which the latter binds himself to pay in return. Poth. du Contr. de Louage, note 1.

LOCATION. In the apportionment of public lands, the selection and designation of lands which the person making the location claims under the law.

——In Scotch Law. A contract by which the temporary use of a subject, or the work or service of a person, is given for an ascertained hire. 1 Bell, Comm. bk. 2, pt. 3, c. 2, sec. 4, art. 2, § 1, p. 255. See "Bailment;" "Hire."

LOCATIVE CALLS. Calls describing certain means by which the land to be located can be identified.

Reference to physical objects in entries and deeds, by which the land to be located is exactly described. 2 Bibb (Ky.) 145; 3 Bibb (Ky.) 414.

Special, as distinguished from general, calls or descriptions. 3 Bibb (Ky.) 414; 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 211; 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 463; 7 Pet. (U. S.) 171; 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 157; 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 257; 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 29; 10 Grat. (Va.) 445; Jones Law (N. C.) 469; 16 Ga. 141; 5 Ind. 302; 15 Mo. 80; 2 Bibb (Ky.) 118.

LOCATOR. In civil law. He who leases or lets a thing to hire to another. His duties are, first, to deliver to the hirer the thing hired, that he may use it; second, to guaranty to the hirer the free enjoyment of it; third, to keep the thing hired in good order in such manner that the hirer may enjoy it; fourth, to warrant that the thing hired has not such defects as to destroy its use. Poth. du Contr. de Louage, note 53.

LOCK-UP HOUSE. A place used temporarily as a prison.

LOCKMAN. An officer in the Isle of Man to execute the orders of the governor, something like our undersheriff. Wharton.

LOCO PARENTIS. See "In Loco Parentis."

LOCOCESSION (Lat.) In the civil law. The act of giving place.

LOCUM TENENS (Lat.) Holding the place. Applied to a deputy.

LOCUPLES (Lat.) In civil law. Able to respond in an action; good for the amount which the plaintiff might recover. Dig. 50. 16. 234. 1.

LOCUS (Lat.) A place; the place where a thing is done.

LOCUS CONTRACTUS. See "Lex Loci."

LOCUS CONTRACTUS REGIT ACTUM. The place of the contract governs the act. 2 Kent, Comm. 458.

LOCUS CRIMINIS. The locality of a crime; the place where a crime was committed.

LOCUS DELICTI. The place where the tort, offense, or injury has been committed.

LOCUS IN QUO (Lat. the place in which). In pleading. The place where anything is alleged to have been done. 1 Salk. 94.

LOCUS PARTITUS. In old English law. A place divided; a division made between two towns or counties to make out in which the land or place in question lies. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 15, § 1; Cowell.

LOCUS PRO SOLUTIONE REDITUS AUT pecuniae secundum conditionem dimissionis aut obligationis est stricte observandus. The place for the payment of rent or money is to be strictly observed according to the condition of the lease or obligation. 4 Coke, 73.

LOCUS PUBLICUS. In civil law. A public place. Dig. 43. 8. 1; Id. 43. 8. 2. 3.

LOCUS REGIT ACTUM. In private international law. The rule that, when a legal transaction complies with the formalities required by the law of the country where it is done, it is also valid in the country where it is to be given effect, although by the law of that country other formalities are required. 8 Savigny, System, § 381; Westl. Priv. Int. Law, 159.

LOCUS REI SITAE. See "Lex Rei Sitae."

LOCUS SIGILLI. The place of the seal.

The letters L. S. (an abbreviation of locus sigilli), surrounded by a scroll, is in some states held a good seal (5 Wis. 549), but in others a common-law seal is required. See "Seals."

LOCUS STANDI. A place of standing; standing in court. A right of appearance in a court of justice, or before a legislative body, on a given question.

LODEMAN. In old English law. A kind of pilot who navigated a vessel within a harbor. Jacob.

LODEMANAGE. Pilotage fees paid to a lodeman.

LODGER. One who inhabits a portion of a house of which another has the general possession and custody. It is by this retention of general possession and control by another that a "lodger" is distinguished from a "tenant."

It is difficult, in the present state of the law, to state exactly the distinctions between a "lodger," a "guest," and a "boarder." A person may be a guest at an inn without being a lodger. 1 Salk. 388; 9 Pick. (Mass.) 280; 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 653; 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 242; 16 Ala. (N. S.) 666; 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 535; 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 193; 6 C. B. 132. And boarder includes one who regularly takes his meals with, and forms in some degree a part of, the householder's family. 25 Eng. Law & Eq. 76.

LODS ET RENTES. A fine payable to the seigneur upon every sale of lands within his seigniory. 1 Low. (U. S.) 59.

Any transfer of lands for a consideration gives rise to the claim (1 Low. [U. S.] 79); as, the creation of a rente viagire (life rent) (1 Low. [U. S.] 84); a transfer under bail emphyteotique (1 Low. [U. S.] 295); a promise to sell, accompanied by transfer of possession (9 Low. [U. S.] 272). It does not arise on a transfer by a father to his son subject to a payment by the son of a life rent to the father, and of the father's debts (8 Low. [U. S.] 5, 34, 324); nor where property is required for public uses (1 Low. [U. S.] 91).

LOG BOOK. A ship's journal. It contains a minute account of the ship's course, with a short history of every occurrence during the voyage. 1 Marsh. Ins. 408.

LOG ROLLING. A name given to a legislative practice of obtaining the passage of several measures by a combination of minorities. The original method was to embody the different measures in a single bill, and pass the same by a united vote of the minorities favoring each. This practice is now rendered impossible by constitutional provision in most of the states, that no bill shall embrace more than one subject. The term is now applied to the practice of agreement by minorities favoring several bills to vote for all.

LOGIA, or LOGIUM. A small house.

LOGOGRAPHUS. In Roman law. A public clerk or accountant.

LOLLARDS. A body of primitive Wesleyans, who assumed importance about the time of John Wycliffe (1360), and were very successful in disseminating evangelical truth; but, being implicated (apparently against their will) in the insurrection of the villeins in 1381, the statute De Haeretico Comburendo (2 Hen. IV. c. 15) was passed against them, for their suppression. Brown.

LONG. See "Gambling Contract."

LONG INTEREST. See "Gambling Contract."

LONG MARKET. See "Gambling Contract."

LONG PARLIAMENT. The name usually given to the parliament which met in November, 1640, under Charles I., and was dissolved by Cromwell on the 10th of April, 1653. The name "Long Parliament" is, however, also given to the parliament which met in 1661, after the restoration of the monarchy, and was dissolved on the 30th of December, 1678. This latter parliament is sometimes called, by way of distinction, the "long parliament of Charles II." Mozley & W.

LONG QUINTO, THE. An expression used to denote part second of the Year Book which gives reports of cases in 5 Edw. IV.

LONG VACATION. The recess of the English courts from August 10th to October 24th.

LONGA PATIENTIA TRAHITUR AD CONsensum. Long sufferance is construed as consent. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 26, § 4.

LONGA POSSESSIO EST PACIS JUS. Long possession is the law of peace. Co. Litt. 6.

LONGA POSSESSIO JUS PARIT. Long possession begets right. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 15, § 6.

LONGA POSSESSIO PARIT JUS POSSIdendi, et tollit actionem vero domino. Long possession produces the right of possession, and takes away from the true owner his action. Co. Litt. 110.

LONGUM TEMPUS, ET LONGUS USUS qui excedit memoria hominum, sufficit pro jure. Long time, and long use beyond the memory of man, suffices for right. Co. Litt. 115.

LOPWOOD. A right in the inhabitants of a parish, within a manor in England, to lop for fuel, at certain periods of the year, the branches of trees growing upon the waste lands of the manor.

LOQUELA (Lat.) In practice. An imparlance, loquela sine die, a respite in law to an indefinite time. Formerly by loquela was meant the allegations of fact mutually made on either side, now denominated the "pleadings." Steph. Pl. 29.

LOQUENDUM UT VULGUS; SENTIENdum ut docti. We should speak as the common people; we should think as the learned. 7 Coke, 11.

LORD.

——In Feudal Law. The superior of whom land is held by feudal tenure.

——In English Law. A title belonging to the degree of baron, but sometimes applied to all persons of nobility. 1 Bl. Comm. 396.

LORD ADVOCATE. The chief public prosecutor of Scotland. 2 Alis. Crim. Pr. 84.

LORD CHIEF BARON. The chief judge of the English court of exchequer, prior to the judicature acts.

LORD CHIEF JUSTICE. See "Justice."

LORD HIGH CHANCELLOR. See "Chancellor, The Lord High."

LORD HIGH STEWARD. In England, when a person is impeached, or when a peer is tried on indictment for treason or felony before the house of lords, one of the lords is appointed lord high steward, and acts as speaker pro tempore. Sweet.

LORD HIGH TREASURER. An officer formerly existing in England, who had the charge of the royal revenues and customs duties, and of leasing the crown lands. His functions are now vested in the lords commissioners of the treasury. Mozley & W.

LORD IN GROSS. In feudal law. He who is lord, not by reason of any manor, but as the king in respect of his crown, etc. "Very lord" is he who is immediate lord to his tenant; and "very tenant," he who holds immediately of that lord. So that, where there is lord paramount, lord mesne, and tenant, the lord paramount is not very lord to the tenant. Wharton.

LORD JUSTICE CLERK. The second judicial officer in Scotland.

LORD KEEPER. Originally another name for the lord chancellor. After Henry II.'s reign they were sometimes divided, but now there cannot be a lord chancellor and lord keeper at the same time, for by St. 5 Eliz. c. 18, they are declared to be the same office. Com. Dig. "Chancery" (B 1).

LORD MAYOR'S COURT. In English law. One of the chief courts of special and local jurisdiction in London. It is a court of the queen, held before the lord mayor and aldermen. Its practice and procedure are amended, and its powers enlarged, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 157. In this court, the recorder, or, in his absence, the common serjeant, presides as judge; and from its judgments error may be brought in the exchequer chamber. 3 Steph. Comm. 449, note (l).

LORD OF A MANOR. The grantee or owner of a manor.

LORD ORDINARY. In Scotch law. A judge of sessions officiating for the time being as the judge of first instance.

LORDS APPELLANTS. Five peers who for a time superseded Richard II. in his government, and whom, after a brief control of the government, he in turn superseded in 1397, and put the survivors of them to death. Richard II.'s eighteen commissioners (twelve peers and six commoners) took their place, as an embryo privy council acting with full powers, during the parliamentary recess. Brown.

LORD'S DAY. Sunday. Co. Litt. 135.

LORDS MARCHERS. Those noblemen who lived on the marches of Wales or Scotland, who in times past had their laws and power of life and death, like petty kings. Abolished by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26, and 6 Edw. VI. c. 10. Wharton.

LORDS OF ERECTION. On the reformation in Scotland, the king, as proprietor of benefices formerly held by abbots and priors, gave them out in temporal lordships to favorites, who were termed "lords of erection." Wharton.

LORDS OF PARLIAMENT. Those who have seats in the house of lords. During bankruptcy, peers are disqualified from sitting or voting in the house of lords. 34 & 35 Vict. c. 50. Wharton.

LORDS ORDAINERS. Lords appointed in 1312, in the reign of Edward II., for the control of the sovereign and the court party, and for the general reform and better government of the country. Brown.

LORDS SPIRITUAL. The archbishops and bishops who have seats in the house of lords.

LORDS TEMPORAL. Those lay peers who have seats in the house of lords.

LORDSHIP. Dominion, manor, seigniory, domain; also a title of honor used to a nobleman not being a duke. It is also the customary titulary appellation of the judges and some other persons in authority and office. Wharton.

LOSS. In insurance. The destruction of or damage to the insured subject by the perils insured against, according to the express provisions and construction of the contract.

These accidents, or misfortunes, or perils, as they are usually denominated, are all distinctly enumerated in the policy. And no loss, however great or unforeseen, can be a loss within the policy unless it be the direct and immediate consequence of one or more of these perils. Marsh. Ins. 1, c. 12.

Loss under a life policy is simply the death of the subject by a cause the risk of which is not expressly excepted in the policy, and where the loss is not fraudulent, as where one assured, who assures the life of another for his own benefit, procures the death.

Loss in insurance against fire must, under the usual form of policy, be by the partial or total destruction or damage of the thing insured by fire.

In maritime insurance, in which loss by fire is one of the risks usually included, the loss insured against may be absolutely or constructively total, or a partial or general average loss, or a particular average.

A partial loss is any loss or damage short of, or not amounting to, a total loss; for if it be not the latter, it must be the former. See 4 Mass. 374; 6 Mass. 102, 122, 317; 12 Mass. 170, 288; 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 237; 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 487; 5 Bin. (Pa.) 595; 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 553.

A total loss is such destruction of, or damage to, the thing insured that it is of little or no value to the owner.

Partial losses are sometimes denominated average losses, because they are often in the nature of those losses which are the subject of average contributions; and they are distinguished into general and particular averages. See "Average."

Total losses, in maritime insurance, are absolutely such when the entire thing perishes or becomes of no value. Constructively, a loss may become total where the value remaining is of such a small amount that the whole may be surrendered. See "Abandonment."

Consult Phil. Ins.; Arnold, Ins.; Pars. Mar. Law. See "Total Loss."

LOST, OR NOT LOST. A phrase in policies of insurance, signifying the contract to be retrospective and applicable to any loss within the specified risk, provided the same is not already known to either of the parties, and that neither has any knowledge or information not equally obvious or known to the other. The clause has been adopted only in maritime insurance; though a fire or life policy is not unfrequently retrospective, or, under a different phraseology, by a provision that the risk is to commence at some time prior to its date. 1 Phil. Ins. § 925.

LOST PAPERS. Papers which have been destroyed (107 Mass. 546), or so mislaid that they cannot be found after diligent search (1 Vt. 470; 9 Gray [Mass.] 351).

LOT. That which fortuitously determines what we are to acquire.

When it can be certainly known what are our rights, we ought never to resort to a decision by lot; but when it is impossible to tell what actually belongs to us, as if an estate is divided into three parts, and one part given to each of three persons, the proper way to ascertain each one's part is to draw lots. Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 669.

LOT AND SCOT. In English law. Certain duties which must be paid by those who claim to exercise the elective franchise within certain cities and boroughs, before they are entitled to vote. It is said that the practice became uniform to refer to the poor rate as a register of "scot and lot" voters; so that the term, when employed to define a right of election, meant only the payment by a parishioner of the sum to which he was assessed on the poor rate. Brown.

LOT OF GROUND. A small piece of land in a town or city, usually employed for building, a yard, a garden, or such other urban use. 2 Ohio St. 124; 25 Ark. 101. Lots are "in-lots," or those within the boundary of the city or town, and "out-lots," or those which are out of such boundary, and which are used by some of the inhabitants of such town or city.

LOTHERWITE, or LEYERWIT. In old English law. A liberty or privilege to take amends for lying with a bondwoman without license.

LOTTERY. A scheme for the distribution of prizes by lot to persons buying chances. 49 Ala. 396. A scheme whereby one, on paying money or other valuable thing to another, becomes entitled to receive from him such a return in value or nothing as some formula of chance may determine. Bish. St. Crimes, § 952.

A lottery has been distinguished from a mere bet or wager in that the latter is executory on both sides, and determined by an independent event; while in case of the former, a price is paid for a chance of a prize, and it is determined by the manager of the game, according to a prearranged scheme, whether he who pays the money is to have a prize. 137 Mass. 250.

A gift enterprise (q. v.) is a lottery (37 Tenn. 507), as is any enterprise by which prizes are paid by lot to persons paying to become members of an association (8 N. Y. 228; 33 N. H. 329; 59 Ill. 160).

L'OU LE LEY DONE CHOSE, LA CEO done remedie a vener a ceo. Where the law gives a right, it gives a remedy to recover. 2 Rolle, 17.

LOUAGE (Fr.) This is the contract of hiring and letting in French law, and may be either of things or of labor. The varieties of each are the following:

(1) Letting of things; bail a loyer being the letting of houses; bail a ferme being the letting of lands.

(2) Letting of labor; loyer being the letting of personal service; bail a cheptel being the letting of animals. Brown.

LOUDRES (Law Fr.) London.

LOVE DAY. The day on which any dispute between neighbors was amicably settled, or a day on which one neighbor helped another without hire. Wharton.

LOW JUSTICE. In old European law. Jurisdiction of petty offenses, as distinguished from "high justice" (q. v.)

LOW-WATER MARK. That part of the shore of the sea to which the waters recede when the tide is lowest.

The ordinary low-water mark, independent of spring or neap tides on the ocean, or of drought or freshet in respect to rivers. 60 Pa. St. 343. See "High-Water Mark."

LOWBOTE. Recompense for the death of one killed in an affray.

LOYAL. Legal, or according to law; as, loyal matrimony, a lawful marriage.

"Uncore n'est loyal a homme de faire un tort," it is never lawful for a man to do a wrong. Dyer, fol. 36, § 38. "Et per curiam n'est loyal," and it was held by the court that it was not lawful. T. Jones, 24. Also spelled loayl. Dyer, fol. 36, § 38; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict. The Norman spelling is "loyse." Kelham.

Faithful to a prince or superior; true to plighted faith or duty. Webster.

LOYALTY. Adherence to law; faithfulness to the existing government.

LUBRICUM LINGUAE NON FACILE TRAhendum est in poenam. The slipperiness of the tongue, i. e., its liability to err, ought not lightly to be subjected to punishment. Cro. Car. 117.

LUCID INTERVALS. In medical jurisprudence. Periods in which a lunatic is so far free from his disease that the ordinary legal consequences of insanity do not apply to acts done therein.

LUCRATIVA CAUSA (Lat.) In Roman law. A consideration which is voluntary; that is to say, a gratuitous gift, or such like. It was opposed to onerosa causa, which denoted a valuable consideration. It was a principle of the Roman law that two lucrative causes could not concur in the same person as regarded the same thing; that is to say, that, when the same thing was bequeathed to a person by two different testators, he could not have the thing (or its value) twice over. Brown.

LUCRATIVA USUCAPIO (Lat.) This species of usucapio was permitted in Roman law only in the case of persons taking possession of property upon the decease of its late owner, and in exclusion or deforcement of the heir, whence it was called "usucapio pro haerede." The adjective "lucrativa" denoted that property was acquired by this usucapio without any consideration or payment for it by way of purchase; and, as the possessor who so acquired the property was a mala fide possessor, his acquisition, or usucapio, was called also "improba," i. e., dishonest; but this dishonesty was tolerated (until abolished by Hadrian) as an incentive to force the haeres to take possession, in order that the debts might be paid and the sacrifices performed; and, as a further incentive to the haeres, this usucapio was complete in one year. Brown.

LUCRATIVE SUCCESSION. In Scotch law. The passive title of praeceptio haereditatis, by which, if an heir apparent receive gratuitously a part, however small, of the heritage which would come to him as heir, he is liable for all grantor's precontracted debts. Ersk. Inst. 3. 8. 87-89; Stair, Inst. 3. 7.

LUCRI CAUSA (Lat. for the sake of gain). In criminal law. A term descriptive of the intent of deriving personal gain with which property is taken in cases of larceny, robbery, and other crimes against property. It is generally held not to be essential (34 Minn. 221; 52 Ala. 411; 17 Tex. 521), though the contrary has been held (1 McAll. [U. S.] 196).

LUCRUM CESSANS. In Scotch law. A cessation of gain. Opposed to damnum emergens, an actual loss.

LUCRUM FACERE EX PUPILLI TUTEla tutor non debet. A guardian ought not to make money out of the guardianship of his ward. 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 527, 535.

LUCTUOSA HAEREDITAS. A mournful inheritance. See "Haereditas Luctuosa."

LUGGAGE. This term is synonymous with "baggage;" the latter being in more common use in this country, while the former seems to be almost exclusively used in England. See "Baggage."

LUMEN. In the civil law. Light; an easement of light. The plural form was lumina.

LUNACY. See "Insanity."

LUNATIC. One who is insane. See "Insanity."

LUNATICUS, QUI GAUDET IN LUCIDIS intervallis. He is a lunatic who enjoys lucid intervals. 1 Story, Cont. (4th Ed.) 70.

LUPANATRIX. In Roman law. A bawd.

LUPINUM CAPUT GERERE (Lat.) To be outlawed, and have one's head exposed, like a wolf's, with a reward to him who should take it. Cowell.

LUXURY. Excess and extravagance, which was formerly an offense against the public economy, but is not now punishable. 1 Jac. I. c. 25.

LYEF GELD. In Saxon law. Leave money; a small sum paid by customary tenant for leave to plough, etc. Cowell; Somn. Gavelkind, p. 27.

LYING IN FRANCHISE. Things derelict, such as waifs, wrecks, estrays, and the like, which may be seized without suit or action. 3 Steph. Comm. 258.

LYING IN GRANT. Capable of being passed by grant without livery of seisin.

Incorporeal rights and things which cannot be transferred by livery of possession, but which exist only in idea, in contemplation of law, are said to lie in grant, and pass by the mere delivery of the deed.

LYING IN LIVERY. Incapable of being passed by grant without livery.

LYNCH LAW. A common phrase used to express the vengeance of a mob inflicting an injury and committing an outrage upon a person suspected of some offense. In England this is called "Lidford Law."

LYNDHURST'S (LORD) ACT. This statute (5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 54) renders marriages within the prohibited degrees absolutely null and void. Theretofore such marriages were voidable merely.

LYON, KING OF ARMS. In Scotch law. The chief herald.

LYTAE. In the old Roman law. A name given to students of the civil law in the fourth year of their course, from their being supposed capable of solving any difficulty in law. Tayl. Civ. Law, 39.

M

M. Persons convicted of manslaughter, in England, were formerly marked with this letter on the brawn of the thumb.

This letter is sometimes put on the face of treasury notes of the United States, and signifies that the treasury note bears interest at the rate of one mill per centum, and not one per centum interest. 13 Pet. (U. S.) 176.

MACE BEARER. In English law. An officer attending the court of session.

MACE PROOF. Secure against arrest.

MACEDONIAN DECREE. In Roman law. A decree of the Roman senate, which derived its name from that of a certain usurer, who was the cause of its being made, in consequence of his exactions.

It was intended to protect sons who lived under the paternal jurisdiction from the unconscionable contracts which they sometimes made on the expectations after their fathers' deaths; another, and perhaps the principal, object, was to cast odium on the rapacious creditors. It declared such contracts void. Dig. 14. 6. 1; Domat, Civ. Law, liv. 1, tit. 6, § 4; Fonbl. Eq. bk. 1, c. 2, § 12, note. See "Catching Bargain;" "Post Obit."

MACEGRIEF, or MACEGREF. In old English law. One who bought stolen meat, knowing it to be stolen. Spelman.

MACER. A mace bearer; an officer attending the court of session in Scotland.

MACHINATION. The act by which some plot or conspiracy is contrived or set on foot; an artful design.

MACHINE. In patent law. Any contrivance which is used to regulate or modify the relations between force, motion, and weight.

In its broadest signification, this term is applied to any contrivance which is used to regulate or modify the relations between force, motion, and weight. "The term 'machine' includes every mechanical device or combination of mechanical powers and devices to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result." 15 How. (U. S.) 267.

What are sometimes called the "simple machines" are six in number: The lever, the pulley, the wheel and axle, the wedge, the screw, and the inclined plane. These are sometimes known as the mechanical powers, though neither these nor any other machinery can ever constitute or create power. They can only economize, control, direct, and render it useful.

Machines, as generally seen and understood, are compounded of these simple machines in some of their shapes and modifications. Such a combination as, when in operation, will produce some specific final result, is regarded as an entire machine. It is so treated in the patent law; for, although a new machine, or a new improvement of a machine, is an invention, and although only one invention can be included in a single patent, still, several different contrivances, each of which is in one sense a machine, may all be separately claimed in a single patent, provided they all contribute to improve or to constitute one machine, and are intended to produce a single ultimate result; and a new combination of machines is patentable, whether the machines themselves be new or old. 3 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 69; 1 Story (U. S.) 273, 568; 2 Story (U. S.) 609; 1 Mason (U. S.) 474; 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 482; 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 454.

MACHINERY. This term is said to be more comprehensive than "machine," including the appurtenances necessary to its working. 111 Mass. 540.

MACTATOR. A murderer.

MADE KNOWN. Words used as a return to a scire facias when it has been served on the defendant.

MAEC BURGH (Saxon). Family.

MAEGBOTE, or MAEGBOT. In Saxon law. A recompense or satisfaction for the slaying or murder of a kinsman. Spelman.

MAGIS (Lat.) More.

MAGIS DE BONO QUAM DE MALO LEX intendit. The law favors a good rather than a bad construction. Co. Litt. 78b. Where the words used in an agreement are susceptible of two meanings, the one agreeable to, the other against, the law, the former is adopted. Thus, a bond conditioned "to assign all offices" will be construed to apply to such offices only as are assignable. Chit. Cont. 78.

MAGIS DIGNUM TRAHIT AD SE MINUS dignum. The more worthy draws to itself the less worthy. Y. B. 20 Hen. VI. 2, arg.

MAGISTER (Lat.) A master; a ruler; one whose learning and position make him superior to others. Thus, one who has attained to a high degree or eminence in science and literature is called a "master;" as, master of arts.

MAGISTER AD FACULTATES (Lat.) In English ecclesiastical law. The title of an officer who grants dispensations; as, to marry, to eat flesh on days prohibited, and the like. Bac. Abr. "Ecclesiastical Courts" (A 5).

MAGISTER CANCELLARIAE. In old English law. Master in chancery.

MAGISTER EQUITUM. In Roman law. Master of the horse.

MAGISTER LIBELLORUM. In Roman law. Master of requests.

MAGISTER NAVIS (Lat.) In civil law. Master of a ship; he to whom the whole care of a ship is given up, whether appointed by the owner, or charterer, or master. Calv. Lex.; Story, Ag. § 36.

MAGISTER RERUM USUS. Use is the master of things. Co. Litt. 229b. Usage is a principal guide in practice.

MAGISTER RERUM USUS; MAGISTRA rerum experientia. Use is the master of things; experience is the mistress of things. Co. Litt. 69, 229; Wingate, Max. 752.

MAGISTER SOCIETATIS (Lat.) In civil law. Managing partner. Vicat; Calv. Lex. Especially used of an officer employed in the business of collecting revenues, who had power to call together the tything men (decumands), as it were a senate, and lay matters before them, and keep account of all receipts, etc. He had, generally, an agent in the province, who was also sometimes called magister societatis. Id.; Story, Partn. § 95.

MAGISTERIAL. Pertaining to a magistrate.

MAGISTRACY. In its most enlarged signification, this term includes all officers, legislative, executive, and judicial. For example, in most of the state constitutions will be found this provision: "The powers of the government are divided into three distinct departments, and each of these is confided to a separate magistracy, to wit, those which are legislative, to one; those which are executive, to another; and those which are judiciary, to another." In a more confined sense, it signifies the body of officers whose duty it is to put the laws in force; as, judges, justices of the peace, and the like. In a still narrower sense, it is employed to designate the body of justices of the peace. It is also used for the office of a magistrate.

MAGISTRALIA BREVIA (Lat.) Writs adapted to special cases, and so called because drawn by the masters in chancery. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 239. For the difference between these and judicial writs, see Bracton, 413b.

MAGISTRATE. A public civil officer, invested with some part of the legislative, executive, or judicial power given by the constitution.

The president of the United States is the chief magistrate of this nation; the governors are the chief magistrates of their respective states.

In a narrower sense, an inferior judicial officer, as a justice of the peace. The term generally applies to judicial officers having power to issue warrants for the arrest of persons charged with crime, but the use of the term has been held not to necessarily imply such a power. 32 Ark. 124.

MAGISTRATE'S COURT. The court of a magistrate (q. v.)

——In South Carolina. A court having exclusive jurisdiction in matters of contract of and under twenty dollars.

MAGISTRATUS. In civil law. A magistrate. Calv. Lex.

MAGNA ASSISA. The grand assize.

MAGNA ASSISA ELIGENDA. See "De Magna, etc."

MAGNA AVENA. Great beasts (oxen, etc.)

MAGNA CENTUM. The great hundred, or six score. Wharton.

MAGNA CHARTA. The great charter of English liberties, so called, but which was really a compact between the king and his barons, and almost exclusively for the benefit of the latter, though confirming the ancient liberties of Englishmen in some few particulars, was wrung from King John by his barons assembled in arms, on the 15th of June, 1215, and was given by the king's hand, as a confirmation of his own act, on the little island in the Thames, within the county of Buckinghamshire, which is still called "Magna Charta Island."

The preliminary interview was held in the meadow of Running Mede, or Runny Mede (from Saxon rune, council), that is, council meadow, which had been used constantly for national assembles, and which was situated on the southwest side of the Thames, between Staines and Windsor. Though such formalities were observed, the provisions of the charter were disregarded by John and succeeding kings, each of whom, when wishing to do a popular thing, confirmed this charter. There were thirty-two confirmations between 1215 and 1416, the most celebrated of which were those by Hen. III. (1225) and Edw. I., which last confirmation was sealed with the great seal of England at Ghent, on the 5th of November, 1297. The Magna Charta printed in all the books as of 9 Hen. III. is really a transcript of the roll of parliament of 25 Edw. I. There were many originals of Magna Charta made, two of which are preserved in the British Museum.

Magna Charta consists of thirty-seven chapters, the subject matter of which is various. Chapter 1 provides that the Anglican church shall be free, and possess its rights unimpaired, probably referring chiefly to immunity from papal jurisdiction. Chapter 2 fixes relief which shall be paid by king's tenant of full age. Chapter 3 relates to heirs and their being in ward. Chapter 4. Guardians of wards within age are by this chapter restrained from waste of ward's estate, "vasto hominum et rerum," waste of men and of things, which shows that serfs were regarded as slaves even by this much-boasted charter; and as serfs and freemen were at this time the divisions of society, and as freemen included, almost without exception, the nobility alone, we can see somewhat how much this charter deserves its name. Chapter 5 relates to the land and other property of heirs, and the delivering them up when the heirs are of age. Chapter 6 relates to the marriage of heirs. Chapter 7 provides that widow shall have quarantine of forty days in her husband's chief house, and shall have her dower set out to her at once, without paying anything for it, and in meanwhile to have reasonable estovers; the dower to be one-third of lands of husband, unless wife was endowed of less at the church door; widow not to be compelled to marry, but to find surety that she will not marry without consent of the lord of whom she holds. Marriage settlements have now in England taken the place, in great measure, of dower. Chapter 8. The goods and chattels of crown debtor to be exhausted before his rents and lands are distrained; the surety not to be called upon if the principal can pay. If sureties pay the debt, they to have the rents and lands of debtor till the debt is satisfied. Chapter 9 secures to London and other cities and boroughs and town barons of the five ports, and all other ports, to have their ancient liberties. Chapter 10 prohibits excessive distress for more services or rent than was due. Chapter 11 provides that court of common pleas should not follow the court of the king, but should be held in a certain place. They have been, accordingly, located at Westminster. Chapter 12 declares the manner of taking assizes of novel disseisin and mort d'ancestor. These were actions to recover lost seisin (q. v.), now abolished. Chapter 13 relates to assizes darein presentment brought by ecclesiastics to try right to present to ecclesiastical benefice. Abolished. Chapter 14 provides that amercement of a freeman for a fault shall be proportionate to his crime, and not excessive, and that the villein of any other than the king shall be amerced in same manner, his farm, utensils, etc., being preserved to him (salvo wanagio suo); for otherwise he could not cultivate lord's land. Chapter 15 and chapter 16 relate to making of bridges, and keeping in repair of sewers and sea walls. This is now regulated by local parochial law. Chapter 17 forbids sheriffs and coroners to hold pleas of the crown. Pleas of the crown are criminal cases which it is desirable should not be tried by an inferior and perhaps ignorant magistrate. Chapter 18 provides that, if any one holding a lay fee from crown die, the king's bailiff, on showing letters patent of summons for debt from the king, may attach all his goods and chattels, so that nothing be moved away till the debt to crown be paid off clearly, the residue to go to executors to perform the testament of the dead; and if there be no debt owing to crown, all the chattels of the deceased to go to executors, reserving, however, to the wife and children their reasonable parts. Debts to the government have precedence in United States, as well as in England. A man can now in England will away his whole personal property from wife and children, but not in some of the United States. See Gen. St. Mass. 1560. Chapter 19 relates to purveyance of king's house. Chapter 20 relates to the castle guard. Chapter 21 relates to taking horses, carts, and wood for use of royal castles. The three last chapters are now obsolete. Chapter 22 provides that the lands of felons shall go to the king for a year and a day; afterwards to the lord of the fee. So in France. The day is added to prevent dispute as to whether the year is exclusive or inclusive of its last day. Chapter 23 provides that the wears shall be pulled down in the Thames and Medway, and throughout England, except on the seacoast. These wears destroyed fish, and interrupted the floating of wood and the like down stream. Chapter 24 relates to the writ of praecipe in capite for lords against their tenants offering wrong, etc. Now abolished. Chapter 25 provides a uniform measure. See 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 63. Chapter 26 relates to inquisitions of life and member, which are to be granted freely. Now abolished. Chapter 27 relates to knight service and other ancient tenures, now abolished. Chapter 28 relates to accusations, which must be under oath. Chapter 29 provides that "no freeman shall be taken, or imprisoned, or disseised from his freehold, or liberties, or immunities, nor outlawed, nor exiled, nor in any manner destroyed, nor will we come upon him or send against him, except by legal judgment of his peers or the law of the land. We will sell or deny justice to none, nor put off right or justice." This clause is very much celebrated, as confirming the right to trial by jury. By common law, the twelve jurors must be unanimous. Lord Campbell, in England, recently introduced a bill changing this, and, in certain cases, allowing the majority to decide. Chapter 30 relates to merchant strangers, who are to be civilly treated, and, unless previously prohibited, are to have free passage through, and exit from, and dwelling in, England, without any manner of extortions, except in time of war. If they are of a country at war with England, and found in England at the beginning of the war, they are to be kept safely until it is found out how English merchants are treated in their country, and then are to be treated accordingly. Chapter 31 relates to escheats. Chapter 32 relates to the power of alienation in a freeman, which is limited. Chapter 33 relates to patrons of abbeys, etc. Chapter 34 provides that no appeal shall be brought by a woman except for death of her husband. This was because the defendant could not defend himself against a woman in single combat. The crime of murder or homicide is now inquired into by indictment. Chapter 35 relates to rights of holding county courts, etc. Obsolete. Chapter 36 provides that a gift of lands in mortmain shall be void, and lands so given go to lord of fee. Chapter 37 relates to escuage and subsidy. Chapter 38 confirms every article of the charter.

Magna Charta is said by some to have been so called because larger than the Charta de Foresta, which was given about the same time. Spelman. But see Cowell. Magna Charta is mentioned casually by Bracton, Fleta, and Britton. Glanville is supposed to have written before Magna Charta. The Mirror of Justices (chapter 315 et seq.) has a chapter on its defects. See 2 Inst.; Barr. Obs. St.; 4 Bl. Comm. 423. See a copy of Magna Charta in 1 Laws S. C., edited by Judge Cooper (page 78). In the Penny Magazine for the year 1833 (page 229), there is a copy of the original seal of King John affixed to this instrument; a specimen of a fac simile of the writings of Magna Charta, beginning at the passage, Nullus liber homo capietur vel imprisonetur, etc. A copy of both may be found in the Magasin Pittoresque for the year 1834 (pages 52, 53). See 8 Enc. Brit. 722; 6 Enc. Brit. 332; Wharton.

MAGNA CHARTA AND CHARTA DE foresta are called les deux grand charters. Magna Charta and the Charter of the Forest are called the two great charters. 2 Inst. 570.

MAGNA CULPA DOLUS EST. Great neglect is equivalent to fraud. Dig. 50. 16. 226; 2 Spears (S. C.) 256; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 646.

MAGNA NEGLIGENTIA CULPA EST; magna culpa dolus est. Gross negligence is a fault; gross fault is a fraud. Dig. 50. 16. 226. Culpa is an intermediate degree of negligence between negligentia, or lack of energetic care, and dolus, or fraud, seeming to approach nearly to our "negligence" in meaning.

MAGNA SERJEANTIA. In old English law. Grand serjeanty. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 4, § 1.

MAGNUM CAPE. Grand cape (q. v.)

MAGNUM CONCILIUM. In old English law. The great council; the general council of the realm; afterwards called "parliament." 1 Bl. Comm. 148; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law. 62; Spelman.

The king's great council of barons and prelates. Spelman; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 228.

MAGNUS ROTULUS STATUTORUM. The great statute roll. The first of the English statute rolls, beginning with Magna Charta, and ending with Edward III. Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 16, 17.

MAHEMIUM EST HOMICIDIUM INCHOatum. Mayhem is incipient homicide. 3 Inst. 118.

MAIDEN RENTS. In old English law. A fine paid to lords of some manors, on the marriage of tenants, originally given in consideration of the lord's relinquishing his customary right of lying the first night with the bride of a tenant. Cowell.

MAIHEM. See "Mayhem;" "Maim."

MAIHEMATUS. Maimed.

MAIHEMIUM, or MAIHEM. Mayhem (q. v.)

MAIHEMIUM EST INTER CRIMINA MAjora minimum, et inter minora maximum. Mayhem is the least of great crimes, and the greatest of small. Co. Litt. 127.

MAIHEMIUM EST MEMBRI MUTILATIO, et dici poterit, ubi aliquis in aliqua parte sui corporis effectus sit inutilis ad pugnandum. Mayhem is the mutilation of a member, and can be said to take place when a man is injured in any part of his body so as to be useless in fight. Co. Litt. 126.

MAIL (Fr. malle, a trunk). Originally used in reference to the bag or valise which postilions had behind them, and in which they carried letters. In modern usage it is a general term to express the carriage of letters by public authority. 6 Daly (N. Y.) 558. It is used also in reference to the whole or any part of the matter so carried. 41 Fed. 130.

MAILE. In old English law. A small piece of money; a rent or tribute.

MAILS AND DUTIES. In Scotch law. Rents of an estate. Stair, Inst. 2. 12. 32; 2 Ross, Lect. 235, 381, 431-439.

MAIM. In criminal law. To deprive a person of such part of his body as to render him less able in fighting or defending himself than he would have otherwise been. See "Mayhem."

MAINAD. Perjury. Cowell.

MAINE PORT. A small tribute, commonly of loaves of bread, which in some places the parishioners paid to the rector in lieu of small tithes. Cowell.

MAINOUR. In criminal law. The thing stolen found in the hands of the thief who has stolen it.

Hence, when a man is found with property which he has stolen, he is said to be taken with the mainour, that is, it is found in his hands.

Formerly there was a distinction made between a larceny, when the thing stolen was found in the hands of the criminal, and when the proof depended upon other circumstances not quite so irrefragable. The former properly was termed pris ove maynovere, or ove mainer, or mainour, as it is generally written. Barr. Obs. St. 315, 316, note.

MAINOVRE, or MAINOEUVRE. A trespass committed by hand. See 7 Rich. II. c. 4.

MAINPERNABLE. Capable of being bailed; one for whom bail may be taken; bailable.

MAINPERNORS. In English law. Those persons to whom a man is delivered out of custody or prison, on their becoming bound for his appearance.

Mainpernors differ from bail. A man's bail may imprison or surrender him up before the stipulated day of appearance; mainpernors can do neither, but are merely sureties for his appearance at the day. Bail are only sureties that the party be answerable for all the special matter for which they stipulate; mainpernors are bound to produce him to answer all charges whatsoever. 6 Mod. 231; 7 Mod. 77, 85, 98; 3 Bl. Comm. 128. See Dane, Abr.

MAINPRISE. In English law. The taking a man into friendly custody, who might otherwise be committed to prison, upon security given for his appearance at a time and place assigned. Wood, Inst. bk. 4, c. 4.

MAINSWORN. Forsworn, by making false oath with hand (main) on book. Used in the North of England. Brownl. & G. 4; Hob. 125.

MAINTAINED. In pleading. A technical word indispensable in an indictment for maintenance. 1 Wils. 325.

MAINTAINORS. In criminal law. Those who maintain or support a cause depending between others, not being retained as counsel or attorney. For this they may be fined and imprisoned. 2 Swift, Dig. 328; 4 Bl. Comm. 124; Bac. Abr. "Barrator."

MAINTENANCE. Aid, support, assistance; the support which one person, who is bound by law to do so, gives to another for his living; for example, a father is bound to find maintenance for his children; and a child is required by law to maintain his father or mother, when they cannot support themselves, and he has ability to maintain them. 1 Bouv. Inst. notes 284-286.

——In Criminal Law. A malicious, or, at least, officious, interference in a suit in which the offender has no interest, to assist one of the parties to it against the other, with money or advice to prosecute or defend the action without any authority of law. 1 Russ. Crimes, 176. See 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 623.

The intermeddling of a stranger in a suit for the purpose of stirring up strife and continuing the litigation. 2 Pars. Cont. 266. See 4 Term R. 340; 6 Bing. 299; 4 Q. B. 883.

There must be assistance actually rendered (1 Hempst. [Ark.] 300), though the suit need not be pending (13 Ired. [N. C.] 201), and under the modern doctrine, the assistance must be either in giving or hiring legal advice, or the bearing part of the expenses.

But there are many acts in the nature of maintenance which become justifiable from the circumstances under which they are done. They may be justified, first, because the party has an interest in the thing in variance, as when he has a bare contingency in the lands in question, which possibly may never come in esse (Bac. Abr. "Maintenance." And see 11 Mees. & W. 675; 9 Metc. [Mass.] 489; 13 Metc. [Mass.] 262; 1 Me. 292; 6 Me. 361; 11 Me. 111); second, because the party is of kindred or affinity, as father, son, or heir apparent, or husband or wife (3 Cow. [N. Y.] 623); third, because the relation of landlord and tenant or master and servant subsists between the party to the suit and the person who assists him; fourth, because the money is given out of charity (1 Bailey [S. C.] 401); fifth, because the person assisting the party to the suit is an attorney or counsellor; the assistance to be rendered must, however, be strictly professional, for a lawyer is not more justified in giving his client money than another man (1 Russ. Crimes, 179; Bac. Abr. "Maintenance;" Broke, Abr. "Maintenance"). See "Champerty."

MAINZIE (Scotch). Mayhem.

MAISON DE DIEU (Fr. house of God). A hospital; an almshouse; a monastery. St. 39 Eliz. c. 5.

MAIRE.

——In Old English Law. A mayor; an officer classed with justices and sheriffs.

——In Old Scotch Law. An officer to whom process was directed. Otherwise called "mair of fie" (fee), and classed with the serjand. Skene de Verb. Sign.

MAJESTAS. In Roman law. The magesty or prerogative of the sovereign or state.

MAJESTY. A term used of kings and emperors as a title of honor. It sometimes means power; as when we say, the majesty of the people. See Wolff. Inst. § 998.

MAJOR. One who has attained his full age, and has acquired all his civil rights: one who is no longer a minor; an adult.

——In Military Law. The officer next in rank above a captain.

MAJOR ANNUS. The greater year; the bissextile year, consisting of 366 days. Bracton, fol. 359b.

MAJOR-GENERAL. In military law. An officer next in rank above a brigadier general. He commands a division consisting of several brigades, or even an army.

MAJOR HAEREDITAS VENIT UNICUIque nostrum a jure et legibus quam a parentibus. A greater inheritance comes to every one of us from right and the laws than from parents. 2 Inst. 56.

MAJOR NUMERUS IN SE CONTINET minorem. The greater number contains in itself the less. Bracton, 16.

MAJORA REGALIA. See "Regalia."

MAJORE POENA AFFECTUS QUAM legibus statuta est, non est infamis. One affected with a greater punishment than is provided by law is not infamous. 4 Inst. 66.

MAJORES.

——In Roman Law and Genealogical Tables. The male ascendants beyond the sixth degree.

——In Old English Law. Greater persons; persons of higher condition or estate.

MAJORI CONTINET IN SE MINUS. The greater includes the less. 19 Viner, Abr. 379.

MAJORI SUMMAE MINOR INEST. The lesser is included in the greater sum. 2 Kent, Comm. 618; Story, Ag. § 172.

MAJORITY. The state or condition of a person who has arrived at full age. He is then said to be a "major," in opposition to "minor," which is his condition during infancy.

The greater number; more than all the opponents.

MAJUS DIGNUM TRAHIT AD SE MINUS dignum. The more worthy or the greater draws to it the less worthy or the lesser. 5 Viner, Abr. 584, 586; Co. Litt. 43, 355b; 2 Inst. 307; Finch, Law, 22.

MAJUS EST DELICTUM SEIPSUM OCcidere quam alium. It is a greater crime to kill one's self than another.

MAJUS JUS. In old practice. Greater right, or more right. A plea in the old real actions. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 476. Majus jus merum, more mere right. Bracton, fol. 31.

MAKE. To perform or execute; as, to make his law is to perform that which a man had bound himself to do; that is, to clear himself of an action commenced against him, by his oath and the oath of his neighbors. Old Nat. Brev. 161. To make a contract is to execute the same. To make default is to fail to appear in proper trial. To make oath is to swear according to the form prescribed by law. To make money on an execution is to collect the same. It is also used intransitively of persons and things, to have effect, to tend; e. g., "That case makes for me." Hardr. 133; Webster. See "Facias."

MAKER. A term applied to one who makes a promissory note, and promises to pay it when due.

He who makes a bill of exchange is called the "drawer;" and frequently in common parlance and in books of reports we find the word "drawer" inaccurately applied to the maker of a promissory note. See "Promissory Note."

MAKING HIS LAW. A phrase used to denote the act of a person who wages his law. Bac. Abr. "Wager of Law."

MALA (Lat). Bad.

MALA FIDES (Lat.) Bad faith. It is opposed to bona fides, good faith.

MALA GRAMMATICA NON VITIAT chartam; sed in expositione instrumentorum mala grammatica quoad fieri possit evitanda est. Bad grammar does not vitiate a deed; but in the construction of instruments, bad grammar, as far as it can be done, is to be avoided. 6 Coke, 39; 9 Coke, 48; Viner, Abr. "Grammar" (A); Lofft, 441; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 612.

MALA IN SE. That which is wrong in itself, without regard to statutory prohibition, because of its palpable and proximate injury to the public peace, order, or morals.

A distinction was formerly made, in respect of contracts, between mala prohibita and mala in se; but that distinction has been exploded, and it is now established that when the provisions of an act of the legislature have for their object the protection of the public, it makes no difference, with respect to contracts, whether the thing be prohibited absolutely or under a penalty. 5 Barn. & Ald. 335, 340; 10 Barn. & C. 98; 3 Starkie, 61; 13 Pick. (Mass.) 518; 2 Bing. N. C. 636, 646. The distinction is, however, important in criminal law in some cases with reference to the question of intent. 1 Bish. Crim. Law, § 2157.

Thus, one who kills another by accident in committing a misdemeanor mala in se is guilty of manslaughter, but otherwise if the misdemeanor was mala prohibita. 1 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 20.

Crimes mala in se include all common-law offenses, for the common law punishes no act not in itself wrong. See 114 Mass. 323.

MALA PRAXIS. Malpractice (q. v.)

MALA PROHIBITA. That which is wrong only because it is prohibited by statute. 1 Bl. Comm. 57. See "Mala in Se."

MALANDRINUS. In old English law. A thief.

MALBERGE. A hill where the people assembled at a court, like the English assizes, which by the Scotch and Irish were called "parley hills." Du Cange.

MALE. Of the masculine sex; of the sex that begets young; the sex opposed to the female.

MALE CREDITUS. In old English law. Unfavorably thought of; in bad repute or credit. Bracton, fols. 116, 154.

MALEDICTA EXPOSITIO QUAE CORrumpit textum. It is a cursed construction which corrupts the text. 2 Coke, 24; 4 Coke, 35; 11 Coke, 34; Wingate, Max. 26.

MALEDICTION (Lat.) In ecclesiastical law. A curse which was anciently annexed to donations of lands made to churches and religious houses, against those who should violate their rights.

MALEFACTOR (Lat.) He who has been guilty of some crime; in another sense, one who has been convicted of having committed a crime.

MALEFICIA NON DEBENT REMANERE impunita, et impunitas continuum affectum tribuit delinquenti. Evil deeds ought not to remain unpunished, and impunity affords continual incitement to the delinquent. 4 Coke, 45.

MALEFICIA PROPOSITIS DISTINGUUNtur. Evil deeds are distinguished from evil purposes. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 290.

MALEFICIUM (Lat.) In civil law. Waste; damage; torts; injury. Dig. 5. 18. 1.

MALESON, or MALISON. A curse. Bailey.

MALFEASANCE. The unjust performance of some act which the party had no right, or which he had contracted not, to do. It differs from misfeasance and nonfeasance (q. v.) See 1 Chit. Prac. 9; 1 Chit. Pl. 134.

MALFETRIA. In Spanish law. Offense. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 19, c. 1, § 1.

MALICE.

——In Crimes. In its broadest legal sense, the term is substantially synonymous with "criminal intent," and means the state of mind of a person, irrespective of his motive, whenever he consciously violates the law. In this sense, every person who is sui juris, and who, without justification or excuse, willfully does an act which is prohibited and made punishable by law as a crime, does the act maliciously. 1 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 139.

Malice, in its legal sense, characterizes all acts done with an evil disposition, a wrong and unlawful motive and purpose; the willful doing an injurious act without lawful excuse. 9 Metc. (Mass.) 93.

Malice implies not only willfulness, but an absence of lawful excuse. 12 Fla. 117.

In relation to particular crimes, the term is sometimes used in a narrower sense. Thus, as applied to the offense of malicious mischief, it implies a sense of resentment or ill will towards the owner of the property injured. 3 Cush. (Mass.) 558.

Malice is either express or implied. Express malice is actual malice, and exists where a person actually contemplates the injury or wrong which he inflicts. Implied malice, otherwise called "constructive malice," or "malice in law," is that which is imputed by the law from the nature of the act done, irrespective of the actual intent of the party. See 10 N. Y. 120.

——In Torts. Generally, malice implies no more than an absence of legal excuse (4 Wend. [N. Y.] 13); a mind not sufficiently cautious before it inflicts injury upon another (11 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 39); but in some connections, as, for example, to authorize the allowance of punitive damages, there must be either actual ill will, or a wanton disregard of consequences (37 Mich. 34; 77 Ill. 280).

Malice, to render one liable in punitive damages, contemplates not merely an injurious act, but an act conceived in a spirit of mischief, or of willful indifference to civil obligations. See 91 U. S. 489.

Specific ill will is not essential (27 Mo. 28); but a general wanton desire to annoy is sufficient to constitute malice (2 Hilt. [N. Y.] 40).

MALICE AFORETHOUGHT. Wicked purpose. These words in the description of murder do not imply deliberation, or the lapse of considerable time between the malicious intent to take and the actual execution of that intent, but rather denote purpose and design, in contradistinction to accident and mischance. 5 Cush. (Mass.) 306. And see 8 Car. & P. 616; 2 Mason (U. S.) 60; 1 Dev. & B. (N. C.) 121, 163; 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 299; 3 Ala. (N. S.) 497. They do not imply evil design against a particular person, but evil design in general, the dictate of a wicked, depraved, and malignant heart. 49 N. H. 399.

The term implies more than "malice" (1 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 492). It includes not only a willful doing of wrong without lawful excuse, but an evil purpose, general or particular therein. 2 Moody, 40. See 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 342.

MALICE PREPENSE. Malice aforethought (q. v.)

MALICIOUS. Done with malice (q. v.)

MALICIOUS ARREST. A wanton arrest made without probable cause by a regular process and proceeding. See "Malicious Prosecution."

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF. The wanton or reckless destruction of property.

The word "malicious" is not sufficiently defined as the willfully doing of any act prohibited by law, and for which the defendant has no lawful excuse. In order to a conviction of the offense of malicious mischief, the jury must be satisfied that the injury was done either out of a spirit of wanton cruelty, or of wicked revenge. Jacob, "Mischief," "Malicious;" Alis. Sc. Cr. Law, 448; 3 Cush. (Mass.) 558; 2 Metc. (Mass.) 21; 3 Dev. & B. (N. C.) 130; 5 Ired. (N. C.) 364; 8 Leigh (Va.) 719; 3 Me. 177. Authorities are divided as to whether wantonness or general malice is sufficient. That it is not, see 79 N. C. 656; 44 Ala. 380; 49 Miss. 331. Contra, 28 Ga. 380; 44 N. H. 392.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION. A judicial proceeding instituted without probable cause (97 U. S. 642; 59 Ind. 500), and with malicious intent (7 Ill. App. 181; 30 N. Y. 625).

While malice may be inferred by the jury from absence of probable cause, the presence of malice in fact is essential. 44 Cal. 144.

At common law, the malicious prosecution of a civil action was actionable (Co. Litt. 161), but in most of the states only the malicious institution of a criminal proceeding is the subject of an action (4 N. J. Law, 330).

MALIGNARE. To malign or slander; also to maim.

MALITIA (Lat.) Malice. 4 Bl. Comm. 199.

MALITIA EST ACIDA; EST MALI ANIMI affectus. Malice is sour; it is the quality of a bad mind. 2 Bulst. 49.

MALITIA PRAECOGITATA. Malice aforethought. 4 Bl. Comm. 198.

MALITIA SUPPLET AETATEM. Malice supplies age. Dyer, 104; 1 Bl. Comm. 464;

4 Bl. Comm. 22, 23, 312; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 284. See "Malice."

MALITIIS HOMINUM EST OBVIANDUM. The wicked or malicious designs of men must be thwarted. 4 Coke, 15b.

MALLUM. In old European law. A court of the higher kind (placitum majus), in which the more important business of the county was dispatched by the count or earl (comes). Spelman. A public national assembly. 1 Robertson, Hist. Chas. V. Append. note xl.

MALO ANIMO. With evil intent.

MALO SENSU. In an evil sense.

MALPRACTICE. Bad or unskillful practice in a physician or other professional person, whereby the health of the patient is injured.

Physicians and surgeons impliedly contract that they are reasonably and ordinarily qualified to practice the medical profession, and for a failure to possess and exercise such qualifications they are liable. 17 Ind. 115; 21 Minn. 464; 75 N. Y. 12.

Willful malpractice takes place when the physician purposely administers medicines or performs an operation which he knows and expects will result in damage or death to the individual under his care; as in the case of criminal abortion. Elwell, Malprac. 243 et seq.; 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 216.

Negligent malpractice comprehends those cases where there is no criminal or dishonest object, but gross negligence of that attention which the situation of the patient requires; as, if a physician should administer medicines, while in a state of intoxication, from which injury would arise to his patient.

Ignorant malpractice is the administration of medicines calculated to do injury, which do harm, and which a well-educated and scientific medical man would know were not proper in the case. Elwell, Malprac. 198 et seq.; 7 Barn. & C. 493, 497; 6 Bing. 440; 6 Mass. 134; 5 Car. & P. 333; 1 Moody & R. 405; 5 Cox, C. C. 587.

MALT TAX, or MALT SCOT. In English law. An excise duty on malt.

MALUM HOMINUM EST OBVIANDUM. The malicious plans of men must be avoided. 4 Coke, 15.

MALUM IN SE. An act wrong in itself. The plural form is mala in se (q. v.)

MALUM NON HABET EFFICIENTEM, sed deficientem causam. Evil has not an efficient, but a deficient, cause. 3 Inst. Proeme.

MALUM NON PRAESUMITUR. Evil is not presumed. 4 Coke, 72; Branch, Princ.

MALUM PROHIBITUM. A thing wrong only because prohibited by law. The plural form is mala prohibita (q. v.)

MALUM QUO COMMUNIUS EO PEJUS. The more common the evil, the worse. Branch, Princ.

MALUS USUS EST ABOLENDUS. An evil custom is to be abolished. Co. Litt. 141; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 827; Litt. § 212; 5 Q. B. 701; 12 Q. B. 845; 2 Mylne & K. 449.

MALVEILLES. Ill will. In some ancient records, this word signifies malicious practices, or crimes and misdemeanors.

MALVEIS PROCURORS. Such as used to pack juries, by the nomination of either party in a cause, or other practice. Art. Sup. Chart. c. x. Cowell.

MALVERSATION. In French law. This word is applied to all punishable faults committed in the exercise of an office, such as corruptions, exactions, extortions, and larceny. Merlin, Repert.

MAN. A human being; a person of the male sex; a male of the human species above the age of puberty.

In its most extended sense, the term includes not only the adult male sex of the human species, but women and children. Examples: "Of offenses against man, some are more immediately against the king, others more immediately against the subject." Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 2, § 1. "Offenses against the life of man come under the general name of 'homicide,' which in our law signifies the killing of a man by a man." Id. bk. 1, c. 8, § 2.

It was considered in the civil or Roman law that, although "man" and "person" are synonymous in grammar, they had a different acceptation in law. All persons were men, but not all men—for example, slaves—were persons, but things. See Barr. Obs. St. 216, note.

MAN OF STRAW. See "Straw Men."

MANAGER. A person appointed or elected to manage the affairs of another. A term applied to those officers of a corporation who are authorized to manage its affairs. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 190; 17 Mass. 29.

In England and Canada, the chief executive officer of a branch bank is called a "manager." His duties are those of our presidents and cashiers combined. His signature is necessary to every contract binding on the bank, except entries in the pass-books of customers. He indorses bills, signs bills of exchange and drafts, and conducts the correspondence of the bank. He is under the control of the board of directors of the bank, and there is usually a local or branch board of directors, at which he acts as presiding officer. Sewell, Bank.

One of the persons appointed on the part of the house of representatives to prosecute impeachments before the senate.

MANAGING OWNER OF SHIP. The managing owner of a ship is one of several coowners, to whom the others, or those of them who join in the adventure, have delegated the management of the ship. He has authority to do all things usual and necessary in the management of the ship and the delivery of the cargo, to enable her to prosecute her voyage and earn freight, with the right to appoint an agent for the purpose. 6 Q. B. Div. 93; L. R. 1 C. P. 649.

MANAGIUM. A mansion house or dwelling place. Cowell.

MANAS MEDIAE. Men of low degree.

MANBOTE. A compensation paid the relations of a murdered man by the murderer or his friends.

MANCEPS. In Roman law. A purchaser; one who took the articles sold in his hand (qui manu cepit); a formality observed in certain sales; a farmer of the public taxes. Calv. Lex.; Adams, Rom. Ant. 55.

MANCHE PRESENT. A bribe; a present from the donor's own hand.

MANCIPARE. In the Roman law. To sell, alienate, or make over to another; to sell with certain formalities.

To sell a person; one of the forms observed in the process of emancipation.

MANCIPATIO (Lat. from mancipare, q. v.) In the Roman law. A kind of sale in the presence of five witnesses, accompanied with delivery of possession or seisin; the purchaser taking the thing sold in his hand. It took place among Roman citizens only, and was confined to certain property called res mancipi or mancipia. Calv. Lex.; Adams, Rom. Ant. 55, 58.

The imaginary sale of a son in the ceremony of emancipation; so called because the natural father gave over (mancipabat, i. e., manu tradebat) his son to the purchaser, adding these words, Mancupo tibi hunc filium qui meus est. Adams, Rom. Ant. 52; Cooper, Just. Inst. notes, *442, 443.

MANCIPI RES (Lat.) In old Roman law. A name given to one of the leading divisions of private property, the precise meaning of which is not settled. Ulpian defines or describes it as embracing estates in Italy (praedia in Italico solo) which were acquired by mancipation, usucapion, or adjudication, those rights of country estates called servitudes, slaves, and working animals. Calv. Lex. Gibbon explains it to mean things originally taken in war (manu capti), and which were sold in the particular form called mancipatio, in order to assure the purchaser that they had been the property of an enemy, and not of a fellow citizen. 3 Gibb. Rom. Emp. (Am. Ed. 1844) 176.

MANCIPIUM. The power acquired over a freeman by the mancipatio.

To form a clear conception of the true import of the word in the Roman jurisprudence, it is necessary to advert to the four distinct powers which were exercised by the pater-familias, viz.: The manus, or martial power; the mancipium, resulting from the mancipatio, or alienatio per aes et libram, of a freeman; the dominica potestas, the power of the master over his slaves, and the patria potestas, the paternal power. When the pater-familias sold his son, venum dare, mancipare, the paternal power was succeeded by the mancipium, or the power acquired by the purchaser over the person whom he held in mancipio, and whose condition was assimilated to that of a slave. What is most remarkable is that, on the emancipation from the mancipium, he fell back into the paternal power, which was not entirely exhausted until he had been sold three times by the pater-familias. Si pater filium ter venum duit, filius a patre liber esto. Gaius speaks of the mancipatio as imaginaria quaedam venditio, because in his time it was only resorted to for the purpose of adoption or emancipation. See "Adoption;" "Pater-Familias;" 1 Ortolan, 112 et seq.

MANCOMUNAL. In Spanish law. An obligation is said to be mancomunal when one person assumes the contract or debt of another, and makes himself liable to pay or fulfill it. Schmidt, Civ. Law, 120.

MANDAMIENTO. In Spanish law. Commission; authority or power of attorney; a contract of good faith, by which one person commits to the gratuitous charge of another his affairs, and the latter accepts the charge. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 12, c. 1.

MANDAMUS. In practice. This is a high prerogative writ, usually issuing out of the highest court of general jurisdiction in a state, in the name of the sovereignty, directed to any natural person, corporation, or inferior court of judicature within its jurisdiction, requiring them to do some particular thing therein specified, and which appertains to their office or duty. 3 Bl. Comm. 110; 4 Bac. Abr. 495; Opinion of Marshall, C. J., 1 Cranch (U. S.) 137, 168.

It is a proper remedy to compel the performance of a specific act where the act is ministerial in its character (12 Pet. [U. S.] 524; 34 Pa. St. 293; 26 Ga. 665; 7 Iowa, 186, 390); but where the act is of a discretionary (6 How. [U. S.] 92; 11 How. [U. S.] 272; 17 How. [U. S.] 284; 12 Cush. [Mass.] 403; 20 Tex. 60; 10 Cal. 376; 5 Har. [Del.] 108; 12 Md. 329; 4 Mich. 187; 5 Ohio St. 528) or judicial nature (14 La. Ann. 60; 7 Cal. 130; 18 B. Mon. [Ky.] 423; 7 El. & Bl. 366), it will lie only to compel action generally (11 Cal. 42; 30 Ala. [N. S.] 49; 28 Mo. 259); and where the necessity of acting is a matter of discretion, it will not lie even to compel action (6 How. [U. S.] 92; 5 Iowa, 380).

The writ of mandamus is either alternative or peremptory. The former usually issued at the commencement of the suit, commanding in the alternative that defendant do the specified act, or show cause why he should not, and the latter, issued after hearing, commanding the performance of the decree without alternative.

MANDANS. In civil law. The employing party in a contract of mandate. One who gives a thing in charge to another; one who requires, requests, or employs another to do some act for him. Inst. 3. 27. 1. et seq.

MANDANT. The bailor in a contract of mandate.

MANDATA LICITA STRICTAM RECIPIunt interpretationem, sed illicita latam et extensam. Lawful commands receive a strict interpretation, but unlawful, a wide or broad construction. Bac. Max. reg. 16.

MANDATAIRE. In French law. A mandatary.

MANDATARIUS TERMINOS SIBI POSItos transgredi non potest. A mandatary cannot exceed the bounds of his authority. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 53.

MANDATARY, or MANDATARIUS. One who undertakes to perform a mandate. Jones, Bailm. 53.

MANDATE.

——In Practice. A judicial command or precept issued by a court or magistrate, directing the proper officer to enforce a judgment, sentence, or decree. Commonly applied to the precept issued by an appellate court after decision of the cause, commanding the lower court to proceed therein.

——In Contracts. A bailment of property in regard to which the bailee engages to do some act without reward. Story, Bailm. § 137.

The contract of mandate in the civil law is not limited to personal property, nor does it require a delivery of personal property when it relates to that. Poth. de Mand. note 1; Civ. Code La. arts. 2954-2964. It is, however, restricted to things of a personal nature at common law, and of these there must be a delivery, actual or constructive. Story, Bailm. § 142; 3 Strob. (S. C.) 343.

Mandates and deposits closely resemble each other; the distinction being that in mandates the care and service are the principal, and the custody the accessory; while in deposits the custody is the principal thing and the care and service are merely accessory. Story, Bailm. § 140.

——In Civil Law. The instructions which the emperor addressed to a public functionary, and which were to serve as rules for his conduct. These mandates resembled those of the proconsuls, the mandata jurisdictio, and were ordinarily binding on the legates or lieutenants of the emperor of the imperial provinces, and there they had the authority of the principal edicts. Savigny, Dr. Rom. c. 3, § 24, note 4.

MANDATO. In Spanish law. The contract of mandate. Escriche, Dic. Raz.; Schmidt, Civ. Law, 197.

MANDATOR. The person who consigns property to another under a contract of mandate. Story, Bailm. § 138.

MANDATORY. Containing a command; peremptory. As applied to statutes, a provision is mandatory if proceedings in disregard of it are absolutely void. 1 Duer (N. Y.) 79.

MANDATORY INJUNCTION. One which commands the doing of some affirmative act by the person to whom it is directed. See 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 106; 25 Fed. 654; High, Inj. § 478.

MANDATUM. In the civil law. Mandate (q. v.)

MANDATUM NISI GRATUITUM NULlum est. Unless a mandate is gratuitous, it is not a mandate. Dig. 17. 1. 1. 4; Inst. 3. 27; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1070.

MANDAVI BALLIVO. In English practice. The return made by a sheriff when he has committed the execution of a writ to a bailiff of a liberty, who has the right to execute the writ.

MANENS (pl. manentes; Law Lat. from manere, to remain or stay.) In Saxon and old English law. A kind of tenant inhabiting a manse (mansi incola); an agricultural tenant (qui hydan colit). Spelman. The ceorls are mentioned in the later Anglo-Saxon charters, under the name of manentes. 1 Spence, Ch. 50.

MANERA. In Spanish law. Manner or mode. Las Partidas, pt. 4, tit. 4, lib. 2.

MANERIUM DICITUR A MANENDO, SEcundum excellentiam, sedes magna, fixa, et stabilis. A manor is so called from manendo, according to its excellence, a seat, great, fixed, and firm. Co. Litt. 58.

MANHOOD. In feudal law. A term denoting the ceremony of doing homage by the vassal to his lord. The formula used was devenio vester homo, I become your man. 2 Bl. Comm. 54. See "Homage."

MANIA. In medical jurisprudence. This is the most common of all the forms of recent insanity, and consists of one or both of the following conditions, viz., intellectual aberration, and morbid or affective obliquity.

In other words, the maniac either misapprehends the true relations between persons and things, in consequence of which he adopts notions manifestly absurd, and believes in occurrences that never did and never could take place, or his sentiments, affections, and emotions are so perverted that whatever excites their activity is viewed through a distorting medium; or, which is the most common fact, both these conditions may exist together, in which case their relative share in the disease may differ in such a degree that one or the other may scarcely be perceived at all. According as the intellectual or moral element prevails, the disease is called "intellectual" or "moral" mania. Whether the former is ever entirely wanting has been stoutly questioned, less from any dearth of facts than from some fancied metaphysical incongruity. The logical consequence of the doubt is that, in the absence of intellectual disturbance, there is really no insanity,—the moral disorders proceeding rather from unbridled passions than any pathological condition. Against all such reasoning it will be sufficient here to oppose the very common fact that in every collection of the insane may be found many who exhibit no intellectual aberration, but in whom moral disorders of the most flagrant kind present a marked contrast to the previous character and habits of life.

Both forms of mania may be either general or partial. In the latter, the patient has adopted some notion having a very limited influence upon his mental movements, while outside of that no appearance of impairment or irregularity can be discerned. Pure "monomania," as this form of insanity has been often called,—that is, a mania confined to a certain point, the understanding being perfectly sound in every other respect,—is, no doubt, a veritable fact, but one of very rare occurrence. The peculiar notions of the insane, constituting insane belief, are of two kinds,—"delusions" and "hallucinations." By the former is meant a firm belief in something impossible, either in the nature of things or in the circumstances of the case, or, if possible, highly improbable, and associated in the mind of the patient with consequences that have to it only a fanciful relation. By "hallucination" is meant an impression supposed by the patient, contrary to all proof or possibility, to have been received through one of the senses. For instance, the belief that one is Jesus Christ or the pope of Rome is a delusion; the belief that one hears voices speaking from the walls of the room, or sees armies contending in the clouds, is a hallucination. The latter implies some morbid activity of the perceptive powers; the former is a mistake of the intellect exclusively.

MANIA A POTU. See "Delirium Tremens."

MANIFEST.

——In Commercial Law. A written instrument containing a true account of the cargo of a ship or a commercial vessel.

As to the requirements of the United States laws in respect to manifests, see 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 593, 594.

The want of a manifest, where one is required, and also the making a false manifest, are grave offenses.

——In Evidence. That which is clear and requires no proof; that which is notorious.

MANIFESTA PROBATIONE NON INDIGENT. Manifest things require no proof. 7 Coke, 40b.

MANIFESTO. A solemn declaration, by the constituted authorities of a nation, which contains the reasons for its public acts towards another.

On the declaration of war, a manifesto is usually issued, in which the nation declaring the war states the reasons for so doing. Vattel, lib. 3, c. 4, § 64; Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 1187.

MANKIND. Persons of the male sex; the human species. St. 25 Hen. VIII., c. 6, makes it felony to commit sodomy with mankind or beast. Females as well as males are included under the term "mankind." Fortescue, 91; Bac. Abr. "Sodomy."

MANNER AND FORM. In pleading. After traversing any allegation in pleading, it is usual to say, "in manner and form as he has in his declaration in that behalf alleged," which is as much as to include in the traverse not only the mere fact opposed to it, but that in the manner and form in which it is stated by the other party. These words, however, only put in issue the substantial statement of the manner of the fact traversed, and do not extend to the time, place, or other circumstances attending it, if they were not originally material and necessary to be proved as laid. 3 Bouv. Inst. 297. See "Modo et Forma."

MANNIRE. To cite any person to appear in court and stand in judgment there. It is different from bannire; for, though both of them are citations, this is by the adverse party, and that is by the judge. Du Cange.

MANNOPUS (Lat.) An ancient word, which signifies goods taken in the hands of an apprehended thief.

MANOR. This word is derived from the French manoir, and signifies a house, residence, or habitation. At present its meaning is more enlarged, and includes not only a dwelling house, but also lands. See Co. Litt. 58, 108; 2 Rolle, Abr. 121; Merlin, Repert, "Manoir." See Sergeant, Land Laws Pa. 195.

——In English Law. A tract of land originally granted by the king to a person of rank, part of which (terrae tenementales) were given by the grantee or lord of the manor to his followers; the rest he retained, under the name of his desmesnes (terrae dominicales). That which remained uncultivated was called the "lord's waste," and served for public roads, and commons of pasture for the lord and his tenants. The whole fee was called a "lordship," or "barony," and the court appendant to the manor the "court baron." The tenants, in respect to their relation to this court and to each other, were called pares curiae; in relation to the tenure of their lands, copyholder (q. v.), as holding by a copy of the record in the lord's court.

The franchise of a manor, i. e., the right to jurisdiction and rents and services of copyholders. Cowell. No new manors were created in England after the prohibition of subinfeudation by St. Quia Emptores, in 1290. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 30.

——In American Law. A manor is a tract held of a proprietor by a fee-farm rent in money or in kind, and descending to oldest son of proprietor, who in New York is called a "patroon."

"Manor" is derived originally either from Latin manendo, remaining, or from British maer, stones, being the place marked out or inclosed by stones. Webster.

MANQUELLER (Saxon). A murderer.

MANRENT, or MANRED. In Scotch law. The service of a man or vassal. A bond of manrent was an instrument by which a person, in order to secure the protection of some powerful lord, bound himself, "in manrent and service, to be leil and trew man and servant," specifying the service.

MANSE. Habitation; farm and land. Spelman. Parsonage or vicarage house. Par. Ant. 431; Jacob. So in Scotland. Bell, Dict.

MANSER. A bastard. Cowell.

MANSION HOUSE. Any house of dwelling, in the law of burglary, etc. 3 Inst. 64.

The term "mansion house," in its common sense, not only includes the dwelling house, but also all the buildings within the curtilage, as the dairy house, the cow house, the stable, etc.; though not under the same roof nor contiguous. Burn, Inst. "Burglary;" 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 215, 216; 1 Hale, P. C. 558; 4 Bl. Comm. 225. See 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 199; 4 Strob. (S. C.) 372; 13 Bost. Law Rep. 157; 4 Call. (Va.) 109; 14 Mees. & W. 181; 4 C. B. 105.

MANSLAUGHTER. Manslaughter is homicide committed without excuse or justification, and without malice aforethought, expressed or implied. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 30, §§ 2, 3; Steph. Dig. Crim. Law, art. 223.

Voluntary manslaughter is an intentional homicide in sudden passion or heat of blood caused by reasonable provocation, and not with malice aforethought. 1 Hale, P. C. 466.

To constitute voluntary manslaughter, (1) the killing must be intentional; (2) it must be without malice; (3) the provocation must be so great as to reasonably excite passion in an ordinary man, and cause him to act rashly and without reflection, and so immediate as not to afford reasonable cooling time.

Involuntary manslaughter is homicide committed unintentionally, but without excuse, and not under such circumstances as to raise the implication of malice. 23 Iowa, 154; 62 Mich. 29. It may arise (1) from the doing of a criminal act not amounting to a felony, nor naturally tending to cause death or great bodily harm; (2) from the doing of a lawful act with gross negligence; (3) from the omission to perform a legal duty under circumstances showing gross negligence.

By statutes in the various states, the degrees of manslaughter and the elements of each degree have been variously altered.

MANSUETUS. Tame. See "Animals."

MANSUM CAPITALE. The manor house.

MANTHEOFF (Saxon). A horse thief.

MANU BREVI (Lat.) In civil law. With a short hand. A term used in the civil law, signifying shortly; directly; by the shortest course; without circuity. Calv. Lex.

MANU FORTI. With strong hand. Used in writs of trespass.

MANU LONGA. In civil law. With a long hand; indirectly or circuitously. Calv. Lex.

MANUCAPTIO. A writ which lay to admit to bail one taken on suspicion of felony, and who could not be admitted to bail by the sheriff.

MANUCAPTORS. Mainpernors (q. v.)

MANUFACTURING CORPORATIONS. Such as are engaged in "the production of some article, thing, or object, by skill or labor, out of raw material, or from matter which has already been subjected to natural forces." 99 N. Y. 184.

It has been held to include a company for the manufacture and supply of illuminating gas (89 N. Y. 409); but otherwise as to a company supplying natural gas (108 Pa. 111). It includes a company preparing ice by artificial refrigeration, but not one cutting and storing natural ice. 99 N. Y. 181. It includes a company engaged in refining oil (101 Mass. 385); a milling company (17 Ill. 54); but not a mining company (106 Mass. 131), nor a dry-dock company engaged in repairing vessels (92 N. Y. 487). A company engaged in publishing a newspaper is not a manufacturing company (51 N. J. Law, 75; 60 Minn. 82; 18 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 319); but a book and job printing company is (47 N. J. Law, 36; 51 N. J. Law, 75; 6 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 238).

A company dealing in the articles of its manufacture is not engaged exclusively in manufacturing. 66 Minn. 234.

MANUMISSION. The act of releasing from the power of another; the act of giving liberty to a slave.

——In the Roman Law. It was a generic expression, equally applicable to the enfranchisement from the manus, the mancipium, the dominica potestas, and the patria potestas.

MANUNG, or MONUNG. In old English law. The district within the jurisdiction of a reeve, apparently so called from his power to exercise therein one of his chief functions, viz., to exact (amanian) all fines.

MANURABLE. In old English law. Capable of being had or held in hand; capable of manual occupation; capable of being cultivated; capable of being touched; tangible; corporeal. Hale, Anal. § 24.

MANUS (Lat. hand). Anciently signified the person taking an oath as a compurgator. The use of this word probably came from the party laying his hand on the New Testament. Manus signifies, among the civilians, power, and is frequently used as synonymous with potestas. Lec. Elm. § 94.

MANUS MORTUA. A dead hand; mortmain. Spelman.

MANUSCRIPT. An unpublished writing, or one that has been published without the consent of the person entitled to control it.

MANUTENENTIA. In old English law. Maintenance.

MANWORTH. In old English law. The price or value of a man's life or head. Cowell.

MARAUDER. One who, while employed in the army as a soldier, commits a larceny or robbery in the neighborhood of the camp, or while wandering away from the army. Merlin, Repert. See Halleck, Int. Law; Lieber, Buerrilla Parties.

MARC-BANCO. The name of a coin. The marc-banco of Hamburg, as money of account, at the custom house, is deemed and taken to be of the value of thirty-five cents. Act March 3, 1843.

MARCH. In Scotch law. A boundary line. Bell, Dict.; Ersk. Inst. 2. 6. 4.

MARCHERS. In old English law. Nobles who lived on the Marches, and had their own laws, and power over life and death, as if they were petty princes. Camden; Jacob. Abolished by St. 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26, 1 Edw. VI. c. 10, and 1 & 2 Philip & M. c. 15. They were also called "Lords Marchers."

MARCHES. In old English law. Boundaries or frontiers of a state.

MARCHETA.

——In Old Scotch Law. A custom for the lord of a fee to lie the first night with the bride of his tenant. Abolished by Malcolm III. Spelman; 2 Bl. Comm. 83.

A fine paid by the tenant for the remission of such right, originally a mark or half a mark of silver. Spelman.

——In Old English Law. A fine paid for leave to marry, or to bestow a daughter in marriage. Cowell.

The etymology of the term is variously traced from Scotch march, a horse, Latin marca, a mark, and British merch, a maid. The first of these is approved by Skene.

MARCHIONESS. A dignity in a woman corresponding to that of marquis in a man, and obtained either by creation or by marriage with a marquis. Wharton.

MARESCALLUS (from German, march, horse, and schalch, master). A groom of the stables, who also took care of the diseases of the horses. Du Cange.

An officer of the imperial stable, magister equorum. Du Cange.

A military officer, whose duty it was to keep watch on the enemy, to choose place of encampment, to arrange or marshal the army in order of battle, and, as master of the horse, to commence the battle. This office was second to that of comes stabuli, or constable. Du Cange.

An officer of the court of exchequer. 51 Hen. III. 5.

An officer of a manor, who oversaw the hospitalities (mansionarius). Du Cange; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 74.

Marescallus aulae. An officer of the royal household, who had charge of the person of the monarch and peace of the palace. Du Cange.

MARETUM (Lat.) Marshy ground overflowed by the sea or great rivers. Co. Litt. 5.

MARGIN. See "Gambling Contract."

MARINARIUS (Law Lat.) An ancient word which signified a mariner or seaman. In England, marinarius capitaneus was the admiral or warden of the ports.

MARINE. Belonging to the sea; relating to the sea; naval. A soldier employed, or liable to be employed, on vessels of war, under the command of an officer of marines, who acts under the direction of the commander of the ship. See "Marine Corps." It is also used as a general term to denote the whole naval power of a state or country.

MARINE CONTRACT. One which relates to business done or transacted upon the sea and in seaports, and over which the courts of admiralty have jurisdiction concurrent with the courts of common law. See "Maritime Contract;" Pars. Mar. Law; 2 Gall. (U. S.) 398.

MARINE CORPS. A body of officers and soldiers under an organization separate and distinct from that of the army, and intended for service, in detached portions, on board of ships of war.

MARINE INSURANCE. A contract of indemnity by which one party, for a stipulated premium, undertakes to indemnify the other, to the extent of the amount insured, against all perils of the sea, or certain enumerated perils, to which his ship, cargo, and freight, or some of them, may be exposed during a certain voyage, or a fixed period of time.

MARINE INTEREST. A compensation paid for the use of money loaned on bottomry or respondentia. Provided the money be loaned and put at risk, there is no fixed limit to the rate which may be lawfully charged by the lender; but courts of admiralty, in enforcing the contract, will mitigate the rate when it is extortionate and unconscionable.

MARINE LEAGUE. A measure equal to the twentieth part of a degree of latitude. Bouch. Inst. note 1845. It is generally conceded that a nation has exclusive territorial jurisdiction upon the high seas for a marine league from its own shores. 1 Kent, Comm. 29.

MARINER. One whose occupation it is to navigate vessels upon the sea. Surgeons, engineers, clerks, stewards, cooks, porters, and chamber maids, on passenger steamers, when necessary for the service of the ship or crew, are also deemed mariners, and permitted as such to sue in the admiralty for their wages. 1 Conkl. Adm. 107. See "Seaman."

MARIS ET FOEMINAE CONJUNCTIO est de jure naturae. The union of male and female is founded on the law of nature. 7 Coke, 13.

MARITAGIO AMISSO PER DEFALTAM. An obsolete writ for the tenant in frank marriage to recover lands, etc., of which he was deforced.

MARITAGIUM (Lat.) A portion given with a daughter in marriage.

During the existence of the feudal law, it was the right which the lord of the fee had, under certain tenures, to dispose of the daughters of his vassal in marriage. Beames, Glanv. 138, note; Bracton, 21a; Spelman; 2 Bl. Comm. 69; Co. Litt. 21b, 76a.

MARITAGIUM EST AUT LIBERUM AUT servitio obligatum; liberum maritagium dicitur ubi donator vult quod terra sic data quieta sit et libera ab omni seculari servitio. A marriage portion is either free or bound to service; it is called "frank marriage" when the giver wills that land thus given be exempt from all secular service. Co. Litt. 21.

MARITAGIUM HABERE. To have the free disposal of an heiress in marriage.

MARITAL. That which belongs to marriage; as, marital rights, marital duties.

MARITAL PORTION. In Louisiana. The name given to that part of the deceased husband's estate to which the widow is entitled. Civ. Code La. 334, art. 55; 3 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 1.

MARITAL RIGHTS. The rights of a husband. Chiefly applied to the right of sexual intercourse.

MARITIMA ANGLIAE. In old English law. The emolument or revenue coming to the king from the sea, which the sheriffs anciently collected, but which was afterwards granted to the admiral. Spelman.

MARITIMA INCREMENTA. In old English law. Marine increases; lands gained from the sea. Hale de Jur. Mar. pt. 1, c. 4.

MARITIME. Pertaining to the sea. Ordinarily, the term is synonymous with "marine."

MARITIME CAUSE. A cause arising from a maritime contract, whether made at sea or on land.

The term includes such causes as relate to the business, commerce, or navigation of the sea; as charter parties, bills of lading, and other contracts of affreightment; bottomry and respondentia contracts; and contracts for maritime services in repairing, supplying, and navigating ships and vessels; contracts and quasi contracts respecting averages, contributions, and jettisons, when the party prosecuting has a maritime lien; and also those arising from torts and injuries committed on the high seas, or on other navigable waters within the admiralty jurisdiction.

MARITIME CONTRACT. One which relates to the business of navigation upon the sea, or to business appertaining to commerce or navigation to be transacted or done upon the sea, or in seaports, and over which courts of admiralty have jurisdiction concurrent with the courts of common law.

Such contracts, according to the civilians, include, among others, charter parties, bills of lading, marine hypothecations, contracts for services in building, repairing, supplying, and navigating ships, contracts respecting averages, jettisons, etc.

In an early opinion by Story, J., these views were generally adopted (2 Gall. [U. S.] 398), but it has been since held that the contract for building a vessel is not a maritime contract (20 How. [U. S.] 393; 22 How. [U. S.] 129).

MARITIME COURT. A court of admiralty jurisdiction.

MARITIME INTEREST. Marine interest (q. v.)

MARITIME LAW. That system of law which particularly relates to the affairs and business of the sea, to ships, their crews and navigation, and to the marine conveyance of persons and property. See 21 Wall. (U. S.) 558.

MARITIME LIEN. See "Lien."

MARITIME LOAN. A contract or agreement by which one, who is the lender, lends to another, who is the borrower, a certain sum of money, upon condition that, if the thing upon which the loan has been made should be lost by any peril of the sea, or vis major, the lender shall not be repaid unless what remains shall be equal to the sum borrowed; and if the thing arrive in safety, or in case it shall not have been injured but by its own defects, or the fault of the master or mariners, the borrower shall be bound to return the sum borrowed, together with a certain sum agreed upon as the price of the hazard incurred. Emerig. Mar. Loans, c. 1, § 2. See "Bottomry;" "Gross Adventure;" "Marine Interest;" "Respondentia."

MARITIME PROFIT. A term used by French writers to signify any profit derived from a maritime loan.

MARITIME STATE. In English law. The officers and enlisted men of the English navy.

MARITIME TORT. One committed on the high seas, or otherwise with admiralty jurisdiction.

MARK. A sign, traced on paper or parchment, which stands in the place of a signature; usually made by persons who cannot write. It is most often the sign of the cross, made in a little space left between the Christian name and surname. 2 Bl. Comm. 305; 2 Curt. 324; Moody & M. 516; 12 Pet. (U. S.) 150; 7 Bing. 457; 2 Ves. Sr. 455; 1 Ves. & B. 362; 1 Ves. Jr. 11. A mark is now held to be a good signature, though the party was able to write. 8 Adol. & E. 94; 3 Nev. & P. 228; 3 Curt. 752; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 144; 2 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 385; 24 Pa. St. 502; 29 Pa. St. 221; 19 Mo. 609; 21 Mo. 17; 18 Ga. 396; 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 102; 1 Jarm. Wills (Perkins Ed.) 69, 112, note; 1 Williams, Ex'rs, 63. See St. Pa. 1848.

MARKET (Lat. merx, merchandise; anciently, mercat). A public place and appointed time for buying and selling. A public place, appointed by public authority, where all sorts of things necessary for the subsistence or for the convenience of life are sold. 14 N. Y. 356. All fairs are markets, but not vice versa. Bracton, lib. 2, c. 24; Co. Litt. 22; 2 Inst. 401; 4 Inst. 272. Markets are generally regulated by local laws.

The franchise by which a town holds a market, which can only be by royal grant or immemorial usage. 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 296, 2 Bl. Comm. 37.

By the term "market" is also understood the demand there is for any particular article; as, the cotton market in Europe is dull. See 15 Viner, Abr. 42; Comyn, Dig.

MARKET GELD. The toll of a market.

MARKET OVERT. An open or public market; that is, a place appointed by law or custom for the sale of goods and chattels at stated times in public. "An open, public, and legally constituted market." Jervis, C. J., 9 J. Scott, 601.

The market place is the only market overt out of London; but in London every shop is a market overt. 5 Coke, 83; F. Moore, 300. In London, every day except Sunday is market day. In the country, particular days are fixed for market days. 2 Bl. Comm. 449.

The term is of importance in English law, because of the protection afforded purchasers in good faith in market overt. 5 Coke, 83.

MARKET PRICE. See "Market Value."

MARKET TOWNS. Those towns which are entitled to hold markets. 1 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 130.

MARKET VALUE. The price established by public sales, or sales in the way of ordinary business. 99 Mass. 345.

MARKET ZELD, or MARKET GELD. The toll of a market.

MARKETABLE TITLE. A title which is not only good, but as to which there is no reasonable doubt as to matter of either law or fact. Such a title as dealers in real estate, banks, etc., would be willing to invest in. 46 Hun (N. Y.) 638.

MARKSMAN. In practice and conveyancing. One who makes his mark; a person who cannot write, and only makes his mark in executing instruments. Archb. N. P. 13; 2 Chit. 92.

MARLBRIDGE, STATUTE OF. An important English statute (52 Hen. III. [1267]) relating to the tenures of real property, and to procedure. It derived its name from the town in Wiltshire in which parliament sat when it was enacted, now known as Marlborough. Compare 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 62; Crabb, Com. Law, 156; Barr. Obs. St. 66.

MARQUE AND REPRISAL. See "Letter of Marque and Reprisal."

MARQUIS. A nobleman next in rank to a duke.

MARRIAGE. Marriage, as distinguished from the agreement to marry, and the act of becoming married, is the civil status of one man and one woman united in law for the discharge to each other and the community of the duties legally incumbent on husband and wife. See Bish. Mar. & Div. § 3.

Marriage is generally referred to as a contract, but, under modern doctrine, its contractual nature is confined to the formation of the relation, such formation being wholly a matter of contract. But, when formed, marriage is not a contract, but a status. 30 Ga. 176; 3 Heisk. (Tenn.) 307; 53 Mo. 578; 9 Ind. 37.

As applied to the act of becoming married, marriage is the acts, whether of private contract or official or religious ceremonial, by which a man and a woman lawfully enter into the married state.

MARRIAGE ARTICLES. Articles of agreement between parties contemplating marriage, in accordance with which the marriage settlement is afterwards to be drawn up. They are to be binding in case of marriage. They must be in writing, by statute of frauds. Burton, Real Prop. 484; Crabb, Real Prop. § 1809; 4 Cruise, Dig. 274, 323. See 2 Washb. Real Prop. Append.

MARRIAGE BROKERAGE. The act by which a person interferes, for a consideration to be received by him, between a man and a woman, for the purpose of promoting a marriage between them. The money paid for such service is also known by this name.

It is a doctrine of the courts of equity that all marriage brokage contracts are utterly void, as against public policy, and are, therefore, incapable of confirmation. 1 Fonbl. Eq. bk. 1, c. 4, § 10, note (s); 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 263; Newland, Cont. 469. But where a party is established in business as a marriage broker, one dealing with him is not in pari delicto, and can recover back money deposited on a contract. 124 N. Y. 156.

MARRIAGE LICENSE. A license required in some states to be obtained from a public officer by persons intending to marry.

MARRIAGE PORTION. That property which is given to a woman on her marriage. See "Dowry."

MARRIAGE, PROMISE OF. A promise of marriage is a contract entered into between a man and woman that they will marry each other.

MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT. An agreement made by the parties in contemplation of marriage, by which the title to certain property is changed, and the property to some extent becomes inalienable. 1 Rice, Eq. (S. C.) 315. See 2 Hill Ch. (S. C.) 3; 8 Leigh (Va.) 29; 1 Dev. & B. Eq. (N. C.) 389; 2 Dev. & B. Eq. (S. C.) 103; 1 Baldw. (U. S.) 344; 15 Mass. 106; 1 Yeates (Pa.) 221; 7 Pet. (U. S.) 348; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3947. See 2 Washb. Real Prop. Append.

MARSHAL. An officer of the United States, whose duty it is to execute the process of the courts of the United States. His duties within the district for which he is appointed are very similar to those of a sheriff. See U. S. St. at Large, Index; Sergeant, Const. Law, c. 25; 2 Dall. (U. S.) 402; Burr's Trial, 365; 1 Mason (U. S.) 100; 2 Gall. (U. S.) 101; 4 Cranch (U. S.) 96; 7 Cranch (U. S.) 276; 9 Cranch (U. S.) 86, 212; 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 194; 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 645.

MARSHALING. Arranging; putting in proper order; e. g., "the law will marshal words, ut res magis valeat." Hill, B., Hardr. 92. So to marshal assets. See "Assets." So to marshal coat armor. This now belongs to heralds. Wharton.

MARSHALING ASSETS. Such an arrangement of different funds as will enable all parties having equities therein to receive their due proportions, notwithstanding the intervening interests of particular persons to prior satisfaction out of a part of the funds. 1 Story, Eq. 558. The doctrine does not apply unless there are two funds in existence to which claim is made by several having diverse rights. L. R. 3 Eq. 668. But it is immaterial what is the nature of the property which constitutes the fund.

MARSHALING SECURITIES. An arrangement of creditors into classes with respect to their satisfaction out of the assets of the common debtor in such manner as to compel the creditor having a right of resort to two or more different funds to satisfy his claim first from the fund to which no other creditor has a right to resort. 1 Story, Eq. 633.

MARSHALSEA. In English law. A prison belonging to the king's bench. It has now been consolidated with others, under the name of the queen's prison.

MARSHALSEA, COURT OF. A court originally held before the steward and marshal of the royal household.

It was instituted to administer justice between the servants of the king's household, that they might not be drawn into other courts, and their services lost. It was anciently ambulatory; but Charles I. erected a court of record, by the name of curia palatii, to be held before the steward of the household, etc., to hold pleas of all personal actions which should arise within twelve miles of the royal palace at Whitehall, not including the city of London. This court was held weekly, to determine causes involving less than twenty pounds, together with the ancient court of Marshalsea, in the borough of Southwark. A writ of error lay thence to the king's bench. Both courts were abolished by St. 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, § 13. See Jacob; Whishaw.

MARTE SUO DECURRERE (Lat. to run by its own force). A term applied in the civil law to a suit when it ran its course to the end, without any impediment. Calv. Lex.; Brissonius.

MARTIAL LAW. That military rule and authority which exists in time of war, and is conferred by the laws of war, in relation to persons and things under and within the scope of active military operations, in carrying on the war, and which extinguishes or suspends civil rights and the remedies founded upon them, for the time being, so far as it may appear to be necessary in order to the full accomplishment of the purposes of the war. Prof. Joel Parker, in N. A. Rev., Oct., 1861.

The application of military government to persons and property within the scope of it, according to the laws and usages of war, to the exclusion of the municipal government, in all respects where the latter would impair the efficiency of military rule and military action. Id.

MASSA. In the civil law. A mass; raw material.

MAST. To fatten with mast (acorns, etc.) 1 Leon. 186.

MAST SELLING. In old English law. The practice of selling the goods of dead seamen at the mast. Held void. 7 Mod. 141.

MASTER. One who has control over an apprentice.

A master stands in relation to his apprentices in loco parentis, and is bound to fulfill that relation, which the law generally enforces. He is also entitled to be obeyed by his apprentices as if they were his children. Bouv. Inst. Index. See "Apprenticeship."

One who is employed in teaching children; known, generally, as a "schoolmaster."

One who has in his employment one or more persons hired by contract to serve him, either as domestic or common laborers.

MASTER AT COMMON LAW. In English law. An officer of the superior courts of common law (each court having five), whose principal duties, when attending court, consists in taking affidavits sworn in court, in administering oaths to attorneys on their admission, and in certifying to the court, in cases of doubt or difficulty, what the practice of the court is. Their principal duties out of court consist in taxing attorneys' costs, in computing principal and interest on bills of exchange, promissory notes, and other documents, under rules to compute, in examining witnesses who are going abroad for the purpose of obtaining their testimony, in hearing and determining rules referred to them by the court in the place of the court itself, and in reporting to the court their conclusions with reference to the rules so referred to them. Holthouse.

MASTER IN CHANCERY (anciently MASter of the chancery) (Law Lat. magister cancellariae). In equity practice. An important officer of courts of equity, who acts as assistant to the chancellor or judge, and whose principal duty consists in inquiring into various matters referred to him for the purpose, and reporting thereon to the court. Wharton; Holthouse. In England, there are twelve of these masters, of whom the master of the rolls is the chief.

These officers were originally the chief clerks of the chancery (clerici de prima forma), who acted as the assessors or council of the lord chancellor (collaterales et socii cancellarii). 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 251. According to Mr. Spence, they obtained the title of "masters" in the reign of Edward III. 1 Spence, Ch. 360. But they appear to have had the title of praeceptores at a much earlier period. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, ubi supra; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 184.

MASTER OF A SHIP. In maritime law. The commander or first officer of a merchant ship; a captain.

MASTER OF THE CROWN OFFICE. In English law. The queen's coroner and attorney in the criminal department of the court of queen's bench, who prosecutes at the relation of some private person, or common informer, the crown being the nominal prosecutor. Wharton.

MASTER OF THE ROLLS (Law Lat. magister rotulorum). In English law. An assistant judge of the court of chancery, who holds a separate court ranking next to that of the lord chancellor, and has the keeping of the rolls and grants which pass the great seal, and the records of the chancery. He was originally appointed only for the superintendence of the writs and records appertaining to the common-law department of the court, and is still properly the chief of the masters in chancery. 3 Steph. Comm. 417; Wharton.

MATE. In maritime law. The officer next in rank to the master on board a merchant ship or vessel.

In such vessels there is always one mate, and sometimes a second, third, and fourth mate, according to the vessel's size, and the trade in which she may be engaged. When the word "mate" is used without qualification, it always denotes the first mate; and the others are designated as above. On large ships the mate is frequently styled "first officer," and the second and third mates, "second" and "third" officers. Parish, Sea Off. Man. 83-140.

MATER-FAMILIAS. In civil law. The mother of a family; the mistress of a family.

A chaste woman, married or single. Calv. Lex.

MATERIA (Lat.)

——In the Civil Law. Materials; as distinguished from species, or the form given by labor and skill. Dig. 41. 1. 7. 7-12; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 14.

Materials (wood) for building, as distinguished from "lignum." Dig. 32. 55. pr.

——In English Law. Matter; substance; subject matter. 3 Bl. Comm. 322.

MATERIAL.

(1) That which enters into the erection or repair of any structure. It does not include tools or facilities used. 71 Pa. St. 293.

(2) That which is essential or important.

MATERIALITY. The property of substantial importance or influence, especially as distinguished from formal requirement. Capability of properly influencing the result of the trial.

MATERIALMEN. Persons who furnish materials to be used in the erection of buildings, ships, etc.

By the general American law, materialmen have a lien on a foreign ship (9 Wheat. [U. S.] 409), but not on a domestic ship (20 How. [U. S.] 393). By statute, materialmen have a lien on a building. See "Mechanic's Lien."

MATERNA MATERNIS (Lat. from the mother to the mother's). In French law. A term denoting the descent of property of a deceased person derived from his mother to the relations on the mother's side.

MATERNAL. That which belongs to, or comes from, the mother; as, maternal authority, maternal relation, maternal estate, maternal line. See "Line."

MATERNAL PROPERTY. That which comes from the mother of the party, and other ascendants of the maternal stock. Domat, Liv. Prel. tit. 3, § 2, note 12.

MATERNITY. The state or condition of a mother.

It is either legitimate or natural. The former is the condition of the mother who has given birth to legitimate children; while the latter is the condition of her who has given birth to illegitimate children. Maternity is always certain; while the paternity is only presumed.

MATHEMATICAL EVIDENCE. That evidence which is established by a demonstration. It is used in contradistinction to "moral evidence."

MATIMA. A godmother.

MATRICIDE. The murder of a mother; or one who has slain his mother.

MATRICULA. In civil law. A register in which are inscribed the names of persons who become members of an association or society. Dig. 50. 3. 1. In the ancient church there were matricula clericorum, which was a catalogue of the officiating clergy, and matricula pauperum, a list of the poor to be relieved; hence, to be entered in the university is to be matriculated.

MATRIMONIA DEBENT ESSE LIBERA. Marriages ought to be free. Halk. Max. 86; 2 Kent, Comm. 102.

MATRIMONIAL CAUSES. In the English ecclesiastical courts there are five kinds of causes which are classed under this head, viz.: Causes for a malicious jactitation; suits for nullity of marriage, on account of fraud, incest, or other bar to the marriage (2 Hagg. Consist. 423); suits for restitution of conjugal rights; suits for divorces on account of cruelty or adultery, or causes which have arisen since the marriage; suits for alimony.

MATRIMONIUM. In civil law. A legal marriage. A marriage celebrated in conformity with the rules of the civil law was called justum matrimonium; the husband vir, the wife uxor. It was exclusively confined to Roman citizens, and to those to whom the connubium had been conceded. It alone produced the paternal power over the children, and the marital power—manus—over the wife. The farreum, the coemptio, or the usus was indispensable for the formation of this marriage. See "Pater-Familias."

MATRIMONIUM SUBSEQUENS TOLLIT peccatum praecedens. A subsequent marriage cures preceding criminality.

MATRIMONY. The nuptial state.

MATRIX. In civil law. The protocol or first draft of a legal instrument, from which all copies must be taken. See 16 S. W. 53.

MATRON. A woman who is a mother. See "Jury Women."

MATTER EN LEY NE SERRA MISE EN bouche del jurors. Matter of laws shall not be put into the mouth of jurors. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 180.

MATTER IN CONTROVERSY. The subject of litigation; the amount demanded in an action. 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 269.

MATTER IN DEED. Such matter as may be proved or established by a deed or specialty. Matter of fact, in contradistinction to matter of law. Co. Litt. 320; Steph. Pl. 197.

MATTER IN ISSUE. The issue (q. v.)

MATTER IN PAIS (literally, matter in the country). Matter of fact, as distinguished from matter of law or matter of record. See "In Pais."

MATTER OF COURSE. See "Of Course."

MATTER OF FACT. In pleading. Matter the existence or truth of which is determined by the senses, or by reasoning based upon their evidence. The decision of such matters is referred to the jury. Hob. 127; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 49.

MATTER OF FORM. See "Form."

MATTER OF LAW. Matter the truth or falsity of which is determined by the established rules of law or reasoning based on them. 70 N. C. 167.

MATTER OF RECORD. Those facts which may be proved by the production of a record. It differs from matter in deed, which consists of facts which may be proved by specialty. See "Record."

MATTER OF SUBSTANCE. See "Substance."

MATTERS OF SUBSISTENCE FOR MAN. Comprehends all articles or things, whether animal or vegetable, living or dead, which are used for food, and whether they are consumed in the form in which they are bought from the producer, or are only consumed after undergoing a process of preparation, which is greater or less, according to the character of the article. 19 Grat. (Va.) 813.

MATURIORA SUNT VOTA MULIERUM quam virorum. The wishes of women are of quicker growth than those of men; i. e., women arrive at maturity earlier than men. 6 Coke, 71a; Bracton, 86b.

MATURITY. The time when a bill or note becomes due.

MAXIM.* An established principle or proposition; a principle of law universally admitted, as being just and consonant with reason.

Maxims in law are somewhat like axioms in geometry. 1 Bl. Comm. 68. They are principles and authorities, and part of the general customs or common law of the land, and are of the same strength as acts of parliament, when the judges have determined what is a maxim; which belongs to the judges and not the jury. Termes de la Ley; Doctor & Stud. Dial. 1, c. 8. Maxims of the law are holden for law, and all other cases that may be applied to them shall be taken for granted. Co. Litt. 11, 67. See Plowd. 27b.

The application of the maxim to the case before the court is generally the only difficulty. The true method of making the application is to ascertain how the maxim arose, and to consider whether the case to which it is applied is of the same character, or whether it is an exception to an apparently general rule.

*The most important of the maxims of law will be found alphabetically arranged through this book.

MAXIME ITA DICTA QUIA MAXIMA EST ejus dignitas et certissima auctoritas, atque quod maxime omnibus probetur. A maxim is so called because its dignity is chiefest, and its authority the most certain, and because universally approved by all. Co. Litt. 11.

MAXIME PACI SUNT CONTRARIA, VIS et injuria. The greatest enemies to peace are force and wrong. Co. Litt. 161.

MAXIMUS ERRORIS POPULUS MAGISter. The people is the greatest master of error.

MAY. Is permitted to; has liberty to. The term is ordinarily permissive (52 N. Y. 96; 107 Mass. 196), but in order to carry out the intention of a statute (2 Pet. [U. S.] 64), or of a contract (84 Ill. 471; 44 Conn. 534), it will be held to be mandatory.

MAYHEM. In criminal law. The act of unlawfully and violently depriving another of the use of such of his members as may render him less able, in fighting, either to defend himself or annoy his adversary. 8 Car. & P. 167; 4 Bl. Comm. 205. The cutting or disabling, or weakening, a man's hand or finger, or striking out his eye or fore tooth, or depriving him of those parts the loss of which abates his courage, are held to be mayhems. But cutting off the ear or nose, or the like, are not held to be mayhems at common law. 4 Bl. Comm. 205. The offense has been extended by statute to these and other injuries. See 87 N. C. 509; 70 Iowa, 505.

MAYHEMAVIT. Maimed. This is a term of art which cannot be supplied in pleadings by any other word, as mutilavit, truncavit, etc. 3 Thomas, Co. Litt. 548; 7 Mass. 247.

MAYNOVER (from Fr. mayn, hand). Anything produced by manual labor.

MAYOR (Lat. major; meyr, miret, or maer, one that keeps guard). The chief governor or executive magistrate of a city. The old word was "portgreve." The word "mayor" first occurs in 1189, when Richard I. substituted a mayor for the two bailiffs of London. The word is common in Bracton. Bracton, 57. In London, York, and Dublin, he is called "lord mayor." Wharton.

MAYOR'S COURT. The name of a court usually established in cities, composed of a mayor, recorder, and aldermen, generally having jurisdiction of offenses committed within the city, and of other matters specially given them by the statute.

MAYORALTY. The office or dignity of a mayor.

MAYORAZGO. In Spanish law. A species of entail known to Spanish law. 1 White, New Recop. 119.

MEAL RENT. A rent formerly paid in meal.

MEAN. See "Mesne."

MEANDER. To wind, as a river or stream. Webster.

The winding or bend of a stream.

To survey a stream according to its meanders or windings. Rev. St. Wis. c. 34, § 1; 2 Wis. 317.

MEASE, or MESE (Norman French). A house. Litt. §§ 74, 251.

MEASON DUE. A corruption fo Maison de Dieu.

MEASURE. A means or standard for computing amount; a certain quantity of something, taken for a unit, and which expresses a relation with other quantities of the same thing.

MEASURE OF DAMAGES. In practice. The rules by which the damage sustained is to be estimated or measured; the quantum of damage allowed by law.

MECHANIC'S LIEN. A statutory lien in favor of persons who have performed labor or furnished material for the erection or repair of any building, upon the building and the land on which it is situated.

MEDFEE. In old English law. A bribe or reward; a compensation given in exchange, where the things exchanged were not of equal value. Cowell.

MEDIA ANNATA. In Spanish law. Half-yearly profits of land. 5 Tex. 34, 79.

MEDIA NOX. Midnight.

MEDIAE ET INFIRMAE MANUS HOMInes. Men of a middle and base condition. Blount.

MEDIATE POWERS. Those incident to primary powers, given by a principal to his agent. For example, the general authority given to collect, receive, and pay debts due by or to the principal is a primary power. In order to accomplish this, it is frequently required to settle accounts, adjust disputed claims, resist those which are unjust, and answer and defend suits. These subordinate powers are sometimes called "mediate powers." Story, Ag. § 58. See 1 Campb. 43, note; 4 Campb. 163; 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 149.

MEDIATE TESTIMONY. Secondary evidence (q. v.)

MEDIATION. The act of some mutual friend of two contending parties, who brings them to agree, compromise, or settle their disputes. Vattel, Dr. des Gens, liv. 2, c. 18, § 328.

MEDIATOR. One who interposes between two contending parties, with their consent, for the purpose of assisting them in settling their differences. Sometimes this term is applied to an officer who is appointed by a sovereign nation to promote the settlement of disputes between two other nations. See "Minister."

MEDIATORS OF QUESTIONS. In English law. Six persons authorized by statute (27 Edw. III. st. 2, c. 24), who, upon any question arising among merchants relating to unmerchantable wool, or undue packing, etc., might, before the mayor and officers of the staple, upon their oath certify and settle the same; to whose determination therein the parties concerned were to submit. Cowell.

MEDICAL EVIDENCE. Testimony given by physicians or surgeons in their professional capacity as experts, or derived from the statements of writers of medical or surgical works.

This kind of evidence was first recognized by Charles V. of Germany, and incorporated in the "Caroline Code," framed at Ratisbon in 1532, wherein it was ordained that the opinion of medical men—at first surgeons only—should be received in cases of death by violent or unnatural means, when suspicion existed of a criminal agency. The publication of this code encouraged the members of the medical profession to renewed activity, tending greatly to advance their sciences and the cause of justice generally. Many books soon appeared on the subject of medical jurisprudence, and the importance of medical evidence was more fully understood. Elwell, Malprac. 285.

MEDICINE CHEST. A box containing an assortment of medicines.

Statutory provisions in the United States require all vessels above a certain size to keep a medicine chest. 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 106; 2 Story, U. S. Laws, 971.

MEDIETAS LINGUAE. In old practice. Moiety of tongue; half-tongue. Applied to a jury impaneled in a cause consisting the one-half of natives, and the other half of foreigners.

MEDIO ACQUIETANDO. A judicial writ to distrain a lord for the acquitting of a mesne lord from a rent, which he had acknowledged in court not to belong to him. Reg. Jur. 129.

MEDITATIO FUGAE. In Scotch law. Contemplation of flight; intention to abscond. 2 Kames, Eq. 14, 15.

MEDIUM TEMPUS. In old English law. Meantime; mesne profits. Cowell.

MEDLETUM. In old English law. A mixing together; a medley or melee; an affray or sudden encounter; an offense suddenly committed in an affray. The English word "medley" is preserved in the term "chance medley." An intermeddling, without violence, in any matter of business. Spelman.

MEDLEY. An affray; a sudden or casual fighting; a hand to hand battle; a melee. See "Chance Medley;" "Chaud Medley."

MEDSCEAT. In old English law. A bribe; hush money.

MEGBOTE. A recompense for the murder of a relative.

MEIGNE. A family.

MEINDRE AGE. Lesser age; minority.

MEJORADO. In Spanish law. Preferred; advanced. White, New Recop. lib. 3, tit. 10, c. 1, § 4.

MELANCHOLIA. In medical jurisprudence. A name given by the ancients to a species of partial intellectual mania, now more generally known by the name of "monomania." It bore this name because it was supposed to be always attended by dejection of mind and gloomy ideas. See "Mania."

MELDFEOH (Saxon). A fee paid to an informer.

MELIOR (Lat.) Better.

MELIOR EST CAUSA POSSIDENTIS. The cause of the possessor is preferable. Dig. 50. 17. 126. 2.

MELIOR EST CONDITIO DEFENDENTIS. The cause of the defendant is the better. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 639, 642; Dig. 50. 17. 126. 2; Hob. 199; 1 Mass. 66.

MELIOR EST CONDITIO POSSIDENTIS et rei quam actoris. Better is the condition of the possessor and that of the defendant than that of the plaintiff. 4 Inst. 180; Vaughan, 58, 60; Hob. 103.

MELIOR EST CONDITIO POSSIDENTIS, ubi neuter jus habet. Better is the condition of the possessor where neither of the two has a right. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 118.

MELIOR EST JUSTITIA VERE PRAEVENIENS quam severe puniens. That justice which justly prevents a crime is better than that which severely punishes it.

MELIORATIONS. In Scotch law. Improvements of an estate, other than mere repairs; betterments. 1 Bell, Comm. 73.

MELIOREM CONDITIONEM ECCLESIAE suae facere potest praelatus, deteriorem nequaquam. A bishop can make the condition of his own church better, but by no means worse. Co. Litt. 101.

MELIOREM CONDITIONEM SUUM FACere potest minor, deteriorem nequaquam. A minor can improve or make his condition better, but never worse. Co. Litt. 337b.

MELIUS EST IN TEMPORE OCCURRE, quam post causam vulneratum remedium quaerere. It is better to restrain or meet a thing in time, than to seek a remedy after a wrong has been inflicted. 2 Inst. 299.

MELIUS EST JUS DEFICIENS QUAM jus incertum. Law that is deficient is better than law that is uncertain. Lofft, 395.

MELIUS EST OMNIA MALA PATI QUAM consentire. It is better to suffer every wrong or ill than to consent to it. 3 Inst. 23.

MELIUS EST PETERE FONTES QUAM sectari rivulos. It is better to go to the fountain head than to follow little streamlets.

MELIUS EST RECURRERE QUAM MALO currere. It is better to recede than to proceed wrongly. 4 Inst. 176.

MELIUS INQUIRENDUM VEL INQUIrendo. In old English practice. A writ which, in certain cases, issued after an imperfect inquisition returned on a capias utlagatum in outlawry. This melius inquirendum commanded the sheriff to summon another inquest in order that the value, etc., of lands, etc., might be better or more correctly ascertained.

MEMBER. A limb of the body useful in self-defense. Membrum est pars corporis habens destinatum operationem in corpore. Co. Litt. 126a.

An individual who belongs to a firm, partnership, company, or corporation.

One who belongs to a legislative body, or other branch of the government; as, a member of the house of representatives; a member of the court.

MEMBER OF CONGRESS. A member of the senate or house of representatives of the United States.

MEMBERS. In English law. Places where a custom house has been kept of old time, with officers or deputies in attendance; and they are lawful places of exportation or importation. 1 Chit. Com. Law, 726.

MEMBRANA (Lat.) In civil and old English law. Parchment; a skin of parchment. Vocat.; Du Cange. The English rolls were composed of several skins, sometimes as many as forty-seven. Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 17.

MEMORANDUM (Lat. from memorare, to remember). A note to assist the memory. 32 Conn. 509. An informal instrument recording some fact or agreement; so called from its beginning, when it was made in Latin. It is sometimes commenced with this word, though written in English; as, "Memorandum, that it is agreed;" or it is headed with the words, "Be it remembered that," etc.

——In English Practice. The commencement of a record in king's bench, now written in English, "Be it remembered," and which gives name to the whole clause.

It is only used in proceedings by bill, and not in proceedings by original, and was introduced to call attention to what was considered the bye-business of the court. 2 Tidd, Prac. 775. Memorandum is applied, also, to other forms and documents in English practice; e. g., "memorandum in error," a document alleging error in fact, and accompanied by an affidavit of such matter of fact. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, § 158. Also, a "memorandum of appearance," etc., in the general sense of an informal instrument, recording some fact or agreement.

A writing required by the statute of frauds. Vide "Note or Memorandum."

——In Insurance. A clause in a policy limiting the liability of the insurer.

MEMORANDUM CHECK. It is not unusual among merchants, when one makes a temporary loan to another, to give the lender a check on a bank, with the express or implied agreement that it shall be redeemed by the maker himself, and that it shall not be presented at the bank for payment; such understanding being denoted by the word "memorandum" upon it. If passed to a third person, it will be valid in his hands like any other check. 4 Duer (N. Y.) 122; 11 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 612.

MEMORANDUM CLAUSE. In a policy of marine insurance, the memorandum clause is a clause inserted to prevent the underwriters from being liable for injury to goods of a peculiarly perishable nature, and for minor damages. It begins as follows: "N. B. Corn, fish, salt, fruit, flour, and seed are warranted free from average, unless general, or the ship be stranded;" meaning that the underwriters are not to be liable for damage to these articles caused by sea water, or the like.

MEMORANDUM OF ALTERATION. Formerly, in England, where a patent was granted for two inventions, one of which was not new or not useful, the whole patent was bad, and the same rule applied when a material part of a patent for a single invention had either of those defects. To remedy this, St. 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 83, empowers a patentee (with the fiat of the attorney general) to enter a disclaimer (q. v.) or a memorandum of an alteration in the title or specification of the patent, not being of such a nature as to extend the exclusive right granted by the patent, and thereupon the memorandum is deemed to be part of the letters patent or the specification. Johns. Pat. 151; St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, § 39.

MEMORANDUM OF ASSOCIATION. A document by the registration of which a company is formed under the English companies act of 1862.

MEMORIAL. A petition or representation made by one or more individuals to a legislative or other body. When such instrument is addressed to a court, it is called a "petition."

MEMORITER (Lat.) From memory.

MEMORY. Understanding; a capacity to make contracts, a will, or to commit a crime, so far as intention is necessary.

Memory is sometimes employed to express the capacity of the understanding, and sometimes its power. When we speak of a retentive memory, we use it in the former sense; when of a ready memory, in the latter. Shelf. Lun. Introd. 29, 30.

The reputation, good or bad, which a man leaves at his death.

This memory, when good, is highly prized by the relations of the deceased, and it is therefore libellous to throw a shade over the memory of the dead, when the writing has a tendency to create a breach of the peace, by inciting the friends and relations of the deceased to avenge the insult offered to the family. 4 Term R. 126; 5 Coke, 125; Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 73, § 1.

MEMORY, TIME OF. According to the English common law, which has been altered by 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 71, the time of memory commenced from the reign of Richard I., A. D. 1189. 2 Bl. Comm. 31.

But proof of a regular usage for twenty years, not explained or contradicted, is evidence upon which many public and private rights are held, and sufficient for a jury in finding the existence of an immemorial custom or prescription. 2 Saund. 175a, 175d; Peake, Ev. 336; 2 Price, 450; 4 Price, 198.

MEN OF STRAW. See "Straw Men."

MENACE. A threat; a declaration of an intention to cause evil to happen to another.

When menaces to do an injury to another have been made, the party making them may, in general, be held to bail to keep the peace; and when followed by any inconvenience or loss, the injured party has a civil action against the wrongdoer. Comyn, Dig. "Battery" (D); Viner, Abr.; Bac. Abr. "Assault;" Co. Litt. 161a, 162b, 253b; 2 Lutw. 1428.

MENIAL. This term is applied to servants who live under their master's roof. See St. 2 Hen. IV. c. 21.

MENS (Lat.) Mind.

MENS LEGISLATORIS. The intent of the legislators.

MENS REA (Lat.) A guilty mind.

MENS TESTATORIS IN TESTAMENTIS spectanda est. In wills, the intention of the testator is to be regarded. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 277.

MENSA (Lat.) An obsolete term, comprehending all goods and necessaries for livelihoods.

MENSA ET THORO. See "Divorce."

MENSOR. In the civil law. A surveyor.

MENSULARIUS. In the civil law. A money changer.

MENSURA. A measure.

MENSURA DOMINI REGIS. "The measure of our lord the king." The standard of weights and measures, established under King Richard I., 1197. 1 Bl. Comm. 275.

MENTAL RESERVATION. A silent exception to the general words of a promise or agreement not expressed, on account of a general understanding on the subject. But the word has been applied to an exception existing in the mind of the one party only, and has been degraded to signify a dishonest excuse for evading or infringing a promise. Wharton.

MENTIRI (Lat.) To lie; to assert a falsehood. Calv. Lex.; 3 Bulst. 260.

MENTIRI EST CONTRA MENTEM IRE. To lie is to go against the mind. 3 Bulst. 260.

MENTITION. The act of lying; a falsehood.

MERA NOCTIS. Midnight.

MERCANTILE LAW. That branch of law which defines and enforces the rights, duties, and liabilities arising out of mercantile transactions and relations. See "Law Merchant."

MERCANTILE PAPER. Commercial paper (q. v.)

MERCANTILE PARTNERSHIP. One formed for trading purposes.

MERCAT. A market. An old form of the latter word common in Scotch law, formed from the Latin mercatum.

MERCATIVE. Belonging to trade.

MERCATUM (Lat.) A market. Du Cange. A contract of sale. Id. Supplies for an army (commeatus). Id. See Bracton, 56; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 28, §§ 13, 14.

MERCEN-LAGE. The law of the Mercians. One of the three principal systems of laws which prevailed in England about the beginning of the eleventh century. It was observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the principality of Wales. 1 Bl. Comm. 65.

MERCENARIUS. A mercenary.

MERCES (Lat.) In civil law. Reward of labor in money or other things. As distinguished from pensis, it means the rent of farms (praedia rustici). Calv. Lex.

MERCHANDISE (Lat. merx). A term including all those things which merchants sell, either wholesale or retail; as, dry goods, hardware, groceries, drugs, etc. It is usually applied to personal chattels only, and to those which are not required for food or immediate support, but such as remain after having been used, or which are used only by a slow consumption. See Pardessus, note 8; Dig. 13. 3. 1; Id. 19. 4. 1; Id. 50. 16. 66; 8 Pet. (U. S.) 277; 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 335.

Mere evidences of value, as bank bills, are not merchandise. "The fact that a thing is sometimes bought and sold does not make it merchandise." Story, J., 2 Story, C. C. (U. S.) 10, 53, 54. See 2 Mass. 467; 20 Pick. (Mass.) 9; 3 Metc. (Mass.) 367; 2 Pars. Cont. 331, note (w).

Nor is baggage (6 Fed. 413), tools or facilities (26 Ind. 294), or animals kept for use; though otherwise if they were imported for purpose of sale only (22 Vt. 655).

MERCHANDISE MARKS ACT 1862. St. 25 & 26 Vict. c. 88. Its principal provision is that making it a misdemeanor to forge or falsely apply any trade-mark or indication of quality, or to sell any goods falsely marked.

MERCHANT (Lat. mercator; merx). A man who traffics or carries on trade with foreign countries, or who exports and imports goods, and sells them by wholesale. Webster; Lex. Merc. 23. These are known by the name of "shipping merchants." See Comyn, Dig.; Dyer, 279b; Bac. Abr.

"Merchants," in the statute of limitations, means not merely those trading beyond sea, as formerly held (1 Chanc. Cas. 152; 1 Watts & S. [Pa.] 469); but whether it includes common retail tradesmen, quaere (1 Mod. 238; 4 Scott, N. R. 819; 2 Pars. Cont. 369, 370. See, also, 5 Cranch [U. S.] 15; 6 Pet. [U. S.] 151; 12 Pet. [U. S.] 300; 5 Mason [U. S.] 505).

According to an old authority, there are four species of merchants, namely, merchant adventurers, merchants dormant, merchant travelers, and merchant residents. 2 Brownl. 99. See, generally, 9 Salk. 445; Bac. Abr.; Comyn, Dig.; 1 Bl. Comm. 75, 260; 1 Pardessus, Dr. Com. note 78; 2 Show. 326; Bracton, 334.

One whose business it is to buy and sell merchandise. This applies to all persons who habitually trade in merchandise. 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 469; 2 Salk. 445.

The term does not include those who buy goods for the purpose of manufacture and subsequent sale. 33 Mo. 424. A commercial traveler is not a merchant (58 Miss. 478), nor is a farmer who raises produce for the market (3 T. B. Mon. [Ky.] 330), nor a speculator in stocks (8 Ben. [U. S.] 563).

MERCHANTS' SHIPPING ACTS. English statutes for the amelioration of the condition of seamen on merchant vessels, and the general improvement of shipping, and vesting a control of merchant shipping in the board of trade to that end.

MERCHET. Marcheta (q. v.)

MERCIAMENT. An amerciament.

MERCIMONIATUS ANGLIAE. In old records. The impost of England upon merchandise. Cowell.

MERCIS APPELLATIO AD RES MOBILES tantum pertinet. The term "merchandise" belongs to movable things only. Dig. 50. 16. 66.

MERCIS APPELLATIONE HOMINES non continere. Under the name of "merchandise," men are not included. Dig. 50. 16. 207.

MERCY (Law Fr. merci; Lat. misericordia).

——In Practice. The arbitrament of the king or judge in punishing offenses not directly censured by law. 2 Hen. VI. c. 2; Jacob. So, to be in mercy signifies to be liable to punishment at the discretion of the judge.

——In Criminal Law. The total or partial remission of a punishment to which a convict is subject. When the whole punishment is remitted, it is called a "pardon;" when only a part of the punishment is remitted, it is frequently a "conditional pardon;" or, before sentence, it is called "clemency" or "mercy." See Rutherforth, Inst. 224; 1 Kent, Comm. 265; 3 Story, Const. § 1488.

As to the construction of "mercy" in the exception to the Sunday laws in favor of deeds of necessity and mercy, see 2 Pars. Cont. 262, notes.

MERE (Fr.) Mother. This word is frequently used; as, in ventre sa mere, which signifies a child unborn, or in the womb.

MERE MOTION. See "Ex Mero Motu."

MERE RIGHT. An abstract right of property without possession or right thereto. 2 Bl. Comm. 197.

MERE STONE. A boundary stone.

MERETRICIOUS. Illicit, as applied to sexual relations.

MERGER. The absorption of a thing of lesser importance by a greater, whereby the lesser ceases to exist, but the greater is not increased.

——In Estates. When a greater estate and less coincide and meet in one and the same person, without any intermediate estate, the less is immediately merged, that is, sunk or drowned, in the latter. For example, if there be a tenant for years, and the reversion in fee simple descends to or is purchased by him, the term of years is merged in the inheritance, and no longer exists; but they must be to one and the same person, at one and the same time, in one and the same right. 2 Bl. Comm. 177; Latch, 153; Poph. 166; 6 Madd. 119; 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 417; 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 53; 3 Mass. 172.

——Of Rights. Rights or demands merged in a judgment for their enforcement (65 Ind. 243; 25 Pa. St. 200; 41 Mo. 205), or in a security of a higher nature (10 Iowa, 443; 14 Mo. 450). Rights are also said to be merged when the same person who is bound to pay is also entitled to receive. This is more properly called a "confusion of rights," or "extinguishment."

——In Torts. Where a person, in committing a felony, also commits a tort against a private person, the wrong was, under the old law, sunk in the felony, and, by modern law, is suspended until after the felon's conviction. 1 Chit. Prac. 10. The rule is generally changed by statute.

——In Crimes. At common law, if an act included several offenses of different degree (i. e., misdemeanors and felony), the misdemeanors merged in the felony (5 Mass. 106; 1 Mich. 217; 26 N. J. Law, 213); but if the offenses were of the same grade, there was no merger, and the prosecution might elect on which to prosecute (48 Me. 238; 4 Wend. [N. Y.] 265; 93 Fed. 452).

The doctrine of merger of offenses is now repudiated in England (11 Q. B. 929), and in some of the United States (57 Conn. 461; 51 Minn. 382).

MERIDIES. Noon.

MERITS. The strict legal rights of the parties, as distinguished from matters of practice and matters resting in the discretion of the court. 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 329; Id. 432; 2 Daly (N. Y.) 203.

A cause of action or defense on the merits is one resting on matters of substance, not on form or technicality. See 12 Wis. 588. A judgment on the merits is one decisive of some strictly legal right of the party. 12 Minn. 357; 26 S. C. 119.

MERITS, AFFIDAVIT OF. See "Affidavit of Merits."

MERO MOTU. See "Ex Mero Motu."

MERTON, STATUTE OF. An ancient English ordinance or statute (20 Hen. III. [1253]), which took its name from the place in the county of Surrey where parliament sat when it was enacted. 2 Inst. 79; Barr. Obs. St. 41, 46; Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 9, 10, 18.

MERUM (Lat.) In old English law. Mere; naked or abstract. Merum jus, mere right. Bracton, fol. 31. Majus jus merum, more mere right. Id. See "Mere Right."

MERX EST QUIDQUID VENDI POTEST. Merchandise is whatever can be sold. 3 Metc. (Mass.) 365. See "Merchandise."

MES. tof. mo. co. gar. ter. pra. pas. bos. brue. mora, Junca. maris. alne. rus. re. sectare priora.

A rhyming couplet artificially constructed by the old practitioners in real actions, for the more easy remembrance of the rule requiring the various parcels of land which might be demanded in a writ of right to be named in a certain order. It consists of the first syllables of the following words: Messuagium, toftum, molendinum, columbare, gardinum, terra, pratum, pastura, boscus, bruera mora, Juncaria, mariscus, alnetum, ruscaria, reditus (in English, messuage, toft, mill, dovehouse, garden, land, meadow, pasture, wood, heath, moor, rush ground, marsh, alder ground, broom ground, rent); the words sectare priora (follow the first syllables) denoting how it was to be read. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 2 (C). In the register, the complementary syllables are written over each of the abbreviations. Reg. Orig. 2.

MESAGUIM. A messuage.

MESCROYANT. Used in our ancient books. An unbeliever.

MESE. An ancient word used to signify "house;" probably from the French maison. It is said that by this word the buildings, curtilage, orchards, and gardens will pass. Co. Litt. 56.

MESNALITY. The estate of a mesne tenant.

MESNE. Intermediate; the middle between two extremes; that part between the commencement and the end, as it relates to time.

In England, the word "mesne" also applies to a dignity; those persons who hold lordships or manors of some superior, who is called "lord paramount," and grant the same to inferior persons, are called "mesne lords."

MESNE LORD. A middle or intermediate lord. 2 Bl. Comm. 59; 1 Steph. Comm. 168, 174. See "Mesne."

MESNE PROCESS. In practice. All writs necessary to a suit between its beginning and end, that is, between primary process or summons and final process, or execution, whether for the plaintiff, against the defendant, or for either against any party whose presence is necessary to the suit.

MESNE PROFITS. The value of land during the period of a wrongful possession thereof; that is to say, from the time of wrongful entry to dispossession. 3 Bl. Comm. 205.

The net rental value or value of the use and occupation of premises during the period of a wrongful occupation. 101 N. Y. 13.

MESNE, WRIT OF. The name of an ancient writ, which lies when the lord paramount distrains on the tenant paravail. The latter shall have a writ of mesne against the lord who is mesne. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 316.

MESQUE (Law Fr.) Except; unless. Fet. Assaver, § 23.

MESS BRIEF. In Danish law. A certificate of admeasurement granted by competent authority at home port of vessel. Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 50.

MESSENGER. An employe or officer whose duty is to bear messages or communications.

——In English Law. An officer who takes possession of an insolvent or bankrupt estate.

MESSENGER ASSOCIATION. An association engaged in the business of furnishing messengers for hire to any who may desire them. Such associations are held to be common carriers. 31 Abb. N. C. 147; 6 Misc. Rep. (N. Y.) 534.

MESSIS SEMENTEM SEQUITUR. The harvest follows the sowing. Ersk. Inst. 174, 26; Bell, Dict.

MESSUAGE. A term used in conveyancing, and nearly synonymous with "dwelling house." A grant of a messuage with the appurtenances will not only pass a house, but all the buildings attached or belonging to it, as also its curtilage, garden, and orchard, together with the close on which the house is built. Co. Litt. 5b; 2 Saund. 400; Hammond, N. P. 189; 4 Cruise, Dig. 321; 2 Term R. 502; 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 331. But see the cases cited in 9 Barn. & C. 681. This term, it is said, includes a church. 11 Coke, 26; 2 Esp. 528; 1 Salk. 256; 8 Barn. & C. 25. And see 3 Wils. 141; 2 W. Bl. 726; 4 Mees. & W. 567; 2 Bing. (N. C.) 617; 1 Saund. 6.

META (Lat.) The goal of a Roman racecourse; a mark or object about which the chariots turned, and where the course ended.

——In Old English Law. A boundary line; a border or terminus. Properly, a visible object, standing upon the line, as a stone or tree, and showing where it ended; a butt. See "Butts and Bounds." Bundae et metae, et rationabiles divisae quae ponuntur in terminus et finibus agrirum, ad distinguendum praedia et dominia vicinorum, bounds and metes and reasonable divisions which are set on the borders and limits of lands, in order to distinguish the estates and properties of neighbors. Bracton, fols. 166b, 167; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 30. Pro metis et terminis ponendis. Mag. Rot. 3 Hen. III. rot. 14b.

METALLUM (Lat.) In the Roman law. Metal; a mine.

Labor in mines, as a punishment for crime. Dig. 40. 5. 24. 5; Calv. Lex.

METATUS (Law Lat.) In old European law. A dwelling; a seat; a station; quarters; the place where one lives or stays. Spelman.

METAYER SYSTEM. A system of agricultural holdings, under which the land is divided, in small farms, among single families, the landlord generally supplying the stock which the agricultural system of the country is considered to require, and receiving, in lieu of rent and profit, a fixed proportion of the produce. This proportion, which is generally paid in kind, is usually one-half. 1 Mill. Pol. Econ. 296, 363; 2 Smith, Wealth of Nations, 3, c. 2; Wharton.

METECORN. A measure of corn given by a lord to customary tenants as a reward for labor.

METEGAVEL. A rent paid in victuals.

METES AND BOUNDS. The boundary lines of land, with their terminal points and angles. Courses and distances control, unless there is matter of more certain description, e. g., natural monuments. 42 Me. 209. A joint tenant cannot convey by metes and bounds. 1 Hilliard, Real Prop. 582. See "Boundary."

METHEL (Saxon). Speech.

METHOD. See "Process."

METROPOLIS (Graeco-Lat. and Eng.) A mother city; one from which a colony was sent out. Calv. Lex.

The capital of a province. Id.

METROPOLITAN. In English law. One of the titles of an archbishop. Derived from the circumstance that archbishops were consecrated at first in the metropolis of a province. 4 Inst. 94.

METUS (Lat.) A reasonable fear of an intolerable evil, as of loss of life or limb, such as may fall upon a brave man (virum constantem). 1 Bl. Comm. 131; Calv. Lex. And this kind of fear alone will invalidate a contract as entered into through duress. Calv. Lex.

In a more general sense, fear.

MEU (Law Fr.) Moved; commenced, as a suit. Kelham; Britt, c. 126.

MEUBLES. In French law. Movables (q. v.) Meubles meublans, household utensils and ornaments.

MEUM EST PROMITTERE, NON DIMittere. It is mine to promise, not to discharge. 2 Rolle, 39.

MICHAELMAS TERM. In English law. One of the four terms of the courts. It begins on the 2d day of November, and ends on the 25th of November. It was formerly a movable term. St. 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 70.

MICHEL GEMOT, or MICEL GEMOTE (Saxon, great meeting or assembly). One of the names of the general council immemorially held in England. 1 Bl. Comm. 147.

One of the great councils of king and noblemen in Saxon times.

These great councils were severally called wittena gemotes, afterwards micel synods, and micel gemotes. Cowell (Ed. 1727); Cunningham. See "Michel Synoth."

MICHEL SYNOTH (Saxon, great council). One of the names of the general council immemorially held in England. 1 Bl. Comm. 147.

The Saxon kings usually called a "synod," or mixed council, consisting both of ecclesiastics and the nobility, three times a year, which was not properly called a "parliament" till Henry III.'s time. Cowell (Ed. 1727); Cunningham.

MICHERY. Theft; dishonesty.

MIDDLE THREAD (Law Lat. medium filum; Law Fr. fil de myleu). An imaginary line drawn through the middle of a stream in the direction of its length. Story, J., 3 Sumn. 170, 178.

MIDDLEMAN. One who has been employed as an agent by a principal, and who has employed a subagent under him by authority of the principal, either express or implied. He is not, in general, liable for the wrongful acts of the subagent, the principal being alone responsible. 3 Campb. 4; 6 Term R. 411; 14 East, 605.

A person who is employed both by the seller and purchaser of goods, or by the purchaser alone, to receive them into his possession, for the purpose of doing something in or about them.

MIESES (Spanish). Crops.

MIDWIFE. In medical jurisprudence. A woman who practises midwifery; a woman who pursues the business of an accoucheuse.

MILE. A length of a thousand paces, or seventeen hundred and sixty yards, or five thousand two hundred and eighty feet. It contains eight furlongs, every furlong being forty poles, and each pole sixteen feet six inches. 2 Starkie, 89.

MILEAGE. A compensation of so much per mile allowed to officers travelling on the public business, or to any person authoritatively summoned in respect to a matter of public importance, as to a witness.

MILES.

——In Civil Law. A soldier. Vel a "militia" aut a "multitudine," aut a numero, "mille hominum." Vocat.

——In Old English Law. A knight, because military service was part of the feudal tenure. Also, a tenant by military service, not a knight. 1 Bl. Comm. 404; Seld. Tit. Hon. 334.

MILITARY CAUSES. In English law. Causes of action or injuries cognizable in the court military, or court of chivalry. 3 Bl. Comm. 103.

MILITARY COURTS. In English law. Include the ancient court of chivalry and modern court-martial (q. v.) 3 Bl. Comm. 68, 103.

MILITARY FEUDS. The genuine or original feuds which were in the hands of military men, who performed military duty for their tenures.

MILITARY LANDS. In American law. Lands granted to soldiers for military services. U. S. Dig. "Military and Bounty Lands."

MILITARY LAW. A system of regulations for the government of an army. 1 Kent, Comm. 377, note.

That branch of the laws which respects military discipline and the government of persons employed in the military service. De Hart, Courts-Martial, 16.

Military law is to be distinguished from martial law. Martial law extends to all persons; military law to all military persons only, and not to those in a civil capacity. Martial law supersedes and suspends the civil law, but military law is superadded and subordinate to the civil law. See 2 Kent, Comm. 10; 34 Me. 126.

The body of the military law of the United States is contained in the act of April 30, 1806, and the amendatory acts.

MILITARY OFFENSES. Those offenses which are cognizable by the courts military, as insubordination, sleeping on guard, desertion, etc.

MILITARY STATE. The soldiery of the kingdom of Great Britain.

MILITARY TENURES. The various tenures by knight service, grand serjeanty, cornage, etc., are frequently called "military tenures," from the nature of the services which they involve. 1 Steph. Comm. 204.

MILITARY TESTAMENT. In English law. A nuncupative will,—that is, one made by word of mouth,—by which a soldier may dispose of his goods, pay, and other personal chattels, without the forms and solemnities which the law requires in other cases. St. 1 Vict. c. 26, § 11.

MILITES. Knights, and, in Scotch law, freeholders.

MILITIA. A body of persons enlisted and trained to military duty, but not kept in service, being subject only to service on call, as in case of invasion, insurrection, or riot. 94 Ill. 120.

MILL. A complicated engine or machine for grinding and reducing to fine particles grain, fruit, or other substance, or for performing other operations by means of wheels and a circular motion.

The house or building that contains the machinery for grinding, etc. Webster.

MILLBANK PRISON. Formerly called the "Penitentiary at Millbank." A prison at Westminster, for convicts under sentence of transportation, until the sentence or order shall be executed, or the convict be entitled to freedom, or be removed to some other place of confinement. This prison is placed under the inspectors of prisons appointed by the secretary of state, who are a body corporate, "The Inspectors of the Millbank Prison." The inspectors make regulations for the government thereof, subject to the approbation of the secretary of state, and yearly reports to him, to be laid before parliament. The secretary also appoints a governor, chaplain, medical officer, matron, etc. Wharton.

MILLEATE, or MILL LEAT. A trench to convey water to or from a mill. St. 7 Jac. I. c. 19.

MILLED MONEY. This term means merely coined money, and it is not necessary that it should be marked or rolled on the edges. Leach, C. C. 708.

MILREIS. The name of a coin. The milreis of Portugal is taken as money of account, at the custom house, to be of the value of one hundred and twelve cents. The milreis of Azores is deemed of the value of eighty-three and one-third cents. The milreis of Madeira is deemed of the value of one hundred cents. Act March 3, 1843 (5 U. S. St. at Large, 625).

MINA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A measure of corn or grain. Cowell; Spelman.

MINARE (Law Lat.) In old records. To mine or dig mines. Cowell. Minator, a miner. Id.

To drive. Spelman. Minator carucae, a plough driver. Cowell.

MINATUR INNOCENTIBUS QUI PARcit nocentibus. He threatens the innocent who spares the guilty. 4 Coke, 45.

MIND AND MEMORY. A testator must have a sound and disposing mind and memory. In other words, he "ought to be capable of making his will with an understanding of the nature of the business in which he is engaged, a recollection of the property he means to dispose of, of the persons who are the object of his bounty, and the manner in which it is to be distributed between them." Washington, J., 3 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 585, 586; 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 262; 1 Green, Ch. (N. J.) 82, 85; 2 Green, Ch. (N. J.) 563, 604; 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 255, 306, 311, 312; 8 Conn. 265; 9 Conn. 105.

MINERALS (Law Lat. minera, a vein of metal). All fossil bodies or matters dug out of mines or quarries, whence anything may be dug; such as beds of stone which may be quarried. 14 Mees. & W. 859, in construing 55 Geo. III. c. 18; Broom, Leg. Max. 175*, 176*.

Any natural production, formed by the action of chemical affinities, and organized when becoming solid by the powers of crystallization. Webster. But see 5 Watts (Pa.) 34; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 95.

MINERATOR. In old records. A miner.

MINIMA POENA CORPORALIS EST MAjor qualibet pecuniaria. The smallest bodily punishment is greater than any pecuniary one. 2 Inst. 220.

MINIME MUTANDA SUNT QUAE CERtam habuerunt interpretationem. Things which have had a certain interpretation are to be altered as little as possible. Co. Litt. 365.

MINIMENT. An old form of muniments (q. v.) Blount.

MINIMUM EST NIHILO PROXIMUM. The least is next to nothing. Bac. Arg. Low's Case of Tenures.

MINING PARTNERSHIP. An association between the tenants in common of a mine, who work it together, and divide the profits in proportion to their several interests. 1 Mont. 224; 23 Cal. 198.

It has been said not to be a true partnership, but rather a cross between a tenancy in common and a partnership proper (Bates, Partn. § 14. And see 35 Cal. 365), for the reason that it has no delictus personarum. 102 U. S. 641; 52 Cal. 540.

MINISTER.

——In Governmental Law. An officer who is placed near the sovereign, and is invested with the administration of some one of the principal branches of the government.

Ministers are responsible to the king or other supreme magistrate who has appointed them. 4 Conn. 134.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. One ordained by some church to preach the Gospel.

Ministers are authorized in the United States, generally, to solemnize marriage, and are liable to fines and penalties for marrying minors contrary to the local regulations. As to the right of ministers or parsons, see 3 Am. Jur. 268; Shep. Touch. (Anthon Ed.) 564; 2 Mass. 500; 10 Mass. 97; 14 Mass. 333; 11 Me. 487.

——In International Law. An officer appointed by the government of one nation, with the consent of two other nations who have a matter in dispute, with a view by his interference and good office to have such matter settled.

A name given to public functionaries who represent their country with foreign governments, including ambassadors, envoys, and residents.

A custom of recent origin has introduced a new kind of ministers, without any particular determination of character. These are simply called "ministers," to indicate that they are invested with the general character of a sovereign's mandatories, without any particular assignment of rank or character.

The minister represents his government in a vague and indeterminate manner, which cannot be equal to the first degree, and he possesses all the rights essential to a public minister.

There are also "ministers plenipotentiary," who, as they possess full powers, are of much greater distinction than simple ministers. These, also, are without any particular attribution of rank and character, but by custom are now placed immediately below the ambassador, or on a level with the envoy extraordinary. Vattel, liv. 4, c. 6, § 74; 1 Kent, Comm. (10th Ed.) 48; Merlin, Repert.

Formerly no distinction was made in the different classes of public ministers, but the modern usage of Europe introduced some distinctions in this respect, which, on account of a want of precision, became the source of controversy. To obviate these, the congress of Vienna, and that of Aix-la-Chapelle, put an end to these disputes by classing ministers as follows: (1) Ambassadors and papal legates or nuncios; (2) envoys, ministers, or others accredited to sovereigns (aupres des souverains); (3) ministers resident, accredited to sovereigns; (4) Charges d'Affaires, accredited to the minister of foreign affairs. Recez du Congres de Vienne, du 19 Mars, 1815; Protocol du Congres d'Aix-la-Chapelle, du 21 Novembre, 1818; Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 3, c. 1, § 6. See "Ambassador."

MINISTERIAL. That which is done under the authority of a superior; opposed to judicial; as, the sheriff is a ministerial officer bound to obey the judicial commands of the court.

When an officer acts in both a judicial and ministerial capacity, he may be compelled to perform ministerial acts in a particular way; but when he acts in a judicial capacity, he can only be required to proceed; the manner of doing so is left entirely to his judgment. 10 Me. 377; Bac. Abr. "Justices of the Peace" (E); 1 Conn. 295; 3 Conn. 107; 9 Conn. 275; 12 Conn. 464. See "Mandamus."

MINISTERIAL POWERS. A phrase used in English conveyancing to denote powers given for the good, not of the donee himself exclusively, or of the donee himself necessarily at all, but for the good of several persons, including or not including the donee also. They are so called because the donee of them is as a minister or servant in his exercise of them.

MINISTERIAL TRUSTS. Those which demand no further exercise of reason or understanding than every intelligent agent must necessarily employ; as, to convey an estate. They are a species of special trusts, distinguished from discretionary trusts, which necessarily require much exercise of the understanding. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1896. Called, also, "instrumental trusts."

MINISTRANT. The party cross-examining a witness was so called, under the old system of the ecclesiastical courts.

MINISTRI REGIS (Lat.) In old English law. Ministers of the king, applied to the judges of the realm, and to all those who hold ministerial offices in the government. 2 Inst. 208.

MINOR (Lat. less; younger). A minor; one not a major, i. e., not twenty-one. 2 Inst. 291; Co. Litt. 88, 128, 172b; 6 Coke, 67; 3 Bulst. 143; Bracton, 340b; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60; § 26.

Of less consideration; lower. Calv. Lex. "Major" and "minor" belong rather to civil law. The common-law terms are "adult" and "infant."

MINOR AETAS (Lat.) Minority or infancy. Cro. Car. 516. Literally, lesser age.

MINOR 17 ANNIS, NON ADMITTITUR fore executorem. A minor under seventeen years of age is not admitted to be an executor. 6 Coke, 67.

MINOR ANTE TEMPUS AGERE NON potest in casu proprietatis, nec etiam convenire. A minor before majority cannot act in a case of property, nor even agree. 2 Inst. 291.

MINOR FACT. In the law of evidence. A relative, collateral, or subordinate fact; a circumstance. Wills, Circ. Ev. 27; Burrill, Circ. Ev. p. 121, note 582.

MINOR JURARE NON POTEST. A minor cannot make oath. Co. Litt. 172b. An infant cannot be sworn on a jury. Litt. 289.

MINOR MINOREM CUSTODIRE NON debet; alios enim praesumitur male regere qui seipsum regere nescit. A minor ought not to be guardian of a minor, for he is presumed to govern others ill who does not know how to govern himself. Co. Litt. 88.

MINOR NON TENETUR RESPONDERE durante minori aetati; nisi in causa dotis, propter favorem. A minor is not bound to answer during his minority, except as a matter of favor in a cause of dower. 3 Bulst. 143.

MINOR, QUI INFRA AETATEM 12 ANnorum fuerit, utlagari non potest, nec extra legem poni, quia ante talem aetatem, non est sub lege aliqua, nec in decenna. A minor who is under twelve years of age cannot be outlawed, nor placed without the laws, because, before such age, he is not under any laws, nor in a decennary. Co. Litt. 128.

MINORITY. The state or condition of a minor; infancy.

The lesser number of votes of a deliberative assembly; opposed to "majority" (q. v.)

MINT. The place designated by law where money is coined by authority of the government.

MINTAGE. The charge at the mint for coining.

MINUS SOLVIT, QUI TARDIUS SOLVit; nam et tempore minus solvitur. He does not pay who pays too late; for, from the delay, he is judged not to pay. Dig. 50. 16. 12. 1.

MINUTE.

——In Measures. In divisions of the circle or angular measures, a minute is equal to sixty seconds, or one-sixtieth part of a degree.

In the computation of time, a minute is equal to sixty seconds, or the sixtieth part of an hour. See "Measure."

——In Practice. A memorandum of what takes place in court, made by authority of the court. From these minutes the record is afterwards made up.

Toullier says they are so called because the writing in which they were originally was small; that the word is derived from the Latin minuta (scriptura), in opposition to copies which were delivered to the parties, and which were always written in a larger hand. 8 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 413.

Minutes are not considered as any part of the record. 1 Ohio, 268. See 23 Pick. (Mass.) 184, though in some states, notably New York, they are by statute made part of the judgment-roll. Code Crim. Proc. N. Y. § 485.

MINUTE BOOK. A book kept by the clerk or prothonotary of a court, in which minutes of its proceedings are entered.

MINUTE TITHES. Small tithes, usually belonging to the vicar; e. g., eggs, honey, wax, etc. 3 Burn, Ecc. Law, 680; 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 71, §§ 17, 18, 27.

MINUTES.

——In Scotch Practice. A pleading put into writing before the lord ordinary, as the ground of his judgment. Bell, Dict.

——In Business Law. Memoranda or notes of a transaction or proceeding. Thus, the record of the proceedings at a meeting of directors or shareholders of a company is called the "minutes."

MINUTIO. In the civil law. Diminution.

MIRROR DES JUSTICES. The Mirror of Justices, a treatise written during the reign of Edward II. Andrew Horne is its reputed author. It was first published in 1642, and in 1768 it was translated into English by William Hughes. Some diversity of opinion seems to exist as to its merits. Pref. to 9 and 10 Coke. As to the history of this celebrated book, see St. Armand's Essays on the Legislative Power of England, 58, 59.

MISA.

——In Old English Law. The mise or issue in a writ of right. Spelman.

——In Old Records. A compact or agreement; a form of compromise. Cowell.

MISADVENTURE. An accident by which an injury occurs to another.

When applied to homicide, misadventure is the act of a man who, in the performance of a lawful act, without any intention to do harm, and after using proper precaution to prevent danger, unfortunately kills another person. The act upon which the death ensues must be neither malum in se nor malum prohibitum. The usual examples under this head are: (1) When the death ensues from innocent recreations; (2) from moderate and lawful correction in foro domestico; (3) from acts lawful and indifferent in themselves, done with proper and ordinary caution. 4 Bl. Comm. 182; 1 East, P. C. 221. See "Homicide;" "Manslaughter."

MISALLEGE. To cite falsely as a proof or argument.

MISAPPROPRIATION. Wrongful conversion of property by one to whom it has been intrusted. Steph. Dig. Crim. Law, 275.

MISBEHAVIOR. Improper or unlawful conduct. See 2 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 683.

Generally applied to a breach of duty or propriety by an officer, witness, juror, etc., not amounting to a crime.

MISCARRIAGE.

——In Medical Jurisprudence. The expulsion of the ovum or embryo from the uterus within the first six weeks after conception. Between that time, and before the expiration of the sixth month, when the child may possibly live, it is termed "abortion." When the delivery takes place soon after the sixth month, it is denominated "premature labor." But the criminal act of destroying the foetus at any time before birth is termed, in law, "procuring miscarriage." Chit. Med. Jur. 410; 2 Dungl. Hum. Phys. 364. See "Abortion."

——In Practice. A term used in the statute of frauds to denote that species of wrongful act for the consequences of which the wrongdoer would be responsible at law in a civil action. 2 Barn. & Ald. 613; 2 Day (Conn.) 457; 63 N. C. 198; Browne, St. Frauds, § 155.

MISCASTING. An error in auditing and numbering. It does not include any pretended miscasting or misvaluing. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4128.

MISCEGENATION. Marriage between persons of different races.

MISCOGNIZANT. Ignorant, or not knowing. St. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9. Little used.

MISCONTINUANCE. In practice. A continuance of a suit by undue process. Its effect is the same as a discontinuance. 2 Hawk. P. C. 299; Kitch. Cts. 231; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 57.

MISCREANT. In old English law. An apostate; an unbeliever; one who totally renounced Christianity. 4 Bl. Comm. 44.

MISDEMEAN. In old English law. To use improperly; to abuse. "If he misdemean an authority." Finch, Law, bk. 1, c. 3, No. 63.

MISDEMEANANT. A person guilty of a misdemeanor.

MISDEMEANOR. Every offense inferior to felony. See "Felony."

MISE (Lat. mittere, through the French mettre, to place).

——In Pleading. The issue in a writ of right. The tenant in a writ of right is said to "join the mise on the mere right" when he pleads that his title is better than the demandant's. 2 Wm. Saund. 45h, 45i. It was equivalent to the general issue; and everything except collateral warranty might be given in evidence under it by the tenant. Booth, Real Actions, 98, 114; 3 Wils. 420; 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 31; 3 Pet. (U. S.) 133; 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 52; 10 Grat. (Va.) 350. The prayee in aid, on coming into court, joined in the mise together with the tenant. 2 Wm. Saund. 45d, note. It was the more common practice, however, for the demandant to traverse the tenant's plea when the cause could be tried by a common jury instead of the grand assize.

——In Practice. Expenses. It is so commonly used in the entries of judgments, in personal actions; as, when the plaintiff recovers, the judgment is quod recuperet damna sua, that he recover his damages, and pro mises et custagiis, for costs and charges, so much, etc.

MISERA EST SERVITUS, UBI JUS EST vagum aut incertum. It is a miserable slavery where the law is vague or uncertain. 4 Inst. 246; 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 427; 11 Pet. (U. S.) 286.

MISERABILE DEPOSITUM (Lat.) In civil law. The name of an involuntary deposit, made under pressing necessity; as, for instance, shipwreck, fire, or other inevitable calamity. Poth. Proc. Civ. pt. 5, c. 1, § 1; Code La. art. 2935.

MISERERE. The name and first word of one of the penitential psalms (Ps. li., 1), being that which was commonly used to be given by the ordinary to such condemned malefactors as were allowed the benefit of clergy; whence it is also called the "psalm of mercy." Wharton.

MISERICORDIA (Lat.) An arbitrary or discretionary amercement.

To be in mercy is to be liable to such punishment as the judge may, in his discretion, inflict. According to Spelman, misericordia is so called because the party is in mercy, and to distinguish this fine from redemptions, or heavy fines. Spelman. See Co. Litt. 126b; Madd. c. 14.

MISERICORDIA COMMUNIS. In old English law. A fine on the whole community.

MISFEASANCE. The performance of an act which might lawfully be done, in an improper manner, by which another person receives an injury.

It differs from malfeasance or nonfeasance. See, generally, 2 Viner, Abr. 35; 2 Kent, Comm. 443; Doct. Plac. 62; Story, Bailm. § 9.

It seems to be settled that there is a distinction between misfeasance and nonfeasance in the case of mandates. In cases of nonfeasance, the mandatary is not generally liable, because, his undertaking being gratuitous, there is no consideration to support it; but in cases of misfeasance the common law gives a remedy for the injury done, and to the extent of that injury. 5 Term R. 143; 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 81; 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 92; 1 Esp. 74; 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Story, Bailm. § 165; Bouv. Inst. Index.

MISFORTUNE. An adverse event not immediately dependent on the action or will of him who suffers from it, and of such a character that no prudent man would take it into his calculation in reference to the interest of himself or of others.

Homicide by misfortune. See "Excusable Homicide."

MISJOINDER. An improper joinder, whether of actions, causes of action, offenses, parties, etc. See "Joinder."

MISKENNING (Fr. mis, wrong, and Saxon cennan, summon). A wrongful citation; a variance in a plea. 1 Mon. Angl. 237; Chart. Hen. II.; Jacob; Du Cange.

MISNOMER. The use of a wrong name in designating any person in any instrument or proceeding. In contracts and deeds, a misnomer is generally immaterial if the person intended can be ascertained. 11 Coke, 20; 1 Ld. Raym. 304.

In a pleading, misnomer of a party is ground of abatement, while misnomer of a third person is or is not a fatal variance, accordingly as it is or is not material. See "Idem Sonans."

MISPLEADING. Pleading incorrectly, or omitting anything in pleading which is essential to the support or defense of an action, is so called.

Pleading "Not guilty" to an action of debt is an example of the first; setting out a defective title is an example of the second. See 3 Salk. 365.

It comprehends misdeclaring, whether the error is in separate counts, or in the misjoining of counts. 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 369. 375.

MISPRISION. In criminal law. A term used to signify every considerable misdemeanor which has not a certain name given to it by law. 3 Inst. 36.

The concealment of a crime.

Misprision of felony is the like concealment of felony, without giving any degree of maintenance to the felon (Act Cong. April 30, 1790, § 6; 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 84); for if any aid be given him, the party becomes an accessory after the fact.

Misprision of treason is the concealment of treason by being merely passive. Act Cong. April 30, 1790 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 83; 1 East, P. C. 139). If any assistance be given to the traitor, it makes the party a principal, as there are no accessories in treason.

Negative misprision consists in the concealment of something which ought to be revealed.

Positive misprision consists in the commission of something which ought not to be done. 4 Bl. Comm. c. 9.

MISRECITAL. The incorrect recital of a matter of fact, either in an agreement or a plea. Under the latter term is here understood the declaration and all the subsequent pleadings. See "Recital."

MISREPRESENTATION. The assertion of that which is not true.

The nature of misrepresentations to entitle a party injured thereby varies with the nature of the relief sought, but in general the misrepresentation for which relief will be granted must be a willfully false statement respecting a matter of fact (not of law or opinion), which was reasonably calculated to mislead the party to his prejudice in respect to the business in hand, and which did actually have that effect.

MISSILIA (Lat. from mittere, to send or throw). In the Roman law. Gifts or liberalities, which the praetors and consuls were in the habit of throwing among the people. Inst. 2. 1. 45.

MISSING SHIP. A ship which has been at sea and unheard from for so long a time as to give rise to the presumption that she has perished with all on board.

There is no precise time fixed as to when the presumption is to arise; and this must depend upon the circumstances of each case. 2 Strange, 1199; Park, Ins. 63; Marsh. Ins. 488; 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 150; 1 Caines (N. Y.) 525; Holt, 242.

MISSIO (Lat. from mittere, to send or put). In the civil law. A sending or putting. Missio in bona, a putting the creditor in possession of the debtor's property. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 378, § 344; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 20; 2 Kames, Eq. 208.

Missio judicum in consilium, a sending out of the judices (or jury) to make up their sentence. Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 13, No. 31.

MISSIVES. In Scotch practice. Writings passed between parties as evidence of a transaction. Bell, Dict.

MISSTAICUS (Lat.) In old records. A messenger.

MISTAKE. An erroneous conception or belief in respect to matter of either fact or law, arising from ignorance, surprise, imposition, or misplaced confidence. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 110.

That result of ignorance of law or fact which has misled a person to commit that which, if he had not been in error, he would not have done. Jeremy, Eq. Jur. bk. 2, pt. 2, p. 358.

Distinction between "mistake" and "ignorance," see "Ignorance."

MISTERY. An old form of mystery (q. v.)

MISTRESS. The style of the wife of an esquire or gentleman.

MISTRIAL. A trial which is erroneous on account of some defect in the persons trying, as if the jury come from the wrong county, or because there was no issue formed, as if no plea be entered, or some other defect of jurisdiction. 3 Croke, 284; 2 Maule & S. 270.

MISUSER. An unlawful use of a right.

In cases of public offices and franchises, a misuser is sufficient to cause the right to be forfeited. 2 Bl. Comm. 153; 5 Pick. (Mass.) 163.

MITIGATION. Reduction; diminution; lessening of the amount of a penalty or punishment.

Circumstances which do not amount to a justification or excuse of the act committed may yet be properly considered in mitigation of the punishment; as, for example, the fact that one who stole a loaf of bread was starving.

In actions for the recovery of damages, matters may often be given in evidence in mitigation of damages which are no answer to the action itself. See "Damages;" "Character."

MITIOR SENSUS. See "In Mitiori Sensu."

MITIUS IMPERANTI MELIUS PARETUR. The more mildly one commands, the better is he obeyed. 3 Inst. 24.

MITTENDO MANUSCRIPTUM PEDIS finis. An abolished judicial writ addressed to the treasurer and chamberlain of the exchequer to search for and transmit the foot of a fine acknowledged before justices in eyre into the common pleas. Reg. Orig. 14.

MITTER (Law Fr.) To put, to send, or to pass; as, mitter l'estate, to pass the estate; mitter le droit, to pass a right. 2 Bl. Comm. 324; Bac. Abr. "Release" (C); Co. Litt. 193, 273b. Mitter a large, to put or set at large.

MITTER AVANT (Law Fr.) In old practice. To put before; to present before a court; to produce in court. Mist avant un fait, produced a deed. Y. B. M. 5 Edw. III. 119.

MITTIMUS.

——In Old English Law. A writ inclosing a record sent to be tried in a county palatine. It derives its name from the Latin word mittimus, "we send." It is the jury process of these counties, and commands the proper officer of the county palatine to command the sheriff to summon the jury for the trial of the cause, and to return the record, etc. 1 Mart. (La.) 278; 2 Mart. (La.) 88.

——In Criminal Practice. A precept in writing, under the hand and seal of a justice of the peace, or other competent officer, directed to the jailer or keeper of a prison, commanding him to receive and safely keep a person charged with an offense therein named, until he shall be delivered by due course of law. Co. Litt. 590.

MIXED ACTION. In practice. An action partaking of the nature both of a real and of a personal action, by which real property is demanded, and also damages for a wrong sustained. An ejectment is of this nature. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3650. See "Action."

MIXED CONTRACT. In civil law. A contract in which one of the parties confers a benefit on the other, and requires of the latter something of less value than what he has given; as, a legacy charged with something of less value than the legacy itself. Poth. Obl. note 12.

MIXED GOVERNMENT. A government established with some of the powers of a monarchical, aristocratical, and democratical government.

MIXED JURY. A bilingual jury; a jury of the half-tongue.

Also a jury composed partly of negroes and partly of white men.

MIXED LARCENY. Compound larceny. See "Larceny."

MIXED LAWS. A name sometimes given to those which concern both persons and property.

MIXED PRESUMPTIONS. Presumptions partaking of the nature both of presumptions of law and presumptions of fact; i. e., presumptions of fact recognized by law.

MIXED PROPERTY. That kind of property which is not altogether real nor personal, but a compound of both. Heirlooms, tombstones, monuments in a church, and title deeds to an estate, are of this nature. 1 Bl. Comm. 428; 3 Barn. & Adol. 174; 4 Bing. 106.

MIXED SUBJECTS OF PROPERTY. Such as fall within the definition of things real, but which are attended, nevertheless, with some of the legal qualities of things personal, as emblements, fixtures, and shares in public undertakings, connected with land. Besides these, there are others which, though things personal in point of definition, are, in respect of some of their legal qualities, of the nature of things real; such are animals, ferae naturae, charters and deeds, court rolls, and other evidences of the land, together with the chests in which they are contained, ancient family pictures, ornaments, tombstones, coats of armor, with pennons and other ensigns, and especially heirlooms. Wharton.

MIXED TITHES. In ecclesiastical law. "Those which arise not immediately from the ground, but from those things which are nourished by the ground;" e. g., colts, chickens, calves, milk, eggs, etc. 3 Burn, Ecc. Law, 380; 2 Bl. Comm. 24.

MIXED WAR. A mixed war is one which is made on one side by public authority, and on the other by mere private persons. 1 Hill (N. Y.) 377, 415.

MIXTION. The putting of different goods or chattels together in such a manner that they can no longer be separated; as, putting the wines of two different persons into the same barrel, the grain of several persons into the same bag, and the like.

The intermixture may be occasioned by the willful act of the party, or owner of one of the articles, by the willful act of a stranger, by the negligence of the owner or a stranger, or by accident. See "Confusion."

MIXTUM IMPERIUM (Lat.) In old English law. Mixed authority; a kind of civil power. A term applied by Lord Hale to the "power" of certain subordinate civil magistrates, as distinct from "jurisdiction." Hale, Anal. § 11.

MOB. An unorganized assemblage of many persons bent on unlawful violence; a riot involving a multitude. Abbott.

MOBBING AND RIOTING. In Scotch law. A general term, including all those convocations of the lieges for violent and unlawful purposes which are attended with injury to the persons or property of the lieges, or terror and alarm to the neighborhood in which it takes place. The two phrases are usually placed together; but, nevertheless, they have distinct meanings, and are sometimes used separately in legal language,—the word "mobbing" being peculiarly applicable to the unlawful assemblage and violence of a number of persons, and that of "rioting" to the outrageous behavior of a single individual. Alis. Crim. Law, c. 23, p. 509.

MOBILIA. See "Movables."

MOBILIA NON HABET SITUM. Movables have no situs. 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 472.

MOBILIA PERSONAM SEQUUNTUR; immobilia situm. Movable things follow the person; immovable, their locality. Story, Confl. Laws (3d Ed.) 638, 639.

MOBILIA SEQUUNTUR PERSONAM. Movables follow the person. Story, Confl. Laws (3d Ed.) 638, 639; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 462.

MODERAMEN INCULPATAE TUTELAE (Lat.) In Roman law. The regulation of justifiable defense. A term used to express that degree of force in defense of the person or property which a person might safely use, although it should occasion the death of the aggressor. Calv. Lex.; Bell, Dict.

MODERATA MISERICORDIA. A writ founded on Magna Charta, which lies for him who is amerced in a court, not of record, for any transgression beyond the quality or quantity of the offense. It is addressed to the lord of the court, or his bailiff, commanding him to take a moderate amerciament of the parties. New Nat. Brev. 167; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 76.

MODERATE CASTIGAVIT. In pleading. The name of a plea in trespass by which the defendant justifies an assault and battery, because he moderately corrected the plaintiff, whom he had a right to correct. 2 Chit. Pl. 576; 2 Bos. & P. 224; 15 Mass. 347; 2 Phil. Ev. 147; Bac. Abr. "Assault" (C).

This plea ought to disclose, in general terms, the cause which rendered the correction expedient. 3 Salk. 47.

MODERATOR. A person appointed to preside at a popular meeting. Sometimes he is called a "chairman." The presiding officer of town meetings in New England is so called.

MODICA CIRCUMSTANTIA FACTI JUS mutat. A small circumstance attending an act may change the law.

MODIUS (Lat.) In old English law. A bushel. Cowell; Spelman.

A larger measure, of uncertain quantity. Id.

A measure of land. Id.

MODO ET FORMA (Lat. in manner and form). In pleading. Technical words used to put in issue such concomitants of the principal matters as time, place, etc., where these circumstances were material. Their use when these circumstances were immaterial was purely formal. The words were translated literally, when pleadings began to be made in English, by "in manner and form." See Lawes, Pl. 120; Gould, Pl. c. 6, § 22; Steph. Pl. 213; Dane, Abr. Index; Viner, Abr. "Modo et Forma."

MODUS.

——In Civil Law. Manner; means; way. Ainsworth. A rythmic song. Du Cange.

——In Old Conveyancing. Manner; e. g., the manner in which an estate should be held, etc. A qualification, whether in restriction or enlargement of the terms of the instrument; especially with relation to the kind of grant called "donatio,"—the making those quasi heirs who were not in fact heirs, according to the ordinary form of such conveyances. And this modus or qualification of the ordinary form became so common as to give rise to the maxim, modus et conventio vincunt legem. Co. Litt. 19a; Bracton, 17b; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 293. A consideration. Bracton, 17, 18.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. A peculiar manner of tithing, growing out of custom. See "Modus Decimandi."

MODUS DE NON DECIMANDO. In ecclesiastical law. A custom or prescription not to pay tithes, which is not good, except in case of abbey lands. 2 Bl. Comm. 31, note.

MODUS DE NON DECIMANDO NON VAlet. A modus (prescription) not to pay tithes is void. Lofft, 427; Cro. Eliz. 511; 2 Bl. Comm. 31.

MODUS DECIMANDI. In ecclesiastical law. A peculiar manner of tithing, arising from immemorial usage, and differing from the payment of one-tenth of the annual increase.

To be a good modus, the custom must be, first, certain and invariable; second, beneficial to the parson; third, a custom to pay something different from the thing compounded for; fourth, of the same species; fifth, the thing substituted must be in its nature as durable as the tithes themselves; sixth, it must not be too large,—that would be a rank modus. 2 Bl. Comm. 30. See 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 100; 13 Mees. & W. 822.

MODUS ET CONVENTIO VINCUNT LEgem. The form of agreement and the convention of the parties overrule the law. 2 Coke, 73.

MODUS HABILIS. A good or valid manner.

MODUS LEGEM DAT DONATIONI. The manner gives law to a gift. Co. Litt. 19a; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 615.

MODUS LEVANDI FINES. The manner of levying fines; the title of a short statute in French, passed in the eighteenth year of Edward I. 2 Inst. 510; 2 Bl. Comm. 349.

MODUS TENENDI. The manner of holding; i. e., the different species of tenures by which estates are held.

MODUS TRANSFERRENDI. The manner of transferring.

MODUS VACANDI. The manner of vacating. How and why an estate has been relinquished or surrendered by a vassal to his lord might well be referred to by this phrase. See Tray. Lat. Max. s. v.

MODUS VIVENDI. In international law. An agreement between nations not rising to the dignity of a treaty, regulating their conduct in respect to a particular matter. Ordinarily applied to agreements to preserve the status quo pending the negotiation of a final treaty.

MOERDA. The secret killing of another; murder. 4 Bl. Comm. 194.

MOHATRA. In French law. The name of a fraudulent contract made to cover a usurious loan of money.

It takes place when an individual buys merchandise from another on a credit at a high price, to sell it immediately to the first seller, or to a third person who acts as his agent, at a much less price for cash. 16 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 44; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1118.

MOIETY. The half of anything; as, if a testator bequeath one moiety of his estate to A., and the other to B., each shall take an equal part. Joint tenants are said to hold by moieties. Litt. 125; 3 C. B. 274, 283.

MOLESTATION. In Scotch law. The name of an action competent to the proprietor of a landed estate against those who disturb his possession. It is chiefly used in questions of commonty, or of controverted marches. Ersk. Inst. 4. 1. 48.

MOLITURA. Toll paid for grinding at a mill; multure. Not used.

MOLITURA LIBERA. Free grinding; a liberty to have a mill without paying tolls to the lord. Jacob.

MOLLITER MANUS IMPOSUIT (Lat.) He laid his hands on gently.

——In Pleading. Technical words in a plea in justification of a trespass to the person, that defendant used no more force than was reasonably necessary (20 Johns. [N. Y.] 427; 4 Denio [N. Y.] 448; 2 Strob. [S. C.] 232; 17 Ohio, 454), in defense of property (3 Cush. [Mass.] 154; 3 Ohio St. 159; 9 Barb. [N. Y.] 652; 23 Pa. St. 424. See 19 N. H. 562; 25 Ala. [N. S.] 41; 4 Cush. [Mass.] 597), or the prevention of crime (2 Chit. Pl. 574).

MOLMUTIAN LAWS. The laws of Dunvallo Molmutius, a legendary or mythical king of the Britons, who is supposed to have begun his reign about 400 B. C. These laws were famous in the land till the Conquest. Tomlins; Mozley & W.

MOMENTUM. In the civil law. An instant; an indivisible portion of time. Calv. Lex.

A portion of time that might be measured, a division or subdivision of an hour, answering in some degree to the modern "minute," but of longer duration. According to Accursius, ten moments (momenta) made a point (punctum), and four points an hour. Calv. Lex. Hence, no doubt, the rule stated in Bracton, that an hour consists of forty moments (hora fit ex quadraginta momentis), which has been so far misunderstood as to be pronounced a misprint. Bracton, fols. 264, 359b; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 5, § 31.

MONARCHY. That government which is ruled, really or theoretically, by one man, who is wholly set apart from all other members of the state.

MONASTERIUM (Graeco-Lat. and Law Lat.) In civil and old English law. A monastery; a church. Nov. 5; Spelman. Hence, according to Spelman, the Saxon mynster and munster, and probably, also, the Law French monstre.

MONETA (Lat.) In civil and old English law. Money. Said to be derived from monere, to warn, because by the impression upon it we are warned whose it is, that is, by whom coined, and what is its value. Falsa moneta, counterfeit money. Code, 9. 24. Monetam conterfactam. Mem. in Scacc. M. 22 Edw. I. De moneta et chambio domini regis, of the money and exchange of the lord the king. Bracton, fol. 117.

MONETA EST JUSTUM MEDIUM ET mensura rerum commutabilium, nam per medium monetae fit omnium rerum conveniens, et justa aestimatio. Money is the just medium and measure of all commutable things, for by the medium of money a convenient and just estimation of all things is made. See 1 Bouv. Inst. note 922.

MONETANDI JUS COMPREHENDITUR in regalibus quae nunquam a regio sceptro abdicantur. The right of coining is comprehended amongst those rights of royalty which are never relinquished by the kingly sceptre. Dav. 18.

MONEY. In a strict sense, gold and silver coin. Const. U. S. art. 1, §§ 8, 10. See 44 Tex. 622.

In a broader sense, the common medium of exchange in a civilized nation. 45 Tex. 309; 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 15.

The term is used to designate the whole volume of the medium of exchange, recognized by law or the custom of merchants. 34 Fed. 681. It is generally held to include banknotes. 3 Mass. 403; 71 Ala. 544; 47 Wis. 557. But see, contra, 3 Conn. 534.

As used in wills, it has been construed as synonymous with personalty, to effect the intent of the testator. Jarm. Wills, c. 24.

MONEY CLAIMS. In English practice. Under the judicature act of 1875, claims for the price of goods sold, for money lent, for arrears of rent, etc., and other claims where money is directly payable on a contract express or implied, as opposed to the cases where money is claimed by way of damages for some independent wrong, whether by breach of contract or otherwise. These "money claims" correspond very nearly to the "money counts" hitherto in use. Mozley & W.

MONEY COUNTS. In pleading. The common counts in an action of assumpsit.

They are so called because they are founded on express or implied promises to pay money in consideration of a precedent debt. They are of four descriptions, the indebitatus assumpsit, the quantum meruit, the quantum valebant, and the account stated.

MONEY DEMAND. A demand which is certain beforehand, or ascertainable by calculation.

MONEY HAD AND RECEIVED. In pleading. The technical designation of a form of declaration in assumpsit, wherein the plaintiff declares that the defendant had and received certain money, etc.

An action of assumpsit will lie, without regard to privity of contract, to recover money to which the plaintiff is entitled, and which in justice and equity, when no rule of policy or strict law prevents it, the defendant ought to refund to the plaintiff, and which he cannot with a good conscience retain, on a count for money had and received. 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 369; 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 219; 1 Dall. (Pa.) 148; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 154; 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 175; 1 Har. (N. J.) 447; 1 Har. & G. (Md.) 258; 7 Mass. 288; 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 290; 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 488; Add. Cont. 230.

MONEY JUDGMENT. One which requires the payment of money, as distinguished from one directing some act to be done.

MONEY LENT. In pleading. The technical name of a declaration in an action of assumpsit for that the defendant promised to pay the plaintiff for money lent.

To recover, the plaintiff must prove that the defendant received his money, but it is not indispensable that it should be originally lent. If, for example, money has been advanced upon a special contract, which has been abandoned and rescinded, and which cannot be enforced, the law raises an implied promise from the person who holds the money to pay it back as money lent. 7 Bing. 266; 3 Mees. & W. 434; 9 Mees. & W. 729. See 1 N. Chip. (Vt.) 214; 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 37.

MONEY MADE. The return on execution that the amount has been collected thereon.

MONEY OF ADIEU. In French law. Earnest money. So called because given at parting, in completion of the bargain. Poth. Sale, 507. Arrhes is the usual French word for earnest money; "money of adieu" is a provincialism found in the province of Orleans.

MONEY PAID. In pleading. The technical name of a declaration in assumpsit, in which the plaintiff declares for money paid for the use of the defendant.

MONEYED CORPORATION. In New York law, one having the power to make loans upon pledges or deposits, or to make contracts of insurance. 1 Rev. St. N. Y. 731; 3 N. Y. 479.

MONIER, or MONEYER (Law Lat. monetarius). In old English law. A minister of the mint, who made and coined the king's money. There were several of these moniers or workmen; "some to shear the money, some to forge it, others to beat it broad, some to round it, and some to stamp or coin it." Cowell, voc. "Moniers;" "Mint."

A banker; one who dealt in money. Cowell.

MONITION. In practice. A process in the nature of a summons, which is used in the civil law, and in those courts which derive their practice from the civil law.

A general monition is a citation or summons to all persons interested, or, as is commonly said, to the whole world, to appear and show cause why the libel filed in the case should not be sustained, and the prayer of relief granted. This is adopted in prize cases, admiralty suits for forfeitures, and other suits in rem, when no particular individuals are summoned to answer. In such cases, the taking possession of the property libelled, and this general citation or monition, served according to law, are considered constructive notice to the world of the pendency of the suit; and the judgment rendered thereupon is conclusive upon the title of the property which may be affected. In form, the monition is substantially a warrant of the court, in an admiralty cause, directed to the marshal or his deputy, commanding him, in the name of the president of the United States, to give public notice, by advertisements in such newspapers as the court may select, and by notifications to be posted in public places, that a libel has been filed in a certain admiralty cause pending, and of the time and place appointed for the trial. A brief statement of the allegations in the libel is usually contained in the monition. The monition is served in the manner directed in the warrant.

A mixed monition is one which contains directions for a general monition to all persons interested, and a special summons to particular persons named in the warrant. This is served by newspaper advertisements, by notifications posted in public places, and by delivery of a copy attested by the officer to each person specially named, or by leaving it at his usual place of residence.

A special monition is a similar warrant, directed to the marshal or his deputy, requiring him to give special notice to certain persons, named in the warrant, of the pendency of the suit, the grounds of it, and the time and place of trial. It is served by delivery of a copy of the warrant, attested by the officer, to each one of the adverse parties, or by leaving the same at his usual place of residence; but the service should be personal, if possible. Clerke, Prax. tit. 21; Dunl. Adm. Prac. 135. See Conkl. Adm.; Pars. Mar. Law.

MONITORY LETTER. In ecclesiastical law. The process of an official, a bishop, or other prelate having jurisdiction, issued to compel, by ecclesiastical censures, those who know of a crime, or other matter which requires to be explained, to come and reveal it. Merlin, Repert.

MONOCRACY. A government by one person only.

MONOCRAT. A monarch who governs alone; an absolute governor.

MONOGAMY. The state of having only one husband or one wife at a time.

A marriage contracted between one man and one woman, in exclusion of all the rest of mankind. The term is used in opposition to "bigamy" and "polygamy." Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 857.

MONOGRAM. A character or cipher composed of one or more letters interwoven, being an abbreviation of a name.

A signature made by a monogram would perhaps be binding provided it could be proved to have been made and intended as a signature. 1 Denio (N. Y.) 471.

There seems to be no reason why such a signature should not be as binding as one which is altogether illegible.

MONOMACHY. Single combat.

MONOMANIA. In medical jurisprudence. Insanity only upon a particular subject, and with a single delusion of the mind.

The most simple form of this disorder is that in which the patient has imbibed some single notion, contrary to common sense, and to his own experience, and which seems, and no doubt really is, dependent on errors of sensation. It is supposed the mind in other respects retains its intellectual powers. In order to avoid any civil act done or criminal responsibility incurred, it must manifestly appear that the act in question was the effect of monomania. Cyc. Prac. Med. "Soundness and Unsoundness of Mind;" Ray, Ins. § 203; 13 Ves. 89; 3 Brown, Ch. 444; 1 Add. Ecc. 283; 2 Add. Ecc. 402; Hagg. 18; 2 Add. 79, 94, 209; 5 Car. & P. 168; Burrows, Ins. 484, 485. See "Delusion;" "Mania."

MONOMANIACS. Persons who are insane upon some one or more subjects, and apparently sane upon all others. 2 Redf. Sur. (N. Y.) 34, 37.

MONOPOLIA DICITUR, CUM UNUS SOlus aliquod genus mercaturae universum emit, pretium ad suum libitum statuens. It is said to be a monopoly when one person alone buys up the whole of one kind of commodity, fixing a price at his own pleasure. 11 Coke, 86.

MONOPOLIUM (Graeco-Lat.) The sole power, right, or privilege of sale; monopoly; a monopoly. Calv. Lex.; Code, 4. 59; Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 2, c. 12, § 16.

MONOPOLY (from Lat. monopolium, q. v.) The exclusive privilege of selling any commodity. Defined in English law to be "a license or privilege allowed by the king for the sole buying and selling, making, working, or using of anything whatsoever, whereby the subject in general is restrained from that liberty of manufacturing or trading which he had before." 4 Bl. Comm. 159; 4 Steph. Comm. 291.

Any exclusive right or privilege.

MONSTER. An animal which has a conformation contrary to the order of nature. 2 Dungl. Hum. Phys. 422.

A monster, although born of a woman in lawful wedlock, cannot inherit. Those who have, however, the essential parts of the human form, and have merely some defect of conformation, are capable of inheriting, if otherwise qualified. 2 Bl. Comm. 246; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 366; Co. Litt. 7, 8; Dig. 1. 5. 14; 1 Swift, System, 331; Fred. Code, pt. 1, bk. 1, tit. 4, § 4.

No living human birth, however much it may differ from human shape, can be lawfully destroyed. Traill, Med. Jur. 47. See Briand, Med. Leg. pt. 1, c. 6, art. 2, § 3; 1 Fodere, Med. Leg. §§ 402-405.

MONSTRANS DE DROIT (Fr. showing of right). A common-law process by which restitution of personal or real property is obtained from the crown by a subject. Chit. Prerog. Cr. 345; 3 Bl. Comm. 256. By this process, when the facts of the title of the crown are already on record, the facts on which the plaintiff relies, not inconsistent with such record, are shown, and judgment of the court prayed thereon. The judgment, if against the crown, is that of ouster le main, which vests possession in the subject without execution. Bac. Abr. "Prerogative" (E); 1 And. 181; 5 Leigh (Va.) 512; 12 Grat. (Va.) 564.

MONSTRANS DE FAIT (Fr. showing of a deed). A profert. Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (I 12, note 1).

MONSTRAVERUNT, WRIT OF. In English law. A writ which lies for the tenants of ancient demesne who hold by free charter, and not for those tenants who hold by copy of court roll, or by the rod, according to the custom of the manor. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 31.

MONTES PIETATIS, or MONTS DE PIete. Institutions established by public authority for lending money upon pledge of goods.

In these establishments a fund is provided, with suitable warehouses, and all necessary accommodations. They are managed by directors. When the money for which the goods pledged is not returned in proper time, the goods are sold to reimburse the institutions. They are found principally on the continent of Europe. With us, private persons, called "pawnbrokers," perform this office,—sometimes with doubtful fidelity. See Bell, Inst. 5. 2. 2.

MONTH. A space of time variously computed, as it is applied to astronomical, civil or solar, or lunar months.

The astronomical month contains one-twelfth part of the time employed by the sun in going through the zodiac. In law, when a month simply is mentioned, it is never understood to mean an astronomical month.

The civil, solar or calendar month is that which agrees with the Gregorian calendar; and these months are known by the names of January, February, March, etc. They are composed of unequal portions of time. There are seven of thirty-one days each, four of thirty, and one which is sometimes composed of twenty-eight days, and in leap years of twenty-nine.

The lunar month consists of twenty-eight days.

By the law of England, a month means ordinarily, in common contracts, as in leases, a lunar month. A contract, therefore, made for a lease of land for twelve months would mean a lease for forty-eight weeks only. 2 Bl. Comm. 141; 6 Coke, 62; 6 Term R. 224; 1 Maule & S. 111; 1 Bing. 307. A distinction has been made between "twelve months" and "a twelve-months." The latter has been held to mean a year. 6 Coke, 61.

But in mercantile contracts in England, and for any purpose in the United States, a month simply signifies a calendar month. Chit. Bills, 406; 3 Brod. & B. 187; 1 Maule & S. 111; Story, Bills, § 143; Story, Partn. § 213; 2 Mass. 170; 4 Mass. 460; 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 179; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 99; 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 512; 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 358; 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 518, 605; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 302; 4 Dall. (Pa.) 143; 4 Mass. 461; 4 Bibb (Ky.) 105.

In England, in the ecclesiastical law, months are computed by the calendar. 3 Burrows, 1455; 1 Maule & S. 111.

MONUMENT. A thing intended to transmit to posterity the memory of some one. A tomb where a dead body has been deposited.

In this sense it differs from a "cenotaph," which is an empty tomb. Dig. 11. 7. 2. 6; Id. 11. 7. 2. 42.

A permanent landmark, whether natural or artificial, established for the purpose of indicating a boundary.

MONUMENTA QUAE NOS RECORDA vocamus sunt veritatis et vetustatis vestigia. Monuments, which we call "records," are the vestiges of truth and antiquity. Co. Litt. 118.

MOORING. In maritime law. The securing of a vessel by a hawser or chain, or otherwise, to the shore, or to the bottom by a cable and anchor. The being "moored in safety," under a policy of insurance, is being moored in port, or at the usual place for landing and taking in cargo, free from any immediate impending peril insured against. 1 Phil. Ins. 968; 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 88; 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 358; 2 Strange, 1243; 5 Mart. (La.) 637; 6 Mass. 313; Code de Comm. 152.

MOOT (from Saxon gemot, meeting together). In English law. A term used in the inns of court, signifying the exercise of arguing imaginary cases, which young barristers and students used to perform at certain times, the better to be enabled by this practice to defend their clients' cases. Orig. Jur. 212.

To plead a mock cause. Also spelled "meet," from Saxon motain, to meet; the sense of debate being from meeting, encountering. A moot question is one which has not been decided.

MOOT COURT. A court where moot questions are argued. Webster.

In law schools this is one of the methods of instruction. An undecided point of law is argued by students appointed as counsel on either side of the cause, one or more of the professors sitting as judge in presence of the school. The argument is conducted as in cases reserved for hearing before the full bench.

MOOT HILL. Hill of meeting (gemot), on which the Britons used to hold their courts, the judge sitting on the eminence, the parties, etc., on an elevated platform below. Enc. Lond.

MOOT MAN. One of those who used to argue the reader's cases in the inns of court.

MORA (Lat.) In the civil law. Delay; default; neglect; culpable delay or default. Calv. Lex.

MORA REPROBATUR IN LEGE. Delay is disapproved of in law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 51.

MORAL CERTAINTY. That degree of certainty which will justify a jury in grounding on it their verdict. It is only probability; but it is called "certainty," because every sane man assents to it necessarily, from a habit produced by the necessity of acting. Nothing else but a strong presumption grounded on probable reasons, and which very seldom fails and deceives us. Puffendorff, Law Nat. bk. 1, c. 2, § 11. A reasonable and moral certainty; a certainty that convinces and directs the understanding, and satisfies the reason and judgment, of those who are bound to act conscientiously upon it. A certainty beyond a reasonable doubt. Shaw, C. J., Com. v. Webster, Bemis' Report of the trial, 469, 470. Such a certainty "as convinces beyond all reasonable doubt." Parke, B., Best, Pres. 257, note; 6 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 217.

MORAL FRAUD. Fraud involving actual turpitude, as distinguished from mere constructive fraud.

MORAL OBLIGATION. A duty which one owes, and which he ought to perform, but which he is not legally bound to fulfill.

These obligations are of two kinds: (1) Those founded on a natural right; as, the obligation to be charitable, which can never be enforced by law. (2) Those which are supported by a good or valuable antecedent consideration; as, where a man owes a debt barred by the act of limitations, this cannot be recovered by law, though it subsists in morality and conscience; but if the debtor promise to pay it, the moral obligation is a sufficient consideration for the promise, and the creditor may maintain an action of assumpsit to recover the money. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 623. See "Consideration."

MORARI (Lat.) In old English law. To delay; to pause or rest. Moratur in lege, (he) rests or pauses in law; (he) demurs.

MORBOSUS (Lat. from morbus). In the civil law. Diseased. See Dig. 21. 1. 1-16.

MORBUS SONTICUS (Lat.) In the civil law. A sickness which rendered a man incapable of attending to any business (qui cuique rei nocet). Dig. 50. 16. 113; 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 137, § 127, note. A sickness of the severer kind, having the power of causing great pain. A. Gellius, Noct. Att. lib. 20, c. 1. A sickness which excused a nonappearance in court. Calv. Lex.; Adams, Rom. Ant. 245, 272. Bracton uses this term in treating of the law of essoins, but gives it the meaning of an incurable disease. Bracton, fol. 344b.

MORE COLONICO (Lat.) In old pleading. In husbandlike manner. Towns. Pl. 198.

MORE OR LESS. Words, in a conveyance of lands or contract to convey lands, importing that the quantity is uncertain and not warranted, and that no right of either party under the contract shall be affected by a deficiency or excess in the quantity. 17 Ves. 394; Powell, Powers, 397. So in contracts of sale generally. 2 Barn. & Adol. 106.

MORGANATIĆ MARRIAGE. A lawful and inseparable conjunction of a single man of noble and illustrious birth with a single woman of an inferior or plebeian station, upon this condition, that neither the wife nor children should partake of the title, arms, or dignity of the husband, nor succeed to his inheritance, but should have a certain allowance assigned to them by the morganatic contract.

This relation was frequently contracted during the middle ages. The marriage ceremony was regularly performed, the union was for life and indissoluble, and the children were considered legitimate, though they could not inherit. Fred. Code, bk. 2, art. 3; Poth. du Mar. 1, c. 2, § 2; Shelf. Mar. & Div. 10; Pruss. Code, art. 835.

MORGANGIVA, or MORGENGEBA (Law Lat.; Lomb. morgingap; Saxon, morgan gyfe; from morgin, morning, and gab, a gift). In old European law. A gift made to a wife on the morning of the nuptial day; a species of dower, which Spelman compares to the English dower ad ostium ecclesiae. This word occurs in the laws of the Burgundians, Alemanni, Ripuarians, and Lombards, and also in the laws of Canute. LL. Canuti, c. 71. Spelman.

MORGEN (Anglo-Dutch). In old New York law. A measure of land, equal to about two acres. O'Callaghan's New Netherlands, vol. 2, Append. 593.

MORS (Lat.) Death.

MORS DICITUR ULTIMUM SUPPLICIum. Death is denominated the extreme penalty. 3 Inst. 212.

MORS OMNIA SOLVIT. Death dissolves all things.

MORT CIVILE. In French law. Civil death, as upon conviction for felony. It was nominally abolished by a law of the 31st of May, 1854, but something very similar to it, in effect, at least, still remains. Thus, the property of the condemned, possessed by him at the date of his conviction, goes and belongs to his successors (heritiers), as in case of an intestacy, and his future acquired property goes to the state by right of its prerogative (par droit de desherence), but the state may, as a matter of grace, make it over in whole or in part to the widow and children. Brown.

MORT D'ANCESTOR. An ancient and now almost obsolete remedy in the English law. An assize of mort d'ancestor was a writ which was sued out where, after the decease of a man's ancestor, a stranger abated, and entered into the estate. Co. Litt. 159. The remedy in such case is now to bring ejectment.

MORTALITY. This word, in its ordinary sense, never means violent death, but death arising from natural causes. 5 Barn. & Ald. 110; 3 Barn. & C. 793.

MORTALITY (or MORTUARY) TABLES. Tables showing the duration of human life, as based on observation and records of vital statistics. The records of deaths kept at certain places for long periods form the basis of the tables more commonly known as "Carlisle Tables," or "Northampton Tables" (q. v.)

MORTGAGE. The conveyance of an estate or property by way of pledge for the security of debt, and to become void on payment of it. 4 Kent, Comm. 136.

An estate created by a conveyance absolute in its form, but intended to secure the performance of some act, such as the payment of money, and the like, by the grantor or some other person, and to become void if the act is performed agreeably to the terms prescribed at the time of making such conveyance. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 475.

By the law of several states, a mortgage is no longer a conveyance by which an estate passes, but a mere pledge creating only a lien. Holmes, Mortg. § 1.

Two general theories prevail as to the nature of the estate created by mortgage. The common-law theory that a mortgage passes title to the mortgagee subject to defeat by the performance of the condition subsequent has been adopted in Alabama (69 Ala. 442), Arkansas (65 Ark. 174), Connecticut (19 Conn. 218), Illinois (1 Scam. 140), Maine (2 Me. 132), Maryland (6 Gill & J. 72), Massachusetts (5 Mass. 120), New Hampshire (5 N. H. 420), North Carolina (66 N. C. 477), Ohio (10 Ohio, 71), Pennsylvania (77 Pa. St. 250), Rhode Island (6 R. I. 542), Tennessee (10 Humph. 214), and Virginia (4 Rand. 245).

The common-law theory, in a somewhat modified form, prevails in Delaware (1 Houst. 320), Mississippi (24 Miss. 368), Missouri (10 Mo. 229), New Jersey (40 N. J. Law, 417), and Vermont (44 Vt. 294).

The equitable doctrine that a mortgage conveys only a lien is adopted in California (2 Cal. 491; 64 Cal. 514), Colorado (Laws 1887, § 263, p. 174), Florida (17 Fla. 698), Georgia (76 Ga. 384), Idaho (Rev. St. 1887, § 3350), Indiana (27 Ind. 472), Iowa (30 Iowa, 268), Kansas (35 Kan. 120), Kentucky (14 Bush, 788), Michigan (65 Mich. 598), Minnesota (12 Minn. 330), Montana (6 Mont. 596), Nebraska (14 Neb. 246), Nevada (1 Nev. 179), New York (54 N. Y. 599), North Dakota (Rev. Code, § 1733), Oregon (11 Or. 534), South Carolina (27 S. C. 309), South Dakota (Rev. Code 1877, § 1733), Utah (Comp. Laws 1876, p. 478), Washington (3 Wash. T. 318), Wisconsin (7 Wis. 566). 1 Pingrey, Mortg. 16.

Both real and personal property may be mortgaged, and in substantially the same manner, except that, a mortgage being in its nature a transfer of title, the laws respecting the necessity of possession of personal property and the nature of instruments of transfer, being different, require the transfer to be made differently in the two cases. See "Chattel Mortgage."

A mortgage may in form be either a conveyance with provision for a defeasance, or a conveyance absolute in form, with a collateral agreement for a defeasance. 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 555; 2 Me. 152; 12 Mass. 456.

An equitable mortgage is one in which the mortgagor does not actually convey the property, but does some act by which he manifests his determination to bind the same as a security. See "Equitable Mortgage."

A legal mortgage is a conveyance of property intended by the parties at the time of making it to be a security for the performance of some prescribed act. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 479.

MORTGAGE OF GOODS. A conveyance of goods in gage, or mortgage, by which the whole legal title passes conditionally to the mortgagee; and if the goods are not redeemed at the time stipulated, the title becomes absolute in law, although equity will interfere to compel a redemption. Story, Bailm. § 287. It is distinguished from a pledge by the circumstance that possession by the pledgee is not, or may not be, essential to create or to support the title. Id. See 2 Kent, Comm. 522-532; 4 Kent, Comm. 138.

MORTGAGEE. He to whom a mortgage is made. See "Mortgage."

MORTGAGOR. He who makes a mortgage. See "Mortgage."

MORTH (Saxon). Murder, answering exactly to the French "assassinat" or "muertre de guet-apens."

MORTHLAGA. A murderer. Cowell.

MORTHLAGE. Murder. Cowell.

MORTIFICATION. In Scotch law. A term nearly synonymous with "mortmain."

MORTIS CAUSA (Lat.) By reason of death; in contemplation of death. Thus used in the phrase, donatio mortis causa (q. v.)

MORTIS MOMENTUM EST ULTIMUM vitae momentum. The last moment of life is the moment of death. 4 Bradf. Sur. (N. Y.) 245, 250.

MORTMAIN. A term applied to denote the possession of lands or tenements by any corporation, sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal. These purchases having been chiefly made by religious houses, in consequence of which lands became perpetually inherent in one dead hand, this has occasioned the general appellation of "mortmain" to be applied to such alienations. 2 Bl. Comm. 268; Co. Litt. 2b; Ersk. Inst. 2. 4. 10; Barr. Obs. St. 27, 97. See Story, Eq. Jur. § 1137; Shelf. Mortm.

MORTMAIN ACTS. These acts had for their object to prevent lands getting into the possession or control of religious corporations, or, as the name indicates, in mortua manu. After numerous prior acts dating from the reign of Edward I., it was enacted by St. 9 Geo. II. c. 36 (called the "Mortmain Act" par excellence), that no lands should be given to charities unless certain requisites should be observed. Brown.

MORTUARY. In ecclesiastical law. A burial place. A kind of ecclesiastical heriot, being a customary gift of the second-best living animal belonging to the deceased, claimed by and due to the minister in many parishes, on the death of his parishioners, whether buried in the church yard or not. These mortuaries, like lay heriots, were originally voluntary bequests to the church in lieu of tithes or ecclesiastical dues neglected in lifetime. See "Soulscot." They were reduced to a certain amount by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 6. They were sometimes payable to the lord. Par. Ant. 470. The mortuary seems to have been carried to church with the corpse, and was therefore sometimes called corpse present. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 563. Anciently, a parishioner could not make a valid will without an assignment of a sufficient mortuary or gift to the church. 2 Bl. Comm. 427.

MORTUUM VADIUM. A mortgage.

MORTUUS (Lat.) Dead. Ainsworth. So in sheriff's return mortuus est, he is dead. O. Bridg. 469; Brooke, Abr. "Retorne de Briefe," pl. 125; 19 Viner, Abr. "Return," lib. 2, pl. 12.

MORTUUS EXITUS NON EST EXITAS. To be dead-born is not to be born. Co. Litt. 29. See 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 35; Domat, liv. prel. tit. 2, § 1, note 4, 6; 2 Bouv. Inst. notes 1721, 1935.

MOS RETINENDUS EST FIDELISSIMAE vetustatis. A custom of the truest antiquity is to be retained. 4 Coke, 78.

MOSTRENCOS. In Spanish law. Strayed goods; estrays. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 2, c. 6.

MOT BELL (Saxon). Meeting bell; a bell used by the Saxons to summon the people to the folc mote. Spelman. See "Folc Mote."

MOTWORTHY (Old Eng.) A common councilman. Cowell, voc. "Concionator."

MOTE (Saxon). A meeting; an assembly. Used in composition, as burgmote, folkmote, etc.

MOTEER. The customary payment at the court (mote) of a feudal lord.

MOTION. In practice. An application to a court by one of the parties in a cause, or his counsel, in order to obtain some rule or order of court which he thinks becomes necessary in the progress of the cause, or to get relieved in a summary manner from some matter which would work injustice. Properly, an oral application for a rule or order (41 Cal. 650), but the term is now generally applied to applications, whether written or oral.

MOTIVE (from Lat. movere, to move or stir). In the law of evidence. That which moves or influences the mind or will; an emotion, passion, or desire which incites or impels to action.

——In Criminal Evidence. An unlawful desire or emotion, awakened by the perception or contemplation of some external object, or end to be attained by action. This ultimate object is, in fact, the cause or spring of the motive itself, and has sometimes been called the "exterior" or "external" motive, as distinguished from the desire or passion it creates, which is termed the "interior" or "internal" motive. See 3 Benth. Jud. Ev. 183. It is, in other words, the inducement, or that which leads or tempts the mind to indulge the criminal desire. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 283, 284.

MOURNING. The apparel worn at funerals, and for a time afterwards, in order to manifest grief for the death of some one, and to honor his memory.

The expenses paid for such apparel.

It has been held, in England, that a demand for mourning furnished to the widow and family of the testator is not a funeral expense. 2 Car. & P. 207. See 14 Ves. 346; 1 Ves. & B. 364. See 2 Bell, Comm. 156.

MOVABLES. Such subjects of property as attend a man's person wherever he goes, in contradistinction to things immovable.

Things movable by their nature are such as may be carried from one place to another, whether they move themselves, as cattle, or cannot be removed without an extraneous power, as inanimate things. So in the civil law mobilia; but this term did not properly include living movables, which were termed moventia. Calv. Lex. But these words, mobilia and moventia, are also used synonymously, and in the general sense of "movables." Id. Movables are further distinguished into such as are in possession, or which are in the power of the owner, as a horse in actual use, a piece of furniture in a man's own house, or such as are in the possession of another, and can only be recovered by action, which are therefore said to be in action, as a debt. See "Personal Property;" Fonbl. Eq. Index; Powell, Mortg. Index; 2 Bl. Comm. 384; Civ. Code La. arts. 464-472; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 462; 2 Steph. Comm. 67; Shep. Touch. 447; 1 P. Wms. 267.

In a will, "movables" is used in its largest sense, but will not pass growing crop, nor building materials on ground. 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1014; 3 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 123; 1 Yeates (Pa.) 101; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 142.

——In Scotch Law. Every right which a man can hold which is not heritable. Opposed to "heritage." Bell, Dict.

MOVENT. One who moves; one who makes a motion before a court; the applicant for a rule or order.

MOVING FOR AN ARGUMENT. Making a motion on a day which is not motion day, in virtue of having argued a special case; used in the exchequer after it became obsolete in the queen's bench. Wharton.

MUEBLES. In Spanish law. Movables; all sorts of personal property. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 3, c. 1, § 2.

MUIRBURN. In Scotch law. The offense of setting fire to a muir or moor. 1 Brown, Ch. 78, 116.

MULATTO. A person born of one white and one black parent. 7 Mass. 88; 2 Bailey (S. C.) 558.

MULCT. A fine imposed on the conviction of an offense.

An imposition laid on ships or goods by a company of trade for the maintenance of consuls and the like. It is obsolete in the latter sense, and but seldom used in the former.

MULCTA DAMNUM FAMAE NON IRROgat. A fine does not impose a loss of reputation. Code, 1. 54; Calv. Lex.

MULIER. Of ancient time, "mulier" was taken for a wife, as it is commonly used for a woman, and sometimes for a widow; but it has been held that a virgin is included under the name "mulier." Co. Litt. 170, 243; 2 Bl. Comm. 248.

The term is used always in contradistinction to a bastard, mulier being always legitimate (Co. Litt. 243), and seems to be a word corrupted from melior, or the French meilleur, signifying lawful issue born in wedlock. But by Glanville, lawful issue are said to be mulier, not from melior, but because begotten e muliere, and not ex concubina, for he calls such issue filios mulieratos, opposing them to bastards. Glanv. lib. 7, c. 1. If the said lands "should, according to the queen's lawes, descend to the right heire, then in right it ought to descend to him, as next heire being mulierlie borne, and the other not so borne." Holinshead, Chron. Ireland, an. 1558.

MULIER PUISNE (Law Fr.) When a man has a bastard son, and afterwards marries the mother, and by her has also a legitimate son, the elder son is bastard eigne, and the younger son is mulier puisne.

MULTA CONCEDUNTUR PER OBLIQUum quae non conceduntur de directo. Many things are conceded indirectly which are not allowed directly. 6 Coke, 47.

MULTA FIDEM PROMISSA LEVANT. Many promises lessen confidence. 11 Cush. (Mass.) 350.

MULTA IGNORAMUS QUAE NOBIS NON laterent si veterum lectio nobis fuit familiaris. We are ignorant of many things which would not be hidden from us if the reading of old authors were familiar to us. 10 Coke, 73.

MULTA IN JURE COMMUNI CONTRA rationem disputandi pro communi utilitate introducta sunt. Many things have been introduced into the common law, with a view to the public good, which are inconsistent with sound reason. Co. Litt. 70; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 150; 2 Coke, 75. See 3 Term R. 146; 7 Term R. 252.

MULTA MULTO EXERCITATIONE FAcilius quam regulis percipes. You will perceive many things much more easily by practice than by rules. 4 Inst. 50.

MULTA NON VETAT LEX, QUAE TAmen tacite damnavit. The law fails to forbid many things which yet it has silently condemned.

MULTA TRANSEUNT CUM UNIVERSItate quae non per se transeunt. Many things pass as a whole which would not pass separately. Co. Litt. 12a.

MULTI MULTA; NEMO OMNIA NOVIT. Many men know many things; no one knows everything. 4 Inst. 348.

MULTI UTILIUS EST PAUCA IDONEA effundere, quam multis inutilibus homines gravari. It is much more useful to pour forth a few useful things than to oppress men with many useless things. 4 Coke, 20.

MULTIFARIOUSNESS. In equity pleading. The demand in one bill of several matters of a distinct and independent nature against several defendants. Cooper, Eq. Pl. 182; 18 Ves. 80; 2 Mason (U. S.) 201; 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 682; 2 Gray (Mass.) 467.

The uniting in one bill against a single defendant several matters perfectly distinct and unconnected. This latter is more properly called "misjoinder" (q. v.)

The subject admits of no general rules, but the courts seem to consider the circumstances of each case with reference to avoiding on one hand a multiplicity of suits, and on the other inconvenience and hardship to the defendants from being obliged to answer matters with which they have, in great part, no connection, and the complication and confusion of evidence. 1 Mylne & C. 618; 5 Sim. 288; 3 Story, C. C. (U. S.) 25; 2 Gray (Mass.) 471; Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 274, 530. It is to be taken advantage of by demurrer (2 Anstr. 469), or by plea and answer previous to a hearing (Story, Eq. Pl. 530, note), or by the court of its own accord at any time (1 Mylne & K. 546; 3 How. [U. S.] 412; 5 How. [U. S.] 127). See, generally, Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 274-290, 530-540; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4243.

MULTIPLE POINDING. In Scotch law. Double distress; a name given to an action which may be brought by a person in possession of goods claimed by different persons pretending a right thereto, calling the claimants and all others to settle their claims, so that the party who sues may be liable only "in once and single payment." Bell, Dict.; 2 Bell, Comm. 299; Stair, Inst. 3. 1. 39.

MULTIPLEX ET INDISTINCTUM PARIT confusionem; et questiones quo simpliciores, eo lucidiores. Multiplicity and indistinctness produce confusion; the more simple questions are, the more lucid they are. Hob. 335.

MULTIPLICATA TRANSGRESSIONE crescat poenae inflictio. The infliction of punishment should be in proportion to the increase of crime. 2 Inst. 479.

MULTIPLICITY (from Lat. multiplex, from multus, many, and plicare, to fold). A state of being many. Webster. That quality of a pleading which involves a variety of matters or particulars; undue variety. 2 Saund. 410.

A multiplying or increasing. Story, Eq. Pl. § 287.

MULTITUDE. The meaning of this word is not very certain. By some it is said that, to make a multitude, there must be ten persons, at least, while others contend that the law has not fixed any number. Co. Litt. 257.

MULTITUDINEM DECEM FACIUNT. Ten make a multitude. Co. Litt. 247.

MULTITUDO ERRANTIUM NON PARIT errori patrocinium. The multitude of those who err is no protection for error. 11 Coke, 75.

MULTITUDO IMPERITORUM PERDIT curiam. A multitude of ignorant practitioners destroys a court. 2 Inst. 219.

MULTURE (Law Lat. multura, molitura, from molere, to grind). In old English law. A grinding of grain at a mill; the grain ground.

The toll or fee due for grinding grain. 2 Mon. Angl. 825; Cowell. Called multer in an old award. 28 Hen. IV., cited by Blount.

——In Scotch Law. A duty paid for grinding in any mill. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 2, p. 140. A quantity of grain payable to the proprietor of a mill for grinding grain. Bell, Dict.

MUND. Peace.

MUNDBRYE. A breach of the peace.

MUNERA. The name given to grants made in the early feudal ages, which were merely tenancies at will, or during the pleasure of the grantor. Dalr. Feud. Prop. 198, 199; Wright, Ten. 19.

MUNICEPS (Lat. from munus, office, and capere, to take). In Roman law. Eligible to office.

A freeman born in a municipality or town other than Rome, who had come to Rome, and, though a Roman citizen, yet was looked down upon as a provincial, and not allowed to hold the higher offices (dignitates.)

The inhabitants of a municipality entitled to hold municipal offices. Vocat; Calv. Lex.

MUNICIPAL. Strictly, this word applies only to what belongs to a city.

Among the Romans, cities were called municipia. These cities voluntarily joined the Roman republic in relation to their sovereignty only, retaining their laws, their liberties, and their magistrates, who were thence called "municipal magistrates." With us this word has a more extensive meaning; for example, we call "municipal law" not the law of a city only, but the law of the state. 1 Bl. Comm. "Municipal" is used in contradistinction to "international." Thus, we say, an offense against the law of nations is an international offense, but one committed against a particular state or separate community is a municipal offense.

MUNICIPAL AID. A contribution of money, lands, municipal bonds, etc., by a municipality to some private enterprise deemed to be of general benefit, to procure or encourage the construction thereof.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION. A public corporation, created by government for political purposes, and having subordinate and local powers of legislation; e. g., a county, town, city, etc. 2 Kent, Comm. 275; Angell & A. Corp. 9, 29; 1 Baldw. (U. S.) 222.

An incorporation of persons, inhabitants of a particular place, or connected with a particular district, enabling them to conduct its local civil government. Glover, Mun. Corp. 1.

The incorporation, by authority of the government, of the inhabitants of a particular place, and authorizing them, in their corporate capacity, to exercise certain specified powers with respect to their local government. Dill. Mun. Corp. § 2.

In modern usage, the term is somewhat narrower, and is generally confined to bodies politic, specially organized or chartered, and excluding the ordinary political divisions of the state. In this sense, it includes cities and villages, but excludes counties, townships, or school districts. 44 Wis. 489; 34 Iowa, 84; 52 Mo. 309. But see 36 Minn. 430.

——In English Law. A body of persons in a town having the powers of acting as one person, of holding and transmitting property, and of regulating the government of the town. Such corporations existed in the chief towns of England (as of other countries) from very early times, deriving their authority from "incorporating" charters granted by the crown. Wharton.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ACT. In English law. A general statute (5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 76), passed in 1835, prescribing general regulations for the incorporation and government of boroughs.

MUNICIPAL COURTS. Courts whose jurisdiction extends only to the limits of a municipality. They are sometimes so called in the statutes creating them, but sometimes have other designations.

MUNICIPAL LAW. In contradistinction to international law is the system of law proper to any single nation or state. It is the rule or law by which a particular district, community, or nation is governed. 1 Bl. Comm. 44.

Municipal law contrasts with international law, in that it is a system of law proper to a single nation, state, or community. In any one state, the municipal law of another state is foreign law. A conflict of laws arises where a case arising in one state involves foreign persons or interests, and the foreign and the domestic law do not agree as to the proper rule to be applied.

The various provinces of municipal law are characterized according to the subjects with which they respectively treat; as, "criminal or penal law," "civil law," "military law," and the like. "Constitutional law," "commercial law," "parliamentary law," and the like, are departments of the general province of civil law, as distinguished from criminal and military law.

MUNICIPAL ORDINANCE. An ordinance of a municipal corporation.

MUNICIPAL SECURITIES. Municipal securities are evidences of municipal indebtedness issued by the municipality.

They are of two general classes:

(1) Municipal bonds, being written and usually sealed obligations executed by the proper officers of the municipality, binding it to pay a specified sum at a particular time. Such bonds are ordinarily negotiable.

(2) Municipal warrants, being instruments generally in the form of a bill of exchange drawn by a municipal officer, upon the treasurer directing him to pay a specified amount to a person named, or to bearer.

MUNICIPALITY. The body of officers, taken collectively, belonging to a city, who are appointed to manage its affairs, and defend its interests.

MUNICIPIUM (Lat. from munus, office or honor, and capere, to take).

——In Roman Law. A foreign town to which the freedom of the city of Rome was granted, and whose inhabitants had the privilege of enjoying offices and honors there; a free town. Butler, Hor. Jur. 29; Adams, Rom. Ant. 47, 77.

A free or privileged town; one that had the right of being governed by its own laws and customs. Id. 77. Hence the Latin municipalis, and English "municipal" (q. v.)

——In Old English Law. A castle. Spelman.

MUNIMENTS. The instruments of writing and written evidences which the owner of lands, possessions, or inheritances has, by which he is enabled to defend the title of his estate. Termes de la Ley; 3 Inst. 170.

MUNUS. A gift; an office; a benefice, or feud; a gladiatorial show or spectacle. Calv. Lex.; Du Cange.

MUR, or MURE (Law Fr. from murus). A wall. Par mure ou par haye, by a wall or by a hedge. Britt. c. 61. Mur abatu, a wall beaten or thrown down. Id.

MURAGE. A toll formerly levied in England for repairing or building public walls. St. Westminster I. c. 30.

MURAL MONUMENTS. Monuments made in walls.

Owing to the difficulty or impossibility of removing them, secondary evidence may be given of inscriptions on walls, fixed tables, gravestones, and the like. 2 Starkie, 274.

MURDER. In criminal law. The willful killing of any subject whatever, with malice aforethought, whether the person slain shall be an Englishman or a foreigner. Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 13, § 3. Russell says, the killing of any person under the king's peace, with malice prepense or aforethought, either express or implied by law. 1 Russ. Crimes, 421; 5 Cush. (Mass.) 304. When a person of sound mind and discretion unlawfully killeth any reasonable creature in being, and under the king's peace, with malice aforethought, either express or implied. 3 Inst. 47.

This latter definition, which has been adopted by Blackstone (4 Comm. 195), Chitty (2 Crim. Law, 724), and others, has been severely criticized. What, it has been asked, are "sound memory and understanding?" What has soundness of memory to do with the act? Be it ever so imperfect, how does it affect the guilt? If discretion is necessary, can the crime ever be committed? For is it not the highest indiscretion in a man to take the life of another, and thereby expose his own? If the person killed be an idiot or a new-born infant, is he a reasonable creature? Who is in the king's peace? What is malice aforethought? Can there be any malice afterthought? Livingston, Pen. Law, 186. It is, however, apparent that some of the criticisms are merely verbal, and others are answered by the construction given in the various cases to the requirements of the definition. See, especially, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 304.

According to Coke's definition, there must be: First, sound mind and memory in the agent. By this is understood there must be a will and legal discretion. Second, an actual killing; but it is not necessary that it should be caused by direct violence; it is sufficient if the acts done apparently endanger life, and eventually prove fatal. Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 31, § 4; 1 Hale, P. C. 431; 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 289; 9 Car. & P. 356; 2 Palmer, 545. Third, the party killed must have been a reasonable being, alive and in the king's peace. To constitute a birth, so as to make the killing of a child murder, the whole body must be detached from that of the mother; but if it has come wholly forth, but is still connected by the umbilical cord, such killing will be murder. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1722, Foeticide would not be such a killing; he must have been in rerum natura. Fourth, malice, either express or implied. It is this circumstance which distinguishes murder from every description of homicide. See "Malice."

In some of the states, by legislative enactments, murder has been divided into degrees, according to the degree of premeditation.

MURDRARE (Law Lat.) In old criminal law. To murder. 3 Bl. Comm. 321. Murdravit, murdered. A necessary word in old indictments for murder. 4 Bl. Comm. 307; 5 Coke, 122b; Lord Kenyon, 2 East, 30.

To hide, conceal, or stifle. Nullam veritatem celabo, nec celari permittam, vel murdrari, I will conceal no truth, nor will I permit it to be concealed or stifled. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 18, § 4. Words of the oath of an inquisitor or juror. And see Id. §§ 8, 10.

MURDRE (Law Fr.) Murder. LL. Gul. Conq. lib. 26.

A fine so called. Id. See "Murdrum."

MURDRITOR (Law Lat. from murdrare, q. v.) In old English law. A murderer. Murdritores, murderers. Bracton, fol. 115b.

MURDRUM. In old English law. During the times of the Danes, and afterwards till the reign of Edward III., murdrum was the killing of a man in a secret manner, and in that it differed from simple homicide.

When a man was thus killed, and he was unknown, by the laws of Canute he was presumed to be a Dane, and the vill was compelled to pay forty marks for his death. After the Conquest, a similar law was made in favor of Frenchmen, which was abolished by 3 Edw. III.

The fine formerly imposed in England upon a person who had committed homicide per infortunium or se defendendo. Prin. Pen. Law, 219, note (r).

MURORUM OPERATIO. The service of work and labor done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants in building or repairing the walls of a city or castle; their personal service was commuted into murage (q. v.) Cowell.

MURTHRUM. In old Scotch law. Murther or murder. Skene de Verb. Sign.

MUSTER ROLL. In maritime law. A list or account of a ship's company, required to be kept by the master or other person having care of the ship, containing the names, ages, national character, and quality of every person employed in the ship. Abb. Shipp. 191, 192; Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 161.

MUSTIZO. A name given to the issue of an Indian and a negro. Dudley (S. C.) 174.

MUTA CANUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. A pack of hounds. Spelman. See 2 How. St. Tr. 1164.

MUTATIO NOMINIS (Lat.) In the civil law. Change of name. Code, 9. 25.

MUTATION. In French law. This term is synonymous with "change," and is particularly applied to designate the change which takes place in the property of a thing in its transmission from one person to another. Permutation therefore happens when the owner of the thing sells, exchanges, or gives it. It is nearly synonymous with transfer. Merlin, Repert.

MUTATION OF LIBEL. In practice. An amendment allowed to a libel, by which there is an alteration of the substance of the libel, as by propounding a new cause of action, or asking one thing instead of another. Dunl. Adm. Prac. 213; Law, Ecc. Law, 165-167; 1 Paine (U. S.) 435; 1 Gall. (U. S.) 123; 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 261.

MUTATIS MUTANDIS (Lat.) The necessary changes. This is a phrase of frequent practical occurrence, meaning that matters or things are generally the same, but to be altered when necessary, as to names, offices, and the like.

MUTE (Lat. mutus). See "Standing Mute."

MUTILATION. In criminal law. The depriving a man of the use of any of those limbs which may be useful to him in fight, the loss of which amounts to mayhem. 1 Bl. Comm. 130.

MUTINY. In criminal law. The unlawful resistance of a superior officer, or the raising of commotions and disturbances on board of a ship against the authority of its commander, or in the army in opposition to the authority of the officers; a sedition; a revolt.

MUTINY ACT. In English law. A statute, annually passed, to punish mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters. It was first passed April 12, 1689. See 22 Vict. cc. 4, 5. The passage of this bill is the only provision for the payment of the army, and, like our appropriation bills, it must be passed, or the wheels of government will be stopped. There is a similar act with regard to the navy. 1 Bl. Comm. 416, 417, note.

MUTUAL. Reciprocal; reciprocally giving and receiving. Applied to contracts and relations by which reciprocal duties are imposed.

MUTUAL ACCOUNT. See "Account."

MUTUAL CREDITS. Credits given by two persons mutually, i. e., each giving credit to the other. It is a more extensive phrase than "mutual debts." Thus, the sum credited by one may be due at once; that by the other payable in futuro; yet the credits are mutual, though the transaction would not come within the meaning of mutual debts. 1 Atk. 230; 7 Term R. 378. And it is not necessary that there should be intent to trust each other. Thus, where an acceptance of A. came into the hands of B. who bought goods of A., not knowing the acceptance to be in B.'s hands, it was held a mutual credit. 3 Term R. 507, note; 4 Term R. 211; 3 Ves. 65; 8 Taunt. 156, 499; 1 Holt, 408; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 179; 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 310; 4 Gray (Mass.) 284.

MUTUAL INSURANCE. A form of life insurance in which the insurer is an association in which all the policy holders are members, and the losses are met by assessments levied upon the members either periodically, or as the exigency arises. See 50 Miss. 662.

MUTUAL MISTAKE. See "Mistake."

MUTUAL PROMISES. Promises simultaneously made by two parties to each other, each promise being the consideration of the other. Hob. 88; 14 Mees. & W. 855; Add. Cont. 22. If one of the promises be voidable, it will yet be good consideration; but not if void. Story, Cont. § 81; 2 Steph. Comm. 114.

MUTUALITY. Reciprocity; acting in return. Add. Cont. 622; 26 Md. 37. See "Consideration."

MUTUANT. The person who lends chattels in the contract of mutuum (q. v.)

MUTUARI. To borrow; mutuatus, a borrowing. 2 Archb. Prac. 25.

MUTUARY. A person who borrows personal chattels to be consumed by him, and returned to the lender in kind; the person who receives the benefit arising from the contract of mutuum. Story, Bailm. § 47.

MUTUS (Lat.) In civil and old English law. Dumb; mute; a dumb person. Dig. 50. 17. 124; Inst. 3. 20. 7; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 56, § 19. Mutus et surdus, dumb and deaf. Cro. Jac. 105.

MUTUUM. A loan of personal chattels to be consumed by the borrower, and to be returned to the lender in kind and quantity; as, a loan of corn, wine, or money, which are to be used or consumed, and are to be replaced by other corn, wine, or money. Story, Bailm. § 228. See "Loan for Use."

MY (Law Fr.) Half; middle. En my lieu, in the middle place; in the middle. Britt. c. 119. Per my et per tout, by the half or moiety, and by all. 2 Bl. Comm. 182.

MYNUTE (Law Fr.) Midnight. Britt. c. 80.

MYS (Law Fr. from mitter, to put). Put; sent; put in or inserted. Mys a lour penaunce, put to their penance. Britt. c. 4. Mys en ferges, put in irons. Id. c. 11. Poles mys en escritz, words put in writings. Id. c. 39. Que date soit mys del jour, that a date be put in of the day. Id. Mys en la gaole. Id. c. 100. Mys en certaine, put in certain. Dyer, 55b.

MYSTERY (said to be derived from the French mestier, now written metier, a trade). A trade, art, or occupation. 2 Inst. 668.

Masters frequently bind themselves in the indentures with their apprentices to teach them their art, trade, and mystery. See Hawk. P. C. c. 23, § 11.

MYSTIC TESTAMENT. A will under seal. 5 Mart. (La.) 182; 5 La. 396; 10 La. 328; 15 La. 88.

So called from the fact that it is sealed up or enclosed by the testator before attestation. Civ. Code La. arts. 1567, 1584.

N

N. E. I. An abbreviation for non est inventus (q. v.)

N. L. An abbreviation of non liquet (q. v.)

NAIF (Law Fr.; Law Lat. nativus, a born slave). A villein; a born slave (nee serfe). Britt. c. 31; LL. Gul. Conq. lib. 33.

NAKED. As used in legal phrases, the term means either without consideration or legal formality, or without support or corroboration.

NAKED CONFESSION. A confession of crime unsupported by extrinsic evidence showing the commission of the crime.

NAKED POWER. A power given to one who has no interest or estate in the property to which it relates. See 1 Caines Cas. (N. Y.) 15.

NAKED TRUST. A passive trust.

NAM, or NAAM.

——In Old English Law. The taking of a pledge; a distress. A component part of the word "withernam" (q. v.) ——In Latin Phrases. For. Used as introductory to the quotation of a maxim, and sometimes erroneously treated as part of the maxim itself.

NAMARE (Law Lat.) To take; to distrain. Spelman. The derivatives namptus and namptum were also used.

NAMATO (Law Lat.) In old English and Scotch law. A distraining or taking of a distress; an impounding. Spelman.

The English namation is given by Cowell and Blount.

NAME. One or more words habitually used to distinguish a particular individual.

The name of a person consists, among Anglo-Saxon peoples, of one family name, surname, or patronymic, by which all members of the immediate family are known, and one Christian, baptismal, or surname bestowed upon one by his parents, to distinguish him from others of the same family. 5 Robt. 599.

Only one Christian name is recognized in law, and for all legal purposes the use of a middle name is surplusage. 31 Minn. 385; 78 Iowa, 519; 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 479.

NAME AND ARMS CLAUSE. The popular name in English law for the clause, sometimes inserted in a will or settlement by which property is given to a person, for the purpose of imposing on him the condition that he shall assume the surname and arms of the testator or settlor, with a direction that, if he neglects to assume or discontinues the use of them, the estate shall devolve on the next person in remainder, and a provision for preserving contingent remainders. 3 Dav. Prec. Conv. 277.

NAMIUM. An old word which signifies the taking or distraining another person's movable goods. 2 Inst. 140; 3 Bl. Comm. 149. A distress. Dalr. Feud. Prop. 113.

NAMIUM VETITUM. An unjust taking of the cattle of another, and driving them to an unlawful place, pretending damage done by them. 3 Bl. Comm. 149.

NARR (an abbreviation of the word narratio). A declaration in a cause.

NARRATOR. A pleader who draws narrs. Serviens narrator, a serjeant-at-law. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 37. Obsolete.

NARROW SEAS. In English law. Those seas which adjoin the coast of England. Bac. Abr. "Prerogative" (B 3).

NASCITURUS (Lat. from nasci, to be born). In the civil law. An unborn child; a child to be born, or about to be born. 1 Kaufm. Mackeld. Civ. Law, 128, § 118; Tayl. Civ. Law, 248.

NASTRE (Law Fr.) Born. Fols nastres, born fools; idiots from birth. Britt. c. 34.

NATALE. The state or condition of a man acquired by birth.

NATI ET NASCITURI (Lat.) Born and to be born. An expression including all heirs, near and remote. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 8. See Comb. 154.

NATIO (Lat.) In old records. A native place. Cowell.

NATION. An independent body politic; a society of men united together for the purpose of promoting their mutual safety and advantage by the joint efforts of their combined strength.

But every combination of men who govern themselves independently of all others will not be considered a nation. A body of pirates, for example, who govern themselves, are not a nation. To constitute a nation, another ingredient is required. The body thus formed must respect other nations in general, and each of their members in particular. Such a society has her affairs and her interests; she deliberates and takes resolutions in common,—thus becoming a moral person, who possesses an understanding and will peculiar to herself, and is susceptible of obligations and rights. Vattel, Prelim. §§ 1, 2; 5 Pet. (U. S.) 52. See 1 Idaho (N. S.) 612.

NATIONAL BANK. A bank incorporated and existing under acts of congress.

NATIONAL CORPORATIONS (sometimes called "federal corporations"). Those incorporated under acts of congress.

NATIONAL DOMAIN. See "Public Domain."

NATIONAL DOMICILE. Domicile considered with respect to the nation within which one is domiciled, rather than with respect to the particular locality.

NATIONALITY. Character, status, or condition with reference to the rights and duties of a person as a member of some one state or nation, rather than another.

The term is in frequent use with regard to ships. See, generally, "Citizen;" "Denizen;" "Domicile;" "Naturalization."

NATIVA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A neife, or female villein. So called, because for the most part bond by nativity. Co. Litt. 122b.

NATIVE, or NATIVE CITIZEN. A natural-born subject. 1 Bl. Comm. 366. A person born within the jurisdiction of the United States, whether after Declaration of Independence or before, if he did not withdraw before the adoption of the constitution; or the child of a citizen born abroad, if his parents have ever resided here; or the child of an alien born abroad, if he be in the country at the time his father is naturalized. 8 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 433; Act Cong. Feb. 10, 1855; 2 Kent, Comm. (9th Ed.) 38 et seq.

NATIVI (Law Lat.) Vassals or feudal tenants. So called, even before feuds became hereditary. Wright, Ten. 14.

Villeins. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 51. See "Nativus."

NATIVITAS. In old English law. Villenage; that state in which men were born slaves. 2 Mon. Angl. 643. Called by Britton naifte. Britt. c. 31.

NATIVO HABENDO. A writ which lay for a lord whose villein had run away, commanding the sheriff to apprehend the villein, and restore him to the lord.

NATIVUS. A born villein.

NATURA APPETIT PERFECTUM, ITA et lex. Nature aspires to perfection, and so does the law. Hob. 144.

NATURA FIDEJUSSIONIS SIT STRICTISsimi juris et non durat, vel extendatur de re ad rem, de persona ad personam, de sempore ad tempus. The nature of the contract of suretyship is strictissimi juris, and cannot endure nor be extended from thing to thing, from person to person, or from time to time, Burge, Sur. 40.

NATURA NON FACIT SALTUM, ITA NEC lex. Nature makes no leap, nor does the law. Co. Litt. 238.

NATURA NON FACIT VACUUM; NEC lex supervacuum. Nature makes no vacuum; the law nothing purposeless. Co. Litt. 79.

NATURAE VIS MAXIMA; NATURA BIS maxima. The force of nature is greatest; nature is doubly great. 2 Inst. 564.

NATURAL AFFECTION. The affection which a husband, a father, a brother, or other near relative naturally feels towards those who are so nearly allied to him sometimes supplies the place of a valuable consideration in contracts, and natural affection is a good consideration in a deed. See "Bargain and Sale;" "Covenant to Stand Seised to Uses."

NATURAL ALLEGIANCE.

——In English Law. That kind of allegiance which is due from all men born within the king's dominions, immediately upon their birth, which is intrinsic and perpetual, and cannot be divested by any act of their own. 1 Bl. Comm. 369; 2 Kent, Comm. 42.

——In American Law. The allegiance due from citizens of the United States to their native country, and also from naturalized citizens, and which cannot be renounced without the permission of government, to be declared by law. 2 Kent, Comm. 43-49.

NATURAL-BORN SUBJECTS. In English law. Such persons as are born within the dominions of the crown of England, or rather within the allegiance of the king.

NATURAL CHILDREN. Bastards; children born out of lawful wedlock.

——In Civil Law. Children by procreation, as distinguished from children by adoption.

——In Louisiana. Illegitimate children who have been adopted by the father. Civ. Code La. art. 220.

NATURAL DAY. That space of time included between the rising and the setting of the sun. See "Day."

NATURAL EQUITY. That which is founded in natural justice, in honesty and right, and which arises ex aequo et bono.

It corresponds precisely with the definition of justice or natural law, which is a constant and perpetual will to give to every man what is his. This kind of equity embraces so wide a range that human tribunals have never attempted to enforce it. Every code of laws has left many matters of natural justice or equity wholly unprovided for, from the difficulty of framing general rules to meet them, from the almost impossibility of enforcing them, and from the doubtful nature of the policy of attempting to give a legal sanction to duties of imperfect obligation, such as charity, gratitude, or kindness. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3720.

NATURAL FOOL. An idiot; one born without the reasoning powers, or a capacity to acquire them.

NATURAL FRUITS. The natural production of trees, bushes, and other plants, for the use of men and animals, and for the reproduction of such trees, bushes, or plants.

This expression is used in contradistinction to artificial or figurative fruits. For example, apples, peaches, and pears are natural fruits; interest is the fruit of money, and this is artificial.

NATURAL INFANCY. A period of nonresponsible life, which ends with the seventh year.

NATURAL LAW. The law of nature; the divine will, or the dictate of right reason, showing the moral deformity or moral necessity there is in any act, according to its suitableness or unsuitableness to a reasonable nature. Sometimes used of the law of human reason, in contradistinction to the revealed law, and sometimes of both, in contradistinction to positive law.

They are independent of any artificial connections, and differ from mere presumptions of law in this essential respect, that the latter depend on and are a branch of the particular system of jurisprudence to which they belong; but mere natural presumptions are derived wholly by means of the common experience of mankind, without the aid or control of any particular rule of law, but simply from the course of nature and the habits of society. These presumptions fall within the exclusive province of the jury, who are to pass upon the facts. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3064; Greenl. Ev. § 44.

NATURAL LIBERTY. The power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint or control, unless by the law of nature. 1 Bl. Comm. 125.

NATURAL LIFE. The period between birth and natural death, as distinguished from civil death (q. v.)

NATURAL OBLIGATION. One which in honor and conscience binds the person who has contracted it, but which cannot be enforced in a court of justice. Poth. notes 173, 191. See "Obligation."

NATURAL PERSONS. Such as are formed by the Deity, as distinguished from artificial persons, or corporations, formed by human laws for purposes of society and government.

NATURAL PRESUMPTIONS. In evidence. Presumptions of fact; those which depend upon their own form and efficacy in generating belief or conviction in the mind, as derived from those connections which are pointed out by experience.

NATURAL YEAR. In old English law. That period of time in which the sun was supposed to revolve in its orbit, consisting of three hundred and sixty-five days and one-fourth of a day, or six hours. Bracton, fol. 359b.

NATURALE EST QUIDLIBET DISSOLVI eo modo quo ligatur. It is natural for a thing to be unbound in the same way in which it was bound. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 66; 4 Denio (N. Y.) 414, 417; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 785.

NATURALEZA. In Spanish law. The state of a natural-born subject. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 5, c. 2. Called naturalidad.

NATURALIZATION. The process of conferring citizenship on an alien.

NATURALIZED CITIZEN. One who, being born an alien, has lawfully become a citizen of the United States under the constitution and laws.

He has all the rights of a natural-born citizen, except that of being eligible as president or vice president of the United States. In foreign countries he has a right to be treated as such, and will be so considered even in the country of his birth, at least for most purposes. 1 Bos. & P. 430. See "Citizen."

NAUCLERUS (Lat.) Master or owner of a vessel. Vicat; Calv. Lex.

NAUFRAGE. In French maritime law. When, by the violent agitation of the waves, the impetuosity of the winds, the storm, or the lightning, a vessel is swallowed up, or so shattered that there remain only the pieces, the accident is called naufrage.

It differs from echouement, which is when the vessel remains whole, but is grounded; or from bris, which is when it strikes against a rock or a coast; or from sombrer, which is the sinking of a vessel in the sea when it is swallowed up, and which may be caused by any accident whatever. Pardessus, note 643. See "Wreck."

NAUFRAGIUM (Lat.) Shipwreck.

NAUGHT. In old practice. Bad; defective. "The bar is naught." 1 Leon. 77. "The avowry is naught." 5 Mod. 73. "The plea is undoubtedly naught." 10 Mod. 329. See 11 Mod. 179. Sometimes written "naughty." Brownl. & G. 97.

NAULAGE. The freight of passengers in a ship. Johnson; Webster.

NAULUM (Lat.) Freight or passage money. 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 124, note; Dig. 1. 6. 1, qui potiores in pignore.

NAUTA (Lat.) One who charters (exercet) a ship. L. 1, § 1, ff. nautae, caupo; Calv. Lex. Any one who is on board a vessel for the purpose of navigating her. 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 213; Vicat; 2 Emerig. 448; Poth. ad Pand. lib. 4, tit. 9, note 2; Id. lib. 47, tit. 5, notes 1-3, 8, 10. A carrier by water. 2 Ld. Raym. 917.

NAUTICAL ASSESSORS. Persons experienced in navigation, who are called upon by an admiralty judge to sit with him in cases involving questions of correct navigation, and advise him thereon. 2 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 369.

NAVAGIUM. A duty on certain tenants to carry their lord's goods in a ship. 1 Mon. Angl. 922.

NAVAL. Appertaining to the navy (q. v.)

NAVAL COURTS. Courts held abroad in certain cases to inquire into complaints by the master or seamen of a British ship, or as to the wreck or abandonment of a British ship. A naval court consists of three, four, or five members, being officers in her majesty's navy, consular officers, masters of British merchant ships, or British merchants. It has power to supersede the master of the ship with reference to which the inquiry is held, to discharge any of the seamen, to decide questions as to wages, send home offenders for trial (Merch. Ship. Act 1854, § 260), or try certain offenses in a summary manner (Merch. Ship. Act 1855, § 28).

NAVAL COURTS-MARTIAL. Tribunals for the trial of offenses arising in the management of public war vessels.

NAVAL LAW. A system of regulations for the government of the navy. 1 Kent, Comm. 377, note. Consult Act April 3, 1800; Act Dec. 21, 1861; Act July 16, 1862; Homans, Nav. Laws; De Hart, Courts-Martial.

NAVAL OFFICER. An officer of the customs of the United States.

His office relates to the estimating duties, countersigning permits, clearances, etc.; certifying the collectors' returns, and similar duties.

NAVARCHUS, or NAVICULARIUS (Lat.) In civil law. The master of an armed ship. Navicularius also denotes the master of a ship (patronus) generally; also, a carrier by water (exercitor navis). Calv. Lex.

NAVIGABLE. Capable of being navigated. In English law, only waters in which the tide flows are navigable in the technical sense. 5 Taunt. 705; Davies, 149.

In American law, any water is navigable which is used as a means of useful commerce. 112 Ill. 611; 42 Minn. 532; 110 N. Y. 380.

The navigation need not be by boats. Waters used for floating rafts or logs are public highways for that purpose. 31 Mich. 336; 58 N. H. 304; 72 N. Y. 211.

The capacity for navigation need not be perennial. 42 Wis. 203; 17 Ore. 165. Nor need it be continuous through the entire length of the stream. 31 Me. 9.

The Niagara river has been held navigable, notwithstanding the obstruction of the falls. 37 Hun (N. Y.) 537.

"Those only are navigable waters where the public pass and repass upon them with vessels or boats in the prosecution of useful occupations. There must be some commerce or navigation which is essentially valuable. A hunter or fisherman, by drawing his boat through the waters of a brook or shallow creek, does not create navigation, or constitute their waters channels of commerce. 20 Conn. 217.

NAVIGATION ACT. St. 12 Car. II. c. 78. It was repealed by 6 Geo. IV. cc. 109, 110, 114. See 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 120.

NAVIRE (Fr.) In French law. A ship. Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 6, § 1.

NAVIS (Lat.) A ship; a vessel. Dig. 21. 2. 44; Id. 47. 9.

NAVIS BONA (Lat.) A good ship; one that was staunch and strong, well caulked, and stiffened to bear the sea, obedient to her helm, swift, and not unduly affected by the wind. Calv. Lex., citing Seneca, lib. 5, p. 77.

NAVY. The whole shipping, taken collectively, belonging to the government of an independent nation, and appropriated for the purposes of naval warfare. It does not include ships belonging to private individuals, nor (in the United States, at least) revenue vessels or transports in the service of the war department. See Brightly, Dig. U. S. Laws.

NAZERANNA. A sum paid to government as an acknowledgment for a grant of lands, or any public office. Enc. Lond.

NE ADMITTAS (Lat.) The name of a writ, so called from the first words of the Latin form, by which the bishop is "forbidden to admit" to a bénefice the other party's clerk during the pendency of a quare impedit. It ought to be issued within six months after avoidance of the benefice, before title to present has devolved upon the bishop by lapse, or it will be useless. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 37; Reg. Orig. 31; 3 Bl. Comm. 248; 1 Burn, Ecc. Law, 31.

NE BAILA PAS. He did not deliver. In pleading. A plea in detinue, by which the defendant denies the delivery to him of the thing sued for.

NE DISTURBA PAS. In pleading. The general issue in quare impedit. Hob. 162. See Rast. Entr. 517; Winch, Entr. 703.

NE DONA PAS, NON DEBIT. In pleading. The general issue in formedon. It is in the following formula: "And the said C. D., by J. K., his attorney, comes and defends the right, when, etc., and says that the said E. F. did not give the said manor, with the appurtenances, or any part thereof, to the said G. B. and the heirs of his body issuing, in manner and form as the said A. B. hath in his count above alleged. And of this the said C. D. puts himself upon the country." 10 Wentw. Pl. 182.

NE EXEAT.

——In Old English Law. A high prerogative writ, generally called ne exeat regno, issued out of chancery to forbid a subject from leaving the realm. Originally it was issued for political reasons only. 1 Bl. Comm. 162, 319.

——In Modern Law. The name of a writ issued by a court of chancery, directed to the sheriff, reciting that the defendant in the case is indebted to the complainant, and that he designs going quickly into parts without the state, to the damage of the complainant, and then commanding him to cause the defendant to give bail in a certain sum that he will not leave the state without leave of the court, and for want of such bail that he, the sheriff, do commit the defendant to prison.

The writ has been abolished in most of the United States.

NE GIST PAS EN BOUCHE (Law Fr.) It does not lie in the mouth. A common phrase in the old books. Y. B. M. 3 Edw. II. 50.

NE LUMINIBUS OFFICIATUR (Lat.) In civil law. The name of a servitude which restrains the owner of a house from making such erections as obstruct the light of the adjoining house. Dig. 8. 4. 15. 17.

NE RECIPIATUR (Lat. that it be not received). A caveat or words of caution given to a law officer, by a party in a cause, not to receive the next proceedings of his opponent. 1 Sellon, Prac. 8.

NE RECTOR PROSTERNET ARBORES (Law Lat.) St. 35 Edw. I. § 2, prohibiting rectors, i. e., parsons, from cutting down the trees in church yards. In 1 Keb. 557, it was extended to prohibit them from opening new mines, and working the minerals therein. Brown.

NE RELESSA PAS (Law Fr.) The name of a replication to a plea of release, by which the plaintiff insists he "did not release." 2 Bulst. 55.

NE UNJUSTE VEXES (Lat.) In old English law. The name of a writ which issued to relieve a tenant upon whom his lord had distrained for more services than he was bound to perform.

It was a prohibition to the lord, not unjustly to distrain or vex his tenant. Fitzh. Nat. Brev.

NE UNQUES ACCOUPLE (Law Fr.) In pleading. A plea by which the party denies that he ever was lawfully married to the person to whom it refers. See the form, 2 Wils. 118; 10 Wentw. Pl. 158; 2 H. Bl. 145; 3 Chit. Pl. 599.

NE UNQUES EXECUTOR. In pleading. A plea by which the party who uses it denies that the plaintiff is an executor, as he claims to be; or that the defendant is executor, as the plaintiff in his declaration charges him to be. 1 Chit. Pl. 484; 1 Saund. 274, note 3; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (2 D 2); 2 Chit. Pl. 498.

NE UNQUES SEISIE QUE DOWER. In pleading. A plea by which a defendant denies the right of a widow who sues for and demands her dower in lands, etc., late of her husband, because the husband was not, on the day of her marriage with him, or at any time afterwards, seised of such estate, so that she could be endowed of the same. See 2 Saund. 329; 10 Wentw. Pl. 159; 3 Chit. Pl. 598, and the authorities there cited.

NE UNQUES SON RECEIVER. In pleading. The name of a plea in an action of account render, by which the defendant affirms that he never was receiver of the plaintiff. 12 Viner, Abr. 183.

NE VARIETUR (Lat. that it be not changed). A form sometimes written by notaries public upon bills or notes, for the purpose of identifying them. This does not destroy their negotiability. 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 338.

NEAT, or NET. The exact weight of an article, without the bag, box, keg, or other thing in which it may be enveloped.

NEAT CATTLE. Oxen or heifers. The term is not as broad as "beeves." 36 Tex. 324.

NEAT LAND. Land let out to the yeomanry. Cowell.

NEATNESS. In pleading. The statement in apt and appropriate words of all the necessary facts, and no more. Lawes, Pl. 62.

NEC CURIA DEFICERET IN JUSTITIA exhibenda. Nor should the court be deficient in showing justice. 4 Inst. 63.

NEC TEMPUS NEC LOCUS OCCURRIT regi. Neither time nor place bars the king. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 190.

NEC VENIAM EFFUSO SANGUINE, CASUS habet. Where blood is spilled, the case is unpardonable. 3 Inst. 57.

NEC VENIAM, LAESO NUMINE, CASUS habet. Where the Divinity is insulted, the case is unpardonable. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 167.

NECATION. The act of killing.

NECESSARIES. Such things are as proper and necessary for the sustenance of man.

As used to describe those things for which an infant may lawfully contract, necessaries are such articles, suitable to the infant's station in life, as are needful to supply the personal requirements of the infant, whether of body or mind. 12 Metc. (Mass.) 561. It includes board and lodging (23 Vt. 378), medical attendance (42 Conn. 203), or education suitable to the infant's station in life (16 Vt. 683). It does not include services essential to the improvement or protection of his property rights (12 Metc. [Mass.] 559; 32 N. H. 345), but does include services essential to secure or protect his personal rights (68 Hun [N. Y.] 589; 12 Kan. 463).

As used to describe those things for which a wife may pledge her husband's credit, it has a slightly narrower significance, excluding instruction (40 Conn. 75), and including only those things which are presently needful for the present support of the wife (63 Mo. App. 191), or to maintain her personal rights (50 Ill. App. 27); but the nature of the support for which she is entitled to contract depends on the husband's means and station in life (114 Mass. 429).

As used to describe those things for which a master may hypothecate the ship, it includes such articles fit and proper for the ship as the owner would, in the exercise of reasonable prudence, have ordered, if present. Maude & P. Shipp, 71.

NECESSARIUM EST QUOD NON POtest aliter se habere. That is necessary which cannot be otherwise.

NECESSARIUS (Lat.) Necessary; unavoidable; indispensable; not admitting of choice or the action of the will; needful. See "Necessity."

NECESSARY DEPOSITS. See "Deposit."

NECESSARY DOMICILE. That kind of domicile which exists by operation of law, as distinguished from voluntary domicile or domicile of choice. Phillim. Dom. 27-97.

NECESSARY INTROMISSION. In Scotch law. That kind of intromission or interference where a husband or wife continues in possession of the other's goods after their decease, for preservation. Wharton.

NECESSARY REPAIRS. Include not only those absolutely indispensable to the safety of the ship, but such as are reasonably fit and proper under the circumstances. 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 237.

NECESSITAS. In the civil law. Necessity; vis major.

NECESSITAS CULPABILIS. Culpable or blameworthy necessity; that kind of necessity which excuses a man who kills another se defendendo. So called by Lord Bacon to distinguish it from the necessity of killing a thief or malefactor. Bac. Com. Law, c. 5; 4 Bl. Comm. 187.

NECESSITAS EST LEX TEMPORIS ET loci. Necessity is the law of a particular time and place. 8 Coke, 69; Hale, P. C. 54.

NECESSITAS EXCUSAT AUT EXTENUat delictum in capitalibus, quod non operatur idem in civilibus. Necessity excuses or extenuates delinquency in capital cases, but not in civil. See "Necessity."

NECESSITAS FACIT LICITUM QUOD alias non est licitum. Necessity makes that lawful which otherwise is unlawful. 10 Coke, 61.

NECESSITAS INDUCIT PRIVILEGIUM quoad jura privata. With regard to private rights, necessity privileges. Bac. Max. reg. 5.

NECESSITAS NON HABET LEGEM. Necessity has no law. Plowd. 18. See "Neessity." 15 Viner, Abr. 534; 22 Viner, Abr. 540.

NECESSITAS PUBLICA MAJOR EST quam privata. Public necessity is greater than private. Bac. Max. reg. 5; Noy, Max. (9th Ed.) 34; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 18.

NECESSITAS, QUOD COGIT, DEFENDIT. Necessity defends what it compels. Hale, P. C. 54.

NECESSITAS SUB LEGE NON CONTInetur, quia quod alias non est licitum necessitas facit licitum. Necessity is not restrained by law; since what otherwise is not lawful, necessity makes lawful. 2 Inst. 326; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 23, § 14.

NECESSITAS VINCIT LEGEM. Necessity overcomes the law. Hob. 144.

NECESSITAS VINCIT LEGEM; LEGUM vincula irridet. Necessity overcomes law; it derides the fetters of law. Hob. 144.

NECESSITY (Lat. necessitas). Irresistible power; compulsive force, physical or moral. Webster.

The influence or operation of superior power or irresistible force; the influence of a cause which cannot be avoided nor controlled.

A constraint upon the will, whereby a man is urged to do that which his judgment disapproves, and which, it is to be presumed, his will (if left to itself) would reject. It is highly just and equitable, therefore, that a man should be excused for those acts which are done through unavoidable force and compulsion. 4 Bl. Comm. 27.

NECK VERSE. A cant term for the verse which the ordinary gave a malefactor who prayed his clergy to read, and by reading which he escaped hanging. The first verse of the 51st Psalm, being that ordinarily given, was called the "neck verse."

NEFAS (Lat.) That which is against right or the divine law (fas). A wicked or impious thing or act. Calv. Lex.

NEFASTUS (Lat.) In Roman law. A term applied to a day on which it was unlawful to administer justice. Adams, Rom. Ant. 129.

NEGATIO CONCLUSIONIS EST ERROR in lege. The denial of a conclusion is error in law. Wingate, Max. 268.

NEGATIO DESTRUIT NEGATIONEM, ET ambae faciunt affirmationem. A negative destroys a negative, and both make an affirmative. Co. Litt. 146.

NEGATIO DUPLEX EST AFFIRMATIO. A double negative is an affirmative.

NEGATIVE AVERMENT. In pleading. An averment in some of the pleadings in a case in which a negative is asserted.

NEGATIVE CONDITION. One where the thing which is the subject of it must not happen. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 751.

NEGATIVE COVENANT. One in negative form, whereby the covenantor binds himself not to do a particular thing.

NEGATIVE EASEMENT. One which consists in a prohibition upon the owner of the servient estate of some act which would be detrimental to the dominant estate.

NEGATIVE PREGNANT. In pleading. Such a form of negative expression as may imply or carry within it an affirmative. Thus, where a defendant pleaded a license from the plaintiff's daughter, and the plaintiff rejoined that he did not enter by her license, the rejoinder was objected to successfully as a negative pregnant. Cro. Jac. 87. The fault here lies in the ambiguity of the rejoinder, since it does not appear whether the plaintiff denies that the license was given, or that the defendant entered by the license. Steph. Pl. 381.

This ambiguity constitutes the fault (Hob. 295), which, however, does not appear to be of much account in modern pleading (1 Lev. 88; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" [R 6]; Gould, Pl. c. 6, § 36).

NEGATIVE STATUTE. One which is enacted in negative terms, and which so controls the common law that it has no force in opposition to the statute. Bac. Abr. "Statutes" (G); Brooke, Abr. "Parliament," pl. 72.

NEGLIGENCE. The breach of a legal noncontractual duty to use care, with no precise intention of producing a particular injury thereby. See Shear. & R. Neg. § 3; Bevin, Emp. Liab.

An inadvertent imperfection by a responsible human agent in the discharge of a legal duty, which produces, in an orderly and natural sequence, a damage to another. Whart. Neg. § 3.

Any lack of carefulness in one's conduct, whether in doing, or in abstaining from doing, wherefrom by reason of its not filling the full measure of the law's requirement in the particular circumstances there comes to another a legal injury. Bish. Non-Cont. Law, § 436.

Negligence has been defined as the doing or omission of something which a reasonably prudent person would not have done or omitted under the circumstances (95 U. S. 439); but this is rather a statement of what constitutes proper care, and moreover omits the element of a duty imposed by law which is broken by the negligent act or omission (Pollock, Torts, 352).

NEGLIGENT ESCAPE. The omission on the part of a gaoler to take such care of a prisoner as he is bound to take, when in consequence thereof the prisoner departs from his confinement without the knowledge or consent of the gaoler, and eludes pursuit.

For a negligent escape, the sheriff or keeper of the prison is liable to punishment, in a criminal case; and in a civil case he is liable to an action for damages at the suit of the plaintiff. In both cases the prisoner may be retaken. 3 Bl. Comm. 415. See "Escape."

NEGLIGENTIA (Lat. from negligere, to neglect). In the civil law. Negligence, want or omission of care or attention; inattention. This term hardly seems to correspond with what is called in English simple "negligence," since it took a high degree of it to constitute culpa, or fault. Magna negligentia culpa est. Dig. 50. 16. 226. See "Culpa."

NEGLIGENTIA SEMPER HABET INFORtuniam comitem. Negligence always has misfortune for a companion. Co. Litt. 246; Shep. Touch. 476.

NEGOTIABILITY. In mercantile law. Transferable quality. That quality of bills of exchange and promissory notes, which renders them transferable from one person to another, and from possessing which, they are emphatically termed "negotiable paper." 3 Kent, Comm. 74, 77, 89, et seq. See Story, Bills, § 60.

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENT. Any written instrument which may be transferred by indorsement and delivery, or by delivery alone, so as to give the indorsee the legal title, and enable him to sue in his own name. 15 Mo. 337.

In a narrower sense, those instruments the indorsee of which, under the law merchant, takes free of certain equities and defenses between the original parties.

NEGOTIABLE WORDS. See "Words of Negotiability."

NEGOTIATION. The deliberation which takes place between the parties touching a proposed agreement.

That which transpires in the negotiation makes no part of the agreement, unless introduced into it. It is a general rule that no evidence can be given to add, diminish, contradict, or alter a written instrument. 1 Dall. (Pa.) 426; 4 Dall. (Pa.) 340; 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 609.

——In Mercantile Law. The act by which a bill of exchange or promissory note is put into circulation by being passed by one of the original parties to another person.

Until an accommodation bill or note has been negotiated, there is no contract which can be enforced on the note; the contract, either express or implied, that the party accommodated will indemnify the other, is, till then, conditional. 2 Man. & G. 911.

NEGOTIORUM GESTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. Literally, a doing of business or businesses; a species of spontaneous agency, or an interference by one in the affairs of another, in his absence, from benevolence or friendship, and without authority. 2 Kent, Comm. 616, note; Inst. 3. 28. 1; Dig. 3. 5.

The intervention of a person acting without authority in transacting the affairs of another.

NEGOTIORUM GESTOR (Lat.) In civil law. One who spontaneously, and without authority, undertakes to act for another, during his absence, in his affairs.

In cases of this sort, as he acts wholly without authority, there can, strictly speaking, be no contract; but the civil law raises a quasi mandate by implication for the benefit of the owner in many such cases. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 460; 2 Kent, Comm. 616, note; Story, Bailm. §§ 82, 189.

NEGRO. Generally a person belonging to the African race, and having such a proportion of African blood as will identify him with that race. 5 Jones, Law (N. C.) 11; 80 Va. 544.

It has been held to mean a black man and not to include a mulatto. 18 Ala. 20.

NEIF. In old English law. A woman who was born a villein, or a bond woman.

NEIGHBORHOOD. The immediately adjacent locality. See 27 Mo. App. 584; 63 N. H. 246.

NEMBDA (Teut.) In Swedish and Gothic law. A jury. 3 Bl. Comm. 349, 359; Barr. Obs. St. 18, note (z).

NEMINE CONTRADICENTE (usually abbreviated nem. con.) Words used to signify the unanimous consent of the house to which they are applied. In England, they are used in the house of commons; in the house of lords, the words used to convey the same idea are nemine dissentiente.

NEMINEM OPORTET ESSE SAPIENTIOrem legibus. No man need be wiser than the laws. Co. Litt. 97.

NEMO ADMITTENDUS EST INHABILItare seipsum. No one is allowed to incapacitate himself. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 40. But see "To Stultify;" 5 Whart. (Pa.) 371; 2 Kent, Comm. 451, note.

NEMO AGIT IN SEIPSUM. No man acts against himself (Jenk. Cent. Cas. 40); therefore no man can be a judge in his own cause (Broom, Leg. Max. [3d London Ed.] 201, note; 4 Bing. 151; 2 Exch. 595; 18 C. B. 253; 2 Barn. & Ald. 822).

NEMO PUNITUR SINE INJURIA, FACto, seu defalto. No one is punished unless for some wrong, act, or default. 2 Inst. 287.

NEMO, QUI CONDEMNARE POTEST, absolvere non potest. No one who may condemn is unable to acquit. Dig. 50. 17. 37.

NEMO SIBI ESSE JUDEX VEL SUIS JUS dicere debet. No man ought to be his own judge, or to administer justice in cases where his relations are concerned. 12 Coke, 113; Code, 3. 5. 1; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 111.

NEMO SINE ACTIONE EXPERITUR, ET hoc non sine breve sive libello conventionali. No one goes to law without an action, and no one can bring an action without a writ or bill. Bracton, 112.

NEMO TENETUR AD IMPOSSIBILE. No one is bound to an impossibility. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 7.

NEMO TENETUR ARMARE ADVERSArum contra se. No one is bound to arm his adversary. Wingate, Max. 665.

NEMO TENETUR DIVINARE. No one is bound to foretell. 4 Coke, 28; 10 Coke, 55a.

NEMO TENETUR EDERE INSTRUMENta contra se. No man is bound to produce writings against himself. Bell, Dict.

NEMO TENETUR INFORMARE QUI NEScit sed quisquis scire quod informat. No one who is ignorant of a thing is bound to give information of it, but every one is bound to know that which he gives information of. Branch, Princ.; Lane, Exch. 110.

NEMO TENETUR JURARE IN SUAM turpitudinem. No one is bound to testify to his own baseness.

NEMO TENETUR PRODERE SEIPSUM. No one is bound to betray himself. In other words, no one can be compelled to criminate himself. Broom, Leg. Max. 968.

NEMO TENETUR SEIPSUM ACCUSARE. No one is bound to accuse himself. Wingate, Max. 486; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 871; 1 Bl. Comm. 443; 14 Mees. & W. 286.

NEMO TENETUR SEIPSUM INFORTUNIIS et periculis exponere. No one is bound to expose himself to misfortune and dangers. Co. Litt. 253.

NEMO UNQUAM JUDICET IN SE. No one can ever be a judge in his own cause.

NEMO UNQUAM VIR MAGNUS FUIT sine aliquo divino afflatu. No one was ever a great man without some divine inspiration. Cicero.

NEMO VIDETUR FRAUDARE EOS QUI sciunt, et consentiunt. No one is considered as deceiving those who know and consent. Dig. 20. 17. 145.

NEMY, or NEMI (Law Fr.) Not. Nemy come heire, not as heir. Litt. § 3.

NEPHEW. The son of a brother or sister. Ambl. 514; 1 Jac. 207.

The Latin nepos, from which "nephew" is derived, was used in the civil law for nephew, but more properly for grandson; and we accordingly find neveu, the original form of nephew, in the sense of grandson. Britton, c. 119.

NEPUOY (Old Scotch). In Scotch law. A grandson. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. "Eneya."

NETHER HOUSE OF PARLIAMENT. The house of commons was so called in the time of Henry VIII.

NEUTRALITY. The state of a nation which takes no part between two or more other nations at war with each other.

Neutrality consists in the observance of a strict and honest impartiality, so as not to afford advantage in the war to either party, and particularly in so far restraining its trade to the accustomed course which is held in time of peace as not to render assistance to one of the belligerents in escaping the effects of the other's hostilities. Even a loan of money to one of the belligerent parties is considered a violation of neutrality. 9 J. B. Moore, 586. A fraudulent neutrality is considered as no neutrality.

NEVER INDEBTED (Law Lat. nunquam indebitatus). In English practice. A form of plea in actions of debt on simple contract, substituted by the late pleading rules in place of the plea of nil debet (q. v.) Reg. Hillary Term, 4 Wm. IV.; Steph. Pl. 156. The substance of it is that the defendant "never was indebted in manner and form as in the declaration alleged." Id. It is made the proper form of plea in cases where the defendant means to deny, in point of fact, the existence of any express contract to the effect alleged in the declaration, or to deny the matters of fact from which such contract would, by law, be implied. Wharton.

NEW ASSIGNMENT. A restatement of the cause of action by the plaintiff, with more particularity and certainty, but consistently with the general statement in the declaration. Steph. Pl. 241; 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 43.

Its purpose is to avoid the effect of an evasive plea which apparently answers the declaration, though it does not really apply to the matter which the plaintiff had in view. 1 Wm. Saund. 299b, note 6. Thus, if a defendant has committed two assaults on the plaintiff, one of which is justifiable, and the other not, as the declaration may not distinguish one from the other, the defendant may justify, and the plaintiff, not being able either to traverse, demur, or confess and avoid, must make a new assignment.

NEW FOR OLD. A term used in the law of insurance in cases of adjustment of a loss when it has been but partial. In making such adjustment, the rule is to apply the old materials towards the payment of the new, by deducting the value of them from the gross amount of the expenses for repairs, and to allow the deduction of one-third new for old upon the balance. See 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 265; 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 245; 4 Ohio, 284; 7 Pick. (Mass.) 259; 14 Pick. (Mass.) 141.

NEW INN. An inn of chancery. See "Inns of Chancery."

NEW MATTER. In pleading. Matter extrinsic to the matter in the pleading to which the party introducing the same answers or replies. 7 Hun (N. Y.) 482.

Facts different from those alleged in the complaint, and not embraced within the judicial inquiry into their truth. 16 S. C. 586.

Thus, payment (16 N. Y. 297; 25 Ohio St. 276), fraud in obtaining the instrument sued on (20 Minn. 411), or limitations (57 Iowa, 307) constitute new matter.

NEW PROMISE. A contract made after the original promise has, for some cause, been rendered invalid, by which the promiser agrees to fulfill such original promise.

NEW STYLE. The modern system of computing time was introduced into Great Britain A. D. 1752, the 3d of September of that year being reckoned as the 14th.

NEW TRIAL. In practice. A rehearing of the legal rights of the parties, upon disputed facts, before another jury, granted by the trial court, or a reviewing on application of the party dissatisfied with the result of the previous trial, upon a proper case being presented for the purpose. 4 Chit. Prac. 30; 2 Graham & W. New Tr. 32.

NEW TRIAL PAPER. In English practice. A paper containing a list of causes in which rules nisi have been obtained for a new trial, or for entering a verdict in place of a nonsuit, or for entering judgment non obstante veredicto, or for otherwise varying or setting aside proceedings which have taken place at nisi prius. These are called on for argument in the order in which they stand in the paper, on days appointed by the judges for the purpose. Brown.

NEW WORK. In the civil law. An edifice or other work newly commenced on any ground whatever. Civ. Code La. art. 852.

NEWLY-DISCOVERED EVIDENCE. Proof of some new material fact in a case, ascertained since the decision.

To constitute such newly-discovered evidence as is ground for a new trial, the evidence must be new and material, not merely impeaching (125 Ill. 122; 24 Pick. [Mass.] 246; 67 Barb. [N. Y.] 411; 36 Minn. 323), nor cumulative (20 Conn. 306; 43 Barb. [N. Y.] 203). It must have been discovered since the former trial (39 Me. 263; 37 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 524), and reasonable diligence must have been used, without success, to discover it in time for the trial (113 Ill. 82; 34 Minn. 351; 35 Hun [N. Y.] 95).

NEWSPAPER. A printed publication, issued in numbers at stated intervals, conveying intelligence of passing events. The term "newspaper" is commonly applied to such publications only as are issued in a single sheet, and at short intervals, as daily or weekly. 4 Op. Attys. Gen. U. S. 10; 7 Exch. 97.

As used in statutes regulating the publication of legal notices, etc., a newspaper must contain matter of general interest; a journal confined to the interests of a single trade or profession not being within the term. 25 Minn. 147. But see 75 Ill. 51. But where, though the main body of the paper is devoted to some special interest, there is in each issue one or more columns of general news and reading matter and advertisements confined to no one calling or trade, the publication is a newspaper. 126 Ill. 219 (law journal); 38 Minn. 349 (religious weekly); 43 N. Y. Supp. 720 (daily mercantile journal).

NEXI. In Roman law. Persons bound

(nexi); that is, insolvents, who might be held in bondage by their creditors until their debts were discharged. Vicat; Heinec. Ant. Rom. lib. 3, tit. 330; Calv. Lex.; Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 486a.

NEXT FRIEND. One who, without being regularly appointed guardian, acts for the benefit of an infant, married woman, or other person not sui juris. Same as prochein ami (q. v.)

NEXT OF KIN. The next of kin of a deceased person are his nearest blood relatives. It has been held that the next of kin included all blood relatives who took under the statute of distribution (28 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 417); but the more modern holding is that it includes only the nearest in blood, excluding some who may be within the statute (150 Mass. 225). It includes relatives of the half blood.

The term does not include a surviving husband or wife, they not being related by blood. 113 Mass. 431; 44 Ill. 446; 69 N. Y. 36.

NEXUM (Lat.) In Roman law. The transfer of the ownership of a thing, or the transfer of a thing to a creditor as a security.

In one sense, nexum includes mancipium; in another sense, mancipium and nexum are opposed, in the same way as sale and mortgage or pledge are opposed. The formal part of both transactions consisted in a transfer per aes et libram. The person who became nexus by the effect of a nexum placed himself in a servile condition, not becoming a slave, his ingenuitas being only in suspense, and was said to be nexum inire. The phrases nexi datio, nexi liberatio, respectively express the contracting and the release from the obligation.

NICHIL. An old form of nihil (q. v.)

NIECE. The daughter of a brother or sister. Ambl. 514; 1 Jac. 207.

NIEFE. In old English law. A woman born in vassalage.

NIENT (Law Fr.) Nothing; not; null.

NIENT COMPRISE (Law Fr. not included). An exception taken to a petition because the thing desired is not contained in that deed or proceeding whereon the petition is founded. Tomlins.

NIENT CULPABLE (Law Fr. not guilty). The name of a plea used to deny any charge of a criminal nature, or of a tort.

NIENT DEDIRE (Law Fr. to say nothing). Words used to signify that judgment be rendered against a party because he does not deny the cause of action; i. e., by default.

When a fair and impartial trial cannot be had in the county where the venue is laid, the practice in the English courts is, on an affidavit of the circumstances, to change it in transitory actions; or, in local actions, they will give leave to enter a suggestion on the roll, with a nient dedire, in order to have the trial in another county. 1 Tidd, Prac. (8th Ed.) 655.

NIENT LE FAIT (Law Fr.) In pleading. The same as non est factum, a plea by which the defendant asserts that the deed declared upon is not his deed.

NIENT SEISI. In old pleading. Not seised. The general plea in the writ of annuity. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 424.

NIGER LIBER. The black book of register in the exchequer; chartularies of abbeys, cathedrals, etc.

NIGHT. That space of time during which the sun is below the horizon of the earth, except that short space which precedes its rising and follows its setting, during which, by its light, the countenance of a man may be discerned. At common law, the night, for the purpose of burglary, does not begin until after and ceases when there is daylight enough to discern a man's countenance. 1 Hale, P. C. 550; 4 Bl. Comm. 224; 10 N. H. 105; 42 Vt. 629. See "Daytime."

NIGHT MAGISTRATE. A constable of the night; the head of a watch house.

NIGHT WALKERS. Persons who sleep by day and walk by night (5 Edw. III. c. 14); that is, persons of suspicious appearance and demeanor, who walk by night.

Watchmen may undoubtedly arrest them; and it is said that private persons may also do so. 2 Hawk. P. C. 120. But see 3 Taunt. 14; Hammond, N. P. 135; 15 Viner, Abr. 555; Dane, Abr. Index.

NIGRUM NUNQUAM EXCEDERE DEbet rubrum. The black should never go beyond the red; i. e., the text of a statute should never be read in a sense more comprehensive than the rubric, or title. Tray. Lat. Max. 373.

NIHIL, NICHIL, or NIL (Lat.) Nothing.

——In Practice. A return made by a sheriff to a writ of scire facias, that the bail or defendants have nothing (nihil habent) by which he can make known to them. 2 Tidd, Prac. 1124.

A return formerly made to process of attachment and distringas to compel the appearance of a defendant. 3 Bl. Comm. 282.

A return or answer formerly made by a sheriff, on being apposed (that is, interrogated) in the exchequer concerning illeviable debts, that they were worth nothing. Cowell.

——In American Law. A return to an attachment in garnishee process. 4 Pa. St. 232.

NIHIL ALIUD POTEST REX QUAM quod de jure potest. The king can do nothing but what he can do justly. 11 Coke, 74.

NIHIL CAPIAT PER BREVE (Lat. that he take nothing by his writ). In practice. The form of judgment against the plaintiff in an action, either in bar or in abatement. When the plaintiff has commenced his proceedings by bill, the judgment is nihil capiat per billam. Co. Litt. 363.

NIHIL CONSENSUI TAM CONTRARIUM est quam vis atque metus. Nothing is so contrary to consent as force and fear. Dig. 50. 17. 116.

NIHIL DAT QUI NON HABET. He gives nothing who has nothing.

NIHIL DE RE ACCRESCIT EI QUI NIHIL in re quando jus accresceret habet. Nothing accrues to him who, when the right accrues, has nothing in the subject matter. Co. Litt. 188.

NIHIL DICIT (Lat. he says nothing). The name of the judgment rendered against a defendant who fails to put in a plea or answer to the plaintiff's declaration by the day assigned. In such a case, judgment is given against the defendant of course, as he says nothing why it should not. See 15 Viner, Abr. 556; Dane, Abr. Index.

NIHIL EST ENIM LIBERALE QUOD NON idem justum. For there is nothing generous which is not at the same time just. 2 Kent. Comm. 441, note (a).

NIHIL EST MAGIS RATIONI CONSENTANeum quam eodem modo quodque dissolvere quo conflatum est. Nothing is more consonant to reason than that everything should be dissolved in the same way in which it was made. Shep. Touch. 323.

NIHIL FACIT ERROR NOMINIS CUM DE corpore constat. An error in the name is nothing when there is certainty as to the thing. 11 Coke, 21; 2 Kent, Comm. 292.

NIHIL HABET (Lat. he has nothing). The name of a return made by a sheriff, marshal, or other proper officer, to a scire facias or other writ, when he has not been able to serve it on the defendant. 5 Whart. (Pa.) 367.

Two returns of nihil are, in general, equivalent to a service. Yelv. 112; 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 70; 1 Law Rep. (N. C.) 491; 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 188; 2 Bin. (Pa.) 40.

NIHIL HABET FORUM EX SCENA. The court has nothing to do with what is not before it.

NIHIL IN LEGE INTOLERABILIUS EST, eandem rem diverso jure censeri. Nothing in law is more intolerable than that the same case should be subject (in different courts) to different views of the law. 4 Coke, 93.

NIHIL INFRA REGNUM SUBDITOS MAgis conservat in tranquillitate et concordia quam debita legum administratio. Nothing preserves in tranquillity and concord those who are subjected to the same government better than a due administration of the laws. 2 Inst. 158.

NIHIL INIQUIUS QUAM AEQUITATEM nimis intendere. Nothing is more unjust than to extend equity too far. Halk. Max. 103.

NIHIL MAGIS JUSTUM EST QUAM quod necessarium est. Nothing is more just than what is necessary. Dav. 12.

NIHIL NEQUAM EST PRAESUMENDUM. Nothing wicked is to be presumed. 2 P. Wms. 583.

NIHIL PERFECTUM EST DUM ALIQUID restat agendum. Nothing is perfect while something remains to be done. 9 Coke, 9.

NIHIL PETI POTEST ANTE ID TEMpus, quo per rerum naturam persolvi possit. Nothing can be demanded before that time when, in the nature of things, it can be paid. Dig. 50. 17. 186.

NIHIL POSSUMUS CONTRA VERITAtem. We can do nothing against truth. Doctor & Stud. dial. 2, c. 6.

NIHIL PRAESCRIBITUR NISI QUOD possidetur. There is no prescription for that which is not possessed. 5 Barn. & Ald. 277.

NIHIL QUOD EST CONTRA RATIONEM est licitum. Nothing against reason is lawful. Co. Litt. 97.

NIHIL QUOD EST INCONVENIENS EST licitum. Nothing inconvenient is lawful. 4 H. L. Cas. 145, 195.

NIHIL SIMUL INVENTUM EST ET PERfectum. Nothing is invented and perfected at the same moment. Co. Litt. 230; 2 Bl. Comm. 298, note.

NIHIL TAM CONVENIENS EST NATUrali aequitati quam unumquodque dissolvi eo ligamine quo ligatum est. Nothing is so consonant to natural equity as that each thing should be dissolved by the same means by which it was bound. 2 Inst. 360; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 785. See Shep. Touch. 323.

NIHIL TAM CONVENIENS EST NATUrali aequitati, quam voluntatem domini volentis rem suam in alium transferre, ratam haberi. Nothing is more conformable to natural equity than to confirm the will of an owner who desires to transfer his property to another. Inst. 2. 1. 40; 1 Coke, 100.

NIHIL TAM NATURALE EST, QUAM EO genere quidque dissolvere, quo colligatum est. Nothing is so natural as that an obligation should be dissolved by the same principles which were observed in contracting it. Dig. 50. 17. 35. See 1 Coke, 100; 2 Inst. 359.

NIHIL TAM PROPRIUM IMPERIO QUAM legibus vivere. Nothing is so becoming to authority as to live according to the law. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 17, § 11; 2 Inst. 63.

NIL AGIT EXEMPLUM LITEM QUOD lite resolvit. An example does no good which settles one question by another. 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 44, 49.

NIL DEBET (Lat. he owes nothing). In pleading. The general issue in debt on simple contract. It is in the following form: "And the said C. D., by E. F., his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he does not owe the said sum of money above demanded, or any part thereof, in manner and form as the said A. B. hath above complained. And of this the said C. D. puts himself upon the country." When, in debt on specialty, the deed is the only inducement to the action, the general issue is nil debet. Steph. Pl. 174, note; 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 83; Dane, Abr. Index.

NIL FACIT ERROR NOMINIS SI DE CORpore constat. An error in the name is immaterial if the body is certain. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 566; 11 C. B. 406.

NIL HABUIT IN TENEMENTIS (Lat.) In pleading. A plea by which the defendant, who is sued by his landlord in debt for rent upon a lease, but by deed indented, denies his landlord's title to the premises, alleging "that he has no interest in the tenements." 2 Lilly, Abr. 214; 12 Viner, Abr. 184; 15 Viner, Abr. 556.

NIL SINE PRUDENTI FECIT RATIONE vetustas. Antiquity did nothing without a good reason. Co. Litt. 65.

NIL TEMERE NOVANDUM. Nothing should be rashly changed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 163.

NIMIA CERTITUDO CERTITUDINEM IPsam destruit. Too great certainty destroys certainty itself. Lofft, 244.

NIMIA SUBTILITAS IN JURE REPRObatur. Too much subtlety in law is discountenanced. Wingate, Max. 26.

NIMIA SUBTILITAS IN JURE REPROBAtur, et talis certitudo certitudinem confundit. Too great subtlety is disapproved of in law; for such nice pretense of certainty confounds true and legal certainty. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 175; 4 Coke, 5.

NIMIUM ALTERCANDO, VERITAS AMITtitur. By too much altercation, truth is lost. Hob. 344.

NIMMER. A thief; a pilferer.

NISI (Lat. unless). A word frequently affixed to the words "order," "rule," etc., to indicate that such order or rule is conditional, being operative unless the party shall show cause to the contrary.

NISI PRIUS (Lat. unless before). In practice. For the purpose of holding trials by jury. Important words in the writ (venire) directing the sheriff to summon jurors for the trial of causes depending in the superior courts of law in England, which have come to be adopted, both in England and the United States, to denote those courts or terms of court held for the trial of civil causes with the presence and aid of a jury.

The origin of the use of the term is to be traced to a period anterior to the institution of the commission of nisi prius in its more modern form. By Magna Charta it was provided that the common pleas should be held in one place, and should not follow the person of the king; and by another clause, that assizes of novel disseisin and of mort d'ancestor, which were the two commonest forms of actions to recover land, should be held in the various counties before the justices in eyre. A practice obtained very early, therefore, in the trial of trifling causes, to continue the cause in the superior court from term to term, provided the justices in eyre did not sooner (nisi justiciarii diu) come into the county where the cause of action arose, in which case they had jurisdiction when they so came. Bracton, lib. 3, c. 1, § 11. By the statute of nisi prius (13 Edw. I. c. 30, enforced by 14 Edw. III. c. 16), justices of assize were empowered to try common issues in trespass and other suits, and return them, when tried, to the superior court, where judgment was given. The clause was then left out of the continuance and inserted in the venire, thus: "Praecipimus tibi quod venire facias coram justiciaris nostris apud Westm. in Octabis Scti Michaelis, nisi talis et talis, tali die et loco, ad partes illas venerint, duodecim," etc. We command you that you cause to come before our justices at Westminster, on the octave of Saint Michael, unless such and such a one, on such a day and place, shall come to those parts, twelve, etc. Under the provisions of 42 Edw. III. c. 11, the clause is omitted from the venire, and the jury is respited in the court above, while the sheriff summons them to appear before the justices, upon a habeas corpora juratorum, or, in the king's bench, a distringas. See Sellon, Prac. Introd. lxv.; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 116; 3 Bl. Comm. 352-354; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 245, 382.

See, also, "Assize;" "Courts of Assize and Nisi Prius;" "Jury."

NISI PRIUS ROLL. In practice. The transcript of a case made from the record of the superior court in which the action is commenced, for use in the nisi prius court.

It includes a history of all the proceedings in the case, including the declaration, plea, replication, rejoinder, issue, etc. It must be presented in proper manner to the nisi prius court. When a verdict has been obtained and entered on this record, it becomes the postea, and is returned to the superior court.

NISI PRIUS WRIT. The old name of the writ of venire, which originally, in pursuance of the statute of Westminster II., contained the nisi prius clause. Reg. Jud. 28, 75; Cowell. The clause, however, as it appears in the forms, was not in the original nisi prius form, but in the alternative, the jury being directed to be summoned to come before the justices at Westminster, etc., or before the justices of assize if they should sooner come to the place of trial, on the day designated. The emphatic Latin words were not nisi prius, but vel si prius. See Reg. Jud. ubi supra.

NO AWARD. The name of a plea to an action or award. 2 Ala. 520; 1 N. Chip. (Vt.) 131; 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 367.

NO BILL. Words frequently indorsed on a bill of indictment by the grand jury when they have not sufficient cause for finding a true bill. They are equivalent to "Not found," or "Ignoramus" (q. v.) 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 558.

NOBILE OFFICIUM. In Scotch law. An equitable power of the court of sessions, by which it is able, to a certain extent, to give relief when none is possible at law. Stair, Inst. bk. 4, tit. 3, § 1; Ersk. Inst. 1. 3, 22; Bell, Dict.

NOBILES MAGIS PLECTUNTUR PECUNIA; plebes vero in corporo. The higher classes are more punished in money; but the lower in person. 3 Inst. 220.

NOBILES SUNT QUI ARMA GENTILITIA antecessorum suorum proferre possunt. The gentry are those who are able to produce armorial bearings derived by descent from their own ancestors. 2 Inst. 595.

NOBILIORES ET BENIGNIORES PRESUMPTIONES in dubiis sunt praeferendae. When doubts arise, the most generous and benign presumptions are to be preferred. Reg. Jur.

NOBILITAS EST DUPLEX,—SUPERIOR et inferior. There are two sorts of nobility,—the higher and the lower. 2 Inst. 583.

NOBILITY. A division of the civil state, comprising persons exalted to some title or dignity. It is the opposite of "commonalty," and in England includes dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons. 1 Bl. Comm. 396.

NOCENT (from Lat. "nocere"). Guilty. "The nocent person." 1 Vern. 429.

NOCTANTER. By night. An abolished writ which issued out of chancery, and returned to the queen's bench, for the prostration of inclosures, etc.

NOCTES and NOCTEM DE FIRMA. Entertainment of meat and drink for so many nights. Domesday Book.

NOCUMENTUM (Lat. harm, nuisance). In old English law. A thing done whereby another man is annoyed in his free lands or tenements. Also, the assize or writ lying for the same. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 183; Old Nat. Brev. 108, 109. Manw. For. Laws, c. 17, divides nocumentum into generale, commune, speciale. Reg. Orig. 197, 199; Coke, Will Case. Nocumentum was also divided into damnosum, for which no action lay, it being done by an irresponsible agent, and injuriosum et damnosum, for which there were several remedies. Bracton, 221; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 26, § 2.

NOLENS VOLENS (Lat.) Whether willing or unwilling.

NOLISSEMENT (Fr. from nolis). In French marine law. Affreightment. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 1.

NOLLE (Lat.) To be unwilling; to will not do a thing; to refuse to do a thing. Used, in the civil law, to denote a voluntary act under full knowledge. Calv. Lex. A distinction was made between nolle and non velle. Id. Ejus est nolle, qui potest velle (q. v.)

NOLLE PROSEQUI. In practice. An entry made on the record, by which the prosecutor or plaintiff declares that he will proceed no further. It was formerly used in both civil and criminal proceedings, but in the former is now superseded by the practice of discontinuance.

NOLO CONTENDERE. I will not contend. A plea to an indictment on which the defendant might be sentenced, but which did not estop him in a civil proceeding for the same cause.

NOMEN (Lat.)

——In Civil Law. A name of a person or thing. In a stricter sense, the name which declared the gens or family, as, Porcius, Cornelius; the cognomen being the name which marked the individual, as, Cato, Marcus; agnomen, a name added to the cognomen for the purpose of description. The name of the person himself; e. g., nomen curiis addere. The name denoting the condition of a person or class; e. g., nomen liberorum, condition of children. Cause or reason (pro causa aut ratione); e. g., nomine culpae, by reason of fault. A mark or sign of anything, corporeal or incorporeal. Nomen supremum, i. e., God. Debt, or obligation of debt; a debtor. See Vicat; Calv. Lex.

——In Old English Law. A name; the Christian name, e. g., John, as distinguished from the family name. It is also called praenomen. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, §§ 7, 9; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.

——In Scotch Law. Nomen debiti, right to payment of a debt.

NOMEN COLLECTIVUM (Lat.) A word in the singular number, which is to be understood in the plural in certain cases.

Misdemeanor, for example, is a word of this kind, and when in the singular may be taken as nomen collectivum, and including several offenses. 2 Barn. & Adol. 75. "Heir," in the singular, sometimes includes all the heirs. "Felony" is not such a term.

NOMEN EST QUASI REI NOTAMEN. A name is, as it were, the note of a thing. 11 Coke, 20.

NOMEN GENERALE (Lat.) A general name; the name of a genus. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 19, § 1.

NOMEN GENERALISSIMUM (Lat.) A most universal or comprehensive term; e. g., land. 2 Bl. Comm. 19; 3 Bl. Comm. 172; Taylor. So, "goods." 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1014.

NOMEN JURIS. A name of the law; a legal name or designation; a technical legal term. 2 Swinton, 429.

NOMEN NON SUFFICIT SI RES NON sit de jure aut de facto. A name does not suffice if the thing do not exist by law or by fact. 4 Coke, 107.

NOMINA SI NESCIS PERIT COGNITIO rerum. If you know not the names of things, the knowledge of things themselves perishes. Co. Litt. 86.

NOMINA SUNT MUTABILIA, RES AUtem immobiles. Names are mutable, but things immutable. 6 Coke, 66.

NOMINA SUNT NOTAE RERUM. Names are the notes of things. 11 Coke, 20.

NOMINA SUNT SYMBOLA RERUM. Names are the symbols of things.

NOMINA VILLARUM (Lat.) Names of the villages. The name of a return made by the sheriffs of England into the exchequer, in the reign of Edward II. of the names of all the villages and their possessors in every county. Cowell; Blount.

NOMINAL. Existing in name only; formal, and not substantial.

NOMINAL DAMAGES. In practice. A trifling sum awarded where a breach of duty or an infraction of the plaintiff's right is shown, but no serious loss is proved to have been sustained. See "Injuria Absque Damno."

NOMINAL PARTNER. One who is apparently or ostensibly a member of a firm, but who is not really so.

The term "ostensible partner" has been used in the sense of nominal partner (67 Tex. 383), but it is better to confine the term "ostensible partner" to one who is really a partner, and known as such, and apply "nominal partner" to one who is not really a partner, but only apparently so.

NOMINAL PLAINTIFF. One who is named as the plaintiff in an action, but who has no interest in it, having assigned the cause or right of action to another, for whose use it is brought.

NOMINARE (Lat. from nomen, name). To name; to nominate; to appoint. Calv. Lex.

NOMINATE. To appoint. Applied in this sense to the designation by a person of one to act as fiduciary or personal representative. Thus it is the customary term in designating the executor by a testator.

To make a candidate for election. See "Candidate."

NOMINATE CONTRACT. A contract distinguished by a particular name, the use of which name determines the rights of all the parties to the contract; as, purchase and sale, hiring, partnership, loan for use, deposit, and the like. The law thus supersedes the necessity for special stipulations, and creates an obligation in the one party to perform, and a right in the other to demand, whatever is necessary to the explication of that contract. In Roman law there were twelve nominate contracts, with a particular action for each. Bell, Dict. "Nominate and Innominate;" Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 395, 408; Dig. 2, 14. 7. 1.

NOMINATING AND REDUCING. A mode of obtaining a panel of special jurors in England, from which to select the jury to try a particular action. The proceeding takes place before the under sheriff or secondary, and in the presence of the parties' solicitors. Numbers denoting the persons on the sheriff's list are put into a box and drawn until forty-eight unchallenged persons have been nominated. Each party strikes off twelve, and the remaining twenty-four are returned as the "panel" (q. v.) This practice is now only employed by order of the court or judge. Smith, Actions, 130; Juries Act 1870, § 17; Rapalje & L.

NOMINATIVUS PENDENS (Lat.) A nominative case grammatically unconnected with the rest of the sentence in which it stands. The opening words in the ordinary form of a deed inter partes, "This indenture," etc., down to "whereas," though an intelligible and convenient part of the deed, are of this kind. Wharton.

NOMINE POENAE (Lat. in the nature of a penalty).

——In Civil Law. A condition annexed to heirship by the will of the deceased person. Domat, Civ. Law; Halifax, Anal.

——At Common Law. A penalty fixed by covenant in a lease for nonperformance of its conditions. 2 Lilly, Abr. 221.

It is usually a gross sum of money, though it may be anything else, appointed to be paid by the tenant to the reversioner, if the duties are in arrear, in addition to the duties themselves. Hammond, N. P. 411, 412.

NOMINEE. One who has been nominated. See "Nominate."

NOMOCANON.

(1) A collection of canons and imperial laws relative or conformable thereto. The first nomocanon was made by Johannes Scholasticus in 554. Photius, patriarch of Constantinople, in 883, compiled another nomocanon, or collation of the civil laws with the canons; this is the most celebrated. Balsamon wrote a commentary upon it in 1180.

(2) A collection of the ancient canons of the apostles, councils, and fathers, without any regard to imperial constitutions. Such is the nomocanon by M. Cotelier. Enc. Lond.

NOMOGRAPHER. One who writes on the subject of laws.

NOMOGRAPHY. A treatise or description of laws.

NOMOTHETA. A lawgiver; such as Solon and Lycurgus among the Greeks, and Caesar, Pompey, and Sylla among the Romans. Calv. Lex.

NON (Lat.) Not; no.

NON ACCEPTAVIT (Lat. he did not accept). In pleading. The name of a plea to an action of assumpsit brought against the drawee of a bill of exchange upon a supposed acceptance by him. See 4 Man. & G. 561.

NON ACCIPI DEBENT VERBA IN DEMonstrationem falsam, quae competunt in limitationem veram. Words ought not to be accepted to import a false description, which may have effect by way of true limitation. Bac. Max. reg. 13; 2 Pars. Cont. 62-65; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 573; 3 Barn. & Adol. 459; 4 Exch. 604; 3 Taunt. 147.

NON ALIO MODO PUNIATUR ALIQUIS, quam secundum quod se habet condemnatio. A person may not be punished differently than according to what the sentence enjoins. 3 Inst. 217.

NON ALITER A SIGNIFICATIONE VERborum recedi oportet quam cum manifestum est, aliud sensisse testatorem. We must never depart from the signification of words, unless it is evident that they are not conformable to the will of the testator. Dig. 32. 69.pr.; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 500; 2 De Gex., M. & G. 313.

NON ASSUMPSIT (Lat. he did not undertake). In pleading. The general issue in an action of assumpsit.

Its form is: "And the said C. D., by E. F., his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he did not undertake or promise, in manner and form as the said A. B. hath above complained. And of this he puts himself upon the country."

NON ASSUMPSIT INFRA SEX ANNOS. (Lat. he has not undertaken within six years). In pleading. The plea by which, when pleadings were in Latin, the defendant alleged that the obligation was not undertaken and the right of action had not accrued within six years, the period of limitation of the right to bring suit.

NON AUDITUR PERIRE VOLENS. One who wishes to perish ought not to be heard. Best, Ev. § 385.

NON BIS IN IDEM. In civil law. A phrase which signifies that no one shall be twice tried for the same offense; that is, that when a party accused has been once tried by a tribunal in the last resort, and either convicted or acquitted, he shall not again be tried. Code, 9. 2. 9. 11; Merlin, Repert. See "Jeopardy."

NON CEPIT MODO ET FORMA (Lat. he did not take in manner and form). In pleading. The plea which raises the general issue in an action of replevin.

Its form is: "And the said C. D., by E. F., his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he did not take the said cattle (or, goods and chattels, according to the subject of the action) in the said declaration mentioned, or any of them, in manner and form as the said A. B. hath above complained. And of this the said C. D. puts himself upon the country."

It denies the taking the things, and having them in the place specified in the declaration, both of which are material in this action. Steph. Pl. 183, 184; 1 Chit. Pl. 490.

NON COMPOS MENTIS (Lat. not of sound mind, memory, or understanding). A generic term, including all the species of madness, whether it arise from idiocy, sickness, lunacy, or drunkenness. Co. Litt. 247; 4 Coke, 124; 1 Phil. 100; 4 Comyn, Dig. 613; 5 Comyn, Dig. 186; Shelf. Lun. 1. See "Idiocy;" "Insanity."

NON CONCEDANTUR CITATIONES PRIusquam exprimatur super qua re fieri decet citatio. Summonses or citations should not be granted before it is expressed upon what ground a citation ought to be issued. 12 Coke, 47.

NON CONCESSIT (Lat. he did not grant). In English law. The name of a plea by which the defendant denies that the crown granted to the plaintiff by letters patent the rights which he claims as a concession from the king; as, for example, when a plaintiff sues another for the infringement of his patent right, the defendant may deny that the crown has granted him such a right.

It does not deny the grant of a patent, but of the patent as described in the plaintiff's declaration. 3 Burrows, 1544; 6 Coke, 15b.

NON CONSENTIT QUI ERRAT. He who errs does not consent. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 581; Bracton, 44.

NON CONSTAT (Lat. it does not appear). Words frequently used, particularly in argument, to express dissatisfaction with the conclusions of the other party; as, it was moved in arrest of judgment that the declaration was not good, because non constat whether A. B. was seventeen years of age when the action was commenced. Swinb. pt. 4, § 22, p. 331.

NON CULPABILIS (Lat.) In pleading. Not guilty. It is usually abbreviated non cul. 16 Viner, Abr. 1; 2 Gabbett, Crim. Law, 317.

NON DAMNIFICATUS (Lat. not injured). In pleading. A plea to an action of debt on a bond of indemnity, by which the defendant asserts that the plaintiff has received no damage. 1 Bos. & P. 640, note (a); 1 Taunt. 428; 1 Saund. 116, note 1; 2 Saund. 81; 7 Wentw. Pl. 615, 616; 1 H. Bl. 253; 2 Lilly, Abr. 224; 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 177; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 42; 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 153; 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 313; 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 396, 405; 3 Halst. (N. J.) 1.

NON DAT QUI NON HABET. He gives nothing who has nothing. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 417.

NON DEBEO MELIORIS CONDITIONIS esse, quam auctor mens a quo jus in me transit. I ought not to be in better condition than he to whose rights I succeed. Dig. 50. 17. 175. 1.

NON DEBET ADDUCI EXCEPTIO EJUS rei cujus petitur dissolutio. A plea of the same matter the dissolution of which is sought ought not to be made. Bac. Max. reg. 2; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 157; 3 P. Wms. 317; 1 Ld. Raym. 57; 2 Ld. Raym. 1433.

NON DEBET ALII NOCERE, QUOD INter alios actum est. A person ought not to be prejudiced by what has been done between others. Dig. 12. 2. 10.

NON DEBET ALTERI PER ALTERUM iniqua conditio inferri. A burdensome condition ought not to be brought upon one man by the act of another. Dig. 50. 17. 74.

NON DEBET, CUI PLUS LICET, QUOD minus est, non licere. He who is permitted to do the greater may with greater reason do the less. Dig. 50. 17. 21; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 165.

NON DEBET DICI TENDERE IN PRAEjudicium ecclesiasticae liberatatis quod pro rege et republica necessarium videtur. That which seems necessary for the king and the state ought not to be said to tend to the prejudice of spiritual liberty. 2 Inst. 625.

NON DEBIT ACTORI LICERE, QUOD reo non permittitur. That which is not permitted to the defendant ought not to be to the plaintiff. Dig. 50. 17. 41.

NON DECET HOMINES DEDERE CAUSA non cognita. It is unbecoming to surrender men when no cause is shown. 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 106, 114; 3 Wheeler, Cr. R. (N. Y.) 473, 482.

NON DECIPITUR QUI SCIT SE DECIPI. He is not deceived who knows himself to be deceived. 5 Coke, 60.

NON DEDIT. In pleading. The general issue in formedon. See "Ne Dona Pas, non Debit."

NON DEFINITUR IN JURE QUID SIT conatus. What an attempt is, is not defined in law. 6 Coke. 42.

NON DEMISIT (Lat. he did not demise). In pleading. A plea proper to be pleaded to an action of debt for rent, when the plaintiff declares on a parol lease. Gilb. Debt, 436, 438; Buller, N. P. 177; 1 Chit. Pl. 477.

It cannot be pleaded when the demise is stated to have been by indenture. 12 Viner, Abr. 178; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (2 W 48).

NON DETINET (Lat. he does not detain). In pleading. The general issue in an action of detinue. Its form is as follows: "And the said C. D., by E. F., his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that he does not detain the said goods and chattels (or "deeds and writings," according to the subject of the action) in the said declaration specified, or any part thereof, in manner and form as the said A. B. hath above complained. And of this the said C. D. puts himself upon the country."

NON DIFFERUNT QUAE CONCORDANT re, tametsi non in verbis iisdem. Those things which agree in substance, though not in the same words, do not differ. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 70.

NON DUBITATUR, ETSI SPECIALITER venditor evictionem non promiserit, re evicta, ex empto competere actionem. It is certain that, although the vendor has not given a special guaranty, an action ex empto lies against him, if the purchaser is evicted. Code, 8. 45. 6. But see Doctor & Stud. bk. 2, c. 47; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 690.

NON EFFICIT AFFECTUS NISI SEQUAter effectus. The intention amounts to nothing unless some effect follows. 1 Rolle, 226.

NON ERIT ALIA LEX ROMAE, ALIA Athaenis; alia nunc, alia posthac; sed et omnes gentes, et omni tempore, una lex, et sempiterna, et immortalis continebit. There will not be one law at Rome, another at Athens; one law now, another hereafter; but one eternal and immortal law shall bind together all nations throughout all time. Cicero, Frag. de Repub. lib. 3; 3 Kent, Comm. 1.

NON EST ARCTIUS VINCULUM INTER homines quam jusjurandum. There is no stronger link among men than an oath. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 126.

NON EST CERTANDUM DE REGULIS juris. There is no disputing about rules of law.

NON EST CONSONUM RATIONI, QUOD cognitio accessorii in curia christianitatis impediatur, ubi cognitio causae principalis ad forum ecclesiasticum noscitur pertinere. It is unreasonable that the cognizance of an accessory matter should be impeded in an ecclesiastical court, when the cognizance of the principal cause is admitted to appertain to an ecclesiastical court. 12 Coke, 65.

NON EST DISPUTANDUM CONTRA principia negantem. There is no disputing against a man denying principles. Co. Litt. 343.

NON EST FACTUM (Lat. is not his deed). In pleading. A plea to an action of debt on a bond or other specialty.

Its form is: "And the said C. D., by E. F., his attorney, comes and defends the wrong and injury, when, etc., and says that the said supposed writing obligatory (or "indenture," or "articles of agreement," according to the subject of the action) is not his deed. And of this he puts himself upon the country." 6 Rand. (Va.) 86; 1 Litt. (Ky.) 158.

NON EST INVENTUS (Lat. I have not found him). In practice. The sheriff's return to a writ requiring him to arrest the person of the defendant, which signifies that he is not to be found within his jurisdiction. The return is usually abbreviated N. E. I. Chit. Prac.

NON EST JUSTUM ALIQUEM ANTENATUM post mortem facere bastardum, qui toto tempore vitae suae pro legitimo habebatur. It is not just to make an elder born a bastard after his death, who during his lifetime was accounted legitimate. 12 Coke, 44.

NON EST NOVUM UT PRIORES LEGIS ad posteriores trahantur. It is not a new thing that prior statutes shall give place to later ones. Dig. 1. 3. 26; Id. 1. 1. 4; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 27.

NON EST RECEDENDUM A COMMUNI observanti. There should be no departure from a common observance. 2 Coke, 74.

NON EST REGULA QUIN FALLAT. There is no rule but what may fail. Off. Exec. 212.

NON EST SINGULIS CONCEDENDUM, quod per magistratum publice possit fieri, ne occasio sit majoris tumultus faciendi. That is not to be conceded to private persons which can be publicly done by the magistrate, lest it be the occasion of greater tumults. Dig. 50. 17. 176.

NON EX OPINIONIBUS SINGULORUM, sed ex communi usu, nomina exaudiri debent. Names of things ought to be understood according to common usage, not according to the opinions of individuals. Dig. 33. 10. 7. 2.

NON FACIAS MALUM, UT INDE VEniat bonum. You are not to do evil that good may come of it. 11 Coke, 74a.

NON FECIT (Lat. he did not make it). The name of a plea, for example, in an action of assumpsit on a promissory note. 3 Man. & G. 446.

NON FECIT VASTUM CONTRA PROHIbitionem (Lat. he did not commit waste against the prohibition). In pleading. The name of a plea to an action founded on a writ of estrepement, that the defendant did not commit waste contrary to the prohibition. 3 Bl. Comm. 226, 227.

NON IMPEDIT CLAUSULA DEROGATOria, quo minus ab eadem potestate res dissolvantur a quibus constituuntur. A derogatory clause does not prevent things or acts from being dissolved by the same power by which they were originally made. Bac. Max. reg. 19.

NON IMPEDIVIT (Lat. he did not impede). In pleading. The plea of the general issue in quare impedit. 3 Bl. Comm. 305; 3 Wooddeson, Lect. 36. In law French, ne disturba pas.

NON IMPLACITANDO ALIQUEM DE libero tenemento sine brevi. A writ to prohibit bailiffs, etc., from distraining or impleading any man touching his freehold without the king's writ. Reg. Orig. 171.

NON IN LEGENDO SED IN INTELLIgendo leges consistunt. The laws consist not in being read, but in being understood. 8 Coke, 167.

NON INFREGIT CONVENTIONEM (Lat. he has not broken the covenant). In pleading. A plea in an action of covenant. This plea is not a general issue; it merely denies that the defendant has broken the covenants on which he is sued. It being in the negative, it cannot be used where the breach is also in the negative. Bac. Abr. "Covenant" (L); 3 Lev. 19; 2 Taunt. 278; 1 Aik. (Vt.) 150; 4 Dall. (Pa.) 436; 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 71.

NON INTERFUI. I was not present. A reporter's note. T. Jones, 10.

NON INTROMITTANT CLAUSE. In English law. A clause of a charter of a municipal borough, whereby the borough is exempted from the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace for the county.

NON INTROMITTENDO, QUANDO BREve praecipe in capite subdole impetratur. A writ addressed to the justices of the bench, or in eyre, commanding them not to give one who, under color of entitling the king to land, etc., as holding of him in capite, had deceitfully obtained the writ called "praecipe in capite," any benefit thereof, but to put him to his writ of right. Reg. Orig. 4.

NON JURIDICUS. Not judicial. See "Dies Non."

NON JUS EX REGULA, SED REGULA ex jure. The law does not arise from the rule, or maxim, but the rule from the law. Tray. Lat. Max. 384.

NON JUS, SED SEISINA FACIT STIPItem. Not right, but seisin, makes a stock from which the inheritance must descend. Fleta, lib. 6, cc. 14, 2, § 2; Noy, Max. (9th Ed.) 72, note (b); Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 466; 2 Bl. Comm. 209; 1 Steph. Comm. 365, 368, 394; 4 Kent, Comm. 388, 389; 4 Scott, N. R. 468.

NON LICET QUOD DISPENDIO LICET. That which is permitted only at a loss is not permitted to be done. Co. Litt. 127.

NON LIQUET (Lat. it is not clear). In civil law. Words by which the judges (judices) in a Roman trial were accustomed to free themselves from the necessity of deciding a cause when the rights of the parties were doubtful. On the tablets which were given to the judges wherewith to indicate their judgment, was written "N. L." Vicat.

NON MERCHANDIZANDA VICTUALIA. An ancient writ addressed to justices of assize, to inquire whether the magistrates of a town sold victuals in gross or by retail during the time of their being in office, which was contrary to an obsolete statute; and to punish them if they did. Reg. Orig. 184.

NON MOLESTANDO. A writ that lay for a person who was molested contrary to the king's protection granted to him. Reg. Orig. 184.

NON NASCI, ET NATUM MORI, PARIA sunt. Not to be born, and to be dead born, are the same.

NON OBLIGAT LEX NISI PROMULgata. A law is not obligatory unless it be promulgated.

NON OBSERVATA FORMA, INFERTUR adnullatio actus. When the form is not observed, it is inferred that the act is annulled. 12 Coke, 7.

NON OBSTANTE. In English law. These words, which literally signify "notwithstanding," are used to express the act of the English king by which he dispenses with the law, that is, authorizes its violation.

He cannot by his license or dispensation make an offense dispunishable which is malum in se; but in certain matters which are mala prohibita he may, to certain persons and on special occasions, grant a non obstante. Vaughan, 330-359; Lev. 217; Sid. 6, 7; 12 Coke, 18; Bac. Abr. "Prerogative" (D 7). See "Judgment."

NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO. Notwithstanding the verdict. See "Judgment."

NON OFFICIT CONATUS NISI SEQUAtur effectus. An attempt does not harm unless a consequence follow. 11 Coke, 98.

NON OMITTAS (Lat. more fully, non omittas propter libertatem, do not omit on account of the liberty or franchise). In practice. A writ which lies when the sheriff returns on writ to him directed, that he hath sent to the bailiff of such a franchise, which hath return of writs, and he hath not served the writ; then the plaintiff shall have this writ directed to the sheriff, that he "omit not on account of any franchise," but himself enter into the franchise, and execute the king's writ. Termes de la Ley.

This clause is now usually inserted in all processes addressed to sheriffs. Wharton; 2 Wm. IV. c. 39; 3 Chit. St. 494; 3 Chit. Prac. 190, 310.

NON OMNE DAMNUM INDUCIT INJUriam. Not every loss produces an injury, i. e., gives a right of action. See 3 Bl. Comm. 219; 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 131; Broom, Leg. Max. 93; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2211.

NON OMNE QUOD LICET HONESTUM est. It is not everything which is permitted that is honorable. Dig. 50. 17. 144.

NON OMNIUM QUAE A MAJORIBUS nostris constituta sunt ratio reddi potest. A reason cannot always be given for the institutions of our ancestors. 4 Coke, 78; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 149; Branch, Princ.

NON PERTINET AD JUDICEM SECUlarem cognoscere de iis quae sunt mere spiritualia annexa. It belongs not to the secular judge to take cognizance of things which are merely spiritual. 2 Inst. 488.

NON PONENDIS IN ASSISIS ET JURAtis. A writ formerly granted for freeing and discharging persons from serving on assizes and juries. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 165.

NON POSSESSORI INCUMBIT NECESsitas probandi possessiones ad se pertinere. It is not incumbent on the possessor of property to prove his right to his possessions. Code, 4. 19. 2; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 639.

NON POTEST ADDUCI EXCEPTIO ejusdem rei cujus petitur dissolutio. A plea of the same matter, the dissolution of which is sought by the action, cannot be brought forward. Bac. Max. reg. 2. When an action is brought to annul a proceeding, the defendant cannot plead such proceeding in bar. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 154; Wingate, Max. 647; 3 P. Wms. 317.

NON POTEST PROBARI QUOD PROBAtum non relevat. That cannot be proved which, proved, is irrelevant. See 1 Exch. 91, 92, 102.

NON POTEST QUIS SINE BREVI agere. No one can sue without a writ. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 13, § 4.

NON POTEST REX GRATIAM FACERE cum injuria et damno aliorum. The king cannot confer a favor which occasions injury and loss to others. 3 Inst. 236; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 60; Vaughan, 338; 2 El. & Bl. 874.

NON POTEST REX SUBDITUM RENItentem onerare impositionibus. The king cannot load a subject with imposition against his consent. 2 Inst. 61.

NON POTEST VIDERI DESISSE HAbere, qui nunquam habuit. He cannot be considered as having ceased to have a thing, who never had it. Dig. 50. 17. 208.

NON PRAESTAT IMPEDIMENTUM quod de jure non sortitur effectum. A thing which has no effect in law is not an impediment. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 162; Wingate, Max. 727.

NON PROS. An abbreviation of non prosequitur, he does not pursue. Where the plaintiff, at any stage of the proceedings, fails to prosecute his action, or any part of it, in due time, the defendant enters non prosequitur, and signs final judgment, and obtains costs against the plaintiff, who is said to be non pros'd. 2 Archb. Prac. (Chit. Ed.) 1409; 3 Bl. Comm. 296; 1 Tidd, Prac. 458; Graham, Prac. 763; 3 Chit. Prac. 10; 1 Penn. Prac. 84; Caines, Prac. 102. The name non pros. is applied to the judgment so rendered against the plaintiff. 1 Sellon, Prac., and authorities above cited.

NON QUOD DICTUM EST, SED QUOD factum est, inspicitur. Not what is said, but what is done, is to be regarded. Co. Litt. 36; 6 Bing. 310; 1 Metc. (Mass.) 353; 11 Cush. (Mass.) 536.

NON REFERT AN QUIS ASSENSUM suum praefert verbis, an rebus ipsis et factis. It is immaterial whether a man gives his assent by words or by acts and deeds. 10 Coke, 52.

NON REFERT QUID EX AEQUIPOLlentibus fiat. It matters not what becomes of equipollent expressions. 5 Coke, 122.

NON REFERT QUID NOTUM SIT JUDIci, si notum non sit in forma judicii. It matters not what is known to the judge, if it is not known to him judicially. 3 Bulst. 115.

NON REFERT VERBIS AN FACTIS FIT revocatio. It matters not whether a revocation be by words or by acts. Cro. Car. 49; Branch, Princ.

NON REMOTA CAUSA SED PROXIMA spectatur. See "Causa Proxima, etc."

NON RESPONDEBIT MINOR, NISI IN causa dotis, et hoc pro favore doti. A minor shall not answer unless in a case of dower, and this in favor of dower. 4 Coke, 71.

NON REUS NISI MENS SIT REA. Not guilty unless the intent be guilty. 1 Story, Cont. (4th Ed.) 87.

NON SANAE MENTIS (Lat.) Of unsound mind. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 40, § 1.

NON SANE MEMORY. Unsound memory; unsound mind. A term essentially law French. See "Memory."

NON SEQUITUR (Lat.) It does not follow.

NON SOLENT QUAE ABUNDANT VITIare scripturas. Surplusage does not usually vitiate writings. Dig. 50. 17. 94; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 559, note.

NON SOLUM QUID LICET, SED QUID est conveniens considerandum, quia nihil quod inconveniens est licitum. Not only what is permitted, but what is convenient, is to be considered, because what is inconvenient is illegal. Co. Litt. 66a.

NON SOLVENDO PECUNIAM AD QUAM clericus mulctatur pro non residentia. A writ prohibiting an ordinary to take a pecuniary mulct imposed on a clerk of the sovereign for nonresidence. Reg. Writs. 59.

NON SUBMISSIT (Lat.) The name of a plea to an action of debt, or a bond to perform an award, by which the defendant pleads that he did not submit Bac. Abr. "Arbitration, etc." (G).

NON SUI JURIS (Lat.) The opposite of sui juris (q. v.)

NON SUM INFORMATUS. See "Judgment."

NON SUNT LONGA UBI NIHIL EST quod demere possis. There is no prolixity where there is nothing that can be omitted. Vaughan, 138.

NON TEMERE CREDERE, EST NERVUS sapientae. Not to believe rashly is the nerve of wisdom. 5 Coke, 114.

NON TENENT INSIMUL (Lat. they do not hold together). In pleading. A plea to an action in partition, by which the defendant denies that he holds the property which is the subject of the suit, together with the complainant or plaintiff.

NON TENUIT (Lat. he did not hold). In pleading. The name of a plea in bar in replevin, when the plaintiff has avowed for rent arrear, by which the plaintiff avows that he did not hold in manner and form as the avowry alleges.

NON VALEBIT FELONIS GENERATIO, nec ad haereditatem paternam vel maternam; si autem ante felonlam generationem fecerit, talis generatio succedit in haereditate patris vel matris a quo non fuerit felonia perpetrata. The offspring of a felon cannot succeed either to a maternal or paternal inheritance; but, if he had offspring before the felony, such offspring may succeed as to the inheritance of the father or mother by whom the felony was not committed. 3 Coke, 41.

NON VALENTIA AGERE (Law Lat.) Inability to sue. 5 Bell, App. Cas. 172.

NON VALET CONFIRMATIO, NISI ILLE, qui confirmat, sit in possessione rei vel juris unde fieri debet confirmatio; et eodem modo, nisi ille cui confirmatio fit sit in possessione. Confirmation is not valid unless he who confirms is either in possession of the thing itself, or of the right of which confirmation is to be made, and, in like manner, unless he to whom confirmation is made is in possession. Co. Litt. 295.

NON VALET EXCEPTIO EJUSDEM REI cujus petitur dissolutio. A plea of that of which the dissolution is sought is not valid. 2 Eden, 134.

NON VALET IMPEDIMENTUM QUOD de jure non sortitur effectum. An impediment is of no avail which by law has no effect. 4 Coke, 31a.

NON VERBIS SED IPSIS REBUS, LEges imponimus. Not upon words, but upon things themselves, do we impose law. Code, 6. 43. 2.

NON VIDENTUR QUI ERRANT CONsentire. He who errs is not considered as consenting. Dig. 50. 17. 116; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 240; 2 Kent, Comm. 477; 14 Ga. 207.

NON VIDENTUR REM AMITTERE QUIbus propria non fuit. They are not considered as losing a thing whose own it was not. Dig. 50. 17. 85.

NON VIDETUR CONSENSUM RETINuisse si quis ex praescripto minantis aliquid immutavit. He does not appear to have retained his consent, who has changed anything at the command of a party threatening. Bac. Max. reg. 22; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 254.

NON VIDETUR PERFECTE CUJUSQUE id esse, quod ex casu auferri potest. That does not truly belong to any one which can be taken from him upon occasion. Dig. 50. 17. 159. 1.

NON VIDETUR QUISQUAM ID CAPERE, quod ei necesse est alii restituere. One is not considered as acquiring property in a thing which he is bound to restore. Dig. 50. 17. 51.

NON VIDETUR VIM FACERE, QUI jure suo utitur, et ordinaria actione experitur. He is not judged to use force who exercises his own right, and proceeds by ordinary action. Dig. 50. 17. 155. 1.

NON VOLET CONFIRMATIO, NISI ILLE, qui confirmat, sit in possessione rei vel juris unde fieri debet confirmatio; et eodem modo, nisi ille cui confirmatio fit, sit in possessione. Confirmation is not valid unless he who confirms is either in possession of the thing itself, or of the right of which confirmation is to be made, and, in like manner, unless he to whom confirmation is made is in possession. Co. Litt. 295.

NONACCESS. The nonexistence of sexual intercourse between husband and wife is generally expressed by the words "nonaccess of the husband to the wife;" which expressions, in a case of bastardy, are understood to mean the same thing. 2 Starkie, Ev. 218, note. See "Access."

NONAGE. By this term is understood that period of life from the birth till the arrival of twenty-one years. In another sense, it means under the proper age to be of ability to do a particular thing; as, when nonage is applied to one under the age of fourteen, who is unable to marry. See "Age."

NONAGIUM, or NONAGE. A ninth part of movables which was paid to the clergy on the death of persons in their parish, and claimed on pretense of being distributed to pious uses. Blount.

NONAPPARENT EASEMENT. A discontinuous easement. See "Apparent Easement."

NONCLAIM. An omission or neglect by one entitled to make a demand within the time limited by law; as, when a continual claim ought to be made, a neglect to make such claim within a year and a day.

NONCONFORMISTS. In English law. A name given to certain dissenters from the rites and ceremonies of the church of England.

NONCONTINUOUS EASEMENT. A nonapparent or discontinuous easement. See "Apparent Easement."

NONES. In the Roman calendar. The fifth, and, in March, May, July, and October the seventh, day of the month. So called because, counting inclusively, they were nine days from the ides. Adams, Rom. Ant. 355, 357. See "Ides."

NONFEASANCE. The neglect or failure of a person to do some act which he ought to do. The term is not generally used to denote a breach of contract, but rather the failure to perform a duty towards the public whereby some individual sustains special damage, as where a sheriff fails to execute a writ. 3 Bl. Comm. 165; Broom, Com. Law, 655.

When a legislative act requires a person to do a thing, its nonfeasance will subject the party to punishment; as, if a statute require the supervisors of the highways to repair such highways, the neglect to repair them may be punished. See 1 Russ. Crimes, 48. See, also, "Mandate."

NONISSUABLE PLEAS. Those upon which a decision would not determine the action upon the merits, as a plea in abatement. 1 Chit. Archb. Prac. (12th Ed.) 249.

NONJOINDER. Omission of a necessary or proper party. See "Joinder."

NONJURORS. In English law. Persons who refuse to take the oaths, required by law, to support the government. See 1 Dall. (Pa.) 170.

NONPLEVIN. In old English law. A neglect to replevin land taken into the hands of the king upon default, within fifteen days, by which seisin was lost, as by default. Heugh. de Magna Charta, c. 8. By 9 Edw. III. c. 2, no man shall lose his land by nonplevin.

NONRESIDENCE. In ecclesiastical law. The absence of spiritual persons from their benefices.

NONRESIDENTIO PRO CLERICO REgis. A writ, addressed to a bishop, charging him not to molest a clerk employed in the royal service, by reason of his nonresidence; in which case he is to be discharged. Reg. Orig. 58.

NONSENSE. That which in a written agreement or will is unintelligible.

NONSUIT. A judgment given against the plaintiff when he is unable to prove his case, or, when he neglects or refuses to proceed to trial, judgment of nonsuit dismisses the action, but does not determine the issues.

Voluntary nonsuit is an abandonment of his cause by the plaintiff either before the trial is commenced, or during the presentation of his case.

Involuntary nonsuit is judgment of nonsuit ordered by the court where plaintiff fails to appear, or where he has given no evidence on which a verdict in his favor could be rendered.

NONSUMMONS, WAGER OF LAW OF. The mode in which a tenant or defendant in a real action pleaded, when the summons which followed the original was not served within the proper time. 31 Eliz. c. 3, § 2; 2 Saund. 45.

NONTENURE. In pleading. A plea in a real action, by which the defendant asserted that he did not hold the land, or at least some part of it, as mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration (1 Mod. 250); in which case the writ abates as to the part with reference to which the plea is sustained (8 Cranch [U. S.] 242). It may be pleaded with or without a disclaimer. It was a dilatory plea, though not strictly in abatement (2 Saund. 44, note 4; Dyer, 210; Booth, Real Actions, 179; 3 Mass. 312; 11 Mass. 216), but might be pleaded as to part along with a plea in bar as to the rest (1 Lutw. 716; Rast. Entr. 231a, 231b), and was subsequently considered as a plea in bar (14 Mass. 239; 1 Me. 54; 2 N. H. 10; Bac. Abr. "Pleas" [I 9]).

NONTERM. The vacation between two terms of a court.

NONTERMINUS. The vacation between term and term, formerly called the time or days of the king's peace.

NONUSER. Neglect to make use of a franchise, privilege, or right. See 23 Pick. (Mass.) 141.

NOOK OF LAND (Law Lat. noka, or nocata terrae). In old records. A measure or description of land, of uncertain quantity. Blount observes that he had seen an old deed of Sir Walter de Pedwardyn, wherein twelve acres and a half were granted for a noke of land, but he thought the quantity was not certain.

NORTHAMPTON TABLES. Longevity and annuity tables compiled from bills of mortality kept in All Saints parish, England, in 1735-1780.

NOSCITUR A SOCIIS. It is known from its associates. The meaning of a word may be ascertained by reference to the meaning of words associated with it. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 523; 9 East, 267; 13 East, 531; 6 Taunt. 294; 1 Vent. 225; 1 Barn. & C. 644; Arg. 10 Barn. & C. 496, 519; 18 C. B. 102, 893; 5 Man. & G. 639, 667; 3 C. B. 437; 5 C. B. 380; 4 Exch. 511, 519; 5 Exch. 294; 11 Exch. 113; 3 Term R. 87; 8 Term R. 118; 1 N. Y. 47, 69; 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 43, 63; 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 644.

NOSCITUR EX SOCIO, QUI NON COGnoscitur ex se. He who cannot be known from himself may be known from his associate. F. Moore, 817; 1 Vent. 225; 3 Term R. 87; 9 East, 267; 13 East, 531; 6 Taunt. 294; 1 Barn. & C. 644.

NOSOCOMI. In civil law. Persons who have the management and care of hospitals for paupers. Clef Lois Rom. mot "Administrateurs."

NOT FOUND. Words indorsed on a bill of indictment by a grand jury, when they have not sufficient evidence to find a true bill. See "Ignoramus."

NOT GUILTY.

——In Pleading. The general issue in several sorts of actions of tort.

——In Criminal Law. The general traverse of the accusation by the accused.

NOT POSSESSED. In pleading. A plea sometimes used in actions of trover, when the defendant was not possessed of the goods at the commencement of the action. 3 Man. & G. 101, 103.

NOT PROVEN. In Scotch criminal law. It is a peculiarity of the Scotch jury system in criminal trials that it admits a verdict of "Not proven," corresponding to the Non liquet of the Roman law. The legal effect of this is equivalent to "Not guilty;" for a prisoner in whose case it is pronounced cannot be tried again. According to the homely but expressive maxim of the law, no man can be made to thole an assize twice. But, although the verdict of "Not proven" is so far tantamount to an acquittal that the party cannot be tried a second time, it falls very far short of it with regard to the effect upon his reputation and character. He goes away from the bar of the court with an indelible stigma upon his fame. There stands recorded against him the opinion of a jury that the evidence respecting his guilt was so strong that they did not dare to pronounce a verdict of acquittal. So that many of the evil consequences of a conviction follow, although the jury refuse to convict. When Sir Nicholas Throckmorton was tried and acquitted by an English jury in 1554, he said: "It is better to be tried than to live suspected." But in Scotland a man may be not only tried, but acquitted, and yet live suspected, owing to the sinister influence of a verdict of "Not proven." Forsyth, Hist. Trial by Jury, 334-339.

NOTA (Lat.)

——In Civil Law. A mark or brand put upon a person by the law. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 134, 135.

——In Old English Conveyancing. A note or memorandum of a charter or deed, drawn up preparatory to the execution of the charter itself. Si autem dicant testes quod praesentes fuerint confectioni notae in quam utraque pars consentit, donator et donatorius, hoc sufficit ad probationem, licet praesentes non essent ubi charta scripta fuit et assignata [signata]? But if the witnesses say that they were present at the making of the note, to which each party agreed, donor and donee, this is sufficient for proof, though they were not present when the charter was written and sealed. Bracton, fol. 398; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 34, § 2.

A promissory note. 11 Mod. 340.

NOTAE (Lat.) In civil and old European law. Shorthand characters or marks of contraction, in which one person wrote what was said by another, or in which the emperors' secretaries took down what they dictated. Spelman; Calv. Lex. See "Notarius."

NOTARE INFAMIA (Lat.) In the civil law. To mark or brand with infamy, or disgrace. Dig. 3. 2. For a description of the persons who were so branded (de his qui notantur infamia), see Id.

NOTARIAL. Belonging to a notary; made or done by a notary.

NOTARIUS.

——In Civil Law. One who took notes or draughts in shorthand of what was said by another, or of proceedings in the senate or in a court. One who draughted written instruments, wills, conveyances, etc. Vicat; Calv. Lex.

——In English Law. A notary. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.; Cowell.

NOTARY, or NOTARY PUBLIC. An officer appointed by the executive or other appointing power, under the laws of different states, having power generally to attest writings for the purpose of establishing their authenticity, to administer oaths, etc.

NOTATION. In English probate practice, notation is the act of making a memorandum of some special circumstance on a probate or letters of administration. Thus, where a grant is made for the whole personal estate of the deceased within the United Kingdom, which can only be done in the case of a person dying domiciled in England, the fact of his having been so domiciled is noted on the grant. Coote, Prob. Prac. 36.

NOTE OF A FINE. The fourth step of the proceedings in acknowledging a fine, which is only an abstract of the writ of covenant and the concord, naming the parties, the parcel of land, and the agreement, and enrolled of record in the proper office. 2 Bl. Comm. 351, Append. note iv. § 3; 1 Steph. Comm. 518.

NOTE OF ALLOWANCE. This was a note delivered by a master to a party to a cause, who alleged that there was error in law in the record and proceedings, allowing him to bring error. See Com. Law Prac. Act 1852, § 149.

NOTE OF HAND. A popular name for a promissory note.

NOTE OF PROTEST. A note or minute of the protest, made by the notary, at time of protest on the bill, to be completed or filled out at his leisure. Byles, Bills (5th Ed.) 9.

NOTHUS (Lat.) A natural child, or a person of spurious birth.

NOTICE. Information, whether actual or presumptive, and whether direct or indirect, respecting a matter of fact.

Notice is either (1) actual, consisting of information actually received, or (2) constructive, consisting of facts which, by implication of law, constitute notice without regard to whether they actually impart information.

Actual notice is either (a) express, consisting of direct positive knowledge of the fact in question, or (b) implied, consisting of information sufficient to put one on inquiry as to the fact in question.

"Notice" is a broader term than "knowledge," which includes only express actual notice. 81 Ala. 140; 79 Me. 195.

NOTICE OF APPEARANCE. A notice by defendant to plaintiff that he appears in the action, or by an attorney that he appears for defendant. See "Appearance."

NOTICE OF DISHONOR. A notice given to a drawer or indorser of a bill, or an indorser of a negotiable note, by a subsequent party, that it has been dishonored either by nonacceptance in the case of a bill, or by nonpayment in the case of an accepted bill or a note.

NOTICE OF JUDGMENT. A written notice of the entry of judgment required in some states to be given to the judgment debtor to start the running of time to appeal.

NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS. See "Lis Pendens."

NOTICE OF MOTION. A notice in writing to the adverse party, to an action that a specified motion will be made at a time stated.

NOTICE OF PROTEST. A notice given to the drawer or indorser of a bill, or to an indorser of a note, by a prior party, that the bill has been protested for refusal of payment or acceptance. See "Notice of Dishonor."

NOTICE OF TRIAL. A notice by one party to his adversary that he will bring the cause on for trial at the next term of court.

NOTICE TO ADMIT. In the practice of the English high court, either party to an action may call on the other party by notice to admit the existence and execution of any document, in order to save the expense of proving it at the trial; and the party refusing to admit must bear the costs of proving it unless the judge certifies that the refusal to admit was reasonable. No costs of proving a document will in general be allowed, unless such a notice is given. Rules of Court, xxxii. 2.

NOTICE TO PLEAD. Written notice to defendant, requiring him to plead within a certain time. It must always be given before plaintiff can sign judgment for want of a plea. 1 Chit. Archb. Prac. (Prent. Ed.) 221. Notice to plead, indorsed on the declaration, or delivered separately, is sufficient without demanding plea or rule to plead, in England, by statute. See 3 Chit. St. 515.

NOTICE TO PRODUCE PAPERS. In practice. When it is intended to give secondary evidence of a written instrument or paper which is in the possession of the opposite party, it is, in general, requisite to give him notice to produce the same on the trial of the cause, before such secondary evidence can be admitted.

NOTICE TO QUIT. A request by a landlord to his tenant to quit the leased premises, and give possession thereof to the landlord at a time therein mentioned. 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 357; 7 Halst. (N. J.) 99.

NOTING. A term denoting the act of a notary in minuting on a bill of exchange, after it has been presented for acceptance or payment, the initals of his name, the date of the day, month, and year when such presentment was made, and the reason, if any has been assigned, for nonacceptance or nonpayment, together with his charge. The noting is not indispensable, it being only a part of the protest; it will not supply the protest. 4 Term R. 175.

NOTIO (Lat. from noscere, to know). In the civil law. The power of hearing and trying a matter of fact; the power or authority of a judex; the power of hearing causes and of pronouncing sentence, without any degree of jurisdiction. Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 8, Nos. 3, 6; Calv. Lex.

In a more general sense, notio included both cognitio (cognizance) and jurisdictio (jurisdiction). Dig. 50. 16. 99, pr.; Calv. Lex.

NOTITIA (Lat. from notus, known, or noscere, to know). In the civil law. Knowledge; information; intelligence.

——In Old Practice. Notice. Inde notitiam habuit, had notice thereof. 1 Ld. Raym. 70, 71. Notitia non debet claudicare, notice ought not to be lame or imperfect. 6 Coke, 29b.

NOTITIA DICITUR A NOSCENDO; ET notitia non debet claudicare. Notice is called from a knowledge being had; and notice ought not to halt, i. e., be imperfect. 6 Coke, 29.

NOTORIAL. The Scotch form of "notarial" (q. v.) Bell, Dict.

NOTOUR. In Scotch law. Open; notorious. A notour bankrupt is a debtor who, being under diligence by horning and caption of his creditor, retires to sanctuary, or absconds, or defends by force, and is afterwards found insolvent by court of sessions. Bell, Dict.; Burton, Law of Scotland, 601.

NOVA CONSTITUTIO FUTURIS FORmam imponere debet, non praeteritis. A new enactment ought to impose form upon what is to come, not upon what is past. 2 Inst. 292; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 33, 36; T. Jones, 108; 2 Show. 16; 6 Mees. & W. 285; 7 Mees. & W. 536; 2 Mass. 122; 2 Gall. (U. S.) 139; 2 N. Y. 245; 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 503 et seq.,—where this rule is fully considered and the authorities reviewed.

NOVA CUSTOMA. An imposition or duty. See "Antiqua Custuma."

NOVA STATUTA. New statutes. A term including all statutes passed in the reign of Edw. III. and subsequently.

NOVAE NARRATIONES. "New counts or tallys." A book of such pleadings as were then in use, published in the reign of Edw. III. 3 Bl. Comm. 297; 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 151.

NOVALE (Lat.) Land newly ploughed, or that had not been tilled before within the memory of man. Cowell; Spelman.

NOVALIS (Lat. from novus, new). In the civil law. Land that rested a year after the first ploughing. Dig. 50. 16. 30. 2.

NOVATIO (Lat. from novare, to make new, from novus, new). In the civil law. Literally, a making new. A change of a former debt or obligation into another of the same or a different kind, either by a change of the persons, called delegatio, or by a change in the obligation, the persons continuing the same. Inst. 3. 30. 3; Dig. 46. 2; Code, 8. 42; Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 20, No. 8; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 30, § 1011 et seq. This term, translated or converted into "novation," is extensively used in modern civil law, and in the jurisprudence of Holland, Spain, France, Scotland, and the state of Louisiana. Burge, Sur. 166. Called in Fleta, innovatio. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 12.

NOVATIO NON PRAESUMITUR. A novation is not presumed. Halk. Max. 104.

NOVATION. The substitution of a new obligation for an old, which is thereby extinguished. 57 Wis. 534. The term is of civil-law origin, and is rarely used in the common law.

Novation is of three sorts:

(1) Where the debtor and creditor remain the same, but a new debt takes the place of the old one. Here, either the subject matter of the debt may be changed, or the conditions of time, place, etc., of payment.

(2) Where the debt remains the same, but a new debtor is substituted for the old. This novation may be made without the intervention or privity of the old debtor (in this case the new agreement is called expromissio, and the new debtor expromissor), or by the debtor's transmission of his debt to another, who accepts the obligation, and is himself accepted by the creditor. This transaction is called delegatio. Domat lays down the essential distinction between a delegation and any other novation, thus: That the former demands the consent of all three parties, but the latter that only of the two parties to the new debt.

(3) Where the debt remains the same, but a new creditor is substituted for the old. This also is called delegatio, for the reason adduced above, to wit, that all three parties must assent to the new bargain. It differs from the cessio nominis of the civil law by completely cancelling the old debt, while the cessio nominis leaves the creditor a claim for any balance due after assignment. See Civ. Code Cal. §§ 1530, 1532.

To constitute a novation there must be (1) a valid pre-existing obligation; (2) consent of capable parties; (3) express intention to innovate.

The release of the old obligation is a sufficient consideration. 37 Ohio St. 279.

NOVEL ASSIGNMENT. See "New Assignment."

NOVEL DISSEISIN. See "Assize of Novel Disseisin."

NOVELLAE LEONIS. The ordinances of Emperor Leo, which were made from the year 887 till the year 893, are so called. These Novels changed many rules of the Justinian law. This collection contains one hundred and thirteen Novels, written originally in Greek, and afterwards, in 1560, translated into Latin by Agilaeus.

NOVELS, or NOVELLAE CONSTITUTIONES. In civil law. The name given to the constitutions or laws of Justinian and his immediate successors, which were promulgated soon after the Code of Justinian.

It appears to have been the intention of Justinian, after the completion of the second and revised edition of the Code, to supply what had not been foreseen in the preceding laws, together with any necessary amendments or alterations, not by revising the Code, but by supplementary laws. Such laws he promulgated from time to time; but no official compilation of them is known to have been made until after his death, when his laws, one hundred and fifty-nine in number, with those of the reigns of Justin II. and Tiberias, nine in number, were collected, together with some local edicts, under this name. They belong to various times between 535 and 565 A. D.

NOVERINT UNIVERSI PER PRAESENTES (Law Lat.) Know all men by these presents. Words with which deeds, obligations, letters of attorney, and other instruments were formerly commenced. Litt. § 445; West, Symb. pars 1, lib. 2, §§ 102, 518, 522-525.

NOVI OPERIS NUNCIATIO (Lat.) In the civil law. A protest against or prohibition of a new work. Where a person began to build up or to pull down something (which was technically called novum opus, a new work), another person, who feared that his right would be impaired thereby, might extrajudicially hinder the completion of the work, by protesting before the workmen on the spot, or before some one present representing the owner, against the prosecution of the work, and forbidding the same. Dig. 39. 1; Id. 43. 24; Code, 8. 11. See "Opus Novum."

NOVIGILD. In Saxon law. A pecuniary satisfaction for an injury, amounting to nine times the value of the thing for which it was paid. Spelman.

NOVITAS NON TAM UTILITATE PRO-dest quam novitate perturbat. Novelty benefits not so much by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 167.

NOVITER PERVENTA, or NOVITER AD notitiam perventa. In ecclesiastical procedure. Facts "newly come" to the knowledge of a party to a cause. Leave to plead facts noviter perventa is generally given, in a proper case, even after the pleadings are closed. Phillim. Ecc. Law, 1257; Rog. Ecc. Law, 723.

NOVODAMUS (Law Lat.) In old Scotch law. We give anew. The name given to a charter or clause in a charter, granting a renewal of a right. Bell, Dict.

NOVUM JUDICIUM NON DAT NOVUM jus, sed declarat antiquum. A new judgment does not make a new law, but declares the old. 10 Coke, 42.

NOVUM OPUS (Lat.) In the civil law. A new work. See "Novi Operis Nunciatio;" "Opus Novum."

NOVUS HOMO (Lat. a new man). This term is applied to a man who has been pardoned of a crime, by which he is restored to society and is rehabilitated.

NOXA (Lat.) In civil law. Damage resulting from an offense committed by an irresponsible agent; the offense itself; the punishment for the offense; the slave or animal who did the offense, and who is delivered up to the person aggrieved (datur noxae) unless the owner choose to pay the damage. The right of action is against whoever becomes the possessor of the slave or animal (noxa caput sequitur). Vicat; Calv. Lex.

NOXA SEQUITUR CAPUT. The injury (i. e., liability to make good an injury caused by a slave) follows the head or person, i. e., attaches to his master. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 8, § 1231.

NOXALIS ACTIO. See "Actio Noxalis."

NOXIA (Lat.) In the civil law. An offense committed or damage done by a slave. Inst. 4. 8. 1.

NUBILIS (Lat.) In civil law. One who is of a proper age to be married. Dig. 32. 51.

NUDA (Lat.) Bare or mere. Nuda patientia, mere sufferance. Nuda possessio, mere possession.

NUDA PACTIO OBLIGATIONEM NON parit. A naked promise does not create an obligation. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 4; Code, 4. 65. 27; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 670; Brisson. "Nudus."

NUDA RATIO ET NUDA PACTIO NON ligant aliquem debitorem. Naked reason and naked promise do not bind any debtor. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 25.

NUDE. Naked. Figuratively, this word is applied to various subjects.

A nude contract, nudum pactum, is one without a consideration. Nude matter is a bare allegation of a thing done, without any evidence of it.

NUDUM PACTUM. A contract made without consideration. See "Consideration."

It is a mere agreement, without the requisites necessary to confer upon it a legal obligation to perform. 3 McLean (U. S.) 330; 2 Denio (N. Y.) 403; 6 Ired. (N. C.) 480; 1 Strobh. (S. C.) 329; 1 Ga. 294; 1 Doug. (Mich.) 188. The term, and the rule which decides upon the nullity of its effects, are borrowed from the civil law; yet the common law has not in any degree been influenced by the notions of the civil law in defining what constitutes a nudum pactum. Dig. 19. 5. 5. See, on this subject, a learned note in Fonbl. Eq. 335, and 2 Kent, Comm. 364. Toullier defines nudum pactum to be an agreement not executed by one of the parties. Toullier, Dr. Civ. tom. 6, note 13, page 10.

It is of no consequence whether the agreement be oral or written (7 Term R. 350; 7 Brown, Parl. Cas. 550; 4 Johns. [N. Y.] 235; 5 Mass. 301, 392; 2 Day [Conn.] 22); but a contract under seal cannot be held a nudum pactum for lack of consideration, since the seal imports consideration (2 Barn. & Ald. 551). See "Consideration;" 2 Bl. Comm. 445; 16 Viner, Abr. 16.

NUDUM PACTUM EST UBI NULLA subest causa propter conventionem; sed ubi subest causa, fit obligatio, et parit actionem. Nudum pactum is where there is no consideration for the undertaking or agreement; but when there is a consideration, an obligation is created, and an action arises. Dig. 2. 14. 7. 4; 2 Bl. Comm. 445; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 669; Plowd. 309; 1 Powell, Cont. 330 et seq.; 3 Burrows, 1670 et seq.; Viner, Abr. "Nudum Pactum" (A); 1 Fonbl. Eq. (5th Ed.) 335a.

NUDUM PACTUM EX QUO NON ORItur actio. Nudum pactum is that upon which no action arises. Code, 2. 3. 10; Id. 5. 14. 1; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 676.

NUISANCE. A nuisance is anything that unlawfully worketh hurt, inconvenience, or damage. 3 Bl. Comm. 216.

Any offensive erection, which, from its nature, may be an annoyance, and from its situation actually becomes so, is a nuisance. Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 201.

——Public Nuisance. Such an inconvenience or troublesome offense as annoys the whole community in general, and not merely some particular person. 4 Bl. Comm. 166. Such an annoyance as infringes on rights common to the public. 7 Mich. 432. Some considerable portion of the community must be affected, for while that is a public nuisance which injures generally such citizens as may be so circumstanced as to come within its influence (43 N. J. Eq. 478; 8 Cow. [N. Y.] 146), it must be in a public place, where members of the community are liable to come within its influence (7 Blackf. [Ind.] 534; 34 Tex. 230; 36 N. J. Law, 283). The test is not the number of persons annoyed, but the possibility of invasion of the public rights. 5 Rand. (Va.) 691.

——Private Nuisance. Anything done or maintained whereby special annoyance or injury is done to another.

A public nuisance may be private, as well, and such have been termed "mixed nuisances." Wood, Nuisance, § 17.

The exact amount of annoyance or inconvenience necessary to constitute a private nuisance has never been settled. In general terms, the injury should cause an inconvenience "materially interfering with the ordinary comfort, physically, of human existence; not merely according to elegant or dainty modes and habits of living, but according to plain, sober, and simple notions." 4 Eng. Law & Eq. 15.

The filling of the air with smoke or noxious vapor, to the detriment of health (11 Mo. 517; 12 L. T. [N. S.] 776), or with noisome odors (20 N. J. Eq. 201; 23 N. J. Eq. 251), the production of great noise and clangor in a quiet neighborhood (14 Mo. App. 590), the maintenance of excessive heat, rendering adjoining premises uninhabitable (46 Ala. 381), the keeping of explosives or inflammable substances (35 N. J. Law, 17), are well-recognized forms of private nuisance.

NUISANCE, ASSISE OF. See "Assize of Nuisance."

NUL. No; none. A law French negative particle, commencing many phrases.

NUL AGARD (Law Fr. no award). In pleading. A plea to an action on an arbitration bond, when the defendant avers that there was no legal award made. 3 Burrows, 1730; 2 Strange, 923.

NUL CHARTER, NUL VENTE, NE NUL done vault perpetualment, si le donor n'est seise al temps de contracts de deux droits, sc. del droit de possession et del droit de propertie. No grant, no sale, no gift is valid forever, unless the donor, at the time of the contract, is seised of two rights, namely, the right of possession, and the right of property. Co. Litt. 266.

NUL DISSEISIN. In pleading. No disseisin. A plea in a real action, by which the defendant denies that there was any disseisin. It is a species of the general issue.

NUL NE DOIT S'ENRICHIR AUX DEpens des autres. No one ought to enrich himself at the expense of others.

NUL PRENDRA ADVANTAGE DE SON tort demesne. No one shall take advantage of his own wrong. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 265.

NUL SANS DAMAGE AVERA ERROR ou attaint. No one shall have error or attaint unless he has sustained damage. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 323.

NUL TIEL CORPORATION. No such corporation exists. The form of a plea denying the existence of an alleged corporation.

NUL TIEL RECORD (Fr. no such record). In pleading. A plea which is proper when it is proposed to rely upon facts which disprove the existence of the record on which the plaintiff founds his action.

Any matters may be introduced under it which tend to destroy the validity of the record as a record, provided they do not contradict the recitals of the record itself. 10 Ohio, 100. It is frequently used to enable the defendant to deny the jurisdiction of the court from which the alleged record emanates. 2 McLean, C. C. (U. S.) 129; 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 293.

It is said to be the proper plea to an action on a foreign judgment, especially if of a sister state, in the United States (2 Leigh [Va.] 72; 6 Leigh [Va.] 570; 17 Vt. 302; 6 Pick. [Mass.] 232; 11 Miss. 210; 1 Pa. St. 499; 2 South. [S. C.] 778; 2 Breese [Ill.] 2), though it is held that nil debet is sufficient (33 Me. 268; 3 J. J. Marsh. [Ky.] 600), especially if the judgment be that of a justice of the peace (3 Har. [N. J.] 408). See "Conflict of Laws."

NUL TORT (Law Fr. no wrong). In pleading. A plea to a real action, by which the defendant denies that he committed any wrong. It is a species of general issue.

NUL WASTE. In pleading. The general issue in an action of waste. 3 Inst. 700a, 708a. The plea of nul waste admits nothing, but puts the whole declaration in issue; and in support of this plea the defendant may give in evidence anything which proves that the act charged is no waste, as that it happened by tempest, lightning, and the like. Co. Litt. 283a; 3 Wm. Saund. 238, note 5.

NULL. Properly, that which does not exist; that which is not in the nature of things. In a figurative sense, it signifies that which has no more effect than if it did not exist. 8 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 320.

NULLA BONA (Law Lat. no goods). The return made to a writ of fieri facias by the sheriff, when he has not found any goods of the defendant on which he could levy. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3393.

NULLA CURIA QUAE RECORDUM NON habet potest imponere finem, neque aliquem mandare carceri, quia ista spectant tantummodo ad curias de recordo. No court which has not a record can impose a fine, or commit any person to prison, because those powers belong only to courts of record. 8 Coke, 60.

NULLA EMPTIO SINE PRETIO ESSE potest. There can be no sale without a price. 4 Pick. (Mass.) 189.

NULLA IMPOSSIBILIA AUT INHONESta sunt praesumenda; vera autem et honesta et possibilia. No impossible or dishonorable things are to be presumed, but things true, honorable, and possible. Co. Litt. 78.

NULLA PACTIONE EFFICI POTEST NE dolus praestetur. By no agreement can it be effected that there shall be no accountability for fraud. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 3; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 622, 118, note; 5 Maule & S. 466.

NULLA VIRTUS, NULLA SCIENTIA, LOcum suum et dignitatem conservare potest sine modestia. Without modesty, no virtue, no knowledge, can preserve its place and dignity. Co. Litt. 394.

NULLE REGLE SANS FAUTE. There is no rule without a fault.

NULLE TERRE SANS SEIGNEUR. No land without a lord. Guyot, Inst. Feud. c. 28.

NULLI ENIM RES SUA SERVIT JURE servitutis. No one can have a servitude over his own property. Dig. 8. 2. 26; 17 Mass. 443; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1600.

NULLITY. An act or proceeding which has absolutely no legal effect whatever. See Chit. Cont. 228.

NULLIUS FILIUS (Lat.) The son of no one; a bastard.

NULLIUS HOMINIS AUCTORITAS APUD nos valere debet, ut meliora non sequeremur si quis attulerit. The authority of no man ought to avail with us, that we should not follow better opinions should any one present them. Co. Litt. 383b.

NULLIUS JURIS. In old English law. Of no legal force. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 24.

NULLUM ARBITRIUM (Lat.) In pleading. The name of a plea to an action on an arbitration bond for not fulfilling the award, by which the defendant asserts that there is no award.

NULLUM CRIMEN MAJUS EST INOBEdientia. No crime is greater than disobedience. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 77.

NULLUM EXEMPLUM EST IDEM OMnibus. No example is the same for all purposes. Co. Litt. 212a.

NULLUM FECERUNT ARBITRIUM (Lat.) In pleading. The name of a plea to an action of debt upon an obligation for the performance of an award, by which the defendant denies that he submitted to arbitration, etc. Bac. Abr. "Arbiter, etc." (G).

NULLUM INIQUUM EST PRAESUMENdum in jure. Nothing unjust is to be presumed in law. 4 Coke, 72.

NULLUM MATRIMONIUM, IBI NULLA dos. No marriage, no dower. 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 192, 194.

NULLUM SIMILE EST IDEM. Nothing which is like another is the same, i. e., no likeness is exact identity. 2 Story, C. C. (U. S.) 512; Story, Partn. 90; Co. Litt. 3a; 2 Bl. Comm. 162.

NULLUM SIMILE EST IDEM NISI QUAtuor pedibus currit. No like is identical, unless it run on all fours. Co. Litt. 3.

NULLUM SIMILE QUATUOR PEDIBUS currit. No simile runs upon four feet, or, as ordinarily expressed, "on all fours." Co. Litt. 3a; Eunom. Dial. 2, p. 155; 1 Story, C. C. 143.

NULLUM TEMPUS ACT. St. 3 Geo. III. c. 16. See 32 Geo. III. c. 58, and 7 Wm. III. c. 3. It was so called because the right of the crown to sue, etc., was limited by it to sixty years, in contradiction to the maxim, Nullum tempus occurrit regi. 3 Chit. St. 63.

NULLUM TEMPUS AUT LOCUS OCcurrit regi. No time or place affects the king. 2 Inst. 273; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 83; Broom, Leg. Max. 65.

NULLUM TEMPUS OCCURRIT REGI. Lapse of time does not bar the right of the crown. 2 Inst. 273; 1 Bl. Comm. 247; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 62; Hob. 347; 2 Steph. Comm. 504; 1 Mass. 355; 2 Brock. C. C. (U. S.) 393; 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 227; 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 139.

NULLUM TEMPUS OCCURRIT REIpublicae. Lapse of time does not bar the commonwealth. 11 Grat. (Va.) 572; Hilliard, Real Prop. 173; 8 Tex. 410; 16 Tex. 305; 5 McLean, C. C. (U. S.) 133; 19 Mo. 667.

NULLUS ALIUS QUAM REX POSSIT episcopo demandare inquisitionem faciendam. No other than the king can command the bishop to make an inquisition. Co. Litt. 134.

NULLUS COMMODUM CAPERE POtest de injuria sua propria. No one shall take advantage of his own wrong. Co. Litt. 148b; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 265; 4 Bing. N. C. 395; 4 Barn. & Ald. 409; 10 Mees. & W. 309; 11 Mees. & W. 680.

NULLUS DEBET AGERE DE DOLO, UBI alia actio subest. Where another form of action is given, no one ought to sue in the action de dolo. 7 Coke, 92.

NULLUS DICITUR ACCESSORIUS POST feloniam sed ille qui novit principalem feloniam fecisse, et illum receptavit et comfortavit. No one is called an accessory after the fact but he who knew the principal to have committed a felony, and received and comforted him. 3 Inst. 138.

NULLUS DICITUR FELO PRINCIPALIS nisi actor, aut qui praesens est, abettans aut auxilians actorem ad feloniam faciendam. No one shall be called a principal felon except the party actually committing the felony, or the party present aiding and abetting in its commission. 3 Inst. 138.

NULLUS IDONEUS TESTIS IN RE SUA intelligitur. No one is understood to be a competent witness in his own cause. Dig. 22. 5. 10; 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 328, 344.

NULLUS JUS ALIENUM FORISFACERE potest. No man can forfeit another's right. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 28, § 11.

NULLUS RECEDAT E CURIA CANCELlaria sine remedio. No one ought to depart out of the court of chancery without a remedy. Y. B. 4 Hen. VII. 4.

NULLUS VIDETUR DOLO FACERE QUI suo jure utitur. No man is to be esteemed a wrongdoer who avails himself of his legal right. Dig. 50. 17. 55; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 124, 118, note (q); 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 339, 492.

NUMBER. A collection of units.

NUMERATA PECUNIA (Lat.) In civil law. Money counted or paid; money given in payment by count. L. 3, 10, C. de non numerat. pecun.; Vicat.

NUMMATA TERRAE (Law Lat.) In old records. A quantity of land, thought to contain an acre. Cowell.

NUNC PRO TUNC (Lat. now for then). A phrase used to express that a thing is done at one time as if or with the same effect as if performed at another.

NUNCIATIO. In civil law. A formal proclamation or protest. It may be by acts (realis) or by words. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 237. Thus, nunciatio novi operis was an injunction which one man could place on the erection of a new building, etc., near him, until the case was tried by the praetor. Id.; Calv. Lex. An information against a criminal. Calv. Lex.

NUNCIO. The name given to the pope's ambassador. Nuncios are ordinary or extraordinary; the former are sent upon usual missions, the latter upon special occasions.

NUNCIUS. In international law. A messenger; a minister; the pope's legate, commonly called a "nuncio."

NUNCUPATE. To declare publicly and solemnly.

NUNCUPATIVE WILL. An oral will, declared by a testator, in extremis, before witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing. 4 Kent, Comm. 576; 2 Bl. Comm. 500; 1 Jarm. Wills (Perkins Ed.) 130-136. See 1 Wm. IV. c. 20; 1 Vict. c. 26, §§ 9, 11; 11 Eng. Law & Eq. 596,—by which the privilege of making a nuncupative will is only allowed to soldiers and seamen in actual service. So in almost all the states. See, in general, 27 Ala. (N. S.) 296, 596; 26 N. H. 372; 9 N. Y. 196; 10 Grat. (Va.) 548; 27 Miss. 119, 725; 2 R. I. 133; 4 Bradf. Sur. (N. NUNDINAE (Law Lat.) In civil and old English law. Fair or fairs. Dion. Halic. lib. 2, p. 98; Vicat; Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.

NUNQUAM (Lat.) Never. Nunquam fuit ballivus ejus, vel mercator, vel denariorum suorum receptor, vel administrator, never was his bailiff or merchant, or receiver of his moneys, or his administrator (manager). Fleta, lib. 2, c. 70, § 9.

NUNQUAM CRESCIT EX POST FACTO praeteriti delicti aestimatio. The quality of a past offense is never aggravated by that which happens subsequent. Dig. 50. 17. 138. 1; Bac. Max. reg. 8; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 41.

NUNQUAM DECURRITUR AD EXTRAORdinarium sed ubi deficit ordinarium. We are never to recur to what is extraordinary till what is ordinary fails. 4 Inst. 84.

NUNQUAM FICTIO SINE LEGE. There is no fiction without law.

NUNQUAM INDEBITATUS (Lat. never indebted). In pleading. A plea to an action of indebitatus assumpsit, by which the defendant asserts that he is not indebted to the plaintiff. 6 Car. & P. 545; 1 Mees. & W. 542; 1 Q. B. 77.

NUNQUAM NIMIS DICITUR QUOD NUNquam satis dicitur. What is never sufficiently said is never said too much. Co. Litt. 375.

NUNQUAM PRAESCRIBITUR IN FALSO. There is never prescription in case of falsehood (crimen falsi). Bell. Dict.

NUNQUAM RES HUMANAE PROSPERE succedunt ubi negliguntur divinae. Human things never prosper when divine things are neglected. Co. Litt. 95; Wingate, Max. 2.

NUNTIUS, or NUNCIUS. In old English practice. One who made excuse for absence of one summoned; an apparitor, beadle, or sergeant. Cowell. A messenger or legate, e. g., pope's nuncio. Jacob. Essoniator was sometimes wrongly used for nuntius in the first sense. Bracton, fol. 345, § 2.

NUPER OBIIT (Lat. he or she lately died). In practice. The name of a writ which in the English law lies for a sister co-heiress dispossessed by her coparcener of lands and tenements whereof their father, brother, or any common ancestor died seised of an estate in fee simple. Termes de la Ley; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 197.

NUPTIAE (Lat. from nubere, to cover or veil). In the civil law. Marriage; nuptials: the union of man and woman; companionship for all life (conjunctio maris et feminae, et consortium omnis vitae). Dig. 23. 2. 1. See Code, 5. 4. Justinian uses nuptiae and matrimonium as synonymous. Inst. 1. 9. 1. Properly, the nuptial ceremony. Calv. Lex.; Tayl. Civ. Law, 269, 274. See "Consensus Non, etc."

NUPTIAE SECUNDAE (Lat.) In the canon law. A second marriage; any marriage after the first. The canon law put a mark of disapprobation upon nuptiae secundae, for so they termed every marriage after the first. No benediction could be pronounced, nor could any priest be present at the celebration of them. Corvin. Jus. Canon. 108, 109, 110; Launc. Inst. Jur. Can. lib. 2, tit. 16; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 63.

NUPTIAL. Of or pertaining to the marital relation.

NUPTIAS NON CONCUBITUS, SED CONsensus facit. Not cohabitation, but consent, makes the marriage. Dig. 50. 17. 30; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 239; Co. Litt. 33.

NURTURE. The rearing and care of children.

NUSANCE. The old form of "nuisance." Hale, Anal. § xlii.

NUTAUNTRE, NUTANDER, or NUICtander (Law Fr.) By night. Ou nutauntre ou de jour, by night or by day. Britt. c. 47; Y. B. P. 10 Edw. III. 37.

NUYT, or NUTE (Law Fr.) Night. Britt. c. 80.

NYMPHOMANIA. Erotic insanity manifested in a female. It is said to be distinguished from erotomania, in that it proceeds from some sexual disorder as an exciting cause. Wharton.

O

O. C. In the civil law. An abbreviation for "ope consilio" (q. v.)

O. NI. It was the course of the English exchequer, as soon as the sheriff entered into and made up his account for issues, amerciaments, etc., to mark upon each head "O. Ni.," which denoted oneratur, nisi habeat sufficientem exonerationem, and presently he became the king's debtor, and a debet was set upon his head; whereupon the parties paravaile became debtors to the sheriff, and were discharged against the king, etc. 4 Inst. 116. But sheriffs now account to the commissioners for auditing the public accounts. Wharton.

OATH. An outward pledge given by the person taking it that his attestation or promise is made under an immediate sense of his responsibility to God. Tyler, Oaths, 15.

The term has been variously defined: As, "a solemn invocation of the vengeance of the Deity upon the witness if he do not declare the whole truth, so far as he knows it." 1 Starkie, Ev. 22. Or, "a religious asseveration by which a person renounces the mercy and imprecates the vengeance of Heaven if he do not speak the truth." 2 Leach, C. C. 482. Or, as "a religious act by which the party invokes God not only to witness the truth and sincerity of his promise, but also to avenge his imposture or violated faith, or, in other words, to punish his perjury if he shall be guilty of it." 10 Toullier, Dr. Civ. notes 343-348; Puffendorff, bk. 4, c. 2, § 4. The essential idea of an oath would seem to be, however, that of a recognition of God's authority by the party taking it, and an undertaking to accomplish the transaction to which it refers as required by His laws.

In its broadest sense, the term is used to include all forms of attestation by which a party signifies that he is bound in conscience to perform the act faithfully and truly. In a more restricted sense, it excludes all those forms of attestation or promise which are not accompanied by an imprecation.

——Assertory Oaths. Those required by law other than in judicial proceedings, and upon induction to office, such, for example, as custom-house oaths.

——Promissory Oaths. Oaths taken by authority of law, by which the party declares that he will fulfill certain duties therein mentioned; as, the oath which an alien takes, on becoming naturalized, that he will support the constitution of the United States; the oath which a judge takes that he will perform the duties of his office. The breach of this does not involve the party in the legal crime or punishment of perjury. 3 Zab. (N. J.) 49.

——Extrajudicial Oaths. Those taken without authority of law. Though binding in foro conscientiae, they do not, when false, render the party liable to punishment for perjury.

——Judicial Oaths. Those administered in judicial proceedings.

OATH AGAINST BRIBERY. One which could have have administered to a voter at an election for members of parliament. Abolished by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102. Wharton.

OATH DECISORY. In civil law. An oath which one of the parties defers or refers back to the other for the decision of the cause.

OATH EX OFFICIO. The oath by which a clergyman charged with a criminal offense was formerly allowed to swear himself to be innocent; also the oath by which the compurgators swore that they believed in his innocence. 3 Bl. Comm. 101, 447; Mozley & W.

OATH IN LITEM. An oath which, in the civil law, was deferred to the complainant as to the value of the thing in dispute, on failure of other proof, particularly when there was a fraud on the part of the defendant, and he suppressed proof in his possession. See Greenl. Ev. § 348; Tait, Ev. 280; 1 Vern. 207; 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 229; 1 Me. 27; 1 Yeates (Pa.) 34; 12 Viner, Abr. 24.

OATH OF CALUMNY. In civil law. An oath which a plaintiff was obliged to take that he was not actuated by a spirit of chicanery in commencing his action, but that he had bona fide a good cause of action. Poth. ad Pand. lib. 5, tits. 16, 17, § 124. This oath is somewhat similar to our affidavit of a cause of action. See Dunl. Adm. Prac. 289, 290.

OATH PURGATORY. An oath by which one destroys the presumptions which were against him, for he is then said to purge himself when he removes the suspicions which were against him; as, when a man is in contempt for not attending court as a witness, he may purge himself of the contempt by swearing to a fact which is an ample excuse. See "Purgation."

OATH RITE. The form used at the taking of an oath.

OATH SUPPLETORY. In civil and ecclesiastical law. An oath required by the judge from either party in a cause, upon half proof already made, which, being joined to half proof, supplies the evidence required to enable the judge to pass upon the subject. See Strange, 80; 3 Bl. Comm. 270.

OATHWORTHY. Worthy of making an oath; credible.

OB. On account of; for. A few Latin phrases and maxims commence with this word, but in is more commonly used.

OB CAUSAM ALIQUAM A RE MARItima ortam. For some cause arising out of a maritime matter. 1 Pet. Adm. (U. S.) 92. Said to be Selden's translation of the French definition of admiralty jurisdiction, "pour le fait de la mer." Id.

OB CONTINENTIAM DELICTI. On account of contiguity to the offense; a ground for extending the operation of a decree of maritime condemnation. Thus, the cargo of a vessel condemned for carrying dispatches for the enemy may be condemned ob continentiam delicti. 6 Rob. Adm. 440.

OB CONTINGENTIAM. In Scotch law. On account of connection; by reason of similarity. A ground for the consolidation of actions. 7 Bell, App. Cas. 163.

OB FAVOREM MERCATORUM. In favor of merchants. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 63, § 12.

OB INFAMIAM NON SOLET JUXTA LEgem terrae aliquis per legem apparentem se purgare, nisi prius convictus fuerit vel confessus in curia. On account of evil report, it is not usual, according to the law of the land, for any person to purge himself, unless he have been previously convicted, or confessed in court. Glanv. lib. 14, c. 2.

OB TURPEM CAUSAM. For a base or immoral cause or consideration.

OBAERATUS. In Roman law. A debtor who was obliged to serve his creditor till his debt was discharged.

OBEDIENTIA EST LEGIS ESSENTIA. Obedience is the essence of the law. 11 Coke, 100.

OBIIT SINE PROLE (Lat.) (He) died without issue. Y. B. M. 1 Edw. II. 1.

OBIT. That particular solemnity or office for the dead which the Roman Catholic church appoints to be read or performed over the body of a deceased member of that communion before interment; also, the office which, upon the anniversary of his death, was frequently used as a commemoration or observance of the day. 2 Cro. 51; Dyer, 313.

OBITER (Lat. from obire, to pass). By the way; in passing. "This point was not the principal question in the case of Clere and Brooke, but the law concerning it is delivered obiter only, and in the course of argument, by Justice Manwoode." 2 Bl. Comm. 238.

OBITER DICTUM. See "Dictum."

OBJECT OF ACTION. The thing sought to be attained by the action; the remedy demanded, or relief prayed for. It differs from the subject of the action, which is the subject matter out of which the cause of action arose. 18 Kan. 406.

OBJECTS OF A POWER. A name given to the members of a class among whom one is empowered to appoint the power.

OBJECTION. The act by which a party questions the propriety of evidence offered or proceedings proposed to be had in the course of the trial.

OBLATI ACTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. An action given to a party against another who had offered to him a stolen thing, which was found in his possession. Inst. 3. 1. 4.

OBLATIO (Lat.) In civil law. A tender of money in payment of debt made by debtor to creditor. L. 9, C. de solut. Whatever is offered to the church by the pious. Calv. Lex.; Vicat.

OBLIGACION (Law Fr.) Obligation. Obligacion est un lien de droit, obligation is a bond of law. Britt. c. 28. See "Obligation."

OBLIGATIO. In Roman law. A legal bond which obliges us to the performance of something in accordance with the law of the land. Ortolan, Inst. 2, § 1179.

It corresponded nearly to our word "contract." Justinian says, "Obligatio est juris vinculum, quo necessitate adstringimur alicujus solvendae rei, secundum nostrae civitatis jura." Pr. Just, 3. 13.

The Romans considered that obligations derived their validity solely from positive law. At first the only ones recognized were those established in special cases in accordance with the forms prescribed by the strict jus civilis. In the course of time, however, the praetorian jurisdiction, in mitigation of the primitive rigor of the law, introduced new modes of contracting obligations, and provided the means of enforcing them; hence the twofold division made by Justinian of obligationes civiles, and obligationes praetoriae. Inst. 1. 3. 13. But there was a third class, the obligationes naturales, which derived their validity from the law of nature and nations, or the natural reason of mankind. These had not the binding force of the other classes, not being capable of enforcement by action, and are, therefore, not noticed by Justinian in his classification; but they had, nevertheless, a certain efficacy even in the civil law. For instance, though a debt founded upon a natural obligation could not be recovered by an action, yet if it was voluntarily paid by the debtor, he could not recover it back, as he might do in the case of money paid by mistake, etc., where no natural obligation existed. L. 38, pr. D. 12. 6. And see Ortolan, Inst. 2, § 1180.

The second classification of obligations made by Justinian has regard to the way in which they arise. They were, in this aspect, either ex contractu or quasi ex contractu, or ex maleficio or quasi ex maleficio. Inst. 2. 3, 13.

OBLIGATION (Lat. obligo; ligo, to bind). A legal bond, whereby constraint is laid upon a person or group of persons to act or forbear on behalf of another person or group. Savigny, Obl. §§ 2-4; Anson, Cont. § 2.

Secondarily applied to an instrument whereby one binds himself, under penalty, to an act or forbearance (2 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 502; 6 Vt. 40), and sometimes in modern usage to all written contracts (22 Ohio St. 111).

——Absolute Obligation. One which gives no alternative to the obligor, but requires fulfillment according to the engagement.

——Accessory Obligation. One which is dependent on the principal obligation. For example, if I sell you a house and lot of ground, the principal obligation on my part is to make you a title for it; the accessory obligation is to deliver you all the title papers which I have relating to it, to take care of the estate till it is delivered to you, and the like.

——Alternative Obligation. Where a person engages to do or to give several things in such a manner that the payment of one will acquit him of all.

——Civil Obligation. One which has a binding operation in law, and which gives to the obligee the right of enforcing it in a court of justice. In other words, it is an engagement binding on the obligor. 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 197; 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 318, 337.

Civil obligations are divided into express and implied, pure and conditional, primitive and secondary, principal and accessory, absolute and alternative, determinate and indeterminate, divisible and indivisible, single and penal, and joint and several. They are also purely personal, purely real, or mixed.

——Conditional Obligation. One the execution of which is suspended by a condition which has not been accomplished, and subject to which it has been contracted.

——Determinate Obligation. One which has for its object a certain thing; as, an obligation to deliver a certain horse, named "Bucephalus." In this case, the obligation can only be discharged by delivering the identical horse.

——Divisible Obligation. One which, being a unit, may nevertheless be lawfully divided with or without the consent of the parties.

——Express or Conventional Obligations. Those by which the obligor binds himself in express terms to perform his obligation.

——Imperfect Obligations. Those which are not binding on us as between man and man, and for the nonperformance of which we are accountable to God only, such as charity or gratitude. In this sense, an obligation is a mere duty. Poth. Obl. art. prel. note 1.

——Implied Obligation. One which arises by operation of law; as, for example, if I send you daily a loaf of bread, without any express authority, and you make use of it in your family, the law raises an obligation on your part to pay me the value of the bread.

——Indeterminate Obligation. One where the obligor binds himself to deliver one of a certain species; as, to deliver a horse, where the delivery of any horse will discharge the obligation.

——Indivisible Obligation. One which is not susceptible of division; as, for example, if I promise to pay you one hundred dollars, you cannot assign one-half of this to another, so as to give him a right of action against me for his share. See "Divisible."

——Joint Obligation. One by which several obligors promise to the obligee to perform the obligation. When the obligation is only joint, and the obligors do not promise separately to fulfill their engagement, they must be all sued, if living, to compel the performance; or, if any be dead, the survivors must all be sued. See "Parties."

——Natural or Moral Obligation. One which cannot be enforced by action, but which is binding on the party who makes it in conscience and according to natural justice.

As, for instance, when the action is barred by the act of limitation, a natural obligation still subsists, although the civil obligation is extinguished. 5 Bin. (Pa.) 573. Although natural obligations cannot be enforced by action, they have the following effect: First, no suit will lie to recover back what has been paid or given in compliance with a natural obligation (1 Term R. 285; 1 Dall. [Pa.] 184); second, a natural obligation is a sufficient consideration for a new contract (2 Bin. [Pa.] 591; 5 Bin. [Pa.] 33; Yelv. 41a, note 1; Cowp. 290; 2 Bl. Comm. 445; 3 Bos. & P. 249, note; 2 East, 506; 3 Taunt. 311; 5 Taunt. 36; 3 Pick. [Mass.] 207; Chit. Cont. 10). See "Consideration."

——Penal Obligation. One to which is attached a penal clause, which is to be enforced if the principal obligation be not performed. See "Damages."

——Perfect Obligation. One which gives a right to another to require us to give him something, or not to do something. These obligations are either natural or moral, or they are civil.

——Personal Obligation. One by which the obligor binds himself to perform an act, without directly binding his property for its performance.

It also denotes an obligation in which the obligor binds himself only, not including his heirs or representatives.

——Primitive Obligation. This obligation, which, in one sense, may also be called a "principal obligation," is one which is contracted with a design that it should itself be the first fulfilled.

——Principal Obligation. One which is the most important object of the engagement of the contracting parties.

——Pure (or Simple) Obligation. One which is not suspended by any condition, either because it has been contracted without condition, or, having been contracted with one, it has been fulfilled.

——Real Obligation. One by which real estate, and not the person, is liable to the obligee for the performance.

A familiar example will explain this:

When an estate owes an easement as a right of way, it is the thing, and not the owner, who owes the easement. Another instance occurs when a person buys an estate which has been mortgaged, subject to the mortgage. He is not liable for the debt, though his estate is. In these cases the owner has an interest only because he is seised of the servient estate or the mortgaged premises, and he may discharge himself by abandoning or parting with the property. The obligation is both personal and real when the obligor has bound himself and pledged his estate for the fulfillment of his obligations.

——Secondary Obligation. One which is contracted and is to be performed in case the primitive cannot be. For example, if I sell you my house, I bind myself to give a title; but if I find I cannot, as the title is in another, then my secondary obligation is to pay you damages for my nonperformance of my obligation.

——Several Obligation. One by which one individual, or, if there be more, several individuals, bind themselves separately to perform the engagement. In this case, each obligor may be sued separately; and if one or more be dead, their respective executors may be sued. See "Parties."

——Single Obligation. One without any penalty; as, where I simply promise to pay you one hundred dollars. This is called a "single bill," when it is under seal.

OBLIGATION OF CONTRACT. The duty imposed by law on the parties to a contract to perform the same. 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 197.

The remedy by which the contract can be enforced is deemed a part of its obligation, within the constitutional prohibition of its impairment, to the extent that its adequacy must be maintained (47 N. Y. 157; 97 U. S. 293), but the mere form of the remedy (157 U. S. 219), or the rules of evidence (108 Mo. 303), are not.

OBLIGATORY WRITING. See "Writing Obligatory."

OBLIGEE. The person in favor of whom an obligation is contracted.

OBLIGOR. The person who has engaged to perform some obligation. Code La. art. 3522, No. 12. One who makes a bond.

OBLIQUUS (Lat.)

——In the Old Law of Descents. Oblique; cross; transverse; collateral. The opposite of rectus, right, or upright. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 7, § 2.

——In the Law of Evidence. Indirect; circumstantial. Vinn. Juris. Cont. lib. 4, c. 25.

OBLITERATION. The destruction of words in an instrument by erasure, blotting, or striking out. They need not be completely effaced. The term is most commonly applied to wills which may be revoked by obliteration. 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 6.

OBLOQUY. Censure; odium; reproach. See 70 Cal. 275.

OBRA (Spanish; from Lat. opera). In Spanish law. Work. Obras, works or trades; those which men carry on in houses or covered places. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 5, c. 3, § 6.

OBREPTIO (Lat. from obrepere, to creep upon). The obtaining a thing by fraud or surprise. Calv. Lex. Called, in Scotch law, "obreption."

OBREPTION. Acquisition of escheats, etc., from sovereign, by making false representations. Bell, Dict. "Subreption;" Calv. Lex.

OBROGARE (Lat. from ob, and rogare, to pass a law). In the civil law. To pass a law contrary to a former law, or to some clause of it; to change a former law in some part of it. Calv. Lex.; Tayl. Civ. Law, 155.

OBROGATION. The annulling a law, in whole or in part, by passing a law contrary to it; the alteration of a law. Vicat; Calv. Lex.

OBSCENITY. In criminal law. Such indecency as is calculated to promote the violation of the law and the general corruption of morals. It may consist in written or spoken words, conduct, pictures, or effigies. It need not be couched in obscene or vulgar terms if the idea conveyed tends to produce indecency. 16 Blatchf. (U. S.) 362.

OBSERVE. In civil law. To perform that which has been prescribed by some law or usage. Dig. 1. 3. 32.

OBSES (Lat.) In the law of war. A hostage. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 3, c. 20, § 52. Obsides, hostages. Id.; Magna Carta Johan. c. 49.

OBSESSUM (Lat. from obsidere, to besiege or block up). In the law of war. Besieged. Oppidum obsessum, a town besieged. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 3, c. 1, § 5; 1 Kent, Comm. 144.

OBSIGNARE (Lat.) In the civil law. To seal up, as money that had been tendered and refused. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 30, § 1007.

OBSOLETE. Fallen into disuse. A term applied to laws which, by change in conditions or subject matter, or by long neglect, have lost their efficacy without being repealed.

A positive statute, unrepealed, can never be repealed by nonuser alone. 4 Yeates (Pa.) 181, 215; 1 P. A. Browne (Pa. App.) 28; 13 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 447. The disuse of a law is at most only presumptive evidence that society has consented to such a repeal. However this presumption may operate on an unwritten law, it cannot, in general, act upon one which remains as a legislative act on the statute book, because no presumption can set aside a certainty. A written law may indeed become obsolete when the object to which it was intended to apply, or the occasion for which it was enacted, no longer exists. 1 P. A. Browne (Pa. App.) 28. "It must be a very strong case," says Chief Justice Tilghman, "to justify the court in deciding that an act standing on the statute book, unrepealed, is obsolete and invalid. I will not say that such case may not exist where there has been a nonuser for a great number of years, where, from a change of times and manners, an ancient sleeping statute would do great mischief if suddenly brought into action, where a long practice inconsistent with it has prevalled, and specially where, from other and later statutes, it might be inferred that in the apprehension of the legislature the old one was not in force." 13 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 452; Rutherforth, Inst. bk. 2, c. 6, § 19; Merlin, Repert. "Desuetude."

OBSTA PRINCIPIIS. Withstand or resist beginnings.

OBSTANTE. Withstanding; hindering. See "Non Obstante."

OBSTRICTION. Obligation; bond.

OBTEMPERANDUM EST CONSUETUDIni rationabili tanquam legi. A reasonable custom is to be obeyed like law. 4 Coke, 38.

OBTORTO COLLO (Lat.) In Roman law. Taking by the neck or collar; as a plaintiff was allowed to drag a reluctant defendant to court. Adams, Rom. Ant. 242; Gilb. For. Rom. 20.

OBTULIT SE (Lat. offered himself). In old practice. The emphatic words of entry on the record where one party offered himself in court against the other, and the iatter did not appear.. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 417.

OBVENTIO (Lat. obvenire, to fall in).

——In Civil Law. Rent or profit accruing from a thing, or from industry. It is generally used in the plural.

——In Old English Law. The revenue of spiritual living, so called. Cowell. Also, in the plural, offerings. 2 Inst. 661.

OCASION, or OCCASION (Spanish). In Spanish law. Accident. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 32, lib. 21; White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 9, c. 2.

OCCASIO (Law Lat.) In old English law. Molestation; trouble; hindrance; vexation by suit. Spelman; Carta de Foresta, c. 12; Barr. Obs. St. 38, 39, note (k).

OCCASIONARE (Law Lat.) In old practice. To trouble or molest; to vex or harass with litigation. Spelman; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 66, § 20; Cart. Conf. 49 Hen. III.

OCCASIONES (Law Lat.) In old English law. Assarts. Spelman.

OCCISION (Law Fr. from Lat. occisio, from occidere, to kill). A killing or slaying. Murdre est occision de home. Britt. c. 6.

OCCULTATIO (Lat.) In old English law. A hiding. Occultatio thesauri inventi fraudulosa, the fraudulent concealment of treasure trove. Bracton, fol. 119b; 3 Inst. 133.

OCCUPANCY. The taking possession of those things corporeal which are without an owner, with an intention of appropriating them to one's own use.

Pothier defines it to be the title by which one acquires property in a thing which belongs to nobody, by taking possession of it with design of acquiring it. Tr. du Dr. de Propriete, note 20. The Civil Code of Louisiana (article 3375), nearly following Pothier, defines occupancy to be "a mode of acquiring property by which a thing which belongs to nobody becomes the property of the person who took possession of it with an intention of acquiring a right of ownership in it."

Sometimes used in the sense of actual possession of things corporeal.

"Occupancy and possession, when applied to land, are synonymous." 21 Ill. 178.

A distinction is sometimes made in the use of "occupation" to indicate mere possession and "occupancy" for the acquirement of title by the taking of possession (Abbott), but it is not generally observed.

OCCUPANT, or OCCUPIER. One who has the actual use or possession of a thing. Occupancy implies the exclusion of every one else from enjoyment. 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 54.

Tenant in possession. 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 97, 101.

OCCUPANTIS FIUNT DERELICTA. Things abandoned become the property of the first occupant. 1 Pet. Adm. (U. S.) 53.

OCCUPARE (Lat.) In the civil law. To seize or take possession of; to enter upon a vacant possession; to take possession before another. Calv. Lex.

OCCUPATIO (Lat. from occupare, to occupy). In the civil law. A taking possession of a thing which before belonged to nobody (quod ante nullius est); as of wild beasts and other wild animals, property and persons captured in war, gems and other things found upon the seashore, etc. Inst. 2. 1. 12, 17. 18. See Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2.

OCCUPATION. See "Occupancy."

OCCUPAVIT (Lat.) In old practice. The name of a writ which lies to recover the possession of lands when they have been taken from the possession of the owner by occupation.

OCHIERN (Scotch; Law Lat. ogetharius). In old Scotch law. A name of dignity and of a freeholder. Skene de Verb. Sign.

OCHLOCRACY. A government where the authority is in the hands of the multitude; the abuse of a democracy. Vaumene, Dict. du Language Politique.

OCTABIS (Law Lat. from octo, eight). In old practice. The octave. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 35. See "Octave."

OCTAVE (Law Lat. utas). In old English practice. The eighth day inclusive after a feast. 3 Bl. Comm. 277.

OCTO TALES (Lat. eight such). If, when a trial at bar is called on, the number of jurors in attendance is too small, the trial must be adjourned, and a decem or octo tales awarded, according to the number deficient; as, at common law, namely, a writ to the sheriff to summon eight more such men as were originally summoned. 3 Bl. Comm. 364.

OCTROI (Fr.) In old French law. Originally, a duty, which, by the permission of the seigneur, any city was accustomed to collect on liquors and some other goods, brought within its precincts, for the consumption of the inhabitants. Afterwards appropriated to the use of the king. Steph. Lect. p. 361.

ODHALL RIGHT. The same as "allodial."

ODIO ET ATIA. See "De Odio et Atia."

ODIOSA ET INHONESTA NON SUNT IN lege praesumanda. Odious and dishonest acts are not presumed in law. Co. Litt. 78; 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 228, 231; 18 N. Y. 295, 300.

ODIOSA NON PRAESUMUNTUR. Odious things are not presumed. Burr. Sett. Cas. 190.

OECONOMICUS. An executor.

OECONOMUS (Lat.) In the civil law. A manager or administrator. Calv. Lex.

OEPS, or OES (Law Fr.) Use. A nostre oeps, to our use. Britt. c. 21; St. Westminster I. c. 48. A son oeps demesne. Dyer, 5. See "Opus."

OF COUNSEL. A term applied to the counsel employed by a party in a cause, or whose name appears upon the papers. Derived probably from the Latin a consiliis (q. v.) and expressed by the Law Latin de consilio (Law French de counsel). Dyer, 34b, 38. The modern phrase "of counsel for" a party was formerly expressed "of counsel with." "The counsellor should give his counsel to him with whom he is of counsel." 5 Coke, 20.

OF COURSE. A term applied to those acts in the course of a judicial proceeding which may be done without leave of court, or which will be granted by the court on application without inquiry.

OF NEW. A Scotch expression, closely translated from the Latin "de novo" (q. v.)

OFFA EXECRATA (Law Lat.) In old English law. The morsel of execration; the corsned (q. v.) 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 21.

OFFENSE. In criminal law. The doing that which a penal law forbids to be done, or omitting to do what it commands. In this sense, it is nearly synonymous with "crime." In a more confined sense, it may be considered as having the same meaning with "misdemeanor;" but it differs from it in this, that it is not indictable, but punishable summarily by the forfeiture of a penalty. 1 Chit. Prac. 14.

OFFICE. A right to exercise a function or employment, and take the fees and emoluments belonging to it. 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 149; 23 Ind. 449; 36 Miss. 273.

The term is ordinarily used with respect to the power conferred on individuals to exercise public functions, and in this connection "public office" is a more discriminating term. An "office" in this sense implies a delegation of a part of the sovereign power to an individual. See 3 Me. 481.

The office exists and survives as an entity apart from the incumbent (28 Cal. 382; 29 Ohio St. 347), but it has been said that the essence of the office is the power and jurisdiction of the officer (62 Pa. St. 343).

Offices are either civil or military. Civil offices are either executive, judicial, or legislative.

OFFICE COPY. A copy of a writing or record made and certified or authenticated by the officer legally intrusted with its custody or control. Such a copy is admissible in evidence to prove the original. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 507.

OFFICE FOUND.

——In English Law. When an inquisition is made to the king's use of anything, by virtue of office of him who inquires, and the inquisition is found, it is said to be "office found."

——In American Law. An action by the state or national government, or its proper officer, for the enforcement of escheat.

OFFICE GRANT. A conveyance made by a public officer in certain cases, where the owner is either unwilling or unable to execute the requisite deeds to pass title. See 3 Washb. Real Prop. *537.

OFFICER. The incumbent of an office. The term is ordinarily applied to the incumbent of a public office, though it may be otherwise applied, as to the officer of a corporation.

A public officer is one occupying a public office, to whom a portion of the sovereign power is delegated, and whose duties are continuous in their nature, and prescribed by law.

The distinction between an officer and a government employe is that the duties of the former are fixed by law, and not by contract. 22 Conn. 379; 36 Miss. 273; 42 N. Y. Super. Ct. 481.

——Executive Officers. Those whose duties are mainly to cause the laws to be executed. For example, the president of the United States of America, and the several governors of the different states, are executive officers. Their duties are pointed out in the national constitution, and in the constitutions of the several states.

——Legislative Officers. Those whose duties relate mainly to the enactment of laws, such as members of congress and of the several state legislatures.

These officers are confined in their duties, by the constitution, generally to make laws; though sometimes, in cases of impeachment, one of the houses of the legislature exercises judicial functions somewhat similar to those of a grand jury, by presenting to the other articles of impeachment, and the other house acts as a court in trying such impeachments. The legislatures have, besides, the power to inquire into the conduct of their members, judge of their elections, and the like.

——Judicial Officers. Those whose duties are to decide controversies between individuals, and accusations made in the name of the public against persons charged with a violation of the law.

——Ministerial Officers. Those whose duty it is to execute the mandates, lawfully issued, of their superiors.

——Military Officers. Those who have command in the army.

——Naval Officers. Those who are in command in the navy.

OFFICER DE FACTO. One whose acts, though not those of a lawful officer, the law upon principles of policy and justice will hold valid so far as they involve the interests of the public and third persons, where the duties of the office were exercised, (1) without a known appointment or election, but under such circumstances of reputation or acquiescence as were calculated to induce people, without inquiry, to submit to or invoke his action, supposing him to be the officer he assumed to be; (2) under color of a known and valid appointment or election, but where the officer had failed to conform to some precedent requirement or condition, as to take an oath, give a bond, or the like; (3) under color of a known election or appointment void because the officer was not eligible, or because there was a want of power in the electing or appointing body, or, by reason of some defect or irregularity in its exercise, such ineligibility, want of power or defect, being unknown to the public; (4) under color of an election or appointment by or pursuant to a public unconstitutional law before the same is adjudged to be such. 38 Conn. 449.

The most generally accepted of the short definitions of the term is that of Lord Ellenborough: "An officer de facto is one who has the reputation of being the officer he assumes to be, and yet is not a good officer in point of law." 6 East, 356.

OFFICER DE JURE. One having the legal right to an office; generally applied to such officers when not in possession of the office.

OFFICIA JUDICIALIA NON CONCEDANtur antequam vacent. Judicial offices ought not to be granted before they are vacant. 11 Coke, 4.

OFFICIA MAGISTRATUS NON DEBENT esse venalia. The offices of magistrates ought not to be sold. Co. Litt. 234.

OFFICIAL. An officer (q. v.)

——In Old Civil Law. The person who was the minister of, or attendant upon, a magistrate.

——In Canon Law. The person to whom the bishop generally commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction bears this name. Wood, Inst. 30, 505; Merlin, Repert.

OFFICIAL BOND. The bond of a public officer; though more loosely it is often applied to any bond legally required of one exercising a given function, e. g., an executor's or trustee's bond.

OFFICIAL USE. An active use. Wharton.

OFFICIARIIS NON FACIENDIS VEL amovendis. A writ addressed to the magistrates of a corporation, requiring them not to make such a man an officer, or to put one out of the office he has until inquiry is made of his manners, etc. Reg. Orig. 126.

OFFICINA JUSTITIAE. The workshop or office of justice.

——In English Law. The chancery is so called, because all writs issue from it, under the great seal, returnable into the courts of common law. See "Court of Chancery."

OFFICIOUS WILL. A testament by which a testator leaves his property to his family. Sandars, Just. Inst. 207. See "Inofficious Testament."

OFFICIT CONATUS SI EFFECTUS SEQuatur. The attempt becomes of consequence, if the effect follows.

OFFICIUM NEMINI DEBET ESSE DAMnosum. An office ought to be injurious to no one. Bell, Dict.

OIR (Spanish; from Lat. audire, to hear). In Spanish law. To hear; to take cognizance. White, New Recop. bk. 3, tit. 1, c. 7.

OLD STYLE. See "New Style."

OLD TENURES. The title of a small tract, which, as its title denotes, contains an account of the various tenures by which land was holden in the reign of Edward III. This tract was published in 1719, with notes and additions, with the eleventh edition of the First Institutes, and reprinted in 8vo, in 1764, by Serjeant Hawkins, in a Selection of Coke's Law Tracts.

OLERON, LAWS OF. A maritime code promulgated by Eleanor, duchess of Guienne, mother of Richard I., at the Isle of Oleron,—whence their name. They were modified and enacted in England under Richard I., and again promulgated under Henry III. and Edward III., and are constantly quoted in proceedings before the admiralty courts, as are also the Rhodian Laws. Co. Litt. 2. See Code, § 25.

OLIGARCHY (Gr. the government of a few). A name given to designate the power which a few citizens of a state have usurped, which ought by the constitution to reside in the people. Among the Romans, the government degenerated several times into an oligarchy; for example, under the decemvirs, when they became the only magistrates in the commonwealth.

OLOGRAPH. A term which signifies that an instrument is wholly written by the party from whom it emanates. See Civ. Code La. art. 1581; Civ. Code, 970; 5 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 357; 1 Stuart, K. B. 327; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2139.

OM, or OMME (Law Fr.) Man; a man or person. Corrupted forms of "home" (q. v.) Kelham.

OME BUENO (Spanish). In Spanish law. A good man; a substantial person. Las. Partidas, pt. 5, tit. 13, lib. 38.

OMISSIO (Lat. from omittere). Omission; a leaving out.

OMISSIO EORUM QUAE TACITE INsunt nihil operatur. The omission of those things which are silently expressed is of no consequence. 2 Bulst. 131.

OMISSION. Neglect to perform an act required by law.

OMISSIS OMNIBUS ALIIS NEGOTIIS (Lat.) Laying aside all other businesses. 9 East, 347.

OMNE ACTUM AB INTENTIONE AGENtis est judicandum. Every act is to be estimated by the intention of the doer. Branch, Princ.

OMNE CRIMEN EBRIETAS ET INCENdit et detegit. Drunkenness inflames and reveals every crime. Co. Litt. 247.

OMNE JUS AUT CONSENSUS FECIT, aut necessitas constituit, aut firmavit consuetudo. All law has either been derived from the consent of the people, established by necessity, or confirmed by custom. Dig. 1. 3. 40; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 616, note.

OMNE MAGIS DIGNUM TRAHIT AD SE minus dignum sit antiquius. Every worthier thing draws to it the less worthy, though the latter be more ancient. Co. Litt. 355.

OMNE MAGNUM EXEMPLUM HABET aliquid ex iniquo, quod publica utilitate compensatur. Every great example has some portion of evil, which is compensated by its public utility. Hob. 279.

OMNE MAJUS CONTINET IN SE MInus. The greater contains in itself the less. 5 Coke, 115a; Wingate, Max. 206; Story, Ag. § 172; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 173.

OMNE MAJUS DIGNUM CONTINET IN se minus dignum. The more worthy contains in itself the less worthy. Co. Litt. 143.

OMNE MAJUS MINUS IN SE COMPLECItur. Every greater embraces in itself the minor. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 208.

OMNE PRINCIPALE TRAHIT AD SE accessorium. Every principal thing draws to itself the accessory. 17 Mass. 425; 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 580.

OMNE QUOD INAEDIFICATUR SOLO cedit. Everything belongs to the soil which is built upon it. Dig. 41. 1. 7. 10; Id. 47. 3. 1; Inst. 2. 1. 29; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 355; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 12.

OMNE SACRAMENTUM DEBET ESSE de certa scientia. Every oath ought to be founded on certain knowledge. 4 Inst. 279.

OMNE TESTAMENTUM MORTE CONsummatum est. Every will is consummated by death. 3 Coke, 29b; 4 Coke, 61b; 2 Bl. Comm. 500; Shep. Touch. 401.

OMNES LICENTIAM HABERE HIS QUAE pro se indulta sunt, renunciare. All shall have liberty to renounce those things which have been established in their favor. Code, 2. 3. 29; Id. 1. 3. 51; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 625.

OMNES PRUDENTES, ILLA ADMITTERE solent quae probantur iis qui in arte sua bene versati sunt. All prudent men are accustomed to admit those things which are approved by those who are well versed in the art. 7 Coke, 19.

OMNES SORORES SUNT QUASI UNUS haeres de una haereditate. All sisters are, as it were, one heir to one inheritance. Co. Litt. 67.

OMNIA DELICTA IN APERTO LEVIORA sunt. All crimes committed openly are considered lighter. 8 Coke, 127.

OMNIA PERFORMAVIT (Lat. he has done all). In pleading. A good plea in bar where all the covenants are in the affirmative. 1 Me. 189.

OMNIA PRAESUMUNTUR CONTRA spoliatorem. All things are presumed against a wrongdoer. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 843.

OMNIA PRAESUMUNTUR LEGITIME facta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to be done legitimately until the contrary is proved. Co. Litt. 232.

OMNIA PRAESUMUNTUR RITE ESSE acta. All things are presumed to be done in due form. Co. Litt. 6.

OMNIA PRAESUMUNTUR RITE ET SOlemniter esse acta. All things are presumed to have been rightly and regularly done. Co. Litt. 232b; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 847; 12 C. B. 788; 3 Exch. 191; 6 Exch. 716. Omnia rite esse acta praesumuntur. 11 Cush. (Mass.) 441; 2 Ohio St. 246, 247; 4 Ohio St. 148; 6 Ohio St. 293.

OMNIA PRAESUMUNTUR RITE ET SOlemniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium. All things are presumed to have been done regularly and with due formality until the contrary is proved. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 157, 849; 3 Bing. 381; 2 Campb. 44; 1 Cromp. & M. 461; 17 C. B. 183; 5 Barn. & Adol. 550; 12 Mees. & W. 251; 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 69, 70.

OMNIA PRAESUMUNTUR SOLEMNITER esse acta. All things are presumed to have been done rightly. Co. Litt. 6.

OMNIA QUAE JURE CONTRAHUNTUR, contrario jure pereunt. Obligations contracted under a law are destroyed by a law to the contrary. Dig. 50. 17. 100.

OMNIA QUAE SUNT UXORIS SUNT ipsius viri. All things which are the wife's belong to the husband. Co. Litt. 112; 2 Kent, Comm. 130, 143.

OMNIBUS AD QUOS PRAESENTES literae pervenerint, salutem. To all to whom the present letters shall come, greeting. A form of address with which charters and deeds were anciently commenced.

OMNIS ACTIO EST LOQUELA. Every action is a complaint. Co. Litt. 292.

OMNIS CONCLUSIO BONI ET VERI JUdicii sequitur ex bonis et veris praemissis et dictis juratorum. Every conclusion of a good and true judgment arises from good and true premises, and the verdicts of jurors. Co. Litt. 226.

OMNIS CONSENSUS TOLLIT ERRORem. Every consent removes error. 2 Inst. 123.

OMNIS DEFINITIO IN JURE CIVILI periculosa est, parum est enim ut non subverti possit. Every definition in the civil law is dangerous, for there is very little that cannot be overthrown. There is no rule in the civil law which is not liable to some exception; and the least difference in the facts of the case renders its application useless. Dig. 50. 17. 202; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 196.

OMNIS DEFINITIO IN JURE PERICULOsa est; parum est enim ut non subverti posset. Every definition in law is perilous, for it is within an ace of being subverted. Dig. 50. 17. 202; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 196.

OMNIS EXCEPTIO EST IPSA QUOQUE regula. An exception is in itself also a rule.

OMNIS INDEMNATUS PRO INNOXIS legibus habetur. Every uncondemned person is held by the law as innocent. Lofft, 121.

OMNIS INNOVATIO PLUS NOVITATE perturbat quam utilitate prodest. Every innovation disturbs more by its novelty than it benefits by its utility. 2 Bulst. 338; 1 Salk. 20.

OMNIS INTERPRETATIO SI FIERI POtest ita fienda est in instrumentis, ut omnes contrarietates amoveantur. The interpretation of instruments is to be made, if they will admit of it, so that all contradictions may be removed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 96.

OMNIS INTERPRETATIO VEL DECLARat, vel extendit, vel restringit. Every interpretation either declares, extends, or restrains.

OMNIS NOVA CONSTITUTIO FUTURIS formam imponere debet, non praeteritis. Every new statute ought to prescribe a form to future, not to past, acts. Bracton, fol. 228; 2 Inst. 95.

OMNIS PERSONA EST HOMO, SED NON vicissim. Every person is a man, but not every man a person. Calv. Lex.

OMNIS PRIVATIO PRAESUPPONIT habitum. Every privation presupposes former enjoyment. Co. Litt. 339.

OMNIS QUERELA ET OMNIS ACTIO INjuriarum limitata est infra certa tempora. Every plaint and every action for injuries is limited within certain times. Co. Litt. 114.

OMNIS RATIHABITIO RETRO TRAHItur et mandato aequiparatur. Every subsequent ratification has a retrospective effect, and is equivalent to a prior command. Co. Litt. 207a; Story, Ag. (4th Ed.) 102; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 715; 2 Bouv. Inst. 25; 4 Bouv. Inst. 26; 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 363; 7 Exch. 726; 10 Exch. 845; 9 C. B. 532, 607; 14 C. B. 53.

OMNIS REGULA SUAS PATITUR EXceptiones. Every rule of law is liable to its own exceptions.

OMNIUM (Lat.) In mercantile law. A term used to express the aggregate value of the different stocks in which a loan is usually funded. 2 Esp. 361; 7 Term R. 630.

OMNIUM CONTRIBUTIONE SARCIAtur quod pro omnibus datum est. What is given for all shall be compensated for by the contribution of all. 4 Bing. 121; 2 Marsh. 309.

OMNIUM RERUM QUARUM USUS EST, potest esse abusus, virtute solo excepta. There may be an abuse of everything of which there is a use, virtue only excepted. Dav. 79.

ON ACCOUNT OF WHOM IT MAY CONcern, or For whom it may concern. A clause in policies of insurance, under which all are insured who have an insurable interest at the time of effecting the insurance, and who were then contemplated by the party effecting the insurance. 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 30.

ON CALL. On demand. 22 Grat. (Va.) 609.

ON DEMAND. When requested. A promissory note payable "on demand" is payable immediately without demand, i. e., is always due.

ONCE IN JEOPARDY. See "Jeopardy."

ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUNDS clause. A precautionary stipulation inserted in a deed making a good tenant to the praecipe in a common recovery. See 1 Prest. Conv. 110.

ONERANDO PRO RATA PORTIONIS. A writ that lay for a joint tenant or tenant in common who was distrained for more rent than his proportion of the land comes to. Reg. Orig. 182.

ONERARI NON (Lat. ought not to be burdened). In pleading. The name of a plea by which the defendant says that he ought not to be charged. It is used in an action of debt. 1 Saund. 290, note (a).

ONERATUR NISI. See "O. Ni."

ONERIS FERENDI (Lat. of bearing a burden). In civil law. The name of a servitude by which the wall or pillar of one house is bound to sustain the weight of the buildings of the neighbor.

The owner of the servient building is bound to repair and keep it sufficiently strong for the weight it has to bear. Dig. 8. 2. 23; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1627.

ONEROUS. A contract, lease, share, or other right is said to be "onerous" when the obligations attaching to it counterbalance or exceed the advantage to be derived from it, either absolutely or with reference to the particular possessor. Rapalje & L.

ONEROUS CAUSE. In civil law. A valuable consideration.

ONEROUS CONTRACT. In civil law. One made for a consideration given or promised, however small. Civ. Code La. art. 1767.

ONEROUS DEED. In Scotch law. A deed given for valuable consideration. Bell, Dict. See "Consideration."

ONEROUS GIFT. The gift of a thing subject to certain charges imposed by the giver on the donee. Poth. Obl.

ONOMASTIC. A term applied to a signature which is in a different handwriting from the body of the instrument. 2 Benth. Jud. Ev. 460, 461.

ONUS PROBANDI (Lat.) In evidence. The burden of proof.

OPE CONSILIO (Lat.) By aid and counsel. A civil law term applied to accessaries, similar in import to the "aiding and abetting" of the common law. Often written "ope et consilio."

OPEN A CREDIT. To accept or pay the draft of a correspondent who has not furnished funds. Pardessus, note 296.

OPEN ACCOUNT. A running or unsettled account.

OPEN CORPORATION. One in which all members have a vote to choose officers, as distinguished from a "close corporation," wherein the officers fill vacancies. 3 Bland, Ch. (Md.) 416, note.

The latter term in common use means that all stock is closely held, usually by a few persons, so that no one else can, by purchase of shares, obtain a voice in the policy of the corporation.

OPEN COURT. A court formally opened and engaged in the transaction of all judicial functions.

A court to which all persons have free access as spectators while they conduct themselves in an orderly manner.

The term is used in the first sense as distinguishing a court from a judge sitting in chambers or informally for the transaction of such matters as may be thus transacted. See "Chambers;" "Court."

In the second sense, all courts in the United States are open; but in England, formerly, while the parties and probably their witnesses were admitted freely in the courts, all other persons were required to pay in order to obtain admittance. St. 13 Edw. I. cc. 42, 44; Barr. Obs. St. 126, 127. See Princ. Pen. Law, 165.

OPEN DOORS. In Scotch law. "Letters of open doors" are process which empower the messenger or officer of the law to break open doors of houses or rooms in which the debtor has placed his goods. Bell, Dict.

OPEN LAW. The trial by duel or ordeal. See "Lex Manifesta."

OPEN POLICY. An open policy is one in which the amount of the interest of the insured is not fixed by the policy, and is to be ascertained in case of loss. See "Policy."

OPEN THEFT. In Saxon law The same with the Latin furtum manifestum (q. v.)

OPENING.

——In American Practice. The beginning; the commencement; the first address of the counsel. The opening is made immediately upon the impanelling of the jury. It embraces the reading of such of the pleadings as may be necessary, and a brief outline of the case as the party expects to prove it, where there is a trial, or of the argument, where it is addressed to the court.

——In English Practice. The address made immediately after the evidence is closed. Such address usually states, first, the full extent of the plaintiff's claims, and the circumstances under which they are made, to show that they are just and reasonable; second, at least an outline of the evidence by which those claims are to be established; third, the legal grounds and authorities in favor of the claim or of the proposed evidence; fourth, an anticipation of the expected defense, and statement of the grounds on which it is futile, either in law or justice, and the reasons why it ought to fail. But the court will sometimes restrict counsel from an anticipation of the defense. 3 Chit. Prac. 881; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3044 et seq.

OPENING A COMMISSION. An entering upon the duties under a commission, or commencing to act under a commission, is so termed. Thus, the judges of assize and nisi prius derive their authority to act under or by virtue of commissions directed to them for that purpose; and, when they commence acting under the powers so committed to them, they are said to open the commissions; and the day on which they so commence their proceedings is thence termed the "commission day of the assizes." Brown.

OPENING A JUDGMENT. Taking off the bar of finality so as to permit the reconsideration of the judgment and of the cause on which it was founded. It does not abrogate the judgment, as does "vacation of judgment."

OPENING A POLICY OF INSURANCE. The question has been made whether, and in what cases, if any, the valuation in a valued policy shall be opened. The valuation, being a part of the agreement of the parties, is not to be set aside as between them in any case. The question is, how shall it be treated where only a part of the subject insured and valued is put at a risk, and also in the settlement of a particular average? and the answer is the same in both cases, viz., when the proportion or rate per centum put at risk or loss is ascertained, the agreed valuation of the whole is to be applied to the part put at risk, or the proportion lost, pro rata. 2 Phil. Ins. 1203.

OPENING A RULE. The act of restoring or recalling a rule which has been made absolute to its conditional state, as a rule nisi, so as to readmit of cause being shown against the rule. Thus, when a rule to show cause has been made absolute under a mistaken impression that no counsel had been instructed to show cause against it, it is usual for the party at whose instance the rule was obtained to consent to have the rule opened, by which all the proceedings subsequent to the day when cause ought to have been shown against it are in effect nullified, and the rule is then argued in the ordinary way. Brown.

OPENING BIDDINGS. Ordering a resale. When estates are sold under decree of equity to the highest bidder, the court will, on notic of an offer of a sufficient advance on the price obtained, open the biddings, i. e., order a resale; but this will not generally be done after the confirmation of the certificate of the highest bidder. So, by analogy, a resale has been ordered of an estate sold under bankruptcy. Sugd. Vend. 90; 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 167; 8 Md. 322; 9 Md. 228; 13 Grat. (Va.) 639; 4 Wis. 242; 31 Miss. 514.

OPENING THE PLEADINGS. Making an opening statement to the jury of the issues at the beginning of a trial.

OPERARIUS (Law Lat. from opus, work). In old English law. A workman or laborer. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 73, § 4.

OPERATION OF LAW. A term applied to indicate the manner in which a party acquires rights without any act of his own, as, the right to an estate of one who dies intestate is cast upon the heir at law, by operation of law. When a lessee for life enfeoffs him in reversion, or when the lessee and lessor join in a feoffment, or when a lessee for life or years accepts a new lease or demise from the lessor, there is a surrender of the first lease by operation of law. 5 Barn. & C. 269; 9 Barn. & C. 298; 2 Barn. & Adol. 119; 5 Taunt. 518. See "Descent;" "Purchase."

OPERATIVE. A workman; one employed to perform labor for another. See 2 Cush. (Mass.) 371.

OPERATIVE PART. In a written instrument, that which carries out the main object of the instrument, as distinguished from the recitals, formal conclusion, etc. Sometimes everything that follows the recitals is called the operative part.

OPERATIVE WORDS. Those by which the purpose of an instrument is effected. Generally applied to those words in a deed by which an estate is passed, viz., "grant," "quitclaim," "demise," "bargain and sell," etc.

OPERIS NOVI NUNTIATIO. In the civil law. A protest or warning against (of) a new work. Dig. 39. 1.

OPINIO EST DUPLEX, SCILICET, opinio vulgaris, orta inter graves et discretos, et quae vultum veritatis habet, et opinio tantum orta inter leves et vulgares homines, absque specie veritatis. Opinion is of two kinds, namely, common opinion, which springs up among grave and discreet men, and which has the appearance of truth, and opinion which springs up only among light and foolish men, without the semblance of truth. 4 Coke, 107.

OPINIO QUAE FAVET TESTAMENTO est tenenda. That opinion is to be followed which favors the will.

OPINION.

——In Evidence. An inference or conclusion stated by a witness, as distinguished from a statement of matters of fact.

——In Practice. The statement of reasons delivered by a judge or court for giving the judgment which is pronounced upon a case. The judgment itself is sometimes called an opinion, and sometimes the opinion is spoken of as the judgment of the court.

A declaration, usually in writing, made by a counsel to his client of what the law is, according to his judgment, on a statement of facts submitted to him.

An opinion is in both the above cases a decision of what principles of law are to be applied in the particular case, with the difference that judicial opinions pronounced by the court are law and of authority, while the opinions of counsel, however eminent, are merely advice to his client or argument to the court.

OPORTET (Lat.) It behooves; it is needful or necessary. Oportebit (the future form) had, in the civil law, the sense of oportet. Dig. 50. 16. 8. And as to the meaning of oportere, see Dig. 50. 16.

OPORTET QUOD CERTA RES DEDUCAtur in donationem. It is necessary that a certain thing be brought into the gift, or made the subject of the conveyance. Bracton, fol. 15b.

OPORTET QUOD CERTA RES DEDUCAtur in judicium. A thing, to be brought to judgment, must be certain or definite. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 84; Bracton, fol. 15b.

OPORTET QUOD CERTA SIT RES quae venditur. A thing, to be sold, must be certain or definite.

OPORTET QUOD CERTAE PERSONAE, terrae, et certi status, comprehendantur in declaratione usuum. It is necessary that certain persons, lands, and estates be comprehended in a declaration of uses. 9 Coke, 9.

OPP'. A contraction of obtulit or optulit, in the old books. A. opp' see versus B. quarto die, A. offered himself against B. on the fourth day. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 11; Id. c. 67, § 2.

OPPIDUM (Lat.) A town. Dig. 50. 16. 239. 7.

OPPIGNERARE (Lat.) In the civil law. To pledge. Calv. Lex.

OPPOSER (Law Lat. oppositor). In old English law. An officer in the court of exchequer. See "Foreign Apposer." Sometimes treated as a corrupted form of apposer (q. v.), but there are good reasons for considering it as the genuine word.

OPPOSITA JUXTA SE POSITA MAGIS elucescunt. Opposites placed next each other appear in a clearer light. 4 Bac. Works, 256, 258, 353.

OPPOSITION. In bankruptcy practice. The act of a creditor who declares his dissent to a debtor's being discharged under the bankrupt laws.

OPPRESSION. The act of an officer in inflicting upon any person, with improper motive, any bodily harm, imprisonment, or other injury, not constituting extortion. Steph. Dig. art. 119; 4 Q. B. 475.

OPTIMA ENIM EST LEGIS INTERPRES consuetudo. Usage is the best interpreter of law. 2 Inst. 18; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 823.

OPTIMA EST LEX, QUAE MINIMUM relinquit arbitrio judicis. That is the best system of law which confides as little as possible to the discretion of the judge. Bac. Aph. 46.

OPTIMA STATUTI INTERPRETATRIX est (omnibus particulis ejusdem inspectis) ipsum statutum. The best interpretress of a statute is (all the separate parts being considered) the statute itself. 8 Coke, 117; Wingate, Max. 239, max. 68.

OPTIMAM ESSE LEGEM, QUAE MINImum relinquit arbitrio judicis; id quod certitudo ejus praestat. That law is the best which leaves the least discretion to the judge; and this is an advantage which results from its certainty. Bac. Aph. 8.

OPTIMUS INTERPRES RERUM USUS. Usage is the best interpreter of things. 2 Inst. 282.

OPTIMUS INTERPRETANDI MODUS est sic legis interpretare ut leges legibus accordant. The best mode of interpreting laws is to make them accord. 8 Coke, 169.

OPTIMUS JUDEX, QUI MINIMUM SIBI. He is the best judge who relies as little as possible on his own discretion. Bac. Aph. 46.

OPTIMUS LEGUM INTERPRES CONsuetudo. Custom is the best interpreter of laws. 4 Inst. 75; 2 Pars. Cont. 53.

OPTION. A right of choice or election. Sometimes applied specifically to contracts whereby one purchases the right for a certain time, at his election, to demand and receive or to deliver property at a stated price. See "Gambling Contract."

OPTIONAL WRIT. An original writ in the alternative, commanding either to do a thing, or show cause why it has not been done. 3 Bl. Comm. 274; Finch, Law, 257.

OPTULIT. An old form of obtulit, used in Bracton. Bracton, fols. 354, 354b.

OPUS (Lat. and Law Lat.) In civil and old English law. Work; labor; benefit; advantage. This word seems to have been framed from the Law French oeps (q. v.) A thing made or done by labor.

OPUS LOCATUM (Lat.) In civil law. A work, i. e., the result of work, let to another to be used. A work, i. e., something to be completed by work, hired to be done by another. Vicat, "Opus," "Locare;" L. 51, § 1, D. "Locat.;" L. 1, § 1, D. ad leg. Rhod.

OPUS MAGNIFICIUM (or MANIFICIUM) (from Lat. opus, work; manus, hand). In old English law. Manual labor. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 48, § 3.

OPUS NOVUM. In civil law. A new work. A new (i. e., late or recent) construction on land, or alteration in works already there. Dig. 39. 1. 1. 11.

OR. Ordinarily a disjunctive particle. To further the intent of the parties, however, it has often been construed as conjunctive. 98 U. S. 143; 30 Ohio St. 407; 36 Wis. 466; 3 Gill (Md.) 492; 1 Yeates (Pa.) 316; 14 Daly (N. Y.) 361.

It is sometimes used also to introduce a synonymous or further expression in explanation of what precedes. 91 U. S. 362; 8 Mass. 59.

ORACULUM (Lat.) In civil law. The name of a kind of decision given by the Roman emperors.

ORAL. Spoken, in contradistinction to written; as, oral evidence, which is evidence delivered verbally by a witness.

ORANDO PRO REGE ET REGNO. An ancient writ which issued, while there was no standing collect for a sitting parliament, to pray for the peace and good government of the realm.

ORATOR.

——In Chancery Practice. The party who files a bill.

——In Roman Law. An advocate. Code, 1. 3. 33. 1.

ORATRIX. The feminine form of "orator."

ORCINUS LIBERTUS (Lat.) In Roman law. A freedman who obtained his liberty by the direct operation of the will or testament of his deceased master was so called, being the freedman of the deceased (orcinus), not of the haeres. Brown.

ORDAIN. To ordain is to make an ordinance, to enact a law.

The preamble to the constitution of the United States declares that the people "do ordain and establish this constitution for the United States of America." The third article of the same constitution declares that "the judicial power shall be vested in one supreme court, and in such inferior courts as the congress may from time to time ordain and establish." See 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 304, 324; 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 316, 402.

ORDEAL. An ancient superstitious mode of trial.

When in a criminal case the accused was arraigned, he might select the mode of trial either by God and his country,—that is, by jury,—or by God only,—that is, by ordeal.

The trial by ordeal was either by fire or by water. Those who were tried by the former passed barefooted and blindfolded over nine hot, glowing ploughshares, or were to carry burning irons in their hands, and accordingly as they escaped or not they were acquitted or condemned. The water ordeal was performed either in hot or cold water. In cold water, the parties suspected were adjudged innocent if their bodies were not borne up by the water contrary to the course of nature; and if, after putting their bare arms or legs into scalding water, they came out unhurt, they were taken to be innocent of the crime. It was supposed that God would, by the mere contrivance of man, exercise his power in favor of the innocent. 4 Bl. Comm. 342; 2 Am. Jur. 280. For a detailed account of the trial by ordeal, see Herbert, Ant. Inns of Court, 146.

ORDEFFE. A liberty whereby one claims ore found on his own land.

ORDENAMIENTO (Spanish). In Spanish law. An order emanating from the sovereign, and differing from a cedula only in form, and in the mode of its promulgation. Schmidt, Civ. Law, Introd. 93, note.

ORDENAMIENTO DE ALCALA (Spanish). A collection of Spanish law, promulgated by the Cortes in the year 1348. Schmidt, Civ. Law, Introd. 75.

ORDER. Command; direction.

An informal bill of exchange or letter of request requiring the party to whom it is addressed to deliver property of the person making the order to some one therein described.

A designation of the person to whom a bill of exchange or negotiable promissory note is to be paid.

This order, in the case of negotiable paper, is usually by indorsement, and may be either express, as, "Pay to C. D.," or implied merely, as by writing A. B. (the payee's name). See "Indorsement."

——In French Law. The act by which the rank of preferences of claims, among creditors who have liens over the price which arises out of the sale of an immovable subject, is ascertained. Dalloz.

——In Governmental Law. By this expression is understood the several bodies which compose the state. In ancient Rome, for example, there were three distinct orders, namely, that of the senators, that of the patricians, and that of the plebeians. In the United States there are no orders of men; all men are equal in the eye of the law. See "Rank."

ORDER NISI. A conditional order, which is to be confirmed unless something be done, which has been required, by a time specified. Eden, Inj. 122. See "Nisi."

ORDER OF FILIATION. The judgment rendered in a bastardy proceeding, whereby a certain man is adjudged the father of a bastard child.

ORDERS OF THE DAY. Any member of the English house of commons who wishes to propose any question, or to "move the house," as it is termed, must, in order to give the house due notice of his intention, state the form or nature of his motion on a previous day, and have it entered in a book termed the "order book;" and the motions so entered, the house arranges, shall be considered on particular days, and such motions or matters, when the day arrives for their being considered, are then termed the "orders of the day." Brown; May, Parl. Prac.

ORDINANCE.

——In Modern Usage. A law passed by the legislative body of a municipal corporation for the government of such municipality. 117 Ind. 221.

——In Old Law. The term was applied to laws of other than municipal bodies.

The following account of the difference between a statute and an ordinance is extracted from Bac. Abr. "Statute" (A): "Where the proceeding consisted only of a petition from parliament and an answer from the king, these were entered on the parliament roll; and if the matter was of a public nature, the whole was then styled an 'ordinance.' If, however, the petition and answer were not only of a public, but a novel, nature, they were then formed into an act by the king, with the aid of his council and judges, and entered on the statute roll." See Co. Litt. 159b, Butler's note; 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 146.

According to Lord Coke, the difference between a statute and an ordinance is that the latter has not had the assent of the king, lords, and commons, but is made merely by two of these powers. 4 Inst. 25. See Barr. Obs. St. 41, note (x).

It is distinguished from a "resolution" by the same body by the fact that an ordinance prescribes a permanent rule of government, while a resolution is of a temporary character. 11 Ohio St. 96; 114 Ind. 336.

Certain enactments in the nature of constitutions have also been referred to as ordinances, as, for example, the "ordinance for the government of the Northwest Territory," passed by congress in 1787.

ORDINANCE OF THE FOREST. In English law. A statute made touching matters and causes of the forest. 33 & 34 Edw. I.

ORDINANDI LEX. The law of procedure, as distinguished from the substantial part of the law.

ORDINARIUS ITA DICITUR QUIA HAbet ordinariam jurisdictionem, in jure proprio, et non propter deputationem. The ordinary is so called because he has an ordinary jurisdiction in his own right, and not a deputed one. Co. Litt. 96.

ORDINARY. In ecclesiastical law. An officer who has original jurisdiction in his own right, and not by deputation.

In England, the ordinary is an officer who has immediate jurisdiction in ecclesiastical causes. Co. Litt. 344.

In the United States, the ordinary possesses, in those states where such officer exists, powers vested in him by the constitution and acts of the legislature. In South Carolina, the ordinary is a judicial officer. 1 Const. (S. C.) 267; 2 Const. (S. C.) 384.

ORDINARY CARE. Such a degree of care, skill and diligence as men of ordinary prudence, under similar circumstances, usually employ (31 Pa. St. 512; 3 Mass. 132; 2 Wis. 316; 23 Conn. 443; 28 Vt. 150; 9 N. Y. 416), and is to be determined with reference to all the attendant circumstances of the transaction (35 N. Y. 27; 47 Super. Ct. 292, 296).

ORDINARY CONVEYANCES. Those deeds of transfer which are entered into between two or more persons, without an assurance in a superior court of justice.

ORDINARY COURSE OF BUSINESS. The rules or questions prevailing in business generally, or in a particular business. See 14 Q. B. Div. 386.

ORDINARY DILIGENCE. The degree which men of ordinary prudence generally exercise.

ORDINARY NEGLIGENCE. Absence of ordinary care (q. v.)

ORDINARY OF ASSIZE AND SESSIONS. In old English law. A deputy of the bishop of the diocese, anciently appointed to give malefactors their neck verses, and judge whether they read or not; also to perform divine services for them, and assist in preparing them for death. Wharton.

ORDINARY OF NEWGATE. The clergyman who is attendant upon condemned malefactors in that prison to prepare them for death. He records the behavior of such persons. Formerly it was the custom of the ordinary to publish a small pamphlet upon the execution of any remarkable criminal. Wharton.

ORDINARY SKILL. Such skill as a person conversant with the matter undertaken might be reasonably supposed to have. 11 Mees. & W. 113; 20 Mart. (La.) 68, 75; 1 H. Bl. 158, 161; 6 Ga. 213, 219; 8 B. Mon. (Ky.) 515; 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 380; 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 211; 4 Burrows, 2060; 3 Campb. 17, 19; 7 Car. & P. 289; 6 Bing. 460; 2 Bing. (N. C.) 625; 16 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 368; 15 Mass. 316; 15 Pick. (Mass.) 440; 2 Cush. (Mass.) 316; 8 Car. & P. 479; 3 Campb. 451; 4 Barn. & C. 345.

ORDINATION. The act of conferring the orders of the church upon an individual.

ORDINATIONE CONTRA SERVIENTES. A writ that lay against a servant for leaving his master contrary to the ordinance of St. 23 & 24 Edw. III. Reg. Orig. 189.

ORDINATUM EST (Lat.) It is ordered. The initial words are of the record entry of an order.

ORDINE PLACITANDI SERVATO, SERVatur et jus. The order of pleading being preserved, the law is preserved. Co. Litt. 303.

ORDINES MAJORES ET MINORES. In ecclesiastical law. The holy orders of priest, deacon, and subdeacon, any of which qualified for presentation and admission to an ecclesiastical dignity or cure were called "ordines majores;" and the inferior orders of chanters, psalmists, ostiary, reader, exorcist, and acolyte were called "ordines minores." Persons ordained to the ordines minores had their prima tonsura, different from the tonsura clericalis. Cowell.

ORDINIS BENEFICIUM. See "Beneficium Ordinis."

ORDINUM FUGITIVI. In old English law. Those of the religious who deserted their houses, and, throwing off the habits, renounced their particular order in contempt of their oath and other obligations. Par. Ant. 388.

ORDO ALBUS. The friars. Ordo Griseus, the gray friars; ordo Niger, the black friars.

ORDO ATTACHIAMENTORUM. The order of attachments.

ORDO JUDICIORUM. In the canon law. The order of judgments; the rule by which the due course of hearing each cause was prescribed. 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 17.

ORE TENUS (Lat.) Verbally; orally. Formerly the pleadings of the parties were ore tenus; and the practice is said to have been retained till the reign of Edward III. 3 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 95; Steph. Pl. 29. And see Bracton, 372b.

In chancery practice, a defendant may demur at the bar ore tenus (3 P. Wms. 370) if he has not sustained the demurrer on the record (1 Swanst. 288; Mitf. Pl. 176; 6 Ves. 779; 8 Ves. 405; 17 Ves. 215, 216).

ORFGILD (Saxon. orf, cattle, gild, payment. Also called "cheapgild"). A payment for cattle, or the restoring them. Cowell.

A restitution made by the hundred or county of any wrong done by one that was in pledge. Lambard, Arch. 125, 126.

A penalty for taking away cattle. Blount.

ORGANIC LAW. The written or unwritten constitution; the underlying rules and principles on which the government is established.

ORGILD (Saxon). Without recompense; as where no satisfaction was to be made for the death of a man killed, so that he was judged lawfully slain. Spelman.

ORIGINAL. That which is first in order; an authentic instrument of something, and which is to serve as a model or example to be copied or imitated. It also means first, or not deriving any authority from any other source; as, original jurisdiction, original writ, original bill, and the like.

ORIGINAL AND DERIVATIVE ESTATES. An original is the first of several estates, bearing to each other the relation of a particular estate and a reversion. An original estate is contrasted with a derivative estate; and a derivative estate is a particular interest carved out of another estate of larger extent. Prest. Est. 125.

ORIGINAL BILL. In chancery practice. A bill relating to a matter not before brought before the court by the same parties, standing in the same interests. Mitf. Eq. Pl. 33; Willis, Pl. 13 et seq.

Proceedings in a court of chancery are either commenced by way of information, when the matter concerns the state or those under its protection, or by original petition or bill, when the matter does not concern the state or those under its protection. The original bill states simply the cause of complaint, and asks for relief. It is composed of nine parts (Story, Eq. Pl. 7, 8), and is the foundation of all subsequent proceedings before the court (1 Daniell, Chanc. Prac. 351). See "Bill."

ORIGINAL BILL IN THE NATURE OF supplemental bill. A bill embracing in some degree the qualities of both an original and a supplemental bill. It is founded on an event occurring after the filing of the original bill, of such a nature that the suit cannot be continued as to all the parties, as by a supplemental bill.

ORIGINAL CHARTER. In Scotch law. One by which the first grant of land is made. On the other hand, a charter by progress is one renewing the grant in favor of the heir or singular successor of the first or succeeding vassals. Bell, Dict.

ORIGINAL CONVEYANCES (called, also, primary conveyances). Those conveyances by means whereof the benefit or estate is created or first arises, viz., feoffment, gift, grant, lease, exchange, partition. 2 Bl. Comm. 309, 310*; 1 Steph. Comm. 466.

ORIGINAL JURISDICTION. See "Jurisdiction."

ORIGINAL PACKAGE. Within the meaning of interstate commerce regulations, the original unbroken package imported into a state from another state or a foreign country before it becomes by sale or otherwise part of the general mass of property in the state. 135 U. S. 100.

ORIGINAL PROCESS. That process which issues for defendant's appearance. See "Process."

ORIGINAL WRIT. In English practice. A mandatory letter issued in the king's name, sealed with his great seal, and directed to the sheriff of the county wherein the injury was committed or supposed to have been done, requiring him to command the wrongdoer, or party accused, either to do justice to the complainant, or else to appear in court and answer the accusation against him. This writ is deemed necessary to give the courts of law jurisdiction.

In modern practice, however, it is often dispensed with, by recourse, as usual, to fiction, and a proceeding by bill is substituted. In this country, our courts derive their jurisdiction from the constitution, and require no original writ to confer it. Improperly speaking, the first writ which is issued in a case is sometimes called an original writ; but it is not so in the English sense of the word. See 3 Bl. Comm. 273; Walk. Am. Law, 514.

ORIGINALIA (Lat.) In English law. The transcripts and other documents sent to the office of the treasurer remembrancer in exchequer are called by this name to distinguish them from recorda, which contain the judgments of the barons.

ORIGINE PROPRIA NEMINEM POSSE voluntate sua eximi manifestum est. It is manifest that no one by his own will can renounce his origin (put off or discharge his natural allegiance). Code, 10. 34. 4. See 1 Bl. Comm. c. 10; 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 313; 3 Pet. (U. S.) 122, 246; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 74.

ORIGO REI INSPICI DEBET. The origin of a thing ought to be inquired into. 1 Coke, 99.

ORNEST. In old English law. The trial by battle, which does not seem to have been usual in England before the time of the Conqueror, though originating in the kingdoms of the north, where it was practiced under the name of "holmgang," from the custom of fighting duels on a small island or holm. Wharton.

ORPHAN. A minor or infant who has lost both of his or her parents. Sometimes the term is applied to such a person who has lost only one of his or her parents. 3 Mer. 48; 2 Sim. & S. 93; Aso & M. Inst. bk. 1, tit. 2, c. 1. See 14 Hazz. Pa. Reg. 188, 189, for a correspondence between the Hon. Joseph Hopkinson and ex-President J. Q. Adams as to the meaning of the word "orphan." See, also, Hob. 247.

ORPHANS' COURT. In American law. Courts of more or less extended probate jurisdiction.

ORPHANAGE. In English law. The share reserved to an orphan by the custom of London.

By the custom of London, when a freeman of that city dies, his estate is divided into three parts, as follows: One-third part to the widow; another to the children advanced by him in his lifetime, which is called the "orphanage;" and the other third part may be by him disposed of by will. Now, however, a freeman may dispose of his estate as he pleases; but in cases of intestacy, the statute of distribution expressly excepts and reserves the custom of London. Lovelace, Wills, 102, 104; Bac. Abr. "Custom of London" (C).

ORPHANAGE PART. That portion of an intestate's effects which his children were entitled to by the custom of London. This custom appears to have been a remnant of what was once a general law all over England, namely, that a father should not by his will bequeath the entirety of his personal estate away from his family, but should leave them a third part at least, called the "children's part," corresponding to the "bairns' part" or legitim of Scotch law, and also (although not in amount) to the legitima quarta of Roman law. Inst. 2. 18. This custom of London was abolished by St. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 94. Brown.

ORPHANOTROPHI. In civil law. Persons who have the charge of administering the affairs of houses destined for the use of orphans. Clef des Lois Rom. "Administrateurs."

ORRAY (Law Fr. from oyer, to hear). Shall hear. Orrount (plur.) Britt. c. 41.

ORWIGE, SINE WITA. In old English law. Without war or feud, such security being provided by the laws, for homicides under certain circumstancees, against the foehth, or deadly feud, on the part of the family of the slain. Anc. Inst. Eng.

OSTENDIT VOBIS (Law Lat.) In old pleadings. Shows to you. Formal words with which a demandant began his count. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 38, § 2.

OSTENSIBLE PARTNER. One whose name appears in a firm as a partner, and who is really such. See "Nominal Partner."

OSTENSURUS (Law Lat.) To show. A formal word in old writs. Reg. Orig. 36; Fet. Assaver, § 21.

OSTENTUM (Lat.) In the civil law. A monstrous or prodigious birth. Dig. 50. 16. 38.

OSTER (Law Fr.) To take away; to take out or off. Oste del file, taken off the file. Y. B. H. 20 Hen. VI. 1.

OSTER LA TOUAILLE (Old Fr.) In the laws of Oleron. To deny a seaman his mess. Article 13. Literally, to deny the table cloth or victuals for three meals. See 1 Pet. Adm. (U. S.) Append. xxvii.; 2 Pet. Adm. (U. S.) Append. lxxxv.

OSTIA REGNI (Lat.) Gates of the kingdom. The ports of the kingdom of England are so called by Sir Matthew Hale. Hale de Jur. Mar. pt. 2, c. 3.

OSTIUM ECCLESIAE (Law Lat.) In old English law. The door or porch of the church, where dower was anciently conferred. See "Ad Ostium Ecclesiae."

OSWALD'S LAW. The law by which was effected the ejection of married priests, and the introduction of monks into churches, by Oswald, bishop of Worcester, about A. D. 964. Wharton.

OSWALD'S LAW HUNDRED. An ancient hundred in Worcestershire, so called from Bishop Oswald, who obtained it from King Edgar, to be given to St. Mary's Church in Worcester. It was exempt from the sheriff's jurisdiction, and comprehends three hundred hides of land. Camd. Brit.

OTHESWORTHE (Saxon, eoth, oath). Worthy to make oath. Bracton, 185, 192.

OULTRE LE MERE (Law Fr.) Beyond the sea. Y. B. P. 1 Edw. III. 27.

OURLOP. The lierwite or fine paid to the lord by the inferior tenant when his daughter was debauched. Cowell.

OUSTER (Law Fr. outre, oultre; Lat. ultra, beyond). Out; beyond; besides; farther; also; over and more. Le ouster, the uppermost. Over,—respondeat ouster, let him answer over. Britt. c. 29. Ouster le mer, over the sea. Jacob. Ouster eit, he went away. 6 Coke, 41b; 9 Coke, 120.

To put out; to oust. Il oust, he put out or ousted. Oustes, ousted. 6 Coke, 41b.

"Judgment of ouster," in some states, is used to denote the judgment in quo warranto, by which one is held not entitled to an office; in others to the judgment in summary proceedings for possession of property.

——In Torts. The actual turning out or keeping excluded the party entitled to possession of any real property corporeal.

OUSTER LE MAIN (Law Fr. to take out of the hand). In old English law. A livery of lands out of the hands of the lord after the tenant came of age. If the lord refused to deliver such lands, the tenant was entitled to a writ to recover the same from the lord. This recovery out of the hands of the lord was called ouster le main.

OUSTER LE MER. Beyond the sea; a cause of excuse if a person, being summoned, did not appear in court. Cowell.

OUT OF THE STATE. Beyond sea (q. v.)

OUT OF TIME. In marine insurance. Missing. Generally speaking, a ship may be said to be missing or out of time when she has not been heard of after the longest ordinary time in which the voyage is safely performed. 1 Arnould, Ins. 540; 2 Duer, Ins. 469, note.

OUTER BAR. In the English courts, barristers at law have been divided into two classes, viz., queen's counsel, who are admitted within the bar of the courts, in seats specially reserved for themselves, and junior counsel, who sit without the bar; and the latter are thence frequently termed barristers of the "outer bar," or "utter bar," in contradistinction to the former class.

OUTER HOUSE. The name given to the great hall of the parliament house in Edinburgh, in which the lords ordinary of the court of session sit as single judges to hear causes. The term is used colloquially as expressive of the business done there, in contradistinction to the "Inner House," the name given to the chambers in which the first and second divisions of the court of session hold their sittings. Bell, Dict.

OUTFANGTHEF. A liberty or privilege in the ancient common law, whereby a lord was enabled to call any man dwelling in his manor, and taken for felony in another place out of his fee, to judgment in his own court. Du Cange.

OUTFIT.

——In Maritime Law. That part of a ship's apparel which ordinarily perishes or is consumed in the course of her voyage. Lowndes, Av. 11.

——In the Diplomatic Service. An allowance made by the government of the United States to a minister plenipotentiary, or charge des affaires, on going from the United States to any foreign country.

OUTHOUSES. Buildings adjoining or belonging to dwelling houses.

Buildings subservient to, yet distinct from, the principal mansion house, located either within or without the curtilage. 1 Bish. Crim. Law, § 175; 4 Conn. 46; 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 402; 2 Craw. & D. 479.

Any house standing out and apart from houses where people reside, or where business is transacted. 15 Tex. 260.

A building appurtenant to some main building. A school house is not an outhouse. 10 Conn. 143.

OUTLAND. The Saxon thanes divided their hereditary lands into inland, such as lay nearest their dwelling, which they kept to their own use, and outland, which lay beyond the demesnes, and was granted out to tenants, at the will of the lord, like copyhold estates. This outland they subdivided into two parts. One part they disposed among those who attended their persons, called "theodans," or lesser thanes; the other part they allotted to their husbandmen, or churls. Jacob.

OUTLAW. In English law. One who is put out of the protection or aid of the law. 22 Viner, Abr. 316; 1 Phil. Ev. Index; Bac. Abr. "Outlawry;" 2 Sellon, Prac. 277; Doct. Plac. 331; 3 Bl. Comm. 283, 284.

OUTLAWED. Applied to debts, barred by limitations. See 37 Me. 389.

OUTLAWRY. In English law. The act of being put out of the protection of the law, by process regularly sued out against a person who is in contempt in refusing to become amenable to the court having jurisdiction. The proceedings themselves are also called the "outlawry."

Outlawry may take place in criminal or in civil cases. 3 Bl. Comm. 283; Co. Litt. 128; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4196.

In the United States, outlawry in civil cases is unknown, and if there are any cases of outlawry in criminal cases, they are very rare. Dane, Abr. c. 193a, 34. See Bac. Abr. "Abatement" (B), "Outlawry;" Gilb. Hist. 196, 197; 2 Va. Cas. 244; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 92.

OUTPARTERS. A name given in old English statutes to certain depredators from Redesdale, on the northern border of England, who made incursions into Scotland, and brought back to their accomplices at home (called intakers) any booty they had taken. Spelman voc. "Intakers;" St. 9 Hen. V. c. 8.

OUTRAGE. A grave injury, a serious wrong. A generic word which is applied to everything which is injurious in a great degree to the honor or rights of another. 44 Iowa, 314.

OUTRIDERS. In English practice. Bailiffs employed by the sheriffs and their deputies to ride to the farthest places of their counties or hundreds, to summon such as they thought good to attend their county or hundred court.

OUTROPER. Old English. A person to whom the business of selling by auction was confined by statute. 2 H. Bl. 557.

OUTSETTER. Scotch. Publisher. 3 How. St. Tr. 603.

OUTSIDERS. See "Gambling Contract."

OUTSUCKEN MULTURES. In Scotch law. Out-town multures; multures, duties, or tolls paid by persons voluntarily grinding corn at any mill to which they are not thirled, or bound by tenure. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 2, p. 140; Bell, Dict. voc. "Multures."

OVELTY. In old English law. Equality of service in subordinate tenures.

OVER. In conveyancing, the word "over" is used to denote a contingent limitation intended to take effect on the failure of a prior estate. Thus, in what is commonly called the "name and arms clause" in a will or settlement, there is generally a proviso that, if the devisee fails to comply with the condition, the estate is to go to some one else. This is a limitation or gift over. Watson, Comp. Eq. 1110.

OVERCYTED, or OVERCYHSED. Proved guilty or convicted. Blount.

OVERDRAW. To obtain by bills or checks upon an individual, bank, or other depository, a greater amount of funds than the party who draws is entitled to.

OVERHERNISSA. In Saxon law. Contumacy or contempt of court. Leg. Aethel. c. 25.

OVERPLUS. What is left beyond a certain amount; the residue; the remainder of a thing. The same as "surplus."

OVERREACHING CLAUSE. In a resettlement, a clause which saves the powers of sale and leasing annexed to the estate for life created by the original settlement, when it is desired to give the tenant for life the same estate and powers under the resettlement. The clause is so called because it provides that the resettlement shall be overreached by the exercise of the old powers. If the resettlement were executed without a provision to this effect, the estate of the tenant for life and the annexed powers would be subject to any charges for portions, etc., created under the original settlement. 3 Dav. Conv. 489; Rapalje & L.

OVERRULE. To annul; to make void.

This word is frequently used to signify that a case has been decided directly opposite to a former case. When this takes place, the first-decided case is said to be overruled as a precedent, and cannot any longer be considered as of binding authority.

It also signifies that a majority of the judges have decided against the opinion of the minority, in which case the latter are said to be overruled.

OVERSAMESSA. In old English law. A forfeiture for contempt or neglect in not pursuing a malefactor. 3 Inst. 116.

OVERSEERS OF HIGHWAYS. Officials of the local divisions of government, as towns, who supervise and direct the maintenance or construction of highways.

OVERSEERS OF THE POOR. Persons appointed or elected to take care of the poor with moneys furnished to them by the public authority.

The duties of these officers are regulated by local statutes. In general, the overseers are bound to perform those duties, and the neglect of them will subject them to an indictment. See 1 Bl. Comm. 360; 16 Viner, Abr. 150; 1 Mass. 459; 3 Mass. 436; 1 Pennington (N. J.) 6, 136; Comyn, Dig. "Justices of the Peace" (B 63-65).

OVERSMAN. In Scotch law. A person commonly named in a submission, to whom power is given to determine in case the arbiters cannot agree in the sentence. Sometimes the nomination of the oversman is left to the arbiters. In either case, the oversman has no power to decide unless the arbiters differ in opinion. Ersk. Inst. 4. 3. 16. The office of an oversman very much resembles that of an umpire.

OVERT, OVERTE, or OUVERTE (Law Fr. and Eng.) Open. Pound overt, an open or uncovered pound. 3 Bl. Comm. 12. Market overt, open market. 2 Id. 449. Lettres ouvertes, open letters; letters patent (q. v.)

OVERT ACT (Law Lat. apertum factum). In criminal law. An open, manifest act, from which criminality may be implied. Brande. An open act, which must be manifestly proved. 3 Inst. 12.

OVERVERT. In old English law. High wood. See "Vert."

OVES (Lat. [pl. of ovis], sheep). In the civil law. Under a bequest of sheep (ovibus), lambs and rams were not included. Dig. 32. 65. 7; Id. 32. 81. 4. But under the name of a flock of sheep (ovium greye), both were included. Id. 32. 81. 5.

OVESQUE (Law Fr.) With. Litt. § 240; Britt. c. 38.

For. Il voile av' argue ovesque le lease, he would have argued for the lease. Dyer, 126b.

OWEL, or OWELE (Law Fr. from Lat. aequalis). Equal. En owele mayn, in equal hand. Britt. c. 39. Owelment, equally. Id. c. 119.

OWELTY. The difference which is paid or secured by one coparcener to another for the purpose of equalizing a partition. Litt. § 251; Co. Litt. 169a; 1 Watts (Pa.) 265; 1 Whart. (Pa.) 292; Cruise, Dig. tit. 19, § 32; 1 Vern. 133; Plowd. 134; 16 Viner, Abr. 223, pl. 3; Brooke, Abr. "Partition," § 5.

OWING. Something unpaid. A debt, for example, is owing while it is unpaid, and whether it be due or not.

OWLER. In English law. One guilty of the offense of owling.

OWLING. In English law. The offense of transporting wool or sheep out of the kingdom.

The name is said to owe its origin to the fact that this offense was carried on in the night, when the owl was abroad.

OWNER. He who has dominion of a thing, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal, which he has a right to enjoy and do with as he pleases, even to spoil or destroy it, as far as the law permits, unless he be prevented by some agreement or covenant which restrains his right. 31 Cal. 649.

The term has no exact technical meaning. Hare, Am. Const. Law, 355.

As applied to lands, it has been said to include all who had an interest therein, though it fall short of ownership of the fee (38 Mich. 171; 2 Ohio St. 114), and it has been applied both to the holder of the legal title (6 Hun [N. Y.] 553) and of an equitable estate (21 Minn. 107).

In like manner, as applied to personalty, it has been held to include one having a temporary right of possession. 44 Conn. 298. Such persons are ordinarily designated as "special owner," in contradistinction from "general owner," in whom is the full title. See 10 Cush. (Mass.) 399; 50 Mich. 249.

OWNERSHIP. The right by which a thing belongs to some one in particular to the exclusion of all others. Civ. Code La. art. 480. See "Owner."

OXFILD. A restitution anciently made by a hundred or county for any wrong done by one that was within the same. Lambard, Arch. 125.

OXGANG (from Saxon, gang, going, and ox; Law Lat. bovata). In old English law. So much land as an ox could till. According to some, fifteen acres. Co. Litt. 69a; Cromp. Jur. 220. According to Balfour, the Scotch oxengang, or oxgate, contained twelve acres; but this does not correspond with ancient charters. See Bell, Dict. "Ploughgate." Skene says thirteen acres. Cowell.

OYER. The reading to a party of a written instrument stated in the pleadings of the opposite party. In modern practice, a copy of the writing is ordered furnished on application. See "Profert in Curia."

OYER AND TERMINER. See "Assize;" "Court of Oyer and Terminer."

OYER DE RECORD. A petition made in court that the judges, for better proofs, compel the production of a record for inspection.

OYER ET TERMINER (Law Fr.) To hear and determine. A oyer et terminer toutes quereles, to hear and determine all complaints. Britt. fol. 1. De oyr et determiner. Art. Sup. Chart.

OYEZ (Fr. hear ye). The introduction to any proclamation or advertisement by public crier. It is wrongly and usually pronounced "oh yes." 4 Bl. Comm. 340, note.

P

P. H. V. Pro hac vice, for this occasion.

PAAGE. A toll for passage through another's land.

PACARE. In old records. To pay.

PACATIO. Payment. Mat. Par. A. D. 1248.

PACE. A measure of length, containing two feet and a half. The geometrical pace is five feet long. The common pace is the length of a step; the geometrical is the length of two steps, or the whole space passed over by the same foot from one step to another.

PACEATUR (Lat.) Let him be freed or discharged.

PACI SUNT MAXIME CONTRARIA, VIS et injuria. Force and wrong are especially contrary to peace. Co. Litt. 161.

PACIFICATION (Lat. pax, peace, facere, to make). The act of making peace between two countries which have been at war; the restoration of public tranquillity.

PACK. To deceive by false appearances; to counterfeit; to delude; as, packing a jury. See "Jury;" Bac. Abr. "Juries" (M); 12 Conn. 262.

PACKED PARCELS. The name for a consignment of goods, consisting of one large parcel made up of several small ones, each bearing a different address, collected from different persons by the immediate consignor (a carrier), who unites them into one for his own profit, at the expense of the railway by which they are sent, since the railway company would have been paid more for the carriage of the parcels singly than together.

PACT. In civil law. An agreement made by two or more persons on the same subject, in order to form some engagement, or to dissolve or modify one already made. Conventio est duorum in idem placitum consensus de re solvenda, id et facienda vel praestanda. Dig. 2. 14; Clef des Lois Rom.; Ayliffe, Pand. 558; Merlin, Repert. "Pacte."

PACTA CONVENTA, QUAE NEQUE CONtra leges, neque dolo malo inita sunt, omni modo observanda sunt. Contracts which are not illegal, and do not originate in fraud, must in all respects be observed. Code, 2. 3. 29; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 624.

PACTA DANT LEGEM CONTRACTUI. Agreements give the law to the contract. Halk. Max. 118.

PACTA PRIVATA JURI PUBLICO DErogare non possunt. Private contracts cannot derogate from the public law. 7 Coke, 23.

PACTA QUAE CONTRA LEGES CONSTItutionesque vel contra bonos mores fiunt, nullam vim habere, indubitati juris est. It is indubitable law that contracts against the laws or good morals have no force. Code, 2. 3. 6; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 620.

PACTA QUAE TURPEM CAUSAM CONtinent non sunt observanda. Contracts founded upon an immoral consideration are not to be observed. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 4; 2 Pet. (U. S.) 539; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 658.

PACTIO (Lat. from pangere, to strike). In civil law. A bargaining or agreeing of which pactum (the agreement itself) was the result. Calv. Lex. It is used, however, as the synonym of pactum.

PACTIONS. In international law. Contracts between nations which are to be performed by a single act, and of which execution is at an end at once. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 100.

PACTIS PRIVATORUM JURI PUBLICO non derogatur. Private contracts do not derogate from public law. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 621; per Dr. Lushington, Arg. 4 Clark & F. 241; Arg. 3 Clark & F. 621.

PACTITIOUS. Settled or governed by agreement.

PACTO ALIQUOD LICITUM EST, QUID sine pacto non admittitur. By a contract, something is permitted, which, without it, could not be admitted. Co. Litt. 166.

PACTUM (Lat.) In the civil law. A pact; an agreement or convention without specific name, and without consideration, which, however, might, in its nature, produce a civil obligation. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 14, § 775.

A pact was distinguished from a contract (contractus), which had a specific name or present consideration, and carried with it a civil obligation, both being a species of conventio (convention), which was the general term. Do ut des, I give that you may give, was a contract. Dabo ut des, I will give that you may give, was a pact.

PACTUM CONSTITUTAE PECUNIAE (Lat.) In civil law. An agreement by which a person appointed to his creditor a certain day, or a certain time, at which he promised to pay; or it may be defined simply an agreement by which a person promises a creditor to pay him.

When a person by this pact promises his own creditor to pay him, there arises a new obligation, which does not destroy the former, by which he was already bound, but which is accessory to it; and by this multiplicity of obligations the right of the creditor is strengthened. Poth. Obl. pt. 2, c. 6, § 9.

There is a striking conformity between the pactum constitutae pecuniae, as above defined, and our indebitatus assumpsit. The pactum constitutae pecuniae was a promise to pay a subsisting debt, whether natural or civil, made in such a manner as not to extinguish the preceding debt, and introduced by the praetor to obviate some formal difficulties. The action of indebitatus assumpsit was brought upon a promise for the payment of a debt. It was not subject to the wager of law and other technical difficulties of the regular action of debt, but by such promise the right to the action of debt was not extinguished nor varied. 4 Coke, 91, 95. See 1 H. Bl. 550-555, 850; Doug. 6, 7; 3 Wood, Inst. 168, 169, note (c); 1 Viner, Abr. 270; Brooke, Abr. "Action sur le Case" (pl. 7, 69, 72); Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 94 (a), note (a), 145 (g); 4 Bos. & P. 295; 1 Chit. Pl. 89; Toullier, Dr. Civ. liv. 3, tit. 3, c. 4, notes 388, 396.

PACTUM DE NON PETANDO (Lat.) In civil law. An agreement made between a creditor and his debtor that the former will not demand from the latter the debt due. By this agreement, the debtor is freed from his obligation. This is not unlike the "covenant not to sue," of the common law. Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 755.

PACTUM DE QUOTA LITIS (Lat.) In civil law. An agreement by which a creditor of a sum difficult to recover promises a portion—for example, one-third—to the person who will undertake to recover it. In general, attorneys will abstain from making such a contract, yet it is not unlawful at common law.

PADDER. A robber; a foot highwayman.

PAGA (Spanish). In Spanish law. Payment. Las Partidas, pt. 5, tit. 14, lib. 1, Pagamento, satisfaction.

PAGODA. In commercial law. A denomination of money in Bengal. In the computation of ad valorem duties it is valued at one dollar and ninety-four cents. Act March 2, 1799, § 61 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 626).

PAGUS. A county. Jacob.

PAINE FORTE ET DURE. See "Peine Forte et Dure."

PAINS AND PENALTIES, BILLS OF. See "Bill of Pains and Penalties."

PAIRING OFF. A legislative practice, said to have originated in the time of Cromwell, whereby legislators of opposite opinions agree not to vote on a given measure. Usually resorted to in order to relieve a member from the necessity of remaining constantly present to await a vote.

PAIS, or PAYS. A French word, signifying "country." In law, matter in pais is matter of fact, in opposition to matter of record; a trial per pais is a trial by the country,—that is, by a jury. See "In Pais."

PAIS, CONVEYANCES IN. In old English law. Ordinary conveyances between two or more persons in the country, i. e., upon the land to be transferred.

PALACE COURT. In English law. A court which had jurisdiction of all personal actions arising between any parties within twelve miles of Whitehall, not including the city of London.

It was erected in the time of Charles I., and was held by the steward of the household, the knight marshal and steward of the court, or his deputy. It had its sessions once a week, in the borough of Southwark. It was abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, § 13.

PALAGIUM. A duty to lords of manors for exporting and importing vessels of wine at any of their ports. Jacob.

PALATINE. Possessing royal privileges. See "County Palatine."

PALATINE COURTS. Formerly the court of common pleas at Lancaster, the chancery court of Lancaster, and the court of pleas at Durham, the second of which alone now exists.

PALATIUM (Lat.) A palace. The emperor's house in Rome was so called from the Mons Palatinus on which it was built. Adams, Rom. Ant. 613.

——In Old English Law. A paling; a fence. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 18, § 1.

PALEFRETUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. A palfrey. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 73, § 19.

PALINGMAN. In old English law. A merchant denizen; one born within the English pale. Blount.

PALLIO COOPERIRE. In old English law. An ancient custom, where children were born out of wedlock, and their parents afterwards intermarried. The children, together with the father and mother, stood under a cloth extended while the marriage was solemnized. It was in the nature of adoption. The children were legitimate by the civil, but not by the common, law. Jacob.

PALMER'S ACT. A name given to the English statute 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, enabling a person accused of a crime committed out of the jurisdiction of the central criminal court to be tried in that court.

PANDECTS. In civil law. The name of an abridgment or compilation of the civil law, made by Tribonian and others, by order of the emperor Justinian, and to which he gave the force of law A. D. 533.

It is also known by the name of the Digest, because in his compilation the writings of the jurists were reduced to order and condensed quasi digestiae. The emperor, in 530, published an ordinance entitled De Conceptione Digestorum, which was addressed to Tribonian, and by which he was required to select some of the most distinguished lawyers to assist him in composing a collection of the best decisions of the ancient lawyers, and compile them in fifty books, without confusion or contradiction. The instructions of the emperor were to select what was useful, to omit what was antiquated or superfluous, to avoid contradictions, and, by the necessary changes, to produce a complete body of law. This work was a companion to the Code of Justinian, and was to be governed in its arrangement of topics by the method of the Code. Justinian allowed the commissioners, who were sixteen in number, ten years to compile it; but the work was completed in three years, and promulgated in 533. A list of the writers from whose works the collection was made, and an account of the method pursued by the commissioners, will be found in Smith Dict. Gr. & R. Ant. The Digest, although compiled in Constantinople, was originally written in Latin, and afterwards translated into Greek.

The Digest is divided in two different ways: The first into fifty books, each book into several titles, and each title into several extracts or leges, and at the head of each series of extracts is the name of the lawyer from whose work they were taken.

The first book contains twenty-two titles. The subject of the first is De Justicia et Jure, of the division of persons and things, of magistrates, etc. The second, divided into fifteen titles, treats of the power of magistrates and their jurisdiction, the manner of commencing suits, of agreements and compromises. The third, composed of six titles, treats of those who can and those who cannot sue, of advocates and attorneys and syndics, and of calumny. The fourth, divided into nine titles, treats of causes of restitution, of submissions and arbitrations, of minors, carriers by water, innkeepers, and those who have the care of the property of others. In the fifth there are six titles, which treat of jurisdiction and inofficious testaments. The subject of the sixth, in which there are three titles, is actions. The seventh, in nine titles, embraces whatever concerns usufructs, personal servitudes, habitations, the uses of real estate and its appurtenances, and of the sureties required of the usufructuary. The eighth book, in six titles, regulates urban and rural servitudes. The ninth book, in four titles, explains certain personal actions. The tenth, in four titles, treats of mixed actions. The object of the eleventh book, containing eight titles, is to regulate interrogatories, the cases of which the judge was to take cognizance, fugitive slaves, of gamblers, of surveyors who made false reports, and of funerals and funeral expenses. The twelfth book, in seven titles, regulates personal actions in which the plaintiff claims the title of a thing. The thirteenth, in seven titles, and the fourteenth, in six titles, regulate certain actions. The fifteenth, in four titles, treats of actions to which a father or master is liable in consequence of the acts of his children or slaves, and those to which he is entitled, of the peculium of children and slaves, and of the actions on this right. The sixteenth, in three titles, contains the law relating to the senatus consultum Velleianum, of compensation or set-off, and of the action of deposit. The seventeenth, in two titles, expounds the law of mandates and partnership. The eighteenth book, in seven titles, explains the contract of sale. The nineteenth, in five titles, treats of the actions which arise on a contract of sale. The law relating to pawns, hypothecation, the preference among creditors, and subrogation, occupy the twentieth book, which contains six titles. The twenty-first book explains, under three titles, the edict of the ediles relating to the sale of slaves and animals, then what relates to evictions and warranties. The twenty-second book, in six titles, treats of interest, profits, and accessories of things, proofs, presumptions, and of ignorance of law and fact. The twenty-third, in five titles, contains the law of marriage, and its accompanying agreements. The twenty-fourth, in three titles, and the twenty-fifth, in seven titles, regulates donations between husband and wife, divorces, and their consequence. The twenty-sixth and twenty-seventh, each in two titles, contain the law relating to tutorship and curatorship. The twenty-eighth, in eight titles, and the twenty-ninth, in seven, contain the law on last will and testaments. The thirtieth, thirty-first, and thirty-second, each divided into two titles, contain the law of trusts and specific legacies. The thirty-third, thirty-fourth, and thirty-fifth—the first divided into ten titles, the second into nine titles, and the last into three titles—treat of various kinds of legacies. The thirty-sixth, containing four titles, explains the senatus consultum Trebellianum, and the time when trusts become due. The thirty-seventh book, containing fifteen titles, has two objects,—to regulate successions, and to declare the respect which children owe their parents, and freedmen their patrons. The thirty-eighth book, in seventeen titles, treats of a variety of subjects,—of successions, and of the degree of kindred in successions; of possession; and of heirs. The thirty-ninth explains the means which the law and the praetor take to prevent a threatened injury, and donations inter vivos and mortis causa. The fortieth, in sixteen titles, treats of the state and condition of persons, and of what relates to freedmen and liberty. The different means of acquiring and losing title to property are explained in the forty-first book, in ten titles. The forty-second, in eight titles, treats of the res judicata, and of the seizure and sale of the property of a debtor. Interdicts, or possessory actions, are the object of the forty-third book, in three titles. The forty-fourth contains an enumeration of defenses which arise in consequence of the res judicata, from the lapse of time, prescription, and the like. This occupies six titles; the seventh treats of obligations and actions. The forty-fifth speaks of stipulations, by freedmen or by slaves. It contains only three titles. The forty-sixth, in eight titles, treats of securities, novations and delegations, payments, releases, and acceptilations. In the forty-seventh book are explained the punishments inflicted for private crimes, de privatis delictis, among which are included larcenies, slander, libels, offenses against religion and public manners, removing boundaries, and similar offenses. The forty-eighth book treats of public crimes, among which are enumerated those of laesae-majestatis, adultery, murder, poisoning, parricide, extortion, and the like, with rules for procedure in such cases. The forty-ninth, in eighteen titles, treats of appeals, of the rights of the public treasury, of those who are in captivity, and of their repurchase. The fiftieth and last book, in seventeen titles, explains the rights of municipalities, and then treats of a variety of public officers.

These fifty books are allotted in seven parts: The first contains the first four books; the second, from the fifth to the eleventh book, inclusive; the third, from the twelfth to the nineteenth, inclusive; the fourth, from the twentieth to the twenty-seventh, inclusive; the fifth, from the twenty-eighth to the thirty-sixth, inclusive; the sixth commences with the thirty-seventh, and ends with the forty-seventh book; and the seventh, or last, is composed of the last six books.

The division into digestum vetus (book first to and including title second of book twenty-fourth), digestum infortiatum (title third of book twenty-fourth, to and including book thirty-eighth), and digestum novum (from book thirty-ninth to the end), has reference to the order in which these three parts appeared.

The Pandects are more usually cited by English and American jurists by numbers, thus: Dig. 23. 3. 5. 6, meaning book 23, title 3, law or fragment 5, section 6; sometimes, also, otherwise, as, D. 23. 3. fr. 5. § 6; or fr. 5. § 6. D. 23. 3. The old mode of citing was by titles and initial words, thus: D. de jure dotium, L. profectitia, § si pater; or the same references in reverse order. From this afterwards originated the following: L. profectitia, 5. § si pater 6, D. de jure dotium, and, lastly, L. 5. § 6. D. de jure dotium,—which is the form commonly used by the continental jurists of Europe. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, pp. 54, 55, § 65. And see Tayl. Civ. Law, 24, 25. The abbreviation ff. was commonly used instead of Dig. or Pandects.

The Pandects—as well, indeed, as all Justinian's laws, except some fragments of the Code and Novels—were lost to all Europe for a considerable period. During the pillage of Amalfi, in the war between the two soi-disant popes Innocent II. and Anaclet II., a soldier discovered an old manuscript, which attracted his attention by its envelope of many colors. It was carried to the Emperor Clothaire, and proved to be the Pandects of Justinian. The work was arranged in its present order by Warner, a German, whose Latin name is Irnerius, who was appointed by that emperor Professor of Roman Law at Bologna. 1 Fournel, Hist. des Avocats, 44, 46, 51. The style of the work is very grave and pure, and contrasts in this respect with that of the Code, which is very far from classical. On the other hand, the learning of the Digest stands rather in the discussing of subtle questions of law, and enumerations of the variety of opinions of ancient lawyers thereupon, than in practical matters of daily use, of which the Code so simply and directly treats. See Ridley, View, pt. 1, cc. 1, 2.

PANDOXARE (Law Lat.) In old records. To brew. Cowell.

Pandoxatrix, an ale wife; a woman that both brewed and sold ale and beer. Id.

PANEL (diminutive from either pane, apart, or page, pagella).

——In Practice. A schedule or roll, containing the names of jurors summoned by virtue of a writ of venire facias, and annexed to the writ. It is returned into the court whence the venire issued. Co. Litt. 158b; 3 Bl. Comm. 353.

——In Scotch Law. The prisoner at the bar, or person who takes his trial before the court of justiciary for some crime. So called from the time of his appearance. Bell, Dict. Spelled, also, pannel. See "Impanel."

PANIER. A waiter at table at English bar dinners.

PANIS (Lat.) In old English law. Bread; loaf; a loaf. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 9.

PANNAGIUM EST PASTUS PORCORUM, in nemoribus et in silvis, ut puta, de glandibus, etc. A pannagium is a pasture of hogs, in woods and forests, upon acorns, and so forth. 1 Bulst. 7.

PANNELLATION. The act of impaneling a jury.

PAPER BLOCKADE. A blockade proclaimed, but not maintained by a naval force sufficient to render it effective. See "Blockade."

PAPER BOOK. In appellate practice. A book or paper, usually printed, containing a transcript or an abstract, as may be required, of all the evidence and proceedings submitted to the appellate court.

PAPER DAYS. In English law. Days on which special arguments are to take place. Tuesdays and Fridays in term time are paper days appointed by the court. Lee, Dict.; Archb. Prac. 101.

PAPER MONEY. The engagements to pay money which are issued by governments and banks, and which pass as money. Pardessus, Dr. Com. note 9. Bank notes are generally considered as cash, and will answer all the purposes of currency; but paper money is not a legal tender if objected to. See "Legal Tender."

PAPER OFFICE. In English law. An ancient office in the palace of Whitehall, where all the public writings, matters of state and council, proclamations, letters, intelligences, negotiations of the queen's ministers abroad, and generally all the papers and dispatches that pass through the offices of the secretaries of state, are deposited. Also an office or room in the court of queen's bench, where the records belonging to that court are deposited; sometimes called "paper mill." Wharton.

PAPER TITLE. A claim of title unfounded in fact, but founded on a conveyance or chain of conveyances showing an apparently good title.

PAR. In common law. Equal. It is used to denote a state of equality or equal value. An equality of actual with nominal value. 9 Baxt. (Tenn.) 410. Bills of exchange, stocks, and the like, are at par when they sell for their nominal value; above par, or below par, when they sell for more or less.

PAR DELICTUM (Lat.) Equal guilt. "This is not a case of par delictum. It is oppression on one side, and submission on the other. It never can be predicated as par delictum when one holds the rod and the other bows to it." 6 Maule & S. 165. See "In Pari Delicto."

PAR IN PAREM IMPERIUM NON HABET. An equal has no power over an equal. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 174. Example, one of two judges of the same court cannot commit the other for contempt.

PAR OF EXCHANGE. The par of the currencies of any two countries means the equivalence of a certain amount of the currency of the one in the currency of the other, supposing the currency of both to be of the precise weight and purity fixed by their respective mints. 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 224. The exchange between the two countries is said to be at par when bills are negotiated on this footing, i. e., when a bill for £100 drawn on London sells in Paris for 2,520 frs., and vice versa. Bowen, Pol. Econ. 321. See 11 East, 267.

PAR ONERI. Equal to the damage.

PARACIUM. The tenure between parceners, viz., that which the youngest owes to the eldest without homage or service. Domesday Book.

PARAGE. Equality of blood, name, or dignity, but more especially of land in the partition of an inheritance between coheirs. Co. Litt. 166b. Hence "disparage," and "disparagement." Blount.

——In Feudal Law. Where heirs took of the same stock and by same title, but from right of primogeniture, or some other cause, the shares were unequal, the younger was said to hold of the elder, jure et titulo paragii, by right and title of parage, being equal in everything but the quantity, and owing no homage or fealty. Calv. Lex.

PARAGIUM (Lat. par, equal, and agium). 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 681. Equality.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. The portion which a woman gets on her marriage. Ayliffe, Par. 336.

PARAGRAPH. A part or section of a statute, pleading, affidavit, etc., which contains one article, the sense of which is complete. Wharton.

PARAMOUNT (par, by, mounter, to ascend). Above; upwards. Kelham. Paramount especifie, above specified. Plowd. 209a.

That which is superior; usually applied to the highest lord of the fee of lands, tenements, or hereditaments. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 135. Where A. lets lands to B. and he underlets them to C., in this case A. is the paramount and B. is the mesne landlord. 2 Bl. Comm. 91; 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 484, note 79, 485, note 81. The estate which is entitled to the benefit of an easement is known as the "paramount estate."

PARAPHERNA (Lat.) In civil law. Goods brought by wife to husband over and above her dower (dos). Vocat; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 23, § 6; Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 529.

PARAPHERNAL. Belonging or pertaining to the parapherna.

PARAPHERNALIA. Apparel and ornaments of a wife, suitable to her rank and degree. 2 Bl. Comm. 435.

PARAPHERNAUX, BIENS (Fr.) In French law. All the wife's property which is not subject to the regime dotal is called by this name, and of these articles the wife has the entire administration; but she may allow the husband to enjoy them, and in that case he is not liable to account. Brown.

PARASYNEXIS. In the civil law, a conventicle or unlawful meeting.

PARATITLA (Lat.) In civil law. An abbreviated explanation of some titles or books of the Code or Digest.

PARATUM HABEO (Lat. I have ready). In practice. A return made by the sheriff to a capias ad respondendum, which signified that he had the defendant ready to bring into court. This was a fiction, where the defendant was at large. Afterwards he was required, by statute, to take bail from the defendant, and he returned cepi corpus and bail bond. But still he might be ruled to bring in the body. 7 Pa. St. 535.

PARATUS EST VERIFICARE. In old pleading. This he is ready to verify.

PARAVAIL. Tenant paravail is the lowest tenant of the fee, or he who is the immediate tenant to one who holds of another. He is called tenant paravail because it is presumed he has the avails or profits of the land. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 135; 2 Inst. 296.

PARCEL. A part of the estate. 1 Comyn, Dig. "Abatement" (H 51), "Grant" (E 10).

To parcel is to divide an estate. Bac. Abr. "Conditions" (O).

A small bundle. It is the diminutive of package. 1 Hughes (U. S.) 529.

The word "parcel" is not a sufficient description of the property alleged in an indictment to have been stolen. The prisoner was indicted for stealing "one parcel, of the value of one shilling, of the goods," etc. The parcel in question was taken from the hold of a vessel, out of a box broken open by the prisoner. Held an insufficient description. 7 Cox, C. C. 13.

PARCEL MAKERS. Two officers in the exchequer who formerly made the parcels or items of the escheators' accounts, wherein they charged them with everything they had levied for the sovereign's use during the term of their office, and delivered the same to the auditors to make up their accounts therewith.

PARCELS, BILL OF. An account of the items composing a parcel or package of goods, transmitted with them to the purchaser.

PARCELLA TERRAE. A parcel of land.

PARCENARY. The state or condition of holding title to lands jointly by parceners, before the common inheritance has been divided. See "Coparcenary, Estates in."

PARCENERS. The daughters of a man or woman seised of lands and tenements in fee simple or fee tail, on whom, after the death of such ancestor, such lands and tenements descend, and they enter. See "Coparceners."

PARCHMENT (Fr.; Law Lat. pergamenum). Sheep skins dressed for writing; so called because invented at Pergamus, in Asia Minor, by King Eumenes, when the exportation of paper, which was made in Egypt only, was forbidden by Ptolemy.

PARCO FRACTO (Lat.) In English law. The name of a writ against one who violently breaks a pound and takes from thence beasts which, for some trespass done, or some other just cause, were lawfully impounded.

PARCUS (Lat.) A park.

PARDON. An act of grace, proceeding from the power intrusted with the execution of the laws, which exempts the individual on whom it is bestowed from the punishment the law inflicts for a crime he has committed. 7 Pet. (U. S.) 160.

Every pardon granted to the guilty is in derogation of the law. If the pardon be equitable, the law is bad; for where legislation and the administration of the law are perfect, pardons must be a violation of the law. But, as human actions are necessarily imperfect, the pardoning power must be vested somewhere, in order to prevent injustice when it is ascertained that an error has been committed.

(1) An absolute pardon is one which frees the criminal without any condition whatever.

(2) A conditional pardon is one to which a condition is annexed, performance of which is necessary to the validity of the pardon. 1 Bailey (S. C.) 283; 10 Ark. 284; 1 McCord (S. C.) 176; 1 Park. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 47.

(3) A general pardon, more properly called "amnesty" (q. v.), is one which extends to all offenders of the same kind. It may be express, as when a general declaration is made that all offenders of a certain class shall be pardoned, or implied, as in case of the repeal of a penal statute. 2 Overt. (Tenn.) 423.

"The distinction between pardon, amnesty, and reprieve seems to be that pardon permanently discharges the individual designated from some or all special penal consequences of his crime, but does not affect the legal character of the offense committed; while amnesty obliterates the effect, and declares that government will not consider the thing done punishable, and hence operates in favor of all persons involved in it, whether mentioned or not; and reprieve only temporarily suspends execution of punishment, leaving the legal character of the act unchanged, and the individual subject to its consequences in time to come." Abbott.

PARENS. A parent. This was the original and proper sense of the word.

In the civil law, any relative in the direct ascending line, either male or female.

PARENS EST NOMEN GENERALE AD omne genus cognationis. Parent is a general name for every kind of relationship. Co. Litt. 80; Litt. § 108; Magna Carta Johan. c. 50.

PARENS PATRIAE (Lat.) Father of his country. In England, the king; in America, the people. 3 Bl. Comm. 427; 2 Steph. Comm. 528; 4 Kent, Comm. 508, note; 17 How. (U. S.) 393; Shelf. Ins. 12.

PARENTAGE. Kindred in the direct ascending line. See 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1955.

PARENTS. The lawful father and mother of the party spoken of. 1 Murph. (N. C.) 336; 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 93.

The term "parent" differs from that of "ancestor;" the latter embracing not only the father and mother, but every person in an ascending line. It differs also from "predecessor," which is applied to corporators. Wood, Inst. 68; 7 Ves. 522; 1 Murph. (N. C.) 336; 6 Bin. (Pa.) 255. See "Father."

By the civil law, grandfathers and grandmothers, and other ascendants, were, in certain cases, considered parents. Dict. de Jur. "Parente." See 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 55; 2 Kent, Comm. 159; 5 East, 223; Bouv. Inst. Index.

PARENTUM EST LIBEROS ALERE etiam nothos. It is the duty of parents to support their children, even when illegitimate. Lofft, 222.

PARES (Lat.) A man's equals; his peers. 3 Bl. Comm. 349.

PARES CURIAE (Lat.) In feudal law. Those vassals who were bound to attend the lord's court. Ersk. Inst. bk. 2, tit. 3, § 17; 1 Washb. Real Prop.

PARES REGNI. The peers of the realm.

PARI DELICTO (Lat.) In criminal law. In a similar offense or crime; equal in guilt.

A person who is in pari delicto with another differs from a particeps criminis in this, that the former term always includes the latter, but the latter does not always include the former. 8 East, 381, 382; 124 N. Y. 156. See "In Pari Delicto."

PARI MATERIA (Lat.) Of the same matter; on the same subject; as, laws pari materia must be construed with reference to each other. Bac. Abr. "Statute" (I 3).

PARI PASSU (Lat.) By the same gradation. Used especially of creditors who, in marshalling assets, are entitled to receive out of the same fund, without any precedence over each other.

PARI RATIONE (Lat.) For the like reason; by like mode of reasoning.

PARIA COPULANTUR PARIBUS. Similar things unite with similar.

PARIBUS SENTENTIIS REUS ABSOLvitur. When opinions are equal, a defendant is acquitted. 4 Inst. 64.

PARIENTES. In Spanish law. Relations. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 7, c. 5, § 2.

PARIES. In the civil law. A wall. Dig. 50. 16. 157.

PARIES COMMUNIS. In the civil law. A common wall; a party wall. Dig. 29. 2. 39.

PARISH. A district of country, of different extents.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. The territory committed to the charge of a parson, or vicar, or other minister. Ayliffe, Par. 404; 2 Bl. Comm. 112.

——In Louisiana. Divisions corresponding to counties. The state is divided into parishes.

——In New England. Divisions of a town, orginally territorial, but which now constitute quasi corporations, consisting of those connected with a certain church. See 2 Mass. 501; 7 Mass. 447; 16 Mass. 457, 488, 492, et seq.; 1 Pick. (Mass.) 91.

PARISH APPRENTICE. The children of poor persons in England who are bound by the overseers of the parish, with the consent of two justices. 2 Steph. Comm. 230.

PARISH CONSTABLE. A petty constable exercising his functions within a given parish. Mozley & W.

PARISH COURT. In Louisiana. A court established in each parish, having general probate jurisdiction, and a limited civil jurisdiction.

PARISH OFFICERS. Church wardens, overseers, and constables.

PARIUM EADEM EST RATIO, IDEM JUS. Of things equal, the reason is the same, and the same is the law.

PARIUM JUDICIUM (Lat. the decision of equals). The right of trial by one's peers, i. e., by jury in the case of a commoner, by the house of peers in the case of a peer.

PARK (Law Lat. parcus).

——In Old Law. An inclosure. 2 Bl. Comm. 38. A pound. Reg. Orig. 166; Cowell. Pairk is still retained in Ireland for "pound."

——In English Law. An inclosed chase extending only over a man's own grounds. 13 Car. II. c. 10; Manw. For. Laws; Cromp. Jur. fol. 148; 2 Bl. Comm. 38.

——In American Law. A piece of ground in a city or village set apart for ornament, or to afford the benefit of air, exercise, or amusement. 36 N. Y. 120.

PARK BOTE. To be quit of inclosing a park, or any part thereof.

PARLE HILL (also called Parling Hill). A hill where courts were held in old times. Cowell.

PARLIAMENT (said to be derived from parler la ment, to speak the mind, or parum lamentum). In English law. The legislative branch of the government of Great Britain, consisting of the house of lords and the house of commons.

PARLIAMENTARY AGENTS. Persons (usually solicitors) who transact the technical business connected with passing private bills through parliament. They are required to sign a declaration and give security for compliance with the rules of parliament.

PARLIAMENTARY TAXES. Such taxes as are imposed directly by act of parliament, i. e., by the legislature itself, as distinguished from those which are imposed by private individuals or bodies under the authority of an act of parliament. Thus, a sewers rate, not being imposed directly by act of parliament, but by certain persons termed "commissioners of sewers," is not a parliamentary tax; whereas the income tax, which is directly imposed, and the amount also fixed, by act of parliament, is a parliamentary tax.

PARLIAMENTUM DIABOLICUM. A parliament held at Coventry, 38 Hen. VI., wherein Edward, Earl of March (afterwards King Edward IV.), and many of the chief nobility were attainted, was so called; but the acts then made were annulled by the succeeding parliament. Jacob.

PARLIAMENTUM INDOCTUM (Law Lat.) Unlearned or lack learning parliament. A name given to a parliament held at Coventry in the sixth year of Henry IV., under an ordinance requiring that no lawyer should be chosen knight, citizen or burgess; "by reason whereof," says Sir Edward Coke, "this parliament was fruitless, and never a good law made thereat." 4 Inst. 48; 1 Bl. Comm. 177.

PARLIAMENTUM INSANUM. A parliament assembled at Oxford, 41 Hen. III., so styled from the madness of their proceedings, and because the lords came with armed men to it, and contentions grew very high between the king, lords, and commons, whereby many extraordinary things were done. Jacob.

PARLIAMENTUM RELIGIOSORUM. In most convents there has been a common room into which the brethren withdrew for conversation; conferences there being termed parliamentum. Likewise, the societies of the two temples, or inns of court, call that assembly of the benchers or governors wherein they confer upon the common affairs of their several houses a "parliament." Jacob.

PAROCHIA EST LOCUS QUO DEGIT populus alicujus ecclesiae. A parish is a place in which the population of a certain church resides. 5 Coke, 67.

PAROL (more properly parole, a French word, meaning literally "word" or "speech"). Oral; by word of mouth.

——In Contracts. Verbal or merely written, as distinguished from sealed. 1 Chit. Cont. 1; 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 60.

——In Evidence. Parol evidence is that delivered verbally by witnesses in court.

PAROLE.

——In International Law. The agreement of persons who have been taken by an enemy that they will not again take up arms against those who captured them, either for a limited time or during the continuance of the war. Vattel, liv. 3, c. 8, § 151.

——In Criminal Law. A form of conditional pardon, by which the convict is released before the expiration of his term, to remain subject, during the remainder thereof, to supervision by the public authorities, and to return to imprisonment on violation of the conditions of the parole.

PAROLS FONT PLEA. Words make the plea. 5 Mod. 458; Y. B. 19 Hen. VI. 48.

PARRICIDE (from Lat. pater, father, and cedere, to slay). In civil law. One who murders his father; one who murders his mother, his brother, his sister, or his children. Merlin, Repert.; Dig. 48. 9. 1. 3, 4.

The common law does not define the crime, and makes no difference in punishment between it and other murders. 1 Hale, P. C. 380.

In colloquial use, the term is applied according to its derivative, rather than its civil-law meaning, to the slayer of a father only.

PARRICIDIUM. In the civil law. Parricide; the murder of a parent. Dig. 48. 9. 9.

PARS (Lat.) A party (to a suit). Pars actrix, a party plaintiff. Reg Orig. 9a; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 63, § 11; Clerke, Prax. Cur. Adm. tit. 4. Singularly translated in Dyer (179a), part actress. Pars agens. 3 How. St. Tr. 863.

Pars rea, a party defendant. St. Marlb. c. 13.

PARS ENITIA (Lat.) In old English law. The share of the eldest daughter where lands were parted between daughters by lot, she having her first choice after the division of the inheritance. Co. Litt. 166b; Glanv. lib. 7, c. 3; Fleta, lib. 5, c. 10, § "In Divisionem."

PARS GRAVATA. In old practice. A party aggrieved; the party aggrieved. Hardr. 50; 3 Leon. 237.

PARS PRO TOTO. Part for the whole; the name of a part used to represent the whole; as the roof for the house, ten spears for ten armed men, etc.

PARS RATIONABILIS (Lat. reasonable part). That part of a man's goods which the law gave to his wife and children. 2 Bl. Comm. 492; Magna Charta; 9 Hen. III. c. 18; 2 Steph. Comm. 228, 254.

PARSON. In ecclesiastical law. One that hath full possession of all the rights of a parochial church. So called because the church, which is an invisible body, is represented by his person. In England he is himself a body corporate, in order to protect and defend the church (which he personates) by a perpetual succession. Co. Litt. 300.

PARSON IMPARSONA (Lat.) A persona, or parson, may be termed "impersonata," or "impersonee," only in regard to the possession he hath of the rectory by the act of another. Co. Litt. 300. One that is inducted and in possession of a benefice, e. g., a dean and chapter. Dyer, 40, 221. He that is in possession of a church, be it presentative or appropriate, and with whom the church is full,—persona in this case meaning the patron who gives the title, and persona impersonata the parson to whom the benefice is given in the patron's right. Reg. Jud. 24.

PART. A share; a purpart. This word is also used in contradistinction to counterpart. Covenants were formerly made in a script and rescript, or part and counterpart.

PART AND PERTINENT. In Scotch law. A term in a conveyance including lands or servitudes held for forty years as part of, or pertinent to, lands conveyed, natural fruits before they are separated, woods and parks, etc., but not steelbow stock, unless the lands have been sold on a rental. Bell, Dict.; Ersk. Inst. 2. 5. 3. et seq.

PART OWNERS. Those who own a thing together, or in common.

——In Maritime Law. A term applied to two or more persons who own a vessel together, and not as partners.

In general, when a majority of the part owners are desirous of employing such a ship upon a particular voyage or adventure, they have a right to do so upon giving security in the admiralty by stipulation to the minority, if required, to bring her back and restore the ship, or, in case of her loss, to pay them the value of their respective shares. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3780; Abb. Shipp. 70; 3 Kent, Comm. (4th Ed.) 151; Story, Partn. § 489; 11 Pet. (U. S.) 175. When the majority do not choose to employ the ship, the minority have the same right, upon giving similar security. 11 Pet. (U. S.) 175; 1 Hagg. Adm. 306; Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 442.

PARTE NON COMPARENTE (Lat.) The party not having appeared. The condition of a cause called "default."

PARTE QUACUMQUE INTEGRANTE sublata, tollitur totum. An integral part being taken away, the whole is taken away. 8 Coke, 41.

PARTEM ALIQUAM RECTE INTELLIgere nemo potest, antequam totum, iterum atque iterum, perlegerit. No one can rightly understand any part until he has read the whole again and again. 3 Coke, 52.

PARTES FINIS NIL HABERUNT (Lat. the parties to the fine had nothing, i. e., nothing which they could convey). In old English pleading. The plea to a fine levied by a stranger, and which only bound parties and privies. 2 Bl. Comm. 356*; Hob. 334; 1 P. Wms. 520; 1 Wooddeson, Lect. 315.

PARTIAL LOSS. A loss of a part of a thing, or of its value, as contrasted with a total loss.

——In Maritime Law. Where this happens by damage to an article, it is also called a particular average (q. v.)

PARTICEPS CRIMINIS. A sharer or partaker in crime. Applied, also, to persons participating in an illegal or immoral transaction or contract not criminal. One may be particeps criminis, and not in pari delicto. 124 N. Y. 156.

PARTICEPS PLURES SUNT QUASI unum corpus in eo quod unum jus habent, et oportet quod corpus sit integrum, et quod in nulla parte sit defectus. Many parceners are as one body, inasmuch as they have one right, and it is necessary that the body be perfect, and that there be a defect in no part. Co. Litt. 4.

PARTICULA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Parcel. Perk. c. 10, §§ 674, 676, 679.

PARTICULAR AVERAGE. Every kind of expense or damage, short of total loss, which regards a particular concern, and which is to be wholly borne by the proprietor of that concern or interest alone. 2 Phil. Ins. § 354; 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 284. See "Average."

PARTICULAR AVERMENT. See "Averment."

PARTICULAR CUSTOM. A custom which only affects the inhabitants of some particular district.

To be good, a particular custom must have been used so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary; must have been continued; must have been peaceable; must be reasonable; must be certain; must be consistent with itself; must be consistent with other customs. 1 Bl. Comm. 74, 79.

PARTICULAR ESTATE. An estate which is carved out of a larger, and which precedes a remainder; as, an estate for years to A., remainder to B. for life; or, an estate for life to A., remainder to B. in tail. This precedent estate is called the "particular estate." 2 Bl. Comm. 165; 4 Kent, Comm. 226; 16 Viner, Abr. 216; 4 Comyn, Dig. 32; 5 Comyn, Dig. 346. See "Remainder."

PARTICULAR LIEN. A right which a person has to retain property in respect of money or labor expended on such particular property. See "Lien."

PARTICULAR MALICE. Malice against a particular person. See "Malice."

PARTICULAR STATEMENT. In Pennsylvania pleading and practice. A statement particularly specifying the date of a promise, book account, note, bond (penal or single), bill, or all of them, on which an action is founded, and the amount believed by the plaintiff to be due from the defendant. 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 21. It is founded on the provisions of a statute passed March 21, 1806. See 4 Smith, Pa. Laws, 328. It is an unmethodical declaration, not restricted to any particular form. 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 537; 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 405; 8 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 316, 567; 2 Browne (Pa.) 40.

PARTICULAR TENANT. The holder of a particular estate (q. v.)

PARTICULARS. See "Bill of Particulars."

PARTICULARS OF CRIMINAL CHARges. A prosecutor, when a charge is general, is frequently ordered to give the defendant a statement of the acts charged, which is called, in England, the "particulars" of the charges.

In the United States, a bill of particulars is often ordered for the same purpose.

PARTICULARS OF SALE. When property such as land, houses, shares, reversions, etc., is to be sold by auction, it is usually described in a document called the "particulars," copies of which are distributed among intending bidders. They should fairly and accurately describe the property. Dart, Vend. 113; 1 Dav. Conv. 511.

PARTIES (Lat. pars, a part). Those who take part in the performance of an act, as, making a contract, carrying on an action. A party in law may be said to be those united in interest in the performance of an act. It may then be composed of one or more persons. "Parties" includes every party to an act. It is also used to denote all the individual separate persons engaged in the act,—in which sense, however, a corporation may be a party.

——To Contracts. Those persons who engage themselves to do or not to do the matters and things contained in an agreement.

——In Actions. The persons seeking relief, and those against whom relief is sought, in any action. Parties are either "of record," being those in whose name the suit is brought, or who are named as defendants, and "not of record," those not so named, but who have a beneficial interest in the subject matter. 6 Abb. Pr. (N. S.; N. Y.) 147.

PARTITION. The division which is made between several persons of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or of goods and chattels, which belong to them as coheirs or coproprietors. The term is more technically applied to the division of real estate made between coparceners, tenants in common, or joint tenants.

Compulsory partition is that which takes place by a judicial proceeding for that purpose, without regard to the wishes of one or more of the owners.

Voluntary partition is that made by the owners by mutual consent.

PARTNER. One who is a member of a partnership (q. v.)

——Ostensible Partners. Those held out and known as partners, and who in reality are such.

——Secret Partners. Those whose relation to the partnership is concealed.

——Active Partners. Those who take an active part in the conduct of the business. They may be either ostensible or secret partners.

——Silent Partners. Those who take no active part in the management of the business. They may be either ostensible or secret partners.

——Dormant Partners. Such as are both secret and silent partners. The term is sometimes applied, however, as meaning merely a secret partner, and sometimes as meaning a silent partner. Pars. Partn. § 31.

——Nominal Partners. Such as are apparently partners, but really are not.

——General Partners. Those members of a limited partnership whose liability is not limited by special agreement.

——Special Partners. Those members of a limited partnership whose liability is limited. See "Partnership." Shumaker, Partnership, 124.

PARTNERSHIP. The relation subsisting between two or more persons who have contracted together to share as common owners the profits of a business carried on by all or any of them on behalf of all of them. Shumaker, Partnership, 2.

Elements:

The essential elements of a partnership are (1) a contract between the partners; a true partnership being always formed by contract, not by operation of law. 138 Ill. 74; 43 Mo. 391; 63 Pa. St. 273. The so-called partnership by estoppel or holding out is only an apparent exception; it not being a true partnership inter se, but only a liability of individuals to third persons as if they were partners. (2) A sharing of profits; but the profits must be shared between the partners as common owners thereof, not because of a portion thereof being due to a party as a debt. 8 H. L. Cas. 268; 5 Colo. 564; 30 Me. 384; 38 Cal. 205; 28 Ohio St. 319. But community of ownership in the stock or capital by means of which profits are earned is not essential. 15 Conn. 67.

Tests:

Profit sharing, therefore, is not a test, nor is mutual agency, for mutual agency results from partnership, not partnership from agency. The true test is the intention of the parties to share in the profits as common owners. An agreement to share both profits and losses is prima facie but not conclusive evidence of intention to form a partnership (97 Ill. 303), as is an agreement to share profits with nothing said about losses (145 U. S. 611), or with a stipulation against the liability of one of the parties for losses (18 Fed. 888); but not an agreement to share gross returns (15 Ill. 31; 20 N. Y. 93), or to share losses or expenses only (92 Ill. 103; 132 Mass. 423). The common ownership of property does not create a partnership unless it be employed in business for common profit. 27 Iowa, 131.

Classification:

Partnerships classified with reference to the nature of the association are either (1) ordinary partnerships, (2) limited partnerships, being those wherein the liability of one or more partners is, by compliance with certain statutory provisions, limited to the amount of their contribution to the capital stock, or (3) joint-stock companies, being partnerships with a capital stock divided into transferable shares.

Partnerships classified with reference to their extent are either (1) universal partnerships, being those in which the parties bring into the firm all their property, of whatever nature, and employ all their services for the common benefit, (2) general partnerships, being those formed to transact some general class of business, or (3) special or particular partnerships, being those formed for a particular transaction.

Partnerships classified with reference to their business are either (1) trading or commercial partnerships, being those whose business consists in buying or preparing for sale and selling commodities for profit, or (2) nontrading partnerships.

PARTNERSHIP IN COMMENDAM. In Louisiana law. Partnership in commendam is formed by a contract by which one person or partnership agrees to furnish another person or partnership a certain amount, either in property or money, to be employed by the person or partnership to whom it is furnished, in his or their own name or firm, on condition of receiving a share in the profits, in the proportion determined by the contract, and of being liable to losses and expenses to the amount furnished, and no more. Civ. Code La. art. 2839.

PARTURITION. The act of giving birth to a child. See "Birth."

PARTUS (Lat.) The child just before it is born, or immediately after its birth; offspring.

PARTUS EX LEGITIMO THORO NON certius noscit matrem quam genitorem suam. The offspring of a legitimate bed knows not his mother more certainly than his father. Fortescue, c. 42.

PARTUS SEQUITUR VENTREM. The offspring follow the condition of the mother. Inst. 2. 1. 19. This is the law in the case of slaves and animals (1 Bouv. Inst. notes 167, 502), but with regard to freemen, children follow the condition of the father.

PARTY. See "Parties."

PARTY JURY. A jury de medietate linguae (q. v.)

PARTY STRUCTURE. A structure separating buildings, stories, or rooms which belong to different owners, or which are approached by distinct staircases or separate entrances from without, whether the same be a partition, arch, floor, or other structure. St. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 122, § 3. Mozley & W.

PARTY WALL. A wall erected on the line between two adjoining estates, belonging to different persons, for the use of both estates. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1615.

It is ordinarily owned in common by the adjoining owners, but may be divided longitudinally or divided latitudinally, the sections being subject to mutual easements, or it may belong to one owner, and be subject to an easement in favor of the other. 50 N. Y. 646; 75 Ill. 118.

PARUM CAVET NATURA. Nature takes little heed. 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 127, 166.

PARUM CAVISSE VIDETUR. In Roman law. He seems to have taken too little care. A form used by judges in pronouncing sentence.

PARUM DIFFERUNT QUAE RE CONcordant. Things differ but little which agree in substance. 2 Bulst. 86.

PARUM EST LATAM ESSE SENTENtiam, nisi mandetur executioni. It is not enough that sentence should be given, unless it be committed to execution. Co. Litt. 289.

PARUM PROFICIT SCIRE QUID FIERI debet, si non cognoscas quomodo sit facturum. It avails little to know what ought to be done, if you do not know how it is to be done. 2 Inst. 503.

PARVA SERJANTIA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Petty serjeanty. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 11. Called also. parva serjanteria. Magna Carta. 9 Hen. III. c. 27.

PARVUM CAPE. See "Petit Cape."

PAS (Fr.) Precedence.

PASCHA (Law Lat.; Law Fr. pasche). In old English law and practice. Easter. De termino Paschae, of the term of Easter. Bracton, fol. 246b. A die Paschae in quindecim dies, from the day of Easter in fifteen days; after fifteen days of Easter. Reg. Jud. 36; 3 Bl. Comm. Append. No. iii. § 3.

PASCUA SILVA (Lat.) In the civil law. A feeding wood; a wood devoted to the feeding of cattle (quae pastui pecudum destinata est). Dig. 50. 16. 30. 5.

PASS.

——In Practice. To proceed; to be entered. A verdict or judgment is said "to pass for" a party where it is delivered in his favor. This term is directly taken from the old French passer.

——In Conveyancing. To go from one person to another; to be transferred. "The names of things by which they pass in assurances." Hale, Anal. § xxiv. "By what names things pass." Id. § xxxv.

To convey or transfer. "To pass an estate." "Effectual words to pass the interest." Id. § xxxv. "The passing of estates." Id.

PASSAGE MONEY. The sum claimable for the conveyance of a person, with or without luggage, on the water.

The difference between freight and passage money is this, that the former is claimable for the carriage of goods, and the latter for the carriage of the person. The same rules which govern the claim for freight affect that for passage money. 3 Chit. Com. Law, 424; 1 Pet. Adm. (N. Y.) 126; 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 335. See "Common Carriers of Passengers."

PASSAGIO. An ancient writ addressed to the keepers of the ports to permit a man who had the king's leave to pass over sea. Reg. Orig. 193.

PASSAGIUM (Law Lat.; Law Fr. passage, from passer, to pass). In old English law. Passage; a passing over sea; a voyage Reg. Orig. 193b. A term frequently used in the law of essoins, in the days of the Crusades. Bracton, fol. 339; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 8.

PASSATOR. He who has the interest or command of the passage of a river; or a lord to whom a duty is paid for passage. Wharton.

PASSENGER. One who has taken a place in a public conveyance for the purpose of being transported from one place to another. One who is so conveyed from one place to another.

Though the relation of passenger and carrier is in a sense a matter of contract, on account of the duty of the carrier to receive all persons without discriminations, the implications of contract are broader than in other cases. Thus, one is a passenger on a train which he took by mistake. 64 Tex. 536; 40 Ind. 37.

One who is carried gratuitously is a passenger, as is one who has not yet paid his fare (57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 348; 46 Mo. App. 555), but not one who designs evading payment of fare (157 Mass. 377), even by using a pass issued to another (107 Ind. 442).

An employe of the carrier not engaged in the management of the particular train is a passenger (69 Ga. 715; but see 95 N. Y. 267), as is an employe of another carrier under contract, as an express messenger (56 Ark. 594), or a postal clerk (95 N. Y. 562; 57 Fed. 165).

The relation of passenger and carrier begins the moment one goes on the carrier's premises to take passage on one of its trains (58 Ga. 461; 36 Fed. 72; 40 Barb. [N. Y.] 546), and is not ended until the passenger leaves the conveyance and the carrier's premises (55 Kan. 582; 146 Mass. 241; 9 Tex. Civ. App. 599).

PASSIVE DEBTS. In the civil law. All the sums of which one is a debtor, as distinguished from "active debt,"—those which are owed to one; the terms being used in the same sense as "bills payable" and "bills receivable." The term "passive debt" is also used to indicate one upon which no interest is payable, as distinguished from "active debt,"—one which draws interest.

PASSIVE TRUST. See "Trust."

PASSIVE USE. A permissive use (q. v.)

PASSPORT (Fr. passer, to pass, port, harbor or gate).

——In Maritime Law. A paper containing a permission from the neutral state to the captain or master of a ship or vessel to proceed on the voyage proposed. It usually contains his name and residence, the name, property, description, tonnage, and destination of the ship, the nature and quantity of the cargo, the place from whence it comes, and its destination, with such other matters as the practice of the place requires.

It is also called a "sea brief," or "sea letter." But Marshall distinguishes sea letter from passport, which latter, he says, is intended to protect the ship, while the former relates to the cargo, destination, etc. See Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 66, note. This document is indispensably necessary in time of war for the safety of every neutral vessel. Marsh. Ins. bk. 1, c. 9, § 6, 317, 406b.

A Mediterranean pass or protection against the Barbary powers. Jacobsen, Sea Laws, 66, note; Act Cong. 1796.

——In International Law. A document granted in time of war to protect persons or property from the general operation of hostilities. Wheaton, Int. Law, 475; 1 Kent, Comm. 161; 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 3.

An official letter of identification, given to travelers in most countries of continental Europe. These are intended to protect them on their journey from all molestation while they are obedient to the laws. Passports are also granted by the secretary of state to persons travelling abroad, certifying that they are citizens of the United States. 9 Pet. (U. S.) 692. See 1 Kent, Comm. 162, 182; Merlin, Repert.

PASTO (Spanish; from Lat. pastus, q. v.) In Spanish law. Feeding; pasture; a right of pasture. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 1, c. 6, § 4.

PASTURES. Lands upon which beasts feed themselves. By a grant of pastures, the land itself passes. 1 Thomas, Co. Litt. 202.

PASTUS. The procuration or provision which feudal tenants were bound to make for their lords at certain times, or as often as they made a progress to their lands. It was often converted into money. Wharton.

PATEAT UNIVERSIS PER PRAESENtes. Know all men by these presents.

PATENT. A grant of some privilege, property, or authority, made by the government or sovereign of a country to one or more individuals. Phil. Pat. 1.

As the term was originally used in England, it signified certain written instruments emanating from the king, and sealed with the great seal. These instruments conferred grants of lands, honors, or franchises; they were called "letters patent," from being delivered open, and by way of contradistinction from instruments like the French lettres de cachet, which went out sealed.

In the United States the word "patent" is sometimes understood to mean the title deed by which a government, either state or federal, conveys its lands. But in its more usual acceptation it is understood as referring to those instruments by which the United States secures to inventors for a limited time the exclusive use of their own inventions.

PATENT AMBIGUITY. One arising from the words of an instrument, and hence obvious on its face before attempting to apply the words to the subject matter. See "Latent Ambiguity."

PATENT OF PRECEDENCE. Letters patent granted, in England, to such barristers as the crown thinks fit to honor with that mark of distinction, whereby they are entitled to such rank and preaudience as are assigned in their respective patents, which is sometimes next after the attorney general, but more usually next after her majesty's counsel then being. These rank promiscuously with the king's (or queen's) counsel, but are not the sworn servants of the crown. 3 Bl. Comm. 28; 3 Steph. Comm. 274.

PATENT RIGHT. A right of exclusive sale or manufacture secured by a patent.

PATENT ROLLS. In English law. Rolls containing the records of letters patent granted by the crown since the year 1516. The earlier of these records are deposited in the Tower, the others are in the Rolls' Chapel. Hubback, Ev. Success. 616, 617, where a particular description is given.

PATENT WRIT. In old practice. An open writ; one not closed or sealed up. See "Close Writs."

PATER (Lat.) A father; the father. In the civil law, this word sometimes included avus (grandfather). Dig. 50. 16. 201.

PATER-FAMILIAS (Lat.) In civil law. One who was sui juris, and not subject to the paternal power.

In order to give a correct idea of what was understood in the Roman law by this term, it is proper to refer briefly to the artificial organization of the Roman family,—the greatest moral phenomenon in the history of the human race. The comprehensive term familia embraced both persons and property. Money, lands, houses, slaves, children, all constituted part of this artificial family, this juridical entity, this legal patrimony, the title to which was exclusively vested in the chief or pater-familias, who alone was capax dominii, and who belonged to himself, sui juris.

The word pater-familias is by no means equivalent to the modern expression father of a family, but means "proprietor," in the strongest sense of that term. It is he, qui in domo dominium habet, in whom were centered all property, all power, all authority. He was, in a word, the lord and master, whose authority was unlimited. No one but he who was sui juris, who was pater-familias, was capable of exercising any right of property, or wielding any superiority or power over anything, for nothing could belong to him who was himself alieni juris. Hence the children of the filii-familias, as well as those of slaves, belonged to the pater-familias. In the same manner, everything that was acquired by the sons or slaves formed a part of the familia, and, consequently, belonged to its chief. This absolute property and power of the pater-familias only ceased with his life, unless he voluntarily parted with them by a sale; for the alienation by sale is invariably the symbol resorted to for the purpose of dissolving the stern dominion of the pater-familias over those belonging to the familia. Thus, both emancipation and adoption are the results of imaginary sales.—per imaginarias venditiones. As the daughter remained in the family of her father, grandfather, or great-grandfather, as the case might be, notwithstanding her marriage, it followed as a necessary consequence that the child never belonged to the same family as its mother. There is no civil relationship between them; they are natural relations—cognati.—but they are not legally related to each other.—agnati, and therefore the child never inherits from its mother, nor the mother from her child. There was, however, a means by which the wife might enter into the family and subject herself to the power of her husband, in manu mariti, and thereby establish a legal relationship between herself and her husband. This marital power of the husband over the wife was generally acquired either coemptione, by the purchase of the wife by the husband from the pater-familias, or usu, by the prescription based on the possession of one year,—the same by which the title to movable property was acquired according to the principles governing the usucapio (usu capere, to obtain by use). Another mode of obtaining the same end was the confarreatio, a sacred ceremony performed by the breaking and eating of a small cake, farreum, by the married couple. It was supposed that by an observance of this ceremony the marital power was produced by the intervention of the gods. This solemn mode of celebrating marriages was peculiar to the patrician families. By means of these fictions and ceremonies, the wife became, in the eye of the law, the daughter of her husband, and the sister of the children to whom she gave birth, who would otherwise have been strangers to her. Well might Gaius say, Fere nulli alii sunt homines qui talem in liberos habeant potestatem, qualem nos habemus.

This extraordinary organization of the Roman family, and the unlimited powers and authority vested in the pater-familias, continued until the reign of Justinian, who, by his 118th Novel, enacted on the 9th of August, 544, abolished the distinction between the agnatio and cognatio, and established the order of inheritance, which, with some modifications, continues to exist at the present day in all countries whose jurisprudence is based on the civil law. See "Patria Potestas."

PATER IS EST QUEM NUPTIAE DEmonstrant. The father is he whom the marriage points out. 1 Bl. Comm. 446; 7 Mart. (N. S.; La.) 548, 553; Dig. 2. 4. 5; 1 Bouv. Inst. notes 273, 304, 322; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 458.

PATER PATRIAE. Father of the country. See "Parens Patriae."

PATERNA PATERNIS (Lat. the father's to the father's). In French law. An expression used to signify that, in a succession, the property coming from the father of the deceased descends to his paternal relations.

PATERNAL. That which belongs to the father or comes from him; as, paternal power, paternal relation, paternal estate, paternal line. See "Line."

PATERNAL POWER. The authority lawfully exercised by parents over their children. See "Father."

PATERNAL PROPERTY. That which descends or comes from the father and other ascendants or collaterals of the paternal stock. Domat, tit. 3, § 2, note 11.

PATERNITY. The state or condition of a father.

PATIBULATED. Hanged.

PATIBULUM. In old English law. A gallows or gibbet. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 3, § 9.

PATIENS. In the civil law, the passive party to a transaction. The correlative term is agens. See "Agent and Patient."

PATRIA (Lat.) The country; the men of the neighborhood competent to serve on a jury; a jury. This word is nearly synonymous with pais (q. v.)

PATRIA LABORIBUS ET EXPENSIS non debet fatigari. A jury ought not to be harassed by labors and expenses. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 6.

PATRIA POTESTAS (Lat.) In civil law. The paternal power; the authority which the law vests in the father over the persons and property of his legitimate children.

One of the effects of marriage is the paternal authority over the children born in wedlock. In the early period of the Roman history, the paternal authority was unlimited. The father had the absolute control over his children, and might even, as the domestic magistrate of his family, condemn them to death. They could acquire nothing except for the benefit of the pater-familias (q. v.), and they were even liable to be sold and reduced to slavery by the author of their existence. But in the progress of civilization, this stern rule was gradually relaxed. The voice of nature and humanity was listened to on behalf of the oppressed children of a cruel and heartless father. A passage in the 37th book (title 12, § 5) of the Pandects informs us that, in the year 870 of Rome, the emperor Trajan compelled a father to release his son from the paternal authority, on account of cruel treatment. The same emperor sentenced a father to transportation because he had killed his son in a hunting party, although the son had been guilty of adultery with his stepmother; for, says Marcianus, who reports the case, patria potestas in pietate debet, non in atrocitate, consistere. Ulpianus says that a father is not permitted to kill his son without a judgment from the prefect or the president of the province. In the year 981 of Rome, the emperor Alexander Severus addressed a constitution to a father, which is found in book 8, tit. 47, § 3, of the Justinian Code, in which he says: "Your paternal authority authorizes you to chastise your son, and, if he persists in his misconduct, you may bring him before the president of the province, who will sentence him to such punishment as you may desire." In the same book and title of the Code we find a constitution of the emperor Constantine, dated in the year of Rome 1065, which inflicts the punishment denounced against parricide on the father who shall be convicted of having killed his son. The power of selling the child, which at first was unlimited, was also much restricted, and finally altogether abolished, by subsequent legislation, especially during the empire. Paulus, who wrote about the middle of the tenth century of Rome, informs us that the father could only sell his child in case of extreme poverty,—contemplatione extremae necessitatis aut alimentarum gratia. In 1039 of Rome, Diocletian and Maximian declare in a rescript that it is beyond doubt (manifestissimi juris) that a father can neither sell nor pledge nor donate his children. Constantine, in 1059, permitted the sale by the father of his child at its birth, and when forced to do so by abject poverty,—propter nimiam paupertatem egestatemque victus; and the same law is reenacted in the Code of Justinian. Code, 4. 43. 2. 3.

The father, being bound to indemnify the party who had been injured by the offenses of his child, could release himself from this responsibility by an abandonment of the offender, in the same manner as the master could abandon his slave for a similar purpose,—noxali causa mancipare. This power of abandonment continued to exist, with regard to male children, up to the time of Gaius, in the year 925 of Rome. But by the Institutes of Justinian it is forbidden. Inst. 4. 8. 7.

With regard to the rights of the father to the property the child might acquire, it was originally as extensive and absolute as if it had been acquired by a slave. The child could possess nothing nor acquire anything that did not belong to the father. It is true, the child might possess a peculium, but of this he had only a precarious enjoyment, subject to the will and pleasure of the father. Under the first emperors, a distinction was made in favor of the son as to such property as had been acquired by him in the army, which was called castrense peculium, to which the son acquired a title in himself. Constantine extended this rule by applying it to such property as the child had acquired by services in offices held in the state, or by following a liberal profession. This was denominated quasi castrense peculium. He also created the peculium adventitium, which was composed of all property inherited by the son from his mother, whether by will or ab intestat; but the father had the usufruct of this peculium. Arcadius and Honorius extended it to everything the son acquired by succession or donations from his grandfather or mother or other ascendants in the maternal line. Theodosius and Valentinian embraced in it whatever was given by one of the spouses to the other, and Justinian included in it everything acquired by the son, except such as was produced by property belonging to the father himself. It is thus seen that, by the legislation of Justinian and his predecessors, the paternal power with regard to property was almost entirely destroyed.

The pater familias had not only under his paternal power his own children, but also the children of his sons and grandsons,—in fact, all his descendants in the male line; and this authority continued in full force and vigor, no matter what might be the age of those subject to it. The highest offices in the government did not release the incumbent from the paternal authority. The victorious general or consul to whom the honors of a triumph were decreed by the senate was subject to the paternal power in the same manner and to the same extent as the humblest citizen. It is to be observed, however, that the domestic subjection did not interfere with the capacity of exercising the highest public functions in the state. The children of the daughter were not subject to the paternal authority of her father,—they entered into the family of her husband. Women could never exercise the paternal power.

And even when a woman was herself sui juris, she could not exercise the paternal power. It is for this reason, Ulpian observes, that the family of which a woman, sui juris, was the head, mater-familias, commenced and ended with her,—mulier autem familiae suae et caput et finis est. 1 Ortolan, 191 et seq.

The modern civil law has hardly preserved any features of the old Roman jurisprudence concerning the paternal power. Article 233 of the Louisiana Code provides, it is true, that a child, whatever be its age, owes honor and respect to its father and mother; and the next article adds that the child remains under the authority of the father and mother until his majority or emancipation, and that, in case of a difference of opinion between the parents, the authority of the father shall prevail. In the succeeding article, obedience is enjoined on the child to the orders of the parents as long as he remains subject to the paternal authority. But article 236 renders the foregoing rules in a great measure nugatory, by declaring that "a child under the age of puberty cannot quit the paternal house without the permission of his father and mother, who have a right to correct him, provided it be done in a reasonable manner." So that the power of correction ceases with the age of fourteen for boys and twelve for girls. Nay, at these ages the children may leave the paternal roof in opposition to the will of their parents. It is seen that, by the modern law, the paternal authority is vested in both parents, but practically it is generally exercised by the father alone, for, wherever there is a difference of opinion, his will prevails. The great object to be attained by the exercise of the paternal power is the education of the children to prepare them for the battle of life, to make them useful citizens and respectable members of society. During the marriage, the parents are entitled to the enjoyment of the property of their minor children, subject to the obligation of supporting and educating them, and of paying the taxes, making the necessary repairs, etc. Donations made to minors are accepted by their parents or other ascendants. The father has under his control all actions which it may be necessary to bring for his minor children during the marriage. When the marriage is dissolved by the death of one of the spouses, the paternal power ceases, and the tutorship is opened; but the surviving parent is the natural tutor, and can at his death appoint a testamentary tutor to his minor children. See "Pater-Familias."

PATRIA POTESTAS IN PIETATE DEBet, non in atrocitate consistere. Paternal power should consist in affection, not in atrocity.

PATRICIDE. One guilty of killing his father. See "Parricide."

PATRICIUS. In Roman law. A nonhereditary title of nobility conferred by the emperor.

PATRIMONIAL. A thing which comes from the father, and, by extension, from the mother or other ancestor.

PATRIMONIUM. In civil law. That which is capable of being inherited.

Things capable of being possessed by a single person exclusively of all others are, in the Roman or civil law, said to be in patrimonio; when incapable of being so possessed, they are extra patrimonium.

Most things may be inherited; but there are some which are said to be extra patrimonium, or which are not in commerce. These are such as are common, as the light of heaven, the air, the sea, and the like; things public, as rivers, harbors, roads, creeks, ports, arms of the sea, the seashore, highways, bridges, and the like; things which belong to cities and municipal corporations, as public squares, streets, market houses, and the like. See 1 Bouv. Inst. notes 421-446.

PATRIMONY. Any kind of property; such estate as has descended in the same family; estates which have descended or been devised in a direct line from the father, and, by extension, from the mother or other ancestor.

The father's duty to take care of his children. Swinb. Wills, pt. 3, § 18, note 31, p. 235.

PATRIMUS (Lat. from pater, father). In the civil law. One who had a father living. Calv. Lex.; Spelman.

PATRINUS (Law Lat. from pater, father). In old ecclesiastical law. A godfather. Spelman.

PATROCINIUM (Lat.) In the Roman law. Patronage; protection; defense. The business or duty of a patron or advocate. See "Patronus."

PATRON.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. He who has the disposition and gift of an ecclesiastical benefice.

——In Roman Law. The former master of a freedman. Dig. 2. 4. 8. 1.

PATRONAGE. The right of appointing to office; as, the patronage of the president of the United States, if abused, may endanger the liberties of the people.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. The right of presentation to a church or ecclesiastical benefice. 2 Bl. Comm. 21.

PATRONATUS (Lat. from patronus, q. v.)

——In the Roman Law. The condition, relation, right, or duty of a patron.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. Patronage (q. v.)

PATRONUM FACIUNT DOS, AEDIFICAtio, fundus. Endowment, building, and land make a patron. Dod. Adv. 7.

PATRONUS (Lat.) In Roman law. A modification of the Latin word pater, father. A denomination applied by Romulus to the first senators of Rome, and which they always afterwards bore. Romulus at first appointed a hundred of them. Seven years afterwards, in consequence of the association of Tatius to the Romans, a hundred more were appointed, chosen from the Sabines. Tarquinius Priscus increased the number to three hundred. Those appointed by Romulus and Tatius were called patres majorum gentium, and the others were called patres minorum gentium. These and their descendants constituted the nobility of Rome. The rest of the people were called the "plebeians," every one of whom was obliged to choose one of these fathers as his patron. The relation thus constituted involved important consequences. The plebeian, who was called cliens (a client), was obliged to furnish the means of maintenance to his chosen patron, to furnish a portion for his patron's daughters, to ransom him and his sons, if captured by an enemy, and pay all sums recovered against him by judgment of the courts. The patron, on the other hand, was obliged to watch over the interests of his client, whether present or absent, to protect his person and property, and especially to defend him in all actions brought against him for any cause. Neither could accuse or bear testimony against the other, or give contrary votes, etc. The contract was of a sacred nature; the violation of it was a sort of treason, and punishable as such. According to Cicero (De Repub. ii. 9), this relation formed an integral part of the governmental system, Et habuit plebem in clientelas principum descriptum, which he affirms was eminently useful. Blackstone traces the system of vassalage to this ancient relation of patron and client. It was, in fact, of the same nature as the feudal institutions of the middle ages, designed to maintain order in a rising state by a combination of the opposing interests of the aristocracy and of the common people, upon the principle of reciprocal bonds for mutual interests. Dumazeau, Barreau Romain, § iii. Ultimately, by force of radical changes in the institution, the word patronus came to signify nothing more than an advocate. Id. iv.

PATROON. In old New York law. The lord of a manor.

PATRUELIS (Lat.) In civil law. A cousin german by the father's side; the son or daughter of a father's brother. Dig. 38. 10. 1.

PATRUUS (Lat.) In civil law. An uncle by the father's side; a father's brother. Dig. 38. 10. 10. Patruus magnus is a grandfather's brother,—grand-uncle. Patruus major is a great-grandfather's brother. Patruus maximus is a great-grandfather's father's brother.

PAUPER. One so poor that he must be supported at the public expense.

PAUPERIS (Lat.) In civil law. Poverty. In a technical sense, damnum absque injuria, i. e., a damage done without wrong on the part of the doer; e. g., damage done by an irrational being, as an animal. L. 1, § 3, D. si quod paup. fec.; Vicat; Calv. Lex.

PAVIAGE. A contribution or tax for paving streets or highways.

PAWN. A pledge. A pledge includes, in Louisiana, a pawn and an antichresis; but sometimes pawn is used as the general word, including pledge and antichresis. Civ. Code La. art. 3101; Hennen, Dig. "Pledge."

PAWNBROKER. One whose business it is to lend money, usually in small sums, upon pawn or pledge.

PAWNEE. He who receives a pawn or pledge.

PAWNOR. One who, being liable to an engagement, gives to the person to whom he is liable a thing to be held as a security for the payment of his debt or the fulfillment of his liability.

PAX (Lat.) In old English law. Peace; the peace. A state of order and quiet, in the preservation of which the whole community was concerned; otherwise called the "king's peace" (pax regis), he being the principal conservator of the peace of the kingdom. 1 Bl. Comm. 268, 349, 350. Quod pax nostra teneatur, that our peace be maintained. Magna Carta, 9 Hen. III. c. 35. The term occurs also in feudal law. Feud. Lib. 2, tits. 27, 53.

Freedom from molestation by another. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 51, §§ 2, 3.

The privilege of a member of a legislative assembly. See 1 Bl. Comm. 165.

PAX ECCLESIAE (Law Lat.) In old English law. The peace of the church. See "Peace of God and the Church."

A particular privilege attached to a church; sanctuary (q. v.) Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 41; Cowell.

PAX REGIS (Lat.) The peace of the king. That peace or security for life and goods which the king promises to all persons under his protection. Bracton, lib. 3, c. 11; 6 Rich. II. st. 1, c. 13.

In ancient times there were certain limits which were known by this name. The pax regis, or verge of the court, as it was afterwards called, extended from the palace gate to the distance of three miles, three furlongs, three acres, nine feet, nine palms, and nine barleycorns (Crabb, Com. Law, 41); or from the four sides of the king's residence, four miles, three furlongs, nine acres in breadth, nine feet, nine barleycorns, etc. (LL. Edw. Conf. c. 12, et LL. Hen. I.)

PAYABLE. A sum of money is said to be payable when a person is under an obligation to pay it. "Payable" may therefore signify an obligation to pay at a future time, but, when used without qualification, "payable" means that the debt is payable at once, as opposed to "owing." 2 Ch. Div. 103.

PAYEE. The person in whose favor a note or bill of exchange is made payable.

PAYMENT. The fulfillment of a promise, or the performance of an agreement.

The discharge in money of a sum due.

In its most general sense, the rendition by the person under an obligation (68 Cal. 41) to the person to whom the same is due, or one lawfully authorized to represent him (6 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 161), of the exact act or thing required by such obligation (23 La. Ann. 84; 3 Duer [N. Y.] 441; 1 Cush. [Mass.] 76), with the assent of both parties that the same is rendered and received in satisfaction of such obligation, and not for another purpose (50 Mich. 112; 6 Heisk. [Tenn.] 131).

In a more restricted sense, payment is the rendition of a sum of money due. As so used, payment in cash is implied, and the giving of a note or check is not payment. 26 Conn. 487; 70 Iowa, 406; 42 N. Y. 538.

PAYMENT INTO COURT. Deposit of a sum of money with a proper officer of court for the benefit of the adverse party, and by way of a continuing tender thereof to him in answer to his claim.

PAYS. Country. Trial per pays, trial by jury (the country). See "Pais."

PEACE (Law Fr. peas, pees; Lat. pax). Quiet, orderly behavior; the quiet, orderly behavior of the citizens or subjects of a community towards one another, and towards the government, which is said to be broken by acts of a certain kind. See "Breach of Peace." Defined in the old books, "a quiet and harmless behaviour toward the king and his people." Lambard, Eiren. lib. 1, c. 2; Cowell.

PEACE OF GOD AND THE CHURCH. The freedom from suits at law between the terms. Spelman; Jacob.

PECCATA CONTRA NATURAM SUNT gravissima. Offenses against nature are the heaviest. 3 Inst. 20.

PECCATUM PECCATO ADDIT QUI CULpae quam facit patrocinium defensionis adjungit. He adds one offense to another who, when he commits a crime, joins to it the protection of a defense. 5 Coke, 49.

PECK. A measure of capacity, equal to two gallons. See "Measure."

PECORA (Lat.; pl. of pecus). In the Roman law. Cattle; beasts. The term included all quadrupeds that fed in flocks. Dig. 32. 65. 4.

PECULATION.

——In Civil Law. The unlawful appropriation, by a depositary of public funds, of the property of the government intrusted to his care, to his own use or that of others. Domat, Supp. au. Dr. Pub. lib. 3, tit. 5.

——In American Law. An offense defined by statute in New York, essentially the same as in the civil law.

PECULATUS. In the civil law. The offense of stealing or embezzling the public money. Hence the common English word "peculation;" but "embezzlement" is the proper legal term. 4 Bl. Comm. 121, 122.

PECULIAR. In ecclesiastical law. A parish or church in England which has jurisdiction of ecclesiastical matters within itself, and independent of the ordinary.

They may be either:

(1) Royal, which include the sovereign's free chapels.

(2) Of the archbishops, excluding the jurisdiction of the bishops and archdeacons.

(3) Of the bishops, excluding the jurisdiction of the bishop of the diocese in which they are situated.

(4) Of the bishops in their own diocese, excluding archdiaconal jurisdiction.

(5) Of deans, deans and chapters, prebendaries, and the like, excluding the bishop's jurisdiction in consequence of ancient compositions.

The court of peculiars has jurisdiction of causes arising in such of these peculiars as are subject to the metropolitan of Canterbury. In other peculiars the jurisdiction is exercised by commissaries. 1 Phillim. Ecc. Law, 202, note 245; Skin. 589; 3 Bl. Comm. 65.

PECULIUM (Lat.) In civil law. The most ancient kind of peculium was the peculium profectitium of the Roman law, which signified that portion of the property acquired by a son or slave which the father or master allowed him, to be managed as he saw fit. In modern civil law there are other kinds of peculium, viz., peculium castrense, which includes all movables given to a son by relatives and friends on his going on a campaign, all the presents of comrades, and his military pay and the things bought with it; peculium quasi castrense, which includes all acquired by a son by performing the duties of a public or spiritual office or of an advocate, and also gifts from the reigning prince; peculium adventitium, which includes the property of son's mother and relatives on that side of the house, and all which comes to him on a second marriage of his parents, and, in general, all his acquisitions which do not come from his father's property, and do not come under castrense or quasi castrense peculium.

The peculium profectitium remains the property of the father. The peculium castrense and quasi castrense are entirely the property of the son. The peculium adventitium belongs to the son, but he cannot alien it nor dispose of it by will; nor can the father, unless under peculiar circumstances, alien it without consent of son. Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 557-559; Vicat; Inst. 2. 9. 1; Dig. 15. 1. 5. 3; Poth. ad Pand. lib. 50, tit. 17, c. 2, art. 3.

PECULIUM CASTRENSE. That property which a minor son who was in the army might hold by reason thereof, or which he acquired in war.

PECUNIA (Lat.) In civil law. Property, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal. Things in general, omnes res. So the law of the Twelve Tables said, uti quisque paterfamilias legassit super pecunia tutelare rei suae, ita jus esto, in whatever manner a father of a family may have disposed of his property, or of the tutorship of his things, let this disposition be law. 1 Lec. Elm. 288. But Paulus (liber 5, D. de Verb. Signif.) gives it a narrower sense than res, which he says means what is not included within patrimony; pecunia what is. Vicat. In a still narrower sense, it means those things only which have measure, weight, and number, and most usually strictly money. Id. The general sense of property occurs, also, in the old English law. Leg. Edw. Confess. c. 10.

Flocks were the first riches of the ancients; and it is from pecus that the words pecunia, peculium, and peculatus are derived. In old English law, pecunia often retains the force of pecus. So often in Domesday Book, —pastura ibidem pecuniae villae, i. e., pasture for cattle of the village. So vivae pecuniae, live stock. Leg. Edw. Confess. c. 10; Emendat. Willielmi Primi ad Leges Edw. Confess.; Cowell.

PECUNIA CONSTITUTA. In Roman law. Money owing (even upon a moral obligation) upon a day being fixed (constituta) for its payment became recoverable upon the implied promise to pay on that day, in an action called "de pecunia constituta," the implied promise not amounting (of course) to a stipulatio.

PECUNIA DICITUR A PECUS, OMNES enim veterum divitiae in animalibus consistebant. Money (pecunia) is so called from cattle (pecus), because all the wealth of our ancestors consisted in cattle. Co. Litt. 207.

PECUNIA NONNUMERATA (Lat.) Money not paid or numbered. The exceptio nonnumeratae pecuniae (plea of money not paid) is allowed to the principal or surety by the creditor. Calv. Lex.

PECUNIA NUMERATA (Lat.) Money given in payment of a debt. Properly used of the creditor, who is properly said to number, i. e., count out, the money to the debtor which he must pay, and improperly of the debtor, who is said to number or count out the money to the creditor, i. e., to pay it. Vicat; Calv. Lex.

PECUNIA SEPULCHRALIS. Money anciently paid to the priest at the opening of a grave for the good of the deceased's soul.

PECUNIA TRAJECTITIA (Lat.) A loan of money which, either itself or in the shape of goods bought with it, is to be carried over the sea, the lender to take the risk from the commencement of voyage till arrival at port of destination, and on that account to have higher interest; which interest is not essential to the contract, but, if reserved, is called foenus nauticum. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 398b. The term foenus nauticum is sometimes applied to the transaction as well as the interest, making it coextensive with pecunia trajectitia.

PECUNIARY. That which relates to money.

PECUNIARY CAUSES. Causes in ecclesiastical courts where satisfaction is sought for withholding ecclesiastical dues, or the doing or neglecting some act connected with the church. 3 Bl. Comm. 88. For what causes are ecclesiastical, see 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 39.

PECUNIARY LEGACY. A bequest of money.

PECUNIARY LOSS. A loss of money, or of that by which money or something of money value may be acquired. 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 33.

PECUS (Lat.; pl. pecudes). In the Roman law. Cattle; a beast. Under a bequest of pecudes were included oxen and other beasts of burden. Dig. 32. 81. 2.

PEDAGIUM, or PEDAGE (Lat. from pes, foot). Money paid for passing by foot or horse through any forest or country. Pupilla Oculi, p. 9, c. 7; Cassan de Coutum. Burgund. p. 118; Rot. Vasc. 22 Edw. III. m. 34.

PEDANEUS (Lat. from pes, foot). In the Roman law. On, or at the foot; occupying a low position. A term applied to the judices appointed by the praetor to determine causes; either from their not occupying a tribunal or elevated seat, or because they were occupied with small or less important causes. See "Judex Pedaneus."

PEDAULUS (Lat. from pes, foot). In civil law. A judge who sat at the foot of the tribunal, i. e., on the lowest seats, ready to try matters of little moment at command of praetor. Calv. Lex.; Vicat.

PEDE PULVEROSUS. In old English and Scotch law. Dusty foot. A term applied to itinerant merchants, chapmen, or peddlers who attended fairs. "Ane merchand or cremar quha hes ne certaine dwelling place quhair the dust may be dicht fra his feet or schone." Skene de Verb. Sign.

PEDIGREE. A succession of degrees from the origin. It is the state of the family as far as regards the relationship of the different members, their births, marriages, and deaths. This term is applied to persons or families who trace their origin or descent.

PEDIS ABSCISSIO (Lat.) In old criminal law. The cutting off a foot; a punishment anciently inflicted instead of death. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38.

PEDIS POSITIO (Lat. a planting or placing of the foot). A term used to denote an actual corporal possession. Possessio est quasi pedis positio, possession is, as it were, a planting of the foot. 3 Coke, 42; 8 Johns. (N. Y.) per Kent, C. J.; 5 Pa. St. 303; 2 Nev & M. 343. See "Pedis Possessio."

PEDIS POSSESSIO (Lat.) A foothold; an actual possession. To constitute adverse possession, there must be pedis possessio, or a substantial inclosure. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2193; 2 Nott. & McC. (S. C.) 343.

PEDLARS. Persons who travel about the country with merchandise for the purpose of selling it.

One is a pedlar who carries his goods about the country for sale by public conveyance. 4 Barn. & A. 510.

One who solicits orders by sample for one who ships the same from an established place of business is not a pedlar. 34 Kan. 434.

Persons, except those peddling newspapers, Bibles, or religious tracts, who sell, or offer to sell, at retail, goods, wares, or other commodities, travelling from place to place, in the street, or through different parts of the country. Act Cong. July 1, 1862.

PEERS (Lat. pares). The vassals of a lord; the freeholders of a neighborhood, before whom livery of seisin was to be made, and before whom, as the jury of the county, trials were had. 2 Bl. Comm. 316. Trial by a man's peers or equals is one of the rights reserved by Magna Charta. 4 Bl. Comm. 349. These vassals were called pares curiae (q. v.) 1 Washb. Real Prop. 23. One's equals in rank and condition.

The nobility of England, who, though of different ranks, viz., dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons, yet are equal in their privilege of sitting and voting in the house of lords; hence they are called "peers of the realm." They are created by writ summoning them to attend the house of lords by the title intended to be given, or by letters patent directly conferring the dignity. The former is the more ancient way, but the grant by patent is more certain. See Sullivan, Lect. 19a; 1 Wooddeson, Lect. 37.

Peers are tried by their peers in cases of treason, felony, and misprision of the same. In cases of treason, felony, and breach of the peace, they have no privilege from arrest. 1 Bl. Comm. 401*, note 11.

Bishops who sit in parliament are peers; but the word "spiritual" is generally added: e. g., "lords temporal and spiritual." 1 Bl. Comm. 401*, note 12.

PEERS OF FEES. Vassals or tenants of the same lord, who were obliged to serve and attend him in his courts, being equal in function. These were termed "peers of fees," because holding fees of the lord, or because their business in court was to sit and judge, under their lords, of disputes arising upon fees; but, if there were too many in one lordship, the lord usually chose twelve, who had the title of peers, by way of distinction; whence, it is said, we derive our common juries and other peers. Cowell.

PEGGED. See "Gambling Contract."

PEINE FORTE ET DURE (Law Fr.) In English law. A punishment formerly inflicted in England on a person who, being arraigned of felony, refused to plead and put himself on his trial, and stubbornly stood mute; the purpose of standing mute being, of course, to avoid the confiscation of estate which would follow on conviction. He was to be laid down, naked, on his back, on the ground, his feet, head, and loins covered, his arms and legs drawn apart by cords, and as much weight of iron or stone as he could bear placed on his chest. He was to have the next day three morsels of barley bread, without drink; the next, three draughts, as much each time as he could drink, of the nearest stagnant water to the prison, without bread; and such was to be his diet on alternate days till he died. It was vulgarly called "pressing to death." 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 134; 4 Bl. Comm. 324; Cowell; Britt. c. 4, fol. 11*. This punishment was introduced between 31 Edw. III. and 8 Hen. IV. 4 Bl. Comm. 324; Y. B. 8 Hen. IV. 1. Standing mute is now, by statute, in England, equivalent to a confession or a verdict of guilty. 12 Geo. III. c. 20. See "Standing Mute."

The only instance in which this punishment has ever been inflicted in this country is that of Giles Cory, of Salem, who refused to plead when arraigned for witchcraft. Washb. Jud. Hist. 142; 1 Chand. Am. Crim. Tr. 122.

PELLEX (Lat.) In the Roman law. A concubine. Dig. 50. 16. 144.

PELLS, CLERK OF THE. An officer in the English exchequer, who entered every seller's bill on the parchment rolls, the roll of receipts, and the roll of disbursements.

PENAL (from Lat. poenalis, from poena, punishment or penalty). Enacting punishment. Webster. Imposing a punishment or penalty. See "Penal Statutes."

Connected with a penalty, either as the object or consequence of an action.

PENAL ACTION. An action for recovery of statute penalty; "penalty" in this case being used in its narrowest sense of a pecuniary punishment for a noncriminal act. 3 Steph. Comm. 535. See Hawk. P. C. "Informatio." It is distinguished from a popular or qui tam action, in which the action is brought by the informer, to whom part of the penalty goes. A penal action or information is brought by an officer, and the penalty goes to the king. 1 Chit. Gen. Prac. 25, note; 2 Archb. Prac. 188.

PENAL BILL. The old name for a bond with condition, by which a person is bound to pay a certain sum of money or do a certain act, or, in default thereof, pay a certain sum of money by way of penalty. Jacob, "Bill."

PENAL LAWS. Laws imposing a penalty; the term being used, like "penalty," in several senses.

PENAL STATUTES. Those which inflict a penalty for the violation of some of their provisions.

PENAL SUM. A sum payable as a penalty. Usually applied to the sum fixed by a bond to be paid on breach of its condition.

PENALTY. The punishment inflicted by law for an illegal act. The term is used loosely to embrace all the consequences visited by law on those who violate police regulations. 26 Mich. 482.

In a narrower sense it is confined to pecuniary penalties. "The terms fine, forfeiture and penalty are often used loosely, and even confusedly. But when a discrimination is made, the word 'penalty' is found to be generic in its character, including both fine and forfeiture." 4 Iowa, 300.

In its narrowest sense, it includes only pecuniary punishment imposed by statute for such unlawful acts as do not constitute crimes or which are for this purpose regarded in other than their criminal aspect.

——In Contracts. A clause in an agreement, by which the obligor agrees to pay a certain sum of money if he shall fail to fulfill the contract contained in another clause of the same agreement.

A penal obligation differs from an alternative obligation, for this is but one in its essence; while a penalty always includes two distinct engagements, and when the first is fulfilled the second is void. When a breach has taken place, the obligor has his option to require the fulfillment of the first obligation, or the payment of the penalty, in those cases which cannot be relieved in equity, when the penalty is considered as liquidated damages.

PENANCE. In ecclesiastical law. An ecclesiastical punishment inflicted by an ecclesiastical court for some spiritual offense. Ayliffe, Par. 420.

PENDENCY. The state of being pending or undecided.

PENDENS (Lat. from pendere, to hang). Hanging; pending. See "Lis Pendens."

PENDENTE LITE (Lat.) Pending the continuance of an action while litigation continues. See "Lis Pendens."

PENDENTE LITE NIHIL INNOVETUR. During a litigation, nothing should be changed. Co. Litt. 344. See 20 How. (U. S.) 106; Cross, Liens, 140; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 406; 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 441; 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 33.

PENDENTES (Lat.) In civil law. The fruits of the earth not yet separated from the ground; the fruits hanging by the roots. Ersk. Inst. bk. 2, lib. 2, § 4.

PENDING. As applied to judicial proceedings, remaining undecided (4 N. H. 386), and an action has been held to be pending till the judgment is satisfied (41 N. Y. 159).

PENETRATION. In criminal law. In rape and some other sexual crimes, actual carnal knowledge is requisite, but the slightest penetration is sufficient (102 N. Y. 234), it being enough if any part of the virile member be within the labia of the pudendum (1 Car. & K. 393). Rupture of the hymeneal membrane is not requisite, though, in the absence of such rupture, proof of penetration should be clear. 8 Car. & P. 641.

PENITENTIARY. A prison in which persons convicted of serious offenses (felonies), or sentenced for long terms of imprisonment, are confined.

PENNYWEIGHT. A troy weight which weighs twenty-four grains, or one-twentieth part of an ounce.

PENSA (Law Lat. from Lat. pendere, to weigh).

——In Old English Law. A weight. Ad pensam, by weight. The ancient way of paying into the exchequer as much money for a pound sterling as weighed twelve ounces troy. Lowndes' Essay upon Coin, 4; Cowell. This was distinguished from payment de numero, by count.

——In Old Records. A wey (weigh) of salt or cheese, containing two hundred and fifty-six pounds. Cowell.

PENSIO (Lat. from pendere).

——In the Civil Law. A payment, properly, for the use of a thing. Calv. Lex.

A rent; a payment for the use and occupation of another's house. Calv. Lex.

PENSION. A stated and certain allowance granted by the government to an individual, or those who represent him, for valuable services performed by him for the country. It is sometimes loosely used in the sense of "annuity."

——In Spanish Law. Rent; a rent. White, New Recop. bk. 2, c. 2, § 3.

PENSIONER. One who is supported by an allowance at the will of another. It is more usually applied to him who receives an annuity or pension from the government.

PEONIA. In Spanish law. A portion of land which was formerly given to a simple soldier on the conquest of a country. It is now a quantity of land of different size in different provinces. In the Spanish possessions in America, it measured fifty feet front and one hundred feet deep. 2 White, Coll. 49; 12 Pet. (U. S.) 444, notes.

PEOPLE. A state; as, the people of the state of New York. A nation in its collective and political capacity. 4 Term R. 783. See 6 Pet. (U. S.) 467.

The word "people" occurs in a policy of marine insurance. The insurer insures against "detainments of all kings, princes, and people." He is not by this understood to insure against any promiscuous or lawless rabble which may be guilty of attacking or detaining a ship. 2 Marsh. Ins. 508. See "Body Politic;" "Nation."

PEPPERCORN. A dried pepper berry. In England, the payment of a peppercorn is sometimes stipulated where a nominal consideration is intended.

PER. In Latin phrases. A preposition meaning by or through.

PER ANNUM (Lat.) By the year; for the space of a year. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 71, §§ 3-12. A common expression still in use.

PER AES ET LIBRAM (Lat. aes, brass, libram, scale). In civil law. A sale was said to be made per aes et libram when one called libripens held a scale (libra), which the one buying struck with a brazen coin (aes), and said, "I say, by the right of a Roman, this thing is mine," and gave the coin to the vendor, in presence of at least three witnesses. This kind of sale was used in the emancipation of a son or slave, and in making a will. Calv. Lex. "Mancipatio;" Vicat, "Mancipatio."

PER ALLUVIONEM (Lat.) In civil law. By alluvion, or the gradual and imperceptible increase arising from deposit by water. Vocab. Jur. Utr. "Alluvio;" Angell & A. Watercourses, 53-57.

PER ALLUVIONEM ID VIDETUR ADJICI, quod ita paulatim adjucitur, ut intelligere non possumus quantum quoquo momento temporis adjiciatur. That is said to be added by alluvion which is so added little by little that we cannot tell how much is added at any one moment of time. Dig. 41. 1. 7. 1; Hale de Jur. Mar. par. 1, c. 4; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 2, § 6.

PER AND CUI. When a writ of entry is brought against a second alienee or descendant from the disseisor, it is said to be in the per and cui, because the form of the writ is that the tenant had not entry but by and under a prior alienee, to whom the intruder himself demised it. 2 Bl. Comm. 181.

PER AND POST. To come in in the per is to claim by or through the person last entitled to an estate; as the heirs or assigns of the grantee. To come in in the post is to claim by a paramount and prior title; as the lord by escheat.

PER ANNULUM ET BACULUM (Lat.) In ecclesiastical law. The symbolical investiture of an ecclesiastical dignity was per annulum et baculum, i. e., by staff and crosier. 1 Bl. Comm. 378, 379; 1 Burn, Ecc. Law, 209.

PER AUTRE VIE (Law Fr.) For or during another's life.

PER AVERSIONEM (Lat.) In civil law. By turning away. Applied to a sale not by measure or weight, but for a single price for the whole in gross; e. g., a sale of all the wine of a vineyard for a certain price. Vocab. Jur. Utr. "Aversio." Some derive the meaning of the phrase from a turning away of the risk of a deficiency in the quantity from the seller to the buyer; others, from turning away the head, i. e., failure to make a particular examination; others think aversio is for adversio. Calv. Lex.; 2 Kent, Comm. 640; 4 Kent, Comm. 517.

PER BOUCHE (Fr. by the mouth). Oral.

PER CAPITA (Lat. by the head or polls). When descendants take as individuals, and not by right of representation (per stirpes), they are said to take per capita. For example, if a legacy be given to the issue of A. B., and A. B., at the time of his death, shall have two children and two grandchildren, his estate shall be divided into four parts, and the children and grandchildren shall each have one of them. 3 Ves. 257; 13 Ves. 344; 2 Bl. Comm. 218; 6 Cush. (Mass.) 158, 162; 2 Jarm. Wills (Perkins' Notes) 47; 3 Beav. Rolls, 451; 4 Beav. Rolls, 239; 2 Steph. Comm. 253; 3 Steph. Comm. 197; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 114. See "Capitation."

PER CONSEQUENS. By consequence; consequently. Y. B. M. 9 Edw. III. 8.

PER CONSIDERATIONEM CURIAE. In old practice. By the consideration (judgment) of the court. Y. B. M. 1 Edw. II. 2.

PER CURIAM (Lat. by the court). A phrase which occurs in all the reports. It is sometimes translated. See 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 353.

PER EUNDEM. By the same. This phrase is commonly used to express "by, or from the mouth of, the same judge." So "per eundem in eadem" means "by the same judge in the same case."

PER EXTENSUM. In old practice. At length.

PER FORMAM DONI (Lat. by the form of the gift). According to the line of descent prescribed in the conveyance of the ancestor or donor of estate tail. 2 Bl. Comm. 113*; 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 323; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 74, 81.

PER FRAUDEM (Lat.) A replication to a plea where something has been pleaded which would be a discharge if it had been honestly pleaded that such a thing has been obtained by fraud; for example, where, on debt on a statute, the defendant pleads a prior action depending, if such action has been commenced by fraud, the plaintiff may reply per fraudem. 2 Chit. Pl. *675.

PER INCURIAM. Through inadvertence. 35 Eng. Law & Eq. 302.

PER INFORTUNIUM (Lat. by misadventure). In criminal law. Homicide per infortunium, or by misadventure, is said to take place when a man in doing a lawful act, without any intent to hurt, unfortunately kills another. Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 11; Fost. Crim. Law, 258, 259; 3 Inst. 56.

PER LEGEM ANGLIAE. By the law of England; by the curtesy. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 18.

PER LEGEM TERRAE. By the law of the land.

PER METAS ET BUNDAS (Law Lat.) In old English law. By metes and bounds.

PER MINAS (Lat. by threats). When a man is compelled to enter into a contract by threats or menaces, either for fear of loss of life or mayhem, he may avoid it afterwards. 1 Bl. Comm. 131; Bac. Abr. "Duress," "Murder" (A). See "Duress."

PER MISADVENTURE (Lat. and Eng.) In old English law. By mischance. 4 Bl. Comm. 182. The same with per infortunium (q. v.)

PER MY ET PER TOUT (Law Fr. by the moiety, or half, and by the whole). The mode in which joint tenants hold the joint estate, the effect of which, technically considered, is that for purposes of tenure and survivorship each is the holder of the whole, but for purposes of alienation each has only his own share, which is presumed in law to be equal. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 406; 2 Bl. Comm. 182.

PER PROCURATION. By proxy; by letter of attorney. Used in connection with the signature of an agent or attorney in fact. It is notice that the agent has but a limited authority to sign. Byles, Bills, 33. Commonly abbreviated "per proc."

The term is little used in the United States, though it has been adopted by the negotiable instrument laws. Neg. Inst. Law, § 40.

PER QUAE SERVITIA. A real action by which the grantee of a seigniory could compel the tenants of the grantor to attorn to himself. Shep. Touch. 254. It was abolished by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, § 35.

PER QUOD. By which. Used in common-law pleading to introduce a conclusion. Sometimes used as the name of the clause averring special damages.

PER QUOD CONSORTIUM AMISIT (Lat. by which he lost her company). If a man's wife is so injured that thereby he loses her company and assistance for any time, he has a separate remedy by an action of trespass (in the nature of an action on the case) per quod consortium amisit, in which he shall recover satisfaction in damages. 3 Bl. Comm. 140; Cro. Jac. 501, 538; 1 Chit. Gen. Prac. 59.

PER QUOD SERVITIUM AMISIT (Lat. by which he lost her or his service). Where a servant has been so beaten or injured that his or her services are lost to the master, the master has an action of trespass vi et armis, per quod servitium amisit, in which he must allege and prove the special damage he has sustained. 3 Bl. Comm. 142. This action is commonly brought by the father for the seduction of his daughter, in which case very slight evidence of the relation of master and servant is necessary; but still some loss of service, or some expense, must be shown. 5 East, 45; 6 East, 391; 11 East, 23; T. Raym. 459; 3 Wils. 18; 2 Term R. 4; 5 Bos. & P. 466; Peake, 253; 1 Starkie, 287; 2 Starkie, 493; 3 Esp. 119; 5 Price, 641; 11 Ga. 603; 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 279; 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 212; 8 N. Y. 191; 11 N. Y. 343; 14 N. Y. 413; 20 Pa. St. 354; 5 Md. 211; 1 Wis. 209; 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 29.

PER RATIONES PERVENITUR AD LEgitimam rationem. By reasoning we come to legal reason. Litt. § 386.

PER RERUM NATURAM, FACTUM NEgantis nulla probatio est. It is in the nature of things that he who denies a fact is not bound to give proof.

PER SALTUM (Lat.) By a leap or bound; by a sudden movement; passing over certain proceedings. "The parties have proceeded per saltum." Lord Ellenborough, 8 East, 511.

PER SE. By itself; of itself. Fraud, per se. 3 Pick. (Mass.) 257.

PER STIRPES (Lat. stirps, trunk or root of a tree or race). By or according to stocks or roots; by right of representation. Gen. St. Mass. 1860, c. 9, § 12; 6 Cush. (Mass.) 158, 162; 2 Bl. Comm. 217, 218; 2 Steph. Comm. 253; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 114, 115; 2 Kent, Comm. 425.

PER TOTAM CURIAM. By the whole court.

PER TOUT ET NON PER MY (Law Fr.) By the whole, and not by the moiety. 2 Bl. Comm. 182. See "Per My et per Tout."

PER UNIVERSITATEM (Lat. by the whole). Used of the acquisition of any property as a whole, in opposition to an acquisition by parts; e. g., the acquisition of an inheritance, or of the separate property of the son (peculium), etc. Calv. Lex. "Universitas."

PER VADIUM ET SALVOS PLEGIOS. In old practice. By gage and safe pledge. Words in the old writ of attachment or pone commanding the sheriff to summon the defendant by gage (taking of his goods) and safe pledges (requiring sureties) for appearance. 3 Bl. Comm. 280.

PER VARIOS ACTUS, LEGEM EXPERIentia facit. By various acts experience frames the law. 4 Inst. 50.

PER VERBA DE FUTURO. By words of the future (tense). 1 Bl. Comm. 439; 2 Kent, Comm. 87.

PER VERBA DE PRAESENTI. By words of the present (tense). 1 Bl. Comm. 439.

PER VISUM ECCLESIAE. In old English law. By view of the church; under the supervision of the church. The disposition of intestates' goods per visum ecclesiae was one of the articles confirmed to the prelates by King John's Magna Charta. 3 Bl. Comm. 96.

PER VIVAM VOCEM (Law Lat.) In old English law. By the living voice; the same with viva voce. Bracton, fol. 95.

PERAMBULATION. The act of walking over the boundaries of a district or piece of land, either for the purpose of determining them, or of preserving evidence of them. Thus, in many parishes in England, it is the custom for the parishioners to perambulate the boundaries of the parish in rogation week in every year. Such a custom entitles them to enter any man's land and abate nuisances in their way. Phillim. Ecc. Law, 1867; Hunt, Boundaries, 103. See, also, Britt. 124b.

PERAMBULATIONE FACIENDA, WRIT de. In English law. The name of a writ which is sued by consent of both parties when they are in doubt as to the bounds of their respective estates. It is directed to the sheriff to make perambulation, and to set the bounds and limits between them in certainty. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 309.

"The writ de perambulatione facienda is not known to have been adopted in practice in the United States," says Professor Greenleaf (Greenl. Ev. § 146, note), "but in several of the states, remedies somewhat similar in principle have been provided by statutes."

PERCENNARIUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. A parcener; one of several commoners. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 24, § 11.

PERCEPTION (from per and capere). The taking possession of. For example, a lessee or tenant before perception of the crops, i. e., before harvesting them, has a right to offset any loss which may happen to them against the rent; but after the perception they are entirely at his risk. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 378. Used of money, it means the counting out and payment of a debt. Also used for food due to soldiers. Vicat.

PERCEPTURA (Law Lat.) In old records. A wear; a place in a river made up with banks, dams, etc., for the better convenience of preserving and taking fish. Par. Ant. 120; Cowell.

PERCH. The length of sixteen feet and a half; a pole or rod of that length. Forty perches in length and four in breadth make an acre of land.

PERCOLATING WATERS. Flowing, seeping, or moving subterraneous waters.

PERDONATIO UTLAGARIAE (Lat.) In English law. A pardon for a man who, for contempt in not yielding obedience to the process of the king's courts, is outlawed, and afterwards, of his own accord, surrenders.

PERDUELLIO (Lat.) In civil law. At first, an honorable enmity to the republic; afterwards, a traitorous enmity of a citizen; consisting in being of a hostile disposition towards the republic, e. g., treason aiming at the supreme power, violating the privileges of a Roman citizen by beating him, etc., attempting anything against the person of the emperor, and, in general, any open hostility to the republic. Sometimes used for the enemy or traitor himself. Perduellio was distinguished from crimen imminutae majestatis, as being an attempt against the whole republic, punishable in comitia centuriata, by crucifixion and by infamy after death. Calv. Lex.; Vicat.

PERDURABLE (old Fr. perdurable, eternal, from Lat. per, intensive, and durabilis, lasting). As applied to an estate, perdurable signifies lasting long or forever. Thus, a disseisor or tenant in fee upon condition has as high and great an estate as the rightful owner or tenant in fee simple absolute, but not so perdurable. The term is chiefly used with reference to the extinguishment of rights by unity of seisin, which does not take place unless both the right and the land out of which it issues are held for equally high and perdurable estates. Co. Litt. 313a, 313b; Gale, Easem. 582.

PEREGRINI (Lat.) In civil law. Under the denomination of peregrini were comprehended all who did not enjoy any capacity of the law, namely, slaves, alien enemies, and such foreigners as belonged to nations with which the Romans had not established relations. Savigny, Dr. Rom. § 66.

PEREMPTORIUS (Lat. from perimere, to destroy). In civil law. That which takes away or destroys forever; hence, exceptio peremptoria, a plea which is a perpetual bar. See "Peremptory." Bracton, lib. 4, c. 20; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 36, § 3; Calv. Lex.

PEREMPTORY. Absolute; positive. A final determination to act, without hope of renewing or altering. Joined to a substantive, this word is frequently used in law; as, peremptory action (Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 35, 38, 104, 108); peremptory nonsuit (Id. 5, 11); peremptory exception (Bracton, lib. 4, c. 20); peremptory undertaking (3 Chit. Prac. 112, 793); peremptory challenge of jurors (Inst. 4. 13. 9; Code, 7. 50. 2; Id. 8. 36. 8; Dig. 5. 1. 70. 73).

PEREMPTORY CHALLENGE. A challenge without cause given, allowed to prisoner's counsel in criminal cases, up to a certain number of jurors. 11 Chit. Stat. 59, 689; 2 Harg. St. Tr. 808; 4 Harg. St. Tr. 1; Fost. Crim. Law, 42; 4 Bl. Comm. 353*. See "Challenge."

PEREMPTORY DEFENSE. A defense which insists that the plaintiff never had the right to institute the suit, or that, if he had, the original right is extinguished or determined. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4206.

PEREMPTORY EXCEPTION. Any defense which denies entirely the ground of action. 1 White, New Recop. 283. So of a demurrer. 1 Tex. 364.

PEREMPTORY INSTRUCTION. A binding instruction by the court to the jury. Usually the direction of a verdict.

PEREMPTORY MANDAMUS. A mandamus requiring a thing to be done absolutely. It is usually granted after failure to show satisfactory cause on an alternative mandamus. No other return will be permitted but absolute obedience. 3 Bl. Comm. 110*; Tapping, Mand. 400 et seq. See "Mandamus."

PEREMPTORY NONSUIT. An involuntary nonsuit. See "Nonsuit."

PEREMPTORY PAPER. A list of the causes which were enlarged at the request of the parties, or which stood over from press of business in court to a day which was specified in the paper, and which day was peremptory.

PEREMPTORY PLEA. A plea which goes to destroy the right of action itself; a plea in bar or to the action. 3 Steph. Comm. 576; 3 Wooddeson, Lect. 57; 2 Saund. Pl. & Ev. 645; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2891.

PEREMPTORY RULE. An absolute rule, as distinguished from a rule nisi.

PEREMPTORY WRIT. An original writ, called from the words of the writ a "si te fecerit securum," and which directed the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court without any option given him, provided the plaintiff gave the sheriff security effectually to prosecute his claim. The writ was rarely used, and only where nothing was specifically demanded, but only a satisfaction in general; as in the case of writs of trespass on the case, wherein no debt or other specific thing was sued for, but only damages to be assessed by a jury. Brown.

PERESEWAR (Old Scotch). In old Scotch law. Pursuer; plaintiff or prosecutor. See "Pursuer."

PERFECT. Complete.

This term is applied to rights and obligations in order to distinguish those which may be enforced by law, which are called "perfect," from those which cannot be so enforced, which are said to be "imperfect." 37 Ga. 128.

PERFECT OBLIGATION. One which is enforceable by law.

PERFECT TITLE. A title which is good both at law and in eequity. 21 Conn. 449.

PERFECT TRUST. An executed trust (q. v.)

PERFECTING BAIL. Justification of bail. See "Justifying Bail."

PERFECTUM EST CUI NIHIL DEEST secundum suae perfectionis vel naturae modum. That is perfect which wants nothing according to the measure of its perfection or nature. Hob. 151.

PERFIDY. The act of one who has engaged his faith to do a thing, and does not do it, but does the contrary. Wolff. § 390.

PERFORMANCE. Such a fulfillment of an obligation as puts an end thereto by leaving nothing more to be done.

PERICULOSUM EST RES NOVAS ET INusitatas inducere. It is dangerous to introduce new and unaccustomed things. Co. Litt. 379.

PERICULOSUM EXISTIMO QUOD BOnorum vivorum non comprobatur exemplo. I think that dangerous which is not warranted by the example of good men. 9 Coke, 97.

PERICULOSUS (Lat.) Dangerous.

PERICULUM (Lat.) In the civil law. Peril; danger; hazard; risk.

PERICULUM REI VENDITIAE, NONdum traditae, est emptoris. The purchaser runs the risk of the loss of a thing sold, though not delivered. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 939; 2 Kent, Comm. 498, 499; 4 Barn. & C. 481, 941.

PERIL. Danger; the accident by which a thing is lost. Lec. Elm. § 911.

——In Insurance. The risk, contingency, or cause of loss insured against in a policy of insurance.

PERILS OF THE RIVER. A term used in respect to river navigation in the United States, and having the same significance as "perils of the sea." 8 Ala. 176.

PERILS OF THE SEA. One of the perils insured against in marine insurance, and from which bills of lading usually exempt the carrier. It signifies "all marine casualties resulting from the violent action of the elements, as distinguished from their natural silent influence on the fabric of the vessel; casualties which may, and not consequences which must, occur. L. R. 9 Q. B. 596.

Loss by foundering (3 Wheat. [U. S.] 168), or stranding (57 Me. 170), injury to the vessel by ice (15 Wall. [U. S.] 202), or to cargo from water shipped in a storm (16 Me. 207), or loss of property overboard (16 Mo. 98), are perils of the sea. But damages by rats (1 Wils. 281) or worms (2 Mass. 429), or the breakage of packages, are not.

PERINDE VALERE (Law Lat. to be equally valid). In English ecclesiastical law. The name of a writ of dispensation granted to a clerk who, being defective in his capacity to a benefice or other ecclesiastical function, was, de facto, admitted to it. So called from the emphatic words of the Latin form, the faculty being declared to be equally effectual to the party dispensed with as if he had been actually capable of the thing for which he was dispensed with, at the time of his admission. St. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21; Cowell.

PERIOD. A space of time; any portion of complete time.

"The word 'period' has its etymological meaning, but it also has a distinctive signification, according to the subject with which it may be used in connection. It may mean any portion of complete time, from a thousand years or less to the period of a day; and when used to designate an act to be done or to be begun, though its completion may take an uncertain time, as for instance the act of exportation, it must mean the day on which the exportation commences, or it would be an unmeaning and useless word in its connection in the statute." Wayne, J., 20 How. (U. S.) 579.

PERIPHRASIS. Circumlocution; the use of other words to express the sense of one.

Some words are so technical in their meaning that, in charging offenses in indictments, they must be used, or the indictment will not be sustained. For example, an indictment for treason must contain the word "traitorously;" an indictment for burglary, "burglariously;" and "feloniously" must be introduced into every indictment for felony. 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 242; 3 Inst. 15; Carth. 319; 2 Hale, P. C. 172, 184; 4 Bl. Comm. 307; Hawk. P. C. bk. 2, c. 25, § 55; 1 East, P. C. 115; Bac. Abr. "Indictment" (G 1); Comyn, Dig. "Indictment" (G 6); Cro. Car. c. 37.

PERISHABLE GOODS. Goods which are lessened in value and become worse by being kept.

PERJURI SUNT QUI SERVITAS VERBIS juramenti decipiunt aures eorem qui accipiunt. They are perjured who, preserving the words of an oath, deceive the ears of those who receive it. 3 Inst. 166.

PERJURY. Perjury at common law is the willful and corrupt taking of a false oath in a judicial proceeding in regard to a matter material to the issues. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69, § 1; 4 Bl. Comm. 153. It is extended by statute in most jurisdictions to false swearing in certain proceedings not judicial. To constitute the offense, (1) the testimony must be false, or believed to be false, or the witness must not know whether it be true or false (42 Vt. 152; 17 N. H. 373); (2) the taking of the false oath must be both willful and corrupt; (3) the matter sworn to must be material to the issue or question in controversy (12 Mass. 273; 54 Vt. 146); (4) some form of oath or its equivalent must have been duly administered by an authorized officer (86 N. Y. 154; 107 U. S. 671; 76 N. Y. 220); (5) the oath itself, as well as the facts sworn to, must have been material (45 Mich. 543; 17 Ohio, 365); (6) to constitute perjury in a judicial proceeding, the court or tribunal must have jurisdiction (49 Me. 412; 8 Pick. [Mass.] 453; 96 Ky. 407).

PERMANENT TRESPASS. A trespass consisting of trespasses of one and the same kind, committed on several days, which are in their nature capable of renewal or continuation, and are actually renewed or continued from day to day, so that the particular injury done on each particular day cannot be distinguished from what was done on another day. In declaring for such trespasses, they may be laid with a continuando. 3 Bl. Comm. 212; Bac. Abr. "Trespass" (B 2. I 2); 1 Saund. 24, note 1. See "Continuando;" "Trespass."

PERMISSION. Leave or license to do any act. It ordinarily implies consent actually given (105 Ill. 558), but has been held to mean "allow," by not prohibiting (9 Allen [Mass.] 266).

PERMISSIVE. Allowed; that which may be done; as, permissive waste, which is the permitting real estate to go to waste. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2400. See "Waste."

PERMISSIVE USE. A passive use which was resorted to before the statute of uses, in order to avoid a harsh law; as that of mortmain or a feudal forfeiture. It was a mere invention in order to evade the law by secrecy; as a conveyance to A. to the use of B. A. simply held the possession, and B. enjoyed the profits of the estate.

PERMISSIVE WASTE. Waste suffered by omission of care, not by actual depredation.

PERMIT. A license or warrant to do something not forbidden by law; as, to land goods imported into the United States, after the duties have been paid or secured to be paid. Act Cong. March 2, 1799, § 49, cl. 2. See form of such a permit, Gordon, Dig. Append. II. 46.

PERMUTATIO (Lat. from permutare, to exchange). In the civil law. Exchange; barter. Dig. 19. 4; Code, 4. 64.

PERMUTATION. In civil law. Exchange; barter.

This contract is formed by the consent of the parties; but delivery is indispensable, for without it it is a mere agreement. Dig. 31. 77. 4; Code, 4. 64. 3.

Permutation differs from sale in this, that in the former a delivery of the articles sold must be made, while in the latter it is unnecessary. It agrees with the contract of sale, however, in the following particulars: That he to whom the delivery is made acquires the right or faculty of prescribing (Dig. 41. 3. 4. 17); that the contracting parties are bound to guaranty to each other the title of the things delivered (Code, 4. 64. 1); and that they are bound to take back the things delivered when they have latent defects which they have concealed (Dig. 21. 1. 63).

PERMUTIONE. A writ commanding an ordinary to admit a clerk on exchange of benefices.

PERNANCY (from Fr. prendre, to take). A taking or receiving.

PERNOR (from Law Fr. parnour, or pernour, q. v.) A taker. Pernor of profits is the taker or receiver of the profits of an estate. Cowell.

PERNOR OF PROFITS. He who receives the profits of lands, etc. A cestui que use, who is legally entitled and actually does receive the profits, is the pernor of profits.

PERNOUR (Law Fr.) A taker. Le pernour ou le detenour, the taker or the detainer. Britt. c. 27.

PERPETUA LEX EST, NULLAM LEGEM humanam ac positivam perpetuam esse; et clausula quae abrogationem excludit ab initio non valet. It is a perpetual law that no human or positive law can be perpetual; and a clause in a law which precludes the power of abrogation is void ab initio. Bac. Max. reg. 19; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 27.

PERPETUAL. That which is to last without limitation as to time; as, a perpetual statute, which is one without limit as to time, although not expressed to be so.

PERPETUAL CURACY. The office of a curate, in a parish where there is no spiritual rector or vicar, but where the curate is appointed to officiate for the time by the impropriator. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 55.

The church of which the curate is perpetual. 2 Ves. Sr. 425, 429. See 2 Steph. Comm. 76; 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 55; 9 Adol. & E. 556. As to whether such curate may be removed, see 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 55.

PERPETUAL INJUNCTION. Opposed to an injunction ad interim; an injunction which finally disposes of the suit, and is indefinite in point of time.

PERPETUAL LEASE. A lease without limitation as to term; a grant in fee, subject to a reserved rent.

PERPETUAL STATUTE. Repeal or expiration at any future time.

PERPETUATING TESTIMONY. The act by which testimony is reduced to writing as prescribed by law, so that the same shall be read in evidence in some suit or legal proceedings to be thereafter instituted.

The origin of this practice may be traced to the canon law (chapter 5, X ut lite non contestata, etc.) Bockmer, note 4; 8 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 22. Statutes exist in most of the states for this purpose. Equity also furnishes means, to a limited extent, for the same purpose.

PERPETUITY. Any limitation tending to take the subject of it out of commerce for a longer period than a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years beyond, and, in case of a posthumous child, a few months more, allowing for the term of gestation. Rand. Perp. 48. Such a limitation of property as renders it unalienable beyond the period allowed by law. Gilb. Uses (Sugd. Ed.) 260, note.

An interest subject to a condition precedent, which condition is not to be fulfilled within twenty-one years after some life in being at the creation of the interest. Gray, Perp. § 216.

Mr. Justice Powell, in 12 Mod. 278, distinguished perpetuities into two sorts,—absolute and qualified; meaning thereby, as it is apprehended, a distinction between a plain, direct, and palpable perpetuity, and the case where an estate is limited on a contingency, which might happen within a reasonable compass of time, but where the estate nevertheless, from the nature of the limitation, might be kept out of commerce longer than was thought agreeable to the policy of the common law. But this distinction would not now lead to a better understanding or explanation of the subject; for whether an estate be so limited that it cannot take effect until a period too much protracted, or whether on a contingency which may happen within a moderate compass of time, it equally falls within the line of perpetuity, and the limitation is therefore void; for it is not sufficient that an estate may vest within the time allowed, but the rule requires that it must. Rand. Perp. 49. See Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 23; 1 Belt, Supp. Ves. 406; 2 Ves. Jr. 357; 3 Saund. 388; Comyn, Dig. "Chancery" (4 G 1); 3 Chanc. Cas. 1; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1890.

PERPETUITY OF THE KING. That fiction of the English law which, for certain political purposes, ascribes to the king in his political capacity the attribute of immortality; for, though the reigning monarch may die, yet by this fiction the king never dies, i. e., the office is supposed to be reoccupied for all political purposes immediately on his death.

PERQUIRERE (Law Lat. from per, through, and quaerere, to obtain). In feudal law. To gain or acquire; to acquire by one's own act; to purchase. Breve perquirere, to purchase a writ. Cowell.

PERQUISITES. In its most extensive sense, perquisites signifies anything gotten by industry or purchased with money, different from that which descends from a father or ancestor. Bracton, lib. 2, c. 30, note 3; Id. lib. 4, c. 22. In a more limited sense, it means something gained by a place or office beyond the regular salary or fee.

PERQUISITIO. Purchase. 2 Bl. Comm. 241. Acquisition by one's own act or agreement, and not by descent. Id. See "Purchase."

PERQUISITOR. A purchaser; one who first acquired an estate to his family; one who acquired an estate by sale, by gift, or by any other method, except only that of descent. 2 Bl. Comm. 220.

PERQUISITUM. Purchase. Bracton, fol. 65. Co. Litt. 3b, 18b. An estate acquired by purchase, that is, by one's own act, and not by descent; praedium quod quis non a patre vel majoribus possidet, sed quo sua industria vel pecuniis comparato gaudet. Spelman.

PERSECUTIO (Lat. from persequi, q. v.) In the civil law. A following after; a pursuing at law; a suit or prosecution.

Properly, that kind of judicial proceeding before the praetor which was called "extraordinary." Calv. Lex.

In a general sense, any judicial proceeding, including not only actions (actiones) properly so called, but other proceedings also. Calv. Lex.

PERSEQUI (Lat.) In the civil law. To follow after; to pursue or claim in form of law. An action is called a jus persequendi. See "Actio."

PERSON. A man considered according to the rank he holds in society, with all the rights to which the place he holds entitles him, and the duties which it imposes. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 137.

A corporation, which is an artificial person. 1 Bl. Comm. 123; 4 Bing. 669; Wooddeson, Lect. 116; 1 Mod. 164; 22 N. Y. 352; 10 Ill. 48; 32 Conn. 216; 118 U. S. 394. And it has been held to include a partnership association. 108 Pa. St. 147. It includes both sexes. 136 Mass. 580.

PERSONA (Lat.) In civil law. Character, in virtue of which certain rights belong to a man, and certain duties are imposed upon him. Thus, one man may unite many characters (personae); as, for example, the characters of father and son, of master and servant. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 117.

In its original signification, a mask; afterwards, a man in reference to his condition or character (status). Vicat. It is used metaphorically of things, among which are counted slaves. It is often opposed to res; as, actio in personam and actio in rem.

Power and right belonging to a person in a certain character (pro jure et potestate personae competente). Vicat. Its use is not confined to the living, but is extended to the dead and to angels. Id. A statute in a fountain whence water gushes.

PERSONA CONJUNCTA AEQUIPARATUR INTERESSE PROPRIO. The interest of a personal connection is sometimes regarded in law as that of the individual himself. Bac. Max. reg. 18; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 474.

PERSONA EST HOMO, CUM STATU QUODAM CONSIDERATUS. A person is a man considered with reference to a certain status. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, tit. 3, § 75.

PERSONA NON GRATA. A person not acceptable. Applied to diplomatic representatives who are not acceptable at the court to which they are accredited.

PERSONA REGIS MERGITUR PERSONA DUCIS. The person of duke merges in that of king. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 160.

PERSONA STANDI IN JUDICIO. Capacity of standing in court or in judgment; capacity to be a party to an action; capacity or ability to sue.

A phrase probably derived from Bracton (folios 155b, 196). See 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 83.

PERSONABLE (Law Lat. personabilis, from persona, capacity). In old English law. Able to maintain a plea in court; having capacity to sue. Cowell. Derived probably from the phrase persona standi in judicio (q. v.)

Of capacity to take a thing granted or given. Plowd. 27a, arg. But in the case here cited, it is used as two words, "person able." "There is a maxim that when a remainder is appointed to one, he to whom it is appointed ought at that time to be 'a person able' and to have capacity to take the remainder, or else it shall be void." Id.

PERSONA VICE FUNGITUR MUNICIPium et decuria. Towns and boroughs act as if persons. 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 103, 144.

PERSONAL. Belonging to the person.

This adjective is frequently employed in connection with substantives, as personal services (see 59 N. H. 551), personal goods (see 5 Mason [U. S.] 356), etc. Personal rights are those which belong to the person; personal duties are those which are to be performed in person.

PERSONAL ACTION.

——In the Civil Law. An action in which one person (the actor) sues another (the reus) in respect of some obligation which he is under to the actor either ex contractu or ex delicto. It will be seen that this includes all actions against a person, without reference to the nature of the property involved. In a limited sense of the word "action" in the civil law, it includes only personal actions, all others being called "petitions." See "Real Action."

——At Common Law. An action brought for the recovery of personal property, for the enforcement of some contract or to recover damages for its breach, or for the recovery of damages for the commission of an injury to the person or property. Such arise either upon contracts, as account, assumpsit, covenant, debt, and detinue (q. v.), or for wrongs, injuries, or torts, as trespass, trespass on the case, replevin, trover (q. v.) Other divisions of personal actions are made in the various states; and in Vermont and Connecticut an action is in use called the "action of book debt." 71 Me. 287. See "Action."

PERSONAL ASSETS. Chattels, money, and other personal property belonging to a bankrupt, insolvent, or decedent estate, which go to the assignee or executor.

PERSONAL CHATTELS. Strictly and properly speaking, things movable, which may be annexed to or attendant on the person of the owner, and carried about with him from one part of the world to another. 2 Bl. Comm. 388*. See "Chattel."

PERSONAL CONTRACT. A contract as to personal property. A covenant (or contract) personal relates only to matters personal as distinguished from real, and is binding on the covenantor (contractor) during his life, and on his personal representatives after his decease, in respect of assets. Angell & A. Watercourses, 305; Co. Litt. 22.

PERSONAL COVENANT. A covenant which binds only the covenantor and his personal representatives in respect to assets, and can be taken advantage of only by the covenantee.

A covenant which must be performed by the covenantor in person. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 340.

All covenants are either personal or real, but some confusion exists in regard to the division between them. Thus, a covenant may be personal as regards the covenantor, and real as regards the covenantee; and different definitions have been given, according to whether the rights and liabilities of the covenantor or the covenantee have been in consideration. It is apprehended, however, that the prevalent modern usage is to hold a covenant real, if it is real,—that is, runs with the land, so as to apply to an assignee, either as regards the covenantor or the covenantee. See Platt, Cov. 61; 4 Bl. Comm. 304, note, 305, note; 3 N. J. 260; 7 Gray (Mass.) 83.

All covenants which relate to personalty merely are of this class. 30 Miss. 145.

PERSONAL ESTATE. Personal property.

PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE. Knowledge derived at first hand from actual sight or hearing of the matter in question, and not from hearsay.

PERSONAL LAW. As opposed to territorial law, personal law is the law applicable to persons not subject to the law of the territory in which they reside. It is only by permission of the territorial law that personal law can exist at the present day; e. g., it applies to British subjects resident in the Levant and in other Mohammedan and barbarous countries. Under the Roman Empire, it had a very wide application. Brown.

PERSONAL LIBERTY. The right or power of locomotion, of changing situation, or moving one's person to whatsoever place one's own inclination may direct, without imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law. 1 Bl. Comm. 134.

PERSONAL PROPERTY. Chattels (q. v.)

PERSONAL REPLEVIN. A proceeding which succeeded to the court de homine replegiando, and was in turn succeeded by the writ of habeas corpus.

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES. The executors or administrators of the person deceased. 6 Mod. 155; 5 Ves. 402; 1 Madd. 108.

In wills, these words are sometimes construed to mean "next of kin." 2 Jarm. Wills, 28; 1 Beav. Rolls, 46; 1 Russ. & M. 587.

PERSONAL RIGHTS. The right of personal security, comprising those of life, limb, body, health, reputation, and the right of personal liberty. Wharton.

PERSONAL SECURITY. A person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation. 1 Bl. Comm. 129.

PERSONAL SERVICE. Service of process on one by actual delivery thereof to him, as distinguished from substituted service at his residence or constructive service by publication.

PERSONAL SERVITUDES. Servitudes in gross; i. e., belonging to a person, and not appurtenant to an estate.

PERSONAL STATUTE. A law whose principal, direct, and immediate object is to regulate the condition of persons.

The term is not properly in use in the common law, although Lord Mansfield, in 2 W. Bl. 234, applied it to those legislative acts which respect personal transitory contracts, but is occasionally used in the sense given to it in civil law, and which is adopted as its definition. It is a law, ordinance, regulation, or custom, the disposition of which affects the person, and clothes him with a capacity or incapacity which he does not change with his abode. See 2 Kent, Comm. (10th Ed.) 613.

PERSONAL THINGS. In the old books, include personal rights and duties.

PERSONALIA PERSONAM SEQUUNTUR. Personal things follow the person. 10 Cush. (Mass.) 516.

PERSONALIS ACTIO. See "Actio."

PERSONALITER. In old English law. Personally.

PERSONALITY. In foreign and modern civil law. That quality of a law which concerns the condition, state, and capacity of persons. By the personality of laws, foreign jurists generally mean all laws which concern the condition, state, and capacity of persons. Story, Confl. Laws, § 16.

PERSONALTY. Personal property.

PERSONATION. The offense of falsely representing one's self as another person, and thereby obtaining some material advantage.

PERSONE (Law Fr.) A parson. En meseme la mancre est de persone de un esglise, in the same manner is it with the parson of a church. Britt. c. 48.

PERSONERO (Spanish). In Spanish law. An attorney. So called, because he represents the person of another, either in or out of court. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 5, lib. 1.

PERSONNE (Fr.) A person. This term is declared by the Civil Code of Louisiana to be applicable to men and women, or to either. Article 3522, No. 25.

PERSPICUA VERA NON SUNT PROBANDA. Plain truths need not be proved. Co. Litt. 16.

PERTICA, PERTICATA, or PARTICATA (Law Lat. from pertica). In old Scotch law. A perch. Skene de Verb. Sign.

PERTINENT (from Lat. pertineo, belonging to). Which tends to prove or disprove the allegations of the parties. Willes, 319. Matters which have no such tendency are called "impertinent." 8 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 22.

PERTINENTIAE (Law Lat. from pertinere, to belong). In old English law. Appurtenances, or, as anciently written, "appertinances;" in Scotch law, pertinents; things belonging or incident to another (principal) thing. Reg. Orig. 1; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 14, § 11. Appurtenances had sometimes their own appurtenances, called pertinentiae pertinentiarum. Thus, to the right of feeding and pasture, themselves appurtenant to a tenement, were appurtenant the right of way, and free ingress and egress; habent hujusmodi pertinentiae suas pertinentias, sicut ad jus pascendi et ad pasturam pertinet via et liber ingressus et egressus. Bracton, fol. 232. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 18, § 3.

PERTINENTS. In Scotch law. Appurtenances. "Parts and pertinents," "parts pendicles and pertinents," are formal words in old deeds and charters. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 2, pp. 112, 118.

PERTURBATION. This is a technical word which signifies disturbance or infringement of a right. It is usually applied to the disturbance of pews or seats in a church. In the ecclesiastical courts, actions for these disturbances are technically called "suits for perturbation of seat." 1 Phillim. Ecc. Law, 323. See "Pew."

PERTURBATRIX. A woman who breaks the peace.

PERVISE, or PARVISE. The palace yard at Westminster.

A place where counsel used to advise with their clients.

An afternoon exercise or moot for the instruction of students. Cowell; Blount.

PESAGE. In England, a toll charged for weighing avoirdupois goods other than wool. 2 Chit. Com. Law, 16.

PESQUISIDOR. In Spanish law. Coroner. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 1, § 3.

PESSIMI EXEMPLI. Of the worst example.

PESSONA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Mast, including acorns, nuts, and other similar produce of trees. Bracton, fol. 222b.

PETENS (Lat.; Fr. petere, to demand). In old English law. A demandant; the plaintiff in a real action. Bracton, fols. 102, 106b; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 6, § 1.

PETER FUNK SALE. A fraudulent auction sale. 27 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 378.

PETIT (sometimes corrupted into "petty"). A French word signifying little, small. It is frequently used; as, petit larceny, petit jury, petit treason.

PETIT CAPE. When the tenant is summoned on a plea of land, and comes on the summons, and his appearance is recorded, if at the day given him he prays the view, and, having it given him, makes default, then shall this writ issue from the king. Old Nat. Brev. 162; Reg. Jud. fol. 2; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 44. See "Grand Cape."

PETIT (or PETTY) JURY. The ordinary jury of twelve, as opposed to the grand jury, which was of a larger number, and whose duty it was to find bills for the petit jury to try. 3 Bl. Comm. 351*.

PETIT (or PETTY) LARCENY. In old English law, based on St. Westminster I. c. 15, larceny where the value of the property stolen was twelve pence or less. The distinction between grand and petit larceny has been abolished in England. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, § 4.

In the United States there are statutes in some states making a distinction between grand and petty larceny based on the value of the property stolen.

PETIT SERJEANTY. A tenure by which lands are held of the crown by the service of rendering yearly some small implement of war, as a lance, an arrow, etc. 2 Bl. Comm. 82. Though St. 12 Car. II. took away the incidents of livery and primer seisin, this tenure still remains a dignified branch of socage tenure, from which it only differs in name on account of its reference to war. Such is the tenure of the grants to the dukes of Marlborough and Wellington.

PETIT (or PETTY) TREASON. In English law. The killing of a master by his servant, a husband by his wife, a superior by a religious man. 4 Bl. Comm. 73. In the United States this is like any other murder. See "Treason."

PETITE ASSIZE. Used in contradistinction from the "grand assize," which was a jury to decide on questions of property. Petite assize, a jury to decide on questions of possession. Britt. c. 42; Glanv. lib. 2, c. 6, 7; Horne, Mir. lib. 2, c. "De Novel Disseisin."

PETITIO (Lat. from petere, to ask or demand).

——In the Civil Law. The plaintiff's or actor's statement of his cause of action, in an action in rem. Dig. 44. 7. 28; Calv. Lex.

——In Old English Law. Petition or demand; the count in a real action; the form of words in which a title to land was stated by the demandant, and which commenced with the word peto (q. v.) 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 176. Obviously borrowed from the civil law.

PETITION. An instrument of writing or printing, containing a prayer from the person presenting it, called the "petitioner," to the body or person to whom it is presented, for the redress of some wrong, or the grant of some favor which the latter has the right to give. 48 Miss. 36.

——In Practice. An application to a court in writing; in contradistinction to a "motion," which may be viva voce. Shaw, C. J., 4 Metc. (Mass.) 376. A motion stated in writing.

——In Equity Practice. An application in writing for an order of the court, stating the circumstances upon which it is founded; a proceeding resorted to whenever the nature of the application to the court requires a fuller statement than can be conveniently made in a notice of motion. 1 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 578. See 3 Daniell, Chanc. Prac. (Perkins' Ed.) 1801.

PETITION DE DROIT (Law Fr.) In English practice. A petition of right; a form of proceeding to obtain restitution from the crown of either real or personal property, being of use where the crown is in possession of any hereditaments or chattels, and the petitioner suggests such a right as controverts the title of the crown, grounded on facts disclosed in the petition itself. 3 Bl. Comm. 256; 8 Adol. & E. (N. S.) 208.

PETITION OF RIGHT. In English law. A proceeding in chancery by which a subject may recover property in the possession of the king.

This is in the nature of an action against a subject, in which the petitioner sets out his right to that which is demanded by him, and prays the king to do him right and justice; and, upon a due and lawful trial of the right, to make him restitution. It is called a "petition of right," because the king is bound of right to answer it, and let the matter therein contained be determined in a legal way, in like manner as causes between subject and subject. The petition is presented to the king, who subscribes it with these words, soit droit fait al partie, and thereupon it is delivered to the chancellor to be executed according to law. 4 Inst. 419, 422b; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 30, 31; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 22, 23.

PETITION OF RIGHTS. A parliamentary declaration of the liberties of the people, assented to by King Charles I. in 1629. It is to be distinguished from the bill of rights (1689), which has passed into a permanent constitutional statute.

PETITIONING CREDITOR. The creditor at whose instance an adjudication of bankruptcy is made against a bankrupt.

PETITOR (Lat. from petere, to demand). In Roman law. A plaintiff or actor, particularly in an action in rem; a demandant. Calv. Lex. Actor est qui agit in personam, petitor, qui agit in rem, an actor is one who prosecutes against a person, a demandant one who prosecutes against a thing. Cujac. Observ. lib. 7, c. 26.

PETITORY. That which demands or petitions; that which has the quality of a prayer or petition; a right to demand.

A petitory suit or action is understood to be one in which the mere title to property is to be enforced by means of a demand, petition, or other legal proceeding, as distinguished from a suit where only the right of possession and not the mere right of property is in controversy. 1 Kent, Comm. 371; 7 How. (U. S.) 846; 10 How. (U. S.) 257. Admiralty suits touching property in ships are either petitory, in which the mere title to the property is litigated, or possessory, to restore the possession to the party entitled thereto.

The American courts of admiralty exercised unquestioned jurisdiction in petitory as well as possessory actions; but in England the courts of law, some time after the restoration in 1660, claimed exclusive cognizance of mere questions of title, until the statute of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65. By that statute, the court of admiralty was authorized to decide all questions as to the title to or ownership of any ship or vessel, or the proceeds thereof remaining in the registry in any cause of possession, salvage, damage, wages, or bottomry, instituted in such court after the passing of that act. Ware, Dist. Ct. 232; 18 How. (U. S.) 267; 2 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 426.

——In Scotch Law. Actions in which damages are sought.

This class embraces such actions as assumpsit, debt, covenant, and detinue, at common law. See Patterson, Comp. 1058, note.

PETITORY SUIT (or ACTION).

——In Admiralty Law. A suit in which the mere title to property is litigated and sought to be enforced, as distinguished from a possessory action (q. v.) 5 Mason (U. S.) 465; 1 Kent, Comm. 371.

——In Scotch Law. An action wherein the pursuer (plaintiff) claims something as due or belonging to him by the defender (defendant). 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 4, p. 163; Bell, Dict.

PETO (Lat.)

——In Roman Law. I request. A common word by which a fideicommissum, or trust, was created in a will. Inst. 2. 24. 3.

——In Old English Law. I demand. The word with which a demandant's count commenced.

PETRA (Lat.) In old English law. Stone. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, § 114.

A stone. A weight of twelve pounds and a half. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 1.

PETTIFOGGER. One who pretends to be a lawyer, but possesses neither knowledge of the law nor conscience.

An unprincipled practitioner of law, whose business is confined to petty cases. See 40 Mich. 256. See, also, "Shyster."

PETTIFOGGING. Practicing the arts of a pettifogger, like the raising of unprofessional or dishonorable quibbles, practicing petty deceptions on the court, attempting to bring scandalous or impertinent issues into the trial, etc.

PETTY AVERAGE (called, also, "customary average"). Several petty charges which are borne partly by the ship and partly by the cargo, such as the expense of tonnage, beaconage, etc. Abb. Shipp. (7th Ed.) 404; 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 312; 1 Bell, Comm. 567; 2 Magens, 277. See "Average."

PETTY BAG OFFICE. In English law. An office in the court of chancery, appropriated for suits against attorneys and officers of the court, and for process and proceedings by extent on statutes, recognizances ad quod damnum, and the like. Termes de la Ley. See "Hanaper Office."

PETTY CONSTABLE. The ordinary constable, as distinguished from the high constable of the hundred. 1 Bl. Comm. 355; Bac. Law Tr. 181, "Office of Constable;" Willcock, Const. c. 1, § 1. For duties of constable in America, see New England Sheriff.

PEW. A seat in a church, separated from all others, with a convenient place to stand therein. It is derived from puye, and signifies primarily an inclosed seat in a church. L. R. 5 C. P. 224.

It is an incorporeal interest in the real property. And although a man has the exclusive right to it, yet it seems he cannot maintain trespass against a person entering it (1 Term R. 430); but case is the proper remedy (3 Barn. & Ald. 361; 8 Barn. & C. 294).

In Connecticut and Maine, pews are considered real estate. In Massachusetts and New Hampshire, they are personal property. Gen. St. Mass. c. 30, § 38; 1 Smith, St. 145. The precise nature of such property does not appear to be well settled in New York. 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 218; 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 28; 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 494. See 10 Mass. 323; 17 Mass. 438; 7 Pick. (Mass.) 138; 4 N. H. 180; 4 Ohio, 515; 4 Har. & McH. (Md.) 279; Best, Pres. 111; Crabb, Real Prop. §§ 481-497; Washb. Easem.

PHYSICAL FACT. A fact the existence of which may be perceived by the senses, such as the sound of a pistol shot, a man running, impressions of feet on the ground. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 130.

PHYSICIAN. A person who has received the degree of doctor of medicine from an incorporated institution.

One lawfully engaged in the practice of medicine.

The term is not limited to any of the schools of practitioners recognized by law. 62 Wis. 289.

PIA FRAUS. A pious fraud. A term applied to evasions of the statute of mortmain, and other frauds in the interest of religious institutions.

PICCAGE (Law Lat. piccagium, from Fr. piquer, to perforate, or pick). In old English law. Money paid at fairs for leave to break the ground, to set up booths or stalls. Cowell; Spelman.

PICKERY. In Scotch law. Stealing of trifles, punishable arbitrarily. Bell, Dict.; Tait, Inst. "Theft."

PICKPOCKET. A thief; one who in a crowd or in other places steals from the pockets or person of another, without putting him in fear. This is generally punished as simple larceny, but by some states larceny from the person, committed privily, is made a distinct crime. Pen. Code Ga. § 175; Pen. Code Tex. art. 879.

PIEDPOUDRE. See "Court of Piedpoudre."

PIERAGE. Toll for using a marine pier. Webster; Smart.

PIGNORATIO (Lat. from pignorare, to pledge). In civil law. The obligation of a pledge. L. 9. D. "De Pignor." Sealing up (obsignatio). A shutting up of an animal caught in one's field, and keeping it till the expenses and damage have been paid by its master. New Dec. 1. 34. 13.

PIGNORATITIA ACTIO. See "Actio Pignoraticia."

PIGNORATIVE CONTRACT. In civil law. A contract by which the owner of an estate engages it to another for a sum of money, and grants to him and his successors the right to enjoy it until he shall be reimbursed, voluntarily, that sum of money. Poth. Obl.

PIGNORIS CAPTIO (Lat.) In Roman law. The name given to one of the legis actiones of the Roman law. It consisted chiefly in the taking of a pledge, and was, in fact, a mode of execution. It was confined to special cases determined by positive law or by custom, such as taxes, duties, rents, etc., and is comparable in some respects to distresses at common law. The proceeding took place in the presence of a praetor.

PIGNUS (Lat.) In civil law. Pledge, or pawn; the contract of pledge; the right in the thing pledged.

"It is derived," says Gaius, "from pugnum, the fist, because what is delivered in pledge is delivered in hand." Dig. 50. 16. 238. 2. This is one of several instances of the failure of the Roman jurists when they attempted etymological explanations of words. The elements of pignus (pig) are contained in the word pan(g)-o and its cognate forms. See Smith.

Though pledge is distinguished from mortgage (hypotheca), as being something delivered in hand, while mortgage is good without possession, yet a pledge (pignus) may also be good without possession. Domat, Civ. Law, bk. iii. tit. 1, § 5; Calv. Lex. Pignus is properly applied to movables, hypotheca to immovables; but the distinction is not always preserved. Id.

PILLAGE. The taking by violence of private property by a victorious army from the citizens or subjects of the enemy. This in modern times is seldom allowed, and then only when authorized by the commanding or chief officer at the place where the pillage is committed. The property thus violently taken belongs, in general, to the common soldiers. Dalloz, "Propriete," art. 3, § 5; Wolff. § 1201. See "Booty;" "Prize."

PILLORY. An instrument of punishment, consisting of a wooden machine, in which the neck of the culprit is inserted, he being ordinarily exposed in a public place while so secured.

PILOT. An officer serving on board of a ship during the course of a voyage, and having the charge of the helm and of the ship's route. An officer authorized by law, who is taken on board at a particular place for the purpose of conducting a ship through a river, road, or channel, or from or into port. 10 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 30.

Pilots of the second description are established by legislative enactments at the principal seaports in this country, and have rights, and are bound to perform duties, agreeably to the provisions of the several laws establishing them; the principal being the obligation of every vessel entering the port to take on a licensed pilot of the port, usually the first who offers his services (118 U. S. 90; 12 Fed. 81; 10 Fed. 135), or pay pilotage to the pilot so offering.

PILOTAGE. The compensation given to a pilot for conducting a vessel in or out of port. Poth. des Avaries, note 147.

Pilotage is a lien on the ship, when the contract has been made by the master or quasi master of the ship, or some other person lawfully authorized to make it (1 Mason [U. S.] 598; 32 Fed. 486), and the admiralty court has jurisdiction when services have been performed at sea (Id.; 10 Wheat. [U. S.] 428; 6 Pet. [U. S.] 682; 10 Pet. [U. S.] 108). And see 1 Pet. Adm. Dec. (U. S.) 227.

PIMP TENURE. A very singular and odious kind of tenure mentioned by the old writers, "Wilhelmus Hoppeshort tenet dimidian virgatam terrae per servitium custodiendi sex damisellas, scil. meretrices ad usum domini regis." 12 Edw. I.

PIN MONEY. Money allowed by a man to his wife to spend for her own personal comforts. 9 Beav. 55; 2 Clark & F. 654.

It has been conjectured that the term "pin money" has been applied to signify the provision for a married woman, because anciently there was a tax laid for providing the English queen with pins. Barr. Obs. St. 181.

PINT. A liquid measure, containing half a quart, or the eighth part of a gallon.

PIOUS USES. See "Charitable Uses."

PIPE. In English law. The name of a roll in the exchequer, otherwise called the "Great Roll." A measure, containing two hogsheads. One hundred and twenty-six gallons is also called a pipe.

PIPE LINES. A line or series of pipes designed for the transportation of water, gas, etc.

PIPOWDER, or PIEPOUDRE (Fr. piedpoudre). In English law. The name of a court held for fairs and markets. See "Court of Piedpoudre." Pipowder courts were formerly appointed to be held at fairs in the town and borough of Westchester, New York. Bolton, Hist. Westchester, i. 194.

PIRACY.

——In Criminal Law. A robbery or forcible depredation on the high seas, without lawful authority, done animo furandi, in the spirit and intention of universal hostility. 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 610; 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 153, 163; 3 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 209. This is the definition of this offense by the law of nations. 1 Kent, Comm. 183.

"A pirate is one who roves the seas in an armed vessel, without any commission from any sovereign, and for the purpose of seizing by force and appropriating to himself every vessel which he may meet." Trial of Savannah Privateers, p. 371.

The commission upon the high seas of such acts of robbery and depredation as would, if committed on land, have amounted to a felony. 4 Bl. Comm. 72.

——In Torts. By piracy is understood the plagiarisms of a book, engraving, or other work for which a copyright has been taken out.

When a piracy has been made of such a work, an injunction will be granted. 4 Ves. 681; 5 Ves. 709; 12 Ves. 270. See "Copyright."

PIRATA EST HOSTIS HUMANI GENERIS. A pirate is an enemy of the human race. 3 Inst. 113.

PIRATE. A sea robber, who, to enrich himself, by subtlety or open force, setteth upon merchants and others trading by sea, despoiling them of their loading, and sometimes bereaving them of life, and sinking their ships. Ridley, View, pt. 2, c. 1, § 3. One guilty of the crime of piracy. Merlin, Repert. See, for the etymology of this word, Bac. Abr. "Piracy."

PIRATICALLY. In pleading. This is a technical word, essential to charge the crime of piracy in an indictment, which cannot be supplied by another word or any circumlocution. Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 37, § 15; 3 Inst. 112; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, *244.

PISCARY. The right of fishing in the waters of another. Bac. Abr.; 5 Comyn, Dig. 366. See "Fishery."

PISTAREEN. A small Spanish coin. It is not made current by the laws of the United States. 10 Pet. (U. S.) 618.

PIT. A hole dug in the earth, which was filled with water, and in which women thieves were drowned, instead of being hung. The punishment of the pit was formerly common in Scotland.

PIT AND GALLOWS (Law Lat. fossa et furca). In Scotch law. A privilege of inflicting capital punishment for theft, given by King Malcolm, by which a woman could be drowned in a pit (fossa) or a man hanged on the gallows (furca). Bell, Dict.; Stair, Inst. 277, § 62.

PIX (Lat.) A mode of testing coin. The ascertaining whether coin is of the proper standard is, in England, called "pixing" it; and there are occasions on which resort is had for this purpose to an ancient mode of inquisition called the "trial of the pix," before a jury of members of the Goldsmith's Company. 2 Steph. Comm. 540, note.

PIXIS (Law Lat.) In old pleading. A box. Cro. Jac. 664. "Trover was brought de una pixide, Anglice, a box full of bands," etc. Id. A box for deeds and muniments. Latch, 195.

PLACE. See "Venue."

PLACE OF BUSINESS. The place where a man usually transacts his affairs or business.

A place of business is a place actually occupied, either continually or at regular intervals, by a person, or those in his employment, for the transaction of business; the mere occasional transaction of business at a place, not at stated periods, not being sufficient. 8 Port. (Ala.) 155.

A place in the house of another, where one is employed two or three days a week in settling up his old business, is not a place of business. 1 Pet. (U. S.) 578.

The term implies a particular place appropriated exclusively to a local business. 38 Tex. 599.

When a man keeps a store, shop, counting room, or office, independently and distinctly from all other persons, that is deemed his place of business; and when he usually transacts his business at the counting house, office, and the like, occupied and used by another, that will also be considered his place of business, if he has no independent place of his own. But when he has no particular right to use a place for such private purpose, as in an insurance office, an exchange room, a banking room, a post office, and the like, where persons generally resort, these will not be considered as the party's place of business, although he may occasionally or transiently transact business there. 1 Pet. (U. S.) 582; 2 Pet. (U. S.) 121; 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 501; 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 231; 16 Pick. (Mass.) 392.

PLACE OF CONTRACT. See "Lex Loci."

PLACITA COMMUNIA (Lat.) Common pleas. All civil actions between subject and subject. 3 Bl. Comm. 38, 40*; Cowell, "Plea." See "Placitum."

PLACITA CORONAE (Lat.) Pleas of the crown. All trials for crimes and misdemeanors, wherein the king is plaintiff, on behalf of the people. 3 Bl. Comm. 40*; Cowell, "Plea."

PLACITA DE TRANSGRESSIONE CONtra pacem regis, in regno Angliae vi et armis facta, secundum legem et consuetudinem Angliae sine brevi regis placitari non debent. Pleas of trespass against the peace of the king in the kingdom of England, made with force and arms, ought not, by the law and custom of England, to be pleaded without the king's writ. 2 Inst. 311.

PLACITA JURIS (Lat.) Arbitrary rules of law. Bac. Law Tr. 73; Bac. Max. reg. 12.

PLACITA NEGATIVA DUO EXITUM NON faciunt. Two negative pleas do not form an issue. Lofft, 415.

PLACITABILE (Law Lat.) In old English law. Pleadable. Spelman.

PLACITAMENTUM (Law Lat.) In old records. The pleading of a cause. Spelman.

PLACITARE (Law Lat. from placitum, q. v.) In old English law. To plead; to state to a court in form of law. Placitantur placita, pleas are pleaded. Bracton, fol. 106. Placitavit (he) pleaded. Y. B. M. 1 Edw. II.

To litigate; to make the subject of a plea or action; to implead or prosecute. Breve Gul. Conq. apud Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 120.

PLACITATOR (Law Lat. from placitare, q. v.) In old records. A pleader. Cowell; Spelman.

PLACITUM (Lat. from placere).

——In Civil Law. Any agreement or bargain; a law; a constitution or rescript of the emperor; the decision of a judge or award of arbitrators. Vicat; Calv. Lex.; Dupin, Notions Sur le Droit.

——In Old English Law (Ger. plats; Lat. plateis, i. e., fields or streets). An assembly of all degrees of men, where the king presided, and they consulted about the great affairs of the kingdom. First held, as the name would show, in the fields or street. Cowell.

So on the continent. Hinc. de Ordine Palatii, c. 29; Bertinian, Annals of France, A. D. 767; Const. Car. Mag. c. ix.; Hinc. Epist. 197, 227; Laws of the Longobards, passim.

A lord's court. Cowell.

An ordinary court. Placita is the style of the English courts at the beginning of the record at nisi prius. In this sense, placita are divided into pleas of the crown and common pleas (q. v.) Cowell.

A trial or suit in court. Cowell. Jacobs.

A fine. Black Book of Exchequer, lib. 2, tit. 13; 1 Hen. I. cc. 12, 13.

A plea. This word is nomen generalissimum, and refers to all the pleas in the case. 1 Saund. 388, note 6; Skin. 554; Carth. 334; Yelv. 65. By placitum is also understood the subdivisions in abridgments and other works, where the point decided in a case is set down separately, and generally numbered. In citing, it is abbreviated as follows: Viner, Abr. "Abatement," pl. 3.

Placitum nominatum is the day appointed for a criminal to appear and plead.

Placitum fractum is a day past or lost to the defendant. 1 Hen. I. c. 59.

PLAGIARISM. The act of appropriating the ideas and language of another, and passing them for one's own. When this amounts to piracy, the party who has been guilty of it will be enjoined when the original author has a copyright. See "Copyright;" "Piracy;" "Quotation;" Pardessus, Dr. Com. note 169.

PLAGIARIUS (Lat.) In civil law. He who fraudulently concealed a freeman or slave who belonged to another.

The offense itself was called plagium. It differed from larceny or theft in this, that larceny always implies that the guilty party intended to make a profit, whereas the plagiarius did not intend to make any profit. Dig. 48. 15. 6; Code, 9. 20. 9. 15.

PLAGIUM (Lat.) Man stealing; kidnapping. This offense is the crimen plagii of the Romans. Alis. Crim. Law, 280, 281.

PLAIDEUR (Old Fr.) A pleader; an advocate.

PLAIN STATEMENT. One that may be readily understood, not merely by lawyers, but by all who are sufficiently acquainted with the language in which it is written. 5 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 557, 564.

PLAINT. In English law. The exhibiting of any action, real or personal, in writing. The party making his plaint is called the plaintiff.

PLAINTIFF. He who complains. He who, in a personal action, seeks a remedy for an injury to his rights. 3 Bl. Comm. 25.

——In Code Practice. The person by whom a civil action is brought.

PLAINTIFF IN ERROR. A party who sues out a writ of error; and this, whether in the court below he was plaintiff or defendant.

PLANT. The fixtures and tools necessary to carry on any trade or mechanical business. 77 Ga. 748.

PLANTATIONS.

——In English Law. Colonies; dependencies. 1 Bl. Comm. 107. If this use of the term was ever current in America, it is now obsolete. See 7 Conn. 201.

In England, this word, as it is used in St. 12 Car. II. c. 18, is never applied to any of the British dominions in Europe, but only to the colonies in the West Indies and America. 1 Marsh. Ins. bk. 1, c. 3, § 2, p. 64.

——In American Law. A large estate, cultivated chiefly by negroes, who live in a distinct community on the estate, under the control of the proprietor. 79 Ga. 721.

PLAT. A map of a piece of land, on which are marked the courses and distances of the different lines, and the quantity of land it contains.

Such a plat may be given in evidence in ascertaining the position of the land and what is included, and may serve to settle the figure of a survey and correct mistakes. 5 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 160. See 17 Mass. 211; 5 Me. 219; 7 Me. 61; 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 444; 14 Mass. 149.

PLEA.

——In Equity. A special answer showing or relying upon one or more things as a cause why the suit should be either dismissed, or delayed, or barred. Mitf. Eq. Pl. (Jeremy Ed.) 219; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 223; Story, Eq. Pl. § 649.

The modes of making defense to a bill in equity are said to be by "demurrer," which demands of the court whether, from the matter apparent from the bill, the defendant shall answer at all; by "plea," which, resting on the foundation of new matter offered, demands whether the defendant shall answer further; by "answer," which responds generally to the charges of the bill; by "disclaimer," which denies any interest in the matters in question. Mitf. Eq. Pl. (Jeremy Ed.) 13; 2 Story (U. S.) 59; Story, Eq. Pl. § 437. Pleas are said to be "pure" which rely upon foreign matter to discharge or stay the suit, and "anomalous" or "negative" which consist mainly of denials of the substantial matters set forth in the bill. Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 651, 667; 2 Daniell, Ch. Pr. 97, 110; Beames, Eq. Pl. 123; Adams, Eq. 236.

(1) Pleas to the jurisdiction assert that the court before which the cause is brought is not the proper court to take cognizance of the matter.

(2) Pleas to the person may be to the person of the plaintiff or defendant. Those of the former class are mainly outlawry, excommunication, popish recusant convict, which are never pleaded in America, and very rarely now in England; attainder, which is now seldom pleaded (2 Atk. 399); alienage, which is not a disability unless the matter respect lands, when the alien may not hold them, or he be an alien enemy not under license (2 Ves. & B. 323); infancy, coverture, and idiocy, which are pleadable as at law (see "Abatement"); bankruptcy and insolvency, in which case all the facts necessary to establish the plaintiff as a legally declared bankrupt must be set forth (3 Mer. 667), though not necessarily as of the defendant's own knowledge (Younge, 331; 4 Beav. Rolls, 554; 1 Younge & C. 39); want of character in which he sues, as that he is not an administrator (2 Dick. 510; 1 Cox, 198), is not heir (2 Ves. & B. 159; 2 Brown, Ch. 143; 3 Brown, Ch. 489), is not a creditor (2 Sim. & S. 274), is not a partner (6 Madd. 61), as he pretends to be, that the plaintiff named is a fictitious person, or was dead at the commencement of the suit (Story, Eq. Pl. § 727). Those to the person of the defendant may show that the defendant is not the person he is alleged to be, or does not sustain the character given by the bill (6 Madd. 61; Rep. temp. Finch, 334), or that he is bankrupt, to require the assignees to be joined (Story, Eq. Pl. § 732). These pleas to the person are pleas in abatement, or, at least, in the nature of pleas in abatement.

(3) Pleas to the bill or the frame of the bill object to the suit as framed, or contend that it is unnecessary. These may be the pendency of another suit, which is analogous to the same plea at law, and is governed in most respects by the same principles (Story, Eq. Pl. § 736; 2 Mylne & C. 602; 1 Phil. Ch. 82; 1 Ves. Jr. 544; 4 Ves. Jr. 357; 1 Sim. & S. 491; Mitf. Eq. Pl. [Jeremy Ed.] 248; see "Lis Pendens"), and the other suit must be in equity, and not at law (Beames, Eq. Pl. 146-148); want of proper parties, which goes to both discovery and relief, where both are prayed for (Story, Eq. Pl. § 745; see 3 Younge & C. 447), but not to a bill of discovery merely (2 Paige [N. Y.] 280; 3 Paige [N. Y.] 222; 3 Cranch [U. S.] 220); a multiplicity of suits (1 P. Wms. 428; 2 Mason [U. S.] 190); multifariousness, which should be taken by way of demurrer, when the joining or confession of the distinct matters appears from the face of the bill, as it usually does (Story, Eq. Pl. § 271).

(4) Pleas in bar rely upon a bar created by statute, as, the statute of limitations (1 Sim. & S. 4; 2 Sim. 45; 3 Sumn. [U. S.] 152), which is a good plea in equity as well as at law, and with similar exceptions (Coop. Eq. Pl. 253; see "Statute of Limitations"), the statute of frauds, where its provisions apply (1 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 425; 2 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 275; 4 Ves. 24, 720; 2 Brown, Ch. 559), or some other public or private statute (2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 768); matter of record or as of record in some court, as, a common recovery (1 P. Wms. 754; 2 Freem. Ch. 180; 1 Vern. 13); a judgment at law (1 Keen, 456; 2 Mylne & C. 602; Story, Eq. Pl. § 781, note), the sentence or judgment of a foreign court or a court not of record (12 Clark & F. 368; 14 Sim. 265; 3 Hare, 100; 1 Younge & C. 464), especially where its jurisdiction is of a peculiar or exclusive nature (12 Ves. 307; Ambl. 756; 2 How. [U. S.] 619), with limitations in case of fraud (1 Ves. Jr. 284; Story, Eq. Pl. § 788), or a decree of the same or another court of equity (Cas. temp. Talb. 217; 7 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 1; 2 Sim. & S. 464; 2 Younge & C. 43); matters purely in pais, in which case the pleas may go to discovery, relief, or either, both, or a part of either, of which the principal (though not the only) pleas are, account, stated or settled (2 Atk. 1; 13 Price, 767; 7 Paige [N. Y.] 573; 1 Mylne & K. 231), accord and satisfaction (1 Hale, 564), award (2 Ves. & B. 764), purchase for valuable consideration (2 Sumn. [U. S.] 507; 2 Younge & C. 457), release (3 P. Wms. 315), lapse of time, analogous to the statute of limitations (1 Ves. Jr. 264; 10 Ves. 466; 1 Younge & C. 432, 453; 2 Jac. & W. 1; 1 Hare, 594; 1 Russ. & M. 453; 2 Younge & C. 58; 1 Johns. Ch. [N. Y.] 46; 10 Wheat. [U. S.] 152; 1 Schoales & L. 721; 6 Madd. 61; 3 Paige [N. Y.] 273; 5 Paige [N. Y.] 26; 7 Paige [N. Y.] 62), title in the defendant (Story, Eq. Pl. § 812).

——At Law. The defendant's answer by matter of fact to the plaintiff's declaration, as distinguished from a demurrer, which is an answer by matter of law.

It includes as well the denial of the truth of the allegations on which the plaintiff relies, as the statement of facts on which the defendant relies. In an ancient use, it denoted action, and is still used sometimes in that sense; as, "summoned to answer in a plea of trespass." Steph. Pl. 38, 39, note; Warren, Law Stud. 272, note (w); Oliver, Prec. 97. In a popular, and not legal, sense, the word is used to denote a forensic argument. It was strictly applicable in a kindred sense when the pleadings were conducted orally by the counsel. Steph. Pl. Append. note 1.

Pleas are either dilatory, which tend to defeat the particular action to which they apply on account of its being brought before the wrong court, by or against the wrong person or in an improper form, or peremptory, which impugn the right of action altogether, or which answer the plaintiff's allegations of right conclusively. Pleas are also said to be to the jurisdiction of the court, in suspension of the action, in abatement of the writ, in bar of the action. The first three classes are dilatory, the last peremptory. Steph. Pl. 63; 1 Chit. Pl. 425; Lawes, Pl. 36.

Pleas are of various kinds,—in abatement (see "Abatement"); in avoidance, called, also, "confession and avoidance," which admits, in words or in effect, the truth of the matters contained in the declaration, and alleges some new matter to avoid the effect of it, and show that the plaintiff is, notwithstanding, not entitled to his action (1 Chit. Pl. 540; Lawes, Pl. 122); in bar, which deny that the plaintiff has any cause of action (1 Chit. Pl. 407; Co. Litt. 303b). The term is often used in a restricted sense to denote what are with propriety called "special pleas in bar." These pleas are of two kinds,—the general issue, and special pleas in bar.

The parts of a plea are: First, the title of the court. Second, the title of the term. Third, the names of the parties in the margin. These, however, do not constitute any substantial part of the plea. The surnames only are usually inserted, and that of the defendant precedes the plaintiff's; as, "Roe ads. Doe." Fourth, the commencement, which includes the statement of the name of the defendant, the appearance, the defense (see "Defense"), the actio non (see "Actio Non"). Fifth, the body, which may contain the inducement, the protestation (see "Protestation"), ground of defense, quae est eadem, the traverse. Sixth, the conclusion.

(1) Dilatory pleas go to destroy the particular action, but do not affect the right of action in the plaintiff, and hence delay the decision of the cause upon its merits. Gould, Pl. c. ii. § 33. This class includes pleas to the jurisdiction, to the disability of the parties, and all pleas in abatement. All dilatory pleas must be pleaded with the greatest certainty, must contain a distinct, clear, and positive averment of all material facts, and must, in general, enable the plaintiff to correct the deficiency or error pleaded to. 1 Chit. Pl. 365. See "Abatement;" "Jurisdiction."

(2) Pleas in discharge admit the demand of the plaintiff, and show that it has been discharged by some matter of fact. Such are pleas of judgment, release, and the like.

(3) Pleas in excuse admit the demand or complaint stated in the declaration, but excuse the noncompliance with the plaintiff's claim, or the commission of the act of which he complains, on account of the defendant's having done all in his power to satisfy the former, or not having been the culpable author of the latter. A plea of tender is an example of the former, and a plea of son assault demesne an instance of the latter.

(4) Foreign pleas go to the jurisdiction, and their effect is to remove the action from the county in which the venue is originally laid. Carth. 402. Previous to the statute of Anne, an affidavit was required. 5 Mod. 335; Carth. 402; 1 Saund. Pl. 98, note 1; Viner, Abr. "Foreign Pleas;" 1 Chit. Pl. 382; Bac. Abr. "Abatement" (R).

(5) Pleas of justification, which assert that the defendant has purposely done the act of which the plaintiff complains, and in the exercise of his legal rights. 8 Term R. 78; 3 Wils. 71. No person is bound to justify who is not prima facie a wrongdoer. 1 Leon. 301; 2 Leon. 83; Cowp. 478; 4 Pick. (Mass.) 126; 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 443, 579; 1 Chit. Pl. 436.

(6) Pleas puis darrein continuance, which introduce new matter of defense, which has arisen or come to the plaintiff's knowledge since the last continuance. In most of the states, the actual continuance of a cause from one term to another, or from one particular day in term to another day in the same term, is practically done away with, and the prescribed times for pleading are fixed without any reference to terms of court. Still, this right of a defendant to change his plea so as to avail himself of facts arising during the course of the litigation remains unimpaired; and though there be no continuance, the plea is still called a plea puis darrein continuance, meaning, now, a plea upon facts arising since the last stage of the suit.

——In Criminal Law. The formal answer of the defendant to the indictment.

Pleas are either general or special; the general pleas being "guilty," "not guilty," and "nollo contendere," and all other pleas being special. Special pleas are either in bar, being, if found true, a bar to further prosecution, or in abatement, those which go merely to abate or suspend the proceeding. See "Pleading."

PLEA IN ABATEMENT. See "Plea."

PLEA IN BAR. See "Plea."

PLEA SIDE. The plea side of a court is that branch or department of the court which entertains or takes cognizance of civil actions and suits, as distinguished from its criminal or crown department. Thus, the court of queen's bench is said to have a plea side and a crown or criminal side; the one branch or department of it being devoted to the cognizance of civil actions, the other to criminal proceedings and matters peculiarly concerning the crown. So the court of exchequer is said to have a plea side and a crown side; the one being appropriated to civil actions, the other to matters of revenue. Brown.

PLEAD ISSUABLY. To plead in such manner as to make an issue of law and fact.

PLEAD OVER. To interpose a general plea after a special plea or demurrer has been disposed of.

PLEADER (Law Fr. pleador, pledor; old Fr. pleideoir; Law Lat. placitans advocatus). A person professionally employed to manage another's cause for him, particularly to plead orally, or argue for him in court. The use of professional pleaders or advocates may be traced, among some of the continental nations, to a period extremely remote. Steph. Pl. Append. note (8). In the assizes of Jerusalem, the term "pleader" (pledeoir), is used as nearly synonymous with "counsel" (conseill).

PLEADING.

——In Chancery Practice. Consists in making the formal written allegations or statements of the respective parties on the record to maintain the suit, or to defeat it, of which, when contested in matters of fact, they propose to offer proofs, and in matters of law to offer arguments to the court. Story, Eq. Pl. § 4, note. The substantial object of pleading is the same, but the forms and rules of pleading are very different, at law and in equity.

——In Civil Practice. The stating in a logical and legal form the facts which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action or the defendant's ground of defense. It is the formal mode of alleging that on the record which constitutes the support or the defense of the party in evidence. 3 Term R. 159; Doug. 278; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (A); Bac. Abr. "Pleas and Pleading;" Cowp. 682. Pleading is used to denote the act of making the pleadings.

——In Criminal Practice. The rules of pleading are the same as in civil practice. There is, however, less liberty of amendment of the indictment. The order of the defendant's pleading is as follows: First, to the jurisdiction; second, in abatement; third, special pleas in bar, as former jeopardy or pardon; fourth, the general issue.

See, generally, Lawes, Chitty, Stephen, and Gould on Pleading; 3 Bl. Comm. 301 et seq., and notes; Co. Litt. 303; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader;" Bac. Abr. "Plea and Pleading."

PLEADING, SPECIAL. By special pleading is meant the allegation of special or new matter, as distinguished from a direct denial of matter previously alleged on the opposite side. Gould, Pl. c. 1, § 18. See "Special Pleading."

PLEADINGS.

——In Chancery Practice. The written allegations of the respective parties in the suit. The pleadings in equity are less formal than those at common law.

The parts of the pleadings are (1) the bill, which contains the plaintiff's statement of his case, or information, where the suit is brought by a public officer in behalf of the sovereign; (2) the demurrer, by which the defendant demands judgment of the court, whether he shall be compelled to answer the bill or not; (3) the plea, whereby he shows some cause why the suit should be dismissed or barred; (4) the answer, which, controverting the case stated by the bill, confesses and avoids it, or traverses and denies the material allegations in the bill, or, admitting the case made by the bill, submits to the judgment of the court upon it, or relies upon a new case, or upon new matter stated in the answer, or upon both; (5) disclaimer, which seeks at once a termination of the suit by the defendants, disclaiming all right and interest in the matter sought by the bill. Story, Eq. Pl. § 546; Mitf. Eq. Pl. (Jeremy Ed.) 13, 106; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 108; 2 Story (U. S.) 59.

——In Common-Law Civil Practice. The statements of the parties, in legal and proper manner, of the causes of action and grounds of defense. The result of pleading. They were formerly made by the parties or their counsel, orally, in open court, under the control of the judge. They were then called the "parole." 3 Bl. Comm. 293; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 267.

The regular parts are (1) the declaration or count: (2) the plea, which is either to the jurisdiction of the court, or suspending the action, as in the case of a parol demurrer, or in abatement, or in bar of the action, or in replevin, an avowry or cognizance; (3) the replication, and, in case of an evasive plea, a new assignment, or, in replevin, the plea in bar to the avowry or cognizance; (4) the rejoinder, or, in replevin, the replication to the plea in bar; (4) the sur-rejoinder, being in replevin the rejoinder; (6) the rebutter; (7) the sur-rebutter. (Viner, Abr. "Pleas and Pleading" [C]; Bac. Abr. "Pleas and Pleadings" [A]); (8) pleas puis darrein continuance, when the matter of defense arises pending the suit.

The irregular or collateral parts of pleading are stated to be (1) demurrers to any part of the pleadings above mentioned; (2) demurrers to evidence given at trials; (3) bills of exceptions; (4) pleas in scire facias; (5) and pleas in error. Viner. Abr. "Pleas and Pleadings" (C); Bouv. Inst. Index.

——In Civil Practice under the Codes. The pleadings are (1) the complaint, (2) the answer, (3) the reply, and (4) the demurrer, which lies to either complaint, answer, or reply.

——In Criminal Practice. The pleadings are (1) the indictment; (2) the plea, either special or general.

PLEAS OF THE CROWN. In English law. A phrase now employed to signify criminal causes in which the king is a party. Formerly it signified royal causes for offenses of a greater magnitude than mere misdemeanors.

These were left to be tried in the courts of the barons; whereas the greater offenses, or royal causes, were to be tried in the king's courts, under the appellation of "pleas of the crown." 1 Robertson, Hist. Charles V. 48.

PLEAS ROLL. In English practice. A record which contains the declaration, plea, replication, rejoinder, and other pleadings, and the issue. Eunom. Dial. 2, § 29, p. 111.

PLEBEIAN. One who is classed among the common people, as distinguished from the nobles.

PLEBEYOS. In Spanish law. Commons; those who exercise any trade, or who cultivate the soil. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 5, c. 3, § 6, and note.

PLEBISCITE. A submission to the popular vote of a law or governmental policy.

PLEBISCITUM (Lat.) In Roman law. A law established by the people (plebs), on the proposal of a popular magistrate, as a tribune. Vicat; Calv. Lex.; Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 27, 37.

PLEBITY. The plebeians.

PLEBS (Lat.) In the Roman law. The commonalty, or citizens, exclusive of the patricians and senators. Plebis appellatione, sine patriciis et senatoribus, caeteri cives significantur. Inst. 1. 2. 4; Dig. 50. 16. 238, pr.

PLEDABLE (Law Fr.) That may be brought or conducted, as an action, or "plea," as it was formerly called. Britt. c. 32.

PLEDGE, or PAWN. A bailment of personal property as security for some debt or engagement. 41 N. Y. 241.

A deposit of personal property as security, with an implied power of sale in case of default. Jones, Pl. § 1.

A pledge or pawn (Lat. pignus), according to Story, is a bailment of personal property as security for some debt or engagement. Story, Bailm. § 286, which see for the less comprehensive definitions of Sir Wm. Jones, Lord Holt, Pothier, etc. Domat broadly defines it as an appropriation of the thing given for the security of an engagement. But the term is commonly used as Sir Wm. Jones defines it, to wit, as a bailment of goods by a debtor to his creditor, to be kept till the debt is discharged. Jones, Bailm. 117; 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Poth. de Naut. art. prelim. 1; Civ. Code, art. 2071; Domat, bk. 3, tit. 1, § 1, note 1; Civ. Code La. art. 3100; 6 Ired. (N. C.) 309. The pledgee secures his debt by the bailment, and the pledgor obtains credit or other advantage. See 1 Pars. Cont. 591 et seq.

Pledge and pawn. At common law, the terms were synonymous, but in modern usage "pawn" generally indicates the pledging of goods with a pawnbroker (q. v.)

Pledge and mortgage. A pledge is distinguished from a chattel mortgage in that it depends for its validity on possession of the subject matter.

Pledge and hypothecation. Hypothecation (q. v.) is a special form of pledge wherein the possession remains in the debtor.

——In Louisiana. There are two kinds of pledges,—the pawn and the antichresis. The former relates to movable securities, and the latter to immovables. If a creditor have not a right to enter on the land and reap the fruits, the security is not an antichresis. 3 La. 157. A pledge of negotiable paper is not valid against third parties without transfer from debtor to creditor. 2 La. 387. See, in general, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 351; 5 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 618; 18 La. 543; 1 La. Ann. 340; 2 La. Ann. 872.

PLEDGEE. He to whom a thing is pledged.

PLEDGERY. Suretyship.

PLEDGES. In pleading. Those persons who became sureties for the plaintiff's prosecution of the suit. Their names were anciently appended at the foot of the declaration. In time it became purely a formal matter, because the plaintiff was no longer liable to be amerced for a false claim, and the fictitious persons John Doe and Richard Roe became the universal pledges, or they might be omitted altogether (1 Tidd, Prac. 455; Archb. Civ. Pl. 171), or inserted at any time before judgment (4 Johns. [N. Y.] 90), and are now omitted.

PLEDGES TO RESTORE. In England, before the plaintiff in foreign attachment can issue execution against the property in the hands of the garnishee, he must find "pledges to restore," consisting of two householders, who enter into a recognizance for the restoration of the property, as a security for the protection of the defendant; for, as the plaintiff's debt is not proved in any stage of the proceedings, the court guards the rights of the absent defendant by taking security on his behalf, so that, if he should afterwards disprove the plaintiff's claim, he may obtain restitution of the property attached. Brand, For. Attachm. 93.

PLEDGOR. The party who makes a pledge.

PLEE (Law Fr.) In old English law. An action or suit; a "plea," in the ancient sense of the word. Parsonels plees pledables par attachments, personal actions which may be prosecuted by attachments. Britt. c. 32. En plees realx, et auxi en plees personals, in real actions, and also in personal actions. Litt. § 464.

A plea, in the modern sense. Plee en barre, a plea in bar. Litt. § 492.

PLEGIABILIS (Law Lat.) In old English law. That may be pledged; the subject of pledge or security. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, § 98.

PLEGII DE PROSEQUENDO. Pledges to prosecute with effect an action of replevin.

PLEGII DE RETORNO HABENDO. Pledges to return the subject of distress, should the right be determined against the party bringing the action of replevin. 3 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 422, note.

PLEGIIS ACQUIETANDIS, WRIT DE. The name of an ancient writ in the English law, which lies where a man becomes pledge or surety for another to pay a certain sum of money at a certain day. After the day, if the debtor does not pay the debt, and the surety be compelled to pay, he shall have this writ to compel the debtor to pay the same. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 321.

PLENA AETAS. Of full age.

PLENA ET CELERIS JUSTITIA FIAT partibus. Let full and speedy justice be done to the parties. 4 Inst. 67.

PLENA FORISFACTURA. A forfeiture of all that one possesses.

PLENA PROBATIO. In civil law. A term used to signify full proof, in contradistinction to semi-plena probatio, which is only a presumption. Code, 4. 19. 5. et seq.; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 119.

PLENARTY. In ecclesiastical law. Signifies that a benefice is full. See "Avoidance."

PLENARY. Full; complete.

In the courts of admiralty, and in the English ecclesiastical courts, causes or suits in respect of the different course of proceedings in each are termed "plenary" or "summary." Plenary, or full and formal, suits are those in which the proceedings must be full and formal; the term "summary" is applied to those causes where the proceedings are more succinct and less formal. 2 Chit. Prac. 481.

PLENE ADMINISTRAVIT (Lat. he has fully administered). In pleading. A plea in bar entered by an executor or administrator, by which he affirms that he had not in his possession at the time of the commencement of the suit, nor has had at any time since, any goods of the deceased to be administered. When the plaintiff replies that the defendant had goods, etc., in his possession at that time, and the parties join issue, the burden of the proof will be on the plaintiff. See 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 323; 6 Term R. 10; 1 Barn. & Ald. 254; 11 Viner, Abr. 349; 12 Viner, Abr. 185; 2 Phil. Ev. 295; 6 Comyn, Dig. 311.

PLENE ADMINISTRAVIT PRAETER (Lat. he has fully administered except). In pleading. A plea by which a defendant executor or administrator admits that there is a balance remaining in his hands unadministered.

PLENE COMPUTAVIT (Lat. he has fully accounted). In pleading. A plea in an action of account render, by which the defendant avers that he has fully accounted. Bac. Abr. "Accompt" (E). This plea does not admit the liability of the defendant to account. 15 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 153.

PLENIPOTENTIARY. Possessing full powers; as, a minister plenipotentiary is one authorized fully to settle the matters connected with his mission, subject, however, to the ratification of the government by which he is authorized.

PLENUM DOMINIUM (Lat.) The unlimited right which the owner has to use his property as he deems proper, without accountability to any one.

PLEYTO. In Spanish law. The pleadings in a cause. White, New Recop. bk. 3, tit. 7.

PLIGHT. An old English word, used sometimes for the estate with the habit and quality of the land. Co. Litt. 221. It extends to a rent charge, and to a possibility of dower. Id.; 1 Rolle, Abr. 447; Litt. § 289.

PL'IT'M. A contraction of placitum. Pl'ito, of placito. 1 Inst. Cl. 11.

PLOUGH BOTE. An allowance made to a rural tenant of wood sufficient for ploughs, harrows, carts, and other instruments of husbandry.

PLOUGH LAND. In old English law. An uncertain quantity of land. According to some opinions, it contains one hundred and twenty acres. Co. Litt. 69a.

PLOUGH SILVER. Money paid by tenants in composition of a duty to plough.

PLUMBATURA (Lat. from plumbum, lead). In the civil law. Soldering. Dig. 6. 1. 23. 5.

PLUMBUM (Lat.) In the civil law. Lead. Dig. 50. 16. 242. 2.

PLUNDER. The capture of personal property on land by a public enemy, with a view of making it his own. The property so captured is called "plunder."

The taking by open force, as by pirates.

It has been used in the sense of aggravated and open larceny. 8 Fed. 232.

PLUNDERAGE. In maritime law. The embezzlement of goods on board of a ship is known by the name of "plunderage."

The rule of the maritime law in such cases is that the whole crew shall be responsible for the property thus embezzled, because there must be some negligence in finding out the depredator. Abb. Shipp. 457; 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 17; 1 Pet. Adm. (U. S.) 200, 239, 243; 4 Bos. & P. 347.

PLURALIS NUMERUS EST DUOBUS contentus. The plural number is contained in two. 1 Rolle, 476.

PLURALITER. In the plural; plurally.

PLURALITY. The greatest number of votes given for any one person.

Plurality has the meaning, as used in governmental law, given above. Thus, if there are three candidates, for whom four hundred, three hundred and fifty, and two hundred and fifty votes are respectively given, the one receiving four hundred has a plurality, while five hundred and one would be a majority of the votes cast.

PLURES COHAEREDES SUNT QUASI unum corpus, propter unitatem juris quod habent. Several coheirs are as one body, by reason of the unity of right which they possess. Co. Litt. 163.

PLURES PARTICIPES SUNT QUASI unum corpus, in eo quod unum jus habent. Several part owners are as one body, by reason of the unity of their rights. Co. Litt. 164.

PLURIES (Lat. many times). A writ issued subsequently to a first and second (alias) of the same kind, which have proved ineffectual. The name is given to it from the word pluries in the Latin form of the writ: "We command you, as we have often (pluries) commanded you before," which distinguishes it from those which have gone before. Pluries is variously translated, in the modern forms of writs, by "formerly," "more than once," "often." The next writ to the pluries is called the "second pluries," and so on. 3 Bl. Comm. 283, Append. 15; Nat. Brev. 33.

PLURIS PETITIO (Lat.) In Scotch practice. An excessive demand.

PLUS EXEMPLA QUAM PECCATA NOcent. Examples hurt more than offenses.

PLUS PECCAT AUCTOR QUAM ACTOR. The instigator of a crime is worse than he who perpetrates it. 5 Coke, 99.

PLUS PETITIO. In Roman law. A phrase denoting the offense of claiming more than was just in one's pleadings. This "more" might be claimed in four different respects, viz.: (1) Re, i. e., in amount (e. g., £50 for £5); (2) loco, i. e., in place (e. g., delivery at some place more difficult to effect than the place specified); (3) tempore, i. e., in time (e. g., claiming payment on the 1st of August of what is not due till the 1st of September); and (4) causa, i. e., in quality (e. g., claiming a dozen of champagne, when the contract was only for a dozen of wine generally). Prior to Justinian's time, this offense was in general fatal to the action; but, under the legislation of the emperors Zeno and Justinian, the offense (if re, loco, or causa) exposed the party to the payment of three times the damage, if any, sustained by the other side, and (if tempore) obliged him to postpone his action for double the time, and to pay the costs of his first action before commencing a second. Brown.

PLUS VALET CONSUETUDO QUAM CONcessio. Custom is more powerful than grant.

PLUS VALET UNUS OCULATUS TESTis, quam auriti decem. One eye witness is better than ten ear ones. 4 Inst. 279.

PLUS VIDENT OCULI QUAM OCULUS. Eyes see more than one eye. 4 Inst. 160.

PO. LO. SUO. An old abbreviation for the words "ponit loco suo," put in his place, used in warrants of attorney. Towns. Pl. 431.

POACHING. Unlawful taking of game from the land of another. Unlawfully entering land, in nighttime, armed, with intent to destroy game. 1 Russ. Crimes, 469; 2 Steph. Comm. 82; 2 Chit. St. 221-245.

POBLADOR. In Spanish law. A colonizer; he who peoples; the founder of a colony.

POCKET JUDGMENT. A statute merchant which was enforceable at any time after nonpayment on the day assigned, without further proceedings. Wharton.

POCKET SHERIFF. In English law. A sheriff appointed by sole authority of the crown, not being one of the three nominated by the judges in the exchequer. 1 Bl. Comm. 342*.

POENA AD PAUCOS, METUS AD OMNES perveniat. If punishment be inflicted on a few, a dread comes to all.

POENA CORPORALIS. Corporal punishment.

POENA EX DELICTO DEFUNCTI, HAEres teneri non debet. The heir ought not to be bound in a penalty inflicted for the crime of the ancestor. 2 Inst. 198.

POENA NON POTEST, CULPA PERENnis erit. Punishment cannot be, crime will be, perpetual. 21 Viner, Abr. 271.

POENA PILLORALIS. In old English law. Punishment of the pillory. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 11.

POENAE POTIUS MOLLIENDAE QUAM exasperandae sunt. Punishments should rather be softened than aggravated. 3 Inst. 220.

POENAE SINT RESTRINGENDAE. Punishments should be restrained. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 29.

POENAE SUOS TENERE DEBET ACTOres et non alios. Punishment ought to be inflicted upon the guilty, and not upon others. Bracton, 380b; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 12; Id. lib. 4, c. 17, § 17.

POENALIS (Lat. from poena). In the civil law. Penal; imposing a penalty; claiming or enforcing a penalty. Actiones poenales, actions for penalties; penal actions. Inst. 4. 6. 12.

POENITENTIA (Lat. from poenitere, to repent). In the civil law. Repentance; a change of mind or purpose; the rescinding of a contract.

POINDING. In Scotch law. That diligence (q. v.) affecting movable subjects by which their property is carried directly to the creditor. Poinding is real or personal. Ersk. Inst. 3. 6. 11.

——Personal. Poinding of the goods belonging to the debtor, and of those goods only.

It may have for its warrant either letters of horning, containing a clause for poinding, and then it is executed by messengers; or precepts of poinding, granted by sheriffs, commissaries, etc., which are executed by their proper officers. No cattle pertaining to the plough, nor instruments of tillage, can be poinded in the time of laboring or tilling the ground, unless where the debtor has no other goods that may be poinded. Ersk. Inst. 3. 6. 11. This process is somewhat similar to distress.

——Real. Poinding of the ground. Though it be properly a diligence, this is generally considered by lawyers as a species of real action, and is so called to distinguish it from personal poinding, which is founded merely on an obligation to pay.

Every debitum fundi, whether legal or conventional, is a foundation for this action. It is therefore competent to all creditors in debts which make a real burden on lands. As it proceeds on a real right, it may be directed against all goods that can be found on the lands burdened; but goods brought upon the ground by strangers are not subject to this diligence. Even the goods of a tenant cannot be poinded for more than his term's rent. Ersk. Inst. 4. 1. 3.

POINT. A single distinct proposition or principle of law.

POINT RESERVED. A point or question of law which the court, not being fully satisfied how to decide, in the hurried trial of a cause, rules in favor of the party offering it, but subject to revision on a motion for a new trial. If, after argument, it be found to have been ruled correctly, the verdict is supported; if otherwise, it is set aside.

POISON. In medical jurisprudence. A substance having an inherent deleterious property which renders it, when taken into the system, capable of destroying life. Whart. & S. Med. Jur. § 493; Tayl. Poisons (2d Am. Ed.) 18.

POLE. A measure of length, equal to five yards and a half.

POLICE. That species of superintendence by magistrates which has principally for its object the maintenance of public tranquillity among the citizens. The officers who are appointed for this purpose are also called the police.

"Police is in general a system of precaution either for the prevention of crime or of calamities." Bentham.

The due regulation and domestic order of the kingdom, whereby the individuals of the state, like members of a well-governed family, are bound to conform their general behavior to the rules of propriety. 4 Bl. Comm. 162.

The word "police" has three significations. The first relates to the measures which are adopted to keep order, the laws and ordinances on cleanliness, health, the markets, etc. The second has for its object to procure to the authorities the means of detecting even the smallest attempts to commit crime, in order that the guilty may be arrested before their plans are carried into execution, and delivered over to the justice of the country. The third comprehends the laws, ordinances, and other measures which require the citizens to exercise their rights in a particular form.

Police has also been divided into "administrative police," which has for its object to maintain constantly public order in every part of the general administration; and "judiciary police," which is intended principally to prevent crimes by punishing the criminals. Its object is to punish crimes which the administrative police has not been able to prevent.

POLICE JURY. In Louisiana. A name given to certain officers who collectively exercise jurisdiction in certain cases of police; as, levying taxes, regulating roads, etc.

POLICE JUSTICE. A magistrate having criminal jurisdiction of minor offenses similar to that of a justice of the peace, but usually a city officer.

POLICE POWER. The general power of government in the administration of its police (q. v.), to preserve and promote the welfare of the public, even at the expense of infringing the private rights of individuals. Cooley, Const. Lim. 704.

It is an exception to the right of the citizen to conduct himself and use his property in such manner as he may see fit.

"It involves a provision and means of enforcing the legal maxim which underlies all law,—sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. The power of the government to impose this restraint is called 'police power.'" Tiedeman, Lim. Police Power, § 1.

"The police power of a state extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and to the protection of all property within the state, and hence to the making of all regulations promotive of domestic order, morals, health, and safety." 95 U. S. 465.

POLICY. In insurance. The instrument whereby insurance is made by an underwriter in favor of an assured, expressed, implied, or intended, against some risk, peril, or contingency in reference to some subject. It is usually either marine, or against fire, or on a life.

(1) An interest policy is one where the insured has a real, substantial, assignable interest in the thing insured.

(2) An open policy is one on which the value is to be proved by the assured. 1 Phil. Ins. §§ 4, 6, 7, 27, 439, 948, 1178. By an "open policy" is also sometimes meant, in the United States, one in which an aggregate amount is expressed in the body of the policy, and the specific amounts and subjects are to be indorsed from time to time. 12 La. Ann. 259; 19 N. Y. 305; 6 Gray (Mass.) 214.

(3) A valued policy is one where a value has been set on the ship or goods insured, and this value inserted in the policy in the nature of liquidated damages. In such a policy, the value of the subject is expressly agreed, or is, as betweeen the parties, the amount insured.

(4) A wager policy is a pretended insurance, founded on an ideal risk, where the insured has no interest in the thing insured, and can therefore sustain no loss by the happening of any of the misfortunes insured against. These policies are strongly reprobated. 3 Kent, Comm. 225.

POLICY OF THE LAW. Public policy (q. v.)

POLITIAE LEGIBUS NON LEGES POLITIIS adaptandae. Politics are to be adapted to the laws, and not the laws to politics. Hob. 154.

POLITICAL. Pertaining to policy, or the administration of the government. 90 Ill. 563. Political rights are those which may be exercised in the formation or administration of the government. They are distinguished from civil rights, which are the rights which a man enjoys as regards other individuals, and not in relation to the government. A political corporation is one which has principally for its object the administration of the government, or to which the powers of government, or a part of such powers, have been delegated. 1 Bouv. Inst. notes 182, 197, 198.

POLITICAL ARITHMETIC. An expression sometimes used to signify the art of making calculations on matters relating to a nation; the revenues, the value of land and effects; the produce of lands and manufactures; the population, and the general statistics of a country. Wharton.

POLITICAL OFFENSES. A class of offenses excluded from many extradition treaties, and including, generally, crimes against the government as such, and crimes incident to political uprisings. Treason, sedition, lese majestae, etc., are examples. Spear, Extradition, 48.

The nature of political offenses is open to treaty definition, and in some treaties it has been defined to exclude the assassination of the ruler.

POLITICAL OFFICES. Such as are not immediately connected with the administration of justice, or with the execution of the orders of a superior, as the president or the head of a department. 13 Wall. (U. S.) 568, 575.

POLITICAL OR CIVIL LIBERTY. Natural liberty, so far restrained by human laws as is necessary and expedient for the general advantage of the public. 1 Bl. Comm. 125.

POLITICAL QUESTIONS. Questions involving executive policy, and within the power of the executive to determine, such as the recognition of a particular government in a foreign state. Such questions will not be decided by the courts. See 7 How. (U. S.) 39.

POLITICS. The science of government.

POLL. A head. Hence poll tax is the name of a tax imposed upon the people at so much a head.

To poll a jury is to require that each juror shall himself declare what is his verdict. This may be done, at the instance of either party, at any time before the verdict is recorded, according to the practice in some states. See 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 23; 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 188; 1 Ill. 109; 7 Ill. 342; 9 Ill. 336. In some states it lies in the discretion of the judge. 1 McCord (S. C.) 24, 525; 22 Ga. 431.

——In Conveyancing. A deed poll, or single deed, is one made by a single party, whose edges are polled, or shaved even, in distinction from an "indenture," whose sides are indented, and which is executed by more than one party. 2 Bl. Comm. 296. See "Deed Poll."

POLLS. The place where electors cast in their votes.

POLLICITATION. In civil law. A promise not yet accepted by the person to whom it is made. It differs from a contract, inasmuch as the latter includes a concurrence of intention in two parties, one of whom promises something to the other, who accepts, on his part, of such promise. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 2, c. 2; Poth. Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, sec. 1, art. 1, § 2.

POLYANDRY. The state of a woman who has several husbands. Polyandry is legalized only in Thibet.

POLYGAMIA EST PLURIUM SIMUL VIrorum uxorumve connubium. Polygamy is the marriage with many husbands or wives at one time. 3 Inst. 88.

POLYGAMY. The act or state of a person who, knowing that he has two or more wives, or that she has two or more husbands, marries another.

It differs from "bigamy" (q. v.) Comyn, Dig. "Justices" (S 5); Dict. de Jur.; 3 Inst. 88.

But "bigamy" is now commonly used even where "polygamy" would be strictly correct. 1 Russ. Crimes, 186, note. On the other hand, "polygamy" is used where "bigamy" would be strictly correct. Gen. St. Mass. 1860, p. 817.

POLYGARCHY. A term used to express a government which is shared by several persons; as, when two brothers succeed to the throne, and reign jointly.

POND. A body of stagnant water; a pool, either natural or artificial. 13 Pick. (Mass.) 265. A pond differs from a lake only in size.

PONDERANTUR TESTES NON NUMErantur. Witnesses are weighed, not counted. 1 Starkie, Ev. 554; Best, Ev. 426, § 389; 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 105, 109.

PONDUS (Lat.) In Old English law. Poundage; literally, weight. A duty anciently paid to the king.

PONDUS REGIS (Lat.) In old English law. The king's weight; the standard weight appointed by the king. Cowell; 1 Bl. Comm. 276.

PONE (Lat. ponere, to put). In English practice. An original writ issuing out of chancery, for the purpose of removing a plaint from an inferior court into the superior courts at Westminster. The word signifies "put,"—put by gages, etc. The writ is called from the words it contained when in Latin, pone per vadium et salvos plegios, etc., put by gage and safe pledges, etc. See Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 69, 70a; Wilkinson, Repl. Index.

PONE PER VADIUM. In English practice. An obsolete writ to the sheriff to summon the defendant to appear and answer the plaintiff's suit, on his putting in sureties to prosecute. It was so called from the words of the writ, "pone per vadium et salvos plegios," "put by gage and safe pledges, A. B., the defendant." It issued out of the common pleas, being grounded on the nonappearance of the defendant at the return of the original writ, and commanded the sheriff to take certain of his goods, which he should forfeit if he did not appear or make him find sureties. 3 Bl. Comm. 210.

PONENDIS IN ASSISIS. An obsolete writ to impanel a jury.

PONENDUM IN BALLIUM. A writ commanding that a prisoner be bailed in cases bailable. Reg. Orig. 133.

PONENDUM SIGILLUM AD EXCEPTIonem. A writ by which justices were required to put their seals to exceptions exhibited by a defendant against a plaintiff's evidence, verdict, or other proceedings, before them, according to St. Westminster II. (13 Edw. I. st. 1, c. 31).

PONERE (Lat.) To put. The word is used in the old law in various connections, in all of which it can be translated by the English verb "put." See Glanv. lib. 2, c. 3.

PONIT SE (Lat. puts himself). In English criminal practice. When the defendant pleads "not guilty," his plea is recorded by the officer of the court, either by writing the words "po. se," an abbreviation of the words ponit se super patriam, puts himself upon his country, or, as at the central criminal court, non cul. 2 Den. C. C. 392. See "Arraignment."

PONTAGE. A contribution towards the maintenance, rebuilding, or repairs of a bridge. The toll taken for this purpose also bears this name. Obsolete.

PONTIBUS REPARANDIS. An old writ directed to the sheriff, requiring him to charge one or more to repair a bridge. Reg. Orig. 153.

POOL. A pond (q. v.)

A combination of independent persons or corporations for the division of earnings. See "Pooling Contract."

POOLING CONTRACT. Strictly, an agreement between common carriers to divide their earnings on an agreed basis, irrespective of the proportions which such earnings bore to each other, the same being put into a common fund or "pool" (15 Fed. 667; 23 Fed. 306); but the term is loosely applied to other combinations of carriers. See 126 Ind. 348.

POOR DEBTOR. One who, being imprisoned in a civil action, has no property to pay the debt whereon the same was issued, and who is accordingly entitled to his release on making oath to such fact, and on other conditions variously affixed by statute.

POOR DEBTOR'S OATH. An oath of poverty, on taking which one imprisoned on execution is entitled to release.

POPE. The head of the Roman Catholic church. He is a temporal prince. He is elected by certain officers called "cardinals," and remains in power during life. In the 9th Collation of the Authentics it is declared the bishop of Rome hath the first place of sitting in all assemblies, and the bishop of Constantinople the second. Ridley, Civ. & Ecc. Law, pt. 1, c. 3, § 10.

The pope has no political authority in the United States.

POPULAR ACTION. An action given by statute to any one who will sue for the penalty. A qui tam action. Dig. 47. 23. 1.

POPULISCITUM (Lat.) An act of the commons; same as plebiscitum. Ainsworth.

A law passed by the whole people assembled in comitia centuriata, and at the proposal of one of the senate, instead of a tribune, as was the case with a plebiscitum. Tayl. Civ. Law, 178; Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 26, 37.

POPULUS (Lat.) In the Roman law. The people; the whole body of the citizens, including, with the plebs or commonalty, the patricians and senators; appellatione populi universi cives significantur, connumeratis etiam patriciis et senatoribus. Inst. 1. 2. 4.

PORCION. In Spanish law. A part or portion; a lot or parcel; an allotment of land. See 16 S. W. 49.

PORT. A place to which the officers of the customs are appropriated, and which includes the privileges and guidance of all members and creeks which are allotted to them. 1 Chit. Com. Law, 726; Postlethwaite.

A proper place for the lading or unlading of vessels, recognized and supervised for maritime purposes by the public authorities.

A port differs from a haven, and includes something more. First, it is a place at which vessels may arrive and discharge or take in their cargoes. Second, it comprehends a ville, city, or borough, called in Latin caput corpus, for the reception of mariners and merchants, for securing the goods and bringing them to market, and for victualling the ships. Third, it is impressed with its legal character by the civil authority. Hale de Port. Mar. c. 2; 1 Harg. Tr. 46, 73; Bac. Abr. "Prerogative" (D 5); Comyn, Dig. "Navigation" (E); 4 Inst. 148; Callis, Sewers, 56; 2 Chit. Com. Law, 2; Dig. 50. 16. 59; Id. 43. 12. 1. 13; Id. 47. 10. 15. 7; Id. 39. 4. 15.

PORT TOLL. The toll paid for bringing goods into a port.

PORTATICA (Law Lat.) In English law. The generic name for port duties charged to ships. Harg. Tr. 74.

PORTER. The name of an ancient English officer who bore or carried a rod before the justices. The door keeper of the English parliament also bears this name.

One who is employed as a common carrier to carry goods from one place to another in the same town is also called a porter. Such person is, in general, answerable as a common carrier. Story, Bailm. § 496.

PORTGREVE (from Saxon gerefa, reeve or bailiff, and port). A chief magistrate in certain maritime towns. The chief magistrate of London was anciently so called, as appears from a charter of King William I. Instead of this portgreve of London, the succeeding kings appointed two bailiffs, and afterwards a mayor. Camden, Hist. 325.

PORTMEN. The burgesses of Ipswich and of the Cinque Ports were so called.

PORTMOTE. In old English law. A court held in ports or haven towns, and sometimes in inland towns also. Cowell; Blount.

PORTORIA (Lat.) In civil law. Duties paid in ports on merchandise. Code, 4. 61. 3. Taxes levied in old times at city gates; tolls for passing over bridges. Vicat; Spelman.

PORTSALES. Auctions were anciently so called, because they took place in ports.

PORTSOKA, or PORTSOKEN. The suburbs of a city, or any place within its jurisdiction. Somner; Cowell.

POSITIVE. Express; absolute; not doubtful. This word is frequently used in composition.

POSITIVE CONDITION. One in which the thing which is the subject of it must happen; as, if I marry. It is opposed to a negative condition, which is where the thing which is the subject of it must not happen; as, if I do not marry.

POSITIVE EVIDENCE. That which, if believed, establishes the truth or falsehood of a fact in issue, and does not arise from any presumption. It is distinguished from circumstantial evidence (q. v.) 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3057.

POSITIVE FRAUD. The intentional and successful employment of any cunning, deception, or artifice to circumvent, cheat, or deceive another. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 186; Dig. 4. 3. 1. 2; Id. 2. 14. 7. 9. It is cited in opposition to constructive fraud.

POSITIVE LAW. Law actually ordained or established, under human sanctions, as distinguished from the law of nature or natural law, which comprises those considerations of justice, right, and universal expediency that are announced by the voice of reason or of revelation. Municipal law is chiefly, if not essentially, positive; while the law of nations has been deemed by many of the earlier writers as merely an application of the law of nature. That part of the law of nations which rests on positive law may be considered in a threefold point of view: First, the universal voluntary law, or those rules which become law by the uniform practice of nations in general, and by the manifest utility of the rules themselves; second, the customary law, or that which, from motives of convenience, has, by tacit but implied agreement, prevailed, not necessarily among all nations, nor with so permanent a utility as to become a portion of the universal voluntary law, but enough to have acquired a prescriptive obligation among certain states so situated as to be mutually benefited by it (1 Taunt. 241); third, the conventional law, or that which is agreed between particular states by express treaty, a law binding on the parties among whom such treaties are in force. 1 Chit. Com. Law, 28.

POSITIVI JURIS (Law Lat.) Of positive law. "That was a rule positivi juris; I do not mean to say an unjust one." Lord Ellenborough, 12 East, 639.

POSITO UNO OPPOSITORUM NEGATUR alterum. One of two opposite positions being affirmed, the other is denied. 3 Rolle, 422.

POSSE. This word is used substantively to signify a possibility. For example, such a thing is in posse, that is, such a thing may possibly be. When the thing is in being, the phrase to express it is, in esse.

POSSE COMITATUS (Lat.) The power of the county.

Citizens summoned by the sheriff to assist him in the execution of process.

POSSESSED. This word is applied to the right and enjoyment of a termor, or a person having a term, who is said to be possessed, and not seised. Bac. Tr. 335; Poph. 76; Dyer, 369.

POSSESSIO (Lat.)

——In Civil Law. The detention of a thing; divided into, first, natural, or the naked detention of a thing, without intention to acquire ownership; second, civil, or the detention of a thing to which one has a right, or with intention of acquiring ownership. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 1288; Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 210, 213.

——In Old English Law. Possession; seisin. Law Fr. & Lat Dict.; 2 Bl. Comm. 227; Bracton, lib. 2, c. 17; Cowell, "Possession." But seisina cannot be of an estate less than freehold; possessio can. New England Sheriff, 141; 1 Metc. (Mass.) 450; 6 Metc. (Mass.) 439.

POSSESSIO BONA FIDE (Lat.) Possession in good faith.

POSSESSIO BONORUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The possession of goods. More commonly termed bonorum possessio.

POSSESSIO CIVILIS. In Roman law. A legal possession, i. e., a possessing accompanied with the intention to be or to thereby become owner, and, as so understood, it was distinguished from "possessio naturalis," otherwise called "nuda detentio," which was a possessing without any such intention. Possessio civilis was the basis of usucapio or of longi temporis possessio, and was usually, but not necessarily, adverse possession. Brown.

POSSESSIO EST QUASI PEDIS POSITIO. Possession is, as it were, the position of the foot. 3 Coke, 42.

POSSESSIO FRATRIS (Lat. the brother's possession). A technical phrase applied in the English law relating to descents, to denote the possession by one in such privity with a person as to be considered the person's own possession.

POSSESSIO FRATRIS DE FEODO SIMplici facit sororem esse haeredem. Possession of the brother in fee simple makes the sister to be heir. 3 Coke, 42; 2 Bl. Comm. 227; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 473.

POSSESSIO NATURALIS. See "Possessio Civilis."

POSSESSIO PACIFICA POUR ANNS 60 facit jus. Peaceable possession for sixty years gives a right. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 26.

POSSESSION. The detention or enjoyment of a thing which a man holds or exercises by himself, or by another who keeps or exercises it in his name.

The owning or having a thing in one's power. 64 N. Y. 80. "Possession of land is the holding of and exercise of exclusive dominion over it." 25 Iowa, 177.

By the possession of a thing, we always conceive the condition in which not only one's own dealing with the thing is physically possible, but every other person's dealing with it is capable of being excluded. Thus, the seaman possesses his ship, but not the water in which it moves, although he makes each subserve his purpose.

(1) Actual possession exists where the thing is in the immediate occupancy of the party. 3 Dev. (N. C.) 34.

(2) Constructive possession is that which exists in contemplation of law, without actual personal occupation. 11 Vt. 129; 64 N. Y. 80. And see 1 McLean (U. S.) 214, 265; 2 Bl. Comm. 116.

(3) Adverse possession is possession inconsistent with the right of the true owner. See "Adverse Possession."

(4) Naked possession, called also "bare possession," is actual possession without shadow or pretense of right. 3 Colo. 360.

——In Louisiana.

(1) Civil possession exists when a person ceases to reside in a house or on the land which he occupied, or to detain the movable which he possessed, but without intending to abandon the possession. It is the detention of a thing by virtue of a just title, and under the conviction of possessing as owner. Civ. Code La. arts. 3392, 3394.

(2) Natural possession is that by which a man detains a thing corporeal; as, by occupying a house, cultivating ground, or retaining a movable in his possession. Natural possession is also defined to be the corporeal detention of a thing which we possess as belonging to us, without any title to that possession, or with a title which is void. Civ. Code La. arts. 3391, 3393.

POSSESSION MONEY. An allowance to one put in possession of goods taken under writ of fieri facias. Holthouse.

POSSESSION VAUT TITRE (Fr.) In English law, as in most systems of jurisprudence, the fact of possession raises a prima facie title or a presumption of the right of property in the thing possessed. In other words, the possession is as good as the title (about). Brown.

POSSESSION, WRIT OF. Process to put into execution a judgment in ejectment for delivery of the premises. 2 Rev. St. N. Y. p. 310, § 37.

POSSESSOR. He who holds, detains, or enjoys a thing, either by himself or his agent, which he claims as his own.

In general, the possessor of personal chattels is presumed to be the owner; and in case of real estate he has a right to receive the profits until a title adverse to his possession has been established, leaving him subject to an action for the mesne profits.

POSSESSOR BONA FIDE. See "Bona Fide Possessor, etc."

POSSESSORY. Relating to possession; founded on possession; contemplating or claiming possession.

POSSESSORY ACTION.

——In Old English Law. A real action, in which the plaintiff, called the "demandant," sought to recover the possession of land, tenements, and hereditaments. On account of the great nicety required in its management, and the introduction of more expeditious methods of trying titles by other actions, it has been laid aside. Finch, Laws, 257; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2640.

——In Louisiana. An action by which one claims to be maintained in the possession of an immovable property, or of a right upon or growing out of it, when he has been disturbed; or to be reinstated to that possession, when he has been divested or evicted. 2 La. 227, 254.

——In Scotch Law. An action by which the possession of heritable or movable property may be recovered and tried. An action of molestation is one of them. Paterson, Comp. § 1058, note.

POSSESSORY JUDGMENT. In Scotch practice. A judgment which entitles a person who has uninterruptedly been in possession for seven years to continue his possession until the question of right be decided in due course of law. Bell, Dict.

POSSIBILITAS (Lat.) In old English law. Possibility; a possibility. Possibilitas post dissolutionem executionis nunquam reviviscatur, a possibility will never be revived after the dissolution of its execution. 1 Rolle, 321. After a possibility has become executed, it will not be revived by a dissolution of the estate, as by a divorce. Post executionem status, lex non patitur possibilitatem, after the execution of an estate, the law does not suffer a possibility. 3 Bulst. 108.

POSSIBILITY. An uncertain thing which may happen. Lilly, Reg. An expectancy which is not founded on any limitation, provision, or trust, such as the expectancy of an heir apparent, who may be disinherited by will, or may not survive the ancestor.

(1) A bare possibility is one that is not coupled with an interest, as that a son may inherit the lands of his father, who is living.

(2) A possibility coupled with an interest is where the person who is to take an estate upon the happening of a contingency is ascertained and fixed.

(3) A near or common possibility is such as death or death without issue.

(4) A remote possibility is such as a remainder to the heirs of a person not in being. 4 Kent, Comm. 206, 262.

POSSIBILITY ON A POSSIBILITY. See "Double Possibility."

POST (Lat.) After.

——In Real-Estate Law. When two or more alienations or descents have taken place between an original intruder and the tenant or defendant in a writ of entry, the writ is said to be in the post, because it states that the tenant had not entry unless after the ouster of the original intruder. 3 Bl. Comm. 182.

——In Military Law. A station where military duty is performed, or stores are kept, or something connected with military affairs is done. 94 U. S. 219.

——In Latin Phrases. A preposition meaning "after."

POST-ACT. An after-act; an act done afterwards.

POST CONQUESTUM. After the Conquest. Words first used in the king's title by King Edward I., 1328, to distinguish the Edwards after the Conquest from those before it, and constantly used in the time of Edward III. Tomlins.

POST DATE. To date an instrument a time after that on which it is made. See "Date."

POST DIEM (Lat.) After the day; as, a plea of payment post diem,—after the day when the money became due. Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (2 W 29).

POST DISSEISIN. In English law. The name of a writ which lies for him who, having recovered lands and tenements by force of a novel disseisin, is again disseised by a former disseisor. Jacob.

POST ENTRY. In maritime law. An entry made by a merchant upon the importation of goods, after the goods have been weighed, measured, or gauged, to make up the deficiency of the original or prime entry. The custom of making such entries has arisen from the fact that a merchant in making the entry at the time of importation is not or may not be able to calculate exactly the duties which he is liable to pay. He therefore makes an approximately correct entry, which he subsequently corrects by the post entry. See Chit. Com. Law, 746.

POST EXECUTIONEM STATUS LEX non patitur possibilitatem. After the execution of the estate, the law suffers not a possibility. 3 Bulst. 108.

POST FACTO (Lat.) After the fact. See "Ex Post Facto."

POST-FACTUM. An after-act; an act done afterwards; a post-act.

POST FINE. In old conveyancing. A fine or sum of money, otherwise called the "king's silver," formerly due on granting the licentia concordandi, or leave to agree, in levying a fine of lands. It amounted to three-twentieths of the supposed annual value of the land, or ten shillings for every five marks of land. 2 Bl. Comm. 350.

POST LIMINUM (Lat. from post, after, and limen, threshold). A fiction of civil law, by which persons or things taken by the enemy were restored to their former state on coming again under the power of the nation to which they formerly belonged. Calv. Lex.; 1 Kent, Comm. 108*. It is also recognized by the law of nations. But movables are not entitled to the benefit of this rule, by strict law of nations, unless promptly recaptured. The rule does not affect property which is brought into a neutral territory. 1 Kent, Comm. 108. It is so called from the return of the person or thing over the threshold or boundary of the country from which it was taken.

POST LITEM MOTAM (Lat.) After the commencement of the suit.

Declarations or acts of the parties made post litem motam are presumed to be made with reference to the suit then pending, and, for this reason, are not evidence in favor of the persons making them; while those made before an action has been commenced, in some cases, as when a pedigree is to be proved, may be considered as evidence. 4 Campb. 401.

POST MORTEM (Lat.) After death; as, an examination post mortem is an examination made of a dead body to ascertain the cause of death; an inquisition post mortem is one made by the coroner.

POST-NATUS (Lat.) Literally, afterborn. It is used by the old law writers to designate the second son.

POST NOTES. A species of banknotes payable at a distant period, and not on demand. 2 Watts & S. (Pa.) 463. A kind of banknotes intended to be transmitted a distance by post. See 24 Me. 36.

POST NUPTIAL. Something which takes place after marriage; as, a post-nuptial settlement, which is a conveyance made generally by the husband for the benefit of the wife.

POST OBIT (Lat.) An agreement by which the obligor borrows a certain sum of money, and promises to pay a larger sum, exceeding the lawful rate of interest, upon the death of a person from whom he has some expectation, if the obligor be then living. 7 Mass. 119; 6 Madd. 111; 5 Ves. 57; 19 Ves. 628.

Equity will, in general, relieve a party from these unequal contracts, as they are fraudulent on the ancestor. See 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 342; 2 P. Wms. 182; 2 Sim. 183, 192; 5 Sim. 524. But relief will be granted only on equitable terms; for he who seeks equity must do equity. 1 Fonbl. Eq. bk. 1, c. 2, § 13, note (p); 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 344. See "Catching Bargain;" "Macedonian Decree."

POST PROLEM SUSCITATAM. After issue born. Co. Litt. 19b.

POST-TERMINAL SITTINGS. Sittings after term. See "Sittings After Term."

POST TERMINUM. After term, or post term. The return of a writ not only after the day assigned for its return, but after the term also, for which a fee was due. The fee itself. Cowell.

POSTEA (Lat. afterwards). In practice. The indorsement, on the nisi prius record purporting to be the return of the judge before whom a cause is tried, of what has been done in respect of such record.

It states the day of trial, before what judge, by name, the cause is tried, and also who is or was an associate of such judge. It also states the appearance of the parties by their respective attorneys, or their defaults, and the summoning and choice of the jury, whether those who were originally summoned, or those who were tales, or taken from the standers-by. It then states the finding of the jury upon oath, and the assessment of the damages, with the occasion thereof, together with the costs.

POSTERIORA DEROGANT PRIORIBUS. Posterior things derogate from things prior. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 90.

POSTERIORES (Lat.) This term was used by the Romans to denote the descendants in a direct line beyond the sixth degree. It is still used in making genealogical tables.

POSTERIORITY. Being or coming after. It is a word of comparison, the correlative of which is "priority;" as, when a man holds lands from two landlords, he holds from his ancient landlord by priority, and from the other by posteriority. 2 Inst. 392.

These terms, "priority" and "posteriority," are also used in cases of liens. The first are prior liens, and are to be paid in the first place; the last are posterior liens, and are not entitled to payment until the former have been satisfied.

POSTERITY. All the descendants of a person in a direct line.

POSTHUMOUS CHILD. One born after the death of its father, or, when the Caesarian operation is performed, after that of the mother.

POSTLIMINIUM (Lat. from post, after, and limen, a threshold).

——In the Civil Law. The return or restoration of a person to a former estate or right; sometimes Englished "postliminy." A fiction applied in the case of a person who had been taken prisoner by an enemy, and afterwards returned from captivity, by which he was supposed never to have been abroad, and was on this ground restored to his former rights. Postliminium fingit eum qui captus est in civitate semper fuisse, postliminy supposes that he who was taken prisoner had always been in the state. Inst. 1. 12. 5. See Dig. 49. 15.

Postliminium included things as well as persons. Paulus, in the Digests, defines it to be jus amissae rei recipiendae ab extraneo, et in statum pristinum restituendae, inter nos ac liberos populos regesque moribus, legibus constitutum. Nam quod bello amisimus, aut etiam citra bellum, hoc si rursus recipiamus dicimur postliminio recipere, the right of receiving a lost thing from a foreigner, and of restoring it to its former state, established between us and free nations and kings, by customs and by laws. For whatever we have lost in war, or even not in war, if we receive it again, we are said to receive it postliminio. Dig. 49. 15. 19, pr.

Postliminium is thus analyzed and explained in the Institutes: It is called postliminium from limen (threshold), and post (after). Wherefore we properly say of one who was taken by an enemy, and afterwards came into our borders or limits, that he has returned postliminio. For as the threshold of a house makes, as it were, the limit or boundary of it, so the ancients chose to call the boundary or border of the empire its threshold. Hence limen (a threshold) came to be used in the sense of a limit (finis), and boundary (terminus). And hence the word postliminium was framed, and used to signify that a person had returned to the same threshold which he had lost; ab eo postliminium dictum est, quia ad idem limen revertebatur quod amiserat. So that now a prisoner who is recovered from an enemy, and returns home, is supposed to have returned in postliminy, that is, in the way explained. Inst. 1. 12. 5.

——In the Law of Nations. A right which arises from a return in limen, that is, to the borders of one's country. Grotius de Jur. Belli, lib. 3, c. 9, § 2. A term derived from the Roman law, and extensively used in public law. See its etymology explained by Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 3, c. 9, § 1. See his whole chapter, "De Postliminio." The term is used in maritime law. See Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 4.

POSTLIMINIUM FINGIT EUM QUI CAPtus est in civitate semper fuisse. Postliminy feigns that he who has been captured has never left the state. Inst. 1. 12. 5; Dig. 49. 15.

POSTMAN. A senior barrister in court of exchequer, who has precedence in motions. So called from the place where he sits. 2 Bl. Comm. 28; Wharton. A letter carrier. Webster.

POSTMARK. A stamp or mark put on letters in the post office.

Postmarks are evidence of a letter's having passed through the post office. 2 Campb. 620; 2 Bos. & P. 316; 15 East, 416; 1 Maule & S. 201; 15 Conn. 206.

POSTNATI (Lat. those born after). Applied to American and British subjects born after the separation of England and the United States; also to the subjects of Scotland born after the union of England and Scotland. Those born after an event, as opposed to antenati, those born before. 2 Kent, Comm. 56-59; 2 Pick. (Mass.) 394; 5 Day (Conn.) 169*. See "Antenati."

POSTNUPTIAL SETTLEMENT. A settlement made after marriage upon a wife or children; otherwise called a "voluntary" settlement. 2 Kent, Comm. 173.

POSTPONEMENT. The putting over of a cause for trial to another term. Considerable confusion exists in the use of the words, "continuance," "adjournment," and "postponement." In exact phraseology, "continuance" means the revival of a cause after it has abated, "adjournment" the putting over of a cause from day to day within the term, and "postponement" the putting over of a cause from term to term.

POSTREMO GENITURE. Borough English (q. v.)

POSTULATIO (Lat.) In Roman law. The name of the first act in a criminal proceeding.

A person who wished to accuse another of a crime appeared before the praetor and requested his authority for that purpose, designating the person intended. This act was called postulatio. The postulant (calumnium jurabat) made oath that he was not influenced by a spirit of calumny, but acted in good faith, with a view to the public interest. The praetor received this declaration, at first made verbally, but afterwards in writing, and called a "libel." The postulatio was posted up in the forum, to give public notice of the names of the accuser and the accused. A second accuser sometimes appeared, and went through the same formalities.

Other persons were allowed to appear and join the postulant or principal accuser. These were said postulare subscriptionem, and were denominated subscriptores. Cicero, Caecil. Divinatio, 15. But commonly such persons acted concurrently with the postulant, and inscribed their names at the time he first appeared. Only one accuser, however, was allowed to act; and if the first inscribed did not desist in favor of the second, the right was determined, after discussion, by judges appointed for the purpose. Cicero, Verres, i. 6. The preliminary proceeding was called divinatio, and is well explained in the oration of Cicero entitled Divinatio. See Aulus Gellius, Att. Noct. lib. ii. c. 4.

The accuser having been determined in this manner, he appeared before the praetor, and formally charged the accused by name, specifying the crime. This was called nominis et criminis delatio. The magistrate reduced it to writing, which was called inscriptio, and the accuser and his adjuncts, if any, signed it, subscribebant. This proceeding corresponds to the indictment of the common law.

If the accused appeared, the accuser formally charged him with the crime. If the accused confessed it, or stood mute, he was adjudged to pay the penalty. If he denied it, the inscriptio contained his answer, and he was then in reatu (indicted, as we should say), and was called reus, and a day was fixed, ordinarily after an interval of at least ten days, according to the nature of the case, for the appearance of the parties. In the case of Verres, Cicero obtained one hundred and ten days to prepare his proofs, although he accomplished it in fifty days, and renounced, as he might do, the advantage of the remainder of the time allowed him.

At the day appointed for the trial, the accuser and his adjuncts or colleagues, the accused, and the judges, were summoned by the herald of the praetor. If the accuser did not appear, the case was erased from the roll. If the accused made default, he was condemned. If both parties appeared, a jury was drawn by the praetor or judex quaestionis. The jury was called jurati homines. and the drawing of them sortitio, and they were taken from a general list made out for the year. Either party had a right to object to a certain extent to the persons drawn, and then there was a second drawing, called subsortitio, to complete the number.

In some tribunals, quaestiones (the jury) were editi (produced) in equal number by the accuser and the accused, and sometimes by the accuser alone, and were objected to or challenged in different ways, according to the nature of the case. The number of the jury also varied according to the tribunal (quaestio). They were sworn before the trial began; hence they were called jurati.

The accusers, and often the subscriptores, were heard, and afterwards the accused, either by himself or by his advocates, of whom he commonly had several. The witnesses, who swore by Jupiter, gave their testimony after the discussions or during the progress of the pleadings of the accuser. In some cases it was necessary to plead the cause on the third day following the first hearing, which was called comperendinatio.

After the pleadings were concluded, the praetor or the judex quaestionis distributed tablets to the jury, upon which each wrote, secretly, either the letter A. (absolvo), or the letter C. (condemno), or N. L. (non liquet). These tablets were deposited in an urn. The president assorted and counted the tablets. If the majority were for acquitting the accused, the magistrate declared it by the words fecisse non videtur, and by the words fecisse videtur if the majority were for a conviction. If the tablets marked N. L. were so many as to prevent an absolute majority for a conviction or acquittal, the cause was put off for more ample information, ampliatio, which the praetor declared by the word amplies. Such, in brief, was the course of proceedings before the quaestiones perpetuae.

The forms observed in the comitia centuriata and comitia tributa were nearly the same, except the composition of the tribunal and the mode of declaring the vote.

POSTULATIO ACTIONIS (Lat.) In civil law. Demand of an action (actio) from the praetor, which some explain to be a demand of a formula, or form of the suit; others, a demand of leave to bring the cause before the judge. Tayl. Civ. Law, 80; Calv. Lex. "Actio."

POT-DE-VIN. In French law. A sum of money frequently paid, at the moment of entering into a contract, beyond the price agreed upon. It differs from arrha in this, that it is no part of the price of the thing sold, and that the person who has received it cannot, by returning double the amount, or the other party by losing what he has paid, rescind the contract. 18 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 52.

POTENTATE. One who has a great power over an extended country; a sovereign.

By the naturalization laws of the United State, an alien is required, before he can be naturalized, to renounce all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereign whatever.

POTENTIA (Lat.) Possibility; power.

POTENTIA DEBET SEQUI JUSTITIAM, non antecedere. Power ought to follow, not to precede, justice. 3 Bulst. 199.

POTENTIA EST DUPLEX, REMOTA ET propinqua; et potentia remotissima et vana est quae nunquam venit in actum. Possibility is of two kinds, remote and near; that which never comes into action is a power the most remote and vain. 11 Coke, 51.

POTENTIA INUTILIS FRUSTRA EST. Useless power is vain.

POTENTIA NON EST NISI AD BONUM. Power is not conferred but for the public good.

POTENTIA PROPINQUA. Common possibility. See "Possibility."

POTEST QUIS RENUNCIARE PRO SE, et suis, jus quod pro se introductum est. A man may relinquish, for himself and those claiming under him, a right which was introduced for his own benefit. See 1 Bouv. Inst. note 83.

POTESTAS (Lat.) In civil law. Power; authority; domination; empire. Imperium, or the jurisdiction of magistrates. The power of the father over his children, patria potestas. The authority of masters over their slaves, which makes it nearly synonymous with dominium. See Inst. 1. 9. 12; Dig. 2. 1. 13. 1; Id. 14. 1; Id. 14. 4. 1. 4.

POTESTAS STRICTE INTERPRETATur. Power should be strictly interpreted. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 17.

POTESTAS SUPREMA SEIPSUM DISsolvare potest, ligare non potest. Supreme power can dissolve, but cannot bind itself. Bac. Max. reg. 19.

POTIOR EST CONDITIO DEFENDENTis. Better is the condition of the defendant than that of the plaintiff. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 664; 15 Pet. (U. S.) 471.

POTIOR EST CONDITIO POSSIDENTIS. Better is the condition of the possessor. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 201, note.

POTWALLOPER. A term formerly applied to voters in certain boroughs of England, where all who boil (wallop) a pot were entitled to vote. Webster.

POULTRY COUNTER (or COMPTER). The name of a prison formerly existing in London. 2 Mod. 306; 6 Mod. 247. See "Counter."

POUND. A place, inclosed by public authority, for the temporary detention of stray animals. 4 Pick. (Mass.) 258; 5 Pick. (Mass.) 514; 9 Pick. (Mass.) 14.

——In Weights. There are two kinds of weights, namely, the troy and the avoirdupois. The pound avoirdupois is the greater, being seven thousand grains, the troy pound, five thousand seven hundred and sixty. The troy pound contains twelve ounces; that of avoirdupois sixteen ounces.

——In Money. The sum of twenty shillings. Previous to the establishment of the federal currency, the different states made use of the pound in computing money. It was of different value in the several states.

Pound sterling is a denomination of money of Great Britain. It is of the value of a sovereign). In calculating the rates of duties, the pound sterling shall be considered and taken as of the value of four dollars and eighty cents. Act March 3, 1833.

The pound sterling of Ireland is to be computed, in calculating said duties, at four dollars and ten cents. Id.

The pound of the British provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Newfoundland, and Canada is to be so computed at four dollars. Act May 22, 1846.

POUND BREACH. The offense of breaking a pound in order to take out the cattle impounded. 3 Bl. Comm. 146. The writ de parco fracto, or pound breach, lies for recovering damages for this offense; also case. Id. It is also indictable.

POUNDAGE. In practice. The amount allowed to the sheriff, or other officer, for commissions on the money made by virtue of an execution. This allowance varies in different states, and to different officers.

POUR COMPTE DE QUI IL APPARtient (Fr.) For account of whom it may concern. Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 11, sec. 4, § 3. A phrase in insurance law.

POUR SEISIR TERRES (Law Fr. for seizing the lands). In old practice. A writ by which the king seized the land which the wife of a tenant in capite, deceased, had for her dower, if she married without his leave. Cowell.

POURPARLER. In French law. The conversations and negotiations which have taken place between the parties in order to make an agreement. These form no part of the agreement. Pardessus, Dr. Com. 142.

POURPARTY (Law Fr.; Law Lat. propars, propartis, propartia). In old English law. Division; a divided share. Literally, "for," or as "divided" (pour parti); a close translation of the Latin phrase pro diviso. To make pourparty is to divide and sever the lands that fall to parceners, which, before partition, they held jointly and pro indiviso. Cowell.

POURPRESTURE. See "Purpresture."

POURSUIVANT. A follower; a pursuer. In the ancient English law, it signified an officer who attended upon the king in his wars, at the council table, exchequer, in his court, etc., to be sent as a messenger. A poursuivant was, therefore, a messenger of the king.

POURVEYANCE (Law Fr. and Eng.; from Fr. pourvoire, to provide). In old English law. The providing corn (grain), fuel, victual, and other necessaries for the king's house. Cowell. See "Purveyance."

POURVEYOR (from Fr. pourvoire, to provide). In old English law. An officer of the king or queen, or other great personage, that provided corn (grain) and other victual for their house. Cowell. See "Purveyor."

POUSTIE, or POISTEE (Scotch). In Scotch law. Power. 1 Pitc. Crim. Tr. pt. 1, p. 162. See "Liege Poustie." A word formed from the Latin potestas.

POVERTY AFFIDAVIT. A term used in a few states for an affidavit in forma pauperis. See "In Forma Pauperis."

POWER. The right, ability, or faculty of doing something.

An authority by which one person enables another to do some act for him. 2 Lilly, Abr. 339.

In a more technical sense, an authority vested in one person to dispose of an estate which is vested in another.

(1) Inherent powers are those which are enjoyed by the possessors of natural right, without having been received from another. Such are the powers of a people to establish a form of government, of a father to control his children. Some of these are regulated and restricted in their exercise by law, but are not technically considered in the law as powers.

(2) Derivative powers are those which are received from another. This division includes all the powers technically so called. They are of the following classes:

(a) Naked, being a right of authority disconnected from any interest of the donee in the subject matter. 3 Hill (N. Y.) 365.

(b) Coupled with an interest, being a right or authority to do some act, together with an interest in the subject on which the power is to be exercised. Marshall, C. J., 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 203.

A power of this class survives the person creating it, and, in case of an excess in execution, renders the act valid so far as the authority extends, leaving it void as to the remainder only. It includes powers of sale conferred on a mortgagee.

——Powers under the Statute of Uses. An authority enabling a person, through the medium of the statute of uses, to dispose of an interest in real property, vested either in himself or another person.

Methods of causing a use, with its accompanying estate, to spring up at the will of a given person. Williams, Real Prop. 245; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 300.

The right to designate the person who is to take a use. Co. Litt. 271b, Butler's note, 231, § 3, pl. 4.

A right to limit a use. 4 Kent, Comm. 334.

An authority to do some act in relation to lands, or the creation of estates therein, or of charges thereon, which the owner granting or reserving such power might himself lawfully perform. Rev. St. N. Y.

Powers are divided generally into powers of appointment, being those which are to create new estates, and powers of revocation, which are to divest or abridge an existing estate. But as every appointment must divest an existing estate, the distinction is of doubtful exactness.

They are distinguished as:

(1) Appendant, being those which the donee is authorized to exercise out of the estate limited to him, and which depend for their validity upon the estate which is in him. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 304. A life estate limited to a man, with a power to grant leases in possession, is an example. Hardr. 416; 1 Caines, Cas. (N. Y.) 15; Sugd. (Pow. Ed. 1856) 107; Burton, Real Prop. § 179.

(2) Collateral, being those in which the donee has no estate in the land. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 305.

(3) General, being those by which the donee is at liberty to appoint whom he pleases.

(4) Special, being those in which the donee is restricted to an appointment to or among particular objects only. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 307.

(5) In gross, being those which give a donee, who has an estate in the land, authority to create such estates only as will not attach on the interest limited to him, or take effect out of his own interest. 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 236; White & T. Lead. Cas. 293; Watk. Conv. 260.

(6) Beneficial, when by its terms no person other than the donee has any interest in its execution. See "Beneficial Power."

(7) In trust, when any person or class of persons is designated to receive the benefit.

——Designation of Parties. The person bestowing a power is called the "donor;" the person on whom it is bestowed is called the "donee;" the person who receives the estate by appointment of the donee is called the "appointee." When referred to in connection with the appointee, the donee is sometimes called the "appointor."

By statute in New York, the term "grantor of a power" is used to denote the person by whom a power is created, and "grantee of a power" to denote the person in whom it is vested. 4 Rev. St. N. Y. § 135, p. 2451.

POWER OF ATTORNEY. An instrument authorizing a person to act as the attorney in fact of the person granting it.

A general power authorizes the agent to act generally in behalf of the principal.

A special power is one limited to particular acts.

POYNDING. See "Poinding."

POYNINGS' LAWS. A set of statutes enacted in the tenth year of Henry VII. (so called from Sir Edward Poynings, being then lord deputy), regulating the method of passing statutes in Ireland. By another of these laws it was provided that all acts of parliament before made in England should be in force within the realm of Ireland. 1 Bl. Comm. 102, 103.

P'P'M. A contraction of perpetuum. 1 Inst. Cler. 11.

PRACTICAL CONSTRUCTION.

——Of a Statute. One determined by long-established procedure under it, to which deference will be paid by the courts in interpreting the statute, if possible, without doing violence to its terms. 16 Ohio, 559; 49 Mo. 404; 93 Ill. 191.

——Of a Contract. That given to the contract by the parties, and under which they acted in performing it. Such an interpretation will be effectuated by the court, if possible. 76 U. S. 50; 80 U. S. 608; 41 Minn. 308; 41 Neb. 56; 67 Vt. 1.

PRACTICAL LOCATION. Mutual acquiescence in a known boundary line for a long period of time. 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 287.

PRACTICE. The form, manner, and order of conducting and carrying on suits or prosecutions in the courts through their various stages, according to the principles of law and the rules laid down by the respective courts.

PRACTICE COURT. In English law. A court attached to the court of king's bench, which hears and determines common matters of business and ordinary motions for writs of mandamus, prohibition, etc.

It was formerly called the "bail court." It is held by one of the puisne justices of the king's bench.

PRACTICES. A succession of acts of a similar kind, or in a like employment. Webster.

PRACTICKS. In Scotch law. The decisions of the court of session, as evidence of the practice or custom of the country. Bell, Dict.

PRAEBENDA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A prebend. Bracton, fol. 442b; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 10; Id. c. 69, § 3.

An allowance of fodder for horses and cattle. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 76, § 8.

PRAECEPTORES (Lat.) Heretofore masters in chancery were so called, as having the direction of making out remedial writs. Fleta, 76; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 251. A species of benefice, so called from being possessed by the principal templars (praeceptores templi), whom the chief master by his authority created. 2 Mon. Angl. 543.

PRAECEPTORIES. A kind of feudal benefices; so called because they were possessed by the more eminent templars, whom the chief master by his authority created and called Praeceptores Templi. 2 Mon. Angl. 543.

PRAECIPE, or PRECIPE (Lat.) A slip of paper upon which the particulars of a writ are written. It is lodged in the office out of which the required writ is to issue. Wharton.

PRAECIPE IN CAPITE. A writ of chancery which lay (in case of his deforcement) for a tenant holding of the crown in capite, viz., in chief. Magna Charta, c. 24.

PRAECIPE QUOD REDDAT (Lat.) Command him to return. An original writ, of which praecipe is the first word, commanding the person to whom it is directed to do a thing, or to show cause why he has not done it. 3 Bl. Comm. 274; Old Nat. Brev. 13. It is as well applied to a writ of right as to other writs of entry and possession.

PRAECIPE QUOD TENEAT CONVENtionem. The writ which commenced the action of covenant in fines. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74.

PRAECIPITIUM. The punishment of casting headlong from some high place.

PRAECIPUT CONVENTIONNEL. In the French law, under the regime en communaute, when that is of the conventional kind, if the surviving husband or wife is entitled to take any portion of the common property by a paramount title, and before partition thereof, this right is called by the somewhat barbarous title of the conventional praeciput, from prae, before, and capere, to take. Brown.

PRAECO (Lat.)

——In Roman Law. A herald or crier. Adams, Rom. Ant. 189, 190.

——In Modern Practice. The crier of a court. Bac. Works, iv. 316.

PRAECOGNITA. Things to be previously known in order to the understanding of something which follows.

PRAEDA BELLICA (Lat.) Booty; property seized in war.

PRAEDIA (Lat.) In civil law. Lands.

Praedia urbana, those lands which have buildings upon them and are in the city.

Praedia rustica, those lands which are without buildings or in the country. Vocat.

It indicates a more extensive domain than fundus. Calv. Lex.

PRAEDIA STIPENDIARIA. In the civil law, provincial lands belonging to the people.

PRAEDIA TRIBUTARIA. In the civil law, provincial lands belonging to the emperor.

PRAEDIAL. That which arises immediately from the ground; as, grain of all sorts, hay, wood, fruits, herbs, and the like; as praedial tithes. 2 Bl. Comm. 23.

PRAEDIAL (or PREDIAL) SERVITUDE. A right which is granted for the advantage of one piece of land over another, and which may be exercised by every possessor of the land entitled against every possessor of the servient land. It always presupposes two pieces of land (praedia) belonging to different proprietors; one burdened with the servitude, called "praedium serviens," and one for the advantage of which the servitude is conferred, called "praedium dominans." Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 306; Inst. 2. 3; Dig. 8. 1-6.

PRAEDIAL TITHES. Arising out of or from land. Natural products not principally produced by care and nurture, as corn, grass, hops, wood. 2 Bl. Comm. 24.

PRAEDICTUS, PRAEDICTA, or PRAEdictum (Lat.) In old pleading. Aforesaid. Abbreviated in old entries praed., praedict., p'dc'us, etc. Hob. 117; 10 Coke, 65.

Of the three words, idem, praedictus, and praefatus (all corresponding to the English aforesaid), idem was most usually applied to plaintiffs or demandants; praedictus, to defendants or tenants, places, towns, or lands; and praefatus, to persons named, not being actors or parties. Towns. Pl. 15.

PRAEDIUM DOMINANS (Lat. the ruling estate). In civil law. The name given to an estate to which a servitude is due. It is called the ruling estate.

PRAEDIUM RUSTICUM (Lat. a country estate). In civil law. By this is understood all heritages which are not destined for the use of man's habitation; such, for example, as lands, meadows, orchards, gardens, woods, even though they should be within the boundaries of a city.

PRAEDIUM SERVIENS (Lat.) In civil law. The name of an estate which suffers or yields a service to another estate.

PRAEDIUM URBANUM (Lat.) In civil law. By this term is understood buildings and edifices intended for the habitation and use of man, whether they be built in cities, or whether they be constructed in the country.

PRAEDO (Lat.) In Roman law. A robber. See Dig. 50. 17. 126.

——In the Roman Law. A chief officer; a governor or commander. The title of various officers and magistrates. Dig. 1. 11; Id. 1. 12; Id. 1. 15; Code, 1. 28; Calv. Lex.

——In Old English Law. The chief officer of a hundred, and other divisions. Spelman, voc. "Praepositus."

PRAEFECTUS VIGILIUM (Lat.) In Roman law. The chief officer of the night watch. His jurisdiction extended to certain offenses affecting the public peace, and even to larcenies; but he could inflict only slight punishments.

PRAEFINE. The fee paid on suing out the writ of covenant, on levying fines, before the fine was passed. 2 Bl. Comm. 350.

PRAEJUDICIALIS (Lat. from prae, before, and judicare, to judge). In the civil law. That which is to be predetermined, or decided before something else. See "Actio Praejudicialis."

PRAEJUDICIUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. Prejudice; detriment; disparagement. Bracton, fol. 19. Sine praejudicio melioris sententiae, without prejudice to the better opinion. Id. fol. 48. A common phrase used by Bracton, when expressing his own opinion on any point.

PRAEJURAMENTUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. A preparatory oath.

PRAEMIUM (Lat.) Reward; compensation. Praemium assecurationis, compensation for insurance; premium of insurance. Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 5, § 6. Now used in the law of insurance, as a common English word.

PRAEMIUM PUDICITLAE (Lat.) The price of chastity; or compensation for loss of chastity. A term applied to bonds and other engagements given for the benefit of a seduced female. Sometimes called premium pudoris. 2 Wils. 339, 340.

PRAEMUNIRE (Lat.) In order to prevent the pope from assuming the supremacy in granting ecclesiastical livings, a number of statutes were made in England, during the reigns of Edward I. and his successors, punishing certain acts of submission to the papal authority therein mentioned. In the writ for the execution of these statutes, the words praemunire facias, being used to command a citation of the party, gave not only to the writ, but to the offense itself of maintaining the papal power, the name of praemunire. Co. Litt. 129; Jacob.

PRAENOMEN (Lat.) Forename, or first name. The first of the three names by which the Romans were commonly distinguished. It marked the individual, and was commonly written with one letter; as A. for Aulus; C. for Caius, etc. Adams, Rom. Ant. 35. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, § 9; Butler, Hor. Jur. 28.

PRAEPOSITUS. An officer next in authority to the alderman of a hundred, called praepositus regius; or a steward or bailiff of an estate, answering to the wicnere.

Also the person from whom descents are traced under the old canons.

One who was set over others; a presiding officer.

PRAEPOSITUS ECCLESIAE. A church reeve, or warden. Spelman.

PRAEPOSITUS VILLAE. A constable of a town, or petty constable.

PRAEPROPERA CONSILIA, RARO SUNT prospera. Hasty counsels are seldom prosperous. 4 Inst. 57.

PRAESCRIPTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. That mode of acquisition whereby one becomes proprietor of a thing on the ground that he has for a long time possessed it as his own; prescription. Dig. 41. 3; 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, p. 290, § 276. It was anciently distinguished from "usucapio," (q. v.), but was blended with it by Justinian. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 6, § 438.

PRAESCRIPTIO EST TITULUS EX USU et tempore substantiam capiens ab auctoritate legis. Prescription is a title by authority of law, deriving its force from use and time. Co. Litt. 113.

PRAESCRIPTIO ET EXECUTIO NON pertinent ad valorem contractus, sed ad tempus et modum actionis instituendae. Prescription and the execution of a contract do not affect the validity of the contract, but the time and manner of bringing an action. 3 Mass. 84; 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 190, 219.

PRAESCRIPTIONES. In Roman law. Forms of words (of a qualifying character) inserted in the formulae in which the claims in actions were expressed, and, as they occupied an early place in the formulae, they were called by this name, i. e., qualifications preceding the claim. For example, in an action to recover the arrears of an annuity, the claim was preceded by the words "so far as the annuity is due and unpaid," or words to the like effect (cujus rei dies fuit). Brown.

PRAESENTARE NIHIL ALIUD EST quam praesto dare seu offerre. To present is no more than to give or offer on the spot. Co. Litt. 120.

PRAESENTIA CORPORIS TOLLIT ERrorem nominis, et veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis. The presence of the body cures the error in the name; the truth of the name cures an error in the description. Bac. Max. reg. 25; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 568; 6 Coke, 66; 3 Barn. & Adol. 640; 6 Term R. 675; 11 C. B. 996; 1 H. L. Cas. 792; 3 De Gex, M. & G. 140.

PRAESES (Lat.) In the Roman law. A president, or governor. Dig. 1. 18. 1. Called a nomen generale, including proconsuls, legates, and all who governed provinces. Id.

PRAESIDIUM (Lat.) In the civil law. A guard; a fortress; a defense, aid, or shelter.

In records of the middle ages, all household stuff or effects, including particularly gold and silver. Spelman. Every kind of property, real as well as personal (omnis vis bonorum, tan immobilium quam mobilium). Id.

PRAESTARE (Lat.)

——In Old English Law. To pay, give, or render; to make or execute; to perform. Praestitit sacramentum, made oath, or took an oath. T. Raym. 34; 2 Ld. Raym. 1376; Mem. in Scacc. P. 16 Edw. I.

To make good. Praestare tenetur quodcunque damnum obveniens in mari, the insurer is bound to make good any loss happening on the sea. 3 Kent, Comm. 291.

——In Old European Law. To lease, or let to farm. Chart. Alaman. 75; Spelman.

PRAESTAT CAUTELA QUAM MEDELA. Prevention is better than cure. Co. Litt. 304.

PRAESUMATUR PRO JUSTITIA SEntentiae. The justice of a sentence should be presumed. Best, Ev. Introd. 42; Mascardus de Prob. Conc. 1237, note 2.

PRAESUMITUR PRO LEGITIMATIONE. Legitimacy is to be presumed. 5 Coke, 98b; 1 Bl. Comm. 457.

PRAESUMITUR PRO NEGANTE. It is presumed for the negative. The rule of the house of lords when the numbers are equal on a motion. Wharton.

PRAESUMPTIO, EX EO QUOD PLERUMque fit. Presumptions arise from what generally happens. 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 425, 475.

PRAESUMPTIO FORTIOR (Lat.) A strong (literally, stronger) presumption (of fact). One which determines the tribunal in its belief of an alleged fact, without, however, excluding the belief of the possibility of its being otherwise; the effect of which is to shift the burden of proof to the opposite party, and if this proof be not made, the presumption is held for truth. Hub. Prael. J. C. lib. 22, tit. 3, note 16; Burrill, Circ. Ev. 66.

PRAESUMPTIO HOMINIS (Lat.) The presumption of the man or individual; that is, natural presumption unfettered by strict rule. Heinec. ad Pand. par. 4, § 124.

PRAESUMPTIO JURIS (Lat.) In Roman law. A deduction from the existence of one fact as to the existence of another which admits of proof to the contrary. A rebuttable presumption. An intendment of law which holds good until it is weakened by proof or a stronger presumption. Best, Pres. 29.

PRAESUMPTIO JURIS ET DE JURE (Lat.) In Roman law. A deduction drawn, by reason of some rule of law, from the existence of one fact as to the existence of another, so conclusively that no proof can be admitted to the contrary. A conclusive presumption.

PRAESUMPTIO VIOLENTA, PLENA probatio. Violent presumption is full proof.

PRAESUMPTIO VIOLENTA VALET IN lege. Strong presumption avails in law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 58.

PRAESUMPTIONES SUNT CONJECTUrae ex signo verisimili ad probandum assumptae. Presumptions are conjectures from probable proof, assumed for purposes of evidence. J. Voet. Com. ad Pand. lib. 22, tit. 3, note 14.

PRAETEXTU LICITI NON DEBET ADmitti illicitum. Under pretext of legality, what is illegal ought not to be admitted. 10 Coke, 88.

PRAETOR. In Roman law. A municipal officer of Rome, so called because (praeiret populo) he went before or took precedence of the people.

The consuls were at first called praetors. Liv. Hist. iii. 55. He was a sort of minister of justice, invested with certain legislative powers, especially in regard to the forms or formalities of legal proceedings. Ordinarily, he did not decide causes as a judge, but prepared the grounds of decision for the judge, and sent to him the questions to be decided between the parties. The judge was always chosen by the parties, either directly, or by rejecting, under certain rules and limitations, the persons proposed to them by the praetor. Hence the saying of Cicero (pro Cluentis, 43) that no one could be judged except by a judge of his own choice. There were several kinds of officers called praetors. See Vicat.

Before entering on his functions, he published an edict announcing the system adopted by him for the application and interpretation of the laws during his magistracy. His authority extended over all jurisdictions, and was summarily expressed by the words do, dico, addico, i. e., do, I give the action; dico, I declare the law, I promulgate the edict; addico, I invest the judge with the right of judging. There were certain cases which he was bound to decide himself, assisted by a council chosen by himself,—perhaps the decemvirs; but the greater part of causes brought before him he sent either to a judge, an arbitrator, or to recuperators (recuperatores), or to the centumvirs, as before stated. Under the empire, the powers of the praetor passed by degrees to the prefect of the praetorium, or the prefect of the city, so that this magistrate, who at first ranked with the consuls, at last dwindled into a director or manager of the public spectacles or games.

Till lately, there were officers in certain cities of Germany denominated praetors. See 1 Kent, Comm. 528.

PRAETOR FIDEI COMMISSARIUS (Lat.) In the civil law. A special praetor created to pronounce judgment in cases of trusts or fidei commissa. Inst. 2..23. 1; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 966. Called, by Lord Bacon, a "particular chancellor for uses." Bac. Law Tr. 315; 4 Kent, Comm. 290.

PRAEVARICATOR (Lat.) In the civil law. One who betrays his trust, or is unfaithful to his trust. An advocate who aids the opposite party by betraying his client's cause. Dig. 47. 15. 1. Used in Spanish law. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 6, lib. 15.

PRAEVENTO TERMINO. In old Scotch practice. A form of action known in the forms of the court of session, by which a delay to discuss a suspension or advocation was got the better of. Bell, Dict.

PRAGMATIC SANCTION.

——In French Law. An expression used to designate those ordinances which concern the most important object of the civil or ecclesiastical administration. Merlin, Repert.; 1 Fournel, Hist. de Avocats, 24, 38, 39.

——In Civil Law. The answer given by the emperors on questions of law, when consulted by a corporation or the citizens of a province or of a municipality, was called a "pragmatic sanction." Lec. Elm. § 53. This differed from a "rescript."

PRAGMATICA (Spanish). In Spanish colonial law. An order emanating from the sovereign, and differing from a cedula only in form and in the mode of promulgation. Schmidt, Civ. Law, Introd. 93, note.

PRAXIS JUDICUM EST INTERPRES LEgum. The practice of the judges is the interpreter of the laws. Hob. 96; Branch, Princ.

PRAY IN AID. In old English practice. To call upon for assistance. In real actions, the tenant might pray in aid or call for assistance of another, to help him to plead, because of the feebleness or imbecility of his own estate. 3 Bl. Comm. 300. See "Aid Prayer."

PRAYER. In equity practice. The request in a bill that the court will grant the aid which the petitioner desires. That part of the bill which asks for relief. The word denotes, strictly, the request, but is very commonly applied to that part of the bill which contains the request.

PREAMBLE. An introduction prefixed to a statute, reciting the intention of the legislature in framing it, or the evils which led to its enactment.

A preamble is said to be the key of a statute, to open the minds of the makers as to the mischiefs which are to remedied, and the objects which are to be accomplished, by the provisions of the statute. 4 Inst. 330; 6 Pet. (U. S.) 301. In modern legislative practice, preambles are much less used than formerly, and in some of the United States are rarely, if ever, now inserted in statutes. In the interpretation of a statute, though resort may be had to the preamble, it cannot limit or control the express provisions of the statute. Dwarr. St. 504-508. Nor can it by implication enlarge what is expressly fixed. 1 Story, Const. bk. 3, c. 6; 3 McCord (S. C.) 298; 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 89; Busb. (N. C.) 131; 2 Ware (U. S.) 38.

PREAPPOINTED EVIDENCE. Evidence whose nature and quantity are prescribed beforehand by law, as for the attestation of wills.

PREAUDIENCE. The right of being heard before another. A privilege belonging to the English bar, the members of which are entitled to be heard in their order, according to rank, beginning with the queen's attorney general, and ending with barristers at large. 3 Bl. Comm. 28, note; 3 Steph. Comm. 387, note.

PREBEND. In ecclesiastical law. The stipend granted to an ecclesiastic, in consideration of officiating in the church. It is in this distinguished from a "canonicate." which is a mere title, and may exist without stipend. The prebend may be a simple stipend, or a stipend with a dignity attached to it, in which case it has some jurisdiction belonging to it. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 88; Strange, 1082; 1 Term R. 401; 2 Term R. 630; 1 Wils. 206; Dyer, 273a; 7 Barn. & C. 113; 8 Bing. 490; 5 Taunt. 2.

PREBENDARY (Lat. praebendarius, from praebenda). In English ecclesiastical law. One that has a prebend (q. v.) Cowell. The stipendiary of a cathedral or collegiate church. Webster.

PRECARIOUS RIGHT. The right which the owner of a thing transfers to another, to enjoy the same until it shall please the owner to revoke it.

If there is a time fixed during which the right may be used, it is then vested for that time, and cannot be revoked until after its expiration. Wolff. Inst. § 333.

PRECARIUM (Lat.) The name of a contract among civilians, by which the owner of a thing, at the request of another person, gives him a thing to use as long as the owner shall please. Poth. note 87. See Yelv. 172; Cro. Jac. 236; 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 687; Rolle, 128; Bac. Abr. "Bailment" (C); Ersk. Inst. 3. 1. 9; Wolff. Inst. § 333.

A tenancy at will is a right of this kind.

PRECARLAE, or PRECES (Law Lat.) In old English law. Days' works, which the tenants of some manors were bound, by reason of their tenure, to do for the lord in harvest. Vulgarly called "bind days," which Spelman supposes to be a corruption of "biden days," which, in Saxon, answered to dies precariae (literally, pray days, or prayed days), the Saxon biden signifying to pray. Spelman; Cowell.

PRECATORY TRUST. A trust created by certain words, which are more like words of entreaty and permission than of command or certainty. Examples of such words, which the courts have held sufficient to constitute a trust, are "having full confidence, I hereby request" (59 Wis. 172), "recommend and request" (127 U. S. 300), "request" (82 N. Y. 405), "hope and trust" (109 U. S. 725), and the like. At the present time, the courts are not disposed to enlarge the number of such phrases, so as to create a trust. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1016.

PRECATORY WORDS. Words which create a precatory trust (q. v.)

PRECEDENCE, PATENT OF. In English law. A grant from the crown to such barristers as it thinks proper to honor with that mark of distinction, whereby they are entitled to such rank and preaudience as are assigned in their respective patents. 3 Steph. Comm. 274.

PRECEDENT CONDITION. See "Condition."

PRECEDENTS. Authorities to be followed in courts of justice. A term particularly applied to judicial decisions upon points of law arising in any given case. 1 Kent, Comm. 475, 476. These are recognized in equity as well as at law. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 18. The old books are full of expressions in support of precedents. Jenk. Cent. Cas. viii. See "Stare Decisis."

Written forms of proceedings which have been approved by the courts, or by long professional usage, and are to be (usually strictly) followed. Steph. Pl. 392. Lord Bacon observes that there are political as well as legal precedents. Bac. Works, iv. 354.

PRECEPT (Lat. precipio, to command). A writ directed to the sheriff, or other officer, commanding him to do something.

PRECEPT OF CLARE CONSTAT. In Scotch feudal law. An acknowledgment by the lord of the right of an heir of the tenant to succeed to his right.

PRECES (Lat.) In the Roman law. Prayers. One of the names of an application to the emperor. Tayl. Civ. Law, 230.

PRECINCT.

——In English Law. The district for which a high or petty constable is appointed. Wilcox, Const. xii.

——In American Law. A district, usually of a subordinate character, marked out for governmental purpose. See 113 U. S. 516; 124 Mass. 172.

PRECIPE. See "Praecipe."

PRECIPUT. In French law. An object which is ascertained by law or the agreement of the parties, and which is first to be taken out of property held in common, by one having a right, before a partition takes place.

The preciput is an advantage or a principal part to which some one is entitled praecipium jus, which is the origin of the word preciput. Dalloz; Poth. Obl. By preciput is also understood the right to sue out the preciput.

PRECLUDI NON (Lat.) In pleading. A technical allegation contained in a replication which denies or confesses and avoids the plea.

It is usually in the following form: "And the said A. B., as to the plea of the said C. D., by him secondly above pleaded, says that he, the said A. B., by reason of anything by the said C. D. in that plea alleged, ought not to be barred from having and maintaining his aforesaid action thereof against the said C. D., because he says that," etc. 2 Wils. 42; 1 Chit. Pl. 573.

PRECOGNITION. In Scotch law. The examination of witnesses who were present at the commission of a criminal act, upon the special circumstances attending it, in order to know whether there is ground for a trial, and to serve for direction to the prosecutor. But the persons examined may insist on having their declaration cancelled before they give testimony at the trial. Ersk. Inst. 4. 4. note 49.

PRECOGNOSCE (Scotch; from Lat. praecognoscere). In Scotch practice. To examine beforehand. Arkley, 232.

PRECONTRACT. An engagement entered into by a person which renders him unable to enter into another; as, a promise or covenant of marriage to be had afterwards. When made per verba de presenti, it is in fact a marriage, and in that case the party making it cannot marry another person.

PREDECESSOR. One who has preceded another.

This term is applied in particular to corporators who are now no longer such, and whose rights have been vested in their successor. The word "ancestor" is more usually applicable to common persons. The predecessor in a corporation stands in the same relation to the successor that the ancestor does to the heir.

One who has filled an office or station before the present incumbent.

PREDIAL SERVITUDE. See "Praedial Servitude."

PRE-EMPTION. In international law. The right of pre-emption is the right of a nation to detain the merchandise of strangers passing through her territories or seas, in order to afford to her subjects the preference of purchase. 1 Chit. Com. Law, 103; 2 Bl. Comm. 287.

This right is sometimes regulated by treaty. In that which was made between the United States and Great Britain, bearing date the 19th day of November, 1794, ratified in 1795, it was agreed (article 18), after mentioning that the usual munitions of war, and also naval materials, should be confiscated as contraband, that "whereas the difficulty of agreeing on precise cases in which alone provisions and other articles not generally contraband may be regarded as such renders it expedient to provide against the inconveniences and misunderstandings which might thence arise, it is further agreed that whenever any such articles so being contraband according to the existing laws of nations shall for that reason be seized, the same shall not be confiscated, but the owners thereof shall be speedily and completely indemnified; and the captors, or, in their default, the government under whose authority they act, shall pay to the masters or owners of such vessel the full value of all articles, with a reasonable mercantile profit thereon, together with the freight, and also the damages incident to such detention." See Manning, Comm. bk. 3, c. 8.

PRE-EMPTION RIGHT. The right given to settlers upon the public lands of the United States to purchase them at a limited price, in preference to others.

PREFECT. In French law. A chief officer invested with the superintendence of the administration of the laws in each department. Merlin, Repert.

PREFERENCE. Priority of payment, or right thereto. Preferences may be either involuntary, being the right which a creditor obtains by law to be first paid out of the assets of the debtor, as by obtaining a judgment which is a lien on his lands, or voluntary, being the paying or securing to one or more of his creditors by a debtor (usually insolvent) the whole or a part of their claims, to the exclusion of the rest.

PREFERENCE SHARES. A name sometimes given in England to preferred stock.

PREFERENTIAL ASSIGNMENT. An assignment for the benefit of creditors, giving preferences (q. v.)

PREFERRED CREDITOR. One to whom the debtor has given a preference (q. v.), or to whom he has directed that a preference be given.

PREFERRED STOCK. Corporate stock entitled to priority in payment of dividends, or to a higher rate of dividends.

PREGNANCY, PLEA OF. A plea by a woman under sentence of death, on which, if she be found quick with child, execution is stayed. 4 Bl. Comm. 394.

PREGNANT. See "Affirmative Pregnant;" "Negative Pregnant."

PREJUDICE. (Lat. prae, before, judicare, to judge). A forejudgment. A leaning towards one side of a cause formed before the person entertaining the same is called upon to hear and determine the cause. See "Bias."

PRELATE. The name of an ecclesiastical officer. There are two orders of prelates,—the first is composed of bishops, and the second, of abbots, generals of orders, deans, etc.

PRELEVEMENT. In French law. The portion which a partner is entitled to take out of the assets of a firm before any division shall be made of the remainder of the assets between the partners.

The partner who is entitled to a prelevement is not a creditor of the partnership,—on the contrary, he is a part owner; for, if the assets should be deficient, a creditor has a preference over the partner. On the other hand, should the assets yield any profit, the partner is entitled to his portion of it, whereas the creditor is entitled to no part of it, but he has a right to charge interest when he is in other respects entitled to it.

PRELIMINARY. Something which precedes; as, preliminaries of peace, which are the first sketch of a treaty, and contain the principal articles on which both parties are desirous of concluding, and which are to serve as the basis of the treaty.

PRELIMINARY ACT. In English admiralty practice. A document narrating the particulars of a collision, required to be filed by each solicitor in actions for damages in such collision. Wharton.

PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION. Sometimes called an ad interim injunction. One issued at the commencement of a suit, to restrain the commission of some act pending the suit.

PREMEDITATION. A design formed to commit a crime or to do some other thing before it is done.

Premeditation differs essentially from "will," which constitutes the crime; because it supposes, besides an actual will, a deliberation and a continued persistence, which indicate more perversity.

It is also to be distinguished from "deliberation." "Premeditation" implies merely previous contrivance or formed design, and does not necessarily exclude acts on a sudden impulse. "Deliberation" implies reflection upon the act before committing it. Fixed and determined purpose, as distinguished from sudden impulse. 58 Pa. St. 9.

PREMISES (Lat. prae, before, mittere, to put, to send). That which is put before; the introduction; statements previously made. See 1 East, 456.

——In Conveyancing. That part of a deed which precedes the habendum, in which are set forth the names of the parties, with their titles and additions, and in which are recited such deeds, agreements, or matters of fact as are necessary to explain the reasons upon which the contract then entered into is founded; and it is here, also, the consideration on which it is made is set down, and the certainty of the thing granted. 2 Bl. Comm. 298; 8 Mass. 174; 6 Conn. 289.

——In Equity Pleading. The stating part of a bill. It contains a narrative of the facts and circumstances of the plaintiff's case, and the wrongs of which he complains, and the names of the persons by whom done, and against whom he seeks redress. Cooper, Eq. Pl. 9; Bart. Suit in Eq. 27; Mitf. Eq. Pl. (Jeremy Ed.) 43; Story, Eq. Pl. § 27.

Every material fact to which the plaintiff intends to offer evidence must be stated in the premises; otherwise, he will not be permitted to offer or require evidence of such fact. 1 Brown, Ch. 94; 3 Swanst. 472; 3 P. Wms. 276; 2 Atk. 96; 1 Vern. 483; 11 Ves. 240; 2 Hare, 264; 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 565; 9 Ga. 148.

——In Estates. Lands and tenements. 1 East, 453; 3 Maule & S. 169.

PREMIUM (from Lat. praemium, reward). The sum paid or agreed to be paid by an assured to the insurers, as the consideration for the insurance; being a certain rate per cent. on the amount insured. 1 Phil. Ins. 205; 3 Kent, Comm. 253.

The price of a risk.

PREMIUM PUDICITIAE (Lat. the price of chastity). The consideration of a contract by which a man promises to pay to a woman with whom he has illicit intercourse a certain sum of money. In the civil law, sometimes applied to the compensation recovered for loss of chastity.

PREMUNIRE. See "Praemunire."

PRENDA. In Spanish law. Pledge. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 7.

PRENDER, or PRENDRE (Law Fr. to take). This word is used to signify the right of taking a thing before it is offered; hence the phrase of law, "it lies in render, but not in prender." Gale & W. Easem.; Washb. Easem.

PRENDER DE BARON (Law Fr.) In old English law. A taking of husband; marriage. An exception or plea which might be used to disable a woman from pursuing an appeal of murder against the killer of her former husband. Staundf. P. C. lib. 3, c. 59.

PRENOMEN (Lat.) The first or Christian name of a person. Benjamin is the prenomen of Benjamin Franklin. See Cas. temp. Hardw. 286; 1 Tayl. (N. C.) 148.

PREPENSE. Aforethought. See 2 Chit. Crim. Law, *784.

PREROGATIVE.

——In Civil Law. The privilege, pre-eminence, or advantage which one person has over another; thus, a person vested with an office is entitled to all the rights, privileges, prerogatives, etc., which belong to it.

——In English Law. The royal prerogative is an arbitrary power vested in the executive to do good, and not evil. Rutherforth, Inst. 279; Co. Litt. 90; Chit. Prerog.; Bac. Abr.

PREROGATIVE COURT.

——In English Law. An ecclesiastical court held in each of the two provinces of York and Canterbury, before a judge appointed by the archbishop of the province.

Formerly in this court testaments were proved, and administrations granted where a decedent left chattels to the value of five pounds (bona notabilia) in two distinct dioceses or jurisdictions within the province, and all causes relating to the wills, administrations, or legacies of such persons were originally cognizable. This jurisdiction was transferred to the court of probate by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, § 4, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95.

An appeal lay formerly from this court to the king in chancery, by St. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 19, but lies now to the privy council, by St. 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 92. 2 Steph. Comm. 237, 238; 3 Bl. Comm. 65, 66.

——In American Law. A court having a jurisdiction of probate matters in the state of New Jersey.

PREROGATIVE LAW. That part of the common law of England which is more particularly applicable to the king. Com. Dig. tit. "Ley" (A).

PREROGATIVE WRIT. A writ issued upon some extraordinary occasion, and for which it is necessary to apply by motion to the court. 3 Bl. Comm. 132. The writs of procedendo, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, habeas corpus, and certiorari belong to this class. 3 Steph. Comm. 681.

Prerogative writs have also been distinguished from writs ministerially directed, viz., those issued to the sheriff; the prerogative writs being generally directed to no sheriff or officer of the court, but to the public or private parties, whose acts are the subject of complaint. 2 Burrows, 855.

PRES (Law Fr.) Near. Cy pres, so near; as near. See "Cy Pres."

PRESBYTER (Lat.) In civil and ecclesiastical law. An elder; a presbyter; a priest. Code, 1. 3. 6. 20; Nov. 6.

PRESCRIPTION, TIME OF. See "Time Immemorial."

PRESCRIBABLE. To which a right may be acquired by prescription.

PRESCRIPTION. A mode of acquiring title to incorporeal hereditaments by immemorial or long-continued enjoyment.

The distinction between a prescription and a custom is that a custom is a local usage, and not annexed to a person. A prescription is a personal usage, confined to the claimant and his ancestors or grantors. The theory of prescription was that the right claimed must have been enjoyed beyond the period of the memory of man, which for a long time, in England, went back to the time of Richard I. To avoid the necessity of proof of such long duration, a custom arose of allowing a presumption of a grant on proof of usage for a long term of years. In modern practice, the period of legal limitation for adverse possession of lands is generally adopted. 100 N. Y. 455.

To acquire title by prescription, the user must be adverse (117 Ill. 532), exclusive (7 Metc. [Mass.] 33), peaceable (31 N. J. Eq. 706), notorious (7 Allen [Mass.] 368), and continuous (2 Cush. [Mass.] 191).

PRESCRIPTION ACT. St. 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 71, passed to limit the period of prescription in certain cases.

PRESENCE. The being in a particular place.

In many contracts and judicial proceedings it is necessary that the parties should be present in order to render them valid; for example, a party to a deed, when it is executed by himself, must personally acknowledge it, when such acknowledgment is required by law, to give it its full force and effect, and his presence is indispensable, unless, indeed, another person represent him as his attorney, having authority from him for that purpose.

Presence at a particular transaction is in a measure relative. Thus, a crime is committed in the presence of a police officer if he can detect the act, and could have seen the persons had it been light (53 Mich. 493); and a married woman executes a deed in the presence of her husband, if he was under the same roof, though not in the same room (112 Mass. 287).

Actual presence is being bodily in the precise spot indicated.

Constructive presence is being so near to or in such relation with the parties actually in a designated place as to be considered in law as being in the place. Thus, a man was held constructively present at a stage robbery, where he built a fire on a mountain forty miles distant as a notice to the robber of the leaving of the stage. 13 Nev. 386.

PRESENT. A gift, or, more properly, the thing given.

PRESENT ESTATE. An estate in possession; one presently vested.

PRESENT USE. One which has an immediate existence, and is at once operated upon by the statute of uses.

PRESENTS. This word signifies the writing then actually made and spoken of; as, these presents; know all men by these presents; to all to whom these presents shall come.

PRESENTATION. In ecclesiastical law. The act of a patron offering his clerk to the bishop of the diocese to be instituted in a church or benefice.

PRESENTEE. In ecclesiastical law. A clerk who has been presented by his patron to a bishop in order to be instituted in a church.

PRESENTLY. Immediately; in the present tense.

PRESENTMENT.

——In Criminal Practice. The written notice taken by a grand jury of any offense, from their own knowledge or observation, without any bill of indictment laid before them at the suit of the government. 4 Bl. Comm. 301.

Upon such presentment, when proper, the officer employed to prosecute afterwards frames a bill of indictment, which is then sent to the grand jury, and they find it to be a true bill. In an extended sense, presentments include not only what are properly so called, but also inquisitions of office and indictments found by a grand jury. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25, § 1.

The difference between a presentment and an inquisition is this: that the former is found by a grand jury authorized to inquire of offenses generally, whereas the latter is an accusation found by a jury specially returned to inquire concerning a particular offense. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25, § 6. See, generally, Comyn, Dig. "Indictment" (B); Bac. Abr. "Indictment" (A); 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 163; 7 East, 387; 1 Meigs (Tenn.) 112; 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 12.

The writing which contains the accusation so presented by a grand jury. 1 Brock. (U. S.) 156.

——In Contracts. The production of a bill of exchange or promissory note to the party on whom the former is drawn, for his acceptance, or to the person bound to pay either, for payment.

PRESS. In old practice. A piece or skin of parchment, several of which used to be sewed together in making up a roll or record of proceedings. See 1 Bl. Comm. 183; Towns. Pl. 486.

PRESSING TO DEATH. See "Peine Forte et Dure."

PREST (and afterwards PRIST) (Law Fr.; from Lat. paratus).

——In Old Pleading and Practice. Ready. Prest averrer, ready to prove. Y. B. P. 11 Hen. VI. 8; Y. B. M. 12 Hen. VI. 13. Prest de prover. Britt. c. 22. A formal word at the conclusion of pleas and replications, expressive of a tender and acceptance of issue. Prest, etc., was a mere common form. See Y. B. 8 Edw. III. 20; Y. B. T. 8 Edw. III. 11.

Prest a passer, ready to pass, that is, to give a verdict. Y. B. M. 3 Edw. II. 56. See "Passer."

——In Old English Law. A duty in money to be paid by the sheriff upon his account in the exchequer, or for money left or remaining in his hands. Cowell.

PRESTATION (Lat. praestatio, from praes- tare, q. v.) In old English law. A payment or performance; the rendering of a service; a toll, custom or duty.

PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCCE. See "Circumstantial Evidence."

PRESUMPTIVE HEIR. One who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would, under existing condition of things, be his heir, but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born; as, a brother, who is the presumptive heir, may be defeated by the birth of a child to the ancestor. 2 Bl. Comm. 208.

PRESUMPTIVE TITLE. That which arises from mere occupation, with no pretense of right to hold possession. It is the very lowest order of title.

PRET (Fr.) Loan.

PRET A USAGE (Fr. loan for use). A phrase used in the French law instead of commodatum.

PRETENSED, or PRETENCED (Law Lat. praetensum). In old English law. Pretended; claimed. Where a party out of possession of lands or tenements claimed or sued for the possession, he was said to have a pretensed right and title (jus praetensum). Cowell; Dyer, 74b.

PRETENSED TITLE STATUTE. The English statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9, § 2. It enacts that no one shall sell or purchase any pretended right or title to land, unless the vendor has received the profits thereof for one whole year before such grant, or has been in actual possession of the land, or of the reversion or remainder, on pain that both purchaser and vendor shall each forfeit the value of such land to the king and the prosecutor. See 4 Broom & H. Comm. 150.

PRETENSES. In equity pleading. Allegations sometimes made in a bill for the purpose of negativing an anticipated defense. Hunt, Eq. pt. 1, c. 1.

PRETENSION. In French law. The claim made to a thing which a party believes himself entitled to demand, but which is not admitted or adjudged to be his.

The words "rights," "actions," and "pretensions" are usually joined; not that they are synonymous, for "right" is something positive and certain, "action" is what is demanded, while "pretension" is sometimes not even accompanied by a demand.

PRETER LEGAL. Not agreeable to law.

PRETERITION (Lat. praeter and eo, to go by). In civil law. The omission by a testator of some one of his heirs who is entitled to a legitime (q. v.) in the succession.

Among the Romans, the preterition of children when made by the mother was presumed to have been made with design. The preterition of sons by any other testator was considered as a wrong, and avoided the will, except the will of a soldier in service, which was not subject to so much form.

PRETERMISSION. In the law of wills. The intentional passing over without making provision for a child or legal heir or next of kin. Same as "preterition," which is the strictly proper term.

PRETEXT (Lat. praetextum, woven before). The reasons assigned to justify an act, which have only the appearance of truth, and which are without foundation, or which, if true, are not the true reasons for such act. Vattel, liv. 3, c. 3, § 32.

An ostensible reason or motive assigned or assumed as a color or cover for the real motive or reason. 27 Neb. 601.

PRETIUM, or PRECIUM (Lat. price; value). In the civil law. The price of a thing sold, which properly consisted in counted money; pretium in numerata pecunia consistere debet. Inst. 3. 24. 2. Pretium constitui oportet, nam nulla emptio sine pretio esse potest, the price ought to be fixed, for there can be no purchase without a price. Id.; Dig. 18. 1. 2; 2 Kent, Comm. 477.

PRETIUM AFFECTIONIS (Lat.) An imaginary value put upon a thing by the fancy of the owner in his affection for it, or for the person from whom he obtained it. Bell, Dict.

PRETIUM SUCCEDIT IN LOCUM REI. The price stands in the place of the thing sold. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 939; 2 Bulst. 312.

PRETORIUM. In Scotch law. A court house, or hall of justice. 3 How. St. Tr. 425.

PREVARICATION. In civil law. The acting with unfaithfulness and want of probity. The term is applied principally to the act of concealing a crime. Dig. 47. 15. 6.

PREVENTION (Lat. preveniato, to come before). In civil law. The right of a judge to take cognizance of an action over which he has concurrent jurisdiction with another judge.

In Pennsylvania it has been ruled that a justice of the peace cannot take cognizance of a cause which has been previously decided by another justice. 2 Dall. (Pa.) 77, 114.

PREVENTION OF CRIMES ACT. The statute 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112, passed for the purpose of securing a better supervision over habitual criminals. This act provides that a person who is for a second time convicted of crime may, on his second conviction, be subjected to police supervision for a period of seven years after the expiration of the punishment awarded him. Penalties are imposed on lodging house keepers, etc., for harboring thieves or reputed thieves. There are also provisions relating to receivers of stolen property, and dealers in old metals who purchase the same in small quantities. This act repeals the habitual criminals act of 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 99). Brown.

PRICKING FOR SHERIFFS. In England, when the yearly list of persons nominated for the office of sheriff is submitted to the queen, she takes a pin, and to insure impartiality, as it is said, she lets the point of it fall upon one of the three names nominated for each county, etc., and the person upon whose name it chances to fall is sheriff for the ensuing year. This is called "pricking for sheriffs." Atk. Sheriffs, 18.

PRIMA FACIE. At first view; from the appearance, without contradiction or explanation.

PRIMA FACIE CASE. A case established by prima facie evidence (q. v.)

PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE. Such as is, in judgment of law, sufficient to establish the fact, and, if not, rebuttal remains sufficient for the purpose.

PRIMA PARS AEQUITATIS AEQUALITAS. The radical element of justice is equality.

PRIMA TONSURA (Lat.) A grant of a right to have the first crop of grass. 1 Chit. Prac. 181.

PRIMAE IMPRESSIONIS (Law Lat.) Of the first impression; without precedent. A term applied to a new case, or one which has not occurred before, or to a question which is raised for the first time. Eyre, J., 5 Mod. 23; 1 Vern. 94; Platt, J., 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 310. "The question here, as there, is primae impressionis; the case here, as there, is the first of its kind." Story, J., 3 Mason (U. S.) 116, 125. The expression is applied to actions, returns, motions, and other proceedings. Freem. 431; Holt, C. J., 5 Mod. 21; Mansfield, C. J., 4 Taunt. 3; 1 Taunt. 492, arg. The Gunpowder Plot was called by Lord Coke, in his argument as attorney general in the case, an offense primae impressionis. 2 How. St. Tr. 167.

PRIMAE (or PRIMARIAE) PRECES (Lat.) In the civil law. An imperial prerogative, by which the emperor exercised the right of naming to the first prebend that became vacant after his accession, in every church of the empire. Goldast. Constit. Imper. tom. 3, p. 406; 1 Bl. Comm. 381.

PRIMAGE. In mercantile law. A duty payable to the master and mariners of a ship or vessel,—to the master for the use of his cables and ropes to discharge the goods of the merchant; to the mariners for lading and unlading in any port or haven. Abb. Shipp. 270.

This payment appears to be of very ancient date, and to be variously regulated in different voyages and trades. It is sometimes called the "master's hat money." 3 Chit. Com. Law, 431.

PRIMARY. That which is first or principal; as, primary evidence, that evidence which is to be admitted in the first instance, as distinguished from secondary evidence, which is allowed only when primary evidence cannot be had.

PRIMARY CONVEYANCES. See "Conveyance."

PRIMARY EVIDENCE. The best evidence of which the case in its nature is susceptible. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3053. See "Evidence."

PRIMARY OBLIGATION. An obligation which is the principal object of the contract; for example, the primary obligation of the seller is to deliver the thing sold, and to transfer the title to it. It is distinguished from the accessory or secondary obligation to pay damages for not doing so. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 702.

PRIMARY POWERS. The principal authority given by a principal to his agent. It differs from "mediate powers." Story, Ag. § 58.

PRIMATE. In ecclesiastical law. An archbishop who has jurisdiction over one or several other metropolitans.

PRIME SERJEANT. The queen's first serjeant at law.

PRIMER ELECTION. A term used to signify first choice.

In England, when coparcenary lands are divided, unless it is otherwise agreed, the eldest sister has the first choice of the purparts. This part is called the enitia pars. Sometimes the oldest sister makes the partition, and in that case, to prevent partiality, she takes the last choice. Hob. 107; Litt. §§ 243-245; Bac. Abr. "Coparceners" (U).

PRIMER FINE. In old English practice. A fine or payment which was due to the king on suing out the writ of praecipe, at the commencement of the proceedings to levy a fine of lands. 2 Bl. Comm. 350.

PRIMER SEISIN. In English law. The right which the king had, when any of his tenants died seised of a knight's fee, to receive of the heir, provided he were of full age, one whole year's profits of the lands, if they were in immediate possession, and half a year's profits, if the lands were in reversion, expectant on an estate for life. 2 Bl. Comm. 66.

PRIMITIAE (Lat.) In English law. First fruits; the first year's whole profits of a spiritual preferment. 1 Bl. Comm. 284; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 252.

PRIMO EXCUTIENDA EST VERBA VIS, ne sermonis vitio obstructur oratio, sive lex sine argumentis. The force of a word is to be first examined, lest by the fault of diction the sentence be destroyed, or the law be without arguments. Co. Litt. 68.

PRIMOGENITURE. The state of being first born; the eldest.

Formerly primogeniture gave a title in cases of descent to the oldest son in preference to the other children. This unjust distinction has been generally abolished in the United States.

PRIMOGENITUS (Lat. from primo, first, and genitus, born or begotten). In old English law. A first born or eldest son. Bracton, fol. 33; 1 Ves. Sr. 290. And see 3 Maule & S. 25; 8 Taunt. 468; 3 Vern. 660.

PRIMUM DECRETUM (Lat.) In the courts of admiralty, this name is given to a provisional decree. Bac. Abr. "Court of Admiralty" (E).

PRINCE. In a general sense, a sovereign; the ruler of a nation or state. The son of a king or emperor, or the issue of a royal family; as, princes of the blood. The chief of any body of men.

By a clause inserted in policies of insurance, the insurer is liable for all losses occasioned by "arrest or detainment of all kings, princes, and people, of what nation, condition, or quality soever." 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1218.

PRINCEPS (Lat.) In the civil law. The prince; the emperor. Quod principi placuit, legis habet vigorem, the emperor's pleasure has the force of law. Inst. 1. 2. 6.

PRINCEPS ET RESPUBLICA EX JUSTA causa possunt rem meam auferre. The king and the commonwealth, for a just cause, can take away my property. 12 Coke, 13.

PRINCEPS LEGIBUS SOLUTUS EST. The emperor is free from laws. Dig. 1. 3. 31; Halifax, Anal. pref. vi., vii., note.

PRINCEPS MAVULT DOMESTICOS MILites quam stipendiarios bellicis opponere casibus. A prince, in the chances of war, had better employ domestic than stipendiary troops. Co. Litt. 69.

PRINCIPAL. Leading; chief; more important.

This word has several meanings. It is used in opposition to "accessary," to show the degree of crime committed by two persons.

In estates, "principal" is used as opposed to "incident" or "accessory," to denote the more important subject to which others are appurtenant or ancillary, as in the rule: "The incident shall pass by the grant of the principal, but not the principal by the grant of the incident,—accessorium non ducit, sed sequitur suum principale." Co. Litt. 152a.

It is used in opposition to "agent," and in this sense it signifies that the principal is the prime mover.

It is used in opposition to "interest;" as, the principal being secured, the interest will follow.

It is used also in opposition to "surety," to denote the person for whom the surety is bound. Thus, we say, the principal is answerable before the surety.

Principal is used also to denote the more important; as, the principal person.

In the English law, the chief person in some of the inns of chancery is called "principal of the house." Principal is also used to designate the best of many things; as, the principal bed, the principal table, and the like.

——In Contracts. One who, being competent sui juris to do any act for his own benefit or on his own account, confides it to another person to do for him. 1 Domat, bk. 1, tit. 15, Introd.; Story, Ag. § 3.

——In Criminal Law. Principals in crime are either in the first or second degree.

A principal in the first degree is the one who actually commits the crime, either by his own hand, or by an inanimate agency (4 Bl. Comm. 34; 2 Sumn. [U. S.] 482), or by an innocent human agent (1 N. Y. 173; 1 Mass. 136).

A principal in the second degree is one who, being present at the commission of a crime by another, aids and abets him therein. There must be a guilty principal in the first degree. The principal in the second must be present, but constructive presence, as by keeping watch at a distance, is sufficient (83 N. Y. 408; 13 Nev. 386), and the principal in the second degree must in some manner assist or abet the principal offender; mere presence and acquiescence not being enough (81 Ill. 333; 45 Cal. 293). See "Aiding and Abetting;" "Presence."

The distinction between principals and accessaries is not recognized in treason or in misdemeanors. 4 Bl. Comm. 35, 36.

PRINCIPAL CHALLENGE. See "Challenge."

PRINCIPAL CONTRACT. One entered into by both parties on their own accounts, or in the several qualities they assume.

PRINCIPAL FACT. The main fact in issue. The fact ultimately to be proved.

PRINCIPAL LEGATEE. In the statute as to right to letters of administration with will annexed means general, rather than chief or most important. 2 How. Pr. (N. S.; N. Y.) 194.

PRINCIPAL OBLIGATION. That obligation which arises from the principal object of the engagement which has been contracted between the parties. It differs from an accessory obligation. For example, in the sale of a horse, the principal obligation of the seller is to deliver the horse; the obligation to take care of him till delivered is an accessory engagement. Poth. Obl. note 182. By principal obligation is also understood the engagement of one who becomes bound for himself, and not for the benefit of another. Poth. Obl. note 186.

PRINCIPALIS (Lat. from princeps, first or chief). In civil and old English law. Principal; a principal debtor. Principalis debitor. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 63, § 5. Called capitalis debitor (chief debtor). Id.

PRINCIPALIS DEBET SEMPER EXCUTI antequam perveniatur ad fidei jussores. The principal should always be exhausted before coming upon the sureties. 2 Inst. 19.

PRINCIPIA DATA SEQUUNTUR CONcomitantia. Given principles are followed by their concomitants.

PRINCIPIA PROBANT, NON PROBANtur. Principles prove, they are not proved. 3 Coke, 40. See "Principles."

PRINCIPIIS OBSTA. Oppose beginnings. Branch, Princ.

PRINCIPIORUM NON EST RATIO. There is no reasoning of principles. 2 Bulst. 239. See "Principles."

PRINCIPIUM (Lat. from princeps, first). In civil and old English law. A beginning. In principio donationis, at the commencement of the gift. Bracton, fol. 17b.

A principle; a maxim. Analyzed by Lord Coke, in his peculiar manner, to be quasi primum caput (the first head), from which many cases have their origin or beginning. Co. Litt. 303a.

PRINCIPIUM EST POTISSIMA PARS cujusque rei. The beginning is the most powerful part of a thing. 10 Coke, 49.

PRINCIPLES. By this term is understood truths or propositions so clear that they cannot be proved nor contradicted unless by propositions which are still clearer.

That which constitutes the essence of a body, or its constituent parts. 8 Term R. 107. See "Patent."

They are of two kinds: One when the principle is universal, and these are known as "axioms" or "maxims;" as, "no one can transmit rights which he has not;" "the accessory follows the principal," etc. The other class are simply called "first principles." These principles have known marks, by which they may always be recognized. These are, first, that they are so clear that they cannot be proved by anterior and more manifest truths; second, that they are almost universally received; third, that they are so strongly impressed on our minds that we conform ourselves to them whatever may be our avowed opinions.

First principles have their source in the sentiment of our own existence, and that which is in the nature of things. A principle of law is a rule or axiom which is founded in the nature of the subject, and it exists before it is expressed in the form of a rule. Domat, Lois Civ. liv. prel. tit. 1, § 2; Toullier, Dr. Civ. tit. prel. note 17. "The right to defend one's self continues as long as an unjust attack" was a principle before it was ever decided by a court; so that a court does not establish, but recognizes, principles of law.

PRIOR PETENS (Lat.) The first applicant. Priori petenti, to the first applicant.

PRIOR TEMPORE, POTIOR JURE. He who is first in time is preferred in right. Co. Litt. 14a; 2 P. Wms. 491; 1 Term R. 733; 9 Wheat. (U. S.) Append. 24.

PRIORITY. Precedence. Thus, claims are said to be allowed priority where they are satisfied from a fund before other claims against the same are allowed to participate.

PRISAGE. An ancient hereditary revenue of the crown, consisting in the right to take a certain quantity from cargoes of wine imported into England. In Edward I.'s reign it was converted into a pecuniary duty called "butlerage." 2 Steph. Comm. 561.

PRISE (Fr.)

——In French Law. Prize; captured property. Ord. Mar. liv. 3, tit. 9. See "Prize."

Capture, by a naval force. Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 12, sec. 18, § 1.

——In Old English Law. Things taken of the king's subjects by purveyors; provisions taken for the king's use. Cowell; Artic. sup. Chart. c. 2; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 233; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 50, § 21.

PRISEL EN AUTER LIEU (Law Fr.) A taking in another place; a plea in abatement in the action of replevin. 2 Ld. Raym. 1016, 1017.

PRISO (Law Lat.; Law Fr. prison, from prise, taken). In old English law. A prisoner; a captive in war. Spelman.

A prisoner, or imprisoned malefactor. Prisones vero, sic imprisonati, but prisoners so imprisoned. Bracton, fol. 123. See Fleta, lib. 1, c. 26, § 5.

PRISON. A public building for confining persons, either to insure their production in court, as accused persons and witnesses, or to punish, as criminals.

The root is French, as is shown by the Norman prisons, prisoners (Kelham), and French prisons, prisons (Britt. c. 11, "De Prisons"). Originally it was distinguished from "gaol," which was a place for confinement, not for punishment. See Jacob, "Gaol." But at present there is no such distinction.

It is a general term to include jails, penitentiaries, etc.

PRISON BOUNDS. See "Gaol Liberties."

PRISON BREACH. The act of one who is lawfully detained on a criminal charge, or under sentence for a crime, in breaking out of the place in which he is detained, against the will of the person by whom he is detained.

It is something more than an escape,—adding thereto a breaking out of custody. The breaking must be actual, but need not be intentional. Thus, if loose bricks on top of a prison wall are thrown by a convict in climbing over the same, it is a breach. Russ. & R. 458. The opening of a window or unlocking of a door in the course of an escape constitutes a breach. 53 N. J. Law, 488.

PRISONER. One held in confinement against his will.

PRISONER OF WAR. One who has been captured while fighting under the banner of some state. He is a prisoner, although never confined in a prison. Not only such persons as a belligerent can lawfully kill, but all who may be separated from the mass of noncombatants by their importance to the enemy's state, or by their usefulness to him in his war, may be made prisoners of war. Glenn, Int. Law, 187.

Any person captured and held by the military power while carrying on war, and held as an enemy prisoner, whether rightly or wrongfully so held. 1 Bish. Crim. Law, § 65, note.

PRIST (Law Fr. ready). A formal word used in the days of oral pleading, to express a tender of or joinder in issue.

PRIUS VITIIS LABORAVIMUS, NUNC legibus. We labored first with vices, now with laws. 4 Inst. 76.

PRIVATE. Affecting or belonging to individuals, as distinct from the public generally; not clothed with office.

PRIVATE ACT. An act operating only upon particular persons and private concerns, and rather an exception than a rule. Opposed to "public act." 1 Bl. Comm. 86; 1 Term R. 125; Plowd. 28; Dyer, 75, 119; 4 Coke, 76. Private acts ought not to be noticed by courts unless pleaded.

PRIVATE BANKERS. Such as engage in the business of banking, without having any special grant of authority from the state. 80 N. Y. 225.

PRIVATE BILL OFFICE. An office of the English parliament where the business of obtaining private acts of parliament is conducted.

PRIVATE CARRIER. A carrier who is not a common carrier, because he does not hold himself out as ready to carry all persons who may employ him.

PRIVATE CORPORATION. A corporation founded by a private individual, or the stock of which is owned by private persons, such as a hospital or college, a bank, an insurance, turnpike, or railroad company. 2 Kent, Comm. 275.

PRIVATE EASEMENT. One the enjoyment of which is restricted to certain individuals.

PRIVATE HOUSE. A dwelling place, not open for the accommodation of all applicants who come lawfully and pay regularly. A boarding house for the accommodation of such only as are accepted by the proprietor is a private house. 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 344.

PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW. See "Conflict of Laws;" "International Law."

PRIVATE NUISANCE. See "Nuisance."

PRIVATE PERSON. One not an officer.

PRIVATE PROPERTY. Within the constitutional requirement of compensation for "private property taken for public use," it includes, of course, all property owned by individuals, and also certain property held by public bodies, such as municipal corporations, which is held not for the performance of the public duties devolving upon it, but for purposes not deemed strictly public and political.

PRIVATE RIGHTS. Those rights which relate to the person, or to personal or real property of particular individuals. 1 Chit. Gen. Prac. 3.

PRIVATE STATUTE. A statute which operates only upon particular persons and private concerns. 1 Bl. Comm. 86. See "General Statute."

PRIVATE WAY. An easement of one person, or of any number of persons less than the public at large, to pass over the servient land of another in the manner, at the times, on the location, and for the purpose allotted or agreed for the particular way. Bish. Non-Cont. Law, § 866.

Private ways are either (1) appurtenant, i. e., pertaining to some particular land, or (2) in gross, i. e., personal to some particular individual or individuals. 3 Bl. Comm. 241.

PRIVATE WRONGS. A private wrong, otherwise termed a "tort" or "civil injury," is an infringement or privation of the civil rights which belong to individuals, considered merely as individuals. 4 Bl. Comm. 5. See "Public Wrongs."

PRIVATEER. A vessel owned by one or more private individuals, armed and equipped at his or their expense, for the purpose of carrying on a maritime war, by the authority of one of the belligerent parties. The commissions issued to such vessels are generally called "letters of marque."

The treaty of Paris (q. v.) provides for the discontinuance of the use of privateers except as against such powers (of which the United States is one) as did not accede to such treaty, and the general policy of the United States is against their use. See 1 Kent, Comm. 97.

PRIVATIO PRAESUPPONIT HABITUR. A deprivation presupposes a possession. 2 Rolle, 419.

PRIVATIS PACTIONIBUS NON DUBIUM est non laedi jus caeterorum. There is no doubt that the rights of others cannot be prejudiced by private agreements. Dig. 2. 15. 3. pr.; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 623.

PRIVATORUM CONVENTIO JURI PUBlico non derogat. Private agreements cannot derogate from public law. Dig. 50. 17. 45. 1.

PRIVATUM COMMODUM PUBLICO CEdit. Private yields to public good. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 273.

PRIVATUM INCOMMODUM PUBLICO bono pensatur. Private inconvenience is made up for by public good.

PRIVEMENT ENCEINTE (Law Fr.) A term used to signify that a woman is pregnant, but not quick with child. Wood. Inst. 662.

PRIVIGNUS (Lat.) In civil law. Son of a husband or wife by a former marriage; a stepson. Calv. Lex.; Vicat.

PRIVILEGE. An exemption or immunity peculiar to a particular person or body. Commonly applied to the various special rights and immunities of legislators, and to the privilege of witnesses from testifying to certain facts as self-incriminating ones. See "Privileged Communications."

——In Civil Law. A right which the nature of a debt gives to a creditor, and which entitles him to be preferred before other creditors. Code La. art. 3153; Dalloz, "Privilege;" Domat, Lois Civ. liv. 2, tit. 1, § 4, note 1.

——In Maritime Law. An allowance to the master of a ship of the general nature with primage, being compensation, or rather a gratuity, customary in certain trades, and which the law assumes to be a fair and equitable allowance, because the contract on both sides is made under the knowledge of such usage by the parties.

PRIVILEGE, WRIT OF. A process to enforce or maintain a privilege. Cowell.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

——In the Law of Slander. A communication made bona fide upon any subject matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, although it contain criminatory matter which, without this privilege, would be slanderous and actionable.

——In Evidence. Communication which the law refuses, on grounds of public policy, to allow to be disclosed in evidence. The policy prohibiting such disclosure may be (1) political, as that restraining the disclosure of secrets of state, (2) judicial, as that which prohibits the disclosure of proceedings in the jury room, (3) professional, as that which forbids the disclosure of statements by client to attorney, or (4) social, as that which restricts the disclosure of communications between husband and wife. Best, Ev. § 578.

PRIVILEGED COPYHOLDS. Those copyholds which are held according to the customs of the manor, and not according to the will of the lord. They include ancient demesne and customary freehold. 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 33-49; Lee, Real Prop. 63; 1 Crabb, Real Prop. 709, 919; 2 Bl. Comm. 100.

PRIVILEGED DEED. In Scotch law. An instrument, for example, a testament, in the execution of which certain statutory formalities usually required are dispensed with, either from necessity or expediency. Ersk. Inst. 3. 2. 22; Bell, Dict.

PRIVILEGED VILLENAGE. In old English law. A species of villenage in which the tenants held by certain and determinate services; otherwise called "villein socage." Bracton, fol. 209. Now called "privileged copyhold," including the tenure in ancient demesne. 2 Bl. Comm. 99, 100.

PRIVILEGES. See "Gambling Contract."

PRIVILEGIA QUAE RE VERA SUNT IN praejudicium reipublicae, magis tamen habent speciosa frontispicia, et boni publici praetextum, quam bonae et legales concessiones; sed praetextu iiciti non debet admitti illictum. Privileges which are truly in prejudice of public good have, however, a more specious front and pretext of public good than good and legal grants; but, under pretext of legality, that which is illegal ought not to be admitted. 11 Coke, 88.

PRIVILEGIUM (priva lex, i. e., de uno homine). In civil law. A private law inflicting a punishment or conferring a reward. Calv. Lex.; Cicero, de Lege, 3, 19, pro Domo, 17; Vicat. Every peculiar right by which one creditor or class of creditors is preferred to another in personal actions. Vicat. Every privilege granted by law in derogation of common right. Mackeld. Civ. Law, §§ 188, 189. A claim or lien on a thing, which, once attaching, continued till waiver or satisfaction, and which existed apart from possession. So at the present day in maritime law, e. g., the lien of seamen on ship for wages. 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 561-563.

PRIVILEGIUM CLERICALE (Lat.) Benefit of clergy (q. v.)

PRIVILEGIUM EST BENEFICIUM PERsonale et extinguitur cum persona. A privilege is a personal benefit, and dies with the person. 3 Bulst. 8.

PRIVILEGIUM EST QUASI PRIVATA lex. A privilege is, as it were, a private law. 2 Bulst. 189.

PRIVILEGIUM NON VALET CONTRA rempublicam. A privilege avails not against the commonwealth. Bac. Max. 25; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 17; Noy, Max. (9th Ed.) 34.

PRIVITY (Law Fr. privitie). Connection; interest; mutuality of interest; such as subsists between the immediate parties to a contract, as between lessor and lessee; otherwise called "personal privity," or "privity of contract." 3 Coke, 23a; Litt. §§ 460, 461. But this does not seem to be privity in its proper sense, for privies are they who are not parties. See "Privy."

A derivative kind of interest, founded upon or growing out of the contract of another, as that which subsists between an heir and his ancestor, between an executor and testator, and between a lessor or lessee and his assignee. 3 Coke, 23a.

The mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 189; 6 How. (U. S.) 60.

PRIVY. One who is a partaker or has any part or interest in any action, matter, or thing. Co. Litt. 271a.

One who has an interest in an estate created by another, or in a contract or conveyance to which he is not a party.

A mutual or successive relationship of persons.

Privity may be:

(1) Of contract, being the relation which exists between the immediate parties to a contract.

(2) In estate, as between lessor and lessee.

(3) In blood, as between an heir and his ancestor.

(4) In representation, as between a testator and his executors.

(5) In tenure, as between a lord and his feudal tenants.

(6) In person, as between husband and wife or trustee and beneficiary.

(7) In possession, as between joint tenants or tenants in common.

(8) In law, as where the law casts land upon another without privity of blood or estate, as by escheat.

A more general division has been made into privies in estate, privies in blood, and privies in law. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 189.

PRIVY COUNCIL. The chief council of the sovereign, called, by pre-eminence, "The Council," composed of those whom the king appoints. 1 Bl. Comm. 229-232.

By St. Charles II., in 1679, the number was limited to thirty,—fifteen the chief officers of the state ex virtute officii, the other fifteen at the king's pleasure; but the number is now indefinite. A committee of the privy council is a court of ultimate appeal in admiralty causes and causes of lunacy and idiocy (3 P. Wms. 108), and from all dominions of the crown except Great Britain and Ireland (1 Wooddeson, Lect. 157b; 2 Steph. Comm. 479; 3 Steph. Comm. 425, 432).

PRIVY SEAL. In English law. A seal which the king uses to such grants or things as pass the great seal. 2 Inst. 554.

PRIVY SIGNET. The seal which is first used in making grants, etc., of the crown. It is always in custody of the secretary of state. 2 Bl. Comm. 347; 1 Wooddeson, Lect. 250; 1 Steph. Comm. 571.

PRIVY VERDICT. In practice. A verdict given privily to the judge out of court, but which was of no force unless afterwards affirmed by a public verdict given openly in court. 3 Bl. Comm. 377. Now disused.

PRIZE.

——In Maritime Law. The apprehension and detention at sea of a ship or other vessel, by authority of a belligerent power, either with the design of appropriating it, with the goods and effects it contains, or with that of becoming master of the whole or a part of its cargo. 1 C. Rob. Adm. 228.

The vessel or goods thus taken.

Goods taken on land from a public enemy are called "booty;" and the distinction between a prize and booty consists in this, that the former is taken at sea, and the latter on land.

——In Contracts. A reward which is offered to one of several persons who shall accomplish a certain condition; as, if an editor should offer a silver cup to the individual who shall write the best essay in favor of peace. In this case there is a contract subsisting between the editor and each person who may write such essay that he will pay the prize to the writer of the best essay. Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 675.

A thing which is won by putting into a lottery.

PRIZE COURT. In English law. That branch of admiralty which adjudicates upon cases of maritime captures made in time of war. A special commission issues in England, in time of war, to the judge of the admiralty court, to enable him to hold such court. See "Admiralty."

Some question has been raised whether the prize court is or is not a separate court from the admiralty court. Inasmuch as the commission is always issued to the judge of that court, and the forms of proceeding are substantially those of admiralty, while the law applicable is derived from the same sources, the fact that the commission of prize is only issued occasionally would hardly seem to render the distinction a valid one.

In the United States, the admiralty courts discharge the duties both of a prize and an instance court.

PRIZEFIGHT. A personal combat between men, without weapons, in public and by agreement, for a prize or reward. 67 Miss. 352.

PRO. In Latin phrases. A preposition meaning "for."

PRO BONO ET MALO. For good and for evil.

PRO CONFESSO (Lat. as confessed). In equity practice. A decree taken where the defendant has either never appeared in the suit, or, after having appeared, has neglected to answer. 1 Daniell, Ch. Prac. 479; Adams, Eq. 327, 374; 1 Smith, Ch. Prac. 254.

PRO DEFECTU EMPTORUM. For want (failure) of purchasers.

PRO DEFECTU EXITUS. For, or in case of, default of issue. 2 Salk. 620.

PRO DEFECTU HAEREDIS. For want of an heir.

PRO DEFECTU JUSTITIAE. For defect or want of justice. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 62, § 2.

PRO DEFENDENTE (Law Lat.) For the defendant. Vaughan, 65. Commonly abbreviated, pro def'. Hardr. passim. "Morton, pro querent. Blackstone, pro def." 1 W. Bl. 532.

PRO DERELICTO (Lat.) As derelict or abandoned. A species of usucaption in the civil law. The title of Dig. 41. 7. Quod pro derelicto habitum est, what is held as derelict. Id. 41. 7. 4.

PRO DIGNITATE REGALI. In consideration of the royal dignity. 1 Bl. Comm. 223.

PRO DIVISO. As divided, i. e., in severalty.

PRO DONATO. As a gift; as in case of gift; by title of gift A species of usucaption in the civil law. Dig. 41. 6. See Id. 5. 3. 13. 1.

PRO DOTE. As a dowry; by title of dowry. A species of usucaption. Dig. 41. 9. See Id. 5. 3. 13. 1.

PRO EMPTORE. As a purchaser; by the title of a purchaser. A species of usucaption. Dig. 41. 4. See Id. 5. 3. 13. 1.

PRO EO QUOD (Lat.) In pleading. For this that. This is a phrase of affirmation, and is sufficiently direct and positive for introducing a material averment. 1 Saund. 117, note 4; 2 Chit. Pl. 369-393; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 34.

PRO FACTI. As a fact.

PRO FALSO CLAMORE SUO. A nominal amercement of a plaintiff for "his false claim," which used to be inserted in a judgment for the defendant. Obsolete.

PRO FORMA. As a matter of form. 3 East, 232; 2 Kent, Comm. 245.

PRO HAC VICE. For this turn; for this one particular occasion.

PRO ILLA VICE. For that turn. 3 Wils. 233, arg.

PRO INDEFENSO. As undefended; as making no defense. A phrase in old practice. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 41, § 7.

PRO INDIVISO (Lat.) For an undivided part. The possession or occupation of lands or tenements belonging to two or more persons, and where, consequently, neither knows his several portion till divided. Bracton, lib. 5.

PRO INTERESSE SUO (Lat.) According to his interest.

PRO LAESIONE FIDEI. For breach of faith. 3 Bl. Comm. 52.

PRO LEGATO. As a legacy; by the title of a legacy. A species of usucaption. Dig. 41. 8.

PRO LUCRARI (Law Lat.) For to gain. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 7, § 12.

PRO MAJORI CAUTELA. For greater caution.

PRO NON SCRIPTO (Lat.) As not written; as though it had not been written; as never written. Ambl. 139. Pro non scriptis, as void. 7 Wils. & S. 523.

PRO OPERE ET LABORE (Law Lat.) For work and labor.

PRO PARTIBUS LIBERANDIS. An ancient writ for partition of lands between coheirs. Reg. Orig. 316.

PRO POSSE SUO. To the extent of his power or ability. Bracton, fol. 109.

PRO POSSESSORE. As a possessor; by title of a possessor. Dig. 41. 5. See Id. 5. 3. 13.

PRO POSSESSORE HABETUR QUI DOLO injuriave desiit possidere. He is esteemed a possessor whose possession has been disturbed by fraud or injury. Off. Exec. 166.

PRO QUERENTE (Lat.) For the plaintiff; usually abbreviated pro quer.

PRO RATA (Lat.) According to the rate, proportion, or allowance. A creditor of an insolvent estate is to be paid pro rata with creditors of the same class.

PRO RE NATA (Lat.) For the occasion as it may arise.

PRO SALUTE ANIMAE. For the good of his soul. All prosecutions in the ecclesiastical courts are pro salute animae; hence it will not be a temporal damage founding an action for slander that the words spoken put any one in danger of such a suit. 3 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 309n, 437; 4 Steph. Comm. 207.

PRO SE. For himself; in his own behalf; in person.

PRO SOCIO. For a partner; the name of an action in behalf of a partner. A title of the civil law. Dig. 17. 2; Code, 4. 37.

PRO SOLIDO. For the whole; as one; jointly; without division. Dig. 50. 17. 141. 1.

PRO TANTO (Lat.) For so much. See 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 400.

PRO TEMPORE. For the time being; temporarily; provisionally.

PROBABILITY. Likelihood; consonance to reason; for example, there is a strong probability that a man of good moral character, and who has heretofore been remarkable for truth, will, when examined as a witness under oath, tell the truth; and, on the contrary, that a man who has been guilty of perjury will not, under the same circumstances, tell the truth. The former will therefore be entitled to credit, while the latter will not.

It is not as strong an expression as "proof." "Demonstration produces certain knowledge; proof produces belief and probability opinion." 19 S. C. 39.

PROBABLE. Having the appearance of truth; appearing to be founded in reason.

PROBABLE CAUSE. Such a state of facts as to make it a reasonable presumption that their supposed existence was the cause of action.

The principal technical use of the phrase is to define the degree of certainty which will justify one in instituting a criminal prosecution, and relieve from liability for malicious prosecution should the charge prove unfounded.

As so used, "probable cause" is such a state of facts known to and influencing the prosecutor as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence, acting conscientiously, impartially, reasonably, and without prejudice, to believe, or entertain an honest and strong suspicion, that the person accused is guilty. Hilliard, Torts, c. 12, § 18; 81 Ala. 220; 62 N. Y. 19.

Belief in the guilt of the person accused must exist (67 Wis. 350), but is not in itself sufficient (56 Mich. 367), if ordinary care, diligence, and impartiality were not exercised (60 Miss. 916).

PROBABLE EVIDENCE. Presumptive evidence is so called, from its foundation in probability. Butler, Anal. Introd.

PROBABLE REASONING (Lat. argumentum verisimile). In the law of evidence. Reasoning founded on the probability of the fact or proposition sought to be proved or shown; reasoning in which the mind exercises a discretion in deducing a conclusion from premises. Burr. Circ. Ev. 22, 23.

PROBANDI NECESSITAS INCUMBIT illi qui agit. The necessity of proving lies with him who sues. Inst. 2. 20. 4.

PROBATE COURTS. See "Court of Probate."

PROBATE OF A WILL. The proof before an officer or court authorized by law that an instrument offered to be proved or recorded is the last will and testament of the deceased person whose testamentary act it is alleged to be.

In some jurisdictions, the term is loosely used to denote the proof of claims against estates, etc.

PROBATIO (Lat.) Proof; more particularly direct, as distinguished from indirect, or circumstantial, evidence.

PROBATIO MORTUA. Dead proof; that is, proof by inanimate objects, such as deeds or other written evidence.

PROBATIO PLENA. In the civil law. Full proof; proof by two witnesses, or a public instrument. Halifax, Civ. Law, bk. 3, c. 9, No. 25; 3 Bl. Comm. 370.

PROBATIO SEMI-PLENA. In the civil law. Half-full proof; half-proof. Proof by one witness, or a private instrument. Halifax, Civ. Law, bk. 3, c. 9, No. 25; 3 Bl. Comm. 370.

PROBATIO VIVA. Living proof; that is, proof by the mouth of living witnesses.

PROBATION. The evidence which proves a thing. It is either by record, writing, the party's own oath, or the testimony of witnesses. Proof. It also signifies the time of a novitiate; a trial. Nov. 5.

PROBATIONES DEBENT ESSE EVIdentes, id est, perspicuae et faciles intelligi. Proofs ought to be made evident, that is, clear and easy to be understood. Co. Litt. 283.

PROBATIS EXTREMIS, PRAESUMITUR media. The extremes being proved, the intermediate proceedings are presumed. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 20.

PROBATIVE. In the law of evidence. Having the effect of proof.

PROBATIVE FACT. In the law of evidence. A fact which actually has the effect of proving a fact sought; an evidentiary fact. 1 Benth. Jud. Ev. 18.

PROBATOR. In old English law. Strictly, an accomplice in felony who, to save himself, confessed the fact, and charged or accused any other as principal or accessary, against whom he was bound to make good his charge. It also signified an approver, or one who undertakes to prove a crime charged upon another. Jacob.

PROBATORY TERM. In the British courts of admiralty, after the issue is formed between the parties, a time for taking the testimony is assigned. This is called a "probatory term."

This term is common to both parties, and either party may examine his witnesses. When good cause is shown, the term will be enlarged. 2 Brown, Civ. Law, 418; Dunl. Adm. Prac. 217.

PROBI ET LEGALES HOMINES (Lat.) Good and lawful men; persons competent, in point of law, to serve on juries. Cro. Eliz. 654, 751; Cro. Jac. 635; Mart. & Y. (Tenn.) 147; Hardin (Ky.) 63; Bac. Abr. "Juries" (A).

PROBITY. Justice; honesty. A man of probity is one who loves justice and honesty, and who dislikes the contrary. Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 772.

PROCEDENDO (Lat.) In practice. A writ which issues where an action is removed from an inferior to a superior jurisdiction by habeas corpus, certiorari, or writ of privilege, and it does not appear to such superior court that the suggestion upon which the cause has been removed is sufficiently proved; in which case, the superior court by this writ remits the cause to the court from whence it came, commanding the inferior court to proceed to the final hearing and determination of the same. See 1 Chit. 575; 2 W. Bl. 1060; 1 Strange, 527; 6 Term R. 365; 4 Barn. & Ald. 535; 16 East, 387.

It also issues where an inferior court unwarrantably delays in giving judgment. 3 Bl. Comm. 109; 4 Minor, Inst. 276, 301.

PROCEDENDO ON AID PRAYER. If one pray in aid of the crown in real action, and aid be granted, it shall be awarded that he sue to the sovereign in chancery, and the justices in the common pleas shall stay until this writ of procedendo de loquela come to them. So, also, on a personal action. New Nat. Brev. 154.

PROCEDURE. The rule of pleading and practice by which rights are enforced. It is generally considered as not including the law of evidence.

PROCEEDING. In its general acceptation, this word means the form in which actions are to be brought and defended, the manner of intervening in suits, of conducting them, the mode of deciding them, of opposing judgments, and of executing.

In a narrower sense, any act, in the course of an action, done to achieve a given end.

A prescribed mode of action to carry into effect a right. 1 Duer (N. Y.) 620.

Ordinary proceedings intend the regular and usual mode of carrying on a suit by due course at common law.

Summary proceedings are those where the matter in dispute is decided without the intervention of a jury. These must be authorized by the legislature, except, perhaps, in cases of contempt, for such proceedings are unknown to the common law.

In Louisiana there is a third kind of proceeding, known by the name of "executory proceeding," which is resorted to in the following cases: When the creditor's right arises from an act importing a confession of judgment, and which contains a privilege or mortgage in his favor; or when the creditor demands the execution of a judgment which has been rendered by a tribunal different from that within whose jurisdiction the execution is sought. Code La. art. 732.

In New York, and some other states, the code of practice divides remedies into actions and special proceedings. An action is a regular judicial proceeding, in which one party prosecutes another party for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense. Every other remedy is a special proceeding. Code N. Y. § 2.

PROCEEDS. Money or articles of value arising or obtained from the sale of property. Goods purchased with money arising from the sale of other goods, or obtained on their credit, are proceeds of such goods. 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 201, 202. The sum, amount, or value of goods sold, or converted into money. Wharton.

It is a term of equivocal import, depending on the context. 89 Pa. St. 46.

PROCERES (Lat.) The name by which the chief magistrates in cities were formerly known. St. Armand, Hist. Eq. 88.

PROCES VERBAL. In French law. A true relation in writing, in due form of law, of what has been done and said verbally in the presence of a public officer, and what he himself does upon the occasion. It is a species of inquisition of office.

The proces verbal should be dated, contain the name, qualities, and residence of the public functionary who makes it, the cause of complaint, the existence of the crime, that which serves to substantiate the charge, point out its nature, the time, the place, the circumstances, state the proofs and presumptions, describe the place,—in a word, everything calculated to ascertain the truth. It must be signed by the officer. Dalloz.

PROCESS.

——In Practice. The means of compelling a defendant to appear in court, after suing out the original writ, in civil, and, after indictment, in criminal, cases. In a broader sense, all writs and mandates issued in the course of the proceeding. 15 Fla. 410.

The method taken by law to compel a compliance with the original writ or commands of the court.

In a strict sense, "process" is confined to the mandate of a court under its seal, whereby a party or an officer of the court is commanded to do certain acts. Thus, the summons used in many states, signed by plaintiff's attorney only, is not process. 12 Minn. 80; 17 Ore. 564.

In civil causes, in all real actions and for injuries not committed against the peace, the first step was a summons, which was served in personal actions by two persons called summoners, in real actions by erecting a white stick or wand on the defendant's grounds. If this summons was disregarded, the next step was an attachment of the goods of the defendant, and in case of trespasses the attachment issued at once without a summons. If the attachment failed, a distringas issued, which was continued till he appeared. Here process ended in injuries not committed with force. In case of such injuries, an arrest of the person was provided for. See "Arrest." In modern practice some of these steps are omitted; but the practice of the different states is too various to admit tracing here the differences which have resulted from retaining different steps of the process.

In the English law, process in civil causes is called "original" process, when it is founded upon the original writ; and also to distinguish it from mesne or intermediate process, which issues pending the suit, upon some collateral interlocutory matter, as, to summon juries, witnesses, and the like. "Mesne" process is also sometimes put in contradistinction to "final" process, or process of execution; and then it signifies all process which intervenes between the beginning and end of a suit. 3 Bl. Comm. 279. And this is the modern usage. 31 N. J. Law, 231.

——In Patent Law. The art or method by which any particular result is produced.

A process, eo nomine, is not made the subject of a patent in our act of congress. It is included under the general term "useful art." Where a result or effect is produced by chemical action, by the operation or application of some element or power of nature, or of one substance to another, such modes, methods, or operations are called "processes." A new process is usually the result of discovery; a machine, of invention. The arts of tanning, dyeing, making waterproof cloth, vulcanizing india rubber, smelting ores, and numerous others, are usually carried on by "processes," as distinguished from "machines." But the term "process" is often employed more vaguely in a secondary sense, in which it cannot be the subject of a patent. Thus, we say that a board is undergoing the process of being planed, grain of being ground, iron of being hammered or rolled. Here the term is used subjectively or passively, as applied to the material operated on, and not to the method or mode of producing that operation, which is by mechanical means, or the use of a machine, as distinguished from a process. In this use of the term it represents the function of a machine, or the effect produced by it on the material subjected to the action of the machine, and does not constitute a patentable subject matter, because there cannot be a valid patent for the function or abstract effect of a machine, but only for the machine which produces it. 15 How. (U. S.) 267, 268. See 2 Barn. & Ald. 349.

PROCESS OF GARNISHMENT. See "Garnishment."

PROCESS OF LAW. See "Due Process of Law."

PROCESS ROLL. In practice. A roll used for the entry of process to save the statute of limitations. 1 Tidd, Prac. 161, 162.

PROCESSIONING. A term used to denote the manner of ascertaining the boundaries of land. It consists in a survey of the lands in the presence of all persons interested who shall have been previously given notice. Comp. St. Tenn. 548. The term is also used in North Carolina (3 Murph. 504; 3 Dev. 268), and Georgia (69 Ga. 53).

It is similar to the English "perambulation" (q. v.)

PROCESSUM CONTINUANDO. In English practice. A writ for the continuance of process after the death of the chief justice or other justices in the commission of oyer and terminer. Reg. Orig. 128.

PROCESSUS LEGIS EST GRAVIS VEXATio, executio legis coronat opus. The process of the law is a grievous vexation; the execution of the law crowns the work. Co. Litt. 289.

PROCHEIN (Law Fr.) Next. A term somewhat used in modern law, and more frequently in the old law; as, prochein ami, prochein cousin. Co. Litt. 10.

PROCHEIN AMI (Law Fr.; spelled, also, prochein amy and prochain amy). Next friend. He who, without being appointed guardian, sues in the name of an infant for the recovery of the rights of the latter, or does such other acts as are authorized by law; as, in Pennsylvania, to bind the infant apprentice. 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 172; 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 27. For some of the rules with respect to the liability or protection of a prochein ami, see 3 Madd. 468; 4 Madd. 461; 2 Strange, 709; 1 Dick. 346; 1 Atk. 570; Mosely, 47, 85; 1 Ves. Jr. 409; 7 Ves. 425; 10 Ves. 184; Edwards, Parties, 182-204.

PROCHEIN AVOIDANCE. Next vacancy. Used in respect to appointments to ecclesiastical vacancies.

PROCINCTUS (Lat. from procingi [properly, praecingi], to be girt about). In the Roman law. A girding or preparing for battle. Testamentum in procinctu, or testamentum procinctum, a will made by a soldier, while girding himself, or preparing to engage in battle. A. Gell. Noct. Att. lib. xv. c. 27, note 4; Adams, Rom. Ant. 62; Calv. Lex. This mode of making a will had become obsolete in the time of Justinian. Inst. 2. 10. 1.

PROCLAMARE (Lat.)

——In the Civil Law. To cry out, or proclaim; to give warning. Inst. 4. 3. 5.

To assert a claim. Calv. Lex.

——In Old European Law. To appeal (to a higher court). Flod. lib. 3, c. 23; Capit. ib. 6, c. 299; Spelman.

PROCLAMATION. The act of causing some state matters to be published or made generally known. A written or printed document in which are contained such matters, issued by proper authority; as, the president's proclamation, the governor's proclamation, the mayor's proclamation. The word "proclamation" is also used to express the public nomination made of any one to a high office; as, such a prince was proclaimed emperor.

The giving of publicity is essential to the idea of a proclamation, no paper being such until it is in some manner published. 101 U. S. 770.

——In Practice. The declaration made by the crier, by authority of the court, that something is about to be done.

It usually commences with the French word oyez (do you hear), in order to attract attention. It is particularly used on the meeting or opening of the court, and at its adjournment. It is also frequently employed to discharge persons who have been accused of crimes or misdemeanors.

PROCLAMATION OF EXIGENTS. In old English practice. On awarding an exigent, in order to outlawry, a writ of proclamation issued to the sheriff of the county where the party dwelt, to make three proclamations for the defendant to yield himself or be outlawed.

PROCLAMATION OF REBELLION. In old English practice. When a party neglected to appear upon a subpoena, or an attachment in the chancery, a writ bearing this name issued, and, if he did not surrender himself by the day assigned, he was reputed and declared a rebel.

PROCLAMATION OF RECUSANTS. A proceeding whereby such persons were formerly convicted, on nonappearance at the assizes. Jacob.

PROCREATION. The generation of children. It is an act authorized by the law of nature. One of the principal ends of marriage is the procreation of children. Inst. tit. 2. pr.

PROCTOR. One appointed to represent in judgment the party who empowers him, by writing under his hand, called a "proxy." The term is used chiefly in the courts of civil, ecclesiastical, and admiralty law. The proctor is somewhat similar to the attorney. Ayliffe, Par. 421.

PROCURACY. The writing or instrument which authorizes a procurator to act. Cowell; Termes de la Ley.

PROCURARE (Lat. from pro, for, and curare, to take care of). To take care of another's affairs for him, or in his behalf; to see to the affairs of another; to govern; to manage; to take care of, or superintend. Dig. 17. 1. 34.

PROCURATIO (Lat. from procurare, to manage). Management of another's affairs by his direction, and in his behalf; procuration; administration; agency. See "Procuration."

A taking care of another. Spelman.

PROCURATION. In civil law. The act by which one person gives power to another to act in his place, as he could do himself. A letter of attorney.

An express procuration is one made by the express consent of the parties. An implied or tacit procuration takes place when an individual sees another managing his affairs and does not interfere to prevent it. Dig. 17. 1. 6. 2; Id. 50. 17. 60; Code, 7. 32. 2.

Procurations are also divided into those which contain absolute power, or a general authority, and those which give only a limited power. Dig. 3. 3. 58; Id. 17. 1. 60. 4. Procurations are ended in three ways: First, by the revocation of the authority; second, by the death of one of the parties; third, by the renunciation of the mandatory, when it is made in proper time and place, and it can be done without injury to the person who gave it. Inst. 3. 27; Dig. 17. 1; Code. 4. 35. See "Authority;" "Letter of Attorney;" "Mandate."

PROCURATION FEE (or MONEY). In English law. Brokerage or commission allowed to scriveners and solicitors, for obtaining loans of money. 4 Bl. Comm. 157.

PROCURATIONS. In ecclesiastical law. Certain sums of money which parish priests pay yearly to the bishops or archdeacons ratione visitationis. Dig. 3. 39. 25; Ayliffe, Par. 429; 17 Viner, Abr. 544.

PROCURATOR. In civil law. A proctor; a person who acts for another by virtue of a procuration. Procurator est, qui aliena negotia mandata Domini administrat. Dig. 3. 3. 1. See "Attorney;" "Authority."

PROCURATOR, FISCAL. In Scotch law. A public prosecutor. Bell, Dict.

PROCURATOR IN REM SUAM. In Scotch law. A term which imports that one is acting as attorney as to his own property. When an assignment of a thing is made, as a debt, and a procuration or power of attorney is given to the assignee to receive the same, he is in such case procurator in rem suam. 3 Stair, Inst. 1. 2. 3, etc.; 3 Ersk. Inst. 3. 5. 2; 1 Bell, Dict. bk. 5, c. 2, sec. 1, § 2.

PROCURATOR LITIS (Lat.) In civil law. One who, by command of another, institutes and carries on for him a suit. Vicat. Procurator is properly used of the attorney of actor (the plaintiff), defensor of the attorney of reus (the defendant). It is distinguished from advocatus, who was one who undertook the defense of persons, not things, and who was generally the patron of the person whose defense he prepared, the person himself speaking it. It is also distinguished from cognitor, who conducted the cause in the presence of his principal, and generally in cases of citizenship; whereas the procurator conducted the cause in the absence of his principal. Calv. Lex.

PROCURATORIUM (Lat.) The proxy or instrument by which a proctor is constituted and appointed.

PROCURATOR NEGOTIORUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The manager of another's business or affairs; an agent; an attorney in fact. Calv. Lex.

PROCURATOR PROVINCIAE (Lat.) In the Roman law. A provincial officer who managed the affairs of the revenue, and had a judicial power in matters that concerned the revenue. Adams, Rom. Ant. 178.

PROCURATORY OF RESIGNATION. In Scotch law. A form of proceeding by which a vassal authorizes the feu to be returned to his superior. Bell, Dict. It is analogous to the surrender of copyholds in England. Wharton.

PROCUREUR. In French law. An attorney; one who has received a commission from another to act on his behalf. There were in France two classes of procureurs: Procureurs ad negotia, appointed by an individual to act for him in the administration of his affairs; persons invested with a power of attorney; corresponding to "attorneys in fact." Procureurs ad lites were persons appointed and authorized to act for a party in a court of justice. These corresponded to attorneys at law (now called, in England, "solicitors of the supreme court"). The order of procureurs was abolished in 1791, and that of avoues established in their place. Mozley & W.

PROCUREUR GENERAL (or IMPERIAL). In French law. An officer of the imperial court, who either personally or by his deputy prosecutes every one who is accused of a crime according to the forms of French law. His functions appear to be confined to preparing the case for trial at the assizes, assisting in that trial, demanding the sentence in case of a conviction, and being present at the delivery of the sentence. He has a general superintendence over the officers of police and of the juges d'instruction, and he requires from the procureur du roi a general report once in every three months. Brown.

PRODES HOMINES. The barons of the realm.

PRODIGUS. In civil law. A person who, though of full age, is incapable of managing his affairs, and of the obligations which attend them, in consequence of his bad conduct, and for whom a curator is therefore appointed.

PRODITION. Treason; treachery.

PRODITOR. A traitor.

PRODITORIE (Lat.) Treasonably. This is a technical word formerly used in indictments for treason, when they were written in Latin.

PRODUCENT. In ecclesiastical law. He who produces a witness to be examined.

PRODUCTION OF SUIT (productio sectae). The concluding clause of all declarations is, "and thereupon he brings his suit." In old pleading this referred to the production by the plaintiff of his secta or suit, i. e., persons prepared to confirm what he had stated in the declaration.

The phrase has remained; but the practice from which it arose is obsolete. 3 Bl. Comm. 295; Steph. Pl. 428.

PRODUCTIO SECTAE (Law Lat.) In old English law. Production of suit; the production, by a plaintiff, of his secta or suit, that is, a number of persons prepared to confirm what he had stated in his count (or intentio). This was done at the time of counting, or immediately after, and was expressed by the phrase at the end of the count or declaration: "Et inde producit sectam," and thereupon, or thereof, he produces suit. Translated in the modern forms: "And therefore he brings suit." Et inde statim producat sectam sufficientem, duos ad minus, vel tres, vel plures, si possit, and thereupon he should immediately produce a sufficient suit, two at least, or three or more, if he can. Bracton, fol. 410. See Id. 159, 314b; Steph. Pl. 429, and note.

PROFANE. That which has not been consecrated. By a profane place is understood one which is neither sacred, nor sanctified, nor religious. Dig. 11. 7. 2. 4.

PROFANELY. In a profane manner. In an indictment, under the act of assembly of Pennsylvania, against profanity, it is requisite that the words should be laid to have been spoken profanely. 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 394.

PROFANENESS, or PROFANITY. In criminal law. Imprecations in the name of the Deity.

It is a form of blasphemy. 8 Conn. 375.

PROFECTITUS (Lat.) In civil law. That which descends to us from our ascendants. Dig. 23. 3. 5.

PROFER (Law Lat. proferus, profrus, from Law Fr. proferer, to produce). In old English law. An offer or proffer; an offer or endeavor to proceed in an action, by any man concerned to do so. Cowell. A judicial offer to do some act.

A return made by a sheriff of his accounts into the exchequer; a payment made on such return. Cowell.

PROFERT IN CURIA (Lat. he produces in court. Sometimes written profert in curiam, with the same meaning). In pleading. A declaration on the record that a party produces the deed under which he makes title in court. In ancient practice, the deed itself was actually produced; in modern times, the allegation only is made in the declaration, and the deed is then constructively in possession of the court. 3 Salk. 119; 6 Man. & G. 277; 11 Md. 322.

Profert is, in general, necessary when either party pleads a deed and claims rights under it, whether plaintiff (2 Dutch. [N. J.] 293) or defendant (17 Ark. 279), to enable the court to inspect and construe the instrument pleaded, and to entitle the adverse party to oyer thereof (10 Coke, 92b; 1 Chit. Pl. 414; 1 Archb. Prac. 164), and is not necessary when the party pleads it without making title under it (Gould, Pl. c. 7, p. 2. § 47). But a party who is actually or presumptively unable to produce a deed may plead it without profert, as in suit by a stranger (Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" [O 8]; Cro. Jac. 217; Cro. Car. 441; Carth. 316), or one claiming title by operation of law (Co. Litt. 225; Bac. Abr. "Pleas" [I 12]; 5 Coke, 75), or where the deed is in the possession of the adverse party, or is lost. In all these cases, the special facts must be shown, to excuse the want of profert. See Gould, Pl. c. 8, p. 2; Lawes, Pl. 96; 1 Saund. 9a, note. Profert and oyer are abolished in England by the common-law procedure act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), and a provision exists (14 & 15 Vict. c. 99) for allowing inspection of all documents in the possession or under the control of the party against whom the inspection is asked. See 25 Eng. Law & Eq. 304. In many of the states of the United States profert has been abolished, and in some instances the instrument must be set forth in the pleading of the party relying upon it. The operation of profert and oyer, where allowed, is to make the deed a part of the pleadings of the party producing it. 11 Md. 322; 3 Cranch (U. S.) 234. See 7 Cranch (U. S.) 176.

PROFESSION. A public declaration respecting something. Code, 10. 41. 6. A state, art, or mystery; as, the legal profession. Dig. 1. 18. 6. 4; Domat, Dr. Pub. lib. 1. tit. 9, § 1, note 7. See 41 Mich. 155.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. The act of entering into a religious order. See 17 Viner, Abr. 545.

PROFIT A PRENDRE. A right to take products or emblements from the lands of another.

"Under the term 'profit' is comprehended the produce of the soil, whether it arise above or below the surface, as herbage, wood, turf, coal, minerals, stones; also fish in a pond or stream." 9 S. E. 562.

Profits a prendre are distinguished from easements, in that they are rights of profit, while an easement is a right without profit. See "Easement."

PROFITS. An excess of the value of returns over the value of expenditures. The net amount made after deducting any proper expenses incident to the transaction. 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 452; 15 Minn. 519.

The expenses to be deducted are ordinarily the current expenses incident to the business; not such items as the depreciation of buildings in which the business is carried on. 94 U. S. 500.

This is a word of very extended signification. In commerce, it means the advance in the price of goods sold beyond the cost of purchase. In distinction from the wages of labor, it is well understood to imply the net return to the capital or stock employed, after deducting all the expenses, including not only the wages of those employed by the capitalist, but the wages of the capitalist himself for superintending the employment of his capital or stock. Smith, Wealth of Nations, bk. i. c. 6, and McCulloch's notes; Mill, Pol. Econ. c. 15. After indemnifying the capitalist for his outlay, there commonly remains a surplus, which is his profit, the net income from his capital. 1 Mill, Pol. Econ. c. 15. The word "profit" is generally used by writers on political economy to denote the difference between the value of advances and the value of returns made by their employment.

The profit of the farmer and the manufacturer is the gain made by the sale of produce or manufactures, after deducting the value of the labor, materials, rents, and all expenses, together with the interest of the capital employed,—whether land, buildings, machinery, instruments, or money. The rents and profits of an estate, the income or the net income of it, are all equivalent expressions. The income or the net income of an estate means only the profit it will yield after deducting the charges of management. 5 Me. 202, 203; 35 Me. 420, 421.

Under the term "profit" is comprehended the produce of the soil, whether it arise above or below the surface; as, herbage, wood, turf, coals, minerals, stones; also fish in a pond or running water. Profits are divided into profits a prendre, or those taken and enjoyed by the mere act of the proprietor himself, and profits a vendre, namely, such as are received at the hands of and rendered by another. Hammond, N. P. 172.

Profits are divided by writers on political economy into gross and net,—gross profits being the whole difference between the value of advances and the value of returns made by their employment, and net profits being so much of that difference as is attributable solely to the capital employed. The remainder of the difference, or, in other words, the gross profits minus the net profits, has no particular name; but it represents the profits attributable to industry, skill, and enterprise. See Malthus, Def. Pol. Econ.; McCulloch, Pol. Econ. (4th Ed.) 563. But the word "profit" is generally used in a less extensive signification, and presupposes an excess of the value of returns over the value of advances.

PROGRESSION (Lat. progressio; from pro and gredior, to go forward). That state of a business which is neither the commencement nor the end. Some act done after the matter has commenced, and before it is completed. Plowd. 343.

PROHIBETUR NE QUIS FACIAT IN SUO quod nocere possit alieno. It is prohibited to do on one's own property that which may injure another's. 9 Coke, 59.

PROHIBITIO DE VASTO, DIRECTA PARTI. A judicial writ which used to be addressed to a tenant, prohibiting him from waste pending suit. Reg. Jud. 21; Moore, 917.

PROHIBITION (Lat. prohibition; from pro and habeo, to hold back). In practice. The name of a writ issued by a superior court, directed to the judge and parties of a suit in an inferior court, commanding them to cease from the prosecution of the same, upon a suggestion that the cause originally, or some collateral matter arising therein, does not belong to that jurisdiction, but to the cognizance of some other court. 3 Bl. Comm. 112; Comyn, Dig.; Bac. Abr.; Saund. Index; Viner, Abr.; 2 Sellon, Prac. 308; Ayliffe, Par. 434; 2 H. Bl. 533.

The writ is based on absence of jurisdiction, and will issue only where the lower court has either no jurisdiction of the action (47 Cal. 584; 4 Minn. 366; 60 N. Y. 31), or where, having jurisdiction of a cause, it proceeds to some act beyond its power (20 N. Y. 531). But where the lower court has jurisdiction of all matters involved, mere error in its decision is no ground for prohibition. 100 Mo. 59; 13 Ind. 235.

"The writ of prohibition, as its name imports, is one which commands the person to whom it is directed not to do something which, by the suggestion of the relator, the court is informed he is about to do. If the thing be already done, it is manifest that the writ of prohibition cannot undo it, for that would require an affirmative act, and the only effect of a writ of prohibition is to prevent any further proceedings in the prohibited direction." 4 Wall. (U. S.) 159.

PROHIBITIVE IMPEDIMENTS. Those impediments to a marriage which are only followed by a punishment, but do not render the marriage null. Bowyer, Mod. Civ. Law, 44.

PROJECTIO (Lat. from projicere, to cast up). In old English law. A throwing up of earth by the sea. Used by Sir Matthew Hale as a synonym of alluvio.

PROJET (Fr.) In international law. The draft of a proposed treaty or convention.

PROLEM ANTE MATRIMONIUM NATAM, ita ut post legitimam, lex civilis succedere facit in haereditate parentum; sed prolem, quam matrimonium non parit, succedere non sinit lex Anglorum. The civil law permits the offspring born before marriage [provided such offspring be afterwards legitimized] to be the heirs of their parents; but the law of the English does not suffer the offspring not produced by the marriage to succeed. Fortescue, c. 39.

PROLES (Lat.) Progeny; such issue as proceeds from a lawful marriage, and, in its enlarged sense, it signifies any children.

PROLES SEQUITUR SORTEM PATERnam. The offspring follows the condition of the father. 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 583, 660.

PROLETARIUS. In civil law. One who had no property to be taxed, and paid a tax only on account of his children (proles); a person of mean or common extraction. The word has become Frenchified, proletaire signifying one of the common people.

PROLICIDE (Lat. proles, offspring, cedere, to kill). In medical jurisprudence. A word used to designate the destruction of the human offspring. Jurists divide the subject into "foeticide," or the destruction of the foetus in utero, and "infanticide," or the destruction of the new-born infant. Ryan, Med. Jur. 137.

PROLIXITY. The unnecessary and superfluous statement of facts in pleading or in evidence. This will be rejected as impertinent. 7 Price, 278, note.

PROLOCUTOR (Lat. pro and loquor, to speak before). In ecclesiastical law. The president or chairman of a convocation.

PROLONGATION. Time added to the duration of something.

When the time is lengthened during which a party is to perform a contract, the sureties of such a party are, in general, discharged, unless the sureties consent to such prolongation.

In the civil law, the prolongation of time to the principal did not discharge the surety. Dig. 2. 14. 27; Id. 12. 1. 40.

PROLYTAE (Lat.) In Roman law. The term used to denominate students of law during the fifth and last year of their studies. They were left during this year very much to their own direction, and took the name prolytae omnino soluti. They studied chiefly the Code and the imperial constitutions. See Dig. Pref. Prim. Const. 2; Calv. Lex.

PROMISE. An engagement by which the promisor contracts towards another for the performance of some act. 1 Denio (N. Y.) 226.

"We are in the habit of considering as the essential feature of contract a promise by one party to another, or by two parties to one another, to do or forbear from doing certain acts. We are further in the habit of using the word "promise" to signify a binding promise, as opposed to the offer of a promise, or, to use the cumbrous terminology of Austin, a pollicitation. * * * There are then three stages necessary to the making of that sort of agreement which results in contract: There must be an offer, there must be an acceptance of the offer resulting in a promise, and the law must attach a binding force to the promise, so as to invest it with the character of an obligation." Anson, Cont. 4.

PROMISE OF MARRIAGE. A contract between a man and a woman to marry each other at some future time. The implied agreement is, if no time be expressed, to marry within a reasonable time. 42 Mich. 346; 97 Pa. St. 465.

The agreement need not be in any set form (53 N. Y. 267), nor in express terms, but may be inferred from conduct (71 Hun [N. Y.] 137; 85 Ill. 222; 23 Barb. [N. Y.] 639).

To render the contract valid, the parties must be competent to contract generally (8 Mich. 318; 26 Barb. [N. Y.] 615), and, moreover, must be able to enter into the marriage relation; a promise by one already married (60 N. Y. Super. Ct. 222), or one who is impotent (41 N. J. Law, 13), being void; but precontract to marry another does not invalidate the promise (18 Mo. 389).

PROMISEE. A person to whom a promise has been made.

PROMISOR. One who makes a promise.

PROMISSORY NOTE. A written promise to pay a certain sum of money at a future time, unconditionally. Bailey, Bills, 1; 3 Kent, Comm. 74; 7 Watts & S. (Pa.) 264; 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 143; 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 675; 1 Ala. 263; 7 Mo. 42; 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 536; 6 N. H. 364; 7 Vern. 22.

A written engagement to pay absolutely to a person named, or to order or bearer, at a specified time or on demand, a certain sum of money. 10 Ill. 252; 15 Mass. 387; 127 N. Y. 92.

No particular form of expression is required. 37 Ill. 137; 7 Vt. 22.

A date is not essential. 32 Ind. 375; 30 Vt. 11; 76 Ala. 339.

The promise must be unconditional. 30 Minn. 441; 6 Wis. 209.

The promise to pay may be implied from a phrase such as "good for," etc. (33 Ill. 424; 6 N. H. 364), or "due to," etc. (88 Hun [N. Y.] 535; 27 Ill. 337; 17 Ga. 574).

To be a promissory note, the instrument must be for the payment of money only. 40 Ark. 344; 20 N. Y. 272; 17 Wis. 139.

The payee must be clearly designated (13 Ga. 55; 6 Mo. App. 583; 1 Ill. 18); but this may be done by description, without naming him (16 Ill. 169).

The consideration need not be expressed. 127 N. Y. 92; 26 Or. 315; 8 Cal. 288.

The place of payment need not be stated. 31 Tex. 614.

The time of payment must be designated, unless the note is payable "on demand" (86 U. S. 560). But see 8 Miss. 176; 1 Pin. (Wis.) 643.

The amount payable must be certain (60 Mich. 432), but the addition of "current exchange" (9 Mich. 241; 54 Minn. 184; 10 Wis. 34), or "attorneys' fees" (82 Ind. 370), does not prevent the instrument being a note.

The decisions are in conflict as to whether negotiability is an essential of a promissory note. That it is not, see 1 Ga. 236; 46 Me. 387; 10 Gill & J. 299; 6 Cush. (Mass.) 172; 34 Vt. 402. Contra, 1 Ill. 18; 8 N. J. Law, 262; 66 N. Y. 14.

PROMOTERS.

——In English Law. Those who, in popular or penal actions, prosecute in their own names and the king's, having part of the fines and penalties.

——In Modern Corporation Law. Those persons who manage the incorporation of a company, issuing prospectuses, procuring the stock subscriptions, etc.

PROMOVENT. A plaintiff in a suit of duplex querela (q. v.) 2 Prob. Div. 192.

PROMULGATION. The order given to cause a law to be executed, and to make it public. It differs from "publication." 1 Bl. Comm. 45; St. 6 Hen. VI. c. 4.

PROMUTUUM (Lat.) In civil law. A quasi contract, by which he who receives a certain sum of money, or a certain quantity of fungible things, which have been paid to him through mistake, contracts towards the payer the obligation of returning him as much. Poth. de l'Usure, pt. 3, § 1, a. 1.

This contract is called promutuum, because it has much resemblance to that of mutuum This resemblance consists in this: First, that in both a sum of money or some fungible things are required; second, that in both there must be a transfer of the property in the thing; third, that in both there must be returned the same amount or quantity of the thing received. But, though there is this general resemblance between the two, the mutuum differs essentially from the promutuum. The former is the actual contract of the parties, made expressly, but the latter is a quasi contract, which is the effect of an error or mistake. 1 Bouv. Inst. notes 1125, 1126.

PROOF. The conviction or persuasion of the mind of a judicial tribunal by the exhibition of evidence of the reality of a fact alleged. See "Evidence."

PROPER FEUDS. The original and genuine feuds held by pure military service.

PROPERTY. The right and interest which a man has in lands and chattels, to the exclusion of others. 6 Bin. (Pa.) 98; 4 Pet. (U. S.) 511; 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 283; 59 N. Y. 192; 31 Cal. 637; 11 East, 290, 518; 14 East, 370.

The right to possess, use, enjoy, and dispose of a thing in any manner not forbidden by law (56 N. Y. 268; 31 Cal. 637); the power of disposition being essential (13 N. Y. 396; 70 Mich. 537).

The term is frequently applied to that which is the subject of property, and in this sense it includes everything corporeal or incorporeal which is the subject of ownership. 26 Conn. 449; 84 N. Y. 565. It includes choses in action. 23 Minn. 239.

Within legal and constitutional provisions for the protection of "property," it has been held to include the right to labor (33 Hun [N. Y.] 374), to practice a profession (90 Pa. St. 477), the right to take an appeal (57 Cal. 464). See "Real Property;" "Chattel Property."

PROPERTY PER INDUSTRIAM. A qualified property in animals acquired by reclaiming or confining them.

PROPERTY PROPTER IMPOTENTIAM. A qualified property which one has in animals ferae naturae, which are on his premises, and unable, by immaturity, to leave them. It is lost when such animals become able to leave.

PROPERTY PROPTER PRIVILEGIUM. A qualified property in wild animals by reason of a privilege of hunting them, to the exclusion of others. 2 Bl. Comm. 394.

PROPINQUIOR EXCLUDIT PROPINquum; propinquus remotum; et remotus remotiorem. He who is nearer excludes him who is near; he who is near, him who is remote; he who is remote, him who is more remote. Co. Litt. 10.

PROPINQUITY (Lat.) Kindred; parentage. See "Affinity;" "Consanguinity."

PROPINQUUS (Lat.) In old English law. Near; near of kin.

PROPIOS, or PROPRIOS. In Spanish law. Certain portions of ground laid off and reserved when a town was founded in Spanish America, as the unalienable property of the town, for the purpose of erecting public buildings, markets, etc., or to be used in any other way, under the direction of the municipality, for the advancement of the revenues or the prosperity of the place. 12 Pet. (U. S.) 442, note.

PROPONE.

——In Scotch Law. To state. To propone a defense is to state or move it. 1 Kames, Eq. pref.

——In Ecclesiastical and Probate Law. To bring forward for adjudication; to exhibit as basis of a claim; to proffer for judicial action.

PROPONENT. In ecclesiastical law. One who propounds a thing; as, "the party proponent doth allege and propound." 6 Ecc. 356, note.

He who propounds a will for probate.

PROPORTUM. In old records. Purport; intention or meaning. Cowell.

PROPOSAL. An offer; a formal offer to perform some undertaking, stating the time and manner of performance, and price demanded, or one or more of these particulars, either directly or by implied or direct reference to some announcement requesting such an offer. See 35 Ala. (N. S.) 33. A proposal of this character is not to be considered as subject to different rules from any other offer. Pierce, Am. Ry. Law, 364.

PROPOSITION. An offer to do something. Until it has been accepted, a proposition may be withdrawn by the party who makes it, and, to be binding, the acceptance must be in the same terms, without any variation. See "Acceptance;" 1 La. 190; 4 La. 80.

PROPOSITUM INDEFINITUM AEQUIpollet universali. An indefinite proposition is equal to a general one.

PROPOSITUS (Lat.) The person proposed. In making genealogical tables, the person whose relations it is desired to find out is called the propositus.

PROPOUND. In the law of wills. To offer for probate.

PROPRES. In French law. The term propres or biens propres is used to denote that property which has come to an individual from his relations, either in a direct line, ascending or descending, or from a collateral line, whether the same have come by operation of law or by devise. Propres is used in opposition to acquets Poth. des Propres; 2 Burge, Confl. Laws, 61.

PROPRIA PERSONA (Lat. in his own person). It is a rule in pleading that pleas to the jurisdiction of the court must be pleaded in propria persona, because, if pleaded by attorney, they admit the jurisdiction, as an attorney is an officer of the court, and he is presumed to plead after having obtained leave, which admits the jurisdiction. Lawes, Pl. 91.

An appearance may be in propria persona, and need not be by attorney.

PROPRIEDAD. In Spanish law. Property. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 7, c. 5, § 2.

PROPRIETARY. Belonging or pertaining to a proprietor. See 117 U. S. 487.

PROPRIETARY RIGHTS. Those rights which an owner of property has by virtue of his ownership. When proprietary rights are opposed to acquired rights, such as easements, franchises, etc., they are more often called "natural rights."

PROPRIETAS (Lat.) In the civil and old English law. Property; that which is one's own; ownership.

——Proprietas Nuda. Naked or mere property or ownership; the mere title, separate from the usufruct.

——Proprietas Plena. Full property, including not only the title, but the usufruct or exclusive right to the use. Calv. Lex.

PROPRIETAS TOTIUS NAVIS CARINAE causam sequitur. The property of the whole ship follows the ownership of the keel. Dig. 6. 1. 61. Provided it had not been constructed with the materials of another. Id.; 2 Kent, Comm. 362.

PROPRIETAS VERBORUM EST SALUS proprietatum. The propriety of words is the safety of property.

PROPRIETATE PROBANDA. The name of a writ. See "De Proprietate Probanda."

PROPRIETATES VERBORUM OBSERvandae sunt. The proprieties (i. e., proper meanings) of words are to be observed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 136.

PROPRIETOR. An owner; the holder of the legal title.

PROPRIO VIGORE (Lat.) By its own force or vigor. An expression frequently used in construction. A phrase is said to have a certain meaning proprio vigore.

PROPTER AFFECTUM (Lat.) For or on account of some affection or prejudice. A juryman may be challenged propter affectum; as, because he is related to the party, has eaten at his expense, and the like. See "Challenge."

PROPTER DEFECTUM (Lat.) On account of or for some defect. This phrase is frequently used in relation to challenges. A juryman may be challenged propter affectum; um; as, that he is a minor, an alien, and the like. See "Challenge."

PROPTER DEFECTUM SANGUINIS. On account of failure of blood.

PROPTER DELICTUM (Lat.) For or on account of crime. A juror may be challenged propter delictum when he has been convicted of an infamous crime. See "Challenge."

PROPTER HONORIS RESPECTUM. On account of respect of honor or rank. See "Challenge."

PROROGATED JURISDICTION. In Scotch law. That jurisdiction which, by the consent of the parties, is conferred upon a judge who, without such consent, would be incompetent. Ersk. Inst. 1. 2. 15.

At common law, when a party is entitled to some privilege or exemption from jurisdiction, he may waive it, and then the jurisdiction is complete; but the consent cannot give jurisdiction.

PROROGATION (Lat.) Putting off to another time. It is generally applied to the English parliament, and means the continuance of it from one day to another. It differs from "adjournment," which is a continuance of it from one day to another in the same session. 1 Bl. Comm. 186.

——In Civil Law. The giving time to do a thing beyond the term prefixed. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 1. See "Prolongation."

PROSCRIBED (Lat. proscribo, to write before). In civil law. Among the Romans, a man was said to be proscribed when a reward was offered for his head; but the term was more usually applied to those who were sentenced to some punishment which carried with it the consequences of civil death. Code, 9. 49.

PROSECUTION. The conducting or carrying forward of a judicial proceeding.

The means adopted to bring a supposed offender against the criminal law to punishment by due course of law.

PROSECUTOR. In practice. He who prosecutes another for a crime in the name of the government.

The public prosecutor is an officer appointed by the government to prosecute all offenses,—he is the attorney general or his deputy.

A private prosecutor is one who prefers an accusation against a party whom he suspects to be guilty.

PROSEQUI (Lat.) To follow up or pursue. See "Nolle Prosequi."

PROSPECTIVE (Lat. prospicio, to look forward). That which is applicable to the future. It is used in opposition to retrospective. To be just, a law ought always to be prospective. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 116.

PROSPECTIVE DAMAGES. Such as will naturally result from the injury complained of, but have not accrued at the time of the trial; such, for example, as the loss of wages from a personal injury which will result where plaintiff has not, at the time of the trial, recovered his earning capacity.

PROSTITUTION. The common lewdness of a woman for gain. The act of permitting a common and indiscriminate sexual intercourse for hire. 12 Metc. (Mass.) 97; 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 610; 102 Ind. 161. In Iowa, the term seems to be used in a wider sense than elsewhere prevails. 56 Iowa, 432; 78 Iowa, 492.

In a figurative sense, it signifies the bad use which a corrupt judge makes of the law, by making it subservient to his interest; as, the prostitution of the law, the prostitution of justice.

PROTECTIO TRAHIT SUBJECTIONEM, subjectio protectionem. Protection draws to it subjection; subjection, protection. Co. Litt. 65.

PROTECTION.

——In Mercantile Law. The name of a document generally given by notaries public to sailors and other persons going abroad, in which is certified that the bearer therein named is a citizen of the United States.

——In Governmental Law. That benefit or safety which the government affords to the citizens.

——In English Law. A privilege granted by the king to a party to an action, by which he is protected from a judgment which would otherwise be rendered against him. Of these protections there are several kinds. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 65.

PROTECTION OF INVENTIONS ACT. St. 33 & 34 Vict. c. 27. By this act it is provided that the exhibition of new inventions shall not prejudice patent rights, and that the exhibition of designs shall not prejudice the right to registration of such designs.

PROTECTION ORDER. In English probate practice. An order for the protection of the property of a deserted wife.

PROTECTIONIBUS, STATUTE DE. The English statute 33 Edw. I. st. 1, allowing a challenge to be entered against a protection, etc.

PROTECTOR OF SETTLEMENT. One who may be appointed by the settler of an estate tail, without whose consent the tenant in tail cannot bar the entail except as against his own issue.

PROTECTORATE. Government by a protector. The period of his rule. Specially so used with reference to the period of English history during which Oliver and Richard Cromwell held the title of "Lord Protector."

——In International Law. A relation assumed by a strong nation toward a weak one, whereby the former protects the latter from hostile invasion or dictation, and interferes more or less in its domestic concerns. Cent. Dict. Such, for example, is the supervision assumed jointly by the United States, Germany, and Great Britain over Samoa. See Davis, Int. Law, 247.

PROTEST.

——In Mercantile Law. A notarial act, made for want of payment of a promissory note, or for want of acceptance or payment of a bill of exchange by a notary public, in which it is declared that all parties to such instruments will be held responsible to the holder for all damages, exchanges, re-exchange, etc.

——In Legislation. A declaration made by one or more members of a legislative body that they do not agree with some act or resolution of the body. It is usual to add the reasons which the protestants have for such a dissent.

——In Maritime Law. A writing, attested by a justice of the peace, a notary public, or a consul, made and verified by the master of a vessel, stating the severity of a voyage by which a ship has suffered, and showing that it was not owing to the neglect or misconduct of the master. See Marsh. Ins. 715, 716; 1 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 145, 238, 408, note; 1 Pet. C. C. (U. S.) 119; 1 Dall. (Pa.) 6, 10, 317; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 195; 3 Watts & S. (Pa.) 144.

PROTESTANDO. See "Protestation."

PROTESTATION.

——In Pleading. The indirect affirmation or denial, by means of the word "protesting" (in the Latin form of pleadings, protestando), of the truth of some matter which cannot with propriety or safety be positively affirmed, denied, or entirely passed over. See 3 Bl. Comm. 311.

The exclusion of a conclusion. Co. Litt. 124.

Its object was to secure to the party making it the benefit of a positive affirmation or denial in case of success in the action, so far as to prevent the conclusion that the fact was admitted to be true as stated by the opposite party, and at the same time to avoid the objection of duplicity to which a direct affirmation or denial would expose the pleading. 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 96; 2 Saund. 103; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (N); Plowd. 276; Lawes, Pl. 171. Matter which is the ground of the suit upon which issue could be taken could not be protested. Plowd. 276; 3 Wils. 109; 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 227. But see 2 Wm. Saund. 103, note. Protestations are no longer allowed (3 Bl. Comm. 312), and were generally an unnecessary form (3 Lev. 125).

The common form of making protestations is as follows: "Because protesting that," etc., excluding such matters of the adversary's pleading as are intended to be excluded in the protestando, if it be matter of fact; or, if it be against the legal sufficiency of his pleading, "because protesting that the plea by him above pleaded in bar" (or by way of reply, or rejoinder, etc., as the case may be) "is wholly insufficient in law." See, generally, 1 Chit. Pl. 534; Archb. Civ. Pl. 245; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (N); Steph. Pl. 235.

——In Practice. An asseveration made by taking God to witness. A protestation is a form of asseveration which approaches very nearly to an oath. Wolff. Inst. § 375.

PROTHONOTARY. The title given to an officer who officiates as principal clerk of some courts. Viner, Abr. The office exists in Pennsylvania.

In the ecclesiastical law, the name of "prothonotary" is given to an officer of the court of Rome. He is so called because he is the first notary,—the Greek word protos, signifying primus, or first. These notaries have pre-eminence over the other notaries, and are put in the rank of prelates. There are twelve of them. Dalloz.

PROTOCOL. A record or register. Among the Romans, protocollum was a writing at the head of the first page of the paper used by the notaries or tabellions. Nov. 44.

In France, the minutes of notarial acts were formerly transcribed on registers, which were called "protocols." Toullier, Dr. Civ. liv. 3, tit. 3, c. 6, § 1, note 413.

By the German law it signifies the minutes of any transaction. Enc. Am. "Protocol." In the latter sense, the word has of late been received into international law. Id.

PROTOCOLLUM (Graeco-Lat.) In the civil law. A brief note or memorandum of a transaction made by a notary, for the purpose of being afterwards extended or written out in full (quod breviter et succincte notatur a tabellione, ut extendi deinde atque absolvi possit). Calv. Lex. A hasty note of a transaction, as it were prima collectio rerum, the first getting together of matters. Id.

Protocollum, among the Romans, seems to have originally signified a formal caption or heading of instruments drawn by tabelliones (notaries); or, more particularly, a writing at the head of the paper used by these officers, containing the name of the comes sacrarum largitionum (chief officer of the imperial treasury), and the time when the instrument was made. Nov. 44. It seems to have served the purpose of an official stamp. In the forty-fourth Novel, the tabelliones are forbidden to write their instruments upon any other paper than such as contained this protocollum at the head.

PROTOCOLO. In Spanish law. The original draft or writing of an instrument which remains in the possession of the escribano, or notary. White, New Recop. lib. 3, tit. 7, c. 5, § 2.

PROTUTOR (Lat.) In civil law. He who, not being the tutor of a pupil or minor, has administered his property or affairs as if he had been, whether he thought himself legally invested with the authority of a tutor or not.

He who marries a woman who is tutrix becomes, by the marriage, a protutor. The protutor is equally responsible as the tutor.

PROUT PATET PER RECORDUM (Lat.) As appears by the record. This phrase is frequently used in pleading; as, for example, in debt on a judgment or other matter of record, unless when it is stated as an inducement, it is requisite, after showing the matter of record, to refer to it by the prout patet per recordum. 1 Chit. Pl. *356; 10 Me. 127.

PROVE. To make proof of; to establish by evidence.

PROVER. In old English law. One who undertakes to prove a crime against another. 28 Edw. I.; 5 Hen. IV. One who, being indicted and arraigned for treason or felony, confesses before plea pleaded, and accuses his accomplices to obtain pardon; state's evidence. 4 Bl. Comm. 329, 330*. To prove. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict; Britt. c. 22.

PROVINCE. Sometimes this signifies the district into which a country has been divided; as, the province of Canterbury, in England; the province of Languedoc, in France. Sometimes it means a dependency or colony; as, the province of New Brunswick. It is sometimes used figuratively to signify power or authority; as, it is the province of the court to judge of the law, that of the jury to decide on the facts.

PROVINCIAL CONSTITUTIONS. The decrees of provincial synods held under divers archbishops of Canterbury, from Stephen Langton, in the reign of Henry III., to Henry Chichele, in the reign of Henry V., and adopted also by the province of York in the reign of Henry VI.

PROVING OF THE TENOR. In Scotch practice. An action for proving the tenor of a lost deed. Bell, Dict.

PROVISION.

——In Common Law. The property which a drawer of a bill of exchange places in the hands of a drawee; as, for example, by remittances, or when the drawee is indebted to the drawer when the bill becomes due, provision is said to have been made. Acceptance always presumes a provision. See Code de Comm. arts. 115-117.

——In French Law. An allowance granted by a judge to a party for his support,—which is to be paid before there is a definitive judgment. In a civil case, for example, it is an allowance made to a wife who is separated from her husband. Dalloz.

PROVISIONAL ASSIGNEES. Those who, under the old bankruptcy practice of England, were appointed to take charge of bankrupt estates until the creditors' assignees were appointed.

PROVISIONAL ORDER. In English law. Under various acts of parliament, certain public bodies and departments of the government are authorized to inquire into matters which, in the ordinary course, could only be dealt with by a private act of parliament, and to make orders for their regulation. These orders have no effect unless they are confirmed by an act of parliament, and are hence called "provisional orders." Several orders may be confirmed by one act. The object of this mode of proceeding is to save the trouble and expense of promoting a number of private bills.

PROVISIONAL REMEDY. A remedy adopted to meet a particular exigency. The term is ordinarily applied to process issued at the commencement or during the pendency of a suit to preserve some status until the rights of the parties are adjudicated. Preliminary injunction, attachment, arrest on mesne process, garnishment, etc., are provisional remedies.

PROVISIONAL SEIZURE.

——In Louisiana. A term which signifies nearly the same as attachment of property.

It is regulated by the Code of Practice as follows, namely: The plaintiff may, in certain cases, hereafter provided, obtain the provisional seizure of the property which he holds in pledge, or on which he has a privilege, in order to secure a payment of his claim. Code La. art. 284.

Provisional seizure may be ordered in the following cases: First, in executory proceedings, when the plaintiff sues on a title importing confession of judgment; second, when a lessor prays for the seizure of furniture or property used in the house, or attached to the real estate which he has leased; third, when a seaman, or other person, employed on board of a ship or water craft, navigating within the state, or person having furnished materials for or made repairs to such ship or water craft, prays that the same may be seized, and prevented from departing, until he has been paid the amount of his claim; fourth, when the proceedings are in rem, that is to say, against the thing itself which stands pledged for the debt, when the property is abandoned or in cases where the owner of the thing is unknown or absent. Code La. art. 285. See 6 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 168; 7 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 153; 8 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 320; 1 Mart. (La.) 168; 12 Mart. (La.) 32.

PROVISIONS OF OXFORD. Certain provisions made in the parliament of Oxford, 1258, for the purpose of securing the execution of the provisions of Magna Charta against the invasions thereof by Henry III. The government of the country was in effect committed by these provisions to a standing committee of twenty-four, whose chief merit consisted in their representative character, and their real desire to effect an improvement in the king's government. Brown.

PROVISO. The name of a clause inserted in an act of the legislature, a deed, a written agreement, or other instrument, which generally contains a condition that a certain thing shall or shall not be done, in order that an agreement contained in another clause shall take effect.

"This word hath divers operations. Sometimes it worketh a qualification or limitation, sometimes a condition, and sometimes a covenant." Co. Litt. 146b, 203b.

It always implies a condition, unless subsequent words change it to a covenant; but when a proviso contains the mutual words of the parties to a deed, it amounts to a covenant. 2 Coke, 72; Cro. Eliz. 242; Moore, 707.

A proviso differs from an exception. 1 Barn. & Ald. 99. An exception exempts, absolutely, from the operation of an engagement or an enactment; a proviso defeats their operation conditionally. An exception takes out of an engagement or enactment something which would otherwise be part of the subject matter of it; a proviso avoids them by way of defeasance or excuse. 8 Am. Jur. 242; Plowd. 361; Carth. 99; 1 Saund. 234a, note; Lilly, Reg., and the cases there cited. See, generally, Am. Jur. No. 16, art. 1; Bac. Abr. "Conditions" (A); Comyn, Dig. "Condition" (A 1), (A 2); Dwarr. St. 660.

PROVISO EST PROVIDERE PRAESENTIA ET FUTURA, NON PRAETERITA. A proviso is to provide for the present and the future, not the past. 2 Coke, 72; Vaughan, 279; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 275.

PROVISOR. He that hath the care of providing things necessary, but more especially one who sued to the court of Rome for a provision. Jacob; 25 Edw. III. One nominated by the pope to a benefice before it became void, in prejudice of right of true patron. 4 Bl. Comm. 111*.

PROVOCATION (Lat. provoco, to call out). The act of inciting another to do something. Such conduct as tends to arouse passions which may lead to the commission of an act.

Provocation is no defense for crime, but may mitigate the damages for an assault (3 E. D. Smith [N. Y.] 518), and if adequate to arouse in the mind of a reasonable man such passion as to cause him to act rashly and without reflection, it will reduce homicide from murder to manslaughter. See "Cool Blood."

PROVOST. A title given to the chief of some corporations or societies. In France, this title was formerly given to some presiding judges. The word is derived from the Latin praepositus.

PROVOST MARSHAL. A military officer appointed to arrest and secure deserters and other offenders, to prevent pillaging, indict offenders, and see to the passage and execution of sentence, and also to perform other certain duties pertaining to the police and discipline of the service. The provost marshal of the navy has charge of prisoners, etc. Webster.

PROXENETAE (Lat.) In the civil law. Among the Romans, these were persons whose functions somewhat resembled those of the brokers of modern commercial nations. Dig. 50. 14. 3; Domat, lib. 1, tit. 17, § 1, art. 1.

PROXIMATE CAUSE. That which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by a new cause, produced an event, and without which that event would not have occurred. Shear. & R. Neg. § 261.

PROXIMITY (Lat.) Kindred between two persons. Dig. 38. 16. 8.

PROXIMUS EST CUI NEMO ANTECEdit; supremus est quem nemo sequitur. He is next whom no one precedes; he is last whom no one follows. Dig. 50. 16. 92.

PROXY. A person appointed in the place of another, to represent him.

The instrument by which a person is appointed so to act. It is said to be a contraction of "procuracy."

——In Ecclesiastical Law. A judicial proctor, or one who is appointed to manage another man's law concerns, is called a "proxy." Ayliffe, Par.

An annual payment made by the parochial clergy to the bishop, etc., on visitations. Tomlins. See Rutherforth, Inst. 253; Hall, Prac. 14.

PRUDENTUR AGIT QUI PRAECEPTO legis obtemperat. He acts prudently who obeys the commands of the law. 5 Coke, 49.

PRYK. A kind of service of tenure. Blount says it signifies an old-fashioned spur, with one point only, which the tenant holding land by this tenure was to find for the king. Wharton.

PSYCHOLOGICAL FACT. In the law of evidence. A fact which can only be perceived mentally; such as the motive by which a person is actuated. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 130, 131.

PUBERTY. In civil law. The age in boys of fourteen, and in girls of twelve years. Ayliffe, Pand. 63; Hall, Prac. 14; Toullier, Dr. Civ. tom. 5, p. 100; Inst. 1. 22; Dig. 1. 7. 40. 1; Code, 5. 60. 3; 1 Bl. Comm. 436.

PUBLIC. The whole body politic, or all the citizens of the state. It is inapplicable to a municipal corporation or other political subdivision; the people are the public. 21 Mich. 335.

This term is sometimes joined to other terms, to designate those things which have a relation to the public; as, a public officer, a public road, a public passage, a public house.

A distinction has been made between the terms "public" and "general;" they are sometimes used as synonymous. The former term is applied strictly to that which concerns all the citizens and every member of the state; while the latter includes a lesser, though still a large, portion of the community. Greenl. Ev. § 128.

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATOR. One appointed to administer the estates of intestates where there is no person interested in them competent and willing to take the administration. He is generally a standing officer, or an officer of court acting ex officio, as the sheriff in Arkansas (23 Ark. 304), or the clerk of the superior court in Georgia (20 Ga. 775); but the term is also applied to an administrator appointed for the occasion in default of any application for administration.

PUBLIC AUCTION. This phrase is frequently used, but it is difficult to conceive of a private auction, so the word "public" seems to add nothing. See "Auction."

PUBLIC BRIDGE. One forming part of a public highway; one erected for common use or public convenience, as distinguished from one erected for the use and convenience of a private person.

Common use on special occasion will constitute a public bridge. 4 Campb. 189.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS. Buildings ordinarily used in or indispensable to the conduct of the public business. 41 Pa. St. 270.

PUBLIC CARRIER. A common carrier (q. v.)

PUBLIC CHARITY. Any charity whose objects are undefined; one for the benefit of an indefinite number of unselected persons. See "Charitable Uses."

PUBLIC COMPANY. A term used in the English law for open corporations. "What a 'public company' is has not been defined, but one test is whether the members have a right to transfer their shares." Buckl. 3; 12 Ch. Div. 655.

PUBLIC DEBT. That which is due or owing by the government.

PUBLIC DOMAIN. In its most general sense, all landed property owned by the public. In peculiar context it has been limited to unappropriated public lands. 68 Tex. 547.

PUBLIC EASEMENT. An easement, such as a public right of way, the enjoyment of which belongs to the public generally, and not to the owner of a particular dominant estate.

PUBLIC ENEMY. This word, used in the singular number, designates a nation at war with the United States, and includes every member of such nation. Vattel, bk. 3, c. 5, § 70.

To make a public enemy, the government of the foreign country must be at war with the United States; for a mob, how numerous soever it may be, or robbers, whoever they may be, are never considered as a public enemy. 2 Marsh. Ins. 508; 3 Esp. 131, 132.

A common carrier is exempt from responsibility whenever a loss has been occasioned to the goods in his charge by the act of a public enemy; but the burden of proof lies on him to show that the loss was so occasioned. 3 Munf. (Va.) 239; 4 Bin. (Pa.) 127; 2 Bailey (S. C.) 157. See "Common Carriers."

PUBLIC LAND. In its most general sense, all lands owned by the government. In the more limited sense in which it is ordinarily used, it signifies such lands as are subject to sale or other disposition by the government under general laws. 92 U. S. 761; 98 U. S. 118.

PUBLIC LAW. In one sense, international law. In another sense, a general law.

PUBLIC MINISTERS. A general term of the international law, which includes all diplomatic representatives, but excludes consuls.

PUBLIC NOTICE. Notice given to the public generally, as by advertisement or posting, and not to some particular individual.

PUBLIC NUISANCE. See "Nuisance."

PUBLIC OFFENSE. Includes all criminal offenses, including violations of municipal ordinances. 34 Minn. 1.

PUBLIC PASSAGE. A right to pass over a body of water. This term is synonymous with "public highway," with this difference: by the latter is understood a right to pass over the land of another; by the former is meant the right of going over the water which is on another's land. Carth. 193; Hammond, N. P. 195.

PUBLIC PEACE. "Public tranquillity; that quiet, order, and freedom from disturbance which is guarantied by the laws." The determination of what acts disturb the public peace rests in the sound discretion of the legislature. 6 Daly (N. Y.) 276, 280.

PUBLIC POLICY. The criterion by which the courts condemn contracts as opposed to the public will, or as tending to subvert the public welfare.

Thus, public policy invalidates contracts tending to immorality, as for the rental of a brothel (27 Mo. App. 649), or in consideration of future illicit cohabitation (58 Ala. 303; 57 Hun [N. Y.] 292); contracts facilitating divorce (89 Ill. 349; 25 Minn. 72); contracts in unreasonable restraint of trade (49 N. J. Eq. 217); combinations to restrict competition (90 Cal. 110; 68 N. Y. 558); contracts to unfairly influence an appointment or election to public office (8 Kan. 601; 23 Mo. App. 555); to unlawfully influence legislation (88 Mass. 152); to limit the jurisdiction of courts, as by agreeing not to sue in a particular court (94 U. S. 535); to compound a criminal offense (83 Ill. 418); to restrict competition at a public sale, as by agreeing not to bid thereat (47 Ga. 479). And the agreement need only tend to illegality. Thus, an agreement for witness' fees contingent on the success of the party for whom the witness is to testify (10 Ala. 206), or for a fee to a private prosecutor contingent on a conviction (62 Ky. 207), or by an attorney to defend against offenses to be committed in the future (41 Kan. 364), are void as against public policy.

PUBLIC RECORD. A record maintained by public authorities, or open to the inspection of the public.

PUBLIC RIVER. A navigable river. See "Navigable."

PUBLIC SALE. A sale conducted on notice to the public, at which the public is invited to attend and purchase.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS. Schools maintained at the public expense by taxation.

PUBLIC SEAL. The official seal of a public officer. See "Seals."

PUBLIC STOCKS. Public obligations or securities.

PUBLIC TRIAL. A trial which, under reasonable limitations, the public are freely admitted to attend. The attendance may be limited to the reasonable seating capacity of the courtroom (92 Mo. 542), and persons whose attendance as a class would probably tend to disorder may be excluded (Fed. Cas. No. 14,680), but the exclusion of all persons except officers of the court is a violation of the right to a public trial (103 Cal. 242), as is an order to an officer to admit only "respectable persons," where it appears that proper persons were excluded (89 Mich. 276).

"The requirement of a public trial is for the benefit of the accused, that the public may see he is fairly dealt with, and not unjustly condemned, and that the presence of interested spectators may keep his triers keenly alive to a sense of their responsibility and to the importance of their functions; and the requirement is fairly observed if, without partiality or favoritism, a reasonable proportion of the public is suffered to attend, notwithstanding that those persons whose presence could be of no service to the accused, and who would only be drawn thither by a prurient curiosity, are excluded altogether." Cooley, Const. Lim. *312.

PUBLIC USE. The nature of the "public use" for which private property may be taken is "flexible" (43 N. J. Law, 384), "dependent somewhat on the situation and wants of the community for the time being" (1 N. J. Eq. 694), and not reducible to any set of rules or principles of certain and uniform application (7 W. Va. 195). It has been limited to use by the public themselves (21 W. Va. 534), and, on the other hand, extended to any use for the public utility or advantage (16 Gray [Mass.] 417). The use may be by a private person for the public benefit (17 N. H. 57), and it is immaterial that such person may derive private profit therefrom (39 N. Y. 171).

The establishment of public highways is an undisputed public use (103 Mass. 120), as is the establishment of a railway line (23 Wall. [U. S.] 108; 9 N. Y. 100), and its various facilities, as depots (111 Mass. 125), but spur tracks for private advantage have been held not to be (40 Ohio St. 504; 48 Fed. 615). Canals (39 N. Y. 171), public wharves (110 N. Y. 569), drains necessary to preserve the public health (72 N. Y. 1), irrigation (4 Colo. 100), public cemeteries (66 N. Y. 569), public grain elevators (68 N. Y. 208), have been held to be public purposes.

PUBLIC VERDICT. A verdict delivered by the jury in open court, as distinguished from a privy verdict sealed and delivered by the jury when court is not in session.

PUBLIC WAR. See "War."

PUBLIC WAYS. Highways (q. v.)

PUBLIC WORSHIP. "May mean the worship of God, conducted and observed under public authority; or it may mean worship in an open or public place, without privacy or concealment; or it may mean the performance of religious exercises, under a provision for an equal right in the whole public to participate in its benefits; or it may be used in contradistinction to worship in the family or the closet. In this country, what is called 'public worship' is commonly conducted by voluntary societies, constituted according to their own notions of ecclesiastical authority and ritual propriety, opening their places of worship, and admitting to their religious services such persons, and upon such terms, and subject to such regulations, as they may choose to designate and establish. A church absolutely belonging to the public, and in which all persons without restriction have equal rights, such as the public enjoy in highways or public landings, is certainly a very rare institution, if such a thing can be found." 14 Gray (Mass.) 586, 602.

PUBLIC WRONGS. A public wrong, otherwise termed a "crime," is a breach and violation of the public rights and duties due to the whole community, considered as a community in its social aggregate capacity. 4 Bl. Comm. 5.

Thus, an entry on the land of another without committing a breach of the peace is a mere trespass (8 Grat. [Va.] 708; 5 Denio [N. Y.] 277), but an entry upon the land of another in such manner as to cause a breach of the public peace is a public wrong, criminally punishable (8 Grat. [Va.] 708). See 1 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 4.

PUBLICAN. In civil law. A farmer of the public revenue; one who held a lease of some property from the public treasury. Dig. 39. 4. 1. 1; Id. 39. 4. 12. 3; Id. 39. 4. 13.

PUBLICANUS (Lat.) In the Roman law. A farmer of the customs; a publican (qui publico fructur). Dig. 39. 4. 1; Id. 50. 16. 16; Calv. Lex.

PUBLICATION. The act by which a thing is made public.

Printing without circulation is not publication (5 Fed. 729), and circulation in manuscript is publication (3 Fed. 486). See, also, "Literary Property."

It differs from "promulgation" (q. v.) And see, also, Toullier, Dr. Civ. tit. "Preliminaire," note 59, for the difference in the meaning of these two words.

Publication has different meanings. When applied to a law, it signifies the rendering public the existence of the law; when it relates to the opening of the depositions taken in a case in chancery, it means that liberty is given to the officer in whose custody the depositions of witnesses in a cause are lodged, either by consent of parties, or by the rules or orders of the court, to show the depositions openly, and to give out copies of them. Prac. Reg. 297; Blake, Ch. Prac. 143. When spoken of a will, it signifies that the testator has done some act from which it can be concluded that he intended the instrument to operate as his will. Cruise, Dig. tit. 38, c. 5, § 47; 3 Atk. 161; 4 Me. 220; 3 Rawle (Pa.) 15; Comyn, Dig. "Estates by Devise" (E 2), "Chancery" (Q).

——In the Law of Libel and Slander. The communication of the defamatory words to some third person.

The sending of a letter to the person defamed is not publication. 68 Iowa, 726. Nor is the speaking of slanderous words where no third person could hear them. 13 Gray (Mass.) 304.

PUBLICI JURIS (Lat.) Of public right.

As applied to a thing or right means that it is open to or exercisable by all persons.

When a thing is common property, so that any one can make use of it who likes, it is said to be "publici juris;" as in the case of light, air, and public water.

PUBLICIANA (Lat.) In civil law. The name of an action introduced by the praetor Publicius, the object of which was to recover a thing which had been lost. Inst. 4. 6. 4; Dig. 6. 2. 1. 16. 17. Its effects were similar to those of our action of trover.

PUBLICUM JUS (Lat.) In the civil law. Public law; that law which regards the state of the commonwealth (quod ad statum rei Romanae spectat). Inst. 1. 1. 4.

PUBLISHER. One who, by himself or his agent, makes a thing publicly known; one engaged in the circulation of books, pamphlets, and other papers.

PUDICITY. Chastity; the abstaining from all unlawful carnal commerce or connection. A married woman or a widow may defend her pudicity as a maid may her virginity. See "Chastity;" "Rape."

PUDZELD. In old English law. To be free from the payment of money for taking of wood in any forest. Co. Litt. 233a. The same as "woodgeld."

PUEBLO. In Spanish law. People; all the inhabitants of any country or place, without distinction. A town, township, or municipality. Las Partidas, pt. 1, tit. 2, l. 5; White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 1, c. 6, § 4; Schmidt, Civ. Law, 44, 185.

PUER (Lat.) A boy; a child. In its enlarged sense, this word signifies a child of either sex, though in its restrained meaning it is applied to a boy only.

A case once arose which turned upon this question, whether a daughter could take lands under the description of puer; and it was decided by two judges against one that she was entitled. Dyer, 337b. In another case, it was ruled the other way. Hob. 33.

PUERI SUNT DE SANGUINE PARENtum, sed pater et mater non sunt de sanguine puerorum. Children are of the blood of their parents, but the father and mother are not of the blood of their children. 3 Coke, 40.

PUERILITY. In civil law. A condition which commenced at the age of seven years, the end of the age of infancy, and lasted till the age of puberty,—that is, in females till the accomplishment of twelve years, and in males till the age of fourteen years fully accomplished. Ayliffe, Pand. 63.

The ancient Roman lawyers divided puerility into proximus infantiae, as it approached infancy, and into proximus pubertati, as it became nearer to puberty. 6 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 100.

PUERITIA (Lat.) In civil law. Age from seven to fourteen. 4 Bl. Comm. 22; Wharton. The age from birth to fourteen years in the male, or twelve in the female. Calv. Lex. The age from birth to seventeen. Vicat.

PUFFER. A person employed by the owner of property which is sold at auction to bid it up, who does so accordingly, for the purpose of raising the price upon bona fide bidders.

This is a fraud, which, at the choice of the purchaser, invalidates the sale. 3 Madd. 112; 5 Madd. 37, 440; 12 Ves. 483; 1 Fonbl. Eq. 227, note; 2 Kent, Comm. 423; Cowp. 395; 3 Ves. 628; 3 Term R. 93; 6 Term R. 642; 2 Brown, Ch. 326; 1 P. A. Browne (Pa.) 346; 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 89; 2 Hayw. (N. C.) 328; 4 Har. & McH. (Md.) 282; 2 Dev. (N. C.) 126; 2 Const. (S. C.) 821. See "Auction;" "Bidder."

PUIS, PUYS, PUES, PUS, or PUZ (Law Fr.) After; since; afterwards. Kelham.

PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE (Law. Fr. since last continuance). In pleading. A plea which is put in after issue joined, for the purpose of introducing new matter, or matter which has come to the knowledge of the party pleading it subsequently to such joinder. See "Plea."

PUISNE (Law Fr.) Younger; junior; associate.

PULSARE (Lat.) In the civil law. To beat, without giving pain.

To accuse or charge; to proceed against at law. Calv. Lex.

PULSATOR. In the civil law. A name sometimes applied to the actor.

PUNCTUM (Lat.) A point; an indivisible point of time. See "Punctum Temporis."

A quarter of an hour, according to the old computation. Ten moments (momenta) made a point (punctum), and four points an hour. See "Momentum."

PUNCTUM TEMPORIS (Lat.) A point of time; an indivisible period of time; the shortest space of time; an instant. Calv. Lex.

A point or period from which a computation of time is made. 2 Alis. Crim. Prac. 188.

PUNDBRECH. In old English law. Pound breach (q. v.)

PUNISHMENT. In criminal law. Some pain or penalty warranted by law, inflicted on a person for the commission of a crime or misdemeanor, or for the omission of the performance of an act required by law, by the judgment and command of some lawful court.

Punishments are either corporal or not corporal.

The former are: Death, which is usually denominated "capital punishment;" imprisonment, which is either with or without labor (see "Penitentiary"); whipping, in some states; and banishment.

The punishments which are not corporal are: Fines; forfeitures; suspension or deprivation of some political or civil right; deprivation of office, and being rendered incapable to hold office; compulsion to remove nuisances.

PUNITIVE DAMAGES. Exemplary damages.

PUPIL.

——In Civil Law. One who is in his or her minority. See Dig. 1. 7.; Id. 26. 7. 1. 2; Id. 50. 16. 239; Code, 6. 30. 18. One who is in ward or guardianship.

——At Common Law. One who is under tuition in any school, or under a private instructor.

PUPILLARIS SUBSTITUTIO (Lat.) In civil law. The nomination of another besides his son pupil to succeed, if the son should not be able or inclined to accept the inheritance, or should die before he came of age to make a testament.

If the child survive the age of puberty, though he made no testament, the substitute had no right of succession. See Bell, Dict. "Substitution;" Dig. 28. 6.

PUPILLARITY. In civil law. That age of a person's life which included infancy and puerility.

PUPILLUS PATI POSSE NON INTELLIgitur. A pupil is not considered able to do an act which would be prejudicial to him. Dig. 50. 17. 110. 2; 2 Kent, Comm. 245.

PUR. A corruption of the French word par, by or for. It is frequently used in old French law phrases, as, pur autre vie. It is also used in the composition of words, as, purparty, purlieu, purview.

PUR AUTRE VIE (Old Fr. for another's life). An estate is said to be pur autre vie when a lease is made of lands or tenements to a man to hold for the life of another person. 2 Bl. Comm. 259; 10 Viner, Abr. 296; 2 Belt, Supp. Ves. 41.

PUR TANT QUE (Law Fr.) Forasmuch as; because; to the intent that. Kelham.

PURCHASE. In the broadest sense, the transmission of property from one person to another, by their voluntary agreement on a valuable consideration. 4 Kent, Comm. 509.

In a stricter sense, a term including every mode of acquisition of estate known to the law, except that by which an heir on the death of his ancestor becomes substituted in his place as owner by operation of law. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 401.

There are six ways of acquiring a title by purchase, namely: By deed; by devise; by execution; by prescription; by possession or occupancy; by escheat. In its more limited sense, "purchase" is applied only to such acquisitions of lands as are obtained by way of bargain and sale for money or some other valuable consideration. Cruise, Dig. tit. 30, §§ 1-4; 1 Dall. (Pa.) 20. In common parlance, purchase signifies the buying of real estate and of goods and chattels.

PURCHASE MONEY. The consideration in money which is agreed to be paid by a purchaser.

PURCHASE MONEY MORTGAGE. A mortgage given on the purchase of land by the purchaser to the vendor to secure the payment of the purchase money, or the unpaid balance thereof.

PURCHASE, WORDS OF. Those by which, taken absolutely, without reference to or connection with any other words, an estate first attaches, or is considered as commencing in point of title, in the person described by them, such as the words "son," "daughter." Words which create a title in certain persons, as distinguished from those which merely limit or define the quantum of estate. See "Shelley's Case, Rule in."

PURCHASER. A buyer; a vendee. The term is applied indifferently to persons acquiring, by purchase, either realty or personalty, but in the interest of exact nomenclature it should be applied only with respect to the sale of realty; "buyer" being the appropriate term for one who obtains personalty by sale.

PURCHASER OF A NOTE OR BILL. The person who buys a promissory note or bill of exchange from the holder without his indorsement. Bayley, Bills, 370.

PURE DEBT. In Scotch law. A debt actually due, in contradistinction to one which is to become due at a future day certain, which is called a "future debt," and one due provisionally, in a certain event, which is called a "contingent debt." 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 315.

PURE OBLIGATION. One which is not suspended by any condition, whether it has been contracted without any condition, or, when thus contracted, the condition has been performed. Poth. Obl. note 176.

PURE PLEA. In equity pleading. One which relies wholly on some matter dehors the bill; as, for example, a plea of a release on a settled account.

Pleas not pure are so called in contradistinction to pure pleas. They are sometimes also denominated "negative pleas." 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4275.

PURE VILLENAGE. A base tenure, where a man holds upon terms of doing whatsoever is commanded of him, nor knows in the evening what is to be done in the morning, and is always bound to an uncertain service. 1 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 188.

PURGATION (Lat. purgo; from purum and ago, to make clean). The clearing one's self of an offense charged, by denying the guilt on oath or affirmation.

Canonical purgation was the act of justifying one's self, when accused of some offense, in the presence of a number of persons worthy of credit, generally twelve, who would swear they believed the accused. See "Compurgator."

Vulgar purgation consisted in superstitious trials by hot and cold water, by fire, by hot irons, by battle, by corsned, etc.

In modern times, a man may purge himself of an offense in some cases where the facts are within his own knowledge; for example, when a man is charged with a contempt of court, he may purge himself of such contempt by swearing that in doing the act charged he did not intend to commit a contempt.

PURGED OF PARTIAL COUNSEL. In Scotland, every witness, before making oath or affirmation, is "purged of partial counsel," i. e., cleared by examination on oath of having instigated the plea, of having been present with the party for whom he testifies at consultations of lawyers, where it might be shown what was necessary to be proved, or of having acted as his agent in any of the proceedings. So, in a criminal case, he who is agent of prosecutor, or who tampers with the panel, cannot be heard to testify, because of "partial counsel." Stair, Inst. p. 768, § 9; Bell, Dict. "Partial Counsel."

PURGING A TORT. This is like the ratification of a wrongful act by a person who has power of himself to lawfully do the act; but, unlike ratification, the purging of the tort may take place even after commencement of the action. 1 Brod. & B. 282.

PURGING CONTEMPT. See "Purgation."

PURLIEU. In English law. A space of land near a forest, known by certain boundaries, which was formerly part of a forest, but which has been separated from it.

The history of purlieus is this: Henry II., on taking possession of the throne, manifested so great a taste for forests that he enlarged the old ones wherever he could, and by this means enclosed many estates which had no outlet to the public roads; and things increased in this way until the reign of King John, when the public reclamations were so great that much of this land was disforested,—that is, no longer had the privileges of the forests; and the land thus separated bore the name of "purlieu."

PURLIEU MEN. Those who have ground within the purlieu to the yearly value of 40s. a year freehold are licensed to hunt in their own purlieus. Manw. For. Law, c. 20, § 8.

PURPARTY. That part of an estate which, having been held in common by parceners, is by partition allotted to any of them. To make purparty is to divide and sever the lands which fall to parceners. Old Nat. Brev. 11.

PURPORT. In pleading. The substance of a writing as it appears on the face of it to the eye that reads it. It differs from tenor (q. v.) 2 Russ. Crimes, 365; 1 East, 179.

PURPRESTURE. An inclosure by a private individual of a part of a common or public domain.

According to Lord Coke, purpresture is a close or inclosure, that is, when one encroaches or makes several to himself that which ought to be in common to many; as, if an individual were to build between high and low water mark on the side of a public river. In England this is a nuisance, and in cases of this kind an injunction will be granted, on ex parte affidavits, to restrain such a purpresture and nuisance. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2382; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3798; 2 Inst. 28. And see Skene de Verb. Sign.; Glanv. lib. 9, c. 11. p. 239, note; Spelman; Hale de Port Mar.; Harg. Tr. 84; 2 Anstr. 606; Callis, Sew. 174.

PURPRISUM (Law Lat.; from Law Fr. pourpris, an inclosure). In old records. A close or inclosure. Cowell.

The whole compass of a manor. Cowell.

PURQ' (Law Fr. wherefore). A word used in old practice, at the end of pleas, arguments, and judgments. Very common in the Year Books. Purq', pur defaut de r'ns, no' d'dons judgt, et prions nos dam', wherefore, for want of an answer, we demand judgment and pray our damages. The clause is sometimes abbreviated, purq', etc.

PURSER. The person appointed by the master of a ship or vessel, whose duty it is to take care of the ship's books, in which everything on board is inserted, as well the names of mariners as the articles of merchandise shipped. Roccius, Ins. note.

PURSUE (from Lat. persequi). To follow a matter judicially, as a complaining party. In Scotch law, to prosecute criminally. 3 How. St. Tr. 425.

PURSUER. The name by which the complainant or plaintiff is known in the ecclesiastical courts. 3 Ecc. 350.

PURUS (Lat.) In old English law. Pure; clear; simple; free of any qualification or condition. Donationum quaedam libera et pura, et quaedam sub conditione vel sub modo, of gifts, one kind is free and pure, and another under a condition or qualification. Bracton, fol. 11b.

Absolute. Purus idiota, a clear or absolute idiot. 1 Bl. Comm. 303.

PURVEYANCE (Law Fr. and Eng.; from pourvoire, to provide). In old English law. A providing of necessaries for the king's house. Cowell. A buying at the king's price. Hale, Anal. § viii. See "Pourveyance."

PURVEYOR. One employed in procuring provisions. See Code, 1. 34.

PURVIEW. That part of an act of the legislature which begins with the words, "Be it enacted," etc., and ends before the repealing clause. Cooke (Tenn.) 330; 3 Bibb (Ky.) 181. According to Cowell, this word also signifies a conditional gift or grant. It is said to be derived from the French pourvu, provided. It always implies a condition.

PUT.

——In Pleading. To select; to demand;

as, "the said C. D. puts himself upon the country;" that is, he selects the trial by jury as the mode of settling the matter in dispute, and does not rely upon an issue in law. Gould, Pl. c. 6, pt. 1, § 19.

——In Mercantile Usage. A term of the stock markets, signifying an option to sell to another certain goods within a specified time, at a specified price. See "Gambling Contract."

PUT IN SUIT. Applied to a chose in action, to sue on.

PUT IN URE. In old statutes. To put in practice or effect; to carry into effect. Sometimes written to "put in use."

PUT OUT. To open. To put out lights; to open or cut windows. 11 East, 372.

PUT UPON (Law Lat. ponere super). In practice. To rest upon; to submit to; as a defendant "puts himself upon the country."

PUTATIVE. Reputed to be that which is not. The word is frequently used; as, putative father, putative marriage, putative wife, and the like. And Toullier (Dr. Civ. tom. 7, note 29) uses the words putative owner, proprietaire putatif. Lord Kames uses the same expression (Eq. 391).

PUTATIVE FATHER. The reputed father. This term is most usually applied to the father of a bastard child.

PUTATIVE MARRIAGE. In the civil law. A marriage which is forbidden, but which has been contracted in good faith and ignorance of the impediment on the part of at least one of the contracting parties.

PUTTING IN FEAR. The causing of such reasonable apprehension of death or serious injury as will excuse the person so threatened from running the risk of incurring the same by resistance to unlawful aggression. In the crime of robbery, such putting in fear is accounted constructive violence. The fear inspired to compel a man to surrender his property may be of injury to his person (2 East, P. C. 712), or to his property (Id. 729). Fear of injury to character or reputation is not sufficient (7 Humph. [Tenn.] 45, 12 Ga. 293), with the single exception of a threat to accuse of an unnatural crime (1 Car. & P. 479).

PUTURE. A custom claimed by keepers in forests, and sometimes by bailiffs of hundreds, to take man's meat, horse's meat, and dog's meat of the tenants and inhabitants within the perambulation of the forest, hundred, etc. The land subject to this custom was called "terra putura." Others, who call it "pulture," explain it as a demand in general, and derive it from the monks, who, before they were admitted, pulsabant, knocked at the gates for several days together. 4 Inst. 307; Cowell.

PYKERIE (Scotch). In old Scotch law. Petty theft. 2 Pitc. Crim. Tr. 43.

PYRAMIDING. See "Gambling Contract."

Q

Q. C. An abbreviation of "queen's counsel" (q. v.)

Q. C. F. An abbreviation of quare clausum fregit. See "Trespass."

Q. V. Quod vide, which see. Used after the mention of a title, chapter, etc., to refer the reader thereto.

QAR (Law Fr.) For. Fet Assaver, § 45.

Q'D. A contraction of quod, in old pleading. 1 Inst. Cler. 12.

QUA. As; in the character or capacity of. "The judge qua judge cannot know." Vaughan, 147.

QUACK. One who, without sufficient knowledge, study, or previous preparation, undertakes to practise medicine or surgery, under the pretense that he possesses secrets in those arts.

The origin of the word "quack" is not clearly ascertained. Johnson derives it from the words "to quack," or gabble like a goose. Butler uses this verb as descriptive of the encomiums empirics heap upon their nostrums. Thus, in Hudibras, "To quack of universal cures."

The Egyptian hieroglyphic for a doctor was a duck, and it has been a question whether this may not form a clue to the derivation of the word "quack." The English quack—or "quacksalber," as it was originally written—is from the German quacksalber, or rather the Dutch kwaksalver, which Bilderdyk states should be more properly kwabsalver, from kwab, a wen, and zalver, to salve or anoint. 5 Notes & Queries.

QUACUNQUE VIA DATA (Lat.) Whichever way you take it; in whichever view of the case. 2 Burrows, 980; 2 Gall. (U. S.) 26.

QUADRAGESIMA (Lat.) The fortieth. The first Sunday in Lent is so called because it is about the fortieth day before Easter. Cowell.

QUADRAGESMS. The third volume of the Year Books of the reign of Edward III. So called, because beginning with the fortieth year of the reign. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 327; Hale, Hist. Com. Law, c. 8.

QUADRANS (Lat.)

——In Civil Law. The fourth part of the whole. Hence the heir ex quadrante; that is to say, of the fourth part of the whole.

——In Old English Law. A farthing; a fourth part or quarter of a penny.

Before the reign of Edward I. the smallest coin was a sterling or silver penny marked with a cross or traverse strokes, by the guidance of which a penny, upon occasion, might be cut in halves for a half penny, or into quarters for farthings or fourth parts, till, to avoid the fraud of unequally cutting, King Edward I., A. D. 1279, coined half pence and farthings in round distinct pieces. Cowell; Spelman, voc. "Denarius," citing Stow, p. 306, where some curious old verses are given.

QUADRANT. In angular measures, a quadrant is equal to ninety degrees. See "Measure."

QUADRANTALIS (Law Lat.; from quadrans, q. v.) In old English law. Of the value or price of a quarter or farthing. Panis quadrantalis, the farthing loaf. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 9. Britton, in the parallel passage, has the word ferlinges. Britt. c. 30. But the word is not taken notice of either by Spelman or Cowell.

QUADRANTATA TERRAE (Law Lat.) The fourth part of an acre, according to Cowell. But Spelman makes it to be the fourth part of a yard land. Spelman voc. "Fardella."

QUADRARIUM (Law Lat.) In old records. A quarry or stone pit. Par. Ant. 208; Cowell.

QUADRIENNIUM (Lat. from quatuor, four, and annus, year). The four years' course of studying the civil law, before arriving at the code or imperial constitutions. Inst. proem; Tayl. Civ. Law, 39.

QUADRIENNIUM UTILE (Lat.) In Scotch law. The four years of a minor between his age of twenty-one and twenty-five years are so called. During this period he is permitted to impeach contracts made against his interest previous to his arriving at the age of twenty-one years. Ersk. Inst. 1. 7. 19. 35; 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 135.

QUADRIPARTITE (Lat.) Having four parts, or divided into four parts; as, this indenture quadripartite, made between A. B., of the one part, C. D., of the second part, E. F., of the third part, and G. H., of the fourth part.

QUADROON. A person who is descended from a white person and another person who has an equal mixture of the European and African blood. 2 Bailey (S. C.) 558. See "Mulatto."

QUADRUPLICATION. In pleading. Formerly this word was used instead of "surrebutter." 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 469, note.

QUAE AB HOSTIBUS CAPIUNTUR, STATIM capientiunt fiunt. Things taken from public enemies immediately become the property of the captors. Inst. 2. 1. 17; Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 3, c. 6, § 12.

QUAE AB INITIO INUTILIS FUIT INSTITUTIO, EX POST FACTO CONVALESCERE NON POTEST. An institution void in the beginning cannot acquire validity from after-matter. Dig. 50. 17. 210.

QUAE AB INITIO NON VALENT, EX POST FACTO CONVALESCERE NON POSSUNT. Things invalid from the beginning cannot be made valid by subsequent act. Tray. Lat. Max. 482.

QUAE ACCESSIORIUM LOCUM OBTINENT, EXTINGUUNTUR CUM PRINCIPALES RES PEREMPTAE FUERINT. When the principal is destroyed, those things which are accessory to it are also destroyed. Poth. Obl. pt. 3, c. 6, art. 4; Dig. 33, 8. 2; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 439.

QUAE AD UNUM FINEM LOQUUTA SUNT, NON DEBENT AD ALIUM DETORQUERI. Words spoken to one end ought not to be perverted to another. 4 Coke, 14.

QUAE COHAERENT PERSONAE A PERSONA SEPARARI NEQUEUNT. Things which belong to the person ought not to be separated from the person. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 28.

QUAE COMMUNI LEGI DEROGANT STRICTE INTERPRETANTUR. Laws which derogate from the common law ought to be strictly construed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 221.

QUAE CONTRA RATIONEM JURIS INTRODUCTA SUNT, NON DEBENT TRAHI IN CONSEQUENTIAM. Things introduced contrary to the reason of the law ought not to be drawn into precedents. 12 Coke, 75.

QUAE DUBITATIONIS CAUSA TOLLENDAE INSERUNTUR COMMUNEM LEGEM NON LAEDUNT. Whatever is inserted for the purpose of removing doubt does not hurt or affect the common law. Co. Litt. 205.

QUAE DUBITATIONIS TOLLENDAE CAUSA CONTRACTIBUS INSERUNTUR, JUS COMMUNE NON LAEDUNT. Particular clauses inserted in agreements to avoid doubts and ambiguity do not prejudice the common law. Dig. 50. 17. 81.

QUAE EST EADEM (Lat. which is the same). In pleading. A clause containing a statement that the trespass, or other fact mentioned in the plea, is the same as that laid in the declaration, where from the circumstances there is an apparent difference between the two. 1 Chit. Pl. 473; Gould, Pl. c. 3, §§ 79, 80; 29 Vt. 455.

The form is as follows: "Which are the same assaulting, beating, and ill-treating, the said John, in the said declaration mentioned, and whereof the said John hath above thereof complained against the said James." See 1 Saund. 14, 208, note 2; 2 Saund. 5a, note 3; Archb. Civ. Pl. 217; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (E 31); Cro. Jac. 372; 1 Chit. Pl. 473.

QUAE IN CURIA ACTA SUNT RITE AGI PRAESUMUNTUR. Whatever is done in court is presumed to be rightly done. 3 Bulst. 43.

QUAE IN PARTES DIVIDI NEQUEUNT SOLIDA, A SINGULIS PRAESTANTUR. Things (i. e., services and rents) which cannot be divided into parts are rendered entire by each severally. 6 Coke, 1.

QUAE IN TESTAMENTO ITA SUNT SCRIPTA UT INTELLIGI NON POSSUNT, PERINDE SUNT AC SI SCRIPTA NON ESSENT. Things which are so written in a will that they cannot be understood are as if they had not been written. Dig. 50. 17. 73. 3.

QUAE INCONTINENTER VEL CERTO FIUNT IN ESSE VIDENTUR. Whatever things are done at once and certainly appear part of the same transaction. Co. Litt. 236.

QUAE INTER ALIOS ACTA SUNT NEMINI NOCERE DEBENT, SED PRODESSE POSSUNT. Transactions between strangers may benefit, but cannot injure, persons who are parties to them. 6 Coke, 1.

QUAE LEGI COMMUNI DEROGANT NON SUNT TRAHENDA IN EXEMPLUM. Things derogatory to the common law are not to be drawn into precedent. Branch, Princ.

QUAE LEGI COMMUNI DEROGANT STRICTE INTERPRETANTUR. Those things which derogate from the common law are to be construed strictly. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 29.

QUAE MALA SUNT INCHOATA IN PRINCIPIO VIX BONO PERAGANTUR EXITU. Things bad in the commencement seldom end well. 4 Coke, 2.

QUAE NIHIL FRUSTRA (Law Lat.) Which (does or requires) nothing in vain; which requires nothing to be done, that is to no purpose. 2 Kent, Comm. 53.

QUAE NON FIERI DEBENT, FACTA VALENT. Things which ought not to be done are held valid when they have been done. Tray. Lat. Max. 484.

QUAE NON VALEANT SINGULA, JUNCTA JUVANT. Things which may not avail singly, when united have an effect. 3 Bulst. 132.

QUAE PLURA (Law Lat. what more). In old English practice. A writ which lay where an inquisition had been made by an escheator in any county of such lands or tenements as any man died seised of, and all that was in his possession was imagined not to be found by the office; the writ commanding the escheator to inquire what more (quae plura) lands and tenements the party held on the day when he died, etc. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 255a; Reg. Orig. 293; Cowell.

QUAE PRAETER CONSUETUDINEM ET MOREM MAJORUM FIUNT, NEQUE PLACENT, NEQUE RECTA VIDENTUR. What is done contrary to the custom and usage of our ancestors, neither pleases nor appears right. 4 Coke, 78.

QUAE PROPTER NECESSITATEM RECEPTA SUNT, NON DEBENT IN ARGUMENTUM TRAHI. Things which are tolerated on account of necessity ought not to be drawn into precedent. Dig. 50. 17. 162.

QUAE RERUM NATURA PROHIBENTUR, NULLA LEGE CONFIRMATA SUNT. What is prohibited in the nature of things can be confirmed by no law. Finch, Law, 74.

QUAE SINGULA NON PROSUNT, JUNCTA JUVANT. Things which, taken singly, are of no avail, afford help when taken together. Tray. Lat. Max. 486.

QUAE SUNT MINORIS CULPAE SUNT MAJORIS INFAMIAE. Things which are of the smaller guilt are of the greater infamy. Co. Litt. 6.

QUAECUNQUE INTRA RATIONEM LEGIS INVENIUNTUR, INTRA LEGEM IPSAM ESSE JUDICANTUR. Whatever appears within the reason of the law is considered within the law itself. 2 Inst. 689.

QUAELIBET CONCESSIO DOMINI REGIS CAPI DEBET STRICTE CONTRA DOMINUM REGEM, QUANDO POTEST INTELLIGI DUABUS VIIS. Every grant of our lord the king ought to be taken strictly against our lord the king, when it can be understood in two ways. 3 Leon. 243.

QUAELIBET CONCESSIO FORTISSIME CONTRA DONATOREM INTERPRETANDA EST. Every grant is to be taken most strongly against the grantor. Co. Litt. 183a.

QUAELIBET JURISDICTIO CANCELLOS SUOS HABET. Every jurisdiction has its bounds. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 139.

QUAELIBET PARDONATIO DEBET CAPI SECUNDUM INTENTIONEM REGIS, ET NON AD DECEPTIONEM REGIS. Every pardon ought to be taken according to the intention of the king, and not to the deception of the king. 3 Bulst. 14.

QUAELIBET POENA CORPORALIS, QUAMVIS MINIMA, MAJOR EST QUALIBET POENA PECUNIARIA. Every corporal punishment, although the very least, is greater than any pecuniary punishment. 3 Inst. 220.

QUAERAS DE DUBIIS, LEGEM BENE DISCERE SI VIS. Inquire into doubtful points if you wish to understand the law well. Litt. § 443.

QUAERE (Lat.) In practice. A word frequently used to denote that an inquiry ought to be made of a doubtful thing. 2 Lilly, Abr. 406.

QUAERENS. In old practice. A plaintiff; the plaintiff.

QUAERENS NON INVENIT PLEGIUM (Lat.) In practice. The plaintiff has not found pledge. The return made by the sheriff to a writ directed to him with this clause, namely, Si A facerit B securum de clamore suo prosequando, when the plaintiff has neglected to find sufficient security. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 38.

QUAERERE DAT SAPERE QUAE SUNT LEGITIMA VERE. To investigate is the way to know what things are really lawful. Litt. § 443.

QUAERE DE DUBIIS, QUIA PER RATIONES PERVENITUR AD LEGITIMAM RATIONEM. Inquire into doubtful points, because by reasoning we arrive at legal reason. Litt. § 377.

QUAESTIO (Lat.) In Roman law. A sort of commission (ad quaerendum) to inquire into some criminal matter given to a magistrate or citizen, who was called quaestior or quaestor, who made report thereon to the senate or the people, as the one or the other appointed him. In progress of time he was empowered (with the assistance of a counsel) to adjudge the case, and the tribunal thus constituted was called quaestio.

This special tribunal continued in use until the end of the Roman republic, although it was resorted to, during the last times of the republic, only in extraordinary cases.

The manner in which they were constituted was this: If the matter to be inquired of was within the jurisdiction of the comitia, the senate, on the demand of the consul, or of a tribune, or of one of its members, declared by a decree that there was cause to prosecute a citizen. Then the consul ex auctoritate senatus asked the people in comitia (rogabat rogatio) to enact this decree into a law. The comitia adopted it, either simply or with amendment, or they rejected it.

The increase of population and of crimes rendered this method, which was tardy at best, onerous, and even impracticable. In the year 149 B. C., under the consulship of Censorinus and Manilius, the tribune Calpurnius Piso procured the passage of a law establishing a questio perpetua, to take cognizance of the crime of extortion committed by Roman magistrates against strangers de pecuniis repetundis. Cicero, Brut. 27; Cicero de Off. ii. 21; Cicero in Verr. iv. 25.

Many such tribunals were afterwards established, such as quaestiones de majestate, de ambitu, de peculatu, de vi, de sodalitiis, etc. Each was composed of a certain number of judges taken from the senators, and presided over by a praetor, although he might delegate his authority to a public officer, who was called judex quaestionis. These tribunals continued a year only; for the meaning of the word perpetuus is (non interruptus), not interrupted during the term of its appointed duration.

The establishment of these quaestiones deprived the comitia of their criminal jurisdiction, except the crime of treason. They were, in fact, the depositories of the judicial power during the sixth and seventh centuries of the Roman republic, the last of which was remarkable for civil dissensions, and replete with great public transactions. Without some knowledge of the constitution of the quaestio perpetua, it is impossible to understand the forensic speeches of Cicero, or even the political history of that age. But when Julius Caesar, as dictator, sat for the trial of Ligarius, the ancient constitution of the republic was, in fact, destroyed, and the criminal tribunals, which had existed in more or less vigor and purity until then, existed no longer but in name. Under Augustus, the concentration of the triple power of the consuls, proconsuls, and tribunes in his person transferred to him, as of course, all judicial powers and authorities.

QUAESTIONES PERPETUAE. In the Roman law. Commissions (or courts) of inquisition into crimes alleged to have been committed. They were called "perpetuae," to distinguish them from "occasional" inquisitions, and because they were permanent courts for the trial of offenders. Brown.

QUAESTOR (Lat.) The name of a magistrate of ancient Rome.

QUAESTORES CLASSICI (Lat.) In Roman law. Officers intrusted with the care of the public money.

Their duties consisted in making the necessary payments from the aerarium, and receiving the public revenues. Of both they had to keep correct accounts in their tabulae publicae. Demands which any one might have on the aerarium, and outstanding debts, were likewise registered by them. Fines to be paid to the public treasury were registered and exacted by them. They were likewise to provide proper accommodations for foreign ambassadors and such persons as were connected with the republic by ties of public hospitality. Lastly, they were charged with the care of the burials and monuments of distinguished men, the expenses for which had been decreed by the senate to be paid by the treasury. Their number at first was confined to two, but this was afterwards increased as the empire became extended. There were quaestors of cities and of provinces, and quaestors of the army; the latter were in fact paymasters.

QUAESTORES PARRICIDII (Lat.) In Roman law. Public accusers, two in number, who conducted the accusation of persons guilty of murder or any other capital offense, and carried the sentence into execution. They ceased to be appointed at an early period. Smith.

QUAESTUS. That estate which a man has by acquisition or purchase, in contradistinction to "haereditas," which is what he has by descent. Glanv. 1, 7, c. 1.

QUALE JUS (Lat.) In old English law. A judicial writ, which lay where a man of religion had judgment to recover land before execution was made of the judgment. It went forth to the escheator between judgment and execution, to inquire what right the religious person had to recover, or whether the judgment were obtained by the collusion of the parties, to the intent that the lord might not be defrauded. Reg. Jud. 8.

QUALIFICATION. Having the requisite qualities for a thing; as, to be president of the United States, the candidate must possess certain qualifications.

The natural endowment or acquirement which fits a person for a place, office, or employment. See 4 Wall. (U. S.) 319.

QUALIFIED ELECTOR. One entitled to vote.

QUALIFIED FEE. One which has a qualification subjoined to it, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. A limitation to a man and "his heirs on the part of his father" affords an example of this species of estate. Litt. § 254; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1695.

QUALIFIED INDORSEMENT. A transfer of a bill of exchange or promissory note to an indorsee, without any liability to the indorser. The words usually employed for this purpose are sans recours, without recourse. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1138.

QUALIFIED PROPERTY. Property not in its nature permanent, but which may sometimes subsist and at other times not subsist. A defeasible and precarious ownership, which lasts as long as the thing is in actual use and occupation; e. g., first, property in animals ferae naturae, or in light, or air, where the qualified property arises from the nature of the thing; second, property in a thing held by any one as a bailee, where the qualified property arises not from the nature of the thing, but from the peculiar circumstances under which it is held. 2 Bl. Comm. 391, 395*; 2 Kent, Comm. 347; 2 Wooddeson, Lect. 385.

Any ownership not absolute.

QUALITAS QUAE INESSE DEBET, FACILE praesumitur. A quality which ought to form a part is easily presumed.

QUALITER (Lat.) In what manner. A word used in old writs. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 19.

QUALITY.

——Of Persons. The state or condition of a person.

Two contrary qualities cannot be in the same person at the same time. Dig. 41. 10. 4. Every one is presumed to know the quality of the person with whom he is contracting. In the United States the people happily are all upon an equality in their civil rights.

——In Pleading. That which distinguishes one thing from another of the same kind.

QUALITY OF ESTATE. The period when, and the manner in which, the right of enjoying an estate is exercised. It is of two kinds: (1) The period when the right of enjoying an estate is conferred upon the owner, whether at present or in future; and (2) the manner in which the owner's right of enjoyment of his estate is to be exercised, whether solely, jointly, in common, or in coparcenary. Wharton.

QUAM LONGUM DEBET ESSE "RATIONabile tempus," non definitur in lege, sed pendet ex discretione justiciariorum. What is "reasonable time" the law does not define; it is left to the discretion of the judges. Co. Litt. 56. See 11 Coke, 44.

QUAM RATIONABILIS DEBET ESSE finis, non definitur, sed omnibus circumstantiis inspectis pendet ex justiciariorum discretione. What a reasonable fine ought to be is not defined, but is left to the discretion of the judges, all the circumstances being considered. 11 Coke, 44.

QUAMDIU (Lat.) As long as; so long as. A word of limitation in old conveyances. Co. Litt. 235a; 10 Coke, 41b; Shep. Touch. 125.

QUAMDIU SE BENE GESSERIT (Lat. as long as he shall behave himself well). A clause inserted in commissions, when such instruments were written in Latin, to signify the tenure by which the officer held his office.

QUAMVIS ALIQUID PER SE NON SIT malum, tamen si sit mali exempli, non est faciendum. Although in itself a thing may not be bad, yet if it holds out a bad example it is not to be done. 2 Inst. 564.

QUAMVIS LEX GENERALITER LOQUItur, restringenda tamen est, ut cessante ratione et ipsa cessat. Although the law speaks generally, it is to be restrained, since when the reason on which it is founded fails, it fails. 4 Inst. 330.

QUANDO ABEST PROVISIO PARTIS, adest provisio legis. When a provision of the party is lacking, the provision of the law is at hand. 13 C. B. 960.

QUANDO ACCIDERINT (Lat. when they fall in). In practice. When a defendant, executor or administrator, pleads plene administravit, the plaintiff may pray to have judgment of assets quando acciderint. Buller, N. P. 169; Bac. Abr. "Executor" (M).

By taking a judgment in this form, the plaintiff admits that the defendant has fully administered to that time. 1 Pet. C. C. (U. S.) 442, note. See 11 Viner, Abr. 379; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (2 D 9).

QUANDO ALIQUID CONCEDITUR, CONceditur in sine quo illud fieri non possit. When anything is granted, that also is granted without which it cannot be of effect. 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 516, 518; 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 354, 359.

QUANDO ALIQUID MANDATUR, MANdatur et omne per quod pervenitur ad illud. When anything is commanded, everything by which it can be accomplished is also commanded. 5 Coke, 116. See 7 C. B. 886; 14 C. B. 107; 6 Exch. 886, 889; 10 Exch. 449; 2 El. & Bl. 301; Story, Ag. (4th Ed.) 110, 179, 242, 299; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 431.

QUANDO ALIQUID PER SE NON SIT malum, tamen si sit mali exempli, non est faciendum. When anything by itself is not evil, and yet may be an example for evil, it is not to be done. 2 Inst. 564.

QUANDO ALIQUID PROHIBETUR EX directo, prohibetur et per obliquum. When anything is prohibited directly, it is also prohibited indirectly. Co. Litt. 223.

QUANDO ALIQUID PROHIBETUR, PROhibetur omne per quod devenitur ad illud. When anything is prohibited, everything by which it is reached is prohibited. 2 Inst. 48; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 432; Wingate, Max. 618. See 7 Clark & F. 509, 546; 4 Barn. & C. 187, 193; 2 Term R. 251, 252; 8 Term R. 301, 415; 15 Mees. & W. 7; 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 329.

QUANDO ALIQUIS ALIQUID CONCEDit, concedere videtur et id sine quo res uti non potest. When a person grants a thing, he is supposed to grant that also without which the thing cannot be used. 3 Kent, Comm. 421.

QUANDO CHARTA CONTINET GENERalem clausulam, posteaque descendit ad verba specialia quae clausulae generali sunt consentanea, interpretanda est charta secundum verba specialia. When a deed contains a general clause, and afterwards descends to special words, consistent with the general clause, the deed is to be construed according to the special words. 8 Coke, 154.

QUANDO DE UNA ET EADEM RE, DUO onerabiles existunt, unus, pro insufficientia alterius, de integro onerabitur. When two persons are liable concerning one and the same thing, if one makes default, the other must bear the whole. 2 Inst. 277.

QUANDO DISPOSITIO REFERRI POtest ad duas res, ita quod secundum relationem unam vitiatur et secundum alteram utilis sit, tum facienda est relatio ad illam ut valeat dispositio. When a disposition may be made to refer to two things, so that, according to one reference, it would be vitiated, and by the other it would be made effectual, such a reference must be made that the disposition shall have effect. 6 Coke, 76b.

QUANDO DIVERSI DESIDERANTUR actus ad aliquem statum perficiendum, plus respicit lex actum originalem. When different acts are required to the formation of an estate, the law chiefly regards the original act. 10 Coke, 49.

QUANDO DUO JURA CONCURRENT IN una persona, aequum est ac si essent in diversis. When two rights concur in one person, it is the same as if they were in two separate persons. 4 Coke, 118.

QUANDO JUS DOMINI REGIS ET SUBditi concurrunt jus regis praeferri debet. When the right of the sovereign and of the subject concur, the right of the sovereign ought to be preferred. 1 Coke, 129; Co. Litt. 30b; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 66.

QUANDO LEX ALIQUID ALICUI CONCEDit, concedere videtur id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest. When the law gives anything, it gives the means of obtaining it. 5 Coke, 47; 3 Kent, Comm. 421.

QUANDO LEX ALIQUID ALICUI CONcedit, omnia incidentia tacite conceduntur. When the law gives anything, it gives tacitly what is incident to it. 2 Inst. 326; Hob. 234.

QUANDO LEX ALIQUID ALIQUO CONcedit, conceditur et id sine qua res ipsa esse non potest. When the law grants a thing to any one, it grants that also without which the thing itself cannot exist. 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 153, 160.

QUANDO LEX EST SPECIALIS, RATIO autem generalis, generaliter lex est intelligenda. When the law is special, but its reason is general, the law is to be understood generally. 2 Inst. 83; 10 Coke, 101.

QUANDO LICET ID QUOD MAJUS, VIDEtur licere id quod minus. When the greater is allowed, the less seems to be allowed also. Shep. Touch. 429.

QUANDO MULIER NOBILIS NUPSERIT ignobili, desinit esse nobilis nisi nobilitas nativa fuerit. When a noble woman marries a man not noble, she ceases to be noble, unless her nobility was born with her. 4 Coke, 118.

QUANDO PLUS FIT QUAM FIERI DEbet, videtur etiam illud fieri quod faciendum est. When more is done than ought to be done, that too shall be considered as performed which should have been performed; as, if a man, having a power to make a lease for ten years, make one for twenty years, it shall be void only for the surplus. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 166; 5 Coke, 115; 8 Coke, 85a.

QUANDO QUOD AGO NON VALET UT ago, valeat quantum valere potest. When that which I do does not have effect as I do it, let it have as much effect as it can. 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 172, 178; 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 242, 261.

QUANDO RES NON VALET UT AGO, valeat quantum valere potest. When a thing is of no force as I do it, it shall have as much as it can have. Cowp. 600; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 483; 2 Smith, Lead. Cas. 294; 6 East, 105; 1 Vent. 216; 1 H. Bl. 614, 620.

QUANDO VERBA ET MENS CONgruunt, non est interpretationi locus. When the words and the mind agree, there is no place for interpretation.

QUANDO VERBA STATUTI SUNT SPEcialia, ratio autem generalis, generaliter statutum est intelligendum. When the words of a statute are special, but the reason or object of it general, the statute is to be construed generally. 10 Coke, 101b.

QUANTI MINORIS (Lat.) The name of a particular action in Louisiana. An action quanti minoris is one brought for the reduction of the price of a thing sold, in consequence of defects in the thing which is the object of the sale.

Such action must be commenced within twelve months from the date of the sale, or from the time within which the defect became known to the purchaser. 3 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 287; 11 Mart. (La.) 11.

QUANTITY. In pleading. That which is susceptible of measure.

It is a general rule that, when the declaration alleges an injury to goods and chattels, or any contract relating to them, their quantity should be stated. Gould, Pl. c. 4, § 35. And in actions for the recovery of real estate, the quantity of the land should be specified. Bracton, 431a; 11 Coke, 25b, 55a; Doct. Plac. 85, 86; 1 East, 441; 8 East, 357; 13 East, 102; Steph. Pl. 314, 315.

QUANTUM DAMNIFICATUS (Lat.) In equity practice. An issue directed by a court of equity to be tried in a court of law, to ascertain by a trial before a jury the amount of damages suffered by the nonperformance of some collateral undertaking which a penalty has been given to secure. When such damages have thus been ascertained, the court will grant relief upon their payment. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3913.

QUANTUM MERUIT (Lat.) In pleading. As much as he has deserved.

When a person employs another to do work for him, without any agreement as to his compensation, the law implies a promise from the employer to the workman that he will pay him for his services as much as he may deserve or merit. In such case, the plaintiff may suggest in his declaration that the defendant promised to pay him as much as he reasonably deserved, and then aver that his trouble was worth such a sum of money, which the defendant has omitted to pay. This is called an assumpsit on a quantum meruit. 2 Bl. Comm. 162, 163; 1 Viner, Abr. 346; 2 Phil. Ev. 82.

QUANTUM TENENS DOMINO EX HOmagio, tantum dominus tenenti ex dominio debet praeter solam reverentiam; mutua debet esse dominii et homagii fidelitatis connexio. As much as the tenant by his homage owes to his lord, so much is the lord, by his lordship, indebted to the tenant, except reverence alone; the tie of dominion and of homage ought to be mutual. Co. Litt. 64.

QUANTUM VALEBAT (Lat. as much as it was worth). In pleading. When goods are sold without specifying any price, the law implies a promise from the buyer to the seller that he will pay him for them as much as they were worth.

The plaintiff may, in such case, suggest in his declaration that the defendant promised to pay him as much as the said goods were worth, and then aver that they were worth so much, which the defendant has refused to pay. See the authorities cited under the article "Quantum Meruit."

QUARANTINE.

——In Maritime Law. The space of forty days, or less, during which the crew of a ship or vessel coming from a port or place infected or supposed to be infected with disease are required to remain on board after their arrival, before they can be permitted to land:

The term is applied in modern usage to any isolation by law of infected persons or places.

——In Real Property. The space of forty days, during which a widow has a right to remain in her late husband's principal mansion immediately after his death. The right of the widow is also called her "quarantine."

QUARE (Lat.) In pleading. Wherefore.

This word is sometimes used in the writ in certain actions, but is inadmissible in a material averment in the pleadings, for it is merely interrogatory; and therefore, when a declaration began with complaining of the defendant, "wherefore with force, etc., he broke and entered" the plaintiff's close, it was considered ill. Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (B 5, 4); Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 34.

QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT. See "Trespass."

QUARE EJECIT INFRA TERMINUM. See "Ejectment."

QUARE IMPEDIT (Lat. why he hinders). In English law. A real possessory action which can be brought only in the court of common pleas, and lies to recover a presentation when the patron's right is disturbed, or to try a disputed title to an advowson. See "Disturbance;" Mireh. Advowson, 265; 2 Saund. 336a.

QUARE INCUMBRAVIT (Lat. why he incumbered). A writ or action which lay against a bishop after judgment in an action quare impedit, where he had incumbered the church with a clerk pending the action. 3 Bl. Comm. 248.

QUARE INTRUSIT (Lat. why he intruded). A writ that formerly lay where the lord proffered a suitable marriage to his ward, who rejected it, and entered into the land, and married another, the value of his marriage not being satisfied to the lord. Abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

QUARE NON ADMISIT (Lat. wherefore he did not admit). A writ to recover damages against a bishop who does not admit a plaintiff's clerk. It is, however, rarely or never necessary; for it is said that a bishop, refusing to execute the writ ad admittendum clericum, or making an insufficient return to it, may be fined. Watson, Cler. Law, 302.

QUARE NON PERMITTIT. An ancient writ, which lay for one who had a right to present to a church for a turn against the proprietary. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 6.

QUARE OBSTRUXIT (Lat. why he obstructs. (The name of a writ formerly used in favor of one who, having a right to pass through his neighbor's grounds, was prevented enjoying such right, because the owner of the grounds had obstructed the way.

QUARREL. A dispute; a difference. In law, particularly in releases, which are taken most strongly against the releasor, when a man releases all quarrel he is said to release all actions, real and personal. 8 Coke, 153.

QUARRY. A place whence stones are dug for the purpose of being employed in building, making roads, and the like.

When a farm is let with an open quarry, the tenant may, when not restrained by his contract, take out the stone; but he has no right to open new quarries. See "Waste."

QUARTER DAYS. The four days of the year on which rent payable quarterly becomes due.

QUARTER SALES. In New York, a certain fraction of the purchase money is often conditioned to be paid back on alienation of the estate; and this fine on alienation is expressed as a "tenth sales," a "quarter sales," etc. 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 285; 7 Hill (N. Y.) 253; 7 N. Y. 490.

QUARTER SEAL. In Scotch law. The seal kept by the director of the chancery in Scotland is so called. It is in the shape and impression of the fourth part of the great seal. Bell, Dict.

QUARTER SESSIONS. A court bearing this name, mostly invested with the trial of criminals. It takes its name from sitting quarterly, or once in three months.

The English courts of quarter sessions were erected during the reign of Edward III. See St. 36 Edw. III.; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 278.

QUARTER YEAR. In the computation of time, a quarter year consists of ninety-one days. Co. Litt. 135b; 2 Rolle, Abr. 521, lib. 40; Rev. St. N. Y. pt. 1, c. 19, tit. 1, § 3.

QUARTERING. A barbarous punishment formerly inflicted on criminals by tearing them to pieces by means of four horses, one attached to each limb.

QUARTERING OF SOLDIERS. Furnishing soldiers with board or lodging or both. Const. U. S. Amend. art. 3, provides that "no soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war but in a manner to be prescribed by law."

QUARTEROON. One who has had one of his grandparents of the black or African race.

QUARTO DIE POST (Lat. fourth day after). Appearance day, which is the fourth day inclusive from the return of the writ; and if the person summoned appears on that day, it is sufficient. On this day, also, the court begins to sit for despatch of business. These three days were originally given as an indulgence. 3 Bl. Comm. 278; Tidd, New Prac. 134. But this practice is now altered. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76.

QUASH. In practice. To overthrow or annul.

Distinguished from "dismiss." The term "quash," as applied to writs, is predicated of some defect in the writ itself, or in the form of the writ, which defect does not reach the merits of the case; the usual practice being to grant a new writ on the original petition. Dismissal is applied to the removal or disposal of the cause itself, and not to the mere annulment of the writ. 24 Miss. 457.

QUASHAL. The act of quashing.

QUASI (Lat. as if; almost). A term used to mark a resemblance, and which supposes a little difference between two objects. Dig. 11. 7. 1. 8. 1. Civilians use the expressions quasi contractus, quasi delictum, quasi possessio, quasi traditio, etc.

QUASI AFFINITY. In civil law. The affinity which exists between two persons, one of whom has been betrothed to the kindred of the other, but who have never been married. For example, my brother is betrothed to Maria, and afterwards, before marriage, he dies. There then exists between Maria and me a quasi affinity.

The history of England furnishes an example of this kind. Catherine of Arragon was betrothed to the brother of Henry VIII. Afterwards, Henry married her, and under the pretense of this quasi affinity he repudiated her, because the marriage was incestuous.

QUASI CONTRACTUS (Lat.) In civil law. The act of a person, permitted by law, by which he obligates himself towards another, or by which another binds himself to him, without any agreement between them.

By article 2272 of the Civil Code of Louisiana, which is translated from article 1371 of the Code Civil, quasi contracts are defined to be "the lawful and purely voluntary acts of a man, from which there results any obligation whatever to a third person, and sometimes a reciprocal obligation between the parties." In contracts, it is the consent of the contracting parties which produces the obligation; in quasi contracts no consent is required, and the obligation arises from the law or natural equity, on the facts of the case. These acts are called "quasi contracts" because, without being contracts, they bind the parties as contracts do.

There is no term in the common law which answers to that of "quasi contract." Many quasi contracts may doubtless be classed among "implied contracts." There is, however, a difference to be noticed. For example, in case money should be paid by mistake to a minor, it may be recovered from him by the civil law, because his consent is not necessary to a quasi contract; but by the common law, if it can be recovered, it must be upon an agreement to which the law presumes he has consented, and it is doubtful, upon principle, whether such recovery could be had.

Quasi contracts may be multiplied almost to infinity. They are, however, divided into five classes,—such as relate to the voluntary and spontaneous management of the affairs of another, without authority (negotiorum gestio); the administration of tutorship; the management of common property (communio bonorum); the acquisition of an inheritance; and the payment of a sum of money or other thing by mistake, when nothing was due (indebiti solutio).

Each of these quasi contracts has an affinity with some contract. Thus, the management of the affairs of another without authority, and tutorship, are compared to a mandate; the community of property, to a partnership; the acquisition of an inheritance, to a stipulation; and the payment of a thing which is not due, to a loan.

QUASI CONTRACT. A liability similar to that created by contract, but not really arising by the consent of the parties.

Quasi contracts are said to be founded in general

(1) On a record, as the liability on a judgment.

(2) On a statutory, official, or customary duty, as the obligation of a husband for necessaries furnished his wife, even against his orders; or the liability of a vessel for half pilotage on refusing the first pilot offering himself. 2 Wall. (U. S.) 450.

(3) On the doctrine that no one shall be permitted to enrich himself unjustly at the expense of another; as the liability of an infant to pay for necessaries (141 Mass. 530), or the liability to repay money paid by mistake (Keener, Quasi Cont. 16).

The distinction between "quasi contract" and "implied contract" appears to be one of degree, rather than of principle. It has been said that implied contract extends to those cases where there was an intent to contract, or at least no intent not to contract; but in many cases commonly assigned to implied contracts, the only evidence of intent to contract is in the imputed knowledge that the law would impose a given liability, and this element is absent from but few quasi contracts. On the other hand, the test of definite intention not to contract would exclude many liabilities properly classified as quasi contractual, e. g., that for money paid by mistake.

It may be said, generally, that quasi contracts embrace those cases where there was a positive intention not to contract, and cases where there was no intent to contract, and the party was more remote from any inferred intent than in cases of implied contract, but the exact line of demarcation cannot, in the present state of legal nomenclature, be drawn.

QUASI CORPORATIONS. A term applied to those bodies which, though not vested with the general powers of corporations, are yet recognized by statutes or immemorial usage as persons or corporations aggregate, with power to sue and be sued in their aggregate capacity. 2 Kent, Comm. 274; 9 Mass. 247; 1 Me. 361.

A body having capacity to make contracts in respect to county affairs, and having perpetual succession, is a quasi corporation (2 Wall. [U. S.] 501), e. g., the overseers of the poor (18 Johns. [N. Y.] 407).

QUASI DELICT. In civil law. An act whereby a person, without malice, but by fault, negligence, or imprudence not legally excusable, causes injury to another.

A quasi delict may be public or private. The neglect of the affairs of a community, when it is our duty to attend to them, may be a crime; the neglect of a private matter, under similar circumstances, may be the ground of a civil action. Bowyer, Mod. Civ. Law, c. 43, p. 265.

QUASI-DEPOSIT. A kind of involuntary bailment, which takes place where a person acquires possession of property lawfully, by finding. Story, Bailm. § 85.

QUASI EASEMENT. An "easement," in the proper sense of the word, can only exist in respect of two adjoining pieces of land occupied by different persons, and can only impose a negative duty on the owner of the servient tenement. Hence an obligation on the owner of land to repair the fence between his and his neighbor's land is not a true easement, but is sometimes called a "quasi easement." Gale, Easem. 516.

QUASI ENTAIL. A quasi entail exists when an estate pur autre vie is limited to a person and the heirs of his body.

QUASI FEE. An estate gained by wrong; for wrong is unlimited and uncontained within rules. Wharton.

QUASI OFFENSES, or QUASI CRIMES. Wrongs against the general or local public which have not been declared crimes (68 Ill. 375); e. g., bastardy proceedings, which are commonly said to be quasi criminal.

Offenses for which some person other than the actual perpetrator is responsible, the perpetrator being presumed to act by command of the responsible party.

Injuries which have been unintentionally caused.

QUASI PARTNERS. Partners of lands, goods, or chattels, who are not actual partners, are sometimes so called. Poth. de Societe, Append. note 184. See "Part Owners."

QUASI PERSONALTY. Things which are movable in point of law, though fixed to things real, either actually, as emblements (fructus industriales), fixtures, etc., or fictitiously, as chattels real, leases for years, etc.

QUASI POSSESSION. Such use as is to a right what possession is to a thing, when the enjoyment is exercised by means of possession of the thing, which is the subject of the right, the idea of quasi possession does not arise, and the term is confined to those rights which merely give a limited power of using the thing, as in case of easements. The term is little used, "enjoyment" being more frequently employed.

QUASI POSTHUMOUS CHILD. In civil law. One who, born during the life of his grandfather or other male ascendant, was not his heir at the time he made his testament, but who, by the death of his father, became his heir in his lifetime. Inst. 2. 13. 2; Dig. 28. 3. 13.

QUASI PURCHASE. This term is used in the civil law to denote that a thing is to be considered as purchased from the presumed consent of the owner of a thing; as, if a man should consume a cheese, which is in his possession and belonging to another, with an intent to pay the price of it to the owner, the consent of the latter will be presumed, as the cheese would have been spoiled by keeping it longer. Wolff. Dr. Nat. § 691.

QUASI REALTY. Things which are fixed in contemplation of law to realty, but movable in themselves, as heirlooms (or limbs of the inheritance), title deeds, court rolls, etc. Wharton.

QUASI TENANT AT SUFFERANCE. An under tenant, who is in possession at the determination of an original lease, and is permitted by the reversioner to hold over.

QUASI TORT. Though not a recognized term of English law, it may be conveniently used in those cases where a man who has not committed a tort is liable as if he had. Thus, a master is liable for wrongful acts done by his servant in the course of his employment. Broom, Com. Law, 690; Underh. Torts, 29. Austin rejects "quasi torts," or "quasi delict," altogether. Austin, Jur. 959.

QUASI-TRADITIO (Lat.) In civil law. A term used to designate that a person is in the use of the property of another, which the latter suffers and does not oppose. Lec. Elm. § 396. It also signifies the act by which the right of property is ceded in a thing to a person who is in possession of it; as, if I loan a boat to Paul, and deliver it to him, and afterwards I sell him the boat, it is not requisite that he should deliver the boat to me to be again delivered to him. There is a quasi tradition or delivery.

QUASI TRUSTEE. A person who reaps a benefit from a breach of trust, and so becomes answerable as a trustee. Lewin, Trusts (4th Ed.) 592, 638.

QUASI USUFRUCT. In the civil law. A name given to a usufructory interest in consumable things. See "Usufruct."

QUATER COUSIN. "The very name of cater, or (as it is more properly written) quater cousins, is grown into a proverb, to express, by way of irony, the last and most trivial degree of intimacy and regard." Bl. Law Tr. 6.

QUATUOR PEDIBUS CURRIT (Law Lat.) Runs upon four feet; runs upon all fours. A term used to denote an exact correspondence. See "All Fours." Nullum simile quatuor pedibus currit, no simile holds in everything. Co. Litt. 3a. "It does not follow that they (a trust and an equity of redemption) run quatuor pedibus." 1 W. Bl. 145.

QUATUORVIRI (Lat. four men). In Roman law. Magistrates who had the care and inspection of roads. Dig. 1. 2. 3. 30.

QUAY. A wharf at which to load or land goods. Sometimes spelled "key."

In its enlarged sense, the word "quay" means the whole space between the first row of houses of a city and the sea or river. 5 La. 152, 215. So much of the quay as is requisite for the public use of loading and unloading vessels is public property, and cannot be appropriated to private use, but the rest may be private property.

QUE EST MESME (Law Fr.) Which is the same. See "Quae est Eadem."

QUE ESTATE (Lat. quem statum, or which estate). A plea by which a man prescribes in himself and those whose estate he holds. 2 Bl. Comm. 270; 18 Viner, Abr. 133-140; Co. Litt. 121a; Hardr. 459; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 499.

QUEAN. A worthless woman; a strumpet. The meaning of this word, which is now seldom used, is said not to be well ascertained. 2 Rolle, Abr. 296; Bac. Abr. "Slander" (U 3).

QUEEN. A female sovereign.

QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY. By St. 2 Anne, c. 11, all the revenue of first fruit and tenths was vested in trustees forever, to form a perpetual fund for the augmentation of poor livings. 1 Bl. Comm. 286; 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 260-268.

QUEEN CONSORT. The wife of a reigning king. 1 Bl. Comm. 218. She is looked upon by the law as a feme sole, as to her power of contracting, suing, etc. Id.

QUEEN DOWAGER. The widow of the king. She has most of the privileges belonging to a queen consort. 1 Bl. Comm. 229.

QUEEN GOLD. A royal revenue belonging to every queen consort during her marriage with the king, and due from every person who has made a voluntary fine or offer to the king of ten marks or upwards, in consideration of any grant or privilege conferred by the crown. It is due of record on the recording of the fine. It was last exacted in the reign of Charles I. It is now quite obsolete. 1 Bl. Comm. 220-222; Fortesc. de Laud. 398; Jacob.

QUEEN REGNANT. She who holds the crown in her own right. She has the same duties and prerogatives, etc., as a king. St. 1 Mar. I. st. 3, c. 1; 1 Bl. Comm. 218; 1 Wooddeson, Lect. 94.

QUEEN'S (or KING'S) ADVOCATE. An English advocate who holds, in the courts in which the rules of the canon and civil law prevail, a similar position to that which the attorney general holds in the ordinary courts, i. e., he acts as counsel for the crown in ecclesiastical, admiralty, and probate cases, and advises the crown on questions of international law. In order of precedence, it seems that he ranks after the attorney general. 3 Steph. Comm. 275, note; Man. S. ad L. 19 Append. IV.

QUEEN'S BENCH. The English court of king's bench is so called during the reign of a queen. 3 Steph. Comm. 403.

QUEEN'S (or KING'S) COUNSEL. In English law. Barristers called within the bar, and selected to be the queen's (or king's) counsel, learned in the law; answering in some measure to the advocates of the revenue (advocati fisci) among the Romans. They cannot be employed in any cause against the crown, without special license. 3 Bl. Comm. 27; 3 Steph. Comm. 386.

QUEEN'S (or KING'S) EVIDENCE. Testimony of an accomplice in a felony, admitted as evidence for the crown against his accomplices. 4 Steph. Comm. 398. See "State's Evidence."

QUEEN'S PRISON. In English law. A prison appropriated to the debtors and criminals confined under process, or by authority of the superior courts at Westminster, the Marshalsea court and Palace court, and the high court of admiralty, and also to persons imprisoned under the bankrupt law. It was established by St. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, consolidating into one the queen's bench, the Fleet, and the Marshalsea prisons. 3 Steph. Comm. 254.

QUEM REDDITUM REDDIT. A real action, by which the grantee of a rent could compel the tenants to attorn to him.

QUEMADMODUM AD QUAESTIONEM facti non respondent judices, ita ad quaestionem juris non respondent juratores. In the same manner that judges do not answer to questions of fact, so jurors do not answer to questions of law. Co. Litt. 295.

QUERELA (Lat.) An action preferred in any court of justice. The plaintiff was called querens, or complainant, and his brief, complaint, or declaration was called querela. Jacob. See "Audita Querela."

QUERELA CORAM REGE A CONCILIO discutienda et terminanda. A writ by which one is called to justify a complaint of a trespass made to the king himself, before the king and his council. Reg. Orig. 124.

QUERELA INOFFICIOSI TESTAMENTI (Lat. complaint of an undutiful or unkind will). In civil law. A species of action allowed to a child who had been unjustly disinherited, to set aside the will, founded on the presumption of law, in such cases, that the parent was not in his right mind. Calv. Lex.; 2 Kent, Comm. 327; Bell, Dict.

QUERENS (Lat. from queri, to complain). In old English practice. A plaintiff; the plaintiff or complaining party. Bracton, fols. 98b, 214, 240, et passim; 8 Coke, 153b. The complaining party in a personal action; as petens (demandant) was, in a real action. Actor, sive sit petens sive querens. Bracton, fol. 106b. But querens was used in assizes. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 7.

QUESTA (Law Lat.) In old records. A quest; an inquest, inquisition, or inquiry, upon the oaths of an impanelled jury. Cowell.

QUESTION.

——In Old Criminal Law. A means sometimes employed in some countries, by torture, to compel supposed great criminals to disclose their accomplices or to acknowledge their crimes.

This torture is called "question" because, as the unfortunate person accused is made to suffer pain, he is asked questions as to his supposed crime or accomplices. This is unknown in the United States. See Poth. Proc. Crim. sec. 5, art. 2, § 3.

——In Evidence. An interrogation put to a witness, requesting him to declare the truth of certain facts as far as he knows them.

Questions are either general or leading. By a general question is meant such a one as requires the witness to state all he knows, without any suggestion being made to him; as, "Who gave the blow?" A leading question is one which leads the mind of the witness to the answer, or suggests it to him; as, "Did A. B. give the blow?"

The Romans called a question by which the fact or supposed fact which the interrogator expected or wished to find asserted in and by the answer was made known to the proposed respondent a "suggestive" interrogation; as, "Is not your name A. B.?" See "Leading Question."

——In Practice. A point on which the parties are not agreed, and which is submitted to the decision of a judge and jury.

When the doubt or difference arises as to what the law is on a certain state of facts, this is said to be a "legal question;" and when the party demurs, this is to be decided by the court. When it arises as to the truth or falsehood of facts, this is a "question of fact," and is to be decided by the jury.

QUESTUS EST NOBIS. A writ of nuisance which lay against one who acquired, by descent or alienation, the thing which caused the nuisance. It was given by 15 Edw. I. Formerly only the person causing it was liable. Cowell.

QUI VULT DECIPI, DECIPIATUR. Let him who wishes to be deceived be deceived. De Gex, M. & G. 687, 710; Shep. Touch. 56.

QUIA (Lat.) In pleading. Because. This word is considered a term of affirmation. It is sufficiently direct and positive for introducing a material averment. 1 Saund. 117, note 4; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (C 77).

QUIA DATUM EST NOBIS INTELLIGI. Because it is given to us to understand. Formal words in old writs. Rat. Parl. 4 Hen. IV.

QUIA DOMINUS REMISIT CURIAM (Law Lat.) In old practice. Because the lord hath remised or remitted his court. A clause inserted at the conclusion of a writ of right, where it was brought, in the first instance, in the king's court; the lord in whose court baron it regularly ought to be first brought, having waived or remitted his right. 3 Bl. Comm. 195; Id. Append. No. i. § 4.

QUIA EMPTORES (Lat. because the purchasers). The title of St. Westminter III. (18 Edw. I. c. 1), which provided that from thenceforth it should be lawful for every freeman or freeholder to sell his lands or tenements or part thereof at his pleasure, so that, however, the feoffee should hold such lands or tenements of the chief lord of the same fee, by the same services and customs by which his feoffor before held them. So called from its initial words: Quia emptores terrarum et tenementorum de feodis magnatum, etc. 2 Bl. Comm. 91; Barr. Obs. St. 167. See the New York case, 2 Seld. 467.

QUIA ERRONICE EMANAVIT. Because it issued erroneously, or through mistake. A term in old English practice. Yelv. 83.

QUIA TIMET (Lat. because he fears). A term applied to preventive or anticipatory remedies. According to Lord Coke, "there be six writs of law that may be maintained quia timet, before any molestation, distress, or impleading; as, first, a man may have his writ or mesne before he be distrained; second, a warrantia chartae, before he be impleaded; third, a monstraverunt, before any distress or vexation; fourth, an audita querela, before any execution sued; fifth, a curia claudenda, before any default of inclosure; sixth, a ne injuste vexes, before any distress or molestation. And these are called brevia anticipantia, writs of prevention." Co. Litt. 100. And see 7 Brown, Parl. Cas. 125.

These writs are generally obsolete. In chancery, when it is contemplated to prevent an expected injury, a bill quia timet is filed. See "Bill Quia Timet."

QUICK DISPATCH. A term used in charter parties to express the promptness with which the cargo will be delivered to the vessel for loading. It signifies delivery as rapidly as the vessel can receive it. 2 Fed. 607.

It is a stronger term than "customary quick dispatch," and supersedes the custom of the port. 2 Low. (U. S.) 361.

QUICK WITH CHILD. The state of a woman pregnant with a quick child, i. e., a foetus which has quickened. 9 Metc. (Mass.) 263. In an English case, "quick with child" was distinguished from "with quick child," the former phrase being said to signify merely "having conceived" (8 Car. & P. 262), but this distinction is not recognized (22 N. J. Law, 57).

QUICQUID ACQUIRITUR SERVO, ACquiritur domino. Whatever is acquired by the servant is acquired for the master. 15 Viner, Abr. 327.

QUICQUID DEMONSTRATAE REI ADDItur satis demonstratae frustra est. Whatever is added to the description of a thing already sufficiently described is of no effect. Dig. 33. 4. 1. 8; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 562.

QUICQUID EST CONTRA NORMAM RECti est injuria. Whatever is against the rule of right is a wrong. 3 Bulst. 313.

QUICQUID IN EXCESSU ACTUM EST, lege prohibitur. Whatever is done in excess is prohibited by law. 2 Inst. 107.

QUICQUID JUDICIS AUCTORITATI SUBjicitur novitati non subjicitur. Whatever is subject to the authority of a judge is not subject to innovation. 4 Inst. 66.

QUICQUID PLANTATUR SOLO, SOLO cedit. Whatever is affixed to the soil belongs to it. Wentw. Off. Ex'r, 145; Ambl. 113; 3 East, 51. See "Fixtures."

QUICQUID RECIPITUR, RECIPITUR SEcundum modum recipientis. Whatever is received is received according to the intention of the recipient. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 727; Halk. Max. 149; Law Mag. 1855, p. 21; 2 Bing. (N. C.) 461; 2 Barn. & C. 72; 14 Sim. 522; 2 Clark & F. 681; 2 Cromp. & J. 678; 14 East, 239, 243c.

QUICQUID SOLVITUR, SOLVITUR SEcundum modum solventis. Whatever is paid is to be applied according to the intention of the payor. 2 Vern. 606. See "Appropriation."

QUICQUID SOLVITUR, SOLVITUR SEcundum modum solventis; quicquid recipitur, recipitur secundum modum recipientis. Whatever money is paid is paid according to the direction of the payor; whatever money is received is received according to that of the recipient. 2 Vern. 606; Broom, Leg. Max. 810.

QUICUNQUE HABET JURISDICTIONEM ordinariam est illius loci ordinarius. Whoever has an ordinary jurisdiction is ordinary of that place. Co. Litt. 344.

QUICUNQUE JUSSU JUDICIS ALIQUID fecerit non videtur dolo malo fecisse, quia parere necesse est. Whoever does anything by the command of a judge is not reckoned to have done it with an evil intent, because it is necessary to obey. 10 Coke, 71.

QUID JURIS CLAMAT (Law Lat. what right he claims). In old English practice. A writ which lay for the grantee of a reversion or remainder, where the particular tenant would not attorn, for the purpose of compelling him. Termes de la Ley; Cowell.

QUID PRO QUO (Lat.) What for what; something for something. An equivalent, or consideration; that which is given in exchange for another thing; that which is done in consideration of another thing. Cowell; 2 P. Wms. 219.

QUID SIT JUS, ET IN QUO CONSISTIT injuria, legis est definire. What constitutes right, and what injury, it is the business of the law to declare. Co. Litt. 158b.

QUIDAM (Lat. some one; somebody). In French law. A term used to express an unknown person, or one who cannot be named.

A quidam is usually described by the features of his face, the color of his hair, his height, his clothing, and the like, in any process which may be issued against him. Merlin, Repert.

QUIDQUID ENIM SIVE DOLO ET CULPA venditoris accidit in eo venditor securus est. For concerning anything which occurs without deceit and wrong on the part of the vendor, the vendor is secure. 4 Pick. (Mass.) 198.

QUIET ENJOYMENT. The name of a covenant in a lease, by which the lessor agrees that the lessee shall peaceably enjoy the premises leased. This covenant goes to the possession, and not to the title. 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 471; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 120; 2 Dev. (N. C.) 388; 3 Dev. (N. C.) 200. A covenant for quiet enjoyment does not extend as far as a covenant of warranty. 1 Aik. (Vt.) 233.

The covenant for quiet enjoyment is broken only by an entry, or unlawful expulsion from, or some actual disturbance in, the possession. 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 471; 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 483; 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 281; 2 Hill (N. Y.) 105; 9 Metc. (Mass.) 63; 4 Whart. (Pa.) 86; 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 340. But the tortious entry of the covenantor, without title, is a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment. 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 376.

QUIETA NON MOVERE. Not to unsettle things which are established. 28 Barb. (N. Y.) 9, 22.

QUIETARE (Law Lat.) To quit, acquit, discharge, or save harmless. A formal word in old deeds of donation and other conveyances. Cowell.

QUIETE CLAMARE, or QUIETUM CLAMARE. To quitclaim or renounce all pretentensions of right and title. Cowell; Fleta.

QUIETUS (Lat. freed or acquitted).

——In English Law. A discharge; an acquittance.

An instrument by the clerk of the pipe and auditors in the exchequer, as proof of their acquittance or discharge as accountants. Cowell.

Discharge of a judge or attorney general. 3 Mod. 99.

——In American Law. The discharge of an executor by the probate court. 4 Mason (U. S.) 131.

QUIETUS REDDITUS. In old English law. Quit rent (q. v.) Spelman.

QUILIBET POTEST RENUNCIARE JURI pro se inducto. Any one may renounce a law introduced for his own benefit. To this rule there are some exceptions. See 1 Bouv. Inst. note 83; 3 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 393; 1 Exch. 657.

QUINQUE PORTUS. The Cinque Ports (q. v.)

QUINQUEPARTITE. In five parts.

QUINSIEME, or QUINZIME (Law Fr. and Eng.) In old English law. A fifteenth; a tax so called. Cowell. See "Fifteenths."

QUINTO EXACTUS (Lat.) In old English law. The fifth call or last requisition of a defendant sued to outlawry.

QUIRE OF DOVER. In English law. A record in the exchequer, showing the tenures for guarding and repairing Dover Castle, and determining the services of the Cinque Ports. 3 How. St. Tr. 868.

QUIRITARIAN OWNERSHIP. In Roman law. Ownership in the strict forms of law; legal title, as distinguished from the equitable title known as "Bonitarian ownership."

QUISQUIS EST QUI VELIT JURIS CONsultus haberi, continuet studium, velit a quocunque doceri. Whoever wishes to be held a jurisconsult, let him continually study, and desire to be taught by everybody.

QUISQUIS PRAESUMITUR BONUS; ET semper in dubiis pro reo respondendum. Every one is presumed good; and in doubtful cases the resolution should be ever for the accused.

QUIT RENT. A rent paid by the tenant of the freehold, by which he goes quit and free,—that is, discharged from any other rent. 2 Bl. Comm. 42.

In England, quit rents were rents reserved to the king or a proprietor, on an absolute grant of waste land, for which a price in gross was at first paid, and a mere nominal rent reserved as a feudal acknowledgment of tenure. Inasmuch as no rent of this description can exist in the United States, when a quit rent is spoken of, some other interest must be intended. 5 Call (Va.) 364. A perpetual rent reserved on a conveyance in fee simple is sometimes known by the name of "quit rent" in Massachusetts. See "Ground Rent;" "Rent."

QUITCLAIM. In conveyancing. A form of deed of the nature of a release, containing words of grant as well as release. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 606.

The term is in constant and general use in American law to denote a deed substantially the same as a release in English law. It presupposes a previous or precedent conveyance, or a subsisting estate and possession. Thornton, Conv. 44. It is a conveyance at common law, but differs from a release in that it is regarded as an original conveyance in American law, at least in some states. 6 Pick. (Mass.) 499; 14 Pick. (Mass.) 374; 3 Conn. 398; 9 Ohio, 96; 5 Ill. 117; Rev. St. Me. c. 73, § 14; Code Miss. 1857, p. 309, art. 17. The operative words are "remise, release, and forever quitclaim." Thornton, Conv. 44. Covenants of warranty against incumbrances by the grantor are usually added.

QUITE CLAMAUNCE (Law Fr.) Quitclaim. Britt. c. 85.

QUITTANCE. A discharge or release; abbreviated from "acquittance."

QUO ANIMO (Lat. with what intention). The intent; the mind with which a thing has been done; as, the quo animo with which the words were spoken may be shown by the proof of conversations of the defendant relating to the original defamation. 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 296.

QUO JURE, WRIT OF. In English law. The name of a writ commanding the defendant to show by what right he demands common of pasture in the land of the complainant who claims to have a fee in the same. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 299.

QUO LIGATUR, EO DISSOLVITUR. By the same mode by which a thing is bound, by that is it released. 2 Rolle, 21.

QUO MINUS (Lat.) The name of a writ. In England, when the king's debtor is sued in the court of the exchequer, he may have a writ quo minus by which he avers the wrong done by him by defendant, quo minus sufficiens existit (by which he is less able) to pay the king's debt. This was originally necessary to give jurisdiction to the court of exchequer.

QUO MODO QUID CONSTITUITUR EODEM MODO DISSOLVITUR. In the same manner by which anything is constituted, by that it is dissolved. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 74.

QUO WARRANTO (Lat. by what authority).

——In Old Practice. The name of a writ (and also of the whole pleading) by which the government commences an action to recover an office or franchise from the person or corporation in possession of it.

The writ commands the sheriff to summon the defendant to appear before the court to which it is returnable, to show (quo warranto) by what authority he claims the office or franchise. It was a writ of right, a civil remedy to try the mere right to the franchise or office, where the person in possession never had a right to it, or has forfeited it by neglect or abuse. 3 Bl. Comm. 262, 263.

The action of quo warranto was prescribed by the statute of Gloucester (6 Edw. I), and is a limitation upon the royal prerogative. Before this statute, the king, by virtue of his prerogative, sent commissions over the kingdom to inquire into the right to all franchises, quo jure et quore nomine illi retinent, etc.; and, as they were grants from the crown, if those in possession of them could not show a charter, the franchises were seized into the king's hands without any judicial proceeding. Like all other original civil writs, the writ of quo warranto issued out of chancery, and was returnable alternatively before the king's bench or justices in eyre. 2 Inst. 277-283, 494-499; 2 Term R. 549. See 4 Term R. 381; 2 Strange, 819, 1196.

——In Modern Practice. The writ of quo warranto has given place to an information in the nature of quo warranto. 3 Bl. Comm. 263; 1 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 382; 58 N. H. 113. Such informations ordinarily issue in the name of the attorney general, either ex officio, or on the relation of some private person.

The remedy by quo warranto is the proper one to try title to public (1 Ark. 279; 33 Miss. 509) or corporate office (20 Fla. 784; 61 Pa. 339), or to revoke a charter or franchise (8 Vt. 489; 45 Wis. 579).

The judgment on an information in the nature of quo warranto is not punitive, but extends only to ouster from the office or franchise usurped. 3 Bl. Comm. 263; 4 Wis. 567.

QUOAD HOC (Lat. as to this; with respect to this). A term frequently used to signify, as to the thing named, the law is so and so.

QUOCUMQUE MODO VELIT, QUOCUMque modo possit. In any way he wishes, in any way he can. 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 484, 492.

QUOD A QUOQUE POENAE NOMINE exactum est id eidem restituere nemo cogitur. That which has been exacted as a penalty no one is obliged to restore. Dig. 50. 17. 46.

QUOD AB INITIO NON VALET, IN TRACtu temporis non convalescet. What is not good in the beginning cannot be rendered good by time. Merlin, Repert. verb. Regle de Droit. This, though true in general, is not universally so. 4 Coke, 26; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 166, 172, note.

QUOD AD JUS NATURALE ATTINET, omnes homines aequales sunt. All men are equal as far as the natural law is concerned. Dig. 50. 17. 32.

QUOD AEDIFICATUR IN AREA LEGATA cedit legato. Whatever is built upon land given by will passes with the gift of the land. Amos & F. Fixt. (2d Ed.) 246; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 377.

QUOD ALIAS BONUM ET JUSTUM EST, si per vim vel fraudem petatur, malum et injustum efficitur. What is otherwise good and just, if sought by force or fraud, becomes bad and unjust. 3 Coke, 78.

QUOD ALIAS NON FUIT LICITUM NEcessitas licitum facit. Necessity makes that lawful which otherwise were unlawful. Fleta, lib. 5, c. 23, § 14.

QUOD APPROBO NON REPROBO. What I accept I do not reject. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 636.

QUOD ATTINET AD JUS CIVILE, SERVI pro nullis habentur, non tamen et jure naturali, quia, quod ad jus naturale attinet, omnes homines aequali sunt. So far as the civil law is concerned, slaves are not reckoned as persons, but not so by natural law, for, so far as regards natural law, all men are equal. Dig. 50. 17. 32.

QUOD BILLA CASSETUR. That the bill be quashed. The common-law form of a judgment sustaining a plea in abatement, where the proceeding is by bill, i. e., by a capias instead of by original writ.

QUOD CLERICI BENEFICIATI DE CANcellaria. A writ to exempt a clerk of the chancery from the contribution towards the proctors of the clergy in parliament, etc. Reg. Orig. 261.

QUOD CLERICI NON ELIGANTUR IN OFficio ballivi, etc. A writ which lay for a clerk who, by reason of some land he had, was made, or was about to be made, bailiff, beadle, reeve, or some such officer, to obtain exemption from serving the office. Reg. Orig. 187.

QUOD COMPUTET (Lat. that he account). The name of an interlocutory judgment in an action of account render. Also, the name of a decree in the case of creditors' bills against executors or administrators. Such a decree directs the master to take the accounts between the deceased and all his creditors, to cause the creditors, upon due and public notice, to come before him to prove their debts, at a certain place and within a limited period, and also directs the master to take an account of all personal estate of the deceased in the hands of the executor or administrator. Story, Eq. Jur. § 548. See "Judgment."

QUOD CONSTAT CLARE, NON DEBET verificari. What is clearly apparent need not be proved. 10 Mod. 150.

QUOD CONSTAT CURIAE OPERE TESTium non indiget. What appears to the court needs not the help of witnesses. 2 Inst. 662.

QUOD CONTRA JURIS RATIONEM RECeptum est, non est producendum ad consequentias. What has been admitted against the reason of the law ought not to be drawn into precedents. Dig. 50. 17. 141; 12 Coke, 75.

QUOD CONTRA LEGEM FIT, PRO INfecto habetur. What is done contrary to the law is considered as not done. 4 Coke, 31. No one can derive any advantage from such an act.

QUOD CUM (Lat.) In pleading. For that whereas. A form of introducing matter of inducement in those actions in which introductory matter is allowed to explain the nature of the claim; as, assumpsit and case. Hardr. 1; 2 Show, 180.

This form is not allowable to introduce the matter which constitutes the gravamen of the charge, as such matter must be stated by positive averment, while quod cum introduces the matter which depends upon it by way of recital merely. Hence, in those actions, as trespass vi et armis, in which the complaint is stated without matter of inducement, quod cum cannot be properly used. 2 Bulst. 214. But its improper use is cured by verdict. 1 Browne (Pa.) 68; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (C 86).

QUOD DATUM EST ECCLESIAE, DAtum est Deo. What is given to the church is given to God. 2 Inst. 590.

QUOD DEMONSTRANDI CAUSA ADDItur rei satis demonstratae, frustra fit. What is added to a thing sufficiently palpable, for the purpose of demonstration, is vain. 10 Coke, 113.

QUOD DUBITAS, NE FECERIS. When you doubt about a thing, do not do it. 1 Hale, P. C. 310.

QUOD EI DEFORCEAT (Lat.) In English law. The name of a writ given by St. Westminster II. (13 Edw. I. c. 4), to the owners of a particular estate, as for life, in dower, by the curtesy, or in fee tail, who are barred of the right of possession by a recovery had against them through their default or nonappearance in a possessory action, by which the right was restored to him who had been thus unwarily deforced by his own default. 3 Bl. Comm. 193.

QUOD ENIM SEMEL AUT BIS EXISTIT, praetereunt legislatores. That which never happens but once or twice, legislators pass by. Dig. 1. 3. 17.

QUONIAM ATTACHIAMENTA (Law Lat.) Since the attachments. One of the oldest books in the Scotch law; so called from the two first words of the volume. Bell, Dict. Still sometimes cited in argument, in the Scotch courts. 7 Wilson & S. 9.

QUORUM. Used substantively, quorum signifies the number of persons belonging to a legislative assembly, a corporation, society, or other body, required to transact business. There is a difference between an act done by a definite number of persons, and one performed by an indefinite number. In the first case, a majority is required to constitute a quorum, unless the law expressly directs that another number may make one. 88 Pa. St. 42; 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 394; 7 Cow.(N. Y.) 402. In the latter case, any number who may be present may act, the majority of those present having, as in other cases, the right to act. 1 Barn. & C. 492.

In the absence of special provision, a majority is a quorum (12 Metc. [Mass.] 99; 13 Ind. 581), but sometimes the law requires a greater number than a bare majority to form a quorum. In such case, no quorum is present until such a number convene.

In the absence of a rule of procedure to the contrary, the presence of a quorum in a legislative body can only be ascertained from the votes recorded on the particular matter submitted (117 N. C. 158); but a rule authorizing the presiding officer to count members present and not voting to make up a quorum is within the power of a legislative body (144 U. S. 1).

QUORUM PRAETEXTA, NEC AUGET nec minuit sententiam, sed tantum confirmat prae missa. "Quorum praetexta" neither increases nor diminishes the meaning, but only confirms that which went before. Plowd. 52.

QUORUM UNUS. One of the quorum. In England it was formerly the practice to appoint certain justices of the peace, one of whom must be present for the transaction of certain business, such justices being named in the commissions of all the justices (quorum aliquem vestrum A. B., C. D., etc., unem esse volumus). Such justices were called "justices of the quorum." The present practice is to name all the justices, so that the designation is of no practical importance.

QUOT. In Scotch law. The twentieth part of the movables, computed without computation of debts, was so called.

Formerly the bishop was entitled, in all confirmations, to the quot of the testament. Ersk. Inst. 3. 9. 11.

QUOTA. A proportionate share of anything required to be paid, supplied, or furnished.

RAGMAN'S ROLL, or RAGIMUND'S ROLL. A roll, called from one Ragimund, or Ragimont, a legate in Scotland, who, summoning all the beneficed clergymen in that kingdom, caused them on oath to give in the true value of their benefices, according to which they were afterwards taxed by the court of Rome. Wharton.

RAILROAD, or RAILWAY. The terms "railroad" and "railway" are synonymous. 30 Minn. 524. Their significance varies with the context, being used sometimes to include all appurtenances (46 N. J. Law, 289; 58 Pa. St. 252), and sometimes as including only the immovable structure, graded and railed for the use of trains (93 U. S. 442). Ordinarily, when used without qualifying words, the term "railroad" means those railroads whose motive power is steam, but in some connections it has been held to include street or horse railroads. 24 Ill. 52.

RAISE. To create; to bring into existence. The term is used in various senses, thus, to "raise" a use is to create it; to "raise" an issue is to file such a plea as to make an issue. Facts are said to "raise" a presumption when they give rise thereto.

RAISING PORTIONS. A term used in old English law for the charging of a devise to one child of testator, with the payment of certain sums to others.

RAN (Saxon). Open theft or robbery. Cowell.

RANGE. In the United States government surveys of lands, the "townships" (q. v.) are ranged in tiers east or west of a given meridian, such ranges therefore being a row of towns in a north and south direction. The "towns" are tiers lying at right angles to the ranges.

RANK. The order or place in which certain officers are placed in the army and navy, in relation to others. The term is sometimes applied to debts or securities to indicate their precedence in respect to order of payment.

——In English Law. Excessive; too large in amount; as a rank modus. 2 Bl. Comm. 30.

RANKING. In Scotch law. Determining the order in which the debts of a bankrupt ought to be paid.

RANSOM. A price of redemption of a captive or prisoner of war, or of captured property.

——In Old English Law. A price paid for the pardon of some great offense. It differs from amercement in that it excuses from corporal punishment. Cowell.

RANSOM BILL. A contract for payment of ransom of a captured vessel, with stipulations of safe-conduct, if she pursue a certain course and arrive in a certain time. If found out of time or course, the safe-conduct is void. Wheaton, Int. Law, 107*. The payment cannot be enforced in England, during the war, by an action on the contract, but can in this country. 1 Kent, Comm. 104, 105; 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 141; 2 Gall. (U. S.) 325.

RAPE.

——In Criminal Law. Unlawful carnal knowledge of a woman by force and without her consent.

(1) Carnal knowledge is essential (67 Wis. 552), but by statute in most states, the slightest penetration is enough (see 45 Conn. 256; 102 N. Y. 234), though, at common law, emission was essential (1 East, P. C. 439). (2) The carnal knowledge must be unlawful; thus, forcible carnal knowledge by a man of his wife against her will is not rape. 1 Hale, P. C. 629. (3) The carnal knowledge must be by force, but constructive force, as by threats or intimidation, is sufficient (39 Fla. 155; 45 Conn. 263; 139 Ind. 531); and where the woman is insane or insensible, it has been said that the force necessary to accomplish the act is sufficient (53 Ark. 425; 50 Iowa, 189); but the weight of authority is that fraud (2 Swan [Tenn.] 394; 6 Ala. 765), as by personating the woman's husband (11 Cox, C. C. 191; 7 Conn. 54), will not take the place of force (but see 94 Ind. 96). (4) The carnal knowledge must be without the woman's consent. The phrase "against her will" is sometimes substituted, but it means no more than "without her consent." 22 Wis. 445; 25 Mich. 356. Unless asleep or insensible (12 Cox, C. C. 311), or intimidated by threats (9 Car. & P. 748), the woman must resist "to the uttermost" (19 Wend. [N. Y.] 192; 13 Mich. 427), to the point of inability longer to resist (59 N. Y. 374); and acquiescence, however tardy or reluctant, prevents the offense from being rape (82 Va. 653; 124 Ill. 576).

——In Old English Law. A division of a county similar to a hundred, but oftentimes containing in it more hundreds than one.

RAPE OF THE FOREST (Law Lat. raptus forestae). In old English law. Trespass committed in a forest by violence. Cowell; Spelman; LL. Hen. I. c. 11.

RAPE REEVE. In English law. The chief officer of a rape (q. v.) 1 Bl. Comm. 116.

RAPINA (Lat. from rapere, to drag, or carry away forcibly).

——In the Civil Law. The violent taking from the person of another of money or goods for the sake of gain; robbery from the person. Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 23, Nos. 1, 2; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 2, § 1071.

——In Old English Law. Open and violent larceny from the person; robbery. St. 14 Car. II. c. 22; Cowell; 4 Bl. Comm. 242.

RAPTOR. In old English law, a ravisher.

RAPTU HAEREDIS. A writ for taking away an heir holding in socage, of which there were two sorts: One when the heir was married; the other when he was not. Reg. Orig. 163.

RAPUIT (Lat. from rapere, to ravish). In old English law. Ravished. A technical word in old indictments. 2 East, 30; Wharton, Am. Crim. Law, § 401.

RASE (Law Lat. raseria; from Lat. rasus, shaved or scraped). In old English law. Strike; struck measure; that in which the commodity measured was made even with the top of the measure, by scraping or striking off all that was above it. An old ordinance for bakers, brewers, etc., provided that toll should be taken "by the rase, and not by the heap or cantel." Cowell quotes the provision, but strangely overlooks the meaning it so clearly expresses, and makes rase (raseria) to be "a measure of corn, now disused."

RASURA (Law Lat; from Lat. radere, to scrape). In old English law. A rasure. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 10, §§ 3, 4.

RASURE (Law Fr. rasure, rasoure; from Lat. rasura, from radere, to scrape). A scraping off; the removal of one or more words from an instrument, by scraping the writing off or out. One of the modes by which a deed or other instrument may be avoided, or rendered of no effect. 2 Bl. Comm. 308; Shep. Touch. 55, 68, 71; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 29, § 4. "Rasure" is properly distinguished from "obliteration," which is effected by marking out the writing with pen and ink, or blotting it out by other means; but the terms are sometimes used as synonymous. See 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 499.

RASUS, or RASUM (Law Lat. from radere). In old English law. Rased; erased. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 54, § 12. A rase; a measure of onions, containing twenty fiones, and each fionis twenty-five heads. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 12.

Struck; scraped off. Mensura rasa, struck measure. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 82, § 1.

RATAM REM HABERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To hold a thing ratified; to ratify or confirm it (comprobare, agnoscere). Dig. 46. 8. 12. 1, et per tot.

RATE OF EXCHANGE. In commercial law. The actual price at which a bill, drawn in one country upon another country, can be bought or obtained in the former country at any given time. Story, Bills, § 31.

RATE TITHES. Tithes charged pro rata on personal property kept within the parish for less than a year.

RATIFICATION. An agreement to adopt an act performed by another for us.

Express ratifications are those made in express and direct terms of assent. Implied ratifications are such as the law presumes from the acts of the principal; as, if Peter buy goods for James, and the latter, knowing the fact, receive them and apply them to his own use.

It is applied in the sense of "confirmation" to various transactions, but it has been said that it applies properly only to agency. 73 Me. 487.

RATIHABITIO (Lat. from ratus, approved, and habere, to hold). In civil and old English law. A holding as approved; approval or ratification.

RATIHABITIO MANDATO AEQUIPARATur. Ratification is equal to a command. Dig. 46. 3. 12. 4; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 771; Story, Ag. (4th Ed.) 302.

RATIHABITION. Confirmation; approbation of a contract; ratification.

RATING.

——In Commerce. The estimate put on the credit and financial resources of a person. There are various institutions or persons who furnish ratings. They are called "mercantile agencies."

——In Shipping. The order or class of a vessel according to her magnitude or force.

RATIO (Lat.) A reason; a cause; a reckoning of an account.

RATIO DECIDENDI. The ground of decision.

RATIO EST FORMALIS CAUSA CONsuetudinis. Reason is the source and mold of custom.

RATIO EST LEGIS ANIMA; MUTATA legis ratione mutatur et lex. Reason is the soul of the law; the reason of the law being changed, the law is also changed. 7 Coke, 7.

RATIO EST RADIUS DIVINI LUMINIS. Reason is a ray of divine light. Co. Litt. 232.

RATIO ET AUCTORITAS DUO CLARISsima mundi lumina. Reason and authority are the two brightest lights in the world. 4 Inst. 320.

RATIO IN JURE AEQUITAS INTEGRA. Reason in law is perfect equity.

RATIO LEGIS. The reason or occasion of a law; the occasion of making a law. Bl. Law Tr. 3.

Grotius distinguishes between "ratio" and "mens," the meaning or intent of a law.

RATIO LEGIS EST ANIMA LEGIS. The reason of the law is the soul of the law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 45.

RATIO NON CLAUDITUR LOCO. Reason is not confined to any place.

RATIO POTEST ALLEGARI DEFICIENte lege, sed vera et legalis et non apparens. Reason may be alleged when the law is defective, but it must be true and legal reason, and not merely apparent. Co. Litt. 191.

RATIONABILE ESTOVERIUM. Alimony.

RATIONALIBUS DIVISIS, WRIT DE. The name of a writ which lies properly when two men have lands in several towns or hamlets, so that the one is seised of the land in one town or hamlet, and the other of the other town or hamlet by himself, and they do not know the bounds of the town or hamlet, nor of their respective lands. This writ lies by one against the other, and the object of it is to fix the boundaries. Fitzh. Nat. Brev.

RATIONE (Lat.) By reason; on account.

Ratione impotentiae, on account of inability. A ground of qualified property in some animals ferae naturae, as in the young ones, while they are unable to fly or run. 2 Bl. Comm. 394; Hale, Anal. § xxvi.

Ratione loci, by reason of place. A ground of ownership in rabbits and hares. Hale, Anal. § xxvi.

Ratione privilegii, by reason of privilege. A ground of ownership in birds or beasts of warren. Hale, Anal. § xxvi.

Ratione soli, on account of the soil; with reference to the soil. Said to be the ground of ownership in bees. 2 Bl. Comm. 393.

Ratione tenurae, by reason of tenure; as a consequence of tenure. 3 Bl. Comm. 230; 1 Maule & S. 435. A phrase in old pleading. Not the same as "by reason of being owner and proprietor." Le Blanc, J., 1 Maule & S. 441. Ratione tenurae implies ex vi termini, something originally annexed to the holding. Id.

RATIONE MATERIAE (Lat.) By reason of the subject matter.

RATIONE PERSONAE (Lat.) By reason of the person concerned; from the character of the person.

RATIONE TENURAE (Law Lat.) By reason of tenure; as a consequence of tenure. 3 Bl. Comm. 230.

RATIONES. In old law. The pleadings in a suit. Rationes exercere, or ad rationes stare, to plead.

RATTENING. The act of trade unionists in causing the tools, clothes, or other property of a workman to be taken away or hidden, in order to compel him to join the union or cease working. It is an offense punishable by fine or imprisonment. 38 & 39 Vict. c. 86, § 7.

RAUNSOM, or RAUNSOME (Law Fr.) In old English law. Ransom; a fine; a severe kind of fine. Sur peyne de raunsome, on pain of ransom. Britt. c. 11. Per raunsome simple ou graund, solonc le fait, by an ordinary or a great ransom, according to the fact. Id. Puny par prison et greve raunsom. Id. c. 48.

RAVISHED. In pleading. A technical word necessary in an indictment for rape.

No other word or circumlocution will answer. The defendant should be charged with having "feloniously ravished" the prosecutrix, or woman mentioned in the indictment. Bac. Abr. "Indictment" (G 1); Comyn, Dig.

"Indictment" (G 6); Hawk. P. C. 2, c. 25, § 56; Cro. Car. 37; 1 Hale, P. C. 628; 2 Hale, P. C. 184; Co. Litt. 184, note (p); 2 Inst. 180; 1 East, P. C. 447. The words "feloniously did ravish and carnally know" imply that the act was done forcibly and against the will of the woman. 12 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 70. See 3 Chit. Crim. Law, 812.

RAVISHMENT. In criminal law. An unlawful taking of a woman, or of an heir in ward; rape.

RAVISHHMENT DE GARD (Law Fr.) An abolished writ, which lay for a guardian by knight's service or in socage, against a person who took from him the body of his ward. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 140; 12 Car. II. c. 3.

RAVISHMENT OF WARD. In English law. The marriage of an infant ward without the consent of the guardian. It is punishable by St. Westminster II. c. 35.

RE (Lat.) In the matter of.

RE. FA. LO. An abbreviation of recordari facias loquelam (q. v.)

RE, verbis, scripto, consensu, traditione,
Junctura, vestes sumere pacta solent.

From the thing [itself], from words, from writing, from consent, from delivery, from union, agreements usually take their vestments. A couplet formerly in use, framed to express (in aid of the memory) the six different modes in which obligation might be contracted, which were fancifully termed its "vestments," or garments, that is, the forms in which it was clothed. It is twice quoted by Bracton, who explains the six forms in detail. Bracton, fol. 16b; Id. fols. 99-101. It is thus expressed in the prose of Britton: Obligation doit estre vestue de v. maneres de garnementz; de chose, de parole, de escript, de unite de volounte, de bail, de joynture. Britt. c. 28. It seems to be a mere extension of the fourfold division of the Institutes: Aut re, aut verbis, aut literis, aut consensu. Inst. 3. 14. 2. And see Dig. 44. 7. 52.

REAL.

——At Common Law. A term which is applied to land in its most enlarged signification. "Real security," therefore, means the security of mortgages or other incumbrances affecting lands. 2 Atk. 806; 2 Ves. Sr. 547.

——In Civil Law. That which relates to a thing, whether it be movable or immovable, lands or goods; thus, a "real injury" is one which is done to a thing, as a trespass to property, whether it be real or personal, in the common-law sense. A real statute is one which relates to a thing, in contradistinction to such as relate to a person.

REAL ACTION.

——In the Civil Law. One by which a person seeks to recover his property which is in the possession of another. Dig. 50. 16. 16. It is to be brought against the person who has possession.

——At Common Law. One brought for the specific recovery of lands, tenements, or hereditaments. Steph. Pl. 3.

They are droitural when they are based upon the right of property, and possessory when based upon the right of possession. They are either writs of right; writs of entry, which lie in the per, the per et cui, or the post, upon disseisin, intrusion, or alienation; writs ancestral possessory, as mort d'ancestor, aiel, besaiel, cosinage, or nuper obiit. Comyn, Dig. "Actions" (D 2).

These actions were always local, and were to be brought in the county where the land lay. Bracton, 189, 414. They are now pretty generally laid aside in practice, upon account of the great nicety required in their management, and the inconvenient length of their process,—a much more expeditious method of trying titles being since introduced by other actions, personal and mixed. See Stearns, Real Actions; Booth, Real Actions; Bac. Abr. "Actions;" Comyn, Dig. "Actions;" 3 Bl. Comm. 118.

REAL ASSETS. Lands or real estate in the hands of an heir, chargeable with the payment of the debts of the ancestor. 2 Bl. Comm. 244, 302; 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 436. See "Assets."

REAL BURDEN. In Scotch law. Where a right to lands is expressly granted under the burden of a specific sum, which is declared a burden on the lands themselves, or where the right is declared null if the sum be not paid, and where the amount of the sum, and the name of the creditor in it, can be discovered from the records, the burden is said to be real. Bell, Dict.

REAL CHATTELS. See "Chattel."

REAL CHYMIN (Law Fr.) In old English law. The royal way; the king's highway (regia via). Y. B. P. 6 Edw. III. 48.

REAL COMPOSITION. An agreement made, in England, between the owner of land and the incumbent of a parish, with the consent of the ordinary and the patron of the living, that the land shall for the future be discharged from payment of tithes, by reason of some land or other real recompense given in lieu and satisfaction thereof. But since St. 13 Eliz. c. 10, no real composition can be made for any longer term than three lives, or twenty-one years, and such compositions are now rarely heard of. 2 Bl. Comm. 28. See St. 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 100, § 2, making valid all compositions confirmed in a certain manner.

REAL CONTRACT.

——At Common Law. A contract respecting real property. 3 Rawle (Pa.) 225.

——In Civil Law. Those contracts which require the interposition of a thing (rei) as the subject of them; for instance, the loan for goods to be "specifically returned."

Contracts are divided into those which are formed by the mere consent of the parties, and therefore are called "consensual," such as sale, hiring, and mandate, and those in which it is necessary that there should be something more than mere consent, such as the loan of money, deposit, or pledge, which, from their nature, require the delivery of the thing, whence they are called "real." Poth. Obl. p. 1, c. 1, § 1, art. 2.

REAL COVENANT. A covenant connected with a conveyance of realty, whereby an obligation to pass something real is created, or which is so connected with the realty that he who has the latter is entitled to the benefit of, or is bound to perform, the former. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 145; Shep. Touch. 161; Platt, Cov. 60, 62.

A covenant which is so connected with the realty as to apply to the owner thereof, either in reference to benefit or obligation, whether he be a party to the instrument creating the covenant or not.

A covenant by which the obligor undertakes to pass something real. Co. Litt. 384b; Stearns, Real Actions, 134. See 4 Kent, Comm. 472.

A covenant by which the covenantor binds his heirs. 2 Bl. Comm. 304.

Very considerable confusion exists among the authorities in the use of the term "real covenants." The definition of Blackstone, which determines the character of covenants from the insertion or noninsertion of the word "heir" by the covenantor, is pretty generally rejected. See Platt, Cov. 61; 2 Bl. Comm. 304, note, 305, note. Of the other definitions, that which makes a real covenant an obligation to pass realty is the most ancient. Upon such a covenant the remedy was by voucher or warrantia chartae, and not by the action of covenant.

Together with the disuse of real actions, these covenants gave place to the more modern covenants which furnish the basis of a personal action for damages, and the term "real covenants" lost its ancient signification, and acquired its modern one, as given in the latter part of the first and in the second definition. The covenant to stand seised approaches perhaps more nearly than any covenant still in use to the ancient real covenant.

Covenants are real only when they have entered into the consideration for which land, or some interest therein to which the covenant is annexed, passed between the covenantor and covenantee. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 662, 663.

In England, all covenants for title are held to be real covenants; in the United States, those only which are future in their operation come under this description. 10 Ga. 311.

The object of these covenants is, usually, either to preserve the inheritance, as to keep in repair (3 Lev. 92; 9 Barn. & C. 505; 8 Cow. [N. Y.] 206; 17 Wend. [N. Y.] 148; 1 Dall. [U. S.] 210; 6 Yerg. [Tenn.] 512; 6 Vt. 276; 25 Pa. St. 257; 38 Eng. Law & Eq. 462); to keep buildings insured, and reinstate them if burned (Platt, Cov. 185; 5 Barn. & Adol. 1; 6 Gill & J. [Md.] 372); to continue the relation of landlord and tenant, as to pay rent (5 East, 575; 1 Doug. 183; 1 Wash. C. C. [U. S.] 375); do suit to the lessor's mill (5 Coke, 18; 1 Barn. & C. 410); grind the tenant's corn (2 Yeates [Pa.] 74; 9 Vt. 91); for the renewal of leases (12 East, 469); or to protect the tenant in his enjoyment of the premises, as to warrant and defend (Shep. Touch. 161; 2 Mass. 433; 5 Cow. [N. Y.] 137; 1 Paige, Ch. [N. Y.] 455); to make further assurance (Cro. Car. 503); for quiet enjoyment (Cro. Eliz. 373; 3 Barn. & Ald. 392; 1 C. B. 402; 1 Dev. & B. [N. C.] 94; 23 Me. 383); never to claim or assert title (7 Me. 97; 3 Metc. [Mass.] 121); to remove incumbrances (17 Mass. 586); to release suit and service (Co. Litt. 384b); to produce title deeds in defense of the grantee's title (4 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 393; 10 Law Mag. 353-357; 1 Sim. & S. 449); to supply water to the premises (4 Barn. & Ald. 266); to draw water off from a mill pond (19 Pick. [Mass.] 449); not to establish another mill on the same stream (17 Wend. [N. Y.] 136); not to erect buildings on adjacent land (4 Paige, Ch. [N. Y.] 510); to use the land in a specified manner (13 Sim. 228); generally to create or preserve easements for the benefit of the land granted (4 E. D. Smith [N. Y.] 122; 1 Bradf. [N. Y.] 40; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 240; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 648). See "Covenant."

REAL ESTATE. Landed property, including all estates and interests in lands which are held for life or for some greater estate, and whether such lands be of freehold or copyhold tenure. Wharton.

REAL-ESTATE BROKER. One who engages in the purchase and sale of real estate as a business and occupation, and so holds himself out to the public in that character and capacity.

REAL EVIDENCE. All evidence of which things (or persons regarded as things) is the source; evidence arising from physical indications or appearances. Thus, the production of a dead body is real evidence of the corpus delicti.

REAL INJURY. In the civil law. An injury arising from an unlawful act, as distinguished from a verbal injury, which was done by words. Halifax, Civ. Law, bk. 2, c. 15, notes 3, 4.

REAL LAW.

——At Common Law. A popular term used to denote such parts of the system of common law as concern or relate to real property.

——In Civil Law. A law which relates to specific property, whether movable or immovable.

If real law in any given case relate to immovable property, it is limited in its operation to the territory within which that is situate, real estate being, both by the common and continental laws, subject exclusively to the laws of the government within whose territory it is situate. Story, Confl. Laws, 426, 428. See "Lex Rei Sitae."

REAL PARTY. Practice statutes frequently require that actions be brought in the name of the "real party in interest." As so used, the term means the person having the real beneficial interest in the obligation sued on. Thus, the assignee of a demand is the real party in interest (68 N. Y. 30), as is the person for whose benefit a contract is made by another (138 N. Y. 468; 112 N. Y. 1).

REAL PROPERTY. Something which may be held by tenure, or will pass to the heir of the possessor at his death, instead of his executor, including lands, tenements, and hereditaments, whether the latter be corporeal or incorporeal. 1 Atk. Conv.

In respect to property, "real" and "personal" correspond very nearly with "immovables" and "movables" of the civil law. By the latter, "biens" is a general term for property; and these are classified into movable and immovable, and the latter are subdivided into corporeal and incorporeal. Guyot, Rep. Univ. "Biens."

By "immovables" the civil law intended property which could not be removed at all, or not without destroying the same, together with such movables as are fixed to the freehold, or have been so fixed and are intended to be again united with it, although at the time severed therefrom. Tayl. Civ. Law, 475.

The same distinction and rules of law as to the nature and divisions of property are adopted in Scotland, where, as by the Roman law, another epithet is applied to immovables. They are called "heritables," and go to the heir, as distinguished from "movables," which go to executors or administrators. So, rights connected with or affecting heritable property, such as tithes, servitudes, and the like, are themselves heritable, and in this it coincides with the common law. Ersk. Inst. 192.

In another respect, the Scotch coincides with the common law, in declaring growing crops of annual planting and culture not to be heritable, but to go to executors, etc., although so far a part of the real estate that they would pass by a conveyance of the land. Ersk. Inst. 193; Williams, Ex'rs, 600.

Though the term "real," as applied to property, in distinction from "personal," is now so familiar, it is one of a somewhat recent introduction. While the feudal law prevailed, the terms in use in its stead were "lands," "tenements," or "hereditaments;" and these acquired the epithet of "real" from the nature of the remedy applied by law for the recovery of them, as distinguished from that provided in case of injuries, contracts broken, and the like. In the one case, the claimant or demandant recovered the real thing sued for,—the land itself,—while, ordinarily, in the other he could only recover recompense in the form of pecuniary damages.

The term, it is said, as a means of designation, did not come into general use until after the feudal system had lost its hold, nor till even as late as the commencement of the seventeenth century. One of the earliest cases in which the courts applied the distinctive terms of "real" and "personal" to estates, without any words of explanation, is said to have been that of Wind v. Jekyl (A. D. 1719) 1 P. Wms. 575; Williams, Real Prop. 6, 7. See "Land;" "Tenement;" "Hereditaments;" "Fixtures."

REAL REPRESENTATIVE. He who represents or stands in the place of another with respect to his real property is so termed, in contradistinction to him who stands in the place of another with regard to his personal property, and who is termed the "personal representative." Thus, the heir is the real representative of his deceased ancestor, and the executor or administrator is the personal representative.

REAL RIGHT. In Scotch law. That which entitles him who is vested with it to possess the subject as his own, and, if in the possession of another, to demand from him its actual possession.

It is distinguished from a personal right, which is that of action against a debtor, but without any right in the subject which the debtor is obliged to transfer to him. Real rights affect the subject itself; personal rights are founded in obligation. Ersk. Inst. 479.

By analogy, the right which a claimant in an action of replevin seeks to enforce at common law would be a real one, while the compensation which a plaintiff seeks in an action of assumpsit or of trover, being a pecuniary one, would be personal.

REAL SECURITY. Security consisting of a lien on realty.

REAL SERVITUDE. Praedial servitude (q. v.)

REAL STATUTES. In the civil law. Statutes which have property for their principal object, and do not speak of persons, except in relation to property. Story, Confl. Laws, § 13.

REAL THINGS, or THINGS REAL. In common law. Such things as are permanent, fixed, and immovable, which cannot be carried out of their place; as lands and tenements. 2 Bl. Comm. 15. Things substantial and immovable, and the rights and profits annexed to or issuing out of them. 1 Steph. Comm. 156. This expression is in strictness clearly pleonastic, the sense of thing (res) being already implied in the word "real," as will at once appear by giving it a Latin form, res reales.

REAL WARRANDICE. In Scotch law, an infeoffment of one tenement given in security of another.

REAL WRONG. In old English law. An injury to the freehold.

REALITY. In foreign law. That quality of laws which concerns property or things (quae ad rem spectant). Story, Confl. Laws, § 16. See "Personality."

REALM. A kingdom; a country. 1 Taunt. 270; 4 Campb. 289; Rose, 387.

REALTY. A term sometimes used as a collective noun for real property or estate,— more generally to imply that that of which it is spoken is of the nature or character of real property or estate.

The quality of being real, or relating to lands and tenements; things real. 1 Steph. Comm. 156.

REASONABLE ACT. This term signifies such an act as the law requires. When an act is unnecessary, a party will not be required to perform it as a reasonable act. 9 Price, 43; Yelv. 44; Platt, Cov. 342, 157; 42 Mo. 88.

REASONABLE AID. The ordinary or customary aids were so termed. See "Aids."

REASONABLE AND PROBABLE CAUSE. A term sometimes used to express the cause which will justify the institution of a criminal prosecution. It does not appear to differ in meaning from "probable cause," which is the more usual expression. 97 U. S. 642. See "Probable Cause."

REASONABLE CARE. Such care and diligence as an ordinarily prudent man would exercise under the same circumstances. It is synonymous with "ordinary care." 34 Wis. 318; 79 Ga. 44.

The term is altogether a relative one, dependent on the circumstances, and the nature of the duty owed. See 25 Md. 521.

REASONABLE DOUBT. "The term 'reasonable doubt' is almost incapable of any definition which will add much to what the words themselves imply." Mitchell, J., in 38 Minn. 439.

The most commonly quoted definition is that of Chief Justice Shaw: "An abiding conviction to a moral certainty" (5 Cush. [Mass.] 320); but it has been held that "moral certainty is not equivalent to an absence of reasonable doubt" (47 Ala. 78). It has been defined by negation as not a vague or whimsical doubt (34 Iowa, 520), not a mere conjecture (36 Ala. 211), etc. A practical definition upheld in some jurisdictions is that it is such a doubt as would cause a man to hesitate before acting in his own most important business concerns (10 Minn. 407); but this has been disapproved (1 Dak. 452), and, in general, no affirmative equivalent has ever been given which has not been disapproved in another jurisdiction.

REASONABLE PART. In old English law. That share of a man's goods which the law gave to his wife and children after his decease. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 122.

REASONABLE TIME. The term is entirely relative and dependent on circumstances. "Quam longum debet esse rationabile tempus non definiture in lege, sed pendet ex discretione justiciariorum. Co. Litt. 50.

REASSURANCE. When an insurer is desirous of lessening his liability, he may procure some other insurer to insure him from loss, for the insurance he has made. This is called "reassurance."

REATTACHMENT. A second attachment of him who was formerly attached, and dismissed the court without day, by the not coming of the justices, or some such casualty. Reg. Orig. 35.

REBATE. In mercantile law. Discount; the abatement of interest in consequence of prompt payment; the repayment of a part on compliance with some condition.

REBEL. A citizen or subject who unjustly and unlawfully takes up arms against the constituted authorities of the nation, to deprive them of the supreme power, either by resisting their lawful and constitutional orders in some particular matter, or to impose on them conditions. Vattel, liv. 3, § 328. In another sense, it signifies a refusal to obey a superior, or the commands of a court.

REBELLION. In criminal law. The taking up arms traitorously against the government; the forcible opposition and resistance to the laws and process lawfully issued.

If the rebellion amount to treason, it is punished by the laws of the United States with death. If it be a mere resistance of process, it is generally punished by fine and imprisonment. See Dalloz; Pen. Code, 209.

REBELLION, COMMISSION OF. In old English practice. A writ issuing out of chancery to compel the defendant to appear.

REBELLIOUS ASSEMBLY. A gathering of twelve persons or more, intending, going about, or practicing unlawfully and of their own authority to change any laws of the realm; or to destroy the inclosure of any park or ground inclosed, banks of fish ponds, pools, conduits, etc., to the intent the same shall remain void, or that they shall have way in any of the said grounds; or to destroy the deer in any park, fish in ponds, coneys in any warren, dove houses, etc.; or to burn sacks of corn; or to abate rents or prices of victuals, etc. See Cowell.

REBOUTER. To repel or bar. The action of the heir by the warranty of his ancestor is called to "rebut" or "repel."

REBUS SIC STANTIBUS (Lat.) At this point of affairs; in the condition of things.

REBUT. To contradict; to do away. Thus, every homicide is presumed to be murder unless the contrary appears from evidence which proves the death; and this presumption it lies on the defendant to rebut, by showing that it was justifiable or excusable. Alis. Sc. Crim. Law, 48.

REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION. In the law of evidence. A presumption which may be rebutted by evidence. Otherwise called a "disputable" presumption. A species of legal presumption which holds good until disproved. Best, Pres. § 25; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 33.

REBUTTER. In pleading. The defendant's third pleading, being his answer to the surrejoinder.

REBUTTING EVIDENCE. That evidence which is given by a party in the cause to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove facts given in evidence on the other side. The term "rebutting evidence" is more particularly applied to that evidence given by the plaintiff to explain or repel the evidence given by the defendant.

RECALL A JUDGMENT. To reverse a judgment on a matter of fact. The judgment is then said to be recalled or revoked; and when it is reversed for an error of law, it is said simply to be reversed, quod judicium reversetur.

RECAPTION. The act of a person who has been deprived of the custody of another, to which he is legally entitled, by which he peaceably regains the custody of such person; or of the owner of personal or real property, who has been deprived of his possession, by which he peaceably retakes possession.

The rule of law is that one who has been wrongfully deprived of a person to whose custody he has a right (3 Bl. Comm. 4; 15 Barb. [N. Y.] 590; 13 Pick. [Mass.] 36; 19 Ga. 27), or of property, real or personal, to the possession of which he is entitled (11 N. H. 540; 13 Wend. [N. Y.] 256; 25 Vt. 620; 18 Minn. 355; 5 Watts [Pa.] 543), may, without legal process, retake the same wherever he may find it, if he can do so without a breach of the peace (11 Pick. [Mass.] 387; 73 N. Y. 529), though it is held in England (10 C. B. [N. S.] 713), and in some states (6 Rand. [Va.] 457; 59 Ill. 234), that so much force as is necessary may be used.

RECAPTURE. The recovery from the enemy, by a friendly force, of a prize by him captured.

RECEDITUR A PLACITIS JURIS, POTIUS quam injuriae et delicta maneant impunita. Positive rules of law will be receded from rather than crimes and wrongs should remain unpunished. Bac. Max. reg. 12; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 9. This applies only to such maxims as are called placita juris. These will be dispensed with rather than crimes should go unpunished, quia salus populi suprema lex, because the public safety is the supreme law.

RECEIPTOR. In Massachusetts. A name given to the person who, on a trustee process being issued and goods attached, becomes surety to the sheriff to have them forthcoming on demand, or in time to respond the judgment, when the execution shall be issued; upon which the goods are bailed to him. Story, Bailm. § 124. See "Attachment."

RECEIVER. One who receives money to the use of another to render an account. Story, Eq. Jur. § 446.

A person standing indifferent between the parties, who is appointed by the court to take the charge and management of property pending litigation, or for the benefit of the persons who may ultimately be entitled to it. 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 421.

Receivers are appointed in various proceedings and for various special purposes, but the general design of a receiver is to hold and protect the subject of litigation, whether it be specific property, or the assets of an insolvent.

RECEIVER GENERAL OF THE DUCHY of Lancaster. An officer of the duchy court, who collects all the revenues, fines, forfeitures, and assessments within the duchy.

RECEIVER GENERAL OF THE PUBLIC revenue. In English law. An officer appointed in every county to receive the taxes granted by parliament, and remit the money to the treasury.

RECEIVER OF THE FINES. An English officer who receives the money from persons who compound with the crown on original writs sued out of chancery. Wharton.

RECEIVERS AND TRIERS OF PETITIONS. The mode of receiving and trying petitions to parliament was formerly judicial rather than legislative, and the triers were committees of prelates, peers, and judges, and, latterly, of the members generally. Brown.

RECEIVERS' CERTIFICATES. Certificates of indebtedness issued by a receiver, as surety for money borrowed, to carry on the receivership. They are usually made a first lien on the property. See 117 U. S. 434.

RECEIVERS OF WRECK. Persons appointed by the English board of trade. The duties of a receiver of wreck are to take steps for the preservation of any vessel stranded or in distress within his district; to receive and take possession of all articles washed on shore from the vessel; to use force for the suppression of plunder and disorder; to institute an examination on oath with respect to the vessel; and, if necessary, to sell the vessel, cargo, or wreck. Merch. Ship. Act 1854, § 439 et seq.

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS. The offense of receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen.

(1) The property must have been received, but constructive receipt is sufficient (95 N. C. 626; 6 Cox, C. C. 353), and at common law it must have been received from the thief (13 Ired. [N. C.] 338); but under the statutes, the rule seems otherwise (38 Fla. 3; 52 Neb. 727). (2) The property must have been, at the time, stolen property in fact and law. 9 Cush. 284. (3) The receiver must know at the time that it was stolen (78 N. C. 491; 60 Ill. 119), but knowledge of circumstances from which any man of ordinary observation could have known that it was stolen is enough (33 Ala. 434; 96 Iowa, 299). (4) The property must be received with fraudulent intent, but the intent need not be lucri causa, an intent to aid the thief being sufficient. 101 Ill. 16; 26 Tex. App. 205. An intent to hold for a reward is a fraudulent intent. 37 Ohio St. 63.

RECENS SECTA (or INSECUTIO) (Law Lat.) In old English law. Fresh suit; fresh pursuit; pursuit of a thief immediately after the discovery of the robbery. 1 Bl. Comm. 297.

RECEPTUS (Lat.) In civil law. The name sometimes given to an arbitrator, because he had been received or chosen to settle the differences between the parties. Dig. 4. 8; Code, 2. 56.

RECESSION. A regrant; the act of returning the title of a country to a government which formerly held it, by one which has it at the time; as, the recession of Louisiana, which took place by the treaty between France and Spain, of October 1, 1800. See 2 White, Coll. 516.

RECESSUS (Lat. from recedere, to go back). In old English law. A going from; a going off or out of land. Cum libero accessu et recessu, with free access and recess [ingress and egress]. Bracton, fol. 231b.

RECESSUS MARIS (Lat.) In old English law. A going back; reliction or retreat of the sea. Hale de Jur. Mar. par. 1, c. 6.

RECETOUR, or RECETTOUR (Law Fr.) In old English law. A receiver or harborer of a felon; an accessary after the fact. Britt. c. 24. One who received and concealed a returned outlaw. Id. c. 12.

RECETTEMENT (Law Fr.) In old English law. Receiptment; the receiving and harboring a felon. Del consentment ou del recettement de ceux felons a escient, of consenting to or harboring such felons knowingly. Britt. c. 1.

RECHASER (Law Fr.) To drive back. Y. B. M. 11 Hen. VI. 4.

RECHATE (Law Fr.) Ransom. Faire rechat' du char et du saunk, to make ransom of flesh and of blood. Y. B. M. 7 Edw. II. 214.

RECHATER (Law Fr.) To ransom; to buy back. Kelham.

RECIDIVE. In French law. The state of an individual who commits a crime or misdemeanor, after having once been condemned for a crime or misdemeanor; a relapse.

Many statutes provide that, for a second offense, punishment shall be increased. In those cases the indictment should set forth the crime or misdemeanor as a second offense.

The second offense must have been committed after the conviction for the first. A defendant could not be convicted of a second offense, as such, until after he had suffered a punishment for the first. Dalloz.

RECIPROCAL CONTRACT. In civil law. One by which the parties enter into mutual engagements.

They are divided into perfect and imperfect. When they are perfectly reciprocal, the obligation of each of the parties is equally a principal part of the contract, such as sale, partnership, etc. Contracts imperfectly reciprocal are those in which the obligation of one of the parties only is a principal obligation of the contract; as, mandate, deposit, loan for use, and the like. In all reciprocal contracts, the consent of the parties must be expressed. Poth. Obl. note 9; Civ. Code La. arts. 1758, 1759.

RECIPROCITY. Mutuality; state, quality, or character of that which is reciprocal.

RECITAL. The repetition of some former writing, or the statement of something which has been done. It is useful to explain matters of fact which are necessary to make the transaction intelligible. 2 Bl. Comm. 298.

——In Contracts. The preliminary statement of facts explanatory of the purpose for which the contract is made, or the reasons which led to its execution.

——In Pleading. A statement of matter introductory to an averment.

RECLAIM. To demand again; to insist upon a right; as, when a defendant for a consideration received from the plaintiff has covenanted to do an act, and fails to do it, the plaintiff may bring covenant for the breach, or assumpsit to reclaim the consideration. 1 Caines (N. Y.) 47.

RECLAIMING BILL. In Scotch law. A petition for review of an interlocutor, pronounced in a sheriff's or other inferior court. It recites verbatim the interlocutor, and, after a written argument, ends with a prayer for the recall or alteration of the interlocutor, in whole or in part. Bell, Dict. "Reclaiming Petition;" Shaw, Dig. 394.

RECOGNITION. Adoption; ratification (q. v.) An acknowledgment that something which has been done by one man in the name of another was done by authority of the latter.

A recognition by the principal of the agency of another in the particular instance, or in similar instances, is evidence of the authority of the agent, so that the recognition may be either express or implied. As an instance of an implied recognition may be mentioned the case of one who subscribes policies in the name of another, and, upon a loss happening, the latter pays the amount. 1 Campb. 43, note (a); 4 Campb. 88; 1 Esp. 61.

RECOGNITIONE ADNULLANDA PER VIM et duritiem facta. A writ to the justices of the common bench for sending a record touching a recognizance, which the recognizor suggests was acknowledged by force and duress; that if it so appear the recognizance may be annulled. Reg. Orig. 183.

RECOGNITORS. In English law. The name by which the jurors impanelled on an assize are known. 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 174.

RECOGNIZANCE. An obligation of record, entered into before a court or officer duly authorized for that purpose, with a condition to do some act required by law, which is therein specified. 2 Bl. Comm. 341.

The liability of bail above in civil cases, and of the bail in all cases in criminal matters, must be evidenced by a recognizance, as the sheriff has no power to discharge upon a bail bond being given to him in these cases. See 4 Bl. Comm. 297.

RECOGNIZE. To try; to examine in order to determine the truth of a matter. 3 Bl. Comm. Append. No. III. § 4; Bracton, 179.

To enter into a recognizance.

RECOGNIZEE. He for whose use a recognizance has been taken.

RECOGNIZOR. He who enters into a recognizance.

RECOLEMENT. In French law. The reading and re-examination by a witness of a deposition, and his persistence in the same, or his making such alteration as his better recollection may enable him to do after having read his deposition. Without such re-examination, the deposition is void. Poth. Proc. Crim. § 4, art. 4.

RECOMMENDATION. A commendatory account given by a person of another to a third person.

——In Feudal Law. A transfer of allodial lands by the owner to the king, and the return of the same to be held on feudal tenure.

RECOMMENDATORY. Advisory. "Precatory" is the more usual term.

RECOMPENSATION. In Scotch law. An allegation by the plaintiff of compensation on his part, made in answer to a compensation or set-off pleaded by the defendant in answer to the plaintiff's demand.

RECOMPENSE. A reward for services; remuneration for goods or other property.

In maritime law, there is a distinction between "recompense" and "restitution." When goods have been lost by jettison, if at any subsequent period of the voyage the remainder of the cargo be lost, the owner of the goods lost by jettison cannot claim restitution from the owners of the other goods; but in the case of expenses incurred with a view to the general benefit, it is clear that they ought to be made good to the party, whether he be an agent employed by the master in a foreign port, or the shipowner himself.

RECOMPENSE OF RECOVERY IN value. A phrase applied to the matter recovered in a common recovery, after the vouchee has disappeared, and judgment is given for the demandant. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2093.

RECONDUCTION. In civil law. A renewing of a former lease; relocation. Dig. 19. 2. 13. 11; Code Nap. arts. 1737-1740.

RECONTINUANCE. This word seems to be used to signify that a person has recovered an incorporeal hereditament of which he had been wrongfully deprived. Thus, "A. is disseised of a mannor, whereunto an advowson is appendant, an estranger [i. e., neither A. nor the disseisor] usurpes to the advowson; if the disseisee [A.] enter into the mannor, the advowson is recontinued again, which was severed by the usurpation. * * * And so note a diversitie between a recontinuance and a remitter; for a remitter cannot be properly, unlesse there be two titles; but a recontinuance may be where there is but one." Co. Litt. 363b.

RECONVENIRE (Lat.) In the canon and civil law. To make a cross demand upon the actor or plaintiff. 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 14, and note (r.)

RECONVENTIO (Lat. from reconvenire, q. v.) In the civil and canon law. A cross demand by the reus (defendant) upon the actor (plaintiff); a proceeding in the nature of a cross bill in equity. Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 1, note 40; Calv. Lex; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 22, § 9; Gilb. For. Rom. 45, 46; Story, Eq. Pl. § 402. Considered to be the origin of a cross bill. Id.

RECONVENTION.

——In the Civil Law. A species of cross bill. Story, Eq. Pl. § 402.

——In Louisiana and Texas. A plea in the nature of set-off, by which any matter connected with or incident to the subject of the main action may be asserted. See 11 La. 309; 5 Tex. 502.

RECONVERSION. That imaginary process by which a prior constructive conversion is annulled, and the converted property restored, in contemplation of law, to its original state. Rapalje & L.

RECOPILACION DE INDIAS (Spanish). A collection of Spanish colonial law, promulgated A. D. 1680. See Schmidt, Civ. Law, introd. 94.

RECORD. Record, in its broadest sense, is a memorial, public or private, of what has been done. It is ordinarily applied to public records only, in which sense it is a written memorial made by a public officer, judicial, legislative, or executive, authorized by law to perform that function, and intended to serve as evidence of something written, said, or done. 6 Call (Va.) 78; 1 Dana (Ky.) 595.

Any record required by law to be kept by an officer, or which he keeps as necessary or convenient to the discharge of his official duty, is a public record. 15 Wall. (U. S.) 123; 123 Ind. 197; 1 Pa. St. 224.

A judicial record is the written memorial of proceedings had in court, kept by the proper officers of the court.

The common-law record was an enrollment of the pleadings, a statement in formal language of each proceeding had in the progress of the cause, and the judgment. Steph. Pl. 61.

The more common modern practice is to file the pleadings, etc., with the clerk's entries of proceedings on the trial without enrollment.

——In Appellate Practice. The term "record" is used in two senses, as comprising, generally, all the matters certified and transmitted by the lower court to show the proceedings therein, and in a more limited sense as signifying only the record proper, and not the abstract or bill of exceptions. In this limited sense, it includes the pleadings (22 Ill. 326), the process, and the return thereof (22 Me. 442), the verdict (60 Ill. App. 580) or findings (34 Minn. 330), and judgment (60 Ill. App. 580), but not the clerk's minutes (94 N. Y. 508), the opinion of the court below (140 Ill. 637), interlocutory motions or orders (82 Ind. 524; 109 Ill. 245), the evidence (23 Mich. 526; 91 U. S. 127), though documentary (87 Ind. 221) nor the instructions (72 U. S. 663; 119 Ind. 35).

RECORD, CONVEYANCES BY. Extraordinary assurances; as private acts of parliament, and royal grants.

RECORD, COURTS OF. Those whose judicial acts and proceedings are enrolled in parchment, for a perpetual memorial and testimony, which rolls are called the "records of the court," and are of such high and supereminent authority that their truth is not to be called in question. Every court of record has authority to fine and imprison for contempt of its authority. 3 Broom & H. Comm. 21, 30. See "Court."

RECORD, DEBTS OF. Those which appear to be due by the evidence of a court of record; such as a judgment, recognizance, etc. 2 Broom & H. Comm. 655.

RECORD OF NISI PRIUS. In English law. A transcript from the issue roll. It contains a copy of the pleadings and issue. Steph. Pl. 105.

RECORD, TRIAL BY. See "Trial."

RECORDA SUNT VESTIGIA VETUSTATIS et veritatis. Records are vestiges of antiquity and truth. 2 Rolle, 296.

RECORDARI. A writ in vogue in North Carolina to bring up the proceedings of a justice of the peace into a court of record. It is an adoption of the English writ, Recordari facias loquelam (q. v.) It is used to review matters apparent of record, or when the remedy by appeal is lost without the fault of the party, its general nature and scope being similar to that of certiorari. See 65 N. C. 211; 82 N. C. 236; 89 N. C. 198.

RECORDARI FACIAS LOQUELAM (Lat.) In English practice. A writ commanding the sheriff that he cause the plaint to be recorded which is in his county, without writ, between the parties there named, of the cattle, goods, and chattels of the complainant taken and unjustly distrained as it is said, and that he have the said record before the court on a day therein named, and that he prefix the same day to the parties, that then they may be there ready to proceed in the same plaint. 2 Sellon, Prac. 166.

RECORDATUR (Lat.) An order or allowance that the verdict returned on the nisi prius roll be recorded. Bac. Abr. "Arbitration," etc. (D).

RECORDER. A judicial officer of some cities, possessing generally the powers and authority of a judge. 3 Yeates (Pa.) 300; 4 Dall. (Pa.) 299. But see 1 Const. (S. C.) 45.

The recorder in New York city is the chief judge of the criminal courts. There are recorders in various other cities in New York state, and also in the counties thereof, having various powers. See Rev. St. N. Y.

Anciently, "recorder" signified to recite or testify on recollection, as occasion might require, what had previously passed in court; and this was the duty of the judges, thence called "recordeurs." Steph. Pl. note 11.

An officer appointed to make record or enrollment of deeds and other legal instruments authorized by law to be recorded.

RECOUPE, or RECOOP (from Law Fr. recouper, to cut again, or to cut out and keep back). To diminish a claim for damages by cutting out or keeping back a part. Cowell interprets it, "to defalk or discount." Where a man had ten pounds issuing out of certain lands, and he disseised the tenant of the land, in an assize brought by the disseisee, the disseisor might recoupe the rent in the damages, in order to avoid circuity of action. 5 Coke, 30a. An executor de son tort is not allowed to retain or recoupe any part of the deceased's goods to satisfy his own debt. Id.; 3 Campb. 282.

This old word has been revived to a considerable extent in modern law. "Where a man brings an action for breach of a contract between him and the defendant, and the latter can show that some stipulation in the same contract was made by the plaintiff, which he has violated, the defendant may if he choose, instead of suing in his turn, recoupe his damages, arising from the breach committed by the plaintiff, whether they be liquidated or not. The law will cut off so much of the plaintiff's claim as the cross damages may come to." Cowen, J., 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 156. See "Recoupment."

RECOUPMENT (Fr. recouper, to cut again). In practice. That right of the defendant, in the same action, to claim damages from the plaintiff, either because he has not complied with some cross obligation of the contract upon which he sues, or because he has violated some duty which the law imposed upon him in the making or performance of that contract. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 483; 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 109; 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 55; 13 N. Y. 151; 3 Ind. 72, 265; 4 Ind. 533; 7 Ind. 200; 9 Ind. 470; 7 Ala. (N. S.) 753; 13 Ala. (N. S.) 587; 16 Ala. (N. S.) 221; 27 Ala. (N. S.) 574; 12 Ark. 699; 16 Ark. 97; 17 Ark. 270; 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 528; 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 239; 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 454; 3 Mich. 281; 4 Mich. 619; 39 Me. 382; 16 Ill. 495; 11 Mo. 415; 18 Mo. 368; 25 Mo. 430.

"Recoupment is distinguished from set-off in these three essential particulars: (1) In being confined to matters arising out of and connected with the transaction or contract on which suit is brought; (2) in having no regard to whether such matters are liquidated or unliquidated; (3) in not being the subject of statutory regulation, but controlled by the common law." 3 Mich. 281. Recoupment belongs to cases where the same contract lays mutual duties and obligations on two parties, and on an action by one for a breach of duty, the other presents a claim of breach of duty under the same contract. In set-off, the position of the defendant is that, though he may owe the plaintiff what he claims, a part or the whole of such debt is paid in reason and justice by a distinct unconnected debt which plaintiff owes him. 2 Pars. Cont. 740.

This is not a new title in the law, although it seems recently to have assumed a new signification. Originally it implied a mere deduction from the claim of the plaintiff, on account of payment in whole or in part, or a former recovery, or some analogous fact. 3 Coke, 65; 4 Coke, 94; 5 Coke, 2, 31; 11 Coke, 51, 52. See note to 6 Nev. & M. 467; Viner, Abr. "Discount," pl. 3, 4, 9, 10; 28 Vt. 413. This meaning has been retained in many modern cases, but under the name of "deduction" or "reduction of damages." 11 East, 232; 1 Maule & S. 318, 323; 5 Maule & S. 6, 10; 4 Burrows, 2133. See "Set-Off."

RECOURSE. See "Without Recourse."

RECOUSSE (Fr.) In French law. Recapture. Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 12, § 23.

RECOVEREE. In old conveyancing. The party who suffered a common recovery.

RECOVERER. The demandant in a common recovery, after judgment has been given in his favor, assumes the name of "recoverer."

RECOVERY. The restoration of a former right, by the solemn judgment of a court of justice. 3 Murph. (N. C.) 169.

A common recovery is a judgment obtained in a fictitious suit, brought against the tenant of the freehold, in consequence of a default made by the person who is last vouched to warranty in such suit. Bac. Tr. 148.

A true recovery, usually known by the name of "recovery" simply, is the procuring a former right by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction; as, for example, when judgment is given in favor of the plaintiff when he seeks to recover a thing or a right.

Common recoveries are considered as mere forms of conveyance or common assurances. Although a common recovery is a fictitious suit, yet the same mode of proceeding must be pursued, and all the forms strictly adhered to, which are necessary to be observed in an adversary suit. The first thing, therefore, necessary to be done in suffering a common recovery is that the person who is to be the demandant, and to whom the lands are to be adjudged, would sue out a writ or praecipe against the tenant of the freehold; whence such tenant is usually called the "tenant to the praecipe." In obedience to this writ, the tenant appears in court, either in person or by his attorney; but, instead of defending the title to the land himself, he calls on some other person, who, upon the original purchase, is supposed to have warranted the title, and prays that the person may be called in to defend the title which he warranted, or otherwise to give the tenant lands of equal value to those he shall lose by the defect of his warranty. This is called the "voucher vocatia," or "calling to warranty." The person thus called to warrant, who is usually called the "vouchee," appears in court, is impleaded, and enters into the warranty, by which means he takes upon himself the defense of the land. The defendant then desires leave of the court to imparl, or confer with the vouchee in private, which is granted of course. Soon after the demandant returns into court, but the vouchee disappears or makes default, in consequence of which it is presumed by the court that he has no title to the lands demanded in the writ, and therefore cannot defend them; whereupon judgment is given for the demandant, now called the "recoverer," to recover the lands in question against the tenant, and for the tenant to recover against the vouchee lands of equal value in recompense for those so warranted by him, and now lost by his default. This is called the "recompense of recovery in value;" but as it is customary for the crier of the court to act, who is hence called the "common vouchee," the tenant can only have a nominal and not a real recompense for the land thus recovered against him by the demandant. A writ of habere facias is then sued out, directed to the sheriff of the county in which the lands thus recovered are situated, and on the execution and return of the writ the recovery is completed. The recovery here described is with single voucher; but a recovery may be, and is frequently, suffered with double, treble, or further voucher, as the exigency of the case may require, in which case there are several judgments against the several vouchees.

Common recoveries were invented by the ecclesiastics in order to evade the statute of mortmain, by which they were prohibited from purchasing, or receiving under the pretense of a free gift, any land or tenements whatever. They have been used in some states for the purpose of breaking the entail of estates. See, generally, Cruise, Dig. tit. 36; 2 Wm. Saund. 42, note 7; 4 Kent, Comm. 487; Pigot, Comm. Rec. passim.

All the learning in relation to common recoveries is nearly obsolete, as they are out of use. Rey, a French writer, in his work Des Institutions Judiciaires de l'Angleterres (tom. ii. p. 221), points out what appears to him the absurdity of a common recovery. As to common recoveries, see 3 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 435; 9 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 330; 1 Yeates (Pa.) 244; 4 Yeates (Pa.) 413; 1 Whart. (Pa.) 139, 151; 2 Rawle (Pa.) 168; 6 Pa. St. 45; 2 Halst. (N. J.) 47; 5 Mass. 438; 6 Mass. 328; 8 Mass. 34; 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 292.

RECREANT. A coward; a poltroon. 3 Bl. Comm. 340.

RECRIMINATION. In the law of divorce.

The defense that the plaintiff has been guilty of such a matrimonial offense as is a ground for divorce. At common law only an offense of the same nature as that for which plaintiff sued was available in recrimination (1 Hagg. Consist. 144; 4 Ecc. 360); but in the United States, the courts refuse, in the absence of statute, to measure the comparative turpitude of the several statutory grounds of divorce, and any one may be pleaded in recrimination (21 N. J. Eq. 331; 72 Wis. 136).

Recrimination is based on the maxim that suitors in equity must come with clean hands, and, if established, is a complete defense.

RECTE (Lat.) In the civil law. Rightly. Dig. 50. 16. 73. As to the interpretation of this word, see Id.

RECTITUDO. Right or justice; legal dues; tribute or payment. Cowell.

RECTO (Lat.) Right. Breve de recto, writ of right.

RECTO DE ADVOCATIONE ECCLESIAE. A writ which lay at common law where a man had right of advowson of a church, and, the parson dying, a stranger had presented. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 30.

RECTO DE CUSTODIA TERRAE ET haeredis. A writ of right of ward of the land and heir. Abolished.

RECTO DE DOTE. A writ of right of dower, which lay for a widow who had received part of her dower, and demanded the residue, against the heir of the husband or his guardian. Abolished. See 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, § 26.

RECTO DE DOTE UNDE NIHIL HABET. A writ of right of dower whereof the widow had nothing, which lay where her deceased husband, having divers lands or tenements, had assured no dower to his wife, and she thereby was driven to sue for her thirds against the heir or his guardian. Abolished.

RECTO DE RATIONABILI PARTE. A writ of right, of the reasonable part, which lay between privies in blood; as brothers in gavelkind, sisters, and other coparceners, for land in fee simple. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 9.

RECTO QUANDO (or QUIA) DOMINUS remisit curiam. A writ of right, when or because the lord had remitted his court, which lay where lands or tenements in the seigniory of any lord were in demand by a writ of right. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 16.

RECTO SUR DISCLAIMER. An abolished writ on disclaimer.

RECTOR. In ecclesiastical law. One who rules or governs. A name given to certain officers of the church.

RECTOR PROVINCIAE (Lat.) In the Roman law. The governor of a province. Code, 1. 40.

RECTORY. In English law. Corporeal real property, consisting of a church, glebe lands, and tithes. 1 Chit. Prac. 163.

RECTUM (Lat.) Right; also a trial or accusation. Bracton; Cowell.

RECTUM ESSE. To be right in court.

RECTUM ROGARE. To ask for right; to petition the judge to do right.

RECTUM, STARE AD. To stand trial or abide by the sentence of the court.

RECTUS IN CURIA (Lat. right in court). The condition of one who stands at the bar, against whom no one objects any offense, or prefers any charge.

When a person outlawed has reversed his outlawry, so that he can have the benefit of the law, he is said to be rectus in curia. Jacob.

RECUPERATIO, i. e., AD REM, PER INjuriam extortam sive detentam, per sententiam judicis restitutio. Recovery, i. e., restitution by sentence of a judge of a thing wrongfully extorted or detained. Co. Litt. 154a.

RECUPERATIO EST ALICUJUS REI IN causam, alterius adductae per judicem acquisitio. Recovery is the acquisition by sentence of a judge of anything brought into the cause of another. Co. Litt. 154a.

RECUPERATORES (Lat.) In Roman law. A species of judges originally established, it is supposed, to decide controversies between Roman citizens and strangers concerning the right to the possession of property requiring speedy remedy, but gradually extended to questions which might be brought before ordinary judges.

After the enlargement of their powers, the difference between them and judges, it is supposed, was simply this: If the praetor named three judges, he called them recuperatores; if one, he called him judex. But opinions on this subject are various. Colman, De Romano judicio recuperatorio. Cicero's oration (Pro Coecin. 1, 3) was addressed to recuperators.

RECURRENDUM EST AD EXTRAORDInarium quando non valet ordinarium. We must have recourse to what is extraordinary when what is ordinary fails.

RECUSANT. In English law. A person who refuses to make the declarations against popery, and promotes, encourages, or professes the popish religion.

RECUSATIO TESTIS. In the civil law, rejection of a witness on the ground of incompetency.

RECUSATION. In civil law. A plea or exception by which the defendant requires that the judge having jurisdiction of the cause should abstain from deciding, upon the ground of interest, or for a legal objection to his prejudice.

A recusation is not a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, but simply to the person of the judge. It may, however, extend to all the judges, as when the party has a suit against the whole court. Poth. Proc. Civ. 1ere pt. ch. 2, § 5. It is a personal challenge of the judge for cause. See 2 La. 390; 6 La. 134.

The challenge of jurors. Code Prac. La. arts. 499, 500. An act, of what nature soever it may be, by which a strange heir, by deeds or words, declares he will not be heir. Dig. 29. 2. 95. See, generally, 1 Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 1; 5 Mart. (La.) 292.

RED BOOK OF THE EXCHEQUER. An ancient record, wherein are registered the holders of lands per baroniam in the time of Henry III., the number of hides of land in certain counties before the Conquest, and the ceremonies on the coronation of Eleanor, wife of Henry III., compiled by Alexander de Swenford, archdeacon of Salop, and treasurer of St. Paul's, who died in 1246. 31 Hen. III.; Jacob; Cowell.

REDDENDO SINGULA SINGULIS (Lat.) Referring particular things to particular persons. For example, when two descriptions of property are given together in one mass, both the next of kin and the heir cannot take, unless in cases where a construction can be made reddendo singula singulis, that the next of kin shall take the personal estate, and the heir-at-law the real estate. 14 Ves. 490. See 11 East, 513, note; Bac. Abr. "Conditions" (L).

REDDENDUM (Lat.) That clause in a deed by which the grantor reserves something new to himself out of that which he granted before. It usually follows the tenendum, and is generally in these words, "yielding and paying." In every good reddendum or reservation these things must concur, namely: It must be in apt words; it must be of some other thing issuing or coming out of the thing granted, and not a part of the thing itself, nor of something issuing out of another thing; it must be of a thing on which the grantor may resort to distrain; it must be made to one of the grantors, and not to a stranger to the deed. See 2 Bl. Comm. 299; Co. Litt. 47; Shep. Touch. 80; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 24, § 1; Dane, Abr. Index.

REDDENS CAUSAM SCIENTIAE. Giving the reason of his knowledge.

——In Scotch Practice. A formal phrase used in depositions, preceding the statement of the reason of the witness' knowledge. 2 How. St. Tr. 715.

REDDERE, NIL ALIUD EST QUAM ACceptum restituere; seu, reddere est quasi retro dare, et redditur dicitur a redeundo, quia retro it. To render is nothing more than to restore that which has been received; or, to render is, as it were, to give back, and it is called "rendering" from "returning," because it goes back again. Co. Litt. 142.

REDDIDIT SE (Lat.) In English practice. An indorsement made on the bail piece when a certificate has been made by the proper officer that the defendant is in custody. Comyn, Dig. "Bail" (Q 4).

REDDITARIUM (Law Lat. from redditus). In old records. A rental, or rent roll. Cowell.

REDDITION. A judicial confession or acknowledgment that the thing in demand belongs to the demandant, and not to the person surrendering. Cowell.

REDDITUS SICCUS. See "Reditus Siccus."

REDDOUR (Law Fr.) A rendering. Kelham.

REDEEM. See "Redemption."

REDEEMABLE RIGHTS. Rights which return to the conveyor or disposer of land, etc., upon payment of the sum for which such rights are granted.

REDELIVERY. A yielding and delivering back of a thing.

REDEMISE. A regranting of land demised or leased.

REDEMPTIO (Law Lat.) In old English law. A ransom, or fine. St. Marlb. c. 1. Spelman calls it the heaviest kind of fine (mulcta gravissima), and makes it to be the same with the Saxon "were" or "weregild."

REDEMPTION (Lat. re, red, back, emptio, a purchase). A purchase back by the seller from the buyer. It is applied to denote the performance of the conditions upon performance of which a conditional sale is to become ineffective as a transfer of title, or, more strictly, a right to demand a reconveyance becomes vested in the seller. In the case of mortgages, this right is a legal right until a breach of conditions, when it becomes an equitable right, and is called the "equity of redemption."

The term is applied to the statutory right of one whose property is sold at various forced sales other than mortgage foreclosure (e. g., for taxes) to buy the same back within a fixed time, ordinarily for the price paid by the purchaser, with interest and costs.

REDEMPTION, EQUITY OF. See "Equity of Redemption."

REDEMPTIONE (Lat.) Heavy fines. Distinguished from misericordia (q. v.)

REDEUNDO (Lat.) Returning; in returning; while returning. 3 East, 89; 2 Strange, 985.

REDHIBERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To have again; to have back; to cause a seller to have again what he had before. Dig. 21. 1. 21. pr.

The returning of a thing purchased to the seller.

REDHIBITION. In civil law. The returning of a thing purchased to the seller, on the ground of some defect or fraud. Calv. Lex. The avoidance of a sale on account of some vice or defect in the thing sold, which renders its use impossible, or so inconvenient and imperfect that it must be supposed that the buyer would not have purchased it had he known of the vice. Civ. Code La. art. 2496.

This is essentially a civil-law right. The effect of the rule expressed by the maxim caveat emptor is to prevent any such right at common law, except in cases of express warranty. 2 Kent, Comm. 374; Sugd. Vend. 222.

REDHIBITORY ACTION. In civil law. An action instituted to avoid a sale on account of some vice or defect in the thing sold which renders its use impossible, or so inconvenient and imperfect that it must be supposed the buyer would not have purchased it had he known of the vice. Civ. Code La. art. 2496.

REDHIBITORY DEFECT (or VICE). In the civil law. A defect in an article sold, for which the seller may be compelled to take it back; a defect against which the seller is bound to warrant. Poth. Contr. Sale, No. 203.

REDISSEISIN. In old English law. A second disseisin of a person of the same tenements, and by the same disseisor, by whom he was before disseised. 3 Bl. Comm. 188; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 29. Called in the statute of Marlbridge (chapter 8) a repeated disseisin.

The name of a writ which lay in such case (breve de redissesina). Reg. Orig. 206b.

REDITUS ALBI (Lat.) A rent payable in money; sometimes called "white rent," or "blanche farm." See "Alba Firma."

REDITUS ASSISUS. A set or standing rent.

REDITUS CAPITALES. Chief rent paid by freeholders to go quit of all other services.

REDITUS NIGRI (Lat.) A rent payable in grain, work, and the like. It was also called "black mail." This name was given to it to distinguish it from reditus albi, which was payable in money.

REDITUS QUIETI. Quit rents (q. v.)

REDITUS SICCUS. Rent seck. See "Rent."

REDMEN. Customary tenants required to ride on the business or errands of their lord.

REDOBATORES (Law Lat.) Those that buy stolen cloth, and turn it into some other color or fashion, that it may not be recognized; redubbers. Barr. Obs. St. (2d Ed.) 87, note; 3 Inst. 134; Britt. c. 29.

REDRAFT. In commercial law. A bill of exchange drawn at the place where another bill was made payable, and where it was protested, upon the place where the first bill was drawn, or, when there is no regular commercial intercourse rendering that practicable, then in the next best or most direct practicable course. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 406. See "Re-Exchange."

REDRESS. The act of receiving satisfaction for an injury sustained. For the mode of obtaining redress, see "Remedies;" 1 Chit. Prac. Anal. Table.

REDUBBOURS (Law Fr.; Law Lat. redobatores, q. v.) In old English law. Persons who knowingly bought stolen clothes, and changed them into another form; achatauntz ascient dras embles, et les attirent en auter forme. Britt. c. 29; Cowell.

REDUCTION. In Scotch law. An action brought for the purpose of rescinding, annulling, or cancelling some deed, bond, contract, or other instrument in writing. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 4, pp. 158, 159. See Bell, Dict.

REDUCTION EX CAPITE LECTI. By the law of Scotland, the heir in heritage was entitled to reduce all voluntary deeds granted to his prejudice by his predecessor within sixty days preceding the predecessor's death; provided the maker of the deed, at its date, was laboring under the disease of which he died, and did not subsequently go to kirk or market unsupported. Bell, Dict. Abolished 34 & 35 Vict. c. 81.

REDUCTION IMPROBATION. In Scotch law. One form of the action of reduction, in which falsehood and forgery are alleged against the deed or document sought to be set aside. Bell, Dict.

REDUCTION INTO POSSESSION. The act of exercising the right conferred by a chose in action, so as to convert it into a chose in possession; thus, a debt is reduced into possession by payment.

REDUNDANCY. In pleading. The averment of matter foreign to the issue, or the needless repetition of immaterial averments. 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 660.

RE-ENTRY. The resuming or retaking of that possession of lands and tenements which one has lately foregone. See "Entry."

REEVE. An ancient English officer of justice, inferior in rank to an alderman. He was a ministerial officer appointed to execute process, keep the king's peace, and put the laws in execution. He witnessed all contracts and bargains, brought offenders to justice, and delivered them to punishment, took bail for such as were to appear at the county court, and presided at the court or folcmote. He was also called "gerefa."

There were several kinds of reeves; as, the shire gerefa, shire reeve, or sheriff; the heh gerefa, or high sheriff, tithing reeve, burgh or borough reeve.

RE-EXCHANGE. The expense incurred by a bill's being dishonored in a foreign country, where it is made payable and returned to that country in which it was made or indorsed, and there taken up. 11 East, 265; 2 Campb. 65.

It is the sum for which a sight bill must be drawn at the time and place of dishonor at the then rate of exchange on the place where the drawer or indorser sought to be charged resides, in order to realize, at the place of dishonor, the amount of the dishonored bill, and the expenses consequent on its dishonor. 2 Daniell, Neg. Inst. § 1445. See "Redraft."

REFALO. A word composed of the three initial syllables re. fa. lo., for recordari facias loquelam. 2 Sellon, Prac. 160; 8 Dowl. 514.

REFECTION (Lat. re, again, facio, to make). In civil law. Reparation; re-establishment of a building. Dig. 19. 1. 6. 1.

REFEREE. The person to whom a reference (q. v.) is made.

REFEREE IN CASE OF NEED. A person whose name may be inserted in a bill of exchange by the drawer or an indorser, to whom the holder may resort in case the bill is dishonored by nonacceptance or nonpayment. The usual form is "in case of need, apply to ———." Chit. Bills, 165; N. Y. Neg. Inst. Law, § 215.

REFERENCE. A sending or direction to a person or place.

——In Contracts. A statement in a writing, wherein it points to another for the matters therein contained.

——In Mercantile Law. A direction or request by a party who asks a credit to the person from whom he desires it to some other person named, in order to ascertain the character or mercantile standing of the former.

——In Practice. The sending of a pending cause, or some question therein, by the court in which it is pending, to a private person to hear and determine the cause, or some question therein, or to take evidence and report the same, with or without his opinion thereon, to the court.

Distinguished from arbitration. The submission of a controversy to a private person by the parties is sometimes called "reference," but the term "reference" properly applies only to reference by a court in the exercise of its powers as such, whether it be with or without the consent of the parties. The cases in which reference may be made, and the powers and duties of referees, are governed by varying statutes. Generally speaking, any cause may be referred with the consent of the parties, and any cause in which there is no constitutional right to a jury trial may be referred, in the discretion of the court. Whether the referee merely report evidence or determine the cause, his report must be confirmed by the court appointing him, and the court has extensive power of revision on motion to confirm.

REFERENCE IN CASE OF NEED. See "Referee in Case of Need."

REFERENCE TO RECORD. Under the English practice, when an action is commenced, an entry of it is made in the cause book according to the year, the initial letter of the surname of the first plaintiff, and the place of the action, in numerical order among those commenced in the same year, e. g., "1876, A. 26;" and all subsequent documents in the action (such as pleadings and affidavits) bear this mark, which is called the "reference to the record."

REFERENDARIUS (Lat.) An officer by whom the order of causes was laid before the Roman emperor, the desires of petitioners made known, and answers returned to them. Vicat; Calv. Lex.

REFERENDARY. In Saxon law. A master of requests; an officer to whom petitions to the king were referred. Spelman.

REFERENDO SINGULA SINGULIS (Lat.) Referring individual or separate words to separate subjects; making a distributive reference of words in an instrument; construing distributively. 11 East, 322; 2 Powell, Dev. 112.

REFERENDUM (Lat.) In international law. A note addressed by an ambassador to his government, submitting to its consideration propositions made to him touching an object over which he has no sufficient power, and is without instructions. When such a proposition is made to an ambassador, he accepts it ad referendum; that is, under the condition that it shall be acted upon by his government, to which it is referred.

——In Political Economy. A system of legislation, whereby proposed laws are submitted to the popular vote.

REFORM. To reorganize; to rearrange. Thus, the jury "shall be reformed by putting to and taking out of the persons so impanelled." St. 3 Hen. VIII. c. 12; Bac. Abr. "Juries" (A).

To reform an instrument in equity is to make a decree that a deed or other agreement shall be made or construed as it was originally intended by the parties, when an error or mistake as to a fact has been committed. A contract has been reformed although the party applying to the court was in the legal profession, and he himself drew the contract, it appearing clear that it was framed so as to admit of a construction inconsistent with the true agreement of the parties. 1 Sim. & S. 210; 3 Russ. 424. But a contract will not be reformed in consequence of an error of law. 1 Russ. & M. 418; 1 Chit. Prac. 124.

REFORMATORY. All places and institutions in which efforts are made either to cultivate the intellect, instruct the conscience, or improve the conduct; places in which persons voluntarily assemble, receive instruction, and submit to discipline, or are detained therein for either of these purposes by force. 49 Conn. 35. Ordinarily applied to penal or quasi penal institutions; but it was said in the case above cited to be a term of too uncertain signification to support a bequest for the purpose of building a reformatory.

REFRESH THE MEMORY. To revive the recollection of a subject by referring to something connected with it. Commonly applied to the right of a witness to refer, even on the stand, to memoranda made by him at the time of a transaction, but which are not of themselves evidence, to refresh his recollection. See 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 301; 6 Pick. (Mass.) 222; 2 Conn. 213.

REFRESHER. In English practice. A fee paid to counsel on the trial of an action, in addition to the retainer paid him with his brief. In the practice of the queen's bench division, a refresher is usually paid to counsel for every day a trial lasts after the first day.

REFULLUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. A flowing back. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 4.

REFUND. To pay back by the party who has received it, to the party who has paid it, money which ought not to have been paid.

On a deficiency of assets, executors and administrators cum testamento annexo are entitled to have refunded to them legacies which they may have paid, or so much as may be necessary to pay the debts of the testator; and in order to insure this they are generally authorized to require a refunding bond. See Bac. Abr. "Legacies" (H).

REFUSAL. The act of declining to receive or to do something. In some cases, a neglect to perform a duty will be construed as a refusal; but, ordinarily, demand is essential to refusal. 6 Gray (Mass.) 224.

Refusal is sometimes used in the sense of "option;" thus, to "give a refusal" of property means to give an option of buying it.

REFUTANTIA (Law Lat.) In old records. An acquittance or acknowledgment of renouncing all future claim. Cowell.

REG. GEN. An abbreviation of regula generalis. 6 East, 1.

REGAL FISH. Whales and sturgeons. 2 Steph. Comm. 19, note 448.

REGALE (Law Lat.) In old French law. A payment made to the seigneur of a fief, on the election of every bishop or other ecclesiastical feudatory, corresponding with the relief paid by a lay feudatory. Steph. Lect. 235.

REGALIA. This seems to be an abbreviation of "jura regalia," royal rights, or those rights which a king has by virtue of his prerogative. Hence owners of counties palatine were formerly said to have "jura regalia" in their counties as fully as the king in his palace. 1 Bl. Comm. 117.

Some writers divide the royal prerogative into majora and minora regalia, the former including the regal dignity and power, the latter the revenue or fiscal prerogatives of the crown. 1 Bl. Comm. 117.

REGALIA FACERE. To do homage or fealty to the sovereign by a bishop when he is invested with the regalia.

REGALITY. A territorial jurisdiction in Scotland conferred by the crown. The lands were said to be given in liberam regalitatem, and the persons receiving the right were termed "lords of regality." Bell, Dict.

REGARD (Law Fr.) Reference; relation. Kelham. Respect. Id. Reward; fee; a perquisite or allowance. Id.

REGARD, COURT OF. See "Court of Regard."

REGARD OF THE FOREST. In old English law. The oversight or inspection of it, or the office and province of the regarder, who is to go through the whole forest, and every bailiwick in it, before the holding of the sessions of the forest, or justice seat, to see and inquire after trespassers, and for the survey of dogs. Manw. For. Law.

REGARDANT (Fr. seeing or vigilant). A villein regardant was one who had the charge to do all base services within the manor, and to see the same freed of annoyances. Co. Litt. 120; 2 Bl. Comm. 93*.

REGARDATOR (Law Lat.) In old forest law. A regarder (q. v.) Regardatores nostri eant per forestas ad faciendum regardum, our regarders shall go through the forests to make regard. Cart. de Foresta, 9 Hen. III. c. 5.

REGARDER (Law Lat. regardator; from Law Fr. regardeur, an inspector). In forest law. An officer of the forest, appointed to supervise all other officers. Cromp. Jur. 153; Manw. For. Laws; Cowell.

REGE INCONSULTO (Lat.) In English law. A writ issued from the sovereign to the judges, not to proceed in a cause which may prejudice the crown, until advised. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 97.

REGENCY. The authority of the person in monarchical countries invested with the right of governing the state, in the name of the monarch, during his minority, absence, sickness, or other inability.

REGENT. A ruler; a governor. The term is usually applied to one who governs a regency, or rules in the place of another.

In the canon law, it signifies a master or professor of a college. Dict. Canonique.

It sometimes means simply a ruler, director, or superintendent; as in New York, where the board who have the superintendence of all the colleges, academies, and schools are called the "Regents of the University of the State of New York."

REGIA DIGNITAS EST INDIVISIBILIS, et quaelibet alia derivativa dignitas est similiter indivisibilis. The kingly power is indivisible, and every other derivative power is similarly indivisible. 4 Inst. 243.

REGIA VIA (Lat.; Law Fr. real chymin).

In old English law. The royal way; the king's highway. Co. Litt. 56a.

REGIAM MAJESTATEM (Lat.) An ancient book purporting to contain the law of Scotland, and said to have been compiled by King David, who reigned 1124-1153. It is not part of the law of Scotland, though it was ordered to be revised with other ancient laws of Scotland by parliaments of 1405 and 1407. Stair, Inst. p. 12, § 16; Id. p. 508, § 27. So Craig, Inst. 1. 8. 11; Scott, Border Antiq. prose works, 7, 30; but Ersk. Inst. bk. 1, tit. 1, § 32, and Ross, Lect. 11, p. 60 et seq., maintain its authenticity. It is cited in some modern Scotch cases. 2 Swin. 409; 3 Bell, H. L. Sc. It is, according to Dr. Robertson, a servile copy of Glanville. Robertson, Hist. Charles V., vol. 1, note 25, p. 262; Ersk. Inst. 1. 1. 3.

REGICIDE (Lat. rex, king, cedere, to kill, slay). The killing of a king, and, by extension, of a queen. Theorie des Lois Criminelles, vol. 1, p. 300.

REGIDOR. In Spanish law. One of a body, never exceeding twelve, who formed a part of the ayuntamiento, or municipal council, in every capital of a jurisdiction in the colonies of the Indies. The office of regidor was held for life; that is to say, during the pleasure of the supreme authority. In most places the office was purchased. In some cities, however, they were elected by persons of the district, called capitulares. 12 Pet. (U. S.) 442, note.

REGIME DOTAL. In French law. The dot, being the property which the wife brings to the husband as her contribution to the support of the burdens of the marriage, and which may either extend as well to future as to present property, or be expressly confined to the present property of the wife, is subject to certain regulations which are summarized in the phrase "regime dotal." The husband has the entire administration during the marriage; but, as a rule, where the dot consists of immovables, neither the husband nor the wife, nor both of them together, can either sell or mortgage it. The dot is returnable upon the dissolution of the marriage, whether by death or otherwise. Brown.

REGIMIENTO. In Spanish law. The body of regidores, who never exceeded twelve, forming a part of the municipal council, or ayuntamiento, in every capital of a jurisdiction. 12 Pet. (U. S.) 442, note.

REGISTER, or REGISTRAR. An officer authorized by law to keep a record called a "register" or "registry;" as, the register for the probate of wills.

REGISTER OF WRITS. A book preserved in the English court of chancery, in which were entered, from time to time, all forms of writs once issued. St. Westminster II. c. 25.

It is spoken of as one of the most ancient books of the common law. Co. Litt. 159; 4 Inst. 150; 8 Coke, pref.; 3 Bl. Comm. 183*. It was first printed and published in the reign of Hen. VIII. This book is still in authority, as containing, in general, an accurate transcript of the forms of all writs as then framed, and as they ought still to be framed in modern practice. But many of the writs now in use are not contained in it; and a variation from the register is not conclusive against the propriety of a form, if other sufficient authority can be adduced to prove its correctness. Steph. Pl. 7, 8.

REGISTER'S COURT. In American law. A court in the state of Pennsylvania, which has jurisdiction in matters of probate.

REGISTRARIUS (Lat.) An ancient name given to a notary. In England this name is confined to designate the officer of some court the records or archives of which are in his custody.

REGISTRUM BREVIUM (Lat.) The name of an ancient book which was a collection of writs. See "Register of Writs."

REGISTRY. A book, authorized by law, in which writings are registered or recorded.

REGLAMENTO (Spanish). In Spanish colonial law. A written instruction given by a competent authority, without the observance of any peculiar form. Schmidt, Civ. Law, introd. 93, note.

REGNAL YEARS. A table of the English regnal years will be found in this work under title "King."

REGNANT. One having authority as a king; one in the exercise of royal authority.

REGNI POPULI. A name given to the people of Surrey and Sussex, and on the sea coasts of Hampshire. Blount.

REGNUM ECCLESIASTICUM. The ecclesiastical kingdom. 2 Hale, P. C. 324.

REGNUM NON EST DIVISIBILE. The kingdom is not divisible. Co. Litt. 165.

REGRANT. In the English law of real property, when, after a person has made a grant, the property granted comes back to him (e. g., by escheat or forfeiture), and he grants it again, he is said to regrant it. The phrase is chiefly used in the law of copyholds. Thus, before the fines and recoveries act, one mode of barring an entail in copyhold was a preconcerted forfeiture by the tenant, followed by a regrant to him in fee by the lord.

REGRATING. In criminal law. Every practice or device, by act, conspiracy, words or news, to enhance the price of victuals or other merchandise, is so denominated. 3 Inst. 196; 1 Russ. Crimes, 169.

In the Roman law, persons who monopolized grain, and other produce of the earth, were called dardanarii, and were variously punished. Dig. 47. 11. 6.

REGRESS. Returning; going back; opposed to "ingress."

REGULA (Lat.) In practice. A rule. Regula generalis, a general rule; a standing rule or order of a court. Frequently abbreviated Reg. Gen.

REGULA CATONIANA (Lat.) In the Roman law. The rule of Cato; a rule respecting the validity of dispositions by will. See Dig. 34. 7.

REGULA EST, JURIS QUIDEM IGNORantiam culque nocere, facti vero ignorantiam non nocere. The rule is, that ignorance of law does not excuse, but that ignorance of a fact may excuse a party from the legal consequences of his conduct. Dig. 22. 6. 9; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 232. See Irving, Civ. Law (4th Ed.) 74.

REGULA PRO LEGE, SI DEFICIT LEX. In default of the law, the maxim rules.

REGULAR CLERGY. Monks who lived according to the rules of their respective houses or societies, in contradistinction to the parochial clergy, who did their duties "in seculo," and hence were called secular clergy. 1 Bl. Comm. 387, note.

REGULAR DEPOSIT. One where the thing deposited must be returned. It is distinguished from an "irregular deposit." See "Deposit."

REGULAR PROCESS. Regular process is that which has been lawfully issued by a court or magistrate having competent jurisdiction.

REGULARITER (Law Lat.) In old English law. Regularly; strictly; according to rule; as a general rule. Bracton, fol. 87b. 223.

REGULARITER, NON VALET PACTUM de re mea non alienanda. Regularly, a contract not to alienate my property is not binding. Co. Litt. 223.

REGULARS. In ecclesiastical law. Those who profess and follow a certain rule of life (regula), belong to a religious order, and observe the three approved vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience. Wharton.

REGULATE. To direct, govern, or restrict a governmental power to regulate does not include a power to prohibit. 39 N. J. Law, 44; 70 Mich. 396.

REGULUS (Lat.) In Saxon law. A title sometimes given to the earl or comes, in old charters. Spelman.

REHABERE FACIAS SEISINAM (Lat. do you cause to regain seisin). When a sheriff in the habere facias seisinam had delivered seisin of more than he ought, this judicial writ lay to make him restore seisin of the excess. Reg. Jud. 13. 51. 54.

REHABILITATION. The act by which a man is restored to his former ability, of which he had been deprived by a conviction, sentence, or judgment of a competent tribunal.

REHEARING.

——In Appellate Practice. A second consideration, on further argument, given to a cause after decision.

——In Chancery Practice. A retrial of the issues; a new trial. See "New Trial."

REI (Lat.; plur. of reus, q. v.) In the civil law. In a special sense, persons from whom a thing is demanded (ii unde petitur). Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 17, § 841. Defendants. In a general sense, parties to an action; litigating parties (ii quorum de re disceptatur), including both the actor and the reus proper. Id. Parties to a contract. Id.

REI INTERVENUS (Lat.) When a party is imperfectly bound in an obligation, he may, in general, annul such imperfect obligation; but when he has permitted the opposite party to act as if his obligation or agreement were complete, such things have intervened as to deprive him of the right to rescind such obligation. These circumstances are the rei interventus. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 328, 329; Burton, Man. Scot. 128.

REI TURPIS NULLUM MANDATUM EST. A mandate of an illegal thing is void. Dig. 17. 1. 6. 3.

REIF (Scotch; from Saxon reaf). In old Scotch law. Robbery. Skene ad Leg. Alexandri R. c. 2, par. 2; Cowell.

REINSURANCE. Insurance effected by an underwriter upon a subject against certain risks with another underwriter, on the same subject, against all or a part of the same risks, not exceeding the same amount. In the original insurance, he is the insurer; in the second, the assured.

REIPUBLICAE INTEREST VOLUNTATes defunctorum effectum sortiri. It concerns the state that the wills of the dead should have their effect.

REISSUABLE NOTES. Bank notes which, after having been once paid, may again be put into circulation.

They cannot properly be called "valuable securities" while in the hands of the maker, but, in an indictment, may properly be called "goods and chattels." Ryan & M. 218. See 5 Mason (U. S.) 537; 2 Russ. Crimes, 147. And such notes would fall within the description of "promissory" notes. 2 Leach, C. C. 1090, 1093; Russ. & R. 232.

REJOINDER. In common-law pleading. The defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication. The second pleading of defendant in the common-law series.

REJOINING GRATIS. Rejoining within four days from the delivery of the replication, without a notice to rejoin or demand of rejoinder. Wharton, "Rejoinder;" 1 Archb. Prac. 280, 317; 10 Mees. & W. 12. But judgment cannot be signed without demanding rejoinder. 3 Dowl. 537.

RELATIO EST FICTIO JURIS ET INtenta ad unum. Relation is a fiction of law, and intended for one thing. 3 Coke, 28.

RELATIO SEMPER FIAT UT VALEAT dispositio. Reference should always be had in such a manner that a disposition in a will may avail. 6 Coke, 76.

RELATION (Lat. re, back, fero, to bear).

——In Civil Law. The report which the judges made of the proceedings in certain suits to the prince were so called. These relations took place when the judge had no law to direct him, or when the laws were susceptible of difficulties. It was then referred to the prince, who was the author of the law, to give the interpretation. They were made in writing, and contained the pleadings of the parties and all the proceedings, together with the judge's opinion, and prayed the emperor to order what should be done. This ordinance of the prince thus required was called a "rescript." Their use was abolished by Justinian (Nov. 125).

——In Contracts and Conveyances. A fiction of law whereby an act done at one time operates as if done at another time. An act so operating is said to do so by relation. Thus, a deed not acknowledged until long after its execution has been held to take effect from its date, the acknowledgment operating as of that time by relation. 75 Mo. 613.

RELATIVE. One connected with another by blood or affinity; a relation; a kinsman or kinswoman. In an adjective sense, having relation or connection with some other person or thing; as, relative rights, relative powers.

RELATIVE FACT. In the law of evidence. A fact having relation to another fact; a minor fact; a circumstance. Burr. Circ. Ev. 121, note (d).

RELATIVE POWERS. Those which relate to land. So called to distinguish them from those which are collateral to it.

These powers are appendant; as, where a tenant for life has a power of making leases in possession. They are in gross when a person has an estate in the land, with a power of appointment, the execution of which falls out of the compass of his estate, but, notwithstanding, is annexed in privity to it, and takes effect in the appointee out of an interest appointed in the appointer. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1930.

RELATIVE RIGHTS. Those to which a person is entitled in consequence of his relation with others; such as the rights of a husband in relation to his wife; of a father as to his children; of a master as to his servant; of a guardian as to his ward.

In general, the superior may maintain an action for an injury committed against his relative rights. 2 Bouv. Inst. notes 2277-2296; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3491; 4 Bouv. Inst. notes 3615-3618. See "Action."

RELATIVORUM COGNITO UNO, COGnoscitur et alterum. Of things relating to each other, one being known, the other is known. Cro. Jac. 539.

RELATOR. A rehearser or teller; one who, by leave of court, brings an information in the nature of a quo warranto, or other writ issuing in the name of the state, on the relation of a private person.

RELATRIX (Law Lat. and Eng.) In practice. A female relator, or petitioner. 14 Pet. (U. S.) 500, 517.

RELAXARE (Law Lat.) In old conveyancing. To release. Relaxavi, relaxasse, have released. Litt. § 445. In 10 Coke, 52b, reference was made to a case in 4 Edw. VI., where it was said that laxare is properly to set prisoners in fetters at liberty, and relaxare is to do it quickly; and metaphorice relaxare is to set at liberty fettered estates and interests, and to make them free and absolute.

RELAXATIO (Law Lat. from relaxare, q. v.) In old conveyancing. A release; an instrument by which a person relinquishes to another his right in anything. Y. B. P. 18 Hen. VI. 9; Spelman. A deed of release. See "Release."

RELAXATION. In old Scotch practice. Letters passing the signet (q. v.) by which a debtor was relaxed (released) from the horn; that is, from personal diligence. Bell. Dict. See "Horning."

RELEASE. The giving up or abandoning a claim or right to the person against whom the claim exists, or the right is to be exercised or enforced.

Releases may either give up, discharge, or abandon a right of action, or convey a man's interest or right to another who has possession of it, or some estate in the same. Shep. Touch. 320; Litt. 444; Nelson, Abr.; Bac. Abr.; Viner, Abr.; Rolle, Abr. In the former class, a mere right is surrendered; in the other, not only a right is given up, but an interest in the estate is conveyed and becomes vested in the releasee.

An express release is one directly made in terms by deed or other suitable means.

An implied release is one which arises from acts of the creditor or owner, without any express agreement. See Poth. Obl. notes 608, 609.

A release by operation of law is one which, though not expressly made, the law presumes in consequence of some act of the releasor; for instance, when one of several joint obligors is expressly released, the others are also released by operation of law. 3 Salk. 298; Hob. 10, 66; 4 Mod. 380; 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 207.

——In Estates. The conveyance of a man's interest or right which he hath unto a thing, to another that hath the possession thereof, or some estate therein. Shep. Touch. 320. The relinquishment of some right or benefit to a person who has already some interest in the tenement, and such interest as qualifies him for receiving or availing himself of the right or benefit so relinquished. Burton, Real Prop. 15*. A discharge or conveyance of a man's right in lands or tenements to one that held some former estate in possession. 2 Bl. Comm. 324.

The words generally used in such conveyance are "remised, released, and forever quitclaimed." Litt. § 445.

Releases of land are, in respect of their operation, divided into five sorts:

(1) Releases that inure by way of passing the estate, or mitter l'estate; e. g., a release by joint tenant to co-joint tenant, which conveyance will pass a fee without words of limitation.

(2) Releases that inure by way of passing the right, or mitter le droit; e. g., by disseisee to disseisor.

(3) Releases that inure by enlargement of the estate. Here there must be an actual privity of estate at the time between releasor and releasee, who must have an estate actually vested in him capable of enlargement.

(4) Releases that inure by way of extinguishment; e. g., a lord releasing his seignorial rights to his tenant.

(5) Releases that inure by way of feoffment and entry; e. g., if there are two disseisors, a release to one will give him a sole estate, as if the disseisee had regained seisin by entry, and enfeoffed him. 2 Bl. Comm. 325*. See 4 Cruise, Dig. 71; Gilb. Ten. 82; Co. Litt. 264; 3 Brock. (U. S.) 135; 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 487; 8 Pick. (Mass.) 143; 10 Pick. (Mass.) 195; 7 Mass. 381; 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 158; 2 N. H. 402; 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 299; 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 456.

The technicalities of English law as to releases are not generally applicable in the United States. The corresponding conveyance is a quitclaim deed. 2 Bouv. Inst. 416; 21 Ala. (N. S.) 125.

——In Admiralty. An instrument under seal of the court, commanding the marshal to release a ship or other property arrested in a proceeding in rem on the giving of bail by the owner.

RELEASE BY WAY OF ENLARGING AN estate. See "Release."

RELEASE BY WAY OF ENTRY AND feoffment. See "Release."

RELEASE BY WAY OF EXTINGUISHment. See "Release."

RELEASE BY WAY OF PASSING A right. See "Release."

RELEASE BY WAY OF PASSING AN ESTate. See "Release."

RELEASE TO USES. The conveyance by a deed of release to one party to the use of another is so termed. Thus, when a conveyance of lands was effected, by those instruments of assurance termed a "lease" and "release," from A. to B. and his heirs, to the use of C. and his heirs, in such case C. at once took the whole fee simple in such lands; B., by the operation of the statute of uses, being made a mere conduit pipe for conveying the estate to C., and B. was called the "releasee to uses."

RELEASEE. A person to whom a release is made.

RELEASOR. He who makes a release.

RELEGATIO (Lat.) A kind of banishment known to the civil law, which did not take away the rights of citizenship, which deportatio did.

Some say that relegatio was temporary, deportatio perpetual; that relegatio did not take away the property of the exile, and that deportatio did; but these distinctions do not seem always to exist. There was one sort of relegatio for slaves, viz., in agras; another for freemen, viz., in provincias. Relegatio only exiled from certain limits; deportatio confined to a particular place (locus poenae). Calv. Lex.

RELEGATION (from Lat. relegatio, q. v.) In old English law. Banishment for a time only. Co. Litt. 133.

RELEVAMEN (Law Lat. from relevare, to lift up). In old English law. Relief; one of the incidents of the feudal tenure. Lib. Rames. § 310; Spelman. In Domesday Book it is called relevamentum; in the laws of Edward the Confessor, relevatio; in Magna Charta, and generally in old English and Scotch law, relevium. Domesday Book, tit. "Berocscire, Walingford;" LL. Edw. Conf. c. 35.

RELEVANCY. Applicability to the issue joined. That quality of evidence which renders it properly applicable in determining the truth or falsity of the matters in issue between the parties to a suit. See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 49.

RELEVANT. In the law of evidence. Having relation; applicable. Relevant evidence is evidence applicable to the issue.

RELICT. A widow; as, A. B., relict of C. B.; A. B., widow of C. B.

RELICTA VERIFICATIONE (Lat. his pleading being abandoned). In pleading. A confession of judgment made after plea pleaded, viz., a cognovit actionem, accompanied by a withdrawal of the plea.

RELICTION (Lat. relinquo, to leave behind). An increase of the land by the retreat or recession of the sea or a river. Sometimes called "dereliction."

If the reliction be gradual, the land belongs to the riparian owner, but if it be sudden, and considerable, it belongs to the state (13 N. Y. 296; 1 Gill & J. [Md.] 249), unless the land has been previously lost by submergence (100 N. Y. 424).

RELIEF.

——In Feudal Law. A sum payable by the new tenant, the duty being incident to every feudal tenure, by way of fine or composition with the lord for taking up the estate which was lapsed or fallen in by the death of the last tenant. At one time, the amount was arbitrary; but afterwards the relief of a knight's fee became fixed at one hundred shillings. 2 Bl. Comm. 65.

——In Practice. A general name for the remedy sought or allowed in any action, legal or equitable.

RELIEVE. In feudal law. To hold or depend; thus, a tenant was said to relieve of the crown. Now obsolete.

RELIGION (Lat. re, back, ligo, to bind). Real piety in practice, consisting in the performance of all known duties to God and our fellow men. See "Charitable Uses."

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY. As secured by the provisions of the constitution of the United States, and of the several states, means freedom from any establishment of a religion, from compulsory support of religious instruction, from compulsory attendance on religious worship, and from restraints on the free exercise of religion according to the dictates of conscience, or upon the expression of religious belief. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 575.

The full and free right to entertain any religious belief, to practice any religious principle, and to teach any religious doctrine which does not violate the laws of morality and propriety, or infringe personal rights. 13 Wall. (U. S.) 728. But freedom from restraint on the exercise of religion does not permit one to break the law because his unlawful acts were in the exercise of his religion, or according to the dictates of his conscience. 98 U. S. 166.

RELIGIOUS MEN (Law Lat. religiosi). Such as entered into some monastery or convent. In old English deeds, the vendee was often restrained from aliening to "Jews or religious men," lest the lands should fall into mortmain. Religious men were civilly dead. Blount.

RELIGIOUS TEST. A belief in certain dogmas of religion which are prerequisite to the holding of a civil office, or the exercise of any civil right. "No religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States." Const. art. 6, § 3.

RELIGIOUS USE. See "Charitable Uses."

RELINQUISHMENT. A forsaking, abandoning, or giving over a right; for example, a plaintiff may relinquish a bad count in a declaration, and proceed on a good; a man may relinquish a part of his claim in order to give a court jurisdiction. The word has no exact technical significance.

RELIQUA. The remainder or debt which a person finds himself debtor in upon the balancing or liquidation of an account. Hence reliquary, the debtor of a reliqua; as also a person who only pays piecemeal. Enc. Lond.

RELIQUI (Lat.) In the civil law. The rest. Held to signify "all" (universos, omnes). Dig. 50. 16. 95. 160.

RELOCATIO (Lat.) In civil law. A renewal of a lease on its determination on like terms as before. It may be either express or tacit. The latter is when the tenant holds over with the knowledge and without objection of the landlord. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 379.

RELOCATION. In Scotch law. A reletting or renewal of a lease; a tacit relocation is permitting a tenant to hold over without any new agreement.

REM domino vel non domino vendente duobus,
In jure est potior venditione prior.

Where one, whether owner or not owner, sells a thing to two persons, the party who is first sold to has the better right. A Latin couplet quoted in Fleta (lib. 3, c. 15, § 8).

REMAINDER. The remnant of an estate in lands or tenements expectant on a particular estate created together with the same at one time. Co. Litt. 143a.

To constitute a valid remainder at common law, the estate in remainder must be created (1) on purchase (2 Washb. Real Prop. 586); (2) at the same time with a particular estate (2 Bl. Comm. 167); (3) less than a fee (Id. 164); and (4) must vest in the grantee during the continuance of the particular estate, or eo instanti that it determines, so that the freehold shall not remain in abeyance (Id. 168); but (5) the remainder must rest on the natural termination of the particular estate, and not be in defeasance of it (Fearne, Cont. Rem. 13).

——In the United States. The term "remainder" is applied to various estates in expectancy, limited on precedent estates which do not fulfill all the requirements of the common law.

Remainders are either vested or contingent.

(1) A vested remainder is one by which a present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in the future, and by which the estate is invariably fixed to remain to a determinate person after the particular estate is spent. A determinate remainderman in esse at the time of its creation is essential to a vested remainder.

A future estate is vested where there is a person in being who would have an immediate right to the lands on the ceasing of the immediate or precedent estate. 1 Rev. St. N. Y. c. 1, tit. 2, § 13. This definition has been justly criticised so far as it is intended to be declaratory of the common law, in that it omits the essential that the person who shall take the remainder shall be ascertained before the termination of the particular estate.

(2) A contingent remainder is one where the estate in remainder is limited to take effect either to a dubious and uncertain person, or upon a dubious and uncertain event, so that the particular estate may chance to be determined, and the remainder never take effect. 2 Bl. Comm. 169.

A remainder which, as regards the possession or enjoyment, depends on a contingency other than the survival of the remainderman. Smith, Ex. Int. § 171.

It is not the uncertainty of enjoyment in future, but the uncertainty of the right to that enjoyment, which marks the difference between a vested and a contingent interest. 4 Kent, Comm. 206; 2 Cruise, Dig. 270.

REMAINDERMAN. One who is entitled to the remainder of the estate after a particular estate carved out of it has expired.

REMAND. To send back.

——Of Prisoner. The ordering of a prisoner's return to custody pending proceedings, or on a determination that he is not entitled to release.

——Of a Cause. The sending it back to the same court out of which it came, for the purpose of having some action on it there. March, 100.

REMANENT PRO DEFECTU EMPtorum (Lat. remanent, they remain, pro defectu, through lack, emptorum, of buyers). In practice. The return made by the sheriff to a writ of execution when he has not been able to sell the property seized, that the same remains unsold for want of buyers; in that case, the plaintiff is entitled to a venditioni exponas. Comyn, Dig. "Execution" (C 8).

REMANENTIA (Law Lat. from remanere, q. v.) In old English law. A remainder. Spelman.

A perpetuity, or perpetual estate (pro perpetuo). Glanv. lib. 7, c. 1; Bracton, fol. 244; Reg. Maj. lib. 2, c. 23.

REMANERE (Lat.)

——In Old English Practice. To remain; to stop or stay; to "demur," in the old sense of the word. Primo queratur a tenente si aliquid velit vel sciat dicere quare assisa debeat remanere, it first should be inquired of the tenant if he will or know to say anything why the assize should stay,—that is, why it should not proceed. Bracton, fol. 184b. Non propter minorem aetatem petentium remanebit assisa, the assize shall not stay on account of the nonage of the demandants. Id. fol. 276. Hence the term remanet, in modern practice.

REMANET (Lat.) In practice. The causes which are entered for trial, and which cannot be tried during the term, are remanets. Lee, "Trial;" 1 Sellon, Prac. 434; 1 Phil. Ev. 4.

REMEDIAL LAW. That part of the body of the law which contains the remedies by which rights are enforced and wrongs redressed, and the rules by which the substantive law (q. v.) is applied.

REMEDIAL STATUTE. One removing some defect in the law, and thus giving a more perfect remedy for private wrongs. Used usually in contradistinction to "penal statute," but sometimes to "declaratory statute."

REMEDY. The means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury. "The being put in possession of that right whereof the party injured is deprived." 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 407.

The procedure whereby redress is secured, as distinguished from the right to be enforced. 103 U. S. 717.

It includes every original application to a court of justice for a judgment or an order. Thus, the application for admission to practice as an attorney or counsellor is a remedy. 22 N. Y. 67, 87.

——In Old English Law. A remainder. Co. Litt. 49a; 2 Coke, 51a.

(1) Equitable remedies are those obtainable only in a court of equity.

(2) Legal remedies, in the technical sense of the term, are those which may be awarded in a court of law; in a broader sense, any remedy allowed by the law of the land.

(3) Cumulative or concurrent remedies are such as are provided in addition to other existing remedies, and whose existence does not preclude a resort to the old remedy. A resort to one of the two remedies, however, precludes a subsequent resort to the other. See "Election."

(4) Specific or exclusive remedies are such as repeal all pre-existing remedies for the same wrong.

REMEDY OVER. The remedy of he who is primarily liable against him who is secondarily liable for the same debt.

REMEMBRANCERS. In English law. Officers of the exchequer, whose duty it is to remind the lord treasurer and the justices of that court of such things as are to be called and attended to for the benefit of the crown. Cowell; St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 99.

REMENAUNT (Law Fr.) Remaining; to come after; remainder. A remenaunt, for ever after. Kelham.

REMISE, RELEASE, AND QUITCLAIM. The ordinary effective words in a release. These words are, in this country, sufficient to pass the estate in a primary conveyance. 7 Conn. 250; 24 N. H. 460; 21 Ala. (N. S.) 125; 7 N. Y. 422. "Remise" is a French word synonymous with "release." See "Quitclaim."

REMISSION (Lat. re, back, mitto, to send).

——In Civil Law. A release of a debt. It is conventional when it is expressly granted to the debtor by a creditor having a capacity to alienate; or tacit, when the creditor voluntarily surrenders to his debtor the original title, under private signature, constituting the obligation. Civ. Code La. art. 2195.

Forgiveness or pardon of an offense.

It has the effect of putting back the offender into the same situation he was before the commission of the offense. Remission is generally granted in cases where the offense was involuntary, or committed in self-defense. Poth. Proc. Civ. sec. 7, art. 2, § 2.

——At Common Law. The act by which a forfeiture or penalty is forgiven. 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 246.

REMISSIUS IMPERANTI MELIUS PARETUR. A man commanding not too strictly is better obeyed. 3 Inst. 233.

REMIT. To annul a fine or forfeiture. This is generally done by the courts where they have a discretion by law; as, for example, when a juror is fined for nonattendance in court, after being duly summoned, and, on appearing, he produces evidence to the court that he was sick and unable to attend, the fine will be remitted by the court.

——In Commercial Law. To send money, bills, or something which will answer the purpose of money.

REMITTANCE. In commercial law. Money sent by one merchant to another, either in specie, bill of exchange, draft, or otherwise.

REMITTEE. A person to whom a remittance is made. Story, Bailm. § 75.

REMITTER. To be placed back in possession.

When one having a right to lands is out of possession, and afterwards the freehold is cast upon him by some defective title, and he enters by virtue of that title, the law remits him to his ancient and more certain right, and, by an equitable fiction, supposes him to have gained possession under it. 3 Bl. Comm. 190; Comyn, Dig. "Remitter."

REMITTERE (Lat. from re, again, and mittere, to send). In old English practice. To send back; to give up or relinquish; to remise or release. Postea jus suum remisit, et quietum clamavit, afterwards remised and quitclaimed his right. Bracton, fol. 313b.

To remand on habeas corpus. 3 How. St. Tr. 161.

REMITTIT DAMNA (Lat. he releases damages). An entry on the record, by which the plaintiff declares that he remits the damages or a part of the damages which have been awarded him by the jury, is so called.

In some cases, a misjoinder of actions may be cured by the entry of a remittit damna. 1 Chit. Pl. *207.

REMITTITUR DAMNUM (or DAMNA). In practice. The act of the plaintiff upon the record, whereby he abates or remits the excess of damages found by the jury beyond the sum laid in the declaration. See 1 Saund. 285, note 6; 4 Conn. 109; Bouv. Inst. Index.

REMITTITUR OF RECORD. After a record has been removed to the supreme court, and a judgment has been rendered, it is to be remitted or sent back to the court below, for the purpose of retrying the cause, when the judgment has been reversed, or of issuing an execution when it has been affirmed. The act of so returning the record, and the writ issued for that purpose, bear the name of "remittitur."

REMITTOR. A person who makes a remittance to another.

REMONSTRANCE. A petition to a court or deliberative or legislative body, in which those who have signed it request that something which it is in contemplation to perform shall not be done.

REMOTE CAUSE. See "Proximate Cause."

REMOTE DAMAGES. Damages are too remote to be actionable when not the legal and natural consequence of the act complained of. Sweet. See "Damages."

REMOTE EVIDENCE. Evidence so disconnected from the fact to be proved as to be irrelevant thereto. See "Evidence."

REMOTO IMPEDIMENTO, EMERGIT ACTio. The impediment being removed, the action arises. 5 Coke, 76; Wingate, Max. 20.

REMOVAL OF CAUSE. The removal of a cause from the court in which it was commenced to another court, in which it thereafter proceeds. The term seems literally to include change of venue and removal to a reviewing court, but to these it is rarely applied, being ordinarily used to denote the removal of a cause from a state to a federal court, where a federal question is involved, or the parties are citizens of different states, or one of them is an alien (see Act Cong. March 3, 1887), or to proceedings under state statutes for the transfer of a cause to another of concurrent jurisdiction.

REMOVER. In practice. A transfer of a suit or cause out of one court into another, which is effected by writ of error, certiorari, and the like. 11 Coke, 41.

REMUNERATION. Reward; recompense; salary. Dig. 17. 1. 7.

RENANT, or RENIANT. In old English law. Denying. 32 Hen. VIII. c. 2.

RENCOUNTER. A sudden meeting; as opposed to a duel, which is deliberate.

RENDER. In the civil law. To yield; to return; to give again. It is the reverse of "prender." See "Rendition of Judgment."

RENDITION OF JUDGMENT. The announcement of the decision of the court, as by a verbal decision entered in the minutes, the filing of findings, etc.

It differs from "entry of judgment," which is the formal entry of the judgment upon the records. 80 Cal. 166. But see 9 Minn. 318.

RENEGADE. One who has changed his profession of faith or opinion; one who has deserted his church or party.

RENEWAL. A change of something old for something new; as, the renewal of a note; the renewal of a lease. See "Novation;" 1 Bouv. Inst. note 800.

RENOUNCE. To give up a right; for example, an executor may renounce the right of administering the estate of the testator; a widow, the right to administer to her intestate husband's estate.

RENOUNCING PROBATE. Giving up the right to be executor of a will, wherein he has been appointed to that office, by refusing to take out probate of such will. Toller, Ex'rs, 42; 1 Williams, Ex'rs, 230, 231; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, § 79; 21 & 22 Vict. c. 94, § 16.

RENOVARE (Lat.) In old English law. To renew. Annuatim renovare, to renew annually. A phrase applied to profits which are taken and the product renewed again. Amb. 131.

RENT. A return or compensation for the possession of some corporeal inheritance, and is a certain profit, either in money, provisions, or labor, issuing out of lands and tenements, in return for their use.

Some of its common-law properties are that it must be a profit to the proprietor, certain in its character, or capable of being reduced to a certainty, issuing yearly, that is, periodically, out of the thing granted, and not be part of the land or thing itself. Co. Litt. 47; 2 Bl. Comm. 41.

At common law there were three species of rent,—rent service, having some corporeal service attached to the tenure of the land, to which the right of distress was necessarily incident; rent charge, which was a reservation of rent, with a clause authorizing its collection by distress; and rent seck, where there was no such clause, but the rent could only be collected by an ordinary action at law. These distinctions, however, for all practical purposes, have become obsolete, in consequence of various statutes both in England and in this country, allowing every kind of rent to be distrained for without distinction. See Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 370.

RENT CHARGE. See "Rent."

RENT ROLL. A list of rents payable to a particular person or public body.

RENT SECK. See "Rent."

RENT SERVICE. See "Rent."

RENTS, ISSUES, AND PROFITS. The profits arising from property generally (Gen. St. Mass. 1860, p. 537; Rev. St. N. Y. st. 1849) for better protection of property of married women.

This phrase in the Vermont statute has been held not to cover "yearly profits." 26 Vt. 741.

RENTS OF ASSIZE. The certain and determined rents of the freeholders and ancient copyholders of manors are called "rents of assize," apparently because they were assized or made certain, and so distinguished from a redditus mobilis, which was a variable or fluctuating rent. 3 Cruise, Dig. 314; Brown.

RENTS RESOLUTE. Rents anciently payable to the crown from the lands of abbeys and religious houses; and after their dissolution, notwithstanding that the lands were demised to others, yet the rents were still reserved and made payable again to the crown. Cowell.

RENTAL. A roll or list of the rents of an estate, containing the description of the lands let, the names of the tenants, and other particulars connected with such estate. This is the same as "rent roll," from which it is said to be corrupted.

Derived from or pertaining to rent, as rental value.

RENTAL BOLLS. In Scotch law. When the tithes (tiends) have been liquidated and settled for so many bolls of corn yearly. Bell, Dict.

RENTAL RIGHTS. In English law. A species of lease usually granted at a low rent and for life. Tenants under such leases were called "rentalers" or "kindly tenants."

RENTE. In French law. A word nearly synonymous with our word "annuity."

RENTE FONCIERE. In French law. A rent which issues out of land; and it is of its essence that it be perpetual, for if it be made but for a limited time, it is a lease. It may, however, be extinguished. Civ. Code La. arts. 2750, 2759. See "Ground Rent."

RENTE VIAGERE. In French law. An annuity for life. Civ. Code La. art. 2764.

REO ABSENTE (Lat.) Defendant being absent.

REP SILVER. In old records. Money paid by servile tenants for exemption from the customary duty of reaping for the lord. Cowell.

REPAIRS. That work which is done to an estate to keep it in good order. It does not include additions and adaptions of the premises to new uses. 24 N. J. Eq. 358.

REPARATION. The redress of an injury; amends for a tort inflicted. See "Remedy."

REPARATIONE FACIENDA, WRIT DE (Lat.) The name of an ancient writ, which lies by one or more joint tenants against the other joint tenants, or by a person owning a house or building against the owner of the adjoining building, to compel the reparation of such joint property. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 295.

REPATRIATION. The regaining of a nationality once lost; the converse of "expatriation."

REPEAL. The abrogation or destruction of a law by a legislative act.

A repeal is "express," as, when it is literally declared by a subsequent law, or "implied," when the new law contains provisions contrary to or irreconcilable with those of the former law, or which, though reconcilable, are manifestly designed to furnish an exclusive rule.

A law may be repealed by implication, by an affirmative as well as by a negative statute, if the substance is inconsistent with the old statute. 1 Ohio, 10; 2 Bibb (Ky.) 96; Harper (S. C.) 101; 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 691.

Repeal is express where the repealing act explicitly refers to an existing law, and declares its repeal.

Where statutes are repugnant, there is, of course, an implied repeal. An implied repeal also results from an act covering the whole subject matter, and obviously designed as a substitute (84 Ill. 590; 123 N. Y. 485), or by a revision or codification of the law (78 Wis. 457; 30 Vt. 344).

REPELLITUR A SACRAMENTO INFAmis. An infamous person is repelled or prevented from taking an oath. Co. Litt. 158; Bracton, 185.

REPELLITUR EXCEPTIONE CEDENdarum actionum. He is defeated by the plea that the actions have been assigned. 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 409, 414.

REPERTORY. In French law. A word used to denote the inventory or minutes which notaries are required to make of all contracts which take place before them. Dalloz.

REPETITION.

——In Civil Law. The act by which a person demands and seeks to recover what he has paid by mistake or delivered on a condition which has not been performed. Dig. 12. 4. 5.

The name of an action which lies to recover the payment which has been made by mistake, when nothing was due.

Repetition is never admitted in relation to natural obligations which have been voluntarily acquitted, if the debtor had capacity to give his consent. 6 Toullier, Dr. Civ. 386.

In order to entitle the payer to recover back money paid by mistake, it must have been paid by him to a person to whom he did not owe it, for otherwise he cannot recover it back,—the creditor having, in such case, the just right to retain the money. Repetitio nulla est ab eo qui suum recepit.

How far money paid under a mistake of law is liable to repetition has been discussed by civilians; and opinions on this subject are divided. 2 Poth. Obl. (Evans Ed.) 369, 408-437; 1 Story, Eq. Pl. § 111, note 2.

——In Scotch Law. The act of reading over a witness' deposition, in order that he may adhere to it or correct it, at his choice. The same as recolement (q. v.) in the French law. 2 Benth. Ev. bk. 3, c. 12, p. 239. See "Legacy."

REPETITUM NAMIUM. A repeated, second, or reciprocal distress; withernam. 3 Bl. Comm. 148.

REPETUNDAE, or PECUNIAE REPEtundae. In Roman law. The terms used to designate such sums of money as the socii of the Roman state, or individuals, claimed to recover from magistratus, judices, or publici curatores, which they had improperly taken or received in the provinciae, or in the urbs Roma, either in the discharge of their jurisdictio, or in their capacity of judices, or in respect of any other public function. Sometimes the word "repetundae" was used to express the illegal act for which compensation was sought. Wharton.

REPETUNDARUM CRIMEN (Lat.) In the Roman law. The crime of bribery or extortion in a magistrate, or person in any public office. Calv. Lex.; Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 12, No. 73; Dig. 48. 11; Code, 9. 27.

REPLEADER. In pleading. Making a new series of pleadings.

Judgment of repleader differs from a judgment non obstante veredicto in this, that it is allowed by the courts to do justice between the parties where the defect is in the form or manner of stating the right, and the issue joined is on an immaterial point, so that it cannot tell for whom to give judgment (7 Mass. 312; 3 Pick. [Mass.] 124; 19 Pick. [Mass.] 419); while judgment non obstante is given only where it is clearly apparent to the court that the party who has succeeded has, upon his own showing, no merits, and cannot have by any manner of statement (1 Chit. Pl. 568). See 19 Ark. 194.

REPLEGIARE (Lat.) To replevy; to redeem a thing detained or taken by another, by putting in legal sureties. See "De Homine Replegiando."

REPLEGIARE DE AVERIIS (Lat.) A writ brought by one whose cattle are impounded or distrained, upon security given to the sheriff to pursue or answer the action at law. 7 Hen. VIII. c. 4; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 68; New Book of Entries, "Replevin;" Dyer, 173; Reg. Orig. 81.

REPLEGIARE FACIAS (Lat.) A writ of replevin, which issued out of chancery, commanding the sheriff to deliver the distress to the owner, and afterwards to do justice in regard to the matter in his own county court. It was abolished by statute of Marlbridge, which provided a shorter process. 3 Bl. Comm. 147*.

REPLEVIABLE, or REPLEVISABLE. Property is said to be repleviable or replevisable when proceedings in replevin may be resorted to for the purpose of trying the right to such property. Brown.

REPLEVIN.

——At Common Law. A form of action which lay to regain the possession of personal chattels taken from the plaintiff unlawfully.

It differs from "detinue" in this, that it requires an unlawful taking as the foundation of the action; and from all other personal actions in that it is brought to recover the possession of the specific property claimed to have been unlawfully taken.

——In the United States. By statutes in nearly all the states, the actions of replevin and detinue have been merged, the action being usually called "replevin," but sometimes "claim and delivery," so that such action lies for either the unlawful taking or the unlawful detention of property, i. e., either in the cepit or the detinet.

REPLEVISH. In old English law. To let one to mainprise upon surety. Cowell.

REPLEVY. To redeliver goods which have been distrained to the original possessor of them, on his giving pledges in an action of replevin. It signifies, also, the bailing or liberating a man from prison, on his finding bail to answer. See "Replevin."

REPLIANT. One who makes a replication.

REPLICATIO (Lat.) In the civil law and old English pleading. The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's exception or plea; corresponding with and giving name to the replication in modern pleading. Inst. 4. 14. pr.

REPLICATION (Lat. replicare, to fold back).

——In Pleading. The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's plea or answer.

——In Equity. The plaintiff's avoidance or denial of the answer or defense. Story, Eq. Pl. § 877.

A general replication is a general denial of the truth of the defendant's plea or answer, and of the sufficiency of the matter alleged in it to bar the plaintiff's suit, and an assertion of the truth and sufficiency of the bill. Cooper, Eq. Pl. 329, 330.

A special replication was one which introduced new matter to avoid the defendant's answer. It might be followed by rejoinder, surrejoinder, and rebutter. Special replications have been superseded by the practice of amending bills. 1 How. (U. S.) Introd. 55; 17 Pet. (U. S.) Append. 68. A replication must be made use of where the plaintiff intends to introduce evidence, and a subpoena to the defendant to rejoin must be added, unless he will appear gratis. Story, Eq. Pl. § 879.

A replication may be filed nunc pro tunc after witnesses have been examined under leave of court. Story, Eq. Pl. § 881; Mitf. Eq. Pl. (by Jeremy) 323.

——At Law. The plaintiff's reply to the defendant's plea. It contains a statement of matter, consistent with the declaration, which avoids the effect of the defendant's plea, or constitutes a joinder in issue thereon.

REPLY. In its general sense, a reply is what the plaintiff, petitioner, or other person who has instituted a proceeding says in answer to the defendant's case, ——In Code Pleading. The second pleading of the plaintiff, corresponding to the common-law replication.

——In Trial Practice. The argument of plaintiff in answer to that of defendant.

REPONE (from Lat. reponere, to put back). In Scotch practice. To replace; to restore to a former state or right. 2 Alis. Crim. Prac. 351.

REPORT. An official or formal statement of facts or proceedings.

A printed or written account of the judicial determination of a case. In this sense, the term is used ordinarily in the plural to denote the published volumes of reports of decisions.

REPORTARE (Law Lat.) In old English practice. To report.

REPOSITION OF THE FOREST. In old English law. An act whereby certain forest grounds, being made purlieu upon view, were by a second view laid to the forest again,—put back into the forest. Manw. For. Law; Cowell.

REPRESENT. To state or assert.

To act as substitute or agent for another.

REPRESENTATION.

——In Insurance. The stating of facts by one applying for a policy of insurance, whether in writing or orally, expressly or by plain implication, preliminary and in reference to making the insurance, obviously tending to influence the insurer as to entering into the contract. 1 Phil. Ins. § 524; 12 Md. 348; 11 Cush. (Mass.) 324; 2 N. H. 551; 6 Gray (Mass.) 221.

A representation is to be distinguished from a "warranty," which is a statement of facts by the insured, which is a part of the contract. 21 Conn. 19; 49 Me. 200.

There is no certain rule to determine whether particular statements are representations or warranties. Statements expressly declared to be warranties (78 Hun [N. Y.] 222), or incorporated in the policy, actually (39 N. J. Law, 89) or by reference (45 N. Y. 80), are warranties, but otherwise the question is one of intent; the use of the word "warrant" not being conclusive (59 N. Y. 557), and a statement will be declared a representation unless the contrary intent is clear (98 Mass. 381).

The importance of the distinction lies in the fact that breach of any warranty avoids the policy, while breach of a representation is fatal only when such representation is material to the risk. 98 Mass. 381.

——In Scotch Law. The name of a plea or statement presented to the lord ordinary of the court of sessions when his judgment is brought under review.

REPRESENTATION OF PERSONS. A fiction of the law, the effect of which is to put the representative in the place, degree, or right of the person represented.

The heir represents his ancestor (Bac. Abr. "Heir and Ancestor" [A]); the devisee, his testator; the executor, his testator; the administrator, his intestate; the successor in corporations, his predecessor; and, generally speaking, they are entitled to the rights of the persons whom they represent, and bound to fulfill the duties and obligations which were binding upon them in those characters.

Representation was unknown to the Romans, and was invented by the commentators and doctors of the civil law. Toullier, Dr. Civ. liv. 3, tit. 1, c. 3, note 180. See Ayliffe, Pand. 397; Dalloz, "Succession," art. 4, § 2.

REPRESENTATIVE. One who represents or is in the place of another.

In legislation, it signifies one who has been elected a member of that branch of the legislature called the "house of representatives."

The executor or administrator of a deceased person is called the "personal representative," to distinguish him from the "real representative," or heir at law. 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 520.

REPRESENTATIVE ACTION OR SUIT. A representative action or suit is one brought by a member of a class of persons on behalf of himself and the other members of the class.

REPRESENTATIVE DEMOCRACY. A form of government where the powers of the sovereignty are delegated to a body of men, elected from time to time, who exercise them for the benefit of the whole nation. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 31.

REPRESENTATIVE PEERS. Those who, at the commencement of every new parliament, are elected to represent Scotland and Ireland in the British house of lords. Brown.

REPRIEVE (from Fr. reprendre, to take back). In criminal practice. The withdrawing of a sentence for an interval of time, which operates in delay of execution. 4 Bl. Comm. 394. It is a deferring of sentence to a definite day, as opposed to an indefinite "suspension." 1 Park. Cr. R. 266. See "Pardon."

REPRISALS. The forcibly taking a thing by one nation which belonged to another, in return or satisfaction for an injury committed by the latter on the former. Vattel, bk. 2, c. 18, § 342; 1 Bl. Comm. c. 7.

(1) General reprisals take place by virtue of commissions delivered to officers and citizens of the aggrieved state, directing them to take the persons and property belonging to the offending state wherever found.

(2) Negative reprisals take place when a nation refuses to fulfill a perfect obligation which it has contracted, or to permit another state to enjoy a right which it justly claims.

(3) Positive reprisals consist in seizing the persons and effects belonging to the other nation, in order to obtain satisfaction.

(4) Special reprisals are such as are granted in times of peace to particular individuals who have suffered an injury from the citizens or subjects of the other nation.

Reprisals are used between nation and nation to do themselves justice, when they cannot otherwise obtain it. Congress has the power to grant letters of marque and reprisal. Const. U. S. art. 1, § 8, cl. 11.

Reprisals are made in two ways,—either by embargo, in which case the act is that of the state, or by letters of marque and reprisal, in which case the act is that of the citizen, authorized by the government. See 2 Brown, Civ. Law, 334.

REPRISES. The deductions and payments out of lands, annuities, and the like are called "reprises," because they are taken back. When we speak of the clear yearly value of an estate, we say it is worth so much a year ultra reprises, besides all reprises.

In Pennsylvania, lands are not to be sold when the rents can pay the incumbrances in seven years, beyond all reprises.

REPROBATA PECUNIA LIBERAT SOLventum. Money refused liberates the debtor. 9 Coke, 79. But this must be understood with a qualification. See "Tender."

REPROBATION. In ecclesiastical law. The propounding exceptions either against facts, persons, or things; as, to allege that certain deeds or instruments have not been duly and lawfully executed; or that certain persons are such that they are incompetent as witnesses; or that certain things ought not, for legal reasons, to be admitted.

REPROBATOR, ACTION OF. In Scotch law. An action or proceeding intended to convict a witness of perjury, to which the witness must be made a party. Bell, Dict.

REPUBLIC. A commonwealth; that form of government in which the administration of affairs is open to all the citizens. In another sense, it signifies the state, independently of its form of government. 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. n. 28, and n. 202, note.

REPUBLICATION. An act done by a testator, from which it can be concluded that he intended that an instrument which had been revoked by him should operate as his will; or it is the re-execution of a will by the testator, with a view of giving it full force and effect.

The republication is express when there has been an actual re-execution of it (1 Ves. Jr. 440; 2 Rand. [Va.] 192; 9 Johns. [N. Y.] 312); it is implied when, for example, the testator by a codicil executed according to the statute of frauds, reciting that he had made his will, added, "I hereby ratify and confirm my said will, except in the alterations after mentioned" (3 Brown, Parl. Cas. 85). The will might be at a distance, or not in the power of the testator, and it may be thus republished. 1 Ves. Sr. 437; 3 Bing. 614; 1 Ves. Jr. 486; 4 Brown, Ch. 2.

REPUDIATION.

——In Civil Law. A term used to signify the putting away of a wife or a woman betrothed.

Properly, "divorced" is used to point out the separation of married persons; "repudiation," to denote the separation either of married people, or those who are only affianced. Divortium est repudium et separatio maritorum; repudium est renunciatio sponsalium, vel etiam est divortium. Dig. 50. 16. 101.

A determination to have nothing to do with any particular thing; as, a repudiation of a legacy is the abandonment of such legacy, and a renunciation of all right to it.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. The refusal to accept a benefice which has been conferred upon the party repudiating.

REPUDIUM (Lat.) In Roman law. A breaking off of the contract of espousals, or of a marriage intended to be solemnized. Sometimes translated "divorce," but this was not the proper sense. Dig. 50. 16. 191.

REPUGNANCY (Lat. re, back, against, pugnare, to fight).

——In Contracts. A disagreement or inconsistency between two or more clauses of the same instrument. In deeds, and other instruments inter vivos, the earlier clause prevails, if the inconsistency be not so great as to avoid the instrument for uncertainty. Hardw. 94; Owen, 84; 2 Taunt. 109; 15 Sim. 118; 2 C. B. 830; 13 Mees. & W. 534.

In wills, the latter clause prevails, under the same exceptions. Co. Litt. 112b; Plowd. 541; 2 Taunt. 109; 6 Ves. 100; 2 Mylne & K. 149; 1 Jarm. Wills, 411. See 23 Am. Jur. 277; 1 Pars. Cont. 26.

Repugnancy in a condition renders it void. 2 Salk. 463; 2 Mod. 285; 11 Mod. 191; 1 Hawks (N. C.) 20; 7 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 192. And see, generally, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 272; 4 Pick. (Mass.) 54; 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 677.

——In Pleading. An inconsistency or disagreement between the statements of material facts in a declaration or other pleading; as, where certain timber was said to be for the completion of a house already built. 1 Salk. 213.

Repugnancy of immaterial facts, or of redundant and unnecessary matter, if it does not contradict material allegations, will not, in general, vitiate the pleadings. Co. Litt. 303b; 10 East, 142; 1 Chit. Pl. 233. See Lawes, Pl. 64; Steph. Pl. 378; Comyn, Dig. "Abatement" (H 6); 1 Viner, Abr. 36; 19 Viner, Abr. 45; Bac. Abr. "Amendment, etc." (E 2), "Pleas" (I 4).

REPUGNANT (Lat. repugnans, from repugnare, to fight against). Contrary to; in conflict with. A condition repugnant to the nature of the estate to which it is annexed is void. 1 Steph. Comm. 281.

REPUTATIO EST VULGARIS OPINIO ubi non est veritas. Reputation is a common opinion where there is no certain knowledge. 4 Coke, 107.

REPUTATION. The opinion generally entertained in a community regarding any matter. Thus, certain matters of pedigree may be proved by common repute.

Most commonly used in the sense of personal reputation, the opinion entertained regarding a man in a community.

"Reputation" is to be distinguished from "character" (q. v.) Character is what a person is; reputation is what he is supposed to be. Character is injured by temptations and wrong doings; reputation, by slanders and libels. Abbott. See 26 N. Y. 203.

REPUTED. Accepted by general, vulgar, or public opinion. Thus, land may be reputed part of a manor, though not really so, and a certain district may be reputed a parish or a manor, or be a parish or a manor in reputation, although it is in reality no parish or manor at all. Brown.

REPUTED MANOR. In feudal law. A name sometimes applied to a manor which has, by becoming separated from the services by which it was formerly held, ceased to be a manor in fact.

REQUEST (Lat. requiro, to ask for).

——In Contracts. A notice of a desire on the part of the person making it that the other party shall do something in relation to a contract. Generally, when a debt is payable immediately, no request need be made. 10 Mass. 230; 3 Day (Conn.) 327; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 319.

——In Pleading. The statement in the plaintiff's declaration that a demand or request has been made by the plaintiff of the defendant to do some act which he was bound to perform, and for which the action is brought.

A general request is that stated in the form, "although often requested so to do" (licet saepe, requisitus), generally added in the common breach to the money counts. Its omission will not vitiate the declaration. 2 H. Bl. 131; 1 Wils. 33; 1 Bos. & P. 59; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 100.

A special request is one provided for by the contract expressly or impliedly. Such a request must be averred (5 Term R. 409; 1 East, 204; 3 Bulst. 297; 3 Campb. 549; 2 Barn. & C. 685) and proved (1 Saund. 32, note 2). It must state time and place of making, and by whom it was made, that the court may judge of its sufficiency. 1 Strange, 89; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (C 69, 70); 1 Saund. 33, note; 2 Vent. 75. See "Demand."

In wills, see "Precatory Words."

REQUEST, LETTERS OF. See "Letters of Request."

REQUEST NOTES. In English law. Certain notes or requests from persons amenable to the excise laws, to obtain a permit for removing any excisable goods or articles from one place to another.

REQUISITION. The act of demanding a thing to be done by virtue of some right.

The demand made by the governor of one state on the governor of another for a fugitive from justice.

The term "requisition" is sometimes used to denote the surrender of fugitives from one state to another; "extradition" being confined to surrender of fugitives by a foreign country.

When, as is more common, "extradition" is used to embrace both interstate and international extradition, "requisition" is applied to the formal request of the governor for the surrender, and not to the other proceedings.

REQUISITIONS ON TITLE. In English conveyances. Objections to the title shown by an abstract pointed out by the purchaser's solicitor to the vendor's solicitor.

REREFIEFS. In Scotch law. Inferior fiefs; portions of a fief or feud granted out to inferior tenants. 2 Bl. Comm. 57.

RERUM ORDO CONFUNDITUR, SI UNIcuique jurisdictio non servatur. The order of things is confounded if every one preserves not his jurisdiction. 4 Inst. Proem.

RERUM PROGRESSU OSTENDUNT multa, quae in initio praecaveri seu praevideri non possunt. In the course of events, many mischiefs arise which at the beginning could not be guarded against or foreseen. 6 Coke, 40.

RERUM SUARUM QUILIBET EST MODerator et arbiter. Every one is the manager and disposer of his own matters. Co. Litt. 223.

RES (Lat. things). It has a general signification, including both corporeal and incorporeal things. 3 Inst. 182.

The terms res, bona, biens, used by jurists who have written in the Latin and French languages, are intended to include movable or personal, as well as immovable or real, property. 1 Burge, Confl. Laws, 19. See "Biens;" "Bona;" "Things."

By res, according to the modern civilians, is meant everything that may form an object of rights, as in opposition to persona, which is regarded as a subject of rights. Res, therefore, in its general meaning, comprises actions of all kinds; while in its restricted sense it comprehends every object of rights except actions. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 151, § 146. This has reference to the fundamental division of the institutes that all law relates either to persons, to things, or to actions.

The term is used in many special senses, among these being a business matter or question (Dig. 48. 19. 38. 5); equity (Dig. 48. 8. 1. 3); an inheritance (Calv. Lex.); a suit; the subject matter of a suit (Story, Cónfl. Laws, § 592a); substance; property; ownership (Calv. Lex.); a contract (Dig. 50. 16. 6); truth (Dig. 48. 10. 1. 4); empire (Tayl. Civ. Law, 62).

These have been variously divided and classified in law, e. g., in the following ways: (1) Corporeal and incorporeal things; (2) movables and immovables; (3) res mancipi and res nec mancipi; (4) things real and things personal; (5) things in possession and choses (i. e., things) in action; (6) fungible things and things not fungible (fungibiles vel non fungibiles); and (7) res singulae (i. e., individual objects) and universitates rerum (i. e., aggregates of things). Also persons are for some purposes and in certain respects regarded as things.

RES ACCENDENT LUMINA REBUS. One thing throws light upon others. 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 149.

RES ACCESSORIA (Lat.) In the civil law. An accessory thing; that which belongs to a principal thing, or is in connection with it. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 155, § 152. Otherwise termed accessio. Id. § 153.

RES ACCESSORIA SEQUITUR REM principalem. An accessory follows its principal. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 433. For a definition of res accessoria, see Mackeld. Civ. Law, 155.

RES ADJUDICATA. See "Res Judicata."

RES CADUCA. In the civil law. A fallen or escheated thing; an escheat. Halifax. Civ. Law, bk. 2, c. 9, No. 60.

RES COMMUNES (Lat.) In civil law. Those things which, though a separate share of them can be enjoyed and used by every one, cannot be exclusively and wholly appropriated; as, light, air, running water. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 156; Ersk. Inst. 1. 1. 5, 6.

RES CONTROVERSA. In the civil law. A matter controverted; a matter in controversy; a point in question; a question for determination. Calv. Lex.

RES CORONAE. In old English law. Things of the crown; such as ancient manors, homages of the king, liberties, etc. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 6, § 3.

RES CORPORALES. In the civil law. Corporeal things; things which can be touched, or are perceptible to the senses. Dig. 1. 8. 1. 1; Inst. 2. 2; Bracton, fols. 7b, 10b, 13b.

RES DENOMINATUR A PRINCIPALIORI parte. A thing is named from its principal part. 5 Coke, 47.

RES EST MISERA UBI JUS EST VAGUM et incertum. It is a miserable state of things where the law is vague and uncertain. 2 Salk. 512.

RES FUNGIBILES (Lat.) In the civil law. Fungible things.

RES FURTIVAE (Law Lat.) In Scotch law. Goods which have been stolen. Bell, Dict.

RES, GENERALEM HABET SIGNIFICAtionem, quia tam corporea, quam incorporea, cujuscunque sunt generis, naturae sive speciei, comprehendit. The word "things" has a general signification, because it comprehends as well corporeal as incorporeal objects, of whatever nature, sort, or species. 3 Inst. 482; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 415.

RES GESTAE. The facts surrounding or accompanying a transaction which is the subject of legal proceedings.

The phrase is generally used in the law of evidence; the rule being that evidence of words or acts may be admissible (notwithstanding the rule against derivative evidence) on the ground that they are part of the res gestae, provided that the act they accompanied is in itself admissible in evidence, and that they reflect light upon or qualify that act. Thus, the declaration of a railroad engineer as to the cause of an accident, made immediately thereafter, was held admissible in an action against the railroad company. 55 Pa. St. 396. And in criminal cases, remarks of defendant (25 Grat. [Va.] 921), or by the injured person (10 Mo. App. 111; 34 Iowa, 131), are admissible if connected with the transaction, and connected with both in point of time and causal connection; but remarks of persons not in some manner connected with the transaction are inadmissible (99 Mass. 438).

No inflexible rule can be laid down as to the necessary proximity in point of time between the declaration and the act under investigation. See 9 Tex. App. 440; Id. 619; 71 Ga. 128. Perhaps the most extreme holding is that declarations of a deceased some hours before the homicide, that she was to meet defendant on business that evening, were held admissible as part of the res gestae in connection with evidence that she went out that evening to meet some one. 62 Minn. 474.

RES IMMOBILES. In the civil law. Immovable things; including land and that which is connected therewith, either by nature or art, such as trees and buildings. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 160.

RES INCORPORALES. In the civil law. Incorporeal things; things which cannot be touched; such as those things which consist in right. Inst. 2. 2; Bracton, fols. 7b, 10b. Such things as the mind alone can perceive.

RES INTEGRA (Lat. an entire thing; an entirely new or untouched matter). A term applied to those points of law which have not been decided, which are untouched by dictum or decision. 3 Mer. 269; 1 Burge, Confl. Laws, 241.

RES INTER ALIOS ACTA (Lat.) A technical phrase which signifies acts of others or transactions between others.

Neither the declarations nor any other acts of those who are mere strangers, or, as it is usually expressed, any res inter alios acta, are admissible in evidence against anyone. When the party against whom such acts are offered in evidence was privy to the act, the objection ceases; it is no longer res inter alios. 1 Starkie, Ev. 52; 3 Starkie, Ev. 1300; 4 Man. & G. 282. See 1 Metc. (Mass.) 55.

RES INTER ALIOS ACTA ALTERI NOcere non debet. Things done between strangers ought not to injure those who are not parties to them. Co. Litt. 132; 3 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 403; 11 Q. B. 1028.

RES INTER ALIOS JUDICATAE NULlum aliis praejudicium faciant. Matters adjudged in a cause do not prejudice those who were not parties to it. Dig. 44. 2. 1.

RES IPSA LOQUITUR. The thing speaks for itself. A phrase used in actions for injury by negligence, where no proof of negligence is required beyond the accident itself, which is such as necessarily to involve negligence.

RES JUDICATA. A legal or equitable issue which has been decided by a court of competent jurisdiction.

To constitute a matter res judicata, so that, in a subsequent action, it cannot be drawn in question, (1) the court deciding the issue must have had jurisdiction (10 Pet. [U. S.] 474); (2) there must be identity of the subject matter of the action (7 Johns. [N. Y.] 20); (3) identity of the cause of action (8 Conn. 268; 3 Pick. [Mass.] 429), though the form of action may be different if it be of the same general class, or if the remedies be concurrent (12 Gray [Mass.] 428; 28 Minn. 450; 82 Ky. 505); (4) identity of parties (4 Mass. 441; 5 Me. 410; 23 Barb. [N. Y.] 464), but privies of the parties are bound (see "Privy;" 52 N. H. 162; 98 N. Y. 351); (5) identity of capacity in which they sue or are sued (4 C. B. 884; 21 Ala. 813); (6) and there must have been a final determination of the issues (143 Mass. 413; 104 Ill. 369); (7) on the merits (91 U. S. 526; 42 Mich. 459); (8) upon the particular issue (7 Gray [Mass.] 502), but the adjudication is final upon every matter which might have been litigated under the issues made (102 N. Y. 452).

——In Proceedings in Rem. Identity of parties is not essential, the adjudication attaching to the res. See 1 Metc. (Mass.) 204.

RES JUDICATA FACIT EX ALBO NIgrum, ex nigro album, ex curvo rectum, ex recto curvum. A thing adjudged makes white, black; black, white; the crooked, straight; the straight, crooked. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 840.

RES JUDICATA PRO VERITATE ACCIpitur. A thing adjudged must be taken for truth. Co. Litt. 103; Dig. 50. 17. 207; 2 Kent, Comm. 120; 13 Mees. & W. 679. See "Res Judicata."

RES MANCIPI (Lat.) In Roman law. Those things which might be sold and alienated, or of which the property might be transferred from one person to another.

The division of things into res mancipi and res nec mancipi was one of ancient origin, and it continued to a late period in the empire. Res mancipi (Ulph. Frag. xix.) are praedia in italico solo, both rustic and urban; also, jura rusticorum praediorum or servitutes, as via, iter, aquaeductus; also slaves, and four-footed animals, as oxen, horses, etc., quae collo dorsove domantur. Smith. To this list may be added children of Roman parents, who were, according to the old law, res mancipi. The distinction between res mancipi and nec mancipi was abolished by Justinian in his Code. Id.; Cooper, Inst. 442.

RES MOBILES. In the civil law. Movable things; things which may be transported from one place to another, without injury to their substance and form. Things corresponding with the chattels personal of the common law. 2 Kent, Comm. 347.

RES NOVA (Lat.) Something new; something not before decided.

RES NULLIUS (Lat.) A thing which has no owner. A thing which has been abandoned by its owner is as much res nullius as if it had never belonged to any one.

The first possessor of such a thing becomes the owner; res nullius fit primi occupantis. Bowyer, Comm. 97.

RES PER PECUNIAM AESTIMATUR, ET non pecunia per res. The value of a thing is estimated by its worth in money, and the value of money is not estimated by reference to the thing. 9 Coke, 76; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 922.

RES PERIIT DOMINO (Lat. the thing is lost to the owner). A phrase used to express that, when a thing is lost or destroyed, it is lost to the person who was the owner of it at the time. For example, an article is sold; if the seller have perfected the title of the buyer so that it is his, and it be destroyed, it is the buyer's loss; but if, on the contrary, something remains to be done before the title becomes vested in the buyer, then the loss falls on the seller.

RES PERIT DOMINO SUO. The destruction of the thing is the loss of its owner. 2 Bouv. Inst. notes 1456, 1466; Story, Bailm. 426; 2 Kent, Comm. 591.

RES PRIVATAE (Lat.) In the civil law. Things the property of one or more individuals. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 157.

RES PROPRIA EST QUAE COMMUNIS non est. A thing is private which is not common. 8 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 261, 270.

RES PUBLICAE (Lat.) In the civil law. Things the property of the state. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 157; Ersk. Inst. 2. 1. 5. 6.

RES QUAE INTRA PRAESIDIA PERductae nondum sunt, quanquam ab hostibus occupatae, ideo postliminii non egent, quia dominum nondum mutarunt ex gentium jure. Things which have not yet been introduced within the enemy's lines, although held by the enemy, do not need the fiction of postliminy on this account, because their ownership by the law of nations has not yet changed. Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 3, c. 9, § 16; Id. lib. 3, c. 6, § 3.

RES RELIGIOSAE (Lat.) In civil law. Things pertaining to religion; places where the dead were buried. Thevenot Dessaules, Dict. du Dig. "Chose."

RES SACRA NON RECIPIT AESTIMAtionem. A sacred thing does not admit of valuation. Dig. 1. 8. 9. 5.

RES SACRAE (Lat.) In civil law. Those things which had been publicly consecrated.

RES SANCTAE (Lat.) In civil law. Those things which were especially protected against injury of man.

RES SUA NEMINI SERVIT. No one can have a servitude over his own property. 4 Macq. H. L. Cas. 151.

RES TRANSIT CUM SUO ONERE. The thing passes with its burden. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 10, § 3.

RES UNIVERSATIS (Lat.) Those things which belong to cities or municipal corporations. They belong so far to the public that they cannot be appropriated to private use, such as public squares, market houses, streets, and the like. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 446.

RESCEIT, or RECEIT. The admission or receiving of a third person to plead his right in a cause formerly commenced between two other persons; as, when an action is brought against a tenant for life or years, or any other particular tenant, and he makes default, in such case the reversioner may move that he may be received to defend his right, and to plead with the demandant. Jacob; Cowell.

The admittance of a plea when the controversy is between the same two persons. Co. Litt. 192; 3 Nelson, Abr. 146.

RESCEU, or RESCUE (Law Fr.) Received. Novae Narr. 5b; Kitch. Cts. Resceux (plur.); Britt. c. 2.

RESCISSIO (Lat. from rescindere, to annul or avoid). In the civil law. An annulling, avoiding, or making void; abrogation; rescission. Code, 4. 44; Poth. Contr. No. 331.

RESCISSION OF CONTRACTS. The abrogation or annulling of contracts.

The term is generally, but not uniformly, applied to abrogation by the parties, either by consent, or by one party; "cancellation" being the usual term for abrogation by decree of court.

RESCISSORY ACTIONS. In Scotch law. Actions which are brought to set aside deeds. Patterson, Comp. 1058, note.

Proper improbation is an action brought for declaring writing false or forged.

Reduction improbation is an action whereby a person who may be hurt or affected by a writing insists on producing or exhibiting it in court, in order to have it set aside, or its effects ascertained under the certification that the writing, if not produced, shall be declared false and forged.

In an action of simple reduction, the certification is only temporary, declaring the writings called for null until they be produced, so that they recover their full force after their production. Ersk. bk. 4, tit. 1, § 5; Id. bk. 4, tit. 1, § 8.

RESCOUS. An old term, synonymous with "rescue" (q. v.)

RESCRIPT.

——In Canon Law. A term including any form of apostolical letter emanating from the pope. The answer of the pope in writing. Dict. Dr. Canonique.

——In Civil Law. The answer of the prince, at the request of the parties, respecting some matter in dispute between them, or to magistrates, in relation to some doubtful matter submitted to him.

The rescript was differently denominated according to the character of those who sought it. They were called "annotations" or "subnotations," when the answer was given at the request of private citizens; "letters" or "epistles," when he answered the consultation of magistrates; "pragmatic sanctions," when he answered a corporation, the citizens of a province, or a municipality. See "Code."

——At Common Law. A counterpart.

In Massachusetts it is used to denote the statement of the decision of the supreme judicial court as an appellate tribunal, and the accompanying brief statement of the reasons for the decision sent to the court from which the case was brought.

RESCRIPTION. In French law. A rescription is a letter by which the maker requests some one to pay a certain sum of money, or to account for him to a third person for it. Poth. Contr. de Change, note 225.

According to this definition, bills of exchange are a species of rescription. The difference appears to be this, that a bill of exchange is given when there has been a contract of exchange between the drawer and the payee; whereas the rescription is sometimes given in payment of a debt, and at other times it is lent to the payee.

RESCUE.

——In Criminal Law. The forcibly and knowingly freeing another from arrest or imprisonment. 4 Bl. Comm. 131.

A deliverance of a prisoner from lawful custody by a third person. 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 911.

Taking and setting at liberty, against law, a distress taken for rent, services, or damage feasant. Bac. Abr. "Rescous."

——In Maritime Law. The retaking by a party captured of a prize made by the enemy. There is still another kind of rescue which partakes of the nature of a recapture, —it occurs when the weaker party, before he is overpowered, obtains relief from the arrival of fresh succors, and is thus preserved from the force of the enemy. 1 C. Rob. Adm. 224, 271; Halleck, Int. Law, cxxxv.

"Rescue" differs from "recapture." The rescuers do not, by the rescue, become owners of the property, as if it had been a new prize, but the property is restored to the original owners by the right of postliminium.

RESCUSSOR. The party making a rescue is sometimes so called; but more properly he is a "rescuer."

RESCUSSUS (Law Lat.; from Law Fr. rescous). In old English law. Rescue; forcible liberation or release. Spelman.

RESCUTERE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To rescue. Rescussit, he rescued. Reg. Orig. 117; 3 P. Wms. 484. Rescusserunt, they rescued. Reg. Orig. 118.

RESCYT (Law Fr.) Resceit; receipt; the receiving or harboring a felon, after the commission of crime. Britt. c. 23.

RESEANTISA (Law Lat.; from Law Fr. reseance). In old English and Scotch law, Residence. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 3, § 2; Spelman.

RESEAUNT, or RESEANT (Law Fr.) Abiding; dwelling; residing. Britt. c. 98.

RESEISER (Law Lat. reseisire). In old English law. A taking back of seisin. A taking again of lands into the hands of the king, whereof a general livery or ouster le main was formerly mis-sued, contrary to the form and order of law. Staundf. Pr. Reg. 26; Cowell.

RESERVANDO. Reserving. In old conveyancing. An apt word of reserving a rent. Co. Litt. 47a.

RESERVATIO NON DEBET ESSE DE proficuis ipsis quia ea conceduntur, sed de redditu novo extra proficua. A reservation ought not to be of the annual increase itself, because it is granted, but of new rent apart from the annual increase. Co. Litt. 142.

RESERVATION. That part of a deed or instrument which reserves a thing not in esse at the time of the grant, but newly created. 2 Hilliard, Abr. 359.

The creation of a right or interest which had no prior existence as such in a thing or part of a thing granted, by means of a clause inserted by the grantor in the instrument of conveyance.

A "reservation" is distinguished from an "exception" in that it is of a new right or interest; thus, a right of way reserved at the time of conveying an estate, which may have been enjoyed by the grantor as owner of the estate, becomes a new right. 42 Me. 9.

A reservation may be of a life estate (28 Vt. 10; 33 N. H. 18; 3 Jones [N. C.] 37, 38; 23 Mo. 373; 3 Md. Ch. 230); of a right of flowage (41 Me. 298); right to use water (41 Me. 177; 9 N. Y. 423; 16 Barb. [N. Y.] 212); right of way (25 Conn. 331; 6 Cush. [Mass.] 254; 10 Cush. [Mass.] 313; 10 B. Mon. [Ky.] 463); and many other rights and interests (33 N. H. 507; 9 B. Mon. [Ky.] 163; 5 Pa. St. 317). See 6 Cush. (Mass.) 162; 4 Pa. St. 173; 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 73.

RESET. The receiving or harboring an outlawed person. Cowell.

RESET OF THEFT. In Scotch law. The receiving and keeping stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, with a design of feloniously retaining them from the real owner. Alis. Crim. Law, 328.

RESETTER. In Scotch law. A receiver of stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen.

RESIANCE. In old English law. A man's residence or permanent abode. Such a man is called a "resiant." Kitch. Cts. 33.

RESIANT, RESIENT, or RESYAUNT (from Law Fr. reseant, resident). In old English law. Continually dwelling or abiding in a place; resident; a resident. Kitch. Cts. 33; Cowell; 2 Inst. 99. "Resiants and inhabitants within a manor." 3 Leon. 8, case 21.

RESIANTIA, or RESEANTIA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Resiance; residence. Spelman. See "Resiance."

RESIDENCE (Lat. resedeo). Personal presence in a fixed and permanent abode. 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 208; 1 Metc. (Mass.) 251; 105 Mass. 93; 23 Wis. 607.

A residence is different from a domicile, although it is a matter of great importance in determining the place of domicile. 13 Mass. 501; 5 Pick. (Mass.) 370; 1 Metc. (Mass.) 251; 2 Gray (Mass.) 490; 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 11; 11 La. 175; 5 Me. 143. See "Domicile." "Residence" and "habitancy" are usually synonymous. 2 Gray (Mass.) 490; 2 Kent, Comm. (10th Ed.) 574, note. "Residence" indicates permanency of occupation, as distinct from lodging, or boarding, or temporary occupation, but does not include so much as "domicile," which requires an intention continued with residence. 19 Me. 293; 2 Kent, Comm. (10th Ed.) 576.

RESIDENT. One who has his residence (q. v.) in a place.

RESIDENT FREEHOLDER. One who resides within a certain city, county, or state, and owns a freehold estate in lands therein. 29 Wis. 419; 68 Ind. 214.

RESIDENT MINISTER. In international law. The second or intermediate class between ambassadors and envoys, created by the conference of the five powers at Aix-la-Chapelle, in 1818. They are accredited to the sovereign. 2 Phillim. Int. Law, 220*. They are said to represent the affairs, and not the person, of the sovereign, and so to be of less dignity. Vattel, bk. 4, c. 6, § 73. The fourth class is charges-d'affaires, accredited to the minister of foreign affairs. 2 Phillim. Int. Law, 220; Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 3, c. 1, § 6.

RESIDERE (Lat.) In old English law. To sit down; to sit still; to rest; to remain or continue. See "Resident."

RESIDUARY CLAUSE. The clause in a will by which that part of the property is disposed of which remains after satisfying previous bequests and devises. 4 Kent, Comm. 541*; 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1014, note 2.

RESIDUARY DEVISEE. The person to whom the residue of a testator's real estate is devised after satisfying previous devises.

RESIDUARY ESTATE. What remains of testator's estate after deducting the debts and the bequests and devises.

RESIDUARY LEGATEE. He to whom the residuum of the estate is devised or bequeathed by will. Rop. Leg. Index; Powell, Mortg. Index. See "Legacy."

RESIDUE. That which remains of something after taking away a part of it; as, the residue of an estate, that which remains after payment of debts, charges, and particular legacies and devises. 68 Pa. St. 332.

A will bequeathing the general residue of personal property passes to the residuary legatee everything not otherwise effectually disposed of; and it makes no difference whether a legacy falls into the estate by lapse, or as void at law, the next of kin is equally excluded. 15 Ves. 416; 2 Mer. 392. See 7 Ves. 391; 1 Brown, Ch. 589; 4 Brown, Ch. 55; Rop. Leg. Index; Jarm. Wills.

RESIGNATION (Lat. resignatio; re, back, signo, to sign). The act of an officer by which he declines his office, and renounces the further right to use it. It differs from "abdication" (q. v.)

As offices are held at the will of both parties, if the resignation of an officer be not accepted, he remains in office. 4 Dev. (N. C.) 1.

RESIGNATION BOND. In ecclesiastical law. A bond given by an incumbent to resign on a certain contingency. It may be conditioned to resign for good and sufficient reason, and therefore lawful; e. g., to resign if he take a second benefice, or on request, if patron present his son or kinsman when of age to take the living, etc. Cro. Jac. 249, 274. But equity will generally relieve the incumbent. 1 Rolle, Abr. 443.

RESIGNATION EST JURIS PROPRII spontanea refutatio. Resignation is the spontaneous relinquishment of one's own right. Godb. 284.

RESIGNEE. One in favor of whom a resignation is made. 1 Bell, Comm. 125, note.

RESILIRE (Lat.) In old English law. To draw back from a contract before it is made binding. Literally, to leap back or start back. Adhunc possunt partes resilire, the parties may yet draw back. Bracton, fol. 38; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 58, § 3. The Scotch law, with its accustomed closeness, renders this word resile.

RESOLUCION. In Spanish colonial law. An opinion formed by some superior authority on matters referred to its decision, and forwarded to inferior authorities for their instruction and government. Schmidt, Civ. Law, 93, note 1.

RESOLUTION (Lat. re, back, again, solro, to loose, to free). A solemn judgment or decision of a court. This word is frequently used in this sense in Coke and some of the more ancient reporters. An agreement to a law or other thing adopted by a legislature or popular assembly. Distinction between "resolution" and "ordinance," see "Ordinance." See Dict. de Jur.

——In Civil Law. The act by which a contract which existed and was good is rendered null.

"Resolution" differs essentially from "rescission." The former presupposes the contract to have been valid, and it is owing to a cause posterior to the agreement that the resolution takes place; while rescission, on the contrary, supposes that some vice or defect annulled the contract from the beginning. Resolution may be by consent of the parties, or by the decision of a competent tribunal; rescission must always be by the judgment of a court. 7 Tropl. de la Vente, note 689; 7 Toullier, Dr. Civ. 551; Dalloz.

RESOLUTIVE. In Scotch conveyancing. Having the quality or effect of resolving or extinguishing a right. Bell, Dict.

RESOLUTO JURE CONCEDENTIS RESolvitur jus concessum. The right of the grantor being extinguished, the right granted is extinguished. Mackeld. Civ. Law, 179; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 417.

RESOLUTORY CONDITION. One which has for its object, when accomplished, the revocation of the principal obligation; for example, I will sell you my crop of cotton if my ship America does not arrive in the United States within six months. My ship arrives in one month; my contract with you is revoked. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 764.

RESON (Law Fr.) Reason; truth; right; title; justice; act; argument; charge; expression; method; case; article; point. Kelham.

RESORT (from Fr. resorter, q. v.) To go back. "It resorted to the line of the mother." Hale, Hist. Com. Law, c. 11.

RESORTER (Law Fr.) In old English law. To go back. A force resortera le tenement au seigniour del fee, the tenement must necessarily go back to the lord of the fee. Britt. c. 119.

RESPECTARE, or RESPECTUARE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To respite. Fortescue de L. L. Angliae, c. 53, note; Reg. Orig. 319. Respectuabitur, shall be put off. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 23, § 21.

RESPECTU COMPUTI VICECOMITIS HAbendo. A writ for respiting a sheriff's account, addressed to the treasurer and barons of the exchequer. Reg. Orig. 139.

RESPICIENDUM EST JUDICANTI, NEquid aut durius aut remissius construatur quam causa deposcit; nec enim aut severitatis aut clementiae gloria affectanda est. It is a matter of import to one adjudicating that nothing should be either more leniently or more severely construed than the cause itself demands; for the glory neither of severity nor clemency should be affected. 3 Inst. 220.

RESPIRATION (Lat, re, back, spiro, to breathe). Breathing, which consists of the drawing into, inhaling, or, more technically, "inspiring," atmospheric air into the lungs, and then forcing out, expelling, or, technically, "expiring," from the lungs the air therein. Chit. Med. Jur. 92, 416, note (n).

RESPITE.

——In Civil Law. An act by which a debtor who is unable to satisfy his debts at the moment transacts (i. e., compromises) with his creditors and obtains from them time or delay for the payment of the sums which he owes to them. Code La. art. 3051.

A forced respite takes place when a part of the creditors refuse to accept the debtor's proposal, and when the latter is obliged to compel them, by judicial authority, to consent to what the others have determined in the cases directed by law.

A voluntary respite takes place when all the creditors consent to the proposal of the debtor to pay in a limited time the whole or a part of his debt.

A delay, forbearance, or continuation of time.

——In Criminal Law. A temporary suspension of the execution of a sentence. It differs from a "pardon," which is an absolute suspension, and from a "reprieve," in that it is ordinarily for an indefinite time.

RESPITE OF HOMAGE. To dispense with the performance of homage by tenants who held their lands in consideration of performing homage to their lords. Cowell.

RESPONDE BOOK. In Scotch law. A book of record of the chancellary, in which are entered all nonentry and relief duties payable by heirs who take precepts from chancery. Stair, Inst. p. 296, § 28; Ersk. Inst. 11. 5. 50.

RESPONDEAT OUSTER (that he answer over). In practice. A form of judgment anciently used when an issue in law upon a dilatory plea was decided against the party pleading it. See "Abatement."

RESPONDEAT RAPTOR, QUI IGNORARE non potuit quod pupillum alienum abduxit. Let the ravisher answer, for he could not be ignorant that he has taken away another's ward. Hob. 99.

RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR. Let the principal answer. 4 Inst. 114; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1337; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3586; 3 Lev. 352; 1 Salk. 408; 1 Bing. N. C. 418; 4 Maule & S. 259; 10 Exch. 656; 2 El. & Bl. 216; 7 El. & Bl. 426; 1 Bos. & P. 404; 1 C. B. 578; 6 Mees. & W. 302; 10 Exch. 656.

RESPONDENT. One who answers a judicial proceeding applied to the party against whom a writ as of quo warranto is brought.

——In Chancery Practice. The party who makes an answer to a bill or other proceeding in chancery. The correlative is "petitioner" or "complainant."

——In Appellate Practice. The party who answers an appeal. Sometimes called "appellee." The correlative is "appellant."

——In Civil Law. One who answers or is security for another; a fidejussor. Dig. 2. 8. 6.

RESPONDENTIA. In maritime law. A loan of money, on maritime interest, on goods laden on board of a ship, upon the condition that, if the goods be wholly lost in the course of the voyage, by any of the perils enumerated in the contract, the lender shall lose his money; if not, that the borrower shall pay him the sum borrowed, with the interest agreed upon.

The contract is called "respondentia" because the money is lent mainly, or most frequently, on the personal responsibility of the borrower. It differs principally from bottomry (q. v.) in the following circumstances: Bottomry is a loan on the ship; respondentia is a loan upon the goods. The money is to be repaid to the lender, with maritime interest, upon the arrival of the ship in the one case, and of the goods in the other. In most other respects, the contracts are nearly the same, and are governed by the same principles. In the former, the ship and tackle, being hypothecated, are liable, as well as the borrower; in the latter, the lender has, in general, it is said, only the personal security of the borrower. Marsh. Ins. bk. 2, c. 1, p. 734. The general term, including both respondentia and bottomry, is "hypothecation" (q. v.)

RESPONDERA SON SOVERAIGNE. His superior or master shall answer. Articuli sup. Charta, c. 18.

RESPONDERE NON DEBET (Lat. ought not to reply). In pleading. The prayer of a plea where the defendant insists that he ought not to answer, as, when he claims a privilege; for example, as being a member of congress or a foreign ambassador. 1 Chit. Pl. *433.

RESPONSA PRUDENTUM (Lat.) In Roman law. Opinions given by Roman lawyers.

Before the time of Augustus, every lawyer was authorized, de jure, to answer questions put to him; and all such answers, responsa prudentum, had equal authority, which had not the force of law, but the opinion of a lawyer. Augustus was the first prince who gave to certain distinguished jurisconsults the particular privilege of answering in his name, and from that period their answers required greater authority. Adrian determined in a more precise manner the degree of authority which these answers should have, by enacting that the opinions of such authorized jurisconsults, when unanimously given, should have the force of law (legis vicem), and should be followed by the judges, and that, when they were divided, the judge was allowed to adopt that which to him appeared the most equitable. The opinions of other lawyers held the same place they had before,—they were considered merely as the opinions of learned men. Mackeld. Man. Introd. § 43; Mackeld. Hist. Dr. Rom. §§ 40, 49; Hugo, Hist. Dr. Rom. § 313; Inst. 1. 2. 8; Inst. Expl. note 39.

RESPONSALIS (Law Lat.)

——In Old English Law. One who answered or gave answer for another (qui responsum defert). The term seems to be used by Glanville in the sense of "attorney." Glanv. lib. 12, c. 1; Steph. Pl. Append. note (5). But Bracton makes a clear distinction between the two offices, and is followed by Fleta. Bracton, fol. 212b. But see Id. fol. 361b; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 6. Lord Coke defines responsalis to be "he that was appointed by the tenant or defendant, in case of extremity and necessity, to allege the cause of the party's absence, and to certify the court upon what trial he will put himself, viz., the combat or the country." Co. Litt. 128a.

——In the Canon Law. A proctor; one who excuses an absent party. Cowell.

RESPONSALIS AD LUCRANDUM VEL petendum. He who appears and answers for another in court at a day assigned; a proctor, attorney, or deputy. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 169.

RESPONSIBILITY. The obligation to answer for an act done, either civilly or criminally, and to repair any injury it may have caused.

RESPONSIBLE. Able to pay the sum which may be required of him; able to discharge an obligation. Webster; 26 N. H. 527.

RESPONSIO (Lat.) An answer.

RESPONSIO UNIUS NON OMNINO AUDItur. The answer of one witness shall not be heard at all. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 260. This is a maxim of the civil law, where everything must be proved by two witnesses.

RESTITUTIO IN INTEGRAM (Lat.) In civil law. A restoring parties to the condition they were in before entering into a contract or agreement on account of fraud, infancy, force, honest mistake, etc. Calv. Lex. The going into a cause anew from the beginning. Calv. Lex.

RESTITUTION. The return of property to the owner or person entitled to it.

——In Maritime Law. The placing back or restoring articles which have been lost by jettison. This is done when the remainder of the cargo has been saved, at the general charge of the owners of the cargo; but when the remainder of the goods is afterwards lost, there is not any restitution. Stev. Av. pt. 1, c. 1, § 1, art. 1, note 8.

RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS. In ecclesiastical law. A compulsory renewal of cohabitation between a husband and wife who have been living separately.

A suit may be brought in the divorce and matrimonial court for this purpose whenever either the husband or wife is guilty of the injury of subtraction, or lives separate from the other without sufficient reason, by which the party injured may compel the other to return to cohabitation. 3 Bl. Comm. 94; 3 Steph. Comm. 11; 1 Add. Ecc. 305; 3 Hagg. Ecc. 619.

RESTITUTION OF MINORS. In Scotch law. A minor, on attaining majority, may obtain relief against a deed previously executed by him, which may be held void or voidable, according to circumstances. This is called "restitution of minors." Bell, Dict.

RESTITUTION, WRIT OF.

——In Common-Law Practice. A writ which lies, after the reversal of a judgment, to restore a party to all that he has lost by occasion of the judgment. 2 Tidd, Prac. 1186.

——In Criminal Practice. A writ which lay on conviction of an offense involving the asportation of property to compel the criminal to restore the same.

RESTITUTIONE TEMPORALIUM. A writ addressed to the sheriff, to restore the temporalities of a bishopric to the bishop elected and confirmed. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 169.

RESTORE. To return what has been unjustly taken; to place the owner of a thing in the state in which he formerly was.

RESTRAINING ORDER. An order restraining the doing of any act; more commonly called an "injunction."

——In English Law. An order under St. 5 Vict. c. 5, § 4, by which the Bank of England, or any other public company, may be restrained from permitting a transfer of shares until the rights of certain parties thereto have been adjudged.

RESTRAINT OF ALIENATION. Restriction of the power of aliening realty. See "Perpetuity."

RESTRAINT OF TRADE. Restriction of freedom of traffic. Restraint of trade of individuals may be general, or may be partial, in being limited as to time or territory. Contracts in general restraint of trade are void (8 Mass. 223); while those in partial restraint are valid (42 N. J. Eq. 185; 11 Ohio St. 349; 68 N. Y. 300), unless the time be so long, or the territory so extensive, that it amounts to a general restraint (36 Cal. 342). Contracts or combinations which operate in restraint of public trade are ordinarily void, though the restraint be but partial. 68 N. Y. 558.

RESTRICTIVE INDORSEMENT. An indorsement which confines the negotiability of a promissory note or bill of exchange by using express words to that effect, as, by indorsing it payable to A. B. only. 1 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 512; 2 Murph. (N. C.) 138; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1138.

RESTS. Periodical balancings of an account (particularly in mortgage and trust accounts), made for the purpose of converting interest into principal, and charging the party liable thereon with compound interest. Mozley & W.

RESULTING TRUST. A trust raised by implication or construction of law, and presumed to exist from the supposed intention of the parties and the nature of the transaction.

All trusts created by implication or construction of law are often included under the general term "implied trusts;" but these are commonly distinguished into implied or resulting and constructive trusts; resulting or presumptive trusts being those which are implied or presumed from the supposed intention of the parties and the nature of the transaction; constructive trusts, such as are raised independently of any such intention, and which are forced on the conscience of the trustee by equitable construction and the operation of law. Story, Eq. Jur. § 1095; Hill, Trustees, 91; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 510; 2 Spence, Eq. Jur. 198; 3 Swanst. 585; 1 Ohio, 321; 6 Conn. 285; 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 373; 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 93. See "Trust."

RESULTING USE. A use raised by equity for the benefit of a feoffor who has made a voluntary conveyance to uses without any declaration of the use. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 100.

The doctrine, at first limited to the case of an apparently voluntary conveyance with no express declaration, became so extended that a conveyance of the legal estate ceased to imply an intention that the feoffee should enjoy the beneficial interest therein; and if no intent to the contrary was expressed, and no consideration proved or implied, the use always resulted to the feoffor. 2 Washb. Real Prop. 100. And if part only of the use was expressed, the balance resulted to the feoffor. 2 Atk. 150; 2 Rolle, Abr. 781; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 451; Co. Litt. 23a. And, under the statute, where a use has been limited by deed, and expires, or cannot vest, it results back to the one who declared it. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 494; 15 Me. 414; 5 Watts & S. (Pa.) 323; 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 388. And see Cro. Jac. 200; White & T. Lead. Cas. 258; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 132 et seq. See "Use."

RESUMMONS (Law Lat. resummonitio). In practice. A second summons. The calling a person a second time to answer an action, where the first summons is defeated upon any occasion, as the death of a party, or the like. Cowell.

RESUMPTION (Law Lat. resumptio). In old English law. The taking again into the king's hands such lands or tenements as before, upon false suggestion or other error, he had delivered to the heir or granted by letters patent to any man. St. 31 Hen. VI. c. 7; Cowell.

RESURRENDER. Where copyhold land has been mortgaged by surrender, and the mortgagee has been admitted, then, on the mortgage debt being paid off, the mortgagor is entitled to have the land reconveyed to him, by the mortgagee surrendering it to the lord to his use. This is called a "resurrender." 2 Dav. Conv. 1332n.

RETAIL. To sell by small parcels, and not in the gross. 5 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 279; 7 Metc. (Mass.) 308.

RETAIN. In practice. To engage the services of an attorney or counsellor to manage a cause. See "Retainer."

RETAINER. The act of withholding what one has in one's own hands, by virtue of some right. See "Administrator;" "Executor;" "Lien."

——In Practice. The act of a client by which he engages an attorney or counsellor to manage a cause, either by prosecuting it, when he is plaintiff, or defending it, when he is defendant.

The retaining fee. See 38 Kan. 668.

In English practice, a much more formal retainer is usually required than in American. Thus it is said by Chitty (3 Prac. 116, note [m]), that, although it is not indispensable that the retainer should be in writing, unless required by the other side, it is very expedient. It is therefore recommended, particularly when the client is a stranger, to require from him a written retainer, signed by himself, and, in order to avoid the insinuation that it was obtained by contrivance, it should be witnessed by one or more respectable persons. When there are several plaintiffs, it should be signed by all, and not by one for himself and the others, especially if they are trustees or assignees of a bankrupt or insolvent. The retainer should also state whether it be given for a general or a qualified authority. See 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 738, 830; 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 34, 296; 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 464; 1 N. H. 23; 28 N. H. 302; 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 275; 27 Miss. 567.

RETAINING FEE. A fee given to counsel on being consulted, in order to insure his future services. See "Retainer."

RETAKING. The taking one's goods, wife, child, etc., from another, who, without right, has taken possession thereof. See "Recaption."

RETALIATION. In international law. A term including both reprisal and retorsion (q. v.)

RETALLIA (Law Lat.; from Law Fr. retailler, to cut again). In old English law. Retail; the cutting up again, or division of a commodity into smaller parts. Nec in grosso, nec ad retalliam, neither in gross (by wholesale), nor at retail. Reg. Orig. 184.

RETARE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To suspect; to accuse. Retatus de murdro, accused of murder. Assis. de Clarendon, temp. Hen. II. § 1; Spelman. De furto retatus, charged with theft. Cowell.

RETENTION. In Scotch law. The right which the possessor of a movable has of holding the same until he shall be satisfied for his claim either against such movable or the owner of it; a lien.

General retention is the right to withhold or detain the property of another, in respect of any debt which happens to be due by the proprietor to the person who has the custody, or for a general balance of accounts arising on a particular train of employment. 2 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 90, 91.

Special retention is the right of withholding or retaining property or goods which are in one's possession under a contract, till indemnified for the labor or money expended on them.

RETONSOR (Law Lat. from retondere, q. v.) In old English law. A clipper of money. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 20, § 122.

RETORNA BREVIUM. In old English law. The return of writs by sheriffs and bailiffs, which is only a certificate delivered to the court on the day of return, of that which he hath done touching the execution of their writ directed to him. This must be indorsed on back of writ by officer. 2 Lilly, Abr. 476. Each term has return days, fixed, as early as 51 Hen. III., at intervals of about a week, on which all original writs are returnable. The first return day is regularly the first day in the term; but there are three days' grace. 2 Bl. Comm. 277.

RETORNO HABENDO. In practice. A writ issued to compel a party to return property to the party to whom it has been adjudged to belong, in an action of replevin.

Thus, where the property taken was cattle, it recites that the defendant was summoned to appear to answer the plaintiff in a plea whereof he took the cattle of the said plaintiff, specifying them, and that the said plaintiff afterwards made default; wherefore it was then considered that the said plaintiff and his pledges of prosecuting should be in mercy, and that the said defendant should go without day, and that he should have return of the cattle aforesaid. It then commands the sheriff that he should cause to be returned the cattle aforesaid to the said defendant without delay, etc. 2 Sellon, Prac. 168.

RETORSION. The name of the act employed by a government to impose the same hard treatment on the citizens or subjects of a state that the latter has used towards the citizens or subjects of the former, for the purpose of obtaining the removal of obnoxious measures. Vattel, liv. 2, c. 18, § 341; De Martens, Precis, liv. 8, c. 2, § 254; Kluber, Dr. des Gens, sec. 2, c. 1, § 234; Manning, Comm. 105.

RETOUR. In Scotch law. To return a writ or brieve to the office in chancery from which it issued. Hubback, Ev. Success. 597. See "Retour of Service."

RETOUR OF SERVICE. In Scotch law. An authenticated copy of the verdict of a jury (called a "service") taken under a brieve of succession, by which the legal character of a party as heir is judicially established. Hubback, Ev. Success. 597; 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, p. 80. See Bell, Dict.

RETRACTATION, or RETRACTION. In probate practice. A withdrawal of a renunciation.

RETRACTO O TANTEO. In Spanish law. The right of revoking a contract of sale; the right of redemption of a thing sold. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 13, c. 2, § 4.

RETRACTUS AQUAE (Law Lat.) In old English law. Retreat of the water; ebb, or low water; the retreat of tide. Plac. Cor. Rege, Pasch.; 30 Edw. I. apud Cantuar. Rot. 58; Cowell.

RETRACTUS FEUDALIS (Law Lat.) In old Scotch law. The power which a superior possessed of paying off a debt due to an adjudging creditor, and taking a conveyance to the adjudication. Bell, Dict.

RETRAHERE (Lat. from re, back, and trahere, to draw). In old English practice. To draw back; to withdraw. Si simpliciter se retrahat a brevi, non tamen se retrahit ab actione,—nisi expresse dicat quod se retrahat ab utroque, if he merely withdraw himself from the writ, he does not thereby withdraw himself from the action, unless he expressly says that he withdraws himself from both. Bracton, fol. 182b. See Fleta, lib. 4, c. 7, § 1.

RETRAIT (Fr. from retraire, to draw back). In old French and Canadian law. The taking back of a fief by the seignior, in case of alienation by the vassal. Dunkin's Address, 93.

A right of pre-emption by the seignior, in case of sale of the land by the grantee. Id. 40.

RETRAXIT (Lat. he withdraws). In practice. The act by which a plaintiff withdraws his suit. It is so called from the fact that this was the principal word used when the law entries were in Latin.

A "retraxit" differs from a "nonsuit;" the former being the act of the plaintiff himself, for it cannot even be entered by attorney (8 Coke, 58; 3 Salk. 245; 8 Pa. St. 157, 163), and it must be after declaration filed (3 Leon. 47; 8 Pa. St. 163); while the latter occurs in consequence of the neglect merely of the plaintiff. A retraxit also differs from a nolle prosequi. The effect of a retraxit is a bar to all actions of a like or a similar nature (Bac. Abr. "Nonsuit" [A]); a nolle prosequi is not a bar even in a criminal prosecution (2 Mass. 172). See 2 Sellon, Prac. 338; Bac. Abr. "Nonsuit;" Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (X 2).

RETREAT TO THE WALL. A figurative phrase used to express the duty of one assailed to retreat as far as he can with safety before resisting the assault with force, such a retreat being essential to the right to kill in self-defense. 4 Bl. Comm. 185.

RETRO (Lat.) Back; backward; behind. Retrofeodum, a rere fief, or arriere fief. Spelman.

RETROACTIVE. The same as "retrospective" (q. v.)

RETROCESSION. In civil law. When the assignee of heritable rights conveys his rights back to the cedent, it is called a "retrocession." Ersk. Inst. 3. 5. 1; Dict. de Jur.

RETROSPECTIVE. Looking backward. A retroactive law is one which applies to cases existing at its passage, so as to impose new duties or attach new disabilities with reference to past transactions, or to impair vested rights.

RETTE (Law Fr.) In old English law. An accusation or charge. Quant clerk est prise par rette de felony, when a clerk is taken on a charge of felony. St. Westminster I. c. 2.

RETTER (Law Fr.) In old English law. To accuse; to charge; to lay to the charge; to account; in old English, to arret, or arrect. Ceo purra il retter a sa negligence, he must charge this to his own negligence. Britt. c. 59. Ceo poies retter a vostre folly demesne, you may lay this to your own folly. Y. B. H. 10 Edw. III. 8. Il serra rette la folly, it shall be accounted the folly. Litt. § 261.

RETTUM (Law Lat.; from Law Fr. rette, q. v.) In old English law. An accusation; a charge. Si clericus aliquis pro crimine aliquo vel retto—arrestatus fuerit, if any clerk shall have been arrested for any crime or charge. St. Marlb. c. 28 (27).

RETURN.

——Of Writs or Process. The redelivery of a writ or process by the officer charged with its execution to the court from which it issued, with an account of the manner in which he has executed it. The account indorsed on or affixed to process or writs by the officer, stating the manner of its execution.

——To Writs. The answer made by one to whom an alternative writ (as of habeas corpus or quo warranto) is directed.

——On Appeal or Error. The papers or record transmitted from the lower to the appellate court.

RETURN DAY. A day appointed by law when all writs are to be returned which have issued since the preceding return day. The sheriff is, in general, not required to return his writ until the return day. After that period he may be ruled to make a return.

RETURN OF PREMIUM. In insurance. A repayment of a part or the whole of the premium paid. Policies of insurance, especially those on marine risks, not unfrequently contain stipulations for a return of the whole or a part of the premium in certain contingencies (2 Phil. Ins. xxii. § 11); but in the absence of any such stipulation, in a case free of fraud on the part of the assured, if the risk does not commence to run, he is entitled to a return of it, if paid, or an exoneration from his liability to pay it, subject to deduction settled by stipulation or usage; and so, pro rata, if only a part of the insured subject is put at risk (2 Phil. Ins. c. xxii. § 1); and so an abatement of the excess of marine interest over the legal rate is made in hypothecation of ship or cargo in like case (Id. § 7; Boul. P. Dr. Com. tit. 9, § 13, tom. 3, p. 63 (Ed. of 1822); Poth. Cont. a la Grosse, note 39.

RETURNUM AVERIORUM. A judicial writ, similar to the retorno habendo. Cowell.

RETURNUM IRREPLEGIABILE. A judicial writ addressed to the sheriff for the final restitution or return of cattle to the owner when unjustly taken or distrained, and so found by verdict. It is granted after a nonsuit in a second deliverance. Reg. Jud. 27.

REUS (Lat.) In civil law. A party to a suit, whether plaintiff or defendant. Reus est qui cum altero litem contestatem habet, sive id egit, sive cum eo actum est.

A party to a contract. Reus credendi is he to whom something is due, by whatever title it may be; reus debendi is he who owes, for whatever cause. Poth. ad Pand. lib. 50.

REUS EXCIPIENDO FIT ACTOR. The defendant, by a plea, becomes plaintiff. Bannier, Tr. des Preuves, §§ 152, 320; Best, Ev. 294, § 252.

REUS LAESAE MAJESTATIS PUNITUR, ut pereat unus ne pereant omnes. A traitor is punished that one may die lest all perish. 4 Coke, 124.

REUS PROMITTENDI. See "Reus Stipulandi."

REUS STIPULANDI. In the civil law. The party to a stipulation is so called if he is the creditor or obligee, and the debtor or obligor to such a stipulation is called the "reus promittendi." Where there are several creditors or several debtors jointly entitled to or jointly liable under a stipulation, they were respectively called "correi;" i. e., joint rei. Brown.

REVE, or GREVE (Lat. gerefa, or refa, from raefan, to seize). In English law. A chief officer or superintendent (praepositus, praefectus). Properly, according to Spelman, a collector or exactor of public moneys or fines.

Shire reve, the reve or chief officer of the shire (pagi praepositus). Hence, sheriff.

Tun greve, the reve or chief officer of a town (villae praepositus). Afterwards simply called "reve," and bailiff. Spelman. See "Reeve."

REVE LAND. In Domesday Book we find land put down as "thane lands," which were afterwards converted into reve lands, i. e., such lands as, having reverted to the king upon death of his thane, who had it for life, were not since granted out to any by the king, but vested in charge upon account of the reve or bailiff of the manor. Spelman, Feuds, c. 24. Coke was mistaken in thinking it was land held in socage.

REVE MOTE. In Saxon law. The court of the reve, reeve, or shire reeve. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 6.

REVENDICATION. In civil law. An action by which a man demands a thing of which he claims to be owner. It applies to immovables as well as movables; to corporeal or incorporeal things. Merlin, Repert.

Revendication, in another sense, corresponds very nearly to the "stoppage in transitu" of the common law. It is used in that sense in Code de Commerce, art. 577. Revendication, says that article, can take place only when the goods sold are on the way to their place of destination, whether by land or water, and before they have been received into the warehouse of the insolvent (failli) or that of his factor or agent authorized to sell them on account of the insolvent. See Dig. 14. 4. 15; Id. 18. 1. 19. 53; Id. 19. 1. 11.

REVERSAL.

——In International Law. A declaration by which a sovereign promises that he will observe a certain order, or certain conditions, which have been once established, notwithstanding any changes that may happen to cause a deviation therefrom; as, for example, when the French court consented for the first time, in 1745, to grant to Elizabeth, the czarina of Russia, the title of empress, it exacted as a reversal a declaration purporting that the assumption of the title of an imperial government by Russia should not derogate from the rank which France had held towards her.

Letters by which a sovereign declares that, by a particular act of his, he does not mean to prejudice a third power. Of this we have an example in history. Formerly the emperor of Germany, whose coronation, according to the golden ball, ought to have been solemnized at Aix-la-Chapelle, gave to that city, when he was crowned elsewhere, reversals, by which he declared that such coronation took place without prejudice to its rights, and without drawing any consequences therefrom for the future.

——In Practice. The decision of a superior court by which the judgment, sentence, or decree of the inferior court is annulled.

REVERSER. In Scotch law. The proprietor of an estate who grants a wadset (or mortgage) of his lands, and who has a right, on repayment of the money advanced to him, to be replaced in his right. Bell, Dict.

REVERSIO (Law Lat. from revertī, to return). In old English law. The returning of land to the donor. Fleta, lib. 3, cc. 10, 12.

REVERSION. The residue of an estate left in the grantor, to commence in possession after the determination of some particular estate granted out by him. The return of land to the grantor and his heirs after the grant is over. Co. Litt. 142b.

The reversion arises by operation of law, and not by deed or will, and it is a vested interest or estate, and in this it differs from a "remainder," which can never be limited unless by either deed or devise. 2 Bl. Comm. 175; Cruise, Dig. tit. 17; Plowd. 151; 4 Kent, Comm. 349; 19 Viner, Abr. 217. A reversion is said to be an incorporeal hereditament. 4 Kent, Comm. 354; 1 Washb. Real

Prop. 37, 47, 63; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1850. See "Remainder."

REVERSIONARY INTEREST. The interest which one has in the reversion of lands or other property. The residue which remains to one who has carved out of his estate a lesser estate. See "Reversion." An interest in the land when possession shall fail. Cowell.

REVERSIONARY LEASE. One to take effect in futuro. A second lease, to commence after the expiration of a former lease. Wharton.

REVERSIONER. A person who is entitled to an estate in reversion.

REVERSOR. In Scotch law. A debtor who makes a wadset, and to whom the right of reversion is granted. Ersk. Inst. 2. 8. 1. A reversioner. Jacob.

REVERTER. Reversion. A possibility of reverter is that species of reversionary interest which exists when the grant is so limited that it may possibly terminate. See 1 Washb. Real Prop. 63.

REVEST. To vest again. A seisin is said to revest, where it is acquired a second time by the party out of whom it has been divested. 1 Roper, Husb. & Wife, 353.

It is opposed to "divest." The words "revest" and "divest" are also applicable to the mere right or title, as opposed to the possession. Brown.

REVESTIRE (Law Lat.) In old European law. To return or resign an investiture, seisin, or possession that has been received; to reinvest; to re-enfeoff. Spelman.

REVIEW. A second examination of a matter; ordinarily applied to a re-examination of a judicial or official determination. It is a general term, embracing re-examination obtained by every variety of procedure, as by motion for new trial, appeal, writ of error, bill of review, etc.

REVIEW, BILL OF. In equity practice. A bill in the nature of a writ of error, filed to procure an examination and alteration or reversal of a decree made upon a former bill, which decree has been signed and enrolled. Story, Eq. Pl. § 403.

REVISING BARRISTERS. In English law. Barristers appointed to revise the list of voters for county and borough members of parliament, and who hold courts for that purpose throughout the country, being appointed in July or August. 6 Vict. c. 18; 3 Chit. St.

REVIVAL.

——Of Contracts. An agreement to renew the legal obligation of a just debt after it has been barred by the act of limitation or lapse of time is called its "revival."

——Of Judgment. At common law, the act by which a judgment which has lain dormant or without any action upon it for a year and a day is again restored to its original force.

When a judgment is more than a day and a year old, no execution can issue upon it at common law; but till it has been paid, or the presumption arises from lapse of time that it has been satisfied, it may be revived and have all its original force, which was merely suspended. This may be done by a scire facias, or an action of debt on the judgment. See "Scire Facias."

Where the common-law rule is not in force, the bringing of suit on a judgment to prevent the bar of the statute of limitations is termed "revival."

——Of Action. The continuation of an action which has abated by the death or disability of a party, or a transfer of the cause of action. At common law, this was affected by a bill in equity (see "Bill of Revivor"), but in most of the states, a proceeding on application to the court in which the action was pending has been substituted.

REVIVOR. In equity practice. A bill used to renew an original bill which, for some reason, has become inoperative. See "Bill of Revivor."

REVOCATION OF AGENCY. An agency is dissolved or determined in several ways:

I. By the act of the principal, either
   - (a) Express, as
     - (1) By direct and formal writing, publicly advertised;
     - (2) By informal writing to the agent privately;
     - (3) By parol. 6 Pick. (Mass.) 198.
   - (b) Implied from circumstances, as by appointing another person to do the same act, where the authority of both would be incompatible. 78 Ky. 413.

The exceptions to the power of the principal to revoke his agent's authority at mere pleasure are

(1) When the principal has expressly stipulated that the authority shall be irrevocable, and the agent has also an interest in its execution. 86 Ill. 142.

(2) Where an authority or power is coupled with an interest, or is given for a valuable consideration, or is a part of a security, unless there is an express stipulation that it shall be revocable. 40 Ill. 109.

(3) Where an agent's act in pursuance of his authority has become obligatory, for nemo potest mutare consilium suum in alterius injuriam. 121 N. Y. 582.

II. By the agent's giving notice to his principal that he renounces the agency; but the principal must sustain no damage thereby; otherwise the agent would be responsible therefor. 37 Mich. 481.

III. By operation of law, as
   - (a) By the expiration of the period during which the agency was to exist or to have effect. 62 Ga. 216.
   - (b) By a change of condition or of state, producing an incapacity of either the principal or the agent, as

(1) Marriage of a feme sole principal. 22 Tex. 365.
(2) Mental disability established by inquisition, or where the party is placed under guardianship. 2 Hall (N. Y.) 495.
(3) Bankruptcy, except as to such rights as do not pass to the trustee under the adjudication. 6 Biss. (U. S.) 405.
(4) Death, unless the authority is coupled with an interest in the thing vested in the agent. 18 Beav. 179.
(5) Extinction of the subject of the agency.
(6) Cessation of the principal's powers.
(7) Complete execution of the trust confided to the agent, who then is functus officio. 100 N. Y. 413; Wharton.
(8) A state of war also terminates all agencies requiring intercourse between belligerent nations. 100 Mass. 561.

REVOCATION OF PROBATE. The vacation or recall of an order admitting a will to probate.

REVOCATIONE PARLIAMENTI. An ancient writ for recalling a parliament. 4 Inst. 44.

REVOCATUR (Lat. recalled). A term used to denote that a judgment is annulled for an error in fact. The judgment is then said to be recalled, revocatur; not "reversed," which is the word used when a judgment is annulled for an error in law. Tidd, Prac. 1126.

REVOLT. The endeavor of the crew of a vessel, or any one or more of them, to overthrow the legitimate authority of her commander, with intent to remove him from his command, or against his will to take possession of the vessel by assuming the government and navigation of her, or by transferring their obedience from the lawful commander to some other person. 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 417.

A confederacy or combination must be shown. 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 582; 1 Woodb. & M. (U. S.) 305; Crabbe, Dist. Ct. 558. The vessel must be properly registered (3 Sumn. [U. S.] 342); must be pursuing her regular voyage (2 Sumn. [U. S.] 470). The indictment must specifically set forth the acts which constitute the crime. Wharton, Prec. § 1061, note. And see 1 Mason (U. S.) 147; 5 Mason (U. S.) 402, 404; 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 448; 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 402, 528; 2 Curt. (U. S.) 225; 1 Pet. C. C. (U. S.) 213.

REWARD. An offer of recompense by the government, or by a private person, to whoever will perform some special act.

A reward is an offer, revocable at any time before performance. When accepted by performance, it becomes a contract. 92 U. S. 73.

REWME (Old Eng.; from Law Fr. reaume). In old records. Realm; kingdom. "In the name of Fader, Son, and Holy Ghost, I, Henry of Lancaster, chalenge this reume of Ynglonde and the croun, with all the members and the appurtenances, als I that am descendit be right line of the blode comyng fro the gude Lord King Henry therde, and thorgho that right that God, of his grace, hath sent mee, with helpe of my kyn and of my frendes to recover it; the which rewme was in poynt to be ondone for defaut of governance and undoyng of the gude laws." Claim of Henry, Duke of Lancaster (afterwards Henry IV.), to the crown of England. 1 How. St. Tr. 152.

REX (Lat.) In old English law. King; a king; the king.

REX DEBET ESSE SUB LEGE QUIA LEX FACIT REGEM. The king ought to be under the law, because the law makes the king. 1 Bl. Comm. 239.

REX EST LEGALIS ET POLITICUS. The king is both a legal and political person. Lane, 27.

REX EST LEX VIVENS. The king is the living law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 17.

REX EST MAJOR SINGULIS; MINOR universis. The king is greater than any single person; less than all. Bracton, lib. 1, c. 8.

REX HOC SOLUM NON POTEST FACERE quod non potest injuste agere. The king can do everything but an injustice. 11 Coke, 72.

REX NON DEBET ESSE SUB HOMINE sed sub Deo et lege. The king should not be under the authority of man, but of God and the law. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 46, 111; Bracton, 5.

REX NON POTEST FALLERE NEC FALli. The king cannot deceive or be deceived. Grounds & Rudiments of Law, 438.

REX NON POTEST PECCARE. The king can do no wrong. 2 Rolle, 304; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 9, 308; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 51; 1 Bl. Comm. 246.

REX NUNQUAM MORITUR. The king never dies. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 49; Branch, Max. (5th Ed.) 197; 1 Bl. Comm. 249.

RHANDIR. In gavelkind law. A gavel was divided into four rhandirs, each consisting of four tenements.

RHODIAN LAWS. A code of maritime laws adopted by the people of Rhodes, who had by their commerce and naval victories obtained the sovereignty of the sea, about nine hundred years before the Christian era. There is reason to suppose this code has not been transmitted to posterity, at least not in a perfect state. A collection of marine constitutions, under the denomination of "Rhodian Laws," may be seen in Vinnius; but they bear evident marks of a spurious origin. Marsh. Ins. bk. 1, c. 4, p. 15. See "Code."

RIAL OF PLATE. A Spanish coin computed in custom-house calculations at ten cents. 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 626.

RIAL OF VELLON. A Spanish coin, computed in custom-house calculations at five cents. 1 Story, U. S. Laws, 626.

RIBALDUS (Law Lat.; from Fr. ribauld, ribaud). In old European law. A worthless person; a vagabond; a rogue or ruffian. Spelman. It was not always, however, used in a bad sense, but sometimes denoted an inferior attendant or servant. Id.

RIBAUD. A rogue; a vagrant. It is not used.

RICHARD ROE, otherwise TROUBLESOME. The casual ejector and fictitious defendant in ejectment, whose services are no longer invoked.

RICOHOME (Spanish). In Spanish law. A nobleman; a count or baron. 1 White, Recop. 36.

RIDER. A schedule or small piece of paper or parchment added to some part of the record; as, when on the reading of a bill in the legislature a new clause is added, this is tacked to the bill on a separate piece of paper, and is called a "rider."

RIDER (or RIDDER) ROLL. In old English practice. A schedule or small piece of parchment added to some part of a roll or record. Cowell; Blount. A supplementary roll. 2 Tidd, Prac. 730.

RIDING. In English law. An ascertained district; part of a county. This term has the same meaning in Yorkshire that division has in Lincolnshire. 4 Term R. 459.

RIEN. A French word which signifies "nothing." It has generally this meaning; as, rien en arrere; rien passe per le fait, nothing passes by the deed; rien per descent, nothing by descent. It sometimes signifies not, as, rien culpable, not guilty. Doct. Plac. 435.

RIEN CULP (Law Fr.) In old pleading. Not guilty. Y. B. H. 9 Hen. VI. 16; Id. M. 10 Hen. VI. 53.

RIEN DIT (Law Fr.) In old pleading. Says nothing (nil dicit). Y. B. M. 8 Hen. VI. 16.

RIEN EN ARRERE (Law Fr. nothing in arrear). In pleading. A plea which alleges that there is nothing remaining due and unpaid of the plaintiff's demand. It is a good plea, and raises the general issue in an action for rent. 2 Wm. Saund. 297, note 1; 2 Chit. Pl. 486; 2 Ld. Raym. 1503.

A plea in an action of debt for rent. 1 Tidd, Prac. 650; Roscoe, Real Actions, 475.

A plea to an avowry in replevin. Roscoe, Real Actions, 638; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 566. A quasi general issue. 2 Seld. (N. Y.) 141.

RIEN LUY DOIT (Law Fr.) In old pleading. Owes him nothing. The plea of nil debet. Y. B. M. 3 Hen. VI. 16.

RIEN PASSA PAR LE FAIT (Law Fr. nothing passed by the deed). In pleading. A plea which avoids the effect of a deed, where its execution cannot be denied, by asserting that nothing passed thereby; for example, an allegation that the acknowledgment was before a court which had not jurisdiction.

RIENS, RIEN, or RYEN (Law Fr.) Nothing. Litt. § 53.

RIENS LOUR DEUST (Law Fr. not their debt). The old form of the plea of nil debet. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 332.

RIENS PER DISCENT (Law Fr. nothing by descent). The plea of an heir, where he is sued for his ancestor's debt, and has no land from him by descent, or assets in his hands. Cro. Car. 151; 1 Tidd, Prac. 645; 2 Tidd, Prac. 937.

RIER COUNTY (Law Lat. retrocomitatus.) In old English law. After-county, i. e., after the end of the county court. A time and place appointed by the sheriff for the receipt of the king's money after the end of his county, or county court. Cowell. Fleta (lib. 2, c. 67) calls it the day after the county (dies crastinus post comitatum). It is opposed to "open county" (that is, open county court), in St. 2 Edw. III. c. 5.

RIFFLURA, RUFFLURA, or RUFLURA (Law Lat.; from old Eng. rufflyn, to disorder). In old English criminal law. A slight removal of the skin; a scratch (scarificatio, decortatio). Bracton, fols. 144, 145; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 41, § 3; Spelman.

RIFLETUM (Law Lat.) In old records. A coppice or thicket. Cowell.

RIGA. In old European law. A species of service and tribute rendered to their lords by agricultural tenants. Supposed by Spelman to be derived from the name of a certain portion of land, called, in England, a "rig" or "ridge," an elevated piece of ground, formed out of several furrows.

RIGHT. In the most abstract sense, justice, equity.

That which a person, having it, is entitled to keep and enjoy, and to be protected by law in its enjoyment; as the right of personal liberty, and other rights of persons. See 1 Bl. Comm. 129.

That which one person ought to have or receive from another, it being withheld from him, or not in his possession. In this sense, "right" has the force of "claim," and is properly expressed by the Latin jus. Lord Coke considers this to be the proper signification of the word, especially in writs and pleadings, where an estate is turned to a right, as by discontinuance, disseisin, etc. Co. Litt. 345a.

That interest which a person actually has in any subject of property, entitling him to hold or convey it at pleasure. An estate in esse in conveyances. Co. Litt. 345a. In this sense, "right" (jus) has the force of ownership or property. Lord Coke, comparing the terms of right and title observes that "'title' is the more general word, for every right is a title, but every title is not such a right for which an action lies." Co. Litt. 345b. Sir Matthew Hale distinguishes between the right of an estate and the title of an estate. Hale, Anal. § 32.

Classification:

(1) Rights are perfect and imperfect. When the things which we have a right to possess, or the actions we have a right to do, are or may be fixed and determinate, the right is a perfect one; but when the thing or the actions are vague and indeterminate, the right is an imperfect one. If a man demand his property which is withheld from him, the right that supports his demand is a perfect one, because the thing demanded is or may be fixed and determinate; but if a poor man ask relief from those from whom he has reason to expect it, the right which supports his petition is an imperfect one, because the relief which he expects is a vague, indeterminate thing. Rutherforth, Inst. c. 2, § 4; Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 1, c. 1, § 4.

(2) Rights are also absolute and qualified. A man has an absolute right to recover property which belongs to him. An agent has a qualified right to recover such property when it had been intrusted to his care, and which has been unlawfully taken out of his possession.

(3) Rights might, with propriety, be also divided into natural and civil rights; but as all the rights which man has received from nature have been modified and acquired anew from the civil law, it is more proper, when considering their object, to divide them into political and civil rights.

Political rights consist in the power to participate, directly or indirectly, in the establishment or management of government. These political rights are fixed by the constitution. Every citizen has the right of voting for public officers, and of being elected. These are the political rights which the humblest citizen possesses.

Civil rights are those which have no relation to the establishment, support, or management of the government. These consist in the power of acquiring and enjoying property, of exercising the paternal and marital powers, and the like. It will be observed that every one, unless deprived of them by a sentence of civil death, is in the enjoyment of his civil rights, which is not the case with political rights, for an alien, for example, has no political, although in the full enjoyment of his civil, rights.

(4) Civil rights are divided into absolute and relative. The absolute rights of mankind may be reduced to three principal or primary articles: The right of personal security, which consists in a person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation; the right of personal liberty, which consists in the power of locomotion, of changing situation, or removing one's person to whatsoever place one's inclination may direct, without any restraint unless by due course of law; the right of property, which consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of all his acquisitions, without any control or diminution save only by the laws of the land. 1 Bl. Comm. 124-139.

(5) The relative rights are public or private. The first are those which subsist between the people and the government; as, the right of protection on the part of the people, and the right of allegiance which is due by the people to the government; the second are the reciprocal rights of husband and wife, parent and child, guardian and ward, and master and servant.

RIGHT CLOSE, WRIT OF. An abolished writ which lay for tenants in ancient demesne, and others of a similar nature, to try the right of their lands and tenements in the court of the lord exclusively. 1 Steph. Comm. 224.

RIGHT IN ACTION. A chose in action (q. v.)

RIGHT IN COURT. See "Rectus in Curia."

RIGHT OF ACTION. The right to bring suit; a legal right to maintain an action, growing out of a given transaction or state of facts, and based thereon. See "Action."

By the old writers "right of action" is commonly used to denote that a person has lost a right of entry, and has nothing but a right of action left. Co. Litt. 363b.

RIGHT OF DISCUSSION. In Scotch law. The right which the cautioner (surety) has to insist that the creditor shall do his best to compel the performance of the contract by the principal debtor before he shall be called upon. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 347.

RIGHT OF DIVISION. In Scotch law. The right which each of several cautioners (sureties) has to refuse to answer for more than his own share of the debt. To entitle the cautioner to this right, the other cautioners must be solvent, and there must be no words in the bond to exclude it. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 347.

RIGHT OF ENTRY. A right of entry is the right of taking or resuming possession of land by entering on it in a peaceable manner.

RIGHT OF HABITATION. In Louisiana. The right of dwelling gratuitously in a house the property of another. Civ. Code La. art. 623; 3 Toullier, Dr. Civ. c. 2, p. 325; 14 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 279, p. 330.

RIGHT OF POSSESSION. The right to possession which may reside in one man, while another has the actual possession, being the right to enter and turn out such actual occupant; e. g., the right of a disseisee. An apparent right of possession is one which may be defeated, by a better; an actual right of possession,—one which will stand the test against all opponents. 2 Bl. Comm. 196*.

RIGHT OF PROPERTY. The abstract right (merum jus) which remains after the actual possession has been so long gone that the right of possession is also lost, and the law will only allow recovery of the land by a writ of right. It, together with possession and right of possession, makes a perfect title; e. g., a disseisor has naked possession, the disseisee has right of possession and right of property. But after twenty years without entry, the right of possession is transferred from the disseisee to the disseisor; and if he now buys up the right of property which alone remains in the disseisee, the disseisor will unite all three rights in himself, and thereby acquire a perfect title. 2 Bl. Comm. 197-199*.

RIGHT OF RELIEF. In Scotch law. The The right which the cautioner (surety) has against the principal debtor when he has been forced to pay his debt. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 347.

RIGHT OF SEARCH. See "Search, Right of;" 1 Kent, Comm. (9th Ed.) 153, note; 1 Phillim. Int. Law, 325.

RIGHT OF WAY. The term imports an easement of way, and not a public highway. 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 432.

RIGHT PATENT. The name of an ancient writ, which, Fitzherbert says, "ought to be brought of lands and tenements, and not of an advowson, or of common, and lieth only of an estate of fee simple, and not for him who has a lesser estate, as tenant in tail, tenant in frank marriage, or tenant for life." Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 1.

RIGHT TO BEGIN. In practice. The party who asserts the affirmative of an issue has the right to begin and reply, as on him is the burden of proof. The substantial affirmative, not the verbal, gives the right. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 74; 18 B. Mon. (Ky.) 136; 6 Ohio St. 307; 2 Gray (Mass.) 260.

RIGHT, WRIT OF. A procedure for the recovery of real property after not more than sixty years' adverse possession; the highest writ in the law, sometimes called, to distinguish it from others of the droitural class, the "writ of right proper." Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27. 3 Steph. Comm. 392.

RIGOR JURIS (Law Lat.) Strictness of law. Latch, 150. Distinguished from gratia curiae, favor of the court. Id.

RING DROPPING. In criminal law. A phrase applied in England to a trick frequently practiced in committing larcenies. It is difficult to define it. It will be sufficiently exemplified by the following cases: The prisoner, with some accomplices, being in company with the prosecutor, pretended to find a valuable ring wrapped up in a paper, appearing to be a jeweller's receipt for "a rich brilliant diamond ring." They offered to leave the ring with the prosecutor if he would deposit some money and his watch as a security. The prosecutor, having accordingly laid down his watch and money on a table, was beckoned out of the room by one of the confederates, while the others took away his watch and money. This was held to amount to a larceny. 1 Leach, C. C. 238; 2 East, P. C. 678. In another case, under similar circumstances, the prisoner procured from the prosecutor twenty guineas, promising to return them the next morning, and leaving the false jewel with him. This was also held to be larceny. 1 Leach, C. C. 314; 2 East, P. C. 679. In these cases the prosecutor had no intention of parting with the property in the money or goods stolen. It was taken, in the first case, while the transaction was proceeding, without his knowledge, and in the last, under the promise that it should be returned. See 2 Leach, C. C. 640.

RINGS, GIVING. The giving of golden rings by a newly-created serjeant-at-law to every person of rank at court, from the princes of the blood, through the lords in parliament and the justices and barons of the courts, down to the meanest clerk of common pleas, to each one according to his dignity. The expense was not less than forty pounds English money. Fortesq. (Amos Ed.) 190; 10 Coke, Introd. 23.

RINGA (Law Lat.) In old English law.

A belt, or girdle; a sword belt. Bracton, fol. 5b; Spelman.

RINGING THE CHANGE. In criminal law. A trick practised by a criminal, by which, on receiving a good piece of money in payment of an article, he pretends it is not good, and, changing it, returns to the buyer a spurious coin. For example, the prosecutor having bargained with the prisoner, who was selling fruit about the streets, to have five apricots for sixpence, gave him a good shilling to change. The prisoner put the shilling into his mouth, as if to bite it in order to try its goodness, and, returning a shilling to the prosecutor, told him it was a bad one. The prosecutor gave him another good shilling, which he also affected to bite, and then returned another shilling, saying it was a bad one. The prosecutor gave him another good shilling, with which he practised this trick a third time, the shillings returned by him being in every respect bad. 2 Leach, C. C. 64. This was held to be an uttering of false money. 1 Russ. Crimes, 114.

RIOT. In criminal law. A tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons or more, assembling together of their own authority with an intent mutually to assist each other against any who shall oppose them, in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing the same in a violent and turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended were of itself lawful or unlawful. Hawk. P. C. c. 65, § 1. See 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 209; 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 72; 3 Rich. (S. C.) 337; 5 Pa. St. 83.

"Riot" includes both "unlawful assembly" and "rout" (q. v.), and the further element that there shall be not only a step towards carrying out the unlawful intent of the assembly, but that they shall proceed therein in a violent and tumultuous manner.

RIOT ACT. St. 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 5, providing that, if any twelve persons or more are committing a riot, any sheriff, mayor, or certain other officers shall by proclamation in the king's name command them to disperse (which is familiarly called "reading the riot act"), and that, if they refuse to obey, and remain together for the space of one hour after such proclamation, they are all guilty of felony.

RIOTOSE (Law Lat. riotously). A formal and essential word in old indictments for riots. 2 Strange, 834. Riotose et routose, riotously and routously. 2 Salk: 593.

RIOTOUS ASSEMBLY. In English criminal law. The unlawful assembling of twelve persons or more, to the disturbance of the peace, and not dispersing upon proclamation. 4 Bl. Comm. 142; 4 Steph. Com. 273.

RIOTOUSLY. In criminal pleading. A technical word properly used in an indictment for a riot, and ex vi termini implying violence. 2 Chit. Crim. Law, 488, 490, note (f); 2 Sess. Cas. 13, cited Id. In the English forms, "riotously and routously" is the expression invariably used. 2 Chit. Crim. Law, ubi supra; 3 Burrows, 1262. And this has been adopted in American practice. Wharton, Prec. Indict. (Ed. 1857) 849 et seq.

RIPA (Lat.) The banks of a river, or the place beyond which the waters do not in their natural course overflow.

An extraordinary overflow does not change the banks of the river. Poth. ad Pand. lib. 50. See "Bank;" "River."

RIPARIAN PROPRIETORS. Those who own the land bounding on a watercourse.

RIPARIAN RIGHTS. The rights of the owners of lands on the banks of rivers and streams. 3 Kent, Comm. 427-432.

RIPARUM USUS PUBLICUS EST JURE gentiam, sicut ipsius fluminis. The use of river banks is by the law of nations public, like that of the stream itself. Dig. 1. 8. 5. pr.; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 1, § 5; Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 6, § 12.

RIPUARIAN LAW. A code of laws of the Franks, who occupied the country upon the Rhine, the Meuse, and the Scheldt, who were collectively known by the name "Ripuarians," and their laws as "Ripuarian Law."

RISCUS (Law Lat.)

——In the Civil Law. A chest for the keeping of clothing. Calv. Lex.

——In Old Pleading. A trunk. Cro. Jac. 664.

RISICUM (Law Lat.) In old insurance law. Risk; hazard; peril. Straccha, Gloss. 16; Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 12.

RISK. In insurance law. The event insured against.

RISTOURNE (Fr.) In insurance law. The dissolution of a policy or contract of insurance, for any cause. Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 16.

RITE (Lat.) In due form. "The rule of presumption is ut res rite acta est" (that a thing is done in due form). Lord Ellenborough, 8 East, 248. See "Omnia Praesumuntur Rite, etc."

RIVER. A natural stream of water flowing betwixt banks or walls in a bed of considerable depth and width, being so called whether its current sets always one way, or flows and reflows with the tide. Woolr. Waters, 40; 16 N. H. 467.

——In Old Law. Rivers were either public or private. Public rivers are divided into "navigable" and "not navigable;" the distinction being that the former flow and reflow with the tide, while the latter do not. Both are "navigable" in the popular sense of the term. Angell, Tide Waters, 74, 75; 7 Pet. (U. S.) 324; 5 Pick. (Mass.) 199; 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 404; 4 Barn. & C. 602; 5 Taunt. 705.

Rivers, when naturally unfit for public use, as above described, are called "private rivers." They are the private property of the riparian proprietors, and cannot be appropriated to public use, as highways, by deepening or improving their channels, without compensation to their owners. 16 Ohio, 540; 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 404; 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 265; 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 277; 8 Pa. St. 379; 10 Me. 278; 1 McCord (S. C.) 580. And see "Watercourse."

——In Modern Use. Rivers are ordinarily classified as navigable or nonnavigable, according to the fact, and not according to the flow of the tide, and the distinction between public and private rivers is accordingly obsolete. See "Navigable."

RIVIATION. In old English law. The use of a river for the purposes of fishing, etc. Hale de Jur. Mar. par. 1, c. 2.

RIVUS (Lat.)

——In the Civil Law. A trench for water to pass. Defined by Ulpian, a place sunk for a distance along, where water may run (locus per longitudinem depressus quo aqua decurrat). Dig. 43. 21. 1. 2.

——In Old English Law. The channel of a watercourse. Bracton, fol. 233; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 27, § 10. Both these writers adopt the definition of the Digests (supra) word for word.

RIX DOLLAR. The name of a coin. The rix dollar of Bremen is deemed, as money of account at the custom house, to be of the value of seventy-eight and three-quarters cents. Act March 3, 1843. The rix dollar is computed at one hundred cents. Act March 2, 1799, § 61.

RIXA (Lat.) In civil law. A dispute; a quarrel. Dig. 48. 8. 17.

RIXATRIX (Lat.) A common scold.

R'NA. A contraction of regina (queen). 1 Inst. Cl. 12.

R'N'S. A contraction of respondes (answer). Y. B. H. 3 Hen. VI. 32.

ROAD. A passage through the country for the use of the people. 3 Yeates (Pa.) 421. See "Way."

——In Maritime Law. An open passage of the sea, which, from the situation of the adjacent land and its own depth and wideness, affords a secure place for the common riding and anchoring of vessels. Hale de Port. Mar. pt. 2, c. 2. This word, however, does not appear to have a very definite meaning. 2 Chit. Com. Law, 4, 5.

ROADSTED. In maritime law. A known general station for ships (statio tutissima nautis), notoriously used as such, and distinguished by the name, and not any spot where an anchor will find bottom and fix itself. Sir Wm. Scott, 1 Rob. Adm. 232.

ROBARIA (Law Lat. from roba, a robe or garment). In old English law. Robbery. In its original sense, the violent taking of one's robe (roba) or garment. Spelman. Bracton writes the word roberia (q.v.); Fleta, robberia.

ROBATOR (Law Lat. from roba, a robe). In old English law. A robber. Robatores, robbers. Hove. part. post. in Rich. I. A. D. 1198. Sturdy thieves, who, falling upon the persons of men, plunder them of their goods (latrones validi, qui in personas hominum insilientes, bona sua diripiunt). Spelman. So called, originally, because they spoiled travellers of their robes or garments. Id. Bracton writes the word robbator.

ROBBER. One who commits a robbery; one who feloniously and forcibly takes goods or money to any value from the person of another by violence or putting him in fear.

ROBBERY. The felonious taking and carrying away of the personal property of another from his person or in his presence by violence or by putting him in fear. 2 Clark & Marshall, Crimes, 852.

Robbery includes "larceny" (q. v.), and all the elements that are necessary to constitute larceny are also necessary. The aggravating circumstances necessary to constitute robbery, as distinguished from simple larceny, are: (1) The property must be taken from the person of another (1 Hale, P. C. 532; 39 Ga. 583); but property taken in the presence of the owner is, in contemplation of law, taken from his person (1 Hale, P. C. 532; 72 Iowa, 432; 84 Ga. 660). (2) The taking must not only be without his consent, but it must be accomplished either by violence or by putting him in fear. 25 Ind. 403; 106 Ga. 692; 87 Va. 257; 12 Ga. 320. See "Putting in Fear."

ROBBOUR, or ROBOUR (Law Fr. from robber, to rob). A robber. De robbours et de larouns, of robbers and of thieves. Britt. c. 15; Y. B. M. 3 Edw. II. 55.

ROBERDSMEN, or ROBERSMEN. In old English law. Persons who, in the reign of Richard I., committed great outrages on the borders of England and Scotland. Said to have been the followers of Robert Hood, or Robin Hood. 4 Bl. Comm. 245; 3 Inst. 187.

ROBERIA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Robbery. In robberia, in robbery; in the manner of a robber; as a robber. Bracton, fol. 146.

ROD. A measure sixteen and a half feet long; a perch.

ROGARE (Lat.) In Roman law. To ask or solicit. Rogare legem, to ask for the adoption of a law; to propose it for adoption. Derivatively, to vote for a law so proposed.

Laws were passed in assemblies of the people, the consul asking, "Velitis jubeatis quirites?" "Do you so order, citizens?" and those in favor of the law answering "Uti rogas volo vel jubeo," "As you ask I will or order." When the vote was by ballot, an affirmative vote was marked "U. R." (uti rogas.)

ROGATIO (Lat.) In Roman law. An asking for a law; a proposal of a law for adoption or passage. Derivatively, a law passed by such a form.

ROGATIO TESTIUM. This, in making a nuncupative will, is where the testator formally calls upon the persons present to bear witness that he has declared his will. Williams, Ex'rs, 116; Browne, Prob. Prac. 59.

ROGATIONES, QUESTIONES, ET POSITIONES DEBENT ESSE SIMPLICES. Demands, questions, and claims ought to be simple. Hob. 143.

ROGATOR (Lat. from rogare, q. v.) In the Roman law. The proposer of a law, Tayl. Civ. Law, 195.

ROGATORY, LETTERS. See "Letters Rogatory."

ROGO (Lat.) In the Roman law. I ask. A common word in wills. Dig. 30. 108. 13. 14; Id. 31. 77. 25.

ROGUE. A French word, which in that language signifies proud, arrogant. In some of the ancient English statutes, it means an idle, sturdy beggar, which is its meaning in law. Rogues are usually punished as vagrants. Although the word "rogue" is a word of reproach, yet to charge one as a rogue is not actionable. 5 Bin. (Pa.) 219. See 2 Dev. (N. C.) 162; Hardin (Ky.) 529.

ROIAUME (Law Fr.) Realm; kingdom. Conf. Cartar. 25 Edw. I.

ROLE D'EQUIPAGE. The list of a ship's crew; the muster roll.

ROLL. A schedule of parchment which may be turned up with the hand in the form of a pipe or tube. Jacob.

In early times, before paper came in common use, parchment was the substance employed for making records, and, as the art of bookbinding was but little used, economy suggested, as the most convenient mode, the adding of sheet to sheet, as was found requisite, and they were tacked together in such a manner that the whole length might be wound up together in the form of spiral rolls.

The records of a court or office.

ROLLS, MASTER OF THE. See "Master of the Rolls."

ROLLS OF PARLIAMENT. A series of rolls commencing in the reign of Edward I., and forming, according to Mr. Hubback, by far the most important branch of the public records of the kingdom, from their antiquity, and the multiplicity of subjects which, in the earlier periods of English history, came before the parliament. Some of these rolls are kept in the Chapter House at Westminster, others in the Tower, and the rest in the Chapel of the Rolls. Hubback, Ev. Success. 600-613.

ROLLS OF THE TEMPLE. In English law. In each of the two temples is a roll called the "calf's head roll," wherein every bencher, barrister, and student is taxed yearly; also meals to the cook and other officers of the houses, in consideration of a dinner of calf's head, provided in Easter term. Orig. Jur. 199.

ROLLS OFFICE OF THE CHANCERY. An office in Chancery Lane, London, which contains rolls and records of the high court of chancery, of which the master of the rolls is keeper. It was formerly called domus conversorum, having been appointed by Henry III. for the use of converted Jews, but for irregularities they were expelled by Edward II., when it was put to its present use. Blount, Enc. Lond.

ROMAN LAW. In a general sense, this comprehends all the laws which prevailed among the Romans, without regard to the time of their origin, including the collections of Justinian (now generally denominated the "civil law"). 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 9, § 18.

In a more restricted sense, the Germans understand by this term merely the law of Justinian, as adopted by them. Id. note. In England and the United States, however, there seems a propriety in limiting its application to all the laws of the times anterior to Justinian, distinguishing the collections of that emperor by the term "civil law." Butler, Hor. Jur. 30. It is clear that a large portion of the Roman law was excluded from the Corpus Juris Civilis.

ROMESCOT (from Rome, and Saxon, sceat, tribute). In old English law. An annual tribute of one penny from every family, paid to Rome at the feast of St. Peter. Otherwise called "Romepenny," "Peterpence," and "Rome fee" (Rome feah). Spelman; Cowell.

ROMNEY MARSH. A tract of land in the county of Kent, England, containing twenty-four thousand acres, governed by certain ancient and equitable laws of sewers, composed by Henry de Bathe, a venerable judge in the reign of King Henry III.; from which laws all commissioners of sewers in England may receive light and direction. 3 Steph. Comm. 442, note (a); 3 Bl. Comm. 73, note (t); 4 Inst. 276.

ROOD OF LAND. The fourth part of an acre.

ROOT. In a figurative sense, the term "root" is used to signify the person from whom one or more others are descended.

ROOT OF DESCENT. The same as "stock of descent."

ROOT OF TITLE. The document with which an abstract of title properly commences is called the "root" of the title.

ROSTER. A list of persons who are in their turn to perform certain duties required of them by law. Tytler, Mil. Law, 93.

ROTA (Lat.) A court; a celebrated court of appeals at Rome, of which one judge must be a German, one a Frenchman, two Spaniards, and eight Italians. Enc. Brit. Its decisions had great weight, but were not law, although judged by the law. Sacciae Trac. de Com. et Comb. § 1, quaest. 7, pars. 2, ampl. 8,. num. 219, 220, 253, 254. There was also a celebrated rota or court at Genoa about the sixteenth century, or before, whose decisions in maritime matters form the first part of Straccha de Merc.

ROTHER BEASTS. In old English law. Horned cattle. Cowell.

ROTTEN BOROUGHS. Small boroughs in England, which, prior to the reform act, 1832, returned one or more members to parliament.

ROTULUS WINTONIAE. The roll of Winton. An exact survey of all England, made by Alfred, not unlike that of Domesday; and it was so called because it was kept at Winchester, among other records of the kingdom; but this roll time has destroyed. Ingulph. Hist. 516.

ROTURE (Fr.) In old French and Canadian law. A free tenure without the privilege of nobility; the tenure of a free commoner. See Dunkin's Address, 6.

ROTURIER. In old French law. One not noble. Dict. de l'Acad. Franc. A free commoner; one who did not hold his land by homage and fealty, yet owed certain services. Howard, Dict. de Normande.

ROUBLE. The name of a coin. The rouble of Russia, as money of account, is deemed and taken at the custom house to be of the value of seventy-five cents. Act March 3, 1843.

ROUND ROBIN. A circle divided from the center, like Arthur's round table, whence its supposed origin. In each compartment is a signature, so that the entire circle, when filled, exhibits a list, without priority being given to any name. A common form of round robin is simply to write the names in a circular form. Wharton.

ROUP. In Scotch law. Sale by auction; auction. Index to Burton, Law Scot.; Bell, Dict. "Auction."

ROUT. In criminal law. A disturbance of the peace by persons assembled together with an intention to do a thing which, if executed, would have made them rioters, and actually making a motion towards the execution of their purpose.

It generally agrees in all particulars with a riot, except only in this, that it may be a complete offense without the execution of the intended enterprise. Hawk. P. C. c. 65, § 14; 1 Russ. Crimes, 253; 4 Bl. Comm. 140; Viner, Abr. "Riots, etc." (A 2); Comyn, Dig. "Forcible Entry" (D 9).

ROUTOUSLY. In pleading. A technical word, properly used in indictments for a rout as descriptive of the offense. 2 Salk. 593.

ROY EST L'ORIGINAL DE TOUTS FRANchises. The king is the origin of all franchises. Keilw. 138.

ROY N'EST LIE PER ASCUN STATUTE, si il ne soit expressement nosme. The king is not bound by any statute, if he is not expressly named. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 307; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 69.

ROY POET DISPENSER OVE MALUM prohibitum, mais non malum per se. The king can grant a dispensation for a malum prohibitum, but not for a malum per se. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 307.

ROYAL ASSENT. The royal assent is the last form through which a bill goes previously to becoming an act of parliament. It is, in the words of Lord Hale, "the complement and perfection of a law." The royal assent is given either by the queen in person or by royal commission by the queen herself, signed with her own hand. It is rarely given in person, except when at the end of the session the queen attends to prorogue parliament, if she should do so.

ROYAL FISH. Whales and sturgeons,—to which some add porpoises,—which, when cast on shore or caught near shore, belong to the king of England by his prerogative. 1 Edw. I.; 17 Edw. V. c. 1; 1 Eliz. c. 5; 17 Edw. II. c. 11; Bracton, lib. 3, c. 3; Britton, c. 17; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 45, 46.

ROYAL HONORS. In diplomatic language, by this term is understood the rights enjoyed by every empire or kingdom in Europe, by the pope, the grand duchies of Germany, and the Germanic and Swiss confederations, to precedence over all others who do not enjoy the same rank, with the exclusive right of sending to other states public ministers of the first rank, as ambassadors, together with other distinctive titles and ceremonies. Vattel, bk. 2, c. 3, § 38; Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 2, c. 3, § 2.

ROYAL MINES. Mines of silver and gold belong to the king of England, as part of his prerogative of coinage, to furnish him with material. 1 Bl. Comm. 294*.

ROYALTY. A payment reserved by the grantor of a patent, lease of a mine, or similar right, and payable proportionately to the use made of the right by the grantee. 1 Exch. Div. 310.

A payment reserved by the patentee of an article on giving a license, or by the author of a book in contracting for its publication or sale, proportionate to the sales under such license or contract.

——In Old English Law. Royal prerogatives.

RUBRIC (from Lat. ruber, red). In Scotch law. The title of a statute. So termed because anciently it was written in red letters. Bell, Dict.

RUBRIC OF A STATUTE. Its title, which was anciently printed in red letters. It serves to show the object of the legislature, and thence affords the means of interpreting the body of the act; hence the phrase, of an argument, "a rubro ad nigrum" (q. v.) Wharton.

RULE ABSOLUTE. One absolutely requiring an act to be done, as distinguished from a rule nisi (q. v.)

RULE IN SHELLEY'S CASE. See "Shelley's Case, Rule In."

RULE NISI. In practice. A rule obtained on motion ex parte to show cause against the particular relief sought. Notice is served on the party against whom the rule is obtained, and the case is then heard like other motions, except that the party showing cause is entitled to open and reply. The rule is made absolute unless (nisi) good cause is shown against it. Graham, Prac. p. 688; 3 Steph. Comm. p. 680.

RULE OF COURSE. See "Of Course."

RULE OF PROPERTY. A rule of law affecting the ownership or transfer of property. The term is ordinarily used in connection with rules established by judicial decision, it being a general principle of law that decisions which have become rules of property, i. e., under which property rights have been acquired, will not be overruled, though erroneous. 30 Miss. 256; 4 N. Y. 261. See "Stare Decisis."

RULE OF THE WAR OF 1756. In international law. A rule relating to neutrals was the first time practically established in 1756, and universally promulgated, that "neutrals are not to carry on, in times of war, a trade which was interdicted to them in times of peace." Chit. Law Nat. 166; 2 C. Rob. Adm. 186; 4 C. Rob. Adm. Append.; Reeve, Shipp. 271; 1 Kent, Comm. 82.

RULE TO PLEAD. A rule issuing as of course to plaintiff under the common-law practice requiring defendant to plead to the declaration within a time specified.

RULE TO SHOW CAUSE. An order made by the court, in a particular case, upon motion of one of the parties calling upon the other to appear at a particular time before the court, to show cause, if any he have, why a certain thing should not be done.

This rule is granted generally upon the oath or affirmation of the applicant; but upon the hearing, the evidence of competent witnesses must be given to support the rule, and the affidavit of the applicant is insufficient.

RULES. Certain limits without the actual walls of the prisons, where the prisoner, on proper security previously given to the proper authority, may reside. These limits are considered, for all legal and practical purposes, as merely a further extension of the prison walls.

A general principle of law, recognized as such by authorities, and stated usually in the form of a maxim. It is called a rule because in doubtful and unforeseen cases it is a rule for their decision; it embraces particular cases within general principles. Toullier, Dr. Civ. tit. prel. note 17; 1 Bl. Comm. 44; Domat, liv. prel. tit. 1, § 1; Ram, Judgm. 30; 3 Barn. & Adol. 34; 2 Russ. 216, 580, 581; 4 Russ. 305; 10 Price, 218, 219, 228; 1 Barn. & C. 86; 7 Bing. 280; 1 Ld. Raym. 728; 5 Term R. 5; 4 Maule & S. 348.

An ordinance made by a court having competent jurisdiction.

Rules of court are either general or special. The former are the laws by which the practice of the court is governed; the latter are special orders made in particular cases.

See "Rule Nisi."

RULES OF THE KING'S BENCH PRISON. In English practice. Certain limits beyond the walls of the prison, within which all prisoners in custody in civil actions were allowed to live, upon giving security by bond with two sufficient sureties, to the marshal, not to escape, and paying him a certain percentage on the amount of the debts for which they were detained. Bagley, Pr.; Holthouse.

RULES OF THE ROAD. See "Law of the Road."

RUMPERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To break; to revoke. Rumpitur testamentum cum, in eodem statu manente testatore, ipsius testamenti jus vitiatur, a testament is broken when, the testator remaining in the same state, the legal force of the testament itself is destroyed. Inst. 2. 17. 1. A testament was thus broken (ruptum) by the subsequent adoption of a child, or by the making of a subsequent testament. Id. 2. 17. 1. 2. 3. See Dig. 28. 3.

RUNCINUS (Lat.) A nag. 1 Thomas. Co. Litt. 471.

RUNNING ACCOUNT. An open unsettled account, as distinguished from a stated and liquidated account. "Running accounts mean mutual accounts and reciprocal demands between the parties, which accounts and demands remain open and unsettled." Blackford, J., 1 Ind. (Carter) 335.

RUNNING DAYS. Days counted in succession, without any allowance for holidays. The term is used in settling lay days or days of demurrage.

RUNNING LANDS. In Scotch law. Lands where the ridges of a field belong alternately to different proprietors. Bell, Dict.

RUNNING OF THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. A metaphorical expression, by which is meant that the time mentioned in the statute of limitations is considered as passing. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 861.

RUNNING WITH THE LAND. A technical expression applied to covenants real which affect the land. See "Covenant."

RUNNING WITH THE REVERSION. A covenant is said to "run with the reversion" when either the liability to perform it or the right to take advantage of it passes to the assignee of that reversion.

RUNRIG LANDS. Lands in Scotland where the ridges of a field belong alternatively to different proprietors. Anciently this kind of possession was advantageous in giving a united interest to tenants to resist inroads. By the act of 1695, c. 23, a division of these lands was authorized, with the exception of lands belonging to corporations. Wharton.

RUPTA (Law Lat.) In old records. A band or troop. Cowell; Spelman.
Ruptarii, soldiers; troopers. Id.

RUPTUM (Lat. from rumpere, q. v.) In the civil law. Broken. A term applied to a will; ruptum testamentum. Inst. 2. 17. 3; Dig. 28. 3.

RURAL. That which relates to the country, as, rural servitudes. See "Urban."

RURAL SERVITUDE (Lat. servitus praedii rustici). In the civil law. A servitude annexed to a rural estate (praedium rusticum). 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 338, § 309.

RUSE DE GUERRE (Fr.) Literally, a trick of war; a stratagem. It is said to be lawful among belligerents, provided it does not involve treachery and falsehood. Grotius, Dr. de la Guerre, liv. 3, c. 1, § 9.

RUSTICI (Lat. from rus, country).
——In Feudal Law. Natives of a conquered country. Feud. lib. 2, tit. 27, §§ 9-11; 2 Bl. Comm. 413.
——In Old English Law. Inferior country tenants, churls, or chorls (Saxon, ceorles), who held cottages and lands by the services of plowing, and other labors of agriculture, for the lord. Par. Ant. 136; Cowell.

RUSTICUM JUDICIUM (Law Lat.) In maritime law. A rough or rude judgment or decision. 3 Kent, Comm. 231; Story, Bailm. § 608a.

RUTA ET CAESA (Lat.) In the civil law. Things dug, as sand and lime, and things cut, as wood, coal, etc. Dig. 19. 1. 17. 6. Words used in conveyancing.

RUTARII, or RUTTARII (Law Lat.) In old records. Stipendiary forces; mercenary soldiers. Cowell. This word occurs in the articles of King John's Magna Charta, (chapter 4), but is omitted in the charter itself.

RYBAUD (Law Fr.) In old English law. A ruffian; a vagabond. Brownl. pt. 2, 340.

S

S. C. An abbreviation for "same case," indicating, when inserted between two citations of cases, that the case is reported in both places.

S. F. S. In the civil law, an abbreviation of sine fraude sua, without fraud on his part.

S. P. An abbreviation of sine prole, without issue.

An abbreviation of "same point," or "same principle," indicating, when inserted between two citations of cases, that the second one involves the same doctrine as the first.

SS. An abbreviation used in that part of a record, pleading, or affidavit, called the statement of the venue, or county in which it is made, as "City and County of New York, ss." Commonly translated or read, "to wit," and supposed to be a contraction of scilicet.

It has been otherwise explained to be a mark used to denote a separate section or paragraph. 1 Chit. Pl. (6th Am. Ed.) 305, note (t).

SA ET LA (Law Fr.) Here and there. Kelham.

SABBATH. Commonly used for "Sunday." Though such use is incorrect, it is sanctioned by usage. See 64 N. C. 591.

SABBATH BREAKING. Violation of penal laws regulating the observance of the Sabbath.

SABBATUM. The Sabbath; also peace. Domesday Book.

SABINIANS. A sect of lawyers whose first chief was Atteius Capito, and the second Caelius Sabinus, from whom they derived their name. Clef des Lois Rom.

SABLE. The heraldic term for black. It is called "Saturn" by those who blazon by planets, and "diamond" by those who use the names of jewels. Engravers commonly represent it by numerous perpendicular and horizontal lines, crossing each other. Wharton.

SABULONARIUM (Law Lat. from sabulo). In old records. A gravel pit, or the free use of it. Cowell.

SAC, or SAK (Law Lat. saca, sacha; from Saxon, sac, a cause, sake). In old English and Scotch law. The cognizance which a lord had in his court of causes and suits arising among his vassals or tenants. The privilege which a lord had, within his manor, of holding pleas of trespasses and other controversies arising there, and of imposing, levying, and collecting of his tenants, fines, and amercements in regard of the same. Spelman; Bracton, fol. 154b. A privilege touching plea, or correction of trespasses of men within a manor. Minshew, cited in Cowell; Rastal, Expos.

A forfeiture. Id.

SACABURTH, or SACABERE (from sac, cause, and burh, pledge). He that is robbed and puts in surety to prosecute the felon with fresh suit. Britton, c. 15, 29; Bracton, lib. 3, c. 32; Cowell.

SACCABOR, SACABURTH, or SACABERE. In old English law. He that is robbed and puts in surety to prosecute the felon with fresh suit.

SACCULARII (Lat. from saccus, a bag or purse). In the civil law. Persons who cheated in wares or money, by means of sacks or bags which they carried with them (vetitas in sacculo artes exercentes). Dig. 47. 11. 7, and glossary in margin. Blackstone, referring to this passage, translates the word "cutpurses." 4 Bl. Comm. 242. But this is hardly warranted by the text.

SACCUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. A sack; a quantity of wool weighing thirty or twenty-eight stone. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 79, § 10. According to Cowell, twenty-six stone. Two ways made a sack, and twelve sacks a last. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 2.

A sack or pack; a pack saddle. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 21.

In a MS. compotus or household book of Bolton Priory, in the possession of the Duke of Devonshire (A. D. 1851), the ductor saccorum is mentioned among the liberi servientes (free servants) of the priory, and is translated "sackman."

SACCUS CUM BROCHIA. In old English law. A service or tenure of finding a sack and a broach (pitcher) to the sovereign for the use of the army. Bracton, lib. 2, c. 16.

SACQUIER. In maritime law. The name of an ancient officer, whose business was to load and unload vessels laden with salt, corn, or fish, to prevent the ship's crew defrauding the merchant by false tale, or cheating him of his merchandise otherwise. Laws of Oleron, art. 11, published in an English translation in an appendix to 1 Pet. Adm. xxv. See "Arrameur;" "Stevedore."

SACRA (Lat.) In the Roman law. The right to participate in the sacred rites of the city. Butler, Hor. Jur. 27.

SACRAMENTALES (Law Lat. sacramentum, oath). Compurgatores (q. v.); jurors. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.

SACRAMENTI ACTIO. In the Roman law. General legis actio, to which resort might be had failing a right to use any of the four shorter forms of action.

SACRAMENTUM (Law Lat.)

——In Civil Law. A gage in money laid down in court by both parties that went to law, returned to him who had the verdict on his side, but forfeited by the party who was cast, to the exchequer, to be laid out in sacris rebus, and therefore so called. Varro, lib. 4, de Ling. Lat. c. 36.

An oath, as a very sacred thing. Ainsworth; Vicat.

The oath taken by soldiers to be true to their general and country. Id.

——In Old Common Law. An oath. Carpentier; Cowell; Jacob.

SACRAMENTUM DECISIONIS (Lat.) The voluntary or decisive oath of the civil law, where one of the parties to a suit, not being able to prove his case, offers to refer the decision of the cause to the oath of his adversary, who is bound to accept or make the same offer on his part, or the whole is considered as confessed by him. 3 Bl. Comm. 342.

SACRAMENTUM FIDELITATIS. In old English law. The oath of fealty. Reg. Orig. 303.

SACRAMENTUM HABET IN SE TRES comites, veritatem, justitiam et judicium; veritas habenda est in jurato; justitia et justicium in judice. An oath has in it three component parts,—truth, justice, and judgment; truth in the party swearing; justice and judgment in the judge administering the oath. 3 Inst. 160.

SACRAMENTUM SI FATUUM FUERIT, licet falsum, tamen non committit perjurium. A foolish oath, though false, makes not perjury. 2 Inst. 167.

SACRILEGE (from Lat. sacrilegium, from sacra, sacred things, or sacrum, sacred, and legere, to steal).

——In English Criminal Law. Larceny from a church. 4 Steph. Comm. 164. The crime of breaking a church or chapel, and stealing therein. 1 Russ. Crimes, 843. See "Sacrilegium." This does not seem to be recognized as a distinct crime, in American jurisprudence.

——In Old English Law. Profanation of holy things; the alienation to laymen or to profane or common purposes of what was given to religious persons, and to pious uses. Cowell.

SACRILEGIUM (Lat. from sacrum, sacred, and legere, to steal). In the civil law. The stealing of sacred things, or things dedicated to sacred uses; the taking of things out of a holy place. Calv. Lex.; Brissonius.

The violation of an imperial rescript or constitution. Sacrilegii instar est rescripto principis obviari, it amounts to sacrilege to oppose or hinder the execution of the prince's rescript. Code, 1. 23. 5; 1 Bl. Comm. 74. The text of the Code here referred to, reads, Sacrilegii instar est—divinis obviare beneficiis.

SACRILEGUS (Lat.) In the civil and common law. A sacrilegious person; one guilty of sacrilege; he who takes away anything that is given for the divine and true service of God.

SACRILEGUS OMNIUM PRAEDORUM cupiditatem et scelerem superat. A sacrilegious person transcends the cupidity and wickedness of all other robbers. 4 Coke, 106.

SACRISTAN. A sexton, anciently called sagerson, or sagiston; the keeper of things belonging to divine worship.

SADBERGE. A denomination of part of the county palatine of Durham. Camd. Brit.

SAEMEND. An umpire, or arbitrator. Anc. Inst. Eng.

SAEPE CONSTITUTUM EST, RES INTER alios judicatas aliis non praejudicare. It has often been settled that matters adjudged between others ought not to prejudice those who were not parties. Dig. 42. 1. 63.

SAEPE VIATOREM NOVA NON VETUS orbita fallit. Often it is the new track, not the old one, which deceives the traveller. 4 Inst. 34.

SAEPENUMERO UBI PROPRIETAS VERborem attenditur, sensus veritatis amittitur. Frequently, where the propriety of words is attended to, the meaning of truth is lost. 7 Coke, 27.

SAEVITIA (Lat.) Cruelty of one spouse to the other. To constitute saevitia there must be such a degree of cruelty as to endanger the party's suffering bodily hurt. 1 Hagg. Consist. 35; 2 Mass. 150; 3 Mass. 321; 4 Mass. 587.

SAFE-CONDUCT. A passport or permission from a neutral state to persons who are thus authorized to go and return in safety, and, sometimes, to carry away certain things in safety.

According to common usage, the term "passport" is employed on ordinary occasions for the permission given to persons when there is no reason why they should not go where they please; and "safe-conduct" is the name given to the instrument which authorizes certain persons, as enemies, to go into places where they could not go without danger unless thus authorized by the government.

The name of an instrument given to the captain or master of a ship to proceed on a particular voyage. It usually contains his name and residence, the name, description, and destination of the ship, with such other matters as the practice of the place requires. This document is indispensably necessary for the safety of every neutral ship.

Act Cong. April 30, 1790, § 27, punishes the violation of any safe-conduct or passport granted under the authority of the United States, on conviction, with imprisonment, not exceeding three years, and a fine at the discretion of the court. See "Passport;" 18 Viner, Abr. 272.

SAFE-PLEDGE. A surety given that a man shall appear upon a certain day. Bracton, lib. 4, c. 1.

SAFEGUARD. A protection of the king to one who is a stranger, who fears violence from some of his subjects for seeking his right by course of law. Reg. Orig. 26.

SAGES DE LA LEY (Law Fr.) Sages of the law; persons learned in the law. A term applied to the chancellor and justices of the king's bench.

SAGIBARO (Law Lat. from sac, or sag, a cause, and baro, a man). In old European law. A judge or justice; literally, a man of causes (vir causarum), or having charge or supervision of causes (causis et litibus praepositus). Spelman. One who administered justice and decided causes in the mallum, or public assembly. Id.; L. Salic. tit. 56, §§ 2-4; LL. Inae, c. 6.

SAID. Before mentioned.

In contracts and pleadings it is usual and proper, when it is desired to speak of a person or thing before mentioned, to designate them by the term "said" or "aforesaid," or by some similar term; otherwise the latter description will be ill for want of certainty. 2 Lev. 207; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (C 18); Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 63.

"Said" does not necessarily refer to the last antecedent. 10 Ind. 372.

SAIGA (Law Lat.) In old European law. A German coin of the value of a penny, or of three pence. L. Alaman. tit. 6, § 2; L. Boior. tit. 8, c. 2, § 3; Spelman.

SAIL. In insurance law. To move, on the prosecution of a voyage; to make a movement for the purpose of proceeding to sea. Cowen, J., 3 Hill (N. Y.) 126; Lord Denman, C. J., 1 Cromp., M. & R. 809, 818. The least locomotion, with readiness of equipment and clearance, satisfies a warranty to sail. 3 Barn. & Adol. 514.

SAILING INSTRUCTIONS. In maritime law. Written or printed directions, delivered by the commanding officer of a convoy to the several masters of the ships under his care, by which they are enabled to understand and answer his signals, to know the place of rendezvous appointed for the fleet in case of dispersion by storm, by an enemy, or by any other accident.

Without sailing instructions, no vessel can have the full protection and benefit of convoy. Marsh. Ins. 368.

SAILORS. Seamen; mariners. See "Seaman."

SAINT MARTIN LE GRAND, COURT OF. A writ of error formerly lay from the sheriff's courts in the city of London to the court of hustings, before the mayor, recorder, and sheriffs, and thence to justices appointed by the royal commission, who used to sit in the church of St. Martin le Grand, and from the judgment of those justices a writ of error lay immediately to the house of lords. Fitzh. Nat. Brev.

SAINT SIMONISM. An elaborate form of noncommunistic socialism. It is a scheme which does not contemplate an equal, but an unequal, division of the produce. It does not propose that all should be occupied alike, but differently, according to their vocation or capacity; the function of each being assigned, like grades in a regiment, by the choice of the directing authority, and the remuneration being by salary, proportioned to the importance, in the eyes of that authority, of the function itself, and the merits of the person who fulfills it. 1 Mill, Pol. Econ. 258.

SAIO (Law Lat.) In Gothic law. The ministerial officer of a court or magistrate, who brought parties into court (qui reos protraxit in judicium), and executed the orders of his superior. Spelman thinks the word may be derived from the Saxon sagol, or saiol, a staff, giving it the sense of the modern "tipstaff."

SAIREMENT (Law Fr.) An oath. Kelham.

SAISIE ARRET. In French law. An attachment of property in the possession of a third person.

SAISIE EXECUTION. In French law. A writ of execution by which the creditor places under the custody of the law the movables of his debtor, which are liable to seizure, in order that out of them he may obtain payment of the debt due by him. Code Prac. La. art. 641; Dalloz. It is a writ very similar to the fieri facias of the common law.

SAISIE FORAINE. In French law. A permission given by the proper judicial officer to authorize a creditor to seize the property of his debtor in the district which he inhabits. Dalloz. It has the effect of an attachment of property, which is applied to the payment of the debt due.

SAISIE GAGERIE. In French law. A conservatory act of execution, by which the owner or principal lessor of a house or farm causes the furniture of the house or farm leased, and on which he has a lien, to be seized, in order to obtain the rent due to him. It is similar to the "distress" of the common law. Dalloz.

SAISIE IMMOBILIERE. In French law. A writ by which the creditor puts in the custody of the law the immovables of his debtor, that out of the proceeds of their sale he may be paid his demand.

SAISINA (Law Lat.) An old form of seisina (q. v.)

SAKE. In old English law. A lord's right of amercing his tenants in his court. Keilw. 145.

Acquittance of suit at county courts and hundred courts. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 7.

SALADINE TENTH. A tax imposed in England and France, in 1188, by Pope Innocent III., to raise a fund for the crusade undertaken by Richard I., of England, and Philip Augustus, of France, against Saladin, sultan of Egypt, then going to besiege Jerusalem. By this tax, every person who did not enter himself a crusader was obliged to pay a tenth of his yearly revenue, and of the value of all his movables, except his wearing apparel, books, and arms. The Carthusians, Bernardines, and some other religious persons, were exempt. Gibbon remarks that when the necessity for this tax no longer existed, the church still clung to it as too lucrative to be abandoned, and thus arose the tithing of ecclesiastical benefices for the pope or other sovereigns. Enc. Lond.

SALARIUM (Lat. from sal, salt).

——In the Civil Law. An allowance of provisions. Calv. Lex.

A stipend, wages, or compensation for service. Id.; Dig. 7. 1. 7. 2; Id. 44. 7. 61. 1.

An annual allowance or compensation. Id.

——In Old European Law. The rents or profits of a sala, hall or house. Cowell.

SALARY. A reward or recompense for services performed.

It is applied to the reward paid to a public officer for the performance of his official duties.

Salary is also applied to the reward paid for the performance of other services; but if it be not fixed for each year, it is called "honorarium." Poth. ad Pand. According to M. Duvergier, the distinction between "honorarium" and "salary" is this: By the former is understood the reward given to the most elevated professions for services performed; and by the latter, the price of hiring of domestic servants and workmen. 19 Toullier, Dr. Civ. n. 268, p. 292, note.

There is this difference between "salary" and "price,"—the former is the reward paid for services or for the hire of things; the latter is the consideration paid for a thing sold. Lec. Elm. §§ 907, 908.

"Salary" and "wages" have been held to be synonymous (24 Fla. 29), but in other cases, distinctions have been suggested,—one, that salary is per annum compensation (42 Alb. Law J. 332), and another, that the difference lies in the more or less honorable character of the services for which they are paid. 99 Pa. St. 542.

SALE. An agreement by which one of two contracting parties, called the "seller," gives a thing and passes the title to it, in exchange for a certain price in current money, to the other party, who is called the "buyer" or "purchaser," who, on his part, agrees to pay such price. Pardessus, Dr. Com. note 6; Noy, Max. c. 42; Shep. Touch. 244; 2 Kent, Comm. 363; Poth. Vente, note 1. A transfer of the absolute or general property in a thing for a price in money. Benj. Sales, § 1.

This contract differs from a barter or exchange in this, that in the latter the price or consideration, instead of being paid in money, is paid in goods or merchandise susceptible of a valuation. 3 Salk. 157; 12 N. H. 390; 10 Vt. 457. It differs from "accord and satisfaction," because in that contract the thing is given for the purpose of quieting a claim, and not for a price. An onerous gift, when the burden it imposes is the payment of a sum of money, is, when accepted, in the nature of a sale. When partition is made between two or more joint owners of a chattel, it would seem the contract is in the nature of a barter. See 11 Pick. (Mass.) 311.

(1) An absolute sale is one made and completed without any condition whatever.

(2) A conditional sale is one which depends for its validity upon the fulfillment of some condition. See 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 588; 10 Pick. (Mass.) 522; 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 141; 8 Vt. 154; 2 Rawle (Pa.) 326; Coxe (N. J.) 292; 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 430.

(3) A forced sale is one made without the consent of the owner of the property, by some officer appointed by law, as by a marshal or a sheriff, in obedience to the mandate of a competent tribunal. This sale has the effect to transfer all the rights the owner had in the property, but it does not, like a voluntary sale of personal property, guaranty a title to the thing sold; it merely transfers the rights of the person as whose property it has been seized This kind of a sale is sometimes called a "judicial sale."

(4) A private sale is one made voluntarily, and not by auction.

(5) A public sale is one made at auction to the highest bidder. Auction sales sometimes are voluntary, as, when the owner chooses to sell his goods in this way, and then as between the seller and the buyer the usual rules relating to sales apply; or they are involuntary or forced, when the same rules do not apply.

(6) A voluntary sale is one made freely without constraint by the owner of the thing sold. This is the common case of sales, and to this class the general rules of the law of sale apply.

SALE AND RETURN. When goods are sent from a manufacturer or wholesale dealer to a retail trader, in the hope that he may purchase them, with the understanding that what he may choose to take he shall have as on a contract of sale, and what he does not take he will retain as a consignee for the owner, the goods are said to have been sent on "sale and return."

The goods taken by the receiver as on sale will be considered as sold, and the title to them is vested in the receiver of them. The goods he does not buy are considered as a deposit in the hands of the receiver of them, and the title is in the person who sent them. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 268.

SALE NOTE. A memorandum given by a broker to a seller or buyer of goods, stating the fact that certain goods have been sold by him on account of a person called the "seller" to another person called the "buyer." Sale notes are also called "bought and sold notes." See "Bought Note."

SALFORD HUNDRED COURT OF RECord. An inferior and local court of record having jurisdiction in personal actions, where the debt or damage sought to be recovered does not exceed £50, if the cause of action arise within the Hundred of Salford. St. 31 & 32 Vict. c. 130; 2 Exch. 346. See "Hundred."

SALIQUE (or SALIC) LAW. The name of a code of laws, so called from the Salians, a people of Germany who settled in Gaul under their king Pharamond.

The most remarkable law of this code, which is sometimes itself called the Salic law, is that which regards succession. De terra vero salica nulla portio haereditatis transit in mulierem, sed hoc virilis sextus acquirit; hoc est, filii in ipsa haereditate succedunt, no part of the salique land passes to females, but the males alone are capable of taking; that is, the sons succeed to the inheritance. This has ever excluded females from the throne of France.

SALOON. The term does not necessarily imply a place for the sale of intoxicants. 36 Tex. 364. But see 105 Mass. 40.

SALT SILVER. One penny paid at the feast day of St. Martin, by the tenants of some manors, as a commutation for the service of carrying their lord's salt from market to his larder. Par. Ant. 496.

SALUS (Lat.) Health; prosperity; safety.

SALUS POPULI EST SUPREMA LEX. The safety of the people is the supreme law. Bac. Max. reg. 12; Broom, Leg. Max. 1; 13 Coke, 139.

SALUS UBI MULTI CONSILIARII. In many counsellors there is safety. 4 Inst. 1.

SALUTE (Lat. salus). A gold coin stamped by Henry V. in France, after his conquests there, whereon the arms of England and France were stamped quarterly. Stow. Chron. 589; Cowell.

SALUTEM (Lat.) Health; greeting; prosperity; salvation. An expression of salutation used by the Romans in the commencement of their letters or epistles, generally abbreviated, S. "C. Plinius Cornelio Tacito suo, S." Plin. Ep. i. 6, et passim. In legal instruments, it was written at length, Titius Seio salutem. Dig. 17. 1. 60. Ille illi salutem. Id. 59.

A formal word in the commencement of Roman deeds and charters, which, during the later periods of the empire, were written in an epistolary form. See "Epistola." After Christianity had become established, salutem seems to have been used in its religious sense of "salvation."

A formal word in the commencement of old English deeds, probably derived from the Roman practice above noticed. Omnibus Christi fidelibus ad quos praesentes literae indentatae pervenerint, A. de B. salutem in Domino sempiternam; Sciatis me dedisse, etc., to all Christian people to whom these presents [present letters] indented shall come, A. of B. sends greeting [or salvation], in our Lord everlasting. Litt. § 372.

A formal word invariably used in the address of old English writs, which commenced in the epistolary form. Rex vice comiti, etc., salutem, the king to the sheriff, etc., greeting. Reg. Orig. & Jud. per tot. Translated "greeting," and retained in modern English and American writs. See "Breve." Called by Finch the "salutation" of the writ. Finch, Law, bk. 4, c. 1.

SALVA GARDIA (Law Lat.) Safeguard. Reg. Orig. 26. See "Safeguard."

SALVAGE. In maritime law. A compensation given by the maritime law for service rendered in saving property or rescuing it from impending peril on the sea or wrecked on the coast of the sea, or, in the United States, on a public navigable river or lake, where interstate or foreign commerce is carried on. 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 210, 416; 12 How. (U. S.) 466; 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 420; 5 McLean (U. S.) 359.

Occasionally used to designate the property saved. 2 Phil. Ins. § 1488; 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 595.

There are three things essential to the right to salvage:

(1) The peril. In order to found a title to salvage, the peril from which the property was saved must be real, not speculative merely (1 Cranch [U. S.] 1); but it need not be such that escape from it by any other means than by the aid of the salvors was impossible. It is sufficient that the peril was something extraordinary,—something differing in kind and degree from the ordinary perils of navigation. 1 Curt. [U. S.] 353; 2 Curt. [U. S.] 350. All services rendered at sea to a vessel in distress are salvage services. 1 W. Rob. Adm. 174; 3 W. Rob. Adm. 71. But the peril must be present and pending, not future, contingent, and conjectural. 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 216; 3 Hagg. Adm. 344. It may arise from the sea, rocks, fire, pirates, or enemies (1 Cranch [U. S.] 1), or from the sickness or death of the crew or master (1 Curt. [U. S.] 376; 2 Wall. Jr. [U. S.] 59; 1 Swab. 84).

(2) The saving. In order to give a title to salvage, the property must be effectually saved; it must be brought to some port of safety, and it must be there in a state capable of being restored to the owner, before the service can be deemed completed. 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 417; 1 W. Rob. Adm. 329, 406. It must be saved by the instrumentality of the asserted salvors, or their services must contribute in some certain degree to save it (4 Wash. C. C. [U. S.] 651; Olc. Adm. [U. S.] 462); though, if the services were rendered on the request of the master or owner, the salvor is entitled to salvage, though the services were slight, and the property was saved mainly by a providential act (5 McLean [U. S.] 359; 1 Newb. Adm. [U. S.] 130; 2 W. Rob. Adm. 91; Bee, Adm. [U. S.] 90; 9 Lond. Jur. 119).

(3) The place. In England it has been held that the services must be rendered on the high seas, or, at least, extra corpus comitatus, in order to give the admiralty court jurisdiction to decree salvage; but in this country it is held that the district courts of the United States have jurisdiction to decree salvage for services rendered on tide waters and on the lakes or rivers where interstate or foreign commerce is carried on, although infra corpus comitatus. 12 How. (U. S.) 466; 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 420; 5 McLean (U. S.) 359.

SALVAGE CHARGES. In insurance. All those costs, expenses, and charges necessarily incurred in and about the saving and preservation of the property imperilled, and which, if the property be insured, are eventually borne by the underwriters. Stev. Av. c. 2, § 1.

SALVAGE LOSS. That kind of loss which it is presumed would, but for certain services rendered and exertions made, have become a total loss. It also means, among underwriters and average adjusters, a mode of settling a loss, under a policy, in cases where the goods have been necessarily sold at a port short of the port of destination, in consequence of the perils insured against. In such cases, though the property be not abandoned to the underwriter, the principle of abandonment is assumed in the adjustment of the loss. The underwriter pays a total loss. The net proceeds of the sale of the goods, after deducting all expenses, are retained by the assured, and he credits the underwriter with the amount. 2 Phil. Ins. § 1480; Stev. Av. c. 2, § 1.

SALVAGE SERVICE. In maritime law. Any service rendered in saving property on the sea, or wrecked on the coast of the sea. Story, J., 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 210.

SALVIAN INTERDICT. See "Interdictum Salvianum."

SALVO (Lat.) Saving; excepting; without prejudice to. Salvo me et haeredibus meis, except me and my heirs. Salvo jure cujuslibet, without prejudice to the rights of any one.

SALVOR. In maritime law. A person who saves property or rescues it from impending peril on the sea or when wrecked on the coast of the sea, or, in the United States, on a public navigable river or lake where interstate commerce is carried on, and who is under no pre-existing contract or obligation of duty by his relation to the property to render such services. 1 Hagg. Adm. 236; 1 Curt. (U. S.) 378.

SALVUS PLEGIUS (Law Lat.) A safe pledge; called, also, "certus plegius," a sure pledge. Bracton, fol. 160b.

SAMPLE. A small quantity of any commodity or merchandise, exhibited as a specimen of a larger quantity, called the "bulk."

When a sale is made by sample, and it afterwards turns out that the bulk does not correspond with it, the purchaser is not, in general, bound to take the property on a compensation being made to him for the difference. 1 Campb. 113. See 2 East, 314; 4 Campb. 22; 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 20; 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 413, 566; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 395; 6 N. Y. 73, 95; 13 Mass. 139; 2 Nott & McC. (S. C.) 538; 3 Rawle (Pa.) 37; 14 Mees. & W. 651.

SANAE MENTIS (Lat.) In old English law. Of sound mind. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 7, § 1.

SANCTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. That part of a law by which a penalty was ordained against those who should violate it. Inst. 2. 1. 10.

SANCTION. That part of a law which inflicts a penalty for its violation, or bestows a reward for its observance. Sanctions are of two kinds,—those which redress civil injuries, called "civil sanctions," and those which punish crimes, called "penal sanctions." 1 Hoffm. Leg. Outl. 279; Rutherforth, Inst. bk. 2, c. 6, § 6; Toullier, Dr. Civ. tit. prel. 86; 1 Bl. Comm. 56.

SANCTUARY. A place of refuge, where the process of the law cannot be executed.

Sanctuaries may be divided into religious and civil. The former were very common in Europe,—religious houses affording protection from arrest to all persons, whether accused of crime or pursued for debt. 4 Bl. Comm. 332. This kind was never known in the United States.

Civil sanctuary, or that protection which is afforded to a man by his own house, was always respected in this country. The house protects the owner from the service of all civil process in the first instance, but not if he is once lawfully arrested and takes refuge in his own house. See "House;" "Arrest."

No place affords protection from arrest in criminal cases. A man may, therefore, be arrested in his own house in such cases, and the doors may be broken for the purpose of making the arrest. See "Arrest."

SANCTUS, or SANCTUM (Lat. from sancire). In the civil law. That which is guarded and fenced round against injury (quod ab injuria hominum defensum atque munitum est). Dig. 1. 8, pr. Derived by Marcian, in the Digests, from sagmina, which were certain herbs carried by the legates of the Roman people to secure them from harm. Id. § 1.

SAND GAVEL. A payment due to the lord of the manor of Rodley, in the county of Gloucester, for liberty granted to the tenants to dig sand for their common use. Cowell.

SANE (Law Fr. and Eng.; from Lat. sanus). Sound. De non sane memorie, of unsound memory, non compos mentis. Litt. § 405.

SANG, or SANC. Blood. These words are nearly obsolete.

SANGUINE, or MURREY. An heraldic term for "blood color," called, in the arms of princes, "dragon's tail," and, in those of lords, "sardonyx." It is a tincture of very infrequent occurrence, and not recognized by some writers. In engraving, it is denoted by numerous lines in saltire. Wharton.

SANGUINEM EMERE (Lat.) In feudal law. A redemption by villeins, of their blood or tenure, in order to become freemen.

SANGUINIS CONJUNCTIO BENEVOLENtia devincit homines et caritate. A tie of blood overcomes men through benevolence and family affection. 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 1, 13.

SANIS. A kind of punishment among the Greeks, inflicted by binding the malefactor fast to a piece of wood. Enc. Lond.

SANITARY AUTHORITIES. In the English law bodies having jurisdiction over their respective districts in regard to sewerage, drainage, scavenging, the supply of water, the prevention of nuisances and offensive trades, etc., all of which come under the head of "sanitary matters" in the special sense of the words. Sanitary authorities also have jurisdiction in matters coming under the head of "local government" (q. v.) Public Health Act 1875, passim.

SANITY. The state of a person who has a sound understanding; the reverse of insanity (q. v.)

SANS CEO QUE. The same as absque hoc (q. v.)

SANS IMPEACHMENT DE WAST (Law Fr.) Without impeachment of waste. Litt. § 152. See "Absque Impetitione Vasti."

SANS NOMBRE (Fr. without number). In English law. A term used in relation to the right of putting animals on a common. The term common sans nombre does not mean that the beasts are to be innumerable, but only indefinite, not certain (Willes, 227); but they are limited to the commoner's own commonable cattle, levant et couchant, upon his lands, or as many cattle as the land of the commoner can keep and maintain in winter. 2 Brownl. 101; Ventr. 54; 5 Term R. 48; 1 Wm. Saund. 28, note 4.

SANS RECOURS (Fr. without recourse). Words which are sometimes added to an indorsement by the indorsee to avoid incurring any liability. Chit. Bills, 179; 7 Taunt. 160; 3 Cranch (U. S.) 193; 7 Cranch (U. S.) 159; 12 Mass. 172; 14 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 325. See "Without Recourse."

SAPIENS INCIPIT A FINE; ET QUOD primum est in intentione, ultimum est in executione. A wise man begins with the last; and what is first in intention is last in execution. 10 Coke, 25.

SAPIENS OMNIA AGIT CUM CONSILIO. A wise man does everything advisedly. 4 Inst. 4.

SAPIENTIA LEGIS NUMMARIO PRETIO non est aestimanda. The wisdom of the law cannot be valued by money. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 168.

SAPIENTIS JUDICIS EST COGITARE tantum sibi esse permissum, quantum commissum et creditum. It is the duty of a wise judge to think so much only permitted to him as is committed and intrusted to him. 4 Inst. 163.

SARCULATURA (Law Lat.) In old records. Weeding corn; a tenant's service of weeding for the lord. Cowell.

SART. In old English law. A piece of woodland, turned into arable. Cowell. See "Assart."

SARUM (Law Lat.) In old records. The city of Salisbury in England. Spelman.

SASINE. In Scotch law. The symbolical delivery of land, answering to the livery of seisin of the old English law. 4 Kent, Comm. 459.

SASSONS. The corruption of Saxons. A name of contempt formerly given to the English, while they affected to be called "Angles." They are still so called by the Welsh.

SATISDARE. In the civil law, to guaranty the obligation of a principal.

SATISDATIO (Lat. satis, and dare). In civil law. Security given by a party to an action to pay what might be adjudged against him. It is a satisfactory security, in opposition to a naked security or promise. Vicat; 3 Bl. Comm. 291.

SATISFACTION (Lat. satis, enough, facio, to do, to make). In practice. An entry made on the record, by which a party in whose favor a judgment was rendered declares that he has been satisfied and paid.

SATISFACTION PIECE. In English practice. An instrument of writing in which it is declared that satisfaction is acknowledged between the plaintiff and defendant. It is signed by the attorney, and on its production and the warrant of attorney to the clerk of the judgments, satisfaction is entered on payment of certain fees.

SATISFACTORY EVIDENCE. That which is sufficient to induce a belief that the thing is true; in other words, it is credible evidence. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3049.

SATISFIED OUTSTANDING TERM. Where a long term had been created in trustees to raise money for a purpose, and the money had been paid, but the trustees had not released to the freeholder, and the lease had not provided for its own extinguishment on the purpose becoming satisfied, the estate so remaining in the trustees was called a "satisfied outstanding term." It came to be a mode of protecting the rightful owner of the freehold, but the estate was abolished by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112, § 2, and it never existed in the United States. 1 Washb. Real Prop. *311.

SATIUS EST PETERE FONTES QUAM sectari rivulos. It is better to seek the fountain than to follow rivulets. 10 Coke, 118. It is better to drink at the fountain than to sip in the streams.

SATURDAY'S STOP. A space of time from evensong on Saturday till sun rising on Monday, in which it was not lawful to take salmon in Scotland and the northern parts of England. Cowell.

SAUNKEFIN (Law Fr.) End of blood; failure of the direct line in successions. Spelman; Cowell.

SAUVAGINE (Law Fr.) Wild animals. De pessons et de autre sauvagine. Britt. c. 33, fol. 85.

The wild disposition of an animal (fera natura). Mes si ele eschape et repreigne la sauvagine en son natural estate, but if it escape, and resume its wildness, in its natural estate. Id.

SAUVEMENT (Law Fr.) Safely. Sauvement gardes, safely kept. Britt. c. 87.

SAVER-DE-FAULT. To excuse. Termes de la Ley.

SAVING THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS. A creditor is said to "save the statute of limitations" when he saves or preserves his debt from being barred by the operation of the statute. Thus, in the case of a simple contract debt, if a creditor commence an action for its recovery within six years from the time when the cause of action accrued, he will be in time to save the statute.

SAVINGS BANKS. In American law. Institutions for the safe custody and increase of the savings of the industrious poor, and persons of small means. They are banks to receive deposits of money, however small, which is to accumulate at interest, and to be paid out to the depositors as required.

SAVOUR. To partake of the nature of; to bear affinity to.

SAVOY. One of the old privileged places, or sanctuaries. 4 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 227, note.

SAXON LAGE. The law of the West Saxons.

SC., or SCIL. An abbreviation for "scilicet." that is to say.

SCABINI. In old European law. The judges or assessors of the judges in the court held by the count. Assistants or associates of the count; officers under the count. The permanent selected judges of the Franks. Judges among the Germans, Franks, and Lombards, who were held in peculiar esteem. Spelman.

SCACCARIUM. A chequered cloth, resembling a chess board, which covered the table in the exchequer, and on which, when certain of the king's accounts were made up, the sums were marked and scored with counters. Hence the court of exchequer, or curia scaccarii, derived its name. 3 Bl. Comm. 44.

SCALAM. The old way of paying money into the exchequer. Cowell.

SCALE. In early American law. To adjust, graduate, or value according to a scale. "The court scaled the debt." Marshall, arg. 2 Wash. (Va.) 5, 6. A term used after the establishment of American independence, to signify a process of adjusting the difference in value between paper money and specie, rendered necessary by the great depreciation of the former. The act of assembly of Virginia of February 10, 1781, establishing a scale of depreciation, and declaring that outstanding current money contracts should be regulated by such scale, as at the date of such contracts, is called "An act for scaling paper money contracts." 2 Wash. (Va.) [41] 52; Id. [98, 99] 127; Id. [103, 104] 132, 134.

SCALPER, or SCALPING. See "Gambling Contract."

SCAMNUM (or SCANNUM) CADUCUM (Law Lat.) In old records. The cucking stool, or ducking stool. Cowell.

SCANDAL. A scandalous verbal report or rumor respecting some person.

SCANDALOUS MATTER. In equity pleading. Unnecessary matter criminatory of the defendant or any other person, alleged in the bill, answer, or other pleading, or in the interrogatories to or answers by witnesses. Adams, Eq. 306. Matter which is relevant can never be scandalous (Story, Eq. Pl. § 270; 15 Ves. 477); and the degree of relevancy is of no account in determining the question (Cooper, Eq. Pl. 19; 2 Ves. Jr. 24; 6 Ves. 514; 11 Ves. 256; 15 Ves. 477). Where scandal is alleged, whether in the bill (2 Ves. Jr. 631), answer (Mitf. Eq. Pl. [Jeremy Ed.] 313), or interrogatories to or answers of witnesses (2 Younge & C. 445), it will be referred to a master at any time (2 Ves. Jr. 631), and, by leave of court, even upon the application of a stranger to the suit (6 Ves. 514; 5 Beav. Rolls, 82), and matter found to be scandalous by him will be expunged (Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 266, 862; 4 Hen. & M. [Va.] 414), at the cost of counsel introducing it, in some cases (Story, Eq. Pl. § 266). The presence of scandalous matter in the bill is no excuse for its being in the answer. 19 Me. 214.

SCANDALUM MAGNATUM (Law Lat. slander of great men). In old English law. Words spoken in derogation of a peer, a judge, or other great officer of the realm. 1 Vent. 60. This was distinct from mere slander in the earlier law, and was considered a more heinous offense. Buller, N. P. 4. See 3 Bl. Comm. 124. The doctrine never prevailed in the United States (151 Mass. 50), and is said to be obsolete in England (Odgers, Lib. & Sland. 136).

SCAPELLARE (Law Lat.) In old European law. To chop; to chip or haggle. Spelman.

SCAPHA (Lat.) In the Roman law. A boat; a lighter. Dig. 14. 2. 4, pr. A ship's boat. Id. 6. 1. 3. 1; Id. 21. 2. 44; Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 1, c. 2, § 6.

SCARA (Law Lat.) In old European law. A troop (turma); a division of an army. A phalanx (cuneus). Spelman.

SCAVAGE, SCHEVAGE, SCHEWAGE, or SHEWAGE. A kind of toll or custom, exacted by mayors, sheriffs, etc., of merchant strangers, for wares showed or offered for sale within their liberties. Prohibited by 19 Hen. VII. c. 7. Cowell.

SCAVAIDUS. The officer who collected the scavage money. Cowell.

SCEATTA, or SCAETTA (Saxon). A Saxon coin, of less denomination than a shilling. Spelman.

SCHAN PENNY, SCHARN PENNY, or schorn penny. A small duty or compensation. Cowell.

SCHEDULE. In practice. When an indictment is returned from an inferior court in obedience to a writ of certiorari, the statement of the previous proceedings sent with it is termed the "schedule." 1 Saund. 309a, note 2.

Schedules are also frequently annexed to answers in a court of equity, and to depositions and other documents, in order to show more in detail the matter they contain than could otherwise be conveniently shown.

The term is frequently used instead of "inventory."

SCHEME. In English law, a scheme is a document containing provisions for regulating the management or distribution of property, or for making an arrangement between persons having conflicting rights. Thus, in the practice of the chancery division, where the execution of a charitable trust in the manner directed by the founder is difficult or impracticable, or requires supervision, a scheme for the management of the charity will be settled by the court. Tud. Char. Trusts. 257; Hunt, Eq. 248; Daniell, Ch. Prac. 1765.

SCHETES. Usury. Cowell.

SCHIREMAN. A sheriff; the ancient name for an earl.

SCHIRRENS GELD. A tax paid to sheriffs for keeping the shire or county court. Cowell.

SCHISM BILL. The name of an act passed in the reign of Queen Anne, which restrained Protestant dissenters from educating their own children, and forbade all tutors and schoolmasters to be present at any conventicle or dissenting place of worship. The queen died on the day when this act was to have taken effect (August 1, 1714), and it was repealed in the fifth year of Geo. 1. Wharton.

SCI. FA. An abbreviation of scire facias (q. v.)

SCIENDUM (Lat.) In English law. The name given to a clause inserted in the record, by which it is made "known that the justice here in court, in this same term, delivered a writ thereupon to the deputy sheriff of the county aforesaid, to be executed in due form of law." Lee, Dict. "Record."

SCIENDUM EST (Lat. it is to be known, or understood). A phrase frequently used in the civil law, in the commencement of paragraphs or other divisions of a subject, as preliminary to some explanation, or as calling attention to some particular rule. Sciendum itaque est, omnia fidei commissa primis temporibus infirma fuisse, it is to be known, then, that all trusts were, in their origin, weak. Inst. 2. 23. 1.

SCIENTER (Lat. knowingly). The allegation of knowledge on the part of a defendant or person accused, which is necessary to charge upon him the consequences of the crime or tort.

A man may do many acts which are justifiable or not, as he is ignorant or not ignorant of certain facts. He may pass a counterfeit coin, when he is ignorant of its being counterfeit, and is guilty of no offense; but if he knew the coin to be counterfeit, which is called the scienter, he is guilty of passing counterfeit money.

SCIENTIA SCIOLORUM EST MIXTA IGnorantia. The knowledge of smatterers is mixed ignorance. 8 Coke, 159.

SCIENTIA UTRIUSQUE PAR PARES contrahentes facit. Equal knowledge on both sides makes the contracting parties equal. 3 Burrows, 1910.

SCIENTII ET VOLUNTI NON FIT INJUria. A wrong is not done to one who knows and wills it.

SCILICET (Lat. scire, to know, licet, it is permitted; you may know; translated by "to wit," in its old sense of "to know"). That is to say; to wit; namely. It is often abbreviated "sc." or "scil."

It is a clause to usher in the sentence of another, to particularize that which was too general before, distribute what was too gross, or to explain what was doubtful and obscure. It neither increases nor diminishes the premises or habendum, for it gives nothing of itself. It may make a restriction when the preceding words may be restrained. Hob. 171; 1 P. Wms. 18; Co. Litt. 180b, note 1.

When the scilicet is repugnant to the precedent matter, it is void; for example, when a declaration in trover states that the plaintiff on the third day of May was possessed of certain goods which, on the fourth day of May, came to the defendant's hands, who afterwards, to wit, on the first day of May, converted them, the scilicet was rejected as surplusage. Cro. Jac. 428. And see 6 Bin. (Pa.) 15; 3 Saund. 291, note 1.

Stating material and traversable matter under a scilicet will not avoid the consequences of a variance (1 McClel. & Y. 277; 4 Taunt. 321; 6 Term R. 462; 2 Bos. & P. 170, note 2; 1 Cow. [N. Y.] 676; 4 Johns. [N. Y.] 450; 2 Pick. [Mass.] 223); nor will the mere omission of a scilicet render immaterial matter material (2 Saund. 206a; 3 Term R. 68; 1 Chit. Pl. 276), even in a criminal proceeding (2 Campb. 307, note). See 3 Term R. 68; 3 Maule & S. 173.

SCINTILLA (Lat.) A spark; a remaining particle; the least particle. "A scintilla of equity." Henley, Lord Keeper, 1 W. Bl. 180. "There is not a scintilla of intention, upon the face of the will, to show the contrary." Lord Ellenborough, 11 East, 322. "Not a scintilla of benefit." Id.; 1 Maule & S. 509. See 6 Maule & S. 180.

SCINTILLA JURIS (Lat. a spark of law or right). A legal fiction resorted to for the purpose of enabling feoffees to uses to support contingent uses when they come into existence, thereby to enable the statute of uses (27 Hen. VIII.) to execute them. For example, a shifting use; a grant to A. and his heirs to the use of B. and his heirs, until C. perform an act, and then to the use of C. and his heirs. Here the statute executes the use in B., which, being coextensive with A.'s seisin, leaves no actual seisin in A. When, however, C. performs the act, B.'s use ceases, and C.'s springs up, and he enjoys the fee simple; upon which the question arises, out of what seisin C.'s use is served. It is said to be served out of A.'s original seisin; for upon the cesser of B.'s use it is contended that the original seisin reverted to A., for the purpose of serving C.'s use, and is a possibility of seisin, or scintilla juris. See 4 Kent, Comm. 238 et seq., and the authorities there cited, for the learning upon this subject; Burton, Real Prop. 48, 49; Wilson, Springing Uses, 59, 60; Washb. Real Prop.

SCIRE DEBES CUM QUO CONTRAHIS. You ought to know with whom you deal. 11 Mees. & W. 405, 632; 13 Mees. & W. 171.

SCIRE FACIAS (Lat. that you make known). The name of a writ (and of the whole proceeding) founded on some public record.

Its principal use was to revive a judgment on which execution had not issued for a year and a day (see "Revival"), or to enforce some obligation of record, as a recognizance on appeal (24 Pa. St. 69).

Scire facias is also used by government as a mode to ascertain and enforce the forfeiture of a corporate charter, where there is a legal existing body capable of acting, but who have abused their power. It cannot, like quo warranto (which is applicable to all cases of forfeiture), be applied where there is a body corporate de facto only, who take upon themselves to act, but cannot legally exercise their powers. In scire facias to forfeit a corporate charter, the government must be a party to the suit; for the judgment is that the parties be ousted, and the franchises be seized into the hands of the government. 2 Kent, Comm. 313; 10 Barn. & C. 240; Yelv. 190; 5 Mass. 230; 16 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 140; 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 1; 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 365; 4 Gill (Md.) 404.

Scire facias is also used to suggest further breaches on a bond with a condition, where a judgment has been obtained for some, but not all, of the breaches, and to recover further installments where a judgment has been obtained for the penalty before all the installments are due. 1 Wm. Saund. 58, note 1; 4 Md. 375.

As to the effects of the judgment, and the principle of forfeiture, see "Quo Warranto."

The pleadings in scire facias are peculiar. The writ recites the judgment or other record, and also the suggestions which the plaintiff must make to the court to entitle him to the proceeding by scire facias. The writ, therefore, presents the plaintiff's whole case, and constitutes the declaration, to which the defendant must plead. 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 297. And when the proceeding is used to forfeit a corporate charter, all the causes of forfeiture must be assigned in distinct breaches in the writ. And the defendant must either disclaim the charter, or deny its existence, or deny the facts alleged as breaches, or demur to them. The suggestions in the writ disclosing the foundation of the plaintiff's case must also be traversed if they are to be avoided. The scire facias is founded partly upon them and partly upon the record. 2 Inst. 470, 679. They are substantive facts, and can be traversed by distinct pleas embracing them alone, just as any other fundamental allegation can be traversed alone. All the pleadings after the writ or declaration are in the ordinary forms. There are no pleadings in scire facias to forfeit a corporate charter to be found in the books, as the proceeding has been seldom used. There is a case in 1 P. Wms. 207, but no pleadings. There is a case also in 9 Gill (Md.) 379, with a synopsis of the pleadings. Perhaps the only other case is in Vermont, and it is without pleadings. A defendant cannot plead more than one plea to a scire facias to forfeit a corporate charter. St. 4 & 5 Anne, c. 16, and St. 9 Anne, c. 20, allowing double pleas, do not extend to the crown. 1 Chit. Pl. 479; 1 P. Wms. 220.

There are various special forms of the writ designated in accordance with the purpose for or the record on which it is brought. The principal are:

Scire facias sur mortgage, being a writ of scire facias issued upon the default of a mortgagor, requiring him to show cause why the mortgage should not be foreclosed.

Scire facias ad disprobandum debitum, being a writ in use in Pennsylvania, which lies by a defendant in foreign attachment against the plaintiff, in order to enable him, within a year and a day next ensuing the time of payment to the plaintiff in the attachment, to disprove or avoid the debt recovered against him. Act relating to the commencement of actions (section 61), passed June 13, 1836.

Scire facias ad audiendum errores, being a writ which is sued out after the plaintiff in error has assigned his errors. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 20; Bac. Abr. "Error" (F).

Scire facias ad rehabendam terram, being a writ which lay for an execution debtor to recover back his land taken on execution after he has satisfied the debt. Fost. Scire Facias, 58.

SCIRE FECI (Lat. I have made known). In practice. The return of the sheriff, or other proper officer, to the writ of scire facias, when it has been served.

SCIRE FIERI INQUIRY. In English law. The name of a writ formerly used to recover the amount of a judgment from an executor.

The history of the origin of the writ is as follows: When, on an execution de bonis testatoris against an executor, the sheriff returned nulla bona and also a devastavit, a fieri facias, de bonis propriis, might formerly have been issued against the executor, without a previous inquisition finding a devastavit and a scire facias. But the most usual practice upon the sheriff's return of nulla bona to a fieri facias de bonis testatoris was to sue out a special writ of fieri facias de bonis testatoris, with a clause in it, et si tibi constare, poterit, that the executor had wasted the goods, then to levy de bonis propriis. This was the practice in the king's bench till the time of Charles I.

In the common pleas, a practice had prevailed in early times upon a suggestion in the special writ of fieri facias of a devastavit by the executor, to direct the sheriff to inquire by a jury whether the executor had wasted the goods, and if the jury found he had, then a scire facias was issued out against him, and, unless he made a good defense thereto, an execution de bonis propriis was awarded against him.

The practice of the two courts being different, several cases were brought into the king's bench on error, and at last it became the practice of both courts, for the sake of expedition, to incorporate the fieri facias inquiry and scire facias into one writ, thence called a "scire fieri inquiry,"—a name compounded of the first words of the two writs of scire facias and fieri facias, and that of inquiry, of which it consists.

This writ recites the fieri facias de bonis testatoris sued out on the judgment against the executor, the return of nulla bona by the sheriff, and then, suggesting that the executor had sold and converted the goods of the testator to the value of the debt and damages recovered, commands the sheriff to levy the said debt and damages of the goods of the testator in the hands of the executor, if they could be levied thereof; but if it should appear to him by the inquisition of a jury that the executor had wasted the goods of the testator, then the sheriff is to warn the executor to appear, etc. If the judgment had been either by or against the testator or intestate, or both, the writ of fieri facias recites that fact, and also that the court had adjudged, upon a scire facias to revive the judgment, that the executor or administrator should have execution for the debt, etc. Clift, Entr. 659; Lilly, Entr. 664.

Although this practice is sometimes adopted, yet the most usual proceeding is by action of debt on the judgment, suggesting a devastavit, because in the proceeding by scire fieri inquiry the plaintiff is not entitled to costs unless the executor appears and pleads to the scire facias. 1 Saund. 219, note 8. See 2 Archb. Prac. 934.

SCIRE LEGES, NON HOC EST VERBA earum tenere, sed vim et potestatem. To know the laws is not to observe their mere words, but their force and power. Dig. 1. 3. 17.

SCIRE PROPRIE EST, REM RATIONE et per causam cognoscere. To know properly is to know a thing by its cause and in its reason. Co. Litt. 183.

SCITE. The setting or standing of any place; the seat or situation of a capital messuage, or the ground on which it stood. Jacob.

SCOLD. A woman who, by her habit of scolding, becomes a nuisance to the neighborhood, is called a "common scold." See "Common Scold."

SCOT (Law Lat. scottum, scottus, scotta; from Saxon sceat, a part or portion). In old English law. A tax, or tribute; one's share of a contribution. Or rather, a contribution of several.

Camden, following Matthew of Westminster, defines this word to mean, "that which is gathered together into one heap, from several things" (illud quod ex diversis rebus in unum acervum aggregatur). Cowell. Spelman observes that it properly signifies what the authors of the middle ages called conjectus (a throwing together), because it was thrown together by several into one (from Saxon sceote, to throw or cast, whence sceotan, to shoot). It is found associated with the word "lot," in the laws of William the Conqueror, and other early records; scot and lot (or, in the Saxon form, an hlot & an scote), signifying a customary contribution laid upon all subjects, according to their ability. Cowell; Spelman, voc. "Scot." "Lot."

SCOT AND LOT. In English law. The name of a customary contribution laid upon all the subjects according to their ability.

SCOTS. Assessments by commissioners of sewers.

SCOTALE. An extortion by officers of the forests who kept ale houses, and compelled people to drink there under fear of their displeasure. Charta de Foresta, c. 7; Manw. For. Laws, pt. 1, 216.

SCOTCH PEERS. Peers of the kingdom of Scotland. Of these sixteen are elected by the rest, and represent the whole body. They are elected for one parliament only. See 6 Anne, c. 23, amended by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 52, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 87, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 35.

SCOTTARE. To pay scot, tax, or customary dues. Cowell.

SCRAWL. A mark which is to supply the place of a seal. 2 Pars. Cont. 100. See "Scroll."

SCRIBA (Lat. from scribere, to write). A scribe; a secretary. Scriba regis, a king's secretary; a chancellor. Spelman.

SCRIBERE EST AGERE. To write is to act. 2 Rolle, 89; 4 Bl. Comm. 80.

SCRIP. A certificate or schedule. Evidence of the right to obtain shares in a public company; sometimes called "scrip certificate," to distinguish it from the real title to shares. Wharton; 15 Ark. 12. The possession of such scrip is prima facie evidence of ownership of the shares therein designated. Add. Cont. 203*. It is not goods, wares, or merchandise, within the statute of frauds. 16 Mees. & W. 66.

SCRIPT. The original or principal instrument, where there are part and counterpart.

SCRIPTAE OBLIGATIONES SCRIPTIS tolluntur, et nudi consensus obligatio, contrario consensu dissolvitur. Written obligations are dissolved by writing, and obligations of naked agreement by naked agreement to the contrary.

SCRIPTORIUM (Law Lat. from scribere, to write). In old records. A place in monasteries, where writing was done. Spelman.

SCRIPTUM (Lat. from scribere, to write). In old conveyancing. A writing; a thing written. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 25. This word, alone, does not import or signify a deed, that is, an instrument under seal. 2 Strange, 814.

Scriptum indentatum, a writing indented; an indenture or deed. Reynolds, J., 2 Strange, 815.

Scriptum obligatorium, a writing obligatory. The technical name of a bond in old pleadings. T. Raym. 393. Any writing under seal. Id.

SCRIPTUM INDENTATUM (Law Lat.) A writing indented; an indenture or deed.

SCRIPTURA (Lat. from scribere, to write). In old English law. The act or fact of writing. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 25.

SCRIVENER. A person whose business it is to write deeds and other instruments for others; a conveyancer.

Money scriveners are those who are engaged in procuring money to be lent on mortgages and other securities, and lending such money accordingly. They act, also, as agents for the purchase and sale of real estates.

To be considered a money scrivener, a person must be concerned in carrying on the trade or profession as a means of making a livelihood. He must, in the course of his occupation, receive other men's moneys into his trust and custody, to lay out for them as occasion offers. 3 Campb. 538; 2 Esp. Cas. 555.

SCROLL. A printed or written mark intended to supply the place of a seal. See "Seal."

SCRUET ROLL (called, also, scruet finium, or simply scruet). In old English law. A record of the bail accepted in cases of habeas corpus. The award was set down in the remembrance roll, together with the cause of commitment, the writ and return were put on file, the bail was recorded in the scruet. 3 How. St. Tr. 134, 135, arg. For remembrance roll, see Reg. Michael. 1654, § 15.

SCRUTATOR (Lat. from scrutari, to search). In old English law. A bailiff whom the king of England appointed in places that were his in franchise or interest, whose duty was to look after the king's water rights; as flotsam, jetsam, wreck, etc. 1 Harg. Tr. p. 23; Pat. 27 Hen. VI. parte 2, m. 20; Pat. 8 Ed. IV. parte 1, m. 22.

SCUTAGE (from Lat. scutum, a shield). Knight service. Litt. § 99. The tax which those who, holding by knight service, did not accompany the king, had to pay on its being assessed by parliament. Escuage certain was a species of socage where the compensation for service was fixed. Litt. §§ 97, 98; Reg. Orig. 88; Wright, Ten. 121-134.

SCUTAGIO HABENDO. See "De Scutagio Habendo."

SCYRA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Shire; county; the inhabitants of a county. Writ cited, Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 119.

A fine imposed upon such as neglected to attend the scyre gemote courts, which all tenants were bound to do.

SCYRE GEMOTE. The name of a court among the Saxons. It was the court of the shire, in Latin called curia comitatus, and the principal court among the Saxons. It was holden twice a year for determining all causes, both ecclesiastical and secular.

SE DEFENDENDO (Lat.) Defending himself.

Homicide se defendendo may be justifiable. See "Self-Defense."

SEA. The ocean; the great mass of water which surrounds the land, and which probably extends from pole to pole, covering nearly three-quarters of the globe. Waters within the ebb and flow of the tide are to be considered the sea. Gilp. Dist. Ct. 526.

A large body of salt water communicating with the ocean is also called a sea; as, the Mediterranean sea, etc.

Very large inland bodies of salt water are also called seas; as, the Caspian sea, etc.

The open sea is public and common property, and any nation or person has ordinarily an equal right to navigate it or to fish therein (1 Kent, Comm. 27; Angell, Tide Waters, 44-49; 1 Bouv. Inst. 170, 174), and to land upon the seashore (1 Bouv. Inst. 173, 174); but it is generally conceded that every nation has jurisdiction to the distance of a cannon shot, or marine league, over the waters adjacent to its shore (2 Cranch [U. S.] 187, 234; Bynkershoek, Qu. Pub. Jur. 61; Vattel, 207).

SEA BATTERIES. Assaults by masters in the merchant service upon seamen at sea.

SEA LAWS. Maritime laws, as those of Oleron, Wisbuy, and the Hanse Towns.

SEA LETTER, or SEA BRIEF. In maritime law. A document which should be found on board of every neutral ship. It specifies the nature and quantity of the cargo, the place from whence it comes, and its destination. Chit. Law Nat. 197; 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 192.

SEA REEVE. An officer in maritime towns and places, who takes care of the maritime rights of the lord of the manor, watches the shore, and collects the wreck.

SEAL. Anciently, wax with an impression. Sigillum est cera impressa quia cera sine impressione non est sigillum. 3 Inst. 169; 21 Pick. (Mass.) 417; 2 Caines (N. Y.) 362.

In more modern law, wax, wafer, or any tenacious substance upon which an impression may be made. 5 Cush. (Mass.) 359; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 239.

In many of the states, a scroll made with a pen or printed (4 Ill. 12), such as the letters "L. S." (5 Wis. 549), or the word "Seal" (28 Grat. [Va.] 627), is held sufficient, and in some states this holding is independent of statute (4 Ark. 195; 5 Cal. 315).

SEAL OF THE UNITED STATES. The seal used by the United States in congress assembled shall be the seal of the United States, viz.:

Arms: Paleways of thirteen pieces, argent and gules; a chief azure; the escutcheon on the breast of the American eagle displayed proper, holding in his dexter talon an olive branch, and in his sinister a bundle of thirteen arrows, all proper, and in his beak a scroll, inscribed with this motto, "E pluribus unum."

For the Crest: Over the head of the eagle which appears above the escutcheon, a glory, or breaking through a cloud proper, and surrounding thirteen stars, forming a constellation argent on an azure field.

Reverse: A pyramid unfinished. In the zenith, an eye in a triangle, surrounded with a glory proper. Over the eye, these words, "Annuit cœptis." On the base of the pyramid, the numerical letters MDCCLXXVI, and underneath, the following motto, "Novus ordo sectorum." Resolution of Congress, June 20, 1782; Gordon, Dig. art. 207.

SEAL OFFICE. In English practice. The office at which certain judicial writs are sealed with the prerogative seal, and without which they are of no authority. The officer whose duty it is to seal such writs is called "sealer of writs."

SEAL PAPER. A document issued by the lord chancellor, previously to the commencement of the sittings, detailing the business to be done for each day in his court, and in the courts of the lords justices and vice chancellors. The master of the rolls in like manner issued a seal paper in respect of the business to be heard before him. Smith, Ch. Prac. 9.

SEALS. In Louisiana. A method of taking the effects of a deceased person into public custody.

On the death of a person, according to the laws of Louisiana, if the heir wishes to obtain the benefit of inventory and the delays for deliberating, he is bound, as soon as he knows of the death of the deceased to whose succession he is called, and before committing any act of heirship, to cause the seals to be affixed on the effects of the succession by any judge or justice of the peace. Civ. Code La. art. 1027.

In ten days after this affixing of the seals, the heir is bound to present a petition to the judge of the place in which the succession is opened, praying for the removal of the seals, and that a true and faithful inventory of the effects of the succession be made. Civ. Code La. art. 1028.

In case of vacant estates, and estates of which the heirs are absent and not represented, the seals, after the decease, must be affixed by a judge or justice of the peace within the limits of his jurisdiction, and may be fixed by him either ex officio or at the request of the parties. Civ. Code La. art. 1070. The seals are affixed at the request of the parties when a widow, a testamentary executor, or any other person who pretends to have an interest in a succession or community of property, requires it. Id. art. 1071. They are affixed ex officio when the presumptive heirs of the deceased do not all reside in the place where he died, or if any of them happen to be absent. Id. art. 1072.

The object of placing the seals on the effects of a succession is for the purpose of preserving them, and for the interest of third persons. Code Civ. La. art. 1068.

The seals must be placed on the bureaus, coffers, armoires, and other things which contain the effects and papers of the deceased, and on the doors of the apartments which contain these things, so that they cannot be opened without tearing off, breaking, or altering the seals. Code Civ. La. art. 1069.

The judge or justice of the peace who affixes the seals is bound to appoint a guardian, at the expense of the succession, to take care of the seals and of the effects, of which an account is taken at the end of the proces verbal of the affixing of the seals. The guardian must be domiciliated in the place where the inventory is taken. Code Civ. La. art. 1079. And the judge, when he retires, must take with him the keys of all things and apartments upon which the seals have been affixed. Id.

The raising of the seals is done by the judge of the place, or justice of the peace appointed by him to that effect, in the presence of the witnesses of the vicinage, in the same manner as for the affixing of the seals. Code Civ. La. art. 1084.

SEALED AND DELIVERED. In conveyancing. The common formula of attestation of deeds and other instruments, written immediately over the witnesses' names. This has been retained without change from the old practice, when sealing alone, without signing, constituted a sufficient execution or authentication. 2 Bl. Comm. 306. See 15 Ohio, 107.

In England, it has been held that the words "sealed and delivered," in an attestation, does not import signing. 5 Maule & S. 581; 3 Maule & S. 512; 4 Taunt. 213. But the contrary has recently been held in the supreme court of the United States. 8 How. (U. S.) 10, citing 6 Man. & G. 386.

SEALED INSTRUMENT. A writing, the maker of which has affixed his seal, or that which is the legal equivalent of a seal, in addition to his signature. Formerly the seal alone was sufficient if it identified the maker.

SEALING A VERDICT. In practice. The putting a verdict in writing, and placing it in an envelope, which is sealed. To relieve jurors after they have agreed, it is not unusual for the counsel to agree that the jury shall seal their verdict and then separate. When the court is again in session, the jury come in and give their verdict in all respects as if it had not been sealed; and a juror may dissent from it if since the sealing he has honestly changed his mind. 8 Ohio, 405; 1 Gilm. 333; 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3257.

SEAMAN. A sailor; a mariner; one whose business is navigation. 2 Boul. P. Dr. Com. 232; Code de Commerce, art. 262; Laws of Oleron, art. 7; Laws of Wisbuy, art. 19.

In a statute, it has been held to include persons engaged in fresh-water navigation. 2 Pet. Adm. (U. S.) 268.

The term "seamen," in its most enlarged sense, includes the captain as well as other persons of the crew; in a more confined signification, it extends only to the common sailors. 3 Pardessus, note 667. But the mate (1 Pet. Adm. [U. S.] 246), the cook and steward (2 Pet. Adm. [U. S.] 268), and engineers, clerks, carpenters, firemen, deck hands, porters, and chamber maids, on passenger steamers, when necessary for the service of the ship (1 Conkl. Adm. 107; 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 582; 1 Sumn. [U. S.] 170), are considered, as to their rights to sue in the admiralty, as common seamen; and persons employed on board of steamboats and lighters engaged in trade or commerce on tide water are within the admiralty jurisdiction; while those employed in ferryboats are not (Gilp. Dist. Ct. 203, 532). Persons who do not contribute their aid in navigating the vessel or to its preservation in the course of their occupation, as musicians, are not to be considered as seamen, with a right to sue in the admiralty for their wages. Gilp. Dist. Ct. 516. See "Lien."

SEAMANSHIP. The skill of a good seaman; an acquaintance with the art of navigating and managing a ship or other vessel.

SEARCH.

——In Criminal Law. An examination of a man's house, premises, or person, for the purpose of discovering stolen or contraband goods, or proof of his guilt in relation to some crime or misdemeanor of which he is accused.

The constitution of the United States (Amend. art. 4) protects the people from unreasonable searches and seizures. 3 Story, Const. § 1895; Rawle, Const. c. 10, p. 127; 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 263; 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 500; 1 U. S. St. at Large, 651; 3 Cranch (U. S.) 447.

——In Practice. An examination made in the proper lien office for mortgages, liens, judgments, or other incumbrances against real estate. The certificate given by the officer as to the result of such examination is also called a "search."

Conveyancers and others who cause searches to be made ought to be very careful that they should be correct with regard to the time during which the person against whom the search has been made owned the premises, to the property searched against, which ought to be properly described, and to the form of the certificate of search.

SEARCH, RIGHT OF. In international law. The right existing in a belligerent to examine and inspect the papers of a neutral vessel at sea. On the continent of Europe this is called the "right of visit." Dalloz, "Prises Maritimes," notes 104-111.

The right does not extend to examine the cargo, nor does it extend to a ship of war, it being strictly confined to the searching of merchant vessels. The exercise of the right is to prevent the commerce of contraband goods. Although frequently resisted by powerful neutral nations, yet this right appears now to be fixed beyond contravention. The penalty for violently resisting this right is the confiscation of the property so withheld from visitation. Unless in extreme cases of gross abuse of his right by a belligerent, the neutral has no right to resist a search. 1 Kent, Comm. 154; 2 Brown, Civ. & Adm. Law, 319.

The right of search—or rather of visitation—in time of peace, especially in its connection with the efforts of the British government for the suppression of the slave trade, has been the subject of much discussion (Wheaton, Right of Search; Life of General Cass [by Smith] cc. 25, 26; Webster, Works, vol. 6, 329, 335, 338), and the documents relating to this subject communicated to congress from time to time, and most of the works on international law, may be profitably examined by those who desire to trace the history and understand the merits of the questions involved in the proposed exercise of this right. See, also, Edinburgh Review, vol. 11, p. 9; Foreign Quarterly Review, vol. 35, p. 211; 3 Phillim. Int. Law, Index, tit. "Visit and Search."

SEARCH WARRANT. In practice. A warrant requiring the officer to whom it is addressed to search a house, or other place, therein specified, for property therein alleged to have been stolen, and, if the same shall be found upon such search, to bring the goods so found, together with the body of the person occupying the same, who is named, before the justice or other officer granting the warrant, or some other justice of the peace, or other lawfully authorized officer.

SEARCHER. In English law. An officer of the customs, whose duty it is to examine and search all ships outward bound, to ascertain whether they have any prohibited or uncustomed goods on board.

SEASHORE. That space of land on the border of the sea which is alternately covered and left dry by the rising and falling of the tide; or, in other words, that space of land between high and low water mark. Harg. Tr. 12; 6 Mass. 435, 439; 1 Pick. (Mass.) 180, 182; 5 Day (Conn.) 22; 12 Me. 237; 2 Zab. (N. J.) 441; 27 Eng. Law & Eq. 242; 4 De Gex, M. & G. 206. See "Tide;" "Tide Water."

SEATED LANDS. In the early land legislation of some of the United States, "seated" is used, in connection with "improved," to denote lands of which actual possession was taken. 5 Pet. (U. S.) 468.

SEAWEED. A species of grass which grows in the sea. When cast upon land, it belongs to the owner of the land adjoining the seashore, upon the grounds that it increases gradually, that it is useful as manure and a protection to the ground, and that it is some compensation for the encroachment of the sea upon the land. 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 313, 323. See 5 Vt. 223.

The French differs from our law in this respect, as seaweeds there, when cast on the beach, belong to the first occupant. Dalloz, "Propriete," art. 3, § 2, note 128.

SEAWORTHINESS. In maritime law. The sufficiency of the vessel in materials, construction, equipment, officers, men, and outfit, for the trade or service in which it is employed.

Any sort of disrepair left in the ship, by which she or the cargo may suffer, is a breach of the warranty of seaworthiness. A deficiency of force in the crew, or of skill in the master, mate, etc., is a want of seaworthiness. 1 Campb. 1; 14 East, 481; 4 Duer (N. Y.) 234. But if there was once a sufficient crew, their temporary absence will not be considered a breach of the warranty. 2 Barn. & Ald. 73; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 184; 1 Pet. (U. S.) 183. A vessel may be rendered not seaworthy by being overloaded. 2 Barn. & Ald. 320.

It can never be settled by positive rules of law how far this obligation of seaworthiness extends in any particular case, for the reason that improvements and changes in the means and modes of navigation frequently require new implements, or new forms of old ones; and these, though not necessary at first, become so when there is an established usage that all ships of a certain quality, or those to be sent on certain voyages, or used for certain purposes, shall have them. 2 Pars. Mar. Law, 134. Seaworthiness is, therefore, in general, a question of fact for the jury. Id. 137; 1 Pet. (U. S.) 170, 184; 1 Bouv. Inst. 441.

SEBASTOMANIA. In medical jurisprudence. Religious insanity; demonomania.

SECK. A want of remedy by distress. Litt. § 218. See "Rent." Want of present fruit or profit, as in the case of the reversion without rent or other service, except fealty. Co. Litt. 151b, note 5.

SECOND DELIVERANCE. In practice. The name of a writ given by the statute of Westminster II. (13 Edw. I. c. 2), founded on the record of a former action of replevin. 2 Inst. 341. It commands the sheriff, if the plaintiff make him secure of prosecuting his claim and returning the chattels which were adjudged to the defendant by reason of the plaintiff's default, to make deliverance. On being nonsuited, the plaintiff in replevin might, at common law, have brought another replevin, and so ad infinitum, to the intolerable vexation of the defendant. The statute of Westminster restrains the plaintiff, when nonsuited, from so doing, but allows him this writ, issuing out of the original record, in order to have the same distress delivered again to him, on his giving the like security as before. 3 Bl. Comm. 150; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 68.

SECOND DISTRESS. By 17 Car. II. c. 7, § 4, in all cases where the value of the cattle distrained shall not be found to be of the full value of the arrears distrained for, the party to whom such arrears are due, his executors or administrators, may distrain again for the said arrears; but a second distress cannot, it seems, be at all justified, where there is enough which might have been taken upon the first, if the distrainer had then thought proper; for a man who has an entire duty, as rent, for example, shall not split the entire sum, and distrain for one part of it at one time, and for the other part of it at another time, and so toties quoties for several times, for that would be great oppression. Wharton.

SECOND-HAND EVIDENCE. Hearsay, because the facts were perceived or discovered by some other than the witness testifying or by an agency extraneous to that producing the evidence offered.

SECOND SURCHARGE, WRIT OF. The name of a writ issued in England against a commoner who has a second time surcharged the common. 3 Bl. Comm. 239.

SECONDS. Assistants at a duel. They are equally guilty with the principals under many of the statutes against duelling. See "Duelling."

SECONDARY. In English law. An officer who is second or next to the chief officer; as, secondaries to the prothonotaries of the courts of king's bench or common pleas; secondary of the remembrancer in the exchequer, etc. Jacob.

SECONDARY (or DERIVATIVE) CONveyances. Those which presuppose some other conveyance precedent, and only serve to enlarge, confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by such original conveyance. 2 Bl. Comm. 324*.

SECONDARY EVIDENCE. That species of proof which is admissible on the loss of primary evidence, and which becomes by that event the best evidence. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3055. See "Evidence."

SECONDARY USE. A use limited to take effect in derogation of a preceding estate, otherwise called a "shifting use," as a conveyance to the use of A. and his heirs, with a proviso that, when B. returns from India, then to the use of C. and his heirs. 1 Steph. Comm. 546.

SECRET COMMITTEE. A secret committee of the house of commons is a committee specially appointed to investigate a certain matter, and to which secrecy being deemed necessary in furtherance of its objects, its proceedings are conducted with closed doors, to the exclusion of all persons not members of the committee. All other committees are open to members of the house, although they may not be serving upon them. Brown.

SECRET PARTNERSHIP. See "Partner."

SECRET TRUSTS. Where a testator gives property to a person, on a verbal promise by the legatee or devisee that he will hold it in trust for another person, this is called a "secret trust." The English rule is, that if the secret trust would have been valid as an express trust, it will be enforced against the legatee or devisee, while if it would have been invalid as an express trust, e. g., by contravening the provisions of the mortmain act, the gift fails altogether, so that neither the devisee or legatee, nor the object of the trust, takes any benefit by it. Lewin, Trusts, 51; Watson, Comp. Eq. 54.

SECRETARY OF DECREES AND INjunctions. An officer of the English court of chancery. The office was abolished by St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, § 23.

SECRETARY OF LEGATION. An officer employed to attend a foreign mission, and to perform certain duties as clerk.

His salary is fixed by the act of congress of May 1, 1810 (section 1), at such a sum as the president of the United States may allow, not exceeding two thousand dollars.

The salary of a secretary of embassy, or the secretary of a minister plenipotentiary, is the same as that of a secretary of legation.

Private secretaries of a minister must not be confounded with secretaries of embassy or of legation. Such private secretaries are entitled to protection only as belonging to the suite of the ambassador.

The functions of a secretary of legation consist in his employment by his minister for objects of ceremony; in making verbal reports to the secretary of state or other foreign ministers; in taking care of the archives of the mission; in ciphering and deciphering despatches; in sometimes making rough draughts of the notes or letters which the minister writes to his colleagues or to the local authorities; in drawing up proces verbaux; in presenting passports to the minister for his signature, and delivering them to the persons for whom they are intended; and, finally, in assisting the minister, under whom he is placed, in everything concerning the affairs of the mission. In the absence of the minister, he is admitted to conferences, and to present notes signed by the minister.

SECTA (Lat. sequor, to follow). The persons, two or more in number, whom the plaintiff produced in court, in the ancient form of proceedings, immediately upon making his declaration, to confirm the allegations therein, before they were called in question by the defendant's plea. Bracton, 214a. The word appears to have been used as denoting that these persons followed the plaintiff into court; that is, came in a matter in which the plaintiff was the leader, or one principally concerned. The actual production of "suit" was discontinued very early (3 Bl. Comm. 295), but the formula "et inde producit sectam" (for which, in more modern pleadings, "and thereupon he brings suit" is substituted) continued till the abolition of the Latin form of pleadings (Steph. Pl. 429, 430). The count in dower and writs of right did not so conclude, however. 1 Chit. Pl. 399. A suit or action. Hob. 20; Bracton, 399b. A suit of clothes. Cowell; Spelman.

SECTA AD CURIAM. A writ that lay against him who refused to perform his suit either to the county court or the court baron. Cowell.

SECTA AD FURNUM. Suit due a public bake house.

SECTA AD JUSTICIAM FACIENDAM. In old English law. A service which a man is bound to perform by his fee.

SECTA AD MOLENDRINUM. A service arising from the usage, time out of mind, of carrying corn to a particular mill to be ground. 3 Bl. Comm. 235. A writ adapted to the injury lay at the old law. Fitzh. Nat Brev. 123.

SECTA AD TORRALE. Suit due a man's kiln or malt house. 3 Bl. Comm. 235.

SECTA CURIAE. Suit at court. The service due from tenants to the lord of attending his courts baron, both to answer complaints alleged against themselves, and for the trial of their fellow tenants. 2 Bl. Comm. 54.

SECTA EST PUGNA CIVILIS; SICUT ACtores armantur actionibus, et quasi accinguntur gladiis, ita rei (e contra) muniuntur exceptionibus, et defenduntur quasi clypeis. A suit is a civil battle, for as the plaintiffs are armed with actions, and, as it were, girt with swords, so, on the other hand, the defendants are fortified with pleas, and defended, as it were, by helmets. Hob. 20; Bracton, 339b.

SECTA FACIENDA PER ILLAM QUAE habet eniciam partem. A writ to compel the heir, who has the elder's part of the coheirs, to perform suit and services for all the coparceners. Reg. Orig. 177.

SECTA QUAE SCRIPTO NITITUR A scripto variari non debet. A suit which relies upon a writing ought not to vary from the writing. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 65.

SECTA REGALIS. A suit so called by which all persons were bound twice in the year to attend in the sheriff's tourn, in order that they might be informed of things relating to the public peace. It was so called because the sheriff's tourn was the king's leet, and it was held in order that the people might be bound by oath to bear true allegiance to the king. Cowell.

SECTA UNICA TANTUM FACIENDA pro pluribus haereditatibus. A writ for an heir who was distrained by the lord to do more suits than one, that he should be allowed to do one suit only in respect of the land of divers heirs descended to him. Cowell.

SECTATORES. Suitors of court who, among the Saxons, gave their judgment or verdict in civil suits upon the matter of fact and law. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 22.

SECTION. A division of land one mile square, containing six hundred and forty acres, established by the United States government survey of the public domain. See "Range;" "Township."

SECTION OF LAND. A parcel of government land containing six hundred and forty acres. The lands of the United States are surveyed into parcels of six hundred and forty acres; each such parcel is called a "section."

These sections are divided into half-sections, each of which contains three hundred and twenty acres, and into quarter-sections of one hundred and sixty acres each. See 2 Washb. Real Prop.

SECTORES (Lat.) In Roman law. Bidders at an auction. Bab. Auct. 2.

SECUNDUM. According to.

——Secundum Aequum et Bonum. According to what is just and right.

——Secundum Allegata et Probata. According to that which is alleged and proved.

——Secundum Consuetudinem Manerii. According to the custom of the manor.

——Secundum Formam Chartae. According to the form of the charter (deed).

——Secundum Formam Doni. According to the form of the gift or grant. See "Formedon."

——Secundum Formam Statuti. According to the form of the statute.

——Secundum Legem Communem. According to the common law.

——Secundum Naturam est, Commoda Cujusque rei eum Sequi, quem Sequentur Incommoda. It is natural that he who bears the charge of a thing should receive the profits. Dig. 50. 17. 10.

——Secundum Normam Legis. According to the rule of law; by the rule of law.

——Secundum Regulam. According to the rule; by rule.

——Secundum Subjectam Materiam. According to the subject matter. 1 Bl. Comm. 229. All agreements must be construed secundum subjectam materiam, if the matter will bear it. 2 Mod. 80, arg. Delivery must be secundum subjectam materiam. 2 Kent, Comm. 439.

SECURITAS.

——In Old English Law. Security; surety.

——In the Civil Law. An acquittance or release. Spelman; Calv. Lex.

SECURITATEM INVENIENDI. An ancient writ, lying for the sovereign, against any of his subjects, to stay them from going out of the kingdom to foreign parts; the ground whereof is that every man is bound to serve and defend the commonwealth as the crown shall think fit. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 115.

SECURITATIS PACIS. In old English law. Security of the peace. A writ that lay for one who was threatened with death or bodily harm by another, against him who so threatened. Reg. Orig. 88.

SECURITY. That which renders a matter sure; an instrument which renders more certain the performance of a contract. Anything that makes money more assured in its payment, or more readily recoverable, as distinguished from a mere evidence of debt.

A person who becomes the surety for another, or who engages himself for the performance of another's contract. See 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 431.

SECURITY FOR COSTS. Security given by a party to an action to pay any costs which may be adjudged against him therein.

Such security is required by statute in various cases, as on appeal, on the bringing of suit by a nonresident, etc.

SECURITY FOR GOOD BEHAVIOR. Giving surety of the peace (q. v.)

SECURIUS EXPEDIUNTUR NEGOTIA commissa pluribus, et plus vident oculi quam oculus. Business intrusted to several speeds best, and several eyes see more than one eye. 4 Coke, 46.

SECUS (Lat.) Otherwise.

SED NON ALLOCATUR (Lat. but it is not allowed). A phrase used in the old reports to signify that the court disagreed with the arguments of counsel. "It was argued," etc., "sed non allocatur."

SED PER CURIAM (Lat. but by the court). An expression sometimes found in the reports, after the opinion of a single judge, to introduce that of the court which differs from that of the single judge.

SED VIDE (Lat.) But see.

SEDERUNT, ACTS OF. In Scotch law. Certain ancient ordinances of the court of session, conferring upon the courts power to establish general rules of practice. Bell, Dict.

SEDITION. In criminal law. The raising commotions or disturbances in the state. It is a revolt against legitimate authority. Ersk. Inst. 4. 4. 14; Dig. 49. 16. 3. § 19.

The distinction between "sedition" and "treason" consists in this, that though the ultimate object of sedition is a violation of the public peace, or at least such a course of measures as evidently engenders it, yet it does not aim at direct and open violence against the laws, or the subversion of the constitution. Alis. Crim. Law. 580.

The obnoxious act of July 14, 1798 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 543), was called the "sedition law," because its professed object was to prevent disturbances.

In the Scotch law, sedition is either verbal or real. Verbal is inferred from the uttering of words tending to create discord between the king and his people; real sedition is generally committed by convocating together any considerable number of people, without lawful authority, under the pretense of redressing some public grievance, to the disturbing of the public peace. Ersk. Inst. 4. 4. 14.

SEDUCTION.

——As a Tort. At common law, the act of a man in inducing a woman to have unlawful sexual intercourse with him. The use of seductive arts was not essential. The woman herself had no action for damages except in case of a breach of a marriage promise, the only civil remedy being that of her parent, based on loss of services. 89 Ill. 543; 49 Mich. 540.

By statute in many states, the woman has the right to sue in her own name, but such statutes generally provide that the seduction must be under promise of marriage, or by seductive arts and devices.

——As a Crime. The crime is statutory, and consists generally in inducing an unmarried female of previous chaste character to submit to sexual intercourse by promise of marriage, or, in some states, by other seductive means.

"The exact amount or what kind of seductive art is necessary to establish the offense cannot be defined. Every case must stand on its own peculiar circumstances, together with the condition in life, advantages, age, and intelligence of the parties." 32 Iowa, 262. The intercourse must be accomplished by artifice and deception, and not by a yielding of the woman from mere lust. 79 Ala. 14.

Where a promise of marriage is required, it need not be valid, if it is believed by the woman to be so. 26 N. Y. 203. The woman must be induced by the promise to submit. 108 Ind. 406.

"No one can contend with any degree of plausibility that a virtuous female can be seduced without any of those arts, wiles, and blandishments so necessary to win the hearts of the weaker sex. To say that such a one was seduced by simply a blunt offer of wedlock in futuro, in exchange for sexual favors in presenti is an announcement that smacks too much of a bargain and barter, and not enough of betrayal. This is hire or salary, not seduction." 97 Mo. 668.

SEIGNIOR IN GROSS. A lord without a manor, simply enjoying superiority and services.

SEIGNIOR, or SEIGNEUR. Among the feudists, this name signified lord of the fee. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 23. The most extended signification of this word includes not only a lord or peer of parliament, but is applied to the owner or proprietor of a thing; hence the owner of a hawk, and the master of a fishing vessel, is called a "seigneur." 37 Edw. III. c. 19; Barr. Obs. St. 258.

SEIGNIORAGE. A royalty or prerogative of the sovereign, whereby an allowance of gold and silver, brought in the mass to be exchanged for coin, is claimed.

——In the United States. The mint charge for coining bullion.

SEIGNIORESS. A female superior.

SEIGNIORY. In English law. The rights of a lord, as such, in lands. Swinb. Wills, 174.

SEISED IN DEMESNE AS OF FEE. The precise technical phrase to express a fee simple in possession in a corporeal hereditament, the words "in demesne" signifying that he is seised as owner of the land itself, and not merely of the seigniory or services; and the words "as of fee" importing that he is seised of an estate of inheritance in fee simple. 2 Bl. Comm. 105; Steph. Comm. 22.

SEISI. In old English law. Seised; possessed.

SEISIN. The completion of the feudal investiture, by which the tenant was admitted into the feud, and performed the rites of homage and fealty. Stearns, Real Actions, 2.

Possession with an intent on the part of him who holds it to claim a freehold interest. 8 N. H. 58; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 35.

Immediately upon the investiture or livery of seisin, the tenant became tenant of the freehold; and the term "seisin" originally contained the idea of possession derived from a superior lord of whom the tenant held. There could be but one seisin, and the person holding it was regarded for the time as the rightful owner. Litt. § 701; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 136. In the early history of the country, livery of seisin seems to have been occasionally practiced. See 1 Washb. Real Prop. 34, note; Colony Laws (Mass.) 85, 86; Smith, Landl. & Ten. (Morris Ed.) 6, note.

In Connecticut, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and Ohio, seisin means merely "ownership," and the distinction between seisin in deed and in law is not known in practice. Walk. Am. Law, 324, 330; 4 Day (Conn.) 305; 4 Mass. 489; 14 Pick. (Mass.) 224; 6 Metc. (Mass.) 439. A patent by the commonwealth, in Kentucky, gives a right of entry, but not actual seisin. 3 Bibb (Ky.) 57.

Seisin in fact is possession with intent on the part of him who holds it to claim a freehold interest.

Seisin in law is a right of immediate possession according to the nature of the estate. Cowell; Comyn, Dig. "Seisin" (A 1, 2). See "Livery of Seisin."

SEISIN, LIVERY OF. See "Livery of Seisin."

SEISIN OX. In Scotch law. A perquisite formerly due to the sheriff when he gave possession to an heir holding crown lands. It was long since converted into a payment in money, proportioned to the value of the estate. Bell, Dict.

SEISINA (Law Lat.) Seisin.

SEISINA FACIT STIPITEM. Seisin makes the stock. 2 Bl. Comm. 209; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 466; 1 Steph. Comm. 367; 4 Kent, Comm. 388, 389; 13 Ga. 238.

SEISINA HABENDA. A writ for delivery of seisin to the lord, of lands and tenements, after the sovereign, in right of his prerogative, had had the year, day, and waste on a felony committed, etc. Reg. Orig. 165.

SEIZIN. See "Seisin."

SEIZING OF HERIOTS. Taking the best beast, etc., where an heriot is due, on the death of the tenant. 2 Bl. Comm. 422.

SEIZURE. In practice. The act of taking possession of the property of a person condemned by the judgment of a competent tribunal to pay a certain sum of money, by a sheriff, constable, or other officer lawfully authorized thereto, by virtue of an execution, for the purpose of having such property sold according to law to satisfy the judgment. The taking possession of goods for a violation of a public law; as, the taking possession of a ship for attempting an illicit trade. 2 Cranch (U. S.) 187; 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 100; 1 Gall. (U. S.) 75; 2 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 127, 567; 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 404.

SELECTI JUDICES (Lat.) In Roman law. Judges who were selected very much like our juries. They were returned by the praetor, drawn by lot, subject to be challenged and sworn. 3 Bl. Comm. 366.

SELECTMEN. The name of certain town officers in several states of the United States, who are invested by the statutes of the states with extensive powers for the conduct of the town business.

SELF-DEFENSE. The protection by force of one's person or property from unlawful injury. The force used must be no more than is reasonably necessary to repel the threatened injury, and must be proportioned to the nature of the injury apprehended. Thus, an assault with the hand cannot be repelled by the use of a deadly weapon. 77 Ind. 274; 34 Ohio St. 98.

As a general rule, an assault threatening death or serious bodily injury, the infliction of which would amount to a felony, may be resisted to the taking of life (29 Ohio St. 186; 8 Mich. 150), but not an assault which is but a misdemeanor (2 N. Y. 193).

Unlawful injury to property may be resisted by force short of the taking of life (148 Mass. 529; 56 Vt. 703), but the taking of life in defense of property is only justifiable when it is necessary in order to prevent a felony attempted by violence or surprise, as burglary, robbery, or arson (4 Bl. Comm. 180; 25 Grat. [Va.] 887; 31 Conn. 479), but not secret felonies, such as larceny (71 Ala. 330).

SELF-REGARDING EVIDENCE. Evidence which either serves or disserves the party is so called. This species of evidence is either self-serving (which is not in general receivable), or self-disserving, which is invariably receivable, as being an admission against the party offering it, and that either in court or out of court. Brown.

SELION OF LAND. A ridge of ground rising between two furrows, containing no certain quantity, but sometimes more and sometimes less. Termes de la Ley.

SELLER. One who disposes of a thing in consideration of money; a vendor.

This term is more usually applied in the sale of chattels; that of "vendor" in the sale of estates. See "Sale."

SEMAYNE'S CASE. This case decided, in 2 Jac. I., that "every man's house [meaning his dwelling-house only] is his castle," and that the defendant may not break open outer doors in general, but only inner doors, but that (after request made) he may break open even outer doors to find goods of another wrongfully in the house. Brown.

SEMBLE (Fr. it seems). A term frequently used before the statement of a point of law which has not been directly settled, but about which the court have expressed an opinion, and intimated what a decision would be.

SEMEL CIVIS SEMPER CIVIS. Once a citizen always a citizen. Tray. Lat. Max. 555.

SEMEL MALUS SEMPER PRAESUMITur esse malus in eodem genere. Whoever is once bad is presumed to be so always in the same degree. Cro. Car. 317.

SEMESTRIA. In the civil law, the collected decisions of the emperors in their councils.

SEMESTRIS, or SEMESTRE (Lat. from sex, six, and mensis, month). Of, or for six months. Dig. 27. 1. 41; St. Westminster II. c. 5; 2 Inst. [redacted]

SEMI-MATRIMONIUM (Lat.) In Roman law. Half-marriage. Concubinage was so called. Tayl. Civ. Law, 273.

SEMI-NAUFRAGIUM (Lat.) A term used by Italian lawyers, which literally signifies "half-shipwreck," and by which they understand the jetsam, or casting merchandise into the sea to prevent shipwreck. Locre, Esp. du Code de Com. art. 409. The state of a vessel which has been so much injured by tempest or accident that to repair the damages, after being brought into port, and prepare her for sea, would cost more than her worth. 4 Bost. Law Rep. 120.

SEMI-PROOF. In civil law. Presumption of fact. This degree of proof is thus defined: "Non est ignorandum, probationem semiplenam eam esse, per quam rei gestae fides aliqua fit judici; non tamen tanta ut jure debeat in pronuncianda sententia eam sequi." Mascardus, de Prob. vol. 1, quaest. 11, note 1, 4.

SEMPER (Lat.) Always.

SEMPER IN DUBIIS BENIGNIORA PRAEferunda sunt. In dubious cases, the more liberal constructions are always to be preferred. Dig. 50. 17. 56.

SEMPER IN DUBIIS ID AGENDUM EST, ut quam tutissimo loco res sit bona fide contracta, nisi quum aperte contra leges scriptum est. Always, in doubtful cases, that is to be done by which a bona fide contract may be in the greatest safety, except when its provisions are clearly contrary to law. Dig. 34. 5. 21.

SEMPER IN OBSCURIS QUOD MINImum est sequimur (sequere). In obscure cases we always follow that which is least. Dig. 50. 17. 9; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 613, note; 3 C. B. 962.

SEMPER IN STIPULATIONIBUS ET IN caeteris contractibus id sequimur quod actum est. In stipulations and other contracts we always follow that which was done (i. e., agreed). Dig. 50. 17. 34.

SEMPER ITA FIAT RELATIO UT VAleat dispositio. Let the reference always be so made that the disposition may avail. 6 Coke, 76.

SEMPER NECESSITAS PROBANDI INcumbit ei qui agit. The claimant is always bound to prove; the burden of proof lies on him.

SEMPER PARATUS (Lat. always ready). In pleading. The name of a plea by which the defendant alleges that he has always been ready to perform what is demanded of him. 3 Bl. Comm. 303. The same as tout temps prist.

SEMPER PRAESUMITUR PRO LEGITImatione puerorum, et filiatio non potest probari. The presumption is always in favor of legitimacy, for filiation cannot be proved. Co. Litt. 126. See 1 Bouv. Inst. note 303; 5 Coke, 98b.

SEMPER PRAESUMITUR PRO MATRImonio. The presumption is always in favor of the validity of a marriage.

SEMPER PRAESUMITUR PRO NEGANte. The presumption is always in favor of the one who denies. See 10 Clark & F. 534; 3 El. & Bl. 723.

SEMPER PRAESUMITUR PRO SENTENtia. Presumption is always in favor of the sentence. 3 Bulst. 42.

SEMPER QUI NON PROHIBET PRO SE intervenire, mandare creditur. He who does not prohibit the intervention of another in his behalf is supposed to authorize it. 2 Kent, Comm. 616; Dig. 14. 6. 16; Id. 43. 3. 12. 4.

SEMPER SEXUS MASCULINUS ETIAM foemininum continet. The male sex always includes the female. Dig. 32. 62.

SEMPER SPECIALIA GENERALIBUS insunt. Special clauses are always comprised in general ones. Dig. 50. 17. 147.

SEN. This is said to be an ancient word which signified "justice." Co. Litt. 61a.

SENATE. The name of the less numerous of the two bodies constituting the legislative branch of the government of the United States, and of the several states.

SENATOR. A member of a senate.

SENATORES SUNT PARTES CORPORIS regis. Senators are part of the body of the king. Staundf. 72 (E); 4 Inst. 53, in marg.

SENATORS OF THE COLLEGE OF JUStice. The judges of the court of session in Scotland are so called. Act 1540, c. 93.

SENATUS CONSULTA. Ordinances (public acts) of the Roman senate.

SENATUS CONSULTUM MARCIANUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The Marcian decree of the senate. A decree enacted in the consulate of Quintus Marcius and Spurius Postumus, in relation to the celebration of the Bacchanalian mysteries. This decree has been preserved entire to the present day, and is given in full by Dr. Taylor, with a commentary abounding in curious learning. Tayl. Civ. Law, 546-584. It was obtained from a copper plate dug up about the year 1640, in the territories of J. Bapt. Cigala, in the kingdom of Naples, and now in the imperial library at Vienna. Id. 547.

SENATUS CONSULTUM ORFICIANUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The Orfician decree of the senate. A decree enacted in the consulate of Orficius and Rufus, in the reign of the Emperor Marcus Antonius, by which children, both sons and daughters, were admitted to the inheritance of their intestate mothers. Inst. 3. 4. pr.

SENATUS CONSILIUM PEGASIANUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The Pegasian decree of the senate. A decree enacted in the consulship of Pegasus and Pusio, in the reign of Vespasian, by which an heir, who was requested to restore an inheritance, was allowed to retain one-fourth of it for himself. Inst. 2. 23. 5. This was declared by Justinian to be superseded by the Senatus Consultum Trebellianum (q. v.) Id. 2. 23. 7; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 23, § 668.

SENATUS CONSULTUM TREBELLIANum (Lat.) In the civil law. The Trebellian decree of the senate. A decree enacted in the consulate of Trebellius Maximus and Annaeus Seneca, in the reign of Nero, by which it was provided that, if an inheritance was restored under a trust, all actions which, by the civil law, might be brought by or against the heir should be given to and against him to whom the inheritance was restored. Inst. 2. 23, 4; Dig. 36. 1. See the words of the decree, Id. § 2.

SENATUS CONSULTUM ULTIMAE NEcessitatis (Lat.) A decree of the senate of the last necessity. The name given to the decree which usually preceded the nomination of a dictator. 1 Bl. Comm. 136.

SENATUS CONSULTUM VELLEIANUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The Velleian decree of the senate. A decree enacted in the consulship of Velleius, by which married women were prohibited from making contracts. Dig. 16, 1; Story, Confl. Laws, § 425.

SENATUS DECRETA. In the civil law. Decisions of the senate; private acts concerning particular persons merely.

SENDA. In Spanish law. A path; the right of a path; the right of foot or horse path. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 6, § 1.

SENESCHALLO ET MARESHALLO quod non teneat placita de libero tenemento. A writ addressed to the steward and marshal of England, inhibiting them to take cognizance of an action in their court that concerns freehold. Reg. Orig. 185. Abolished.

SENESCHALLUS (Lat.) A steward. Co. Litt. 61a.

SENILE DEMENTIA. A gradual impairment of the mental faculties by reason of physical decay and resulting in second childhood.

SENILITY. Old age; a state of mental impairment resulting from old age. See 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 232.

SENIOR. The elder. This addition is sometimes made to a man's name, when two persons bear the same, in order to distinguish them. In practice, when nothing is mentioned, the senior is intended. 3 Miss. 59.

Used in reference to securities, conveyances, etc., it signifies first in point of time.

SENORIO. In Spani[redacted] Dominion or property.

SENSU HONESTO. To interpret words sensu honesto is to take them so as not to impute impropriety to the persons concerned.

SENSUS VERBORUM EST ANIMA LEgis. The meaning of words is the spirit of the law. 5 Coke, 2.

SENSUS VERBORUM EST DUPLEX, MItis et asper, et verba semper accipienda sunt in mitiore sensu. The meaning of words is twofold, mild and harsh; and words are to be received in their milder sense. 4 Coke, 13.

SENSUS VERBORUM EX CAUSA DICENdi accipiendus est, et sermones semper accipiendi sunt secundum subjectam materiam. The sense of words is to be taken from the occasion of speaking them, and discourses are always to be interpreted according to the subject matter. 4 Coke, 14.

SENTENCE. A judgment or judicial declaration made by a judge in a cause. The term "judgment" is more usually applied to civil, and "sentence" to criminal, proceedings. A sentence (in criminal proceedings) is the order of court made in the presence of the defendant, and entered of record, pronouncing the judgment, and ordering the same to be carried into execution in the manner prescribed by law. Clark. Crim. Law Tex. 580.

Sentences are final, when they put an end to the case; or interlocutory, when they settle only some incidental matter which has arisen in the course of its progress. See Aso & M. Inst. bk. 3, tit. 8, c. 1.

SENTENTIA (Lat.) In civil law. Sense; import; as distinguished from mere words. Calv. Lex.

The deliberate expression of one's will. Tayl. Civ. Law, 532.

The sentence of a judge or court. Inst. 4. 11. 4.

SENTENTIA A NON JUDICE LATA NEmini debet nocere. A sentence pronounced by one who is not a judge should not harm any one. Fleta, lib. 6, c. 6, § 7.

SENTENTIA CONTRA MATRIMONIUM nunquam transit in rem judicatam. A sentence against marriage never passes into a judgment (conclusive upon the parties). 7 Coke, 43.

SENTENTIA FACIT JUS, ET LEGIS INterpretatio legis vim obtinet. The sentence makes the law, and the interpretation has the force of law.

SENTENTIA FACIT JUS, ET RES JUDIcata pro veritate accipitur. Judgment creates the right, and what is adjudicated is taken for truth. Ellesmere, Postn. 55.

SENTENTIA INTERLOCUTORIA REVOcari potest, difinitiva non potest. An interlocutory sentence or order may be revoked, but not a final [redacted] Max. reg. 20.

SENTENTIA NON FERTUR DE REBUS non liquidis. Sentence is not given upon a thing which is not clear.

SEPARALITER (Lat. separately). A word sometimes used in indictments to show that the defendants are charged separately with offenses which, without the addition of this word, would seem, from the form of the indictment, to be charged jointly; as, for example, when two persons are indicted together for perjury, and the indictment states that A. and B. came before a commissioner, etc., this is alleging that they were both guilty of the same crime, when by law their crimes are distinct, and the indictment is vicious; but if the word separaliter is used, then the affirmation is that each was guilty of a separate offense. 2 Hale, P. C. 174.

SEPARATE ACKNOWLEDGMENT. A married woman's acknowledgment of a deed, taken apart and privately from her husband.

SEPARATE DEMISE IN EJECTMENT. A demise in a declaration in ejectment used to be termed a "separate demise" when made by the lessor separately or individually, as distinguished from a demise made jointly by two or more persons, which was termed a "joint demise." No such demise, either separate or joint, is now necessary in this action. Brown.

SEPARATE ESTATE. That which belongs to one only of several persons; as, the separate estate of a partner, which does not belong to the partnership. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1519.

The separate estate of a married woman is that which belongs to her, and over which her husband has no right in equity. It may consist of lands or chattels. 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 407; 1 Const. (S. C.) 452; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3996.

SEPARATE EXAMINATION. See "Separate Acknowledgment."

SEPARATE MAINTENANCE. The maintenance of a woman by her husband on an agreement to live separately. An allowance made by a husband to his wife for her separate support and maintenance. Bouvier. See 2 Rop. Husb. & Wife, 267 et seq.; 2 Steph. Comm. 309.

SEPARATIM. In old conveyancing. Severally. A word which made a several covenant. 5 Coke, 23a.

SEPARATION. A cessation of cohabitation of husband and wife by mutual agreement.

SEPARATION A MENSA ET THORO. A partial dissolution of the marriage relation.

By the ecclesiastical or canon law of England, which had exclusive jurisdiction over marriage and divorce, marriage was regarded as a sacrament, and indissoluble. This doctrine originated with the Church of Rome, and became established in England while that country was Catholic; and though, after the Reformation, it ceased to be the doctrine of the Church of England, yet the law remained unchanged until the recent statute of 20 & 21 Vict. (1857) c. 85. Bish. Mar. & Div. §§ 274, 278. Hence, as has been seen in the article on divorce, a valid marriage could not be dissolved in England except by what has been termed the "omnipotent power of parliament."

This gave rise, in the ecclesiastical courts, to the practice of granting divorces "from bed and board," as they used to be called, or "judicial separation," as they are called in 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, § 7. Bish. Mar. & Div. §§ 277, 278. From England this practice was introduced into this country; and though in some of the states it has entirely given way to the divorce a vinculo matrimonii, in others it is still in use, being generally granted for causes which are not sufficient to authorize the latter. See "Divorce."

SEPARATION ORDER. In England, where a husband is convicted of an aggravated assault upon his wife, the court or magistrate may order that the wife shall be no longer bound to cohabit with him. Such an order has the same effect as a judicial decree of separation on the ground of cruelty. It may also provide for the payment of a weekly sum by the husband to the wife and for the custody of the children. Sweet.

SEPARATISTS. Seceders from the Church of England. They, like Quakers, solemnly affirm, instead of taking the usual oath, before they give evidence. See 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 82.

SEPTUM. An inclosure; any place paled in. Cowell.

SEPULCHRE. The place where a corpse is buried. The violation of sepulchres is a misdemeanor at common law.

SEPULTURA. An offering to the priest for the burial of a dead body.

SEQUAMUR VESTIGIA PATRUM NOStrorum. Let us follow the footsteps of our fathers. Jenk. Cent. Cas.

SEQUATUR SUB SUO PERICULO. A writ that lay where a summons ad warrantizandum was awarded, and the sheriff returned that he had nothing whereby he might be summoned, then issued an alias and a pluries, and if he came not in on the pluries, this writ issued. Old Nat. Brev. 163.

SEQUELA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Suit; process or prosecution. Sequela causae, the process of a cause. Cowell.

SEQUELA CURIAE. Suit of court. Cowell. See "Suit."

SEQUELA VILLANORUM. The family retinue and appurtenances to the goods and chattels of villeins, which were at the absolute disposal of the lord. Par. Ant. 216.

SEQUELS. Small allowances of meal or manufactured victuals made to the servants at a mill where corn was ground, by tenure, in Scotland. See "Thirlage."

SEQUESTER.

——In Civil and Ecclesiastical Law. To renounce. Example: When a widow comes into court and disclaims having anything to do or to intermeddle with her deceased husband's estate, she is said to "sequester." Jacob.

——In Chancery Practice. To take possession under a writ of sequestration (q. v.)

SEQUESTRARI FACIAS. A writ issued for the purpose of enforcing a judgment against a beneficed clergyman when a fi. fa. has been issued and returned nulla bona. It commands the bishop of the diocese to enter into the benefice, and sequester the rents, tithes, and profits until the debt is satisfied. The bishop executes the writ by issuing a sequestration. Chit. Gen. Prac. 1284; Daniell, Ch. Prac. 927; Smith, Actions (11th Ed.) 397. See "Levari Facias;" "Writ."

SEQUESTRATIO. In the civil law. The separating or setting aside of a thing in controversy, from the possession of both parties that contend for it. It is two-fold,—"voluntary," done by consent of all parties; and "necessary," when a judge orders it. Brown.

SEQUESTRATION.

——In Chancery Practice. A remedy by writ for the taking of property, and the rents and profits thereof, either to enforce a decree, or to preserve the subject matter of the suit. See 3 Bl. Comm. 444. The writ issued sometimes to the sheriff, but usually to four or more commissioners.

The remedy is now practically superseded by receivership proceedings and kindred remedies. See 6 Fed. 766; 11 Paige (N. Y.) 603.

——In Contracts. A species of deposits which two or more persons, engaged in litigation about anything, make of the thing in contest with an indifferent person, who binds himself to restore it, when the issue is decided, to the party to whom it is adjudged to belong. Code La. art. 2942; Story, Bailm. § 45. See 19 Viner, Abr. 325; 1 Vern. 58, 420; 2 Ves. Jr. 23.

——In Louisiana. A mandate of the court, ordering the sheriff, in certain cases, to take into his possession, and to keep, a thing of which another person has the possession, until after the decision of a suit, in order that it be delivered to him who shall be adjudged entitled to have the property or possession of that thing. This is what is properly called a "judicial sequestration." See 1 Mart. (La.) 79; 1 La. 439; Civ. Code La. arts. 2941, 2948.

In this acceptation, the word "sequestration" does not mean a "judicial deposit," because sequestration may exist together with the right of administration, while mere deposit does not admit it.

SEQUESTRATOR. One to whom a sequestration is made.

A depositary of this kind cannot exonerate himself from the care of the thing sequestered in his hands, unless for some cause rendering it indispensable that he should resign his trust. Civ. Code La. art. 2947. See "Stakeholder."

Officers appointed by a court of chancery, and named in a writ of sequestration. As to their powers and duties, see 2 Madd. Ch. Prac. 205; Blake, Ch. Prac. 103.

SEQUESTRO HABENDO. In English ecclesiastical law. A judicial writ for the discharging a sequestration of the profits of a church benefice, granted by the bishop at the sovereign's command, thereby to compel the parson to appear at the suit of another. Upon his appearance, the parson may have this writ for the release of the sequestration. Reg. Jud. 36.

SEQUI DEBET POTENTIA JUSTITIAM, non praecedere. Power should follow justice, not precede it. 2 Inst. 454.

SERF. In feudal law. A term applied to a class of persons who were bound to perform very onerous duties towards others. Poth. des Personnes, pt. 1, tit. 1, a. 6, § 4.

There is this essential difference between a "serf" and a "slave:" The serf was bound simply to labor on the soil where he was born, without any right to go elsewhere without the consent of his lord, but he was free to act as he pleased in his daily action; the slave, on the contrary, is the property of his master, who may require him to act as he pleases in every respect, and who may sell him as a chattel. Lepage, c. 3, art. 2, § 2.

SERGEANT-AT-ARMS. An officer appointed by a legislative body, whose duties are to enforce the orders given by such bodies, generally under the warrant of its presiding officer.

SERIATIM (Lat.) In a series; severally; as, the judges delivered their opinions seriatim.

SERJEANT OF THE MACE. In English law. An officer who attends the lord mayor of London, and the chief magistrates of other corporate towns. Holthouse.

SERJEANTS-AT-LAW. A very ancient and the most honorable order of advocates at the common law.

They were called, formerly, "countors," or

"serjeant-countors," or "countors of the bench" (in the old law Latin phrase, banci narratores), and are mentioned by Matthew Paris in the life of John II., written in 1255. They are limited to fifteen in number, in addition to the judges of the courts of Westminster, who are always admitted before being advanced to the bench.

The most valuable privilege formerly enjoyed by the serjeants was the monopoly of the practice in the court of common pleas. A bill was introduced into parliament for the purpose of destroying this monopoly, in 1755, which did not pass. In 1834, a warrant under the sign manual was directed to the judges of the common pleas, commanding them to open the court to the bar at large. The order was received and complied with. In 1839, the matter was brought before the court and decided to be illegal. 10 Bing. 571; 6 Bing. N. C. 187, 232, 235. St. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 54, has since extended the privilege to all barristers. 3 Bl. Comm. 27, note.

SERJEANTS' INN. The inn to which the serjeants at law belonged, near Chancery Lane; formerly called "Faryndon Inn."

SERJEANTIA IDEM EST QUOD SERVITium. Serjeanty is the same as service. Co. Litt. 105.

SERJEANTY. In English law. A species of service which cannot be due or performed from a tenant to any lord but the king, and is either grand or petit serjeanty.

SERMO INDEX ANIMI. Speech is an index of the mind. 5 Coke, 118.

SERMO RELATA AD PERSONAM, INtelligi debet de conditione personae. A speech relating to the person is to be understood as relating to his condition. 4 Coke, 16.

SERMONES SEMPER ACCIPIENDI SUNT secundum subjectam materiam, et conditionem personarum. Language is always to be understood according to its subject matter, and the condition of the persons. 4 Coke, 14.

SERVAGE. In feudal law. Where a tenant, besides payment of a certain rent, found one or more workmen for his lord's service. Tomlins.

SERVANDA EST CONSUETUDO LOCI ubi causa agitur. The custom of the place where the action is brought is to be observed. 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 190, 219.

SERVI. Bondsmen, or servile tenants. They were of four sorts: (1) Such as sold themselves for a livelihood; (2) debtors sold because they were unable to pay their debts; (3) captives in war, retained and employed as perfect slaves; (4) nativi, servants born as such, solely belonging to the lord. There were also said to be servi testamentales, those which were afterwards called "covenant servants." Cowell.

SERVI REDEMPTIONE. Criminal slaves in the time of Henry I. 1 Kemble, Sax. 197 (1849).

SERVICE.

——In Feudal Law. That duty which the tenant owed to his lord by reason of his fee or estate.

The services, in respect of their quality, were either free or base, and in respect of their quantity, and the time of exacting them, were either certain or uncertain. 2 Bl. Comm. 62.

——In Civil Law. A servitude.

——In Practice. The execution of a writ or process. Thus, to serve a writ of capias signifies to arrest a defendant under the process (Kirby [Conn.] 48; 2 Aik. [Vt.] 338; 11 Mass. 181); to serve a summons is to deliver a copy of it at the house of the party, or to deliver it to him personally, or to read it to him. Notices and other papers are served by delivering the same at the house of the party, or to him in person.

Service of process is either (1) actual, or (2) constructive; constructive service being such as is by law conclusively presumed to give notice, e. g., by publication or posting.

Actual service is either (a) personal, by actual delivery of the process to the person to be served, or (b) substituted, being by such a disposition as the law deems to be the equivalent of personal service, e. g., by leaving at his dwelling house.

When the service of a writ is prevented by the act of the party on whom it is to be served, it will, in general, be sufficient if the officer do everything in his power to serve it. 1 Man. & G. 238.

SERVICE OF AN HEIR. By the former law of Scotland, before an heir could regularly acquire a right to the ancestor's estate, he had to be served heir. See Bell, Dict.

SERVICE, SECULAR. Worldly service, as contrasted with spiritual or ecclesiastical. Cowell.

SERVICES FONCIERS. These are in French law the easements of English law.

SERVIDUMBRE. In Spanish law. A servitude. The right and use which one man has in the buildings and estates of another, to use them for the benefit of his own. Las Partidas, 3. 31. 1.

SERVIENS-AD-CLAVAM. A serjeant-at-mace.

SERVIENS AD LEGEM. Sergeant-at-law.

SERVIENS DOMINI REGIS (Law Lat.) In old English law. King's serjeant; a public officer, who acted sometimes as the sheriff's deputy, and had also judicial powers. Bracton, fols. 145b, 150b, 330, 358.

SERVIENT. In civil law. A term applied to an estate or tenement by or in respect of which a servitude is due to another estate or tenement. See "Easement."

SERVILE EST EXPILATIONIS CRIMEN; sola innocentia libera. The crime of theft is slavish; innocence alone is free. 2. Inst. 573.

SERVITIA PERSONALIA SEQUUNTUR personam. Personal services follow the person. 2 Inst. 374; Fleta, lib. 3, c. 11, § 1.

SERVITIIS ACQUIETANDIS. A judicial writ for a man distrained for services to one, when he owes and performs them to another, for the acquittal of such services. Reg. Jud. 27.

SERVITIUM. In feudal and old English law. The duty of obedience and performance which a tenant was bound to render to his lord by reason of his fee. Spelman. See Co. Litt. 65a.

SERVITIUM FEODALE ET PRAEDIALE. A personal service, but due only by reason of lands which were held in fee. Bracton, lib. 2, c. 16.

SERVITIUM FORINSECUM. A service due, not to the chief lord, but to the king.

SERVITIUM, IN LEGE ANGLIAE, REGULariter accipitur pro servitio quod per tenentes dominis suis debetur ratione feodi sui. Service, by the law of England, means the service which is due from the tenants to the lords by reason of their fee. Co. Litt. 65.

SERVITIUM INTRINSECUM. The ordinary service due the chief lord from his tenants.

SERVITIUM LIBERUM. A service to be done by feudatory tenants, who were called "liberi homines," and distinguished from vassals, as was their service, for they were not bound to any of the base services of plowing the lord's land, etc., but were to find a man and horse, or go with the lord into the army, or to attend the court, etc.

It was called, also, "servitium liberum armorum."

SERVITIUM MILITARE. Knight service; military service. 2 Bl. Comm. 62.

SERVITIUM REGALE. Royal service, or the rights and prerogatives that, within a royal manor, belong to the lord of the same, which were generally reckoned to be the following, viz.: Power of judicature, in matters of property, and of life and death, in felonies and murder; a right to waifs and strays; assessments; minting of money; and assize of bread, beer, and weights and measures. Cowell.

SERVITIUM SCUTI. Service of the shield; that is, knight service.

SERVITIUM SOKAE. Service of the plow; that is, socage.

SERVITORS OF BILLS. Such servants or messengers of the marshal belonging to the king's bench as were heretofore sent abroad with bills or writs to summon men to that court, being now called "tipstaves." Blount; 2 Hen. IV. c. 23.

SERVITUDE.

——In Civil Law. The subjection of one person to another person, or of a person to a thing, or of a thing to a person, or of a thing to a thing.

A right which subjects a land or tenement to some service for the use of another land or tenement which belongs to another master. Domat, Civ. Law (Cushing Ed.) § 1018.

(1) A mixed servitude is the subjection of persons to things, or things to persons.

(2) A natural servitude is one which arises in consequence of the natural condition or situation of the soil.

(3) A personal servitude is the subjection of one person to another. If it consists in the right of property which a person exercises over another, it is slavery. When the subjection of one person to another is not slavery, it consists simply in the right of requiring of another what he is bound to do or not to do. This right arises from all kinds of contracts or quasi contracts. Lois des Bat. p. 1, c. 1, art. 1.

(4) A real or predial servitude is a charge laid on an estate for the use and utility of another estate belonging to another proprietor. Code La. art. 643. When used without any adjunct, the word "servitude" means a real or predial servitude. Lois des Bat. p. 1, c. 1. Real servitudes are divided into rural and urban.

(a) Rural servitudes are those which are due by an estate to another estate, such as the right of passage over the serving estate, or that which owes the servitude, or to draw water from it, or to water cattle there, or to take coal, lime, and wood from it, and the like.

(b) Urban servitudes are those which are established over a building for the convenience of another, such as the right of resting the joists in the wall of the serving building, of opening windows which overlook the serving estate, and the like. Dalloz.

This term is used as a translation of the Latin term servitus in the French and Scotch law (Dalloz; Paterson, Comp.), and by many common-law writers (3 Kent, Comm. 434; Washb. Easem.), and in the Civil Code of Louisiana. "Service" is used by Wood, Taylor, Harris, Cowper, and Cushing in his translation of Domat. Much of the common-law doctrine of easements is closely analogous to, and probably in part derived from, the civil-law doctrine of servitudes.

——In Modern Law. Real servitudes are known as "easements;" the term "servitude" being used only in the sense of the burden imposed by an easement.

SERVITUS (Lat.) In Roman law. Servitude; slavery; a state of bondage; a disposition of the law of nations by which, against common right, one man has been subjected to the dominion of another. Inst. 1. 2. 3; Bracton, 4b; Co. Litt. 116.

A service or servitude; a burden imposed by law, or the agreement of parties, upon one estate for the advantage of another, or for the benefit of another person than the owner.

Servitus actus, a right of way on horseback or in a carriage. Inst. 2. 3. pr.

Servitus altius non tollendi, a servitude preventing the owner of a house from building higher than his neighbor. Inst. 2. 3. 4; Paterson, Comp.

Servitus aquae ducendae, a right of leading water to one's own land over that of another. Inst. 2. 3. pr.

Servitus aquae educendae, a right of conducting water from one's own land unto a neighbor's. Dig. 8. 3. 29.

Servitus aquae hauriendae, a right of drawing water from another's spring or well. Inst. 2. 3. 2.

Servitus cloacae mittendae, a right of having a sewer through a neighbor's estate. Dig. 8. 1. 7.

Servitus fumi immittendi, a right of conducting smoke or vapor through a neighbor's chimney or over his ground. Dig. 8. 5. 8.

Servitus itineris, a right of way on horseback or in a carriage. This includes a servitus actus. Inst. 2. 3.

Servitus luminum, a right to have an open place for receiving light into a chamber or other room. Domat, 1. 1. 4; Dig. 8. 2. 4.

Servitus oneris ferendi, a servitude of supporting a neighbor's building.

Servitus pascendi, a right of pasturing one's cattle on another's land. Inst. 2. 3. 2.

Servitus pecoris ad aquam adpulsam, a right of driving one's cattle on a neighbor's land to water.

Servitus praedii rustici, a rural servitude.

Servitus praedii urbani, an urban servitude.

Servitus praediorum, a servitude on one estate for the benefit of another. See "Praedia."

Servitus projiciendi, a right of building a projection into the open space belonging to a neighbor. Dig. 8. 2. 2.

Servitus prospectus, a right of prospect. Dig. 8. 2. 15. This may be either to give one a free prospect over his neighbor's land, or to prevent a neighbor from having a prospect over one's own land. Domat, 1. 1. 6.

Servitus stillicidii, a right of having the water drip from the eaves of one's house upon a neighbor's house or ground.

Servitus tigni immittendi, a right of inserting beams in a neighbor's wall. Inst. 2. 3. 1. 4; Dig. 8. 2. 2.

Servitus viae, a right of way on foot or horseback, or with a loaded beast or wagon, over a neighbor's estate. Inst. 2. 3.

See, generally, Inst. 2. 3; Dig. 8. 2; Dict. de Jur.; Domat, Civ. Law; Bell, Dict.; Washb. Easem.

SERVITUS EST CONSTITUTIO JURE gentium qua quis domino alieno contra naturam subjicitur. Slavery is an institution by the law of nations, by which a man is subjected to the dominion of another, contrary to nature. Inst. 1. 3. 2; Co. Litt. 116.

SERVITUS NE LUMINIBUS OFFICIAtur. A servitude not to hinder lights; the right of having one's lights or windows unobstructed or darkened by a neighbor's building, etc. Inst. 2. 3. 4.

SERVITUS NE PROSPECTUS OFFENDatur. A servitude not to obstruct one's prospect. Dig. 8. 2. 15.

SERVITUS TIGNI IMMITTENDI. The servitude of letting in a beam; the right of inserting beams in a neighbor's wall. Inst. 2. 3. 1. 4; Dig. 8. 2. 2.

SERVITUS VIAE. The servitude or right of way; the right of walking, riding, and driving over another's land. Inst. 2. 3. pr.

SERVUS. A slave.

SESS, or ASSESS. Rate or tax.

SESSIO. A sitting; a session. Sessio parliamenti, the sitting of parliament. Cowell.

SESSION. The time during which a legislative body, a court, or other assembly sits for the transaction of business; as, a session of congress, which commences on the day appointed by the constitution, and ends when congress finally adjourns before the commencement of the next session; the session of a court, which commences at the day appointed by law, and ends when the court finally rises. A term.

SESSION COURT. See "Court of Session."

SESSION, GREAT, OF WALES. A court which was abolished by St. 1 Wm. IV. c. 70. The proceedings now issue out of the courts at Westminster, and two of the judges of the superior courts hold the circuits in Wales and Cheshire, as in other English counties.

SESSIONS. A sitting of justices in court upon their commission, or by virtue of their appointment, and most commonly for the trial of criminal cases. The title of several courts in England and the United States, chiefly those of criminal jurisdiction.

SESSIONS OF THE PEACE. In English law. Sittings of justices of the peace for the execution of the powers which are confided to them as such.

(1) Petty sessions (or petit sessions) are sittings held by one or more justices for the trial of minor offenses, admitting to bail prisoners accused of felony, and the like purposes.

When sitting for purposes of preliminary inquiry, the public cannot claim admittance; but it is otherwise when sitting for purposes of adjudication.

(2) Special sessions are sittings of two or more justices on a particular occasion for the exercise of some given branch of their authority, upon reasonable notice given to the other magistrates of the hundred or other division of the county, city, etc., for which they are convened. See St. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 33.

The counties are distributed into divisions, and authority given by various statutes to the justices acting for the several divisions to transact different descriptions of business, such as licensing alehouses, or appointing overseers of the poor, surveyors of the highways, etc., at special sessions. 3 Steph. Comm. 43, 44.

(3) General sessions of the peace are courts of record, holden before the justices, whereof one is of the quorum, for execution of the general authority given to the justices by the commission of the peace and certain acts of parliament.

The only description of general sessions now usually held is the court of general quarter sessions of the peace; but in the county of Middlesex, besides the four quarter sessions, four general sessions are held in the intervals, and original intermediate sessions occasionally take place. They may be called by any two justices in the jurisdiction, one being of the quorum, or by the custos rotulorum and one justice, but not by one justice or the custos rotulorum alone.

(4) General quarter sessions of the peace. See "Court of General Quarter Sessions of the Peace."

SESSIONAL ORDERS. Certain resolutions which are agreed to by both houses at the commencement of every session of the English parliament, and have relation to the business and convenience thereof; but they are not intended to continue in force beyond the session in which they are adopted. They are principally of use as directing the order of business. Brown.

SET. This word appears to be nearly synonymous with "lease." A lease of mines is frequently termed a "mining set." Brown.

SET ASIDE. To annul; to make void; as, to set aside an award.

When proceedings are irregular, they may be set aside on motion of the party whom they injuriously affect.

SET OF EXCHANGE. The different parts of a bill of exchange, taken together. Each part is a perfect instrument by itself; but the parts are numbered successively, and upon payment of any one, the others become useless. See Chit. Bills (1836 Ed.) 175; Pars. Notes & Bills.

SET-OFF. In practice. A demand, growing out of a distinct transaction, which a defendant makes against the plaintiff in the suit for the purpose of liquidating the whole or a part of his claim. See 7 Fla. 329.

A set-off was unknown to the common law, according to which mutual debts were distinct, and inextinguishable except by actual payment or release. 1 Rawle (Pa.) 293; Babington, Set-Off, 1.

St. 2 Geo. II. c. 22, which has been generally adopted in the United States, with some modifications, in cases of mutual debts, however, allowed the defendant to set his debt against the other, either by pleading it in bar, or giving it in evidence, when proper notice had been given of such intention, under the general issue. The statute, being made for the benefit of the defendant, is not compulsory (8 Watts [Pa.] 39); the defendant may waive his right, and bring a cross action against the plaintiff (2 Campb. 594; 5 Taunt. 148; 9 Watts [Pa.] 179).

It seems, however, that in some cases of intestate estates and of insolvent estates, perhaps owing to the peculiar wording of the law, the statute has been held to operate on the rights of the parties before action brought or an act done by either of them. 2 Rawle (Pa.) 293; 3 Bin. (Pa.) 135; Bac. Abr. "Bankrupt" (K). See 7 Gray (Mass.) 191, 425.

Set-off takes place only in actions on contracts for the payment of money; as, assumpsit, debt, and covenant. A set-off is not allowed in actions arising ex delicto; as, upon the case, trespass, replevin, or detinue. Buller, N. P. 181; 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 162.

The matters which may be set off may be mutual liquidated debts or damages; but unliquidated damages cannot be set off. 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 560; 34 Pa. St. 239; 34 Ala. (N. S.) 659; 20 Tex. 31; 2 Head (Tenn.) 467; 2 Metc. (Ky.) 143; 3 Iowa, 163; 8 Iowa, 325; 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 394; 8 Conn. 325; 6 Halst. (N. J.) 397; 5 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 232. The statutes refer only to mutual unconnected debts; for at common law, when the nature of the employment, transaction, or dealings necessarily constitutes an account consisting of receipts and payments, debts and credits, the balance only is considered to be the debt, and therefore in an action it is not necessary in such cases either to plead or give notice of set-off. 4 Burrows, 2221.

Distinguished from counterclaim and recoupment. Counterclaim is a term of statutory origin, and includes both set-off and recoupment, and something more. It embraces all sorts of claims which a defendant may have against a plaintiff in the nature of a cross action or demand, or for which a cross or separate action would lie. 13 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 84.

In recoupment, the defendant's claim must arise from the same transaction as the plaintiff's, and in this it is distinguished from set-off, which must arise in a distinct claim. See "Recoupment."

SETTER. In Scotch law. The grantor of a tack or lease. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 2, p. 153.

SETTLEMENT. A residence under such circumstances as to entitle a person to support or assistance in case of becoming a pauper.

It is obtained in various ways, to wit: By birth; by the legal settlement of the father, in the case of minor children; by marriage; by continued residence; by the payment of requisite taxes; by the lawful exercise of a public office; by hiring and service for a specified time; by serving an apprenticeship; and perhaps some others, which depend upon the local statutes of the different states. See 1 Bl. Comm. 363; 1 Doug. 9; 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 103, 565; 10 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 179.

——In Contracts. An agreement by which two or more persons who have dealings together so far arrange their accounts as to ascertain the balance due from one to the other; payment in full.

The conveyance of an estate for the benefit of some person or persons.

See "Marriage Settlement."

SETTLEMENT, ACT OF. See "Act of Settlement."

SETTLEMENT, DEED OF. A deed made for the purpose of settling property, i. e., arranging the mode and extent of the enjoyment thereof. The party who settles property is called the "settlor;" and usually his wife and children or his creditors or his near relations are the beneficiaries taking interests under the settlement.

SETTLEMENT, EQUITY OF. See "Equity to a Settlement."

SETTLING DAY. The day on which transactions for the "account" are made up on the English stock exchange. In consols, they are monthly; in other investments, twice in the month.

SEVER. In practice. To separate; to insist upon a plea distinct from that of other codefendants.

SEVERAL. Separate; distinct. A several agreement or covenant is one entered into by two or more persons separately, each binding himself for the whole; a several action is one in which two or more persons are separately charged; a several inheritance is one conveyed so as to descend or come to two persons separately by moieties. "Several" is usually opposed to "joint."

SEVERAL ACTIONS. Separate actions, the opposite of "joint actions," in which the plaintiffs combine their causes. See "Joinder of Actions."

SEVERAL COUNTS. See "Count;" "Indictment."

SEVERAL COVENANT. A covenant by two or more, separately; a covenant made so as to bind the parties to it severally or individually.

SEVERAL DEMISES. Prior to the common-law procedure acts of 1852-1860, it was necessary, in England, that the plaintiff in ejectment should make a demise, and that he should have the legal estate in him for that purpose. Wherefore, in case of any doubt whether the legal estate was in A., or in B., or in C., it was usual, in framing the declaration, to insert a demise by each, and the declaration was then said to contain several demises; but now no demise at all is necessary to an action of ejectment. See "Ejectment."

SEVERAL FISHERY. A right to fish in private water, either exclusively, or in conjunction with the owner of the soil. 1 Kent, Comm. 410, and note.

SEVERAL INHERITANCE. An inheritance conveyed so as to descend to two persons severally, by moieties, etc.

SEVERAL TAIL. An entail severally to two; as, if land is given to two men and their wives, and to the heirs of their bodies begotten. Here the donees have a joint estate for their two lives, and yet they have a several inheritance, because the issue of the one shall have his moiety, and the issue of the other the other moiety. Cowell.

SEVERAL TENANCY. A tenancy which is separate, and not held jointly with another person.

SEVERALTY, ESTATE IN. An estate which is held by the tenant in his own right only, without any other being joined or connected with him in point of interest during the continuance of his estate. 2 Bl. Comm. 179; Cruise, Dig. 479, 480.

SEVERANCE. The separation of a part of a thing from another; for example, the separation of machinery from a mill is a severance, and in that case the machinery, which, while annexed to the mill, was real estate, becomes by the severance personalty, unless such severance be merely temporary. 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 587.

——In Pleading. When an action is brought in the name of several plaintiffs, in which the plaintiffs must of necessity join, and one or more of the persons so named do not appear, or make default after appearance, the other may have judgment of severance, or, as it is technically called, judgment ad sequendum solum.

But in personal actions, with the exception of those by executors, and of detinue for charters, there can be no summons and severance. Co. Litt. 139.

After severance, the party severed can never be mentioned in the suit, nor derive any advantage from it.

When there are several defendants, each of them may use such plea as he may think proper for his own defense; and they may join in the same plea, or sever, at their discretion (Co. Litt. 303a), except, perhaps, in the case of dilatory pleas (Hob. 245, 250). But when the defendants have once united in the plea, they cannot afterwards sever at the rejoinder, or other later stage of the pleading. See, generally, Brooke, Abr. "Summ. and Sev."; 2 Rolle, 488; Archb. Civ. Pl. 59.

——Of Estates. The destruction of any one of the unities of a joint tenancy. It is so called because the estate is no longer a joint tenancy, but is severed.

A severance may be effected in various ways, namely: By partition, which is either voluntary or compulsory; by alienation of one of the joint tenants, which turns the estate into a tenancy in common; by the purchase or descent of all the shares of the joint tenants, so that the whole estate becomes vested in one only. Comyn, Dig. "Estates by Grant" (K 5); 1 Bin. (Pa.) 175.

SEWER (Law Lat. sewera, severa). A fresh-water trench compassed in on both sides with a bank. Callis, Sewers (80) 99. Callis calls it "a small current or little river;" "a diminutive of a river;" "a common public stream." Id. 100. A passage to carry water into the sea or a river. Cowell. A ditch or trench carried through marshy places, to carry off the water. Spelman.

In its modern and more usual sense, a sewer means an underground or covered channel used for the drainage of two or more separate buildings, as opposed to a "drain," which is a channel used for carrying off the drainage of one building or set of buildings in one curtilage. See "Drain" (2).

SEXTANS (Lat.) In the Roman law. A subdivision of the as, containing two unciae; the proportion of two-twelfths, or one-sixth. Tayl. Civ. Law, 492; 2 Bl. Comm. 462, note.

SEXTERY LANDS. Lands given to a church or religious house for maintenance of a sexton or sacristan. Cowell.

SEXTUS DECRETALIUM. The sixth decretal.

SHACK, COMMON OF. The right of persons occupying lands lying together in the same common field to turn out their cattle after harvest to feed promiscuously in such field.

SHAM PLEA. One which is palpably false in fact, though it be good in form.

SHARE. A portion of anything. Sometimes shares are equal; at other times they are unequal.

In companies and corporations, the whole of the capital stock is usually divided into equal portions, called "shares." See "Capital Stock." The proportion which descends to one of several children from his ancestor is called a "share." The term "share and share alike" signifies in equal proportions.

SHARE AND SHARE ALIKE. In equal shares or proportions.

SHARE WARRANT. A share warrant to bearer is a warrant or certificate under the seal of the company, stating that the bearer of the warrant is entitled to a certain number or amount of fully paid up shares or stock.

SHARPING CORN. A customary gift of corn, which, at every Christmas, the farmers in some parts of England give to their smith for sharpening their plow irons, harrow tines, etc. Blount.

SHAVE. Sometimes used to denote the act of obtaining the property of another by oppression a d extortion; but it also denotes the buying of existing notes and other securities for money, at a discount. 2 Denio (N. Y.) 293, 300.

SHEADING. A riding, tithing, or division in the Isle of Man, where the whole island is divided into six sheadings, in each of which there is a coroner or chief constable appointed by a delivery of a rod at the Tinewald Court or annual convention. King, Isle of Man, 7.

SHEEP SILVER. A service turned into money, which was paid because anciently the tenants used to wash the lord's sheep.

SHELLEY'S CASE, RULE IN. "When the ancestor, by any gift or conveyance, taketh an estate of freehold, and in the same gift or conveyance an estate is limited, either mediately or immediately, to his heirs in fee or in tail, 'the heirs' are words of limitation of the estate, and not words of purchase." 1 Coke, 104.

This rule has been the subject of much comment. It is given by Mr. Preston (1 Prest. Est. pp. 263-419) as follows: "When a person takes an estate of freehold, legally or equitably, under a deed, will, or other writing, and in the same instrument there is a limitation by way of remainder, either with or without the interposition of another estate, of the same legal or equitable quality, to his heirs, or heirs of his body, as a class of persons to take in succession from generation to generation, the limitation to the heirs entitles the ancestor to the whole estate." See 15 B. Mon. (Ky.) 282; Harg. Tr. 489, 551; 2 Kent, Comm. 214.

If the limitation be to "heirs of the body," he takes an estate tail; if to "heirs" generally, a fee simple. 1 Day (Conn.) 299; 2 Yeates (Pa.) 410.

It does not apply where the ancestor's estate is equitable, and that of the heirs legal. 1 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 419.

SHEPWAY, COURT OF. A court held before the lord warden of the Cinque Ports. A writ of error lay from the mayor and jurats of each port to the lord warden in this court, and thence to the queen's bench. The civil jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports was abolished by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 48.

SHEREFFE. The body of the lordship of Caerdiff in South Wales. Pow. Hist. Wal. 123.

SHERIFF (Sax. scyre, shire, rere, keeper). A county officer representing the executive or administrative power of the state within his county.

The office is said by Camden to have been created by Alfred when he divided England into counties; but Lord Coke is of opinion that it is of still greater antiquity, and that it existed in the time of the Romans, being the deputy of the earl (comes), to whom the custody of the shire was originally committed, and hence known as vice comes. Camden, 156; Co. Litt. 168a; Dalton, Sheriff, 5.

The office was anciently of great dignity, and conferred considerable judicial power. 1 Bl. Comm. 117; 3 Bl. Comm. 80.

In the United States, he is the chief peace officer of the county, is the custodian of the county jail, and executes the civil and criminal process and mandates of the courts within his county.

SHERIFF CLERK. The clerk of the sheriff's court in Scotland.

SHERIFF DEPUTE. In Scotch law. The principal sheriff of a county, who is also a judge.

SHERIFF GELD. A rent formerly paid by a sheriff, and it is prayed that the sheriff in his account may be discharged thereof. Rot. Parl. 50 Edw. III.

SHERIFF TOOTH. In English law. A tenure by the service of providing entertainment for the sheriff at his county courts; a common tax, formerly levied for the sheriff's diet. Wharton.

SHERIFF'S COURT. In Scotch law. A court having an extensive civil and criminal jurisdiction.

Its judgments and sentences are subject to review by the court of session and court of justiciary. Alis. Prac. 25; Paterson, Comp. 941, note.

SHERIFF'S COURT IN LONDON. A tribunal having cognizance of personal actions under the London (city) small debts act of 1852 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 157, § 3). See 11 & 12 Vict. c. 121; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 127; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 122, § 99; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 157.

The sheriff's court in London is one of the chief of the courts of limited and local jurisdiction in London. 3 Steph. Comm. 449, note (l); 3 Bl. Comm. 80, note (j).

SHERIFF'S JURY. In practice. A jury composed of no determinate number, but which may be more or less than twelve, summoned by the sheriff for the purposes of an inquisition or inquest of office. 3 Bl. Comm. 258.

SHERIFF'S OFFICERS. Bailiffs, who are either bailiffs of hundreds or bound bailiffs.

SHERIFF'S TOURN. A court of record in England, held twice every year, within a month after Easter and Michaelmas, before the sheriff, in different parts of the county.

It is, indeed, only the turn or circuit of the sheriff to keep a court leet in each respective hundred. It is the great court leet of the county, as the county court is the court baron; for out of this, for the ease of the sheriff, was taken the court leet or view of frank pledge (q. v.) 4 Steph. Comm. 339; 4 Bl. Comm. 273.

SHERIFFALTY. The office of sheriff.

SHERIFFWICK. The jurisdiction of a sheriff. Doctor & Stud. dial 2, c. 42, p. 232. Called, in modern law, "bailiwick." The office of a sheriff. Finch, Law, bk. 4, c. 25.

SHERRERIE. A word used by the authorities of the Roman Church, to specify contemptuously the technical parts of the law, as administered by nonclerical lawyers. Bac. Abr.

SHEWER. In the practice of the English high court, when a view by a jury is ordered, persons are named by the court to show the property to be viewed, and are hence called "shewers." There is usually a shewer on behalf of each party. Archb. Prac. 339 et seq.

SHEWING. In English law. To be quit of attachment in a court, in plaints shewed and not avowed. Obsolete.

SHIFTING CLAUSE. A shifting clause in a settlement is a clause by which some other mode of devolution is substituted for that primarily prescribed. Examples of shifting clauses are: The ordinary name and arms clause, and the clause of less frequent occurrence, by which a settled estate is destined as the foundation of a second family, in the event of the elder branch becoming otherwise enriched. 3 Dav. Conv. 273. These shifting clauses take effect under the statute of uses.

SHIFTING USE. Such a use as takes effect in derogation of some other estate, and is limited expressly by the deed, or is allowed to be created by some person named in the deed. Gilb. Uses (Sugden Ed.) 152, note; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 284.

For example, a feoffment in fee is made to the use of W. and his heirs till A. pays £40 to W., and then to the use of A. and his heirs. A very common application is in the case of marriage settlements. Williams, Real Prop. 243. The doctrine of shifting uses furnished a means of evading the principle of law that a fee could not be limited after a fee. See 2 Washb. Real Prop. 284 et seq.; Williams, Real Prop. 242; 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 452; 1 Vern. 402; 1 Edw. Ch. 34; Plowd. 25; Poll. 65. See "Use."

SHIP. A vessel employed in navigation; for example, the terms the ship's papers, the ship's husband, shipwreck, and the like, are employed whether the vessel referred to be a brig, a schooner, a sloop, or a three-masted vessel.

A vessel with three masts, employed in navigation. 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 530; Weskett, Ins. 514. The boats and rigging (2 Marsh. Ins. 727), together with the anchors, masts, cables, and such-like objects, are considered as part of the ship (Pardessus, note 599; Dig. 22. 2. 44).

SHIP BREAKING. In Scotch law. The offense of breaking into a ship. Arkley, 461.

SHIP BROKER. One who transacts business relating to vessels and their employment between the owners of vessels and merchants who send cargoes.

SHIP DAMAGE. In the charter parties with the English East India Company these words occur. Their meaning is, damage from negligence, insufficiency, or bad stowage in the ship. Doug. 272; Abb. Shipp. 204.

SHIP MASTER. The captain or master of a ship. He controls and manages the ship and cargo, and represents the owners for certain purposes.

SHIP MONEY. A tax levied on ports, towns, cities, boroughs, and counties to provide money for equipping the navy. It existed in England, and was finally abolished in the reign of Charles I. after he had attempted to restore it. This attempt, and Hampden's resistance, was one cause which led to the king's death.

SHIP'S HUSBAND. In maritime law. An agent appointed by the owner of a ship, and invested with authority to make the requisite repairs, and attend to the management, equipment, and other concerns of the ship. He is the general agent of the owners in relation to the ship, and may be appointed in writing or orally. He is usually, but not necessarily, a part owner. 1 Pars. Mar. Law, 97. He must see to the proper outfit of the vessel in the repairs adequate to the voyage, and in the tackle and furniture necessary for a seaworthy ship; must have a proper master, mate, and crew for the ship, so that in this respect it shall be seaworthy; must see to the due furnishing of provisions and stores according to the necessities of the voyage; must see to the regularity of the clearances from the custom house, and the regularity of the registry; must settle the contracts, and provide for the payment of the furnishings which are requisite to the performance of those duties; must enter into proper charter parties, or engage the vessel for general freight under the usual conditions, and settle for freight and adjust averages with the merchant; and must preserve the proper certificates, surveys, and documents, in case of future disputes with insurers and freighters, and to keep regular books of the ship. Bell, Comm. § 428; 4 Barn. & Adol. 375; 13 East, 538; 1 Younge & C. 326; 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 144; 16 Conn. 12. These are his general powers; but of course they may be limited or enlarged by the owners; and it may be observed that, without special authority, he cannot borrow money generally for the use of the ship, though, as above observed, he may settle the accounts for furnishings, or grant bills for them, which form debts against the concern, whether or not he has funds in his hands with which he might have paid them. 1 Bell, Comm. § 499. Although he may, in general, levy the freight which is by the bill of lading payable on the delivery of the goods, it would seem that he would not have power to take bills for the freight, and give up the possession of the lien over the cargo, unless it has been so settled by the charter party.

He cannot insure or bind the owners for premiums. 17 Me. 147; 2 Maule & S. 485; 13 East, 274; 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 595; 11 Pick. (Mass.) 85; 5 Burrows, 2627; Paley, Ag. (Lloyd Ed.) 23, note 8; Abb. Shipp. pt. 1, c. 3, § 2; Marsh, Ins. bk. 1, c. 8, § 2; Livermore, Ag. 72, 73.

As the power of the master to enter into contracts of affreightment is superseded in the port of the owners, so it is by the presence of the ship's husband, or the knowledge of the contracting parties that a ship's husband has been appointed. 2 Bell, Comm. 199. The ship's husband, as such, has no lien on the vessel or proceeds. 2 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 427.

SHIP'S PAPERS. The papers or documents required for the manifestation of the ownership and national character of a vessel and her cargo, and to show her compliance with the revenue and navigation laws of the country to which she belongs.

The want of these papers or any of them renders the character of a vessel suspicious (2 Boul. P. Dr. Com. 14); and the use of false or simulated papers frequently subjects the vessel to confiscation (15 East, 46, 70, 364; Molloy, bk. 2, c. 2, § 9), or avoids an insurance, unless the insurer has stipulated that she may carry such papers (Id.)

A ship's papers are of two sorts: First, those required by the law of the particular country to which the ship belongs; as, the certificate of registry or of enrollment, the license, the crew list, the shipping articles, clearance, etc.; and, second, such as are required by the law of nations to be on board of neutral ships as evidence of their title to that character; as, the sea brief or letter, or passport, the proofs of property in the ship, as bills of sale, etc., the charter party, the bills of lading, the invoices, the crew list or muster roll, the log book, and the bill of health. McCulloch, Comm. Dict. "Ship's Papers." See Glenn, Int. Law, Append. p. 365, for a list of ship's papers required by the laws of various nations.

SHIPPER. The consignor of goods to a ship or common carrier for transportation.

SHIPPING. A generic term for all marine craft, and for the things and matters which are incident to it.

SHIPPING ARTICLES. An agreement, in writing or print, between the master and seamen or mariners on board his vessel (except such as shall be apprenticed or servant to himself or owners), declaring the voyage or voyages, term or terms of time, for which such seamen or mariners shall be shipped. It is also required that at the foot of every such contract there shall be a memorandum, in writing, of the day and the hour on which each seaman or mariner who shall so ship and subscribe shall render himself on board to begin the voyage agreed upon.

SHIPWRECK. The loss of a vessel at sea, either by being swallowed up by the waves, by running against another vessel or thing at sea, or on the coast.

SHIRE. In English law. A district or division of country. Co. Litt. 50a.

SHIRE CLERK. He that keeps the county court.

SHIRE GEMOT (spelled, also, scire gemote, scir gemot, scyre gemote, shire mote; from the Saxon scir or scyre, county, shire, and gemote, a court, an assembly).

The Saxon county court.

It was held twice a year before the bishop and alderman of the shire, and was the principal court. Spelman, "Gemotum;" Cunningham, "Shire;" Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 28.

SHIRE MAN, or SCYRE MAN. Before the Conquest, the judge of the county, by whom trials for land, etc., were determined.

SHOP. A building in which goods and merchandise are sold at retail. See "Stores."

SHOPA. In old records, a shop. Cowell.

SHORE (Lat. litus, littus). Land on the margin of the sea, or a lake, or river. That space of land which is alternately covered and left dry by the rising and falling of the tide; the space between high and low water marks. Hale de Jur. Mar. par. 1, c. 6; Angell, Tide Waters, 67, c. 3. See "Seashore." The shore of a fresh water river is where the land and water ordinarily meet. 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 547. But this is more properly called the "bank" (ripa). A river in which the tide does not ebb and flow has no "shores," in the legal sense of the term. Walworth, C., 4 Hill (N. Y.) 375. And a lake without tides cannot properly be said to have a shore. Angell, Tide Waters, ubi supra. And see 3 Grat. (Va.) 655; 13 How. (U. S.) 391.

SHORT CAUSE. In English chancery practice, and in a few of the United States, a cause the trial of which will take but a short time, and which may accordingly be put on a special calendar for speedy trial. See 8 Misc. Rep. (N. Y.) 94.

SHORT INTEREST. See "Gambling Contract."

SHORT MARKET. See "Gambling Contract."

SHORT NOTICE. In English practice. Four days' notice of trial. Wharton, "Notice of Trial at Common Law;" 3 Chit. St. 148; 1 Cromp. & M. 499. Where short notice has been given, two days is sufficient notice of continuance. Wharton.

SHORT SELLING. See "Gambling Contract."

SHORT SUMMONS. Process returnable in a shorter time than the ordinary summons or writ. It exists in New York and in other states.

SHOWING CAUSE. The presentation, on a hearing appointed for that purpose, of reasons and facts to control the action of the court in respect to a certain specified order or determination.

SHRIEVALTY. The office of sheriff; the period of that office.

SHYSTER. A lawyer who conducts business in a knavish or dishonest way.

SI. In Latin phrases. If.

SI A JURE DISCEDAS VAGUS ERIS, ET erant omnia omnibus incerta. If you depart from the law, you will wander without a guide, and everything will be in a state of uncertainty to every one. Co. Litt. 227.

SI ALICUJUS REI SOCIETAS SIT, ET finis negotio impositus est, finitur societas. If there is a partnership in any matter, and the business is ended, the partnership ceases. 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 438, 489.

SI ALIQUID EX SOLEMNIBUS DEFICIat, cum aequitas poscit subveniendum est. If anything be wanting from required forms, when equity requires, it will be aided. 1 Kent, Comm. 157.

SI ASSUETIS MEDERI POSSIS NOVA non sunt tentanda. If you can be relieved by accustomed remedies, new ones should not be tried. 10 Coke, 142.

SI CONSTET DE PERSONA. If it be certain who is the person meant.

SI CONTINGAT (Lat. if it happen). Words of condition in old conveyances. 10 Coke, 42a.

SI INGRATUM DIXERIS, OMNIA DIXeris. If you affirm that one is ungrateful, in that you include every charge. A Roman maxim. Tray. Lat. Max.

SI ITA EST. If it be so. Emphatic words in the old writ of mandamus to a judge, commanding him, if the fact alleged be truly stated (si ita est), to affix his seal to a bill of exceptions. 5 Pet. (U. S.) 192.

SI JUDICAS, COGNOSCE. If you judge, understand.

SI MELIORES SUNT QUOS DUCIT amor, plures sunt quos corrigit timor. If those are better who are led by love, those are the greater number corrected by fear. Co. Litt. 392.

SI NON APPAREAT QUID ACTUM EST erit consequens, ut id sequamur quod in regione in qua actum est, frequentatur. If it does not appear what was agreed upon, the consequence will be that we must follow that which is the usage of the place where the agreement was made. Dig. 50. 17. 34.

SI NON OMNES (Lat. if all cannot). In English practice. A writ of association of justices whereby, if all in commission cannot meet at the day assigned, it is allowed that two or more may proceed with the business. Cowell; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 111 (C), 186a; Reg. Orig. 202, 206.

SI NULLA SIT CONJECTURA QUAE DUcat alio, verba intelligenda sunt ex proprietate, non grammatica sed populari ex usu. If there be no inference which leads to a different result, words are to be understood according to their proper meaning, not in a grammatical, but in a popular and ordinary, sense. 2 Kent, Comm. 555.

SI PLURES CONDITIONES ASCRIPtae fuerunt donationi conjunctim, omnibus est parendum; et ad veritatem copulative requiritur quod utraque pars sit vera, si divisim, cuilibet vel alteri eorum satis est obtemperare; et in disjunctivis, sufficit alteram partem esse veram. If some conditions are conjunctively written in a gift, the whole of them must be complied with; and with respect to their truth, it is necessary that every part be true, taken jointly; if the conditions are separate, it is sufficient to comply with either one or other of them; and being disjunctive, that one or the other be true. Co. Litt. 225.

SI PLURES SINT FIDEJUSSORES, quodquit erunt numero, singuli in solidum tenentur. If there are more sureties than one, how many soever they shall be, they shall each be held for the whole. Inst. 3. 21. 4; Id. 4. 116; 1 W. Bl. 388.

SI PRIUS (Law Lat.) In old practice. If before. Formal words in the old writs for summoning juries. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 12.

SI QUID UNIVERSITATI DEBETUR SINgulis non debetur, nec quod debet, universitas singuli debent. If anything is due to a corporation, it is not due to the individual members of it, nor do the members individually owe what the corporation owes. Dig. 3. 4. 7; 1 Bl. Comm. 484.

SI QUIDEM IN NOMINE, COGNOMINE, praenomine, agnomine legatarii enaverit; cum de persona constat, nihilhominus valet legatum. If the testator has erred in the name, cognomen, praenomen, or title of the legatee, whenever the person is rendered certain, the legacy is nevertheless valid. Inst. 2. 20. 29; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 574; 2 Domat, bk. 2, tit. 1, s. 6, §§ 10, 19.

SI QUIS (Lat.) In the civil law. If any one. Formal words in the praetorian edicts. The word "quis," though masculine in form, was held to include women. Dig. 50. 16. 1.

SI QUIS CUSTOS FRAUDEM PUPILLO fecerit, a tutela removendus est. If a guardian behave fraudulently to his ward, he shall be removed from the guardianship. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 39.

SI QUIS PRAEGNANTEM UXOREM RELiquit, non videtur sine liberis decessisse. If a man dies, leaving his wife pregnant, he shall not be considered as having died childless.

SI QUIS UNUM PERCUSSERIT, CUM alium percutere vellet, in felonia tenetur. If a man kill one, meaning to kill another, he is held guilty of felony. 3 Inst. 51.

SI RECOGNOSCAT (Lat. if he acknowledge). In old practice. A writ which lay for a creditor against his debtor for money numbered (pecunia numerata) or counted; that is, a specific sum of money, which the debtor had acknowledged in the county court, to owe him, as received in pecuniis numeratis. Cowell.

SI SUGGESTIO NON SIT VERA, LITErae patentes vacuae sunt. If the suggestion of a patent is false, the patent itself is void. 10 Coke, 113.

SI TE FECERIT SECURUM (Lat. if he make you secure). Words which occur in the form of writs, which originally required, or still require, that the plaintiff should give security to the sheriff that he will prosecute his claim, before the sheriff can be required to execute such writ.

SIB (Saxon). A relative or kinsman. Used in the Scotch tongue, but not now in English.

SIC (Lat.) Thus; so; in such manner.

SIC ENIM DEBERE QUEM MELIOREM agrum suum facere, ne vicini deteriorem faciat. Every one ought so to improve his land as not to injure his neighbor's. 3 Kent, Comm. 441.

SIC INTERPRETANDUM EST UT VERba accipiantur cum effectu. Such an interpretation is to be made that the words may have an effect. 3 Inst. 80.

SIC SUBSCRIBITUR (Lat.) In Scotch practice. So it is subscribed. Formal words at the end of depositions, immediately preceding the signature. 1 How. St. Tr. 1379.

SIC UTERE TUO UT ALIENUM NON laedas. So use your own as not to injure another's property. 1 Bl. Comm. 306; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 206, note, 246, 327, 332, 336, 340, 348, 353; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2379; 5 Exch. 797; 12 Q. B. 739; 4 Adol. & E. 384; 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 218; 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 99; 17 Mass. 334; 4 McCord (S. C.) 472; 9 Coke, 59.

SICH. A little current of water, which is dry in summer; a water furrow or gutter. Cowell.

SICIUS. A sort of money current among the ancient English, of the value of 2d.

SICUT (Lat.) As.

SICUT ALIAS. As at another time, or heretofore. This was a second writ sent out when the first was not executed.

SICUT ME DEUS ADJUVET (Lat.) So help me God. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 18, § 4.

SICUT NATURA NIL FACIT PER SALtum, ita nec lex. As nature does nothing by a bound or leap, so neither does the law. Co. Litt. 238.

SIDE. See "Plea Side."

SIDE-BAR RULES. In English practice. Rules which were formerly moved for by attorneys on the side bar of the court, but now may be had of the clerk of the rules, upon a praecipe. These rules are, that the sheriff return his writ, that he bring in the body, for special imparlance, to be present at the taxing of costs, and the like.

SIDESMEN (testes, synodales). In ecclesiastical law. A kind of impanelled jury.

consisting of two, three, or more persons, in every parish, who were, upon oath, to present all heretics and irregular persons. In process of time they became standing officers in many places, especially cities. They were called "synodsmen,"—by corruption, "sidesmen;" also "questmen." But their office has become absorbed in that of church warden. 1 Burn, Ecc. Law, 399.

SIENS. Scions or descendants.

SIERVO (Spanish). In Spanish law. A slave. Las Partidas, pt. 4, tit. 21, lib. 1.

SIETE PARTIDAS (Spanish). Seven parts. See "Las Partidas."

SIGHT. Presentment. Bills of exchange are frequently drawn payable at sight, or a certain number of days or months after sight.

SIGILLUM (Lat.) A seal.

SIGILLUM EST CERA IMPRESSA, QUIA cera sine impressione non est sigillum. A seal is a piece of wax impressed, because wax without an impression is not a seal. 3 Inst. 169. But see "Seal."

SIGLA (Lat.) In Roman law. Marks or signs of abbreviation used in writing. Code, 1. 17. 11. 13.

SIGN. A token of anything; a note or token given without words.

To make a signature (q. v.)

SIGN MANUAL. In English law. The signature of the king to grants or letters patent, inscribed at the top. 2 Bl. Comm. 347*.

Any one's name written by himself. Webster; Wharton. The sign manual is not good unless countersigned, etc. 9 Mod. 54.

SIGNA (Lat.) In civil law. Those species of indicia which come more immediately under the cognizance of the senses; such as stains of blood on the person of one accused of murder, indications of terror at being charged with the offense, and the like.

Signa, although not to be rejected as instruments of evidence, cannot always be relied upon as conclusive evidence, for they are frequently explained away. In the instance mentioned, the blood may have been that of a beast; and expressions of terror have been frequently manifested by innocent persons who did not possess much firmness. See Best, Pres. Ev. 13, note (f); Denisart.

SIGNATORIUS ANNULUS (Lat.) In the civil law. A signet ring; a seal ring. Dig. 50. 16. 74.

SIGNATURE.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. The name of a sort of rescript, without seal, containing the supplication, the signature of the pope or his delegate, and the grant of a pardon. Dict. Dr. Canonique.

——In Practice. By signature is understood the act of putting down a man's name at the end of an instrument, to adopt its statements, or attest its validity. The name thus written is also called a "signature."

It is not necessary that a party should write his name himself, to constitute a signature. His mark is now held sufficient, though he was able to write. 8 Adol. & E. 94; 3 Nev. & P. 228; 3 Curt. C. C. (U. S.) 752; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 144. A signature made by a party, another person guiding his hand with his consent, is sufficient. 4 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 262, 269.

SIGNET. A seal commonly used for the sign manual of the sovereign. Wharton. The signet is also used for the purpose of civil justice in Scotland. Bell, Dict.

SIGNIFICATION (Lat. signum, a sign, facere, to make). In French law. The notice given of a decree, sentence, or other judicial act.

SIGNIFICAVIT (Lat.) In ecclesiastical law. When this word is used alone, it means the bishop's certificate to the court of chancery in order to obtain the writ of excommunication; but where the words writ of significavit are used, the meaning is the same as writ de excommunicato capiendo. 2 Burn, Ecc. Law, 248; Shelf. Mar. & Div. 502.

SIGNING JUDGMENT.

——In English Practice. The plaintiff or defendant, when the cause has reached such a stage that he is entitled to a judgment, obtains the signature or allowance of the proper officer; and this is called "signing judgment," and is instead of the delivery of judgment in open court. Steph. Pl. 111. It is the leave of the master of the office to enter up judgment, and may be had in vacation. 3 Barn. & C. 317; Tidd, Prac. 616.

——In American Practice. It is an actual signing of the judgment on the record, by the judge or other officer duly authorized. Graham, Prac. 341.

SIGNUM (Lat.)

——In the Roman and Civil Law. A sign; a mark; a seal. The seal of an instrument. Calv. Lex.

——In the Saxon Law. The sign of a cross prefixed as a sign of assent and approbation to a charter or deed.

SILENT LEGES INTER ARMA. Laws are silent amidst arms. 4 Inst. 70.

SILK GOWN. The professional robe worn by those barristers who have been appointed queen's counsel (q. v.) It is the distinctive badge of queen's or king's counsel.

SILVA CAEDUA (Lat.) By these words, in England, is understood every sort of wood, except gross wood of the age of twenty years. Bac. Abr. "Tythes" (C).

SIMILITER (Lat. likewise). In pleading. The plaintiff's reply that, as the defendant has put himself upon the country, he, the plaintiff, does the like. It occurs only when the plea has the conclusion to the country, and its effect is to join the plaintiff in the issue thus tendered by the defendant. Co. Litt. 126a. The word similiter was the effective word when the proceedings were in Latin. 1 Chit. Pl. 519; Archb. Civ. Pl. 250. See Steph. Pl. 255; 2 Saund. 319b; Cowp. 407; 1 Strange, 551; 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 32.

SIMILITUDO LEGALIS EST, CASUUM diversorum inter se collatorum similis ratio; quod in uno similium valet, valebit in altero. Dissimilium, dissimilis est ratio. Legal similarity is a similar reason which governs various cases when compared with each other, for what avails in one similar case will avail in the other. Of things dissimilar, the reason is dissimilar. Co. Litt. 191.

SIMONIA EST VOLUNTAS SIVE DESIderium emendi vel vendendi spiritualia vel spiritualibus adhaerentia. Contractus ex turpi causa et contra bonos mores. Simony is the will or desire of buying or selling spiritualities, or things pertaining thereto. It is a contract founded on a bad cause, and against morality. Hob. 167.

SIMONY. In ecclesiastical law. The selling and buying of holy orders or an ecclesiastical benefice. Bac. Abr. By "simony" is also understood an unlawful agreement to receive a temporal reward for something holy or spiritual. Code, 1. 3. 31; Ayliffe, Par. 496.

SIMPLE AVERAGE. Particular average (q. v.)

SIMPLE CONTRACT. A contract the evidence of which is merely oral or in writing, not under seal nor of record. 1 Chit. Cont. 1; 1 Chit. Pl. 88. And see 11 Mass. 30; 11 East, 312; 4 Barn. & Ald. 588; 3 Starkie, Ev. 995; 2 Bl. Comm. 472.

SIMPLE DEPOSIT. A deposit made, according to the civil law, by one or more persons having a common interest.

SIMPLE LARCENY. The felonious taking and carrying away the personal goods of another, unattended by acts of violence. It is distinguished from "compound larceny," which is stealing from the person or with violence. See "Larceny."

SIMPLE OBLIGATION. An unconditional obligation; one which is to be performed without depending upon any event provided by the parties to it.

SIMPLE TRUST. A simple or passive trust corresponds with the ancient use, and is where property is simply vested in one person for the use of another, and the nature of the trust, not being qualified by the settler, is left to the construction of law. It differs from a "special trust," in that the trustee performs no duty. 7 Watts & S. (Pa.) 25; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1896. See "Trust."

SIMPLE WARRANDICE. In Scotch law. An obligation to warrant or secure from all subsequent or future deeds of the grantor. Whishaw. A simple warranty against the grantor's own acts.

SIMPLEX (Lat.) Simple or single; as, charta simplex is a deed poll or single deed. Jacob.

SIMPLEX BENEFICIUM. In ecclesiastical law. A minor dignity in a cathedral or collegiate church, or any other ecclesiastical benefice, as distinguished from a cure of souls. It may therefore be held with any parochial cure, without coming under the prohibitions against pluralities.

SIMPLEX COMMENDATIO NON OBLIgat. A simple recommendation does not bind. Dig. 4. 3. 37; 2 Kent, Comm. 485; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 700; 4 Taunt. 488; 16 Q. B. 282, 283; Cro. Jac. 4; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 354; 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 95.

SIMPLEX DICTUM. In old English practice. Simple averment; mere assertion without proof. Bracton, fol. 320.

SIMPLEX ET PURA DONATIO DICI POterit, ubi nulla est adjecta conditio nec modus. A gift is said to be pure and simple when no condition or qualification is annexed. Bracton, 1.

SIMPLEX JUSTITIARIUS (Law Lat.) In old records. Simple justice. A name sometimes given to a puisne justice. Cowell.

SIMPLEX LOQUELA. In old English practice. Simple speech; the mere declaration or plaint of a plaintiff. Called in Fleta, simplex vox. Lib. 2, c. 63, § 9.

SIMPLEX OBLIGATIO. A single obligation; a bond without a condition. 2 Bl. Comm. 340.

SIMPLEX PEREGRINATIO (Law Lat.) In old English law. Simple pilgrimage. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 2, § 2.

SIMPLICITAS EST LEGIBUS AMICA, ET nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur. Simplicity is favorable to the law, and too much subtlety is blameworthy in law. 4 Coke, 8.

SIMPLICITER (Lat.) Simply; without ceremony; in a summary manner.

SIMUL CUM (Lat. together with). In pleading. Words used in indictments and declarations of trespass against several persons, when some of them are known and others are unknown.

In cases of riots, it is usual to charge that A. B., together with others unknown, did the act complained of. 2 Chit. Crim. Law, 488; 2 Salk. 593.

When a party sued with another pleads separately, the plea is generally entitled in the name of the person pleading, adding, "sued with ———," naming the other party. When this occurred, it was, in the old phraseology, called pleading with a simul cum.

SIMUL ET SEMEL (Lat.) Together and at one time. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 5; 1 Saund. 323a, note (6).

SIMULATED FACT. In the law of evidence. A fabricated fact; an appearance given to things by human device, with a view to deceive and mislead. Burrill, Circ. Ev. 131.

SIMULATIO LATENS. A species of feigned disease, in which disease is actually present, but where the symptoms are falsely aggravated, and greater sickness is pretended than really exists. Beck, Med. Jur. 3.

SIMULTATION (Lat. simul, together). In French law. The concert or agreement of two or more persons to give to one thing the appearance of another, for the purpose of fraud. Merlin, Repert.

With us, such act might be punished by indictment for a conspiracy, by avoiding the pretended contract, or by action to recover back the money or property which may have been thus fraudulently obtained.

SINE (Lat.) Without.

SINE ANIMO REVERTENDI. Without the intention of returning.

SINE ASSENSU CAPITULI (Lat. without the consent of the chapter). In old English practice. A writ which lay where a dean, bishop, prebendary, abbot, prior, or master of a hospital aliened the lands holden in the right of his house, abbey, or priory, without the consent of the chapter; in which case his successor might have this writ. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 195.

SINE CONSIDERATIONE CURIAE (Lat.) Without the judgment of the court.

SINE DECRETO (Lat.) Without authority of a judge. 2 Kames, Eq. 115.

SINE DIE (Lat.) Without day. A judgment for a defendant in many cases is quod eat sine die, that he may go without day. While the cause is pending and undetermined, it may be continued from term to term by dies datus. See "Continuance;" Co. Litt. 362b, 363a. When the court or other body rise at the end of a session or term, they adjourn sine die.

SINE HOC QUOD (Law Lat. without this, that). A technical phrase in old pleading, of the same import with the phrase "absque hoc" (q. v.)

SINE JUDICIO (Law Lat.) Without judgment; without a judicial sentence. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 14, § 1.

SINE LIBERIS (Lat.) Without children. For the construction of this phrase in the civil law, see Dig. 50. 16. 148; Id. 50. 17. 187.

SINE NUMERO (Law Lat. without stint or limit). A term applied to common. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 19, § 8.

SINE POSSESSIONE USUCAPIO PROcedere non potest. There can be no prescription without possession.

SINE PROLE. Without issue. Used in genealogical tables.

SINECURE. In ecclesiastical law. A term used to signify that an ecclesiastical officer is without a charge or cure.

In common parlance, it means the receipt of a salary for an office when there are no duties to be performed.

SINGLE BILL. One without any condition, and which does not depend upon any future event to give it validity. 5 Ill. 483.

SINGLE BOND. A bond without a condition.

SINGLE COMBAT, TRIAL BY. See "Battel."

SINGLE ORIGINAL. An original instrument which is not executed in duplicate.

SINGULAR SUCCESSOR. A purchaser is so termed in the Scotch law, in contradistinction to the heir of the landed proprietor, who succeeds to the whole heritage by regular title of succession, whereas the purchaser acquires rights solely by the single title of the former proprietor.

SINGULI IN SOLIDUM TENENTUR. Each is bound for the whole. 6 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 242, 252.

SINKING FUND. A fund arising from particular taxes, imposts, or duties, which is appropriated towards the payment of the interest due on a public loan, and for the gradual payment of the principal. See 9 Neb. 453.

SIST. In Scotch practice. A stay or suspension of proceedings; an order for a stay of proceedings. Bell, Dict.

SITHCUNDMAM. The high constable of a hundred.

SITTINGS AFTER TERM. Sittings in banc after term were held by authority of St. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 32. The courts were at liberty to transact business at their sittings as in term time, but the custom was to dispose only of cases standing for argument or judgment. Wharton.

SITTINGS IN BANK (or BANC). The sittings which the respective superior courts of common law hold during every term for the purpose of hearing and determining the various matters of law argued before them.

They are so called in contradistinction to the sittings at nisi prius, which are held for the purpose of trying issues of fact. The former are usually held, in England, before four of the judges, while at the latter one judge only presides. Holthouse; 3 Steph. Comm. 423.

In America, the practice is essentially the same, all the judges, or a majority of them, usually, sitting in banc, and but one holding the court for jury trials, and the term has the same application here as in England.

SITTINGS IN CAMERA. See "Chambers."

SITUS (Lat.) Situation; location. 5 Pet. (U. S.) 524.

Real estate has always a fixed situs, while personal estate has no such fixed situs; the law rei sitae regulates real, but not the personal, estate. Story, Confl. Laws, § 379.

The rules as to the situs of personal property have been stated as follows:

(1) Movable and tangible chattels are of the county where they may be at the time.

(2) Shares in corporations or joint-stock companies are of the county where the chief office of the company is situated.

(3) Judgments and other debts of record are of the county where the record is kept.

(4) Bonds and negotiable securities are of the county where they happen to be at the time.

(5) Promissory notes, bills of exchange, and all simple contracts are of the county where the debtor resides.

(6) Demands against a commonwealth are of the county wherein is situated the seat of government. 2 Minor, Inst. 853.

SIVE TOTA RES EVINCATUR, SIVE pars habet regressum emptor in venditorem. The purchaser who has been evicted in whole or in part has an action against the vendor. Dig. 21. 2. 1; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 690.

SIX ACTS, THE. The acts passed in 1819, for the pacification of England, are so called. They, in effect, prohibited the training of persons to arms; authorized general searches and seizure of arms; prohibited meetings of more than fifty persons for the discussion of public grievances; repressed with heavy penalties and confiscations seditious and blasphemous libels; and checked pamphleteering by extending the newspaper stamp duty to political pamphlets. Brown.

SIX CLERKS IN CHANCERY. Officers who received and filed all proceedings, signed office copies, attended court to read the pleadings, etc. Abolished by 5 Vict. c. 5. 3 Bl. Comm. 443*; Spence, Eq. Jur.; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 13, § 15.

SIXHINDI. Servants of the same nature as rodknights. Anc. Inst. Eng.

SKELETON BILL. In commercial law. A blank paper, properly stamped, in those countries where stamps are required, with the name of a person signed at the bottom.

In such case, the person signing the paper will be held as the drawer or acceptor, as it may be, of any bill which shall afterwards be written above his name, to the sum of which the stamp is applicable. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 390.

SLAINS. See "Letters of Slains."

SLANDER. In torts. Words maliciously spoken or written of another, imputing to him some crime, or tending to exclude him from society, and cause him to be avoided (see 87 N. C. 300), or which tend to his prejudice in his profession, trade, or business (36 Wis. 515).

SLANDER OF TITLE. In torts. A statement tending to cut down the extent of title. See 60 Cal. 160. An action for slander of title is not properly an action for words spoken, or for libel written and published, but an action on the case for special damage sustained by reason of the speaking or publication of the slander of the plaintiff's title. This action is ranged under that division of actions in the digests and other writers on the text law, and is so held by the courts at the present day. An action for slander of title is a sort of metaphorical expression. Slander of title may be of such a nature as to fall within the scope of ordinary slander. Slander of title ordinarily means a statement tending to cut down the extent of title, which is injurious only if it is false. It is essential, to give a cause of action, that the statement should be false. It is essential, also, that it should be malicious,—not malicious in the worst sense, but with intent to injure the plaintiff. If the statement be true, if there really be the infirmity in the title that is suggested, no action will lie, however malicious the defendant's intention might be. Heard, Lib. & Sland. §§ 10, 59, et seq.

SLANDERER. A calumniator who maliciously and without reason imputes a crime or fault to another, of which he is innocent.

For this offense, when the slander is merely verbal, the remedy is an action on the case for damages; when it is reduced to writing or printing, it is a libel.

SLAVE. One over whose life, liberty, and property another has unlimited control. The jus vitae et necis is included in pure or absolute slavery. Such a power has no foundation in natural law, and hence the Justinian Code declared it contra naturam esse. Inst. 1. 4. 2.

Every limitation placed by law upon this absolute control modifies and to that extent changes the condition of the slave. In every slaveholding state of the United States, the life and limbs of a slave were protected from violence inflicted by the master or third persons.

Among the Romans, the slave was classed among things (res). He was homo sed non persona. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 1, § 75. He was considered pro nullo et mortuo, quia nec statu familiae nec civitatis nec libertatis gaudet. Id. § 77. See, also, 4 Dev. (N. C.) 340; 9 Ga. 582. In the United States, as a person, he was capable of committing crimes, of receiving his freedom, of being the subject of homicide, and of modifying by his volition, very materially, the rules applicable to other species of property. His existence as a person being recognized by the law, that existence was protected by the law. 1 Hawks (N. C.) 217; 2 Hawks (N. C.) 454; 1 Ala. 8; 1 Miss. 83; 11 Miss.

518; 2 Va. Cas. 394; 5 Rand. (Va.) 678; 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 156; 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 172.

In the slaveholding states, the relations of husband and wife and parent and child were recognized by statutes in relation to public sales, and by the courts in all cases where such relations were material to elucidate the motives of their acts.

A slave has no political rights, the government being the judge who shall be its citizens. His civil rights, though necessarily more restricted than the freeman's, are based upon the same foundation,—the law of the land. He has none but such as are by that law and the law of nature given to him. The civil-law rule "partus sequitur ventrem" was adopted in all the slaveholding states, the status of the mother at the time of birth deciding the status of the issue. 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 134; 2 Rand. (Va.) 246; 4 Rand. (Va.) 600; 1 Hayw. (N. C.) 234; 1 Cooke (Tenn.) 381; 2 Bibb (Ky.) 298; 2 Dana (Ky.) 432; 5 Dana (Ky.) 207; 2 Mo. 71; 3 Mo. 540; 8 Pet. (U. S.) 220; 14 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 446; 15 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 18; 2 Brev. (N. C.) 307; 3 Har. & McH. (Md.) 139; 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 1; 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 568; 2 How. (U. S.) 265, 496. In South Carolina, Georgia, Mississippi, Virginia, Louisiana, and perhaps Maryland, this rule was adopted by statute.

The slave cannot acquire property; his acquisitions belong to his master. 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 397; 1 Bailey (S. C.) 633; 2 Hill, Ch. (S. C.) 397; 2 Rich. (S. C.) 424; 6 Humph. (Tenn.) 299; 2 Ala. 320; 5 B. Mon. (Ky.) 186. The peculium of the Roman slave was ex gratia, and not of right. Inst. 2. 9. 3; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. ii. tit. xviii. In like manner, negro slaves in the United States were, as a matter of fact, sometimes permitted by their masters, ex gratia, to obtain and retain property. The same was true of ancient villeins in England. The slave could not be a witness, except for and against slaves or free negroes. This was, perhaps, the rule of the common law. None but a freeman was othesworth. The privilege of being sworn was one of the characteristics of a "liber et legalis homo." To lose this privilege, amittere liberam legem, was a severe punishment. 3 Bl. Comm. 340; Fortesc. c. xxvi.; Co. Litt. 6b. With this the civil law agreed. Huberus, Praelec. lib. xxv. tit. v. § 2. In the United States, the rule of exclusion which we have mentioned was enforced in all cases where the evidence was offered for or against free white persons. 6 Leigh (Va.) 74. In most of the states this exclusion is by express statutes, while in others it exists by custom and the decision of the courts. 10 Ga. 519. In the slaveholding states, and in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, by statute, the rule has been extended to include free persons of color or emancipated slaves. 14 Ohio, 199; 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 97. The slave could be a suitor in court only for his freedom. For all other wrongs, he appeared through his master, for whose benefit the recovery was had. 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 19; 1 Litt. (Ky.) 326; 1 Mo. 608; 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 303; 3 Brev. (N. C.) 11; 4 Gill (Md.) 249; 9 La. 156; 4 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 169. The suit for freedom is favored. 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 143; 8 Pet. (U. S.) 44; 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 467; 2 Call (Va.) 350; 4 Rand. (Va.) 134. Lapse of time worked no forfeiture by reason of his dependent condition (3 Dana [Ky.] 382; 8 B. Mon. [Ky.] 631; 1 Hen. & M. [Va.] 141), and such was the civil law (Code, 7. 22. 2. 3). The master was bound to maintain, support, and defend his slave, however helpless or impotent. If he failed to do so, public officers were provided to supply his deficiency at his expense. In Tennessee, the master in such a case was responsible for all that he stole.

Cruel treatment was a penal offense of a high grade. Emancipation of the slave was the consequence of conviction in Louisiana; and the sale of the slave to another master was a part of the penalty in Alabama and Texas. In some of the ancient German states, and also by the "Code noir," another and more effectual penalty was a total disqualification of the master forever to hold slaves.

Among the ancient Lombards, if a master debauched his slave's wife, the slave and his wife were thereby emancipated. Among the Romans, double damages were given for the corruption of a slave. The enfranchisement of a slave is called "manumission." The word is expressive of the idea. Thus, Litt. § 204, "manumittere quod idem est, quod extra manum, vel potestatem alterius ponere." Manumission being merely the withdrawal of the dominion of the master, the right to manumit exists everywhere, unless forbidden by law. No one but the owner can manumit (4 J. J. Marsh. [Ky.] 103; 10 Pet. [U. S.] 583), and the effect is simply to make a freeman, not a citizen. The state must decide who shall be citizens. See "Servus."

Slavery having been abolished in the United States, it is only as affecting the future rights and liabilities of those formerly slaves that the elaborate slave codes of those states recognizing the status can be of interest or value.

SLAVE TRADE. The traffic in slaves, or the buying and selling of slaves for profit. It is either foreign or domestic. The former is when the trade includes transportation from a foreign state; the latter, when confined within a single state or states connected in a federal union.

SLAVERY. The status or condition of a slave. The keeping of slaves as a practice or legal institution.

SLEEPING PARTNER. See "Partner."

SLEEPING RENT. An expression used in English coal-mine leases to indicate a fixed rent, as distinguished from a rent based on the output. It is said to be so called because payable though the mine was "sleeping" (unworked).

SLIP. In insurance law. An informal memorandum of the particulars of a contract of insurance to be afterwards included, usually called in the United States a "binding slip."

SLIPPA. A stirrup. There is a tenure of land in Cambridgeshire by holding the sovereign's stirrup.

SLOUGH SILVER. A rent paid to the castle of Wigmore in lieu of certain days' work in harvest, heretofore reserved to the lord from his tenants. Cowell.

SMALL DEBTS COURTS. The several county courts established by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, for the purpose of bringing justice home to every man's door.

SMALL TITHES. All personal and mixed tithes, and also hops, flax, saffrons, potatoes, and sometimes, by custom, wood. Otherwise called "privy tithes." 2 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 726.

SMART MONEY. Vindictive or exemplary damages given beyond the actual damage, by way of punishment and example, in cases of gross misconduct of defendant. 15 Conn. 225; 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 352; 6 Hill (N. Y.) 466. That it cannot be given by jury, see 2 Greenl. Ev. (4th Ed.) § 253, note. See "Damages."

SMOKE SILVER. A modus of sixpence in lieu of tithe wood. Twisdale, Hist. Vindicat. 77.

SMUGGLING. The fraudulent taking into a country, or out of it, merchandise which is lawfully prohibited. More specifically, a secret introduction of goods into a state with intent to avoid payment of duty thereon. Bac. Abr.

SO HELP ME GOD. A formal invocation of the Deity to witness, by which an oath is concluded.

SOBRE JUEZES. In Spanish law. Superior judges. Las Partidas, pt. 3, tit. 4, lib. 1.

SOBRINI, or SOBRINAE (Lat.) In the civil law. The children of cousins german in general. Cooper, Just. Inst. notes,* 573; Dig. 38. 10, 3, pr.

SOC, SOK, or SOKA. In Saxon law. Jurisdiction; a power or privilege to administer justice and execute the laws; also a shire, circuit, or territory. Cowell.

SOCA. A seigniory or lordship, enfranchised by the king, with liberty of holding a court of his socmen or socagers, i. e., his tenants.

SOCAGE. This word, according to the earlier common-law writers, originally signified a service rendered by a tenant to his lord, by the soke or ploughshare; but Mr. Somner's etymology, referred to by Blackstone, seems more apposite, who derives it from the Saxon word soc, which signifies liberty or privilege, denoting thereby a free or privileged tenure. A species of English tenure, whereby the tenant held his lands of the lord by any certain service in lieu of all other services, so that the service was not a knight's service. Its principal feature was its certainty; as, to hold by fealty and a certain rent, or by fealty homage and a certain rent, or by homage and fealty without rent, or by fealty and certain corporal service, as ploughing the lord's land for a specified number of days. 2 Bl. Comm. 80.

The term "socage" was afterwards extended to all services which were not of a military character, provided they were fixed; as, by the annual payment of a rose, a pair of gilt spurs, a certain number of capons, or of so many bushels of corn. Of some tenements, the service was to be hangman, or executioner of persons condemned in the lord's court; for in olden times such officers were not volunteers, nor to be hired for lucre, and could only be bound thereto by tenure. There were three different species of these socage tenures,—one in frank tenure, another in ancient tenure, and the third in base tenure. The second and third kinds are now called, respectively, "tenure in ancient demesne," and "copyhold tenure." The first is called "free and common socage," to distinguish it from the other two; but, as the term "socage" has long ceased to be applied to the two latter, "socage" and "free and common socage" now mean the same thing. Bracton; Co. Litt. 17, 86.

By St. 12 Car. II. c. 24, the ancient tenures by knight's service were abolished, and all lands, with the exception of copyholds and of ecclesiastical lands, which continued to be held in free alms (frankalmoigne), were turned into free and common socage, and the great bulk of real property in England is now held under this ancient tenure. Many grants of land in the United States, made, previous to the Revolution, by the British crown, created the same tenure among us, until they were formally abolished by the legislatures of the different states. In 1787, the state of New York converted all feudal tenures within its boundaries into a tenure by free and common socage; but in 1830 it abolished this latter tenure, with all its incidents, and declared that from thenceforth all lands in the state should be held upon a uniform allodial tenure, and vested an absolute property in the owners according to their respective estates. Similar provisions have been adopted by other states; and the ownership of land throughout the United States is now essentially free and unrestricted. See "Tenure."

SOCAGER. A tenant by socage.

SOCAGIUM IDEM EST QUOD SERVItum socae; et soca, idem est quod caruca. Socage is the same as service of the soc; and "soc" is the same thing as a plow. Co. Litt. 86.

SOCER (Lat.) The father of one's wife; a father-in-law.

SOCIDA (Lat.) In civil law. The name of a contract by which one man delivers to another, either for a small recompense, or for a part of the profits, certain animals, on condition that, if any of them perish, they shall be replaced by the bailer, or he shall pay their value.

A contract of hiring, with the condition that the bailee takes upon him the risk of the loss of the thing hired. Wolff. § 638.

SOCIEDAD. In Spanish law. Partnership. Schmidt, Civ. Law, 153, 154.

SOCIETAS (Lat.) In civil law. A contract in good faith made to share in common the profit and loss of a certain business or thing, or of all the possessions of the parties. Calv. Lex.; Inst. 3. 26; Dig. 17. 21. See "Partnership."

Also, companionship or partnership in good or evil. Cicero, pro S. Rosc. 34; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 38, § 18.

SOCIETAS LEONINA (Lat.) In Roman law. That kind of society or partnership by which the entire profits should belong to some of the partners, in exclusion of the rest.

It was so called in allusion to the fable of the lion and other animals, who, having entered into partnership for the purpose of hunting, the lion appropriated all the prey to himself. Dig. 17. 2. 29. 2; Poth. Traite de Societe, note 12. See 2 McCord (S. C.) 421; 6 Pick. (Mass.) 372.

SOCIETAS NAVALIS (Lat.) In European law. Naval partnership or company; the sailing of a number of vessels in company, for mutual protection. Otherwise called admiralitas. Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 2, c. 2; Id. lib. 3, c. 7.

SOCIETE (Fr.) In French law. Partnership. See "Commendam."

SOCIETE ANONYME. In French law. An association where the liability of all the partners is limited. It had in England until lately no other name than that of "chartered company," meaning thereby a joint-stock company whose shareholders, by a charter from the crown, or a special enactment of the legislature, stood exempted from any liability for the debts of the concern, beyond the amount of their subscriptions. 2 Mill, Pol. Econ. 485.

SOCIETE EN COMMENDITE. In Louisiana. A partnership formed by a contract by which one person or partnership agrees to furnish another person or partnership a certain amount, either in property or money, to be employed by the person or partnership to whom it is furnished, in his or their own name or firm, on condition of receiving a share in the profits, in the proportion determined by the contract, and of being liable to losses and expenses to the amount furnished, and no more. Civ. Code La. art. 2810; Code de Comm. 26, 33; 4 Pardessus, Dr. Com. note 1027; Dalloz, "Societe Commerciale," note 166. See "Commendam."

SOCIETY. In its abstract sense (used with no article prefixed), the public at large; the people; the body politic. In a concrete sense, a voluntary unincorporated association of persons for a common purpose.

SOCII MEI SOCIUS, MEUS SOCIUS NON est. The partner of my partner is not my partner. Dig. 50. 17. 47. 1.

SOCIUS. In the civil law, a partner.

SOCMAN. A tenant by socage.

SOCMANRY. Free tenure by socage.

SOCNA. A privilege, liberty, or franchise. Cowell.

SODOMITE. One who has been guilty of sodomy. Formerly, such offender was punished with great severity, and was deprived of the power of making a will.

SODOMY. A carnal copulation by human beings with each other against nature, or with a beast. 2 Bish. Crim. Law, § 1029.

A distinction not generally recognized has been made between bestiality and sodomy, the former being defined as carnal connection between a human being and a brute, and the latter as carnal connection between two human beings against the order of nature. 10 Ind. 355.

SOIT BAILE AUX COMMONS (Law Fr. let it be delivered to the commons). The form of indorsement on a bill when sent to the house of commons. Dyer, 93a.

SOIT BAILE AUX SEIGNEURS (Law Fr. let it be delivered to the lords). The form of indorsement on a bill in parliament when sent to the house of lords. Hob. 111a.

SOIT DROIT FAIT AL PARTIE. In English law. Let right be done to the party. A phrase written on a petition of right, and subscribed by the king. See "Petition of Rights."

SOIT FAIT COMME IL EST DESIRE (Law Fr. let it be as it is desired). The royal assent to private acts of parliament.

SOJOURNING (Fr. sejourner). Literally, dwelling for a day. "The term 'sojourning' means something more than 'traveling,' and applies to a temporary, as contradistinguished from a permanent, residence." 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 5.

SOKE REEVE. The lord's rent gatherer in the soca. Cowell.

SOKEMANRIES. Lands and tenements which were not held by knight service, nor by grand serjeanty, nor by petit, but by simple services; being, as it were, lands enfranchised by the king or his predecessors from their ancient demesne. Their tenants were "sokemans." Wharton.

SOKEMANS. In English law. Those who held their land in socage. 2 Bl. Comm. 100.

SOLA AC PER SE SENECTUS DONATIONEM TESTAMENTUM AUT TRANSACTIONEM NON VITIAT. Old age does not alone and of itself vitiate a will or a gift. 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 148, 158.

SOLAR DAY. That period of time which begins at sunrise and ends at sunset; the same as "artificial day." Co. Litt. 135a; 3 Chit. St. 1376, note.

SOLAR MONTH. A calendar month. Co. Litt. 135b; 1 W. Bl. 450; 1 Maule & S. 111; 1 Bing. 307; 3 Chit. St. 1375, note.

SOLARES. In Spanish law. Lots of ground. This term is frequently found in grants from the Spanish government of lands in America. 2 White, Coll. 474.

SOLARIUM (Lat.) In the civil law. A rent paid for the ground, where a person built on the public land. A ground rent. Spelman; Calv. Lex.

SOLATIUM. Compensation; damages allowed for injury to the feelings.

SOLD NOTE. The name of an instrument in writing, given by a broker to a buyer of merchandise, in which it is stated that the goods therein mentioned have been sold to him. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 435; Story, Ag. § 28. Some confusion may be found in the books as to the name of these notes. They are sometimes called "bought notes."

SOLE. Alone, single; used in contradistinction to "joint" or "married." A sole tenant, therefore, is one who holds lands in his own right, without being joined with any other. A feme sole is a single woman; a sole corporation is one composed of only one natural person.

SOLE CORPORATION. A corporation consisting of one person and his legal successors, thus having the attribute of perpetuity, as a bishop of the Roman Catholic Church or of the Church of England.

SOLE TENANT. He that holds lands by his own right only, without any other person being joined with him. Cowell.

SOLEMN. Formal; in regular form.

SOLEMN FORM. In English law. Probate may be granted either in solemn form or in common form.

Probate in solemn form is only employed when there is or is likely to be a dispute as to the validity of the will, and in such a case the person who wishes its validity to be established commences an action against the person who disputes it. The action proceeds as to pleadings, trial, etc., in the same way as an ordinary action. If the plaintiff makes out his case, the court pronounces for the validity of the will, and the executor may then take probate of it as if it had not been disputed. Coote, Prob. Prac. 250, 308. As a general rule, probate in solemn form is conclusive on all who are parties to the proceedings, or cognizant of them. Browne, Prob. Prac. 101.

Probate in common form is that "form which is slight and summary for ordinary and undisputed cases."

SOLEMN WAR. A war made in form by public declaration. See "War."

SOLEMNES LEGUM FORMULAE (Lat.) In the civil law. Solemn forms of laws; forms of forensic proceedings and of transacting legal acts. One of the sources of the unwritten law of Rome. Butler, Hor. Jur. 47.

SOLEMNITAS ATTACHIAMENTORUM (Law Lat.) In old English practice. Solemnity or formality of attachments. The issuing of attachments in a certain formal and regular order. Bracton, fols. 439, 440; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 480; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 65, § 5.

SOLEMNITATES JURIS SUNT OBSERVANDAE. The solemnities of law are to be observed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 13.

SOLEMNITY. The formality established by law to render a contract, agreement, or other act valid.

A marriage, for example, would not be valid if made in jest and without solemnity. See "Marriage;" Dig. 4. 1. 7; Id. 45. 1. 30.

SOLICITATION OF CHASTITY. The asking a person to commit adultery or fornication.

This, of itself, is not an indictable offense. Salk. 382; 2 Chit. Prac. 478. The contrary doctrine, however, has been held in Connecticut. 7 Conn. 267. In England, the bare solicitation of chastity is punished in the ecclesiastical courts. 2 Chit. Prac. 478. See 2 Strange, 1100; 10 Mod. 384; Sayer, 33; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 74; 2 Ld. Raym. 809.

The civil law punished arbitrarily the person who solicited the chastity of another. Dig. 47. 11. 1. See 3 Phillim. Ecc. Law, 508.

SOLICITOR. A person whose business is to be employed in the care and management of suits depending in courts of chancery.

A solicitor, like an attorney, will be required to act with perfect good faith towards his clients. He must conform to the authority given him. It is said that, to institute a suit, he must have a special authority, although a general authority will be sufficient to defend one. The want of a written authority may subject him to the expenses incurred in a suit. 3 Mer. 12; Hovenden, Frauds, c. 2, pp. 28-61. See 1 Phil. Ev. 102; 2 Chit. Prac. 2. See "Attorney."

SOLICITOR-GENERAL. In English law. A law officer of the crown, appointed by patent during the royal pleasure, and who assists the attorney general in managing the law business of the crown. Selden, 1. 6. 7. He is first in right of preaudience. 3 Bl. Comm. 28, n. (a), n. 9; Enc. Brit.

SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY. The title of one of the officers of the United States, created by Act May 29, 1830 (4 U. S. St. at Large, 414), which prescribes his duties and his rights.

His powers and duties are: First, those which were by law vested and required from the agent of the treasury of the United States. Second, those which theretofore belonged to the commissioner or acting commissioner of the revenue, relating to the superintendence of the collection of outstanding direct and internal duties. Third, to take charge of all lands which shall be conveyed to the United States, or set off to them in payment of debts, or which are vested in them by mortgage or other security; and to release such lands which had, at the passage of the act, become vested in the United States, on payment of the debt for which they were received. Fourth, generally to superintend the collection of debts due to the United States, and receive statements from different officers in relation to suits or actions commenced for the recovery of the same. Fifth, to instruct the district attorneys, marshals, and clerks of the circuit and district courts of the United States, in all matters and proceedings appertaining to suits in which the United States are a party or interested, and to cause them to report to him any information he may require in relation to the same. Sixth, to report to the proper officer from whom the evidence of debt was received the fact of its having been paid to him, and also all credits which have, by due course of law, been allowed on the same. Seventh, to make rules for the government of collectors, district attorneys, and marshals, as may be requisite. Eighth, to obtain from the district attorneys full accounts of all suits in their hands, and submit abstracts of the same to congress.

His rights are: First, to call upon the attorney general of the United States for advice and direction as to the manner of conducting the suits, proceedings, and prosecutions aforesaid. Second, to receive a salary of three thousand five hundred dollars per annum. Third, to employ, with the approbation of the secretary of the treasury, a clerk, with a salary of one thousand five hundred dollars, and a messenger, with a salary of five hundred dollars. Fourth, to receive and send all letters, relating to the business of his office, free of postage.

SOLICITOR TO THE SUITORS' FUND. An officer of the English court of chancery, who is appointed in certain cases guardian ad litem.

SOLIDO. See "In Solidum."

SOLIDUM (Lat.) In the civil law. A whole; an entire or undivided thing. See "In Solidum."

SOLINUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. Two plough lands, and somewhat less than a half. Co. Litt. 5a. Spelman defines it a plough land.

SOLO CEDIT QUOD SOLO IMPLANTATUR. What is planted in the soil belongs to the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 32; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1572.

SOLO CEDIT QUOD SOLO INAEDIFICATUR. Whatever is built on the soil belongs to the soil. Inst. 2. 1. 29. See 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 268; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1571.

SOLUM PROVINCIALE. In Roman law. The solum italicum (an extension of the old Ager Romanus) admitted full ownership, and of the application to it of usucapio; whereas the solum provinciale (an extension of the old Ager Publicus) admitted of a possessory title only, and of longi temporis possessio only. Justinian abolished all distinctions between the two, sinking the italicum to the level of the provinciale. Brown.

SOLUM REX HOC NON FACERE POTEST, QUOD NON POTEST INJUSTE AGERE. This alone the king cannot do,—he cannot act unjustly. 11 Coke, 72.

SOLUS DEUS HAEREDEM FACIT. God alone makes the heir. Co. Litt. 5.

SOLUTIO (Lat. release). In civil law. Payment. By this term is understood every species of discharge or liberation, which is called "satisfaction," and with which the creditor is satisfied. Dig. 46. 3. 54; Code, 8. 43. 17; Inst. 3. 30. This term has rather a reference to the substance of the obligation than to the numeration or counting of the money. Dig. 50. 16. 176.

SOLUTIO INDEBITI (Lat.) In civil law. The case where one has paid a debt, or done an act or remitted a claim, because he thought that he was bound in law to do so, when he was not. In such cases of mistake there is an implied obligation (quasi ex contractu) to pay back the money, etc. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 468.

SOLUTIO PRETII EMPTIONIS LOCO HABETUR. The payment of the price stands in the place of a sale. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 56.

SOLUTIONE FEODI MILITIS PARLIAMENTI, OR FEODI BURGENSIS PARLIAMENTI. Old writs whereby knights of the shire and burgesses might have recovered their wages or allowance if it had been refused. 35 Hen. VIII. c. 11.

SOLUTUS (Lat. from solvere, to loose).

——In the Civil Law. Loosed; freed from confinement; set at liberty. Dig. 50. 16. 48.

——In Scotch Practice. Purged. A term used in old depositions. See "Purged of Partial Counsel."

SOLVABILITE (Fr.) In French law. Ability to pay; solvency. Emerig. Tr. des Assur. c. 8, § 15.

SOLVENCY. The state of a person who is able to pay all his debts; the opposite of "insolvency" (q. v.)

Imports adequate means of a person to pay his debts, which embraces within its meaning the opportunity by reasonable diligence to convert and apply to such purpose. In other words, a person is deemed insolvent who at the time in question is unable to pay his debts in the ordinary course of business.

It means that the debtor is in such a condition that the demand may be collected out of his property by due course of law. Ability to raise money on credit for the payment of debts does not constitute solvency. 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 375, 377; 4 Hill (N. Y.) 650.

SOLVENDO (Lat. paying). An apt word of reserving a rent in old conveyances. Co. Litt. 47a.

SOLVENDO ESSE. To be in a state of solvency, i. e., able to pay.

SOLVENDO ESSE NEMO INTELLIGItur nisi qui solidum potest solvere. No one is considered to be solvent unless he can pay all that he owes. Dig. 50. 16. 114.

SOLVENT. One who has sufficient to pay his debts and all obligations. Dig. 50. 16. 114. The opposite of insolvent (q. v.)

SOLVENDUS (Lat.) In old English law. To be paid. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 64, § 3.

SOLVERE (Lat. to unbind; to untie). To release; to pay. Solvere dicimus eum qui fecit quod facere promisit. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 807.

SOLVIT (Lat. from solvere, q. v.) He paid; paid. 10 East, 206.

SOLVIT AD DIEM (Lat. he paid at the day). In pleading. The name of a plea to an action on a bond, or other obligation to pay money, by which the defendant pleads that he paid the money on the day it was due. See 1 Strange, 652; Rep. temp. Hardw. 133; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (2 W 29).

This plea ought to conclude with an averment, and not to the country. 1 Sid. 215; 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 253. See 2 Phil. Ev. 92; Coxe (N. J.) 467.

SOLVIT POST DIEM (Lat. he paid after the day). In pleading. The name of a special plea in bar to an action of debt on a bond, by which the defendant asserts that he paid the money after the day it became due. 1 Chit. Pl. 480, 555; 2 Phil. Ev. 93.

SOLVITUR ADHUC SOCIETAS ETIAM morte socii. A partnership is moreover dissolved by the death of a partner. Inst. 3. 26. 5; Dig. 17. 2.

SOLVITUR EO LIGAMINE QUO LIGAtur. In the same manner that a thing is bound it is unloosed. 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 582.

SOMERSETT'S CASE. A celebrated decision of the English king's bench, in 1771-72, affirming the extinction of villeinage, and the nonexistence of any other form of slavery in England.

SON ASSAULT DEMESNE (Law Fr. his own first assault). In pleading. A form of a plea to justify an assault and battery, by which the defendant asserts that the plaintiff committed an assault upon him, and the defendant merely defended himself.

When the plea is supported by evidence, it is a sufficient justification, unless the retaliation by the defendant were excessive, and bore no proportion to the necessity, or to the provocation received. 1 East, P. C. 406; 1 Chit. Prac. 595.

SONTAGE. A tax of forty shillings anciently laid upon every knight's fee. Cowell.

SONTICUS (Lat.) In the civil law. That which hurts or hinders; that which tends to delay or put off.

SOREHON, or SORN. An arbitrary exaction, formerly existing in Scotland and Ireland. Whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel, he came down among the tenants with his followers by way of contempt, called "gilliwitfitts," and lived on free quarters. See Bell, Dict.

SORNER. In Scotch law. A person who takes meat and drink from others by force or menaces, without paying for it. Bell, Dict.

SORS (Lat.)

——In Civil Law. A lot; chance; fortune. Calv. Lex.; Ainsworth. Sort; kind. The little scroll on which the thing to be drawn by lot was written. Carpentier. A principal or capital sum; e. g., the capital of a partnership. Calv. Lex.

——In Old English Law. A principal lent on interest, as distinguished from the interest itself. Pryn, Collect. tom. 2, p. 161; Cowell.

SORTITIO (Lat. from sortiri, to cast or draw lots). In the civil law. A casting or drawing of lots; a determination or choice by lot. Sortitio judicum, a drawing of judges (judices) on criminal trials, resembling the modern practice of drawing a jury. Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 13, No. 20; 3 Bl. Comm. 366.

SOUL SCOT. A mortuary, or customary gift due ministers, in many parishes of England, on the death of parishioners. It was originally voluntary, and intended as amends for ecclesiastical dues neglected to be paid in the lifetime. 2 Bl. Comm. 425*.

SOUND MIND. That state of a man's mind which is adequate to reason, and comes to a judgment upon ordinary subjects like other rational men.

SOUNDING IN DAMAGES. When an action is brought, not for the recovery of lands, goods, or sums of money (as is the case in real or mixed actions, or the personal action of debt or detinue), but for damages only, as in covenant, trespass, etc., the action is said to be sounding in damages, Steph. Pl. 126, 127.

SOUS SEING PRIVE. In Louisiana. An act or contract evidenced by writing under the private signature of the parties to it. The term is used in opposition to the "authentic act," which is an agreement entered into in the presence of a notary or other public officer.

The form of the instrument does not give it its character so much as the fact that it appears or does not appear to have been executed before the officer. 5 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 196; 7 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 548.

The effect of a sous seing prive is not the same as that of the "authentic act." The former cannot be given in evidence until proved, and, unless accompanied by possession, it does not, in general, affect third persons. 6 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 429, 432. The latter, or authentic acts, are full evidence against the parties and those who claim under them. 8 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 132.

SOUTH SEA FUND. The produce of the taxes appropriated to pay the interest of such part of the English national debt as was advanced by the South Sea Company and its annuitants. The holders of South Sea annuities have been paid off, or have received other stock in lieu thereof. 2 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 578.

SOVEREIGNTY. The union and exercise of all human power possessed in a state. It is a combination of all power; it is the power to do everything in a state without accountability,—to make laws, to execute and to apply them, to impose and collect taxes and levy contributions, to make war or peace, to form treaties of alliance or of commerce with foreign nations, and the like. Story, Const. § 207.

Abstractly, sovereignty resides in the body of the nation, and belongs to the people; but these powers are generally exercised by delegation.

When analyzed, sovereignty is naturally divided into three great powers, namely, the legislative, the executive, and the judiciary. The first is the power to make new laws, and to correct and repeal the old; the second is the power to execute the laws, both at home and abroad; and the last is the power to apply the laws to particular facts, to judge the disputes which arise among the citizens, and to punish crimes.

Strictly speaking, in our republican forms of government the absolute sovereignty of the nation is in the people of the nation; and the residuary sovereignty of each state, not granted to any of its public functionaries, is in the people of the state. 2 Dall. (U. S.) 471. And see, generally, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 433, 455; 3 Dall. (U. S.) 93; 1 Story, Const. § 208; 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 20; Merlin, Repert.

SOWMING and ROWMING. In Scotch law. Terms used to express the form by which the number of cattle brought upon a common by those having a servitude of pasturage may be justly proportioned to the rights of the different persons possessed of the servitude. Bell, Dict.

SOWNE. In old English law. To be leviable. An old exchequer term applied to sheriff's returns. "Estreats that sowne not" were such as could not be collected. 4 Inst. 107; Cowell; Spelman.

SPADONES (Lat.) In civil law. Those who, on account of their temperament or some accident they have suffered, are unable to procreate. Inst. 1. 11. 9; Dig. 1. 7. 2. 1. And see "Impotence."

SPARSIM (Lat.) Here and there; in a scattered manner; sparsedly; dispersedly. It is sometimes used in law; for example, the plaintiff may recover the place wasted, not only where the injury has been total, but where trees growing sparsim in a close are cut. Bac. Abr. "Waste" (M); Brownl. 240; Co. Litt. 54a; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3690.

SPATAE PLACITUM. A court for the speedy execution of justice upon military delinquents. Cowell.

SPEAKING DEMURRER. In pleading. One which alleges new matter in addition to that contained in the bill as a cause for demurrer. 4 Brown, Ch. 254; 2 Ves. Jr. 83; 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 374.

SPECIAL. That which relates to a particular species or kind, or is confined to a particular person, object, or class, opposed to general; as, special verdict and general verdict; special imparlance and general imparlance; special jury, or one selected for a particular case, and general jury; special issue and general issue, etc.

SPECIAL ACCEPTANCE. A qualified acceptance of a bill of exchange, as by stipulating for payment at a certain time or place.

SPECIAL ACT. A private statute (q. v.)

SPECIAL ADMINISTRATION. See "Administration."

SPECIAL AGENT. An agent whose authority is confined to a particular or an individual instance. It is a general rule that he who is invested with a special authority must act within the bounds of his authority, and he cannot bind his principal beyond what he is authorized to do. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1299; 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 48; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 48; 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 44; 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 494; 1 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 174. See "Agent."

SPECIAL ALLOWANCES. In taxing the costs of an action as between party and party, the taxing officer is, in certain cases, empowered to make special allowances; i. e., to allow the party costs which the ordinary scale does not warrant.

SPECIAL APPEARANCE. See "Appearance."

SPECIAL ASSUMPSIT. In practice. An action of assumpsit brought on a special contract, which the plaintiff declares upon setting out its particular language or its legal effect.

It is distinguished from a general assumpsit, where the plaintiff, instead of setting out the particular language or effect of the original contract, declares as for a debt arising out of the execution of the contract, where that constitutes the debt. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3426.

SPECIAL BAIL. See "Bail."

SPECIAL BASTARD. One born of parents before marriage, the parents afterwards intermarrying. See "Bastard."

SPECIAL CASE. The name given in English practice to an agreed statement of facts, on which a cause is submitted to the court without trial. Also the statement of facts on which a point reserved for further consideration or for reference to another court is heard.

SPECIAL CLAIM. In English law. A claim not enumerated in the orders of 22d April, 1850, which required the leave of the court of chancery to file it. Such claims are abolished.

SPECIAL COMMISSION. In English law. An extraordinary commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, issued by the crown to the judges when it is necessary that offenses should be immediately tried and punished. Wharton.

SPECIAL CONSTABLE. A person appointed and sworn as a constable in an emergency to augment the constabulary, or to serve during disability or disqualification of the constable.

SPECIAL CONTRACT. A specialty.

SPECIAL COUNT. A statement of the facts of the particular case, as opposed to the common counts (q. v.)

SPECIAL CUSTOM. A local custom. See "Custom."

SPECIAL DAMAGES. The damages recoverable for the actual injury incurred through the peculiar circumstance of the individual case, above and beyond those presumed by law from the general nature of the wrong. See "Damages."

SPECIAL DEMURRER. In pleading. One which excepts to the sufficiency of the pleadings on the opposite side, and shows specifically the nature of the objection and the particular ground of the exception. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3022. See "Demurrer."

SPECIAL DEPOSIT. A deposit made of a particular thing with the depositary. It is distinguished from an irregular deposit.

——In Banking Law. A deposit which is to be returned in specie.

SPECIAL ELECTION. An election specially called for an emergency, as opposed to general election (q. v.)

SPECIAL ERRORS. Special pleas in error are those which assign for error matters in confession and avoidance, as a release of errors, the act of limitations, and the like, to which the plaintiff in error may reply or demur.

SPECIAL EXAMINER. An examiner in chancery appointed to take evidence in a particular suit.

SPECIAL EXECUTOR. See "Executor."

SPECIAL FINDING. A finding by the jury of a particular ultimate fact material to the issue.

SPECIAL GUARANTY. See "Guaranty."

SPECIAL GUARDIAN. A guardian of limited or temporary power in respect of his ward, or of his ward's estate. A guardian of a particular fund, appointed because of the general guardian's adverse interest, or one who exercises general powers during a limited time, as where the general guardian is disqualified or incapacitated, are examples. In the broadest sense, guardians ad litem are special, but the term is not usually applied to them, and under the laws of some states, notably New York, they are distinct.

SPECIAL IMPARLANCE. In pleading. An imparlance which contains the clause, "saving to himself all advantages and exceptions, as well to the writ as to the declaration aforesaid." 2 Chit. Pl. 407, 408. See "Imparlance."

SPECIAL INDORSEMENT. An indorsement of a note or bill, naming the indorsee.

SPECIAL INDORSEMENT OF WRIT. In English practice. The writ of summons in an action may, under Order iii. 6, be indorsed with the particulars of the amount sought to be recovered in the action, after giving credit for any payment or set-off; and this special indorsement (as it is called) of the writ is applicable in all actions where the plaintiff seeks merely to recover a debt or liquidated demand in money payable by the defendant, with or without interest, arising upon a contract, express or implied, as, for instance, on a bill of exchange, promissory note, check, or other simple contract debt, or on a bond or contract under seal for payment of a liquidated amount of money, or on a statute where the sum sought to be recovered is a fixed sum of money, or in the nature of a debt, or on a guaranty, whether under seal or not. Brown.

SPECIAL ISSUE. In pleading. A plea to the action which denies some particular material allegation, which is in effect a denial of the entire right of action. It differs from the general issue, which traverses or denies the whole declaration or indictment. Gould, Pl. c. 2, § 38. See "General Issue."

SPECIAL JURISDICTION. Limited jurisdiction.

SPECIAL JURY. One selected in a particular way by the parties. See "Jury."

SPECIAL LAW. See "Statute."

SPECIAL LEGACY. A "specific legacy" (q. v.)

SPECIAL LIEN. A particular lien. See "Lien."

SPECIAL MALICE. Express malice. See "Malice.'

SPECIAL MATTER. Matter of special defense admitted under the general issue by a relaxation of the common-law rules of pleading. 3 Bl. Comm. 306. See "Special Plea."

SPECIAL MEETING. A meeting called for and limited to the transaction of a specified business. Applied to corporate meetings, including meetings of municipal councils or assembles.

SPECIAL NON EST FACTUM. The name of a plea by which the defendant says that the deed which he has executed is not his own, or binding upon him, because of some circumstance which shows that it was not intended to be his deed, or because it was not binding upon him for some lawful reason; as, when the defendant delivered the deed to a third person as an escrow to be delivered upon a condition, and it has been delivered without the performance of the condition, he may plead non est factum, state the fact of the conditional delivery, the nonperformance of the condition, and add, "and so it is not his deed;" or if the defendant be a feme covert, she may plead non est factum, that she was a feme covert at the time the deed was made, "and so it is not her deed." Bac. Abr. "Pleas," etc. (H 3, I 2); Gould, Pl. c. 6, pt. 1, § 64. See "Issint."

SPECIAL OCCUPANT. When an estate is granted to a man and his heirs during the life of cestui que vie, and the grantee die without alienation, and while the life for which he held continues, the heir will succeed, and is called a "special occupant." 2 Bl. Comm. 259. In the United States, the statute provisions of the different states vary considerably upon this subject. In New York and New Jersey, special occupancy is abolished. Virginia, and probably Maryland, follow the English statutes. In Massachusetts and other states, where the real and personal estates of intestates are distributed in the same way and manner, the question does not seem to be material. 4 Kent, Comm. 27.

SPECIAL OFFICER. One who has been appointed a constable for a particular occasion, as in the case of an actual tumult or a riot, or for the purpose of serving a particular process.

SPECIAL OWNER. One having a special property. See "Property."

SPECIAL PAPER. A list kept in the English courts of common law, and now in the queen's bench, common pleas, and exchequer divisions of the high court, in which list demurrers, special cases, etc., to be argued are set down. It is distinguished from the new trial paper, peremptory paper, crown paper, revenue paper, etc., according to the practice of the particular division.

SPECIAL PARTNER. See "Partner."

SPECIAL PARTNERSHIP. See "Partnership."

SPECIAL PLEA. A plea by which alleged matter to distinguish away or palliate the charge in the declaration. They were various, limitations and estoppel being examples of matters so to be pleaded.

SPECIAL PLEA IN BAR. One which advances new matter. It differs from the general in this, that the latter denies some material allegation, but never advances new matter. Gould, Pl. c. 2, § 38.

SPECIAL PLEADER. In English practice. A lawyer whose professional occupation is to give verbal or written opinions upon statements submitted to him, either in writing or verbally, and to draw pleadings, civil or criminal, and such practical proceedings as may be out of the general course. 2 Chit. Prac. 42.

SPECIAL PLEADING. The science of pleading.

The allegation of special or new matter to avoid the effect of the previous allegations of the opposite party, as distinguished from a direct denial of matter previously alleged on the opposite side. Gould, Pl. c. 1, § 18; 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 246; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (E 15).

SPECIAL PROCEEDINGS. A phrase used in the codes of procedure to denote all proceedings other than actions.

SPECIAL PROPERTY. That property in a thing which gives a qualified or limited right. See "Property."

SPECIAL REQUEST. A request actually made, at a particular time and place. This term is used in contradistinction to a "general request," which need not state the time when nor place where made. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2843.

SPECIAL RESTRAINT OF TRADE. See "Restraint of Trade."

SPECIAL RULE. A rule or order of court made in a particular case, for a particular purpose. It is distinguished from a "general rule," which applies to a class of cases. It differs also from a "common rule," or "rule of course."

SPECIAL SERVICE. In Scotch law. That form of service by which the heir is served to the ancestor who was feudally vested in the lands. Bell, Dict.

SPECIAL SESSIONS. In English law. A meeting of two or more justices of the peace held for a special purpose (such as the licensing of alehouses), either as required by statute, or when specially convoked, which can only be convened after notice to all the other magistrates of the division, to give them an opportunity of attending. See "Statute."

SPECIAL STATUTE. A private statute. See "Statute."

SPECIAL TAIL. Where an estate tail is limited to the children of two given parents, as to "A. and the heirs of his body by B., his wife." 1 Steph. Comm. 244.

SPECIAL TERM. A term of court called for a special occasion, as distinguished from the regular terms held at times appointed by law.

SPECIAL TRAVERSE. See "Traverse."

SPECIAL TRUST. A special trust is one where a trustee is interposed for the execution of some purpose particularly pointed out, and is not, as in the case of a simple trust, a mere passive depositary of the estate, but is required to exert himself actively in the execution of the settlor's intention; as, where a conveyance is made to trustees upon trust to reconvey, or to sell for the payment of debts. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1896. See "Trust."

SPECIAL VERDICT. In practice. A special verdict is one by which the facts of the case are put on the record, and the law is submitted to the judges. See "Verdict;" Bac. Abr. "Verdict" (D).

SPECIALIA GENERALIBUS DEROGANT. Special words derogate from general words. A special provision as to a particular subject matter is to be preferred to general language, which might have governed in the absence of such special provision. L. R. 1 C. P. 546.

SPECIALTY. A writing sealed and delivered, containing some agreement. 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 503; Willes, 189; 1 P. Wms. 130; 10 Ga. 167. A writing sealed and delivered, which is given as a security for the payment of a debt, in which such debt is particularly specified. Bac. Abr. "Obligation" (A).

Although in the body of the writing it is not said that the parties have set their hands and seals, yet if the instrument be really sealed, it is a specialty, and, if it be not sealed, it is not a specialty, although the parties in the body of the writing make mention of a seal. 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 504; 2 Coke, 5a. See "Bond;" "Debt;" "Obligation."

SPECIALTY DEBT. A debt due or acknowledged to be due by deed or instrument under seal. 2 Bl. Comm. 465.

SPECIE. Metallic money issued by public authority.

This term is used in contradistinction to "paper money," which in some countries is emitted by the government, and is a mere engagement which represents specie. Bank paper in the United States is also called "paper money." See "In Specie."

SPECIES (Lat.) In the civil law. Form; figure; fashion or shape; a form or shape given to materials. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 277, § 265.

A particular thing; as distinguished from "genus."

SPECIES FACTI (Lat.) The particular kind of act. Ainsworth.

SPECIFIC. Having a certain form or designation; observing a certain form; particular; precise. Burrill.

SPECIFIC DEVISES. Devises of lands particularly specified in the terms of the devise, as opposed to general and residuary devises of land, in which the local or other particular descriptions are not expressed. For example, "I devise my Hendon Hall estate" is a specific devise; but "I devise all my lands," or, "all other my lands," is a general devise or a residuary devise. But all devises are, in effect, specific; even residuary devises being so. L. R. 3 Ch. 420; L. R. 10 Ch. 136; Brown.

SPECIFIC LEGACY. A bequest of a particular thing, so described that it may be identified. The description may be such as to distinguish a particular article among several of the class owned by testator, or it may embrace all the property of a class owned by him. Thus, a legacy of "one set of blacksmith's tools" is general (8 N. Y. 520); but a legacy of "the diamond ring presented to me by A.," or of "all the personal property on the farm or in the house at the time of my death" (30 Hun [N. Y.] 531), is specific.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. The actual accomplishment of a contract by the party bound to fulfill it.

An equitable remedy to compel the precise or substantial performance of a contract.

The right to the remedy was in its origin dependent on the inadequacy of the legal remedy by suit for damages, but this rule has been very much relaxed. 2 N. Y. 60; 7 Ill. 327.

SPECIFICATIO (Lat.) In civil law. The process by which, from material either of one kind or different kinds, either belonging to the person using them or to another, a new form or thing is created; as, if from gold or gold and silver a cup be made, or from grapes wine. Calv. Lex. Whether the property in the new article was in the owner of the materials, or in him who effected the change, was a matter of contest between the two great sects of Roman lawyers. Stair, Inst. p. 204, § 41; Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 241.

SPECIFICATION. A particular and detailed account of a thing.

For example, in order to obtain a patent for an invention, it is necessary to file a specification or an instrument of writing, which must lay open and disclose to the public every part of the process by which the invention can be made useful. If the specification does not contain the whole truth relative to the discovery, or contains more than is requisite to produce the desired effect, and the concealment or addition was made for the purpose of deception, the patent would be void; for if the specification were insufficient on account of its want of clearness, exactitude, or good faith, it would be a fraud on society that the patentee should obtain a monopoly without giving up his invention. 2 Kent, Comm. 300; 1 Bell, Comm. pt. 2, c. 3, § 1, p. 112; Perpigna, Pat. 67; Renouard des Brevets d'Inv. 252. See "Patent."

——In Military Law. The clear and particular description of the charges preferred against a person accused of a military offense. Tytler, Mil. Law, 109.

SPECIMEN. A sample; a part of something by which the other may be known.

Act Cong. July 4, 1836, § 6, requires the inventor or discoverer of an invention or discovery to accompany his petition and specification for a patent with specimens of ingredients, and of the composition of matter, sufficient in quantity for the purpose of experiment, where the invention or discovery is of the composition of matter.

SPECULATION. The hope or desire of making a profit by the purchase and resale of a thing. Pardessus, Dr. Com. note 12. The profit so made; as, he made a good speculation.

SPECULATIVE DAMAGES. See "Damages."

SPECULUM (Lat.) Mirror or looking glass. The title of several of the most ancient law books or compilations. One of the ancient Icelandic books is styled Speculum Regale. In the preface to this work, four others, bearing the same title of Speculum, are referred to. There is also a collection of the ancient laws of Pomerania and Prussia, under the same title. Barr. Obs. St. 1, 2, note (b).

SPEEDY EXECUTION. An execution which, by the direction of the judge at nisi prius, issues forthwith, or on some early day fixed upon by the judge for that purpose after the trial of the action. Brown.

SPEEDY TRIAL. A trial brought on as speedily as the prosecution can reasonably be expected or required to be ready for it. 4 Nev. 113; 74 Iowa, 369.

SPENDTHRIFT. A person who, by excessive drinking, gaming, idleness, or debauchery of any kind, shall so spend, waste, or lessen his estate as to expose himself or his family to want or suffering, or expose the town to charge or expense for the support of himself or family. Rev. St. Vt. c. 65, § 9.

SPENDTHRIFT TRUST. A trust created for the purpose of providing for the maintenance of a person, and at the same time putting the property from which such maintenance is derived beyond the reach of the improvidence of the beneficiary. It is generally held that such trusts are ineffective, on the ground that the beneficial interest of the cestui que trust, whatever it may be, is liable for his debts (5 Wall. [U. S.] 441; 15 Ohio St. 419); but in some states, such trust provisions have been upheld (20 Mo. App. 1; 86 Tenn. 81).

SPERATE (Lat. spero, to hope). That of which there is hope.

In the accounts of an executor and the inventory of the personal assets, he should distinguish between those which are sperate and those which are desperate. He will be prima facie responsible for the former, and discharged for the latter. 1 Chit. Prac. 520; 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 644; Toller, Ex'rs, 248. See "Desperate."

SPES EST VIGILANTIS SOMNIUM. Hope is the dream of the vigilant. 4 Inst. 203.

SPES IMPUNITATIS CONTINUUM AFfectum tribuit delinquendi. The hope of impunity holds out a continual temptation to crime. 3 Inst. 236.

SPES RECUPERANDI (Lat. the hope of recovery). A term applied to cases of capture of an enemy's property as a booty or prize, while it remains in a situation in which it is liable to be recaptured. As between the belligerent parties, the title to the property taken as a prize passes the moment there is no longer any hope of recovery. 2 Burrows, 683.

SPINSTER. An addition given, in legal writings, to a woman who never was married. Lovelace, Wills, 269.

SPIRITUAL CORPORATIONS. Corporations, the members of which are entirely spiritual persons, and incorporated as such, for the furtherance of religion, and perpetuating the rights of the church. They are of two sorts,—sole, as bishops, certain deans, parsons, and vicars, or aggregate, as dean and chapter, prior and convent, etc.

SPIRITUAL COURTS. Ecclesiastical courts (q. v.)

SPIRITUAL LORDS. The archbishops and bishops of the house of lords. 2 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 328.

SPIRITUALITY OF BENEFICES. The tithes of land, etc.

SPIRITUOUS LIQUORS. These are inflammable liquids produced by distillation, and forming an article of commerce. 1 Exch. 281. The term does not include fermented liquors, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 118.

SPITAL, or SPITTLE. A charitable foundation; a hospital for diseased people. Cowell.

SPLIT. See "Gambling Contract."

SPLITTING A CAUSE OF ACTION. The bringing an action for only a part of the cause of action. This is not permitted either at law or in equity. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4167.

SPOLIATION.

——In English Ecclesiastical Law. The name of a suit sued out in the spiritual court to recover for the fruits of the church, or for the church itself. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 85.

A waste of church property by an ecclesiastical person. 3 Bl. Comm. 90.

——In Torts. Destruction of a thing by the act of a stranger; as, the erasure or alteration of a writing by the act of a stranger is called "spoliation." This has not the effect to destroy its character or legal effect. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 566.

——In Admiralty Law. By spoliation is also understood the total destruction of a thing; as, the spoliation of papers by the captured party is generally regarded as a proof of guilt; but in America it is open to explanation except in certain cases, where there is a vehement presumption of bad faith. 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 227, 241; 1 Dods. Adm. 480, 486. See "Alteration."

SPOLIATOR (Lat. from spoliare, to despoil). In old English law. A despoiler; aa disseisor. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 2, §§ 19, 20, 22.

A destroyer (of a deed). See "In Odium Spoliatoris."

SPOLIATUS DEBET ANTE OMNIA RESTituti. He who has been despoiled ought to be restored before anything else. 2 Inst. 714; 4 Bl. Comm. 353.

SPOLIUM. In the civil and common law. A thing violently or unlawfully taken from another. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 261, note.

SPONDEO (Lat.) In the civil law. I undertake; I engage. Inst. 3. 16. 1.

SPONDES? SPONDEO (Lat.) Do you undertake? I do undertake. The most common form of verbal stipulation in the Roman law. Inst. 3. 16. 1.

SPONDET PERITIAM ARTIS. He promises to use the skill of his art. Poth. de Contr. du Louage, note 425; Jones, Bailm. 22, 53, 62, 97, 120; Domat, liv. 1, tit. 4, § 8, note 1; 1 Story, Bailm. § 431; 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 459; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1004.

SPONSALIA, or STIPULATIO SPONSALITIA (Lat.) A promise lawfully made between persons capable of marrying each other, that at some future time they will marry. See "Espousals;" Ersk. Inst. 1. 6. 3.

SPONSIA JUDICIALIS. The feigned issue of the Romans. See "Feigned Issue."

SPONSIO (Lat.) In the civil law. An engagement or undertaking; particularly such as was made in the form of an answer to a formal interrogatory by the other party. Calv. Lex.; Dig. 50. 16. 7.

An engagement to pay a certain sum of money to the successful party in a cause. Calv. Lex.

SPONSIO LUDICRA (Lat.)

——In Scotch Law. A trifling or ludicrous engagement, such as a court will not sustain an action for. 1 Kames, Eq. Introd. 34.

——In the Civil Law. An informal undertaking, or one made without the usual formula of interrogation. Calv. Lex.

SPONSIONS. In international law. Agreements or engagements made by certain public officers, as generals or admirals, in time of war, either without authority or by exceeding the limits of authority under which they purport to be made.

Before these conventions can have any binding authority on the state, they must be confirmed by express or tacit ratification. The former is given in positive terms and in the usual forms; the latter is justly implied from the fact of acting under the agreement as if bound by it, and from any other circumstance from which an assent may be fairly presumed. Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 3. c. 2, § 3; Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 2, c. 15, § 16; Id. lib. 3, c. 22, §§ 1-3; Vattel, Law Nat. bk. 2, c. 14, §§ 209-212; Wolff. Inst. § 1156.

SPONSOR. In civil law. He who intervenes for another voluntarily and without being requested. The engagement which he enters into is only accessory to the principal. See Dig. 17. 1. 18; Nov. 4. 1; Code de Comm. arts. 158, 159; Code Nap. 1236; Wolff. Inst. § 1556.

SPONTE OBLATA. A free gift or present to the crown.

SPONTE VIRUM FUGIENS MULIER ET adultera facta, doti sua careat, nisi sponte retracta. A woman leaving her husband of her own accord, and committing adultery, loses her dower, unless her husband takes her back of his own accord. Co. Litt. 37.

SPORTULA, or SPORTELLA. A dole or largess, either of meat or money, given by princes or great men to the poor. It was properly the pannier or basket in which the meat was brought, or with which the poor went to beg it, thence the word was transferred to the meat itself, and thence to money sometimes given in lieu of it. Enc. Lond.

SPOUSALS. In old English law. Mutual promises to marry.

SPOUSE BREACH. In old English law. Adultery. Cowell.

SPREAD. See "Gambling Contract."

SPRINGING USE. A use limited to arise on a future event, where no preceding use is limited, and which does not take effect in derogation of any other interest than that which results to the grantor, or remains in him in the meantime. Gilb. Uses (Sugden Ed.) 153, note; 2 Crabb, Real Prop. 498.

A future use, either vested or contingent, limited to arise without any preceding limitation. Cornish, Uses, 91.

In differs from a remainder in not requiring any other particular estate to sustain it than the use resulting to the one who creates it, intermediate between its creation and the subsequent taking effect of the springing use. Dyer, 274; Poll. 65; 1 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 34; 4 Dru. & W. 27; 1 Mod. 238; 1 Me. 271. It differs from an executory devise in that a devise is created by will, a use by deed. Fearne, Cont. Rem. 385 (Butler's note); Wilson, Uses. It differs from a shifting use, though often confounded therewith. See, generally, 2 Washb. Real Prop. 281. See "Use."

SPULZIE (spoliatio). In Scotch law. The taking away movables without the consent of the owner or order of law. Stair, Inst. 96, § 16; Bell, Dict.

SPURIUS (Lat.) In the civil law. A bastard; the offspring of promiscuous cohabitation, otherwise called vulgo quaesitus, or conceptus. Inst. 1. 10. 12.

One born of an unlawful intercourse (ex nuptiis injustis, or ex damnato coitu). Inst. 1. 10. 12; Bracton, fol. 63.

SPY. One who penetrates secretly or in disguise or by false pretenses within military lines for the purpose of obtaining information to be used to the disadvantage of the forces so spied upon.

SQUATTER. One who settles on the lands of others without any legal authority. This term is applied particularly to persons who settle on the public land. 3 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 293; 5 Biss. (U. S.) 530.

SQUEEZED. See "Gambling Contract."

STAB. To make a wound with a pointed instrument. A stab differs from a cut or a wound. 3 La. Ann. 514; Russ. & R. 356; Russ. Crimes, 597; Bac. Abr. "Maihem" (B).

STABILIA. A writ called by that name, founded on a custom in Normandy, that where a man in power claimed land in the possession of an inferior, he petitioned the prince that it might be put into his hands till the right was decided, whereupon he had this writ. Wharton.

STABIT PRAESUMPTIO DONEC PROBetur in contrarium. A presumption will stand good until the contrary is proved. Hob. 297; 3 Bl. Comm. 371; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 852; 16 Mass. 87.

STABLE STAND. In forest law. One of the four evidences or presumptions whereby a man was convicted of an intent to steal the king's deer in the forest. This was when a man was found at his standing in the forest with a cross-bow or long-bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer, or else standing close by a tree with greyhounds in a leash, ready to slip. Cowell.

STABULARII (Lat. pl. of stabularius). In the civil law. Stable keepers; hostlers; qui stabulum exercent. Dig. 4. 9. 1. 5; Story, Bailm. § 464.

STAGE RIGHT. Words which it has been attempted to introduce as a substitute for "the right of representation and performance," but it can hardly be said to be an accepted term of English or American law.

STAGNUM (Lat.) A pool. It is said to consist of land and water, and therefore by the name of stagnum the water and the land may be passed. Co. Litt. 5.

STAKEHOLDER. A third person chosen by two or more persons to keep in deposit property the right or possession of which is contested between them, and to be delivered to the one who shall establish his right to it. Thus, each of them is considered as depositing the whole thing. This distinguishes this contract from that which takes place when two or more tenants in common deposit a thing with a bailee. Domat, Lois Civ. liv. 1, tit. 7, § 4; 1 Vern. 44, note 1.

A person having in his hands money or other property claimed by several others is considered in equity as a stakeholder. 1 Vern. 144.

STALE DEMAND. A claim which has been for a long time undemanded; as, for example, where there has been a delay of twelve years unexplained. 3 Mason (U. S.) 161.

STALLAGE (Saxon, stal). The liberty or right of pitching or erecting stalls in fairs or markets, or the money paid for the same. Blount; Wharton; 6 Q. B. 31.

STALLARIUS (Lat.) In Saxon law. The praefectus stabuli, now master of the horse (Saxon, stalstabulum). Blount. Sometimes one who has a stall in a fair or market. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 28, p. 13.

STAMP. An impression made by order of the government, on paper, which must be used in reducing certain contracts to writing, for the purpose of raising a revenue. See Starkie, Ev.; 1 Phil. Ev. 444.

A paper bearing an impression or device authorized by law, and adapted for attachment to some subject of duty or excise.

The term in American law is used often in distinction from "stamped paper," which latter meaning, as well as that of the device or impression itself, is included in the broader signification of the word.

Stamps or stamped paper are prepared under the direction of officers of the government, and sold at a price equal to the duty or excise to be collected. The stamps are affixed and cancelled; and where stamped paper is used, one use obviously prevents a second use. The internal revenue acts of the United States of 1862 and subsequent years require stamps to be affixed to a great variety of subjects, under severe penalties in the way of fines, and also under penalty of invalidating written instruments, and rendering them incapable of being produced in evidence. Neither the system nor the law upon the subject, however, has become sufficiently established to warrant a full examination of the matter here.

STAND. To abide by a thing; to submit to a decision; to comply with an agreement; to have validity; as, the judgment must stand.

STANDARD.

——In War. An ensign or flag used in war.

——In Measures. A weight or measure of certain dimensions, to which all other weights and measures must correspond; as, a standard bushel. Also, the quality of certain metals, to which all others of the same kind ought to be made to conform; as, standard gold, standard silver.

STANDING ASIDE. A practice prevailing in England and a few of the United States in the selection of jurors in a criminal case, whereby the prosecuting attorney may peremptorily put aside a juror without challenge until the panel is exhausted, at which time the jurors so put aside are called, and cause must be shown against them.

STANDING MUTE. Refusal of one charged with crime to plead to the charge, or, after plea of not guilty, to put himself upon the country.

STANDING SEISED TO USES. See "Covenant to Stand Seized to Uses."

STANNARY COURTS (stannary, from Lat. stannum, Cornish, stean, tin,—a tin mine). In English law. Courts of record, in Devonshire and Cornwall, England, for the administration of justice among the tinners therein. They are of the same limited and exclusive nature as those of the counties palatine.

STAPLE. In international law. The right of staple, as exercised by a people upon foreign merchants, is defined to be that they may not allow them to set their merchandises and wares to sale but in a certain place.

This practice is not in use in the United States. 1 Chit. Com. Law, 103; 4 Inst. 238; Malone, Lex. Merc. 237; Bac. Abr. "Execution" (B 1). See "Statute Staple."

STAR CHAMBER. See "Court of Star Chamber."

STARE DECISIS. To abide by or adhere to decided cases. It is a general rule that, when a point has been settled by a decision, it becomes a precedent which should be followed in subsequent cases before the same court. The rule is based wholly on policy, in the interest of uniformity and certainty of the law, but is frequently departed from. See "Rule of Property."

STARE DECISIS, ET NON QUIETA MOvere. To adhere to precedents, and not to unsettle things which are established. 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 395, 428; 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 504, 507; 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 336, 340; 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 119, 142; 4 Hill (N. Y.) 271, 323; 4 Hill (N. Y.) 592, 595; 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 97, 106.

STARE IN JUDICIO (Lat.) To appear before a tribunal, either as plaintiff or defendant.

STAT PRO RATIONE VOLUNTAS. The will stands in place of a reason. 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 408, 411; 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 514, 525.

STAT PRO RATIONE VOLUNTAS POPuli. The will of the people stands in place of a reason. 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 344, 376.

STATE (Lat. stare, to place, establish).

——In Governmental Law. A self-sufficient body of persons united together in one community for the defense of their rights, and to do right and justice to foreigners. In this sense, the state means the whole people united into one body politic; and the "state," and the "people of the state," are equivalent expressions. 1 Pet. Cond. Rep. (U. S.) 37-39; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 425; 3 Dall. (Pa.) 93; 2 Wilson, Lect. 120; Dane, Abr. Append. § 50, p. 63; 1 Story, Const. § 361. A body governmental and politic, comprising all the human beings within a certain defined territory, organized for the purpose of governing, and which does supremely govern, within the limits of that territory. The positive or actual organization of the legislative or judicial powers; thus, the actual government of the state is designated by the name of the state; hence the expression, the state has passed such a law or prohibited such an act. The section of territory occupied by a state; as, the state of Pennsylvania.

One of the commonwealths which form the United States of America.

——In Practice. To make known specifically; to explain particularly; as, to state an account, or to show the different items in an account; to state the cause of action in a declaration.

STATE OF FACTS AND PROPOSAL. In English lunacy practice, when a person has been found a lunatic, the next step is to submit to the master a scheme called a "state of facts and proposal," showing what is the position in life, property, and income of the lunatic, who are his next of kin and heir at law, who are proposed as his committees, and what annual sum is proposed to be allowed for his maintenance, etc. From the state of facts and the evidence adduced in support of it, the master frames his report. Elmer, Lun. 22; Pope, Lun. 79. A similar practice formerly prevailed in chancery.

STATE TRIALS. Trials of political offenders. Also the name of a series of reports of such trials held in England.

STATE'S EVIDENCE. A term used in the United States corresponding to the king's (or queen's) evidence of England.

STATED TERM. A regular term of court, held at the time fixed by law or rule.

STATEMENT. See "Particular Statement."

STATEMENT OF AFFAIRS. In English bankruptcy practice, a bankrupt or debtor who has presented a petition for liquidation or composition must produce at the first meeting of creditors a statement of his affairs, giving a list of his creditors, secured and unsecured, with the value of the securities, a list of bills discounted, and a statement of his property. Bankruptcy Act 1869, § 19.

STATEMENT OF CLAIM. A written or printed statement by the plaintiff in an action in the English high court, showing the facts on which he relies to support his claim against the defendant, and the relief which he claims. It is delivered to the defendant or his solicitor. The delivery of the statement of claim is usually the next step after appearance, and is the commencement of the pleadings. The next step in the action is the statement of defense.

STATEMENT OF DEFENSE. In the practice of the English high court, where the defendant in an action does not demur to the whole of the plaintiff's claim, he delivers a pleading called a "statement of defense." The statement of defense deals with the allegations contained in the statement of claim (or the indorsement on the writ, if there is no statement of claim), admitting or denying them, and, if necessary, stating fresh facts in explanation or avoidance of those alleged by the plaintiff.

STATEMENT OF PARTICULARS. In English practice, when the plaintiff claims a debt or liquidated demand, but has not indorsed the writ specially (i. e., indorsed on it the particulars of his claim under Order iii. r. 6), and the defendant fails to appear, the plaintiff may file a statement of the particulars of his claim, and after eight days enter judgment for the amount, as if the writ had been specially indorsed. Rules of Court xiii. 5.

STATIM (Lat.) Immediately.

STATING PART OF A BILL. See "Bill."

STATION. In civil law. A place where ships may ride in safety. Dig. 49. 12. 1. 13; Id. 50. 15. 59.

STATIONERS' HALL. St. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, authorizes, in every case of copyright, the registration of the title of the proprietor at Stationers' Hall, and provides that, without previous registration, no action shall be commenced, though an omission to register is not otherwise to affect the copyright itself. It was founded A. D. 1553. 2 Hall, Hist. Lit. pt. 2, c. 8, p. 366; 3 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 37.

STATU LIBERI (Lat.) In Louisiana. Slaves for a time, who have acquired the right of being free at a time to come, or on a condition which is not fulfilled, or in a certain event which has not happened, but who in the meantime remain in a state of slavery. Civ. Code La. art. 37. See 3 La. 176; 6 La. 571; 4 Mart. (La.) 102; 7 Mart. (La.) 351; 8 Mart. (La.) 219. This is substantially the definition of the civil law. Hist. de la Jur. lib. 40; Dig. 40. 7. 1; Code, 7. 2. 13.

STATUS (Lat.) The condition of persons. It also means "estate," because it signifies the condition or circumstances in which the owner stands with regard to his property. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1689.

STATUS DE MANERIO. The assembly of the tenants in the court of the lord of a manor, in order to do their customary suit.

STATUS QUO (Lat.) The existing state of things at any given date. Status quo ante bellum, the state of things before the war.

STATUTA PRO PUBLICO COMMODO late interpretantur. Statutes made for the public good ought to be liberally construed. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 21.

STATUTA SUO CLUDUNTUR TERRITORIO, nec ultra territorium disponunt. Statutes are confined to their own territory, and have no extraterritorial effect. 4 Allen (Mass.) 324.

STATUTABLE, or STATUTORY. That which is introduced or governed by statute law, as opposed to the common law or equity. Thus, a court is said to have statutory jurisdiction when jurisdiction is given to it in certain matters by statute.

STATUTE. A law established by the act of the legislative power; an act of the legislature; the written will of the legislature, solemnly expressed according to the forms necessary to constitute it the law of the state.

This word is used to designate the written law, in contradistinction to the unwritten law. See "Common Law."

Among the civilians, the term "statute" is generally applied to laws and regulations of every sort. Every provision of law which ordains, permits, or prohibits anything is designated a "statute," without considering from what source it arises. Sometimes the word is used in contradistinction from the imperial Roman law, which, by way of eminence, civilians call the "common law."

——In Old Common Law. A bond or obligation of record. See "Statute Merchant;" "Statute Staple."

Classification:

(1) An affirmative statute is one which is enacted in affirmative terms. Such a statute does not necessarily take away the common law. 2 Inst. 200; Dwarr. St. 474. If, for example, a statute without negative words declares that, when certain requisites shall have been complied with, deeds shall have a certain effect as evidence, this does not prevent their being used in evidence, though the requisites have not been complied with, in the same manner as they might have been before the statute was passed. 2 Caines (N. Y.) 169. Nor does such an affirmative statute repeal a precedent statute if the two can both be given effect. Dwarr. St. 474.

(2) A declaratory statute is one which is passed in order to put an end to a doubt as to what is the common law or the meaning of another statute, and which declares what it is and ever has been.

(3) A negative statute is one expressed in negative terms, and so controls the common law that it has no force in opposition to the statute. Bac. Abr. "Statute" (G).

(4) Penal statutes are those which command or prohibit a thing under a certain penalty. Espinasse, Pen. Act. 5; Bac. Abr. See, generally, Bac. Abr.; Comyn, Dig. "Parliament;" Viner, Abr.; Dane, Abr. Index; Chit. Prac; 1 Kent, Comm. 447-459; Barr. Obs. St.; Boscawen, Pen. St.; Espinasse, Pen. Act.; Dwarr. St.; Sedgw. Const. Law. A statute affixing a penalty to an act, though it does not in words prohibit it, thereby makes it illegal. 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 273; 1 Bin. (Pa.) 110; 37 Eng. Law & Eq. 475; 14 N. H. 294; 4 Iowa, 490; 7 Ind. 77.

(5) Mandatory statutes are such as imperatively require compliance.

(6) Directory statutes are such as may be violated without invalidating the acts done in violation of it.

(7) Permissive statutes are those which allow something without requiring it.

(8) A perpetual statute is one for the continuance of which there is no limited time, although it be not expressly declared to be so.

If a statute which did not itself contain any limitation is to be governed by another which is temporary only, the former will also be temporary and dependent upon the existence of the latter. Bac. Abr. "Statute" (D).

(9) A temporary statute is one which is limited in its duration at the time of its enactment.

It continues in force until the time of its limitation has expired, unless sooner repealed. A statute which, by reason of its nature, has only a single and temporary operation—e. g., an appropriation bill—is also called a "temporary statute."

The most ancient English statute extant is Magna Charta. Formerly the statutes enacted after the beginning of the reign of Edw. III. were called Nova Statuta, or new statutes, to distinguish them from the ancient statutes. The modern English statutes are divided into public general acts, local and personal acts declared public, private acts printed, and private acts not printed. In parliamentary practice are adopted other distinctions, resting upon different grounds.

(10) A remedial statute is one made to supply such defects and abridge such superfluities in the common law as may have been discovered. 1 Bl. Comm. 86.

These remedial statutes are themselves divided into

(a) "Enlarging" statutes, by which the common law is made more comprehensive and extended than it was before, and into

(b) "Restraining" statutes, by which it is narrowed down to that which is just and proper. The term "remedial statute" is also applied to those acts which give the party injured a remedy, and in some respects such statutes are penal. Espinasse, Pen. Act. 1.

(11) Public statutes are those which affect the public at large, whether their operation be throughout the state, or in a particular locality. 93 N. C. 600.

(12) Private statutes are such as affect in a peculiar manner certain persons or classes. 43 N. Y. 10.

By the civilians, statutes are considered as real, personal, or mixed.

(1) Mixed statutes are those which concern at once both persons and property; but in this sense almost all statutes are mixed, there being scarcely any law relative to persons which does not at the same time relate to things.

(2) Personal statutes are those which have principally for their object the person, and treat of property only incidentally. Such are those which regard birth, legitimacy, freedom, the right of instituting suits, majority as to age, incapacity to contract, to make a will, to plead in person, and the like. A personal statute is universal in its operation, and in force everywhere.

(3) Real statutes are those which have principally for their object property, and which do not speak of persons except in relation to property. Story, Confl. Laws, § 13. Such are those which concern the disposition which one may make of his property either alive or by testament. A real statute, unlike a personal one, is confined in its operation to the country of its origin.

STATUTE FAIR. In English law. A fair at which laborers of both sexes stood and offered themselves for hire; sometimes called, also, "Mop."

STATUTE MERCHANT. A security entered before the mayor of London, or some chief warden of a city, in pursuance of 13 Edw. I. st. 3, c. 1, whereby the lands of the debtor are conveyed to the creditor till out of the rents and profits of them his debt may be satisfied. Cruise, Dig. tit. 14, § 7; 2 Bl. Comm. 160.

STATUTE OF ALLEGIANCE DE FACTO. Act 11 Hen. VII. c. 1, requiring subjects to give their allegiance to the actual king for the time being, and protecting them in so doing.

STATUTE OF DISTRIBUTION. A statute regulating the distribution of the estate of an intestate.

STATUTE OF ELIZABETH. St. 13 Eliz. c. 5, relating to fraudulent conveyances.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS. See "Frauds, Statute of."

STATUTE OF USES. See "Use."

STATUTE OF WILLS. The statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 1, by which the right of testamentary disposal of property in lands is created. 2 Bl. Comm. 375.

STATUTE ROLL. A roll upon which an English statute, after receiving the royal assent, was formerly entered.

STATUTE STAPLE. The statute of the staple (27 Edw. III. st. 2) confined the sale of all commodities to be exported to certain towns in England, called "estaple" or "staple," where foreigners might resort. It authorized a security for money, commonly called "statute staple," to be taken by traders for the benefit of commerce. The mayor of the place is entitled to take a recognizance of a debt in proper form, which has the effect to convey the lands of the debtor to the creditor till out of the rents and profits of them he may be satisfied. 2 Bl. Comm. 160; Cruise, Dig. tit. 14, § 10; 2 Rolle, Abr. 446; Bac. Abr. "Execution" (B 1); 4 Inst. 238.

STATUTI (Lat.) In Roman law. Those advocates whose names were inscribed in the registers of matriculation, and formed a part of the college of advocates. The number of advocates of this class was limited. They were distinguished from the supernumeraries from the time of Constantine to Justinian. See Calv. Lex.

STATUTORY EXPOSITION. When the language of a statute is ambiguous, and any subsequent enactment involves a particular interpretation of the former act, it is said to contain a statutory exposition of the former act.

STATUTORY RELEASE. A conveyance which superseded the old compound assurance by lease and release. It was created by St. 4 & 5 Vict. c. 21, which abolished the lease for a year.

STATUTUM (Lat. statuere, to establish).

——In the Civil Law. Established; determined. A term applied to judicial action. Dig. 50. 16. 46. pr.

——In Old English Law. A statute; an act of parliament. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 47, § 10.

STATUTUM AFFIRMATIVUM NON DEROGAT communi legi. An affirmative statute does not take from the common law. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 24.

STATUTUM DE MERCATORIBUS. The statute of Acton Burnell (q. v.)

STATUTUM EX GRATIA REGIS DICITUR, quando rex dignatur cedere de jure suo regio, pro commodo et quiete populi sui. A statute is said to be by the grace of the king when the king deigns to yield some portion of his royal rights for the good and quiet of his people. 2 Inst. 378.

STATUTUM GENERALITER EST INTELLIGENDUM quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis. When the words of a statute are special, but the reason of it general, it is to be understood generally. 10 Coke, 101.

STATUTUM HIBERNIAE DE COHAEREDIBUS. St. 14 Hen. III. The third public act in the statute book. It has been pronounced not to be a statute. In the form of it, it appears to be an instruction given by the king to his justices in Ireland, directing them how to proceed in a certain point where they entertained doubt. It seems the justices itinerant in that country had a doubt, when land descended to sisters, whether the younger sisters ought to hold of the eldest, and do homage to her for their several portions, or of the chief lord, and do homage to him; and certain knights had been sent over to know what the practice was in England in such a case. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 259.

STATUTUM SESSIONEM. In old English law. The statute session; a meeting in every hundred of constables and householders, by custom, for the ordering of servants, and debating of differences between masters and servants, rating of wages, etc. 5 Eliz. c. 4.

STATUTUM SPECIALE STATUTO SPECIALI non derogat. One special statute does does not take away from another special statute. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 199.

STATUTUM WALLIAE (Lat.) The statute of Wales. The title of a statute passed in the twelfth year of Edw. I., being a sort of constitution for the principality of Wales, which was thereby, in a great measure, put on the footing of England with respect to its laws and the administration of justice. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 93-99.

STAY. The arresting of a judicial proceeding or process.

STAY LAWS. Laws suspending remedies against debtors. They are adopted during periods of financial distress or depression. There were numerous instances in acts passed by the legislatures of the American states which had been in rebellion against the Union during the few years which ensued after the war of the rebellion had closed.

STAY OF EXECUTION. An arrest of the issuance of execution process on a judgment. It may be by direction of the judgment creditor for some cause which he conceives to be to his advantage, or it may be by composition or agreement, or it may be by way of a remedy in favor of the judgment debtor, by which, on the giving of approved security usually, the issue of process is postponed for a time fixed by statute. The statutory stay by giving security is the most commonly observed, and is the one to which the term usually refers.

STAY OF PROCEEDING. A suspension of proceedings in a cause, either by an order of the court in the cause, or by some proceeding such as (in some states) an appeal which operates ipso facto as a suspension.

STEALING. This term imports, ex vi termini, nearly the same as larceny (2 G. Greene [Iowa] 311), but in common parlance it does not always import a felony; as, for example, you stole an acre of my land.

In slander cases, it seems that the term "stealing" takes its complexion from the subject matter to which it is applied, and will be considered as intended of a felonious stealing, if a felony could have been committed of such subject matter. Starkie, Sland. & L. 80; 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 239; 3 Bin. (Pa.) 546.

STEALTH. Theft is so called by Finch. "Stealth is the wrongful taking of goods without pretense of title." Finch, Law, bk. 3, c. 17.

STEELBOW GOODS. Instruments of husbandry, cattle, corn, etc., delivered by a landlord to his tenant on condition that the like number of goods of like quality should be returned on expiration of the lease. Bell, Dict.; Stair, Inst. 285, § 81.

STELLONATUS. In civil law. A name given generally to all species of frauds committed in making contracts.

This word is said to be derived from the Latin stellio, a kind of lizard remarkable for its cunning and the change of its color, because those guilty of frauds used every art and cunning to conceal them. But more particularly it was the crime of a person who fraudulently assigned, sold, or engaged the thing which he had before assigned, sold, or engaged to another, unknown to the person with whom he was dealing. Dig. 47. 20. 3; Code, 9. 34. 1; Merlin, Repert.; Civ. Code La. art. 2069; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 426.

STERBRECHE, or STREBRICH. The breaking, obstructing, or straitening of a way. Termes de la Ley.

STERE. A French measure of solidity, used in measuring wood. It is a cubic meter. See "Measure."

STERILITY. Barrenness; incapacity to produce a child. It is curable and incurable. See "Impotence."

Incapacity of the male to impregnate, or of the female to conceive, when copulation is natural and complete. Keysor, Med. Leg. Manual, 219.

STERLING. Current money of Great Britain, but anciently a small coin worth about one penny, and so called, as some suppose, because it was stamped with the figure of a small star, or, as others suppose, because it was first stamped in England in the reign of King John by merchants from Germany, called "Esterlings." "Pounds sterling" originally signified so many pounds in weight of these coins. Thus, we find in Matthew Paris, A. D. 1242, the expression, Accepit a rege pro sti pendio tredecim libras esterlingorum. The secondary or derived sense is a certain value in current money, whether in coins or other currency. Lowndes, 14; Watts.

STET BILLA. If the plaintiff in a plaint in the mayor's court of London has attached property belonging to the defendant, and obtained execution against the garnishee, the defendant, if he wishes to contest the plaintiff's claim, and obtain restoration of his property, must issue a scire facias ad disprobandum debitum. If the only question to be tried is the plaintiff's debt, the plaintiff, in appearing to the scire facias, prays stet billa, "that his bill original," i. e., his original plaint, "may stand, and that the defendant may plead thereto." The action then proceeds in the usual way as if the proceedings in attachment (which are founded on a fictitious default of the defendant in appearing to the plaint) had not taken place. Brand. For. Attachm. 115, and forms. See "Attachment."

STET PROCESSUS (Lat.) In practice. An order made, upon proper cause shown, that the process remain stationary. As, where a defendant, having become insolvent, would, by moving judgment in the case of nonsuit, compel a plaintiff to proceed, the court will, on an affidavit of the fact of insolvency, award a stet processus. See 7 Taunt. 180; 1 Chit. Bailm. 738; 10 Wentw. Pl. 43.

STEVEDORE. A person employed in loading and unloading vessels. He has no maritime lien on the ship for wages. Dunl. Adm. Prac. 98.

STEWARD OF ALL ENGLAND. In old English law. An officer who was invested with various powers, and, among others, it was his duty to preside on the trial of peers.

STEWS. In English law. Places formerly permitted in England to women of professed lewdness, and who for hire would prostitute their bodies to all comers.

These places were so called because the dissolute persons who visited them prepared themselves by bathing,—the word stews being derived from the old French estuves, stove, or hot bath. 3 Inst. 205.

STIFLING A PROSECUTION. Agreeing, in consideration of receiving a pecuniary or other advantage, to abstain from prosecuting a person for an offense not giving rise to a civil remedy, e. g., perjury. As a general rule, such an agreement invalidates any transaction of which it forms part. 6 Q. B. 308; 1 Campb. 45; L. R. 1 H. L. 200.

STILLICIDIUM (Lat.) In civil law. The rainwater that falls from the roof or eaves of a house by scattered drops. When it is gathered into a spout, it is called flumen.

Without the constitution of one or other of these servitudes, no proprietor can build so as to throw the rain that falls from his house directly on his neighbor's grounds; for it is a restriction upon all property, nemo potest immittere in alienum; and he who, in building, breaks through that restraint, truly builds on another man's property; because to whomsoever the area belongs, to him also belongs whatever is above it, cujus est solum, ejus est usque ad coelum. 3 Burge, Confl. Laws, 405. See "Servitus;" Inst. 3. 2. 1; Dig. 8. 2. 2.

STINT. The proportionable part of a man's cattle which he may keep upon the common. The general rule is that the commoner shall not turn more cattle upon the common than are sufficient to manure and stock the land to which his right of common is annexed. There may be such a thing as common without stint or number; but this is seldom granted, and a grantee cannot grant it over. 3 Bl. Comm. 239; 1 Ld. Raym. 407.

STIPENDIARY ESTATES. Estates granted in return for services, generally of a military kind. 1 Steph. Comm. 174.

STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATES. In English law. Paid magistrates.

STIPULATED DAMAGE. Liquidated damage. See "Damages."

STIPULATIO (Lat.) In Roman law. A contract made in the following manner, viz.: The person to whom the promise was to be made proposed a question to him from whom it was to proceed, fully expressing the nature and extent of the engagement, and, the question so proposed being answered in the affirmative, the obligation was complete.

It was essentially necessary that both parties should speak (so that a dumb man could not enter into a stipulation), that the person making the promise should answer conformably to the specific question proposed, without any material interval of time, and with the intention of contracting an obligation. No consideration was required.

STIPULATIO AQUILIANA (Lat.) In Roman law, a particular application of the stipulatio, which was used to collect together into one verbal contract all the liabilities of every kind and quality of the debtor, with a view to their being released or discharged by an acceptilatio, that mode of discharge being applicable only to the verbal contract. Brown.

STIPULATION. A material article in an agreement.

The term appears to have derived its meaning from the use of stipulatio above given; though it is applied more correctly and more conformably to its original meaning to denote the insisting upon and requiring any particular engagement. 2 Poth. Obl. (Evans Ed.) 19. It is commonly applied to agreements between counsel in respect to matters of proceeding.

——In Admiralty Practice. A recognizance of certain persons (called in the old law fide jussors) in the nature of bail for the appearance of a defendant. 3 Bl. Comm. 108.

These stipulations are of three sorts, namely: Judicatum solvi, by which the party is absolutely bound to pay such sum as may be adjudged by the court; de judicio sisti, by which he is bound to appear from time to time during the pendency of the suit, and to abide the sentence; de ratio, or de rato, by which he engages to ratify the acts of his proctor. This stipulation is not usual in the admiralty courts of the United States.

The securities are taken in the following manner, namely: Cautio fide jussoria, by sureties; pignoratitia, by deposit; juratoria, by oath,—this security is given when the party is too poor to find sureties, at the discretion of the court; nude promissoria, by bare promise,—this security is unknown in the admiralty courts of the United States. Hall, Adm. Prac. 12; Dunl. Adm. Prac. 150, 151. See 17 Am. Jur. 51.

STIPULATOR. In the civil law, the party who asked the question in the contract of stipulation; the other party, or he who answered, being called the "promissor." But, in a more general sense, the term was applied to both the parties. Calv. Lex.

STIRPES (Lat.) Descents. The root, stem, or stock of a tree. Figuratively, it signifies in law that person from whom a family is descended, and also the kindred or family. See "Per Stirpes." 2 Bl. Comm. 209.

STOCK. The capital of a merchant or tradesman, including his money, merchandise, and credits. See "Capital." The goods and wares he has for sale and traffic.

——Of Corporations. The amount of money or property subscribed and paid in, or agreed to be paid in, by the shareholders. It is ordinarily divided into equal shares of a determined value, and apportioned among the stockholders in proportion to the amount which they have paid in, or for which they are liable.

Distinction has been made between the capital stock, which is an asset of the corporation, and the shares of stock, which are the property of the several shareholders. 34 Eng. & Am. Corp. Cas. 223.

STOCK BROKER. See "Brokers."

STOCK EXCHANGE. A building or room in which stock brokers meet to transact their business of purchasing or selling stocks.

An association of stock brokers for the purpose of transacting their business.

In large cities, the stock business is transacted through the medium of the members of the board of brokers. This is an association of stock brokers governed by rules and regulations made by themselves, to which all the members are obliged to subject themselves. Admission is procured by ballot, and a member defaulting in his obligations forfeits his seat. A regular register of all the transactions is kept by an officer of the association, and questions arising between the members are generally decided by an arbitration committee. The official record of sales is the best evidence of the price of any stock on any particular day. The stocks dealt in at the sessions of the board are those which are placed on the list by a regular vote of the association; and when it is proposed to add a stock to the list, a committee is appointed to examine into the matter, and the board is generally guided by the report of such committee. Sewell, Bankr.

STOCK JOBBING. A fictitious transaction in stocks by way of speculation. Also the title of an act relating to such transactions. See "Gambling Contract."

STOCKS. In criminal law. A machine, commonly made of wood, with holes in it, in which to confine persons accused of or guilty of crime.

It was used either to confine unruly offenders by way of security, or convicted criminals for punishment. This barbarous punishment has been generally abandoned in the United States.

STOCKHOLDER. The holder of shares of stock in a corporation or joint-stock company.

STOP ORDER.

——In English Chancery Practice. An order to prevent a fund in court from being paid out or otherwise dealt with without notice to a claimant.

——In Commercial Usage. An order to buy or sell on margins and close out at a set price. See under "Gambling Contract."

STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU. A resumption by the seller of the possession of goods not paid for, while on their way to the vendee, and before he has acquired actual possession of them. 15 Me. 314.

For most purposes, the possession of the carrier is considered to be that of the buyer; but by virtue of this right, which is an extension of the right of lien, the vendor may reclaim the possession before they reach the vendee, in case of the insolvency of the latter. 12 Pick. (Mass.) 313; 4 Gray (Mass.) 336; 2 Caines (N. Y.) 98; 8 Mees. & W. 341.

To give a right of stoppage in transitu, the sale must have been on credit, but the giving of a note is not payment unless so agreed (13 Me. 103), the buyer must be insolvent, and such insolvency must have been unknown at the time of the sale (102 N. C. 390; 27 Barb. [N. Y.] 663), and the goods must be in transit, i. e., they must not have come into the actual or constructive possession of the buyer (16 Neb. 614; 40 Iowa, 627).

STORES. The victuals and provisions collected together for the subsistence of a ship's company, of a camp, and the like.

Shops; places where goods are kept for sale.

A shop is a place where goods are sold by retail, and a store a place where goods are deposited, but in this country shops for the sale of goods are frequently called "stores." 15 Gray (Mass.) 197.

STOUTHRIEFF. In Scotch law. Formerly this word included in its signification every species of theft accompanied with violence to the person; but of late years it has become the vox signata for forcible and masterful depredation within or near the dwelling house; while "robbery" has been more particularly applied to violent depredation on the highway or accompanied by house breaking. Alis. Sc. Law, 227.

STOWAGE. In maritime law. The proper arrangement in a ship of the different articles of which a cargo consists, so that they may not injure each other by friction, or be damaged by the leakage of the ship.

STRADDLE. See "Gambling Contract."

STRAMINEUS HOMO. A man of straw.

STRANDING. In maritime law. The running of a ship or other vessel on shore. It is either accidental or voluntary.

Accidental stranding takes place where the ship is driven on shore by the winds and waves.

Voluntary stranding takes place where the ship is run on shore either to preserve her from a worse fate, or for some fraudulent purpose. Marsh. Ins. bk. 1, c. 12, § 1.

STRANGER. A person born out of the United States; but in this sense the term "alien" is more properly applied until he becomes naturalized.

A person who is not privy to an act or contract. Example, he who is a stranger to the issue shall not take advantage of the verdict. Brooke, Abr. "Record," pl. 3; Viner, Abr. 1. And see Comyn, Dig. "Abatement" (H 54).

When a man undertakes to do a thing, and a stranger interrupts him, this is no excuse. Comyn, Dig. "Condition" (L 14). When a party undertakes that a stranger shall do a certain thing, he becomes liable as soon as the stranger refuses to perform it. Bac. Abr. "Conditions" (Q 4).

STRATAGEM. A deception, either by words or actions, in times of war, in order to obtain an advantage over an enemy.

Stratagems, though contrary to morality, have been justified unless they have been accompanied by perfidy, injurious to the rights of humanity, as in the example given by Vattel of an English frigate, which, during a war between France and England, appeared off Calais and made signals of distress in order to allure some vessel to come to its relief, and seized a shallop and its crew who had generously gone out to render it assistance. Vattel, Droit des Gens, liv. 3, c. 9, § 178.

Sometimes stratagems are employed in making contracts. This is unlawful and fraudulent, and avoids the contract. See "Fraud."

STRATOCRACY. A military government; government by military chiefs of an army.

STRAW BAIL. Nominal or worthless bail. Professional sureties, so called, it is said, from an ancient custom of such persons of wearing a straw about their clothing, that they might be known to one in search of bail.

Common bail (q. v.)

STRAW MEN. Men who used in former days to ply about courts of law, so called from their manner of making known their occupation (i. e., by a straw in one of their shoes), recognized by the name of "straw shoes." An advocate or lawyer who wanted a convenient witness knew by these signs where to find one, and the colloquy between the parties was brief. "Don't you remember?" said the advocate. The party looked at the fee, and gave no sign; but the fee increased, and the powers of memory increased with it. "To be sure I do." "Then come into court and swear it!" And straw shoes went into court and swore it. Athens abounded in straw shoes. Quart. Rev. xxxiii. 344.

STRAY. See "Estray."

STREET. A public thoroughfare or highway in a city or village. 4 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 106; 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 399. See "Highway."

STREIGHTEN. In the old books. To narrow or restrict. "The habendum should not streighten the devise." 1 Leon. 58.

STREPITUS (Law Lat.) In old records. Estrepement or strip; a species of waste or destruction of property. Spelman.

STRICT CONSTRUCTION. A rule of judicial interpretation or exposition which follows closely the letter of the statute or instrument construed disfavoring any extension or relaxation of it by implication, favor, or equity.

STRICT FORECLOSURE. See "Foreclosure."

STRICT SETTLEMENT. A settlement of lands to the parent for life, and after his death to his first and other sons in tail, with an interposition of trustees to preserve the contingent remainders.

STRICTISSIMI JURIS (Lat. the most strict right or law). In general, when a person receives an advantage, as the grant of a license, he is bound to conform strictly to the exercise of the rights given him by it, and in case of a dispute it will be strictly construed. See 3 Story (U. S.) 159.

STRICTO JURE (Lat.) In strict law. 1 Kent, Comm. 65.

STRICTUM JUS (Lat.) Mere law, in contradistinction to equity.

STRIKE. Used as an abbreviated form of "strike out" or "strike off," as a motion "to strike" evidence.

STRIKING A DOCKET. In English practice. Entering the creditor's affidavit and bond in bankruptcy. 1 Deac. Bankr. 106.

STRIKING A JURY. In English practice. Where, for nicety of the matter in dispute, or other cause, a special jury is necessary, upon motion and rule granted thereon, the sheriff is to attend the prothonotary or proper officer with the book of freeholders, and to take indifferently forty-eight of the principal freeholders, when the attorneys on each side, being present, are to strike off twelve respectively, and the remaining twenty-four are returned. 3 Bl. Comm. 357. Essentially the same practice prevails in some of the states.

STRIKING OFF THE ROLL. Disbarment.

STRONG HAND. The words "with strong hand" imply a degree of criminal force, whereas the words vi et armis ("with force and arms") are mere formal words in the action of trespass, and the plaintiff is not bound to prove any force. The statutes relating to forcible entries use the words "with a strong hand," as describing that degree of force which makes an entry or detainer of lands criminal. See "Forcible Entry or Detainer."

STRUCK. In pleading. A word essential in an indictment for murder, when the death arises from any wounding, beating, or bruising. 1 Bulst. 184; 5 Coke, 122; 3 Mod. 202; Cro. Jac. 655; Palmer, 282; 2 Hale, P. C. 184, 186, 187; Hawk. P. C. bk. 2, c. 23, § 82; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, *243; 6 Bin. (Pa.) 179.

STRUCK JURY. A special jury obtained by striking. See "Striking a Jury."

STRUCK OFF. A term applied to a case which the court, having no jurisdiction over, and not being able to give judgment, order to be taken off the record. This is done by an entry to that effect.

STRUCK OFF, or KNOCKED DOWN. Property is understood to be "struck off" or "knocked down" when the auctioneer, by the fall of his hammer, or by any other audible or visible announcement, signifies to the bidder that he is entitled to the property on paying the amount of his bid, according to the terms of the sale. 7 Hill (N. Y.) 431, 439.

STRUMPET. A harlot, or courtesan. The word was formerly used as an addition. Jacob.

STUFF GOWN. The robe of barristers who have not been made queen's or king's counsel. See "Silk Gown."

STULTIFY (Lat. stultus, stupid). To make one out mentally incapacitated for the performance of an act.

It has been laid down by old authorities (Litt. § 405; 4 Coke, 123; Cro. Eliz. 398) that no man should be allowed to stultify himself, i. e., plead disability through mental unsoundness. This maxim was soon doubted as law (1 Hagg. Ecc. 414; 2 Bl. Comm. 292), and has been completely overturned (4 Kent, Comm. 451).

STULTILOQUIUM. In old English law. Vicious or disorderly pleading, for which a fine was imposed by King John, supposed to be the origin of the fines for beaupleader (q. v.) Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 135.

STUPIDITY. In medical jurisprudence. That state of the mind which cannot perceive and embrace the data presented to it by the senses, and therefore the stupid person can, in general, form no correct judgment. It is a want of the perceptive powers. Ray, Med. Jur. c. 3, § 40. See "Imbecility."

STUPRUM (Lat.) In Roman law. The criminal sexual intercourse which took place between a man and a single woman, maid, or widow, who before lived honestly. Inst. 4. 18. 4; Dig. 48. 5. 6; Id. 50. 16. 101; 1 Bouv. Inst. Theolo. ps. 3, quaest. 2, art. 2, p. 252.

STYLE. As a verb, to call, name, or entitle one; as a noun, the title or appellation of a person.

The names in which a cause is entitled.

SUA SPONTE (Lat.) Of his or its own motion.

SUAPTE NATURA (Lat.) In its own nature. Suapte natura sterilis, barren in its own nature and quality; intrinsically barren. 5 Maule & S. 170.

SUB (Lat.) Under; upon.

SUB CONDITIONE. Upon condition; under condition.

SUB DISJUNCTIONE (Law Lat.) In the alternative. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 21.

SUB JUDICE (Lat.) Under or before a judge or court; under judicial consideration; undetermined. 12 East, 409.

SUB MODO (Lat.) Under a qualification. A legacy may be given sub modo, that is, subject to a condition or qualification.

SUB PEDE SIGILLI (Lat.) Under the foot of the seal; under seal. This expression is used when it is required that a record should be certified under the seal of the court.

SUB POTESTATE (Lat.) Under or subject to the power of another; as, a wife is under the power of her husband; a child is subject to that of his father; a slave to that of his master.

SUB SALVO ET SECURO CONDUCTU. Under safe and secure conduct. 1 Strange, 430. Words in the old writ of habeas corpus.

SUB SILENTIO (Lat.) Under silence; without any notice being taken. Sometimes passing a thing sub silentio is evidence of consent.

SUB SPE RECONCILIATIONIS (Lat.) Under the hope of reconcilement. 2 Kent, Comm. 127.

SUB SUO PERICULO (Law Lat.) At his own risk. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 5, § 5.

SUBAGENT. A person appointed by an agent to perform some duty, or the whole of the business relating to his agency. See "Agent."

SUB-BALLIVUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. An under bailiff; a sheriff's deputy. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 68, § 2.

SUBCONTRACT. A contract by one who has contracted for the performance of labor or service with a third party for the whole or part performance of that labor or service. 9 Mees. & W. 710; 3 Gray (Mass.) 362; 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 550; 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 395; 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 716; 2 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 558. See "Contract."

SUBDITUS (Lat.) In old English law. A vassal; a dependent; any one under the power of another. Spelman; Bracton, fol. 412.

SUBDIVIDE. To divide a part of a thing which has already been divided. For example, when a person dies leaving children, and grandchildren, the children of one of his own who is dead, his property is divided into as many shares as he had children, including the deceased, and the share of the deceased is subdivided into as many shares as he had children.

SUBDUCT. In English probate practice, to subduct a caveat is to withdraw it.

SUBHASTARE (Lat.) In the civil law. To sell at public auction, which was done sub hasta, under a spear; to put or sell under the spear. Calv. Lex.

SUBHASTATIO (Lat.) In the civil law. A sale by public auction, which was done under a spear, fixed up at the place of sale as a public sign of it. Calv. Lex. The Roman custom of setting up a spear at an auction seems to have been derived from the circumstance that at first only those things which were taken in war were sold in that manner. Adams, Rom. Ant. 59.

SUBINFEUDATION. The act of an inferior lord by which he carved out a part of an estate which he held of a superior, and granted it to an inferior tenant to be held of himself.

It was an indirect mode of transferring the fief, and resorted to as an artifice to elude the feudal restraint upon alienation. This was forbidden by the statute of Quia Emptores. 18 Edw. I.; 2 Bl. Comm. 91; 3 Kent, Comm. 406.

SUBJACENT SUPPORT. An easement of support of the soil as against an adjoining tract of land, so that the dominant tract shall not fall in by reason of undermining or withdrawal of support from beneath. Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 618; 66 Pa. St. 429.

SUBJECT.

——In Scotch Law. The thing which is the object of an agreement.

——In Governmental Law. An individual member of a nation, who is subject to the laws. This term is used in contradistinction to "citizen," which is applied to the same individual when considering his political rights.

In monarchical governments, by "subject" is meant one who owes permanent allegiance to the monarch. See "Body Politic;" Greenl. Ev. § 286; Phil. Ev. 732, note 1.

SUBJECT MATTER. The right which one party claims as against the other, and claims the judgment of the court upon. 41 Mich. 93. The cause of action. 15 N. Y. 509.

SUBJECTION (Lat. sub, under, jacio, to put, throw). The obligation of one or more persons to act at the discretion or according to the judgment and will of others. Private subjection is subjection to the authority of private persons. Public subjection is subjection to the authority of public persons.

SUBLATA CAUSA TOLLITUR EFFECTUS. Remove the cause and the effect will cease. 2 Bl. Comm. 203.

SUBLATA VENERATIONE MAGISTRATUUM, respublica ruit. The commonwealth perishes, if respect for magistrates be taken away. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 48.

SUBLATO FUNDAMENTO CADIT OPUS. Remove the foundation, the structure or work falls. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 106.

SUBLATO PRINCIPALI TOLLITUR ADjunctum. If the principal be taken away, the adjunct is also taken away. Co. Litt. 389.

SUBLEASE. A lease by a tenant to another person of a part of the premises held by him, or a part of his term; an under lease. If the whole premises be let by the tenant for his entire term, so that there is no reversion in him, it is not a subletting, but an assignment of his lease.

SUBMERGENCE. The sudden disappearance of riparian lands under the water, whereby they are lost to the owner. See 100 N. Y. 424.

SUBMISSION (Lat. submissio,—sub, under, mittere, to put,—a putting under). Used of persons or things. A putting one's person or property under the control of another; a yielding to authority. A citizen is bound to submit to the laws, a child to his parents, a guardian to his ward. A victor may enforce the submission of his enemy.

——In Trial Practice. The leaving of a cause with the court or jury for decision.

——To Arbitration. An agreement by which parties submit a matter of difference to the decision of one or more arbitrators. 4 N. Y. 157.

——To Court. This, usually known as "submission of controversy," is the submission of an agreed statement of facts to the court, without trial of the issues, for a decision thereon.

SUBNERVARE. To hamstring by cutting the sinews of the legs and thighs.

It was an old custom meretrices et impudicas mulieres subnervare. Wharton.

SUBNOTATIONS (Lat.) In civil law. The answers of the prince to questions which had been put to him respecting some obscure or doubtful point of law. See "Rescript."

SUBORN (Lat. subornare, from sub, under, and ornare, to prepare). In criminal law. To procure another to commit perjury. Steph. Crim. Law, 74. Literally, to instruct one privily, or in an underhanded manner, what to say; to prepare secretly, or underhand; to procure unlawfully. Sayer, 292. Subornare est quasi subtus in aure ipsum male ornare, to suborn is to instruct one privily, as by whispering in his ear, with a bad design. 3 Inst. 167.

SUBORNATION OF PERJURY. In criminal law. The procuring another to commit legal perjury, who, in consequence of the persuasion, takes the oath to which he has been incited. Hawk. P. C. bk. 1, c. 69, § 10.

SUBPOENA (Lat. sub, under, poena, penalty).

——In Practice. A process to cause a witness to appear and give testimony, commanding him to lay aside all pretenses and excuses, and appear before a court or magistrate therein named, at a time therein mentioned, to testify for the party named, under a penalty therein mentioned. This is called distinctively a subpoena ad testificandum.

A subpoena duces tecum is one whereby the witness is commanded to bring with him books or papers in his possession or under his control, to produce the same in evidence.

——In Chancery Practice. A mandatory writ or process directed to and requiring one or more persons to appear at a time to come and answer the matters charged against him or them. The writ of subpoena was originally a process in the courts of common law to enforce the attendance of a witness to give evidence; but this writ was used in the court of chancery for the same purpose as a citation in the courts of civil and canon law, to compel the appearance of a defendant, and to oblige him to answer upon oath the allegations of the plaintiff.

It was invented by John Waltham, bishop of Salisbury, and chancellor to Richard II., under the authority of the statutes of Westminster II. and 13 Edw. I. c. 34, which enabled him to devise new writs. Cruise, Dig. tit. 11, c. 1, §§ 12-17. See Viner, Abr.; 1 Swanst. 209.

SUBREPTIO (Lat.) In civil law. Obtaining gifts of escheat, etc., from the king by concealing the truth. Bell, Dict.; Calv. Lex. "Subripere."

SUBREPTION. In French law. The fraud committed to obtain a pardon, title, or grant, by alleging facts contrary to truth.

SUBROGATIO EST TRANSFUSIO UNIus creditoris in alium, eadem vel mitiori conditione. Subrogation is the substituting one creditor in the place of another in the same or a better condition. Merlin, Quest. de Droit. "Subrogation."

SUBROGATION. The substitution of another person in the place of a claimant, to whose rights he succeeds in relation to the claim. That change which puts another person in the place of the creditor, and which makes the right, the mortgage, or the security which the creditor has pass to the person who is subrogated to him,—that is to say, who enters into his right. Domat, Civ. Law, pt. i. lib. iii. tit. i. § vi.

It is a legal fiction by force of which an obligation extinguished by payment made by a third party is considered as continuing to subsist for the benefit of this third person, who makes but one and the same person with the creditor in the view of the law. Subrogation is the act of putting one thing in place of another, or one person in place of another. Guyot, Rep. Univ. "Subrogation," § ii.

Subrogation gives to the substitute all the rights of the party for whom he is substituted. 4 Md. Ch. 253. Among the earlier civil-law writers, the term seems to have been used synonymously with "substitution;" or, rather, "substitution" included "subrogation," as well as its present more limited signification. See Domat, Civ. Law, passim; Poth. Obl. passim. The term "substitution" is now almost altogether confined to the law of devises and chancery practice. See "Substitution."

The word "subrogation" is originally found only in the civil law, and has been adopted, with the doctrine itself, thence into equity. It is an equitable doctrine (3 Ired. Eq. [N. C.] 386), but in the law, as distinguished from equity, it hardly appears as a term, except perhaps in those states where, as in Pennsylvania, equity is administered through the forms of law, and those where the distinction between legal and equitable remedies has been abolished. There the term "subrogation," adopted from the Roman law, has of late years come into quite general use. 6 Pa. St. 504. The equitable doctrine of marshalling assets is plainly derived from the Roman law of subrogation or substitution; and although the word is, or, rather, has been, used sparingly in the common law, many of the doctrines of subrogation are familiar to the courts of common law.

Subrogation differs from cession in this, that while cession only substitutes the one to whom the debt is ceded in place of the ceder, in subrogation the debt would have become extinguished but for the effect of the subrogation; and also because, although subrogation supposes a change in the person of the creditor, it does not imply novation; but, through the fiction of the law, the party who is subrogated is considered as making only one and the same person with the creditor, whom he succeeds. Masse, Dr. Comm. "Payment in Subrogation."

It is one thing to decide that a surety is entitled, on payment, to have an assignment of the debt, and quite another to decide that he is entitled to be subrogated or substituted as to the equities and securities to the place of the creditor, as against the debtor and his cosureties. Story, Eq. Jur. § 493, note; 2 McLean (U. S.) 451; 1 Dev. (N. C.) 137.

The legal subrogation of the civilians is generally intended by the term "subrogation." Some original interest is essential to entitle one to subrogation. Thus, a surety paying the debt is subrogated to the rights of the creditor against the principal (23 Minn. 74; 28 N. Y. 271), and the holder of a lien who pays a prior lien is subrogated to the rights of the lienholder whom he pays (2 Allen [Mass.] 111); but a mere stranger or volunteer paying a debt has no right to subrogation (93 N. Y. 235; 76 Va. 262).

——In the Civil Law. Subrogation of persons is of three sorts:

First, the canonists understand by subrogation the succession of a priest to the rights of action of the occupant of a benefice who has died during a suit. Guyot, Rep. Univ. "Subrogation of Persons," § i.

Second, the second sort arose from a local custom of the Bourbonnais, and had for its object the protection of the debtor from the effects of collusion on the part of the attaching creditor.

Third, subrogation in fact to aliens and pledgees, which is only the change of one creditor for another. See Guyot, ut supra, and, also, Masse, Dr. Comm.

Nearly all the instances in which the common law has adopted the doctrines of subrogation have arisen under this latter class.

Subrogation is either legal or conventional.

Legal subrogation is that resulting by operation of law from the satisfying of a claim as to which the person making payment has some original privilege. 14 Cal. 565.

Conventional subrogation results, as its name indicates, from the agreement of the parties, and can take effect only by agreement. This agreement is, of course, with the party to be subrogated, and may be either by the debtor or creditor. Civ. Code La. 1249.

Thus, it may happen when the creditor receiving payment from the third person subrogates the payor to his right against the debtor. This must happen by express agreement; but no formal words are required. This sort of subrogation only takes place where there is a payment of the debt by a third party,—not where there is an assignment, in which case, subrogation results from the assignment.

This principle is recognized by the common law in cases where, upon payment, the securities are transferred to a party having an interest in the payment. Or, in case the debtor borrows money from a third party to pay a debt, he may subrogate the lender to the rights of the creditor; for by this change the rights of the other creditors are not injuriously affected. To make this mode of subrogation valid, the borrowing and discharge must take place before a notary. In the borrowing, it must be declared that the money has been borrowed to make payment, and in the discharge, that it has been made with money furnished by the creditor. Masse, Dr. Comm. lib. 5, tit. 1, c. 5, §§ 1, 2.

SUBROGEE. A person who is subrogated; one who succeeds to the rights of another by subrogation.

SUBSCRIBING WITNESS. One who subscribes his name to a writing in order to be able at a future time to prove its due execution; an attesting witness.

In order to make a good subscribing witness, it is requisite he should sign his name to the instrument himself, at the time of its execution, and at the request or with the assent of the party. 6 Hill (N. Y.) 303; 11 Mees. & W. 168; 1 Greenl. Ev. (4th Ed.) § 569a; 5 Watts (Pa.) 399.

SUBSCRIPTIO (Lat. from subscribere). In the civil law. A writing under, or underwriting; a writing of the name under or at the bottom of an instrument by way of attestation or ratification; subscription. The subscriptio testium (subscription of witnesses) was one of the formalities in the execution of wills, being required by the imperial constitutions in addition to the seals of the witnesses. Inst. 2. 10. 3.

That kind of imperial constitution which was granted in answer to the prayer of a petitioner who was present. Calv. Lex.

SUBSCRIPTION (Lat. sub, under, scribo, to write). The placing a signature at the bottom of a written or printed engagement, or it is the attestation of a witness by so writing his name; but it has been holden that the attestation of an illiterate witness by making his mark is a sufficient subscription. 7 Bing. 457; 2 Ves. Sr. 454; 1 Atk. 177; 1 Ves. Jr. 11; 3 P. Wms. 253; 1 Ves. & B. 392.

"Subscribe," according to both its popular and literal signification, requires a signature at the end of a document. 4 Colo. 282.

The act by which a person contracts, in writing, to furnish a sum of money for a particular purpose; as, a subscription to a charitable institution, a subscription for a book, for a newspaper, and the like.

SUBSCRIPTION LIST. A list of subscribers to some agreement with each other or a third person.

SUBSELLIA (Lat. from sub, under, and sella, a seat). In the Roman law. Lower seats or benches, occupied by the judices (judges or jurors), and by inferior magistrates when they sat in judgment, as distinguished from the tribunal of the praetor. Calv. Lex.; Budaeus.

SUBSEQUENS MATRIMONIUM TOLLIT peccatum praecedens. A subsequent marriage [of the parties] removes a previous fault, i. e., previous illicit intercourse, and legitimates the offspring. A rule of Roman law.

SUBSIDY. A legislative grant of money in aid of a private enterprise deemed to promote the public welfare.

——In English Law. An aid, tax, or tribute granted by parliament to the king for the urgent occasions of the kingdom, to be levied on every subject of ability, according to the value of his lands or goods. Jacob.

——In International Law. The assistance given in money by one nation to another to enable it the better to carry on a war, when such nation does not join directly in the war. Vattel, liv. 3, § 82. See "Neutrality."

SUBSIGNARE (Lat. from sub, under, and signare, to seal or sign). In the civil law. To undersign; to subscribe. According to the strict etymology, to seal under, or seal. But the word is said, in the Digests, to have been used among the ancient Romans in the sense of "writing." Subsignatum dicitur quod ab aliquo subscriptum est, nam veteres subsignationis verbo pro adscriptione uti solebant, that is said to be undersigned which is underwritten by any one, for the ancients were accustomed to use the word subsignatio for adscriptio. Dig. 50. 16. 39. Some copies of the Digests have subscriptione in place of adscriptione.

SUBSTANCE (Lat. sub, under, stare, to stand). That which is essential. It is used in opposition to form.

It is a general rule that on any issue it is sufficient to prove the substance of the issue. For example, in a case where the defendant pleaded payment of the principal sum and all interest due, and it appeared in evidence that a gross sum was paid, not amounting to the full interest, but accepted by the plaintiff as full payment, the proof was held to be sufficient. 2 Strange, 690; 1 Phil. Ev. 161.

It is also used in the sense of "property." Cowp. 307.

SUBSTANTIVE LAW. That portion of the body of the law which contains the rights and duties and the regulations of government, as opposed to that part which contains the rules and remedies by which the substantive law is administered. The latter is called, in opposition to "substantive law," the "adjective law," or the "remedial law." The exact boundary between the two is difficult of definition, and has been the cause of much learned discussion.

SUBSTITUTE (Lat. substitutus). One placed under another to transact business for him. In letters of attorney, power is generally given to the attorney to nominate and appoint a substitute.

Without such power, the authority given to one person cannot, in general, be delegated to another, because it is a personal trust and confidence, and is not, therefore, transmissible. The authority is given to him to exercise his judgment and discretion, and it cannot be said that the trust and confidence reposed in him shall be exercised at the discretion of another. 2 Atk. 88; 2 Ves. Jr. 645. But an authority may be delegated to another when the attorney has express power to do so. Bunb. 166; T. Jones, 110. See Story, Ag. §§ 13, 14. When a man is drawn into the militia, he may in some cases hire a substitute.

SUBSTITUTED SERVICE. See "Service."

SUBSTITUTES. In Scotch law. Where an estate is settled on a long series of heirs, substituted one after another, in tailzie, the person first called in the tailzies is the institute; the rest the heirs of tailzie, or the substitutes. Ersk. Inst. 3. 8. 8. See "Tailzie."

SUBSTITUTIO (Lat. from substituere, to substitute). A putting of one person in the place of another.

——In the Civil Law. The appointment of one person as heir in place of another, in the event of the first not taking the inheritance. As, si ille haeres non erit, ille haeres esto, if such a one will not be heir, let such a one be heir. Inst. 2. 15, pr. And a testator might appoint one heir after another in this way, to what extent he pleased (in quantum velit testator substituere potest), which was called making several grades of heirs (plures gradus haeredum), the person last named, without further alternative, being termed "necessary heir" (necessarius haeres), or heir at all events. Id.

SUBSTITUTIO HAEREDIS (Lat.) In Roman law, it was competent for a testator, after instituting a haeres (called the "haeres institutus"), to substitute another (called the "haeres substitutus") in his place in a certain event. If the event upon which the substitution was to take effect was the refusal of the instituted heir to accept the inheritance at all, then the substitution was called "vulgaris" (or common); but if the event was the death of the infant (pupillus) after acceptance, and before attaining his majority (of fourteen years if a male, and of twelve years if a female), then the substitution was called "pupillaris" (or for minors). Brown.

SUBSTITUTION (Lat. substitutio). In civil law. The putting of one person in the place of another, so that he may, in default of ability in the former, or after him, have the benefit of a devise or legacy.

Direct substitution is merely the institution of a second legatee in case the first should be either incapable or unwilling to accept the legacy; for example, if a testator should give to A. his estate, but provides that, in case he cannot legally receive it, or he willfully refuses it, it shall go to B.

Fidei commissary substitution is that which takes place when the person substituted is not to receive the legacy until after the first legatee, and, consequently, must receive the thing bequeathed from the hands of the latter; for example, I institute A. my heir, and I request that at his death he shall deliver my succession to B. Merlin, Repert.; 5 Toullier, Dr. Civ. 14. See "Subrogation."

SUBSTITUTIONAL, or SUBSTITUTIONary. Where a will contains a gift of property to a class of persons, with a clause providing that, on the death of a member of the class before the period of distribution, his share is to go to his issue, if any, so as to substitute them for him, the gift to the issue is said to be substitutional or substitutionary. A bequest to such of the children of A. as shall be living at the testator's death, with a direction that the issue of such as shall have died shall take the shares which their parents would have taken, if living at the testator's death, is an example. Under such a gift, the issue of children dead at the date of the will cannot take anything. 2 Jarm. Wills, 771 et seq.

SUBSTITUTIONARY EXECUTOR. A person nominated by the testator to be executor in the event that the person primarily nominated shall fail to qualify or cease to act.

SUBSTRACTION. In French law. The act of taking something fraudulently. It is generally applied to the taking of the goods of the estate of a deceased person fraudulently. See "Expilation."

SUBTENANT. An under tenant.

SUBTRACTION (Lat. sub, away, traho, to draw). The act of withholding or detaining anything unlawfully.

SUBTRACTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS. The act of a husband or wife living separately from the other without a lawful cause. 3 Bl. Comm. 94.

SUBVASSORES (Law Lat.) In old Scotch law. Base holders; inferior holders; they who held their lands of knights. Skene de Verb. Sign.

SUCCESSIO (Lat.) In the civil law. A coming in place of another, on his decease; a coming into the estate which a deceased person had at the time of his death. This was either by virtue of an express appointment of the deceased person by his will (ex testamento), or by the general appointment of law in case of intestacy (ab intestato). Inst. 2. 9. 7; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 10; Id. lib. 3, tit. 13.

SUCCESSION.

——In Louisiana. The right and transmission of the rights and obligations of the deceased to his heirs. The estate, rights, and charges which a person leaves after his death, whether the property exceed the charges, or the charges exceed the property, or whether he has left only charges without property. The succession not only includes the rights and obligations of the deceased as they exist at the time of his death, but all that has accrued thereto since the opening of the succession, as also of the new charges to which it becomes subject. That right by which the heir can take possession of the estate of the deceased, such as it may be.

(1) Irregular succession is that which is established by law in favor of certain persons, or of the state in default of heirs, either legal or instituted by testament.

(2) Legal succession is that which is established in favor of the nearest relations of the deceased.

(3) Testamentary succession is that which results from the constitution of the heir, contained in a testament executed in the form prescribed by law. See "Heir;" "Descent;" Poth. des Success.; Toullier, Dr. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 1.

——In Common Law. The mode by which one set of persons, members of a corporation aggregate, acquire the rights of another set which preceded them. This term in strictness is to be applied only to such corporations. 2 Bl. Comm. 430.

SUCCESSION TAXES. Taxes levied on the successions due or inheritance of a decedent's estate. They are variously called "inheritance taxes," "collateral inheritance taxes," "transfer taxes," and perhaps other names. The local statutes imposing them determine the modes for their collection, and the persons or properties liable.

SUCCESSOR. One who follows or comes into the place of another.

This term is applied more particularly to a sole corporation, or to any corporation. The word "heir" is more correctly applicable to a common person who takes an estate by descent. 12 Pick. (Mass.) 322; Co. Litt. 8b.

A person who has been appointed or elected to some office after another person.

SUCCURRITUR MINORI; FACILIS EST lapsus juventutis. A minor is to be aided; youth is liable to err. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 47.

SUCKEN, or SUCHEN. In Scotch law. The whole lands restricted to a mill,—that is, whose tenants are bound to grind there. The possessors of these lands are called "suckeners." Bell, Dict.

SUE. To commence or continue legal proceedings for the recovery of a right. See "Action;" "Suit."

SUE OUT. In practice. To obtain judicially; to issue. Applied only to process; particularly such as is granted specially. To sue out a writ is to obtain and issue it; to issue it on leave obtained for the purpose.

SUERTE. In Spanish law. A small lot of ground. 5 Tex. 83.

SUFFER. To suffer an act to be done, by a person who can prevent it, is to permit or consent to it; to approve of it, and not to hinder it. It implies a willingness of the mind. 19 Conn. 505.

SUFFERANCE, TENANCY AT. See "Tenancy."

SUFFERANCE WHARVES. Wharves on which goods may be landed before any duty is paid. They are appointed for the purpose by the commissioners of the customs. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, § 13; 2 Steph. Comm. 500, note.

SUFFERING A RECOVERY. A recovery was effected by the party wishing to convey the land suffering a fictitious action to be brought against him by the party to whom the land was to be conveyed (the demandant), and allowing the demandant to recover a judgment against him for the land in question. The vendor, or conveying party, in thus assisting or permitting the demandant so to recover a judgment against him, was thence technically said to "suffer a recovery." Brown.

SUFFRAGAN (Law Lat. suffragancus). A titular bishop ordained to assist the bishop of the diocese in his spiritual functions, or to take his place. The number was limited to two to each bishop by 26 Hen. VIII. c. 14. So called because by his suffrage ecclesiastical causes were to be judged. Termes de la Ley.

SUFFRAGE. Vote; the act of voting; the right to vote.

SUGGESTIO FALSI (Lat.) A statement of a falsehood. This amounts to a fraud whenever the party making it was bound to disclose the truth.

The following is an example of a case where chancery will interfere and set aside a contract as fraudulent, on account of the suggestio falsi: A purchaser applied to the seller to purchase a lot of wild land, and represented to him it was worth nothing, except for a sheep pasture, when he knew there was a valuable mine on the lot, of which the seller was ignorant. The sale was set aside. 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 390; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3837 et seq. See "Concealment;" "Misrepresentation;" "Representation;" "Suppressio Veri."

SUGGESTION. In practice. Information. It is applied to those cases where, during the pendency of a suit, some matter of fact occurs which puts a stop to the suit in its existing form, such as death or insolvency of a party. The counsel of the other party announces the fact in court, or enters it upon the record. The fact is usually admitted, if true, and the court issues the proper order thereupon. See 2 Sellon, Prac. 191.

In wills, when suggestions are made to a testator for the purpose of procuring a devise of his property in a particular way, and when such suggestions are false, they generally amount to a fraud. Bac. Abr. "Wills" (G 3); 5 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 706.

SUGGESTIVE INTERROGATION. A phrase which has been used by some writers to signify the same thing as "leading question." 2 Benth. Ev. bk. 3, c. 3. It is used in the French law.

SUI GENERIS (Lat.) Of its own kind; the only one of its kind.

SUI HAEREDES (Lat.) In the civil law. One's own heirs; proper heirs. Inst. 2. 19. 2; Dig. 38. 16.

SUI JURIS (Lat. of his own right). Possessing all the rights to which a freeman is entitled; not being under the power of another, as a slave, a minor, and the like.

To make a valid contract, a person must, in general, be sui juris. Every one of full age is presumed to be sui juris. Story, Ag. 10.

SUICIDE. Self-destruction. At common law, suicide was a felony entailing forfeiture of estate. 1 Hale, P. C. c. 27.

Since the abolition of forfeitures, punishment of suicide is, of course, impossible, but an attempt to commit suicide is indictable (9 Cox, C. C. 247); and one who persuades another to suicide is guilty of murder (4 Bl. Comm. 189; 123 Mass. 422), though, if he be not present at the commission of the suicide, it is held that he cannot be punished, because he is an accessory before the fact, and the prior conviction of the principal is impossible (9 Car. & P. 79).

SUING AND LABORING CLAUSE. A clause in an English policy of marine insurance, generally in the following form: "In case of any loss or misfortune, it shall be lawful for the assured, their factors, servants, and assigns, to sue, labor, and travel for, in, and about the defense, safeguard, and recovery of the" property insured, "without prejudice to this insurance; to the charges whereof we, the assurers, will contribute." The object of the clause is to encourage the assured to exert themselves in preserving the property from loss. 15 C. B. (N. S.) 291; 2 Q. B. Div. 501; 4 App. Cas. 755.

SUIT. In its broadest sense, any proceeding in a court of justice by which a party pursues a remedy which the law affords him. In this sense, it is a broader term than "action," including proceedings in petition. 2 Pet. (U. S.) 449; 14 Pet. (U. S.) 540.

"Suit" applies to criminal proceedings (143 Mass. 136), and proceedings both in equity and at law (20 How. Pr. [N. Y.] 381).

In a narrower sense, "suit" has been held synonymous with "action." 4 Wall. (U. S.) 112. And "suit" is commonly applied to proceedings in equity, and "action" to proceedings at law. 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 300.

——In Louisiana. A suit is a real, personal, or mixed demand made before a competent judge, by which the parties pray to obtain their rights and a decision of their disputes. Code Prac. art. 96. In that acceptation, the words "suit," "process," and "cause" are in that state almost synonymous.

——At Common Law. The term had several meanings, not included in the idea of proceedings in court, as:

(1) Suit of court, an attendance which a tenant owes to his lord's court. Cowell; Jacob, 4.

(2) Suit covenant, where one has covenanted to do suit and service in his lord's court.

(3) Suit custom, where service is owed time out of mind.

(4) The following one in chase; as, fresh suit.

(5) A petition to a king, or a great person, or a court.

SUIT SILVER, or SUTER SILVER. A small rent or sum of money paid in some manors to excuse the freeholders' appearance at the courts of their lord. Cowell.

SUITAS (Law Lat.) In the civil law. The condition or quality of a suus haeres, or proper heir. Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 9, No. 11; Calv. Lex. This term seems to have been framed by the later civilians.

SUITE (French). Those persons who, by his authority, follow or attend an ambassador or other public minister.

In general, the suite of a minister are protected from arrest, and the inviolability of his person is communicated to those who form his suite. Vattel, lib. 4, c. 9, § 120; 1 Dall. (Pa.) 177; Baldw. (U. S.) 240. See "Ambassador."

SUITOR. One who is a party to a suit or action in court; one who is a party to an action. In its ancient sense, "suitor" meant one who was bound to attend the county court; also, one who formed part of the secta.

SUITORS' DEPOSIT ACCOUNT. Formerly suitors in the English court of chancery derived no income from their cash paid into court unless it was invested at their request and risk. Now, however, it is provided by the Court of Chancery (Funds) Act 1872, that all money paid into court, and not required by the suitor to be invested, shall be placed on deposit, and shall bear interest at two per cent. per annum for the benefit of the suitor entitled to it. The sum required for the payment of this interest is produced by placing all money in court not required for meeting current demands in the hands of the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, who invest it in government securities. This arrangement is called the "suitors' deposit account." See Chancery Funds Consolidated Rules, 1874; Report of Chancery Funds Commissioners (1864) lvii.

SUITORS' FEE FUND. A fund arising partly from the fees of the English court of chancery, and partly from the surplus income of the suitors' fund (q. v.) Out of it the salaries and other expenses of the court of chancery were paid. By the Courts of Justice (Salaries and Funds) Act 1866, the suitors' fee fund was transferred to the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, and the salaries and expenses formerly paid out of it were charged on the consolidated fund. Rep. Chanc. Fund Comm. 1864.

SUITORS' FUND. A fund belonging to the English court of chancery, and consisting of two parts. Fund A consisted of government stocks resulting from the investment of so much of the money in court belonging to the suitors as was not required for current purposes. Part of the income arising from these investments was employed in paying certain expenses of the court, and the balance was invested in government stocks, which formed fund B. Subsequently the surplus income of both funds was annually added to the suitors' fee fund (q. v.) By the Courts of Justice, etc., Act 1869, the suitors' fund was transferred to the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, and the consolidated fund was made liable for the due payment of the money which belonged to the suitors, and had been invested as above stated. Chanc. Funds Comm. Rep. 1864.

SULCUS. A small brook or stream of water. Cowell.

SUM. A summary or abstract; a compendium; a collection.

SUM IN GROSS. An entire sum, as distinguished from one composed of separate or specified parts. 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 61, 262.

SUMMA CARITAS EST FACERE JUSTItiam singulis et omni tempore quando necesse fuerit. The greatest charity is to do justice to every one, and at any time whenever it may be necessary. 11 Coke, 70.

SUMMA EST LEX QUAE PRO RELIGIone facit. That is the highest law which favors religion. 10 Mod. 117, 119; 2 Chanc. Cas. 18.

SUMMA RATIO EST QUAE PRO RELIGIone facit. That consideration is strongest which determines in favor of religion. Co. Litt. 341a; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 18; 5 Coke, 14b; 10 Coke, 55a; 2 Chanc. Cas. 18.

SUMMAM ESSE RATIONEM QUAE PRO religione facit. That consideration is strongest which determines in favor of religion. Dig. 11. 7. 43, cited in Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 3, c. 12, § 7. See 10 Mod. 117, 119.

SUMMARY PROCEDURE ON BILLS OF exchange. This phrase refers to St. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, passed in 1855, for the purpose of facilitating the remedies on bills and notes by the prevention of frivolous or fictitious defenses. By this statute, a defendant in an action on a bill or note, brought within six months after it has become payable, is prohibited from defending the action without the leave of the court or a judge. See 2 Steph. Comm. 118, note; Lush, Prac. 1027.

SUMMARY PROCEEDING. A form of trial in which the ancient established course of legal proceedings is disregarded, especially in the matter of trial by jury, and, in the case of the heavier crimes, presentment by a grand jury. See 8 Gray (Mass.) 329.

In no case can the party be tried summarily unless when such proceedings are authorized by legislative authority, except perhaps in cases of contempts; for the common law is a stranger to such a mode of trial. 4 Bl. Comm. 280. See 2 Kent, Comm. (6th Ed.) 73; 2 Conn. 819; 4 Conn. 535; 37 Me. 172; 4 Hill (N. Y.) 145; 8 Gray (Mass.) 329; 4 Dev. (N. C.) 15; 10 Yerg. (Tenn.) 59.

SUMMARY TRIALS. A modern term employed to designate criminal trials before magistrates, justices of the peace, or other inferior judicial officers or courts, which trials are not according to the common-law trial by jury on indictment, but are conducted in a less formal and cautious manner. Only the minor offenses are tried thus. It seems that the term should include a trial on indictment if it lacks the element of trial by a common-law jury.

SUMMER-HUS SILVER. A payment to the lords of the wood on the Wealds of Kent, who used to visit those places in summer, when their under tenants were bound to prepare little summer houses for their reception, or else pay a composition in money. Custumale de Newington juxta Sittingburn, M. S.; Cowell.

SUMMING UP. In practice. The act of making a speech before a court and jury, after all the evidence has been heard, in favor of one of the parties in the cause, is called "summing up." When the judge delivers his charge to the jury, he usually sums up the evidence in the case. 6 Harg. St. Tr. 832; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 632. See "Charge."

SUMMON. In practice. To notify the defendant that an action has been instituted against him, and that he is required to answer to it at a time and place named. This is done by a proper officer's either giving the defendant a copy of the summons, or having it at his house, or by reading the summons to him.

SUMMONERS. Petty officers who cite men to appear in any court.

SUMMONITIO (Law Lat.) In old English practice. A summoning or summons; a writ by which a party was summoned to appear in court, of which there were various kinds. Spelman; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 6.

A command or precept of the king that one be before him to answer or do something, or that one be and have such a one to answer or to do something. Bracton, fol. 333.

SUMMONITIONES AUT CITATIONES nullae liceant fieri intra palatium regis. Let no summonses or citations be served within the king's palace. 3 Inst. 141.

SUMMONITORES SCACCARII. Officers who assisted in collecting the revenues by citing the defaulters therein into the court of exchequer.

SUMMONS.

——In Common-Law Practice. The name of a writ commanding the sheriff, or other authorized officer, to notify a party to appear in court to answer a complaint made against him, and in the said writ specified, on a day therein mentioned. Viner, Abr.; 2 Sellon, Prac. 356; 3 Bl. Comm. 279.

The writ of summons was substituted by St. 2 Wm. IV. c. 39, for the original writs by which actions were formerly commenced.

——In Code Practice. The proceeding to commence an action in many of the code states consists of a notice to defendant, requiring him to serve an answer to the complaint. It is ordinarily signed by the plaintiff or his attorney, bears no teste, and is not process. It may be served by any disinterested person or by the attorney.

In other code states the summons runs in the name of the state or people, is issued by the clerk under seal, and is served by the sheriff.

Some of the states permit the use of either of these two modes of summons. See "Process."

SUMMONS AND SEVERANCE. See "Severance."

SUMMUM JUS (Lat.) Strict right; extreme right. 3 Bl. Comm. 392; 1 Burrows, 54. The extremity or rigor of the law. Burr. Sett. Cas. 588. Lord Bacon applies the phrase to strict law, untempered by equity. Works, IV. 274.

SUMMUM JUS, SUMMA INJURIA. The rigor or height of law is the height of wrong. Hob. 125.

SUMPTUARY LAWS. Laws relating to the expenses of the people, and made to restrain excess in apparel, food, drink, furniture, etc.

They originated in the view that luxury is, in some of its degrees, opposed to public policy, and that the state is bound to interfere against it. Montesq. Esprit des Lois, bk. 7, c. 2, 4, and Tacitus, Ann. bk. 2, c. 33; Id. bk. 3, c. 52.

In England, in 1336, it was enacted (10 Edw. III. c. 3), that, inasmuch as many mischiefs had happened to the people of the realm by excessive and costly meats, by which, among other things, many who aspired in this respect beyond their means were impoverished and unable to aid themselves or their liege lord in time of need, all men were forbidden to have served more than two courses at a meal, each of but two sorts of victual, except on the principal feasts of the year, and then only three courses were allowed. Blackstone states that this is still unrepealed. 4 Bl. Comm. 170. Subsequent statutes—that of 1363, and those of 1463 and 1482—regulated the dress, and to some extent the diet, of the people, with careful regard to their rank. The substance of these statutes will be found in Knight's History of England, vol 2, pp. 272-274. They were repealed by 1 Jac. I. c. 25.

SUNDAY. The first day of the week. In some of the New England states it begins at sunsetting on Saturday, and ends at the same time the next day; but in other parts of the United States it generally commences at twelve o'clock on the night between Saturday and Sunday, and ends in twenty-four hours thereafter. 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 268. And see Bac. Abr. "Heresy, etc." (D), "Sheriff" (N 4); 1 Salk. 78; 1 Sellon. Prac. 12. The "Sabbath," the "Lord's Day," and "Sunday" all mean the same thing. 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 268. See 3 Watts (Pa.) 56, 59; 6 Watts (Pa.) 231.

SUO NOMINE (Lat.) In his own name.

SUO PERICULO (Lat.) At his own peril or risk.

SUPER ALTUM MARE (Lat.) Upon the high sea. See "High Seas."

SUPER FIDEM CHARTARUM, MORTUIS testibus, erit ad patriam de necessitate recurrendum. The truth of charters is necessarily to be referred to a jury when the witnesses are dead. Co. Litt. 6.

SUPER JURARE. A term anciently used when a criminal endeavored to excuse himself by his own oath, or the oath of one or two witnesses, and the crime objected against him was so plain and notorious that he was convicted on the oaths of many more witnesses. Wharton.

SUPER PRAEROGATIVA REGIS. A writ which formerly lay against the king's tenant's widow for marrying without the royal license. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 174.

SUPER STATUTO. 1 Edw. III. c. 12. A writ that lay against the king's tenant holding in chief, who aliened the king's land without his license.

SUPER STATUTO DE ARTICULIS CLERI. A writ which lay against a sheriff or other officer who distrained in the king's highway, or on lands anciently belonging to the church.

SUPER STATUTO FACTO POUR SENEschal et marshal de roy, etc. A writ which lay against a steward or marshal for holding plea in his court, or for trespass or contracts not made or arising within the king's household.

SUPER STATUTO VERSUS SERVANtes et laboratores. A writ which lay against him who kept any servants who had left the service of another, contrary to law.

SUPER VISUM CORPORE (Lat.) Upon view of the body. When an inquest is held over a body found dead, it must be super visum corpore. See "Coroner."

SUPERCARGO. In maritime law. A person specially employed by the owner of a cargo to take charge of and sell to the best advantage merchandise which has been shipped, and to purchase returning cargoes and to receive freight, as he may be authorized.

Supercargoes have complete control over the cargo and everything which immediately concerns it, unless their authority is either expressly or impliedly restrained. 12 East, 381. Under certain circumstances, they are responsible for the cargo (4 Mass. 115. See 1 Gill & J. [Md.] 1), but the supercargo has no power to interfere with the government of the ship (3 Pardessus, note 646; 1 Boul. P. Dr. Com. 421).

SUPERDEMANDA (Law Lat.) In old English practice. An over demand; a demand of more than was just or due. Cadit in misericordiam pro superdemanda, becomes subject to amercement for his over demand. Bracton, fol. 179b.

SUPERFICIARIUS (Lat.) In civil law. He who has built upon the soil of another, which he has hired for a number of years or forever, yielding a yearly rent. This is not very different from the owner of a lot on ground rent in Pennsylvania. Dig. 43. 18. 1.

SUPERFICIES (Lat.) In civil law. Whatever has been erected on the soil.

SUPERFLUA NON NOCENT. Superfluities do no injury. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 184.

SUPERFLUOUS LANDS. In English law. Lands acquired by a railway company under its statutory powers, and not required for the purposes of its undertaking. The company is bound, within a certain time, to sell such lands, and, if it does not, they vest in and become the property of the owners of the adjoining lands. 13 Ch. Div. 607.

SUPERINDUCTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. A species of obliteration. Dig. 28. 4. 1.

SUPERINSTITUTION. Where a church is full by institution, and a second institution is granted to the same church, this is a superinstitution, and necessarily raises the question who is entitled to the benefice. It is said that the party who obtains a superinstitution may try his title by ejectment, but that, in consequence of its inconveniences, this method is discouraged, and the more usual remedy of a quare impedit adopted. Phillim. Ecc. Law, 476.

SUPERIOR. One who has a right to command; one who holds a superior rank; as, a soldier is bound to obey his superior.

In estates, some are superior to others. An estate entitled to a servitude or easement over another estate is called the "superior" or "dominant," and the other the "inferior" or "servient," estate. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1612.

SUPERIOR AND VASSAL. In Scotch law. A feudal relation corresponding with the English "lord and tenant." Bell, Dict.

SUPERIOR COURT.

——In English Law. A term applied collectively to the three courts of common law at Westminster, namely, the king's bench, the common pleas, the exchequer.

It denotes a court of intermediate jurisdiction between the courts of inferior or limited jurisdiction and the courts of last resort.

——In American Law. A court of intermediate jurisdiction between the inferior courts and those of last resort.

In Delaware it is the court of last resort; and in some of the states there is a superior court for cities.

SUPERIORITY. In Scotch law. The dominium directum of lands, without the profit. 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 2, p. 97; Bell, Dict.

SUPERNUMERARII (Lat.) In Roman law. Those advocates who were not statuti (q. v.)

The statuti were inscribed in the matriculation books, and formed a part of the college of advocates in each jurisdiction. The supernumeraries were not attached to any bar in particular, and could reside where they pleased. They took the place of advocates by title as vacancies occurred in that body.

SUPERONERATIO (Law Lat. superonenare). Surcharging a common, i. e., putting in beasts of a number or kind other than the right of common allows. It can only be of a common appendant or appurtenant. Bracton, fol. 229, and Fleta, lib. 4, c. 23, § 4, give two remedies, novel disseisin and writ of admeasurement, by which latter remedy no damages are recovered till the second offense. Now, distraining, trespass, and case are used as remedies. 3 Bl. Comm. 238*.

SUPERONERATIONE PASTURAE. A judicial writ that lay against him who was impleaded in the county court for the surcharge of a common with his cattle, in a case where he was formerly impleaded for it in the same court, and the cause was removed into one of the superior courts. Obsolete.

SUPERPLUSAGIUM. Overplus; surplus; residue or balance. Spelman.

SUPERSEDE. To stay, stop, interfere with, or annul; e. g., to supersede the proceedings in outlawry, or in bankruptcy, or in lunacy, etc.

SUPERSEDEAS (Lat. that you set aside). A stay of proceedings. The name of a writ containing a command to stay the proceedings at law. It is either express, by the issuance of a writ of supersedeas, or implied, by the issuance of a writ as of certiorari, a writ of error when bail is given, etc., which operate as a supersedeas.

SUPERSTITIOUS USE. In English law. When lands, tenements, rents, goods, or chattels are given, secured, or appointed for and towards the maintenance of a priest or chaplain to say mass; for the maintenance of a priest or other man to pray for the soul of any dead man in such a church or elsewhere; to have and maintain perpetual obits, lamps, torches, etc., to be used at certain times to help to save the souls of men out of purgatory,—in such cases, the king, by force of several statutes, is authorized to direct and appoint all such uses to such purposes as are truly charitable. Bac. Abr. "Charitable Uses and Mortmain" (D); Duke, Char. Uses, 105; 6 Ves. 567; 4 Coke, 104.

In the United States, where all religious opinions are free, and the right to exercise them is secured to the people, a bequest to support a Catholic priest, and perhaps certain other uses in England, would not be considered as superstitious uses. 1 Pa. St. 49; 8 Pa. St. 327; 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 388; 1 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 224. Yet many of the superstitious uses of the English law would fail to be considered as charities, and would undoubtedly come under the prohibition against perpetuities.

SUPPLEMENT, LETTERS OF. In Scotch practice. A process by which a party not residing within the jurisdiction of an inferior court may be cited to appear before it. Bell, Dict.

SUPPLEMENTAL. That which is added to a thing to complete it; as, a supplemental affidavit, which is an additional affidavit to make out a case; a supplemental bill.

SUPPLEMENTAL AFFIDAVIT. In practice. An affidavit made in addition to a previous affidavit, for the purpose of supplying some deficiency in it.

SUPPLEMENTAL ANSWER. One which was filed in chancery for the purpose of correcting, adding to, and explaining an answer already filed. Smith, Ch. Prac. 334.

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL. In equity practice. A bill brought as an addition to an original bill to supply some defect in its original frame or structure which cannot be supplied by amendment. See 1 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 200; 15 Miss. 456; 22 Barb. (N. Y.) 161; 14 Ala. (N. S.) 147; 18 Ala. (N. S.) 771. It may be brought by a plaintiff or defendant (2 Atk. 533; 2 Ball & B. 140; 1 Story, C. C. [U. S.] 218), and as well after as before a decree (3 Md. Ch. 306; 1 Macn. & G. 405; Story, Eq. Pl. § 338; Hinde, Chanc. Prac. 43), but must be within a reasonable time (2 Halst. [N. J.] 465). See "Original Bill."

SUPPLEMENTAL BILL, BILL IN THE nature of a. See "Bill in the Nature, etc."

SUPPLEMENTAL CLAIM. A further claim which was filed when further relief was sought after the bringing of a claim. Smith, Ch. Prac. 655.

SUPPLEMENTAL COMPLAINT. In code practice. A complaint supplying some defect or omission in the original complaint, not curable by amendment.

SUPPLETORY OATH. In ecclesiastical law. An oath given by the judge to the plaintiff or defendant upon half proof, as by one witness, already made. The oath, added to the half proof, enables the judge to decide. It is discretionary with the judge. Strange, 80; 3 Bl. Comm. 370*.

SUPPLICATIO (Lat.) In civil law. A petition for pardon of a first offense; also, a petition for reversal of judgment; also, equivalent to duplicatio, which is our "rejoinder." Calv. Lex.

SUPPLICAVIT (Lat.) In English law. The name of a writ issuing out of the king's bench or chancery for taking sureties of the peace. It is commonly directed to the justices of the peace, when they are averse to acting in the affair in their judicial capacity. 4 Bl. Comm. 233. See Viner, Abr.; Comyn, Dig. "Chancery" (4 R), "Forcible Entry" (D 16, 17).

SUPPLICIUM (Lat.) In civil law. A corporal punishment ordained by law; the punishment of death; so called because it was customary to accompany the guilty man to the place of execution, and there offer supplications for him.

SUPPLIES. In English law. Extraordinary grants to the king by parliament to supply the exigencies of the state. Jacob.

SUPPORT. In the law of easements. The right to rest the beams or framework of a building into a wall of an adjoining building. Also rights of lateral and subjacent support which pertain to owners of adjoining lands. See "Party Walls;" "Lateral Support."

In the law of decedents' estates the term "support" is sometimes used as a synonym for the allowance of articles or money set apart for the survivor and children.

SUPPRESSIO VERI (Lat.) Concealment of truth. See "Fraud."

SUPPRESSIO VERI, EXPRESSIO FALSI. Suppression of the truth is (equivalent to) the expression of what is false. 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 374, 417.

SUPPRESSIO VERI, SUGGESTIO FALSI. Suppression of the truth is equivalent to the suggestion of what is false. 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 521, 525.

SUPRA (Lat.) Above; upon.

SUPRA PROTEST (over protest). In mercantile law. A term applied to an acceptance of a bill by a third person, after protest for nonacceptance by the drawee. 3 Kent, Comm. 87.

SUPREMA VOLUNTAS (Lat.) The last will. Et suprema voluntas quod mandat fierique jubet, parere necesse est, and what a last will commands and orders to be done must be obeyed. Doderidge, J., Latch, 137.

SUPREMACY. Sovereign dominion, authority, and pre-eminence; the highest state. In the United States, the supremacy resides in the people, and is exercised by their constitutional representative,—the president and congress. See "Sovereignty."

SUPREMACY, ACT OF. See "Act of Supremacy."

SUPREMACY, OATH OF. In English law. An oath to uphold the supreme power of the kingdom in the person of the reigning sovereign.

SUPREME. That which is superior to all other things; as, the supreme power of the state, which is an authority over all others; the supreme court, which is superior to all other courts.

SUPREME COURT. A court of superior jurisdiction in many of the states of the United States and the federal court of last resort.

The name is properly applied to the court of last resort, and is so used in most of the states. In nearly all the states there is a supreme court, but in one or two there is a court of appellate jurisdiction from the supreme court.

SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS. In American law. An appellate tribunal, and the court of last resort, in the state of Connecticut.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE. The court formed by the English judicature act of 1873, as modified by the judicature act of 1875, the appellate jurisdiction act of 1876, and the judicature acts of 1877, 1879, and 1881, in substitution for the various superior courts of law, equity, admiralty, probate, and divorce, existing when the act was passed, including the court of appeal in chancery and bankruptcy, and the exchequer chamber. It consists of two permanent divisions, viz., a court of original jurisdiction, called the "high court of justice," and a court of appellate jurisdiction, called the "court of appeal." Its title of "supreme" is now a misnomer, as the superior appellate jurisdiction of the house of lords and privy council, which was originally intended to be transferred to it, has been allowed to remain.

SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT. In American law. An appellate tribunal, and the court of last resort, in the states of Maine, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire.

SUPREMUS (Lat.) In the civil law. Last; the last.

SUPREMUS EST, QUEM NEMO SEQUITUR. He is last whom no one follows. Dig. 50. 16. 92.

SUR (French). Upon. In the titles of real actions, "sur" was used to point out what the writ was founded upon. Thus, a real action brought by the owner of a reversion or seigniory, in certain cases where his tenant repudiated his tenure, was called "a writ of right sur disclaimer." So, a writ of entry sur disseisin was a real action to recover the possession of land from a disseisor.

SUR CUI IN VITA. A writ that lay for the heir of a woman whose husband had aliened her land in fee, and she had omitted to bring the writ of cui in vita for the recovery thereof, in which case, her heir might have this writ against the tenant after her decease. Cowell. See "Cui in Vita."

SURCHARGE. To put more cattle upon a common than the herbage will sustain, or than the party hath a right to do. 3 Bl. Comm. 237.

In case of common without stint, it could only happen when insufficient herbage was left for the lord's own cattle. 1 Rolle, Abr. 399.

The remedy was by distraining the beasts beyond the proper number; an action of trespass which must have been brought by the lord of the manor; an action on the case, or a writ of admeasurement of pasture. 2 Bl. Comm. 238, note.

——In Equity Practice. To prove the omission of an item from an account which is before the court as complete, which should be inserted to the credit of the party surcharging. Story, Eq. Jur. § 526; 2 Ves. Jr. 565; 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 237; 8 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 248. It is opposed to "falsify" (q. v.) Leave to surcharge and falsify is granted in preference to opening an account, in case of an account stated by the parties or reported by an auditor, where the party obtaining the liberty would be concluded by the account were it not granted. See "Account;" "Auditor."

SURDUS (Lat.) In the civil law. Deaf; a deaf person. Inst. 2. 12. 3. Surdus et mutus, a deaf and dumb person. Id.; Dig. 28. 1. 6. 1; Id. 28. 1. 7; Id. 50. 17. 124; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 38, § 1; Id. c. 40, § 2.

SURETY. A person who binds himself for the payment of a sum of money, or for the performance of something else, for another, who is already bound for the same. See "Suretyship."

SURETY COMPANY. An association or corporation engaged in the business of offering itself, in consideration of a premium paid, as a surety for the fidelity of persons in positions of trust, or for the responsibility of persons bound to the performance of any act.

SURETY OF THE PEACE. Surety of the peace is a species of preventive justice, and consists in obliging those persons whom there is a probable ground to suspect of future misbehavior, to stipulate with, and to give full assurance to, the public that such offense as is apprehended shall not take place, by finding pledges or securities for keeping the peace, or for their good behavior. Brown.

SURETYSHIP. An undertaking to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, by which the surety becomes bound as the principal or original debtor is bound.

It differs from "guaranty" in this, that suretyship is a primary obligation to see that the debt is paid, while guaranty is a collateral undertaking, essentially in the alternative, to pay the debt if the debtor does not pay it. 24 Pick. (Mass.) 252. And, accordingly, a surety may be sued as a promisor to pay the debt, while a guarantor must be sued specially on his contract. 8 Pick. (Mass.) 423.

While guaranty applies only to contracts not under seal, and principally to mercantile obligations, suretyship may apply to all obligations under seal or by parol. The subjects are, however, nearly related, and many of the principles are common to both. There must be a principal debtor liable, otherwise the promise becomes an original contract; and, the promise being collateral, the surety must be bound to no greater extent than the principal. Suretyship is one of the contracts included in the statute of frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3).

Kent, C. J., divides secondary undertakings into three classes: (1) Cases in which the guaranty or promise is collateral to the principal contract, but is made at the same time, and becomes an essential ground of the credit given to the principal or direct debtor. Here there is not, and need not be, any other consideration than that moving between the creditor and original debtor. (2) Cases in which the collateral undertaking is subsequent to the creation of the debt, and was not the inducement to it, though the subsisting liability is the ground of the promise, without any distinct and unconnected inducement. Here there must be some further consideration shown, having an immediate respect to such liability; for the consideration for the original debt will not attach to this subsequent promise. (3) When the promise to pay the debt of another arises out of some new and original consideration of benefit or harm moving between the newly-contracting parties. 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 29; 21 N. Y. 415; 21 Me. 459; 15 Pick. (Mass.) 159.

A simpler division is into two classes: (1) Where the principal obligation exists before the collateral undertaking is made. (2) Where there is no principal obligation prior in time to the collateral undertaking. In the last class, the principal obligation may be contemporaneous with or after the collateral undertaking. The first class includes Kent's second and third, the second includes Kent's first, to which must be added cases where the guaranty referring to a present or future principal obligation does not share the consideration thereof, but proceeds on a distinct consideration. Moreover, there are other original undertakings out of the statute of frauds, and valid, though by parol, besides his third class. These are where the credit is given exclusively to the promisor, though the goods or consideration pass to another. Under this division, undertakings of the first class are original, (1) when the principal obligation is thereby abrogated; (2) when, without such abrogation, the promisor, for his own advantage, apparent on the bargain, undertakes for some new consideration moving to him from the promisee; (3) where the promise is in consideration of some loss or disadvantage to the promisee; (4) where the promise is made to the principal debtor on a consideration moving from the debtor to the promisor. Theobald, Sur. 37 et seq., 49 et seq.

SURMISE (Law Fr. and Eng.) In old practice. Suggestion. "The plaintiff, upon a surmise of goods come to the hands of the executors, shall have a sci. fa." 1 Leon. 68, 286; Hardr. 82, 311.

SURNAME. A name which is added to the Christian name. In modern times, these have become family names.

They are called "surnames," because originally they were written over (sur) the name in judicial writings and contracts. They were and are still used for the purpose of distinguishing persons of the same name. They were taken from something attached to the persons assuming them; as, John Carpenter, Joseph Black, Samuel Little, etc. See "Name."

SURPLUS. That which is left from a fund which has been appropriated for a particular purpose; the remainder of a thing; the overplus; the residue. See 18 Ves. 466.

SURPLUSAGE.

——In Accounts. A greater disbursement than the charges amount to; a balance over. 1 Lew. 219.

——In Pleading. Allegations of matter wholly foreign and impertinent to the cause. All matter beyond the circumstances necessary to constitute the action is surplusage. Cowp. 683; 5 East, 275; 10 East, 205; 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 52; 1 Mason (U. S.) 57; 16 Tex. 656.

SURPLUSAGIUM NON NOCET. Surplusage does no harm. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2949; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 559.

SURPRISE. In equity practice. The act by which a party who is entering into a contract is taken unawares, by which sudden confusion or perplexity is created, which renders it proper that a court of equity should relieve the party so surprised. 2 Brown, Ch. 150; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 120. note.

The situation in which a party is placed, without any default of his own, which will be injurious to his interests. 8 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 407.

Mr. Jeremy (Eq. Jur. 366, 383, note) seems to think that the word "surprise" is a technical expression, and nearly synonymous with "fraud." It is sometimes used in this sense when it is deemed presumptive of, or approaching to, fraud. 1 Fonbl. Eq. 123; 3 Chanc. Cas. 56, 74, 103, 114. See 6 Ves. 327, 338; 16 Ves. 81, 86, 87; 2 Brown, Ch. 326; 1 Cox, 340.

SURREBUTTER. In pleading. The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's rebutter. It is governed by the same rules as the replication. See 6 Comyn, Dig. 185; 7 Comyn, Dig. 389.

SURREJOINDER. In pleading. The plaintiff's answer to the defendant's rejoinder. It is governed in every respect by the same rules as the replication. Steph. Pl. 77; Archb. Civ. Pl. 284; 7 Comyn, Dig. 389.

SURRENDER. A yielding up of an estate for life or years to him who has an immediate estate in reversion or remainder, by which the lesser estate is merged in the greater by mutual agreement. Co. Litt. 337b.

The deed by which the surrender is made.

A surrender is of a nature directly opposite to a release; for, as the latter operates by the greater estate descending upon the less, the former is the falling of a less estate into a greater, by deed. A surrender immediately divests the estate of the surrenderer, and vests it in the surrenderee, even without the assent of the latter. Shep. Touch. 300, 301.

The technical and proper words of this conveyance are, surrender and yield up; but any form of words by which the intention of the parties is sufficiently manifested will operate as a surrender. Perk. § 607; 1 Term R. 441; Comyn, Dig. "Surrender" (A).

The surrender may be express or implied. The latter is when an estate incompatible with the existing estate is accepted, or the lessee takes a new lease of the same lands. 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 28; 2 Wils. 26; 1 Barn. & Ald. 50; 2 Barn. & Ald. 119; 5 Taunt. 518. And see 6 East, 86; 9 Barn. & C. 288; 7 Watts (Pa.) 123; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 7; Comyn, Dig.; 4 Kent, Comm. 102; Rolle, Abr.; 11 East, 317, note.

SURRENDER BY BAIL. The delivery of a principal again into custody by his bail.

SURRENDER OF COPYHOLD. The yielding of a copyhold into the hands of the lord. The usual method of transferring copyholds was by a surrender of the copyhold to the lord, to the use of the intended transferee, and the acceptance of him by the lord.

SURRENDER OF CRIMINALS. The act by which the public authorities deliver a person accused of a crime, and who is found in their jurisdiction, to the authorities within whose jurisdiction it is alleged the crime has been committed. See "Extradition."

SURRENDER TO USES OF WILL. A right of copyholders in some manors to devise their copyholds by surrendering them to the uses of their wills during their lives.

SURRENDEREE. One to whom a surrender has been made.

SURRENDEROR. One who makes a surrender; as, when the tenant gives up the estate and cancels his lease before the expiration of the term. One who yields up a freehold estate for the purpose of conveying it.

SURREPTITIOUS. That which is done in a fraudulent, stealthy manner.

SURROGATE (Lat. surrogatus, from subrogare, or surrogare, to substitute).

——In English Law. A deputy or substitute of the chancellor, bishop, ecclesiastical or admiralty judge, appointed by him. He must take an oath of office. He can grant licenses, hold courts, and adjudicate cases to the same extent and with the same authority as his principal, provided his grant of powers has been coextensive with those possessed by his principal. The office has arisen by usage, but is sanctioned by canon 128, and recognized by St. 26 Geo. II. c. 33, 56 Geo. III. c. 82, and 10 Geo. IV. c. 53, by which latter act it was provided that the surrogates of the arches and consistory of London are to continue after the death of the judges of those courts till new appointments are made. 1 Phillim. Ecc. Law, 205; 3 Burn, Ecc. Law, 667.

——In American Law. A term used in some states to denote the judge to whom jurisdiction of the probate of wills, the grant of administration, and of guardianship is confided. In some states, he is called "surrogate," in others, "judge of probate," "register," "judge of the orphans' court," etc. He is ordinarily a county officer, with a local jurisdiction limited to his county.

SURSISA (Law Lat.; from Law Fr. sur-law. In the United States. A state tribunal, with similar jurisdiction to the court of ordinary, court of probate, etc. (q. v.) relating to matters of probate, etc. 2 Kent, Comm. 409, note (b).

SURSISA (Law Lat. from Law Fr. sursise, q. v.) In old English law. Neglect; default. Potest defendere summonitionem et sursisam, he may defend [deny] the summons and the default. Bracton, fol. 356.

SURSISE (Law Fr. from sursiser, q. v.) In old English law. Neglect; omission; default; a ceasing or cessation. De somounses, et de sursises, et de essoines. Britt. c. 120. E ki le cri orat e sursera, la sursise li Rei amend, and whoever hears the cry [hue and cry], and neglects to pursue it, shall make amends for the neglect to the king. LL. Gul. Conq. lib. 48.

SURSISER, or SURCESSER (Law Fr.) To neglect; to omit doing a thing; to surcease; to fail to obey process. Si levesque sursist nostre somounse, si soit attache de vener par destresse, if the bishop fail to obey our summons, he shall be attached to appear by distress. Britt. c. 26. See "Sursise."

SURSUM REDDERE (Law Lat.) In old conveyancing. To render up; to surrender.

SURSUM REDDITIO (Law Lat.) In old conveyancing. A surrender.

SURVEY. The act by which the quantity of a piece of land is ascertained. The paper containing a statement of the courses, distances, and quantity of land is also called a "survey."

By "survey" is also understood an examination; as, a survey has been made of your house, and now the insurance company will insure it.

SURVEY OF A VESSEL. An examination of a vessel to determine her condition. It is frequently had where some disaster has befallen the ship before proceeding to make repairs, or take measures for saving her.

SURVIVOR. One who survives another; one who outlives another; one of two or more persons who lives after the other or others have deceased; the longest liver of two or more joint tenants, or of any two or more persons who have a joint interest in anything. See 2 Bl. Comm. 183, 184.

One or more of certain individuals named or referred to, who are living when any other or others of them happen to die. See 1 Cush. (Mass.) 118; 11 Grat. (Va.) 67.

This is the natural and proper meaning of the term, which is usually given to it by the courts, in the construction of wills. 2 Jarm. Wills, 609-616 (435-439, Perkins' Ed. 1849). In some cases, however, "survivor" has been construed to mean "other," where it has appeared necessary in order to give effect to the apparent intention of the testator. See Id. 616-619 (440-442, Perkins' Ed.); 2 Williams, Ex'rs, 1256.

SURVIVORSHIP. The living of one of two or more persons after the death of the other or others.

Survivorship is where a person becomes entitled to property by reason of his having survived another person who had an interest in it. The most familiar example is in the case of joint tenants, the rule being that, on the death of one of two joint tenants, the whole property passes to the survivor.

SURVIVORSHIP, CLAUSE OF. An express clause in a devise or deed of gift to tenants in common that the property is to go to the survivor. Sometimes called the "clause of accruer."

SUS' PER COLL'. In English law. In the English practice, a calendar is made out of attainted criminals, and the judge signs the calendar with their separate judgments in the margin. In the case of a capital felony, it is written opposite the prisoner's name, "Let him be hanged by the neck," which, when the proceedings were in Latin, was "suspendatur per collum," or, in the abbreviated form, "Sus' per coll'." 4 Bl. Comm. 403.

SUSPENDER. In Scotch law. He in whose favor a suspension is made.

In general, a suspender is required to give caution to pay the debt in the event it shall be found due. Where the suspender cannot, from his low or suspected circumstances, procure unquestionable security, the lords admit juratory caution; but the reasons of suspension are in that case to be considered with particular accuracy at passing the bill. Act 8 Nov. 1682; Ersk. Inst. 4. 3. 6.

SUSPENDERE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To hang; to execute by hanging. Suspensus, hanged. See "Sus' per Coll'."

SUSPENSE. When a rent, profit a prendre, and the like, are, in consequence of the unity of possession of the rent, etc., of the land out of which they issue, not in esse for a time, they are said to be in suspense, tunc dormiunt; but they may be revived or awakened. Co. Litt. 313a.

SUSPENSION. A temporary stop of a right, of a law, and the like.

In times of war, the habeas corpus act may be suspended by lawful authority.

There may be a suspension of an officer's duties or powers when he is charged with crimes. Wood, Inst. 510.

Suspension of a right in an estate is a partial extinguishment, or an extinguishment for a time. It differs from an extinguishment in this, a suspended right may be revived; one extinguished is absolutely dead. Bac. Abr. "Extinguishment" (A).

The suspension of a statute for a limited time operates so as to prevent its operation for the time; but it has not the effect of a repeal. 3 Dall. (Pa.) 365.

——In Scotch Law. That form of law by which the effect of a sentence condemnatory, that has not yet received execution, is stayed or postponed till the cause be again considered. Ersk. Inst. 4. 3. 5. Suspension is competent, also, even where there is no decree, for putting a stop to any illegal act whatsoever. Ersk. Inst. 4. 3. 7.

Letters of suspension bear the form of a summons, which contains a warrant to cite the charter.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. An ecclesiastical censure, by which a spiritual person is either interdicted the exercise of his ecclesiastical function, or hindered from receiving the profits of his benefice. It may be partial or total; for a limited time, or forever, when it is called "deprivation" or "amotion." Ayliffe, Par. 501.

SUSPENSION OF A RIGHT. The act by which a party is deprived of the exercise of his right for a time.

When a right is suspended by operation of law, the right is revived the moment the bar is removed; but when the right is suspended by the act of the party, it is gone forever.

SUSPENSION OF ARMS. An agreement between belligerents, made for a short time, or for a particular place, to cease hostilities between them.

SUSPENSION, PLEAS IN. Those alleging matter of temporary incapacity to proceed with the action. Steph. Pl. 45.

SUSPENSIVE CONDITION. One which prevents a contract from going into operation until it has been fulfilled; as, if I promise to pay you one thousand dollars on condition that the ship Thomas Jefferson shall arrive from Havre, the contract is suspended until the arrival of the ship. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 731.

SUUM CIQUE TRIBUERE (Lat.) To render unto every man that which belongs to him. One of the three precepts to which Justinian said that the law might be reduced. Inst. 1. 1. 3. The others are alterum non laedere and honeste vivere (q. v.)

SUUS HAERES (Lat.) In civil law. The proper heir, as it were, not called in from outside.

Those descendants who were under the power of the deceased at the time of his death, and who are most nearly related to him. Calv. Lex.

SUUS JUDEX (Lat.) In old English law. A proper judge; a judge having cognizance of a cause. Literally, one's own judge. Bracton, fol. 401.

SUZEREIGN (Norman Fr. suz, under, and re or rey, king). A lord who possesses a fief whence other fiefs issue. Dict. de l'Academie Francaise. A tenant in capite or immediately under the king. Note 77 of Butler & Hargrave's notes, Co. Litt. lib. 3.

SWAIN MOTE, SWEIN MOTE, or SWAIN gemote (from Saxon swang, an attendant, or boclandman, or freeholder, and mote, or gemote, a meeting). In forest law. A court holden before the verderors, as judges, by the steward of the swein mote, thrice in every year, the sweins or freeholders within the forest composing the jury. Its principal jurisdiction is, first, to inquire into the oppressions and grievances committed by the officers of the forest, and, secondly, to receive and try presentments certified from the court of attachments against offenses in vert and venison. 3 Bl. Comm. 71, 72; Cowell.

SWEAR. To take an oath administered by some officer duly empowered. See "Affirmation;" "Oath."

To use such profane language as is forbidden by law. This is generally punished by statutory provisions in the several states. See "Profaneness."

SWEARING THE PEACE. Showing to a magistrate that one has just cause to be afraid of another in consequence of his menaces, in order to have him bound over to keep the peace. See "Surety of the Peace."

SWINDLER. A cheat; one guilty of defrauding divers persons. 1 Term R. 748; 2 H. Bl. 531; Starkie, Sland. & L. 135. See 10 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 128.

Swindling is usually applied to a transaction where the guilty party procures the delivery to him, under a pretended contract, of the personal property of another, with the felonious design of appropriating it to his own use. 2 Russ. Crimes, 130; Alis. Crim. Law Sc. 250; 2 Mass. 406.

SWORN BROTHERS. Persons who, by mutual oaths, covenant to share in each other's fortunes. See Sedg. Edw. Conf. c. 35.

SYB AND SOM (Saxon). Peace and security. Words occurring in the laws of Canute. Eallum Cristenum mannum syb and som gemene, to all Christian men let there be common peace and security. LL. Ecc. Canuti R. c. 17.

SYLLABUS. A headnote of a reported decision, briefly stating a conclusion on a point of law presented in the case.

SYLVA CAEDUA (Lat.) In ecclesiastical law. Wood of any kind which was kept on purpose to be cut, and which, being cut, grew again from the stump or root. Lyndw. Prov. 190; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 90.

SYMBOLAEOGRAPHY. The art or cunning rightly to form and make written instruments. It is either judicial or extrajudicial; the latter being wholly occupied with such instruments as concern matters not yet judicially in controversy, such as instruments of agreements or contracts, and testaments or last wills. Wharton.

SYMBOLIC DELIVERY. The delivery of some thing as a representation or sign of the delivery of some other.

Where an actual delivery of goods cannot be made, a symbolical delivery of some particular thing, as a halfpenny, will vest the property equally with an actual delivery. Long, Sales, 162; 8 How. (U. S.) 399; 6 Md. 10; 19 N. H. 419; 39 Me. 496; 11 Cush. (Mass.) 282; 3 Cal. 140.

SYMBOLUM ANIMAE. A mortuary, or soul scot.

SYMOND'S INN. Formerly an inn of chancery.

SYNALLAGMATIC CONTRACT. In civil law. A contract by which each of the contracting parties binds himself to the other. Such are the contracts of sale, hiring, etc. Poth. Obl. 9.

SYNCOPARE. To cut short, or pronounce things so as not to be understood. Cowell.

SYNDIC. In French law. The assignee of a bankrupt.

One who is chosen to conduct the affairs and attend to the concerns of a body corporate or community. In this sense, the word corresponds to director or manager. Rodman, Notes to Code de Com. p. 351; Civ. Code La. art. 429; Dalloz.

SYNDICATE. Persons united for the purpose of an enterprise too large for individuals to undertake.

A group of financiers who buy up the shares of a company in order to sell them at a profit by creating a scarcity. See 108 Pa. St. 162.

SYNDICUS (Greek). One chosen by a college, municipality, etc., to defend its cause. Calv. Lex. See "Syndic."

SYNGRAPH (Greek). A deed, bond, or other instrument of writing, under the hand and seal of all the parties. It was so called because the parties "wrote together."

Formerly such writings were attested by the subscription and crosses of the witnesses; afterwards, to prevent frauds and concealments, they made deeds of mutual covenant in a script and rescript, or in a part and counterpart, and in the middle between the two copies they wrote the word syngraphus in large letters, which, being cut through the parchment, and one being delivered to each party, on being afterwards put together, proved their authenticity.

Deeds thus made were denominated syngraphs by the canonists, and by the common lawyers, chirographs. 2 Bl. Comm. 296.

SYNOD. An ecclesiastical assembly.

T

T. Every person who was convicted of felony, short of murder, and admitted to the benefit of clergy, was at one time marked with this letter upon the brawn of the thumb. The practice is abolished. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27.

T. R. E. In old records, tempore Regis Edwardi, in the time of King Edward. Of common occurrence in Domesday Book, where the valuation of manors as it was in the time of Edward the Confessor is recounted.

TABARD. A short gown; a herald's coat; a sur coat.

TABARDER. One who wears a tabard or short gown. The name is still used as the title of certain bachelors of arts on the old foundation of Queen's College, Oxford. Enc. Lond.

TABELLA (Lat.) In civil law. A small table on which votes were often written. Cicero, in Rull. 2. 2. Three tablets were given to the judges; one with the letter "A" for absolutio, one with "C" for condemnatio, and one with "N L" for non liquet, not proven. Calv. Lex.

TABELLIO (Lat.) In Roman law. An officer among the Romans, who reduced to writing, and into proper form, agreements, contracts, wills, and other instruments, and witnessed their execution.

The term tabellio is derived from the Latin tabula, seu tabella, which, in this sense, signified those tablets or plates covered with wax which were then used instead of paper. 8 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 53; Delauriere, sur Ragneau, Notaire.

Tabelliones differed from notaries in many respects. They had judicial jurisdiction in some cases, and from their judgments there were no appeals. Notaries were then the clerks or aiders of the tabelliones; they received the agreements of the parties, which they reduced to short notes; and these contracts were not binding until they were written in extenso, which was done by the tabelliones. Enc. de M. D'Alembert, "Tabellion;" Jacob, "Tabellion;" Merlin, Repert. "Notaire," § 1; 3 Giannone, Istoria di Napoli, p. 86.

TABERNA (Lat. from tabula, a board).

——In the Civil Law. A shop, as being inclosed with boards (quod tabulis claudi-tur). Dig. 14. 3. 3; Id. 14. 3. 5. 10. 13; Id. 14. 3. 8; Id. 14. 3. 13. 2; Id. 14. 3. 18.

Any building fit for habitation (omne utile ad habitandum aedificium). Dig. 50. 16. 183.

A wine shop. Calv. Lex.

——In Old English Law. A drinking house; a tavern. Taverns and wakes (tabernae vigiliaeque) are spoken of in Fleta as places of nocturnal resort by servants, to the neglect of their duties. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 72, § 9. And see Id. c. 82, § 3.

TABERNACULUM (Law Lat.) In old records. A public inn or house of entertainment. Consuet. Dom. de Farendon, MS. fol. 48; Cowell.

TABERNARIUS (Lat. from taberna, a shop).

——In the Civil Law. A shop keeper. Dig. 14. 3. 5. 7.

——In Old English Law. A taverner or tavern keeper. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12, § 17.

TABLE DE MARBRE (Fr.) In old French law. Table of Marble; a principal seat of the admiralty, so called. These Tables de Marbre are frequently mentioned in the Ordonnance of the Marine. Ord. Mar. liv. 1. tit. 1, art. 10; Id. tit. 2, art. 13; Id. tit. 3, art. 3.

TABLE RENTS. Rents paid to bishops and other ecclesiastics, appropriated to their table or housekeeping. Jacob.

TABLES. A synopsis in which many particulars are brought together in a general view, as, genealogical tables, which are composed of the names of persons belonging to a family. 2 Bouv. Inst. notes 1963, 1964.

TABLEAU OF DISTRIBUTION. In Louisiana. A list of creditors of an insolvent estate, stating what each is entitled to. 4 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 535.

TABULA IN NAUFRAGIO (Lat. a plank in a wreck). In English law. A figurative term used to denote the power of a third mortgagee, who, having obtained his mortgage without any knowledge of a second mortgage, may acquire the first incumbrance, and squeeze out and have satisfaction before the second. 2 Ves. Jr. 573; 2 Fonbl. Eq. bk. 3, c. 2, § 2; 2 Vent. 337; 1 Chanc. Cas. 162; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 414, 415. See "Tacking."

TABULAE. In civil law. Contracts and written instruments of all kinds, especially wills. So called because originally written on tablets and with wax. Calv. Lex.

TABULAE NUPTIALES. In the civil law, a written record of a marriage; or the agreement as to the dos.

TABULARIUS. In the civil law. A notary.

TAC. A kind of customary payment by a tenant. Blount, Ten. 155.

TAC FREE. Free from payments, etc.; e. g., "tac free de omnibus propriis porcis suis infra metas de C," i. e., paying nothing for his hogs running within that limit. Jacob.

TACIT (from Lat. taceo, to be silent). That which, although not expressed, is understood from the nature of the thing, or from the provision of the law; implied.

TACIT LAW. A law which derives its authority from the common consent of the people without any legislative enactment. 1 Bouv. Inst. 120.

TACIT RELOCATION. In Scotch law. The tacit or implied renewal of a lease when the landlord, instead of warning a tenant, has allowed him to continue without making a new agreement. Bell, Dict. "Relocation."

TACIT TACK. See "Tacit Relocation."

TACITA QUAEDAM HABENTUR PRO expressis. Certain things, though unexpressed, are considered as expressed. 8 Coke, 40.

TACITE (Lat.) Silently; impliedly; tacitly.

TACK. In Scotch law. A contract of location by which the use of land or any other immovable subject is let to the lessee or tacksman for a certain yearly rent, either in money, the fruits of the ground, or services. Ersk. Inst. 2. 6. 8. This word is nearly synonymous with "lease."

TACK DUTY. Rent reserved upon a lease.

TACKING.

——Of Securities. The union of securities given at different times, so as to prevent any intermediate purchaser's claiming title to redeem or otherwise discharge one lien, which is prior, without redeeming or discharging other liens, also which are subsequent, to his own title. Jeremy, Eq. Jur. bk. 1, c. 2, § 1, pp. 188-191; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 412.

The doctrine is not recognized in the United States. 37 Vt. 345.

——Of Possession. The connecting of successive possessions by persons in privity, so as to make a continuous adverse possession. 80 Hun (N. Y.) 287.

TACKSMAN. In Scotch law. A tenant.

TACTIS SACROSANCTIS (Law Lat.) In old English law. Touching the holy (evangelists). Fleta, lib. 3, c. 16, § 21. "A bishop may swear visis evangeliis [looking at the Gospels], and not tactis, and it is good enough." Vaughan, C. J., Freem. 133.

TACTIS SACROSANCTIS SCRIPTURIS (Lat.) In old European law. Touching the holy Scriptures. Feud. lib. 2, tit. 2, pr. Sacrosanctis evangeliis tactis. Code, 3. 1. 14. 1.

TACTO PER SE SANCTO EVANGELIO (Law Lat.) Having personally touched the holy Gospel. Cro. Eliz. 105. The description of a corporal oath.

TAIL. See "Estates."

TAIL AFTER POSSIBILITY OF ISSUE extinct. The estate of a surviving tenant in special tail after the death, without surviving issue, of the person from whose body the issue to inherit was to spring. 2 Bl. Comm. 124.

TAIL FEMALE. An estate tail limited to the female heirs of the donee.

TAIL GENERAL. An estate tail granted to one and the heirs of his body in general. 2 Bl. Comm. 113.

TAIL MALE. An estate tail limited to the male heirs of the donee.

TAIL SPECIAL. An estate tail granted to one and certain only of the heirs of his body, as those to be begotten on his then wife. 2 Bl. Comm. 113.

TAILLE (French).

——In Old French Law. A tax or assessment levied by the king, or by any great lord, upon his subjects. Brande.

——In Old English Law. The fee which is opposed to fee simple, because it is so minced or pared that it is not in the owner's free power to dispose of it, but it is, by the first giver, cut or divided from all other, and tied to the issue of the donee,—in short, an estate tail.

TAILZIE. In the Scotch law, an arbitrary line of succession laid down by a proprietor, in substitution of a legal line of succession. A deed of tailzie creates a Scotch entail by which, until 11 & 12 Vict. c. 36, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 94, and 31 & 32 Vict. c. 84, an estate might be tied up forever. See, also, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 61.

TAINT. Attainder (q. v.)

TAKE. A technical expression which signifies to receive; as, a devisee will take under the will. The devisee takes only when the possession of the testator has ceased. 41 N. J. Law, 70.

To seize; as, to take and carry away, either lawfully or unlawfully.

To choose; e. g., ad capiendas assisas, to choose a jury.

To obtain; e. g., to take a verdict in court, to get a verdict.

TAKER. One to whom an estate comes. The "first taker" is he who holds the immediate estate, with expectant estates following, or the first of a line of grantees.

TAKING. An element of "larceny" (q. v.)

TALE. In English law. The ancient name of the declaration or count. 3 Bl. Comm. 293.

TALES (Lat. talis, such, like). In practice. A number of jurors added to a deficient panel sufficient to supply the deficiency.

A list of such jurymen as were of the tales, kept in the king's bench office in England.

TALES DE CIRCUMSTANTIBUS (Lat. a like number of the bystanders). A sufficient number of jurors selected from the bystanders to supply a deficiency in the panel.

The order of the judge for taking such bystanders as jurors.

Whenever, from any cause, the panel of jurors is insufficient, the judge may issue the above order, and the officer immediately executes it. See 2 Hill (S. C.) 381; 2 Pa. St. 412; Coxe (N. J.) 283; 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 63; 2 Har. & J. (Md.) 426; 1 Pick. (Mass.) 43, note. The number to be drawn on successive panels is in the discretion of the court. 17 Ga. 497.

TALESMAN. A person summoned to act as a juror from among the bystanders in the court.

TALIO (Lat. from talis, such, like). In the civil law. Like for like; punishment in the same kind; the punishment of an injury by an act of the same kind, as an eye for an eye, a limb for a limb, etc. Called similitudo supplicii, likeness of punishment; reciproca poena, reciprocal punishment. Calv. Lex.; Adams, Rom. Ant. 291.

TALIS INTERPRETATIO SEMPER FIenda est, ut evitetur absurdum, et inconveniens, et ne judicium sit illusorium. Interpretation is always to be made in such a manner that what is absurd and inconvenient is to be avoided, and so that the judgment be not nugatory. 1 Coke, 52.

TALIS NON EST EADEM, NAM NULlum simile est idem. What is like is not the same, for nothing similar is the same. 4 Coke, 18.

TALIS RES, VEL TALE RECTUM, QUAE vel quod non est in homine adtunc superstite sed tantummodo est et consistit in consideratione et intelligentia legis, et quod alii dixerunt talem rem vel tale rectum fore in nubibus. Such a thing or such a right as is not vested in a person then living, but merely exists in the consideration and contemplation of law, is said to be in abeyance, and others have said that such a thing or such a right is in the clouds. Co. Litt. 342.

TALITER PROCESSUM EST. Upon pleading the judgment of an inferior court, the proceedings themselves, and this general ment, and on which the same was founded, must, to some extent, appear in the pleading, but the rule is that they may be alleged with a general allegation that "such proceedings were had," instead of a detailed account of the proceedings themselves, and this general allegation is called the "taliter processum est." A like concise mode of stating former proceedings in a suit is adopted at the present day in chancery proceedings upon petitions, and in actions in the nature of bills of revivor and supplement. Brown.

TALLAGE (Fr. tailler, to cut). In English law. A term used to denote subsidies, taxes, customs, and, indeed, any imposition whatever by the government for the purpose of raising a revenue. Bac. Abr. "Smuggling, etc." (B); Fortescue de Laud. 26; Madd. c. 17; 2 Inst. 531, 532; Spelman.

TALLAGERS. Tax or toll gatherers: mentioned by Chaucer.

TALLAGIUM (perhaps from French taille, cut off). A term including all taxes. 2 Inst. 532; Stat. de tal. non Concedendo, temp. Edw. I.; Stow, Annals, 445; 1 Bl. Comm. 311*. Chaucer has talaigiers for "tax gatherers."

TALLAGIUM FACERE. To give up accounts in the exchequer, where the method of accounting was by tallies.

TALLATIO. A keeping account by tallies. Cowell.

TALLIA. Commons in meat or drink; tax or tribute.

TALLY (Fr. tailler; Ital. tagliare, i. e., scindere, to cut off). A stick cut into two parts, on each whereof is marked, with notches or otherwise, what is due between debtor and creditor. Hence the tallier of the exchequer is now called the "teller." Lex. Const. 205; Cowell. One party must have one part, and the other the other, and they must match. Tallies in the exchequer are abolished by 2 Geo. III. c. 82. There was the same usage in France. Dict. de l'Acad. Franc.; Poth. Obl. pt. 4, c. 1, art. 2, § 8.

TALLY TRADE. A system of dealing, by which dealers furnish certain articles on credit, upon an agreement for the payment of the stipulated price by certain weekly or monthly installments. McCulloch, Dict. A tally was a common security for money in the days of Edw. I. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, c. xi. p. 253.

TALTARUM'S CASE. A case reported in Y. B. 12 Edw. IV. 19-21, which is said to have established the foundation of common recoveries, and their efficacy to bar an entail.

TALZIE. See "Tailzie."

TAM QUAM. A phrase used where a proceeding is applied or referred to two things or persons.

A writ of error from inferior courts, when the error is supposed to be as well in giving the judgment as in awarding execution upon it. Tam in redditione judicii, quam in adjudicatione executionis.

A venire tam quam was one by which a jury was summoned, as well to try an issue as to inquire of the damages on a default. 2 Tidd, Prac. 722, 895.

TAMEN (Lat.) Notwithstanding; nevertheless; yet.

TANGIBLE PROPERTY. That which may be felt or touched. It must necessarily be corporeal, but it may be real or personal.

TANISTRY (a thanis). In Irish law. A species of tenure founded on immemorial usage, by which lands, etc., descended seniori et dignissimo viri sanguinis et cognominis, i. e., to the oldest and worthiest man of the blood and name. Jacob.

TANTEO (Spanish). In Spanish law. Preemption. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 2, c. 3.

TANTUM BONA VALENT, QUANTUM vendi possunt. Things are worth what they will sell for. 3 Inst. 305.

TARDE VENIT (Lat.) In practice. The name of a return made by the sheriff to a writ, when it came into his hands too late to be executed before the return day.

The sheriff is required to show that he has yielded obedience to the writ, or give a good excuse for his omission; and he may say, quod breve adeo tarde venit quod exequi non possunt. It is usual to return the writ with an indorsement of tarde venit. Comyn, Dig. "Retorn" (D 1).

TARE. An allowance in the purchase and sale of merchandise for the weight of the box, bag, or cask, or other thing, in which the goods are packed. It is also an allowance made for any defect, waste, or diminution in the weight, quality, or quantity of goods. It differs from "tret" (q. v.)

TARIFF. Customs, duties, toll, or tribute payable upon merchandise to the general government is called "tariff." The rate of customs, etc., also bears this name, and the list of articles liable to duties is also called the "tariff."

TAURI LIBERI LIBERTAS. A common bull, because he was free to all the tenants within such a manor, liberty, etc.

TAVERN. A place of entertainment; a house kept up for the accommodation of strangers. Webster. Originally, a house for the retailing of liquors to be drunk on the spot. Webster.

In almost all the states, the word has come to mean the same as "inn," with no particular reference to the sale of liquors. See 2 Kent, Comm. (9th Ed.) 597*, note (a); 5 N. H. 258.

TAVERN KEEPER. An innkeeper (q. v.)

TAVERNER (Law Fr. and Eng.; Fr. tavernier, from taverne). In old English law. A seller of wine; one who kept a house or shop for the sale of wine. Et puis soit enquis de taverners que ount vendu vyns encontre la droit assise, and afterwards it shall be inquired of taverners who have sold wines against the right assize. Britt. c. 30. A retailer of wines. Hardr. 338. "Taverner" is used as the addition of a person in a writ in the Register. Reg. Orig. 195. But "tavern keeper" has now, for the most part, taken its place.

TAX. A contribution imposed by government on individuals for the service of the state. 13 Pa. St. 104. It is distinguished from a subsidy, as being certain and orderly. Jacob.

A sum of money assessed under the authority of the state on the personal property of an individual for the use of the state. 60 Me. 124.

It is distinguished from a local assessment, as being imposed without reference to peculiar benefits to particular individuals or property. 84 N. Y. 108; 22 Minn. 494.

"Excise" and "impost" are sometimes used as synonymous with "tax," but in strictness apply only to taxes upon production or consumption, and upon imports, respectively.

Taxes are either:

(1) Direct or indirect, direct being those assessed on the property, person, business, etc., of those who are to pay them, and indirect being a tax levied on commodities before they reach the consumer. Cooley, Tax'n, 6.

(2) Ad valorum or specific, ad valorum being those imposed in proportion to value, and specific those consisting of a fixed sum imposed upon an article or thing by name.

(3) General or local, general being those imposed on property throughout the state, and local being those imposed on the locality specially benefitted.

Taxes are also classified according to the nature of the property on which they are imposed, as income taxes, inheritance taxes, personal property taxes, etc.

TAX DEED. An instrument whereby the officer of the law undertakes to convey the title of the rightful proprietor to the purchaser at the tax sale, or sale of the land for nonpayment of taxes.

TAX LEVY. The amount of tax to be raised, or the official act by which the amount is determined upon.

TAX LIEN. A statutory lien on lands to secure the payment of taxes, which exists in favor of the public.

TAX LISTS. The assessment roll; the list of persons or property against whom or which taxes are levied.

TAX SALE. A sale of lands for the nonpayment of taxes assessed thereon.

TAX TITLE. A title to land derived through the sale of it for delinquent taxes, or through the foreclosure of a tax lien.

TAXATI. Soldiers of a garrison or fleet, assigned to a certain station. Spelman.

TAXATIO (Lat.) In the civil law. The modification by a judge of the amount of damages claimed or sworn to by the plaintiff.

TAXATIO ECCLESIASTICA. The valuation of ecclesiastical benefices made through every diocese in England, on occasion of Pope Innocent IV. granting to King Henry III. the tenth of all spirituals for three years. This taxation was first made by Walter, bishop of Norwich, delegated by the pope to this office in 38 Hen. III., and hence called "Taxatio Norwicencis." It is also called "Pope Innocent's Valor." Wharton.

TAXATIO EXPENSARUM (Law Lat.) In old English practice. Taxation of costs.

TAXATIO NORWICENCIS. See "Taxatio Ecclesiastica."

TAXATION. The process of taxing or imposing a tax. Webster.

——In Practice. Adjustment. Fixing the amount; e. g., taxation of costs. 3 Chit. Gen. Prac. 602.

TAXATION OF COSTS. In practice. Fixing the amount of costs to which a party is entitled.

It is a rule that the jury must assess the damages and costs separately, so that it may appear to the court that the costs were not considered in the damages; and when the jury give costs in an amount insufficient to answer the costs of the suit, the plaintiff may pray that the officer may tax the costs, and such taxation is inserted in the judgment. This is said to be done ex assensu of the plaintiff, because at his prayer. Bac. Abr. "Costs" (K). The costs are taxed in the first instance by the prothonotary or clerk of the court. See 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 244; 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 591; 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 412; 2 Yerg. (Tenn.) 245, 310; 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 412; Harper (S. C.) 326; 1 Pick. (Mass.) 211; 10 Mass. 26; 16 Mass. 370. A bill of costs, having been once submitted to such an officer for taxation, cannot be withdrawn from him and referred to another. 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 252.

TAXERS. Two officers yearly chosen in Cambridge, England, to see the true gauge of all the weights and measures.

TAXING MASTERS. Officers of the English supreme court, who examine and allow or disallow items in bills of costs. See 1 Chit. Archb. Prac. (12th Ed.) 507; Smith, Ch. Prac. 12, 62, 829; 2 Daniell, Ch. Prac. (5th Ed.) 1308.

TAXING OFFICER. Each house of parliament has a taxing officer, whose duty it is to tax the costs incurred by the promoters or opponents of private bills. May, Parl. Prac. 843.

TAXT WARD. An annual payment made to a superior in Scotland, instead of the duties due to him under the tenure of ward-holding. Abolished.

TEAM, or THEAME. A royalty or privilege granted, by royal charter, to a lord of a manor, for the having, restraining, and judging of bondmen and villeins, with their children, goods, chattels, etc. Glanv. 1, 5, c. ii.

TEAMSTER. One who drives horses in a wagon for the purpose of carrying goods for hire. He is liable as a common carrier. Story, Bailm. § 496. See "Carrier."

TECHNICAL. That which properly belongs to an art.

In the construction of contracts it is a general rule that technical words are to be taken according to their approved and known use in the trade in which the contract is entered into, or to which it relates, unless they have manifestly been understood in another sense by the parties. 2 Bos. & P. 164; 6 Term R. 320; 3 Starkie, Ev. 1036.

TEIND COURT. In Scotch law. A court which has jurisdiction of matters relating to the augmentation of stipends, and the valuation and sale of tithes.

It is held before justices of the court of sessions organized as a separate court, with distinct clerks and ministerial officers. Bell, Dict.

TEINDS. In Scotch law. That liquidated proportion of the rents or goods of the people which is due to churchmen for performing divine service, or exercising the other spiritual functions proper to their several offices. Ersk. Inst. 2. 10. 2.

TEINLAND. Thainland (q. v.)

TELEGRAPHIAE. Written evidence of things past. Blount.

TELLER (tallier, one who keeps a tally). An officer in a bank or other institution; a person appointed to receive votes; a name given to certain officers in the English exchequer.

TELLERS IN PARLIAMENT. In the language of parliament, the "tellers" are the members of the house selected to count the members when a division takes place. In the house of lords, a division is effected by the "noncontents" remaining within the bar, and the "contents" going below it, a teller being appointed for each party. In the commons, the "ayes" go into the lobby at one end of the house, and the "noes" into the lobby at the other end, the house itself being perfectly empty, and two tellers being appointed for each party. May, Parl. Prac.

TELLIGRAPHUM. An Anglo-Saxon charter of land. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, c. 1, p. 10.

TELLWORC. That labor which a tenant was bound to do for his lord for a certain number of days.

TEMENTALE, or TENEMENTALE. A tax of two shillings upon every ploughland; a decennary (q. v.)

TEMERE (Lat.) In the civil law. Rashly; inconsiderately; without sufficient cause. A plaintiff was said temere litigare, who demanded a thing out of malice, or sued without just cause, and who could show no ground or cause of action. Brissonius.

TEMPLARS. A religious order of knighthood, instituted about the year 1119, and so called because the members dwelt in a part of the temple of Jerusalem, and not far from the sepulchre of our Lord. They entertained Christian strangers and pilgrims charitably, and their profession was at first to defend travellers from highwaymen and robbers. The order was suppressed A. D. 1307, and their substance given partly to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and partly to other religious orders. Brown.

TEMPLE. Two English inns of court, thus called because anciently the dwelling place of the Knights Templar. On the suppression of the order, they were purchased by some professors of the common law, and converted into hospitia or inns of court. They are called the "Inner" and "Middle Temple," in relation to Essex House, which was also a part of the house of the Templars, and called the "Outer Temple," because situated without Temple Bar. Enc. Lond.

TEMPORAL LORDS. The peers of England; the bishops are not in strictness held to be peers, but merely lords of parliament. 2 Steph. Comm. 330, 345.

TEMPORALIS ACTIO (Lat.) An action which could only be brought within a certain period.

TEMPORALIS EXCEPTIO (Lat.) A temporary exception which barred an action for a time only.

TEMPORALITIES (Law Lat. temporalia). Revenues, lands, tenements, and lay fees which bishops have from livery of the king, and in virtue of which they sit in parliament. 1 Rolle, Abr. 881.

TEMPORARY. Which is to last for a limited time. See "Statute."

TEMPORIS EXCEPTIO (Lat.) In civil law. A plea of lapse of time in bar of an action, like our statute of limitations. Dig. "De Diversis Temporalibus Actionibus."

TEMPUS (Lat.) In civil and old English law. Time in general. A time limited; a season; e. g., tempus pessonis, mast time in the forest.

TEMPUS CONTINUUM (Lat.) In civil law. A period of time which runs continually having once begun, feast days being counted as well as ordinary days, and it making no difference whether the person against whom it runs is present or absent. Calv. Lex.

TEMPUS ENIM MODUS TOLLENDI OBligationes et actiones, quia tempus currit contra desides et sui juris contemptores. For time is a means of destroying obligations and actions, because time runs against the slothful and contemners of their own rights. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 5, § 12.

TEMPUS SEMESTRE. Half a year, and not six lunar months. Westminster II. c. 5.

TEMPUS UTILE (Lat.) In civil law. A period of time which runs beneficially; i. e., feast days are not included, nor does it run against one absent in a foreign country, or on business of the republic, or detained by stress of weather. But one detained by sickness is not protected from its running; for it runs where there is power to act by an agent, as well as where there is power to act personally; and the sick man might have deputed his agent. Calv. Lex.

TENANCY. The state or condition of a tenant; the estate held by a tenant.

TENANT (Lat. teneo, tenere, to hold). One who holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of title, either in fee, for life, for years, or at will. In a popular sense, he is one who has the temporary use and occupation of lands or tenements which belong to another, the duration and other terms of whose occupation are usually defined by an agreement called a "lease," while the parties thereto are placed in the relation of landlord and tenant. 5 Man. & G. 54; Bouv. Inst. Index.

——Tenants in Common. Such as hold lands and tenements by several and distinct titles, and not by a joint title, but occupy in common, the only unity recognized between them being that of possession. They are accountable to each other for the profits of the estate; and if one of them turns another out of possession, an action of ejectment will lie against him. They may also have reciprocal actions of waste against each other. 2 Bl. Comm. 191. See "Estate in Common;" 7 Cruise, Dig.; Bac. Abr. "Joint Tenants, and Tenants in Common;" Comyn, Dig. "Abatement" (E 10, F 6), "Chancery" (3 V 4), "Devise" (N 8), "Estates" (K 8, R 2); 1 Vern. 353; Archb. Civ. Pl. 53, 73.

——Tenant by the Curtesy. A species of life tenant who, on the death of his wife seised of an estate of inheritance, after having issue by her which is capable of inheriting her estate, holds her lands for the period of his own life. After the birth of such a child, the tenant is called "tenant by the curtesy" initiate (Co. Litt. 29a; 2 Bl. Comm. 126); but to consummate the tenancy, the marriage must be lawful, the wife must have possession, and not a mere right of possession, the issue must be born alive, during the lifetime of the mother, and the husband must survive the wife. See "Curtesy."

——Tenant in Dower. Another species of life tenant, occurring where the husband of a woman is seised of an estate of inheritance, and dies, and the wife thereby becomes entitled to hold the third part of all the lands and tenements of which he was seised at any time during the coverture to her own use, for the term of her natural life. See "Dower;" 2 Bl. Comm. 129; Comyn, Dig. "Dower" (A).

——Tenant of the Demesne. One who is tenant of a mesne lord; as, where A. is tenant of B. and C. of A.; B. is the lord, A. the mesne lord, and C. the tenant of the demesne. Hammond, N. P. 392, 393.

——Tenant in Fee. Under the feudal law, one who held his lands either immediately or derivatively from the sovereign, in consideration of the military or other services he was bound to perform. If he held directly from the king, he was called a "tenant in fee," in capite. With us, the highest estate which a man can have in land has direct reference to his duty to the state. From it he ultimately holds his title, to it he owes fealty and service, and if he fails in his allegiance to it, or dies without heirs upon whom this duty may devolve, his lands revert to the state under which he held. Subject to this qualification, however, a tenant in fee has an absolute unconditional ownership in land, which, upon his death, vests in his heirs; and hence he enjoys what is called an "estate of inheritance." See "Estates;" 2 Bl. Comm. 81; Litt. § 1; Plowd. 555.

——Joint Tenants. Two or more persons to whom lands or tenements have been granted to hold in fee simple, for life, for years, or at will. In order to constitute an estate in joint tenancy, the tenants thereof must have one and the same interest, arising by the same conveyance, commencing at the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. 2 Bl. Comm. 180. The principal incident to this estate is the right of survivorship, by which, upon the death of one joint tenant, the entire tenancy remains to the surviving cotenant, and not to the heirs or other representatives of the deceased, the last survivor taking the whole estate. It is an estate which can only be created by the acts of the parties, and never by operation of law. Co. Litt. 184b; 2 Cruise, Dig. 43; 4 Kent. Comm. 358; 2 Bl. Comm. 179; 7 Cruise, Dig. "Joint Tenancy;" Prest. Est.

——Tenant for Life. One who has a freehold interest in lands, the duration of which is confined to the life or lives of some particular person or persons, or to the happening or not happening of some uncertain event. 1 Cruise, Dig. 76. When he holds the estate by the life of another, he is usually called tenant pur autre vie. 2 Bl. Comm. 120; Comyn, Dig. "Estates" (F 1). See "Estate for Life;" "Emblements."

——Tenant by the Manner. One who has a less estate than a fee in land, which remains in the reversioner. He is so called because in avowries and other pleadings it is specially shown in what manner he is tenant of the land, in contradistinction to the veray tenant, who is called simply "tenant." See "Veray."

——Tenant Paravail. The tenant of a tenant. He is so called because he has the avails or profits of the land.

——Tenant in Severalty. He who holds lands and tenements in his own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with him in point of interest during his estate therein. 2 Bl. Comm. 179.

——Tenant at Sufferance. He who comes into possession by a lawful demise, but after his term is ended continues the possession wrongfully by holding over. He has only a naked possession, stands in no privity to the landlord, and may, consequently, be removed without notice to quit. Co. Litt. 57b; 2 Leon. 46; 3 Leon. 153; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 123; 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 150, 312; 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 128.

——Tenant in Tail. One who holds an estate in fee, which by the instrument creating it is limited to some particular heirs, exclusive of others; as, to the heirs of "his body," or to the heirs, "male or female," of his body. The whole system of entailment, rendering estates unalienable, is so directly opposed to the spirit of our republican institutions as to have become very nearly extinct in the United States. Most of the states, at an early period of our independence, passed laws declaring such estates to be estates in fee simple, or provided that the tenant and the remainderman might join in conveying the land in fee simple. In New Hampshire, Chancellor Kent says, entails may still be created; while in some of the states they have not been expressly abolished by statute, but in practice they are now almost unknown. See "Entail;" 2 Bl. Comm. 113.

——Tenant at Will. One who holds rent free by permission of the owner, or where he enters under an agreement to purchase, or for a lease, but has not paid rent. Formerly all leases for uncertain periods were considered to be tenancies at will merely; but in modern times they are construed into tenancies from year to year; and, in fact, the general language of the books now is that the former species of tenancy cannot exist without an express agreement to that effect. 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 75; 4 Ired. (N. C.) 291; 3 Dana (Ky.) 66; 12 Mass. 325; 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 616; 12 N. Y. 346. The great criterion by which to distinguish between tenancies from year to year and at will is the payment or reservation of rent. 5 Bing. 361; 2 Esp. 718.

A tenancy at will must always be at the will of either party, and such a tenant may be ejected at any time, and without notice; but as soon as he once pays rent, he becomes tenant from year to year. 1 Watts & S. (Pa.) 90; Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 56; Co. Litt. 55; 2 Lilly, Reg. 555; 2 Bl. Comm. 145. See Comyn, Dig. "Estates" (H 1); 12 Mass. 325; 17 Mass. 282; 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 33; 2 Caines Cas. (N. Y.) 314; 2 Caines (N. Y.) 169; 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 13, 235, 331.

——Tenant for Years. He to whom another has let lands, tenements, or hereditaments for a certain number of years, agreed upon between them, and the tenant enters thereon. Before entry, he has only an inchoate right, which is called an interesse termini; and it is of the essence of this estate that its commencement as well as its termination be fixed and determined, so that the lapse of time limited for its duration will, ipso facto, determine the tenancy; if otherwise, the occupant will be tenant from year to year, or at will, according to circumstances. See "Lease;" Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 54; 2 Bl. Comm. 140.

——Tenant from Year to Year. Where lands or tenements have been let without any particular limitation for the duration of the tenancy; hence any general occupation with permission, whether a tenant is holding over after the expiration of a lease for years, or otherwise, becomes a tenancy from year to year. 3 Burrows, 1609; 1 Term R. 163; 3 East, 451; 3 Barn. & C. 478; 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 330; 3 Zab. (N. J.) 311. The principal feature of this tenancy is that it is not determinable even at the end of the current year, unless a reasonable notice to quit is served by the party intending to dissolve the tenancy upon the other. 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 349; 3 Hill (N. Y.) 547; 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 616; 8 Term R. 3; 5 Bing. 185.

TENANT A VOLUNTE (Law Fr.) Tenant at will. Litt. § 68.

TENANT BY COPY OF COURT ROLL (shortly, "tenant by copy"). The old-fashioned name for a copyholder. Litt. § 73.

TENANT RIGHT. In leases from the crown, corporations, or the church, it is usual to grant a further term to the old tenants in preference to strangers; and, as this expectation is seldom disappointed, such tenants are considered as having an ulterior interest beyond their subsisting term; and this interest is called the "tenant right." Bac. Abr. "Leases and Terms for Years" (U).

TENANT TO THE PRAECIPE. Before the English fines and recoveries act, if land was conveyed to a person for life, with remainder to another in tail, the tenant in tail in remainder was unable to bar the entail without the concurrence of the tenant for life, because a common recovery could only be suffered by the person seised of the land. In such a case, if the tenant for life wished to concur in barring the entail, he usually conveyed his life estate to some other person in order that the praecipe in the recovery might be issued against the latter, who was therefore called the "tenant to the praecipe." Williams, Seisin, 169.

TENANTS BY THE VERGE. These "are in the same nature as tenants by copy of court roll [i. e., copyholders]. But the reason why they be called 'tenants by the verge' is, for that when they will surrender their tenements into the hands of their lord to the use of another, they shall have a little rod (by the custome) in their hand, the which they shall deliver to the steward or to the bailife, * * * and the steward or bailife, according to the custome, shall deliver to him that taketh the land the same rod, or another rod, in the name of seisin; and for this cause they are called 'tenants by the verge;' but they have no other evidence [title deed] but by copy of court roll." Litt. § 78; Co. Litt. 61a.

TENAUNT (Law Fr. from tener, to hold). In old English law. Tenant; a tenant.

TENDE. To tender or offer. Old Nat. Brev. 123.

TENDER (Lat. tendere, to extend, to offer). An offer to deliver something, made in pursuance of some contract or obligation, under such circumstances as to require no further act from the party making it to complete the transfer.

To constitute a valid tender, there must be an actual production (46 Barb. [N. Y.] 227), at the time (90 N. Y. 442) and place (6 Barb. [N. Y.] 258) where the obligation was due, of the full amount (41 Vt. 66) in current funds (34 N. Y. 649) by the person who is under obligation, or his agent (11 Ga. 570), and an offer to the creditor or his agent (46 Barb. [N. Y.] 227) absolutely and without condition, to which the creditor may rightfully object (39 N. Y. 481), of the exact amount due, but tender of an excessive amount is good if no change is asked in return (25 Ind. 261), and the tender must be kept good by continued readiness to pay or deliver the amount or property tendered (24 Vt. 536; 86 Ill. 431).

TENDER OF AMENDS. An offer by a person who has been guilty of any wrong or breach of contract to pay a sum of money by way of amends. If a defendant in an action make tender of amends, and the plaintiff decline to accept it, the defendant may pay the money into court, and plead the payment into court as a satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim. Mozley & W.

TENDER OF ISSUE. The conclusion of a pleading whereby the pleader offers to refer the averments thereof to a trial. The common tender of an issue of fact is, "and of this he puts himself upon the country." Steph. Pl. 54, 230.

TENEMENT (from Lat. teneo, to hold). Everything of a permanent nature which may be holden.

Its original meaning, according to some, was house or homestead. Jacob. In modern use, it also signifies rooms let in houses. 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 204.

In its most extensive signification, "tenement" comprehends everything which may be holden, provided it be of a permanent nature; and not only lands and inheritances which are holden, but also rents and profits a prendre of which a man has any frank tenement, and of which he may be seised ut de libero tenemento, are included under this term. Co. Litt. 6a; 2 Bl. Comm. 17; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 10; 17 Pick. (Mass.) 105. But the word "tenement" simply, without other circumstances, has never been construed to pass a fee. 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 204. See 4 Bing. 293; 1 Term R. 358; 3 Term R. 772; 3 East, 113; 5 East, 239; 1 Barn. & Adol. 161; Comyn, Dig. "Grant" (E 2), "Trespass" (A 2); 1 Washb. Real Prop. 10.

Bracton says that tenements acquired by a villein were as to the lord in the same condition as chattels, because bought with the chattels which rightfully belong to the lord. Bracton, 26.

TENEMENTAL LAND. Land distributed by a lord among his tenants, as opposed to the demesnes which were occupied by himself and his servants. 2 Bl. Comm. 90.

TENEMENTIS LEGATIS. An ancient writ, lying to the city of London, or any other corporation (where the old custom was that men might devise by will lands and tenements, as well as goods and chattels), for the hearing and determining any controversy touching the same. Reg. Orig. 244.

TENEMENTUM (Law Lat. from tenere, to hold). In old English law. A tenement; a thing held by service; a fee, fief, or feudal estate; an estate which a tenant holds of a lord. Spelman. Devenio homo vester, de tenemento quod de vobis teneo, I become your man, of the tenement which I hold of you. Bracton, fol. 80. Liberum tenementum, a free tenement, or freehold, as distinguished from villenagium.

TENENDAS (Lat.) In Scotch law. The name of a clause in charters of heritable rights, which derives its name from its first words, tenendas praedictas terras, and expresses the particular tenure by which the lands are to be holden. Ersk. Inst. bk. 2, tit. 3, note 10.

TENENDUM (Lat.) That part of a deed which was formerly used in expressing the tenure by which the estate granted was holden; but since all freehold tenures were converted into socage, the tenendum is of no further use, even in England, and is therefore joined to the habendum in this manner, —to have and to hold. The words "to hold" have now no meaning in our deeds. 2 Bl. Comm. 298. See "Habendum."

TENENS. A tenant; the defendant in a real action.

TENENTIBUS IN ASSISA NON ONERandis. A writ that formerly lay for him to whom a disseisor had alienated the land whereof he disseised another, that he should not be molested in assize for damages, if the disseisor had wherewith to satisfy them. Reg. Orig. 214.

TENEO (Lat. I hold). Said by Lord Coke to have the following significations:

To have, as an estate. Co. Litt. 1b.

To hold of some superior. Id.

To keep, as a covenant. Id.

To bind, as an obligation. Id.

To judge or deem. Id.

See these senses applied to the word "tenant." Id. See "Tenere."

TENER (Law Fr.) In old English law. To hold. A aver et tener a luy et a ses heires, to have and to hold to him and his heirs. Litt. § 625.

To keep. Tener hors de droit heire, to keep out the right heir. Britt. c. 65.

TENERE (Lat.)

——In the Civil Law. To hold. A term expressive of mere fact, without reference to right; or expressive of what was termed corporeal and natural possession. Habere (to have) and possidere (to possess), on the other hand, were terms expressive of right, or what was termed "civil" possession. Calv. Lex. See "Habere."

To observe or keep. Calv. Lex.

To bind. Id.

To be of force or validity. Id.

——In Old English Law. To hold by service, in the feudal sense. De tenemento quod de vobis teneo, of the tenement which I hold of you. Bracton, fol. 80; Co. Litt. 1b.

To hold judicially. Tenere placitum, to hold plea; to take cognizance of an action; to exercise or entertain jurisdiction. Prohibemus vobis ne teneatis placitum, we prohibit you that you do not hold plea. Reg. Orig. 34. Tenere placita, to hold pleas; to have a court of one's own. Finch, Law. bk. 2, c. 14.

To hold, or be seised of; to have. Co. Litt. 1b.

TENERI (Lat.) In contracts. That part of a bond where the obligor declares himself to be held and firmly bound to the obligee, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, is called the teneri. 3 Call (Va.) 350.

TENET (Lat. he holds). In pleading. A term used in stating the tenure in an action for waste done during tenancy.

When the averment is in the tenet, the plaintiff, on obtaining a verdict, will recover the place wasted, namely, that part of the premises in which the waste was exclusively done, if it were done in a part only, together with treble damages. But when the averment is in the tenuit, the tenancy being at an end, he will have judgment for his damages only. 2 Greenl. Ev. § 652.

TENHEDED, or TIENHEOFED. A dean.

TENHEVED (Saxon tienheofod, from tien, ten, and heofod, head). In old English law. The head of a tithing, or decennary; a tithingman, chief pledge, head borough or borsholder. Spelman.

TENMENTALE, or TENMANTALE. The number of ten men, which number, in the time of the Saxons, was called a "decennary;" and ten decennaries made what was called a "hundred." Also a duty or tribute paid to the crown, consisting of two shillings for each ploughland. Enc. Lond.

TENNE. A term of heraldry, meaning orange color. In engravings it should be represented by lines in bend sinister crossed by others bar-ways. Heralds who blazon by the names of the heavenly bodies call it "dragon's head," and those who employ jewels, "jacinth." It is one of the colors called "stainand." Wharton.

TENOR.

——In Pleading. A term used to denote that an exact copy is set out. 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 273; 14 Ohio St. 61; 1 Mass. 203; 1 East, 180, and the cases cited in the notes.

——In Chancery Pleading. A certified copy of records of other courts removed into chancery by certiorari. Gresl. Ev. 309.

TENOR EST QUI LEGEM DAT FEUDO. It is the tenor of the feudal grant which regulates its effect and extent. Craig, Jus Feud. (3d Ed.) 66. See Co. Litt. 19a; 2 Bl. Comm. 310; 2 Coke, 71; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 410; Wright, Ten. 21, 52, 152.

TENORE INDICTAMENTI MITTENDO. A writ whereby the record of an indictment, and the process thereupon, was called out of another court into the Queen's (or king's) Bench. Reg. Orig. 69.

TENORE PRAESENTIUM. By the tenor of these presents, i. e., the matter contained therein, or rather the intent and meaning thereof. Cowell.

TENSERIAE. A sort of ancient tax or military contribution. Wharton.

TENTERDEN'S ACT. St. 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, extending the statutes of frauds to certain other contracts.

TENTHS.

——In English Law. A temporary aid issuing out of personal property, and granted to the king by parliament; formerly the real tenth part of all the movables belonging to the subject. 1 Bl. Comm. 308.

——In English Ecclesiastical Law. The tenth part of the annual profit of every living in the kingdom, formerly paid to the pope, but by St. 26 Hen. VIII. c. 3, transferred to the crown, and afterwards made a part of the fund called "Queen Anne's Bounty." 1 Bl. Comm. 284-286.

TENUIT (Lat. he held). In pleading. A term used in stating the tenure in an action for waste done after the termination of the tenancy. See "Tenet."

TENURA EST PACTIO CONTRA COMmunem feudi naturam ac rationem, in contractu interposita. Tenure is a compact contrary to the common nature and reason of the fee, put into a contract. Wright, Ten. 21.

TENURE (from Lat. tenere, to hold). In the most general sense, the mode or right of holding, as "tenure of office." More specifically, the mode by which a man holds an estate in lands.

Such a holding as is coupled with some service, which the holder is bound to perform so long as he continues to hold.

The thing held is called a "tenement;" the occupant, a "tenant;" and the manner of his holding constitutes the "tenure."

Classification of feudal tenures:

(1) The principal species of tenure which grew out of the feudal system was the tenure by knight's service. This was essentially military in its character, and required the possession of a certain quantity of land, called a "knight's fee," the measure of which, in the time of Edward I., was estimated at twelve ploughlands, of the value of twenty pounds per annum. He who held this portion of land was bound to attend his lord to the wars forty days in every year, if called upon. It seems, however, that if he held but half a knight's fee, he was only bound to attend twenty days. Many arbitrary and tyrannical incidents or lordly privileges were attached to this tenure, which at length became so odious and oppressive that the whole system was destroyed at a blow by St. Charles II. c. 24, which declared that all such lands should thenceforth be held in free and common socage,—a statute, says Blackstone, which was a greater acquisition to the civil property of this kingdom than even Magna Charta itself; since that only pruned the luxuriances which had grown out of military tenures, and thereby preserved them in vigor, but the statute of King Charles extirpated the whole, and demolished both root and branches. See "Feudal Law;" Co. Litt. 69; St. Westminster I., c. 36.

(2) Tenure in socage seems to have been a relic of Saxon liberty which, up to the time of the abolition of military tenures, had been evidently struggling with the innovations of the Normans. Its great redeeming quality was its certainty; and in this sense it is by the old law writers put in opposition to the tenure by knight's service, where the tenure was altogether precarious and uncertain. Littleton defines it to be where a tenant holds his tenement by any certain service, in lieu of all other services, so that they be not services of chivalry or knight's services; as, to hold by fealty and twenty shillings rent, or by homage, fealty, and twenty shillings rent, or by homage and fealty without any rent, or by fealty and a certain specified service, as, to plough the lord's land for three days. Litt. 117; 2 Bl. Comm. 79. See "Socage."

(3) Other tenures have grown out of the two last-mentioned species of tenure, and are still extant in England, although some of them are fast becoming obsolete. Of these is the tenure by grand serjeanty, which consists in some service immediately respecting the person or dignity of the sovereign; as, to carry the king's standard, or to be his constable or marshal, his butler or chamberlain, or to perform some similar service. While the tenure by petit serjeanty requires some inferior service, not strictly military or personal, to the king; as, the annual render of a bow or sword. The late duke of Wellington annually presented his sovereign with a banner, in acknowledgment of his tenure. There are also tenures by copyhold and in frankalmoigne, in burgage and of gavelkind; but their nature, origin, and history are explained in the several articles appropriated to those terms. 2 Bl. Comm. 66; 2 Inst. 233.

(4) Tenures were distinguished by the old common-law writers, according to the quality of the service, into free or base. The former were such as were not unbecoming a soldier or a freeman to perform, as, to serve the lord in the wars; while the latter were only considered fit for a peasant, as, to plough the land, and the like. They were further distinguished with reference to the person from whom the land was held; as, a tenure in capite, where the holding was of the person of the king, and tenure in gross, where the holding was of a subject. Before the statute of Quia Emptores (18 Edw. I.), any person might, by a grant of land, have created an estate as a tenure of his person, or of his house or manor; and although by Magna Charta a man could not alienate so much of his land as not to leave enough to answer the services due to the superior lord, yet, as that statute did not remedy the evil then complained of, it was provided by the statute above referred to, that if any tenant should alien any part of his land in fee, the alienee should hold immediately of the lord of the fee, and should be charged with a proportional part of the service due in respect to the quantity of land held by him. The consequence of which was that, upon every such alienation, the services upon which the estate was originally granted became due to the superior lord, and not to the immediate grantee. 4 Term R. 443; 4 East, 271; Crabb, Real Prop. § 735.

Wharton's classification is as follows:

(A) Lay tenures.
- I. Frank tenement, or freehold.
  - (1) The military tenures (abolished, except grand serjeanty, and reduced to free socage tenures) were: Knight service proper, or tenure in chivalry; grand serjeanty; cornage.
  - (2) Free socage, or plough service; either petit serjeanty, tenure in burgage, or gavelkind.
- II. Villeinage.
  - (1) Pure villeinage (whence copyholds at the lord's [nominal] will, which is regulated according to custom).
  - (2) Privileged villeinage, sometimes called "villein socage" (whence tenure in ancient demense, which is an exalted species of copyhold, held according to custom, and not according to the lord's will), and is of three kinds: Tenure in ancient demesne; privileged copyholds, customary freeholds, or free copyholds; copyholds of base tenure.

(B) Spiritual tenures.
- I. Frankalmoigne, or free alms.
- II. Tenure by divine service.

TENURE BY DIVINE SERVICE. See "Divine Service."

TENURE OF OFFICE. See "Tenure."

TERCE. In Scotch law. A life rent competent by law to widows who have not accepted of special provisions in the third part of the heritable subjects in which the husband died infeft.

The terce takes places only where the marriage has subsisted for a year and a day, or where a child has been born alive of it. No terce is due out of lands in which the husband was not infeft, unless in case of a fraudulent omission. Craig, Inst. 423, § 28. The terce is not limited to lands, but extends to teinds, and to servitudes and other burdens affecting lands. Ersk. Inst. 2. 9. 26; Burge, Confl. Laws, 429-435.

TERCER. In the Scotch law, a widow that possesses the third part of her husband's land, as her legal jointure. 1 Kames, Eq. pref.

TERM.

——In Construction. Word; expression; speech.

Terms are words or characters by which we announce our sentiments, and make known to others things with which we are acquainted. These must be properly construed or interpreted in order to understand the parties using them.

——In Contracts. The space of time granted to a debtor for discharging his obligation. These are express terms, resulting from the positive stipulations of the agreement, as, where one undertakes to pay a certain sum on a certain day, and also terms which tacitly result from the nature of the things which are the object of the engagement, or from the place where the act is agreed to be done. For instance, if a builder engage to construct a house for me, I must allow a reasonable time for fulfilling his engagement. 1 Wis. 314.

——In Estates. The limitation of an estate; as, a term for years, for life, and the like. The word "term" does not merely signify the time specified in the lease, but the estate, also, and interest that passes by that lease, and therefore the term may expire during the continuance of the time; as, by surrender, forfeiture, and the like. 2 Bl. Comm. 145; 8 Pick. (Mass.) 339.

——Of Court. The space of time during which a court holds a session. The stated periods during which courts sit for the dispatch of business. Sometimes the term is a monthly, at others it is a quarterly, period, according to the constitution of the court.

TERM ATTENDANT ON THE INHERitance. See "Attendant Terms."

TERM FOR YEARS. An estate for years, and the time during which such estate is to be held, are each called a "term;" hence the term may expire before the time, as, by a surrender. Co. Litt. 45. See "Estate for Years."

TERM IN GROSS. A term of years is said to be either in gross (outstanding) or attendant upon the inheritance. It is outstanding, or in gross, when it is unattached or disconnected from the estate or inheritance, as where it is in the hands of some third party having no interest in the inheritance. It is attendant when vested in some trustee in trust for the owner of the inheritance. Brown.

TERM PROBATORY. The time during which evidence may be taken in a cause.

TERM TO CONCLUDE. In English ecclesiastical practice. An appointment by the judge of a time at which both parties are understood to renounce all further exhibits and allegations.

TERM TO PROPOUND ALL THINGS. In English ecclesiastical practice. An appointment by the judge of a time at which both parties are to exhibit all the acts and instruments which make for their respective causes.

TERMINABLE PROPERTY. Such property (e. g., leaseholds, terminable annuities, etc.) as has no permanent duration, but must and will end at a certain time, usually determined beforehand.

TERMINARE (Lat.) In old English law. To end or determine; to dispose of judicially; to decide.

TERMINATING BUILDING SOCIETIES. Societies, in England, where the members commence their monthly contributions on a particular day, and continue to pay them until the realization of shares to a given amount for each member, by the advance of the capital of the society to such members as required it, and the payment of interest as well as principal by them, so as to insure such realization within a given period of years. They have been almost superseded by permanent building societies.

TERMINER (Law Fr.; from Lat. terminare, q. v.) To determine. A oyer et terminer toutes quereles, to hear and determine all complaints. Britt. fol. 1.

TERMINO. In Spanish law. A common; common land. Common because of vicinage. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 1, c. 6, § 1, note.

TERMINUM (Lat.) In civil law. A day set to the defendant. Spelman. In this sense, Bracton, Glanville, and some others sometimes use it. Reliquiae Spelmanianae, p. 71; Beames, Glanv. 27, note.

TERMINUM QUI PRETERIIT, WRIT OF entry ad. A writ which lay for the reversioner, when the possession was withheld by the lessee, or a stranger, after the determination of a lease for years. Brown.

TERMINUS (Lat.) A boundary or limit, either of space or time. A bound, goal, or borders parting one man's land from another's. Est inter eos non de terminis, sed tota possessione contentio. Cic. Acad. 4, 43. It is used also for an estate for a term of years; e. g., "interesse termini." 2 Bl. Comm. 143.

Terminus a quo. The starting point of a private way is so called. Hammond, N. P. 196.

Terminus ad quem. The point of termination of a private way is so called.

TERMINUS ANNORUM CERTUS DEBet esse et determinatus. A term of years ought to be certain and determinate. Co. Litt. 45.

TERMINUS ET (AC) FEODUM NON possunt constare simul in una eademque persona. A term and the fee cannot both be in one and the same person at the same time. Plowd. 29; 3 Mass. 141.

TERMINUS JURIS (Law Lat.) In English ecclesiastical practice. The time of one or two years, allowed by law for the determination of appeals. Halifax, Anal. bk. 3, c. 11, No. 38.

TERMOR. One who holds lands and tenements for a term of years, or life. Litt. § 100; 4 Tyrwh. 561.

TERRA. Earth; land.

——Terra Affirmata. Land let to farm.

——Terra Boscalis. Woody land.

——Terra Culta. Cultivated land.

——Terra Debilis. Weak or barren land.

——Terra Dominica (or Indominicata). The demesne land of a manor. Cowell.

——Terra Excultabilis. Land which may be plowed. Mon. Angl. i. 426.

——Terra Extendenda. A writ addressed to an escheator, etc., that he inquire and find out the true yearly value of any land, etc., by the oath of twelve men, and to certify the extent into the chancery. Reg. Writs, 293.

——Terra Frusca (or Frisca). Fresh land, not lately plowed. Cowell.

——Terra Hydata. Land subject to the payment of hydage. Selden.

——Terra Lucrabilis. Land gained from the sea, or inclosed out of a waste. Cowell.

——Terra Manens Vacua Occupanti Conceditur. Land lying unoccupied is given to the first occupant. 1 Sid. 347.

——Terra Normanorum. Land held by a Norman. Par. Ant. 197.

——Terra Nova. Land newly converted from wood ground or arable. Cowell.

——Terra Putura. Land in forests, held by the tenure of furnishing food to the keepers therein. 4 Inst. 307.

——Terra Sabulosa. Gravelly or sandy ground.

——Terra Testamentalis. Gavelkind land, being disposable by will. Spelman.

——Terra Transit cum Onere. Land passes with the incumbrances. Co. Litt. 231; Broom, Leg. Max (3d London Ed.) 437, 630.

——Terra Vestita. Land sown with corn. Cowell.

——Terra Wainabilis. Tillable land. Cowell.

——Terra Warrenata. Land that has the liberty of free warren.

TERRAE DOMINICALES REGIS. The demesne lands of the crown.

TERRAGES. An exemption from all uncertain services. Cowell.

TERRARIUS. In old English law. A landholder.

TERRE TENANT (improperly spelled ter tenant). One who has the actual possession of land; but, in a more technical sense, he who is seised of the land; and in the latter sense, the owner of the land, or the person seised, is the terre tenant, and not the lessee. 4 Watts & S. (Pa.) 256; Bac. Abr. "Uses and Trusts." It has been holden that mere occupiers of the land are not terre tenants. See 16 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 432; 3 Pa. 229; 2 Saund. 7, note 4; 2 Bl. Comm. 91, 328.

TERRIER. In English law. A roll, catalogue, or survey of lands, belonging either to a single person or a town, in which are stated the quantity of acres, the names of the tenants, and the like.

By the ecclesiastical law, an inquiry is directed to be made from time to time of the temporal rights of the clergyman of every parish, and to be returned into the registry of the bishop. This return is denominated a "terrier." 1 Phil. Ev. 602, 603.

TERRIS BONIS ET CATALLIS REHABendis post purgationem. A writ for a clerk to recover his lands, goods, and chattels, formerly seized, after he had cleared himself of the felony of which he was accused, and delivered to his ordinary to be purged. Reg. Orig.

TERRIS ET CATALLIS TENTIS ULTRA debitum levatum. A judicial writ for the restoring of lands or goods to a debtor who is distrained above the amount of the debt. Reg. Jud.

TERRIS LIBERANDIS. A writ that lay for a man convicted by attaint, to bring the record and process before the king, and take a fine for his imprisonment, and then to deliver to him his lands and tenements again, and release him of the strip and waste. Reg. Orig. 232. Also it was a writ for the delivery of lands to the heir, after homage and relief performed, or upon security taken that he should perform them. Id. 293.

TERRITORIAL COURTS. The courts established in the territories of the United States.

TERRITORY. A part of a country separated from the rest, and subject to a particular jurisdiction.

The word is derived from terreo, and is said to be so called because the magistrate within his jurisdiction has the power of inspiring a salutary fear. Dictum est ab eo quod magistratus intra fines ejus terendi jus habet. Henrion de Pansy, Auth, Judiciaire, 98. In speaking of the ecclesiastical jurisdictions, Francis Duaren observes that the ecclesiastics are said not to have territory, nor the power of arrest or removal, and are not unlike the Roman magistrates of whom Gellius says vocationem habebant non prehensionem. De Sacris Eccles. Minist. lib. 1, c. 4.

——In American Law. A portion of the country subject to and belonging to the United States which is not within the boundary of any of the states.

TERROR (Lat.) That state of the mind which arises from the event or phenomenon that may serve as a prognostic of some catastrophe; affright from apparent danger.

One of the constituents of the offense of riot is that the acts of the persons engaged in it should be to the terror of the people, as a show of arms, threatening speeches, or turbulent gestures; but it is not requisite, in order to constitute this crime, that personal violence should be committed. 3 Campb. 369; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 65, § 5; 4 Car. & P. 373, 538. See Rolle, 109; Dalton, Just. c. 186; Viner, Abr. "Riots" (A 8).

TERTIA DENUNCIATIO (Lat.) In old English law. Third publication or proclamation of intended marriage. Cum bannum et tertia denunciatio fiat, when the banns and third publication are made. Bracton, fol. 307b.

TERTIUS INTERVENIENS (Lat.) In civil law. One who, claiming an interest in the subject or thing in dispute in action between other parties, asserts his right to act with the plaintiff, to be joined with him, and to recover the matter in dispute, because he has an interest in it, or to join the defendant, and with him oppose the interest of the plaintiff, which it is his interest to defeat. He differs from the intervener, or he who interpleads in equity. 4 Bouv. Inst. n. 3819, note.

TEST. Something by which to ascertain the truth respecting another thing. 7 Pa. St. 428; 6 Whart. (Pa.) 284.

TEST ACT. Act 25 Car. II. c. 2, by which it was enacted that all persons holding any office, civil or military (excepting some very inferior ones), or receiving pay from the crown, or holding a place of trust under it, should take the oath of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribe a declaration against transubstantiation, and receive the sacrament according to the usage of the Church of England, under a penalty of £500 and disability to the office. 4 Bl. Comm. 59. Abolished, 9 Geo. IV. c. 17, so far as taking sacrament is concerned, and new form of declaration substituted. Enc. Brit.

TEST ACTION. An action brought to determine a doubtful right affecting many persons. It may be an action selected from a number of pending actions brought to enforce such a right, the parties agreeing that all actions shall follow the decision in the test action, or a single action may be brought by one person at the instance of all to determine the right. Test cases are sometimes had in criminal practice where the validity of a statute or ordinance is questioned, and a prosecution is lodged against one person, with the tacit understanding that further prosecutions will be postponed, or will be determined according to the result of that one.

TEST OATH. An oath required as a condition precedent to the right to fill a public office. Generally, an oath of present allegiance, or of denial of connection with some past insurrection.

TEST PAPER. A paper submitted to the jury as a test or standard by which to determine the genuineness of other writings. 7 Pa. St. 428; 6 Whart. (Pa.) 284. Only admissible when no collateral issue can be raised concerning it. See 14 N. Y. 439; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 581.

TESTABLE. A person is said to be testable when he has capacity to make a will. A man of twenty-one years of age and of sane mind is testable. The capacity to make a will must be distinguished from a special power to dispose of property by will. Thus, a power given to a married woman by a settlement to dispose of property by will does not make her testable. L. R. 7 H. L. 593. But if property is settled on a married woman for her separate use, she is testable so far as that property is concerned.

TESTACY. The condition of one dying having made a will. Opposed to "intestacy" (q. v.) It may exist as to all property, or may be but "partial," as to such only as is disposed of.

TESTAMENT. In civil law. The appointment of an executor or testamentary heir, according to the formalities prescribed by law. Domat, liv. 1, tit. 1, § 1.

At first there were only two sorts of testaments among the Romans,—that called calatis comitiis, and another called in procinctu. In the course of time, these two sorts of testament having become obsolete, a third form was introduced, called per aes et libram, which was a fictitious sale of the inheritance to the heir apparent. The inconveniences which were experienced from these fictitious sales again changed the form of testaments, and the praetor introduced another, which required the seal of seven witnesses. The emperors having increased the solemnity of these testaments, they were called "written" or "solemn" testaments, to distinguish them from "nuncupative" testaments, which could be made without writing. Afterwards military testaments were introduced in favor of soldiers actually engaged in military service.

(1) A testament calatis comitiis, or made in the comitia,—that is, the assembly of the Roman people,—was an ancient manner of making wills, used in times of peace among the Romans. The comitia met twice a year for this purpose. Those who wished to make such testaments caused to be convoked the assembly of the people by these words, calatis comitiis. None could make such wills that were not entitled to be at the assemblies of the people. This form of testament was repealed by the law of the Twelve Tables.

(2) A civil testament is one made according to all the forms prescribed by law, in contradistinction to a military testament, in making which some of the forms may be dispensed with. Civil testaments are more ancient than military ones; the former were in use during the time of Romulus, the latter were introduced during the time of Coriolanus. See Hist. de la Jur. Rom. de M. Terrason, p. 119.

(3) A common testament is one which is made jointly by several persons. Such testaments are forbidden in Louisiana (Civ. Code La. art. 1565), and by the laws of France (Civ. Code 968), in the same words, namely: "A testament cannot be made by the same act, by two or more persons, either for the benefit of a third person, or under the title of a reciprocal or mutual disposition."

(4) A testament ab irato is one made in a gust of passion or hatred against the presumptive heir, rather than from a desire to benefit the devisee. When the facts of unreasonable anger are proved, the will is annulled as unjust, and as not having been freely made. See "Ab Irato."

(5) A mystic testament (called a "solemn testament," because it requires more formality than a nuncupative testament) is a form of making a will which consists principally in enclosing it in an envelope and sealing it in the presence of witnesses.

This kind of testament is used in Louisiana. The following are the provisions of the Civil Code of that state on the subject, namely: The mystic or secret testament, otherwise called the "close testament," is made in the following manner: The testator must sign his dispositions, whether he has written them himself, or has caused them to be written by another person. The paper containing these dispositions, or the paper serving as their envelope, must be closed and sealed. The testator shall present it thus closed and sealed to the notary and to seven witnesses, or he shall cause it to be closed and sealed in their presence; then he shall declare to the notary, in the presence of the witnesses, that that paper contains his testament written by himself, or by another by his direction, and signed by him, the testator. The notary shall then draw up the act of superscription, which shall be written on that paper, or on the sheet that serves as its envelope, and that act shall be signed by the testator and by the notary and the witnesses. 5 Mart. (La.) 182. All that is above prescribed shall be done without interruption or turning aside to other acts; and in case the testator, by reason of any hindrance that has happened since the signing of the testament, cannot sign the act of superscription, mention shall be made of the declaration made by him thereof, without its being necessary in that case to increase the number of witnesses. Those who know not how or are not able to write, and those who know not how or are not able to sign their names, cannot make dispositions in the form of the mystic will. If any one of the witnesses to the act of superscription knows not how to sign, express mention shall be made thereof. In all cases the act must be signed by at least two witnesses. Civ. Code La. arts. 1577-1580.

(6) A nuncupative testament was one made verbally, in the presence of seven witnesses. It was not necessary that it should have been in writing; the proof of it was by parol evidence. See "Nuncupative Will."

In Louisiana, testaments, whether nuncupative or mystic, must be drawn up in writing, either by the testator himself, or by some other person under his dictation. The custom of making verbal statements, that is to say, resulting from the mere deposition of witnesses who were present when the testator made known to them his will, without his having committed it or caused it to be committed to writing, is abrogated. Nuncupative testaments may be made by public act, or by act under private signature. Civ. Code La. arts. 1568-1570.

(7) An olographic testament is one which is written wholly by the testator himself. In order to be valid, it must be entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator. It is subject to no other form. See Civ. Code La. art. 1581.

See "Will."

TESTAMENTA LATISSIMAM INTERpretationem habere debent. Wills ought to have the broadest interpretation. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 81.

TESTAMENTARY. Belonging to a testament; as, a testamentary gift; a testamentary guardian, or one appointed by will or testament; letters testamentary, or a writing under seal, given by an officer lawfully authorized, granting power to one named as executor to execute a last will or testament.

TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY. Mental capacity sufficient to make a valid will.

TESTAMENTARY CAUSES. In English law. Causes relating to probate of testaments and administration, and accounts upon the same. They are enumerated among ecclesiastical causes by Lord Coke. 5 Coke, 1, and tables of cases at the end of the part. Over these causes probate court has now exclusive jurisdiction, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, amended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95.

TESTAMENTARY GUARDIAN. A guardian appointed by last will of a father to have custody of his child and his real and personal estate till he attains the age of twenty-one. In England, the power to appoint such guardian was given by 12 Car. II. c. 24. The principles of this statute have been generally adopted in the United States (12 N. H. 437), but not in Connecticut (1 Swift, Dig. 48).

TESTAMENTUM (Lat.)

——In the Civil Law. A testament; a will, or last will.

——In Old English Law. A testament or will; a disposition of property made in contemplation of death. Bracton, fol. 60.

A general name for any instrument of conveyance, including deeds and charters, and so called either because it furnished written testimony of the conveyance, or because it was authenticated by witnesses (testes). Spelman.

TESTAMENTUM EST VOLUNTATES nostra justa sententia, de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri velit. A testament is the just expression of our will concerning that which any one wishes done after his death; or, as Blackstone translates, "the legal declaration of a man's intentions which he wills to be performed after his death." 2 Bl. Comm. 499; Dig. 28. 1. 1; Id. 29. 3. 2. 1.

TESTAMENTUM, I. E., TESTATIO MENtis, facta nullo praesente metu periculi, sed cogitatione mortalitatis. A testament, i. e., the witnessing of one's intention, made under no present fear of danger, but in expectancy of death. Co. Litt. 322.

TESTAMENTUM INOFFICIOSUM (Lat.) In the civil law. An unofficious testament.

TESTAMENTUM OMNE MORTE CONsummatum. Every will is completed by death. Co. Litt. 232.

TESTATE. The condition of one who leaves a valid will at his death.

TESTATION. Witness; evidence.

TESTATOR (Lat.) One who has made a testament or will.

TESTATORIS ULTIMA VOLUNTAS EST perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his real intention. Co. Litt. 322.

TESTATRIX (Lat.) A woman who makes a will or testament.

TESTATUM (Lat.)

——In Practice. The name of a writ which is issued by the court of one county to the sheriff of another county in the same state, when the defendant cannot be found in the county where the court is located; for example, after a judgment has been obtained, and a ca. sa. has been issued, which has been returned non est inventus, a testatum ca. sa. may be issued to the sheriff of the county where the defendant is. See Viner, Abr. "Testatum," 259.

——In Conveyancing. That part of a deed which commences with the words "this indenture witnesseth."

TESTATUS (Lat.) In the civil law. Testate; one who has made a will. Testatus et intestatus, testate and intestate. Dig. 50. 17. 7.

TESTE MEIPSO (Lat.) In old English law and practice. A solemn formula of attestation by the sovereign, used at the conclusion of charters, and other public instruments, and also of original writs out of chancery. Spelman.

TESTE OF A WRIT (Lat.) In practice. The concluding clause, commencing with the word "witness," etc. A signature in attestation of the fact that a writ is issued by authority.

The act of congress of May 8, 1792 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 227), directs that all writs and process issuing from the supreme or a circuit court shall bear teste of the chief justice of the supreme court, or, if that office be vacant, of the associate justice next in precedence; and that all writs or process issuing from a district court shall bear teste of the judge of such court, or, if the said office be vacant, of the clerk thereof. See Serg. Const. Law, Index; 20 Viner, Abr. 262; Steph. Pl. 25.

TESTED. Bearing teste.

TESTES (Lat.) Witnesses.

TESTES QUI POSTULAT DEBET DARE eis sumptus competentes. Whosoever demands witnesses must find them in competent provision.

TESTES, TRIAL PER. A trial had before a judge without the intervention of a jury, in which the judge is left to form in his own breast his sentence upon the credit of the witnesses examined; but this mode of trial, although it was common in the civil law, was seldom resorted to in the practice of the common law, but it is now becoming common when each party waives his right to a trial by jury. Brown. See "Trial."

TESTIBUS DEPONENTIBUS IN PARI numero dignioribus est credendum. When the number of witnesses is equal on both sides, the more worthy are to be believed. 4 Inst. 279.

TESTIFY. To give evidence according to law; the examination of a witness who declares his knowledge of facts.

TESTIMONIA PONDERANDA SUNT, NON numeranda. Evidence is to be weighed, not enumerated.

TESTIMONIAL. A certificate under the hands of a justice of the peace testifying the place and time when and where a soldier or mariner landed, and the place of his dwelling and birth, whither he is to pass. Cowell; 3 Inst. 85. The document holds a kind of doubtful position midway between a certificate and a permit, or pass. Brown.

TESTIMONIAL PROOF. In civil law. A term used in the same sense as "parol evidence" is used at common law, and in contradistinction to "literal proof," which is written evidence.

TESTIMONIES. In Spanish law. An attested copy of an instrument by a notary. Newman & Barretti; Tex. Dig.

TESTIMONIUM CLAUSE. In conveyancing. That clause of a deed or instrument with which it concludes: "In witness whereof, the parties to these presents have hereunto set their hands and seals."

TESTIMONY. The statement made by a witness under oath or affirmation.

For distinction between "testimony" and "evidence," see "Evidence."

TESTIS (Lat.) A witness.

TESTIS DE VISU PRAEPONDERAT ALIis. An eye witness outweighs others. 4 Inst. 470.

TESTIS LUPANARIS SUFFICIT AD FACtum in lupanari. A lewd person is a sufficient witness to an act committed in a brothel: Moore, 817.

TESTIS NEMO IN SUA CAUSA ESSE potest. No one can be a witness in his own cause. Otherwise in England, by St. 14 & 15 Vict. 99, and many of the states of the United States.

TESTIS OCULATUS UNUS PLUS VALET quam auriti decem. One eye witness is worth ten ear witnesses. 4 Inst. 279. See 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3154.

TESTMOIGNE. This is an old and barbarous French word, signifying, in the old books, evidence. Comyn, Dig.

TESTMOIGNES NE POENT TESTIFIE le negative, mes l'affirmative. Witnesses cannot witness to a negative; they must witness to an affirmative. 4 Inst. 279.

TEXTUS ROFFENSIS (Law Lat.) In old English law. The Rochester text. An ancient manuscript containing many of the Saxon laws, and the rights, customs, tenures, etc., of the church of Rochester, drawn up by Ernulph, bishop of that see from A. D. 1114 to 1124. Cowell. Blount gives it a greater antiquity.

THAINLAND, or THANELAND. In old English law. The land which was granted by the Saxon kings to their thains or thanes was so called. Crabb, Com. Law, 10.

THALER. A silver coin of Germany. The composition and value of this piece formerly varied considerably in different portions of the country,—the value ranging from ninety-five to one hundred and five cents. But the convention of the German states in 1838 fixed the weight of the thaler at 343.8 grains troy, and the fineness at 750 thousandths, which is the only standard now in use. The value, at this rate, is seventy-two cents. The name (thaler) is supposed to have originated from the German word thal, a dale, or valley,—the first thalers having been coined in the valley of Joachim, from which it obtained the name of "Joachim's thaler." From this coin the word "dollar," as applied to Spanish and American coins, is derived.

THANE (Saxon thenian, to serve). In Saxon law. A word which sometimes signifies a nobleman; at others, a freeman, a magistrate, an officer, or minister. A tenant of the part of the king's lands called the king's "thaneage." Termes de la Ley.

THANEAGE OF THE KING. In old English law. A certain part of the king's land or property, of which the ruler or governor was called "thane." Cowell; Blount.

THANESHIP. The office and dignity of a thane; the seigniory of a thane.

THAVIES INN. An inn of chancery. See "Inns of Chancery."

THEFT. A popular term for larceny, adopted in lieu of the latter term by the Penal Code of Texas.

——In Scotch Law. The secret and felonious abstraction of the property of another for sake of lucre, without his consent. Alis. Crim. Law, 250.

THEFT BOTE. The act of receiving a man's goods from the thief, after they had been stolen by him, with the intent that he shall escape punishment.

This is an offense punishable at common law by fine and imprisonment. Hale, P. C. 130. See "Compounding a Felony."

THEFT BOTE EST EMENDA FURTI capta, sine consideratione curiae domini regis. Theft bote is the paying money to have goods stolen returned, without having any respect for the court of the king. 3 Inst. 134.

THELONIO IRRATIONABILI HABENDO. A writ that formerly lay for him that had any part of the king's demesne in fee farm, to recover reasonable toll of the king's tenants there, if his demesne had been accustomed to be tolled. Reg. Orig. 87.

THELONIUM. An abolished writ for citizens or burgesses to assert their right to exemption from toll. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 226.

THELUSSON ACT. An English statute (39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 98), forbidding the holding of property for the purpose of accumulation beyond a period of twenty-one years from the death of the testator. It was so called because its necessity and passage were suggested by the curious will of one Thelusson, who provided that his estate should be accumulated until the body of it should constitute the largest estate, as the testator designed, in the world.

THEM, or THEME. The power or right of having jurisdiction over villeins, their offspring, and cattle.

THEMMAGIUM. A duty or acknowledgment paid by inferior tenants in respect of theme. Cowell.

THEOCRACY. A species of government which claims to be immediately directed by God.

La religion, qui, dans l'antiquite, s'associa souvent au despotisme, pour regner par son bras ou a son ombrage, a quelquefois tente de regner seule. C'est ce qu'elle appelait le regne de Dieu, la theocratie. Religion, which in former times frequently associated itself with despotism, to reign by its power or under its shadow, has sometimes attempted to reign alone; and this she has called the "reign of God,"—theocracy. Matter, de l'Influence des Moeurs sur les Lois, et de l'Influence des Lois sur les Moeurs, 189.

THEODOSIAN CODE. See "Code."

THEOF. In Saxon law. Offenders who joined in a body of seven to commit depredations. Wharton.

THESAURUS, or THESAURIUM. The treasury; a treasure.

THESAURUS ABSCONDITUS. Treasure hidden, or buried. Spelman.

THESAURUS COMPETIT DOMINO REGI, et non domino liberatis, nisi sit per verba specialia. A treasure belongs to the king, and not to the lord of a liberty, unless it be through special words. Fitz. Coron. 281.

THESAURUS INVENTUS. Treasure trove (q. v.)

THESAURUS INVENTUS EST VETUS dispositio pecuniae, etc., cujus non extat modo memoria, adeo ut jam dominum non habeat. Treasure trove is an ancient hiding of money, etc., of which no recollection exists, so that it now has no owner. 3 Inst. 132.

THESAURUS NON COMPETIT REGI, nisi quando nemo scit qui abscondit thesaurum. Treasure does not belong to the king unless no one knows who hid it. 3 Inst. 132.

THESAURUS REGIS EST VINCULUM pacis et bellorum nervus. The king's treasure is the bond of peace and the sinews of war. Godb. 293.

THESMOTHETE. A law maker; a law giver.

THIEF. One who has been guilty of larceny or theft.

THIEVES. The term "thieves" is broad enough in law to cover both compound and simple larceny, and, in common parlance, to include the latter; and when used in a policy of insurance upon the cargo of a vessel, it is not restricted in its application to external or assailing thieves, as pirates, rovers, etc., but covers a simple larceny committed by a stranger to the ship. 1 Hill (N. Y.) 25, affirmed in 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 563. And see 5 Paige (N. Y.) 285.

THINGS. By this word is understood every object, except man, which may become an active subject of right. Code du Canton de Berne, art. 332. In this sense it is opposed, in the language of the law, to the word "persons." See "Property;" "Res."

THINGS IN ACTION. A chose in action. Civ. Code Cal. § 953. See "Chose."

THINGS PERSONAL. Goods, money, and all other movables which may attend the owner's person wherever he thinks proper to go. 2 Bl. Comm. 16. Things personal consist of goods, money, and all other movables, and of such rights and profits as relate to movables. 1 Steph. Comm. 156.

THINGS REAL, or REALTY. Such things as are permanent, fixed, and immovable, which cannot be carried out of their place, as lands and tenements. 2 Bl. Comm. 16.

This definition has been objected to, as not embracing incorporeal rights. Mr. Stephen defines things real to "consist of things substantial and immovable, and of the rights and profits annexed to or issuing out of these." 1 Steph. Comm. 156. Things real are otherwise described to consist of lands, tenements, and hereditaments. See "Real."

THINGUS. A thane or nobleman; knight or freeman. Cowell.

THIRD BOROW. In old English law. A constable. Lambard, Duty of Const. 6; 28 Hen. VIII. c. 10.

THIRD-NIGHT-AWN-HINDE. By the laws of St. Edward the Confessor, if any man lay a third night in an inn, he was called a "third-night-awn-hinde," and his host was answerable for him if he committed any offense. The first night, forman-night, or uncuth (unknown), he was reckoned a stranger; the second night, twa-night, a guest; and the third night, an awn-hinde, a domestic. Bracton, lib. 3.

THIRD PARTIES. A term used to include all persons who are not parties to the contract, agreement, or instrument of writing by which their interest in the thing conveyed is sought to be affected. 1 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 384. See, also, 2 La. 425; 6 Mart. (La.) 528.

But it is difficult to give a very definite idea of "third persons;" for sometimes those who are not parties to the contract, but who represent the rights of the original parties, as executors, are not to be considered third persons. See 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1335 et seq.

THIRD PENNY. In old English law. Of the fines and other profits of the county courts (originally, when those courts had superior jurisdiction, before other courts were created) two parts were reserved to the king, and a third part, or penny, to the earl of the county. See "Denarius Tertius Comitatus;" Kennett, Par. Ant. 418; Cowell.

THIRDINGS. The third part of the corn growing on the land, due to the lord for a heriot on the death of his tenant, within the manor of Turfat, in Hereford. Blount.

THIRDS. Occurring in a will, construed to mean the same thing as dower. 2 Keyes (N. Y.) 558; 2 Abb. Pr. (N. S.; N. Y.) 418, affirming 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 609.

THIRLAGE. In Scotch law. A servitude by which lands are astricted or thirled to a particular mill, and the possessors bound to grind their grain there, for the payment of certain multures and sequels as the agreed price of grinding. Ersk. Inst. 2. 9. 18.

THIS DAY SIX MONTHS (or THREE months). Fixing "this day six months or three months" for the next stage of a bill is one of the modes in which the house of lords and the house of commons reject bills of which they disapprove. A bill rejected in this manner cannot be reintroduced in the same session.

THISTLE TAKE. It was a custom within the manor of Halton, in Chester, that if, in driving beasts over a common, the driver permit them to graze or take but a thistle, he shall pay a halfpenny apiece to the lord of the fee. And at Fiskerton, in Nottinghamshire, by ancient custom, if a native or a cottager killed a swine above a year old, he paid to the lord a penny, which purchase of leave to kill a hog was also called "thistle take." Cowell.

THOROUGHFARE. A street or way opening at both ends into another street or public highway, so that one can go through and get out of it without returning. It differs from a cul de sac, which is open only at one end.

Whether a street which is not a thoroughfare is a highway seems not fully settled. 1 Vent. 189; 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 76, § 1. In a case tried in 1790, where the locus in quo had been used as a common street for fifty years, but was no thoroughfare, Lord Kenyon held that it would make no difference; for otherwise the street would be a trap to make people trespassers. 11 East, 375. This decision in several subsequent cases was much criticised, though not directly overruled. 5 Taunt. 126; 5 Barn. & Ald. 456; 3 Bing. 447; 1 Campb. 260; 4 Adol. & E. 698. But in a recent English case, the decision of Lord Kenyon was affirmed by the unanimous opinion of the court of queen's bench. The doctrine established in the latter case is that it is a question for the jury, on the evidence, whether a place which is not a thoroughfare is a highway or not. 14 Eng. Law & Eq. 69. And see 28 Eng. Law & Eq. 30. In the United States there are but few cases in which this question has been discussed; though in Rhode Island it has been determined that a street terminating upon private land, and extending neither to another way, a mill, a market, nor other public place, is incapable of dedication to the public as a highway. 2 R. I. 172. And a similar decision has been made in New York. 23 N. Y. 103. And see 23 N. H. 331; 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 106.

THOUGHT. The operation of the mind. No one can be punished for his mere thoughts, however wicked they may be. Human laws cannot reach them,—first, because they are unknown; and secondly, unless made manifest by some action, they are not injurious to any one; but when they manifest themselves, then the act which is the consequence may be punished. Dig. 50. 16. 225.

THREAD. A figurative expression used to signify the central line of a stream or watercourse. Harg. Law Tr. 5; 4 Mason (U. S.) 397; Holt, 490. See "Filum Aquae."

THREAT. A menace of destruction or injury to the lives, character, or property of those against whom it is made.

Threats in themselves are not indictable or actionable, but if a threat is accompanied by appearance of present ability and intention to carry out the threat, it is an assault (1 Ired. [N. C.] 125); and, if made with the purpose of extorting money, it is a misdemeanor at common law (1 Hawk. [P. C.] c. 53, § 1). If business is interrupted, or freedom of locomotion is restrained, it is actionable. 27 Mich. 267.

THRENGES. Vassals, but not of the lowest degree; those who held lands of the chief lord.

THRITHING. A division consisting of three or four hundreds.

THUDE WEALD. A woodward, or person that looks after a wood.

THURINGIAN CODE. One of the "barbarian codes," as they are termed; supposed by Montesquieu to have been given by Theodoric, king of Austrasia, to the Thuringians, who were his subjects. Esprit des Lois, lib. 28, c. 1.

THWERTNICK. The custom of giving entertainments to a sheriff, etc., for three nights.

TICKETS OF LEAVE. In English criminal law, licenses to be at large, which are granted to convicts for good conduct, but are recallable upon subsequent misconduct. See 6 & 7 Vict. c. 7; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99, § 9; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, § 5; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47, §§ 4-10; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112; 4 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 451, note.

TIDE. The ebb and flow of the sea.

The law takes notice of three kinds of tides, viz., the high spring tides, which are the fluxes of the sea at those tides which happen at the two equinoctials; the spring tides, which happen twice every month, at the full and change of the moon; the neap or ordinary tides, which happen between the full and change of the moon, twice in twenty-four hours. Angell, Tide Waters, 68. The changeable condition of the tides produces, of course, corresponding changes in the line of high-water mark. Now, inasmuch as the soil of all tidal waters up to the limit of high-water mark, at common law, is in the crown, or, in this country, in the state, it is important to ascertain what is high-water mark, in legal contemplation, considered as the boundary of the royal or public ownership. In a recent English case this ownership has been held to be limited by the average of the medium high tides between the spring and the neap in each quarter of a lunar revolution during the year, excluding only extraordinary catastrophes or overflows. 4 De Gex, M. & G. 206; 3 Barn. & Ald. 967; 5 Barn. & Ald. 268; 2 Doug. 629; 7 Pet. (U. S.) 324; 1 Pick. (Mass.) 180; 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 357. See "River."

TIDE WATER. Water which flows and reflows with the tide. All arms of the sea, bays, creeks, coves, or rivers, in which the tide ebbs and flows, are properly denominated "tide waters."

The term "tide water" is not limited to water which is salt, but embraces, also, so much of the water of fresh rivers as is propelled backwards by the ingress and pressure of the tide. 5 Coke, 107; 2 Doug. 441; 6 Clark & F. 628; 7 Pet. (U. S.) 324. The supreme court of the United States has decided that, although the current of the river Mississippi at New Orleans may be so strong as not to be turned backwards by the tide, yet if the effect of the tide upon the current is so great as to occasion a regular rise and fall of the water, it might properly be said to be within the ebb and flow of the tide. 7 Pet. (U. S.) 324. The flowing, however, of the waters of a lake into a river, and their reflowing, being caused by the occasional swell and subsidence of the lake, and not by the ebb and flow of regular tides, do not constitute such a river a tidal, or, technically, navigable, river. 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 98. And see 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 195; 2 Conn. 481; Woolr. Waters, c. ii.; Angell, Tide Waters, c. iii.

TIDESMAN. In English law, a tidewaiter or custom-house officer, who watches on board of merchant ships till the duty on goods be paid, and the ships unladen.

TIEL. An old manner of spelling tel; such as, nul tiel record, no such record.

TIEMPO INHABIL (Spanish). In Louisiana. A time when a man is not able to pay his debts.

A man cannot dispose of his property, at such a time, to the prejudice of his creditors. 4 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 292; 3 Mart. (La.) 270; 10 Mart. (La.) 70.

TIERCE (Law Fr.; from Lat. tertius). Third. Tierce mien, third hand. Britt. c. 120.

TIGNI IMMITTENDI (Lat.) In civil law. A servitude which confers the right of inserting a beam or timber from the wall of one house into that of a neighboring house, in order that it may rest on the latter, and that the wall of the latter may bear this weight. Dig. 8. 2. 36; Dig. 8. 5. 14.

TIGNUM. In the civil law, any material for building.

TIHLER. In old Saxon law, an accusation.

TIMBER TREES. Oak, ash, elm, and such other trees as are commonly used for building. 2 Bl. Comm. 28. But it has been contended, arguendo, that to make it timber, the trees must be felled and severed from the stock. 6 Mod. 23; Starkie, Slander, 79; 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 239. See "Waste."

TIMBERLODE. A service by which tenants were bound to carry timber felled from the woods to the lord's house. Cowell.

TIME IMMEMORIAL. Time out of mind. In England this is said to be before the beginning of the reign of Richard I. 2 Bl. Comm. 31.

TIME OUT OF MEMORY. See "Time Immemorial."

TIMORES VANI SUNT AESTIMANDI qui non cadunt in constantem virum. Fears which do not affect a brave man are vain. 7 Coke, 17.

TINBOUNDING. A custom regulating the manner in which tin is obtained from waste land, or land which has formerly been waste land, within certain districts in Cornwall and Devon. Bain. M. & M. 146 et seq. The custom is described in the leading case on the subject as follows: "Any person may enter on the waste land of another, and may mark out by four corner boundaries a certain area; a written description of the plot of land so marked out with metes and bounds, and the name of the person, is recorded in the local Stannaries court, and is proclaimed on three successive court days. If no objection is sustained by any other person, the court awards a writ to the bailiff to deliver possession of the said 'bounds of tinwork' to the 'bounder,' who thereupon has the exclusive right to search for, dig, and take for his own use all tin and tin ore within the enclosed limits, paying as a royalty to the owner of the waste a certain proportion of the produce under the name of 'toll tin.'" 10 Q. B. 26, cited in Elt. Comm. 113. The right of tinbounding is not a right of common (see "Common"), but is an interest in land, and, in Devonshire, a corporeal hereditament (Elt. Comm. 114). In Cornwall, tin bounds are personal estate. Bain. M. & M. 150. See "Stannary Courts."

TINEL LE ROY. The king's hall, wherein his servants used to dine and sup. 13 Rich. II. st. 1, c. 3.

TINEMAN, or TIENMAN. A petty officer in the forest, who had the care of vert and venison at night, and other servile duties. Cowell.

TINEWALD. The ancient parliament or annual convention of the people in the Isle of Man.

TINKERMEN. Fishermen who destroyed the young fry on the river Thames, by nets and unlawful engines. Cowell.

TINSEL OF THE FEU. The loss of an estate held in feu in Scotland, from allowing two years' feu duty to remain unpaid. Bell, Dict.

TIPPLING HOUSE. A place where spirituous liquors are sold and drunk in violation of law. Sometimes the mere selling is considered as evidence of keeping a tippling house.

TIPSTAFF. An officer appointed by the marshal of the court of king's bench to attend upon the judges with a kind of rod or staff tipped with silver.

In the United States, the courts sometimes appoint an officer who is known by this name, whose duty it is to wait on the court and serve its process.

TITHES. In English law. A right to the tenth part of the produce of lands, the stocks upon lands, and the personal industry of the inhabitants. These tithes are raised for the support of the clergy.

TITHING. In English law. Formerly, a district containing ten men, with their families. In each tithing there was a tithingman, whose duty it was to keep the peace, as a constable now is bound to do. St. Armand, in his Historical Essay on the Legislative Power of England (page 70), expresses an opinion that the tithing was composed not of ten common families, but of ten families of lords of a manor.

TITHINGMAN. In Saxon law. The head or chief of a decennary of ten families. He was to decide all lesser causes between neighbors. Now tithingmen and constables are the same thing. Jacob.

In New England, a parish officer to keep good order in church. Webster.

TITIUS. A Roman name commonly used in the civil law in illustrating rules of example, or to designate a fictitious person, like the John Doe of English law.

TITLE. The means whereby the owner of lands hath the just possession of his property. Co. Litt. 345; 2 Bl. Comm. 195. See 1 Ohio, 349. This is the definition of title to lands only.

(1) A bad title is one which conveys no property to the purchaser of an estate.

(2) A doubtful title is one which the court does not consider to be so clear that it will enforce its acceptance by a purchaser, nor so defective as to declare it a bad title, but only subject to so much doubt that a purchaser ought not to be compelled to accept it. 1 Jac. & W. 568; 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 344.

(3) A good title is that which entitles a man by right to a property or estate, and to the lawful possession of the same.

(4) A marketable title is one which a court of equity considers to be so clear that it will enforce its acceptance by a purchaser.

The doctrine of marketable titles is purely equitable and of modern origin. Atkins, Titles, 26. At law every title not bad is marketable. 5 Taunt. 625; 6 Taunt. 263; 1 Marsh. 258. See 2 Pa. Law J. 17.

There are several stages or degrees requisite to form a complete title to lands and tenements. The lowest and most imperfect degree of title is the mere possession, or actual occupation of the estate, without any apparent right to hold or continue such possession. This happens when one man disseises another. The next step to a good and perfect title is the right of possession, which may reside in one man while the actual possession is not in himself, but in another.

This right of possession is of two sorts,—an apparent right of possession, which may be defeated by proving a better, and an actual right of possession, which will stand the test against all opponents. The mere right of property, the jus proprietatis, without either possession or the right of possession. 2 Bl. Comm. 195.

Title to real estate is acquired by descent, by purchase, and by adverse possession.

Title to personal property may accrue in three different ways,—by original acquisition, by transfer by act of law, by transfer by act of the parties.

Title by original acquisition is acquired by occupancy (see "Occupancy"); by accession (see "Accession"); by intellectual labor (see "Literary Property").

The title to personal property is acquired and lost by transfer by act of law, in various ways,—by forfeiture, succession, marriage, judgment, insolvency, intestacy (q. v.)

Title is acquired and lost by transfer by the act of the party, by gift, by contract or sale.

——In Legislation. That part of an act of the legislature by which it is known and distinguished from other acts; the name of the act.

——In Literature. The particular division of a subject, as a law, a book, and the like; for example, Digest, book 1, title 2. The name of a newspaper, book, etc.

——Personal Relations. A distinctive appellation denoting the rank to which the individual belongs in society.

The constitution of the United States forbids the grant by the United States or any state of any title of nobility. Titles are bestowed by courtesy on certain officers. The president of the United States sometimes receives the title of "Excellency;" judges and members of congress, that of "Honorable;" and members of the bar and justices of the peace are called "Esquires." Cooper, Just. Inst. 416; Brackenridge, Law Misc.

Titles are assumed by foreign princes, and among their subjects they may exact these marks of honor; but in their intercourse with foreign nations they are not entitled to them as a matter of right. Wheaton, Int. Law, pt. 2, c. 3, § 6.

——In Pleading. The right of action which the plaintiff has. The declaration must show the plaintiff's title, and if such title be not shown in that instrument, the defect cannot be cured by any of the future pleadings. Bac. Abr. "Pleas, etc." (B 1).

——In Practice. That part of a pleading or other paper in a cause that states the names of the parties plaintiff and defendant thereto.

TITLE, COVENANTS FOR. They comprise "covenants for seisin, for right to convey, against incumbrances, for quiet enjoyment, sometimes for further assurance, and almost always of warranty." Rawle, Cov. § 21.

TITLE DEEDS. Those deeds which are evidences of the title of the owner of an estate.

The person who is entitled to the inheritance has a right to the possession of the title deeds. 1 Car. & M. 653.

TITULADA. In Spanish law. Title. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 5, c. 3, § 2.

TITULARS OF ERECTION. See "Lords of Erection.

TITULUS (Lat.)

——In the Civil Law. Title; the source or ground of possession; the means whereby possession of a thing is acquired, whether such possession be lawful or not.

——In Old Ecclesiastical Law. A temple or church; the material edifice. So called because the priest in charge of it derived therefrom his name and title. Spelman.

TITULUS EST JUSTA CAUSA POSSIdendi id quod nostrum est. Title is a just cause of possessing that which is ours. 8 Coke, 153 (305); Co. Litt. 345b.

TITULUS EST JUSTA CAUSA POSSIdendi id quod nostrum est; dicitur a tuendo. A title is the just right of possessing that which is our own; it is so called from "tuendo," defending. 8 Coke, 153.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. The words in a conveyance which show the estate intended to be conveyed. Thus, in a conveyance of land in fee simple, the grant is to "A. and his heirs, to have and to hold the said [land] unto and to the use of the said A., his heirs and assigns, forever." See Williams, Real Prop. 198.

Strictly speaking, however, the words "to have" denote the estate to be taken, while the words "to hold" signify that it is to be held of some superior lord, i. e., by way of tenure (q. v.) The former clause is called the "habendum," the latter, the "tenendum." Co. Litt. 6a.

TO WIT. That is to say; namely; scilicet; videlicet.

TOALIA. A towel. There is a tenure of lands by the service of waiting with a towel at the king's coronation. Cowell.

TOFT. A place or piece of ground on which a house formerly stood, which has been destroyed by accident or decay. It also signifies a messuage.

TOGATI (Lat.) In Roman law. Under the empire, when the toga had ceased to be the usual costume of the Romans, advocates were nevertheless obliged to wear it whenever they pleaded a cause. Hence they were called togati. This denomination received an official or legal sense in the imperial constitutions of the fifth and sixth centuries; and the words togati, consortium (corpus, ordo, collegium) togatorum, frequently occur in those acts.

TOKEN. A document or sign of the existence of a fact.

Tokens are either public or general, or privy tokens. They are either true or false. When a token is false, and indicates a general intent to defraud, and is used for that purpose, it will render the offender guilty of the crime of cheating (12 Johns. [N. Y.] 292); but if it is a mere privy token, as, counterfeiting a letter in another man's name, in order to cheat but one individual, it would not be indictable (9 Wend. [N. Y.] 182; 1 Dall. [Pa.] 47; 2 Const. [S. C.] 139; 2 Va. Cas. 65; 4 Hawks [N. C.] 348; 6 Mass. 72; 12 Johns. [N. Y.] 293; 2 Dev. [N. C.] 199; 1 Rich. [S. C.] 244).

——In Common Law. In England, this name is given to pieces of metal, made in the shape of money, passing among private persons by consent at a certain value. 2 Chit. Com. Law, 182.

TOLERATION (Lat.) In some countries, where religion is established by law, certain sects who do not agree with the established religion are nevertheless permitted to exist; and this permission is called "toleration." They are permitted and allowed to remain rather as a matter of favor than a matter of right.

In the United States there is no such thing as toleration; all men have an equal right to worship God according to the dictates of their consciences.

"We sometimes hear it said that all religions are tolerated in Ohio, but the expression is not strictly accurate. It is not by mere toleration that every individual here is protected in his belief or disbelief. He reposes not on the leniency of government, or the liberality of any class or sect of men, but upon his natural indefeasible rights of conscience, which are beyond the control or interference of any human authority." 2 Ohio St. 392.

TOLERATION ACT. St. 1 Wm. & Mary, st. 1, c. 18, confirmed by 10 Anne, c. 2, by which all persons dissenting from the Church of England (except Papists and persons denying the Trinity) were relieved from such of the acts against Nonconformists as prevented their assembling for religious worship according to their own forms, or otherwise restrained their religious liberty, on condition of their taking the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribing a declaration against transubstantiation; and in the case of dissenting ministers, subscribing also to certain of the Thirty-nine Articles. The clause of this act which excepted persons denying the Trinity from the benefits of its enactments was repealed by 53 Geo. III. c. 160. 4 Broom & H. Comm. 67.

TOLL. A sum of money for the use of something, generally applied to the consideration which is paid for the use of a road, bridge, or the like, of a public nature.

The compensation paid to a miller for grinding another person's grain.

The rate of taking toll for grinding is regulated by statute in most of the states. See 2 Washb. Real Prop.; 6 Q. B. 31.

A Saxon word originally signifying a payment in towns, markets, or fairs for goods and cattle bought and sold there. It is now also popularly applied to the charges which canal and railroad companies require for the transportation of goods; but it does not necessarily import an immediate payment. The word means nothing more than a compensation for the privilege or service granted; and the period of payment depends, as in other cases, on the understanding of the parties.

Various definitions of the term collected, and the nature of tolls, considered. 29 Barb. (N. Y.) 589; 3 Abb. Ct. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 1 Keyes (N. Y.) 72.

To bar, defeat, or take away; as, to toll an entry into lands is to deny or take away the right of entry. To toll the statute of limitations is to interrupt its running.

TOLL BOOTH. A prison; a custom house; an exchange; also the place where goods are weighed.

TOLL DISH. A vessel by which the toll of corn for grinding is measured.

TOLL THOROUGH. In English law. A toll for passing through a public highway, or over a ferry or bridge. Cowell.

TOLL TRAVERSE. In English law. A toll for passing over private grounds. Cowell.

TOLL TURN. In English law. A toll on beasts returning from a market. 1 Crabb, Real Prop. p. 101, § 102. A toll paid at the return of beasts from fair or market, though they were not sold. Cowell.

TOLLS. In a general sense, tolls signify any manner of customs, subsidy, prestation, imposition, or sum of money demanded for exporting or importing of any wares or merchandise, to be taken of the buyer. 2 Inst. 58.

TOLLAGE. Payment of toll; money charged or paid as toll; the liberty or franchise of charging toll.

TOLLE VOLUNTATEM ET ERIT OMNIS actus indifferens. Take away the will, and every action will be indifferent. Bracton, fol. 2.

TOLLER, or TOLER (Law Fr. from Lat. tollere, q. v.) To take away; to bar or defeat. Discents que tollent entries, descents which toll or bar entries. Litt. § 385.

TOLLERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To lift up or raise; to elevate; to build up. See "Servitus Altius non Tollendi."

To take away; to dissolve or destroy. Tollitur omnis obligatio solutione ejus quod debetur, every obligation is dissolved by the payment of that which is due. Inst. 3. 30, pr. See Fleta, lib. 2, c. 60, § 5.

To put an end to an action. Calv. Lex. To quash, or annul a judgment. Id.; Spiegelius.

To bring up, or educate. Calv. Lex.; Adams, Rom. Ant. 51.

TOLSESTER. An old excise; a duty paid by tenants of some manors to the lord for liberty to brew and sell ale. Cowell.

TOLSEY. The same as toll booth (q. v.) Also, a place where merchants meet; a local tribunal for small civil causes held at the Guildhall, Bristol.

TOLT. A writ whereby a cause depending in a court baron was taken and removed into a county court. Old Nat. Brev. 4.

TOLTA. Wrong; rapine; extortion. Cowell.

TONNAGE. The capacity of a ship or vessel; the duties paid on the tonnage of a ship.

This term is most usually applied to the capacity of a vessel in tons, as determined by the legal mode of measurement; and, as a general rule, in the United States, the official tonnage of a vessel is considerably below the actual capacity of the vessel to carry freight.

For the rule for determining the tonnage of British vessels under the law of England, see McCulloch, "Tonnage;" Eng. Merch. Shipp. Act 1854, §§ 20-29.

In the United States it is provided that the tonnage of a vessel shall be her entire internal cubic capacity in tons of one hundred cubic feet each, to be ascertained in the manner prescribed by the statute. Rev. St. U. S. § 4153.

TONNAGE RENT. When the rent reserved by a mining lease or the like consists of a royalty on every ton of minerals gotten in the mine, it is often called a "tonnage rent." There is generally a dead rent in addition. See "Rent."

TONNAGIUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. A custom or impost upon wines and other merchandise exported or imported, according to a certain rate per ton. Spelman; Cowell.

TONNETIGHT. In old English law. The quantity of a ton or tun, in a ship's freight or bulk, for which tonnage or tunnage was paid to the king. Pat. 2 Rich. II.; Cowell.

TONODERACH. In old Scotch law. A thief taker (qui fures exquirit). LL. Ken. Reg. § 5; Spelman.

TONSURA (Lat. from tondere, to shave or clip). In old English law. A shaving or polling; the having the crown of the head shaven; tonsure. One of the peculiar badges of a clerk or clergyman. Habitus et tonsura clericalis, the clerical habit and tonsure without which no man originally could be admitted to the privilege of clergy. 2 Hale, P. C. 372; 4 Bl. Comm. 366; Nov. 5, c. 2.

TONTINE. In French law. The name of a partnership composed of creditors or recipients of perpetual or life rents or annuities, formed on the condition that the rents of those who may die shall accrue to the survivors, either in whole or in part.

This kind of partnership took its name from Tonti, an Italian, who first conceived the idea and put it in practice. Merlin, Repert.; Dalloz; 5 Watts (Pa.) 351.

TONTINE INSURANCE. A system of life insurance whereby the surplus funds of the insurer are accumulated during a period called the "tontine period," and then distributed to such of the policy holders as then survive. See 38 Hun (N. Y.) 309.

TOOK AND CARRIED AWAY. In criminal pleading. Technical words necessary in an indictment for simple larceny. Bac. Abr. "Indictment" (G 1); Comyn, Dig. "Indictment" (G 6); Cro. Car. 37; 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 244. See "Asportation."

TOOLS. Those implements which are commonly used by the hand of one man in some manual labor necessary for his subsistence. It has been held to include also the implements of a professional man. 17 Mich. 342.

The apparatus of a printing office, such as types, presses, etc., are not, therefore, included under the term "tools." 13 Mass. 82; 10 Pick. (Mass.) 423; 3 Vt. 133. And see 2 Pick. (Mass.) 80; 5 Mass. 313.

TORT (Fr. tort; from Lat. torquere, to twist, tortus, twisted, wrested aside). A private or civil wrong or injury; a wrong independent of contract. 1 Hilliard, Torts, 1.

The commission or omission of an act by one without right, whereby another receives some injury, directly or indirectly, in person, property, or reputation.

"The word 'tort' means nearly the same thing as the expression 'civil wrong.' It denotes an injury inflicted otherwise than by mere breach of contract; or, to be more nicely accurate, a tort is a disturbance of another in rights which the law has created, either in the absence of contract, or in consequence of a relation which a contract had established between the parties." Bish. Non-Cont. Law, § 4.

(1) Distinguished from contract. As recognized by the law for the enforcement of rights and redress of injuries, torts may be distinguished from contracts by these qualities: That parties jointly committing torts are severally liable without right to contribution from each other; that the death of either party destroys the right of action; that persons under personal disabilities to contract are liable for their torts; that attachment, arrest, and imprisonment are allowed on claims arising under contracts. 1 Hilliard, Torts, 3. A tort, however, may grow out of, or make part of, or be coincident with, a contract; as in the familiar case of a fraudulent sale or fraudulent recommendation of a third person. Indeed, the wrong of fraud almost necessarily implies an accompanying contract. In these cases, the law often allows the party injured an election of remedies; that is, he may proceed against the other party either as a debtor or contractor, or as a wrongdoer. 10 Hilliard, Torts, 28; 10 C. B. 83; 24 Conn. 392.

(2) Distinguished from crime. The distinction of public wrongs from private crimes, and misdemeanors from civil injuries, seems principally to consist in this, that private wrongs or civil injuries are an infringement or privation of the civil rights which belong to individuals merely as individuals. "Public wrongs or crimes and misdemeanors are a breach and violation of the public rights and duties due to the whole community in its social aggregate capacity." 4 Bl. Comm. 5.

TORTFEASOR. A wrongdoer; one who commits or is guilty of a tort.

TORTURA LEGUM PESSIMA. The torture or wresting of laws is the worst kind of torture. 4 Bac. Works, 434.

TORTURE. Bodily pain or hurt inflicted with the object of compelling a disclosure of guilt or of knowledge in respect of a crime or its perpetrator. It was imposed by various means, and under sanction of law.

TOT. In old English practice. A word written by the foreign opposer or other officer opposite to a debt due the king, to denote that it was a good debt, which was hence said to be "totted." St. 42 Edw. III. c. 9.

TOTA CURIA (Law Lat.) In the old reports. The whole court.

TOTAL LOSS. In insurance. A total loss in marine insurance is either the absolute destruction of the insured subject by the direct action of the perils insured against, or a constructive—sometimes called "technical"—total loss, in which the assured is deprived of the possession of the subject, still subsisting in specie, or where there may be remnants of it or claims subsisting on account of it, and the assured, by the express terms or legal construction of the policy, has the right to recover its value from the underwriters, so far as, and at the rate at which, it is insured, on abandonment and assignment of the still subsisting subject or remnants or claims arising out of it. 2 Phil. Ins. c. xvii.; 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 286

A constructive total loss may be by capture; seizure by unlawful violence; as, piracy (1 Phil. Ins. § 1106; 2 Eng. Law & Eq. 85); or damage to ship or goods over half of the value at the time and place of loss (2 Phil. Ins. § 1608; 1 Curt. [U. S.] 148; 9 Cush. [Mass.] 415; 5 Denio [N. Y.] 342; 6 Denio [N. Y.] 282; 19 Ala. [N. S.] 108; 1 Johns. Cas. [N.Y.] 141; 6 Johns. [N.Y.] 219); or loss of the voyage (2 Phil. Ins. §§ 1601, 1606, 1619; 4 Me. 431; 24 Miss. 461; 19 N. Y. 272; 1 Mart. [La.] 221); though the ship or goods may survive in specie, but so as not to be fit for use in the same character for the same service or purpose (2 Phil. Ins. § 1605; 2 Caines, Cas. [N. Y.] 324; Valin, tom. 2, tit. Ass. a. 46); or by jettison (2 Phil. Ins. §§ 1616, 1617; 1 Caines [N. Y.] 196); or by necessity to sell on account of the action and effect of the peril insured against (2 Phil. Ins. § 1623; 5 Gray [Mass.] 154; 1 Cranch [U. S.] 202); or by loss of insured freight consequent on the loss of cargo or ship (2 Phil. Ins. §§ 1642, 1645; 18 Johns. [N. Y.] 208).

There may be a claim for a total loss in addition to a partial loss. 2 Phil. Ins. § 1743; 17 How. (U. S.) 595. A total loss of the ship is not necessarily such of cargo (2 Phil. Ins. §§ 1601 et seq., 1622; 3 Bin. [Pa.] 287); nor is submersion necessarily a total loss (2 Phil. Ins. § 1607; 7 East, 38); nor is temporary delay of the voyage (2 Phil. Ins. §§ 1618, 1619; 5 Barn. & Ald. 597).

A constructive total loss, and an abandonment thereupon of the ship, is a constructive total loss of freight; and a constructive total loss and abandonment of cargo has a like effect as to commissions or profits thereon; and the validity of the abandonment will depend upon the actual facts at the time of the abandonment, as the same may subsequently prove to have been. 2 Phil. Ins. § 1630 et seq.; 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 93.

TOTIDEM VERBIS (Lat.) In so many words.

TOTIES QUOTIES (Lat.) As often as the thing shall happen.

TOTUM PRAEFERTUR UNICUIQUE parte. The whole is preferable to any single part. 3 Coke, 41a.

TOUCH AND STAY. Words frequently introduced in policies of insurance, giving the party insured the right to stop and stay at certain designated points in the course of the voyage. A vessel which has the power to touch and stay at a place in the course of the voyage must confine herself strictly to the terms of the liberty so given; for any attempt to trade at such a port during such a stay, as, by shipping or landing goods, will amount to a species of deviation which will discharge the underwriters, unless the ship have also liberty to trade as well as to touch and stay at such a place. 1 Marsh. Ins. 275; 1 Esp. 610; 5 Esp. 96.

TOUJOURS ET UNCORE PRIST (Law Fr. always and still ready). This is the name of a plea of tender; as, where a man is indebted to another, and he tenders the amount due, and afterwards the creditor brings a suit, the defendant may plead the tender, and add that he has always been and is still ready to pay what he owes, which may be done by the formula toujours et uncore prist. He must then pay the money into court; and if the issue be found for him, the defendant will be exonerated from costs, and the plaintiff made justly liable for them. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2923. See "Tout Temps Prist."

TOUR D'ECHELLE. In French law. A right which the owner of an estate has of placing ladders on his neighbor's property to facilitate the reparation of a party wall, or of buildings which are supported by that wall. It is a species of servitude. Lois des Bat. pt. 1, c. 3, sec. 2, art. 9, § 1.

The space of ground left unoccupied around a building for the purpose of enabling the owner to repair it with convenience. This is not a servitude, but an actual corporeal property.

TOURN. In old English law. A court of record, having criminal jurisdiction, in each county, held before the sheriff twice a year, in one place after another, following a certain circuit or rotation.

TOUT (Fr.) All.

TOUT CE QUE LA LOI NE DEFEND PAS est permis. Everything is permitted which is not forbidden by law.

TOUT TEMPS PRIST (Law Fr. always ready). In pleading. A plea by which the defendant signifies that he has always been ready to perform what is required of him. The object of the plea is to save costs; as, for example, where there has been a tender and refusal. 3 Bl. Comm. 303; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (2 Y 5). So, in a writ of dower, where the plea is detinue of charters, the demandant might reply, "Always ready." Rast. Entr. 229b; Stearns, Real Actions, 310. See "Uncore Prist."

TOUT UN SOUND (Law Fr.) All one sound; idem sonans.

TOUTE EXCEPTION NON SURVEILLEE tend a prendre la place du principe. Every exception not watched tends to assume the place of the principle.

TOWN.

——In the United States. In some states, a division of a county next smaller in extent than the county. In the New England states, the town is for many purposes the unit of civil government. In other states, the county is the unit, and the town has local government in only a few matters.

In many states, the term "township" is used for the largest subdivision of the county, and in such states a "town" is a village or small city.

——In English Law. The term "town" or "vill" comprehends under it the several species of cities, boroughs, and common towns. 1 Bl. Comm. 114.

TOWN CLERK. An officer who manages the public business of a town.

TOWN COLLECTOR. An officer of a town charged with collecting the township taxes.

TOWN COMMISSIONER. One of the board of officers in whom, under the laws of some of the states, the management of the business of a town is vested. Abbott.

TOWN CRIER. An officer in a town whose business it is to make proclamations.

TOWN MEETING. An assemblage of the voters of a town to select town officers and discuss other business of the town.

TOWN PLAT. The acknowledgment and recording of a town plat vests the legal title to the ground embraced in the streets and alleys in the corporation of the town. Therefore it is held that the proprietor who has thus dedicated the streets and alleys to the public cannot maintain trespass for an injury to the soil or freehold. The corporation alone can seek redress for such injury. 11 Ill. 554; 13 Ill. 54, 308. This is not so, however, with a highway. The original owner of the fee must bring his action for an injury to the soil. 13 Ill. 54. See "Highway." If the streets or alleys of a town are dedicated by a different mode from that pointed out by the statute, the fee remains in the proprietor, burdened with the public easement. 13 Ill. 312.

TOWN REEVE. The reeve or chief officer of a town.

TOWN TAX. One levied to meet the separate expenses of a town. Opposed to "state tax," "county tax."

TOWNS IMPROVEMENT. The English Towns Improvement Clauses Act 1847 was passed to consolidate in one act certain provisions usually contained in acts for paving, draining, cleansing, lighting, and improving towns. Local acts appointing commissioners for the improvement of towns generally incorporate the provisions of this act, but such acts are now rarely passed, as the provisions of the general health acts, the local government acts, the sanitary acts, and the public health acts have practically superseded them.

TOWNSHIP. The public lands of the United States are surveyed first into tracts called "townships," being in extent six miles square. The subdivisions of a township are called "sections," each a mile square, and containing six hundred and forty acres. These are subdivided into quarter sections, and from that into lots of forty acres each. This plan of subdividing the public lands was adopted by Act Cong. May 18, 1796. See Brightly, Dig. U. S. Laws, 493.

In some states the largest subdivision of a county. See "Town."

TRACEA. In old English law. The track or trace of a felon, by which he was pursued with the hue and cry; a footstep, hoof print, or wheel track. Bracton, fols. 116, 121b.

TRACTENT FABRILIA FABRI. Let smiths perform the work of smiths. 3 Coke, Epist.

TRADAS IN BALLIUM. You deliver to bail. In old English practice. The name of a writ which might be issued in behalf of a party who, upon the writ de odio et atia, had been found to have been maliciously accused of a crime, commanding the sheriff that, if the prisoner found twelve good and lawful men of the county who would be mainpernors for him, he should deliver him in bail to those twelve, until the next assize. Bracton, fol. 123; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 252.

TRADE. In the broadest sense, any sort of dealings for profit, whether labor or barter. In a stricter sense, the sale or exchange of merchandise.

The occupation of a mechanic.

TRADE-MARK. A symbol, emblem, or mark used by a person to indicate that the article to which it is affixed is manufactured or sold by him, or that he carries on business at a particular place. 35 L. J. Ch. 61.

Its original use was by manufacturers, but its use has been extended to other than tradesmen, to indicate the nature of their business, their identity, or the place where their business is carried on. Slater, Trade-Marks, 232; 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 151; 7 Cush. (Mass.) 322; 2 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 101.

The office of a trade-mark is to indicate the origin, ownership, nature, etc., of goods manufactured or sold, or the person by whom, or the place where, they are so manufactured or sold. The essentials, therefore, of a good trade-mark, are that it be truthful in its express or implied statements, and that it be incapable of truthful application to other goods. 57 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 1; 39 Conn. 450.

Descriptive words, or words indicating quality or attributes, which may be truthfully applied by others to the same class of goods, cannot constitute a valid trade-mark. 136 Ill. 215; 67 Ga. 562.

Arbitrary or fanciful names, constituting the majority of trade-marks, derive their value from the fact that they have come to identify the goods of the user, and cannot, therefore, be truthfully used by others. 51 Fed. 829; 63 Hun (N. Y.) 330.

TRADE-MARKS REGISTRATION ACT 1875. St. 38 & 39 Vict. c. 91, amended by the acts of 1876 and 1877. It provides for the establishment of a register of trade-marks under the superintendence of the commissioners of patents, and for the registration of trade-marks as belonging to particular classes of goods, and for their assignment in connection with the good-will of the business in which they are used. Registration is substituted for public use as the mode of acquiring the right to a trade-mark, so that now no one can enforce his right to a trade-mark until it is registered. For the purposes of the act, a trade-mark consists (1) of a name of an individual or firm printed, impressed, or woven in some particular and distinctive manner; (2) of a written signature or copy of a written signature of an individual or firm; or (3) of a distinctive device, mark, heading, label, or ticket. See 3 Ch. Div. 659. There may be added to any one or more of these essential particulars any letters, words, or figures. Certain kinds of marks used as trade-marks before the passing of the act may be registered under the act, although not coming within the statutory definition. See generally, as to the act, Sebastian, Trade-Marks; 4 App. Cas. 479; 15 Ch. Div. 181.

TRADE-NAME. A trade-name is a name which by user and reputation has acquired the property of indicating that a certain trade or occupation is carried on by a particular person. The name may be that of a person, place, or thing, or it may be what is called a "fancy name" (i. e., a name having no sense, as applied to the particular trade), or word invented for the occasion, and having no sense at all. Seb. Trade-Marks, 37.

TRADE UNION. An association of workmen, usually, but not necessarily, employed in the same trade, for the purpose of combined action in securing the most favorable wages and conditions of labor.

TRADE USAGE. A usage connected with the practice of a particular trade.

TRADER. One who makes it his business to buy merchandise, or goods and chattels, and to sell the same for the purpose of making a profit. The quantum of dealing is immaterial, when an intention to deal generally exists. 3 Starkie, 56; 2 Car. & P. 135; 1 Term R. 572.

A farmer who, in addition to his usual business, occasionally buys a horse not calculated for his usual occupation, and sells him again to make a profit, and who, in the course of two years, had so bought and sold five or six horses, two of which had been sold, after he had bought them, for the sake of a guinea profit, was held to be a trader. 1 Term R. 537, note; 1 Price, 20. Another farmer, who bought a large quantity of potatoes, not to be used on his farm, but merely to sell again for a profit, was also declared to be a trader. 1 Strange, 513. See 7 Taunt. 409; 5 Bos. & P. 78; 11 East, 274.

A butcher who kills only such cattle as he has reared himself is not a trader; but if he buy them and kill and sell them with a view to profit, he is a trader. 4 Burrows, 21, 47. See 2 Rose, 38; 3 Campb. 233; Cooke, Bankr. Law, 48, 73; 2 Wils. 169; 1 Atk. 128; Cowp. 745.

A brickmaker who follows the business for the purpose of enjoying the profits of his real estate merely is not a trader; but when he buys the earth by the load or otherwise, and manufactures it into bricks, and sells them with a view to profit, he is a trader. Cooke, Bankr. Law, 52, 63; 7 East, 442; 3 Car. & P. 500; Moody & M. 263; 2 Rose, 422; 2 Glyn & J. 183; 1 Brown, Ch. 173.

For further examples the reader is referred to 4 Man. & R. 486; 9 Barn. & C. 577; 1 Term R. 34; 1 Rose, 316; 2 Taunt. 178; 2 Marsh. 236; 3 Moore & S. 761; 10 Bing. 292; Peake, 76; 1 Vent. 270; 3 Brod. & B. 2; 6 Moore, 56.

TRADICION (Spanish). In Spanish law. Delivery. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 2, c. 9.

TRADITIO (Lat.)

——In the Civil Law. Delivery; transfer of possession; a giving possession of a corporeal thing; a derivative mode of acquiring, by which the owner of a corporeal thing, having the right and the will of aliening it, transfers it for a lawful consideration to the receiver. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 1, § 380.

——In Old English Law. Delivery or livery.

TRADITIO BREVIS MANUS (Lat.) In civil law. The delivery of a thing by the mere consent of the parties; as, when Peter holds the property of Paul as bailee, and afterwards he buys it, it is not necessary that Paul should deliver the property to Peter, and he should redeliver it to Paul. The mere consent of the parties transfers the title to Paul. 1 Duv. note 252; 21 Me. 231; Poth. ad Pand. lib. 50, cdlxxiv.; 1 Bouv. Inst. note 944.

TRADITIO CLAVIUM (Lat.) In the civil law. Delivery of keys; a symbolical kind of delivery, by which the ownership of merchandise in a warehouse might be transferred to a buyer. Inst. 2. 1. 44.

TRADITIO LOQUI FACIT CHARTAM. Delivery makes the deed speak. 5 Coke, 1.

TRADITIO NIHIL AMPLIUS TRANSFERre debet vel potest, ad eum qui accipit, quam est apud eum qui tradit. Delivery cannot and ought not to transfer to him who receives more than was in possession of him who made the delivery. Dig. 41. 1. 20.

TRADITIO REI (Lat.) Delivery of the thing. See 5 Maule & S. 82.

TRADITION (Lat. trans, over, do, dare, to give). In civil law. The act by which a thing is delivered by one or more persons to one or more others.

The delivery of possession by the proprietor with an intention to transfer the property to the receiver. Two things are, therefore, requisite in order to transmit property in this way,—the intention or consent of the former owner to transfer it, and the actual delivery in pursuance of that intention.

Tradition is either real or symbolical. Real tradition takes place where the ipsa corpora of movables are put into the hands of the receiver. Symbolical tradition is used where the thing is incapable of real delivery, as, in immovable subjects, such as lands and houses, or such as consist in jure (things incorporeal), as, things of fishing, and the like. The property of certain movables, though they are capable of real delivery, may be transferred by symbol. Thus, if the subject be under lock and key, the delivery of the key is considered as a legal tradition of all that is contained in the repository. Cujas, Observations, liv. 11, c. 10; Inst. 2. 1. 40; Dig. 41. 1. 9; Ersk. Inst. 2. 1. 10. 11; Civ. Code La. art. 2452 et seq. See "Delivery."

TRADITOR (Law Lat.) In old English law. A traitor; one guilty of high treason. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 21, § 8.

TRADITUR IN BALLIUM (Law Lat.) In old practice. Is delivered to bail. Emphatic words of the old Latin bail piece. 1 Salk. 105.

TRAFFIC. Commerce; trade; sale or exchange of merchandise, bills, money, and the like.

TRAINBANDS. The militia; the part of a company trained to martial exercises.

TRAISTIS. In old Scotch law. A roll containing the particular dittay taken up upon malefactors, which, with the porteous, is delivered by the justice clerk to the coroner, to the effect that the persons whose names are contained in the porteous may be attached, conform to the dittay contained in the traistis. So called, because committed to the traist [trust], faith, and credit of the clerks and coroner. Skene de Verb. Sign.

TRAITOR. One guilty of treason. See charge of Judge Sprague, District Court of Massachusetts, 1682; Bish. Crimes.

The punishment of a traitor is death.

TRAITOROUSLY. In pleading. A technical word, which is essential in an indictment for treason in order to charge the crime, and which cannot be supplied by any other word or any kind of circumlocution. Having been well laid in the statement of the treason itself, it is not necessary to state every overt act to have been traitorously committed. See Bac. Abr. "Indictment" (G 1); Comyn, Dig. "Indictment" (G 6); Hawk. P. C. bk. 2, c. 25, § 55; 1 East, P. C. 115; 2 Hale, P. C. 172, 184; 4 Bl. Comm. 307; 3 Inst. 15; Cro. Car. 37; Carth. 319; 2 Salk. 683; 4 Harg. St. Tr. 701; 2 Ld. Raym. 870; Comb. 259; 2 Chit. Crim. Law, 104, note (b).

TRANSACTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. The settlement of a suit or matter in controversy, by the litigating parties, between themselves, without referring it to arbitration. Halifax, Civ. Law, bk. 3, c. 8, No. 14. An agreement by which a suit, either pending or about to be commenced, was forborne, or discontinued on certain terms. Calv. Lex. See Dig. 2. 15; Fleta, lib. 4, c. 17, § 2.

TRANSACTION (from Lat. trans and ago, to carry over). In civil law. An agreement between two or more persons, who, for the purpose of preventing or putting an end to a lawsuit, adjust their difference, by mutual consent, in the manner which they agree on. In Louisiana this contract must be reduced to writing. Civ. Code La. art. 3038.

Transactions regulate only the differences which appear to be clearly comprehended in them by the intentions of the parties, whether they be explained in a general or particular manner, unless it be the necessary consequence of what is expressed; and they do not extend to differences which the parties never intended to include in them. Civ. Code La. art. 3040.

To transact, a man must have the capacity to dispose of the things included in the transaction. 1 Domat, Lois Civ. 1. 13. 1; Dig. 2. 15. 1; Code, 2. 4. 41. In the common law, this is called a compromise. See "Compromise."

TRANSCRIPT (Lat.) A copy of an original writing, deed, or record.

——In Appellate Practice. The copy of the record transmitted to the appellate court.

TRANSCRIPTIO PEDIS FINIS LEVATI mittendo in cancellarium. A writ which certified the foot of a fine levied before justices in eyre, etc., into the chancery. Reg. Orig. 669.

TRANSCRIPTIO RECOGNITIONIS FACTAE CORAM JUSTICIARIIS ITINERANTIBUS, etc. An old writ to certify a cognizance taken by justices in eyre. Reg. Orig. 152.

TRANSFER (Lat. trans, over, fero, to bear or carry). The act by which the owner of a thing delivers it to another person, with the intent of passing the rights which he has in it to the latter. 1 Ala. 669; 36 Conn. 426.

TRANSFER OF A CAUSE. Removal of it to another court.

TRANSFERABLE. Capable of being passed to another. Railway passage tickets and personal privileges or licenses are often made "Not Transferable," i. e., valid only in the purchaser's hands.

TRANSFEREE. He to whom a transfer is made.

TRANSFERENCE. In Scotch law. The name of an action by which a suit which was pending at the time the party died is transferred from the deceased to his representatives, in the condition in which it stood formerly. If it be the pursuer who is dead, the action is called a transference active; if the defender, it is a transference passive. Ersk. Inst. 4. 1. 32.

TRANSFEROR. One who makes a transfer.

TRANSFERUNTUR DOMINIA SINE TITULO ET TRADITIONE, PER USUCAPTIONEM, SCIL, PER LONGAM CONTINUAM ET PACIFICAM POSSESSIONEM. Rights of dominion are tranferred without title or delivery, by usucaption, to wit, long and quiet possession. Co. Litt. 113.

TRANSGRESSIO EST CUM MODUS NON SERVATUR NEC MENSURA, DEBIT ENIM QUILIBET IN SUO FACTO MODUM HABERE ET MENSURAM. Transgression is when neither mode nor measure is preserved, for every one in his act ought to have a mode and measure. Co. Litt. 37.

TRANSGRESSION (Lat. trans, over, gressio, a step). The violation of a law.

TRANSGRESSIONE MULTIPLICATA, CRESCAT POENA INFLICTIO. When transgression is multiplied, let the infliction of punishment be increased. 2 Inst. 479.

TRANSHIPMENT. In maritime law. The act of taking the cargo out of one ship, and loading it in another.

When this is done from necessity, it does not affect the liability of an insurer on the goods. 1 Marsh. Ins. 166; Abb. Shipp. 240. But when the master tranships goods without necessity, he is answerable for the loss of them by capture by public enemies. 1 Gall. (U. S.) 443.

TRANSIRE. In English law. A warrant for the custom house to let goods pass; a permit. See, for a form of a transire, Harg. Law Tr. 104.

TRANSIT IN REM JUDICATAM. It passes into a judgment. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 298; 11 Pet. (U. S.) 100. See, also, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 463; 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 436; 6 East, 251.

TRANSIT TERRA CUM ONERE. The land passes with its burden. Co. Litt. 231a; Shep. Touch. 178; 5 Barn. & C. 607; 7 Mees. & W. 530; 3 Barn. & Ald. 587; 18 C. B. 845; 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 365; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 437, 630.

TRANSITIVE COVENANT. One binding the representatives of the covenantor.

TRANSITORY ACTION. In practice. An action the cause of which might have arisen in one place or county as well as another.

In general, all personal actions, whether ex contractu (5 Taunt. 25; 6 East, 352; 2 Johns. Cas. [N. Y.] 335; 2 Caines [N. Y.] 374; 3 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 500; 1 Chit. Pl. 243), or ex delicto (1 Chit. Pl. 243), are transitory.

Such action might, at common law, be brought in any county, but in the United States statutes have been passed prescribing in what counties the suit may be brought.

TRANSITUS (Lat.) A transit. See "Stoppage in Transitu."

TRANSLADO (Spanish). A transcript.

TRANSLATION. The reproduction in one language of what has been written or spoken in another.

In pleading, when a libel or an agreement written in a foreign language must be averred, it is necessary that a translation of it should also be given.

In evidence, when a witness is unable to speak the English language so as to convey his ideas, a translation of his testimony must be made. In that case, an interpreter should be sworn to translate to him, on oath, the questions propounded to him, and to translate to the court and jury.

The bestowing of a legacy which had been given to one, on another. This is a species of ademption; but it differs from it in this, that there may be an ademption without a translation, but there can be no translation without an ademption. Bac. Abr. "Legacies" (C).

The transfer of property; but in this sense it is seldom used. 2 Bl. Comm. 294. See "Interpreter."

——In Ecclesiastical Law. The removal from one place to another; as, the bishop was translated from the diocese of A. to that of B. In the civil law, "translation" signifies the transfer of property. Clef des Lois Rom.

TRANSLATITIUM EDICTUM. So much of the edict promulgated by the former praetor as was retained and republished by his successor.

TRANSLATIVE FACT. A fact by means of which a right is transferred or passes from one person to another.

TRANSMISSION (from Lat. trans, over, mitto, to send). In civil law. The right which heirs or legatees may have of passing to their successors the inheritance or legacy to which they were entitled, if they happen to die without having exercised their rights. Domat, liv. 3, tit. 1, § 10; 4 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 186; Dig. 50. 17. 54; Code, 6. 51.

TRANSPORTATION (from Lat. trans, over, beyond, porto, to carry). In English law. A punishment inflicted by virtue of sundry statutes. It was unknown to the common law. 2 H. Bl. 223. It is a part of the judgment or sentence of the court that the party shall be transported or sent into exile. 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 789-796; Princ. Pen. Law, c. 4, § 2.

TRANSUMPTS. In the Scotch law, an action of transumpt is an action competent to any one having a partial interest in a writing, or immediate use for it, to support his title or defenses in other actions. It is directed against the custodier of the writing, calling upon him to exhibit it, in order that a transumpt, i. e., a copy, may be judicially made and delivered to the pursuer. Bell, Dict.

TRASSATUS. One who is drawn, or drawn upon. The drawee of a bill of exchange. Heinec. de Camb. c. 6, §§ 5, 6.

TRAVAIL. The act of child bearing.

A woman is said to be in her travail from the time the pains of child bearing commence, until her delivery. 5 Pick. (Mass.) 63; 6 Me. 460.

TRAVERSE (Law Fr. traverser, to turn over, to deny). To deny; to put off.

——In Civil Pleading. To deny or controvert anything which is alleged in the previous pleading. Lawes, Pl. 116. A denial. Willes, 224. A direct denial in formal words: "Without this, that, etc." (absque hoc). 1 Chit. Pl. 523, note (a). A traverse may deny all the facts alleged (1 Chit. Pl. 525), or any particular material fact (20 Johns. [N. Y.] 406).

(1) A common traverse is a direct denial, in common language, of the adverse allegations, without the absque hoc, and concluding to the country. It is not preceded by an inducement, and hence cannot be used where an inducement is requisite. 1 Saund. 103b, note 1.

(2) A general traverse is one preceded by a general inducement, and denying all that is last before alleged on the opposite side, in general terms, instead of pursuing the words of the allegation which it denies. Gould, Pl. vii. 5, 6. Of this sort of traverse the replication de injuria sua propria absque tali causa, in answer to a justification, is a familiar example. Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (H 1); Steph. Pl. 171; Gould, Pl. c. 7, § 5; Archb. Civ. Pl. 194.

(3) A special traverse is one which commences with the words absque hoc, and pursues the material portion of the words of the allegation which it denies. Lawes, Pl. 116-120. It is regularly preceded by an inducement consisting of new matter. Gould, Pl. c. 7, §§ 6, 7; Steph. Pl. 188. A special traverse does not complete an issue, as does a common traverse. 20 Viner, Abr. 339; Yelv. 147, 148; 1 Saund. 22, note 2.

(4) A traverse upon a traverse is one growing out of the same point or subject matter as is embraced in a preceding traverse on the other side. Gould, Pl. c. 7, § 42, note. It is a general rule that a traverse well intended on one side must be accepted on the other. And hence it follows, as a general rule, that there cannot be a traverse upon a traverse if the first traverse is material. The meaning of the rule is that, when one party has tendered a material traverse, the other cannot leave it and tender another of his own to the same point upon the inducement of the first traverse, but must join in that first tendered; otherwise the parties might alternately tender traverses to each other in unlimited succession, without coming to an issue. Gould, Pl. c. 7, § 42. The rule, however, does not apply where the first traverse is immaterial, nor where it is material if the plaintiff would thereby be ousted of some right or liberty which the law allows. Poph. 101; F. Moore, 350; Hob. 104; Cro. Eliz. 99, 418; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (G 18); Bac. Abr. "Pleas" (H 4); Bouv. Inst. Index.

——In Criminal Practice. To put off or delay the trial of an indictment till a succeeding term. More properly, to deny or take issue upon an indictment. Dick. Sess. 151; 4 Bl. Comm. 351.

TRAVERSE JURY. A petit or trial jury.

TRAVERSE OF AN OFFICE. Proof that an inquisition made of lands or goods by the escheator is defective and untruly made.

TRAVERSER. One who traverses or denies.

TRAVERSING ANSWER or TRAVERSing note. In suits under the old English practice in chancery, where the defendant refused or neglected to file an answer to the bill, the plaintiff might file either a traversing answer or a traversing note, which produced the same effect as if the defendant had filed an answer traversing the case made by the bill. Daniell, Ch. Prac. 436. The modern practice dispenses with these fictions. See Rules of Court xxix. passim. See, also, "Pro Confesso."

TREACHER, TRECHETOUR, or TREACHour. A traitor.

TREADMILL. An instrument of prison discipline in England. It is composed of a large revolving cylinder, having ledges or steps fixed around its circumference. The prisoners walk up these ledges, and their weight moves the cylinder around.

TREASON.

——At Common Law. This word imports a betraying, treachery, or breach of allegiance. 4 Bl. Comm. 75.

Treason was either:

(1) High treason, which was the compass-

ing of the king's death, the aiding and comforting of his enemies, the forging or counterfeiting of his coin, the counterfeiting of the privy seal, or the killing of the chancellor, or either of the king's justices.

(2) Petit treason, which was where a wife murdered her husband, a servant his master, or an ecclesiastic his lord or ordinary. 4 Bl. Comm. 73.

——In the United States. The constitution of the United States (article 3, § 3) defines treason against the United States to consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid or comfort. This offense is punished with death. Act April 30, 1790 (1 Story, U. S. Laws, 83). By the same article of the constitution, no person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court. See, generally, 3 Story, Const. 39, p. 667; 1 Bl. Comm. Append. 275, 276; 3 Wilson, Law Lect. 96-99; Foster, Disc. (I); Fed. Cas. No. 14,692; 4 Cranch (U. S.) 126, 469-508; 1 Dall. (U. S.) 35; 2 Dall. (U. S.) 246, 355; 3 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 234; 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 553; 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 549; Comyn, Dig. "Justices" (K); 1 East, P. C. 37-158; 2 Chit. Crim. Law, 60-102; Archb. Crim. Pl. 378-387.

TREASON FELONY. An offense under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 12, consisting of compassing, etc., to depose her majesty, or to levy war to intimidate parliament, etc. Mozley & W.

TREASONABLE. Having the nature or guilt of treason.

TREASURE TROVE. Found treasure. This name is given to such money or coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion, which, having been hidden or concealed in the earth or other private place so long that its owner is unknown, has been discovered by accident. Should the owner be found, it must be restored to him; and in case of not finding him, the property, according to the English law, belongs to the king. In the latter case, by the civil law, when the treasure was found by the owner of the soil, he was considered as entitled to it by the double title of owner and finder; when found on another's property, one-half belonged to the owner of the estate and the other to the finder; when found on public property, it belonged one-half to the public treasury and the other to the finder. Lecon. du Dr. Rom. §§ 350-352. This includes not only gold and silver, but whatever may constitute riches; as, vases, urns, statues, etc.

The Roman definition includes the same things under the word pecunia; but the thing found must have a commercial value; for ancient tombs would not be considered a treasure. The thing must have been hidden or concealed in the earth, and no one must be able to establish his right to it. It must be found by a pure accident, and not in consequence of search. Dalloz, "Propriete," art. 3, § 3.

According to the French law, le tresor est toute chose cachee ou enfouie, sur laquelle personne ne peut justifier sa propriete, et qui est decouverte par le pur effet du hasard. Code Civ. 716. See 4 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 34. See, generally, 20 Viner, Abr. 414; 7 Comyn, Dig. 649; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 237; 1 Bl. Comm. 295; Poth. Traite du Droit de Propriete, art. 4.

TREASURER'S REMEMBRANCER. He whose charge was to put the lord treasurer and the rest of the judges of the exchequer in remembrance of such things as were called on and dealt in for the sovereign's behoof. There is still one in Scotland.

TREASURY. That fiscal department of the government which controls the payments of the public money in accordance with the votes of the legislature.

TREASURY BENCH. In the English house of commons, the first row of seats on the right hand of the speaker is so called, because occupied by the first lord of the treasury, or principal minister of the crown. Brown.

TREASURY CHEST FUND. A fund, in England, originating in the unusual balances of certain grants of public money, and which is used for banking and loan purposes by the commissioners of the treasury. Its amount was limited by St. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 127, and has been further reduced to one million pounds, the residue being transferred to the consolidated fund by St. 36 & 37 Vict. c. 56. Wharton.

TREATY. Treaties are agreements made and entered into by one independent state with another, in conformity with law, by which it places itself under an obligation.

The following are not considered treaties:

(1) Agreements entered into by a state with private individuals.

(2) Agreements between a state and the church, and especially concordats of the different states with the pope.

(3) Agreements by sovereigns or sovereign dynasties, whether among themselves or with foreign states, relative to their personal or dynastic pretensions to the government of a country. Glenn, Int. Law, 139; Hall, Int. Law, 323, note 1.

——Treaty of Alliance. One entered into by two or more states with a view of securing concerted action for the purpose designated in the treaty. Alliances may be either equal or unequal, and either offensive or defensive, or both. Davis, Int. Law, 82, note.

——Treaty of Guaranty. One entered into for the purpose of securing the observance of a treaty already existing, or the permanence of an existing state of affairs. The treaty of London of 1832, by which France, Great Britain, and Russia guarantied the sovereignty and independence of Greece, is an example.

——Treaty of Peace. A treaty of peace is an agreement or contract made by belligerent powers, in which they agree to lay down their arms, and by which they stipulate the conditions of peace and regulate the manner in which it is to be restored and supported. Vattel, bk. 4, c. 2, § 9.

TREATY OF PARIS. An agreement, more properly, perhaps, termed a "declaration," signed at Paris April 16, 1856, by representatives of Great Britain, Austria, France, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey.

The points agreed on relate to maritime law in time of war and are:

(1) Privateering is abolished.

(2) The neutral flag covers enemy's goods except contraband of war.

(3) Neutral goods, except contraband of war, are not subject to capture under the enemy's flag.

(4) Blockade, to be effective, must be maintained by a force sufficient to prevent access to the coast of the enemy.

TREATY OF WASHINGTON. A treaty signed on May 8, 1871, between Great Britain and the United States of America, with reference to certain differences arising out of the war between the northern and southern states of the Union, the Canadian fisheries, and other matters. Wharton.

TREBLE COSTS.

——In English Practice. The taxed costs and three-fourths the same added thereto. It is computed by adding one-half for double costs, and, in addition, one-half of one-half for treble costs. 1 Chit. 137; 1 Chit. Prac. 27.

——In American Law. In Pennsylvania the rule is different. When an act of assembly gives treble costs, the party is allowed three times the usual costs, with the exception that the fees of the officers are not to be trebled when they are not regularly or usually payable by the defendant. 2 Rawle (Pa.) 201.

In New York, the English method is followed. 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 443.

TREBLE DAMAGES. In actions arising ex contractu, some statutes give treble damages, and these statutes have been liberally construed to mean actually treble damages; for example, if the jury give twenty dollars damages for a forcible entry, the court will award forty dollars more, so as to make the total amount of damages sixty dollars. 4 Barn. & C. 154; McClel. 567.

The construction on the words "treble damages" is different from that which has been put on the words "treble costs." See 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 288; 1 Browne (Pa.) 9; 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 160, 175, 176, 584; 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 115.

TREBUCKET. The name of an engine of punishment, said to be synonymous with "tumbrel."

TREMAGIUM, TREMESIUM, or TERMISium. The season or time of sowing summer corn, being about March, the third month, to which the word may allude. Cowell.

TRES FACIUNT COLLEGIUM. Three form a corporation. Dig. 50. 16. 85; 1 Bl. Comm. 469.

TRESAYLE. An abolished writ sued on ouster by abatement on the death of the grandfather's grandfather.

TRESPASS. Any misfeasance or act of one man, whereby another is injuriously treated or damnified. 3 Bl. Comm. 208; 7 Conn. 125.

Any unlawful act committed with violence, actual or implied, to the person, property, or rights of another.

Any unauthorized entry upon the realty of another, to the damage thereof.

The word is used oftener in the last two somewhat restricted significations than in the first sense here given. In determining the nature of the act, neither the amount of violence or the intent with which it is offered, nor the extent of the damage accomplished or the purpose for which the act was committed, are of any importance; since a person who enters upon the land of another without leave, to lead off his own runaway horse, and who breaks a blade of grass in so doing, commits a trespass. 2 Humph. (Tenn.) 325; 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 5.

It is said that "some" damage must be committed to make an act a trespass. It is undoubtedly true that damage is required to constitute a trespass for which an action will lie; but, so far as the tort itself is concerned, it seems more than doubtful if the mere commission of an act affecting another, without legal authority, does not constitute trespass, though, until damage is done, the law will not regard it, inasmuch as the law does not regard trifles.

The distinction between the different classes of trespass is of importance in determining the nature of the remedy.

A trespass committed with force is said to be done "vi et armis;" one committed by entry upon the realty, "by breaking the close."

——In Practice. A form of action which lies to recover damages for the injury sustained by the plaintiff, as the immediate consequence of some wrong done forcibly to his person or property, against the person committing the same. Force is the essential of the action, and distinguishes it from "trespass on the case."

TRESPASS DE BONIS ASPORTATIS (Lat. de bonis asportatis, for goods which have been carried away). In practice. A form of action brought by the owner of goods to recover damages for unlawfully taking and carrying them away. 1 Me. 117.

It is no answer to the action that the defendant has returned the goods. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 36 (H).

TRESPASS FOR MESNE PROFITS. A form of action, supplemental to an action of ejectment, brought against the tenant in possession to recover the profits which he has unlawfully received during the time of his occupation. 3 Bl. Comm. 205; 4 Burrows, 1668. The person who actually received the profits is to be made defendant, whether defendant to the ejectment or not. 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 280. It lies after a recovery in ejectment (5 Cow. [N. Y.] 33; 11 Serg. & R. [Pa.] 55), or entry (6 N. H. 391), but not trespass to try title (Const. [S. C.] 102; 1 McCord [S. C.] 264); and the judgment in ejectment is conclusive evidence against the defendant for all profits which have accrued since the date of the demise stated in the declaration in ejectment (1 Blackf. [Ind.] 56; 2 Rawle [Pa.] 49); but suit for any antecedent profits is open to a new defense, and the tenant may plead the statute of limitations as to all profits accruing beyond the period fixed by law (3 Bl. Comm. 205, note; 2 Root [Conn.] 440).

TRESPASS ON THE CASE. In practice. The form of action by which a person seeks to recover damages caused by an injury unaccompanied with force, or which results indirectly from the act of the defendant. It is more generally called simply "case." See "Case;" 3 Bouv. Inst. notes 3482-3509.

TRESPASS QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT (Lat. quare clausum fregit, because he has broken the close). In practice. The form of action which lies to recover damages for injuries to the realty consequent upon entry without right, but not by force, upon the plaintiff's land.

TRESPASS TO TRY TITLE. An action authorized in a few states by statutes allowing title to be tried in trespass q. c. f. The nature and scope of the action differs with the various statutes. In South Carolina, the action is in the nature of ejectment, while in Texas it is an action to quiet title.

TRESPASS VI ET ARMIS (Lat. vi et armis, with force and arms). In practice. The form of action which lies to recover damages for an injury which is the immediate consequence of a forcible wrongful act done to the person or personal property. 2 Const. (S. C.) 294. It is distinguished from case in this, that the injury in case is the indirect result of the act done. See "Case;" 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3583.

TRESPASSER. One who does an unlawful act, or a lawful act in an unlawful manner, to the injury of the person or property of another.

TRESPASSER AB INITIO. A term applied to denote that one who has commenced a lawful act in a proper manner has performed some unlawful act, or some lawful act in an unlawful manner, so connected with the previous act that he is to be regarded as having acted unlawfully from the beginning. See 8 Coke, 146; 5 Taunt. 198; 7 Adol. & E. 176; 11 Mees. & W. 740; 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 401. See "Ab Initio."

TRESTONARE. To turn or divert another way. Cowell.

TRET. An allowance made for the water or dust that may be mixed with any commodity. It differs from "tare."

TREYT. Withdrawn, as a juror. Written also "treat." Cowell.

TRIA CAPITA. In the Roman law, were civitus, libertas, and familia, i. e. citizenship, freedom, and family rights. See "Caput;" "Status."

TRIAL. The examination before a competent tribunal, according to the law of the land, of the facts put in issue in a cause for the purpose of determining such issue. 4 Mason (U. S.) 232.

The methods of trial at common law were:

(1) By certificate, where the evidence of the person certifying is the only proper criterion of the point in dispute. 3 Bl. Comm. 333.

(2) By inspection or examination, where the judges upon the testimony of their senses decide the point in dispute.

(3) By witnesses, without the intervention of a jury (3 Bl. Comm. 336).

(4) By jury, which is that form of trial in which the facts are determined by twelve men impartially selected from the body of the county. See "Jury."

(5) By the record, where an issue of nul tiel record is joined in any action.

(6) By grand assize, a peculiar method of trial allowed in writs of right. See "Grand Assize."

(7) By wager of battel, which, in the old English law, was a barbarous mode of trying facts, among a rude people, founded on the supposition that heaven would always interpose and give the victory to the champions of truth and innocence. This mode of trial was abolished in England as late as St. 59 Geo. III. c. 46, A. D. 1818. It never was in force in the United States. See 3 Bl. Comm. 337; 1 Hale, Hist. Com. Law, 188. See a modern case, 1 Barn. & Ald. 405.

(8) By wager of law, which mode of trial has fallen into complete disuse; but, in point of law, it seems in England to be still competent in most cases to which it anciently applied. The most important and best-established of these cases is the issue of nil debet, arising in action of debt on simple contract, or the issue of non detinet, in an action of detinue. In the declaration in these actions, as in almost all others, the plaintiff concludes by offering his suit (of which the ancient meaning was followers or witnesses, though the words are now retained as mere form) to prove the truth of his claim. On the other hand, if the defendant, by a plea of nil debet or non detinet, deny the debt or detention, he may conclude by offering to establish the truth of such plea "against the plaintiff and his suit, in such manner as the court shall direct." Upon this, the court awards the wager of law (Co. Entr. 119a; Lilly, Entr. 467; 3 Chit. Pl. 479), and the form of this proceeding, when so awarded, is that the defendant brings into court with him eleven of his neighbors, and for himself makes oath that he does not owe the debt or detain the property.

TRIAL AT BAR. Trial before all the judges at the bar of the court in which the suit is brought. Steph. Pl. 84. Seldom used except in cases of great importance.

TRIAL AT NISI PRIUS. Trial before a justice of assize; the usual method of trial. 3 Bl. Comm. 353.

TRIAL LIST. A list of cases marked down for trial for any one term.

TRIATIO IBI SEMPER DEBET FIERI, ubi juratores meliorem possunt habere notitiam. Trial ought always to be had where the jurors can have the best information. 7 Coke, 1.

TRIBUERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To give. Calv. Lex. To distribute.

TRIBUNAL. The seat of a judge; the place where he administers justice. The whole body of judges who compose a jurisdiction. The jurisdiction which the judges exercise. The term is Latin, and derives its origin from the elevated seat where the tribunes administered justice.

TRIBUNAUX DE COMMERCE. In the French law, courts consisting of a president, judges, and substitutes elected in an assembly of the principal traders. No person under thirty years is eligible as a member of the tribunal, and the president must be forty years of age, at the least. The tribunal takes cognizance of all cases arising between merchants, and also of all disagreements arising among partners. The course of procedure is as in civil cases, and with an appeal to the regular courts. Brown.

TRIBUTE. A contribution which is sometimes raised by the sovereign from his subjects to sustain the expenses of the state. It is also a sum of money paid by one nation to another under some pretended right. Wolff. § 1145.

TRICESIMA. An ancient custom in a borough in the county of Hereford, so called, because thirty burgesses paid 1d. rent for their houses to the bishop, who was lord of the manor.

TRIDING MOTE. The court held for a triding or trithing. Cowell.

TRIENNIAL ACT. An act limiting the duration of every parliament to three years, unless sooner dissolved. It was passed by the long parliament in 1640, and afterwards repealed, and the term was fixed at seven years by the septennial act (St. 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 38).

TRIENS (Lat.) In the Roman law. A subdivision of the as, containing four unciae; the proportion of four-twelfths or one-third. Tayl. Civ. Law, 492; 2 Bl. Comm. 462, note (m).

TRIGAMUS. In old English law. One who has been thrice married; one who, at different times and successively, has had three wives; a trigamist. 3 Inst. 88.

TRIGILD. In Saxon law. A triple gild, geld, or payment; three times the value of a thing, paid as a composition or satisfaction. Spelman, voc. "Geldum."

TRINITY HOUSE. In English law. The short name usually given to a society incorporated in the reign of Henry VIII., and charged by successive acts of parliament with duties relating to the marine, especially in relation to pilotage, and the erection and maintenance of lighthouses, beacons, and sea marks.

TRINITY MASTERS. Elder brethren of the Trinity House. If a question arising in an admiralty action depends upon technical skill and experience in navigation, the judge or court is usually assisted at the hearing by two trinity masters, who sit as assessors, and advise the court on questions of a nautical character. Williams & B. Adm. Jur. 271; Sweet.

TRINITY SITTINGS. Sittings of the English court of appeal and of the high court of justice in London and Middlesex, commencing on the Tuesday after Whitsun week, and terminating on the 8th of August.

TRINITY TERM. In English law. One of the four terms of the courts. It begins on the 22d day of May, and ends on the 12th of June. St. 11 Geo. IV., and 1 Wm. IV. c. 70. It was formerly a movable term.

TRINOBANTES, TRINONANTES, or TRINOVANTES. Inhabitants of Britain, situated next to the Cantii, northward, who occupied, according to Camden and Baxter, that country which now comprises the counties of Essex and Middlesex, and some part of Surrey. But if Ptolemy be not mistaken, their territories were not so extensive in his time, as London did not then belong to them. The name seems to be derived from the three following British words: Tri, now, hant, i. e., inhabitants of the new city (London). Enc. Lond.

TRINODA NECESSITAS (Lat.) The threefold necessary public duties to which all lands were liable by Saxon law, viz., for repairing bridges, for maintaining castles or garrisons, and for expeditions to repel invasions. In the immunities enumerated in king's grants, these words were inserted, "exceptis his tribus, expeditione, pontis et arcis constructione." Kennett, Par. Ant. 46; 1 Bl. Comm. 263.

TRIORS. In practice. Persons appointed according to law to try whether a person challenged to the favor is or is not qualified to serve on the jury. They do not exceed two in number, without the consent of the prosecutor and defendant, or unless some special case is alleged by one of them, or when only one juror has been sworn and two triors are appointed with him. Co. Litt. 158a; Bac. Abr. "Juries" (E 12).

TRIPARTITE. Consisting of three parts; as, a deed tripartite, between A. of the first part, B. of the second part, and C. of the third part.

TRIPLICACION (Law Fr.) In old pleading. A rejoinder in pleading; the defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication. Britt. c. 77.

TRIPLICATIO (Lat.) In civil law. The reply of the plaintiff (actor) to the rejoinder (duplicatio) of the defendant (reus). It corresponds to the surrejoinder of common law. Inst. 4. 14; Bracton, lib. 5, tit. 5, c. 1.

TRIPLUM (Lat.) In the civil law. The triple value of a thing. Actio in triplum, an action for the triple value. Inst. 4. 6. 21. 24.

TRISTIS. A forest immunity. Manw. For. Law, 1, 86.

TRITHING (Saxon, trithinga). The third part of a county, consisting of three or four hundreds.

A court within the circuit of the trithing, in the nature of a court leet, but inferior to the county court. Camd. 102. The ridings of Yorkshire are only a corruption of trythings. 1 Bl. Comm. 116; Spelman, 52; Cowell.

TRITHING MOTE. The court held for a trithing or riding.

TRITHING REEVE. A governor of a trithing.

TRIUMVIR. A trithing man or constable of three hundred. Cowell.

TRIUMVIRI (or TREVIRI, or TRESVIRI) capitales (Lat.) In Roman law. Officers who had charge of the prison, through whose intervention punishments were inflicted. Sallust, in Catilin. They had eight lictors to execute their orders. Vicat.

TRIVERBIAL DAYS. In the civil law. Juridical days; days allowed to the praetor for deciding causes; days on which the praetor might speak the three characteristic words of his office, viz., do, dico, addico. Calv. Lex. Otherwise called "dies fasti." 3 Bl. Comm. 424, and note (w).

TRIVIAL. Of small importance. It is a rule in equity that a demurrer will lie to a bill on the ground of the triviality of the matter in dispute, as being below the dignity of the court. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 4237. See Hopk. 112; 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 183; 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 364.

TRONAGE. In English law. A customary duty or toll for weighing wool; so called because it was weighed by a common trona, or beam. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 12.

TRONATOR. A weigher of wool. Cowell.

TROPHY MONEY. Money formerly collected and raised in London, and the several counties of England, towards providing harness and maintenance for the militia, etc.

TROVER (Fr. trouver, to find). In practice. A form of action which lies to recover damages against one who has, without right, converted to his own use goods or personal chattels in which the plaintiff has a general or special property.

The action was originally an action of trespass on the case where goods were found by the defendant and retained against the plaintiff's rightful claim. The manner of gaining possession soon came to be disregarded, as the substantial part of the action is the conversion to the defendant's use; so that the action lies whether the goods came into the defendant's possession by finding or otherwise, if he fails to deliver them up on the rightful claim of the plaintiff. It differs from detinue and replevin in this, that it is brought for damages, and not for the specific articles; and from trespass in this, that the injury is not necessarily a forcible one, as trover may be brought in any case where trespass for injury to personal property will lie; but the converse is not true. In case possession was gained by a trespass, the plaintiff, by bringing his action in this form, waives his right to damages for the taking, and is confined to the injury resulting from the conversion. 17 Pick. (Mass.) 1; 21 Pick. (Mass.) 559; 17 Me. 434; 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 209.

TRUCE. In international law. An agreement between belligerent parties by which they mutually engage to forbear all acts of hostility against each other for some time, the war still continuing. Burlam. Nat. Law, pt. 4, c. 11, § 1.

Truces are of several kinds,—general, extending to all the territories and dominions of both parties, and particular, restrained to particular places, as, for example, by sea, and not by land, etc. Burlam. Nat. Law, pt. 4, c. 11, § 5. They are also absolute, indeterminate, and general; or limited and determined to certain things; for example, to bury the dead. Id. See 1 Kent, Comm. 159; Halleck, Int. Law, 654; Wheaton, Int. Law, 682.

TRUCE OF GOD (Law Lat. treuga Dei; Saxon treuge or trewa, from German treu; Fr. treve de Dieu). In the middle ages, a limitation of the right of private warfare introduced by the church. This truce provided that hostilities should cease on holidays, from Thursday evening to Sunday evening of each week, the whole season of Advent and Lent, and the octaves of great festivals. The penalty for breach of the truce was excommunication. The protection of this truce was also extended constantly to certain places, as, churches, convents, hospitals, etc., and certain persons, as, clerygmen, peasants in the field, crusaders (Clermont, 1095), and, in general, all defenseless persons. It was first introduced into Acquitaine in 1077, and into England under William the Conqueror. Enc. Am.

TRUCK ACT. St. 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 37, passed to abolish what is commonly called the "truck system," under which employers were in the practice of paying the wages of their work people in goods, or of requiring them to purchase goods at certain shops. This led to laborers being compelled to take goods of inferior quality at a high price. The act applies to all artificers, workmen, and laborers, except those engaged in certain trades, especially iron and metal works, quarries, cloth, silk, and glass manufactories. It does not apply to domestic or agricultural servants. Smith, Mast. & S. 166; St. 23 & 24 Vict. c. 151, § 28.

TRUE BILL. In practice. Words indorsed on a bill of indictment when a grand jury, after having heard the witnesses for the government, are of opinion that there is sufficient cause to put the defendant on his trial. Formerly the indorsement was Billa vera when legal proceedings were in Latin. It is still the practice to write on the back of the bill Ignoramus. When the jury do not find it to be a true bill, the better opinion is that the omission of the words "a true bill" does not vitiate an indictment. 11 Cush. (Mass.) 473; 13 N. H. 488. See 5 Me. 432, and Bennett's note.

TRUE, PUBLIC, and NOTORIOUS. These three qualities used to be formally predicated in the libel in the ecclesiastical courts of the charges which it contained, at the end of each article severally.

TRUST. A right of property, real or personal, held by one party for the benefit of another.

The party holding is called the "trustee," and the party for whose benefit the right is held is called the cestui que trust, or, using a better term, the "beneficiary."

Sometimes the equitable title of the beneficiary, sometimes the obligation of the trustee, and, again, the right held, is called the "trust." But the right of the beneficiary is in the trust, the obligation of the trustee results from the trust, and the right held is the subject matter of the trust. Neither of them is the trust itself. All together they constitute the trust.

An equitable right, title, or interest in property, real or personal, distinct from its legal ownership.

A personal obligation for paying, delivering, or performing anything where the person trusting has no real right or security, for by that act he confides altogether to the faithfulness of those intrusted.

An obligation upon a person, arising out of a confidence reposed in him, to apply property faithfully and according to such confidence. Willis, Trust, 1; 4 Kent, Comm. 295; 2 Fonbl. Eq. 1; 1 Saunders, Uses, 6; Cooper, Eq. Pl. Introd. 27; 3 Bl. Comm. 431.

The Roman fidei commissa were, under the name of "uses," first introduced by the clergy into England in the reign of Richard II. or Edward III., and, while perseveringly prohibited by the clergy, and wholly discountenanced by the courts of common law, they grew into public favor, and gradually developed into something like a regular branch of law, as the court of chancery rose into importance and power. For a long time the beneficiary, or cestui que trust, was without adequate protection; but the statute of uses, passed in 27 Henry VIII., gave adequate protection to the interests of the cestui que trust. Prior to this statute, the terms "use" and "trust" were used, if not indiscriminately, at least without accurate distinction between them. The distinction, so far as there was one, was between passive uses, where the feoffee had no active duties imposed on him, and active trusts, where the feoffee had something to do in connection with the estate. The statute of uses sought to unite the seisin with the use, making no distinction between uses and trusts, the result being that, by a strict construction, both uses and trusts were finally taken out of its intended operation, and were both included under the term "trust." The statute was passed in 1538; but trusts did not become settled on their present basis till Lord Nottingham's time, in 1676. 2 Washb. Real Prop. Index, "Trust;" 1 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 338.

(1) Trusts are either active, being those in which the trustee has some duty to perform, or passive (sometimes called "dry"), which require the performance of no duty by the trustee, but by force of which the legal title merely rests in the trustee.

(2) Trusts are either executed or executory, executed trusts being those fully declared by the person creating it, so that nothing need be done to make it complete, while an executory trust is one requiring some further act to complete the intention of the creator, as a conveyance to B. in trust to convey to C.

(3) Trusts are either for value or voluntary, accordingly as they are or are not based on a valuable consideration.

(4) Trusts are public or private, accordingly as their object is for the general public good, or for the benefit of certain individuals.

(5) Trusts are, as to the manner of their creation, either express or implied.

Express trusts are those which are created in express terms in the deed, writing, or will. The terms to create an express trust will be sufficient if it can be fairly collected upon the face of the instrument that a trust was intended. Express trusts are usually found in preliminary sealed agreements, such as marriage articles, or articles for the purchase of land; in formal conveyances, such as marriage settlements, terms for years, mortgages, assignments for the payment of debts, raising portions, or other purposes; and in wills and testaments, when the bequests involve fiduciary interests for private benefit or public charity. They may be created even by parol. 6 Watts & S. (Pa.) 97.

Implied trusts are those which, without being expressed, are deducible from the nature of the transaction as matters of intent, or which are superinduced upon the transaction by operation of law, as matters of equity, independently of the particular intention of the parties. The term is used in this general sense, including constructive and resulting trusts, and also in a more restricted sense, excluding those classes.

TRUST DEED. A form of mortgage in use in Missouri and some other states, and in the District of Columbia. A deed is made in trust with a power of sale, and the power is exercised for the mortgagee's benefit. Similar deeds are frequently made by railroad companies or other corporations to secure bond issues where of necessity the creditors secured are very numerous.

TRUSTEE. A person in whom some estate, interest, or power in or affecting property of any description is vested for the benefit of another.

One to whom property has been conveyed to be held or managed for another.

——In Scotch Law. He who creates a trust.

TRUSTEE ACTS. Sts. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 55, passed to enable the court of chancery (now the high court of justice, on petition presented in the chancery division) to appoint new trustees of a settlement, will, or other instrument creating a trust, whenever a trustee's death, lunacy, absence or refusal to act, or other reason, makes it necessary to apply to the court. In other words, when the power of appointing new trustees contained in the instrument, or provided by statute, cannot be exercised. They also empower the court, where property is held upon trust or mortgage by a lunatic or person of unsound mind, or out of the jurisdiction of the court, to transfer it by a vesting order (q. v.) to some other person, or to make an order appointing some person to execute a deed in the place of a trustee or mortgagee, so as to give it the same effect as if the trustee or mortgagee had executed it. Lewin, Trusts; Shelf. R. P. St. 647; Daniell, Ch. Prac. 1798; Pope, Lun. 263. See "Petition."

TRUSTEE EX MALEFICIO. One who, by reason of his own wrong or fraud in acquiring property, is regarded as holding it as a trustee for the purpose of rectifying the wrong.

TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY. A trustee in bankruptcy is a person in whom the property of a bankrupt is vested in trust for the creditors, not for the bankrupt. 10 Ch. Div. 388, 434. His duty is to discover, realize, and distribute it among the creditors, and for that purpose to examine the bankrupt's property, accounts, etc., to investigate proofs made by creditors, and to admit, reject, expunge, or reduce them, according to circumstances. He also has to keep various accounts of his dealings with the property, and of the course of the bankruptcy, which are audited by the committee of inspection and the comptroller in bankruptcy. Robson, 488.

TRUSTEE PROCESS. In practice. A means of reaching goods, property, and credits of a debtor in the hands of third persons, for the benefit of an attaching creditor.

It is a process, so called, in the New England states, and similar to the garnishee process of others. It is a process given by statute 15 of the statutes of Massachusetts. All goods, effects, and credits so intrusted or deposited in the hands of others that the same cannot be attached by ordinary process of law may by an original writ of process, the form of which is given by the statute, be attached in whose hands or possession soever they may be found, and they shall, from the service of the writ, stand bound and be held to satisfy such judgment as the plaintiff may recover against the principal defendant. Cushing, Trustee Process, 2.

The trustees, on suing out and service of the process, according to statute, and its entry in court, may come into court and be examined on oath as to property of the principal in their hands. If the plaintiff recovers against the principal, and there are any trustees who have not discharged themselves under oath, he shall have execution against them. Cushing, Trustee Process, 4; 2 Kent, Comm. (8th Ed.) 497, note.

TRUSTEE RELIEF ACTS. In England, if a person has in his hands a sum of money subject to a trust, and he does not know who is beneficially entitled to it, he may, instead of incurring the responsibility of paying it to the wrong person, or of instituting an action for the execution of the trust, pay it into court under the trustee relief acts (10 & 11 Vict. c. 96, and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 74).

TRUSTOR. A word occasionally, though rarely, used as a designation of the creator, donor, or founder of a trust.

TUMBREL. An instrument of punishment made use of by the Saxons, chiefly for the correction of scolding women by ducking them in water, consisting of a stool or chair fixed to the end of a long pole.

TUMULTUOUS PETITIONING. By St. 13 Car. II. st. 1, c. 5, signing of more than twenty names to any petition to the crown or either house of parliament for the alteration of matters established by law in church or state, unless the contents thereof had been approved by three justices, or the majority of the grand jury at assizes or quarter sessions, or the delivery of a petition by more than ten persons. 4 Steph. Comm. 255.

TUN. A measure of wine or oil, containing four hogsheads.

TUNGREVE (Saxon tungaraeva, i. e., villae praepositus). A reeve or bailiff. Spelman; Cowell.

One who in estates, which we call "manors," sustains the character of master, and in his stead disposes and arranges everything. Qui in villis (quae dicimus maneriis) domini personam sustinet, ejusque vice omnia disponit atque moderatur.

TURBA (Lat.) In the civil law. A multitude; a crowd or mob; a tumultuous assembly of persons. Said to consist of ten or fifteen, at the least. Dig. 47. 8. 4. 2. 3; Calv. Lex.

TURBARY. In English law. A right to dig turf; an easement.

TURN, or TOURN. The great court leet of the county, as the old county court was the court baron. Of this the sheriff is judge, and the court is incident to his office; wherefore it is called the "sheriff's tourn," and it had its name originally from the sheriff making a turn or circuit about his shire, and holding this court in each respective hundred. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 10.

TURNKEY. A person under the superintendence of a jailer, whose employment is to open and fasten the prison doors, and to prevent the prisoners from escaping.

It is his duty to use due diligence; and he may be punished for gross neglect or willful misconduct in permitting prisoners to escape.

TURNPIKE. A gate set across a road, to stop travellers and carriages until toll is paid for passage thereon. In the United States, turnpike roads are often called "turnpikes," just as mail coach, hackney coach, stage coach, are shortened to mail, hack, and stage. Enc. Am.

TURNPIKE ROAD. A road or highway over which the public have the right to travel upon payment of toll, and on which the parties entitled to such toll have the right to erect gates and bars to insure its payment. 6 Mees. & W. 428; 1 Ry. Cas. 665; 22 Eng. Law & Eq. 113; 16 Pick. (Mass.) 175; 8 Barb (N. Y.) 492.

TURPIS CAUSA (Lat.) A base or vile consideration, forbidden by law, which makes the contract void; as, a contract the consideration of which is the future illegal cohabitation of the obligee with the obligor.

TURPIS EST PARS QUAE NON CONVENit cum suo toto. That part is bad which accords not with its whole. Plowd. 161.

TURPITUDE (Lat. turpitudo, from turpis, base). Everything done contrary to justice, honesty, modesty, or good morals is said to be done with turpitude.

TURPITUDO (Lat.) Turpitude.

TUTA EST CUSTODIA QUAE SIBIMET creditur. That guardianship is secure which trusts to itself alone. Hob. 340.

TUTELA (Lat.) A power given by the civil law over a free person to defend him, when, by reason of his age, he is unable to defend himself. Women, by the civil law, could only be tutors of their own children. A child under the power of his father was not subject to tutelage, because not a free person, caput liberum. D. lib. 26, tit. 1, ff. de tutelis; Inst. lib. 1, tit. 13, de tutelis; Inst. lib. 3, tit. 28, de obligationibus quae ex quasi cont. nascuntur. Nov. 72. 94. 155. 118.

Tutela legitima was where the tutor was appointed by the magistrate. Leg. 1, D. ff. de leg. tut.

Tutela testamentaria was where the tutor was appointed by will. D. lib. 26, tit. 2, ff. de testament. tut.; C. lib. 5, tit. 28, de testament. tut.; Inst. lib. 1, tit. 14, qui testamento tatores dari possunt.

TUTELA LEGITIMA (Lat.) In the civil law. Legal tutelage; tutelage created by act of law, as where none had been created by testament. Inst. 1. 15. pr.

TUTELA TESTAMENTARIA (Lat.) In the civil law. Testamentary tutelage or guardianship; that kind of tutelage which was created by will. Calv. Lex.

TUTELAE ACTIO (Lat.) In the civil law. An action of tutelage; an action which lay for a ward or pupil, on the termination of tutelage, against the tutor or guardian, to compel an account. Calv. Lex.

TUTELAGE. Guardianship; state of being under a guardian.

TUTELAM REDDERE (Lat.) In the civil law. To render an account of tutelage. Calv. Lex. Tutelam reposcere, to demand an account of tutelage.

TUTEUR OFFICIEUX. In French law, a person over fifty years of age may be appointed a tutor of this sort to a child over fifteen years of age, with the consent of the parents of such child, or (in their default) the conseil de famille. The duties which such a tutor becomes subject to are analogous to those in English law of a person who puts himself in loco parentis to any one. Brown. See "In Loco Parentis."

TUTEUR SUBROGE. In French law, in the case of an infant under guardianship, a second guardian is appointed to him, the duties of the latter (who is called the "subroge tuteur") only arising where the interests of the infant and his principal guardian are in conflict. Code Nap. 420; Brown.

TUTIUS ERRATUR EX PARTE MITIORI. It is safer to err on the side of mercy. 3 Inst. 220.

TUTIUS SEMPER EST ERRARE ACquietando, quam in puniendo; ex parte misericordia quam ex parte justitia. It is always safer to err in acquitting than punishing; on the side of mercy than on the side of justice. Branch, Princ.; 2 Hale, P. C. 290.

TUTOR. In civil law. One who has been lawfully appointed to the care of the person and property of a minor.

By the laws of Louisiana, minors under the age of fourteen years, if males, and under the age of twelve years, if females, are, both as to their persons and their estates, placed under the authority of a tutor. Civ. Code La. art. 263. Above that age, and until their majority or emancipation, they are placed under the authority of a curator. Id.

TUTOR ALIENUS (Lat.) In English law. The name given to a stranger who enters into the lands of an infant within the age of fourteen and takes the profits.

He may be called to an account by the infant, and be charged as guardian in socage. Litt. § 124; Co. Litt. 89b, 90a; Harg. Law Tr. note 1.

TUTOR PROPRIUS (Lat.) The name given to one who is rightly a guardian in socage, in contradistinction to a tutor alienus.

TUTORSHIP. The power which an individual, sui juris, has to take care of the person of one who is unable to take care of himself. Tutorship differs from curatorship.

TUTRIX (Lat.) A woman who is appointed to the office of a tutor.

ULTRA. In Latin phrases. Beyond; outside of.

ULTRA MARE (Lat. beyond sea). One of the old essoins or excuses for not appearing in court at the return of process. Bracton, fol. 338.

ULTRA POSSE NON POTEST ESSE, ET vice versa. What is beyond possibility cannot exist, and the reverse, what cannot exist is not possible. Wingate, Max. 100.

ULTRA REPRISES. After deductions.

ULTRA VIRES (Lat.) The modern technical designation, in the law of corporations, of acts beyond the scope of their powers, as defined by their charters or acts of incorporation.

It was early contended that a corporation could not exceed its powers; that the acts of its agents beyond the charter powers of the corporation were not the acts of the corporation; but it is now well settled that "corporations, like natural persons, have power and capacity to do wrong. They may, in their dealings and contracts, break over the liability imposed upon them by their charters, and when they do so, their exemption from liability cannot be claimed on the mere ground that they have no attributes or faculties which render it possible for them thus to act." 119 Ind. 324.

There is much conflict in the cases as to the validity of an ultra vires contract. In some states, it is held that, if the corporation had no authority to make the contract, it is void, but if it was within the general scope of the corporate power, and the want of power in that case was because of particular facts, it is valid (43 Wis. 420; 8 Ohio, 257); while in several states it is held that "the plea of ultra vires should not prevail, whether it is imposed for or against the corporation, when it would not advance justice, but, on the contrary, would accomplish a legal wrong (63 N. Y. 62; 151 Ill. 531).

ULTRONEUS WITNESS. In Scotch law. A witness who offers his testimony without being regularly cited. The objection only goes to his credibility, and may be removed by a citation at any time before the witness is sworn. See Bell, Dict. "Evidence."

UMPIRAGE. The decision of an umpire. This word is used for the judgment of an umpire, as the word "award" is employed to designate that of arbitrators.

UMPIRE. A person selected by two or more arbitrators who cannot agree as to the subject matter referred to them, for the purpose of deciding the matter in dispute. Sometimes the term is applied to a single arbitrator selected by the parties themselves. Kyd, Awards, 6, 75, 77; Caldwell, Abr. 38; Dane, Abr. Index; 3 Viner, Abr. 93; Comyn, Dig. "Arbitrament" (F); 4 Dall. (U. S.) 271, 432; 4 Scott, N. S. 378; Bouv. Inst. Index.

UN NE DOIT PRISE ADVANTAGE DE son tort demesne. One ought not to take advantage of his own wrong. 2 And. 38. 40.

UNA CUM OMNIBUS ALIIS (Lat. together with all other things). A phrase in old conveyancing. Hob. 175.

UNA PERSONA VIX POTEST SUPPLERE vices duarum. One person can scarcely supply the place of two. 4 Coke, 118.

UNA VOCE (Lat.) With one voice; unanimously.

UNALIENABLE. Incapable of being sold. Things which are not in commerce, as public roads, are in their nature unalienable. Some things are unalienable in consequence of particular provisions in the law forbidding their sale or transfer; as, pensions granted by the government. The natural rights of life and liberty are unalienable.

UNANIMITY (Lat. unus, one, animus, mind). The agreement of all the persons concerned in a thing, in design and opinion.

Generally, a simple majority of any number of persons is sufficient to do such acts as the whole number can do,—for example, a majority of the legislature can pass a law; but there are some cases in which unanimity is required,—for example, a traverse jury composed of twelve individuals cannot decide an issue submitted to them unless they are unanimous.

UNCEASESATH. An oath by relations not to avenge a relation's death. Blount.

UNCERTAINTY. Vagueness or obscurity of language in written instruments.

UNCIA. The twelfth part of the Roman as. Dess. Dict. du Dig. "As." The as was used to express an integral sum; hence uncia for one-twelfth of anything, commonly one-twelfth of a pound, i. e., an ounce. Id.; 2 Bl. Comm. 462, note (m).

UNCIA TERRAE (Lat.) This phrase often occurs in charters of the British kings, and denotes some quantity of land. It was twelve modii, each modius possibly one hundred feet square. Mon. Angl. tom. 3, pp. 198, 205.

UNCIARIUS HAERES. In the Roman law, an heir to one-twelfth of an estate or inheritance. Calv. Lex.

UNCLAIMED DIVIDENDS. In English bankruptcy practice, dividends remaining unclaimed for five years are forfeited to the government (Bankruptcy Act 1869, § 116), but may, upon satisfactory proof of right thereto, be paid over to the creditors entitled (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, § 32). And in chancery, the lord chancellor may, under St. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 98, § 3, order dividends unclaimed for fifteen years to be carried to "the suitors' unclaimed dividend account;" and these, under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 91, are transferred to the public on their indemnity. Dividends not being claimed for ten years on stock in the Bank of England, the stock is forthwith transferred to the government on the like indemnity. Brown.

UNCONSCIONABLE BARGAIN. A contract which no man in his senses, not under delusion, would make, on the one hand, and which no fair and honest man would accept, on the other. 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3848.

UNCONSTITUTIONAL. That which is contrary to the constitution.

UNCORE PRIST (Law Fr. still ready). In pleading. A plea or replication that the party pleading is still ready to do what is required. Used in connection with the words tout temps prist, the whole denotes that the party always has been and still is ready to do what is required, thus saving costs where the whole cause is admitted, or preventing delay where it is a replication, if the allegation is made out. 3 Bl. Comm. 303.

UNCUTH. In Saxon law. Unknown; a stranger. A person entertained in the house of another was, on the first night of his entertainment, so called. Bracton, fol. 124b.

UNDE COGNATI (Lat.) In the civil law.

A species of the bonorum possessio granted to cognates, or relations on the part of the mother. Inst. 3. 10. 1. 2; Dig. 38. 8; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 10, § 724; Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 11, No. 5.

UNDE LEGITIMI (Lat.) In the civil law. A species of the bonorum possessio granted to agnates, or the lawful heirs. Inst. 3. 10. 1. 2; Dig. 38. 7; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 10, § 723; Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 11, No. 5.

UNDE LIBERI (Lat.) In the civil law. A species of the bonorum possessio granted to emancipated children, or the proper heirs of the deceased. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 10, § 722; Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 11, No. 5; Inst. 3. 10. 1. 2; Dig. 38. 6.

UNDE NIHIL HABET. See "Dower."

UNDE VI (Lat. wherefrom by force). In the civil law. The technical name of that species of interdict which was granted to recover the possession of an immovable thing wherefrom a person had been ejected by force. Inst. 4. 15. 6; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 15, § 1303; 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 250, § 253.

UNDE VIR ET UXOR (Lat.) In the civil law. A species of the bonorum possessio granted to a husband or wife, and by which they succeeded each other, on failure of the cognati. Inst. 3. 10. 1. 2; Dig. 38. 11; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 3, tit. 10, § 725; Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 11, No. 5.

UNDEFENDED. In pleading. Without defense or denial. Where judgment passes by default against a defendant, the language in which the default is recorded is that the defendant "says nothing in bar or preclusion of the action, whereby the plaintiff remains therein undefended against the said defendant." Archb. Forms, 336.

UNDER-CHAMBERLAINS OF THE EXCHEQUER. Two officers who cleaved the tallies written by the clerk of the tallies, and read the same, that the clerk of the pell and comptrollers thereof might see their entries were true. They also made searches for records in the treasury, and had the custody of Domesday Book. Abolished.

UNDER LEASE. An alienation by a tenant of a part of his lease, reserving to himself a reversion. It differs from an "assignment," which is a transfer of all the tenant's interest in the lease. 3 Wils. 234; W. Bl. 766. And even a conveyance of the whole estate by the lessee, reserving to himself the rent, with a power of re-entry for nonpayment, was held to be not an assignment, but an under lease. Strange, 405. In Ohio it has been decided that the transfer of a part only of the lands, though for the whole term, is an under lease. 2 Ohio, 216. In Kentucky, such a transfer, on the contrary, is considered as an assignment. 4 Bibb (Ky.) 538. See "Lease."

UNDER SHERIFF. In English law. A person appointed by the sheriff of a county to perform all his ordinary duties in his behalf. Sometimes confounded with a deputy sheriff, but the latter term is properly applicable to those whom the sheriff appoints to execute process in his behalf, and who have no other powers than such as appertain to that particular duty. 1 Bl. Comm. 345, note.

UNDERTAKING. In the primary sense of the word, an undertaking is a promise. In the old books, "undertaker" means a promisor. 1 Salk. 27.

"Undertaking" is frequently used in the special sense of a promise given in the course of legal proceedings by a party or his counsel, generally as a condition to obtaining some concession from the court or the opposite party.

UNDER TENANT. One who holds by virtue of an underlease.

UNDER TUTOR. In Louisiana. In every tutorship there shall be an under tutor, whom it shall be the duty of the judge to appoint at the time letters of tutorship are certified for the tutor.

It is the duty of the under tutor to act for the minor whenever the interest of the minor is in opposition to the interest of the tutor. Civ. Code La. arts. 300, 301; 1 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 462; 9 Mart. (La.) 643; 11 La. 189; Poth. des Personnes, partie prem. tit. 6, § 5, art. 2. See "Procurator;" "Protutor."

UNDERTOOK. Assumed; promised. This is a technical word, which ought to be inserted in every declaration of assumpsit charging that the defendant undertook to perform the promise which is the foundation of the suit; and this, though the promise be founded on a legal liability, or would be implied in evidence. Bac. Abr. "Assumpsit" (F); 1 Chit. Pl. 88, note (p).

UNDERWRITER. In insurance. The party who agrees to insure another on life or property, in a policy of insurance. He is also called the "insurer."

UNDIVIDED. Held by the same title by two or more persons, whether their rights are equal as to value or quantity, or unequal.

Tenants in common, joint tenants, and partners hold an undivided right in their respective properties until partition has been made. The rights of each owner of an undivided thing extend over the whole and every part of it, totum in toto, et totum in qualibet parte. See "Per My et Per Tout."

UNDRES (Saxon). In old English law. Minors or persons under age.

UNDUE INFLUENCE. Any improper constraint, machination or urgency of persuasion whereby the will of a person is overpowered, and he is induced to act otherwise than he would have done. It has been said to imply more subtle influence than "duress" (see Story, Eq. Jur. § 239), but has been held to include threats and violence, in which use it is synonymous with "duress" (33 N. J. Eq. 494). As used in respect to wills, it includes duress.

UNGELD. In Saxon law. An outlaw; a person whose murder required no composition to be made, or weregeld to be paid, by his slayer.

UNICA TAXATIO (Lat.) In practice. The ancient language of a special award of venire, where of several defendants one pleads, and one lets judgment go by default, whereby the jury who are to try and assess damages on the issue are also to assess damages against the defendant suffering judgment by default. Lee.

UNIFORMITY, ACT OF. St. 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4, which regulates the terms of membership in the Church of England and the colleges of Oxford and Cambridge. See St. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 59. The act of uniformity has been amended by St. 35 & 36 Vict. c. 35, which inter alia provides a shortened form of morning and evening prayer. Wharton.

UNIFORMITY OF PROCESS. In English law. An act providing for uniformity of process in personal actions in his majesty's courts of law at Westminster. 2 Wm. IV. c. 39 (23d May, 1832); 3 Chit. St. 494.

UNILATERAL CONTRACT. A contract lacking in mutuality of obligation.

——In the Civil Law. When the party to whom an engagement is made makes no express agreement on his part, the contract is called "unilateral," even in cases where the law attaches certain obligations to his acceptance. Civ. Code La. art. 1758; Code Nap. 1103. A loan of money and a loan for use are of this kind. Poth. Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, § 1, art. 2; Lec. Elm. § 781.

UNINTELLIGIBLE. That which cannot be understood.

When a law, a contract, or will is unintelligible, it has no effect whatever.

UNIO (Lat.) In canon law. A consolidation of two churches into one. Cowell.

UNIO PROLIUM (Lat. union of offspring). A species of adoption used among the Germans, which takes place when a widower having children marries a widow who also has children. These parents then agree that the children of both marriages shall have the rights to their succession, as those which may be the fruits of their marriage. Lec. Elm. § 187.

UNION.

——In the English Poor Law. Two or more parishes which have been consolidated for the better administration of the poor law therein.

——In Ecclesiastical Law. Two or more benefices which have been united into one benefice. Such a union may be made under St. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, passed "to abridge the holding of benefices in plurality," and amended by St. 13 & 14 Vict. c. 98; and under St. 23 & 24 Vict. c. 142, passed "to make better provision for the union of contiguous benefices in cities, towns and boroughs" (in substitution for St. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 127), amended by St. 34 & 35 Vict. c. 90.

UNITAS PERSONARUM. The unity of persons, as that between husband and wife, or ancestor and heir.

UNITED STATES COURT COMMISSIONERS. Officers, more properly "Commissioners of the Circuit Courts of the United States," authorized by Rev. St. U. S. § 627, to be appointed by the circuit court in each district to exercise such powers as may be expressly conferred on them by statute. They have the powers of committing magistrates in respect to federal offenses (Rev. St. § 1014), and other quasi judicial powers.

UNITY. In the law of estates. The agreement or coincidence of certain qualities in the title of a joint estate or an estate in common. It is the peculiar characteristic of an estate in joint tenancy and is fourfold, unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession. In other words, joint tenants have one and the same interest accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at one and the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession. 2 Bl. Comm. 180.

UNITY OF INTEREST. One of the properties of a joint estate; all the joint tenants being entitled to one period of duration or quantity of interest in the lands. 2 Bl. Comm. 181.

UNITY OF POSSESSION. This term is used to designate the possession by one person of several estates or rights. For example, a right to an estate to which an easement is attached, or the dominant estate, and to an estate which an easement incumbers, or the servient estate may become the property of one person, in which case the easement is extinguished. 3 Mason (U. S.) 172; Poph. 166; Latch, 153. And see Cro. Jac. 121. But a distinction has been made between a thing that has being by prescription, and one that has its being ex jure naturae. In the former case, unity of possession will extinguish the easement; in the latter,—for example, the case of a watercourse,—the unity will not extinguish it. Poth. Contr. 166.

By the Civil Code of Louisiana (article 801), every servitude is extinguished when the estate to which it is due and the estate owing it are united in the same hands. But it is necessary that the whole of the two estates should belong to the same proprietor; for if the owner of one estate only acquires the other in part or in common with another person, confusion does not take effect. See "Merger."

UNITY OF SEISIN. The condition which exists where a person seised of land which is subject to an easement, profit a prendre, or similar right, also becomes seised of the land to which the easement or other right is annexed. The term is usually applied to cases where the seisin is that of a tenant in fee simple, and is equally high or predurable in both pieces of land, so that the easement or other right is extinguished by the unity of seisin.

UNITY OF TIME. One of the essential properties of a joint estate; the estates of the tenants being vested at one and the same period. 2 Bl. Comm. 181.

UNITY OF TITLE. One of the essentials of a joint estate; the estate of all the tenants being created by one and the same act.

UNIUS OMNINO TESTIS RESPONSIO non audiatur. Let not the evidence of one witness be heard at all. Code, 4. 20. 9; 3 Bl. Comm. 370.

UNIUSCUJUSQUE CONTRACTUS INITIum spectandum est, et causa. The beginning and cause of every contract must be considered. Dig. 17. 1. 8; Story, Bailm. § 56.

UNIVERSAL AGENT. One who is appointed to do all the acts which the principal can personally do, and which he may lawfully delegate the power to another to do. Such an agency may potentially exist, but it must be of the rarest occurrence. Story, Ag. 18.

UNIVERSAL LEGACY. In civil law. A testamentary disposition by which the testator gives to one or several persons the whole of the property which he leaves at his decease. Civ. Code La. art. 1599; Civ. Code art. 1003; Poth. Donations Testamentaires, c. 2, sec. 1, § 1.

UNIVERSAL PARTNERSHIP. The name of a species of partnership by which all the partners agree to put in common all their property, universorum bonorum, not only what they then have, but also what they shall acquire. Poth. du Contr. de Societe, note 29.

UNIVERSAL REPRESENTATION. In Scotch law. The heir universally represents his ancestor, i. e., is responsible for his debts. Originally, this responsibility extended only to the amount of the property to which he succeeded; but afterwards certain acts on part of the heir were held sufficient to make him liable for all the debts of the ancestor. Bell, Dict. "Passive Titles."

UNIVERSALIA SUNT NOTIORA SINGULaribus. Things universal are better known than things particular. 2 Rolle, 294; 2 C. Rob. Adm. 294.

UNIVERSITAS (Lat.) In the civil law. A corporation aggregate. Dig. 3. 4. 7. Literally, a whole formed out of many individuals. 1 Bl. Comm. 469.

UNIVERSITAS FACTI (Lat.) In the civil law. A plurality of corporeal things of the same kind, which are regarded as a whole; e. g., a herd of cattle, a stock of goods. 1 Mackeld. Civ. Law, 154, § 149; Inst. 2. 20. 18.

UNIVERSITAS JURIS (Lat.) In civil law. A quantity of things of various kinds, corporeal and incorporeal, taken together as a whole, e. g., an estate. It is used in contradistinction to universitas facti, which is a whole made up of corporeal units. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 149.

UNIVERSITAS RERUM (Lat.) In civil law. Several things not mechanically united, but which, taken together, in some legal respects are regarded as one whole. Mackeld. Civ. Law, § 149.

UNIVERSITAS VEL CORPORATIO NON dicitur aliquid facere nisi id sit collegialiter deliberatum, etiamsi major pars id faciat. An university or corporation is not said to do anything unless it be deliberated upon collegiately, although the majority should do it. Dav. 48.

UNIVERSITY. The name given to certain societies or corporations which are seminaries of learning where youth are sent to finish their education. Among the civilians, by this term is understood a corporation.

UNIVERSITY COURT. See "Chancellors' Courts in the Two Universities."

UNIVERSUS (Lat.) The whole; all together. Calv. Lex.

——In Old English Law. The whole; all. Universitatem vestram scire volumus, we will that all of you know. Cart. Conf. 49 Hen. III.

UNJUST. That which is done against the perfect rights of another; that which is against the established law; that which is opposed to a law which is the test of right and wrong. 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. tit. prel. note 5; Aust. Jur. 276, note; Lec. Elm. § 1080.

UNKOUTH. Unknown. The law French form of the Saxon "uncouth," or "uncuth." Britt. c. 12.

UNLAGE (Saxon, from un, without, and lag, law). An unjust law. LL. Hen. I. c. 34, 84; Cowell.

UNLARICH. In old Scotch law. That which is done without law or against law. Spelman.

UNLAW. In Scotch law. A witness was formerly inadmissible who was not worth the king's unlaw, i. e., the sum of £10 Scots, then the common fine for absence from court and for small delinquencies. Bell, Dict.

UNLAWFUL. That to which the law is opposed. It is not strictly synonymous with "illegal," though so used quite often. "Illegal" means positively forbidden, while "unlawful" may include things which are immoral, or against public policy. Sweet.

UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY. In criminal law. A disturbance of the public peace by three or more persons who meet together with an intent mutually to assist each other in the execution of some unlawful enterprise of a private nature, with force and violence. If they move forward towards its execution, it is then a rout; and if they actually execute their design, it amounts to a riot. 4 Bl. Comm. 140; 1 Russ. Crimes, 254; Hawk. P. C. c. 65, § 9; Comyn, Dig. "Forcible Entry" (D 10); Viner, Abr. "Riots, etc." (A).

UNLAWFULLY. In pleading. This word is frequently used in indictments in the description of the offense. It is necessary when the crime did not exist at common law, and when a statute, in describing an offense which it creates, uses the word (1 Moody, Cr. Cas. 339); but it is unnecessary whenever the crime existed at common law and is manifestly illegal (1 Chit. Crim. Law, *241; Hawk. bk. 2, c. 25, § 96; 2 Rolle, Abr. 82; Bac. Abr. "Indictment" (G 1); 1 Ill. 199; 2 Ill. 120.

UNLIQUIDATED DAMAGES. Such damages as are unascertained. In general, such damages cannot be set off. No interest will be allowed on unliquidated damages. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1108.

UNNATURAL OFFENSE. Sodomy or buggery.

UNO ABSURDO DATO, INFINITA SEquuntur. One absurdity being allowed, an infinity follow. 1 Coke, 102.

UNO ACTU (Lat.) In a single act; by one and the same act.

UNO FLATU (Lat.) In one breath. 3 Man. & G. 45. Uno flatu, et uno intuitu, at one breath, and in one view. 3 Story (U. S.) 504.

UNQUES (Law Fr.) Still; yet. This barbarous word is frequently used in pleas, as ne unques executor, ne unques guardian; ne unques accouple; and the like.

UNQUES PRIST (Law Fr.) Always ready. The same as "uncore prist."

UNSEATED LAND. Wild or unoccupied land. See "Seated Lands."

UNSEAWORTHY. See "Seaworthiness."

UNSOLEMN WAR. That war which is not carried on by the highest power in the states between which it exists, and which lacks the formality of a declaration. Grotius de Jure Belli, et Pac. lib. 1, c. 3, § 4. A formal declaration to enemy is now disused, but there must be a formal public act proceeding from the competent source. With us, it has been said, it must be an act of congress. 1 Kent, Comm. 55; 1 Hill (N. Y.) 409. See "War."

UNSOUND MIND, or UNSOUND MEMory. These words have been adopted in several statutes, and sometimes indiscriminately used, to signify not only "lunacy," which is periodical madness, but also a permanent adventitious insanity, as distinguished from idiocy. 1 Ridg. Parl. Cas. 518; 3 Atk. 171.

The term "unsound mind" seems to have been used in those statutes in the same sense as "insane;" but they have been said to import that the party was in some such state as was contradistinguished from idiocy and from lunacy, and yet such as made him a proper subject of a commission to inquire of idiocy and lunacy. Shelf. Lun. 5; Ray. Med. Jur. prel. § 8; 8 Ves. 66; 12 Ves. 447; 19 Ves. 286; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 573; Cooper, Ch. Cas. 108; 2 Madd. Chanc. Prac. 731, 732.

UNTHRIFT. A person of outrageous prodigality.

UNUMQUODQUE EODEM MODO QUO colligatum est dissolvitur. In the same manner in which anything is bound, it is loosened. 2 Rolle, 39.

UNUMQUODQUE EST ID QUOD EST principalius in ipso. That which is the principal part of a thing is the thing itself. Hob. 123.

UNUMQUODQUE LIGAMEN DISSOLVItur eodem ligamine quod ligatur. Every obligation is dissolved in the same manner in which it is contracted. 12 Barb. (N. Y.) 366, 375.

UNUMQUODQUE PRINCIPORUM EST sibimetipsi fides; et perspicua vera non sunt probanda. Every principle is its own evidence, and plain truths are not to be proved. Co. Litt. 11; Branch, Princ.

UPLIFTED HAND. When a man accused of a crime is arraigned, he is required to raise his hand, probably in order to identify the person who pleads. Perhaps for the same reason, when a witness adopts a particular mode of taking an oath, as, when he does not swear upon the gospel, but upon Almighty God, he is requested to hold up his hand.

UPPER BENCH. The king's bench was so called during Cromwell's protectorate, when Rolle was chief justice. 3 Bl. Comm. 202.

UPSET PRICE. In sales by auctions, an amount for which property to be sold is put up, so that the first bidder at that price is declared the buyer. Wharton.

UPSUN. In Scotch law. Between the hours of sunrise and sunset. Poinding must be executed with "upsun" (i. e., while the sun is up). 1 Forbes, Inst. pt. 3, p. 32.

URBAN. Relating to a city; relating to houses.

URBAN SERVITUDES. Servitudes attached to an urban estate, such as the right of support, of drip, of drain, etc. 3 Kent, Comm. 436.

URBS (Lat.) In civil law. A walled city. Often used for civitas. Ainsworth. It is the same as oppidum, only larger. Urbs, or urbs aurea, meant Rome. Du Cange. In the case of Rome, urbs included the suburbs. Dig. 50. 16. 2. pr. It is derived from urbum, a part of the plough by which the walls of a city are first marked out. Ainsworth.

URE (Norman-French; from Lat. opera, a work). "Operation" or "effect." To put in ure, therefore, is to put in operation. See St. 13 Eliz. c. 2, § 1.

USAGE. Long and uniform practice. In its most extensive meaning, this term includes "custom" and "prescription," though it differs from them. In the narrower sense, it is applied to the habits, modes, and course of dealing which are observed in trade generally, as to all mercantile transactions, or to some particular branches of trade. See 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 349.

USANCE. In commercial law. The time which, by usage or custom, is allowed in certain countries for the payment of a bill of exchange. Poth. Contr. du Change, note 15.

USE. A confidence reposed in another, who was made tenant of the land, or terre tenant, that he would dispose of the land according to the intention of the cestui que use, or him to whose use it was granted, and suffer him to take the profits. Plowd. 352; Gilb. Uses, 1; Bac. Law Tr. 150, 306; Cornish, Uses, 13; 1 Fonbl. Eq. 363; 2 Fonbl. Eq. 7; Saunders, Uses, 2; Co. Litt. 272b; 1 Coke, 121; 2 Bl. Comm. 328; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1885 et seq.

A right in one person, called the cestui que use, to take the profits of land of which another has the legal title and possession, together with the duty of defending the same, and of making estates thereof according to the direction of the cestui que use.

Uses were derived from the fidei commissa of the Roman law. It was the duty of a Roman magistrate, the praetor fidei commissarius, whom Bacon terms the particular chancellor for uses, to enforce the observance of this confidence. Inst. 2. 23. 2. They were introduced into England by the ecclesiastics in the reign of Edward III., before 1377, for the purpose of avoiding the statutes of mortmain, and the clerical chancellors of those times held them to be fidei commissa, and binding in conscience. To obviate many inconveniences and difficulties which had arisen out of the doctrine and introduction of uses, the statute of 27 Henry VIII. c. 10, commonly called the "Statute of Uses," or, in conveyances and pleadings, the statute for transferring uses into possession, was passed. It enacts that, "when any person shall be seised of lands, etc., to the use, confidence, or trust of any other person or body politic, the person or corporation entitled to the use in fee simple, fee tail, for life, or years, or otherwise, shall from thenceforth stand and be seised or possessed of the land, etc., of and in the like estate as they have in the use, trust, or confidence, and that the estates of the persons so seised to the uses shall be deemed to be in him or them that have the use, in such quality, manner, form, and condition as they had before in the use." The statute thus executes the use,—that is, it conveys the possession to the use, and transfers the use to the possession, and, in this manner, making the cestui que use complete owner of the lands and tenements, as well at law as in equity. 2 Bl. Comm. 333; 1 Saund. 254, note 6.

A modern use has, therefore, been defined to be an estate of right which is acquired through the operation of the statute of 27 Henry VIII. c. 10; and which, when it may take effect according to the rules of the common law, is called the "legal estate," and, when it may not, is denominated a "use," with a term descriptive of its modification. Cornish, Uses, 35.

The common-law judges decided, in the construction of this statute, that a use could not be raised upon a use (Dyer, 155 [A]), and that, on a feoffment to A. and his heirs to the use of B. and his heirs in trust for C. and his heirs, the statute executed only the first use, and that the second was a mere nullity. The judges also held that, as the statute mentioned only such persons as were seised to the use of others, it did not extend to a term of years, or other chattel interests, of which a termor is not seised, but only possessed. Bac. Law Tr. 335; Poph. 76; Dyer, 369; 2 Bl. Comm. 336. The rigid literal construction of the statute by the courts of law again opened the doors of the chancery courts. 1 Madd. Chanc. Prac. 448, 450.

Uses and trusts are often spoken of together by the older and some modern writers; the distinction being those trusts which were of a permanent nature, and required no active duty of the trustee, being called "uses;" those in which the trustee had an active duty to perform, as, the payment of debts, raising portions, and the like, being called "special" or "active" trusts, or simply "trusts." 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 448.

For the creation of a use, a consideration either valuable, as money, or good, as relationship in certain degrees, was necessary. Crompt. 49b; 3 Swanst. 591; 7 Coke, 40; Plowd. 298; 17 Mass. 257; 4 N. H. 229, 397; 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 210. See "Resulting Use." The property must have been in esse, and such that seisin could be given. Crabb, Real Prop. §§ 1610-1612; Cro. Eliz. 401. Uses were alienable, although in many respects resembling choses in action, which were not assignable at common law. Cornish, Uses, 19; 2 Bl. Comm. 331. When once raised, it might be granted or devised in fee, in tail, for life, or for years. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 455.

The effect of the statute of uses was much restricted by the construction adopted by the courts. It practically resulted, it has been said, in the addition of these words, "to the use," to every conveyance. Williams, Real Prop. 133. The intention of the statute was to destroy the estate of the feoffee to use, and to transfer it by the very act which created it to the cestui que use, as if the seisin or estate of the feoffee, together with the use, had, uno flatu, passed from the feoffer to the cestui que use. A very full and clear account of the history and present condition of the law of uses is given by Professor Washburn (2 Real Prop. 91-156), which is of particular value to the American student. Consult, also, Spence, Eq. Jur.; Cornish, Uses; Bac. Law Tracts; Greenl. Cruise, Dig.

Classification:

(1) A springing use is one limited to arise on a future event, where no preceding estate is limited, and which does not take effect in derogation of any other interest than that of the grantor.

(2) A shifting use is one which takes effect in derogation of some other estate, and is either limited by the deed by which it is created, or authorized to be created by some one named in the deed.

(3) A contingent use is one limited to take effect as a remainder.

(4) Resulting use. Where the use returns to the person who raised it because of impossibility of execution or by expiration, it is sometimes called a "resulting use." 2 Bl. Comm. 335.

——In Civil Law. A right of receiving so much of the natural profits of a thing as is necessary to daily sustenance. It differs from "usufruct," which is a right not only to use, but to enjoy. 1 Browne, Civ. Law, 184; Lec. Elm. §§ 414, 416.

USE AND OCCUPATION. The character of the holding of another's land where there is no lease; also the name of an action of assumpsit by which a recovery is had for use and occupation.

USEE. A person for whose use a suit is brought. See 24 Miss. 77.

USER. The actual exercise of a franchise or incorporeal hereditament. User of a corporate franchise is an acceptance thereof; or nonuser may be a cause for dissolution. An easement may be prescribed upon user continued for the required time adverse to the owner of the land. Nonuser with intent to abandon extinguishes a prescriptive easement.

USER DE ACTION (Law Fr.) In old practice. The pursuing or bringing an action. Cowell.

USES TO BAR DOWER. When a conveyance of land is made in England to a person who was married to his present wife on or before the first of January, 1834, and he wishes to prevent her right to dower from attaching to the land, it is conveyed to the following uses: (1) To such uses as the purchaser shall appoint; (2) in default of appointment, to the use of him and his assigns during his life; (3) in the event of the determination of that estate, by forfeiture or otherwise, in his lifetime, to the use of a trustee during the life of the purchaser, in trust for him; with (4) an ultimate limitation to his heirs and assigns forever. By this means, the purchaser has a full power of alienation, without having a greater estate in possession than an estate for life, to which the wife's dower does not attach, and the intermediate estate of the trustee prevents the remainder in fee simple from vesting in the purchaser in possession, and so becoming liable to dower, by any accidental merger of the life estate. See Williams, Real Prop. 305, and Append. (D). See, also, "Dower."

USHER. This word is said to be derived from huissier, and is the name of an inferior officer in some English courts of law. Archb. Prac. 25.

USHER OF THE BLACK ROD. The gentleman usher of the black rod is an officer of the house of lords appointed by letters patent from the crown. His duties are, by himself or deputy, to desire the attendance of the commons in the house of peers when the royal assent is given to bills, either by the queen or king in person or by commission, to execute orders for the commitment of persons guilty of breach of privilege, and also to assist in the introduction of peers when they take the oaths and their seats. May. Parl. Law; Brown.

USO. In Spanish law. Usage; that which arises from certain things which men say and do and practice uninterruptedly for a great length of time, without any hindrance whatever. Las Partidas, pt. 1, tit. 2, lib. 1.

USQUE (Lat.) Up to; until.

USQUE AD MEDIUM FILUM VIAE (Lat.) To the middle thread of the way. See "Ad Medium Filum;" 7 Gray (Mass.) 22, 24.

USUAL COVENANTS. The usual covenants expressed in a deed are "seisin" or "right to convey," "quiet enjoyment," "further assurance," "warranty," and "against incumbrances." In a lease, the covenant of quiet enjoyment is the only one that is always usual, the question being determined by circumstances and the custom of a locality. Rawle, Cov.; Tayl. Landl. & Ten. § 45.

USUAL TERMS. A phrase in the common-law practice, which meant pleading issuably, rejoining gratis, and taking short notice of trial. When a defendant obtained further time to plead, these were the terms usually imposed.

USUARIUS (Lat.) In the civil law. One who had the mere use of a thing belonging to another for the purpose of supplying his daily wants; a usuary. Dig. 7. 8. 10. pr.; Calv. Lex.

USUCAPIO CONSTITUTA EST UT ALIquis litium finis esset. Prescription was instituted that there might be an end to litigation. Dig. 41. 10. 5; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 801, note; Wood, Civ. Law (3d Ed.) 123.

USUCAPTION. In civil law. The manner of acquiring property in things by the lapse of time required by law.

It differs from "prescription," which has the same sense, and means, in addition, the manner of acquiring and losing, by the effect of time regulated by law, all sorts of rights and actions. Merlin, Repert. "Prescription;" Ayliffe, Pand. 320; Wood, Inst. 165; Lec. Elm. § 437; 1 Browne, Civ. Law, 264, note; Vattel, bk. 2, c. 2, § 140.

USUFRUCT. In civil law. The right of enjoying a thing the property of which is vested in another, and to draw from the same all the profit, utility, and advantage which it may produce, provided it be without altering the substance of the thing.

Perfect usufruct is of things which the usufructuary can enjoy without altering their substance, though their substance may be diminished or deteriorated naturally by time or by the use to which they are applied; as, a house, a piece of land, animals, furniture, and other movable effects.

Imperfect or quasi usufruct is of things which would be useless to the usufructuary if he did not consume and expend them or change the substance of them; as, money, grain, liquors. In this case, the alteration may take place. Civ. Code La. art. 525 et seq.; 1 Browne, Civ. Law, 184; Poth. Tr. du Douaire, note 194; Ayliffe, Pand. 319; Poth. ad Pand. tom. 6, p. 91; Lec. Elm. § 414; Inst. lib. 2, tit. 4; Dig. lib. 7, tit. 1, lib. 1; Code, lib. 3, tit. 33.

USUFRUCTUARY. In civil law. One who has the right and enjoyment of a usufruct.

Domat, with his usual clearness, points out the duties of the usufructuary, which are to make an inventory of the things subject to the usufruct, in the presence of those having an interest in them; to give security for their restitution when the usufruct shall be at an end; to take good care of the things subject to the usufruct; to pay all taxes and claims which arise while the thing is in his possession as a ground rent, and to keep the thing in repair at his own expense. Lois Civ. liv. 1, tit. 11, § 4. See "Estate for Life."

USUFRUIT. In the French law, the same as the usufruct of the English and Roman law.

USURA (Lat. from usus, use). In the civil law. Money given for the use of money; interest. Dig. 50. 16. 121. Commonly used in the plural, usurae. Dig. 22. 1.

Usura centesima, usurae centesimae or usurae asses, twelve per cent. per annum, or one per cent. monthly. The highest rate of interest allowed before the time of Justinian. 2 Bl. Comm. 462, and note (m); Halifax, Anal. bk. 2, c. 15, No. 6; Calv. Lex.

Usurae deunces, eleven per cent. 2 Bl. Comm. ubi supra.

Usurae dextances, ten per cent. Id.

Usurae dodrantes, nine per cent. Id.

Usurae besses, eight per cent. Id.

Usurae septunces, seven per cent. Id.

Usurae semisses, six per cent. Id.

Usurae quincunces, five per cent. Id.

Usurae quadrantes, four per cent. This was the rate established by Justinian. Id.

Usurae trientes, three per cent. Id.

Usurae sextances, two per cent. Id.

Usurae unciae, one per cent. Id.

USURA EST COMMODUM CERTUM quod propter usum rei mutuatae recipitur. Sed secundario spirare de aliqua retributione, ad voluntatem ejus qui mutuatus est, hoc non est vitiosum. Usury is a certain benefit which is received for the use of a thing lent. But to have an understanding [literally, to breathe or whisper], in an incidental way, about some compensation to be made at the pleasure of the borrower, is not lawful. Branch, Princ.; 5 Coke, 70b; Glanv. lib. 7, c. 16.

USURA MARITIMA. Interest taken on bottomry or respondentia bonds, which is proportioned to the risk, and is not affected by the usury laws.

USURA, or USURAE (Lat.) In the civil law. Interest on money. Dig. 22. 1.

USURARE (Law Lat.) In old English law. To pay interest; to carry or be chargeable wth interest. Artic. Magna Cart. Johan. c. 34; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 57, § 7.

USURARIUS (Law Lat.) In old English law. An usurer. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 52, § 14.

USURPATIO (Lat. from usurpare). In the civil law. The interruption of a usucaption by some act on the part of the real owner. Dig. 41. 3. 2; Calv. Lex.

USURPATION. The unlawful assumption of the use of property which belongs to another; an interruption or the disturbing a man in his right and possession. Tomlins.

According to Lord Coke, there are two kinds of usurpation,—first, when a stranger, without right, presents to a church, and his clerk is admitted; and, second, when a subject uses a franchise of the king without lawful authority. Co. Litt. 277b.

——In Governmental Law. The tyrannical assumption of the government by force, contrary to and in violation of the constitution of the country.

USURPATION OF ADVOWSON. An injury which consists in the absolute ouster or dispossession of the patron from the advowson or right of presentation, and which happens when a stranger who has no right presents a clerk, and the latter is thereupon admitted and instituted.

USURPER. One who assumes the right of government by force, contrary to and in violation of the constitution of the country. Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 32.

USURY. The excess over the legal rate charged to a borrower for the use of money. Originally, the word was applied to all interest reserved for the use of money, and in the early ages, taking such interest was not allowed.

USUS (Lat.) In Roman law. A precarious enjoyment of land, corresponding with the right of habitatio of houses, and being closely analogous to the tenancy at sufferance or at will of English law. The usuarius (i. e., tenant by usus) could only hold on so long as the owner found him convenient, and had to go so soon as ever he was in the owner's way (molestus). The usuarius could not have a friend to share the produce. It was scarcely permitted to him (Justinian says) to have even his wife with him on the land; and he could not let or sell, the right being strictly personal to himself. Brown.

USUS BELLICI (Lat.) In international law. Warlike uses or objects. It is the usus bellici which determine an article to be contraband. 1 Kent, Comm. 141.

USUS EST DOMINIUM FIDUCIARIUM. A use is a fiduciary ownership. Bac. Uses.

USUS ET STATUS SIVE POSSESSIO potius differunt secundum rationem fori, quam secundum rationem rei. Use and estate, or possession, differ more in the rule of the court than in the rule of the matter. Bac. Uses.

USUS FRUCTUS. In the civil law. Usufruct; the right of using and enjoying the profits of a thing belonging to another, without impairing its substance.

UT (Lat.) In old English law. That. A particle particularly appropriated to express a modus, or qualification, as si was used to express a condition. Bracton, fol. 18b. Co. Litt. 204a. This shows that modus and conditio had essentially a different import. The use of ut in this peculiar application was taken from the civil law.

UT AUDIVI (Lat.) As I heard. Freem. 5, 19; Bunb. 165; Dyer, 30b. A reporter's note.

UT CREDO (Lat.) As I believe. Dyer, 76b. A reporter's note.

UT CURRERE SOLEBAT (Lat.) As it was wont to run; applied to a watercourse.

UT DE FEODO (Law Lat.) As of fee.

UT POENA AD PAUCOS, METUS AD omnes perveniat. That punishment may happen to a few; the fear of it affects all. 4 Inst. 63.

UT RES MAGIS VALEAT QUAM PEREat. That the thing may rather have effect than be destroyed.

UT ROGAS. See "Rogare."

UT SUMMAE POTESTATIS REGIS EST posse quantum velit, sic magnitudinus est velle quantum possit. As the highest power of a king is to be able to do all he wishes, so the highest greatness of him is to wish all he is able to do. 3 Inst. 236.

UTAS (Law Lat.; Law Fr. utave). In old English practice. Octave; the octave (octava); the eighth day following any term or feast; as the Utas of St. Michael, the Utas of St. Hilary. Cowell; Y. B. H. 9 Edw. III. 4; Dyer, 78 (Fr. Ed.)

UTERINE (Lat. uterinus). Born of the same mother (ex eodem utero). A uterine brother or sister is one born of the same mother, but by a different father.

UTERO GESTATION. Pregnancy.

UTERQUE (Lat.) Both; each. "The justices, being in doubt as to the meaning of this word in an indictment, demanded the opinions of grammarians, who delivered their opinions that this word doth aptly signify 'one of them.'" 1 Leon. 241.

UTFANGETHEF. Literally, an out-taken thief. The privilege of the lord of a manor to punish a thief dwelling outside his liberty for crimes committed therein.

UTI (Lat.) In the civil law. To use. Strictly, to use for necessary purposes; as distinguished from "frui," to enjoy. Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 2, tit. 4, § 415.

UTI FRUI (Lat.) In the civil law. To have the full use and enjoyment of a thing, without damage to its substance. Calv. Lex. Hence "usus fructus" (q. v.)

UTI POSSIDETIS (Lat. as you possess). In international law. A phrase used to signify that the parties to a treaty are to retain possession of what they have acquired by force during the war.

UTILE PER INUTILE NON VITIATUR. What is useful is not vitiated by the useless. 3 Bouv. Inst. notes 2949, 3293; 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 221; 2 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 298; 17 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 297; 6 Mass. 303; 12 Mass. 438; 9 Ired. (N. C.) 254. See 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 93, 94.

UTILIDAD (Spanish). In Spanish law. The profit of a thing. White, New Recop. bk. 2, tit. 2, c. 1.

UTILIS (Lat.) In the civil law. Useful; beneficial; equitable; available. Actio utilis, an equitable action. Calv. Lex. Dies utilis, an available day.

UTLAGATUS. In old English law. An outlaw.

UTLAGATUS EST QUASI EXTA LEGEM positus. Caput gerit lupinum. An outlaw is, as it were, put out of the protection of the law. He bears the head of a wolf. 7 Coke, 14.

UTLAGATUS PRO CONTUMACIA ET fuga, non propter hoc convictus est de facto principali. One who is outlawed for contumacy and flight is not on that account convicted of the principal fact. Fleta.

UTLAGE (Law Fr.) An outlaw. Britt, c. 12.

UTLEP, or UTLEPE (Saxon). In old English law. Escape; the escape of a robber or robbers (escapium latronum). Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 14.

UTRUBI. In Scotch law. An interdict as to movables, by which the colorable possession of a bona fide holder is continued until the final settlement of a contested right. Corresponding to uti possidetis as to heritable property. Bell, Dict.

UTTER. To publish; to pass or give currency to.

——In Criminal Law. The presentation or passing as genuine of a forgery or counterfeit.

To constitute the crime of uttering a forged instrument, the instrument must, with knowledge of its forged character, be asserted to be good, either directly or indirectly, by words or actions. 1 Whart. Crim. Law, § 703; 2 Bin. (Pa.) 332.

The instrument need not be passed; it is enough if it is presented or offered as genuine. 25 Mich. 388; 48 Mo. 520.

UTTER BAR. See "Outer Bar."

UTTER (or OUTER) BARRISTER. In English law. Those barristers who plead without the bar, and are distinguished from "benchers," or those who have been readers, and who are allowed to plead within the bar, as the king's counsel are. The same as "ouster barrister."

UXOR (Lat.) In civil law. A woman lawfully married.

UXOR ET FILIUS SUNT NOMINA NAturae. Wife and son are names of nature. 4 Bac. Works, 350.

UXOR NON EST SUI JURIS, SED SUB potestate viri. A wife is not her own mistress, but is under the power of her husband. 3 Inst. 108.

UXOR SEQUITUR DOMICILIUM VIRI. A wife follows the domicile of her husband. Tray. Lat. Max. 606.

UXORCIDE. A wife murderer; the killing of a wife. It is regarded in law and punished as homicide (q. v.)

V

V. F. An abbreviation of verba fecit (spoke). Tayl. Civ. Law, 564.

V. G. Verbi gratia, for the sake of example.

V. V. B. C. An abbreviation of vous voies bein coment, you see well how. Common in the Year Book. See Y. B. M. 2 Hen. VI. 1.

VACANCY. A place which is empty. The term is principally applied to cases where an office is not filled; and it has been held to include an office newly created, and not yet filled. 108 Mo. 153. As used in statutes, it has been held to include temporary vacancies. 38 Ohio St. 23.

By the constitution of the United States, the president has the power to fill up vacancies that may happen during the recess of the senate. Whether the president can create an office and fill it during the recess of the senate seems to have been much questioned. Story, Const. § 1553. See Sergeant, Const. Law, c. 31; 1 Ill. 70.

There has been much discussion whether a failure to elect constitutes a vacancy; the question generally arising where the governor has power to fill vacancies between the sessions of the legislature, and seeks to appoint after adjournment of the legislature, without agreeing on a selection. The better reason is to the effect that a vacancy exists, and it has been so held (15 R. I. 621; 91 N. Y. 634); but the United States senate, construing section 3, art. 1, Const. U. S., providing, "if vacancies [in the senate] happen by resignation or otherwise during the recess of the legislature," the governor may appoint, has uniformly held that there was no power of appointment in the governor where the legislature had adjourned after a failure to elect.

VACANT POSSESSION. A term applied to an estate which has been abandoned by the tenant. The abandonment must be complete in order to make the possession vacant, and therefore, if the tenant have goods on the premises, it will not be so considered. 2 Chit. 177; 2 Strange, 1064; Buller, N. P. 97; Comyn, Landl. & Ten. 507, 517.

VACANT SUCCESSION. An inheritance for which the heirs are unknown.

VACANTIA BONA (Lat.) In civil law. Goods without an owner. Such goods escheat.

VACATE. To annul; to render an act void; as, to vacate an entry which has been made on a record when the court has been imposed upon by fraud, or taken by surprise.

VACATIO (Lat.) In the civil law. Exemption; immunity; privilege; dispensation; exemption from the burden of office. Calv. Lex.

VACATION. That period of time between the end of one term and beginning of another. During vacation, rules and orders are made in such cases as are urgent, by a judge at his chambers.

VACATUR (Law Lat. it is vacated). In practice. A rule or order by which a proceeding is vacated; a vacating.

VACUA POSSESSIO. The vacant possession, i. e., free and unburdened possession, which (e. g.) a vendor had and has to give to a purchaser of lands.

VADES. In the civil law, pledges; sureties; bail; security for the appearance of a defendant or accused person in court. Calv. Lex.

VADIARE DUELLUM. To wage combat. Where two contending parties, on a challenge, do give and take a mutual pledge of fighting. Cowell.

VADIMONIUM (Lat.) In the Roman law. Bail or security; the giving of bail for appearance in court; a recognizance. Calv. Lex.

VADIUM. In the civil law. Pledge or security.

VADIUM MORTUUM (Lat.) A mortgage or dead pledge. It is a security given by the borrower of a sum of money, by which he grants to the lender an estate in fee, on condition that, if the money be not repaid at the time appointed, the estate so put in pledge shall continue to the lender as dead or gone from the mortgagor. 2 Bl. Comm. 257; 1 Powell, Mortg. 4.

VADIUM PONERE. To take bail or pledges for a defendant's appearance.

VADIUM VIVUM (Lat.) A species of security by which the borrower of a sum of money made over his estate to the lender until he had received that sum out of the issues and profits of the land. It was so called because neither the money nor the lands were lost, and were not left in dead pledge, but this was a living pledge, for the profits of the land were constantly paying off the debt. Litt. § 206; 1 Powell, Mortg. 3; Termes de la Ley.

VADLET. In old English law. The king's eldest son; hence the valet or knave follows the king and queen in a pack of cards. Barr. Obs. St. 344.

VAGABOND (Fr. and Eng.; from Lat. vagabundus, from vagari, to wander). A wandering person; one who habitually goes about from place to place; one who has no settled residence or domicile. Les vagabonds sont les gens sans domicile, vagabonds are people without a domicile. Vattel, liv. 1, c. 19, s. 219. A vagabond is said to be a person who, without travelling in quest of a domicile, has really and truly no certain domicile at all. Phillim. Dom. 23.

In English and American law, "vagabond" is always used in a bad sense, denoting one who is without a home; a strolling, idle, worthless person. Vagabonds are described in old English statutes as "such as wake on the night and sleep on the day, and haunt customable taverns and ale houses, and routs about; and no man wot from whence they came, nor whither they go." 4 Bl. Comm. 169. Rogues and vagabonds are classed together by St. 17 Geo. II. c. 5; 5 Geo. IV. c. 83; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 38; 4 Steph. Comm. 309. In American law, the term "vagrant" is employed in the same sense. See "Vagrant."

VAGABUNDUM NUNCUPAMUS EUM qui nullibi domicilium contraxit habitationis. We call him a vagabond who has acquired nowhere a domicile or residence. Phillim. Dom. 23, note.

VAGRANT. A person who lives idly, without any settled home. A person who refuses to work, or goes about begging. This latter meaning is the common one in statutes punishing vagrancy. See 1 Wils. 331; 5 East, 339; 8 Term R. 26.

VAGRANT ACT. In English law. St. 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, which is an act for the punishment of idle and disorderly persons. 2 Chit. St. 145.

VAGUENESS. Uncertainty.

Certainty is required in contracts, wills, pleadings, judgments, and, indeed, in all the acts on which courts have to give a judgment, and if they be vague so as not to be understood, they are, in general, invalid. 5 Barn. & C. 583; 1 Russ. & M. 116; 1 Chit. Prac. 123. A charge of frequent intemperance and habitual indolence is vague and too general. 2 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 530. See "Certainty."

VALE. In Spanish law. A promissory note. White, New Recop. bk. 3, tit. 7, c. 5, § 3.

VALEAT QUANTUM VALERE POTEST. It shall have effect as far as it can have effect. Cowp. 600; 4 Kent, Comm. 493; Shep. Touch. 87.

VALEC, VALECT, or VADELET. A young gentleman; also a servitor or gentleman of the chamber. Cowell.

VALESHERIA. In old English law. The proving by the kindred of the slain, one on the father's side, and another on that of the mother, that a man was a Welshman.

VALID (Lat. validus). Strong; effectual; of binding force. An act, deed, will, and the like, which has received all the formalities required by law, is said to be valid or good in law.

VALIDITY. Freedom from vices of substance; effectiveness in point of law. It is broader than "form" or "requisites," as they are often applied; "form" signifying only regularity or technical phraseology, while "requisites" imports only positive requirements or essentials, and not matters extraneous to the act or instrument itself.

VALOR BENEFICIORUM (Lat.) In ecclesiastical law. The value of every ecclesiastical benefice and preferment, according to which the first fruits and tenths are collected and paid. The valuation by which the clergy are at present rated was made 26 Hen. VIII., and is commonly called the "King's Books." 1 Bl. Comm. 284*, note 5.

VALOR MARITAGII (Lat.) The amount forfeited under the ancient tenures by a ward to a guardian who had offered her a marriage without disparagement, which she refused. It was so much as a jury would assess, or as any one would give bona fide, for the value of the marriage. Litt. 110.

A writ which lay against the ward, on coming of full age, for that he was not married by his guardian, for the value of the marriage, and this, though no convenient marriage had been offered. Termes de la Ley.

VALUABLE CONSIDERATION. An equivalent in money or value for a thing purchased. See "Consideration."

VALUATION. The act of ascertaining the worth of a thing. The estimated worth of a thing.

It differs from "price," which does not always afford a true criterion of value; for a thing may be bought very dear or very cheap. In some contracts, as in the case of bailments or insurances, the thing bailed or insured is sometimes valued at the time of making the contract, so that, if lost, no dispute may arise as to the amount of the loss. 2 Marsh. Ins. 620; 1 Caines (N. Y.) 80; 2 Caines (N. Y.) 30; Story, Bailm. §§ 253, 254; Park, Ins. 98; Weskett, Ins.; Phil. Ins. See "Policy."

VALUATION ASSESSORS. In Pennsylvania, the assessors who estimate the value of property for taxation.

VALUE. The utility of an object. The worth of an object in purchasing other goods. The first may be called "value in use;" the latter, "value in exchange." It is a relative term, and has no fixed criteria. See 21 Minn. 322.

"Value" differs from "price." The latter is applied to live cattle and animals. In a declaration, therefore, for taking cattle, they ought to be said to be of such a price; and in a declaration for taking dead chattels, or those which never had life, it ought to lay them to be of such a value. 2 Lilly, Abr. 629.

VALUE RECEIVED. A phrase usually employed in a bill of exchange or promissory note, to denote that a consideration has been given for it.

The expression value received, when put in a bill of exchange, will bear two interpretations,—the drawer of the bill may be presumed to acknowledge the fact that he has received value of the payee (3 Maule & S. 351), or when the bill has been made payable to the order of the drawer, it implies that value has been received by the acceptor (5 Maule & S. 65). In a promissory note, the expression imports value received from the payee. 5 Barn. & C. 360. See 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 282.

VALUED POLICY. A valued policy is one where the value has been set on the ship or goods insured, and this value has been inserted in the policy in the nature of liquidated damages, to save the necessity of proving it in case of loss. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1230. See "Policy."

VALVASORS, or VIDAMES. An obsolete title of dignity next to a peer. 2 Inst. 667; 2 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 612.

VANA EST ILLA POTENTIA QUAE NUNquam venit in actum. Vain is that power which is never brought into action. 2 Coke, 51.

VANI TIMORES SUNT AESTIMANDI, qui non cadunt in constantem virum. Vain are those fears which affect not a firm man. 7 Coke, 27.

VANI TIMORIS JUSTA EXCUSATIO non est. A frivolous fear is not a legal excuse. Dig. 50. 17. 184; 2 Inst. 483; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 256, note.

VANTARIUS (Law Lat.) In old records. A fore footman. Spelman; Cowell.

VARDA. In old Scotch law. Ward; custody; guardianship. Answering to "warda," in old English law. Spelman. It had also the sense of "award." Skene de Verb. Sign.

VARIANCE. In pleading and practice. A disagreement or difference between two parts of the same legal proceeding which ought to agree together. Variances are between the writ and the declaration, and between the declaration, or bill in equity, and the evidence.

VARRANTIZATIO (Law Lat.) In old Scotch law. Warranty. Crag. de Jur. Feud. 152.

VAS (Lat.) In the civil law. A pledge; a surety; one who became bail or surety for another in a criminal proceeding or civil action. Calv. Lex. The plural, vades (q. v.), was more commonly used.

VASALLUS (Law Lat.) In feudal law. A vassal; the grantee of a fief; a feudatory. Feud. lib. 1, tit. 26; Id. lib. 2, tit. 2 et passim. Skene writes the word vassallus.

VASLETTUS (Law Lat.) A valet or ward. Cowell; Spelman.

VASSAL. In feudal law. The name given to the holder of a fief bound to perform feudal service. This word was then always correlative to that of "lord," entitled to such service.

The vassal himself might be lord of some other vassal.

In after times, this word was used to signify a species of slave who owed servitude, and was in a state of dependency on a superior lord. 2 Bl. Comm. 53; Merlin, Repert.

VASSELERIA. The tenure or holding of a vassal. Cowell.

VASTITAS (Law Lat. from vastum, q. v.) In old English law. A waste. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 22, § 6.

VASTUM (Law Lat.) Waste; a waste or common lying open to the cattle of all tenants who have a right of commoning. Par. Ant. 351; Cowell.

VASTUM FORESTAE VEL BOSCI (Law Lat.) In old records. Waste of a forest or wood. That part of a forest or wood wherein the trees and underwood were so destroyed that it lay in a manner waste and barren. Par. Ant. 351, 497; Cowell.

VAUDERIE. Sorcery; witchcraft; the profession of the Vaudois. 3 Hallam, Mid. Ages, c. ix., pt. 2, p. 386, note.

VAVASOR or VAVASOUR (Law Lat.) In old English law. The vassal or tenant of a baron; one who held under a baron, and who had also tenants under him.

One who in dignity was next to a baron; a title of dignity next to a baron. Camd. Brit. 109. See "Valvasors." Bracton, in enumerating the various ranks of persons under the king, mentions them in the following order: Dukes, counts or earls, barons, magnates or vavasors, and knights (duces, comites, barones, magnates sive vavasores, et milites). Bracton, fol. 5b. And again, immediately after describing barons, as powerful men under the king (potentes sub rege), he proceeds to a description of vavasors as men of great dignity (viri magnae dignitatis), adding the following etymology of the word: Vavasor enim nihil melius dici poterit quam vas sortitus ad valetudinem, for a vavasor cannot be better described than a vessel or pledge (vas) chosen for strength. Id.

The term vavasor first came into use in England after the Conquest, being another form of valvasor, which was employed in the feudal law of the continent. LL. Gul. Conq. l. 24. As a title of dignity, it occurs as late as the time of Chaucer, but afterwards fell into disuse, and is now wholly antiquated. 1 Bl. Comm. 403. The etymology of the word given by Bracton seems to present vas (a vessel), validus (strong), and sortitus (chosen), as its constituent elements, which is very different from that given of valvasor (q. v.)

VAVASORY. The lands that a vavasour held. Cowell.

VECTIGAL (Lat. from vehere, to carry). In the civil law. A custom or impost upon goods brought into or carried out of a state (quod pro rebus civitati invectis vel evectis publico solvitur). Calv. Lex.

In a general sense, a tax or tribute of any kind, paid for the use of the state. Id. See Dig. 50. 16. 17. 1; Id. 6. 3; Id. 39. 4. See a list or tariff of articles subject to this imposition. Id. 39. 4. 16. 7.

VECTIAGALIA (Lat.) In Roman law. Duties which were paid to the prince for the importation and exportation of certain merchandise. They differed from "tribute," which was a tax paid by each individual. Code, 4. 61. 5. 13.

VECTIGAL JUDICIARIUM. Fines paid to the crown to defray the expenses of maintaining courts of justice. 3 Salk. 33.

VECTIGAL, ORIGINE IPSA, JUS CAESArum et regum patrimoniale est. Tribute, in its origin, is the patrimonial right of emperors and kings. Dav. 12.

VECTURA (Law Lat. from vehere, to carry). In maritime law. Freight. Locc. de Jur. Mar. lib. 3, c. 6, § 7 et seq.

VEE (Law Fr. from veer, to forbid). In old English law. Refusal; refusal to deliver or return a thing. Defende tort et force, et la torcenouse detenue, et le vee des bestes avaunditz, defends the wrong and the force, and the wrongful taking, and the wrongful detention, and the refusal of the beasts aforesaid. Britt. c. 2. Respoyne al vee, answer to the refusal. Id.

VEE DE NAME (Law Fr.; Law Lat. retitum namium). In old English law. Refusal of a thing distrained; refusal to deliver or return a thing taken as a distress; sometimes translated "withernam" (q. v.) Plees de vee de name. Britt. cc. 19, 20, 103.

VEIES (Law Fr.) Distresses forbidden to be replevied; the refusing to let the owner have his cattle which were distrained. Kelham.

VEJOURS. An obsolete word, which signified viewers or experts.

VELABRUM. In old English law, a toll booth. Cro. Jac. 122.

VENIT ET DICIT. In old pleading. Comes and says. Y. B. M. 1 Edw. II. 2. 2 Salk. 544.

VENTE A REMERE. In French law. A sale made, reserving a right to the seller to repurchase the property sold by returning the price paid for it.

The term is used in Canada and Louisiana. The time during which a repurchase may be made cannot exceed ten years, and, if by the agreement it so exceed, it shall be reduced to ten years. The time fixed for redemption must be strictly adhered to, and cannot be enlarged by the judge, nor exercised afterwards. Civ. Code La. arts. 1545-1549.

The following is an instance of a vente a remere. A. sells to B. for the purpose of securing B. against indorsements, with a clause that "whenever A. should relieve B. from such indorsements, without B.'s having recourse on the land, then B. would reconvey the same to A. for A.'s own use." This is a vente a remere, and until A. releases B. from his indorsements, the property is B.'s, and forms no part of A.'s estate. 7 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 278. See 1 Mart. (La.; N. S.) 528; 3 La. 153; 4 La. 142; Tropl. Vente, c. 6; 6 Toullier, Dr. Civ. p. 257.

VENTER, or VENTRE (Lat. the belly). The wife (so applied in matters relating to child bearing). For example, a man has three children by the first and one by the second venter. A child is said to be in ventre sa mere before it is born; while it is a foetus.

VENTRE INSPICIENDO (Lat.) In English law. A writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him that, in the presence of twelve men, and as many women, he cause examination to be made whether a woman therein named is with child or not, and if with child, then about what time it will be born, and that he certify the same. It is granted in a case when a widow, whose husband had lands in fee simple, marries again soon after her husband's death, and declares herself pregnant by her first husband, and, under that pretext, withholds the lands from the next heir. Cro. Eliz. 506; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 15.

VENUE (Law Lat. visnetum, neighborhood. The word was formerly spelled visne. Co. Litt. 125a). In practice. The county in which the facts are alleged to have occurred, and from which the jury are to come to try the issue. Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 102; Archb. Civ. Pl. 86; Cowp. 176; 1 How. (U. S.) 241. In modern practice, it is used as synonymous with "place of trial." See 7 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 462.

The designation of the county in which the cause is to be tried in pleadings and writs. Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (C 20). Generally, in modern pleading, in civil practice, no special allegation is needed in the body of the declaration, the venue in the margin being understood to be the place of occurrence till the contrary is shown. 1 Hempst. 236. See statutes and rules of court of the various states, and Reg. Gen. Hilary Term, 4 Hen. IV.

VERAY. An ancient manner of spelling vrai, true.

In the English law there are three kinds of tenants,—veray, or true tenant, who is one who holds in fee simple; tenant by the manner (q. v.), who is one who has a less estate than a fee which remains in the reversioner; veray tenant by the manner, who is the same as tenant by the manner, with this difference only, that the fee simple, instead of remaining in the lord, is given by him or by the law to another. Hammond, N. P. 394.

VERBAL. Parol; by word of mouth; as, verbal agreement; verbal evidence. Sometimes incorrectly used for "oral."

VERBAL NOTE. In diplomatic language, a memorandum or note not signed, sent when an affair has continued a long time without any reply, in order to avoid the appearance of an urgency which perhaps the affair does not require, and, on the other hand, not to afford any ground for supposing that it is forgotten, or that there is no intention of prosecuting it any further, is called a "verbal note."

VERBAL PROCESS. In Louisiana. A written account of any proceeding or operation required by law, signed by the person commissioned to perform the duty, and attested by the signature of witnesses. See "Proces Verbal."

VERBIS STANDUM UBI NULLA AMBIguitas. One must abide by the words where there is no ambiguity. Tray. Lat. Max. 612.

VERBUM IMPERFECTI TEMPORIS REM adhuc imperfectam significat. The imperfect tense of the verb indicates an incomplete matter. 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 103, 120.

VERDEROR (from Fr. verdeur, from vert or verd, green; Law Lat. viridarius). An officer in king's forest, whose office is properly to look after the vert, for food and shelter for the deer. He is also sworn to keep the assizes of the forest, and receive and enroll the attachments and presentments of trespasses within the forest, and certify them to the swain mote or justice seat. Cowell; Burn, Ecc. Law; Manw. For. Law, pt. 1, p. 332.

VERDICT. In practice. The unanimous decision made by a jury and reported to the court on the matters lawfully submitted to them in the course of a trial of a cause.

(1) A general verdict is one by which the jury pronounce at the same time on the fact and the law, either in favor of the plaintiff or defendant. Co. Litt. 228; 4 Bl. Comm. 461. The jury may find such a verdict whenever they think fit to do so.

(2) A partial verdict in a criminal case is one by which the jury acquit the defendant of a part of the accusation against him, and find him guilty of the residue.

The following are examples of this kind of a verdict, namely: When they acquit the defendant on one count, and find him guilty on another, which is indeed a species of general verdict, as he is generally acquitted on one charge, and generally convicted on another; when the charge is of an offense of a higher, and includes one of an inferior, degree, the jury may convict of the less atrocious by finding a partial verdict. Thus, upon an indictment for burglary, the defendant may be convicted of larceny, and acquitted of the nocturnal entry; upon an indictment for murder, he may be convicted of manslaughter; robbery may be softened to simple larceny; a battery into a common assault. 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 638, and the cases there cited.

(3) A privy verdict is one delivered privily to a judge out of court. A verdict of this kind is delivered to the judge after the jury have agreed, for the convenience of the jury, who, after having given it, separate. This verdict is of no force whatever, and this practice, being exceedingly liable to abuse, is seldom if ever allowed in the United States. The jury, however, are allowed in some states, in certain cases, to seal their verdict and return it into court, as, for example, where a verdict is agreed upon during the adjournment of the court for the day.

(4) A public verdict is one delivered in open court. This verdict has its full effect, and, unless set aside, is conclusive on the facts, and, when judgment is rendered upon it, bars all future controversy, in personal actions. A private verdict must afterwards be given publicly in order to give it any effect.

(5) A special verdict is one by which the facts of the case are put on the record, and the law is submitted to the judges. 1 Litt. (Ky.) 376; 4 Rand. (Va.) 504; 1 Hen. & M. (Va.) 235; 1 Wash. C. C. (U. S.) 499; 2 Mason (U. S.) 31.

The jury have an option, instead of finding the negative or affirmative of the issue, as in a general verdict, to find all the facts of the case as disclosed by the evidence before them, and, after so setting them forth, to conclude to the following effect: "That they are ignorant, in point of law, on which side they ought upon those facts to find the issue; that if, upon the whole matter, the court shall be of opinion that the issue is proved for the plaintiff, they find for the plaintiff accordingly, and assess the damages at such a sum, etc.; but if the court are of an opposite opinion, then they find vice versa." This form of finding is called a "special verdict." In practice they have nothing to do with the formal preparation of the special verdict. When it is agreed that a verdict of that kind is to be given, the jury merely declare their opinion as to any fact remaining in doubt, and then the verdict is adjusted without their further interference. It is settled, under the correction of the judge, by the counsel and attorneys on either side, according to the state of the facts as found by the jury, with respect to all particulars on which they have delivered an opinion, and, with respect to other particulars, according to the state of facts which it is agreed that they ought to find upon the evidence before them. The special verdict, when its form is thus settled, is, together with the whole proceedings on the trial, then entered on record; and the question of law, arising on the facts found, is argued before the court in banc, and decided by that court as in case of a demurrer. If either party be dissatisfied with their decision, he may afterwards resort to a court of error. Steph. Pl. 113; 1 Archb. Prac. 189; 3 Bl. Comm. 377; Bac. Abr. "Verdict" (D, E).

There is another method of finding a special verdict. This is when the jury find a verdict generally for the plaintiff, but subject, nevertheless, to the opinion of the judges or the court above on a special case, stated by the counsel on both sides, with regard to a matter of law. 3 Bl. Comm. 378. And see 10 Mass. 64; 11 Mass. 358. See, generally, Bouv. Inst. Index.

(6) A sealed verdict is one arrived at and delivered, to be returned to the court when it shall again convene after a recess or adjournment for the day, during which the agreement of the jurors is reached. It is inclosed in a sealed packet, and is opened and read at the ensuing sitting of the court, in the presence of the jury. It is permitted by special direction of the court in order to avoid confining the jury for a long period after agreeing, and enables them to separate subject to the duty to attend the opening of the verdict.

VERDICT SUBJECT TO OPINION OF court. A verdict returned by the jury, the entry of judgment upon which is subject to the determination of points of law reserved by the court upon the trial.

VERDIT (Law Fr. from ver, true, and dit, a saying). In old English law Verdict; a declaration by a jury of the truth of a matter in issue, submitted to them for trial.

VEREBOT (Saxon). In old records. A packet boat, or transport vessel. Cowell.

VEREDICTUM (Law Lat. from vere, truly, or verus, true, and dictum, a saying). In old English law. A verdict; a declaration of the truth of a matter in issue, submitted to a jury for trial.

VEREDICTUM, QUASI DICTUM VERITATIS; UT JUDICIUM, QUASI JURIS DICTUM. A verdict is, as it were, the saying of the truth, in the same manner that a judgment is the saying of the law. Co. Litt. 226.

VERGE. "At common law, the coroner of the county had no jurisdiction within the compass of the king's court, which bounds the jurisdiction of the lord high steward of the household, and comprehends a circuit of twelve miles round the residence of the court [wherever held]. This jurisdiction is usually called the 'verge,' within which the coroner of the king's household, or, as commonly called, the 'coroner of the verge,' had jurisdiction over all matters within the duty of a coroner, exclusive of the coroner of the county. A jurisdiction so exclusive, particularly as the king's court was movable, was found to be attended with many inconveniences, * * * and therefore it was found expedient to impart, in some cases, to the coroner of the county, a jurisdiction concurrent with that of the coroner of the verge." Jervis, Cor. 5, 59; Sts. 28 Edw. I. c. 3, and 33 Hen. VIII. c. 12, § 3.

VERGELT. In Saxon law. A mulct or fine for a crime. See "Wergild."

VERGENS AD INOPIAM (Law Lat.) In Scotch law. Verging towards poverty; in declining circumstances. 2 Kames, Eq. 8.

VERGERS. In English law. Officers who carry white wands before the justices of either bench. Cowell. Mentioned in Fleta as officers of the king's court, who oppressed the people by demanding exorbitant fees. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 38.

VERIFICATION (Lat. verum, true, facio, to make).

——In Common-Law Pleading. An averment by the party making a pleading that he is prepared to establish the truth of the facts which he has pleaded.

The usual form of verification of a plea containing matter of fact is, "And this he is ready to verify," etc. See 1 Chit. Pl. 537, 616; Lawes, Civ. Pl. 144; 1 Saund. 103, note 1; Willes, 5; 3 Bl. Comm. 309.

——In Code Pleading. The affidavit of the party, or his agent or attorney, to the truth of a pleading.

——In Practice. The examination of the truth of a writing; the certificate that the writing is true. See "Authentication."

VERITAS (Lat. from verus, true). Truth; verity.

VERITAS, A QUOCUNQUE DICITUR, A Deo est. Truth, by whomsoever pronounced, is from God. 4 Inst. 153.

VERITAS DEMONSTRATIONIS TOLLIT errorem nominis. The truth of the description removes the error of the name. 1 Ld. Raym. 303. See "Legatee."

VERITAS HABENDA EST IN JURATO-re; justitia et judicium in judice. Truth is the desideratum in a juror; justice and judgment in a judge. Bracton. 185b.

VERITAS NIHIL VERETUR NISI AB-scondi. Truth fears nothing but concealment. 9 Coke, 20.

VERITAS NIMIUM ALTERCANDO AMITtitur. By too much altercation truth is lost. Hob. 344.

VERITAS NOMINIS TOLLIT ERROREM demonstrationis. The truth of the name takes away the error of description. Bac. Max. reg. 25; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 571; 8 Taunt. 313; 2 Jones, Eq. (N. C.) 72.

VERITAS, QUAE MINIME DEFENSAtur opprimitur; et qui non improbat, approbat. Truth which is not sufficiently defended is overpowered; and he who does not disapprove, approves. 3 Inst. 27.

VERITATEM QUI NON LIBERE PRONunciat, proditor est veritatis. He who does not speak the truth freely is a traitor to the truth. 4 Inst. Epil.

VERITY. The quality of being very true or real. Webster. Complete and absolute truth. The record of a court of record is said to import verity.

VERS (Law Fr.; from Law Lat. versus, q. v.) In old practice. Against. Excepcions vers le juge, ou vers le pleyntyfe, vers qui il purra dire, exceptions against the judge, or against the plaintiff, against whom he may say. Britt. c. 57.

VERSARI (Lat.) In the civil law. To be employed; to be exercised; to be continually engaged; to be conversant. Versari male in tutela, to misconduct one's self in a guardianship. Calv. Lex. Versari in lucro, to be in gain, or a gainer. Id.

VERSUS (Law Lat.) In practice. Against; an abbreviation of the Latin adversus. Used by Bracton indifferently with contra (q. v.) Actio competit contra eum, an action lies against him. Bracton, fol. 103b. Actio datur versus eum, an action is given against him. Id. Retained in modern practice, in the titles of causes, but commonly in its contracted forms, vs. and v. The French form, vers, frequently occurs in Britton.

VERT. Everything bearing green leaves in a forest. Bac. Abr. "Courts of the Forest;" Manw. For. Law, 146.

VERY LORD AND VERY TENANT. An immediate lord and tenant. Blount.

VEST. To give an immediate fixed right of present or future enjoyment. An estate is vested in possession when there exists a right of present enjoyment; and an estate is vested in interest when there is a present fixed right of future enjoyment. Fearne, Cont. Rem. 2. See Rop. Leg. 757; Comyn, Dig.; Vern. 323, note; 5 Ves. 511.

VESTED IN INTEREST. A legal term applied to a present fixed right of future enjoyment; as reversions, vested remainder such executory devises, future uses, conditional limitations, and other future interests as are not referred to, or made to depend on, a period or event that is uncertain. Wharton.

VESTED IN POSSESSION. An existing right of present enjoyment.

VESTED LEGACY. A legacy is said to be vested when the words of the testator making the bequest convey a transmissible interest, whether present or future, to the legatee in the legacy. Thus, a legacy to one to be paid when he attains the age of twenty-one years is a vested legacy, because it is given unconditionally and absolutely, and therefore vests an immediate interest in the legatee, of which the enjoyment only is deferred or postponed. Brown.

VESTED REMAINDER. See "Remainder."

VESTED RIGHT. A right resting on a perfect obligation. 1 Hill (N. Y.) 324. A fixed immediate right of present or future enjoyment. 24 Miss. 90.

An expectancy (8 N. Y. 110), e. g., an inchoate right of dower (104 Ill. 403), is not a vested right.

There is no vested right in a remedy. 58 Wis. 621; 57 Pa. St. 433; 1 Neb. 419.

VESTIGIUM (Law Lat.) In the law of evidence. A trace, or track; a mark left by a physical object. Vestigia carectae, the tracks of a cart. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 25, § 6.

VESTIMENTUM (Law Lat. from vestire, to clothe). In old English law. Clothing. A figurative expression denoting the character, quality, or circumstance of right, as opposed to the negation or destitution of right, which was compared to a state of nakedness. Possessio est nuda donec ex tempore et seysina pacifica acquiratur vestimentum, the possession is naked until a clothing [i. e., of right] be acquired by time and peaceable seisin. Bracton, fol. 160.

——In Feudal Law. Investiture; seisin. Lord Mansfield, C. J., 1 Burrows, 109, quoting Bracton, fol. 160.

——In Old English Law. The technical form of a contract, requisite to give it effect. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 56, §§ 3, 4.

VESTING ORDER. In English law. A decree passing title in lieu of a conveyance for that purpose. Wharton.

VESTRY.

——In England. A parochial assembly.

——In the United States. A body of men, chosen by the parish of an Episcopal church, to have the care and management, in conjunction with the wardens, of the church's temporal affairs. Webster.

VESTRY CESS. A rate levied in Ireland for parochial purposes, abolished by 27 Vict. c. 17.

VESTRY CLERK. An officer appointed to attend vestries, and take an account of their proceedings, etc. 1 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 122, note; 2 Steph. Comm. 699, note; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 57, §§ 6-8.

VESTRYMEN. A select number of parishioners elected in large and populous parishes to take care of the concerns of the parish; so called because they used ordinarily to meet in the vestry of the church. Cowell.

VESTURA. A crop of grass or corn. Cowell. Also a garment; metaphorically applied to a possession or seisin.

VESTURA TERRAE. See "Vesture of Land."

VESTURE. In old English law. Profit of land. "How much the vesture of an acre is worth." Cowell.

VESTURE OF LAND. A phrase including all things, trees excepted, which grow upon the surface of the land and clothe it externally.

He who has the vesture of land has a right, generally, to exclude others from entering upon the superficies of the soil. Co. Litt. 4b; Hammond, N. P. 151, See 7 East, 200; 1 Vent. 393; 2 Rolle, Abr. 2.

VETERA STATUTA (Lat.) The name of vetera statuta—ancient statutes—has been given to the statutes commencing with Magna Charta, and ending with those of Edward II. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 222.

VETITUM NAMIUM (Law Lat. vetitum, forbidden, namium, taking). Where the bailiff of a lord distrains beasts or goods of another, and the lord forbids the bailiff to deliver them when the sheriff comes to make replevin, the owner of the cattle may demand satisfaction in placitum de vetito namio. 2 Inst. 140; Rec. in Thesaur. Scacc.; 2 Bl. Comm. 148.

VETO (Lat. I forbid). A term including the refusal of the executive officer whose assent is necessary to perfect a law which has been passed by the legislative body, and the message which is usually sent, stating such refusal, and the reasons therefor.

By the constitution of the United States government, the president has a power to prevent the enactment of any law, by refusing to sign the same after its passage, unless it be subsequently enacted by a vote of two-thirds of each house. Const. U. S. art. 1, § 7. When a bill is engrossed, and has received the sanction of both houses, it is transmitted to the president for his approbation. If he approves of it, he signs it. If he does not, he sends it, with his objections, to the house in which it originated, and that house enter the objections on their journal, and proceed to reconsider the bill. See Story, Const. § 878; 1 Kent, Comm. 239. Similar powers are possessed by the governors of many of the states.

The veto power of the British sovereign has not been exercised for more than a century. It was exercised once during the reign of Queen Anne. 10 Edinb. Rev. 411; Parke, Lect. 126. But anciently the king frequently replied, Le roy s'avisera, which was in effect withholding his assent. In France the king had the initiative of all laws, but not the veto. See 1 Toullier, Dr. Civ. nn. 39, 42, 52, note 3.

VETUS JUS (Lat.) The old law; old law. A term used in the civil law, sometimes to designate the law of the Twelve Tables, and sometimes merely a law which was in force previous to the passage of a subsequent law. Calv. Lex. A law principle or doctrine of long standing.

VETUSTAS (Lat. from vetus, old). In the civil law. Antiquity; ancient or former law or practice; the same with antiquitas. Inst. 3. 1. 15.

VEXATA QUAESTIO. A vexed question; a point often discussed, but undetermined.

VEXATIOUS SUIT. A suit which has been instituted maliciously, and without probable cause, whereby a damage has ensued to the defendant.

VI AUT CLAM. In the civil law. By force or covertly. Dig. 43. 24.

VI BONORUM RAPTORUM (Lat.) In the civil law. Of goods taken away by force. The name of an action given by the praetor as a remedy for the violent taking of another's property. Inst. 4. 2; Dig. 47. 8; Heinec. Elem. Jur. Civ. lib. 4, tit. 2.

VI ET ARMIS (Lat.) With force and arms. See "Trespass."

VIA (Lat.) A cart way, which also includes a foot way and a horse way. See "Way."

VIA ANTIQUA VIA EST TUTA. The old way is the safe way. 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 527, 530.

VIA PUBLICA (Lat.) In the civil law. A public way or road, the land itself belonging to the public. Dig. 43. 8. 2. 21.

VIA REGIA (Lat.) In English law. The king's highway for all men. Co. Litt. 56a. The highway or common road, called "the king's" highway, because authorized by him, and under his protection. Cowell. Called also via regalis. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 24, § 8.

VIA TRITA EST TUTISSIMA. The beaten road is the safest. 10 Coke, 142; 4 Maule & S. 168.

VIA TRITA, VIA TUTA. The old way is the safe way. 5 Pet. (U. S.) 223.

VIABILITY (from the French vie). Capability of living. A term used to denote the power a new-born child possesses of continuing its independent existence.

That a child may be viable, it is necessary that not only the organs should be in a normal state, but likewise all the physiological and pathological causes which are capable of opposing the establishment or prolongation of its life be absent.

Although a child may be born with every appearance of health, yet, from some malformation, it may not possess the physical power to maintain life, but which must cease from necessity. Under these circumstances, it cannot be said to exist more than temporarily,—no longer, indeed, than is necessary to prove that a continued existence is impossible.

It is important to make a distinction between a viable and a nonviable child, although the latter may outlive the former. The viable child may die of some disease on the day of its birth, while a nonviable child may live a fortnight. The former possesses the organs essential to life, in their integrity; while the latter has some imperfection which prevents the complete establishment of life.

As it is no evidence of nonviability that a child dies within a few hours of its birth, neither is it a proof of viability if a child appears to be well, and the function of respiration be fully established.

There are many affections which a child may have at birth that are not necessarily mortal, such as transposition of some of the organs, and other malformations. There are also many diseases which, without being necessarily mortal, are an impediment to the establishment of independent life, affecting different parts of the system, such as inflammation, in addition to many malformations. There is a third class, in which are many affections that are necessarily mortal, such as a general softening of the mucous membrane of the stomach and intestines, developed before birth, or the absence of the stomach, and a number of other malformations. These distinctions are of great importance; for children affected by peculiarities of the first order must be considered as viable; affections of the second may constitute extenuating circumstances in questions of infanticide; while those of the third admit of no discussion on the subject of their viability.

The question of viability presents itself to the medical jurist under two aspects,—first, with respect to infanticide, and, second, with respect to testamentary grants and inheritances. Billard, Infants (Translation by James Stewart, M. D.) Appendix; Briand, Med. Leg. 1ere Partie, c. 6, art. 2. See 2 Savigny, Dr. Rom. Append. III., for a learned discussion of this subject.

VIABLE (Lat. vitae habilis, capable of living). A term applied to a child who is born alive in such an advanced state of formation as to be capable of living. Unless he is born viable, he acquires no rights, and cannot transmit them to his heirs, and is considered as if he had never been born.

VIAE SERVITUS (Lat.) A right of way over another's land.

VIANDER. In old English law. A returning officer. 7 Mod. 13.

VICARAGE. In ecclesiastical law. The living or benefice of a vicar, usually consisting of the small tithes. 1 Burn, Ecc. Law, 75, 79.

VICARIUS NON HABET VICARIUM. A deputy cannot appoint a deputy. Branch, Max. 38; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 758; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 1300.

VICE (Lat.; ablative of vicis, place). In the place or stead. Vice mea, in my place. Used in the composition of words denoting a delegated or deputed authority.

A term used in the civil law and in Louisiana, by which is meant a defect in a thing; an imperfection. For example, epilepsy in a slave, roaring and crib biting in a horse, are vices. Redhibitory vices are those for which the seller will be compelled to annul a sale and take back the thing sold. Poth. Vente, 203; Civ. Code La. arts. 2498-2507.

VICE-ADMIRALTY COURTS. In English law. Courts established in the queen's possessions beyond the seas, with jurisdiction over maritime causes, including those relating to prize. 3 Steph. Comm. 435; 3 Bl. Comm. 69.

VICE CHAMBERLAIN. A great officer under the lord chamberlain, who, in the absence of the lord chamberlain, has the control and command of the officers appertaining to that part of the royal household which is called the "chamber." Cowell.

VICE CHANCELLOR. An equity judge who acts as assistant to the chancellor, holding a separate court, from which an appeal lies to the chancellor.

VICE CHANCELLOR OF THE UNIVERsities. See "Chancellors' Courts in the Universities."

VICE COMES (Lat.) The sheriff.

VICE COMES DICITUR QUOD VICEM comitis suppleat. "Vice comes" [sheriff] is so called because he supplies the place of the "comes" [earl]. Co. Litt. 168.

VICE COMES NON MISIT BREVE (Lat. the sheriff did not send the writ). An entry made on the record when nothing has been done by virtue of a writ which has been directed to the sheriff.

VICE COMITISSA (Law Lat.) In old English law. A viscountess. Spelman. Vice comitissa dotissa, viscountess dowager. Com. 185.

VICE CONSTABLE OF ENGLAND. An ancient officer in the time of Edward IV.

VICE CONSUL. An officer who performs the duties of a consul within a part of the district of a consul, or who acts in the place of a consul. See 1 Phil. Ev. 306.

VICE DOMINUS. A sheriff; ingulp.

VICE GERENT. A deputy or lieutenant.

VICE MARSHAL. An officer who was appointed to assist the earl marshal.

VICE VERSA (Lat.) On the contrary; on opposite sides.

VICEROY. One empowered to act in place of the king; as a colonial governor.

VICINAGE. The neighborhood; the venue.

VICINETUM (Lat.) The neighborhood; vicinage; the venue. Co. Litt. 158b.

VICINI VICINIORA PRAESUMUNTUR scire. Neighbors are presumed to know things of the neighborhood. 4 Inst. 173.

VICINIA (Lat. from vicinus, near). In the civil law. Nearness of dwelling; neighborhood; a neighborhood; a neighboring place. Distinguished from confinium, as being applied to urban estates. Calv. Lex.

VICIOUS INTROMISSION. In Scotch law. A meddling with the movables of a deceased, without confirmation or probate of his will or other title. Wharton.

VICIS ET VENELLIS MUNDANDIS. An ancient writ against the mayor or bailiff of a town, etc., for the clean keeping of their streets and lanes. Reg. Orig. 267.

VICOUNTIEL. Belonging to the sheriff.

VICOUNTIEL JURISDICTION. That jurisdiction which belongs to the officers of a county; as sheriffs, coroners, etc.

VICTUS (Lat.) In the civil law. Sustenance; support; the means of living. The word included everything necessary to the support of human life (quae ad vivendum homini necessaria sunt). Dig. 50. 16. 43.

VIDAME. In French feudal law. Originally, an officer who represented the bishop, as the viscount did the count. In process of time, these dignitaries erected their offices into fiefs, and became feudal nobles, such as the vidame of Chartres, Rheims, etc.; continuing to take their titles from the seat of the bishop whom they represented, although the lands held by virtue of their fiefs might be situated elsewhere. Brande.

A chief in the neighborhood of a church or abbey, who acted as its protector. Steph. Lect. 236.

Blackstone, quoting Camden, makes vidame to be a title in old English law, synonymous with that of valvasor. 1 Bl. Comm. 403.

VIDE (Lat.) A word of reference. Vide ante, or vide supra, refers to a previous passage, vide post, or vide infra, to a subsequent passage, in a book.

VIDEBIS EA SAEPE COMMITTI, QUAE saepe vindicantur. You will see those things frequently committed which are frequently punished. 3 Inst. Epilog.

VIDELICET (Lat.) A Latin adverb, signifying to wit, that is to say, namely; scilicet. This word is usually abbreviated viz.

The office of the videlicet is to mark that the party does not undertake to prove the precise circumstances alleged; and in such cases he is not required to prove them. Steph. Pl. 309; 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 42; 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 450; 3 Term R. 67, 643; 8 Taunt. 107; Greenl. Ev. § 60; 1 Litt. (Ky.) 209. See Yelv. 94; 3 Saund. 291a, note; 4 Bos. & P. 465; Dane, Abr. Index; 2 Pick. (Mass.) 214, 222; 16 Mass. 129.

VIDIMUS. We have seen. A species of exemplification of the enrollment of charters, etc. An inspeximus (q. v.)

VIDUA REGIS. In old English law. A king's widow. The widow of a tenant in capite. So called because she was not allowed to marry a second time without the king's permission; obtaining her dower also from the assignment of the king, and having the king for her patron and defender. Spelman.

VIDUITY. Widowhood.

VIE (Fr.) Life. See "Pur Autre Vie."

VIEW. Inspection; a prospect.

Every one is entitled to a view from his premises; but he thereby acquires no right over the property of his neighbors. The erection of buildings which obstruct a man's view, therefore, is not unlawful, and such buildings cannot be considered a nuisance. 9 Coke, 58b. See "Ancient Lights;" "Nuisance."

——In Practice. In most real and mixed actions, in order to ascertain the identity of land claimed with that in the tenant's possession, the tenant is allowed, after the demandant has counted, to demand a view of the land in question, or, if the subject of claim be rent, or the like, a view of the land out of which it issues. Viner, Abr.; Comyn, Dig.; Booth, 37; 2 Saund. 45b; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 435. The term is also sometimes applied to the practice of sending the jury, in the custody of an officer, to the scene of the transaction involved in the action, that they may be the better able to understand the evidence. It may also be ordered in a criminal trial to instruct the jury in respect to the place.

VIEW AND DELIVERY. When a right of common is exercisable not over the whole waste, but only in convenient places indicated from time to time by the lord of the manor or his bailiff, it is said to be exercisable after "view and delivery." Elton, Commons, 233.

VIEW, DEMAND OF. In real actions, the defendant was entitled to demand a view, that is, a sight of the thing, in order to ascertain its identity and other circumstances; as, if a real action were brought against a tenant, and such tenant did not exactly know what land it was that the demandant asked, then he might pray the view, which was that he might see the land which the demandant claimed. Brown.

VIEW OF AN INQUEST. A view or inspection taken by a jury, summoned upon an inquisition or inquest, of the place or property to which the inquisition or inquiry refers. Brown.

VIEW OF FRANK PLEDGE. In English law. An examination to see if every freeman within the district had taken the oath of allegiance, and found nine freemen pledges for his peaceable demeanor. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 7. It took place, originally, once in each year, after Michaelmas, and subsequently twice, after Easter and Michaelmas, at the sheriff's tourn or court leet at that season held. See "Court Leet;" "Sheriff's Tourn."

VIEWERS. Persons appointed by the courts to see and examine certain matters, and make a report of the facts, together with their opinion, to the court. In practice, they are usually appointed to lay out roads, and the like.

VIGILANTIBUS ET NON DORMIENTIbus jura subserviunt. The laws serve the vigilant, not those who sleep. 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2327. See "Laches;" Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 799.

VIGORE CUJUS (Law Lat.) By force whereof. 1 Ld. Raym. 412.

VIIS ET MODIS (Lat.) In the ecclesiastical courts, service of a decree or citation viis et modis, i. e., by all "ways and means" likely to affect the party with knowledge of its contents, is equivalent to substituted service in the temporal courts, and is opposed to personal service. Phillim. Ecc. Law, 1258, 1283.

VILL. In England, this word was used to signify the parts into which a hundred or wapentake was divided. Fortesc. c. 24. See Co. Litt. 115b. It also signifies a town or city. Barr. Obs. St. 133.

VILLA EST EX PLURIBUS MANSIONIbus vicinata, et collata ex pluribus vicinis, et sub appellatione villarum continentur burgi et civitates. Vill is a neighborhood of many mansions, a collection of many neighbors, and under the term of "vills." boroughs and cities are contained. Co. Litt. 115.

VILLAIN. An epithet used to cast contempt and contumely on the person to whom it is applied.

To call a man a villain in a letter written to a third person will entitle him to an action without proof of special damages. 1 Bos. & P. 331.

VILLANIS REGIS SUBTRACTIS REDUcendis. A writ that lay for the bringing back of the king's bondmen that had been carried away by others out of his manors whereto they belonged. Reg. Orig. 87.

VILLANUM SERVITIUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. Villein service. Fleta, lib. 3, c. 13, § 1.

VILLEIN (vilis, base, or villa, estate). A person attached to a manor, who was substantially in the condition of a slave, who performed the base and menial work upon the manor for the lord, and was generally a subject of property, and belonging to him. 1 Washb. Real Prop. 26.

The feudal villein of the lowest order, unprotected as to property, and subject to the most ignoble services. But his circumstances were very different from the slave of the Southern states, for no person was, in the eye of the law, a villein, except as to his master; in relation to all other persons he was a freeman. Litt. Ten. §§ 189, 190; Hallam, View Mid. Ages, vol. 1, 122, 124; Id. vol. 2, 199.

VILLEIN IN GROSS. A villein annexed to the person of the lord, and transferable by deed from one person to another. Litt. § 181.

VILLEIN REGARDANT. A villein annexed to the manor or land; a serf.

VILLEIN SERVICES. Base, but certain and determined, services. 1 Steph. Comm. (7th Ed.) 187.

VILLEIN SOCAGE (Saxon, soc, free, or Lat. soca, a plough). The villeins, from living on one piece of land, came at last to be allowed to hold it by tenure of villeinage, e. g., uncertain menial services. These services at last became fixed; the tenure was then called "villein socage." 1 Washb. Real Prop. 26.

VILLENAGIUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. Villenage; the condition or tenure of a villein; bondage. Glanv. lib. 5, c. 1.

VILLENOUS JUDGMENT. In old English law. A judgment given by the common law in attaint, or in cases of conspiracy.

Its effects were to make the object of it lose his liberam legem, and become infamous. He forfeited his goods and chattels, and his lands during life; and this barbarous judgment further required that his lands should be wasted, his houses razed, his trees rooted up, and that his body should be cast into prison. He could not be a juror or witness. Burrows, 996, 1027; 4 Bl. Comm. 136.

VIM VI REPELLERE LICET, MODO FIAT moderamine inculpatae tutelae, non ad sumendam vindictam, sed ad propulsandam injuriam. It is lawful to repel force by force; but let it be done with the self-control of blameless defense,—not to take revenge, but to repel injury. Co. Litt. 162.

VINCULACION. In Spanish law. An entail. Schmidt, Civ. Law, 308.

VINCULO. In Spanish law. The bond, chain, or tie of marriage. White, New Recop. bk. 1, tit. 6, c. 1, § 2.

VINCULO MATRIMONII. See "Divorce."

VINCULUM (Lat.) A chain; a connected series; a connection or relation. See "Consanguinity."

A bond; a band; a tie. Vinculum matrimonii, the bond or tie of marriage; the matrimonial obligation.

The binding force of law. Obligatio est juris vinculum, obligation is a bond of law, or legal tie. Bracton, fol. 99.

VINDEX. In the civil law, a defender.

VINDICARE (Lat.) In the civil law. To claim, or challenge; to demand one's own; to assert a right in or to a thing; to assert or claim a property in a thing; to claim a thing as one's own. Calv. Lex. To avenge; to punish.

VINDICATIO (Lat.) In the civil law. The claiming a thing as one's own; the asserting of a right or title in or to a thing.

The name of an action in rem, by which a right or thing was claimed. Inst. 4. 6. 15.

VINDICATION. In civil law. The claim made to property by the owner of it. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 281. See "Revendication."

VINDICATORY PARTS OF LAWS. The sanction of the laws, whereby it is signified what evil or penalty shall be incurred by such as commit any public wrongs, and transgress or neglect their duty. 1 Steph. Comm. 37; 1 Brown & H. Comm. 50-1.

VINDICTA. In Roman law. A rod or wand, and, from the use of that instrument in their course, various legal acts came to be distinguished by the term; e. g., one of the three ancient modes of manumission was by the vindicta; also the rod or wand intervened in the progress of the old action of vindicatio, whence the name of that action. Brown.

VINDICTIVE DAMAGES. Exemplary or punitive damages.

VIOL (Fr.) In French law. Rape. Barr. Obs. St. 139.

VIOLENCE. The abuse of force. Theorie des Lois Criminelles, 32. That force which is employed against common right, against the laws, and against public liberty. Merlin, Repert. The term is synonymous with "physical force." 31 Conn. 212. See "Force."

VIOLENT PRESUMPTION. A strong or necessary presumption. 3 Bl. Comm. 371; Burr. Circ. Ev. 60.

VIOLENT PROFITS. In Scotch law. The gains made by a tenant holding over are so called. Ersk. Inst. 2. 6. 54.

VIOLENTA PRAESUMPTIO ALIQUANDO est plena probatio. Violent presumption is sometimes full proof. Co. Litt. 6b.

VIPERINA EST EXPOSITIO QUAE CORRODIT viscera textus. That is a viperous exposition which gnaws or eats out the bowels of the text. 11 Coke, 34.

VIR ET UXOR CONSENTUR IN LEGE una persona. Husband and wife are considered one person in law. Co. Litt. 112; Jenk. Cent. Cas. 27.

VIR ET UXOR SUNT QUASI UNICA PERsona, quia caro et sanguis unus; res licet sit propria uxoris, vir tamen ejus custos, cum sit caput mulieris. Man and wife are, as it were, one person, because only one flesh and blood; although the property may be the wife's, the husband is keeper of it, since he is the head of the wife. Co. Litt. 112.

VIR MILITANS DEO NON IMPLICETUR secularibus negotiis. A man fighting for God must not be involved in secular business. Co. Litt. 70.

VIRES ACQUIRIT EUNDO. It gains strength by continuance. 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 231, 237.

VIRGA. An obsolete word, which signifies a rod or staff, such as sheriffs, bailiffs, and constables carry as a badge or ensign of their office.

VIRGATA REGIA (Law Lat.) In old English law. The royal verge; the verge; the bounds of the king's household, within which the court of the steward had jurisdiction. Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 185. A space of twelve leagues in circuit around the king's palace or residence. Fleta, lib. 2, c. 2, § 2; Id. c. 4, § 2.

VIRGE, TENANT BY. A species of copyholder, who holds by the virge or rod.

VIRGO INTACTA. A pure virgin.

VIRIDARIO ELIGENDO. A writ for choice of a verderer in the forest. Reg. Orig. 177.

VIRILIA (Lat.) The privy members of a man. Bracton, lib. 3, p. 144.

VIRTUTE CUJUS. By virtue whereof. This was the clause in a pleading justifying an entry upon land, by which the party alleged that it was in virtue of an order from one entitled that he entered.

VIRTUTE OFFICII (Lat.) By virtue of his office. A sheriff, a constable, and some other officers may virtute officii apprehend a man who has been guilty of a crime in their presence.

VIS (Lat. force). Any kind of force, violence, or disturbance relating to a man's person or his property.

VIS ABLATIVA (Lat.) In the civil law. Ablative force; force which is exerted in taking away (auprendo) a thing from another. Calv. Lex.

VIS ARMATA. In the civil and old English law. Armed force; force exerted by means of arms, weapons, or anything that can hurt or injure.

VIS CLANDESTINA (Lat.) In old English law. Clandestine force; such as is used by night. Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS COMPULSIVA. In civil and old English law. Compulsive force; that which is exerted to compel another to do an act against his will; force exerted by menaces or terror. Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS DIVINA (Lat.) In the civil law. Divine or superhuman force; the act of God. Dig. 19. 2. 25. 6.

VIS EXPULSIVA (Lat.) In old English law. Expulsive force; force used to expel another, or put him out of his possession. Bracton contrasts it with vis simplex, and divides it into expulsive force with arms, and expulsive force without arms. Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS EXTURBATIVA (Lat.) In the civil law. Exturbative force; force used to thrust out (exturbare) another. Force used between two contending claimants of possession, the one endeavoring to thrust out the other. Calv. Lex.

VIS FLUMINIS (Lat.) In the civil law. The force of a river or stream; the force exerted by the rapidity or magnitude of a current of water.

VIS IMPRESSA (Lat.) Immediate force; original force. This phrase is applied to cases of trespass when a question arises whether an injury has been caused by a direct force, or one which is indirect. When the original force, or vis impressa, had ceased to act before the injury commenced, then there is no force, the effect is mediate, and the proper remedy is trespass on the case.

When the injury is the immediate consequence of the force, or vis proxima, trespass vi et armis lies. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3483; 4 Bouv. Inst. note 3583.

VIS INERMIS. In old English law. Unarmed force; the opposite of "vis armata." Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS INJURIOSA. In old English law. Wrongful force; otherwise called "illicita" (unlawful). Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS INQUIETATIVA. In the civil law. Disquieting force. Calv. Lex. Bracton defines it to be where one does not permit another to use his possession quietly and in peace. Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS LEGIBUS EST INIMICA. Force is inimical to the laws. 3 Inst. 176.

VIS LICITA. In old English law. Lawful force. Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS MAJOR (Lat.) A superior force. In law it signifies inevitable accident.

This term is used in the civil law in nearly the same way that the words "act of God" (q. v.) are used in the common law. Generally, no one is responsible for an accident which arises from the vis major; but a man may be so where he has stipulated that he would, and when he has been guilty of a fraud or deceit. 2 Kent, Comm. 448; Poth. Pret a Usage, notes 48, 60; Story, Bailm. § 25.

VIS PERTURBATIVA (Lat.) In old English law. Perturbative force. Force used between parties contending for a possession; or, as Bracton explains it, where one contends that he possesses the thing, though he has not the right, and the other asserts that he is in possession, since he has the right (ubi quis contendit se possidere cum jus non habeat, et alius dicat se esse in possessione, cum jus habeat). Bracton, fol. 162.

VIS PROXIMA (Lat.) Immediate force. See "Vis Impressa."

VIS SIMPLEX. In old English law. Simple or mere force. Distinguished by Bracton from "vis armata," and also from "vis expulsiva." Bracton, fol. 162.

VISA. In civil law. The formula put upon an act; a register; a commercial book, in order to approve of it and authenticate it.

VISCOUNT (Lat. vice comes). This name was made use of as an arbitrary title of honor, without any office pertaining to it, by Henry VI. for the first time. The sheriff or earl's deputy holds the office of vice comes, of which viscount is a translation, but used, as we have just seen, in a different sense. The dignity of a viscount is next to an earl. 1 Bl. Comm. 397.

VISE. An indorsement on a passport by the authorities, denoting that it has been examined, and that the person who bears it is permitted to proceed on his journey. Webster.

VISITATION. The act of examining into the affairs of a corporation.

The power of visitation is applicable only to ecclesiastical and eleemosynary corporations. 1 Bl. Comm. 480; 2 Kyd, Corp. 174. The visitation of civil corporations is by the government itself, through the medium of the courts of justice. See 2 Kent, Comm. 240.

VISITATION AND SEARCH. In international law. The right of a belligerent to board neutral private vessels on the high seas, or in the waters of either belligerent, and examine their papers and cargo. See Wheaton, Int. Law, § 525; Hall, Int. Law, p. 724.

VISITATION BOOKS. Compilations made out or collected by the heralds in the circuits which their commissions authorized them to make, for the purpose of inquiring into the state of families and registering marriages and descents which were verified to them by oath. They are good evidence of pedigree. 3 Bl. Comm. 105.

VISITER. An inspector of the government, of corporations, or bodies politic. 1 Bl. Comm. 482. See Dane, Abr. Index; 7 Pick. (Mass.) 303; 12 Pick. (Mass.) 244.

VISNE. The neighborhood; a neighboring place; a place near at hand; the venue.

Formerly the visne was confined to the immediate neighborhood where the cause of action arose, and many verdicts were disturbed because the visne was too large, which becoming a great grievance, several statutes were passed to remedy the evil. 21 Jac. I. c. 13, gives aid after verdict, where the visne is partly wrong,—that is, where it is warded out of too many or too few places in the county named. 16 & 17 Car. II. c. 8, goes further, and cures defects of the visne wholly, so that the cause is tried by a jury of the proper county. See "Venue."

VITILITIGATION. Cavilous litigation. Obsolete. Webster.

VITIOUS INTROMISSION. See "Vicious Intromission."

VITIUM CLERICI NOCERE NON DEBET. Clerical errors ought not to prejudice. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 23; Dig. 34. 5. 3.

VITIUM EST QUOD FUGI DEBET, NE, si rationem non invenias, mox legem sine ratione esse clames. It is a fault which ought to be avoided, that if you cannot discover the reason, you should presently exclaim that the law is without reason. Ellesmere, Postn. 86.

VITIUM SCRIPTORIS. In old English law. The fault or mistake of a writer or copyist; a clerical error. Gilb. For. Rom. 185.

VIVA AQUA. In the civil law. Living water; running water; that which issues from a spring or fountain (quae fonte exit). Calv. Lex.

VIVA PECUNIA (Law Lat.) In old English law. Live cattle. See "Pecunia."

VIVA VOCE (Lat. with living voice). Verbally. It is said a witness delivers his evidence viva voce when he does so in open court. The term is opposed to "deposition." It is sometimes opposed to "ballot;" as, the people vote by ballot, but their representatives in the legislature vote viva voce.

VIVA VOX (Lat.) The living voice; oral utterance, as distinguished from written words. Hence the common phrase, viva voce, by word of mouth.

VIVARIUM, or VIVARY (Lat. from vivus, alive).

——In the Civil Law. An inclosed place, where live wild animals are kept. Calv. Lex.; Spelman; A. Gell. Noct. Att. ii. 20.

——In Old English Law. A place in land or water where living things are kept; a vivary. Most commonly in law it signifies a park, warren, or fishery. In the statute of Merton (c. 11) it is taken for a warren and fishery. 2 Inst. 100; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 41, § 2.

VIVUM VADIUM. See "Vadium Vivum."

VIX (Lat.) Scarcely; hardly; rarely.

VIX ULLA LEX FIERI POTEST QUAE omnibus commoda sit, sed si majori parti prospiciat, utilis est. Scarcely any law can be made which is beneficial to all; but if it benefit the majority, it is useful. Plowd. 369.

VOCABULA ARTIS (Lat.) Words of art; "vocables" of art; technical terms. Co. Litt. pref.; 5 Coke, 121b.

VOCABULA ARTIUM EXPLICANDA sunt secundum definitiones prudentium. Terms of art should be explained according to the definitions of those who are most experienced in that art. Puffendorff, de Off. Hom. lib. 1, c. 17, § 3; Grotius de Jure Belli, lib. 2, c. 16, § 3.

VOCARE AD CURIAM. In feudal law. To summon to court. Feud. lib. 2, tit. 22.

VOCATIO IN JUS (Lat.) In Roman law. According to the practice in the legis actiones of the Roman law, a person having a demand against another verbally cited him to go with him to the praetor; in jus eamus; in jus te voco. This was denominated vocatio in jus. If a person thus summoned refused to go, he could be compelled by force to do so, unless he found a vindex,—that is, a procurator, or a person to undertake his cause. When the parties appeared before the praetor, they went through the particular formalities required by the action applicable to the cause. If the cause was not ended the same day, the parties promised to appear again at another day, which was called vadimonium. See Matt. v. 25.

VOCIFERATIO (Lat.) In old English law. Outcry; hue and cry. Cowell.

VOCO (Lat.) In civil and old English law. I call; I summon; I vouch. In jus voco te, I summon you to court; I summon you before the praetor. The formula by which a Roman action was anciently commenced. Adams, Rom. Ant. 242. Voco talem, I call or vouch such a one. The old formula of vouching to warranty. Bracton, fol. 382b.

VOID. That which has no force or effect. "Void" is often loosely used in the sense of "voidable" (q. v.) See 44 Pa. St. 15.

VOIDABLE. That which has some force or effect, but which, in consequence of some inherent quality, may be legally annulled or avoided.

VOIR DIRE. A preliminary examination of a witness or venireman to ascertain whether he is competent.

VOLENTI NON FIT INJURIA. He who consents cannot receive an injury. 2 Bouv. Inst. notes 2279, 2327; Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 245; Shelf. Mar. & Div. 449; Wingate, Max. 482; 4 Term R. 657; Plowd. 501.

VOLUIT SED NON DIXIT. He willed, but did not say. 4 Kent, Comm. 538.

VOLUMEN (Lat. from volvere, to roll). In the civil law. A volume; so called from its form, being rolled up.

VOLUMUS. We will. The first word of a clause in the royal writs of protection and letters patent.

VOLUNTARIUS DAEMON. A drunkard. Co. Litt. 247a.

VOLUNTARY. Willingly; done with one's consent; negligently. Wolff. § 5.

VOLUNTARY ANSWER. In chancery practice. An answer put in by a defendant, when the plaintiff had filed no interrogatories which required an answer.

VOLUNTARY ASSIGNMENT. An assignment made by a debtor in trust for the benefit of his creditors. So called in contradistinction from "compulsory assignments," or such as are made under statutes of bankruptcy and insolvency, or by order of some competent court. Burrill, Assignm. p. 4; 10 Paige (N. Y.) 445; 1 Comst. (N. Y.) 201.

VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE. The transfer of an estate made without any adequate consideration of value.

VOLUNTARY DEPOSIT. In civil law. A deposit which is made by the mere consent or agreement of the parties. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 1054. See "Deposit."

VOLUNTARY ESCAPE. The giving to a prisoner voluntarily any liberty not authorized by law. 5 Mass. 310; 2 Chipm. (Vt.) 11; 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 559; 2 Har. & G. (Md.) 106; 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2332. See "Escape."

VOLUNTARY IGNORANCE. A willing omission to learn or know.

VOLUNTARY JURISDICTION. In ecclesiastical law. That kind of jurisdiction which requires no judicial proceedings; as, the granting letters of administration and receiving the probate of wills.

VOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER. See "Manslaughter."

VOLUNTARY NONSUIT. In practice. The abandonment of his cause by a plaintiff, and an agreement that a judgment for costs be entered against him. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 3306.

VOLUNTARY OATH. An oath taken in some extrajudicial matter, or before some magistrate or officer who cannot compel it to be taken.

VOLUNTARY PAYMENT. That made by free will and choice. Not compelled by process or force.

VOLUNTARY REDEMPTION. In Scotch law. Where a mortgagee receives the sum due into his own hands, and discharges the mortgage, without any consignation. Bell. Dict.

VOLUNTARY SALE. One made freely, without constraint, by the owner of the thing sold. 1 Bouv. Inst. note 974.

VOLUNTARY WASTE. That which is either active or willful, in contradistinction to that which arises from mere negligence, which is called "permissive" waste. 2 Bouv. Inst. 2394 et seq. See "Waste."

VOLUNTAS DONATORIS, IN CHARTA doni sui manifeste expressa observetur. The will of the donor, clearly expressed in the deed, should be observed. Co. Litt. 21a.

VOLUNTAS EST JUSTA SENTENTIA de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri velit. A will is an exact opinion or determination concerning that which each one wishes to be done after his death.

VOLUNTAS ET PROPOSITUM DISTINguunt maleficia. The will and the proposed end distinguish crimes. Bracton, 2b, 136b.

VOLUNTAS FACIT QUOD IN TESTAmento scriptum valeat. The will of the testator gives validity to what is written in the will. Dig. 30. 1. 12. 3.

VOLUNTAS IN DELICTIS NON EXITUS spectatur. In offenses, the will, and not the consequences, are to be looked to. 2 Inst. 57.

VOLUNTAS REPUTABATUR PRO FACto. The will is to be taken for the deed. 3 Inst. 69.

VOLUNTAS TESTATORIS AMBULATOria est usque ad mortem. The will of a testator is ambulatory until his death; that is, he may change it at any time. See 1 Bouv. Inst. note 83; 4 Coke, 61.

VOLUNTAS TESTATORIS HABET INterpretationem latam et benignam. The will of a testator has a broad and liberal interpretation. Jenk. Cent. Cas. 260; Dig. 50. 17. 12.

VOLUNTAS ULTIMA TESTATORIS EST perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention. Co. Litt. 322.

VOLUNTEERS. Persons who receive a voluntary conveyance.

It is a general rule of the courts of equity, that they will not assist a mere volunteer who has a defective conveyance. Fonbl. Eq. bk. 1, c. 5, § 2. And see the note there for some exceptions to this rule. See, generally, 1 Madd. 271; 1 Supp. Ves. Jr. 320; 2 Supp. Ves. Jr. 321; Powell, Mortg. Index; 4 Bouv. Inst. notes 3968-3973.

——In Military Law. Persons who, in time of war, voluntarily enlist in the military service.

Their rights and duties are prescribed by the municipal laws of the different states, but when in actual service, they are subject to the laws of the United States and the articles of war.

VOTE. Suffrage; the voice of an individual in making a choice by many. The total number of voices given at an election; as, the presidential vote.

VOTUM. A vow or promise. Dies votorum, the wedding day. Fleta, 1, 4.

VOUCHEE. In common recoveries, the person who is called to warrant or defend the title is called the "vouchee." 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2093.

VOUCHER.

——In Accounts. An account book in which are entered the acquittances or warrants for the accountant's discharge. Any acquittance or receipt which is evidence of payment, or of the debtor's being discharged. See 3 Halst. (N. J.) 299; 1 Metc. (Mass.) 218.

——In Old Conveyancing. The person on whom the tenant to the praecipe calls to defend the title to the land, because he is supposed to have warranted the title to him at the time of the original purchase.

The person usually employed for this purpose is the crier of the court, who is therefore called the "common voucher." Cruise, Dig. tit. 36, c. 3, § 1; 22 Viner, Abr. 26; Dane, Index. See "Recovery."

VOUCHER TO WARRANTY. The calling one who has warranted lands, by the party warranted, to come and defend the suit for him. Co. Litt. 101b.

VOUS VEIES (VOIES, or VEITZ) BIEN coment (Law Fr. you see well how). Formal words anciently used by counsel in addressing the court. Y. B. T. 1 Edw. III. 9; Y. B. H. 2 Edw. III. 9; Y. B. P. 8 Edw. III. 23; Y. B. M. 4 Hen. VI. 1.

VOX EMISSA VOLAT; LITERA SCRIPta manet. Words spoken vanish; words written remain. A written contract cannot be varied by parol proof. Broom, Leg. Max. (3d London Ed.) 594; 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 571, 572.

VULGARIS OPINIO EST DUPLEX, VIZ., orta inter graves et discretos, quae multum veritatis habet, et opinio orta inter leves et vulgares homines absque specie veritatis. Common opinion is of two kinds, viz., that which arises among grave and discreet men, which has much truth in it, and that which arises among light and common men, without any appearance of truth. 4 Coke, 107.

VULGARIS PURGATIO (Law Lat.) In old English law. Common purgation; a name given to the trial by ordeal, to distinguish it from the canonical purgation, which was by the oath of the party. 4 Bl. Comm. 342.

VULGO CONCEPTI (Lat.) In the civil law. Spurious children; bastards; those who cannot point out their father, or, if they can, have him for a father whom it is not lawful to have (qui patrem demonstrare non possunt, vel qui possunt quidem, sed eum habent quem habere non licet). Dig. 1. 5. 23.

VULGO QUAESITI (Lat.) In the civil law. Spurious children; literally, gotten from the people; the offspring of promiscuous cohabitation, who are considered as having no father. Inst. 3. 4. 3; Id. 3. 5. 4.

VYCINE (Law Fr.; Lat. vicinus). A neighbor. Dyer, 36b (Fr. Ed.)

W

WACREOUR (Law Fr.) In old English law. A vagabond or vagrant. De wacreours per pays. Britt. c. 29.

WADSET. In Scotch law. A right by which lands or other heritable subjects are impignorated by the proprietor to his creditor in security of his debt. Like other heritable rights, it is protected by seisin.

Wadsets, by the present practice, are commonly made out in the form of mutual contracts, in which one party sells the land, and the other grants the right of reversion. Ersk. Inst. 2. 8. 1. 2.

Wadsets are proper, where the use of the land shall go for the use of the money; improper, where the reverser agrees to make up the deficiency; and where it amounts to more, the surplus profit of the land is applied to the extinction of the principal. Ersk. Inst. 2. 8. 12. 13.

WADSETTER. In Scotch law. A creditor to whom a wadset is made.

WAFTORS. Conductors of vessels at sea. Cowell.

WAGE. To give a pledge or security for the performance of anything; as, to wage or gage deliverance, to wage law, etc. Co. Litt. 294. This word is but little used.

WAGER. A bet (q. v.)

WAGER OF BATTEL. A superstitious mode of trial which till lately disgraced the English law.

The last case of this kind was commenced in the year 1817, but not proceeded in to judgment; and at the next session of the British parliament an act was passed to abolish appeals of murder, treason, felony, or other offenses, and wager of battel, or joining issue or trial by battel, in writs of right. 59 Geo. III. c. 46. For the history of this species of trial, see 3 Bl. Comm. 337; 4 Bl. Comm. 347; Enc. "Gage de Bataille;" Steph. Pl. 122, and Append. note 35.

WAGER OF LAW. In old practice. An oath taken by a defendant in an action of debt that he does not owe the claim, supported by the oaths of eleven neighbors.

When an action of debt is brought against a man upon a simple contract, and the defendant pleads nil debit, and concludes his plea with this plea, with this formula, "And this he is ready to defend against him the said A. B. and his suit, as the court of our lord the king here shall consider," etc., he is then put in sureties (vadios) to wage his law on a day appointed by the judge. The wager of law consists in an oath taken by the defendant on the appointed day, and confirmed by the oaths of eleven neighbors or compurgators. This oath had the effect of a verdict in favor of the defendant, and was only allowed in the actions of debt on simple contract and detinue; nor was it allowed to any one not of good character. In consequence of this privilege of the defendant, assumpsit displaces debt as a form of action on simple contracts, and, instead of detinue, trover was used. But in England, wager of law was abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, § 13. And even before its abolition it had fallen into disuse. It was last used as a method of defense in 2 Barn. & C. 538, where the defendant offered to wage his law, but the plaintiff abandoned the case. This was in 1824. If it ever had any existence in the United States, it is now completely abolished. 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 642.

The name (in law Latin, vadiatio legis) comes from the defendant's being put in pledges (vadios) to make his oath on the appointed day. There was a similar oath in the Roman law, and in the laws of most of the nations that conquered Rome. It was very early in use in England, as Glanville distinctly describes it. Glanv. lib. 1, c. 9, 12. See Steph. Pl. 124, 250, and note xxxix.; 2 Inst. 119; Mod. Entr. 179; Lilly, Entr. 467; 3 Chit. Pl. 497; 13 Viner, Abr. 58; Bac. Abr.; Dane, Abr. Index. For the origin of this form of trial, see Steph. Pl. note xxxix.; Co. Litt. 394, 395; 3 Bl. Comm. 341.

WAGER POLICY. In insurance law. A policy without any real interest to support it; a policy in which the insured has no interest, being in fact nothing more than a wager or bet between the parties, whether such a voyage would be performed, or such a ship arrive safe. 3 Kent, Comm. 277, 278. A mere hope or expectation, without some interest in the subject matter, is a wager policy. Id. 275. Mr. Arnould defines a wager policy to be "one in which the parties, by express terms, disclaim, on the face of it, the intention of making a contract of indemnity." 1 Arnould, Ins. 276 (281, Perkins Ed.) Policies of this kind are now generally held to be illegal. Id. 285 (289); 1 Duer, Ins. 93-95, 154, 155.

WAGERING CONTRACTS. See "Gambling Contract."

WAGES. A compensation given to a hired person for manual or other inferior services.

The term "wages" does not include "salary," and the term "wages earned" is an apt expression in regard to laborers who are only entitled to pay for services actually rendered, but is entirely inappropriate when used concerning public officers or clerks who receive annual salaries, which are not due until the end of the year, and who are entitled to be paid so long as they hold their offices, without regard to the services rendered. 25 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 368. See "Salary."

WAIFS. Stolen goods waived or scattered by a thief in his flight in order to effect his escape.

Such goods, by the English common law, belong to the king. 1 Bl. Comm. 296; 5 Coke, 109; Cro. Eliz. 694. This prerogative has never been adopted here against the true owner, and never put in practice against the finder, though against him there would be better reason for adopting it. 2 Kent, Comm. 292. See Comyn, Dig.; 1 Brown, Civ. Law, 239, note.

WAIN BOTE. Timber for wagons or

WAINABLE. In old records. That may be plowed or manured; tillable. Cowell; Blount.

WAINAGE. In old English law. The team and instruments of husbandry belonging to a countryman, and especially to a villein who was required to perform agricultural services.

WAINAGIUM (Saxon woeg; Lat. vagina). What is necessary to the farmer for the cultivation of his land. Barr. Obs. St. p. 12; Magna Charta, c. 14. According to Selden and Lord Bacon, it is not the same as contenementum, used in the same chapter of Magna Charta, meaning the power of entertaining guests, or countenance, as common people say.

WAITING CLERKS. Officers whose duty it formerly was to wait in attendance upon the court of chancery. The office was abolished in 1842 by St. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103. Mozley & W.

WAIVE. A term applied to a woman as "outlaw" is applied to a man. A man is an outlaw; a woman is a waive. Crabb.

To abandon or forsake a right.

To abandon without right; as, "if the felon waives,—that is, leaves any goods in his flight from those who either pursue him, or are apprehended by him so to do,—he forfeits them, whether they be his own goods, or goods stolen by him." Bac. Abr. "Forfeiture" (B).

WAIVER. The voluntary surrender and relinquishment of a right. 29 Minn. 191.

It is a somewhat narrower term than "abandonment" (q. v.), and is applied to rights, not to property.

To constitute a waiver proper, there must ordinarily be a valuable consideration (75 N. Y. 453), a full knowledge of the right to be waived (48 N. Y. 399), and an actual intent to waive (15 Gray [Mass.] 229); but where there are circumstances of estoppel, i. e., where a party has misled another to his prejudice as to intent to insist on a right, it amounts to a waiver, irrespective of intent (7 Lea [Tenn.] 467) or consideration (30 N. Y. 164); and there are certain acts to which the law imputes the character of a waiver, irrespective of intent, as the right to a dilatory plea is waived by pleading to the merits (29 Conn. 82).

Unless affected by the statute of frauds (9 Wend. [N. Y.] 79), no special formalities are required, and even a writing under seal may be waived by parol (101 U. S. 527).

WAKEMAN. The chief magistrate of Ripon, in Yorkshire. Camd. Brit.

WAKENING. In Scotch law. The revival of an action.

An action is said to sleep when it lies over, not insisted on for a year, in which case it is suspended. Ersk. Inst. 4. 1. 33. With us a revival is by scire facias.

WALAPAUZ (Lomb.) In old Lombardic law. The disguising the head or face, with the intent of committing a theft. LL. Longobard, tit. 15, cap. ult.

WALESCHERY. The being a Welshman. Spelman.

WALISCUS. In Saxon law. A servant or any ministerial officer. Cowell.

WALKERS. Foresters who have the care of a certain space of ground assigned to them. Cowell.

WALLA, or WALLIA (Law Lat.; from Saxon wal; Lat. vallum). In old English law. A bank of earth cast up for a mound, or boundary; a wall; a sea wall. 2 Mon. Angl. 920; Cowell; Spelman, voc. Wallia.

WAND OF PEACE. In Scotch law. The wand which the messenger carries along with his blazon, in executing a caption, and with which he touches the prisoner. A sliding along this staff of a movable ring, or the breaking of the staff, is a protest that the officer has been resisted or deforced. Burton, Law Scot. p. 572; Bell, Dict. "Imprisonment."

WANG (Saxon). In old English law. A field. Blount.

The cheek or jaw wherein the teeth are set. "Hence, with Chaucer," says Blount, "we call the cheek teeth or grinders 'wangs' and 'wang teeth,' which is also notified in that old way of sealing writings:

'And in witness that this is sooth,
I bite the wax with my wang tooth.'"

WANLASS. An ancient customary tenure of lands; i. e., to drive deer to a stand, that the lord may have a shot. Blount, Ten. 140.

WANTON. Reckless; disregarding the rights of others. See 14 Tex. App. 201. It is not synonymous with "willful." 28 Ind. 290.

WAPENTAKE (from Saxon wapen, i. e., armatura, and tac, i. e., tactus). A Saxon court, held monthly by the alderman for the benefit of the hundred.

It was called a "wapentake" from "wapen," arms, and "tac," to touch; because, when the chief of the hundred entered upon his office, he appeared in the field on a certain day, on horseback, with a pike in his hand, and all the principal men met him with lances. Upon this he alighted, and they all touched his pike with their lances, in token of their submission to his authority. In this court, causes of great moment were heard and determined, as Mr. Dugdale has shown from several records. Besides which, it took cognizance of theft, trials by ordeal, view of frank pledge, and the like; whence after the Conquest it was called the sheriff's tourn, and, as regarded the examination of the pledges, the court of the view of frank pledge. These pledges were no other than the freemen within the liberty, who, according to an institution of King Alfred, were mutually pledged for the good behavior of each other. Fortesc. de Laud, c. 24; Dugd. Orig. Jur. 27; 4 Bl. Comm. 273. Sir Thomas Smith derives it from the custom of taking away the arms, at the muster of each hundred, from those who could not find sureties for good behavior. Rep. Angl. lib. 2, c. 16.

WAR. War is a hostile contest with arms between two or more states or communities claiming sovereign rights. Field, Int. Code, p. 467.

Classification:

(1) War is either offensive, defensive, or auxiliary. The distinction between offensive and defensive war has been based on the provocation leading to the war, but this test is difficult of application. The most practical test is as to the belligerent in whose territory the war is waged. See Glenn, Int. Law, 169.

An auxiliary war is one undertaken by a third nation in support of a belligerent.

(2) War is either public or private, accordingly as it has or has not the sanction of the sovereign power of the state.

An insurrectionary war in which one party is a government, and the other is not, has been called "mixed war."

(3) War is either perfect (sometimes called "solemn"), or imperfect (sometimes called "unsolemn"), accordingly as it has been declared in due form by the sovereign power, or is limited as respects places or persons. 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 483.

(4) War is either foreign or civil, according as it is between independent states, or between a state, as such, and a party or section of its own subjects. Civil war is distinguished from a mere treasonable insurrection only by degree, "by the number, power, and organization of the persons who originate and carry it on." 2 Black (U. S.) 635.

WAR, ARTICLES OF. See "Articles of War."

WARACTUM (Law Lat.) In old English law. Fallow; fallow ground. Quando tenementum jacet incultum et ad waractum, when the tenement lies untilled, and at fallow. Bracton, fol. 228b.

WARD. An infant placed by authority of law under the care of a guardian.

While under the care of a guardian, a ward can make no contract whatever binding upon him, except for necessaries. When the relation of guardian and ward ceases, the latter is entitled to have an account of the administration of his estate from the former. During the existence of this relation, the ward is under the subjection of his guardian, who stands in loco parentis. See "Guardian."

A subdivision of a city to watch in the daytime, for the purpose of preventing violations of the law. It is the duty of all police officers and constables to keep ward in their respective districts.

WARD FEGH. Saxon. In old records. Ward fee; the value of a ward, or the money paid to the lord for his redemption from wardship. Blount.

WARD HOLDING. In old Scotch law. Military tenure by which lands were held. It was so called from the yearly tax in commutation of the right to hold vassals' lands during minority. It was abolished in 1747. Burton, Law Scot. p. 375; Bell, Dict.

WARD IN CHANCERY. An infant who is under the superintendence of the chancellor.

WARDS AND LIVERIES. In English law. The title of a court of record established in the reign of Henry VIII. See "Court of Wards and Liveries."

WARDA (Law Lat.)

——In Old English Law. Ward; guard; protection; keeping; custody. Spelman.

A ward; an infant under wardship. Spelman.

——In Old Scotch Law. An award; the judgment of a court.

WARDEN. A guardian; a keeper. This is the name given to various officers; as, the warden of the prison, the wardens of the port of Philadelphia, church wardens.

WARDEN OF THE CINQUE PORTS. Governor of the ports of England lying next France, with the authority of admiral, and power of sending out writs in his own name, etc. The constable of Dover Castle is the warden of the Cinque Ports, and was first appointed by William the Conqueror; but John I. granted to the wardens their privileges on condition that they should provide a certain number of vessels for forty days as often as the king should require them. See "Cinque Ports."

WARDMOTE (from ward, and Saxon mote, or gemote, a meeting). In English law. A court held in every ward in London.

The wardmote inquest has power to inquire into and present all defaults concerning the watch and police doing their duty, that engines, etc., are provided against fire, that persons selling ale and beer be honest and suffer no disorders, nor permit gaming, etc., that they sell in lawful measures, and searches are to be made for beggars, vagrants, and idle persons, etc., who shall be punished. Chart. Hen. II.; Enc. Lond. 185;

Cunningham; Wharton. See Cowell; 4 Inst. 249; 2 Show. 525; Enc. Lond. 185; Chart. Hen. II.

WARDPENNY. Wardage.

WARDSHIP.

——In English Law. The right of the lord over the person and estate of the tenant, when the latter was under a certain age.

——In Modern Law. The status of a ward (q. v.)

WARDSHIP IN CHIVALRY. An incident to the tenure of knight service.

WARDSHIP IN COPYHOLDS. The lord is guardian of his infant tenant by special custom.

WARDWIT, WARDWYTE, or WARWITE. In old English law. Immunity or exemption from the duty or service of ward, or from contributing to such service. Spelman. Exemption from amercement for not finding a man to do ward. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 16; Co. Litt. 83.

WARDWRIT. The being quit of giving money for the keeping of wards. Spelman.

WARECTARE. To plough up land designed for wheat in the spring, in order to let it lie fallow for better improvement, which in Kent is called "summer land."

WAREHOUSE. A place used for the reception and storage of goods and merchandise. 23 Me. 47.

WAREHOUSE RECEIPT. A receipt by a warehouseman for chattels placed in his custody. Its return is usually required in order to obtain the property. By custom of trade it has come to be virtually negotiable in many instances. Grain, provisions, and many other staple commodities are largely transferred by delivery or indorsement of warehouse receipts.

WAREHOUSEMAN. A person who receives goods and merchandise to be stored in his warehouse for hire.

WARNING. In old English probate practice. A notice to one who had entered a caveat to appear and set forth his interest. Sweet.

WARNOTH. In old English law. An ancient custom, whereby, if any tenant holding of the Castle of Dover failed in paying his rent at the day, he should forfeit double, and for the second failure, treble, etc. Cowell.

WARRANDICE. In Scotch law. A clause in a charter of heritable rights, by which the grantor obliges himself that the right conveyed shall be effectual to the receiver. It is either personal or real. A warranty. Ersk. Inst. 2. 3. 11.

WARRANT. In its broadest sense, "a writing from a competent authority, in pursuance of law, directing the doing of an act, and addressed to an officer or person competent to do the act, and affording him protection from damage if he does it." 71 N. Y. 376.

In practice, it is largely confined to process of a criminal or quasi criminal nature, the more important being:

(1) Warrant of arrest, which is a writ issued by a justice of the peace or other authorized officer, directed to a constable or other proper person, requiring him to arrest a person therein named, charged with committing some offense, and to bring him before that or some other justice of the peace.

(2) Bench warrant, which is a process granted by a court, authorizing a proper officer to apprehend and bring before it some one charged with some contempt, crime, or misdemeanor.

(3) Search warrant, which is a process issued by a competent court or officer, authorizing an officer therein named or described to examine a house or other place for the purpose of finding goods which it is alleged have been stolen.

——Municipal Warrants. The name "warrant" is also given to a class of municipal securities, in the nature of a bill of exchange, drawn by an officer of a municipality upon the treasurer thereof. 19 Wall. (U. S.) 468.

WARRANT OF ATTORNEY. An instrument in writing, addressed to one or more attorneys therein named, authorizing them, generally, to appear in any court, or in some specified court, on behalf of the person giving it, and to confess judgment in favor of some particular person therein named, in an action of debt, and usually containing a stipulation not to bring any writ of error, or file a bill in equity, so as to delay him.

WARRANT OF COMMITMENT. The written authority by which a court empowers a jailer to commit a person to custody.

WARRANT TO SUE AND DEFEND. In old practice. A special warrant from the crown, authorizing a party to appoint an attorney to sue or defend for him. Gilb. C. P. 32; 3 Bl. Comm. 25.

A special authority, given by a party to his attorney, to commence a suit, or to appear and defend a suit, in his behalf. These warrants are now disused, though formal entries of them upon the record were long retained in practice. 1 Burrill, Prac. 39.

WARRANTEE. One to whom a warranty is made. Shep. Touch. 181.

WARRANTIA CHARTAE. An ancient and now obsolete writ, which was issued when a man was enfeoffed of land with warranty, and then he was sued or impleaded in assize or other action, in which he could not vouch or call to warranty.

It was brought by the feoffor pending the first suit against him, and had this valuable incident, that when the warrantor was vouched, and judgment passed against the tenant, the latter obtained judgment simultaneously against the warrantor, to recover other lands of equal value. Termes de la Ley; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 134; Dane, Abr. Index; 2 Rand. (Va.) 141, 148, 156; 4 Leigh (Va.) 132; 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 115; Viner, Abr.; Co. Litt. 100; Hob. 22, 217.

WARRANTIZARE EST DEFENDERE ET acquietare tenentem, qui warrantum vocavit, in seisina sua; et tenens de re warranti excambium hebebit ad valentiam. To warrant is to defend and insure in peace the tenant, who calls for warranty, in his seisin; and the tenant in warranty will have an exchange in proportion to its value. Co. Litt. 365.

WARRANTOR. One who makes a warranty. Shep. Touch. 181.

WARRANTOR POTEST EXCIPERE QUOD querens non tenet terram de qua petit warrantiam, et quod donum fuit insufficiens. A warrantor may object that the complainant does not hold the land of which he seeks the warranty, and that the gift was insufficient. Hob. 21.

WARRANTY.

——In Insurance. A statement or agreement by the insured, which is part of the contract of insurance, and the truth of which is essential to the validity of the policy.

For the distinction between "warranty" and "representation," see "Representation."

——In Sales of Personal Property. An undertaking, express or implied, by which the seller insures the existence of certain facts as to the thing sold. It is an express or implied statement of something which the party undertakes shall be a part of the contract, and, though part of the contract, yet collateral to the express object of it. 4 Mees. & W. 404.

It is express when the undertaking is by express words of the seller; it is implied when it results by inference of law from the nature of the transaction.

——In Sales of Real Property. In old law, a real covenant, whereby the grantor of an estate of freehold and his heirs were bound to warrant the title, and, either upon voucher or by judgment in a writ of warrantia chartae, to yield other lands to the value of those from which there had been an eviction by a paramount title. Co. Litt. 365a.

Collateral warranty existed when the heir's title was not derived from the warranting ancestor, and yet it barred the heir from claiming the land by any collateral title, upon the presumption that he might thereafter have assets by descent from or through the ancestor; and it imposed upon him the obligation of giving the warrantee other lands in case of eviction, provided he had assets. 2 Bl. Comm. 301, 302.

Lineal warranty existed when the heir derived title to the land warranted, either from or through the ancestor who made the warranty.

St. 4 Anne, c. 16, annulled these collateral warranties, which had become a great grievance.

In the United States, warranty in its original form, it is presumed, has never been known. The more plain and pliable form of a covenant has been adopted in its place; and this covenant, like all other covenants, has always been held to be sound in damages, which, after judgment, may be recovered out of the personal or real estate, as in other cases. And in England the matter has become one of curious learning, and of little or no practical importance. See 4 Kent, Comm. 469; 3 Rawle (Pa.) 67, note; 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 45; 9 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 268; 11 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 109; 4 Dall. (Pa.) 442; 1 Sumn. (U. S.) 358; 17 Pick. (Mass.) 14; 1 Ired. (N. C.) 509; 2 Saund. 38, note 5.

WARRANTY DEED. One which contains covenants of warranty.

WARRANTY, VOUCHER TO. In old practice. The calling a warrantor into court by the party warranted (when tenant in a real action brought for recovery of such lands), to defend the suit for him (Co. Litt. 101b; Comyn, Dig. "Voucher" [A 1]; Booth, Real Actions, 43; 2 Saund. 32, note 1), and the time of such voucher is after the demandant has counted.

It lies in most real and mixed actions, but not in personal. Where the voucher has been made and allowed by the court, the vouchee either voluntarily appears, or there issues a judicial writ (called a summons ad warrantizandum), commanding the sheriff to summon him. Where he, either voluntarily or in obedience to this writ, appears and offers to warrant the land to the tenant, it is called entering into the warranty; after which he is considered as tenant in the action, in the place of the original tenant. The demandant then counts against him de novo, the vouchee pleads to the new count, and the cause proceeds to issue.

WARREN (Ger. wahren; Fr. garenne). A place privileged by prescription or grant of the king for the preservation of hares, conies, partridges, and pheasants, or any of them. Termes de la Ley. An action lies for killing beasts of warren inside the warren: but they may be killed damage feasant on another's land. 5 Coke, 104. It need not be inclosed. 4 Inst. 318.

WARSCOT. A contribution usually made towards armor in the time of the Saxons.

WARTH. A customary payment for castle guard. Cowell.

WASH TRADES. See "Gambling Contract."

WASHING HORN. The sounding of a horn for washing before dinner. The custom is still observed in the Temple.

WASTE. Lasting and wrongful injury by the holder of a particular estate to the detriment of the holder of the reversion or remainder.

To constitute waste, the injury must be wrongful (3 Sup. Ct. N. Y. 60), by the tenant, or through his fault (2 Minor, Inst. p.

529), and must occasion lasting injury to the inheritance (1 Washb. Real Prop. 147).

What constitutes waste in a particular case is a question of fact. 22 N. J. Law, 521.

Waste is distinguished from "trespass" in that the latter is the act of a stranger, while waste is the act of a tenant.

It is distinguished from "devastavit," which is waste by an executor or administrator.

(1) Permissive waste consists in the mere neglect or omission to do what will prevent injury (69 Mich. 259), as, to suffer a house to go to decay for the want of repair. And it may be incurred in respect to the soil, as well as to the buildings, trees, fences, or live stock on the premises.

(2) Voluntary waste consists in the commission of some destructive act; as, in pulling down a house, or ploughing up a flower garden. 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 573.

(3) Equitable waste is such injury to the inheritance as is within the legal right of the tenant, but which a man of ordinary prudence would not commit in the management of his own property. 29 Law J. Ch. 598.

(4) Meliorating waste is that which increases the present value of the estate, but damages the inheritance by charging it with added burden, as by improvement, the unpaid cost whereof is a lien.

WASTORS. Thieves. Cowell.

WATCH AND WARD. A phrase used in the English law to denote the superintendence and care of certain officers whose duties are to protect the public from harm.

WATCHMAN. An officer in many cities and towns, whose duty it is to watch during the night and take care of the property of the inhabitants.

He possesses, generally, the common-law authority of a constable to make arrests, where there is reasonable ground to suspect a felony, though there is no proof of a felony having been committed. 1 Chit. Crim. Law, 24; 2 Hale, P. C. 96; Hawk. P. C. bk. 2, c. 13, § 1, etc.; 1 East, P. C. 303; 2 Inst. 52; Comyn, Dig. "Imprisonment" (H 4); Dane, Abr. Index; 3 Taunt. 14; 1 Barn. & Ald. 227; Peake, 89; 1 Moody, C. C. 334; 1 Esp. 294.

WATER BAILIFF. In English law. An officer appointed to search ships in ports. 10 Hen. VII. 30.

WATER BAYLEY. In American law. An officer mentioned in the colony laws of New Plymouth (A. D. 1671), whose duty was to collect dues to the colony for fish taken in their waters. Colony Laws (Ed. 1836) 164, 166. Probably another form of water bailiff (q. v.)

WATERCOURSE. This term is applied to the flow or movement of the water in rivers, creeks, and other streams.

WATER MEASURE. A greater measure than the Winchester, formerly used for selling coals in the pool, etc. 22 Car. II. c. 11.

WATER ORDEAL. In Saxon and old English law. The ordeal or trial by water, which was of two kinds,—by hot water and by cold water. The hot-water ordeal was performed by plunging the bare arm up to the elbow in boiling water, and escaping unhurt thereby. 4 Bl. Comm. 343; Spelman. The cold-water ordeal was performed by casting the person suspected into a river or pond of cold water, when, if he floated therein, without any action of swimming, it was deemed an evidence of his guilt, but, if he sank, he was acquitted. Id.

WATERGANG (Law Lat. watergangium). A Saxon word for a trench or course to carry a stream of water, such as are commonly made to drain water out of marshes. Ord. Mar. de Rom. Chart. Hen. III.

WATERGAVEL. A rent paid for fishing in, or other benefit from, some river. Chart. 15 Hen. III.

WATERING STOCK. Fictitiously increasing the capital stock of a corporation. It is commonly done when the ordinary profits exceed an ordinary return on the investment, and as much new stock is then issued as will reduce the rate of earnings to normal.

WATERSCAPE. An aqueduct or passage for water.

WATLING (or WETLING) STREET. One of the four great Roman ways or roads in Britain. Cowell; Blount; LL. Gul. Conq. lib. 30; Fleta, lib. 2, c. 61, § 21. Otherwise called "Verlam Street," from its passing through Verulam. Spelman, voc. "Ikenild Street."

WAVESON. Such goods as appear upon the waves after shipwreck. Jacob.

WAX SCOT. Duty anciently paid twice a year towards the charge of wax candles in churches. Spelman.

WAY. A passage, street, or road.

In its most general sense, it includes both public highways and private ways (Co. Litt. 56a); but it is generally used as synonymous with "private way" (q. v.)

WAY BILL. A writing in which are set down the names of passengers who are carried in a public conveyance, or the description of goods sent with a common carrier by land. When the goods are carried by water, the instrument is called a "bill of lading," and this term is now commonly applied to carriage by land as well.

WAY-GOING CROP. In Pennsylvania. By the custom of the country, a tenant for a term certain is entitled, after the expiration of his lease, to enter and take away the crop of grain which he had put into the ground the preceding fall. This is called the "way-going crop." 5 Bin. (Pa.) 289; 2

Serg. & R. (Pa.) 14; 1 Pa. St. 224. See "Away-Going Crop."

WAYLEAVE. A right of way over or through land for the carriage of minerals from a mine or quarry. It is an easement (q. v.), being a species of the class called "rights of way," and is generally created by express grant or reservation. A wayleave rent may be a fixed annual sum, or a sum payable according to the quantity of minerals drawn over the way, or a combination of the two. Bainb. Mines (4th Ed.) 211 et seq.; Elph. Conv. 264.

WAYNAGIUM. Implements of husbandry. 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, c. 5, 268.

WAYWARDENS. The English highway acts provide that in every parish forming part of a highway district there shall annually be elected one or more waywardens. The waywardens so elected, and the justices for the county residing within the district, form the highway board for the district. Each waywarden also represents his parish in regard to the levying of the highway rates, and in questions arising concerning the liability of his parish to repairs, etc. Highway Acts 1862, 1863, 1864, 1878.

WEALREAF. The robbing of a dead man in his grave.

WEAR. A great dam made across a river, accommodated for the taking of fish, or to convey a stream to a mill. Jacob. See "Dam."

WEAR AND TEAR. Deterioration by use.

WED. A covenant or agreement; whence a wedded husband.

WEDBEDRIP (Saxon). In old English law. A customary service which tenants paid to their lords, in cutting down their corn, or doing other harvest duties; as if a covenant to reap for the lord at the time of his bidding or commanding. Cowell.

WEIGHAGE. In English law. A duty or toll paid for weighing merchandise. It is called "tronage" for weighing wool at the king's beam, or "pesage" for weighing other avoirdupois goods. 2 Chit. Com. Law, 16.

WEIGHTS OF AUNCEL. See "Auncel Weight."

WELCH MORTGAGE. In English law. A species of security which partakes of the nature of a mortgage, as there is a debt due, and an estate is given as a security for the repayment, but differs from it in the circumstances that the rents and profits are to be received without account till the principal money is paid off, and there is no remedy to enforce payment, while the mortgagor has a perpetual power of redemption.

It is a species of vivum vadium. Strictly, however, there is this distinction between a Welch mortgage and a vivum vadium,—in the latter, the rents and profits of the estate are applied to the discharge of the principal after paying the interest; while in the former, the rents and profits are received in satisfaction of his interest only. 1 Powell, Mortg. 373a.

WELL KNOWING. The technical words to plead scienter.

WEND. A certain quantity or circuit of land. Cowell.

WERE, or WERA. The name of a fine among the Saxons imposed upon a murderer.

The life of every man, not excepting that of the king himself, was estimated at a certain price, which was called the "were," or aestimatio capitis. The amount varied according to the dignity of the person murdered. The price of wounds was also varied according to the nature of the wound, or the member injured.

WEREGELT THEF (Saxon). In old English law. A robber who might be ransomed. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, § 13.

WERELADA. A purging from a crime by the oaths of several persons, according to the degree and quality of the accused. Cowell.

WERGILD, or WEREGILD. In old English law. The price which, in a barbarous age, a person guilty of homicide or other enormous offense was required to pay, instead of receiving other punishment. 4 Bl. Comm. 188.

See, for the etymology of this word, and a tariff which was paid for the murder of the different classes of men, Guizot, Essais sur l'Histoire de France, Essai, 4eme, c. 2, § 2.

WEST SAXON LAGE. The law of the West Saxons, which was observed in the counties in the south and west of England, from Kent to Devonshire, in the beginning of the eleventh century. Supposed by Blackstone to have been much the same with the laws of Alfred. 1 Bl. Comm. 65.

WESTMINSTER. A city by express creation of Henry VIII. It was dissolved as a see and restored to the bishopric of London by Edward VI., and turned into a collegiate church, subject to a dean, by Queen Elizabeth. The superior courts sat here, and the common-law courts have continued to do so, as do still the divisions of the high court of justice which represent them. The chancery division, except upon the first day of certain sittings, sits at Lincoln's Inn. Wharton.

WESTMINSTER THE FIRST. St. 3 Edw. I., A. D. 1275. This statute, which deserves the name of a code rather than an act, is divided into fifty-one chapters. Without extending the exemption of churchmen from civil jurisdiction, it protects the property of the church from the violence and spoliation of the king and the nobles, provides for freedom of popular elections, because sheriffs, coroners, and conservators of the peace were still chosen by the freeholders in the county court, and attempts had been made to influence the election of knights of the shire, from the time when they were instituted. It contains a declaration to enforce the enactment of Magna Charta against excessive fines, which might operate as perpetual imprisonment; enumerates and corrects the abuses of tenures, particularly as to marriage of wards; regulates the levying of tolls, which were imposed arbitrarily by the barons and by cities and boroughs; corrects and restrains the powers of the king's escheator and other officers; amends the criminal law, putting the crime of rape on the footing to which it has been lately restored, as a most grievous, but not capital, offense; and embraces the subject of procedure in civil and criminal matters, introducing many regulations to render it cheap, simple, and expeditious. 1 Campb. Lives, L. Ch. p. 167; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, c. 9, p. 107. Certain parts of this act are repealed by St. 26 & 27 Vict. c. 125. Wharton.

WESTMINSTER THE SECOND. St. 13 Edw. I. st. 1, A. D. 1285, otherwise called the "Statute de Donis Conditionalibus." See "De Donis, the Statute." See 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, c. 10, p. 163. Certain parts of this act are repealed by St. 19 & 20 Vict. c. 64, and St. 26 & 27 Vict. c. 125. Wharton.

WESTMINSTER THE THIRD. St. 18 Edw. I. st. 1, A. D. 1290. Otherwise called the Statute Quia Emptores. See "Quia Emptores."

WHARF. A space of ground artificially prepared for the reception of merchandise from a ship or vessel, so as to promote the convenient loading and discharging of such vessel.

WHARFAGE. The money paid for landing goods upon, or loading them from, a wharf. Dane, Abr. Index; 4 Cal. 41, 45.

WHARFINGER. One who owns or keeps a wharf for the purpose of receiving and shipping merchandise to or from it for hire.

WHEEL. The punishment of the wheel was formerly to put a criminal on a wheel, and then to break his bones until he expired. This barbarous punishment was never used in the United States, and it has been abolished in almost every civilized country.

WHEN. At which time.

In wills, standing by itself unqualified and unexplained, this is a word of condition, denoting the time at which the gift is to commence. 6 Ves. 243; 2 Mer. 286. The context of a will may show that the word "when" is to be applied to the possession only, not to the vesting of a legacy; but to justify this construction, there must be circumstances, or other expressions in the will, showing such to have been the testator's intent. 7 Ves. 422; 9 Ves. 230; 11 Ves. 489; Cooper, 145; 3 Brown, Ch. 471. For the effect of the word "when" in contracts and in wills in the French law, see 6 Toullier, Dr. Civ. note 520.

WHEREAS. This word implies a recital, and, in general, cannot be used in the direct and positive averment of a fact in a declaration or plea. Those facts which are directly denied by the terms of the general issue, or which may, by the established usage of pleading, be specially traversed, must be averred in positive and direct terms; but facts, however material, which are not directly denied by the terms of the general issue, though liable to be contested under it, and which, according to the usage of pleading, cannot be specially traversed, may be alleged in the declaration by way of recital, under a whereas. Gould, Pl. c. 43, § 42; Id. c. 3, § 47; Bac. Abr. "Pleas, etc." (B 5, 4); 2 Chit. Pl. 151, 178, 191.

WHIPPING POST. A post to which criminals are tied to inflict the punishment of whipping, which is in use in Delaware, and perhaps one or two other states.

WHITE ACRE. A fictitious name given to a piece of land, in the English books, for purposes of illustration. See "Black Acre."

WHITE BONNET. In Scotch law. A fictitious bidder at an auction. Where there is no upset price, and the auction is not stated to be without reserve, there is no authority for saying that employment of such person is illegal. Burton, Law Scot. 362.

WHITE FRIARS. A place in London, between the Temple and Blackfriars, which was formerly a sanctuary, and therefore privileged from arrest.

WHITE PERSONS. Persons of the Caucasian race. It excludes Indians, Mongolians, etc. 5 Sawy. (U. S.) 115. The general rule is that a person having three-fourths or more of Caucasian blood is regarded as white. See 3 Dana (Ky.) 382.

WHITE RENTS. In English law. Rents paid in silver, and called "white rents," or redditus albi, to distinguish them from other rents which were not paid in money. 2 Inst. 19. See "Alba Firma."

WHITE SPURS. A kind of esquires. Cowell.

WHITEHART SILVER. A mulct on certain lands in or near to the forest of Whitehart, paid into the exchequer, imposed by Henry III. upon Thomas de la Linda for killing a beautiful white hart which that king before had spared in hunting. Camd. Brit. 150.

WHITTANWARII (Law Lat.) In old English law. A class of offenders who whitened stolen oxhides and horsehides so that they could not be known and identified. Barr. Obs. St. 124, note (f).

WHOLE BLOOD. Being related by both the father and mother's side. This phrase is used in contradistinction to "half blood," which is relation only on one side. See "Blood."

WHOLESALE. To sell by wholesale is to sell by large parcels, generally in original packages, and not by retail.

WHORE. A prostitute.

WICK, or WIC. A town or village. A termination denoting territorial limits of authority. Thus, "bailiwick" is the territory to which the authority of a bailiff extends.

WIDOW. A woman whose husband is dead, and who has not remarried.

As used in statute of distributions, this does not include a divorced woman, though it may in the law of dower. 37 Hun (N. Y.) 152; 103 N. Y. 284, 288.

WIDOW BENCH. The share of her husband's estate which a widow is allowed besides her jointure.

WIDOW'S CHAMBER. In English law. In London, the apparel of a widow and the furniture of her chamber, left by her deceased husband, is so called, and the widow is entitled to it. 2 Bl. Comm. 518.

WIDOW'S QUARANTINE. See "Quarantine."

WIDOW'S TERCE. The right which a wife has after her husband's death to a third of the rents of lands in which her husband died infeft; dower. Bell, Dict.

WIDOWER. A man whose wife is dead. A widower has a right to administer on his wife's separate estate, and, as her administrator, to collect debts due to her, generally for his own use.

WIDOWHOOD. The state of a man whose wife is dead, or of a woman whose husband is dead. In general, there is no law to regulate the time during which a man must remain a widower, or a woman a widow, before they marry a second time. The term widowhood is mostly applied to the state or condition of a widow.

WIFE'S EQUITY. See "Equity to a Settlement."

WILD ANIMALS. Animals in a state of nature; animals ferae naturae. See "Animal."

WILD LAND. Unimproved and uncultivated.

WILD'S CASE, RULE IN. A devise to B. and his children or issue, B. having no issue at the time of the devise, gives him an estate tail; but if he have issue at the time, B. and his children take joint estates for life. 6 Coke, 16b; White & T. Lead. Cas. Real Prop. 542, 581.

WILL. The legal declaration of a man's intention respecting the disposition of his property, which he wills to be performed after his death. See 2 Bl. Comm. 309.

The word is of common-law origin, the corresponding civil-law term being "testament" (q. v.) "Will," "testament," and "last will and testament" are now said to be synonymous. Schouler, Wills, § 2.

In general, any instrument executed with the required formalities, conferring no present rights, but intended to take effect on the death of the maker, will be considered to be a will. 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 168; 104 Pa. St. 240.

(1) Holographic (or olographic) wills are those written and signed entirely with the testator's own hand. By reason of this, certain formalities in execution are in some jurisdictions dispensed with.

(2) Nuncupative wills are those made by oral declaration in the presence of witnesses. They are not in use in the United States, and in England are confined to seamen and soldiers in active service.

(3) Mystic wills, in Louisiana, are wills sealed in the presence of witnesses. See "Mystic Testament."

WILL, ESTATE AT. See "Estates."

WILLFUL. In the common sense, voluntary or intentional. In criminal law, the term generally means more than "voluntary," and implies an evil mind or intent. 96 U. S. 699; 140 Ind. 246; 20 Pick. (Mass.) 206; 14 Tex. App. 200. Thus, one who acts in good faith, believing that no highway existed at that place, is not guilty of "willfully" obstructing a highway. 34 Wis. 675.

WILLFUL ACT. A "willful" differs essentially from a "negligent" act. The one is positive, and the other negative. Intention is always separated from negligence by a precise line of demarcation. 38 Jones & S. (N. Y.) 281, 317, affirmed in 63 N. Y. 77.

WILLFULLY. Intentionally.

In charging certain offenses, it is required that they should be stated to be willfully done. Archb. Crim. Pl. 51, 58; Leach, C. C. 556.

In Pennsylvania, it has been decided that the word "maliciously" was an equivalent for the word "willfully," in an indictment for arson. 5 Whart. (Pa.) 427. See "Willful."

WILLS ACT. See "Statute of Wills."

WINCHESTER, STATUTE OF. A statute passed in the 13th year of the reign of Edward I., by which the old Saxon law of police was enforced, with many additional provisions. 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 163; Crabb, Hist. Eng. Law, 189. It was repealed by St. 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27. See "Constable."

WINCHESTER MEASURE. The standard measure which was originally kept at Winchester. It is abolished by 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 63.

WINDING UP. The term used in England to denote the dissolution of a corporation or partnership, and the settlement of its affairs.

WINDOW TAX. A tax on windows, levied on houses which contained more than six windows, and were worth more than £5 per annum; established by St. 7 Wm. III. c. 18. St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 36, substituted for this tax a tax on inhabited houses.

WINDSOR FOREST. A royal forest founded by Henry VIII.

WINTER CIRCUIT. An occasional circuit appointed for the trial of prisoners, in England, and in some cases of civil causes, between Michaelmas and Hilary terms.

WINTER HEYNING. The season between 11th November and 23d April, which is excepted from the liberty of commoning in certain forests. St. 23 Car. II. c. 3.

WISBUY, LAWS OF. A code of maritime laws, compiled at Wisbuy, the ancient capital of Gothland in Sweden, towards the close of the thirteenth century, and which, soon after their promulgation, were adopted as laws of the sea by all the nations of modern Europe. Even in the time of Cleirac (who published them, with a commentary, in his work entitled Les Us et Coutumes de la Mer), they were still observed in Sweden, Denmark, Flanders, and in the north of Germany. These laws resemble in many respects the laws of Oleron, to which, indeed, according to Cleirac, they were but a supplement, and they were adopted as the basis of the later collection known as the "Laws of the Hanseatic League." 3 Kent, Comm. 13, and note; 1 Duer, Ins. 40, 41; Introd. Disc. Lect. ii. They have been published in the United States, in the appendix to the first volume of Peters' Admiralty Decisions.

WISTA. A measure of land among the Saxons, containing sixty acres.

WITAM. The purgation from an offense by the oath of the requisite number of witnesses.

WITE. In Saxon law. A punishment, pain, penalty, mulct, or criminal fine. Cowell. It was the fine paid to the magistrate, as distinguished from "were," the compensation paid to the injured persons.

WITEKDEN. A taxation of the West Saxons, imposed by the public council of the kingdom.

WITENA DOM. In Saxon law. The judgment of the county court, or other court of competent jurisdiction, on the title to property, real or personal. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 22.

WITENA GEMOTE (spelled, also, witena gemot, gewitena gemote, from the Saxon wita, a wise man, gemote, assembly,—the assembly of wise men). An assembly of the great men of the kingdom in the time of the Saxons, to advise and assist in the government of the realm.

It was the grand council of the kingdom, and was held, generally, in the open air, by public notice or particular summons, in or near some city or populous town. These notices or summonses were issued upon determination by the king's select council, or the body met without notice, when the throne was vacant, to elect a new king. Subsequently to the Norman Conquest it was called commune concilium regni, curia magna, and, finally, "parliament;" but its character had become considerably changed. It was a court of last resort more especially for determining disputes between the king and his thanes, and, ultimately, from all inferior tribunals. Great offenders, particularly those who were members of or might be summoned to the king's court, were here tried. The casual loss of title deeds was supplied, and a very extensive equity jurisdiction exercised. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 73-76; 1 Bl. Comm. 147, 148; 1 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 7; 9 Coke, pref.

The principal duties of the witena gemote, besides acting as high court of judicature, was to elect the sovereign, assist at his coronation, and co-operate in the enactment and administration of the laws. It made treaties jointly with the king, and aided him in directing the military affairs of the kingdom. Examinations into the state of churches, monasteries, their possessions, discipline, and morals, were made before this tribunal. It appointed magistrates, and regulated the coin of the kingdom. It also provided for levying upon the people all such sums as the public necessities required; and no property of a freeman was, in fact, taxable without the consent of the gemote. Bede, lib. 2, c. 5; 3 Turner, Ang. Sax. 209; 1 Dugd. Mon. 20; Saxon, Chron. 126, 140.

WITENS. The chiefs of the Saxon lords or thanes, their nobles, and wise men.

WITH STRONG HAND. In pleading. A technical phrase indispensable in describing a forcible entry in an indictment. No other word or circumlocution will answer the same purpose. 8 Term R. 357.

WITHDRAWING A JUROR. In practice. An agreement made between the parties in a suit to require one of the twelve jurors impanelled to try a cause to leave the jury box; the act of leaving the box by such a juror is also called the withdrawing a juror.

This arrangement usually takes place at the recommendation of the judge, when it is obviously improper the case should proceed any further.

The effect of withdrawing a juror puts an end to that particular trial, and each party must pay his own costs. 3 Term R. 657; 2 Dowl. 721; 1 Cromp., M. & R. 64. But the plaintiff may bring a new suit for the same cause of action. Ryan & M. 402; 3 Barn. & Adol. 349. See 3 Chit. Prac. 916.

WITHDRAWING RECORD. The withdrawing by plaintiff's attorney of the nisi prius record filed in a cause, before jury is sworn, has the same effect as a motion to postpone. 2 Car. & P. 185; 3 Campb. 333; Paine & D. Prac. 465.

WITHERNAM. In practice. The name of a writ which issues on the return of elongata to an alias or pluries writ of replevin, by which the sheriff is commanded to take the defendant's own goods which may be found in his bailiwick, and keep them safely, not to deliver them to the plaintiff until such time as the defendant chooses to submit himself and allow the distress, and the whole of it to be replevied, and he is thereby further commanded that he do return to the court in what manner he shall have executed the writ. Hammond, N. P. 453; 2 Inst. 140; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 68, 69; Grotius de Jure Belli, 3. 2. 4. note 1.

WITHOUT DAY. This signifies that the cause or thing to which it relates is indefinitely adjourned; as, when a case is adjourned without day, it is not again to be inquired into. When the legislature adjourn without day, they are not to meet again. This is usually expressed in Latin, sine die.

WITHOUT IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE. When a tenant for life holds the land without impeachment of waste, he is, of course, dispunishable for waste, whether willful or otherwise. But still this right must not be wantonly abused, so as to destroy the estate; and he will be enjoined from committing malicious waste. Dane, Abr. c. 78, a. 14, § 7; Bac. Abr. "Waste" (N); 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. "Waste" (A, pl. 8); 2 Bouv. Inst. note 2402. See "Impeachment of Waste."

WITHOUT PREJUDICE. A phrase frequently used in connection with admissions, orders, etc. Its general effect is to reserve certain rights which would otherwise be indirectly or impliedly affected. See 20 Wall. (U. S.) 12; 58 Vt. 414.

WITHOUT RECOURSE. An indorsement of a negotiable instrument, whereby the indorser relieves himself of any liability to subsequent holders. The usual form is by prefixing the words "Without recourse" to the indorser's signature.

WITHOUT RESERVE. These words are frequently used in conditions of sale at public auction, that the property offered, or to be offered, for sale, will be sold without reserve.

When a property is advertised to be sold without reserve, if a puffer be employed to bid, and actually bid at the sale, the courts will not enforce a contract against a purchaser, into which he may have been drawn by the vendor's want of faith. 5 Madd. 34. See "Puffer."

WITHOUT STINT. Without limit. Applied to common, it is the same as common sans nombre.

WITHOUT THIS, THAT. In pleading. These are technical words used in a traverse (q. v.) for the purpose of denying a material fact in the preceding pleadings, whether declaration, plea, replication, etc. In Latin it is called absque hoc (q. v.) Lawes, Pl. 119; Comyn, Dig. "Pleader" (G 1); Summary of Pleading, 75; 1 Saund. 103, note; Ld. Raym. 641; 1 Burrows, 320; 1 Chit. Pl. 576, note (a).

WITNESS. One who gives oral testimony in a judicial proceeding. If his testimony be given by deposition, he is known as a "deponent;" if by affidavit, as an "affiant."

One who is present at any transaction, particularly persons required by law to be present, by way of preappointed evidence. If the witness signs an instrument to denote that same was executed in his presence, he is called a "subscribing" or "attesting" witness.

WITNESSING PART. In a deed or other formal instrument, that part which comes after the recitals, or, where there are no recitals, after the parties. It usually commences with a reference to the agreement or intention to be effectuated, then states or refers to the consideration, and concludes with the operative words and parcels, if any. Where a deed effectuates two distinct objects, there are two witnessing parts. 1 Dav. Prec. Conv. 63 et seq.

WOLF'S HEAD. In old English law. A term applied to outlaws. They who were outlawed in old English law were said to carry a wolf's head; for, if caught alive, they were to be brought to the king, and if they defended themselves, they might be slain and their heads carried to the king, for they were no more to be accounted of than wolves. Termes de la Ley, "Woolforthfod."

WOMEN. All the females of the human species. All such females who have arrived at the age of puberty. Mulieris appellatione etiam virgo viri potens continetur. Dig. 50. 16. 13. See 84 Ill. 11.

WOOD CORN. A certain quantity of grain paid by the tenants of some manors to the lord for the liberty to pick up dried or broken wood. Cowell.

WOOD GELD. The cutting of wood within the forest, or rather the money paid for the same. Cowell.

WOOD PLEA COURT. A court held twice in the year in the forest of Clun, in Shropshire, for determining all matters of wood and agistments. Cowell.

WOOD STREET COMPTER. The name of an old prison in London.

WOODGELD. In old English law. To be free from the payment of money for taking of wood in any forest. Co. Litt. 233a.

The same as "pudzeld."

WOODMOTE. The court of attachment. Cowell.

WOODWARDS. Officers of the forest, whose duty consists in looking after the wood and vert and venison, and preventing offenses relating to the same. Manw. For. Laws, 189.

WOOLSACK. The seat of the lord chancellor of England in the house of lords, being a large square bag of wool, without back or arms, covered with red cloth. Webster. The judges, king's counsel-at-law, and masters in chancery sit also on woolsacks. The custom arose from wool's being a staple of Great Britain from early times. Enc. Am.

WORD. One or more syllables which, when united, convey an idea; a single part of speech.

WORDS OF LIMITATION. In a conveyance or will, words which have the effect of marking the duration of an estate are termed "words of limitation." Fearne, Cont. Rem. 78.

WORDS OF NEGOTIABILITY. Those words in an instrument which render it negotiable. The words "to the order of" before the name of the payee, or the words "or order," or "or bearer," after the name, are the usual words of negotiability. See "Negotiable Instrument."

WORDS OF PROCREATION. To create an estate tail by deed, it is necessary that words of procreation should be used in order to confine the estate to the descendants of the first grantee, as in the usual form of limitation,—"to A. and the heirs of his body."

WORDS OF PURCHASE. Words of purchase are words which denote the person who is to take the estate. Thus, if I grant land to A. for twenty-one years, and after the determination of that term to A.'s heirs, the word "heirs" does not denote the duration of A.'s estate, but the person who is to take the remainder on the expiration of the term, and is therefore called a "word of purchase." Wiliams, Real Prop.; Fearne, Cont. Rem. 76 et seq. Hence, "words of purchase" and "words of limitation" are opposed to each other.

WORK AND LABOR. One of the common counts in assumpsit, used to declare on work and labor done and materials furnished.

WORK BEAST, or WORK HORSE. These terms mean an animal of the horse kind, which can be rendered fit for service, as well as one of maturer age and in actual use. 8 Bush (Ky.) 587.

WORKHOUSE. A prison where prisoners are kept in employment; a penitentiary. A house provided where the poor are taken care of and kept in employment.

WORKING DAYS. In settling lay days, or days of demurrage, sometimes the contract specifies "working days;" in the computation, Sundays and custom-house holidays are excluded. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 577.

WORLD. This term sometimes denotes all persons whatsoever who may have, claim, or acquire an interest in the subject matter; as in saying that a judgment in rem binds "all the world."

WORSHIP. Honor and homage rendered to God.

In the United States, this is free, every one being at liberty to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience. See "Public Worship."

——In English Law. A title or addition given to certain persons. 2 Inst. 666; Bac. Abr. "Misnomer" (A 2).

WORT, or WORTH. A curtilage or country farm.

WORTHIEST OF BLOOD. An expression used to designate that in descent the sons are to be preferred to daughters, which is the law of England. See some singular reasons given for this in Plowd. 305.

WORTHINE, or WORTHING OF LAND. A certain quantity of land so called in the manor of Kingsland, in Hereford. The tenants are called "worthies."

WOUND. An injury to the person, whereby the skin is broken. Steph. Crim. Law, 171. Breaking of a bone has been held not to be a wounding. 4 Car. & P. 381.

WOUNDING. An aggravated species of assault and battery, consisting in one person giving another some dangerous hurt. 3 Bl. Comm. 121.

WRECCUM MARIS SIGNIFICAT ILLA bona quae naufragio ad terram pelluntur. A wreck of the sea signifies those goods which are driven to shore from a shipwreck.

WRECK (called in Law Lat. wreccum maris, and in Law Fr. wrec de mer). In a popular sense, a ship which has received injuries rendering her incapable of navigation.

——In Maritime Law. Such goods as, after a shipwreck, are cast upon the land by the sea, and left there within some country, so as not to belong to the jurisdiction of the admiralty, but to the common law. 2 Inst. 167; 1 Bl. Comm. 290-293.

WRECK COMMISSIONERS. Persons appointed by the English lord chancellor under Merch. Shipp. Act 1876, § 29, to hold investigations at the request of the board of trade into losses, abandonments, damages, and casualties of or to ships on or near the coast of the United Kingdom, whereby loss of life is caused.

WRECKFREE. Exempt from the forfeiture of shipwrecked goods and vessels to the king. Cowell.

WRIT.* In practice. A mandatory precept, issued by the authority and in the name of the sovereign or the state, for the purpose of compelling the defendant to do something therein mentioned.

*The common-law writs, of which there were a multitude, generally bore specific Latin names, from their purpose, or from their emphatic words. The aim in the present work has been to place these according to their customary form. The great majority of them, being customarily introduced by the prefix "De," or "Pro," will be found so placed. Those not customarily so introduced will be found under the first word of their names. Writs having English names are placed under the name without the prefix "Writ of" (e. g. "Habeas Corpus"), except where such short form is never used, in which case the prefix is used, and the phrase placed under "W" (e. g., "Writ of Right").

It is issued by a court or other competent jurisdiction, and is returnable to the same. It is to be under seal and tested by the proper officer, and is directed to the sheriff or other officer lawfully authorized to execute the same. Writs are divided into original, by which actions or proceedings are begun, of mesne process, by which interlocutory proceedings are initiated, of execution, by which the judgment or decree is carried into effect. See 3 Bl. Comm. 273; 1 Tidd, Prac. 93; Gould, Pl. c. 2, § 1.

WRIT OF ASSISTANCE. In English practice, a chancery writ issued in aid of commissioners of sequestration, who were unable to obtain possession of the property. In early English practice, the writ had more extensive use, being used generally to eject persons from land wrongfully held; but it has been to a great extent superseded by statutory writs of possession and delivery. In the United States, the writ issues out of chancery to aid the sheriff in giving possession of land pursuant to a sale by him.

WRIT OF ASSOCIATION. In English practice. A writ whereby certain persons (usually the clerk of assize and his subordinate officers) are directed to associate themselves with the justices and sergeants; and they are required to admit the said persons into their society in order to take the assizes. 3 Bl. Comm. 59.

WRIT OF ATTACHMENT. A writ employed to enforce obedience to an order or judgment of the court. It commands the sheriff to attach the disobedient party, and to have him before the court to answer his contempt. Smith, Actions, 176. It is used not only as a writ of execution (e. g., to enforce a judgment for the recovery of chattels), but also to enforce obedience to interlocutory orders, injunctions, etc.

WRIT OF CONSPIRACY. The name of an ancient writ, now superseded by the more convenient remedy of an action on the case, which might have been sued against parties guilty of a conspiracy. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 260. See "Conspiracy."

WRIT OF COVENANT. In practice. A writ which lies where a party claims damages for breach of covenant, i. e., of a promise under seal.

WRIT OF DEBT. In practice. A writ which lies where the party claims the recovery of a debt, i. e., a liquidated or certain sum of money alleged to be due to him.

This is debt "in the debet," which is the principal and only common form. There is another species mentioned in the books, called the debt "in the detinet," which lies for the specific recovery of goods under a contract to deliver them. 1 Chit. Pl. 101.

WRIT OF DECEIT. The name of a writ which lies where one man has done anything in the name of another, by which the latter is damnified and deceived. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 217.

The modern practice is to sue a writ of trespass on the case to remedy the injury.

WRIT OF DELIVERY. A writ of execution employed to enforce a judgment for the delivery of chattels. It commands the sheriff to cause the chattels mentioned in the writ to be returned to the person who has obtained the judgment, and, if the chattels cannot be found, to distrain the person against whom the judgment was given until he returns them. Smith, Actions, 175.

WRIT OF DETINUE. In practice. A writ which lies where a party claims the specific recovery of goods and chattels, or deeds and writings, detained from him. This is seldom used. Trover is the more frequent remedy, in cases where it may be brought.

WRIT OF DOWER. In practice. A writ which lies for a widow claiming the specific recovery of her dower, no part having been yet assigned to her. It is usually called a writ of dower unde nihil habet. 3 Chit. Pl. 393; Booth, 166.

There is another species, called a "writ of right of dower," which applies to the particular case where the widow has received a part of her dower from the tenant himself, and of land lying in the same town in which she claims the residue. Booth, 166; Glanv. lib. 6, c. 4, 5. This latter writ is seldom used in practice.

WRIT OF EJECTMENT. In practice. The name of a process issued by a party claiming land or other real estate, against one who is alleged to be unlawfully in possession. See "Ejectment."

WRIT OF ENTRY. A real action to recover the possession of land where the tenant (or owner) has been disseised or otherwise wrongfully dispossessed. If the disseisor has aliened the land, or if it has descended to his heir, the writ of entry is said to be in the per, because it alleges that the defendant (the alienee or heir) obtained possession "through" the original disseisor. If two alienations (or descents) have taken place, the writ is in the per and cui, because it alleges that the defendant (the second alienee) obtained possession "through" the first alienee, to whom the original disseisor had aliened it. If more than two alienations (or descents) have taken place, the writ is in the post, because it simply alleges that the defendant acquired possession "after" the original disseisin. Co. Litt. 238b; 3 Bl. Comm. 180. The writ of entry was abolished, with other real actions, in England, by St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, § 36, but is still in use in a few of the states of the Union.

WRIT OF ERROR. A writ by which a superior court commands an inferior to send up the record of a proceeding for review. A writ of error lay only to a court of record (88 Pa. St. 291) after final judgment

(2 Mass. 445), and lies only to errors of law (141 Mass. 194) apparent of record (72 N. Y. 393).

Error was the appropriate remedy at common law to review proceedings at law, while an appeal (q. v.) lay in equity.

——Writ of Error Coram Nobis. The ordinary writ of error which issued from a superior to an inferior court.

——Writ of Error Coram Vobis. A writ which issued to review proceedings previously had in the court issuing it. See "Coram Vobis."

It was called at length in the old books, breve de errore corrigendo, a writ about correcting error; the abbreviation of which (breve de errore) has been literally translated, "writ of error." Sometimes simply termed "error." Defined by Lord Coke to be a writ which "lieth where a man is grieved by any error in the foundation, proceeding, judgment, or execution [of a suit], and thereupon it is called breve de errore corrigendo. Co. Litt. 288b.

WRIT OF FALSE JUDGMENT. A writ which appears to be still in use to bring appeals to the English high court from inferior courts not of record proceeding according to the course of the common law. Archb. Prac. 1427.

WRIT OF MAINPRIZE. In English law. A writ directed to the sheriff (either generally, when any man is imprisoned for a bailable offense and bail has been refused, or specially, when the offense or cause of commitment is not properly bailable below) commanding him to take sureties for the prisoner's appearance, commonly called "mainpernors," and to set him at large. 3 Bl. Comm. 128.

WRIT OF MESNE. In old English law. A writ which was so called by reason of the words used in the writ, namely, Unde idem A., qui medius est inter C. et praefatum B.; that is, A., who is mesne between C., the lord paramount, and B., the tenant paravail. Co. Litt. 100a.

WRIT OF POSSESSION. This is the writ of execution employed to enforce a judgment to recover the possession of land. It commands the sheriff to enter the land and give possession of it to the person entitled under the judgment. Smith, Actions, 175.

WRIT OF PRAECIPE. This writ is also called a writ of covenant, and is sued out by the party to whom lands are to be conveyed by fine, the foundation of which is a supposed agreement or covenant that the one shall convey the land to the other. 2 Bl. Comm. 349, 350.

WRIT OF PREVENTION. This name is given to certain writs which may be issued in anticipation of suits which may arise. Co. Litt. 100.

WRIT OF PROCLAMATION. In English practice. A writ which issues at the same time with the exigi facias, by virtue of St. 31 Eliz. c. 3, § 1, by which the sheriff is commanded to make proclamations in the statute prescribed.

When it is not directed to the same sheriff as the writ of exigi facias is, it is called a "foreign writ of proclamation." Lee; 4 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law, 261.

WRIT OF PROTECTION. In England, the sovereign may, by his writ of protection, privilege any person in his service from arrest in civil proceedings during a year and a day; but this prerogative is seldom, if ever, exercised. Archb. Prac. 687. See Co. Litt. 130a.

WRIT OF RECAPTION. In practice. A writ which lies where, pending an action of replevin, the same distrainer takes, for the same supposed cause, the cattle or goods of the same distrainee. See Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 169.

This writ is nearly obsolete, as trespass, which is found to be a preferable remedy, lies for the second taking; and, as the defendant cannot justify, the plaintiff must necessarily recover damages proportioned to the injury.

WRIT OF RESTITUTION. A writ which is issued on the reversal of a judgment commanding the sheriff to restore to the defendant below the thing levied upon, if it has not been sold, and, if it has been sold, the proceeds. Bac. Abr. "Execution" (Q).

WRIT OF RIGHT. In practice. The remedy appropriate to the case where a party claims the specific recovery of corporeal hereditaments in fee simple, founding his title on the right of property, or mere right, arising either from his own seisin or the seisin of his ancestor or predecessor. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 1 (B); 3 Bl. Comm. 391.

At common law, a writ of right lies only against the tenant of the freehold demanded. 8 Cranch (U. S.) 239.

This writ brings into controversy only the rights of the parties in the suit; and a defense that a third person has better title will not avail. 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 27; 3 Pet. (U. S.) 133; 3 Bing. (N. S.) 434; 4 Bing. (N. S.) 711; 5 Bing. (N. S.) 161; 4 Scott, 209; 6 Scott, 435, 738; 6 Adol. & E. 103; 1 H. Bl. 1; 3 Taunt. 167; 5 Taunt. 326; 1 Marsh. 68; 2 Bos. & P. 570; 4 Bos. & P. 64; 4 Taunt. 572; 2 W. Bl. 1261; 2 Car. & P. 187, 271; 8 Cranch (U. S.) 229; 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 306; 11 Me. 312; 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 250; 3 Bibb (Ky.) 57; 3 Rand. (Va.) 563; 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 104; 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 396; 1 Dana (Ky.) 410; 2 Leigh (Va.) 1; 4 Mass. 64; 17 Mass. 74.

WRIT OF SUMMONS. In ordinary actions in the English high court, the writ of summons is a writ issued at the instance of the plaintiff for the purpose of giving the defendant notice of the claim made against him, and of compelling him to appear and answer it if he does not admit it. It is the first step in the action.

The court of probate had power to cause questions of fact, arising in suits or proceedingc, to be tried by a jury by means of an issue directed to one of the superior courts of law. The issues were contained in a document called a "writ of summons." Browne. Prob. Prac. 314; Court of Probate Act 1857, § 35. This practice seems no longer applicable. Rules of Court, xxxvi. 29.

WRIT OF TOLL. In English law. The name of a writ to remove proceedings on a writ of right patent from the court baron into the county court. 3 Bl. Comm. Append. No. 1, § 2.

WRIT OF WASTE. The name of a writ to be. ...ed against a tenant who has committ... ...aste of the premises. There are several forms of this writ. That against a tenant in dower differs from the others. Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 125. See "Waste."

WRITER OF THE TALLIES. In England. An officer of the exchequer whose duty it was to write upon the tallies the letters of tellers' bills.

WRITERS TO THE SIGNET. In Scotch law. Anciently, clerks in office of the secretary of state, by whom writs passing the king's signet were prepared. Their duty now is to prepare the warrants of all lands flowing from the crown, and to sign almost all diligencies of the law affecting the person or estate of a debtor, or for compelling implement of decree of superior court. They may act as attorney or agent before court of sessions, and have various privileges. Bell, Dict. "Clerk to Signet."

WRITING. In the most general sense of the word, "writing" denotes a document, whether manuscript or printed, as opposed to mere spoken words. Writing is essential to the validity of certain contracts and other transactions. Sweet.

WRITING OBLIGATORY. A bond; an agreement reduced to writing, by which the party becomes bound to perform something, or suffer it to be done.

A contract under seal. 7 Yerg. (Tenn.) 350.

WRITTEN LAW. One of the two leading divisions of the Roman law, comprising the leges, plebiscita, senatus consulta, principum placita, magistratuum edicta, and responsa prudentum. Inst. 1. 2. 3.

Statute law; law deriving its force from express legislative enactment. 1 Bl. Comm. 62, 85.

WRONG. An injury; a tort; a violation of right.

In its most usual sense, wrong signifies an injury committed to the person or property of another, or to his relative rights, unconnected with contract; and these wrongs are committed with or without force. But in a more extended signification, wrong includes the violation of a contract. A failure by a man to perform his undertaking or promise is a wrong or injury to him to whom it was made. 3 Bl. Comm. 158.

A public wrong is an act which is injurious to the public generally, commonly known by the name of "crime," "misdemeanor," or "offense;" and it is punishable in various ways, such as indictments, summary proceedings, and, upon conviction, by death, imprisonment, fine, etc.

Private wrongs, which are injuries to individuals, unaffecting the public. These are redressed by actions for damages, etc. See "Tort."

WRONGDOER. One who commits an injury; a tort feasor. See Dane, Abr. Index.

WRONGFULLY INTENDING. In pleading. Words used in a declaration when, in an action for an injury, the motive of the defendant in committing it can be proved, for then his malicious intent ought to be averred. This is sufficiently done if it be substantially alleged, in general terms, as wrongfully intending. 3 Bouv. Inst. note 2871.

WRONGOUS, or WRANGOUS. In Scotch law. Wrongful; unlawful; as wrongous imprisonment. Ersk. Princ. 4. 4. 25.

WULTAVA, or WULITAVA (Law Lat.) In old European law. A disfiguring of the face. Addit. ad L. Frison, tit. 3, § 16; Spelman.

WULVESHEVED, or WULFESHEOFOD (Saxon, from wulfe, wolf, and heofod, head). In Saxon law. Wolf's head; a term applied to an outlaw.

WURTH (Saxon). In Saxon law. Worthy; competent; capable. Atheswurthe, worthy of oath; admissible or competent to be sworn. Spelman. See "Othesworthe."

WYTE. In old English law. Acquittance or immunity from amercement. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 47, §§ 15-17.

X-Y-Z

XENODOCHIUM. In the civil and old English law. An inn allowed by public license for the entertainment of strangers and other guests. Calv. Lex.; Cowell.

A hospital; a place where sick and infirm persons are taken care of. Cowell.

XENODOCHY. Reception of strangers; hospitality. Enc. Lond.

XYLON. A punishment among the Greeks answering to our stocks. Wharton.

YA ET NAY. In old records. Mere assertion and denial, without oath. Cowell; Blount.

YARDLAND. In old English law. A quantity of land containing twenty acres. Co. Litt. 69a.

YCONOMUS, or OECONOMUS (Law Lat.) In old records. An advocate or defender; a patron. Cowell.

YEAR. The period in which the revolution of the earth around the sun and the accompanying changes in the order of nature, are completed.

The civil year commences immediately, the latter being composed of three hundred and sixty-five days, five hours, forty-eight seconds and a fraction, while the former consists sometimes of three hundred and sixty-five days, and at others, in leap years, of three hundred and sixty-six days.

The year is divided into half-year, which consists, according to Coke (Litt. 135b), of one hundred and eighty-two days; and quarter of a year, which consists of ninety-one day of December,—that is, the first moment further divided into twelve months.

The civil year differs from the astronomical after 12 o'clock at night of the thirty-first days (Hob.; 2 Rolle, Abr. 521, lib. 40). It is of the first day of January,—and ends at midnight of the thirty-first day of December twelve months thereafter. See Comyn, Dig. Annus; 2 Bl. Comm. 140, note; Chit. Prac. Index, "Time."

In New York it is enacted that whenever the term "year" or "years" is or shall be used in any statute, deed, verbal or written contract, or any public or private instrument whatever, the year intended shall be taken to consist of three hundred and sixty-five days; half a year, of a hundred and eighty-two days; and a quarter of a year, of ninety-two days; and the day of a leap year, and the day immediately preceding, if they shall occur in any period so to be computed, shall be reckoned together as one day. Rev. St. pt. 1, c. 19, tit. 1, § 3.

YEAR AND DAY. A period of time much recognized in law.

It is not in all cases limited to a precise calendar year. In Scotland, in computing the term, the year and day is to be reckoned, not by the number of days which go to make up a year, but by the return of the day of the next year that bears the same denomination. 1 Bell, Comm. (5th Ed.) 721; 2 Stair, Inst. 842. See Bac. Abr. Descent (I 3); Ersk. Inst. 1. 6. 22. In the law of all the Gothic nations, it meant a year and six weeks.

It is a term frequently occurring for example, in case of an estray, if the owner challenged it not within a year and a day, it belonged to the lord. 5 Coke. 108. So of a wreck. 2 Inst. 168. This time is given to prosecute appeals and for actions in a writ of right, and, after entry or claim, to avoid a fine. Plowd. 357a. And if a person wounded die in that time, it is murder. 3 Inst. 53; 6 Coke, 107. So, when a judgment is reversed, a party, notwithstanding the lapse of time mentioned in the statute of limitations pending that action, may commence a fresh action within a year and a day of such reversal. 3 Chit. Prac. 107. Again, after a year and a day have elapsed from the day of signing a judgment, no execution can be issued till the judgment be revived by scire facias. Bac. Abr. "Execution" (H); Tidd. Prac. 1108.

Protection lasted a year and a day; and if a villein remain from his master a year and day in an ancient demesne, he is free. Cunningham. If a person is afraid to enter on his land, he may make claim as near as possible, which is good for a year and a day. 3 Bl. Comm. 175. In case of prize, if no claim is made within a year and a day, the condemnation is to captors as of course. 2 Gall. (U. S.) 388. So, in case of goods saved, the court retains them till claim, if made within a year and a day, but not after that time. 8 Pet. (U. S.) 4.

The same period occurs in the civil law, in Book of Feuds, the Laws of the Lombards, etc.

YEAR BOOKS. Books of reports of cases in a regular series from the reign of the English King Edward II., inclusive, to the time of Henry VIII., which were taken by the prothonotaries or chief scribes of the courts, at the expense of the crown, and published annually, whence their name "Year Books." They consist of eleven parts, namely: Part 1. Maynard's Reports temp. Edw. II.; also divers Memoranda of the Exchequer temp. Edw. I. Part 2. Reports in the first ten years of Edw. III. Part 3. Reports from 17 to 39 Edw. III. Part 4. Reports from 40 to 50 Edw. III. Part 5. Liber Assisarum; or, Pleas of the Crown temp. Edw. III. Part 6. Reports temp. Hen. IV. and Hen. V. Parts 7 and 8. Annals; or, Reports of Hen. VI. during his reign, in two vols. Part 9. Annals of Edw. IV. Part 10.

Long Quinto; or, Reports in 5 Edw. IV. Part 11. Cases in the reigns of Edward V., Rich. III., Hen. VII., and Hen. VIII.

YEAR, DAY, AND WASTE (Lat. annus, dies, et vastum). A part of king's prerogative, whereby he takes the profits of the lands and tenements of those attainted of petty treason or felony, for a year and a day, but, in the end, may waste the tenements, destroy the houses, root up the woods, gardens, and pasture, and plough up the meadows (except the lord of the fee agree with him for redemption of such waste); after which the lands are to be restored to the lord of the fee. Staundf. Prerog. c. 16, fol. 44. By Magna Charta, it would appear that the profits for a year and a day were given in lieu of the waste. 9 Hen. III. c. 22. But 17 Edw. II. declares the king's right to both.

YEARS, ESTATE FOR. See "Estates."

YEOMAN. In the United States, this word does not appear to have any very exact meaning. It is usually put as an addition to the names of parties in declarations and indictments. In England, it signifies a free man who has land of the value of forty shillings a year. 2 Inst. 668; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 92.

YEOVEN, or YEVEN. Given (dated).

YIELD. In the law of real property, to perform a service due by a tenant to his lord. Hence the usual form of reservation of a rent in a lease begins with the words "yielding and paying."

YIELDING AND PAYING. These words, when used in a lease, constitute a covenant on the part of the lessee to pay the rent (Platt, Cov. 50; 3 Pa. St. 464; 1 Sid. 447, pl. 9; 2 Lev. 206; 3 Term R. 402; 1 Barn. & C. 416; 2 Dowl. & R. 670), but whether it be an express covenant or not seems not to be settled (Styles, 387, 406, 451; Sid. 240, 266; 2 Lev. 206; T. Jones, 102; 3 Term R. 402). In Pennsylvania, it has been decided to be a covenant running with the land. 3 Pa. St. 464. See 1 Saund. 233, note 1; 9 Vt. 191.

YINGEMAN. A word occurring in the laws of Henry I. (c. 16), which Spelman thinks might be a mistake for Ynglishman, or Englishman.

YORK, CUSTOM OF. Recognized by 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 10, and 1 Jac. II. c. 17. By this custom, the effects of an intestate are divided according to the anciently universal rule of pars rationabilis. 4 Burn, Ecc. Law, 342.

YORK, STATUTE OF. The name of an English statute, passed 12 Edw. II., A. D. 1318, and so called because it was enacted at York. It contains many wise provisions and explanations of former statutes. Barr. Obs. St. 174. There were other statutes made at York in the reign of Edward III., but they do not bear this name.

YORKSHIRE LAND REGISTRIES. These are regulated by Sts. 2 & 3 Anne, c. 4, 5 Anne, c. 18 (6 Anne, c. 20, in the statutes of the realm), as to the West Riding; 6 Anne, c. 35 (or 62), as to the East Riding, and 8 Geo. II. c. 6.

YOUNGER CHILDREN. This phrase, when used in English conveyancing with reference to settlements of land, signifies all such children as are not entitled to the rights of an eldest son. It therefore includes daughters, even those who are older than the eldest son. Mozley & W.

ZE (Old Scotch). Ye. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. "Homagium."

ZEIR (Old Scotch). Year. "Zeir and day." Bell, Dict.

ZELDE (Old Scotch). A gift or donation. Skene de Verb. Sign. voc. "Herezelda."

ZETE[illegible]ICK. Proceeding by inquiry. Enc. Lond.

ZOLL VEREIN. A union of German states for uniformity of customs, established in 1819. It continued until the unification of the German empire, including Prussia, Saxony, Bavaria, Wurtenberg, Baden, Hesse-Cassel, Brunswick, and Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and all intermediate principalities. It has now been superseded by the German empire; and the federal council of the empire has taken the place of that of the Zoll Verein. Wharton.

ZYGOCEPHALUM. In the civil law. A measure or quantity of land. Nov. 17, c. 8. As much land as a yoke of oxen could plow in a day. Calv. Lex.

ZYGOSTATES. In the civil law. A weigher; an officer who held or looked to the balance in weighing money between buyer and seller; an officer appointed to determine controversies about the weight of money. Spelman.
